

School board eyes $2.2 million bonds

By JANE P. MARSHALL
Pampa News Staff

The Pampa school board Monday evening digested details of a $2.2 million dollar bond issue which would close Houston Middle School and presumably lower the tax rate from the present $1.62 to $1.58.

Present school bonds which cost taxpayers 12 cents of the $1.62 rate this year, will be paid this summer. The tax rate would automatically shrink to $1.50.

The long range planning committee proposed that a 14-cent rate finance new bonds and that maintenance and operating rate be cut from $1.50 to $1.44.

Bonds, according to the committee report given by chairman Al Smith, would be spent mostly on repairs ranging from $44,000 to be spent at Travis Elementary to $803,000 for the high school.

The board will meet at 7 p.m. Monday at Carver Center, 321 W. Albert, to approve or reject a bond election. If approved, an August vote is likely and work would begin as soon as possible. Houston would not be closed until the 1978-79 school year.

The $2.2 million would finance repairs on eight campuses and regroup grades. Elementary schools would house grades K through 5, junior high school grades 6 to 8, high school grades 9 to 12. Presently grade 7 students attend Houston, grades 8 and 9 the junior high and the upper grades go to the high school.

According to the committee, new building would be minimal.

Repairs include masonry, roofs, windows and doors, flooring and finishes, ceilings, mechanical, electrical equipment, including media centers, and site work.

Smith estimated the savings in utility bills after the repairs would be $38,000 a year and the savings in maintenance and operating costs in closing one campus would be $80,000. He said this would save 6 cents on the tax rate.

To me there is no way we can get by without having a bond election and without having it pass if we decide to call one.

Smith told his fellow board members "The community must be well informed so a decision can be made on the best information we have."

Trustee Curt Beck suggested the board see if any of the $40 million recently allocated by the congress for public works could be captured for local building and repairs.

Smith commented that the process would take too long and Pampa probably could not secure any of the money. "We are fortunate or unfortunate in that we have a very high standard of living here."

"Something we don't need is more federal intervention," Dr. Bob Lyle said.

"We'll have to pay for it sometime and I'd alot rather do it locally," Paul Simmons added.

Taxes were changed from 40 to 60 per cent ratio of assessment at the rate of $1.50 for maintenance and operation last year to handle teacher pay raise and to repay the $350,000 loan used to balance the 1975-76 school year budget. Board members at that time indicated the taxes would be reduced after the loan was repaid but Smith said he didn't see how they could make a cut. "We need that money to patch roofs and make other repairs. We figure that emergency repairs would cost an estimated $800,000 without a bond issue."

In other action, the board approved a band trip to St. Louis and a choir trip to an international competition in Orlando, Fla. next year. Both trips, which will cost about $16,000 for the band and about $25,000 for the choir, will be paid for by the booster clubs.

Dr. Lyle, vice president who presided in the absence of Bill Arrington, presented certificates of recognition to retiring teachers Mary Dean Dozier, Rachel Jones, Otto Mangold, John Plaster and Bernice Ward. Elizabeth Hurley and Waletta Olds were not present.

"It's saddening to lose people with this many years of experience," Lyle said. Their cumulative teaching totalled 221 years.

Bids accepted by the board include:

1. $10,359.40 for paper and duplicating supplies.

2. $4,586.08 for metal trades equipment approved for reimbursement from the Texas Education Agency.

3. $1,868.08 for metal trades equipment purchased with local funds only (to be paid from county available funds).

4. $3,176.78 for magazine subscriptions for 1977-78.

5. Maintenance for typewriters and office machines costing up to $20 per machine.

6. $6,018.60 for tractor and mower (to be paid from county available funds).

7. $4,260 for band instruments which includes an electric piano for the stage band.

County available funds are earmarked for capital improvements only.

In other business board members gave radio broadcasting rights for 1977-78 to KGRO. The board alternates between the two local stations.

Tax and business office calendar was okayed and the second reading of Section B of the policy manual dealing with local school governance was accepted.

Bills were quickly approved. They included $234.56 for Plexiglass, $19.20 for table tennis bats, $340.40 for trash cans and ladders, $191.50 for pins for National Honor Society, $92 for dishwasher detergent, $3.89 for coffee for trustee election, $208.35 to Floyd Sackett for principals convention in Las Vegas, $10,517.10 for March gas bill, $246.74 for FHA meeting in Houston, and $637.36 for Bob Skaggs for travel in February.

Trustees present at the Carver Center meeting were Lyle, Smith, Beck, Simmons and Buddy Epperson. David Crossman and Arrington were absent.

The 4 p.m. gathering adjourned at close to 9:30 p.m.

Board meetings, with the exception of executive sessions reserved for discussion of litigation and personnel, are open to the public.

Hail? Yes

Seven-year-old Alex Hallerberg didn't say what he planned to do with all the hail stones he was raking up in his parents' front yard at 2128 Christine after Monday afternoon's heavy rainfall and hail storm which flooded many Pampa streets. Alex is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Hallerberg.

Carter promises steps as needed for recovery

LOS ANGELES (AP) —

President Carter today promised to battle successfully against high unemployment and high inflation, pledging to take whatever steps might be needed "if the recovery should falter during the years ahead."

Carter detailed his domestic policy goals in an address prepared for the annual convention of the United Auto Workers union, which has been critical of the President's recommended taxes-and-rebate plan to persuade Americans to buy energy-efficient automobiles.

"You and I have honest differences of opinion over some aspects of my proposals," he said, but added that these differences did not cause him to "hesitate to ask for your help."

Arguing that "more efficient automobiles with a clean exhaust" are inevitable, Carter noted imported vehicles in the January-March quarter claimed a larger share of the American market than ever before.

"I can think of no more disastrous assumption for the American automobile industry than that we cannot successfully compete with foreign companies that produce and sell such cars," he said.

Carter also restated for the first time in recent weeks, his commitment "to the phasing in of a workable national health insurance system." He said his objective is to "submit legislative proposals early next year."

In a lengthy recital, Carter tucked off six broad goals ranging from balancing the federal budget by 1981 to conducting "an open and efficient government."

Carter also told the conventioners:

"I am unalterably opposed to fighting inflation by economic and budgetary policies which keep unemployment high and factories idle. That approach is economically ineffective and morally bankrupt. If the recovery should falter during the years ahead, I will propose the economic and budgetary measures needed to get it going again."

The President, making only his second domestic speaking tour since taking office, flew to California to talk to the UAW, star in a live question-answer television broadcast and inspect drought areas.

Drilling effort starts

RANGER, W. Va. (AP) — A well-drilling team will send a stream of water and sand deep into the earth here today in an experiment designed ultimately to free a vast supply of natural gas that lies beneath five Appalachian states.

The experiment is being conducted jointly by Columbia Gas and the Federal Energy Research and Development Administration. If successful, the drillers say they will prove that a process called "massive hydraulic fracturing" is feasible for obtaining natural gas from Devonian Shale.

Energy experts estimate as much as 285 trillion cubic feet of natural gas — more than the nation's entire proven reserve — lies trapped in a shale formation beneath portions of West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and New York. The deposit cannot be tapped by conventional drilling methods and the known alternatives even if they would work, are too expensive, Columbia officials say.

As a result, they've decided to try hydraulic fracturing, a process by which fluid is pumped into wells and which for years has been used to get hard-to-reach gas from wells in tight limestone.

Columbia has been experimenting with this technique in Lincoln County since last summer but today's test will be the most massive to date.

Specifically, hydraulic fracturing involves pumping large quantities of foamy sand and water into the shale, extending the existing well and creating new fractures. The water then is pumped out but the sand remains, thus keeping the fractures open and hopefully allowing the gas to seep into the openings.

The researchers say they hope to get enough information from the Lincoln County project to determine whether the method can be used to produce natural gas on a commercial basis. They also say, however, that any gas thus produced will carry an additional expense because of the smaller flow rate and the increased production cost.

Twister takes property toll

A tornado which destroyed a school at Quail Monday afternoon moved northeastward into Wheeler County, destroying property near Shamrock and cutting a path one-quarter of a mile wide through the area.

George Hooten, chief of police in Shamrock, said the twister hit the United Carbon Plant six miles east of Shamrock and moved on to demolish a service station, two mobile homes and a farm home before it lifted back into the clouds.

The police chief said no damage estimates have been released by the carbon plant, but he added the main parts of the plant were not damaged.

Right north of the plant, Hooten said, "it demolished a service station and trailer house and damaged a second trailer."

The service station was located at the Carbon Black Road and Interstate-40.

Hooten said there were no tornado-related injuries reported near Shamrock.

The service station crew saw the twister coming and they were able to get in a car and drive out of the tornado's path. They watched the station blow away," Hooten said.

Still moving to the northeast, the storm hit and destroyed a farm home belonging to Delmer Barefoot. There, according to Hooten, the cloud traveled into Oklahoma, passing to the southeast of Sweetwater.

"There were several sightings of the tornado in Oklahoma," Hooten said.

In Quail, a small community 11 miles west of Wellington, the storm left only the walls of the main school building upright. Moving away from the school, the funnel cloud took the roof off a home economics cottage and damaged the school superintendent's home.

The school, described as a total loss, was valued at $460,000. Classes had been dismissed before the storm hit and seven students and a teacher who had remained after school took shelter in the building's basement. There were no injuries.

Don King, Wheeler County Extension agent, said this morning he has not received any crop damage reports from farmers.

"I've just talked to a few (farmers)," King said, "but none reported any damage. I'm sure with the wind we got there's probably some wheat down in the fields."

"We did have some hail damage, all right," said Mrs. Charles Gatlin. Her husband farms 25 miles east of Pampa. "Some of the skylights on our buildings were broken. The hail wasn't heavy, but there were some big hail stones. We got 1.2 inches of rain in just nothing flat. It fell too hard and too fast. We didn't have any real crop damage to speak of."

Henry Urbanzyk, 10 miles southwest of Pampa, reported "about 10-15 per cent hail damage" and heavy rains.

"There's plenty of water everywhere," he said.

Rainfall in Pampa Monday was 2.61 inches according to Darrel Sehorn, U.S. weather observer here. The total moisture for May is now 3.15 inches and the total to date for the year is 9.15 inches. Normal for the year to date is 5.49 inches.

Sehorn said the main belt of the storm was centered in an area between Interstate-40 and U.S. 60 to the east of Amarillo.

Other area rainfall amounts included 2.08 inches at Canadian, 2.45 inches at Miami, 2.07 inches at Panhandle, 1.40 inches at Shamrock, 1.94 inches in Wheeler and .84 inch at Borger.

"This was really more of a patcher to report what we had seen and we were still on the air talking to him when a Tennessee State Highway Patrolman called in from Collierville to report he had seen it," Jeter said.

The two officers said a team of officers from the North Precinct then broke into the radio conversation to ask if it was triangular in shape.

"Up to that time we had said nothing about it being triangular in shape," Jeter said. "So we knew they had seen the same thing we did. They said they saw it over North Memphis about 11 p.m."

US, Soviets sign space pact

HOUSTON (AP) — The United States and the Soviet Union have signed an agreement that could lead to the first international space station, a Johnson Space Center spokesman says.

Under terms of the agreement, announced Monday, scientists and engineers will form three groups that will study ways to increase cooperation in space exploration between the two countries.

One group would study the feasibility of the international space station, another would study how best to use the space shuttle's cargo space and a third group would study science and applications.

Work on the program is expected to begin in 30 days, the official said.

The senior distributive education student received recognition as Girl Student of the Year in distributive education in Texas and she was named the outstanding distributive education student at Pampa High School. Texas-style tax spending

A political battle brewing in Texas throws a revealing light on why taxes, so easily imposed and raised, are so difficult to reduce or remove. Texas, like other states, has a money problem.

But, unlike other states whose authorities are forever claiming that there are not enough "public funds," the bone of contention in the Lone Star State is too much money. $3 billion too much, to be specific.

Of the $3 billion windfall, $1 billion is already on hand in the form of a tax-generated surplus. Another $2 billion in unexpected revenue over the next two years accounts for the remainder of the tax bonanza which has Texas legislators squabbling over how it should be spent or otherwise disposed of.

Considering the fact that there is a surplus and that the funds were taken from their rightful owners in the first place plus the further fact that Texas taxpayers, like those elsewhere, are complaining of the tax burden, one would think that the problem might be easily solved. Give the surplus back to its rightful owners, as nearly as possible in the form of a tax cut.

This is the approach suggested by Joe Wyatt.

chairman of the Texas House Ways and Means Committee, a conservative. Moreover, Wyatt pointed out: "The Texas level of spending has outgrown its tax base. We have more state employees per capita than New York, California, Michigan, or any of the top ten industrial states. I think we ought to reduce taxes because it is the most effective way to hold down spending."

But, "no," objected John Bryant, leader of the House liberals. The money ought to be spent on teacher pay raises and expansion of welfare benefits.

And so it goes, in Texas, as elsewhere.

Even when, as is so rarely the case, some members of the political fraternity see the rightness and logic of giving the taxpayers a break, they run into a firestorm of protest. There is something about money, once taken from those to whom it belongs and placed in the "public domain," that seems to demand that it be spent — on something.

The only way out of that impasse would appear to be some way of insuring that the non-owning spenders don't get their sticky fingers on it to begin with. We are open to suggestions.

A society of whining victims

By BUTLER D. SHAFFER

We live in an age of "universal victimization." Everyone is a "victim" of everything and everyone else... or so, at any rate, the formulators of this point of view would have us believe. It has always been fashionable to regard other people as the cause of our own discontent, but it has taken the current generation to institutionalize the attitude.

The "in" thing, these days, is to identify oneself with either the "disaster lobby" or the "injustice lobby." The first group consists of those persons and organizations who tell us that we are living on the edge of catastrophe, and that we face utter ruin unless we turn more of our personal decision-making over to them. These are the peddlers of the "energy crisis," the "environmental crisis," the "urban crisis," and many other proclaimed "crises" there's even the "heartbreak of post-racism."

The second group, the "injustice lobby," is comprised of those persons who would have us believe that they have been treated unfairly, not by anyone in particular, but by everyone (or everything) in general. These are the people who regard the failure of others to satisfy their every whim as evidence of "discrimination" and "exploitation." The civil rights, ethnic-minority, and "women's liberation" groups have become increasingly expressive of this attitude. "How can I ever hope to achieve success when my great-great-grandfather was a plantation slave?" is the argument employed to substantiate one's claim to perpetual compensation for perpetual injustices.

I have become convinced, in recent years, that there are no objective "problems" in the world; there are only conditions to which we have chosen to react. The conditions may be real (or, they may simply be imagined), but it is only when we choose to react to those conditions that we create our own problems.

One "condition" that may exist is that someone else is burglarizing our home. A rational response on our part might include trying to capture the burglar, chasing him away, or calling the police. We attempt, in other words, to change a real condition that threatens a property interest of ours.

What the members of the "injustice lobby" have been doing, however, is reacting against conditions that are either the products of their own imaginations, or provide no actual threat to an identifiable personal or property interest of theirs. If other people are not providing them with the benefits to which they believe they are "entitled," they perceive such over-sight as a "threat" and an "injustice." Mrs. Martin Luther King expressed this attitude recently when she suggested that "injustice" still abounds, citing the fact that there were wage differentials between one section of the country and another for the same type of job.

The point is this: a person does not, in fact, have to be victimized in order to feel victimized. One of the by-products of this age of leisure is that people have more time to sit around and dream up more and more examples of how they are being threatened, victimized, or treated in an unjust manner by other people. I can, if I choose to do so, regard another person's choice of words during a conversation as being expressive of some hidden animosity toward me. I can also choose to treat the failure of other people to conform to my expectations as evidence of a pervasive anti-Shaffer bigotry in our society. My imagination can become — if I choose to let it — a cornucopia pouring forth an endless harvest of perceived "injustices."

I suggest that you keep that face in mind in the event I should ever start a whining indictment that offers no bill of particulars, but relies solely on the intensity of my emotional appeals as a substitute for substance.

Undiplomatic choices

By Bernard J. Cutler

When Jimmy Carter formally started his race for the White House on Dec. 12, 1974, he declared loftily that "all federal judges, diplomats and other major officials should be selected on a basis of strict merit."

During the campaign he accused Republicans of using high government posts "as dumping grounds for unsuccessful candidates." And he claimed to have been shocked when traveling abroad to find U.S. ambassadors who were "fat, bloated contributors to Richard Nixon who couldn't even speak the language of the country they were in."

Now Carter has unveiled his first clutch of diplomatic appointments and, goodness gracious, they don't seem to have been made on the basis of strict merit and language proficiency.

For example, former Sen. Gale McGee, an amiable old pol rejected by Wyoming voters last fall, is Carter's choice as ambassador to the Organization of American States. His entire Spanish vocabulary consists of the word "si," which makes it fortunate he's not a girl.

Then there's Wisconsin Gov. Patrick J. Lucey, who campaigned mightily for Carter but whose own re-election chances are dubious. He's to be Ambassador to Mexico, though he knows even less Spanish than McGee. Dumping grounds, anyone?

As he did in choosing his cabinet and White House staff, Carter reached into Atlanta's power structure for a couple of diplomatic plums. Anne Cox Chambers, whose two Atlanta newspapers strongly supported Carter, gets the U.S. embassy in Belgium and Philip H. Alston Jr., an Atlanta lawyer, will be ambassador to Australia.

Now nobody would call Mrs. Chambers, heiress to the Cox publishing and broadcasting fortune, fat or bloated but she is very much of a campaign contributor. She and her family gave Carter $26,500 for his 1970 governor's race, while lawyer Alston and his wife kicked in $7,276.

To be fair, not all of Carter's diplomatic choices to date come from the unemployed politician and fat-cat categories he used to score on the hustings. A small number of career diplomats have been nominated, as have some college presidents and academics who may even know something about the countries to which they are going.

Nevertheless, Carter's record so far of using embassies as political patronage is on a par with those of the Ford, Nixon and earlier administrations.

What is distressing is the gap between what Carter said and what he is doing. He repeatedly promised to appoint only the best qualified people, and clearly he is engaging in politics as usual. This can be damaging to trust in government at a time it is much needed.

Bureaucracy pruning?

By Richard Starnes

There is no doubt that President Carter's repeated campaign promises to reduce and reshape "the horrible, bloated bureaucracy" of government struck a responsive chord in a public weary of supporting such a burden.

True to his promises, the President has now obtained legislation enabling him to carry out what he himself conceded was his most consistent campaign theme. The reorganization bill gives him broad powers to reform the federal bureaucracy — a hodgepodge of some 1,900 agencies employing more than two million civilians.

It remains now to see how well and faithfully the new administration delivers on its promise. There is nothing easy about bringing under control a huge and entrenched bureaucracy.

Indeed, based on administration performance to date one must counsel a healthy skepticism. Campaigner Carter promised, for example, that President Carter would cut the White House staff by 30 per cent. Instead the White House staff has grown by 30 per cent since he took office.

In fairness, there are certain structural impediments that make it very difficult to end waste and promote efficiency in government. The bureaucratic whiff of the fiefdom knows wiles that would make Svengali himself writhe in envy.

Moreover, many offices that should be dismantled are protected by specific acts of Congress. For example, there are 1,175 advisory boards and committees that cling to the government like limpets, and Carter quite properly ordered them weeded out.

To his dismay, however, he discovered that of this number only 16 could be dissolved simply by presidential edict. The rest, established by Congress, will endure until and unless Congress goes through the tedious business of snuffing them out one by one.

We have doubts, as we say, but nothing would please us more than to see the White House deliver on the statement it uttered when the reorganization bill was signed: "The average citizen... can anticipate that the efficiency and quality of government service will be improved."

May the pruning shears remain sharp.

A reader's right

And readers write

Dear Editor
Enclosed is a letter I have written to our Congressional representatives in Washington, D.C.

I am one of the 30 million middle income taxpayers in this country who were once called the silent majority. I am not a radical anything, and I fully accept the fact that it is my duty to pay part of my salary to the various governments so they can carry out their function in the society I live in. I am properly grateful for all the things we have now which our parents didn't have. Typically, I accept much which I disagree with because it is unavoidable or necessary to correct some flaw in our society.

There is something going on now, however, which is neither unavoidable nor necessary, and, in fact, is beginning to appear as a conspiracy by government to exploit the taxpayers I am talking about the inflation-based tax increases that are steadily taking higher percentages of our incomes into the tax payments. In terms of actual buying power, inflation is being used to shift buying power from the taxpayers to the Federal Government. One cannot help but wonder if this may be the reason behind government induced inflation.

Using my own specific case to illustrate, I have just received a 10 per cent pay increase. My taxes increased 20 per cent. It has been 15 months since my last raise so that inflation has completely used up the increase I received. Therefore, my before tax buying power did not change. In terms of dollars I pay the government, 10 per cent inflation subtracted from the 20 per cent increase leaves them an increase of 10 per cent in buying power. To do this, they caused my after tax buying power to go down by 15 per cent. No matter how you cut it, this is simply an unlegislated tax increase.

The principles and arithmetic behind this are simple. Therefore, I have no doubt that every single Senator and Representative in Congress knows about it. Why then don't they stop it?

Congress and the Administration are terribly interested in protecting us from all kinds of evils. The resulting actions are a constant source of amazement. Yet, when it comes to something so simple, but unbelievably large, they pretend to be totally unaware of it. Amazing!

As your constituent, I insist that you do something about this. Please don't use the excuse that there is not time for complicated tax reform. A simple shift of the tax tables each year to compensate for inflation would do it. Besides, all this talk of complex tax reform fools no one. We know who always has and always will pay the taxes. This can only be rearranged slightly here and there but cannot be changed. If you really want to pass a simplified and constructive tax law, simply make every income producer pay 10 per cent of their income in taxes. No deductions.

This is a person with seven personal deductions who is buying a home that is suggesting them. Surprised?

Sincerely,
Louis Jones

United States law still allows a head of a household to make up to 200 gallons of wine a year for personal use. One man who failed to qualify for a permit because he was a bachelor, tried a few years ago to have his city apartment certified as a bonded winery. On his application, under "Crushing and Pressing Equipment," he listed "fingers 10 and hands 2." Treasury agents inspected his facilities — a closet — and ruled against him.

Mystery shrouds Graiver death

By NEA London Economist News Service

BUENOS AIRES — (LENS) — It is the latest spectacular from the country that brought you Peron, Evita and Isabelita. It's called the David Graiver show and even Argentina's president, Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, a shy, engaging man who is trying to transform Argentina from a huge theatre of the absurd, had to admit that it is "sensational, spectacular." He even got emotional, which is unusual for him.

Videla did not reveal very much, although he confirmed the main burden of the press stories, which is that David Graiver, a young financier from provincial La Plata, hit on the idea of building a substantial family business into a vast international financial empire with terrorist blood money.

But everything about the affair seems to be larger than life — and nothing that has been published has been attributed to anyone apart from vague "armed force sources."

Graiver is said to have pumped millions of dollars from Montonero guerrilla kidnappings and robberies into his company. He thus extended his empire from sleepy La Plata to New York (which became his headquarters), Brussels, Switzerland and Israel.

But, despite all the money that Graiver is supposed to have had at his command, his group collapsed like a house of cards within a few weeks of his death, at the age of 35, when a chartered Falcon jet crashed into the side of a mountain in Chilpancingo, Mexico, in August, 1976. Some people say that Graiver arranged the crash in order to vanish. The two pilots who were killed were clearly identified and the only doubt about whether the third body was Graiver's rests on his wife's insistence on immediate cremation.

Others say that he was killed and that the cause of the crash was a bomb placed by the Montoneros, angry at him because he had lost their money through failed investments.

All that is known for certain are the names of the score of so people who have been arrested by the army in connection with the affair. They are being tried by military courts and the proceedings are secret. The whole investigation has been getting out of hand, with people being kidnapped so that they could be questioned — presumably with the idea that they would reveal more as "disappeared" persons than as legal detainees.

The investigation began as a healthy attempt to root out corruption in Argentina, which does appear to be linked, Mafia-like, with subversion, and which appeared to involve many prominent Argentines.

Some of them are under arrest. Others have fled the country. But there is now a strong suspicion that the affair is being used by headline right-wingers to get at their political enemies and, if possible, oust President Videla.

The candidate of the toughies is Gen. Iberico Saint Jean, the governor of the province of Buenos Aires, whose police stumbled on the Graiver-Montonero link.

Hard is pushing Gen. Videla. But the president clearly realizes that an all-enveloping scandal can be used not only to wipe out subversives but also to enable the hard right to climb to power.

This year you are likely to be able to have or do things you weren't able to before — perhaps through an extra source of income.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your prospects look very encouraging today. If there's anything you can do to strengthen your long-range security, get on it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Luck tends to favor you today, particularly where you can exercise personal control. Be sure you keep your firm hand on the tiller.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you're involved in something big, it might be wise to keep it to yourself today, even though you're anxious to share your good fortune.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) This is a fine day to deal with groups or corporations. Don't let their reputations or size intimidate you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You have more luck today dealing with the top brass, rather than with underlings. These are the people you want to get on an eyeball level with.

Lithograph's price up tenfold in a year

Scholder's art leads him to heaven

By Norman Nadel

NEW YORK — (NEA) — Heaven was his destination when American painter Fritz Scholder, 39, flew back to Paris last fall. He knew just where to find it.

Climbing to the third floor, he thought about the artists who had ascended those same worn steps before him: Utrillo, Vlaminck, Leger, Miro, Cocteau, Giacometti, Braque, Matisse, Picasso, Villon, Chagall, Ernst, Bonnard, Marini, Dali.

Among artists past and present in the City of Lights, "Heaven" is the third floor of Moulot Imprimeurs, a lithography atelier where, since 1852, some of the finest and most valuable prints in existence have come off the scrupulously prepared stones.

It was there, last October, that Scholder executed his "Indian in Paris," a five-color lithograph, 22-by-30 inches on Arches paper, in a limited edition of 100, plus a few proofs, to be sold at $500 each. Only the first 50 went at the base price within two days, from Tally Richards' small but significant Gallery of Contemporary Art in Taos, N.M.

A few weeks ago in New York, the 100th print brought $1,000. And today, if you could find an owner willing to sell, you'd pay $5,000.

"I had been to Paris a number of times," relates the Minnesota-born artist, who now lives and works in Scottsdale, Arizona, "but this time I wanted to do some work at Moulot because I'd known about it for a long time. It was an excellent experience.

"I wanted to do an Indian, but it also had to relate to where I was. Why not do an Indian in Paris?"

"At first it might seem surreal," continues the artist whose own heritage is one-quarter Luiseno — one of the California Mission Indian tribes, "but actually it has historical background. Buffalo Bill came there twice at the turn of the century with Plains Indians in full regalia.

"Putting down two visual cliches is the type of paradox that does amuse me — the Indian large in the foreground and the Eiffel Tower against the sky in the distance. It was fall at the time, the leaves were falling, and I used colors I'd never painted before — russet (the leaves) for the ground and a gray sky."

Scholder's tall Indian, thick in the middle, looks out with an expression not baleful, but almost daring you to question his right to be there. He isn't saying anything, yet you find yourself not only watching him, but listening as well.

Nevertheless, Scholder denies making a statement, in this, or any other painting he's done, Indian or other subject.

"Because the Indian is such a loaded subject, especially in the United States, you get a variety of reactions to a picture such as this, and I'm pleased to hear all of it. However, I use the subject to transcend whatever it might stand for. I use it as a vehicle, and the Indian is a great vehicle for color image.

"Paintings do have visual statements; if they didn't there would be no reason for doing them. So there's the paradox: I will deny making a statement, but it is there, and depending on the viewer's frame of reference, he can go into it all the way. I only paint the picture."

Scholder describes himself as a romantic realist.

"Paradox is one of my favorite concepts, because once you make a statement, you have to recognize the opposite. I'm not in any way a traditional person — for example, an Indian person. I have a very non-Indian background — public schools, universities, abstract expressionism and study with a pop artist. I never associated with Indian people, never thought of myself as an Indian.

"I did join the faculty at the National Indian Arts School at Santa Fe, and became proud of my small amount of Indian heritage. One must find out who one is. But I can't deny the rest of my background — I'm German, French, English. Since I also paint Indians, though I've done many other subjects, there is this confusion that I must be an Indian artist, which I am not."

Scholder's list of shows and other recognitions is impressive, especially for a relatively young artist. For recent examples, last year he was asked to show his lithographs at the 10th International Biennial Exhibition of Prints in Tokyo and Kyoto. A TV documentary on him won the Golden Globe Award at the Chicago International Film Festival, and the book, "Fritz Scholder Lithographs," won a bronze medal at the Leipzig International Book Fair. This summer a major survey of 10 years of his Indian series will be held in Santa Fe, at the Wheelwright Museum.

"Indian in Paris" also is available as a poster, taken from the lithograph. At a fraction of the limited edition lithograph cost, it's going to be snapped up, fast.

SCHOLDER'S tall Indian, thick in the middle, looks out with an expression not baleful, but almost daring you to question his right to be there. You find yourself not only watching him, but listening as well.

SCHOLDER: "Paintings do have visual statements... I will deny making them, but they are there."

Dream-like sandcastle was 12 miles long

HERMOSA BEACH, Calif. — Ashes to ashes, dust to dust, sand to sand. Thousands of dreamers helped Todd Vander Pluym build his 12-mile-long sandcastle, but hours later the tide turned his Camelot-on-the-sand into a happy memory.

Vander Pluym's chain of medieval castles, pyramids, and dragons was begun Sunday morning and completed during the afternoon. It ran from Redondo Beach to Marina del Rey along the southern California coast.

"It stretched as far as the eye could see," said Lifeguard Lt. Wally Millican. "It's kind of neat all the people got together to do it."

He estimated 20,000 people got involved in the castle in some way, either examining it or patting on a few mounds of sand.

"It's the only thing you can see in its beginning, middle and end all in one day," Vander Pluym, 36, said, of his sandcastle-building hobby. "And you don't have to worry about cleaning up when you're done."

Friends told Vander Pluym, a

Manhattan Beach architectural planner who has won prizes building sandcastles, that this castle just couldn't be done. But he said, during the weeks spent planning the project, "If anything is going to happen, you have to believe."

So when the day came, thousands turned out to help him realize his dream. On some sections, many several feet tall, entire neighborhoods of beach area residents joined in the building.

"There was a lot of local pride," said Lt. Millican. "Everybody got together and had a good time."

Vander Pluym said he got hooked on the hobby by winning a sandcastle-building contest in 1965. Since then he has entered about 80 such contests. Last year he won five grand sweepstakes for castle-building.

Vander Pluym hopes to enter the latest achievement in the Guinness Book of World Records, since the longest castle to date was only 326 feet, he said.

The project took about 4½ hours to complete. Trophies were awarded to artistic groups and builders whose sections showed the greatest imagination.

PO to quit Saturdays

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service said today it expects to increase postage rates and eliminate Saturday mail deliveries by early next year.

Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar said the first-class rate probably will be increased from 13 cents per letter to either 15 or 16 cents with corresponding increases in other classes.

If deliveries are reduced from six to five days per week, thereby reducing delivery costs, the new first-class rate would be 15 cents instead of 16 cents, Bailar told a Senate Governmental Operations subcommittee.

Bailar said the elimination of Saturday mail deliveries could become effective early in 1978.

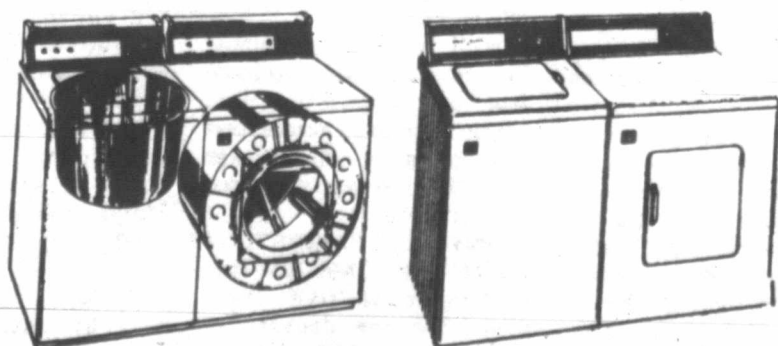

He noted there are numerous procedures that must be carried out before the proposed changes can be put into effect. The Postal Service board of governors first would have to give its approval, which probably will happen within 60 days, Bailar said.

Then the Postal Rate Commission would have 60 days to hold hearings and issue an advisory opinion.

Study says energy need 'urgent'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Worldwide shortages of oil could begin to cripple the industrialized world by 1981 unless there are urgent moves toward conservation, an international study group says.

In a study of global energy prospects up to the beginning of the next century, the panel said conservation efforts and a move by Middle East oil producers to increase production could stave off the shortages until as late as 2010.

But the group said worldwide shortages could strike by 1981, will most likely strike between 1985 and 1995 and are a virtual certainty around the turn of the century.

The study was prepared by the Workshop on Alternative Energy Strategies — 35 representatives of governments, universities and energy-related industries in 15 industrialized nations.

Organized in 1974 by Carroll L. Wilson, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the panel studied only the non-Communist world and offered a variety of possible "scenarios" for the future, rather than a definite prediction or policy recommendations.

Its conclusions generally parallel those of President Carter, even to the urging of a warlike urgency to deal with the problem.

The panel said its findings indicate world oil production capacity will level off and become unable to fill potential demand unless strong action is taken quickly to reduce that demand.

Even then, the report says, there will be a growing gap that can be satisfied only by switching from oil and natural gas to more plentiful energy sources such as coal and nuclear power.

Failure to begin the transition quickly will lead industrial nations into the trap of sudden, large energy shortages that would curtail production of goods and services and cause increased inflation and unemployment.

Tax bill awaits signing

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tax bill that began as the centerpiece of President Carter's economic stimulus program is returning to the White House for final consideration. The President's signature would mean a new permanent tax cut for 46 million couples or individuals.

Those who get the tax cuts should see the changes in paychecks received after June 1. Congress completed action on the bill Monday. The Senate passed it by voice vote without objection following a 383-2 vote in the House.

Although the bill contains business tax breaks that the Carter administration says are not needed, congressional leaders say they have no doubt that the President will sign it.

The major new tax cut in the bill would benefit only the 69 per cent of taxpayers who do not itemize deductions. By increasing the standard deduction, the legislation would cut taxes by $111 a year for a typical four-member family earning $15,000 a year.

A single person earning $10,000 would get a $110 tax cut. But two million single persons earning more than $13,750 likely would find their taxes increased by about $1 a week.

In all, American individuals and businesses would pay $34.1 billion less in taxes over the next 28 months.

In addition to raising the standard deduction to $3,200 for couples filing a joint return and $2,200 for single persons, the bill would greatly simplify tax returns for 95 per cent of the individual filers. In most cases, a taxpayer could figure his taxes simply by looking at a tax table and without computing any percentages or using multiplication.

The Internal Revenue Service says the more-generous standard deduction will make it more beneficial to 6.7 million couples or individuals to stop itemizing deductions. The changes will eliminate tax liability above that withheld for 3.3 million returns.

One section of the bill affects almost every taxpayer. It extends for one year, through Dec. 31, 1978, the general $35-per-person tax credit (or 2 per cent of the first $9,000 of taxable income); continues the special credit of up to $400 a year for poor working families, and lowers tax rates for corporations.

Also included are special one-time tax breaks for sick-pay recipients, elderly persons and Americans who worked abroad in 1976. These temporary changes are designed to delay for one year the effective date of some parts of the big tax law package passed last year.

Missing is the major element contained in the bill when it was proposed by Carter in an effort to spur the sluggish economy. Carter had wanted $50 rebate checks mailed to about 200 million Americans in an effort to boost consumer spending and the economy.

Opposition to that plan was quick in coming. Republicans wanted a big permanent tax cut instead. Democrats wondered about the effectiveness of the rebate idea. In the end, it was Carter himself who junked the plan, announcing last month that the economy had improved to the extent that no further tax stimulus was needed.

Thirteen others were hired. They are: Sherry Smith, JHS math; Rochelle Lacy, half-time drama; Reba Wilson, HS math; Austin Ruddick, CVAE; Jill O'Connor, sixth; Judith Lisman, JHS art; Cynthia Cambern, JHS Spanish; Kathy Flume, Mann fifth grade; Shirley Moore, Wilson kindergarten; Dianne Say, Austin kindergarten; Victoria Velez, Baker kindergarten; Patrick T. Homer, physics and computer science; and Shannon Hood, high school.

Other resignations include Teresa Cirone, junior high art; Bill Surface, assistant band director; Pat Surface, Austin music; and Linda McPherson, Lamar first grade.

Following a lengthy executive session which ended at close to 9:30 p.m. Monday, the Pampa Independent School District board of trustees hired 15 teachers, including James Duggan as assistant band director.

Duggan, a former Panpan who played with the Pride of Pampa, is a graduate of West Texas State University.

Resignations were accepted from Floyd Sackett, who is leaving as principal of Baker

Nine of the original ten subjects were indicted by a Gray County grand jury Friday, with one given a no-bill ruling.

Police department officials said today only three arrest warrants remain.

When the drug raid began, there were 25 arrest warrants, but several of the subjects were wanted for multiple offenses. One of those arrested was served with five warrants.

Advice

Dear Abby
By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am an older woman living alone in a small apartment. Sometimes a neighbor or a not-too-close friend will stop by to visit, which I appreciate. I always offer her a cup of tea. If she accepts, I turn on the TV in the living room so she can watch it while I go into the kitchen to prepare the tea.

Does she stay put in the living room and watch TV? No. She follows me into my kitchen and stands over me. I have to ask her to please move so I can open the door of the cabinet.

Abby, when I get unexpected company, there may be a few dirty dishes in my sink and the place isn't as tidy as it could be. This is very embarrassing and nerve-wracking.

Will you tell your readers to please stay out of people's kitchens unless they're invited?

WANTS TO BE ALONE

DEAR WANTS: I have the perfect solution for you. Clip this poem and tape it to the door of your kitchen:

STAY OUT OF MY KITCHEN

By Susan Sawyer

Please stay away from my kitchen
From my dishwashing, cooking and such;
You were kind to have offered to pitch in
But thanks, no, thank you so much!

Please don't think me ungracious
When I ask that you leave me alone;
For my kitchen's not any too spacious
And my routine is strictly my own.

Tell you what: You stay out of my kitchen
With its sodden, hot, lackluster lures—
When you're here, stay out of my kitchen
And I promise to stay out of yours!

DEAR ABBY: Will you join me in nominating for "Boob of the Year" those perfectly healthy, active (and usually young) individuals who park their cars in spaces clearly marked "FOR THE HANDICAPPED"?

ANAHEIM

DEAR ANAHEIM: A "boob" is one who makes a stupid mistake. An able-bodied person who would deliberately deprive a physically handicapped person of a more convenient parking place is worse than a boob. He's an inconsiderate, selfish hog. (P.S. He's also "handicapped"; he has a character deficiency.)

DEAR ABBY: I had a speaking acquaintance with an attractive but shy man for two years. He is 32 and I am 31. He has never asked me out, but whenever we met at a church doings or on the street, he seemed glad to see me.

About a year ago I got my nerve up and called him on the telephone just to talk. I couldn't get him to say much. About a month later I heard that he was joining the religious life. My heart broke.

After 10 months I heard that he was back home and had to give up the religious life because of illness. I wrote him a letter, welcoming him home, and invited him to a small party. He wrote back and declined.

I want so much to know him better. How long should I wait before I start in again? I'd give anything to get him interested in me.

INTERESTED IN HIM

DEAR INTERESTED: Give up. It takes two to tango, and apparently this man doesn't care to dance. And if he should change his mind, he'll probably want to pick his own partner.

Ask Dr. Lamb

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — For the past six or eight months, after eating a substantial meal I have been bothered with rather sharp pains in my chest, but only if I exercise too much. Even walking (unless real slow) causes the pain. By restraining all activity the pain subsides in 10 or 15 minutes. The symptoms appear about an hour after eating.

When my stomach is empty I never have this pain but I get tired much quicker than formerly. Can you tell me why I have this pain and what remedy could cure it?

I am 78 years old, 5 feet 7 and weigh 165 pounds. During my working years my weight usually averaged about 180. For five or six years I have been taking medicine for high blood pressure. For the last several years, though, my pressure is only 140 or 150 over 50 or 60. I have nitroglycerin pills but have never taken any because I just relax and am soon OK again. Up to now I have never been a patient in any hospital nor have I ever had an operation.

DEAR READER — You probably have angina pectoris, chest pain from your heart. With your past history of high blood pressure and your age it is logical to assume that you have fatty-cholesterol deposits in the arteries to your heart, limiting the blood flow to your heart muscle. Apparently your doctors thought you had this before or they would not have given you nitroglycerin tablets.

Chest pain with exertion is one sign of heart disease. When that is the cause the pain usually goes away with rest. In the days when downtown shopping was still the mode of life, people with this problem would often stop in front of a store window and gaze at the merchandise until the pain went away.

It takes work to digest a meal. The increased work of digestion makes it easier to bring on heart pain with exertion. This applies only to people with heart disease, not normal people. In such patients, not healthy people, it is wise to avoid exertion for some time after the meal is over. To give you more information on heart pain I am sending you The Health Letter 2-10, Heart Attack, Myocardial Infarction, Angina Pectoris. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it.

Some foods seem to increase the tendency of the blood to clot or sludge and this may make matters worse. These are chiefly the fatty foods. You can check this and see if you are more likely to have this effect after a meal that contains more fat.

One of the most helpful things you can do for yourself is to lose weight. Since you are not as active now as you once were it is likely that you have had a change in body composition — to more fat and less muscle. The thinner you are, the shorter of starvation or malnutrition, the less load you will have on your heart and the better you will do. You should also be on a diet restricting fat, particularly saturated fat, and cholesterol. Smaller more frequent meals may work better for you too but you will need to be thin.

(Because of the volume of mail Dr. Lamb cannot answer your letters personally but he will answer representative letters of general interest in his column. Write to him in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.)

Polly's Pointers

By Polly Cramer

DEAR POLLY — I wonder if you or any of the readers have tried using any kind of hair spray on their ARTIFICIAL plants to erase the dust and make them shiny again. I have and it really works. I also applied this to my fireplace that is built of old red bricks. They do not have to be painted or varnished as the hair spray really does the trick. — LINDA

DEAR POLLY — I want to tell those who bake that putting water in a measuring cup before putting in peanut butter, shortening, etc. will make the contents slide right out with no mess. — LISA

DEAR POLLY — I thought other readers might like to know that a bag taped to the side of the sewing machine is great for catching thread and scraps that are discarded as one sews. Also, another good hint is to use oven cleaner on stainless steel pots and pans. Remove the handles for best results. — ANGIE Plants in the Home...

Give house plants a vacation

ELVIN McDONALD

I have not only been on a repotting binge this spring, but I am also going to put as many of my house plants outdoors for the summer as possible. Since I live in a Manhattan high-rise apartment, this means that for the next few weekends my family and I will be riding to the country looking like a greenhouse on wheels.

The reason I am going to give my plants a vacation outdoors is that most of them benefit enormously from exposure to fresh air, plenty of light and warm rains.

It's generally safe to put house plants outdoors as soon as there is no danger of frost. If you don't know the average date of frost-free weather in your area, ask a neighbor who gardens or someone who works in a plant shop or garden center. In northwestern Connecticut where I do my outdoor gardening, we consider Memorial Day as the all-clear date for planting all the warm-weather things, not just house plants, but flowers such as petunias and zinnias, and vegetables such as tomatoes, sweet peppers, eggplant and squash.

If the season seems settled a week or two before May 30th, I may risk putting out things like camellia, English ivy and star-of-Bethlehem campanulas that can survive chilling. A few days later, providing a warming trend holds, I go ahead and put out geraniums, impatiens, fuchsias and semperflorens begonias. But where real tropicals are concerned — orchids, bromeliads, lipstick vine, philodendron and caladium, for example — I wait until nighttime temperatures seldom fall below 60°F.

Other than frost, the chief danger in putting house plants outdoors is that they will be over-exposed to hot sun and strong winds, especially during the first week or two. Even plants that have been growing indoors in full sun, such as desert cacti, jade plant and geraniums, will burn if they are put directly outdoors in a place where the sun shines on them all day. You can avoid this by first putting them on a porch or under shade trees for a few days until they are conditioned to the open air and then moving to more sun.

The only plants I wouldn't put outdoors are miniatures like Sinningia pusilla and Begonia prismatocarpa. I enjoy having African violets and gloxinias on the porch where we eat most of our meals on summer weekends, but I find they fare poorly when placed where strong winds and rains strike the fuzzy, brittle leaves and fragile flowers.

House plants outdoors usually need more watering than they require indoors and somewhat less sun. Group individual pots smaller than 6 inches in diameter in planter boxes with moist peat moss packed between. Protect them from hard winds, especially salt spray if you live near the ocean; gentle breezes, on the other hand, strengthen the stems. If you are planning to hang plants from the branches of a strong tree, as I am going to do with my orchids and bromeliads, arborists say it is better to drill a clean hole through the branch and use an eye-bolt rather than tie a wire around the branch itself.

Most of my smaller plants, say those in pots 7 inches or smaller in diameter, will go into window boxes all across the front of the house. While I have nothing against the traditional boxes filled with geraniums and variegated vinca spilling over the edges, what I really enjoy most is an assortment of several kinds of flowering things plus some colorful foliage plants.

For window boxes that are mostly shaded from midday and early afternoon sun, I like to use fuchsias, impatiens (have you seen the new double called Francifrills?), lobelia, begonias such as rex, Reiger and tuberosus-rooted, caladiums coleus and star-of-Bethlehem campanulas. In more sun, I use dwarf marigolds, Joseph's coat alternanthera, annual phlox, verbena, geraniums, cacti and other succulents, semperflorens begonias, petunias and the sweet-scented flowering tobacco known as Dwarf White Bedder nicotiana.

House Call
Q. My window boxes and planters were beautiful last year until the slugs ate holes all over them. Is there a way to control them?

A. Yes. You can use a packaged slug and snail bait such as metaldehyde, following label directions. Or, place shallow cans containing about an inch of stale beer under the leaves of your plant; the scent lures the slugs inside and they drown.

Q. Would it be all right to put my collection of bromeliads outdoors in a window box for the summer?

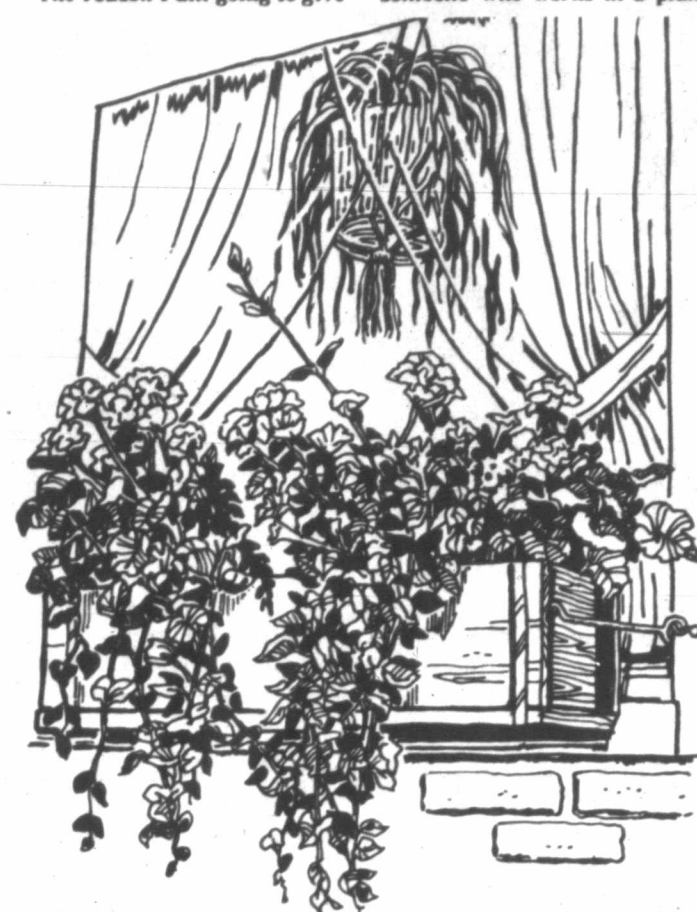

A. Yes, but be sure the box and the growing medium drain excess moisture rapidly and freely, otherwise the roots may rot. Most bromeliads do well in relatively high-light situations, but protect them from direct sun during the middle part of the day.

Weeder's guide

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

How about making 147 pies from a 368-pound pumpkin, or cutting one three-foot cucumber into 288 slices for "bread and butter" pickles?

The answer is that's how Jane and Gene Grace got into the business of finding and selling seeds they expect to produce giant vegetables.

It all began when they grew a 186-pound pumpkin and made a jack-o'-lantern for their son Clark. They began a search and discovered such things as the Sakurajima radish, up to 15 pounds, yard-long string beans from Japan, the Luffa sponge from Egypt that can be used as a dish rag, and tomatoes that weigh two to three pounds each.

Their seeds, they insist, must produce table vegetables that are good to the taste and nutritious, as well as either gigantic or miniature.

The Graces offer cash rewards for gardeners who top records. Their catalogue (25 cents to cover postage from Grace's Gardens, Hacketts-town, N.J.) offers $250 if someone beats the 197-pound "world record melon." It says "Ed (Weeks) harvested 1,717 seeds from his giant and you can now purchase up to three seeds for your garden" ($1 each).

Here are the U.S. and English records they compiled by vegetable, grower, size and variety, where known:

$50 switch caused blackout

MIAMI (AP) — Buzzing dental drills fell silent. Elevators stopped between floors. Drawbridges gaped open, clogging major traffic arteries. People couldn't buy gasoline or even withdraw money from banks.

The blame for the chaos went to a faulty $50 relay switch that short-circuited on Monday and caused a blackout affecting almost three million people over 15,000 square miles in south Florida.

No deaths or injuries were attributed to the outage, which lasted seven hours in some places.

A dentist in Miramar, south-east of Fort Lauderdale, said he was fixing a man's mouth plate when the power went off.

"I was just to the point of smoothing everything out," he said. "He's going to spend the day with a very rough mouth."

Carolyn Cutting, a hair-dresser, said customers were sent home in rollers. "It's amazing how dependent we are on electricity," she said.

The sudden loss of power kicked on emergency generators — except at Miami Beach's Mt. Sinai Hospital. Surgeons there successfully finished an open-heart operation by flashlight.

The outage also stopped pumps at service stations.

cooled off food at restaurants and stopped registers at banks.

"We can't pump gas, we can't work on cars. Even our tools are power," lamented Jay Tillman, owner of a Miramar service station, during the blackout. "I tried to get some lunch and can't even get a cup of coffee."

"I can't make a deposit at my bank. I went down there and everybody's just standing around because their machines are all electric."

The short circuit shut down a nuclear-fueled generator at Turkey Point south of Miami at 10:12 a.m. (EDT), said officials of the Florida Power & Light Co.

For a shaky 12 minutes, automatic devices allowed other generating units in the giant utility's network to absorb the loss.

But attempts to keep the juice flowing failed at 10:24 a.m. as major plants toppled. Operators manually shut down one nuclear unit because of wide fluctuations in voltage. That triggered the automatic shutdown of five oil-fueled generators.

In short order, FPL customers from Marathon in the Florida Keys up the coast to St. Lucie, just north of Fort Pierce, were without power.

Nuclear would destroy US, Soviet

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A

major nuclear conflict would destroy both the United States and the Soviet Union as great powers no matter what kind of defenses they erect, a congressional committee concludes.

Water from Arkansas recommended for Plains

LUBBOCK — Importing water to the High Plains from Arkansas would have several advantages over a previous proposal to bring water from Louisiana, the board of directors of Water, Inc. was told Friday.

Bob Milwee, president of Stephens Consultant Services Inc., of Little Rock, briefed Water, Inc. directors on his firm's study which shows Arkansas would have a surplus surface water supply of at least 43 million acre feet through the year 2020.

The study proposed the annual export to the High Plains of at least six million acre feet of water, an amount adequate to maintain current irrigation levels in the area. The water would come from the Arkansas, White, Little and Ouachita Rivers in Arkansas.

The Texas Water Plan of 1968 proposed taking water from the Mississippi River in lower Louisiana, but the Arkansas plan offers several advantages, Milwee said.

"The economics of this system will certainly prove out to be superior as far as costs are concerned," he stated.

Distances to be covered by a canal system would be about half in Arkansas what would be required in Louisiana. Also, an Arkansas canal system would not have to be built for a maximum water capacity the entire route because the system would pick up water as it moved west in Arkansas rather than taking the entire amount from a single source.

An additional plus would be an elevation advantage. Further, the four Arkansas rivers have better quality water than the silt-laden Mississippi, the consultant said.

"There are no major physical obstacles or technical problems with moving the water to Texas," he indicated. "From an environmental standpoint, we don't have many problems either."

While a specific route was proposed, Milwee said connecting with a system being planned in Oklahoma and moving the water to the High Plains through the Sooner State would certainly be explored.

"That would be a superior route because you can maintain elevation advantage," he said. "Hopefully, what we will finally end up with is a five-state plan for Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Louisiana."

Although the study has not been presented to the Arkansas Legislature as an official program, Milwee was optimistic about the possibility.

"We are working very closely with the Arkansas Soil and Water Conservation Commission," he said. "I think we have a good rapport between the states, and the governor of Arkansas indicated he looks forward to proper use of the state's water resources."

The Joint Committee on Defense Production declared in a report issued Monday that the much-louted Soviet civil and industrial defenses would not provide the Russian population or industry with any reliable protection against U.S. strategic forces.

Nor could the United States satisfactorily protect its economy as a superpower, even if it spent huge sums of money constructing industrial defenses, the committee said.

"We said it doesn't matter who comes off the more bloody, but whether either could continue to operate as a major power after a nuclear attack," said William H. Kincaid, the committee's staff director.

"We concluded neither could," he said.

The report mainly studied industrial defenses that attempt to protect the nation's economy in the event of a nuclear attack, rather than civil defenses, which try to protect the population.

"It doesn't seem to be either militarily or cost effective to put a lot of money into industrial defense since it can easily be overcome by selecting crucial economic targets that are incapable of passive protection," Kincaid said.

The 100-page report, the product of a year's study, concludes that the United States would waste its money by trying to match the Soviet's defense program against nuclear attack.

"By changing U.S. targeting plans slightly and by structuring our attack over a certain time period we could overcome any benefits they gained" from their industrial defenses, Kincaid said.

Even the three members of the committee who dissented from the majority report did not suggest that the United States try to match the Soviets' nuclear defense effort. They said the United States should continue to study and analyze the Soviet program.

Kincaid said that focusing on Soviet civil defense efforts was meaningless since the United States' nuclear strategy always has been aimed at destruction of enemy industry rather than population.

The committee, headed by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., also concluded that the Soviet civil and industrial defenses may preserve that nation's economy against an attack from a secondary nuclear power like China.

City sales tax doubles in year

Pampa's economy continues to climb, according to the amount of city sales tax collected.

City officials recently received the May rebate check from the state comptroller's office in the amount of $38,685.13. The net payment for the same period last year was $15,571.31.

The amount represents the one per cent city sales tax collected for the period ending May 6.

State Comptroller Bob Bullock said May checks are somewhat misleading, however, as they actually cover a five-week period instead of the usual four weeks. "June checks obviously will be smaller," he said.

State and city sales tax collections in Texas are growing at a rate well ahead of the national average, reflecting the muscle of Texas economy.

Bullock said. "We are confident the trend will continue," he added.

Biggest rebate check went as usual to Texas' largest city, Houston, with $4.8 million. Smallest check was sent to Beckville in the amount of $514.71.

Other area towns receiving rebate checks were Canadian, $7,278.98; McLean, $1,100.91; Miami, $880.93; Skellytown, $662.81; and White Deer, $563.66.

COVINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Linda Lovelace, star of the film "Deep Throat," will be called to testify in the retrial of three men who were convicted on obscenity charges for distributing the film.

The convictions were overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court.

U.S. Attorney James Arehart said the actress and most of the other witnesses from the first trial will be summoned for the retrial, set for July 11.

Stanley Marx, Harry Mohney and Guy Weir were fined $16,000 each and sentenced to three months in jail following their convictions on charges of interstate transportation of obscene material.

But the Supreme Court reversed the convictions, noting that while the jury was instructed to judge the film by "community standards," community standards in this case were established only with the arrest and indictment of the three.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Two Irish women who led peace marches in Belfast and other Irish cities have received honorary degrees from Yale University.

"When violence and counter-violence had driven countless innocents to their graves and all the living to despair, you two had the faith to believe that the overwhelming majority of your countrymen wished an end to hateful slaughter," Yale president Kingman Brewster Jr. said Monday in awarding the degrees to Mairead Corrigan and Betty Williams.

Miss Corrigan, who lost several family members in the strife, said: "This will give people at home the knowledge that people see us as wanting peace and not as the mad fighting Irish."

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — She was invited to lunch with the wives of Elliot Richardson and John Volpe, but never had anything to wear or "money to entertain them," complained the soon-to-be ex-wife of Sen. Edward Brooke.

Remigia Brooke testified at their divorce trial Monday that "I had to borrow dresses from a friend. He (Sen. Brooke) told me he didn't have any money."

She filed for divorce in July, charging cruel and abusive treatment by the Massachusetts Republican. Brooke counterfiled with the same complaint.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Financier, former publisher and one-time ambassador Walter Annenberg is considering Philadelphia as a home for the proposed multimillion-dollar art-communications center that New York snubbed.

Annenberg visited here Monday. He felt the University of Pennsylvania was the right spot, said university president Martin Meyerson, adding that the school was asked to do a location feasibility study.

Annenberg had offered New York City's Metropolitan Museum of Art $20 million to build the center and another $20 million to operate it for 10 years.

He withdrew the offer after New Yorkers protested it would encroach on Central Park.

FIRST NOMINATION

NEW YORK (AP) — "Wizards," a film by Ralph Bakshi, was the first picture to be nominated for the best Fantasy Film award of 1977. The award, given by the 350-member Academy of Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror Films, will not be given until January 1978. Bidding will be in December 1977.

McClure, 20, died March 13, 1976, at a Veterans Administration hospital in Houston. He never recovered from injuries received when he was forced to participate in pugil stick bouts with a succession of bigger Marines at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in December 1975.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Donald F. Shanahan asked Enright to dismiss the suit under the Feres Doctrine, a law that says the government cannot be sued for damages when an injury or death results from military service.

The lawyers for the Calhouns maintain that law does not apply because McClure's civil rights and guarantees to due process of law were denied when he was recruited.

Enright said he will rule on the request for dismissal within several days.

Giant derrick set up

BROOKHAVEN, Miss. (AP) — A 189-foot Texas giant has been put to work in a South Mississippi pasture boring a 20,000-foot hole in hopes of finding oil.

Oil company officials say they hope the giant, an oil well derrick and platform known as Rig 76, will give them some clues to whether oil pockets are hidden in Lincoln County at twice the depth of older wells in the area.

A spokesman for Delta Drilling Co. of Tyler, Tex., which owns the $5 million derrick and will be doing the actual drilling, said it is the largest of its kind in the world, not because of its height but because of its weight-lifting potential.

"This thing rests on legs 24 inches thick and will lift the equivalent weight of over four 747 jet airplanes," a spokesman for the firm said. "You could hang 1,555,000 pounds on the derrick and lift it."

A spokesman for Chevron USA in New Orleans, prime operators for the rig, said the search for oil is being conducted in the old Brookhaven field about seven miles northwest of Brookhaven.

The spokesman said there were still some producing wells in the field, which was developed in the 1940s, but the supply of oil from conventional depths of up to 10,000 feet was diminishing.

"Back when these other wells were brought in, the drilling techniques were not capable of going down a lot deeper," the Chevron spokesman said. "Now they are, and in a sense we'll be taking a look at deeper horizons."

The Delta Drilling spokesman said Rig 76 was the largest single operation the international drilling firm has undertaken.

"The rig is composed of many parts manufactured by several companies," he said. "We had trucks from all over the country bringing the pieces in to our Kilgore yard to erect it."

"We had to put it together in Kilgore first to see if all the parts would fit because there never has been another one like it. We had to put a large concrete pad at the yard, then fit the pieces together like a giant jigsaw puzzle."

The spokesman said the giant rig, once erected, was disassembled and shipped to Brookhaven for reassembly.

An official at the drilling site said the rig is in operation, manned by a 24-man crew.

"Actually, the size of this rig makes it easier to work with," the official said.

The 147-foot derrick rests on top of a 3 1/2-story drilling platform and is equipped with an elevator to speed the crew from the ground to the working level.

Union may attack 'right-to-work'

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN

AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The AFL-CIO may back off its push to abolish state "right-to-work" laws this year, fearing it won't be able to get the necessary votes to block a Senate filibuster.

Not that labor has lost any zeal for its long-cherished objective of repealing these laws, but practical politics are bringing the goal into question.

"The situation has changed and the changed situation may force the council to reconsider the whole thing," said a top aide to AFL-CIO President George Meany.

Sources describe Meany and the 34 members of his executive council as divided — AFL-CIO spokesmen call it "a difference of opinion" — over whether to include repeal of Section 14B of the Taft-Hartley Act in labor's drive to win major changes in federal labor laws. Section 14B allows states the option of banning union shop agreements that require workers to join a union. Twenty states — mostly in the West and the so-called "Sunbelt" — have such right-to-work laws.

While this was widely thought to have been "labor's year," the congressional defeat of a high priority construction picketing bill and a number of setbacks dealt from the White House have raised questions about labor's clout with the administration and the Democratic Congress it helped elect.

Some members of Meany's executive council, made up of national union presidents, believe the emotional fight that is certain if they press ahead with 14B could kill chances of winning other labor law changes.

The other goals include measures to make the National Labor Relations Board more efficient and rules that would block government contracts for companies that violate the NLRB's rulings.

One argument within the AFL-CIO, the sources said, is that it might be better to forget the repeal drive for now and concentrate on the other changes. Labor could then come back with a separate bill on 14B after mounting a campaign for public support, according to this argument.

A recent Gallup poll found that 63 per cent of the public oppose compelling people who work for a unionized employer to join a union once they have been hired. The poll said 31 per cent support the idea.

A final decision on whether to include 14B repeal — or perhaps to use it as a bargaining chip — will be made by a legislative committee of Meany's executive council. But that won't come until after the AFL-CIO takes a head count in the Senate.

"If we don't have 60 votes to shut off a filibuster, what's the point of beating our heads against a stone wall and losing the rest of the labor law reform package?" asked one source.

'It's illness,' mayor says of cops' attitude

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Police Chief B.G. Bond says he's concerned about the attitude of Houston policemen and Mayor Fred Hofheinz says part of that attitude is an illness.

"I have established an internal affairs division," Bond said Monday. "Perhaps the message will be received. When we start having the inspectors' command checking on all officers, then I'm confident that time will tell if they (officers) feel they have carte blanche."

Earlier Monday, Hofheinz said "I think there is something loose in this city that is an illness. And that is an attitude on the part of a lot of people, including a lot of community leaders, people in charge of mass communications, that whatever a Houston police officer does is OK."

Hofheinz said such an attitude causes Houston policemen to think they have community protection against crimes they commit.

Comments by Bond and Hofheinz came as the district attorney's office prepared to take the case of officer Terry Denison to a grand jury today. Denison is charged with murder in the death of Joe Campos Torres Jr. Five other officers have been fired in the case.

In another case already underway in state district court, former Houston Police Capt. Kenneth L. Nixon is being tried on charges in connection with the shooting death of his wife, Nixon, 38, formerly headed HPD's vice squad.

Hofheinz said in his past 3 1/2 half years as mayor he has done everything possible to fight against the attitude that policemen can do no wrong.

"I have pulled every stop. I have spent political capital," Hofheinz said. "I have called police chiefs to the carpet. I thought we had it licked, only to leave town and find out we seem to be back in the 1960s after all."

Hofheinz was out of the city last week when the Torres case occurred.

R.C. Rich, president of the Police Officer's Association, said he was not surprised by Hofheinz' comments.

"He has never come out for the police department," Rich said. "It's common knowledge that Hofheinz really has no concern for the Houston Police Department."

Rich said bad news about policemen always gets more attention.

"I think this (Torres case) is the straw that broke the camel's back," Rich said. "Everytime something like this happens they try every officer in the department other than the officers involved."
