INDIANA IS SCENE OF TRAGEDY; 69 MINERS CAUGHT

SEVEN BODIES FOUND AS RESCUERS LABOR; HALF OF MEN ARE SAVED

(By the Associated Press)

PRINCETON, Ind., Dec. 9.—Rescue crews at noon today predicted that the dead in the explosion early this morning in Francisco mine No. 2 might total twenty. They based their conclusion on the fact that only one half of the 69 men who were in the shaft when the explosion occurred, had been brought to the surface.

REPORT OF OIL FIND NOT TRUE

Rumors That Brownfield Well And Hart Test Come In Are Without Foundation

Despite the fact that rumors to the contrary are being heard from Plainview on the north to Midland on the south the bringing in of an oil or gas well in the vicinity of Brownfield, O'Donnell or Taboka is a report without foundation, The Journal discovered today after making a series of long distance telephone calls. Early today the rumor was current upon the streets of Lubbock and interested citizens besieged the Journal office for information which was subsequently produced following the phone conversations.

Peonage Charge Is Being Probed Here

The rumor first said that the Kincaid Oil and Potash company's Brownfield No. 1, located upon the M. V. Brownfield ranch, 12 miles east from the Terry county seat which bears his name, had been brought in with a show of oil. The Terry County Herald, however, reports the rumor as false, as did Mr. Brownfield, in a telephone conversation with his son-in-law, Roscoe Wilson, a Lubbock lawyer.

Two Children Dead As Result Of Play

The Lynn County News, at Taboka, stated that a party of Taboka people, hearing the report, left early this morning for the Brownfield well but when questioned in regard to the Hart test, the rumor was also refuted. The former chief of staff is back after a five year tour abroad.

The Woman's Daily Editorial By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

PUNISHMENT TOO OFTEN IS PERSECUTION
There is a certain military academy in the United States noted for an iron discipline that rides pretty hard the cadet who has violated any of its laws. Here, as in most schools, there is the unwritten law of the school and the unwritten law of the student. Woe to the one who breaks either. He not only has to suffer the punishment meted out by the school authorities for lapses of discipline but he must bear the stigma of all his classmates besides. Furthermore, a "crime" need not be proved. Let any student be suspected to attach itself to him and he is shunned by the others. This school turns out iron men and fine soldiers. The authorities have probably encouraged a code of behavior toward a culprit that puts little premium on his breaking if it serves its purpose. But why should a home be turned into a military school? Why should a child be kept in eternal disgrace because it has broken discipline? Punishment I believe is prompt and swift. Not retaliation, but a reminder that laws cannot be broken with impunity. It is unfair to the child not to punish him, and to let him grow up with the idea that he can make his own laws to suit himself. But punishment is not persecution. The punishment over, with a full understanding on the child's part of why he has received it, let it go at that. Parents and sisters and brothers who keep on nagging at a boy or girl after he has paid the price of his folly are making a home a place to be avoided and despised. Another thing—in time he will be intolerant of all authority, if authority means only injustice.

THE CHAPLIN CASE

Lita Grey Chaplin, wife of the famous movie star, claims that she has turned down an offer of $2,000 a week for a musical comedy contract because she says her children must come first with her.

Mrs. Chaplin's decision, if it is sincere, is an admirable one, but the remarks the comedian has made about his child-wife recently do not fit well with her statement.

According to the funny little man Mrs. Chaplin and her mother staged a drinking party in his home recently and in so doing woke everyone in the house then their two children and the nurse. The affair broke up when Charlie forgot to be funny and ran his wife's playmate off his premises.

Ever since separations and divorces—all in word form thus far—have been the principal menu at the Chaplin home.

If Mrs. Chaplin's decision is sincere and she is the kind of a woman she'd have to be to resist such a decision, then her husband is wronging her by painting her as an altogether different kind of person.

But on the other hand, if she is the kind of woman her husband says she is she would probably do anything to children if she could leave them to the tender mercies of a hired nurse and accept the musical comedy contract.

SILLY WILLIE STEVENS

It is a safe wager that the spectacle of "Crazy Willie Stevens" turning the tables on Prosecutor Simpson and proving not only that he was not the dumber of the famous Hall-Mills murder show, but possibly the brightest and shiniest light, was highly entertaining to everyone who read of Willie's little day in court.

Poor Willie! May his day as the trial ground out its dreary, weary, daily reel, Willie enacted the comedy relief in the proceedings. Cameramen focused their lenses on Willie in his photographic moments—caught puzzled wrinkles on his blank brow, the sucking posture of his lips, the child-like incredulity of his gaze.

"Great stuff! Hot stuff!" The stories of the bright reporters were interlarded with references to Willie's over-profane handshaking with one and sundry, his titling, his this and that, America chorled.

How the humorists looked forward to Willie's day in court! What fun they would give the nation as they wrote of this funny thing he did and that funny thing he said!

Then Willie, a gentleman and a scholar, took the witness chair, corrected the pronunciation of the prosecutor, found cheese holes in that worthy's brand of logic and used a sterling brand of logic of his own, in short, did about as much to help the defense as has been done throughout the course of the trial.

The "town dance" shows us that we're funny, not he—and we get a kick out of it!

FORD PRACTICES PROVERB

Henry Ford, stressing the old proverb that "Satan finds work for idle hands to do," announces he will take on 5000 boys between the ages of 16 and 20, put them at men's work, pay men's wages, and see if they don't make shining marks for their employer and themselves.

Ford asks no one to strain credulity by believing he is making the experiment for the boys' sakes alone. It's just good business, he believes, to inject youth into any concern, and if this good business can do another good turn for society, so much the better.

Ford elaborates in great detail—boys get into crime, says he, mostly because they must have something to do. Jobs come hard, and such jobs as there are, pay so little to young boys that they rebel.

Of course, it's true, so true that it seems silly to stress it on Page One, even when a name such as Henry Ford's is attached to the saying!

But how true it is that the most obvious truths in this world, and the ones most universally believed, are the ones not put into practice—generally, because they cost money!

Much of the smart of a smart hat is when one woman sees it on another woman.—Arkansas Gazette.

It may be Jim's turn next to run for governor of Texas for the vindication of Ma.—Arkansas Gazette.

LINES FROM THE Old Masters

The splendor falls on castle walls And snowy summits old in story, The long light shakes across the lakes, And the wild catcatcher leaps in glory.

Blow bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying, Blow, bugle, answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying. O hark, O hear! How thin and clear, And thinner, clearer, farther going!

O sweet and far from cliff and scar, The horns of Elfland family blowing— Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying. Blow, bugle, answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O love, they died in you rich sky, They faint on hill or field or river! Our echoes roll from soul to soul, And grow forever and forever!

Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying, And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying, dying. —A. Lord Tennyson (untitled.)

IN NEW YORK SEE-SAVING and DOWN BROADWAY

NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—It is a strange scene, a strange place. Rows on rows of men and women stand at the daily toll of feeding babies, and a thousand voices of "Mama, Mama, squeak and gibber in the air.

But the food they use is cotton and the babies they are feeding are rosy-faced dolls. With the holidays near, these are busy days for the thousands of helpers of Santa Claus. Artists are employed in the work too, painting in the eyebrows and eyelashes and properly shellacking each doll's cheek.

More than three-quarters of the doll factories in the United States, it is said, are here. Thousands of New Yorkers labor at this task of making Margie's mummies.

Huge machines with special molds turn out the unbreakable heads, which are made in two sections. Each machine is capable of making a half-dozen doll heads in one operation.

The heads are sandpapered and smoothed on buffing wheels. Then they are ready for their bath. A dip into the sizing material makes the doll's head as smooth as the skin of a baby and imparts the ruddy glow of health.

Holes are drilled for the eyes, the rosy cheeks sprayed on. The head, its facial makeup complete, is taken to a circular saw. The top is cut off and the doll's eyes are inserted. Then the head is ready for its wig, sometimes real hair, sometimes silk.

Dolls have followed the styles of humans. Most of the dolls now have bobbed hair, permanently waved in the latest fashion.

Doll wigs are to be rather stiff persons. Their diet then was sawdust, but that is changed now. American dolls have soft, cuddly bodies, plumply filled with cotton.

The stuffing department is where you hear those cries of "Mama, Mama" when they are placed in the bodies and the bodies are moved about by the workmen, the voices give vent to their plaintive wails.

The American doll industry is not as large as some others, but it makes 20,000,000 dolls a year.

The special wood flour used in making unbreakable heads takes about 15,000,000 feet of timber annually.

Thousands of bales of cotton and thousands of yards of cotton and silk fabric go into the making.

And the smiles the thousands of skilled workers will bring on Christmas morning will stretch, end to end, across the land.

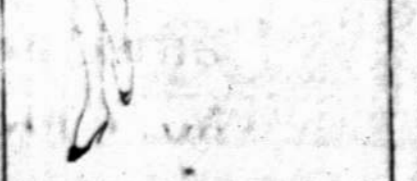

GILBERT SWAN.

WASHINGTON LETTER

STATES RIGHTER RITCHIE BUSY GROOMING SELF AS DEMOCRATIC MOSES

BY RODNEY DUTCHER NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Among those distinctly not insensible to the Democratic party's screaming need of a Moses to lead it out of the wilderness in 1928 is the Hon. Albert C. Ritchie, governor of the Maryland free state.

All the experts seem to agree that the Democrats' important requisites are:

1—A presidential candidate who can make an agreeable compromise man if the Al Smith and W. G. McAdoo situation arises again at the next national convention, and who will have nothing serious the matter with him which would tend to alienate a decisive number of votes.

2—A fighting, substantial and constructive program which will promise the country something it wants and look appreciably more attractive than the administration now being furnished.

Ritchie and his friends have felt for a long time that they could supply the first of these necessities and now Ritchie himself is stepping up to the plate with his idea of the second.

The governor again is trotting out his favorite issue, which is state's rights.

But the most important feature of the matter is that the state's rights issue, in the opinion of most of its friends, is closely intertwined with prohibition.

Ritchie's most concise presentation to date of the platform on which he would like to run as a presidential candidate was made in his recent speech at Chicago, where he attacked "excessive federalism."

Obviously encouraged by Democratic gains in the congressional elections he may reason for hope that "political hypocrisy, cowardice and buncombe" were about to make way for an honest, vigorous and comprehensive Democratic program.

Too much government in business, injured business and crippled the free enterprise of men, he held and government should keep hands off business as long as business kept hands off government.

According to Ritchie more than 40 federal agencies continually are injecting themselves into private business—40 nuisances, according to Ritchie.

Ritchie's prospects at this time seem to depend in large part on whether his party will accept a "wet" candidate, although he officially might be wetter or dryer or either party finished making a candidate of him.

The uncertainty as to how the prohibition issue will shape up in 1928 tends to discourage much speculation about either a very "wet" or very "dry" possibility, but although Ritchie has been discreetly silent there seems little question that he has been bitten by the presidential "bee."

On the surface, his advantages seem to be that he is "wet" has a good record of service and re-election and is considered "acceptable." His disadvantages are that he is "wet" is a bachelor and comes from a state with a small electoral vote.

Modern improvement has made it possible for many a man who was born to be hanged to escape by way of the electric chair.—Panscutawney Spirit.

The theory has always been that there's small, if any, choice in rotten apples, but one of our prominent orchardists informs us in his serious way that the Kieffer pear is markedly superior to the Duchesne.—Ohio State Journal.

FARMING THE FARM

It is a noticeable fact that those who have the most to say about the trial of life on the farm are nearly always those who do not live on the farm themselves. Farm folks receive more sympathy and ask for less than any one in the world. During a few months in the year the hours are long and it is necessary to "keep stepping" it is true, but one rarely hears the person who is doing this complain at all of farm life.

Newspapers that do not serve the public and labor for the public good are doomed to failure, even though they may have great financial or political groups behind them. It has been proved over and over again that what a paper serves the common good rather than special interests, it cannot succeed.

SAINT AND SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN COPYRIGHT 1926 NEA

To Faith it seemed that that gay gay rehearsal of the wedding, within St. Peter's beautiful, austere, echoing emmissary, on the eve of Cherry's wedding day, was as binding as an actual ceremony could be.

It was bitterly cold outside, and since there were no services at St. Peter's that day, the church was like a vast, iced vault. Frances Warren and Selma Pruitt, who had sweetly acknowledged Cherry's rather impudent but sincere notes of apology for the scene she had created in their presence were bundled in fur coats.

"You're going to have a fur coat by Christmas," Bob, there in the capacity of usher, along with Bill Warren and George Pruitt, whispered to Faith as she withdrew from the center of the clamorous group after the rehearsal.

"Isn't it heart-breaking to see how proud Mr. Cluny looks?" Faith countered, though the sudden sweep of color into her pale cheeks had answered him mutely. "He tries to walk so-so jauntily, as if he were trying to prove he isn't really old—just in his prime. I'm afraid that strenuous trip to Europe is going to be too much for him. Cherry will want to do everything and see everything, from riding in a Venetian gondola to climbing the Alps, and he looks as if a sudden gust of this November wind would carry him away. Oh, Bob, I hope he'll be kind to him! It's breaking my heart to see him so proud and happy and so determined to be the gay young dog!"

"Let's run away and have an hour to ourselves," Bob's fingers closed tightly around her arm, urgently, possessively. "I'm starving for you, darling. Cherry has kept you so frantically busy that I haven't had a real kiss for days."

"I'll have to tell her I'm going," Faith whispered.

When she edged quietly into the clamorous group about Cherry and the elderly bridegroom, she heard her sister saying, in a high, nervous, excited voice:

"Yes, I'm all packed. Every last one of my seven trunks was checked today, right to New York. Ralph did it himself, the darling." Her golden eyes were lifted fleetingly but with some-thing like shy tenderness to the silver-haired old man who bent so possessively, so yearningly over her. "Two blessed, thrilling weeks in New York and then—Europe! I'm so excited I can't sleep. All of you come over to the house now. Faith has made enough Thanksgiving pies for a dozen families and Ralph has given Mother a case of the most marvelous sherry. Good for her, you know, but she won't be piggy about it."

"I think you ought to go right home and go to bed, darling," Faith tugged gently at the sleeve of the pink coat. "Bob and I are going for a little drive. I'll be home in an hour, to give you a bromide if you aren't already sleeping."

"I don't want to sleep!" Cherry laughed shrilly. "I can get plenty of sleep when I'm a settled old married woman, but this last night—the very last night when I'll be Miss Cherry Lane, I want to dance all night. Come on boys and girls! I've been learning to do the 'Black Bottom' and I can Charleston any one of you under the table."

A quick flush spotted the thin, waxen cheeks of the old man who was going to marry. Faith, her heart throbbing.

Do you remember when the jolly storekeeper used to give a dime to the top of the showcase?

What has become of the old-fashioned jurymen who never lost a case?

Almea may be right and the devil may be the biggest liar but we've seen some formidable runners-up.

Houdini left his books to the Congressional library. Perhaps the congressmen can find in them some way to pass farm relief.

A well turned ankle has turned many a head.

bing with pity, saw his hand tremble on Cherry's shoulder.

"You'll do no such thing, Cherry Lane!" Faith laughed. "Mother's all worn out with excitement as it is and I'm not going to let her be kept awake all night by jazz music and dancing. Mr. Cluny, you'll take her right home, won't you, and give her strict orders to go to bed? You must begin to assert your authority over her. I've found her a handful, myself."

CAMPUS REBELS

BY VIRGINIA SWAIN COPYRIGHT 1926 NEA

CHAPTER XLVIII

With dazed, unbelieving eyes, Judith looked down from the table at the sprawling body of the dean. He lay lumpy against the table leg, feebly striking out with arms and feet. Incoherent cries filled the room, and the girl who had shrieked cried aloud again.

Standing over him was the man who had knocked him down. He was just straightening gray tweed shoulders from the blow.

"Great gods, the professor!" yelled Will Wetherell from his corner by the door. Dr. Doris paid no heed. With a long arm, he swept Judith off the table, so that she lay against his shoulder as limply as a child. Then, avoiding the body of the dean, he strode with her in his arms toward the door. The crowd fell back before him, and Judith caught a glimpse of Eric's bewildered face before they passed through the door into the darkness of the portico.

The professor walked unburdened to his car and placed her in the front seat. He walked around and got in beside her. Judith held her breath and felt the throbbing in her temples.

The silence between them grew heavier as they rode. Judith huddled in her corner of the seat, drawing tightly about her the robe that he had tossed across her knees. The professor gripped the wheel and watched the road and drove. He did not look at her.

They passed the dark fraternity houses, the sunken garden of the campus, the black bulk of the administration building.

A cat ran across their path as they neared College road, and the professor swerved the car sharply to avoid striking it, so that Judith was flung violently against him. He neither spoke nor looked at her.

In front of the Stedway house he stopped and helped her out. They went up the steps side by side, like two tongue-tied walkers in a nightmare.

"I haven't any key," she said at last. "It's in my coat pocket, back at the frat house."

Silently, he rang the doorbell and stood beside her. At length they heard heavy footsteps inside and a voice crying "Wait a minute."

The professor handed her to the doorway, and bowing, left her. Judith stumbled into the arms of the bulky Mrs. Stedway and, extricating herself, ran up the stairs, as the last strands of control broke and let the sobs burst through.

A special delivery letter stood against a perfume bottle on the dresser but after a blurred glance at the envelope, Judith left it alone.

She rose from a tumbled bed an hour later, her body still shaken by dry sobs. The jade dress had been crushed in a mass of wrinkles and one satin slipper lay disconsolately by the bed.

She went to the closet and pulled from its dark recesses her wardrobe trunk and suitcase. Then she dragged all her clothes from the hangers, and jerking out the drawers of the dresser, dumped their contents on the bed.

Working in feverish haste and as quietly as possible, she packed the trunk and grip. There remained the stacks of books ranged on the table and the papers in the desk, and she stood looking at them for a moment. The jade dress clung about her now, limp and soiled from the packing. Her hair had fallen about her face and one chiffon stocking had ripped against the trunk edge.

She glanced around the room. It was stripped of pictures, of cretonne curtains, of all signs of her occupancy. On the dressing table were left only the articles necessary for her morning toilet.

Only the desk and table bore signs of her life in Pendleton. She rushed upon them and with two sweeps of her hand, brushed books and paper into a heap on the floor.

From inside the suitcase, the faint tick of the little dressing table clock went on. After midnight the little blew and the blinds flapped.

At five a faint pink light in the east spread to encompass Pendleton. The sun came up and pried with fingers of light at Judith's window panes. But the blinds were drawn, and, inside, the electric bulbs held their own against the daylight.

Judith, still in forlorn jade silk, stirred from her position across the tumbled bed. She opened heavy eyes and, catching the glare of them, dropped the lids again. The little clock in the suit case feebly struck one bell for six-thirty. There were no movements in the house.

At last, the girl on the bed sat up, shading her eyes with her hand. A glance at her watch brought her to her feet.

The mirror gave back a sorry spectacle. After one look at it, Judith tore off the ruined jade dress, and handling it as though it were the tangible memory of the night before, leaned over the waste basket by the dresser, to stuff it in.

Leaning over the basket, she paused. The special delivery letter that she had ignored the night before lay placidly, still unopened, in the basket. It had apparently slid off the dressing table during Judith's hasty packing.

The jade dress dropped to the floor as she picked up the letter. It was postmarked "Pendleton." The handwriting of the address was not readily familiar. She laid it aside while she put on her traveling dress.

Then, with the letter in her hand, Judith consulted the time table and crept downstairs. While the telephone operator was ringing her number, Judith awkwardly tore open the letter and began to read.

Dear Judith:—You'll know why I've done this, though nobody else does—and you'll be glad, I hope.

"I've left him. I'm going to be happy. He can't reach us. When he first leaves I'm not visiting my people, we'll be well on our way to South America. My dearest has a mining concession there.

"I'll never see Pendleton again—thank God. And I'll never see the dean again.

"I'm afraid this is goodbye to you too, Judith. I'm sorry for that. You've done your best to help me. Though we don't see each other again, I'll not forget—"

"College Transfer Company," said a brusque voice in Judith's ear.

She stammered in bewilderment a moment, then, recalling what she wished to say, gave her orders.

"O. K.," said the man on the wire; "seven-forty-five."

She read the rest of the letter, leaning against the telephone.

"You must have thought me terribly ungrateful of late. There was something I wanted, yet was afraid, to tell you. One when you were to see me, I dared not let you in, for I knew I'd tell you everything. The dean came home that day and saw you. He hates you, Judith.

"I'd forced him to stop persecuting you, and he knew there was some bond between us. Finally, he couldn't stand it. That day he saw you near the house, he told me if he ever saw us together, he'd discharge you out of hand.

"In a way, I was glad to be cut off from you. I knew I would tell you—what I did not dare to tell you, if we continued our intimacy.

"I killed 'Kitty' Shea, Judith. I'm not sorry—but sometimes I've been afraid. And when Eric Waters was accused—I nearly went mad. That's why I got him out of jail.

"He needed killing, and I'm glad I did it, though I didn't really mean to. He'd forced me into his car and was threatening to go to the dean if I didn't find more money for him.

"Out on the Middleburg road, he reached to touch me, and I pushed him and jumped out. I guess the wheel spun around, for the car went slithering off over the muddy bank and I stood in the road, trembling. I didn't go for help. I just tramped back to town.

"I'm not sorry. But I'm writing this so that if Eric is ever accused again, you'll have this letter. I'll be too far away to suffer from it. Thank you, Judith, and goodbye."

The letter was signed "Fruedence Wheeler Brown."

Judith was still staring at the name when someone bounded up the porch steps. To prevent a ringing of the bell that would arouse the house, she opened the door herself. Eric stood before her. He came into the hall eagerly.

"Jude, I've come, at the first possible moment. I didn't want to cause a row by following you last night in the wee small hours.

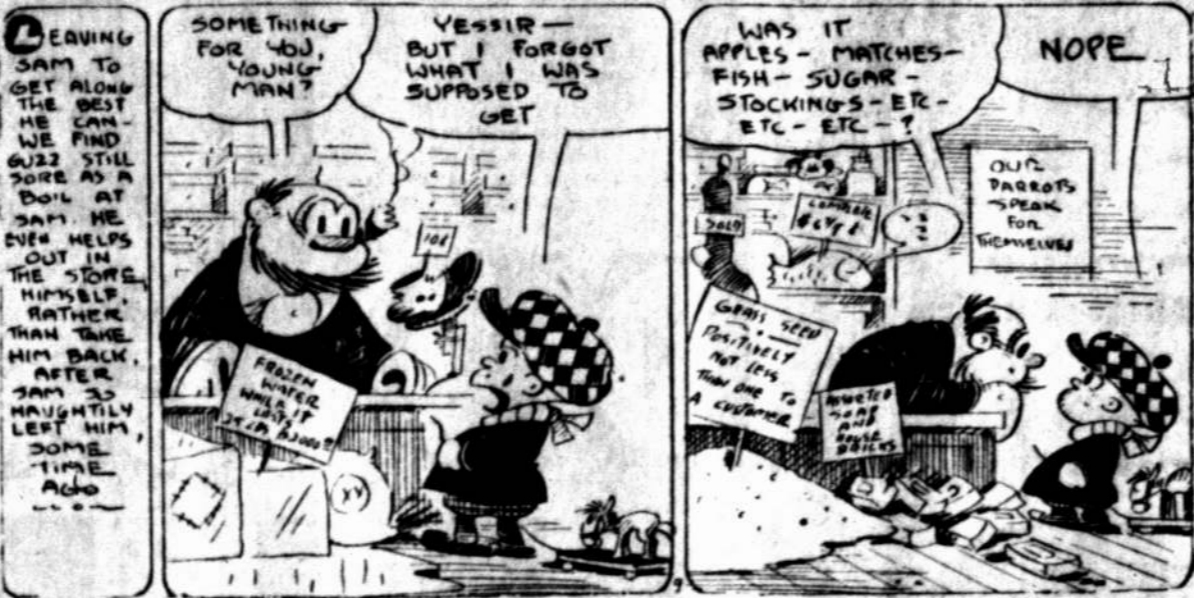

"Frightful mess that, last night. But the triumph was worth it, to me at least. We'll go off and get married today, and neither of us will ever see Pendleton again—rotten hole. Get your things, Buttercup."

He took a step toward her. "Damn nervy for that big school teacher stiff to interfere. I was just getting ready to sock old Brown myself when he stepped in. Guess I can take care of my own girls." He moved nearer.

But Judith's laughter stopped him. "Can you, indeed?" she glanced at the letter in her hand. "You've never done it. Why?" she giggled hysterically. "you didn't even kill Shea for me!"

MERCHANTS IN CITY ARE BUSY

People Spend Money Despite "Calamity Howlers" And Low Price Of Cotton

With the near approach of the Yuletide season when Santa Claus spreads his good cheer throughout the civilized world, Lubbock merchants in general are enjoying a Christmas business that in a measure has surpassed their hopes, despite the fact that the cotton crop, of which this section of the state admits it has too much, is selling at a price that will barely pay for harvesting the yield.

People Spend Money

Practically all the stores of the city, while not overrun with customers as has at times been the case, are comfortably filled throughout each day, and people are spending money. One of the remarkable features of the trading is the fact that many of these people are those of moderate circumstances, or less.

The program of diversification, carried on through the county agent and his co-workers and the chambers of commerce at various points in the county for the past year or two, has no doubt had its effect on the general condition of rural people, who now have come to the conclusion that to depend entirely on cotton for their cash crop is foolhardy.

Other Cash Crops

Many people over this county have during the past year demonstrated that there are other cash crops than cotton, and scores have capitulated on their beliefs while their more or less indifferent neighbors looked on with envy at their success. The cotton crop alone, however, will have brought an estimated $1,500,000 into the county when harvested and sold. Suffice it to say that there is money in the county, and this money is being spent not only at Lubbock but at all other trading points, statements to the contrary notwithstanding. Old Santa apparently will have an abundance of gifts for youths over the county.

WEATHER AIDS COUNTY GRAIN

Highway Maintenance Also Is Facilitated While Cotton Considerably Damaged

The cold and rainy weather of the past day or two has done considerable damage to the cotton yet in the fields in the county but the moisture has aided materially in the prospects for good yields of grain crops, and has been a great aid in maintenance work on highways, it was learned from agricultural and highway leaders today.

A heavy acreage in grain crops has been and is being planted in the county, and the moisture has been of much benefit to this David F. Eaton, county agent said. The cotton crop has been damaged by recent spells of inclement weather until the situation is looked upon by the farmer as a matter of course, and this coupled with the prevailing low price of the staple has left an indelible mark on the mind of the average farmer that will aid in carrying on the diversification program in the future, he said.

Reconditioning of highways over the county has been greatly facilitated by the wet weather, leaving the surface in good condition for drags and with continuation for a day or two, provided heavy rain does not fall, much improvement will be made in highways, it was said at the division engineer's office here today.

Highways in some portions of the county are yet in bad condition due to lakes, but as a rule, improvement work is going ahead rapidly, and highways will be back to normal shortly, it was said.

Firemen Improving Station Interior

Lubbock firemen, while never anxious to make a run to a blaze, were doubly less anxious Wednesday and today, for the interior of the station is being treated to a new coating of paint following a general scrubbing given the floor and walls of the building the past day or two.

Luckily no call has been registered at the station during the work and although the boys have labored under constant fear of an alarm, their work of improving the building has gone on unhampered. Another day or two will see a big change in appearance of the station, inside for finishing touches are now being put on.

Work Goes Ahead On Slaton Highway

Construction work on state highway No. 7 between Lubbock and Slaton will probably be completed soon after the first of January, it was said in highway circles here today. The dump has been completed with the exception of smoothing, except for a little over two miles.

The highway is still closed to traffic, and autists are warned against its use. The dump is very rough in places and with present weather conditions, is dangerously slippery.

Sammons and Allen Now In New Office

The real estate firm of Sammons and Allen, which has been located in the Merrill hotel building, is now about straightened out in its new location in the Jones building at the corner of Broadway and Avenue J. P. H. Sammons and Ed Allen are owners and operators of the business, and plan in the near future to add a loan feature, but pending signing of final contracts, no announcement as to details of this would be made today.

Eric looked at her in blank amazement. But someone else was coming up on the scene. They had left the door open, and Dr. Bern walked in unannounced.

He looked at Eric blankly, as though he did not recognize him, then turned to Judith, as if they two had been alone. "I've come—to say good-by, and ask your pardon, Judith. I'm sorry I intruded upon your affairs—it seems as though I've only tangled the more."

"Last night was horrible. But it's over, and it's the end. I'll be running away from that night and all the other wretched memories of Penitence, as long as I live. I guess."

Judith was looking at him as though mesmerized. She made a helpless little gesture with her hands, but the professor did not heed it.

"Where?" she began, but could not finish.

"I'm taking a post as research astronomer at the Yerkes observatory. It's been offered to me several times, but I couldn't make up my mind to leave you. It doesn't matter now."

He was turning toward the door, followed by Eric's sardonic gaze.

"Wait!" Judith was running up the stairs. In a moment she came flying down again, wearing hat and coat and carrying a traveling bag in either hand.

Eric stepped forward, but she walked up to the professor. "Do you please," she said, with a slow smile, "do you please I could dust off the telescope for you, or polish the stars—or something."

Her meaning dawned upon him slowly. "Judith!" he cried, reaching both arms for her.

But she laughed softly and put the bags in his hands.

Eric, watching from the door, saw the rattlesnapping car turn the corner and vanish in a cloud of dust.

"Well, I'll be damned," said Eric. "Someone was laughing softly behind him. He turned. It was Myra. THE END.

Wesley Class Has Interesting Meet

With talks on the importance of fellowship among church men and some of the things that an organization of church men may do, the regular monthly meeting of the Wesley Brotherhood, of the First Methodist church, was held Wednesday evening at the church. A musical program was rendered by Miss Louise Ockler, vocalist, accompanied by Mrs. Manie I. Neal. Hot chocolate and cake were served by some women of the church about 30 men attended.

W. W. Campbell advocated the establishment of a Y. M. C. A. in Lubbock, recommending that the Brotherhood sponsor such an organization and Dean William J. Miller, of the Tech, said that the men of this organization might participate in charitable, civic and other such enterprises. Mayor P. L. Parish talked on fellowship among church men.

ITALO-ALBANIA PACT RATIFIED

Apprehension is Felt Now in Geneva Over Mussolini's Politics Abroad

(By the Associated Press) TIRANA, Albania, Dec. 9 (AP)—The treaty of friendship and security between Albania and Italy, subject of censure in Jugoslavia, has been ratified by the Albanian chamber.

A Belgrade dispatch today said Jugoslavia officials believed Albania would not ratify the pact, thus assuaging the excitement in Jugoslavia.

Unsettling is Felt GENEVA, Dec. 9 (AP)—Unsettling is the future concerning Mussolini's politics abroad, of which the Italo-Albanian pact is regarded by many as a disturbing indication; anxiety over the situation in China and the position of the foreigners there, and a probable agreement with Germany concerning modified suspension of German armaments were the three outstanding features today on the international stage in Geneva.

Officially, the seven foreign ministers gathered here for the league council sessions would say nothing about Mussolini, but the correspondent in a position to say that secretly they are disturbed over the possibility that the duke's patriotic ambition for Italy's development may imperil that world order which the league seeks to preserve.

Action is Vigorous This apprehension rendered more vigorous the council's action yesterday in approving all possible means of strengthening and speeding the operation of the league's machinery in moments of international danger.

Signor Scialoja, Mussolini's representative on the council, warned that the league should not embark on too definite an interpretation of the covenant, as fixed rules mitigated against desirable elasticity. M. Titulesco of Rumania retorted that if the covenant's meaning was not more clearly defined, the whole peace purpose of the league would be shattered.

Stories Of Old West Add Interest To Case

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 9 (AP)—Grim stories of the old west continued to add a dramatic touch yesterday to the hearing in Suffolk probate court where Mrs. Carlotta Cockburn of San Gabriel, California, is seeking to prove relationship to the late Lotta Crabtree that she may share in the former actress' $5,000,000 estate.

For five days counsel for Mrs. Cockburn have been weaving together the story for her life as contained in a score of depositions bearing witness that she was the daughter of John A. Crabtree, brother of Lotta and was born in Tombstone, Arizona, when that town was a wild mining camp in the early eighties.

Present Damp Weather May Not Be Most Popular But It Has Checked Sickness Here, Says Dr. J. W. Rollo

Lubbock people who have a shiver at the weather man for the conditions that have prevailed here during the past several days may take some consolation in the statement of Dr. J. W. Rollo, City Health officer, that this kind of weather has served in a measure to check sickness, of which there is now very little in the city.

A change in weather conditions has a great deal to do with sickness of health, and the present spell has served its purpose along this line. Dr. Rollo said, even though sickness before the spell was what was termed as a minimum.

Expect Little Sickness Now it is probable that very few cases of illness will be encountered at least until after the holiday season, it was said.

A few cases of smallpox and scarlet fever have been under treatment in the city, but they have been under quarantine and well controlled, and no fear is held for spread of the disease, according to Dr. Rollo.

Health conditions in general are the best with contagious diseases very few and with precautionary measures having been taken in enactment of two ordinances regulating the production and distribution of milk and fresh meats—two heavy disease carriers if not properly regulated—little trouble with contagious disease is anticipated for the winter months.

Praises Ordinances Dr. Rollo is high in his praise of the action of the city commission in passing the two ordinances mentioned above and says that they are two of the biggest forward steps taken in many months. Under the ordinances, milk and fresh meats must meet certain tests and requirements before being placed on the market.

Both the ordinances met considerable opposition just prior to and immediately following their passage as city statutes, but this has largely been abated, and the public in general has seemingly come to a realization of the protective measures embodied in the two ordinances, Dr. Rollo said.

PEARSON GRANTED BOND

Joe Pearson, held in the county jail here since Tuesday on a charge of burglary, was granted bond in the sum of $750 in each of two cases, in a preliminary hearing late Wednesday afternoon before Justice W. K. Clark, and was bound over to action of the Lubbock county grand jury.

BORGER FIRE

down and the owner reported the loss of $2,000 worth of diamonds and watches.

City In Confusion

AMARILLO, Dec. 9 (AP)—A block of twelve buildings in Borger lies in ruins today, according to an early morning report here, following a fire which raged along the town's main street for four hours starting about midnight. Damage is estimated at from $125,000 to $200,000. One man was reported injured when he fell, exploding a dynamite cap in his pocket, while fighting the fire. A steam pressure boiler was brought into play in fighting the fire and dynamite used to level buildings in the path of the flames. The fire was brought under control at 2:30 a. m.

The city is in confusion this morning, merchandise and household goods being piled in the streets for blocks, it is reported.

A dozen men were arrested and are in jail on charges of looting stores in the path of the flames.

AMARILLO, Texas, Dec. 9.—Three men are in the Borger hospital seriously injured as a result of a dynamite blast, twelve buildings are in ruins and fifteen men are in jail as a result of general looting which broke out at midnight during Borger's $175,000 fire.

The fire which was first seen spurting across the screen of the Big theater as late patrons were watching the last reel, spread over nearly an entire block. It was finally checked with dynamite when the Big theater, American hotel and Rollers barber shop were blasted.

Jewelry Store Looted

A jewelry store was looted of $2,000 in diamonds when heat caused the plate glass windows to crumple. General looting of merchandise, household and personal effects was soon stopped by officers and guards who made prompt arrests.

The flesh was torn from the thigh of Dick Russell when he slipped on the icy street and exploded caps in his pocket as he ran from a 100 pound dynamite charge in the Big theater he had placed. Russell Hawley, an employe of the Panhandle Light and Power company, is also in the Borger hospital seriously injured.

The third man to be sent to the hospital was Harry Van Cleave, who was knocked unconscious when he stood too near the rear of the theater. All were volunteer firemen. Six others received minor injuries.

The fire was brought under control at 3 o'clock this morning.

K. G. ORMISTON

day. "Whatever the state does in his case has no bearing on mine. I know nothing about him, so what can I say?"

Reporter Finds Him

CHICAGO, Dec. 9. (AP)—The Herald and Examiner and the New York American in a copyrighted story today, said that Kenneth G. Ormiston, missing radio operator in the Alinee Sample McPherson case, has been found by one of its reporters in Harrisburg, Pa. The newspapers said that Ormiston admitted his identity when found in a two room apartment on Front street overlooking the Susquehanna river where he had been living under the name of "Fred Linsinger."

"But," he added, "this is only the beginning. There will be a long, hard fight before I go back to California. Also I feel certain that District Attorney Asa Keyes is not very anxious to have me go back for trial."

Faces Two Charges

Ormiston is charged in Los Angeles with subordination of perjury and conspiracy to defeat justice.

The account said that Ormiston, during the long months in which he had been the object of a wide man-hunt, had been quietly writing for radio magazines, and had recently sold an article which is soon to appear under his own signature in a magazine having nation-wide circulation.

Ormiston virtually was without money. All the personal belongings he had in his bare flat consisted of a brown leather brief case, a black Gladstone bag, a portable typewriter, and a home-made radio receiving set.

Declines To Say Much He declined to discuss any stories which have linked his name with that of Mrs. McPherson. But he was quite willing to talk about anything and everything else.

"I really can't understand," he was quoted as saying, "why it has taken so long for you to find me—or rather for somebody to find me, considering the great number who have been trying. The fact is that I have made no particular effort," he said.

"I have not used any disguises—aside from assuming a different name. And I have not avoided public places. I have been occupying my present apartment for two months."

Detectives Miss Him "Many of the cleverest detectives in the United States have stood close enough to me for a handshake and none of them recognized me."

The reporter asked him if he had had any communication with Mrs. McPherson since he had been sought.

"None whatever," he said. "And that is all I shall tell you on that subject until I have consulted my attorney, Edward H. S. Martin, of Chicago."

DOHENYS TAKE WITNESS STAND

Wife and Son Of Oil Magnate Called Before Jurors To Tell What They Know

(By The Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—How the $100,000 was taken from Edward L. Doheny by Albert B. Fall in a little leather bag was related to the jury in the Fall-Doheny oil conspiracy trial today by the man who acted as messenger, Edward L. Doheny, Jr.

Called to the stand after his mother had testified about her connection with the incident, the younger Doheny was brought under a fire of questions from counsel, who sought to develop not only the details of the transaction but the reasons behind it so far as he knew them.

The wife of the oil magnate-defendant had faced the jury with great poise, and had related calmly how her husband told her of the "loan" to Fall, and how they had torn off the signature of the note Fall gave in return and put it in a safe deposit box at that no-embarrassment might be caused to the then interior secretary in case of Doheny's death.

Note Is Produced The note itself, previously put into evidence, was produced along with the signature and they were placed together and passed around the court room.

Just before she left the stand Mrs. Doheny said Fall never had been at the Doheny home.

There was no cross examination. Young Doheny began by reviewing his naval service in the war under Admiral J. K. Robinson, later the navy's representative in the oil leasing negotiations which resulted in award of the Elk Hills lease to the Doheny interests.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9. (AP)—Mrs. Edward L. Doheny, wife of the oil millionaire who is on trial here with Albert B. Fall on charges of criminal conspiracy took the witness stand today for the defense.

It was to Mrs. Doheny that her husband gave the torn off signature of the $100,000 note given Doheny by Fall, after the oil magnate had sent him the cash in a little black bag while Fall was in the cabinet.

With Fall's name missing from the bottom, the note was presented three years ago to the senate oil committee by Doheny himself, who said he had detached the signature and given it to his wife for safe keeping. It later was found to have been placed in a safe deposit box in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Doheny began her testimony with an account of her place of residence since 1929. She gave her home as Los Angeles.
