ITALY WEEL PREPARED TO MEET THE TEUTONS

Has More Than Million Men Under Arms and a Powerful Fleet Ready For Action

Rome, May 24.—About 800,000 Italians and Hungarians have already been concentrated against Italy, Austria insuring them commissariat service.

Although Field Marshal Baron Conrad von Hotzendorf, chief of staff of the Austrian army, has prepared for many years for a possible outbreak of war between Austria and Italy, the belief is held here that the campaign will be conducted by the German general staff, which, it is said, has planned a strong offensive movement against Italy in the hope of breaking the Italian lines and forcing their way into Italian territory.

Should such an attempt fail the Austrians and Germans would then have to resort to defensive measures against certain invasion.

The Austrian defenses are particularly strong and have been constructed everywhere, even along the Dalmatian coast, which is already protected by fixed and floating mines and guarded by a dozen submarines.

The Austrian fleet is centered at Pola, with only a few torpedo boats and destroyers at Cattaro and Saluto. Other Austrian warships are in the Dalmatian archipelago, on the eastern coast of the Adriatic Sea. Naval men here do not consider it likely that the Austrian fleet will leave Pola unless forced by an Italian attack.

When the great European war began Italy's army was considerably less than the normal peace footing estimated at 300,000 men. Almost half of these troops were in Tripoli. Now the active or first line army numbers more than 1,000,000 men of all arms. The age limit of active service in Italy is 22. Men between that age and 40 form the territorial army, consisting of eight classes amounting to 1,500,000 second line troops. There are about 1,000,000 men trained, but exempt from military service, who in case of urgent necessity, could be called to arms. Volunteer corps like these could be formed, so that Italy's total war strength, including resources of all kinds, is figured at about 4,000,000 men.

In eight months she has spent $100,000,000 in military preparations. Profiting by the lessons of the war to date, particular attention was paid to artillery, and her equipment in this arm, from machine guns to heavy siege pieces, is said to be unequalled in the world's armies. Her heavy guns are reported to be superior to those now famous German and Austrian type, and in military circles there have been rumors that she has evolved a fieldpiece of about three inches caliber exceeding in range, accuracy, ease of handling and effectiveness of fire the world's best.

Italy has a powerful fleet of modern warships. The Duke of the Abruzzi, cousin of King Victor Emmanuel, who is the chief naval officer of Italy, recently assumed command of five dreadnoughts, the most powerful squadron ever assembled under the Italian flag. In addition Italy has eight warships of the dreadnought type, nine armored cruisers, thirteen protected cruisers and the usual complement of destroyers and torpedo boats. She also has twenty-five submarines. Italy's population (1913) is given as 35,238,000. Military or naval service is compulsory and universal.

STIR CREATED IN SENATE CHAMBER

RESOLUTION WOULD REQUIRE SENATORS TO DISCLOSE INSURANCE CO. CONNECTIONS

IS AIMED AT LATTIMORE

All Members Present Except Henderson When Senate Reconvened This Morning

By Associated Press. Austin, Texas, May 24.—Twenty-nine senators were present today when the Senate convened and no time was lost in getting down to business. The absentees were Henderson and Hudspeeth, but the latter came in a few minutes after roll call, making all present except Henderson, who is opposed to the Gibson bill. Business quickly picked up when Senators King and Harley offered a resolution requiring senators to disclose any interest they have in any insurance company, either foreign or local, either as stockholder, officer or attorney.

The resolution caused a decided stir in the senate chamber. Senator Harley explained that he did not offer this resolution to put any senator on record or embarrass any senator, but he thought that in view of the importance of the legislation, every senator should disclose his interest, if any, on the question of changing the Robertson insurance law. Senator Gibson had a telegram read from S. J. Hunter of Fort Worth relating to the connection of Senator Lattimore with a cooperative company at Fort Worth, as vice president and counsel, and asking why he did not challenge his vote against the bill.

Senator McGregor sent up an amendment to the Harley resolution asking that E. P. Schumacher of Hillsboro be requested to come before the Senate and answer such questions as might be put to him touching a suit against him by the state of Texas. Travis wanted to turn on the light he would have the support of the four teen senators standing for the Gibson bill. Lieutenant Governor Hobby sustained the point of order. Senator Lattimore said he hoped that any senator opposed to the bill would join him in voting for the resolution offered by Harley. He explained his connection with a Fort Worth insurance company, saying it was a benevolent insurance company which had changed under the laws of the State and was not in any way affected by the passage of the Gibson bill.

Senator Wiley offered an amendment to include those interested in insurance companies as policy holders. Senator Brelsford defended the resolution and in reply to Senator Harley he said the suggestion that the resolution was unfair, and that every senator owed it to himself to make a full statement of his relation and that there was no reflection intended on anybody. "A most searching investigation" of his acts was courted and insisted upon by Senator Gibson who replied to charges made against him.

The governor sent up a recommendation that a law be passed fixing the number of days that paid firemen in cities shall work, and that if he fireman shall have one day off each week.

The senate then recessed with the Harley resolution before it.

WICHITA FALLS MAN GOING TO SEAT OF WAR

Assigned to a consular post at Venice, Italy, Q. F. Roberts of this city will be very close to the scene of war activities between Italy and Austria-Hungary. Mr. Roberts, who was appointed to the consular service several months ago as the result of competitive examination has just wired his father from Washington that he has been assigned to duty at Venice and that he will sail Wednesday on the British White Star liner Celtic for Genoa. From Genoa he will go to Venice by rail as the Adriatic is closed to navigation. Venice is at the head of the Adriatic on the Italian side. Just across the narrow expanse of sea is the Austrian shore which is expected to be the first objective of the Italian army. In event Austrian troops are successful Venice, itself, may be attacked.

Mr. Roberts will be consular assistant, and the war will bring a multitude of added duties to the American consular office and his introduction into the service is quite likely to be a strenuous one. Mr. Roberts took the examination for the service with 100 others and is reported to have made the highest grades of any of the contestants. He is only 21 years old and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Roberts of this city.

Bert Lowery was in the box for the Wichitans.

In Wichita Falls the Tigers won from the Rams in a close game by the score of 12 to 6.

EXCESSIVE RAINFALL HAS CAUSED MUCH DAMAGE

IOWA PARK BRIDGE IS WASHED OUT

HIGH WATER CARRIES 80 FOOT SPAN SOME DISTANCE DOWN STREAM.

NEW BRIDGE IS NECESSARY

Estimated That More Than $10,000 Will Be Required to Replace Structure.

The Wichita River promptly gave Wichita county a place to spend the tax money from the oil companies, when it washed out an 80 foot span of the Iowa Park bridge across the Wichita River. The span was carried some distance downstream by the high waters which resulted from Saturday night's rain.

As a result of this washout, the second within a few weeks, it is probable that the bridge will be moved half a mile west to a point where the banks afford better footing. During the April rise in the river one of the 80 foot spans was washed out and steps had been taken to repair this damage when the other 80 foot span went out late Sunday. The bridge consists of one 60 foot span, one 100 foot span and two 80 foot spans; both of the latter have been washed out. The approaches to the bridge are on low ground, easily overflowed and County Judge Harris, who visited the scene this morning, said he would urge that the bridge be rebuilt on more stable ground.

At their last session the commissioners appropriated $2000 to repair the bridge, but about $10,000 will be needed if the plans are carried out.

LOWLAND WHEAT BADLY DAMAGED

NEARLY 3 INCHES RAIN FELL SATURDAY NIGHT, FLOODING MANY FIELDS

WASHOUTS ARE REPORTED

Lake Wichita at High Stage and River Rising—Some Damage Results in City

With rainfall amounting to 2.65 inches Saturday night, considerable damage has resulted in this section. Two washouts are reported. Lake Wichita is almost at a record breaking stage, pavements and storm sewers in the city have suffered and some lesser damage is reported. Fourteen head of cattle were drowned in Lake Wichita Sunday while attempting to cross near the bridge at the head of the lake. The current swept them beyond their depth.

A washout on the Wichita Valley between Bonmarton and Gnome and other on the Wichita Falls & Southern south of Olney, were caused by the rain which extended as far south as Abilene. The rain visited all points on the Denver from Iowa Park to Bellevue.

The street car track beyond the factory district was badly damaged but traffic was not interrupted. The embankment was badly washed out and it was necessary to operate cars very slowly all day yesterday. The storm swept on Scott between Tenth and Eleventh causing a cave-in of a viaduct near there was a cave-in between Eleventh and Twelfth. The rain caused some of the paving blocks at Tenth and Scott to be dislodged and they floated as far away as Eleventh street, leaving a large hole in the pavement.

The washout on the Wichita Falls & Southern destroyed about 2000 feet of track below Olney and no trains were operated over this line yesterday or today. Traffic on the Wichita Valley was delayed, but trains were running today. Neither the Denver nor the Katy reported any trouble.

With three and a half feet of water pouring over the spillway, Lake Wichita is at an exceptionally high stage, being up even with the flashing pier. The water company kept a force of men patrolling the dam and embankments Sunday, watching for trouble. Had the high wind of Saturday night continued there is little doubt that some damage would have resulted. The Wichita River was rising this morning.

Downtown streets were flooded during the rain, the storm sewers being unable to carry away the excess of water, and in some places the sidewalks were overflowed.

Yesterday morning in spite of the heavy rain the streets were hard and dry and in the afternoon even the country roads were entirely passable except for occasional mud holes.

The rain caused considerable damage to wheat and further reduced the production in this county, especially in the low lands where rain after rain has caused considerable loss.

Holiday Creek is a roaring torrent today and is out of its banks and overflowing fields and pastures in many places, with some damage to crops. War is over the roads south of the city in some places but not in sufficient depth to stop wagon traffic.

Street Superintendent Dobson estimates that the damage to the graded streets will not exceed $1000 and this is distributed all over the city.

Oil And Gas Beneath Land Part Of Realty—Lease a Conveyance

The oil or gas beneath a piece of land is part of the realty and therefore a lease is a conveyance of property and amounts to an interest in the land itself, such, in brief, as the finding of the state supreme court in sustaining the action of the lower courts in the suit of the Texas Company vs. W. H. Daugherty et al. from this county. This principle holds, says the opinion written by Judge Nelson Phillips in spite of the evanescent character of the oil or gas, and he holds that an oil and gas lease is something more than a conveyance of the right to take the oil and gas from the ground.

Copies of Judge Nelson Phillips' opinion have been received here.

"The grant amounted to a defeasible title in fee to the oil and gas in the ground, if oil and gas in place are capable of ownership and conveyance," says the opinion. "This brings us to the consideration of the latter question, and the contention of the plaintiff in error that these substances are incapable of ownership as property until severed or extracted from the ground, and that therefore these instruments conferred upon it no more than a mere use of the surface of the ground and the right to take them from it, amounting only to the privilege belonging to the land and taxable as a part of it against the owner of the fee, but vesting it with the title to no property whatever. It may be remarked, we think with propriety, that this position is in marked contrast with the solemn assertion of the instruments themselves, exhibited in the record by means of a common form evidently prepared by the plaintiff in error for use in its business operations, that they were not intended as mere franchises but as conveyances of the property and privileges described, and were so understood by all parties thereto. However, we pass over that to the determination of the naked question.

"It is no longer doubted that oil and gas within the ground are minerals. They have peculiar attributes not common to other minerals because of their fugitive nature or volatile habit, the disposition to wander or migrate, and the possibility of their escape from beneath one part of the surface of the earth to another. Nevertheless, they are to be classed as minerals. Thornton on Oil and Gas, Section 18. The People vs. Bell, 227 Ill. 332. In place they lie within the strata of the earth, and necessarily are a part of the realty. Being a part of the realty while in place, it would seem to logically follow whenever they are conveyed while in that condition or possessing that status, a conveyance of an interest in the realty results. It is generally conceded that for the purpose of ownership and conveyance of solid minerals, the earth may be divided horizontally as well as vertically, and that title to the surface may rest in one person and title to the strata beneath the surface containing such minerals in another. Because of the fugitive nature of oil and gas, some courts, emphasizing the doctrine that they are incapable of absolute ownership until captured and reduced to possession and analogizing their ownership to that of things ferac naturae, have made a distinction between their conveyance while in place and that of other minerals, holding that it created no interest in the realty. But it is difficult to perceive the substantial ground for the distinction. A purchase of them within the ground assumes the hazard of their escape through the possibility of their escape from beneath the particular tract of land, and, of course, if they are not discovered the conveyance is of no effect; just as the purchaser of solid mineral within the ground incurs the risk of its absence and therefore a futile venture. But let it be supposed that they have not escaped, and are in repose within the strata beneath the particular tract and capable of possession by appropriation from

it. There they clearly constitute a part of the realty. Is the possibility of their escape to render them while in place incapable to conveyance, or is their ownership while in that condition, with the exclusive right to take them from the land, anything less than ownership of an interest in the land? Conceding that they are then in their nature and may depart from the land before brought in to absolute possession, will it be denied that so long as they have not departed they are a part of the land? Or when conveyed in their natural state and they are in fact beneath the particular tract, that their grant amounts to an interest in the land? The opposing argument is founded entirely upon their peculiar property and, therefore, the risk of their escape. But how does that possibility alter the character of the property interest which they constitute while in place beneath the land? The argument ignores the equal possibility of their presence, and that the parties have contracted upon the latter assumption, that if they are in place beneath the tract they are essentially a part of the realty, and their grant, therefore, while in that condition, if effectual at all, is a grant of an interest in the realty. In other words, the question, it seems to us, reduces itself to this: If the oil and gas, the subject of the conveyance, are in fact not beneath or within the land and are therefore not capable of being reduced to possession, the conveyance is of no effect. But if they have not departed and are beneath it, they are there as a part of the realty, and their conveyance while in place, if the instrument be given any effect, is consequently the conveyance of an interest in the realty. There could be no warrant for denying effect to such instruments as these, and, granting them effect, they are therefore to be considered as conveyances of such an interest.

"The possibility of the escape of the oil and gas from beneath the land before being finally brought within actual control may be recognized, as may also their incapability of absolute ownership, in the sense of positive possession, until so subjected, but nevertheless, while they are in the ground they constitute a property interest. If so, what is the nature of it in the hands of the original owner? It embraces necessarily the privileges or right to take them from the land. But is that its extent, or is it a character? While they lie within the ground as a part of the realty, is the ownership of the realty to be denominated, as to them, a mere license to appropriate, as distinguished from an absolute property right in the corpus of the land? With the land itself capable of absolute ownership, everything within it in the nature of a mineral is likewise capable of ownership so long as it constitutes a part of it. If these minerals are a part of the realty while in place, as undoubtedly they are, upon what principle can the ownership of the property interest which they constitute while they are beneath or within the land, be other than the ownership of an interest in the realty?

"We are not dealing with conveyances of simply the right to take the oil and gas from the ground. These instruments purported to be a grant of the oil and gas themselves in the ground. If while in place they constituted an interest in the realty, that interest was subject to sale and conveyance, the purchaser assuming the risk of reducing them to possession. The instruments throughout treat these minerals in the ground as property and bespeak the purpose to give the grantee absolute dominion over them, not merely when severed from the realty and reduced to personalty, but while in their natural state; and the interest granted was furthermore expressed as one capable of being assigned and conveyed by the grantee. There are imposed no limit upon the grantee's right to the oil and gas, save as to the royalty payable to the grantor; it could take them out to any extent, at all times, and from beneath any part of the land, with the single limitation that no well should be drilled nearer than 200 feet from the house or barn on the premises except by the grantor's consent. Such a vested interest in the minerals in the ground, forming in their natural state and with the further unlimited right to their appreciation plainly constitute property and all that is recognized in proprietorship, and equally amount to an interest in the land itself."

BRIEF REVIEW BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONY C MINOR

The following is a review of Beethoven's Symphony C Minor which will be given at the Maehlin recital Tuesday night.

This work represents a place or period of a life. Briefly, it is the story of a soul laboring under the belief that fate is the master of man's destinies, but finally triumphing over that belief. The first movement opens with the fate theme. "Thus," said Beethoven himself, "thus fate knocks on the door." After a brief development the second theme enters—tender and simple, but amorous. Before this thought has clearly found utterance, the fate theme is again heard in the basses and it follows this second theme through every development. Thus it seems to say to us that though we may daily by life's way, indulging the tender emotions, fate is ever behind, dogging our footsteps. The whole of the first movement is constructed upon these two themes. It closes with a most furious declamation that fate is master.

The second movement introduces a new character. A fair woman, it may be an angel from Heaven, is speaking words of strength, encouragement and endurance. The response is immediate and complete. We can almost see the suffering soul rise in strength and gladness, the gloomy pessimism melting before the warmth and tenderness of the message. Like the first movement, this is composed of two thoughts skillfully interwoven, with but little escape matter.

It is in the third movement that Beethoven showed how well he understood the human character. The movement is in two parts, the first of which shows a reaction of thought and belief, a return to the old haunting terror that fate is stronger. The modern short story writer is usually in such a hurry to make everyone "live happy every after," that he omits all the intervening struggle. Many believe that in this Symphony Beethoven was portraying a period of his own life. It is extremely likely; but it is not certain. To return to the third movement, the opening theme is evil, restless and unhappy and leads, almost immediately to a slight variation of the fate theme. Fate is now pounding on the door, as energetically as ever. As the movement continues, the theme becomes less insistent. Suddenly a new theme enters with a sort of boisterous cheerfulness that sweeps away all foreboding thoughts. It is a tonic and works its way into the heart and works its way into the heart and works its way into the heart.

"And yet again comes fate—but it is only a memory, not a belief this time. It cannot interrupt the majestic sweep and stride of the song which continues immediately with a greater force than before. At the close the master hand, not only of the music but of the character delineator, shows itself. The old fate theme appears, but so transformed that we realize that the fears, once so terrible are being revived now merely to be laughed at.

HER LENTEN SACRIFICE

By JOHN DARLING.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"There is only one thing that I really do not like to do," said Geraldine.

"Then that's the thing for you to do, my dear; that ought to be your sackcloth and ashes this Lent," said Miss Craft, spinster, and Sunday school teacher of Geraldine Bonner and other girls not yet old enough to vote. "What is it?"

"Darning! I hate to darn stockings!"

But before the beginning of Lent she had decided to darn stockings for anyone who would pay her 20 cents an hour all through the penitential season, and to this end she wrote little notes to her friends and placed a tiny card of advertisement in the church leaflet. She hoped, down in her soul, that she would not find much work to do, but she had determined to take whatever came her way.

One family after another engaged her services for one or two or three or even five or six hours a week, and before she could realize it Geraldine had given up nearly all of her own time. This in itself was a great sacrifice, for the skating was good and she loved to skate. Her little box of money, which she was saving for her Easter offering, was getting heavy.

The family in which Geraldine found the most darning to do was a family of father, mother, four sons and a small daughter. The mother kept no servant and had eyes that would not admit of her darning or doing close work at night. Hence, Geraldine's newly established profession fitted in conveniently with the schemes of the family need.

The week before Easter Geraldine felt that she could do the darning for the Foster family in less than two hours, and on the day on which she was to go to that home she had planned to have an afternoon's skating.

To her surprise and disappointment when she arrived in the cheerful sewing room, Mrs. Foster showed her a basketful of socks.

"I'll try to get them all done for you, Mrs. Foster," she said, cheerfully. "This is my last week, you know."

"I do know it—to my sorrow," replied Mrs. Foster. "Oh, James, come in. Miss Bonner, this is my son who has loaded you down with extra work. James, Miss Bonner, who has been helping me for a few weeks with the mending."

James Foster let his eyes dwell longer than was necessary on the lovely face of Geraldine Bonner as she sat in the sunlight in his mother's tiny sewing room. He stepped over to her low rocker and put out his hand. "I am glad to have the pleasure of meeting you more work," he said, his frank, pleasant smile accompanying his words.

"Oh—don't mind the work. I—well, I'll tell you how much good it has done me, some day, perhaps," Geraldine answered.

"You're fond of darning?" asked James, sitting down on the edge of the machine. He was tall, and the edge of it made a not uncomfortable seat for him.

"Fond of it?" asked Geraldine. "If I were I shouldn't be doing it as a Lenten sacrifice, should I?" she laughed.

"Hardly—would she, mother?" Mrs. Foster shook her head. "No, son, I guess not. But I'll say for Miss Bonner right here and now that she might love the work dearly, for she has never been anything but cheerful and happy over it, and it has been a pleasure to have her here."

Geraldine made a bow over her work and Mrs. Foster hurried off to attend to numerous duties. James, being at home on a visit, could think of no pleasanter way of spending that vacation time than in sitting in his mother's sewing room watching the sunbeams play in and out among Geraldine Bonner's curls as she bent over the homely task of darning.

All afternoon he remained near the girl and at the end of three hours when she had finished the two had become more than mere acquaintances. They were sure that they had found several points of meeting and that they should see each other often while James was at home.

Geraldine was busy during the week, but on Sunday when she made her Easter offering of many dollars earned by herself in performing a task she did not like, she looked up to see James Foster opposite her in church. Afterward he walked home with her in the spring sunshine and they said much to each other that did not pertain to darning socks.

Later, when he returned again to his home town to visit, he asked her to marry him. "I dare to do it, dear, since I know you are a girl who can make sacrifices—otherwise I could not ask you just now. I haven't much to offer."

Geraldine disagreed on that point, but she promised to marry him.

High Price for Unborn Calf.

The price of $6,000, agreed upon between W. H. Tichnor of Oconomowoc, Wis., and F. L. Ames of North Easton, Mass., for the purchase of a Guernsey calf, is probably the highest on record. The peculiar feature of the contract is that the calf was yet unborn.

HOME HAS BIG ENDOWMENT

Institution That Cares for Naval Veterans Not Worrying Over Keeping Wolf From the Door.

One of the richest and most honorable institutions in Philadelphia is one of the least well known. I speak of that eighty-nine-year-old veteran—the United States Naval home.

Ninety-nine persons out of one hundred think this is a charitable affair. On the contrary, not only does it support itself, but as a self-supporter it is right up in the Statesbury-Widener-Morgan-Carnegie class.

The naval home has over $14,000,000 invested in bonds. It has never cost the government one cent. Of its income of $420,000 last year, only $77,000 was expended for maintenance, so you can see that keeping the wolf from the door is not a strenuous occupation, at those somber-looking buildings at Gray's Ferry.

The great $14,000,000 fund was collected by the turning over of prize money received by sailors and officers during our various wars. Moreover, every officer pays twenty cents a month, and sailors also contribute.

General Forney of the Marine corps told me yesterday he had paid his twenty cents every month for fifty years.

"No difficulty," I suggested to Commander F. R. Payne, executive officer of the home, "to support your one hundred or so occupants."

"Scarcely," he replied. "We could support all the officers all the naval homes in the United States and still not exhaust our yearly income."

Commander Payne was one of those who received prize money during the Spanish-American war for capturing Spanish ships.

"Got my check framed as a souvenir," said he, "because our government has by law abolished prize money." In future no sailor in this country will profit financially by the capture of an enemy's ships.

Next to Girard college the Naval home is the most heavily endowed institution in Pennsylvania. Were this fund invested in high-class municipal bonds it might increase its yearly income by $140,000, or nearly twice the amount required to support all its occupants. "Girard," in Philadelphia Ledger.

A young woman in the Journalism class at K. U. was asked how she would go about it to get the news of a fire in a distant part of town, late at night, after the street cars had stopped running. Oil Field Worker Loses Life While Bathing in Tank Sunday Night

Special to The Times. Burkburnett, Texas, May 24.—C. F. Wright, aged 28, an oil field worker, was drowned Sunday night in a tank on Will Thom's farm, four and a half miles southeast of Burkburnett. Wright and two companions were in bathing. Wright got beyond his depth and sank. At first his companions thought he had hid from them but when they failed to find him they began to dive for his body which was brought to the surface about thirty or forty minutes after he sank. Wright had been in the Wichita county fields for several years. His home was at Little Washington, Pa. His relatives there have been notified. The body has been embalmed and is being held pending word from them. Wright was employed by W. C. McBride.

A PICNIC

That's the thing that gets to buzzing in the brain of all of us about now. That Picnic Feeling comes to us just as regular as the grass gets green and generally makes an irresistible appeal when that green grass, flowers and all out of doors, seems to be calling to us. We approve of the picnic idea, because we believe it's good to get out in the open occasionally, and—besides we sell Picnic Goods. Of course, that's a secondary consideration, but you'll agree that a Picnic isn't a Picnic unless there's an abundance of Eats. They are just as necessary as the grass, the flowers, and the chiggers. Fact is, you could not get along without some of this scenery, but the Eats—No, never. Pick the People, time and place for your Picnic—then come down here and pick your Picnic Eats. It's a Picnic to pick our Picnic goods. Any old scenery and our GOOD GROCERIES will make a Pippin of a picnic. Come on—let's all go.

MISS THOMPSON ENTERTAINS PATHFINDER CLUB THURSDAY

The last meeting of the year and preceded by all of the most delightful meeting in the history of the Pathfinder Club was held Thursday at her country home, a mile or so east of town. The shower at the noon hour delayed the starting so that it was not until two o'clock that the party arrived at the Thompson home, where they found a luncheon table laden in true rural hospitality with fresh country ham, and all the delicacies of the season with fresh strawberries and whipped cream as the apex of resistance of the menu. Following the repast a business session was held and the report of the delegates to the Quinlan convention, Misses Emma Smith and Hazel Hunter, were heard. Two new members were elected, Miss Virginia Andrews, and the program for next year was read and adopted. Music, conversation and kodaking in the orchard and grounds made the time pass all too soon for the guests. Late in the afternoon an array of flowers from the Thompson garden, motored home with Miss M. Bell. Miss Thompson was assisted in entertaining by her mother and sister, Miss Abbie. Those present were: Misses Grace Nolan, Emma and Theresa Smith, Hazel Hunter, Alice Burnside, Tula Stokes, Temple Thompson, Mesdames M. A. Beckman, Ben Bell and S. H. Burnside.

BROTHERHOOD AN ALL INCLUSIVE TERM

TO RESTRICT IT IS TO ABOLISH IT DECLARES PASTOR IN SERMON

ON CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM

Rev. Smith Says Oughtn't to Espouse Cause Unless Willing to Go All the Way

Christian socialism was the theme of Rev. Chas. C. Smith at the First M. E. Church Sunday morning. His text was Gen. 43, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" He said in part: "A great many years ago according to a story recorded in a very ancient history, two brothers working in a field faced squarely for the first time a very serious question. Unfortunately for these two brothers the question was in no way adequately answered. They discovered that men live in relations to each other, and the result of this discovery at the first was that, instead of mutual adjustment, the stronger brother killed the weaker. Both men were quite religious but neither was very moral. Devotion had taken only a slight hold on them and their answer to this newly discovered principle was only such as man apart from God would naturally give. But Cain's wicked deed, like the wicked deeds of all men, brought him at issue with his Creator, and the hitherto sluggish moral consciousness awoke and something of the enormity of his sin dawned upon his clouded mind. Half in scorn, half in fear, he met his brother's question by another, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' This tragedy of Cain and Abel is often repeated and many a skulking abuser of the principle of brotherhood, by trying to dodge responsibility for his brother's welfare.

"The moral world has advanced a long way since the days of Cain but that very pertinent question is still reverberating and as a vibration of other souls to the limits of space so must this question reach the limits of time. We are not yet done with it. Never before in the history of human relationships has there been a more urgent need for a proper interpretation of it, nor has there ever been a more determined effort on the part of right thinking men to solve it by actual living. Other generations may have been content to theorize about the universal brotherhood of mankind, but this generation has passed from the theoretical to the practical and is demanding a solution. Men are seeking to demonstrate the Christian principle of brotherhood, if not on the battlefields of Europe, at least in some parts of the world by assuming responsibility and getting on with the business of the less favored brother. I am my brother's keeper and unless I act the part of brother his blood will cry out from the ground against me. The modern disciple of Jesus the Christ who has any adequate conception of the working of Christ in the world must answer this question in the affirmative unqualifiedly, and must immediately set about looking for his brother who has been in sore need of fraternal kindness. The mutual activities of our nation at the present time indicates clearly that the spirit of Christ is setting bold men. I conceive the restlessness in matters of state and the determined revolt against abuses of long standing to be the result of the workings of the heaven of the teachings of him who said, 'I came not to bring peace but a sword.' There must still be many a sword thrust at unbrotherliness before the Prince of Peace can rule. It is impossible to rest quietly under the spirit of Christ while our fellow men are being crushed in sinful abandon. The Master's 'Go ye' and his parable of the Good Samaritan forever binds us to gospel of brotherly kindness and institute the highest conception of true socialism that the world has ever known or will know.

"It is gratifying to note that our government is awakening to the Christian principle of brotherhood and is demanding more of a consideration for the rights of the individual by improved immigration laws, pension and penal laws, pensions and charitable institutions. And in fact, wherever man is concerned the increasing spirit of brotherhood is demanding more and more that the

STOMACH TROUBLES

Mr. Ragland Writes Interesting Letter on This Subject.

Madison Heights, Va.—Mr. Chas. A. Ragland, of this place writes: 'I have been taking Theodor's Black-Draught for indigestion, and other stomach troubles, also colds, and find it to be the very best medicine I have ever used.'

After taking Black-Draught for a few days, I always feel like a new man. Nervousness, nausea, heartburn, pain in pit of stomach, and a feeling of fullness after eating, are sure symptoms of stomach trouble, and should be given the proper treatment, as your strength and health depend very largely upon your food and its digestion.

To get quick and permanent relief from these ailments, you should take a medicine of known curative merit.

rights of man as man be safeguarded. This I conceive to be the direct result of the wider spread teachings and more practical living of the religion of Jesus the Christ, who once went on a long journey far out of his way, around through the generally despised land of Samaria, just to talk to a fallen woman and to redeem her to a life of righteousness. This improved condition is due to the teaching of that Christ who was never tired or too busy to hear the cry of the blind or the leprosy or the pained; who was not too proud to sit at meat in the home of Zacharias or of Matthew the Publican. Christ was indeed the brother to humanity.

Just a brief suggestion as to some of the demands which this principle makes upon us. Not all people are congenial. Not all people have been careful to maintain a social plane that appeals to us. Some peoples have different complexions from us and are rather repulsive. What shall we do with the man who is down? What shall we do with the fellow who has chosen to live on a low moral and social plane? It will not do for us to be over-zealous in our espousal of the principle of a Universal Brotherhood unless we are willing to go all the way and bear all the entanglements. That is not brotherhood at all which stops short with the circle of the congenial. For a church or a fraternity or any organization to talk about brotherhood and then draw the line on the weak and the down and out and the repulsive is a travesty on brotherhood. Brotherhood is an all inclusive term of necessity and to restrict it is to abolish it. Booker T. Washington says in one of his lectures, 'If God is my Father and your Father then we are brothers.' His logic is invincible and the only way to escape is to negative Christ's teaching about the universal brotherhood of God. We are willing to talk about a universal brotherhood in general terms but like Cain we want to dodge the specific application. We are rejoiced to call God 'Our Father' but to take the Chinaman or the Japanese or the Dago or the Greaser by the hand and call him brother rather taxes our still imperfect Christian graces. But this is all implied in brotherhood and if we are not going to be honest all the way through let us not begin at all. A common brotherhood inheres in a common Fatherhood and Jesus is the power of inspiration back of every worthy movement tending to uplift the unfortunate brother to better plains of living.

"The question raised by man fallen has continued to reverberate down through the ages, increasing in importance as civilization has grown more complicated until today it is a bigger and more imperative question than ever before. And what is more man is working harder for his solution, but if man fallen has asked the question, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' only man risen has answered. The resurrected Christ declared in the affirmative. Love God, love man. These are the two tenants of his theology and these two are one because inseparable. And it is the spirit of this same Jesus working as a ferment in society today that is back of every movement which is uplifting humanity. When Christ's will shall have its way on the earth there will be the perfect brotherhood."

At The Theaters

The Gem. Mary Fuller, Barry O'Moore, William West, Miriam Nesbitt, Charles Ogilvie, Duncan McRae and Harry Beaumont make up the cast of "The Master Mummer," an Edison drama in three parts. The story of love conquering ambition is prettily told. This play was formerly in seven parts but has had all the unimportant parts cut here. Miss Fuller has probably never done better work than in this story of love, intrigue and adventure among foreign royalty. A Hearst Selig News Pictorial completes the four reel program.

The Empress. Marie-Louise Clark, heroine of "The Crucible" and once a musical comedy favorite in the company of DeWolf Hopper, will be seen here today in "Wildflower" second Famous Player Clark pictures to be shown here. Harold Lockwood, support of Mary Pickford in "Hearst Adrift" plays a lead role also. The picture has a plot of much interest and the settings, both in the country home of the "Wildflower" and the palatial city home to which she goes as the wife of Arnold, are of unusual beauty.

The Majestic. Tom Mix is featured in a two part Selig, "Ma's Girls" and an Edison comedy, "The Newby Rich" with a Hearst Selig news film completes the program for today.

"KREUTZER SONATA" AT THE MAJESTIC TUESDAY

Tolstol's famous production, "Kreutzer Sonata" is the offering at the Majestic Theatre tomorrow. Nance O'Neil, Theda Bara, the vampire woman and William Shay have the leading parts but each member of the cast is a star.

In many respects "Kreutzer Sonata" may be called the drama of the clash of the "old order" changing, giving place to new. Throughout its shifting scenes, from the somberly aged Quinine of Russia to the thrifty atmosphere of rural Connecticut, and the rush and turmoil of New York City, this theme and the tragedy of a noble woman's soul betrayed and rebelliously crushed, form the dominant motif of this play of splendid force and sweeping power. It holds the spectator relentlessly in thrall, with blood jumping heartward and nerves athrob, from the opening scenes of the "relate to the terrific climax where shattered lives and blasted hopes—the toys of a grim fate—topple to a common ruin. This is, in briefest form, an epitome of one of the most remarkable dramas of today. It is produced by William Fox, directed by Herbert Brenon, released through the Fox Film Corporation.

The Quinine That Does Not Affect The Head. Because of its tonic and laxative effect, LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE is better than ordinary Quinine and does not cause nervousness or ringing in head. Remember the full name and look for the signature of E. W. OFFICE, E.C.

Wichita Falls, Texas, May 24, 1915

Although the rain of Saturday night and Sunday morning amounted to about two and one-half inches, reports from the country generally agree that the damage to wheat crops is not near so great as was expected, and if no more falls between now and harvest time the yield will be far above the average. In the low places where the water is standing, the wheat is greatly injured, but on the higher ground there is no indication of damage by excessive rains or high winds.

It will soon be harvest time, and the threshing and marketing of the grain will then be the order. Last year the wheat farmer who sold his wheat from the threshers received from 70c to 80c per bushel, and more than half of the wheat produced in the country was sold at those figures. Those who placed their wheat in their granaries and held for a higher price, sold at prices ranging from $1.00 to $1.50 per bushel. As a rule, it does not pay to sell wheat from the threshers. Occasionally—once in a great while, the market price for wheat at threshing time is higher than it will be afterwards, but that has only happened about twice in twenty-four years. The wheat farmer who holds his wheat, and has made that his practice, is for ahead of the fellows who sell their grain just as soon as it is threshed.

The attacks of the Russians are being repulsed by the Germans in the way the reports from European war zone now read, and when they don't read that they generally say the Russians are retreating. Considering that Russia has so many more fighting men than Germany, the only conclusion to be reached is that Russia has run out of ammunition and guns. In fact one report says that quite a bunch of Russian soldiers were recently taken prisoners by an inferior number of German soldiers, and the reason for it was explained after the capture was made that the Russians were armed only with sticks or clubs, and as the Germans don't fight with that kind of weapons, there was nothing left for the Russians to do except to stand by and be slaughtered, or surrender. They preferred to do the latter.

President Wilson's declaration more than a year ago that the United States will make no war of conquest and seeks no more territory any where under the sun sounds better every time one reads of a new entry into the European maelstrom. There is no doubt but that the bitter feeling engendered over the Germans taking of Alsac and Lorraine was one of the basic causes of the great world conflagration. Italy's desire to bring the Italian provinces from Austria back under the Italian flag is responsible for Italy's entry into the war. Ancient wrongs by Turkey and more recent aggravations by Austria will probably bring the Balkan states into the conflict. There is nothing so like the unwilling allegiance of a conquered people to bring war. Americans are glad that her boundaries are ample for the development of the legitimate aspirations of our people, and that her courageous spokesmen has so emphatically stated a principle of the American government.

The fate of the Gibson bill may be decided before this appears in print but attention to the argument advanced in a recent communication from Judge S. H. Hodges concerning the bill will not be amiss. Judge Hodges criticized Governor Ferguson properly, we believe, for attempting to force upon the people legislation which they had not demanded and which they had not even considered more than by their votes to endorse Governor Ferguson's statement in his opening speech that he was against changes in the Robertson law. A good many of Governor Ferguson's supporters are wondering over his activity for the Gibson bill and even those who favor the repeal of the Robertson law feel that to do so before the issue has been submitted to the people is manifestly improper and is a method that can find little favor among the voters of Texas. The state has prospered since the Robertson law was enacted as never before in its history. The Robertson law may not have been responsible for this progress and this prosperity but certainly legislation that means a reversal of Texas policy should not be enacted until the people have been given an opportunity to voice their views through the ballot box. If the Gibson bill is a good thing let Governor Ferguson and its proponents take it before the people in the next election.

Thousands of men are being put to work daily in the mines, mills and factories of the country. The next few weeks promises to see every idle man in the country at work. Within the next ten days the harvest fields of the Southwest will send their calls for labor. The country is rapidly readjusting itself to the conditions that resulted from the outbreak of the European war and the first anniversary of the beginning of hostilities promises to find American commerce and industry on a high wave of prosperity.

One death from eating mulberries is reported from South Texas this year. There are a number of mulberry trees in Wichita Falls and they are loaded with fruit. It is said there is a little white poisonous bug that clings to the berry, easily detected when looked for, but difficult to wash off. Parents should warn their children against eating them.

When steers sell at $8 to $8.75 per hundred weight it would seem there is more money in stock-raising than in farming. Even yearling calves are commanding prices unheard of before. Five or ten years ago, it is said, a ranchman received as much as $5 per hundred weight for a choice lot of fat steers, he thought he was doing well, and he was. There is hardly a chance that cattle will ever be much below what they are now.

INDOORS. "Oh, I hate to work," said the weary clerk, "in the stale and stuffy store when the birdies sing 'Dumpty-ying-a-lings' in that tree outside the door; when the skies are fair, and the balmy air is scented with lilac bloom, it is fierce, I say that a man must stay all day in a musty room!" Then he takes a day from his work. In May, and rambles the glades and dells; oh, he haunts the streams that he saw in dreams—for a time he is wearing bells. When his jaunt is over he returns once more to the place where he earns his money, where he is lately squealed—and his nose is peeled, for it couldn't stand the sun; and his legs are sore where the chiggers tore their way through the juicy meat and he raves and rants of the blooming ants that thought he was good to eat; and he seeps and seeps as he tells of worms that dined on his shapely calves, and he prates of bugs as he goes for drugs, for liniments, balms, and salves. And he says, says he, "It's the store for me, here for aye abides, no more I'll hie me horns to the dais, dais, dais!"

THE RIGGS BANK SUIT. Regardless of our attitude toward the Riggs National bank or the various government officials against whom that bank instituted suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, we will all be gratified to know that the government officials have not exceeded their authority in their dealings with the bank and that no attempt has been made by them to embarrass the bank in any way. Justice McCoy, before whom the motion of the bank for an injunction against the secretary of the treasury, the comptroller of the treasury and the treasurer of the United States, has been tried, has announced, "The evidence here is of persistent violations of the law and those violations did not begin when Mr. Williams came into office and they have continued to this day," and "It seems to me on the record as it stands that the government officials would be remiss in their duty in selecting it (the Riggs Bank) as a federal reserve agency."

So strong were the protestations of innocence of any wrong doing on the part of the bank, and so inclusive were the requests of Comptroller Williams to congress for increased authority in regulating the national banks of the country, that we were inclined at first to believe that possibly the sins of the bank had been magnified and that the comptroller, having manifested a zeal for larger an-

"The Coyote," High School Annual Off The Press

"The Coyote," the official annual publication of the Wichita Falls high school is just off the press of The Times Publishing Company and the members of the senior class of the school are congratulating themselves and the printers and pressmen on the job. The volume is bound in green and red leather and makes a good appearance. The 1915 edition of "The Coyote" is dedicated to Miss Katherine Hall, a member of the faculty and one of the favorite instructors. The various activities of high school students and the different phases of high school life are given space in "The Coyote," special attention being paid to athletic and literary departments. The faculty and the different classes are also represented and a "beauty page" is the latest feature. Miss Ruby Moore, a senior, occupies the place of distinction on this page as the prettiest girl in the high school. The annual is edited by members of the senior class and the staff designed it to serve as a reminder of the last year of high school hence the activities of

thority—authority which we do not believe should be granted him—might have exceeded at least the proprieties in his dealings with the bank. But the evidence in the hearing on the injunction appears to fully justify the course that has been pursued by the treasury department officials and for the sake of good government—which would have received a severe blow had it developed that these officials were proceeding against any bank merely to vent a personal spleen—we are glad the court has given these officials a clean bill of health. It is bad enough to have officials of a bank violating the law. But it would be infinitely worse to see high officials of the government usurping authority and prostituting their high offices to embarrass a political enemy or vent a personal spleen. We are glad the administration refused to become involved in the matter in any way, but for the sake of the administration, as well as good government generally, we are glad its representatives have come out of the affair with clean skirts.—Waco Morning News.

"The Government of the King, firmly resolved to provide all means at its disposal for safeguarding Italian rights and interests, can not fall in its duty to take against every existing and future menace measures which events impose upon it, for the fulfillment of national aspirations. ### Market Reports

Chicago Grain Futures.

By Associated Press. Chicago, May 24.—Although Italy's declaration of war tended to favor the bear side of the wheat market today the effect seemed to have been largely discounted in advance. Selling did not assume unusual proportions. On the other hand bullish crop reports on Missouri furnished something of an offset. Wheat closed nervous. Wheat, May 15, 41 1-4; July 1, 26 3-4; Sept. 1, 20 1-2. Corn, May 7 1-2; July 76; Sept. 56 5-8. Oats, May 52 1-4; July 50 1-2; Sept. 44 7-8.

New York Cotton Futures.

By Associated Press. New York, May 24.—Italy's declaration of war evidently had been discounted in the cotton market today and trading was very quiet. Owing to the holiday there were no cables from Liverpool, and after opening convention, the market was steady at an advance of 1 to 3 points from the local market, sold about 5 to 7 points net higher. An easier turn in New Orleans and southern selling orders were followed by a reaction, but offerings were light. The market was very quiet during the early afternoon with prices ruling 3 to 5 points lower. The close: July 3.55; Oct. 9.89; Dec. 10.12; Jan. 10.17; March 10.41.

JUDSON AND HIS HOBBY

By HOPE AINSLEE.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper-Syndicate.)

The boys who had been teasing Judson could see that they had gone too far; that he was sensitive; that the matter was vital to him. They had not realized until now that the man was so much in earnest. They never had known a man who would make a hobby of fire fighting. Now that they stopped to ponder over it they realized that it was Frank Judson who had first proposed the organization of this auxiliary fire department, and that it had been he who had kept up interest in its existence all the way along.

Tactfully the subject was diverted from Judson and his penchant for ringing the fire bell every time the general village alarm was given. And though Judson had little to say, he seemed to have overlooked the teasing.

Within a fortnight, however, the residents of the quiet suburban section heard the fire department's bell clang! clang! out upon the cold, crisp air of the winter night.

Out of the various houses dashed men to answer the alarm, all uttering epithets about the man who saw fit to call out the company on the slightest provocation.

A pair of automobile lights cast their bright reflection around the curving road leading to the firehouse and a machine, driven by a girl wrapped in a great fur coat, pulled up beside the apparatus which had been hauled from the firehouse.

"Father is not well enough to answer the call, so I came in his place," began Helen Thompson. "Do you want to tie the cart on behind?"

"Get in, Mr. Judson," said Helen when the boys had fastened the apparatus to the back of the car.

Frank Judson got in beside the girl and, others occupied the tonneau, while the remaining members of the company started out on foot.

When the little contingent from the auxiliary fire department reached the scene of the fire, the blaze had been extinguished by the regular fire fighters.

"But we get the credit for being game and on the job," said Martin, who had squeezed himself into the car.

"Yes—thanks to Judson here, we keep a good reputation for answering calls," said another.

"It's thanks to Miss Helen—this time," replied Judson, forgetting, for the moment to take notice of the fact that he was being chaffed.

"Shall we return?" asked the girl, clapping her hands together to keep the circulation in them.

And the little party returned through the dark, cold, dreary streets with the clanging bell of the apparatus behind them. Judson tried to keep the cold wind from Helen and asked her again and again if she were not cold, but the girl kept up her grit till her own home was in sight.

There was little more conversation between the two, but when Judson helped Helen from the car and picked up the heavy fur robes to carry into the house for her he hoped Helen's father would ask him to sit and visit a while, even at that hour of the night.

Doctor Thompson met his daughter with a smile. "Helen, you're better than a son, I verily believe. You're always to be depended on. Come in, Judson. Warm up a minute by our hickory log."

"It's Miss Helen who is to be warmed up, doctor. I'm afraid it's been pretty cold for her," said Judson.

"I didn't want her to go out, but she would do it," said Doctor Thompson proudly.

"I'd like to find another girl who would," Judson added, looking into the girl's eyes. It was the first really interested look he had ever taken into them, and what he saw there made him realize that he had misread much of the good in the world.

When he left the girl and her father he asked if he might come in often to see them, which was more or less of a surprise to the girl, for she had known him for five years, and he had never made it a point to drop into her home.

She was even wondering, on the following night, when, if ever, Frank Judson would come, when she heard his voice in the hall. He was telling her father that he had been worrying for fear she had taken cold.

"Indeed, I haven't," Helen assured him as she gave him her hand.

"I should never forgive myself if you find," Frank replied. "Never."

"And I know something else, you never would have done, too, Mr. Frank Judson," Helen said, laughing and displaying two dimples the young man had never seen before, "you never would have taken the trouble to come to see me if I hadn't happened to appeal to you through your hobby—the fire department. Now, would you?"

Frank Judson flushed as he had flushed that day when the boys had teased him. "What does it matter? I—I have come and I intend to keep on coming—if I may, Helen?"

His Choice.
"Talking about widows—"

"Which we weren't. Still, what about them?"

"I'd rather be a widow's first, than her subsequent husband."

THAT OLD, SWEET SONG

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper-Syndicate.)

Enid smiled softly to herself while she labored over the task of selecting a number of songs preparatory to journeying across the ocean. She was going over to do her mite in the great war crisis by singing at numerous benefits and concerts and in the hospitals for wounded soldiers and sailors.

It was not until she had reached the lowest shelf of her music cabinet that Enid found the old, old song that Capt. Cyril Blaker had given her. The irresponsible, fascinating young scapegrace of the British army had been in New York just long enough to capture a few foolishly feminine hearts, to borrow money from everyone who was unwise enough to give it to him, and to disappear into a future no less vague than the past from which he had come.

"My mother used to sing this to me," he had said softly. "Will you sing it to me? I want to hear you now." The effect of the dainty homage on Enid came vividly back to her as she sat three years later looking over the song. A flush crept into her cheeks even as it had on that other day, and Enid wondered if she would ever see the flattering young ne'er-do-well again.

Enid put the beautiful little song called "Reby" into her overburdened folio with a hope that its donor would find that salvation held out to so many men in times of war. Perhaps among the thousands of khaki-clad figures she would see Captain Blaker. She was curiously, and without much reason, interested in the career of the handsome, irresponsible officer.

The men had been brought into the big sun parlor of the hospital, some carried in on stretchers, others in chairs and some of them could limp in on the arms of their nurses. Enid had never expected, in the whole of her musical career, to sing before so completely wrecked an assembly of living men.

She was standing quietly after a storm of applause when one of the nurses approached the platform.

"Have you, by any chance, a song called 'Reby'?" the nurse asked Enid. "One of my patients is longing for it."

Enid smiled and glanced swiftly over the mass of upturned faces.

"It is not a very cheerful song," she said. "But I will be glad to sing it."

Her hurried glance had failed to find a familiar golden head that somehow she had expected with the request for the song. Her accompanist left the platform and Enid sat down at the piano and played the dainty, rippling melody.

In so far as she could watch her audience Enid watched for one soldier among them who was more than interested in the song. She was curious to see who it was that was familiar with the old-time favorite. In the far corner a man, so wound with bandages as to be unrecognizable, was leaning forward.

But when she had finished the officer who had been leaning forward had been wheeled away. Enid searched for the nurse who had spoken with her, but she, too, had disappeared.

Out, in the corridor Enid was stopped by one of the surgeons.

"I am going to hold you responsible for the sudden desire on the part of one of my patients to live."

"I?" Enid laughed back at the surgeon. "What have I done?"

"You have sung life back into the heart of a young dare-devil officer whom we had all given up. He had come back from the battlefield wounded, a hero who has won the Victoria Cross, and has stepped into a title and huge estates; but it took your song to make him fight for his own life. He has begun the fight and if he wins, you and your song have saved him. Desire is a great factor as a stimulant along with our medicines. You have given young Blaker that desire and I want to shake hands with you."

When Enid stood beside the young officer who was lying with his face to the wall, she did not speak until the door had closed upon the surgeon.

"Why did you not make yourself known to me?" she asked softly, and Blaker turned swiftly.

"I am ashamed of my past," he said, and did not offer his unbandaged hand, but his eyes devoured the beauty of her face and told Enid that a new man had arisen from the experience of the past. The gentle flattery was still there and Enid suddenly knew that it would always be there for her.

She put her hand softly over his.

"You have done much to be unashamed of and your future is before you."

The blue of Blaker's eyes deepened. He looked steadily into Enid's suddenly blushing face. She scarcely realized that during three long years her heart had clung to the hope that one day she would stand face to face with the scapegrace captain of the British army and that honor and love would meet her glance.

"I have been an undentable failure," Blaker said. "With all that, I have kept you in my heart, Enid, though I have not been half worthy. The future—"

"Is a path of sunshine," Enid told him. "I am glad," she added shyly, "that I came over to sing to the soldiers."

LOVELY MR. HODGE

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

(Copyright, McClure Newspaper-Syndicate.)

The next day after Miss Lumpkin's Selected School for Girls opened for the fall term, Robina Judd, the newest girl of all, walked about the spacious grounds with her roommate.

"Let us go through this cunning game and see what is on the other side!" suggested Robina, when they had come to the end of the evergreen path.

Grace Barney glanced up at the forbidding stone wall and shook her sunny head.

"Out of bounds, Robina," she said regretfully. "Besides, it's a private property—a perfect ogre of an old man lives there all alone. I asked Miss Lumpkin about him and she sighed and called him 'poor, lonely Mr. Hodge—only, you see, Robina, he happens to be rich.'"

"Here comes Miss Gerald," said Robina. "Isn't she a dear?"

"My favorite teacher! She has only been here three days and yet I love her better than any of the others. Sweet and kind and lovely—she looks as though she might have suffered, Robina!"

The thought of lonely Mr. Hodge wandering about his perfectly kept grounds haunted the careless moments of Robina Judd. "Some day I shall go in," she threatened to her roommate.

"You will have to prove it by bringing me one of those weirdly colored Japanese chrysanthemums from his garden," Grace replied.

"Wait and see!" retorted Robina, and that very afternoon game opportunity.

Most of the girls had gone for a long walk in the woods, but Robina, who had slightly twisted her ankle in the gymnasium that morning preferred to hobble around the garden.

Finally she came to the door in the wall—the high wall beyond which lived lonely Mr. Hodge.

"The time and the place—and I hope the man!" giggled Robina, as she turned the knob of the little green door. It creaked dully, opened, and in the distance she could see the mellowed walls of a red brick house bathed in the afternoon sunshine.

A gardener was working somewhere—there was the clicking sound of a hoe against stones.

"It's jolly here," commented Robina, and she rounded a little summer house and came upon the gardener, who was vigorously stirring up the soil in the bed of gorgeous chrysanthemums.

He turned a pair of surprised blue eyes upon her—twinkling blue eyes, set in a sunburned face, close-shaven and square-jawed.

"Well!" he exclaimed.

"Well!" gasped Robina, for she had nothing else to say. Then, with sudden inspiration, she added, "The chrysanthemums—are lovely!"

"Thank so? Then you must have some," he decided promptly, and, taking a knife from his pocket, he proceeded to cut a huge bunch of white and yellow and crimson chrysanthemums.

"You—you wouldn't mind giving me just one of the variegated ones?" hesitated Robina.

"Sure!" he smiled down at her. "I hope Mr. Hodge doesn't mind my coming in here," went on Robina, with a glance at the house. "You see, I belong to the school next door, and we girls know about Mr. Hodge; and we have felt sorry about his being so lonely, and I said that I was coming in some day to see him, and Grace dared me to come. I'm afraid I must go now."

"So you are sorry for Mr. Hodge?" laughed the gardener. "Why?"

"Because he lives here alone—and because some of the girls say that he had been disappointed—oh, I should not talk to you so!" Robina suddenly remembered the proprieties. She thought the gardener's blue eyes clouded, but he was still smiling.

"Wouldn't it add to the romance of the occasion to discover that I am Mr. Hodge?" asked the gardener calmly.

"Oh! oh!" moaned Robina. "How the girls will laugh at me!"

"Don't you believe that!" he grinned cheerfully. "They'll be eaten up with envy at your romantic adventure."

"Robina!"

The clear sweet call came from the other side of the high wall.

"Who is that?" asked Mr. Hodge, looking very pale.

"It is Miss Gerald—our drawing teacher—she is looking for me—good-by—and thank you!"

Just as Robina reached the door it opened and Pauline Gerald stood there. Robina rushed past her into the school grounds, but Pauline paused within the grounds of Mr. Hodge, looking with glad, bewildered eyes at the man who stood there with outstretched hands.

"Pauline!" he was saying. "When I bought this old place I never dreamed that you—why, Pauline, darling, you would not look that way unless you loved me!"

"And when I peeked through the gate," said Robina to her school-mates, "she was in his arms—and—"

She paused dramatically. "And—" breathed her companions tensely.

"They were kissing each other—and so I guess it's all right!" ended Robina, who had brought this romance to pass.

INCREASE RANGE OF VISION

New Night Glasses Are Said to Be Four Times as Effective as the Old Ones.

Night telescopes four times as effective as those that have long been in use by marine officers have been perfected comparatively recently and are now in practical service. It hardly seems possible that a telescope could be of much use in bringing nearer or making more distinct a distant ship or building at night, but the modern night glasses do give an astonishing amount of assistance to the eye.

Under the old theory, any attempt to magnify a distant object very much—over three or four diameters, for instance—would be disastrous, because only so much light could come to the eye from the distant object; and spreading this scanty light over a wide space by much magnifying would simply result in blurring the object, making indistinct objects even less distinct.

The new glasses avoid this trouble by using the principle of adapting the pupil of the eye to the amount of light. Every one is familiar with the changing pupil of a cat's eye—a narrow slit by day and a big disk by night—opening up at night to admit all the light obtainable. The old night glasses focused the light to a point, and the light entered the eye of the observer practically at a point.

The new glasses focus the light into a pencil one-fifth of an inch in diameter, because it has been found that the pupil of the human eye will admit a pencil of dim light of that width at night. Consequently the eye can take better advantage of such light as there is, and the modern night telescopes can magnify to eight diameters safely. Tests have shown them to be four times as effective as the old night glasses.—Saturday Evening Post.

WICHITAN HAS THREE BROTHERS IN ITALIAN ARMY

News of Italy's entrance into the European war was of very personal interest to one Wichitan. A. G. Savelli, foreign sales manager for the Wichita Falls Motor Company, himself a retired officer of the Italian army, has three brothers in the Italian ranks at present and all will doubtless be in active service very shortly. Mr. Savelli himself was a lieutenant and his brothers are all officers being members of one of Italy's titled families.

Mr. Savelli has been in this country five or six years and does not expect to go back to take part in the present fighting. He has been in Wichita Falls about three years.

YOUR DOLLAR

Is just a dollar, a common American dollar that is a standard measure of valuation all over the world. All dollars are not equal to an American dollar. The American dollar is worth a hundred cents wherever the sun shines. An American dollar is good money anywhere. Our drug store service is as good as the dollar. A dollar's worth of it is worth a hundred cents in American money. We take off our hats to nobody on drug store service. Riker-Hegman with a hundred and ten stores can't deliver any more service for this dollar than we deliver every day in the year. We know that we must give you a hundred cents worth to get your dollar and that we must keep the service as if we keep getting the dollars.

BOTH ARE ALMA GLUCK

The Victor Record of Gluck's Voice Is Just As Truly Gluck As Gluck's Herself

You have only to hear her on the Victrola to realize that here is Alma Gluck. Her sweet sympathetic voice is there in all its simple beauty—as charming and life-like on the Victrola as though you were hearing this great artist on the concert or opera stage. The proof is in the hearing. This week will be Alma Gluck week in our Victrola department. Come in any hour of the day and our man in charge will take pleasure in playing for you any of the sixty-one Gluck records, or records of any other of the great artists.

FOR YOUR CONVENIENCE

We strive to make it convenient for you to do business with us. We have motor delivery. We come when you call. We work after hours. We do anything that is necessary for your convenience. We will not allow anybody to do better work for you or give you better service than we do. We know what service is. If we were cleaning our first suit or laying the tape the first time we could not say these things. But it is not our first by a good many thousand. There is no dirty thing left where the grease spot was when we do your cleaning. There is no loose leather flapping around in your suit when we lay the tape. We do things just one way. Our rules and regulations are told in just these three words—DO IT RIGHT. And last but not least we charge you a price now and for all time to come that is "RIGHT."

HOW ABOUT IT?

When a continued visit to our little cemetery reveals the fact that you have forgotten a loved one gone, and that your neglect warrants comment from friends. How about it?

When you say repeatedly to yourself, "I will beautify that plot at once and you don't." HOW ABOUT IT?

WHEN YOU GO with a friend to the last resting place do you falter and make excuses because of your negligence, what do you think they think?

There is only one way, and one time that is TODAY.
