PIRATES FALL TO BOBCATS

The Bloomingon Bobcats stopped the Aransas County Pirates, 30-0, here Friday night in a game marred by penalties and spotty play.

The Bobcats scored their first touchdown in the initial quarter when halfback Mike Hutto went around left end from eight yards out. The extra point attempt failed.

In the second quarter, the Bobcats scored again from about the 18-inch line on a pass from Don Moore to Joe Galvan. Moore also ran for the two extra points.

Hutto put the Bobcats back into the scoring column in the third quarter when he ran 10 yards for a touchdown. He then passed to Dean Shafer for the extra points.

The Bobcats, from District 31A, made the final touchdown in the final period on a 17 yard pass to Larry Kecker. Hutto then scored two points on a run.

The Pirates of District 30AA, never threatened during the game.

Street Program Began on Key Allegro

A program to bring all the comforts of city living to the island retreat of Key Allegro was launched this week by Laguna Construction Co. for development of streets, water service and water supply, Carl C. Krueger, Jr., president of Key Allegro, said.

Plans have also been completed for construction to start Dec. 1, on a luxury water front motel and exotic Polynesian Club. The motel, with facilities for launching and docking boats, will be a half-million dollar project.

Visitors to Key Allegro are invited to inspect the model home which has just been built. It is typical of the type of dwelling that will be suitable for retirement or resort living on the island community, located between Rockport and Fulton.

Plans for a marina are being drawn.

A 14-unit cooperative apartment complex will be built by Reginald Roberts, San Antonio architect, at a cost of over $150,000.

All of this construction will be on the first unit of the island, for which 210 homesites are planned. More than 1,000 homesites are planned for the entire resort development.

Dredging of the Key Allegro channel from Aransas Bay into Little Bay to an eight-foot depth has made it navigable for large boats. Canals cutting into the island provide doorstep docking. Sand dredged from the ocean floor was used to raise the level of the entire island.

Wilson Says Fishing Pier Money Can't Be Spent

Attorney Gen. Will Wilson last Friday knocked in the head again the hopes of the Game and Fish Commission to build fish piers in the Gulf of Mexico and inland bays.

His answer to a legal question from Howard Dodgen, executive secretary of the Game and Fish Commission, was that the Legislature has not yet met the constitutional requirements to spend state money for this purpose.

In 1960, Wilson held that a Legislature appropriation for fishing piers was not valid because there were no general laws authorizing the expenditures.

In August, 1961, the Legislature again appropriated $200,000 from fishing license money to build piers, ramps, restrooms and shelters in state parks along the Gulf Coast and other areas of the state.

But the general bill to authorize such an expenditure died in the House Game and Fish Committee. So, said Wilson, the second effort is as void as the first and the money can not be spent for that purpose.

It Looks Like 30AA Football Is in For A Hard, Dry, Season

District 30AA of the Texas Interscholastic Football League has set some kind of a record, and coaches who have been taking a good long look at team performances don't think its good.

Seven teams in 30AA have played eleven games to date and have lost ten of them, frequently to opponents in lower brackets. And, to add insult to injury, the scores which they have lost those games have sometimes been astronomical. In the entire eleven, only one 30AA team has scored a touchdown. This counted six points, for the point after was missed. Compared to this, their opponents have scored 279 points.

Last week's results are indicative of the usual results in 30AA games.

Aransas Pass, a 30AA tem, played Sinton, 29AA, and lost, 15-0; Gregory-Portland in 30AA lost to Ingleside, an A school, by 34-0. Pettus, another A school, handed Tuloso-Midway's 30AA team a 54-0 shellacking; Benavides, from 31AA, clobbered West Oso, 30AA, to the tune of 35-0; Bloomington, an A school, whipped ACHS of Rockport 30-0; Premont, an A school, slapped Flour Bluff, 30AA, down 28-0; and Taft, in the same classification as Premont, took mighty Bishop, the home of Ronnie Bull and many other fine ball players, to the tune of 13-0.

Put it another way: Aransas Pass has lost one and won one; Tuloso-Midway, West Oso and Gregory-Portland have all lost singles; while Rockport, Flour Bluff and Bishop have two losses apiece to their credit.

Mrs. Hunt, well-known in Corpus Christi and throughout the surrounding area for the manner in which she makes these reviews of so much interest, exhibited a marvelous memory and intense preparation of her subject.

Junior High Plays Woodsboro In Doubleheader

The "B" team game will start at 6 p.m., with the "A" game following at 7 o'clock. This will be their first game of the season.

Coaches Pat Smith and Gene Wilkins have been working hard with the teams all week.

Fifty-nine boys have been issued suits, Smith said, and they have been practicing since school opened on Sept. 4. They spent the first nine days on fundamentals, such as tackling, blocking, ball handling, kicking and running.

During that period, only a portion of each day was spent in team practice, and the rest of the time the boys were broken up into groups.

Smith said that the first three days of this week have been spent on team offense and defense, getting ready for the Woodsboro game,

Coaches Smith and Wilkins are proud of the fact that so many boys have turned out, and are still prouder that upon checking the grades of each boy a week prior to this first game, all 26 eighth grade boys were passing in every subject.

Players are:

Catamaran Is Now Being Assembled At Jackson Yard

One of the queerest water craft to be seen around this seaside town for some time is the catamaran, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dunn of Victoria that was unloaded at Jackson Marine Services over the weekend.

Anyone who served in the South Pacific during World War II, or who has visited the Philippines, Tahiti or Hawaii knows of this outrigger sailing canoe and its age-old use in inter-island traffic.

Aboard these catamarans, long centuries ago, dusky adventurers from Asiatic coasts, guided only by the stars, the flight of birds, or instinct, sailed for constant watery miles out into the Pacific Hawaii, Easter Island, and New Zealand were all colonized by daring sailors aboard these graceful vessels, and there is even some evidence that a few of them reached the coasts of Mexico and Central America, perhaps blown off their course by storms.

On these catamarans, more than a thousands years ago, without sugar, canned goods coffee, condensed milk, hardtack and compasses that modern navigators consider so necessary, these self-reliant brown men took their women and children along. They carried their water in gourds and coconut shells, or caught it in straw mats when it rained, and they carried coconuts, yams, tare, pigs and chickens, crossing the widest ocean in the world to settle on lonely islands far from the nearest continent.

And, once they had settled, they conducted an inter-island trade among themselves and the inhabitants of other islands just as isolated as those on which they had landed.

The Dunn catamaran is a smaller and more sophisisticated version, built by Rudy Choy and designed by Gilbert Iwamoto, both of Hawaii. When the Dunns were in Hawaii on vacation four years ago, they were fascinated by the catamarans that they saw sailing at great speed, unhanced by shallow water.

They decided that a similar craft would probably be extremely well-suited to navigation in the shallow bays of the Texas coast, and, later, when they became acquainted with Choy in San Francisco asked him to design one for their use.

This is the vessel that arrived here, along with the builder and which is now being assembled in Jackson's yard. Built of modern materials, it resembles the early catamarans only in shape. The original ones were made when two or three tree trunks were tied together with rattan. This one is a top notch example of the boat builder's art as practiced by Choy, who has an outstanding sailing and racing record in craft of this type, holding the record from Los-Angeles to Hawaii and return, in a catamaran.

Mrs. Barnett Continues Travel Narrative of East

We reached the ancient capital of Scotland, Perth, where John Knox preached the first sermon of the Reformation. Today it is a busy port on the North Sea, as well as a resort center, which manufactures much Scotch whiskey. Its large slag heaps testify to its busy collieries.

All through Northern Scotland are many beautiful lakes and fishing streams, but fishing is still a gentleman's sport. The approaches to nearly all waters are private and the charges run from $1.50 to $10.00 per day for fishing privileges. They say there is an abundance of salmon, brown trout and Loch Leven trout, but the few fishermen we observed wading in the icy waters did not seem to be too busy.

Over the 4,000 foot high Grampian Mountains, where we saw patches of snow and felt the icy wind; where the grass was knee high to the fat sheep; where we passed lakes large and small, some nestled in the restored forests, we came to Inverness.

Inverness, "capital of the highlands," is a picture-book city of Georgian, dormered stone houses, ancient churches, with tall steples and winding cobblestone streets of stores, curio shops and pubs. In the center of the town, high on a hill overlooking the broad river Ness is a huge castle. This castle is built on the site of MacBeth's Castle immortalized in Shakespeare's "MacBeth" and is the third reconstruction since the time of MacBeth.

Our hotel on the river, overlooking the castle, was a typical old Scottish hotel with one obsolete bathtub to each floor. If MacBeth bothered to bathe at all he probably used it also.

A series of long lakes, connected by several canals, all called the Caledomian Canal, runs all the way across Northern Scotland from the North Sea to the Irish Sea, making possible navigation for small boats from one to the other. We turned southward from Inverness toward Glasgow along the mountainous road on the north shores of Loch Ness. Although we kept our eyes peeled for a glimpse of the famous Sea Monster of Loch Ness, we failed to see it. We decided it might help in seeing it to have a plentiful supply of the 100 year old Scotch whiskey, we saw displayed in grog shops in Inverness. However, we did see the unsurpassed beauty of the scenery, which is as wild as any in the U. S. The wooded mountains rose steeply from the lake shore. Here and there were isolated, wooded islands. Ever so often we saw great fortress-like castles that no doubt could tell many gruesome stories of the feuding between the Malcolms, the Campbells, the Ross' and many other hot-headed Scottish noblemen.

After leaving Loch Nenn, we crossed the high bald mountains toward Loch Lochy. In this rugged country the British Commandoes trained during the war. It is a lonely moor, except for the many campers, and the shaggy sheep grazing in the high bountiful grass. There is hardly a house to be seen for mile after mile. Even in summer the winds are very cold and the many snow fences are proof of hard winters. The spongy ground is underlaid with peat from centuries of heavy vegetation, and now and then we saw large stumps, remains of the forests which once covered the mountains.

We followed Loch Locky for time, then across a pass we reached the "Bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomand." All along the way the scenery was magnificent. There were many inviting hotels in settings of banks of purple rhododendroms. After too short a trip, we found ourselves in busy Glasgow.

Glasgow is a coal-smoke blackened, booming commercial city on the Forth of Clyde, mainly attractive to tourists because it is a port of embarkation for America. The huge British railways hotels that were elegant in Queen Victoria's day, give comfort to many a tourist for their last night in Great Britain. Here one wakes up in a bedroom big enough for a circus, refreshed and ready to catch the boat train in the station below.

Glasgow to Montreal, to Dallas (4666 miles)

An July 4 we boarded, by tender, the new, 27,000 ton, white "Empress of Canada" at Greenock, Scotland, a port on the Firth of Clyde near Glasgow. Colorful Scotch pipers, dressed in kilts, with traditional corans, mantles and swords, piped us aboard with Scottish tunes played on their huge bagpipes. This was the last leg of our sea voyage home.

The "White Empress" was a majestic sight, riding at anchor on the broad Clyde, with flocks of white gulls circling about her. She was built in 1960 at Newcastle—upon—Tyne, is 650 feet long and has a cruising speed of 21 knots. She is fitted with stabilizers to combat heavy seas, and has a bulbous bow to reduce pitching, both important features in the turbulent North Atlantic. We were delighted with her beautiful public rooms, fine apointments, superb cousine and comfortable staterooms. It is equipped with a heated indoor swimming pool, nursery and playroom for children, fine library, a spacious ballroom with balcony, a large cinema theater, and even automatic washers and dryers for the convenience of the passengers.

The Empress ships are a part of the Canadian Pacific System, which also operates airlines, railroads, and a chain of Canada's finest hotels, including the world-famous "Chateau Frontenac" in Inehec, the "Empress" in Victoria and many others.

Greenock is only one of the many busy parts on the Firth of Clyde. Nearby is Clydebank, site of Great Britian's greatest shipbuilding yards, where such famous ships as the 'Queen Mary" and the "Queen Elizabeth" were built.

We sailed at 2 p.m. down the Firth, past quaint Scottish villages, with uniqque houses strung along the water's edge, and fresh green hills in the background. On the Firth sailed dozens of tiny sailboats, their blue, red and white sails making a colorful picture. Our route led out into the north Atlantic with the outer Hebrides Islands to starboard, and Northern Ireland to port, both plainly visible. Leaving land we shaped a great circle course west southwest to the St. Lawrence, by way of Cape Race, Newfoundland. The wind became frigid and there were rumors of icebergs but with modern radar and constant temperature recordings, there is little danger.

Our passengers are mainly English, Scotch and Canadians, with very few Americans. They are predominantly young people, which makes things lively.

We reached Cape Race at 4 a.m. on July 8, after a cold and foggy passage across the North Atlantic, but a comfortable and pleasant time indoors. After passing over the grand Banks, famous for commercial fishing of cod and haddock, The Empress entered Cabot Strait in thick dripping fog, running full speed in an area dotted with islands, dangerous shoals, and fishing boats. It was tantalizing to know that Nova Scotia lay but 12 miles to starboard and Newfoundland to port, but the pea soup fog prevented our seeing even the bow of the ship. We entered the Gulf of St. Lawrence, then through the Gaspi Passage we reached the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. These waters are closed to navigation from December to April, due to the river being frozen over, and all shipping for the Eastern coast of Canada is handled through St. Johns, Newfoundland, or Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The following morning, the the shores of the Gaspe' Peninsula could be clearly seen to port, with many white villages along the shore, backed up by heavy green forests, high cliffs and mountains up to 4,300 feet high.

This is the country of the Acadians whom Longfellow immortalized in his poem "Evangeline." Now, better than ever before could we understand his opening line:

"This is the forest primaeval, the murmuring pines and the hemlocks —"

After picking up the river pilot from the light ship anchored at its mouth, we entered the wide, muddy, turbulent St. Lawrence River. The 30 foot tide in the Gulf of St. Lawrence makes itself felt all the way to Quebec and beyond. It is odd to see a great river running the wrong way.

Along the entrance of the river the country is quite mountainous and rugged. There are large frame farm houses with huge barns with steep pitched roofs, placed in a setting of dense forests, with open meadows here and here. Fine dairy cattle can be seen grazing in the deep green fields. Occasionally apple orchards and row crops of potatoes and beans are seen. The villages are small and neat, each with a tall white church spire. The whole countryside has a peaceful pastoral air about it.

Further up the river, where it is joined by the broad Saguenay, we came to the massive five-story luxury hotel, the "Manoir Richelieu." This striking, chateau-type hotel, in its wilderness setting, reminded us of the royal castles found in France. It is nationally famous and draws its guests from all over the United States and Canada. Along the waterfront, near the hotel are many fine summer homes.

Near Quebec we passed St. Anne de Beaupre', with its large cathedral on the waterfront. We recalled a previous visit there. It is a shrine similar to that of Lourdes, France, where the afflicted and ill are brought to be healed. We remembered the many crutches we saw at the altar, left there by the devout pilgrims.

Quebec is one of the most romantic cities in North America. The approach from the river is particularly striking. The waterfront is dominated by the huge Chateu Frontenac Hotel, set high on a bluff, with the original French town at its foot. The old town looks as if it had been transplanted from France, with its high gabled buildings with dormer windows, and all its signs in French. Along the heights runs an esplanade, park and boulevard. These heights were once fortified and were the scene of many battles. The whole area is rich in the history of the struggles of the early days of this new country.

Quebec was settled by the French and the French influence is still strong. It is bi-lingual, with all signs, with all signs in French and English.

The broad river narrows gradually until it is from ½ to ¼ mile wide. Upriver from Quebec the country changes, becoming flat with lush meadows and grain fields. The banks are lined with vacation cottages. Toward Montreal the river is dotted with small islands, each supporting several head of cattle.

Montereal, our port of disembarkation, is a rapidly growing city of 170,000, its growth due in part to its strategic position near the head of the St. Lawrence Seaway. It is a city of bridges, with many large beautifuf ones crossing the broad river. Our ship passed under one, a cantilever type, with only inches to spare, it seemed.

After considerable waiting on customs, we were taken to the Canadian Pacific Railway Station to board the train for the last lap of our journey, via Toronto, Chicago and St. Louis.

The train raced along for miles beside the St. Lawrence, now clear and blue, due to the seaway dams, through flat farm land, green meadows and forests of birch and spruce. A stop in Chicago revealed a changing skyline, a bustling city and hot, humid weather.

Soon we were traveling at 80 miles per hour through the Middle West, past mile after mile of fine farm land with abundant crops of corn, grain and beans. All along the way we saw huge grain elevators filled to capacity and overflowing into dozens of small portable tanks.

Early in the morning on July 12, we rolled into the Union Station in Dallas, our starting point, having proved to ourselves that the world is round. We found that people the world over are on the whole, alike; all striving for a living, all ready to meet us halfway in friendship. Many have strange customs and religions and queer ways of dressing; nearly all are overcrowded and less rich in worldly goods than Americans. We feel we have a better understanding of the peoples and the problems of the world for having visited some of its countries. In spite of the fact that astronauts can fly around the world in 90 minutes, we still think its a mighty big place!

No Treasure In Fulton Mansion Says Mrs. Beaman

The Pilot's story on investigation of old houses by Beeville architect Robert Beasley brought an interesting letter recently.

From Mrs. Reubeen John Beaman, of 453 Grant Place, Corpus Christi, it was written to Beasley, who passed it along to us. It said:

"I have been very much interested in the article which appeared in the Rockport Pilot of July 19th. Since George W. Fulton was my dear grandfather and Harriet Gillett Smith my equally dear grandmother, and since I was born in that old home, so full of happy memories, quite naturally I have been interested.

"My grandfather (Col. Fulton) was a man of many talents. He received his education in his native city of Philadelphia, where he learned the trade of watchmaker and mathematical instrument maker.

"In 1828, at the age of seventeen, he left Pheladelphia for Montezuma, Indiana. There he stopped at an inn, where an interesting incident occurred. An Inn across the street was having a new sign painted, which afforded my grandfather quite a lot of amusement. The inn keeper where he stopped asked the cause of his merriment. The sign across the street had the name of the inn and also a very large bird, supposed to be an eagle, which was far from resembling that bird. The inn keeper asked if he thought he could do better, to which my grandfather replied that if he couldn't, he'd be ashamed of himself. He was given a big board and told if he could do better he'd be paid for it.

"My grandfather set to work and although he had never done anything of the kind, in two or three days and a picture of a ship in full sail with perfct lettering and the old sign was at once replaced by the new and people for 20 miles around came to admire it.

"He (Colonel Fulton) taught school, was a watchmaker, surveyor, and bookkeeper at various times. When news came of the invasion of Texas by Santa Ana, he organized a company of sixty men, joined Copano Miller's regiment in Indiana, landed at Matagorda Bay March 4, 1837, and served until June, 1837, when the Texas army was disbanded.

"In 1867 my grandfather and the family returned to Texas, where they stayed until the cottage was built, I am not sure—but this I know.

The material for the cottage came from Cincinnati on flat boats to New Orleans, where it came across the Gulf by boat, as did all of the lumber, furniture, etc., for the 'big house.' In fact a boat load of interior furnishings went to the bottom in a storm and had to be replaced.

"The room under the tower of which you speak, was the trunk room. At no time was gold stored there. If you remember, there was a shaft from the lavatory up to the third floor, with trapdoors in each bath room, at the foot of the tub, where trunks could be hauled up and let down, instead of lugging them up those long stairs. There were many conveniences in that house that were years ahead of their time.

"The furnishings came from an old furniture company which existed for many years: in fact, they went out of business about 1915.

"Before returning to Texas (from the East, where Fulton went after the war—Editor), my grandfather was a civil engineer with Mr. Roebling, in building the suspension bridge which spans the Ohio River between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington, Kentucky.

"I own the silver water service mentioned in your article, as well as dishes, a coffee and tea service, and many other heirlooms from that home.

"The house, by the way, was started in 1871, and finished in 1873. I was a very little girl in 1890, but remember the golden wedding very distinctly. That house has many precious and happy memories for all of us.

"There is so much that crowds into my memory—the big front gate that had a trigger that swung it open as the carriage drove in and closed it on the other side—the gardner's cottage—the stables and carriage house are all gone, and the house is only a ghost of its former self. It used to be a soft warm tan, with brown trim.

"I hope that I have not bored you with this outpouring of memories," Mrs. Beaman's letter continues, "but I was interested in your article and wanted to correct some dates and some wild tales about the trunk room. One, which you didn't get, was that he kept a very special coffin up there. The tower room is where my mother used to do her painting. She was quite talented."

YOUTH SPONSORS NEED CHAPERONES, SCHEDULE MEETING

The Youth Sponsors are having trouble in getting the needed chaperones for the senior and junior dances held at the Youth Building.

Part of this trouble comes from the fact that people have apparently either lost their schedules or are not consulting them, and Mrs. F. L. McCord asks that all those who were on the list issued last year to consult their schedules, so that they will not overlook their turns.

If the scheduled chaperones are not able to attend, Mrs. McCord asks that she be notified who they have found to take their places, until a new schedule can be issued in November.

In addition, she said, the Youth Recreation Sponsors will hold their regular meeting on Monday, Oct. 1, and all members are urged to attend, because the final draft of the changes in by-laws will be read and voted upon.

E. J. JOHNSONS HAVING FINE TIME EAST

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Johnson, on a trip east, report they're having a fine time.

In a card received this morning they say:

"We camped out in Smoky Mountains National Park, near Cherokee, N.C., and about 5 p.m. a little bear came just across the road from the car. Then about 10 p.m. a big one came and raided garbage cans and tore open ice boxes. I guess he must have weighed 700 pounds.

"We had the most beautiful drive through the Smokies. At the highest point, we were 6643 feet, then down grade for about seven miles with foot off accelerator. We could see the smoke rising from the valleys for miles and miles ahead of us. Actually it was fog, but they call it smoke here. We expect to be in Raleigh, N.C., Tuesday, and in Richmond about the weekend. Then on to Washington."

OCTOBER DRAFT CALLS FOR 160 TEXANS

The state quota for Texas draft boards in October calls for 160 men, Colonel Morris S. Schwartz, state Selective Service director, announced Tuesday in Austin.

The state's October call of 160 compares with a quota of 200 for September and 194 for August. The October call is the state's share of a national quota of 4,000 men, all for the Army.

Johnie M. McHugh, whose name was omitted from last week's list of 1962 Aransas County High School graduates departing for college, is attending the University of Corpus Christi.

The U.S.S.R. had 7,500,000 battle deaths in World War II.

Hurricane Country Revisited After A Year Has Passed

To one who had seen the roofless houses, sodden wreckage, the dead animals and the stranded boats that strewed the road underneath scudding clouds after Hurricane Carla, there was an unreal, dream-like quality in the peaceful landscape, the grazing cattle and cotton rows marching towards the horizon underneath high white clouds that sailed overhead on the way to Port O'Connor.

Yet a little less than a year ago the fence corners were piled high with dead cattle and deer, fence wire were hung with grass and other debris, and a steel tug boat rested athwart the highway between Port Lavaca and Port O'Connor, miles from water.

And there was an unreal quality about Port O'Connor, the little community of some 1,000 people that was practically wiped out by the storm in a wild night and wilder day last September.

Mrs. Louise Sharp, a grey-headed grandmother who has been justice of the peace here for so many years that most people have even forgotten when she was first elected, saw unusual in the situation, however.

"We've got deep water coming," she said, "and when the Matagorda Ship Channel is completed, this is going to be a big town."

As a matter of fact, it's about as big now as it ever was, or maybe a little bigger.

"Almost everyone has rebuilt," she said, "and we've got more than sixty new houses and stores."

There are some differences, however.

Where many of the houses in the old Port O'Connor crouched close to the ground, many of the newer ones are perched on stilts, and the land on which they're located is worth more than it was before the storm.

When this reporter, on a circle through six coastal counties hit by the storm, stopped in Victoria and talked to Ben Ritterskamp, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, Ben said, "You'd be surprised how real estate values have gone up in Port O'Connor. I know a man that had a lot down there which he was holding at $2,000 before Carla, with no takers. The other day he was offered $3,000 for that same lot, and turned it down."

Mrs. Sharp confirmed this.

"I've got some lots over there in the flats," she said, " and the other day a fellow asked me what'd I take for them. I told him that they had been $700 before the storm, and were $750 now, and that I didn't care whether I sold them or not. Then he wanted to know what I'd take for some waterfront I own. I told him that it had been $100 a front foot before Carla and that it was worth $150 a front foot now, and I wasn't about to sell it."

Mrs. Sharp, who was temporary mayor of this unincorporated community for a while after the hurricane, gazed contemplatively at a neighbor boy who was banking dirt beneath the house, which has now straight and true again, after having been washed off its foundations by the water that accompanied Carla.

"That's when I fill this yard, water won't stand under it," she said. "And I'm going to have just as pretty a yard and garden as I had the last time you were here before the storm."

The story of Mrs. Sharp and Port O'Connor is the story that could be told with a thousand minor variations almost anywhere in Calhoun, Victoria, Refugio, San Patricio, Aransas or Nueces counties, all of which suffered a great deal of damage from what everyone agrees is the greatest storm to hit this coast since the 1919 hurricane.

In Port Lavaca, and in Seadrift, there are few signs of the storm today, although at least fifty percent of the homes there suffered some sort of damage during the blow, Port Alto and Olivia, which, like Port O'Connor were wiped out, have rebuilt almost completely, and the great causeway across Lavaca Bay, heavily damaged by the storm, has been completely repaired.

Damage estimates in the county were as high as $14,000,000 immediately after the storm, but Calhoun County Judge Howard Hartzag said this week that 95% of all the wrecked buildings had been rebuilt; and that anticipated damage from salt water to farms and ranches had been far too high.

In Victoria County, damage to Victoria schools was estimated at $200,000; damage to Foster Air Force Field at between $400,000 and $500,000; and the total for everything was placed at around $15,000,000 immediately after the hurricane.

To one who rode the storm out in Victoria's Denver Hotel, and who saw the littered streets and upturned trailers the next day, this is understandable, yet things looked far worse than they really were.

In conversion this week, Charles Scott Hanley and Kindred Stubblefield, vice presidents of Victoria Bank and Trust, were of the opinion that post-storm estimates were far too high.

"Our assessed valuation in the county in only about $150,000,000" Stubblefield said, "and to make up the $15,000,000 estimate, one building in every ten would have had to be seriously damaged."

He and Hanley agreed that between $5,000,000 and $7,500,000 was probably nearer correct.

And both of them agreed that retail sales were boosted for 1961 by the hurricane.

"The insurance companies in this area paid off well, all in all," Hanley said, "and in some cases they ended by being quite generous. and the money that spent as an aftermath of the storm made the difference between a less than average and a more than average year. Retail sales last year were $57,000,000. I haven't seen them for this year, of course, but a comparison should be a fair indicator of the economic impace of the hurricane."

Hurricane damage has been almost entirely repaired, Hanley said.

An interesting sidelight on the Victoria situation was furnished by the post storm estimates on Foster Field repairs—placed at around $500,000—and the actual bill which came to only about one third of this figure.

In Refugio County, where damage was estimated at $764,000, banker T. J. Wilkins said that practically all this was long ago repaired. Ann Smith, as the County Press, said there were a few piers at Bayside that were still not replaced, and a quick trip through Tivoli and Austwell revealed a few signs of the storm left, mostly on buildings that had been abandoned long before the hurricane ever hit, and which delapidated before the wind arrived.

In Aransas County, where Judge John D. Wendell estimated damage at around $1,500,000 shortly after the storm, to roads, piers and boats. about the only sign of the hurricane left is a beached boat hull at the Cove Harbor that has been there since the storm cast it ashore.

Roads, boats, piers, and the half dozen houses that were seriously damaged have all been repaired, and residential and business building is proceeding rapidly, as it has in the past five or six years.

Key Allegro, a 260 acre, Florida type development on Frandolig Island has streets, utilities and houses going in; so does Palm Harbor, south of Rockport; new tourist courts are springing up; and residential building is keeping the lumber yards and carpenters busy.

San Patricio County was never badly hurt, A Red Cross survey made immediately after the blow showed two houses destroyed, 50 with major damage; and 1550 with minor damage. Five large commercial buildings were destroyed six others and major damage; 17 had minor damage, and 95 were reported with minor damage.

Practically all of these have been repaired or replaced.

Nueces County also suffered comparatively minor damage, considering the concentration of people of people, towns and industries. Damage was fairly extensive, however, to roads and causeways in the county, while one town, Port Aransas, was hurt badly, through not as much as was feared in preliminary reports.

Padre Island Causeway damage was approximately $1,350,000; damage to Padre Island Park and pier was $560,000; the road along Mustang Island, from Port Aransas to Padre Island Park was wrecked to the tune of $300,000; Ocean Drive and its bridges in Corpus Christi needed approximately $360,000 for repairs; repairing Port Aransas Causeway approaches needed another $100,000, and engineering fees soaked up about $250,000.

Local damage in Corpus Christi was estimated at $5,000,000; damage at Bahia Azul near old Ingleside was set at around $350,000; Port Aransas damage was set at $1,000,000, and rebuilding of the Port Aransas-Aransas Pass Causeway will probably take another $1,500,000 by the time it's completed.

Practically all of this work is done or under way.

Round trip from Detroit to the end of the Baja Peninsula is over 8,000 miles.

Millions of years ago nature fashioned a proving ground for trucks that man can never duplicate. Today it is known as the Baja (bah' hah) California Peninsula, Mexico.

These pictures give you only a bare idea of the place. The road is fine for 140 miles below the U.S. border. Then the beating begins. Rocks and hard-baked ruts bang, jab and jerk the trucks from stem to stern. Loose sand makes them struggle and strain. Dust chokes them. Heat roasts them. Rivers drench them.

The Baja Run took this Chevrolet truck caravan 17 days to go the 1,066 miles.

All the trucks performed magnificently. Not one was forced to drop out because of mechanical difficulty.

Trucks that can take this kind of beating can take on your toughest truck jobs. Come in now and see tough quality-built '63 Chevrolet trucks with all their new improvements.
