London tax protest turns violent

LONDON (AP) — An anti-tax demonstration by 40,000 people turned into a riot Saturday when militants pelted police with rocks and bottles, set fires to cars and smashed shop windows in a rampage through central London.

It was the worst violence in Britain since 1985. At least 341 people were arrested, 58 police were hurt and at least 75 civilians were taken to hospitals, police said. Many of the injured were released after treatment.

The worst of the trouble was over four hours after it began, but sporadic vandalism and looting continued into the night. Some areas of the West End shopping and theater district looked like battlegrounds, and sirens and burglar alarms of vandalized stores blared up and down the streets.

For most of the afternoon protesters waved their placards peacefully in marches and at a rally in Trafalgar Square, denouncing the unpopular new so-called poll tax, which takes effect Sunday.

It will be levied by local governments on every adult in a household and replaces a single household tax based on property values. Under the new system, a duke in a 100-room mansion will pay as much as a street sweeper in a cottage if they live in the same borough.

The tax has aroused anger throughout Britain and generated widespread hostility toward Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. But she said Saturday she had no intention of retiring and that she still had "the stomach" for the fight ahead.

Clashes with police, on foot and horseback, began at about 3 p.m. near Mrs. Thatcher's residence on Downing Street, off Whitehall, one of half a dozen streets that lead off Trafalgar Square. The large plaza is in the heart of London, near Parliament, the Thames River and the theater district. Mrs. Thatcher was not at Downing Street.

The trouble started when a breakaway group of several hundred militants began a protest on Whitehall, south of the square.

Police in riot gear joined 40 mounted officers to stem the violence, but at least one officer was knocked unconscious as protesters hit police lines with rocks from a nearby building site. Other police officers and people in the crowd were hurt.

Police on horseback sealed off Whitehall so it could not be entered from the square, and demonstration organizers appealed to thousands of people watching the tense situation to disperse via the other side of the square.

They refused, however, and continued to chant and wave anti-poll tax banners.

As the trouble grew, a fire broke out at a seven-story building on Trafalgar Square, and police

Reporter-Telegram becomes morning newspaper Monday

Although the Midland Reporter-Telegram has for years published Monday morning editions in observance of national holidays, tomorrow will be different. It marks the beginning of the move to morning publication seven days a week.

"And it is important to all of us at the Reporter-Telegram that the morning newspaper be a better newspaper in every way," Charles Spence, publisher, said Saturday. "Midland is a city whose people expect quality and a team of staff members has been working for more than two months on improvements in both design and content that will accompany this move," he said.

"We won't merely be changing our publication cycle in order that the news is fresher and more complete or because advertisers' messages will be available over a longer period, although those are both important considerations. The morning Reporter-Telegram will be a better newspaper in other ways which we believe readers will be readily able to see," Spence said.

The shift from evening to morning publication is in line with nationwide trends in recent years which have been in response, primarily, to changes in lifestyles, particularly in how people choose to use their late afternoon and evening time.

Scores of afternoon newspapers across the country have either ceased publication or moved to morning publication in the past decade while in West Texas only Big Spring and El Paso continue afternoon editions.

For the Reporter-Telegram, the shift will mean earlier sports reports, fresher national and world news as well as expanded business, financial, local and regional coverage.

While the news package will be stronger and better, the change "will require a degree of getting used to for all of us — staff, distributors and readers alike," Spence said, adding "We will appreciate the patience of everyone as both we and they become accustomed to the new schedules."

"We're convinced that once that period passes, readers will believe, as we do now, that the morning Reporter-Telegram will be a much better newspaper in timeliness, in appearance and in overall content than it has been.

"While we believe we're building on an already outstanding product, we're making a substantial investment in money and staff to guarantee that the morning newspaper will become even more important and more useful in the lives of all our readers," he said.

New features for readers in news, sports, business

Conversion of The Midland Reporter-Telegram from an afternoon to a morning newspaper will be accompanied by major improvements in news content including:

■ IN THE REGION: Beginning Monday, "In The Region" will focus on interesting people and important events in the Permian Basin. Veteran staff writer Ed Todd will go throughout West Texas to report on what's happening during the week with a full feature-photo page twice a month ... Mondays ... REGION Page.

■ IN MIDLAND: Everyone has an interesting story and beginning Tuesday "Introducing" will take a look at a cross-section of Midlanders we believe you'll enjoy reading about ... Each Tuesday ... LOCAL Section.

■ IN SPORTS: We've increased our sports staff to provide broader local and area coverage and beginning Thursday "Front Row Seat" will invite readers to take a look at athletes and organizations in the news here and across the Basin ... Each Thursday ... SPORTS Section.

■ IN EDITORIAL: On Sunday, one week from today, "Sound Off" will make its debut. A format to explore opinion on subjects of current local or national interest, "Sound Off" will include local columns, letters from readers and other commentary. The first, which follows our recent "THE PARTY'S OVER" series, invites readers' views on smoking in public and driving and drinking. (Readers still can participate but we need letters by 5 p.m. Tuesday, April 3) ... Next Sunday ... Opposite the EDITORIAL Page.

■ IN BUSINESS: Beginning this Tuesday, the abbreviated noon stock report becomes a full two-page Closing Stock Report Tuesdays through Fridays. Following our regular weekly activity roundup on Saturdays, we'll publish a new Energy Stocks Report on Sundays with another package of select market information Mondays ... PLUS ... two nationally syndicated financial columnists, Jane Bryant Quinn, popular Newsweek writer, and Scott Burns, business columnist for the Dallas Morning News, will join current local and syndicated writers ... Alternating Daily ... BUSINESS Section.

These and other improvements planned all are designed with one goal in mind: to make your morning Reporter-Telegram a better Reporter-Telegram ... easier and more enjoyable to read ... with a fresher, more complete news report seven days a week.

Odessa residents chart city's course

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

ODESSA — "Prioritization leads to production" could have been the theme for 50 leading Ector County citizens who spent their Saturday charting a course for their community during the next decade.

The perennially popular topics of economic development and small business development were at the top of their list.

A strategic planning session sponsored by the Odessa Chamber of Commerce brought together top educators, business, government and other civic leaders to set a planning agenda through the year 2000.

The results of an early morning brainstorming session to identify problems, strengths and ideals were generalized into 15 categories under the leadership of guest speaker John Myers of the Greater Austin Chamber of Commerce.

After the participants voted to rank the 15, the group broke into six "focus groups" to begin the process of of turning generic goals into specific programs.

The groups tackled the top six ranked priority goals, which were in order: economic development, small business development, health care development, education, Odessa-Midland relations and financial and human resource development.

The issues to be considered in arriving at a workable plan to achieve the prescribed goal, Myers said, are that the program be "specific, obtainable, well-balanced, dynamic, sellable, need-oriented, timely and economically feasible."

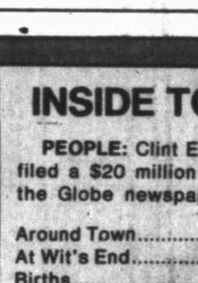

Among the agenda items the group identified for the chamber to move on quickly were marshaling support for the May 5 sales tax referendum to bolster the sagging finances of Medical Center Hospital; beginning a comprehensive self-evaluation of economic devel-

Eighth-grader wins another regional spelling bee

By David Morris
Staff Writer

For Rudy Ramirez Jr., "cologne" held the fragrance of victory Saturday.

Rudy, 14, an eighth-grader at Alamo Junior High School, defeated Sam Houston fifth-grader Jeremy Gengler, 11, after 51 words in the final round of the third annual regional spelling bee.

After a showdown which featured such daunting words as "nasturtium," "coquettish," and "zucchini," Jeremy's concentration waned and he spelled "obsessive" with an extra "s."

Seeing his chance, Rudy gave the correct spelling and then spelled "cologne" and claimed victory.

Rudy, who won the spelling bee two years ago and took third place last year, will travel to Washington, D.C., to compete in the Scripps Howard National Spelling Bee May 27 through June 2.

The third annual regional spelling bee, sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, saw 29 pupils from four counties wrestle with words ranging from "ambrosia" and "bludgeon" to "fruition" and "mosaicist."

After eliminating their opponents, Rudy and Jeremy engaged in what enunciator Patricia Maurer described as "the best horse race we've ever had."

Rudy, son of Rudy and Yolanda Ramirez of Midland, credited long hours of study for his ultimate success.

"I practiced every day, all the time, for three months," Rudy said after the match, which was held at the Midland College Fine Arts Auditorium. "Practice gets you familiar with the words — once you familiarize yourself with a word, you'll never forget it."

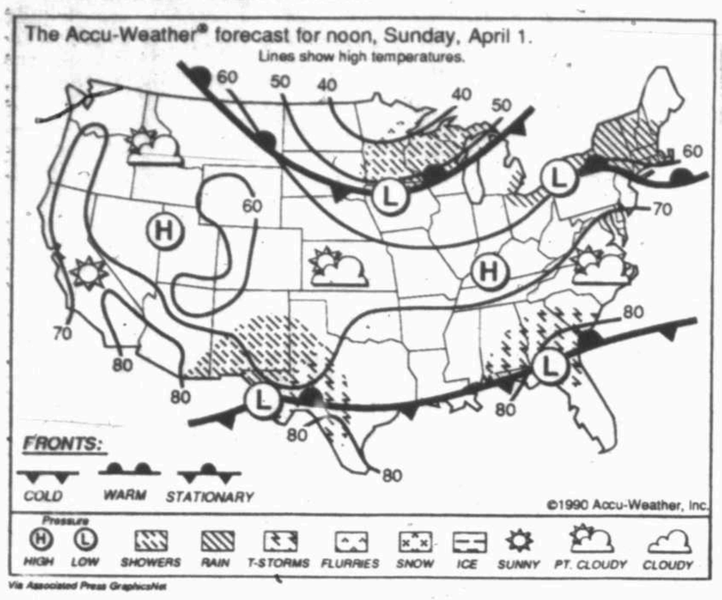

In addition to a trip to the nation's capital, Rudy won $50 cash, a first-place trophy, and a 32-volume set of the New Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Dee Pitts, spelling bee director, said fourth- through eighth-graders representing Glasscock, Upton, Marin and Midland county schools participated in this year's bee.

Drizzly weather forecast

Staff Report

If today's weather is an omen of what's to come, this week may be like last week: overcast with drizzle here and there.

But forecasters at National Weather Service at Midland International Airport call for a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms today under cloudy skies. The temperature is to peak out between 70 and 75 degrees. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

For tonight, the sky is to be cloudy, and a 20 percent probability of showers or thunderstorm is in the forecast. The low temperature is to be around 50 degrees.

The sky is to be partly cloudy on Monday, and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms is in the offing. The high temperature is to be in the mid-60s.

Saturday's high temperature was 68 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 44 degrees. The record high temperature for March 31 is 97 degrees in 1946, and the record low for an April 1 is 29 degrees in 1936.

STATE

Mostly cloudy skies prevailed across Texas on Saturday, with scattered showers and thunderstorms in the northeast Panhandle. Afternoon thunderstorms also pelted parts of southeast Texas and the South Plains.

A weak ridge of high pressure moved in over the eastern part of the state, bringing north to northeasterly winds across much of north central Texas, the pine belt and the Coastal Plains. Easterly winds dominated south central Texas.

A chance of showers or thunderstorms existed over the greater part of the state through the weekend, the National Weather Service said.

The forecast calls for partly to mostly cloudy skies. Highs Sunday should be in the 60s and 70s statewide, except in the southern areas of Big Bend and far South Texas, where the highs should climb into the 80s.

NATION

Fog prevailed in the central and eastern states Saturday, and dense fog in some areas dropped visibilities to near zero, while rains ranged from the upper Ohio Valley and the mid-Atlantic Coast to the Carolinas.

Showers and thunderstorms dotted southern Florida, and light rain and drizzle wet parts of Kansas and the middle Mississippi Valley. Sunny skies prevailed across the western third of the country.

Zero visibility was reported in parts of southeastern Minnesota, parts of southern and eastern Wisconsin, much of northern and central Illinois, central Missouri, southeastern Louisiana, and southern and east central Mississippi.

In the Great Plains, dense fog sharply reduced visibility in north central Texas, the south plains of Texas, south central Kansas, and the central third of Oklahoma.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Nation's 21st Census Day has arrived

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are being asked to sit down, take out a pencil and count themselves on Sunday.

It's the 21st time the United States has taken its own measure.

And like a youngster standing against the wall, the result is bigger every time.

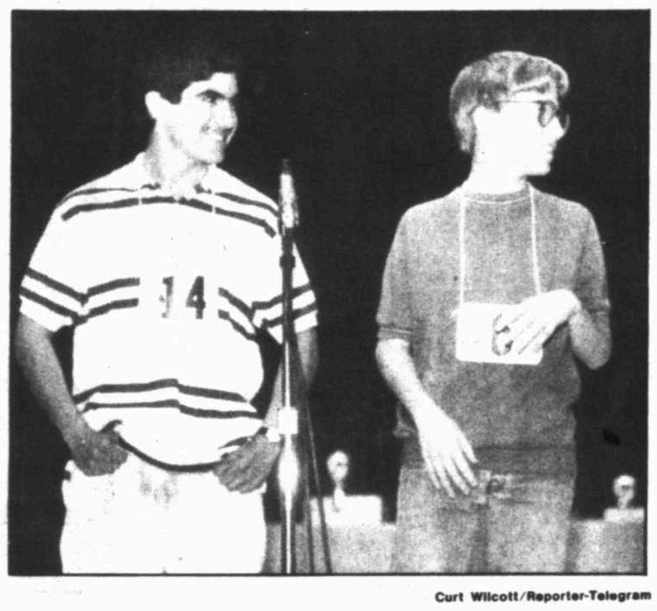

"Our goal for the 1990 census is to count every person resident in the United States," said Thomas Murrin, deputy secretary of Commerce. "We are ready and confident...."

"It's important to answer the census. It's safe to answer the census," said Census Director Barbara Everitt Bryant, stressing that information on individuals is kept confidential.

The national count isn't just a case of idle curiosity on the part of the government.

The Constitution requires a count every 10 years to reassign seats in the House of Representatives among the states.

And other information collected is used to determine the need for many social programs and to decide which states, cities and towns most need federal money to help their residents in one way or another.

Eighth-grader Rudy Ramirez Jr., left, and fifth-grader Jeremy Gengler were the last two contestants in Saturday's regional spelling bee at Midland College.

She said participants were all winners of school spelling bees.

"Each school, at the beginning of the year, gives the kids the (spelling bee) books and they have their own school bees," Ms. Pitts said. "Whoever's the winner comes to the regional contest."

Rudy was not the only contestant Saturday with years of spelling bee experience, Ms. Pitts said.

"I would say that I have five repeaters from the last three years," she said. "It's an ongoing preparation."

For Texas kids, Ms. Pitts said, learning the correct pronunciation of words is almost as important as learning how they're spelled.

"They have to have help in the pronunciation, because West Texans have different accents," she said. "Learning the pronunciation is very important."

Jeremy, Saturday's second-place winner, won a $25, a trophy and a Random House Dictionary.

The third-place finisher was 11-year-old Jared Hoggan, a fifth-grader at Midland's Emerson Elementary School, who won $10 cash and a Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary.

The fourth-place finisher was 11-year-old Rachel Guess, a sixth-grader at Greenwood Middle School, who won a trophy and a Webster's Thesaurus.

A World Almanac Book of Facts and a trophy went to fifth-place finisher Jared Jensen, 11, a sixth-grader at Midland's South Elementary School.

opment strengths and weaknesses; improving communication to the small business community of what programs already exist to help them; and working toward resolution of four-year status for UTPB during the 1991 regular legislative session, if not before.

Longer-range goals included shopping around for bond financing of a convention center to stimulate economic growth and tourism; creation of a Trans-Pecos hospital district and cultivation of funding sources for business development.

The other nine general goals ranked: visitor development, quality of life, community improvements, community attitude, leadership development, environmental-natural resource development, youth development, development as a retirement center and transportation.

A similar agenda-setting planning session with the Midland Chamber of Commerce was proposed as a means of improving intercity relations.

RIOT: Tax spurs rare violence

and a witness said it apparently was started by a protester. Smoke poured out above the building, undergoing reconstruction, before firefighters put it out at about 7:30 p.m.

A group of about 60 young men ran along Regent Street, north of the square, hurling trash cans and newspaper racks through the windows of shops and arcades. Shop employees reported looting.

Other rioters moved along St. Martin's Lane, which leads north from the square, overturning cars near the English National Opera, burning several and breaking windows of restaurants and shops.

On Charing Cross Road, which also leads north out of the square, more cars were overturned and set afire, and big garbage containers outside restaurants were pushed over, spilling the contents into the street.

The trouble continued north to Leicester Square, the film, entertainment and theater center of the city — the busiest place in London on a Saturday evening. Subway stations in the area were closed.

At Trafalgar Square, mounted police, pelted with rocks and bottles, moved in to try to clear out demonstrators. At one point about 1,000 protesters, chanting "no poll tax!" gathered in front of The National Gallery on the north side, surrounded by mounted police in riot gear and police on foot.

"The police tried to crush us from both sides from Whitehall. People were in a panic. There were young children there and old people, but the horses were stepping on anybody," said a student who gave only her first name, Lara.

But Iain McCallum of Surrey said: "There is no doubt that the police were being provoked. There were guys throwing bottles and cans at them, shouting abuse. They just wanted to cause trouble."

When police forced the demonstrators out of the square by its northwest exit, the mob surged up Haymarket, kicking in shop windows. A McDonald's was badly damaged.

David Meynell, police deputy assistant commisioner at Scotland Yard, said the march by 40,000 was "completely overshadowed" by the violent actions of about 3,000 to 3,500 militants. He said he couldn't name the groups but that there were black flags flying, which indicated anarchists among the crowd.

Legislator George Galloway of the socialist opposition Labor Party, sitting sadly at the base of Nelson's Column in Trafalgar Square, condemned the violence.

"To see sections of the crowd cheering on the rioters. It shows the depth of hatred of this poll tax, and the extent of the alienation in the country, and that disturbs me," said Galloway, whose party opposes the tax.

Engineer flies after testing positive for drugs, paper reports

FORT WORTH (AP) — An Eastern Airlines flight engineer fired in March after being charged for buying crack tested positive for cocaine use seven months earlier but continued to fly for the airline, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Eastern fired Dain Schneemilch, 36, of Key Largo, Fla., on March 20 after he was charged with buying $20 worth of crack from a local police officer posing as a drug dealer in February.

In a termination letter, the chief pilot of the airline's Miami crew base, Michael Vaughan, wrote Schneemilch that his Eastern drug test last July was positive for cocaine use.

That test had been administered in a physical exam after Schneemilch decided to cross the picket line in the Air Line Pilots Association strike against Eastern.

Schneemilch continued to fly as a flight engineer on Boeing 727s until mid-September, the Star-Telegram reported. On Sept. 18, Schneemilch was promoted to first officer, or co-pilot, on the same aircraft.

Schneemilch was in ground school training for his new assignment at the time of his arrest in February, Eastern spokeswoman Karen Ceremsak said.

Ms. Ceremsak said Schneemilch's positive cocaine test results went unnoticed apparently as the result of an oversight.

"It was a clerical error, a mistake," Ms. Ceremsak said. "When he tested positive for cocaine use in July, it should have been noticed by someone on our staff, but it wasn't."

She said Schneemilch never served as a first officer on any Eastern flight.

Since Schneemilch's arrest, Eastern has reviewed the drug tests of all of the pilots it hired last summer, Ms. Ceremsak said. His was the only one in which a positive result was overlooked, she said.

The drug test he took last summer was not then required by the Federal Aviation Administration, she said. Random drug tests of airline employees began in December.

"I don't think it's enough to say: 'We were busy. Sorry. We overlooked this one,'" said Christopher Witkowski, director of the Aviation Consumer Action Project, a watchdog group interested in economic matters such as fare prices. It also has taken an interest in safety issues.

The carrier hired about 1,000 pilots between April and August of last year, Ms. Ceremsak said, as Eastern tried to rebuild itself from after mechanics and pilots walked off the job. Also, about 700 striking pilots crossed the picket lines and returned to work during that time.

"We believe that's probably why it happened at that time," Ms. Ceremsak said. "That's not meant as an excuse, just an explanation."

Before the strike, Eastern had more than 1,000 flights a day. Eastern rebuilt from fewer than 100 flights a day soon after the strike began to about 800 flights a day now.

Police records indicate authorities have audio and videotape of Schneemilch's drug buy.

Schneemilch has entered an innocent plea, and the case is pending in Florida state court. His attorney, Timothy Thomes of Key Largo, told the Star-Telegram: "While matters are pending, we would have no comment."

Ms. Ceremsak said Eastern's management did not become aware of Schneemilch's positive drug test in July until after his arrest in February.

She said Schneemilch had passed a drug test only four days before the arrest. That drug test was administered as part of his annual physical exam, which the law requires pilots to take in order to retain their FAA medical certificates.

New radar could cut tornado deaths

By Robert G. Wieland
Associated Press

A new radar network could help continue the dramatic national decline in the number of tornado deaths, weather experts say.

As spring storm season gets into full swing across Texas, National Weather Service figures show 76 people were killed as 1,407 tornadoes hit Texas from 1980 to 1989. In the 1970s, 139 people died as 1,431 storms were spotted.

Texas had one fatality in 1989 out of the 160 twisters reported in the state. A woman died and 30 people were hurt in the town of Jarrell as an early morning tornado carved a seven-mile path of destruction last May.

"It seems to us that the tornadoes that used to kill a lot of people don't kill quite as many," said Frederick P. Ostby, director of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City.

Ostby said many factors were responsible, not just improved watches and warnings.

He cited faster relay of the warnings by radio and TV stations plus better public reaction to reports of bad weather.

And the warnings were expected to get better after 1996, with the installation of all 175 new WSR-88D radar units in the Next Generation Weather Radar (NEXRAD) program, experts agreed.

Present radar technology, some dating back to the 1950s, allows only about three minutes warning time, said Lou Boezi, who directs the NWS modernization program in Silver Spring, Md.

"That's not a lot of time to scurry out of the way," he said.

Forecasters would like to provide several minutes lead time, Boezi said, with the new Doppler radar program doing a lot to help by providing "almost blanket coverage," he said.

Doppler radar offers a wealth of information, including clues to the formation of tornadoes.

Texas was scheduled to get 13 NEXRAD network sites, said Don Sarreals with the NEXRAD Joint System Program Office in Silver Spring.

Houston-Galveston was to be the first installation, scheduled for completion in early 1992, with other cities to follow, Sarreals said.

Equipment delivery dates included May 1992 for Amarillo; Nov. 1992 for Granger in central Texas; Jan. 1993 for Dyess Air Force Base, Abilene; Sept. 1993 for Dallas-Fort Worth and near New Braunfels; Oct. 1993 for Lubbock; Aug. 1994 for Laughlin AFB, Del Rio; Feb. 1995 for El Paso; March 1995 for Corpus Christi, Brownsville and San Angelo and April 1995 for Midland-Odessa, he said.

Installation and acceptance testing normally takes about four months after the equipment is delivered, Sarreals said.

Overlapping coverage would be provided by stations in adjacent states. Each station would have a range of about 140 statute miles, he said.

However, Sarreals admitted the system would have limitations.

"There are some things we can't do anything about," he said, such as the curvature of the Earth. Radar signals travel in straight lines.

Another problem, Sarreals said, was teaching media weathercasters how to use all the information that would be provided by NEXRAD.

The weather service is planning training sessions, he said, to help weathercasters "be right more often."

Sarreals added that as more people congregate in and near big cities, there was an increasing challenge to warn them.

"There are more things to be protected than ever before," he said, citing schools and hospitals in addition to people.

The media play a significant role in mitigating the impact of a disaster, Sarreals said. The weather service and emergency management organizations were other elements of the warning apparatus, he said.

NEXRAD would be a definite boost, said Dr. Robert Maddox, director of the National Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, Okla., where the system was tested.

"We're going to see unprecedented observations of the atmosphere," he said.

However, he agreed with Sarreals that education would play a key role in making both weathercasters and the public aware of the benefits.

Once NEXRAD is on line, private vendors would be allowed to transmit data to media subscribers, Sarreals said.

A survey of TV weathercasters published in January by The American Meteorological Society found that 77 percent of those responding would use NEXRAD data to help track storms.

The survey, taken by Michele Mussa Robertson and Kelvin K. Droegemeier at the University of Oklahoma School of Meteorology, also found severe weather analysis to be a prime benefit of the data provided.

"One has only to look at the Weather Channel's 24-hour public weather dissemination (on cable TV) to realize how important and popular weather has become to the American viewing audience," the report stated.

Trinity River flooding halted

LIBERTY (AP) — Sunny weather helped stall the ravages of flooding expected after two days of heavy rains on the Trinity River and Lake Livingston, officials said Saturday.

"The rains have stopped and the sun is shining," said Kenneth Bird, a volunteer at the Liberty County Emergency Management Center. "We have no injuries and no residential flooding at this time."

At least one drowning death was attributed to flooding, authorities said.

On Friday, heavy rains from North Texas swelled the Trinity River runoff into Lake Livingston to set a lake level record of 133.2 feet and send 53,700 cubic feet of water a second over the Livingston Dam, said Jim Mitchum, emergency management coordinator. The previous record level — 133.08 feet — was set in 1989.

Liberty County officials issued a voluntary evacuation notice to some 400 residents of the Dayton Lakes and nearby Trinity River Plaza neighborhoods, which experienced heavy flooding last year.

But by Saturday afternoon, Bird said residents were back home.

Still, water gushed over the roads in Trinity River Plaza, Dayton Lake Estates and South Liberty Oil Field late Saturday. "We're expecting to get maybe one more foot of rise," Bird said.

On Saturday afternoon, the flow from the Trinity into the lake had slowed to 52,600 cubic feet per second.

Meanwhile, Friday evening, a 16-year-old Houston boy apparently drowned while swimming in flood-swollen Halls Bayou.

Police said James Allen was playing with a friend, William Baines, along the banks of Halls Bayou when Allen, an inexperienced swimmer, decided to dive in, officers said.

"He came up out of the water and yelled, 'Help, help!' I grabbed his hand but I couldn't pull him out, and he went back under," Baines said.

Members of the Houston Police Department Dive Team recovered the body about 8:15 p.m. tangled in brush several feet from the bank.

Court-ordered supervision of prisons ends

DALLAS (AP) — Nearly a decade of strict federal supervision of the most massive court-ordered prison reforms in history ended Saturday.

Monitoring conditions behind bars in Texas again became the job of the corrections department.

The move is a signal the worst violations have been fixed in Texas prisons and the prison bureaucracy has learned to police itself, said Vincent Nathan, the special master.

"The court has reached the conclusion that the agency has demonstrated its ability, its willingness, its commitments to achieving compliance with constitutional standards," said Nathan, the Ohio lawyer appointed in 1981 to ensure that the state carried out the reforms.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler, who presided over the historic case filed by inmate David Ruiz, called the closure "a significant step toward the conclusion of this litigation."

In 1982, following the longest and most expensive trial in state history, Justice ruled the prison system violated inmate rights through overcrowding, poor medical care, using inmates as guards, brutality by professional guards, unsafe working conditions, and unconstitutional grievance and discipline procedures.

He ordered a major overhaul of the Texas Department of Corrections that eventually covered every aspect of prison life.

Forty-three states work under similar judgments, or in the past have been ordered to improve prison conditions or relieve overcrowding.

"The agency understands the ongoing commitments of the court order. That hasn't changed because the special master's office is closed," said Andy Collins, director of Texas prisons.

The closing of the special master's office in Houston will leave behind an assortment of bills, improvements and chronic shortcomings.

Billions of dollars have been spent to correct inhumane conditions and add tens of thousands of cells. But the system remains overcrowded. More than 9,000 prisoners await transfer to the state from county jails.

The reform episode began in 1972 with a handwritten lawsuit Ruiz filed against the TDC. Ruiz was then serving a 25-year sentence for armed robbery.

The case was later consolidated with suits from seven other inmates. Although Ruiz has been in and out of prison, the case still bears his name.

Ruiz opposes closing the special master's office.

He said corrections department officials "are capable of doing anything ... When they're not being monitored closely, nobody looking over their shoulders, they tend to forget they can be caught."

Officials dismiss Ruiz's fears as unfounded.

"The easiest thing in the world is to attack Judge Justice," said Charles Terrell of Dallas, chairman of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice. "But the problems that Judge Justice found — the building-tender system, the brutality, the overcrowding, the units that were not livable — should have been fixed.

"And, like so many things is state government that should be done, they don't get done until somebody forces the issue."

Among the more radical and substantive changes wrought in the wake of the lawsuit:

■ Health care. Ruiz's chief complaint.

"Most of the first-line medical care was done by other prisoners. They did sutures. It was just an abomination," said inmates' lawyer William Bennett Turner. Now, he said, the state "has constructed an extensive medical care system."

■ Building tenders. Jailers used to give trustee inmates broad disciplinary powers. The trustees would often beat other inmates to keep them in line, or because prison officials wanted to punish someone, Ruiz said.

TDC officials at first denied the existence of the tender system. Their lack of good faith has been cited as a reason for the sweep of Judge Justice's reform orders.

■ Use of force against inmates by guards. Although the number of incidents is down, prison officials say it remains a problem.

■ Classification. The Ruiz case led to strict standards for classifying and separating violent and non-violent inmates. Prison officials say the system has never had a major riot.

STATE IN BRIEF

Polite bandit hits 6 banks

HOUSTON (AP) — Six small banks have been held up in south Houston over the past six weeks by a polite bandit who writes "Have a nice day" on his robbery notes, police said.

The latest robbery was at 2 p.m.Thursday at an NCNB branch at a Kroger store. The note, which was the same as five others, said: "This is a hold-up. You have thirty seconds to comply. Thanks. Have a nice day."

The man is described as black, in his early 20s, about 5 feet, 4 inches, tall and 130 to 140 pounds. The courteous bandit usually dresses in blue jeans, a blue nylon jacket and a camouflage cap.

None of the tellers has seen a gun, but police suspect the robber has one. An ammunition clip was found in a parking lot shortly after the bandit fled a robbery scene, said Sgt. Steve Ruteshouser.

The man strikes small savings and loans that do not have security guards. He hands a camouflage bag to tellers, police said. A partner has worked with him during four robberies.

Families to be honored

AUSTIN (AP) — A July 30 deadline has been set for Texas farm and ranch families to apply this year for recognition by the state Agriculture Department's Land Heritage Program.

Texas residents may apply if they can trace the line of ownership of their property since 1890 or longer and can show that the land has been in continuous agricultural production for 100 years or more.

Farm and ranch families who are certified for the award will be recognized at a ceremony in Austin on Oct. 11.

Since the land heritage program was started in 1974, more than 2,400 properties have been enrolled, according to a statement from the Agriculture Department.

Titles no longer notorized

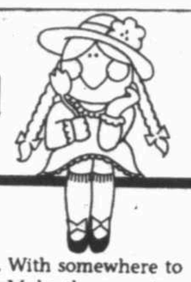

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans transferring motor vehicle titles will no longer need a notary public's signature on the title transfer, application or many other documents as of Monday.

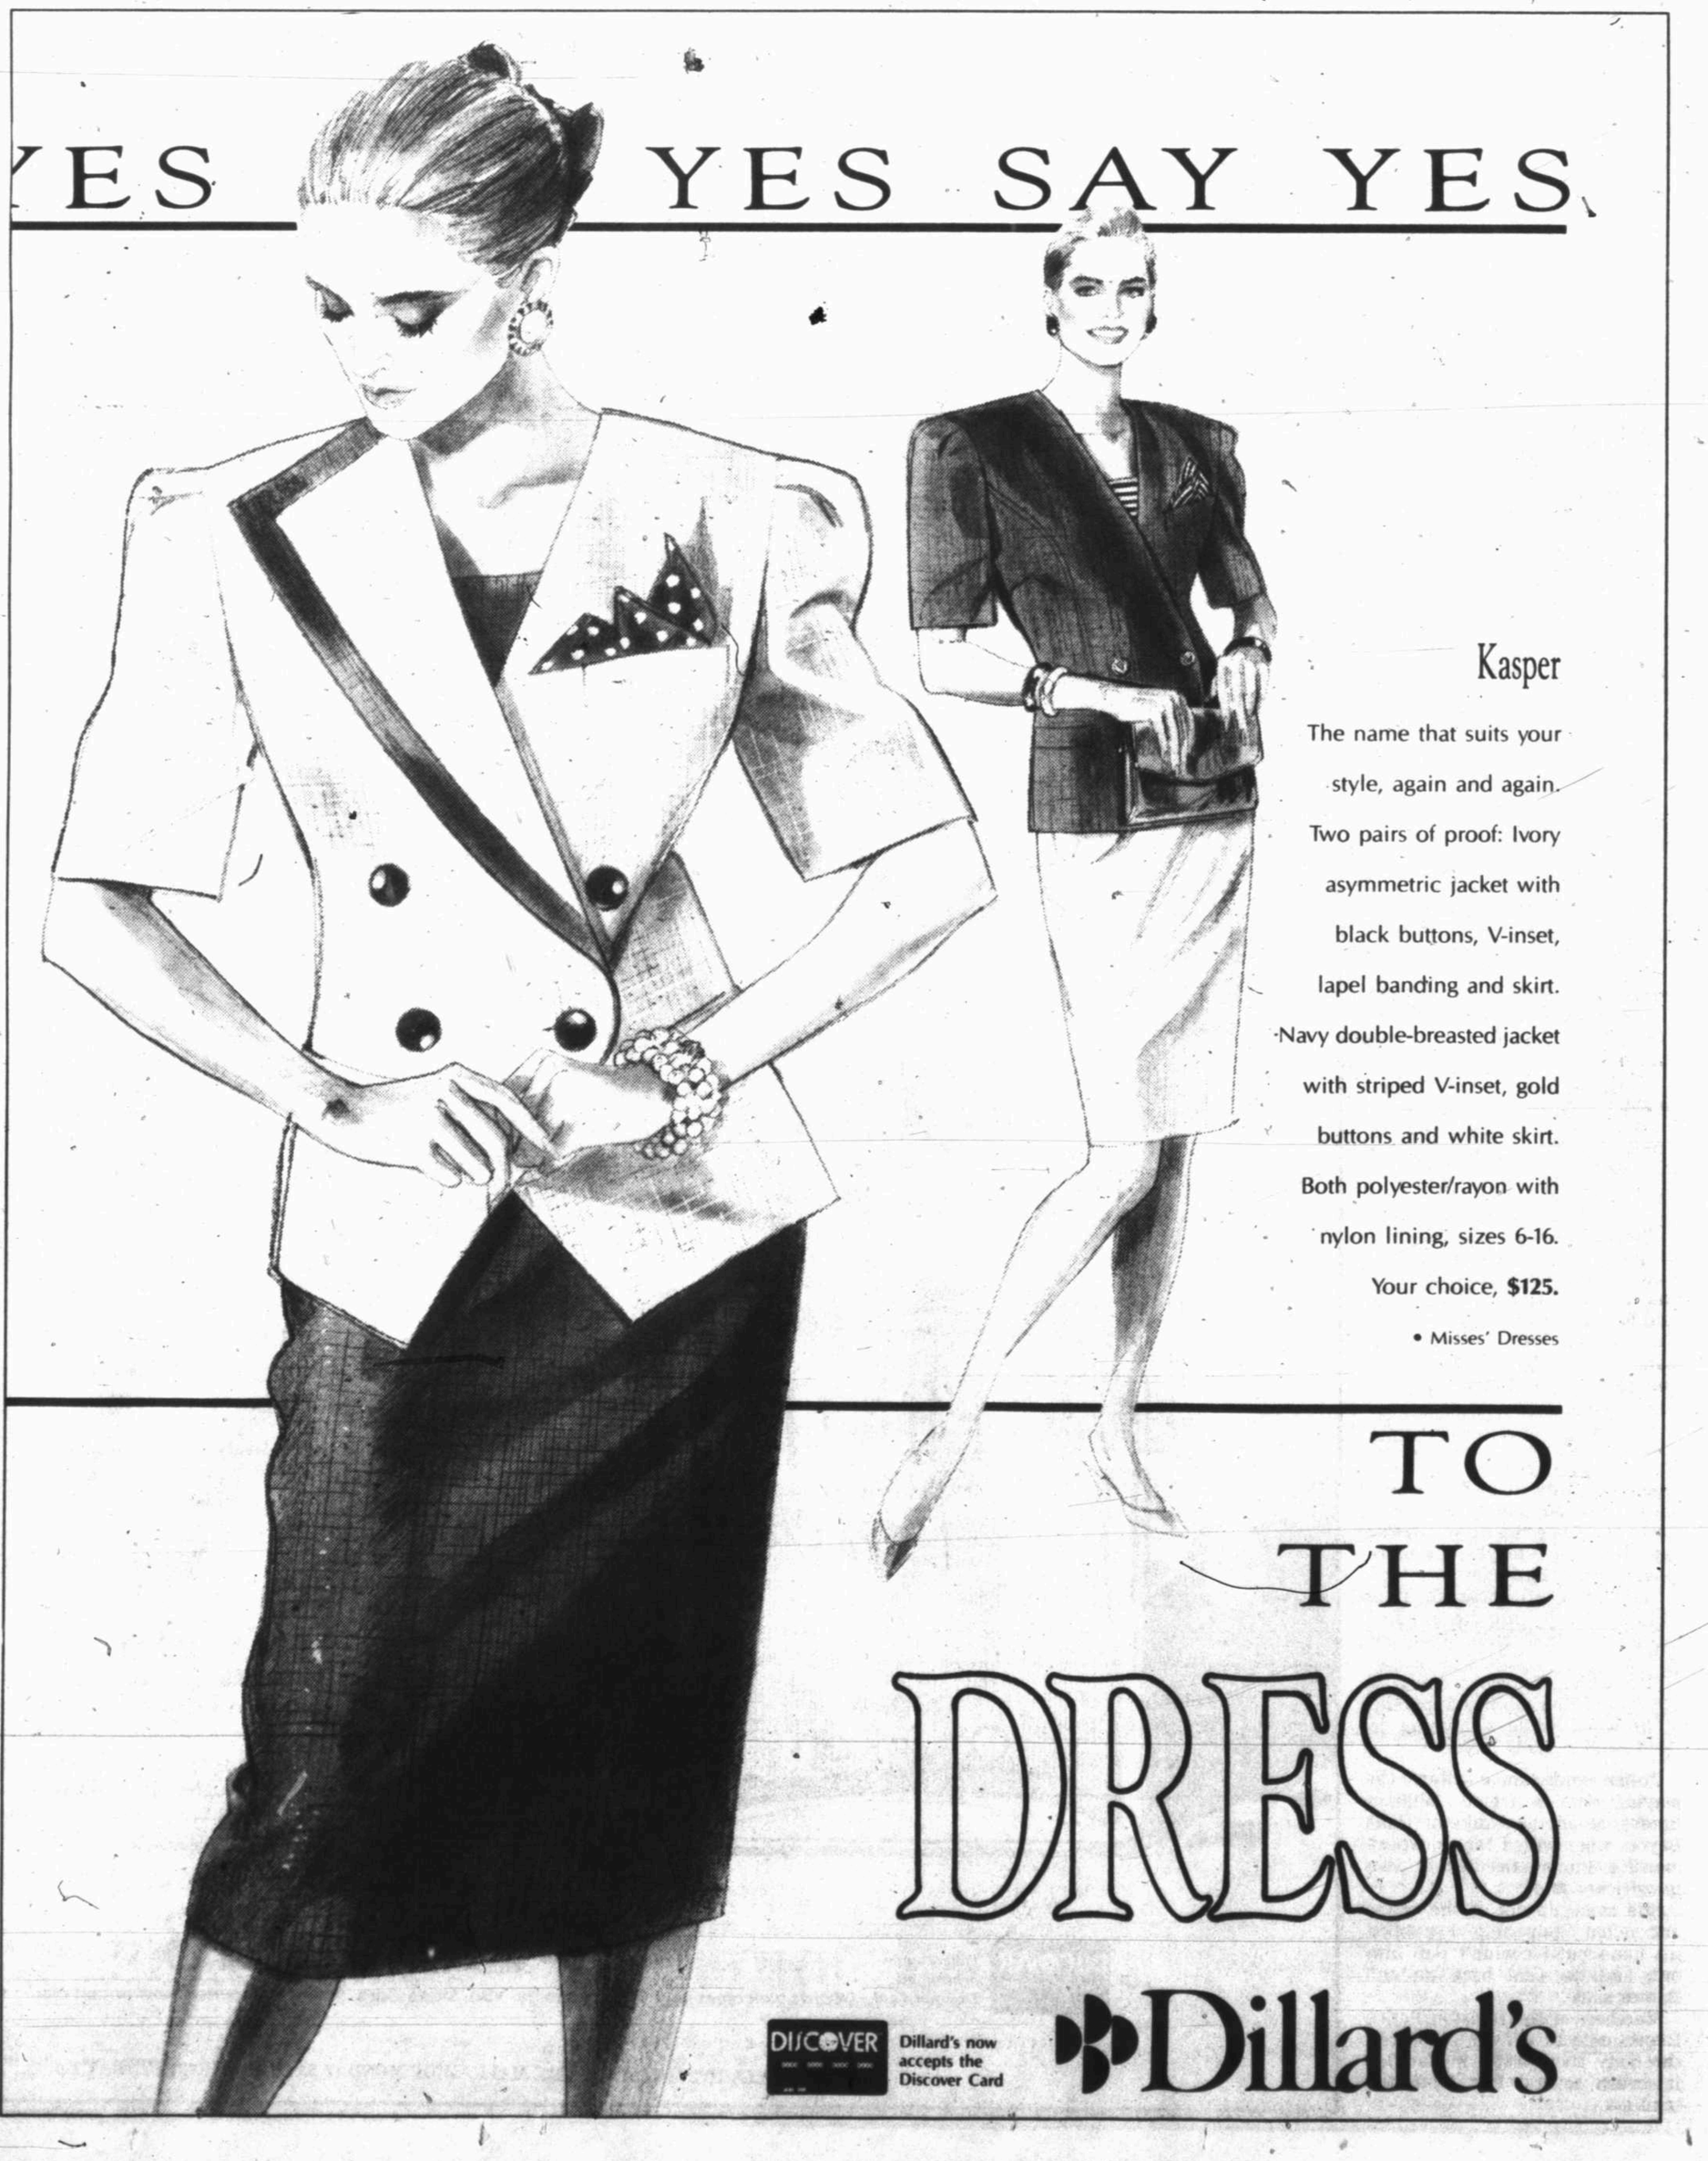

State legislation approved last year eliminated the need for notarization and made the penalty for falsifying title transfer documents a third-degree felony, punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

New title documents are being prepared that will include security features and will not require notarization, said Dian Neill, director of the motor vehicle division of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Abortion foes don't think Andrus will be re-elected

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Abortion foes quickly targeted Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus for defeat in his try for an unprecedented fourth term, saying he betrayed his own beliefs by vetoing what would have been the nation's most restrictive state abortion law.

Andrus

"This veto will galvanize the pro-life majority in Idaho and nationwide," said National Right to Life President John Willke, maintaining Andrus has forfeited any claim to an anti-abortion stand.

"We will be heard at the polls," vowed Kerry Uhlenkott of Idaho Right to Life. "This has been a long, hard fight, and it is by no means over."

Andrus, acknowledging the political cost of his veto, said he acted in the best interests of his state. He denied being influenced by political considerations and threats of economic retaliation from outsiders.

Instead, Andrus said, he rejected a bill that many legal experts said had little chance of being upheld.

"I know that of course there will be some fallout, but so be it," Andrus said. "I can't do anything about that. I have to do what I think is right."

While incurring the wrath of anti-abortion activists, Andrus did win over pro-choice forces who pledged to support him despite his belief that abortion should be allowed only in cases of rape, incest and to save the women's life.

One of the main architects of the vetoed bill, Rep. Gary Montgomery, conceded the legislation "could have been improved and strengthened." He and other abortion foes promised to refine and reintroduce the bill in 1991.

The defeated version, based on a National Right to Life Committee model rejected as too restrictive by other states, called for outlawing abortion except in cases of non-statutory rape reported within seven days, incest if the victim is under 18, severe fetal deformity or a threat to the life or physical health of the woman.

The Legislature adjourned its 1990 session a half hour before the governor's announcement on Friday, precluding the possibility of even considering an override of the veto.

"This is a time for reflection, to solicit the views of our constituents over the interim period," Montgomery said.

Idaho was the fifth state this year to reject a form of the national model anti-abortion forces want to use to test the U.S. Supreme Court's commitment to legalized abortion.

NATION

"But we face the reality that for every Cecil Andrus, there stands a Bob Casey and a Joseph Ada ready to take away the right of women to choose so our work is not done," Michelman said. She referred to the Pennsylvania and Guam governors who signed restrictive abortion legislation.

"It only takes one piece of anti-choice legislation to be passed in one state somewhere in this country to threaten all women's rights," she said. "Until we have pro-choice governors, pro-choice legislatures, a pro-choice Congress, a pro-choice president in Washington, our job is not done."

With some politicians believing the veto has complicated what would have been easy re-election, the three Republicans competing for the right to challenge Andrus this fall immediately accused the governor of waffling on abortion.

Boise stockbroker Milton Erhart, the lone GOP contender on the pro-choice side, pointed out that 17 years ago Andrus was the governor who signed the so-called "trigger law" banning abortion except to save the woman's life and to imprison both women and doctors involved in illegal abortions if the Supreme Court reversed its 1973 decision.

The Legislature repealed that law this year. "Andrus has again demonstrated his expert finger-in-the-wind approach to politics," Erhart said.

Former state Sen. Roger Fairchild said Andrus should win an Olympic gold medal in the flip-flop, and state Sen. Rachel Gilbert, considered the front-runner for the nomination, said Andrus "went south on his principles."

Andrus, insisting he remains opposed to abortion, maintained the majority of Idahoans would agree with his decision.

"Every political career has to come to an end sometime," he said. "I'd hate for that to be the issue. But if it is, so be it."

NOW's head praises veto by Andrus

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — The head of the National Organization for Women on Saturday praised Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus' veto of a restrictive abortion bill, but said she didn't know what influence a threatened boycott of Idaho potatoes had on him.

"How much effect the threat of a boycott had, I haven't the vaguest idea, but he certainly did, in my opinion, the right thing," NOW President Molly Yard told reporters.

Ms. Yard, attending NOW's Northeast regional conference, said pleas from teen-agers, letters and telegrams from pro-choice forces and calls from other governors opposed to the Idaho legislation probably helped influence Andrus.

"I think that Gov. Andrus thought very, very carefully about what he was doing, and I think there are many reasons that went into his decision, which was obviously done with care," Ms. Yard said.

"He clearly did talk to the medical profession and the legal profession. He was advised by the latter that the bill was unconstitutional, and he was advised by the former that women would virtually be banned from having abortions," she said. "I think that troubled him."

Ms. Yard rejected the suggestion that NOW's threatened boycott would have been unfair to Idaho potato growers who had nothing to do with the abortion bill. Nine of the Idaho lawmakers who voted on the bill were potato growers, she said.

Ms. Yard went to the weekend conference prepared to make a pitch for Maine potatoes, but Andrus announced his veto Friday night of what would have become the most restrictive abortion law in the United States had he signed it.

"I listened to his statement last night," Ms. Yard said. "It is the first time I've ever heard a man say exactly what I feel about expecting any woman to carry her pregnancy to term if she's been raped or she's pregnant because of incest, and he said it eloquently.

"I'm sure lots of men feel that way. It's the first time I've ever heard a man say it out loud."

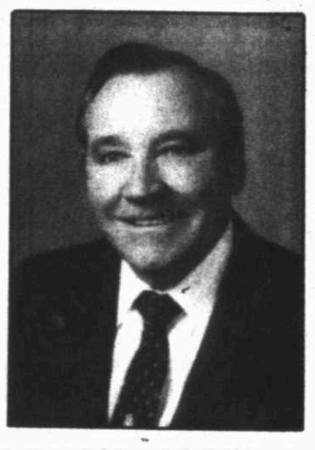

Despite Friday's victory for pro-choice groups, Ms. Yard said activists still face tough fights over abortion rights in Florida, Illinois and other states.

Prosecutor's job not over yet

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The jury verdict expected this week in the John M. Poindexter trial marks the close of a major chapter in the $18.5 million Iran-Contra prosecution effort.

Walsh

But no one in the office of Independent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh is laying in cases of champagne for a round of farewell parties.

Walsh and his staff will stay on to complete one, possibly two more prosecutions and to handle appeals growing out of the Reagan administration's worst foreign policy debacle. Walsh spokeswoman Mary Belcher estimates the process will take about a year.

The 78-year-old Walsh, who cut his prosecutorial teeth in the racket-busting era of the 1930s, expects to keep commuting on weekends to his Oklahoma City home from his government-paid Washington hotel suite.

Walsh was appointed in December 1986 to probe White House efforts to ship arms to Iran in hopes of winning freedom for U.S. hostages in Lebanon, as well as arranging for covert military aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels at a time when Congress had banned such assistance.

So far the prosecutions of eight Iran-Contra figures have produced no blockbuster revelations and have sent no one to jail. But Walsh's efforts have yielded a wealth of detail about White House covert operations in the mid-1980s and have won convictions in six of the eight cases.

The 11 full-time lawyers who remain on Walsh's staff are digging in for a new trial, two appeals and a secret "continuing investigation," according to Belcher.

SHE DECLINED to say what "this other activity" involves, but she disclosed that a former assistant U.S. attorney in Atlanta, Craig Gillen, joined Walsh's staff earlier this year to pursue it.

Before Walsh tapped him, Gillen was the lead attorney in Atlanta's federal drug enforcement task force. Last year, he won a conviction against former Rep. Patrick L. Swindall, R-Ga., for lying about his involvement in a money laundering scheme.

A source close to Walsh, who asked not to be identified, said the new investigation concerns "things that surfaced at the trials" of Poindexter, who served as Reagan's national security adviser from December 1985 to November 1986, and Oliver North, Poindexter's aide.

Another source, not connected to Walsh's office, reported being told "reliably" that the new probe centers on whether North and other Reagan administration officials lied under oath.

Iran-Contra prosecutors accused North of giving false testimony at the close of his own trial last year. A jury found the blustery former Marine lieutenant colonel guilty of three counts of altering and destroying documents, accepting an illegal gratuity, and aiding and abetting in the obstruction of Congress, but acquitted him on the more serious charges of lying to Congress. North was fined $150,000 and required to do 1,200 hours of community service.

North has appealed the verdict.

At the opening of the Poindexter trial this month, Judge Harold H. Greene issued a memo saying North evaded the truth in order to "assist his former colleague and co-defendant" Poindexter.

The Poindexter jury is deciding the retired Navy rear admiral's guilt or innocence on five counts, including lying to Congress, destroying documents and directing others to block congressional inquiries into the covert aid to the Contras and the secret sale of arms to Iran. If convicted on all counts, Poindexter faces a maximum of 25 years in prison and $1.25 million in fines.

THE ISSUE of document destruction may provide some grist for prosecutors if they look into perjury allegations against North.

At his trial last year, North said "I was there" in November 1986 when Poindexter tore up a paper that North confirmed was a December 1985 presidential document, known as a finding, that authorized sale of Hawk missiles to Iran in explicit arms-for-hostages language.

But at a hearing last December before the Poindexter trial, North said under oath that he did not know the paper destroyed was the finding until he heard Poindexter confirm it in 1987 testimony before the congressional Iran-Contra committees.

Greene didn't buy North's new version of the document destruction. He ruled North was "prevaricating" to aid Poindexter. "North told the truth at his trial rather than at (the Poindexter pre-trial) hearing," Greene said.

From its 1987 maximum strength of 154 lawyers, support staff and federal agents, Walsh's office now is down to 56, including the 11 full-time attorneys.

By the time Walsh writes his final report a year from now summarizing the prosecution team's findings, the probe may end up costing close to $25 million.

Partisans of the Reagan administration have criticized Walsh's office for wasting taxpayers' money and failing to add significantly to the public's understanding of the Iran-Contra affair.

BUT PAUL Rothstein, a law professor at Georgetown University who has followed the prosecutions closely, disagreed. "New things did come out — for instance, the full extent to which our country was encouraging third countries like Honduras to aid the Contras," he said. "And a real human picture emerged of exactly what was going inside the White House, how aides there began to take things into their own hands and think of Congress as the enemy."

The only immediate departure from Walsh's team after the Poindexter verdict will be Dan K. Webb, who crafted the team's case against Poindexter in the first half of his three-week trial.

Webb, a former U.S. attorney in Chicago, returns to his Chicago law firm where he reportedly earns $600,000 a year specializing in commercial litigation and white-collar criminal defense work.

Club fire victims flown to Honduras

NEW YORK (AP) — The bodies of 50 of the 87 people killed in a fire at an illegal Bronx social club were loaded onto a cargo plane at Kennedy Airport on Saturday for a late-night flight to Honduras, a nation in mourning.

At a brief memorial service in the huge hangar, Deputy Mayor Bill Lynch said New York City would "do all possible to make sure this will never happen again."

"These young people came to this great city of ours seeking hope and opportunity, and now they leave like this," Lynch said, gesturing toward the long row of caskets. "The bodies lying here before us say we've got to do more. We've got to do more to make sure this doesn't happen again."

Honduran President Rafael Leonardo Callejas planned to head a government delegation receiving the bodies when the plane arrived this morning. After an airport Mass, Honduran air force planes and helicopters will take the remains to 12 locations in the country, said Nahum Valladares, Honduran information minister.

In New York, police continued their crackdown on the hundreds of unlicensed social clubs, or bars, which dot the city's poorer neighborhoods.

Police said they visited 261 locations late Friday and early Saturday and found only 65 clubs open. They issued 29 orders to vacate the premises, 57 summonses and 80 violation notices. On Thursday night, they visited 89 club sites and found 74 closed.

Most club operators closed down before they were shut down, according to a neighborhood liquor store owner who has supplied liquor to social clubs.

The retailer said that by Friday afternoon he had not heard from any of the clubs that normally contact him during the day to place orders.

Because they are not licensed, social clubs cannot obtain liquor from wholesalers and must buy from retailers. Such sales often violate state rules limiting the amount of liquor any one person can buy retail at one time.

A Bronx grand jury has charged Julio Gonzalez with murder for allegedly etting the fire that devastated the Happy Land club a week ago.

Police say Gonzalez, enraged by a former girlfriend's rejection, spilled a dollar's worth of gasoline in the entrance to the club and set it ablaze. Conviction on a murder charge carries a maximum penalty of 25 years to life.

Victim arrested for carrying gun

NEW YORK (AP) — A three-time mugging victim, indicted on a weapons charge after saying she shot an armed man who was trying to rob her, has hired Bernhard Goetz's lawyer to defend her, the Daily News reported Saturday.

Ysesnande Bureau, 20, said she was attacked Monday night with a girlfriend who died from gunshots fired from a car moments after the mugger fled. She was charged with possession of a deadly weapon and freed Friday on $500 bail.

Her lawyer, Barry Slotnick, said "She is another decent, law-aiding citizen who was brutalized in several muggings and was forced to carry a gun to protect herself."

Slotnick also represented Goetz, who was convicted on a weapons charge for shooting four youths he said were trying to rob him.

He gave the following account of the incident:

Bureau and her friend, Theresa Jackson, 19, were in Jackson's car waiting for a green light. An armed man jerked open the driver's door and tried to snatch her purse and earrings.

Bureau pulled out her gun, a .25 caliber pistol, and fired once, grazing the forehead of Clint Smith, 24.

Smith fled and the women drove off. A few blocks later, a car pulled up next to them. Someone inside fired a shot that hit Jackson in the head. She died Wednesday at Kings County Hospital.

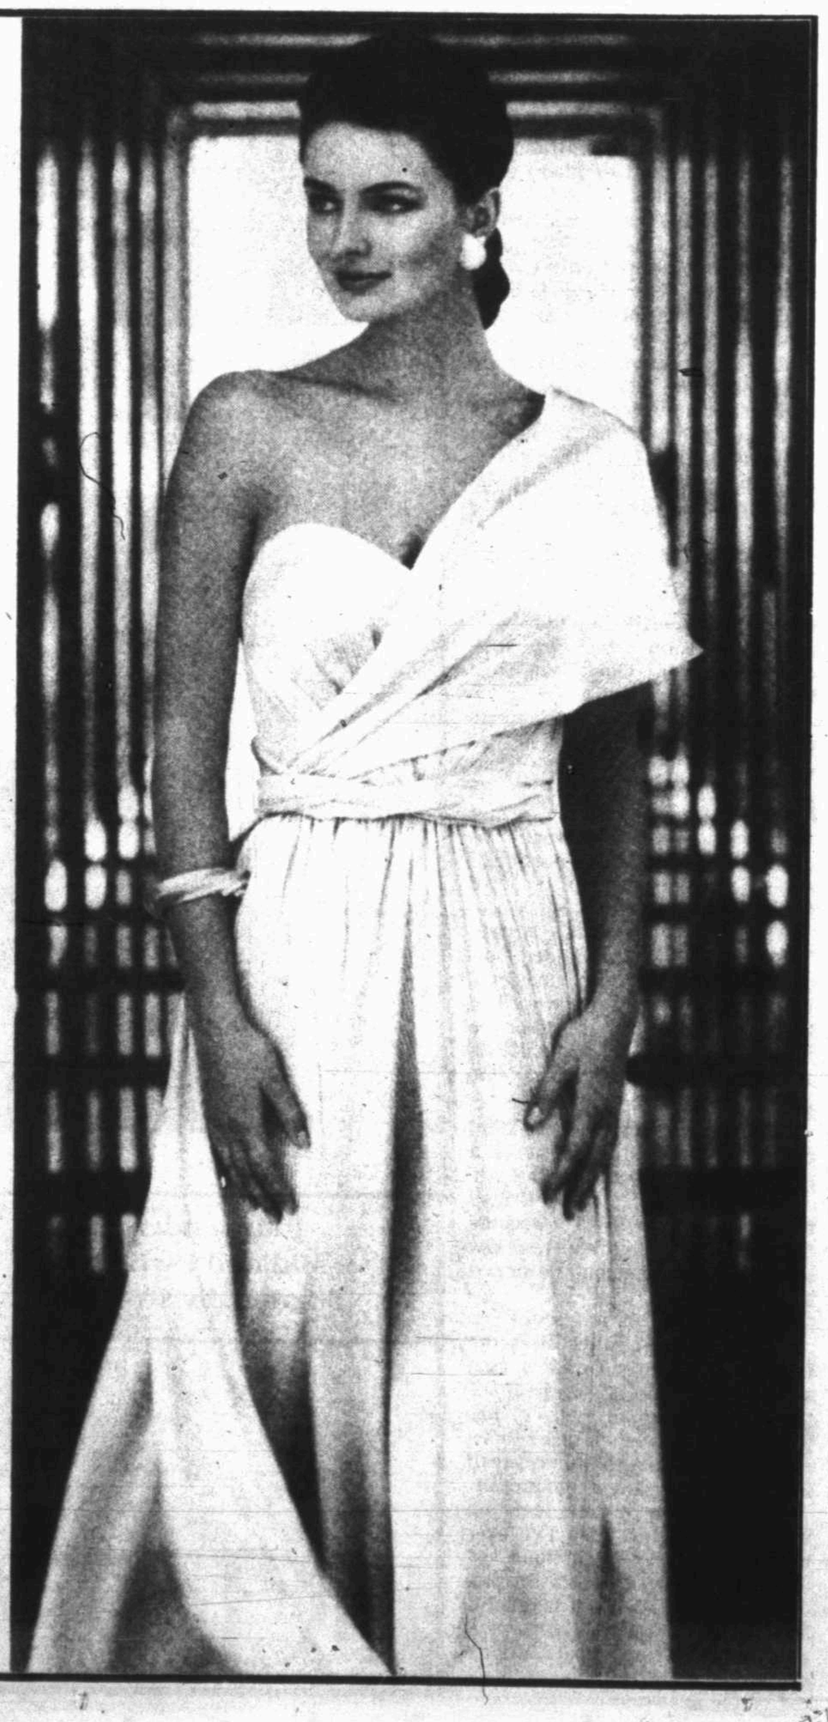

Smith was arrested late Monday when he went to a hospital to be treated for his head wound.

Minimum wage will increase to $3.80 today

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's minimum wage increases for the first time in nearly a decade today, but it won't lift millions of low-wage workers above the poverty level.

The minimum wage, paid to about 3 million Americans, increases from $3.35 an hour to $3.80 and will go to $4.25 an hour next April 1. The new law also establishes a subminimum training wage for certain teen-age workers.

Critics say the increase should have been greater.

"Right now, it's not at a level where people can pull themselves out of poverty," said Jo Ann Mort of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union.

"When people hear minimum wage, they think children working after school, and that's not the reality of it. The reality is that adults are trying to support families on this," Mort said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., last week called the size of the increase a "disgrace" and said he would push Congress next year to bring the wage to "a level that is fair to millions of workers who are being unfairly exploited now."

Kennedy blamed the size of the increase on the Bush administration, which vetoed a proposal last year to raise the wage to $4.55 an hour.

The increase was "the best we could do against an anti-worker administration that refuses to do justice for America's working poor," said Kennedy, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

The administration considers the increase an equitable boost that will result in fewer jobs being lost than under the $4.55 proposal, White House spokesman Stephen Hart said.

Polls have shown a majority of Americans support a minimum wage of at least $5 an hour.

The minimum wage was established in 1938 as part of the first Fair Labor Standards Act. During its first 40 years, Congress acted six times to keep the rate at about 50 percent of the average hourly earnings of all non-supervisory employees.

The $3.35 rate, which equaled 48 percent of the national average earnings in 1981, fell to an all-time low of 35 percent of the nation's average earnings last year, according to the AFL-CIO.

After today's increase, full-time minimum-wage workers will still be $516 a year short of what the government figures it takes to support a family of two at the poverty level and $4,796 below the basic needs level for a family of four. The government placed the poverty level for a family of four at $12,700 in February.

Still, the boost in the minimum wage may help millions of other low-paid workers. For instance, companies paying $4 or $4.50 an hour may decide to raise wages 45 cents to keep trained workers.

There are more than 11 million Americans making less than $4.50 an hour and nearly 15 million making under $5 an hour, according to the Labor Department.

Under the new law, workers ages 16 to 19 may be paid a subminimum training wage for their first three months in the work force and for an additional 90 days if the employer has a formal training program.

The training wage will be $3.35 an hour when the minimum wage rises to $3.80 an hour and $3.62 an hour when the minimum wage reaches $4.25 next April. Migrant seasonal farmworkers are exempt from the subminimum and the entire subminimum provision expires in April 1993.

The wage that employers are required to pay workers who receive tips will increase to 45 percent of the minimum wage, providing that tips bring workers' hourly pay to at least the minimum. The percentage, which was 40 percent before today, goes to 50 percent a year from now.

Kansas City raising sales tax to fund war on drugs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The war on drugs picks up new recruits here today, when each person who buys something in Jackson County begins chipping in to help authorities arrest, jail and treat abusers.

The Kansas City metropolitan area, faced with one of the nation's worst drug problems, is raising taxes by an estimated $14 million a year to help authorities tackle a drug culture boosted by the infiltration of Los Angeles gangs.

The one-quarter-cent rise in sales tax will generate nearly $100 million over its seven-year life from over-the-counter sales in Jackson County, which incorporates Kansas City and its suburbs.

The nation's 29th largest metropolitan area ranks sixth in the availability of crack, and police believe that one-third or more of last year's 141 killings were drug-related.

"I am not aware of any approach like it in the United States," said Larry Myers, administrator of the Jackson County Juvenile Court. "I guarantee there are other communities watching to see what the outcome is."

Voters in Jackson County authorized the tax in November. Since then, officials have been putting together plans to use the money.

It will enable the county prosecutor to add about 25 prosecutors to his staff, and the Kansas City Police Department and the Jackson County Drug Enforcement Task Force to hire 30 more officers each. That will cost each department $1.5 million a year.

The campaign focuses primarily on enforcement, but $2.5 million a year is earmarked for drug rehabilitation programs, $1 million for community crime prevention programs and $1.5 million for a deferral program that would allow first-time offenders to receive drug counseling and avoid criminal charges.

"I'm really excited about this because it's systemwide," Myers said. "If it was only law enforcement, it'd be just stacking up kids and adults in the court system."

Kansas City's drug problems have mushroomed in recent years, and police Chief Larry Joiner said enforcement officials estimate 35 percent to 40 percent of last year's 141 homicides were drug-related. Police say the problems have been aggravated in recent years by Los Angeles gangs spreading their drug-dealing to Midwest cities.

Police in outlying suburban areas also welcome the additional funds.

"We don't have the numbers of crack houses and dope houses, or people soliciting off the street corners, like they do in Kansas City," said Howard Brown, chief of police in Blue Springs, an eastern Jackson County community of about 40,000.

"But we do have a drug problem, there's no doubt. It's not running rampant, but there are drugs available in the school system — that's one thing we want to make drug-free."

Brown will be able to hire three officers for his 45-member staff. Once they're trained, they will replace three seasoned officers who will be assigned to the expanded county drug task force, begun three years ago with a private donation and kept going through federal grants.

The county task force has "been operating on a shoestring," Brown said. "We're pretty enthused now that we'll have enough people to really hit the streets and enough money to get involved in making more buys."

But others foresee problems with the tax and the programs it will finance.

Charles Megerman, the county corrections director, says he doesn't know what the drug program will mean for a jail already filled well beyond capacity.

"There are a whole host of options, from renting space to double-bunking to building a new jail," he said.

And Jack Hackley, a real estate agent from suburban Oak Grove and a member of the county Economic Development Commission who spoke out against the new tax, said he might start a petition drive to repeal it.

Hackley said the tax swept in on the strength of national hysteria over drugs, and thinks the extent of the drug problem has been grossly exaggerated.

"This is the biggest mistake the taxpayers have ever made," he said. "It should be repealed immediately."

NATION IN BRIEF

Crossing guard shoots at teen

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A school crossing guard who allegedly shot twice at a student was charged with attempted murder and ordered to undergo psychiatric tests, police said. The student was unharmed.

James F. Murphy, 40, shot at Clinton Drake III, 14, from about six feet away on Friday but missed, then fired again but his .25-caliber semiautomatic pistol jammed, police said.

"He was laughing and shaking," Drake said. "He was laughing like he was happy. I was thinking, 'Is he going to kill me or is he fooling with me?' Then he pointed the gun at my chest and fired and missed," Drake said. "I saw the smoke and the shell pop out the side. Then he pulled the trigger again."

Police said they recovered a pistol and 50 rounds of ammunition when they arrested Murphy in a convenience store parking lot shortly after the incident.

Police Chief Michael Chitwood said police were investigating a possible racial motive. Drake, a student in the Portland Rehabilitation Education Program, is black. Murphy is white.

One twin born early

ATLANTA (AP) — A 24-year-old woman who was expecting twins in July has delivered one baby, but will have to wait on the other.

In a rare birth doctors say was one of just 14 cases reported nationally, Donna Krasenics delivered a 1-pound, 8-ounce baby girl, Shakoora, at Crawford Long Hospital on Thursday, 15 weeks prematurely.

Shakoora was listed in critical condition in Crawford Long's intensive care unit Saturday. Her mother was in good condition.

Doctors were able to stop Mrs. Krasenics' labor with the second baby, and hospital officials said she will remain in bed until her second child is delivered.

"Shakoora is my first child, and I wasn't paying much attention to anything except the birth when I heard somebody in the delivery room say something about there being only 13 known cases like mine," Mrs. Krasenics said.

Officials said the baby was delivered as Dr. Camille Davis-Williams tried to stop the premature birth of Shakoora. The amniotic sac for the second baby did not break, so the doctor was able to halt further labor.

Two escapees caught

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Two jail escapees, one of whom was taken off death row only last week, were captured Saturday but four other escapees from the Yellowstone County jail were still at large, police said.

Convicted murderer Bernard Fitzpatrick was among seven prisoners Friday night who scaled the 10-foot brick wall of a Yellowstone County jail's small recreation yard and cut through the chain-link screen that covered it.

Fitzpatrick, 47, spent almost 14 years on death row until federal courts overturned his death sentence for kidnapping and murdering an 18-year-old grocery store clerk during a robbery in Hardin in 1975.

Kevin Devereaux was in custody on federal charges of burglary and distribution of a controlled substance.

Another escapee, Cecil Thornell, 40, was captured about 10:30 p.m. Friday, less than an hour after the escape was discovered, police Sgt. Rich St. John said. He had been charged with robbing a gasoline station while on parole for armed robbery.

The escapees still at large Saturday were Frank Belmarez, 22, of Billings, charged with homicide and aggravated assault in the stabbing death of his girlfriend outside a bar last October; Daniel Wilson, 27, of Laurel, charged with suspicion of drug possession and criminal endangerment; Tony Howland, 24, of Billings, charged with probation violation for felony theft and possession of a weapon by a prisoner; and Elwood Hall, 24, of Brockton, scheduled for trial on Monday on charges of aggravated sexual abuse.

FDA suggests AZT use

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Food and Drug Administration advisory committee is urging the agency to recommend the use of the drug AZT in treating children suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The action came Friday at a meeting of the Antiviral Drugs Advisory Committee and now goes to the agency for a final decision.

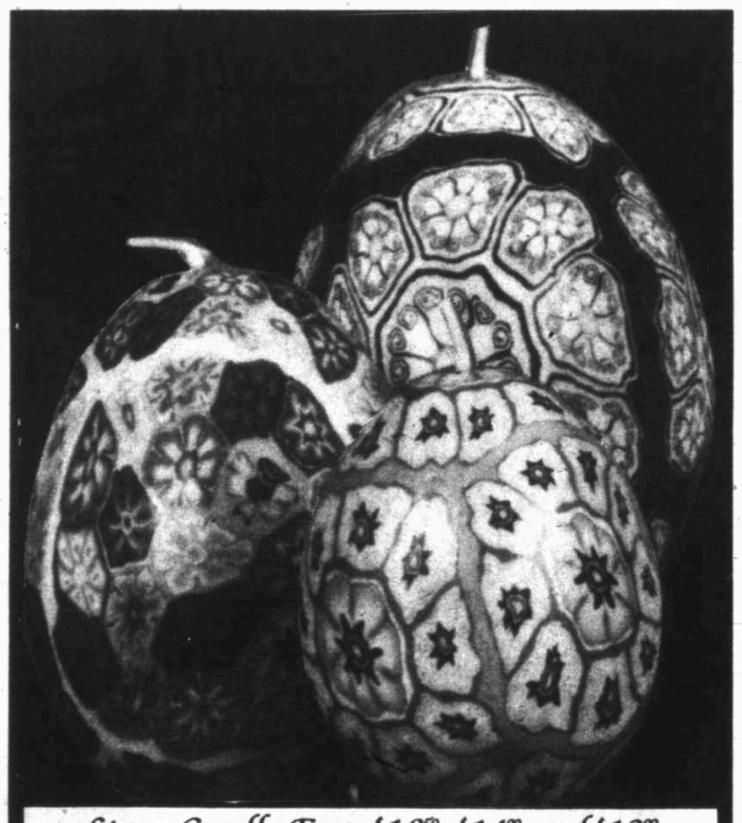

An FDA decision to approve labeling of AZT for use in treating children with AIDS would encourage more doctors to prescribe it for youngsters and enable patients to collect reimbursement from their insurance companies.

Troops loyal to Lebanese President Elias Hrawi question the driver of a car crossing from Christian east to Moslem west Beirut on Friday. Motorists driving westward often found themselves under shellfire.

Lebanon Christian forces fighting house-to-house

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Christian forces pounded east Beirut with artillery barrages Saturday after a night of house-to-house fighting under parachute flares for control of Lebanon's Christian enclave.

Police said at least 53 people were killed and 133 wounded since the new round of full-scale warfare erupted at dawn Friday between Gen. Michel Aoun's 19,000 army troops and Christian warlord Samir Geagea's 6,000 Lebanese Forces militiamen.

The killings raised the overall death toll to 829 killed and 2,289 wounded since Jan. 30, when Aoun moved against Geagea in a bid to crush the only significant challenge to the general's authority in the 310-square-mile Christian enclave.

The new round of fighting shattered a March 3 cease-fire, which had been threatened by sporadic clashes for weeks.

Police said Aoun's forces used 155mm howitzer batteries to pour shells onto Beirut's port and the adjacent seaside Karantina district, which houses Geagea's military command.

Geagea's gunners returned the fire and blasted the army-held mountain resort towns of Bekfaya, Brummana and Ein Saadeh with multi-barreled rocket launchers.

"Why are these madmen raining death and destruction on us all over again?" screamed Madeleine Tabet, a Christian housewife reached by telephone at the basement of her east Beirut home.

The bombardment interrupted an exodus of east Beirut residents fleeing to the divided city's Moslem sector. Cars in long lines bumped into each other as motorists driving westward came under shellfire.

Huge clouds of black smoke obscured east Beirut and the Christian hinterland as the shelling raged Saturday, setting dozens of buildings ablaze and touching off forest fires.

Shells hit schools, churches, monasteries, apartments and bakeries in Beirut's Christian sector and several towns in Kesrouan province, 20 miles northeast of the capital.

Moslem group claims attack on diplomat

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Assailants wounded a Polish diplomat and his wife, and a previously unknown Moslem group today claimed responsibility and warned Poland not to help Soviet Jews travel to Israel.

The shootings Friday night followed Poland's offer to help Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel as a "humanitarian gesture" that it hoped Arab nations would understand.

Budgan Zbigniew, a Polish commercial attache, and his wife, Eva Sarkis, were wounded by assailants firing automatic rifles as the couple was parking a car near the Bristol Hotel in Moslem west Beirut.

The two were rushed to the American University Hospital, where a hospital spokesman today said both were "doing fine. They are off the critical list."

A hospital medical bulletin said Zbigniew had a bullet wound in the chest and his wife suffered minor wounds in the left arm.

The claim came in a handwritten Arabic statement from "the Revolutionary Action Organization, the Arab Resistance front-The Martyr Suleiman al-Halabi unit," which was published Saturday by the Beirut leftist newspaper As-Safir.

"Our group is behind the Polish diplomats operation. We warn the Polish government against providing any assistance in transporting Soviet Jews to our sacred land in Palestine," said the statement from the group, which was previously unknown.

Poland's prime minister, Tadeusz Mazowiecki, offered transport to Israel-bound Soviet Jews on Sunday after Hungary's Malev airline stopped charters and some scheduled flights to Israel because of threats.

Nepel closes schools to curb demonstrations

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — The government closed all high schools in the capital and two suburbs Saturday to try to curb student demonstrations for multiparty politics, state-owned radio reported.

The move came hours after police fired tear gas and rifles to disperse about 5,000 people who poured into the streets of Patan, a Katmandu suburb, to protest the killings of two demonstrators Friday, witnesses said.

At least 14 people have been killed since Feb. 18, when King Birendra's government cracked down on the movement led by the Nepali Congress Party and a coalition of left-wing parties.

In the lastest government response, the state-owned radio, quoting the Ministry of Education, said about 100 schools in Katmandu, Bhakatapur and Patan will remain closed indefinitely.

"Due to lack of educational atmosphere in some schools of Katmandu valley, the government has decided to close down all high schools," the radio said.

Students have taken part in the nationwide demonstrations, which have often turned violent. Hundreds of people — including doctors, lawyers and journalists in addition to students — have been arrested.

The government had already closed Tribhuvan University's five colleges around the country.

Lithuanians urged to scrap declaration

Gorbachev refuses to negotiate, warns of 'grave consequences' if they refuse

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev told Lithuanians on Saturday that Moscow would not negotiate with them until they annul their declaration of independence, warning of "grave consequences" if they refuse.

In Vilnius, Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis dismissed the appeal, telling reporters the Soviet leader was "demanding impossible things."

In a toughly worded, 18-line statement issued in Moscow and addressed to the republic's Parliament, Gorbachev charged Lithuanian leaders with "openly challenging and insulting" the Soviet Union.

Gorbachev said Lithuania had chosen a "ruinous" path that "will only lead to a dead end."

It was his first formal statement on the issue since March 11, when the Baltic state's Parliament sparked open confrontation with the Kremlin by voting to secede from the Soviet Union.

Gorbachev said he was proposing that Lithuania's Parliament "immediately annul the illegal acts it has adopted. Such a step will open the possibility for discussing the entire range of problems on the solely acceptable basis: within the framework of the U.S.S.R. Constitution."

In a separate three-page statement, also carried by the official Tass news agency and read by an announcer on national television news Saturday night, Gorbachev addressed the people of Lithuania directly.

He warned that "irresponsible and illegal actions" by Lithuanian leaders could affect the republic's economic, scientific, technical and other links with Soviet republics, which supply the Baltic state with much of its oil, gas and other essential products.

In Vilnius, uniformed men were reported patrolling the printing plant for republic's main newspapers and the chief prosecutor's office. Both buildings were seized during the night in Moscow's latest move to assert control.

The Lithuanians have not budged and Landsbergis said they would press on with their independence drive.

"We have no sources for stopping this. We can work, live normally and wait. We must be tough and have tenacity. We have this in our character."

In an attempt to pressure Lithuania to back down, Soviet troops have occupied Communist Party buildings, paraded tanks through the streets, demanded that residents hand over firearms and arrested Lithuanian deserters from the Red Army.

Gorbachev said the Kremlin was receiving many letters and telegrams from citizens demanding that the Soviet government uphold the constitution in its showdown with Lithuania.

"The situation in the republic and around it has become dramatic. If you would not hear the voice of the reason now, the developments may have grave consequences for all of us. We must be united in our desire to prevent that."

Lithuania's deputy premier Romualdas Ozolas said Gorbachev's appeal was "strong. It's a step we must overcome." He suggested Lithuanians write to the Kremlin to express their desire for independence.

Gorbachev acted after his newly created Cabinet directed him Friday to tell Lithuania that it must rescind unconstitutional laws before any talks on secession could begin. The constitution stipulates a republic's right to secede but offers no mechanism for secession.

Gorbachev has promised Lithuania and other independence-minded republics that such a mechanism will be established, but the measure currently before the Soviet legislature gives the Kremlin final authority on such questions.

On Friday, nearby Estonia pledged to join Lithuania in its drive to regain independence lost when the Soviet Union forcibly annexed them with Latvia, the third Baltic republic. Latvia is expected to pursue independence next month.

In Moscow earlier Saturday, about 700 people rallied in Gorky Park in support of Lithuania, carrying signs that read: "Hands off Lithuania," and "Down with Red Fascism."

Mayor denies restrictions on Tiananmen Square strolls

BEIJING (AP) — The mayor of Beijing on Friday denied authorities have warned citizens to stay away from Tiananmen Square, site of last spring's bloody suppression of the pro-democracy movement, to prevent "protest strolls."

"This is the first time I have heard such news," the mayor, Chen Xitong, said when asked at a news conference about the reported warnings. "Everyone is allowed to take a walk anywhere."

Overseas-based Chinese dissident groups have called on students and others to stroll through Tiananmen on April 1 and April 5 in a silent protest against the crackdown of the student-led pro-democracy movement last spring.

The groups have suggested casual walks through the square, the focal point of last year's movement, because of the certainty that police would quickly break up any organized demonstration and arrest participants.

Chinese sources have reported work units and schools throughout the city are telling workers and students to stay away from the square on the two designated days.

April 5 is "Qingming" or Graves-weeping Day, the annual day when Chinese honor their dead. It has been suggested students might use the occasion to honor Hu Yaobang, the reformist former party chief whose death last April 15 touched off the student campaign for democratic reform.

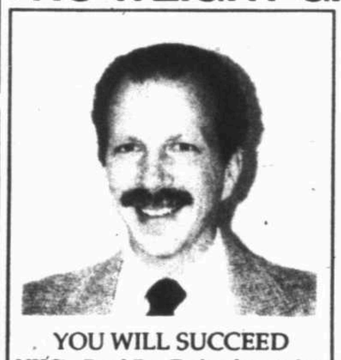

In 1976, thousands of people streamed to Tiananmen on Qingming to lay wreathes and flowers honoring Chou En-lai, the beloved premier who had died in January. The violent suppression of that spontaneous movement set the stage for the arrests of the ultra-leftist "Gang of Four" and the end of the Cultural Revolution later that year.

Beijing students have received intensive political indoctrination and have been under tight surveillance since the democracy movement was crushed by military force last June 4.

Fighting converts heart of London into battleground

LONDON (AP) — The heart of London became a battleground Saturday, and fashionable shopping and theater districts packed with locals and tourists suddenly found themselves at the mercy of roving gangs.

It was a scene more reminiscent of street fighting in Beirut or Israel's occupied territories than London's favorite tourist haunts: Trafalgar Square, Regent Street, Piccadilly Circus and Leicester Square.

Running battles between rock-throwing militants and riot police left a trail of injury and destruction, from overturned and burned-out cars to smashed windows and looted shops.

The militants, who broke off from a protest by more than 40,000 people demonstrating against a new nationwide local tax, smashed plate-glass windows at some of the world's most famous stores, including Liberty's, Aquascutum, Wedgwood and Mappin and Webb.

"The mindless mob, although a small minority, has taken over," said a uniformed policeman at the intersection of Oxford and Regent streets.

On Charing Cross Road, a mile away, looters carried away expensive musical instruments even as police with riot shields tried to clear the area. Two china shops on Regent Street also had their display windows pillaged.

Many of the broken windows set off burglar alarms, which mixed with the constant wail of police sirens and fire engines.

The rioting broke out in late afternoon as the stores prepared to close for the weekend. It spread into the evening and overtook theatergoers headed into London's West End for a Saturday night out.

Several theaters kept their doors shut at the height of the rampage, leaving ticket-holders standing outside. Some of them got caught between the protesters and the police.

Most shows went on, although some started late.

One woman dressed in a silk dress and fur jacket walked up to a riot policeman holding a shield outside the Palace Theatre at the corner of Shaftesbury Avenue and Charing Cross Road. "Excuse me," she said, "have you got any idea how long this is going to last?"

At the Duke of York Theatre in St. Martin's Lane, 650 people were locked in as rioting flared outside during a performance of the play "Shirley Valentine."

"It was like being under siege," said General Manager Andy Phipps.

One target of the rioters was the Renault showroom on Charing Cross Road near the Leicester Square subway stop, one of five in central London that were sealed off by police. The showroom's floor-to-ceiling windows were smashed, and so were the windows of every car inside.

Rocks, cans, bricks and bottles were thrown through the windows of banks, restaurants, shops, the royal jewelers Garrards, Tower Records and nightclubs, including the popular Stringfellows. Garbage cans heaved by the protesters ended up amidst spring fashions and floral displays in many showrooms along Regent Street.

Charing Cross Road and St. Martin's Lane, which runs from Leicester Square to Trafalgar Square, were littered with rubble, broken glass and torched cars.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mugabe wins, opposition gains

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — President Robert Mugabe failed to realize his dream of a one-party state when three opposition members captured seats in parliamentary elections, according to partial returns Saturday.

"It's a bitter blow," said a spokesman for Mugabe's governing Marxist-Leninist Zimbabwe African National Union. "Yet it could have been worse."

Officials said 80 of 120 contested seats for the 150-member parliament had been counted at the end of the day, and final results were expected to be announced Sunday.

However, Mugabe clearly emerged as the presidential victor. His first challenger ever, Edgar Tekere, gained only 365,149 votes, or 17.3 percent, with returns counted in 106 districts.

Tekere's fledgling opposition party, campaigning for similar political reforms to those in Eastern Europe, captured more votes than most analysts expected.

Growth poses crisis

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Britain's Prince Philip said Friday population growth has created an environmental crisis that could be "more devastating than any nuclear holocaust" if unchecked.

In a speech at the United Nations, Prince Philip said the problem was caused by "human scientific and technological genius" that led to rampant population growth.

"It seems to me that it is about time that these same people, the leaders in thought, in politics and in administration, began to face the facts and started to make serious efforts to find ways of solving the crisis," he said.

"The fuse of the population bomb has already been ignited and the consequences of the explosion for the future of the world will be a great deal more devastating than any nuclear holocaust," he said in the speech sponsored by the U.N. Population Fund.

Prince Philip, president of the Worldwide Fund for Nature, said the ecological problems resulting from population growth are compounded because the countries facing the most dire circumstances are generally the poorest.

U.S. soldiers attacked

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Snipers fired automatic weapons at a bus carrying 28 U.S. airmen along a mountain road Saturday, wounding six of the soldiers, a U.S. military officer said.

An anonymous caller to the private radio network Radio America claimed responsibility on behalf of the leftist Morazano National Liberation Front.

Three attackers fired on the bus about 1 p.m. six miles north of Tegucigalpa, the capital, said Maj. Bruce Jessup, a spokesman for U.S. troops based in the Central American nation.

He said two Americans were seriously wounded. They were taken to a civilian hospital in Tegucigalpa and underwent surgery. Gustavo Hernandez, a radiologist at the State Medical School Hospital, said one was shot in the head.

Jessup said the injuries of the other four were not life-threatening.

"The Americans did not have time to return fire, although there were some security personnel on the bus," Jessup said.

Soviets curb exports

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, in an effort to stop smuggling that has left store shelves bare throughout the country, has announced that Soviet tourists will be forbidden from taking most consumer goods abroad.

The list of banned goods seems endless. Soviet tourists are now barred from leaving the country with everything ranging from car batteries to tires, mushrooms, caviar, electric wire, bicycles, cooking oil, fabrics and nearly all food products.

Valery Draganov, deputy head of the Customs Authority, announced the clampdown on exports Friday evening and said it was made necessary by chronic shortages of consumer supplies throughout the Soviet Union.

Cuba says no to Marti

MEXICO CITY (AP) — TV Marti, the U.S. television channel beamed to Cuba despite Havana's opposition, was not on the air Saturday, Cuba's official news agency reported.

Prensa Latina, in a dispatch monitored in Mexico City, repeated its position that the TV Marti broadcasts are illegal.

"The Cuban government considers the action as a violation of the Caribbean country's sovereignty and of numerous international regulations to which the United States subscribes," Prensa Latina said.

Cuba blocked the signal of what it calls "channel worm" when it began transmitting on Tuesday and continued to jam broadcasts throughout the week.

Cheers choose Le Pen

NICE, France (AP) — Jean-Marie Le Pen whipped his followers into a frenzy of applause and singing Saturday, promising them that their extreme-right National Front party stands on the threshold of real political power.

The 1,600 delegates to the Eighth Party Congress chose Le Pen by cheers and handclapping to lead the party from the sidelines of single-issue politics to what they hope will be victory in 1993 legislative elections.

"If I advance, follow me; if I die, avenge me; if I shirk, kill me," the former paratrooper told the delegates. "We are no longer a tiny movement. We are today the leading political movement in France."

Mexicans want rights

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican newspapers editorialized Saturday that a new U.S.-Mexican trade agreement fails to protect Mexican workers who suffer alleged human rights abuses in the United States.

On Friday, the secretaries of commerce from both countries announced the creation of a joint committee on trade and investments, which reportedly will lead to talks on a free-trade agreement.

But the governors were unable to resolve differences over immigration and drug smuggling. Mexico City newspapers said the United States needs to be more sensitive to Mexicans' needs, both across the border and within the United States.

"Our compatriots who emigrate illegally to the United States in search of work suffer injustices generated by a lack of binational laws defending their rights," said an editorial in Saturday's editions of the daily Excelsior.

School finance effort influenced by defeat

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — New school finance legislation lawmakers are contemplating will bear the stamp of at least one message from rank-and-file members: Don't putter if you can't pony up.

Not only did a stable faction of House Democrats help defeat a leadership-supported bill on those grounds during the last special session, they attracted enough votes to dent basic education tenents in effect since the mid-1980s.

The bone this faction has to pick isn't just with mandates — policy directions handed down to local districts by the Legislature — but with state government's failure to pay for those mandates.

The argument lies at the heart of the school finance debate, which revs up again Monday with the beginning of a new special legislative session.

In October, the Texas Supreme Court told lawmakers that the current finance system is unconstitutional and discriminatory since school districts with poorer tax bases are at a disadvantage in gathering property taxes.

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, a vocal critic of the un-funded mandates this past session, said he can support such policies as the 22-1 pupil-teacher ratio and teacher career ladder, both a part of 1984 House Bill 72 school reforms.

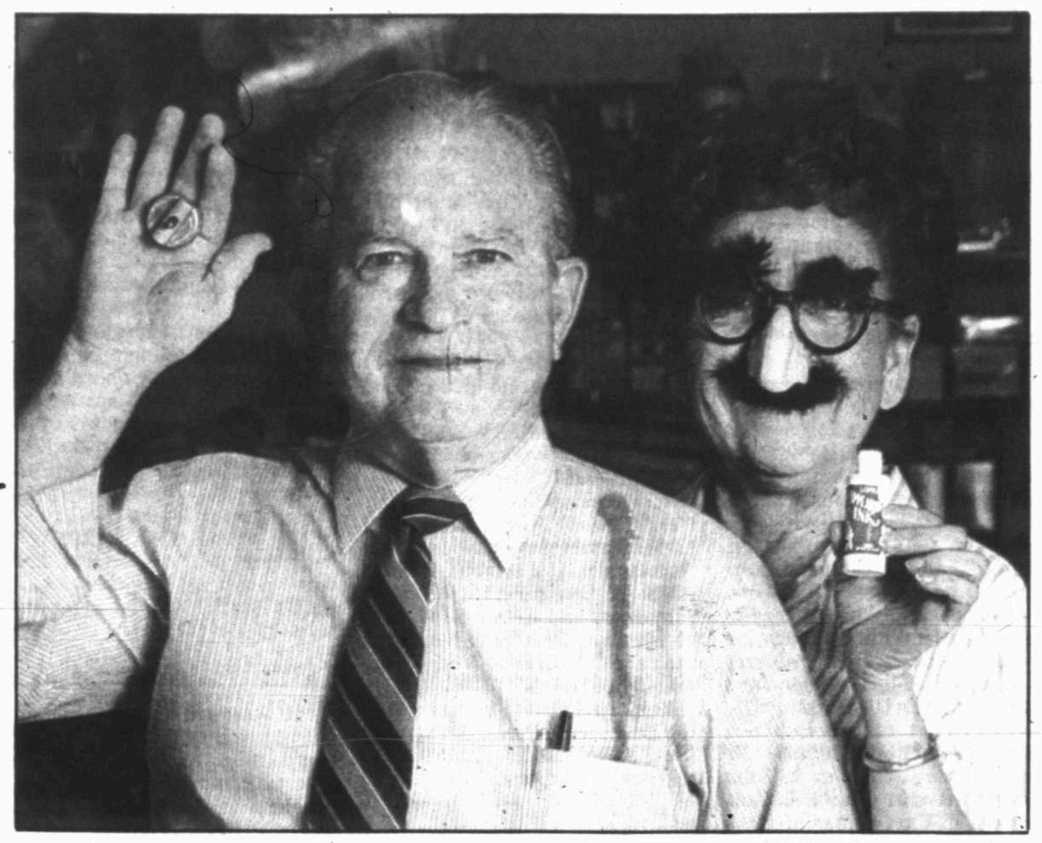

But Stiles said the state ought to "send the total and complete check."

During House debate on a $511 million school finance bill, lawmakers successfully added an amendment that would have eliminated the 22-1 requirement after the start of the school year.

House members also voted to gut the career ladder, a controversial teacher incentive pay program, in favor of devoting that money to incentive programs that districts themselves design.

April Fools' Day pranks no longer big business

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

The hand buzzer, the rubber snake exploding from a bogus can of peanuts, garlic gum and the old sugar-salt switch have apparently lost their April Fools' Day zing.

The 426-year-old tradition of April 1 trickery has faded like disappearing ink through the years, prank merchants and reformed gagsters declared last week.

People have either given up creating humor at other people's expense or grown too accustomed to year-round tomfoolery to make April Fools' Day extraordinary, they said.

April Fools' Day started in France in 1564, when Charles IX adopted a reformed calendar. Until that year, the New Year's celebration was held from March 21 to April 1.

After New Year's Day was changed to Jan. 1, some people still celebrated April 1. Those people were called April fools.

The teasing of the April fools soon grew into a popular yearly tradition of pranks. The annual mischievousness was widespread in England and other countries by the 1600s.

Bill Gray, owner of California Novelties of Riverside, Calif., said poor marketing is to blame for the downfall of April Fools' Day.

"Nobody is promoting April Fools'," Gray said. "The media doesn't promote it. The calendars show Washington's Birthday, National Secretaries Day and everything under the sun but April Fools'.

"I don't think it's a holiday anymore. It's getting forgotten."

Gray's company manufacturers and distributes joke items to toy stores, gift shops and drug stores nationwide. Items include hand buzzers, squirting nickels and candy which turns mouths blue.

Although sales are steady, people have grown too serious nowadays, said Gray, who also claims to be a "full-time joker."

"People are more interested in depressing people than having fun," he said. "I don't think the American people want to have fun anymore in this age of drive-by shootings, drug wars and AIDS."

To promote April Fools' Day this year, California Novelties offered a discount to its distributors.

"I believe in April Fools' Day," Gray said. "I think it's a very good tradition. I think if people knew more about April Fools' Day, it would be a bigger holiday."

Walter Hepworth, assistant manager of Spencer Gifts in Midland Park Mall, said sales of tools of the prank trade are high, but not especially so around April Fools' Day this year.

"I think people have forgotten about it," Hepworth said. "It's just another day out of the year.

"It's also mainly just for kids. Adults are too busy to think about practical jokes."

Richard Barrera, 42, a clothing salesman who quit the April Fools' tradition long ago, said people are too serious for jokes these days.

"People are getting wrapped up in their jobs and family and things," Barrera said. "There's still some practical jokers around, but you just don't see that much anymore."

Gloria Thornton, 45, a secretary, said all the originality has gone out of playing jokes.

"I can't think of any good ones," Ms. Thornton said. "I can only think of the old ones like switching the salt and sugar."

Nevertheless, the apparent decline of April Fools' Day hasn't discouraged Gwen and Charlie Dodson, who own and operate Dodson's Fun'n Party Shop, 4307 N. Midland Drive.

A sign saying "No joke, we're open" hangs in the window of this gift, party and prank emporium which has been in business 21 years.

A customer here can purchase a plethora of squirting nickels and flowers, garlic gum, phony vomit, fake dog droppings, rubber bugs, itching powder and bloody fingers made of rubber.

"There have not been too many new ones," Mrs. Dodson said of the existing joke wares. "We stock most of the everyday stuff that people use."

Candy which turns the mouth aqua blue and new surprise flavors of gum are the latest innovations, she said. Overall sales are good but do not increase substantially near April Fools' Day, she said.

"The reason I think it's not celebrated anymore is that children have access to all these jokes year-round," said Mrs. Dodson, 65. "On April Fools' there's not than much new that they can do."

She said she and her husband, who used to own a mobile home park and a grocery store in the area, decided to open the store after he began suffering health problems.

Dodson said opening the fun shop has been better than any medicine.

"Rather than get ulcers, I thought I'd do something fun," he said. "If I could have all the money in the world to retire on, I'd still be doing what I'm doing."

'Food fight' valuable weapon in ACS' war against cancer

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The American Cancer Society is on a crusade.

The group is driven not only to collect money for cancer-related research, education and patient services but to persuade people to "eat right" in nutrition's war on cancer.

"Good nutrition does aid in general better health," said Debbie Atwell, president of the ACS's Midland Unit and the head of the 1990 Midland crusade. "Our studies show that proper nutrition may be directly linked to preventing certain types of cancer."

Odessa's Permian High School was third with 175½ points, Odessa High School finished fifth with 165, Abilene High School was sixth with 112, and Abilene's Cooper High School was seventh with 71.

LHS contestants took first place in eight of 21 events, including Team Debate, Lincoln-Douglas Debate, Persuasive Speaking, News Writing, Feature Writing, Editorial Writing, Headline Writing and Number Sense.

Lee students achieved second-place finishes in Team Debate, Informative Speaking, Poetry Interpretation, News Writing, Headline Writing, Calculator Applications and Ready Writing. LHS took third place in Informative Speaking.

MHS contestants placed first in Poetry Interpretation, second in Prose Interpretation, and third in Poetry Interpretation, Prose Interpretation, Keyboarding and Ready Writing.

LHS senior Jim Murphy, 16, who took first in the Number Sense contest and second in Calculator Math, said he had prepared tirelessly for the meet.

"I've been devoting my lunch hours to taking practice tests," said Murphy, who plans a dual major in liberal arts and math at the University of Texas at Austin.

Visit to local high school stirs some old memories

For some reason the old saying, "Memories are the proof of living," kept racing through my mind.

I was back in a high school setting. One of the area high schools was hosting a journalism contest and several of us from the newspaper were serving as judges.

But this isn't about journalism or judging contests.

No, indeed.

This is about going back 20 years in time and the memories that were magically conjured up as a result of that brief journey into the past.

It was entertaining, to say the least. True, the adventure made me feel terribly old, but, at the same time, a pleasant sense of nostalgia that raced through my veins.

Appropriately enough, it all began when I walked into the first classroom and was assigned a desk. I had to smile. It was just like the dozens of other desks I had used in my youth — except for one significant difference. Either they are making desks a lot smaller these days or I have gotten as fat as a pig.

Whereas I used to be able to slip in and out of a desk with little or no effort, I now found myself manuevering into position. I had to suck in my gut, place it at a certain angle and then sort of collapse into the available space, breathing heavily all the while.

Others, I could sense, were watching my efforts with great amusement. God will get even with skinny people who laugh at me. I know. He told me so.

Next there was the old chalk board. Every classroom in America has a giant chalk board at the front of the room, usually located directly behind the teacher's desk. In the early grades, it is used for relatively simple things, such as, 2 plus 2 equals 4; 4 plus 4 equals 8; and so on and so forth. As the students get older, of course, the numbers get more difficult.

By the time you are a senior in high school you sleep through the teacher's efforts at the chalk board. This is totally acceptable behavior because when you are a senior you can do anything you darn well please because, after all, you are the big kid on the block.

It is important to note, however, that as a senior it is the last time in life you will be able to anything you darn well please. Hopefully, seniors realize this and take full advantage of the situation.

Then there were the signs on the hallway walls. Sports signs. "Let's go to state" signs. Usually they are painted in the school colors. It is nice to know that high school athletes are still studs on campus. This is as it should be. The day that a good science student replaces the star quarterback as the school's hero, especially in West Texas, is when we will all know the world is nearing an end.

Finally, there were the students themselves. Again, some things never change — and shouldn't. High school students should be casually dressed. They should roam the halls in small groups. They should whisper and giggle to one another. They should flirt with their classmates.

The grown-up world is tough and these students are going to get there soon enough. So, for the time being, at least, they should enjoy the freedom that goes with being a student.

Lord knows I'd go back if I could.

Ethics essential, TPW gathering told

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A careless approach to ethics in news reporting endangers a basic national freedom: freedom of the press.

"And if we are not responsible journalists, we injure that freedom," said Marj Carpenter, a prize-winning former West Texas journalist who is the national news director for the Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Carpenter, who admitted she violated journalistic principles in the fervor of news competition in Pecos in the heyday of Billie Sol Estes, is a circuit speaker on ethics for the National Federation of Press Women (NFPW).

"I'm the last living reporter that will admit they have been unethical," a smiling Mrs. Carpenter said.

During the news fights in Pecos around the Billie Sol Estes story in the early '60s, the two competing Pecos Independent and Pecos Enterprise, "were as unethical as any two newspapers that every came down the pike," Mrs. Carpenter said Saturday night at the Texas Press Women's convention.

"We did everything we could think of," she confessed. "We pulled each other's slides, exposed each other's film, lied to each other."

For her role in covering the West Texas scandal, Mrs. Carpenter was nominated for the Pulitzer Prize in 1962.

There is a responsibility, embedded in ethics, that comes with reporting.

Mrs. Carpenter used an analogy from her childhood to focus on the gravity of responsibility in investigative reporting. Her brother and she got into a after-school fight in an alley, and she ended upside down in a garbage can.

"And I came out, throwing garbage all over the alley," Mrs. Carpenter recalled. The principal came along "stopped the fight, and made us put the garbage back." But, "You couldn't put it all back."

And the warning she gives journalists is this: "Once you start a garbage fight, you can't always get it back in a can."

"We start investigating something," Mrs. Carpenter said, "and then if it proves to be wrong, we can't get it all back in the can."

Mrs. Carpenter mentioned other problems involving ethics: Many were "horrified" that a Washington Post reporter won a Pulitzer Prize for fictitious story. The prize later was withdrawn.

"We have all kinds of things to look at about what is ethically fair in journalism," Mrs. Carpenter said.

"We talk so about freedom of the press, and we don't realize what a great thing we have."

In 12 years with the church, Mrs. Carpenter has toured scores of countries.

"I've been in all of these other countries that don't have freedom of the press. People can be killed and beaten — and all kinds of things. And nobody will ever know about it. Nobody can report it," she said. "We don't know what a valuable thing we have."

She reflected on her world travels from the Americas to Russia in and recalled her years of reporting community happenings in West Texas.

Mrs. Carpenter who worked for newspapers in Pecos, Big Spring and Andrews, and covered news and feature stores in such places as Notrees, Coahoma, Tarzan "and all kinds of exciting places. But I had a lot of fun then, and I'm having a lot of fun now."

UIL: Midland High hosts regional 4-5A competition

(From 1B)

"(It was) extremely grueling," Murphy said of the Number Sense competition. "You have ten minutes to complete as many math problems as you can. The trick is, you can't write anything down except the answer — you have to do everything in your head."

LHS junior Susan Alexander, 16, who along with her partner Nicole Craft took second in team debate, said UIL competitors must sacrifice to succeed.

"I haven't been home all week — we have to give up prom," she said. "There's been tons of research."

MHS Principal Jimmie Kelly, director of the competition, said top performers will advance to regional competition in Lubbock April 20 and 21.

"I think academic meets are extremely important," Kelly said. "I think that because the academic portion does not have spectators as a part of it, it doesn't get the notoriety as would track and field and tennis and golf."

Kelly said the competition, which rotates among District 4 high schools, went smoothly this year.

"We were extremely pleased with all the assistance we received from the community as judges and from the PTA," Kelly said.

About 47 MHS students and 58 LHS students took part in the meet, held Friday and Saturday.

CANCER: Booth educating Midlanders on food choices

(From 1B)

On the money side, ACS crusade volunteers in Midland will be "working" their own neighborhoods in the door-to-door campaign today through Thursday to raise $25,000 toward ACS's programs on cancer research, education and patient services.

While volunteers are requesting donations, they will be handing out information on nutrition's role toward better health and in reducing a person's probability of falling ill to cancer.

The ACS's 1990 thrust is the Great American Food Fight Against Cancer.

This weekend at Midland Park Mall, ACS volunteers including Jody Hicks are passing out literature on nutrition and giving cancer "risk analyses" based on people's lifestyles away from and at the dinner table.

"Certain types of fruits and vegetables that are high in fiber do, studies show, help prevent cancer related to the digestive tract — stomach and colon," Ms. Atwell said. However, she noted, "Sometimes the things that are good for you aren't necessarily your favorite foods."

And a "lot of people (who) aren't educated" to good nutrition may benefit from the crusade's handouts on the pros and cons of eating certain foods and avoiding others in reducing risks of contracting cancer.

"I would assume that the majority of American families have been touched by cancer," Ms. Atwell said. "No one is exempt."

The ACS's Great American Food Fight Against Cancer is similar in spirit to the ACS's Great American Smokeout.

And Ms. Atwell, who is an anti-tobacco advocate, said that studies prove that "If you smoke, you have an enormous chance of getting lung cancer." And "other health-related problems" are associated with tobacco use.

"Lung cancer in women has surpassed breast cancer," Ms. Atwell said. "The number of young women who smoke has drastically increased through the years."

Mary Tarver, the ACS Midland Unit's publicity chairman, noted that "diet is an important part in preventing cancer. We want everyone to realize they can do something to fight cancer."

That something, for example, would include the ingesting of more fruits, vegetables and grains and less foods high in fat.

The ACS eat-right battlegrounds include homes, restaurants, hospitals, supermarkets, worksite, schools, and military installations.

The ACS is promoting the eating of foods rich in Vitamin A and C, low in fat, and high in fiber, as well as cruciferous — cabbage-family — vegetables.

State Bar recognizes six local attorneys

Staff Report

The College of the State Bar of Texas recognized six local attorneys as certified members of the College in ceremonies held in Austin during their annual banquet.

The new members are Glen D. Aaron II, Jack Richard Chappell, J. Robert Goldsmith, John Brian Martin, John Daniel Roosa, and Robert Ellington White.

The College was created by the Supreme Court of Texas as a means of recognizing members of the State Bar who voluntarily further their legal education.

SESSION: Issue returning

adopted a third amendment to institute a four-fifth vote requirement for approval of any new education mandate that comes to the floor.

Ultimately, none of the amendments changed the thrust of current law since the House rejected the bill itself on a 101-45 tally.

Still, the message was delivered.

With another school finance measure under negotation in a new session, Stiles says that "the hula hoops that someone is trying to make our educators jump through ... are coming off the bill."

One member of the House Public Education Committee, Rep. Alan Schoolcraft, R-Universal City, said he expects all three amendments to appear on any new version of the bill that comes to the House floor.

House Speaker Gib Lewis has said he wants the education committee to buckle down and endorse a bill, move it through the House and have it ready for a conference with the Senate within 10 days.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and chairman of the Senate Education Committee, said that chamber is likely to quickly approve virtually the same $1.2 billion plan it endorsed this past session.

Co-sponsors of that legislation, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, have said it should remain intact despite misgivings over mandates on the House side.

Parker said that once the two measures reach a conference committee made up of members of both chambers, Senate leaders plan to be flexible.

However, Parker, who has chaired the powerful Senate committee since 1983, was not ready to back off the mandates which he had helped put in place.

He said some state requirements are intended to help save school districts from themselves, while some supposed "mandates" are not as burdensome as superintendents would have the general public believe.

Two local writers carry off press honors

LLama wrestling just part of Midland's trash effort

Staff Report

Several Keep Midland Beuatiful volunteers had their hands full Saturday as they tried their luck at llama wrangling during the city's Glad Trash-A-Thon.

More than 800 participated in the clean up around Midland, focused on the railroad right-of-way, according to KMB director Sharla Hotchkiss.

Eight Texas llamas — including Sam Houston, his son Davy Crockett and, of course, Tony Llama — helped haul collected garbage along the tracks.

The day "worked out beautifully," as groups from businesses, civic organizations and youth groups turned out to pick up trash and recyclables.

Around the state, crops of bright orange garbage bags blossomed amidst the wildflower pastels framing Texas highways reminded spring motorists to put their garbage where it belongs — not "throw it in the road."

The 90,000 stuffed bags are the harvest of Saturday's "Great Texas Trash-Off," in which 20,000 or more Texans gathered an estimated 1.5 million gallons of trash along the state's highways.

"If you see those bright orange bags all across the state, it means people have been out working," said Tommie Pinkard, director of information services for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation. "The volunteers have been out and have been doing their job, so don't mess it up again."

The trash-off is the yearly climax of the Adopt-a-Highway program, in which nearly 3,400 groups statewide are each responsible for a two-mile stretch of highway.

When they adopt a piece of highway, groups agree to pick up the trash on it four times each year. In addition, "We ask them, as many as possible, to clean up on one special day a year, and that's the Great Texas Trash-Off," Ms. Pinkard said.

She said more than 1,200 groups from every corner of the state, with an average of 15 or 20 volunteers each, registered to participate in Saturday's cleanup.

The volunteer groups are composed of a variety of people, from corporate workers to high school students, Ms. Pinkard said.

"They're just all kinds of organizations. They're everything from retirees, future homemakers' organizations, motorcycle clubs, Elvis Presley fan clubs," she said. "It's really great, because it's something that everyone can do."

The Adopt-a-Highway program was pioneered in Texas with a 1985 pilot program in Tyler. In March 1987, the program was introduced statewide as an imaginative solution to the litter problem, Ms. Pinkard said.

So far, 32 states have followed Texas' blueprint.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

City engineers study traffic volume

By Lyn Miller

you ever wonder which location in the city of Midland has the highest volume of traffic? According to the Midland Traffic Accident Report for 1989, it is Andrews Highway north of Louisiana Avenue. During a 24 hour period traffic count, 25,376 vehicles passed that area, making it the busiest in the city.

Throughout the year, the Traffic Engineering Division of the Department of Engineering and Transportation for the City of Midland conducts traffic surveys and compiles data which is presented each year in the traffic accident report.

The total number of traffic accidents in the city decreased from 2,662 in 1988 to 2,456 in 1989. A breakdown of the type of accidents indicates that in 1988, there were a total of 1,805 non-injury accidents compared to 1,735 non-injury accidents in 1989. The number of accidents with injuries in 1989 were 718 and four fatalities. Out of more than 1,000 intersections in Midland, seven or more accidents occurred at 21 of those intersections, during 1989, with the number of accidents ranging from 7 to 13. Four of the 21 intersections have no traffic signals. The highest number of accidents occurred at the intersection of Loop 250 and Midkiff Road, and, also, at Midkiff Road and Wall Avenue.

However, the ratio of accidents versus traffic volume at the intersection of Michigan and Mogford rates it as having the most accident problems. Eight accidents occurred at that intersection in 1989.

The month of March 1989 ranked highest in the number of traffic accidents with 247.

Other information contained in the Accident Report includes the number of pedestrian accidents, bicycle accidents and traffic counts at various intersections.

Traffic count data is useful to both the city and to residents and business owners. Business owners utilize the report to determine the amount of traffic flow in a particular location.

Mechanical traffic counters, placed at approximately one mile intervals, gather information for a 24-hour period for a particular area. In an effort to obtain an accurate traffic tally for a certain area, counters are utilized on weekdays in nice weather when school is in session.

The counters are not used on holidays and during the summer, due to the fact that an accurate count could not be obtained under those conditions.

More than 400 traffic counts were performed throughout the city during 1989.

Mechanical traffic counters were first used in Midland in early 1953, but because of vandalism, an accurate traffic count could not be obtained during the four-week period during which they were used. As a result, visual counts had to be substituted in analyzing the traffic flow.

Statistics compiled during the year reflect the amount of traffic flow on all major streets in the city with an example listed below:

- Andrews Highway north of Louisiana, 25,376;
- Andrews Highway north of Illinois, 24,350;
- Andrews Highway east of Midkiff, 23,657;
- Andrews Highway east of Midland, 22,008;
- Big Spring Street south of Golf Course, 18,482;
- Big Spring Street south of Wadley, 16,446;
- Garfield Street north of Wadley, 16,924;
- Garfield Street south of Industrial, 13,092;
- Midkiff Street south of Wadley, 20,515;
- Midkiff Street north of Illinois, 19,859;
- Illinois Street west of Main, 5,327.

Special traffic counts are conducted on request, usually from residents of the city, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a stop sign or traffic signal is warranted at a particular intersection.

Traffic count maps may be purchased for $2 each from the Department of Engineering and Transportation, Room 510, City Hall, 300 N. Loraine. Approximately 20 to 30 of these maps are sold each year.

Additional information regarding traffic may be obtained by calling Gary Saunders, Traffic Engineering Coordinator for the city, at 685-7280.

Lyn Miller, an employee at City Hall, coordinates the information for this column.

Legislators head back to schools!

Legislators will be back at work in Austin Monday, attempting to pound out a school finance bill that they were unable to do just last week. House Speaker Gib Lewis says he's confident that the House committee chairmen can negotiate a compromise, have it passed and in a conference committee with the Senate within 10 days.

That would certainly raise eyebrows since the special session just ended was bogged down on controversial issues, and nothing that we're aware of has really changed since then.

It's still an election year, which means the politicians have their personal agendas to carry through, and the Supreme Court has still mandated that the Legislature rework the school financing system by May 1 or else. In this instance "or else" translates into the courts taking over the schools. No one really wants to see that happen.

Gov. Bill Clements has vowed that he will veto any bill that requires new taxes. Legislators would be wise to believe him. Yet some school officials say that if the mandates which the state has placed on schools remain in place, a tax bill somewhere down the line is a certainty.

While most Texans probably are tax-conscious enough to resist higher taxes unless they're absolutely necessary, we know very few who would deny the schools more money if that could be translated into better-educated youngsters.

The Legislature recently talked about bills that would have required the expenditure of up to $1.2 billion. Yet the governor's idea is to hold additional education spending to $300 million next year.

Clements' plan appears to be the best starting point for the Legislature. The governor obviously intends to have legislators consider the impact of their votes in Austin. School officials will agree that while some of the mandates they have been placed under have helped the educational process, others are strictly ridiculous.

A few generalities that should be kept in mind in regard to the public schools are these:

- Local control of the school districts is imperative. Without that control, taxpayers will not likely support the schools.
- It's ludicrous for the Legislature to think it can mandate anything of the schools without having the courage to pass a financing bill, and then taking the "heat" from taxpayers. That's partly the blame for the bind the schools are in today.
- Legislation giving local districts that already meet state guidelines the ability to "tailor" future mandates to their own particular needs would be worth considering.

Reforming the school finance system is important, and legislators do have an important job to do. But destroying the school system is not the best way to resolve the dilemma.

Establishing a financing system that gives school students throughout the state equal educational opportunities at the most reasonable cost to taxpayers is the goal.

Taxpayers may pay for Alaskan pride

WASHINGTON — Alaskan officials foolishly stood in the way of a plea bargain with Exxon Corp. over the Valdez oil spill and now the American taxpayers will bear the cost of one state's arrogance.

Anderson

Those same state officials who scotched the deal have been publicly praised for refusing to settle for less than Exxon's full weight of financial responsibility. In reality, they may have turned up their noses at $550 million, and after a protracted legal battle will get little or nothing.

Federal officials have confided to us that the acrimony between the Justice Department and Alaskan officials on the Exxon plea bargain is palpable. These are the same officials who must work together to bring Exxon to heel for its role in the catastrophic damage to Prince William Sound.

In one case, the fight has become personal. Richard Stewart, the assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's lands division, is the federal point man on the Exxon case. Doug Baily, the Alaska attorney general, is the state's point man. They used to be friends. Now they are barely speaking to each other.

Since the spill more than a year ago, the Justice Department, Alaska and Exxon have been in constant negotiations over hundreds of issues.

Exxon faces criminal and civil charges for the spill. When the Justice Department attempted a plea bargain to wrap up the criminal charges in a tidy package, it was Alaska that stood in the way. On Feb. 22, Alaska said it would not accept the terms of the deal. Now, the Justice Department has been forced to go ahead with criminal indictments against Exxon and faces years of trial and appeal.

The terms of the failed plea bargain included an admission of guilt from Exxon to serious criminal charges and a $550 million fund set up by the company to assess the damage and begin restoration. The expensive damage assessment would be the basis of future claims against Exxon for the restoration. In return for the guilty plea and the fund, Exxon would have enjoyed a four-year moratorium during which the federal government would not have filed any civil lawsuits against the company relating to the spill. Alaska could have filed all the suits that it wanted.

But that wasn't good enough for Alaska. Baily complained to us that he felt left out of Stewart's negotiations, didn't like being pressed by a deadline and didn't want Exxon to have the four-year grace period. His arguments played well with environmentalists, whose gut reaction was that Exxon was being let off too easily. In this case, half a loaf would have been better than none.

When examined with the benefit of inside information from a source close to the negotiations, Baily's arguments don't stand up.

He publicly thrashed the Justice Department for giving him a deadline to make up his mind. But privately Baily knew that the feds had no choice. The grand jury was already meeting to consider criminal charges, and by mid-February the federal prosecutor was running out of ways to stall the jury.

Baily also implied that the feds and Exxon were in collusion and left him in the dark. "We were never party with what they were telling Exxon," Baily told us.

Yet, that is standard procedure for a plea bargain. The victim, in this case Alaska, is rarely allowed to call the shots on the charges against the perpetrator.

Surprisingly, Baily's biggest objection to the deal was the four-year moratorium on federal civil lawsuits. Even though Alaska could file all the suits it wanted, Baily needs federal help with those suits, and was afraid he wouldn't get it because of the deal. He believed Alaska couldn't wait four years.

Alaska will learn the meaning of the word "wait" now that the case is going to trial. On Feb. 27, the grand jury indicted Exxon on two felony and three misdemeanor charges. The case could easily take five years or more to prosecute, and federal officials are not confident of a win. The recent acquittal of the Exxon Valdez captain on the most serious charges against him has further diminished the federal case against the company.

It is true that now the federal and state civil suits against Exxon can go ahead unfettered by the four-year grace period. But one federal official involved in the failed plea bargain told us that it will take at least four years anyway to assess how much damage was done, and no civil suits can be solved without that information. Now, with no fund from Exxon, the taxpayers must pay the up front costs of that assessment.

Kentucky lawmakers fortunate not to have Clements to deal with AUSTIN — Kentucky lawmakers in some ways have it luckier than those in Texas, it seems. They don't have Gov. Bill Clements to contend with.

Brown

The Bluegrass State Legislature just completed a major overhaul of its public education system after an order somewhat similar to one the Texas Supreme Court handed down.

The major difference between the two is that the Kentucky Supreme Court disallowed that state's entire education system, but the Texas court's opinion pertained only to the way we finance our public schools.

Other aspects of the Texas system got off scot-free, although you wouldn't know that to hear our governor talk.

Clements and other Republicans have consistently mis-read the Texas court's call for greater "efficiency" in the finance system to mean a need for greater efficiency in the system as a whole, thus confusing the issue.

Clements gets more demerits for assuring further confusion by failing to call lawmakers into session on the issue until the beginning of March, after the Supreme Court set a May 1 deadline.

Add the two infractions together and you have a good case against Clements for playing politics with the lives and well being of thousands of schoolchildren.

Once convicted, the governor should be denied parole for his final bit of partisan meddling — ad nauseum assertions that Texans don't want new taxes to pay for a better education system.

Most recent polls, those only about a month old, show nearly six in 10 residents favor an income tax to solve the education problem, so long as property taxes are reduced.

The central irony in all this is that many of the governor's thoughts on the subject have some merit. It is his spirit of partisanship on such an important issue that grates, not his gumption for saying that some things need changing.

A case in point is his reaction to the failure of the Texas House to approve any school finance bill at all during this past special session.

A bill endorsed by the House Public Education Committee was impaled on a three-pronged attack from House Republicans, who thought it spent too much, House minority Democrats, who thought it spent too little, and other House Democrats, who were against imposing new, unfunded mandates on local districts.

Clements later commended those House members who had worked for "true deregulation" and supported "a level of spending that the taxpayers of Texas can afford."

Do you think he meant House Republicans? It probably goes without saying that that faction has its own program of reform. It includes "deregulation" of government mandates, increasing "local control" — whatever that means — and making educators more "accountable" for student performance.

If these three tenets sound at cross-purposes, you have hit on the primary criticism, and primary deviousness, of the Republican plan.

By increasing accountability, aren't we increasing paperwork so we can check up on educators? And isn't that more regulation, not "de-regulation?"

Where did 'German question' come from?

The German question — in German, die deutsche Frage — is again in the world news. The question itself is widely understood to be "What is to be done about Germany?"

Safire

The underlying question, however, of far greater historical linguistic import, is: Who coined the phrase? Did it enter the geopolitical arena in the 1930s with the rise of Hitler?

"Etymological immortality awaits" the discoverer of the first person to pose the German Question, I wrote here recently. With this incentive, two Lexicographic Irregulars came through.

"It was much earlier than the 1930s," writes Gary D. Stark, associate professor of history at the University of Texas at Arlington, "and probably as early as the Congress of Vienna." He provides a once-removed source: on the page preceding the title page of Wilhelm Ropke's 1946 "The Solution of the German Problem" is this quotation: "The German Question is the most somber, the most complicated, the most comprehensive problem of all recent history." The person quoted was Constantin Frantz, the date 1866, but no specific source was given.

For that we turn to Jens P. Drews of Harrisburg, Pa., who sends along a paper in German written in 1987 by Michael Dreyer that cites Constantin Frantz's article "Theorie der deutschen Frage," which appeared in the journal Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift in 1866.

Frantz, explains Drews, was "an ardent opponent of Bismarck's klein-deutsch answer to the German Question."

Rather than seeing a little Germany, Frantz envisioned a Central European confederation, with Germany at its core, stretching from Finland to the Black Sea. "However, Frantz was not only a philosopher and political thinker," adds Drews, "but also a noted polemicist whose rabid anti-Semitism was an integral part of his journalistic as well as of his academic work."

In 1944, Kurt Waldheim wrote a dissertation on Frantz's work without mentioning the anti-Semitic arguments.

"Given Waldheim's selective historical memory," writes my informant, "I would not at all be surprised if the Austrian president were to introduce parts of Frantz s thinking as his contribution to the ongoing debate over the future of Europe."

Now we're getting into polemics, not my intent in this space, but illustrative of the sort of dander raised whenever the German Question is mentioned.

The phrase has been used in a more specific sense: the 11th (and to encyclopedia buffs, the best) edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica, published in 1910-11, has an entry on the Schleswig-Holstein Question. (Did Denmark or Prussia control these duchies on the North and Baltic Seas, and would Britain permit Germany to become a sea power?).

"In German," writes Louise E. Hoffman, a history professor at Pennsylvania State University at Harrisburg, "the word Frage is used much as English-speakers would use issue."

Unless earlier citations come in, that's the etymology of the German Question, meaning to some "the German issue," and to others "the German problem."

It is for this generation to come up with the German answer; language can only take you so far.

In that regard, this urgent message just in from Christopher Smart at the hard-line Hudson Institute: "Please settle this one before it's too late: Two Germanys? Two Germanies? I support the former, but we need a grammatical ruling before there is only one."

We're talking about uniting the two Germanys. Although the plural of nouns ending in y after a consonant is ies, the plural of proper names overrides that rule to preserve the name itself: Mr. and Mrs. Murphy and their two daughters are the Murphys; if both girls are confusingly named Mary, they're the Marys.

Bush afraid to risk political consequences

WASHINGTON — Perhaps Rep. Harold Rogers, the Kentucky Republican, was just joking in the robust, exaggerating tradition of America's middle border. Let us assume so, for his sake. Otherwise he becomes one more reason to doubt Republicans' seriousness. What he said was:

Will

"Every statesman in the world over the last four decades, from Churchill to Reagan, has attempted — with millions of troops and trillions of dollars — to free up Eastern Europe ... and to no avail, until the first year of the Baker administration at State."

That scrumptious specimen of the post hoc ergo propter hoc fallacy (the rooster crows and the sun rises, therefore the crowing caused the sunrise) was contained in a Los Angeles Times report on how bullish Washington is about Secretary of State James Baker. The report contained another illuminating passage.

The scene was a breakfast table around which sat Baker and some congressmen, two of whom, both Democrats, asked: If the Cold War is over, why does the budget not reflect that fact, particularly regarding increased aid for the new democracies in Eastern Europe, and poor Third World countries?

According to the Times, "Baker's hazel eyes narrowed. His honeyed voice went cold." And his dehoneyed voice said: "You want to go out and argue for higher taxes to pay for foreign aid? Try that argument out in your district, congressman."

Such swaggering "realism" sends shivers of admiration through some Washingtonians. But the important issue is not whether the congressman can afford, politically, to take that position regarding foreign aid, or whether the country can afford, economically, the aid. Rather, the crucial question is whether the country can afford to have a government that thinks so much the way Baker does.

Baker reflects the president, and policy-by-polls reflects thinness of beliefs. So does the hitching of U.S. foreign policy to foreign personalities, as in U.S. dithering about Lithuania, an unseemly policy of solicitousness for Gorbachev, whose survival is the president's only clear foreign-policy aim. More "realism."

Recently Washington went into one of its periodic seizures of loopiness, and this time the great question of the hour concerned the presidential epidermis: Who gets under George Bush's skin. No one does, said Himself, through clenched teeth, when asked specifically about Rep. Richard Gephardt, the House majority leader. But Gephardt clearly did, by saying things like:

"Harry Truman lived by Sam Houston's maxim: 'Do right, risk consequences.' The maxim of the Bush administration seems to be, 'Do polls, risk nothing.'" Truman, Gephardt notes, launched Point Four and the Marshall Plan (the seed of containment, which preceded Baker's thrilling dissolution of communism) when a Gallup Poll showed only 14 percent support for foreign aid.

Americans had long deferred purchases of houses, cars, even clothes, and had shed blood on the soil of nations then seeking aid. And Truman was then more unpopular than Nixon was to be during Watergate. But he would not be a president who "thinks he is too big to do the necessary persuading," so he deserved to be reelected, and was.

Today's popularity-hoarding president may yet learn that such political parsimony is false economy.

Readers' views on: Clayton Williams' rape remark

Williams is the one who's been violated

I am writing in regards to the recent statement Clayton Williams made using the word rape, as a way of referring to the weather.

I am appalled at the way the media and the other gubernatorial candidates are attacking his statement. I feel that in no way was he referring to the physical attack of violence on a woman, or making light of any such situation.

Having been raised a rancher's daughter, I can certainly relate to the cow hand, campfire setting and the talk among the men. The term rape has been used before in reference to the land, sometimes regarding drought, fire, insect invasion, and of course, the weather. One of the definitions of rape is to violate, and believe me, any one of these conditions, whether it be fire, insect invasion, or the weather, can and does violate the land, and your work.

You learn to work the stock due to timing and need (for those of you who have sat in an office all of your lives and know nothing about the ranching industry) no matter what the weather! You take it as it comes, and that is all Clayton Willims said, or meant.

I have had the privilege of knowing some of the finest ranch men in Texas, some of whom are Bill Moody III, of the Moody Foundation, Coke R. Stevenson, and my father, whose name you wouldn't recognize, and these men are the "salt of the earth" and some of the finest gentlemen there are. I sincerely believe Clayton Williams is one of these men, and in no way do I feel anyone should be offended by his statement. I feel what he said has been taken totally out of context and twisted to suit some feelings people want to have.

I believe Clayton Williams took us, the public, to view a side of his life which is very wholesome and honest, and I think he is the one being violated for a statement he made, that meant nothing!

Williams just repeated old, outdated saying

I am sadly appalled at the national flap occasioned by the use of an old saw by a local political candidate. The phrase, attributed to a female some 60-odd years ago, may be a poor way of suggesting that one make the best of a bad situation, but it has been so used by so many people in many places over the ensuing years.

That so many presumably educated and intelligent people of some measure of prominence leap to a precise literal interpretation of an old chestnut speaks more to their own blindness of purpose in utilizing a perhaps clumsy gaffe as a method of promoting their own personal ends.

The reporter obviously wanted a story — any kind of story — so as to attract the reader's eye, increase sales of the paper, and gain some edge for a raise down the line. Those leaders of various organizations saw only the opportunity to get some free publicity for themselves and their groups, whatever their purposes or programs.

That much is made of the political consequences is indicative of the trivialization of a serious activity by those who believe that their goals are legitimately obtained through any means.

There is an older saying, perhaps not known by those who were quick to rush for stones and perhaps not readily comprehended in their narrow perception of the world, which perhaps might bear some study by them and others.

It reads, "Honi soit qui mal y pense."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Translation: "Evil be to him who evil thinks."

Vicious attacks are utterly ridiculous

That joke is as old as the hills, and has been told many times to many people in many places for the last fifty or sixty years, and it was never meant to condone the rape of a woman. Take a moment to consult Webster's Dictionary, and read his definitions of rape, and you will discover several definitions of the word, and only one of them refers to the rape of a woman. Here are a few examples of other definitions: The Congress of the United States rapes the American public time and time again, some of the Railroad "Big Wigs" have raped the American public, some of our savings and loans have raped the American public, to name a few, and not one of these have in any way, shape, form or fashion referred to the sacredness of a woman.

This outcry adds up to Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing."

Harassment of this nature is a prime example of political nitpicking.

I sincerely hope Texas voters are broad-minded enough to not vote anyone into the governor's seat who does not have a good sense of humor.

Comment shows lack of judgment

Clayton Williams Jr. has shown us what a foolish man he is with his recent remark regarding rape. Although his flippant comment may have been unintentionally callous, it certainly is evidence of poor judgment and lack of discretion, especially when in the limelight.

Is this truly the kind of man we want as governor? This comment may have been appreciated down at the bar with a few good old boys, but these types make up only a very small percentage of Texas' voting population.

Would Williams have said, "Rain is like an airplane crash. When it becomes inevitable, you might as well sit back and enjoy it"? Probably not. So let's see the same consideration for the women and men and their loved ones who are victims of the tragedy of rape.

Wake up, Williams. The eyes of Texas are upon you.

Remark insensitive but not malicious

I am a Democrat who will vote for Ann Richards in the runoff and hopefully in November.

The purpose of this letter is to dispute the importance of Clayton Williams' "rain is like rape" remark. Yes it was insensitive; what humor isn't? I cannot believe he intended to be malicious. This is a man who was relaxed, visiting with "friends"?

When will the Texas press corps cease seeking "National Enquirer" headlines and starts dealing with the issues.

Perhaps Claytie should have said, "Dealing with the press is closely akin to rape. It's impossible to relax and enjoy it!"

Dean Johnson

Nasty minded ones need to watch out

Isaiah (29:20,21) condemns to oblivion "the terrible one," "the scorner," and "all that watch for iniquity ..." they "that make an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate and turn aside the just for a thing of nought."

Perhaps some reporter and editors will take note in handling the nasty mindedness about an old, old, wisecrack repeated by Clayton Williams in a moment of good will.

Rev. T. Robert Ingram

Remark won't keep Williams from office

I believe it's inevitable that Clayton "Bubba" Williams is going to be the next governor of Texas. So, I for one, am going to relax and enjoy it.

J.J. Hammock

Liberals had better 'relax and enjoy it'

Now that Clayton Williams' election appears inevitable, I think all the liberals should just lie down and try to enjoy it.

A recent letter from Jack Hickman headlined "Students deserved 'F' " commented on the appalling behavior of freshman students at the recent Texas Opera Theater production of "Romeo and Juliet." We totally concur with Hickman's concerns about some students' lack of respect for authority or for their fellow man.

We have accompanied the sixth-grade students from Milam to the opera matinee performance, for all sixth-grade students in the city, for the last four years. The sixth graders have exhibited good audience etiquette, and the experience has been very positive. There were no jeers or lewd comments, much less the need to stop the performance.

The purpose of this letter is to affirm positive student behavior as exhibited on a consistent basis. Isn't it a shame that, once again, the "good" kids have been put in a class with the behavior problems?

Our sincere thanks goes out to those countless parents who spend much time, love and effort to give their children a solid foundation in mannerly conduct. We notice the courteous students individually every day!

Russian tanks ready to roll once more

Joseph Vissarionovich, alias Joseph Stalin, was the most evil man in history, surpassing Genghis Khan and Adolph Hitler.

Stalin and Hitler cooked up a pact whereby Stalin took the Baltic States by force, murdered millions of their peoples, incorporated the states into the U.S.S.R., and populated them with Russians. Now these people want their country back. There is a parallel in history.

In 724 B.C. when the last king of Israel, Hoshea, had the impudence to declare independence, the Assyrian King Shalmaneser V moved quickly to subdue the Israelies. Finally, in 721 B.C., Shalmaneser's successor, Sargon II, overran Israel, sacked the capital, Samaria, carted off 27,290 to Assyria and repopulated it with non-Israelies.

Now the Lithuanians have the audacity to want independence. There are Russian (Samarians?) living there, put there by Stalin and Mikhail Gorbachev thinks the Lithuanians are being naughty. Unless Lithuania, and the other Baltic states, give up this foolish notion (Russian concept) the tanks will roll again.

The Party's Over:

Readers Respond

In response to "The Party's Over," the five-part series which ran March 14-18, readers are invited to express their opinions about tobacco and alcohol use for the debut of the Reporter-Telegram's new reader-participation feature, "Sound-Off."

Letters received by Tuesday will be considered for Sound-Off. They should be addressed to Anntoinette Moore, Associate City Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, PO Box 1650, Midland TX 79702.

The special community forum will be published Sunday, April 8.

No. 1 drug problem is rarely discussed

A great deal has been said lately about America's "War on Drugs" but the discussion seldom includes our No. 1 drug problem which, as hard as it may be for many of us to admit, is alcohol. While no one can deny the catastrophic consequences of illegal drug use, we should not turn our eyes away from the toll exacted by a substance that is both legal and heavily marketed.

And what better time than April, Alcohol Awareness Month, to examine the impact alcohol consumption has on this country. The Seventh Special Report to the U.S. Congress on Alcohol and Health, released in February, contained this startling information:

■ Although U.S. per capita consumption of alcohol is at its lowest level since 1970, alcohol is used by more Americans than any other drug, including tobacco. Even with the decline, this represents 29.8 gallons (approximately 318 12-oz. cans) of beer; 3.0 gallons (77 5-oz. glasses) of wine; and 2.1 gallons (179 1.5-oz. drinks of spirits) for each person age 14 and over.

■ An estimated 10.5 million U.S. adults exhibit some symptoms of alcoholism; an additional 7.2 million abuse alcohol, but do not show symptoms of dependence.

■ Despite a downward trend in alcohol use by high school seniors — for whom alcohol, like marijuana and cocaine, is an illegal drug — during the past decade, they still use alcohol at disturbingly high rates: in 1988, 92 percent had tried alcohol, nearly two-thirds were current drinkers, and more than one-third were occasional heavy drinkers.

■ Nearly half of all deaths from motor vehicle crashes are related to alcohol. It has been estimated that the risk of a fatal crash per mile driven is at least eight times higher for a drunken driver than for a sober one.

■ Fetal exposure to alcohol is one of the leading known causes of mental retardation in the Western world; treatment costs associated with such exposure total nearly one-third of a billion dollars annually.

The next time your readers drink to somebody's health, I hope that they will remember a few of these facts. Only when Americans begin to re-evaluate their attitudes about alcohol and put this legal drug into proper perspective can we expect to make any progress in treating the epidemic of addiction now destroying the very fabric of our society.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 1, the 91st day of 1990. There are 274 days left in the year. This is April Fool's Day. A reminder: Daylight-Saving Time is in effect in most parts of the country. Clocks should have been set forward one hour.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 1, 1789, the U.S. House of Representatives held its first full meeting, in New York City. Frederick Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania was elected the first House Speaker.

On this date:

In 1853, Cincinnati, Ohio, became the first U.S. city to pay its firefighters a regular salary.

In 1873, composer Sergei Rachmaninoff was born in Novgorod Province, Russia.

In 1918, the Royal Air Force was established in Britain.

In 1933, Nazi Germany began its persecution of Jews with a boycott of Jewish-owned businesses.

In 1939, the United States recognized the Franco government in Spain following the end of the Spanish civil war.

Bush shows skill in handling of Soviet-Lithuanian situation

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Bush has once again shown his skillful statesmanship by prudently handling the David and Goliath conflict between Lithuania and the Soviet Union.

Hearst

Calmly refusing to be stampeded by emotional and politically motivated demands to grant immediate recognition of Lithuania's self-proclaimed independence, the president has sought to preserve the prospects for arms reduction agreements and hasten creation of a democratically free enterprise new order in Europe, including the Soviet Union.

That he was unwilling to sacrifice the best interests of the United States and the free world to support instant independence for Lithuania caused the president to be assailed from many short-sighted quarters, including Congress, for not applying more aggressive pressure on Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, particularly after Moscow sent military reinforcements into Lithuania. Gorbachev's purpose was to stop the Lithuanians from taking control of government installations and to discourage further desertions of Lithuanian soldiers from the Soviet-controlled Lithuanian army.

Although accused by Lithuanian's freely elected President Vytautus Landsbergis of having "sold us out," President Bush has continued to urge that the independence problem be settled by negotiation. His wisdom is beginning to bear fruit.

Former congressional critics who demanded stronger pressure on Gorbachev to recognize Lithuanian independence are now supporting the president's cautious policy of not backing the Soviet leader into a corner where he would feel forced to smash the Lithuanian independence movement regardless of the consequences.

Western European leaders, including British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, are also swinging behind President Bush's position that the situation "calls for restraint on both sides." Neither Thatcher nor French President Francois Mitterrand has supported President Landsbergis' demand for Soviet recognition of Lithuania's independence before settlement talks with Moscow can start.

Now the Lithuanian leader is adopting a more conciliatory attitude. Thursday he said there are no questions that cannot be discussed except the question of Lithuanian independence. However, he has not backed away from his insistence that Lithuania will talk only as a "sovereign independent nation."

Gorbachev is not prepared to deal with Lithuania as an independent nation until the claims of both sides have been settled. Moscow wants a security guarantee that an independent Lithuania will not be used as a base for some future security threat to the Soviet Union. Each side will have "reparations " and economic claims against the other. Moscow wants a five-year waiting period for secession by any Soviet republic so there will be time to settle the issues. Once Gorbachev formally recognizes the independence of the Lithuanian government, he will lose his bargaining cards and be negotiating from a position of weakness.

I believe there is a way in which a breakthrough in the dangerous stalemate could be achieved. The situation reminds me of the time in the late 1970s when the Egyptian and Israeli leaders would not talk to each other. They were finally persuaded by President Carter to accept third party mediation by the U.S. government.

When substantial progress had been achieved, Carter invited both leaders to Washington. He assumed the role of chief mediator, finally pushing them into a compromise agreement at Camp David in September 1978. But problems remained, and then Secretary of State Cyrus Vance shuttled back and forth between Cairo and Tel Aviv listening to the arguments of both sides and helping them narrow disagreements. Under the treaty signed at the White House March 26, Egypt became the first Arab state to recognize the Jewish nation, and Israel returned to Egypt the oil-rich Sinai territory captured by the Israeli army in the 1967 Arab-Israel war.

A third party is needed now to get similar mediation going between Moscow and Vilnius. My choice for mediator is French President Mitterrand, one of the most highly respected European leaders. He has supported the Lithuanian independence movement but has not recognized the Vilnius government. He also maintains very good relations with President Gorbachev. He could be trusted to deal fairly with both sides, and he is a skillful negotiator. Let's hope he will accept the task as a world leader in the interests of peace and freedom.

Local forums offer look at CEP series

"I got hooked on drugs and alcohol as a young teenager, and the habit finally controlled my life. I eventually stole to support my habit, and burglary put me in prison for a five-year sentence. The excitement and adventure of experimenting with drugs and booze is not worth the price I am paying today, and I would say to you, 'Stop now and don't sell your very soul for a temporary high or escape that will bring you and your family nothing but grief.'"

That's what a 19-year-old Texas Department of Corrections (TDC) inmate told a high school assembly last year as part of the TDC's Community Education Program.

The Community Education Program (CEP) was developed in an effort to educate, warn, and inform the public, especially teenagers, about the dangers and consequences involved in the illicit use of drugs. A panel of three to four TDC inmates — first offenders between 17 and 21 — travels throughout the state delivering their message to young people in an effort to stem drug abuse and juvenile crime.

The public is invited to a Community Education Program presentation at Scharbauer Elementary, 2115 Hereford Blvd., Thursday at 7:00 p.m.

Other presentations are scheduled for Tuesday at the Northeast YMCA at 7:00 p.m. and Wednesday at 6:15 p.m. at First United Methodist Church.

The panel will return in May for appearences at the Boys and Girls Club of Midland on May 8 and at the Golf Course Road Church of Christ Family Center May 9.

The class will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m. in Room 213-B of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center. It is scheduled to end on May 24.

"This class was added due to requests from within the community, as more immigrants are seeking naturalization. Our earlier citizenship class was filled, but others were waiting, so we acted to fulfill their needs," said Cindy Turland, director of the college's Adult Learning Center.

Students in citizenship class receive instruction which prepares them for the citizenship examination. Many of the necessary government forms relative to naturalization are distributed and discussed during the class. The students also have sessions on United States history and government, as well as discussions about American customs.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

By H.A. TUCK

This is the "Week of the Young Child" and the college's Child Development Center is joining in the celebration that's sponsored by the National Association of the Education of Young Children.

Tuck

There's an exhibition of art by the youngsters in the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Each child in the campus program has a drawing in the exhibit that's entitled "The Stages in Children's Art."

For lots of fun, don't miss the Third Annual Campus Sidewalk Parade at 9:45 a.m. Wednesday. The tiny folks from the Child Development Center decorate wagons, tricycles and themselves for this event. The parade is being followed by a parents' picnic — weather permitting, of course.

Many of the children from MC also are taking part in the Children's Fair at Odessa's Winwood Mall from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. on Saturday.

Participating in the NCAA Final Four this weekend were Larry Johnson and David Butler, both playing for University of Nevada-Las Vegas. What do those two have in common with Jackie Jones, Smokey McCovery, Billy Ray Smith, and Skeeter Henry? All played in the Texas vs. USA Junior College All-Star Game in Midland and all played the past couple of weeks in the NCAA tournament.

Twenty more junior college players, ten from Texas and ten from other states, are gathering here Thursday for the preliminaries of the fifth annual All-Star Game and it should be another good one. Among the familiar names on the 1990 Texas team are Tim Owens of Midland, Jeff Stern of South Plains, Terrence Lewis of Howard, and Lynn Collins of Odessa.

Coach for the Texas team is Steve Green of Howard College. Heading the USA team is Elmore Spencer, a 7-footer from Conners State, Okla., which won the NJCAA title last weekend. Runner-up Southern Idaho also is represented.

Ronnie Arrow, former coach of the San Jacinto Ravens who won three NJCAA titles and now head coach of the University of South Alabama, will be the banquet speaker Friday night. Banquet tickets are available in advance from the Midland Jaycees, who sponsor the game.

Game time in Chaparral Center Saturday is 7 p.m. Tickets are on sale at Chap Center, priced at $6 and $4.

Friday is the final day for the current exhibit at McCormick Gallery. "In Focus/A Photographic Society" has been displaying works by its members the past three weeks. The regional group has a fine selection of photos, which include black-and-white, color, and some collages.

McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Admission is free. Hours for the remainder of the show are: 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday.

Last show for the semester is the Spring Student Show, which opens April 21 and closes May 7.

Little children (as well as some larger ones) are jumping-up-and-down excited about the arrival of all the Sesame Street characters at Chaparral Center Tuesday and Wednesday. They're presenting a program called Silly Dancing for three performances. Shows are at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday and 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday. On a physical basis, this requires more staging than any other show that plays Chaparral Center.

Tickets are getting scarce, but there should be some left. Tickets are being sold at Sears in Midland and Odessa as well as at Chap Center.

Chaparral golfers have two tournaments ahead of them in the next eight days. They'll be in Scottsdale, Arizona, April 2 and 3 for the Scottsdale Community College Invitational. This includes just ten teams, four of them from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference: Midland, Odessa, New Mexico Junior College and New Mexico Military. Scottsdale was the NJCAA golf champion the past two years. The Scottsdale Artichokes (their real nickname) are hosting the 1990 NJCAA tournament and this invitational, both at McCormick Ranch Resorts. The 36-hole event is scheduled Monday and Tuesday.

On April 9-10, the Chaps will be in the Texas Junior College Golf Championships at Stonebridge Country Club in McKinney. Stonebridge is listed in the top 50 golf courses in the country. This also is a 36-hole event.

The Chap tennis teams will be on the road to Las Cruces and El Paso. The women's team will play April 5-7 at the New Mexico State University's invitational, with NMSU, University of New Mexico, UT-El Paso, Texas Tech, and Odessa.

The men's team will play UT-El Paso in El Paso on Saturday, then go to Roswell on April 10 for a conference match with New Mexico Military.

Students (and some employees) are antsy this week as MC's Spring Break begins Friday afternoon and continues through Monday, April 16. The break comes much later than most colleges, but coincides with the Midland public school calendar.

If you don't like computers, you're about out of business so far as the Continuing Education courses are concerned. This week you have a choice of two sections of Introduction to Computer Usage in Business (Tuesday and Thursday from 9 a.m.-11 a.m. or 3-5 p.m.) or Beginning Lotus 1-2-3, which meets from 1-3 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday.

The only other course starting this week is Driver Education.

If you wish to register for one of these classes, visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. You can get more details by calling 685-4518.

Eastwood's suit claims Globe story put him in danger

Eastwood

Eastwood's lawsuit, filed Friday in Superior Court, contends that the tabloid's Jan. 1 story, featuring a photo of Eastwood holding a handgun, has put the actor's life in danger.

The Globe story says a group called the Aryan Nation had put a $100,000 bounty on Eastwood's life because the actor refused to speak at the group's convention in Washington state.

"By fabricating a sensational public dispute between Eastwood, on the one hand, and a group of people described by the Globe as members of the Aryan Nation and new-Nazis, on the other, defendants have knowingly placed the safety and security of Eastwood and his family at risk," the lawsuit says.

The suit names as defendants the tabloid's owners, Globe International Inc. of Montreal and Globe Communications Inc. of Boca Raton, Fla., publisher Tony Miles, editor Paul Levy and writers Tony Castro and Paul Francis.

Globe officials were not immediately available for comment. A message left on the answering machine of Globe's Los Angeles office after business hours was not immediately returned.

HOUSTON (AP) — It's simply not true that Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire is aloof, a Houston city councilor said at a political "roast" held in the mayor's honor.

"I got her father an appointment with her in two weeks," said Councilamn John Goodner. "And she even waived the (political) contribution part. And she gave him the whole three minutes."

Mrs. Whitmire's "roast" Friday was held to benefit the Houston Area Women's Center, and attracted abour 500 people to a posh Galleria hotel.

"Most people see Kathy Whitmire as a cold, ruthless, cutthroat, hard-ball, knee-knocking politician," said state Sen. Rodney Ellis, a former councilman. "But that's not the only side to her."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Suzy Bogguss says she was bewildered at first by "Roger & Me" because she had been misinformed about the subject of the documentary-style movie.

"For the first 20 minutes of the movie," said Bogguss, "I was trying to figure out how this had anything to do with Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert."

"Roger & Me" is not about the two TV film critics, but the demise of a General Motors Corp. plant in Flint, Mich., and the Roger of the title refers to GM Chairman Roger Smith.

A year ago, Bogguss was voted most promising female singer by the Academy of Country Music. Her hit records include "I Don't Want to Set the World on Fire."

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Director Spike Lee says films like "Driving Miss Daisy" suggest that America may have found a comfort zone in the portrayal of race relations in the movies.

Lee

"I think America is a lot more comfortable with how racism is treated in that film than how it was treated in 'Do The Right Thing,'" Lee said during his visit to Duke University.

"Even though Morgan Freeman is a great actor, one of our greatest actors, he still plays a subservient role. I think a lot of white Americans are more comfortable with a black man who's a chauffeur, who's really a second-class citizen, than Mookie or the mayor or any of the characters in 'Do The Right Thing,'" he said.

"It tells me that we still have a lot farther to go," he said. "In a lot of areas, the clock is being turned backwards."

"Do The Right Thing" was nominated in two categories, Lee himself for best original screenplay and Danny Aiello best supporting actor, but did not win.

Lee's latest film, "Variations on the Mo-Better Blues," is scheduled to for release this summer.

Duke, UNLV on Rocky Mountain Highs

Richardson

Associated Press

DENVER — Duke survived Arkansas' "Forty Minutes of Hell." Now, the Blue Devils are only one step away from ending their own hell in the Final Four as they will face UNLV in Monday's title game. The Runnin' Rebels downed Georgia Tech, 90-81, Saturday night in the other semifinal game.

Phil Henderson scored 28 points for the Blue Devils, who beat Arkansas 97-83 in a battle of conditioning and wills in the NCAA championship semifinals Saturday.

Not only did the altitude of this Mile High City take its toll on the players, but so did Arkansas' all-out running game and full-court press, thus the Razorback's rallying cry: "Forty Minutes of Hell."

This time, though, those 40 minutes took a costlier toll on Arkansas. Both the Razorback's centers played the entire second half in foul trouble. Starter Mario Credit fouled out with 6:22 to play and substitute Oliver Miller went out shortly thereafter, giving Duke a huge size advantage.

"It was a physical game," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "I can see how they wore people down during the season."

When Credit picked up his fifth foul against Christian Laettner, the score was tied at 77. Laettner, who had four fouls himself, hit the foul shot, and Duke led 78-77. The Blue Devils (29-8) then outscored Arkansas 11-4 for an 89-81 lead, and the game was in hand.

"At the end, when we should have had some patience, we panicked," Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson said. "I thought our youth started to show toward the end."

Now, the Blue Devils move into Monday night's NCAA title game with a chance to end a long string of failures. Duke has been to the Final Four eight times, including the last three seasons and four of the past five. Never, though, have the Blue Devils won a title.

With Arkansas' two centers out of the game, the Blue Devils went to their own strong front line of Laettner and Alaa Abdelnaby. Laettner

New ladies' champion a certainty

Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Auburn and Stanford each will try to win its first NCAA women's basketball championship Sunday, the difference being that Auburn already has failed twice.

And that, Auburn guard Carolyn Jones says, is all the motivation the Lady Tigers need.

Last year, Auburn lost to Tennessee in the championship game. The previous year, Louisiana Tech won the title at the expense of the Lady Tigers. Jones hasn't forgotten how it feels to lose in that situation.

Tip-Off: 12:30 p.m., CBS

"Coming up short the last two years makes you a little hungrier," she said.

"I don't think that feeling of losing in the last game ever leaves you. You're going to have to put it behind you and go on, but the feeling is always there."

Not that Stanford will be lacking for motivation. This is the moment that Coach Tara VanDerveer has been building for since becoming the Cardinal's coach five years ago. Stanford's record has improved each season of her tenure, from 13-15 in 1985-86 to 31-1 this season.

"The national championship game, it's the ultimate challenge," VanDerveer said. "I don't know if there's any extra incentive for me. To win a national championship is incentive enough and motivation enough.

"Having a team that five years ago struggled and just having a dream and seeing it come to fruition is very exciting."

The game, at Thompson-Boling Arena, will match the best of both worlds.

Stanford, ranked second nationally, has glitz and offense. The Cardinal has five players with double-figure scoring averages, it runs, it shoots 3-pointers. Stanford averages 93 points per game and has topped the 100-point mark 10 times.

Ninth-ranked Auburn (28-6) relies more on grit. The Lady Tigers play full-court pressure defense throughout. They trap, they cut off passing lanes, they make teams work to get shots. When you score against Auburn, you've earned it.

"Hopefully we have 40 minutes of defensive basketball left," Auburn coach Joe Ciampi said. "To play this great Stanford team that has so many outstanding weapons, I think we're going to need six or seven people on defense just to contain their offensive machines."

Five Stanford players average between 12 and 18 points per game, topped by center Trisha Stevens' 17.7 mark. Forward Katy Steding averages 15 points per game and guard Jennifer Azzi, the Naismith Player of the Year, has a 14.6 average.

That type of balance will make it difficult for Auburn to run its normal defensive scheme. The Lady Tigers usually focus on two or three players and lay off those who don't score as much.

"You look at their statistics, their results, everyone has contributed in a positive manner throughout the year," Ciampi said. "So they have a complete team and a team situation that concerns me.

Lieghann Fischer, atop Miss Mac, has anxiously awaited today's start of polo season. Fischer has worked for six months to raise the popularity of polo in Midland.

Midland polo the model club

Push for wider acceptance comes as season opens

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Lieghann Fischer has spent most of her adult life as a model, working the fashion industry in both print and television advertisements.

But as tough and strenuous as the life of a New York model is, Fischer may now find herself faced with an even tougher task. For her next goal, she has set out to make polo a popular sport in football-crazed West Texas.

A Midlander for less than a year, the 37-year-old Dallas native believes in the sport with the same conviction and die-hard spirit that Billy Martin once gave baseball. Fischer has, she says, devoted her life to the sport.

Today marks the start of the 1990 Midland Polo Club season, a surefire method of determining whether Fischer's efforts to push polo to the public will be successful. Action begins at 2 p.m. in the Broncho BMW 12 Goal League of West Texas. Matches continue on a weekly basis throughout mid-November.

Fischer's two biggest hurdles in selling the sport to West Texans are having to introduce a new game to a community which rallies around fall football and summer minor league baseball, and second, getting that same group of people to understand the sport.

"I think that polo is probably one of the prettiest, most elegant of all sports," Fischer said. "And yet, there's a lot of danger and excitement at the same time.

Mojo Magic?

Rebs won't hear of it, upset first place Panthers

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Maybe Midland Lee found some magic in the old maroon jerseys the Rebels were forced to wear after 10 uniforms had been stolen Friday.

Possibly, Odessa Permian was a little overconfident going against an opponent with a 7-6 overall record. No matter what, it's the stuff that makes rivalries so fun.

Permian marched onto the Lee baseball diamond Saturday with an unbeaten District 4-5A record and a recent 12-2 clubbing of second-place Abilene Cooper in its back pocket.

Lee was anything but daunted by those figures, however, as the Rebels weaved an 8-2 masterpiece of a win over the Panthers to go into a three-way tie for second place with Cooper and Midland High.

Reb pitcher Jeff Johnston, a lefthanded junior, mowed down a Mojo batting order that had been hitting .368 in 4-5A play as he posted a four-hitter in seven full innings.

The Panther starter had results that were quite the reverse, as the Rebel order beat Blake Tucker like a drum for five runs on five hits in the first inning. After failing to retire a Lee batter, Tucker gave way to Carlos Samaniego. Samaniego allowed three runs, only one earned, in going the remainder of the game for Permian, but the damage had already been done.

The win puts the Rebs in the thick of the 4-5A race, as Lee went to 3-2 in district play and 8-6 overall. Permian fell to 10-3-1 overall and 4-1 in district. But even if Lee had been winless in district, the win would have been just as sweet, according to the Rebels.

"Of course, it makes the victory better that it was over Permian. How are you not going to get ready for Odessa Permian or Midland High when you're Lee," said Rebel coach Ernie Johnson.

"We really needed this win, and we figured if Jeff pitched like he is capable of and we did some hitting, we would win. There was no way we were going to play badly against Permian, especially since they were 4-0," said leftfielder David Schmidt, who did a fair piece of hitting himself.

Schmidt went 2-for-4 with a double, while scoring a pair of runs and knocking in two more. Ty Chambers and B.J. Parrish also went 2-for-4, but the most impressive bat work of the day may have come from first baseman Brad Sanders and catcher Brent Sanders.

Brad was 3-for-3, with an RBI double. Brent was a less-than-stellar 0-for-1, but patiently waited out Mojo pitching for three walks.

Johnston (5-3 overall and 1-2 in league action) was as effective as he has been all season. Working his curveball with a wicked off-speed pitch, he struck out six Panther batsmen, while carrying a no-hitter into the fourth and a shutout into the sixth.

"I felt going into the game that we could beat them if we were mentally prepared. It was a sweet win," the southpaw said.

Salazar works for 6-0 Bulldog win

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Midland High pitcher Gabriel Salazar worked out of jams in seven straight innings and pounded two home runs as the Bulldogs shut out Odessa High 6-0 Saturday.

The victory lifts MHS to 3-2 in league play and into a three-way tie for second place in District 4-5A along with Midland Lee and Abilene Cooper.

OHS fell to 1-4 in 4-5A and remains in the cellar. Odessa Permian, at 4-1, holds down the top spot.

Salazar, 6-3, scattered five hits while stranding 10 Odessa base runners, and his solo shot over the left field fence in the second inning broke a scoreless tie and proved to be the game-winner.

"I wish Gabriel could play here all the time. He really hits well in this park," said Bulldog skipper Tim Whalen.

"And he pitched a really outstanding game today. When the situation got tough, he came through."

Salazar, who fanned 12 Bronchos and walked four, had to deal with Odessa baserunners in every frame. But he squelched every OHS opportunity, once stranding Craig McMillan at third after a one-out triple. And he struck seven Bronchos over the final three innings.

"I got myself into trouble," Salazar said. "I walked some batters that I shouldn't have, and I had to try and get them to hit it on the ground to get out of some innings.

"But our defense played real good today," he added.

The MHS hurler was also 3-for-4 at the plate, collecting three RBI. His second homer off OHS starter Jeremy Davis (1-3) came with one out in the seventh, chasing home courtesy runner Greg Galvan and accounting for the final score.

"He threw it down the middle, and I just took a cut at it," said Salazar, owner of three district home runs.

When Will Sowders followed the Salazar blast with a ground-rule double, OHS baseball coach Milton Thompson sent Danny Campos to the mound to get the last two outs. But it was too late for the Bronchos.

MHS scored a second run in the second inning when Sowders crossed on Brian Conaway's grounder to second. Sowders, who reached base on an error, had advanced to second on Jason Stone's sacrifice bunt.

Keith Gilbreath walked to lead off the third, stole second base and scored on Scott Melzer's single to give the Bulldogs a 3-0 lead. And Gilbreath singled home James Madrid in the fourth after the MHS third baseman sent a double down the left field line.

"This puts us back in the middle of the district hunt," Whalen said. "I was very pleased with our overall performance today. But we've got to play tough every time we go out or someone is liable to slip up on us."

Arm woes begin to haunt Cards

Associated Press

The St. Louis Cardinals, who hoped to be up in arms this season, look like they'll be scrambling again for a few good arms.

On Saturday, the Cardinals placed relief ace Todd Worrell on the 60-day disabled and starter Danny Cox on the 21-day disabled list.

The team had announced earlier that Worrell, who had elbow surgery in December, would not return until July. However, additional surgery is scheduled for April 6 to remove scar tissue that is pressing on a nerve. The Cards said the new surgery is not expected to affect Worrell's timetable for returning.

Worrell, who needs one save to tie Bruce Sutter's team career record of 127 saves, was 3-5 last season with 20 saves and a 2.96 ERA.

Cox, who missed all of last season following similar surgery, hurt his right arm after throwing 21 pitches in an intrasquad game earlier in spring training.

In addition, starters John Tudor and Greg Matthews are coming back from injuires. To prepare for such uncertainty, the Cards signed Bryn Smith, and they also have 18-game winner Joe Magrane and 16-game winner Jose DeLeon.

Red Sox 4, Tigers 3 (SS), 11 innings

At Winter Haven, Fla., Roger Clemens pitched six strong innings as Boston scored the winning run on rookie Travis Fryman's wild relay throw with two outs in the 11th. Clemens allowed one run on four hits and struck out three. Mike Greenwell doubled in the 11th off Dan O'Neill and took third after Scott Cooper flied out. Ellis Burks was walked intentionally and Bill Buckner was hit by a pitch to load the bases. Tony Pena then grounded to Torey Lovullo, who flipped to Fryman, forcing Buckner. However, Fryman's relay to first was wild, allowing Greenwell to score.

Astros 4, Phillies 3

At Kissimmee, Fla., Eric Anthony hit a two-run homer in the ninth to give Houston its victory. Anthony hit a 390-foot homer to right center off loser Todd Frohwirth. Craig Biggio had a two-run homer for the Astros.

Reds 2, Cardinals 0

At St. Petersburg, Fla., Danny Jackson, Jack Armstrong and Rick Mahler combined on a three-hitter to power Cincinnati.Jackson pitched two hitless innings, Armstrong went the next fout and allowed one hit and Mahler gave up two hits over the final three innings.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 1

At Dunedin, Fla., Charlie Hough (2-0) held Toronto to one hit through six innings and Mike Jeffcoat and Jeff Russell finished off a four-hitter for Texas. The new Dunedin Stadium was less than half-filled by a crowd announced at 2,801.

Texas went ahead in the seventh against Steve Cummings (0-2) on a wild pitch and a pinch-hit RBI single by Geno Petralli.

POLO: Seeking wider popularity

(From 1C)

"It's an extra special asset to Midland-Odessa, more so than other cities. Between the baseball and the polo club, there isn't any other major league sports."

Yes, Fischer assures, polo is a professional sport, although not along the same lines of the more visible team sports. Per-goal rating-wise, Midland's is the No. 1 ranked polo club in the state, higher thought of even than Dallas.

Although most matches are sponsored, such as today's by Broncho BMW, many of the best polo players are paid by fellow players, something that probably wouldn't go over to well in baseball or football.

A polo match is divided into six chukkers, or periods, each 7½ minutes in length. Each team consists of four players, all on horseback. Players may use between four and six horses for each match. Unlike, say, football or basketball, players and horses switch goals after each point is scored. Obviously, the object of the game is to score more points than the opposing team.

The playing field is 160 yards wide by 300 yards long, or just over four times wider and three times longer than a football field.

There are three umpires, two on mount, one in the stands.

On the clock, a typical match can last anywhere from 90 minutes to two hours.

"It's a team sport, not a judged event," Fischer said. "It's different than racing cars or riding motorcycles. You've got to control and team up with the one that's underneath you, and it fascinates me."

Another stigma polo has always had to fight to overcome is the exhorbitant price it takes to participate.

Fischer estimates that "playing on a shoestring budget" can run a polo enthusiast as much as $1,000 per month in-season to play. That figure includes mainly the feeding and maintaining of the horses, and club fees.

As far as a spectator sport, polo is a bargain compared to other sports. Most matches at the Midland Polo Club run $5 per carload.

Today's match, though, is $10 a carload with all proceeds going to Midland's Developmental Disabilities Center, a therapy center for the physically handicapped.

"(A polo match) is something the whole family can enjoy," Fischer said. "The kids like it. You're not sitting in some grandstand using binoculars. You can sit on your tailgate and bring a blanket, have a picnic lunch. You can park your car, have your own private picnic, right there on the field and feel the horses as they thunder by and the ground shakes beneath you. And that really happens too."

One of the more interesting aspects of the game of polo is its appeal to players of virtually all ages. Midland's oldest player is Willie B. Wilson, who is in his upper 70s. At the other end is Loren Beal, who at 14, has played against her grandfather, Carlton Beal.

Fischer says media exposure is a key to helping polo become a success in Midland.

"Teaching the public what it's about," Fischer said, is important. "(People) are intimidated by the sport, I think."

NBA ROUNDUP

Olajuwon joins exclusive club

Associated Press

Akeem Olajuwon scored 24 points and grabbed 16 rebounds, becoming the second player in NBA history with 1,000 or more rebounds and 300 or more blocked shots in one season, as the Houston Rockets defeated the Minnesota Timberwolves 106-98 Saturday night.

Olajuwon had five blocks, giving him 332 for the season, and increased his rebounding total to 1,001. The only other player in NBA history to accomplish the feat since the league began recording blocked shots is former Los Angeles Laker star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who did it twice during his career.

Otis Thorpe added 24 points, hitting 12 of 13 (.923) shots from the field for the second best field goal percentage in a game in Houston's franchise history. Buck Johnson also had 15 points for the Rockets, who closed within a half game of the Seattle Supersonics for the eighth playoff spot in the Western Conference.

Spurs 107, Bucks 100

Terry Cummings scored 24 points and grabbed 10 rebounds to lead San Antonio.

Cummings had nine points in the final period and Rod Strickland added seven. Their combined effort offset Jack Sikma's 16 points in the fourth quarter. Sikma led Milwaukee with 23 points.

San Antonio center David Robinson finished with 19 points and 11 rebounds.

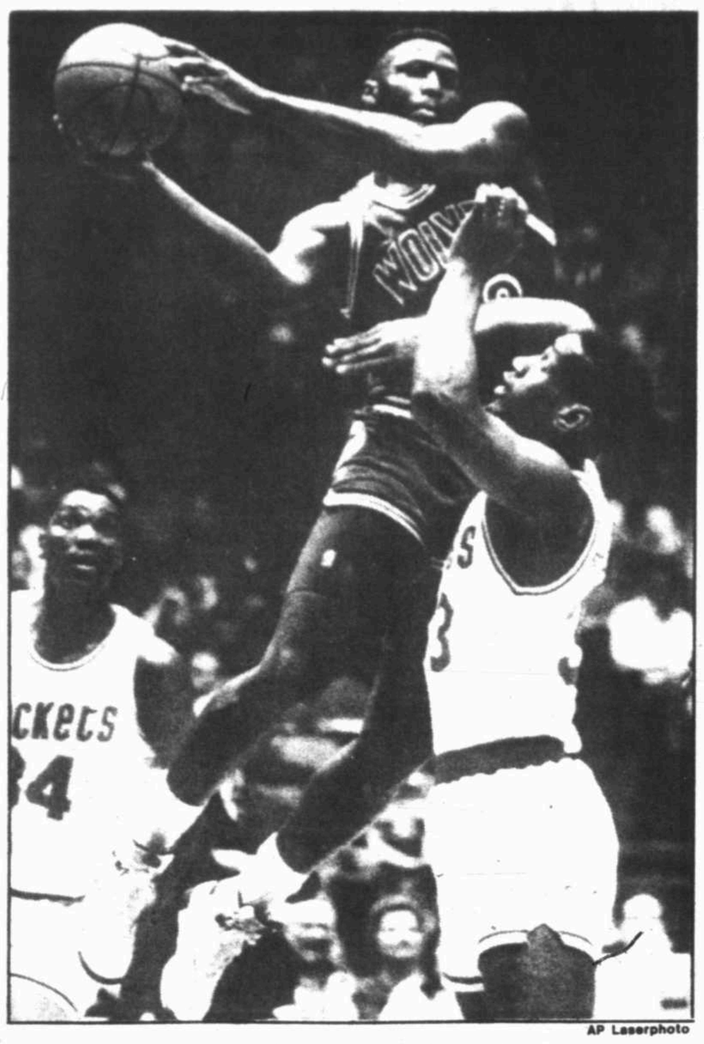

The game was marred by a fight between the Spurs' Willie Anderson and the Bucks' Alvin Robertson six minutes into the game. Both were ejected from the game.

The two played for San Antonio last year. Robertson had just two points when he left, while Anderson had none.

Nuggets 118, Knicks 115

Alex English scored 20 of his 26 points in the second half and the Denver Nuggets broke a seven-game road losing streak.

The Nuggets, who fell into a four-team battle for two Western Conference playoff spots with five consecutive losses, stayed in seventh place alone with the win.

REBS: Make a little magic

(From 1C)

"It was a great pitching job. Of course, they scored a few runs, but Jeff has some good stuff," Johnson said.

Even though Permian scored a pair of runs in the sixth, the three tallies Lee recorded in the fourth were more than enough to put the game away.

Chambers led off the inning with a single and a stolen base, then Parrish reached on an error committed by Mojo second bagger Adrian Villa. Schmidt followed with his double to score Chambers and Parrish. Brent Sanders moved Schmidt over to third on a sacrafice bunt, then Randy Brown (who also has two RBI) executed the squeeze play to perfection, allowing Schmidt to score the last run of the inning.

"You have to give Lee a lot of credit. You can't take anything away from them. They are well coached and moved their runners around well," said Panther coach Bob Highley.

Nicklaus making impressive debut

Associated Press

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Jack Nicklaus launched a spectacular 67 at golf's senior citizens and then couldn't help looking a week ahead to the gathering of the greats in Augusta, Ga. and the Masters.

"If I keep playing like I'm playing right now, I'll be in contention next week," Nicklaus said Saturday after he'd taken a two-shot lead in his first start on the Senior PGA Tour.

He established that lead in the most dramatic fashion possible: with a 30-foot chip-in eagle on the final hole.

He had to go back to Augusta and his last victory in 1986 — possibly even further back — to find a standard of play to match the game he paraded before old friend Gary Player and a gasping gallery at the Tradition at Desert Mountain.

"The best day of hitting the ball I've had in a long, long time. I can't even remember the last time it was this good," Nicklaus said.

"It was kind of a funny round, a round like I'd have in the Masters and Open a long time ago," Nicklaus said.

"I'd shoot 67 and be a little disappointed because I figured I didn't get much out of it.

"If I'd putted today, that round could have been awful low," he said. "I got a lot of confidence out of this. I have a great deal of confidence in what I'm doing now."

He shot the best round of the tournament — the best by two shots — without doing much at all with his putter.

His three birdies came on par-fives, all of which he reached in two and two-putted. And then he capped it with a chip-in eagle-three on the 18th hole. There were no bogeys.

"The only two putts I made all day were on the 16th and 17th," he said. And those two, from about 12 and 6 feet, were for par.

"It was appropriate that he chip in on 18," said Player, Nicklaus' friend and golfing companion for more than a quarter-century.

"I was in awe," said Player, who played in the same threesome with Nicklaus. "You had to see it to believe it. He was fantastic."

And Player said Nicklaus' play was so spectacular that he'd revised an opinion.

"Jack said his goal this year was to win on both the Senior tour and the regular tour," Player recalled.

"Yesterday, I said it was possible but unlikely.

"Now, I say it's extremely likely.

"I haven't seen anything like that in years. He was fantastic, magnificent," the little man from South Africa said.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Kirk Piskor hit his ninth homer of the year and drove in four runs as Arkansas squeezed by Texas Tech 7-6 Saturday in the second game of a Southwest Conference doubleheader.

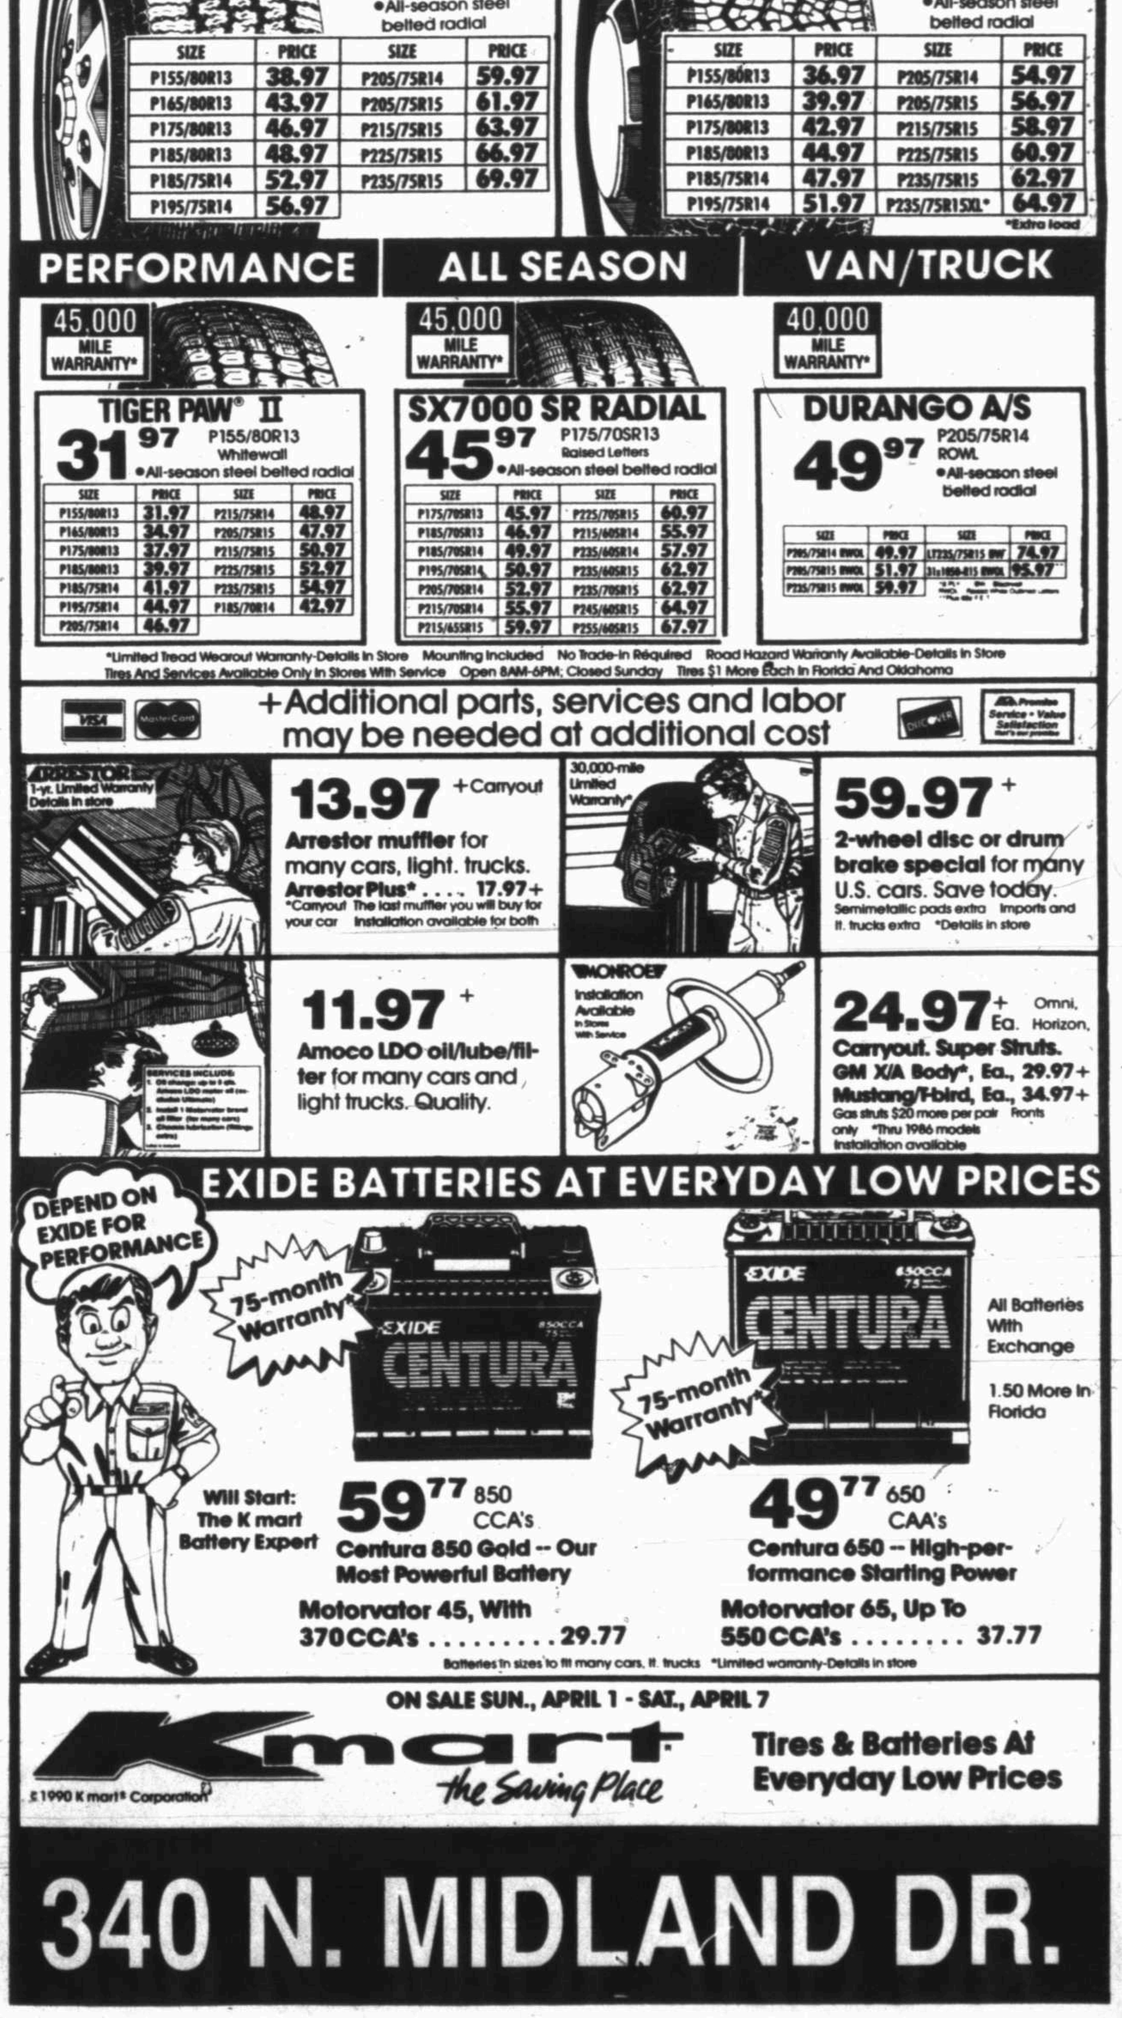

The eighth-ranked Razorbacks also won the first contest, 6-5.

Relief pitcher Phillip Stidham played a key role in both victories. He got his fifth save of the year in the first game, then picked up a win in the nightcap. He is 4-0 for the season and 1-0 in Southwest Conference play.

UNLV: Rebs outlast Tech

had 19 points, despite playing the final 13:25 with four fouls, and Abdelnaby had 20.

Todd Day had 27 points for Arkansas, but failed to score in the final 8:44, and Lenzie Howell had 18. The only other player in double figures was Lee Mayberry with 12. Miller finished with three and Credit had just five.

"We played like a bunch of freshmen and sophomores," Mayberry said.

Twice, Arkansas trailed by 11 points and came back, the final time with 16:40 left after Duke scored the first eight points of the second half. Arkansas ran off nine straight points to pull within two, and finally tied the score at 60 on Day's 3-pointer with 12:46 to play.

"When teams like Arkansas make runs, they like to score in flurries," Abdelnaby said. "I thought in this situation, our experience paid off."

Howell's 3-pointer with 6:58 to play tied the score at 77, but the Blue Devils then outscored the Razorbacks 20-6 to end the game. Abdelnaby had six of Duke's points as the Blue Devils took an 84-81 lead, then Henderson hit seven in a row for Duke, giving the Blue Devils a 93-83 lead.

A 3-pointer by Henderson with 4:02 left put the Blue Devils up 87-81.

"You always remember certain things about a game," Krzyzewski said. "And what I'll always remember about this one is how long it took Phil to shoot that 3-pointer."

Henderson said he had trouble with his hands getting cold during the game, and that gave him trouble shooting.

"I knew that last 3-pointer was a big one, though," Henderson said. "I squared up and just tried to concentrate. I didn't realize it took me as long as they said it did."

UNLV 90, Georgia Tech 81

UNLV used its own lethal weapon, the toughest man-to-man defense west of the Mississippi, to beat Georgia Tech 90-81 on Saturday and advance to the NCAA championship game for the first time.

The Runnin' Rebels can become the first Western team to win the national championship since UCLA in 1975 when they face Duke, a 97-83 winner over Arkansas, in Monday night's title game.

The Atlantic Coast Conference could have been assured of a national champion with a victory by Georgia Tech, but Duke will now have to carry the conference's banner alone in the title game.

Things didn't look the way UNLV — the only top-seeded team to make the Final Four — wanted them to at halftime. The Runnin' Rebels (34-5) trailed 53-46 and the Yellow Jackets had made 20 of 30 shots from the field and seemed to be in control.

But the defense Coach Jerry Tarkanian is known for took over at the start of the second half.

The Yellow Jackets (28-7) made just one field goal in nine shots in the opening nine minutes of the half. They couldn't make free throws either, going 2-for-6 from the foul line in the same period.

The Runnin' Rebels lived up their name as the second half started, using a 10-1 run to take the lead at 56-54 with 16:23 to play.

They took the lead for good at 59-57 on a 3-pointer by Stacey Augmon with 13:55 to play.

The fact that they extended the lead on a turnaround by David Butler mattered little when Georgia Tech's freshman point guard Kenny Anderson picked up his fourth personal foul with 11:38 to play.

Anderson, who had 13 points in the first half and was part of the Yellow Jackets' "Lethal Weapon 3" offense, had been charged with just five fouls in the previous four NCAA tournament games. He returned with 7:02 to play, and Georgia Tech down 76-69.

The Yellow Jackets then scored five straight points, the last two on a spectacular spin and duck move in the lane by Anderson, to get within 76-74 with 5:25 left.

But the Runnin' Rebels were just too much.

Augmon led UNLV with 22 points and Hunt had 20.

MC golfers off to Scottsdale tourney

Staff Report

Midland College golfers this week head for Scottsdale, Arizona, and a preview of the 1990 national junior college tournament site. They'll be playing Monday and Tuesday at the McCormick Ranch Resorts course in a tourney hosted by Scottsdale Community College, the 1988 and 1989 NJCAA men's golf champions.

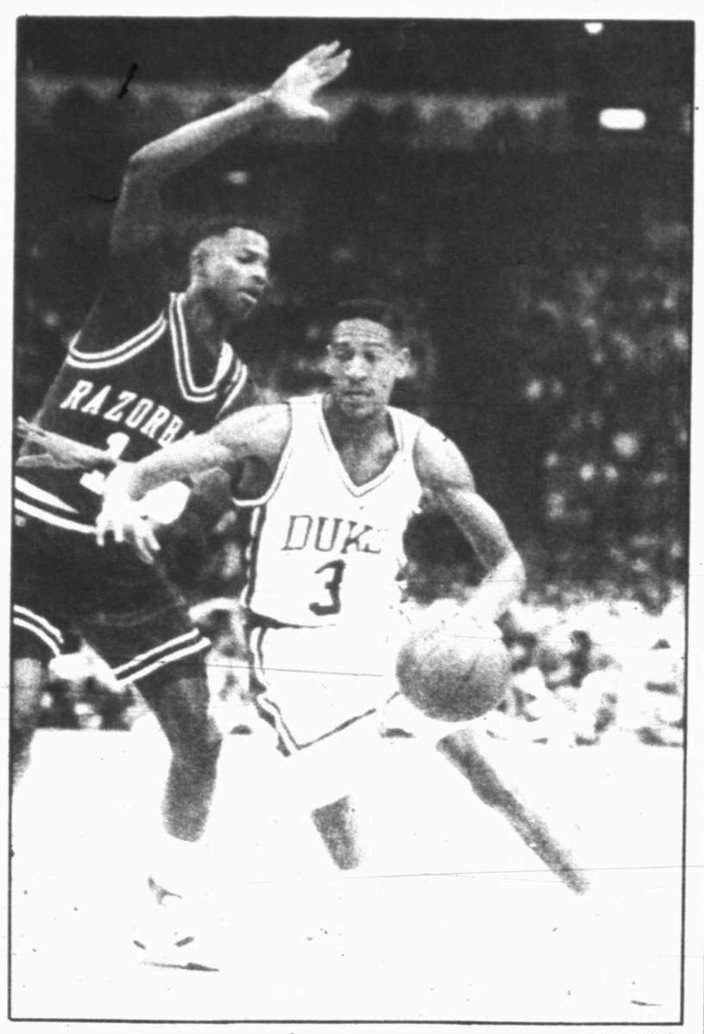

But the Chaparrals may have a secret weapon. MC sophomore Mark Kochan posted a course record 63 in a qualifying round last week at Green Tree Country Club. Playing with teammate Dean Robertson, Kochan shot a nice 32 on the West course, three under par. But Robertson shot a 33 himself.

On the North course, Kochan fired 31, while Robertson was matching par with a 37. Kochan's round included eight birdies, an eagle and just one bogie. That equaled a nine-under on the par 72 layout.

"We didn't play well in a tournament in Florida three weeks ago, but they came back and won a tournament here two weeks ago. I think the Scottsdale course might be to our liking," said MC coach Delnor Poss.

"And if Kochan and the rest of the team can play as they played the last week or so, we'll be fine."

The Scottsdale tourney is limited, with only the best teams in the country invited to participate in the two-day, 36-hole event. Others in the field include Odessa, New Mexico Junior College, Brevard of Florida, New Mexico Military Institute, Mesa of Arizona, Florida Junior College, Wallace State of Dothan, Alabama, and Glendale of Arizona. Coming after that for the Chaparrals is the Texas Junior College Golf Championships.

Guard Phil Henderson didn't let Denver's lack of oxygen bother him much as the Duke point guard scored a game-high 28 to lead the Blue Devils to the championship.

Mile High altitude runs down Hogs

Associated Press

DENVER — Arkansas was supposed to be the team that ran opponents off the floor. Instead, it was the Razorbacks who got run down and run out of the Final Four by Duke.

Nowhere was that more evident than with Todd Day. Arkansas' lanky 6-foot-8 forward scored 27 points, but none in the final 8:44 when the Razorbacks were outscored 28-12 and lost 97-83.

"They played good defense throughout the whole game," Day said. "I was a little winded going down the stretch and my shots just wouldn't fall. I guess it's a tribute to their defense."

Arkansas had hoped to inflict its trademark "40 minutes of Hell" on the Blue Devils, but it never happened. Coach Nolan Richardson found himself substituting as liberally as always, but without the same results.

"I thought the altitude wouldn't play a part, but ever time our players came out they were really huffing, puffing and blowing," Richardson said. "We usually don't do that."

Day, the Razorbacks' leading scorer with an average of 19 points per game, scored 16 in the first half, when they trailed by only three after falling behind by 11 in the opening 4½ minutes.

His jumper with 8:44 left gave the Razorbacks a 71-69 lead. It came in the middle of an 11-2 Duke run that saw the Blue Devils overcome a 69-62 deficit to take a 73-71 lead.

Arkansas would take its final lead, 79-78, on two free throws by Lenzie Howell with six minutes remaining. From then on, the Razorbacks scored four points.

"We've got a young team, and you could tell that down the stretch," said point guard Lee Mayberry, one of four sophomores among the top eight players. "We played like a bunch of freshmen and sophomores. Duke had the experience and it showed.

"Duke played extremely well down the stretch," he said, "and we didn't make a lot of smart plays."

A big moment for Arkansas came when center Mario Credit fouled out with 6:22 remaining. He and Oliver Miller had teamed to make things tough on Duke's inside players in the second half.

But after Credit fouled out, Duke went on a 11-4 run in the span of to 2 minutes, 20 seconds to break the game open, 89-81.

"I knew that was going to be the turning point," Credit said. "As soon as I fouled out, I knew they were going to pound it inside. 'O' (Miller) had to back down because he had four fouls, too."

Arkansas shot 42 percent in the first half, and that percentage dropped to 38 after intermission. Still, the Razorbacks used their press to take a 69-62 lead with a 12-2 run midway through the second half.

Richardson liked his chances at that point.

"We call it the breaking point," he said. "We thought we had them in a posititon where they were reeling and rocking, but they came back out fighting. We couldn't quite get over the hump.

"I was hoping we would make one more basket or one more quick run during that period, then I thought we would be in a great position to win the basketball game."

NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON THE ENVIRONMENT AND NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS

City of Midland
P.O. Box 300
Midland, Texas 79702

TO: All interested Agencies, Groups and Persons

On or about April 17, 1990, the City of Midland (CITY), Midland County, Texas will request the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to release Federal funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-383) for the following projects:

1. 1989 Demolition of Dangerous and Dilapidated Structures in Slum/Blighted Acres ($21,622).

2. 1989 Revolving Loan Fund Program (Change in Budget Only. Funding increased $23,000 due to program income).

3. 1989 Homeowner Housing Rehabilitation Program (Funding increased by $40,000 reprogrammed from 1989 water/sewer line adjustments project).

FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT

It has been determined that actions for which a request for the release of funds are being requested will not constitute actions significantly affecting and quality of the human environment and accordingly the CITY has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (P.L. 91-190). The reason for such decision not to prepare a Statement is based upon the fact that all environmental concerns could either be minimized or mitigated.

Environmental Review Records (ERR) of the projects have been made by the CITY. They document the environmental review of the projects and set forth the reasons why such a statement is not required. The ERR is on file at the Planning Division Office, City Hall, Room 220, 300 N. Loraine, and is available for public examination and copying upon request between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

No further environmental review of the projects are proposed to be conducted prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

PUBLIC COMMENTS ON FINDING

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration to the CITY to the address as set forth above. Written comments should be received at the address specified on or before April 16, 1990. All comments received will be considered and the CITY will not request the release of funds or take administrative action on the project prior to the date specified in the preceding sentence.

RELEASE OF FUNDS

The CITY will undertake the projects described above with Community Development Block Grant funds under Title I from its fiscal 1989 program under grant numbered B-89-MC-48-0023 from the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. The CITY is certifying to HUD that the City of Midland and Mr. Carroll Thomas, in his official capacity as Mayor, consents to accept the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts if an action is brought to enforce responsibilities in relation to environmental reviews, decision-making and action; and that these responsibilities have been satisfied. The legal effect of the certification is that upon its approval the CITY may use the Block Grant funds and HUD will have satisfied its responsibilities under the National Environmental Policy Act. HUD will accept an objection to its approval only on one of the following bases: (a) that the certifications were not in fact executed by the certifying officer or other officer of CITY approved by HUD; or (b) that the environmental review record for this project indicates omission of a required decision, finding, or step applicable to the projects in the environmental review process. Objections must be prepared and submitted in accordance with the required procedure (24 CFR Part 58) and should be addressed to HUD, P.O. Box 2905, Fort Worth, Texas 76113-2905.

Objections to the release of funds on bases other than those stated above will not be considered by Hud. No objections received after May 4, 1990, will be considered by Hud.

A LIFESTYLE ADJUSTMENT FOR ALL OCCASIONS

By JILL HANCOCK

Our changing lifestyles during the past 10 years can be seen with more mothers joining the work force, families eating on the run while desiring a healthier diet and improvements being made to well-located homes. A new bedroom, an up-dated kitchen, or maybe realigning the walls in the living area are only a few of the improvements that owners are making to their homes these days.

This week's featured home demonstrates our changing lifestyles perfectly. Located in a prestigious older neighborhood, the two-story home provides a downstairs area that was designed for parents and an upstairs haven for children. And the wonderful gourmet kitchen which opens into a sun room serves as the one place in this house for parents, children and their friends to mix and mingle.

ADJUST: Updated home perfect for busy family

(From 1D)

The front entrance into this exquisitely landscaped and elegantly decorated home opens into a hallway that leads to all the downstairs rooms. A flame stitch paper in blue and peach adorn the walls, in addition to the staircase area that leads to four upstairs bedrooms.

To the left, the formal living room is highlighted by neutral-colored grass cloth wallcovering and hardwood floors. A built-in cabinet with bookshelves lines one wall and two walls feature tall windows that view the front yard.

The dining room is situated across the corridor from the living room. Pale peach walls are accented by white moulding. Three windows overlook the front and a brass chandelier ascends from the ceiling.

A doorway leads from the dining room into the functional kitchen which was totally remodeled in 1983. White cabinets, navy counter tops and fantastic appliances are only a few of the amenities. The Thermador range features a six-burner cooktop, a self-cleaning oven and warming racks with lights under the vent-a-hood. A General Electric microwave and another self-cleaning oven helps an avid cook prepare a feast for family or guests. The dishwasher is also a necessity for quick clean ups.

The kitchen is designed around a work island with a cutting board top and concealed spice racks are conveniently built-in on both sides of the range. A china cabinet with a tile counter is inset along the left wall of the adjoining breakfast room.

Adjacent to the formal dining room, where wa''s have been removed to create a homey atmosphere, focuses on a brick fireplace with a carved mantle. This area has white paneled walls and three floor-to-ceiling windows at one end.

A sun room was added seven years ago. This room doesn't just connect the kitchen area and the family room, but it also enhances the roominess and flow between the downstair rooms. This spacious area includes a white tile flooring that is also seen in the entrance hall and kitchen area. A tile wet bar is situated along the left wall and a bar can accommodate two stools. The plantation shuttered windows line the back wall. A door provides access onto the patio in the back yard.

A hall next to the family room leads to a half-bath, spacious laundry area and a two-car garage.

Sequestered from the other downstairs rooms, the master bedroom is situated in the left corner of the entrance hall. The walls are painted a soft shade of blue. Two tall windows overlook the lush side and back yards. A sitting area is place in front of one window and is the perfect area for a cat nap on a comfortable chaise lounge. A customized cabinet, with space for a television set, magazine shelves and drawers for clothing, is inset in one wall.

The adjoining bath features a two-sink marble vanity and an oversized tile shower with a seat. A walk-in closet is situated next to the vanity and a second closet is located in the bedroom. The bath is decorated in a blue paper with a tiny white pattern.

A powder room is situated next to the master bedroom. A blue and peach paper highlights this convenient bath.

A staircase in the entrance hall leads upstairs to three bedrooms, two baths, a study and a huge all-purpose room.

Lined with fabric in a variety of colors, the first bedroom focuses on two windows seats that are divided by a vertical bookcase. Storage cabinets are situated beneath the window seats and are great for storage of toys and out-of-season clothing. The bedroom also has two walk-in closets.

The second bedroom has peach-colored walls with two windows. One views the side yard and the other frames the back yard. A fabric in gray, pink, peach and green highlights one wall.

The hall bath, which is situated next to the second bedroom, has a marble vanity, a built-in shower and a floral wallcovering.

Almost designed identically to the first bedroom, the third bedroom also features the customized window seat. The other amenities include white walls and a spacious closet.

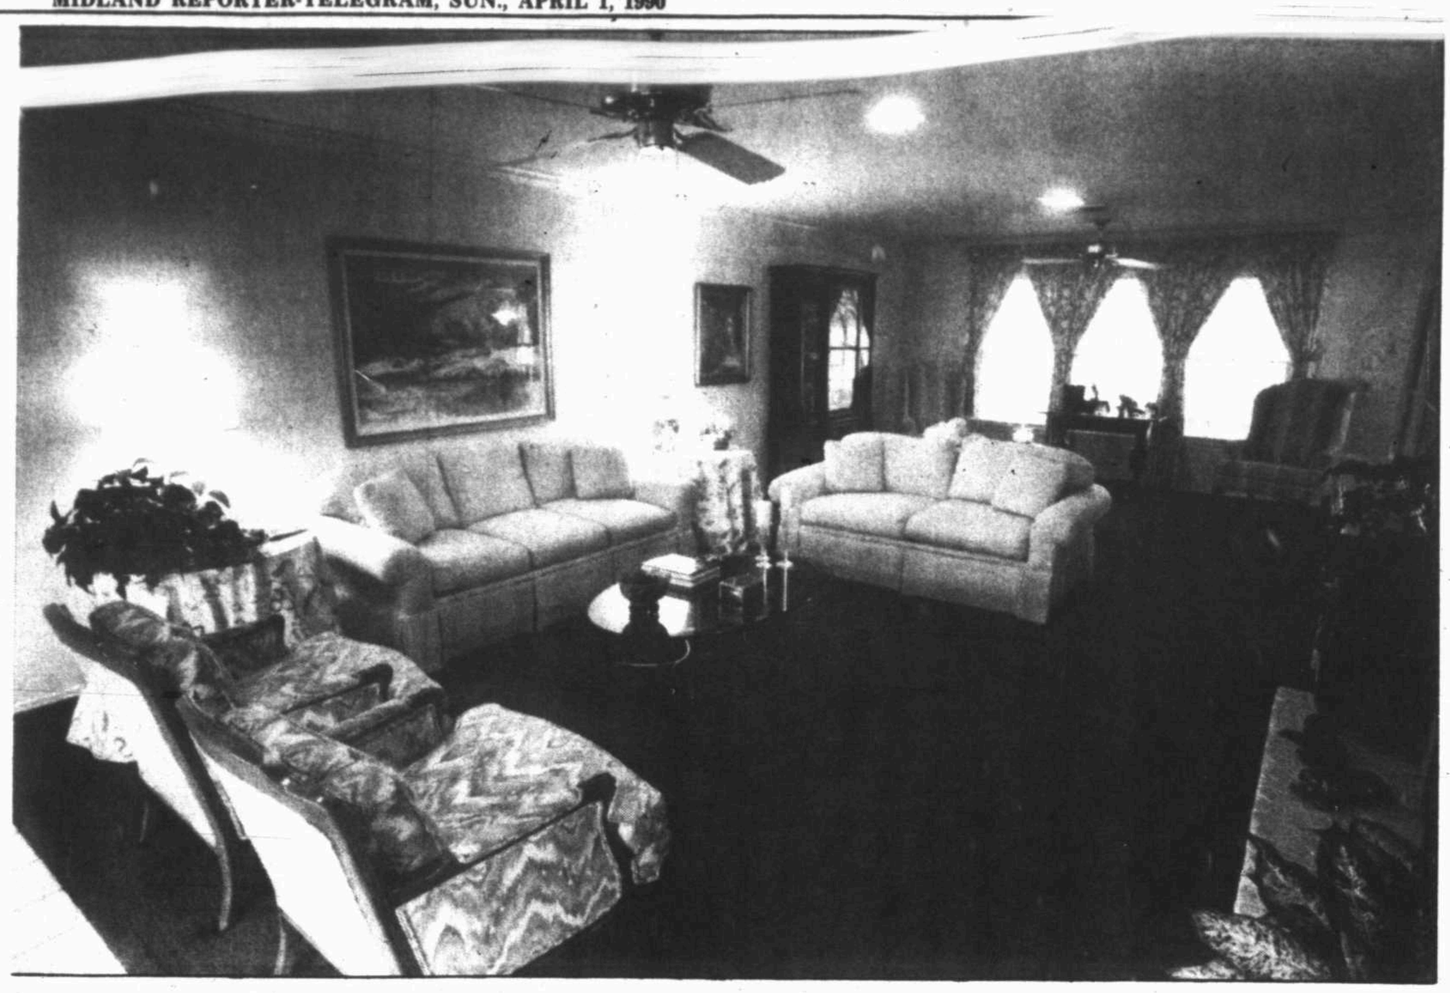

Currently being used as a study, the fourth upstairs room could be used as a bedroom if needed. A southwestern wallpaper adds color to this area. A built-in desk along the right wall wall includes two separate desk areas.

The second upstairs bath has a make-up vanity and a bathtub. A paper in many hues brightens the bath.

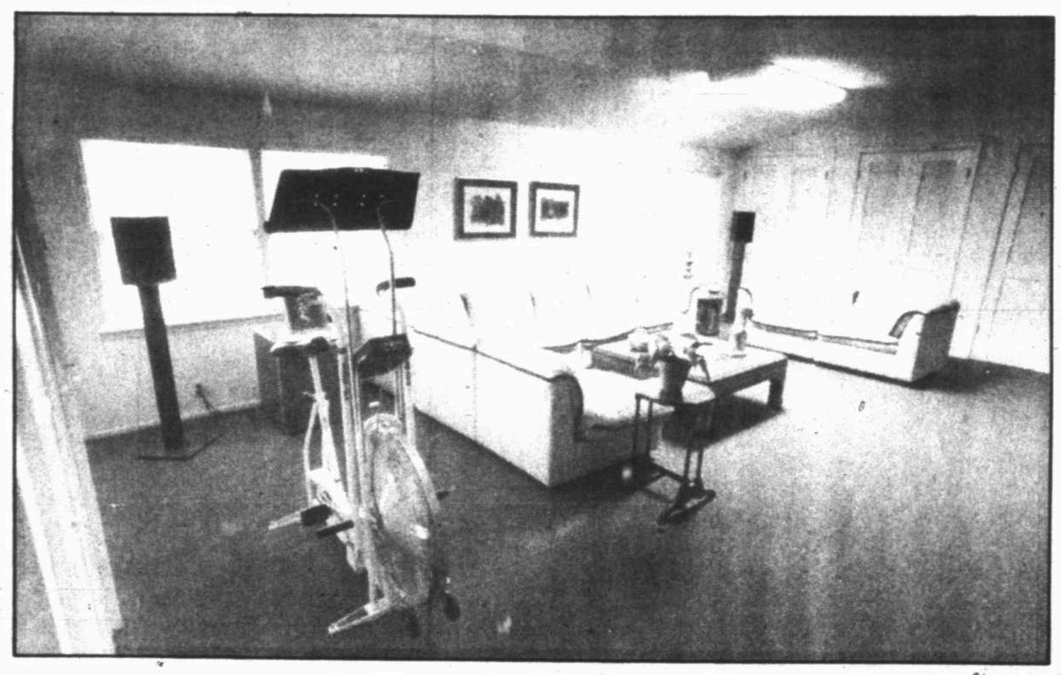

At the end of the upstairs area, a delightful room is situated and was planned for privacy. This multi-functional room has a wall of windows which overlook the back yard and closets lining two walls. This rectangular-shaped room is perfect for older children and their friends. A big screen television, comfortable couches and possibly a pool table are necessities that children will request for this room.

The other added features of this spacious family room include a sprinkler system, ceiling fans, a work shop in the second back yard, an intercom and an outdoor grill.

Langston Realtors is offering this approximately 4,300 square foot home for $299,000.

The family room, top photo, is decorated as elegantly as the formal living room. This area is adjacent to the sun room and has a second sitting area in front of a wall of windows.

Down the hall from the upstairs' bedrooms, a large game room is ideal for children who want to watch their favorite movies, play the latest CD or ride an exercise bike.

Adobe Realtors elected to RELO membership

Bill Jackson

Adobe Inc., Realtors, a prominent real estate broker also specializing in employee relocation in Midland, has been elected a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, headquartered in Chicago.

As a new member, Adobe joins with the approximately 1,400-member companies which compromise the RELO network of independent real estate brokers across the company who specialize in helping families to sell a house in one geographic area and buy a home in another.

Bill Jackson, owner of Adobe Inc., Realtors, says the election to the RELO network "represents another step in the continuing development of our firm and its ability to meet the real estate needs of the Midland area."

He adds, "Membership in the RELO network also will help Adobe in providing a broader range of services to transferees, including those being transferred into this area by major corporations."

Jackson recently became the sole owner of Adobe Inc., Realtors. Lavada Fowler and Jo Braden are still active associates of Adobe, whose company has a total of 15 sales associates. Adobe was elected to membership in the RELO network after meeting a number of exacting performance standards.

"RELO members must demonstrate expertise in the field of employee relocation and have a commitment to the long-term growth of their communities," Jackson said. "Our selection was made only after a complete background search and company profile was completed by the RELO network to determine our firm's abilities, community standing and level of professionalism. We are honored to be selected as a new member of the RELO team."

RELO member companies provide a wide range of services that go far beyond finding the right home in the right location. This may be in the areas of mortgage assistance, spouse and financial counseling or other services to orient the newcomer to the new location.

To expand the array of financial services it can offer corporate transfers in particular, the RELO network has entered into a joint venture agreement with the Dallas-based Associates Corporation of North America, a dynamic consumer/commercial finance unit. The new agreement will also allow RELO members to provide a wide range of financial services and products to transferees and their families.

Because of RELO organization is member-owned, service is the primary consideration. All services of the RELO network are provided to the transferee and his or her family at no additional cost or obligation.

Adobe Inc., Realtors is located at 3303 N. Midkiff and their experienced staff of agents can be contacted by calling 694-9548.

Updating can increase value

AP Newsfeatures

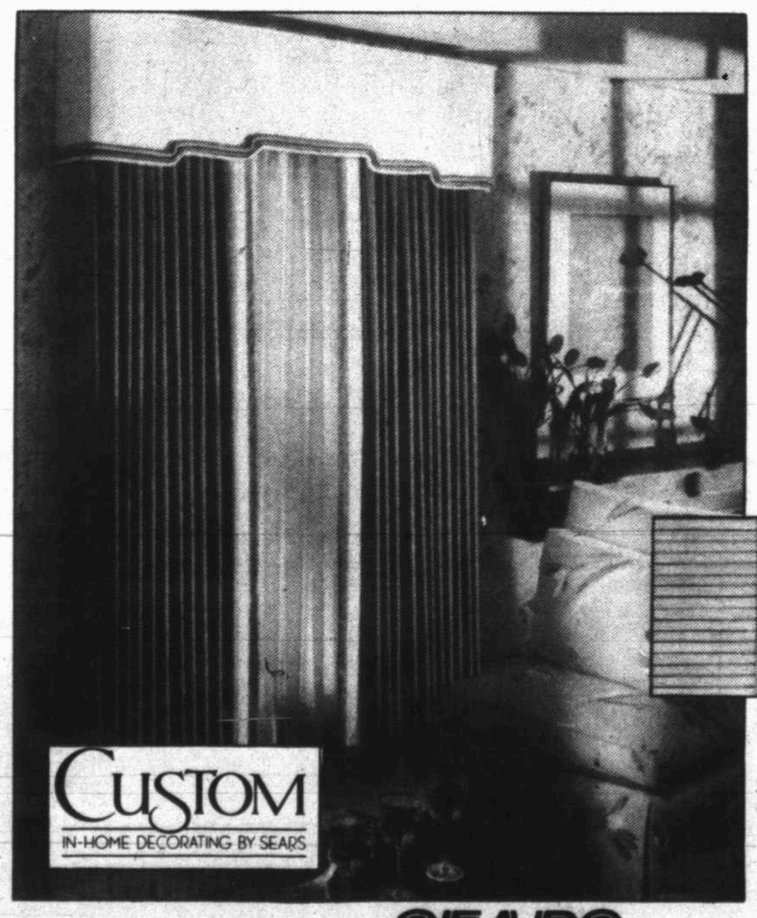

A home is likely to sell more quickly if buyers perceive it as a better value than homes of a comparable price.

According to Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Services, one way to gain a marketing edge is by remodeling the home with carefully selected projects, such as sprucing up the inside with new paint and carpeting. These and other simple interior improvements can help increase the value of a home and decrease the time it takes to sell.

Painting the walls and removing outdated wallpaper may be the best interior improvements one can make. Nothing makes a home look newer faster than painting — and it's an instant cure for outdated wallpaper and colors. For broader appeal among prospective buyers, paint the walls and ceilings in light neutral colors such as beige, white, off-white or gray. These colors suggest newness and cleanliness and can brighten a dull or outdated room.

The key to a quality job is adequate preparation. It's important to patch holes, scrape peeling paint, sand the surface and, if necessary, put on a primer coat. Choose a premium-quality paint as the difference in results far exceeds the difference in cost.

Prudential Ruth Young agent helps couple find winter home

By Jill Hancock
Advertising Feature Writer

When Al and Vonna Cope arrived in West Texas from Hendrik Ido Ambacht, in the Netherlands last fall, the last thing they expected to do while visiting their daughter in Balmorhea was to purchase a home in Midland. The Copes had toyed with the idea of finding a winter home in the States, but they assumed the home would be in Florida.

"While we were in Balmorhea, the weather was so nice that Al and I decided we would just look around for a home, fully intending to go to Florida, but we never left Texas," said Mrs. Cope.

One of the most positive aspects of finding a second home in Midland, other than the people and their friendliness, was due to its location to their 10 children and 11 grandchildren. "It is truly Midland because we are centrally located. We have children in Honolulu, Los Angeles, Houston, Denver, Balmorhea, Greenville, Kansas and Mississippi and two of our children live in New York," stated Mr. Cope.

Betty Sorensen, right, of the Prudential Ruth Young Realtors convinced Vonna and Al Cope that Midland was the city in which they needed to purchase a winter home. The Copes, along with their dog Brandy, live in The Netherlands six months of the year.

The Copes first began looking for houses in Odessa, due to the affordable housing market. "We were looking only at HUD homes in the beginning. An Odessa Realtor referred us to one in Midland, where we saw the HUD homes that were available here. In fact, I think we say all of them in this area," explained Mrs. Cope.

After discovering that none of these homes appealed to them, the Copes began looking in other neighborhoods. When they had lived in the Houston area in the '70s, their home had been in a subdivision similar to Green Tree Country Club Estates.

"Al and I had been driving around looking at homes in Green Tree when we met George Christy, who was returning to his home on his golf cart. We explained that we were looking at houses and he told us that his two-bedroom patio home was for sale. He wasn't sure if he could show his home, which is a Prudential Ruth Young Realtors listing, without a Realtor being present. His wife, Clara, called their office and explained the situation to Betty," said Mrs. Cope.

"I answered the phone that day," explained Betty Sorensen, an associate of the Prudential Ruth Young Realtors, "and told Clara to let the Copes see their home and I was on my way." Ms. Sorensen had no idea at that time what good friends she would become with customers whom saw was on her way to meet.

According to Mrs. Cope, it really is Ms. Sorensen's fault that they never reached Florida. "Betty made us stay here! We began looking at patio homes in Green Tree and saw a lot of them before finding the right one."

The Copes both said that Ms. Sorensen went over and beyond the call of duty in this real estate transaction. "Betty is so special...we could not have done without her. We had many delays but she was always there to help," added Mr. Cope.

"It took us a month longer to close than we anticipated. Items were faxed in Dutch which had to be officially translated," explained Ms. Sorensen. "Vonna even had to fly back to The Netherlands to get some financial papers for the mortgage company."

Mr. Cope stated this particular real estate transaction was "interesting" as well as exasperating and frustrating!

Because the tulips and the crocuses are starting to bloom in the Netherlands, the Copes have begun their return journey to their permanent home for the past 10 years. They both have mixed feelings about leaving Midland, but may return briefly this summer while Mrs. Cope attends her high school reunion in Coahoma.

In the meantime, they are looking forward to spending this beautiful time of the year abroad. Mr. Cope is a retired off-shore engineering manager for Neddrill, a Dutch oil company. During the 10 years in the Houston area, Mrs. Cope was an administrative assistant/executive secretary for Stewart and Stevenson Services Inc. for 10 years. The Copes now enjoy traveling, playing golf and visiting their children and families as often as possible. They also have a time-share condo in Portugal.

What's happening in the market? For the past several weeks, I've been writing about our busy, multiple contract market and then, unfortunately, in a short five to seven day period, our phones have almost quit ringing — except for sellers who want to know why their home is not being shown!

Langston

But not to worry. I believe we are just experiencing our usual "spring break" pause and can anticipate a reactivated market right after Easter. Contrary to what you may think, the majority of transferees do not take advantage of spring break vacations to go house looking, but rather treasure these times for family and schedule their company assisted home finding trip while children are in school.

What's happening in mortgages? Of special interest to recent buyers is a program featuring a fixed rate interest that (1) is ¼ percent to ½ percent lower than current quotes, (2) balloons in seven years, but (3) must be reissued by the underwriter for a $250 charge at the rates in effect at the time of reissuance. As few transferees can anticipate being in a property longer than seven years, they've provided the major market for these mortgages.

What's new on the market? I've referred to it as the "Cadillac " of Lafayette Place and it certainly is — my new listing is a truly elegant townhome in this unique and charming area. Built by the developer for himself, it features a pool, warm library plus spacious formals, two fireplaces, decks, lovely French doors and windows, and umpteen walk-in closets. A rare jewel for the buyer who wants beautiful entertaining space, luxury, minimum maintenance and the freedom to lock the door and travel!

As the owner of a townhome myself, I can truly say that once the children are off to school, it's the way to live — no grass to mow, lots of security and all the space, privacy and quiet you would ever want. With a sprinkler system, locked courtyards and an airplane ticket, townhome owners are free to pick up and go wherever they fancy. We've townhouses in every price, starting at $88,700 with Lewis Furche's wonderful patio home/pool on Maxwell (two master suites!), to Sue and Pete Snelson's spacious four bedrooms/three bath/pool on Pine, to George and Janice Thomas' stunning home on Winchester Court, to two fabulous offerings in Saddle Club Lakes. And if you've not been out to the Lakes recently, you really need to go check out the view, and the adjacent activity, of this really special location.

What's sold: We'll miss Melissa and Stephen Brown when they take off for El Paso at school's end. And they're going to miss their beautifully spacious, redecorated and remodeled home on Seaboard. This property was a pleasure to market, with a delightfully cooperative seller, lots of interested viewers and a negotiated contract in a period of just a few weeks!

Welcome to Bob and Gayle LoPiccolo who moved down from Denver with Union of Texas. When they told me that they lived on two acres in Colorado, and wanted a big ("Texas" big) lot here, I knew we might have a problem. But Johnny Whitley solved any problems by offering his wonderfully big lot on Green Tree North and building the LoPiccolos exactly what they wanted! Gayle chose beautifully soft colors, Johnny did his usual exceptional quality construction you really should see the cabinets in one of his homes!) and everyone's happy.

Congratulations to: the Langston Realtors Red Sox — our sales team in the just completed Chamber of Commerce Membership Drive, as of writing time for this column, we were losing our challenge to Jerry Jones' American Airlines Angels, and will owe them a dinner at Jeff Sharifi's Cafe West, but between us we should sell $3,500 or so in memberships and that's a winner for everyone.

Our first challenge to AA was "if you lose, fly us anywhere we want to go — if we lose, we'll show you any house you want to see." Their counter was "we'll wash your cars or you wash our place after its 11 p.m. arrival." I think Cafe West was a good compromise for all.

Our thanks to the Langston team members Marily Weir (one of the drive's leading salesmen), Gloria Lott, Patsy Berry, Flo White, Lucille Cummings and Kelly Chesson. As captain, I feel they are each an All Star player.

Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors has many qualified agents who bring many years of experience to the Midland real estate market. According to Dene Kelly, owner, the top agents for 1990 are: Lynn Cook, Jr., Colene Cowan, Pauline Turney and Denise Underwood.

Lynn Cook, Jr. moved to west Texas in 1969 and has been a resident in the Midland/Odessa area since 1977. Cook has a B.S. degree in the marketing/advertising field. He also operated his own business for 15 years where he gained experience in the management field.

Cook is involved with the U-Market program at Dene Kelly which is an added service to their customers. "Many homeowners prefer to sell their homes themselves and some homeowners cannot afford a full-service listing, Most of these homeowners realize that anything as important as selling a house can be very risky without professional help," added Cook.

"In this business, many times a person has to work long hours and most weekends. Since I feel that I am somewhat of a workaholic, the hours that a Realtor must keep are not a problem for me," said Cook.

In looking toward the future, Cook stated that one of his goals is to become one of the top producers in the Midland real estate market.

Selling homes, meeting new people and working with young couples who have never purchased a home are three things that make the real estate profession so rewarding to Colene Cowan.

Born and raised in Bladenboro, N.C., Cowan moved to west Texas 27 years ago. Her husband, Benny, was from this area and the Cowans have lived in Midland for eight years. Before obtaining her real estate license four years ago, Cowan was a student at Midland College. After studying accounting for a year and a half, she decided that acquiring a real estate license would be a great challenge for her.

"I thought becoming a Realtor would be a wonderful challenge for me and I didn't think I could do it, but I did," explained Cowan. "I have been a top seller for Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors for the past three years and was the salesperson for the month last August."

The greatest challenge that Cowan feels she has faced, other than getting her license, is finding the right house for a couple. "I really enjoy working with couples who have never bought a home before. It is so rewarding, and at times very trying, to help them find a suitable first home," added Cowan.

The Cowans have been married for 27 years and their daughter, Kim, is a student at Texas Tech University and will be graduating in May.

Pauline Turney entered the real estate profession in 1963 and has been a very successful Realtor who is dedicated to her customers and clients. She is a member of the Million Dollar Club and has earned various sales awards that include the Multiple Listing Service unit sales award and salesperson of the month award.

A native of Graham, Turney graduated from Graham High School and attended North Texas State University. She was employed as an X-ray technician and office assistant for several years before moving to Midland with her husband, Billy, and daughter, Paula.

Turney is an active member of the Midland Board of Realtors and is a former member of the Womens Council of Realtors. Her other volunteer activities include being a member of the Midland Womens Club and Book Review Unit, Ranchland Hills Country Club and First Baptist Church.

In her spare time, Turney likes to spend time wither her daughter and son-in-law, Phil Edwards. Kim is the choral director at Lee High School and Phil is chairman of the math department at Lee Freshman High School. Turney is also the proud grandmother of twin grandaughters, Clare Allison and Elizabeth Ashlee.

Denise Underwood, another top producer for Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors enjoy assisting her clients and friends with a new home this spring.

Although Underwood was born in Texas, she was raised overseas in Europe, Africia, Australia and Singapore. Since she traveled around quite a bit as a child and has visited many parts of the world, last summer she vacationed in Helsinki and Stockholm, she knows the needs and concerns of a family that has relocated to a new community.

Underwood has a degree from Brigham Young University and moved to Midland 11 years ago. She has been an associate of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors for three years and enjoys the interesting and different challenges that are presented to her each day in real estate.

"I like Midland and am very glad to be back in Texas. I think people trust me to be honest and efficient. My favorite part of being a Realtor is a happy client in the right home," explained Underwood.

She also handles residential lease property and was named salesperson for the month of June. She is married and is the mother of three children.

April Showers...
...won't bother you here. Everyone will have a "get away spot" to himself. Dad can go to his study. Mom can hide in the sun room. The kids can play games in the gameroom or watch TV in the den. And the living room will still be neat for incoming guests. And with 4 bedrooms, & 4 baths, everyone should be happy. At this price it won't be available for long...$148,000 and oh how affordable! This 3 bedroom, 2 bath brick home is priced so right...$23,000. It is fresh and clean and can be yours for so very little money. If you have good credit, call me to see how Midland's new Homeowner Incentive Plan can put you in this almost new home for as little as $200.00!! Call me today!

Zoned Office
This could be an investment in the future. This cute 2 bedroom home and the rest of it's block are zoned O-1. Use for a rental while you wait for future uses. Or convert immediately. And at $28,000, it is affordable!

No Fooling Here!
But, you can't drive by because there's nothing you can see. Tall trees & shrubs shelter the front of this spacious 4 bedroom home in skyline with 2 living areas & 2 dining areas. Just lots and lots of space inside. And nice backyard for the kids. Let me show you how much $115,000 will buy.

Home & Business
all in one spot, is this what you need? I have the ideal set-up between Midland & Odessa. Very nice one owner home on 3/4 of an acre. With 4 storage bldgs, 20x30 shop (heated & insulated) Quiet area

PARADE OF HOMES

The informal living room features a free-standing fireplace and art by many local artists, including the portrait of Flo Curry, painted by her husband Max, hanging over the fireplace.

The sunroom of the Curry home, decorated in warm shades of watermelon, fills with light from its large windows. The room opens onto the patio/pool area of the home.

FROM HOUSE TO HOME

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Midland Junior Woman's Club will present its 21st annual Parade of Homes 1-5:30 p.m. April 22. Tickets are $7.50 and can be purchased from any club member or by calling 697-4506 or 684-0993. No tickets will be sold at the door and children under 12 will not be admitted. The proceeds will benefit the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Special Care Infants, The Problem Pregnancy Center and Attention Deficit Disorder Association of Parents and Teachers.

When Max and Flo Curry and their five children moved into #1 Deerfield Drive in Midland 11 years ago, they began making the house their home.

"When we bought the house, it was very dark and all chopped up," Mrs. Curry said. "My main criteria was to get as much light in the house as I could."

The result is a home that radiates a warm, friendly and inviting feeling — from its formal, mirrored dining area to the light and airy sun room to the vividly-colored children's bedrooms.

Mrs. Curry, with her friend Bettye Jones and builder and architect Buddy Lamb, basically changed the "feel" of the house to one that fit the family's lifestyle.

"The architect told me what I could do to keep things from falling down," Mrs. Curry said. "Basically, what we did — Bettye and the builder and I — was we 'did' as we went along. ... The basic colors are just colors we happened to like."

To the left of the entryway is an informal den area, with free-standing fireplace and many contemporary paintings — including one over the fireplace painted by Max Curry.

The fireplace separates this informal room from the sun room, which features an entire wall of glass windows and doors. The room is decorated in shades of navy, mauve and watermelon pinks, and its glass wall provides a view of the pool and patio area.

THE MASTER SUITE is restful, with its mauve and peach color scheme. A sitting area overlooks and pool, and the suite features his-and-hers bathrooms — hers has a sunken tub and hot tub, and his has a shower that doubles as a steam room.

The two other downstairs bedrooms are mirror images of each other — one is decorated in vivid red, the other in vivid blue. They were the rooms of two boys who were close in age, Mrs. Curry said. "We changed the two bedrooms downstairs from little boys' rooms to more grown-up rooms" as the boys grew up, she said. The bathroom just outside these bedrooms is painted a vivid green, to carry through the colorful aspect of the boys' wing.

This elegant, angled stairway in the tiled entry way of the home of Max and Flo Curry catches the eye of visitors to the home. The entry way leads to three living areas — to the right is the formal dining-/living room; to the left is the more informal living room; and to the rear is the sun room, with its wall of windows and glass doors. Upstairs features two bedrooms.

The bright look of the formal living and dining area of the Curry home is accented with the contrasting colors of peach and navy blue on beige. Large mirrors grace the walls in the dining area.

Garden club members travel to Fort Worth

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Members of the Green Thumb Garden Club had a fun trip to Fort Worth last weekend. Flying in, they were met by a party bus, on which they were served hot ham and cheese sandwiches and juice while en route to The Worthington Hotel in historic, downtown Fort Worth.

McKnight-Harrison

Their busy agenda included visits to the Amon Carter and Kimball Art Museums, the Japanese Gardens and a flower show, as well as a play at Casa Manana and an elegant brunch on The Bridge at the Worthington before returning home. They also enjoyed the restaurants in Sundance Square, an area adjacent to their hotel.

Trip co-ordinators were Mary (Mrs. Jim) Rasmussen and Doris (Mrs. T.E.) Spires. Other club members making the trip were Betty Barnes, Beth (Mrs. George) Barton, Lyn (Mrs. Paul) Breen, Lou (Mrs. Jim) Butler, Jo Ann (Mrs. George) Clark, Aida Dunlap, Jan (Mrs. Robert) Fitting, Tanya (Mrs. Charles) Godfrey, Marilyn (Mrs. Bruno) Hanson, Joyce (Mrs. Jack) Hauke.

Also, Joan (Mrs. William) Henry, Carole (Mrs. Robert) Hobbs, Marilyn Hooper, Doris (Mrs. Van) Howbert, Jan (Mrs. Bill) Kalil, Dorothy (Mrs. Jim) Moring, Mary Lynn Parsley, Joy (Mrs. Bill) Seltzer, Edna (Mrs. Russell) Sexton, Donna (Mrs. Darrell E.) Smith, Bonnie (Mrs. Carl) Stewart, Ann (Mrs. Don) Wambaugh and Patricia Wettstein.

Going as guests were Dikka Fitting, Fran (Mrs. Dick) Saxe, Tommy Tankersley, Ruth Story, Virginia (Mrs. Bill) Rutter, Jane (Mrs. Tracy) Clark and Fran Hillin. The group was joined in Fort Worth by several friends and relatives who reside in the area.

MIX AND MATCH, bright and lively colors and lots of black and white were featured in the lovely style show presented by Robbie Casey's for the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's March luncheon meeting.

Those attending found out that large gold earrings are in, as well as evening clothes trimmed in metallic gold braid. Among the crowd's favorites were the coral jeans, metallic gold, shimmering blouse and striking plaid jacket; a black and check onion skirted dress and black and white miniature polka dotted dress.

Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Barbara (Mrs. Charles) Hartwell, Jan (Mrs. Robert) Fitting, Mitzi (Mrs. Byrne) O'Neill and Lorraine (Mrs. Charles) Coffman.

A St. Patrick's Day theme was carried out in decorations.

Among those attending were Diana (Mrs. Ed) Weyman and daughter, Laura; Denna (Mrs. Allen) McGuire and daughter, Edie; Andrea Neisig, Flo (Mrs. Sam) White, Anne (Mrs. Jack) Herbig, Kay (Mrs. George) Smith, Sudy (Mrs. H.G.) Bedford, Judy (Mrs. Matt) Murphy and Sara (Mrs. Norman) Fry.

ALYSON ALDRIDGE has returned from a performing trip to Mexico with the All-American Drill Team. Recently named to "Who's Who in American Drill Teams," she joined girls from across the United States, who danced in Mexico City, Iaxco and Acapulco.

The performances benefited local orphanages in each city, and the girls took gifts for the orphans. The Lighthouse Christian Bookstore, Upstairs Downstairs and Driscoll's sent generous donations of clothing and other gifts from Midland.

FORMER LONGTIME Midlander Lula F. Almand of Arlington was honored recently with an 80th birthday party at the home of her son, Lonnie Kreger, in the Valley View Community. Also hosting was her daugher, Mary (Mrs. Dean) Mutti of Midland.

Twenty-five persons, including her children and grandchildren, attended.

Mrs. Almand was born March 26, 1910, in Haskell, Texas, and moved to Midland in 1951. She has lived in Arlington for approximately the last 10 years.

MIDLAND HIGH senior Scott Satterwhite was guest of honor at a recent dinner party in the home of Jan and Dick McMillan. Co-hosts were Sherry and Jerry Hewett and Sue and Dan Secker.

The school colors of purple and gold were used to decorate for the seated dinner for 25 guests.

The son of Linda and Rodney Satterwhite, Scott plans to attend Texas A&M University.

OVER DESSERT AND COFFEE, some 250 persons looked on as the Pilot Club of Midland recently presented its second annual Spring Spectacular Celebrity Style Show at Midland Country Club.

Local celebrities, along with Pilot Club members and others, modeled approximately 75 of the latest in spring attire from Barbara's Fashions of Odessa, Betty's Boutique, Janee's Evening Wear and Lou's as well as original designs from Cotton Tales, By Billie and Q-T's, all of Midland.

Special entertainment, a humorous fashion forecast for the 90s, was presented by members of Wilshire Park Baptist Church. Bringing the show to a close was the arrival of the Easter Bunny with treats for the children in the audience.

Personal preference bucks color trends

Associated Press

Selecting a satisfying color scheme for the home is one of the most confusing aspects of decorating, says Margaret Walch, who suggests that the best way to sort it all out is to consider your own color preferences instead of looking at what others are doing.

Color is the first noticed aspect of a room, she says. You get an impression of color before you notice shape and form. Of course, color and form are closely related in terms of tradition. "Victorian furnishings," she says, "would look ridiculous in white."

Walch, a director of the Color Association of the United States, which forecasts color trends for the trade, is co-author with Augustine Hope of "The Color Compendium," (Van Nostrand Reinhold, $49.95). The fascinating new book combines brief dictionary-style descriptions with extensive essays by international authorities on subjects such as color in decoration, architecture and fashion.

"Most people," Walch says, "are either trendies or traditionalists." Those who are extremely receptive to new color ideas she calls trendies. In the 1980s, a trendy would have jumped into postmodernist colors or Miami Vice pastels or perhaps would have preferred high tech black, white and red.

TRADITIONALISTS IN THE '80s, she says, stayed within a Victorian or a southwestern palette. They favored mauve and rose mixed with pink and traditional blue shades such as periwinkle, navy and sky blue.

To learn which type you are, look for clues in the mirror. Open your closet. Observe what type of objects you surround yourself with. People often have erroneous ideas of their preference. "They may say they love traditional things," she says, "but they don't have any of the accouterments.

"I was brought up in a home in which color minimalism predominated. My parents' idea of a good color scheme was white walls with perhaps one orange wall. So in a youthful protest which she says is typical, she spent the first 10 years of her marriage in a multicolored Victorian home. "I had been told 'don't move the ashtrays,' so in my home we had relaxed clutter and multicolor."

Ultimately, however, she returned to her color roots. "I moved into a 600-square-foot space and painted it white. My kids looked at me and said 'mother, there's nothing in this place.'"

Designer Michael Love camouflages a single-room efficiency apartment with clever use of color fabrics and textiles.

For those who say they can't find a particular hue, she advises patience. Colors move in cycles and eventually return to the marketplace.

"A typical cycle lasts 10 years, a quick one lasts seven years, a long cycle is 15 years," she says, adding that in home furnishings, there are from two to five major cycles operating at any one time.

Writing a comprehensive book on color took nearly seven years because of the extensive research required in this interdisciplinary field with input from science, technology and cultural fields. To Walch, one of the most important points about color is its pervasiveness; making color choices every day is unavoidable.

THOUGH THE CHOICES may seem personal or random, they are usually determined by cultural experience. For example, most Americans and Europeans select blue as their favorite color. In Japan, white is preferred.

"I think Josef Albers was right when he said that color is the most elusive art," says Walch of the late Bauhaus artist who taught an entire generation on the importance of color.

The idea that color choices reveal personal traits — that black and purple are the colors of intellectual acumen, for example — and that some colors have healing power and influence productivity do have validity, she says, but are too simplistic.

Color can also influence behavior. For example, she says, it's known that "color is a distraction in the workplace, so you want to remove it, but not to the extent that you put people to sleep."

There's a subtle variation in color favorites for home decorating, depending on which region of the country you live in, according to Du Pont. Though the same colors are popular, hues vary with the natural landscape and quality of light in a particular area.

DEAR ABBY

Hostess flustered over stripper

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As a favor to a friend, I held a bridal shower in my home because my house is very roomy. I did none of the planning myself; the girls in the bridal party arranged everything.

Van Buren

Unfortunately, one of the things they arranged for was a male striptease dancer. I had never seen a performance of this kind and was not prepared for it. The dancer brought some taped music and started to dance to it, removing more and more of his clothing as he went along. When he was down to nearly nothing, I stepped in and said, "That's enough." Then I sent him away.

The women in the audience ranged from infants in arms, teenagers, adults — to a lady near 80! Some laughed and applauded, and a few had started to leave. The bride-to-be said if I had not stopped it, she herself would have gotten up and left.

I later learned that they paid this man well over $100 for his services!

Now I would hesitate to hold another shower here, or go to someone else's, because apparently this is the thing to do.

How does one avoid this kind of embarrassing situation? Must I inquire with each invitation as to what to expect? Or should I just send a gift and stay home? Answer soon, as there are three more showers scheduled. — DISTRESSED AND EMBARRASSED

DEAR DISTRESSED: Before offering your home for future parties, you should inquire as to what kind of entertainment is planned. Since striptease dancing is apparently "the thing to do" in your circle, you could save yourself distress and embarrassment if you knew in advance what (and how much) was coming off.

DEAR ABBY: My 32-year-old brother is an alcoholic. I have wanted to tell him many times that I am concerned about his health, his family and his future, but I never seem to find the right words or the right time.

Even though he lives only 45 minutes away, I would like to write him a letter because I think I could express myself better that way, but someone told me that this is cowardly — that I should tell him face-to-face.

Do you think I should write to him, Abby? And if I do, have you any suggestions about how to handle such a letter? I realize that I can't force him to do anything, but I'd never be able to live with myself if something alcohol-related should happen to him, and I had not spoken up. — WORRIED SISTER

DEAR SISTER: There is nothing "cowardly" about expressing yourself in a letter. Your brother already knows that he has a problem, but he may not be aware that someone who loves him is genuinely concerned about his health, his family and his future. Telling him face-to-face might cause him to be defensive. He may even deny that he has a drinking problem and tell you to mind your own business.

But if you express your genuine concern in a letter, he will have something to read and reread. Write straight from the heart. Avoid being preachy or judgmental. A letter may be exactly what your brother needs to inspire him to seek help for his problem.

CURRYS: Decor reflects growth

(From 1E)

Two large bedrooms upstairs show the personalities of their former occupants. One — the boys' room — is masculine with its dark woods and exercise equipment. The other is a study in femininity, with ruffles, pastel colors and private bath with window seat.

Across the patio-pool from the master bedroom, the Currys added a guest wing with private entrance — complete with private bath and semi-kitchen — and decorated it with bright colors and Chinese-style accessories.

Five children were reared in the Curry home, and even though they are grown now, some artwork they made as children has been framed and hung with pride in the upstairs hall as a rememberance of their younger years.

In fact, art is truly a family affair at the Curry home — Curry himself is an artist, and many of his works decorate the home. Other paintings throughout the house were done by local artists.

With its bright colors and comfortable feel, the Currys' have truly turned a house into a family home.

'Bridgeaphobics' suffer panic attacks

Copley News Service

People who have a fear of driving on bridges really can cause a traffic jam when they suffer a panic attack. And bridgeaphobics really can lose it on the 26-mile-long Lake Pontchartrain Causeway in New Orleans. But New Orleans psychiatrist Chester Scrignar says the phobia is very treatable.

First, Scrignar has the patient visualize the bridge in his office, then he drives the phobics out onto the bridge. The bridge lends itself to treatment because there are seven crossovers where he and the patient can stop and overcome the anxiety. Finally, after the phobic has ridden once or twice, it's his turn to take the wheel while the therapist rides in the passenger seat.

Bridegroom should use planning checklist too

Staff Report

Traditionally, the bride does almost all of the preparations for the wedding. But the current trend is the bridegroom becoming more involved in the planning stages. The couple is beginning to share more of the responsibilites for the wedding. The following tips will help make the bridegroom's planning go a little smoother:

Six to twelve months before

Purchase the bride's engagement ring.
Discuss with fiancee the date and type of wedding.
Start on your guest list.
Choose best man and ushers.
Start planning and making necessary arrangements for the honeymoon.
Discuss and plan with fiancee you new home together.
If fiancee is moving in with you, start cleaning out closets, cupboards and drawers to make room for your bride and wedding gifts.

Four months before

Shop with fiancee for wedding rings.
Complete your guest list, including full names, addresses and zip codes with phone numbers.
Check requirements for blood test and marriage license in your state, or the state you are being married in.
Select and order men's wedding attire with your fiancee.
Finalize all honeymoon plans and send in deposits if required (don't delay — some resorts fill up fast in popular months).

Two months before

Meet with officiant to finaliza ceremony details.
Assist parents with plans for the rehearsal dinner party.
Discuss the amount and the financial arrangement of the fowers whch are the bridegroom's responsibility.
Arrange accommodations for out-of-town attendants.

One month before

See that all attendants have been fitted and wedding attire has been ordered.
Purchase gifts for best man and ushers.
Purchase weding gift for fiancee, if gifts are being exchanged.
Pick up wedding rings. Make sure they fit.
Take care of business and legal affairs (add bride's name to insurance policies and medical plans, make a new will, add her name to joint checking account or joint charge cards).
If you have both agreed to a prenuptial agreement, have it drawn up and signed.

Two weeks before

Together with fiancee, gather necessary documents and get your marriage license.
Arrange wedding day transportation.
Reconfirm accommodations for out-of-town guests.
If moving, give change-of-address card to post office; arrange to have utilities and phone service turned on in the new home.
If not moving, finish cleaning and reorganizing your home, help your fiancee move her things.
Have your hair cut.

The week before

Discuss all final details with fiancee; offer to assist if needed.
Pick up and try on wedding attire.
Pack clothes for honeymoon.
Reconfirm all honeymoon reservations. If flying, make sure you have plane tickets.
See to it that you and your attendants are at the rehearsal and they know their duties.

New alarm shakes you awake

Copley News Service

Thanks to a new vibrating device, people with hearing problems don't have to worry about missing an early appointment because they didn't hear their alarm.

It's called Shake Awake, and spokeswoman Kathi Sharpe-Ross says it's specifically designed to vibrate people awake.

The new alarm clock is about the size of fist with a digital clock readout and fits under a pillow.

At the present time it emits a very intense vibration capable of waking the dead.

And some sound sleepers have even put the thing under their matresses and still were awakened.

Sharpe-Ross says hearing people also find it great because they can be awakened without disturbing the person sleeping next to them.

Floor covering alternatives offered

Associated Press

Let your home reflect your needs by choosing floor coverings suited to your taste, life style and budget.

If wall-to-wall carpeting in every room of the house doesn't appeal to you, here are some practical alternatives.

WOOD FLOORS

■ Wood floors work well in living rooms and other formal areas.

■ Wood flooring can be either hardwood or softwood.

Hardwood, primarily oak, is available in many finishes and in parquet squares as well as plank or strip flooring boards. Hardwood is warm and comfortable underfoot, has a natural look and ages well. It is durable and, if properly sealed, water resistant. It is by far the most popular wood for new floors.

Softwood, which includes spruce, fir and pine is more easily dented or scratched than hardwood. But an existing softwood floor may be a good candidate for refinishing.

■ If you have an older home with wood floors, don't make any decisions about new flooring before considering a face lift for the old wood. The floors may only need polishing or, at most, sanding down and sealing with polyurethane or tung oil for a brand new look.

■ If your wood floors are in such poor condition that they can't be revived by sanding, staining or bleaching, they may still be rescued by paint, which can cover a multitude of pits and blemishes. Here are some tips:

Tough, durable and washable deck paint gives a thick protective coating to heavy-traffic areas such as stairs and entryways. For longer wear, finish off a painted floor with a couple of coats of polyurethane. To postpone repainting, apply a new coat of polyurethane every year or so.

Finally, to give extra character to a stained wood floor, try stenciling a border or paint a checkerboard pattern or an "area rug" on it.

CERAMIC TILE

Ceramic tile comes in a variety of sizes, shapes, colors and patterns. Unglazed or mat-glazed tiles are usually used on floors (tiles with a glossy finish are more slippery). If you choose unglazed tiles, coat them with a waterproof sealant.

Ceramic tile is durable and stain resistant, but susceptible to scratching. Even mat-glazed tiles can be slippery when wet, so consider placing a non-skid mat or rug on a tile floor that is near the kitchen sink, in the bathroom or in an entryway.

RESILIENT FLOORING

Resilient flooring includes sheet vinyl, vinyl tile, vinyl-asphalt tile and cork tile. Resilient flooring is durable, but keep in mind the material's thickness usually determines how long it will last. It is water and stain resistant but may show scruffs and scratches. Vinyl tiles or sheets with a no-wax surface offer resistance to most household scratches and stains. Resilient flooring is available with embossed, carved, textured and grained surfaces that offer good-looks as well as the ability to hide wear, seams, floor irregularities and dents left by furniture.

AREA RUGS

If you like carpeting but don't care for wall-to-wall, try an area rug. You save the cost of having the carpet installed, you can reposition the rug to distribute wear and you can take it with you if you move.

To make the most of an area rug, keep these tips in mind:

■ A color that blends with the surrounding floor will make a room appear larger. A contrasting color will make a room seem more intimate.

■ In a large living room, area rugs are a good way to define groupings of furniture. But prevent the "postage stamp" look — don't use too small a rug in a large room.

New York designer Lee Bogert uses an area rug over a larger carpet to anchor a hearth-side seating arrangement in a traditional country living room.

Family forced to flee, destroy home

Teenage son's cancer blamed on dangerously high pesticide levels

N.Y. Times News Service

MANCHACA, Texas — The fellow in the white protective suit with the breathing apparatus seemed oddly out of place in Tina Lancaster's home, where every room looked like a photograph in Austin Homes And Gardens, which she founded and formerly published.

But that's the only way Chuck Farmer feels comfortable entering the house, which he says is so contaminated by chlordane, heptachlor and other pesticides that it is uninhabitable.

Chlordane and heptachlor, until recently commonly used to kill termites and fire ants, have caused cancer in mice in laboratory experiments and are capable of inducing a variety of ill-health effects.

"Just about everybody who has come out here has gotten sick," Farmer said. "This stuff is really bad."

Farmer and other employees of his firm, Texas Industrial Waste Control Inc., soon will don the unsettling suits with their air supply systems and embark on a sadly destructive mission at the Lancaster home, in the Manchaca community south of Austin.

THE CREW MEMBERS will take the paintings and the photographs down from the walls, roll up the rugs and carpets, remove the dishes and silverware from the kitchen, pack up the clothes and linens from the closets.

They will get every item accumulated over the years by a family of five — toys and tools, knickknacks and throw pillows, breadboards and shower curtains, books and television sets, appliances, couches, beds, tables and chairs.

Yes, even the century-old grand piano with the silky-smooth wooden finish.

"I don't want to be here when they take it out," Lancaster said.

Chuck Farmer and his workers will take these things outside and load them on trucks that will haul them to a Travis County landfill, where they will be promptly covered with dirt.

Then they will tear down the 6,000-square-foot stucco home and haul it off to the landfill for burial. Finally, they'll dig up all the soil around the house and truck it away for disposal as well.

And when they're finished, for good measure, they'll destroy even the white protective suits themselves.

For the Lancasters — Tina; her husband, Austin gynecologist Joe Scott Lancaster; and their children, Christi, 17, Joey, 16, and Kathleen, 14 — that may be the only way to regain some use of their property, which they abandoned in September.

Family members will not set foot in the house without a respirator because they are convinced that the chlordane, heptachlor and other pesticides found permeating their home and furnishings have caused their health problems — Tina Lancaster's headaches, her husband's lung illness, the children's fatigue and concentration difficulties.

"I don't think they'll ever move back into that house," Farmer said. "We're going to do everything we can to clean it up so eventually they can move back onto the land."

THE LANCASTERS aren't alone. Across Texas, as many as 100 families have faced similar problems, said Casey Bergen of Dallas, who formed Citizens Against Pesticide Misuse after her family had to abandon and destroy their chlordane-contaminated home.

"We became ill as soon as we moved in," Bergen said. "Headaches, nausea, blurred vision, hair loss. My eyelashes fell out, and the goldfish and plants kept dying.

"The doctor suggested we get out of the house and we left. We thought we would be back, but we never, ever set foot in that house again."

Now Bergen's 19-year-old son is fighting cancer, which she blames on pesticide contamination.

The incidence of problems involving the use of chlordane and heptachlor for termite control may seem minuscule compared with the estimated 30 million American homes treated with them.

But those problems are only one aspect of growing global concern over the use of these chemicals, whose attractive qualities as pesticides — they were cheap, effective and long-lasting — ensured they would be abundantly used and become persistent environmental problems.

Although they have been off the general market in this country since 1988, the two pesticides can last in the environment for 25 or 30 years.

MEMBERS OF THE same chemical family as DDT — which was banned in the mid- 1970s — chlordane and heptachlor enter and move up the food chain and accumulate in fish and animals, including humans.

Widespread use of the chemicals in the United States to control fire ants as well as termites has led to contaminated soil washing into streams and rivers, where chlordane and heptachlor find their way into the flesh of fish and the people who eat it.

In Texas, state and local health departments have advised against human consumption of fish caught in Austin's Town Lake and the Trinity River in the Dallas-/Fort Worth area.

Although the pesticides originally were used in Texas agriculture, the Environmental Protection Agency restricted those uses after lab tests produced cancer in mice.

Pesticide operators can no longer legally use chlordane and heptachlor, but nothing prevents private individuals — many of whom stockpiled the insecticides before they were taken off the shelves — from continuing to use them to control fire ants.

The Texas Water Commission has proposed banning chlordane use by private individuals as well. The commission has petitioned the Agricultural Resources Protection Authority, which regulates pesticide use, to adopt such a rule.

"Nobody can tell us how much of that stuff is still out there," said commission chairman Buck Wynne. "The best thing to do is to stop using it across the board."

Wynne said the commission is conducting a pilot pesticide amnesty program in 40 West Texas counties — allowing farmers to bring in banned pesticides for free, proper disposal — which will provide some knowledge of what such a program costs.

SCIENCE HAS FAILED to provide guidance on what levels of exposure to the pesticides would be considered safe. Guidelines developed by the National Academy of Sciences in 1982 are widely used, but critics say they were designed for a particular circumstance and were not based on health-related studies.

In the Lancasters' case, for example, tests by the state Health Department and a private consultant found chlordane and heptachlor in the home, along with three other pesticides, but at levels below the NAS guidelines.

This was small comfort to the family, whose physician had determined they were being affected by an air contaminant and had recommended they move out of the house until the problem could be resolved.

Still another problem is that home insurance policies typically will not pay damage claims resulting from pesticide contamination.

Like others who have had to flee a chemical invasion of their homes, the Lancasters face having to sue their pesticide operator — in this case, Orkin — to recover their financial investments in their homes and belongings as well as the considerable expense of cleanup and medical attention.

Orkin officials, who said they had just received a demand letter from Dick Gregg, the Lancasters' attorney, declined to comment on the case.

"The house is uninhabitable," said Gregg. "They can't sell it, because no one would buy it. I don't think you can ever do anything with it except tear it down, and the same goes for everything in there."

Plant produces banned chemicals

N.Y. Times News Service

Although you can't buy them in the United States due to health concerns, chlordane and heptachlor are still manufactured by Velsicol Chemical Corp. at its Memphis, Tenn. plant for shipment to foreign countries.

Environmentalists contend it is immoral to allow U.S. companies to profit from the sale of pesticides banned here and warn the chemicals are returning to American consumers in imported produce.

But Velsicol officials, who dispute the safety hazard of their products, say the only proven cases of food contamination resulted from a misuse of the pesticides. Federal health officials also downplayed concerns.

Velsicol is "exporting pesticides too dangerous to be used here and contaminating people, the environment and wildlife overseas as well as the food U.S. consumers are eating," said Sandra Marquardt of Greenpeace's Washington, D.C. headquarters. "It's unconscionable."

Marquardt said Velsicol, the sole manufacturer of chlordane and heptachlor, is creating a "circle of poison" that exposes the public and the environment during both manufacture and global use.

The "circle" was closed, she said, when the two pesticides and their breakdown products turned up in U.S. Food and Drug Administration tests of imported beef, fish, cheese and vegetables.

Donna Jennings of Velsicol said the test results Marquardt referred to showed pesticide concentrations that were below FDA safety levels.

The only recent case where the pesticides exceeded FDA safety levels involved beef imported from Honduras in 1988 that had been contaminated by an improper use of chlordane, Jennings said.

Chlordane and heptachlor are not registered for use on food products overseas, Jennings said. "If there is food contamination, it is the company's position that it was misused," she said.

Ellis Gunderson of the FDA's Center for Food Safety said low levels of chlordane and heptachlor are routinely found in imported food, but "that doesn't prove the 'circle of poison.' It just proves these things are still in the environment."

A field treated with chlordane 20 years ago will still produce crops with traces of the pesticide, he said.

"Chlordane is one of the least of our worries," Gunderson said.

But Marquardt said the FDA safety levels themselves are open to question and are not based on scientific, health-related study.

AT WIT'S END

Hair argument can stand some lightening up

By Erma Bombeck

The three morning television shows have focused on an old question, "Do blondes have more fun and bigger ratings than brunettes?"

Bombeck

For as long as I can remember, dark-haired women have been treated as an acquired taste — like anchovies. They're the villains in novels, the stepmothers in fairy tales and the witches in films. They're represented by the Leona Helmsleys, the Alexises and the girl who never gets the guy.

If Jane Pauley had been blond, she never would have grown older. If Kathleen Sullivan had been blonde, she never would have been replaced. If Zsa Zsa Gabor had been a brunette, she'd be making license plates in a penal institution somewhere.

I don't know what it is about light hair that seems to bring forth an image of goodness, innocence and vulnerability, but it has always been so, ever since golden-curly-headed, sweet, orphaned Shirley Temple triumphed over mean-spirited, spoiled, brattish Jane Withers. You have to wonder if Harry would have loved Sally if she had dark hair. Would Jane Russell have been the legend if she had gotten the bleach and Marilyn Monroe the dye? Would the world be rooting for Ivana if she had black hair?

Some stars saw the handwriting on the contracts and changed the course of their careers by lightening up. I used to see Linda Evans on "The Rockford Files" as a brunette, but her career didn't really take off until she became blond Krystle on "Dynasty." Loni Anderson went unnoticed as a brunette; it wasn't until she emerged as a sexy blonde on "WKRP" that she became a star.

The irony is that blondes still carry with them a stigma of their own — that of being "dumb." How many blondes do you see in the U.S. Senate? Can you actually see Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor with platinum hair being treated with any credibility? Or Sen. Nancy Kassebaum or Elizabeth Dole being spoken to in words over three syllables if they were blondes? Forget the polls; I could have told Geraldine Ferraro that people don't vote for blondes for vice president!

I say you can't tell what's inside the package by the wrapping on the outside or the size of the box. Meryl Streep is blond and she's smart. Elizabeth Taylor is sexy and she's a brunette.

We've been told too long that women are worth an expensive hair coloring. Maybe we should be rewarded for what we contribute to this world. That's what we're really worth.

If I sound passionate about this, it's because I just had my roots dyed ... sable brown.

Sun hot stuff

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The sun has a temperature of about 11,000 degrees and is more than 864,000 miles in diameter.

It is 109 times the diameter of the earth and 400 times larger around than the moon. Its gravity is 27 times that of ours.

If a person could stand on the sun's surface, they would weigh more than two tons.

The sun is about 93 million miles from the earth and its light takes just over eight minutes to reach us.

Many other stars are larger than the sun. Betelgeuse is more than a billion times as big. Arcturus, 100 times the diameter of the sun, gives out 6,000 times more light.

Erma Bombeck

She's still At Wit's End

EDITOR'S NOTE: In honor of Erma Bombeck's 25th anniversary of publishing her column, "At Wit's End," in newspapers, she and Universal Press Syndicate provided this interview with herself and a reprint of one of her most popular columns, "I've Always Loved You the Best," first printed in 1971.

Erma Bombeck talks to herself regularly. That is why she agreed to do the following interview of herself on the 25th anniversary of her column, "At Wit's End."

Are you for real?
Which part?

The part that is always on a diet, started the New York stock exchange and considers the VCR a big clock?
Yes.

How has the column changed the last 25 years you've been writing it?
Mother-in-law and girdle jokes are passe. If I mention the word "iron," I have to define it. Ring-around-the-collar was conquered when men started to wash their necks. Today's women are watching bowls, not cleaning them. And of course, I'm 15 years older.

What question are you asked the most?
That's easy. Everyone wants to know how my kids feel about being treated so irreverently in the column.

How do they feel?
I never asked them. For the first 10 years, they never knew what I did all day. When they finally got around to reading what I wrote, they didn't recognize themselves.

Where do the ideas come from? Do you have to be inspired?
Inspiration is like writer's block: It's a luxury I can't afford. I live the column 90 percent of the time and write it the other 10 percent. For three months this year, I was laid flat with a herniated disk. My friend Art Buchwald called to inquire how I felt. I said. "I am in unbearable pain and have no will to live." He said, "Can you get a column out of it?" I answered, "Possibly two if I relapse." He said, "Then it's worth it." It's that kind of job.

What's the funniest fan letter you ever received?
I received a note that said, "I'm looking forward to reading your next book as I just got my new teeth."

What does that mean?
I haven't a clue.

All the comforts of ... Home

Americans have always had a spirit of wanderlust — after all, our ancestors had to start out somewhere else to get here in the first place.

But times have changed. Now, instead of packing a few essentials and leaving hearth and home behind, all the comforts of home can go with you.

When the members of the Wally Byam Caravan Club International (WBCCI) travel, they take "home" with them. All 16,425 members of the organization own Airstream travel trailers and motor homes. Locally, West Texas Unit No. 100, one of 16 units in Region IX (which includes all of Oklahoma and Texas, except El Paso) has 68 members.

According to Hershel Floyd, unit president, the group has 25 members from Midland, 17 from Odessa and the rest from within 150-mile radius of the Midland-Odessa area.

"Our unit is 25 years old," said Grace Shuck, member of the group.

"We've been in for two years," said her husband, Weldon. "We've had Airstreams for 19 years but we didn't join until after we retired. We wanted to travel more with friends."

And travel they do. Members of the WBCCI have traveled all over the United States, as well as in Mexico and Canada.

Members of the local group have traveled to New England, Montana, the Deep South and Tennessee, just to name a few places.

Several of the couples in the local unit have traveled to Canada. "One couple in our unit spends six months in Canada every year," said Mrs. Shuck.

"There's hardly any place in the United States that some of us haven't been to," said Floyd.

Members of the unit like to travel, but they prefer to travel together. There's safety in numbers, Floyd said, and besides, it's more fun. "We're a family of people who enjoy traveling and having a good time — we have that common interest, as well as a common type of trailer."

"Members really get close to each other," added his wife, Faye.

The unit meets once a month to have dinner and a business meeting, the travelers said, and several times a year the organization sponsors rallies for its members. "We have safety meetings and touring meetings at the rallies," Mrs. Shuck said.

"And courtesy on the highways," is another topic stressed, said Mrs. Floyd.

"It's important to us what other people on the highways think of us," said Clay Atchison, member of the unit.

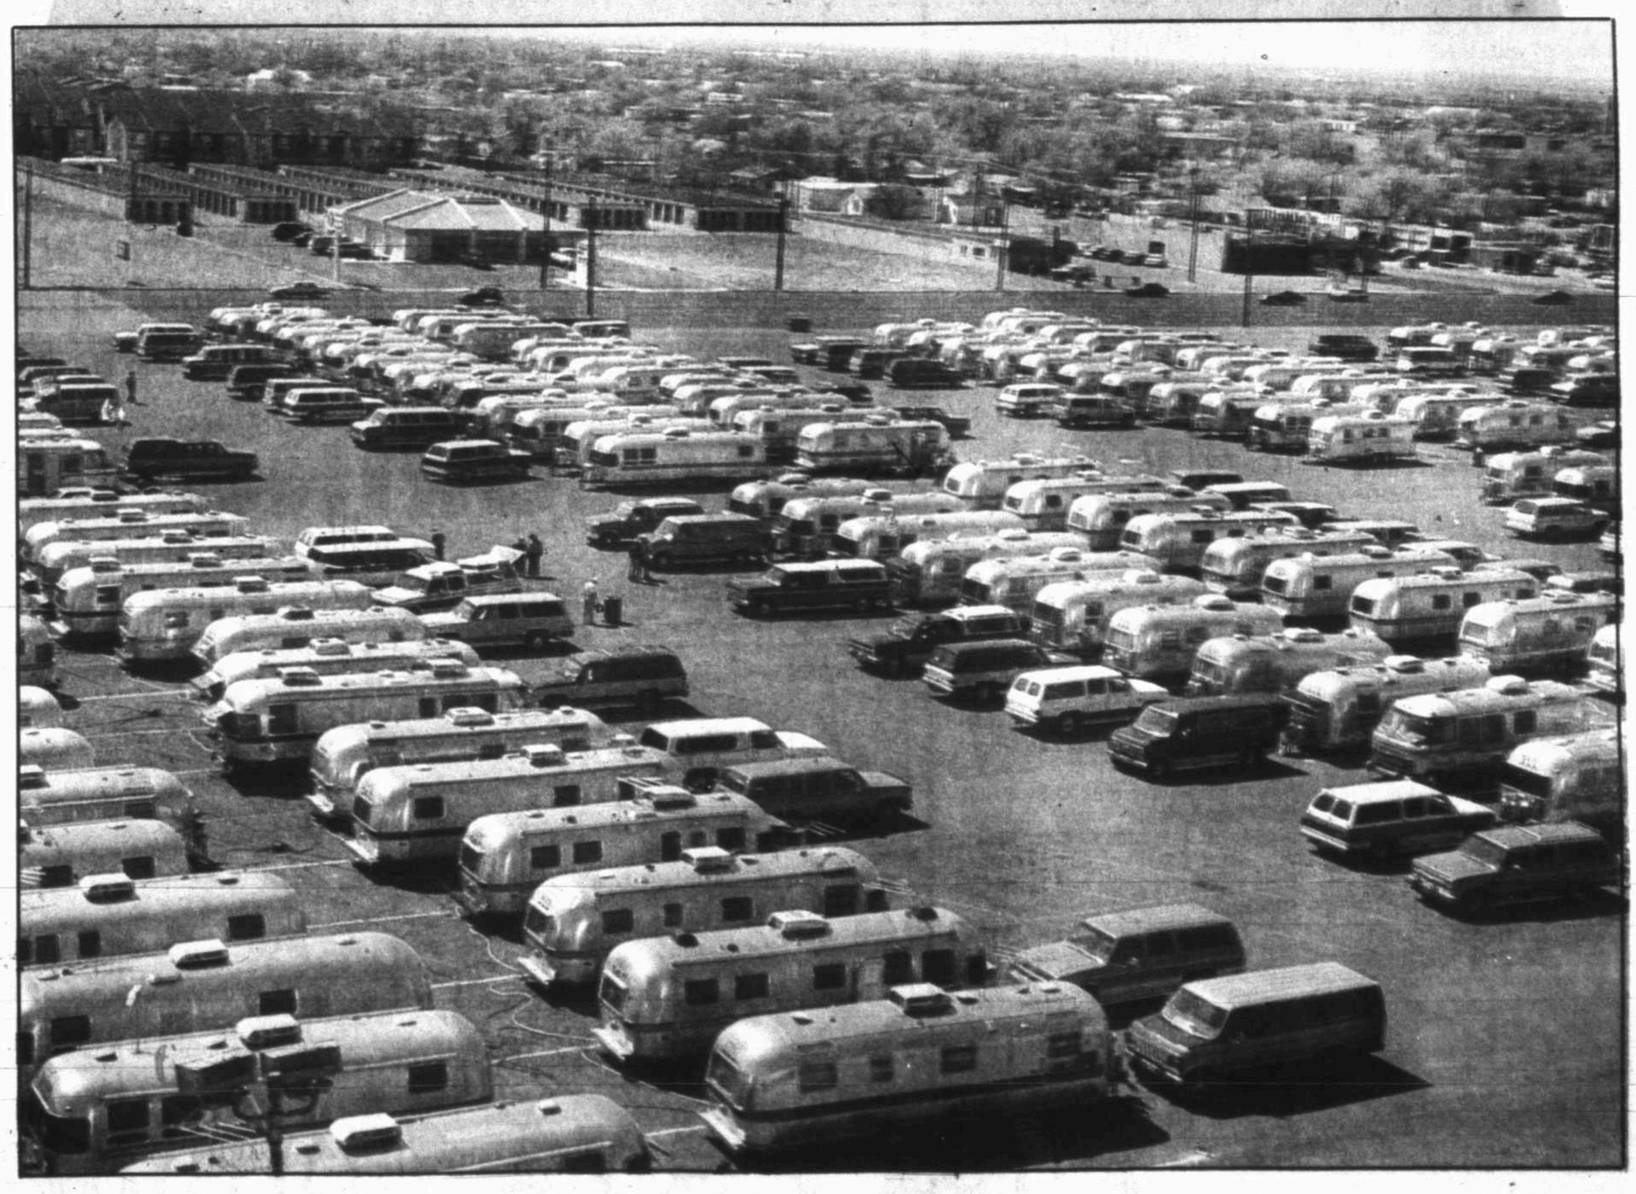

"Many (other travelers) think Airstreamers are snobs," said Floyd. "But we're just people who have bought the top-of-the-line RV. We like to help others along (the highway)."

Some of that courtesy is reflected in the standard way Airstreamers caravan. "We do not line up 15 or 16 trailers on the highway at a time," Floyd said. "We travel with three to five units together. We set a time for everyone to be at the unit park area, and if everyone doesn't show up (as scheduled), we go find them.

"We keep congestion off the highway" by stretching out the caravan, he said, so drivers of automobiles won't be faced with passing miles of motor homes and trailers at the same time.

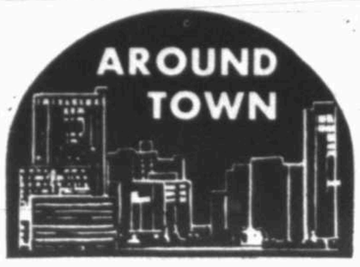

"We drive 50 to 55 (miles per hour on the highway)," Floyd said. "A lot of people want to go faster than that."

"We leave room between the trailers for two or three cars to get in," said his wife.

"And we use CB radios to stay in contact with each other," added Floyd.

"We travel 200 to 350 miles a day. We try to keep it within a reasonable length — 350 miles is stretching it."

But when Airstreamers travel, "we're not in any hurry," said Floyd. "We linger over for a day to see the sights before moving on."

"And do the laundry," added Atchison.

"We know all the malls," laughed Ann Atchison, Clay Atchison's wife.

"Airstreamers like to eat and sleep," said Mrs. Floyd.

"We bring a lot of money into a community," agreed Mrs. Atchison.

Groups not only travel together, but they socialize together too. "When we travel as a group you can almost take the kitchen out of the trailer," Floyd said.

"We eat out more," said Mrs. Floyd.

"Clean-up doesn't take long," laughed Lucy Brittian, who with husband Dan are members of the unit.

USUALLY, AIRSTREAMERS travel in husband-and-wife couples who are sometimes joined by grandchildren or other friends or family members.

"Usually there are at least two people per trailer," said Mrs. Floyd. "It's the classic Airstream, and we do have Airstream motor homes, too."

'We do not line up 15 or 16 trailers on the highway at a time. We travel with three to five units together. We set a time for everyone to be at the unit park area, and if everyone doesn't show up (as scheduled), we go find them.'

— Hershel Floyd
WBCCI unit president

"Classic Airstreams" are travel trailers with a characteristic "silver bullet" aerodynamic design.

"We think it's the 'Cadillac' of trailers," Floyd said. "There's no other trailer that pulls as easy. It's patterned after aircraft design."

"It's the same shell, too," added B.W. Haskins, unit member.

"It's got an aluminum shell; therefore, it's lightweight," said Floyd.

"It's made out of the same material as an airplane," Mrs. Floyd said. "In fact, the man who designed it was an aircraft man."

"It's aerodynamically designed to cut down on wind resistance," Haskins said.

The trailers have living areas, kitchens complete with microwave ovens and refrigerators, bedrooms and bathrooms — and some have dining areas. Some even have televisions.

"They are totally self-contained units," said Mrs. Atchison.

"They run on batteries," Floyd said. "Most everyone has two batteries in their trailers. When you are traveling, your auto will recharge the battery.

"The fresh-water tank will hold 50 gallons of water," he added.

But even though all the comforts are there, Airstreamers quickly learn the limits of such comforts' availability.

"Our showers are not like the showers at home," said Haskins. "The head is flexible and has a shut-off valve. You can shower on a gallon or two of water. You learn conservation."

"You don't get in the shower and let the water run," agreed Floyd.

Airstreams "can go anyplace your car will" the proud owners said, but "when you get your first scratch, it brings tears to your eyes," said Haskins, who recently got the first scratch on his new Airstream.

"And if you stay in West Texas long enough, you're going to get into hailstorms," said Floyd.

LIKE CLASSIC Volkswagen "Beetles," Airstream travel trailers have a distinctive design. "The one thing about this trailer is you really can't tell how old they are," Mrs. Brittian said. "It's a great equalizer."

Being a member of an Airstreamers' unit has a number of benefits, the members said. In addition to joining the WBCCI and seeing the country, "we've made friends with people all across the United States," Shuck said.

BOMBECK: Columnist hopes to create smiles

(From 1F)

What do you hope your column has accomplished?

I like to imagine that after a person has read our waters are polluted, the world is in flames, streets are crime-ridden, drugs are rampant, and her horoscope predicts her sign just collided with something that will reduce her to poverty, she'll read how the dryer returns only one sock to me from every two I put in and I tell my kids, "The other one went to live with Jesus," and maybe smile.

What's the most popular column you've written?

Humor is like a Chinese dinner. People can't remember it two minutes after they've laughed. Ironically, it's a serious column, "I Loved You Best," which was first printed in 1971.

How would you like to be remembered?

As a woman who was privileged to cover the utility room beat that brought with it a revolution and more change in the past 25 years than women ever imagined. I would rather hang from a hundred refrigerator doors than in the Louvre.

"I've Always Loved You the Best"
By Erma Bombeck

It is normal for children to want assurance that they are loved. Having all the warmth of the Berlin Wall, I have always admired women who can reach out to pat their children and not have them flinch.

Feeling more comfortable on paper, I wrote the following for each of my children.

TO THE FIRST BORN

I've love you best because you were our first miracle. You were the genesis of a marriage, the fulfillment of young love, the promise of our infinity.

You sustained us through the hamburger years. The first apartment furnished in Early Poverty ... our first mode of transportation (1955 feet) ... the 7-inch TV set we paid on for 36 months.

You wore new, had unused grandparents and more clothes than a Barbie doll. You were the "original model" for unsure parents trying to work the bugs out. You got the strained lamb, open pins and three-hour naps.

You were the beginning.

TO THE MIDDLE CHILD

I've always loved you the best because you drew a dumb spot in the family and it made you stronger for it.

You cried less, had more patience, wore faded, and never in your life did anything "first," but it only made you more special. You are the one we relaxed with and realized a dog could kiss you and you wouldn't get sick. You could cross a street by yourself long before you were old enough to get married, and the world wouldn't come to an end if you went to bed with dirty feet.

You were the continuance.

TO THE BABY

I've always loved you the best because endings are generally sad and you are such a joy. You readily accepted the milk-stained bibs. The lower bunk. The cracked baseball bat. The baby book, barren but for a recipe for graham pie crust that someone jammed between the pages.

You are the one we held onto so tightly. For you see, you are the link with the past that gives a reason to tomorrow. You darken our hair, quicken our steps, square our shoulders, restore our vision, and give us humor that security and maturity can't give us.

When your hairline takes on the shape of Lake Erie and your children tower over you, you will still be "the Baby."

You were the culmination.

Lowering calories found to reduce cancer in mice

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A low-calorie diet can delay cancer development and cut cancer risk in mice, a researcher reports.

Scientists found that the more calories were restricted, while avoiding malnutrition, the more lifespan was extended and the longer cancer was delayed, said Richard Weindruch.

Scientists have long known that mice and rats live longer under a long-term low-calorie diet. Previous work has also shown reductions in cancer rates and delays in the appearance of the disease.

A separate experiment found that mice who began a low-calorie diet in mid-adulthood, an age of about a year, showed a 10 percent to 20 percent gain in maximum and average lifespan, Weindruch said.

Gerald Murphy, chief medical officer of the cancer society, said he believed that humans can help lower their cancer risk by reducing calories along with moderate reductions in fat.

But too little is known to say whether they will live longer.

Memphis known as birthplace of 'the blues'

By Andrew Nelson
Copley News Service

In Memphis, the blues, like the notorious humidity, are inescapable. From the hoppin' and hollerin' of Beale Street music halls to the back-room clubs on hard-luck alleys, the legendary music of the Mississippi Delta seeps from every pore of this Tennessee river city.

And for good reason. The blues were born here. Situated on the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi River, this city of 650,000 always has been a magnet for talented musicians of the impoverished delta region since Civil War days. But it was only in 1909 when black bandleader W.C. Handy composed a campaign song for a Memphis mayor's race that the notes and rhythms of what is now called the blues were set down on paper.

That music — part gospel, part chant, part pain of oppression — soon became popular throughout the country. Today, though Chicago and New Orleans may dispute the point, Memphis remains the capital of the blues.

At the heart of it all is the celebrated raucousness of Beale Street. Synonymous worldwide for jangling piano keys and twanging guitar strings, downtown's Beale Street has been an entertainment mecca since Reconstruction, when former slaves gathered there to celebrate both their new freedom and their culture.

OF LATE, the street has been spruced up. The honky-tonks are shut, building facades sandblasted, parking and security have been increased. Though purists may scorn the tourist T-shirts and glossy souvenirs, Beale Street still retains more than an echo of its old raffishness and heartache.

A few worthwhile clubs include:

■ Mr. Handy's Blues Hall (telephone 528-0150). Blues is the main attraction at the club honoring the "father of the blues." Mr. Handy's, a big Beale Street attraction, offers Cajun food for both lunch and dinner. Keep your eyes open. The eagle-eyed are liable to spot a celebrity or two in the crowd. Republican Party poohbah and blues enthusiast Lee Atwater was seen here, as well as the rock band U2.

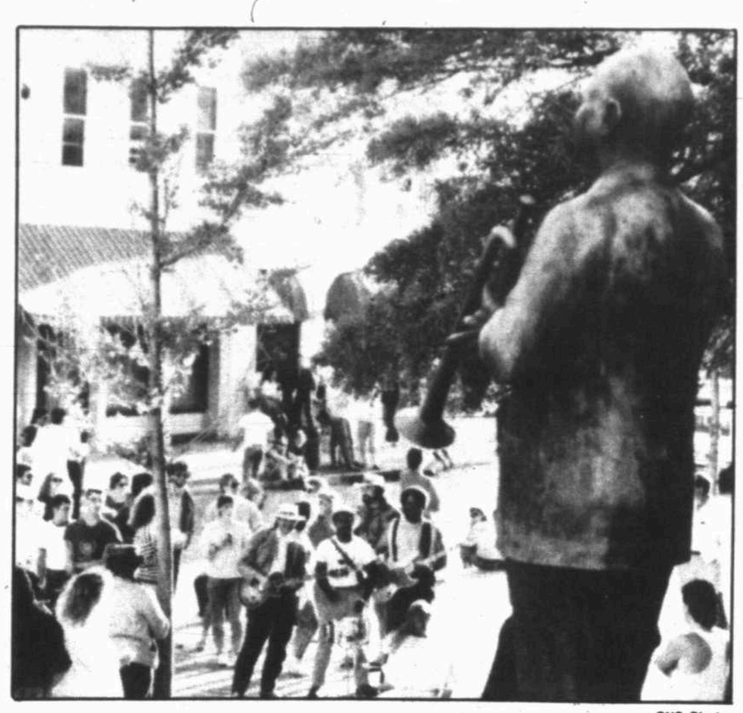

■ The Rum Boogie Cafe (telephone 528-0150). Located next door to Mr. Handy's, the cafe shares a phone number with that establishment. Offering both jazz and blues, this club attracts both the trendy and traditional. Try the Cajun specials and make sure to notice the cafe's collection of famous guitars (including rocker Jon Bon Jovi's).

■ King's Palace (telephone 521-1851). Equipped as both a nightclub and restaurant, this jazz club has an up-scale feel to it. The Palace probably is one of the few places on Beale Street where you may feel the need for a tie to feel comfortable, but relax — you'll be made welcome regardless of what you're wearing.

■ Lou's Place (telephone 528-1970). Located just around the corner from Beale on South French Street, Lou's has high-energy blues and jazz along with pool tables, video games and a menu featuring ribs and catfish.

A WORD of advice. Bring money, either credit cards or cash, for a night on the town. Beale Street drinks and cover charges (which average about $3 to $5 per person) can add up.

For information on the history of the blues, stop at the Center for Southern Folklore (152 Beale St., telephone 525-3655). The center has displays and mementos of the neighborhood's heyday both in its headquarters and scattered up and down the street.

Blues music comes alive on historical Beale Street in Memphis, Tenn.

Memphis also has a hearty appetite for food, but don't expect steamed veggies. Memphians are ferocious carnivores, and pork barbecue, served smoked and spicy, reigns as the meat of choice. The city boasts almost 100 barbecue restaurants and just as many opinions about them.

The blues are heard off Beale as well, but are harder to find. If one is lucky enough to know a native Memphian, he or she might lead the visitor on a tour of small venues on the city's south side. Be warned however. Many of these clubs are not for the faint of heart.

Outsiders are looked upon with suspicion. Customers are liable to be frisked for weapons at the door. But if the decor and drinks are often make-do, the music is not. On the right night, audiences are liable to be treated to some of the best blues anywhere.

For those who want less adventure, Memphis night life offers more usual fare. The lobby bar of the famous Peabody Hotel (149 Union Ave., telephone 529-4000) is the meeting place for tourist and local alike. Check with the desk for the times when the hotel's famous ducks descend from their penthouse nest to take a bath in the lobby's fountain.

The Antennae Club (1588 Madison, telephone 276-4052) features New Wave rock bands and lively young crowds. And if you are interested in observing Southern belles and their gallants close up, try Newby's (539 South Highlight St., telephone 452-8408) near Memphis State University. The dress is preppy, the clientele twentysomething and, during debutante season, one is liable to spy a few of the regulars decked out in formal evening wear.

MEMPHIS ALSO has a hearty appetite for food, but don't expect steamed veggies. Memphians are ferocious carnivores, and pork barbecue, served smoked and spicy, reigns as the meat of choice. The city boasts almost 100 barbecue restaurants and just as many opinions about them.

Everyone has a favorite and debating their relative merits over a bourbon or two is a frequent pastime. But all residents agree that for the first-time Memphis barbecue, a meal at the famous Rendezvous (52 South Second St., telephone 523-2746) is a must.

Locals also swear by Corky's BBQ (5259 Poplar Ave., telephone 685-9744), John Will's Bar-b-que Pit (2450 Central Ave., telephone 274-8000) and the Commissary (2290 South Germantown Road, telephone 754-5540) located in the affluent suburb of Germantown.

For those who tire of pork, Huey's (1927 Madison Ave., telephone 726-4372) near the Overton Square district has the best burgers in town. After you eat, try your hand at the local sport of impaling toothpicks in Huey's ceiling by shooting them out of a straw.

Spring blossoms in East Tennessee

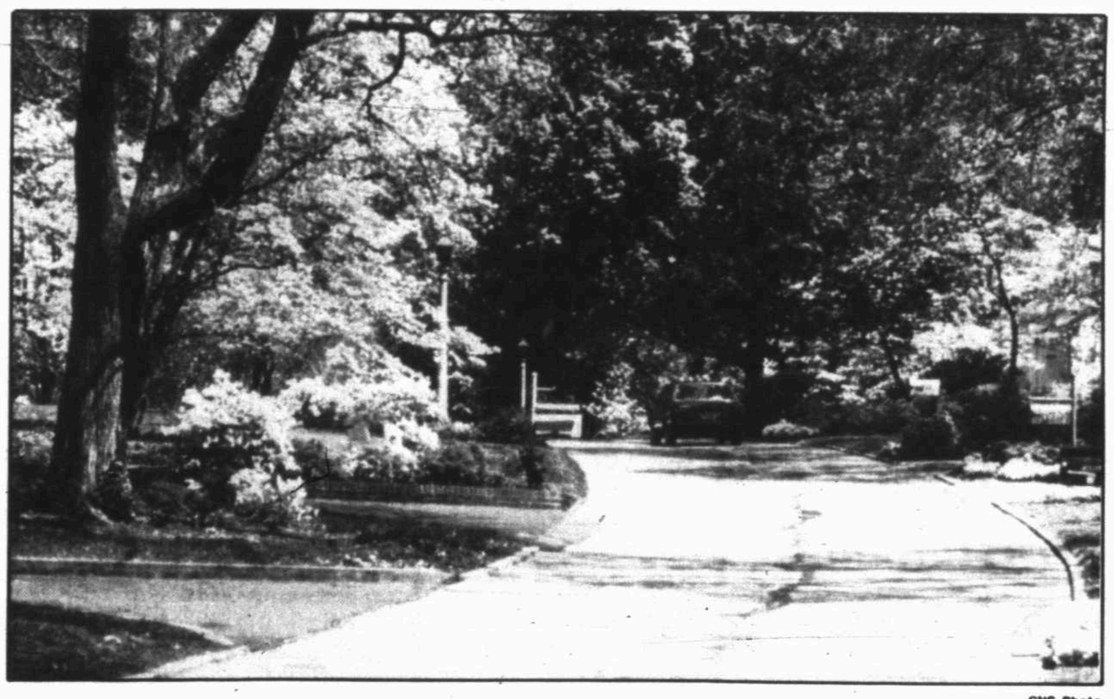

Region famous for its annual Dogwood Arts Festival in Knoxville

By Andrew Nelson
Copley News Service

Spring, when it comes, moves quickly in East Tennessee. After a March made blowsy from wind and rain, April brings deep, warm days to the mountains and valleys. As the temperature rises, thousands of dogwood trees burst into pink and white blossoms — the signal to begin Knoxville's annual Dogwood Arts Festival.

The annual festival, presented this year from April 6 to 22, draws 250,000 people to Tennessee's third-largest city and Smoky Mountain gateway. Knoxville's celebration has been a yearly event since 1961, when a local Junior League chapter decided a spring festival was a good way to bolster the city's pride.

Today, the event has grown far beyond its original espadrilles and country-club beginnings to become a two-week, citywide party and one of the largest festivals in the Southeast.

CNS Photo

Tennesseeans always have had a special fondness for dogwood trees, which burst into pink and white blossoms each spring and signal the start of Knoxville's annual Dogwood Arts Festival.

Tennesseeans always have had a special fondness for the dogwood, though it was French botanist Andre Michaux who first classified the plant while exploring the region in 1793. There, protected by the mountains from the glaciers and climatic changes that characterized the last Ice Age, the dogwood and a host of other unique plants flourished along the Smokies' western slopes. It quickly became the region's symbol. An extremely hard wood, the tree became the chief material for spinning bobbins used in the booming textile plants.

THIS YEAR, Knoxville continues its love affair with the dogwood. Under the veteran direction of the Dogwood Arts Festival Committee, more than 2,000 volunteers will organize events scheduled to include art and music shows, dance events, the "Expo 10,000" marathon and exhibitions of traditional Appalachian cultures such as quilting, furniture-making and bluegrass music. And in keeping with the decidedly populist spirit of the festival, most of the events are free to the public.

But it is the dogwood's blossoms that remain the festival's centerpiece. And the best places to see them in all their blazing glory are the 50 miles of Dogwood Trails — local streets chosen for the abundance and magnificence of their plantings. Pink lines painted down the middle of roads lead visitors through neighborhood such as Sequoyah Hills, Knoxville's gold coast, where neck-turning Georgian mansions and Tara-fied plantation houses threaten to eclipse the flowering shrubs. Dozens of private gardens also are opened to the public during the festival.

And for those who want to see dogwoods in their natural environment, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park features entire hillsides of blossoms. The park is only a 45-minute ride from downtown Knoxville. For directions and further information, call park headquarters (telephone 615-436-5615).

One word of warning: During the weekends the blossoms reach their peak, both the national park roads and the Dogwood Trails are apt to be bumper-to-bumper. To view the blooms without the bother, tour the park and trails on weekdays. The Dogwood Festival Committee also offers free buses for in-city tours.

TREES ASIDE, revelers will find plenty to see and do in Knoxville. The city, headquarters of the University of Tennessee and the state's beloved "Vols" football team, has climbed a few rungs on the cultural ladder since hosting the 1982 World's Fair.

A new art museum has just opened, and as home to the innovative publishing and television concern, Whittle Communications, Knoxville is trying hard to supply the company's young, free-wheeling media gurus' demand for everything from gourmet supermarkets to inner-city loft space.

Thanks to the infusion of newcomers, the "Old City," a former warehouse district, now a restored neighborhood of nightclubs and restaurants, is where toute Knoxville toots its horn.

The best spots include: Ella Guru's (telephone 544-0188), a nightclub featuring top-billed rock, folk and blues; Amigos Cafe (telephone 546-9505) serves up Mexican fare while a big-city ambience inhabits Lucille's (telephone 546-3742), a trendy restaurant with eclectic cuisine and jazz.

Partying of a more youthful sort occurs at Planet Earth (telephone 546-9809), a disco and bar for college students and budding bohos.

Visitors who like a traditional good ole boy Southern atmosphere should try Calhoun's on the River (telephone 544-0349). Featuring barbecued ribs and a lot of Knoxville's wheeler-dealers, the restaurant may not be sophisticated, but it does offer a relaxed atmosphere, friendly service and a charming view of the Tennessee River.

Morton's (telephone 584-1999) is the most recent addition to Knoxville's dining scene, and one that is rivaling the fancy French cuisine of the Orangery (telephone 588-2964) for the title of the city's hottest restaurant. Morton's imaginative presentation and creative ingredients make it a great favorite with Whittle's army of editors and art directors.

FOR LODGING, Knoxville comes with the usual accommodations: budget motels of all sorts; a Hilton (telephone 523-2300), a Holiday Inn (telephone 522-2800), and a Hyatt Regency (telephone 637-1234). The Hyatt, with its oddly shaped concrete architecture, is known locally as "the dam that got away," a joking allusion to the Tennessee Valley Authority's waterworks that dot the region.

Visitors who prefer quieter digs might want to try the Middleton Inn (telephone 524-8100), a small European-style hotel close to the university and downtown. Rates start at $35 per day and include a Continental breakfast.

For additional information about the festival, write or call the Dogwoods Art Festival, 111 N. Central Ave., Knoxville, Tenn. 37902 (telephone 615-637-4561); or Knoxville's Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 15012, Knoxville, Tenn. 37901 (telephone 615-637-4555).

Special diets available, if requested in advance

By Jan Norris
N.Y. Times News Service

The limited resources on ships and planes present special problems to travelers who are trying to follow a low-calorie or low-cholesterol regimen.

Most transportation companies have a "by request" food system — almost any type of dietary restriction can be accommodated. They're available at no extra charge, but must be ordered at least six hours in advance.

Examples of special meals include: Low-fat, low-cholesterol, low-calorie, low-sodium, heart-healthy, diabetic, vegetarian, kosher, Moslem, Hindu, lactose-intolerant, bland-soft, seafood only, low-carbohydrate.

Your travel agent or reservation agent can place your food order for you prior to travel.

■ Cruise ships: Most have such a variety of items on their normal menus and in their buffet meals that special foods don't have to be ordered. If, however, a diner has a special medical request, it can be handled, providing the diner requests the meals ahead of time.

■ Amtrak: Offers a vegetarian meal, as well as fresh catch of the day. Food can be ordered on the train without sauces and seasonings.

■ American Airlines: One of the largest selections available. Almost any individual food can be ordered if desired. Examples would be a peanut butter and jelly sandwich, cheeseburger, seafood salad, pasta, quiche.

■ Eastern, Pan Am, Continental, United airlines: All offer special meals to order. Low-cholesterol, low-fat, low-calorie and heart-healthy are the most common dietary plans available; special meals for religious diets and other dietary restrictions can be accommodated with notice.

■ Hotels: Most hotels that offer room service will provide dietary-restricted meals. Hotels with spas specialize in such foods.

Some offer special nutrition guides — Hilton Hotels is offering the second in a series of "BounceBack at Breakfast, Lunch and Dinner" guides. The booklets feature methods of reducing the stress of traveling through proper eating.

Lists of suggested meals and tips for getting extra exercise are included. The guides are free and available to all guests, and copies also are available by calling (800) 445-8667.

Talk of tater heads

When the Potato Famine hit Ireland 145 years ago and a wave of migration began, America's love for the potato was "spudded."

Today the average American eats 124 pounds a year of potatos, and an average of 37 billion pounds are produced each year.

The largest user of potatos is McDonald's, which consumes 4 billion pounds for french fries and hash browns. The largest potato grower is J.R. Simplot Co. which operates five frozen french fry plants and supply most of the McDonald's demand.

Simplot lost $400,000 on his first potato venture with McDonalds, but went on to turn a $3.5 million investment into a $1.3 billion agri business and establish a long and profitable relationship with McDonald's.

Busch's new beer

Anheuser-Busch Inc. announced a new product that looks and sounds a lot like the popular beer make by Miller Brewing Co. The new beer is called Busch Cold Filtered Draft and is sold in clear, longneck bottles.

Enquirer buys Star

'Shocker! National Enquirer Publisher Poised to Devour Star!"

That's how the Star might scream it from its rack near the checkout counter.

Under an agreement, Rupert Murdoch's News Corp Ltd. is selling the Star for at least $400 million in cash and stock to the company that publishes its tabloid rival.

The news came as a surprise to Star staffers.

"We're in shock," said Barry Levine, the Star's Hollywood bureau chief. "Up until this moment, we and the Enquirer have been bitter enemies."

But the would-be buyer, G.P. Group Inc. of Lantana, Fla., said it plans to "maintain the Star's editorial independence" and would continue to publish it from the magazine's current location in Tarrytown, N.Y.

"They will still compete with each other," said Iain Calder, editor and president of the Enquirer, from his office in Florida.

Cosby's 7th season

Cosby

After months of sometimes bitter negotiations, NBC said Thursday that "The Cosby Show" would return to the network for a seventh season this fall.

The one-year agreement between the network and Carsey/Werner Productions, which produces the show, was concluded Thursday.

The producers had demanded a record bonus to renew the program, but they received no bonus, an NBC spokeswoman said.

"The Cosby Show" has been the No. 1-rated program for five years and has been a cornerstone of NBC's dominance of prime time.

NBC said Thursday that the agreement, which calls for 26 new episodes, set no precedents. The network will pay a standard licensing fee for each episode, as it does now, NBC said.

During the negotiations, the production company had sought a signing bonus of up to $100 million.

Finder of mineral owners

Hank Avery helps settle royalty accounts

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

There's a old saying that insists necessity is the mother of invention.

In the course of making oil and gas leases, oil companies frequently find it necessary to locate long-lost mineral rights holders.

As part of his oil business, Midlander Hank Avery discovered ways to track down many of those long-lost owners. In fact, he got so good at it, that since 1981, a number of oil companies and non-oil companies have asked him to locate mineral rights holders for them.

So many, in fact, that this now comprises 25 percent of his business. Avery's unique oilpatch sleuthing prompted Texas Monthly magazine to feature him in its current issue.

While he can't put a figure on the number of mineral owners he's tracked, the royalty detective estimates he's helped distribute $6 million for such oil companies as Gulf Oil, BTA and Union Oil Co. of California.

He says he's failed to settle claims for only 10, including a man who had been executed in the electric chair at Huntsville.

Gulf Oil was one of the first to call on his services.

"Gulf had a division order manager who had the philosophy that it would be best to find the people who had money coming to them rather than letting the money go to into the state treasury or left in suspense," he explains.

"A lot of good companies would like for the people to get the money due them rather than send it to Austin."

Many of the people he's found had no idea they had any money coming to them. They had unknowingly inherited the mineral rights from relatives who had purchased them in the 1920s and 30s. Still others forgot about the rights they had purchased or lost their records.

"People used to buy mineral rights like popcorn," Avery recalls. "They wouldn't write down their proper address on the records, then they'd forget they had them."

Avery is assisted in his efforts by his daughter Andrea and his secretary.

To find these misplaced mineral owners, Avery has a checklist of 86 procedures he uses to locate people. He has directors from the American Medical Association, Texas Medical Association, Masonic Lodge, the Texas Bar Association, and alumni records from different schools.

One key tool in his work is the Midland County Public Library, whose collection of city directories and phone books he consults regularly.

"I can look up someone in a 1917 Fort Worth city directory," he says, a touch of amazement creeping into his voice.

He calls the local library one of the greatest resource libraries in the state and marvels that it's not better utilized.

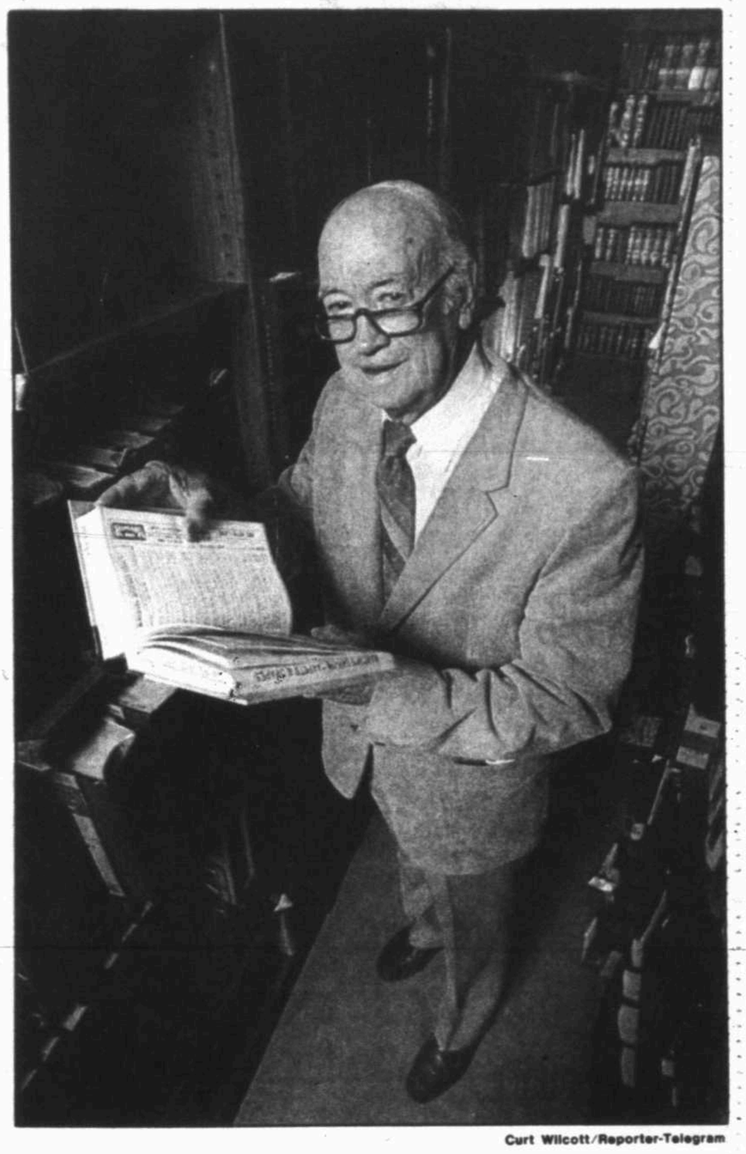

Other key tools include obituaries, from which he can find survivors listed, funeral homes, who can tell him who paid for the funeral, and cemetaries. He also has a detective on the Los Angeles Police Department who will, on his own, do some tracking in the L.A. area, and report to Avery at his own expense.

Once he finds the people, he helps them recover their money at his expense, asking only for a one-time fee of 25 percent of the funds once the owner has received them.

The outgoing Midlander, who has lived in Midland 44 years, served as mayor for three terms beginning in 1962. He is, by profession, an architect, structural engineer and public land surveyor. "And I don't practice any of them," he laughs.

Among the Midland structures he's designed are the Department of Public Safety building, Midland Independent School District Administration building, Memorial Stadium and the Masonic Lodge. From 1946 to 1956, he designed and supervised construction of $20 million worth of commercial, educational and industrial buildings throughout Texas.

REAL ESTATE

Keep resale in mind when purchasing a home

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

When the exterior of a home is maintained it will have a much better chance of attracting buyers. The term for it in the real estate trade is "curb appeal."

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

You have just been transferred from Denver to Midland. You know you will be here for at least four years and decide to launch a home improvement program to upgrade the value of your home. Four years later you find all those improvements have added little to the value of your home.

How can one avoid the pitfalls of over-improvement (or under-improvement)? How do you get, grow and reap value from a home. Realtors say the pitfalls can be avoided provided one keeps a few basic points in mind.

When looking for a house to purchase with resale in mind, "Don't buy the biggest house in the area and don't buy the smallest and it's not necessarily the largest or smallest square footage wise. Don't buy a two bedroom house in a three bedroom neighborhood or a two story house in a one story neighborhood." says Roy Proctor, president of the Midland Board of Realtors.

"Square footage in itself is not always indicative of value because of wasted spaces, excessive hallways, or closets that are not properly utilized," he added.

He suggests that a potential buyers ask their realtor if a house that they're interested in is average for the neighborhood. "A realtor should know if a house is average, smaller or larger than average for the neighborhood. The information can be verified with the Midland County Appraisal District at the tax office, " Proctor says.

He noted that realtors will, if asked, make an analysis of the area in which the buyer is purchasing and give an average price for the homes in that neighborhood.

Proctor also suggests that buyers be careful of buying a house that's different, a stucco house in a brick neighborhood might not sell quickly or bring as much in value because it is not homogeneous with the neighborhood.

New warnings sounded on declining U.S. production

By John Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

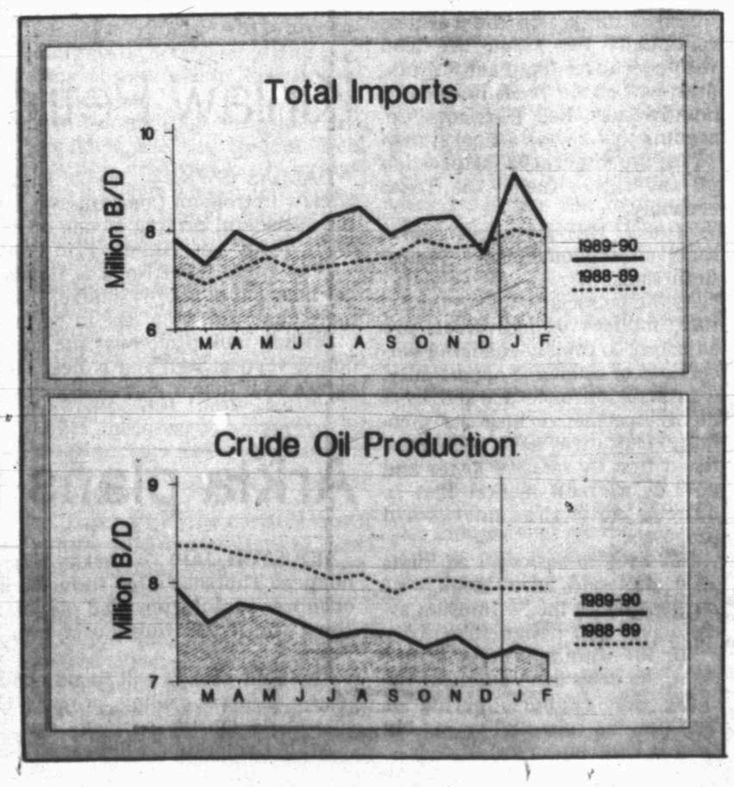

A new rash of warnings about consumption and imports has been sounded in the energy industry, as U.S. production continued to decline last month in face of growing demand and imports.

Crude oil production took another big slide in February, prompting the American Petroleum Institute to call for a increased domestic production, as former Secretary of Energy James Slesinger warned that America may soon be using oil as fast as it can be pumped from the ground.

U.S. crude oil production for February dropped nearly 7 percent and moved closer to dropping below 7 million barrels daily, another decline milestone.

In the past two years domestic production has dropped over 1 million barrels daily, according to the American Petroleum Institute, and February's decrease of 537,000 barrels brought the domestic daily

Bust causes oil states to change

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Fearfully contemplating a future without oil, Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma are trying to reinvent themselves.

From the populism of the bayou to the conservatism of the old frontier, political cultures molded by the economy of oil are under siege.

Business mores symbolized by the handshake contract have become outmoded. Powerful elites who held sway over city halls and country clubs have been swept aside.

The outcome of all these changes is so uncertain that experts offer a remarkable range of business and economic forecasts.

A. Robert Abboud, chairman of Houston's First City Bancorporation, is so optimistic that he calls the business opportunities in Texas "a ticket to heaven."

But Adm. Bobby R. Inman, who has headed two major Texas-based computer firms since he left the CIA in 1982, said there is a serious risk that "if we do not make some tough decisions or we make the wrong decisions, this region could end up like a very large Mississippi."

The decline of oil deprived the region of the natural advantages that once put it so far ahead in the race for economic health and gave it the boastful self-confidence that has become its international image.

Now business leaders and politicians are discovering that the transition to an age where success rests upon brains rather than brawn requires profound changes in attitudes and expensive changes in public policy.

Gone with the bust is a deep sense of security that flowed from a rich natural endowment. It has been replaced by a sense of all-out competition that starts with neighboring communities and extends to San Diego and Osaka, Japan.

Oil patch cities like Dallas, which once considered themselves irresistible magnets, now see themselves as contestants in a desperate race to lure the businesses that will create jobs in the next century.

"We can't settle for just being cotton pickers any more," said Gov. Buddy Roemer of Louisiana, one of the major proponents of change in the region.

"Our natural resources were so plentiful," he said, "that all we had to do was harvest them to get rich, whether it was cotton or oil and gas or lumber or cattle. But in this world today it is no longer enough to be asset rich unless your number one asset is human beings."

Two years of steady but unspectacular recovery have not dimmed the memory of the painful oil price busts of the 1980s.

The oil and gas industry provided Texas with 28 percent of all state taxes collected in 1981, but by last year that had dwindled to 9 percent.

In Louisiana, employment in oil and gas extraction dropped by more than half from 1981 to 1987 as the state lost about 9 percent of all its non-agricultural jobs.

The search for new vocations was evident in September among the 440 young, mostly affluent Texans who danced the two-step and devoured brisket at a barbecue at the Y.O. Ranch, a hill country spread that is considered a Texas icon for its 110-year history and its herds of longhorn cattle.

Charles Schreiner IV, one of the ranch owners, commissioned a polling firm to survey his guests and found that nearly 39 percent of his friends thought the best investment opportunities in Texas for the 1990s lay in high technology industries.

Among the revelers, who came from many of Texas' oldest and most influential families, only about 9 percent favored putting money into oil and gas ventures.

The ranch barbecue was called to commemorate "The New Spirit of Texas," but the celebration may have been premature.

The region has experienced a slow, steady recovery since the oil bust bottomed out in late 1987, with the Houston area showing particular resilience. But experts put many question marks in their long-term forecasts.

In all three states the relationship between the public and private sectors is being realigned. Government's basic responsibilities, especially regarding education, are being re-examined, and final decisions are coming hard. The outcome of the process is uncertain.

Traditionally a region where individuals paid low taxes, the oil states have had to defy the national trend during the era that made "no new taxes" a rallying cry to make up for lost revenues from the oil industry.

Texas and Oklahoma have enacted substantial tax increases since the oil busts that have brought their levies close to the national average. Now, across the region there is talk of raising taxes some more.

In Oklahoma, Gov. Henry Bellmon, a Republican who is retiring this year, has been battling much of the conservative establishment that backed him through a long political career. He is asking for the second $250 million tax increase in three years along with a program of drastic school reform.

In Louisiana, Roemer, a liberal Democrat, has been trying to wean the state from the populist largess instituted by Gov. Huey Long in the 1930s.

Roemer insists that fiscal luxuries like a homestead exemption, which frees most homeowners from property taxes, were viable only when the oil industry made vast contributions to the state treasury. But so far he has had only limited success in overhauling the tax system to transfer some of the burden from businesses to ordinary citizens.

In Texas, the "good business climate" has been as sacred as the Alamo. But now there is growing debate as to what exactly promotes the growth of business.

Joe R. Feagin, a sociologist at the University of Texas at Austin said: "A large and powerful number of people in Texas still adhere to the frontier notion that low taxes, low services and minimal government is the way to prosperity. But the true Texans have been diluted by people who moved here during the boom, bringing along the notion that government is worth paying for if it is efficient and effective."

An indication of how much Texas has changed came last October when Lieut. Gov. Bill Hobby, a Democrat, shocked the state by suggesting that Texas would have to enact an income tax soon, thus losing its status as the only big industrial state without either a personal or corporate income tax.

The lieutenant governor, also a lame duck, argued that an income tax was the only way to comply with a federal court order that requires an overhaul of public school financing.

Neither Gov. William P. Clements Jr., a Republican, nor any of the 14 candidates vying for his office in elections this year accepted the idea despite an estimate from the state Board of Education that the schools will need an additional $5 billion over the next five years.

While the education issue preoccupies much of the country, it is especially potent in these three states because they have consistently come in well below the national average in spending per pupil and in graduation rates.

Across the region the business community has taken the lead with executives like Paul F. Roth, president of the Texas division of Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. arguing that a weak school system "wasn't such a crucial factor when oil and cotton fueled the Texas economy."

"Today, this weakness represents an economic time bomb," Roth said.

As the politicians debate the future, millions of individuals are adjusting to rapidly changing perceptions of economic opportunity.

In a region once marked by a highly speculative business mentality, executives have been chastened first by massive losses and now by a credit market that finances only the most solid proposals.

"It's back to basics on all kinds of deals," said Scott Ziegler, of Ziegler Cooper Inc., a Houston architecture and design firm.

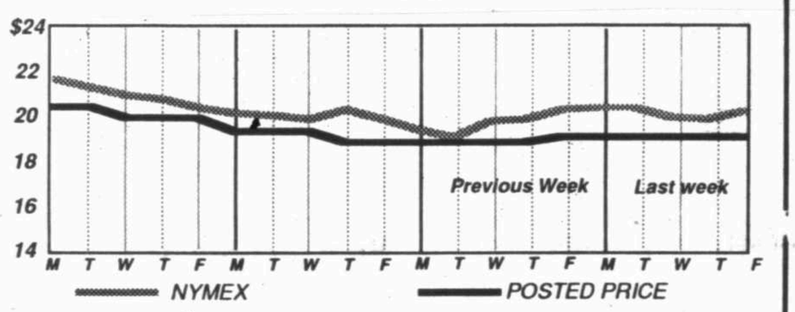

"If the fundamentals aren't right, the deals don't get made because that euphoric period of breaking the rules and taking big risks is long gone now."

Kinlaw Petroleum finals horizontal well

DALLAS (SWN) — Joe D. Kinlaw, president of Kinlaw Petroleum Companies of Dallas, announced the successful drilling of one of its first horizontal wells, today near Dilley, Frio County, Texas.

"The Huck/Bond No. 1 is flowing at 106 barrels per hour out of a 23/64" choke," Kinlaw said. "That's more than $50,000 a day in revenue."

Drilling took place near the site of an old, abandoned vertical well and is near Oryx Energy Company's well that is currently one of the state's biggest, producing more than 200,000 barrels of oil in its first 18 months.

Horizontal drilling involves drilling a well vertically and then gradually angling it sideways up to 90 degrees.

Kinlaw said oil was found after drilling 6,700 feet vertically and then out 1,600 feet horizontally.

Kinlaw, 36, has successfully found oil more than 200 times since starting his Dallas based companies in 1981. He has a success rate of 80 percent.

Arkla plans to explore Texas coast

HOUSTON (AP) — Arkla Exploration Co. announced Thursday it has formed a joint program for onshore exploration and development projects along the Texas Gulf Coast over the next three years.

The joint project will spend about $25 million on select onshore drilling projects along the Texas coastal region, the company said.

Arkla Exploration will bear 55 percent of the project cost, Oneok Exploration Co. of Tulsa will pay 20 percent and a private investor will account for the remaining 25 percent, said Carl S. Quinn, chairman and chief executive officer of Arkla Exploration.

Work began on the project this week with an exploratory test in Wharton County.

Arkla Exploration is one of the nation's largest independent natural gas and oil producers in terms of proved natural gas reserves.

RESALE: Buyers can ask for extras in home price

(From 1G)

"Three and four bedroom houses are selling quicker than two bedroom homes." Proctor says that it's not necessarily because families with kids are at a three or four bedroom standpoint, but that they want more rooms for visiting guests or an extra area for a gameroom, office, or study.

"For a while Midland had a big shortage of four bedroom homes, but I think we have an equilibrium in the market right now. We have as many four bedrooms being built as two and three bedrooms."

He also noted that buyers might be able to make improvements to a home and include them into the purchase price. "We've gotten into a situation here in our office recently where the people wanted to buy the home, build a pool and wanted to include that into the price of the home instead of buying the home and building the pool later. It is possible, whether it be an existing home on the market or a new home."

He added that it is a good idea to include extras, such as landscaping or tile flooring into the price since Midland is a transfer town and companies figure purchase price on what an employee originally paid for the home.

Proctor suggests that it be one of the questions a buyer should ask in reference to a new construction. "Can I get the window treatments and landscaping all inclusive in the price?" Buyers might get different answers to the same questions depending on what companies they call.

Once the price is ironed out and a buyer purchases a home, he or she may want to make improvements.

Homeowner magazine suggests that owners see what other people are doing and see what's selling. They advise against over-improvement which could make a house more valuable than the neighbors and thus make it difficult to recapture the investment.

Before spending anything on remodeling, especially high-ticket projects, get the advice of an appraiser, who can evaluate it with respect to the local market. The service will cost you, but may pay for itself when selling.

Proctor noted that location is very important, but the house itself will determine whether it will sell quickly.

Following a few basics steps when it comes time to sell might prompt a sale and yield a better return on investment according to two publications; Building Ideas and Better Homes and Gardens.

■ Clear debris from around the yard and neatly trim the lawn and shrubs. Wash the driveway and sidewalk and pull weeds from between cracked and crumbled spots. Repair and paint fences and gates.

■ Inspect exterior, including the foundation and roof. Patch the foundation cracks and repair damaged shingles and flashing. Check siding for peeling paint; touch up where needed. Although you want to avoid the expense of repainting an entire house, investing in a paint job where it's needed is well worth the cost.

■ Clean windows inside and out and replace any cracked panes or damaged screens. Make sure shutters are in good repair and hanging straight. Inside, wash windowsills and draperies.

■ Clean entry doors and thresholds to make them welcoming. The doorbell and light should work.

■ Reduce clutter and make the inside of your home look spotless and spacious. Clear away excess or raggedy furniture. Closets, especially should look roomy. Arrange remaining furniture to make each room appear larger.

■ Shampoo rugs and carpets; wax floors. Replace badly worn carpets with neutral-colored carpeting. Walls and ceiling should be free of smudges, cracks and dents. Paint them, if needed. Inspect woodwork and wallpaper.

■ Clean kitchen, bathroom. They should sparkle with no leaking faucets. Clear away countertop clutter. Eliminate stains in sinks, tubs and commodes. Repair caulking in tubs and showers; clean tile grouting.

■ Organize the basement, attic and garage; clear away cobwebs.

■ Make minor repairs: Fix loose doorknobs, sticking doors and windows. All light fixtures should work. Replace discolored or cracked switch plates.

■ Exterminate. One bug, dead or alive, can make a bad impression on a buyer. Call in a professional. Repair any damaged caused by insects. Allow time for the smell of pesticide to disappear before showing your home.

FINDER: Lots of special cases

(From 1G)

He has two leather portfolios filled with copies of thank-you notes from those he has helped, and as he leafs through them, he can tell anecdotes about each one.

There's the lady that not only got some money through Avery, but was reunited with her brother's daughters, whom she hadn't seen since they were babies. It turns out her mother cut off all contact after her brother was murdered by his wife.

Three, though, stick out in his mind.

One of his largest projects was for Basin Inc., a major oil purchaser that went bankrupt. Basin's creditors hired Avery to find royalty owners. He eventually found 65, filing claims totaling $767,000 within two weeks. They settled for 51 cents on the dollar. Among those he helped were two sisters from Taft, Texas, who each had $106,000 due them. One was in a nursing home, the other was a retired schoolteacher.

There's his second-largest settlement, D.H. White of Mabank, Texas. Unknown to him, he had inherited some mineral rights in Lubbock County originally purchased by his grandmother. After chasing courthouse records in Lubbock, they found White's mother had a duplex in Lubbock. Avery's daughter contacted the tenant, and got White's unlisted phone number.

To White's amazement, Avery contacted him and told him he had $104,000 coming to him from Gulf.

Then there's Winifred Jackson of Florida, who unknowingly inherited some mineral rights, purchased by her stepfather, from her mother. It took Avery a week and 3,000 miles to locate her and give her $73,050 owed her by Gulf. At the time he found her, she had been diagnosed with cancer and was seeking funds to pay for treatment.

When she died, her son called to tell him, saying "My mother would have wanted me to call you."

He turns a few more pages, reads aloud the last sentence of a letter: "Thank you for all you have done. God bless you."

Then he closes the portfolio.

production level to 7,248,000 barrels. If production slides at the same rate, domestic production could slip below 7 million barrel mark sometime this month.

About one-fifth of the February decrease came from declines in Alaska production, says the API.

At the same time imported crude oil and petroleum products continued to increase. Imports stood at approximately 8 million barrels in February and are lower than a month ago, since record cold in the northeast depleted inventories in late 1989, prompting imports to soar to slightly over 9 million barrels daily. But, they are significantly higher than a year ago when imports stood at only 7,824,000 million barrels daily.

"Virtually every energy expert in government, academia and business expects U.S. oil imports to exceed two-thirds by the end of the decade," said Charles J. DiBona, president American Petroleum Institute, who warned last week that a national energy policy could not expect conservation alone to narrow the import gap.

"A more realistic route would veer away from excessive import dependence by also stimulating domestic energy production, and no leaving the entire burden on conservation," warned DiBona.

The spokesman for the oil industry noted that the economy could grow by 3.5 percent in coming years, increasing demand. He said that government could attempt to initiate conservation by increasing energy prices, but prices would have to triple between 1988 and 2000 just to keep energy consumption constant.

At the same time, says DiBona, such a price would threaten even modest economic growth.

DiBona also noted that energy use would continue to rise even if the government intervened into the private affairs of citizens and attempted to impose rigid controls on energy consumption, including stiff milage standards.

Said DiBona: "Americans would be better off if Congress encouraged increased production here at home of oil and other energy sources. This is the road that will take us to where we want to be — more energy secure and more economically healthy." He denouced Congress's ban on exploration of federal lands.

Triton Air places faith in aircraft service firm

By Cynthia Puckett

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Although business in the Texas Panhandle isn't booming, Triton Air Holdings Inc. is betting that an upcoming lift in the area's economy will send the company's investment in a small Amarillo aircraft service business soaring.

Dallas-based Triton Air Holdings acquired Amarillo's Century Aircraft in November.

Bruce Garner, new general manager at the company, which operates under the name Hughes Aviation Services, already is making changes that he said will capture new business for the fixed-base operator.

Fixed-base operators offer services for airplanes similar to those provided by service stations, parking garages and automobile dealerships.

Garner plans to upgrade the 24-hour-a-day services the company provides for the facility's passengers and pilots.

"I can't say it was lacking before, but we're going to improve on what was here," he said.

To better keep in touch with customers' needs, Garner said, his first change was to move his office from a nearby hangar to the terminal facility.

Each aircraft is met by one or two line service technicians and the staff is prepared to render whatever services the pilots or passengers want, including transportation from the site to area restaurants or hotels, emptying trash cans and refueling the aircraft, Garner said.

In addition to businesses that regularly use the Hughes facilities, it is used frequently by business travelers who fly into Amarillo International Airport on commercial airlines and meet chartered or private aircraft at the Hughes terminal for transportation to harder-to-reach areas and smaller airports.

Garner said the corporate aviation business is booming on the east and west coasts and he believes business will improve for aviation services companies in Texas as the state's economy improves.

"This part of the country is still a little bit depressed right now, but it's coming back," Garner said. "That's why we're here doing what we're doing."

Triton has spent $40,000 to $50,000 to redecorate and renovate the Amarillo facility, including addition of a flight planning room for corporate and general aviation pilots. The room will be equipped with a computer that will link pilots to the Federal Aviation Administration for filing flight plans and checking the weather.

The company also refurbished the terminal lobby, the military pilot's training and flight planning room and added a vending machine area and private telephone booths.

These changes will complement what Amarillo already has to offer, Garner said, such as weather that rarely causes flights to be canceled or delayed, and a feasible agreement with Amarillo International airport for runway usage and aircraft storage.

Amarillo's mid-continent location is the perfect spot for aircraft flying from New York to Los Angeles or San Francisco to stop and refuel, Garner said.

Since Amarillo International has what Federal Aviation Administration officials deem the state's longest public runway, the fixed-base operator offers services to passengers and pilots on almost any size aircraft, including heavy military cargo airplanes.

The FBO complex, which includes corporate offices, two hangars for aircraft storage, a restaurant, parts department, maintenance and repair facility and an avionics division, currently employees 52.

The facility also manufactures and installs RaJay turbo charging kits that give piston-engine aircraft turbo charge capability, allowing the aircraft to fly higher and take off from airports located in higher altitudes, making the vehicles more versatile for the aircraft owners.

Also housed at the Hughes facility is Jet East Inc., another subsidiary of Triton Air Holdings. Jet East is an aircraft charter and sales company with worldwide operations.

Bouressa also is vice president of a Jet East facility housed at Hughes Aviation in Austin, which opened Monday.

Triton Energy Corp., the parent company of Triton Air Holdings, is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company with worldwide interests.

Triton Air Holdings also has fixed-base operations in Dallas, Austin, El Paso, Waco, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Okla., and Las Vegas, Nev.

All of Triton's FBOs operate under the Hughes Aviation name.

Southmark finals sale of MGF to Kaiser-Francis

DALLAS (SWN) — Southmark Corp. and MGF Corp. Friday announced that they have consummated their agreements with Kaiser-Francis Oil Company resulting in the sale of all MGF common stock held by Southmark and MGF's minority shareholders. Pursuant to the terms of the agreements, MGF sold assets to Kaiser-Francis for approximately $28 million in cash. Wave of recalls embarrasses Japanese

By Mari Yamaguchi

TOKYO (AP) — The race to cram more technology and power into Japanese television sets and computers sometimes has left quality inspectors behind, leading to smoking appliances and an embarrassing wave of recalls.

The recalls, following a series late last year involving some new model Japanese cars with faulty parts, have revived recollections of a time when "made in Japan" was a label of derision in the United States.

Since January, four Japanese electronics giants — Sony Corp., Matsushita Electric Industrial Co., Pioneer Electronics Corp., and Toshiba Corp. — have issued nationwide public notices recalling hundreds of thousands of color TV sets that suddenly smoked or caused minor fires. Seiko Epson Corp. recalled laptop computers that smoked.

None of the recalls affected products exported to the United States. Most were made for the domestic market, and some were shipped to Taiwan.

"Safety for consumers has been ignored while (companies) concentrate on technology and sales to survive in the competitive market," said Michiko Aoyama, a director at the government-backed Japan Consumer Information Center.

"I'm afraid the quality of Japanese products is declining due to imperfect quality control that cannot catch up with the speed of technological advance," she said.

Toshiba spokesman Yuji Wakayama said: "We have tried so hard to add as many features as possible while reducing the cost as low as possible. The accidents mean production under such conditions has reached the limit."

With the increasing popularity of home videos, electronics companies have been making larger screen televisions that require higher voltage. The recent smoking cases were traced to defects in high-voltage circuits.

Late last year, Toyota recalled thousands of its luxury Lexus cars in the United States after defects were found in the cruise-control mechanism and a brake light. Nissan earlier recalled nearly 38,000 cars in Japan.

The most recent recalls brought a warning from the Ministry of International Trade and Industry. It told the Electronic Industries Association of Japan, which groups 600 manufacturers, to investigate thoroughly, tighten safety and quality control, and adopt regular procedures for recalls.

On Wednesday, a special committee of the association announced a draft for tighter safety standards in TV sets' high-voltage circuits, to be adopted voluntarily by 11 Japanese manufacturers, and standardized procedures to handle defects.

The changes could be reflected in new products within one year, said Ryuji Iwasaki, the association's vice president.

"Generally speaking, our new voluntary safety standards require a substantial change in designs and production," said Hiroshi Wada, Sharp Corp.'s director of product planning.

This probably would result in a 2 percent price increase, he added.

Except for motor vehicles, Japan has no law or government guidelines on recalls or reporting of defects in products, giving companies a great deal of leeway in responding to problems.

"Safety for consumers has been ignored while (companies) concentrate on technology and sales to survive in the competitive market."

Michiko Aoyama, director at the Japan Consumer Information Center.

"We think it is our mission to repair defects to ease our conscience," Toshiba's Wakayama said.

He added, however, that while the problem televisions smoked or burned the tables on which they sat, they "did not kill and hurt people, or burn down houses."

Industry and trade ministry official Takashi Yonehara said: "The recent TV accidents resulted mainly from complex designs and lack of quality controls."

In the ministry's last annual inspection, more than 30 percent of manufacturers were found to have violated government safety standards in products, and MITI will start announcing the names of violators, he added.

A government report in February criticized companies for not promptly giving public notice and reporting defects to industry and trade officials.

Pioneer quietly began repairs for 9,135 defective TV sets last spring, and already had fixed some 8,000 before issuing a public recall notice nine months later, company officials acknowledged.

Sony's public recall notices for six color TV models came almost four months after the first report last October of a Sony set starting to smolder in a home in western Japan.

Sony said it took time to trace the problem to a high-voltage component that had a tendency to overheat after long use.

"We admit our reaction was not quick enough. ... I guess we could have done better," said Koichi Izukura, a Sony spokesman.

Naokazu Takeuchi, spokesman for the Japan Consumer Union, one of the largest Japanese consumer groups, argues that notification of possible dangers should come before anything else.

He also says the government should help process consumer claims, to speed remedies and spread information more widely.

Atsushi Nakamura, a spokesman for the Japan Bar Association, said consumers should be protected by a product liability law, as in the United States, so that victims of product defects do not have to settle for small compensation from manufacturers.

Industry and trade official Tomosaburo Yano said the ministry has urged electronics and auto makers unofficially to make safety a top priority when considering whether to recall their products.

"Companies that don't work hard to improve their products will become losers in the market," Yano said.

'Dr. Doom's' forecasts coming true

By Chip Brown

DALLAS (AP) — Ravi Batra was used to making tumultuous global economic forecasts and having nobody listen — then the predictions started to come true.

Batra is republishing his 1977 book "The Downfall of Capitalism and Communism," this month, 13 years after the India-born economist predicted the Iron Curtain and Berlin Wall would come down.

"When I took the book around to American publishers in 1977, they fought back laughter and said they weren't interested in such an outrageous forecast," Batra said.

"Dr. Doom" still is scorned by most mainstream economists, but he no longer lacks an audience.

BATRA, A 46-year-old professor of economics at Southern Methodist University, attracted international attention when his 1987 New York Times No. 1 best-seller "The Great Depression of 1990" accurately predicted a 500-point drop in the stock market that year.

The market crash brought Batra's alarming forecasts into focus. He expounded his theories on ABC-TV's "Donahue" show and was invited to advise a U.S. Senate committee on economic growth.

Batra's 1987 prophecy and a follow-up called "Surviving the Great Depression of 1990" paint a picture of worldwide unemployment, deflation, stock market crashes and bank failures beginning this year and lasting at least seven years.

"I predicted then and I am sticking to my guns that capitalism and communism will both endure a complete collapse around the year 2000," he said in a recent interview.

"Except for an introduction and one additional chapter outlining what I think will happen in the 1990s, 'The Downfall of Capitalism and Communism' is exactly as I wrote it in 1977," he said.

England's Macmillan Press printed 5,000 copies of the book in 1978. Now Batra's publishing it again himself through his own Venus Books. It's being distributed by Dallas-based Taylor Publishing Co.

BATRA SAID an extremely high concentration of wealth in the United States coupled with a bulging budget deficit have created "a speculative bubble" in the capitalist market that is about to burst.

"Every depression starts with a recession," Batra said. "We are already seeing signs of a recession with the recent collapses of Campeau and Drexel Burnham."

Problems in the junk bond market pushed the operations of retailer Campeau Corp. and investment firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Group Inc. into bankruptcy court.

"The junk bond market is in shambles and the savings and loan failures are magnifying. Unemployment is also beginning to rise and will probably reach 8 percent by the end of 1990."

By 1995, the country will be plagued with "soup and kitchen lines worse than in the 1930s," Batra said.

"The government will try traditional means to recover, but will be ineffective," he writes in "The Downfall of Capitalism and Communism."

"The influence of money in politics will totally disappear, culminating in the demise of capitalism."

Batra wrote in 1977 that communism's bare-bones living standards combined with the continued repression of basic freedoms of speech, the press and assembly "will force Marxism to crumble under its own weight ... perhaps in the next 25 years."

BUT COMMUNISM, unraveling in the Eastern Bloc since mid-November, is likely to make a last stand before succumbing, Batra said.

"Soviet hard-liners and army officers, who have lost out in the recent realignment of power, could take advantage of growing unrest and economic stagnation and overthrow (Russian President Mikhail S.) Gorbachev in a military coup," the book said.

"Even when communism recovers to make a last stand, it will prove to be a rearguard action, delaying not stopping the inevitable," he wrote.

Batra, who said he hired a bodyguard after Black Monday in 1987 to protect himself from several death threats, has drawn worldwide criticism for columns published in The New York Times and The Dallas Morning News heralding his eerie economic forecasts.

"His predictions are very questionable and I think probably untrue," said Lynn Reaser, vice president and chief U.S. economist at First Interstate Bancorp in Los Angeles. "Capitalism appears to be dominating over socialism and the trend seems inevitable toward the market economy.

"I would say there is almost no chance for capitalism's failure. If anything, it's accelerating," Ms. Reaser said.

BATRA SAID his forecasts are born from the teachings of Indian mentor P.R. Sarkar, a spiritualist whose writings outline a history of social cycles dominating history.

Sarkar heads an Indian sect called the Path of Bliss, some of whose followers have been known to take part in rites such as dancing with human skulls.

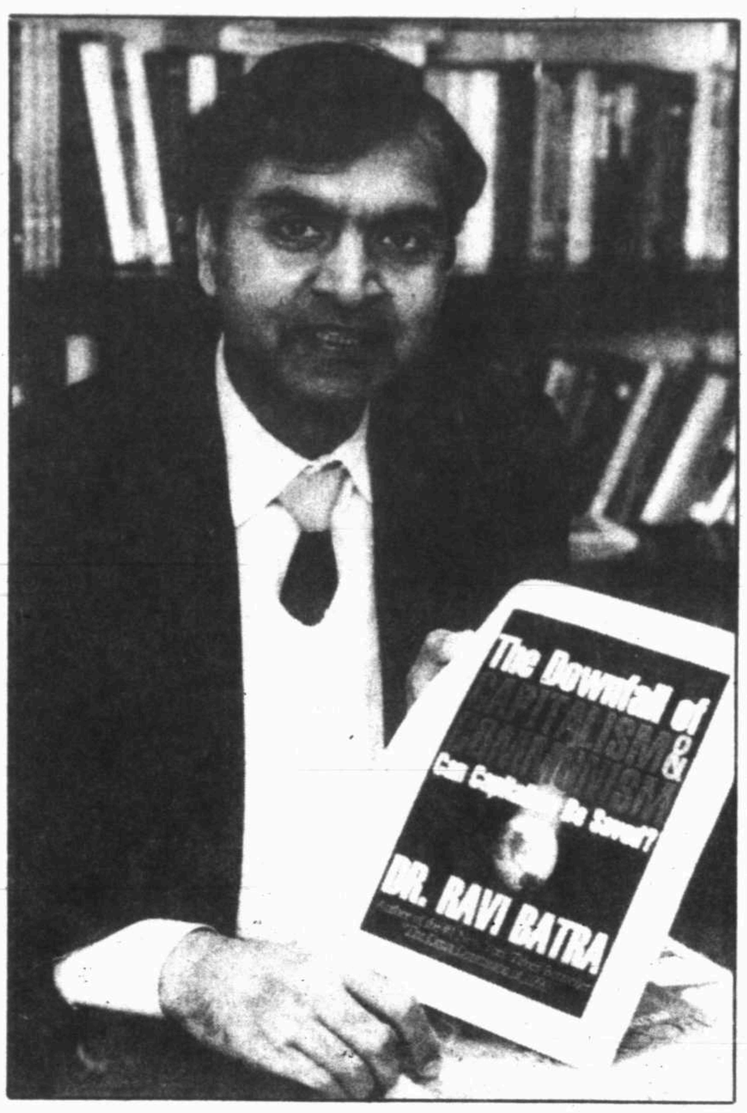

Batra, who enlisted members into a grass roots movement called Stop Another Depression shortly after his first book came out, now says a depression is unavoidable.

He advises people to liquidate and convert assets to cash and gold coins, keeping some squirreled away at home.

Madhav Dhar, a spokesman for Morgan Stanley & Co. said the New York-based investment firm is advising clients to invest about 55 percent of their money in the stock market and 45 percent in bonds "with very little in cash."

Batra said his forecasts include some good news along with the gloom.

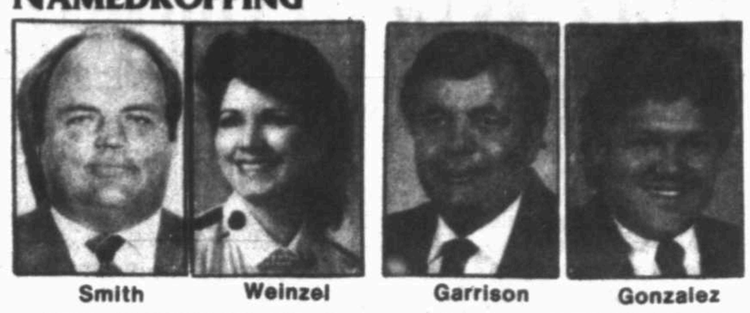

"From the ashes of these two systems will arise a new, compassionate system the likes of which we haven't seen so far in history," he said. "Unlike the end of the Great Depression, war will not restore the economy. War is unthinkable."

Midland American Bank buys downtown location

Staff Report

Midland American Bank has purchased the Midland American Bank building at 401 W. Texas, it has been announced by John Grist, president and chief executive officer.

The acquisition includes the 10-story office building and approximately one-quarter of the city block on which it stands.

Grist said the decision to purchase the building is further indication of his bank's confidence in Midland's future. It follows last summer's purchase of the property at 1109 Andrews Highway, where a branch of the bank is located.

"Because we are a home-owned bank, we are committed to the growth of Midland," said Grist, adding that "we intend to make the building attractive to prospective tenants."

He went on to note that, with local ownership, revenue generated from the building will remain in Midland to create more obs and additional growth opportunities.

The building has a major role in Midland banking history, having housed the Midland National Bank, one of the city's first financial institutions.

Chiat/Day joins competition for Reebok ads

N.Y. Times News Service

Chiat/Day/Mojo has jumped into the competition for the $40 million Reebok International athletic shoe advertising account, which the agency resigned in January when the sneaker company decided to put the account into review.

Chiat's relationship with Reebok has been stormy and its advertising unusual. It developed the "Reebok's Let UBU" campaign, which the company withdrew after retailers complained that it did not improve sales.

Recently, the television networks have refused to run a Chiat commercial for Reebok depicting young people "bungee jumping," leaping off bridges with elastic cords tied to their ankles.

Nonetheless, Chiat's return to the agency review had been rumored in advertising circles for weeks. Its explanation may be changes in Reebok's senior management.

After putting the account into review, the president of Reebok's domestic division, Frank O'Connell, resigned and Reebok consolidated its domestic and international marketing operations under John H. Duerden.

Fort Worth oilman heads two prosperous companies

By Jack Z. Smith

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — R.J. "Bob" Schumacher says he is "very definitely" a Type A personality — an aggressive, impatient man with an often-quick temper.

So what kinds of things are likely to upset Schumacher?

"Anything that's not going my way," he answers with an emphatic tone and an amused smile.

Fortunately for his business associates, things generally seem to go Schumacher's way. They say he's got much more cause for grinning than fuming.

At age 60, the wealthy Schumacher — and the two companies he heads — are prospering survivors of the oil bust.

Schumacher long has been president of 80-employee Texland Petroleum Inc. of Fort Worth, a successful independent oil and gas producer with annual revenues exceeding $20 million.

And at an age when many executives are scaling down their workload, Schumacher has taken on a second executive role. Since June, he has been chairman and chief executive officer of Pride Refining Inc. of Abilene, a 450-employee refining and pipeline company with annual revenues of $360 million. Schumacher, a major stockholder in Pride, took over the company's leadership reins after Pride's CEO and largest shareholder, Jimmy Morris, died of a heart attack.

Schumacher's double-duty role leaves him continually shuttling between Fort Worth and Abilene. Rather than making a 300-mile round trip by car, or being at the mercy of commercial airlines' schedules, he personally pilots Texland and Pride corporate planes in his trips between the two cities.

Associates say that typifies Schumacher — he wants to get where he's going by the fastest method possible.

Or as Jerry Namy, Texland's vice president of exploration, says, "When he gets after something, he just really runs."

Business associates and friends say Schumacher is a brainy "numbers man" who has benefited incalculably from his background as a certified public accountant with a master's degree in business administration. And they say he knows the oil business from A to Z.

Schumacher's wife, Edith, says he is a man who "just likes things done instantly. He does things fast and he expects everybody else to," she says.

Schumacher is not imposing physically, at 5 feet 8 inches tall and 144 pounds. His gray hair, eyeglasses, ruddy complexion and conservative business suits give him much more the stereotypical appearance of a cautious, straight-laced banker than that of a macho, hell-bent-for-leather Texas oilman. But Schumacher suddenly becomes much more imposing when one hears him speak in a brusque baritone that his administrative secretary, Sallie Sanford, calls "that Marine sergeant voice."

"People in the (oil) industry would tell you that Bob is a tough, hard man," Ms. Sanford says. "But there's a soft side to Bob."

She tells, for example, of Schumacher sending money each month to an El Paso family, which in turn buys food for poor children in the border city of Juarez.

Despite his affluence, Schumacher has had to cope with financial crises resulting from the deep downturn in the oil industry in the 1980s.

He and Texland Chairman Bill Rector, who each own 50 percent of the company, feverishly scrambled to scale back their oil exploration activities in 1986, after oil prices tumbled from $30 to $10 a barrel.

A separate drilling company — in which Schumacher and Rector each held a nearly 20-percent interest — was disbanded after oil and gas exploration made a dramatic dropoff. The company's drilling rigs were auctioned.

A sheer mention of that venture brings a major-league grimace to Schumacher's face.

(Texland, rather than owning and operating its own drilling rigs, now hires outside contractors to drill its wells.)

Schumacher also was a director and shareholder in the failed First State Bank of Abilene, now part of NCNB Texas.

Texland had planned to drill 50 wells in 1986. But oil prices quickly crashed from $30 to $10 a barrel. The company already had identified oil and gas prospects, staked out a drilling location and made advance payments to a drilling contractor. Texland canceled its plans to drill all but five of the wells and got $8 million to $10 million in refunds from the contractor.

In light of the prolonged industry downturn, "it turned out to be an excellent move," Rector says.

The company plans to drill about 20 wells this year, primarily in the oil-rich Permian Basin of West Texas. Though many energy companies are concentrating their efforts more heavily on finding natural gas (on the belief that gas prices will rise faster than oil prices). Texland is primarily an oil producer and expects to remain so.

The company operates 600 wells that produce 6,000 barrels of oil and 4.6 million cubic feet of gas a day. Its ownership interest in each well varies, averaging 40 percent to 50 percent.

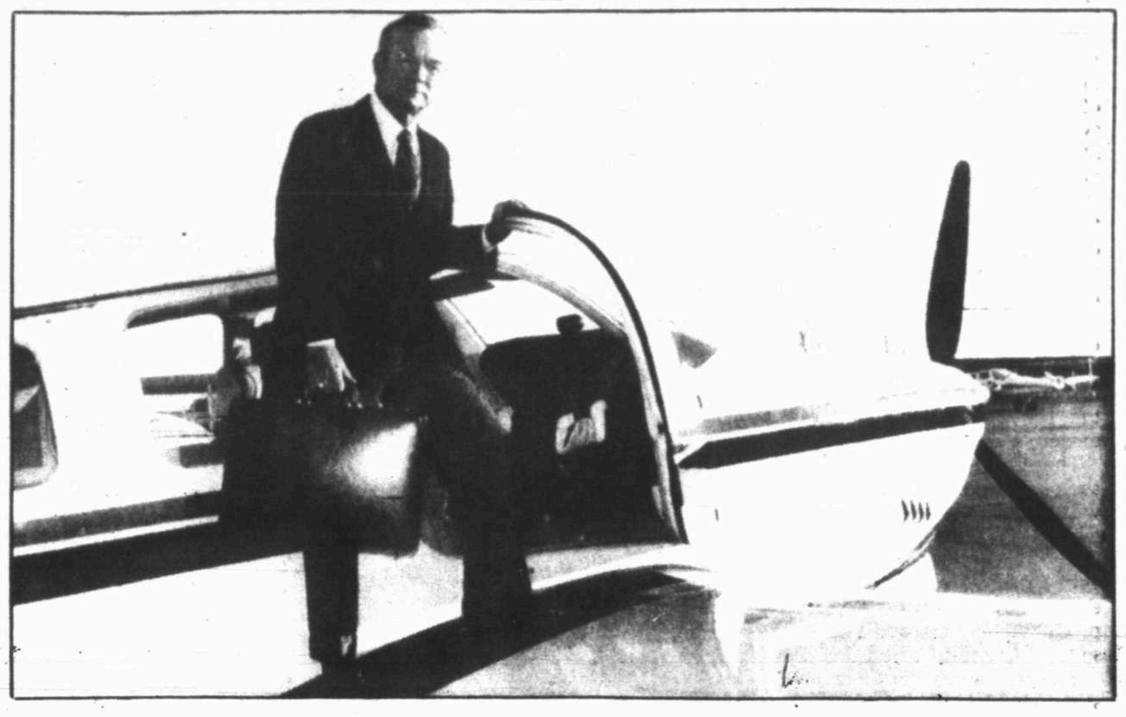

Texland's annual revenues from oil and gas production approximate $22 million. Texland is privately held, and the company does not make public its financial statements. But Schumacher acknowledges that the company is "very profitable" in the current climate of oil prices exceeding $20.

After gross production taxes, royalty payments and operating expenses are deducted from the company's approximately $22 million in annual production revenues, it still has an estimated $8 million to $9 million remaining to finance drilling projects, pay down debt or spend in other ways.

Texland's formula for success has been simple.

It hires well-trained, experienced people. Its professional staff includes three certified public accountants, six petroleum engineers and five geologists (including Namy, a former college professor with a doctorate in geology.)

Texland sticks to what it knows. Its engineers and geologists are intimately acquainted with the stratigraphic traps and other geological nuances of the Permian Basin's north rim.

Robins family gives up company

By Joe Taylor

E. Claiborne Robins

E. Claiborne Robins Jr.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — It once was known as the Fortune 500 drugmaker that soothed millions of throats with Robitussen cough syrup, coated dried lips with Chap Stick balm and gave generously to charities and higher education.

Today, A.H. Robins still makes those products and other remedies, but it's owned by another company after a long bout with bankruptcy court.

To many women, its name now is more synonymous with cruel stinginess, all tied to one of the most notorious products ever sold, the Dalkon Shield birth control device.

The family that formerly ran the company still has considerable wealth but keeps a low profile, partly because of the furor over the Dalkon Shield. The device, which maimed thousands of women in one of the nation's worst product liability cases, is no longer sold.

As the leading family member said when he surrendered the company late last year, "Some of the unhappiest people I've known are people who have a lot of money."

The surrender was one of the most traumatic moments in the life of E. Claiborne Robins, a millionaire whose grandfather, Albert Hartley Robins, founded the company as a three-employee apothecary shop.

E. Claiborne Robins took over the business in 1933, parlaying it through hard work into one of the largest U.S. pharmaceutical companies.

As the business prospered, Robins and his relatives became known for their philanthropy, with gifts to the University of Richmond. Its graduates include Robins, 79, and his son, E. Claiborne Robins Jr., 46.

The senior Robins and other members have donated millions of dollars to the university, including $50 million in 1969 that at the time was the largest personal gift ever made to a private U.S. college.

Women seeking payment for Dalkon Shield injuries have a different view of the Robins' largesse. Many argue that despite immense public and legal pressure, the company erected obstacle after obstacle to prevent them from receiving compensation.

Earlier this month, 85,000 Dalkon Shield claimants, the last of the 200,000 eligible for redress, were mailed packets explaining options for receiving payment for injuries. Some had used the device more than 15 years ago.

"They made it very difficult for the women they injured to get compensation," said Linda Hightower, director of the Dalkon Shield Victims Association in Atlanta and herself a former Dalkon Shield user.

In the users' eyes, Robins never has provided a simple, direct public apology, not to mention a sympathetic attitude toward compensation. E. Claiborne Robins has said he doesn't consider money important and that any amount above what's needed to live comfortably "means nothing really."

Yet money, or the lack of it, has shaped his life.

Two years after Robins was born in 1910, his father died, leaving to his mother the responsibility of holding together the family business founded in 1878.

Robins worked his way through the University of Richmond by stacking books at the city library for 25 cents an hour. He graduated at the height of the Depression in 1931 and enrolled in pharmacy school at the Medical College of Virginia, where he graduated with honors in 1933.

"It was a case of financial necessity," he once said of attending summer school to finish pharmacy college early.

Later Robins borrowed $2,000 to take over the family business and went on the road selling pharmaceuticals. His work and salesmanship turned the company into a multimillion-dollar enterprise by the time the Dalkon Shield was added to Robins' product line in 1971.

Before long, however, the corporation began hearing complaints from doctors and women who used the IUD. Some users suffered miscarriages; some became sterile. A few died.

As concerns multiplied about the Dalkon Shield's safety, the company yanked it off the market. That same year — 1974 — Robins began to have health problems, suffering two heart attacks. He stepped down the next year as president of the company, but stayed on as board chairman.

Both Robins and his son, who became the company's president in 1977, have refused numerous requests for interviews in recent years as they watched a wave of lawsuits seeking damages from Dalkon Shield injuries tear at the foundation of their business.

In 1985, the company filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization. Last Dec. 15, the case ended, a $2.5 billion trust fund was established to compensate Dalkon Shield claimants and A.H. Robins was taken over by the American Home Products Corp. of New York.

Neither Robins has a role in the business anymore. Still, they emerged from the 4½ years of bankruptcy proceedings with their personal fortunes intact. Forbes magazine has reckoned the family holdings are worth $325 million.

Lawyers for Dalkon Shield users long have charged that the IUD was rushed to market without adequate testing and that attempts were made to mask its flaws.

A federal judge once accused E.C. Jr. and two other company executives of creating "monstrous mischief" with "an instrument of death, mutilation and disease."

"You have taken the bottom line as your guiding beacon and the low road as your route," U.S. District Judge Miles Lord of Minneapolis said. "This is corporate irresponsibility at its meanest."

The Robinses and their aides never were charged with criminal negligence in the Dalkon Shield case, and the younger Robins said later that Lord had committed "gross abuse of judicial discretion and power."

Friends of the family are reluctant to talk about the father and son, but some say privately that they were more distressed at losing the company than at the high price of the Dalkon Shield settlement.

The men said in a joint farewell letter to employees that they would remember "shared times both difficult and rewarding. We have been tested, and the results achieved in spite of those difficult times are witness to what good people can accomplish."

The troubled history of the Dalkon Shield has affected what the elder Robins once called the most satisfying accomplishments of his career.

Tubular Corp. of America to be sold

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Oklahoma Industrial Finance Authority says a deal is in the works for a Fortune 500 company to purchase the Tubular Corporation of America Inc., which has a plant in Muskogee.

Thomas McGrann, chief executive officer of Tubular, said Wednesday the purchase hasn't been completed and the name of the buyer isn't being released until the transaction is complete.

The proposed purchase calls for employment levels and management to remain the same at the Muskogee steel fabricating plant that opened in 1982. Tubular is headquartered in Houston.

The OIFA said the company that is purchasing Tubular plans to pay off a $471,000 loan delinquency owed to the OIFA, a state agency that provides financing primarily for industrial projects.

Also Wednesday, the OIFA approved a $1.25 million loan to R.B. Manton Inc., which is moving from Sand Springs to Dewey and will eventually increase employment by more than 100 jobs.

Hollytex Carpet Mills Inc., which has plants in Anadarko and Watonga, received approval from the agency for up to $2.6 million in second mortgage loans as part of a plan to raise $7.5 million.

Hollytex said the company can strengthen its position with the purchase of a flooring products distribution company.

Perspective keeps artists 'In Focus'

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Still lifes, landscapes, nudes and portraits hang in the McCormick Gallery at Midland College, mute testimony to the power of collective bargaining.

The 100 photographs, on view through April 16, represent the work of 20 area photographers working independently yet exhibiting collectively as "In Focus: A Photographic Society."

Membership in the four-year-old "In Focus" organization is open to photographers who have the desire to expand their abilities and to help others strengthen their work. No portfolio review is required.

"It's dangerous to work in a void, and the critique of other experienced photographers is always helpful for you to mature in your work," said member Kent Moss, who along with Gretchen Van Cleave and Michael Banschbach recently spent time talking about In Focus.

"Honest criticism is crucial to individual artistic growth," said Banschbach, who works exclusively in black and white. "Growth does not come without pain, and the ego is the biggest stumbling block to true growth."

"It's helped me to expand my vision," said Ms. Van Cleave, who teaches at Odessa College. "I'm not as tunnel-visioned, and I've learned to accept a lot more different styles of photography."

The society's story dates back to 1986 when Banschbach decided that others in his position might be looking for the same thing he was.

"There was no way that people out of the academic atmosphere and advancing on their own could get together and see each other's work and help each other. I sent out a letter to 20 people I thought would be interested in the group."

The first monthly meeting was an informal get together where those attending decided the society's purpose.

"The group is for support of each other," Banschbach said. The members view "each other's work and collectively help each photographer grow and produce stronger work."

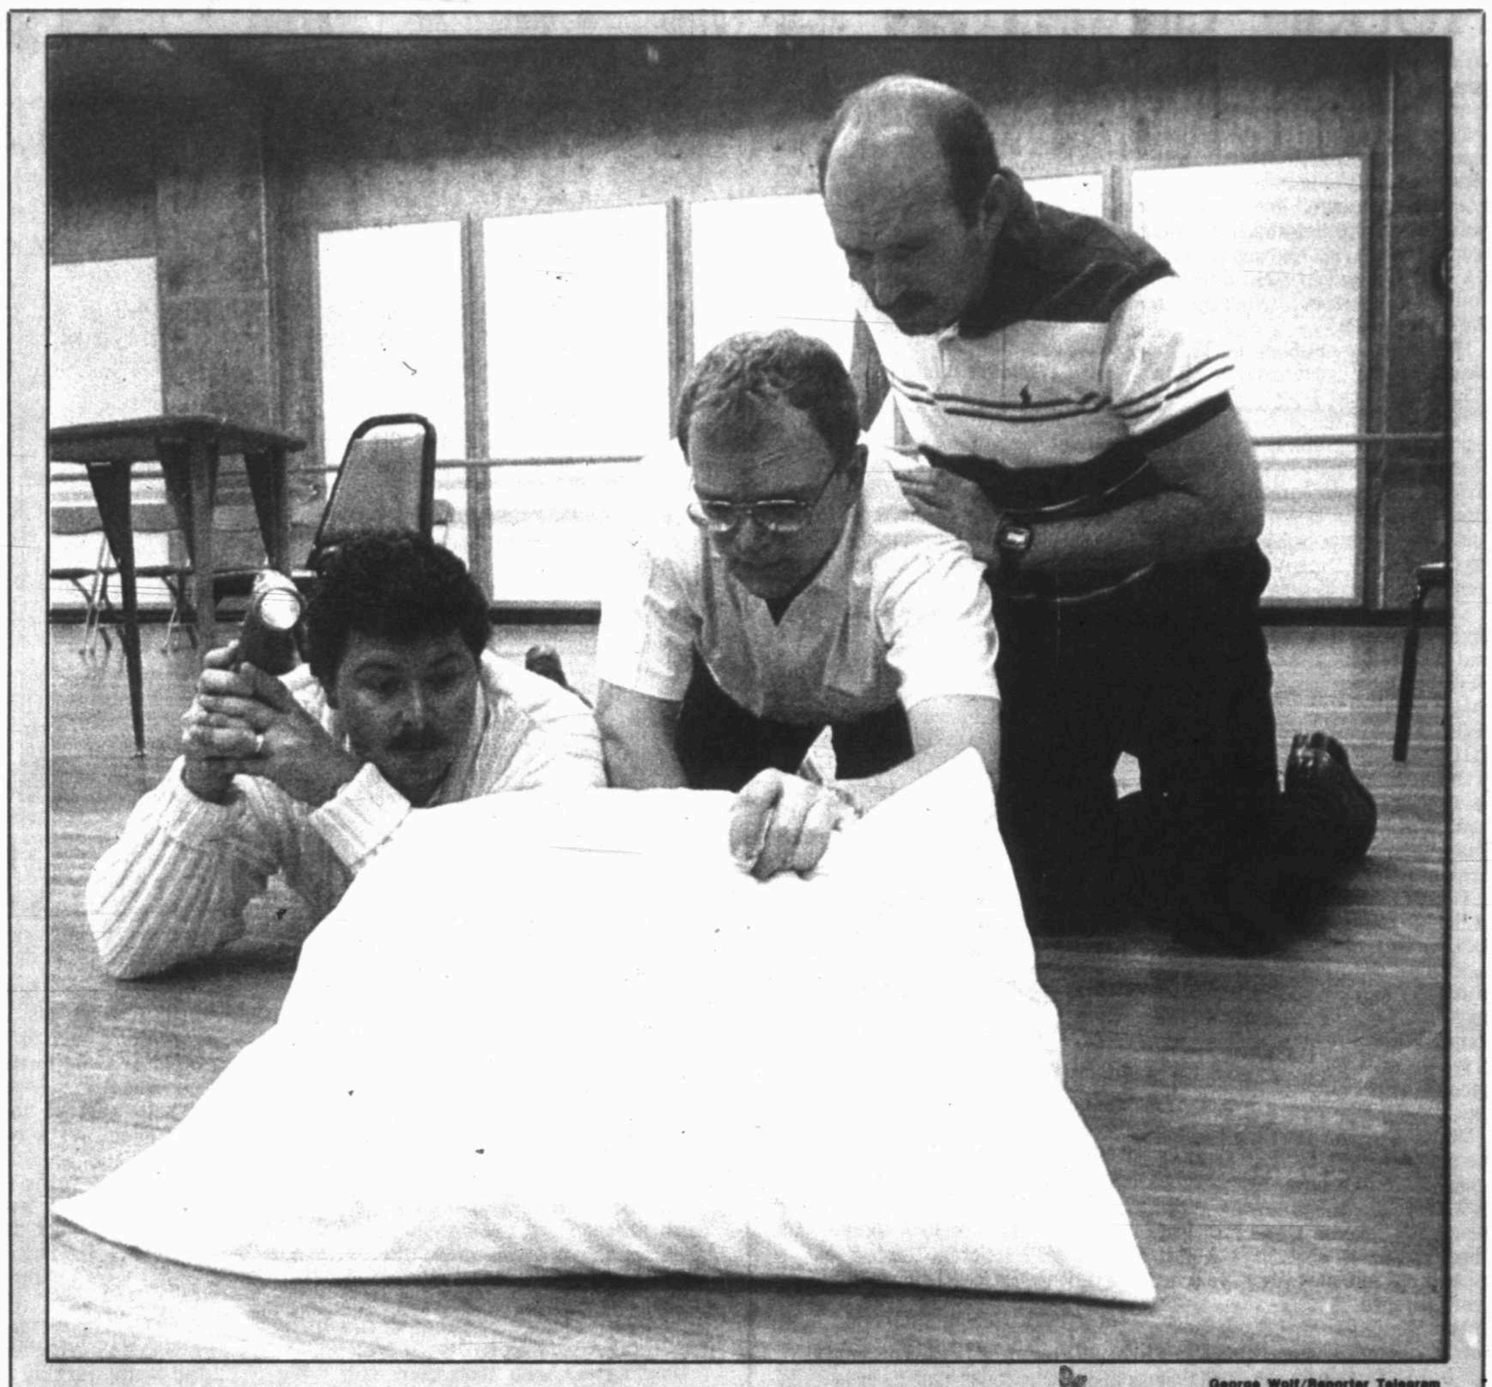

Banschbach's letter made clear that the group would not be a

'Boys' ready to move in Four mentally disabled men living together 'sweet story'

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

"The Boys Next Door" move onto Theatre Midland's main stage Friday when Midland Community Theatre's third season production of 1990 opens.

Written by Tom Griffin, the play tells the story of four mentally disabled men who live together in an apartment. Those cast in the production find it touching, humorous and occasionally sad.

"The script has such a sweet story," said Jim Bartlett, who plays Norman. "It's a very moving play. The whole cast is enthused."

Norman is an expert doughnut maker, who is also keeper of the keys. His other roommates are the excitable, self-imposed leader of the household, Arnold, played by David Whitaker; slow, steady and loving Lucien, played by Terry Martin; and the bright but troubled Barry, played by Bobby Marshall. Supervising this group household is Jack Palmer, played by Brian Schwanitz.

"He's pushy and really tries to take control of situations and people," Whitaker said of his character Arnold. "I'm more of a blender."

Lucien is the most severely retarded of the men.

"Lucien is different because he can come up with things that are absolutely lucid," said Martin. "You hear him come up with things and say, 'Where did he come up with that?' Like when children say things, and it catches you off guard."

Barry is a schizophrenic.

"This part is the most difficult in the show because he's so confused and his energy patterns keep changing all the time," Marshall said of the role of Barry. "He's the basic dark part of the show."

Supervising the "boys" is not easy.

"I have to come across as a tough guy sometimes, and I'm not by nature a tough guy," Schwanitz said. "The times where the tough guy image is allowed to crack in the show, I feel more comfortable with those scenes. That feels more like me. I hope that I can sell the tough guy image convincingly."

Bartlett said the play centers as much around Jack as it does around the boys.

Actor enjoys stretching wings as 'Big Bird'

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

In Midland, Michael F. Harrison is known by everyone and no one. Kids who don't know him already have plans to see him when he's here — this week.

Harrison is the "Sesame Street Live" Big Bird. The touring company's 10th season production, "Silly Dancing," comes to Midland College's Chaparral Center Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Children chant for Big Bird. Babies mumble the name," Harrison said in a recent interview. "You become very sensitive to what they feel about this character of Jim Henson's. I consider myself privileged to play this prestigious character."

Harrison's credentials include "Timbuktu' on Broadway with Ertha Kitt, "The Wiz" with Diana Ross and Michael Jackson, "The Jazz Singer" with Neil Diamond, "Shepard" off Broadway and "Lost in Stars" with Brock Peters.

"This character Jim Henson created is perfect for me right now," Harrison said. "The costumes are warm. It's a very physical job like football. And it takes an extreme amount of concentration to stay within the character — seen around the world and known by millions of people. It's a tough job, and so far I believe that I've done the best I can do with him."

Even after 5½ seasons as Big Bird, Harrison is still "exhilarated" when he walks out as Big Bird.

"It's a long time, and I've had time to cultivate things of Big Bird and make him come to life."

Harrison was originally hired by Vee Corp., producers of "Sesame Street Live," to play Herry Monster and understudy the role of Big Bird. When the actor playing Big Bird terminated his contract, Harrison stepped in.

Almost everything that can go wrong on stage has happened to Harrison.

"I've had a very interesting time in Big Bird. I've fallen. The mechanism has broken. I've lost my direction. I've been hit with props. The tape stopped running the pre-recorded voices. Whatever it is, it's happened."

These situations call for "spontaneity," Harrison said. "We're already in motion. The character takes over, and the response is wonderful to watch."

Harrison, who lists Erroll Flynn and "Robin Hood" as some of his favorites, traces his acting back to his avid interest in old movies when he was a child.

"Somewhere in my heart and my mind as a child, I said, 'I can do this.' And I forgot about it. I completely left it alone."

He thought his path lay with athletics and was a letterman in high school football.

"Things did not jell for me in my life to be a professional entertainer that way — as an athletic," Harrison said. When he was Cookie Monster, from left, Herry Monster, Elmo, Ernie and Bert are among the stars of "Sesame Street Live," celebrating its 10th season with "Silly Dancing." It comes to Chaparral Center at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday and at 4 and 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. Tickets, priced at $9 with a $1.50 discount for children 12 and under, may be purchased at Chaparral Center's box office. Groups of 20 or more receive a $2 discount.

BOYS: Actor must sell audience on 'tough guy' role

"The play mig! t be about him, instead of us four," Bartlett said. "He's the only one who changes. We don't change. We stay the same, but we're holding him back from growing. It's tearing him up. He learns and grows, and we don't. We stay in our own world in the same place."

Martin, as a member of MCT's play reading committee, read "The Boys Next Door" in 1989.

"I absolutely fell in love with the story, the characters, the whole feeling of the play," Martin said. "It bills itself as a comedy, but it's kind of a bittersweet comedy. I think the people will get caught up in the daily lives of the characters, their successes and failures."

Co-produced by Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson, a local law firm, and directed by Jef Gurley, "The Boys Next Door" is on stage Friday, Saturday, April 8, 12-14 and 19-21. For reservations call 682-4111.

Others in the cast are David Willis as Barry's father, Allison Kirkpatrick as Norman's girlfriend and Polly Welmaker, triple-cast as Mrs. Fremus, Mrs. Warren and Clara.

The production is being staged in the Bertolt Brecht theater style.

"Brechtean theater is a presentational style of theater," Martin said. "The actors will not leave the stage. We all have our seats on the stage. When we are not in the play, we take our seats and then become actors and not the characters."

Whitaker, who first auditioned for a role in 1987, feels a "brotherhood" with the boys.

"I feel like these guys," Whitaker said. "Maybe I was typecast. There are times when I feel handicapped myself just as a part of everyday life."

And Bartlett finds his character not so different than himself.

"Norman's happy go lucky, a bull in a china closet, which isn't too far away from how I am."

Martin has noticed Norman's energy level.

"Lucien has so much energy that is trying to get out, but physically it can't," Martin said. "You can see the energy is there, but it's sort of like a slow methodical kind of energy. Every now and then he will release it, but it's there all the time. It's very draining."

Perhaps Marshall is having the most difficulty. Marshall, who has often appeared in musical productions, has found playing Barry "a lot more difficult that" he "thought it was going to be.

"He has very high highs and very low lows," Marshall said. "It's really incredibly interesting, but incredibly difficult."

Although Schwanitz hasn't yet reached the place where he has "embodied Jack," he and his friends have noticed he is "talking differently."

For none of the five is "The Boys Next Door" a debut.

Newest to the stage is Whitaker, an environmental technician for Shell Oil Company. In January of 1987, Whitaker auditioned for the lead in the Permian Playhouse's production of "Alone Together."

"Suddenly, I got the feeling that I could do this," Whitaker said. "I had been in the audience forever. In December I went to a pretty high-powered seminar, 'Excellence.' I discovered some things that were inside me that I didn't know were there. So I just went for it. And I got it."

Bartlett traces his acting career back to a high school production in 1967. He moved to Midland in 1980 and started helping with construction at MCT in 1981.

"Then, I tried out for my first show in '82," Bartlett said. "It just grabs hold of you, and it won't let go. It's enjoyable. It's fun. Plus it also helps you to grow, to deal with people, to be involved with people. I think just about every play has a purpose so you are always learning."

Martin first performed in a high school production of "MASH" in 1974.

"All my friends were auditioning, and they said, 'Come on, this will be great fun.' And it's been non-stop since then. I enjoy being on stage, but at the same time, I enjoy doing off stage work, lights, sound, construction. I enjoy all aspects of theater. And I make a pretty good audience member."

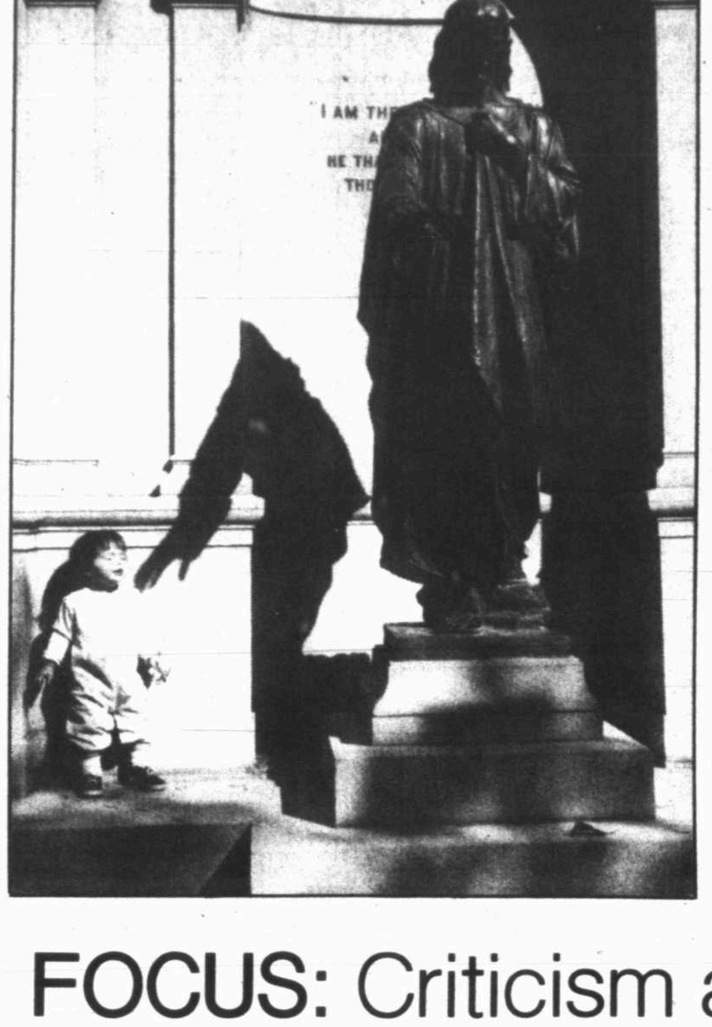

Marshall traces his love for theater back to his childhood.

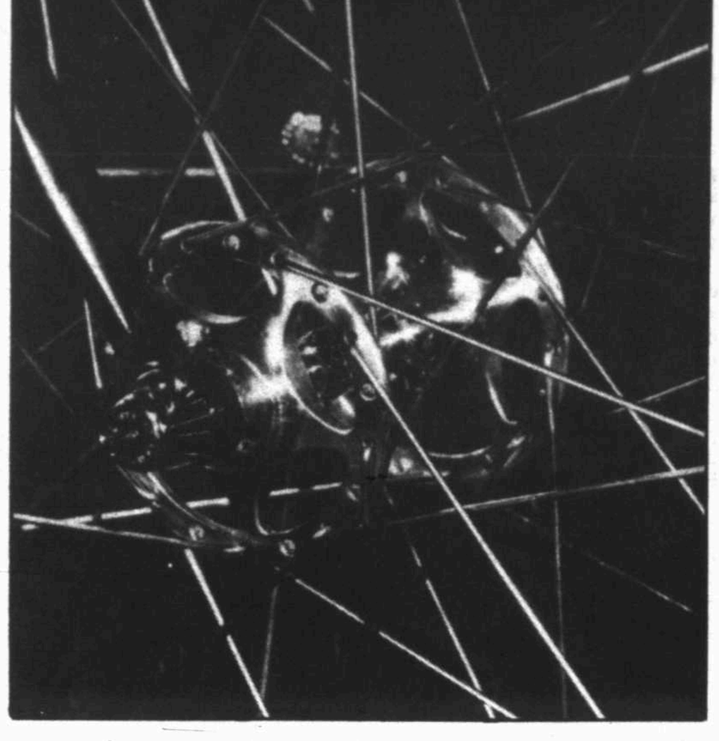

"My dad was a singer when we lived in Virginia, and he did album recordings and beauty pageants and sang on the radio. My first show that I did was in the third grade in Memphis." In high school, Marshall began "doing theater nonstop.

"I came here to rest, to get away from professional theater in San Antonio," Marshall said. "And I haven't stopped."

Schwanitz "had a lot of fun" when he first performed in college in 1975. His first two shows were in Michigan. The director was Ted Strickland. Then, when he moved to Midland and auditioned for "Funny Girl," who was directing MCT's production? Ted Strickland.

"It was strange," Schwanitz said. "Once again fate is a controlling influence in our lives."

"mutual admiration society."

"I demand honest critiques because I want so desperately to grow," Banschbach said. He knew the difficulty artists have in accepting criticism, as well as how demanding it is to produce an effective critique.

"It's critical that each photographer realizes it's not an attack on their personal character," Banschbach said. "It's solely a comment on their work."

"It doesn't bother me in the least bit when someone tells me how I can better my image," Ms. Van Cleave said. "I listen to it, consider the change, and then decide if it's something I would do."

Moss agrees with her, then said, "We want to know how well our images communicate to others."

Emotions can run high at meetings, Banschbach, Moss and Ms. Van Cleave said.

"Not very many people in this group are timid, and they are certainly willing to stand up for their point of view," Banschbach said.

"And you're looking at some of them right now," Ms. Van Cleave said. "We've been in some intense discussions."

"Heated discussions," Banschbach added. "And I think it's a tribute to the group that we can stand up for what each of us believes and discuss it."

"Openly," Ms. Van Cleave interjected.

"And still remain friends afterwards," Banschbach said.

"And still come to the next meeting and remain friends," Ms. Van Cleave continued.

"We don't have to worry about tiptoeing around to avoid hurting feelings," Banschbach said.

"That's part of the excitement of the open forum; it's a real democracy," Moss said.

Unlike the Texas Photographic Society, which abandoned its periodic critiques in favor of members putting their work up and talking about it themselves, In Focus does not want to stop its critiques, Banschbach said.

"I've been encouraged by our group sticking with the criticisms," Banschbach said. "And really working to make them the best that they can be."

In Focus has had exhibits at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin in Odessa, Texas Tech University, Sul Ross University, Odessa College, Gallery 1114 in Midland, the Presidential Museum in Odessa, the Diamond "M" Museum in Snyder and at the Photographic Center, Dallas.

Every member is guaranteed a photograph in each exhibit, chosen by a panel of three members, who also select the rest of the pieces. Membership on the panel rotates. Works are judged on quality, content, presentation and visual strength of the works together as an exhibition.

In Focus membership includes professional and amateur photographers, and ranges from those with a master of fine arts degree in photography to those with no formal training.

"In Focus is stimulating the amateur photographer in the Permian Basin to exhibit, lecture and demonstrate photography to the general public," said Moss, who teaches photography and design at MC.

Ms. Van Cleave described two goals of the organization: "educating the community"; and getting "photography accepted as an art form."

"For the public to understand what fine art photography is about, we have to extend ourselves to the public and educate them in a non-threatening atmosphere," Banschbach said. "Here is a group of people who consider photography an essential part of their lives. In Focus is needed to fulfill a requirement in all of our lives."

Members include George Alameda, Roger Allen, M. Andrews, D. Avery, Ron Carlton, Steve Goff, Cia Hager, Jean Henry, Donna Rae Howard, Rodney Howard, John LaCaze, Barbara McDonald, Mackie McDonald, R. Mack Newport, Judith Purcell, John Manuel Scruggs, Vicky Welch and Mark Weston.

"We really don't have two people doing the same thing; it's a great good mix," Banschbach said.

"A lot of times you get copycats. Everybody in this group — their approach is their own. That's when you get the freshest work."

SESAME: Dance proved as challenging as athletics

(From 1H)

Harrison

"That's very old for a dancer. Your muscles are not supposed to be as pliable as if you were younger to start. I disagree. It was such a challenge to go into that field of athletics. It put me in touch with another part of me — a more artistic athletic."

He found dance to be "wonderful. It puts you in touch with so much movement in life — color, atmosphere. The buoyancy of humanity sometimes comes through simple movement."

Harrison called entertainment a "service of enlightment." He hopes to find himself in that category of performers who are honored for the service they perform.

And, he has ambitions about doing other work, such as television, soaps, commercials and modeling.

"I would like to be outside of the costume with what I have learned from Big Bird and present that message now."

Harrison said this year's production has a special message. The script begins with Big Bird asking his friends to be in his "Silly Dancing" show.

"There's an argument between the characters over who is the best silly dancer," Harrison said. "There're different dances that we do for each other. We can all dance for each other at one point or another in our lives."

Big Bird's show leads the audience through 90 minutes of famous dance styles as Bert, Ernie, Prairie Dawn, Cookie Monster, The Count, Grover and Oscar the Grouch show Big Bird everything from jazz, tap and swing to polkas, sambas and the twist. These Sesame Street Live regulars are joined by guest starts Barkley the Dog, Elmo, Telly Monster and Oscar's favorite grouch, Grundgetta.

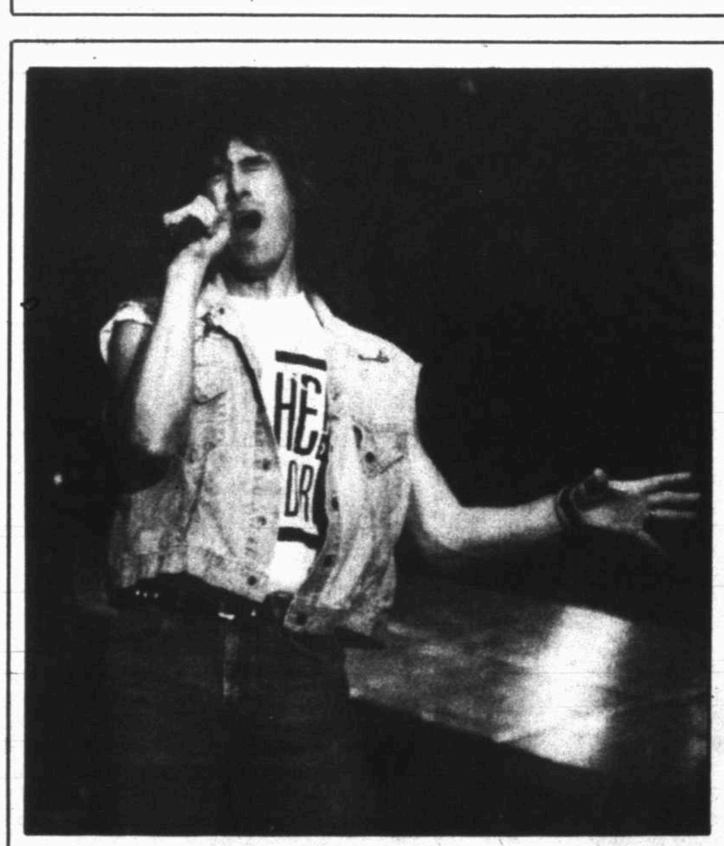

As Big Bird's show progresses, a story unfolds that teaches a special lesson about the importance of practice and the value of taking pride in individuality.

"Silly Dancing," written by Norman Stiles, head writer for Children's Television Workshop's "Sesame Street," is a VEE Corporation production produced by Bob Shipstad and presented in cooperation with Children's Television Workshop.

"If we pick up the paper and look at politicians doing this and that — the world's a mess," said the 39-year-old Harrison.

"But you have characters like Big Bird, Cookie Monster, the Count — child fantasy, adult fantasy as well. I thank Jim Henson for putting his dream into the world."

Tickets, priced at $9 with a $1.50 discount for children 12 and under, may be purchased at Chaparral Center's box office. Groups of 20 or more receive a $2 discount.

Opening lead: King of ♣

If we told you that, on occasion, you have to throw away your top card in a suit to make a contract, you would suspect us of trying to pull an April Fool's trick on you. Nevertheless, here's a hand to prove our contention.

North-South had agreed that a new minor suit was forcing, so there was no need for South to bid more than two diamonds at his second turn. (We might have opted for three no trump, with unhappy results should the enemy have found a club lead.) When North took a heart preference, South decided to bank his 150 honors by raising to four hearts.

West started with three high clubs, forcing declarer to ruff. Had trumps divided 3-2, the play would have been over in a matter of seconds. The 4-1 split, however, posed problems, for there was no fast entry back to declarer's hand to enable the jack of diamonds to be cashed after clearing North's winners in the suit.

The bidding and play to the first three tricks pointed the way to a solution of this knotty problem. Although a passed hand, West had shown up with A K J fifth in clubs. With the king of spades as well, West might have opened the bidding. So declarer drew four rounds of trumps. On the last, South discarded the table's ace of spades! After cashing dummy's high diamonds, declarer led a spade. No matter how East defended, the queen of spades was going to provide an entry to declarer's hand to score the jack of diamonds as the 10th trick!

Clancy novel took 5 years to become film

By Bob Thomas

Connery

Yet the saga took five years to reach the screen. At least part of the reason, observes producer Mace Neufeld, is that studio executives don't read books.

The Paramount Pictures release is starring Sean Connery, Alec Baldwin and a mammoth sub named Red October after the Russian Revolution. Neufeld optioned the Clancy book after reading the galley proofs in 1985. Even though the book was a huge best seller, the producer's efforts to find a studio failed.

"The cost factor was one reason," he said. "In Hollywood, because of time constraints, very few people in a position to say yes to a project like this read the book. They generally read the reader's report.

"This book doesn't condense well into two or three pages. I read some of the reports from the other studios, and the story was too complicated to understand. Fortunately, I was able to get a major executive at Paramount to read the book, and he said: 'I think this can make a great movie. Let's see if we can develop it.' "

Larry Ferguson and Donald Stewart worked on the script, and Neufeld sought the cooperation of the U.S. Navy — "without that, there could be no movie." At first the submariners were reluctant, pointing to their reputation as "the silent service."

BUT MANY of the admirals were fans of the Clancy book, Neufeld said, and they concluded a film would be a good way of "showing taxpayers where their money was going." It helped that Paramount had glamorized the Navy's jet fighters in "Top Gun."

Neufeld would admit only that "The Hunt for Red October" cost "in excess of $30 million" — some estimates are as high as $50 million. Much of the budget went to the Navy, which carries a list of charges for equipment and personnel used in movies.

The first actor signed for the large, all-male cast was Alec Baldwin.

"The picture was first mentioned to me in December of 1988," the Long Island-born actor recalled in an interview. "But it was not mentioned as the lead role. I figured they would get 'Mr. Big' again."

That had happened to Baldwin again and again. He had played supporting roles in such films as "Beetlejuice," "Married to the Mob," "Working Girl," "Talk Radio" and "She's Having a Baby."

"For some of the films I actually read for the lead roles," he says. "It didn't work out that I got the roles.

"I HAD been offered some leads in films that were less desirable to me, and I turned them down. I was lucky to be working with Mike Nichols, Woody Allen, Jonathan Demme and John Hughes. So I took the best that was offered to me at that time."

Baldwin was joined by a strong cast including Scott Glenn, James Earl Jones, Sam Neill, Tim Curry, Richard Jordan and Courtney B. Vance. The key role of the Soviet sub commander, Marko Ramius, went to the German actor Klaus Maria Brandauer.

John McTiernan ("Die Hard") was chosen as director. He was two weeks into filming when disaster struck: Brandauer could not report because of another commitment. The filmmakers sent a distress signal — and a copy of the script by fax — to Sean Connery.

"I had reservations about it," admits Connery. "I thought this kind of Cold War intrigue might be dated because of recent events. It turned out that the studio had failed to fax the first page of the script, which explained that it took place before Gorbachev."

Connery arrived in Los Angeles on a Friday and was supposed to start shooting on Monday. He requested a day's rehearsal, then jumped into his role as the stolid Soviet captain. He managed with remarkable ease, despite speaking his early dialogue in Russian.

"It wasn't hard," he said. "They were all one-liners."

HE ALSO had to deal with the immensely complicated submarine hardware. "I can't even program my video recorder."

Another hazard: the submarine sets. Because filming aboard actual subs was impractical, studio wizards constructed two 50-foot-square platforms to house mockups of the Red October and the USS Dallas. They stood on top of two hydraulic gimbals that could simulate the subs' movements.

"It was very claustrophobic," Connery recalls. "There were 62 people in a very confined space, 45 feet above the stage floor. It got very hot on the sets, and I'm also prone to seasickness. The set would tilt to 45 degrees. Very disturbing."

He was a navy man himself. "I enlisted at the age of 16 and rose to the august position of able-bodied seaman. I enlisted for 12 years, but I was released after three because of ulcers — which tells you something."

Although he appears throughout the film, Connery's work was telescoped from seven weeks to four. The production continued for months on locations from Port Angeles, Wash., to the waters off Los Angeles. That was the site of opening shots of the Red October surfacing.

"We had built a replica over 400 feet long," says producer Neufeld. "Taking it out on the ocean was a scary moment for all of us. We weren't sure it would work. Happily it did."

PARAMOUNT IS taking no chances that the launch of "The Hunt for Red October" will go unnoticed. The biggest movie hype since "Batman" was launched with an ad on the Super Bowl telecast. Billboards in major cities have carried the teaser line, "The hunt is on." That was followed by a poster with the film's title and a stern portrait of Sean Connery.

Millions of dollars have been poured into two-page ads in national magazines and commercials on national TV. A gala premiere in Washington was aimed to attract political attention.

M.C. Beaton mystery enjoyable diversion

"Death of a Perfect Wife," by M.C. Beaton. St. Martin's. 179 Pages. $15.95.

A Review

Mary Campbell
Associated Press

Among writers of cozy village mystery series, count M.C. Beaton as one who creates a nice tea party.

Her detective is the likable Hamish Macbeth, police inspector in a Scottish village. He's handsome, single, and besotted with the daughter of the local laird. In "Death of a Perfect Wife," he becomes less besotted, but at the end of the book, the door is still open for a possible romance.

The perfect wife of the title moves to the village with her husband and briskly organizes the housewives into many activities, such as committees for preserving the environment. She trains one wife in neatness, instigates modern hairdos and diets for the better health of husbands. Before moving to the village, she had virtually saved the life of her unmotivated, overweight husband.

The women are delighted to be busy and purposeful. Most of the men are not pleased. One, with whom she flirts, holds her hand, an activity to which he has not accustomed his wife. The reader is uneasy as the supposed paragon scarfs up the village's antiques.

She is murdered. After Hamish sorts it out, he refuses promotion to a larger town. He's happy with his rural life.

Beaton writes interestingly but simply. The book is as quick to read as one by Robert B. Parker. It's an enjoyable diversion for readers who like their murders not bland but mild.

Play therapy helps children solve emotional problems

By Janice Ford
Advertising Feature Writer

In a therapist's office, a small boy is playing with a daddy doll and a doll house. He takes the doll, beats it and stuffs it down the chimney.

The child was abused sexually a few years earlier, at a time when he did not have the vocabulary to articulate his feelings.

Following this belated release of anger and identification of feelings, his mother reports improved sleep patterns at home and fewer angry outbursts at his daycare center.

In another therapy session, a small child is busily playing with a family of dolls and the doll house. The child picks up the daddy and the children dolls and spirits them away, leaving the mother doll alone in the house.

Although she is playing, the child is demonstrating much more than she is capable of putting into words. Through professionally administered "play therapy," she is acting out her fears about the family disorganization resulting from her parents' divorce.

These examples depict the realities of play therapy, which enables children to communicate about real life issues through play with toys and games.

"They play out experiences that they cannot verbalize, for whatever reason — that they don't have the words for or that it's too scary to them or too threatening"
Diane Rhoden, staff counselor, Samaritan Counseling Center

Play therapy can be mobilized as a healing tool when children are too young to verbalize their anxiety-producing and emotional problems.

Joan Pace and Diane Rhoden, staff counselors at the Samaritan Counseling Center in Midland, see many children who need help recovering from emotional problems such as fear, sadness, confusion, anger and rejection.

These issues may stem, for example, from their parents' divorce or may evolve as a result from various forms of child abuse.

While an adult may be able to develop a comfortable relationship with a therapist and talk out problems, children haven't developed the verbal resources to do so as easily.

In play therapy, toys represent childrens' words and play is their language.

"The children come in," explained Ms. Rhoden, "and when they understand that this environment is safe, and when they have a relationship with the therapist, they will play out their problems in much the same way that an adult would talk them out."

"They play out experiences that they cannot verbalize, for whatever reason — that they don't have the words for or that it's too scary to them or too threatening."

Play therapy and counseling also help children connect their feelings and thoughts to their behavior.

"Often children not only don't have the words but they don't really have the awareness of what their problem is," assessed Ms. Pace. "They can't come in at four, six or even eight-years-old, sit down and say, 'My parents are getting a divorce and I'm really feeling caught between the two of them.' So they project onto the toys the issues and problems in their lives that they need to work out."

Children in play therapy do, Ms. Pace added, project powerful emotions, such as anger. A child who is angry about the divorce of his parents, for example, might have dolls fight with each other.

"If the therapist is watching and picking this up," said Ms. Pace, "she can reflect it in a way that the child can internalize it without being too threatening. This is what they actually want to do to their real parent."

Counselors and therapists use different approaches to play therapy, depending on the child's age and oral skills. For play therapy at the Samaritan Counseling Center, the needs of children ages two through nine are best met through "non-directive" therapy.

"Non-directive therapy works at creating a safe environment for the children and develops a relationship with them so they feel comfortable enough to play out whatever their problems or experiences are," said Ms. Rhoden.

PLAY: Children use toys to deal with life issues

(From 3)

Directive therapy, on the other hand, is used with older, more verbally acute children. With children ages ten and up, the counselors will talk out problems and issues. If the problems are too frightening to talk about, a combination of art therapy or theraputic games designed to deal with issues may be used.

In a typical non-directive session, initial ground rules are laid, and then the child is "let loose" in a toy-filled room.

"We bring the child in," explained Ms. Rhoden, "and say this is the play room and in here you can play with these toys in many of the ways in which you would like. We say 'many of the ways' because there are some limits as to what they can do — they can't hurt themselves, they can't hurt the therapist, they can't be purposefully destructive with the toys. But other than that, we pretty much let them do whatever they want."

Then, as the child plays, the therapist attends to the child by reflecting back what she observes the child doing and the underlying emotion. "If they are beating up on the bobo (punching) doll," said Ms. Rhoden, "we might say 'You're really angry today' or 'You're really angry with that toy' to help them understand what's going on for them."

The therapist also begins to help the child connect his feelings and thoughts to his behavior.

Playing in the therapist's office may also represent a refuge from the harsh realities of the child's world. "It's a safe place to release some of that anger without hurting a sibling, a friend or themselves," said Ms. Pace.

"It also does something in their unconscious processes. When they enter the world after time spent in therapy, maybe dealing with anger, it will not be so much of an issue for them. Then you'll see them move on to some of the other toys and spend time with those toys."

Symbolically, the toys used in play therapy represent many issues in a child's life. Guns, for example, may symbolize a child's aggression or a need to protect. A flashlight may symbolize control or secrecy, while playing with dolls may represent nurturing or a contrasting meaning of family disorganization.

"It would be dangerous to say that one toy symbolizes something that may be carved in stone," assessed Ms. Pace. "Telephones, for example, symbolize communication, so one would then watch how the child was using the phone."

She indicated that use of a telephone could raise other questions. "Were they using them in a way to indicate they were not being listened to in the home, or were they using them in a way to indicate people are yelling at them too much?"

The main goal of play therapy is to empower the child to deal with life's problems.

Therapy can last indefinitely, but Ms. Pace and Ms. Rhoden said that the average child spends one hour a week in play therapy for two to three months.

"I've had some children leave therapy when some of their symptoms begin to subside but before I had really thought they had sufficiently worked out their problems," explained Ms. Pace. "Some of that has to do with some of the limitations in life, finances and time."

"I don't think that as adults we trust children to really work out a lot of their problems. But if we give them the space they really can, and they also can tell us when they are finished."

She noted that a child may start playing with toys in a different way to show they are ready to end therapy. "And that may be their message that whatever it was they needed to work out has been worked out sufficiently and they are ready to move on in life."

Parents do not watch their children in play therapy sessions at the Samaritan Counseling Center, but they are informed of their child's progress at the end of each session.

Sessions are confidential, but issues and emotions brought up in the play therapy may be discussed on a general basis with the parents.

Explained Ms. Pace, "Instead of reporting that their child seems frustrated about the divorce today — because that is the child's business — we might say we are seeing some tension or some frustration and are you seeing the same thing at home.

Involvement and diligent work with play therapy, in the end, can be a real acheivement for a child with emotional problems. Ms. Rhoden feels it can help a child take a positive direction in life.

"Play therapy can teach them how to deal with their problems," she assessed, "before they get to the point of not having anywhere to turn, feeling isolated, being misunderstood and pick up with people who choose drugs as a way to cope."

"I'LL NEVER DRINK AGAIN, HONEY."

It's a lie...and you know it. Because you've heard it all before... after the company Christmas party ...before the summer vacation that never happened...on New Year's Day...last year.

If you and your family have been living on empty promises, it's time to do something. It's time to ask for help.

Pick up the phone and call us. We're ready to listen...to sit down with you and the ones you care about and figure out your next step. With caring, professional help, you can get past the lies and the resentment.

The lies won't stop until you make the call.

Battered women offered advice in survival guide

Every fifteen seconds a woman is battered in the United States. Last year alone four million women suffered broken limbs, were brutally beaten, tortured or murdered in their own homes. Frightening, isn't it?

The statistics are even more alarming. The FBI warns that one out of two women will be abused by someone they are in a relationship with. That means every woman has a fifty percent chance of being beaten in her lifetime.

Even more terrifying, fifty-three percent of these battering husbands/boyfriends also beat their children. More than 1,200 of these children die each year through child abuse and neglect. The "lucky" ones who survive are physically and emotionally impaired for life.

Who are these violent men that have turned the homes of millions of women and children into houses of horror? Woman and child beaters are often stereotyped as being undereducated and poor, just as are their victims. This false assumption is what leads many of these men to get away with their crimes. In fact, more than half of all batterers and their victims are upper or middle class and well-educated. Anyone can become a battered woman.

Why do these women take this abuse? In truth, most do not ever realize that they have become a "battered woman." They get caught in a vast web of guilt and denial, a web where their self image has been diminished to the point of helplessness. Others are too scared to leave in fear that the batterer will carry out threats of violence towards them or their children.

It cannot be ignored any longer that progressive torture is happening right here in the homes of Americans everyday.

The terrifying realities of this violent cycle and how to prevent it are finally

Texas Institute of Sports Medicine works

The Texas Institute of Sports Medicine is a technically advanced medical facility with the capability of providing West Texas with the health services it needs and demands.

The Institute is a new and fresh concept in regard to physical medicine, rehabilitation and health enhancement. Basically it is a progressive method utilizing physical therapy, cardiopulmonary and musculoskeletal rehabilitation that enables a patient to get back to normal much quicker than what is ordinarily seen.

TISM achieves rehabilitation in a unique and individualized way. The patient can be evaluated and treated by a physical therapist with the use of physician's prescription indicating the diagnosis, treatment objectives, and precautions.

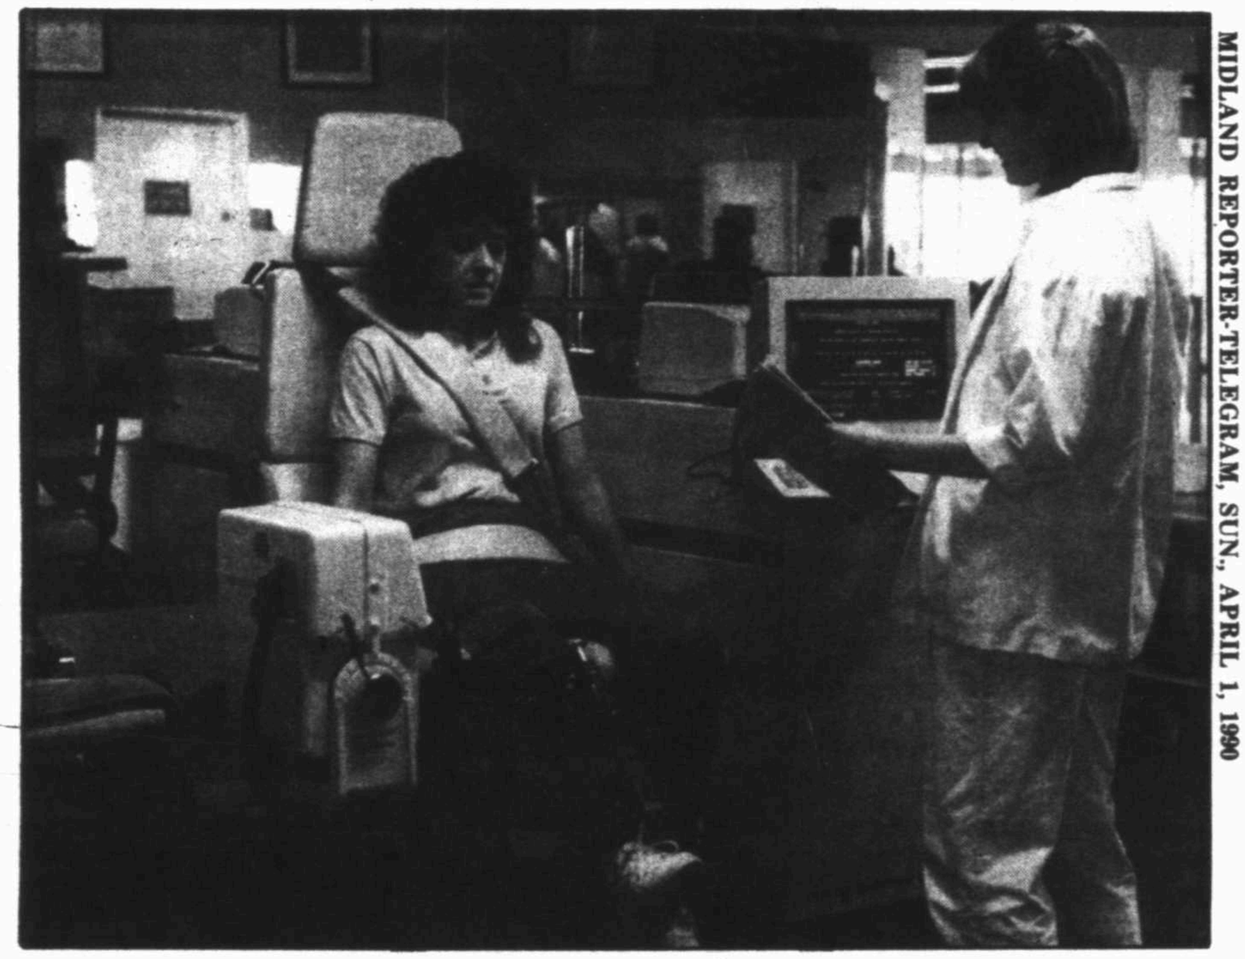

TISM is pleased to offer complete physical therapy services utilizing licensed physical therapists trained to rehabilitate work or sports related injuries, neurological, and post surgical outpatients.

The majority of patients following traditional physical therapy have not been returned to a state of complete cardiopulmonary and/or musculoskeletal fitness. This is not at all surprising considering that the objective of most therapy is to treat physical findings such as joint swelling, stiffness or muscle atonia.

TISM takes the patient's therapy several steps further and continues working with each patient, building endurance and increasing overall fitness. therefore, lowering the chances of reinjury.

TISM is located at 2706 W. Cuthbert , Building C, in the Fountain Shopping Center in Midland, and has 8000 square feet of technically advanced physical therapy, testing, rehabilitation and cardiovascular equipment, including:

- Wide spectrum of Physical Therapy Modalities
- Cybex 340 computerized extremity strength testing device
- Upper and lower limb endurance tests
- Electronic Digital Inclinometer Range of Motion Device
- Cybex Upper Body Ergometers
- Stairmaster 6000 and PT 4000
- Treadmill
- Nordic Track Cross Country Ski Macine

Palmer Drug Abuse Program formed for complete family

He is a good kid, but yet why is he so withdrawn? He is a loner. He has a very few friends and he likes to stay in his room a lot.

For many parents, that would sound great to know, that their kid doesn't like to go out a lot. But, I kept asking myself if there was something wrong with my son.

What really got me worried was the fact that he started wearing a necklace (a marijuana leaf) and I also noticed he was tatooing himself with girls' names. He had been getting in trouble in school every other day for one thing or another.

His grades were low and getting lower. I really didn't know what to do or where to go for help. I had heard of the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, but never really paid attention because I thought that was a program only for "addicts" and "my son was not a drug addict".

But what I realized, it's not only for kids with drug problems, but also for kids with everyday problems such as peer pressure, parents, school etc. Well, after I talked to one of the counselors, my son started going to the Younger Group recreation center after school and going to the meetings three times a week.

I also go to the parents meeting for support. It has done wonders. Now he opens up to me, we can actually sit down and have a conversation about what he is feeling and thinking, when before I might as well talk to the wall.

Unfortunately, he admitted to me that he had tried pot. But what is so great, is that he admitted it on his own. I also found out a lot of things that he was feeling inside, the hurt he was feeling and why he was so withdrawn.

He has been in the program four months and he has become a happier, more outgoing kid and our family has become even closer. He is doing great in school. He is even in a higher class and getting good grades. But the point I am trying to make is that there is a place to go for help, for everybody, regardless if you are poor, rich, white, black, hispanic etc.

I asked God for help, and he put PDAP in my life. PDAP has also helped me have a better relationship with the Almighty.

Written by a parent of a PDAP participant.

BATTERED: Book draws attention to growing problem for women brought to light in Taylor Publishing's A Battered Woman's Survival Guide.

This book is a first step to helping not only victims, but their families, friends and professionals who need valid information to help them understand, recognize and help someone they know who is in a battering relationship.

A valuable resource, it contains hotline numbers for women's shelters, options on protection, and a special section to help women recognize a battering personality before they get into an abusive relationship.

Taylor Publishing, in response to this tragic problem, is donating ten percent of all proceeds from the book to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, the only national organization of programs and services for battered women.

Hospice Friends Who Care help bereaved recover

By Janice Ford
Advertising Feature Writer

Four women and a man were gathered in the courtyard of one of Midland's grand old homes.

They shared the fear, sadness, terror, misery and loneliness they had experienced as they grieved their loss of a spouse or a child.

Travelers all on one of life's roughest roads, these people are survivors. They have worked through their grief, but admit that it lasts forever.

The five, Joan Woods, Pam Andrews, Charlene Beier, Virginia Johnson and Bill Messner, are volunteers in Hospice of Midland's Friends Who Care grief recovery group. They, and others in the group, offer the benefit of one-on-one contact with a widow or a widower.

The two-year-old organization is a free service of Hospice, a non-profit association which offers intensive caring services for terminally ill patients and their families.

"We hold someone's hand and offer empathy but not sympathy," explained Joan Woods, an early FWC volunteer.

"We want to show them that people who have walked the same walk and who have suffered the loss of a loved one can listen to their story," she added. One of her sons was killed in a traffic accident in 1979.

"We hold someone's hand and offer empathy but not sympathy. We want to show them that people who have walked the same walk and who have suffered the loss of a loved one can listen to their story."
Joan Woods
Friends Who Care volunteer

"We recognize the value of listening to their story and that it needs to be told over and over and over."

FWC volunteers have participated in intensive, three day training seminars in death and grief recovery.

Services for the bereaved include "Daybreak," a monthly newsletter which is mailed to more than 400 people, monthly lunches and dinners, out-of-town trips, a widower's breakfast group, and a new outreach program for widows and widowers with children.

Ms. Woods said the monthly lunches at a local cafeteria began as a result of a woman having a difficult time following her husband's death.

"One of the ladies said she recognized early that she didn't like to eat alone. She realized after several days that she had not even been eating — she was still in her housecoat at five o'clock."

"The next day she got up and at one o'clock and she went by herself to the cafeteria where other people ate, and that's how we got started on having lunch once a month," Ms. Woods explained.

In addition to the social and one-on-one activities for the bereaved, Hospice offers a family support group on the fourth Tuesday of each month.

All of these programs and services are open to anyone in grief at anytime they feel they might benefit from the group.

According to Mark Mercer, Hospice social worker, dealing with grief in a healthy manner is a skill which most people lack and which many social workers are unprepared to counsel.

"Grief education is almost nonexistent, even in many university level training courses. Learning to cope successfully with grief should be considered a mandatory survival skill, like learning how to cross a busy street."

While some Midlanders have taken advantage of Hospice's bereavement training program for volunteers, the truth is that most people are totally unprepared for the grieving process following the death of a loved one.

FWC volunteer Pam Andrews described her state of mind after the death of her husband as "temporary insanity."

"I was widowed overseas and just by the situation I had to make a major decision, which is a very bad thing to do," she recalled. "When you are going through the early stages of grief, the best thing is just to stay put and make no decisions."

"But I didn't have that luxury. When people ask me why I came to Midland, I say it was temporary insanity. And they think it is a joke but really, that is what you go through - I think you are temporarily insane when you are first grief-stricken."

Ms. Andrews found comfort in talking with a recent widow, a woman with whom she was only slightly acquainted. "She could understand what I was going through better than with my friends who were very very close to me, because they, of course, still had their husbands."

From her own experience, Ms. Andrews gained a desire to help others suffering through bereavement.

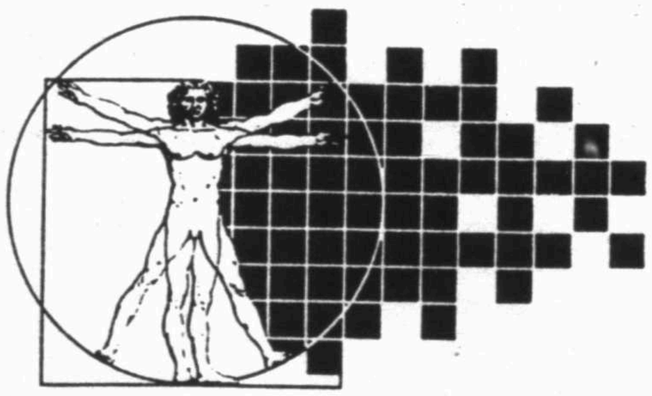

"I thought, 'Some good has got to come out of this. If I've had to suffer through this, there must be a reason. Maybe I can somehow help other people through this time.'"

Another volunteer, Charlene Beier, became involved with FWC from its beginning. She had experieneed grieving with several family members and their losses over the years.

"It's important to realize that some of the things you do when you have lost a loved one are absolutely normal. You feel like you are going crazy but no, you are not going crazy. And you will be able to get through the whole thing because there are people that are willing to help you."

With FWC, Ms. Beier contacts recent widows and wid-

Clearview expands, to open new outpatient department

Clearview's new Outpatient Department will begin operations in the month of April. The temporary location of the clinic will be at 701 Indiana Street. This is the first time that Clearview is expanding its services outside of its current hospital location at the intersection of Thomason Drive and Loop 250.

Clearview intends for the Outpatient Clinic to cater to those individuals who need a less restricted environment and can function on a day to day basis. The Outpatient Clinic will meet the needs of many individuals as well as major companies and employers within the area who support treatment and counseling for their employees, but still retain those employees without interruption of responsibilities.

Clearview's Outpatient facility will offer an intensive program which will address the issues of alcohol and chemical dependency. This program will consist of several components offered four (4) nights a week.

In addition, the unique approach that Clearview has adopted includes marital, family and individual therapies. Therapy will be provided at the Outpatient Clinic by professionals trained in psychology, social work and certified as Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors.

Another component focuses primarily on individual, marital, and family therapy for those individuals and families who are indirectly affected by complications caused from alcoholism and abuse. These therapies will attempt to individualize solutions to family problems.

Within the philosophy of Clearview's treatment, the Outpatient clinic will continue to support the traditions and foundations of the 12 step programs.

The Outpatient Clinic is committed to meeting the community's needs relative to programs it might provide. Clearview Hospital is also working with local colleges and universities to develop protocols for training counselors and therapists on the graduate level. Additionally, special courses are being provided for substance abuse nursing.

owers within two to three months after the death of their spouses. If they don't respond, they are not contacted again until the anniversary date of the death, when a thoughful card is mailed.

"A lot don't want to come out," she said. "They say they are crying too much. And I always try to encourage them that that's fine. We don't mind crying together."

Ms. Andrews agreed. "What's real hard — when someone is newly a widow or a widower — is they tend to want to just stay by themselves. I can identify with that because that's exactly what I wanted to do, like a wounded animal."

"You just want to dig a little hole and you don't want to be bothered," she continued. "And that's fine for a time, but it really helpful if you can talk to someone. So many of these people just really want to reach out but you kind of have to keep after them. They really feel much better once that they have."

Grief has brought FWC volunteers together, but they have found something else to unite them, Ms. Beier added. "It is the art of living and going forward that keeps us all happy and sharing with one another."

Virginia Johnson's husband died April 12, 1989, and there was Hospice help in her home for several months prior to her husband's death. Less than a week after her husband's funeral, Ms. Johnson saw Susie Wilmeth, Hospice volunteer coordinator, with a group of people at a local cafeteria.

"Susie knew me well enough to know that I probably wouldn't come sit with the group," Ms. Johnson recalled.

"She ushered us over to the FWC group. I can't begin to tell you what the group meant to me and my family because it was a step out. The group has nurtured me through and given me a joy that I never knew I would have without the presence of my spouse."

"It has given my children who are all grown and living away from home such a comfort that their mother is not alone," she added.

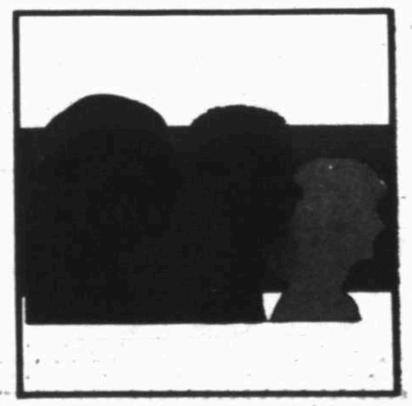

Volunteer Bill Messner was suddenly widowed 14 years ago. He attributed a strong religious faith in overcoming his grief. He is an exuberant worker for FWC as well as for Hospice patient services.

"I'm full of helps, as my Sunday school teacher told me. I get a ball out of doing this for people," he said.

"Nobody's grief is like anybody else's. But to know that somebody else is grieving is a comfort."

Ms. Johnson agreed that the sharing is a solace. "It's not nearly so hard if you have somebody's hand to hold on to."

Providing mental health and chemical dependency programs, Glenwood is located midway between Midland and Odessa.

Glenwood offers professional counseling, psychiatric care

Divorce. Money problems. A death of a loved one. The move to a new job or a new town. These are some of the stresses of life...and they can be a real challenge. Sometimes we feel so overwhelmed, but aren't sure where to turn.

A problem may be resolved by oneself, or with the help of a family member or a friend. Other times, however, the problem may be more serious and the advice of a professional may be needed.

Some signs which may indicate a need for professional counseling include:

- sleep disturbances (either difficulty sleeping or a need to sleep too soon)
- appetite problems (loss of appetite or excessive appetite)
- excessive use of alcohol or drugs
- loss of interest in hobbies or other activities that give pleasure
- deterioration of relationships with friends or family members

The decision to select mental health services is an important one. Make this decision an informed one. Today, many specialists are available to assist us, depending on our individual needs.

The most common practitioners are psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers and licensed professional counsellors. A psychiatrist is a medical doctor or physician, who specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of emotional problems. A psychiatrist must graduate from medical school and complete a residency in psychiatry. This type of practitioner is authorized to prescribe medication and holds a license from the state.

Glenwood Hospital offers comprehensive psychiatric care to children, adolescents and adults from the West Texas and Eastern New Mexico Areas.

Glenwood is the first private, freestanding, psychiatric hospital in the Permian Basin area and it is conveniently located midway between Midland and Odessa.

Dedicated to family centered care, Glenwood provides an environment in which patients can develop the essential skills for making better adjustments in their own lives and in their relationships with others.

The facilities at Glenwood, accessible to handicapped individuals, were designed to provide an environment that stresses patient safety, security and confidentiality.

Spanning ten acres, Glenwood's campus-like design includes living units which open onto expansive courtyards. Each living unit is spacious and provides a nourishment center; laundry facility; conversation area; and recreational space for TV viewing, reading and other activities.

The therapeutic environment and treatment team work together to create an ambience conducive to the resolution of personal conflict. Physical surroundings, programs, activities, professional staff and unit structure all combine to create an effective climate for patient growth and development.

Treatment team members may include psychiatrists; psychologists; psychiatric nurses; social workers; counselors; mental health associates; teachers; nutritionists; recreational, occupational and expressive arts therapists and substance abuse counselors. The teams meet regularly to ensure that treatment plans are appropriate and provide maximum benefit to the patient.

Full-time educational curricula, with instruction provided by both Midland and Ector County Independent School Districts, are part of the program. The curricula offers all the basic requirements for credit and graduation.

Glenwood has also offers the first ROPES course in the Permian Basin. The ROPES course is the physical apparatus for a new outdoor experiential therapy program. This unique therapy helps in developing self-esteem, confidence and team-building.

Glenwood offers a free and confidential consultation and referral service 24-hours a day. Persons who need help with an emotional crisis, or who have questions may call the service at (915) 563-1200 or 1-800-527-4901. The number is also staffed for crisis calls.

A Different Approach To Chemical Abuse

Our program is based on four basic principles

1) There is hope for a person with life-controlling problems.
2) Sin, not drugs, alcohol, etc., is the major root problem.
3) The only cure for sin and its symptoms (drugs, alcohol, etc.) is Jesus Christ.
4) Jesus Christ, living within a person, takes the desire for sin our of that person's life.

When the urge to sin is taken out, then the desire for drugs, alcohol, and all manner of deviant behavior is also removed. When the root problem is dealt with, the symptoms also disappear.

Crossroads offers balance to troubled lives

Crossroads recovery program now offers an answer to addiction as well as a new psychiatric program to bring your life back into balance.

Crossroads personalized program treats the whole person; physically, spiritually and socially. It's the total care program with the answer.

Crossroads is located in a full service hospital offering a comprehensive program for individuals experiencing psychiatric disorders or chemical dependencies. It provides inpatient and continuing care for adults, adolescents and their families.

Included in the new psychiatric program is a specialized service dealing with occult and satanic practices. Crossroads, recognizing this as a growing problem in our society, has developed a program designed in the treatment and deprogramming of these victims.

The specialized programs at Crossroads include:

- Occult Programs
- Individual Areas of Treatment
- Women's Chemical Dependency
- Co-dependency
- Adolescent Program
- Adult Program

Occult Programs

WHO ARE THE VICTIMS?

They can be your neighborhood adolescents. Generally, the individuals who become involved in Satanic worship are of higher than average intelligence with a relatively low self-esteem. They lack coping skills and are often poor social integrators. Quite often, abuse plays an important role. Divorce and/or separation of parents can be important contributing factors.

WHY DO THEY JOIN?

The pressure to be different and the pressure to be accepted by a group seems to be the key answer. The age-old practice of rebellion has taken on tragic consequences with the violence associated with occult and Satanic practices. Sex, drug abuse and the promise of power – power over others and power they feel lacking in themselves – provides strong reasons to an adolescent to become involved in the occult.

WHICH WAY OUT?

Education and awareness. The truth about the practices and exposure to the true nature of Satanic activities must become well-known. Prevention is mandatory in stopping the spread of interest in these rituals.

The protective environment that is found at CROSSROADS is conducive to the re-establishment of acceptable values and restructuring of the individual's opinion of himself. The low self-esteem and other contributing factors can only be addressed in such a controlled setting. The family unit must also be treated to insure the success of the person returning to mainstream behavior.

The comprehensive psychological program at Crossroads responds to the needs of its patients by offering individual areas of treatment for sexual and physical abuse, family relationships, depression, stress management, eating disorders, and sexual addiction.

The pressures of life in today's fast-paced world often create family confrontations that can threaten the family bond. Emotional problems are, many times, the cause of an inability of family members to successfully interact. The professional staff at CROSSROADS can help build an understanding among family members – to maintain that tie that binds families together.

More than "those blues", depression has been identified as one of the most debilitating yet often untreated mental health problems society faces. The real pain that depression may inflict on an individual's life also affects the lives of those who surround them. The Clinical Depression program at CROSSROADS can give the victim of depression the tools necessary to come out from under this cloud and be productive again.

While it is impossible to live life without stress, preventing some is possible as well as minimizing its impact when it can't be avoided. When stress becomes prolonged or particularly frustrating, it can be harmful – causing distress. Learning how our bodies respond to these demands and recognizing the early signs is the first step to channeling potential negative stress into positive energy.

Anorexia and Bulimia are no longer secret afflictions. These two eating disorders affect thousands of people each day. The most common eating disorder, obesity, is often ignored – often expected among some groups. Yet behind all types of eating disorders may lie an emotional need unnoticed. These needs are identifiable and treatable. CROSSROADS can help.

Unmanaged compulsive behavior, be it chemical or otherwise, can create serious consequences for a life. A preoccupation with sexual behavior can destroy lives, and relationships. Sexual addiction can be treated. If sex is managing your life, evaluation and treatment are available at CROSSROADS.

Women are not immune to suffering from chemical dependency. Alcohol and drug abuse among women is one of the easiest to conceal, yet has perhaps a greater impact than any other group. Addictive diseases arise from complex factors including biological, psychological and social. Although fewer women than men even enter treatment, our recovery program for women provides a safe environment full of care and attention, offering lots of hope.

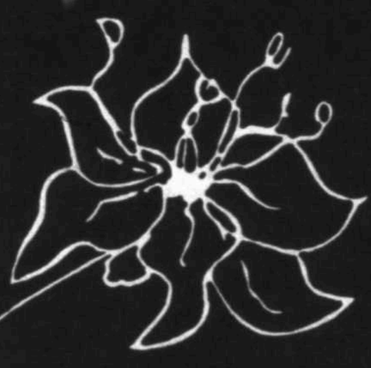

Chemical dependency is not a disease that affects only the individual. The family members are affected as well and should be a part of the healing process. Often, the dysfunctional family is a contributor to the dependency. It is crucial that the family be involved in breaking the behavior patterns and establishing a positive atmosphere.

Crossroads provides for regular counseling and formal family group sessions on a regular basis. These are often educational in substance and preparatory to providing an environment for establishing successful lifestyles after release.

The number one killer in America is death from heart problems. Last year over one million people in the United States died from heart problems, according to the American Heart Association.

Of that number, 41 percent had absolutely no warning. Their first symptom was sudden death!

Those are frightening statistics, but that isn't the whole story, says Ed Wells, manager of Rx Treadmill Fitness Company.

"It is tragic that a country that leads the world in medical technology also leads the world in heart problems. The main reason for this is our inactive lifestyles," Wells says.

"Good health habits, including proper diet and exercise, can save up to 85 percent of that one million people," Wells emphasizes.

Most people are under misconceptions as to the nature and amount of exercise needed to keep the heart strong and healthy.

The American Heart Association has created a chart showing the 'target zone' for different age groups. Your goal in exercising, should be to keep your heart rate in the target zone for at least 15 minutes, three times per week.

"Doing this three times per week will contribute significantly to a healthy heart," Wells says.

You must get your heart rate to the minimum target zone before it can be considered exercise. At Rx Treadmill Fitness Co., you can pick up a small card showing the target zone for all ages, and from that, determine your own zone.

Just remember to monitor your pulse and keep your heart rate in the target zone. You can determine whether or not you are in the target zone by using a heart monitor, or by learning to count your pulse.

After exercising, place your thumb on your chin, feel either of the carotid arteries with your fingers and count the number of beats in a 10 second interval.

Multiply that by six to obtain the count for a minute.

'You can achieve cardiovascular fitness in a variety of ways. You can ride a bicycle outside, but you're subject to heat and cold, rain and traffic.

On the other hand, you can ride a stationary bike in the privacy of your own home, any time you wish.

If you like to walk or run, you are faced with the same problem as bikers. But, with a treadmill, you can walk or run inside, any time of the day.

For total fitness, the Exercycle will fill your needs. A session on the Exercycle is equivalent to cycling, push-ups, swimming, rowing, sit-ups, and chin-ups.

Stair Climbing machines are the most popular new item on the market today. In addition to a good cardiovascular workout, the stair climber targets the hips, thighs, and buttocks area of the body.

Rx Treadmill Fitness Co. is located at 4706 North Midkiff at one North Park. Wells invites you to come by, pick up a free target zone card so you can determine your target zone, and let a staff member demonstrate the equipment displayed in the showroom.

Each piece is set up, ready to go and you're welcome to try any of it to see which best suits your needs.

When you buy (and use) exercise equipment, you're making an investment in your health. And it is an investment that lasts a lifetime.

Remember, the only PROVEN way to control your weight is through proper eating habits and exercise. An actual clinical study showing that out of 100 people that diet alone, (without exercise), only three kept that weight off a year later.

Experts encourage family communication therapy

By Janice Ford
Advertising Feature Writer

■ The divorce rate has doubled since 1965.
■ Demographers project one-half of all first marriages made today will end in divorce.
■ Six out of ten second marriages will probably collapse.
■ One out of four children today is being raised by a single parent.
■ According to one study, seven out of ten families eat dinner together three or more times a week. Half of the respondents admitted to keeping the TV on during the dinner.

Special issue of Newsweek
"The Family in the 21st Century

Statistics such as these indicate that strong communication skills between husband and wife and between parent and child, more than ever, are required to make marriage and family life work.

According to Midland clinical social workers Linda H. George and Alan Schroeder, a fast-paced lifestyle, the lack of intimate conversation skills and a changing society can easily complicate marriage and family life.

"With these statistics, we see that it's a complicated world. Just getting a divorce isn't a panacea — it doesn't necessarily solve the problems," noted Ms. George. "Divorce can create new and different problems."

In years past, Schroeder said, "Families lived closer to one another. We didn't pride ourselves on being so entirely self-sufficient and independent."

"For example, every home didn't have a washing machine. Places like the washateria were meeting grounds." Today, he added, technical advancements such as video cassette recorders allow people to lock themselves away from the world, more isolated than ever.

With these societal and technological changes, Schroeder said, people are less likely to open up with one another.

"We can talk with one another about work, and some things that are on the surface kind of personal. But really talking about what our beliefs, values, fears, goals and dreams are with our children and our partners is something that doesn't come naturally."

Both Ms. George and Schroeder suggest making time to work on improving relationships with personal, intimate communication and activities.

A good place to start is around the dinner table.

Once the time is found, couples and families should try the following methods to bolster family and marital bonds:

■ Communicate and listen. "We see people in our offices all the time that listen to half of what ther other person says and spend the second half getting their rebuttal together," said Ms. George. Take the time to listen to one another. "Find 30 minutes to turn off the TV and talk."

■ Respect for one another — and the children, too. Said Schroeder, "There's a tendency for the parent not to really respect the child's feelings or ideas."

He explained that children are often categorized as being "the child," lacking good sense or much to contribute to making a decision.

For this reason, Schroeder explained, children often do not get listened to carefully enough. "There's sort of a discounting of the child."

■ Have family meetings. "It's important for family meetings to have shared leadership," Schroeder said, adding that no one person should control the gatherings. "The children should chair the meeting as well."

"What the children have to say is important, too," noted Ms. George. "And I feel like in family meetings, while the parents are the final authority on what's going on, the children should have something to say.

Meetings can be designed around what was important that happened that day or that week, for example. They don't necessarily have to focus on family problems.

"It's sharing time — not interrogation or fault-finding," said Ms. George. "Meeting needs should involve a balance of interaction among family members."

■ Have a sense of humor and some playtime. "Share some leisure time," commented Ms. George. "Sometimes the leisure time should be just for the couple and sometimes shared with kids, too.

■ Parents need to learn to shift gears as the children get older. "Some parents want to keep their teenagers like fourth graders," said Ms. George. "That's impossible."

■ Couples should make time for the couple relationship. Once a couple has a child, Schroeder said, couples often tend to neglect their relationship.

They may spend so much time and energy taking care of the child that they "sort of get lost and forget abut how important it is to make time for themselves and the couple part of the relationship.

To further nurture the relationship between husband and wife, Ms. George recommended that couples go out on the town — alone, without the kids. In other words, she said, "I recommend that they date each other."

■ Teach a sense of right and wrong by nurturing spiritual values. The beliefs of the family are crucial to a sense of family strength and tradition. "I've seen people who have absolutely no idea what their parents believe in," said Ms. George.

■ Closeness with spouse and children. "This goes hand in hand with respect for one another," added Ms. George.

■ Seek professional help when needed. "All of us at one time or another will have some issue that we could use help on," said Schroeder.

"When you run up against an issue or a problem that you've been going around and around with for some time without resolution, that's the time to get help."

THE ROAD TO RECOVERY

Straight lends help for young substance abusers

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Straight, Inc. recovery programs helped change the lives of, from left, Chad Green, Jonathan Williams and Keith House.

Keith House

Before I entered Straight Inc. on June 9, 1989 my life had been slowly going downhill until April of '89, 3 months before I entered Straight. At this time I was living with my father here in Midland, going to school and working a second-hand job.

At this time I was drinking alcohol about every weekend, smoking pot when it was available and I had tried over the counter speed once or twice. Then I ran away from home for the first time. At first I was terrified about making an attempt to take over the rest of my life.

I spent the next week at a drug using friend of mine and then leased out my first apartment. The first night I moved in I had a party and within a week I had been addicted to one new drug which I did every day for about two and a half months and that was freon.

Freon was the most intense, least expensive yet the most deadly. This drug had me running around the air conditioners of my apartment stealing freon and passing out 4 to 5 times a day.

For the next three months my life meant nothing to me but a big party and when I was going to get drunk or high. My drug list went from pot, alcohol and over the counters a couple of times to pot, treated pot with cocaine, alcohol, over the counters, inhalants, cocaine, crack, LSD, ecstasy.

When I came in to Straight it took me awhile to figure out who "Keith" was or what kind of person I had become and the level that I degraded myself to. I have had some bumpy times and I have had victories and falls, but I have grown inside from every one of them.

Chad Green

As a child I first lived in Hobbs, New Mexico, where I was born on May 15, 1973. At the age of 10 months my parents and I moved to Midland and into a house on the 2300 block of Shandon.

There is where I spent my elementary years growing up and being just the normal kid on the block. I remember going out with my friends and riding bikes, and walking to school in the morning.

I also remember my younger years in playing sports like football, baseball, and basketball. I was raised in a Christian home with parents that took me to church all my life.

As time went on and I grew older, I began to get more rebellious. My grades in school and my activities were still of a normal kid, but I would do little rebellious things for good feeling, such a stealing candy from 7-Eleven or smoking cigarettes.

Stealing made me feel like I was accomplishing something and I felt good about that, despite the fact I knew it was wrong.

As I entered junior high I had to switch school districts for the first time in my life and so I had to find new friends. I got into what I thought was the "cool" crowd and started hanging around with them.

My rebellion grew and I found myself having to do things for acceptance of their friendship. When smoking before was experimental it now became a regular habit along with stealing, except it was much bigger things.

I remember stealing things from stores in the mall, and it wasn't just gum or candy anymore. I don't really remember

Jonathan Williams

My name is Jonathan Williams. I'm a 16-year-old drug addict and alcoholic. I used drugs and alcohol for approximately 3 years.

I was harmless and carefree as a little kid. That quickly changed over the years. I took my first drink when I was 12 years old. That drink led to many more.

When I got a little older I began to meet new friends at social gatherings and dances where my best friend and I started experimenting and it didn't take long to get used to.

The crowd I was with wasn't fast enough so I decided to move in with my dad in Dallas where the action was. I got there, things were great and I got along fine. I met the friends I wanted real quick — the people who know how to party.

They introduced me to speed and we began to skip school and go out more at night. My grades dropped and my dad stepped back into the picture.

I picked them up for a little while, long enough to stay off his bad side. As soon as that blew over I was the same thing. My dad and my step mom had this thing about me, I swear they did.

ABUSE: New sobriety gains young man self respect

(From 13)

We could not get along together. Things began to get heated, so I decided not to stick around. I ran away and my dad brought me back. We got into a physical fight and stayed awake most of the night ready to kill him if he came back in my room.

I left again for two weeks and stayed with my sister. When I come back all my stuff was packed up and I found out that I was going back to live with my mom. I didn't have much of a choice, so I went.

I got back to Midland with a very bad attitude. I went home and met up with some old childhood friends, and they were doing more drugs than I was and I thought they were messed up.

The first day we met we got drunk and I tried inhalants for the first time; I did freon. I met a lot more friends when I was using with them.

I was doing speed almost every day on getting drunk every chance I get. I got drunk with one of my friends and I drank so fast and so much that I burned the lining of my throat away and I couldn't eat for two days.

I thought this was fun. I got sick of it after awhile and I didn't think I could quit, so I attempted suicide twice. My mom found out after the second time and put me into a drug treatment center, Straight.

starting to drink but I started drinking socially for my friends acceptance about this time.

At the end of my eighth grade year a friend of mine asked me to skip school for the first time and I did. At the time I knew nothing about drugs and always told myself that I would never use them.

That afternoon my friends older brother came home and he introduced me to pot. I was scared at the time but I remember them persuading me to do it and even though I didn't want to, before long I was doing it.

I ended up liking the good feelings it gave me for that short period of time, and it seemed worth using, as long as I didn't use anything else. I went through the rest of my eighth grade year and that following summer smoking pot and drinking alcohol about a couple times per month.

That fall I went off to military school and even though I wasn't using drugs up there my drug disease progressed. I started skipping school and my actions were more and more centered around rebellion.

That fall I went off to military school and even though I wasn't using drugs up there my drug disease progressed. I started skipping school and my actions were more and more centered around rebellion.

I had a hard time accepting authority over me. By the end of the first semester they suspended me because of my actions. I came back to Midland and initially went more and more downhill. I got into the more druggy crowds and started smoking pot daily and where I had told myself I would only do pot.

I ended up using various inhalants such as liquid paper, Freon, and butane. Again I told myself as long as I never go on to the 'serious drugs' my tenth grade year rolled around and my life was devoted to using these drugs.

Everything I did was centered around using these drugs. I would go to school and usually skip one or two of my morning classes and smoke pot. Then again smoking pot at lunch, and skip an afternoon class or two and smoke pot.

My tenth grade year at Lee High School went to waste because of me smoking pot. But as long as that was all I did, I thought I was alright. As second semester came a friend of mine came up to me and asked me to run away with him.

I had already tried it once and failed to succeed and my family life at home was so bad that all I did was fight with my parents and stay in my room by myself when I wasn't with my friends getting high or with my girlfriend, so I decided to go.

We ended up in San Antonio and before I knew it I was at a night club drunk and fixing to make my first cocaine deal. I always thought that I would only use pot, but when the opportunity was there for me to use cocaine I jumped at it.

Before long I was living in a sleezy apartment and dealing cocaine to support my habit. I had also stolen a lot of money from my parents and ended up after about three weeks in a situation I didn't want to be in, but had gotten myself there.

I was in an apartment fixing to shoot up my first fix of cocaine intravenously. This went on for about 3 to 4 days until I ended up overdosing on shooting up crystal methane (crack).

I was lucky, that I lived, and by what I believe God's protection of my my dad showed up at the house I was living at the next morning and offered me a chance to come home.

I did and I wanted things to be better but my drug disease was too strong. I was back to my same old ways in a matter of two days. After about two weeks I had had enough and ended up stealing a car and running back to San Antonio.

It took a couple of weeks for the police to catch me and I was brought back and put on probation system where I was supposed to be either with my parents or at home.

At this time my life was miserable. I basically had no family, and not many friends.

At this point my parents had heard about a treatment center named Straight and had heard a lot of positive results about it. They entered me into the program and that was March 23, 1989.

The program has now given me my life back. One year later and I have an incredible relationship with myself, and my parents. Me and my dad used to fistfight, and now he is one of my best friends.

I can sit down and share my feelings with them now and I never could have done that. I am on the road of recovery and have a life to look forward to. I am currently back in school and working towards my high school diploma in hopes of going on to college.

I am also in training to be a paraprofessional drug counselor at the treatment "Straight" that I am in now.

I know now that I am a neat person and I like me. And it is because of God, Straight, Alcoholics Anonymous, my parents and other people willing to help someone out that I am where I am today!

Keyfacts about STRAIGHT...

STRAIGHT has treated over 35,000 family members nationwide since it was established in 1976.

STRAIGHT is recognized as the largest and most successful long-term adolescent drug treatment program in the nation.

STRAIGHT is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations - the nation's leading healthcare accreditational agency.

70% of STRAIGHT graduates remain drug free following treatment.

STRAIGHT provides a structured Treatment Program comprised of Five Phases, plus an Afterçare Program:

First Phase: The adolescent lives with a host family who has a child in an advanced stage of the STRAIGHT Treatment Program. The adolescent confronts past drug-using experiences and works on developing a positive self-concept.
Second Phase: The adolescent returns home and begins working on family relationships.
Third Phase: The adolescent returns to school or work and must say no to the peer pressure to use drugs.
Fourth Phase: The adolescent begins staged withdrawal from active involvement in the program. The young person works on constructive use of leisure time and develops positive friendships.
Fifth Phase: The adolescent has recaptured a well rounded drug-free lifestyle and concentrates on social responsibility and service to others.
Aftercare: Upon graduating from the Fifth Phase, adolescents and their families have access to Aftercare - a six month program continuing group therapy.

STRAIGHT in the Permian Basin...

has given more than 50 kids and their families a new life, a life without drugs and alcohol. The goal of the Midland Straight Family Service Center is to give drug-using adolescents and their families hope through crisis intervention.
