Ford May Ask for SS Tax Hike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford put finishing touches on his State of the Union message Saturday, with aides saying he probably will propose a hike in the Social Security tax and bigger Medicare benefits and costs, but a tax break for firms in high unemployment areas.

Rep. Al Ullman, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said Congress probably would approve the proposal.

The President, to deliver his election-year speech at 9 p.m. EST Monday to a joint session of Congress, declined to disclose any specific plans and he cautioned reporters, "Better wait and see — It's always a big gamble when you speculate."

But aides confirmed reports Ford would recommend the Social Security, Medicare and business tax changes in his address and spell them out Wednesday in the federal budget he recommends for the 1977 fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

They said the budget would call for spending of about $394 billion, with an expected deficit of roughly $43 billion, and the over-all policy was aimed at maintaining economic expansion but slowing the growth of federal costs.

Ford interrupted work on the speech to brief the chairman of the National Governors Conference, Republican Robert D. Ray of Iowa. "This is the fifth draft," he told Ray as reporters watched the start of the meeting. "We are going to have one more and that's it."

White House officials said Ford decided to recommend an increase in the Social Security tax rate from 5.85 to 6.15 per cent, effective next Jan. 1, because payments are growing faster than revenues and Social Security could go broke.

That tax rise, coupled with an already authorized widening of the wage base for Social Security taxes from $15,300 to $16,500 next year, would lift the maximum tax from just under $900 this year to $1,014 in 1977.

But aides said Ford was willing to urge full cost-of-living increases in benefits for Social Security recipients. Last year, he pressed for a 5-per-cent ceiling on any increases.

To improve the Medicare program for elderly Americans, White House officials said Ford would suggest a plan — similar to one Congress rejected last year — that would set a $500 annual limit for hospital and nursing care and a maximum of $250 a year on doctor fees.

Although this would increase assistance, officials said Ford also would recommend persons covered by Medicare pay more for the insurance. They did not say how much such contributions would rise.

Aides said Ford's expected proposal for tax incentives to reduce joblessness basically would let businesses depreciate their investments on plants, equipment and machinery faster than usual if they are located in areas where unemployment is above a specific level.

Ullman made the prediction to Democratic freshmen congressmen who heard him and other powerful chairmen dash their hopes for action this year on reform bills they promised to support when they first ran for Congress.

"We will probably enact the President's increase in Social Security taxes this year," Ullman said. "We have no alternative."

He said Social Security paid more in benefits last year than it took in, and the same is expected this year.

Ford is expected, in his budget to be released Wednesday, to seek to raise $4.2 billion for Social Security by raising the rate from 5.85 per cent of taxed earnings to 6.15 per cent.

Facing possible losses in November after 75 new Democrats were elected to the House in 1974, the freshmen heard only bad news.

The message from the chairmen was "No — not this year" on national health insurance, reforming the welfare system, public campaign financing for congressional candidates and more equitable taxation.

Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Tex., of the House Government Operations Committee said the House probably will extend the revenue sharing program which sends $6 billion a year to communities. "I'm against it, but I won't sabotage it," Brooks said.

Chairman Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, of the House Administration Committee rejected passage in time for the 1976 election of plans to fully or partially finance congressional election campaigns from public monies to diminish the influence of contributors.

"If such a bill were passed this year," he said, "Congress' bicentennial gift to the nation will be the most chaotic election in history." He asked the freshmen if they really wanted to go home "and explain how you ripped off the public."

Angola Says Fate Rests with Congress

GAGO COUTINHO, Angola (UPI) — Angolan nationalist leaders battling the Soviet and Cuban-supported Popular Movement in northern Angola say the future of their freedom movement is in the hands of the U.S. Congress.

"The American people are still living in the nightmare of Vietnam," nationalist leader Jonas Savimbi said. "But they must recognize that the situations in Angola and Vietnam are different in at least one vital aspect.

"In Vietnam the Americans were supporting a minority government. Here we represent the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the Angolan people. That is why the United States should and must support us."

The allied forces in the Angolan conflict are Savimbi's Union for the Total Independence of Angola, called UNITA, and the National Front for the Liberation of Angola, called FNLA.

They are using their argument of popular support as the backbone of their efforts to win increased American and European support in addition to South African aid in their fight against the Soviet-armed Marxist Popular Movement of the Liberation of Angola, known as MPLA.

The allied forces say they consider the current session of the U.S. Congress a make-or-break period for their movements.

The allied forces are seeking both increased American military support and political backing on an urgent basis, especially following the virtual collapse of the FNLA position in northern Angola.

UNITA's immediate objective is to try to get a reversal of the recent Senate decision to cut off further military supplies—estimated at between $25 and $30 million—to the allied cause.

At the time of the Senate vote there was still two months worth of military supplies in the pipeline, but this has now been virtually exhausted. UNITA officials said they had only enough supplies from all sources to last until the end of February.

The coalition government controls more than half of Angola's territory despite recent military reverses in the north where the MPLA has swept to the border of Zaire. It also claims the political allegiance of at least four million of the country's six million population.

After a nearly three-week tour of the capital of Huambo, military headquarters at Silva Porto and scores of towns and villages such as this one near the Zambian border, this reporter and other Western journalists concluded that the UNITA-FNLA claims were probably reasonably accurate.

The bearded 41-year-old Savimbi is almost worshiped in the south and has established an impressive if primitive political and military setup in the country.

This village is typical of thousands scattered across the Angolan landscape.

Gago Coutinho straddles the main paved highway linking Angola's rich diamond fields in the north to the arid south and the Zambian border. There are a few tin-roofed homes but the majority of the people still live in rectangular, mud brick and thatch huts.

A bust of its founder, Portuguese Adm. Gago Coutinho, adorns the sun-backed village square. The bust, walls and even the road have all been defaced, as has every village in the land, by painted graffiti extolling Savimbi and UNITA.

UNITA's military boss, Col. Samuel Chiwale, recently visited the isolated outpost accompanied by Western journalists. As his battered convoy of Jeeps, Landrovers, trucks and automobiles roared into the village, it was immediately engulfed by hundreds of singing women and children waving the red and green UNITA flag.

For at least an hour the crowd sang its way through a chorus of songs in praise of Savimbi and UNITA.

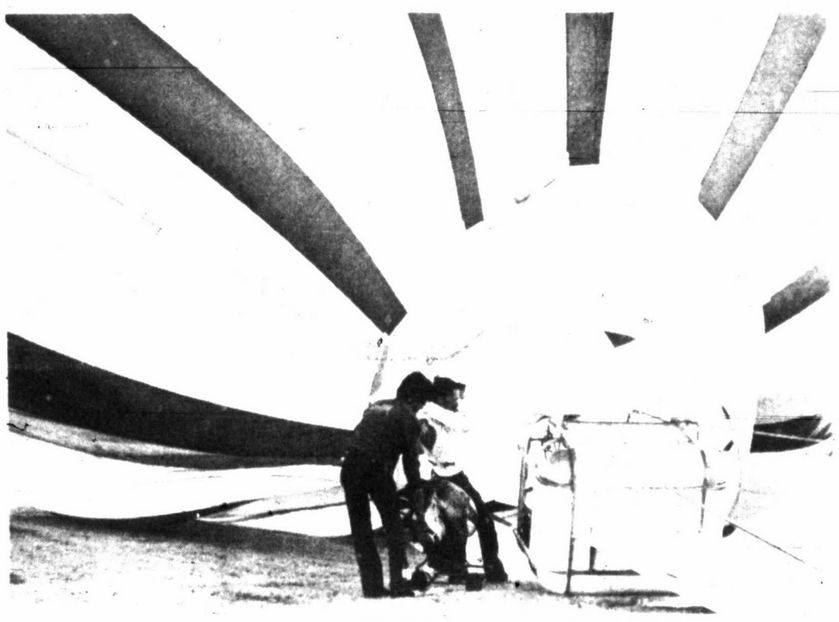

Visitors were impressed that the welcome and a political rally the following morning were undoubtedly spontaneous and not contrived for them. Similar scenes were repeated throughout the south, often in situations where it would have been impossible to fake them.

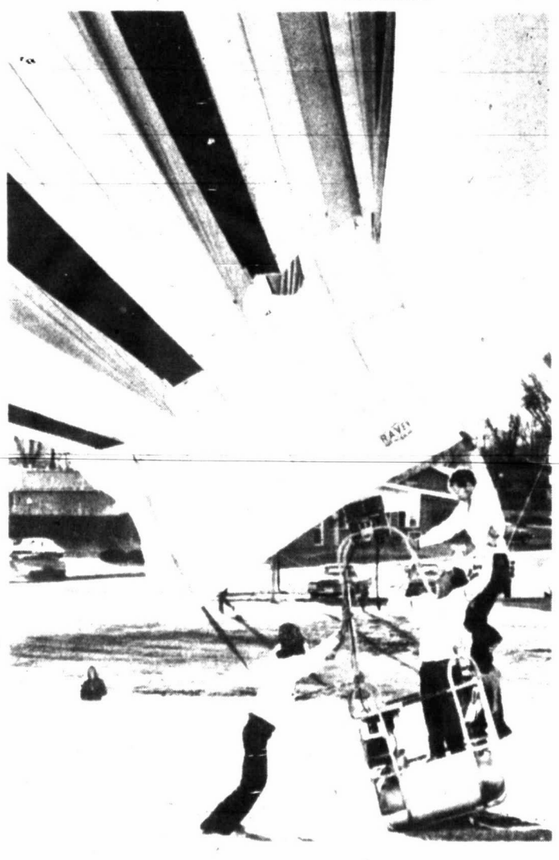

The pro-Western nationalist forces are treading very warily in their efforts to secure greater American military and diplomatic support.

Savimbi said that is why UNITA and the FNLA have taken a deliberate decision to refrain from active lobbying on Capitol Hill, though they maintain representatives in Washington.

They have repeatedly emphasized that they seek no American physical presence in the war, neither troops nor mercenaries. But they say only the United States can supply the weapons needed to counter the tanks, armored cars, rockets and helicopters the Soviets have supplied the MPLA.

In My Beautiful Balloon

Balloonist Ken Kelley of Amarillo said he decided not to toss off the two lines when wind gusts came up Saturday. "They cave in the side of the balloon and cut down on the amount of lift," he said. Kelley was scheduled to begin his flight to carry the American Heart Association CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) Week banner across Pampa at 9:15 a.m. but the wind came up about 8:50 a.m. Winds created other problems, causing the flames that provide hot air for lift to burn the skirt portion of the balloon, that which is located between the main area of the balloon and the riding compartment or gondola. The flight had to be canceled. But CPR, sponsored by the Gray County Heart Division will proceed with a flourish of activity.

DECA Student Honored

Gary Sanders, president of the local chapter of Distributive Education Clubs of America (DECA), has been elected to fill the historian slot of the state DECA organization.

Mrs. Dona Cornutt, DECA coordinator, was notified on Friday by Norris Young, state director of DECA.

Sanders will be filling out an unexpired term. The vacancy was created when the student holding the position resigned.

Sanders will travel to Austin on Feb. 6 to take part in planning the state DECA conference set for March in Houston.

Today's Pampa News features a tabloid section about Pampa's DECA program.

CB Radios Stolen From Pickups

Thirty - two sets of keys were stolen from a Pampa used car lot, an automobile was stolen, and four Citizens Band radio were stolen from locked pickups and a 22 - year old man Pampa accidently shot himself in the leg while hunting rabbits.

These incidents and others were listed on the Pampa Police Department blotter Saturday afternoon.

David Luster, 22, of 532 Doucette, was in satisfactory condition late Saturday at Highland General Hospital with a gunshot wound in the leg.

The police report shows that he was hunting rabbits just outside the city limits on a dirt road when the accident occurred.

L.M. Scribner of 309 Miami reported that his CB radio was taken from his locked pickup parked at his residence.

Other CB radios were removed from pickups owned by Delbert E. Kimbrell of 320 Anne and Joyce Morse of 341 S. Finley.

Burl Lewter of Top O' Texas Used Cars said someone broke into the building and took 32 sets of keys and 1975 model automobile was missing.

He said the entry to the building was gained by cutting the screen off a window on the east side of building.

A screw driver and lantern were laying in the floor, according to the report.

Once inside four key rings totaling 32 sets were taken.

Ronnie Louis Atkinson of 1707 Beech said he arrived home shortly after midnight and noticed his car door open. He said he checked at that time and found nothing missing. However, he later discovered his antenna had been removed.

In another report a citizen reported a pistol missing from an end table in his bedroom along with 10 rounds of shells.

Paul Brown of 1606 Fir said when he opened his office Saturday he noticed a hole broken in the glass door. A rock three inches in diameter was found inside. Damage was estimated at $100.

Voter Certificates To Be Mailed

By TEX DeWEESE
Pampa News Staff

If you have voted in any election in Gray County within the past three years there is no need to be confused about your voter registration, according to Tax Assessor - Collector Jack Back.

He adds that if that is the case your registration still is good unless you have moved to a precinct other than the one in which you last voted.

Back says on Feb. 1 his office will mail voter registration certificates to all currently registered voters who have voted in at least one election during the last three years.

The certificate, he said, will be valid from March 1 to Feb. 28, 1978. It must always be kept in mind, Back stated, if there has been a change of address from one precinct to another, a correction must be made at his office.

Persons who still may be confused, he said, may come to the county tax office where a registration certificate will be issued.

Included with the certificates to be mailed Feb. 1, according to Back, will be a request for an information form to update current rolls in order to comply with the new voter registration law in Texas.

"No one will be removed or purged from the registration rolls for failure to return the information form," Back said, "but it will be a big assist to our office if the form is returned with all information blanks completed."

Back said that after March 1, 1976, the new blue registration certificates will be valid for voting.

He added that while it is not necessary for currently eligible voters to re - register at his office, between 400 and 500 persons already have applied in person for the new registration cards.

Back also urged all persons not currently registered, or having moved since they last voted, to re - register.

The voter certificates to be mailed Feb. 1 will go to all persons who were qualified to vote on Jan. 31 this year. Those who already have applied for a certificate and received it will not be asked to fill out another information form.

Old registration certificates that have been in use for the last three years still are valid until Feb. 29 of this year. After that date the new one must be used. Old certificates, Back said, should be destroyed after Feb. 29.

The new Texas voter registration law requires that the request for information and all voter instructions must be in both English and Spanish.

There is no yearly deadline for voter registration, Back stated. The only requirement is that new voters or those who have changed precinct addresses must register at least 30 days in advance to be eligible for the next election.

Back said there currently are about 11,000 voters in Gray County whose registration certificates still are valid.

New registration certificates will be mailed to these persons Feb. 1 — with the exception of those who already have applied at the office and to whom certificates already have been issued.

"If anyone still does not understand our procedure in connection with voter registration," Back said, "we will be glad to have them contact the office for any needed information."

Inflated Graduates

Time was when a college diploma was an almost priceless possession. Without that much sought after "sheepskin" upon which prospective employers placed such a high value, a young job - seeker was practically ruled out of consideration for better - paying positions. In addition to the diploma, itself, grades, too, were important; with honor students being given preference for plush jobs.

That was before "grade inflation" set in. As scholastic standards were relaxed at elementary and high school levels, the deterioration inevitably began to show up also in colleges, with the result, noted the Wall Street Journal recently, that "college grades lose value to employers." No longer are diplomas, or even high grades, considered reliable indicators that a candidate for employemnt can do the job for which hired; in fact, as pointed out by a recruiter for a First National Boston Corp. quoted by the Journal, such criteria, under current lax grading standards, "can mislead us into inviting someone in who isn't on the ball."

Forced to the realization that diplomas and high grades no longer signify what they once did, the article went on at greater length, employers are now placing higher values on other factors.

Olin Corp., the El Paso Co., and W.R. Grace and Co., for example, now pay closer attention to class rank and less heed to grades, while Bankers Trust weighs course content and professors' standards.

Still other companies now depend heavily on past bosses' reference, even from summer jobs.

"Direct contact," with job applicants is more crucial than ever before, it was emphasized. "Interviews aren't social events any longer," a Norton Co. personnel management specialist was quoted as saying.

Noting the falling market for its graduates, after 60 per cent of them received some kind of honor last year, Dartmouth College plans stiffer rules for honors by 1978 - 79, the Journal said.

About time, one would think!

Inflated grades, like inflated money, lose value. The natural law of supply and demand is still working.

Union 'Shock Treatment'

Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons said recently that federal controls on virtually every aspect of the economy are necessary "to shock the country back into a belief in the way of life in this country."

His union, however, is gearing up for the periodic contract "negotiations" with the nation's trucking industry. Fitzsimmons acknowledged that the Teamsters would seek generous hikes in pay and benefits.

The Teamsters, under constant criticism for alleged links to organized crime, have contributed to the unhappy history of wage and price controls with their relentless pursuit of inflationary work contracts.

Their leader could best demonstrate his concern for the American way by adopting a position of restraint in bargaining that will establish pay targets in other areas of the economy.

Minimum Sense

As if independent colleges and universities did not have enough problems, they will also be adversely affected by an impending increase in the federal minimum wage.

As of now, the minimum wage for students employed by colleges stands at $1.60 an hour or 85 per cent of the legal minimum wage, whichever is greater. Thus a lot of students who could not otherwise make their way through college are enable to earn enough.

Congressional approval of a new minimum wage hike will, of course, burden every employer's budget and, without doubt, toss several marginal employes out of work. Any increase will be equally if not more painful to colleges, especially those relying on private sources of financing.

Why it is so impossible for congressmen to see the connection between rising minimum wage requirements and rising unemployment has to be one of the most enigmatic mysteries of our time. So beautifully intended — yet so harmfully carried out. It is precisely to pass a law increasing unemployment.

Accordingly, the American Association of Independent Colleges and Universities has passed a resolution urging that the minimum wage allotment for campus administrations be kept where it is. Of course, if it would be better to abolish the whole thing, but we wonder if the politicians will listen even to the collegiate pleaders.

Question Box

QUESTION: Congress and the press and most other people are indignant at the disclosures that the FBI engaged in harassment of Martin Luther King, certain radical groups and others. Why? And how about the Internal Revenue Service people? Don't they harass citizens all the time? Is there a difference?

ANSWER: We believe people have a right to be indignant when their privacy and their rights are violated. Therefore, we believe it is proper that any violations of rights be exposed. We believe it is particularly repugnant that agencies supposed to be set up to enforce the law should be found to have violated any part of the law and should be condemned for it. It is perfectly proper for members of Congress to expose the departures of law enforcement agencies from strict obedience of the law and the Constitution.

It must be remembered that members of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies are human and prone to error, even though some of his apologists seemed to believe that J. Edgar Hoover was superhuman. It seems from this corner that some of Mr. Hoover's failures may demonstrate the fallacy of having one individual in a position of power for a great length of time. When every president and nearly every member of the people, seemed to think Hoover was indispensable, he would have had to be superhuman to resist the feeling that perhaps he was.

While Hoover performed a service during his long tenure, we believe it is well to question whether anyone should remain in office for an extended period.

As to the later questions about the Internal Revenue Service, there is a differnce. The politicians in power of all political descriptions seem to regard the income tax as an act of government to collect what is due the government. And it appears to us that the politicians believe that anything the IRS does is all right.

Consider that the "revenooers" have power to seize property and demand self - incriminating statements without regard to the so - called protections of the fifth amendment. That appears to be because the greatest crime of all in the eyes of politicians seems to be to escape paying onerous taxes. We agree that such antics are a form of harassment.

Yes the IRS is different from other law - enforcement agencies. It seems to be following the George Orwell dictum that "all are equal, but some are more equal than others."

Silas Deane was a Connecticut delegate to the Continental Congress from 1774 to 1776. In March 1776 he was ordered to France as a secret political agent and in September he was commissioned Ambassador with Franklin and Lee. Deane negotiated and signed a non-aggression treaty between France and the United States in Paris on Feb. 6, 1778, and personally secured the services of Lafayette, De Kalb and other foreign officers fighting for the American cause. Libel: Is There Middle Way?

By WILLIAM RUSHER

A dispatch from London the other day spectacularly illustrated one of the sharpest differences between the British and American legal systems: their attitude toward libels on public officials.

According to the dispatch, Prime Minister Harold Wilson is suing the publishers of "The Daily Mail," a large - circulation London tabloid, for having printed a false report that Wilson is "ready to quit" because he is "tired" and in ill health. The suit demands (1) a full retraction, (2) an apology, (3) "a suitable sum" in damages, and (4) court costs — which, under British law, include the plaintiff's legal fees.

As an American, I don't know whether to laugh or cry. Since the Supreme Court decided the Sullivan case in 1964, it has been impossible for a public official to recover for libel in the United States, no matter how false or defamatory a statement about him may be, unless he can prove that it was made with "malice": which is to say, either with the knowledge that it was false, or with an indifference to its truth or falsity so reckless as to amount to the same thing. Since the publisher of a libel can almost always point to some half - baked rumor on which he will swear he relied, what the Sullivan rule tends to amount to is a permanent open season on public officials. If Wilson had brought his libel suit in any American jurisdiction, it would be summarily dismissed as soon as the judge could wipe the tears of laughter from his eyes.

Moreover, in subsequent decisions, the Supreme Court has extended the Sullivan rule to apply not merely to public officials, but to all "public figures," a category defined as including anybody who "thrusts himself into the vortex of (public) controversy." That can cover just about anybody who presumes to take a public stand on a public issue, and therefore might theoretically include anyone rash enough to write a letter to the editor of his local paper.

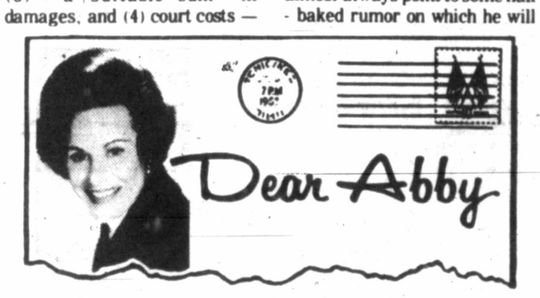

The Supreme Court's theory is that its rule encourages "robust and uninhibited" debate on public issues and public figures, and that it undeniably does. One thinks (just for example) of the charge, printed and widely circulated in a Greenwich Village gutter - sheet about 1967, that Lyndon Johnson had laughingly performed unspeakable acts on the corpse of John F. Kennedy in the plane carrying them both from Dallas to Washington in 1963. The canard spread all over Washington (I personally saw it in the hands of a foreign ambassador), but poor Johnson couldn't sue — not only because of the conceivable application of the Sullivan rule, but because he knew that by suing he would only further publicize the libel. Yet in Britain, almost a decade later, Harold Wilson is sternly demanding damages and costs because a newspaper has falsely claimed he is "tired"!

It is hard to decide exactly where the needle of justice ought to come to rest in this matter. The British rule is almost surely too hard on libel defendants — at least for application in the United States. We are much less hung up on decorum than the British, and have no a priori objection, in our political disputes, to plenty of "You're anothers" and "So's your old mans" and even a well - aimed beer bottle or two.

But ought there to be no limits at all, or at least no effective ones? Does the democratic process require that public men be shredded to the pulpy consistency of raw hamburger? Is that where a proper respect for freedom leads us? Must every public controversy, in the high interests of robustness and an absence of inhibition, resemble a Saturday night reunion of the Clan na Gael?

The problem is made no easier by the fact that each of us will humanly tend to favor whichever side of the barricade he thinks of himself as occupying. But today's plaintiff may be tomorrow's defendant, and vice versa. Somehow, we must find a middle way — a standard that will assure the full and free discussion of public issues, without tolerating what amounts to the rhetorical murder, by falsehood, of public men.

Ex-Wife Wants Last Licks at Ceremony

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1976 by Chicago Tribune-N. Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My son is being married soon. His father and I have been divorced for two years now. Do we have to sit together in the church and stand together in the receiving line just as though we were still married to each other?

Neither one of us has married again, but he has a shack-up girl friend. Where does she fit in? She is the pushy type who would do anything just to get into the limelight.

If she shows up, would it be proper for me to haul her into the alley and give her a few wallops before the ceremony? I'd sure like to. Thank you.

GROOM'S MOM

DEAR MOM: If the shack-up girl friend shows up, resist the urge to haul her into the alley and give her a few wallops. She could haul you into court for assault and battery.

You and the groom's father should sit "with the family" in the church—and stand together in the receiving line.

DEAR ABBY: My niece, who is 14 years old, ran off with her boyfriend last week, intending to elope. The boy is 15.

My brother (the girl's father) is very upset about it. He called the police and had his daughter and her "fiance" brought back.

Now the question: These kids are very much in love and want to marry. My brother is opposed to the idea because they are so young. I say, as long as the kids have spent a week together, why not let them marry and see how it works out?

What do you say?

CONCERNED UNCLE

DEAR CONCERNED: I think the kids should grow up before assuming the responsibilities of marriage. Having spent a week together is not sufficient reason to permit two children to marry.

DEAR ABBY: My mother is a widow. She raised my brother and me alone, and it wasn't easy. She does janitor work nights and is barely able to make ends meet.

My brother and his wife are going away for a two-week vacation, and they asked Mom if she would stay at their place to look after their dog. Mom said she would. My brother wants to charge her $25 a week. He says, "Where else can she get free room and board with a free telephone and color TV for that little?"

He wouldn't have to provide food for Mom because she's on a special diet and she buys her own.

I told my brother he ought to be ashamed of himself, and he said I was the one who was wrong—Mom's $50 would come in handy on their vacation.

Who's right?

DONNIE

DEAR DONNIE: You are. Your mother should be paid for staying there. Furthermore, your brother must have a cash register where his heart belongs.

THOUSANDS of Pampans along with millions of pro football fans across the nation have set aside three hours starting at one o'clock this afternoon during which — if you are not a pro football addict — they hope you won't knock on the front door or ring the telephone.

This is the day nothing matters for them but what is happening in the Super Bowl at Miami where the Dallas Cowboys and Pittsburgh Steelers go at each other for the world championship.

Those who couldn't make the trip to Florida or were unable to get tickets to the game will be in front of television sets.

Others, not in range of a TV set or driving down the highway, will be attuned to radio.

One man we talked with said he planned to put a "Do Not Disturb — Dallas Cowboy Fan" sign on his front door and take the telephone receiver off the hook at game time.

The Cowboys are the underdog in today's game just as they were three weeks ago when they defeated the Minnesota Vikings and two weeks ago when they blacked out the Los Angeles Rams.

As for this afternoon — well, if you must call, make it after 4 p.m. We expect to be in conference for around three hours, two halves and four quarters prior to that time.

★ ★ ★

BEFORE leaving the subject — Morris Morgan, who superintends compositors here at The News, says he thinks it odd that none of the sports writers has mentioned that Dallas was the last NFC team to win in the Super Bowl.

That was back in 1972 when they defeated the Miami Dolphins. Well, this afternoon is as good a time as any to pull the title out of the AFC and bring it back into the NFC fold.

THERE ARE 28 families by the name of King listed in the Pampa telephone directory.

Maybe some of them could be of assistance to Harry R. Dawson, 1229 Washington Ave., Princeton, Ind. 47670, trying to locate descendants of Willard B. King whom he says had a daughter, Hazel Maddox, and maybe others who lived in Pampa.

Dawson asks that anyone who has any information about W.B. King or any of his relatives get in touch with him at the above address. He adds that it would be greatly appreciated.

ONE OF our correspondents in Washington reports there's an anti - bureaucracy revolution brewing in the capital that threatens substantially to restructure, and perhaps even abolish, some of the federal government regulatory agencies.

As they say in the TV commercial — we'll munch to that and add that it's about time a halt was called.

Donald Lambro, the correspondent, writes that members of Congress who have long favored strong regulation of the private sector are now debating whether America in fact is over - regulated."

Let's keep the debate going. It is to be hoped our Congressman Jack Hightower will join the attack on the federal bureaucracy's sacred cows and lambast them for burdening business with costly paper work and record - keeping, arbitrary rule - making, and anti - competitive regulations that cost consumers billions of dollars a year more for everything they buy.

LOTS OF local government jobs will be up for grabs in the coming May primaries. And the way candidates are filing for them, there must be some juicy plums hanging on the political trees out there in the orchard.

Most popular in the "situation wanted" category seem to be candidates for county attorney, precinct constable and justice of the peace spots.

Of course, it's still a long way to go before election day and there is likely to be a run on some of the other offices around the district and county.

Some officials already on the job like what they have so well they have filed for re - election although they are being challenged by others who would like to have the jobs.

Running for public office is one thing we always make sure never to get a yen for. There are too many babies to kiss, too many miles to cover on the campaign trail and too many promises to keep if you happen to get elected.

MARRIAGE TREATY

A marriage treaty was signed between the Duke of Anjou and Elizabeth I of England on Nov. 7, 1581.

Albert Says TV Always Gives President Time

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Speaker Carl Albert charged Saturday the television networks use "little or no news judgment" when a president seeks air time for a speech but give "rigorous" consideration to Democratic party requests.

The networks denied the charges.

Albert, D-Okla., said a Library of Congress study shows in the past decade the three commercial TV networks — ABC, CBS, NBC — "provided simultaneous coverage of the president on almost every occasion that he has sought to deliver a nationwide television address."

"Being keenly aware of the rigorous news judgment applied by the networks to requests by the Democratic leadership for air time, I wanted to know whether or not the networks applied the same kind of judgment to presidential requests," Albert said.

"I must conclude that the networks have exercised little or no news judgment when considering presidential requests for air time for television addresses."

Richard C. Wald, president of NBC news, said: "NBC presents live coverage of presidential addresses when the president — regardless of party affiliation — has something important to say to the American people as the chief executive. In each case, we exercise our independent news judgment."

William Lord, ABC Washington bureau chief, said: "In the past, when the president requested air time we assumed that it was in the national interest to grant it, but we are looking more closely at it since that Kansas City speech."

Lord's reference was to President Ford's Oct. 15, 1974, speech to the Future Farmers of America convention in Kansas City. After the networks declined to cover it live, the Albert report said, Ford requested air time "and all three networks immediately reversed themselves and complied."

CBS News President Richard S. Salant said Ford's Kansas City speech and one by President Johnson were the only two CBS challenged on grounds of questionable "newsworthiness."

Salant said CBS policy since June, 1973, has been to make time available to the opposition when the president makes a TV speech "over which there was significant national disagreement."

Lord called Albert "the No. 1 offender when it comes to offered air time" because of the Speaker's refusal to visit the House television gallery and comment on issues of the day.

But a spokesman for Albert said his criticism had to do with major news events, not day-to-day stories. He said the Democrats have asked for simultaneous air time on the three networks 11 times since 1969 but have gotten it only three times.

Kidnapers Release Young Son

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Kidnapers who held a trucking firm executive's 27-year-old son for five days released their hostage Saturday and escaped with a six-figure ransom, the FBI said.

Alan L. Bortnick of Silver Spring, Md., co-manager of the Square Deal Trucking Co. in northeast Washington, was released about 4 a.m., the FBI said. Spokesman Steve Ramey said Bortnick was "very fatigued" and had suffered "superficial facial cuts," but was in good condition.

The FBI was looking for two men who abducted Bortnick Monday evening and held three company workers at bay with a shotgun and a handgun. The suspects wore ski masks at the time of the kidnaping, Ramey said.

Ramey said the kidnapers telephoned Bortnick's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Bortnick of Chevy Chase, Md., about one hour later and demanded "a very substantial amount of money." Ramey said the elder Bortnick is co-owner of Square Deal Trucking.

He said attorneys for the Bortnick family placed the ransom "in six digits." Ramey said though the amount was reduced once from earlier demands by the kidnapers, it was "still a very substantial amount." He said reports that the ransom amounted to $250,000 was "a rumor I have heard."

Ramey said calls were made to the family every day up to the release—often several calls in a single day—dealing with the ransom, instructions that authorities not be notified, and information regarding the Bortnicks' son. They were assured he was unharmed, Ramey said.

Metropolitan Police were notified of the kidnaping and the FBI entered the case following the ransom demand. Ramey said at the request of the family he was not authorized to explain why the episode lasted for five days.

About 1 a.m. Saturday, another call was received at the Bortnicks' home instructing them to take the money, in cash, to a phone booth at a gasoline station in Silver Spring. A friend of the family who ran the errand was called about 1:30 a.m. at the phone booth and instructed to take the cash to a secluded crossroads in Sandy Spring, Md. about 12 miles to the north.

A "gym bag" full of money was dropped at the specified location and, three hours later, Bortnick informed his parents of his release by telephone. No details of that conversation or Bortnick's subsequent conversation with the FBI were released.

Fred Tripp Dies

AMARILLO, Tex. (UPI) — Funeral services will be held Monday for Fred Tripp, columnist and former news editor for the Amarillo News. Tripp, 59, died Friday night.

Tripp was a native of New Orleans and attended Tulane University before taking his first newspaper job in Mobile, Ala., in 1936. He served in World War II and joined the Wichita Falls Daily News in 1946. A year later he joined the Amarillo newspapers as a reporter.

He is survived by his widow and two brothers.

Radioactivity Leaks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Leakage of radioactivity into streams and ground water at nuclear waste disposal burial grounds in Kentucky, New York, Tennessee and Idaho has shown the need for closer study of all atomic waste dumps, according to congressional investigators.

The General Accounting Office, an arm of Congress, said in a report issued Friday disposal sites had not been adequately studied and radioactivity is leaking into the environment from wastes buried at Maxey Flats, Ky.; West Valley, N.Y.; Oak Ridge, Tenn., and the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

The GAO said burial of radioactive wastes at Maxey Flats began in 1963 and an increase in radioactivity in the environment was detected in 1972. As a result, GAO said, the Kentucky Department for Human Resources began a special study in 1973.

"A report issued in December, 1974, concluded the disposal site was contributing radioactivity to the environment although not at levels which pose an immediate public health hazard," the GAO report said.

At West Valley, the GAO said, New York officials had detected "small amounts" of radioactivity in streams and concluded it was due mostly to surface spills during burial operations.

"State officials said the monitoring results showed no clear evidence of underground migration from the burial trenches to adjacent streams," the report said. However, opertion of the site was stopped early in 1975 while a plan was developed to prevent leakage to streams.

At the Holifield National Laboratory in Oak Ridge, the GAO said, wastes in burial trenches are in contact with water for "several months" a year and are leached into a stream which flows into the Clinch River.

"The radioactivity from the trenches accounted for about half the radioactivity released into the creek," the report said, adding "remedial action" had been taken.

Simants Found Guilty

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (UPI) — Erwin Charles Simants was convicted Saturday of six counts of first degree murder by a jury which said it could not have functioned impartially without judicial restrictions on pretrial news coverage.

The jury took four hours to return the guilty verdict against Simants. He showed no visible signs of emotion when Lincoln County District Judge Hugh Stuart read the guilty verdict on each of the six counts.

Simants was charged with six counts of first degree murder in the commission of a sexual assault in connection with the Oct. 18 deaths of six members of the Henry Kellie family in the small farm community of Sutherland located 24 miles west of North Platte.

Conviction of first degree murder in Nebraska carries a sentence of life imprisonment or the death penalty. Stuart set Jan. 29 as the date for sentencing.

The case sparked national attention over court-imposed orders that limited news coverage of pretrial proceedings.

The Lincoln County Attorney office's requested an order to limit the release of pretrial information, including confessions Simants made to a 13-year-old nephew, his mother and to law officers.

Stuart later refined the order, and the Nebraska news media appealed the free press-fair trial issue to the U.S. Supreme Court, which has agreed to hear the case.

Stuart polled the jury following the verdict. The jurors voted, 9-1-2, that they could not have heard the case impartially had the confessions been published or broadcast and voted, 11-1, that it was proper to sequester them and prevent them from reading or hearing news accounts during the trial.

Jury Foreman Richard Anderson, a North Platte insurance adjuster, was the only juror to vote that he could have ruled impartially without the gag order or the sequestration. In his profession, Anderson said, "We have to rely on facts rather than hersay."

Before reaching the unanimous guilty verdict, three votes were taken, one during two hours of deliberations Friday night and two during Saturday's two hours of deliberation.

Trophy and Helmet

Dr. C.F. Sparger helps Zindi Walberg with a protective helmet Saturday in preparation for a ride in a hot air balloon. Miss Walberg placed second in a speech contest sponsored by the Gray County Division of the American Heart Association to kick off CPR week. The doctor placed first but forfeitted his ride to the young lady. Winds, however, forced the balloon to grounded the balloon.

Dr. Sparger Talks Best

Dr. C.F. Sparger, representing Malone Pharmacy whose candidate has to step out at the last minute, won top prize — a trophy and the chance to ride in a hot air balloon — at the Gray County Division of the American Heart Association speech contest.

The organization kicked off CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) Week Saturday with a 7 a.m. breakfast in Coronado Inn.

Sixteen entered the contest. Zindi Walberg, representing the Gray County Heart Association and LVN Association, won second and Sparger donated his spot in the balloon to the teenager. She talked about CPR shoots for the bulls' eye.

John Warner placed third. Mid-West Chemical and Processing Co., White Deer, was his sponsor. His 2 to 3 minute talk centered helping your neighbor through CPR.

Dr. Sparger, president of the Heart Division, county group, was master of ceremonies for the breakfast. Bill Slaughter, vice president, introduced guests. The Rev. Ralph Palmer gave the invocation and the Rev. J.T. Wilson presented the benediction.

Special guests were Joyce Burkholder, executive council director from Lubbock; Pauline Hefley, director for the Texas Heart Association; Juanita Carroll, from the task force from Lubbock; and Betty Musick, senior regional director from Amarillo.

Mrs. Burkholder announced that the local heart division was top in Texas in program and public information.

Mrs. Joyce Walberg provided organ music for the meeting and the Walberg sisters sang.

Other speech contestants were Miss Halcon Back, representing American National Bank of McLean; David Gantz, Cabot; Bob Steger, Celanese; Art Aftergut, Pampa Chamber of Commerce; Dr. Ron Hendricks, Citizens Bank and Trust Co.; Luther Robinson, First National Bank; Kathy Ward, Highland General Hospital; Ken Doughtery, Highland General Hospital Auxiliary; Max Presnell, Lee - Tex Valve; Ted Everhart, Noon Lions Club; Dr. Roy Braswell, Pampa Rotary; Scott Langford, Southwestern Public Service, and Chuck Tanner, Tigrett Butane and Supplies.

Curt Beck, Dean Davis and Bill Watson served at judges. They are members of Toastmasters International.

Winds forced cancellation of the balloon flight of the hot air balloon.

Aerosol Plant Explodes

CUMBERLAND, R.I. (UPI) — A series of explosions blew a side out of an aerosol manufacturing plant Saturday, injuring at least 17 persons.

"Small explosions were going off all over the place," said Ray Hamel, owner of a nearby gasoline station. "Then the roof got engulfed in flames."

Police said the 17 were among 30 employes in the Peterson-Puritan Aerosol Inc. when the explosion occurred. At least two suffered severe burns over 60 per cent of their bodies.

"Most of the damage was in the personnel and experimental departments," said a fire official, estimating 25 per cent of the building was burned or destroyed.

"We got a call about 9:20 a.m. saying there was a loud explosion and a huge cloud of black smoke over the building," he said.

One side of the building, about 80 feet long, was shattered and several 10 to 15-foot holes were blown through the front of the cinder block building.

"The biggest worry at first were several large gas storage tanks next to the building," said Hamel, "but, the fire was brought under control."

The fire department evacuated a nearby Boys Club and two homes because of heavy fumes.

"I saw black smoke coming. I left my service station, went up to a cliff that oversees the whole building. I saw a whole wall pushed outward," said Hamel. "A man was running around trying to get the big tractors started. He couldn't even get in because they were all covered with cinder blocks."

Company manager Robert Boronski said the cause of the explosion was not immediately known, but the building was still standing and was not a total loss.

Boronski said the walls were constucted so they would blow out during an emergency. "We wouldn't want something like this contained."

"If they weren't blowout panels, we probably would have had some fatalities," said fire official Robert Jolly. He said the initial explosion occurred in an area loading the aerosol cans.

VA Provides Hearing Aids

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Veterans Administration provides hearing aides for veterans at costs "considerably lower" than the average consumer pays a hearing aid dealer for the devices, Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said Saturday.

Releasing a study by the General Accounting Ofice, Percy said the VA pays an average of nearly $160 more for a hearing aid bought from a dealer than for one purchased directly from the manufacturer. VA buys from both.

"Hearing aid dealers maintain that the markup is due to their cost of servicing the instrument," Percy said in a statement.

"The high prices charged in these private transactions put the purchase of a hearing aid, which is an extremely valuable communications tool for many Americans, out of the price range of many elderly persons on fixed incomes unable to afford the cost," said Percy, himself a hearing aid user who frequently criticizes the hearing aid industry.

The GAO study shows the VA in fiscal year 1974 paid an average of $104.88 to manufacturers for hearing aids, Percy said. The average price it paid local dealers for the same device was $264.49. One manufacturer chargd the VA $82 for which a dealer charged the VA $315.20, he said.

In fiscal 1974, VA purchased 12,960 hearing aids from manufacturers and 739 from local dealers, said the study by GAO, spending watchdog for Congress. From its supplies, the VA issued 14,401 hearing aids including 11,099 to VA clinics, 2,724 to military organizations and 578 to the Indian health service.

The VA program provides for issuing hearing aids, including all necessary accessories, to each eligible veteran needing them. Hearing tests are conducted at 45 VA clinics throughout the country.

The GAO study concluded it cost VA an average of $199.90 for a package consisting of hearing aids, salaries of hearing professionals, travel, depreciation, batteries and overhead.

"The figures are significant," said Percy, "because the $199.90 figure includes audiological services, which are not provided by hearing aid dealers, who often charge for the aid alone as much as three or four times the manufacturer's price."

HEW Softens Spanking Order

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Apologizing for "any inconvenience caused," the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said Saturday it is sharply reducing the scope of a student spanking order issued last summer to the nation's public schools.

The original order required all 16,000 U.S. public school systems to keep detailed records on student punishment. It touched off a controversy, with some critics charging HEW was trying to tell schools how to discipline students.

In softening that directive, the department said extensive record-keeping now will be required only at the 3,000 elementary and high school systems that have 90 per cent of the nation's minority students and will not take effect until the school year starting next fall.

At the same time, however, HEW increased the complexity of other disciplinary records required at all schools receiving federal aid — a category covering most of the 16,000 public districts and some private schools.

Those less-detailed requirements called for numerical statistics on the race and sex of students disciplined to help in enforcing laws prohibiting federal aid to schools that practice discrimination.

HEW said schools now must include new racial information showing whether disciplined students are American Indian or Alaskan native; Asian or Pacific Islander; black, not of Hispanic origin; Hispanic; or white, not of Hispanic origin. Previous racial designations were less specific.

The revised policy lists five disciplinary measures the 3,000 high-minority school systems must record — expulsion, suspension, spanking and paddling.

HEW said records should not necessarily be confined to the five listed areas. But it exempted schools from recording such disciplinary measures as staying after school or standing in the corner.

At the meeting called for 10 a.m. Tuesday in the hotel's Starlight Room the stockholders will be asked to approve the sale and complete liquidation of the corporation.

George Scott, president of the company, said the proposal must be approved by a vote of holders of as least two-thirds of the outstanding stock.

Stockholders who will be unable to attend the special meeting have been requested to send their proxies to any of the following members of the executive committee: George Scott, E.L. Green Jr., Don R. Lane, Floyd Watson, E.O. Wedgeworth, Floyd Imel and Frank Culberson.

TEXAS TALK

By Doug Howard

Just how significant is the wheat producer in terms of world trade? Statistics provide a pretty solid answer. Although U.S. wheat production still ranks behind Russia and Western Europe in terms of total output, it has been the American wheat producer who has most successfully responded to meeting the growth in world demand. Only five years ago our wheat exports totaled just over 17 million tons . . . about 30 percent of the world trade. This marketing year United States exports of wheat will top 37 million tons and account for nearly one-half the world wheat trade. In just five years that represents an increase of more than 115 percent in volume and nearly a 70 percent increase in the share of the market. Well done wheat growers!

Wallace Opposes Fed Judges

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — George C. Wallace has staked out a group of opponents that won't be on any ballot and seldom respond to public criticism. He's running against the nation's federal judges.

The Alabama governor fired the opening salvo in that campaign last week, claiming "thugs and federal judges" were working together to take over the country.

"A good vote for George Wallace might give a political barbed wire enema to some of these federal judges," Wallace told a news conference filmed by his campaign organization for possible use in television commercials.

The immediate cause of Wallace's anger was a ruling by U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr. that Alabama's prisons were "barbaric." The judge threatened to close down the prisons unless a long list of improvements were made.

Wallace made it clear that he was angered by more than just Johnson's ruling. He referred to Judge Arthur Garrity, who issued the Boston school busing order, and to other judicial decisions he said had encouraged crime and helped to overcrowd Alabama's prisons.

The attack was reminiscent of Wallace's 1968 verbal assaults on federal bureaucrats, but it most resembled his earlier attacks on Judge Johnson, who he denounced during the 1962 gubernatorial campaign as "a low-down, carpetbaggin', scalawaggin', race-mixin' liar" for his civil rights decisions.

Johnson's prison decision last week, which Wallace emphasized was similar to decisions by judges in other states, required the state to provide guards 24 hours a day to stop inmates from assaulting each other, to provide such sanitary items as toothbrushes, to serve special meals to prisoners under doctors' orders, and to end the practice of having some inmates sleep on the floor.

Wallace denounced the decision for seeking to give the prisons "a hotel atmosphere" and for ordering the state to run "a catering service."

"Under this court order," he said, "if you want a couple of years of good rest, you can go out and mug somebody and get a couple of years of rest in a resort atmosphere."

CAIRO (UPI) — The Egyptian government has opened up the short-cut desert highway between Cairo and Ismailia for more adventurous travelers who would like to take the two-hour drive for a glimpse of the Suez Canal.

Ismailia, built in the 1860s in the French style, was half-destroyed in 1967-73 warfare. Most of the damage has been repaired, and the truly garden aspect with balconies reminiscent of New Orleans restored.

Reagan Plays High-risk Politics With Budget Plan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — No sooner had Ronald Reagan unveiled his $90 billion budget-cutting plan in Chicago in September than uneasiness befell many of his conservative supporters.

Since then, debate has flared in and outside the Reagan camp between all-out supporters of the plan and those who consider it "philosophically sound" but "high-risk politics."

The former California governor's challenge to President Ford for the GOP presidential nomination had been on the offensive until the press and public began asking hard questions.

As a result, Reagan has devoted increasing amounts of time in his campaign appearances to defending the plan, which some of his supporters privately say never should have been unveiled in the first place.

While Reagan did specify in his speech that the transfer of federal programs to the states — which included antipoverty, education, food stamps and welfare assistance programs — would be "systematic," he failed to specify that the transfer would be phased-in gradually, perhaps over several years.

Reagan's strategists believe he had to come up with his own budget-cutting plan to counter criticism that he offered no way to reduce the size of federal government.

"They were saying Reagan had no specifics," this Reagan lieutenant said. "That he was all smoke. We had to lay that to rest."

But conservative columnist Patrick Buchanan said that instead of specifics, Reagan had written "a book ... for his adversaries, providing them with sufficient detailed information to tell every school district and political subdivision in America how much in federal aid they will lose — i.e., jobs — if Ronald Reagan becomes president.

"It is one thing to declare that sacred cows must be slaughtered," Buchanan said. "It is quite another to paint a dotted line across the neck of half the cattle in the country."

A strong congressional supporter of Reagan's, who did not wish to be identified, said the plan "could be disastrous for him unless he can recoup the offensive and show how wasteful and downright ineffective many of these programs are. Up to now, the press is just killing him."

Another supporter, closely tied to Reagan's inner circle of strategists, advised, "I would not have done it. I said it was a high risk type of thing from the beginning. They did it in a very hasty manner."

Reagan's plan is the brainchild of adviser Jeffrey Bell who remains, with Reagan, one of its staunchest defenders. Bell, Reagan, and campaign adviser Peter Hannaford originally approved the plan.

"We think this is our issue," a Reagan aide said, "and one that will elect Ronald Reagan."

The Southern California firm, Decision Making Information, which tested the idea last month in a nationwide survey, found 59 per cent of those polled favored transferring to the states those programs named in Reagan's Chicago speech, while 31 per cent were opposed.

County Okays Christmas Gifts

By ANNA BURCHELL
Pampa News Staff

The Gray County Commissioners Court Friday approved $118,683.24 in expenses for the operations of Highland General and McLean General Hospitals including $2,320.20 for Christmas expenses.

The expenses included 24 hams at $459.53; a fruit basket at $14.95, and $1,845.82 for turkeys.

Robert Monogue, administrator, said the turkeys were given to full - time employes who had worked the required number of hours to qualify.

He estimated that 220 or 230 of the 284 employes received one of the gifts.

Monogue said the practice has been followed each Christmas for the past three years.

Contacted after the commissioners meeting in regard to the hospital Christmas expenses, Judge Don Cain said he felt that it is a matter the hospital board should look into.

"We ask the board to see that all bills are necessary and proper," he said.

Hospital board members each received one of the hams as did department heads with the exception of the chief accountant who does not eat meat, Monogue said. He received the fruit basket.

In regard to the Christmas gifts the judge said the practice is not followed for other county employes.

"This is, I suppose, proper, but I don't think it is necessary," he added.

The judge explained that the board had been asked to look into the employe situation to make sure the hospital has an adequate number of employes, but not too many.

"If we have too many employes we will end up some day in the hole," he explained.

The Commissioners Court appoints hospital board members who in turn hire the administrator.

The administrator is a public official, the judge said and he referred to an attorney general's ruling in regard to this hospital in years past when another administrator hired his wife to work at the hospital.

The attorney general ruled that since the administrator is a public official the situation constituted nepotism. Consequently, the wife was terminated, the judge said.

The hospital expenses in another statement included $39.60 for Christmas cards mailed to doctors, clinics and others.

Asked if the county could give its 113 employes hams and turkeys, the judge replied:

"I suppose we could but I don't think it is necessary to do it."

He added that it probably caused friction and jealousy at the hospital among those who did not receive a gift.

The ham and turkey purchases were made from Franks Foods, 638, S. Cuyler. The statement, dated Jan. 1, also includes the fruit basket cost.

The hospital board will meet Monday in Highland's conference room. Dinner will be served at 5:30 p.m. to board members and the executive staff. The agenda, following dinner, will include the election of officers for the 1976 board.

Other items on the agenda include a proposal to upgrade the accounting system, health insurance, and reappointment of medical staff members.

Hospital board meetings are open to the public.

Senate Employe Worked at UT

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — A former Senate employe told UPI Saturday Senate Secretary Charles A. Schnabel sent her to the University of Texas athletic department in 1974 to work on preparations for three track meets.

Mary Matherson, 23, of Canoga Park, Calif., said Schnabel sent her to UT to replace another Senate worker, Deborah Denny, for one week in May, 1974. Miss Matherson was a Senate employe at the time assigned to type transcripts of the State Constitutional Convention.

"I'm sure I wasn't the only one asked," Miss Matherson said. "Mr. Schnabel just said I would like for you to go and work. I'm not going to ask any questions so I just went."

Other UT officials confirmed, however, that both women worked at the college on preparations for the annual Texas Relays and the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the U.S.-U.S.S.R. track meets held on the campus that year.

Book Probes Military Impotence

By JOE SEGAL
Lovett Memorial Library

Most of the revolutions of the past decade received wide publicity, from the "youth revolution" of anti - war, pro - pot collegians to the "Nixon revolution" of resurgent conservatism. However, one of the most radical, and potentially most dangerous, "movements" of our times has been developing unheralded, not on ghetto streets or in Oval Offices, but in the laboratories of a new kind of psychologist: the Behaviorist.

Led by B.F. Skinner, these scientists, and their associated technicians, the Behavior Modificationists, have torn up the traditional view of man, and, to quote the title of Skinner's "Behaviorist Bible", have gone "Beyond Freedom and Dignity".

The Behaviorist revolution says that there is no freedom; that our every act is predetermined entirely by our genes and our environment; that, like Pavlov's dogs, only on a more complex level, we are "conditioned". Skinner sees "dignity" as related simply to the "conspicuousness of the controls": the more obviously a behavior is conditioned, and "unfree", the less dignified we call it.

Behaviorism defines "good" as "positively reinforcing", and "bad" as "negatively reinforcing", and "emotions" as perceptions of body states, reacting in conditioned ways to reinforced stimuli".

Mind, of course, is a "mere explanatory fiction", on a level with the Hindu "tortoise that holds up the world".

Most frightening to a believer in freedom, dignity, and autonomous man, is what Skinner calls his "technology of behavior", which undertakes to "recondition" our behaviors, to achieve any stated end, from non - violence to total obedience to the State.

This highly sophisticated variation on the theme of brainwashing is not, unfortunately, a paper theory; it is being used right now to "recondition" drug addicts and mental patients out of their anti - social behaviors. It is also being used in the most modern classrooms to "condition" certain "behavioral objectives", such as spelling, into children. It is difficult to deny the worthwhileness of spelling, or of living drug - free and mentally "normal".

I do wish to quibble, however, over the presuppositions, the axioms, on which the Behaviorist technology is based. I feel a definite mental queasiness, in my non - existent mind, about anyone who looks, even for worthy ends, "Beyond Freedom and Dignity". Skinner's book is at 'Lovett Memorial Library; I recommend reading it, because it will stun and challenge you, and becuase those who do not know about the Behaviorist revolution may well be condemned to being "conditioned" by its methods.

Lovett Memorial also has the two key fictional treatments of a world run by Behaviorism: Skinner's utopia, "Walden Two"; and Anthony Burgess' nightmare - world, "A Clockwork Orange".

The Time of Illusion, by Jonathan Schell.
(Knopf, $10)

It has long been said that absolute power corrupts absolutely, but Schell puts forth the corollary that with absolute power to destroy comes military impotence.

That's where Schell believes so much of what has happened to the United States in recent years began — with the theories of Gen. Maxwell Taylor and Henry Kissinger that America's power to destroy the world with its nuclear arsenal actually handcuffed the nation in attempting to deal with its antagonists.

They worried that America's rivals would not believe this nation would risk nuclear holocaust to prevent their nibbling away at the world thousands of miles from U.S. shores. And this could lead to either Communist victory or nuclear war.

It was the desire to stop Communist aggressiveness without engaging in nuclear war that led the U.S. to try to prove the "credibility" of its willingness to take up arms in Vietnam.

From there the United States began walking a path where the gap between shadow and substance — the illusion of government words and actions as opposed to the reality — widened year by year, administration by administration.

All this really is prologue, the foundation on which Schell builds his book, which is a study of American political life during the years of the Nixon presidency.

His picture of Nixon is not flattering, but that is not Schell's main point. From his viewpoint, the Nixon years of crisis were the culmination of much that had gone before, but certain aspects of the Nixon personality made the climax inevitable.

Those Nixon attributes varied and not all were discreditable. For instance, very basic to what happened was that Nixon, unlike Lyndon Johnson, was primarily concerned with foreign affairs. When Johnson perceived Viet Nam, or opposition to his policies in Viet Nam, threatening the American domestic fabric, he withdrew.

Nixon, for whom domestic affairs and policies paled to insignificance beside his preoccupation with international matters, forged ahead and was determined to impose his will on the body politic.

There were other reasons, including Schell's view of Nixon's isolated presidency, in which Nixon used his power to create a dream world.

"Sometimes he would block a fact out of only his own awareness; sometimes he would attemt to block it out of the awareness of the whole nation; and sometimes he would simply wipe the offending fact off the race of the earth in a B-52 raid," Schell writes. "The President was becoming the author of his own environment. He manufactured events and then he 'responded' to them. He invented enemies and then he went to war against them...He invented crises and then he made 'great decisions' to resolve them. As for the rest of us, it became our fate to live for a half a decade inside the head of a waking dreamer."

Schell has written something of great worth — a book of ideas. Its weakness is that of most single-theory interpretations of history — life is to complicated and chaos to all-pervading to respond to logic. Schell does not stoop to the "Illusion" he derides, but rather illuminates a scene from a new angle, a new viewpoint, which will be controversial but not dull.

Joan Hanauer (UPI)

Love or Nothing, by Tom Prideaux.
(Scribners, $10)

This book, sub-titled "The Life and Times of Ellen Terry," also could be described as a modern writer's love affair with the legendary British actress.

Ellen Terry was born in 1847 and died in 1928. Her first stage appearance was in 1856, her last in 1925 — an amazing span of 69 years.

She was married three times but her only two children — one of whom became the innovative scenic designer Gordon Craig — were born out of wedlock.

She fascinated audiences on two continents, seemingly lived as man and wife for many years with actor - manager Henry Irving, and was adored by George Bernard Shaw, Winston Churchill, John Singer Sargent, Alfred Tennyson, and Oliver Wendell Holmes among many others.

Her paintings say she was beautiful; photographs say otherwise. Some critics thought she was a marvelous actress, introducing naturalness to the stage; others thought she always played her own magnetic self.

Though Prideaux disclaims the role of biographer, this highly-readable book does indeed tell of "The Life and Times of Ellen Terry," as well as give a loving portrait of one of the greatest "stars" of all time.

The Swiss Account, by Leslie Waller. (Doubleday, $8.95) Intrigue and high finance go together like bacon and eggs, or so the fictional chroniclers of the business world would have us believe. This yeasty novel has as many predictable elements as a corporate annual report — including a lovely young woman about to inherit control of a Swiss financial and industrial dynasty (don't ugly young women ever inherit big legacies?).

The Revenge of Moriarty, by John Gardner. (Putnam $8.95) The game is afoot again for A. Conan Doyle and Sherlock Holmes fans in another Gardner recreation of the diabolical profession and the criminal world of Victorian London. Moriarty has devised a clever revenge for his confederates and the Scotland Yard police who foiled his plan to assassinate the Prince of Wales.

He Traded City Advertising World For a Grocery Store in Wheeler

By JEANNE GRIMES
Pampa News Staff

It began somewhere between seriousness and speculation — the events which propelled Bob Roark into a new career as a small - town grocer in Wheeler on Sept. 16, 1974.

Oddly, it was his enrollment in an auto mechanics course that netted him the new business.

The middle - aged advertising executive from Oklahoma City resigned his position as advertising manager for Orbit Magazine, rotogravure publication of the Sunday Oklahoman, and headed west.

He had nearly spent 21 years working for the Oklahoma Publishing Company (OPUBCO), with the exception of a three - month period when he quit and moved to Pampa in the 1950s.

"I took a course in automobile tune - ups and maintenance just for something to do in the spring of 1974," Roark said.

"My brother - in - law is the Chevrolet dealer in Wheeler and he also owned this grocery store. Well, he started to needle me about being a mechanic and then he asked me to come out here and manage his service department.

"I told him there was no way I would do that, but that I would be interested in buying the grocery store if he would sell."

Three months later, in May or June, the advertising man was a merchant.

A housing shortage, a familiar difficulty in many towns, prevented Roark's immediate move to Wheeler.

"I had visited Wheeler many times over the years and had made some friends in the town," he said.

As it turned out, one of those friends owned the only house for sale in Wheeler at the time.

Roark contacted the man and told him that if the financing was approved for the store, he would be in the market for a home.

"I told him I was interested in the house and he held it for me."

Since that move, Roark and his wife Maxine have purchased another home in the older section of town. They are in the process of remodeling it — doing some of the work themselves.

"My folks were living in McAlester (Okla.) and since my father was in poor health I talked them into moving here," Roark said. They purchased the first house from Bob and Maxine.

The rest of their family, Roark said, including the couple's three daughters, still live in Oklahoma.

Roark's Fine Foods competes with one other grocery store for customers in the town and surrounding communities.

After beginning operation of his store, Roark said, he was able to hire the, competition's manager when half interest in that store was sold.

"The biggest plus to my being successful," Roark said, "is the people I have working for me. Everyone knows what to do, so there's really no bossing them."

The store employ's eight people full time and four part - time.

He said that the only time he really feels, or acts, like the boss is when he has to deal with suppliers or salesmen.

"Being off of the Interstate in a small town, I've had to let the salesmen know I'm here," he said.

Maxine has helped in the store on a full time basis, Roark said, since the store opened, handling the bookkeeping duties. But now, he added, he is trying to give her more time of her own so she can become involved in other things.

In addition to overseeing the remodeling work being done at their home, she has recently started taking organ lessons.

During his 16 months in Wheeler, Bob Roark has become one of a vanishing species — and he thrives on it.

The cutthroat competition which is the trademark of so many businesses has bypassed the Wheeler grocer and he has maintained his independence.

"We are strictly independent," he said, adding that Roark's Fine Foods offers many of the extra services and benefits which are increasingly hard to find in today's more modern business world.

"There is a group of elderly widows who call in their orders and we deliver their groceries. The store carries accounts for customers and the store is sort of an information center for the town," he said, explaining that he often receives calls asking him to relay messages to some resident on the off - chance that person might drop by the store.

"That's what makes it fun," he said.

The greatest adjustment following the move, he believes, has been made by his wife.

"Actually, it (the move) was more difficult for Maxine," he said. "She grew up in Oklahoma City

"But I had enough work to keep me busy."

After working a 40 - hour week for 21 years, Roark found himself putting in more than 60 hours each week once he moved to Wheeler.

And though he said he works "a helluva lot harder out here than I did back there" he is quick to add, "There is no question that a lot of pressure was lifted when I got out of advertising.

"I've had no second thoughts or regrets," he said of the move. "They couldn't pay me to go back.

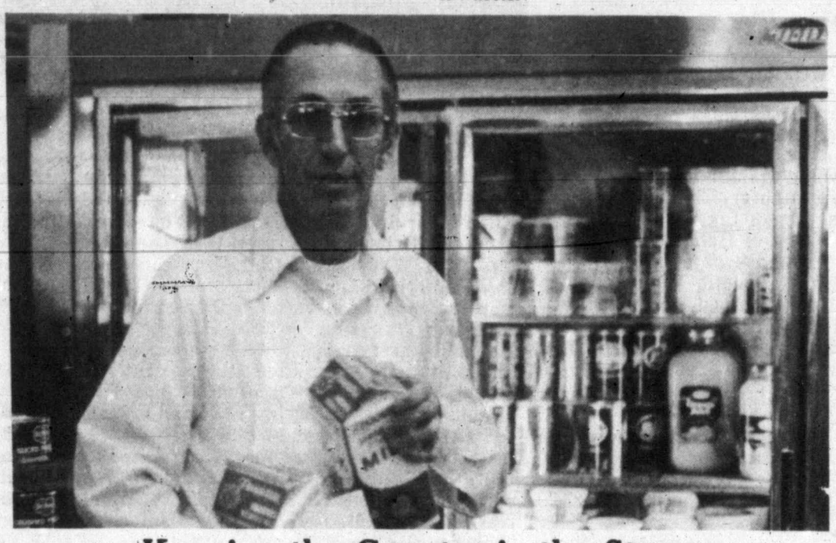

"I learned a lot at OPUBCO that has been helpful in operating a business," Roark said — such things as determining profit and loss figures or maintaining good public relations.

"Lots of our business comes from surrounding towns like Allison, Briscoe, New Mobeetie, Kellerville, and Twitty."

Roark said of the people in Wheeler and the people in Oklahoma City: "There's no way to compare the people. The people out here are a lot nicer.

"Everybody's real free out here. We've lost all of the formal atmosphere of city life," he said.

"We had to go back to Oklahoma City recently," he said. "And while we were driving across Oklahoma City, the only thing we wanted was to get back to Wheeler as soon as possible."

Keeping the Country in the Store

Bob Roark says he has had "no regrets" about turning his back on the job security that was his as an advertising executive in Oklahoma City and beginning a new career as a small - town grocer in Wheeler. Roark's Fine Foods offers many personal touches in service to the customers — including filling orders over the phone and making deliveries.

High Blood Pressure - Silent Epidemic

By JANE P. MARSHALL
Pampa News Staff

Suddenly Mrs. A's head swam. Her vision waved. The top of her head felt as though it would break through her skull.

After a medical checkup, Mrs. A's doctor pinpointed her trouble. She had high blood pressure.

That was 20 years ago. "I've learned to live with it," she says.

Mrs. A is from Pampa. So is Mr. C. He discovered he had high blood pressure after he became dizzy and constantly tired at work.

Both must take medication each day, probably for the rest of their lives. Both uncovered their problems before they suffered a stroke or heart attack.

Chronic high blood pressure, called hypertension, is believed to exist in one of every six persons. Most commonly hit are middle - aged black men. Women are more prone to the disease than men.

It also is more frequent in those more than 65 years old.

"But the thinking now is that it all starts at a younger age," according to Jesse Newberry of the Gray County heart group.

The Texas heart group estimates that a million Texans have undiagnosed high blood pressure.

Surveys in 1971 indicated that nearly half of those who had high blood pressure didn't know it. Results just released from a 1974 study show that the percentge of those unaware of their problem had dropped to 29 per cent.

Increased awareness seems to be a major goal of such groups as the National Heart and Lung Institute (NHLI) the National High Blood Pressure Education Program and the heart group. Their efforts may some day eliminate the "silent epidemic" which has become a major health problem in the United States.

According to the NHLI, the number of people who were receiving adequate treatment for high blood pressure nearly doubled in 1974.

But there still are large numbers of people who were either ignoring the disease or were not controlling it. "It's knowing and then bringing high blood pressure under control that's important," Dr. C.F. Sparger, president of the Gray County Division of the American Heart Assn.

"We don't know why, but blacks are twice as likely to have the disease and those who develop high blood pressure probably will do so at an earlier age and have a more severe form of it than whites," he adds.

He estimated that only one in eight are receiving proper treatment for their high blood pressure.

Undiagnosed, the disease can eventually lead to increased risk of strokes, heart attacks and kidney failure.

Blood pressure is the force of the blood against the walls of the arteries. This force is generated by the heart as it pumps.

High blood pressure add to the workload of the heart and arteries.

Mrs. A blames her high blood pressure on excess weight and tension.

Mr. C blames his high blood pressure on worry.

Dr. Sparger says overweight and tension certainly contribute to high blood pressure. Some diseases cause it, he says, and the tendency to have high blood pressure may run in families.

"Some people," he says, "have no symptoms at all."

Everyone's blood pressure goes up and down, medical experts say. High when excited or exercising. Low when sleeping. But with hypertension, the pressure goes higher than 140-90 and stays there.

In a blood pressure reading, the first number represents the systolic pressure when the heart pumps. The second number, disastolic pressure, indicates the heart at rest.

The normal range is 90-150 — 60-90. Blood pressure normally increases a little with age.

Dr. Sparger recommends that a person have his blood pressure checked routinely every six months to a year. "If a person has trouble, a doctor can watch it and keep it under control and keep him from developing complications," he adds.

Treatments include medication to relieve tension, medication to cause loss of excess fluids, medication to directly effect blood pressure itself and weight control.

He stresses the importance of catching a blood pressure problem early.

By seeing their doctors and heeding his instructions, Mrs. A and Mr. C are saving their hearts, protecting their kidneys and preventing strokes.

Like most doctors, theirs prescribed medication.

Mr. C's doctor urged him to cut salt from his diet and quit eating fatty and fried foods. He's lost about five pounds since his problem was diagnosed three months ago. "You're fixing to run into a stroke," Mr. C's doctor told him.

"So I shy away from the pork chops and eat more chicken. And I cut down on rich desserts," Mr. C. says. "Sometimes I don't believe I have it (high blood pressure) but I keep up with my diet and tablets."

To lower her blood pressure, Mrs. A cut down on work and lost 50 pounds. She says her friends were surprised and her doctor pleased. And she is proud.

"It was a challenge. I wanted to prove to myself that I could do it," she says. That was three years ago and her weight is still down. And so is her blood pressure.

Check for Hypertension

Mrs. Vardene Searl, LVN, of the Gray County Heart Division, takes Mrs. Corinne Bell's blood pressure. The nurse uses a sphygmomanometer which contains a pressure meter. She pumps air into the cuff and then slowly releases the air as she listens to the blood in the arm. When she first hears the sound of the heart pumping, she reads the meter. Then she reads it again when the sound disappears. The test only takes a minute or two.

Community Profile: Boyd Taylor

By TEX DeWEESE
Pampa News Staff

"We are in an era that marks a time for change and decision for towns like Pampa," says Boyd Taylor, general manager of Cabot Corp. Oil and Gas Division, a vice president of the company and now launched into the 1976 bicentennial year as president of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce.

Taylor, a native Texan and product of Texas secondary and higher educational institutions, believes there has been so much national and big city disillusionment that people are looking for good places to live.

"And they are talking about Pampa," he said. "While we want growth, we don't want to lose what has made our city a desirable place to live and work."

As Taylor puts it, "Pampa's community and civic leaders need to balance the city's opportunity for growth with the need for growth and maintenance of the quality of life we have here."

Taylor was born in Temple, Tex., graduated from high school there, received his BA degree and law school degree from the University of Texas at Austin in 1955.

He practiced law in Austin for one year, married an Austin girl (Katherine Brown) and moved to Amarillo in 1956 to join the Phillips Petroleum Co. legal staff.

Two years later in 1958, Taylor and his wife moved to Pampa where he became a member of the Cabot Corp. legal staff. He served in that capacity here for 10 years.

In 1968 Taylor was transferred to Cabot's Charleston, W.Va., offices where he remained for three years. His first post there was head of the regional counsel department. One year later in 1969 he was appointed director of the company's Gas Marketing Division.

In September of 1971, Taylor was transferred to Boston, Mass., as general manager of the Liquified Natural Gas Projects and named assistant to Cabot Corp. president, Robert Charpie.

It was three years later that he was named general manager of the company's Oil and Gas Division and transferred back to Pampa. That was in January of 1974. One month later, in February of the same year, Taylor was elected vice president of Cabot Corp. The Taylors have one son, Forrest, a senior in Pampa High School.

The industrial chief and chamber president is a Presbyterian. He is a member and past president of the Pampa Kiwanis Club and an ardent worker for any project that will make Pampa a better place in which to live.

Taylor's primary outside activities can be traced to his addiction to playing tennis when weather permits on the high school and country club courts.

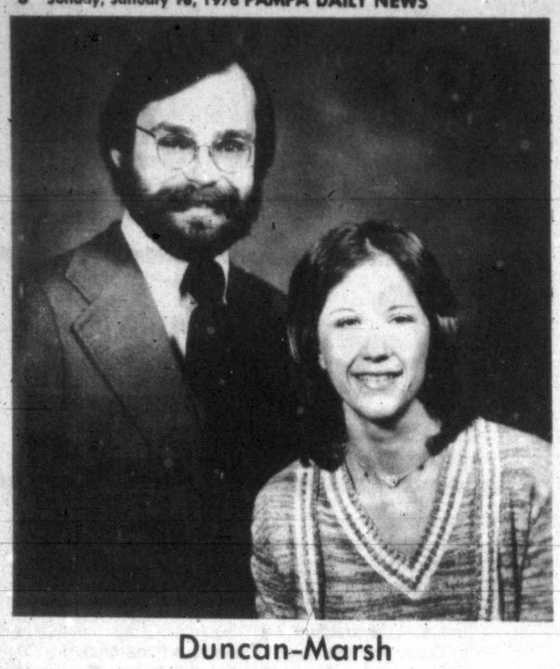

He likes to travel and the Taylors enjoy bridge. Mrs. Taylor, he says delves in art as a painter.

Turning to his own company, the Cabot Corp., and its place in the community, Taylor indicated there are good plans here for the future.

"Cabot has a great deal at stake here," he said, "and we desire to see Pampa prosper and be an attractive place to live.

"Our company plans to continue to grow and do well, respect ourselves and earn the respect of the people who live where we have operations."

Taylor, incidentally, is a dyed - in - the - wool fan of the Dallas Cowboys football team. He let it be known that when the Cowboys meet the Pittsburgh Steelers this afternoon in the Super Bowl at Miami, his best wishes would be riding with them during the three - hour period when nothing else mattered.

Varietas Elects Pres

"The Consumer and the Marketplace" was the subject for the program at Varietas Study Club on Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J.E. Gibson, club president.

Officers were elected for the year of 1976 - 1977, as follows: president, Miss Anna Pierce; vice - president, Mrs. Rue Hestand; secretary, Mrs. L.B. Penick; treasurer, Mrs. Raymond Morrison; parliamentarian, Mrs. R.W. Lane; and reporter, Mrs. Otis Nace.

Miss Anna Pierce, program chairman, presented the speakers. Mrs. Rue Hestand talked on "It's Time to Speak Up" and based her discussion largely on the pamphlet "Some Thoughts on Economic Freedom and Responsibility" by Randall Meyer, president of Exxon U.S.A. She emphasized the need for free enterprise and the steady governmental encroachments against it, stressing the need to retain the freedom that American citizens still have.

Mrs. S.C. Evans then spoke on "Why Not Help Ourselves?" and stressed that there are countless things that Americans can do for themselves if they will put forth the necessary time and effort. She discussed improvements that have been made and those that should be made.

One guest, Mrs. Dale Lewis, attended the meetings.

Hints from Heloise

Dear Friends:

A friend of mine just left here with her darling 9-month-old niece named Yura Lee.

Yura Lee lives in Singapore but was here for a visit and is she ever a cutie...

Like most babies she was crawling all over the place, but you could always tell where she was, because she had little bells around her ankles.

In this country we put them on children's shoes, but what about when they are in the house and barefoot?

I just couldn't get over this cute idea.

They were around each ankle and looked like a little ankle bracelet with a small bell.

So all of you mothers with children at the crawling and getting-into-everything stage think about this.

You can always tell where your little darlings are and maybe catch them before they get into too much "?".

Dear Heloise:

I always make sure to wipe off around the tops of bottles such as syrup, etc., that get sticky.

Then the next time I use that bottle, it opens without difficulty.

It's worth the extra fraction of a minute to clean it off before putting it away and saves time and, most importantly, your temper.

When I write to an elderly person or a shut-in, I always put an extra stamp inside the letter.

LETTER OF THOUGHT!

Dear Heloise:

Read your column several weeks ago on wise shopping and fully agreed with all you said. One of my pet savings is:

Toilet tissue comes in a single roll with 1,000 sheets of good quality tissue at approximately 24 cents a roll.

All the various brand family packages of two rolls of 500 sheets per roll are around 50 cents a package and the four roll packages run proportionately.

How appalled I was at a recent store opening to see nearly everyone with one or more bags of eight rolls — 250 sheets per roll of very poor quality tissue for 99 cents.

Big bargain? More than double the price of my 2,000 sheets for 48 cents!

At Wits End

By ERMA BOMBECK

A couple of years ago on a talk show I heard actor John Cassavetes say something about marriage that made sense. He said, "Husbands and wives see one another at the worst possible times of the day. They don't get the best of one another and that is why so many marriages fail."

He's right, you know.

The mornings are bad for me. During the night everything has wrinkled: my skin, the clothes to be worn that day, the lunch meat. The dog (who has kidneys the size of barley corn) is impatient to be let out.

The shoes that were left in the middle of the living room have moved on. The bread is frozen. While the kids shower, the mirror fogs up and my husband's beard goes limp. He's a bleeder.

I waste 20 minutes trying to make 35 cents out of two quarters and five pennies. My son mistakenly grabs the garbage (which he forgot to take out the night before) for his lunch and yells, "I'll eat it on the bus." My husband removes ice from the car with a pancake turner and scratches the windshield. He yells, "Have a good day!" and I yell back, "You have it! I had it yesterday."

When my husband comes home in the evening, I'm going dowhill again. Once every three years I have sauerkraut for dinner. Once every three years he has it for lunch. It always falls on the same day.

One kid misses the bus and has to be picked up. The paper is late. I try to fix the toilet and bend the floater. An important phone message is written in yellow crayon on a paper towel and has one digit missing. Our water smells funny.

There is an open house at the school. Under the harsh lights I look like my grandmother, two days before her 75th birthday. We learn our children are average. One of them was caught flashing slides into the commode and then flushing so they would move to the delight of his schoolmates.

At home, there are no ice cubes. We missed the eleven o'clock news. There is snow forecast for the next morning. We cannot get the car in the garage.

In bed I say, "I wish you had been here earlier when I was fresh and scintillating."

"So, give me a call," he yawned.

"For 15 seconds," I sighed, "it's hardly worth it."

If you are overweight you can lose pounds and keep them off by paying attention to the number of calories you consume. There are 3,400 calories in a pound of fat.

Feeding The School - Age Child

School years are important ones nutritionally for the child. Outwardly, the child between 6 and 12 is growing slowly. However, the child should be storing adequate nutrients for the period of rapid growth in adolescence. A well - balanced and adequate diet is essential during the school years.

It is best if the child has a fairly routine schedule for meals beginning with a good breakfast. Breakfast is often considered one most important meal of the day. A good breakfast furnishes about ¼ of the day's intake of calories and nutrients. It should contain a source of vitamin C (citrus fruit), a protein food, milk and sufficient other food to supply energy. Thus, a glass of juice, bacon or egg, milk and cereal or toast would constitute a good breakfast for a school - age child.

Lunch should continue to be an adequate meal whether he eats it at home, carries it from home or buys it at school.

Amounts of food recommended for school - age children each day include 3 - 4 cups milk, 2 servings meat group, 4 servings from fruit and vegetable group, and 4 servings from the bread group. These are the recommended amounts a child needs each day. Additional foods may be needed to supply energy needs.

Thought For The Day

Responsibility cannot be imposed. It only grows from within a person, fed and directed by values absorbed at home and in the community.

Asks Puppy Support

ELLIS, Kan. (UPI) — Thomas J. Kinderknecht is asking a small claims court for $110 in puppy support and damages from a neighbor whose dog allegedly impregnated his hunting dog.

Kinderknecht's suit claims Kenneth Wolf's registered Brittany spaniel, in violation of a city leash law, got past a fence into an enclosure in which his dog was kept. The result was six puppies born last Saturday.

He is asking $50 to recover medical expenses for the mother, a mixture of Australian and water spaniel, and to pay for loss of her services during the final three weeks of the hunting season for game birds. He also is seeking $1.50 a day with a minimum of $10 apiece to support the puppies until they are six weeks old.

The case will be heard in Ellis County small claims court Wednesday.

Pampa's Economy Prospers

Bentsen Says

He'll Work for Farmer

By ANNA BURCHELL
Pampa News Staff

AMARILLO — Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen, a Democratic presidential hopeful, said Tuesday that farmer and ranchers can expect him to work for programs that will allow them to stay on the farm.

He spent last week campaigning in Texas — and emphasizing that he is a candidate for re - election to the U.S. Senate with responsibilities to that post.

He says the presidential race is wide open and his chances are as good as anyone's.

In answering a question concerning what farmers and ranchers can expect from a Bentsen administration, the senator replied:

"The problem of the farmers today is that the cost of his equipment and supplies has gone up. . . I have introduced legislation whereby when foreign purchasers come into this country they could store their grain.

"This would help our farmers because we have good storage facilities. Then I am the first one to fight against the Russian Wheat Bill. I helped write legislation whereby we will monitor all foreign purchasers in this country.

"I want farmers to be able to grow crops best suited for their area and less controls for the farmers.

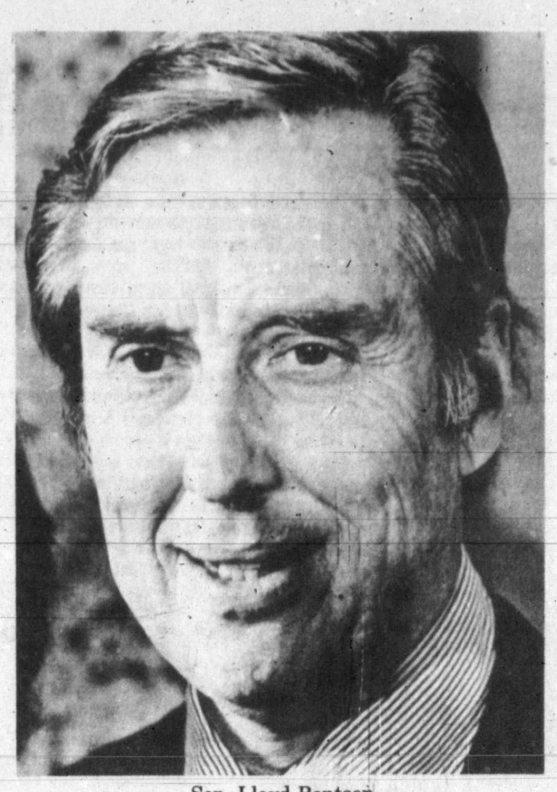

"We should be trying to increase production for the farmers and lower prices for the consumers," he concluded.

The senator will be interviewed at 1 p.m. today on KVII - TV channel 7 "Hotline to Politics," a program in which he also answers questions in regard to his presidential possibilities, Angola, the oil allowable controversy, water conservations, employment and the postal service. This reporter was a member of the interviewing panel.

In an address at the Hilton Inn Tuesday, Bentsen said he has proposed ideas on conservation of water . . ." what we can do in the way of crops that do not require so much water and working to strengthen the economy."

He says he is for free and open market for farmers.

"I am deeply concerned about embargoes on soybeans and wheat. We have been able to keep the dollar sound. The farmer has a tough time making ends meet. Production costs have gone up and the price the farmer gets for his products has gone down," he added.

Vanderburg Completes Plan

By PERRY D. GRUHLKEY
Soil Conservation Service

An intensive long - range plan of applying conservation practices recently was completed on the Fred Vanderburg Jr. farm, eight miles south of Pampa.

Vanderburg participated in a five - year plan of conservation work through the Great Plains Conservation Program administered by the Soil Conservation Service.

On the 640 - acre farming unit many conservation practices were installed to conserve water and prevent wind and water erosion.

Cost - shared practices applied to the land included 10 acres of grassed waterways, 58 acres of land leveling, tailwater recovery system, and 5,000 ft. of fencing to protect the waterways. Also, 8,000 ft. of underground irrigation piplines was installed as non - cost - share to aid in water conservation.

Vanderburg is practicing management program. Tailwater from irrigating is collected and returned to the land for recycling for the most efficient use of underground water. Crop residues are returned to the soil to provide organic matter, nitrogen, and aid in erosion prevention.

Vanderburg, with the assistance of the Great Plains Conservation Program, has developed his farming unit to produce at a maximum with minimul loss of water and no evidence of erosion.

Panhandle Water

By FELIX W. RYALS

This writer recently received a note and newsclipping from a longtime friend, Douglas Coffee who lives at 2142 Aspen in Pampa. Coffee has extensive ranching interests in Carson County. The news clipping came from the Jan. 6, issue of the Wall Street Journal and was written by Liz Roman Gallese. The fine article concerned the fish - farming industry in the United States. The article is a credit to the staff reporter. She may not know a catfish from a carp but the article is extensive and well written.

From time to time numerous Panhandle area farmers and businessmen have expressed an interest in fish - farming. Ralph Hutchinson up above Perryton in Ochiltree County has been the most successful catfish farmer in the Panhandle. Catfish farming from Wichita Falls down through the Dallas area and in south Texas has become a thriving industry. There is a catfish processing plant in Wichita Falls.

Catfish farming in Southeast Arkansas, Northeastern Louisiana and Western Mississippi got underway in 1964. In 1969 and 1970 The Pampa News carried several articles on the catfish farming industry. In 1969 the Readers Digest carried a story on catfish herding in Southeast Arkansas. Texas A&M University and the Texas Extension Service held a Catfish Conference at Texas A&M University in 1970. The top experts in the United States were the speakers for the conference.

Earl Farmer and sons, who have more than 1,000 acres in catfish, flew a plane load of fresh refrigerated catfish to Washington in 1970 and entertained the entire membership of congress with a catfish fry.

With the world food hunger crisis growing each year, the commercial raising of fish is going to become significant. The article in the Wall Street Journal tells of the growth of the fish industry and the expansion to other breeds of fish that are in great demand. The article is recommended reading for anyone interested in raising fish for food consumption.

The board of directors of the Panhandle Ground Water Conservation District will hold its regular quarterly meeting at the district office in White Deer on Monday night of the coming week. Business on the agenda will be the regular routine business of approving expenditures, budget review, validation of water wells drilled since the last board meeting, certification of the election and election of officers for the coming year. The deadline for absentee voting was Jan. 13, with no votes being cast.

Several important water meetings are coming up during the last part of January. West Texas State University and the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission will hold a water resources and solid waste management workshop on Jan. 21 - 22. The Governor's Task Force on Water and Natural Resources will meet in Austin in Jan. 23. The West Texas Water Institute will be held in Lubbock on Jan. 30.

The National Commission on Water Quality held a regional meeting in Fort Worth on Jan. 12. Congressman Jim Wright of Texas was urged that all citizens, industry representatives and state and local government officials should attend one of the regional hearings. Other -regional hearings will be in San Francisccо, Chicago, Boston and Washington.

Congressman Wright stated that the purpose of the National Water Quality regional hearing was to get citizen's views on what undoubtedly is the "most massive environmental clean - up effort of all time." He reminds Texans that the law setting the program into action has been in effort for almost three years. The National Water Quality Commission hopes to find out how far we have come and how far we have to go.

The National Water Pollution Control Act of 1972 set July 1, 1977, as the deadline for all US cities to have at least secondary treatment of waste water, and for industry to be using the "best practicable control technology."

Pesticide Users Safe

AUSTIN — Until further notice, Texas pesticide users will not be affected by the law enacted by the 1975 Legislature to bring the state into conformity with Environmental Protection Agency mandates.

Agriculture Commissioner John C. White announced that even though the Texas Pesticide Control Act went into effect Jan. 1, 1976, regulations will not be enforced until the EPA clarifies its demands.

The Texas law was enacted to regulate the sale and use of pesticides classified for restricted use, White said. The list of chemicals has not been released yet by the EPA.

Under the regulations, dealers of restricted use pesticides are to be licensed and users certified after training and testing.

"There will be no required dealer licensing or applicator certification until the pesticide list is completed," White stated.

"Congress has extended the effective date of the federal law until October 1977. We expect the process of selection of pesticides to take at least a year or possibly longer.

"We do plan to have training and testing available to those who are interested in becoming certified before it is mandatory," White stated.

The Texas Department of Agriculture will continue to enforce provisions requiring registration and proper labeling of all pesticides sold in the state.

The Battle of Adobe Walls was fought on Nov. 26, 1864, in Hutchinson County, Tex., between Kiowa Indians and a U.S. Army force headed by Col. Christopher "Kit" Carson.

Kiwanis Fertilizer

Jeff Anderson, president of Downtown Kiwanis Club, recently visited with me about their fertilizer sales program for the coming year. For 8 or 10 years this service club has sold 16 - 20 - 0 fertilizer as a money - raising project. They started out by selling around 300 bags annually. Each year they have upped their sales and the last two years they have sold 2,000 bags.

I suggested this money idea to them because of the real need for some one to handle this type of fertilizer. The reason I suggested the 16 - 20 - 0 fertilizer is because it is a tailor - made fertilizer for this area. We have copies of the results of all fertilizer tests and recommendations made on all samples that are sent in by local residents to our Lubbock Laboratory.

Based on the information on all these soil tests, we find 16 - 20 - 0 performs better than any other fertilizer. The first figure represents the per cent of nitrogen in a bag. The second figure represents the per cent of phosphorus, and the last figure represents the per cent of potash. The soils in Gray County are extremely high in potash.

Most virgin soil is well supplied with phosphorus. However, lawns and gardens that have been heavily watered and heavily fertilized with a nitrogen fertilizer need phosphorus — thus the need for 16 - 20 - 0. A shot of this fertilizer is good on shrubs that are struggling to live after a hail or some mechanical injury. It is an excellent fertilizer for your lawn or garden. The Kiwanis Club has a door - step delivery service.

Profits are plowed back into Pampa in form of service programs.

Soil Test

Abe Lewis was by our office last week to look over a soil test recommendation as sent back from our laboratory last week from Lubbock. Abe's soil test showed a need for phosphorus. The need for phosphorus usually shows up after fertilizing heavily with nitrogen and harvesting several big milo and grain crops.

Abe plans to apply a dry fertilizer to take care of his phosphorus needs and then apply anhydrous ammonia to take care of his nitrogen needs. Soil testing is more important than ever because of the high cost of fertilizer.

Brucellosis Program

Under heavy pressure from both the courts and independent livestock organizations, The Texas Animal Health Commission yielded and is imposing the uniform methods and rules as laid down by USDA. All embargoes, quarantines, and punitive steps have been lifted by USDA. I also presume that the Animal Health Commissions of several of the other states will also lift their restrictions. Texas still holds the record in foot dragging in this program as of this date. They now have 28 counties that are non - certified. There are 25 that are certified free and all the other counties — about 200 — have a modified - free status. These 28 counties are going to find it increasingly harder to market sexually mature female animals.

We have an unconfirmed report that very recently a case of undulant fever was diagnosed in Pampa in a packing house worker. Veterinarians and packing house workers are more likely to have the disease than any other occupation.

If you are making a product that endangers the health of someone after it leaves your farm or ranch, it becomes everybody's business.

We might add there is a National Brucellosis Committee made up of lay people outside of government that is most active in laying down the rules and regulations for this program. There were 6,300 cases of undulant fever (Brucellosis) in man in 1947 in the U.S. before any type of Brucellosis program got underway. Today they have less than 250 cases annually. A big majority of all states are now certified free or modified certified free. There are probably more counties in Texas that have no certification than in all the other states combined.

Gray County has a certified free status — the highest status attainable

It's Super Sunday for Dallas, Steelers

By JOE CARNICELLI
UPI Sports Writer

MIAMI (UPI) — The survivors of a gang war against the products of the computer age — that's the best way to describe the matchup for today's Super Bowl X showdown at the Orange Bowl for the National Football League championship.

The defending champion Pittsburgh Steelers, a roughhouse throwback to pro football's old days, take on the Dallas Cowboys, an innovative group whose every move seems to be regulated by its master computer.

At stake is a $15,000 per man jackpot for the winners as opposed to a $7,500 losers' share. A total purse of $1.35 million will be distributed and the winner will receive the Vince Lombardi Trophy.

Kickoff is 2 p.m. EST and the game will be carried by CBS to an estimated viewing audience of 75 million.

The Steelers won the American Conference Central Division title with a 12-2 record and defeated Baltimore and Oakland in the playoffs to win the AFC crown and qualify for their Super Bowl title defense.

Dallas earned a playoff slot by finishing as the wild card (best runnerup) in the National Conference with a 10-4 record and then qualified for its third Super Bowl appearance with stunning upsets of Minnesota and Los Angeles, both division champions.

The strain began to show on both clubs late in the week and both were expected to be at an emotional high for Sunday's confrontation.

The Steelers, many of whom were piqued at being cooped up away from the night life of Miami Beach, had some violent practices in mid-week and coach Chuck Noll had to taper workouts.

Cowboy coach Tom Landry said tension was setting in with his troops Friday.

"This is the biggest game in pro football," Landry said, "and the tension has been building and building. The players are starting to feel the pressure. I'm just glad we have 14 players who have been here before. Our 12 rookies seem to be in another world. They don't know what to worry about and what not to worry about. But they look at the old guys and they don't look worried, then the young guys think they don't have anything to worry about."

"We had signs as early as last Wednesday that our players were getting restless, very ornery," Noll said. "They wanted to get on with it. I didn't want them ready to play in the middle of the week. I want them to be very ornery Sunday."

Both clubs will be near 100 per cent healthy. Three Steeler players were question marks early in the week and only defensive end Harvey Martin of Dallas had any injury to speak of, a muscle pull.

"Joe Greene will play," said Noll of his all pro defensive tackle. "He's not 100 per cent — he still doesn't have full movement in his left arm—but he's as close to healthy as he has been all season. He'll split the job with Steve Furness, who did a great job filling in for Joe through the second half of the season. We think the heat will be a factor and Joe's conditioning is not what it should be since he's missed so much time."

The weather bureau predicted partly cloudy skies, with temperatures expected to reach 75-77 degrees at game time.

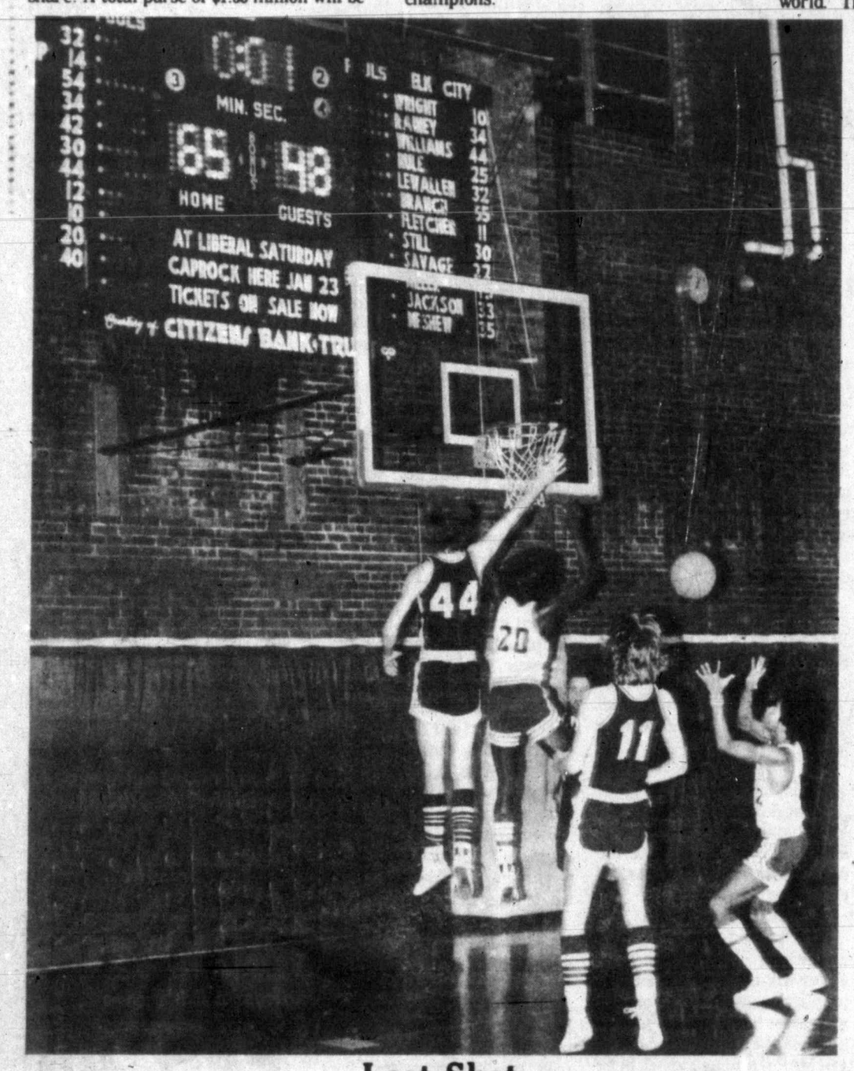

Landry said Martin had not worked after the title victory over Los Angeles, but that the defensive end seemed to regain his mobility in the warm Florida weather.

Offensively, the Steelers rely on fullback Franco Harris, the most valuable player in last year's 16-6 Super Bowl victory over Minnesota, to carry their attack. Harris was second to O.J. Simpson in the NFL rushing statistics this season and has an exceptional track record in post-season play. Last year he set a Super Bowl rushing record with 158 yards.

Terry Bradhsaw had the finest and most consistent season of his six-year career.

The Dallas offense relies on guile and deception and Landry probably is the top offensive innovator in the game today. His shotgun formation, with quarterback Roger Staubach lined up five yards behind the center in sure passing situations, has been a hot topic all week.

"The thing coaches dread is the unknwon," Landry said. "If a team is not stereotyped, you worry.

Super Bowl Game Plan

By MURRAY OLDERMAN
Newspaper Enterprise Association

PITTSBURGH, Offensive Tendencies:

Steelers live by the runs of Franco Harris, who has unusual stop-and-accelerate ability for big man.

Against the Dallas flex (two defensive linemen up on the ball, two men back to read and react), it's important to establish first-down dominance. It can be achieved by throwing on first down and running on second, to reverse usual pattern. But Terry Bradshaw will have to complete 60 per cent to make that strategy work.

Look for isolation of deep receiver Lynn Swann on corner back Mark Washington on right side of field because Cowboys frequently play man-to-man and play action can lure roving safety Cliff Harris up close.

Running backs Harris and Rocky Bleier take on greater import as receivers against Dallas linebackers, who are only fair on pass average.

DALLAS, Defensive Tendencies:

Since Franco busts many of his long gainers to the left out of Red and Brown formations, look for the Cowboys to load up on the weakside to stop him. Shut off Harris and you shut off Steelers because Bradshaw alone can't carry a team, no matter what you've heard about his maturation.

Against the pass, it's more important to cut down Bradshaw's throwing time than to worry about containing his scrambling. Under pressure, he's more prone to throw down the middle into double coverage.

Cowboys' controlled style of play with the flexed front four should contain the Steeler slant-ins. If they curb the runs, you'll see a lot of the Dallas six-man defensive back umbrella, with just one linebacker to guard the middle and the usual fourman rush up front.

This is the most physical Dallas team yet.

Key Matchups:

Left tackle Jon Kolb vs. right end Harvey Martin. Martin is Cowboys' most punishing pass rusher.

Wide receiver Lynn Swann vs. corner back Mark Washington. Swann is Steelers' main channel for hitting a long bomb.

Right tackle Gordon Gravelle vs. left end Too Tall Jones. By handling Too Tall, you open up holes inside for Harris.

Running back Franco Harris vs. middle linebacker Lee Roy Jordan. It's not a direct matchup, but Lee Roy will be dogging Franco's steps.

PITTSBURGH, Defensive Tendencies:

Steelers must be conscious of Staubach running more from the shotgun than he did earlier in the season. They also have to be alert for the unusual — the end around, quick screens to the wide receivers, even the shovel pass.

Fame of that Iron Curtain front rests more on its ability to seal the run than in its pass rush. They alone can contain ground game, leaving those very agile linebackers to react superbly to all situations. On a physical basis, Joe Greene and gang can neutralize Dallas I-formation attack by controlling backers in front of them, not yielding any holes for little Bob Newhouse to bounce through.

Linebackers Russell and Jack Ham also have the swift to pick up Preston Pearson coming out of the backfield. And look for the corner backs to rap the Dallas wide receivers around to discourage deep patterns.

Key Matchups:

Tight end Jean Fugett vs. strong side linebacker Jack Ham. Fugett's got to get into passing lanes to make Cowboys go.

Center John Fitzgerald vs. middle linebacker Jack Lambert. Fitz has to neutralize the ranging tactics of the Steelers' ball hawk.

DALLAS, Offensive Tendencies:

Coach Tom Landry's genius must figure out what has been up to now, almost impossible — way to run against that Steeler front four. It would force the Pittsburgh linebackers to concentrate less on passing game.

Forget the sideline patterns — steeler defenders react too quickly. Deep drag in routes by tight end Jean Fugett and shorter circles by backs coming across the middle are best hopes of penetrating the Steelers' double-zone defense.

They can't play conservative against the Steelers. Roger Staubach will have to throw on first and second downs. The screen pass, which can keep Steeler linebackers from the deep drops they favor, can work if patterns are well thought out.

Steelers are not a blitzing team but Cowboys must be aware of Andy Russell coming from the weak side occasionally.

★★★ The Way It'll Happen

Defense has ruled the nine-year history of the Super Bowl. Only one losing team (Oakland in Super Bowl II) has ever scored more than one touchdown. There's nothing to indicate the defensive emphasis will change because Pittsburgh and Dallas both arrived at Super Bowl X through their ability to repel other teams.

The Steelers will take advantage of an early break to get a field goal edge. A second-quarter grind-it-out march, with Harris, after being bottled up early, finally getting a little daylight, will give them a comfortable 10-point lead.

The Cowboys will come out revived in the third quarter to score on a long play and then threaten again, to be cut short by an interception. The turnover will stimulate another Steeler score, with one of the wide receivers getting behind the Cowboy secondary.

It'll end 17-10 with the Cowboys able to penetrate only far enough for a field goal that puts them within range.

Any resemblance of the above to reality is strictly accidental.

Lefors Falls in 2nd Overtime

MIAMI — Miami scored only four points in the second overtime period but they were enough to edge Lefors 46 - 44 in a thrilling District 3 - B basketball contest Friday here.

For Lefors, it was only the first loss in three district games.

The Pirates led 27 - 18 at halftime but scored only three points in the third period as Miami tied the game 30 - 30 going into the final quarter. The teams were deadlocked 39 - 39 at the end of regulation time and 42 - 42 at the end of the first overtime period.

Miami held a two - point, 46 - 44, lead in the second overtime. Lefors' Mike Watson rebounded a shot, put it back up and missed as the ball barely stayed out of the hoop with 31 seconds left in the game.

Watson was fouled after the shot but missed the first end of a one - and - one free throw situation.

"In the third quarter, they pressed us and our kids fell apart. We started hitting again in the fourth quarter," Lefors Coach Don Parson said.

"We had a pretty good lead at halftime but they cut it down in the third quarter.

Pro Bowl: Status Unknown

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said Saturday the Pro Bowl might be canceled.

The Pro Bowl, the National Football League's All-Star game, is scheduled to take place a week from Monday in New Orleans.

"We're flying out Monday and we're going to talk to the players in New Orleans next week," Garvey said. "There is a possibility they might decide not to play since the proceeds of the game aren't being put into our pension fund as they are supposed to."

Garvey charged the league with publicizing the game as a charity affair for the players' pension fund and then not contributing because of current contract disputes.

Garvey, whose union was sued this week by the new Tampa Bay and Seattle expansion franchises, insisted his union was not opposed to expansion and called the NFL threats to cancel the new clubs' entry next season "suicidal."

"We're in favor of expansion and always have been," Garvey said. "We're not opposed to expansion—we're opposed to veteran players being told they have to go. We're opposed to their rights being taken away. We feel it's illegal and a violation of the Sherman Act to tell people where to go. I think reasonable people can set up a system of expansion."

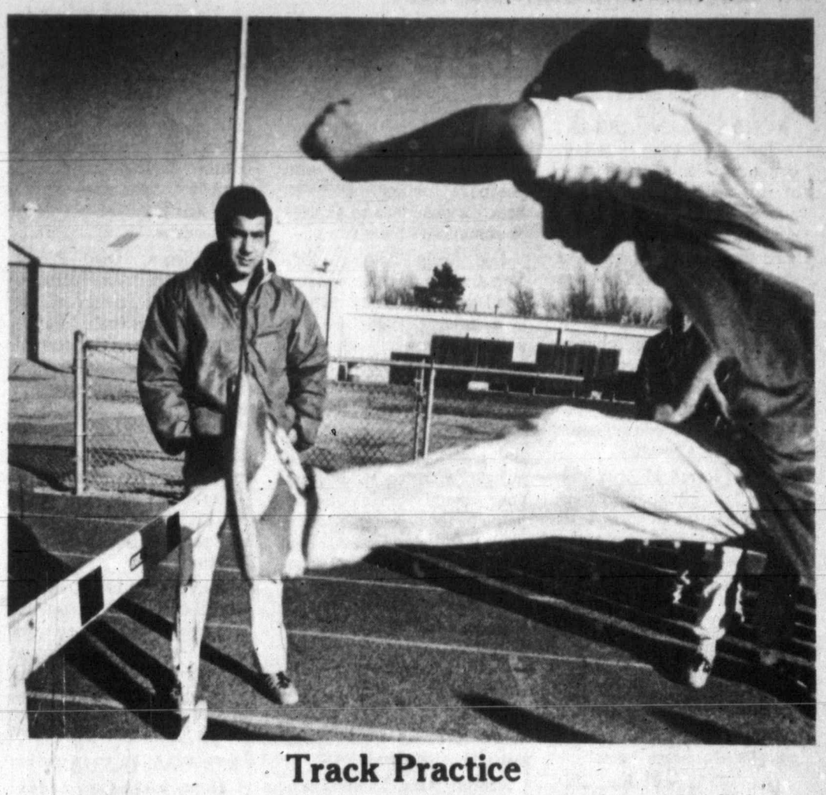

Garvey also said he was not impressed by the league's threats to completely cancel the college player draft. That draft was postponed earlier this week after the expansion teams' suit.

"I can't imagine there won't be a college draft," Garvey said. "I don't believe all this talk that they're not going to expand next season. It's suicidal for the NFL to withdraw those two franchises. The people of Seattle and Tampa Bay have shown solid support and they have a long season ticket list. I think it's being used to scare us and I just can't believe it."

Garvey said he had been served with a lawsuit by the league Friday night at its annual Super Bowl party and he indicated Commissioner Pete Rozelle "might be in for a few surprises" when the Players Association had a gettogether Saturday night.

Garvey also indicated his union was not opposed to the college draft but rather against the locking in of a player permanently to the team which selects him.

"The court decision in Minneapolis recently found the perpetual reserve aspect of the draft illegal, not the draft itself," he explained. "If a player is selected why not give him a chance. The same thing goes for expansion. There are a lot of players who want to go to Seattle and Tampa. Why not try something a little American and ask people if they want to go? They might be surprised."

Track Practice

Pampa High track coach Scott Dunnam watches Jimmy Baird clear a hurdle last week during an afternoon workout. The Harvester track team, left, has been running long distances since Jan. 6 and begins regular workouts Feb. 1. The first meet is scheduled for early March, but a practice meet in Pampa will kick off the competitive season in late February. Pampa finished second in the District 3 - AAAA meet last year and is expected to make a strong showing again this season.

Ekker's Words Ringing True

By PAUL SIMS
Sports Editor

"I can hardly wait for the season to start and there's only one reason: redemption. We haven't been super - successful here, but we will be this year."

A statement like that from a coach whose team was 9 - 17 the year before might bring the men in the white coats. But Ron Ekker, the man behind the words, apparently knew what he was talking about last summer when he said them.

Ekker's West Texas State Buffaloes were 11 - 1 prior to Saturday night's road game against Missouri Valley Conference foe New Mexico State, after being picked to finish sixth in the conference this season.

If a poll were taken at this stage, WTSU, 1 - 0 in Valley play (prior to the NMSU game), would likely be ranked much high than sixth. Maybe first.

WT hosts Louisville Thursday and conference opponent Bradley Saturday. Both games, to be played in the Amarillo Civic Center Coliseum, are expected to be sellouts. The large crowds are a part of the Cinderella atmosphere, which abounds throughout the area.

Ekker and the Buffaloes aren't as caught up in the all the area fanfare and national attention as one might think.

"It's just a case where you never have much time to enjoy it. I've coached long enough to realize that public fanfare can be forgotten pretty quickly — I've been able to do that and I think the players have been able to do that also," Ekker said.

"I like to be in this position where we're winning, though. It puts an intensity into your game. We played very strong against Chicago State even though they were a considerably weaker team."

WT, ranked 19th in the country by both the Associated Press and United Press International, crushed Chicago State 99 - 69 Thursday.

It might take that kind of offensive effort (99 points) to beat Louisville and Bradley. Until Thursday, the defense had been the primary reason the Buffs have gotten off to such a fast start.

"Louisville had a little slump for a week — they lost to us, Cincinnati and Providence, then came back and beat Idaho State and Tulsa. They have a conference game Saturday (last night) and a game on Monday so they'll have a head of steam when they play us," Ekker said.

"They'll come back with a lot of fire in their eyes. I'm sure it's gonna be a strong ball game.

"Bradley is the game I am really concerned with because it's a conference game. I picked Bradley to be the toughest team in the conference this year and I don't think I was very far from wrong."

Ekker, although he isn't totally wrapped up in all the attention, is glad the Buffaloes have played well enough to earn it. And he is especially glad to be in the position of contending for the Valley championship.

"It's better than being the other way around."

NCAA Removes Limitations

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Backed by schools with strong track programs, the NCAA Saturday removed limitation on the size of squads in all sports.

The restrictions were lifted by delegates to the 70th annual NCAA convention and became effective at the close of the convention Saturday night. That meant a team with an NCAA contest Saturday night could suit up as many players as it desired.

Schools with strong track programs were the most vocal advocates of the change.

"There's no equity in having a home team able to compete with an innumerable number of athletes while a visitor is restricted," said John King of San Jose State.

"We have a good track team and when we go down and compete against UCLA we have enough trouble without being outmanned."

King said track meets range from 18 to 21 events with the top three winners in each event eligible for points, but under the restrictions which were rescinded indoor track was restricted to a squad of 22 and outdoor track to 27.

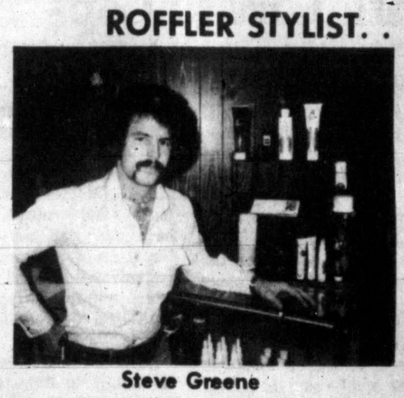

There also had been grumbling by football coaches on limitations on traveling squads.

New Orleans Decides On Stram for Coach

MIAMI BEACH (UPI) — Hank Stram, the only coach to win a Super Bowl with a second-place team, will be named the new head coach of the New Orleans Saints early next week, UPI learned Saturday.

Stram, who directed the Kansas City Chiefs to a 23-7 Super Bowl triumph over the favored Minnesota Vikings in 1970 after finishing the regular season in second place of the American Football League Western Division behind Oakland, will replace Ernie Hefferle as coach of the Saints.

Hefferle was given the job on an interim basis at mid-season by the Saints after owner John Mecom Jr. fired John North. New Orleans finished 2-12 last season under the guidance of North and Hefferle for the worst record in the National Football League.

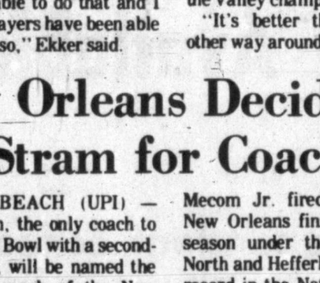

Stram, who was fired by the Chiefs after the 1974 season, with seven years remaining on a 10-year contract, worked as a television commentator on NFL games this past season, which is the reason, according to a source close to Stram, his acceptance of the Saints' job will not be announced until after the Super Bowl. Stram is a member of the television crew assigned to handle the title game.

He declined to comment on the matter.

Stram coached the Chiefs for their initial 15 years of existence, leading them to two AFL titles and the one Super Bowl championship. He also brought Kansas City into the initial Super Bowl in 1967.

Your Horoscope By Jeane Dixon

SUNDAY, JANUARY 18

Your birthday today: Brings in an active year of increasing responsibility, personal recognition and relocation. Material reward runs slightly behind spiritual growth, but does follow each move upward. Some relationships fade as you outgrow them and others change along lines of your maturity cycles. Today's natives are genial and of a literary or scientific bent. Many make insurance a specialty.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: Make your customary appearance in grand style, visit friends, but get home early. Renew ties with people you seldom see to share the new and fun.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Your family deserves your attention and provides rewarding, encouraging ideas for the future. Think of ways to improve your home and get rid of useless items.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Leave yesterday's tensions and problems aside, take things as they are at the moment and meet others halfway. Neighbors have many opinions. Short journeys are favored.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Get out and go! Have some fun and meet new people. Skip any business and postpone obligations. You have serious ideas to explore in romance.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: You are in a position to set a good example. Your persuasive talents come in for somewhat specialized application as you try to sell a plan. Seek new connections and don't neglect old ones.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Be alert and willing to mingle with those beyond your usual circle. Social movements develop in complexity and significance. You find yourself in much better company than you'd realized.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: There are so many possibilities for the day you should let the strongest emotional pull decide the main direction. Let your heart lead the way.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: See if you can make this a peaceful, uneventful day in which you can reconsider and gather together fresh perspective. Your skills are much in demand.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Get away and enjoy the unfamiliar and take along some good companions. Home living conditions improve spontaneously if you will only let people be themselves.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: If you must work, be quick about it and ask for full compensation. Family matters come to comfortable balance. You have fine friends; be a fine friend in return.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb 18]: Leave the past aside and make what you can of this pleasant Sunday. Social contact opens up a line of prosperous moves for the future.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: You can come to agreement with those who plan to work along with you without getting into details. Relax and enjoy today's milder currents.

MONDAY, JANUARY 19

Your birthday today: Specialization goes hand in hand with fast-changing conditions. New technology displaces old, precipitates paradoxical or critical decisions. Material success depends upon how well you attend to details during conversions from one way of doing things to another. Relationships are at a disadvantage, as people expect more from you than circumstances permit you to give. Today's natives are natural leaders.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: You attract public attention now; try to look your best. Certain encounters mean more this week; decide which ones to go after. Personal touches work.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Figure out early what is essential to productive effort. Optimism is the mood and cooperation is plentiful. Tend to your health and try to relieve tension.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Talk goes in circles. Avoid arguments in career matters even if it means doing extra work for low pay. Approach money conservatively; no shortcut is worth it.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: You're intellectually stimulated today. Just remember that you aren't the target for current criticism; unless you're alert, you won't see the complexities of family situations.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Investment is favored today. Spend money to prove conditions on the homefront or your earning capacity. Expect dissent from associates; don't make a big issue of it.

Virgoaug. 23-Sept. 22]: Old problems yield to bold, novel methods. What seemed important turns out to be unnecessary. The community needs your contribution of time and advice. Explore new territory.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Be skeptical of good and bad news, and find your own common-sense interpretation. Make a census of possessions, and put everything is in its proper place.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: Everyone else seems free to make outrageous remarks, but just a mild comment from you provokes a reaction. You needn't go along with the crowd or advertise what you're up to.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Personal interests must be set aside for the moment because of business moves. Some people who don't want to work themselves are glad to show you how to do it.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: New contacts and technical sources are available. You pursue details at the expense of more significant things, but manage to learn a lot in the process.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: Strive to place the scene in perspective. Analyze new ideas sharply before you revise your work and circumstances. Sudden whims create confusion and waste time.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Details are tedious but essential. You have all the help necessary to work out old problems. Major changes are premature; there is no easy way to perform routines.

Elvis Shows Thanks With Cars to Cops

DENVER (UPI) — Rock singer Elvis Presley says he is grateful to the city police department for medical and security help at his Colorado concerts, and has purchased three specially designed luxury cars.

"A man identifying himself as Elvis Presley called Wednesday to find out if we had the particular car and said he would be right in," said Tom Heydman, general sales manager for a Lincoln Mercury dealer. "It was a complete surprise and he paid the bill (in excess of $45,000) in cash."

According to Heydman, Presley, 41, arrived with Capt. Jerry Kennedy, head of press relations for the Denver Police Department. The rock singer has been vacationing in Vail, Colo.

Kennedy coordinated security for several of his Colorado concerts, Presley said. The rock singer also said Kennedy was spending several days in Vail with him.

"Presley said he drives a Mark IV designer edition himself and wanted Kennedy to have one just like it," said Heydman. A quadrasonic sound system, speed control and inner rear window wippers are standard equipment in the vehicle.

Heydman said Kennedy called his family to come and meet Presley after the selection was made. Dr. Gerald Starkey, the department's medical advisor, arrived with Kennedy's wife and children.

Presley also purchased a car for Detective Ronald L. Pietrafeso, said Heydman.

CHOOSE COMFORT

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — Think of your anatomy when you shop for furniture and decorate your home, says a housing and interior design specialist at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Extension specialist Betsy Gabb says sofas with cushions about 15 inches from the floor are comfortable for most persons, but what is comfortable for a large man may not be for his small wife.

She warns against very low sofas and chairs and those with very deep cushions for use by elderly persons, many of whom lack the strength to pull themselves out of it. If the oldsters also have frail skin, avoid nubby textured fabrics, which can be irritating.

Texas Economy May Rely On Industry

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — The Texas economy soon will have to rely more on sophisticated manufacturing rather than declining traditional cattle and oil and gas industries, according to a University of Texas researcher.

Texas may lose regional advantages which accelerated its industrialization and kept it from being affected by the recession as adversely as other states, Robert M. Lockwood, research associate for the UT Bureau of Business Research, said.

He said agriculture and oil and gas mining remains much more significant in Texas than in most states.

"Both the agriculture and petroleum industries have changed though, and their longrun and even their immediate significance for the prosperity of Texas are quite different from their past importance," Lockwood said.

A significant example of such change recently was the threat of a federal quarantine on Texas cattle to control brucellosis.

"Besides the loss of millions in export earnings, a year-long quarantine would cost the state up to $3.7 million in federal benefits earmarked for brucellosis control in Texas during 1976," Lockwood said.

A quarantine also would affect livestock shows and exhibitors, stockmen, shippers and brokers.

Oil and gas production still affects more Texans than those involved in finding and producing oil, Lockwood said, with the thousands of royalty owners constituting a significant economic and political bloc.

Lockwood said tax receipts in recent years have nearly doubled because of rapidly rising oil and gas prices.

"Oil and gas are clearly declining resources in Texas, but public revenue dependence on their extraction is increasing rather than declining," Lockwood said.

In a recent survey business picked Texas as having the most favorable business climate in the nation, but some of the state's qualities may prove to have only short run advantages, Lockwood said.

"For example, Texas will inevitably have to enact personal and corporate income taxes in some future year," he said. "Even if state spending is controlled effectively, tax revenues based on oil and gas production are subject to shrinkage that would be as rapid as their recent swelling."

Lockwood said the state will have to develop new and "less welcome" revenue sources because the traditional significance of the oil and gas industry as a source of raw materials is in the past.
