Recent crude oil price spikes

Is it temporary or a new era for West Texas?

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Oil prices topped $26 this week, the highest level in nine years. If that price can be sustained it obviously will have a positive impact on the Permian Basin.

But the question is, "Can prices above $25 and approaching $30 be sustained?"

OPEC has indicated on a number of occasions that it feels $25 is the optimum level for oil prices at this point, and would like to keep them somewhere in that range.

While prices normally start back down after reaching for $30, there are some analysts who believe this latest price spike may be not only sustainable, but desirable.

John Kilduff, senior vice president for energy research for Fimat USA, a New York futures broker, is one such person. In a recent Wall Street Journal article, Kilduff described the NYMEX crude oil futures as, "a steady market with a lot room to the upside. It looks like this move could be sustainable."

Michael Rothman, energy analyst for Merrill Lynch, in an Associated Press story last week noted that OPEC could keep its hands off this price spike and, as a result, not adjust it downward. "They may have changed their mind about $30 being too high," Rothman said.

But not everyone agrees.

Karr Ingham, an Amarillo economist who prepares the Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index, does not believe a $30 oil price or prices approaching $30 will be sustainable.

"When is the last time you saw oil prices in the $30 range for a sustained period of several months?" asked Ingham. "I can't remember. History makes a pretty good case for oil prices approaching $25, rather than $30." In addition, he said, price spikes do not mean a thing, that industry decisions are made on average oil prices for a sustained period of time.

If Ingham is right, the price of WTI should continue a slow retreat back to $25 beginning this week. But if OPEC has, indeed, moved the benchmark to $30, that means the value of oil in the Permian Basin has now increased by $5 a barrel.

That is a price that could have significant implications for the Permian Basin. Indeed, the Texas Railroad Commission production data indicates that the Texas Permian Basin produced 324.5 million barrels in 1997, or approximately 27 million barrels per month. A $5 price increase would mean $135 million a month in added revenues for West Texas producers to spend for leasing, seismic, drilling, workover and recovery projects.

That is activity that translates to jobs and paychecks for the Permian Basin, said Morris Burns, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "If oil prices have moved to another level it will be good for the Permian Basin Petroleum Association," Burns said. "It will not only put more dollars into the pockets of oil producers, enabling them to do more projects, but the higher prices will also provide inspiration and incentive to initiate more projects."

Burns said drilling was already beginning to increase as a result of oil prices which have been in the area of $25 for much of this year.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Oil Conference advisory board, a number of oil companies indicated they are already beginning to reflect positive programs on the basis of higher

Retailers hope higher oil prices will translate into strong Christmas sales

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Economists and retailers are casting a wary eye toward the fast-approaching Christmas shopping season.

Since March, when oil producing countries agreed to reduce production and boost oil prices from 12-year lows, prices have risen, ending this past week above $26.50 on the futures market. However, sales tax collections have continued to be below year-ago levels, indicating that retail sales have yet to be influenced by higher prices.

"I think the key factor we're dealing with now is there's quite a bit of lag time between the increase in oil prices and a heavy increase in retail sales or economic activity," said Midland economist Dr. Jerry Jones. "A high percentage of oilmen weren't sure of the stability of the higher oil prices so there's a 'wait-and-see' attitude that will be significant and may mean a much longer lag time than assumed."

He predicted that retailers will see a seasonal increase for November and December and "hopefully late in the first quarter of 2000

Advanced Technology Center may face delays

By Jeff Stevens
Staff Writer

Despite initial high hopes, some evidence indicates the new Advanced Technology Center may not open on schedule. In addition, Midland College and the Midland Independent School District seem to have differing views on the ATC's programming.

At the Nov. 8 MISD board meeting, the board heard updates regarding the ATC. Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. presented the board with the possibility that the ATC won't be open until January of 2001. Initially, the technology center was set to open in August 2000.

Six months would not seem to be a significant setback. However, from the school district's point of view, a six-month delay would essentially be a 12-month delay. Classes at Midland's high schools don't generally begin mid-year and it is possible MISD wouldn't have classes at the center until August 2001 — a full year behind schedule.

"We would have a hard time starting full credit courses in mid-year. It's not totally impossible, but it's not very likely," Baressi said.

According to Richard Jolly, vice president of instruction for Midland College, the delays are being caused by an abundance of local construction.

"What the architects are telling us is it's the amount of construction going on in this area. Local companies are pretty busy. We do it at a time when local construction companies could participate. If we have to bring companies in from outside, it will be more expensive," Jolly said.

However, only two bids have been awarded — for roof replacement and heating and air conditioning installation. In fact, bids for other portions of the renovation haven't even been advertised and are not yet scheduled.

Jolly said a meeting with the architects is planned for Tuesday. He expects a better explanation of the problem at that time. He added that despite delays, he expects some portions of the building to be available by August 2000.

Baressi said, "I'll be disappointed if we can't have at least a portion."

Additional problems for the cooperative center also were alluded to in the MISD board packet from the Nov. 8 meeting.

"It appears that Midland College and Midland Independent School District have different visions for courses offered at the Advanced Technology Center for MISD students," reads a letter in the board packet from Tex Paris, MISD director of career and technology. The letter was to Rebecca Bell, director of the Advanced Technology Center at Midland College. "MC submitted a list of 28 proposed concurrent courses for ATC while MISD envisions using the Lubbock ISD model for courses offered at the Advanced Technology Center."

The Lubbock ISD model is a cooperative effort with South Plains College. At Lubbock's technology center, LISD teaches its own cours-

Clinton regrets U.S. support of Greek junta during Cold War

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — A day after violent anti-American protests, President Clinton sought to heal old wounds Saturday by acknowledging the United States failed its "obligation to support democracy" when it backed Greek's harsh military junta during the Cold War.

The president's words came as a concession to long-standing Greek sensitivities and to tens of thousands of demonstrators who take to the streets each year on Nov. 17 to denounce the United States and mark the anniversary of a bloody crackdown against student demonstrators in 1973 by the old military regime.

"When the junta took over in 1967 here," Clinton said, "the United States allowed its interests in prosecuting the Cold War to prevail over its interest, I should say its obligation, to support democracy, which was, after all, the cause for which we fought the Cold War. It is important that we acknowledge that."

His statement, in a speech to business and community leaders, brought a burst of applause. U.S. Ambassador Nicholas Burns had apologized in 1998 for U.S. support of the junta but Clinton's words carried far more weight.

Clinton said his remark was prompted by thinking about U.S.-Greek history "in both its painful and its proud aspects."

The 1967 coup, led by the late Col. George Papadopoulos, toppled the parliamentary government after years of political instability, which many Greeks blamed on what they saw as U.S. meddling in Greek affairs.

The junta imposed an ultraconservative regime that did not permit political dissent or free expression at a time when much of Western Europe was being transformed by student-led protests and underground movements. The military rulers jailed hundreds of opponents, tortured many and banished others to barren islands

Anti-America protest during Clinton's visit produced a night of mayhem in central Athens. Hooded rioters among a crowd of 10,000 demonstrators set fires and smashed storefronts and banks Friday evening. The protest was aimed against U.S. policy in Kosovo and Bosnia and the American-led bombing of Yugoslavia, a traditional Orthodox Christian ally of Greece.

The president opened the day by climbing the hills of the Acropolis, hand in hand with his daughter Chelsea, to see the ancient temples of the Parthenon.

Asked about Friday's violence, he said simply, "I'm sorry about that."

Later, Clinton elaborated during a joint news conference with Socialist Prime Minister Constantine Simitis. "I deeply regret the Greeks who had their property injured and who suffered losses through these demonstrations," he said.

Clinton said people have the right to demonstrate — especially in Greece, the birthplace of democracy — but that "I strongly believe the protests should be peaceful."

Clinton readily acknowledged that "almost all of the people of Greece disagree" with U.S. policy in Kosovo and, before that, in Bosnia. "But that doesn't affect our affection for, and our support for the people of Greece and the government of Greece."

Simitis said Greece is a nation "where everyone can express their opinions." But he agreed that such expressions should be made peacefully.

"I'm sorry for the fact that certain people did not respect this fundamental principle of law," he said.

National Security Council spokesman David Leavy said the president's statement about the old junta was "not intended as an apology. It was intended to chart a forward-looking vision of U.S.-Greek relations."

The firebombs and destruction triggered an uproar of finger-pointing and recrimination.

"Hell in Athens," read the headline in the Apogevmatini newspaper. The spokesman for the opposition New Democracy Party, Aris Spiliotopoulos, said Greece's "international image was battered." Even the sports newspaper SporTime lamented the "international humiliation."

The government blamed Greece's small but influential Communist Party, while leftists insisted the government was responsible by imposing an unprecedented ban on marches, including the route to the U.S. Embassy.

Clinton, addressing Greece's disputes with Turkey over territory in the Aegean Sea, said the two nations should take their argument to the International Court of Justice in the Hague or to some recognized international agency. Greece strongly favors that approach but Turkey prefers direct negotiations.

Greece was the second country on a 10-day, six-nation trip. From Athens, the president was heading to Florence, Italy, for a conference with Italian Premier Massimo D'Alema, British Prime Minister Tony Blair, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder, French Prime Minister Lionel Jospin, and Brazilian President Enrique Cardoso.

The leaders were gathering in Florence, the renaissance capital of grand palaces, magnificent churches and famed museums and masterpieces, for two days of talks on a "Third Way" in politics — a path between the politics of the left and the right, trying to link economic growth with social fairness.

On his visit to the Acropolis, Clinton expressed sympathy toward Greece for its claim on ancient statues taken from the Parthenon and now housed in the British Museum in London, Greek culture minister Elisavet Papazoi said.

PUBLIC NOTICE OF APPLICATION TO INCREASE RATES

Pursuant to Tex. Utilities Code § 104.103 (1999), TXU Lone Star Pipeline, a Division of TXU Gas Company ("Applicant") hereby gives notice of intent to change the city gate rate of TXU Lone Star Pipeline (formerly known as "Lone Star Pipeline Company") established by Order of the Railroad Commission of Texas in Gas Utilities Docket No. 8664 ("GUD 8664").

Applicant proposes a two-part transportation rate that consists of a demand charge per MMBtu based upon the contractual demand for city gate service and a volumetric charge per MMBtu based on actual delivered volumes. This transportation rate would result in a revenue increase to Applicant. Applicant also proposes to increase the storage rate applicable to city gate deliveries established in GUD 8664. The storage rate would consist of a monthly demand charge for capacity and a monthly demand charge for deliverability. The deliverability demand charge would only be charged during the months of November through March.

The proposed effective date of the change is December 20, 1999. The change is a major change, and will result in an increase in annual revenues of approximately $20.3 million or sixteen percent (16%). The change will affect 1.3 million residential and commercial customers. The rate change will affect transportation and storage rates at the city gate for TXU Lone Star Gas-Transmission, who in turn sells the gas to TXU Lone Star Gas which serves 1.3 million residential and commercial customers in Texas under the rates established by the local regulatory authorities in municipalities and the Railroad Commission in environs areas.

A Statement of Intent to make such a change has been filed with the Railroad Commission of Texas in GUD 8976 and is available for inspection at the Commission's office at 1701 North Congress in Austin, Texas, and at the offices of Applicant at 301 South Harwood in Dallas, Texas. Copies of the Statement of Intent have also been sent to the appropriate city official of each incorporated city served by TXU Lone Star Gas. Any affected person may file in writing comments or a protest concerning the proposed change in the rates with the Docket Services Section of the Office of General Counsel, Railroad Commission of Texas, P.O. Box 12967, Austin, Texas 78711-2967, at any time on or before 4:00 p.m., Thursday, December 30, 1999. Any person or agency who has a justiciable or administratively cognizable interest who desires to be designated as a party may petition for leave to intervene and request to become a party to this proceeding. The final date for intervention in this case shall be 4:00 p.m., Thursday, December 30, 1999.

Iran struggles to balance revolution, reform

By Brian Murphy
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — On rooftops in a leafy suburb above the smog, some satellite dishes have come out of hiding.

Their owners know it's still illegal to watch foreign broadcasts. There's just not much pressure to maintain the old deceptions such as concealing the dishes behind laundry lines or crates.

A few exposed dishes hardly count as a bold cry against Islamic rulers and their controls. It's a murmur.

But listen closely around Iran's capital and you hear it everywhere: a confidence that the breathing room opened by moderate President Mohammed Khatami two years ago is not going to be choked off by his hard-line critics.

At Tehran's first Internet cafe, patrons browse almost any Web site. Once-banned nationalist songs and satire are performed at dinner clubs. Underground entrepreneurs deliver bootleg videos to people's homes for a weekly rental of 50,000 rials ($6.25). The racy "Eyes Wide Shut" is currently hot. A soft-porn TV channel, Venus, is available via satellite.

Outside, young lovers hold hands in public and the Islamic coverings for teen-age girls grow shorter and tighter with diminishing regard for the "basij," the volunteer squads that were once the unchallenged morality enforcers.

"I wouldn't say this is paradise. But at least we're not always looking over our shoulders all the time now," said Ahmad Esteqalian, who runs a catering company.

Many still do, however. Twenty years of being hyper-cautious is hard to wipe away.

The Internet cafe blocks access to any sexually explicit sites to avoid handing authorities an obvious reason to close them down. At the Alighapoo restaurant, the host takes the stage between sets of Persian music to remind women to have fun but keep their head scarves on.

This is the kind of seesaw world experienced these days by most Iranians: Buoyed by new freedoms one minute; pulled back to earth by realities the next. Somewhere there may be an equilibrium. But likely not until after parliamentary elections in February.

The outcome of the polls could help cement Khatami's vision of a nation less obsessed with being an Islamic standard bearer and more occupied with the business of trying to fix its many problems, including sticky relations with the West and a stumbling economy.

But religious hard-liners are not prepared to step aside quietly and are mobilizing to try to block Khatami's allies from sweeping the polls.

Abdollah Nouri, a former interior minister and a close Khatami ally, was proclaimed guilty by a jury of clergymen Nov. 11 on some of the most serious charges ever brought against a senior politician in Iran's Islamic government. The jury's opinion was sent to a judge who will issue the actual verdict, which could include jail time.

The decision by a seven-man jury covered 15 charges ranging from publishing lies, insulting Islamic sanctities and advocating better ties with Iran's archenemies, the United States and Israel.

The legal action appeared aimed at preventing Nouri from running for parliament speaker. A hard-liner, Ali Akbar Nateq-Nouri, has been the speaker of the 270-seat chamber since 1990.

Fearing defeat in the elections, the hard-liners have escalated their pre-emptive strikes.

Government agencies still dominated by the hard-liners have closed several newspapers — most recently the crusading Neshat, whose top editor has been charged with insulting Islam. Nouri's popular newspaper, Khordad, could also become a target.

There are more potential flashpoints. A probe into the killings of intellectuals and reformers has allegedly implicated factions in the intelligence service. On Nov. 2, a court sentenced three people to prison terms ranging from six months to three years for publishing a play in a student journal that allegedly blasphemed Islam.

RETAIL: Many stores have already seen slight upturn

we'll see some impact from higher prices."

Economist Kevin Skipper of Desert Analytic said that based on a preliminary composite index he has been working on utilizing retail sales, earnings and employment, "there's been continued weakness through the third quarter of 1999. The economy did start up in the third quarter but it remains to be seen whether there'll be continued economic activity. Based on my preliminary figures, I expect there to be a six to 18-month lag time, more precisely six to 12 months. Oil prices not only have to go up but stay up. Oil prices have gone up and stayed up for quite some time, and if they can stay up for a few more quarters, I expect these indicators will pick up."

Mike Richmond, store director for Dillard's in Midland Park Mall, agreed that there is an element of lag time between the jump in oil prices and an impact on the general economy.

The impact of the current high prices, now at nine-year highs, "is mainly in a positive attitude," said Richmond, who added that "The second oil prices go up, retail sales don't necessarily go up."

Still, he said, "I can already tell a difference."

His stores are staying slightly above year-ago levels, he said, and with Christmas shopping officially getting under way in five days, "we expect strong sales. The holidays are always an upbeat time and we expect strong sales across the board."

Kathy Wooster, owner of Kids Only Toys, is a little less upbeat, saying that this is the first year in her 18 years in the retailing business that she expects a modest, lean Christmas.

She attributes that feeling not only to what the area economy has been through with energy prices — "The damage has been done; people have left, offices have closed and the confidence isn't quite there. Oil prices are up but that's not yet translating into money in peoples' pockets" — but to the growth of e-commerce and even catalogs.

She sees an upside to that expectation, though.

"I think we should have Thanksgiving. I don't play Christmas music in my store or put up Christmas decorations until after Thanksgiving. And I'd like to get back to the old days of Christmas being sane and calm and not as over-commercialized. I think Thanksgiving is a very important holiday and we should ease into Christmas."

And she said she intends to do all she can to get her share of the toy market.

'A high percentage of oilmen weren't sure of the stability of the higher oil prices so there's a 'wait-and-see' attitude that will be significant and may mean a much longer lag time than assumed.'

— Dr. Jerry Jones, Midland economist

"Retailing is not for the faint of heart. You have to ride the wave," she said.

Nathan Ramirez, a clerk at Athletic Supply, said officials had expected increased sales as oil prices improved "but that hasn't been the case."

But, he said, "slowly we're seeing things improve and we're hoping with higher oil prices, things will pick up."

He said he's seeing more early Christmas shoppers come into the store in Midland Park Mall and hopes that with a good selection of merchandise and the improved oil prices "it'll be a good Christmas."

Becky Phillips, co-owner of The Ivy Cottage, said that her store is also seeing early shoppers and "We're constantly wrapping Christmas gifts."

Activity was traditionally slow this summer, she said, but people have been buying early and customers tell her they're more confident in oil prices and the economy.

"We're expecting Christmas to be very good if things keep going like they have been," she said.

Ralph Mandson, manager of Rex in Midland, said that his store has been meeting projections all year and "three or four months ago were in the top 20 in the company."

He said he expects "an excellent Christmas" with strong sales in everything from television to stereos, microwave ovens to vacuums, telephones to camcorders to car stereos.

Pam Wellman, assistant manager of Beall's in Midland Park Mall, said her store is already beginning to see an upturn in sales, due to early Christmas shopping, and she expects the higher energy prices to boost Christmas sales and, hopefully, sales into the new year.

Jones, who operates the Midland Business Center, said that any positive impact of oil prices on the general economy is being offset by consolidation in the service sector.

At his center alone, he has lost three service centers over the last six months, he said — Decision One, a computer service firm, St. Paul Insurance claims office and the Texas State Teacher's Association — to Lubbock and Dallas.

"I don't think these are isolated examples. We're seeing a restructuring caused by the labor market that has hit Midland in the last year. It's been a slower reaction than to oil prices, but it hit at about the time we expected an increase in oil and gas activity," he said. "This is a situation that may not resolve itself in such a way that it will stop. And this isn't just Midland, it's all over the country."

If it wasn't for a number of Odessa operations moving to Midland, he said, "We'd be in a world of hurt."

Jones added that "What's happening in our economy is that we're losing the small service points and not getting the large ones. Odessa is able to turn things around because of their economic development tax and we just don't have those resources. The days are past where people just want to come into town. Nowadays companies look at the cost abatement, tax abatements and outright contributions and we're losing opportunities because we can't offer that. The world economy is changing and our size is such that unless we bring in large operations or have a groundswell of new start-ups, we will start suffering. There needs to be an effort to raise awareness of the changing economy and that subsidies for new businesses are required today."

Skipper said that "my concern is the majors have been pulling out of the Permian Basin and the independents don't have the capital to replace that lost capital. I see some improvement in the future but it will be modest at best. One of two things have to happen — prices have to go even higher, which is unlikely. I don't see prices going much higher in the foreseeable future because supplies are good. There appears to be some equilibrium for crude prices in the $20-$22 range and I just don't think OPEC wants to see prices go above that range. Prices won't go below $18; I think we're stuck in the $18-23 range for awhile. The second thing that has to happen would be new employers and we've got to have the tools to work with potential employers."

OIL: Nearly all companies will be active in 2000

crude prices. Some companies that did not have 1999 drilling and workover budgets now indicate they will begin some projects this year, and nearly all will become active in 2000.

Most oil companies are looking for strategic acquisitions for development projects.

Jim Henry, chairman of Henry Petroleum, said his company, which recently purchased the North Cowden Unit, was looking for secondary oil projects in the Permian Basin.

Santa Fe-Snyder indicated that it too is looking for secondary (waterflood) projects in the Basin to develop.

Harry Hufft, with Altura Energy, said Altura, even though it will probably be sold by the first of 2000, was taking advantage of the higher price environment and had eight drilling rigs working and 125 workover units employed on projects.

Clyde Findlay, with Nearburg, said his company primarily drilled the Morrow gas formation in New Mexico. We have "four rigs chasing the Morrow."

Oil prices are the most heavily weighted indicator in the Texas Permian Basin Petroleum Index, closely followed by rig count and employment. "We use the monthly average price plus the average monthly price for the past 12 months, when establishing a price indicator," Ingham said. "You have to look to the long term to see developing trends."

He noted that when prices first went up in March it was in the middle of summer before activity levels began to respond. "Consistent posted prices above $15 will do more to drive activity than a temporary price of $30." If prices do float up to a new $30 level, he said it would be sometime next year before industry would respond.

Burns said higher oil prices also bring political concerns.

"I fear the OPEC nations will get greedy and increase production to capitalize on the price," he said. "I also fear that politicians like Sen. Charles Shumer (D-N.Y.) will make another effort to sell oil out of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR) to keep New York heating bills low this winter. That's not what the SPR was designed for. It was designed as a ready reserve for such national emergencies as war. It was not meant to be a device for furthering political careers."

CENTER: Administrators will continue to meet

es, as does South Plains College.

In fact, according to MISD Executive Director of Secondary Education Ricardo Torres, out of 685 students at that center, only 11 are enrolled in concurrent classes.

"There is a significant disagreement," said Torres. "Our teachers are going to teach our kids in every instance except automotive technology.

"I know what Midland College would like but that's not going to work for us."

Torres and Paris are the only school officials involved, however, who would acknowledge there is any kind of conflict.

"I think that is Dr. Paris' perspective, which I don't agree with. I talked to Dr. (David) Daniel and we are in agreement that our intent is to have a situation similar or identical to Lubbock," said Baressi.

Daniel, president of Midland College, agreed.

"The superintendent and I talk frequently on a wide range of matters," said Daniel. "At this point we have not had a disagreement at all on the program of the Advanced Technology Center. To the extent that students would be enrolled concurrently, that is not a departure from what we are doing."

In essence, both administrators said there is no disagreement, while at the same time pointing to different visions for the ATC.

Both also said that no plans have been permanently set and discussions continue as to the final program offerings at the center.

"I see it as a fluid thing," said Daniel.

Jolly added, "We're trying to work toward the most efficient way for that to operate. We don't want to duplicate. We don't want to waste taxpayers dollars. We want to train students to enter the work force and provide a good labor market for them to enter. That's our goal."

In order to achieve that goal, administrators from both schools will continue to meet and discuss any potential problems. In fact, Baressi, Daniel and members of their staffs are scheduled to meet Tuesday with Parkhill, Smith and Cooper to discuss the construction delays.

Deming girl dies from gunshot wound

DEMING, N.M. (AP) — A 13-year-old girl shot in the head at school died Saturday, the same day the father of the suspected shooter said his son had intended to kill himself but was jostled by others in the school lobby.

Araceli Tena died at a hospital in El Paso where she had been rushed by ambulance after she was shot Friday at Deming Middle School.

Victor Cordova Jr., of Palomas, Mexico, was wearing a camouflage jacket when he fired a single shot from a .22-caliber handgun, police said. Police records list the boy as 13 years old, but his family says he is 12.

Cordova's father, Victor Cordova Sr., said during an interview in Palomas on Saturday that he talked to his son after the shooting.

"Yesterday I spoke to him and he said that he was going to kill himself," the elder Cordova said. "But when they went into the school that he was pushed and the gun moved."

Police said they have no information to corroborate the account, and the boy was being held Saturday in the Luna County jail.

He was charged Friday with attempted murder, assault, aggravated assault and aggravated battery, but investigators will be working with prosecutors to amend the charges, police said. Under New Mexico law, he cannot be charged as an adult.

The boy's family described him as intelligent but depressed. He is the oldest of three children, but spent a lot of time alone and had threatened suicide in the past, said his relatives. In February, the boy lost his mother to cancer.

Cordova was born in Deming and had gone to U.S. schools since kindergarten, said his father. He would walk across the border from Palomas each school day and board a bus for his classes 33 miles to the north in Deming.

Bus accident kills 7

MEXICO CITY — A bus carrying governing party supporters to a political ceremony overturned Sunday in the Gulf coast state of Veracruz, killing seven people and injuring 16, the government news agency Notimex reported.

The bus was heading from the southeastern state of Campeche to Mexico City, where the passengers were planning to attend the swearing-in ceremony of Francisco Labastida as presidential candidate of the Institutional Revolutionary Party.

Palace unearthed

DAMASCUS, Syria — Archaeologists have discovered the ruins of a royal palace believed to be 4,000 years old near Damascus, the Syrian Arab News Agency reported Saturday.

It said "highly valued ruins" were discovered by a joint German, Italian and Syrian expedition in Qatanah, about 12 miles southwest of the Syrian capital.

The palace dates back to 2000 B.C., the news agency said. It did not give a more precise year or say which ruler built it. Government officials in charge of archaeology were not immediately available for comment.

Historians believe that the Amorites, who came from the Arabian peninsula around 2100 B.C., were the first important Semitic settlers in the area, and that they established many small states.

The palace contains a throne hall that is 70 feet by 132 feet with 6-foot high adobe walls, the agency said. In the center of the hall, an unbroken jar with "amazing decoration" was found stuck to the ground, the agency said.

N. Korea wants to team up with S. Korea

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea proposed Saturday that it form a joint team with rival South Korea to investigate allegations that American soldiers killed hundreds of civilians during the Korean War.

The U.S. and South Korean probe already underway is "a deceptive trick to put down the wrath and anti-American feelings" and "designed to cover up the crimes and flee from responsibility," the North's committee in charge of relations with South Korea said in the unusual proposal, reported by the communist state's Central News Agency.

The North said it sent the proposal to South Korean civil organizations, indicating it would prefer to deal with them than the government.

'Threat' prompts baggage search aboard Air Force One

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — In response to a security threat, passengers on Air Force One heading from Athens, Greece, to Pisa, Italy, were asked Saturday by the Secret Service to inspect carry-on luggage for "anything suspicious."

Officials would give no details on the threat. Nothing untoward apparently was found aboard the Boeing 747.

In the Greek capital, police said they had no information from Clinton's staff or any other source on the apparent threat. State-run NET television said the control tower at Athens Airport was told nothing about the incident.

After Air Force One landed in Pisa, President Clinton continued by helicopter to Florence, the next stop on his European tour schedule, to attend a weekend political conference.

Shortly after the plane left Athens, Larry Cockell, the president's top bodyguard, took the highly unusual step of asking all aboard to examine their belongings. He did not explain the reason. White House press secretary Joe Lockhart later told reporters "there was a threat," but he would not elaborate.

Presidential security during Clinton's 24-hour visit to Athens was extraordinarily tight. Anti-American demonstrators burned stores and banks on Clinton's Friday night arrival in the Greek capital, but the streets were quiet on Saturday.

Gore campaign staff settlling into new home

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Six weeks after Al Gore cut a ribbon to open his new campaign headquarters, unpacked boxes still litter the offices and phone wires are taped across the floor.

But the place is buzzing with energy the campaign did not have in Washington, staffers say.

"This place looks, smells and feels like a campaign. It's got that sweaty feel to it," said Carter Eskew, Gore's top strategist. "And with all due respect to Washington, which is my hometown, the people are a lot nicer here. When I went to work in Washington, there weren't homemade pies waiting for me."

Each day, Gore supporters drop by the headquarters and load up a table with goodies for the staff and visitors.

Gore said the move was designed to get his campaign away from Washington insiders and closer to average Americans. The change has made the campaign staff feel more like a team, said Eric Brielmann, an aide to campaign chairman Tony Coelho.

In Washington, Brielmann said he had not met folks in the research department because they worked on different floors and needed security keys to go from office to office. Now, he is just down the hall and the doors usually are open.

Instead of eight-hour days with weekends off, the staff now works 12 hours a day, six days a week. Many show up on Sundays, too.

"There is a magic, a feeling of intensity to make sure that Al Gore is the next president. We've dropped everything in our lives to ensure it. We are living and breathing the campaign and we're loving it," Brielmann said.

Gore visited last week and said the move has reinvigorated his campaign.

"Your energy is now connecting with the American people," Gore told staffers. "There's a different feeling out there, big time."

Campaign manager Donna Brazile said local Gore supporters have made the transition easier, helping staffers find places to live and showing them the closest grocery and video stores.

Gore's mother, 88-year-old Pauline Gore, drove over from her Carthage home, about 50 miles to the east, to welcome them to Tennessee. Mrs. Gore also distributed autographed copies of a cookbook she wrote.

"We're feeling more at home each day," Brazile said.

Some staffers have moved into the same apartment complexes and carpool to work. They munch popcorn from the campaign's popper in the afternoon and socialize at night.

They have not settled on a particular hangout, but have been trying watering holes like the "Flying Saucer" and "The Gold Rush." They learned two-stepping at the "Wildhorse Saloon" on Halloween and went to a rodeo last weekend.

"I wasn't sure if there would be places to get milk at 2 a.m. or go out socially 'til 2 a.m.," Brielmann said. "I was pleasantly surprised. There are always places to go."

The headquarters, a one-story building on the outskirts of downtown Nashville, once housed a medical rehabilitation center.

There still is a small walking track, partly obscured by unpacked boxes. The "exercise gymnasium" sign that was on one door now sits on a desk in the research staff's office. Press spokesman Dave Anderson must squeeze around a sink to get to his desk.

But staffers no longer have to pay $160 a month to park in a garage, as they did when the headquarters was on three floors of a building on Washington's K Street, a section of town that is home to many lawyers and lobbyists.

There is now plenty of free space in a lot that backs up to railroad tracks.

Eskew spent his honeymoon in Nashville last week. Working. Without his wife.

"Nashville is a big honeymoon location, but most people, I think, do it as a couple," Eskew said with a laugh.

That kind of sacrifice has become commonplace for the campaign's staff, some of whom took pay cuts and uprooted their families.

Brazile set the example by slicing her own salary by $25,000 instead of taking a $40,000 raise for her promotion from political director.

For a potluck supper during Gore's first debate, she bought toilet paper and only let the campaign pay for ice. The food came from the 400 volunteers who showed up.

Congress' year: impeachment, war, death — modest success

By David Espo
Associated Press

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — Impeachment, war and death came to Congress this year, a session of modest achievement, hard-fought.

"Let's move on. He won. He always wins," summed up Republican Sen. Bob Smith of New Hampshire, moments after President Clinton gained bipartisan acquittal in history's second presidential impeachment trial.

They did move on: Republicans and Democrats moved into struggles over the air war in Kosovo, then the turn-of-century issues of spending and tax cuts, education and Social Security, gun control, health care, campaign finance.

By year's end, the list of major accomplishments was short — a landmark bill that lifted banking regulations in place since the Great Depression, and a budget deal that, amid torrents of politically charged rhetoric, wrote into law the spending bills that Congress is required to enact annually.

Clinton used conciliatory terms in praising the budget bill as a bipartisan victory for America. "To Congress I say: We've done a good job for the American people by working together," he said in his weekly radio address aired Saturday. "Let's keep working together."

Congress experienced departures during the year: Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., in Congress since the 1960s, and Rhode Island Sen. John Chafee, a Republican voice of moderation, died in office. For a week after his death, a black cloth covered Chafee's desk beneath a bouquet of flowers.

In the House, a new speaker sought a new tone.

"Solutions to problems cannot be found in a pool of bitterness," Rep. Dennis Hastert of Illinois said last January as he succeeded Newt Gingrich. He unfailingly referred to Clinton in public as "the president." And in an act of great symbolism, Hastert met without publicity with a group of constituents of Rep. David Bonior, the House Democratic whip who had been Gingrich's most determined tormentor.

But on substantive issues, Democrats said Hastert merely was a figurehead, and many Republicans conceded that great power resided with the GOP whip, Rep. Tom DeLay of Texas. He and Hastert parted company on the strategy for dealing with the war in Kosovo, for example, and what Hastert cited as "commonsense" gun control was more than DeLay could support.

Whatever their relationship, the struggle beneath the Capitol Dome often seemed just a backdrop for political conflict between two parties eager for the next election: Republicans hoping George W. Bush can win the White House in 2000, Democrats focusing sharply on gaining a House majority.

Thus, Republicans let Clinton's summer veto of their $792 billion tax cut go unchallenged after party strategists said no compromise was worth giving up the issue for the campaign ahead.

Democrats forced their poll-tested agenda of health care, campaign finance, minimum wage and gun control on the GOP, knowing Republicans would resist and the fight would continue into the new year.

"The Democrats still are chafing over the fact that they're in the minority," Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., told reporters in a year-end interview. "They think they should set the agenda."

The House Democratic leader, Rep. Dick Gephardt of Missouri, summed up his party's reply in his final speech of the year from the House floor:

"Democrats will be back here in January ready to do the job for America's families and ready to break through the obstructionism that has become the trademark of this Republican Congress."

Democrats won a round at midyear, when GOP Rep. Michael Forbes of New York switched parties and denounced his former party.

"It has become an angry, narrow-minded, intolerant and uncaring majority," he said, "incapable of governing at all, much less from the center and tone-deaf to the concerns of a vast majority of Americans."

But Republicans sought to seize a popular issue at year's end. More than 12 months in advance of the election, they began running campaign commercials that accused the White House and Democrats of planning a raid on the Social Security trust fund.

"Imagine a world where there's no punishment for a crime," it said, an announcer's ominous tones accompanied by menacing images and unsettling music.

In a year-end interview, Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle of South Dakota said he thought that "overall the effect has been negligible" of Clinton's relationship with Monica Lewinsky and his impeachment trial.

There was some evidence to the contrary.

In the midst of an autumn debate over a comprehensive test ban treaty, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., blurted out a reference to "Monica." And Lott grumbled that he and the president had gone months without any contact.

Not that there was a close relationship to begin with.

In an interview at midyear, Lott was asked whether he trusted the president, whom he had voted a few months earlier to remove from office.

"Oh, ah, you know, I don't want to get into that," he said, pushing himself back in his chair ever so slightly.

"For the most part, he and I have had a relationship that's businesslike. I don't think there's any hard feelings there on his part toward me or on my part toward him."

Conspiracy theories about King's assassination raised anew at trial

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Theories that someone other than James Earl Ray killed the Rev. Martin Luther King are being aired once again in a Memphis courtroom as King's family seeks the "truth" about the assassination.

A trial in the family's wrongful death lawsuit against Loyd Jowers got under way last week in Chancery Court with testimony set to resume Monday. Jowers claimed six years ago on national television that he paid someone other than Ray to kill King, but never has repeated the claim.

The trial has brought together an interesting cast that includes King's widow, Coretta Scott King; former Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young; and Joe Brown, star of the nationally syndicated show "Judge Joe Brown."

Mrs. King was the first person to testify telling the jury her family believes Ray did not act alone.

"If we know the truth, we can be free and go on with our lives," she said.

The family is being represented by William Pepper, the lawyer who for years tried to get Ray out of prison. Ray, who confessed to the crime but later recanted, died from liver disease last year.

Brown, the Criminal Court judge who presided over Ray's last appeals, is scheduled to testify next week as a witness for the King family.

Brown gave Ray's lawyers permission last year to conduct new ballistics tests on the hunting rifle authorities say was used to kill King. The tests were inconclusive. He was considering another round of tests when a state appeals court took him off the case because of prosecution claims he was biased toward Ray.

It is unclear whether Jowers will testify. He said on ABC-TV in 1993 that he hired King's killer as a favor to an underworld figure who was a friend. He did not identify the purported killer, but said it wasn't Ray.

Jowers now contends he played only a minor role in the killing, though he won't say what that role was. Like Pepper, he claims agents of the federal government, the state of Tennessee, Shelby County and the city of Memphis were involved in the killing. He has not offered any evidence to support that claim.

Young testified that he was at a meeting between Jowers and Dexter King, one of King's sons, at which Jowers admitted handling the murder weapon and the payoff money for the killer.

Young said he concluded that Jowers was admitting to taking part in the murder to "get right with God," and that he believed him.

John Campbell, a prosecutor with the Shelby County district attorney general's office, said Jowers' claim has been investigated thoroughly and has no merit.

"We still find no credible evidence to show that Jowers did anything," he said Friday in an interview. "In spite of the fact that Jowers is trying to convince the world that he did something, the evidence just doesn't support him."

Ray's guilty plea was upheld eight times by state and federal courts. A congressional committee also concluded Ray was the killer, though it said he might have had help.

The Kings are seeking unspecified damages from Jowers.

Bonfire tragedy calls for time of mourning

With emotions still recovering from Thursday's sobering tragedy at Texas A&M University, several A&M alumni in Midland agreed this is really not the time to consider the need for changes to the traditional Aggie bonfire known as The Stack.

We agree. This tragedy, in which 11 A&M students were killed and 28 others were injured including Will Harlan of Midland, shocked people throughout Texas and the nation, and during the emotional tumult of the days immediately following the accident is not the proper time to consider steps to prevent another tragedy in the future.

This was, as longtime Aggie booster Clayton Williams Jr. of Midland noted, a heartbreaking accident that the parents, friends and loved ones of the dead and injured students must now work through. It will take some time because those killed and injured when the 40-foot pyramid of logs collapsed were partipating in an activity that has become a cherished part of the Texas A&M-University of Texas football rivalry. They were building the huge bonfire when it collapsed, crushing them beneath tons of logs.

A&M President Ray Bowen, who canceled the bonfire following the accident, spoke to grieving students and others, calling the day one of "unspeakable grief and sorrow. We're all trying to cope with this tremendous loss of life and the pain and suffering."

Our sympathy is with the families of the students killed and injured in this terrible accident. There will come a time later when it will be appropriate to consider changes to the bonfire construction, but for now our thoughts should be for those who were killed or injured.

Minimum wage bill made Clinton say 'no'

It's late, but congressional Republicans finally may have learned something about dealing with Bill Clinton, at least on one issue. For weeks Clinton and his Democratic allies, chiefly Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, clamored for a hike in the federal minimum wage.

It's a favorite issue of liberals and labor unions, an easy way to grab headlines. But it's a burden to small businesses that often can't absorb the costs — and to the would-be workers whose jobs, as a result, are eliminated or never come into being in the first place. For now a minimum wage hike is dead, thanks to Senate Republicans. What's interesting is how they killed it — by passing it.

The Senate last week voted 54-44 to approve a three-step increase in the minimum wage, to $6.15 by March 2002. Yet Clinton hinted he would veto the measure if it cleared the House of Representatives (not expected this year). The reason is Republicans attached tax cuts totaling $18.4 billion over five years to the wage hike. The prospect of tax cuts for taxpayers quickly turned Clinton into "Dr. No." ...

... Generally speaking, everybody is "for" increasing the minimum wage, but it's foolish not to think about its real-world economic implications, and to try to help the impacted businesses and entrepreneurs. Thanks to some strategic packaging, it's Clinton and the Democrats who have to explain why they're opposed to it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Nov. 21, the 325th day of 1999. There are 40 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 21, 1789, North Carolina became the 12th state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

On this date:

In 1877, inventor Thomas A. Edison announced the invention of his phonograph.

In 1899, Vice President Garret A. Hobart, serving under President McKinley, died in Paterson, N.J., at age 55.

In 1922, Rebecca L. Felton of Georgia was sworn in as the first woman in the U.S. Senate.

In 1964, New York's Verrazano Narrows Bridge opened.

In 1973, President Nixon's attorney, J. Fred Buzhardt, revealed the existence of an 18 1/2-minute gap in one of the White House tapes related to Watergate.

In 1980, 87 people died in a fire at the MGM Grand Hotel-Casino in Las Vegas, Nev.

Ten years ago: The proceedings of Britain's House of Commons were televised live for the first time.

Cabbies at crossroads between safety, discrimination

WASHINGTON — A Department of Labor report declared taxi-driving to be one of the highest risk occupations. One of the most dangerous jobs in America, according to the Department of Labor, is taxi-driving, and the cabbies are seeking safety in discrimination. Here are both sides of the issue:

Anderson

It is something that African-Americans have known for years: Taxicabs are not very likely to stop for a black man. Drivers pretend not to see them, then stop yards away for a white person.

Danny Glover, the talented black actor, watched as a handful of taxicabs pass him, his daughter and her friend in New York recently. When one did finally stop, the driver refused to allow him to sit in the front seat, as he had requested because of a hip injury, even though that is permitted in the city's taxi code. The driver wanted Glover and his party behind the bulletproof window separating the driver from the backseat.

Glover, disgusted, filed a discrimination complaint with New York City's Taxi and Limousine Commission. The complaint has seen results. The Commission told New York cabbies, "If they can't see decency on a human level, they will understand it on an economic level." Glover and his lawyer would like drivers to receive training and meet "ordinary black New Yorkers" as part of cab licensing.

150 undercover officers have taken 2,000 undercover rides in a little more than a week. The "Operation Refusal" sting goes like this: African-American undercover cops hail a cab while a white partner stands a space off and also hails the cab. If the driver ignores the first cop and opts for the white fare, he will be ticketed, his license suspended and the cab impounded.

Within a week, the driver will have a hearing and, if found guilty, face a fine up to $350 for the first offense, up to $500 for the second offense and will lose his license on the third offense.

So far, more than a dozen drivers have been suspended and their taxis impounded for refusing to pick up fares or for refusal to take riders to certain locations.

In New York, as in many of the nation's large cities, more than half of the cab drivers are immigrants, and discrimination may not be the issue so much as experience. Taxi drivers account for 10 percent of all victims of job-related homicide, while they represent only 1 percent of the nation's work force. Stripping away a driver's right to select fares, they believe, increases their risk.

For example, as New York cracked down on taxicab drivers who refuse service to certain areas or people, two cab drivers were robbed and murdered in crime-ridden neighborhoods of Washington, D.C.

One driver was robbed and stabbed to death in a parking lot at 7 a.m. by a someone described as a 19-year-old black man. The other driver, a 73-year-old man, was found dead near his cab. He died of multiple stab wounds, killed by two men who robbed him at rush hour in a crime-ridden neighborhood. Two black men are being sought in the stabbing.

We learned that in the Washington area, while only a dozen drivers have been killed in the last several years, every cabbie we talked to has been robbed at least once.

One man, Nadir, an immigrant from the Middle East, has been driving for 10 years. In that time he has been robbed three times, all by black assailants. In one encounter he picked up two well-dressed black men and a woman in the Chinatown area. They stabbed him repeatedly in his neck until he handed over the $300 he had on him. Now Nadir is more selective of the fares he picks up late at night and concedes sometimes it just comes down to appearance.

It is a collision between discrimination and personal safety, and the answer may be bullet-proof shields separating drivers and passengers. After all, there is always a risk, regardless of race, when one individual provides a ride for another individual.

U.S. economy is stronger than ever

LONDON — Stroll down the King's Road in Chelsea and here's what you see: The Gap and Nine West, Starbuck's and Safeway and of course, Mickey D's. School kids on a field trip carry notebooks emblazoned with Mickey M. Posters on buses and billboards promote singers Mariah Carey and Jennifer Lopez.

Roberts

Practically every movie in town comes from Hollywood and theaters are featuring American musicals like "Saturday Night Fever" and "The Buddy Holly Story."

But that's only the beginning. Signs advertise American stockbrokers, consulting firms and hotel chains. The European edition of Business Week recently concluded: "It's clear that the Darwinian struggle for supremacy in European investment banking is largely over." The big winners: three American firms, Morgan Stanley, Goldman Sachs and Merrill Lynch.

The point here is a simple one. American economic power is unleashed and unmatched. The United States has nothing to fear, and everything to gain, from enlarging trade with China, Europe, and the rest of the world.

President Clinton deserves credit for pursuing the deal that would bring China into the world trading system, and open its markets to outside competition, but signing the pact with Beijing is only half the battle. Now the president has to put all of his political muscle behind the agreement and force it through Congress next year.

Clinton frequently laments that he's not been president during an age that demanded great leadership-war, depression, the struggle for equal rights.

But history might well look back on the 1990s as the Age of Globalization. One of Clinton's most lasting contributions would be cementing American leadership in this new economic universe, and to do that he has to sell the future to his own dubious supporters.

That won't be easy. Protectionism is as old as commerce itself. Walking through an exhibit here on the history of London, we noted that 150 years ago British silk and wool weavers were up in arms over a flood of cheap cotton imports.

European governments continue to bar American beef and bananas in defiance of repeated international rulings. France is furious over what the Paris daily Le Monde calls the cultural and commercial "hegemony" of American economic power. McDonald's outlets have been trashed by French farmers and president Jacques Chirac cheers them on: "I am in complete solidarity with France's farm workers and I detest McDonald's."

At home, labor leaders have trashed Clinton's China deal as a "slap in the face" to American workers and their opposition is understandable, if profoundly wrong. As a shrewd union boss told us years ago, unions only represent workers who have jobs now, not workers who might get jobs in the future, so their whole view of the world is backward-looking. Moreover, shuttered mills and locked gates are easy to dramatize on TV, while the plants that prosper from greater trade are less visible, and their workers are less organized.

Team Clinton has to reverse the impression that trade hurts more than it helps, and the numbers are clearly on their side. They have to mobilize the Boeing workers in Seattle, the grain farmers in Minnesota, the stevedores in New Orleans, and countless other Americans whose jobs depend on expanded commerce.

Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers is absolutely right when he says of the China deal: "This means more jobs for Americans. It means larger export markets for American producers to provide high wage jobs. It means a more stable, competitive global economy." But the Clinton administration has done a poor job of making that case, and the deal could fail if they don't get better at it.

Beyond that, the White House has to harness the power of the American consumer. This Christmas, many families will be able to stretch their gift-giving dollars by purchasing inexpensive toys, textiles and tricycles made abroad. In many cases these families don't even realize how they benefit from free trade and they have to be educated.

Interestingly one of Clinton's strongest allies in the pro-trade battle could be Gov. George W. Bush. In a recent interview with us he described himself as "firmly in the internationalist camp," and in practically every speech he denounces protectionism as self-defeating. "It's the fearful who build walls," he likes to say, "and the confident who tear them down."

Any walk through London-or Paris or Tokyo or Beijing-justifies that confidence. American workers can out-produce and out-sell any competition anywhere. Clinton's job now is to sell that confidence to American voters.

Candidates' ads return politics to 'entertaining' roots

WASHINGTON — The nation held its breath. Or was it stifling a yawn? In any case, presidential politics became serious last week because a bunch of candidates broadcast television ads. Consider how far American politics has come to be this sort of spectator sport.

Once upon a time, Americans' zest for politics astonished the world. In Jules Verne's "Around the World in Eighty Days" (1873), Phileas Fogg, passing through San Francisco, gets swept up in a tremendous election hullabaloo. Fogg asks if the awesome commotion is for "the election of a general-in-chief, no doubt?" He is told, "No, sir; of a justice of the peace."

Will

Nineteenth-century political speeches, writes Michael Schudson, were "long enough to help kill two presidents —William Henry Harrison, who died from complications of exposure at his own inauguration, and Zachary Taylor, who died following the dedication ceremonies for the Washington Monument." In 1858, the first of seven Lincoln-Douglas debates, in Ottawa, Ill., a city of about 7,000, was witnessed — you cannot say heard — by about 20,000, none of whom, in those days before direct election of senators, could vote for either candidate.

American politics, at that time the best entertainment money did not have to buy, was entering its era of maximum popular participation. But soon "progressive" high-mindedness would help put a stop to that.

Schudson, of the University of California, San Diego, argues in his book, "The Good Citizen: A History of American Civic Life," that politics from the colonial period through the Revolution was a "politics of assent." Elections were acts of deference, ratifying rule by the gentry, which regarded political office as an obligation connected with social standing.

But urbanization produced heterogeneous populations, newspapers (by 1794 they were 70 percent of the weight in the postal system) fueled argumentation, and immigration produced fierce rivalries among ethnic communities. Soon mass-based parties replaced the politics of deference with the "politics of affiliation."

Between Lincoln and Teddy Roosevelt, writes Schudson, no president captured the public's imagination, yet "these were the years of the highest voter turnout in our entire history. Americans of that era enjoyed politics." It was not elevated politics. It was a sport of rival social groups organized into teams (parties) around "ethnocultural" issues — immigration, church schools, temperance — at least as bitterly divisive as today's social issues.

But in the late 19th century in the North, 70 percent or more of those eligible usually voted in presidential elections. This was partly a tribute to political machines: Pennsylvania's Republican organization had 20,000 wage-earning workers — more employees than most of the state's railroads. And Schudson says that during the Gilded Age as many as 20 percent of New York City voters may have been paid in some form or other as Election Day workers. Then righteous reformers and caring government took much of the fun, and a lot of the voters, out of politics.

Today, government does more and more for citizens who vote less and less. Celebrating expertise and stigmatizing partisanship, the remorseless improvers of our politics have the reformers' perennial aspiration of replacing politics with administration. Witness John McCain's John Brown-like passion to purge politics of "special interests": Only unspecial interests should be heard from.

The improvers have always aimed at reducing the passionate and increasing the cognitive ingredient in voting. Think of that as you watch the candidates' ads.

George F. Will's column is distributed by the Washington Post Writers Group.

End of city's cluster system long overdue

I agree with Greg Strauss and his opinion on the ending of the cluster system. Even though the schools on the south and east sides of town have been upgraded, it does not affect the matter of the isolation of the various races from one another due to the "other side of the residential track" mentality of Midland. Uniforms also have helped in eliminating cliques and gang affiliations. Nobody knows what group any one is running with now.

Please let's not take two steps back to segregation. If fact, the children should actually be going to class from kindergarten on so at a very early age they will learn to respect and not fear others not like them. Let's have one big high school, one freshman school, one junior high and one grade school in a centrally located area so that education in Midland will really be equal for all students.

Sue Johnson

Not all children lack manners on Halloween

I would like for L.K. Roundtree to know I had crowds of "trick or treaters" and lots of older ones, but none were rude.

When I opened my door, there were always cries of "Trick or Treat," and I tried to greet each one and admired costumes. And when I handed out treats, I always was rewarded with a "Thank you."

Just because Roundtree got a bunch of rude trick-or-treaters doesn't mean all kids are like that. I think most are taught manners and common courtesy. In my 81 years, I have met a lot of rude adults.

So let us be thankful for the children and pray for their future.

Ernestine Hammack

Area students should be congratulated

During the week of Nov. 8th, citizens of Midland had numerous opportunities to attend Veterans Day activities that recognized the contributions and sacrifices of our servicemen and women. Children from local public and private schools participated in many of these observances, including two held by the Confederate Air Force.

On Wednesday, Nov. 10, approximately 400 students from Rusk Elementary paid tribute in song and word to more than 150 veterans. The children, under the direction of Cari Garner, truly exemplified what is outstanding about our youth today. Throughout the performance, students exhibited self-discipline and good manners. They were respectful of others and demonstrated a commitment to doing their best. It was apparent that many hours of planning, preparation and rehearsal had been dedicated to this patriotic musical production.

Putting on an event of this magnitude, and for it to be successful, is the result of a collaborative effort. Every Rusk faculty member is to be congratulated. As principle organizers, both Sharon Morgan and Cari Garner deserve special recognition. To see the CAF hangar filled with enthusiastic children, proud veterans and an appreciative audience was heart warming.

On Thursday, Nov. 11th, the CAF honored our nation's veterans. As part of the ceremony, students from Trinity School provided musical selections. They, like the students from Rusk Elementary, were wonderful representatives for their school.

At a time when education is under scrutiny, it is reassuring to see the positive rewards of our community's efforts. Ed Todd, the Reporter-Telegram, and local television stations are to be commended for their excellent coverage of these events that publicize our youth's accomplishments. When parents, educational professionals, the media and our community commit themselves to supporting our children, everyone benefits.

We at the Confederate Air Force applaud Rusk Elementary, Trinity School, and other area students for remembering our veterans and instilling in the children a sense of patriotism, a deep respect for the price of freedom, and a love of country.

Readers' views on new sports complex

City doesn't need a new sports arena

Although the vote to build a new sports complex already has passed, I still feel it is a waste of money. Bobby Burns and many others pushed and pushed the proposal when they do not push to build better schools. The increased sales tax does not sound like much, but a quarter of a cent adds up really quickly. The way the economy is going up and down these days, it is in no condition to support something as big as a sports complex.

One good reason not to go ahead with this is that we have many old and rundown schools. Midland High is one of these schools. MHS is 71 years old; it was built in 1928. I know the money used for the complex does not take away from the school budget. I feel that when the bond for a new Midland High was brought up, no one put forth half as much effort for it as they have for the sports complex.

The downfall in economy is another good reason not to build the complex. With the oil field drying up and many people up and moving off, there will not be near enough economic support for this complex. Also, if people are going to spend so much money for the new complex, make it accommodate all the sports. There is not a track for the people who run track, there are no tennis courts for those who play tennis, and there is not a basketball court for those who play basketball. What are they supposed to do? I am sure they would like something new also.

There are so many other things that we could spend this money on. The roads for one; even though we have fixed Wadley time and again, we need to fix it and fix it for good. A sports complex is one of the last things Midland needs at this point in time. Of course, that is just my opinion. I am just a high school senior. I could be wrong. Then again, I could be very right.

Michelle Smith

Name of complex should tell location

The dictionary describes a stadium as "a large structure consisting of seats arranged in tiers around a field which is used for outdoor athletic contests."

Because the Scharbauers have stated they do not want it named for them and many were involved in supporting a new complex, let's leave out individuals. Please consider one of these names:

"Midland Stadium"
"Midland Sports Stadium"
"Midland Memorial Stadium"
"Tall City Stadium"

We have Midland International Airport and with these suggestions everyone would know its location.

Rita Wheeler

Road to complex could be 'Athletes St.'

Since the election and passage to build a sports complex, I have been thinking about all the problems involved before it's ready for use.

With that in mind, I feel I have the solution to one.

When it's finished and you get an itch to attend one of the functions it will be necessary to have a road going to it. I suggest we call it "Athletes Street". That should cure the problem.

I'm only trying to help.

Herb McKinley

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being resubmitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702 or you may fax to 682-3793.

They can also be faxed to 682-3793 or sent via e-mail to Letters@basinlink.com - Letters faxed or sent by e-mail should indicate they are for publication.

Readers' views on behavior during Midland-Lee football game

Type of antics have been going on for years

I would like to interject some thoughts concerning the half-time show of the MHS-LHS game of Nov. 5.

I graduated from Robert E. Lee High in 1972 and my wife is from the Class of '75 at Midland High. Our son is a senior at MHS, and is a member of the Bulldog Band.

OK, so a lot of people from Lee are highly upset over the half-time show that was conducted by the Midland High Band. The show included a "fight" between the mascots of both schools, with the Rebel having been put to the sword by the Bulldog.

Well, I can understand why the Lee people are upset. If this happened when I was a student at Lee, I probably would be upset also. It isn't funny when "turnabout is fair play" actually happens. I have seen students at my alma mater mutilate bulldogs (both in effigy and the real animals) for the past 30 years. Don't tell me it never happened; I have seen it. The worst that I can remember MHS students have done in the past was to spray-paint "Ol' Fritz," the cannon at the Lee High plaza. Sometimes, they took a Confederate flag away from a Rebel student (but, hey, the LHS principals do that nowadays!).

One of the Lee band students committed a criminal act by stealing the MHS London flag right after the game. What the MHS Band did might not have been in the best of good taste, but at least they didn't break any laws. Fortunately, Randy Storie, the LHS band director, did the correct thing by forcing the student to return the banner. And as for half-time antics, how about last year? The Midland High Band program was attempting to pay a tribute to Melvin Scott, who retired from Midland High Freshman as their band director for about 35 years. Instead the Lee band played long, and before the MHS band could do their tribute, both teams were back out on the field thus effectively and rudely cutting off the planned program.

I hope the Lee Rebels will go all the way back to state again with their football team, and I'll show my support by flying a Confederate flag. I hope the MHS Bulldog basketball team has another shot at the state playoffs again. I'll show my support by wearing purple and gold. Both schools have brought pride to the Tall City. But after living in Midland for 33 years, and knowing what I know of both schools, I'm glad my son is graduating out of Midland High, and that my daughter goes to Midland Christian!

MHS band director inspires students

Less than two years ago, the Midland High School Band was blessed with a new and wonderful band director, Gary Doherty. He has inspired his associates, his students and their parents to dream of great things at Midland High School. My daughter is a sophomore in the Bulldog Marching Band this year.

Yes, he is demanding. He asks students to set high standards for themselves and their peers. He asks them to be disappointed when they do not give their best. He expects them to be responsible for their actions including putting their grades first.

At a recent sporting event, parents approached me from Gary's previous school in central Texas. The unsolicited feedback from them about his accomplishments there just cemented my confidence in the future of our band at Midland High. To go from roughly 100 band students to possibly approaching 300 band students two years from now is exciting! Purple pride is growing. Congratulations Gary and thanks for your leadership this year.

Director deserves thanks for success

Do you believe in magic? I do! Why? For the past few months, I have had the opportunity to spend a great deal of time and energy with the most wonderful group of students! They are all members of the MHS Band.

This group of students has had an outstanding season in marching — they received a 1st Division in the UIL marching contest and performed in a spectacular manner. The band also performed in the Duncanville Marching Invitational; 20 of the top bands in Texas were invited and the MHS band placed in the top 10!

In addition to marching, this band has been working for six months to raise money to march in the Millennium Parade in London. They are one of 16 bands in North America to receive this prestigious invitation and I'm proud to say that the "Dawgs Are Going Global!"

The credit for this effort rests not only with each hard-working student and parent, but with an incredible band director who challenges his students to have great vision and to believe that "Quality Has No Limits!"

Gary Doherty deserves this credit. He has the hearts of his students and the thanks of all the parents involved. Gary's efforts and dreams exemplify what band is about ... a place to belong, a place to be challenged to always do your best musically and academically, a place to believe in magic! So, way to go band and many thanks to Gary Doherty, his staff, Neil Richmond and Dan Green! And thanks for all the community support — MHS Band will make you proud as they march in London!

Tracey Dees

Band director Doherty was a good choice

I am writing my first ever letter to an editor in response to the "orchestrated" letter-writing and phone-calling campaign directed at Midland High School Band Director Gary Doherty.

Lee Band Moms, your soap-opera communiques were received — some anonymously. You are obviously a group of ladies with too much time on your hands.

The spirit of rivalry being compared to the Columbine massacres? Please!

Thank you Neil Richmond for recruiting Doherty to Midland. You knew he was one of the finest directors in the country, but for several hundred band parents, what is most important is how he loves and respects our kids, and the life lessons they walk away with every day.

I applaud all MISD administrators for recruiting wonderful teachers such as Gary Doherty.

For my daughter and many others' sons and daughters, thank you!

LHS administration set a good example

I would like to express my appreciation to George Cooper and the administration of Lee High School for the example they set for the students and fans at Friday night's football game between Lee High School and Midland High School. I feel that the administrators and educators of the respective high schools can have a profound influence over the student body of those schools. If they do not set an example of respect toward an opponent, how can we hope to have the students learn to show respect.

I do not mean to imply that the administration of Lee High School is responsible for the behavior of the student body or the adult fans of that school. That would be completely unrealistic. However, I am aware that during the week before the game, Cooper made it very clear to the students that certain vulgar, rude, and offensive actions would not be tolerated at the game. I realize that some students and fans did behave in a rude and offensive manner. However, I have to commend Cooper and his staff for taking a stand against that behavior and making a concerted effort to put a stop to it when they saw it.

I saw young men who were directed to put their shirts on, thereby being properly clothed and covering up any suggestive language they might have had written on themselves. I am aware that Cooper took possession of "flags" that he deemed inappropriate.

While it is absolutely impossible to police the entire stadium and demand a certain code of conduct of everyone who attends a high school football game, these issues were dealt with swiftly and quietly when it was brought to their attention. One good role model is worth a thousand words. I feel that Cooper set a standard for the students at Lee High School and gave the students and parents no reason to believe that he, or his staff, did not intend to adhere to that standard themselves.

Actions show rivalry has gone too far

I would like to respond to the letters of Nov. 14 about the behavior of students at the Midland-Lee football game. I am a member of the Midland High School Band and I would like to say a few things not only for our school, but for the band as well. This is no excuse for the skit we put on, but we would like the city of Midland to know that we are not the "bullies."

I admit that our behavior was wrong, along with the majority of the audience and the Lee High School Band. Most LHS students have been nothing but supportive toward our band and football team. Those who aren't our friends seem to see us as a school that will never progress in anything. This is not true. The football team played very well this year, and even beat Permian for the first time in several years. The band has also done extremely well this year. We took part in the Duncanville Marching Invitational and placed 10th in state in the finals, which is extremely well considering this was our first time in the history of MHS to participate.

We are also one of 16 bands in the United States invited to participate in the London Millennium Parade. And the response from Lee is nothing. We hear no words of inspiration; not even help with our fund-raisers! A common excuse when we asked for donations was: "Our kids go to Lee." Some did give generously and we greatly appreciate their help, but the majority seemed to not care.

Another thing, at the game it came to our attention that the Lee students tied up a bulldog and threw dog biscuits at it, and last year while marching past the Lee student section our band was hit by numerous soft drink cans, food, or whatever they could find. And what about the time they literally killed our mascot and hung his head from a flagpole? I don't know about anyone else, but my belief is that pretending is better than actually going out and killing a living thing.

It seems to us that they can get away with murder and, just because we put on a skit, the entire town looks down on us. Our performance did not harm anyone, and some Lee fans even laughed at it. But I think the rivalry has gone too far. It's time for us (the teen-agers in Midland) to stop the violence and hatred, and learn to get along. And we could start by giving each other the respect we deserve.

Ami Magallanez

Lee antics just as bad as Midland High's

In response to the biased letters printed in the letters column, I noticed all regarding Midland High School were from Lee fans. The rivalry that has developed between Midland and Lee has become more and more chaotic. To complain of our half-time skit and ignore the other fallacies is childish.

It must be OK to vandalize signs, houses and vehicles. Either that or the fact that you are oblivious to your surroundings or it's OK for Lee to do what they want. What I have to say is, who really cares. The point of my letter is that regardless of how disappointed you may be of the MHS band's skit, your opinion is biased and I know it would be different if you were to attend MHS instead of Lee. No, I am not trying to demean your opinion, but maybe you should consume everything around you before you so openly bite on one small thing.

In response to Richard K. Barr's statement, "If there should be one student in Midland High School with potential violent tendencies, that skit and school sentiment could push him over the edge," I am shocked to hear such a line. If we were to live by everything negative that has happened in the past we wouldn't be able to cite any opinion. Because students take a moment of silence before the game, does that mean everyone who prayed was going to get shot for their religious beliefs? That sounds preposterous doesn't it?

What our skit did was hype up the Midland High fans. What we did outside of school during the week of the football game was so similar to Lee's actions it's insane but, because we put on a skit we must be so utterly awful. Maybe if we were to steal an opponent's flag and burn it, it would be OK. After all, some students from Lee burned ours. What I am saying is that some of your disappointment may be with us, but there is a ton that is lying undiscovered within your own backyard.

Half-time skit only as brutal as sport itself

Prior letters to the Reporter-Telegram have expressed outrage from Lee High School supporters with regard to the half-time skit performed by the Midland High School Band at the Lee-MHS game several weeks ago. Although I agree that much of the pre-game behavior by students from both schools was uncalled for, I sense a certain disconnect in the logic of the MHS detractors.

Football is one of the most vicious sports ever conceived by modern man. Eleven young men of one team are expected to hit, block, tackle, run over and otherwise overpower and brutalize 11 players of another team.

Thousands of fans attend these events in support of their respective teams. They cheer for hard tackles, roar when their team runs over the opposition, and feel victorious only if their team is able to physically dominate the opposition.

When these same fans are angered by a parody in which one mascot slays another and even go so far as to believe that such behavior could trigger a Columbine-type tragedy, I can only suggest that they either get some perspective or, better yet, get a life.

Some campus traditions have been linked to danger throughout history

In the Middle Ages, freshmen's noses were pressed to grindstones — literally — as an initiation into college life. At the turn of the century, mass fist-fights were common on campuses around the United States.

In the 1990s, student rites of passage have included everything from streaking across the first snow in Princeton to skinny dipping in the hot springs of the Yellowstone river in Montana.

Tradition and danger have always formed a potent mix on college campuses. Last Wednesday they produced disaster. Twelve people were killed and many more injured by the collapse of a 40-foot pyramid of logs being built for the annual football game bonfire at Texas A&M University.

The blaze is a 90-year-old Thanksgiving tradition, so hallowed that students are willing to don hard hats and haul logs in order to be part of something bigger than they've ever been part of before. They want bragging rights to a memory they can cherish for all time.

Students have sought the same for centuries.

''College traditions and rituals are about bonding and belonging, about linking students of 1999 with those of 1909 and before,'' says Hank Nuwer, author of ''Wrongs of Passage,'' a study of student rites through the centuries.

Nuwer, who teaches journalism at Anderson University in Indiana, traces such ''belonging rituals'' to the 4th century, when St. Augustine complained about a group called the ''Overturners'' tormenting new students in Carthage.

Things haven't changed much.

Despite serious attempts by campus administrators to curb college rituals over the years, traditions persist, often fueled by alcohol and laced with danger.

At Princeton, the annual ''Nude Olympic'' sophomore sprint through the snow landed 10 people in a hospital last year, mostly for intoxication.

In Yellowstone National Park, rangers have tried for years to prevent students from Montana State University in Bozeman from ''hot potting'' — skinny dipping at a spot where hot springs boil up into the icy Yellowstone River.

At Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., mobs of students mark the last day of classes by climbing a hill and getting roaring drunk; so many participate in ''Hill Day'' that campus police can't stop them.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology has its own proud history of mischief-making, or ''hacking,'' which dates least to the 1920s. Four years ago, hackers placed a police car on top of the university's Great Dome. In 1982 they dug a tunnel under the Harvard Stadium and launched an exploding black rubber balloon at the 50-yard line during the Harvard-Yale game.

Defenders of the Texas A&M bonfire say it is unfair to put their tradition in the same category. Theirs is an organized event, they argue, structured and supported by the university administration. And, until this year, it was considered safe. Even people who lost friends in the accident publicly urged university officials to continue the tradition.

Families bury their dead, comfort injured

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Friends and families began burying their dead and comforted their wounded Saturday as Texas A&M University struggled to cope with the bonfire collapse that killed 12 people and injured 27.

Waiting rooms near the campus were crowded with students offering blood, sympathy and support for the seven people still hospitalized. Up to 40 students have maintained a 24-hour vigil at St. Joseph Regional Medical Center.

"It has been incredible," Cheryl Davis, mother of hospitalized student William Davis, said of the support. "This has been wonderful."

Questions have begun to resurface about the safety of the annual bonfire, a venerated tradition on the A&M campus for 90 years.

Texas A&M President Ray Bowen has ordered the formation of a task force of engineers and other experts to look into the disaster "so we'll be able to analyze all the facts and make decisions to see this horror never visits our campus again."

The funerals began Saturday in the Houston suburb of Bellaire with services for Nathan Scott West, a sophomore oceanography major who was killed in the Thursday morning collapse.

Two people — Davis, from Bellaire, and John Comstock of Richardson — remained in critical condition Saturday, while three were in serious condition: Chad Hutchinson of Houston, J.H. Washam of Dallas and Dominic Braus of Hallettsville.

Lannie Hayes of Monahans and Milton Thiel of Livingston were in fair condition. Twenty students had been treated and released from the hospitals by Saturday.

Hutchinson's father said his son grew emotional when he regained consciousness Thursday and was told of the loss of life, including three of his friends.

"He shed a few tears," Bill Hutchinson said, adding that his son remains committed to the bonfire tradition. "If they would release him (from the hospital) to build it, he would."

William Davis and Chad Hutchinson were both crew chiefs who coordinated the student work gangs building the bonfire.

"They are so cautious and careful," said Davis' mother. "The manuals are passed down. There are years and years of experience."

Ms. Davis said her son "is doing great" despite pelvic and wrist fractures, a lacerated liver and a punctured lung.

Officials have said about 70 people were stacking the logs when the pile gave way. Some students were hurled from the structure; others were trapped in the shifting logs.

Past A&M engineering professors said they tried over the years to warn students that the design of the bonfire contained perilous design flaws.

"You put a pine pole in the center and then ... lash all these matchsticks together," Swiki Anderson, now a consulting engineer, told the Houston Chronicle. "It's an accident that's been waiting to happen."

Anderson said he voiced his worries to his department chairman when teaching at A&M in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

The bonfire pile is flawed because it consists of a relatively loose bunching of upright logs and because its base is too narrow to hold its looming tower, said A&M professor emeritus Louis Thompson.

"I kept telling them it was dangerous," said Thompson, a civil engineer who retired in 1991 after 25 years. "What's amazing to me is that it went on as long as it did."

Other A&M staff have defended the practice as both safe and technically sound. Bill Kibler, assistant vice president for student affairs, said he is unaware of any warnings made by engineering faculty over the years.

Greenwood student's art turns up on TV

By George Torres
Staff Writer

Four years ago, the Dallas Cowboys acquired a certain superstar by the name of Deion Sanders from the San Francisco 49ers. Because of the fierce rivalry between the two teams, some Dallas fans didn't welcome Sanders with open arms.

One such fan was Mario Morales Jr., a 17-year-old senior at Greenwood High School. But as Sanders dropped the 49ers spotlight and began to shine under the stars of Texas, he quickly emerged as a Dallas Cowboys hero.

Being a longtime Cowboys fan, that transformation inspired Mario to make a drawing of Sanders, which in due time, landed a spot on national television. During a press conference before the Minnesota Vikings game, Sanders was being interviewed in the locker room ... and in the background, Mario's drawing could be seen hanging in the locker.

"I'm as proud as any father could be," said Mario Morales Sr., Mario's father.

How did Mario get the drawing to Sanders?

It all started back in May, when the Dallas Cowboys took part in a celebrity softball tournament in Odessa. Mario asked James Chapel, his art teacher at Greenwood High School, to have Sanders sign his drawing.

The teacher agreed, but after seeing how long the line for autographs was, he somehow made his way past security and saw Michael Irvin. After calling out to him twice, using the name, "Michael," Chapel then said "Mr. Irvin," which grabbed the wide receiver's attention.

Because Chapel had missed Sanders, who had left early because of injuries, the art teacher asked Irvin to give Sanders the drawing as a gift from one of his students.

By that time, security had caught up with Chapel and asked him to leave, but not before a lineman from the Cowboys took the drawing and gave it to Irvin.

Mario heard nothing of the drawing again ... until six months later. He was doing homework when one of his friends called and said he had just seen his drawing of Sanders on the Fox Network. Then, while at school, another classmate said that she had seen it on ESPN.

"When I heard the news I was floating for about three days," Mario said.

His father then added. "I've always told my son. 'Be patient. Good things come to those who wait.'"

Mario has drawn all his life, but he only began taking classes in the seventh grade.

Like many of the other kids in Greenwood, sports was a main focus in his life.

"I'm glad I was able to bring something else (art) out of Greenwood," said Mario, who had hoped to play baseball in college before a shoulder injury put a kink in those plans

But now Mario has his art to fall back on. He currently is looking at colleges to attend, including the Art Institute of Kansas City. He is also pondering a scholarship offer from McMurry University in Abilene.

"He has gone further in art — from freshman year to senior year — than any other stu-

Midland Ranch Rodeo offers cookin', singin' and visitin'

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

If you are going to have a real ranch rodeo with genuine working cowboys doing the roping and the riding, you best feed them well at the campsite.

"This food here will make a stick-horse buck and pitch," quipped Long Track Ranch rancher Jerry Baird who was joined by his wife, Mickey, at their antique John Deere chuck wagon Saturday at the 12th anniversary of the Midland Ranch Rodeo on the grounds of the Midland County Exhibit Building.

Their chuck wagon was among those at smoking and congenial campsites where cooks served up a mess of chicken-fried steak, beans, potatoes, camp bread and peach cobbler.

The food was prepared for townsfolk and ranch hands, including the cowboys and cowgirls competing in the Ranch Rodeo events of wild-cow milking, steering doctoring, team sorting, calf branding and double mugging.

"It's what working cowboys do," said Alpine's Harley May, who was instrumental in getting intercollegiate rodeoing organized, which he did at Sul Ross State University many years ago.

Teams signed up for the invitational Ranch Rodeo events included those from the Rocker B Ranch of Barnhart, Dean Ranch of Sheffield, Long X Cattle Company of Kent, Munsell Ranch of Andrews, NT Ranch of Stanton, and the Cedar Mountain Ranch, YT Ranch, and the K Bar Ranch, all of Odessa.

"It should be ranch rodeos instead of professional rodeos," May

Warm weather, little rain likely to hang around

By Rick McLaughlin
Staff Writer

"Everyone talks about the weather, but no one does anything about it," said American author and humorist Mark Twain.

These days, people are still talking about the weather and what they are talking about is unseasonably warm fall temperatures, seemingly endless clear skies and the related lack of rain.

Last Thursday's high, for example, was 84 degrees, which tied a record high for that date set in 1981. The normal high for that date is 65, a 19-degree difference.

Likewise, the normal low for Nov. 18 — last Thursday — is 38 degrees, 13 degrees below the 51 actually recorded.

A cold front blew into the Permian Basin Friday and momentarily cooled things off, with a high of only 66 being recorded that afternoon, only one degree off the statistical normal temperature of 65, observed Douglas Cain, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Even at that, though, the low Friday was only 46, compared to the normal low of 38.

"As for the temperatures, we have been in an upper ridge (high pressure moving over the area)," Cain said. "Have you noticed that for the last few weeks there have been very few clouds? A ridge is air that sinks and warms and tends to dissipate cloud cover."

And it is not just unseasonably warm temperatures that make this an unusual year, either.

With rainfall at 7.06 inches so far this year, only half the normal figure of 14.16 inches of precipitation, the long-term dry spell goes on.

"We're actually doing better than we did last year," Cain noted. "1998 was the second driest year on record. At the end of October in 1998, we were 9.28 inches below normal for rainfall. At end of October 1999, we were 5.98 inches below normal."

Cain said there are several theories as to why this part of the country is having such a combination of warm days and nights, clear skies and no rain. "Global warming is one theory. Still another is that it is a cyclical pattern of dry and wet years. We have had a dry trend over the last several years, so it is a cumulative effect."

'Global warming is one theory. Still another is that it is a cyclical pattern of dry and wet years. We have had a dry trend over the last several years, so it is a cumulative effect.'

— Douglas Cain, meteorologist at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport

The La Niña - El Niño factor

Still another theory is that this weather comes from the effects of the La Niña and El Niño weather patterns. "The La Niña forecast for the rest of winter in West Texas and southeast New Mexico is to have warmer temperatures and less precipitation," Cain said. "So far, the La Niña forecast appears to be working out. And unfortunately that forecast is through the rest of the winter."

That forecast is released by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA).

La Niña, the troublesome weather-maker that has disrupted the global climate for the past year-and-a-half, will be around to cause more problems in the new year, predicts a new U.S. government forecast.

"This winter will be warmer and drier than usual in the southern half of the U.S., wetter and stormier in the Pacific Northwest and the Great Lakes down into the Ohio River Valley," said Jack Kelley of the National Weather Service.

Last winter La Niña was blamed for droughts that cost farmers billions of dollars.

But as La Niña made trouble for some, it benefited others.

Because of warmer temperatures and reduced snowfall, Americans have saved an estimated $5 billion

Bonfire tragedy rekindles special bond that all Aggies share

Traditionally, the Aggie bonfire symbolizes a burning desire to beat Texas, to win a football game. But in spirit, bonfire is all about the camaraderie of the students who build it and the sense of family that being an Aggie instills.

Peden

This week, I mourn for brothers and sisters I've never met.

The 12 Texas A&M students who died in the collapse of the bonfire stack Thursday have thousands of family members worldwide because that's the bond between Aggies. Bonfire is only one of those bonds — the traditions on which Texas A&M is built.

The silver lining in this tragedy is that the 12 knew they had a large extended family — that's the only reason anyone would be wiring logs together in the middle of the night. In a way, they had an obligation, which gave them a sense of purpose, one that's impossible to describe unless you've actually been on the stack at 2 in the morning.

Over the past few days, I've seen this sense of family manifested in several ways.

The Texas A&M Web site has a message board, on which more than 700 messages were posted within 48 hours of the collapse. Most were compassionate. One message told a story of Tim Kerlee, a 17-year-old freshman from Tennessee who died Friday in the hospital, many hours after he was pulled from the pile of logs. He was visited, the post said, by members of his Corps outfit. They presented him with a sabre and boots — two honors fiercely reserved only for senior Cadets. I hope that story is true; I have to think that made his final hours a little happier.

That story was only one of several things that made my eyes well up this week.

I spoke with my mother Friday by telephone. She asked if I climbed around on the bonfire stack when I was in college. Even though it's been 10 years since I did, I could hear some anguish in her voice when I said yes.

I think of Midland's Will Harlan, who was on the stack when it fell. Mercifully, he only broke his wrists, but he lost friends. I think of one of my best friends, a man whom I was planning to visit this weekend even before I heard about the tragedy. He and I spent quite a few hours wiring logs as a two-man team in the late 1980s. It could have been him. It could have been me.

This is the feeling that being an Aggie gives you: every current student feels a bond with those 12, as well as the injured and all the families. Former students feel the same way.

Far less distressing than the actual tragedy are some things I've read from the various wire services, how some are calling for an end to bonfire. Many of those are the same people who have been trying to banish bonfire for years. The environmentally concerned critics have a valid point — it is a waste of resources — but those resources would be wasted anyway. The trees come from land that would be cleared anyway, and the trees would be burned whether they were used for bonfire or not.

It is proper that this year's bonfire be canceled, out of respect for the dead and their families. Some claim that the dead would want bonfire to go on. While that is almost certainly true, there are more important things even than tradition.

School president Ray Bowen made the right decision in canceling this year's bonfire, and he also said the right thing when asked by members of the media if bonfire might be canceled forever. He said it was a decision to be made at a "calmer" time.

Among A&M's many traditions are Silver Taps and Muster, two ceremonies that honor Aggies who have passed on. Those ceremonies became especially important at a military college during wars; I took great pride in the fact that the dormitory I lived in, Davis-Gary, was named for the first two Aggies who died in World War II. I would have liked to shake their hands.

In the near future, Silver Taps and Muster will be the most important traditions at Texas A&M. But a year from now, bonfire will be just as important.

The gung-ho Aggies have always yelled, "Build it bigger!" After this week, the cry must be "Build it safer!" But it must be built.

Bonfire must go on. The burning desire that bonfire symbolizes, as well as the intense feeling of loss that all Aggies feel this week, is what makes Texas A&M so special.

WEATHER: Officials say crops could suffer in heating costs since 1997, when this La Niña began, and an estimated $350 million has been saved in snow-removal expenses.

What is La Niña? The phenomenon known as La Niña is a periodic cooling of a large area of the tropical Pacific Ocean. It can alternate with an ocean-warming called El Niño. Both can have an impact on weather worldwide.

Scientists have even discovered that Atlantic hurricanes are more powerful during La Niña years, while hurricanes have been less destructive during El Niño years.

Because forecasters have had so much recent experience with La Niña weather patterns, they are becoming better at predicting its effects.

"Over the past decade, we have improved the forecasting of La Niña and El Niño so that we can now predict these events and their expected climatic impacts on different regions with 70 to 80 percent accuracy a year before they occur," Kelley said.

La Niña will change the strength and pattern of the Pacific jet stream over North America, said D. James Baker, head of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Local agricultural impact

The warm weather is very pleasant for weekend outdoor activities, but that's not good in the long run for the county's agriculture. "We are (extremely dry) right now as far as range land is concerned," said Jim Word, Ector County extension agent for agriculture. "Soil moisture is totally depleted. Many grasses have gone into dormancy due to lack of rainfall. Ranchers have gone to supplemental feed. We've been in draught for the last of six of seven years," Word said.

Sam Field, Midland County extension agent for agriculture, agrees. In the short run, he said, "the fall weather has helped in gathering some of our field crops like cotton."

But grasses, like wheat, used more for grazing during fall and winter months, "have been in pretty bad shape. One thing that concerns us is that we expect a lot of fall rain because it helps us survive the winter until we get to the spring planting. Normally, our weather pattern has seen more moisture in the fall than in the spring months. It's going to make things a lot tougher for those things that come out in the spring," Field said.

The fall rains are good for any of the field crops and survival of grasses on the range land and help build that subsurface moisture in the field. "Even though plants are dormant in winter, they are still alive. If temperatures get very low, and if there is not enough moisture there, you can increase winter kill," he noted.

"Ground moisture is in real poor shape right now. We need more to help the range and pasture grasses and to have that bank of soil moisture to help the spring crops when they start planting. Unless we get into some good winter moisture, which is not that common, there is going to be a tough time when we start our crops next season, such as cotton and sorghum," he said.

"We went through a very hard draught period from 1993 to 1997. In 1997, we got some good rainfall, but 1998 was extremely dry. Even though we have half of what we should have, it's still better than in '98," he noted.

And the warm weather has another negative side, as well. Unwanted company that is usually gone with the cold by now. "As far as most of our spring crops, the warm weather helps during harvest time, but on the negative side, we can expect more insect problems. We depend on cold freezing weather to eliminate some of these pests. We've been getting calls from people with ticks and fleas still in their yards." Boll weevils don't mind the weather and stay around as well, presumably having already found a home. "Unless we get some cold freezing temperatures, we will have more (insects) to deal with next season."

Oil cleanup near Midland continues

From Staff Reports

Cleanup efforts continued late last week for an Eott Energy Corp. gas leak of 5,000 barrels that occurred two miles southeast of Midland near County Road 1150, said Mike Hagan of the Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission (TNRCC).

The leak occurred at 2 a.m. last Sunday, and the National Response Center in Washington, D.C. notified the Railroad Commission at 2:04 a.m., said Hagan.

Eric Phode, public information officer for Eott Energy, said it is currently being investigated as to how the leak occurred. He said there's been no water damage and the line has been repaired and is back in service. "It's not a difficult thing to clean up. It's just a matter of digging up and remediating the soil."

He could not provide a specific time line as to when cleanup would be complete. This the first known case of trouble with the pipeline since it was purchased from Texas-New Mexico Pipeline in 1998.

"I DON'T LIKE THE WORD CLOSURE"

Questions derived from concerns expressed by grieving people

Mark Mercer, M.S., L.P.C, SWA

I only recently learned that many people don't like to hear the world "closure" in reference to their loss. The reason? "It's like shutting the door: goodbye, you didn't exist." The word is often misused to pressure you into what feels like a sudden abandonment of your loved one: "If you have another child, you'll have closure," or, "Now that the murder trial is over you can finally have closure." These suggestions are registered because they oversimplify the letting go process, trying to hurry it when you don't feel you'll ever be able to say goodbye.

There is more constructive way to look at closure. It is not a complete, final shutting of the door on your grief but a series of events - working through and closing down one facet on the hurt at a time. The pain is complex and has many facets. You say goodbye in bits and pieces, not in a single climactic episode. There is usually no complete closure, and you wouldn't desire that anyway. But you certainly don't want to grieve forever as intensely as you do now. A series of small closures allows you to hold on as much as you need to, while slowly diminishing the pain.

Next week: What are some small closures?

RODEO: Activities resume today at Exhibit Building said. "There are the real cowboys here. The other guys are athletes."

The Kids' Rodeo events included "mutton busting" whereby Western-garb-donned youngsters rode woolly sheep out of the chutes just like their grown-up counterparts in the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association do on bucking broncos and wild bulls.

At chuck-wagon campsites, cowboys treat their cooks well.

"You stay on the good side of the cook," figured Mrs. Baird. "You might have the job the next day, or you might get some utensils with soap left on them, and that's not good."

But lye soap, is good in its place.

"Women used to wash their hair in lye soap to get it clean," vouched cowboy-cook Jerry Slaton, a 61-year-old retired vocational-agriculture teacher out of Afton. "Now, they won't put lye soap on it at all."

Farm-and-ranch women used to prepare lye soap outdoors in cast-iron wash pots.

James Stuart, a retired 68-year-old Lubbock cattle buyer, said that women who know "want that lye soap," which makes their hair "soft and smooth."

Slaton, who sports a grandiose white moustache akin to Rip Van Winkle's beard, said that at ranch gatherings "you get to meet all these good fellows and hear these wild tales."

Midland County Commissioner Louisa Valencia savored the chuck wagon food prepared in cast-iron Dutch ovens and skillets on the ground.

"The biscuits are great," she said, and the Ranch Rodeo is "very good solid, family entertainment."

Stanton-based rancher Wayne Mitchell of the NT Ranch noted that the Ranch Rodeo is "based on things that people (ranch hands) do everyday. We come together and compete" in cooking and rodeoing.

Coming to the Ranch Rodeo is "sort of like homecoming to some, and to others, it's just to say 'Hello,'" said cowboy-minister Leonard Cotten of the C Ranch northwest of Midland. "It's something of our heritage here in Midland — just sitting around telling stories."

Of old-time ranching, Midland rancher Tommye Conner said she "could have lived a 100 years ago and enjoyed every minute of it."

Jeff Gore, an Austin-based cowboy-singer who formerly lived in Midland, said he finds a spirituality in working in the outdoor and in singing about it.

Whoo-pi-ti-yi-yo, Whoo-pi-ti-yi-ya . . . Back In The Saddle Again.

"It's really a spiritual thing tied to the land," Gore, 37, said. "There's a strong tie of man to the land.

"God make us stewards of the land," the moustached Gore said. "He gave us dominion over it and the animals. I cherish every moment I have out in nature and out on horseback chasing some cattle. That's what the music is all about" whether he is singing his old-time favorites, such as "Texas for the Roundup in the Spring" and "Night Riders' Lament," or singing his own "Wind and Rain" and "Buckaroo Spurs."

Ranch Rodeo events continue at 9 a.m. today.

ADVENTURES IN TEACHING

Science project brings father, daughter together

By R. Eric Setzler

A couple of years ago, I had a father stop by my classroom with his daughter to "borrow" some materials for her upcoming science fair project at George Bush Middle School. Sonny Ramius, a tall, nice man who needed a shave, wore casual clothes that consisted of a red sweatshirt jacket, a pair of worn jeans, and old white sneakers. His daughter, Garree, was a pretty, Advanced Earth Science student. She was bright and personable, but seemed to have little ambition for school. Garree loved movie stars, romance movies, and Hollywood gossip newspapers. She dressed nicely, although not in the designer fashions preferred by the more chic girls.

Setzler

We walked into my storeroom where I gave them a small sample of copper sulfide. Afterwards, I tried to talk quietly to Mr. Ramius about his daughter's sagging grades.

She didn't turn in some intermediate assignments for her science fair project, which wounded her average in my class. Apparently, Ms. Ramius had not started work on her experiment, although it was due in two weeks. Actually, the students had been given the guidelines and a timetable for this work five months earlier.

Her solution to replace the missing grades was to recreate several data tables from memory in front of me because she had "already done this project before." I was aggravated because as I reminded her, this was supposed to be original work. Garree smiled attractively, blushed, and denied ever knowing that vital piece of information.

This is Student Excuse Number 439 — "The teacher never told me."

I should also point out that this is also Student Excuse Numbers 1, 7, 24, 55, 63, 88, 112, 133, 149, 162, 190, 207, 236, 255, 280, 301, 326, 377, 378, 379, 400, 403, and 422, although stated with slightly different wording.

As I explained the situation to Garree's father, she visibly shrank and he expanded.

Mr. Ramius said to his eighth-grade daughter, "That's not going to work. Were you aware of this?"

"Well, I think it was on a sheet of paper somewhere," she responded.

"You can do better than that. In fact, I sense that your allowed phone time at home is now shrinking," he told her.

Garree replied, "Oh Daddy, I'm already grounded from the phone for the rest of this month."

"Well, maybe you need to be grounded next month, too."

Garree just wrinkled her nose, squinted her eyes, and shrugged her shoulders in a coquettish gesture of defeat. I winced because Mr. R's loud tones were attracting attention from other students and teachers in the near vicinity. Not entirely satisfied with his daughter's response, the father continued in a firm, but friendly way.

"Listen, I want you to do a better job in school," he said.

There was no verbal response from Garree. She responded with an even bigger smile. Tension mounted. I watched the power play with fascination. The audience had grown to include a half a dozen students and a couple of teachers. Rising to the challenge, he stared directly at her, then looked down toward his feet, and pointed at his zipper.

Mr. Ramius said boldly, "You are the product of my loins! You can do a better job than this."

The observers were rather surprised by this comment. Most middle-school-age girls would have crawled into a hole. The majority of children and adults would have died with embarrassment if a parent had made such an insensitive and rude statement; however, Garree seemed nonplused and just kept smiling.

Sonny said even louder, "You are MY DAUGHTER and THE PRODUCT OF MY LOINS! You know that you can do a better job!"

Not affected by this outburst, Garree Ramius broke the impasse by saying, "Oh Daddy, I'm not a scientist or as smart as you."

It was her daddy's turn to smile broadly as he told the 'Product of his Loins', "You are smart. Deep down inside of you is a scientist waiting to come out. I know because I was just like you when

SETZLER: After they left, we all looked at each other

(From 5B)

I was a kid."

He turned and smiled at me as they left my classroom. Without any signs of embarrassment, the girl walked ahead of her sloppy, lovable daddy, shaking her head and smiling in apparent disbelief.

With great affection, she muttered, "Oh, Daddy, you are such a nerd."

Like a big goof, he responded, "I know."

After they left the room, all the students and I looked at each other and said in unison, "You are the product of my loins!"

Today was weird, but great, which is just the way I like it. Every day in education is an adventure.

Daily, I'm taught lessons about myself and the warm and wonderful people that surround me. Sonny and Garree Ramius showed me that love could overcome obstacles, such as generation gaps.

Howard County United Way near goal despite economic trouble

By T.E. Jenkins
MRT Correspondent

BIG SPRING — As the Howard County chapter of the United way nears its fund raising deadline, it has less than 18 percent left to go to meet this year's goal.

Howard County United Way Executive Director Carroll Jennings said that, although the economy in Big Spring continues to struggle, he is pleased with the results thus far, and hopes to see the scales tip soon.

"We lost Hirschfeld Steel and Signal Homes this year, and they were a pretty big part of the money raised in Howard County," Jennings said. "The loss of those funds has hurt the campaign considerably."

Jennings said the lost funds may be a setback, but they are by no means a reason to "hang up the spurs."

"We set a goal for 1999 of $225,000, and right now we have about $182,821 raised, so things are still going quite well," said Jennings. "We still have a lot of donations that have yet to come in, and all of our volunteers are getting ready to go into follow-up mode. I've got a lot of faith in them, as well as the people of Howard County."

Jennings said he expects his team to make its goal, despite economic troubles that have rippled through the West Texas area.

"When the United Way announced its goal for 1999, a lot of people were worried that we wouldn't be able to make it because of the economic problems we've been having in the area," said Jennings. "Honestly, I never really doubted that we could do it."

Jennings said his confidence may seem unwarranted to some, but that it should come as no surprise to longtime Howard County residents.

"Anyone around here can tell you that this area has a history of coming together and helping those that are less fortunate," said Jennings. "I never doubted for one minute that the people of Big Spring and Howard County would come together under this challenge. These people have no problem whatsoever opening up their hearts and pocketbooks when they know the money is going to a worth-while cause."

The Howard County United Way provides funding for 11 local agencies, and all of the money raised stays strictly in Howard County.

"We provide funds for the American Red Cross, Boys Club of Big Spring, the Buffalo Trail Council Boy Scouts of America, Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center, the Northside Community Center, Howard County Rape Crisis/Victim Services, Salvation Army, Westside Community and Day Care Centers, the West Texas Girl Scouts and the YMCA," said Jennings. "That's a lot of agencies, and it takes a great deal of money for the United Way to help them get from week to week."

Jennings said his group has one last fund raising event planned for 1999, and he expects to see it push them over the goal.

"We will be holding a fundraiser at the Big Spring Stampede this Saturday, from 9 p.m. until 1 a.m.," said Jennings. "Admission will be $10 per person, and Jody Nix and the West Texas Cowboys will be performing.

"For everyone that's ever had the chance to see Jody and his band, it's assured to be a good time for everyone."

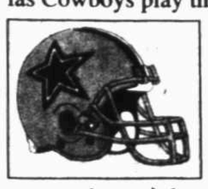
Battered teams hit Tempe turf in an important NFC East contest

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

TEMPE, Ariz. — It will be bruised vs. battered, the halt against the lame, when the Dallas Cowboys play the Arizona Cardinals on Sunday.



The Cowboys, whose 5-4 record is good enough for a tie for first in the weak NFC East, probably won't have Troy Aikman and certainly will be without Michael Irvin.

Arizona will be playing without Jake Plummer for the fourth consecutive game, and likely won't have Michael Pittman, the hard-running back who gave life to the Cardinals' moribund ground game in last week's 23-19 upset of the Detroit Lions.

All-Pro offensive guard Larry Allen, who has never missed any of his 98 games with Dallas, is out with a knee injury. Cardinals defensive end Andre Wadsworth isn't back from arthroscopic knee surgery. Deion Sanders is questionable. There are more, but you get the idea.

"The teams will certainly look a little bit different than the preseason rosters, but that's part of the deal," said Jason Garrett, who replaced Aikman and directed Dallas to a 27-13 victory over Green Bay last week. "The good teams are able to deal with those adversities."

Dallas won that game despite playing without Aikman, Irvin and Emmitt Smith, the first time all three sat out the same game in 10 years.

• Smith plans to play Sunday with his fractured right hand in a protective cast, and that doesn't surprise Arizona coach Vince Tobin.

"Emmitt hasn't missed very many games during his career," Tobin said, "and I'm sure he's had a lot of games that he hasn't felt 100 percent and he's lined up and played. That's the kind of player he is. That's the reason he's one of the top backs to play the game."

The Cowboys will augment the protective "glove" that Smith will wear by attaching a hip pad to it.

"Right now, I don't foresee any major fears," Smith said. "I know it's going to get hit, so I'm already prepared for that."

The game is the second home sellout for

Tech coach Spike Dykes retires after 15 campaigns in Lubbock

By Chris Newton
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes, who made a career out of upsetting rivals Texas and Texas A&M on the way to becoming the Red Raiders' winningest coach ever, announced his retirement after Saturday's 38-28 win over Oklahoma.

The announcement came after a week of rumors that Tech already was hunting for a new coach.

"There really wasn't any pressure put on me. This is something that I've been thinking about for a long time," said Dykes, 61.

Dykes offered no specific reason for his retirement, but said, "It was time for a bit of fresh air."

Texas Tech went 6-5 this season and was 82-67-1 under Dykes, who joined the school in 1984. The Red Raiders have recently gained notoriety for playing spoiler to Texas A&M, beating the Aggies this season 21-19 while they were ranked No. 5.

Dykes posted victories over Texas A&M six times, including three of the last four, and also beat Texas six times. He led Tech to four straight bowl games, was Southwest Conference coach of the year three times and was the first Big 12 Coach of the Year in 1996.

Along with surprise victories this season over Texas A&M, Colorado and Oklahoma, the Red Raiders were upset by Missouri, Oklahoma State and lowly North Texas, and were embarrassed last week by Texas. Postseason losses like last year's 35-18 beating by Mississippi in the Red Raiders beat odds to get win

By Mike Jones
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech's 38-28 victory over Oklahoma in Spike Dykes' last game as the Red Raiders' head coach was apropos of a career of success against the odds.

"That was a great win," said Dykes, who told his players of his decision to retire after the game. "Our chances weren't very good. I don't think everyone picked us to win. For us to do it was really something, a great effort out of those players.

"I've been doing this a long time. Someone asked me recently what my biggest win was and I think it was when Coahoma his first head-coaching job beat Aspermont in '64. But I believe this one topped it."

Missing starting quarterback Rob Peters and running back Shaud Williams because of injury, the Red Raiders, 13-point underdogs to OU, nevertheless carried Dykes off the field on their shoulders as a winner.

Tech led 10-0, fell behind 21-10, then rallied to score 25 consecutive points.

"What a great scenario," Dykes said. "We were down 21-10 and that was a pretty good time to choke your

TCU RB sets new NCAA I-A record

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — LaDainian Tomlinson may be running into contention for next year's Heisman Trophy.

Tomlinson broke the NCAA Division I-A rushing record, gaining 406 yards and scoring six touchdowns Saturday in TCU's 52-24 victory over Texas-El Paso.

Tomlinson carried 43 times and topped the record held by Tony Sands of Kansas, who rushed for 396 yards on 58 carries against Missouri on Nov. 23, 1991. The junior and first-year starter also set a single-season rushing record for the Horned Frogs with one game to play.

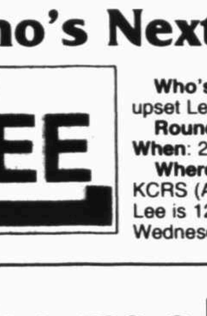
While Tomlinson is the first major-college rusher to gain 400 yards in a game, he is the sixth overall in the NCAA. The record is 441 yards, by Dante Brown of Division III Marietta College in 1996.

Touchdown runs of 70 and 63 yards on consecutive carries in the fourth quarter got Tomlinson close to the record. So even with a 45-24 lead, TCU (6-4, 4-2 WAC) sent him back out for its final drive of the game, and he broke the 400-yard barrier with a 7-yard carry.

Trinity makes TCAL final after 46-0 rout

By Jay Peden
Sports Writer

MEADOW — Going into Saturday's TCAL semifinal against Amarillo Trinity Fellowship, coach Karl Kitto was a little concerned that his Midland Trinity team might not be as focused as they were two weeks ago when they beat the same Amarillo team, 52-6.



Pirtle

He needn't have worried.

The Trinity Chargers ran wild, 46-0, and they rolled right into the championship game of the Texas Christian Athletic League. They'll meet San Antonio Town East at 1 p.m. Saturday at Maverick Stadium in Arlington.

"We really feel great as a team," said running back Nathan Pirtle, who got three carries and scored three touchdowns, totalling 148 yards. "We're going to take it to 'em and play to the best of our ability."

Trinity (8-4) dominated the Lions from Amarillo (6-5), who are playing their first year of varsity six-man football. The Chargers rolled up 404 yards of total offense — 350 of it rushing — in one half before the game ended due to the 45-point mercy rule. Not counting Trinity's last possession, when it killed the clock, the Chargers ran 12 plays and scored six touchdowns on them.

"We were pretty well prepared for them, probably more so than the last time we played them," Kitto said. "We knew we could run the ball into the wind and against the wind — it didn't make any difference.

"We knew we could score on them," Kitto said. "The only thing we didn't know was how we'd do stopping them. The last time (the teams played) they went down and scored on us. We didn't know if that was a fluke or if we could stop them."

Abilene High receiver Frankie Richardson is swarmed by the El Paso Andress defense during their Class 5A Division II area game Saturday at Midland Memorial Stadium. Abilene High won the game and will play DeSoto in the next round.

Playoff-starved Abilene earns region round spot

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

For the better part of three quarters Saturday at Memorial Stadium, it was hard to tell which brand of AHS Eagles were going to be headed for the Class 5A Small School region game at Texas Stadium next week.

But the Eastern AHS Eagles proved to be a tougher bird than the Western AHS Eagles. That means playoff starved Abilene High is headed to Texas Stadium next Saturday against another brand of Eagles from DeSoto after a 48-22 area win over El Paso Andress.

Abilene High had to come from behind twice in the first half and led only 27-22 at the break. But it was the third quarter when the toughest bird showed its feathers.

Starting the third quarter, Andress marched to the Abilene High three-yard line, threatening to take its third lead of the game. But the drive stalled and moved back to the seven where Andress elected to go for the score instead of the field goal. They came up empty.

Ground-oriented Rangers make history with victory

By Lee Passmore

CANYON — It came down to football at its most basic for the Greenwood Rangers Saturday evening, and the approach took them further than any other team in school history.

Gaining all of its 410 yards of offense on the ground, Greenwood pounded away at Dalhart in the Class 3A area round game at Kimbrough Stadium, only to be holding on precariously to a one-touchdown lead in the final minutes. The Rangers survived with the Wolves holding the ball at the Greenwood 20-yard line with under a minute left for a 28-21 win which puts them in the regional round next week against Childress.

No. 6 Lady Chaps run past Blinn College

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

The strategy by most opponents when facing the No. 6 Midland College Lady Chaparrals this season has been to come out with a lot of fire and try to get off to a fast start.

And what usually happens is that the fuel that was igniting the first-half fire usually tends to burn out midway through the second half. That's what happened with the Lady Bucs of Blinn College Saturday night at the Lady Chap Classic.

Blinn was held to just 18 points in the second half as the Lady Chaps ran away 93-50. That was after Midland College only held a 41-32 lead at the break.

All in all, it was a good home tournament for the Lady Chaps, who improve to 6-1 on the season after a 2-0 showing this weekend.

"I think this the first time defensively we held somebody down like that," said Midland College coach Ron Jones. "I think they (Lady Bucs) got a little fatigued and we kind of wore them down."

Blinn shot just 29 percent (22 of 75) and turned the ball over 15 times in the game. Meanwhile the Lady Chaps shot 47 percent (36 of 76) and turned the ball over 15 times, which is down from the 25 turnovers per game the Lady Chaps were averaging coming into the tournament.

"We been talking about cutting down on the turnovers and trying to do something about it," Jones said. "It's not anything difficult. Most of the turnovers we've been having are unforced. We've got to make good decisions and try to take care of the basketball because every time we throw away the basketball we throw away the opportunity to score."

Every Lady Chap got into the game and all but two scored. Sophomore post Fatime Ndiaye led the Lady Chaps with 20 points and nine rebounds, Loren Mostacilla added 12 points and 10 rebounds, while Julie Rampley added 10 points.

"We played against a good team today but we played good, especially in the second half," said Ndiaye.

The Lady Chaps take this week off before returning to action on Nov. 30 at Temple College. Jones said the break will be good for his team and is positive about the progress his Lady Chaps made during this weekend's tournament

"I think we changed some things defensively and I think we learned some things about ourselves," Jones said. "It's so early in the year that you just want to keep getting better and keep on trying to win."

It's been good so far for the Lady Chaps in this young season.

the Cardinals this season. In the 11 times the Cowboys have played at Arizona, eight have been sellouts. Of course, the Cowboys might not know how to play in front of empty seats. They've played in front of sellout crowds in every game, home and away, for eight years.

In Tempe, there will almost be as many Cowboys fans as there will be fans rooting for the Cardinals. Maybe that will make it seem like a home game for Dallas, which is just 1-4 on the road. The Cowboys led in all four losses, but were outscored in the fourth quarter 50-7 in those games.

"We've played good coming out of the blocks in those games, and then we've not been able to finish the job on the road," Dallas coach Chan Gailey said. "If we're going to be a team that tries to vie for a championship, that's something that we've got to be able to do."

The game will pit brother against brother. Jason Garrett's brother John is quarterbacks coach for the Cardinals. The two have been competing so long that this matchup is nothing special, Jason said.

"We still can't play one-on-one basketball because the games usually end in a fight after a couple of points," he said. "I look forward to visiting with him a little bit, but during the game it's no big deal."

Jason Garrett improved to 6-2 as an NFL starter. Last week, he completed 13 of 23 passes for 199 yards and two touchdowns.

"I've been very fortunate to be in a very good environment," Garrett said. "The only thing I've ever tried to do is go in and be one-eleventh of the offense, just do my thing as best I can and let everybody else do theirs. I think when Troy goes down or Emmitt goes down, or Michael, we have such a team spirit here, and have had that for a lot of years, that everyone just rallies around the cause."

Dave Brown, coming off his best game for Arizona, will get his fourth consecutive start in place of Plummer, who could be back from a broken right ring finger next weekend.

But if Pittman can't play, that would be a big blow to an offense that obviously benefited from his aggressive style. Adrian Murrell, averaging 2.5 yards per carry, would start in Pittman's absence, with Mario Bates also getting increased playing time.

With Plummer at quarterback, the Cowboys beat the Cardinals 35-7 on Oct. 3, a blowout that helped ease the pain of a first-round homefield loss to Arizona in last season's playoffs.

COACH: Dykes announces retirement

(From 1C)

Independence Bowl also spawned a sense among many Texas Tech fans that the team wasn't living up to its potential.

"A lot of people in this world don't have any fun, but I've had a ball," Dykes said.

Dykes, like many of Tech's key players, is a product of West Texas football. He was a head coach at three Texas high schools before landing an assistant coaching job at Texas in 1972, under Darrell Royal. He returned to high school coaching at Midland Lee in 1980, leading the team to a 34-11-1 record before going to Tech.

"Sharon (Dykes) and I are going to do a few other thigsn for a while. If it doesn;t work out I might try to me a six-man job somewhere," Dykes said.

Sharon, Spike's wife, said, "Spike said he was tired and he was finally ready not to go coach another season. We discussed it, but talking about it and doing it is another thing, entirely."

Locally, Dykes was best known for his good-natured coaching style and friendly disposition.

"I think you coach because you love love kids," Dykes had said previously. "And if you do that, every day is rewarding. That way you never get your priorities out of perspective. It all boils down to the chance to work with young people, hopefully be an influence on them for the better, help them make something of themselves that is positive."

GAME: Kingsbury has big day at quarterback

chili down, but they didn't do it and I'm really proud of them for that. These guys have a lot of character."

"The odds have been against us all year and everyone had counted us out," redshirt freshman backup quarterback Kliff Kingsbury said. "But we kind of knew it was going to be Coach Dykes' last game — and the seniors' last game — and we wanted to win it for them."

Tech finishes the regular season 6-5 (5-3 Big 12) and has qualified for a bowl game for the seventh consecutive year. By handing the Sooners (6-4, 4-3) a third loss, Tech makes Texas (9-2, 6-1) the outright South Division champion regardless of the outcome of the Longhorns' game against Texas A&M.

Kingsbury completed only nine of 17 passes, but those completions produced 259 yards and three touchdowns and, along with the play of senior back Sammy Morris and the defense, were key to the victory.

Morris caught three passes for 102 yards. Included was a 67-yard touchdown, a 32-yard scoring reception and a 3-yard catch for a two-point conversion.

Morris' 67-yard reception was the game breaker, giving Tech a 31-21 lead with 1:13 left in the third quarter. It came on a broken play off Kingsbury's scramble out of the clutches of OU defensive lineman Bary Holleyman.

"Coach Dykes did a great job this week of keeping our enthusiasm up and keeping our focus on going to a bowl game," Morris said. "Coach Dykes never wanted the focus on him. He always wanted it on the team and on Tech. I'm glad he was able to give his going-away speech after a victory."

Chaps close out tourney with victory

Staff Report

WEATHERFORD — The Midland College men's basketball team closed out its stay at the Weatherford Classic Saturday with a 57-50 win over Cisco College.

Although the Chaparrals led all the way, it was close — the Chaps led only 23-22 at halftime. They scrapped and scraped out a win with defense.

"Our defense won this game for us," coach Junsie Cotten said. "We had a lot of good looks at the goal, but unfortunately they weren't falling tonight. But we guarded really well."

The Chaps did the little things they needed to do to win.

"That's the positive thing about it," Cotten said. "We couldn't hit a shot all night, but we defended and we communicated and we rebounded. That's what we tell the guys, 'You're going to miss shots, but you've got to defend and rebound.'"

After two weekends on the road, the Chaps come back to Midland to host Western Oklahoma College at 7 p.m. Monday.

Statistics weren't available for Saturday's game.

TCAL: Trinity makes next week's title game

(From 1C)

Consider that question answered. The Trinity defense held the Amarillo team to 104 yards. A third of those yards came on a 36-yard diving catch by Josh Cooper that would have impressed Lynn Swann. But most of the rest of Fellowship's offensive plays would have made Mean Joe Greene proud.

Trinity's defensive leaders credited assistant coaches Doak Huddleston and Mark Mays with a perfect defensive game plan.

"Coach Hud's been scouting the other team," said Dustin Truitt, referring to Huddleston. "He's been up every day watching film. He had a script, and they (Amarillo) went right by the script."

"He nailed it to a 'T,'" Corey Mays said. "All we had to do was read our keys."

Trinity even did a good job of handling the only bit of adversity they had in the game. Already leading 24-0, Trinity's Jeehoun Yi muffed a punt, and Amarillo's Cooper recovered it at the Trinity 23-yard line. One of the Lions' three first downs in the game set them up at first-and-goal at the 7-yard line, but the Trinity defense shut them out on four plays.

On Trinity's next offensive play, Pirtle ran 76 yards for his third touchdown.

The Chargers will go into the TCAL title game on a roll. They lost there last year to Galveston Heritage, but they've already disposed of Heritage in this year's playoffs. The Trinity players will face Town East with another year of experience.

"We were in it last year, but it was a first-time thing for us," Truitt said. "This year, we're looking forward to winning it."

HEAD EAST: San Antonio Town East entered the TCAL title game with a 78-40 win over San Antonio Sunnybrook Saturday. Town East improved to 11-1, while Sunnybrook's season ended at 10-2.

Town East's Jarrod Martin scored three different ways: a 23-yard run, a 13-yard pass reception and a 70-yard fumble return. He also intercepted two passes.

Like Amarillo Trinity Fellowship, Town East is playing its first year of six-man tackle football.

I-5A: Abilene wins war of AHS schools

(From 1C)

Abilene answered with a 93-yard drive, ending with a juking 14-yard run by the District 4-5A great Sneezy Beltran and a 35-22 lead after a two-point conversion. Game, set, match.

"That was the difference in the game when Andress gets no points and we put up a drive," said Abilene coach Steve Warren. "When we stopped them and went the distance, I felt pretty good about the game. Up until then it was up for grabs."

Andress coach Allan Sepkowitz felt the same way.

"When we don't get the touchdown in the third quarter, that took the wind out of whatever sails we had," Sepkowitz said. "I don't know if we could have stopped Beltran even if we had scored, but I do know we were going in for the lead there.

"You just can't get in a scoring duel with them and we couldn't keep the pace."

Beltran ended the game with 204 yards rushing and three touchdowns. The senior, who is headed for the University of Texas next fall, is making his first postseason appearance in his illustrious high school career.

"Words just can't express how I feel," Beltran said. "I know a lot of teams get this experience every year and they probably don't appreciate it the way we do this season. I can't tell you how much fun it is to play in these (playoff) games. I know one thing, this team can score points, and when the defense gave us that stand, I knew we were going to win the game."

Abilene quarterback Kevin Goodman threw for 277 yards and three touchdowns. His major target was Eddie Hyer, who caught five passes for 140 yards and three TDs.

"You really have to give our line credit for the passing yards," Goodman said. "I had all day to throw the football, and when that happens, our receivers can get open. I knew we were going to throw the football because Andress was running a five-man front. If our line holds them out, then we have the advantage, and that is what happened.

Abilene High will meet DeSoto at 2 p.m. Saturday in Texas Stadium.

RANGERS: Greenwood will play Childress dress next Saturday at 2 p.m. at Lubbock's Lowery Field.

It's not particularly surprising to Greenwood coach Bob Purser that he is having his most successful season as the Rangers' leader. This year's team is as cohesive and experienced as any he's ever coached.

"We knew we were going to have a good football team," said Purser, whose team improved to 9-3. "We had some injuries which kind of knocked us sideways for awhile in the middle of the season. But we have a great group of seniors and we're glad to be here."

It was that group of seniors who kept the Rangers grounded, literally, against Dalhart. After missing a field goal to end their opening drive, the Rangers fully devoted themselves to a rushing attack which Barry Switzer would have appreciated before he cracked up in Dallas. Operating often from a three-back set, Greenwood ran the ball 18 straight plays over three possessions,which resulted in three touchdowns and a 21-0 lead.

So efficient was Greenwood's ground attack that quarterback Wes Smith threw only three passes, all incompletions. In the first half, the Rangers averaged 11 yards a carry.

"The way (the Wolves) were lined up to us defensively there were some huge holes off tackle, which is where we like to run," said Purser.

On Dalhart's first possession, it briefly looked as if the Wolves would pull off the game's first huge offensive play when Trent Cunningham hit Ransom Rust on a bomb over the middle deep into Greenwood territory. However, Rust was stripped of the ball and Greenwood's Justin Brooks recovered it at the Greenwood 10.

Two plays later, fullback John McSpadden ripped off a 63-yard run which took the ball to Dalhart's 25. Another two plays later, Smith scored on a keeper from 20 yards to give the Rangers a 7-0 lead.

That long run set off a big day for McSpadden, who had a career day with 181 yards on 23 carries and two touchdowns.

"We knew (the Wolves) were big, our line's pretty big, too, so we found a way to match up with them," said McSpadden. "We just smashed it in there and saw what we came out with."

McSpadden scored on a15-yard run to end the next drive, then Smith scored from three yards to give the Rangers a 21-0 advantage late in the second quarter. Greenwood's game plan was obvious, but Dalhart was almost powerless to stop it in the first half.

"They did a greatjob of running the ball on us,"said Dalhart coach Bill Henly of Greenwood. "This year there have been so many times we've comeback in the last couple of minutes. (Greenwood) just walked out there and executed very, very well."

The two teams exchanged touchdowns within 21 seconds of each other early in the fourth quarter. After McSpadden gave the Rangers a two-touchdown cushion with 4-yard run, Dalhart took over at its own 33 following the kickoff. Garland Swecker took a handoff on the next play and rumbled 67 yards for a touchdown to cut it to 28-21 with 9 minutes,17 seconds remaining in the game.

Dalhart took over at Greenwood's 37 following a short punt with1:46 remaining. The Wolves moved to the 20, but eventually faced a fourth-and-8. Gallo was flushed out of the pocket by Justin Watkins, and threw high past an open Grant Henly in the back of he end zone with 55 seconds left, sealing the win for Greenwood.

This victory clearly belonged to seniors like McSpadden, halfback Steven Kimble, who also cracked the 100-yard barrier with 114 yards on 13 carries, and Smith (11 carries, 54 yards).

"It means the world to us," said McSpadden. "I can't explain how hard we've been working all season. We've never taken anything for granted. It meant a lot to coach Purser."

Midland High girls win El Paso tournament

Staff report

EL PASO — The Midland High girls basketball team overcame a two-point halftime deficit to blow out El Paso Andress in the second half of Saturday's championship game of the Socorro ISD Invitational.

The Lady Dawgs won 71-51 after trailing 26-24 at the half. They took the lead in the third quarter, then buried the Lady Eagles with a 30-13 avalanche in the fourth.

"Our full-court pressure became a factor. Our conditioning led to a fourth-quarter surge," said MHS coach Terry Gray, whose team is 5-0 so far in his first season at MHS. "But that game was much closer than the score shows. They were more athletic and bigger than we were."

MHS landed four girls on the 11-member all-tournament team: Terri Meldrum, Rebecca Nobles, Laura Koch and Edrea Rogers.

Bulldogs take 3rd at McDonalds; Lee 6th

Staff Report

El PASO — The Midland High boys basketball team bounced back from a loss early Saturday, coming back with a win to claim third place in the McDonald's tournament.

The Bulldogs lost to El Paso Hanks, 73-58, early in the day, then whipped El Paso Burgess, 86-49, in the third-place game.

Against Burgess, MHS took control early and won easily. Against Hanks, MHS took control early, then lost control; the Bulldogs led 23-16 after one quarter, but Hanks took over with a big second quarter and led 42-33 at the half.

"In the second and third quarter, the ball would not go in the basket, and we had some turnovers," MHS coach Jack Stephenson said. "But I think we learned something from that game, and I think you can see that (in the third-place game). We played a very good team.

"We came out here and played four games, and we won three. We got better," Stephenson said. "There were 16 teams here, and a bunch of them didn't win three games — and only one won more than that."

Blake Johnston and Randy Gardner were both named to the all-tournament team.

Lee boys take 6th

EL PASO — Cory Simmons' last-second three-pointer lifted the Midland Lee boys basketball team into overtime against El Paso Bel Air Saturday, but the Rebels had to settle for sixth place in the McDonald's tournament after a 77-71 loss in OT.

"We got behind and we rallied to come from behind, then Cory Simmons hit a three-pointer with six seconds left (in regulation) to tie it," Lee coach Jon House said.

"In overtime, we ran out of gas. We had to overcome a lot of fouls."

The Rebels were hit with 30 fouls, compared to 13 against Bel Air. Three Rebel starters weren't on the court for overtime, after Kyle Shatzer, Keven Trout and Cornell Hunt all fouled out in the fourth quarter.

It was the second game of the day for Lee. The Rebels opened the day with a 74-44 pounding of San Elizario.

Lee's Chris Packer was named to the all-tournament team.

BIG SPRING — The Midland Lee girls basketball team claimed third place in the Crossroads tournament with a 69-58 win over San Angelo Central Saturday.

The Lady Rebels used good defense to pull away for good in the third quarter, after which they led, 47-31.

"We had a good run in the third quarter that opened it up," Lee coach Elise Kail said. "At one point in the third quarter — about halfway through — they (Central) only made two baskets.

"We had a lot of rebounds," Kail said. "We did a good job on the boards, and we got to run our break tonight."

Lee freshman Adrianne Ross scored 18 points in the win. She and Rochelle Warren gave the Lady Rebels two players on the all-tournament team.

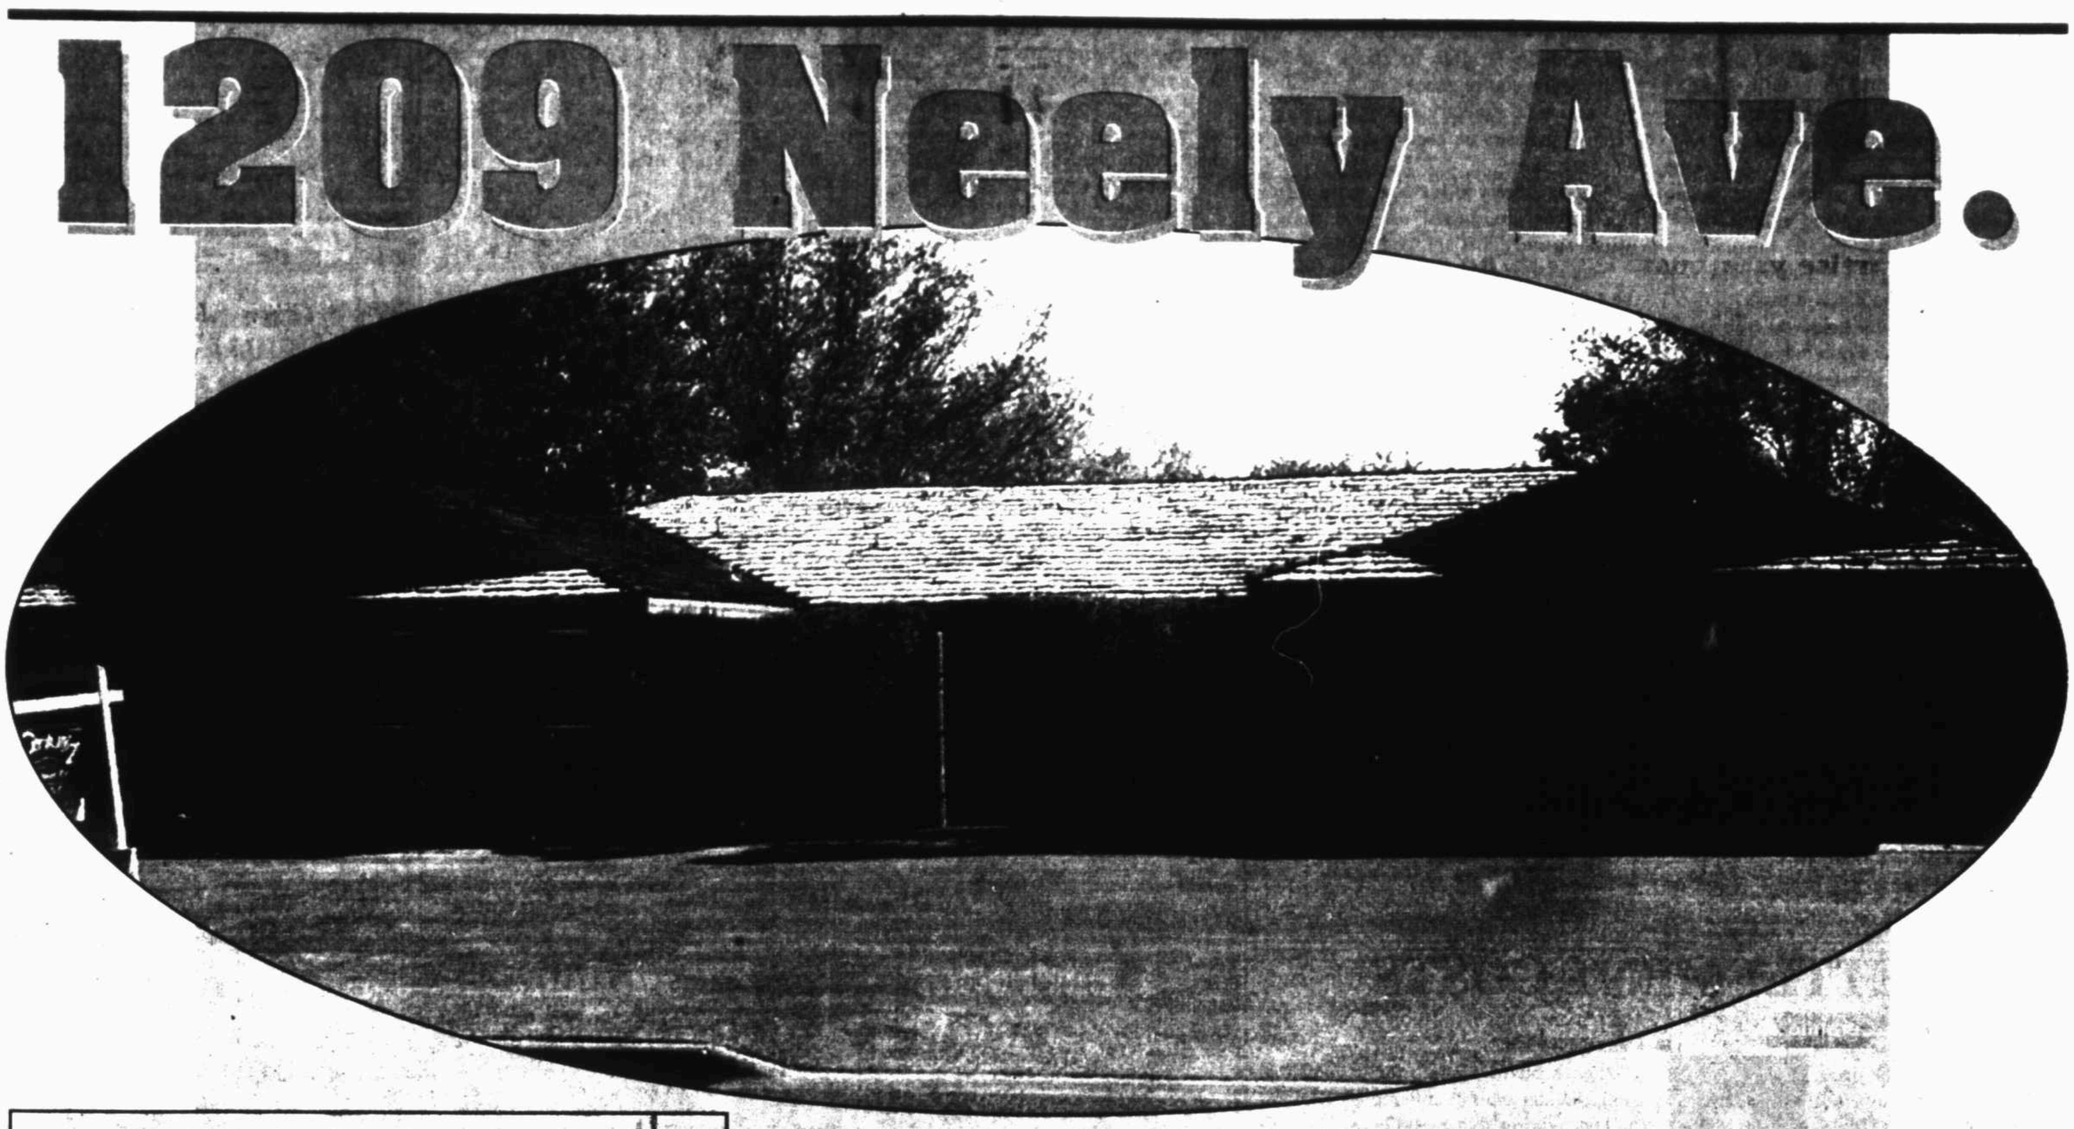
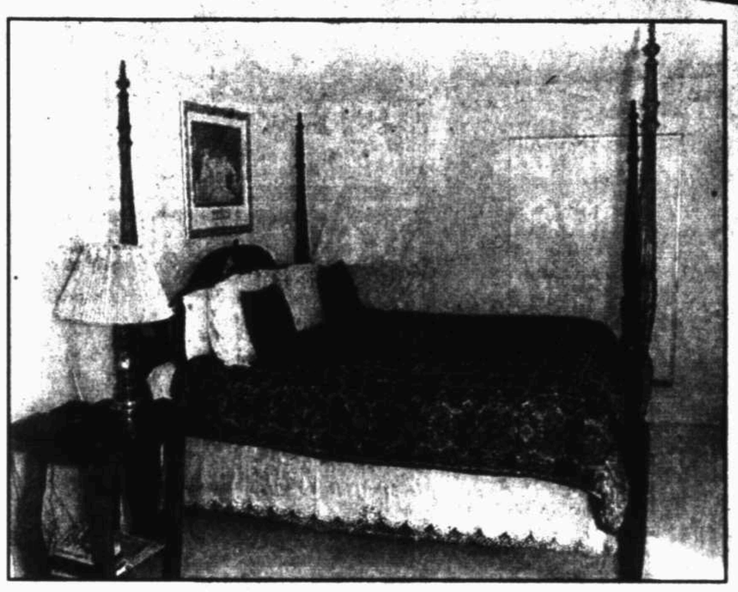
1209 Neely Ave.





The cozy bedroom has a private bath and two closets.

The dining room has a white chandelier, a chair rail, and picture frame panels in the wainscotting.

A view from the hallway into the great room. The brick fireplace is flanked on either side by very large picture windows.

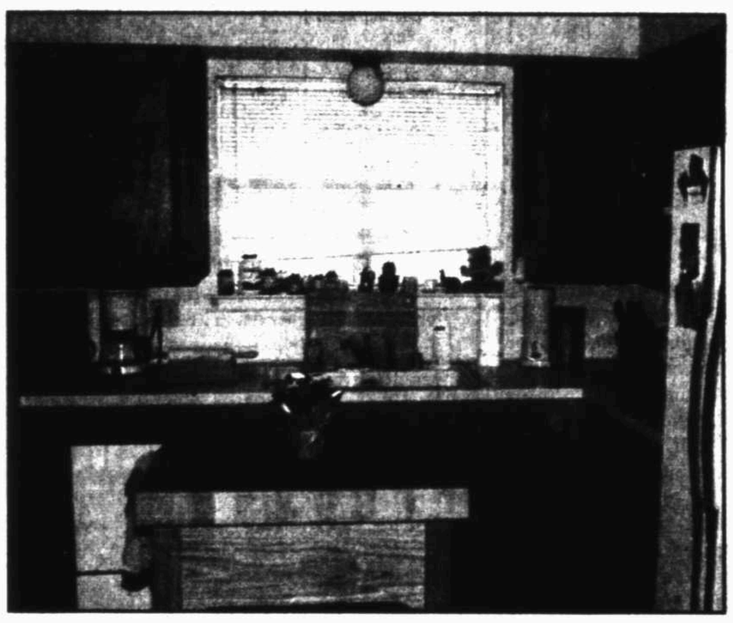
1209 Neely Ave. is a great house for less than $100,000. This $94,200 home has an airy, modern styling with many great amenities. These amenities include: extra large windows, a large back yard, tons of parking in the front, a gated courtyard and wonderful details throughout.

This home has expanded parking along the front of the home to accommodate your guests, and with this lovely home, you will be proud to entertain often. A roomy front access two-car garage is conveniently located at the front of the home.

A brick wall with an iron gate connects the two wings of this u-shaped home to create a courtyard. This courtyard is paved in pebble-conglomerate. A large, shady overhang creates a covered patio.

Just inside the wood front door is a small foyer. The floor is finished in a unique pattern of tiles. A coat closet and access to the garage are just to the right. I think its a handy idea to put the coat closet near the garage so you can hang up coats as youcomes in from the garage.

To the right of the foyer, through a folding door is the long room that comprises the dining room and formal living room. The walls of this long room have a chair rail and picture frame detailing on the wainscotting. This is a very elegant, yet modern touch. There are acoustic ceilings throughout the home. Many of the floors are covered in beige plush carpeting. A large picture window is set at the end of this room. Two white chandeliers hang in this room, one over the dining area and one over the sitting area.



The efficient kitchen has attractive oak cabinetry and a large window over the sink.

The formal living room has a large window, a white chandelier, a chair rail, and picture frame panels in the wainscotting.

Through swinging doors is the utility room. This room has lots of space for appliances and has hanging storage cabinets. A long walk-in storage closet is great for storing sports equipment and other things that pile up around a home. A door in the utility room opens out onto the patio and back yard. This is a large lot with six pecan trees. Imagine the pecan pies and goodies you can make. Yum. The owner noted that many of the neighbors had installed pools in their yards and there is plenty of room for one in this yard also. The high cinder block privacy fence has a wide metal gate with iron detailing.

Adjacent to the dining area is the kitchen. This kitchen has wonderful oak cabinetry and solid-surface counter-tops. A large window is set above the double sink. A double oven is set just inside the door. A range and a dishwasher are set close to the sink. A serving bar is cut through to the great room and is just right for serving hors d'oeuvres.

From the foyer and straight ahead is the great room. This room has a tall vaulted ceiling with an exposed beam running along it's length. A brick fireplace is set along one wall and is flanked by two large picture windows. An adjacent wall has the serving bar cut through to the kitchen. Next to this is a built-in bookcase. A large cut-out with spindles is set into the wall opposite to the fireplace. This cut-out window lets in light from the large windows along the hallway to the bedroom wing.

About midway through the hallway is a half-bath. This is a uniquely shaped bathroom with the vanity tucked into the walls. It's hard to explain — you just have to see it for yourself — it's a real conversation piece.

At the end of the hallway and to the right is the master suite. Just before the master suite is a spacious linen closet. The master bedroom has a simple, yet roomy and cozy design to it. A tall window is set on a side wall and a french door opens out onto a landing in the back yard. Along one wall is his closet with a custom designed system of rods, shelves and a shoe rack. The owner noted that, with the exception of her walk-in closet, the rest of the closets are identical to this one. The master bath has a water closet for the commode and tub/shower combo. The water closet has a really pretty linoleum flooring, a built-in dresser and the shower enclosure has a speckled green tile. The dressing area has a double vanity and glass medicine cabinets. Her walk-in closet has shoe/sweater shelving and is open to the dressing area.

Down the hall is one of the bedrooms. This room has a large window and a custom designed closet.

Across the hall is a full bathroom. The commode is set in a privacy nook next to a frosted window. The tub/shower enclosure has speckled green tile. Handgrips were installed in this bath for a disabled relative, and proved to be very handy when the owner was pregnant.

At the front of the home are the two other bedrooms. These each have two tall windows that face the front of the home. The room currently used as a nursery has an additional window to the side and is painted a cheerful yellow. Both of these rooms have custom closets set behind folding doors.

Come see this affordable, airy beauty today from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. or call John Nobles of Century 21 Midtex Realtors at 689-0021 or 694-4464 for more information or a private showing. Don't pass this one up, deals like this don't happen every day.

The Homeowner's Checklist for a Worry-Free Holiday Vacation

Americans will be heading out of town this holiday season for family visits and/or vacations. Raymond (Skeet) Doss, president of the Permian Basin Board of REALTORS®, Inc., reminds you that planning a trip means more than just pulling out a map and taking off from work. It also should include a vacation checklist of things to do to protect your home and valuables while you are away.

Regardless of the length of your time away from home, it's important to be sure that your home has a lived-in appearance. Telltale signs that invite burglars or vandals include piled-up newspapers, a full mailbox and no lights at night.

This checklist will help you enjoy your holiday with the knowledge that you haven't forgotten to take the proper steps to protect your home.

* Ask a friend or neighbor to pick up your mail, or go to the post office and place a hold on delivery until you return.

* Call your newspaper's circulation department and request a vacation hold; some papers require 48 hours notice.

* Plug certain lights into automatic timers. These devices are inexpensive and are among the most effective means of giving your home a lived-in appearance. They will also make it more difficult for a burglar to work undetected by your neighbors. Some models have variable-interval timers, which alter the times at which your lights go on and off from day to day.

* Leave a radio turned on.

* Leave a house key with a friend or neighbor in case of emergencies. This person could open and close shades and drapes to alter the appearance of your home.

* Let the police know if you are going to be away for an extended period.

* In some communities, they will occasionally be able to check on your home while you're gone.

* Leave an itinerary with a neighbor or relative in case you need to be reached in an emergency.

* Just before you leave, be sure that all appliances are turned off and that all windows and doors are securely locked.

Neighbors, relatives, and police are your best friends when you're away, according to the Permian Basin Board of REALTORS®, Inc. If you remember too late that you left the iron on, you can call the friend who has your key instead of turning around the highway. And when it's their turn for a vacation, you can return the favor.

The Permian Basin Board of REALTORS®, Inc. is one of more than 90 local boards and associations of Realtors throughout the state that comprise the Texas Association of Realtors. TAR represents nearly 45,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

Can We Buy a House?

Strong

If a borrower has 5% down payment plus minimal money for closing costs and has a high back ratio (to calculate a back ratio, add the PITI (principal, interest, taxes and insurance), minimum revolving payments, and installment payments (with more than 10 months remaining) then divide this answer by the borrower's gross income). CAN HE BUY A HOUSE?

Several avenues must be explored and they will all begin with a credit check to be certain it is good. In order to overcome a ratio challenge on a 95% LTV (loan to value) loan, the borrower must have good credit. In fact, if his credit is REAL good, he might possibly be able to get a 97% conventional loan!

Next, analyze all debts to see if a consolidation loan is in order.

Now, select a 0+0 30-year fixed rate amounts (0+0 means a rate sufficiently high to yield a 1% premium to cover the origination fee so it will not have to come out of the buyer's funds to close). Using a 2-1 buydown on the interest, calculate the P&I, then calculate the borrower's new ratios (A 2-1 buydown means the interest rate is bought down two percent the first year and once percent the second. This would be at a cost of approximately 3%; 2% for the year one and 1% for year two). Using this method, the borrower would qualify at the start rate. For example, if a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage was quoted at 8%, the first year rate of a 2-1 buydown would be 6%. The 2% savings could shave significantly off the high back ratio. When doing a 2-1 buydown, the borrower's back ratio cannot exceed 36% (however occasionally you can get as high as 38-39% approved if there are significant compensating factors). An additional benefit would be to apply with an option to have the loan submitted through an automated underwriting system where back ratios are more likely to be much more flexible.

Let's explore the challenge of overcoming the buyer's limited funds and the additional 3% of the buydown. Check with the appraiser to see if the house will appraise for a higher value. If it will, inflate the sales price of the house and have the seller contribute 3% (the maximum contribution allowed on a 95% loan).

Finally, analyze the borrower's future growth potential in their occupations. Determine their approximate raises over the next two years. Perhaps the borrower is in a stables, upwardly mobile position. A strong compensation factor would be if there has been an income progression and the likelihood of this trend continuing.

This is one method of approaching loan approval, but it is not the only option available. Discuss your financial situation with a lender. Happy Home Buying!

This article has been submitted by Peggy Strong of First American Bank.

SETTLEMENT COSTS

All the time a buyer is ready to pay for a property and the seller is ready to deliver the deed, you will go through the first phase of the sale. Depending on where you live, this phase is known as title closing, settlement, or closing of escrow and will require some costs.

Sutton

Your overall settlement costs are influenced by, among other things, where you live, how a buyer finances his purchase, your settlement date and what the particular lender requires to provide the loan.

The Federal government's Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA) is designed to insure that lenders provide applicants with appropriate estimates for settlement costs. RESPA covers most of today's home loans, including:

• Government backed or assisted loans.

• Loans from lenders with federally insured deposits.

• Loans in federally related secondary mortgage markets.

• Loans made by lenders who invest or make more than $1 million in residential loans each year.

When a buyer applies for a new loan from a lender who is covered by RESPA, the law requires that he be given a "good faith" estimate of fees when he makes the written loan application and that he be offered a pamphlet titles Settlement Costs and You published by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). The pamphlet explains how the closing process works.

In the days before your settlement, or closing, you are entitled to a copy of HUD's Uniform Settlement Statement. The statement breaks the total settlement charges into broad categories that you can review to determine what costs will be paid in full or in part by you.

You are certainly encouraged to review your costs with a responsible third party, to make sure all the contract's requirements are met.

SINGLE HOUSE HUNTERS

There are some things that can be done only as a couple but home ownership is not one of them. Singles are increasingly becoming home buyers. Since decisions are made singly there is a little more pressure in the process, but then too the glory is all yours when you look around with pride at your domain. Although the responsibility of making a house payment can be intimidating, the sense of accomplishment and the tax benefits and the feeling of building a future can off-set any anxiety. Prepare to go into the buying process with a clean credit record since you are the sole source of credibility. Some recently divorced individuals find themselves without any credit even after years of being the bill payer and making sure everything was paid on time. Somehow the good credit history went with the other party. Find a Realtor who becomes a good friend and listener and understands what you want and need in a home. Ask questions and be sure you understand the contractual language.

Compare houses, neighborhoods, schools, amenities, prices, benefits, everything you can until you find the right combination for you. Make a list of positives and negatives and then make an educated decision and move on. This way you will feel secure in making those sole decisions, you wouldn't have made them if you didn't believe in them. And the feeling you will have of being independent and resourceful will feel wonderful.

This article submitted by Anita Noles, Marilyn Jo Smith and Norma Pine, Owners of RE/MAX of Midland/Chaparral Realtors.

What Do All Those Words Mean?

Like any business, real estate has its own jargon. Most people who invest in property come to understand the more common words. But first-time buyers often feel intimidated by the way sellers and real estate agents toss the jargon back and forth.

Printz

Here, then, is a short glossary of some common real estate terms:

Real property: Also called real estate. Land, buildings, and permanent fixtures or improvements such as the central heating unit or the asphalt on the driveway. In law, "real" property is distinguished from "personal" property such as your car, your shoes, and your heirloom piano.

Real Estate brokers are agents: People licensed by the state to act as agents on behalf of buyers and sellers of real property. A broker can work independently, but an agent must either be a broker or work for a broker.

Down payment: The amount of money a buyer puts into a transaction. If the buyer initially pays $30,000, and then borrows the rest of the purchase price, the $30,000 is the downpayment.

Equity: The difference between the value of a home and the amount the owner still owes to the lender. If the owner owes $95,000 on the property, but the property could be sold for $150,000, the equity would be $55,000.

Principal and interest: Principal is the amount of money borrowed, or still owed on a loan. Interest is the amount a lender charges for the use of borrowed money.

Of course, there are many other real estate terms, as well. Feel free to call your real estate agent for help in understanding them.

Among the hundreds of volunteers who help transform downtown Galveston into 19th century London are the costumed Beefeaters, who escort the queen during the three parades during Dickens on The Strand. The annual Victorian-themed holiday event will be Dec. 4-5 in Galveston.

Celebrate at 26th Dickens on The Strand Dec. 4-5

Staff Reports

GALVESTON — The 26th annual Dickens on The Strand, Galveston Historical Foundation's long-standing tradition of family entertainment and holiday spirit, is scheduled for Dec. 4-5.

During the two-day Victorian-themed festival, costumed characters will fill the streets of the Strand National Historic Landmark District. Both volunteers and guests don traditional Victorian clothing — including hoop skirts and fine hats for ladies, and top hats and spats for gentlemen — while the sounds of handbell choirs, carolers and bagpipe bands fill the festival area.

Magicians, sword swallowers and hypnotists will perform. Continuous entertainment will be performed on six stages.

Visitors can enjoy the entertainment, food and works of artists who set up shop during the event. The Queen's Parade will take place at 2 p.m. on both days of the festival. Led by a bagpipe band and the Queen's Guard of Beefeaters, the parade features historic carriages, a sidesaddle equestrian team and hundreds of costumed participants.

On Dec. 4, Pickwick's Lanternlight Parade will stroll through the Strand National Historic Landmark District.

In addition, Mark Charles Dickens, great-great grandson of the legendary author, will host Dickens Feast in the ballroom of the 1859 Ashton Villa. Visitors can take candlelight tours of the 1838 Michel B. Menard Home and the 1839 Samuel May Williams Home, the two oldest homes in Galveston. Handbell concerts will be performed at the 1859 St. Joseph's Church, the oldest German Catholic Church in Texas.

In his recent book, "The Fun Also Rises," travel writer Alan Davis named Dickens on The Strand among the "100 most fun places to be in the world at the right time in 1999." Dickens on The Strand has also been named one of the Top 100 Events in North America by the American Bus Association, and one of the Top 10 Festivals in the State by Texas Highways Magazine.

Hours for Dickens on The Strand will be 10 a.m. to 9 p.m Dec. 4 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Dec. 5. Tickets are $8 per person at the gate, and are good for one day of the event. Everyone in full Victorian costume and children age 11 and younger will be admitted free.

Advance tickets are $6 per person through Dec. 3. Tickets are not refundable and are good rain or shine. For more information or to order advance tickets call Galveston Historical Foundation at (409) 765-7834 or fax (409) 765-7851. Send e-mail requests to Foundation@galvestonhistory.org.

Midland Woman's Club marks 50 years

By Richard Acosta
Staff Writer

On the first day of September this year, an idea, which started as a simple solution to a common problem, turned 50 years old. And last Thursday at a special commemorative luncheon, members of the Midland Woman's Club toasted the club's founding 50 years ago — and to 50 more years of service to the community.

For five decades, women of the club have joined under the pledge of:

"I join this club with all worthiness of intent and purpose.

"I pledge myself in all associations with its members to generosity in thought, speech and action.

"I pledge myself to work for the prosperity of the club, further its interest, and those of my fellow members to the best of my ability.

"I pledge myself to a loyal maintenance of the dignity of the club at all times, and a faithful adherence to its requirements."

The idea for the club was sparked by a need the women's clubs of Midland had. Fifty years ago, members of the various women's clubs often got together; however, finding a meeting place could be difficult because there was seldom a place were they could meet all the time. From week to week, time and location would change from someone's home in the morning to another's the following week in the afternoon.

As individual groups, the women may never have been able to remedy the problem, but by uniting together, women's groups of Midland were able establish the Midland Woman's Club.

Created in 1949, the club is a spin-off of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, which formed in 1930. The Woman's Club was founded to give the other organizations in Midland a place to meet.

The club formed to, "Unite our club women for the purpose of mutual benefit and for the promotion of our common interest in education, public welfare, and fine arts," according to the club's handbook.

The club's building opened in 1954, thanks to a favorable meeting between the Midland City Council and County Commissioners, according to Hazel Smith, 25-year member of the club.

"When the building first opened, it was under the understanding that once we stopped using the building as the Woman's Club, that it would go back to the city," Ms. Smith said. "That was 50 years ago, and they are still waiting."

Raising funds to construct the new building was no easy task for the club, said Jo Connell, eight-year member and current president of the club.

"Businesses and individuals donated money and service to the building," Ms. Connell said. "Other organizations around town were able to have the landscaping, furnishings and other items."

The plate committee packages the fund-raising plates for delivery.

Fifty years ago, one of the main fund-raisers was the sale of commemorative plates they had designed for the club. Ms. Connell said the plates showed Midland's skyline with old buildings, and had area cattle brands around the rim.

An old newspaper clipping stated that the club sold 1,400 of the 2,000 plates almost immediately, which helped draw attention to the project.

Today the four fund raisers for the club are Fall Style Show, Mexican Fiesta, Spring Style and the Spring Fling.

Within a year of its organization, the club's membership increased from seven to 15 shareholding clubs (or clubs that used the building for a fee).

Midland Woman's Club is far more than a place to have afternoon teas and card games, Ms. Connell said. The group is active in the community, raising funds for scholarships and other causes.

They said they will take applications from any and all serious college students.

"We have just bought a $10,000 CD," Ms. Smith said. "Which left us with $3,000 left over. We use a large portion of the money for scholarships. We plan on giving away two this year."

This year the club gave one scholarship to a student at Texas Tech and one at Texas A&M.

The actual birthday of the club is set as Sept. 1. To mark this year's milestone, on Nov. 18 a proclamation was read at a luncheon and a special guest speaker gave a program, but other than that, the lunch was like any other, Ms. Connell said.

Over time, however, the Woman's Club, while not losing its shine, has lost some of its membership.

In 1979-80 the membership of the Woman's Club was 190 with more than 750 members in shareholding clubs. The club voted to close the membership so it would not grow too large. Today, however, membership is 93 with only eight shareholding clubs; Lt. William Brewer Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, The Fine Arts Club, Midland Garden Club, Midland Porcelain Arts Club, Midland Woman's Club Book Review Unit, The Progressive Study Club, The Twentieth Century Study Club and the Yucca Garden Club.

"There are so many more new opportunities for women now than in the past," Ms. Connell said. "We seem to attract a lot of retired people — teachers mostly. We just don't have the appeal to the young ladies that we used to. But right now we are holding our own."

Ms. Connell said she would hate to see the club go under, but understands that as time changes, so do the interests of people in the community.

She said that as long as it is possible the club will continue to be a presence in Midland.

The collector plate the Woman's Club sold in 1952 as a fund-raiser.

Texas-Size Garage Sale successful for 10th year in a row

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Community & Senior Services of Midland is celebrating the success of its 10th annual Texas-Size Garage Sale, which was held recently in its "home" for the past few years, a warehouse at the corner of Scharbauer Drive and Lamesa Road.

McKnight-Harrison

Executive Director Kelly Ives says, "The Midland community has exhibited wonderful support for the frail elderly during the past 10 years, and this will insure that services continue well into the next millennium."

This year's honorary chairmen, Jan and Joe O'Neill, did yeoman service in attracting new sponsors to the Meals-on-Wheels benefit.

To honor all the sponsors, both old and new, an appreciation party was held recently at the Bluebird Lane home of Betty and Don Tomlin.

Guests enjoyed cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, a silent auction and, as an added attraction this year, a live auction. Bill Huber of Tuscola, Ill., father of CSS Development Director Jami Owen, served as the auctioneer. He can be seen on television as the "Super Poligrip Auctioneer."

Among those enjoying the festivities were CSS board president Shane Stokes and his wife, Kim; Altie and Bill Russell, Judy and Warren Bartley, Eileen and Jim Piwetz, Margaret Cerf, Mary White, Gigi and Aubrey Linne, Linda Bond, Peggy Thorsen, and Nancy and Buddy Anguish.

FROM WALL STREET to Tinseltown! Such is the career path former Midlander Kell Cahoon has traveled since his graduation from the University of Texas at Austin.

Although Kell was destined to be a businessman (especially since receiving his MBA from UT), he decided to pursue his dream of writing comedy after working in New York and Houston. Success has followed!

He and his writing partner, Tom Saunders, are currently supervising producers and writers for the TV sitcom, "Just Shoot Me." They previously wrote for "American Girl," "News Radio" and "The Larry Sanders Show," as well as several pilots. In addition, they are frequently asked to punch up movie scripts.

Kell, who enjoys living in the Hollywood Hills, is the son of longtime Midlanders Paula and Frank Cahoon. Midland High School claims him as one of its talented graduates.

FOLLOWING THEIR RECENT wedding in St. Luke's United Methodist Church and a reception at the Petroleum Club, Amanda Cartwright and Brian Reed enjoyed the luxury of a night in the Presidential Suite at the Midland Hilton. The next day, they departed on a Las Vegas honeymoon, returning home just in time for Friday night football.

The couple are now at home in Lubbock. Amanda is employed with the Cooper Independent School District, and Brian is a sales representative for Nabisco.

Pre-nuptial festivities included a coffee given in Amanda's honor by Jo (Mrs. Perry) Connell and Kathy (Mrs. Paul) Witten, the grandmother and mother, respectively, of the maid of honor, Elizabeth Conn. In addition, Amanda and her bridesmaids were treated to a manicure party and a luncheon afterwards at Venezia Restaurant. Hostesses were her grandmother, Elizabeth (Mrs. Herb, Jr.) Cartwright of Signal mountain, Tenn., and her aunt, Priscilla (Mrs. Charles) Simmons of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The groom's parents, Glynda and Britt Reed of Lubbock, hosted the rehearsal dinner at La Bodega Restaurant. Parents of the bride, Melissa and Herb Cartwright, entertained family members and other out-of-town guests with a brunch at their home on the day after the wedding. It featured Bloody Marys and Jumburrito's famous breakfast burritos, a real treat for all their Tennessee kin.

Special guests here for the wedding included the bride's grandparents, Elizabeth and Lt. Col. (Ret.) Herb Cartwright Jr., and from Roswell, N.M., Brian's grandparents, Frankie and Harley Anderson.

Along with the attendant wedding festivities, many of the out-of-town guests enjoyed a tour of the Tall City, including visits to the Petroleum Museum and Midland Community Theatre.

JAZZ AFICIONADOS were recently treated to an outstanding evening of music, featuring the improvisational artistry of five East Coast musicians.

John Cocuzzi on vibes and piano was joined by clarinetist Allan Vache (brother of trumpeter Warren Vache, who is well-known in West Texas from his numerous performances here), Big Joe Maher on drums, John Previti on bass, and guitarist Vince Carrao.

The ballroom of the Midland Hilton was the venue for the program, which brought jazz at its finest to the large assemblage.

With the exception of Allan Vache, who previously lived in San Antonio while pursuing his musical career, the men were all first-time visitors to the Lone Star State and received a warm West Texas welcome during their stay.

Among those turning out for the last concert of the West Texas Jazz Society's 1999 season were Joann Lambert, Ed Magruder, Ann and Tom Harrell, George Goebel, Janet and Glen Farmer, Sue Mullins, Rudy Berg and Sally and Bill Stella, who were welcomed as new members.

DEAR ABBY

Postpone wedding sooner, not later

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: There is a possibility, hopefully slim, that a friend's bride-to-be may not show at the wedding. If this happens, what is the proper protocol for whomever is asked to announce the postponement of the service? What does one say in such a situation? — WANTS TO BE PREPARED, THOUSAND OAKS, CALI.

Van Buren

DEAR WANTS TO BE PREPARED: If there is a possibility strong enough to write to an advice columnist that the bride will be a no-show, the wedding should be postponed NOW — while the guests can still cancel their travel and lodging reservations, and before anyone has gathered for the ceremony.

Were I the person whose duty it was to inform the wedding guests that the wedding was canceled, I would simply say: "Ladies and gentlemen, I regret to inform you that there has been a change of plans. There will be no wedding today. However, don't let that stop you from enjoying the music and refreshments that have been provided. I'm sure you'll be hearing the details in the weeks to follow."

DEAR ABBY: For many years, I searched for a family project to give added meaning to the holidays and instill in our children the foundations of "social service."

Three years ago, at Thanksgiving, I found the perfect project, one our whole family could share.

Since most people get both Thursday and Friday off from work, we decided to spend all of Thanksgiving Day cooking a complete Thanksgiving dinner and delivering it to a needy family. With three children aged 7, 3 and 1 at the time, even the youngest could "help" mash potatoes and bake cookies.

Each year it has given us an opportunity to get acquainted with wonderful people who were in difficult circumstances, experience their joy at receiving these gifts, and feel we have something worthwhile to celebrate at our own Thanksgiving, which we now celebrate on Friday.

This family project has provided us with an altruistic and uplifting focus for the holiday. We have chosen to focus our giving on immigrant families who often work at the most unpleasant and dangerous jobs, and receive the lowest pay.

However, any group that has personal meaning to the individual, such as the elderly, people with AIDS and single parents — the list goes on and on — would appreciate some special care on Thanksgiving.

Also, before Christmas, the children and I were cleaning out closets to make room for new toys and wishing we could find a good use for the old toys. We made a few calls and located a homeless shelter that welcomed our donation.

Abby, we have a limited income, and cannot always afford to contribute to new-toy drives. However, we had an abundance of used-but-still-nice toys my children had outgrown, which made the children in the shelter very happy indeed.

We found our shelter by looking in the Yellow Pages under "Housing Assistance and Shelters" and "Social Service Organizations." If at first you don't connect, keep calling!

This has become a family tradition, and I can't tell you how much it has enriched our lives. — DARIA DOERING, SAN DIEGO

DEAR DARIA: What an inspiring way you have chosen to teach your children to share their abundance with others.

Churches and synagogues can also provide names of families and older people who are in need and would welcome being included in a family celebration.

Thank you for providing living proof that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

DEAR ABBY: I'm being married soon, and as a bride-to-be, I have been very laid-back and agreeable to all of the arrangements my mother has made.

At first, I asked if we could have just a small, informal barbecue. She said no — so now we're having an all-out affair.

My sister will be my maid of honor. I'm letting her wear whatever she wants. Even though my colors are blue, she is wearing a plum-colored dress. As long as she's happy, fine.

I have argued with my mother about only one thing: I have a beautiful, simple wedding dress. I want to wear a pair of sneakers with lace shoestrings because I will be on my feet all day.

I don't want to wear heels because those shoes are not made for comfort. I think the sneakers with the lace "accents" will be very cute and nice.

Although this is really the only thing I am asking for myself, my mother is acting like I'll shame the family. (I am not doing the "garter" thing, so no one will even see the shoes.)

I did agree with my mother that I'd wear proper wedding shoes for the ceremony and formal reception, but that wasn't good enough. I do not want to wear those ceremony shoes from 2:30 p.m. until 12:30 a.m.

Abby, my mother will not compromise. Why shouldn't I be comfortable at my own wedding? She's acting like I'm committing some horrible sin, and threatening I'll forever be the laughingstock of New Jersey.

All I want is to be comfortable at my own wedding. Please help me put this into perspective. — WISHING FOR COMFORTABLE SHOES, PARSIPPANY, N.J.

DEAR WISHING: Please tell your mother I suggest that she loosen up a little. Since you're wearing a long dress, and will be wearing traditional "wedding slippers" during the ceremony, your mother should be willing to compromise and allow you to wear your sneakers at the reception.

Many brides simply kick off their high-heeled pumps and go through their receptions in stocking feet. Your idea has merit.

CHUCKLE FOR THE DAY: A young boy handed a bank teller a check made out for 1 cent and said, "Please cash this check." The teller looked at it and asked the boy, "How do you want it — heads or tails?" (Submitted by Lou Yelnick, Sea Gate, N.Y.)

Abby shares her favorite recipes in two booklets: "Abby's Favorite Recipes" and "Abby's More Favorite Recipes." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 per booklet ($4.50 each in Canada) to: Dear Abby Cookbooklets I and II, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included in price.)

HELL ON WHEELS

Kindness delivered not in job description

By Jean Starnes

In the past I have written about some injustices toward persons who are handicapped. The column about parking in a "Handicap" space when no one in the car has a disability is an example.

Starnes

In this column, however, I want to tell about three businesses that deserve much applause. Not only have they given extra assistance to me, but they act as if it is not an imposition for them. This second characteristic is as important as the first.

When I first started shopping at the Albertson Grocery on North Midkiff, I made two trips around the store. I would get all the reachable items and then ask various stockers to hand me the ones on the higher shelves, which include cat food. Since I buy that each time, one stocker said, "Come on and I'll reach the cat food," when he saw me coming.

After about three months someone moved all the food my cat likes down on chair level. Whoever did it knew the correct brand, meats and even the texture.

They have now taken the service to a higher degree. When I enter the store, the floor manager tells one of the sackers, "Go with her and help."

Their assistance is fantastic. Not only do I take half as long to shop, but I don't have to take second choice because it is on a lower shelf.

The second group of people who merit extra thanks is the staff of the Windscape Apartments. They have each added to my safety, comfort and peace of mind. Several times I've telephoned saying, "I'm on the floor again. Can someone come and pick me up?" Whether it's in the middle of the day or the night, they arrive within five minutes.

In addition, they have done such tasks as secure my antique corner cabinet to the wall, tape up my cut toe, and sign as witness on countless papers.

They even widened my bathroom door. Now I have only one reason to hold my breath when heading for the bathroom.

Extra thanks also go the owners and staff of the Specialized Fitness Center. When I started going there, I was in the worst physical shape of my life. I fell frequently, had little strength and my coordination was deteriorating.

The owners assigned a personal trainer to work with me, as if I were a Hollywood star. He helps me on and off the weight lifting machines, keeps me on task, and provides encouragement. In just six weeks the results are remarkable.

Now I fall only enough to keep me humble, and the time spent in bathing and dressing has lessened by a third. For the first time in my life I have a calf muscle that can actually be seen, but the most important benefit is the reduction of frustration in my life.

To these three businesses I offer my sincere thanks for going beyond their job descriptions.

Jean Starnes' autobiography is titled, "Hell on Wheels."

Common herb has untapped potential

N.Y. Times News Service

Anesthesiologists, like many doctors, tend to be wary of herbal medicines.

Just this year, several anesthesiology associations began a campaign to warn people facing surgery that their doctors needed to know if they were taking herbal remedies, since some could have dangerous interactions with anesthesia.

But now anesthesiologists have begun turning to an herb to help treat a deadly and often intractable lung condition that affects hundreds of thousands of people a year.

The herb is borage, valued until now mainly for its slightly cucumberish taste and its eye-pleasing purple and pink flowers.

The disease is acute respiratory distress syndrome, which can result from trauma (like a car accident), infection and other causes, and has a fatality rate as high as 70 percent.

Doctors have turned to an arsenal of weapons to cure it, some high tech, but have so far accomplished little.

Now, researchers from the Mayo Clinic report that in a study of 150 hospital patients who had oil from borage seeds administered through tubes in their stomachs, the death rate from the respiratory syndrome dropped by about 35 percent.

A second study with a smaller group of patients had similar results, and researchers now plan further study.

The findings were presented at the recent annual meeting of the American Society of Anesthesiologists.

Researchers believe the benefits come from a component of the herb called gammalinolenic acid, which has natural anti-inflammatory qualities.

"Excited would be an understatement," said Dr. Michael J. Murray, the Mayo anesthesiologist who conducted the study, when he was asked his reaction.

Turkey truths:

Arm yourself and survive holiday cooking season

By Sheryl Julian
N.Y. Times News Service

Thanksgiving is demanding on many levels. First come the horrible traffic and long lines at the grocery store. Then, the menu boasts a main course so large, nothing else fits into the oven. And when the other dishes do go in — well, it seems like they're all orange. There are the individual quirks to attend to, as in family members who like, and expect, certain things. Those items were probably instituted around the time you were born. Now that Thanksgiving is held at your house, you're wondering, do you have to go out and buy marshmallows?

Finally, there's the guest list situation and family dynamics in general. Let's face it. Not everyone in attendance would be there if they weren't blood relations. But look at it this way: Almost everyone in every corner of the country is hosting or attending a Thanksgiving celebration, and they're going through all of this, too. Try a little Pollyanna.

Thanksgiving is a chance to smooth family wrinkles and eat well. The fall harvest boasts some of the finest cooking ingredients. And don't worry about the small stuff: Everything will get cooked or reheated, because you have all day. Tom Turkey is the most patient guest of all.

HERE ARE some tips to get you through the day:

■ First, set the table. Do this a couple of days in advance and make place cards. Position your most accommodating guest next to your boorish uncle, and try to solve all those other little personality problems. Don't seat husbands and wives next to each other, and alternate guests like this: exuberant, bashful, exuberant, bashful.

■ Deal with the main course. The most-often-asked question is: How long does it take to thaw a turkey? In the refrigerator (breast up, in a pan large enough to hold it), it will take one day per 4 pounds. There are other methods, such as thawing in cold water, but we don't recommend thawing in the microwave because it's not safe. Our advice: Buy a fresh, natural turkey or a kosher turkey. If you really care about the taste, these do taste better. When the turkey is done, even if it's sooner than you expected, remove it from the oven and let it sit in a warm place. It's fine for 1 hour. Turkeys can't be carved right away, anyway. You need to leave them on the counter for at least 20 minutes so the meat reabsorbs some of its juices, tastes moist, and carves more smoothly. The best system is to time dinner so the turkey comes out of the oven 1 hour before the guests arrive, you can reheat the side dishes, and everyone can have something to drink (including you).

■ Now, make turkey stock. Use the neck and giblets from the turkey and the vegetable scraps from cooking (celery tops, carrot and onion ends, etc.) to make a pot of rich stock. Add chicken necks and backs, if you have some in the freezer. Let it simmer for 2 hours. Later, use it for gravy and to moisten stuffing.

■ Solve the orange vegetable glut and the two-potato dilemma. If you make a potluck Thanksgiving, assign each guest one of the classic orange items. At least it won't be you staying up past your bedtime preparing redundant vegetables. But if you host a meal that you make all by yourself, choose one or two, and don't make yourself crazy trying to please everybody (you can't). Certainly you don't need both pureed squash and mashed sweet potatoes. And you'd be foolish to offer mashed sweet potatoes along with mashed white potatoes. Then, of course, you'd have to dispense with pumpkin pie. Try that, and the family will stage a revolution.

■ Make the mashed potatoes ahead. Except for the turkey, almost everything on the harvest menu can be made entirely in advance. Some people maintain that you can't do mashed potatoes ahead, but here's how. Choose starchy potatoes (Idahos or russets) and mix them with yellow ones (Yukon gold or Yellow Finn). Boil them in water and milk, then drain and mash them as usual, adding hot milk and butter. Then pour a thin layer of hot milk onto your beautiful mashed potatoes. When you reheat them just before serving, you can stir the potatoes back to their original fluffiness.

■ Now, on to the green vegetable problem. You owe your guests something crunchy. Steamed broccoli is a logical accompaniment, but it's cumbersome to make for more than eight guests. Brussels sprouts aren't light enough to fit the bill (though they're awfully good steamed lightly, then sauteed with bacon). Green beans are out of season, so the quality is undependable. You could offer salad greens tossed with vinaigrette dressing. Or a cabbage and carrot slaw with a slightly sweetened vinaigrette. We add lots of scallions and parsley right at the end.

■ Make enough stuffing. If you want lots of stuffing and some left over, you really need to make a separate dish in addition to what's inside the bird. Double whatever you're making to fill the bird, and put half into a well-buttered baking dish. Just before you reheat the baking dish of stuffing, moisten the top with a couple of generous ladles of turkey stock. The top of the stuffing should brown while the inside remains moist.

■ Now for the gravy, a nuisance for any cook. Good gravy is great, so make the effort. The first step is to get the bird out of the pan. Enlist a guest, roll up your sleeves, and go one, two, three, heave-ho onto a large, warm platter. Cover the turkey loosely with foil and set it aside in a warm place. Pour 1 cup of boiling water into the pan. You don't need to set it over a burner. Simply scrape up all the sediment on the bottom of the pan. Add another 1/2 cup of water if necessary. Then tip the contents of the pan into a saucepan to make the gravy. The roasting pan is cumbersome and, once set over two medium burners, it's a recipe for wrist burns.

First things first. What do you serve before a meal that is far too abundant in the first place? You can always do an updated version of the relish tray. Be sure to include celery hearts, leaves intact, along with radishes, stems intact. Big green unpitted olives should also go on the tray, along with a little pot of chutney and a bowl of crackers, or something heartier, like a roasted caponata or Cheddar cheese spread.

What about guests who want to bring something? Some cooks are comfortable assigning recipes, others not. Take your stance and announce it. If you want help, it's there. If you want to do it all yourself, there are still bits and pieces your guests can bring: flowers or fruit for a centerpiece, apple cider, wine, ice. Maybe a pie. Or a relish for the hors d'oeuvres tray. If you were expecting something homemade and it isn't, don't say a word or let anyone see that funny disapproving look. When life gives you seared, fatty drippings and sediment, remember: Make gravy.

MAKE-AHEAD MASHED POTATOES

In general, allow 1 medium potato per person, but on Thanksgiving, when the table is full of side dishes, you can stretch a pot of mashed potatoes to serve more people.

8 medium potatoes (half Idaho or russet, half Yellow Finn or Yukon gold)
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
2 cups 1 or 2 percent milk
1 quart whole milk, heated to scalding
4 tablespoons butter

Peel the potatoes and cut them into 2-inch pieces. Combine them in a large pan with water to cover them completely. Add plenty of salt and the 2 cups of 1 or 2 percent milk. Bring to a boil, lower the heat, cover the pan, and simmer the potatoes for 15 minutes or until they are tender. Drain them into a colander.

Return the potatoes to the pan and add 1 cup of the whole milk with 2 tablespoons of the butter. Sprinkle with plenty of salt and pepper, and mash the potatoes until they are smooth. Add 1/2 cup more milk and the remaining butter. Continue mashing until the potatoes are fluffy. (You can add more butter, if you like.) Add 1/2 cup more milk, if necessary. The potatoes should be exactly the consistency you like for serving. Taste for seasoning and add more salt and pepper if necessary.

Use a plastic spatula to scrape down the sides of the pan. Smooth the top of the potatoes. Pour enough of the remaining milk on top of the potatoes to make a very thin layer.

Cover the pan with the lid and set the potatoes aside for several hours. Just before serving, set the potatoes over medium heat and reheat them, stirring constantly, until they are hot and fluffy. Transfer to a warm bowl and serve at once.

Colorado canyon area is newest national park

N.Y. Times News Service

The United States' 55th national park was created last month when President Clinton signed legislation creating Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park in southwest Colorado, about 250 miles from Denver. It is the first new national park since Death Valley and Joshua Tree were established in 1994.

The centerpiece of the new park is the dramatic Black Canyon, whose dark-gray walls of schist and gneiss were carved over a period of two million years by the Gunnison River. The canyon plunges as much as 2,660 feet, with one sheer drop measuring 2,200 feet. The narrowest point at the bottom is only 40 feet wide.

Both the canyon and its rims are home to a variety of wildlife, including black bears, golden eagles and the endangered peregrine falcon.

Black Canyon was established as a national monument in 1933, and with its elevation to national park status, it acquires 10,000 more acres. Still, at 30,300 total acres, it is the fourth smallest national park, exceeding only the Hot Springs (Arkansas), Wind Cave (South Dakota) and Virgin Islands National Parks.

Black Canyon gets 230,000 visitors a year, most of them during the summer. Many come for trout fishing on the Gunnison, but there is also hiking, Nordic skiing, camping (115 sites) and rock climbing. Facilities include a South Rim visitor center, which is open year round and offers food and ranger programs, and a North Rim ranger station, which is open during the summer only. Among the hiking trails are seven primitive routes down to the river.

The park's South Rim is 15 miles east of Montrose, and the North Rim 11 miles south of Crawford. The entrance fee is $7 a vehicle a week. Information: (970) 641-2337; www.nps.gov/blca/.

'Net site helps travelers with medical questions

By L.R. Shannon

HEALTH CARE ON THE ROAD
www.highwaytohealth.com

Imagine that you are visiting a foreign country when a pain in the back doesn't respond to aspirin, or your child shows signs of an ear infection, or your spouse develops a fever. You don't speak the language and you don't know the name of a doctor (or medecin or medico).

HighwaytoHealth, a Web service based in Radnor, Pa., is designed to help you find, get and pay for medical care while traveling. For an annual membership fee of $19, a traveler is covered around the world for any number of trips. The service says more than 18,000 physicians in 80 some countries — I didn't count them — belong to the network.

Although you can explore the Web site, you can't see the names and locations of the doctors or make an appointment until you subscribe and select a user name and password.

First, I tried Paris. After selecting "medical doctor" (you can also choose dentist, physical therapist or sports medicine) within five miles of where I was, I was presented with a map of Paris. Next came a list of 10 doctors there whom I could see. Wandering around, I found seven doctors in New Delhi, two in Buenos Aires and one in Copenhagen.

You submit a request for a medical appointment to HighwaytoHealth by e-mail or telephone. When one or more physicians respond, the subscriber is sent the list to review and select the best offer.

The physicians have signed contracts with the service agreeing to see subscribers if their schedule permits. The HTH call center monitors the appointment requests, the company says, to make sure they are answered, and will even try to schedule an appointment with an independent doctor if there is none under contract in your area.

The site also offers City Health Profiles, health care information for some 350 popular travel destinations and, for extra cost, insurance meant to supplement your regular health plan when traveling.

Two insurance plans, offered through Worldwide Insurance Services, are TravelGap Vacationer, insurance for one trip at $4.50 a day, and TravelGap Gold, a full year of coverage for $199. Of course, the value of that insurance depends on the details of your regular coverage, the procedure required and the country you are visiting.

HELP FOR NONMEMBERS

You don't have to subscribe to HighwaytoHealth to use its City Health Profiles. The information for each city covered is divided into two parts. The first lists such things as emergency telephone numbers, hospitals, clinics and pharmacies, health care at airports and other general information. The second is detailed information about things in the first.

For Paris, there were emergency telephone numbers for ambulance, police (you dial 17, not 911) and fire help, and for the American Hospital of Paris.

There were also numbers for the International Society of Travel Medicine, and a link to its Web site, www.istm.org. It provides news from the World Health Organization and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Boston show features recent finds by Heade

N.Y. Times News Service

BOSTON — Martin Johnson Heade, regarded as one of America's greatest 19th-century landscape and still-life painters, was considered a minor artist in his day and was all but forgotten after his death in 1904. He was rediscovered in the 1940s, but many of his works are still untraced, and it is not uncommon for one to turn up seemingly out of nowhere.

An exhibition at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston brings together more than 90 of his works in his first retrospective in 30 years, including 32 of the more than 200 Heade paintings that have been discovered since.

Heade was born in Bucks County, Pa., in 1819, and studied with his neighbor Edward Hicks, the folk artist of "Peaceable Kingdom" fame. Before Heade turned 20, he moved to Manhattan, where he met leading Hudson River School artists like Frederic Edwin Church. His art changed radically, and he soon became an inventive painter specializing in landscapes and still lifes.

Heade painted marshes, seascapes and inland views, concentrating on precise rendering of light and atmosphere, and he traveled widely, especially to South America. In Brazil, he devoted himself to painting exotic and colorful hummingbirds in a series of gemlike paintings.

"Martin Johnson Heade" remains on view in Boston until Jan. 17, 2000. It will be at the National Gallery of Art in Washington Feb. 13 to May 7, and at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, May 28 to Aug. 17.

The Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., is open daily. Admission is $12. Information: (617) 267-9300 or at www.mfa.org.

Jewel in Brittany regains its 17th-century luster

N.Y. Times News Service

RENNES, France — Visitors to Rennes in western France can now tour the grand halls of that city's newly restored 17th-century Parliament of Britanny building, which has been used as a courthouse since the French Revolution.

Only after the building and much of the art inside were ravaged by a fire five years ago did these treasures and the building itself attract the attention of the Culture Ministry.

Helped along by a renaissance of interest in Breton culture, the restoration of the Parliament became the symbol for a reinvestment in regional pride, and a far cry from the dusty court of appeals it had been.

The $60 million restoration has reclaimed 80 percent of the damaged art. The work has revealed a sparkling limestone and granite facade and a wealth of decorative work completed by the legion of royal painters, sculptors and carpenters from the court of Louis XIV, who descended upon the Parliament after its completion in 1655.

Of note are the ceiling paintings that adorn la Grand Chambre and its annex: the allegorical "Justice Extending Her Hand to Innocence" by Charles Errard and Noel Coypel, and Jean-Baptiste Jouvenet's "Triumph of Justice." Other works that have undergone major restorations are Louis Ferdinand Elle's large-scale "Justice Imploring Religion" in the Seconde Chambre and the sculptured wood ceiling of the Jobbe Duval room.

Work on the Grand Chambre and its annex will not be complete until 2001, but other attractions, including a small chapel with 17th-century woodwork and the gilded detailing in the Salle des Assises, are accessible.

A series of Gobelin tapestries depicting key moments in Brittany's history, which were hung in the Grand Chambre early this century, survived the blaze, though half were destroyed in another fire where they were being restored.

The court of appeals moved back in on Oct. 4 and tours from Culture Ministry guides, in English on request, began Nov. 1. They cost $5.50, at 6.3 francs to the dollar. Information: (33-2) 99.67.11.11.

Foreign flavors of ice cream are 'interesting'

By Richard P. Carpenter
N.Y. Times News Service

Here's another reason to travel: to sample ice cream flavors like roasted wattle seed and Caffrey's Irish Cream. Travel Holiday reports that flavors like the following are found only overseas:

■ Ireland. Guinness, Whiskey Cream, and the aforementioned Caffrey's Irish Cream. All pack an authentic wallop, the magazine says.

■ Australia. Kakadu plum, roasted wattle seed, and wild Roselle Flower. All are made from nuts found in the bush.

■ Thailand. Coconut ice cream. Sure that's available in the United States, but not with kernels of corn or chunks of jackfruit.

■ China. Many Chinese favor a less sweet concoction made from partially hulled rice (something like the Rice Dream brand sold in the United States). But how about authentic green-tea ice cream? You'll find that only in America, says Travel Holiday.

Scouts replace vandalized pier

By Burr Williams

The pond at Sibley Learning Center is located in a small playa, a desert basin that temporarily becomes a shallow lake after heavy rains. For years, the city of Midland emptied the old Hogan Park Swimming Pool into the playa. This moisture caused a number of trees and a small patch of cattails to begin growing. Local bird watchers often visited the small grove of trees and had named it the Ani Motte because the first sighting of a Groove-billed Ani in Midland County occurred there.

In 1980, the Midland Soil and Water Conservation District dug into clay soil, creating a half-acre pond that was later lined with thick plastic and has a dam on the north side.

Over the years the cattails increased. Staff, volunteers and visiting students planted Cottonwoods, Willows, Russian Olives, Seepwillow, Burr Oak, Soapberries, Wild Plum, Buttonbush, Three-leaf Sumac and Indiangrass. Chinese Elms germinated and grow, and birds planted Netleaf Hackberry.

The pond and surrounding area has become a wild, lush habitat. Staff and students have visited the pond thousands of times, keeping records of what is observed there.

As the cattails increased, animal populations have changed. Whirligig beetles visited only when the pond was new. Larval river clams arrived in the gills of fish released in the pond; catfish, carp, goldfish, bluegill, sheephead minnow, red shiners and mosquitofish have all been introduced. Only the mosquitofish, catfish and carp are able to survive the twice annual turning over of the pond's water and the corresponding drop in oxygen.

As cattails covered more of the pond, several species of water beetle arrived — some migrating by themselves, others riding the feathers of ducks.

It has always been a dream at Sibley to have a pier stretching out above the water so students and staff could better monitor the changing animal populations. In the 1980s, supporters of Sibley built a boardwalk over 30 feet of very shallow water. Within 10 years, the deposition of organic material by the annual growth and death of cattails filled in the shallow water under the boardwalk, and so it became an invaluable observation platform for investigating life in that habitat instead.

In April and May of 1999, Brad Huggard and other members of Boy Scout Troop 84 built a floating dock at the steps and equipment table adjacent to the pond for his Eagle Project. During the Texaco-Sibley Summer Science Camp, the new floating dock was utilized extensively. Students could sample the deeper waters, as they studied populations of dragonfly larvae, distribution of mosquitofish, and the preferred habitats of some of the other aquatic invertebrates. The staff of Sibley was ecstatic to finally have their dream brought to reality by Brad and his associates.

Unfortunately, by July someone had vandalized Troop 84's dock. One of the barrels that floated the platform was shot with a .22 rifle, which filled it with water and caused it to sink, and the platform to tilt. Staff and students continued to use the dock, but the slope made moving about on it very tricky. Everybody had to crawl on the dock, just to be safe.

Chris Glenn-Keegan, a young man who has visited Sibley since its inception and who has participated in several summer camps, visited with Sibley's staff to inquire about an Eagle Project to benefit the Nature Center. We mentioned the problems associated with the dock.

"How hard can that be?" Chris asked. "I can get a new barrel and it will float again, and maybe I could extend it a little further into the pond."

Before Chris could wade into the pond to begin his project, the vandals returned in August. They ripped the existing dock from its moorings, causing it to float out into the pond. So Chris waded out and hauled it to shore, separated the barrels from the platform, and left it on the shore for the work to be continued the next weekend.

And yes, you guessed it. The scumballs returned, and everything ended up back in the pond — along with a plastic basketball goal and other toys. Why would anybody bring such things to the pond?

At this point Chris enlisted the help of his stepfather, Floyd Prather. Together, the two sat down and designed a completely new dock — a pier, actually.

"Nobody has experience building piers in West Texas. We had to plan a way to construct something that would not come apart due to exposure from the water, and to do our best to make the pier hard to vandalize. It disgusted and discouraged us to deal with the deeds of the vandals. We refused to quit and be defeated by idiots. We constantly had to improvise as we worked, as we realized our original plans might not be quite what was needed."

Chris enlisted the help of Chris Oliver, David Rodgers, David Pool and Scott Scherer from the Texas Scholars program. Troop 160 members David and Ben Blackketter and Mike Mogan became enthusiastic about the project and helped tremendously in the early stages to construct the pier's framework off site, and poured a concrete footing to tie the pier to the shore.

Tim James, B.J. Hacker, James Kahlich, Jack Foster and David Judson from the troop pitched in for the finishing touches off site, and helped carry the heavy framework to the pond on Nov. 6.

David Blackketter donned waders and spent eight hours in the water that Saturday. Chris and Floyd traded off with another pair. To make room to work, a pick-up load of cattails first had to be roped and dragged from the pond. The crew then floated the pier out on truck tire innertubes, along with the metal upright poles with concrete footings.

"When the material was in place, a great sense of pride filled us — we could do it — yes sir!"

Some of the Boy Scouts, and all of the Prather family, (mom Mary Glenn, Alex and Harrison Glenn-Prather), as well as Chris' dad, Robert Keegan, returned on Sunday to finish bolting down the pier and disassembling the damaged dock.

The entire project required over 250 man hours to complete. Both nights, the crew worked until "dark-thirty" to get the job done. As they worked, golfers on the new nine of Hogan Golf Course would stop to kibitz, offering words of encouragement and complimenting the crew's hard work. Jackie McMillian, a science teacher from Anson Jones Elementary, dropped by for a walk and was very impressed, "This pier will sure help when I bring students out to survey the pond critters."

Dick Hagelstein, director of Sibley, commented, "This is impressive — it is truly a professional job."

Upon completion, Chris noted that he had been worried about possible injuries from the job, such as cracked knuckles, squashed toes, gashes from screws in the old wood or diarrhea from falling in and accidentally swallowing pond water. "But the worst hazard was the sun — we all got sunburned. We were blessed by beautiful warm weather and in November, that was not guaranteed."

Mary Glenn concluded, "The job gave our family a concentrated focus for two months. The troop joined in, and it was amazing how everybody came to feel it was 'their' project. It drew us all together — and I guess that is what an Eagle Scout project is really all about."

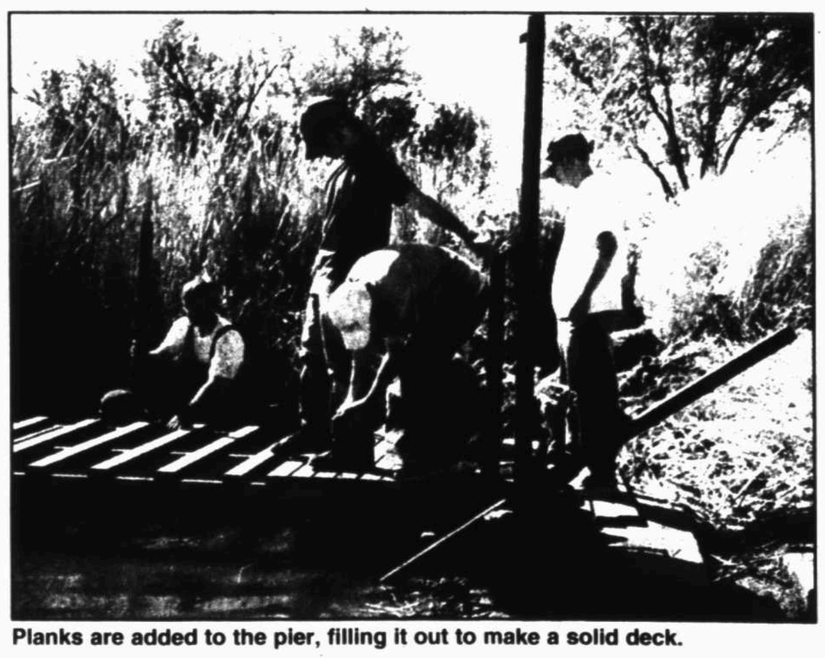
Members of Boy Scout Troop 160 and Texas Scholars volunteers put finishing touches on the new pier for the pond at Sibley Learning Center. A dock, previously used for the pond had been vandalized three times and destroyed.

A truck-load of cattails is removed from the pond to make way for the new pier.

The framework for the new pier is lifted over the fence by volunteers.

The pier framework is positioned in the pond. It is to be attached to a cement block previously poured.



Planks are added to the pier, filling it out to make a solid deck.

'Nobody has experience building piers in West Texas. We had to plan a way to construct something that would not come apart due to exposure from the water, and to do our best to make the pier hard to vandalize. It disgusted and discouraged us to deal with the deeds of the vandals. We refused to quit and be defeated by idiots. We constantly had to improvise as we worked, as we realized our original plans might not be quite what was needed.'

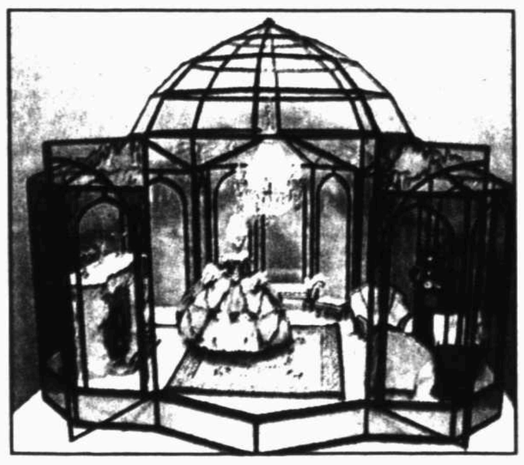
Christmas at the Mansion



By Georgia Temple

The holiday spirit alights at the Museum of the Southwest on Friday when the Southwest Express pulls into The Depot at 5 p.m. for the opening of Christmas at the Mansion. Children of all ages will be invited in to see decorated trees set amid small worlds of trains and doll houses and gingerbread houses. And those wandering into the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum will find the "My Town" exhibit spruced up for the holidays.

"The overall theme we're bringing into the museum is 'Welcome Home,'" said Jeff Hewett, chairman of the Christmas at the Mansion committee. "By lavishly decorating the museum and providing all these miniature examples of home life in the art museum and in the Children's Museum in the form of freshly decorated 'My Town' and in The Depot with the new exhibit that is keyed specifically to younger children, we hope we capture that this year. And the (Blakemore) planetarium will certainly be involved with a special star show just for the Christmas season."

Opening festivities on Friday run from 5 to 9 p.m. and include carolers, a visit from Santa, cookies and punch and the kick off for The Depot, which is the heart of this holiday family event.

Located in the stables adjacent to the museum's entrance, The Depot houses the Southwest Express, a 200-square-foot O gauge electric model train layout capable of operating up to 12 trains. The layout features animated and viewer-activated accessories, set among scenes of Midland and the Permian Basin. New this year is a special train installation and Playmobile exhibit designed for young children.

"I'm creating a Playmobile Village, a land of imagination," said Mary Ann Szafarczyk, who also is designing a fairy tale village in the Children's Museum.

In The Depot, young eyes will see cowboys, Indians, a train, a treasure island, a shipwreck and an underwater world assembled into a story by Ms. Szafarczyk from Playmobile kits donated by Kids Only Toy Store.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, Nov. 21, 1999:
You might receive many mixed messages this year. A partner or dear friend is often testy; you might get tired of the power struggle or the need to keep cheering him up. Go within and question your own values. Ask yourself: How would you like to be treated? You'll shed old beliefs as you gain a new perspective this year. You are incisive and direct; as a result, you can accomplish a great deal. If you are single, a meaningful relationship on your terms might be hard to establish. However, a very special person comes into your life around late spring. If attached, your commitment is tested, but happiness appears on the horizon. TAURUS can inadvertently challenge you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You are in the mood for doing. Indulge others; have a good time. Don't survey to get others' ideas; clearly, someone in your midst will have a distinctly different impression. You might take a comment personally. Make a money decision. Tonight: Call it an early night.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ You'll be awash in controversy, high energy and key feedback. Cancel a day trip if you don't feel like going. Someone close to you could have an unexpected need. You could be too serious with an older relative. He needs your levity and lighthearted caring. Tonight: Be spontaneous.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Take some time off to just wander, if you want. Another doesn't see eye to eye with you, anyway. Don't struggle with relationships; follow your own drummer today. Join friends who entertain and comfort you. Understand what another wants, but don't take his attitude personally. Tonight: Doing your own thing.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Respond to others; make a special effort toward a needy friend who could be acting with hostility. A get-together with friends is surrounded by excitement. Don't worry about a friend who is behaving overly responsibly; he isn't going to change. Tonight: Do what you want.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Make time for an older relative or friend. You have no idea how much your efforts are appreciated. You might opt to do something special for someone and not reveal or take credit for your actions. Don't worry so much about work pressure. Tonight: A must-show.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Work on maintaining an overview. Refuse to be pulled into another's issues. A child or new friendship proves to be unusually demanding of your time. Only you can decide whether it is worth it or not. Another who is at a distance could be very serious. Tonight: Get into a relaxing hobby.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Relating to others is always important to you. A new friend adds dynamic sparkle and spunk to your life. However, you can't always be in control of a partnership. Another throws a tantrum, but you might not want to think that he has cause to. Tonight: Think before an impulsive act.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ "Moody" describes those around you. A family member surprises you with his spontaneity, pitching in to make a chore a lot more fun. You might have to ask him for help, however. A partner might be in a grim mood, not knowing what he wants. Tonight: Make that extra effort.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Not every day can or has to be exciting, even for you! Take some time off to lull around, finish paperwork and perhaps get that chore or project completed. One interesting call may come in. Play it low-key anyway. Tonight: Enjoy, but curb spending.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Your temper often affects others, and today is no different. What was brewing yesterday still might not be clear. A frank discussion might be needed, even if it's uncomfortable. Another's spontaneity or advice could surprise you. Tonight: Take time for a child.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Dig in your heels today. Don't feel the need to do anything you don't want to do. After all, this is your Sunday, too! Still, you could shake another up just by being yourself. Understanding develops if you give another space. Tonight: Order in.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Make that additional effort. Another appreciates your ideas and feedback. Sometimes, outside opinions cause you to think too much or even to shut down. Don't take comments personally. A friend is only being honest and saying what he thinks. Tonight: Don't brood!

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	2♡	Pass
3♡	Pass	4♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♠

To defend well, players must have a means of communication. The simplest is defensive signaling. In standard methods, a high card on partner's lead shows you like the suit; a low card is discouraging. The problem is that you cannot always spare a high card to encourage a lead, so some players have adopted reverse, or "upside-down," signals, but this method, too, is far from perfect. Here is an example of what can happen with standard signals.

In the modern style, South's bid of three hearts was not invitational. Holding a maximum raise in the first place, North elected to violate the system and bid on.

Four hearts was an almost hopeless contract. There was a loser in each black suit, and three likely losers in diamonds. But that changed rapidly. Declarer played low from dummy on the spade opening, East inserted the ten and the queen won. Trumps were drawn in two rounds and, with no clear-cut line available, declarer exited with a spade to see if the enemy would help out.

As the cards lie, a black-suit return by East would certainly have cost a trick (but would surely have defeated the game), so East elected to return the king of diamonds. Anxious to tell partner to persist with the suit, West signaled with the jack. A diamond was continued to the ace, and the club switch was won with the ace. Declarer returned to hand with a trump, finessed the nine of diamonds and discarded the club loser on the queen of diamonds. Making four-odd.

West's signal was silly – the two was good enough. When the king of diamonds held the trick, considering dummy's holding in the suit, the location of the ace would have been no mystery to East!

hoods, they would have loved to have had toys like these to play with," Jones said. "I know I would have. We buy them for our kids now and have a lot of fun with them."

Train tickets are $3 per person, free for children under 2, and groups can purchase a 25-ticket book at a discounted rate. Admission to the Mansion, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., and the Children's Museum is free.

"We have the all new interactive exhibit at the Children's Museum, the 'Splash, Bang, Boom" science exhibit, which Texaco funded for us, and the My Town city scape," said Jones. "'My Town' has really brought in a tremendous amount of people since it opened. We have record attendance for October unprecedented in museum history. We had 12,000 people in October this year, which has doubled October attendance in any subsequent year."

The festive celebration that begins Friday and runs through Jan. 2 features performances by area choirs, additional visits from Santa, a special exhibit of Currier & Ives prints from the Museum of New York City and shopping in the Christmas Shop.

"This year in the gift shop, they're emphasizing merchandise that is unique and not obtainable anywhere else in Midland or in West Texas," said Hewett. "Some of the highlights are a limited edition ornament that is the Museum of the Southwest, the first in a series; note cards with either a winter photo of the museum or a pen and ink drawing by Elizabeth Connolly; and other gifts that people won't be able to find any place else."

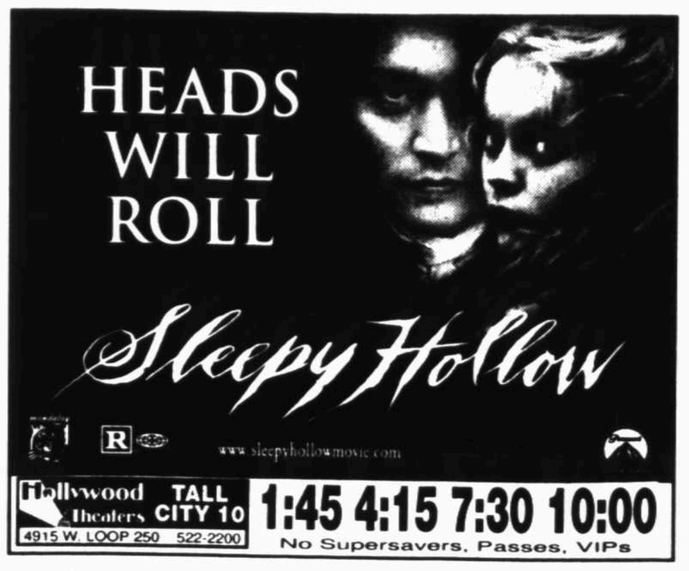
Additional activities include teas, which are free and set for 3 to 5 p.m. Dec. 2, 9 and 16; Wednesday box-luncheons ($7 per person) from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.; and Polar Express Parties on Dec. 21 ($5 per child) in the Children's Museum, where activities include story reading, crafts, games and refreshments. For exact times and to make reservations, which are required in advance, call Karen Winkler, 683-2882.

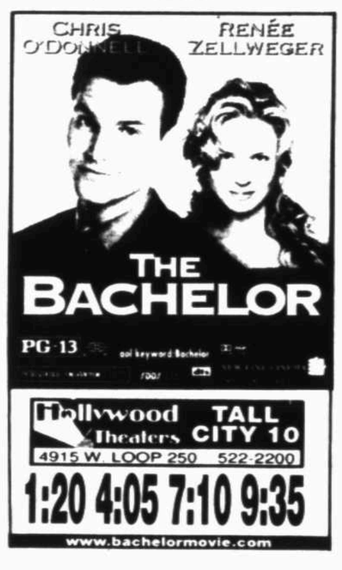
"Everybody just loved it," Edna Hibbitts, chairman of the teas committee, said of the first Christmas at the Mansion. "It ran very well last year, but obviously a second year project is being fine tuned because you learn from the year before."

Proceeds from the event benefit the museum's operating budget and endowment fund. Sponsors include Chase Bank, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, KWES-TV and radio stations KODM, KGEE, B93, KNFM and KMND.

Record crowds came to see last year's Christmas at the Mansion.

"We had 17,000 people come through here between Thanksgiving and New Year's, which was really a record for the museum," Jones said. "And we have every expectation that we are going to top that attendance this year because the place is really going to be spectacular. We have so much to see and so much to do for families, it's unreal."





Quiz show craze has everybody guessing

By Frazier Moore
Associated Press

NEW YORK — "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" raises questions besides "Who wants to be a millionaire?"

Like: Who knew?

As host Regis Philbin would say, "Is that your final answer?"

Of course, no final answer is yet available to peg the long-term prospects, if any, for this quiz show or for the genre it kick-started after 40 years. (Nor does anybody seem to know who made the decision not to put a question mark in the title.)

But midway through its November-long run on ABC, "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire" has trashed the competition, humbling hit series and big-budget "sweeps" fare alike. Last week's editions snatched seven of Nielsen's top 16 slots. Then Monday, "Millionaire" delivered its largest audience yet — nearly 27 million viewers.

Originally scheduled for 15 nights, it has now been extended by three, culminating on Wednesday, Nov. 24.

In short, "Millionaire" displays the drawing power it had in August, when during a two-week nightly blitz it made quiz shows the newest old thing. (It airs tonight from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. EST.)

Now, the quiz show with heart (in the words of its producer) has been joined for a limited weekly run by Fox contender "Greed," a gleefully heartless affair billed as "the richest, most dangerous game in America."

At least, it's paying off for Fox. While nowhere near the ratings neighborhood of "Millionaire," "Greed" has boosted the audience in its time slot (9 to 10 p.m. EST Thursday). And it should do particularly well tonight, when the three remaining members of last week's team return, perhaps to risk their accumulated $1 million on the $2.2 million question.

Presumably, the question won't be: What is imitation often said to be the sincerest form of? (a) flattery; (b) overkill; (c) desperation; (d) television.

Is that your final answer?

On the surface, "Greed: The Multi-million Dollar Challenge" may seem little more than a "Millionaire" clone. But viewers will find some distinctive differences.

For one thing, the tone is unabashedly crass.

"Do you want to keep the cash," oozes master of ceremonies Chuck Woolery, "or do you feel the neeeed for greeeed?"

A veteran of countless game shows, Woolery plays "Greed" as a slightly unsavory provocateur, waving wads of cash money under the noses of contestants as if to lead them astray.

By contrast, the punctilious Philbin crisply presents a "Millionaire" winner with a check.

The flashy setting for "Millionaire" invokes a disco, exciting and fun — albeit with a dress code. But the blue and silvery environs of "Greed" are more like a pinball machine tempting players up its eight-tier Tower of Greed to the $2.2 million jackpot. (Under a similar double-or-nothing system, "Millionaire" requires 15 questions to land a measly $1 million.)

"Do you want to keep that $50,000," Woolery presses, "or do you believe that 'cream cheese' is the answer to your half-a-million-dollar dreams?"

Either way, "Greed" is literally cheesy.

And brutal. While Philbin works one-on-one with each successive contestant, "Greed" rallies six contestants who must cooperate (and share), yet have the chance to purge a teammate for even greater winnings. The title might more aptly be "Who Wants to Stab You in the Back?"

The original big-money quiz shows of the 1950s celebrated rugged individualism: A lone intellect answering complicated questions (no multiple choice, baby!) from the solitude of the isolation booth.

By contrast, "Millionaire," befitting this era of the Internet and psychotherapy, implores: Get help! Each contestant is invited to reach out to a friend or to the studio audience by means of the so-called Lifelines.

"Greed" operates on a more cutthroat principle: Keep your friends close and your enemies closer, and do it to them before they do it to you.

Last week, viewers watched Curtis agree to a "Terminator Round" and pick Jackie as his opponent for a sudden-death question. He answered it correctly. Instantly, Jackie was broke and out of the game. Until a few moments before, she had been his teammate. Curtis didn't even say goodbye.

Where do you go from that level of rapacity?

To "Survivor," a survival-of-the-fittest competition that maroons 16 contestants on a deserted tropical island to vie for $1 million — and obliges the pack to vote each week on two "losers" who should be banished. CBS has scheduled it for next summer.

And among some half-dozen other quiz shows in the pipeline, please note the all-too-self-explanatory "Who Wants to Marry A Multi-Millionaire?"

Too greedy? Could be. But it least they remembered the question mark.

Elsewhere in television ...

'48 HOURS': Even though illegal in the United States, polygamy is practiced by tens of thousands of Americans and is on the increase, as seen on "48 Hours: A House Divided," airing tonight at 10 EST on CBS. Correspondent Erin Moriarty profiles one woman who escaped from a life of polygamy and is helping to free others. Correspondent Susan Spencer offers a look inside a polygamous household in Circleville, Utah, where a husband lives with his three wives, who tell Spencer they are very happy. Also reported on the broadcast is the fact that millions of U.S. taxpayer dollars are pouring into polygamy communities where federal programs are helping to support the lifestyle of plural marriage.

'Mary and Rhoda': Two old pals are still trying to make it after all

By Peter Nichols
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The night view stretches forever from the terrace of the 16th-floor duplex on Central Park West. Inside, it's the proverbial telephone booth. In the center of a room about 20 feet square, Mary Tyler Moore practices throwing her left hook while she, Valerie Harper and a film crew patiently work around one another, setting up for the next scene.

Space is tight, but this is ridiculous. Is there room for the camera? Furniture is removed. Lose the couch.

From 1970 to 1977, as Mary Richards and Rhoda Morgenstern, Ms. Moore and Ms. Harper made "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" one of the most successful series in television history. Now they are back together making "Mary and Rhoda," a television movie that began as an idea for a series and may yet lead to one.

References to the possibility of a new show often enter their talk, but for now the focus is clear. "We want to feel we've made the best movie we can," Ms. Moore said the other day.

In the film, which ABC expects to show early next year, Mary and Rhoda reconnect in New York, where they both have daughters in college. Mary has lived in the city for years and is the widow of a congressman who died five months ago. Rhoda, a native New Yorker, has returned from Paris. Having divorced her philandering French husband, she wants to pursue her interest in photography and be near her daughter.

Ms. Moore came up with the major plot elements herself. In fact, she put the project together herself, which is not the kind of thing she used to do in the old days with "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" or with her company MTM Productions, which was run by her former husband Grant Tinker.

"I did zip," she said. "I was chairman of the board." On the set she was on a kind of automatic pilot. "I never had to get involved in the acting because the show was so brilliantly written. It was like a perfect cake put before me every week. I never had to reach for moments. I instinctively knew how to act them."

Two years ago she proposed a new series. "It didn't fly," she said. Even seasoned writers couldn't get by the aura and mystique of the old show to create characters who were familiar yet totally different people in a completely changed world facing entirely new issues.

"I'm not the same character," said Ms. Moore, who will turn 63 next month. But writers kept sinking back into the old characterizations.

ABC turned down the series but backed the movie. "The series died because they never got scripts they thought were sharp enough to bring those characters back," said Susan Lyne, the network's executive vice president for movies and mini-series.

Katie Ford, who wrote the film, said the two-hour format gave Mary and Rhoda breathing room to re-establish themselves as new people in fresh lives. "To give credit to anyone who attempted it as a series, I don't think I could have done that in a half-hour," she said. In a movie, the memory of "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" needn't hang quite so heavily. "We're trying to move on from that, not be reminiscent, because it's important to see who they'd be now."

The film is directed by Barnet Kellman, the director of "Murphy Brown" among other shows and films. "'The Mary Tyler Moore Show,'" he said, "gave us a character who was starting over, taking chances. That's what energized the series. What I like about this story is that it puts Mary in that position again later in life."

Kellman and Ms. Moore credit much of the character development to Ms. Ford, 34, who began her career as a stand-up comic at 14 and has written for "Family Ties" and other series and been a writer and producer in Canadian television. "There was one initial phone call from Mary," she said. "We came from the same place about where we wanted to approach it. Her instincts are unbelievable. She gave me a lot of confidence and made me want to do it well for her because she had such a great eye."

In the duplex scene Mary Richards punches the air in satisfaction over having stood up for herself in a messy situation. "I don't want to play familiar roles," Ms. Moore said. "I want to play people who make my palms sweat."

In the old days Mary Richards was an independent young woman, but in the movie she faces a new reality in which independence imposes an updated set of demands. The congressman, a good fellow all around, made some bad financial decisions and now Mary needs a job. Or as Ms. Moore put it, "I'm 60; I haven't worked in eight years; is there hope for me?"

She and Ms. Ford developed the story together. "One of the first things I said to Mary was that I really wanted this to be a drama, because to me that's the only way to explain the 20 years we haven't seen and the only way the comedy will work for me," Ms. Ford said. "As a drama it's just easier to do."

In its potential for intimidation, New York is as much a part of the story of two women, now of a certain age, starting their lives over as Minneapolis was for Mary and Rhoda when they first became friends in their early 30s. The entire film has been shot in the city, a rarity for a television movie.

"You pay a price for the beauty and texture of New York," Kellman said. "You're in practical locations. In a New York apartment you can't move the wall. If the camera is jammed in the corner five feet away, you have to use a wide-angle lens, which catches everything it sees. You're dealing with reality all the time, which is great when it gets on screen but it's hard to get it there."

Eventually Mary Richards lands a position with a television news station run by Jonah Seimeir, played by Elon Gold, a man in his early 30s who bears absolutely no resemblance to Lou Grant (Ed Asner), the gruff, traditional newsman whom Mary worked for on the old show in the '70s.

"He's smart, glib and attractive in a way that makes him both distrustful and substantial," Kellman said. At one point Mary accuses him of hiring her to defuse claims of age discrimination arising from a situation with Cecile Andrews, played by Christine Ebersole, an anchorwoman in her late 40s. Jonah freely admits that that is indeed the main reason he hired Mary.

"In a way Mary and Lou have switched roles," Kellman said. "Mary is representative of those old values she learned at that station in Minneapolis. This kid is the product of contemporary media savvy, cynicism and business reality. At the same time, which is really challenging, the guy's not a fool or a cartoon."

And what has become of Rhoda? "The old Rhoda was waiting for a man to stamp her valid," said Ms. Harper, 59. No more. "She has grown much more confident over the years in that she's unwilling to stay in a marriage that is not a good one. She's still the same spirit, still has the New York accent. She's had her baby in her late 30s so she's pretty well formed up. Rhoda is suffering a bit of empty nest. She's coming home, she wants to be near her daughter, who's seeking her own life, so that's delicate. She likes to be needed, wants to be loved."

Central to the film, of course, are the two daughters, who help their mothers bridge the more than 20 years they have been gone from "The Mary Tyler Moore Show" and bring them into the present. Both are loyal but strive for independence. Mary's daughter, Rose, played by Joie Lenz, wants to leave college to be a stand-up comic. The mothers are given formidable young women to deal with.

"The daughters help them be different people," said Marisa Ryan, who plays Rhoda's daughter, Meredith, a pre-med student at Columbia. "She's trying to be on her own, get out of Rhoda's grasp, deal with the divorce. She's very close to her dad, and Rhoda's constantly vocalizing how she loathes him. Actually she's more like Mary, more studious, focused, more of a go-getter. She has the humor, but she's more straitlaced than Rhoda."

All told, these sound like solid characters for a new series. ABC won't comment on the possibility.

"To be able to do a two-hour movie is just right," Ms. Lyne said. "It gives you a chance to see who they've become and how they act in a world that has changed dramatically."

Later there will be time to consider other possibilities, as Kellman pointed out. "The movie has to be a stand-alone," he said, "but I was also careful in the writing and casting to make sure it worked as a setup for a series. You want to give the other characters their due. In a movie they can be straw men or props, but in a series they have to be interesting enough to see them in the round, in that you'll want to see their foibles and the difficulties they present to the central characters."

Going to the dogs...

by Katherine Allen

Permian Basin pet lovers relax. Your pet's health is in good hands thanks to Midland College's Veterinary Technology program.

Currently run by Dr. Kerry Coombs, DVM and program director, and Kelly Spencer, RVT, lab instructor, the program is growing, graduating more students every year.

The vet tech program teaches a variety of animal care skills including: taking and developing radiographs (x-rays); assisting the veterinarian in surgery; pharmacy tech; reviewing drug regimen with clients; administering and monitoring anesthesia.

"We're giving them the book knowledge to back up hands-on skills," Spencer said.

"Vet techs will make a practice more efficient," Coombs said. "The curriculum helps the vet tech know why they are doing what they are doing. They can also explain to the patient's owner what the vet is doing and why, providing a link between client and vet."

One of the newest health care professions, veterinary technology started in the late 60s, and has grown to more than 70 programs in the United States.

The MC vet tech program is only one of five in all of Texas.

"We get students from all over," Spencer said. "For example, New Mexico doesn't have any vet tech programs, so we have students from eastern New Mexico."

"We've had students from Lubbock and Amarillo, and others expressing interest from Tyler and Killeen," Coombs said.

The program takes two years to complete, culminating in an Associates in Applied Science (AAS) degree.

Students then take state and national board exams resulting in a Registered Veterinary Technician (RVT) designation.

"Most graduates go to work in small animal practices," Spencer said.

"But the field is wide open for opportunities. Our techs can work anywhere involving animal care, research facilities, the USDA, and occasionally, zoos."

The program gets animals to work on from the City of Midland Animal Control and Shelter. "The shelter brings over animals for us to spay, neuter, vaccinate, do leukemia testing, ensure that the animals are in a condition to be adopted," Spencer said.

"We also go to the shelter to do nursing, bandaging, blood collection, and learning how to restrain animals."

The program includes a 380+ hour practicum, allowing students to get hands-on experience in a clinic.In addition, students assist with surgery performing a variety of tasks.

"We usually have four assistants for the doctor during a surgical procedure," Spencer said.

"One serves as anesthetist, inserting an intravenous catheter, inducing and monitoring anesthesia. Another works as a scrub nurse, helping with patient prep. A third helps as surgical assistant, scrubs with the doctor, passes instruments, and does skin closure. The fourth assists as circulating nurse, opening packs and getting other surgery material."

A vet tech can do a lot of procedures that a doctor often performs, releasing the doctor to do other, more complex procedures.

The ideal situation is when a vet tech can choose an anesthesia protocol which the doctor approves, induce the animal's anesthesia and monitor it.

The doctor steps in to perform the surgery, and the vet tech is responsible for the patient's recovery.

One goal for Spencer is to place vet techs with large animal vets, to help restrain horses, cattle, even exotic animals.

Other goals include increasing enrollment, keeping more vet tech graduates in the area, and making the public aware of what a tech is and does.

"There aren't many vet techs in the area," Spencer added. "Many vets hire applicants with little or no experience."

Started in 1990, the program got off to a rocky start, but, in 1994, thanks to the efforts of Jo Ford, serving as interim program director, the program got provisional accreditation.

The program will have a site inspection by the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA) in February in hopes of regaining full accreditation.

The program recently received a Midland College Foundation grant, which will be used to construct their own radiology unit.

The program curriculum stresses medical studies, but also includes a humanities/fine arts elective, composition and rhetoric, interpersonal communication, introduction to psychology, and one elective.

The program has a website, reached at www.midland.cc.tx.us/~vettech.

Veterinary Technology students Hilary Valincano, Kim Miller and Kim Ortega prepare Tuffy for neutering before he goes to his adoptive family.

MC names Abell-Hanger essay winners

Midland College students Crystal Gray, Amanda Newsom, Steve Sanders, Matthew Tischer and Tracey Womack were named winners in the fall Abell-Hanger essay contest.

The five students were each awarded $500 scholarships checks for their essays about their volunteer experiences as Abell-Hanger Scholarship students.

In 1986, the Abell-Hanger Foundation offered to pay up to $598,000 for tuition and books at Midland College for the 910 June graduates of Midland's three high schools.

Since then, the Foundation has continued to provide scholarships to more than 2,599 deserving area graduates who have contributed more than 83,277 volunteer hours in exchange for their scholarships.

In 1997, the trustees approved a renewal and expansion of their scholarship program for Midland County high school graduates attending Midland College.

The four-year grant of $325,000 a year provides financial assistance for graduates of Midland's high schools and G.E.D. recipients and sponsors essay contests twice each year for students who are required to provide community service in conjunction with their scholarships.

In 1998 the Foundation gave $35,000 to establish Students in Philanthropy, a Midland College club that provides leadership training in fundraising and grantmaking. Last spring, SIP awarded more than $16,000 in grants to area non-profit agencies.

Mobil-Exxon merger may draw sell-offs

Some analysts expect U.S. and European regulators to propose fairly small divestitures before approving the proposed merger of Exxon and Mobil.

Regulators are expected to require the new company to sell one of its refineries on the Gulf Coast and possibly another in California, as well as some terminal operations and hundreds of branded gasoline stations, industry experts said.

"Divestitures in North America ... are not going to be the end of the world," Doug Terreson, an oil analyst with Morgan Stanley Dean Witter in Houston, told the Houston Chronicle.

Shareholders for both Irving-based Exxon Corp. and Mobil Corp., based in Fairfax, Va., have approved the $83 billion deal. Now the Federal Trade Commission and 22 state attorneys general are reviewing the deal.

"Things are progressing, and we fully expect that both regulatory reviews (in the United States and Europe) will be completed around the end of the third quarter," Mobil spokesman David Dickson said Tuesday.

GPM buys Gas Gathering System

GPM Gas Corp. has completed the purchase of the former Aquila Mooreland Gas Gathering System from Aquila Gas Systems Corp. and Aquila Gas Systems Marketing Corp. Terms of the transaction were not disclosed.

The Mooreland System gathers approximately 14 million cubic feet per day (MMcfd) of natural gas and adds 310 miles of high-pressure gathering pipeline to GPM's affiliated gathering systems.

The purchase includes approximately 90 well connections and four compressor stations. No processing facilities are involved.

The system extends northeast from Ellis County, through Woodward County and into western Woods County, Okla., and connects to GPM's Mooreland Gas Plant, which GPM acquired from Amoco Production Co. in September 1998. Mooreland Plant is a 135 MMcfd gas processing facility located in Woodward County, Okla.

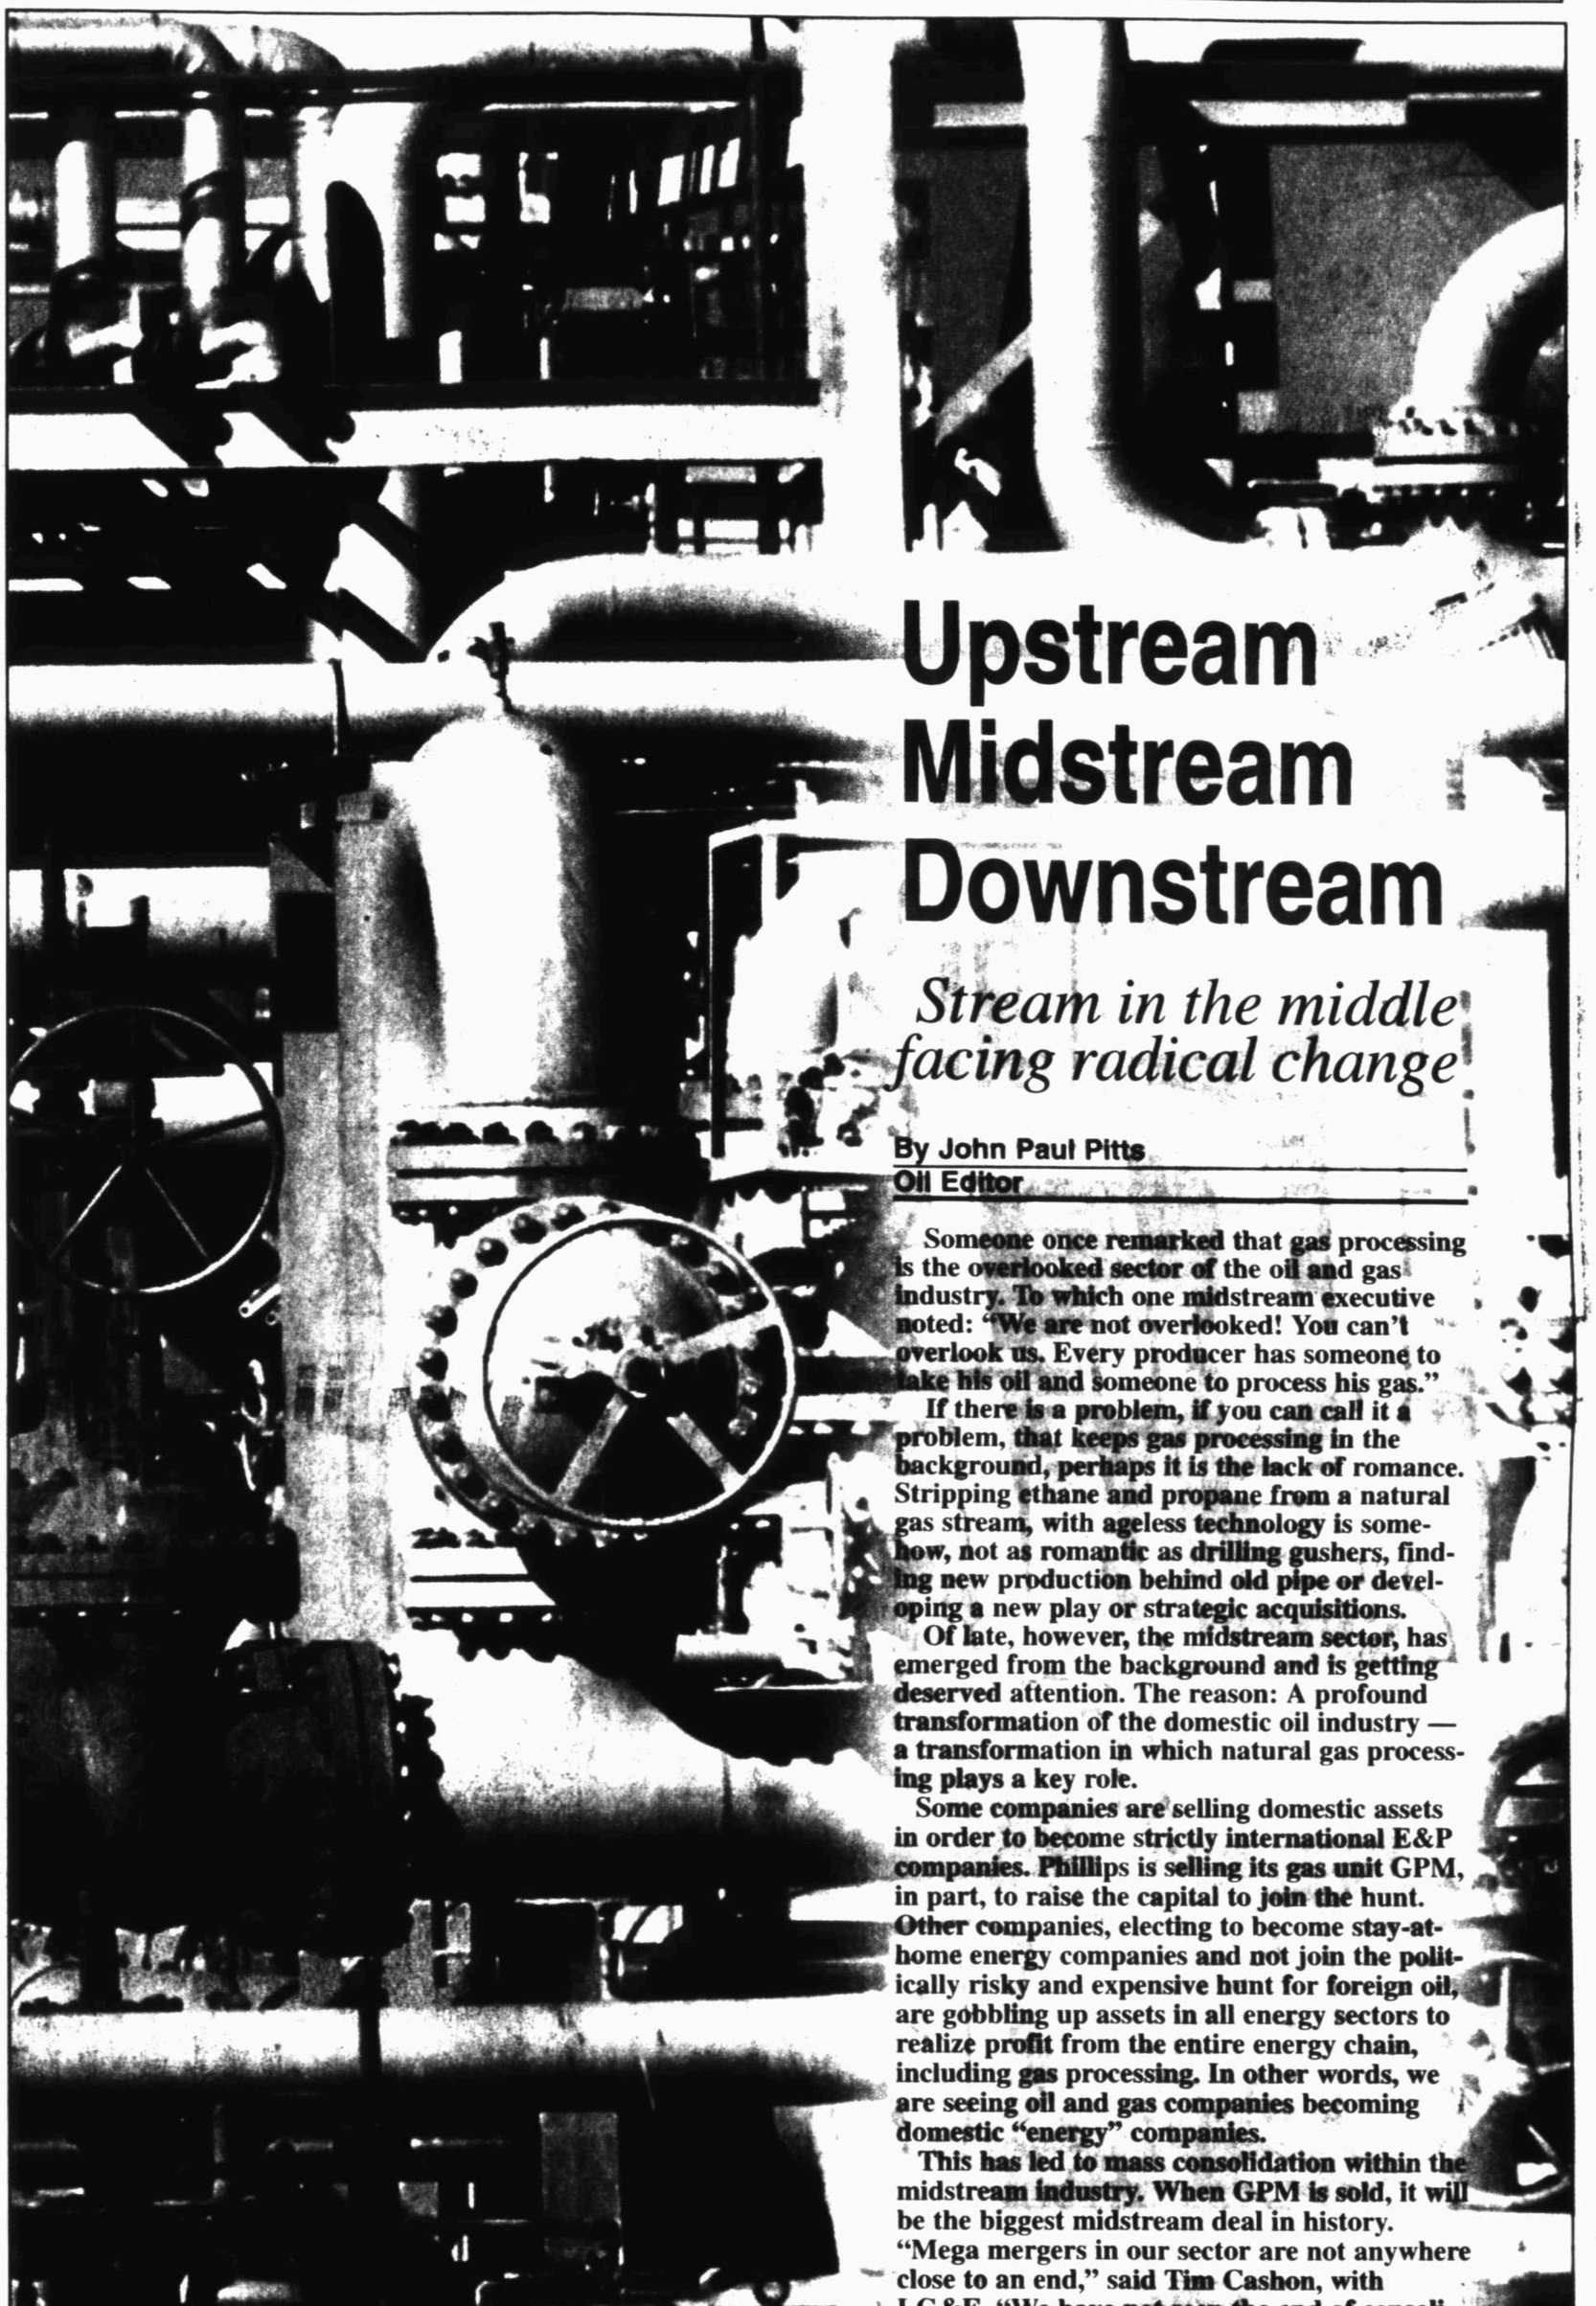
Natural Gas Processing



Upstream Midstream Downstream

Stream in the middle facing radical change

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Someone once remarked that gas processing is the overlooked sector of the oil and gas industry. To which one midstream executive noted: "We are not overlooked! You can't overlook us. Every producer has someone to take his oil and someone to process his gas."

If there is a problem, if you can call it a problem, that keeps gas processing in the background, perhaps it is the lack of romance. Stripping ethane and propane from a natural gas stream, with ageless technology is somehow, not as romantic as drilling gushers, finding new production behind old pipe or developing a new play or strategic acquisitions.

Of late, however, the midstream sector, has emerged from the background and is getting deserved attention. The reason: A profound transformation of the domestic oil industry — a transformation in which natural gas processing plays a key role.

Some companies are selling domestic assets in order to become strictly international E&P companies. Phillips is selling its gas unit GPM, in part, to raise the capital to join the hunt. Other companies, electing to become stay-at-home energy companies and not join the politically risky and expensive hunt for foreign oil, are gobbling up assets in all energy sectors to realize profit from the entire energy chain, including gas processing. In other words, we are seeing oil and gas companies becoming domestic "energy" companies.

This has led to mass consolidation within the midstream industry. When GPM is sold, it will be the biggest midstream deal in history. "Mega mergers in our sector are not anywhere close to an end," said Tim Cashon, with LG&E. "We have not seen the end of consolidation in midstream."

Gas processing: A high impact industry for Basin

I don't know why it took so long, but here we are. Welcome to our first gas processing edition.

Gas processing, as we have mentioned, is one of those businesses that makes few headlines, but has an impact far bigger than its image.

The employment impact in the Permian Basin is very big, with 33 gas processing companies who own 63 plants. Some of those plants, like the Goldsmith plant, have just under 100 employees. The Western Gas Resources plant at Midkiff, until the EPA inflicted it with a worse case scenario, employed a small community in a tidy nearby camp.

The total number of plant employees in the Basin is probably in the thousands, and that does not include executives, marketing people, gas buyers, and pipeline employees. In the final tally, gas processing accounts for a lot of jobs and paychecks in the Permian Basin. Moreover, they are relatively secure jobs.

Pitts

In New Mexico, all but four of the 21 plants in the state are in Southeast, New Mexico. On this side of the Basin, West Texas, accounts for about 25 percent of all Texas gas processing capacity.

The natural gas processing (midstream) industry also provides significant income to local producers for drilling more wells and paying employees.

In the larger picture, the midstream sector provides the raw feedstocks that go into the petrochemical industry to make more products than a sensible man should know about, and the propane fuels used so widely in rural areas. The list of products ranges from cosmetics to automobiles, and life in America would look a lot different without it.

So why does such a critical industry command so few headlines? Perhaps because of its technical nature — because processing involves ethanes, butanes, propanes and other chemical-sounding things that turn most of us off. You will note that petrochemicals are another sector that make few oil and gas headlines.

I must confess, I know far less about these sectors of the industry than I ever let on, because it takes a lot of "C's" and "H's" to describe the products.

But thanks to the help of some good friends, we were able to piece together this gas processing section which we hope sheds some light on the industry in the Permian Basin, probably one of the hottest and most prolific spots in the nation, when it comes to gas processing.

MERGER / May result in smaller-than-expected divestitures

(from 1)

The European Commission is expected to insist that the new company end Mobil's refining and marketing joint venture in Europe with BP Amoco and reduce its stake in Germany's largest natural gas company.

In the United States, analysts expect government-ordered divestitures will be minor because Exxon and Mobil do not dominate the oil industry the way their parent, John D. Rockefeller's Standard Oil Co., did a century ago.

Together, the two companies controlled just 1 percent of the world's oil reserves in 1997 and only 12 percent in the United States, Jay Hakes, head of the Energy Information Administration, told lawmakers earlier this year.

At the beginning of this year, the two companies controlled less than 12 percent of the nation's refining capacity. In 1997 — the last year for which the government has numbers — the companies claimed only about 9 percent of the nation's branded gasoline stations.

The market capitalization of the new company, while still a hefty $280 billion or so, would only be slightly more than half that of software giant Microsoft Corp.

Officials at the Federal Trade Commission have identified the refining business along the Gulf Coast as a key concern. Nearly half the nation's refining capacity is located in the South and Southwest, mostly along the Texas and Louisiana coasts, supplying gasoline for the South and much of the East.

"It is vitally important for nearly all of this country east of the Mississippi to maintain a competitive Gulf Coast refining market," William Baer, director of the FTC's Bureau of Competition, said at a hearing in March.

Exxon operates refineries in Baytown and Baton Rouge, La., while Mobil has a refinery in Beaumont and operates a fourth facility in a joint venture with the Venezuelan state-owned oil company in Chalmette, La. Together, the two companies control about 18 percent of the refining capacity in the region.

Because of that concentration, many refining experts expect regulators to force the companies to sell one of the Gulf Coast facilities.

MIDSTREAM / Industry changes underway

(from 1)

The consolidation movement has been spurred by two events. One, as Texas Railroad Commissioner Charles Matthews points out is the "disconnect" of the natural gas commodity from oil. Natural gas has now found its own legs, and its own price, and that has caused a lot of new things to happen. When oil prices crashed in 1998, gas processing was impacted, but not as severely because natural gas prices were no longer tied to oil prices.

Two, deregulation of the electrical power generation business has created strong links between natural gas and the electricity industry. Electric companies are becoming gas companies to fuel their generation needs, and some gas companies are turning their gas into electricity to sell. Cogeneration plants are also an added dimension the domestic energy market. This is a new industry trend that is not fully developed, and is still undergoing manipulation. It will be impossible to consolidate assets, and diversify into different energy sectors without dealing with the midstream industry.

Consolidation is now rampant among gas processors, and where it shakes out is anyone's guess. New trends and links, implicating the midstream business, are evolving almost weekly, said one executive.

"In the new energy era, a lot of companies are going back and redesigning themselves. Instead of focusing on a core segment as specialists, they are becoming integrated one-stop, do-it-all energy companies. They are involved in production, pipelines, processing, co-gen, marketing, access to city gates, sell gas and selling power. And the are even becoming communication carriers by laying fiberoptic cables in pipeline right-of-ways when new pipelines are built. This allows them to become carriers not only for natural gas and liquids but voice and data carriers," said Tim Cashon.

He predicts the larger domestic players will become totally involved in an effort to capture the full value of all links, and will become much more integrated into energy than the major oil companies.

For many years gas processing was mostly a corporate family affair, most of the companies in the processing business were units of oil companies with petrochemical operations. Phillips would process gas and sell natural gas liquids (NGLs) extracted from gas in the Permian Basin and sell it into its Sweeney facility. Also, Conoco and Arco sell

Hopefully, it will be the start of better things to come.

This issue has a profile of gas processing in the Basin, listing every plant and every owner, thanks to Bob Tippe, editor of Oil and Gas Journal, who was kind enough to allow us to glean from the Journal's special gas processing survey, put together by the magazine's able gas processing editor Warren True.

Jack Brewster, the acknowledged guru of gas processing, and editor of Hart Gas Processing Report, gave us some direction and supplied us with background and insight into the business. Jack and I used to work together on the old Drill Bit Magazine.

For those who read this column and may not know exactly what gas processing does, here is the routine: Nearly all produced gas contain some liquids, such as ethane, butane, propane, etc. Some gas streams are very rich, or high in liquid content and some are almost dry.

Gas plants, which are scattered throughout the Permian Basin, gather gas from gas wells and casinghead gas from oil wells, and process it through the plant to drop out the liquids, which are sold to petrochemical plants and propane distributors. This leaves residue gas which comes out of tailgate of the plant and is compressed into transmission lines to be used as a fuel in homes, factories, commercial businesses and power generation.

The science of extracting liquids from a gas stream, putting them into pipelines and marketing them is as complicated as the marketing of natural gas. Perhaps the complicated nature of the business is another reason the gas processing business does not come to mind that often. As we pointed out, it is a business pretty much void of romance.

Also, we learned this is a closed-mouth industry. Some individuals did not want to talk at all for the record. Others did not want to be quoted. Others had to filter their innocent remarks through corporate communication channels, which takes much too long.

I suspect that all the consolidation within the midstream industry might have something to do with this. Nobody wants to be on the record with an opinion or saying the wrong thing, because they don't know who their next boss is, or how their remarks will be perceived.

This edition on gas processing was a learning experience for us, but we will do it again next year, and hopefully by then we will be able to to it much better.

John Paul Pitts is oil editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

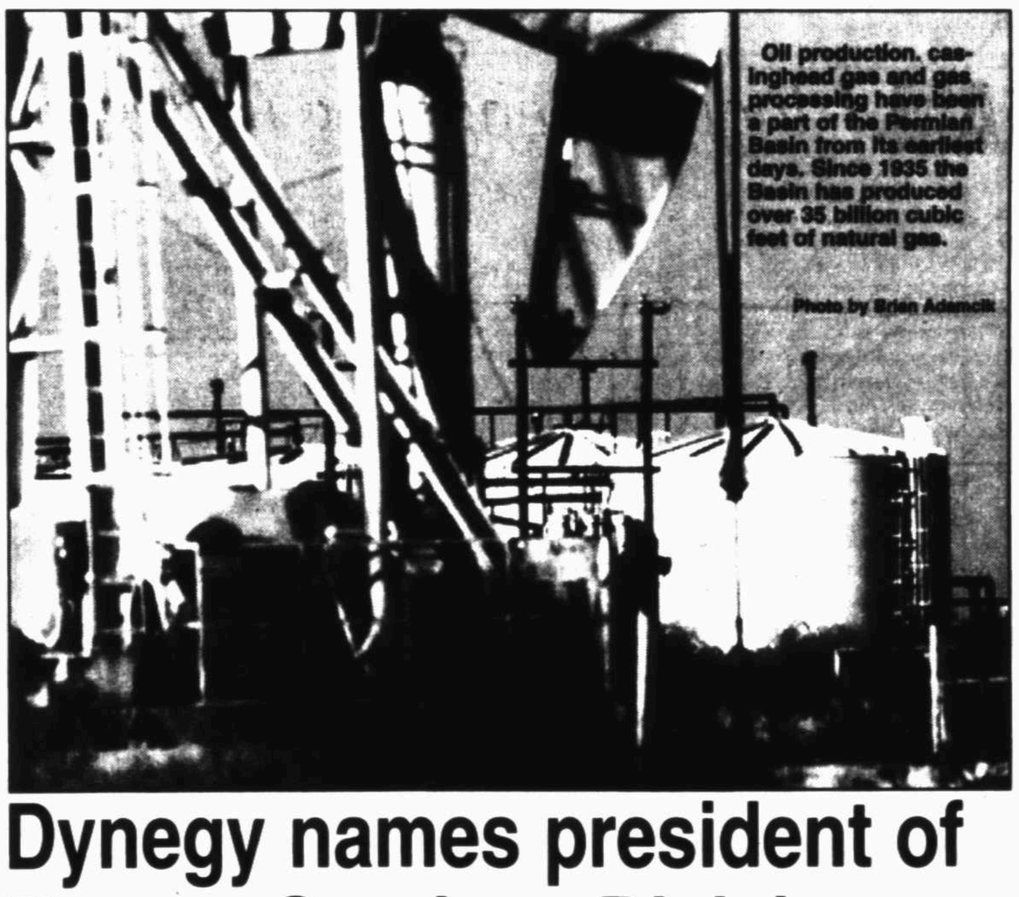
Mitchell Energy to buy Conoco's interest in Jameson plant

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. announced it has signed a letter of intent to purchase Conoco's 50 percent interest in the Jameson processing plant and associated 2,600-mile natural gas gathering system in West Texas. These Mitchell-operated assets are currently held in a partnership jointly owned by Mitchell and Conoco. The transaction is expected to close in 30 to 60 days.

The Jameson plant, located in Coke County, has a daily processing capacity of 65 million cubic feet (MMcf) of natural gas and 10,000 barrels of natural gas liquids (NGLs). Currently, the plant is processing 43 MMcf of natural gas and making 7,500 barrels of NGLs a day.

Allen J. Tarbutton, Jr., president of Mitchell's gas services division, said, "This acquisition adds quality assets at a time when NGL demand is increasing dramatically. The additional 3,700 barrels per day of NGLs that we gain will boost our overall daily production to around 50,000 barrels."

Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. is one of the nation's largest independent producers of natural gas and natural gas liquids.



Oil production, casinghead gas and gas processing have been a part of the Permian Basin from its earliest days. Since 1935 the Basin has produced over 35 billion cubic feet of natural gas.

CHANGE / Midstream sees change

(From 2)

NGLs into their petrochemical operations. Now many of the companies in the midstream business have that as their core business.

Is there room for independent producers in the midstream? Perhaps as individuals, but not as a coop, where producers team together to buy their own gas plant. "I have been asked that question for 10 years," said Robert Anderson, a Midland gas consultant, "but I have yet to find anyone who thought they could produce a justice department anti-trust exemption. There have been companies that have consulted lawyers on the matter with negative response."

Anderson said it was inconsistent that coops could be good for agriculture but not for energy. "There seems to be some fear that these small producers could control price, but I think independents should at least be given the opportunity to try." If anything, Anderson said the fierce midstream consolidation through mergers and acquisitions would prove more harm to the market than coops. "Consolidation is not a good thing. It will bring about a lessening of competition. With more consolidation, producers will see fewer offers. It will not be good for getting best price in the market."

A factor than counts less heavily in changes to the gas processing sector is technology. While a prime driver in other sectors, technology, has moved slowly in gas processing. Scada technology has more or less improved the accounting, tracking and distribution in the gas processing, but many gas plants are still operating on technology installed in the 1940s and 1950s. Reciprocal compressors are being traded for turbines, and within the past five years a number of plants have replaced the old lean oil absorption plants with cryogenic facilities, thereby extracting a higher percentage of liquids, especially butane and propane.

Midstream technology. Technology not moving that fast. No new earth shaking technology on the boards. The marketing aspect is what counts.

"Midstream technology is not moving that fast. And, there are no new earth shaking technologies on the boards. In gas processing it is marketing innovation that counts," said LG&E's Cashon. LG&E, originally the Hadson Group, has facilities in Lea, Eddy, Martin and Midland counties.

An interesting concept that is helping get costly technology into the market is cost sharing between processor and producer. When GPM put in waste heat recovery at its Fullerton Plant in Andrews County they asked producers to share in costs. GPM will retain all the savings from the technology until payout then pass savings on to the producer.

Western Gas Resources is now in the process of replacing all its outdated compressors. The processor went to producers and offered an economic package that would allow them to payout the compressors. The new, more efficient compressors will result in a big improvement in the gathering and processing end for Western, allowing them to gather more low pressure gas.

"These cooperative efforts are good for the industry," said consultant Charles Kuss. "They will help introduce efficiency into the business."

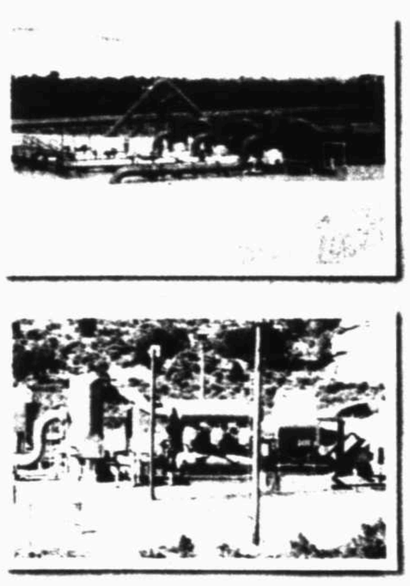
Compress Your Costs Not Your Bottom Line



El Paso Field Services created a vision to extend the productive life of the San Juan Basin and improve gathering operations for the producers. To meet the demanding timeline and budgetary requirements of this project, EPFS redefined the tradition supplier relationship. Compressor Systems, Inc. was selected by EPFS as the turnkey provider of the project. Utilizing the latest in electric and gas-driven compression technology, CSI's design and project engineers built five stations totaling 39,000 horsepower to minimize system pressure and move 632 MMCF/D. Working directly with EPFS, the project was completed 12 weeks ahead of schedule and substantially under budget. It's just another example of how CSI, working for you, can compress your cost– not your bottom line.

NGL prices stick close to oil

Favorable prices expected to extend into 2000

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

When it comes to price volatility, NGLs are in a class by themselves. Not only are they closely tied to the volatility of oil prices, NGLs also have their own built in demand mechanism that impact price.

No one knows where they will end up, but it's a safe to predict they will be somewhere just under oil prices. Natural gas prices, once linked to the bottom price for No. 2 Fuel Oil, have now disconnected to seek their own level. But not so for NGLs who are still on the same track with oil.

Richard Dunham, Vice President for GPM, says the dual action of higher natural gas and higher oil prices should stimulate midstream activity. "I have never seen NGL prices go down when oil prices were high, but I did see NGL prices go ahead of oil in 1996, because of a shortage in petrochemical feed stocks.

"Rex Gilbreth, an expert on midstream pricing, told the Midland Natural Gas Society recently that NGLs were now tracking oil prices like a shadow. In 1998, said Gilbreth, liquids were 88 percent of crude oil prices. In February of this year, he noted that they were almost 100 percent parity with WTI.

Midland Gas Consultant Robert Anderson said local producers are finally seeing some nice wellhead prices for casing head gas, as it relates to their percent of proceeds for NGLs. Earlier this year, revenues were down significantly, because of low crude prices even though the price for residue gas was relatively stable.

"At this point we are bullish on NGL prices," said Tim Cashon, director for LG&E. "We now produce 22 Tcf and demand is predicted to reach 30 Tcf in a few years. To reach that demand will mean lots of gas activity, and that will mean better prices."

He said he expects to see healthy drilling activity in 2000 as a result of price improvements for natural gas, and said that drilling would bode well for the midstream business. "A lot of producers, still hurting from the oil price crash, will slowly get back into a healthy gas drilling budget. The gas streams will not be as rich as casinghead gas, but the volumes to process will be larger."

'When oil prices crashed, we knew that gas processing was just along for the ride. We realized we were in for the long run, and just had to hold on.'

Tim Cashon,
LG&E Director

He said natural gas was now providing a more stable platform for processors, and NGL prices will stay fairly close, within 75 percent, of a $19.00 WTI posted price.

"When oil prices crashed," said Cashon, "we knew that gas processing was just along for the ride. We realized we were in for the long run, and just had to hold on." He explained that it was not possible to shut down gas plants and reducing the number of people operating them. "We had no downsizing whatsoever during the downturn."

Sarah Voss, a spokesman for GPM in Houston, said the company's high capacity, the highest in the nation, should be good for earnings.

She said GPM is number one among gas processors with 169,000 barrels per day. "The more barrels we process, the higher our revenues. I am not sure, but I think NGL prices have doubled this year." Voss also noted that GPM has one of the lowest cost structures in the business, which will add to bottomline.

George Mitchell, Chairman Mitchell Energy, has noted that it does not take much price improvement to have a significant impact on the bottomline in the midstream business. "A one penny per gallon increase in NGL prices adds $6 million to annual operating cash flows and 8 cents to annual earnings per share," said Mitchell in a recent earnings report.

"If oil producers are in a hopeless situation to control their wellhead price, gas processors are even more helpless," said Kar Ingham, a economist and creator of the West Texas Petroleum Index. He said he expects prices to remain stable into next year, and recovery in all sectors to begin in 2000.

Gas rich areas, such as the Goldsmith field, and the North Cowden will have higher liquid yields as oil production increases on the heels of higher oil prices. Oil prices hit over $26 this week.

GPM sale opens a can of questions

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The nation's number one midstream company is on the market and that has left a big hole of uncertainty, waiting to be filled with answers.

Why is such a prize asset being sold? Who will buy them? For how much? And, what new restructuring and stategies will arise out of the sale? Will the company and most of the employees remain in tact, or will it be broken up and sold to "maximize assets."

The gas unit of Phillips Petroleum since the late 1940s, GPM (it stands for Gas, Processing and Marketing) was formed as a separate entity in 1992. Today, it is the largest producer of Natural Gas Liquids (NGL) in the nation and according to Hart Gas Processors Report, has occupied that rank for the past three years. When it is sold it will be the largest ever gas processing transaction.

According to GPM, about 40 percent of those NGLs come from West Texas and 20 percent from Southeast New Mexico, making the rich gas streams of the Permian Basin the largest source of NGL, and GPM the number one NGL seller in the Permian Basin.

The company is also a major Permian Basin employer, with 500 total employees in the Permian Basin including over 100 in the Midland office.

Talk to anyone employee, customer or competitor and they will tell you that GPM is one of the best run midstreams in the nation — probably the best. It is aggressive in its business strategies, focused on service, and the force to be reckoned with in gas processing. "Don't use my name," said the vice president of a major competitor, "but I can tell you they do a lot of things right."

So why sell the King of Gas Processors? In an Associated Press story, Phillips Petroleum said the sale was part of an effort to raise capital for an aggressive E&P program that would double reserves.

News that Phillips intended to put GPM on the block came after rumors earlier this year that Chevron might acquire Phillips. The news caused Phillips stock to jump 5.2 percent in a single day, but when that supposed merger did not pan out. Phillips announced it might sell GPM and other assets.

A pumpjack in the Goldsmith field, frames the Goldsmith gas plant in the background. The plant is GPM's biggest in the Basin.

The Wall Street Journal reported that the Bartlesville, Okla.-based Phillips Petroleum had been "scouting" around for a partner, for a partner about four times the size of Phillips. That would include Chevron.

At the same time a research company issued a report which concluded favorably for the merger: "We believe Phillips would provide critical mass to Chevron's international chemicals operations," said a research note from Matthew Warburton of Warburg Dillon Read on the potential acquisition of Phillips by Chevron.

Jack Brewster, editor of Hart Gas Processors Report, and recognized authority of gas processing, speculates that the plans of new Phillips Chairman Jim Mulva to gain economy of scale might include a Unocal-style strategy to shed refining and other assets to become a super E&P company. As good as it is, GPM is one of those assets

What are the assets of GPM? All totaled, GPM operates 15 gas plants with one other operated by a co-owner, giving the company 1.7 Bcfd of capacity. The company also owns 29,000 of gathering lines. Daily output includes 1.3 Bcfd of residue gas and 160,000 barrels per day of NGLs.

For the Permian Basin, GPM lists the following plants Goldsmith, Fullerton, Spraberry, Martin County and Benedum in West Texas, and the Linam Ranch, Eunice, Artesia and Zia plants in Southeast New Mexico.

The Permian Basin anchor is the Goldsmith plant. Built in 1937, it launched Phillips gas business in the Basin and today is GPM's number one NGL producer with 21,590 barrels per day in 1998.

The plant utilizes gas from 276 producers connected to the 2,193 miles of gathering lines in the Crane and Goldsmith gathering systems. Residue gas from the plant goes into the El Paso Natural Gas pipeline, and NGLs are delivered by Phillips pipeline to Phillips Refinery at Sweeney, Texas for fractionation.

The 62-year old plant remains the company's top NGL producer, in part due to a complete $40 million modernization in 1995, that greatly improved plant extraction sysems. The makeover replaced 29 old reciprocating compressors with two turbine engine compressors, and a new control room with an automated Distribution Control System.

Still the plant is second in capacity to the Linam Ranch (175 MMcfd). Third in the Basin in 100 MMdfd plus capacity is the Eunice plant, which can handle 105 MMcfd. Smaller plants include Fullerton, 65 MMcfd; Spraberry, 60 MMcfd; Martin County, 10 MMcfd; Benedum, 37 MMcfd.

Other assets are located in the Austin Chalk, Texas Panhandle and Oklahoma. In the Austin Chalk, GPM operates the Giddings plant (90 MMcfd) in Fayette County and the Quarry plant (75 MMcfd) in Washington County.

The company's largest plant for capacity is the SherHan plant (250 MMcfd) in Hansford County in the Panhandle. Other panhandle plants include Rock Creek (165 MMcfd) in Hutchinson County and the Dumas plant (60 MMcfd) in Moore County. The Rock Creek plant with 18,300 barrels per day of NGL is second only to Goldsmith in output.

In Oklahoma, GPM operates three 100 MMcfd plus plants. The Kingfisher (165 MMcfd) and Okarche (152 MMcfd) plants in Kingfisher County are the largest, with the Mooreland plant (135 MMcfd) in Woodward County coming in last.

Gas marketers say the large Permian Basin position of GPM will be a factor in the valuation of the company, because of the richness of the gas here. Spraberry gas averages 6-7 gallons per Mcf, with some areas going as high as 10 gallons. Panhandle and Oklahoma gas, however, is only 3-4 gallons, per mcf.

GPM estmates the value of all these assets at approximately $1.1 billion.

What does Phillips expect to get for GPM? Hardly anyone we spoke to had an opinion on this, except for Jack Brewster. He noted that Mulva had metioned he would like to get $3 billion for GPM and other assets. "That," said Brewster, "brings up the question of what other assets."

Brewster, however, has devised some formulas and multiples and crunched some numbers and concludes GPM is worth about $2.4 billion. Given that kind

Yates gas still eludes profitability

Despite numerous attempts still no commercial combination

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

A number of ventures have tried to make the nitrogen-laden Yates gas of Andrews and Gaines counties commercial and profitable, and all have failed.

The latest project was a venture between Nitrotech and CMS Energy, in which a nitrogen rejection plant employing state-of-the-art technology was to gather the low Btu gas at about $1 per Mcf, process and deliver clean Yates gas into a pipeline at pipeline prices somewhere above $2.

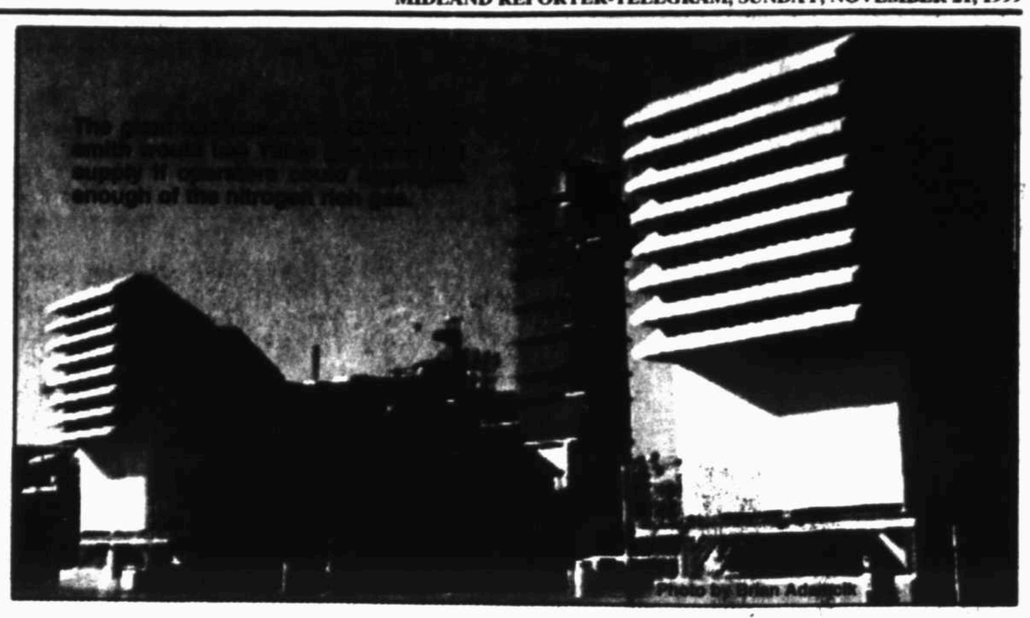
"Nitrotech just could not acquire enough volume, and did not see positive drilling results," said Charles Kuss, a consultant who was in charge of helping acquire gas. Kuss says the technology was there, but supply and cost were factors in not being able to achieve an economy of scale.

Today the plant, and the gathering system are shut down, and the wells tied to the line have reportedly been sold to Tom Minihan, Big D, Sloan Petroleum and Altura. Approximately 2 MMcfd of the gas from the wells now goes into the GPM plant at Goldsmith, where liquids are extracted and the residue gas, nitrogen and all, is blended into a richer stream. GPM is able to take the gas only because it has a rich enough stream at the tailgate to accommodate the low Btu gas.

GPM had made a marketing effort to acquire the gas as an unprocessed boiler fuel, but was unable to aggregate enough to make it work. The company still has hopes, that someone will increase Yates gas production in the area, to a point that GMP can buy enough to segregate as a boiler fuel for its new turbine compressors.

In the mean time, the Goldsmith plant is making a small profit just on extraction, and the producers selling Yates gas are operating on thin margins.

What keeps entrepreneurs interested in the Yates gas, which is 15-18 percent nitrogen. Simply put, there's a ton of Yates gas in the two county area, along a developed gathering system and it is cheap. In previous deals the wellhead market price for the gas, which has been normally left behind the pipe for lack of a market, was somewhere around $1 per Mcf.



Hanover joins Ziff in Rocky Mountain study

HOUSTON — Ziff Energy Corp., an energy consulting firm, is conducting its first Reducing Field Operating Costs/Best Practices (RFOC) Rocky Mountain study.

The study is evaluating operating costs and practices for various asset classes of producing fields in the Green River and Wind River Basins of Southwest Wyoming. The Hanover Compressor Company, the largest global provider of compression services, will serve as Technical/Operations Advisor for the Best Practices section of the study, which will particularly focus on compression issues.

The Rocky Mountain producing area is the fastest growing lower 48 producing area over the last decade, tripling its gas production. Increased production in Southwestern Wyoming has contributed to this surge in production. The promise of substantial new gas reserves in several key locations indicates that this growth should continue. "Together with Hanover, we can deliver a more definitive evaluation of compressor operating practices, from design to operational performance, for companies operating in the Rockies," said Ziff Energy's Project Manager, Steve Turk (a long time E&P manager with 24 years experience in various onshore gas producing basins including the Rocky Mountains).

Ziff Energy Group has become the leading benchmarker of operating costs and practices for the U.S. domestic producing basins and North America, with extensive field level benchmarking programs for both the onshore oil and gas industry. Its onsohe database

Canadian gas will play bigger U.S. role

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Canada now plays an important role in the U.S. gas market, but is expected to play an even greater role as the demand for natural gas continues to grow in leaps and bounds.

Once thought of as a market competitor that needed to be restrained from the U.S. gas market, in order to prop up U.S. prices, Canadian gas is now viewed as a welcome participant in helping supply a market whose demand may be bigger than supply.

Welcome or unwelcome, Canadian gas is a fact that will impact all segments of the U.S. gas market from price to processing.

A Calgary Natural Gas Strategies Conference, hosted last week by Ziff Energy Group, and including over 375 participants from 17 states and 7 Canadian provinces, took a detailed look at Canada gas production and its role in creating a 30 Tcf market.

Price is expected to be a big factor in stimulating Canadian gas production. Gas prices in Western Canada are reported to be the strongest since deregulation of the industry in 1985, with producer prices more than doubling this year.

There are also a number of major pipeline expansions that will make gas flow more freely into the U.S. Last year, saw the first major expansion in five years. More than 700 MMcfd of capacity was added to the Northern Border pipeline into Chicago, and the TransCanada Pipelines added 400 MMcfd of capacity,

The Alliance pipeline also headed toward the Midwest, and now 65 percent complete is expected to bring 1.3 Bcfd of Canadian gas into the U.S. The $3 billion project is expected to start up in November of 2000.

Also a factor is the Sable Island project, which will bring offshore gas from Canada to compete with Gulf of Mexico producers in the Northeast.

Gas drilling in Canada is expected to reach a high this year, with an estimated 5,900 gas completions compared to 5,374 during the record year of 1994. Gas drilling in the U.S. and Canada is the highest since the 1980s.

There is, however, one compelling question. After the pipelines have been built and the wells drilled, will the natural gas be there? Supply remains the critical concern. In Canada, the concern is ability to fill the alliance pipeline with 1.3 Bcfd before startup in 2000.

In the U.S., the concern is performance in the Gulf of Mexico and developing the potential of other Basins, including the Permian Basin.

Gas prices will have to be high enough to stimulate development, but not high enough to back out natural gas.

To determine the full cycle cost for developing gas in each Basin, the Ziff Energy Group, says it is doing a study that will assess costs through a look at real company performance and broad estimates.

The Ziff Gas Strategy Conference also pointed out that North American natural gas has other fuel competitors to reckon with. Nuclear power, contrary to predictions, has increased to record levels, reversing the trend of the mid-1990s.

Coal is a multi-million dollar fuel business and a force to reckon with in the U.S., following technological innovations that have reduced SO2 emissions by 50 percent over the peak level of 1970s, bringing coal pollution to 3 million tons under the 1990 Clean Air Act.

Higher gas prices also improve the viability of LNG from Northern Canada and Trinidad & Tobago.

The Conference pointed out that supply, environmental regulation, fuel on fuel competition; pipelines, and adequate capital and human resources will be the major challenges in the goal to meet 30 Tcf of demand by 2010 or 2015.

GPM / Biggest sale

of valuation, the next question is:

Who will buy GPM? Brewster offers four names — Aquila, CMS Energy, and El Paso Field Services as candidates, and Enron as a long shot. Strangely, most of those we interviewed mentioned Aquila, CMS and El Paso Field Services, possibly because of their size and ability to pay that kind of price, and possibly because they were parroting Brewster's analysis. We found several, however, who mentioned Duke and Dynegy as possible buyers. Duke, however, says if it is on the list, it is way down the list.

"Whoever buys GPM will have to be a big player, and will have to want to be in the business. At this point I have no idea, who it might be but a look at the record will give you some indidation," said Tim Cashon, director for LG&E.

If they had their way, GPM employees would like to see a large pipeline or utility buy the company. "We want to see the company kept intact," said a GPM employee. Companies most likely to keep the company intact are CMS and Aquila, and to a degree El Paso Field Services, all are looking for a very strong position in the midstream business and would have to keep the GPM organization as is. Others such as Duke or Dynegy who already have a firm position might keep only those parts of GPM that fit their operations and sell the rest, while consolidating GPM management under their umbrella. Needless to say, the first option would be better for Midland.

Midland gas consultant Robert Anderson said any consolidation that reduces the number of companies buying gas would not be good for the Permian Basin. "The more competition there is, the better chance I have of getting a good price for wellhead gas for my clients."

Anderson said whoever bought GPM would need to be a company with a strong interest and knowledge of the business. "A lot of companies have been exiting the midstream business, because this is a complicated business. It is administratively difficult and takes a lot of time and money. A big piece of pipe is much easier to manage than a gathering and processing company."

He mentioned Enron, Texaco, UPR and KN as companies who have recently gotten out of the midstream business. Anderson said gas processing might be a niche for a very large oil and gas producer who wants "to get creative with investment dollars."

STUDY / Ziff Energy conducts Rocky Mountain study

(From 8)

includes 1,400 fields operated by 70 companies. Ziff has completed similar onshore studies in the Permian, Mid-Continent, East Texas, Gulf Coast Onshore East (LA, MS and AL), South Texas, the Western Canadian Sedimentary, as well as Alaska.

The Client companies subscribing to the study met in Denver earlier this year to finalize the scope of the study and identify areas of emphasis. The Clients decided to group the Rocky Mountain assets into five asset classes and to analyze costs within 24 categories.

In addition, the Clients selected compression as the study's Best Practices Theme Topic for a detailed evaluation. Other practice areas chosen for investigation include: chemical treating, automation, artificial lift, and water disposal.

Companies participating in the study will receive confidential, blinded asset-level competitive comparisons versus comparable assets. Delivery is scheduled for fall 1999, in time for 2000 planning.

Ziff Energy Group initiated its upstream benchmarking analysis nearly 15 year ago and is now the leading benchmarker of E&P operations, from its offices in Houston and Calgary. The Rocky Mountain study team, headed by Mr. Turk, includes a number of senior E&P operations specialists with 20+ years of onshore experience.

"We will also hold a full-day workshop later this fall where best practices will be discussed openly and shared among a wide variety of large and small operators," Goodisman added.

...because we know how to spot a good thing.

At GPM Gas Corporation, we're on the spot when it comes to technology. Leading the industry with an extensive electronic flow measurement and radio telemetry infrastructure that covers over 72,000 square miles and 18,000 meters has enabled GPM to provide unique services to natural gas producers. Producers have already spotted GPM's Field Information & Technology Services (FITS℠), as a valuable tool to improve their operations. Yet, we're just scratching the surface of what future services GPM can provide through technology. By the turn of the century, all of our booster sites will be remotely monitored and GPM-operated plants will be run by process control technology. For now, you can spot new ways GPM is providing cost-effective services to natural gas producers on our Worldwide Website, www.gpm.com.

And you thought tranquility was a quality found only in things like horizons, bodies of water, vacation spots or the like. Think again. Are noise reduction, elimination of pulsation and stability qualities you find valuable in a compressor? Those requirements along with the flexibility of multiple staging and re-configurability were important to this customer when they consulted with VR Systems to package four natural gas driven, Ariel reciprocating compressors to handle their main gas plant compression south of Midland, Texas. At completion of the project, VR Systems did more than just meet the customer's technical specifications. VR Systems exceeded requirements with a smooth running package designed to maximize stability and minimize noise. For any customer, long term pipeline stability and the elimination of downtime associated with the replacement of parts translates into cost savings. Whatever your application, call the compression experts at VR Systems for the peace of mind a smooth running compressor provides.

SERVING YOUR NEEDS IN THE OIL FIELD ...AND BEYOND

• Cementing
• Fracturing
• Acidizing
• Coiled Tubing
• Nitrogen
• Plugging and Abandonment

Quality, efficient work delivered through innovative engineering – that's what has made Fleet Cementers, Inc. (FCI) a success in the oil industry for more than 20 years.

FCI has used its many years in the oil fields to perfect its techniques and operations, using workers and equipment to maximum efficiency. This approach has lead to several new equipment designs by FCI, several are patented – that perform jobs with fewer workers, easier preparation and faster than similar companies, without sacrificing quality. And for the customer, this means superior work at minimum cost.

FCI applies its innovative approach to all aspects of oil field services, from drilling a new well to plugging and abandonment of old ones.
