Criteria for SSC released

Change in land need could benefit area

From Staff and Wire Reports

Invitations to the Superconducting Super Collider bidding party went out as scheduled Wednesday. Early indications are that the one major change from the preliminary criteria should present no problems, according to the leader of the local SSC committee.

"As a matter of fact, a larger land requirement for more acreage could work to the advantage of the Garden City site," said Ralph McLaughlin, chairman of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce's SSC steering committee.

"Additional land requirements would only serve to accentuate the savings of the lower cost land at our site," McLaughlin added.

The local group is still waiting to receive a copy of the full 75-page invitation from Gov. Clements' office this morning.

The Garden City siting committee had been operating with an estimated DOE need for 11,000 acres — 8,000 acres owned, with right of ways for an additional 3,000 acres, McLaughlin said. The DOE guidelines for proposal writers now mention 16,000 acres.

The Department of Energy set an Aug. 3 deadline for suggested locations for the massive $4.4 billion project.

"Reports are that there aren't any other major changes from the siting criteria we have been using, but all we have to go on at this point is word of mouth," McLaughlin said this morning.

Susan Tonelli of the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission in Austin confirmed that the DOE invitation included that groups submitting proposals will be required to provide a real estate acquisition schedule for providing clear fee-simple title to all lands on which permanent SSC improvements are planned. Elsewhere in the report the DOE says that "the entire Supercollider complex will occupy 16,000 acres of land," she said.

Saxon Pressly, TU Electric Co.'s area economic development representative for the SSC project said that the anticipated average and peak electric loads outlined in the criteria fall within the Garden City group's design parameters.

Reagan fights to sustain veto

■ Related stories — 8D

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan made an extraordinary personal appeal to Republican senators today to sustain his veto of an $88 billion highway bill and spare him from defeat in a showdown with the Democratic majorities of Congress.

With aides and GOP Senate allies unable to find the votes needed to sustain the veto, Reagan's journey from the White House to the Capitol represented a decision to place his political prestige clearly on the line.

"I advised the president I wasn't sure it would succeed," said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

The Senate voted narrowly to sustain the veto on Wednesday, but freshman Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina — the lone Democrat to support Reagan — announced he was prepared to switch his vote.

Sanford's announcement set off a scramble by administration officials and Senate GOP leaders to find an offsetting Republican vote.

Their targets included 13 Republicans who voted to override the veto on the first roll call.

The House, with a large Democratic majority, voted 350-73 on Tuesday to override the veto. It takes a two-thirds vote by both houses to override a veto.

Reagan has been overriden on vetoes previously — most recently on a clean water measure that Congress enacted into law over his objections earlier in the year.

The White House decided to turn the highway bill veto into a test of Reagan's political standing after months of controversy caused by the Iran-Contra affair. Reagan's decision to address Republicans was an indication of the political importance of the vote.

In a concession that Democrats have rounded up the 67 votes needed to join the House in overriding the veto, Dole said he could see "no ray of hope out there" for finding the vote Republicans need save the president from defeat.

Mattox delays deficit payback

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox this morning gave the state a two-year reprieve on paying off its $1 billion, fiscal 1987 debt.

Responding to an official opinion request from Comptroller Bob Bullock, Mattox ruled that the Constitution forbids deficit financing but contains no provisions for forcing lawmakers to eliminate the debt this late in the budget cycle.

Bullock said "The attorney general has answered the constitutional question about the deficit. Now it's time for the rest of the answer and, as the attorney general so capably pointed out, that answer can only come from the Legislature. Now it's the clock, not the Constitution that those in the saddle need to watch."

The attorney general agreed with legislative leaders when he said they could spread the $1 billion debt over the 1988-1989 biennium.

Bullock had said he believed the "pay-as-you-go" provision of the Constitution would prohibit him from approving the 1988-1989 state budget unless the Legislature covered the deficit by the Aug. 31 end of fiscal 1987.

The deficit came about when lawmakers used the so-called "Band Aid solution" last fall in addressing what was then a $3.5 billion shortfall.

Using a combination of budget cuts, temporary taxes and creative accounting techniques in back-to-back special sessions, the Legislature trimmed the deficit to $1.029 billion.

Firefighters rebuilding man's home

The Bright Side

DALLAS (AP) — A 78-year-old man who has been sleeping in a car since a fire gutted his home and took his brother's life will get help from a group of firefighters who offered to rebuild his house.

Louie Watson, 78, could not live in the house until extensive repairs were made, so he has been sleeping in his car since the January fire because he didn't want to go to a home for the elderly.

But last week, city officials persuaded him to move to a temporary shelter, and the Fellowship of Christian Firefighters offered Tuesday to rebuild the home where Watson's 80-year-old brother died.

Firefighter Mike Irvin said he was inspired after reading a news account of the elderly man's plight Friday.

"When I saw somebody in need, it just hit me that I wasn't doing anything off-duty and I knew I could help," Irvin said. "If it wasn't done this way, it wouldn't have gotten done.

"If everything goes right, and I'm sure it will, we're going to completely restore his house," he added. "The manpower is taken care of."

Several dozen of the 300 fellowship members will probably work on restoring the house, said FCF president Ray Seymore.

Seymore said firefighters hope to replace the wiring, cabinets and appliances with donations from merchants once the outer structure is repaired.

"What we are basically trying to do is set it up so he can move back and get on with his life," said Irvin, who has been with the fire department for 20 years.

Watson said he had let the insurance lapse on the house, which he bought in 1962 and paid off in 1975. Both firefighters said meeting Watson increased their desire to help.

Seymore, who has been with the fire department for 27 years, said Watson was "just real happy" when he learned his house would be renovated.

"He had tears in his eyes as he was thanking me for it," said Seymore. "The old fellow just wants a place to live out the rest of his life in peace and quiet."

MISD board elections remain on hold

Elections 87

When Midland County residents close the curtain at the voting booths Saturday they'll notice that elections for one governmental entity are excluded from the ballot.

Although the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustee election was scheduled for this year, current trustees asked for and received a stay on the election until the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans could enter an opinion in response to a prior voting rights lawsuit filed by blacks and Mexican-Americans.

News from the Fifth Circuit Court came late Friday, but there's still no word on when the voters will go to the polls or how many seats will be up for grabs.

The suit, initially filed in 1985 in U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton's court, sought to force MISD to alter its system of electing trustees.

Bunton ruled one year later that MISD's at-large system was "in violation of the Constitution." The judge also prohibited the school district from holding any further at-large elections.

Moreover, Bunton ruled the MISD's compromise proposals for a 4-3 plan (four single-member and three at-large positions) or a 5-2 plan (two single-member districts and the remainder comprised of one district with five at-large members) was unacceptable and "unconstitutional in that it impermissibly dilutes the votes" of the minorities represented by League of United Latin American Citizens and the Black Advisory Council.

That opinion, which found the court-ordered division of MISD into seven single-member districts consitutional, was upheld Friday in the 2-1 appeals court decision.

The majority ruling, written by Judge John Minor Wisdom of New Orleans, rejected school board arguments that the needs of minorities could have been met by accepting either of the two alternatives.

Wisdom wrote, "We hold that the district court was not clearly erroneous in its finding and committed no material error of law."

However, Judge Patrick Higginbotham of Dallas questioned in a dissenting opinion whether blacks and Hispanics could be grouped as a single minority because their numbers are scattered throughout the district.

Higginbotham said "Bunton never considered whether the school board's alternative plans might have been in compliance with either the Voting Rights Act or the Texas Education Code."

Corporation to administer loan fund

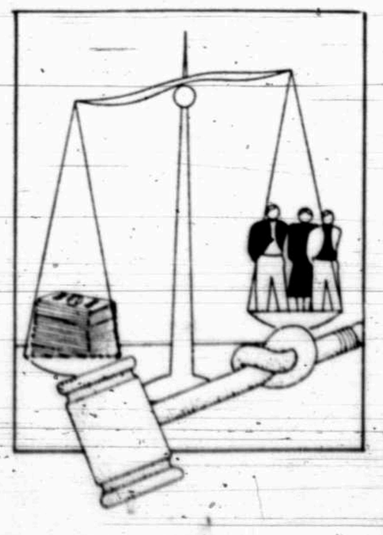

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

East and southside businessmen needing loans for new operations or expansion can apply starting April 23 to the Midland Economic Development Co., a new corporation that will administer a $161,000 federal grant revolving loan fund.

The announcement came during a morning City Hall news conference held by Mayor Carroll Thomas and directors of the new company.

Appropriated by City Council last fall, the money could widen the window of opportunity for businessmen who would not otherwise be able to obtain loans, said Bill Stovall, president of the new corporation and vice-president at First City National Bank.

Tort reform: Value of contingent fee faces stiff argument

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth of a seven-part series on tort reform currently being considered in the Texas Legislature. This segment deals with contingent fees.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Most will agree that some legal fees are beyond the reach of many in society.

The very wealthy can pay for the best legal talent through all stages of the court process and representation is provided for the very poor. However, a great many middle-class Americans cannot pay lawyer's hourly fees and are in fact denied access to justice.

This points up the value of the contingent fee in personal injury cases.

Under the system, rather than receiving a set fee for each hour worked, a lawyer is paid according to the results achieved, receiving 30 to 40 percent of the eventual award to his client. No money is paid before the award is made, and if the plaintiff does not win, no money is paid at all.

Opponents of the contingent fee system, however, are crying foul, saying when an injured person receives a multi-million-dollar award, the attorneys' percentage should decline so the plaintiff gets more of the award.

There are three general criticisms usually leveled at the system. First, it is often said that it creates conflicts of interest between a client and his lawyer because the lawyer is encouraged to hold out for a large award, rather than settle out of court. Second, it is said that it encourages lawyers to file meritless lawsuits. Lastly, it is argued that it provides a windfall to lawyers, since they may receive large fees even when they spend little time on a particular case.

"There has to be some control," said Bill Messer of the Texas Civil Justice League.

"In workman's compensation, for example, we don't allow attorney's fees to exceed 25 percent of the award. Perhaps for the first $200,000 of an award the lawyer can charge a third, and for the next $200,000 he can charge 25 percent, but when it gets up to $10 million, he doesn't keep charging a third."

Messer said regulating contingent fees wouldn't change the amount the insurance company pays a defendant.

"It just insures that more of the money goes into the injured party's pocket," he said.

But the Association of Trial Lawyers of America claims regulations would "discriminate against plaintiffs who can afford only lawyers who are willing to take cases on a contingent basis."

In it's an official statement, the Association said last year that there "is no limit on the fees of defense lawyers. There is not limit on what a wealthy client can pay a lawyer. The complaints about contingent fees come not from victims but from those who must pay the settlements and awards. If a client considers a fee unreasonable, local rules usually provide relief and disciplinary sanctions for an attorney who charges an exorbitant fee."

The Association pointed out that as long ago as 1973, a government study on medical malpractice concluded that "when the amount plaintiff's attorneys can collect is contingent on whether they win a case that will be time-consuming and costly, they're not likely to take on non-meritorious claims."

If we let the street rehabilitation go too long, it takes to much money to catch up," explained Ms. Heck, 55, stating sentiments echoed by Marcum.

Both candidates cited comparison figures compiled by the Texas Municipal League that show Midland as having one of the lowest tax rates in the state among cities of similar size.

Please see VOTE, Page 2A

VOTE

The figures show Midland's tax rate — about 39.9 cents per $100 of property valuation — below that of San Angelo's, which stands at 69.5 cents per $100 of valuation, or Odessa's, listed at 48.9 cents.

"We can afford a bond issue," said Ms. Heck, surveying the figures.

"But the perception of being able to afford one isn't right at the moment there," she allowed. "The idea of not spending money is one that has seized everybody."

Marcum, 44, went so far as to predict an April 1988 bond election in which voters would pass judgment on a $4.9 million issue for street repairs, drainage construction and traffic control improvements.

"I don't think we'll have any choice. We'll be completely out of street funds," he said.

"You can go only so many years, and then you've destroyed the infastructure," he added, voicing support for a spend-money-to-save-money policy.

Both Marcum and Ms. Heck are candidates in at-large voting for which all Midland registered voters are eligible to cast ballots.

Two places are up for grabs in the at-large category, so the pair are virtually assured election, barring any write-in candidacies — which so far have not materialized.

While Midland tire store owner Bill Williams, 51, the sole candidate in District 1 balloting, did not assert an outright need for a bond issue, he supported the idea of presenting the proposal to voters.

"It's something that has to be looked at," said the candidate who likely will fill the seat currently held by David Godfrey.

"There comes a time when you cannot flat out say we have no money to work on streets, to work on sewers, to work on parks or whatever."

While in agreement on the need for a future bond election, the candidates diverged sharply on the extent that city operating costs can be cut.

Williams supported a flat 3 to 5 percent reduction in the city operating budget, with likely reductions coming from staff cuts.

"We still have more people than we need," he said. "We have desks that are being manned by people who have very little to do."

But Marcum asserted that last year's budget cuts — which amounted to about $5 million — were sufficient.

And he foresaw a probable 3 percent ad valorem tax increase to cover loses in state sales tax receipts and city property valuations.

"We're trying to keep the same number of tax dollars," he said.

Frost, flood scar South, New England

Associated Press

Flooding in New England forced people from their homes, washed away a historic covered bridge and damaged three dams Wednesday, while farmers in the South endured a third day of record cold that already had devastated some peach orchards.

Maine Gov. John R. McKernan Jr. declared a state of emergency, allowing application for federal aid and mobilization of the National Guard, as flooding described as the worst in a half century increased around the state.

"The water in a convenience store is right up to the ceiling, which I'd say is eight to nine feet off the ground, and it's still rising," regional police and fire dispatcher William Murray said of a store outside Plymouth, N.H.

The flooding was caused by melting snow and a storm bearing 50 mph wind and as much as 5 inches of rain that cut power to thousands Tuesday after dumping more than a foot of snow in the Ohio Valley.

On the Plains, Kansas National Guard helicopters hauled more hay to cattle snowbound by last week's back-to-back blizzards, and some roads were still blocked by drifts up to 15 feet high. Schools reopened Wednesday in adjacent areas of eastern Nebraska that were hard hit by the snow.

At least 27 deaths have been blamed on the weather since the first of the storms hit the Plains last week.

Low temperature records were broken or tied Wednesday in at least 40 cities from Texas to Florida and north to Maryland. Atlanta dipped to 27, toppling a record that had stood since 1919, and Macon, Ga., hit 29, its coldest on record for the entire month. Key West, Fla., the southernmost point in the continental United States, had a record 59.

Maine's Piscataquis River ripped away three gasoline storage tanks, each containing an estimated 10,000 gallons of fuel, in Dover-Foxcroft and carried them downstream, said Penobscot County deputy Ralph Holmes. He said a bridge downstream in Howland was closed as a precaution.

By early evening, state civil defense officials said sections of more than 125 roads had been closed as major rivers and streams in most areas of the state swirled far beyond their banks. State officials said it was too early to put a price tag on the damage.

At least 250 people were evacuated in Maine, including more than 100 moved from a nursing home in Canton by National Guard trucks, said David Brown, director of civil emergency preparedness.

A 75-foot section of earth washed away at the edge of a retaining wall near International Paper Co.'s hydroelectric dam in Livermore Falls, Maine, said IP Energy Superintendent Dick Brophy. He said there was no danger downstream.

A hydroelectric dam in the early stages of construction on the Androscoggin River at Lisbon "is gone" said a police officer who did not give his name. He said no evacuations had resulted.

A historic covered bridge over the Piscataquis River was washed away at Guilford, Maine. Central Maine Power Co. cut off power to the area, for fear that live electric lines running over other bridges would be snapped if the spans washed out.

In the state capital of Augusta, City Hall was evacuated and the Kennebec River was expected to crest at 23 feet above flood stage, five feet higher than during the record 1936 flood, the National Weather Service said.

Tonelli said that a 200-megawatt peak electrical load and average demand of 120 megawatt are outlined in the new DOE document. Industrial water demand of 250 gallons per minute (gpm) and peak demand of 2,200 gpm are included as well, she said.

"Those water requirements are inline with the numbers we have been expecting and the water authority will have no problem supplying the needed volumes of water and more with completion of the Stacy Dam project," said John Taylor, president of the board of directors of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Groups seeking consideration of a proposed site must submit an eight-volume proposal of detailed financial; tunneling topographic and geological; environmental; hydrological; and social, demographic and economic information on each site, said DOE spokesman Jeff Sherwood.

Suitable geology, minimal environmental impact and adequate regional resources such as airports, railroad lines, highways, a skilled labor pool, housing and medical services, educational and research activities and cultural resources will rank ahead of the free and suitable land and water and electrical criteria, Sherwood said. At its peak, construction of the facility will require 4,500 workers.

Saying community support is essential, the department also specified that state and local governments will have to agree on a single set of zoning ordinances, building codes and health, safety and environmental regulations for the project.

The department said cost considerations will be considered and that any financial contributions offered by the proposers will be considered as appropriate. However, it said primary emphasis will be placed on the technical criteria.

The eight-volume proposals must be in the government's hands by Aug. 3. The sites that pass the screening process will be submitted in September to an expert panel established by the National Academy of Sciences and the National Academy of Engineering.

State governments are expected to be the primary bidders for the project location, but the Energy Department said it will also accept proposals from multi-state groups, counties or groups of counties and corporate or private landowners. Each proposer can submit more than one site, but each must be submitted as a separate proposal.

The NAS/NAE panel is supposed to give the department a short but unranked list of "best qualified sites" by December. From that list the Secretary of Energy will designate a preferred site by July 1988, with the final site selection coming the following January.

The department said its goal is to select a site that will permit the highest level of research productivity at a reasonable cost of construction and operation and minimal adverse impact on the environment.

The collider would consist of a circular, 52-mile racetrack-like tunnel in which atomic particles traveling at nearly the speed of light could be studied.

Aimed at answering the most fundamental scientific question of all — What is matter and how is it created? — the particle accelerator will be housed in a nearly circular tunnel 10 feet in diameter.

When completed in 1996, the supercollider will become a world center for high physics research, with envisioned annual budgets of $270 million, 2,500 permanent jobs and 500 visiting scientists on hand at any given time, and no pollution.

Using 10,000 superconducting magnets in the tunnel, the facility will guide and accelerate two beams of protons in opposite directions through the circular tunnel at nearly the speed of light.

The beams will be made to collide head-on with an energy of nearly 40 trillion electron volts. The collisions are expected to yield new subatomic particles that will be analyzed in the quest for determining what is matter and how is it created.

Energy Department officials said 45 states have expressed interest in seeking the project, although fewer than a dozen have been identified as having the "strong" high physics research facilities needed to support it.

In laying out the qualification criteria, the Energy Department said the 16,000 acres of suitable flat land needed for the project will have to be located entirely in the United States and donated to the government.

No restrictions are being placed on most of the 200 square miles of land that will be encricled by the 52-mile tunnel, except for what will be needed for four large research halls for conducting experiments, a series of injector accelerators and several support buildings.

General right of way access across the area encompassed by the underground tunnel ring would be required of the final site, but no other restrictions are included in the proposal, the TNRLC's Tonelli said.

MISD

MISD trustees won't say whether they will appeal their case to the U.S. Supreme Court or ask the Fifth Circuit to re-hear arguments. A closed-door meeting was scheduled by trustees at 4 p.m. today to discuss those options.

Midland attorney Charles Tighe, who represented the MISD in the lawsuit, noted that if the school district decides to appeal its case the election may be postponed further.

The appellate court ruling did not speak to the question of when an election must be scheduled or how many school board members the voters would have to choose.

Prior to the stay, Bunton ruled that the school district have elections for the two minority districts. The remainder were to be divided into five additional single-member districts elected to staggered terms.

The federal Community Development Block Grant funds must be used in the area specified by federal guidelines, Stovall said. Generally, that area includes the area east of Big Spring Street and south of U.S. Highway 80.

In addition, recipients must create at least one job for each $20,000 they receive, he said.

Donations from the private sector may increase the amount of the revolving loan fund, he said.

Loans may be as small as $5,000 or as large as $140,000 and are intended to provide an incentive for further bank involvement, he said.

Recipients must use the money, which will be paid back with interest like any other loan, to leverage a larger bank loan, he said.

Successful applicants will provide equity equaling 10 percent of their proposed project. A bank must provide at least 50 percent of the remaining funds, with the CD funds providing the rest, he said.

Many Midland businessmen already are aware of the fund and have shown interest in participating in the project, said Nancy Vickrey, city economic development coordinator.

"We've had a lot of phone calls — everything from restaurants to cleaning services to a feed mill," she said.

Serving as corporation's vice-president will be Sam Flores, a RepublicBank First National Midland vice president and president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Also serving on the economic development company's board will be Ron Moore, an IBM systems analyst; Jeb Hughes, a United Bank vice president; Manuel Carrasco, a Midland businessman and chairman of the East Side Community Development Task Force, and Gary Douglas, a Midland attorney.

A seventh seat on the board has not been filled yet.

Directors will be responsible for reviewing applications and deciding which businesses receive the loans, Stovall said.

A timetable for development company operations holds that applications will be available starting April 15, he said. Interested entrepreneurs may obtain an application at the Community National Bank, other area banks, area chambers of commerce, Midland College and City Hall.

The company also will sponsor a May 2 workshop on filling out the applications at Casa de Amigos.

Because federal community development funds provide the bulk of the revolving loan money, applications are somewhat more complicated than a regular loan application.

Prospective applocnts may call 683-4281 for further information.

TORT

The St. Paul insurance companies have found that over the last 10 years claims are just as frequent in states that cap contingent fees as in states that do not.

A recent American Bar Association report found the contingent fee system "appears to be a resonable method of screening out claims not appropriate for litigation."

And Medical Economics reported that an American Medical Association task force, said recently that regulating contingent fees "may not reduce the number or severity of lawsuits."

Midland Attorney Edward Garza said "It's too expensive for an attorney to file a suit that doesn't have any merit."

With all the expenses incurred for depositions, private investigators and expert witnesses, he said a plaintiff's attorney "can't afford to have his suit tied up in the courthouse."

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman, who spends half of his workday defending lawsuits against county government, said juries "aren't allowed to consider fees nor do they know what they are, so I don't see why it would enter in to (tort reform legislation)."

Another key feature of a proposed tort reform package aimed at trial lawyers and plaintiffs is changing the collateral source rule so juries know if the plaintiff has other sources of income or compensation, such as social security or health insurance, so they can accurately judge what it will take to reimburse him, Messer said.

Jessica Shahin of Public Citizen, an anti-tort reform group, claims it is patently unjust to make the manufacturer of a defective product or the perpetrator of a negligent act the beneficiary of the victim's insurance policy.

"Elimination of this rule would shift costs which should be paid by the defendant to be paid for by benefits which have been bought by the plaintiff," she said.

But Messer said a change is needed so "juries know if the plaintiff has other sources of income or compensation so they can accurately judge what it will take to reimburse him."

Reformers also want to reform the current venue statutes to prevent forum shopping cause suits to be filed in the county where the injury occurred, or in the county in which the defendant resides or conducts business.

"We have a very serious problem of venue shopping in Texas," said Messer. "You've got cases from all over the state being filed in Matagorda County for that reason."

Reagan's decision to meet with Republican senators was reminiscent of a session on Capitol Hill with House Republicans in December 1985, at a time when a GOP revolt threatened to scuttle his tax overhaul plan. The plan was resurrected the following day and the bill was later passed.

Reagan said little to reporters in advance of today's trip to the Capitol. "I never talk about win or lose before the game," he said when asked if he thought he could sustain the veto.

Reagan made his decision to meet with Republicans as GOP Whip Alan Simpson of Wyoming conceded "we're still hunting for the missing link" in an effort to sustain the veto.

One Republican aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the possibility of a visit to Capitol Hill had been discussed on Wednesday, but was dropped then for fear that the political damage to Reagan would be too great should the veto be overriden.

With Reagan's visit set for late morning, there was no word on when the Senate roll call would be held.

On Wednesday night, following a day of tense maneuvering on and off the Senate floor, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said, "Every Democrat is holding firm and 13 Republicans have withstood tremendous pressure from the White House."

The Democratic count for today's expected vote included Sanford, the 69-year-old freshman senator.

Senate GOP leader Bob Dole of Kansas conceded the president's initial victory, on a vote of 65-35, was in doubt. If the vote were held immediately, the result would be a 67-33 tally that would override the veto, he said.

But with Reagan lobbying Republicans by telephone from the White House, Dole added wryly, "There's still some effort being made to enlighten some of my colleagues."

At stake was the future of a five-year highway bill that included more than 100 highway "demonstration projects" favored by lawmakers, as well as a provision to permit states to raise the speed limit to 65 mph on most stretches of interstate highways.

Reagan vetoed the bill as a budget buster that was larded with wasteful pork barrel construction projects. Democrats countered that the measure was within budget constraints, and said 800,000 construction jobs would be lost if the veto were sustained.

The issue also became a major political showdown between the president and Democratic majorities in the Senate and the House, which voted 350-73 to override the veto Tuesday. It takes a two-thirds vote by both houses to override a veto — 67 votes in the Senate if all 100 members are voting.

The White House has sought to turn the veto fight into a test of Reagan's standing after months of controversy caused by the sale of U.S. arms to Iran and the possible diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contras.

"It is a very critical vote for Ronald Reagan," Dole said. "This may determine the strength of this presidency for the next 21 months."

Wednesday's roll call was conducted in an unusually quiet Senate chamber, with Vice President George Bush presiding.

Ector County inmated stabbed

ROSHARON (AP) — A 38-year-old Texas prison inmate was stabbed to death with a homemade weapon while in his cell at the Darrington Unit, officials said today.

Norman Black, serving 20 years for burglary out of Ector County, was pronounced dead Wednesday at 9:30 p.m. after being stabbed four times in the back and three times in an arm with a piece of metal about seven inches long, Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles Brown said.

Black's cellmate, a 30-year-old prisoner serving 60 years for four counts of aggravated robbery and possession of a controlled substance out of Harris County, was put in security detention pending a hearing on the case, Brown said.

Both men were being housed in the prison unit's administrative segregation where aggressive prisoners and those believed to be gang members are kept, Brown said.

Black is the second inmate to die this year, and there have been 22 non-fatal stabbings so far, Brown said. Last year, there were three homicides and 96 non-fatal stabbings in the state prison system.

Rebels infiltrated base, Salvadoran colonel says

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas enlisted in the army and infiltrated a key military base in preparation for the assault that killed 69 soldiers and a U.S. military adviser, the garrison commander said.

In addition, a small number of guerrillas entered the El Paraiso base "in order to set the explosive charges," Col. Gilberto Rubio, commander of the compound 37 miles north of San Salvador, said Wednesday.

Salvadoran helicopters and army troops Wednesday searched nearby mountains for remnants of the attacking force, members of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, an umbrella organization for five rebel groups fighting the U.S.-backed government.

Rubio said soldiers killed three guerrillas during fighting outside the village of Ojos de Agua, about four miles north of the base.

El Paraiso was attacked before dawn Tuesday by guerrillas using mortars, rocket-propelled grenades and automatic weapons. A military source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, estimated 100 rebels participated in the attack.

Rubio refused to divulge any details about suspected infiltrators, but said the rebels "possibly had some detailed information that was useful to them in order to direct the mortar fire against the command post, which was set on fire and completely destroyed."

The base, one of the nation's most important, was ringed by land mines and barbed wire and otherwise fortified after a similar guerrilla raid in 1983.

"There had to be someone who infiltrated," said Rubio.

Salvadoran rebels again show their strength

By BRYNA BRENNAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas who staged an organized and brutal attack on an army garrison proved once again their vengeance and strength in combating the powerful U.S.-trained armed forces.

The rebels also demonstrated their ability to change strategies to conform with tactics used by a better prepared and better-equipped Salvadoran military. They showed they are capable of putting together units to mount surprise raids and that they have inside support, a problem often cited by the high military command.

Military officials said some guerrillas infiltrated the army in preparation for Tuesday's pre-dawn attack on the El Paraiso base, 37 miles north of San Salvador.

The rebels lobbed homemade TNT bombs, mortars and rocket-propelled grenades over mined fields and barbed wire fences onto the base, killing 69 Salvadoran soldiers and a U.S. military adviser, Staff Sgt. Gregory A. Fronius — the first American to die in battle since the civil war began in 1979.

The rebels, five armies grouped as the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, staged a more devastating attack at the same base using similar tactics in 1983. More than 100 soldiers died in that attack.

Since then, all six of the military's major garrisons have been fortified. The armed forces' strength has grown from about 12,000 in 1981 to 53,000, while the guerrilla forces have dropped from a high of about 10,000 to about 4,000.

U.S. military aid, which was $6.2 million in 1980, grew to $207 million in 1984 and stands at $134 million for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1. The money has purchased heavy arms, rifles, more than 70 helicopters and jet bombers.

At the start of the war, the military was known for its 9-to-5 fights, with weekends and holidays off. The guerrillas fought 24 hours a day.

An Analysis

But two years ago the fruits of training by U.S. advisers here and in the United States — coupled with a strong sense of nationalism — took hold. The Salvadoran army followed American recommendations to break up into small patrols while still maintaining the ability to mount large-scale operations.

The guerrillas followed suit. The number of rebels taking part in the scattered large operations diminished.

The major difference between Tuesday's attack and the 1983 one the number of guerrilla attackers: as many as 500 in 1983 and, according to a military source, only about 100 on Tuesday.

Similarly, about 300 guerrillas struck the largest military training center in eastern La Unión in 1985. When they attacked San Miguel last June, only about 100 took part, according to a Western military observer.

The guerrilla tactics changed in part due to the military's increased use of intelligence and helicopters to root out rebel enclaves, military sources said, speaking on condition they not be identified for security reasons.

The June attack at San Miguel was a demonstration of rebel ability to group about three specialized small units and then disperse, military sources said. A similar tactic was used Jan. 4 in Morazan province, when about 250 rebels attacked an isolated military outpost and then scattered.

"After two years of working with small groups, the guerrillas can now get together and then spread out," said Rubén Zamora, one of the leaders of the rebels' political ally, the Democratic Revolutionary Front, in a February interview in Nicaragua. "I suspect we'll see more attacks like that."

Clandestine rebel Radio Venceremos said the deaths of Fronius and a CIA operative who was aboard a Salvadoran helicopter when it crashed last week, are "a product of (President) Reagan's interventionist policy in our country, and they will not be the last to die if the imperialism persists."

Pope listens to slum dwellers' complaints

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Pope John Paul II comforted slum dwellers during a visit to a shantytown today where impoverished residents denounced the military government of President Augusto Pinochet. Anti-government protesters stoned two police buses leading the papal caravan.

Earlier, the pope had a 30-minute private meeting with Pinochet at La Moneda presidential palace, but details were not available. John Paul has referred to the Pinochet government as "dictatorial."

Protesters smashed all the windows of the police buses en route to La Bandera, a town beset by poverty, prostitution and drug addiction, and helmeted riot police with shields shoved the demonstrators back. Witnesses reported seeing several people who appeared to be injured.

Slum dwellers selected by priests were brought to the pope's side on a makeshift stage and spoke out against the Pinochet government as a crowd of several hundred thousand poor and the national radio and television audience listened. The government-run television cut the audio during the criticism of the Pinochet regime.

John Paul nodded solemnly as Luisa Rivera, who is missing several front teeth, complained of terrible housing and health care.

"We want a dignified life, but without dictatorship," she said, and asked the pope to intercede on behalf of Chilean political prisoners, "including 14 facing the death penalty." The pope embraced her.

Others spoke of people being tortured and the audience, some waving banners reading "pope, they torture and kill here," cheered "bravo" with each denunciation of the government.

Government-run National Television of Chile played music and showed general crowd scenes during their remarks, but the networks of the University of Chile and the Catholic University of Chile carried the criticisms live.

"I have listened to you with much attention, and my spirit is deeply moved," the pope said.

He urged them to "use all means within your power to banish from your country all the causes of unjust poverty."

But John Paul cautioned them to "avoid the temptation to identify yourselves with political parties or positions" and said the church must "always maintain a clear ecclesiastical identity."

The local church had erected a backdrop depicting wooden shacks, hiding the real shacks behind it, for the stage. It was not clear why.

In contrast, the crowd outside the presidential palace was comprised of government supporters who applauded while military cadets in blue tunics and tasseled helmets in red and white stood at attention.

Pinochet, wearing a blue civilian suit, greeted the white-robed pontiff with a handshake and a reserved smile. They stood briefly at an open balcony of the 200-year-old palace, which Pinochet's forces bombed during his 1973 overthrow of Marxist President Salvadore Allende.

The pope was scheduled this evening to address youths in the national stadium, where human rights organizations say hundreds of political detainees were held, tortured and killed after Pinochet's coup.

Police said 16 civilians and seven policemen were injured, none seriously, in scattered anti-Pinochet demonstrations after John Paul's arrival Wednesday for a six-day visit, his first to this predominantly Roman Catholic country.

Reporters saw several protesters struck by nightsticks, one youth being carried off in a stretcher and a journalist with a bleeding knee.

Pinochet greeted the pope at the airport Wednesday and said Chile was being attacked by "an outside materialist ideology" in a campaign of "hate, lies and the culture of death."

The pope said in Spanish, "I proclaim the inalienable dignity of the human person," and prayed that the "message of the divine redeemer penetrates into our lives and into the structures of society to transform them according to the plan of God, converting hearts and constructing a reconciled country."

Catholic Church leaders in Chile have been among Pinochet's most persistent critics. As the pope flew Tuesday from Rome to Uruguay, he described Chile's government as "dictatorial' and said it was his task to champion human rights in Chile.

However, he said in his arrival speech in Chile that he was "exclusively on a religious and pastoral mission."

He then traveled to the cathedral in downtown Santiago, where he met with church leaders.

Hundreds of thousands of spectators and about 7,000 police lined the motorcade route. Many in the crowd raised their fingers in victory signs.

As the motorcade neared the cathedral, police used tear gas on demonstrators who tried to break through their lines and distribute anti-government leaflets.

Eighty percent of Chile's 12 million people are Catholic. About 1.4 million of Santiago's 4.8 million people live in slums.

Soviets to allow more than one candidate

MOSCOW (AP) — An election experiment allowing more than one candidate to run for a local government post will be conducted in 2,000 voting districts this summer, Tass reported Wednesday.

The Soviet Union announced Sunday that it would experiment with multicandidate ballots in some areas but did not say where or in how many districts. The test is to be conducted June 21 during voting for local governing councils, people's judges and other posts.

Was isolated Bikini Atoll a hot spot long before American nuclear tests?

By STEWART TAGGART

HONOLULU (AP) — An archaeologist studying Bikini Atoll as part of preparations for returning the former atomic bomb test site to its displaced residents has found evidence man may have inhabited eastern Micronesia thousands of years earlier than previously thought.

Bits of charcoal, fish bones, shells and other artifacts from a cooking fire were found buried beneath 3 feet of sand, said U.S. Army Corps of Engineers archaeologist Charles F. Streck Jr.

Carbon-dating placed the age of the artifacts between 1960 B.C. and 1650 B.C., he said.

Previously, archaeologists and anthropologists believed Bikini, located about 2,500 miles southwest of Hawaii, was settled no more than a few hundred years ago, with most estimates ranging in the 1700s or 1800s.

"I have four or five radiocarbon dates that are hundreds of years too old to fit the prevailing migration and settlement theories for the Micronesian area," said Streck. "The atolls could be more productive for archaeology than we thought."

"If those dates prove to be correct, it will prove to be a major, major find," said Dr. Robert Kiste, director of the Pacific Island Studies program at the University of Hawaii, whose own studies have been considered the most extensive historical work on Bikini.

Kiste said Bikinians, through oral genealogies, trace their presence on the island back only 10 or 12 generations.

"I don't know exactly how this is going to force us to alter our ideas, but we wonder where these people are coming from so early in the Pacific," said Stephen Athens, general manager of International Archaeological Research Institute, a nonprofit archaeological consulting firm based in Honolulu.

> "What seemed to be indicated is that the island shows almost continuous occupation for up to 4,000 years."
> — Charles F. Streck
> Army Corps of Engineers archaeologist

Streck visited Bikini in November 1985 and May 1986 to help prepare an environmental impact statement, part of the U.S. government's program to make the island habitable again so people can return.

Bikini's 167 residents were evacuated in 1946 so the U.S. military could use the atoll for nuclear testing. The last of 23 tests was conducted in 1958.

The islanders have since lived in several locations around the Marshall Islands. Their current home is Kili Island, 425 miles south of Bikini.

Cleanup efforts may take 10 years or longer, depending on what methods are used, according to Jonathan M. Weisgall, a Washington, D.C., attorney representing the islanders.

Micronesia covers about 1 million square miles of the Pacific Ocean between Hawaii and the Philippines along the equator and just north of it.

Current migration theories of how the region was settled have been based on limited archaeology and oral histories gathered from islanders.

Western Micronesia, which includes Guam, Palau and the Northern Marianas, was believed to have been settled through an eastward movement of people from the Philippines and eastern Indonesia sometime before 3000 B.C., Streck said.

Eastern Micronesia, which includes the Marshall Islands where Bikini is located and most of the Federated States of Micronesia, was believed to have been settled by a northward migration of people sometime between 500 B.C. and the time of Christ.

"What the finding indicates is the extreme eastern part of Micronesia has the same time depth as western Micronesia, which goes against the traditional theories of settlement," Streck said.

For his survey, Streck sampled 25 sites on Bikini and nearby Eneu, while seven of the sites underwent extensive digs.

"What seemed to be indicated is that the island shows almost continuous occupation for up to 4,000 years," Streck said.

Streck said evidence of such a long continuous period of habitation is curious because Bikini has little rainfall and is located far from what were believed to have been traditional population centers such as Arno and Majuro atolls, roughly 2,300 miles southwest of Hawaii. Those islands were believed to have been settled about the time of Christ.

Bloody spring

The Italian spring bloomed with blood. Terrorists on a motor scooter assassinated the military chief of Italy's space program.

The Red Brigades claimed responsibility for the murder. It was well-planned and deftly performed. It followed a surge of million-dollar bank robberies and car thefts, the means by which terrorists finance operations and get vehicles.

Italians thought they had broken up the Red Brigades five years ago when cells were smashed, members tried and imprisoned, and stockpiles of weapons and money confiscated. Public support for terrorism dwindled after the murder of Christian Democrat leader Aldo Moro in 1978. Attacks had recently diminished in frequency and violence.

But now authorities fear even more vicious units of the Red Brigades are organizing for an onslaught. The Red Brigades have links to terrorists in France, West Germany and the Middle East.

Why would the Red Brigades kill an aerospace engineer who heads Italy's small space program? Likely it's because the United States is negotiating with Italy and other European nations to try to involve them in the Star Wars research program. So far, Italy has not signed up.

The defense of Europe rests on the premise that the greatest threat to European security comes from the Soviet bloc. But what about the threat of terrorists attacking European civilization from within? The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is, itself, a target of terrorist attacks. How secure can a space-based defense of Europe be when an Italian general can be shot by a man on a scooter?

In considering the defense of Western Europe, NATO should not only consider the grand level of space. It should face the ground level of terrorism.

LETTERS

Jackson lacked facts

In a letter published Sunday, March 29, Charlie Jackson challenged Oralia Corrales' accomplishments on behalf of District 2 as a City Council member. He inferred individual effort and not Mrs. Corrales was responsible for a great deal that has been accomplished over the past two years.

My comments are addressed at the figures Jackson, well meaning though he is, is totally misinformed about. Mrs. Corrales had served on the original board of directors of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and we were proud and grateful for her efforts and contributions on our behalf. Upon election to the City Council, Mrs. Corrales resigned from the board to fully devote her time and effort to her constituency and to avoid any potential conflict, real or imagined.

Over the past several years, a number of enthusiastic, talented and industrious members of our chamber have undertaken the project of addressing some of the socioeconomic ills that exist in the East and South sides of Midland. In 1985, CDBG funds totalling $15,000 were granted to the East Side Economic Development Task Force to perform a feasibility study on economic development in the area. Results of the study were presented to the City Council along with a request to fund hiring a paid professional to develop a plan for realizing the objective. The "target area" has been previously stated and restated at meetings prompted by and attended by Mrs. Corrales, throughout the East and South sides for any interested parties to have a full understanding of this study and plan.

The Revolving Loan Fund (RLF) which Jackson states is $100,000 is actually $162,000 and will be monitored, distributed and administered by citywide representation for the good of all people in this area. It is the direct result of the efforts of the East Side Economic Development Task Force and has had the support of Mrs. Corrales from its inception.

Our chamber has never, is not now nor will ever approach the City of Midland with any funding request that has not been fully scrutinized and inspected for its positive impact on the city as a whole. To that end we invite anyone who is interested in the same goals to attend our meetings and become members to support the same goals.

The comments made by Jackson were, I'm sure, without benefit of all the facts. This letter is to clarify his comments as they pertain to Mrs. Corrales' efforts in support of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

President, Midland Hispanic

Corrales serves all

Mrs. Oralia Corrales has been in office as the District 2 representative to the City Council for just one term and has done more than her share of hard work and achievements than anyone can ask of her.

All the work she has done to get things accomplished for the residents of District 2 has been not only for the Hispanic community but for the good of all her area which includes serving the black, brown and Anglo citizens.

How soon some people forget all the different projects she has initiated or helped to initiate such as Martin Luther King Park, installation of playground equipment in Washington Park through her efforts in coordination with the Hispanic members of the Knights of Columbus, initiating and promoting the clean-up in District 2 in July when over 100 volunteers, including Mrs. Corrales, worked hand-in-hand to collect 101 tons of garbage to make the East and South side areas cleaner for our families.

Unfortunately certain individuals continually abuse the freedom of speech to speak out against a dedicated city official that everyone should feel fortunate to have representing District 2.

Mrs. Corrales spends 25 to 30 hours per week of her time, keeping in mind that she has to run a business of her own, looking out for the good of District 2, for less than $1 per day. The experience that she has gained in the political world is an asset to our community. Let us not waste it.

The time Mrs. Corrales would spend writing a newsletter is spent in communicating in person with the known leaders of the black, brown and Anglo communities in her district.

I encourage everyone to go out and vote to re-elect a proven leader for all of District 2.

LULAC isn't partisan

It is most unfortunate that our organization has been forced once again to address issues concerning candidates during local elections. In Sunday's edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, a letter was printed signed by Charlie Jackson.

The letter made implications that the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) acts as a partisan organization. For the record, LULAC is not adherent to any party or candidate. For this reason, Permian Basin LULAC members feel offended that Jackson made such an implication. We do not dispute accomplishments made by Ms. Corrales nor do we dispute the qualifications of Bailey.

LULAC's constitution does not grant us the privilege of endorsing any candidate at any time. It is true, we do involve ourselves in defending constitutional rights and in making life better for all citizens. However, it would be going against those beliefs to have the organization, LULAC, telling others how to vote.

Child-soldier can't get veteran's help

WASHINGTON — The Veterans Administration was set up, in Lincoln's phrase, "to care for him who shall have borne the battle," but don't try convincing Walter Lee Martin of that.

Jack Anderson

At age 13, Martin wound up in Vietnam, where he "bore the battle" for nearly two years in the infantry. Yet the VA's officious paper shufflers have refused to pay for his medicine for a chronic lung disorder he contracted in the Army.

The bureaucrats say Martin isn't a qualified veteran, and by their nitpicky rules, they're right. He was as old as many drummer boys who fought in Mr. Lincoln's army, and he served as well and honorably in Vietnam as many grunts twice his age. But he was never properly mustered in, and when the Army brass finally found out he was under age, he was still only 15.

So the boy-soldier was unceremoniously booted out of the Army, without a proper discharge. Lacking the official documentation so dear to the bureaucratic heart, Martin, now 31, has been steadfastly rejected by the VA in his claim for veteran's benefits.

Here's what our associate Stewart Harris learned by poring over Army and Veterans Administration files:

Army investigators went to Martin's hometown, Arcadia, Fla., where they learned that as a boy of 12 he was more than 6 feet tall and weighed 160 pounds. The secretary of the local draft board told the investigators that in 1968, at age 13, Martin tried unsuccessfully to join every branch of service.

The secretary said he spiked Martin's application when he saw the boy's birth date: Aug. 9, 1955. The draft board official also thwarted Martin's attempt to enlist in Arizona under the name of Walter Martin Lee that same year.

What happened next is in dispute. Martin claims he was standing in a bus terminal in Atlanta in January 1969, when the police picked him up as an AWOL soldier. The Army claims Martin stole a GI's duffel bag and assumed the soldier's identity.

There's no dispute about what happened next: About a week later, the 13-year-old was shipped to Vietnam and put in a replacement battalion at Long Binh.

Martin saw his share of action in Vietnam. He said he was awarded a Bronze Star for valor during a night battle in which he operated a two-man M-60 machinegun singlehandedly, but there is no record of the award in military files.

Eventually, however, the soldier who lost the duffel bag reported that someone was drawing his pay, and the Army tracked Martin down in Vietnam. It took three separate investigations before the Army finally learned it had a 15-year-old on its hands. Martin was then kicked out.

The authorities freely acknowledge that Martin fought and was injured in Vietnam. But an Orwellian VA memorandum in 1976 explained why his soldiering didn't count:

"Although Martin did perform duty in Vietnam and was wounded in Vietnam, he has no valid service, was never legally enlisted in the armed forces, was never honorably discharged from the armed forces and is not entitled to any Veterans Administration benefits of any shape or form."

He wasn't declared an unperson, just an unveteran.

In January, Martin lost his last chance to convince the military that he is entitled to veteran status, when the Board for Correction of Military Records refused to review his case. Without a board decision to legitimize his military service, the VA won't reopen Martin's case.

Rep. C.W. "Bill" Young, R-Fla., plans to submit a private bill that would give Martin's military service official recognition. But an aide predicted rough going because Congress will be reluctant to set a precedent.

Meanwhile, Martin is back in uniform: the prison denims of a federal penitentiary, where he is serving a three-year sentence for impersonating a member of the military and passing a bad check. Martin told us he put on his old Army fatigues and entered an Army base in Florida, where he got a doctor to write him a prescription for his expensive lung medicine.

INAUGURAL EXTRAVAGANCE: General Accounting Office auditors could accept — grudgingly — the $400,900 spent by the General Services Administration to renovate the Presidential Inaugural Committee's headquarters in 1985. But what really nettled the congressional investigators was the additional $170,000 spent to correct a goof in the telephone system. It seems the GSA installed 400 phones for the committee — but they were single-line units, without hold buttons or the capability to transfer calls. The committee insisted that the phones be upgraded, even though the work wasn't completed until the month before the inauguration.

FREE HELP: Congressional investigators digging into the cost of President Reagan's second inaugural discovered that about 20 General Services Administration employees labored on the celebration for anywhere from one to 10 months, at a total cost in salaries of more than $150,000. The inaugural committee didn't reimburse the GSA a penny.

GEORGE F. WILL

Court gives new look to judicial activism

WASHINGTON — With a felicity infrequently found in Supreme Court opinions, Justice Antonin Scalia began his dissent in the recent reverse-discrimination case this way:

George F. Will

"With a clarity which, had it not proven so unavailing, one might well recommend as a model of statutory draftsmanship, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 declares...."

Scalia then cited the Title VII assertion that it shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate on the basis of (among other things) sex against any individual or to "adversely affect" an employee's status because of sex. Then Scalia said:

"The Court today completes the process of converting this from a guarantee that race or sex will not be the basis of employment determinations, to a guarantee that it often will."

The Court has now done more than ratify the legality of an ethnic and racial spoils system whereby various groups can be guaranteed proportional representation in the work place. The Court has made reverse discrimination a prudent policy for employers.

A female employee of Santa Clara County was preferred in promotion over a male who placed slightly higher in the formal assessment of job candidates. She won because the county agency had voluntarily adopted an affirmative-action plan to enlarge the representation of minorities and women in particular job classifications that have been traditionally "segregated" and where minorities and women are "significantly underrepresented."

No one disputed that the woman's sex was a determining factor in the promotion as part of the plan to achieve a work force whose composition reflects the composition of the local work force. No one argued that the county agency was guilty of, or that she was a victim of, previous discrimination regarding the job classification. Numerical imbalance was sufficient, indeed was all.

The Court has now inverted Title VII as it was written by and explained in Congress. The Court has dropped the pretense that reverse discrimination is a last-resort "remedy" for past injuries. Such discrimination can now be a first-resort instrument for promoting attitudinal change (with the aim of producing a pleasing racial and sexual composition of the work force) and fending off Title VII suits.

Because the Court has said that numerical disparities in job classifications justify reverse discrimination, an employer's failure to engage in such discrimination to achieve proportional representation may expose him to Title VII litigation. Therefore, this ruling is an incentive for preemptive reverse discrimination, nationwide. Untold thousands of white males, like the blue-collar worker in this case, are virtually assured of losing promotions to less-qualified members of government-favored groups. As Scalia says, "The irony is that these individuals — predominantly unknown, unaffluent, unorganized — suffer this injustice at the hands of a Court fond of thinking itself the champion of the politically impotent."

Justices Rehnquist and White also dissented. The decision was 6-3.

With a candor that deserves a better cause, Justice Stevens concurred in the result on the perverse ground that the Court has done so much violence to Title VII, and has done so for so long, that it is too late to respect the law. He concedes what critics of this decision say: that the legislative history of Title VII asserts that Title VII created an "obligation not to discriminate against whites." He notes that the Court, construing Title VII in 1971, said, "Discriminatory preference for any group, minority or majority, is precisely and only what Congress has proscribed." In a 1976 decision the Court said Title VII prohibits discrimination against whites "upon the same standards" as would be applied to blacks.

But, says Stevens, the Court has been going against the clear letter and clearly expressed intent of Congress since 1978. The post-1978 decisions are now "part of the fabric of the law." And the "orderly development of the law" requires fidelity to the Court's recent pattern, even though it is a pattern of unfaithfulness to the intent of the legislative branch. Stevens quotes Justice Cardozo's admonition that the Court may have to change a "rule" (a.k.a., "law") when the Court decides it is inconsistent with "the sense of justice or with the social welfare," as the Court divines those.

There you have a guileless admission that the Court is legislating its sense of justice and its preferred social-welfare policies. Six of the nine justices of this Court were nominated by conservative Presidents (Nixon, Ford, Reagan) critical of judicial activism. Four of the six were among the six justices in the majority in this case in which the Court acted as brazenly legislatively as ever the Warren Court did.

ART BUCHWALD

Flirting over the phone can be hazardous!

My favorite AT&T advertisement shows a gray-haired man and woman head to head. The copy reads, "Flirt with her again. Call the U.K. She was your childhood sweetheart. The girl you always planned to marry. And even though so much has happened since you left London, since you left her side, you still carry a torch for her. Why not give her a call and tell her?"

Art Buchwald

I came into the Dalinsky house and Marian was throwing ketchup bottles at Harry, who was ducking behind the sofa.

"What's up?" I asked.

Marian said, "He just called his childhood sweetheart in London."

"I can't believe it, Harry. I didn't know you had a childhood sweetheart in England."

"I met her once at a pub," Harry said. "I wouldn't recognize her if I saw her now."

"Did you tell her on the phone that she was the girl you planned to marry?"

"You have to tell women something like that to make them feel better."

Marian threw a jar of mustard at Harry.

"Harry, what on earth are you doing calling your childhood sweetheart after being married for 47 years?"

"I was reading an advertisement in this magazine and it said you could call the girl of your dreams for 64 cents. I figured I owed Mathilda a tinkle. There is nothing between us anymore except a lot of wonderful memories."

The sugar bowl came sailing across the room.

"Why didn't you marry Mathilda if she was such a good childhood sweetheart?" Marian shouted at Harry.

"She wasn't my type. Served me tea day and night until my stomach swelled up. She might have had the looks, but she repeated herself a lot."

"Hold it," I said as Marian was about to spear Harry with a floor lamp. "I want to know what Mathilda said when you got her on the phone."

Harry said, "I told her it was her childhood sweetheart calling and she said, 'Hello Fred.'"

"English girls never get their men's first names right."

"Then," Harry continued, "I told her that I still carry a torch for her."

"That must have pleased her," I said.

"I'm not sure because at that moment Marian took the palm tree out of the planter and shoved it down my pants."

"It sounds as if Marian didn't appreciate the AT&T advertisement."

"The phone company has a nerve to suggest that happily married husbands call their childhood sweethearts and tell them they're still carrying a torch for them," Marian said.

I said, "The phone company has been doing some weird things lately. I wouldn't be surprised if they ran an ad soon suggesting that divorced people call their ex spouses up and yell at each other. Did the call cost you a lot?"

"It cost me more than you think. Marian got on the line and told Mathilda what she had missed for the last 47 years. Marian always knows how to ruin someone else's telephone call."

U.S. soldier defects, Soviet official says

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. Army soldier and his wife have been granted asylum by the Kremlin, a Soviet official said today, in the first known defection of an American serviceman to the Soviet Union since the Vietnam War.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov identified the soldier as William E. Roberts, and his West German wife as P. Neumann, and said Roberts had been based in West Germany.

Gerasimov told reporters at a news briefing that both Roberts and his wife were granted asylum by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet because "they were afraid of being victimized for their progressive views."

He said Roberts "had been persecuted" while stationed in West Germany in the U.S. Army, but gave no details. Gerasimov did not give Roberts' rank and hometown.

The Soviet official gave no details of when the couple entered the Soviet Union or how they had arrived.

"They have chosen for their honeymoon the Turkmenian U.S.S.R," Gerasimov said, referring to the Central Asian Soviet republic that borders Afghanistan, Pakistan and China.

In Washington, Pentagon officials declined immediate comment, saying they were attempting to learn further details. And Rex Gribble, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's European Headquarters in Heidelberg, West Germany, said: "I've just seen the report. I've done some checking around. We have nothing on it at this time."

The reported defections came amid an espionage scandal at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow that U.S. authorities say may have compromised its communications.

Three former Marine guards at the embassy have been arrested in the United States, two charged with espionage. The third Marine is being investigated for allegedly breaking the rule barring contact with Soviets by having an affair with a Soviet woman and lying about it.

Although other U.S. citizens have asked for and received asylum in the Soviet Union in recent years, Roberts' reported defection was the first by a member of the U.S. armed forces since the Vietnam War.

Controversy greets new U.S. envoy

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. Ambassador Jack S. Matlock arrived today to take up his post and said he assumed embassy communications, feared compromised in the Marines-KGB espionage case, will be secure by the time Secretary of State George Shultz arrives.

Matlock, 57, told reporters at the airport he did not wish to comment on the sex-and-spy scandal that resulted in the arrest of three Marine Corps security guards and the recall of the 28 guards posted here now.

He said his first priority is to prepare for the Shultz visit on April 12-14.

"We assume we will have secure communications when he's here," Matlock said. He added: "I'm not going to comment on any condition of the embassy before I see it."

Matlock replaces Arthur A. Hartman, who left Feb. 19 after five years — the longest-serving U.S. ambassador to Moscow since World War II.

The new ambassador is considered one of the United States' top experts on Soviet languages, cultures and history and most recently was President Reagan's special assistant for Soviet and European affairs.

He has been a longtime key formulator of U.S. policy toward the Soviets, and took part in most of the summit sessions at Geneva and Reykjavik, Iceland, between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The embassy he will run is plagued by an espionage scandal that U.S. authorities believe compromised its communications. Three former Marine guards at the embassy are under military arrest in the United States.

Two of them, Sgt. Clayton Lonetree and Cpl. Arnold Bracy, are charged with espionage and accused of letting KGB agents prowl through secure areas.

WORLD in brief

Soviets confirm official delegation will visit Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Soviet Union today confirmed that a Soviet consular delegation will visit Israel but said Israeli delegates would not be allowed to make a reciprocal visit.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, in an interview with Israel radio, also said no decision had been made to allow thousands of Soviet Jews to emigrate.

But he said the Soviet Union had decided to review "sympathetically" requests of all Jews who had asked to leave. He said denials would be made only in cases where Soviet security interests were in danger.

Gerasimov said no arrangements had been made to fly Soviet Jews to Israel through the Eastern bloc country of Romania to prevent them from going to countries other than Israel. But he called it "an interesting idea" and said "I'm going to discuss that with my colleagues."

The present practice is for emigrating Jews to declare they are going to Israel and leave for transit stations in Vienna. Once in neutral Austria, many emigres head for the United States or other Western nations instead of the Jewish state.

Zia denies having bomb

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (NYT) — Pakistan's President Mohammed Zia Ul-Haq denied in an interview that his nation has a nuclear bomb and said charges otherwise are part of a joint Indian and "Zionist" conspiracy to sabotage a $4 billion Pakistani aid program now being considered by Congress.

Zia said Time magazine, which recently quoted him as saying that Pakistan can build the bomb anytime it wants, had taken his comments out of context.

"Pakistan has neither the desire, nor the intentions, nor the capability of entering into the atomic energy field for its military uses," Zia told a group of American journalists. "Our concentration is totally on peaceful uses."

Zia, answering questions for more than 75 minutes, also said Pakistan had begun continuous F-16 aerial patrols along its border with Afghanistan after a series of attacks by Afghan planes on refugee villages inside Pakistan.

Zia denied allegations from Capitol Hill that U.S. military aid to Pakistan and humanitarian assistance for the Afghan refugees are being diverted by the Pakistanis.

Nine reported dead in camp

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Palestinian alliance said nine refugees died Wednesday of hunger or the results of lack of medicine in Beirut's besieged Chatilla camp.

Meanwhile, Christian leaders said Beirut international airport in the Syrian-policed Moslem sector should not be reopened unless Christians are allowed to set up their own airport.

The Palestine National Salvation Front, an alliance of six Damascus-based guerrilla groups, said "four children died of hunger today and five wounded Palestinians died due to the lack of medicine."

No independent confirmation of the Palestinian groups' claims was possible as reporters have not been able to enter the camps.

Lawyer denies link to spy

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A lawyer with dual Israeli-U.S. citizenship whom U.S. investigators reportedly want to question in connection with the Jonathan Jay Pollard case on Thursday denied any involvement in the affair.

According to American diplomatic and administration sources, Pollard's handlers allegedly used the Washington apartment of the attorney, Harold Katz, to photocopy secret military documents passed on by Pollard.

In Washington, a diplomatic source who spoke on condition of anonymity said that Katz, who became Israeli citizen in 1972, also allegedly was involved in payments to Pollard.

Pollard, an American Jew and civilian U.S. Navy analyst, was sentenced to life in prison for selling Israel hundreds of classified military documents in 1984-85.

Katz, contacted by The Associated Press at his Tel Aviv home, denied any involvement in the Pollard affair.

"Yes, that's my name that's being mentioned. But I can tell you that the report is totally untrue. I never heard of them until it got into the papers, I never saw these people, I know nothing about that operation," Katz said in a telephone interview.

FLOOD

A state game warden reported seeing a house floating down the river in Augusta, and in Wilton, a section of the firehouse was torn out by Wilson Stream and "disappeared — it's gone downstream," said Town Manager Paul Soucie.

In central Connecticut, a dam of Meriden's Kenmere Reservoir broke late Tuesday as heavy rains pelted the state. The water rushed over a spillway and onto a golf course in Berlin, Conn.

People returned to their homes in the Kenmere Reservoir area Wednesday, after about 100 homes were evacuated before the 11 break. Residents and city officials said the dam may have been weakened because it had been under repair.

About 75 families were evacuated in Plymouth, N.H., Tuesday, as rivers and streams overflowed their banks. About 60 people were evacuated in Claremont, but they returned home Wednesday. Roads were closed in more than 60 places around New Hampshire, said Ken Jollimore of the state Civil Defense.

The Pemigewasset River rose to 14 feet above flood level in Plymouth, causing extensive damage to about a dozen businesses near the river in Holderness, authorities said.

The rain also was blamed for a school bus accident in Alton, N.H., that sent eight children to the hospital with minor injuries, and in Nashua, N.H., raging waters hampered a search for a person who witnesses said fell into the Nashua River and is presumed drowned.

About 30 families were forced from their homes in Island Pond, Vt.

In Rochester, Vt., Brian Bissonette found his expensive DeLorean car afloat. "It's something they didn't include in the advertising," he said of the vehicle's buoyancy. "Actually, they float quite nicely."

Midlander convicted of assault

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A jury took just over an hour to convict a 24-year-old Midland man of aggravated assault for the shooting of an elderly woman last August.

Justin Slatton was convicted for the Aug. 25 shooting of Rosa Nichols, 79. Ms. Nichols was shot in the arm while in her upper-floor apartment at the Hillcrest Manor retirement manor, 700 W. Scharbauer Dr., according to testimony in the trial which began Monday in Judge Pat Baskin's 142nd state district court.

Baskin said he will sentence Slatton next week.

Chuck Standley of Midland, who testified against Slatton, pleaded guilty to aggravated assault March 9 and received a two-year sentence, with at least 60 days shock probation a condition of the sentence.

After the verdict, Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said he thought Slatton would receive a similar sentence.

During closing arguments Wednesday afternoon, defense attorney David Lashford said the state's case was based on "speculation." He said there was no evidence that the defendant ever handled the gun, and he said Standley's statements about the case had been "inconsistent."

Lashford emphasized to the jury that according to Baskin's instructions, Standley's testimony as an accomplice in the crime had to be corraborated by other evidence. He said Schorre had failed to provide that evidence.

But Schorre told the jury that Standley's retelling of events and other testimony showed without a doubt that Slatton was involved.

According to the state, the two men were in an apartment across from Hillcrest Manor, and had consumed a case-and-a-half of beer before they decided to "take pot shots" at a light in Ms. Nichols' window.

When police came to the door of the apartment after the shooting, the two men acted like they were asleep, Schorre said. He told the jury that "act" was damning, a clear giveaway of guilt.

"Why else would you be playing possum? Why else would you not go to the door?" he asked. "If Mr. Slatton wants to run around with better members of the community, then he'll have better witnesses the next time around."

Schorre admitted that his key witness, Standley, could not be excused for his action, but he asked the jury to believe his story.

Schorre said testimony that the two shots were fired three to five minutes apart showed more than one person fired the rifle; the fact that the bullet holes in the apartment window were 43 inches apart tended to confirm that theory, he said.

"We are very fortunate, in my opinion, that we are here trying an aggravated assault case instead of a murder case," Schorre said.

Archaeologist taking look into area 'black hole'

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

David Meltzer

Although David Meltzer isn't an astronomer, he's investigating a local "black hole" — in the prehistory of the High Plains.

And a 10,000-year-old Indian site northeast of Midland — Mustang Springs in Martin County — is providing him with a rare glimpse into this black hole.

Meltzer, a Southern Methodist University archaeology professor, described his two seasons of work at Mustang Springs to about 30 people at the Midland Archaeological Society's monthly meeting Wednesday in the new wing of the Museum of the Southwest.

People have been drawn to Mustang Springs for at least the last 10,000 years, Meltzer said. Surface artifacts found near the springs range from flint pieces similar to 11,000-year-old Clovis points to historic European gun flints.

The springs have dried up just twice in the last 25,000 years, he continued.

The first dry period was the Altithermal, some 5,000 to 7,000 years ago.

Although "stark images of the Dust Bowl (of the 1930s)...are engrained in the American character and society...(such as) houses buried in dust," Meltzer said, the historic Dust Bowl was "a trivial event," compared to the Altithermal, which left windblown dust deposits more than 3 feet deep at Mustang Springs.

Archaeologists differ over the Altithermal's effects on the people of the High Plains, he continued. Some claim the Indians and the herds of bison they hunted were relatively unaffected by the drier climate; others believe both humans and bison abandoned the plains to the high winds and blowing dust, heading west for the hills or east to the forests.

Habitation sites on the plains dating to this period are rare; many sites consist of just a few scattered flint artifacts, Meltzer claimed.

But High Plains soil is thin and remnants of prehistoric campsites may have "gone with the wind" during the Altithermal. So, the lack of sites does not necessarily mean prehistoric peoples deserted the plains.

Thus the "black hole in prehistory."

With its permanent water supply and deep stratified deposits, Mustang Springs is different, Meltzer said.

"I've been staring at this site for two years and asking 'why is it here?'" Meltzer said.

With help from a geophysicist whose specialty is Venus and geological data gleaned from surveys done for the proposed nuclear waste dump in the Panhandle, Meltzer thinks he has found the answer.

Mustang Springs is located in a "bulge" on Mustang Draw, where the narrow drainage spreads out, he said.

While bedrock is just 3 to 13 feet below ground surface surrounding the springs, at the bulge "it drops straight down at least 20 meters (66 feet)...around the end of the bulge it comes back up again," Meltzer said.

Recent geological research in the Panhandle suggests that High Plains drainage is strongly affected by subsidence, he continued. Buried Permian era salt deposits gradually dissolve, causing sediments above the salts to collapse.

"Mustang Springs represents one of those collapsed events," Meltzer claimed. This summer the state's Bureau of Economic Geology will drill a well at the site to determine the springs' origin, he said.

John Conlee

Singer John Conlee hopes he remembers his lines

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

John Conlee had three shows to do in as many days. He knew the words to "Old School." After all, it was his song. Nonetheless, the words escaped him, not once, but twice.

"Every now and then I get a mental block doing a song live — who knows why," Conlee says in a recent telephone interview. He laughs as he recalls what he terms his most recent embarrassing moment.

"The first night, I forgot part of the words in the first verse of 'Old School.' You get through that the best you can and get back on track. The next night, I went over the words in my mind before I went onstage. That night, I forgot some of the words in the second verse. By the third night, I had the song back together." He pauses briefly, laughs again and adds, "It'll happen again, somewhere down the line. I don't know when."

It's doubtful Conlee will have a similar experience when he performs at Midland's Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center at 10 p.m. Friday, even though he is working back-to-back shows. At 1 p.m. Saturday, Conlee will be onstage at Sunland Park Race Course, Sunland Park, N.M.

Tickets, priced at $8 in advance and $10 at the door, for the Midland show, may be purchased at Wells Boot City, Midland, Endless Horizons, Midland and Odessa, and Luskey's, Odessa. Westwind opens the show, which is sponsored by KNFM-Radio and KMID-TV, at 8 p.m.

Forgetting lines during a live performance is human; cutting a poorly crafted album demonstrates a lack of professionalism. Conlee may do the former, but he shuns the latter. He has a reputation in the entertainment business for cutting albums built around the theory that all the songs, not just one or two, need to be strong selections.

"I guess more than anything else, we concentrate on quality," Conlee says. "When we put together every album, we use the 10 best songs we can find. We wouldn't be ashamed to release any song as a single — that keeps the quality of the product up."

Conlee says he hopes this approach and the reputation he has built with his fans would inspire an individual to purchase one of his albums even if none of the songs sounded familiar.

His latest album, "American Faces," has been out about a week. It is his second for Columbia Records and his 14th overall. The first single, "Domestic Life," Conlee says, "is running up the charts rather rapidly — doing very well."

During his Midland show, Conlee will sing several selections from his latest album along with his hits — "Rose Colored Glasses," "Backside of Thirty," "Lady Lay Down," "Miss Emily's Picture," "Busted," "Common Man," "I'm Only In It For The Love," "In My Eyes" and "As Long As I'm Rockin' With You."

Midland Firefighters Association recognized as non-profit group

From Staff Reports

The Midland Firefighters Association, comprised of active and retired Midland Fire Department personnel, has recently received recognition from the Texas State Comptroller and the Internal Revenue Service as a not-for-profit organization.

This means the association can begin several community service projects it has been planning, such as a burn relief program, according to Sammy Fields Jr., chairman of the community welfare committee.

"We're planning a donation drive to collect clothing, furniture and food staples for those who have been burned out of their homes," Fields explained. "We're also trying to set up temporary housing and possibly arrange for financial assistance at no cost to the victim."

Planned community projects, along with the burn relief program, include distributing window stickers to designate bedroom windows or, more specifically, children's bedroom windows.

Fields noted that the group is also working with the media to present fire safety tips. And the group will work with the Muscular Dystrophy Assocation on such projects as the "Fill the Boot" campaign.

He emphasized that only association members will solicit donations, that no one will be soliciting donations on the association's behalf.

The association was formed to build better public relations between the fire department and the public and to help boost morale and build unity among the active and non-active (retired) fire department personnel, Fields said. Fire Chief James Roberts and Deputy Chief Dean Williams are very supportive of and working with the association, he added.

Officers include Jimmy Kniffen, president; Harold Herring, vice president; Rusty Adams, secretary; and Russ Conley, treasurer.

Fire damages mobile home

From Staff Reports

Arson is suspected in a fire that heavily damaged a vacant mobile home in south Midland County late Wednesday, according to Midland Fire Department reports.

Eight firefighters and four units were dispatched to the scene of the fire about 8:45 p.m. on County Road 1172 South, ½ mile south of CR 130. By the time they arrived, the residence was blazing.

Fire investigators said the fire started in a back bedroom, but they do not know how the fire started. The bedroom and kitchen area was heavily damaged, and heat and smoke damage was reported throughout the remainder of the home.

Couple take trip of lifetime along 'beautiful' Rio Grande

Todd

It's a remote, far-away place that seems more like dreamland or a night with a National Geographic television special on wilderness.

It's part Texas. It's part Mexico. It's God's creation. It's the Rio Grande.

It's a place apart that makes the teeming maze of steel, concrete, asphalt, plastic, computer chips, and flesh called "the city" seem like a hostile, alien place strictly designed for a brief visit.

But most folks today live, exist, survive or just stay in "the city" where, it seems, the lure is greenbacks — making money, honey — and hobnobbing and eventually "getting away from it all" sometime in the foggy, misty future that may never arrive.

The Rio Grande and its marriage with the canyons and mountains called Big Bend National Park and adjoining ranches can be made into a singular, wondrous experience.

"It's a life-time trip," radiated Hugh Freebairn, a retired University of Houston biology professor, who survived a three-day canoe trip in the grand ol' river. "I wouldn't miss it in a lifetime."

Neither would, nor did, his wife, Eleanor, a retired schoolteacher.

"The cactus was blooming. It was lovely," she said. "We saw a Mexican lady doing her washing in the river."

Birds — swallows — abounded. Graceful turkey vultures soared overhead in the sea of wind and breeze.

The couple ventured into the waters of the alluring river near Boquillas and immensely savored the serene wilderness for three days and nights.

"It's easy and beautiful," said Freebairn. "It's just tops."

They are seasoned "river rats" who have traveled the waters of the nation's other great rivers.

The Freebairns were advertising themselves as tourists just as surely as if they had raised a big red flag that said "Americans touring the homeland."

Both were wearing straw hats from Padre Island. The professor was donned in a flaming red jumpsuit. He had enjoyed the luxury of not shaving. His eyes said he was delighted in today's world and his place in it.

"It's a great trip."

His spouse had clothed her slender frame in blue jeans and a brilliant yellow tank top as if to say, "If I'm lost, I want to be found."

The Freebairns are enjoying this taste of honey called experiencing life.

And when they return to their home in Brenham, they will be in a place that turns out a cold brand of honey milk called Blue Bell Ice Cream.

Another thing curious about Freebairn is his Midland connection. He's sort of a banana expert who invented a banana-ripening machine. And some years back, he was a banana consultant for some Midland oilmen who wanted to buy a banana plantation in the Dominican Republic.

Apparently, though, they found something far more alluring and potentially profitably back when. They dropped their banana scheme and Freebairn.

"They got interested in a gold mine," Freebairn recalled, but he knows not just where the Midland investors invested.

Meanwhile, Freebairn and his companion wife drift with purpose along life's trails and streams and savor the wilderness and its wonders.

CONLEE

Although Conlee enjoys live performances, they are not the aspect of the business he likes the most.

"Recording is my favorite part of all of this," Conlee says. He agrees that many performers prefer live shows and that others lean toward writing. And Conlee has written two of his hits — "Rose Colored Glasses" and "Backside of Thirty."

"In the studio, you have the opportunity to create, and essentially after that if you're able to keep having hits, you're reproducing what you have already created earlier on tape or records. I enjoy the stage part of it, but it's not my favorite part."

Having a career in the music business is his first choice.

"Music was my chief hobby before I was ever going to make a career. I've been doing it longer than almost anything else except eating and breathing. Anytime you can take a main hobby and make it into a career, obviously it's a pleasure. Some people aren't able to make a living at the thing they most enjoy. I'm grateful I can."

Conlee feels fortunate that his audience includes fans of all ages.

"We're very lucky we don't zero in it seems to any specific age group," he says. "There are many my age — I'm 40 — a good variety of teen-agers and older folks as well. That's good. I wouldn't want to be zeroed in on one segment."

Many performers don't have a favorite song they've recorded. Conlee does. He prefers "Rose Colored Glasses" for several reasons — its the most popular with his fans, and he helped write it.

Considered a hard country singer, Conlee says his preference is "for music to get to the place where we don't have to have labels. I don't think they're important. It's either good music, or it's not. As far as the way I feel myself, I don't know that I classify myself in any one spot on the spectrum. I just want to be throught of as a good communicator of music.

"But I don't do songs that I don't dig, and the songs I end up doing, hard country or not, are songs that have a lot of soul. And the singers who really get to me are people who do those soul-type songs."

Thus far, Conlee has not entered the video business, and he has mixed feelings about it.

"We've never produced a video as we know it today. For 'Miss Emily's Picture' we produced one on our own before videos became popular and extensively produced. There's a good possibility we will on something from this new album.

"I look at them with sort of mixed emotions. Music like old-time radio, records and songs on tape without the visual image leaves your imagination free to roam. Three people can listen to the same song and create their own images in their minds. That's appealing. I like that. If a video sticks to the story of the song and can be very special, then I'm for them."

He cites as an example, "The Highwayman."

"'The Highwayman' — a great song and a great video. It had the same mystique as the song. When they can come together that way, then I'm for that."

A former disc-jockey at Nashville's WLAC Radio, Conlee currently resides on a 32-acre farm outside Nashville. Conlee spends the time he's not on the road or recording, working his farm.

Raised on a 200-acre family farm in Versailles, Ky., Conlee's longtime passion has been the American farmer and his plight. Through his efforts, the Family Farm Defense Fund was created and he serves as honorary chairman. The fund received $500,000 from the FARMAID concert proceeds. Conlee helped organize and participated in that concert.

"This battle is not about whether there will be food; it's about a system of agriculture," Conlee says. "If the family farm goes by the wayside, it's my prediction, and that of a lot of people, that farming will go corporate. If thousands and thousands of acres become available, somebody's going to scoop them up."

Conlee moved to his farm about seven years ago. His next-door neighbor, country music booking agent Bill Goodwin, introduced Conlee to his wife's sister, Gale. The two have been married for five years and have two daughters, Rebecca and Jessica. For Conlee, who penned "Rose Colored Glasses" and "Backside of Thirty" when he was living a bachelor's existence in a Nashville apartment, this lifestyle has made a real difference in his "happiness quotient."

MUSTANG

Meltzer has uncovered five major geological strata, dating from about 10,200 years ago to the present. The springs' growth and decline are recorded in these sediments.

In one layer dating to about 8,800 years ago (before the Altithermal period), Meltzer and his crew unearthed a bed of bison bone which may cover an area 66 by 100 feet. This could be the remains of a massive bison kill, where the prehistoric Indians stampeded the bison into the pond and then killed them, he said.

About 7,000 years ago, "salt tolerant and drought resistant diatoms (microscopic water creatures)" appeared in lake-deposited strata, Meltzer continued.

"The lake (created by the springs) was starting to dry up. Diatoms were hanging on as best they could as the climate was getting drier."

By 6,800 years ago, "plants were no longer growing in the draw...it was beginning to erode." Portions of earlier geological strata were scoured away by the wind. This marked the Altithermal, which lasted locally until about 5,000 years ago, according to Meltzer.

Despite the desert-like conditions, apparently the prehistoric inhabitants near the draw didn't head for the hills.

"People came in and they dug down for water...They had to dig through upwards of a meter of...compact sediments," he said.

"You can actually see the marks of the digging sticks" in the wells.

The wells are about 29 inches in diameter at their tops and narrow to 16 inches at their bases, Meltzer continued. They are some 39 inches deep and usually end in a sandy zone. Although the surface springs had dried up, this sandy layer still carried water.

Meltzer has found six of these wells; two have central boreholes which go down 4 to 6 inches below the wells' bottoms. He speculated that these either helped lift water into the wells through hydrostatic pressure or increased the recharge rate of the wells (by increasing the surface area).

They wells are some 6,700 to 6,500 years old, dating to the beginning of the Altithermal, Meltzer said.

Unfortunately, no artifacts have been found in association with these wells. This summer Meltzer will look for the sites he thinks must go with the wells.

"Water is the limiting factor" to living on the High Plains, even today, he said. If the prehistoric inhabitants could exploit a permanent source of water, they could survive dry periods.

"Perhaps life on the High Plains during the Altithermal wasn't as severe as we've thought it was," Meltzer continued. The Indians might have adapted to it, hunting "drought-resistant" animals such as pronghorn antelope and jackrabbits (not "water-cooled engines" such as bison).

Ironically, "it was the...adaptation to the Dust Bowl of the '30s — digging water wells for crop irrigation — which has dried up Mustang Springs for the second time in 25,000 years, and probably forever," Meltzer said.

Police look for robbery suspect

From Staff Reports

Midland police are looking for a suspect who robbed a woman at knifepoint in her home Wednesday afternoon, according to reports.

Police said shortly before 4 p.m., a man came to the front door of a residence in the 200 block of South I Street and asked to use the telephone. The woman let the man in, he walked to the phone, then pulled a black-handled knife from a pocket and demanded money.

Reports said the man grabbed the woman and ripped her blouse when she said she did not have any money. He then took the wallet from her purse, and ran through the front door. He escaped with $48 cash, police said.

The suspect is described as a white male, 17 to 18 years old, five feet seven inches tall, weighing approximately 150 pounds. Reports said he had brown eyes, collar-length black hair that was combed back, and was wearing a white T-shirt, blue jeans, and blue tennis shoes.

A fiberglass hot tub valued at $5,000, a ½ cord of firewood valued at $75, and a Kawasaki 1000 cc motorcycle were among the items reported stolen from of a residence in the 5200 block of Brazos Avenue Wednesay, police said.

Police do not know how the items were transported from the residence, but investigators do have a suspect in the burglary, which occurred between 5 p.m. Monday and 4 p.m. Wednesay. Among the other items taken were a galvanized tank valued at $300, two sets of miniblinds valued at $450, and a garage door opener valued at $400.

In other reports, police are investigating the burglary of a residence in the 1500 block of South Atlanta Street. Police said a World War I-era rifle valued at $600, a 9mm pistol valued at $300, a videocassette recorder valued at $379, and a navy jacket valued at $50 were stolen. Reports said the burglary occurred between 8:30 a.m. and 12:45 p.m. Wednesday.

Police Roundup

Artwork on display at theater

From Staff Reports

The works of Charlotte Seay and Doris Spires are on display at Theatre Midland today through the run of "The Sound of Music," which closes Saturday.

Works by Ms. Seay include oil and watercolor paintings.

"I find the challenge of working with these two mediums both creative and intellectually stimulating. the approaches to oil and watercolor painting are just the opposite," Ms. Seay says.

"I am increasingly fascinated with our world around us including people, animals and its manmade beauty. I am drawn to ancient primitive discoveries as well as modern technology and abstractions. Perhaps this curosity with opposite attractions accounts for my fascination with the opposite painting mediums."

Ms. Seay has been in numerous exhibits including Celebration of the Arts. She is enrolled in art courses at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Ms. Spires, a professional interior designer, has painted part-time for the past 20 years. She has studied with Ramon Froman, Budd Briggs, William Henry Earle, Doug Higgins and Marian Steel.

Now a fulltime painter in oils of impressionist landscapes and figure studies, she was one of 30 artists chosen to be represented in the Richmond Texas Sesquicentennial Celebration, one of 30 Midland artists chosen to participate in the cultural exchange program with Dongying, China, and one of the artists in The Gallery's "12 Days of Christmas" exhibit.

DEATHS

Lillie Walvoord

Services for Lillie Lee Guice Walvoord of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Friday at the First Baptist Church chapel with the Revs. Charles Elliott and W.K. Schmidt, associate pastors of First Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Walvoord, 86, died early Wednesday at a local hospital.

She was born July 6, 1900 in Winnsboro, La., where she was reared. She was a graduate of Louisiana Normal School and Tulane University. She received her masters degree from Trinity University in San Antonio.

In 1927, she married A.F. Walvoord and they continued to live in San Antonio. From 1942 until 1970 she taught elementary school primarily in the San Antonio area. Before her retirement she taught for more than 50 years in Louisiana and Texas.

According to the prosecutor, Lashford's attempts to discredit Standley's testimony were predictable, but he said jurors could decide the case simply based on their own common sense.

"If they are good enough to drink together, and snipe at people's apartments together, then they are good enough to go to the penitentiary together," he said.

Senators opposed to bill giving Clements power to re-write budget

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sixteen Democratic senators, led by Carl Parker of Port Arthur, called Gov. Bill Clements' special-session bluff Wednesday, pledging to block any bill giving the governor emergency powers to re-write the state budget.

The 16, more than a majority of the 31-member Senate, signed a pledge to oppose so-called budget execution authority. Republican Clements Tuesday threatened to call a special legislative session if lawmakers don't give him the powers before the regular session ends June 1.

"The principal way that we can exert any influence over the direction this state takes is by what priority we attach to where the money ought to be spent," said Parker, a Democrat. "If we're going to give that away to the governor or even to a committee, then we as soon ought to give them our proxy and stay home."

Clements, however, stood firm to his pledge. "He'd better get out his summer clothes," the governor said when told of the letter Parker plans to deliver to him today.

"I have said it about 10 times now that if this Legislature does not address Budget Execution Authority in a responsible manner, we're going to have special sessions to do it."

The Senate last month overwhelmingly defeated a motion to debate a bill that would allow the governor — with the consent of the 10-man Legislative Budget Board — to transfer state funds during financial emergencies. A House version of the plan won the unanimous support of a committee Tuesday and should come up for debate next week.

Voters in 1985 approved a constitutional amendment authorizing budget execution authority.

The 16 senators pledged to "not cede our responsibility to represent our constituents to the executive branch of government in the form of so-called budget execution or other schemes that amount to a surrender of legislative responsibility." Neither Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo nor Sen. John Montford of Lubbock signed the document.

Parker said Clements cannot "badger us into caving into him" by using the threat of a special session. "It would be a total waste of citizens' tax money," he said.

Asked how he would overcome the Senate's opposition, Clements said: "I think that they will realize that their obstinance is not going to accomplish anything and they will adjust their thinking accordingly."

In related budget news, House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd said Wednesday his committee might have to make 5- to 10-percent cuts in all state services — including education — to meet Clements' budget guidelines. Tuesday Rudd abruptly scrapped the panel's previous work on the budget, ordering members to start again next week.

"We looked at the needs and we tried to address all those needs instead of saying, 'Hey, those needs cannot be addressed,'" Rudd, D-Brownfield, said. "We've got to look at the money first and needs second."

But House Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said they would oppose any cuts in education.

Bullock: Adding two legislators to panel that considers state loans 'sleazy' move

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In a move Comptroller Bob Bullock's office called "sleazy," the Senate Wednesday voted to add two legislative leaders to the committee that must approve special short-term state loans.

Treasurer Ann Richards uses the loans, known as cash-management notes, to pay the state's bills when available cash balances don't match scheduled expenditures. Under present law, a three-member committee composed of the governor, treasurer and comptroller must approve the notes.

With then-Gov. Mark White joining Richards against Bullock last fall, the committee voted 2-1 to issue $600 million in notes which will be paid off before the 1987 fiscal year ends on Aug. 31. Richards says she will need to borrow another $1 billion in September to cover the state payroll and payments to school districts.

With only one senator voting no, the Senate Wednesday approved Sen. Ray Farabee's bill adding the lieutenant governor and speaker of the House to the cash-managment note committee. Senators also passed a proposed constitutional amendment allowing the speaker — a member of the legislative branch of government — to serve on what is a part of the executive branch.

Gov. Bill Clements says he "fundamentally, in principle" is opposed to cash management notes but might consider using them "in an emergency situation."

Woman dies, another in critical condition after fat removal

HOUSTON (AP) — One woman died after undergoing surgery to vacuum out fat tissue, while another woman remained in critical condition Wednesday following the same operation, authorities said.

Patricia Howell, 39, who had the surgery performed Friday, died Monday at St. Luke Episcopal Hospital, said her father, Albert Voyteck of Baytown.

Voyteck told the Houston Post his daughter underwent the fat removal treatment because she thought she was "a little overweight."

He said his daughter felt feverish Friday after the procedure, but she didn't go to Humana Hospital in Pasadena, near Houston, until Sunday. On Monday, she was flown to the Texas Medical Center in Houston and then transferred to St. Luke's.

A hospital spokeswoman, who refused to give her name, said Wednesday that Mrs. Howell had undergone suction-assisted lipectomy surgery but would not say whether she suffered complications.

Meanwhile, Patricia Rogers, 31, was in critical condition Wednesday at the hospital, suffering from complications from the surgery, the spokeswoman said. Ms. Rogers also had the surgery Friday.

"Her condition is critical, but that's all I can say," she added.

The surgery involves the insertion of a straw-like tube beneath the skin and suctioning out the fat tissue.

The women's physician, Dr. Hugo Rameriz, told the Post he has performed more than 200 of the procedures and was "caught by surprise" by the complications.

Rameriz told the Post he will stop doing the procedure until he completes an investigation into both cases. The Harris County Medical Examiner's office is also investigating.

Limited-access long distance service not 'ideal'

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Since autumn of 1986, this bureau has received numerous inquiries on a company based in Everett, Wash.

The company, Ideal Products Inc., began business in 1983 as a multi-level marketing business selling health products and catalog merchandise.

Their latest venture has been the addition of a limited-access long distance service being sold nationwide. Two long distance services are being offered, Z-Tel I and Z-Tel II.

Z-Tel I is described by the company as a limited access, time share, long distance telephone service. The monthly fee is $120 and calls are limited to 15 minutes. The company's literature states, "It may be necessary to re-dial several times during peak calling time in order to access an available line."

Z-Tel II, according to Ideal Products, is for customers who want interstate long distance access. For a monthly fee of $100, participants are allocated 250 minutes of long distance calls. Each additional 300 minute block of time can be purchased for $100.

The company requires Z-Tel customers to pay a $100 non-refundable access/hook-up fee and the monthly service fee in advance. Payments may be made in cash, automatic withdrawal from a bank account or by a monthly credit card charge.

Several other companies located in different parts of the country are currently using multi-level marketing techniques to sell long distance telephone services for a flat monthly fee. The service is sold through independent contractors who receive a monthly commission for each new subscriber recruited. An additional monthly bonus is paid for each new subscriber the recruits sign up — and so on down the line of a "pyramid."

Sadly, those at the top of the "pyramid" make most of the money with less and less made by those at the lower level. The Seattle Better Business Bureau reports that complaints are beginning to come in against Ideal Products Inc. Complaints indicate difficulty in contacting the company, non-receipt of funds and an inability to access the lines. For example, one consumer claimed to have dialed 200 times in one day, another tried "round the clock" for two weeks, to no avail.

The BBB warns that consumers should check re-sellers of long distance services with the public service commissions of their state. If they use a multi-level selling plan, check with the attorney general's office to determine the legalities of the plan (laws vary state to state).

The BBB offers two booklets, "Tips on Long Distance Services" and "Tips on Multi-Level Marketing." To request a free copy of these booklets call 1-800-592-4433.

Laser inventor 'underdog'

By SAUL RUBIN
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

LOS ANGELES — If you were placing odds as to which scientist would invent the laser, Dr. Theodore Maiman would have been the long shot.

In the midst of a highly charged and competitive race to develop the first laser in the late 1950s, Maiman had the right theories but the wrong working environment.

His project was not nearly as well financed as those of his competitors. And Maiman's employer, the Hughes Research Laboratories in Malibu, Calif., considered the laser a low-priority project. Finally, Maiman's theories were discounted by a reputable scientist from Bell Laboratories, making Maiman's employers and fellow scientists even more skeptical of his project.

"It was the technical Olympics and I was the underdog. But I smelled victory," recalled Maiman recently from his suburban Marina del Rey apartment, where he has lived for the past 12 years.

CONVINCED HE was on the right path, Maiman forged ahead with his own calculations "until one day I threw the switch and it was working," he said.

Maiman's discovery and his subsequent work in refining the laser have placed him in the favorite's spot within the scientific community ever since his monumental work was completed in 1960.

Most recently, Maiman was named the 1987 winner of the Japan Prize, a prestigious $300,000 award that has been referred to as the Nobel Prize of the East since it was developed by Japan in 1985 to recognize scientific achievement.

This month, Maiman will be traveling to Japan to receive the award where he will meet with the emperor and prime minister.

Winning the Japan Prize is vindication for Maiman, whose discovery was met with skepticism in the scientific community even after he announced his findings. An American physics journal rejected his report and he finally was published in a British science magazine.

For the general public, Maiman's discovery was heralded in some newspapers with bold headlines that read, "L.A. Man Discovers Science Fiction Death Ray."

"Far from a fantasy, the laser is focused, coherent light," said Maiman.

"While light naturally goes all over the place, a laser gathers that light and focuses it upon a tiny area, essentially a point. This creates concentrated energy powerful enough to penetrate a diamond yet precise enough to use for delicate eye surgery."

THE LASER has been a boon for medicine. Laser surgery is now referred to as the bloodless scalpel, because it cauterizes as it cuts and makes surgery less traumatic for the patient.

Lasers also are used to create the clean sound of compact discs and to increase the storage capacity of computers.

For the soft-spoken, avuncular Maiman, 59, some of the applications of the laser have surprised even him. He fully expected, however, that he would be the scientist to make the breakthrough discovery.

"It was the smoothest project I had worked on. It took nine months. And the reason it took nine months was because I had all the tools," Maiman said.

Maiman, whose father was an electrical engineer, remembers tinkering with toasters and pulling apart radios at the age of 13. At 17, he worked at a radio tube company as an electrical engineer where he was challenged by an influential supervisor.

"He encouraged me to be better. He gave me harder and harder jobs, challenging me," Maiman said.

That led to years of study in electrical engineering culminating in a doctorate in physics from Stanford University in 1955 and followed by his work at Hughes on the laser.

Maiman didn't name the scientist who cast doubt on his laser theories but he did not conceal his satisfaction over proving himself right in the end.

"He thought it was impractical. I just thought it was difficult. He had egg on his face in the end," Maiman said.

Maiman said there was no magical moment when he discovered the laser, just confirmation that his model would work, based on numerous calculations he made.

Fascinating new products difficult to find

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Consider this from the "Things I'd like to try if someone would only tell me where to get them" department:

From time to time at the office we get information from various manufacturers on new products they have introduced. And some of these products sound terrific — if only I could find out where to buy them.

Some of the more intriguing are:

■ Runfree, described in its press release as "the ONLY hosiery treatment process that is so effective it has been granted a United States Patent." A one-time treatment with Runfree is supposed to make hosiery "very resistant to breaking, snagging and running. This process does not in any way effeact the feel, look or color of the garment."

The treatment is said to work equally well on nylon, silk and other synthetic fibers. By the way, Runfree is said to be "a clear, odorless, non-toxic liquid."

For more information write Networks Inc., 1309 Harriett Ct., Austin 78756 or call (512) 458-1471.

■ My kids would love this one — peanut butter in a tube. "Goober-Tuber" is produced by Comanche Golden Peanuts and is available in 6-ounce camouflage-colored tubes (for hunters, fishermen and other outdoor types); and "Squeeze Tube" a 3-ounce red and blue tube (I guess for lighter eaters).

According to information from the Texas Department of Agriculture, these squeezeable tubes are "sold in 58 Central Texas communities and in a few locations in the Dallas and the Abilene area" and "should be marketed statewide sometime this spring."

OK, I guess I can wait — I'm not sure my kids can, though.

■ As a true-blue "Star Trek" fan, I wonder about this next product. It's called "Tribbles." Now, any Trekker knows that Tribbles are small, furry, cuddly creatures that purr softly and reproduce at an alarming rate, but these Tribbles are said to be "a brand new, mini-sized, crunchy, chocolate chip cookie."

The press release said the cookies — in original, mint, malt or peanut — are about the size of M&Ms. "Tribbles (R) is a light crunch of cookie surrounding the finest quality chocolate, mint, malt and peanut and boasts 50 percent more pieces than M&M's per package."

Well, I can buy that — if I can every find where they are being sold. I still have trouble with the name, though.

Children's aspartame intake concern for parents

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

Parents who are worried about their small children eating too much sugar should also be concerned about their intake of the sugar-substitute aspartame.

Many mothers are giving aspartame-sweetened drinks to small children to cut down on sugar. According to the Food and Drug Administration, 23 milligrams of aspartame per pound per day is an acceptable daily intake for both children and adults. This amounts to 920 milligrams for a 40-pound child. Five 8-ounce glasses of powdered aspartame-sweetened drink mixes in one day would contain that amount of the sweetener.

Aspartame is sold under the brand names Equal and Nutrasweet and is used in gelatin and pudding mixes, dry cereals, instant coffees and teas, dairy toppings, desserts, dessert toppings, powdered beverage mixes, chewing gum and carbonated beverages.

Last year, the FDA approved the use of aspartame in four new food categories — frozen novelties, frozen and refrigerated juices, ready-to-serve tea and breath mints. Other categories still awaiting FDA approval include bulk frozen desserts, frozen cheesecake, yogurt, flavored milk, wine coolers, fruit spread and syrups.

Parents who are concerned about their children getting too much aspartame can still help them avoid excessive sugar. Try substituting nutritious drinks, such as fruit juice, milk and even water. Rather than aspartame-sweetened breakfast cereals or desserts, try low-sugar varieties of both. In home-prepared recipes, cut down on the amount of sugar used.

Aspartame was approved by the FDA in 1981 after reports of extensive studies established its safety. The FDA says it has received few complaints about any adverse effects of aspartame in children.

Professor invents way to help smokers kick habit

Associated Press

Frank Etscorn says he's not too welcome in his hometown of Franklin, Ky., where his family runs a tobacco barn and the tobacco industry is still king.

Etscorn has developed and holds the patent on a "nicotine patch," a device intended to help cigarette smokers kick the habit.

"It's such a simple thing," said the associate professor of psychology at New Mexico Insitute of Mining and Technology in Socorro. "It can't miss."

The patch, similar to a circular bandage, delivers a controlled dose of nicotine when applied to a smoker's skin.

The patch can be applied to a variety of places on the body, "under the forearm, behind the neck, wherever there's skin," he said.

The theory, he said, is that it's the nicotine in a cigarette to which a smoker is addicted. If the nicotine alone can be administered, it will ease the withdrawal symptoms associated with quitting.

"Nicotine is relatively harmless in the doses found in cigarettes, compared to the tars which cause cancer and the carbon monoxide which leads to heart diseases," Etscorn, 41, said.

"We've known for a long time that if we get smokers and if we put nicotine in their blood, they're less inclined to smoke," he said.

Research using the patch on humans is being conducted in England, and Etscorn said he expects it will be presented to the federal Food and Drug Administration within a couple of years. Several countries already are applying for licenses to distribute the patches, he said.

Etscorn, a non-smoker, was granted the patent last year. He shares the patent with New Mexico Tech, where he also is the dean of students and teaches Chinese cooking and racquetball.

He said the idea for the patch came quite by accident.

"I spilled nicotine on my arm a number of years ago (during an experiment) — several lethal doses," he said. "I wiped it off, but by doing so increased the absorbing area. I got very ill."

Nicotine stimulates a portion of the brain that induces nausea, he said. Smokers, however, have become so accustomed to nicotine they do not feel its adverse effects.

Etscorn, whose work primarily concerns the behavioral effects of drugs, said he realized then the process of quitting smoking could be eased if nicotine was introduced directly into a smoker's bloodstream.

The patch has a number of advantages over other techniques smokers use to stop puffing, he said.

Etscorn said users of nicotine gum, which is available only by a doctor's prescription, sometimes complain of an upset stomach, mouth ulceration and about the taste of the gum.

Another disadvantage of nicotine gum is that the nicotine is absorbed in the stomach and then goes to the liver, where it is broken down or metabolized, Etscorn said. He said nicotine delivered by the patch reaches the brain early and doesn't have a chance to be broken down, thereby more quickly satisfying the smoker's craving.

Etscorn said the patches would be available in three doses ranging from 5 milligrams to 15 milligrams. One cigarette contains about 1 milligram of nicotine.

He said the smoker should hold out as long as possible each time before using the disposable patch, which would be effective about two hours.

Entrepreneurs share success secrets

By SHARON BENOIT
Copley News Service

California has maintained its reputation as the hotbed for stimulating a strong entrepreneurial spirit. Millions of people have come to the Eureka state with determination, a dream and what they believed to be "the big idea." Unfortunately, of all those people, perhaps only one-tenth of 1 percent have been able to take their idea, shape it into reality and succeed.

Why do some succeed and others fail?

If you ask entrepreneurs who have achieved great heights to share their secret ingredient, the answer will not be, "I was in the right place at the right time." Instead, those entrepreneurs will tell you it wasn't easy; there were a lot of sleepless nights; it took years of planning and improving the original concept; there were numerous roadblocks to overcome; one man's opinion against another was deadly; belief in the idea sometimes wavered but never died, and a large dose of hard work went into the follow through.

TWO YOUNG Southern California entrepreneurs — Jeff Jacobson, inventor of nationally distributed "Wrinkle Free," and Randy Miller, co-founder of the internationally popular Original New York Seltzer Co. — agree that earning success is not a piece of cake. Their stories are similar and their products reach millions of different U.S. consumers on a daily basis.

Jeffrey A. Jacobson, 35, is not only an inventor. He's a multitalented marketer, manufacturer, counselor, product designer and conceptualizer. He's also a kid who grew up with an itch to be unique and an air of curiosity, which seemingly tend to be the necessary ingredients in the makeup of an entrepreneur.

Jacobson says he had a difficult time finding his destiny. An overachiever in school, he longed to be a doctor and even went through four years of premed at the University of Southern California. After graduation, however, he took a different road, harder and more uncertain.

His father, Abe Jacobson, had been an inventor of window covering-related products such as a gun that shoots steel drapery pins automatically into draperies and plastic toggle bolts. So, in 1978, after a two-year stint as a private ski instructor, young Jacobson decided to go to work for his father in the manufacturing plant.

In those early days it wasn't unusual for young Jacobson to work 10 hours at the factory and spend four more hours at night school. When Jacobson's father passed away in 1980, he learned quickly how to take over. Within five years, he expanded the factory, advertised his company as a custom manufacturing firm for other company's products, expanded the product line to more than 200 items, all created by others, started inventing and patenting a half dozen new products, ranging from the plastic drapery pins to a system preventing draperies from flaring at the bottom to the internationally popular Blind Brite, a mini blind cleaning system.

IT WAS his most recent invention, Wrinkle Free, that caught the eye of the legendary Alan Rypinski, creator of ArmorAll. Wrinkle Free, an easy spray-and-wipe non-ironing system, was launched in 1986 and is being distributed to major department stores throughout the United States and abroad.

Jacobson needed product marketing assistance, so he sold majority interest in Blind Brite and Wrinkle Free to Rypinski, founder of Incredible Products Corp. Subsequently, Jacobson was named president of Incredible Products Corp., which now markets Blind Brite and other new items that have been developed by Jacobson. In addition, Jacobson serves as senior vice president of Very Incredible Products, a company set up primarily to manufacture and market Wrinkle Free.

To achieve success is not easy, says Jacobson. "You have to have an enormous amount of energy and drive to get a product developed and marketed."

Jacobson suggests would-be entrepreneurs seek out successful entrepreneurs for advice and guidance. "Any intelligent business person would be open to a business opportunity. If they see potential, they'll invest."

If you think you have a good idea, Jacobson feels it's best to know someone you can trust to give you an opinion. If you don't know anyone of this nature, then only share the idea with people who sign a non-disclosure agreement, so they can't steal your idea.

If your idea is decent, go to a patent attorney and file an application for a patent in this country and others around the world — as many as you can afford. Cost is $2,000 to $3,000 per country, per application. Then you should apply for a registered trademark in all of these countries. Figure on spending $150 to $1,500 per each.

KEEP IN mind it takes nearly two years to clear a patent, from the time you file the application. If you put your product on the market before the patent clears, there's a good chance it will be copied by someone with more money, experience and clout.

Jacobson says a good product can be recognized by six key points:

- It makes life easier.
- At first glance, people recognize what it is, what it can do for them, are attracted to it and will buy it on impulse.
- It is simple and innovative.
- Its price points are affordable by all classes of people.
- It can be sold in all classes of trade — pharmacies, supermarkets, department stores or mass merchandisers as opposed to a specialty store.
- It can be purchased more than once by the same person.

Jacobson shares similar views with Randy Miller, co-founder of Walnut, Calif.-based Original New York Seltzer Co. Miller, 22, is unafraid of failure. He'd jump off the top of a 10-story building (and he has) to prove his company's natural-flavored seltzer products are worth buying.

Young Miller says starting out for him and his father was easier because they didn't have to put big money into advertising. "Selling the product and getting it onto the supermarket shelves was the hardest work," explained Miller.

THEIR ORIGINAL old-fashioned seltzer flavor was developed by Jack Miller at the turn of the century. Jack sold seltzer in bottles for more than 50 years. But it wasn't until 1982 that Jack's grandson, Alan, and his great-grandson, Randy, revived the family business. Together, they reformulated the flavors, improved the product and began marketing it to U.S. consumers via a new method of marketing soft drinks, a method that taps into the strong distribution network of 300 or more of the nation's biggest independent beer distributors.

Miller says if you have a good product idea, don't be discouraged with the rough times.

Jacobson and Miller concur that the most common mistake people make is giving up and not following through. Every house in the United States has at least one inventive mind. But few houses have someone who finishes what he or she starts. Money isn't a consideration. If the idea is good enough, you can create the following and capital necessary by showing enthusiasm, protecting yourself and being willing to work harder than you've ever worked before. It's a rough road, but there is a pot of gold at the end of that rainbow.

DEAR ABBY

Man advised to cling to principles

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a normal man of 49, except for the fact that I have never had sex (unless you can count masturbation). I am not gay or anything; it's just that I believe that sex should be reserved for marriage.

I am very much interested in a lady who says she loves me and wants to prove it by going to bed with me — in fact, she has demanded it! I will be 50 soon, and she has given me an ultimatum that if we don't go to bed by the time I am 50, she is breaking up with me.

My church teaches that it is a sin to have sex outside of marriage. What should I do? Am I being old-fashioned? Help me out, please. — A.S. IN NEW YORK

DEAR A.S.: Clinging to one's religious principles is not "old-fashioned." Your reasons for not going to bed with the lady are valid, and if she ends the relationship because you refuse to yield to her demands, you may be better off without her.

DEAR ABBY: I need to get something off my chest that's been bugging me for two years. My mother-in-law keeps a large framed picture of her son and his ex-fiancee prominently displayed in her living room. It's a lovey-dovey pose of the two of them. She has her arms wrapped around him and they're looking at each other — all smiles and goo-goo eyes.

I told my husband it bothered me, so after we were married, he asked "Mom" to please put it away. Maybe he wasn't emphatic enough because it's still there. It hurts my heart to go over there and have to look at it.

I'm sure Mom would rather have had the other girl for her daughter-in-law because I'm a few years older than her son, and I was married before.

Please print this. Maybe Mom will see it and put that picture somewhere else. — HURT

DEAR HURT: And maybe she won't. Ask your husband again to respectfully tell his mother that you hurt when you see that picture, so please remove it. At the same time, present her with a lovely large replacement — one of you and him, framed!

DEAR ABBY: I want to share one good thing that has happened as a result of the AIDS-scare publicity.

My husband of 50 years has been a skirt chaser for 49 of them. Last year he gave up his hobby (women) and I am now "Sweetheart," "Honey" and "Dearie."

After no sex for 20 years, I'm not sure I want to resume sleeping with him again. I find it hard to get accustomed to the feeling that I am really desirable since we have lived like sister and brother for so many years.

Don't use my name. Sign me ... MINNIE HA-HA

DEAR MINNIE: Please, no "ha-has" about a subject as serious as AIDS. Considering your husband's fast-track record, should you decide to resume marital relations, first, make sure he is tested to determine whether he has been infected with the AIDS virus. Then wait another six months, because it could take that long for the virus to show up in a test.

DEAR ABBY: Some years ago you wrote something quite beautiful about people who love deeply never growing old. What was it? — RUTH COMSTOCK, SAN DIEGO

DEAR RUTH: "Those who love deeply never grow old; they may die of old age, but they die young." And thanks for asking because I'm one of those people.

Crafts fair opportunity to sell works

Associated Press

Compared to all other ways of selling, says WOOD magazine, crafts fairs give you an opportunity to sell a lot of your work at one time for full price. When you throw in the extras — such as travel and having fun meeting other craftspeople and viewing their work — it's easy to see why crafts fairs have become so popular.

Selling direct at crafts fairs also means meeting the public, and discovering first-hand what they think of your products — both the good aspects and the bad. There will be plenty of work involved too, in packing, transporting, unloading, setting up, selling and tearing down.

For all this, those who regularly sell at crafts will say there's no guarantee of success. Yet, each year thousands of woodworkers and other craftspeople find crafts fairs just the ticket for selling their work, and they have fun, too.

Club and church bazaars represent the smallest and simplest type of crafts fair. At the other end lie the giant, three- and four-day-long events frequently held in posh metropolitan convention centers.

The majority are the one- and two-day fairs usually held outdoors in summer, with anywhere from 25 to maybe 500 exhibiting craftspeople.

All crafts fairs fall into one of two categories: juried or non-juried. A juried fair has judges who review slides of a crafter's work and either accept or reject it for entry based on their criteria for craftsmanship, originality and suitability for that particular fair. Submit entries to juried fairs months in advance, complete with a non-refundable jury fee.

Most non-juried fairs operate on a first-come, first-served basis. Occasionally they'll set limits on the number of craftspeople selling any one medium (wood, ceramics, prints, watercolors or weaving).

Because crafts fairs not only differ in size, location and attendance, but also in management, amount of promotion and type of clientele, there is no well-defined, tried-and-true technique for picking a fair where sales will be good. Experienced exhibitors, however, have developed working guidelines that help increase their chances of sales success.

Crafts fairs associated with celebrations and festivals often draw fun-seekers rather than buyers.

Check a fair's pedigree. Local arts and crafts councils, civic organizations, or culturally related groups usually sponsor quality shows with a buying crowd.

Shopping mall crafts fairs can bring in lots of traffic, but the hours (typically 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.) can be grueling. And, these fairs are usually held in the off-buying months of April and October, rather than during the summer or around major gift-giving holidays such as Mother's Day or Christmas.

One-day fairs can be profitable, but choose a longer fair to make it worthwhile. Also, look for longevity. First-time fairs may be a gamble.

Check out the economic climate where the fair will be held. A local industry layoff, for example, could mean less money for spending.

Selling work at a crafts fair means retails sales — and sales tax. So, a state resale tax number, available from state tax departments, is needed to do business. With this number, a craftsperson can buy materials without paying sales tax. Sales tax on items sold must be collected and forwarded to the state.

If items are sold outside the crafter's homestate, a resale tax number is required from that state. And sometimes counties require tax numbers too, because they collect taxes independently or on top of those collected by the state.

Most fairs make it easy for out-of-state exhibitors and send the proper forms providing notification of acceptance. Sometimes, forms are available upon check-in. Or, craftspeople can write to the tax department of the state where business is planned.

Kirkpatrick: Formal foreign policy decision making needed

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Irangate, if nothing else, should make for more formal record-keeping and better accountability at the White House, former United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick says.

"I believe the biggest single lesson this and future presidents should draw from problems and failures is the importance of orderly and formal institutional process for foreign-policy decision making," Ms. Kirkpatrick said Wednesday.

She and former Sen. Edmund Muskie spoke at Texas A&M University during the school's Memorial Student Center Wiley Lecture Series.

Muskie, a member of the Tower Commission that investigated the arms-for-hostages swap, said if such an operation had been carried out by the Central Intelligence Agency, "automatically the director of the CIA would have been in position to keep the president informed."

He said the CIA director, like the secretaries of state and defense, have responsibilities beyond their departments.

"They exist not only for the purpose of advising the president on the creation of policy, but exist also to ensure jointly that policy is carefully and effectively carried out," Muskie said. "In this case, that was not done at all."

The annual lectures at A&M previously have attracted notables such as former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and former Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. Former Secretary of State Dean Rusk was scheduled to join Ms. Kirkpatrick and Muskie, but was ill and could not attend.

Ms. Kirkpatrick said it is very important for a president to be clear about what question he is deciding and that options be spelled out by his advisers.

"The president always has the right to overrule his advisers," she said. "But finally there ought to be a written record of what the president has decided so it is clear to everyone what he has and has not authorized.

"And although that is somewhat time-consuming, I don't think there is anything a president and his top cabinet officers do that is more important than making clear policy decisions that guide the conduct of executive departments."

Muskie said if the policies had been written clearly, Reagan would have known that no hostages were released after the initial shipment of missiles to Iran.

"The president, as far as we know, was not aware of that failure," he said.

Ms. Kirkpatrick said the nation's relations with Iran should be geared to a post-Khomeini government.

"I don't think it is feasible to have relations with Iran with the Ayatollah," he said. "He seems to be so absolutely hostile to the United States. But it is important to remember the Ayatolla is mortal. He is an old man."

Muskie said the relationship should not be based on arms supplies but should be long-range.

"It's important in the future to have a positive and healthy relationship," he said. "Iran is strategic in relation to the oil fields and a buffer with the Soviets."

Muskie, however, said he believed Reagan is putting the affair behind him.

"I think the president is off to a new beginning," he said. "What he does with it, we'll have to wait and see."

STATE IN BRIEF

Journalists found dead

AMARILLO (AP) — Preliminary autopsy reports indicate that two Amarillo journalists apparently died of carbon monoxide poisoning while sleeping, said Potter County Justice of the Peace Haven Dysart.

The bodies of KGNC radio news director Steve Harmel and former Amarillo Globe-News reporter Barbara Barton were discovered about 9:45 a.m. Wednesday, police said.

"No foul play is suspected and the deaths are not expected to be ruled suicides," Dysart said.

Police at the scene said an open-flame heater was burning and the windows were closed when officers entered the apartment, said Royce Bodiford, KGNC general manager.

"They had to take a fan up to remove the air in the room to get in there to work," Bodiford said.

Harmel, 35, who worked at KGNC since 1978, was named news director in 1984. He previously worked at stations in Wichita Falls and Lubbock, and was vice president of the Texas Associated Press Broadcasters at the time of his death.

Miss Barton, 29, was employed by the Globe-News from January 1985 to March 1987.

Death sentence reversed

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday threw out the conviction of a man sent to Death Row for using a shovel to beat a man to death.

Bonnie Burnette Erwin was convicted of capital murder in the Thanksgiving 1982 slaying of Patrick Brooks. According to court records, the killing took place two days after Brooks had broken into Erwin's brother's home and stolen cash and pills.

Brooks was beaten with a shovel in a field near Tyler.

In a 6-3 decision, the Court of Criminal Appeals sent the case back to Smith County for possible retrial because the original trial proceeded without a witness subpoenaed by the defense who would have testified that an accomplice had admitted to killing Brooks.

The trial judge said there was no reasonable expectation of locating the missing witness.

IRS seizes car, $8,000

GOLIAD (AP) — Internal Revenue Service agents seized a Lincoln Continental, about $8,000 in cash and gambling paraphernalia in an investigation at the La Bahia Downs racetrack, officials said.

Five IRS agents also searched two suspected bookmakers and their cars Sunday. They were not arrested or charged, but they are under investigation for failure to pay occupational and excise taxes.

Federal law requires professional bookmakers to pay a $500-per-year occupational tax, plus a monthly 2 percent excise tax on all wagers accepted.

The government can seize property and items used to violate IRS tax codes. A federal affidavit said that IRS undercover agents visited the track several times and observed gambling.

George Kirchman, chief deputy of the Goliad County Sheriff's Department said the next time agents decide to raid, he'd "appreciate" being notified first.

Mattox rules on sales tax

AUSTIN (AP) — Only cities with local property taxes can impose the ½ percent sales tax that lawmakers authorized last year, Attorney General Jim Mattox said.

Mattox made the ruling in response to a question from Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Voters across Texas will decide through local elections this weekend whether to approve the ½ percent sales tax increase for their cities.

The tax was authorized last year by the Legislature, but only as relief to offset property taxes.

Mattox also said cities may not simultaneously impose a local property tax and the ½ percent sales tax.

TDC closed for 10th time

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — For the 10th time this year, the Texas prison system has closed its doors to new inmates after the convict population exceeded 95 percent capacity.

The admission of nearly 800 inmates over two days forced the Texas Department of Corrections to close its doors Wednesday, prison spokesman David Nunnelee said.

About 230 inmates were admitted Wednesday and 549 the day before. In contrast, 100 inmates were released Tuesday and 95 more on Wednesday. The prison doors opened Tuesday following a five-day closure.

During the eight previous weeks, the prisons have been open on Tuesdays and Wednesdays and closed the rest of the week. Nunnelee said the chain should remain unbroken this week.

Why coach at MC?

Tradition, support, facility...

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

The machinery is in motion for naming a successor to Jerry Stone, so Midland College basketball fans can only sit and wait for the naming of a new head basketball coach.

Chaparral Athletic Director Delnor Poss met with the five members of the screening committee for the first time Wednesday and set a two-week timetable for the naming of a new coach. After 10 years as head coach, Stone stepped aside to assume the top post at Texas-Arlington early this week.

Joining Poss on the panel are Ralph Way of the Board of Trustees, Betty Gaines from the faculty, Stan Jacobs of the administrative staff, John Hendrix a member of the MC Foundation and Bill Williams, representing the Midland College athletic boosters.

Poss said the screening committee will meet again next Monday to sift through the first wave of applicants taken through the personnel department then meet again later in the week. The committee will then make recommendations to MC President Jess Parrish and the Board of Trustees.

"We hope to have the process completed by April 14," Poss said. "It will be difficult to get it wrapped up before then. We just set up criteria and formal guidelines for applicants at (Wednesday's) meeting. There's so much more to the job than just coaching basketball."

AS TO applicants, Poss would not comment, only to say that he had heard from "high school state championship coaches, major college assistants, junior college coaches and one who has been in the NAIA championships in the last couple years."

Because of Stone's success, the first-rate facility at Chaparral Center and the support of the community, the Midland College position has turned into the premier junior college job in the country. Poss and the athletic community at MC would like to keep it that way.

So with Stone gone, tending to recruiting duties in Arlington, Chaparral assistant coach George Walker has shouldered the burden of holding the program together in the critical time before national signing day on April 8.

"I was in the same situation last year at Houston," Walker said. "Guy Lewis retired and the administration hadn't gotten a coach yet. You just have to tell the kids you're going to get the best man possible. It's just the way the coaching profession is."

But unlike last season when Walker was let go by the incoming Pat Foster at Houston, Walker's future at MC seems secure.

"I've told the coaches that apply that George will be retained," Poss said. "He's done a good job in the year he's been with us — in coordinating, recruiting, running the student dorm, teaching and on the basketball floor. It's only fair to him that we retain him."

So with that assurance, Walker is busy visiting and bringing potential recruits to see the campus. And accepting the added responsibilities of being a one-man staff.

"I'm obviously very pleased to be staying in Midland — I've come to be very accustomed to Midland College," Walker said. "I'm just trying to hold things together right now, with recruits making visits. Of course the reputation here at Midland College and the school's record, facilities and the people involved speak for themselves."

Texas

Todd Duncan

Todd Duncan, 6-1, 155-pound point guard, started every game for Midland College. A LubbockCoronado grad, Duncan was rated as Midland's most improved sophomore by Coach Jerry Stone.

Duncan led the Chaparrals with 101 three-point goals and in field goal percentage with 57, although more than half his shots came from outside the 19-foot-9 arc.

He also led Midland College in free throw accuracy, hitting 87 percent and contributed 113 assists and 38 steals.

Duncan holds the Midland College record for three-point baskets in a game, hitting six three different times.

His 24 points against Herkimer, N.Y., in the NJCAA semifinals led the team, hitting 9-of-10 from the field and 6-of-7 from three-point range.

USA

Darryl Thomas, 6-2, 180, from DeKalb College in Clarkston, Ga., averaged 30.7 points a game and hit 56 per cent from field and 76 per cent of shots from the line. Game high was 46 points and 20 rebounds.

Thomas was Player of the Year for the second year in Region 17 and All-American for the second Year. Also Atlanta Top-off Club Player of Year and Atlanta Consitution Player of the Year for the second year.

DeKalb was 19-14 this year and 23-7 last year. He is undecided on choice of college.

Golf moves to Midland in 4-5A race

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

The District 4-5A boys golf chase heats up Friday, as the front-running Abilene Cooper teams come into the Tall City for the second stop in the four-leg district race.

Midland Lee and Midland High will host Friday's round, which begins just before 8 a.m. at Midland Country Club and includes 14 teams from the seven district schools.

Cooper's I and II teams hold a five-stroke edge over third place Midland Lee after the first 18 holes, but Rebel coach Ronnie Stephens sees Lee as holding the aces in the coming weeks. Both Cooper teams shot 306 last week while Lee scored 311. Midland High was tied for eighth at 335.

"I feel like we can make up some ground this week because our kids play the long courses better," Stephens said. "Cooper is good enough that they could win it anyway, but they're off their home course now."

In fact, the next three weeks will all be played on long courses, MCC this week, Odessa Country Club April 10, and San Angelo's Bentwood Country Club on April 14. Stephens feels that the longer the course, the more his top two players Bobby Gee and Larry Bryan will stand out.

Gee is locked in a three-way tie for the medalist honor with Cooper's Mark James and Vic Overman at 72. Bryan is five strokes back at 77. Also playing on the Lee I team are Mike Abbott, Beau Brown and Randy Milby. They are paired with the Cooper teams and will tee off at 10:07.

At MHS, coach John Ford feels this is the Bulldogs' week to make a move.

Rangers' Sierra has the potential

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Texas Rangers hitting coach Art Howe sees in right fielder Ruben Sierra a potential superstar, but he says it's too early to make a reservation in the Hall of Fame.

"Until he puts the numbers up there, it's careless to compare him with anybody," Howe said. "But hopefully he'll be able to do it and when he does, they'll be comparing others to him."

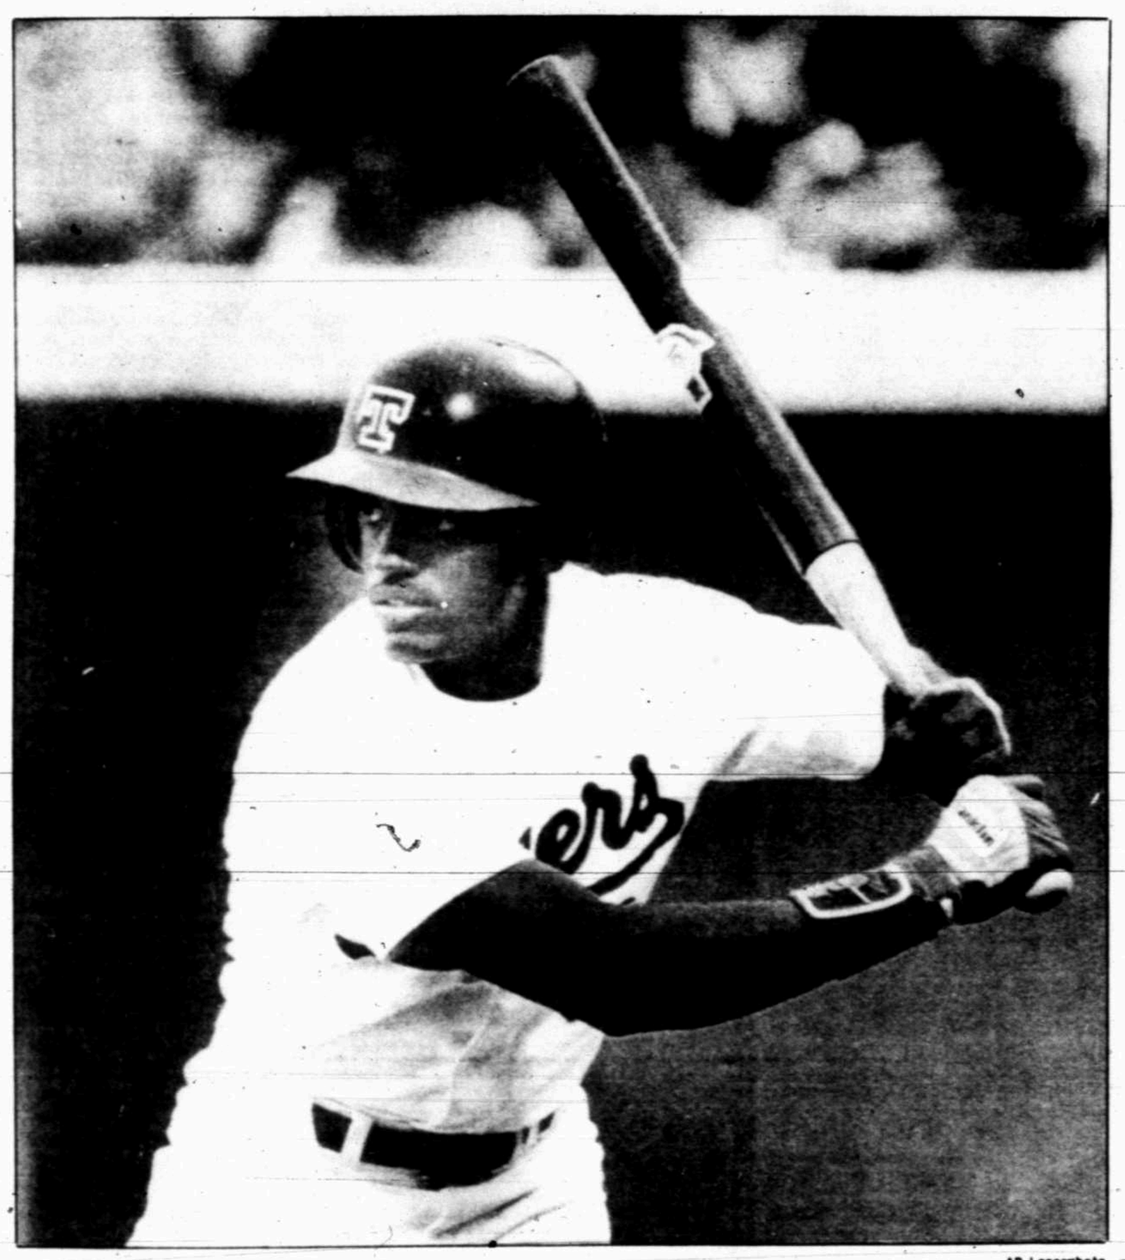

Howe admits the potential for greatness is there.

"You don't see a player like Sierra come along very often," Howe said. "That's why we're so high on him. He needs a little work defensively. In time, with hard work, he'll be a good all around outfielder. But offensively, he gets after it. He's a threat from either side."

Sierra was the second-youngest player in the major leagues when he joined the Rangers May 31 as a 20-year-old. He's confident in his abilities and ready to achieve the greatness forecast for him.

"Nobody teach me to play baseball," Sierra said. "I was born like this. It was something that God gave to me. I think all the time that I want to take advantage of what He gave me. Not everyone has that."

Plainsmen end 'Dogs streak at three with split

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK — No. 5 ranked Lubbock Monterey has three losses on its record this season and, after Midland High won the first game of a doubleheader Wednesday, two of them are at the hands of the Bulldogs.

Bulldog designated hitter Craig Crawford was swinging a deadly bat in the opening game of the day, driving in five runs with his second homer of the season, a triple and a single. His efforts countered three Monterey home runs for a 10-9 victory.

Things didn't go near as well in the second game as the Plainsmen rode an 8-0 first inning to a 17-1 shellacking. The Monterey victory snapped a three-game Midland winning streak over the Plainsmen, dating back to a 1986 bi-district MHS win at Angels Stadium. In the playoffs last year, MHS won 10-4. In the Tournament of Champions earlier this year, the 'Dogs dumped Monterey, 4-2.

In the opener, the Bulldogs gave up three runs in the bottom of the first inning and used Crawford's two-run homer to help spring into a 4-3 lead in the top of the third.

MHS went led 7-4 after four innings and scored three more runs in the top of the fifth. Monterey added two runs in the fourth and sixth innings and one in the seventh to come up one short of the Bulldogs.

With the split, Midland High's season record goes to 10-9 while Lubbock Monterey is at 13-3.

Gooden given chance for cure

Associated Press

While Dwight Gooden's past, present and future will be examined at a drug treatment center, his teammates start the defense of a World Series title searching for some answers of their own.

The New York Mets announced Wednesday that their three-time All-Star pitcher had tested positive for cocaine use and agreed to seek treatment rather than be suspended by Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

This follows a year plagued by off-the-field troubles, including an ugly altercation with Tampa police last Dec. 13, resulting in Gooden's arrest.

It was not the kind of news the Mets would have expected three years ago, when a special — and seemingly unflawed — rookie took the mound at the age of 19. He seemed, the experts said, destined for the Hall of Fame.

But today, he heads for a drug rehabilitation center and, if successful, a chance to fulfill his dreams.

"He has one chance, if he seeks help," Ueberroth said. "... I'm stepping back from any penalty phase. If there's a recurrence, there'll be no second chance.

"This young man sought help and he's going to get help, the best that there is," Ueberroth said. "We'll let the medical people decide when he's recovered or has a good chance of recovery so he can play baseball again."

The Mets and others don't know when Gooden will be ready to play baseball again.

Lee's Pertile signs with Eastern New Mexico

From Staff Reports

PORTALES, N.M. — Midland Lee defensive back Anthony Pertile, the 1986 District 4-5A Most Valuable Defensive Player, signed to play football with the Eastern New Mexico University Greyhounds.

"We're really excited about having him," said ENMU assistant football coach Hank McClung, a former Midland High football player. "He's a great football player. We already have some Midland boys here, both secondary kids and projected starters for next year, Andre Mayfield and Mike Wallace. Wallace has been a two-year starter for us and is going into his senior year now. We like to get those Midland kids. They come from quality programs in a quality district."

Anthony Pertile

"I went down for a visit and I felt like the climate, atmosphere, the city, just everything, was what I wanted so I made my decision and that's where I'll be playing," said Pertile.

And, the two Rebels already there was a factor in his decision.

"That gives me a better chance because I know the two who play there. We're pretty good friends," said Pertile. "There's a chance to have three rebels starting in the backfield and that gives me a little more push to make the team."

Mayfield and Wallace played for the 1983 Rebels that finished second to Converse Judson in the state playoffs. Mayfield didn't finish the season, suffering a leg injury during the playoffs.

Also from this area this year, the Lone Star Conference Greyhounds, signed Crane offensive tackle Devin Beardslee.

Pitchers have rough day

Associated Press

It was a difficult day for some well-known pitchers in major league training camps.

In addition to the revelation Wednesday that 1985 National League Cy Young Award winner Dwight Gooden would be entering a drug counseling program and not available to the Mets for an indefinite period, several veteran pitchers saw a definite end to their careers.

Pete Vuckovich, the 1982 American League Cy Young recipient, ended his second attempt at a comeback from arm surgery by retiring. Also quitting was left-hander Britt Burns of the New York Yankees, who could not recover from a hip problem.

Bill Caudill, once one of the premier relievers in the majors, was released by the Toronto Blue Jays. And Moose Haas was placed on the 21-day disabled list by the Oakland Athletics because of rotator cuff woes, the same ailment which first sidelined Vuckovich.

In a major trade, the Cardinals acquired all-star catcher Tony Pena from the Pirates for outfielder Andy Van Slyke, catcher Mike LaValliere and pitcher Mike Dunne.

VUCKOVICH HAD arm problems since his 18-6 season in 1982. He was 0-2 in 1983, sat out the 1984 season when he underwent surgery and was 6-10 in 1985.

He retired last spring, then came back to pitch at Class AAA Vancouver, where he was 2-1 with a 1.26 ERA. Called up by the Brewers in September, Vuckovich was 2-4 with a 3.06 ERA. The Brewers were so encouraged they invited him to camp as a non-roster player.

But it was a rough training camp for Vuckovich. He was sidelined for 10 games by a rectal cyst and was 0-2 with a 12.38 ERA in three appearances. In his last start, he gave up 10 hits and six runs in two innings.

"I don't feel in my mind I'm capable of competing at a consistent level that is conducive to the ball club's winning," the 34-year-old Vuckovich said. "In my mind if you can't go out there and do the job consistently, you become a liability more-or-less to the ball team and I don't want to become a liability, so I think it's time to take a hike."

The end of Burns' career came suddenly. He never pitched for the Yankees, who acquired him from the Chicago White Sox prior to last season. Burns, an all-star with Chicago, went on the disabled list during spring training last year and underwent hip surgery last May.

"I know that I can't get results that would be satisfactory to me," Burns said. "I couldn't help the Yankees."

The 27-year-old left-hander was 70-60 in a little over six years in the major leagues. He made the AL All-Star team in 1981.

Like Burns and Vuckovich, Caudill has known the good times. But his career began to nosedive when he was traded to Toronto by oakland in 1984 for Alfredo Griffin and Dave Collins.

The 30-year-old right-handed reliever had consecutive 26-save seasons at Seattle, then followed with 36 saves at Oakland in 1984. But he managed only 14 saves in his first season with Toronto and had just two saves and a 6.19 earned run average in 36 1-3 innings last year.

THIS SPRING, Caudill continued to struggle, allowing 20 hits and 14 runs in 15⅔ innings.

Haas got off to a great start last season, going 7-2, then hurt the rotator cuff. He missed the rest of the 1986 season and has not recovered sufficiently. The Athletics are contesting whether they are responsible for paying Haas, claiming he didn't fully disclose his condition.

Spring Training

Angels 5, Padres 3

Ace right-hander Mike Witt went eight innings for the Angels, allowing eight hits and three runs, striking out six. Gary Pettis' run-scoring single in the sixth inning snapped a 3-3 tie. Pettis, in a 4-for-33 slump when he faced Storm Davis with Jack Howell on third base, sent a sharp single into right field to cap a three-run rally.

Bucs, Testaverde reach agreement

BOSTON (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde has reached a verbal agreement with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers on a multi-year contract that could be signed by Friday, his attorney said Wednesday.

Bob Woolf, the Boston-based attorney, said the deal is for more than $8 million. It reportedly would make the Miami quarterback the NFL's third highest paid player.

"Hopefully, by the end of the week, he'll be a Tampa Bay Buccaneer," Woolf said.

The Bucs, who have the first pick in the NFL draft April 28, said the contract has to be finalized.

"We are very pleased with the progress of negotiations so far," said Phil Krueger, assistant to club owner Hugh Culverhouse. "A contract of the magnitude that would be involved here is very complicated and there are still some items to be resolved."

Further talks were scheduled Thursday, Krueger added.

Woolf's disclosure of a verbal agreement came one day after he said he was optimistic that one could be reached, "although we don't have one yet."

A source, who did not want to be identified, said Tuesday the contract would be the richest ever for an NFL rookie and would place Testaverde behind only quarterbacks Jim Kelly of the Buffalo Bills and Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins as the highest paid players.

Kelly's contract reportedly is for $8 million over five years, while Marino's reportedly is for $9 million over six years. The source said the contract for Testaverde wouldn't be much less than Marino's. It is believed to be a six-year deal.

The expected signing of Testaverde would allow the Indianapolis Colts, who have the second choice in the draft, to sign a player they intend to choose. However, they have indicated they might trade the pick.

The Bucs have had 2-14 records in three of the last four seasons and a 12-52 mark over that stretch.

In 10 regular-season games last year, Testaverde led the nation in passing efficiency and threw for 2,557 yards and 26 touchdowns. But in a Fiesta Bowl loss to Penn State that cost Miami the nation's top ranking, he completed 26 of 50 passes for 285 yards, five interceptions and no touchdowns. He was sacked four times.

GOODEN

The club has initially placed Gooden on the 15-day disabled list. But team spokesman Jay Horwitz said: "We don't know when he'll be back."

San Diego's Steve Garvey thinks the Mets would be wise to keep Gooden out the entire season.

"I've always advised for people with such problems to sit out a year," Garvey said. "Every fellow that's ever had a problem and come back (right away) continued to have problems."

Alan Wiggins, a teammate of Garvey's on the Padres, entered a drug treatment program in 1982 after his arrest for investiagtion of possessing cocaine. Again, in 1985 Wiggins entered a drug rehab center for a cocaine addiction. Later that season, he was traded to Baltimore.

COMING BACK is difficult, but it can be done.

In 1983, Kansas City was a second-place club in the American League West, but All-Star center fielder Willie Wilson sat out the first 44 days of the 1984 season after being suspended by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn for cocaine use.

The Royals stood in 6th place at 13-20 on May 16 before Wilson was reinstated. The Royals went on to an 84-78 season and the AL West Division championship. Wilson finished the season at .301 and 44 runs batted in from his leadoff slot.

On his first night back, May 17, in Chicago, Wilson walked and scored in the first inning.

"You make a mistake and people seem to take you in," Wilson said. "I was nervous ... I didn't think about prison, cocaine or anything. Nothing but winning."

The Mets, considered a week ago as a heavy favorite to repeat as world champions, now head into the season without their No. 1 starter and without workhorse reliever Roger McDowell, out for at least six weeks following a hernia operation earlier this week.

Just how much Gooden's absence will mean to the Mets depends on how long he's out.

"We've lost a key cog in our machine," said first baseman Keith Hernandez, who admitted in 1985 that he had been addicted to cocaine and had undergone treatment. "What's most important is the machine is second to the Doc's well-being."

EVEN WITHOUT Gooden (17-6 in 1986) the Mets' starting rotation consists of Ron Darling, Bob Ojeda, Sid Fernandez and Rick Aguilera, a combined 59-24 last season. Two hard-throwing youngsters — Randy Myers and David Cone — will compete to be the fifth starter in Gooden's absence.

Should the Mets fall off by 17 games, a record of 91-71 should be enough to stay in contention in the NL East.

But Gooden has been the Mets' stopper, as well as the team's main drawing card, since arriving in the majors straight from Class A.

In 1984, his rookie season, he struck out 276 and followed with a Cy Young season of 24-4 and 268 strikeouts in 1985.

His special ability to whiff batters with a 92 mph fastball and a vicious curve started to bring in fans to Shea Stadium in record numbers. Some even posted orange "K" cards to herald a Gooden strikeout.

But last summer, amid rumors of drug problems, the strikeouts were fewer and sometimes only a few tattered cards were drapped from the "K" Corner.

Then, in the World Series, with a chance to rescue a subpar season, Gooden lost two games and had a 8.00 ERA against Boston.

How will the Mets respond to the loss — however long — of one of their million-dollar superstars?

"I have the feeling the club will dig in and play harder," General Manager Frank Cashen said. Added Aguilera: "We've got to pull together."

The Mets will open the season next Tuesday against Pittsburgh, but Gooden won't be there. Only time will tell if the Doctor will be making house calls at Shea this season.

Cubs 6, Mariners 5

The Cubs broke a 5-5 tie in the top of the ninth when Gary Matthews, who homered in the second inning, sliced a one-out double to right off loser Jerry Reed and was replaced by pinch-runner Bob Dernier. Paul Noce scored Dernier with a triple.

Frank DiPino worked out of a one-out, bases-loaded jam in the bottom of the inning to save the game.

Giants 5, Indians 4

Three hits by Eddie Milner, including a seventh-inning triple that drove in the winning run, paced the Giants. Milner's triple off reliever Doug Jones scored Bob Brenly, who had walked to start the seventh.

Chili Davis homered for San Francisco.

Athletics 8, Brewers 7

Ron Cey and Carney Lansford hit two-run homers and Tony Phillips drove in a pair of runs for Oakland. The A's built an 8-2 lead and had to withstand a five-run Milwaukee eighth inning and a bases-loaded situation in the ninth.

Right-hander Jose Rijo worked the first seven innings for the Athletics. He allowed five hits and two runs. B.J. Surhoff had three hits for the Brewers, and Billy Jo Robidoux added a two-run homer.

Phillies 10, Blue Jays 9

Ron Roenicke's bases-loaded, two-run double sparked a six-run Philadelphia ninth inning. Down 6-4, the Phillies rallied as Mike Schmidt walked to start the ninth off loser Dan Gordon and scored following singles by Chris James and Lance Parrish.

Toronto third baseman Kelly Gruber misplayed a grounder to load the bases and Roenicke followed with a two-run double.

A groundout by Milt Thompson, an RBI double by Juan Samuel and a run-scoring single by Von Hayes provided the other runs.

Tigers 5, Rangers 2

Tigers ace Jack Morris struck out nine and yielded just four hits and one run over seven innings and Darnell Coles doubled in two runs.

Pirates 8, Mets 7

Jim Morrison's pinch home run in the bottom of the ninth won it for Pittsburgh. Morrison led off the inning and hit the first pitch from Gene Walter over the fence.

The Mets tied the score 7-7 in their half of the ninth on RBI doubles by Lee Mazzilli and Clint Hurdle.

Expos 6, Royals 1

Mitch Webster had three hits, scored two runs and stole three bases and Jeff Reed hit a two-run homer for Montreal. Jay Tibbs pitched seven strong innings for Montreal, allowing six hits, striking out four and walking none. Kansas City starter Danny Jackson gave up 12 hits and all six Montreal runs in seven innings.

Twins 6, Astros 4

Kent Hrbek homered and hit two doubles, drove in two runs and scored three. Hrbek doubled in a run in the third inning just before scoring on a three-run homer by Gary Gaetti. In the fifth, Hrbek doubled with two outs and scored on shortstop Craig Reynolds' throwing error. Hrbek finished his big day in the seventh by lining a pitch from reliever Dave Meads over the right-field fence for his second spring homer.

Cardinals 6, White Sox 5

Rookie Jim Lindeman hit two home runs and Steve Lake had a two-run shot for St. Louis. Lindeman will start in right field for the Cardinals this season.

Reds 2, Dodgers 1

Dave Concepcion's two-run single in the top of the eighth inning carried the Reds to victory.

Dodgers right-hander Orel Hershiser pitched seven shutout innings, while Reds starter Ted Power, an ex-Dodger, pitched five scoreless innings, scattering three hits and striking out five.

Red Sox 10, Braves 2

The Red Sox snapped the Braves' five-game winning streak, led by rookie-catcher Danny Sheaffer with four conecutive singles and three RBI, and Jim Rice with two doubles and a single and two RBI. Wade Boggs, Spike Owen and Bill Buckner had two hits each.

SIERRA

Sierra's second major league at-bat was a right-handed home run. Three days later, he got his first left-handed hit, another homer.

"A lot of people are going to look at me and I want them to say, 'This guy is good. He's going to be one of the greatest players'," Sierra said.

"I talked with Ruben at the end of last season and told him what we expected of him this year," Manager Bobby Valentine said. "He told me he didn't want to be just one of the great ones, he wanted to be the best."

Sierra went 2-for-3 in his first major league game, but he hit only .194 in his first eight games before getting started. In his final 48 games, Sierra hit .313 to raise his average to .264 for the season.

He drove in 55 runs, set a club record with 10 triples that also was second in the American League behind Cleveland's Brett Butler. He committed six errors in 213 chances.

"You can't compare him to anyone," Rangers spring training Coach Toby Harrah said. "You just have to say this is Ruben Sierra and he's his own kind of ball player."

"He has a great arm, great speed, and power from both sides of the plate," Harrah said. "His swing gets a little big at times, but he'll adjust to that. What I liked about him is at game time he kicks it (intensity) up a couple of notches. He just has everything you want in a ball player."

Breaking .500 key to Dallas' success in '87

IRVING (AP) — Dallas Coach Tom Landry says the deflated Cowboys will have a big 1987 NFL season if they can climb over the .500 mark.

"If we're better than a .500 team this year, then we've been successful," Landry says in the club's preseason prospectus which will be released later this week. "And once you get over the .500 mark, anything can happen."

The Cowboys were 7-9 last year and missed the playoffs for only the third time in 20 years after a 6-2 start in the first half of the season.

"Our goal this year is to get back into the race," Landry says. "We can't even think about the playoffs, or the Eastern Division championship because we were completely out of the running. The way we played the last eight games, we're no different than any other losing team."

Landry says the Cowboys need to take things more seriously.

"We've just got to develop a mad temperament," Landry says. "Do you want to be a losing team or not? I don't know of any team that has come off a long winning streak and then not stayed down for awhile. That's the challenge we have."

The Cowboys split with the World Champion New York Giants last year but a wrist injury suffered by quarterback Danny White in the second game against the Giants started Dallas' slide.

"That was a terrible stretch we had the second half of last year," Landry says. "We've never had a stretch like that before in 27 years. I'm talking about being mentally on the downslide for that long a time.

"Even in the early years, we might not win for three or four games, but we were always on a positive note. We've been knocked down before and come back, but we've never been on the skids like last year. And that is bad."

He adds "The toughest thing we are going to have to do is regain confidence."

Landry continues "the other thing we must do is find young, impact players, preferably on defense. Drafting late in the first round all those winning years just caught up with us. It's hard to get those real impact players unless you draft early in the first round."

Landry says his offensive line is under reevaluation but concludes "our biggest improvement must come on defense. Defense is where we need athletes."

Landry says he will be spending more time with the defense this year and let Paul Hackett run the offense.

"The players have to work more, the coaches have to work more because there is no easy way out of this thing," Landry says. "I'll be spend more time with the defense.

"We've aged in the defensive line. We didn't have the pass rush last year, the power that we had in the 1970s and 1980s."

Landry says he thinks the offense will be OK if White's broken wrist heals.

"We'll be in good shape if White comes back okay," Landry says. "This offensive system is a natural for him. That's why we were so successful early last year."

Septien wants to concentrate on job

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys kicker Rafael Septien showed up for the team's minicamp this week, and said he's more concerned about his physical condition than a charge of aggravated sexual assault on a minor.

"Everything is going to be resolved," said Septien, 33. "Obviously, it (being charged) is not good, but I don't even think about it. I just try to forget things like that, come here and work.

"I want to concentrate on my job. I know that nothing is going to happen," the 10-year Cowboys veteran said.

Team officials are not speculating on how the charge might affect Septien's Cowboys career.

"Right now, we have no feelings," said Coach Tom Landry. "We don't consider him guilty unless he is proven guilty. Until that happens, we have to count on him to be our kicker."

Septien was originally scheduled to stand trial Monday, but his attorneys, seeking more time to prepare their case, filed a motion last week to delay the start of the trial until April 27.

Meanwhile, it's up to Septien to present his case to the Cowboys, and he said physical condition is his only worry.

The Cowboys last year selected Arizona's Max Zendejas in the fourth round. But Septien has had little trouble retaining his job in training camp, although he struggled late in the 1986 season with back and groin problems.

Dallas also signed two free-agent kickers in Brian Franco, formerly of the United States Football League's Jacksonville Bulls, and Kerry Brady of the University of Hawaii.

"The only concern we've had the last two years were the back problems that (Septien) has had," said Landry. "They hurt him in the playoffs two years ago, and last year he had some problem with it, so the concern is always there.

"His condition will not get better, but his back is something that if he takes care of it, he should be able to play with it," he said. "But we've signed some kickers like we've signed everything else. You've got to have competition."

Wyoming hires Dees from New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — University of New Orleans Basketball Coach Benny Dees, who led his school to its first national ranking and first appearance in the NCAA tournament this season, has accepted the head job at Wyoming, a school spokesman announced.

Earlier, Dees had called a press conference for Thursday morning.

"Coach Dees called and left a message on my answering machine telling me to cancel the press conference, that he is going to Wyoming," Sports Information Director Mike Bujol said.

Dees was unavailable for comment. The telephone at his home in suburban Slidell was busy.

At Wyoming, Athletic Director Paul Roach said Southwest Missouri Coach Charley Spoonhour turned the Wyoming job down.

Roach would not confirm that Dees had been hired, saying only that he hoped to be able to hold a Thursday press conference to introduce the new coach.

Spoonhour, the only other candidate known to have been interviewed for the Wyoming job, was 28-6 this year and 87-37 over four years at the school.

The job came open when Jim Brandenburg resigned to move to San Diego State. Brandenburg was 176-97 over nine years at Wyoming and 24-10 this year.

On Friday, Dees said he had not been offered the job and might refuse it if it were offered. On Sunday, he said he would still be at New Orleans next year.

Pacers defeat Bulls to clinch playoff berth, 99-94

Associated Press

Now that the Indiana Pacers have clinched their first NBA playoff spot since 1981, they want to take the next step.

"I told the team I don't want us to feel a sense of accomplishment," Coach Jack Ramsay said. "We want to get better. We've got 10 games to get better. Crazy things can happen in the playoffs."

"When we get in the playoffs, if we stay healthy and play like we're capable of, I think we can go a long way," said forward Herb Williams, who will play his first playoff game in his sixth pro season. "Other teams have learned to respect us. They know we can score from inside and outside."

The Pacers beat Chicago 99-94 Wednesday night for their sixth straight victory, moments after mathematically clinching a postseason berth when Cleveland lost to Philadelphia.

"This is just the beginning," said Williams, who scored 17 points against the Bulls. "I've been waiting for this ever since I got here. The thing we've got to do now is win some more games so we can beat out Chicago and Washington and get a better position in the playoffs."

Nets 121, Knicks 120

Buck Williams scored 10 of his 26 points in the fourth quarter, including a tip-in with four seconds left, lifting New Jersey over New York.

NBA Roundup

Williams, who also had 15 rebounds, leaped over Knicks forward Louis Orr to tip in the winning basket after Mike Gminski missed a jumper from the top of the key.

Celtics 103, Bullets 86

Larry Bird scored 30 points and added 17 rebounds and 15 assists, both season highs, and Boston held visiting Washington to 34 points in the second half.

The Bullets, who have scored just 161 points in their last two games, clinched a playoff berth because Cleveland, ninth in the Eastern Conference, also lost.

76ers 108, Cavaliers 99

Charles Barkley had 25 points and 17 rebounds as Philadelphia eliminated Cleveland from playoff consideration.

Barkley scored 17 points in the first quarter, helping Philadelphia lead by as many as 18 in the period, but Cleveland cut the deficit to one at halftime and pulled ahead 77-70 in the third quarter. The 76ers responded with a 10-0 spurt to take the lead to stay.

Bucks 104, Hawks 92

Ricky Pierce scored 12 of his 22 points as Milwaukee overcame a nine-point halftime deficit by outscoring Atlanta 27-15 in the third quarter.

Sidney Moncrief added 10 of his 20 points in the fourth quarter, eight of them as the Bucks extended their three-point lead to 89-77 with a 17-8 run to start the period. The Hawks got no closer than six points in the final six minutes.

Jazz 107, Spurs 104

Utah erased a 10-point deficit in the final seven minutes as Darrell Griffith scored 19 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter against San Antonio.

With the Spurs leading 104-103, John Stockton stole a pass by Jon Sundvold and tossed to Karl Malone, whose layup with 18 seconds left put Utah ahead 105-104.

Suns 117, Rockets 104

Walter Davis scored 35 points and Larry Nance had 10 of his 26 in the fourth period for Phoenix against Houston.

Akeem Olajuwon scored 13 of his 25 points in the third quarter, but Davis responded with 15 as the Suns maintained an 88-84 advantage after leading by five at halftime

Eight points from Nance and three from Davis put Phoenix ahead 107-98 with 3:42 remaining in the game. After the Rockets closed the gap to 109-104 on Allen Leavell's 3-point goal with 1:56 left, the Suns reeled off the final eight points.

Dollar rises

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against all major currencies in early European trading today and some dealers said the pressure appeared to be off the U.S. currency. Gold prices rose.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar continued to edge up from Tuesday's record low.

The U.S. currency closed at 147.05 yen, compared with 146.90 on Wednesday, and 145.65 on Tuesday, the lowest level since modern exchange rates were established in the late 1940s.

Later, in London, the dollar moved up again and was quoted at 147.07 yen.

In London, the pound hovered near the $1.60 level that British Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson said Wednesday was the correct rate for sterling.

The pound, slipping against the dollar, was quoted at $1.5920, cheaper than $1.6035 late Wednesday.

On Wednesday, Lawson also quoted a target figure of 2.90 West German marks to the pound. The rate early today was 2.91 marks.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Wednesday:

—1.8265 West German marks, up from 1.8190.

—1.5260 Swiss francs, up from 1.5200.

—6.0780 French francs, up from 6.0485.

—1,301.00 Italian lire, up from 1,295.75.

—1.3087 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3085.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $419.20 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Wednesday. At mid-morning today the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $420.25.

In Zurich, the bid price was $420.40, up from $419 late late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.19 to close at a $bid 420.44.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.30 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Wednesday.

Dow rises

Stock prices ended mixed after falling in early trading. After the Dow Jones industrial average had fallen by about 25 points, a spurt of buying by bargain hunters lifted the blue-chip index to 2,316.05, for an 11.36-point gain.

The surging stock market produced some standout losers in the first quarter, including a "trufflet" manufacturer and a company that dismissed a third of its board. Meanwhile, offshore drillers, metals and mining concerns and home builders stood out among the big winners. Aided by steady, low interest rates, underwriting volume soared in the first quarter on a record volume of $87.7 billion in corporate stock and bond issues.

Treasury bill rates fell sharply, in response to heavy buying by foreign central banks and the late afternoon announcement that BankAmerica and Morgan were no longer accruing interest on their loans to Brazil.

More banks up prime lending rate

By MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer

Several big banks have followed Citibank and Chase Manhattan Bank in raising the prime lending rate to 7.75 percent from 7.5 percent.

Wednesday's increases gave another boost to the dollar, which had been weakened earlier in the week by fears of a potential trade war between the United States and Japan. The dollar finished higher Wednesday against most major currencies, including the Japanese yen, in late New York trading.

The Commerce Department, meanwhile, reported that construction spending rose 1 percent in February as strength in the non-residential sector offset a drop in housing construction.

The February advance was the first increase since a 1.5 percent rise last October and came despite weakness in the residential sector.

The prime, a benchmark rate used to set interest on a variety of corporate and consumer credit, had stayed at 7.5 percent since Aug. 26. The jump to 7.75 percent was the first since banks raised the prime to 13 percent from 12.5 percent in June 1984.

The major pressures to boost the rate came from prospects of higher inflation and from the rise in short-term interest rates during recent months.

The sharp fall of the dollar has been a major factor in the rise in short-term rates. A weak dollar reduces the returns on dollar-denominated assets for foreign investors, who then seek to offset the drop with higher rates from banks that borrow billions in the global money markets.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III called the latest increase in the prime rate a "temporary blip upward" that would not cut into growth.

"I don't think it will have a significant adverse effect on our economy in general," Baker told a House Appropriations subcommittee.

The dollar had plummeted after the Reagan administration announced plans Friday to impose stiff tariffs on up to $300 million in electronic products from Japan.

The administration retaliated against what it claimed was Japanese refusal to abide by a mid-1986 agreement to stop "dumping" computer chips in other countries at bargain-basement prices and to increase markets in Japan for U.S.-made chips.

While saying it will go ahead with its plans for the sanctions, the administration has agreed to a Japanese request for emergency consultations, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

A team of Japanese trade specialists will arrive in Washington on Friday for negotiations with their counterparts in the departments of State, Commerce and office of the U.S. trade representative, the officials said.

However, the officials held out little hope that the dispute could be resolved in time to avert the proposed duties on Japanese products from taking effect on April 17.

IBM tops Forbes valued stock list

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp., despite a blow to its stock price in 1986, again earned the top spot on Forbes magazine's annual list of companies with the highest stock market value.

IBM, the world's leading computer maker based in Armonk, had a stock market value of $72.7 billion at the end of 1986, according to the survey to be published in the April 27 issue of Forbes. The figure is obtained by multiplying a company's year-end stock price by the number of its outstanding shares.

Second on the list was New York-based Exxon Corp., whose market value grew 25 percent last year to $50.3 billion, the magazine said.

Forbes said IBM retained the top ranking for the third consecutive year despite a 24 percent drop in the value of its stock, which finished last year trading around $120 per share. The stock has since rebounded to the $150 range.

The magazine said Merck, a Rahway, N.J.-based pharmaceutical and chemical company, jumped 17 places in the 1986 rankings, thanks to a 75.8 percent increase in the value of its stock.

Besides IBM, the only other top-10 company whose stock value slipped over the year was General Motors, whose stock fell 5.9 percent, Forbes said.

The combined 1986 stock market value of all 500 companies on the list was $1.8 trillion, up 14.3 percent from 1985.

FORBES TOP TEN

- IBM, $72.7 billion.
- Exxon, $50.3 billion.
- General Electric, $39.2 billion.
- American Telephone & Telegraph, $26.8 billion.
- General Motors, $20.9 billion.
- Du Pont, $20.2 billion.
- BellSouth, $18.4 billion.
- Philip Morris, $17.1 billion.
- Merck, $16.9 billion.
- Amoco, $16.7 billion.

IBM competitors not afraid of Big Blue

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp.'s toughest competitors in the personal computer business assert there is nothing Big Blue can do to dislodge them from their turf.

The world's biggest computer company aimed to shake loose its competitors today with a new line of personal computers that could mark the biggest development in PCs since IBM introduced its first, hugely successful machine six years ago.

Last year, makers of IBM-compatible personal computers for the first time racked up bigger sales than IBM itself. Its share of the U.S. market for PCs and compatible machines slipped to 41.8 percent from 57.6 percent a year earlier, according to International Data Corp., a market researcher.

The IBM standard has taken on a life of its own and will endure even if IBM tries to lead customers in a different direction, rival companies said in advance of the announcement.

"If IBM deviates from the standard significantly, and customers don't see real, live, immediate benefits from those differences, then they will not buy IBM products," said Michael Swavely, vice president of marketing for Houston-based Compaq Computer Corp.

IBM's PCjr and PC Portable are examples of computers that didn't meet the test of the market in spite of the IBM label. Production of both was discontinued within two years of introduction.

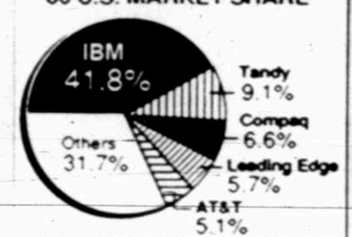

"Just because it's IBM, it doesn't mean they always come out with the right products, or the best products," said John Sullivan, vice president of Leading Edge Hardware Products Inc. of Canton, Mass., which sells PCs made by South Korea's Daewoo Group.

"Three or four years ago ... people were afraid to go with anything but IBM. They thought there was a black magic to building computers," said Ed Juge, director of market planning for Tandy Corp. of Fort Worth, Texas. "That's not true anymore."

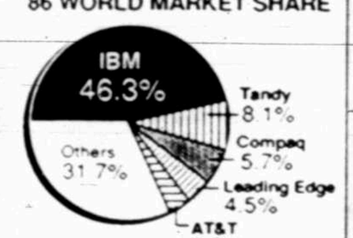

Financial analysts and consultants agree that IBM is in a tough spot, but they say it can still damage its rivals by dropping prices, offering extra features and simply creating uncertainty in the market.

As shock of increase in prime rate wore off Wednesday, a falling Dow quickly adjusted by day end.

Wall Street adjusts to prime increase

By JOHN CRUDELE
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average fell at the rate of one point a minute during much of the first half hour of trading Wednesday, but the shock of the increase in banks' prime lending rate quickly wore off, and stock prices were mixed at the close of trading.

At its worst level early Wednesday, the Dow was off about 25 points before bargain hunters seized the opportunity to buy stocks. A spurt of buying at the end of the day helped the Dow to close with an 11.36 point gain, at 2,316.05.

"Actually, it was a surprise," said Michael Metz, a market analyst with Oppenheimer & Co., of the market's resilience. "Everyone thought they would take it to the cleaners."

The stock market's reaction, according to traders and other experts, calls into question the importance of the quarter-point rise in the prime to 7¾ percent, which was initiated on Tuesday by Citibank and matched Wednesday by other banks.

The prevailing opinion on Wall Street, they said, was that the banks had made a business decision in lifting rates and that the action did not reflect the conditions in the economy.

Wall Street would have been more upset if borrowing costs were rising because economic demand had picked up or because the Federal Reserve Board had made a decision to raise interest rates. In either case, investors would have become worried that the higher rates would endure and inflationary pressures might increase.

Larry Wachtel, a market analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., said traders believed the increase in the prime rate, the first in two and a half years, was "simply an isolated incident."

"It was not the beginning of a drive toward higher rates," Wachtel added. "It was simply banks trying to get at the home equity borrower and get some extra income."

The banks especially need the income infusion, market analysts say, because of the pressure they are feeling from bad loans, especially those to Latin American nations.

FSLIC bailout voted

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON--Texans will be "ecstatically happy" about a House Banking Committee vote Wednesday for a $5 billion bailout of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., according to Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas.

Coupled with the infusion of money is a strong section on reform and authority for the FSLIC to exercise "forbearance" toward ailing savings and loan institutions, permitting them to work out of their financial difficulties..

"It will give Texas depositors, home buyers and savings and loan institutions a new lease on life," said Bartlett, a member of the Banking Committee's panel on financial institutions, who had pushed for $15 billion in funding.

Bartlett said he will make an attempt to increase the funding for FSLIC when the bill comes to the House floor soon. The FSLIC is said by the General Accounting Office to be bankrupt, under ordinary accounting principles.

Commission cannot seize equipment

By Jim Warren
Reporter-Telegram Austin

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission cannot sieze drilling equipment at abandoned sites when agents go to plug wells, the attorney general ruled Wednesday.

In 1985, the Legislature passed a law giving the RRC authority to take equipment from abandoned drilling sites to help defer the cost of plugging or replugging old wells. Commission Chairman Mack Wallace said he asked Attorney General Jim Mattox for a ruling on the law because "I had some doubts about it."

"In the back of my mind," Wallace said, "I had a suspicion it might be unconstitutional."

In his request for a legal opinion, Wallace asked Mattox a number of questions, including whether property could be ceased if the owner was in bankruptcy or if other parties had liens on the equipment. Mattox refused to answer the questions, saying the whole law is "facially unconstitutional" on the grounds that it denies due process.

Jim Morrow, director of the commission's oil and gas division, said agents have not confiscated any property under the 1985 law because they were waiting on Mattox' opinion.

Independent oilmen aren't the only ones who think they're getting the fuzzy end of the public opinion lollipop stick when it comes to prime time television portrayals.

"Except for 'professional criminals,' no one commits more crimes on prime time television than the businessman," notes S. Robert Lichter, a professor of political science at George Washington University, who recently completed a survey of such things. The bad boys of commerce are seen an average of 14 times a weeks as criminals. And they don't limit themselves to "white collar" crimes, Lichter says.

Unscrupulous capitalists are often seen brandishing guns; augmenting legitimate profits with drug, gambling or prostitution activities on the side; or menacing rivals and threatening the general welfare.

A recent Public Broadcasting System documentary, "Hollywood's Favorite Heavy: Businessmen on Prime Time TV" examined the apparent anti-business bias of prime time programming. Not only are the evil-doers sought out and brought to justice during typical weekly detective series often businessmen, but continuing characters from Angela Channing on "Falcon Crest" to Cliff Barnes, Jeremy Wendell and J.R. Ewing on "Dallas" are characterized by a "The end justifies any means" mentality.

"Foul!" cry business leaders, from Mobil Corp. — which underwrote a portion of the PBS documentary's costs — to Boone Pickens, who said, "On television, if you make money, you're dishonest."

Network executives defend prime time portrayals of corrupt titans of industry as "pure entertainment, escapism." Adds George Schweitzer, a vice president of communications for CBS, "We feel our audience is intelligent enough to know these characters do not represent what American business is all about."

GWU's Lichter says "there is a lot of evidence that people tend to fuzz the boundaries between reality and television entertainment."

Don't forget this is the same public who sent more than a half a million letters asking medical advice to Robert Young when he played Marcus Welby M.D.

Magazine publisher, raconteur and world-class collector Malcolm Forbes takes a more pragmatic view: "I think some of the real-life crooks we read about do far more to undermine the public image of business men than TV."

I think he may be right. With Ivan Boesky, Nahum Vaskevitch and Dennis Levine, who needs Blake and Alexis Carrington?

A recent Associated Press-Media General poll said only 20 percent of the respondents have been adversely influenced by recent Wall Street insider trading scandal stories. Nevertheless, I think a great many others, like myself, become disillusioned when people who are making more money than I'll ever see — and doing it legally — cross the line into unadulterated greed.

Unwilling to settle for multi-million dollar trading commissions and legal arbitrage (and greenmail) profits, Boesky, Levine and their ilk had to go one better — using and sometimes selling confidential information to enhance their profits.

On the other hand, the U.S. Treasury Department maintains a "Conscience Fund" for citizens who start feeling guilty about having underpaid their taxes, swiping a pen from a government office or using government postage to mail personal letters.

Last year, contributions to the "Conscience Fund" were up by more than half over 1985. Americans chipped in more than $380,000 to assuage their guilt and sleep easier. That's less than four-tenths of one percent of Ivan Boesky's fines and penalties.

It's nice to know there is a sense of monetary morality in some corners of the world.

Arkla, International Paper end dispute over pipelines

LITTLE ROCK (SWN) — Arkla, Inc. and International Paper Co. announced that they have jointly filed a proposal with the Arkansas Public Service Commission which, if approved, will resolve differences between the two companies over IP's proposed construction of natural gas pipelines for its paper mill facilities at Pine Bluff and Camden, Ark. The Public Service Commission must approve the proposal for it to go into effect.

Arkla Energy Resourees, AER, Arkla's pipeline division, currently delivers all of the natural gas consumed at the two mills. Under the proposal, Arkla will agree to support IP's plan to build the alternate pipelines, while IP will provide Arkla with the ability to maintain its historical service levels through providing AER with the right to deliver an equivalent quantity of competitively priced supplies to other IP facilities.

Because the proposal would result in IP continuing to receive the same overall level of service from AER as it has previously, its adoption will not have an adverse effect on AER's other customers.

John A. Georges, chairman and chief executive officer of International Paper, said, "This agreement, when implemented, will mutually benefit both companies. International Paper will continue to be a major customer of Arkla.

"The energy supplied by these two pipelines will help enhance the economic viability of our mills. This, in turn, will benefit our employees, suppliers and the communities associated with these facilities."

Mack McLarty, chairman of the board, president and chief executive officer of Arkla, Inc., said, "Knowing we can depend upon International Paper as a reliable customer will enable us to maintain a predictable level of service and gives us – and our other customers – some necessary reassurances."

McLarty added, "We believe the combined efforts of the two companies will provide positive benefits to the State of Arkansas, both from an economic standpoint and from the standpoint of helping us maintain economic service to all of our customers."

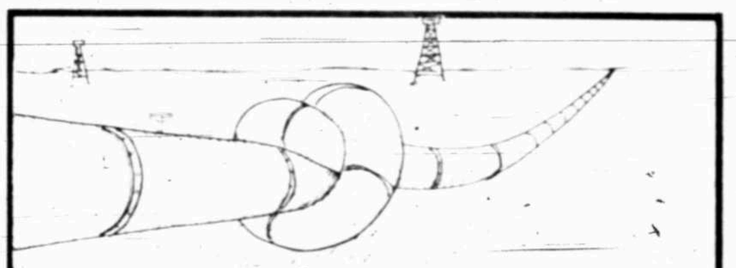

McLarty said the location of the other IP facilities along Arkla's pipeline network in Bastrop, Mansfield and Springhill, Louisiana; and Texarkana, Texas, was an important factor in completing the transactions.

American Airlines threatens to fire strikers, trouble-makers

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Flight attendants who strike or participate in other work actions against American Airlines Inc. after a mediated cooling-off period ends April 24 may be fired, company officials say.

A stern letter issued Wednesday from M.P. Underwood, assistant vice president-flight services, also tells American flight attendants that if no contract agreement is reached, it will force employees to adhere to new, more productive work rules.

The new rules, first proposed by the company March 11 during contract negotiations, would be implemented in stages between April 25 and June 1.

Under federal law, the union is able to strike at 11 p.m. CST April 24. Union leaders say instead of striking they will instigate unspecified work actions.

Patt A. Gibbs, president of the Association of Professional Flight Attendants, said Wednesday, "we will use any other means, limited only by the law and our imaginations, to achieve a fair contract."

The company's letter states, "Should the union or individual flight attendants seek to interrupt or denigrate our service, we shall take such additional actions as may be required. Purely as a precaution, we have accelerated our flight attendant recruitment and training.

In the event of a strike or other job action, "the accelerated training schedule will allow us to replace those who participate in such activities," the letter continues.

Higher wages, also a part of the company's proposal, would not be granted until flight attendants ratify the new contract and the APFA halts its "corporate campaign" against the company, the letter says.

A federal judge in Fort Worth refused Wednesday to order American to rehire 20 flight attendants fired last week for passing out leaflets at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

U.S. District Judge David Belew denied the 11,000-member Association of Professional Flight Attendants' request for a temporary restraining order that also would have protected other attendants from similar disciplinary actions.

Belew scheduled a hearing April 13 to hear evidence in the case.

The attendants were fired for distributing a leaflet to which American's top managers have objected.

Belew's ruling is the latest development in the escalating battle between American and the Eulessbased union over a new labor contract.

Central to the contract talks is the union's desire to do away with the two-tier wage system under which attendants hired since 1983 are paid on a significantly lower scale than those hired before 1983.

On March 22, American fired 17 flight attendants who were distributing leaflets at D-FW the company found objectionable, and fired three more the following Wednesday.

Since then, the attendants have continued to distribute the leaflets at D-FW on a sporadic basis, but most have worn Halloween masks to conceal their identities.

Gulf States presents financing

AUSTIN (AP) — Gulf States Utilities Co. has asked the Public Utility Commission for prompt approval of a $266 million financing plan that would put a $39.9 million rate increase into effect.

The commission in February granted the utility the rate increase, or a little less than half of the $82 million the Beaumont-based company said it needed to avoid bankruptcy. The PUC, however, stipulated that Gulf States secure a $250 million line of credit before the emergency rate increase could be implemented.

In its filing Tuesday, GSU listed six items totalling $266 million that they believe meet the PUC's requirement.

The commission last month also said that, in addition to lines of credit, cash obtained from sources other than Texas ratepayers could be counted toward meeting the $250 million requirement.

Business group meets Friday

The Odessa Texas Association of Business chapter will host a luncheon meeting Friday to discuss current issues before the Texas legislation, including the tort reform debate.

Special guest for the meeting will be State Representative Gary Watkins, 75th District. Watkins will present the status of current legislation, updating the group on tort reform and other issues.

The luncheon is set for 12:00 noon at Mission Dorado Country Club and the cost is $15.00.

PBPA will meet with governor

Represenatives of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association along with other oil and gas associations in Texas will meet with Governor Bill Clements for a conference on energy matters.

Harry Spannaus said the group hopes to diseuss the prospects for legislative relief for the ailing oil on the federal and state levels and the role the oil industry can play in Texas economy.

FSLIC

He is encouraged because the proposal for a $15 billion fund was defeated by only one vote, 25-24.

Banking Committee Chairman Fernand J. St. Germain, D-R.I., said the $5 billion will be sufficient for initial relief to the depleted insurance fund and permit Congress to come back to the issue in two years if more money proves to be needed.

A GAO study found that the growing number of insolvent S&Ls around the countryhss left FSLIC with outstanding obligations to thrifts and depositors that would put it about $3 billion in the red. The corporation sinsures about $900 billion worth of deposits at more than3,000 thrifts, but has only $1.4 billion in cash left in its primary insurance fund.

ADJUST

Robert Barbera, chief economist at E.F. Hutton & Co., said the stock market's 36-point drop on Friday and 57-point decrease on Monday probably pre-empted any reaction to the prime's rise.

"The prime rate change," he contended, "is really just an extension of psychology, rather than being a new factor."

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose a scant 0.15 yesterday, to 166.04, while the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index gained 0.67, to 292.38. The average share rose four cents on the Big Board.

But losing issues on the New York Exchange swamped gainers by a wide 1,051 to 582 margin.

Volume widened to 182.6 million shares, compared with the 171.8 million shares that traded on Tuesday, when stock prices rose.

IBM was the best performer on a quiet active list, gaining 1, to 151⅛. The stock has been strong in anticipation of the company's scheduled introduction Thursday of new personal computers.

The American Stock Exchange index fell 1.01, to 331.65, while in over-the-counter trading the Nasdaq index lost 1.71, to 428.34.

GM will temporarily shut down plants

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp., fighting slumping car sales and loss of market share to its two top U.S. competitors, will shut down six plants for a week, temporarily laying off 21,600 workers, GM officials said Wednesday.

GM will close plants April 6-13 in Wentzville, Mo., Pontiac, Flint, North Tarrytown, N.Y., Oshawa, Ontario and the Detroit enclave of Hamtramck, said GM spokesman Jim Smidebush.

Despite widespread and varied buyer incentives, industry leader GM's depressed car sales consistently dragged down the U.S. industry's performance in the first quarter of 1987.

"They're not even close to solving the problem with those production cuts," said Michael Luckey, an analyst with Shearson Lehman Brothers in New York. "I'm sure you can look for more temporary plant closings in May and June.

"The dealers are just choking on cars now. There are way too many cars out there."

The shutdowns will reduce GM's second-quarter production by 20,880 cars. GM reportedly plans to cut 100,000 cars out of its second quarter, but Luckey estimated the automaker would need to cut closer to 200,000 cars to stem growing inventories.

GM had a 90-day supply of unsold cars March 31, far higher than the accepted industry norm of 60 to 65 days, Luckey said.

As of March 20, GM's 1987 sales were 25.4 percent below their 1986 level, and GM's share of the domestic car market, at 51.5 percent, was substantially behind its 1986 share of 57.6 percent.

Meanwhile, No. 2 Ford Motor Co. has gained market share from 24.2 percent at this point in 1986 to 27.7 percent so far in 1987, as did No. 3 Chrysler Corp., whose share grew from 13 percent in 1986 to 13.6 percent as of March 20.

The shutdowns will mean temporary layoffs for 2,500 workers in Flint, 4,900 in Wentzville, 3,000 in Hamtramck, 1,600 in Pontiac, 6,100 in Oshawa and 3,500 in North Tarrytown.

GM reported earlier that 1,600 workers would be laid off in Oshawa, but later revised the number.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986 Los Angeles Times Syndicate

FRIDAY, APRIL 3, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your popularity will bring you more invitations than you can accept in the year ahead. The time is right for making a dramatic break with the past. You feel more confident and are motivated to handle your money with care.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Time-Life founder Henry Luce, West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, singer Tony Orlando, actor Marlon Brando, actresses Doris Day and Marsha Mason, "Golden Child" star Eddie Murphy, Angels' speedster Gary Pettis, St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Tim Conroy, singer Wayne Newton, football great Lyle Alzado, 49ers' receiver Russ Francis.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good time for travel, discussions and spiritual growth. Remember the lessons of the past. A friend's honesty produces better ideas and work changes. A close relationship is best kept secret.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A friend's change of luck is heart-warming. Someone's extreme generosity may be linked to guilt feelings or a lack of self-confidence. Your popularity is at an all-time high. Have fun!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Expect good financial news. The termination of a relationship is surprisingly painless! Someone who plays instructor may need some help, too. A less aggressive attitude will lead to better work relationships.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Contact with a teacher, visitor or counselor helps you solve an employment problem. You may find it difficult to reach influential people now. Get rid of some of the deadwood in your life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Being too forceful will only offend those you most want to impress. New friends have a lot to offer. Interviews, phone calls and letters keep things jumping. Sincerity counts big in romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial negotiations could be time-consuming. You need to remain calm. Be patient and check out all written agreements. Collaborating with a friend could lead to a whole new relationship. Welcome suggestions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Try to remain calm even if appointments get cancelled at the last minute. A new sense of purpose helps you ally yourself with influential people. Evening presents a grand opportunity. Make your move!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your initiative and courage open new doors for you now. Consider making some changes in your appearance. A new look will give your ego a quick boost. Plan some additions to your wardrobe.

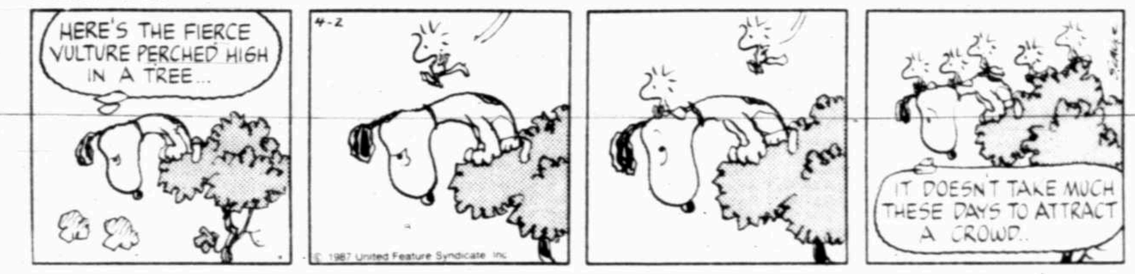

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Refuse to go out on a financial limb to satisfy a friend's whims. Partnerships of all types are favored. Avoid acting in haste, especially if your mate would be affected. Talk things over.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends encourage you to start a new course of study. Change is not as difficult as you feared. A collaborative venture could result in new financial gains. A compromise brings domestic bliss.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Aggressive action will not help you achieve your goals today. If you press too hard, you could alienate a potential ally. Back off a bit. Loved ones share wonderful news. Host a celebration.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Promising investment opportunities suddenly crop up. Property transfers are favored. If a loan is needed, your chances for obtaining one are excellent!

Opening lead: King of

We have stressed this principle in the past, but cannot do it often enough: Before committing yourself to a specific line of play, try to learn as much as you can about the hand.

South had a reasonable weak two-bid at any vulnerability. West's overcall cannot be faulted and North's jump to game was equally impeccable.

Against four spades West led the king of hearts and continued with the queen before shifting to a trump. East followed up-the-line to the first two tricks. Declarer's problem was obvious. Since there was no way to avoid losing a club trick, he had to bring in the diamond suit without loss. That could be accomplished if West started with a doubleton king or, if West had length in the suit, his diamonds included the K10. What was West's holding in the suit?

After drawing a second trump, ending in dummy, declarer led a low club to his jack and West's king. West returned a club to the ace, and both defenders followed when declarer ruffed a club. A trump to the king provided the entry to ruff dummy's last club, on which West discarded a heart. The crucial point of the hand had been reached. How should declarer play the diamonds?

From the play to the first two tricks, it was probable that West had started with six hearts. He had shown up with exactly one spade and three clubs, so he had to have started with three diamonds. Declarer's course was clear. He led the jack of diamonds, which was covered by the king and taken by the ace. A trump provided the means of returning to hand and the nine of diamonds was finessed hopefully. When it held, 10 tricks were in the bag.

Dean Martin's family, friends gather at memorial for his son

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dean Martin and his family gathered with friends Wednesday to remember the entertainer's son Dean Paul Martin, the actor-pilot killed with another flier during a California Air National Guard practice mission.

The private 25-minute military service at Los Angeles National Cemetery in West Los Angeles included a fly-over in missing-man formation of planes from the 163rd Tactical Fighter Group, the unit in which Martin was a captain.

Among about 200 people attending the service were longtime show business friends Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr., and Martin's former comedy partner, Jerry Lewis.

Security guards kept reporters about 200 feet away.

Also attending were Lucille Ball, her husband, Gary Morton, and her son, Desi Arnaz Jr., comedian Milton Berle, composer Henry Mancini, actor-singer Shaun Cassidy, Danny Thomas, and Martin's former wife, ice skater Dorothy Hammill.

Martin was eulogized by actor James Woods, who told mourners he talked by telephone with his friend the day before he was killed, and quoted him as saying:

"Jimmy, the proudest achievement of my life was to bring Alex into this world.... If I die today, because of Alex, I would die a happy man."

"Alex" referred to Alexander, Martin's 12-year-old son by Olivia Hussey, his first wife. The youngster watched his father takeoff the day of the fatal flight.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Garrett Morris, whose line about baseball was "berry, berry good" on "Saturday Night Live," plans a pep talk to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I'm going to tell them to keep their eye on the ball," Morris said Wednesday. "They had a bad year last year. Pedro Guerrero was injured. I hear he was carrying a bag of money to the bank and he sprained his leg."

" 'Baseball's been berry, berry good to me' is what most people seem to remember about my five years on 'Saturday Night Live,' " Morris said.

He said he will revive his impression of Chico Escuela for the pep talk before the Dodgers play the California Angels on Sunday.

Morris now appears regularly on NBC-TV's "Hunter" series. "I play the street character Sporty James, an information broker, some call him a snitch, but he's not an evil character," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — With a chorus of "There's No Business Like Show Business," Mary Tyler Moore, Lynn Redgrave and the rest of the cast of the Broadway comedy "Sweet Sue" moved across the street to the show's new home.

"I've never changed theaters within the same city, least of all across the road," said Ms. Redgrave, 44. "It's kind of fun."

The cost of moving approximately 40 feet across West 45th Street to the Royale Theater was around $70,000. The Music Box Theater was leased to a new production, "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," necessitating the move.

The two stars, carrying stuffed animals, a garbage can, a chair and other assorted theatrical necessities, stopped traffic Wednesday as they made the trek from old home to new.

"Sweet Sue" opened at the Music Box Jan. 8 and made its Royale debut Wednesday afternoon with its 94th performance.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The new Ms. Senior America is a 63-year-old grandmother who is working toward her pilot's license.

"You can bake only so many batches of cookies and read so many books," said Mabel Hoffman of Chaneysville, Pa., who was selected among 22 contestants Wednesday in the sixth annual pageant.

Ms. Hoffman performed a humorous monologue while wearing a costume that depicted a female character on her right side and a male character on her left.

In the evening-gown competition, she wore a bright red gown encrusted on the top with sequins.

"This is the dress that knocks their socks off," she said.

During the "philosophy of life" portion, she said that even though her skin may have wrinkles, "I will not lack enthusiasm and wrinkle my soul."

Ms. Hoffman said she and her husband, Frenis, ran a 104-acre farm before retiring several years ago. They have a son, daughter and four grandchildren.

Along with her new title goes a $500 commercial speaking course, a portrait, week-long stays at several resorts and nationwide appearances.

The pageant is run by Senior America Inc., a nonprofit social-services organization based in New Jersey.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Grand Ole Opry humorist Minnie Pearl has been selected for the American Cancer Society's annual Courage Award presented by President Reagan.

The award is the cancer society's highest award given to an individual who has had cancer.

It was being presented in a White House ceremony today.

In 1985, Miss Pearl underwent a double mastectomy and implantation procedure because of breast cancer. She urges women to have regular breast examinations, became a volunteer with the cancer society and visits post-surgical mastectomy patients in the hospital.

Miss Pearl, 74, has been performing on the Grand Ole Opry since 1940. She appears regularly on The Nashville Network's "Nashville Now" variety show and is a regular on "Hee Haw."

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Maxim Shostakovich, son of the Russian composer Dmitri Shostakovich, is making his debut in TV commericals and says it's for a good cause.

He said Wednesday that he filmed grocery ads to help raise money for the finacially strapped New Orleans Symphony, where he is conducting and his son, Dmitri, is playing the piano in a four-night "Shostakovich Times Three" series.

The advertisement is a 30-second spot for Schwegmann supermarkets showing the tuxedo-clad conductor emptying a grocery bag to find coffee, other goods and a clarinet inside. With a shrug, Shostakovich leans into the camera and says, "Making groceries is like making music," and then he blasts a note.

"It's my first time making a commercial," Shostakovich said. "It's not a major work, of course, but if it helps the orchestra, then I am happy to do it."

NEW YORK (AP) — For three years, he's leered and she's sneered, but fans of "Moonlighting" knew all along there was passion beneath the bickering, and a record 60 million of them tuned in to see that they were right.

According to ratings from the A.C. Nielsen Co., the ABC comedy detective show got its biggest audience ever for Tuesday's episode, billed as, "No more between the lines. Tonight's between the sheets."

Sanford's switch may draw fight

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Sen. Terry Sanford was praised by fellow Democrats here and attacked by the GOP governor for deciding to change a vote that briefly sustained the president's veto of an $88 billion highway bill.

Sanford said his decision to change his mind and stand with his party instead of defending what he had perceived as his state's interests showed he was "not just a senator from North Carolina, but a United States senator."

The 69-year-old freshman senator said in an interview before Wednesday's vote that he would vote to sustain the veto because North Carolina was not getting its fair share of money under the formula in the bill.

"I'm not prepared to come up here and the first thing I do is take $150 million away from the North Carolina highway fund.... It's a North Carolina issue," Sanford said.

On Wednesday, Sanford voted against overriding the veto, handing Reagan a victory by a slim margin.

But after a private meeting with Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia, Sanford announced he would vote to override on a second ballot, which was postponed until today.

Fuhrmann Boulevard runs four miles along Lake Erie, at the southern edge of Buffalo, N.Y. An $88 billion highway bill could provide $12.5 million for its rebuilding and redevelopment.

Buffalo pushes for project

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — President Reagan called it pork barrel, but a $12.5 million highway project could help turn the city's lakefront from a strip of vacant warehouses, coal heaps and decrepit grain elevators into a gleaming development.

The 3.7-mile Fuhrmann Boulevard project is seen by supporters as the crucial first step in plans for Buffalo's Harborfront.

Those plans call for nearly $70 million in public and private funds to build homes, a maritime museum, a cruise-ship harbor, a Great Lakes research center, offices, recreation facilities and a lakefront promenade.

"It's an economic development tool that would assist the western New York region to recover," said Sharon West, manager for waterfront development for the Niagara Frontier Transportation Authority.

"It could also help change the region's image like waterfront development has helped in Baltimore and Toledo."

"The development and the reconstruction of Fuhrmann Boulevard go hand-in-hand," she said. "To have the development, you have to have the highway."

The project's status is unsure in the wake of Wednesday's Senate vote not to override President Reagan's veto of an $88 billion highway bill. A second vote was scheduled for today.

Without the money, thousands of Buffalo construction workers will be without work this summer.

"It's going to be catastrophic to us," said Ronald Fino, business manager of Laborers International Union of North America, Local 210. "We might as well close up our office because we aren't going to be working."

The Fuhrmann Boulevard project faces an uncertain future at best, Rep. Henry Nowak, D-Buffalo, the project's main sponsor along with Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., said Wednesday.

"It would mean a terrific upsurge in the number of people who could enjoy the Buffalo waterfront and give the city an opportunity to increase its tax base," Nowak said. "I think they've taken a broad brush and painted every project as pork barrel, but to me, a lot of the projects have a broader impact beyond transportation."

Reagan leads long-distance lobby to avert veto override

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — From Air Force One between Washington and Philadelphia, on the runway at Andrews Air Force Base and in his living quarters at the White House, President Reagan burned up the telephone wires on behalf of his highway bill veto.

The busy day on the telephones was recounted by presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater after Reagan returned to the White House late Wednesday — still telephoning.

The president and his chief of staff, former Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker Jr., watched on television in a study adjoining the Oval Office as the Senate voted 65-35 to sustain Reagan's veto of the $88 billion highway measure.

But it wasn't over yet by a long shot.

As Reagan and Baker walked out onto the South Lawn to board the presidential helicopter to begin a speaking trip to Philadelphia, a reporter noted the president's buoyant stride and called out, "You must have won."

However, Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd had thrown a wrench in the works by moving to reconsider the vote.

"There were enough votes to sustain, but we don't know and I don't know how long the process is going to take," Reagan said. "I was very pleased, but it still isn't final."

"At this point the challenge was to keep the votes we had and pick up a vote or two if we could," said Fitzwater.

After the helicopter flight to Andrews, the Maryland air base just outside Washington, Reagan boarded Air Force One and lost little time telephoning Senate Republican leader Bob Dole to confer about the parliamentary tangle on the Senate floor.

He also telephoned several senators about their votes during the flight to Philadelphia, Fitzwater said.

In Philadelphia, he was kept busy making speeches at a medical forum and a constitutional bicentennial meeting at Independence Hall.

GENERAL NEWS

Incident shows Marine guards 'immature'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arthur Hartman, who was U.S. ambassador to Moscow when female Soviet spies allegedly seduced American Marines there, says the incident shows the Marine guards are too immature to be entrusted with security at the mission.

"I've been driven to the conclusion that they are too young and lack a certain maturity," said Hartman, 61, who retired from the State Department last month after serving as ambassador to Moscow for five years.

Hartman, a 39-year veteran of the State Department, expressed dismay at what he called the "tragedy" of three Marines accused of involvement with Soviet women believed to be agents of the Soviet KGB security service.

Military investigators said Wednesday it was likely other cases of fraternization between Marines and Soviet women would be disclosed soon. The investigators also have been authorized to interrogate the guards with lie-detector machines, according to Pentagon sources who said the investigation may be expanded to focus on the security of other American embassies in communist countries.

Two of the Marines, Sgt. Clayton Lonetree and Cpt. Arnold Bracy, are charged with allowing KGB agents to prowl through secure areas in the Moscow embassy, where they allegedly saw the names of Soviet citizens who cooperated with the CIA and codes used in the transmission of secret communications.

The third Marine, Staff Sgt. Robert Stanley Stufflebeam, is not accused of espionage, but is being investigated for allegedly breaking the rule barring contact with Soviets by having an affair with a Russian woman and then lying about it.

The incident caused enormous damage to U.S. intelligence and security interests, according to American officials, and one Pentagon source said investigators would interview guards who served earlier tours in Moscow and other Soviet bloc posts, seeking to uncover similar cases.

William Kunstler, one of Lonetree's lawyers, called the espionage charges against his client "preposterous on the face of it."

"I think he had a relationship. A lot of the Marines had relationships. It looked sort of like an open house there at the embassy," Kunstler said in a telephone interview.

The entire contingent of 28 Marines is being withdrawn as a "precautionary" measure, Pentagon officials say. American diplomats said the transfers would begin late this week and be completed within a month.

For the time being, all sensitive communications are being hand-carried to the American consulate in Frankfurt to avoid Soviet intercept, State Department officials said. And according to published reports, Soviet ability to read coded traffic gave them an advantage in the superpower summit last October in Iceland.

U.S. officials now think that throughout the summit, "We played poker with the Soviets, and they were looking at a mirror over our shoulders," Time magazine quoted an unidentified State Department official as saying.

Hartman did not comment on intelligence losses, but did urge that "a more mature group" be assigned to guard the embassy.

The State Department is investigating the sex-and-spy scandal to determine whether to replace all or some of the Marines with trained security officers from the department, according to administration sources, who like the others quoted in this story, spoke only on condition they not be named.

"Embassies of some other countries, such as Britain, use retired diplomats or non-commissioned officers" for security, Hartman said in a telephone interview.

The Marines, he said, "are really trained for combat and not retrained for the type of secure and disciplined work needed in Moscow."

Another former Moscow diplomat said the embassy was rife with stories about Marines "getting obstreperous in the bar or smuggling in a 15-year-old Yugoslav girl."

Barred from mingling with Russians, the Marines maintain their own bar in the Moscow embassy, where they often entertain "nannies," a British term for young American women hired to care for the children of U.S. diplomats. They also frequent a bar informally known as "Uncle Sam's" which operates many evenings in the embassy snack shop.

The average Marine assigned to guard the Moscow embassy, or any U.S. diplomatic mission, is 20 years old and single, according to the Pentagon.

"We had a lot of sympathy for the Marines, not so much because they were young, but because they were unlike other people who were in Moscow because they had an interest in the Soviet Union," one source said.

While the Marines may be suited for guard duty at embassies other than Moscow, some U.S. diplomats consider them more of a hindrance than a help in Russia.

Hartman said his predecessor in Moscow, Thomas J. Watson Jr., was forced to apologize to the ambassador from Canada after two Marines started a brawl with Canadian diplomats during a game of broomball, a variant of hockey popular among foreigners in the Soviet capital.

Hartman noted that Marines and other young, single men are not the only targets of sexual entrapment.

"We had to remove people for a variety of causes, and that was one of them," said Hartman, declining to mention any names.

Lawyer tied to Pollard spy case sought for questioning

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. investigators are seeking to question a Washington lawyer with dual Israeli-U.S. citizenship in connection with the Pollard spy affair, diplomatic and administration sources said Wednesday.

The attorney, who was identified as Harold Katz, allegedly allowed his Washington apartment to be used by Jonathan Jay Pollard's handlers to photocopy U.S. military documents that Pollard smuggled from his job as a Navy analyst, said an administration source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

A diplomatic source, who also demanded anonymity, said Katz, who took Israeli citizenship in 1972, also is suspected by U.S. authorities of being involved in payments to Pollard.

Israel is resisting U.S. efforts to question Katz, who also has a home in Tel Aviv, the Israeli capital, the administration source said, adding that Katz is in Israel now and that the government does not want him to leave.

Questions about Katz's involvement in the Pollard affair were developed by U.S. investigators and not by Israeli authorities, who had pledged full cooperation when the spy case broke.

Pollard, a 32-year-old American Jew, was arrested in November 1985, pleaded guilty to espionage the following June and on March 4 was sentenced in Washington to life in prison for selling Israel hundreds of classified military documents in 1984-85.

His wife, Anne Henderson Pollard, 26, received a five-year term for conspiring to receive embezzled government property and being an accessory after the fact to possession of defense secrets.

U.S. Attorney Joseph diGenova, whose office prosecuted Pollard, said Wednesday he could neither confirm nor deny the existence of any information about Katz.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten declined to comment.

House OKs '88 spending plan, Senate effort runs into trouble

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic budget challenging President Reagan's military buildup and ban on tax increases is moving toward passage in the House, but a similar effort in the Senate has run into trouble.

The House Budget Committee, with no GOP support, approved its version of fiscal 1988's trillion-dollar spending plan Wednesday, and House leaders announced it would come up for a vote next week.

The plan, passed in a 21-14 party-line vote, calls for $22 billion in new taxes and fees, most to be spelled out later. Military spending would be slashed some $15 billion below the president's request, to $281.7 billion, not allowing even a full inflation increase.

Many other programs would be frozen or cut, including foreign aid, agriculture, transportation, energy and environmental spending. However, some selected increases were approved, including education, job training and health programs.

House Budget Committee Chairman William H. Gray III, D-Pa., said spending cuts were divided equally between domestic and defense programs with each trimmed $8.75 billion below what they would receive if government policies remained constant.

Some of the domestic "cuts" were in the form of new fees for government services, including several in the energy industry.

"In contrast to the president, we are not proposing to solve our immediate problem by selling off the assets of the federal government at discount prices," Gray said. Although overall revenues in the president's plan were comparable to the House total, half the administration's new income was from selling U.S. holdings and little from outright tax increases.

When it came to the bottom line, Democrats accepted a set of White House economic and technical assumptions to make their plan meet the $108 billion deficit limit of the Gramm-Rudman law. Under Congressional Budget Office figures, the plan would miss the target by more than $25 billion.

Republicans, who earlier refused to participate with Democrats in drafting the plan, bristled when the majority party rammed their product through committee Wednesday.

"I've never seen such a railroad job as we've seen here today," said Rep. Delbert L. Latta, the senior Republican on the panel.

Gray said he was confident the proposal was on an express toward passage by the full House. But in the Senate, his counterpart's efforts were sidetracked in a 12-12 committee vote.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, crafted a package with tax increases of up to $18 billion, some new user fees and a military spending cut not quite as deep as the House plan.

Chiles also planned to use White House numbers to show his plan meets the $108 billion target, and he said under either assumption, his budget would reach Gramm-Rudman's ultimate goal of a balanced budget in fiscal 1991.

But the plan unraveled after the committee refused to use the administration numbers, and Chiles was forced to remove language that would have blocked efforts to strengthen Gramm-Rudman's enforcement provisions.

The Chiles plan failed on the tie vote, and several of those who voted for it said they would offer amendments on the floor if it made it out of committee.

"We'll pick it up from here," he said, although he said he didn't know how he would pick up the additional vote. All the Republicans on the committee voted "no," as did Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., a co-sponsor of the Gramm-Rudman law.

While Chiles was trying to prevent strengthening of Gramm-Rudman, Gray included in his plan non-binding language calling for Congress to consider strengthening the law.

Gramm-Rudman originally included automatic spending cuts to enforce its annual deficit targets, imposing them when Congress and the White House failed to do the job. However, the Supreme Court threw out the original mechanism.

Gray said before doing that, Congress should reassess the current targets, which many lawmakers say are unrealistic.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., said Wednesday night he might consider relaxing the $108 billion target if the automatic cuts were restored. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has said he wants to stick with the $108 billion target.

A battle over strengthening Gramm-Rudman is expected next month when Congress must vote on raising the national debt limit.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, April 2, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Jacob Hiltzheimer traveled by chair with two daughters to look at some cedar posts recently sent down the Delaware River.

In a newspaper advertisement, the tanners of this city reminded local farmers that they wanted carefully dried Spanish white, and black oak, hemlock and birch bark, to be speedily delivered. Spring was the usual season for tanners to order bark for their leather-making process.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress today reviewed the report of the Board of Treasury, estimating the national debt for 1788 at $880,322.

Edmund Randolph solicitously assured Washington by letter, "I could not prevail upon myself to wish you to go (to the Convention), unless your health would fully permit." But, he followed with: "But indeed, dear sir, everything travels so fast to confusion, that I trust one grand effort will be made by the friends of the United States." Randolph knew Washington was prone to respond — and did — to such a patriotic effort to save the country from potential disaster.

William Pierce of Georgia renewed his motion instructing the secretary of foreign affairs to lay before Congress the state of negotiation with Spanish Ambassador Gardoqui.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson recorded it cold in New York as he attended Congress. He dined with the president (Arthur St. Clair) this evening.

George Washington confided his continued unease about the forthcoming Convention to Secretary of War Henry Knox:

"I see, or think I see, reasons for and against my attendance in Convention so near an equilibrium, as will cause me to Determine upon either, with diffidence. One of the reasons against it, is, an apprehension that all the States will not appear; and that some of them, being unwillingly drawn into the measure, will send their Delegates so fettered as to embarrass, and perhaps render nugatory, the whole proceedings."

LOOKING BACK

Tanners of Philadelphia

To 18th-century Americans, the business of tanning was of critical importance for the production of shoes, saddles, harnesses, upholstery, and a wide variety of items used in their pre-industrial community.

Tanning then required a convenient water supply to wash the hides during several steps of preparation. Philadelphia's Dock Creek, a wide, branched estuary or dock when the settlers arrived, soon became the site of numerous tanneries. Despite bitter complaints about the stench and filth of Dock Creek due to the tanning process, the influential tanners remained in the heart of the city throughout the 18th century and a few even hung on in the block between Third and Fourth, Chestnut and Walnut, until Stephen Girard bought them out in 1834.

The dried oak, hemlock and birch bark the tanners requested in their advertisement today was a key ingredient of the tanning solution in which the scraped and de-haired hides soaked for up to 18 months. Altogether, the arduous, smelly process of readying a hide for the currier, who dressed it for sale to various leather-craft sources, took from one to two years. As one contemporary observed in 1778, tanning returns were so slow that only men of means could carry on the business.

However slow and unpleasant the tanning process was, its product was considered essential to home manufactures, so that Philadelphians in 1787 were enduring the discomforts of its presence. And the emerging Philadelphia-based Society for the Encouragement of Manufactures and the Useful Arts soon would do all it could to promote and augment the industry throughout America.

Air pollution could strengthen hurricanes

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Continued air pollution that increases carbon dioxide levels, already linked to climatic warming, also could make some hurricanes up to 60 percent stronger in the next century, says a study published today.

Kerry Emanuel, associate meteorology professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, reached that projection using a computer simulation of average August conditions. He reported the study in the British journal Nature. If the atmosphere's carbon dioxide content doubles, the maximum possible intensity for hurricanes could rise 40 percent to 50 percent generally and 60 percent in the Gulf of Mexico, the study said.

While only a few percent of hurricanes reach the maximum possible intensity, "we would tend to think if the maximum intensity increases, the average would increase as well," said Emanuel.

If the atmosphere's carbon dioxide content doubles, the maximum possible intensity for hurricanes could rise 40 percent to 50 percent generally and 60 percent in the Gulf of Mexico.

— from the British journal Nature

The carbon dioxide buildup is caused largely by burning of fossil fuels. Projections of when the atmosphere's carbon dioxide content will double range from about the year 2035 to 2080, according to the National Center for Atmospheric Research.

The buildup has long concerned scientists because it could cause a significant warming of worldwide climate, affecting crop yields and causing long heat waves and coastal flooding from higher seas, scientists say.

Emanuel said his analysis assumes that the doubling of carbon dioxide will raise the temperature of ocean surfaces in tropical regions generally by about 2 degrees to 3 degrees centigrade, or about 4 degrees to 5 degrees Fahrenheit.

In an interview, Emanuel called that assumption "a big if" and said that estimates vary widely on how much ocean temperatures would really rise.

A warming in ocean surfaces increases the amount of heat energy that can be fed into a hurricane through evaporation, he said. Evaporation can occur only until the air becomes saturated, and warmer ocean surfaces allow more heat to be transferred before saturation takes place, he said.

The 40 percent to 50 percent increase in maximum intensity of hurricanes applies to most current hurricane areas, such as the Caribbean Sea, the western Atlantic Ocean, the Indian Ocean and parts of the Pacific Ocean, Emanuel said.

The 60 percent increase is forecast for the Gulf of Mexico because of higher projected increases in surface temperatures, a result of its being less susceptible to changes in ocean circulation, he said.

Richard Anthes, director of the atmospheric research center, said the assumptions about warming are plausible and that the projections generally are likely to come true if the oceans and atmosphere warm as much as the calculations assume.

But Stephen Schneider, head of the natural systems group at the research center, said Emanuel's calculations should not be taken as forecasts for particular areas at particular times.

Professors' salaries up this year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Salaries for professors at all 3,300 U.S. colleges and universities climbed an average of 5.9 percent this school year, but the earnings still leave the professors behind where they were 17 years ago, the American Association of University Professors announced.

After inflation, faculty salaries rose a "real" 3.9 percent this year, the best one-year performance since the early 1970s, the 52,000-member association announced Wednesday.

"However, despite these increases, real salary levels are still more than 10 percent below 1970."

Brain cell surgery may be aid to Parkinson's disease

NEW YORK (AP) — Researchers have taken a big step in treating Parkinson's disease by showing significant improvement in two patients who underwent transplants of gland cells to their brains, a scientist says.

"With this report, neural transplantation is with us as a possible mode of therapy," Dr. Robert Y. Moore, chairman of the neurology department at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, wrote in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

But he and other scientists said more investigation is needed.

His editorial accompanied a study by Mexican scientists of two Parkinson's patients who underwent surgery to transplant cells from their adrenal glands, which lie just above the kidney, into their brains.

Before surgery, one 35-year-old patient had needed help to eat and walk even a few steps, but he now feeds himself, visits a clinic by himself and holds a job tending pigs, said researcher Dr. Rene Drucker-Colin.

"The patient still has a slight tremor, he sort of limps a little bit," said Drucker-Colin in a telephone interview. "It's not a 100 percent recovery. That's impossible, I think."

Drucker-Colin is head of the neurosciences department at the Institute of Cellular Physiology of the National Autonomous University of Mexico in Mexico City. He reports the work with Dr. Ignacio Madrazo of La Raza, part of the social security hospital system in Mexico City, and with other scientists.

Parkinson's disease, often characterized by tremors, rigidity or loss of balance, afflicts an estimated 350,000 people in the United States. Drugs can control symptoms, but their effects can be sporadic and side effects can include psychological disturbances and impairment of movement.

The disease results from the lack of a chemical called dopamine in a certain area of the brain, because of the death of dopamine-producing cells. Brain cells use dopamine to communicate with each other.

Adrenal cells were transplanted because they also produce dopamine.

Drucker-Colin said the 35-year-old patient has continued his improvement since the surgery in March 1986, without need for medication. The second man, 39, who had the surgery last October, continues to show a major reduction in what had been an incapacitating tremor, he said.

Eight later surgery patients also seem to be showing gains, he said.

Dr. Stanley Fahn, scientific director of the Parkinson's Disease Foundation, said the report made him both optimistic and cautious.

Relatively few Parkinson's patients are as young as the two men in the research, and the results may not apply to older patients, he said. The disease commonly strikes people in their 50s and 60s, he said.

Dr. Eugene Redmond, director of the neurobehavior laboratory at the Yale University School of Medicine, said he saw a videotape of a Mexican patient after surgery who still appeared very impaired.

"It's extremely important...that the results be carefully scrutinized and that we not get a rash of efforts to duplicate it," he said.

Redmond noted that Swedish scientists failed to find long-term improvement in four patients with brain implants. Drucker-Colin said those scientists used a different surgical technique.

Moore, who wrote the journal editorial, said in an interview that since both patients in the study have been followed for only a brief time, "we don't know what the long-term prognosis is."

Drucker-Colin agreed, saying he suspects that "whatever initially produced this disease will probably invade the graft tissue." But if the surgery keeps a patient free of medication for two years, drugs may be able to control the disease for two more years, he said.

Actor-singer David Bowie shows off his novel reading style for a poster published by the American Library Association in celebration of National Library Week, April 5-11. Bowie says he reads 50 to 100 books a year and tends to "buy books on the run and then give them to friends when read."

Journalist-adventurer ends four-year walk around world

By JOHN NOLAN

BETHEL, Ohio (AP) — Steven Newman ended his four-year, 15,000-mile walk around the world Wednesday with a kiss for his mother on the steps of his family home and greeted by the cheers and tears of 2,000 townspeople.

The crowd gathered in the snow-covered yard of the two-story, brick house and watched the journalist-adventurer hug and kiss his mother, Mary, whom he last saw in June 1986 in Vancouver, Canada. He set out on his walk on April 1, 1983.

Newman's father, Edwin, died on Thanksgiving Day 1984 while Newman was walking through India, one of 20 countries he visited.

Newman, 32, wearing a red parka, blue jeans and boots and a backpack with an embroidered American flag, cried with his mother after they embraced.

"I want to say that I love you. I want you to know that I will never forget this day, if I live to be 150," he told the crowd. "As much as these other people helped me around the world, you did, too, because you never forget the place where you grew up."

Homes, businesses and churches in Bethel, a town of 2,200 about 25 miles southeast of Cincinnati, displayed signs welcoming Newman home. Some townspeople wore caps imprinted, "Steve Newman, Worldwalker."

About 300 people, many of them schoolchildren carrying flags of foreign countries, walked the final five miles with Newman along rural roads through snow-covered farm fields from a state park where he camped Tuesday night.

Newman said he made the trip because he is a journalist who wanted to know more about people.

"I thought the best way to do it was to walk among them. ...It was a wonderful mixture of Huckleberry Finn and Marco Polo," Newman said. "That's all I could have asked for."

Newman stayed at the homes of about 300 families he met.

He spent six years planning th trip, he said, but could not have for seen many of the political problem that affected him. Not long after th October 1984 assassination of India Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, h was stopped by border guards as h tried to cross from Pakistan into In dia. Then he met a traveling missio ary, posed as a missionary himse and was allowed to cross.

On Wednesday, yellow ribbo fluttered from trees and the driv way gate at his home, where Ne man arrived with a police escort. H sister, Sandra, gave him a bouquet roses.

Mary Newman, 59, paced nervou ly in the minutes before the arriv of Steven, eldest of her six childre

"I hope the rest of them don't p me through this," she said, addi that she had followed her son's ody sey by sending him letters at pr arranged places. "Yesterday, I w frantic. Today, I'm woozy."

Mayor Roger Hardin later led welcoming ceremony, and well-wis ers repeatedly stopped Newman shake his hand or snap his pictur

A former reporter for the Casp Star-Tribune in Wyoming, Newma wrote articles during his global wa for The Cincinnati Post and The C lumbus Dispatch.

Two companies that provided h boots and backpack hired a publ relations company to publicize t final leg of his trip. Newman said h spent about $4,000 of the $15,000 h had saved for his trip, but decline to accept money from the sponsor

After a series of appearances talk shows, he plans to contin work as a journalist and will write book about his journey.

Newman said that what he miss most during his trip was "goo American hot dogs, chocolate shak and my Cincinnati Reds."

Americans to 'spring forward' three weeks early this year

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — Daylight saving time arrives at 2 a.m. Sunday, and businesses are hoping to reap a multi-billion dollar bonanza when Americans spring forward three weeks earlier than usual.

Changing time has no real effect on nature, of course. But in terms of human perception, it moves an hour of light from the morning to the evening by shifting the clock time.

Favored by millions who prefer the evening light for such events as sports and cookouts, daylight saving time was opposed by people who wanted to keep that hour of light in the morning.

Congress last year ordered the earlier start to daylight saving time. The sporting goods and leisure products industries are hoping to get a major boost from the change, perhaps as much as $4 billion in added sales, according to the Daylight Saving Time Coalition, which fought a 10-year battle to extend daylight time.

Its supporters include some 400,000 people who suffer night blindness and prefer the extra daylight to increase their evening activity.

Among others are the Barbecue Industry Association, Foodservice and Lodging Institute, International Association of Amusement Parks and Attractions, National Association of Convenience Stores and the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association.

The candymakers, though, failed to get their goal — an extra week of daylight time in the fall. They wanted the evening light extended through Halloween.

And the Transportation Department suggests that the extra evening daylight should reduce traffic accidents, although the agency did not offer any specific estimate of the reduction. And congressional backers of the change suggested it also could cut down on crime, although they, too, offered no specifics.

Rural residents, who opposed the switch, complain about sending their children to school bus stops in the dark and of being forced to begin farm chores before sunrise.

Forcing children to wait for a school bus beside a country road in the early-morning gloom could lead to more traffic accidents, not fewer, claim rural residents.

This is a particular problem on the western edge of time zones.

That's because the time zones are artificial divisions, created to simplify transportation and communications by having uniform times over large areas.

The sun doesn't pay any attention to the zones, however. It continues to rise in the east and extend its light gradually to the west at the rate of 15 degrees of longitude per hour. Time zones are each about 15 degrees wide.

Therefore, on the eastern edge of a time zone, sunrise occurs nearly an hour before it comes to the western edge — even though both areas are on the same clock time.

So changing the clocks to read an hour later means it stays dark longer in the morning.

That doesn't make too much difference on the eastern edge of a time zone, since the gradually lengthening days give those folks some excess light to shift around. But to the west there's less morning light to begin with, and the change just means it gets light even later in the day.

Congress refused to go along with some requests that it extend daylight saving time in the fall, leaving the ending date at the tradition last Sunday in October.

The end result is that most of th nation will switch to daylight tim by moving their clocks forward at a.m. Sunday. That means that at a.m., it will suddenly become 3 a.m

Thus continues a tradition datin back to the anxious years of Worl War I. The shift ahead, begun i 1918, was designed to save fuel b reducing the need for lights in th evening, allowing that energy to b turned to the war effort.

Daylight saving continued in 191 but then was dropped as a deluge o protests demanded that the systen be abandoned in peacetime.

Reagan vows to find cure for AIDS

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is vowing that "we will find a way" to cure AIDS.

For the first time in his more than six years in office, Reagan talked extensively Wednesday about deadly acquired immune deficiency syndrome. He defended his administration's commitment to alleviating the health threat.

"We have increased the spending on that more than anything we've increased in the budget," the president told reporters.

Reminded that Congress actually had approved more than he recommended for AIDS in recent years, Reagan replied, "Well, Congress is made up of spendthrifts."

At wingside of Air Force One upon landing at Philadelphia International Airport and before a conference of physicians, Reagan said AIDS education programs should stress avoidance of sexual intercourse.

On several occasions over the past two days, Reagan has volunteered for reporters' questions, and at each instance he was asked about AIDS.

"I don't quarrel with" Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's advice that youngsters unwilling to remain abstinent should employ other means, such as the use of condoms, to protect themselves, Reagan said.

In his speech to the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, Reagan said schools and parents, rather than the government, should decide what children should be taught about the dangers of AIDS.

"But let's be honest with ourselves," he added. "AIDS information cannot be what some call 'value-neutral.' After all, when it comes to preventing AIDS, don't medicine and morality teach the same lessons?"

At another point on his trip, Reagan said, "One of the things that's been wrong with too much of our education is that no values of right and wrong are being taught in the educational process."

And he talked optimistically of the chances of finding a cure.

Reagan noted that the AIDS virus has been isolated and identified and that a test has been developed to help ensure that blood tranfusions are free of AIDS contamination. He pointed out the recent approval by the Food and Drug Administration of the drug AZT, which "may help" AIDS patients.

"This is unprecedented progress against a major virus," the president said. "It took 40 years of study to learn as much about polio. It took 19 years to develop a vaccine against hepatitis B. But then our battle against AIDS has been like an emergency room operation — we've thrown everything we have into it."

"...When the Carthaginian general Hannibal was preparing to cross the Alps and was told there was no way across, he said, 'We'll find a way, or make one.' And that's the kind of determination we all have about curing AIDS," Reagan said. "We'll find a way or make one."

"We've declared AIDS Public Health Enemy No. 1."

AIDS is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, making it incapable of fending off other diseases and infections.

Health officials estimate that between 1 million and 1.5 million Americans have been exposed to the virus. Through late March, AIDS had been diagnosed in 33,158 Americans, of whom more than half, 19,000, have died since 1979.

In his Philadelphia speech, Reagan said the administration plans to spend $766 million during the current fiscal year, and more than $1 billion in fiscal 1988, which begins Oct. 1.

Tammy's 'wandering heart' possible catalyst

WASHINGTON (AP) — The friendship of TV evangelist Jim Bakker's wife, Tammy Faye, with a Nashville singer may have been the cause of the jealousy Bakker said led to his sexual encounter with a church secretary, a published report says today.

Gary Paxton, onetime lead singer of the Hollywood Argyles who sang the hit "Alley Oop," told The Washington Post that he and Mrs. Bakker were "just friends, never more than that."

But, the Post reported, Paxton's ex-wife, Karen, said Mrs. Bakker was "in love with Gary, or thought that she was, and she knew I knew it."

"I love Tammy. We were very close," Mrs. Paxton told the newspaper. "I thought she was my best friend, but my best friend and my best husband let me down."

" 'Please don't do anything you'll be sorry for. It's important for you to guard your affections, to guard your heart.' But she let down her guard."

— Linda Wilson, Mrs. Bakker's former secretary

Paxton, 48, produced the 1960s song "Monster Mash" as well as record albums for Mrs. Bakker in the late 1970s.

Linda Wilson, Mrs. Bakker's former secretary, told the newspaper she warned Mrs. Bakker against becoming involved with Paxton, saying, "'Please don't do anything you'll be sorry for. It's important for you to guard your affections, to guard your heart.' But she let down her guard."

Bakker's resignation from his Fort Mill, S.C., ministry after acknowledging a sexual encounter seven years ago with Jessica Hahn, a church secretary, has led to accusations among TV evangelists over morality and alleged attempts to seize control of the $172 million PTL organization which the Bakkers have left. PTL stands for "Praise The Lord" and "People That Love."

A spokesman for the PTL Club, Neil Eskelin, told the Post he would have no comment on Mrs. Bakker's relationship with Paxton. The Bakkers have been in seclusion in Palm Springs, Calif., and could not be reached for comment, the newspaper said.

Bakker has said that he had been concerned about losing his wife, and Jamie Buckingham, a columnist for Charisma, a Pentecostal magazine, told the Post that he brought up the subject of Mrs. Bakker's "wandering heart" during a recent visit with the couple.

"Tammy said, 'Yes, but there had been nothing sexual about it...he was just someone to talk to, a guy who would listen to me,'" Buckingham quoted her as saying.

"She was lonely and her husband wasn't paying any attention to her," Buckingham said. "It was a blow to Jim Bakker's masculinity that his wife had to find another man to talk to."

NATION IN BRIEF

Cigarette production down

WASHINGTON (AP) — Domestic consumption of cigarettes fell last year while exports rose, resulting in an overall drop in cigarette production of about 3 percent to 643 billion, an Agriculture Department report says.

"U.S. smokers consumed 584 billion cigarettes in 1986, about 2 percent fewer than in 1985," the department's Economic Research Service said Wednesday.

"Total cigarette consumption is likely to continue its decline this year because of further price hikes, continued antismoking activity and increased restrictions on where people may smoke," the report said.

Annual consumption dropped to a per capita average of 3,274 cigarettes — less than 164 packs of 20 cigarettes each — from 3,370, or more than 168 packs in 1985, the lowest since 1944. The per capita figures include both smokers and non-smokers and exclude people younger than 18.

Treaty stance reconsidered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former U.S. negotiator Paul H. Nitze says he has reconsidered his past opposition to "Star Wars" testing and now believes that a 1972 treaty with the Soviet Union permits such testing.

"I came to the conclusion I had forgotten many of the things that then came to my mind," said Nitze, who helped negotiate the treaty.

Speaking Wednesday at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, Nitze said he had reviewed arguments for a narrow interpretation of the treaty, which would rule out some of the space-based tests that critics say could unravel the treaty.

"I found there was a gap in the logic and the evidence," he said.

Lab animal care defended

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department is calling for tightened federal animal welfare regulations, including the establishment by researchers of oversight committees on treatment of laboratory animals.

"We believe the proposed changes would help guard animals used for research against undue pain and distress and yet would assure that necessary medical research go forward," said Bert W. Hawkins, administrator of the department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The agency plans to issue additional proposals this summer "detailing standards for the psychological well-being of all primates and exercise requirements for dogs," Hawkins said Wednesday.

The changes are to regulations to carry out Animal Welfare Act amendments passed by Congress in December 1985.

Group targets civil rights

WASHINGTON (AP) — A women's group says further efforts are needed to counteract a Supreme Court ruling that narrowed the scope of federal civil rights laws as they pertain to educational institution.

"While the states have relied upon federal law and enforcement in the past, they must now take the lead," an analysis by the Project on Equal Education Rights said Wednesday.

PEER said that although 31 states have laws against sex dicrimination in education, only seven states have comprehensive laws modeled after Title IX, the federal law guaranteeing equal education to women and girls.

The Supreme Court, in a ruling concerning Pennsylvania's Grove City College, said civil rights laws protecting women, minorities, the aged and the handicapped apply only to specific programs or activities receiving federal money — not to entire institutions.

As a result, the Education Department has had to drop some complaints and to halt or narrow compliance reviews.

A CORDIAL INVITATION TO ELEVATE YOUR CONCEPTION OF WHAT A LUXURY CAR SHOULD BE.

Seven years, two million test miles, and 400 test cars ago, the visionaries at BMW set forth to create a luxury car that would surpass all known definitions of the category.

Today, the new BMW 735i has emerged as the successful result of their labors.

Those appreciative of such an accomplishment are invited to our showroom to experience the new 735i. And to become joyfully intolerant of any other standard of luxury.
