Handful of sunshine

It's been a dry spring for West Texans as rain clouds have tumbled on to other areas. But things of beauty can be found. These wildflowers defied sandstorms and thirst to toss their golden heads in the wind beside Interstate 20.

Hispanics' business role discussed

By TOD ROBBERSON
Washington Bureau

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — The United States should consider creating a 200-mile free-trade zone along its border with Mexico and should require students to be bilingual in English and Spanish before graduating from high school, the chairman of First City National Bank of Midland said today.

Tony Martin

During an interview between sessions of a conference he was attending on Hispanic-Americans in the business community, bank chairman Tony A. Martin said the profit motive among Anglo businessmen ultimately will be the determining factor in resolving the plight of Hispanics seeking integration into America's business community.

The Anglo population must show a greater "empathy and willingness" to help Hispanics assimilate into the business community, Martin said, and he criticized the city of Midland for not showing "a high enough degree of willingness" to reach that goal and to be aware "that Hispanics can make a great contribution to the overall business and social community."

Percentages of Hispanics in managerial positions at First City Bank, he noted, "are not nearly as high as they should be. I venture to say there's not a business in Midland, and very few in the state, that have as high a percentage of Hispanics at all levels — including their boards of directors — as they should have."

He said a national program to convince Anglo businessmen of the Hispanic community's economic viability will lead to a greater and more equal participation of Hispanics in the business sector.

"Businessmen have a way of relating to facts and statistics," Martin said. "If you draw a line east-west across the state of Texas through Austin, the Hispanic population south of that line is slightly over 50 percent of the total population. That's something that a lot of Anglo businessmen simply don't realize.

"By the year 2000, the chances are very good that more than 50 pecent of the total population in the state will be Hispanic. With those kinds of facts, I believe it behooves the Anglo businessman to become aware of, to encourage and to cultivate economics within the Hispanic community."

Martin said the "motivating factor" to get Anglo businessmen to understand the problems Hispanics face in America's buent of the total population. That's something that a lot of Anglo businessmen simply don't realize.

"By the year 2000, the chances are very good that more than 50 pecent of the total population in the state will be Hispanic. With those kinds of facts, lanic students, who have less than a 50 percent high school completion rate; and relaxed trade barriers between the United States and Mexico.

He said America's business community — noting the oil and gas sector as an example — is broadening its marketing horizons beyond the U.S. borders to include the entire western hemisphere. "If we look at that entire picture, at least 60 percent of the population is Hispanic in our market right now. Those kinds of things get a businessman's attention very quickly.

"If you start talking to him about the growing market in the western hemisphere, economics will be the catalyst. And all the intellectualism and all of the philosophy are nothing compared to what happens if you get the attention of the profit-maker.

"With that in mind, how can an Anglo who intends to do business in his major market not be bilingual?" Martin, who himself is not fluent in Spanish, continued. "How can Anglos in this country continue to insist, 'If you want to be doing business with me, you should speak English'? Shouldn't we be thinking in terms of this country becoming bilingual — even to the point of requiring Spanish fluency before a young man or women even gets a high school diploma?"

He also called for establishment of a free-trade zone on both sides of the U.S.-Mexico border to help solve Mexico's current economic problems and the United States' problem with undocumented Mexican workers.

"If we approached the undocumented aliens problem from the purely economic sense that it really is, the fact that they need food and money, and we need cheap labor, and if we literally opened up our border and made a free trade zone for, say, 200 miles on both sides...both countries would begin to resolve their deficit balance. There wouldn't be a problem anymore."

Mitchells: We'll try again

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Undaunted by an earlier City Council decision and spurred by public support, Carolyn Mitchell plans to resubmit her request for a special, two-year permit to house her disabled son in a backyard mobile home.

Meanwhile, Ms. Mitchell received a summons to appear in Municipal Court Thursday on charges that she violated the city code by connecting plumbing to the trailer without obtaining a permit.

"I'm going to start this thing up again the first of the week," said Ms. Mitchell, whose request on appeal April 26 died for lack of majority approval when the council voted 3-3 against her application. The council voted 3-1 against the temporary permit March 29.

Ms. Mitchell, who lives at 1105 W. Missouri Ave., said she'll draft a letter to Mayor G. Thane Akins asking the council to reconsider her request. She is seeking the permit to supervise and assist her son, Mark Carlton, while allowing him to live on his own.

"I'm going to go through with it one more time and see what happens," she said.

A near-fatal accidental gunshot wound to the head in May 1978 left Mark, then 19, crippled and bound to a wheelchair. Although he remains totally disabled by Social Security standards, 23-year-old Mark walks with a cane and is eager to live on his own, Ms. Mitchell said.

She described the temporary mobile home as "the next step" in Mark's recovery and suggested that if the experiment in independent living proved successful, Mark might be moved into an apartment or trailer park.

Opposition to the request came from Mona Dunn, who owns the house at 1109 W. Missouri Ave. and splits time living there with her son and with relatives in Austin.

Ms. Dunn, who appeared at two city council meetings to voice her disapproval, said she feared the trailer might remain for many years and could run down property values in the area.

No other neighbors appeared to speak in opposition and although one neighbor sent the city a letter opposing the request, the letter was later retracted.

Akins and Councilmen Steve Davidson and Jesse Hatfield voted in favor of the request on April 26. Planning and zoning regulations state that such a permit may be awarded when "the Council finds and determines that an emergency exists constituting a genuine hardship for the applicant."

Councilmen Gordon Marcum II, Tom Sloan and former Councilmen Carroll Thomas — who chose not to seek re-election April 2 and has since been replaced on the council — voted against the request, citing neighborhood opposition and the council's responsibility to protect citizens' property rights.

Ms. Mitchell said news accounts of the permit denial triggered about 25 phone calls from people supporting her request.

An hour-long, informal telephone poll by a local television station generated 1,094 calls — 1,049 of which favored granting the mobile home permit.

Akins said he'll present the letter to the council and poll the members to see if they're willing to reconsider Ms. Mitchell's request. He said the city's Legal Department also will be consulted to determine if she must resume the application process from the start.

Many arrested in retaliation for Chilean protests

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Soldiers brandishing submachine guns seized about 1,000 people in pre-dawn raids Saturday and carted them off to soccer stadiums and police stations in apparent retaliation for the first widespread protests against President Augusto Pinochet's military regime.

An estimated 300 soldiers in battle uniforms, backed up by an estimated 300 policemen and plain-clothes agents, went two shantytowns in southern Santiago shortly after midnight.

"They surrounded the neighborhood before five in the morning and ordered through loudspeakers that all men over 14 years old go to the soccer field," said a 55-year-old man from one of the shantytowns, who said he feared reprisals if he were named.

"Two hours later they let me go, but my two sons are still being held," he told The Associated Press.

Witnesses estimated 1,000 residents of the Joao Goulart and La Victoria districts went into the streets and were marched to soccer fields for identity checks. They said some were let go and others bused to police stations from the stadiums.

At midday, reporters could see several hundred boys and men still waiting in the stadiums for security agents to check their identity cards.

The Santiago military command called the army-led operation a search for "subversive and common delinquents" and for arms and explosives that it said had been used against the police. The written communique did not say what the soldiers found.

The two shantytowns were the scene of clashes Wednesday between police and demonstrators taking part in the first nationwide protests against the regime since it came to power nearly 10 years ago in a coup against the late Marxist President Salvador Allende.

Six labor unions that organized the "Day of National Protest" called the demonstrations a peaceful appeal for dialogue between an authoritarian regime and critics demanding greater political freedom. They vowed to repeat the protest once a month.

Responding to the protests with characteristic toughness, police shot two people to death and arrested 350 others during the street marches. Interior Minister Enrique Montero threatened legal action against further demonstrations.

Pinochet then signed a decree that banned news broadcasts and comment by Radio Cooperativa, an independent network, saying its reporting on the protests "created the sensation of an artificial climate of agitation."

The nature of the protest made it hard to judge claims by Rodolfo Seguel, leader of the copper miners' union, that 70 percent of Chile's 11 million people took part. Absenteeism was at least 70 percent in some Santiago schools.

The din of horns and banging pots was heard for more than an hour Wednesday night in both rich and poor neighborhoods of this capital city, recalling the pot-banging demonstrations by housewives that preceded the 1973 coup against Allende.

After the coup, many Chileans were willing to overlook Pinochet's harsh campaign against leftists because he also brought relative prosperity through free-market policies that attracted foreign credits and consumer goods.

Crowd takes gander at Spruce Goose

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Thousands lined up Saturday to get the first gander in 36 years at the Spruce Goose, the wide wooden seaplane commissioned by late billionaire Howard Hughes during World War II that flew once, then was hidden away until now.

"They're calling it the oh-my-God plane because everybody, when they first see it, says, 'Oh my God!'" said Gerry Huckaby, spokesman for Wrather Port Properties which owns the plane and the adjacent Queen Mary yacht-hotel.

The Spruce Goose, 219 feet long with a 319-foot wingspan, was unveiled for public viewing inside its domed display hall. The building, 415 feet in diameter and 130 feet tall, is the world's largest free-standing dome, Huckaby said.

Between 8,000 to 10,000 people showed up for the grand opening of the exhibit, which cost some $12 million to prepare, Huckaby said. He predicted the day's total turnout would reach 20,000. Tickets cost $6 for adults.

"We were hoping we would be so successful in terms of the crowd that we'd regret it," he said. "There's so many people out there it's almost impossible to keep ticket lines straight ... They're just pouring in."

The festivities began with an airshow over the harbor featuring vintage aircraft from both world wars, and the release of 9,000 red, white and blue balloons. Actor James Stewart, Long Beach Mayor Tom Clark and Wrather Corp. Chairman Jack Wrather shared ribbon-cutting honors.

"It's quite an experience for me, and it looks like it's going to be a wonderful thing in years to come for people to see," said Stewart, who knew Hughes and remembers the seaplane's only flight.

The eccentric billionaire commissioned the Spruce Goose as a World War II troop and armor carrier, but the government didn't order it into production.

They're pig-headed about their education

FULTON, Mo. (AP) — Although most little piggies probably would rather stay home, the truth is that most go to market. But then there's the 10 who went to college — and graduated.

The parents of Pork Chop, Hamlet, Porky, Piggy, Wiggy, Ralph, Sam, Beau, Dudley and Sweet Meat would have been proud had they seen their 11-week-old offspring honored Friday after passing a four-week course at William Woods College in Fulton.

Dr. Julian Hertzog, an educational psychology professor at the central Missouri college, required each of the 10 students in his intellectual development course to adopt a pig donated by Callaway County farmers Lester and Larry Ausfahl and to study its learning habits.

The students' grades in the course hinged on their ability to teach the pigs to respond when their names were called, to wind their way through a maze to reach food, to obey commands while on a leash, to recognize a specific shape or design and to learn tricks.

"There's nothing pig-headed about them," Hertzog said of his class, noting that other experiments have documented the intelligence of pigs. "I believe a lot can be learned from our experiments."

Their tasks performed and their trainers assured good grades, the pigs then listened as Cathy Shea, an instructor in the education department, delivered their commencement address.

She encouraged the animals to "go forth and take the things you have learned in college back to your kind." Ms. Shea also admonished the class to be good, "because all bad pigs end up in the pen."

Then, as bystanders hummed "Pomp and Circumstance," each pig proudly stepped foreward when its name was called to accept a cookie while Nancy Werst, dean of students, presented diplomas to the student trainers.

This two-bedroon unit in the normally quiet, nondescript La Casita Apartments in Odessa was the site of a February 27 poker game which ended when a player accused of cheating turned his gun on the others.

Card games, firearms: Part of Odessa's way of living

By JOHN LUMPKIN

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — The game was deep into the night when Leamon Ray Price was accused of cheating.

Whether misunderstood or rightly accused, Price had little to lose when he resorted to his .380-caliber sidearm to settle the issue. The bullets from his gun killed two and wounded two.

Price, 31, on the lam from an Alabama murder conviction, also reached the end of his own trail in this desert oil town. Wounded by return fire, he struggled up the street, only to perish at the hand of a startled resident whose front door he bashed in.

"That is the only known result of violence of a card game," said Odessa police detective Jerry Smith.

Using autopsy reports and statements from survivors, police believe they know enough of what happened at 3 a.m., Sunday, Feb. 27, in Apartment No. 1 in the La Casita Apartments to clear their homocide cases.

That doesn't appease Richard Notley, whose oldest brother Bobby's otherwise orthodox life as a service station operator and father of three ended when Price opened fire. Stunned and grieved by Bobby's death, Richard and other family members "don't know what he was doing there, or why he was involved in that deal."

The literal answer appears to be that he went along that night with his employee, Douglas Blevins, after they closed up the station, in response to an invitation tendered by others who organized the card game at a bar down the street. Blevins was the other player at the La Casita Apartments who was killed.

A more philosophic answer would consider how guns and gambling have special legacies in this corner of the Southwest, how those legacies are mostly separate and how Leamon Ray Price tied them together in Apartment No. 1.

"This is a gambling town," says John Sliney, an investigator for West Texas attorney Warren Burnette and former newspaper city editor not unfamiliar with the sporting wager.

It's the oil patch.

"Guys are gambling every day. Oil is a gamble. The stock market is a gamble at $100,000 a shot. You buy a million-dollar oil rig, pay people to get the lease, get the guys to drill the hole and come up with a dry hole — nothing — then to think it would be unusual to bet $10,000 on a turn of a card or a football game..."

His voice trailed off.

Like Smith, however, he could not remember a high-stakes card game that concluded in such bloodshed as the one at the La Casita Apartments.

Neither could retired Texas Ranger J.P. Lynch.

When Captain Lynch reported to his new Texas Ranger post in Midland in 1969, he said, "there was a push or pull to kind of cut down on gambling." Lynch, who retired last year, saw suspected operations come and go but knows that where there is a will there is a way, especially when the laws are subject to interpretation and the populace is not all that set against it.

"The state prison at Huntsville is loaded with people, but it is not loaded with them that are in there for gambling," he said recently when a caller asked him to reflect on his law enforcement duties in West Texas.

Gambling is not against the law in Texas, no matter how high the stakes, if it passes three tests: One, if it takes place in a private place; two, if no person receives any economic benefit other than personal winnings, and, three, if the risk of losing or winning is the same for all participants, save the considerable advantages of skill or luck.

That effectively bans such projects as parimutuels, bookmaking, casinos and not much else.

"Well, it is not easy to attempt to enforce the law on that," said Lynch. "They are, well, pretty lenient. The laws the way they are worded are hard to make a clean case. It is pretty close to legalizing it in many instances."

From time to time, gambling took on ambitious forms.

It is not hard to find those who remember a house with the circular drive on the outskirts of town, a room behind a massive door at the end of a hallway of a local hotel or a little booth near the first tee in the heydey of the Odessa Pro-Am.

Recalls one gambler, requesting anonymity, of the house:

"That was years and years and years ago. It was the only one in town. It had the warning systems. They served the big steaks and all the whole deal."

The place was "in the middle of nowhere back then, 200 yards from the nearest house. It had a circular drive. You couldn't keep hiding or sneak up on them."

Bills win tentative approval

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Two bills sponsored by Rep. Jim Rudd of Brownfield and one bill by Rep. Larry Don Shaw of Big Spring have received tentative approval by the House, which pased the measures on second reading Wednesday.

HB 888, by Rudd, creates a new sentencing option — split sentencing — and expands eligibility for shock probation.

For crimes entailing 5- to 10-year sentences with probation eligibility, judges would be allowed to sentence offenders instead to a minimum of two years and a maximum of three years in the Texas Department of Corrections, with probation upon release.

Also, offenders who had been in prison before on felonies could be eligible for shock probation under the legislation.

HB 1518, also by Rudd, requires the Texas Commission on Jail Standards to give a sheriff whose jail has not been brought up to state standards a list of qualified detention centers to which prisoners could be transferred.

The measure also permits county commissioners courts to contract with private organizations to house low-risk prisoners.

Gambling, guns a way of life

Captain Lynch could not recall anyone hearing of anyone doing "hard time" because of a gambling venture, but "you could make it where they couldn't make a profit and run all their customers off by standing around."

According to a couple of sources, that is what eventually happened to the host at the house, who packed it in and left the state.

Born July 23, 1951, and raised in Huxford, Ala., about 15 miles from the Florida line, he was convicted of second-degree murder in 1973 for the shooting death of Elmer Pike. Pike's widow said two men came to the front porch of the couple's rural Piedmont home and one of them took her inside. Then, she said, she heard gunshots and, after waiting a few minutes, went outside and found her husband's body.

She identified Price as the man with the gun, although Etowah County District Attorney Bill Rayburn says Price "went to the pen crying. He was disclaiming his guilt." Rayburn said Mrs. Pike felt robbery was the motive; he said Price's defense was an alibi.

Price was serving sentences totaling 53 years for robbery, grand larceny and second-degree murder when he escaped the prison work-release center in Atmore, Ala., on May 7, 1982, said Alabama prison spokesman Ron Tate. "He was working at a gravel company," said Tate. "The owner called to see if Price could work late. He did, and he never returned to the work-release center."

Price next entered the public record as a deceased gunshot victim in Odessa about ten months later.

Said District Attorney Holmes of the man, "It was fortunate he had his pistol with him in the house."

Other than Price, the poker players seemed "all pretty decent," said detective Smith. Three, including Bobby Notley, were from Odessa, another was from Midland and a fifth was from Houston. There was a game in Apartment No. 1 on a "semi-regular basis," said Smith, although the leasee was not present on the night of the shootings. The players may not have all known each other previously.

Police cannot dispute that Notley may have been a first-timer, nor can they say to what extent he was financially commited to the game. Approximately $5,000 was recovered from the bodies, but most of it was on Notley's employee, Blevins, say police.

Detective Sgt. Richard Hurst said in a telephone interview there is no doubt Bobby was a player and that he was among those who were armed. Police discovered three guns and believe a fourth was involved because Price was wounded with a different caliber handgun than those police found.

According to Notley's brother, Bobby "left the house with $600." That is somewhat less than the $10,000 in $100 bills that Blevins reportedly displayed to others at the station as Blevins' personal stake, Notley said.

It would not be unusual for his brother to have a gun with him if he was closing up the station and carrying the station's receipts with him, said Notley. "This can be a rough place," he said.

Neither would it be unusual for others in a private card game to be armed, says an Odessa attorney who played high-stakes cards until he married recently and settled down to "friendlier dominoes."

Michael McLeaish wasn't there and did not know the participants intimately, but he was willing to try to place the events in an appropriate context. "I never sat down at a high-stakes card game without some players being armed," he said.

"I hadn't taken a survey on guns or whether people carry more guns in Lubbock than Ector County, but it is not unusual for people to carry weapons out here...My thought is that everybody else is doing it, you kind of need one yourself. My thought is peer pressure. If a lot of people are carrying nuclear weapons to settle an argument, you kind of need an A-bomb yourself."

"Some of it is fear, there is a lot of macho in it and some of it is the legitimately recognized need for protection in certain situations."

"A lot of my friends, particularly in the oil business, take it in cash and jewelry. Their bank is their pocket, the same thing for their Rolex watches and their diamond rings."

McLeaish was asked to explain how a poker game could include someone like a convicted fugitive and an apparent selection of straight businessmen. "I had that happen once. What you are interested in is players and money. I never have seen anybody run a background check on anybody in a game. But it happened to me where they tried to run a marked deck in."

Richard Notley does not ignore that his brother was there but the link that eludes him is the one that puts him in the same room with Price. As a veteran peace officer put it, "Most of those real gamblers are not real dangerous people, not vicious types of individuals."

Richard said, to his knowledge, his brother Bobby's biggest gamble "was to put a quarter in the Coke machine to see if it came out."

A hotel was raided in 1968 by agents of the Texas Liquor Control Board after the Dallas Times Herald published a story saying it learned of "a private gambling suite, where free liquor flowed and food was served to dice players using $5-minimum chips."

The agents found "not one single evidence of gambling and didn't even find a deck of cards," said an official at the time.

The suite apparently never reopened.

There was also the Odessa Pro-Am, a unique West Texas summer festival on a heavily irrigated patch of green along U.S. 80 toward Midland.

"It was the betting capital of the world, it seemed like," said a partaker of the era. "A lot of money used to flow there."

If you were inclined, you could buy a ticket on a "race" between groups of golfers, with odds calculated on the amount of money in the betting pool, another tournament habitue explained. The so-called races "stimulated the tournament, but actually the greatest betting was between individuals," said the first.

The gin games in the locker, maybe?

"Tell me about it!" he said.

There were name pros and Hollywood celebrities in later years.

There were "practice" matches for "five-, six-, seven-thousand dollars, low score."

There was a foot race between a football player and a pro golfer from the first tee to the first green "with a substantial bet on it." The football player lost, according to a witness.

"It was strictly a fun tournament, particularly in the early days," said the same witness. By whatever reputation, it grew to the point that it was perceived as a threat to a competing stop on the Professional Golfers Association tour, whose sponsor was not giving some of the pros who wanted to go to Odessa their releases.

"The bigger it got, the more hassle it seemed to get," said someone familiar with the tournament, and the Pro-Am played its last round in 1969, 20 years after its start.

To be fair, not everyone in the Permian Basin flocked to the tables and those who recall the Texas Coast in those days know Texas Rangers had their hands full there, too.

Neither was or is Odessa the only town in Texas where they play expensive card games.

"The gambling back then was done by local people," said a former Odessa resident. "There never was an outcry in Odessa about gambling."

The portrait painted by several sources of the 1950s and '60s fades in the '70s and '80s. Relatively sophisticated local operations apparently gave way to informal games in back rooms and private clubs, to condos at the famed quarter-horse race course in nearby New Mexico and to chartered Las Vegas excursions.

If you nose around Odessa now, you may not find a casino behind a peephole, but it isn't too difficult to locate an afternoon blackjack game in an air-conditioned rear office for $100 a card. A certain element will patronize cock fights down a dirt road and floating crap games flower when the biennial oilfield equipment show hits town.

Braniff's hopes flying high with creditors

DALLAS (AP) — Whether grounded Braniff International can get back in the air at a time when conditions are generally poor for the airline industry depends on an agreement being hammered out with creditors over the next few days.

Braniff officials are spending the weekend trying to convince secured creditors to approve a $70 million deal with the Hyatt Corp. aimed at getting the airline back in the sky by October. The plan was announced Thursday, exactly one year after Braniff filed for debt protection under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy laws, recalled its airliners and shut down its operations.

Under the Hyatt plan, 30 Braniff jetliners would be returned to service and 2,000 former employees put back on the payroll. However, the plan must be approved by Braniff's secured creditors, who hold about $467.5 million of the airline's debt, and by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Fort Worth.

Some secured creditors told The Dallas Times Herald on Friday that they still had not seen anything in writing to spell out the Chicago-based hotel chain's offer, which was approved by Braniff directors Thursday. But an unidentified Braniff spokesman told The Dallas Morning News that airline officials began meeting with the creditors this weekend and expect to continue meeting into the first part of next week.

Braniff is expected to file a court notice Monday saying it intends to amend its bankruptcy reorganization plan. The plan filed last month calls for Braniff to operate only a small ground-services and maintenance company.

Under terms of the new agreement, Hyatt would provide $70 million, which directors said was enough to revive the airline, through a combination of equity and secured loans, and get an 80 percent equity position in the reorganized airline and about $300 million in tax benefits still held by Braniff.

Secured creditors told the Times Herald that one crucial issue in their approval of the new plan is reaching an acceptable agreement on how much Hyatt would pay to lease the grounded jetliners. Because the creditors own the mortgages on the planes, Hyatt would have to pay a monthly fee for their use.

Canadian front charges into town

A high pressure area which charged down out of Canada resulted in unseasonably low temperatures Saturday in West Texas, according to the National Weather Service.

"It just brought in an awfully lot of cold air," said forecaster Roger Mallory of the NWS station at Midland Air Terminal. "It's a combination of Canadian air as well as the air being cold as it was. We sometimes do get some Canadian air in here as late as May, but it's not too common an occurrence. We can have several years in a row in which that doesn't occur in May."

The high reached only 69 Saturday after several 90-plus days in a row, while the low dipped to 51. However, those marks failed to challenge the alltime record low for the date of 40 set in 1967. The record high is 100, established in 1960.

Though temperatures were expected to drop into the 40s early this morning, the NWS expects a warming trend to become evident tonight. Today's high should be near 70, while tonight's low should be in the upper 40s.

Winds should be northwesterly at 10 to 20 miles per hour today.

Monday, meanwhile, should bring partly cloudy skies and afternoon temperatures in the mid-70s.

The cool front has brought with it a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms for today. Only a trace has been recorded in Midland so far in May, while the 1983 total stands at 1.67 inches.

Italian soldiers prepare to plant explosive on the slopes of Mount Etna, forming an earthen dam and diverting the volcano's lava flow away from villages. The blast failed to do the trick, so steamshovels may now be used.

Explosion doesn't divert lava flow

CATANIA, Sicily (AP) — Experts exploded a half-ton of dynamite on Mount Etna early Saturday in hopes of making a river of lava flow into a special canal. But nature rebelled, the molten rock just oozed and steamshovels may be brought in to finish the job.

The explosives experts tried to destroy a dam that was built to check the lava flow, and to divert enough of it to keep the main stream from mountain villages. After the explosion, parts of the dam were still standing and the lava appeared to be keeping to its course.

Etna, Europe's most active volcano, looked like a science fiction movie set Saturday. Spotlights flickered in the brilliant orange-red glow of steam hissing from the lava and helicopters circled overhead with blinking blue lights.

The final preparation for the blast was heralded by flares and a bugle call. Journalists, officials and dozens of vulcanologists from all around the world were herded into wooden bunkers with bulletproof glass about 300 yards from the dam.

Suddenly, at 4:09 a.m., there was a quick flash of red and white, then billowing smoke and then three low pops.

For minutes nothing was visible as the crowd waited in silence for the smoke to clear.

"It's an absolute success," said a beaming Civil Defense Minister Loris Fortuna.

But as time passed and the lava flow never picked up steam, the initial enthusiasm dwindled.

"It's not exactly what we expected," he said. "The lava is not moving as fast as it should."

Cristofolini said the project was only "a partial success" because not enough lava had been diverted into the canal to slow down the main lava stream.

Ernesto Grossi, a spokesman for the local prefect's office which is coordinating the project, said experts were studying the possibility of using steamshovels and bulldozers to remove impediments to the lava flow in the specially dug canal.

Professor Amedeo Sbacchi, in charge of building the canal, told a news conference that more explosives also were being considered to eliminate remains of the dam between the lava stream and the canal.

"But it will first be necessary to study the results of what we have already done," he said.

The explosion was originally scheduled for early Friday afternoon but unexpected waves of molten lava poured over the dam throughout the day and postponed the effort.

Dozens of experts worked into the night under powerful spotlights to repair the damage so the dynamite could be installed in metal tubes in the dam.

However, the lava forced several last minute changes in plans, said Swedish explosives expert Rolf Lennart Abersten, brought in to supervise the project.

He said he could not place any charges on the bottom of the 50-foot-long dam because of the lava spills, which also caused the wall to double in thickness to 20 feet.

As a result, portions of the 15-foot-high dam remained intact to block the lava flow, said the Swede — who before the blast had been dubbed "the daredevil" and "the magician" by Italian newspapers.

The $4.9 million plan was designed to channel a major portion of the lava flow into the 1,650-foot canal and then to an uninhabited basin. The lava has been pouring down the southeastern slope of Etna since March 28 and has covered nearly five miles.

When the plan was first approved it was feared that the lava might reach several nearby villages, but scientists said the flow slowed down so much that the villages would not have been in any danger even if the canal had not been built.

Coalinga's 'pep talk' somewhat shaken

COALINGA, Calif. (AP) — The Coalinga City Council scheduled a town meeting in a park Sunday to give hardy residents a "pep talk" to help their recovery from a devastating earthquake.

Meanwhile, an earthquake that measured 4.1 on the Richter scale rumbled through a largely unpopulated farming area late Friday 14 miles southwest of Fresno, Calif., and about 55 miles from Coalinga.

The temblor and its preliminary epicenter were recorded by the state Department of Water Resources at 10:10 p.m., said Mike Brown, spokesman for the state Office of Emergency Services.

No one reported feeling the quake, and no damage was reported, said Fresno County Sheriff's Lt. Richard Boland.

Seismologists have recorded 14 aftershocks above the magnitude of 4.0 on the ground-motion scale along a newly charted fault 10 miles northeast of Coalinga since the major quake May 2.

Mayor Keith Scrivner and council members plan to give a progress report on the city's reconstruction Sunday in Olsen Park.

"Many of our citizens have become discouraged and disenchanted," Scrivner said, adding hundreds been "running on adrenaline" since the worst 30-second jolt caused $31 million damage.

"In this pep talk Sunday, we're going to tell our citizens that no one is going to serve them on a silver platter," he said. "They are going to have to kick and scratch and work for what they get."

The Chamber of Commerce proposed an unusual fund-raising project for reconstruction: non-voting membership certificates offered worldwide that will be dated on the day of the earthquake, $25 per person or $50 per business. Thirty already have signed up.

Public Works Director Alan Jacobsen expects to take at least another week to award a contract to demolish the worst-hit buildings in an eight-block downtown business district. Razing will take about 45 days.

To help merchants without offices, business leaders have suggested using Coalinga High School rooms as temporary facilities this summer.

Federal officials reported 1,587 applications for disaster aid in a week. The quake caused 47 injuries and destroyed 563 homes and 141 businesses.

Midlander attends discussions on Hispanics in marketplace

Martin said such a plan "is being discussed" but that it likely would meet "opposition on both sides in the business sector."

Martin said he would carry back several recommendations after having participated in the four-day discussion here among approximately 20 Anglo and Hispanic business leaders from throughout the nation. The by-invitation-only conference was sponsored by the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies.

Among Martin's recommendations:

—Federal programs to assist small businessmen in securing loans and venture capital should be more widely advertised in minority communities;

—A training program should be developed for Hispanics who are out of school and not properly trained for business;

—Business and community leaders should create a program whereby they go directly into schools and encourage Hispanic students to complete their educations, as well as assure the students that they will have opportunites for success in the business world equal to those of their Anglo peers.

"I've learned from this conference that the Hispanics have not had the confidence that they would be offered the opportunity if they were qualified. So we must give them this confidence and exert every effort we can to erase the insecurity they feel," Martin said.

"If we had assimilated Hispanics to the proper degree (from the beginning), and if they had the same opportunity as an Anglo in education, then we wouldn't be talking today."

Lebanese Cabinet endorses plan

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Cabinet on Saturday unanimously endorsed the draft troop withdrawal agreement with Israel, despite Syria's vigorous condemnation of the pact, and launched a diplomatic push to win support in the Arab world.

A statement issued after the emergency session said all 10 ministers voted for the agreement, which lays the groundwork for withdrawal of 25,000 Israeli troops in Lebanon.

Israel has approved the accord in principle but neither country has signed it, and it won't take effect until Syria and the PLO agree to withdraw their forces. The Lebanese Cabinet empowered chief negotiator Antoine Fattal to sign the accord "in due time."

Israel Radio reported that Israeli political sources expressed satisfaction with the Cabinet's endorsement. The broadcast quoted the sources as saying they hoped the agreement would be signed immediately after meetings of the Lebanese and Israeli Parliaments on Monday.

In Damascus, sources said Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat paid an eight-hour visit late Friday to PLO units in the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon. It was Arafat's first reported visit to Lebanon since PLO forces were evacuated from west Beirut last August during the Israeli siege.

The sources, who asked not to be named, provided no details on Arafat's trip.

After the Cabinet meeting in Beirut, President Amin Gemayel asked Economy Minister Ibrahim Halawi and Housing Minister Baheddine Bsat to seek Arab support for the plan in the face of the Syrian opposition. Bsat then departed for Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia, and Halawi was to leave Sunday for Persian Gulf countries, state television reported.

In Cairo, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak gave the "full weight" of his support to Lebanon and praised the U.S. mediation that led to the withdrawal agreement. He did not mention Syria by name but said any Arab stance delaying an Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon would be "unacceptable."

Mubarak, addressing Parliament, said that under the agreement, Lebanon would "regain its land and guarantee its rights.

"We, therefore, appeal to all Arab brothers not to withhold backing and support of their Lebanese brothers at these critical moments."

He said he messaged President Reagan Saturday "to express our appreciation of this (withdrawal) achievement and to welcome a continued active role by the United States" in efforts to gain an overall Arab-Israeli peace.

Syrian President Hafez Assad told visiting Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem on Friday the agreement with Israel weakens Lebanese sovereignty, threatens Syria's national security and constitutes "a reward to Israel for its invasion of Lebanon."

In another sign of Syrian displeasure, several leading political rivals of Gemayel's administration met Saturday, with Syrian backing, in the Syrian-controlled town of Zghota and formed a "National Progressive Opposition Front" to oppose the agreement.

Despite Syria's objections, the Cabinet statement said Gemayel would appoint a "working group" to continue talks with Damascus on the troop withdrawal issue.

The independent newspaper An-Nahar said Moslem Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan probably would head the working group and that it would travel to Damascus "soon" for further talks.

Salem conferred Saturday with various Arab ambassadors, presumably to brief them on his talks with Assad. Syria and Lebanon do not have ambassadors in one another's capital.

Sources in Beirut said the withdrawal agreement was expected to be initialed Sunday by Israeli and Lebanese officials at a meeting in the Israeli town of Netanya, north of Tel Aviv. The agreement could be signed as early as Tuesday.

Beirut newspapers said Gemayel would seek endorsement for the pact in the Lebanese Parliament. Parliamentary approval is not legally required under emergency powers granted Gemayel last year, but government sources say he wants a strong endorsement to demonstrate widespread support for the accord.

Once Gemayel has an endorsement in hand, the sources say, he will formally ask the Syrians to withdraw their troops from Lebanon. Syrian troops entered Lebanon in 1976 under an Arab League mandate to stop the Moslem-Christian civil war.

The Israelis have said they will sign the agreement, but will consider it suspended until Syria's estimated 35,000 soldiers and the Palestine Liberation Organization's 10,000 guerrillas agree to leave Lebanon, where they are stationed in the eastern Bekaa Valley and around the northern city of Tripoli.

U.S. officials claim the Palestinians and the Soviet-backed Syrians have been reinforcing their units in the Bekaa to strengthen their positions in advance of a possible Israeli pullout.

Richards seeks equal pay provision

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Ann Richards, Texas state treasurer, told the National Strategy Council of the Democratic National Committee at an all-day meeting here Saturday that the party should give attention to getting equal pay for women who perform equal work to men.

She said two other proposals, a cooperative council with business and a bank for development, were good ideas. But what was really important for the party to consider as it draws up its platform for the 1984 presidential campaign is giving equal opportunity to women, she added.

"Women are educated, educated, educated; yet often are paid less than men with less education. It's all right to speak of training women but what women really need is jobs," said Ms. Richards.

She was one of two Texans on the council. Dwayne Holman, from the governor's office, did not attend. She was one of two women to address the council.

Family to resubmit permit request

An informal poll of the City Council indicated that with the addition of Godfrey, Ms. Mitchell may have the necessary votes for gaining council approval.

Akins, Davidson and Hatfield indicated they would likely favor the permit if it's put to another vote.

Sloan said he'd probably vote against the request and Marcum could not be reached for comment.

Ms. Mitchell said she plans to meet with David Godfrey to discuss her request. Before April's council election, he had been a member of the Planning and Zoning Commission.

The new councilman said that while he wouldn't disclose how he might vote, "I'll be available any time to sit down and visit with her."

The Planning and Zoning Commission, on a 7-0 vote Feb. 14, gave unanimous approval to the permit request.

Ms. Mitchell said it was after the commission's vote that she mistakenly assumed her request was granted, moved the 35-foot-long trailer into the backyard and connected utilities.

She later was instructed by the city Planning Department to disconnect the utilities. The city code permits the mobile home to be kept in her back yard as a travel trailer in storage, provided it's not connected to utilities.

Richard Hennessy, planning and community development director, said the Inspections Department pursues cases where construction is done without a permit because many times the violator's attitude is: "If I don't get caught, fine. If I do, well then I'll do something about it."

"Not to obtain a permit when it's required and to do work without first obtaining the necessary permit, to me, is not simply a mistake," Hennessy said. "The inspections division is making an attempt to ensure that permits are obtained before construction is done."

Hereford to be home of waste?

HEREFORD, Texas (AP) — Job-starved communities such as Naturita, 8olo., and Clovis, N.M., have lobbied without success to become the home of radioactive waste dumps and MX missile silos.

Andrews, Texas, Mayor Windle Harper said earlier this month that his South Plains town also would be happy to house a nuclear depository because "a lot of land out here" would be ideal for the annual burial of nearly 1.5 million pounds of the nation's high-level nuclear wastes.

But the rich Texas Panhandle farming community of Hereford has no hankering for nuclear wastes. Most residents have expressed horror that Hereford has been named one of nine proposed underground dumping sites in six states for the $8 billion nuclear depository.

"That's a prize we're not sure we want to win," Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce Vice President F. Michael Carr said.

RESIDENTS OF THIS green, tulip-filled town of 18,000 and state legislators vow to voice their misgivings on Monday, when the Department of Energy holds a hearing in Hereford to discuss a huge nuclear waste depository proposed for construction nearly a half-mile beneath Deaf Smith County.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said he won't stand quietly by the wayside because the "federal government wants to sweep its nuclear trash under the lush agricultural carpet of Deaf Smith County."

The state Senate passed a bill this spring that says plans to drill shafts through Texas' part of the Ogallala Aquifer, which supplies irrigation waters for farmers from Nebraska to New Mexico, first must get the approval of the state Department of Water Resources.

State Sen. Bill Sarpaulis, D-Canyon, mandated in his bill that projects such as DOE's proposed drilling near Hereford first guarantee that no wastes be leaked into the aquifer before drilling approval is granted.

THE BILL, designed to harness federal plans to build a nuclear depository near Hereford or nearby Tulia, is pending in the state House.

About 1 million of the cattle and some of the state's richest farmland surround Hereford. Said Carl King of the Texas Corn Growers Association: "We don't want the stuff here. We don't care if they put it in the Statue of Liberty."

Petroleum geologist Gerald McCathen has urged federal officials not to put nuclear wastes deep under a 16-square-mile section of northeast Deaf Smith County: "I hate to see the garden spot of the nation destroyed."

A DOE HEARING also will be held Monday in Albuquerque, N.M., to discuss the proposed $2.1 billion Waste Isolation Pilot Plant about 26 miles east of Carlsbad, N.M. The DOE announced in March that WIPP's salt beds are suitable for burying low-level defense industry nuclear waste.

WIPP is expected to house wastes from America's weapons program in six-mile-wide salt beds 2,150 feet underground.

A DOE hearing will be held Tuesday in Tulia, which also is under consideration for a depository site. Hearings to discuss nearby waste sites already have been held in Las Vegas, Nev., Hanford, Wash., Heflin, La., and Salt Lake City.

The DOE is considering two depositories near southern Utah's Canyonlands National Park, and also at underground salt domes near Richton, Miss.

SOME HEREFORD RESIDENTS recently have taken a crash-course in nuclear wastes, and plan to tell the federal government that Deaf Smith County, described by the Chamber of Commerce as "the nation's bread basket," is poorly suited for the depository.

"It doesn't make sense for the federal government to consider storing radioactive nuclear wastes in underground facilities so close to this precious water supply," U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, said in April 1982. "I am concerned the DOE is putting the cart before the horse."

Gov. Mark White already has attacked the Reagan Administration over the hearings, saying the talks are premature because safety guidelines for the 2,000-acre underground site could jeopardize the health and welfare of the surrounding populace.

TULIA FARMER Delbert Devin agrees: "I just don't like the idea of having nuclear wastes in my backyard."

Critics say five shafts to be drilled nearly a half-mile through the Ogallala Aguifer could — under a worse-case scenario — leak radioactive wastes into the underground river and contaminate much of the Great Plains farmland.

Ten test boreholes have been drilled by DOE contractors in the Panhandle area since 1978 at a cost of $25 million. The results haven't proven wastes can be buried successfully beneath Deaf Smith and Swisher counties without the threat of contamination, critics say.

The shafts for the proposed nuclear depository would pierce the 300-foot-deep aquifer, and come to rest about 2,500 feet underground in a maze of salt-encased caverns designed to house most of the nation's industrial nuclear waste tonnage by 1998.

EACH YEAR, up to 1.5 million pounds of wastes used by the nation's nuclear reactors would be transported across country and buried at the site, DOE analyst Jeff Smiley said.

Used nuclear rods at present are stored in temporary pools of neutron-absorbing boric acid water near each of the nation's 80 reactors. Fifty-nine reactors currently are under construction, DOE officials say.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled April 20 that states may ban new nuclear plants until the federal government devises a safe method for disposing of radioactive wastes.

THOSE FIGHTING Texas' becoming the America's dumpyard for nuclear wastes come from both political persuasions: former Gov. Bill Clements, a Republican, told a Canyon audience last fall he believed "valuable productive land" in the Panhandle shouldn't be used for waste burial.

Ten-foot-tall stainless steel canisters containing waste crystallized in glass would be lowered into the caverns, packed in corrosion-resistant material and surrounded by grout in salt beds tnat the DOE says is the safest and most technoloically feasible way to store the wastes.

"Isolation of nuclear wastes will be assured through a system of multiple barriers — both engineered and natural — placed between the waste and the environment," the DOE wrote in a 1982 report.

The DOE plans to narrow the proposed depository site list from nine to five by August, and to three by December. The president will choose the final site before March 1987.

The proposed nuclear dump site is welcomed by some in Hereford because DOE aides predict up to 1,800 workers will be employed during the 11 years of construction. An estimated 1,200 people permanantly would be employed at the site, boosting the area's economic health, Smiley said.

NEARLY THREE DECADES of nuclear power experience have proven the industry is safer than many think, said Westinghouse nuclear power expert Sam Rod. He told Hereford residents during winter DOE hearings that electricity actually is more dangerous, and annually kills about 1,000 people.

AP Laserphoto

Deaf Smith County Judge W. Glen Nelson says he is not afraid of nuclear wastes in Texas. Hereford and Tulia in the Texas Panhandle are among the nine sites from Washington to Louisiana that the Department of Energy has selected for possible nuclear waste dumps. Hereford is fighting the waste dump. Nelson says although he trusts the government, he doesn't want Hereford divided by dissention.

West Germany "has already placed nuclear wastes into salt formations" without incident, Rod added.

But environmentalists such as Don Hancock of the Southwest Research and Information Center in Albuquerque doubt any benefits will filter down to a community such as Hereford.

Possible contamination of the aquifer — lifeblood to Deaf Smith farmers — and geological instability of the 70- to 200-foot-deep salt veins, where wastes would be stored for thousands of years during the time that nuclear wastes remain hazardous, makes the Texas projects too iffy, Hancock said.

"WE'RE CONCERNED about our water, and we'll scream our heads off until we get assurances over this hot issue," Hereford Mayor Wes Fisher said.

Tulia Chamber of Commerce head Gary Anderson, who helped organize STAND — Serious Texans Against Nuclear Dumping — said federal studies on the suitability of the Hereford and Tulia sites are inadequate. "The impact of storing nuclear waste in salt beds really hasn't been discovered."

Others point out that nuclear waste sites aren't immune to earthquakes. Since 1914, there have been about two dozen earthquakes in Texas, mostly in the Panhandle and West Texas. In June 1951, a quake measured at 6.0 struck between Hereford and Amarillo. The destructive San Francisco earthquake of 1906 measured 8.3 on the Richter Scale.

IN 1971, Lyons, Kans., was selected as the nation's first nuclear waste repository following four years of research on Project Salt Vault.

South Korea gets credit to buy cotton

States News Service

WASHINGTON, May 13 – The top officials of the Reagan administration reversed themselves on an earlier decision Friday afternoon and approved $50 million in U.S. credit so that South Korea can buy Texas cotton.

Sen. John G. Tower, R. Texas was notified by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan who presided over the senior executives group advising the President on International economic Policy. Tower immediately issued a statement praising the decision.

A few weeks ago the group urged by Secretary Regan had rejected South Korea's request for credit to buy. He had felt it was a subsidy.

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D., Mission, collecd figures to prove that South Korea would buy the U.S. cotton only if she could get credit, that she has traditionally been one of the best customers of Texas' short staple cotton which is grown in great quantities, more than any other state. He cited that South Korea wanted to buy 86,00 more bales this year than last and mentioned the surpluses of cotton in Texas warehouses needing a buyer.

Tower said he could not immediately determine how may bales of cotton $50 milion in creditss would permit South Korea to purchase but he thought it would be "a great boost" to the farmers. "The number of bales will be determined by the market price, it was understood," he said.

UTPB allocated $15 million

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin has been allocated more than $15 million for the coming biennium under the House version of the general appropriations bill, which received final passage Friday by an 82-50 vote.

Under SB 179, the general appropriations bill, UTPB is budgeted $7,474,818 for 1984 and $7,634,850 for 1985.

Faculty salaries add up to $2,213,586 for both years, while the library is allocated $460,780 for 1984 and $466,618 for 1985.

House approves agriculture bill

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House has given final approval to a bill allowing the Texas Department of Agriculture to impose a civil penalty in lieu of suspension of licenses for a violation of agency rules.

HB 2083, sponsored by Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownsfield, says the department need not suspend a license for a violation if good cause is found for the violation.

Under the bill, the penalty could be no less than $50 for each day the license would have been suspended.

Montford's bill approved

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House of Representatives Thursday approved legislation by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, relating to microfilming of records made or held by local governments.

SB 682, sponsored in the House by Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, sets out provisions for retention and destruction of such records.

The House had earlier given preliminary approval to Gibson's bill, but Gibson had delayed final action to allow the Senate version to be substituted.

Jet fighter crashes, all safe

COMANCHE, Texas (AP) — Two men aboard a Navy F-4 Phantom parachuted to safety Saturday when the jet fighter crashed in an unpopulated area about three miles south of this West Central Texas town.

Navy Lt.j.g. Sylvia Maxwell said there were no reports of injuries or property damage.

She said the aircraft, based at the Naval air station in Grand Prairie, was on a regularly scheduled training mission when it crashed.

'Tax hike wanted for teachers'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans are willing to pay higher taxes to fund a pay hike for teachers, the chairman of the State Board of Education said Saturday.

But Joe Kelly Butler of Houston stopped short of endorsing the $1.27 billion tax package laid out Friday by Gov. Mark White, who is pushing for a 24 percent pay raise for teachers during the next two years.

The governor's program depends heavily on increases in "sin taxes," including taxes on liquor, cigarettes, amusement machines, beer and wine. If approved by lawmakers, the tax hikes would be the state's first in 12 years.

Marketers want laws amended

WASHINGTON, May 12 - Texas Oil Marketers asked the Texas congressional delegation Thursday to vote to amend Federal Credit laws to allow companies offering credit cards to charge holders a surcharge. This could increase the price of gasoline at the pump by 3 percent. In some cases it would amount to 4 cents a gallon, the marketers explained in a pamphlet they handed out.

Byram E. Merrell, Fort Worth, president, Bill Kent, Midland and W.P. Wright, Abilene explained that the oil company which supplies them with gasoline never repays the marketer the full price where credit cards are used. Instead of 100 percent on the outlay, the marketer is paid 97 percent.

This was the annual luncheon of the group which brought barbecue from Amarillo for the event. It is much looked forward to by members and their congressional staff aides. There is normally better attendance than at most events given for congressmen here. This time 20 of the Texas congressmen were present.

Man wins, loses $40,000

DALLAS (AP) — A man got a call from a radio station telling him he had won $40,000 in a grocery store bingo contest, but 30 minutes later he was told he had not been eligible and would get nothing.

Alvie Marical, 43, a welder from Terrell got the call Friday from KVIL-FM in Dallas, which draws the numbers from the Safeway grocery chain contest as part of an on-air promotion.

Marical said he was told he had won the $25,000 first prize and a $15,000 second prize. About 30 minutes later, he said, Safeway informed him he was disqualified because his 17-year-old daughter, Wendy, works part-time at a Safeway store.

Gonzalez originates $760 million 'miracle'

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — At the Congress, they are calling it Henry's "miracle" — this passage of an Emergency Housing bill to provide 100,000 unemployed workers with mortgage loan money to keep them from being evicted from their homes.

San Antonio's Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D., looks at you with that slow smile of his and calls it "a miracle", too.

As chairman of the House subcommittee on Housing, he had every reason to lose. The Republicans were determined to defeat it. Led by Rep. Chalmers P. Wylie, Ohio, they claimed the Reagan Recovery from economic recession was moving so fast now that the bill was not needed. But Henry knew that in Wylie's own district around Columbus, there are today more threatened evictions than any place in the nation.

Woman prepares baby animals to return to wild

SHELDON, Texas (AP) — Georgia Rosencutter's yellow bedroom is full of babies, but ones markedly different from those in the other houses in the neighborhood.

To the right are two tiny cardinals and four yowling, 10-day-old blue jays. In the covered cage ahead are two screech owls. Three squirrels, two cottontail rabbits, two older blue jays, a baby mallard, and a 6-week-old starling also share the room.

In the back yard are the two largest members of the household — Frances, a year-old doe, and Velvet, a buck, a little younger and smaller. At about 160 pounds, Frances outweighs the 4-foot-11½ Ms. Rosencutter by about 60 pounds.

"If they get in the house, they stay until they get ready to go," she said of the deer, which like her other wards are being prepared for a return to the wild.

The 50-year-old woman lives on Social Security in this small community about 20 miles from downtown Houston. She said she doesn't drive because she doesn't see well enough — she lost one eye because of disease and suffers a limited range of vision in the other even with the aid of glasses and a contact lens. She has had brittle diabetes since age 7 and takes insulin shots to control it.

But her life is devoted to taking care of others, animals she fears would die if not for her care. Veterinarians call her for advice and send her wild animals to nurse back to health. Police and firefighters also seek her help when confronted with creatures they know nothing about. A recent call for aid came from a man with a flock of 500 mallards, including 20 ailing ducks in his bathtub.

Ms. Rosencutter said she learned all she knows from reading and from doing.

It all began after she quit her job as a registered nurse a dozen years ago.

"I raised exotic birds and they (neighbors) just started bringing me little wild ones thinking, 'Well, she can take care of them since she takes care of her own,'" she said.

The exotic birds are gone now, too expensive after her husband left her three years ago, she said. But in the past 12 years she has taken in many other birds as well as baby alligators, wolves, an osprey, hawks, a bald eagle, a peregrine falcon, armadillos, opossums, and racoons, she said. Last year alone her home was home for eight fawns and 16 racoons, at various times.

She refers to others animals she doesn't know how to handle or isn't equipped to take care of, such as snakes and calves. But she said she makes sure those she does take in are well cared for.

"I'm not going to let the critters go hungry," she said.

The former nurse doesn't hesitate when asked what kind of patients she prefers.

"There's much more satisfaction with the birds and animals than with the people,' she said.

"We're the so-called intelligent race but yet we gripe and we complain and we hurt each other. And you don't see any sort of wildlife that destroys or hurts another species of wildlife. The only time they destroy or kill is to defend themselves or for food."

She expresses no fear of the hurt wild animals.

"I don't have good sense. I've never been afraid of anything. I just go barreling in and think about it after it's been done," she said.

Connally holds livestock auction

HOUSTON (AP) — Fifty-one four-legged hotel guests paraded like models down a carpeted runway Saturday as former Texas Gov. John Connally showed off the wares of his eighth Western Heritage sale.

Connally was one of three businessmen displaying 26 Quarter Horses and 25 Santa Gertrudis cattle at the Shamrock Hilton Hotel. The animals and 27 works of art were to be auctioned off in the hotel's grand ballroom Saturday night.

She said the show this morning gave potential bidders a chance to view the animals more closely and watch them walk.

The show's total sales last year were $3,125,500, Ms. Wilson said. Of that sum, $1,782,200 stemmed from art; $309,800 from cattle.

Tug-of-war continues in Council chamber

CHICAGO (AP) — Negotiators are exploring compromises in the two-week tug-of-war over control of the City Council while a judge considers lawsuits filed by both sides in the dispute.

Lawyers representing Mayor Harold Washington's forces and those of 29 dissident aldermen fired their best legal shots Friday afternoon before Circuit Court Judge James C. Murray.

A 3½-hour negotiating session by truce teams from the two factions had failed to produce an accord earlier Friday.

The dissident aldermen have filed suit seeking a temporary injunction to prevent Washington from interfering with their reorganization of the council. Washington contends the reorganization plan, worked out at a May 2 meeting after he had adjourned the session, is illegal.

Murray said he will rule on the matter Monday if weekend negotiations fail to produce a settlement. Talks were to resume today, but they were postponed until Monday morning to give both sides more time to review last week's discussions.

The peace talks began Thursday after three angry public confrontations on the floor of the council chamber. Negotiators for Washington and the opposing faction, led by Alderman Edward Vrdolyak, met again Friday for a second day of negotiations on neutral turf — the Bismarck Hotel across from City Hall.

But the discussions, which mark the first serious attempt at peacemaking since the dispute began, broke up when negotiatiors decided to "wait for new information," said Alderman Wlliam Henry.

March conducted for homosexual rights

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP) — More than 1,000 men and women turned out in support of homosexual rights Saturday, marching past hundreds of spectators, police and counterdemonstrators.

Although the marchers were greeted by several groups of people opposing their views, no problems were reported.

Many of the marchers carried placards demanding homosexual rights. One of the larger signs read: "Stop Heterosexual Intolerance Today."

"We're here to show harassment won't scare us," said Linda McRoy, a student at Smith College. "Harassment won't make us not exist. We're here to stay. We make a contribution to the community."

As the marchers gathered at Pulaski Park for a rally, about 30 members of Faith Baptist Church stood quietly by with their own placards denouncing homosexuality.

"It's ungodly," said the Rev. Richard Paasch, who warned that Northampton could become "another San Francisco."

"Gays in San Francisco have taken over that city," he said. "There's 150,000 of them and it's a city of 750,000 people."

The gay community in San Francisco has become known for its political activisim. In this Connecticut Valley college town, the gay community has grown in recent years and now sponsors a newspaper, workshops and a book store.

On Friday, the Daily Hampshire Gazette ran an ad listing hundreds of names of both heterosexuals and homosexuals who said they support gay rights.

"The harassment, the threats, the violence directed at gays and lesbians appalls and frightens us. But like the intended victims of this campaign of hate, we are not silenced," the ad read.

The weekend march became a focal point in the community after homosexual groups asked for — and got — a mayoral task force study of allegations that gays are threatened by telephone callers and harassed at work and in nightclubs and other public places.

Northampton Mayor David Musante said the task force concluded that police had properly investigated the allegations. There have been no arrests.

'Small businesses will help nation recover'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, praising entrepreneurs as the "forgotten heroes" of America, said Saturday that small businesses will help point the nation toward economic recovery.

In his weekly radio broadcast, the president said small firms "will provide most of the new jobs to bring down unemployment."

Noting that Saturday was the last day of Small Business Week, Reagan said: "Every week should be Small Business Week because America is small business.

"Small firms account for nearly half our jobs, they create some 60 percent of new jobs and they're on the cutting edge of innovation, providing products and ideas for the future."

Giving the Democratic response, Rep. Barbara Mikulski of Maryland said the ideas generated by small business "come from ... having a good basic education."

Urging more money be spent on schools and noting a congressional panel's approval last week of money for the MX missile, she said, "The Republicans want to spend money for bombs and the Democrats want to spend money for books."

"The president says we need that money to build weapons to make the Soviets think twice before they'll attack," she said. "But there is another enemy that threatens this country, that enemey is illitaracy. ...

"If we have to chose between rockets and rulers, let's make the best choice. Let's teach basic values and old-fashioned skills," Ms. Mikulski said.

Congressmen may agree on taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top White House economic adviser has raised the possibility of compromise on demands by Senate Democrats and moderate Republicans for higher taxes in the government's fiscal 1984 budget.

Martin Feldstein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said Friday that a tax increase in the range of $9 billion in the 1984 fiscal year "will neither make nor break the (economic) recovery."

Feldstein made his comments at a White House briefing while Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., and three key colleagues held a meeting at the White House with four top White House aides to break the budget impasse.

On Capitol Hill, Sens. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., and Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., chairman and senior Democrat on the Budget Committee, held a private lunch to discuss their next moves.

The meetings came after the Senate voted Thursday to reject two budget plans, including one backed by Reagan and the Senate leadership that provided a two-year total of only $8 billion in tax increases next year and 1985, but left budget deficits that would have exceeded $200 billion a year by the end of the decade.

Budget Director David Stockman told a group of business leaders today that "we seem to be facing a gridlock in terms of those major elements where movement has to take place." The major elements he mentioned were "entitlement programs, domestic spending, defense outlays and taxes."

Stockman, addressing the Business Council in Hot Springs, Va., said, "Unfortunately all the parties to the debate are getting positioned in a way that makes it difficult to see how a resolution and overall framework can be adopted (and) measures to contain this ballooning deficit can be implemented."

The sluggish movement on the budget process prompted Treasury Secretary Donald Regan to say Friday that the financial markets cannot determine appropriate interest level rates without a government spending plan.

Regan, speaking to reporters at Business Council, said the markets use the budget's deficit and taxing targets as a gauge.

"The financial markets want to know what are these deficits going to be and they can take that into account when judging what a correct level of interest rates should be," he said.

"If you have no budget resolution you have no target or bogey at which to shoot," he added.

The budget backed by the president failed when seven Republican moderates, objecting to the size of the deficits, joined an almost solid wall of Democratic opposition. A second alternative also failed, 53-46.

That second budget, authored by Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., called for tax increases of nearly $9 billion next year; $13.9 billion in 1985 and nearly $74 billion over three years, including assumed enactment of Reagan's original plan for "standby tax increases" in 1986.

Ex-district attorney emerges as favorite in mayor's race

DENVER (AP) — A former district attorney who has failed twice to oust the incumbent has emerged as the favorite in the six-way race for the job Mayor Bill McNichols has held for 14 years.

The administration of McNichols, 73, a Democrat and son of an Irish immigrant, has been compared with that of Chicago's late Mayor Richard Daley, including charges of cronyism and ineptitude.

The slogan of Tooley, 49, is a pointed reference to criticism of McNichols: "No Special Favors — Just Good Government."

Tooley, a Democrat, has conducted a low-key campaign based on improving the job base and fighting crime, and said of his third try, "Everything just feels right this time."

David Fogel, the former Denver Democratic Party chairman, says that despite the polls, a defeat of McNichols would be quite an upset.

"You have to remember the city is in pretty decent shape. It is run pretty well, it's grown incredibly under McNichols," he said. "The problems ... are not earth-shattering.

Also running is Federico Pena, 35, a lawyer and former state legislator, who is bidding for the Hispanic vote.

Four other candidates, all of them trailing substantially in the polls, are former state legislator Wellington Webb, two-term state Democratic Party Chairman Monte Pasco, independent Steve Schweitzberger and Socialist Workers Party member Harold Sudmeyer.

A runoff between the two top vote-getters will be held June 21, unless one candidate gets 50 percent of the vote plus one.

McNichols says of the criticism that his younger opponents expect to "step in there in the mayor's office and wave a wand and do all the things in the world."

At political stops, McNichols consistently notes that Denver has grown under his leadership while other major cities have faltered.

He has denied any wrongdoing but has put distance between his campaign and administration officials who have made recent controversy.

Five weeks ago, he suspended the police chief and safety manager for their alleged involvement in skimming profits from city-run bingo games. On Thursday, McNichols revealed the city attorney, accused by Tooley of working shortened weeks and spending long weekends in Arizona, would resign next month. McNichols did not say what prompted the resignation.

The average age of top city officials appointed by McNichols is 63 and most have been with the mayor throughout his public life.

Questions have surfaced about concession contracts awarded to the mayor's friends and the failure of the city to collect millions of dollars in airport parking revenue.

Youths damage school

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three children smashed equipment, broke windows with baseball bats and splattered walls with paint and glue during a $15,000 vandalism spree at their school, authorities said Saturday.

An unidentified 11-year-old girl and two unidentified boys, ages 10 and 12, were under investigation of felony vandalism after the spree about 9:30 p.m. Friday inside the 93rd Street Elementary School, said Mel Brown, assistant chief of security for the Los Angeles Unified School District. They were released into their parents' custody.

Brown said damage was "pretty extensive" and estimated the cost at between $10,000 and $15,000.

The children apparently entered through a window and used baseball bats to break windows, televisions, typewriters, clocks, film projectors and other equipment, Brown said. File cabinets were toppled.

About nine of the school's 40 classrooms were damaged, said Tom Ward, a security watch commander for the district. Brown said the children spent 35 to 40 minutes in the building before a silent alarm was noticed by two security agents, and youngsters were captured as they tried to flee.

Judge scolds grandfather

GREELEY, Colo. (AP) — A judge scolded a 69-year-old grandfather for not showing remorse for killing his 70-year-old neighbor after a long-running feud, then sentenced the man to a short jail term and probation.

Weld County Judge Jonathan Hays on Friday sentenced Claude Richmond of Fort Lupton to a one-year stay in the County Jail plus eight years' probation. Richmond will be allowed daytime outings for work and probably will be released after 90 days.

Hays said the light sentence was justified because Richmond was not a risk to society, had no criminal record and was provoked by the victim, Robert Twiss.

Twiss was shot to death last Aug. 4 when Richmond picked up a shotgun and pointed it in the direction of Twiss' house next door. Richmond claimed he was just trying to scare Twiss, with whom he had been feuding for 12 years.

Executive gets prison term

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former Louisiana Commissioner of Administration Charles E. Roemer II lost a last-minute attempt to avoid reporting to prison Monday to begin serving his three-year Brilab sentence.

Roemer and reputed Mafia boss Carlos Marcello were found guilty in 1981 of using bribes and kickbacks to get hefty state insurance contracts. Their convictions were upheld on appeal, and Marcello was ordered to jail April 15 because of evidence — never made public — that he planned to skip the country.

Roemer originally was told to report to prison April 25, but was given a delay to get his businesses in better shape.

Teen-ager assaults mallard

DUBLIN, Pa. (AP) — A Bucks County judge upheld a $300 fine against a teen-ager who assaulted a duck.

The animal is one of three pet ducks, named Moe, Larry and Curly, owned by David Vetter. Vetter said that when the ducks were 4 months old last October, 15-year-old David Wisen came onto Vetter's property and whacked Curly over the head with a stick the size of a baseball bat.

The injured mallard "went into shock" and lay in the same spot for two days after he was struck, Vetter said, and the duck has since disappeared. Wisen's attorney had argued Friday for a lower fine, claiming the Fairless Hills youth had merely scared the animal.

University tests new drug

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The University of Rochester Medical Center will test the effectiveness of the drug interferon on genital and plantar warts.

"Venereal warts are thought to be the third most common sexually transmitted disease," with more than 800,000 new cases a year, and plantar warts, which grow on feet bottoms, are also a common ailment, said Dr. Richard Reichman, a member of the research team.

Interferon, which is a protein produced by white blood cells, is also being tested at the medical center for the treatment of two types of cancer.

Land wanted for leasing

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The U.S. government has proposed leasing for the first time an area of the outer continental shelf for hardrock mineral mining, state and federal officials said.

The area, 100 miles off the southern Oregon coast, includes a deep rift in the ocean floor that contains mineral deposits. The leasing companies intend to collect underwater deposits of several types of strategic minerals, including copper, silver, gold and platinum.

The U.S. Interior Department has filed notice of its intent to complete an environmental impact statement on the leasing proposal.

Amputee complains too late

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — A woman whose finger was amputated because her 1947 engagement ring contained radioactive gold has been told she complained too late and can't collect damages.

Court of Claims Judge Jeremiah Moriarty ruled that a claim for $1.2 million submitted by Elizabeth Riley of Salamanca and her husband, Raymond Riley, should be dismissed because the statute of limitations expired in 1950.

The ruling last week was seen as a setback for other people, mainly in western New York and Pennsylvania, who are trying to sue New York state for cancer caused by radioactive gold rings.

Astronauts try out equipment

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Three of the astronauts chosen for next month's space mission joined specialists in an equipment test aboard shuttle Challenger, Kennedy Space Center officials said Saturday.

Trash piles high after flood

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — So much refuse is still piled high from last month's flooding that local governments have decided to hire six semi-trailer trucks to haul away the debris.

The trucks will begin Monday for their three-week service, at a rental cost of $36,000.

Even with regular crews working 10 hours a day, six days a week, it would have taken about four months to pick it all up without affecting regular city trash collection, said David Bourland, Baton Rouge chief administrative officer.

"We just couldn't do it with our present crews," he said. "People are now beginning to rebuild. They're tearing out and bringing in new materials. We're finding a lot of things like dry wall" in the trash being collected.

Although the trash division has been reorganized and its equipment increased in recent months, he said, the job is just too big.

Officials said the cleanup looked like a two-week job at first, but a lot of debris couldn't be thrown out until after insurance adjusters had gone over it.

About 2,500 homes were flooded, they said.

"Not to fault the adjusters, but it takes time for them to visit 2,500 homes," said Bourland.

Government officials offer free living quarters to dioxin victims

PACIFIC, Mo. (AP) — Government officials Saturday offered six months of free housing to 28 families being moved out of a trailer park where tests showed dioxin levels 1,100 times higher than considered safe.

But residents of Quail Run Mobile Manor — including three families who already fled dioxin-tainted Times Beach — listened with skepticism, saying shelter was only one of many needs that would arise from the evacuation.

Officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency told the families of the park, in Gray Summit in Franklin County, that they could be moved immediately into a hotel at government expense.

"We are prepared at this point in time for those of you who wish to to meet with our staff this afternoon to get into transient housing," said Bob Bouffard of the agency. "All of this is going to be free of charge."

Bouffard said the next step would be to find more permanent living quarters for the residents. He said his agency was able to offer the residents up to six months of free housing under federal emergency powers.

The action came after the Environmental Protection Agency announced Friday that the highly toxic chemical byproduct was found in about half of 150 soil samples taken at the scenic trailer park 40 miles southwest of St. Louis.

The highest level is about four times higher than any found in Times Beach, a town of 2,400 where the government has offered to buy out all homeowners and businesses.

"I got moved out of Times Beach, now you've moved me out of Quail Run," Steve Blair told the meeting Saturday. "I'm still waiting for my money for Times Beach and it's been a real long time."

Another resident, Carol Brocato, asked officials how she and her children could afford to eat their meals out during a lengthy stay in a hotel room.

"I work at the Eureka Holiday Inn, where they moved some of the Times Beach people after the floods in December," Mrs. Brocato said. "These people are on their own to buy their food. These people can't afford even to feed their children because payments on our mobile homes will continue on.

"Are we going to have to live in limbo for six months?" asked Mrs. Bracato.

Dioxin was originally found at the park in March, but new samples found the highest levels in soil under a paved road.

"It's most fortunate that the highest levels were found underneath a pavement seal," said Art Spratlin, deputy director of the EPA's Kansas City regional office.

But he also said that test results showed dioxin present at levels up to 150 parts per billion along the shoulders of the park's only road, 12 parts per billion in some yards and at low levels in some of the trailers themselves.

Federal officials have recommended cleanup at sites where dioxin was found at a level of only one part per billion.

It was the third time in less than a year that officials have urged evacuation of communities in the St. Louis area because of dioxin. In all three cases, the poison was spread when contaminated oil was sprayed on roads to hold down dust.

Steve Blair, who has now been forced to move twice because the toxic chemical dioxin has been found around his home, complained to state and federal officials Saturday after being told that the federal government would pay for his temporary relocation due to dioxin in the Quail Run trailer park in Gray Summit, Mo. Blair said he still has not been paid for having to move out of Times Beach, Mo., following the flood there last December.

Watergate figure receives pardon

Reagan denied pardon to Hunt, Magruder

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan denied pardons to convicted Watergate figures E. Howard Hunt and Jeb Stuart Magruder at the same time he pardoned Watergate burglar Eugenio R. Martinez, administration officials said Saturday.

The officials said in each case Reagan followed the recommendation of the Justice Department's pardon attorney.

One official, who was involved in the decisions but declined to be identified by name, said Martinez was pardoned because "he truly was an ordinary burglar with no knowledge of broader crimes. The others were involved in wider activities."

Martinez, 60, was one of seven men originally charged in the Watergate break-in that triggered a scandal leading to President Richard Nixon's resignation two years later. Martinez pleaded guilty to conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping and served 15 months in prison before his parole in 1974.

Hunt, 64, was a member of the White House "plumbers" unit and served as lookout during the the break-in at the Democratic National Committee headquarters at the Watergate complex in Washington on June 17, 1972. Hunt had recruited Martinez and three other Cubans he had worked with previously during his career with the CIA.

Hunt pleaded guilty to conspiracy, burglary and wiretapping in the Watergate break-in and served 32 months in prison before his parole in 1977. He was granted immunity for testifying about his role in the 1971 break-in at the Los Angeles office of Dr. Lewis Fielding, psychiatrist to Daniel Ellsberg, the former Pentagon official who leaked the Pentagon Papers.

Magruder, 48, was deputy director Nixon's re-election committee and pleaded guilty to conspiracy, admitting that he had helped plan the Watergate burglary and lied both to the Watergate grand jury and at the original trial as part of the cover-up. He served seven months in prison before his release in 1975.

Reagan did not announce his decisions, which were made Wednesday. Acting Justice Department pardon attorney David C. Stephenson disclosed the Martinez pardon in response to questions Friday night. On Saturday, deputy Justice press secretary Arthur Brill disclosed the denial of pardons for Hunt and Magruder in response to questions.

Explaining the Martinez pardon, Justice press officer Judy Pond said, "Aside from the Watergate connection, there was nothing unusual about this. Martinez has been shown to be an excellent community member since his release."

Martinez, now leasing manager of a Miami car dealership, thus became the first man convicted in the scandal to win a presidential pardon.

Of dozens convicted or involved in Watergate, Nixon has been the only other person to receive a pardon. President Gerald R. Ford pardoned Nixon shortly after he resigned although he had not been charged with any offenses.

The official involved in this week's decisions said, "If Martinez had committed his burglary in any other case, there would be no question about it based on his record. He held no position or public trust and had no knowledge of other crimes."

In Hunt's case, this official said, "Besides the Watergate break-in, Hunt was involved in the Ellsberg affair and in a concerted effort at dirty tricks."

Of Magruder, this official said, "He admitted perjury, which is a very serious offense, and had broader knowledge of other crimes. Also, as an official of the re-election committee he had something like a public trust."

"No one is saying the others will never get a pardon," this official said, "but they should wait a bit longer."

Martinez had been rejected for a pardon four times by Presidents Ford and Carter. Magruder had been rejected before by Carter. The three other Cubans in the Watergate break-in, Frank A. Sturgis, Bernard L. Barker and Virgilio R. Gonzalez, were denied pardons by Carter and have not reapplied.

Hunt did not answer his phone in Miami, but his attorney, Ellis Rubin, said, "We're bitterly disappointed. We can't see what the difference is, especially when Howard served a lot more time than Martinez. Like Martinez, he was assured that he had the protection of the White House. When you're undergoing an assignment for the president of the United States, you don't expect to be arrested, tried and convicted."

Asbestos being dumped in California aqueduct

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES – Winter runoff is dumping heavy concentrations of asbestos-laden silt into the California Aqueduct near Coalinga and gumming up an expensive dredging operation, authorities have reported.

Research into the health hazards of drinking asbestos-laced water is still being conducted. But when breathed, it is a known cause of cancer.

Officials from the state Department of Water Resources met with water district representatives Wednesday to help solve the runoff problem.

"This area (north of Coalinga) is the only substantial point on the aqueduct where you have a lot of it (asbestos) coming in like this," said state Department of Water Resources spokesman Allen Jones. "There is a common form of rock throughout the state that has asbestos in it. So there will be some asbestos in almost any drinking water supply (in California). But this is a particularly heavy quantity. They're talking about billions of fibers per liter."

Asbestos enters the aqueduct in runoff flowing from the coastal range through Arroyo Pasajera near Coalinga, where there are abandoned mines and rocks where asbestos is found. A catch basin at the end of the Arroyo has been filled to capacity and is now overflowing into the adequct, said Jim Lucas, spokesman for the Metropolitan Water District.

"Right now Avenal (a San Joaquin Valley town near Coalinga) is probably the only area getting this water that has a lot of asbestos in it," Jones said.

The aqueduct, which runs 440 miles between the San Joaquin Valley and Riverside over the Tehachapi Mountains, is now flowing northward near Bakersfield up through Coalinga through a complex system of floodgates and pumps. Thus, any asbestos danger to Southern California has been eliminated, said Lucas.

The Kern River floodgates south of Bakersfield have been opened, and clean water is flowing into the aqueduct

Troop withdrawal agreement first step in Lebanon's recovery

EDITOR'S NOTE — A formal agreement appears imminent between Israel and Lebanon on the withdrawal of Israeli troops. But once that hurdle is cleared, a host of others remain for a government trying to rebuild its country from the ashes of a civil war and an invasion.

By TERRY A. ANDERSON

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The troop withdrawal agreement being finalized with Israel is only the first of the difficult problems Lebanon must solve to end nearly a decade of violence and war.

The U.S-sponsored agreement will mean nothing unless Lebanon can persuade both Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization to accept it. The Syrians turned it down Friday, but the Lebanese Cabinet approved it Saturday and Israel has given its approval in principle.

Even if the Syrians and PLO eventually do agree, and the 80,000 or so foreign troops that occupy three-fourths of Lebanon leave, the government of President Amin Gemayel still will have to tackle the problem of establishing its authority over the rest of the country.

This would be necessary to halt the sectarian divisions, mistrust and open warfare that threaten to bring on a renewal of the 1975-76 civil war, which pitted leftist Moslems and Palestinians against rightist Christian Phalangists.

Gemayel's government also must face the question of what it will do with the estimated 400,000 Palestinian civilians that remain in Lebanon. Entwined with the way that problem is solved is the issue of relations with the rest of the Arab world.

OF MAJOR IMPORTANCE to the United States is the question of how long Lebanon will need to be propped up by the Western allies, and especially the multinational peacekeeping force, made up of American, French, Italian and British troops.

The tentative agreement by Israel to pull its 25,000 troops out of southern Lebanon has taken nearly six months of intensive effort, led by the United States. But the withdrawal won't begin until Syria and the PLO agree to remove their forces — an estimated 35,000 Syrians and about 10,000 Palestinian guerrillas — from northern Lebanon and the Bekaa Valley.

Gemayel and Foreign Minister Elie Salem have only just begun that effort, and Western diplomats here and in Damascus, the Syrian capital, say it could easily take weeks or months.

Syria has labelled the troop withdrawal agreement with Israel a "surrender" by Lebanon and claimed it threatens both Syrian security and Lebanese sovereignty, as well as rewarding Israel for invading Lebanon last June 6.

President Hafez Assad of Syria has not said he will never agree to pull out, but so far has not made clear what price he will exact if he decides to do so.

PLO officials, as well, say they will have some concessions to extract from the Lebanese before they agree to leave — mostly involving the security and treatment of the thousands of Palestinian civilians.

THEY CLAIM Gemayel's government is refusing to grant work permits to Palestinians, and uses the security police and the army to harass them in the camps. They also blame the rightist Christian Phalange, Gemayel's political party and the PLO's bitter enemy, for a spate of attacks on Palestinians and Palestinian-owned businesses.

There is little question that the government would like to see the Palestinians leave. But it must be careful how the problem is handled, because of the danger of angering other Arab states on whom its economy depends — especially Saudi Arabia and Syria.

Top Lebanese officials have been suggesting recently that while Lebanon will remain in the Arab bloc, it will be a neutral country — meaning the government must elude the efforts of its Soviet-backed neighbor Syria to make sure Lebanon stays in the Syrian orbit.

If and when the withdrawal actually takes place, it will leave Gemayel with the immediate problem of extending control over the Lebanese territory now occupied by the Israelis, Syrians and Palestinians.

Gemayel has reportedly agreed in the pact with Israel to station at least two and possibly three brigades of the Lebanese army in the south to ensure Palestinian guerrillas will not return to the area. That will involve 9,000 to 12,000 men from his 22,000-man army.

While a national draft and major expansion program for the army was begun early this year, Western observers say, the army will be hard-pressed to stretch its presence over the rest of the country, even if the multinational peacekeeping force here backs it up.

NO ONE IS SURE how long the United States, France, Italy and Britain will maintain their commitment.

Gemayel must also somehow end the periodic outbreaks of vicious factional fighting — between the rightist Christian and leftist Druse militias in the central mountains, and between Sunni Moslem and pro-Syrian Alawite Moslem militias in Tripoli.

Finally, the new Lebanese president must address demands by many Moslem and Druse leaders for a political restructuring of Lebanon — a reworking of the three-decade-old power-sharing agreements.

An Analysis

Weinberger issues warning to Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's stern warning to the Soviet Union to exercise restraint in the Middle East is being viewed here as a reflection of American concern over Moscow's military and diplomatic strategy in the area.

Until Friday night, the administration had remained generally muted about Soviet military activities in Syria and thus Weinberger's unusually harsh remarks represented a departure from previous policy.

In an appearance before the American Jewish Committee in New York, Weinberger was asked what the United States would do if the Soviet Union converted Syria into a launching pad for military adventures.

"The simplest way to deal with a problem of that kind is to make it very clear to the Soviets or to any proxies they may have in Syria that any aggression by them would be met by a retaliatory force," Weinberger said.

The response would be strong enough, he added, that it would destroy "any kind of hope of gain to the aggressors."

An administration official, speaking on the condition that he not be identified by name, said Saturday that Weinberger was referring to Israel when he warned that "a retaliatory force" would respond to any Soviet-sponsored aggression in the Middle East.

"He basically was stating the obvious: that Israel would certainly respond were there any attack," the official said. "There would be a strong response by Israel."

Other officials, however, say they are doubtful the Soviet military buildup in Syria, including the installation of new SA-5 missiles, presages a new outbreak of armed conflict in the region.

These officials, who asked not to be identified, said Soviet strategy is more likely aimed at retaining its influence with Syria, Moscow's major ally in the Middle East.

In addition to the SA-5, there are an estimated 5,000 Soviet military personnel in Syria.

The officials also believe Syria, after suffering heavy losses at the hands of Israel last summer during the Lebanon war, is not eager to do battle with the Israelis again.

Weinberger's statement also may have reflected U.S. frustration over what officials here regard as the obstructionist role Moscow has played in U.S. efforts to achieve the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

The Soviets have launched a campaign to descredit the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement — negotiated by Secretary of State George P. Shultz — calling it a gross violation of Lebanese sovreignty, claiming that it rewards "Israeli aggression."

U.S. officials believe Moscow is worried that agreement by Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization to undertake a joint withdrawal of forces with Israel would further undercut Soviet influence in the Middle East.

The Soviets have been on the defensive in the region, because of its continuing military occupation of Afghanistan and because of the expulsion of a number of Soviet personnel from Iran recently.

Non-Israeli Jewish population to shrink

LONDON (AP) — The world's Jewish population outside Israel will shrink by up to one-fourth by the year 2000 due to reduced fertility, intermarriage and cultural assimilation, according to a demographic survey published Saturday.

The Jewish population of Israel will rise 47-57 percent during the same period because of the relative youthfulness of the nation's population and the virtual absence of intermarriage, the survey added.

The projected rise in Israel's population, from less than 3 million in 1975 to 4.4 million to 4.7 million in 2000, won't counteract the expected decline in the Jewish population outside Israel, from 10 million to between 7.4 million and 8.2 million, the survey said.

By the end of the century, the total world Jewish population — estimated at close to 13 million in 1975 — will fall to between 11.8 million and 12.9 million, the survey said.

"If no fundamental alteration takes place in the demographic trends, the...decreases will accelerate after the turn of the century," said Prof. Usiel Schmelz, director of the division of Jewish Demography and Statistics at Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Schmelz' projections were published in "Studies in Jewish Demography, Survey for 1972-80," a combined effort of the Institute of Contemporary Jewry at Hebrew University and the Institute of Jewish Affairs in London.

Israel represented only 23 percent of the world's Jews in 1975, but its share is projected to rise to 36 percent in 2000 "and it is likely to keep on growing thereafter," the study said.

The United States, with the world's largest Jewish population — at 5.6 million in 1975 — had 43 percent of the world's Jews in 1975 and was expected to maintain that percentage in the year 2000 with 5.32 million, the survey said.

American and Canadian Jews represented 60 percent of the Jews outside Israel but in 2000 they will represent 70 percent.

In most Jewish communities recently researched, Schmelz said, the fertility rate is lower than the general population "and the average number of children per woman is less than the minimum — now approximately 2.1 in the developed countries — which is needed for demographic replacement."

He said the proportion of Jews marrying non-Jews is over 20 percent in most populations outside Israel "and in some over 50 percent."

This has meant losses for Jewish communities in most regions "because less than half the children of mixed couples are Jews," he said. "There is, however, conflicting evidence on this matter from the United States."

Labor Party backs nuclear disarmament

LONDON (AP) — Britain's Labor Party, which governed for nearly half the post-World War II era until it lost to the Conservatives four years ago, heads into the June 9 general election committed for the first time to unilateral nuclear disarmament.

It also wants to quit the European Common Market, slap on import and currency controls, boost state spending to cut unemployment, and renationalize industries sold off during four years of Conservative rule.

The radical platform contrasts sharply with the prospect of another term of right-wing policies under Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and a moderate platform put forth by Britain's new centrist alliance.

To vanquish Mrs. Thatcher's favored Conservatives, Labor would have to woo away at least 5.5 percent of the electorate — a monumental challenge in a three-week campaign. If they succeed, Laborites say they will change Britain's foreign policy and its role in the Western alliance.

"We will see that Britain plays a leading role in guiding the world away from nuclear bombs," declares Labor leader Michael Foot, 69, veteran anti-nuclear campaigner and peace marcher.

Since 1945, Labor administrations have done as much, sometimes more, than Conservatives to build and modernize Britain's own nuclear weapons and to welcome U.S. bases.

But the Labor Party, with a decidedly pacifist left wing, has a long history of quarreling over Britain's role as the only nuclear power in Western Europe outside France.

"There are some of us who will fight and fight and fight again," Labor leader Hugh Gaitskell declared in 1960 when the party, in opposition, voted for a resolution calling for unilateral disarmament. He did fight, and the resolution was overturned a year later.

The disarmers fought on too, but until this campaign had been foiled by a party hierarchy that expunged anti-nuclear planks from its election platforms.

Skeptics say the current commitments are so radical, and reached after such bitter arguments with moderates led by deputy leader Denis Healey, that Labor just wouldn't carry them out — or at least not all of them.

"They're wrong," Labor general secretary Jim Mortimer, himself a moderate, told The Associated Press.

"Without any question, within the lifetime of a Parliament (five years), a Labor government will negotiate Britain's withdrawal from the Common Market. And we will remove nuclear weapons and nuclear bases from British soil and British waters."

That would mean scrapping Britain's Polaris nuclear submarines, banning U.S. cruise missiles due to be deployed here by December, and canceling the Thatcher government's deal to buy U.S. Trident missiles, which would replace Polaris in the early 1990s.

Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher gestures during a speech to the annual conference of Scottish Conservatives in Perth, Scotland, Friday. It was Mrs. Thatcher's first trip out of London since Monday's announcement that Britain will go to the polls for a general election on June 9.

Conservatives, Labor trade charges

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party charged Saturday that unemployment would soar to 5 million if the Labor Party wins general elections next month. Labor countered by saying a Tory victory would lead to 6 million jobless.

On the second day of the four-week election campaign, unemployment — now near a post-World War II high at 3.17 million or 13.3 percent — joined defense as a key issue in the June 9 vote.

Mrs. Thatcher opened the campaign Friday with a speech in Perth, Scotland, in which she said Labor's policy of unilateral nuclear disarmament would leave Britain defenseless and ensure the Soviets don't negotiate seriously with the United States at missile talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

The prime minister has a wide lead in public opinion polls. The four national surveys taken since Monday give the Conservatives an average of 16 percent over Labor. Mrs. Thatcher called the elections Monday, 11 months before the end of her five-year term.

The centrist Social Democrat-Liberal alliance is given little chance in the election.

Agriculture Minister Peter Walker, on the stump for the Tories in the west England hamlet of Inkeberrow, said Labor's program of spending, nationalization and withdrawal from the European Economic Community "would unleash a socialist spiral which would produce economic despair and misery."

He charged the spending, combined with heavy wage demands from Labor's trade union backers, would re-ignite inflation, which has sunk to a 15-year-low of 4.6 percent, and boost unemployment to 5 million.

But Labor's education spokesman, Neil Kinnock, told a meeting in Cardiff, Wales: "No one should fool themselves that if she wins on June 9, Margaret Thatcher will change direction. If she wins, the people of Britain will have volunteered for the dole queue economy and the slump society...Unemployment would reach 6 million by the end of a second term of office."

RATIOS

A ratio is defined as the comparison of two similar things. Erik is 20 years old. Nathan is 10 years old. The ratio of Erik to Nathan is written either of these two ways:

a) Erik 20 or 20 / 2
Nathan 10 1

b) Erik:Nathan or 20:10 or 2:1

PROBLEM 1.

A tree is 30 feet tall. A telephone pole is 25 feet tall. What is the ratio of the tree to the pole?

PROBLEM 2.

A diameter of a circle is 16 inches. Another circle's diameter is 4 inches. What is the ratio of the larger circle to the smaller circle?

PROPORTIONS

A proportion is the comparison of two equal ratios. Proportion is usually written in this form, 1:2 as 8:16 and is read "1 is to 2 as 8 is to 16". When solving the proportion, it would be written this way.

$$\frac{1}{2} = \frac{8}{16}$$

Some proportions will have an unknown for which you must solve. Remember this rule: THE OUTSIDE VALUES MULTIPLIED EQUAL THE INSIDE VALUES MULTIPLIED.

For example, 25 is to 3 as 100 is to x.

THINK: 25 and x are the outside values. 3 and 100 are the inside values.

a) $\frac{25}{3} = \frac{100}{x}$

b) 25 times x equals 3 times 100

c) $25x = 300$

d) $x = \frac{300}{25}$

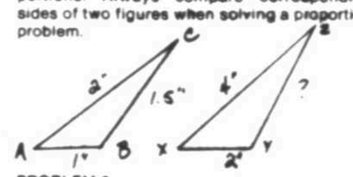
3) $x = 12$

PROBLEM 1.

Tom runs a 50 yard race in 6 seconds. At the same rate, how long will it take him to run 75 yards?

THINK: 50 is to 6 as 75 is to s.

Compare the following triangles using proportions. Always compare corresponding sides of two figures when solving a proportion problem.



PROBLEM 2.

Find the length of ZY.

THINK: AC is to XZ as CB is to ZY

PROBLEM 3.

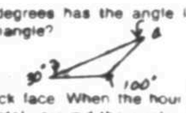
A tree casts a shadow 80 feet long, at the same time that an 8 foot high post casts a shadow 12 feet long. How high is the tree?

CONCEPTS FOR FURTHER PROBLEM SOLVING

1. An angle (∠) is formed when two straight lines meet. Angles are measured in parts called degrees (°). Larger angles have more degrees than smaller angles.
2. A circle has 360°.
3. A half circle has half of 360° or 180°.
4. A right angle has 90°. It can be thought of as a quarter of a circle, having a fourth of 360°. Remember that a right triangle has one right angle. ⌊
5. All angles of a triangle add up to 180°.

PROBLEM 1.

How many degrees has the angle labled "a" in this triangle?



Imagine a clock face. When the hour hand proceeds completely around the circle, it has traveled 360°. The hour and the minute hand form an angle at the center of the clock face when the hour hand is on 12 and the minute hand is on 1.

That angle is $\frac{1}{12}$ of 360°. The angle is 30°.

PROBLEM 2.

On the clock face, what is the angle formed by the clock hands at 3:00?

PROBLEM 3.

On the clock face, what is the angle formed when the hands read 6:00?

WRITING SKILLS

WRITING EFFECTIVE PARAGRAPHS

A paragraph is a group of related sentences with a single unified idea that has been adequately developed. The paragraph usually has a topic sentence that states the main idea, one or more sentences that develop the main idea, and sometimes a clincher sentence that concludes the paragraph by summarizing the idea.

EXAMPLE

You can usually tell something about a person by the papers in his briefcase. If they are untidy, he is probably disorganized. However, if the papers are neatly filed or stacked, you can be sure he is a very systematic person. A neat and orderly briefcase symbolizes a well-organized person.

In the paragraph above, the first sentence is the topic sentence. The second and third sentences develop the main idea and the last sentence summarizes the paragraph.

PROBLEM 1.

The sentences in the following paragraph are not arranged correctly. Arrange them in a logical order by arranging the sentence numbers in the correct order.

1. As the concern grew, many counties passed laws to protect endangered wildlife and set aside reserves where the various species would live in safety. 2. Throughout history, many kinds of wildlife have become extinct or have decreased greatly in number. 3. However, even though sincere efforts to preserve endangered, threatened, and rare wildlife continue to be made today, the future of many species remains uncertain. 4. In the late 1800's, people in various parts of the world became concerned about the problem. 5. As a result of this action, many endangered species have been saved.

PROBLEM 2.

Divide the following passage into three paragraphs.

For many years the ability to travel from place to place came from muscles. People used their muscles to walk, to carry bundles, and to push plows. If they rode on animals, the animals' muscles supplied the power to travel. Wagon trains hauled people and freight from the East to the West. It was easier to travel by water. The rivers carried ships with people and freight downstream. The muscles of people and their animals provided the power when going upstream. The wind on the sails pushed boats across the lakes and ocean. Muscles could rest. However, travel on both land and water was slow. Depending upon traveling conditions, a wagon could only go between five and twenty miles a day. Sailing ships might travel as quickly as fifteen miles an hour if the winds were strong. But if the sailing conditions were not good, the ship might have to wait for hours or days.

Alleged peddler of diaries refutes 'absurd' charges

STUTTGART, West Germany (AP) — The alleged peddler of the fake Hitler diaries said in a statement issued by his lawyer Saturday that he had done nothing illegal and had returned voluntarily to West Germany to clear his name of "absurd" charges.

He also said he received about $1 million for the volumes — approximately one-quarter of the amount claimed by ex-Stern magazine reporter Gerd Heidemann.

Konrad Kujau, who was named by Heidemann as the man who sold him the diaries, surrendered to Hamburg authorities, according to his attorney, Rolf Schmidt-Diemitz.

The Hamburg prosecutor could not be reached for comment and the Hamburg police told The Associated Press they knew nothing of the matter.

In a four-page declaration distributed by his lawyer, Kujau said he believed in the authenticity of the diaries, which the government has labeled forgeries. He said he returned to West Germany "voluntarily" knowing that authorities were looking for him.

"I did this in order to defend myself against the fraudulent blame that has been directed against me in connection with the Hitler diaries. The blame is unjustified," he said.

"The assertions publicized in the press that I falsified the diaries myself are absurd," he said.

The statement said he wanted to deny "all blame, suspicions or speculation, which have also been publicized in the press, especially the assertion that I have received 9 million marks ($3.75 million) from Stern."

Heidemann, who was fired by Stern after the diaries were declared fakes, had named Kujau as the man who received $3.75 million for the 62 volumes.

Kujau, who allegedly used the alias surname of Fischer in his dealings with Heidemann, dropped out of sight two weeks ago, according to neighbors.

In London, Hugh Trevor-Roper, the historian who at first said he believed the fake Hitler diaries were authentic, apologized to the public Saturday for his blunder.

"I made a grave error in my first judgement," Trevor-Roper conceded. "But within the limits which I wrongly accepted, I do not think that judgement was irrational."

An unidentified police officer stands in the interior of the Nazi regalia shop and home of Conrad Fischer-Kujau in Stuttgart, West Germany, Friday. Vandals spray Stonehenge with soccer slogans

SALISBURY, England (AP) — Vandals on Saturday sprayed soccer slogans in blue paint on five of the ancient monoliths at Stonehenge, a mysterious prehistoric circle of altar-like stones that is one of Britain's top tourist attractions.

Two men were being questioned by police in connection with the incident at the monuments on Salisbury plain in Wiltshire.

The slogans, in six-inch high letters, say "PFC," the initials of Portsmouth Football Club, "Pompey," the club's nickname, and "Kick to Kill Pompey."

A custodian at the monuments, which date back to 2,100 B.C. and which archeologists believe may have been built by ancient astronomers, said only time will tell whether the paint could be removed.

He noted that a slogan painted 15 years ago was still visible on wet days and that another painted four years ago saying "free the ponies" had also resisted chemical removers.

Reporters protest new Stern editors

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — Reporters for Stern magazine continued a sit-in protest Saturday at the publication's editorial offices against two editors replacing two others who quit over the Hitler diary hoax, a spokesman for the group said Saturday.

Several reporters spent Friday night in the offices and were relieved by a new shift Saturday, said the spokesman, reporter Rainer Fabian. He said the protest was not a strike and that Stern staffers continued working.

The Stern reporters voted on Friday to occupy the magazine's offices until Sunday afternoon, but Stern publisher Henri Nannen said the magazine would not give in to pressure. "We are all grownups," he said.

Fabian said the reporters were protesting the naming of Johannes Gross and Peter Scholl-Latour as the new chief editors of the magazine, saying they were too conservative for their tastes.

Gross and Scholl-Latour replaced Peter Koch and Felix Schmidt, who resigned May 7. Stern reportedly paid $3.75 million for 62 volumes of diaries purportedly by Adolf Hitler and published part of them before the federal archives found them to be fakes.

Salvadoran guerrilla boasts 'We have our own jails'

LA PALMA, El Salvador (AP) — Government soldiers patrol the streets and highways of El Salvador, but in some areas they have abandoned, like this town in northern Chalatenango province, leftist guerrillas are in control.

They stroll about in broad daylight, establishing their own laws and restrictions for the 5,000 inhabitants.

"Comandante William," the local guerrilla leader, told a visiting reporter the rebels have arrested and punished people they consider guilty of a variety of crimes.

"We have our own jails," said "William," bearded and bespectacled and about 30 years old. He said he drove a bus in the capital until he joined the insurrection seven years ago.

Most of the townspeople do not seem either to support or oppose the rebels. They just try to get along and refuse to disclose their sympathies, at least openly.

Many know the army could drive the guerrillas out anytime, and that could mean death for anyone who openly supported the rebels.

"It's not clear how this thing is going," Mayor Guadalupe Sola said. "We are between the sword and the wall."

People who openly support one side or the other in the 3½-year-old civil war could, he said, "go to bed and not wake up."

Sola said that when the guerrillas walked in four months ago, they ordered him to give them the key to the town hall, searched the offices but took nothing, and returned the key the next day.

"Some said I was a guerrilla for giving them the key," Sola shrugged. "What would they have done if I hadn't? I just trust in God, and, besides, where can I go where death won't get me?"

Residents say that every few days, groups of guerrillas come in from the countryside to shop — and pay for what they take.

The rebels allow beer to be sold, but they have banned the sale of hard liquor. They also regularly patrol the streets at night to guard against burglaries and other crime.

La Palma is a rural community, surrounded by pine-covered hills, on the main north-south highway to the Honduran border — a bare six miles away — and 51 miles from the capital.

Its only industry is 25 small factories, employing 700 workers who make small, brightly colored paintings of local scenery and wildlife on wooden ornaments — and even these are exported.

Life is routine, except for the frequent interruptions of power when a line is damaged by fighting in the area and the electricity goes off, sometimes for as long as three weeks.

"That is the thing that bothers us, when the power stops, we stop producing," said Orland Lopez, head of the Seed of God, a cooperative and the town's largest ornament factory.

A clerk who identified himself only as "Frankie" said the guerrillas hold dances and other community events where they give propaganda speeches and draw large crowds.

The guerrillas say they feel secure in the area.

"The insects don't want to come up here because they know we'll fight," a 17-year-old guerrilla said, referring to government soldiers. He said his name is "Pedro" and that he joined the insurrection four years ago.

"Of course that's just my war name," he said. Pausing, he shrugged and said, "It's my real name too."

Pedro also referred to the military aid being provided by the Reagan administration to the Salvadoran army, saying: "They gave them everything but guts."

Enraged miners attack official who announced mine's closure

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — A mob of angry miners kicked and punched the director of the National Coal Board in Scotland after he announced the closure of a depleted mine.

About 200 men surged forward to attack Albert Wheeler after he made the announcement Friday in a hall near Cardowan Colliery, on Glasgow's outskirts. Wheeler was forced against a wall, kicked and punched before aides rescued him. He was bruised but not seriously hurt, he said afterward.

"We expected a reaction, but not quite like this," Wheeler said.

The state-owned coal board ordered the closure of Cardowan within five weeks, saying it was losing $15.7 million a year. The board offered the mine's 1,100 workers employment at any of three other Scottish mines, plus a bonus of $2,355 each.

But Scottish National Union of Mineworkers leader Mick McGahey said he would urge miners to consider strike action to support the Cardowan workers and would "make this a general election issue." Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher called early elections for June 9, 11 months before her term ends.

Teachers not allowed to picket

VICENZA, Italy (AP) — Police on Saturday refused permission to a group of American teachers working in U.S. Defense Department schools to picket a NATO base near this northern Italian city, a teacher's spokesman said.

About 30 teachers requested permission to picket outside the gates of the air base following a dispute over working hours and conditions, spokesman Ernest Lehmann said.

The teachers are protesting the terms of a proposed new contract that would affect about 1,000 teachers working in schools in Greece, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Turkey and Bahrain, Lehmann said.

Danes offer jailed Poles asylum

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — The Justice Minstry on Saturday offered asylum for 36 Poles, including members of Solidarity jailed under martial law, if they can get permission to leave Poland.

The ministry said it received requests for political asylum from about 50 interned members of the outlawed labor federation and the underground Polish human rights organization KOR almost a year ago, and finished processing the applications on Friday.

Most of the 36 granted asylum were interned after Poland's military government declared martial law in December 1981.

Poland has offered to let some dissidents leave the country, but Danish authorities said they had no information on when or if the applicants cleared by Denmark would be released.

Nicaraguan bishops meet pope

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II met in separate audiences Saturday with five bishops from Nicaragua, where the pontiff received a turbulent reception two months ago while on a Central American tour.

The meetings were private and the Vatican did not disclose the subjects discussed. The bishops are in Rome on one of the trips that prelates are expected to make here every five years.

Vatican officials have expressed anger over the pontiff's treatment by Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista junta in March.

During a papal Mass, the pope was interrupted repeatedly by groups shouting revolutionary slogans into microphones. The altar lacked a cross, but was flanked with portraits of revolutionary heroes. The Vatican has also been upset with Nicaraguan priests defying the pope's order to stay out of politics and with the rise of a popular church outside the church hierarchy.

Marcos family sets wedding

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his wife Imelda announced Saturday the wedding of their youngest child, Irene, to prominent Manila businessman Gregorio Araneta III on June 11.

The announcement said the Roman Catholic marriage rites would be performed in the president's home town of Sarrat in Ilocos Norte province, 250 miles north of Manila.

Miss Marcos, 23, studied anthropology at the Universty of Pennsylvania and is completing degrees in music and literature at the University of the Philippines. Her 35-year-old fiancee, scion of the wealthy Araneta family, heads real estate, advertising, trading and finance businesses here.

Marcos' oldest child, Imee, married divorced Filipino sportsman Tommy Manotoc in 1981 in a secret wedding that Marcos refused to acknowledge for more than a year. Marcos' only son, Ferdinand Jr., is single.

Indonesian oil plant flooded

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Flood waters inundated the main plant of the Conoco Oil Co. in Irian Jaya last week, forcing a complete evacuation of workers, the official Antara news agency said Saturday.

The agency said the Kamandan River overflowed its banks on Wednesday after two weeks of heavy rain, completely flooding the plant. Workers were taken by barge to safe areas and foreign workers were moved to the town of Sorong.

No casualties were reported, but material damage was said to be substantial.

Palace intruder guilty of assault

LONDON (AP) — Michael Fagan, the intruder who crept into Queen Elizabeth II's Buckingham Palace bedroom last summer, pleaded guilty Saturday to assaulting three policemen and was ordered held until June 3 for medical tests.

Susan Delal, attorney for the 32-year-old unemployed painter, told Highbury Corner Magistrates Court of north London that Fagan had been drinking when he assaulted the policemen Friday night.

She said he felt lonely and under pressure following the break-up of his marriage and publicity over the palace intrusion.

China's model workers praised by state, abused by co-workers

PEKING (AP) — China's model workers, top achievers among 100 million laborers, are chosen as heroes for their co-workers to emulate in the nation's new drive for modernization. And they are showered with official praise.

But they are cursed and abused by some colleagues, and sometimes denied promotions and given extra dirty work like cleaning latrines.

Top workers are selected by colleagues or youth groups at city, province or national level. But even when the majority elects them they can run into criticism by a jealous minority.

Some labor heroes work in sheltered workshops of model workers, protected from the abuses of co-workers.

During the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution personal excellence was equated with self-serving individualism. Remnants of that feeling linger and aggravate resentment.

During that extremist era, productivity and individual achievement were belittled and even derided. Elite workers were hailed for revolutionary rhetoric and good deeds — "redness" rather than expertise.

One airman of that era was held up as an exemplary pilot but he could barely fly a plane. He was elevated as a model because of his close ties to the masses. Like all good models he read the works of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung in every spare moment.

Today China demands expertise and results from its models and they study science and technology, not Charman Mao's little red book in their off hours.

Their rewards for high production, cost-saving innovations and dedication to China's modernization are strictly spiritual. The model workers earn an average of 70 yuan ($35) a month.

LIKE MOST CHINESE workers they were assigned their jobs, had no free choice and virtually no possibility of changing jobs.

In China, much is taught by example. A recent national conference was attended by 100 model workers, treated as the pacesetters of modernization and the frontier scouts of socialist spiritual civilization. They include lathe turners, doctors, telephone linemen, engineers, beekeepers and others who put their work first.

In carefully monitored inteviews, model workers described the glories of serving the people. As national trade union officials looked on, they denied they aspired to anything but their humble, assigned place in a rigorously ordered society.

Yang Yicong, 34, sometimes is jeered as "the lady in the rubbish heap" as she sweeps the alleys, hauls garbage and cleans latrines. An educated woman who once dreamed of being a doctor or engineer, she now calls herself an "urban cosmetologist."

Miss Yang was sent to the countryside during the anti-intellectual Cultural Revolution. When she got back home to Amoy, Fujian province, she was assigned to clean streets, despite her academic aspirations. That was seven years ago.

"I used to think I had lost face if my friends saw me sweep streets," she said.

But gradually, she said, "I fell in love with my job, thanks to enlightened leaders who pitched in with the dirty work."

"My work brings cleanliness to tens of thousands of people and only soils one person," she said. "My broom is linked with the hearts of tens of thousands of households and contributes to China's modernization."

MA YUYING, 27, despite her mother's horror and the flight of potential suitors, is a celebrated podiatrist in a women's bathhouse. She has treated 15,600 cases of bound, aching feet, corns and other ailments and has become a socialist saint to the footweary.

Miss Ma volunteered to become a podiatrist, which is considered by her people to be one of the three most degrading occupations possible — on a par with barbering and acting. She wavered because her mother, brothers, neighbors and classmates were dismayed and feared she would become a virtual untouchable.

Miss Ma persisted, however, and now can cure more than 20 foot ailments and has discovered a cure for one. She offers her services in railway stations and hotels and visits patients at home.

They come from many provinces, just to have her treat their corns. "This is a glorious job," she said.

Mo Zaisheng, 55, who trained to be a furrier for elegant Mandarins and their ladies, now sells yardage at the Peking No. 1 Department Store. He visits textile mills in his spare time and pleasantly shocks customers with common courtesy.

He would be right at home on New York's Seventh Avenue. As a yardage salesman he stands out in the commercial field where clerks are notorious for negligence and rudeness — even to the point of striking customers.

Mr. Mo does what any good salesman does, taking time with each customer, letting them examine the cloth and discussing its merits. He brings in sales equivalent to $500 a day.

"I AM THE bridge between the factory and customer," he said. "I show the government cares about our people's livelihood."

Shi Yunlian, 25, is a bus conducter accused by a few co-workers of currying favor, but praised by passengers — more than 5,000 of whom have attested to citations for her.

Miss Shi rides a long distance bus in Hebei province.

"I try to make people more comfortable on my bus so when they leave they can work harder for China's modernization," says the ticket-taker.

Cyprus becomes publishing center

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Only 30 minutes flying time from Lebanon and Syria, this Mediterranean island of Greeks and Turks is fast becoming a publishing center for Arab newspapers and other specialized Middle East publications.

"There is complete freedom of the press here. We have all the facilities we want and are perfectly happy," says Samir Gharyafi, who picked Cyprus as his base three years ago, one of the first Arab publishers to do so.

Since then six more Arab-language (and one English-language) Middle East weekly magazines and newspapers have come to the island nation of Cyprus.

The number of publications multiplied after the Israeli invasion of Lebanon last June and the withdrawal of the Palestine Liberation Organization and its military and political apparatus from Beirut last September.

Twelve other Arab-language newspapers obtained publishing permits from the Cyprus government recently and are expected to start printing locally later this year.

The Cyprus government, eager to transform the island into an offshore business and banking center, grants publishing licenses readily with a minimum of formalities. There are attractive tax concessions and other inducements.

Some of the publications, like Gharyafi's Al Asr and the English-language Middle East Times, both weekly newspapers, are entirely new ventures.

Some of the others are long-established periodicals, mainly of a radical or Palestinian hue, that were published in Beirut until the Israeli invasion.

"Our move to Cyprus from Beirut was natural in view of the cordial and friendly relations existing between the PLO and the Cyprus government," says Mohammed Soleiman, deputy editor of Falestine Al-Thawra, the official weekly PLO magazine.

Cyprus-based Arab publishers acknowledge they would have preferred working out of Beirut, except that the political turmoil and lawlessness prevailing there in recent years has been posing serious threats to their own survival and that of their publications.

Gharyafi, a Lebanese Christian journalist, said he decided to launch his paper from Cyprus "because the previous free publishing climate of Lebanon was lost. I could no longer work there freely or report honestly because of the Syrian occupation of my country," he said.

Syrian troops entered Lebanon in 1976 under an Arab League mandate to supervise the cease-fire in the civil war between the right-wing Christians and leftist Lebanese Moslems and their Palestinian allies. Lebanon-based newspapers writing against Syria were frequently bombed in the time before the Israeli invasion.

Another problem cited by Arab publishers in Cyprus was the unreliable state of Lebanon's telecommunications network and transport links to the rest of the Arab world, both of which are frequently interrupted.

Moving elsewhere in the Arab world was ruled out because of government restrictions on free expression or the difficulty of obtaining publishing permits.

A license to publish a newspaper in Kuwait, where the press is among the freest in the Arab world, costs more than $2 million. The money would be used to buy an existing title since no new licenses are being granted.

To obtain a government license in Cyprus the publisher needs a bank deposit equivalent to $1,000 as a legal guarantee against the possible payment of libel damages.

'Onward, Christian soldiers, marching...'

A Midland woman had a vision and she saw it come to pass Saturday morning with the first March for Jesus. Midlanders from several churches bundled up against the chill May morning, above, and walked from Mt. Rose Baptist Church down several streets, ending at Washington Park. There they continued their "march of love" with a talk by the Rev. John Joiner, left, minister of Goodwill Baptist Church, and one of the organizers. Purpose of Earnestine Hunt's vision was to pull people together, as it did with these three women, right.

Education report has bad news for much of nation

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The National Commission on Excellence in Education's recently released report to Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell on the deficiencies of American education has spread alarm over the nation.

In Midland, however, public school administrators are happy about the negative publicity. They're even more thrilled because the Midland Independent School District already has met several of the recommendations issued in the report.

The report includes trends and recommendations for public, private and parochial schools and colleges.

According to the report, some 23 million American adults and 13 percent of all 17-year-olds can be considered functionally illiterate. Among minorities, that figure may run as high as 40 percent.

Following are some recommendations made by the commission and methods with which MISD is handling or studying the proposals, according to Assistant Superintendent of Instruction Dr. Duane H. Moore:

—FOUR YEARS of English at the high school level: MISD already requires four years of English for high school graduates. Also, English composition courses are consistent with those of major state colleges.

—Three years of Social Studies: MISD requires 3½ years at the high school level.

—Strongly encourages two years of foreign language for college bound students: MISD counsels college-bound students to take two years of foreign language.

—Computer science achievement tests should be regularly administered to certify student credentials, identify need for remedial intervention, identify opportunity for advanced work: MISD achievement tests are administered yearly, and until this year, were administered twice a year. While remedial work and advanced work on computers has been offered at the upper-levels, a new computer literacy program will expand the services down to the elementary grades. Data presently is utilized as the commission recommends.

—Seven-hour days: By state law, Texas students must attend school seven hours a day.

—SCHOOL YEARS of 200-220 days: While MISD students attend school only 180 days, as directed by state law, Moore said the district feels time spent wisely is more important. —Time available for learning should be expanded through better classroom management: The Midland Lesson Plan, introduced two years ago, stresses time on task.

"I think if we can use the time we have wisely and focus on what we're about, it may not be necessary to increase (the days in a school year.) I sure can't argue about the more time you spend on something, the better you learn it."

Also, Moore pointed out enrichment teachers are placed at every elementary school campus in the district. While some enrichment teachers instruct low-achieving students, others take the high-achievers. The main point of having enrichment teachers is to decrease size load and focus more on individual instruction and quality time spent with each student.

—Burden on teachers reduced through development of firm, fair codes of student conduct...and by considering alternative programs to meet the needs of continually disruptive students: Behavior codes are in effect on MISD elementary and secondary levels. Most elementary schools have some form of assertive discipline program in which students know the rules, the awards for following them and the consequences if they do not. In addition, on-campus suspensions are in operation at the upper levels.

—ATTENDANCE POLICIES with clear incentives and sanctions should be used to reduce absenteeism: Effective this year, a new MISD attendance policy has significantly decreased absenteeism. There is a marked improvement since last fall in the average daily attendance.

—Using non-teaching personnel to teach certain courses: MISD, although it is difficult at times, has always found and hired certified teachers. "We're finding them — but it is difficult. It isn't to say we haven't had difficult areas like math and science. To my knowledge, we have not had to place anyone who did not meet state requirements for math and science." Outside resources from the business community are frequently used in classrooms through the SHARE program.

—Salaries for teaching professionals should be increased and should be professionally competitive, market-sensitive and performance-based: MISD tries to pay teachers an average of 32 percent above the state salary base. In addition, teachers may apply for performance based salary supplements, which pay $1,000 to $4,000 for four years.

—More homework: While homework should be an important part of the student's learning program, it should not be assigned for no reason," Moore said. "My opinion is the majority of the (Midland) students do have a lot of homework. But it has got to have a relationship to what you're learning in the classroom. It needs to complement it — and not be just busy work."

But Midland's school system 'makes the grade'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

While a national commission on education may have thrown the book at some school systems, Midland Independent School District administrators feel their report card has higher than average grades.

The final report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education not only bemoans the decline in American education, it makes recommendations on how to bring national trends up to the levels of foreign competitors.

Perhaps the negative outlook on education, brought to the attention of the public from the 18-member commission, has some areas pinned.

But in Midland, most of those suggestions were caged, studied and set free long before the report was published.

"I'm pleased with the commission's report," said Dr. Duane Moore. "It has brought education to the front page — it's brought it to the attention of many people in the United States. And it has called for improvement in education."

The assistant superintendent of instructional services for MISD pointed out the commission focused on national trends of not only public schools, but private and parochial schools and colleges.

Having worked in several other districts and at different levels in-state and out, Moore can compare them to MISD. Using several measures, he can prove Midland has high standards:

Test scores are high; students are accepted into many of the most prestigious colleges, universities and military academies.

Large numbers of students bring home state and national academic and extracurricular honors and there is a large number of merit finalists and members of the National Honor Society.

The volunteer program has been identified as tops in the state twice in four years; the district produced a Rhodes Scholar; and the gifted program has received state approval.

"Midland Independent School District is not a typical public school system," Moore said. "I think it's an exception of the trends.

"I'd put it up against any public or private school system.

"I believe it is the incredible support we get in Midland that has helped to make us an exception."

Some recommendations made in the report already are met in Midland. Those that are not are being studied.

"Midland Independent School District is not saying we're everything we should be," Moore said. "We want to get better and provide all the opportunities we can for our students. We want to continue to upgrade our programs and meet the needs of our students.

"I think it's excellent — but we're working to make it even better."

"I believe it is the incredible support we get in Midland that has helped to make us (MISD) an exception."

Dr. Dorothy Wyvell, a Midland pediatrician for 33 years, is leaning into retirement. "We all have the same 24 hours. It's what we do with those 24 hours that makes you unequal."

She's willing to 'cure' your politics

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

"Don't misunderstand, I'm not a Republican," said the 69-year-old Midland pediatrician, pointing to a picture President Ronald Reagan sent her of himself.

But whatever her politics, Dr. Dorothy Wyvell doesn't let her beliefs interfere with the 22,000 Midland families she has cared for in the last 33 years.

"My patients always follow my medical advice, but not always my political advice," she said with a chuckle, adding that she'd much rather discuss politics with somebody who has an opposite view point than with a "num-num."

While scanning the collage of patients' photographs on the hallway walls of her office, Dr. Wyvell reminisced, denoting old family pictures of the Scharbauers, the Bushes and other Midland familes.

"You should see their (the patients) faces when they bring their pictures to me," she said, noting that the pictured-covered walls illustrate only a small portion of the patients she has seen.

"THEY ARE SO proud. They want me to have their pictures. There are many stories here."

Referring to herself as "69 young," Dr. Wyvell said her youthful appearance can be attributed to her mother.

"I enjoy life," she said. "My mother could tell you if you enjoy life you're healthy. You need to take time.

"There's a colony of ants that live between here and my mother's house (about a block from her M Street office). I always stop and watch them. I hope this construction doesn't destroy them."

But first she graduated from Duke University's Medical School.

"I followed the captain of the (high school) basketball team to Duke," she said, explaining she "loved to watch him play, but he never knew who I was."

The 1934 graduate completed the standard four-year stint in three years, earning the Phi Beta Kappa key for scholastic achievement. Born fifth of nine children, she worked her way through Duke's school of medicine by waiting on tables, doing laundry, babysitting and tutoring.

WHILE HER older brothers and sisters assisted with household finances, Dr. Wyvell said she was allowed to go to college if she paid her way and helped others in the family with their education."

"We were assigned children," she said. "I raised my youngest brother. He was the first one I sent to college. Last Friday my oldest brother's grandchild graduated from college — that's it."

Dr. Wyvell finished her medical training at Children's Memorial Hospital in Montreal, Canada, and John Hopkins Hospital Children's Medical Center in Dallas. She began her Dallas private practice in 1943, reaching a goal she had set as a child.

Dr. Wyvell's mother knew from the time her daughter was 3 that she was going to be a doctor. "I was always doctoring. The neighborhood cats, dogs and dolls all had splints and bandages."

Dr. Wyvell said she "just decided to become a doctor and gravitated into the specialty" of pediatrics. While in Dallas, a Midland woman who regularly brought her children to Dr. Wyvell asked her to come to the Tall City.

"She would always say, 'Come to Midland.' As soon as I crossed the county line I said this is it."

IT WAS 1949 when Dr. Wyvell first opened her practice at Marienfeld Street and Missouri Avenue.

"The streets were not even paved," she noted, adding that in 1950 she opened her office at 305 N. M St. "just before Christmas and I've been here ever since. Midland Memorial Hospital wasn't built yet."

Although she's continued to "doctor" children all these years, she did close the office doors for about six months. Dr. Wyvell converted the treatment rooms into a campaign headquarters.

She made her debut into active politics Sept. 1, 1960, launching an intensive campaign for congress. She ran on a third party ticket — the Constitution Party — for U.S. representative from the 16th Congressional District, covering 19 West Texas counties.

"I'm the proudest of running for congress," she said with a smile that buried her eyes into her glowing cheeks.

"I just felt such bad things were happening to people that I had to do something."

Even though her Washington roots included an atmosphere of national and international politics, Dr. Wyvell was a novice on the political scene.

While she didn't win the race, the doctor — who was 46 at the time — did "beat out the Republican candidate," receiving 25,000 votes.

RECALLING HER childhood years in the capital, where Dr. Wyvell's father — Manton Marble Wyvell — was assistant to Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, she said:

"I wasn't very old when my father left the state department, but I remember him (Bryan). He was a large man who wore a big, black cape. He had a booming voice and loved our cook's blackberry jam. And my middle name, Bryan, was for him. My father was hoping for a boy."

Besides running for congress, another one of Dr. Wyvell's "proudest accomplishments" has been recruiting pediatricians to Midland.

"I'd invite someone out," she said. "They would practice with me for a month, then I'd leave and any new patients would be theirs. Then all the pediatricians would close their practices until the new pediatrician built up a practice. You may have heard there were no pediatricians. We closed (temporarily) to help the others, but nobody was ever left untreated."

In practice by herself for 33 years, Dr. Wyvell now has a partner — Dr. Debbie Reese — and another pediatrician — Dr. Lynn Campbell — will be joining her.

"I'm sort of leaning into retirement," she said. "But I want to retire while people still want me.

"I'VE LIVED IN these four walls day and night," she said, explaining not only did she practice medicine, but she also lived in the back of the office.

Now with a new doctor coming, Dr. Wyvell is converting her living quarters into office space.

"I always fed my employees at noon. Because I lived alone, I thought this would be a good way to get a well-balanced meal and have company. We had a lot of good meals here," she said, rubbing her finger across the kitchen table.

Dr. Wyvell will be moving from her house soon. It won't be same, but she says that's all right.

"How can I be lonely with me around. I can never find enough time do what I want. People are equal in three ways — in the eyes of the Lord, the law and time — we all have the same 24 hours. It's what we do with those 24 hours that makes you unequal."

Girl with heart disease gets break

HOUSTON (AP) — An 11-year-old Anderson, Ind., girl with a degenerative heart disease remained hospitalized Saturday in Houston, but had a break from a series of tests she has been undergoing to see if her medication is working, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The little girl, Sharon Stohler, was admitted Wednesday to Texas Children's Hospital for the tests, said hospital spokeswoman Hazel Haby.

State treasurer sues for return of valuables

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — State Treasurer Ann Richards has filed claim for Texas to the cash, securities, jewelry and other valuables taken by the federal government 50 years ago when national banks failed. No estimate of the amount involved is available but she expects a "windfall" for the state.

She is the first state treasurer in the nation to file this claim, under a law passed last year. States have only one year in which to claim these valuables, otherwise they lose them. The deadline is October. She found that the regulations under which claims may be filed have not yet been written and will not be ready for another month yet.

Preliminary inquiry made by her office to the office of the U.S. Comptroller general revealed that some of the unclaimed valuables sitting idly by "in Washington somewhere" is from Texas.

In fact, until Richards inquired about this, the Comptroller's office was not even sure where they had placed these unclaimed riches. An employe thought perhaps they had gone to the Smithsonian Institution, a catch-all for rare and unwanted or seldom examined gifts.

I would like to know if there is a food co-op operating in Midland at the present time. Can you find out? — G.D.S.

ANSWER: According to checks made by Answer Line there is not at present a generalized food co-op in Midland. However, there is a co-op for fruits and vegetables with the possibility of expanding to eggs, cheese and frozen foods. More information can be obtained by contacting Bob Alexander, 685-0133, or Judy McPeak, 682-6584.

In the food co-op operation there needs to be a person in charge to take orders, collect money and pay for the merchandise. According to Mr. Alexander, this has proven to be a problem within various food co-ops which have been organized in Midland, and possibly is the reason for the scarcity of them now.

The intersection of Highway 158 and FM 715 has become extremely dangerous and has a very heavy traffic flow. I would like to find out what steps are necessary to have a traffic signal installed at that point. — Glynda Jones

ANSWER: Gene Presnall, supervising design engineer with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation in Odessa, says an investigation of the traffic flow at this intersection will be undertaken, if one has not been done already. If the study warrants a traffic signal, the lengthy process of beginning and completing construction of the signal will be instituted.

I have been unable to reach by phone the people who service Rainbow vacuum cleaners. They have since moved and the phone number is no longer in service. They formerly were Rainbow-Aqua-Air Systems, 2215 W. Florida St. Phone number, 685-3599.

I would appreciate their address and phone number if they have since relocated here in Midland or a nearby location. My vacuum cleaner needs to be serviced, and I have been told by other vacuum cleaner shops they do not carry or work on Rainbow cleaners, nor do they have any parts for them. Sure would appreciate an answer. — Mary Ann Salgado

ANSWER: Would suggest you contact the factory authorized sales and service dealer in Lubbock to inquire about the nearest location to Midland of a Rainbow service shop. That address is Rainbow Rexair Sales and Service, 3405 Canyon Road, Lubbock, Texas 79403. Telephone 1-806-765-5689.

With regard to child support, what assistance can be expected from the Midland County Child Support Office?

What procedure does Vivian Wood's office play as our district clerk?

Is the Child Support Office a bookkeeping system for collecting child support payments or do they just mail payments out? Wouldn't it be a better system if notices were mailed when a parent was in arrears of child support?

What steps are taken to collect child support through the district clerk's office and who pays for this?

My ex-husband owes me five months child support plus a $900 settlement from the divorce, which is supposed to be paid through the court. How can I get him to pay this? He has been informed, he has been filed on, but refuses to pick up the papers. He has written to the judge with excuses as to why he has not paid child support. Excuses do not feed or clothe a child, nor does it pay a doctor bill.

Why are some men forced to pay child support while others go free? Can a person be filed on through a third person? — M.J.F.

ANSWER: Joyce Tynes, district deputy clerk in charge of child support, explains briefly the judicial procedure which must be followed in the collection of child support payments.

If the ex-husband does not remit payments, the wife can file against him. The papers are turned over to the sheriff's department by the district clerk's office. The ex-husband must be served the papers and, if he fails to appear for a hearing, contempt of court charges on a show-cause can be filed, and by a writ of attachment, the ex-husband can be placed in jail.

Ms. Tynes points out that through the present judicial system, nothing can be instituted until the person is served with the papers.

The Child Support Office is not a collection agency, Ms. Tynes says. The office is set up to receive payments, record them and forward them to the women. Currently, there are some 19,000 child support cases in Midland County, with some $2 million processed through this office. This bookkeeping is a free service provided by the county.

Ms. Tynes also reports that since Jan. 1, only 15 cases for non-payment have been filed, with only two of this number unable to be served. The wife pays the court cost expenses for filing on her ex-husband.

There also is an alternative of filing through the county attorney in the county, if known, in which the ex-husband resides. This, of course, would be at the expense of the ex-wife.

Firemen flood a burning car with water in a 1:39 a.m. Saturday blaze which claimed a house and three vehicles at 6505 Sequoia in Green Tree Estates. Six trucks and 19 firemen, including six who were off duty, responded to the call. Some 20,000 gallons of water were used in extinguishing the fire. The house, occupied by Theron Vaughn, was owned by Robert D. Rhoden of F&D Mechanical. No injuries were reported.

Oilfield attracted own breed

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Like the days of the Old West when men lived fast and died hard, the early-day oilfield bred its share of rough-and-tumble men, remembers W.W. "Bill" Allman of Crane, an 84-year-old former cable tool rig driller.

But they had good qualities as well, he says — a certain honor always pervading their consciences.

"We had a lot of fun," he recalls, relaxing in his Crane home.

Allman was born in 1899 and grew up in and around Arkansas City, Kan. He was first exposed to the oilfields when he signed on as an unpaid apprentice about 1916. Within a few months he was a full-fledged tool dresser and, a few years later, a cable tool rig driller.

Drilling by means of a bit attached to a cable is almost a lost art today, says Allman.

"It's a shame, a crying shame, that they didn't go ahead and try to teach it in school, because there's lots of places now that can use 'em, and to good advantage: less money and a whole lot better," he says. "Because they can drill a whole lot straighter hole than they ever thought of drilling (by rotary). We drill ours up and down, and the gravity makes you hang straight. If it goes off you know it. A rotary goes around and around and around, and they hit something that's hard on this side and soft over here, that ol' bit (shifts).

"When we hit the same thing and move over, we know it. (Rotary drillers) don't; they'll get off eight, 10 degrees and that's quite a ways. I never sold a well then that went over five degrees, and I drilled a lot of 'em."

When Santa Rita No. 1 blew in back in the '20s, word of the oil-rich West Texas fields soon made its way to the Oklahoma-Kansas line, where Allman was drilling. The lure of plentiful work summoned the driller to West Texas in 1926.

Arriving at the then-tent city of McCamey at night, Allman looked out the next morning at the desolate terrain and "would've given a handful of Kansas dollars just to go back home."

Fifty-seven years have passed since that moment and Allman has yet to leave West Texas to stay.

His wife joined him within weeks, and Allman drilled wells throughout the area. His family, he notes, always was supportive and never failed to move with him.

Crane and McCamey were not known for their Sunday School-like atmospheres in those days, he remembers — especially in such spots as the Bloody Bucket, Trice Hotel or Green Parrot.

"You name it, they did it," he recollects.

In the early days of oilfield activity in West Texas, he says, teams of mules or horses sometimes were used to haul equipment through roadless and sandy areas. Additionally, the general aspects of cable tool drilling differed from today's rotary operations.

Only two persons were on duty each 12-hour tour: the driller, who was responsible for the actual drilling and was in charge of the tour; and the tool dresser, the driller's helper who heated mis-formed drill bits in a forge and then pounded them into shape with a hammer.

Even when rotary units began to be used in the area, Allman remained busy as he both wildcatted and contracted the drilling of wells for companies.

"They told me, rotaries can drill a well faster, but they can't do it for the same amount of money," recalls Allman.

Through the years Allman also has been active in Crane's community affairs, serving as city alderman, mayor and Boy Scout troop leader, and notes that, if he had it to do over again, he would still pick Crane in which to live.

He drilled his last well in 1977 — at the age of 78 — and now, he says, relaxes in the company of his wife.

Wind could 'ruffle' launch of ozone-testing balloons

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — The largest flotilla of scientific ballons in history is poised for launch in an East Texas cow pasture, but about 100 international scientist fear winds may scrub the ozone-layer study for a year.

The scientists plant to launch five helium-filled balloons — four as tall as the Eiffel Tower — simultaneously from the National Aeronautics and Space Adminstration's balloon facility three miles south of this East Texas town.

Equipment carried aloft by the balloons will study possible damage to the ozone layer, a gaseous blanket 20 miles above the earth that screens out harmful ultraviolet radiation from the sun.

But strong surface winds and jet stream currents have canceled every scheduled launch since April 25 and unless conditions improve by early June, the flight may be postponed until 1984.

"Everybody's getting a bit worried. You hate to see an opportunity like this pass by," Peter Woods of Great Britain's Nathional Physical Laboratory told the Dallas Times Herald.

"Morale isn't red hot right now," lamented Jim Mentall, one of the scientists. "If we have to scrub the mission until next year, it will be catastrophic."

The launch requires perfect weather conditions because even mild atmospheric disturbances could throw the balloons off course. May is considered the best month for launching the scientific balloons because high-altitude currents are relative calm.

If winds carry the balloons more than 300 miles from the launch site, scientists will be unable to receive radio data transmitted by their equipment.

The scientists fear the ozone layer is being depleted by volcanoes, chlorofluorocarbons from aerosol spray cans, jet aircraft fumes, notrogens released from fertilizers and other pollutants.

They caution that damage to the ozone layer could trigger global climate changes and increase the risk of skin cancer.

"This is the biggest ozone study tackled so far," said Woods. "Pollution is doing something to the ozone layer, and until now we haven't had the numbers to say how much."

Scientists began planning the international balloon mission 18 months ago at a conference in Belgium. Seventeen instruments from laboratories in seven nations will be carried aboard the flotilla.

Three military aircraft, and a National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration satellite also will be used in the study.

Each of the 800-foot-high, 450-foot-wide balloons will carry two tons of scientific instruments in its gondola to measure the ozone in the stratosphere as well as dozens of other chemical compounds that could be depleting the levels of the vital gas.

"The instruments aboard the balloons make up all the available technology on (atmospheric research) on ozone," said Dr. Wes Huntress, atmospheric science program manager for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

"Normally the instruments are sent up individually, but it turns out that approach into researching the ozone layers isn't sufficient," he said. "By taking a number of tests at the same time, we can learn a lot more about the ozone, as well as the accuracy of our instruments."

Among the facts scientists hope to discover are the percentage of ozone depletion in the stratosphere and the levels of gases such as chlorine monoxide, nitric oxide, hydrogen chloride, nitrogen dioxide and nitric acid.

SMU trustees approve advancement plan

DALLAS (AP) — A five-year plan to make Southern Methodist University one of the nation's premier private universities has been approved by the college's board of trustees.

"Several trustees said it represents the most well-thought-out plan in the history of the university," said SMU president L. Donald Shields.

The trustees also approved a record $95 million budget. An increase of $8.1 million over the current year will be financed by increases in tuition and student fees and by donations and income from SMU's $135 million endowment.

The five-year plan calls for 43 new faculty members and an estimated $46 million for construction and renovation.

The plan also provides for $21 million in additional endowment for undergraduate student aid and $8 million in endowment for graduate student aid.

"We are placing our principal interest in the highest quality undergraduate program we can possibly offer," said Shields.

Shields said SMU will recruit students of higher academic caliber and will be more selective in accepting students by choosing from a larger pool of applicants.

"We are not setting specific academic quality standards, such as a higher base for SATs, but we hope that with more applicants, that will in effect happen," Shields added. "Raising standards is an evolutionary, not a revolutionary, process."

SMU's average SAT score of 1050 is below that of many other private universities of comparable size and national reputation, according to Barron's Profiles of American Colleges.

Shields said SMU will concentrate on methods other than SAT scores to identify and recruit scholars.

Howard House title reverted

BIG SPRING — The property title to Howard House Hotel reverted to Charles Schuler Jr. of Petersburg when no buyers showed interest during last week's substitute trustees sale.

The hotel and three city lots were sold by Schuler two years ago to J.W. "Bo" Rich of Odessa for $55,000. Schuler said he foreclosed and authorized the auction because Rich had not made monthly payments on the note in six months.

Schuler has indicated he will try to sell the property.

University given state grant

SAN MARCOS, Texas (AP) — Southwest Texas State University gave Lady Bird Johnson an honorary doctorate and Gov. Mark White gave the school a $256,000 state grant during commencement excercises here Saturday.

White and university president Robert L. Hardesty said the grant from the governor's office criminal justice division will be used on a project designed to develop better teaching tools for improving discipline in public school classrooms.

The honorary doctor of human letters degree given to the former first lady was only the second honorary doctorate given by the university. The first was to her late husband, former President Lyndon Johnson, who received the degree from his alma mater in 1962 when he was vice president.

White and Hardesty said the discipline project is the first of its kind in Texas ands will be administered through the Texas Juvenile Justice Center at the university.

"This classroom disciplinary management and strategy program, designed here at Southwest Texas, should lead the way in Texas for our efforts to help classroom instructors cope with the problems of student disruptions, truancy problems, drug abuse and alcoholism, juvenile deliquency, and related problems in the school environment," said White.

"The public schools are crucial to our Democratic society. In school our young people learn the elements of good citizenship and develop the necessary skills and abilities to function as productive adult members of society.

"The schools cannot accomplish this alone, but in many respects they have been forced too. Concern over classroom discipline and academic achievement, both symbiotically related, must translatae into action."

Warrant issued for legislator's arrest

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — An arrest warrant has been issued for state Rep. Joe Gamez because he failed to report to his probation officer on a conviction for driving while intoxicated.

State Rep. Matt Garcia, who is Gamez' attorney, Saturday posted a $2,000 surety bond to ensure that Gamez would not be arrested. County Court-at-Law Judge Keith Burris ordered Gamez's bond increased from $600 after the warrant was issued Friday.

Gamez, contacted at the state Capitol in Austin where he attended a session of the House Friday, said he thought he was supposed to report to the probation department on another day.

"I don't know what I'm going to do," he said. "There was some mix-up on the date to show up."

Gamez said he called the probation officer and Burris when he learned of the warrant. Despite eight attempts to reach Burris, he said, the judge did not call him back.

"I'm a legislator. They knew where I was. They know what I'm doing here," he said. "Am I supposed to drop everything and go down there when we're in session?"

Gamez pleaded no contest to the DWI charge April 29. Burris delayed sentencing pending review of a pre-sentence report to be compiled by the probation department after Friday's meeting.

Adult probation officer Caesar Garcia said he contacted Gamez after he missed the 9 a.m. meeting and set up another appointment for 3:30 p.m. But when Gamez failed to appear for that appointment, probation officers met with the judge and the warrant was issued.

"The probation officer gave him (Gamez) every opportunity to let him pick the date he wanted to come down," Burris said. Garcia said Gamez had selected the date for the interview.

'Beefed up' interest rates, costs hurt cattle industry

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AGRICULTURE

DENVER — America's $30 billion-a-year beef business, pinched by difficult economic times for several years, is undergoing painful changes that are reshaping the industry.

The cattleman, the romantic symbol of the West, is troubled by many factors. Several — high interest rates, increasing costs and declining demand — are symptomatic of the sick economy.

But other obstacles face the beef producer: Industry overcapacity, severe weather in feedlot country, the payment in-kind program to rescue grain farmers, fad and genuine diets, concern about cholesterol and fresh seafood and poultry as alternative foods.

All have contributed to higher retail prices, although industry experts predict that current price increases are temporary, reflecting the weather. But consumers are turning to more economical pork and poultry, and small beef businesses are facing disaster. Two such companies closed in Denver alone last week.

"The beef industry is going through dramatic changes," said William D. Farr, a 72-year-old Greeley, Colo., stockman who has survived in the volatile business since 1929. "There's too many packing plants, too many feedlots, too many boning plants."

And, at times, too many cattle.

"It is the broiler chicken that is nailing the beef industry to the wall," Farr said. "And the pork industry is being converted to a similar type of more efficient industry (like poultry) more and more."

Statistics from the National Cattlemen's Association and the U.S. Department of Agriculture bear out Farr's contention. Per capita consumption of beef in the United States peaked at 94.4 pounds (retail weight) in 1976. In 1982 it was 77.5 pounds.

Pork, meanwhile, increased steadily — 53.7 pounds per person in 1976, 59 pounds in 1982. And poultry shot up from 52.2 pounds per person in 1976 to 63.5 pounds last year.

"Meat consumption, and specifically beef consumption, is continuing to decline," said Bob Simonton, director of manufacturing for the King Soopers supermarket chain in Denver. "Chicken consumption is continuing to grow." He cites per-capita statistics estimating 1983 consumption at 76 pounds of beef, 58 pounds of pork and 64 pounds of poultry.

"We're carrying more fresh seafood in our stores than ever before," Simonton said. "Poultry is a bargain on a per-pound basis, but seafood is higher-priced than beef."

Why is poultry a bargain? Efficiency, replied Farr. "Broiler chicken sells at retail at 28 to 30 percent of the price of beef. Twenty years ago, broiler chicken sold at 60 to 80 percent of the price of beef. That is all in efficiency of production, packaging and handling.

"They can convert grain to meat more efficiently than any other type of animal," he added. "Poultry is cut up and packaged at slaughter plants. All King Soopers or Safeway has to do is open the boxes and put them on the counter. If the beef industry doesn't get more efficient, it will give even more business to poultry."

Farr, who in 1970 was president of the American National Cattlemen's Association (now the National Cattlemen's Association), insisted that the beef-packing industry is becoming more efficient.

"Boxed beef is just the first step," he said. "In another five years, they will wrap the steak individually so it can go straight to the supermarket meat counter."

Another Greeley beef expert agreed that slaughter plants eventually may package beef for individual consumers, but he disagreed on the timing. "I don't think it will be within five years," said Ken Monfort, president of Monfort of Colorado, a huge cattle feeding and packing-plant operation.

"We've still got lots of problems in finding the right kind of film that will both protect the meat and make it look good. The vacuum packaging we use now protects and preserves the meat, but it doesn't look good."

Farr noted that high labor costs are forcing many grocery chains — such as Safeway in Denver — to change their beef operations. Instead of buying full carcasses and cutting the meat themselves, they are buying beef cut up and boxed by the meat packer.

"It gets to be a whole different kind of business, and all packers can't be in it," Farr said. "California and Arizona are being forced out of the cattle-feeding business, because you can ship them boxed beef cheaper than you can ship live cattle out there and feed them."

Boxed beef may be great for grocery stores, but it has complicated the packing-plant business. "Now, instead of selling beef car casses, we sell a hundred different items," said Monfort, whose business is about 88 percent boxed beef and 12 percent carcasses.

"That takes 15 salesmen for all those products. It used to take two or three salesmen for carcasses."

Safeway's move to boxed beef is effective Friday, when it closes its meat-cutting operation in Denver. "That will dramatically affect our business," said Leonard Litvak of Litvak Meat Packing Co. in Adams County, just north of Denver.

Litvak deals only in carcasses, so the company — which has been one of Safeway's biggest suppliers — will be shut out of the supermarket chain's market. Dick Sheldon, executive vice president of Litvak, said the company will lay off about 15 of some 200 hourly workers. Litvak also will reduce its slaughter from 1,400 cattle per day to about 1,150 a day.

On the other hand, Pepper Packing Co. in Denver, which slaughters about 1,200 cattle per day, will keep some of the Safeway business. Instead of supplying carcasses, however, Pepper's subsidiary in Denver, Peppertree Beef, will ship boxed beef to the grocery chain. So will Monfort.

Steve Pepper, vice president of Pepper Packing, pointed out that Safeway's changing need is just one of the immediate problems facing packing plants. Bad weather and a price imbalance have combined to put packing plants in the red.

Committee to dicuss pecan pest control

The Midland County Horticulture Committee has planned a program on insect and disease control in pecans.

Dr. Harold Kaufman, area extension plant pathologist, Fort Stockton, and David Foster, county extension entomologist, Stanton, will present this program. It is scheduled for Wednesday, May 18, at 7:30 p.m. in the County Extension Office, Room 202, Courthouse Annex, 218 W. Illinois.

I hope you will be able to attend as I am sure the program will be interesting and beneficial to you.

BETWEEN MAY 10 and May 25, carefully examine the tips of 10 nutlet clusters per pecan tree for greenish-white eggs (pecan nut casebearer). Spray nutlet clusters with Sevin, malathion or Zolone, when egg hatch is occurring. Examine the clusters 7-10 days after the spray; if eggs are present repeat the insecticide application.

Examine 10 compound leaves per pecan tree for yellow and black aphids. If the average number of yellow aphids per leaf is greater than 15, apply malathion or Zolone. If black aphids average 2 per compound leaf, apply Zolone.

Check pecan leaves for foliage feeders, fall webworms and walnut caterpillars. When present, prune out the webbed-over leaves and destroy the webworms inside the web or spray with Sevin or Dipel when the worms are small. Thorough coverage is needed to provide a uniform deposit of insecticide at the site of worm feeding.

If you are unsure of your insect indentification be sure and attend Wednesday's horticulture meeting.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

Tobacco exports value higher

WASHINGTON (AP) — The value of U.S. tobacco exports hit an all-time high during 1982 with overseas sales of both unmanufactured leaf and manufactured products setting records, the Agriculture Department says.

But USDA analysts also predict that export sales will fall this year in large part because of the huge 1982 world crop and the prospects for another good harvest this season.

"Greater worldwide availability of tobacco is likely to provide keener competition with U.S. leaf," the analysts said. "In addition, the world economic recession, rising tobacco taxes, anti-smoking campaigns and health issues are expected to weaken demand for U.S. leaf with exports not likely to reach the 1982 level."

Farmer 'milks' computer, keeps eye on money flow

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — For years, Bill McVey followed a popular and deceptively simple form of farm bookkeeping — write a check to pay a bill, sell some grain when the balance runs low.

But the system never told him how much money he had that day, or what he might expect to have in a year.

"That's the worst thing a farmer can do, operate out of a checkbook," the Chickasha, Okla., farmer said. "He can't be sure what he's doing. He doesn't ever know where he stands."

The problem was solved three years ago when McVey invested $7,000 in a home computer system and accounting programs. Now he can tell where he stands financially at the press of a few buttons.

"It will be as much a staple as the tractor is today," McVey said. "It's just like the four-wheel-drive tractors. They came, and the computer's coming."

Computers may be the fastest-growing item on farms today. Midwestern universities conducting conferences about computer use and farm management report growing interest among farmers who want to improve efficiency.

Farmers have found three major uses for their home computers — production planning, record keeping and collecting commodity news and information.

After making one set of production planning calculations, McVey discovered that the cost of planting, fertilizing and harvesting a particular field for wheat would be more than he would make from the expected yield.

"You can have all of your information about the field on the screen and through several different programs, you can play a 'what if' game," he said.

"With soil fertilization known by soil test, you can input different crops as to their needs, input also moisture and price, and the computer will compute all this out and tell you what to expect to make from that field."

As well as increasing knowledge of their own operations, farmers are using computer videotex services for information about markets. Using videotex, a farmer can send commands from one computer terminal to another computer, which then looks up the requested information.

Panhandle Beef Parade planned

The contest will feature calves — steers and heifers — raised by 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America members from across Texas.

Judging in the Hale County Agricultural Center will be by Joe Lewis and Gene Raymond, both of Kansas.

A Review

"Breathless," starring Richard Gere and Valerie Kaprisky is based on the motion picture, "A Bout de Souffle" (Breathless) written by Jean-Luc Godard from a story by Francois Truffaut. About Godard's movie, Truffaut has said, "The emotion is both powerful and purer because it is arrived at despite something."

That could also be said of this version.

This screenplay by L.M. Kit Carson and Jim McBride (with McBride directing), tells the story of a young hustler who is long on lustful living; a guy who acts and reacts from one moment to the next without thought or direction. From his silver-tipped cowboy boots to his ruffled red shirt, Jesse (Gere) plays out the flip side of Gere's character in "American Gigolo," going from slick to sleaze with surprising ease.

In "Breathless," Jesse religiously reads the Marvel comic, "The Silver Surfer," about a space traveler who has "the power cosmic" and stays on Earth to right wrongs and find love despite the fact that police and the Marines are always after him. But more than just read it, Jesse identifies with the Silver Surfer and in a self-fulfilling set of circumstances, finds himself the subject of a massive police hunt in Los Angeles.

WITH THE POLICE in pursuit, Jesse, nevertheless, continues to act out his fantasy by chasing down the object of his love, a young French architectural student, Monica (Miss Kaprisky).

A girl with ambitious plans for the future, Monica resists, at first, the tempation to live fast and free with Jesse, but something about him catches her up in a whirlwind of passion and indecision. Even so, it isn't long before her dreams are deflated by reality and the results of her actions are both "powerful and purer."

In "Breathless," Gere is the mindless side of hero worship — juking, jiving and crooning to idol Jerry Lee "The Killer" Lewis' rock and roll classic (of the same name as the film). It plays on his car cassette deck and in his mind and he is intent on mimicking its message of living for the breathless moments. A message that Jesse believes so convincingly, when he steals, robs, or even kills, we make no judgments; he seems to be living on the edge where morality comes after survival.

CO-STAR VALERIE Kaprisky, who was reportedly chosen for the part by Gere, is perfectly cast as someone who wants to do the "right" thing but at the same time is irresistibly drawn toward that moment of surrender — of being caught breathless.

Similar to "American Gigolo" in that both men live on the other side of the law and end up running from it. "Breathless," nevertheless, fails to reveal what is going on in Jesse's mind. Even Monica says, "I wish I could see into your mind."

What makes Jesse tick? We are given only clues — like idol worship, the line of least resistance, the boy who never grows up or gives up. For all that, "Breathless" is curiously satisfying — not for what we imagine is lying just beneath the surface, but for the surface, a place where many live, flourish and die unfathomed.

Rated R, "Breathless," does contain explicit scenes of frontal nudity of both stars and incorporates a naked look at the underside of a seemingly glossy city.

"BLUE THUNDER," starring Roy Scheider, is a fast-paced, shoot 'em up over Los Angeles skies with a super secret helicopter as the vehicle of destruction and intervention. Capable of firing 4,000 rounds a minute from 20-millimeter cannons mounted in the nose, the "Blue Thunder," as it is named, is supposed to serve as an anti-terrorist weapon for the 1984 Olympics, but is, in fact, a top secret exterminator aimed at LA barrio insurgents.

Like its predecessor "Firefox," the "Blue Thunder" is equipped with state of the art technology, including a thermographic camera, and audio system capable of detecting "a mouse fart at 2,000 feet," computer link-ups to the records of any citizen who can be identified, and a whisper mode (good for lingering in the air hummingbird style while officer Murphy, played by Scheider, and partner Lymangood, portrayed by Daniel Stern of "Diner," peep in at a young woman who practices the contortionist side of yoga in the nude).

Murphy is the unsuspecting police officer who gets to test the chopper for the department and the one who uses it later to expose the government plot.

AS MURPHY, Scheider is totally credible even when the plot wears thin (as it so frequently does). He commandeers the craft with the conviction of a man tested under fire (there are flashbacks to Viet Nam for proof) and physically turns out mean and lean for the movie.

But for all the fire power, fine stunt flying under overpasses and around skyscrappers, and innovative technological finery, "Blue Thunder" comes down to a chase scene. And after anticipating for most of the film, it is easy for the viewer to run out of gas (even though it took the helicopter most of the day to do so) before all the shooting stops.

Couple that with the incredulous order for F-16's to shoot down the "Blue Thunder" over LA skies and you have a movie that doesn't take itself too seriously but is aimed to take you for a ride you won't soon forget.

Rated R, the language used by Murphy underestimates the depth and breadth of Anglo-Saxon English, saving time for the action. And when all is said and done "Blue Thunder" may be short on dialogue, and weak in plot, but it is long where this kind of film counts.

Museum of Southwest celebrates museum day

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., will celebrate International Museum Day Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. with special activities and the opening of a new exhibit.

Mexican Folk Retablos, on display Wednesday through June 19, presents a look at folk art which flourished during the 19th century, dying out in the 20th century. Retablos are oil paintings on tin of Catholic saints and Biblical figures.

Thousands were produced during the 19th century by anonymous artists for the use of the masses who sought reassurance and solace from these revered figures. Each retablo symbolized a Catholic saint in a very formalized way with identifiable characteristics.

Placed in homes and churches throughout Mexico, these artifacts reflect the customs and beliefs of a Mexico that has nearly vanished.

A wine and cheese opening reception is planned Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m. At that time the public will have an opportunity to meet the museum's new director, Jerry Porter.

Other activities planned for International Museum Day include:

—A 10 to 11 a.m. volunteer appreciation tea. During this special reception Porter will informally discuss his ideas for the museum. Those interested in working as a volunteer at the museum are encouraged to come.

—A Brown Bag lunch from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Everyone is invited to bring their lunch and picnic on the grounds. Complimentary beverages will be served. The film documentary "From the Heart," which tells about nine of the artists featured in the "Works by Women" exhibit, will be shown at 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

—A talk on legal and ethical aspects of museum collecting and administration from 3 to 4 p.m. Dr. Marilyn Phelan, legal counsel for Texas Tech University, will discuss the subject of the fiduciary and legal responsibilities of operating a museum.

—A chalk drawing contest at 4 p.m. Children in grades K-6 are invited to participate in this contest held on the museum's sidewalk. All supplies will be provided. First, second and third place prizes will be presented for works in categories K-3 and 4-6 grades.

All activites are free.

Women in 'Sons and Lovers' prove interesting

ENTERTAINMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — "Sons and Lovers," the autobiographical novel that established the reputation of D.H. Lawrence, chronicles a would-be painter's painful coming of age in a bleak English coal mining town at the turn of the century.

It tells of Paul Morel (portrayed by Karl Johnson), his troubles with a dominating but well-intentioned mother, and his affairs with a dark-haired farm girl and a sophisticated older woman.

But in Trevor Griffiths' first-rate adaptation, which begins tonight on public TV's "Masterpiece Theatre," it is the women rather than the indecisive Morel who prove to be more interesting and even more sympathetic.

At the top of the list is Eileen Atkins who brings a fierce determination to the role of Gertrude Morel, a woman who vows her sons will not work in the mines like their father.

She encourages his painting, applauds his rise to chief clerk at a surgical supply factory and discourages his attention to members of the opposite sex.

"She'd leave me no room. She exalts in taking you from me," cries Mrs. Morel when Paul brings home Miriam Leivers (Leonie Mellinger), a dark, good-hearted country beauty whom he calls "a beggar for love."

"You talk about the cruelty of women. I wish you could know the cruelty of men in their brute force...they simply don't know that the woman exists," Clara lashes out at Paul when their relationship flounders.

Southwestern Area Art Show to open Saturday at Museum of Southwest

The 17th Annual Southwestern Area Art Show opens Saturday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., with a barbecue and awards ceremony. The show will be on display until Aug. 14.

After reviewing 307 different entries from 110 artists, juror Laurence Miller, director of the Laguna Gloria Art Museumm in Austin, accepted 59 works for inclusion in this show.

Artists from throughout the Southwest submitted works for review. Midland was represented with 35 entries and Odessa with seven.

The artists selected for this year's exhibit use a variety of materials from watercolor to mixed media, from serigraphs to pastels. Miller will make his final decisions this week and the winners will be announced at Saturday's barbecue.

Tickets for the barbecue, being catered by O'Neils, are priced at $9.50. They are available by calling the museum, 683-2882. Music will be provided by Showdown.

'Requiem' unsteady, but enthusiastic

A Review

Packed to its edges with musicians and singers, the stage at Lee High held a 195-member ensemble for the closing concert of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's 1982-83 season.

Verdi's "Requiem Mass" runs the emotional gamut from awe to fear. Originally begun as a dedication to the memory of Italian composer Rosinni, it nonetheless took the unexpected death of one of Verdi's idols, Italian novelist Alessandro Manzoni, for Verdi to complete the work.

Thus Verdi composed the Mass under the impulse of strong emotion, and when this work is performed, these emotions should be felt.

For the most part, the symphony and chorale's performance captured the essence of the work. On several occasions, however, I had the feeling the work was running away from the director, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt. Some conflict seemed to exist between the director and the chorale, soloists and, to a lesser degree, the musicians, as to the pacing of the performance.

Augmented with voices from First Presbyterian Church in Midland and First United Methodist Church in Odessa (20 to 25 in all), the 130-voice chorale sang expressively, shifting character with ease.

The four guest soloists, soprano Marjo Carroll, mezzo-soprano Lester Senter, tenor Laurence Paxton and bass-baritone William Rhodes, were all competent soloists. However, their harmonizing varied from complimenting one another to competing against each other. None had a strong stage presence.

Paxton had a strong tenor voice, but his vocal delivery was undisciplined. Rhodes also had an effective voice, but it didn't project well.

Miss Carroll and Miss Senter both had strong voices which carried well. Even so, their vocal styles often clashed when they sang together.

The symphony completed the onstage ensemble. In addition, the concert featured four offstage trumpets.

The real problem Tuesday was the poor acoustics at Lee High. Had this been performed in a proper hall, it would have made a tremendous difference.

It was a shame because the time, energy and effort that went into staging this piece certainly merits a proper house in which to perform it. It seems past time for Midland to have a performing arts auditorium.

The chorale's director, Dr. Stanley Engebretson, who listened from the balcony and the wings, received well deserved applause at the performance's conclusion.

'Love You Make' recycles Beatles trivia

By ROBERT HILBURN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — "It took her breath away, catching them like that."

Does that teasing, opening line come from a new Stephen King horror story or, perhaps, Judith Krantz's latest sudsy, sexual saga?

No, friends.

It's how Peter Brown and Steven Gaines begin "The Love You Make," their best-selling biography of — a little drum roll would be appropriate here — the Beatles.

In a breathless introduction, Gaines, who also wrote an Alice Cooper biography, dismisses earlier books on the Beatles as incomplete because the authors were unable to break through a "silence code" adopted by the Fab Four and those around them.

Gaines boasts that he became privy to the "real" story through Brown, who observed the Beatles both as an assistant to former Beatles manager Brian Epstein and as chief operating officer of the group's Apple Corp. business operation.

In researching the book (McGraw-Hill: $14.95), Gaines said Brown led him through a three-year odyssey, "unlocking doors, making introductions, arranging and assisting in interviews, and making available to me personal files...never before seen by the public."

Unfortunately, there is so little of importance that is added to our understanding of the Beatles in "The Love You Make" that most of the facts could have been pulled together in the neighborhood library.

Actor rides onto 'CHiPs' set from career as model

By GUS STEVENS
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Apparently because Tom Reilly's capable of riding a bike, the producers of "CHiPs" last year chose him to be the new partner for Erik Estrada. It's difficult to imagine any other reason for the selection of Reilly, except that he happened to be the most handsome man on campus.

In the fall Reilly, a man of little acting experience, was moved on camera to replace Larry Wilcox, a sensitive young man who found God and, along the way, managed to lose Estrada. Wilcox feels well out of it since the NBC "CHiPs" series, which has completed its sixth season, made a star out of Estrada, leaving Wilcox with nothing to show for his efforts but money in his pocket and calluses on his seat.

Reilly, 23, is a handsome devil. He showed up for an interview wearing a vanilla suit, pink shirt, brown tie. He has blond hair, blue eyes, a 180-pound, 6-foot-2 chassis and enough white teeth to light a railroad station.

Did it take more than this merchandise to qualify Reilly to play Officer Bobby Nelson? Let's look at the record.

Reilly became a top fashion model six months after a scout discovered him at Montclair (N.J.) State College. Reilly had been a student there, more or less.

Reilly came to school on a football scholarship. He was a tight end and, as he explains it, he had "no major, no degree" and he "didn't get close to graduation." He just caught the old football for Montclair.

Reilly began hunting for an acting career while he still was posing in navy blazers and rep ties. In December 1980 he met with the three major commercial TV networks. NBC offered him a development contract, which permitted him to be kept on the network's string while he continued to learn how to act.

This year Reilly, gunning his career engine, came to California to stay. Last spring he was a guest in an episode of "CHiPs" which focused on a police unit of martial-arts specialists. He then appeared in the ABC movie "Paper Dolls."

"The Dukes of Hazzard," the property of CBS, which was shopping for two new cast members, and "CHiPs" became interested in signing Reilly at the same time.

"It was the 'Dukes' or 'Chips,' back and forth," Reilly said, through his white-lightning smile. "I felt nervous."

By MATT MYGATT

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Humor is sanity for Bill Mauldin — anything from using skunk musk as a practical joke to his 8,000 cartoons that have triggered grins and grimaces.

"I tend to look at things really as a comedy," he said. "After all, if you know what to laugh at — if you know what is funny — that means you have perspective.

"If you have perspective, that means you're eminently sane."

Mauldin, 61, has been drawing cartoons for newspapers — "probably the only thing I was any good at" — since he was a teen-ager.

His opinions vary. On Interior Secretary James Watt: "I dislike him intensley." On President Reagan: "I have a fairly benign view of him." On Dwight Eisenhower: "I liked him as a general. I didn't think much of him as a president." On Mauldin: "I have my own code of morals. A smattering of this and a smattering of that."

Mauldin said he doesn't think his views of the world are warped. "I think if you look at it in a humorous way, you tend to cut through all the nonsense and you get to the basics," he said.

MAULDIN LOVES jokes — "dirty and otherwise." He likes to fly airplanes and is a born tinkerer. He loves gadgets and enjoys working with his hands.

But he has come down with arthritis in his drawing hand and has cut back his editorial cartoon drawings from five days a week to three.

Mauldin said he doesn't think his arthritis is getting that much worse — he's been living with it for 15 years.

"So if my hands get crippled, I'll have to quit. If they don't, I won't. If my brain gets crippled, I hope I'll be smart enough to realize it," he said.

Mauldin said he receives lots of feedback on his cartoons, but doesn't want to see it "because usually when people write in they have very reasonable complaints and I tend to agree with them. They confuse my mind."

Mauldin, born in Mountain Park, N.M., said he started drawing early in life. "I wasn't a very good student in school. I passed from year to year, but mainly I was interested in drawing."

He drew cartoons for school newspapers before he entered the U.S. Army in 1940.

Bill Mauldin

MAULDIN DREW cartoons for the newspaper of the 45th Infantry Division — a National Guard unit that came from New Mexico, Oklahoma, Colorado and Arizona.

"I was in the infantry, but I did the cartoons pretty much on my own time" while stationed at Fort Sill, Okla., he said.

Mauldin's cartoons started receiving widespread use when he was shipped overseas to North Africa, Sicily, Italy, France and Germany.

While in Italy in 1944, he was transferred to the staff of the "Stars and Stripes."

It was during World War II that his Army cartoon characters Joe and Willie came to life.

There were many stories on who Joe and Willie were supposed to resemble, but Mauldin said "they were themselves. They just sort of developed, as characters do. When I started drawing those characters I was 18 years old...They were composites of the people I had known."

His favorite cartoon was a panel first drawn for the division newspaper showing an old cavalry sergeant with a broken-wheeled Jeep putting a bullet through the radiator while covering his eyes with his hand.

"It took a long time for the cartoon to catch on," Mauldin said. "Nobody thought it was very funny and nobody understood what I was trying to say.

"BUT THE CARTOON had everything in it I think a cartoon should have — it had pathos, it had humor and it had a little history. It also had a message without words," he said.

"I like to write, but in a cartoon I like to do it without words. The fewer words the better," Mauldin said.

"If I have a criticism of today's general run of political cartooning in this country it's what I call the 'comic valentine school' — they're full of words," he said. "My God, those guys might as well just sit down at a typewriter. They don't make enough effort to make the picture tell the story."

Good draftsmanship influenced Mauldin's cartoons.

"The comic strips I admired the most were well-drawn, like...Terry and the Pirates and Prince Valiant — stuff like that," he said.

"Probably a profound influence would have been one called "Out Our Way" by J.R. Williams, who was a Westerner himself. He did a lot of cowboy stuff, a lot of machine shop stuff," Mauldin said.

He said the cartoons he drew while in the military "had a safety valve effect."

"I WAS voicing gripes," he said. "If I had one consistent theme of what I was doing it was our Army was too damn Prussian.

"You can't operate on the theory that all officers are gentlemen by acts of Congress and that all enlisted men are peasants and stupid...I think the military brass sensed that I wasn't trying to sink them. I was only trying to reform them."

The war also produced the person that was toughest for Mauldin to caricature — Eisenhower.

"Eisenhower was very hard. One of the reasons probably is I liked him as a general. I think I really liked him mostly because he protected our a--s when we got into trouble on the 'Stars and Stripes.'"

Mauldin also had trouble drawing John F. Kennedy, partly because of his ambivalent feelings toward him.

"I didn't think he was a very good president," he said. "I supported him because I certainly wasn't going to support Nixon. But I thought Kennedy was just beginning to learn his trade when he was assassinated. I would have supported him again."

He said his drawings of Kennedy began to improve, but he continued to be very critical of him.

"MOST OF THE stuff I did was critical because I think if you support a man for the presidency and then you're in the business of commentary, I think you ought to keep yourself honest," Mauldin said.

Mauldin said he does not think Reagan has been a disaster as president, but "I think some of the things that have happened under him have been disasters."

He said he agreed with Reagan's policy of deterrence with the Soviets, but disagreed with his environmental plans and his backing of Watt. He also said Reagan has received too much of the blame for the nation's economic woes.

"It's awfully easy to blame the guy who's sitting up there," Mauldin said. "It behooves us to stop looking for a scapegoat for what's wrong and start looking at ourselves."

Mauldin's motivation for his cartoons began with a routine when he was a teen-ager.

"When I was in art school in Chicago for a year at the age of 17 I knew I only had a year and knew I had to make something out of myself within a year," he said.

"SO EVERY NIGHT I would force myself to do 10 ideas...and I'd send them out to magazines the next day. I never sold any of them to speak of, but I must have collected thousands of rejection slips.

"It was good discipline. I would be up until three in the morning sometimes. Only a 17-year-old could do that, living off of cigarettes and milk.

"Ever since then, before I go to bed at night, I jot down half a dozen or so ideas. They just come to me in the night before I go to sleep. I just keep a pad by the bed, and they're never any good. I know now why I never sold any.

"Apparently something starts grinding in your head as a result so that when I wake up in the morning I either have an idea or get one very soon," Mauldin said.

Mauldin has published 14 books, and has won myriad prizes, including two Pulitzers.

One Pulitzer was awarded for a cartoon he did during World War II, and the other was for a cartoon about Boris Pasternak, the Russian author.

HOWEVER, Mauldin said the Pulitzer committees usually don't select the artist's best cartoon.

"I think they usually end up picking a pretty lousy cartoon. You take a look down through the years at the cartoons they have picked and the various cartoonists and they always seem to pick one of his worst examples," he said.

Orioles take Texas in 14th

ARLINGTON, (AP) — Len Sakata's bases-loaded double in the top of the 11th inning broke a 10-10 tie and the Baltimore Orioles went on to a 14-11 victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday night.

Baltimore loaded the bases with nobody out in the 11th against Dave Tobik, 0-1, on a single by Eddie Murray, a double by Gary Roenicke and an intentional walk to Jim Dwyer. Sakata's double to the wall in left-center made it 12-10 and Rick Dempsey followed with a two-run single. Billy Sample had an RBI single for the Rangers in the bottom of the 11th.

Tippy Martinez, 1-1, got the win and Tim Stoddard the save. Baltimore had 19 hits and Texas a team-record 22, five by Jim Sundberg.

Texas took a 5-0 lead in the second inning on Bucky Dent's two-run single and Sample's three-run homer. Baltimore tied it in the third two runs scoring on a triple by Cal Ripken Jr. and one on John Lowenstein's fifth homer.

The Orioles went in front 9-5 in the fourth with Dan Ford and Murray hitting two-run doubles, and they got another run in the fifth on Leo Hernandez' RBI single.

Reds return young pitcher to minors

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds sent pitcher Greg Harris back to their minor league system Saturday, just five days after recalling him.

Harris was sent down to the Class AAA Indianapolis team following the Reds' 8-7 loss to the San Francisco Giants.

Black's win in 400 averts Basin shutout

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

AUSTIN—A good memory by Rankin's Dennis Black was the only thing that kept the Permian Basin from walking away from Memorial Stadium and the state track meet Saturday with an empty pan of gold.

Black, who got confused and stopped running 10 yards short of the finish line last year here, won his second state 400-meter championship to erase a year of thinking about last year's snafu.

"I was watching the tape all the way as I was coming in this time and it feels really good to put last year behind me," said Black after recording a 49.0. "Last year a post before the finish confused me and I thought I had the race won. I won state the 400 as a sophomore, but had to live with last year for a long time."

IT WAS NOT a good day, however, for the rest of the Permian Basin performers. Midland Lee scored six points with a fourth in the high hurdles from Damon Polk and a sixth in the 1600 relay. Midland High's Chuck St. Germain was fifth in the 800. Odessa Permian, who was given a shot at winning a state team crown with three individuals and two relays, scored only 10 points, most of which came on a fourth place finish in the 1600 relay.

In fact, the best 4-5A performance came from Abilene High's lone entry Russell Mangum with a third place 4:15.6, a career best by 4.2 seconds, in the 1600 meters. Permian's 3:11.3 in the 1600 relay was also a team best, but Dallas Roosevelt turned in a 3:09.05 for the day's only new state record.

Lee's Carleton Johnson moved the Rebels into third place briefly on the third leg of the 1600 relay, but Lee ended with a 3:17.8, far below its best mark set last week of 3:14.5.

Polk's 14.1 in the high hurdles was also a disappointment, since he has been turning in times of below 13.8 this year.

"I had a horrible start, and the guy in lane three (San Antonio Roosevelt's Carlos Brown) kept hitting me with his arms. I guess this just wasn't the day for me," said Polk.

ST. GERMAIN did a turn a career best of 1:55.0 in the 800, but it was good for only fifth as Ariel Galvan of McAllen Memorial won with a 1:51.2.

"Everyone was really moving because I felt strong and couldn't stay with the leaders on the first lap," said St. Germain, who moved up from last place to fifth on the last lap.

St. Germain did beat Permian's Bruce Bennett, ending the season with a 3-2 edge over his 4-5A rival. "I guess I did beat Bennett, but I've never been in a race this fast."

For the second day in a row, disaster struck Greenwood's Stuart Burleson in Class A. Last year Burleson was a two-sport state champion in tennis and the high jump. Friday Burleson lost his chance at repeating in tennis with a three set loss to Swint Friday of Neuces Canyon. Saturday Burleson lost his high jump crown to Anton's Ronny Cox, who Burleson beat in Region I competition.

Burleson was second with a 6-8, far short of last year's 7-0, while Cox had a 6-10. Burleson also finished fourth in the high hurdles with a 14.9.

"I'm really disappointed with the loss in the high jump. I just haven't been able to jump very well since a knee operation this year," said Burleson, who is headed for Kansas University. "I wasn't too disappointed in tennis, because Friday has been invited to play on the U.S. Junior Davis Cup team. He's very good."

STANTON'S TIMMY Bryant, who was second in his district meet, was a surprising third in the pole vault with a career best of 13-0 in Class AA.

Reagan County's Gregg Fisher failed to place in the high hurdles, but was fourth in the intermediates with a 39.0.

Bremond won the Class A title with 60 points while Woodsboro won the 2A title with 52. Dallas Roosevelt won 5A with 50 points. In addition to Roosevelt's state record, Amarillo Tascosa's John Patterson recorded the only other 5A conference record with a 46.0 in the 400.

Permian almost came up empty until the 1600 relay. The Panthers sprint relay team placed sixth, but Bennett did not place in the 800, Dennis Alexander was disqualified for running out of his lane in the 400 and Andy Ensch did not place in the 200.

Odessa High's Thomas Taylor did not place in the high jump after spraining an ankle in the warmup. He went out at 6-6 and 6-10 won the event, a height that Taylor has cleared in his last three outings.

5 share 1st in wet Colonial

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bobby Wadkins found some small consolation in the no-birdie, 4-over-par 74 he contrived in difficult conditions Saturday.

"It's one of the few times you can shoot a 74 and still be tied for the lead," Wadkins said after the long day's play in the third round of the $400,000 Colonial National Invitation Tournament.

The round lasted almost six hours, including a lengthy delay while lightning flashed and heavy rain drenched the Colonial Country Club course.

"I'm just glad to be finished. It was a long, tough day," Wadkins said of the conditions that ranged from heat to cold, from dead calm to gusty wind, from dry to wet. As an illustration of the difference in the playing conditions, Wadkins said he hit a 7-iron on the par-3 16th Friday, and was short of the green with a 2-iron on Saturday.

"I was sweating when we started play, and you could see your breath on there on the 16th hole," Wadkins said.

Wadkins, younger brother of Lanny Wadkins, a two-time winner this season, was the leader alone entering the day's play. Even with a 4-over-par effort, he managed to retain a share of the top spot at 206, four strokes under par.

Going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize, he was tied for the lead with Jim Colbert, former Colonial winner Fuzzy Zoeller, Mike Reid and Peter Jacobsen.

"Kind of bunched up, isn't it?" Colbert said. "We ought to have us a real golf tournament tomorrow."

Colbert, a 42-year-old veteran who scored the last of his eight tour victories three years ago, birdied his last two holes for a round of par 70.

"I was two over par after nine holes, but I'd made up ground on the leader. Patience is a big thing on a day like today. I just thought, don't panic and try to scratch out a couple of birdies and you'll be right there," he said.

Jacobsen closed up with a 67 in the fickle, shifting, changing conditions. Zoeller, winner of the Heritage Classic earlier this season, shot 68. Reid matched par 70 on the course that was dubbed "Hogan's Alley" after the legendary Ben Hogan won this old event for the fifth time.

Play was held up for 1 hour and 12 minutes by lightning and heavy rains, which preceeded a cold front that dropped the temperature from 80 degrees to 59 in a matter of minutes.

"We were in a sauna bath on the fourth green and I was putting my windbreaker on in the very next fairway," Reid said.

The leaders played most of the round in a misty, drizzling rain, with shifting winds.

Bruce Lietzke, John Mahaffey, Gary Hallberg and Thomas Gray were at 208, two shots back. Mahaffey had a 69, Gray 71, Lietzke 72 and Hallberg 75.

Bobby Clampett, in the first group off the tee, played his round in calm, mild conditions before the bad weather hit. He romped around the course in 65, a score that lifted him from 13 shots off the pace to a position only four strokes back at 210.

Razorbacks hog down track title

FORT WORTH (AP) - Frank O'Mara and Stanley Redwine produced clutch efforts to carry the Arkansas Razorbacks to their second consecutive Southwest Conference Outdoor Track and Field title Saturday night and the Carol Lewis-led Houston Cougars earned the women's championship.

The victory gave Arkansas the SWC track triple, also for the second straight year. The Hogs won the indoor and cross-country titles earlier in the season.

O'Mara just missed the meet record of 3:42.53 in the 1500 meter run. O'Mara posted a 3:42.81 as Arkansas picked up 15 points in the event. Paul Donovon was fourth and Jim Pile was sixth.

Redwine, the NCAA Indoor 880 yard champion, took the 800 meter run in 1:50.15 and teammate Ed Williams was second in 1:50.55.

Lewis, disappointed by the Cougars' disqualification for running out of their lane in the 400 meter relay, won the 100 meter hurdles in 13.87.

Texas' Einar Vihjalmsson established a new SWC standard in the javelin, hurling the spear 275-feet, 4-inches. The old meet mark of 261-8 was set by Frank Lyons of Texas in 1979.

Texas Christian's 400-meter relay time of 39.42 was the third best mark recorded by an SWC team. James Manness, who was on the anchor, said "I love it when I get the baton with a big lead like I had."

It was TCU's first relay win since the 1975 team won the SWC 440 relay title.

Rod Richardson of Texas A&M won the 100 meter in a swift 10.21 to edge Vince Courville of Rice who was 10.29

Cubs, Captains split doubleheader

SHREVEPORT, La. — The Midland Cubs remained two games below the .500 mark Saturday night when they split a Texas League doubleheader here with the Shreveport Captains.

Captains' pitcher Bob Gendron did a number on the Cubs in the first game, allowing eight hits enroute to a 4-2 victory, his third straight of the season.

In the nightcap, Midland pitcher Neil Bryant went six innings and Ray Soff one to team up for an 8-1 win.

Gendron improved his record to 4-1 by receiving solo home run help from Jessie Reid, his second of the year, in the second inning and Bryan Snyder's fourth homer of the year in the fifth, a two-run shot which provided the winning run.

Midland scored its only two runs in the fourth inning.

Randy LaVigne and Trey Brooks came up with back-to-back singles and advanced on A.J. Hill's sacrifice bunt. Mike Anicich's sacrifice fly to left field brought LaVigne home and Bruce Chaney's single scored Brooks.

Midland pitcher Ron Richardson suffered the defeat, dropping his record to 1-1.

IN THE nightcap, Bryant picked up his first victory of the season, giving up four singles and one run. Soff was called in to relieve in the seventh and put down the side to insure the victory.

Bill Hatcher opened the Cubs scoring in the first inning when he walked, stole second base and moved to third on Rick Baker's sacrifice bunt.

Trey Brooks followed with a single and Jim Walsh hit a two-out double brought Brooks home for a 2-0 lead.

The doubleheader split brings Shreveport's record to 21-15 on the year while Midland's rests at 17-19.

THE CUBS and Captains will have today off and will resume their five-game series Monday night at 7:30.

Carlos Gil, 3-2, is scheduled to start for Midland while Dave Wilhelmi, the pitcher who threw a perfect game at Arkansas last week, will go for the Captains. Wilhelmi's perfect game is his only victory in three decisions.

The series, even at 1-1, will continue through Wednesday night. On Friday, the Cubs begin a five-game home stand against Tulsa and follow with five more against Shreveport.

Tigers outlast KC in slugfest

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Larry Herndon had four hits and Lou Whitaker three and Alan Trammell drove in three runs Saturday night to offset four home runs by the Kansas City Royals — two by Frank White — and and lead the Detroit Tigers to an 11-10 victory.

Kansas City built a 7-0 lead after two innings but the Tigers scored five runs in the third and went ahead to stay with three in the sixth.

White drove in five runs for Kansas City with his second and third homers. Willie Wilson hit his 11th career inside-the-park homer and George Brett slammed his ninth home run, following a 27-minute rain delay in the sixth. Brett also had two of the three Royals' errors.

Detroit's Chet Lemon was hit by pitches in the fifth and sixth innings. In the sixth, the ball bounced off his leg and struck catcher Don Slaught in the hand, opening a gash and putting him out of the game.

The loser was Don Hood, 0-1, the third Kansas City pitcher. Dave Rozema, 1-0, was the winner in relief.

Herndon singled leading off the Tigers' sixth and Brett's throwing error on Glenn Wilson's grounder sent him to third. Herndon scored on a single by John Wockenfuss, then Lemon was hit to load the bases and Trammell's single scored Wilson and Wockenfuss to give the Tigers an 11-9 lead.

Even triple play can't stop Horns

AUSTIN (AP) — Mike Capel held Arkansas to five hits and Texas, overcoming an Arkansas triple play, shelled five Razorback hurlers in a 9-2 Longhorn victory Saturday night at the Southwest Conference baseball tournament.

Arkansas and Houston, which defeated Rice 4-2 in 13 innings Saturday, will play Sunday with the winner meeting the Longhorns Sunday night.

A victory would give Texas its fifth SWC baseball tournament championship. If Texas should lose, a second game would be played Monday for the tournament title.

Texas chipped away at Arkansas, scoring in six of eight at-bats. Freshman Doug Hodo knocked in three runs, David Denny had a two-run double and Jose Tolentino lashed his second home run in two tournament games for Texas.

Both of Arkansas' runs came on homers as Norm Roberts hit one in the fourth and pinch-hitter Tony Laird drilled one in the ninth.

Tim Deitz, the Arkansas starter, lasted until the fourth and was charged with the loss. He is 6-3.

Capel struck out seven in winning his 10th straight game for a 10-1 season record.

The triple play — the first in the seven-year history of the tournament — came on Lester Lancaster's fourth pitch after he relieved Deitz with Texas runners at first and second. Steve Labay lined to Arkansas' second baseman Brett Harrison, who made a diving catch. Harrison threw to second to get one Texas runner and the relay to first was in time for the triple play.

The 13-inning Houston victory over Rice was the second-longest game in the tournament. Texas won a 20-inning contest over Rice in 1981.

Rayner Noble, player of the year in the SWC, pitched a six-hitter and catcher Riley Epps drove a run-scoring single into center field for the winning run.

Noble struck out nine as Rice scored its only two runs in the fourth inning without a hit. Houston right-fielder Billy Savarino muffed Bryan Foxx's fly ball for a three-base error, and the miscue allowed Scott Johnson, who had walked, to score. Mike Fox bunted Foxx home.

Houston had scored two runs in the top of the fourth on a double by Steve Seberger and singles by Corky Swindell and Dan Larson.

Neither team scored again until the 13th when, with one out, Seberger walked and Swindell singled. After Rice right-fielder Jay Bluthardt made a diving catch of Larson's fly ball for the second out, Epps — who was 0-9 in the tournament — hit a ground single up the middle. Seberger scored the winning run, and Swindell dove across the plate after Rice center-fielder Mark Machalec booted the ball for an error.

Epps also had a great throw in the eleventh to get Clinton Welch, who was trying to steal third with two Rice runners on and none out.

David Hinnrichs, 10-4, gave up 13 hits and was the loser. Noble is now 12-3.

Uncertainty clouds television grid scene

KINGS MILLS, Ohio (AP) — The president of CBS sports told Ohio broadcasters Saturday there's considerable uncertainty over plans for network coverage of NCAA football as a result of a court ruling in Denver.

A federal appeals court has upheld a district judge's finding that the NCAA's pacts with ABC-TV, CBS-TV and Turner Broadcasting Systems, Inc., constitued an illegal restraint of trade.

But there was confusion as to whether the ruling meant the NCAA's existing constracts are void.

Neal Pilson told the Ohio Associated Press Broadcasters meeting at Kings Island that CBS and ABC spend a total of $260 million on college football coverage.

Pilson said that as a result of the case he could "see a set of circumstances where network television will no longer broadcast college football." But he said he could "also envision a set of facts under which there will be no change at all."

He said CBS televises 50 to 60 college football games a year in 14 time slots.

Pilson predicts the parties to the suit will request a rehearing or will appeal the decision.

Pilson also debunked criticism of the role of network television in college athletics. He said that $540 million will be paid between 1982 and 1986 for rights to broadcast college athletic events.

"Some critics seem to think there's something un-American about asking a college to move the date or time of an event," he said. But he said the networks and the colleges are involved in a business relationship and the colleges are free to ignore the requests of the network if they see fit.

Cowboys hire Company Cop

DALLAS (AP) — Larry Wansley, a veteran FBI agent hired by the Dallas Cowboys, says his untitled job is not that of "company cop."

But Wansley, who began his new job Tuesday, concedes that dealing with drug problems will be an "important part" of his duties with the club.

He told the Dallas Times Herald he has "made it clear to those (team members) that I've talked to that I'm not their babysitter ... and I'm not there to snoop over their shoulders or that type of thing.

"If I can do anything to prevent someone from falling into a situation that would be detrimental to them or to the organization, I will."

Wansley, known as "Mandrake" for his agility on undercover assignments, officially retired Monday after 10 years with the FBI. His new job carries no specific title and its description has been left deliberately vague.

Cowboys president Tex Schramm said the former agent would help the club deal with such problems as gambling and drugs. Schramm said he and the coaches "are just not sophisticated in the world of drugs, gambling and all those aspects."

"But it has become such a big part of everyday

Braves nip Astros, 4-3

From wire reports

HOUSTON — Dale Murphy hit a two-out homer in the 10th to give the Braves a 4-3 win over Houston and snap a three game Atlanta losing streak. It was his 11th homer of the season.

Terry Forster, 1-0, pitched the final two innings. Rookie Bill Dawley, 2-1, was tagged for the homer.

Houston tied it 3-3 in the eighth inning when Jose Cruz beat out an infield single, stole second and came around on Alan Ashby's two-out bloop double to left.

Jerry Royster's two-run single highlighted Atlanta's three-run first inning. A walk to Rafael Ramirez and singles by Terry Harper and Murphy accounted for the first run before Glenn Hubbard got an infield hit and Royster singled.

Houston got one run in the bottom of the first when Omar Moreno beat out a bunt, stole second, went to third on Terry Puhl's single and scored on Dickie Thon's grounder. The Astros scored again in the seventh on a walk to Ashby and singles by Bill Doran and Moreno.

Mets 6, Pirates 2

PITTSBURGH — George Foster hit a three-run homer as Neil Allen won his first start in more than four years as the New York Mets beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-2 Saturday night.

Allen, who had been struggling with a 5.68 earned-run average in 11 relief appearances, made his first start since May 9, 1979, and worked five innings, giving up five hits, before yielding to Jesse Orosco.

It was the first victory ever in five major league starts for Allen, who had made 208 consecutive relief appearances. Orosco held the Pirates hitless over the final four innings for his second save.

Giants 8, Reds 7

CINCINNATI — Darrell Evans extended his hitting streak to 13 games with two homers as San Francisco beat Cincinnati, 8-7, Saturday night.

Evans hit a two-run shot in the third and then added a solo homer, his ninth, in the eighth while Chile Davis hit a bases-loaded single came in a three-run fourth inning.

The victory was San Francisco's 11th in 14 games. The Reds have lost eight of their last 10 games. Bill Laskey, 4-4, went six innings for his fourth consecutive victory and Greg Minton earned his fourth save.

Dodgers 4, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO — Mike Sciosia and Greg Brock homered as Los Angeles beat San Diego, 4-1, on the five hit pitching of Jerry Ruess. It was the Dodgers' eighth win in 10 games.

Reuss, 5-1, ran his lifetime record against the Padres to 17-5.

San Diego's Eric Show, 4-2, gave up only five hits in seven innings, but two of them came in the second when Ron Roenicke singled and Scioscia belted his first home run of the season to give the Dodgers a 2-0 lead.

The Dodgers' final run came in the eighth off Floyd Chiffer. Steve Sax extended his hitting streak to 10 games with a leadoff single, was balked to second, moved to third on a grounder and scored when Pedro Guerrero's grounder to short skipped off Mario Ramirez's glove for an error.

Cards 3, Expos 2

ST. LOUIS — Tommy Herr, given a second chance when Montreal first baseman Al Oliver slipped going after a pop foul that would have ended the inning, ripped a tie-breaking bases-loaded single with two out in the 11th Saturday to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 3-2 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Herr's hit came off Montreal relief ace Jeff Reardon, 1-1, and made a winner of St. Louis star Bruce Sutter, 4-1, who entered in the 10th.

It was St. Louis' fourth straight victory, including three in a row over Montreal.

Cubs rained out

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs and Philadelphia Phillies were rained out after a 2 hour, 15 minute wait Saturday. It was not immediately rescheduled.

Brunansky delivers in clutch for Twins

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Tom Brunansky delivered a two-out, bases-loaded single in the eighth inning to drive in two runs, breaking a scoreless tie and giving the Minnesota Twins a 2-1 victory over the California Angels Saturday night.

Brewers 8, Red Sox 7

MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee's Ben Ogilvie drove in five runs with a club-record-tying three home runs and Charlie Moore singled home the winning run to cap a two-run 10th inning, rallying the Brewers to an 8-7 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday night.

Boston went ahead 7-6 in the top of the 10th against rookie Bob Gibson, 1-0, on Jerry Remy's RBI grounder, but Ted Simmons singled with one out in the bottom of the 10th against Mark Clear, 1-2. Clear then walked Gorman Thomas, Oglivie and Don Money in succession to force in the tying run. Luis Aponte relieved Clear and Moore lined a 1-0 pitch into left-center field.

Mariners 4, A's 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Henderson's three-run homer in the fourth and the four-hit pitching of Matt Young and Bill Caudill gave Seattle a 4-1

Olajuwon skips pros

HOUSTON (AP) — Akeem Olajuwon, the 7-foot center who led Phi Slama Jamma into the NCAA basketball final, said Saturday he'll return to the University of Houston rather than turn pro and forgo his junior year.

Olajuwon, who had been wavering all week, announced his decision just hours before the National Basketball Association's midnight Saturday deadline for underclassmen to notify the league of their intention to leave college.

"I'm definitely going to stay in school," he said in a CBS interview during halftime of the Philadelphia 76ers-Milwaukee Bucks NBA playoff game.

He said he had conferred with his family in Lagos, Nigeria, before making his decision "and they want me to stay in school, so I decided to stay in school."

Lewis cracks 10-seconds

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — Carl Lewis cracked the 10-second barrier in the 100-meter dash Saturday, winning in 9.96 at the S&W Modesto Invitational to become the second fastest man in history in the event.

Jim Hines, who set the world mark of 9.95 at the 1968 Olympics, watched Lewis win on the Modesto Junior College track. In congratulating him later, he said, "I don't know how much longer I'll hold the record. This man is knocking on the door."

The wind Saturday was slightly under the allowable limit of 2.00 meters per second when the men's 100 was run.

A half-hour earlier, Evelyn Ashford, the American record holder in the women's 100, went under the listed world record when she sped to a 10.85 victory.

Cager dies following surgery

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Bruce Lee, a reserve forward on the University of Oklahoma basketball team, died Saturday of complications following a routine tonsillectomy, hospital officials said.

Lee, 21, was pronounced dead at 11:14 a.m., said Margaret Barrett, a nursing supervisor at Deaconess Hospital. The woman said Lee's cause of death has not been determined.

The Edmond native had been admitted to the hospital for a tonsillectomy and apparently developed complications just after the surgery was completed, Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs said.

Lee was a 6-foot-8, 220-pound forward who saw limited action for the Sooners last season when the team finished 24-9 and went to the second round of the NCAA playoffs.

Barton claims Bass prize

KINGSTON, Okla. (AP) — Norm Barton of Fayetteville, Ark., who was in fifth place after Friday's first round, won the top prize Saturday in the $28,000 Western Bass Lake Texoma National Bass Tournament. Barton finished with a two-day total of 32.73 pounds to win $12,000 in cash and merchandise.

Barton topped a field of 111 anglers from seven states. Runner-up was Eddie Bowden of Lafayetteville, La., with 25.27 pounds. Bowden had won the last two tournaments on the Western Bass Southwest Region circuit.

Hawks' Tessier honored

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Orval Tessier of the Chicago Black Hawks has been named National Hockey League Coach of the Year, the NHL Broadcasters Association announced Saturday night.

In his first season as an NHL coach, Tessier guided the Black Hawks to the Norris Division championship. Chicago showed a 32-point improvement over last season.

Washington's Bryan Murray was second in the balloting, the closest in history. Tessier collected 96 points to Murray's 87, while Boston's Gerry Cheevers was third with 85.

Tessier will be presented Sunday with the Jack Adams Trophy.

Old golf ball, old memories

With old baseball cards bringing a "modest fortune" and other memorabilia sports souvenirs bringing far more than their original value, even on today's inflated market place, there's no telling what an autographed golf ball by Gene Sarazen might bring.

C. Louis Chase of Midland has one and at the time he got it, the value was 80 cents. "That's what he gave me for caddying for him at the Milwaukee Country Club 55 years ago. He and Johnny Farrell were on an exhibition tour in 1928 and 80 cents was the standard caddy fee in those days. But he gave me the autographed ball, instead, and I was glad to get it."

The old, smaller Spaulding English ball, its cover design reviving long-forgotten memories, served as the key to another autographed ball from Sarazen when Chase, a Midland geologist who has lived in the Tall City for 45 years, was among the spectators at the recent Legends of Golf tournament at Austin's Onion Creek.

When Chase asked the locker room guards to ask Sarazen to come talk with him, Sarazen replied, "Well, I don't remember him. Heck, that was 55 years ago." But Chase, who has changed somewhat since he was 15, jogged his memory and got a modern day ball, autographed by the old master.

"He still wears knickers," says Chase, "And he still hits the ball a pretty good lick, even though he is 82 years old."

Knickers, yes, but the wooden shafts, no.

German blitzes Bank

SUFFOLK, Va. (AP) — Veteran Dot German, who has won only one tourney in nine years on the LPGA tour, fired an 8-under-par 64 Saturday for a 36-hole total of 137 and a 4-shot lead in the $150,000 United Virginia Bank Classic.

Five shots off the lead after Friday's opening round, Germain had two birdie runs of three holes in a row. The 35-year-old president of the LPGA Player Council finished her round over the 6,200-yard Sleepy Hole Golf Course with nine birdies and one bogey.

LeAnn Cassaday, who has made the cut in only one of eight tournaments this season, and Stephanie Farwig were tied for second at 141. Farwig shot a 68 Saturday and Cassaday, who said her best previous round this year was a 71, had a 69.

First-day leader Alice Miller, still looking for her first tour victory, soared to a 74 after her opening 68 and was tied for fourth at 142 with Debbie Massey, who added a 69 to her opening 73.

There was a four-way deadlock at 143, 1 under par going into Sunday's final round, among Betsy King and Leonore Muraoka, Myra Van Hoose and Mary Dwyer.

One of the pre-tournament favorites, Beth Daniel, shot her second 72 and was tied at 144 with Silvia Bertolaccini and Kathy Postlewait.

The only former winner of this tournament, Jan Stephenson — who holds the record with a 14-under-par 205 two years ago — shot a 77 for a 152 and barely made the cut, which was at 153.

Indy 500 trials rained out

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rain Saturday washed away the first day of time trials for the 67th Indianapolis 500, although the track did dry out long enough to get in some practice time and allow seven drivers to get in laps over 200 mph.

More rain was predicted for Sunday, when the second of four days of qualifications for the May 29 race is scheduled. But Chief Steward Tom Binford told crews not to worry about the forecast, which called for a chance of rain and thunderstorms through Sunday.

"Six or seven hours of good weather will qualify everybody who wants to qualify. Hopefully, we'll get a good day tomorrow (Sunday) or a good weekend next week," he said.

Fourteen drivers hit speeds of more than 200 mph during a week of practice in preparation for the four-lap, 10-mile qualification runs, and seven of them led the way late Saturday afternoon after the 2½-mile asphalt oval was opened to the open-wheel Indy-cars for an hour of practice.

Spurs backed up against wall

NBA

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — San Antonio center Artis Gilmore says it's a little awkward to play basketball when your back's up against the wall.

But unless the Spurs can even the count with the Los Angeles Lakers on this afternoon that is what they will have to do to stay alive in their Western Conference final series.

San Antonio trailed 2-1 in the best-of-seven series after dropping Friday night's game 113-100.

"That would have been a big win for us, but now our backs are up against it," Gilmore said. "We just have to win Sunday. We just cannot let them run the ball on us."

"When we play Sunday," said the Lakers' Norm Nixon, "the pressure is on the Spurs."

The defending NBA champion Lakers are trying to become the first team to win back-to-back championships since the Boston Celtics did it in 1968 and 1969.

"We came out to win, and not just tonight," Los Angeles coach Pat Riley promised after watching his team blow the Spurs out in Friday's third quarter.

Los Angeles scored 34 points to the Spurs' 19 in that decisive period and never looked back.

The Spurs might have to play today without the services of guard Johnny Moore, who scored in double figures and set NBA records for assists during most of this year's playoffs.

Spurs coach Stan Albeck kept insisting before Friday night's game that the home-court advantage meant little, that a rabid arena of fans can't win games. The words were truer than he could have wished.

Game 5 of the series switches back to California on Wednesday, where the teams split the two opening games, and Albeck and his Spurs don't want to travel to the West Coast down 3-1.

Los Angeles made it to the NBA finals last year by vanquishing the Spurs in four straight games in the conference finals.

Elia safe for a while

CHICAGO (AP) — Manager Lee Elia of the Chicago Cubs can breathe easier, his job as secure as that of any other major league baseball manager.

General Manager Dallas Green, who had said Elia's job was in jeopardy when the manager fired a tirade against Cub fans April 29, said Saturday "the players have responded and are willing to play for him."

A three-game winning streak and winning five of the last seven games is one reason that Elia has earned a bit of security.

But as recently as last Tuesday, Green, who made the West Coast road trip with the team, said in Los Angeles he would not decide Elia's fate until this weekend.

But after Saturday's rainout against Philadelphia, Green said he actually had "put an end to it the day I didn't fire him on the spot."

That was on the previous homestand when Elia, incensed at the booing of his players in general and of slump-ridden third baseman Ron Cey in particular, took off on the fans.

"He (Elia) apologized and did everything he could to stay and be a part of what we are doing," said Green. "The players responded by winning and when you put all those ingredients together, the situation has resolved itself in my mind.

"Once I was convinced the apology was sincere and the ball club was behind him, that was it," said Green.

Elia, informed of Green's remarks, said, "It's a load off my mind. Did the big guy (Green) say that? I'm not happy with what happened that day.

"But I'm happy with what happened today," said Elia. "In my heart, I've always felt the bottom line is to motivate the club and make the right moves on the field. If something greater than that costs my job, I'd feel bad about it.

"Thankfully, the guys have played well and I hope it continues," said Elia.

Best horse doesn't always win Derby

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The first Kentucky Derby I ever saw was in 1959, and it was won by Tomy Lee, who had to survive a foul claim by the jockey aboard the horse that finished second, Sword Dancer.

One reason I remember the race so vividly was that I was sitting in the Colonel Matt Winn Room with the editor of Sports Illustrated, Andre Laguerre, and just before the start of the race I glanced at the tote board and noted that a horse called Royal Orbit was 46-1.

"That's no 46-1 shot," I told Andre heatedly. "That horse finished a fast-closing second in the Santa Anita Derby!" I ran down to make a bet for both of us.

Royal Orbit didn't win the race. He finished a hard-charging fourth, but he broke from 17th post in a 17-horse field and ran into more hostile horses and riders in the last two minutes than General Custer.

That night, riding the redeye flight back to New York, we set down in Washington to drop a few congressmen and Cabinet officers off and I braced the jockey, Eddie Arcaro, who was aboard with the restaurateur, Toots Shor.

"The best horse in the race was the horse that finished fourth," said Arcaro, who had finished third with First Landing. "That's the trouble with this race. The horses that don't belong in it control it."

AND THAT was my introduction to the inequities of horse racing, Kentucky Derby style. Two weeks later, Royal Orbit, breaking from post position 6, won the Preakness by four galloping lengths over much the same field. This time, he only paid 6-1.

I think I had come to realize that the horse that won the Kentucky Derby was not necessarily the best horse of the year. But I hadn't come to understand he wasn't even the best horse in the race.

We all know the sad story of Native Dancer in 1953. He lost the only race he ever lost in his life in the Kentucky Derby. He was roughed up on the first turn by a 45-1 shot, forced wide in the upper turn by some 90-1 shots and lost to a 24-1 shot. By a head.

It wasn't post position that undid Native Dancer. It was racing luck. But the incidents were the same in one respect. Both were caused by the presence of what Arcaro called "horses that don't belong in it."

The trouble with the Kentucky Derby was that, any year you didn't have a stickout favorite (and some years when you did), horse owners came out of the woodwork to get in on the action.

To some it was good advertising. A New York restaurant guy won it in 1951 with a field horse in a 20-mount cavalry charge, and every bookie, actor, movie producer or divorce lawyer in the country wanted his silks at Louisville. You were buying a prime-time spot on network TV for a lousy couple grand entry fee. Who cared if you finished 14th? Who cared if you finished?

You had horses like Degenerate Jon. You had horses that pulled up lame out of the starting gate (Flip Sal). You had 177-1 shots. You had 21 horses one recent year, 19 another.

CHURCHILL DOWNS moved to screen the ribbon clerks out of this high stakes game. It got an unsatisfactory system — money won. Now, a horse campaigning at Santa Anita is going to win more money finishing third than a horse at Latonia – or maybe even Hialeah — is going to win by creaming the meeting.

Even so, they still make room for 20 horses. They still draw for post position by lot. It is a system that might put Man o' War in post position 20 and Degenerate Jon on the rail. It's not a Derby, it's a handicap, never mind that they all carry level weights.

Only two horses have ever won from the far outside, Clyde Van Dusen in 1929 and Gato Del Sol last year. A rule of thumb is that no horse breaking outside of 10 position will win.

In auto racing they position the field in the order of merit by qualifying speed. In horse racing, this is not possible. A horse in a training work will not floorboard it.

If money won will not assure a quality field, if timed qualifying runs a la Indy are not workable, what then?

Boxberger wins Paris Marathon

PARIS (AP) — Jacky Boxberger of France won the eighth Paris Marathon Saturday in 2 hours, 12 minutes, 35 seconds, beating Ryszard Marczak of Poland by a minute.

Ian Thompson of Britain finished third.

Boxberger, France's top distance hope for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, took the lead at the 15.5-mile mark of the 26-mile, 385-yard race, extended it at the the 22-mile point and coasted home.

He fell short of the race record — 2:11:44 set in 1981 by co-winners Ron Tabb of the United States and Dave Cannon of Britain.

More than 13,000 runners — including 3,000 foreigners — competed, up from last year's field of 10,000.

NBA

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Julius Erving scored 18 of his 26 points in the second half and Moses Malone added 25, leading Philadelphia to a 104-96 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks Saturday as the 76ers took a 3-0 lead in the Eastern Conference playoff finals.

Malone scored five of his points in the final two minutes, 50 seconds for the 76ers, who can sweep the best-of-seven series and advance to the NBA finals with a victory here Sunday afternoon.

Junior Bridgeman led the Bucks with 24 points.

Bridgeman connected from long range and rookie Paul Pressey scored on a bank jumper and a dunk as the Bucks opened a 78-71 lead with 10 minutes left to play as the 76ers went scoreless from the field for nearly 4½ minutes.

But Maurice Cheeks responded with seven straight points, including a layup to tie the game at 78-78. After three more ties, a jump shot by Erving and a dunk by Bobby Jones on a feed from Clint Richardson put the 76ers ahead 92-88 with 3:55 to play.

Brian Winters countered with a long jumper for the Bucks, but Malone converted a three-point play and scored from inside to help the 76ers mount a 97-90 advantage with 1:48 left.

Bridgeman scored after a steal by Sidney Moncrief, but two free throws by Erving on the 76ers' next possession made it 99-92 with 43 seconds left.

The Bucks' Alton Lister scored from inside and was fouled three seconds later. However, Lister missed the free throw, and two free throws apiece by Malone and Andrew Toney gave Philadelphia a 103-94 spread with 30 seconds left.

Islanders one away

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — It was just prior to the start of the Stanley Cup finals and Bob Bourne was wondering if there were two teams in the National Hockey League's championship series.

All Bourne had been hearing was how awesome the Edmonton Oilers were, how unstoppable, how unbeatable. He heard virtually no mention of his team, the three-time Cup champion Islanders.

After Saturday night's 5-1 decision over the Oilers, Bourne and his Islander mates might be wondering if there actually is just one team in the series: the Islanders, who lead the finals 3-0 and are on the threshold of their fourth consecutive Cup.

"I said before the series that winning this Cup would be as sweet a victory as winning the first one against Philadelphia, maybe even more," said Bourne, whose goal at 5:11 of the third period broke a 1-1 tie. When Ken Morrow scored 70 seconds later, the Islanders were headed to their third straight impressive victory over the Oilers. "Everyone I talked to in Canada, where I come from, said we had no chance.

"One TV guy told me there is no team in the world that can beat the Oilers. It amazes me that our team didn't get much credit for being there.

"They're a super team. They can skate, shoot, grind, play it physical. They're scary and I know I respect them a lot.

"But they've found out what it takes to get to the finals and I think they've gained respect for us, since we're in our fourth in a row."

The Oilers certainly should respect the Islander defense, which has thrown an almost impenetrable wall in front of the net. Goaltender Billy Smith has been magnificent, as have all his defensemen.

Especially Morrow, who joined the team in 1980 following a gold-medal performance on the United States Olympic team and has known nothing but championships since.

"I think maybe our defense has played this well before but not at a better time," he said. "We've never faced a team with so much scoring power. If ever we needed a big defensive series, it's this one."

The Islanders can become only the second National Hockey League franchise to win four straight titles here on Tuesday night. Only the Montreal Canadiens, who captured the Cup five consecutive years from 1956-60 and four in a row (1976-79) have achieved that feat.

The Oilers, meanwhile, face the unenviable task of needing to sweep the next four games against New York. Twice before — in 1942 when Toronto did it to Detroit in the finals and 1975 when the Islanders did it to Pittsburgh in the quarterfinals — has a team overcome a 0-3 deficit in the playoffs.

Bourne, the Islanders' swift left wing, has put a mediocre regular season behind him with a scintillating playoff performance. He leads the Islanders in postseason scoring with eight goals and 27 points.

If golf pros lose jobs, who's going to teach kids?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Traditionally, golf professionals at both public and private golf courses "own" their golf shops and run them as small businesses, often quite profitably — at least for the pros. But the winds of change may be blowing...

FORT WORTH (AP) — For golf enthusiasts, not to mention golf pros, the newspaper headline that morning was hardly the best way to start a day: "Fort Worth golf pros could lose jobs."

True, taxes and teachers' pay raises and maybe even horse race gambling would seem weightier issues.

But as John Haines, vice chairman of the Fort Worth Golfers Association, wondered aloud:

"We'd just like to know who's going to teach golf to the kids of Fort Worth?"

The story that spring morning said the Fort Worth Park and Recreation Advisory Board had overidden objections from some 60 golfing dissidents and approved a plan that would eliminate the use of city-paid golf professionals.

A NEW proposal, designed to reverse losses, called for full-time city employees to manage the city's five golf courses. The city would own and sell the beer and merchandise that traditionally supplement the salaries of golf professionals.

Whatever, pros at most of the city courses and representatives of local golf associations found little to like in the proposed scheme.

The pros were upset at the job threat on one hand and the loss of traditional revenue on the other. The golfers feared their courses were being surrendered unto the hands of fools and financiers.

"All the managers of the golf courses are going to be looking at is how many dollars are coming in," worried a golf instructor at Tarrant County Junior College.

"Are the greens not going to be clipped or the fairways fertilized if the new style of course manager is not meeting his quota?" fretted a man who grew up playing municipal golf courses.

"EVENTUALLY, they're going to have a bunch of clerks in golf shops punching buttons," sniffed Pecan Valley pro Rudy Belmares, who resigned to take a job near Austin.

He said golf pros and course superintendents do not work 40-hour weeks and, when it comes to that, "You can kiss the public course concept goodbye."

Across town, at Meadowbrook, pro Benny Passons decided it was time for a shot at the lucrative PGA tour and he, too, tendered his resignation.

Bart Haltom, the pro at Rockwood, chose to stay on for a 90-day trial period while the parks board assesses the managerial abilities of the pro-managers under the new system.

At the fourth major course, Z. Boaz, the manager-style program was introduced a year ago after the resident pro was convicted of felony theft and dismissed.

Since then, said city golf director Chuck Barnett, Z Boaz is the only city course to show a profit.

Before the pro-manager hassle became a full blown controversy, Mayor Bob Bolen reportedly negotiated a compromise requiring managers to qualify as Class A members of the Professional Golfers Association.

Assistant City Manager David Ivory said the idea is to find applicants who not only are PGA members who can give lessons but those who also are experienced in marketing, merchandising and operating golf facilities.

CITY MANAGER Robert Herchert, a non-golfer, says the new system not only will make the city golf program self-sufficient but provide funds for improving the various courses.

He insists also there will be no decline in service to the public.

"Anytime you make changes that affects peoples lives, it's going to be hard to accept," he said. "There was a great deal of concern expressed about the welfare of personnel and the golf courses.

"...I hate to see people upset, but I think this system is going to be beneficial to both the city and the golf program."

Ivory said the move to city-owned, manager-operated golf shops is a trend "that you'll see more and more of."

He indicated that economics dictate programs, by no means limited to golf, that reduce costs while improving service.

Belmares, the departed Pecan Valley pro, agreed that the trend is toward city-owned and even country club-owned golf shops but suggested that such a move is certainly detrimental to the financial wellbeing of the golf profession.

"I've got a son in college who is a business management major, and also a younger son, and I don't want them following in my footsteps," he said.

Johnny Pilcher, an assistant pro at Colonial Country Club, once sought the Meadowbrook job, but says he would not be interested under the new system.

"I FELT I could make close to $90,000 a year at Meadowbrook," he said. "I was making $30,000 at Woodhaven (Country Club) at the time, and I'd have been crazy not to have taken a run at it."

He called the pro-manager, city-owed golf shop "the biggest mistake" the city could possibly make.

"Retailers," he said, can not replace golf professionals.

"They simply are not going to have guys who can conduct the golf program properly," he predicted. "In fact, I don't think the city is going to promote golf any longer."

Indy shoots for stars

Seeks majors with Dome

By STEVE HERMAN

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Hoosier Dome will be ready for occupancy in 15 months, but there is no guarantee a major league football or baseball team will ever be a tenant.

Home of the Indianapolis 500 auto race, a successful minor league baseball team and several minor league football and hockey teams, the Indiana capital's only major-league franchise is the Indiana Pacers of the National Basketball Association.

Construction began almost a year ago on the Dome, a mammoth $80 million addition to the existing Indiana Convention Center and part of a project to rejuvenate sports and business in downtown Indianapolis.

"The next step is just being patient," says Indianapolis businessman Robert Welch, the prime force behind the city's drive for a National Football League franchise, either through expansion or relocation of an existing team.

The chief lobbyist for Indianapolis at the recent NFL owners' meeting in California was Mayor William H. Hudnut. And a baseball committee headed by businessman Danny Danielson has met informally with league owners at least twice.

There have been no commitments, but both groups say they are very encouraged.

The biggest selling point for either football or baseball is the new downtown dome, which is on schedule toward an August 1984 completion. The all-weather, multi-purpose stadium will seat 63,000 for football and 50,000 for baseball.

Criticized by some opponents as too big a risk the Hoosier Dome "will stand on its own two feet," says Hudnut.

"Since we started this project, we have booked over $200 million of big convention business all the way into the 1990s," says the mayor. "The facility is being built to increase our competitive position as far as convention business is concerned."

Revenue from a special 1 percent sales tax on Marion County restaurants to help finance construction of the stadium totaled $5.2 million for 1982, well above the $4.5 million estimate by the city's Capital Improvement Board. There also were donations from two private foundations totalling $30 million.

Holmes set for defense

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Larry Holmes, a tried-and-true champion, and Michael "Dynamite" Dokes, a brand-new champ who to some boxing followers still has to prove himself, will defend their shares of the world heavyweight crown Friday night.

Holmes will make his 15th defense of the World Boxing Council title against Tim Witherspoon, unbeaten but lightly campaigned, while Dokes will be making his first defense of the World Boxing Association title against Mike Weaver in a rematch ordered by the WBA.

Also on the card at a 20,000-seat outdoor facility at the Dunes Hotel and Country Club are a 12-round WBC heavyweight elimination bout between top-ranked Greg Page and second-ranked Renaldo Snipes, and a 15-round WBA junior heavyweight title defense by Ossie Ocasio against Randy Stevens.

The fights will be televised at closed-circuit locations and on a pay-per-view basis in the United States, and via satellite to other countries.

While the 33-year-old Holmes has never held the title of undisputed champion in his almost 5½-year reign, he is recognized generally as the premier heavyweight in the world.

Holmes stopped Weaver in the 12th round of a title defense June 22, 1979, nine months before Weaver won the WBA title by knocking out John Tate with 45 seconds left in a fight in which he needed a KO to win.

If he wins, he can still lose

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — It's a fight matching the World Boxing Council's super featherweight champion against the top-ranked contender, but it's not for the title.

It's a fight that will pay champion Bobby Chacon his biggest purse ever — $450,000 — but it's also a bout that Chacon very nearly didn't get a chance to fight until a last minute court order Friday paved the way.

And it's also a fight that could, ironically, strip Chacon of his WBC title even if he beats No. 1-ranked contender Cornelius Boza-Edwards today at Caesars Palace.

The WBC has threatened to strip Chacon of his title for going ahead with the bout because it recognizes a contract promoter Don King says he has with Chacon to fight Hector "Macho" Comacho next month. The organization has already withdrawn its sanction for the fight, but those involved with it claim boxing purists will recognize it is for the title anyway.

Unknown captures Masters

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — A little-known Maryland bowler, Mike Lastowski, won the 33rd American Bowling Congress Masters tournament Saturday, taking home the tour's largest winner's check of $40,500.

Lastowski, who never has finished higher than fifth in a PBA event, clinched the title match against the 20-year-old Weber by striking out in the 10th frame.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

There are many jobs around the home that require the use of concrete. You may be surprised to learn how many of these projects can be handled with rented equipment and some diligent effort. Start with the basics by first realizing that concrete is a mixture of ingredients. Portland cement, which is not a brand name, is the gray powder that is known as cement. Added to the mixture is a fine aggregate (sand), a coarse aggregate (gravel) and water. The entire mixture is known as concrete. To get the job done quickly, rent a portable electric mixer, a larger concrete mixer, a cement power trowel, wheelbarrow and other related equipment.

If you have a specialized type of project you are contemplating, we suggest a visit to BOB's RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. Come and talk to our experienced staff. Let us show you the tools and equipment the professionals use and that is available to rent. Renting is a logical and economical way to professionally accomplish those special tasks and save a lot of time and money at the same time. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HANDY HINT:

Real Estate today

BY DON HARVEY

Making Midland A Better Hometown

BEST TIME TO BUY IS "WORST TIME"

There's an old adage in the stock market that goes: "The smart money buys when everyone else is selling." That adage also applies to real estate.

When the real estate market is down, interest rates are high, mortgages are hard to get and property inventories are building, what you have is a "buyers market". Buyers in these times are the "smart buyers." Opportunities for purchases at prices that will never be heard of again avail themselves. That's the real bottom line - the purchase price of the property - not the interest rate.

The reason is simple. When interest rates drop - and they always do (just as they always will go up again, too), the pent-up demand for real estate unleashes and causes the prices to skyrocket.

Gloom and doom can be contageous, but a little optimism can make a lifetime of difference. ...Especially at bargain property prices you'll probably never see again. As a bonus, creative financing can usually drop the effective interest rate from 2 to 3 points in a buyers market.

Pam Postema umpired in the Texas League in 1981 and 1982 and now has moved up to the Pacific Coast League, one step away from the majors.

Pam moves up to PCL

Postema, 29, is the only female umpire in professional baseball. After paying her dues like any other ump — two years each in the Rookie League, Class A and Class AA — Postema is an old hand at a profession that's relatively new to women.

This year, she has moved up to the Class AAA Pacific Coast League. By getting that close to the major leagues, which have never had a female umpire, Postema has become the focus of a lot of attention. That makes her uncomfortable, she said, for she sees herself as an umpire — not a woman umpire.

THE HARDEST thing about being a woman umpire is "umpiring, just doing the job," Postema said in a telephone interview.

She said that being a woman has not hindered or helped her.

"There isn't any problem," she said, a bit testily. "There isn't any problem with fans; there isn't any problem with ballplayers or anything. All I am is another umpire out there. And as long as I do my job, then I'm happy.

"They certainly wouldn't keep any umpires around if they weren't improving, if they were going nowhere. They wouldn't keep me on just because I'm a woman, that's for sure. When you're on the field, you're just another umpire. As long as you're consistent, they leave you alone."

BERNICE GERA, a 40-year-old housewife from Jackson Heights, N.Y., made her umpiring debut in the Class A New York-Penn League in 1972. She is believed to be the first woman to umpire a professional baseball game and was allowed to officiate only after a five-year struggle in which the New York State Court of Appeals agreed to her contention that existing physical requirements for umpires were discriminatory to women.

Gera umpired a game between the Auburn Phillies and the Geneva Rangers June 24, 1972. It was her first and last appearance. She quit in tears after the game, in which she was involved in three disputed calls and ejected one of the managers. Newspaper articles at the time said she set women's chances for advancement in the field back considerably.

But not totally. Postema graduated from umpiring school in Daytona Beach, Fla., five years later.

"I was living in Gainesville, Fla., and my sister was attending the University of Florida," she said. "I was thinking about going there, too. But I read an article about Al Summers' umpiring school and decided to give that a try.

"I've always been athletic all my life, and (my family) just want me to be happy and do what I want to do," she said. "They just thought it was a whim, I think, maybe at first."

SHE SAID she had a bit of trouble getting in Summers' classes "because he had never had any women go to his school before.

"Anybody can go to umpire school if they want to — as long as you pay your money. It's only about a six- or seven-week course. They teach you everything you need to know."

She admits she didn't know much.

"I played softball on a girls team and with my brother," said Postema, who is from Willard, Ohio. "I'd play baseball and football with him and his friends.

In her six-plus years in pro baseball, Postema has been involved in many on-field disputes with managers and players. Sometimes her gender is brought up in the less-than-polite conversations. But she can't afford to take it personally.

"You can't be bothered by anything out there," Postema said. "You're just trying to do a job, and when they're flying off the handle or something happens like that, just let 'em, let 'em get it all out. And then say, 'Let's go, get on with the game.'"

Fight the repeal

The old enemy of every Midlander and all other Americans — inflation — hasn't been too prominent in recent months. But if a large number of congressmen have their way, inflation will get every opportunity to destroy the economic progress won since Ronald Reagan was elected president.

An attempt is being made to kill tax indexation and if that attempt is successful, every American taxpayer will lose ground in the battle to make financial ends meet. Tax indexing was one of the reforms enacted in the 1981 Economic Recovery Act. It's scheduled to become a reality in 1985.

What the change will mean to you is a barrier against "bracket creep" — inflation pushing you into a higher tax bracket and higher tax liability when, in effect, your real purchasing power has not increased. That's the current situation and it's not fair, equitable or honest.

U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, Midland's congressional representative, is a strong voice in favor of retaining tax indexing. But, says the congressman, "Certain members of Congress desperately want to repeal indexing because that would allow Congress to raise taxes without ever having to vote on the increases. Furthermore, the most insidious threat in repealing indexing lies in the fact that it instills an incentive for inflation to feed Congressional spending appetites."

Look at how a repeal would affect you. Congressman Loeffler says that with an inflation rate of 4 percent, taxes would be 25 percent higher after 10 years if indexing is repealed. These tax increases would hit hardest low and middle income people because 78 percent of the tax increase caused by repealing indexing would fall on Americans with incomes less than $50,000. But every American would feel the pinch.

It's not fair and it's not right for Congress to repeal one of the most sensible reforms enacted in recent history. Inflation is not yet defeated, but will continue to be a threat to this nation for years to come. Taxes are high enough now and Americans surely don't want to promote fiscal irresponsibility in Congress.

Make a statement about how you feel about the move to repeal indexing. Write to every member of Congress possible and urge them to fight repeal at all costs.

Political coup

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain wet her finger, held it to the wind and decided it was a good time to call a general election.

Her Conservative government is blessed with public support at this time. Bookmakers are making the Conservatives a 4-1 favorite. Opinion polls give her party at least 45 percent of the popular vote — plenty of margin over the Labor Party and the Liberal-Social Democratic Party Alliance.

Thus Mrs. Thatcher, Europe's first woman prime minister, scores a political coup by deciding to go before the voters 11 months before her five-year term expires.

The prime minister is riding a popularity high because of her role in Britain's war with Argentina in defense of the Falklands. Britain's triumph in the 74-day conflict brought her solid support.

Mrs. Thatcher promises to continue her conservative economic policy and says that policy will encourage foreign investment in Britain. She says she's calling an early vote because an election has been fanned by the press and Parliament.

The Thatcher government has been good for Britain even though there still is much unemployment.

And we envy a nation that can carry on campaigns and select its leadership in a few short weeks while here in America the making of a president takes more than two years.

Another View:

Two-way street

The communist Sandinistas who rule Nicaragua have, from the first day they seized power in 1979, intervened massively against the government of El Salvador by sending huge shipments of arms, ammunition and other equipment to the communist guerrillas in that country.

Furthermore, the U.S. government has documented the fact that the guerrilla war in El Salvador is being directed and coordinated from Managua. The Sandinistas also have provided training and financial support to the guerrillas seeking to topple the Salvadoran government.

But now that the United States is providing aid to Nicaraguan citizens battling the tyrannical Sandinista government, the Sandinistas are howling that they are victims of U.S. aggression. They have requested that the Security Council of the United Nations set up bilateral talks to end what they call "an invasion" of Nicaragua by troops supported by the United States.

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, in announcing a rejection of the Nicaraguan complaint, said, "Nicaragua has once again come to us demanding of the U.N. international protection while it destabilizes its neighbors."

Kirkpatrick pointed out that the Sandinistas have repeatedly rebuffed peace plans advanced by the United States "based upon the termination of Nicaraguan support of guerrilla groups" in El Salvador.

Nicaragua went to the United Nations rather than the Organization of American States because it knows that members of the OAS are thoroughly familiar with the Sandinistas' all-out intervention in El Salvador and would give no sympathy to these communist dictators.

The Sandinistas also know that the same appeasement forces in the United States who cut off covert aid to Angola and who forced Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza to step down in favor of the communist Sandinistas, will side with them against President Reagan and others supporting the battle for freedom in Central America.

But the American people have had more than enough of knuckling under to communist conquerors and, judging from reactions to the president's recent address on Central America, are ready to support much tougher policies to prevent the Soviet bloc from communizing all of Central America.

The Nicaraguans are learning that if they intervene in El Salvador it is a two-way street. They can't be taken seriously when they talk about wanting peace while they are making war on their neighbors.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. embrace may cost royally

WASHINGTON — U.S. policy toward Morocco's King Hassan has grown more openly cordial during the Reagan administration, with the aim of strengthening an old and trusted ally. But this may prove to be a mistake. In the subtle world of Arab politics, Uncle Sam's warm embrace could be the kiss of death for Hassan.

Jack Anderson

It's known as the "Sadat syndrome," after the late Egyptian president, who lost popularity among his countrymen and other Arab states by becoming too cozy with the United States. The administration's attempt to support Hassan's regime with public displays of friendship may serve to undermine it instead.

There is also the possibility that Hassan may not be getting much in return for risking his credibility at home. Recent U.S. assurances may have misled the king into believing he'll get more military aid than the United States is, in fact, ready to deliver.

Much of the U.S. aid has gone to help Morocco in its dragging, six-year war against the leftist Polisario rebels who are fighting to force Hassan to give up the Western Sahara, which he seized in 1980. Though the Polisarios have suffered serious setbacks recently and are in no position to win, many U.S. analysts doubt that Hassan can win either. So the stalemate drags on, and the war continues to be a drain on Morocco's faltering economy.

Officially, the United States is neutral in the conflict. But sources told my associates Donald Goldberg and Dale Van Atta that the Reagan administration has been far from neutral. For example:

— Delivery of cluster bombs has been expedited for use in the desert war.

— U.S. training and military equipment have been provided.

— American Embassy officials, including Defense Intelligence Agency personnel, regularly accompany visiting U.S. delegations to the Western Sahara war zone. But embassy officials in Algeria, where the Polisario movement is based, are discouraged from making even discreet contact with the rebels.

— The United States has even given the Moroccans intelligence information on the Polisarios' movements in the Western Sahara.

The result of all this, sources say, is exaggerated Moroccan expectations of U.S. support and a distrust of our intentions by other nations in the region.

A secret CIA profile of Hassan describes a growing estrangement between the king and his subjects. Where once he would don a white djellaba and ride a white horse through the crowds at religious observances, he rarely makes such vulnerable public appearances now.

The reason is simple: a series of close calls during the 1970s. Like Jordan's King Hussein, the 53-year-old Moroccan monarch has survived several assassination attempts.

A year later, three Moroccan Air Force F-5 fighters tried to shoot down Hassan's plane as he was returning from a trip to France. Ironically, the planes were U.S.-made and the pilots were American-trained. Some military sources say the caliber of the Moroccan pilots hasn't improved much in the years since then.

The once-loyal Oufkir was implicated in that 1972 plot, and may have been executed, though the official version is that he committed suicide.

Hassan has been understandably suspicious of his military leaders ever since. Last Jan. 25, Gen. Ahmed Dlimi, the king's longtime chief of security, was reported killed in a car accident; but key witnesses apparently disappeared and evidence was suppressed. A few days later, another of the king's aides was killed under equally mysterious circumstances. Western intelligence sources speculated that Hassan, habitually susceptible to rumors, was purging his top military command in fear of another coup attempt.

Certainly the king has become more security conscious, and less tolerant of opposition. Many who made the mistake of criticizing the monarch — which is against the law — are reportedly behind bars. Those who remain at liberty are now extremely careful of what they say.

Suspicion and distrust permeate the royal entourage. "Rivalry and the jousting for position often pit family against family in the royal court, and intrigue and rumors abound," the secret CIA profile notes. "As the king is influenced by this gossip, the atmosphere is often such that efficient functioning at the top level of the bureaucracy is simply smothered."

Following a "divide and rule" policy, Hassan shuffles his cabinet frequently, never leaving a minister in the same job long enough to consolidate his position.

Despite the soaring cost of food and oil imports and the country's appalling unemployment — one out of three adult males is without a job — Hassan still lives like a king. Corruption among Moroccan officials is endemic.

In short, Hassan is vulnerable enough to criticism without being embarrassed by public displays of affection from the Reagan administration.

And secret Pentagon and congressional assessments question whether Morocco is the strategic keystone that justifies U.S. support of Hassan. In their view, Morocco is a useful but not absolutely vital transit base for the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force. Other airfields are available, such as Lajes Air Base in the Azores.

There is a real danger that the administration's open support for Hassan may cost him his throne. As the old song goes, you always hurt the one you love. And the Reagan administration's public romance with King Hassan may not even be necessary.

GEORGE F. WILL

'Nessie' as possible as an atom

WASHINGTON — In the 50 years since an Inverness newspaper reported "the appearance of a strange animal or fish in Loch Ness," we have learned to live with such ideas as these: that matter is energy, that atoms can be smashed, that subatomic particles have some attributes associated with particles and others associated with waves, that the soul or "self" is a kind of fractious committee and the unconscious is an arena of turmoil revealed in dreams and elsewhere, that the continents are floating plates meandering around the planet, that Saturn has braided rings of giant snowballs, that the dinosaurs may have died quickly as a result of an environmental catastrophe (for them, not us) caused by a meteor striking Earth, that light is subject to gravity because space is curved near large masses, and that there is a decipherable code of heredity contained in a substance (DNA) common to all living things from turnips to violinists. But it is generally considered beneath serious consideration that a large creature lives in Loch Ness.

George F. Will

Because the "monster" has been good for Scotland's tourist trade, cynics dismiss it as a fabrication. Because a willingness to construe other persons' beliefs as products of neuroses is widely considered a sign of bravery and learning, persons who say they have seen the creature or evidence of it, or who even remain open-minded about it, are said to be manifesting an instinctive human craving for myth, and the hunger of a secular age for mystery, and all that stuff.

Perhaps persons who think Nessie may exist are mistaken. No member of the species has been captured, no remains have been found, no incontrovertible photographic or other evidence has been gathered.

But in 565 A.D., Saint Columba, who brought Christianity to the Scots (who were sore in need of it), saw a beast in Loch Ness. Claimed sightings became more frequent 50 years ago when a road was opened along the loch's western shore. That's when Mr. and Mrs. George Spicer were driving toward London and encountered a "loathsome sight."

The loch is only 24 miles long and a mile wide, but it is so deep it is, in volume, the largest lake in Britain and the third largest in Europe. Therefore, although there have been hundreds of claimed sightings by scientists and laymen, the absence of definitive evidence for the creature's existence can conceivably be due to the fact that the loch has ample room for a reclusive creature to avoid the limelight.

After assessing photographic and sonar evidence gathered in 1972 and 1975, the curator of the Smithsonian's division of reptiles and amphibians said the data "indicate the presence of large animals in Loch Ness." Also in 1975, a curator in the department of vertebrate paleontology at the Royal Ontario Museum said: "There is an unexplained phenomenon of considerable interest." The director of Harvard's museum of comparative zoology said the evidence was "suggestive of a large aquatic animal." Evidence was treated as scientifically serious in the Harvard museum's "MCZ Newsletter" and in "Technology Review" published at MIT.

Peat particles in the murky water make underwater photographs difficult to decipher, but computer-enhancement of photographs at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena has shown the photographic record to be consistent with the sonar record indicating moving objects 20 to 30 feet long. In 1960 an aeronautical engineer filmed what he said was one of the creatures swimming on the surface. The British joint air reconnaissance intelligence center said the film "leaves the conclusion that it (the thing on the surface) probably is an animate object."

A 1976 article in Smithsonian magazine concluded: "There's something in the loch, something big, even though we don't know what." Perhaps that is not so. Perhaps the testimony of individuals and the sonar and photographic evidence can be explained (as has been suggested) in terms of mass suggestion, or a sunken Viking ship, or clouds of gas bubbles, or floating trash, or a decaying stag's head.

No metaphysic will come unstuck, no moral code will be refuted, no notion of man's place under the eye of eternity will have to be revised if, say, we someday discover that a species of large prehistoric reptiles got locked in the loch by a geologic accident and has been dining well on Scotch salmon ever since. (Several sightings have been associated with salmon in headlong flight.) But many persons close their minds against many thoughts in order to avoid being thought insufficiently skeptical.

ART BUCHWALD

U.S. planning non-harvest festival!

"Hello, Farmer Jones, how's business?"

"I don't see any grain on your farm."

"It's right here on this piece of paper. The government is giving me this grain, if I promise not to raise any."

"Why would the government do that?"

Art Buchwald

"They got too much grain. So in order to use up what they got stored away, they're giving us this 'payment in kind.' It's called PIK. We get 95 percent of what we ordinarily raise, free, from Uncle Sam's warehouses."

"What are you going to do with the grain that you get from the government?"

"Sell it as fast as I can. Lots of farmers out there are walking around with PIK paper so I got to unload mine before the price drops."

"What do you do all day, now that you're not farming?"

"Ride around and make sure no one is planting anything on my land. Got to keep it clear if I want my PIK paper. Then I go down to the coffee shop and sit around with the other boys talking about what great crops we didn't raise this year."

"You deserve a rest, Farmer Jones. I hope the government doesn't get rid of its grain for awhile."

"That's their problem."

"Hello, Dealer Smith. How's the feed and fertilizer business?"

"Just awful. Ever since the government started giving away free grain, nobody wants to buy any seed or fertilizer from me. I'm about to go bankrupt."

"Sorry to hear it. Can't you get some of that PIK money going around?"

"That's only for farmers who don't raise any crops. We should get some too, because if it wasn't for us there wouldn't be any surplus grain in the government bins."

"How would the government do that?"

"Pay us for the grain and fertilizer the farmers don't use to plant anything."

"That could get expensive."

"Well, if they don't do something soon there won't be seed or fertilizer stores left when the farmers have to go back to planting again. There won't be any tractor dealers either."

"What do you do all day long without customers?"

"Hello, Banker Reedy. What's going on with you?"

"I got good news and bad news. The good news is that all the farmers in these here parts are paying back their loans."

"What's the bad ews?"

"The farmers don't want to borrow any money from me this year. They say they don't need it because they're not strapped for cash to tide them over until they harvest a crop. How can a bank stay in business if nobody wants to borrow any money from it?"

"What about loaning money to the seed and fertilizer merchants, and the tractor dealers? They seem to be hard up."

"Hello, Secretary of Agriculture Block. When do you think the American farmers will go back to work?"

Soviets in Central America: Hemispheric horror

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Week in week out, the malevolent presence of the Soviet Union in our hemisphere is, I believe, the most important occurrence in half-a-century. While some might feel that I dwell on the Russian menace too much, I feel it my duty to emphasize what they and their surrogates are now doing by exporting revolution into Central America to destabilize peaceful, devoutly religious neighbors.

We cannot — indeed, should not — stand idly by and allow this deliberate subversion to go unchecked. Our Congress doles out requests for aid stingily. As I wrote a few weeks ago, half-a-loaf gets small results. President Reagan laid it on the line recently to all of us when he succinctly pointed out that the Soviets, Fidel Castro and other Russian satellites aim sooner than later to cripple our own trade routes via the Caribbean.

Certainly, most folks are aware that the Soviets keep stirring up the dogs of war in the Middle East. They have just unleashed savage air raids on helpless civilians in rebel-held regions of Afghanistan because anti-Soviet fighters won't march in lockstep for the invaders from Russia. Moreover, the U.S.S.R. can't keep deeply religious Poland or the rest of the satellite empire from sputtering explosively on a short fuse.

To divert attention and distract us, the Soviets extended strategic goals thousands of miles from Moscow into the Caribbean area and Central America. Their ever-faithful puppet Fidel Castro, No. 1 Russian surrogate, already had thousands of troops in Africa and the Middle East, suffering mounting casualties. Central America is a short hop, though, from his island base in Cuba.

EDITOR'S REPORT

Castro undertook to supply and succor a Marxist regime in Nicaragua and back up guerrillas ripping up El Salvador, its neighbor. The result has been an armed Nicaraguan force bigger than all other Central American military organizations put together. It was an amazingly rapid timetable, just under 18 months! The Cuban secret service, DCI, trained by the KGB, got its operative instructions and money for the project from Yuri Andropov. At the time Andropov was the mastermind for the KGB and competing for supreme Soviet power which he holds today as general secretary of the Communist Party.

This Soviet chicanery wasn't publicized but circulated among comrades of the Russians at Communist Party conferences throughout the world. So elated were the Russians with their feat that they even slipped the information to Italian and French communists. The Soviets knew that sort of data would reach Western allied ears which was their intention since breaking up NATO remains a prime Moscow consideration.

President Reagan sought delicately to emphasize the issue of a Central America in revolutionary ferment instigated by the U.S.S.R. and client regimes. Somehow, it hasn't made the impact on the public or the Congress which it deserves and that baffles me. Are we going to wait until the Soviet's surrogate wars cut us off from Latin America? The Congress and we, the people who elect them, had better take a hard second look.

In the first place, I think nearly all Americans believe that the missile crisis of November 1962 may have forced the Russians not only to dismantle their sites but to go away. That wasn't the case at all. Castro needs several billion dollars annually just to keep essential machinery on the move, as well as oil which the Soviets supply.

Sure, he pays through the nose for what he gets. Look at the casualties inflicted on Cuban legions which he sent abroad. But he remains a dedicated Communist and volunteers to train guerrillas from Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and even the PLO which has units inside Nicaragua today.

President Reagan described the anti-Sandinista forces fighting the regime in Nicaragua as "Freedom Fighters." The man the Sandinistas fear most leads troops sworn to oust the regime which seized power after the revolution which ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza and promptly tied itself to the red star in Moscow.

He is a courageous, young rebel fighter himself, who is called "Commander Zero," real name, Eden Pastora Gomez. The far-left tried to placate him by making Commander Zero deputy minister of defense. Instead, he told the junta that it lied, betrayed the revolution and went into hiding in Costa Rica.

Commander Zero, acclaimed in his country, is back in action in southern Nicaragua. His political advisers have recently reached agreement with other anti-Sandinista forces striking from the north. A pincers operation is obviously in the military making in Nicaragua.

People like Commander Zero have lots to commend them especially bravery and fortitude. They never appealed for "covert aid." Commander Zero always said and did his thing publicly as he does now. Many of our legislators, unfortunately, think we should throw him a crumb, so to speak.

The House and the Senate have been haggling about terms of aid programs to embattled little nations like El Salvador. In our upper chamber which has a Republican majority, the foreign relations committee finally came up with another $20 million, earmarked for Salvadoran training. The total package at this stage is $76.3 million, around $30 million less than requested by President Reagan.

This is peanuts when you consider what it would cost if we had to defend ourselves from a Soviet-directed takeover of all Central America.

SPEAKING OUT

'Tipsy Taxi' alternative to drunken driving

By GEORGE M. BAKKE

George M. Bakke, president of KNFM/KMND radio, has lived in Midland a little over a year. He came to the Tall City from a suburb of Chicago. He formerly was in advertising sales with Reader's Digest for 15 years.

In 1982 there were 1,350 of our fellow Midlanders and Odessans arrested for driving while intoxicated. An additional 9,005 of our fellow community members were arrested for public intoxication. Alcohol was a primary contributing factor in 826 accidents — and in that year's time, 21 people, family, friends and community members died in accidents directly related to alcohol.

If these statistics shock you, understand that these numbers are low because they reflect only those who were caught — or weren't that lucky.

These statistics reflect only one side of the overall problem, however. Because for each and every one of these violations, each and every one of us in Midland and Ector Counties have had to bear the burden of the overall responsibility. For every DWI arrest, each of us, as taxpayers contribute an average $74.02 of our hard-earned dollars. For each public intoxication arrest we, as taxpayers, contribute an average of $58.06. That simply means that in 1982 we, as taxpayers and citizens of Midland and Odessa, shelled out $99,927 to prosecute DWI arrests and $552,830.30 in public intoxication prosecution.

If you find these statistics startling, hang on to your hat — for each DWI related death our tax cost is $680,000.

No, we didn't make up these numbers — these are from the Uniform Crime Report, published by the Department of Public Safety and the National Safety Council. We, at KNFM/KMND radio stations in Midland/Odessa decided to do something about them by focusing strong local activity on this serious problem. Strong local involvement will lead to stronger national involvement. As we band together, we will conquer this problem.

With the initiation of our "Tipsy Taxi," we hope to substantially decrease these numbers by offering an alternative to the risk that is otherwise run when people drink and then attempt to drive. The saddest part of the whole problem arises when cocktails during happy hour are just enough to make one feel — just that — a little happy and relaxed and that person doesn't fully realize his reflexes and otherwise quick reactions are a bit slowed — so he gets into his car and promptly wraps it around a telephone pole and/or wipes out the bicyclist who was on the corner.

You never think it can happen to you. But it only takes one time — one accident, one death, maybe your life, maybe someone else's — but nonetheless, it is a life, lost or impaired needlessly. That's the tragic way the problem ends.

But the solution begins with one phone call to 561-8336. When that number is called (which is manned 24 hours a day) KNFM/KMND takes down the name of the caller, name of the person in need of a ride, telephone number from which the call originated and the destination of the person. We then call the taxi, give them the information and they then do their part.

Upon delivery to his or her residence (not another lounge or restaurant or the airport or the like, but a residence) that person will receive a small business-type card telling them where they were picked up and where they might find their automobile.

It's that simple — and it costs them nothing for their ride — and the best part is that he/she is still alive and well the next day.

While we were organizing this program, we spoke with many persons and agencies, local, state and federal, all of whom pledge their support and encouragement to our effort. For example:

"I give this program 100 percent support — anything to keep drunk drivers off the streets and highways — to protect the people of our county," said O.A. "Bob" Brookshire, Ector County Sheriff.

"In Midland County, driving while intoxicated charges account for more of our caseload than any other type of misdemeanor offense.... There have been 62.3 percent more DWI cases filed in the first three months of 1983 than during the same period in 1982. Obviously, law enforcement alone cannot control the problem.

"I wholeheartedly endorse and support the 'Tipsy Taxi' program.... With an American being killed by drunk driving every three hours, I encourage you to offer and expand your program in Midland County," said J. Scott Henderson, County Attorney, Midland.

"My hat's off to you and all the concerned citizens in West Texas who have been working so hard to get the 'Tipsy Taxi' program underway.

"Your work — and the number of people involved — is a rousing tribute to the spirit of volunteerism in this great country of ours. Your effort is yet another manifestation of what being a good neighbor is all about!

"I commend you and please keep me informed of your progress," wrote Rep. Tom Loeffler, Washington, D.C.

Since the announcement of the program, we have received numerous calls daily from area restaurants and lounges wanting to know how they can participate. Sam Day, president of the Permian Basin Package Stores Association, District 16; Louis Hochman, state treasurer of the Texas Restaurant Association, Jimmy Mohammad, president of the Hotel and Motel Association; all have pledged their support and participation of their respective organizations. The response in this very brief period of time the "Tipsy Taxi" has been underway, has been phenomenal.

With the combined support of all these agencies, along with the transportation means offered enthusiastically by the Yellow-Checker Cab Co. of Midland and Odessa Taxi, Inc. and the support and exposure given this program by Times Mirror Cable Television Co. of Midland, the "Tipsy Taxi" is now a reality.

With total community cooperation on a shared cost basis, the statistics reflected earlier and the entire tax burden can and will be substantially reduced. Any and all interested proprietors of establishments wishing to participate may contact us at KNFM/KMND at 683-3878.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Golden rule

To The Editor:

The article which appeared on Page 1C of May 3's Reporter-Telegram really incensed me. It is incredible to me that Ms. Mona Dunn could speak with such cruelty and ignorance. I would certainly hope that she is not ever afflicted with such burdens as Mrs. Mitchell has been because I doubt that she would be able to cope with a situation anywhere near the severity of "her" neighbor.

What has happened to the "Golden Rule" in this community? Has Ms. Dunn or Councilmen Gordon Marcum, Tom Sloan and Carroll Thomas ever heard of doing unto others as you would have them do unto you? And if Ms. Dunn even thought about what she said, she would know that she wouldn't see the trailer when she walked out "her" front door because the trailer would be in Mrs. Mitchell's backyard two doors down on the same side of the street!

I am assuming that Ms. Dunn's objection was the only one stated since it was the only one printed in the article. You three councilmen who voted against this request should be run out of town. How dare you refuse to help one of the very citizens who put you in office? I seriously doubt that you will ever get one of my votes again. How you could listen to the foolishness presented by Ms. Dunn and not see the absurdity of her objections is beyond me. Ms. Dunn is not even a property owner in Midland — she only resides with her son on occasion. If you can't retain a sense of decency and compassion, then I don't believe you need to be serving in a public office.

Local support

To The Editor:

Recently my husband and I had the opportunity to sponsor the Midland High Band to Tempe, Ariz., to participate in the Mountain States Music Festival at Arizona State University. Without the local support of projects, i.e. chili supper, fruitcake sales, tickets sales, etc., the students could not have attended this event and so proudly represented our community and state; indeed we are grateful for the support.

Your reward, Midland, was the excellent behavior of the students. Sponsoring these young adults was a pleasure. They were responsible, dependable, considerate, well-mannered — everything you would hope your child to be in the presence of others. The directors, Clyde Wilson and Dan Green, are to be commended for their fine leadership of both honor and symphonic bands, which, by the way, received top honors as outstanding bands at the festival.

Thank you, Midland, for your support and the quality of young adults that we had the opportunity to accompany.

Midnight oil

To The Editor:

Your attention is directed to the House of Representatives' proposal to change time up one hour beginning March 1, 1984.

The excuse is "energy savings."

If energy savings is the real reason for such a foolish date for time change, let us all urge Mr. Tip O'Neill to call his House to order promptly at sunrise each morning Congress is in session, for the early morning "oil" burned is not nearly as expensive as the midnight oil they presently burn.

To the wildlife

To The Editor:

Congratulations are in order for Gov. Mark White, Sen. Ted Lyon of Rockwall and Rep. Fred Agnich for their successful efforts in passage of the Texas Wildlife Conservation Act of 1983.

Not to be forgotten is Texans for Wildlife Conservation, whose members include the more than 800 sportsmen's clubs in Texas. The group was formed to promote passage of the act, which would not have been possible without their devotion and sacrifice of time and energy.

The act gives the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department statewide authority for wildlife management and eliminates locally specialized wildlife laws previously in effect in 116 Texas counties. The Texas Wildlife Conservation Act at last enables the Parks and Wildlife Department to manage our state's wildlife resources on a scientific basis statewide.

In my opinion, it is the most far reaching wildlife conservation legislation ever passed in the state.

Generations to come of outdoor enthusiasts and sportsmen truly owe Gov. White, Sen. Lyon, Rep. Agnich and Texans for Wildlife Conservation a debt of thanks.

Vice Chairman,
Texas Parks & Wildlife Commission

Rosy entrance

To The Editor:

On behalf of all the Midland senior citizens who enjoy the many activities at the Midland Senior Center, I would like to thank the Midland Rose Society for the beautiful garden entrance which they have provided for our building. The society members not only donated the rosebushes for the landscaping project, they planted them for us, and now are taking proper care of the area, thus assuring an annual display of gorgeous blooms.

The senior citizens appreciate this very special gift so much. We hope that many Midlanders will drive by the center, on Delano at Illinois, to see the beauty spot which the Midland Rose Society has created for us.

They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Representation

To The Editor:

How many times we read articles in the paper about strangers who have been stranded in our city and given a helping hand by some compassionate individual(s) or organization. And just look at Christmas in April! The local people turn out in mass to help their less fortunate neighbors. Probably all of us can think of many examples which prove that the people of Midland want very much to help their fellow man in his time of need.

This being the case, I contend that our citizens are not being properly represented by our city councilmen, as witnessed by the denial of the specific use permit requested by Carolyn Mitchell to connect a mobile home on her property on Missouri Street. To refresh your memory on how the voting went: Davidson made the motion to approve; Hatfield seconded the motion and our mayor also voted in favor of it. The three opposing votes: Carroll Thomas, Gordon Marcum II and Tom Sloan (address, Missouri Street).

May 10 is the last day that Thomas serves as a councilman. That leaves Gordon Marcum II (just re-elected) and Tom Sloan as council members who do not, in my opinion, represent the beliefs of the majority of the Midland citizens. Please keep the names of these two men in mind and vote them out of office when election time comes.

Hightower trying to prune, graft life into agriculture department

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says he's been as busy as a man sacking bobcats in his efforts to change the direction and focus of the Texas Department of Agriculture — and to have a voice in shaping national farm policies.

Hightower, who took office less than five months ago, says that he's trying to shift the emphasis of the agency to make it one which is involved in helping Texas agriculture.

"Basically," he says, "we found that the Department of Agriculture is not organized to help the farmer — it has been primarily an inspection agency...and a regulatory agency."

And while Hightower feels help for farmers and ranchers must come from the federal level, "there are things that a state agriculture commissioner can do to help farmers."

One, he says, is with marketing — and the second is with policy.

The first area has been the initial focus of TDA's efforts, he says.

Hightower wants to get across the message that agriculture isn't something of concern only to those Texans living in rural areas.

"Everybody talks about the decline in the oil and gas industry," Hightower comments, "but agriculture is our second biggest industry."

"Most people don't think of food in terms of being a big revenue producer for our state...in the long run, it can be even more important than oil and gas."

In the past, Hightower says, Texas has been a "raw commodity state," producing but not processing agricultural products.

Hightower argues Texans can get a larger share of the agriculture dollar by encouraging development of processing industries in Texas.

Hightower has been working with the Legislature to win approval of legislation which would encourage development of processing facilities in Texas — and is hopeful that lawmakers will give final approval to the approach.

Hightower also is working on a number of specific programs aimed at improving agriculture, including pooling of agricultural commodities.

"We've got a guy who is working on getting scattered farmers to pool their cotton and corn.... The early signs on that are good," he reports.

Another effort is development of farmers' markets, which Hightower says have been well-received by local governments and by farmers.

Development of Texas' wine industry also is a priority, along with expansion of exports, including use of "an export trading company concept."

At the moment, he says, Texas imports 86 percent of its nursery stock from California and Florida — a situation Hightower labels "pretty dumb."

TDA is even working on a "new concept on Texas native plants for export...everything from sagebrush to wildflowers. And it looks like there's a good market," Hightower says.

POSITIVE THINKING

Opportunities surround us

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

I hear people glumly complaining that there are no opportunities anymore. But I think they are wrong about that. Opportunities surround us all the time; it just takes an inquisitive, lively mind to see them. It also takes an optimistic mind, one that expects good things to happen in the future.

Peale

It's not easy to stay optimistic these days because pessimism is so rampant. One night my wife, Ruth, and I were watching a television program about the troubles of a young farmer and his family. This man had a small farm with a few cows and some chickens. But he had run out of cash and stumbled into debt, and now his creditors were going to take away his cows as payment for those debts. He was probably going to lose his house, too, we were told. He wasn't eligible for welfare, apparently, because he still owned some livestock. His three children were reduced to eating sandwiches, and the gloomy thought was introduced that pretty soon there might be no more sandwiches.

"Now here was a genuine case of economic hardship, but the whole thrust of that presentation was to tell millions of viewers that the way to handle a money problem is to add up; and focus on and dwell upon all the difficulties involved.

Ruth said impatiently, "This is all so downbeat! Why doesn't someone tell those people to make a list of their remaining assets? That might give them the kind of lift they need."

"What assets would you list?" I asked, just to see what she would say.

"Well," she said, "the man seems healthy and strong, a vigorous person. That's asset number one. Next, he has a wife who seems intelligent, who obviously loves him and is loyal to him. That's asset number two. The kids ae not crippled or sick or handicapped in any way; they're normal, healthy kids. So that asset number three. He hasn't lost his house yet; they still have a roof over their heads. That's asset number four. Their plight is being brought to the attention of millions of sympathetic Americans, some of whom will undoubtedly try to help them. That's asset number five. But nobody even mentions these things!"

On the contrary, while we continued to watch, the commentator went on to say dolefully that the young farmer had been reduced to taking on odd jobs.

"Reduced?" I said to Ruth. "What is so reducing about an odd job? Remember Michael Cardone?"

Michael Cardone is a friend of ours who in middle age found himself out of work. But he didn't let it get him down. One day he saw a pile of discarded, worn-out windshield wiper motors in a garage, and he began to wonder why they couldn't be fixed and sold more cheaply than new ones. So he began to fix them — a pretty odd job because there was no demand for rebuilt wiper motors and no one had ever bothered to do it before. But he kept on, and today Michael Cardone is the head of an enormous plant that makes all sorts of automotive supplies. Why? Because he had a dream, an image of being his own boss, of running his own show, of finding automotive needs and filling them — and an odd job was the springboard that started him on his way. And what he was able to image, he became.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Type A personality may not do as well

Dear Dr. Solomon: My brother is going to have a coronary bypass operation. It doesn't surprise me because he always was a very competitive person who always had to be the best in everything he did, even when he didn't like what he was doing. Will this kind of determination help him get through the operation in better shape? — Bernie, Buffalo, N.Y.

Solomon

Dear Bernie: The results of a study of a relatively small number of patients suggest that a patient with the type A personality that you describe may not do as well as the more relaxed non-type A patient. Dr. David S. Krantz, of the Uniformed Services University School of Medicine in Bethesda, Md., studied 26 patients — 20 type A and six non-type A — who were undergoing coronary artery bypass surgery.

Twelve of the 20 type A patients experienced some complication, either during or following the operation. None of the patients in the other group had any complications. The type A patients also had to remain in the hospital longer than did the non-type A patients.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you explain the difference between a homosexual and a transsexual? Are they the same? People seem to use the two words to mean the same thing, and I don't understand this. — Eddie, Miami Beach, Fla.

Dear Eddie: The two terms are not identical. A transsexual is a person who would feel more comfortable living as a member of the opposite sex. Therefore, transsexuality is considered a disorder of gender indentity.

A homosexual is a person whose sexual preference is for a member of the same sex. However, the person does not want to be a member of the other sex. Homosexuality, therefore, involves a pattern of sexual preference.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm one of those women you've written about who loses her period when she becomes an athlete. I've never run in a marathon but I often run as much as 50 miles a week. I have very little fat and I don't menstruate, and that doesn't bother me. However, I am only 26 years old and I hope to have a family some day, and what I'd like to know is whether this means that I'll have more problems than other women when I become pregnant. — Marion, Fort Worth, Texas

Dear Marion: On the contrary. The evidence is that athletes have shorter labors and fewer complications than do nonathletic women during their pregnances.

For Grace, Indianapolis, Ind.: According to a report from the Center for Disease Control, a rubella (German measles) vaccination within three months before or after a woman conceives does not increase the risk of congenital rubella and does not necessarily mean that an abortion is mandatory.

I should add, however, that common sense suggests that pregnant women should not be vaccinated, and any woman of childbearing age should try to make certain that she is not pregnant before receiving rubella vaccine.

Like money in the bank.

In today's economy, you have to be careful with your investments. Maybe that's why so many people decide to buy a Honda.

They know they can get a good return on that investment if they ever decide to sell.

Hondas have traditionally maintained one of the highest resale values of any car sold.*

Which just goes to show that if you take good care of your Honda, you can likely bank on it.

MAMA'S FARM QUILT

Text by Diane Booth

Amanda Jane Shattuck pieced together her childhood in Bell County, Texas, on a farm quilt with tiny white stitches.

"She made quilts so we would have something to remember her by," said W. B. and Fay Shattuck, the late woman's son and daughter-in-law, who live in Midland.

Mrs. Shattuck made many quilts while she was living in Big Spring and Midland, her son said, but "Mama's Farm Quilt," started in 1935 and completed in 1937, was her most ambitious project.

She drew most of the designs freehand, using her granddaughters' coloring books, seed and farm catalogues and magazine photos as guides. She also transferred outlines with carbon paper to the quilt.

Mrs. Drummond remembers her grandmother would tear pictures she liked from magazines and saved them to use later for a quilt design.

The quilt was inspired by a Ft. Worth newspaper feature which showed other farmwives making the heirloom pieces.

She collected cotton sugar sacks for the blocks, handwashed them, drew pictures on the square and colored the scenes with crayons.

Once the design was perfected — her daughter-in-law said she made frequent revisions —it was transferred to a sugar bag by sandwiching it between a towel on the bottom and two pieces of brown paper.

She heated a "sad iron" on a wood- fueled cook stove and pressed the iron on the crayon drawing until the entire artwork transferred to the fabric.

Once the design was on the fabric, she outlined it with three-strand cotton embroidery thread to give depth.

The batting or stuffing placed between the top blocks and the bright pink backing was purchased at a cotton gin.

Mrs. Shattuck prepared the cotton by carding it. She pulled the cotton across the card, which is like a two edged rake, fluffing it so it would fill in the designs and give them shape.

The squares are "set together" or joined by strips of bright green and pink cotton percale.

The pink lining was stretched in a frame suspended from the ceiling to waist height, Mrs. Drummond said. The bats were placed over the lining, the top was pinned over the bats and then quilted by hand in one-inch squares on the backgrounds and hemmed.

"There is not a machine stitch anywhere about it," Mrs. Drummond said. "There is such a wealth of detail in it."

Amanda Jane Shattuck created 30 blocks for her quilt "Mama's Farm Quilt," by coloring designs with crayons, taken from farm and seed catalogues, children's coloring books and magazines and ironed them onto recycled sugar sacks. She outlined the edges of the subjects with embroidery thread to give them a three-dimensional effect.

The blocks include a huge green, speckled bullfrog sunning on some lilypads, a young lad pulling a fish from a pond while a cow looks on waiting for a drink, an aproned woman churning butter on her front porch, a scarecrow keeping watch over a watermelon patch, a farm wife hanging clothes on the line to dry, a dog keeping an eye on a cat he has chased on top of his house and field mice scurrying about shocks of feed and pumpkins.

One block that catches the eye is a parrot perched near a pear tree branch . Mrs. Drummond is not sure what her grandmother had in mind with that particular design. Maybe her original plan, she said, was for a partridge in a pear tree.

Although the quilter never saw a Rocky Mountain Big Horn Sheep, she included one in her quilt, because she was so impressed by a magazine picture she found.

Several of the women and girls featured in the quilt blocks are wearing pink dresses, which reminds Fay Shattuck about the quilt-in-the-making. When Mrs. Drummond's sister, Stella, was six years old, a new color was added to crayola boxes — pink.

The young girl did not mind sharing her precious pink crayon with her grandmother, but the quilt- maker got carried away with the new color and used it until it was reduced to a nub. "She and her grandmother really had it over that pink crayon," Fay laughed.

The woman's great-grandchildren may not fully appreciate the time and painstaking detail put into the keepsake, her son and daughter-in-law said, but when they come to visit it is "more or less a policy" to get out the quilt and look at it.

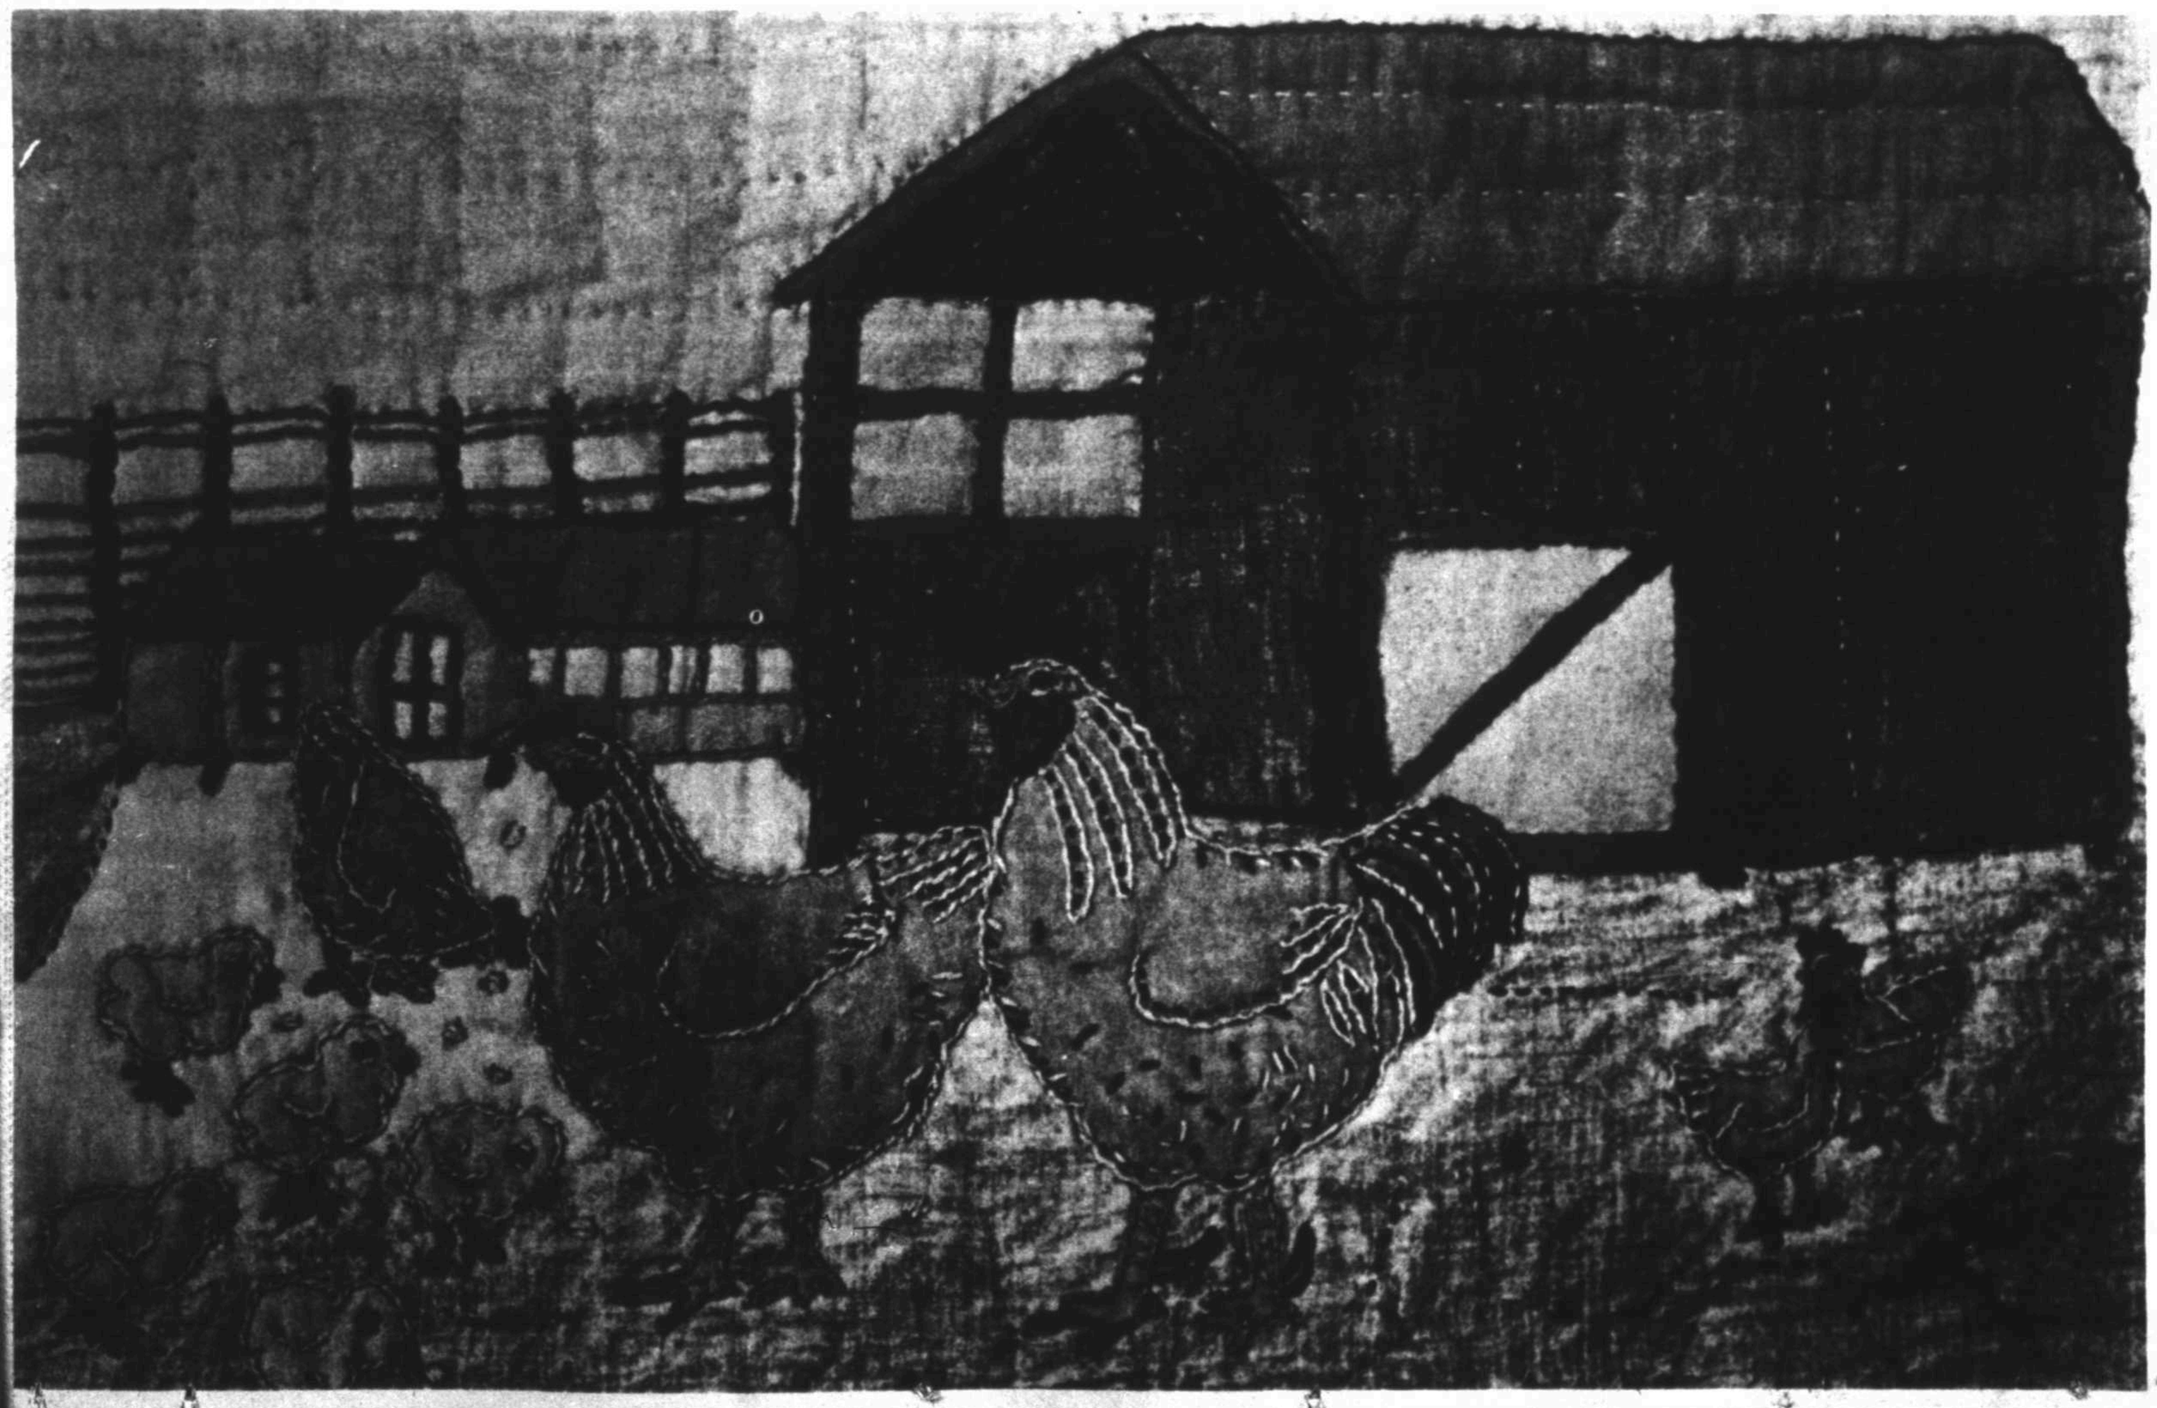
"It is a bit of history that can never be repeated in just that way," Mrs. Drummond said. "It is a tribute to a fine woman who did fine work. She did things with what she had in the days (during the depression) when people were wringing their hands and crying."

Mrs. Shattuck lovingly worked on her farm quilt while she lived with her husband, son and his family in Big Spring.

No longer with a garden to tend and limited in her activity because of ill health, she turned her attentions from growing green beans, tomatoes and melons to creating beautiful quilts.

"She made quilts all the time," said her granddaughter.

"It was her hobby," said Mrs. Shattuck. "She loved doing handwork, it was a pastime for her."



Handicapped toddlers enjoy splashing time in therapy

Mitchell Ford, a redhead with a two-year-old's solemn face, just seemed to have fun. From his father's arms he first splashed the water with one hand, looking like he was waving goodbye, while his parents worked his legs. With his mother tugging him gently around the pool, Mitchell was fearlessly dog paddling.

Mitchell suffers from cerebral palsy.

Melba Seth, program coordinator with the Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation Department, helped start the Monday afternoon water therapy class at the Alamo YMCA's pool. "Stimulation for the handicapped and development-delayed children" is its official title. Its purpose is to provide exercise and stimulation for children with handicaps or delayed development problems.

"For instance, some of the kids aren't walking yet," Mrs. Seth said. Putting them in the water and encouraging them to swim builds their muscles and coordination while they are comfortably bouyed up by the water.

CHRISTOPHER DAVIDSON, a two-and-half-year-old blonde, stood chest deep in the pool on top of a starting block Mrs. Seth submerged at a shallow part of the pool. He teetered and his mother's hand helped steady him.

Christopher was born with a cleft lip and palate and had surgery four times in the first year of his life to correct it. He was also born with congenital non-progressive myopathy (a weak muscle condition).

His mother blew a quick puff of air into his face to close his eyes and gave him a gentle push through the water. He slid just under the surface for a few feet like a tiny porpoise to Mrs. Seth, who pulled him back up. She helped him clap his hands together, exercising his little arms and splattering water noisily, to applaud his accomplishment.

For his next feat, he stood on the pool ladder and, when his mother released him, he half-fell and half-jumped into a resounding belly-flop. After his dive, he looked around laughing to see who was in his audience.

"He's normally shy and reserved," his mother, Jan Davidson said, "but he's not like that in the water, you notice."

"THE EARLIER YOU GET to the child, the better they'll do in school later," Mrs. Seth said. This class is an extension of her work with the MHMR, much of which involves "play therapy," working with the children in their own homes with toys to help them overcome their physical problems and increase mental alertness.

She began the class six weeks ago. The YMCA donated the late afternoon pool time once a week. Mrs. Seth said that the time was especially good because it gives fathers a chance to participate in the therapy after work.

TWO-YEAR-OLD MARY Beth McCrary, a Downs syndrome child, and her father, Guy, came in later. While Guy helped pull off the shirt which covered her bright yellow swimsuit, Christopher was encouraged by his mother to grasp the side of the pool and work his arms by pulling himself up to peek over the edge to see the new arrivals.

After Mary Beth was in the water the parents and children socialized around the starting block and Mary Beth hugged one of the boys, who seemed a little doubtful about being hugged.

Mrs. Seth said the class is a good opportunity for the children to learn to socialize with one another.

"They're able to play and communicate among themselves," she said. "Children can learn a lot from other children."

Mrs. Seth plans to have a speech therapist attend the class also to try to give the children more language stimulation in the relaxed environment of the pool. She wants to continue the class for as long as parents remain interested.

Jan Davidson said the swimming has helped her son "tremendously."

"Chris is a swimmer," she said. "This has built up his muscles a whole lot."

Dede Ford said, "It touches on so many of the areas we work on in the therapy."

AFTER 30 MINUTES in the water it is time to leave. As Christopher's mother put his robe on him, it was obvious he wanted to stay longer. He kept trying to take some strong steps back to the pool.

Have you heard ... ?

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

One of the highlights of the spring social season was the lovely picnic lunch hosted by Mary (Mrs. C.S.) Hunter earlier this month at her Hawthorne Drive home. In order to accommodate all her guests comfortably, she invited them for two successive days, May 4 and 5.

Box lunches tied with colorful yarn were served from the buffet in the dining room. Guests were then seated on the two patios and the gazebo at large round tables, covered with blue and white striped denim and centered with baskets of red geraniums and yellow and white daisies.

The bountiful lunch consisted of lemon chicken, rice and vegetable salad, assorted sandwiches, fresh vegetables and a variety of cookies. Bartender Max Thomas, an institution at Midland parties, was on hand to serve the white wine and iced tea.

The talk of the party was Mary's greenhouse and her beautiful flowers, especially the gorgeous fuchsia plants, which she brought indoors to use throughout the party rooms. We're told that fuchsia, traditionally grown in humid climes, flourishes in West Texas only in a hothouse atmosphere and particularly only when one has a "green thumb" like Mary's. A spectacular arrangement of red geraniums, yellow and white daisies and blue cornflowers in a moss-lined basket with a vine-trimmed handle was an eye-catcher in the dining room.

Approximately 160 guests enjoyed the delightful picnic, among them Harriet (Mrs. Harvey) Herd, Edna (Mrs. William M.) Hibbitts, Jane (Mrs. Kim) McAbee, Lucy (Mrs. John) Woodside, Elle (William M.) Kerr, Betty Sue (Mrs. Thomas) Marinis, Jean (Mrs. George) Donnelly, Mae (Mrs. Robert L.) Wood, Melanie (Mrs. David) Hurta, Terry (Mrs. Guy) Hall, Lena (Mrs. John) Ochsner, Joan (Mrs. Pat) Baskin, Nancy Hull, Jere (Mrs. Walter) Hubbard, Gladys (Mrs. Scott) Hickman, Lee (Mrs. George) Harley, Susan (Mrs. Ronald) Britton, Georgia Harston and Carol (Mrs. Peter) Crain.

MARY AND JOHN STRINGER hosted a family reunion in their Midland home recently. The event brought together Mary's three brothers and two sisters and their spouses from California, Kansas and various points in Texas. Since this was their first time all together in ten years, Mary says no special entertainment was necessary. Nonstop visiting, reminiscing about their growing up years in Afton, Oklahoma, and picture taking kept them busy.

Those attending were Glen and Stella Ervin of San Diego, Bob and Mary Ervin of Dodge City, George and Edith Ervin of Abilene, Frank and Pauline Means of Amarillo and Evelynn Whiteside of San Angelo. They agreed that a decade is much too long to wait for another family gathering, so they made plans to meet in California in two years.

GOSPEL SINGER and recording artist Betsy Brown of Midland had the unique opportunity of being the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Sal Fanera of Grain Valley, Missouri, on a trip to the Holy Land recently. She sang for the tour group in The Upper Room, the Tomb, the Garden of Gethsemane, in a Roman amphitheater along the Mediterranean Sea and at the Plaza Hotel in Tiberias.

Betsy, who was born and raised in Midland, is the daughter of Dorothy and W.E. "Brownie" Brown. Her Heartsong Ministries, Inc., is based in the Tall City, but her ministry takes her to many distant places. Her parents had the pleasure of accompanying her on her third tour of Germany this past winter. This summer, Betsy is scheduled to sing at Fellowship of Christian Athletes conferences in Hawaii, California and Colorado, and she is due to return to Europe next fall and winter for further singing engagements.

SARA SUMNER, who is off to Duke University come fall, was honored with a graduation party and brunch in the home of Katrena (Mrs. Bob) Cain.

Guests were the honoree's mother, Betty (Mrs. Bill) Sumner; her sister, Nancy; her grandmother, Avalyn (Mrs. H.C.) Whitmire of Odessa, and Midland High classmates Kelle Mobley, Jennifer Jackson, Cindy Besek, Shelley Jowell, Kathryn Way, Kamee Young, Nancy Ware, Christa Garlitz, Susan Lamphere, Julie Crain, Rebecca Caton, Dana Harben, Molly Franklin, Rhonda Jones, Laurie Stevens, Laura White, Chelle Sanders, Karen Tabor, Elizabeth Yeager, Billie Sue Brogden, Emily Goodfellow, Catherine Bolger, Catherine Furgeson, Susan Fry, Christy Cowden, Kathy Boles, Sully Hunt, Laura Black, Carolyn Britton and Holly Newman.

CAROL AND JACK STEELE and daughter, Laura, spent a delightful weekend in Austin recently, attending both the Longhorn Singers' spring concert and the Drama Department's Evening of Dance. Their daughter, Debra, a junior majoring in voice at UT, performs with the 85-member Longhorn singing group.

The Steeles also enjoyed a visit with their nephew, Rod Steele, who was stage manager for the dance concert. Due to graduate from UT with a degree in international business this summer, Rod will divide the summer months between Austin, where he will stage manage three shows for the Drama Department, and Santa Fe, where he has a drama internship at the Festival of Arts. He is the son of Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish of Midland and Newton Steele of Huntsville.

TO HONOR Tracy Reeves, bride-elect of Ed Ellis, a miscellaneous display shower was held recently in the home of Jane (Mrs. Johnny) Mulloy. Co-hostesses were Kathy Freeman, Melanie (Mrs. Kent) Johnston, Sally Kelly, Peggy (Mrs. Aubrey) Linne and Nancy (Mrs. Charles) Pierce.

Among the 70 guests were the honoree's mother, Beni (Mrs. Wayne) Shull of Houston, and the groom's mother, Nancy (Mrs. Cecil) Ellis of Midland, and his grandmother, Maurine (Mrs. Vernon) Blackley of Morton.

The couple will be married this Friday in a family wedding in Midland and will return to San Angelo to continue their studies at Angelo State University.

Midland Junior Leaguers attend Dallas conference

Three Midlanders, Mrs. Frank Powell, Mrs. Ferrell Davis and Mrs. John Woodside, will represent Midland at the 61st Annual Conference of the Association of Junior Leagues, Inc., being held this month at the Fairmont Hotel in Dallas.

The conference's theme, "Yesterday's Myths — Today's Realities," will focus on present-day realities of life experienced by three groups of people — women, youth and the elderly — as compared with society's expectations for "the good life."

This theme was chosen, according to Conference Chairman Jeanne Salerno of Omaha, Nebraska, "to enable conference delegates to refocus their thinking in order that they may provide their home communities the leadership necessary to respond realistically to human needs."

"Is youth a 'care-free time'? When women marry, do they 'live happily ever after'? Are senior citizens living out their 'golden years'? These are the questions we'll tackle," Association President Anne Hoover of Fort Wayne, Indiana said.

Thirty examples of successful community-based programs will be presented at the conference, including comprehensive youth services, women's resource centers, displaced homemakers programs, planning for independence and alternatives to institutionalization of the elderly. The workshops on these programs are designed to provide an opportunity to exchange information and programming ideas.

All junior leagues have the goals of promoting voluntarism, developing the members' potential in voluntary participation in community affairs and demonstrating the effectiveness of trained volunteers.

Mysterious wines of Spain, Portugal outstanding

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

The wines of Spain and Portugal have largely been a mystery to Americans, mostly because so few of the good wines of those nations have been imported and promoted here.

That, I suspect, will change in the coming year or two as we begin to awaken to the superb values, exciting nuances and, simply, the newness of the wines of these two countries.

I admit that virtually nothing from Spain or Portugal is going to turn the head of a Bordeaux fancier who demands Chateau Lafite. Even the best red and white wines of the Iberian peninsula are but a shadow of the great wines of the world — though a few red-wine efforts in the last few years have shown excellence.

However, having admitted that, it must then be said that nothing but nothing compares with the great sherries of Spain and the great ports of Portugal. Come to think of it, even the mediocre sherries and ports of Spain and Portugal, respectively, are better than most of the imitations made elsewhere.

And now comes a book that sets about trying to de-mystify these oft-misunderstood items in a sensible and simple way.

Starting with the direct title "Guide to Fortified Wines," authors Sheldon and Pauline Wasserman have assembled a book that clears up much for the novice and unveils curious, little-known facts for the person already aware of these countries.

In 200 pages, this $9.95 paperback (Marlorough Press, Morganville, N.J.) has as much as one would desire to know about all popular fortified wines, including Marsala, Madeira and Montilla. However, more than a third of the text is devoted to port. For those who'd rather not wade through some of the more voluminous works on the subject, this one has a fine, direct explication of what port is about.

And it's about time — time for Americans to discover the greatness in a well-made Portuguese port — a wine to savor after a meal.

Port, say the authors (and I agree), "is unlike the other great fortified wines," which they point out are white or golden in color. Port, they note, "is generally a red wine; and port retains a truly grapy flavor because the alcohol is added before fermentation is complete.

English spring: New dawns, new days

Copley News Service

— Rudyard Kipling- "In Springtime"

Anyone who has ever experienced an English spring can sigh along with the poet. And anyone who hasn't should give serious thought to such a journey.

Few places in the world offer such a sense of awakening, of new dawns, brighter days and the renewal of the whole cycle of life. Perhaps it's because the winters are often so dreary — gray, stone-cold, damp.

Or perhaps it's some magic uncovered by ancient Druids on stony hilltops that returns each year to warm the heart and offer new hope.

Whatever it is, suddenly the great stone buildings take on a new glow, the national monuments come alive with new meaning and the flowers in the stalls all over the cities seem to have a new freshness.

It's lover-ly.

It's not limited to England, of course. It covers all of Britain: from the tender willows along the riverbanks and lakeshores of Ireland, to the heather-strewn highlands of Scotland, to the crannied nooks of the castles and countryside of Wales.

It's the perfect time for a visit — and there's so much to do as well as to see that you'll be wishing your holiday was at least twice as long as it is.

To begin with, there's a festival of castles in Wales. Many of the more famous halls will be celebrating their 700th birthdays and there are plays, concerts, pageants, medieval banquets, jousting exhibitions all over the countryside.

Glasgow is extending an invitation to people worldwide who have roots in Glasgow and the west of Scotland to join in a variety of events and activities.

"There are some new-old coach tours originating in Glasgow this year called the Classique Sun Saloon Luxury Coach Tours. David Dean, the company's director has restored and operates motorcoaches from the 1940s and '50s.

"We try to take our passengers back 30 years, to preserve the standards of that time," he says. Prices, too, are old-fashioned: a four-day tour of the Scottish islands of Mull and Iona starts at 60 pounds — about $92 — including accommodations, breakfast and dinner.

Edinburgh is holding a folk festival with concerts, ceilidhs, lectures, exhibitions and such — a sort of warming-up for the great Edinburgh International Festival held every year in August. (And if you're thinking of attending THAT, you'd better make reservations now.)

The season is on at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford-upon-Avon, a particularly lovely spot to welcome spring and to drift on through the countryside, staying perhaps at any of the Trusthouses inns or possibly in a new group of country homes operating under the Wolsey Lodges banner.

These include a former vicarage, a Tudor manor house, a celebrated restaurant and a thatched cottage. (And the prices start as low as 7 pounds — that's about $11 in today's exchange.)

You can also book yourself into a series of incredibly beautiful country manor houses and castles whose charm and level of service will instantly convince you you've landed in some fantasy kingdom.

Such miracles are abundant in Ireland as well. There, accommodations range from lace curtain to near-shanty — something for every purse and preference. You can drive around on your own, stopping at castles or country houses or more modest bed-and-breakfast homes. You can book a cruise on the River Shannon or travel in a horse-drawn covered wagon at your own leisurely pace, stopping to fish in any of dozens of lovely streams. You have only to "turn right at the rosebush" to find legend and lore to fill a lifetime.

In London, 18,000 runners will be tracking across the city in the Gillette Marathon. Let's hope they'll slow down a bit to take in some of the great city's famed sights.

If it's a first visit, it's wise to take the "rubberneck tour" to get an idea of the general location of places you might want to visit at leisure later. The overall tour gives you a smattering of history and enough of a feeling for places to be able to find your own way later.

Surely, the changing of the guards is an ever-dramatic sight, and the weather should be fine enough to enjoy a pleasant cruise along the Thames. You can return to the Tower Bridge and enjoy the panorama from the glass-enclosed walkways. (Photographs identify the highlights on the skyline, and sliding-door camera slots make picture taking easy.) You can even stay at the Tower Hotel there, booked in a Britrail package that includes train travel and accommodations all over Britain.

Nearby is the relatively new Barbicon Centre, home to some of the best of English theater and spectacle. English theater is reason enough to visit London; if you like, you can book as many as three performances a day and still spend less on tickets than if you saw a single Broadway play.

But the best thing of all in London — indeed, in all of Britain — is simply to be there, and to let it come to you. The chance encounters with the obliging and friendly people; the round-the-clock beat of the busy cities; the tranquillity of the verdant countryside — they all add up to making you feel a most welcome guest in this rich, rich land.

Now is the perfect time to visit Britain. To enjoy an English cream tea at a charming cottage in Devonshire. Stroll through Kensington Gardens. See the Changing of the Guard at Buckingham Palace. To visit glorious Canterbury Cathedral in Kent or the thatched-roof villages of East Anglia. Or to hear the boys' choir at St. Paul's in London.

All of Britain's pomp and pageantry await you. And, with the dollar so strong, Britain is more affordable than ever. In fact, many of Britain's attractions cost the same or even less than last year. You simply couldn't pick a better time to go. And there's no better way to get there than with American Airlines.

London: 7 days, 6 nights from $179

That incredible price is per person, double occupancy, plus airfare. The tour includes comfortable hotel with private bath, Continental breakfast daily, half-day sightseeing, transfer by rail between airport and London. Offered by American Airlines and Jackson Tours – Package #IT2AA1JTL2; and Patrick Henry International – Package #IT3AA1HLAL.

British Isles Fly/Drive: 7 days, 6 nights from $279

Also per person, double occupancy, plus airfare. This tour includes economy car with unlimited mileage (gas, insurance extra) plus accommodations for 6 nights at any of over 200 Trusthouse Forte Hotels in England, Scotland and Wales. Offered by American Airlines and Jackson Tours – Package #IT3AA1JTTH; and Patrick Henry International – Package #IT3AA1HLFD1.

For more information and reservations for either of these great packages and information on American's low fares to London, call American Airlines toll-free at 800-433-7300. Or see your travel agent. For the "Beautiful Britain" and American Airlines brochures, send the coupon.

Preventive medicine travels everywhere

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Getting around the world in 80 days may have seemed pretty swift in its day, but did you ever hear of a Jules Verne character with jet lag?

Or, for that matter, la turista?

The latter, of course, has less to do with speed of flight than with eating and drinking when you get where you're going, but either can wreck a vacation or compromise a business or diplomatic mission. (What else but jet lag could put a president to sleep in the presence of a pope?)

According to Dr. Charles F. Ehret, a chronobiologist at the Argonne, Ill., National Laboratories, people have to adjust their internal time clocks by one hour every day just by staying in the same place — people run on a 25-hour day instead of the planet's 24.

A slow adjustment of up to three or four hours a day isn't so bad, so it wouldn't be noticed on a slow boat to China, for instance. A fast jet is quite another matter.

But remember: You only get jet lag traveling east or west too fast. Period.

Canada geese, Ehret points out, fly almost completely north-south. Likewise, he says, the gray whale that swims from Alaska to Mexico rarely dips into another time zone.

But people still determined to go east-west (the hardest to adjust to) and west-east can help their battered clocks to adjust, Ehret claims, by acknowledging these factors:

DIET: Because protein, carbohydrates and the methylxanthines (coffee, tea, chocolate) have varying effects on the brain and the body clocks, Ehret has come up with an exquisitely calibrated four-day feast-fast diet to precede takeoff. He also offers diet suggestions for either westbound or eastbound travel.

TIMING: Arrive as close to 8 a.m. (destination time) as possible. Try never to arrive between midnight and 5 a.m.

SOCIALIZATION: Sleep on the plane, exercise moderately when you awake and fit yourself into the daytime activities going on around you. It's easier to stay awake when you're involved.

Ehret's system for keeping jet lag in its place appears in his book, "Overcoming Jet Lag" (Berkley, $4.95), which also contains travel hints for such situations as special needs of the elderly or for those taking certain medications.

Although Ehret's system has never been tested scientifically, he has testimony from thousands of military and industrial executives who have used it in the past few years.

For a wallet-size card describing the Argonne Anti-Jet-Lag Diet, write Dr. Charles F. Ehret, Argonne National Laboratory, 9700 S. Cass Ave. Argonne, Ill. 60439.

Dr. Martin S. Wolfe, a specialist in tropical medicine and parasitology, is more concerned about the nasties laying in wait for you. He has picked up where the Public Health Service left off a few years ago and is providing advice, immunizations and laboratory analyses for people about to travel to parts far away and for those who have brought back unpleasant internal beasties and assorted afflictions acquired elsewhere.

A former State Department expert — he accompanied Henry Kissinger during his days as the world's most peripatetic diplomat — Wolfe now works as a consultant for State, the World Bank, the Peace Corps and other international institutions. In his private Traveler's Medical Service, he devotes a great deal of time to what he calls an "immunological virgin," the occasional, usually vacationing traveler.

Wolfe and his staff keep a day-by-day record of which disease may be breaking out in what countries so that only those immunizations required need be administered, and no one will go off without necessary immunizations.

"People," he says, "are going more and more off the beaten track, getting into places that only seasoned travelers got to 10 years ago."

There is also the problem of "some people taking prophylactic (preventive) drugs in excess, taking potentially dangerous drugs when they don't really need them. You have to tailor recommendations to the person's itinerary."

Such as: "You have to be careful that a person going to India or Pakistan or parts of Southeast Asia won't be stopping in Africa, because if a plane so much as touches down in Nairobi, for example, Indian authorities might deny entry without evidence of a yellow fever shot." This could leave the traveler with the unpleasant options of being quarantined or aborting his trip and going back on the next flight.

Some health hazards are limited to particular countries and sometimes, as is often the case with malaria, for instance, to certain parts of many countries.

And sometimes individual countries, or areas, have specific hazards. The sobriquets for traveler's diarrhea — such as "Montezuma's revenge" or "Delhi belly" — often are hints about where they may be encountered.

Then there are hazards either so widespread or so serious that some preventive measures are recommended by travel-medicine specialists like Dr. Wolfe.

Some examples:

POLIO: Although polio vaccine is used almost universally in this country and its incidence is very low, it still appears in many parts of the world. People who have had the series and one booster are considered to have a lifelong immunity. Others should be completely immunized.

DIPHTHERIA AND TETANUS: Immunization should be renewed every 10 years.

YELLOW FEVER: Shots available only at specific centers because of its perishability. Generally recommended for travelers to tropical Latin America and much of Africa. The shots last for 10 years, may not be given to pregnant women, infants or people allergic to eggs.

CHOLERA: Shots not recommended, largely because they don't work very well. "In a sense we try to discourage cholera shots unless it is being required by countries near other countries experiencing outbreaks."

HEPATITIS: Doses of gamma globulin before traveling in tropical areas and in places with poor hygiene can almost completely protect against the hepatitis-A virus. Not usually recommended for children under 12 because the virus generally causes only mild symptoms in younger children.

MALARIA: "This is a killer, and it can be prevented." Malaria occurs wherever mosquitoes abound, uncontrolled, especially in tropical areas. Drugs that usually prevent it: chloroquine alone or, in areas where the parasite has become resistant, with a long-acting sulfa compound called Fansidar.

Important to begin the drug (or drugs) in weekly doses one week before going into malarious areas and continue it for four to five weeks after leaving. The drugs may have side effects and should not be taken by pregnant women.

"It is also important to know that some cities, even in Asia and Africa, are free of malaria; that malaria mosquitoes bite only in the evening-nighttime hours and that even young infants need to be totally protected, even with the preventive drugs. After all, it only takes one bite. ..." (And don't forget insect repellents.)

DIARRHEA: This bane of the casual traveler can be caused by bacteria, virus or parasite. Usually more annoying than disabling. Preventive doses of a drug called doxycycline may help, although it can itself cause stomach upset, sun sensitivity and is effective only against bacteria, including E-coli, the main culprit in traveler's diarrhea.

Large daily doses of Pepto Bismol (only the liquid, not the tablets) have been found to be an effective preventive, and can be used successfully against a moderate episode. Lomotil, for which a prescription is needed, is a strong anti-diarrhea drug, but can cause drowsiness.

Smallpox vaccinations are no longer required for re-entry to the United States. The disease has not been reported anywhere in the world for about five years. The risk of the shot is greater than the risk of the disease.

With Antigua's near-perfect weather, a vacationer could visit one of the Carribean island's many small hidden coves any day of the year, via a day trip or longer cruise on private yachts available for hire.

Get 'Antigua-ted' in near-perfect weather

Copley News Service

Adm. Horatio Nelson had no idea he was creating a tourist attraction when he sailed his fleet into English Harbor on the southern coast of Antigua in 1784.

Nelson's Dockyard and the nearby Shirley Heights areas of the tropical island deep in the heart of the Caribbean Sea are the highlights of the former British colony.

Those visiting the island for the day on one of the cruise ships which ply the nearby waters and those coming by jet to stay a week or more will have no problem traveling the 15 miles from the island's capital of St. John to the harbor.

But those who come on their own private yachts — which many do — may have trouble finding the place. English Harbor is landlocked, and only those who know the way will be able to find their way into its sheltered waters. It was this naturally camouflaged anchorage that attracted Nelson to the spot and convinced him to berth the British fleet there during the Napoleonic War.

Most of the 200-year-old buildings in Nelson's Dockyard have been restored, and it is enough for most visitors to just wander among the brick and stone buildings. There is the guardhouse and the paymaster's house, the sail loft and the engineer's workshop. Down by the wharf are giant capstans which were used to haul up anchors. Several of these huge rusty anchors lie awkwardly on their sides nearby.

The Admiral's House is now a museum, with a collection of papers and other mementos of the naval commander, as well as models and maritime artifacts.

One of the old buildings houses a craft shop offering hammocks, hand-carved walking sticks, tropical fashions and souvenirs.

The past and the present have blended together in English Harbor, for tied up near the centuries-old buildings are modern sailing vessels and motor yachts.

These new-day sailors spend their lives sailing the turquoise-blue waters of the Caribbean, either for hire to visiting tourists or just for the sheer pleasure of enjoying the sun and spray.

Day trips or longer cruises on these private yachts are available, and one of the most popular pastimes is sailing along the jagged Antigua coastline and anchoring in one of its many small, hidden coves.

Each one has a beach sheltered within its rocky arms, a private paradise only a few can find.

For those who would rather just sit back and look at the sailboats as they pass in review rather than stand on their rolling decks, take a seat at the Admiral's Inn, a quaint Caribbean-style inn adjacent to Nelson's Dockyard. The inn, housed in a restored 200-year-old building, has a quiet shaded patio bar overlooking the harbor ideal for those who want to sit back with a cool planters punch and watch the world go by.

Outside, native women have spread blankets on the ground and offer visitors their handmade bead necklaces, straw baskets or not-so-native T-shirts.

Those who want to watch the harbor activity from a loftier perch should travel up the hillside across the bay to Clarence House, country home of the island's governor.

It was constructed in 1787 for Prince William Henry, the duke of Clarence, who later became King William IV, the Sailor King. The prince served under Nelson and had the house built upon the hillside so he could watch his ship.

Cayman Islands expected to 'visit' Texas' Port Arthur

The Cayman Islands will be "transported to Texas" next September.

A three-night package highlighted by a "Barefoot Man" concert and a visit to nearby "Pleasure Islands" will be the second such event in Port Arthur, Texas.

The "Cayman's Weekend Party" represents the joint efforts of Cayman Airways, the City of Port Arthur and Port Arthur's visitors and convention bureau.

The planned festivities were conceived because of the large number of Caymanians living in the Port Arthur area. The event was inaugurated in 1982, and was well attended by Caymanians from across the U.S. as well as the Cayman Islands. This year, the "Party" is expected to be better attended and larger in scope. The package is comprehensive. The two main events are an excursion to the 3,500-acre "Pleasure Islands" resort, where guests will be treated to Cajun cusines, drinks and entertainment, as well as the live appearance of the Barefoot Man and Band at the Port Arthur Civic Center. Barfoot is from the Cayman Islands and is well known throughout the Carribbean.

Houstonian's Ambassador House: POSH and startling lifestyle

Text by Carolyn Fitz-Gerald
Travel Writer

I thought about sorority membership when I was in college; I now belong to a church and two clubs but I had never even considered joining a hotel until I spent the weekend at the Houstonian's new private guest facility called The Ambassador House.

Actually, it is the old Phoenix Spa mansion refurbished to offer guests European ambiance in the heart of Houston.

And what an ambience is ... The Ambassador house includes that room with leather wing chairs and men in smoking jackets found in all English spy novels: The library. A lounge, a bar and a sculpture garden around the pool make up the house which connects via a bridge to a wing of the Houstonian Hotel which has been refitted in the European tradition.

In the midst of chintz and Chippendale, The Ambassador House has not overlooked those much-loved American touches such as bathrobes, 24-hour room service and complimentary cheese and wine daily. The reason for the exclusive addition which is open only to members and their guests is that the Houstonian has responded to a continuing quest for privacy among their higher income hotel guests.

For an annual membership fee of $650, members may enjoy total privacy as well as the equivalent of a $200 room for $65. They may invite their friends at double the rate. With the room come all the privileges of the adjacent fitness center, which includes an indoor and outdoor track, sauna, whirlpool, steam room and locker rooms. There are always exercise classes and tennis and the Phoenix Spa is now open to men concurrently with the women-only weekly programs. For the busy executive, there are one day ($150) and half day ($75) sprees at the Phoenix Spa which include nutrition lectures, meals, beauty treatment and exercise classes.

I selected a book from the library (an Agatha Christie, of course), sunned around the pool and then stopped to read awhile in the Victorian gazebo nestled in the pines.

Tom and Judy Fatjo, left, owners of the Houstonian, and actress Shirley MacLaine at the Houstonian Estates opening.

Emerging from the gazebo, I just had to time to dress for attendance at a black tie supper celebrating the opening of the Houstonian Estates.The high rise condominium complex on the Houstonian grounds lies two miles from the Galleria and is bordered by Memorial Park.

To enter the Estates is to sweep past the gatehouse and into a palm-fringed entry with coffered ceilings. The party, formal and hished, immediately became lively for me as I entered the hors d'oeuvre area off the pool and came face to face with a coiled rattlesnake, pickled and decorating the center of a silver platter of, what else? Rattlesnake. This startling bit of Texas panache was offset by Houstonian lifestyle cuisine in the Houstonian suite which consisted mostly of fruit, cheese and vegetables with no life-like decorations.

Although the main course was buffalo, antelope and other wild game, there were no mounted animals in attendance at the third floor condo with lively Western music in the background.

Remembering the rattlesnake but still pleasantly surprised by the main course, I took courage and went on to berries and champagne on the 26th floor where I was greeted by multi-leveled marble and the soft strains of harp music. Grateful that the only unusual attraction was actress Shirley MacLaine, I was enviously admiring her figure when a Houstonian staff-member volunteered that she is in the track every day and also works out with Phoenix Spa director Chris Silkwood in order to maintain her svelteness. In Houston to film the motion picture, "Terms of Endearment" MacLaine was all smiles as she visited with Houstonian owners Tom and Judy Fatjo.

After looking out over the treetops at the glittering Houston skyline from the penthouse valued at $1.2 milion, I returned to my room at the Ambassador House, read my Agatha Christie for a few minutes, nestled down in the canopied bed, treated myself to the Godiva mint left by housekeeping and imagined that I was a member and could immerse myself in The Ambassador House lifestyle any time. By giving up gasoline, the beauty salon and eating out, I figure I can just about afford it.

Man enjoys dangerous bobcat hunting business

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — After seven years of trapping, tracking and observing bobcats in the Southern California backcountry, Mike Lembeck has some opinions:

— Where the food and cover conditions are right, you might find three to five bobcats every square mile.

— You trap the same bobcat 16 times, as he has in one instance, and that bobcat is just as wild the 16th time as he was the first. He never changes, he's wild, combative and dangerous.

— The preferred food among bobcats is rabbit, which they ambush and run down. Mice and rodents are No. 2. When a bobcat gets old and weary, but not before then, he'll settle for a skunk.

Lembeck, 41, is a bright, dedicated fish and wildlife biologist doing his trapping under the aegis of the California Department of Fish and Game, with funding from Safari Club International and San Diego County Fish and Game Commission.

He has taught himself the ways of the animals. He has invented a humane trap that does not injure the animals, and has tranquilized 235 animals without a fatality.

When an animal steps into Lembeck's trap, as 150 bobcats have, he slips a noose, attached to a long pole, around its neck. Then he tries to grab its two hind legs with his leather glove and shoots the animal in the hip with a hypodermic syringe containing a Ketamine-Acepromazine tranquilizer.

As the cat slumbers, he weighs and measures it. He buckles a radio collar, whose batteries have about a two-year life expectancy, around its neck. Then he lays the groggy animal in a cool, safe place and waits in the shadows till the beast has recovered and disappeared into the bush.

The life of the transmitter is a variable. With a coyote, it might send signals for 27 months. With a bobcat, perhaps 20 months. Seven months is long for a fox, which runs in the densest brush imaginable.

Wildlife biologists frequently write that a female will do this, a male will do that, and a kitten will react in a particular way. Lembeck isn't buying it.

"Every animal, every bobcat, every fox is different," he says. "One roams, one stays home, one travels a particular path, one takes another route."

He is learning that animals, like the bass he has belled in previous experiments, are individuals which do not react similarly to particular situations.

With his receiver, he can ride in his truck around a trap area and locate the animals wearing radio collars. Each collar emits a different beep which he recognizes. Invariably, he'll pick up the radio signal before he spots the bobcat. Often, knowing precisely where the animal is located, he still can't see it, so shrewdly do wild things use cover and concealment.

"See it? Over there behind that bush," he'll say.

No. The bobcat stays hidden from all but the eagle-eye trapper and his tracking device.

The largest cat he has trapped weighed 17 and one-quarter pounds. He saw two others in another man's trap which weighed 19 pounds. He has seen only one kitten in seven years of trapping.

What does he deduce from the kitten statistic? "They're not making it. It's a tough world out there," he said.

Recently, he had an orange tabby, an old male, in one of his leg traps. It was the first time the animal had been captured. It was immediately named Pumpkin, for its color, by a Lembeck assistant. It was tranquilized, weighed and measured: 15 pounds, 3 ounces, 35 inches from tip of nose to tip of its bobtail, 19-inch-long back legs, 17.5-inch-long front legs.

"He's not so tough," Lembeck said. "Buster was three times tougher than this one. He'd really wreck the countryside."

DEAR ABBY

BY ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The lonely widow – is she a myth?

The older women I know seem to think sex is messy, disagreeable and very tiring. Their indoor sports consist of cards, bingo and bragging about their grandchildren.

Twenty years ago, as a happily married employee of a large retirement facility, I used to feel sorry for the many "brokenhearted widows." Now I'm beginning to wonder if perhaps they don't prefer it that way. As a 70-year-old widower, I have made several "moves," only to find myself facing a wall of indifferenece. Here is a sample of the responses I've had when I've called to invite a lady out:

1. "Sorry. I'm leaving for St. Paul to see my grandchildren and won't be back for a while."

2. "I have to work in the church kitchen all afternoon, and by evening I'll be exhausted."

3. "I can't go to the dance with you – I broke my leg yesterday." (I never did check that one out.)

Am I expecting too much? Or is it me? – LONESOME IN A SMALL TOWN

DEAR LONESOME: The first thing you mentioned was how these ladies feel about sex, which leads me to believe that for openers you come on too strong in that department. Think about it. That could be your problem.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago I read in your column that there were tours for non-smokers.

At the time my husband and I were not interested because we smoked. Since then, he has quit (doctor's orders) and so did I, so he wouldn't be tempted to start smoking again.

Now we're interested in taking a tour this summer with other non-smokers. Where do we write for information? -- LOUISVILLE FANS

DEAR FANS: Write to: Non-Smokers' Travel Club, 8928 Broadmore, Bethesda, Md. 20034.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 39-year-old woman, and my mother is a very youthful-looking 61. When I introduce my mother, people invariably say, "You look just like sisters!"

I find this statement very uncomplimentary (to me), since my mother is 22 years older than I.

How should I handle this situation? – "YOUNGER SISTER"

DEAR "SISTER": Look "proud" (even if it kills you) because you should be proud of a 61-year-old mother who looks that great.

If it's a compliment you want, you must have been a very good daughter, or your mother would probably have looked her age.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "ON THE FENCE IN WAUKEGAN": A woman who marries a widower who says, "Remember -- my children come first" should expect the worst. And she's rarely disappointed.

Face mask may eliminate snoring

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A rubber mask that fits over the nose and keeps a crucial airway open could prove the end of noisy snoring, according to the two doctors who developed the device.

The mask, developed by Drs. Richard B. Berry and A. Jay Block of Gainesville, Fla., prevents a lower throat airway behind the tongue from becoming blocked. The blockage may cause loud snoring, the doctors said.

The mask is promoted for use by men. But Berry said after he advertised for heavy snorers, all those responding were women fed up with their mates' noisy snoring.

"These women were saying, 'Help me,'" Berry said. "The level of snoring we wanted to study was the type that drives lots of wives to the other end of the house."

Berry, who spoke Tuesday at the annual meeting of the American Lung Association, described the technique involving the rubber mask as nasal continuous positive airway pressure.

AT WIT'S END

Marriage test

BY ERMA BOMBECK

Young people nowadays are resisting marriage because they want guarantees. They want to know that before they say, "I do," he "will" and she'll "try."

I don't blame 'em. Marriage is not a commitment to be taken lightly. I've always felt there are several ways a couple can test themselves to see if they could survive a term as husband and wife.

1. Nurse him through a simple cold.

2. Have him give you directions anywhere.

3. Have a meaningful conversation.

These are all "stress situations," but if you really want to test compatibility, you can go for the big one by playing Monopoly with your future spouse.

If I had played Monopoly with my husband just once before we were married, there is no doubt in my mind that today I would be on the arm of Duane Farquardt. If I saw my present husband across a crowded room, I'd say, "Let's get out of here, Duane, he's the turkey I was telling you about who once charged me $3,029 for landing on Park Place."

His eyes become cold and impersonal, his jaw is set. He coolly surveys the entire board with the intensity of a hostess who has just found something moving in her raisin pudding.

As you throw the dice, he meets your gaze across the board and pronounces sharply, "I own the Boardwalk. If you want to stay in the game, you'll have to sell me all your utilities. I'll give you $150 for all three."

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS FOR ALL THREE! Is this the man talking for whom you have borne three children, picked lint off his socks, hand-washed his elastic stockings, trimmed his hair over the ears when he couldn't get to the barber, burnt your fingers on his three-minute eggs, kissed goodnight when he had a lip full of Novocaine?

I told him one night, "There are winners and there are winners, but Lord, I hate a winner who smiles when he wins!"

So all of you people out there contemplating marriage (and you all know who you are), sit down at the Monopoly board and play a game. Better to know now that a man will not give you fake funny money when it's just lying there in a box than to find out after you're married.

Mansion attracts tourists

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Bringing Southern style and elegance to Pennsylvania residents, the Governor's Home, a three-story Georgian brick mansion, is open for its fifth consecutive season of public guided tours.

More than 100,000 visitors have toured the first floor of the 30-room mansion since the beginning of the Dick Thornburgh administration.

The house was built in 1968 on three acres along the Susquehanna River. In 1972, floodwaters from Hurricane Agnes destroyed the grounds and rose as high as 5 feet inside the house.

About $200,000 has since been collected through private donations to restore the landscaping.

"We're proud of this house because it belongs to the people of Pennsylvania, not the Thornburgh family," said Ginny Thornburgh, the governor's wife.

"It's officially called the Executive Mansion," she added, "but we prefer to think of it as a home because we have four sons and a dog and a family that lives here.

"All but two pieces (of furniture) on the first floor belong to the commonwealth," she said. "When you move from a modest home to a very elegant home like this one, your own things are a little inadequate."

Much of the artwork is on permanent loan from Pennsylvania museums, and the mansion is also the site of a series of exhibitions titled "Salute to Pennsylvania's Artistic Heritage."

While last year's exhibit, "Pennsylvania Treasures," highlighted the works of the state's senior citizens, the 1983 season will feature artwork of students at accredited art schools with master's programs in sculpture.

Beginning the tour at the state entrance, visitors enter the hall and progress to the state area of the mansion. The reception room and state dining room, decorated in stately shades of cream and gold, are next.

Continental egg dish

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

America consumes more eggs than any country in the world, and they are increasingly in demand as a substitute for high-priced meat and fish.

One popular version of scrambled eggs with continental overtones is Scotch Woodcock.

SCOTCH WOODCOCK

8 eggs
¼ cup chopped fresh parsley
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon Tabasco
¼ cup butter
8 slices of toast, buttered
1 2 oz. can anchovy fillets, drained
1 tablespoon capers, drained

In large bowl, combine eggs, milk, parsley, salt and Tabasco; beat with fork. In large skillet, melt butter over medium heat. Pour in egg mixture. As mixture sets gently draw pancake turner across it forming large soft, curds. Continue cooking until eggs are thickened but still moist.

Tish Sommers, president of OWL — the Older Women's League — a rapidly growing national advocacy organization for women at midlife ages or older.

OWL working for older women

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Tish Sommers would like to see America honor its matriarchs with something substantial — say pension plans, health insurance and a stronger, more equitable, Social Security system.

Says Sommers: "Older women are the fastest-growing poverty group in America."

As founder and president of the Older Women's League (OWL) — a rapidly growing advocacy organization for midlife and older women — Sommers led a series of "motherhood and apple-pie actions" directed at Social Security officials in 20 cities in March to dramatize women's place at the bottom of the barrel.

The "apple actions" marked a milestone for OWL, which moved its national office from Sommers' neighborhood of Oakland, Calif., to the District of Columbia.

"When we first organized in 1980," says Sommers, "we knew we'd have to move to Washington if we were going to have an impact on public policy. Now we're ready."

OWL staffers are lobbying Congress for Social Security, pension and health-care reform; members in more than 70 chapters around the country have begun organizing older women in their communities.

Their goals: "To change two things," says Sommers. "National policy and our image.

"Consider the stereotype. Generally when you see an older women in an ad, she's talking about illness." While older men may be portrayed as distinguished and wise, "older women are either comic relief or pitiable.

"We want to convey the message that older women have value, beauty and significance. The last half of our lives can be the most active, vigorous and vital.

"Local chapters have already started to make a difference in member's lives. We plan to start OWL walking clubs, both for health and social benefits. There's a great deal of self-help older women can give each other."

AT WORK

Making a career change

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Q. I am so discouraged. I have been a legal secretary for the past 20 years. Two years ago I decided to change careers and get my real estate license. I wanted to sell commercial real estate, and feel good about my life as well. I also wanted to make more money.

But that's not what happened. I got my license but I can't get a job selling. The economy is against me. All the real estate managers say that there is not enough business for the people already in it. So I did what most successful people suggested: I got myself involved in clubs and activities and asked for leads. I called them all and sent out my resume by the hundreds but have gotten no positive response.

What can I do now? I believe that one should not have to "live to work," but "work to live," and get satisfaction and self-esteem from one's chosen career.

A. I appreciate your attempts and I cheer your ambition. But one of the hardest aspects about choosing what you want to do is that although you want to do one particular thing, you can't do it if there is no market for it.

First, you've come from secretarial work to sales. That's a big leap — especially without any experience. You should try selling on a less risky level first, no matter whether you sell real estate or handbags or computers. If you can't get a commission-plus-salary job selling any product, then take advantage of the training programs that accompany the various enterprises, for example, Amway or Avon.

You'll learn how to be more entrepreneurial, more sales-oriented. If you discover you really like sales, then you can move to real estate next.

Second, if you don't want to do anything outside the real estate field despite the bad market, and you can't sell them on hiring you as a saleswoman, then just get in anyway and see what happens. Take a job as a secretary inside a company and build your opportunity from there.

Don't flood the field with resumes because it's unsalesmanlike, as well as unproductive. Look for some tie with your own background, say, a real estate attorney who needs your expertise and would be willing to develop you so that once the market turns around, you'll have a chance. Or, work for a real estate appraiser and learn that trade until the situation breaks.

Q. I have progressed with a growing company which has just been purchased by a much larger one. The new company has not as yet identified its direction or even its president. I am nervous about where I stand, and where my mentors stand in the new structure. Should I bide my time, play it safe, and refrain from definite action until the leadership is identified?

A. Yes. Do some research on the leaders of the new company — their backgrounds and records — so you understand who they are and what they might want. If you know anyone of importance in their group, ask what the future plans look like, tell your own growth, contributions and wish to be recommended.

Sunglass syndrome

BOSTON (AP) — A researcher who noticed three women complaining of facial numbness believes he has discovered a new summer hazard — "sunglass syndrome."

The problem emerged at the start of last summer's tanning season. The three noticed the area below their eyes, cheeks, noses and upper teeth felt numb, according to an article in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Grant R. Gwinup of the University of Arizona College of Medicine in Tucson said he thinks the cause is big sunglasses that put pressure on facial nerves.

All three had worn large sunglasses for several hours a day during the two or three weeks before the trouble began. When they gave up the glasses, their numbness gradually went away.

Gwinup said he consulted several physicians and dentists, and one of them had heard of the problem.

"The facts that three patients with this syndrome were seen in a short period and that one dentist was familiar with the syndrome and knew the cause suggest that there may be a considerable number of people with the 'sunglass syndrome,'" Gwinup wrote.

"Big cat keeper": a job to roar over

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — At 6 in the morning the San Diego Zoo canyon where the "big cats" live is in deep shade, chilly and damp. The occasional squawk of some exotic bird, the crowing of cocks strutting in the shrubbery and the whir of a street-cleaning machine are the only sounds.

The cats themselves are quiet.

Standing one below the other on the upper levels of their enclosure, two magnificent Siberian tigers look over the peaceful road which will remain empty of visitors for three more hours.

Looking up at the male, Karen Mosser says: "Larry has a roar that will knock your socks off. Wait until you hear it."

THE ZOO'S BIG-CAT keeper for over a year, Mosser, 31, says Larry's mighty roar took her breath away the first time she went to feed him — the only one of her "kids" to have such an effect.

This kid weighs about 500 pounds, more than the tigers, which average a little over 400; the jaguars, 250; North Chinese leopards, 130, and the snow leopards, about 100.

"Big cats are like total weapons," she said. "They are all teeth, claws, speed and accuracy. You wouldn't have a chance if one decided to go after you. That is why we can never have close physical contact with them."

Mosser feeds the cats; observes them for signs of illness and unusual behavior or changes in weight; sees that their "suites" are clean, and keeps check on the growth of foliage and trees surrounding their enclosures.

In addition to the lions, tigers, jaguars and snow and North Chinese leopards, her charges include Indochinese leopards, Scottish wildcats and Chinese wild dogs.

ARRIVING A LITTLE BEFORE 6 in her tan-gray zoo uniform, Mosser makes her first stop at the food station where she puts on knee-high rubber boots and packs into a red plastic container the food she had weighed, wrapped and marked according to the cats' individual diets the day before.

At the cloud leopards' suite, Mosser walks past the front of the exhibit area as thousands of visitors do each day, then stops to scale a fence, and walks up the slope to the animals' private quarters.

The quarters behind the exhibit areas, hidden from public view by synthetic rocks with cavelike openings, are much alike at all of the cat enclosures. They include separate "bedrooms" for each animal and a "sunroom," or cage, where an animal is put if, for some reason, it needs to be separated from its companions in the exhibit area.

"The animals eat alone in their bedrooms," she says. "They would fight over the food if they ate together."

AFTER UNLOCKING AND entering the wire-enclosed rectangular yard behind the bedroom, Mosser looks through heavy iron bars to make sure no leopard is inside. Then, pulling down a lever, she closes an iron door separating the bedroom from the exhibit enclosure.

Now safe from the leopard, she unlocks the barred door, swings it open and crawls into the bedroom to remove a large bone. Then the fresh food for the day is placed inside and the door locked.

"Wild animals tend to gain weight in captivity and we have to watch their diets carefully," Mosser says. "The cats are fed five days a week, receive only large beef bones on Monday and fast on Thursday."

The meals the cats receive include horsemeat, fish, beef, a small chicken and vitamins. Before unwrapping and placing the leopard's portion in the opened bedroom, Mosser points to the metal floor.

"THIS IS A WATERBED, not in the sense that we think of waterbeds, but this is a (sheet aluminum) container filled with water to keep the animals warm when it gets very cold and damp," she says.

"The first beds were made half the size of the bedroom and the leopards ripped them to pieces the first night. These cover the entire floor, leaving no space for the animals to grip the metal."

Placing the food in the bedroom, Mosser closes and locks the door. Then repeats the whole procedure with the other bedroom. Only when the food is in both rooms and both doors securely locked does she push up the levers opening the doors to admit the animals from the exhibit area.

Before coming to the zoo as big-cat keeper, Mosser was a San Diego Wild Animal Park keeper of such hoofed animals as antelope, gazelle, rhinocerous and giraffes.

"The cats are more of a boost to your ego," she says. "No matter how often you have fed hoofed animals, they ignore you, form no close attachments. Even without physical contact, the cats pay more attention to you. Your presence seems to mean something to them."

TAKE PUMPKIN, for example.

"Soon after I got this string (of cats) I discovered that the Pumpkin had an odd fixation on me," she says.

Pumpkin, a male snow leopard, stands watching as Mosser comes within view of the exhibit area he shares with his mate, Squash. When he is let into the bedroom, he places his beautiful face against the bars to look at her before bending to eat.

"He watches me so closely that I am unable to observe him as I should. No matter how I try, the longest I have ever been able to watch without his knowing is 30 seconds. At times, Squash will come along and bat him almost as though she were jealous. Even that doesn't take his mind off pacing and watching."

Mosser is always alert for behavior changes among cats living together. Like other animals, including humans, long association may cause discontent leading to fights. If they begin to spat, the animals are separated, one going to the sunroom and the other remaining in the exhibit area.

SEPARATIONS ARE ROUTINE when cubs are born. Adult males and cubs are never left together because of the great danger that the male will destroy the cub.

Male cubs are isolated as soon as they show signs of sexual maturity, at about 1 year. Their sexual interest will extend to even their mothers and the zoo does not breed within families.

"Once the old hormones begin to flow, the personalities of these animals change," Mosser says. "Even hand-raised big cats become too ferocious for association with humans after sexual maturity."

Mussolini's plan

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Mussolini wanted more than control of the Mediterranean basin for Italy when he joined forces with Hitler, according to a new book by a University of Rochester historian.

Changes in low-sodium foods potassium content hazardous

BOSTON (AP) — Small changes in the potassium content of food can have a dramatic effect on people with kidney failure, two doctors warned today after some patients had an adverse reaction to a new type of low-sodium canned soup.

The doctors issued their warning after discovering hyperkalemia, or high blood levels of potassium, in kidney patients who ate Campbell's low-sodium soup, which was introduced in March 1982.

The doctors noticed the problem in patients in their hospital's kidney ward, and learned the kitchen was serving the new soup.

Unlike the low-salt line the company has sold for several years, the newer variety comes in bigger cans, has more ingredients and contains twice as much potassium per ounce.

"Patients with renal (kidney) failure who are using low-sodium Campbell's soup should be advised to use the old line," said Drs. William H. Bay and Judith A. Hartman of University Hospitals in Columbus, Ohio, in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Altitude affects hormones

BOSTON (AP) — Scientists who monitored their bodies as they climbed Mount Everest discovered that high altitudes have an impact on hormones, according to a report published today.

The scientists said concentrations of two thyroid hormones rose progressively as they neared the summit of the world's highest peak.

"It is clear that residence at high altitudes above 16,500 feet is not possible for prolonged periods of time," said Dr. John P. Mordes of the University of Massachusets Medical Center.

Eleven scientists and physicians were among the 17 climbers who made the journey up the mountain in 1981. The thryoid experiment was described in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Doctors along on the journey took samples of the climbers' blood at sea level and again at 17,700 feet and 20,700 feet. The results showed increasing amounts of the thryoid hormones thyroxine and triiodothyronine in the men's blood.

Brain hormone light sensitive

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The light-sensitive hormone melatonin comes exclusively from the pineal gland deep within the brain, Drs. Edward Neuwelt and Alfred Lewy of Oregon Health Sciences University reported in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"This (discovery) will lead to better diagnosis and treatment of patients with pineal tumors," Lewy, a psychiatrist, said Wednesday. "It also will help us use melatonin to test the biological rhythms and light sensitivity in humans."

The loss of melatonin after removal of the pineal gland was demonstrated following brain tumor surgery on a Roseburg man.

Lewy said the body produces melatonin at night and stops producing it during the day. Secretion also varies seasonally, with more produced during long winter nights than during short summer nights.

High school football needs better hygiene

CHICAGO (AP) — Putting more emphasis on hygiene would help cut chances that football players will pick up a mild form of meningitis, a study concludes.

The study, published in the Journal of American Medical Association for release today, focused on seven outbreaks of the disease during 1978 and 1980 among high school football players in New York, Missouri, North Carolina and Ohio.

Investigators from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta found the players susceptible to the disease because they practice at the height of the autumn virus season and have close physical contact in conditions that are not hygenic.

FABRIC SECRETS

If you have a bodice that tends to bunch in back directly under the collar, it is necessary to remove the collar and rip out both shoulder seams to make the necessary adjustment. Then, using a pattern that you know fits, remark the shoulder and neckline and cut off the excess. You see, the problem is not with the collar but your bodice. Too much material from the waistline to the neckline is generally the cause of a bunching problem. As a result, once remarked, resew the garment just as you would in making a new garment.

Don't ever hesitate to ask one of us here at LEGGETTS FABRICS for any assistance in your latest project whether it involves helping you choose the right pattern and material or giving you hints about adjustments for proper fit. If you are new to this area you will be amazed at our wide selection of items. Make us your first stop and chances are excellent you will never go elsewhere. We are located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No.9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101 "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain".

In the summer, intense Texas heat can make your air conditioner work longer and drive your electric bill up in a hurry.

Our Average Billing Plan can help by "averaging out" your payments. You still pay for all the electricity you use, and your payments will still vary from month to month. However, in high-use months you pay for less electricity than you use, and in low-use months you pay for more.

Average Billing can help smooth out high summer electric bills. It's available to both residential customers and churches. If you'd like to know more, give us a call at Texas Electric.

FNB to cover Midland with ATMs

The First National Bank of Midland has announced plans to install remote automatic teller machines and commercial depositories at several locations throughout Midland. The new facilities will be called RESOURCE Banking Centers and can be used by a First National Bank customer with a RESOURCE Card.

A First National customer will be able to use a RESOURCE Card to withdraw cash, make deposits, transfer funds, and make balance inquiries on Regular Checking Accounts, NOW/Super NOW Accounts or Money Market Accounts at any of the RESOURCE Centers.

Commercial depositories will also be available at each RESOURCE Banking Center for commercial customers to make business deposits. A business manager will be issued a RESOURCE Card for his commercial account which will allow use of the RESOURCE Center to make commercial deposits at any time of the day or night.

An automatic teller machine (ATM) is an unmanned electronic unit designed to perform teller-type banking transactions 24 hours a day. ATMs were introduced in many areas of the United States in the late 1960s. The development was heralded as a major step in the evolution of electronic funds transfer for the banking industry.

General public acceptance has been proven by the exceptional volume of transactions made on the machines and the growing demand for ATMs in many parts of the country.

Until recently, Texas banks have been prevented from making the most effective use of ATMs. Texas' banking laws restrict branch banking, and prior to August 1, 1981, the locations of ATMs off bank premises were considered branch facilities. Banks in Texas are now able to install ATMs off premises within the county of their primary facilities.

Malls sold on Midland

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Midland had no major shopping mall to call its own until very recently. The city had comparatively few outlets for consumer spending up to three years ago.

Midland Park Mall opened in late 1980, with 750,000 square feet of lease space housing various national and local merchants. These merchants were willing to pay a premium off the top of their monthly sales receipts — if sales were large — to lease space in a mall.

Last year, the merchants — major stores along with "inline" tenants — sold about $65 million in merchandise to Midlanders and visitors.

JC Penney, Dillards, and Sears are the major anchors for the mall, with smaller anchor stores Sakowitz and Bealls. About 100 smaller tenants are also in the mall. A high percentage of these stores are locally-owned or locally-franchised, a fact the mall takes pride in.

"We have everyone who would come into this market, right now," Pamela Leach, mall marketing director said. "Other stores watch this mall to see what's happening in the Midland-Odessa market. Stores like Neiman-Marcus, Joske's, Foley's, and Sanger Harris have their eye on Midland" for future development.

RIGHT NOW, this mall's occupancy rate is at a stable 97 percent, she said.

The dominance Ms. Leach said the mall has its region can bring "higher-line merchandise" of better quality, she said. "There is constant communication between these merchants and their home offices, other stores, and buyers at their headquarters."

"Our research indicates this mall may be even stronger than regional — it may be super-regional," Ms. Leach said recently. "Midland Park Mall has been very successful. We have a good strong base here, and in five to seven years, if the market grows, we'd like to expand here."

There is little room to expand on Midland Park Mall's present land.

Expansion can be handled in different ways — not adding a floor or a new shop, but building a new, connected shopping center. Ms. Leach said, "We've used a glass-enclosed transit tube to expand centers where there was not additional room on-property."

Ms. Leach said, "We had room for one more (merchant) in the parking lot, but that deal (handled in the mall's Indianapolis headquarters) should be firmed up by now."

ONE "FREESTANDING" tenant coming at Midland Park Mall is a Long John Silver's Seafood Shoppe — under construction in a corner off the parking area.

Cindy Gladden, of Long John's, says "We're happy about coming out here. Our Odessa units are company leaders, and West Texas in general has been really good to us."

The June 1 opening of Long John Silver's will bring a "good product with excellent service," according to Ms. Leach. "Their grand opening will be a big event."

Midland Park Mall is gaining other new tenants, as well. A Taco Bell franchise restaurant may open inside the mall. Two smaller-sized food outlets will be added to the mall's main food area. A western wear outlet should open soon.

Midland Park Mall stores have no space to expand. Most of the stores (except Sakowitz) can never remodel to add an extra floor because of structural support requirements.

MIDLAND PARK MALL is owned by Simon& Associates, the second largest mall builder in the nation. It owns over 115 shopping/office/hotel developments, many of them shopping malls like Midland's.

Based in Indianapolis, Indiana, Melvin Simon & Associates (MSA) does community-minded work now along with commercial development. The company is run by Melvin Simon and his younger brothers, Herb (leasing) and Fred (management).

MSA has been working to revive the downtown area there. It will build a large Granada Royale Hometel there, and has proposed a million-square-foot mall to connect to that hotel.

To keep the Indiana Pacers (a losing NBA team) from moving basketball action out of the city, Melvin Simon & Associates recently bought the team for an undisclosed sum. The operation of Indianapolis' Market Square Arena is controlled by MSA under the deal.

MSA, also in the movie business, is filming "Porky's II", capitalizing on the low-investment, high-return movie "Porky's" Melvin Simon and company produced. The company also made "My Bodyguard" and "Zorro: The Gay Blade."

These builders and developers are not in the movie business, like Melvin Simon, but they are into condo-time sharing, aluminum signs, and hotels — as well as shopping malls.

Permian Mall has a lower occupancy rate (there is more available retail space in Odessa, seemingly) at 91 percent.

Its major anchors are the same ones featured at Midland Park Mall — JC Penney, Sears, Dillards. The 100 smaller stores in the mall depend on the commercial "pull" of these stores to attract Permian Mall's customers.

The commercial lease signed by merchants in Permian Mall has a similar provision to that required by Midland Park Mall — a percent of sales over a certain amount will go to the developer.

"Over $500,000 in sales yearly, the 'break point,' merchants have to pay a percentage to Permian Mall. Assuming sales do not go over that mark, the lease rate will be about $16 per square foot," said leasing agent Russ Bayly.

THE FACT that Midland-Odessa sales tax receipts are down 30 percent, Bayly said, has little to do with Permian Mall sales. "Our sales were down six percent, at the most," he said.

"The 30 percent figure is not indicative of what's happening, our sales are relatively strong."

How much do Permian Mall merchants bring in? During February, 1983 — a slow month — receipts in the 98 specialty stores (not counting department stores) sales amounted to $2 million.

Last year, that figure was slightly higher, at $2.2 million. During that month of 1981, sales amounted to $1.75 million; in Feb. 1980 — the mall's grand opening month — these stores made $2.25 million in sales.

Mexico, Soviets to swap oil info

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico and the Soviet Union have signed an agreement to cooperate on petroleum technology, mainly to exchange of information on drilling and prospecting.

A statement from the state-run oil monopoly Petroleos Mexicanos, known as PEMEX, said the agreement covers geology, geophysics, drilling and transportation.

An announcement Friday said Mexican and Soviet technicians will meet periodically to talk about subjects of mutual interest, or exchange or request information through "appropriate diplomatic channels."

"It is highly satisfactory for Mexico to participate in the agreement that the two countries made to advance administration, production and exploitation of a natural resource as important for our peoples and for humanity as petroleum," said Donaciano Tamex, deputy director of commerce for PEMEX.

A PEMEX technical delegation visited the Soviet Union in March and the agreement was signed here Thursday during a visit of Soviet petroleum experts to Mexico.

Mexico currently produces 2.7 million barrels of oil daily, exporting 1.5 million barrels, most of that to the United States.

WSB full of money

Western State Bank said Friday it reported record high total deposits of $50,846,000 at the close of business Thursday.

"We attribute this to our effective business calls and to public confidence in our institution," said Bill Parker, president and chief executive officer.

The deposits are predominantly all local ones, he said, which are about 85 percent held in interest-bearing accounts such as SuperNOWS and money market accounts.

At the end of the first quarter 1983, the bank had reported deposits of $47.1 million. Parker said recently the bank has increased its promotion activities within the local business community.

While the bank's management is not tracking the exact source of the additional deposits, Parker said he thinks they may have been transferred from other area banks.

The loan to deposit ratio at Western State is approximately 73 percent, he said. The bank is trying to maintain a conservative ratio by carefully watching its deposits while continuing to make loans, he added.

Good news/bad news for job hunters

BY LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

If you are looking for a job in Midland, there is good news and there is bad news.

The good news is that employment and personnel consultants see the job market on the upswing after bottoming out late last year.

The market seems to be recovering slowly and also changing in tone.

"I'll be frank — Midland is coming back slower than the rest of the state," said Phyllis Marshall, owner of Dunhill's Midland agency. "I think part of it was that we had further to fall."

THE LOCAL JOB picture has changed partly because the labor pool has changed. Salaries are frequently lower. More people are willing to make lateral moves in order to be employed.

The trend is for the unemployed professional to change from petroleum-related positions to jobs in mini-computers, restaurants and fast food management, banking, retail and real estate development.

"We're seeing a few professionals who are willing to move out of this area, and even out of the oil and gas industry," Marshall said. "I would say probably half of the professionals we talk to are willing to move."

Eighteen months ago, salaries were on an upward spiral and job hopping was the rule rather than the exception. Midland firms offered salaries about 10 percent above those offered elsewhere in Texas, with the exception of Houston, she said.

"Now, this is leveling out," Marshall said.

EMPLOYERS SAY that recently, the number of calls they've received from help wanted advertising has also changed.

Response to a recent ad by Radio Shack was poor compared to the response the firm had from an ad published a few months ago, said store manager John Beasley.

"We ran an ad in November for manager trainees and we probably had three times the response then than we are having now."

A spokeswoman at an oil company said the same phenomenon occurred when the firm ran an ad for an executive secretary recently. The response was poor, she said, in comparison to another ad which ran earlier.

"They just nearly swamped me about two weeks ago," she said. "I interviewed 44 people in two days for an accounts payable clerk. It was just horrible. I even had a degreed geologist apply."

MIDLAND EMPLOYMENT counselors say the local job market has improved slightly since the first of the year. The trend in the last few months has been for the number of job openings and placements to increase slightly.

Paul Adams, labor market analyst at Midland's Texas Employment Commission office, says the winter months were static, "but now it seems to be picking up. It's one job here, one job there. No one company is putting in 20 or 30 job orders," he said.

Compared to 1982, the job picture is still dismal. The local TEC listed 236 job orders in April 1982. In April 1983, there were more jobs, 464, but fewer placements, Adams said.

This is because many of the placements in 1982 were multiple placements, where one job order asked for more than one employee. For example, a company might need five people in the same job category, whereas today, they are asking for just one person per job task.

The economic downturn has affected the number of job placement and executive-search agencies in the Permian Basin. The effect was first noticed in June 1982 and hit the "better" companies last fall, according to a local executive "headhunter" who has since changed careers himself.

LOCAL JOB—PLACEMENT and search agencies report dollar volume and the number of job orders are off by up to 50 percent compared to results a year ago. Many have reduced their staffs. One job consultant estimated there are about 20 to 30 individuals still in the job placement business, versus more than 100 who jumped on the job-finding bandwagon in the boom.

"There used to be about 42 employment agencies in the Midland-Odessa market," said Kathy Blackman. "Now, there are around 20. We've lost 50 percent of our industry."

Blackman was named presidentof the Texas Association of Personnel Consultants last week at the organization's annual meeting.

The companies which remain in the job search/placement business are those who were long established and have cash flow from better times to sustain them, she said.

Business is still slow, however, even for these firms. Because of the slower pace of the Permian Basin economy, employers are taking longer to screen applicants. For one thing, there are more applicants to look at, in this "buyers'" market.

IN THE LAST 90 days, Union Texas Petroleum, for example, has received "an extremely large volume of (unsolicited) resumes," according to Troy Marrs, chief of personnel.

"This would indicate to me that a lot of good people are being put out to pasture," Marrs said. "The first large flow of people to be laid off were absorbed, but in the last four to six months, many companies have had a hiring freeze, so people laid off recently have had a harder time."

Marrs said he is getting resumes of people with 10 or 15 years of experience — normally, the last people a company dismisses during staff cutbacks.

Ironically, during the boom, when Union Texas and other oil companies were desperately in need of top quality applicants, these people were next to impossible to find, Marrs said. That was when the executive search firms were in their heydey.

The nature of employment in the area has changed, the counselors say. People are willing to settle for less in order to work.

"We have lots more people applying for jobs," said Amy Stewart, owner of Energy Plus. "We ran an ad for a receptionist one Monday noon and we got 47 calls by the afternoon."

SHE SAID MANY callers do not meet the specifications of a particular ad, but "everybody calls anyway, because they are desperate."

Agencies which specialize in temporary help services or in-house secretarial services usually show an upswing in business volume during a recession, she noted. Although firms may be reluctant to add permamanent staff, they still need work done, especially for special, one-time projects which come along from time to time.

Employment counselors seem to be optimistic that the local job picture will improve soon. "The number of job openings has increased," Blackman said. "We and other agencies are looking at improvements in the next 30 to 60 days. It's coming back slowly, but it's coming back."

"An employee benefits program with professional results and no worries... Tom Bruner and Texas American Bank delivered."

Tom Bruner
Executive Vice President & Trust Officer

William P. Trotter, M.D.
Radiology Associates of Midland

Dr. Bill Trotter has a large, active medical practice in his specialty of radiology. The needs of his patients leave him little time to serve as an employee benefits administrator for Radiology Associates of Midland.

That's where Tom Bruner, Executive Vice President & Trust Officer, helped out. He showed the advantages of having Texas American Bank professionally manage the association's employee benefit plan.

Lovelady Inc. sells share of glitter

Ike Lovelady Inc. announced last week it has sold an option to Queenstake Resources Ltd., a Canadian Company, which will allow Queenstake to earn a 50 percent interest in the Chichagof gold mine in Alaska.

I.W. Lovelady, president, explained the transaction was accomplished through Exploration Ventures Company's limited partnership 80-04 in which Lovelady owns a 75 percent interest. The option may be earned by Queenstake by spending $1,300,000.00 for surface and underground exploration, diamond drilling and mine rehabilitation in a phased program.

The exploration program will concentrate on a search for "blind" ore shoots that do not outcrop and could not be located by early prospecting methods.

The first two phases require the expenditures of $700,000 by December 31, 1984, to earn a 25 percent interest with the balance to be expended by December 31, 1987 to increase the interest to 50 percent. Thereafter Queenstake and Exploration Ventures Company will continue their exploration and development program in a joint venture in which each party provides one-half of the funds or suffers dilution of its percentage interest.

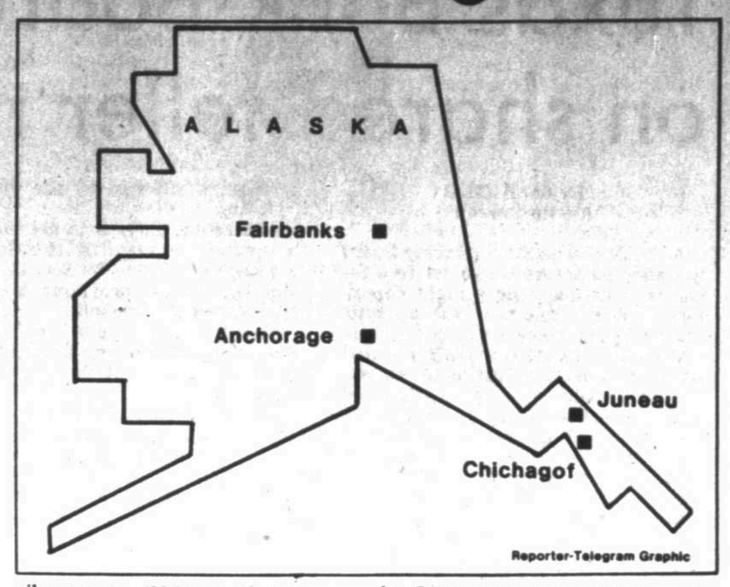
The Chichagof Mine was one of the richest gold mines in Alaska. Between 1915 and 1923, its most productive period, an average of 33,568 tons was mined per year, producing 53,566 oz. of gold per year for a weighted average of 1.60 oz. of gold recovered per ton.

Total production over the life of the mine was 647,708 oz. of gold from 596,478 tons for an average recovered grade of 1.09 oz. of gold per ton.

The Chichagof fissure vein has a know length of nearly 10,000 feet of which only 2,000 feet of strike length was mined. Recent U.S. Bureau of Mines (USBM) studies show high grade gold occurrences in unmined parallel structures on the property and potentially large volumes of lower grade mineralized halos around previously mined ore shoots.

In a 1981 USBM Open File Report it is "estimated that significant ore shoots are located along the Chichagof Fault in the area without underground exploration and in fault zones subparllel to the Chichagof Fault that Traverse the 29 patented Chichagof Claims. The mining widths would range from 3 to 15 feet.

"It is estimated the average grade of these ore shoots is half the average grade mined over the life of the Chichagof Mine and the tonnage is 1/2 million tons or 500,000 tons hypothetical reserves at 0.6 oz. gold per ton (300,000 oz. gold) and 0.18 oz. silver per ton (90,000 oz. silver)".



Gold is distributed throughout the Chichagof vein system and sampling by the USBM shows numerous values in excess of 1.0 ounces per ton and ranging up to 6.7 ounces per ton. The waste dump carries substantial amounts of gold in the 0.04 ounces per ton range and selective sampling of quartz from the dump by Queenstake personnel shows an average of 0.27 ounces per ton. Work done on the stamp mill tailings by the USBM and Exvenco indicate reserves in excess of 400,000 tons grading 0.11 ounces per ton.

Texas Bank Board sets fee on shared teller machines

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Banking Board has adopted a formula to set fees for transactions involving a night depository used in connection with an automated teller machine — a formula which may indicate how fees for shared ATMs are to be calculated in the future.

State Treasurer Ann Richards voted against adoption of the formula, saying she preferred another developed by Jorge Gutierrez, general counsel for the State Treasury, which would be applicable to all types of ATM transactions.

The board's decision is an attempt to resolve a dispute between three Bryan-College Station banks which first came to the board in February, 1982.

The board agreed that, in this instance, it would accept a published "interchange" fee charged by the ATM network as one factor in the formula.

The formula adopted by the board provides for use of identifiable fixed monthly costs (the ATM, in this case) allocated over the period of a lease, and monthly variable costs, including such items as utilities, telephone expenses, etc.

Under the formula, percentage for various transactions will be determined, and will be used to calculate charges to participating banks.

Transaction charges are to be recomputed quarterly, and the formula contains provisions for a rate of return, to be calculated at the 91-day U. S. Treasury bill rate, plus one point.

While the board has indicated it doesn't want to be dictating sharing arrangements to banks, Richards noted the board's action "will be looked at with great interest by the (banking) industry."

The action likely is to get increased attention in view of the Senate's approval of SB 1091 by Sen. O. H. (Ike) Harris, R-Dallas, providing for use of "point of sale" terminals.

Those devices would allow transfer between a customer's account and a merchant's account to pay for retail sales.

Earlier, Department of Banking general counsel Archie Clayton advised the board to adopt a rule on point of sale terminals, saying that existing law probably allows such machines, if they're not capable of being operated solely by the customer.

The State Board of Insurance plans to call a special hearing in June to consider changes in the personal auto insurance policy.

Several questions have been raised on the policy since it went into effect two years ago. Some 10 revisions have been suggested.

It was decided to hold a special hearing on the matter rather than including the proposals in the general auto insurance hearing later in the year.

Texas Savings and Loan Department has adopted amendments to its regulations on inclusion of secured borrowings when calculating amounts invested in subsidiaries by State-chartered savings and loan associations.

The department says all comments received on the changes — described as intended to clarify the current provisions — were favorable, although Gill Savings Association, Hondo, requested clarification of the definition of "total assets."

Rep. Bob Simpson, D-Amarillo, is sponsoring a resolution calling on the State Board of Insurance to conduct an interim study on "the various advantages and disadvantages" of "competitive" insurance rates, as compared to the regulated rate system now in use in Texas.

"Competitive" or "open" rating has been argued at various times in recent years, but interest in the concept has been waning in the last few legislative sessions.

Simpson's resolution, HCR 213, calls for the board to make the study and allows it to "seek assistance and input at the national level through the appropriate committees and task forces of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners."

Texas Commission on Alcoholism says alcohol problems cost Texans $4.5 billion in 1981 — or $310 for each of the state's residents, through lost productivity, increased social welfare costs and higher insurance costs.

Productivity losses of $2.5 billion represent the largest cost, including absenteeism, tardiness, accidents and mistakes in the work place.

Older cars still on the road

The country's auto population now is the oldest it has been since the mid-1950's, reports the Automotive Information Council (AIC).

AIC also points out that more than 6.8 million cars on America's roads are 15 years old or older.

The average age of all cars now is slightly over 7 years, compared with 6 years in 1975 and 5.5 in 1970.

Hand in hand with the higher age of cars is the reduced level of scrapped vehicles. R. L. Polk & Co., an industry statistical firm, says that only 8.4 million cars and trucks were scrapped last year. This compares with more than 9 million the previous ear. In 1979, by comparison, more than 11 million vehicles were scrapped.

Of those vehicles not re-registered, 6.9 million were cars and 1.5 million were trucks.

Cars scrapped during the year totaled only 6.5 percent of the car population, second lowest since 1953.

The high age of cars and the low scrappage rate indicates that any cars probably are being driven in poorly repaired and possibly unsafe condition, AIC says.

It urges motorists to have thier cars inspected and repaired before an unnecessary accident happens.

AIC suggests that proper maintenancde will save money in the long run and will prevent the inconvenience of a no-start situation.

Batteries to store energy, usurp oil

HILLSBOROUGH, N.J. (AP) — Two batteries that cost $100 million each and cover up to an acre will be tested here this year as scientists explore ways to reduce the dependence of American utilities on costly oil.

The batteries are designed to store energy produced by nuclear and coal-fired plants during off-peak hours, said Peter Lewis, a researcher with Public Service Electric and Gas Co.

"Testing these batteries is as exciting as watching grass grow," he said. "But what is exciting is the potential for storing and using energy later on."

The stored electricity would be used during periods of heavy demand, reducing the need for oil-fueled plants now fired up to provide energy during busy hours, Lewis said Wednesday.

Scientists have spent the last decade developing the huge batteries. Lewis predicted the devices will be in use at a handful of utilities in five years and gain widespread use within a decade.

"By using batteries, we can store energy produced at night, when it's cheaper, and use it during the day when the customer most demands it," Lewis said. "This could save hundreds of millions of barrels of oil a year."

PSE&G is interested in using a battery to provide power for New Jersey mass transit systems during the two daily rush hours. Lewis said the utility will propose using the battery to help operate trains between Newark, N.J., and New York City, Newark city subways or a high-speed line that links southern New Jersey and Philadelphia.

A zinc-chloride battery will be installed in June at the Battery Energy Storage Test facility in this rural Somerset County community about 35 miles southwest of New York City. A lead-acid battery will be installed in the fall.

The batteries are "well-suited to urban areas because they can be located close to the customers," Lewis said.

The zinc-chloride battery is capable of producing 500 kilowatt hours of electricity over a five-hour period before requiring recharging, said Lewis. It has an expected life span of 10 years.

The lead-acid battery is designed to provide 500 kilowatt hours in one hour, with an eight-year lifespan, Lewis said.

"That's enough electricity to serve the needs of a small community," he said.

PSE&G operates the $17 million research facility under a contract with the U.S. Department of Energy and the Electric Power Research Institute, a non-profit research arm of the nation's electric utilities.

The Midland corporation's net income for the first quarter ended March 31 was 29 percent higher on a revenue gain of 5 percent from the same quarter in 1982, according to President William F. Judd.

Net income was $2,582,000 or 38 cents per common share, as compared to $2,002,000 or 29 cents per common share during the first quarter of the prior year. These figures have been adjusted to include the 5 percent common stock dividend paid in June 1982.

Consolidated revenues increased 5 percent, reaching $73.5 million compared with $69.7 million for the first quarter of 1982.

Working capital provided by operations was $8 million, a $1.2 million decrease from the same quarter a year ago. The decline was primarily due to a $1.1 million decrease in deferred taxes.

"Substantially all of the increase in consolidated revenues came from Western Kentucky Gas Company, our utility division," Judd said. "The increase in net income is due to improved results in Texas American Oil Corporation and lower interest rates on our bank debt."

Negotiations on the company's new $40 million line of credit are proceeding satisfactorily and the closing should take place in the near future, the company said. The credit, which will replace the existing $23 million note and $15 million revolving credit, will be priced at rates approximating the prime rate. "This will further reduce our interest costs," Judd said.

PIONEER CORP. (NYSE: PNA)

AMARILLO — The company reports revenues and net income for the quarter ended March 31 are down from the same quarter a year earlier. Net income was $21.5 million or 58 cents a share, for the three months ended March 31, versus $29.8 million, or 81 cents a share in the year-ago quarter.

Revenues from oil and gas production, including gas liquids, were $81.5 million, an increase of almost 6 percent from comparable figures for 1982. Gas transmission and distribution segments' revenues were also higher for the quarter, growing from $180.6 million in 1982 to $191.5 million this year.

TRANSCO ENERGY CO. (NYSE: E)

HOUSTON (SWN) — At the company's annual stockholder meeting, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer W.J. Bowen reported that after just 10 days of operation of Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line's (TGPL) Industrial Sales Program (ISP) about 104 million cubic feet of gas per day is already flowing to satisfy an identified market of about 360 million cubic feet per day for the month of May.

Bowen said Transco is contemplating a restructuring of Transco Exploration Company, a wholly owned subsidiary, whereby all of Transco Exploration's assets and liabilities would be assigned to a newly formed Texas limited partnership in which Transco Exploration would serve as managing general partner. The limited partnership would succeed to and continue all of Transco Exploration's business of exploring for and developing oil and gas.

At year-end 1982, Transco Exploration had estimated proved reserves of 18 million barrels of oil and 395 billion cubic feet of gas. Transco Exploration's 1982 year-end assets were $1.3 billion out of a consolidated total for Transco Energy Company of $3.9 billion.

It is proposed that the limited partnership would file with the Securities and Exchange Commission before the end of May a registration statement covering a primary issue of depositary units representing limited partnership interests. The proceeds of such offering would be used to fund exploration and development expenditures of the limited partnership. Transco Energy Company intends to retain a substantial majority interest in the limited partnership.

AMERICAN QUASAR (OTC: AQAS)

FORT WORTH (SWN) — The company announced the completion of an offering of 14 percent subordinated debentures due July 15, 1993, in the principal amount of $65 million. Prudential-Bache Securities is sole underwriter of the offering.

The proceeds will be used to reduce bank indebtedness and other corporate obligations, and to increase working capital.

INEXCO OIL Co. (NYSE: INX)

HOUSTON (SWN) — The company announced that it had completed the previously announced sale of a portion of its interest in the Reddell Field, Evangeline Parish, Louisiana, for approximately $23.5 million. Under the terms of the sale, ENI Exploration and other ENI related entities, APP Production Inc. and Collins Gas Corporation, have acquired approximately 40 percent of Inexco's working interest in the Reddell Field.

Vinson Co. opens shop in Odessa

TULSA — Vinson Supply Company has announced the completion and opening of a new 57,000 square foot office and warehouse complex in Odessa, Texas.

The new facility replaces Vinson's existing facilities, which the firm has occupied since the early 1950's.

Located at 333 West County Road South on an eight acre industrial site, the new construction complex includes a 47,000 square foot warehouse with overhead crane systems and multiple truck loading bays. Texas discoveries noted

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace announced that Texas operators reported 101 gas and 68 oil discoveries in April 1983.

The Railroad Commission has approved contract amendments sought by natural gas pipeline companies in the state which will lower gas transportation costs to other companies.

Commission approval of contract offered by Red River Pipeline to Intratex Gas Co. will mean lower costs for gas that may be resold to Houston Pipe Line Co., Westar, and Junction Natural Gas Co.

The decrease in rates will, in turn, affect downstream city gate rates. The city gate is the delivery point at which a city distribution system receives gas from its supplier.

With the change, Red River's annual revenues will decrease by approximately $3,402,460. The contract amendment will allow Red River to reduce the rates charged for the transportation of gas from 48.6 cents per Mcf (thousand cubic feet) to 20 cents per Mcf for a two-year period.

The Commission also approved a contract amendment proposed by Winnie Pipeline Co. for the transportation of gas delivered by Winnie to Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. for Lone Star Gas Co.

The rate will decrease from $.1825 per Mcf to $.15 per Mcf for gas transported on and after April 1, 1983.

However, the rate change will have no effect on Lone Star's bills for city gate deliveries or any of its bills to transmission pipelines buying gas from Lone Star.

Oil jobbers plead

From Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Texas Oil Marketers asked the Texas congressional delegation for its help Thursday. The organization asked Texas members of Congress to vote to amend Federal Credit laws, to allow companies offering credit cards to charge holders a surcharge.

This could increase the price of gasoline at the pump by 3 percent. In some cases it would amount to 4 cents a gallon, the marketers said.

Byram E. Merrell, Fort Worth, president; Bill Kent, Midland and W.P. Wright, Abilene, explained that the oil company which supplies them with gasoline never repays the marketer the full price where credit cards are used. Instead of 100 percent on the outlay, the marketer is paid 97 percent.

Owner Troy Davis stresses that quality is never sacrificed by one hour processing. Every morning quality control tests are run on each type of film printed on the premises. This process insures color quality and accuracy of flesh tones.

Personal service is the key element of Troy Davis' philosophy. The staff, backed with twelve years of experience, is willing to answer any questions concerning film or film processing. Personalized service is enhanced through Troy Davis' V.I.P. card membership and complimentary mini-album.

The V.I.P. card membership allows purchase of film at cost. For example, the cost of one roll of Kodak film with 24 exposures is ordinarily $3.59. With the V.I.P. card, the cost of the same roll of film is reduced to $2.35, a savings of $1.24 per roll. All V.I.P. cards previously issued will be honored.

Troy Davis' Quik One Hour Photo Service is open from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. One hour film processing is available from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday. This photo finishing lab is the only one in Midland which will process your film until 5 p.m. on Saturday. Troy Davis' is located at 3102 West Cuthbert - across the street from Gibson's. Stop by and allow Troy Davis and his staff to demonstrate superior quality with One Hour Quik Service.
