Water worries

Pat Laminack's backyard well was among seven sampled by the Texas Water Commission last week in response to county residents' allegations that groundwater south of Interstate 20 is contaminated.

Testing of wells begins

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Pat Laminack should know in two weeks whether water she has been drinking from her backyard well for 18 years is contaminated.

Ms. Laminack wonders if tainted well water caused her husband's death and her own illness. She was diagnosed with breast cancer last August. Her husband died of leukemia three months later.

"When I first found out that it could be from a contaminated well, I was angry about it — scared," she said last week. "But then I thought, let's just find out if there is any connection between the water and what's going on."

Thursday the Texas Water Commission (TWC) sampled Ms. Laminack's well and six others in a Midland County area just south of Interstate 20.

TWC geologist Ralph Johnson said the samples will be tested in response to allegations by area residents that the groundwater is contaminated.

Johnson said the samples had been sent to the Texas Department of Health in Austin for analysis. Results should be available in two weeks, he said.

Alert declared at nuclear plant

BERWICK, Pa. (AP) — A faulty circuit breaker triggered a low-level alert Saturday at a nuclear plant in central Pennsylvania, but no radiation was released, Lt. Gov. Mark Singel said.

Fire and ambulance crews were called to Susquehanna Steam Heating Station, but no injuries were reported and no employees were evacuated from the plant.

"It is not all that serious," said Karl Abraham, a spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. "There is no threat to the public at all or to the workers in the plant."

Singel said the circuit breaker failure occurred during a routine safety check at the plant, and a valve on a cooling water line did not reopen. Water temperatures in the reactor system climbed from a normal of about 200 degrees to a high of 252 degrees.

"The water temperature was rising and there was an insufficient flow of water through the system," Singel said at a news conference at the state Capitol in Harrisburg. "It is important to note that the incident has been completely contained within the reactor containment."

The Level 2 alert declared around 5:30 p.m. meant that a problem had arisen that could affect the safety of plant operations, said Jim Siracuse of the Luzerne County Emergency Management Agency. A Level 4 alert is the most severe.

The county agency declared the alert because of the heat level problems within Unit 1, which was not operational. The reactor was shut down Thursday due to a leak in the plant's hydraulic control system. The problems were not related, according to plant spokesman Ira Caplan.

Plant workers were working late Saturday to cool the reactor water through another system, according to Caplan. No water or steam was released.

Abraham said the unit would not be restarted until NRC and plant officials had determined the cause of the problem.

John Comey of the Pennsylvania Emergency Management Agency said only three or four Level 2 alerts have occurred in Pennsylvania since the March 1979 accident at Three Mile Island.

All emergency response personnel in Luzerne and Lackawana Counties and all municipalities within a 10-mile radius of the plant have been activated and called into their offices, according to Comey.

The plant in Salem Township 15 to 20 miles southwest of Wilkes-Barre is owned and operated by Pennsylvania Power & Light.

Reporter-Telegram planning move to morning publication

The Midland Reporter-Telegram will become a morning newspaper seven days a week beginning Monday, April 2, Charles A. Spence, publisher, announced Saturday. The newspaper currently publishes morning editions only on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

"While there are a number of reasons for changing to morning publication and the decision was not made lightly or quickly, the key factor is that it will enable us to produce a better newspaper," Spence said. "News will be fresher and more timely and the total news package of local, national and world reports will be more complete."

Pointing out that most news takes place not between midnight and noon but during the balance of the day, Spence said the result of the move will be a stronger newspaper ready for readers at 6 a.m. each day, rather than virtually the same news at 5 or 6 p.m. Advertisers will also benefit since their message will be available to readers over a much longer period, he added.

"The change will constitute a major financial investment for us as well as a big change for our readers. We will appreciate their understanding as both they and we make the transition.

"We know many will continue to read their paper later in the day. But it will be available early and they can make the choice. In some cases they will want to take advantage of the early publication for a 'quick read' of what's happened while waiting until later for a complete reading of the more important stories. Either way the news will be far more complete and timely than it is now," Spence said.

The stronger news product planned will include later sports results and a more complete sports package in general as well as expanded regional and business coverage including full stock market closing quotations and an expanded list of stock quotes of local interest.

The newspaper's shift to morning publication will be in line with nationwide trends in recent years as more daily newspapers have responded to changes that include busier late afternoon and evening lifestyles for a growing number of Americans.

Closer to home, the April 2 conversion will leave only two cities in this region, Big Spring and El Paso, with afternoon daily publications. Morning daily newspapers are published in all other West Texas cities.

DOE opts against increasing oil reserves

By ANDREW EDISON
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration has decided not to expand the Strategic Petroleum Reserve beyond its current capacity of 750 million barrels, congressional sources said Friday.

The Department of Energy will announce this decision Monday and release its study of the reserve, which the petroleum industry and some members of Congress have said should be enlarged.

Congress last year considered the issue but took no action.

The DOE report, which was supposed to be released Feb. 1, will mark the first time the Bush administration has taken a stance on the expansion question.

John Donnelly, a spokesman for DOE, declined to comment on the report except to confirm that it will be released Monday.

The administration's decision is likely to cool any move in Congress this year to expand the reserve.

"Congress looks at DOE as the damn experts, the people who know what the hell they are talking about," said one congressional source. "If you can't listen to what the energy people are telling you, then who needs the Energy Department? I think they do value what the DOE says," he said.

The Senate unanimously approved legislation last May to expand the capacity of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to one billion barrels and extend its authorization five years. The House didn't vote on the legislation.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve was created in 1975 to help minimize the effects of any future oil supply interruption, such as the embargo that many oil-exporting nations imposed in 1973.

The reserve presently has a targeted capacity of 750 million barrels but only holds about 580 million barrels.

Congressional sources said the Bush administration believes the current 7... million barrel target is sufficient to ward off any oil crisis.

Additionally, the congressional sources said, the cost of expanding the reserve would be politically unfeasible at a time when all federal spending is under scrutiny.

Mike Farley, a spokesman for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve project in New Orleans, said any expansion of one of the Texas sites would generate around $320 million in new construction work.

Population trend contributes to lower per-pupil fund level

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Latest figures indicate Texas public education spending is substantially below average on a per-pupil basis, yet when measured against total population, money for schools is slightly above the norm.

The apparent discrepency stems from a heavy statistical skew toward youth in the state population, said Nancy Stevens of the Texas Education Agency's Research Planning Division.

U.S. Census figures from 1988 indicate that 40.6 percent of the Texas population is under 25, the highest percentage among the nation's 10 most populous states.

"That would make a big difference," said Stevens. Texas schools are having to provide education to proportionally more students than other states, which dilutes the amount of money available.

The statistics indicate the difficult job ahead for legislators as they try to forge consensus on the school finance issue and satisfy a recent state Supreme Court decision.

A special legislative session on the problem is scheduled to begin Feb. 27. Charles Miller, the chairman of a state task force studying the issue, said he does not think slightly above average education spending per capita will lead to a taxpayer revolt should the Legislature ask for even more money.

In one view, the state should increase its share of the education effort anyway, he said, since it now shoulders only about 43 percent of the load.

Most states split fairly evenly between state and local sources of revenue, said Miller, a Houston businessman appointed by Gov. Bill Clements.

Bill Allaway, spokesman for the Texas Association of Taxpayers, said members of that organization are studying the school finance debate closely, but are generally willing to pay more for education provided they see results.

"The education community in general has not done a very good job of explaining to people how more money would make for better education," he said.

Allaway and Miller both cited a general feeling that increases in the state education budget over the past few years have not brought accompanying increases in student performance.

"Our members believe that it is okay to pay for good government and it's not okay to pay for bad

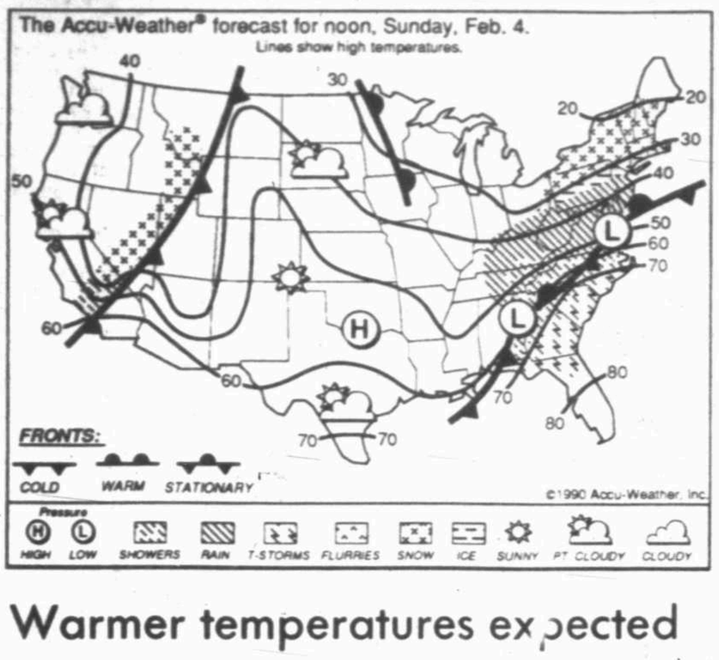
WEATHER SUMMARY



Warmer temperatures expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies and warmer temperatures with a high near 60 with 5 to 10 mph south winds, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the lower 20s, NWS said.

Monday will be sunny and warmer with a high in the lower 60s, NWS said.

Saturday's high of 55 was 25 degrees short of the record 80 was set in 1988. The low of 32 was 24 degrees warmer than one year ago when the mercury dipped to a record of 8.

STATE

A cold front that was causing showers and thunderstorms Saturday moved into Louisiana and off the Texas coast, leaving behind light rain and clouds over the eastern part of the state.

Skies cleared in the western half of the state. Clear skies stretched from the northern Panhandle down south to the Big Bend. Light snow and low clouds had moved out of the Panhandle by midday.

The high pressure ridge continued to bring moderate winds out of the north at speeds of 15 to 25 mph with occasional higher gusts to most areas.

Under clearing skies the thermometers rose and the humidity dropped out west while in the east conditions were cool due to cloud cover.

Readings were in the 40s Panhandle and North Texas, 50s southeast and Far West, 60s South to 70s Lower Rio Grande Valley. Extremes at 3 p.m. ranged from 41 at Dalhart to 73 at Brownsville.

The National Weather Service forecast clear skies Sunday and Sunday night. Highs will range from the 50s in the Panhandle to 70s in South Texas. Lows Sunday night will be in the 20s in the Panhandle and Hill Country to near 50 along the coast.

Billie Sol Estes files for bankruptcy

AUSTIN (AP) — Convicted swindler Billie Sol Estes has filed for bankruptcy, saying he owes more than $52 million and has assets of just $150.

Along with his wife, Patsy, Estes filed a Chapter 7 claim in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, citing debts that include $50 million in back taxes and interest, according to his attorney, Charles McDonald of Austin.

"This could get Uncle Sam off his back," McDonald said Friday. "But, you never know what Uncle Sam is going to do."

In addition to the $50 million he owes the federal government, Estes' other debts include $2 million to Pacific Finance Co. of Dallas; a 20-year-old, $1,376 tax lien held by the state of Texas; $3,000 owed to Sears, Roebuck & Co.; and $200 to VISA.

Estes, 64, currently has a monthly income of $700, which comes from Social Security, according to papers filed with the bankruptcy court. He estimated the family's monthly expenditures to be $720, including $100 for "eating out."

The $150 Estes lists as assets is a far cry from a personal fortune once estimated as high as $400 million when he was a Pecos agricultural czar.

Estes was convicted in 1963 of federal mail fraud and conspiracy in a multimillion-dollar swindle involving non-existent fertilizer tanks backed by federal agriculture loans.

He began serving a 15-year prison term in 1965 and was paroled in 1971.

In 1979, his parole was revoked and he was sentenced to another 10 years in prison for mail fraud and conspiracy to conceal assets. He was released in 1983.

Most recently, Estes was indicted late last year on charges that he masterminded a plot to set up a new company with plans stolen from another. He was freed on $10,000 bond.

In his motion for bankruptcy, Estes notes his only activity as "sewing in home for Patsy."

When asked what's next for Estes, his attorney, McDonald, replied, "Billie Sol hasn't said he plans to do anything, but doesn't want to be a vegetable for the rest of his life."

WELLS

The wells sampled are near South Midkiff and Cotton Flat roads about a mile south of I-20, he said.

Ms. Laminack, who lives on South Midkiff Road, claimed that water quality in the area has been declining.

"The water has been bad for the last eight or 10 years," she said. "We had good water when we first came out here, but then it got real salty and bad. Then the last couple of years it's formed a dark, rusty looking stain anywhere it sits."

A reverse osmosis filter helps the taste, and Ms. Laminack said she will keep drinking her well water until TWC test results are in.

"I've been drinking it 18 years," she said. "I don't figure another week or so would make that big a difference."

Tina Dorie, who also lives on South Midkiff Road, said she started drinking bottled water because she also fears her well may be contaminated.

Her 29-year-old husband died of leukemia in 1986, and she said she does not want to take any chances with her or her children's health.

"Do you know how many people have died out here?" she asked. "There was a bunch who lived right in this area."

Ms. Laminack said she knows many people in the area with cancer and kidney and stomach ailments.

"I hadn't made any connection with the illnesses and the water until Lillian Smith brought to my attention the deaths in the area from cancer and the contaminated wells down the road," she said.

Ms. Smith, a County Road 118 resident, said she became suspicious about her own water because of publicity surrounding a Jan. 10 Dowell Schlumberger Inc. report of contaminated wells north of the interstate.

Norm Carnett, Dowell Schlumberger local manager, said contamination of those wells is not related to the TWC investigation of water problems alleged by Ms. Smith and her neighbors.

"From the information that we have ... it looks like the problem we have over here has nothing to do with the problems south of Interstate 20," Carnett said last week.

Dowell Schlumberger officials have said they discovered the contaminated wells during voluntary testing in early January near the company's Industrial Road site.

Company reports provided to the TWC show that wells serving 10 residences on West Hicks Avenue, West Francis Avenue and Cotton Flat Road are contaminated with industrial solvents. At least eight commercial wells in the same neighborhood are contaminated, reports show.

Carnett said residents with contaminated wells have been told not to drink the water.

Contaminants found include chlorinated hydrocarbons such as 1,1 dichloroethane, carbon tetrachloride and methylene chloride, reports show.

Mike Ellis, director of the Texas Poison Control Center in Galveston, said any of the chemicals found in the Dowell Schlumberger study "may be carcinogenic in man."

"All of these things can potentially sensitize the heart to releases of adrenalin," he said. Carbon tetrachloride "kills liver cells, and sensitizes them to the presence of alcohol."

Ellis said that while amounts of chlorinated hydrocarbons in water tested by Dowell Schlumberger exceed state standards, it is impossible to tell how dangerous the water really is.

"Would I drink it, knowing that it had that in it?" he asked. "Probably not."

He said telling residents to stop drinking the contaminated water was a "reasonable approach."

Carnett said his company also will provide affected residents with bottled water and well filtration systems at least until the contamination source is determined.

He said Dowell Schlumberger plans eventually to ask the city of Midland to provide water for affected residents, who live outside city limits.

City Manager Fred Poe said providing municipal water to areas not yet incorporated is against city policy. Any such arrangement probably would have to be temporary, he said.

"The costs involved are a lot more than what the city wants to take on at this time," Poe said.

Meanwhile, Carnett said his company is not necessarily responsible for the contamination but is working with the TWC to learn who is.

"We expect that there will be more than one source," Carnett said.

He said Dowell Schlumberger has tested about 70 wells so far and will soon begin digging test wells to determine the range of contamination.

TWC geologist Tracy Payne said it is too early to tell whether groundwater contamination near Dowell Schlumberger has spread south of I-20.

"Right now we've got two investigations working," Payne said. "I don't know if they're related. They may be, they may not be."

Ms. Smith said she is "not pointing any fingers," but she wants to find out whether groundwater in her neighborhood is bad and who is responsible for contamination.

She said she knows of about 40 cancer deaths and eight leukemia deaths among about 140 households in the sparsely populated, semirural area just outside city limits.

Ms. Smith said she suspects the groundwater may be responsible for what she calls a "high index of illness."

With the help of other concerned residents, she has organized a door-to-door survey to determine area cancer rates. She said about 20 Midland College students assisted with the survey last week.

Midland College biology professor Carl Frailey said he is offering extra credit to students who volunteer for survey duty.

Ms. Smith said she is sending survey results to the Texas Department of Health in Austin, which is expected to determine whether the area cancer rate is abnormal.

Dr. Carl Torres, department epidemiologist, said he will review the survey results but that he would be surprised to find a "cancer cluster" in the area.

"Cancer is a very common disease," Torres said. He estimated that one in three people will develop cancer in their lifetime.

Tim Rainbolt, department assistant epidemiologist, said Midland County cancer rates are relatively low.

The 1988 male cancer death rate in Midland was 139.73 per 100,000 population compared with a statewide rate of 198.35 per 100,000, Rainbolt said. For Midland females, the rate was 116.58 per 100,000 compared with 125.07 per 100,000 statewide.

Torres said the department will investigate further if it finds excess cancer in the area.

Department water hygiene specialist Larry Mitchell said the department will not take any action in the case unless high cancer rates are discovered.

"We do not regulate private wells," Mitchell said. "The Texas Water Commission is the agency that gets involved with that sort of thing."

TWC District Manager William Lockey said his office takes groundwater contamination allegations seriously, and that the testing has been assigned "top priority."

Department lab results should be available in two weeks, he said, rather than the normal four to six weeks.

Lockey said the water will be tested for lead, chrome, mercury, chlorides, sulfates and harmful bacteria as well as volatile solvents like those found in wells tested by Dowell Schlumberger.

Lockey said that if the wells are contaminated the TWC will instruct residents to stop drinking the water. The TWC will then conduct more tests and attempt to find the source and extent of contamination, he said.

"Anytime I get a complaint like this, I'm going to check it out," Lockey said. "The thing I don't want to happen is a 'sky is falling' type reaction."

TWC's Johnson said contamination would not be surprising in light of the area's proximity to oil fields, chemical-related industries and caliche pits.

"Caliche pits are a very convenient place to dump just about anything," Johnson said. "That has always been a problem in West Texas."

SCHOOLS

government," Allaway said. "And that applies to schools as much as anything else."

Taking state and local expenditures together, Texas spends about $696 per capita on schools and ranks 19th among the 50 states and District of Columbia. The national average on per capita education spending is $690, according to the U.S. Bureau of Census.

Turning the figure around somewhat, Texas ranks 38th in the average number of state and local dollars it spends per student.

That figure in the 1987-88 school year was $3,409, according to the U.S. Department of Education, compared to the national average of $3,977.

Education advocates such as Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and chairman of the Senate Education Committee, say the below-average per-student spending figure hides worse problems in poorer districts.

Parker said that business leaders "for years" have sold the state as a good location for industries that need low-skill, low-wage workers. "And that's what we've got," he said.

Now, with competition for jobs heating up worldwide, the state's unskilled population is losing out to countries where workers can be paid less, he said, and the state needs to upgrade its workers' skills through a better education system.

But Miller said that one of the state's prime advantages in attracting business is its relatively low tax rate.

In addition, because Texas ranks 33rd in the per capita personal income category, the low per-student spending figure "shouldn't be up there," Miller said.

Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice and chairman of the House Public Education Committee, didn't accept the Miller's analysis, which she called "one of those chicken-and-egg things."

"Maybe the reason per capita income is low is because we don't spend much on education," she said.

TEA commissioner links tax bill, education reform

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Education Agency commissioner William Kirby said Saturday a broad-based statewide tax bill is needed to solve the state's education funding woes.

Speaking to the Texas Press Association, Kirby proposed a five-year plan that would raise up to $600 million dollars this year, and he indicated that he would support a state income tax.

The plan also would mandate that the state improve equity by 5 percent each year, putting Texas at 95 percent equity by 1995. About 74 percent of the state's school districts currently are spending at an equal level.

"If we wrote that into the law, then I think that would be acceptable by the court," he said.

The Texas Supreme Court has ruled that the state's current method of school funding violates the state Constitution and discriminates against property-poor districts. The court has ordered that a new funding system be in place by May 1.

Gov. Bill Clements has called a special session of the Legislature for Feb. 27 to revamp the funding system.

Without a tax bill, Kirby said lawmakers could "scrape up" about $200 million this spring, but "I don't believe that $200 million will meet the court test."

He says the Legislature won't support the "Robin Hood approach" of taking funds from wealthy districts and redistributing them to poorer ones. But he questions whether lawmakers will have the commitment to raise taxes during an election year.

"If you're going to redistribute the money, somebody has to lose in order for someone to get," Kirby said. Under a redistribution plan, the state's largest districts would lose the most.

Midland's Admarc agency sweeps advertising competition

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Admarc of Midland took home 17 ADDY awards and 19 excellence awards at the Permian Basin Advertising Federation's ADDY competition Saturday.

Odessa's Womack Kleypas Advertising Network won five ADDYs and 14 excellence awards in the annual contest.

According to Permian Basin Advertising Federation ADDY Committee Chairman Retha Lindsey, the 1989 ADDY competition included 186 entries. This year, 55 excellence awards and 27 ADDYs were presented.

KPEJ took Best of Show with a Media Self Promotion spot entitled "Bad Barney."

Three special judges' awards were presented in addition to Best of Show. They included a special print award for an annual report done by Admarc for Midland Memorial Hospital, a special technical award for TV for the "Thinker" spot done by Womack Claypoole Griffin for Odessa College and a special radio award for the Midland Reporter-Telegram's "Meeting People" spots.

In addition to the ADDY awards, a Silver Medalist award was presented posthumously to Mike McLaren, longtim PBAF and ADDY supporter. Each year the Silver Medalist award is presented to an individual who has made an outstanding contribution to the advertising industry in the Permian Basin.

This year's ceremony was dedicated to his memory.

Max Howard accepted the Silver Medalist award in McLaren's behalf and in turn presented the PBAF with McLaren's national ADDY award.

Judges for the contest were Harry Ottmann, president of Ottmann Advertising in Fort Worth; Sam Beeson, creative director at Feller, Inc., in Austin; and Robert Latorre, an independent director/photographer from Dallas.

Other ADDY winners included Midland Reporter-Telegram, one; KOSA-TV, one; Midland Memorial Hospital, one; KMID-TV, one; and KPEJ-TV, one.

Award of Excellence winners included KOSA-TV, three; Midland Memorial Hospital, three; Snelson Advertising, three; KMID-TV, three; KTPX-TV, two; Midland Reporter-Telegram, one; KPEJ-TV, one; Odessa College, one; SG & Co., one; Dominey and Etheridge, Inc., one; and KMPG Radio, one.

Three injured in auto mishap

Three people involved in a Saturday accident were expected to be treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital, a hospital spokesperson said.

The people, whose names were unavailable, were taken to MMH after they were involved in a two-car accident about 7:40 p.m. at 3421 W. Wall St., Midland emergency officials said.

The Jaws of Life had to be used to pry one of the victims free of the vehicle, officials said. Two ambulances, a fire truck and a rescue vehicle were called to the scene, authorities said.

MISD trustees to meet Tuesday

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will hold a community meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 6 at 5:30 p.m. at the Midland High School auditorium, 906 W. Illinois Ave., to hear citizen input on site selection for a proposed new junior high school.

MISD spokesman Ted Miller said the board will not make a final decision on the site at this meeting.

Residents of south Midland have been lobbying the board since last fall for the new school to be built in their area of town.

Houston bomb mailed from North Carolina

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston church mail bomb that injured a pastor's daughter was mailed from Elizabethtown, N.C., a federal postal inspector says.

Meanwhile, officials say a West Virginia man earlier suspected in the bombing is not now considered a prime suspect.

The mail bomb injured 31-year-old Lisa Osteen. She suffered bruises and flash burns and was in good condition at Methodist Hospital in Houston.

Inspector H. Gaston said there is strong evidence that the bomb was mailed in Elizabethtown. He and other federal investigators declined to describe the evidence.

Gaston told the Houston Chronicle Friday that North Carolina authorities have no evidence connecting the bomb to traveling welder Jeffrey Mack Boggs of Spencer, W. Va.

The 32-year-old Boggs was arrested Thursday on federal firearms charges at a rest stop west of Orange, about 86 miles east of Houston, Orange County Sheriff Huel Fontenot said.

"We're aware of it (Boggs' arrest), and we're not throwing it out," said Bill Johnson of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms office in Fayetteville, N. C. But he added that Boggs is not a prime suspect.

Houston bomb squad officer George DeLoach told federal authorities that hot glue sticks and molly bolts removed from Boggs' car are similar to items used in the packaged pipe bomb that was mailed to Lakewood Church pastor John Osteen.

Molly bolts are bolts that fan out after being inserted through a wall.

U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham in Beaumont would officially confirm only that Boggs is being held without bond after being indicted on two charges in connection with a homemade pistol found in the car.

"I would not rule him out," he said. "There are many suspects. We're not even saying he's a target in the investigation," Wortham said.

Boggs is being held in the Jefferson County Jail in Beaumont after being indicted on a charge of possession of an unregistered firearm.

Boggs, wearing a bulletproof vest and shin guards, was arrested Sunday in Pasadena on a charge of unlawfully carrying a .22-caliber Derringer.

Sheriff's deputies had found Boggs' 1974 Chevrolet Nova at a rest stop between Orange and Vidor Tuesday after highway department workers told deputies the car had been there four days.

The car's door panels had been reinforced with concrete, Fontenot said, adding it appeared Boggs had been living in the car because it had a refrigerator, a bed and a portable toilet inside.

Inside the car, authorities found a homemade firearm designed to shoot .44-caliber Magnum ammunition, Fontenot said. Police also found a radio transmitter, circuit boards, ball bearings, pressure-sensitive switches, wiring and metal foil — items commonly used to manufacture explosives, Fontenot said.

Boggs' parents, Mack and Juanita Boggs of Nashville, Tenn., said there are probably reasonable explanations for the materials found in their son's car.

Mack Boggs, 56, said the body armor and knee pads were probably protective equipment used in his son's work. The switches and wiring may have been parts of a security alarm his son had bought, the father said.

Boggs' parents said he worked in the Houston area two or three years ago, but they knew of no connection with Lakewood Church or Osteen.

Boggs appeared Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Earl Hines and waived his right to legal counsel. Assistant U.S. Attorney John Stevens of Beaumont made a written motion requesting Boggs be held without bail before trial because he presented a danger to the community.

Hines set arraignment and a hearing on the motion for Tuesday morning.

If convicted, Boggs faces prison sentences of up to 10 years and fines of up to $250,000 for each charge.

Official urges agencies to file lawsuits

DALLAS (AP) — The only way to force public agencies to comply with the state's open records and meetings acts is to file more lawsuits against them, says an assistant attorney general who is eager to do just that.

Riggs

"That's what it's going to have to take — more people filing lawsuits," Jennifer Riggs told an audience of Texas newspaper publishers and editors Saturday.

Riggs, chief of the open government section of the Texas attorney general's office, told a group of Texas Press Association members that until recently, there have been few criminal prosecutions or threats of prosecution for violations of the open records and meetings laws.

The reason for this are obvious, she said: it's a misdemeanor and the county attorney is the one who would prosecute it.

"Now, where does the money come from for the county attorney? ... Most of that money comes from the county," Riggs said. "So when you ask a county attorney to take action against a county for an open meetings or open records violation, you basically are asking them to file criminal complaints against their employer.

"It's very difficult to do. They're usually in the position of advising their employer," she said.

Riggs, speaking during the last day of the TPA's three-day mid-winter trade show and convention, told the news people what to expect this decade concerning Texas' open records and meetings acts.

She said the state's law enforcement agencies are nervous about their internal investigations and will be fighting to keep them out away from public scrutiny.

"We are fast approaching a time when nothing will be retained on paper," she said. "Record keeping in the next decade may be even more important than what's open and what's not."

Access to computer records will be the biggest problem, she predicted.

Agencies that want access to public records may say that because public and non-public information is mixed in computer records, someone wanting access to the public information may be charged for expensive computer programming to separate the two, Riggs said.

She also expects more government agencies to try to withhold information through what is known as the "privatization" of records.

For example, she said, a city council may hire a consultant to search for a new city manager. The resumes and applications all would go to the consultant and the city council would assert that they were the property of the consultant, not the city, and thus not open to public scrutiny, she said.

"This trend is going to be a major problem," Riggs said.

The Open Records and Meetings Acts are seeing increasing use by the public and media, Riggs said, but 80 percent of the requests are coming from non-media parties.

In the last couple of years, letters on open government issues to her office have jumped from 50 per month to 200 per month.

Before outlining the future of the open records and meetings laws, Riggs regaled the sympathetic audience with some horror stories of recent cases.

Jury gives sentence in eight minutes

AUSTIN (AP) — In less than eight minutes, an Austin jury recommended a life sentence in prison for a man convicted of aggravated sexual assault in what law officers have called one of the most heinous crimes in Austin history.

Jurors took 7½ minutes Friday to recommend that Richard Danziger receive a life sentence in prison for his part in the sexual assault of Pizza Hut assistant manager Nancy DePriest.

Danziger was convicted Thursday of the Oct. 23, 1988, aggravated sexual assault. Ms. DePriest, 20, was bound, gagged, raped, sodomized, and shot in the back of the head, police said. She died that evening.

According to officials with the Travis County District Attorney's office, the decision is one of the quickest ever handed down in the county.

Danziger, 19, will have to serve 15 years in prison before being considered for parole.

Christopher Ochoa, Danziger's former roommate, confessed and implicated Danziger three weeks after the crime. Ochoa, 23, said he and Danziger raped Ms. DePriest eight times during the attack.

Ochoa, the confessed trigger man, pleaded guilty to murder in exchange for a life sentence that is expected to be handed down later this month.

Deaths of spiritual counselor followers prompt investigation

DALLAS (AP) — A prosecutor investigating the deaths of eight followers of a housewife-turned-guru over the last 12 years is trying to piece together a criminal case with a hard-to-prove premise: that beliefs can kill.

Four followers of mystical leader Terri Hoffman have committed suicide, including two of her four husbands, and two died in apparent accidents. Of those six, two told relatives they suffered from terminal illnesses, although autopsies showed they did not, and at least four bequeathed money and property to Ms. Hoffman.

Then, in November, police linked the deaths of an investment counselor and his wife to Ms. Hoffman's pastiche of philosophy, ancient mythology and metaphysics.

David and Glenda Goodman were found shot to death in their den, two handguns beside them on the floor. On a desk a few feet away lay two purple spiral-bound notebooks in which they recorded their devotion to Ms. Hoffman.

In one book, Mrs. Goodman called "the shooting" the path to success and an escape from the sufferings of the physical world. Soon, she wrote to her husband, he would be able to come and go from the physical world at will, just as, she said, "Terri" can.

The journals tell more: how the Goodmans, both 48, were considering leaving their home to Ms. Hoffman. Their check registers indicated they'd already given her $110,000 over three years, police say.

Hoffman

Goodman

In addition to the deaths of the eight devotees, a ninth person, a housekeeper, died when the car of one follower plunged off a Colorado cliff.

Assistant District Attorney Cecil Emerson said he's trying to determine whether "mind control" can be legally blamed for contributing to a death, which might require breaking new legal ground.

So far, investigators have gathered mostly autopsy reports, the files of police investigations into the accidents and the financial records of some of those who died.

No criminal action has been taken against Ms. Hoffman, but two lawsuits have been filed against her.

In 1982, the brother of follower Sandra Cleaver contested her will leaving everything to Ms. Hoffman, including a $300,000 life insurance policy and a house. Six days after the case went to trial, Ms. Hoffman and Ms. Cleaver's brother agreed out of court to split the estate.

She faces a civil trial in March stemming from a wrongful death suit brought by the children of her fourth husband, Don Hoffman, who killed himself in September 1988.

Ms. Hoffman's attorney, Fred Time, said she is being persecuted.

"It's witch hunting," Time said. "She's supposed to have all these tremendous powers — ridiculous. There's no history of that anywhere in the world."

He said the suit and investigation would clear Ms. Hoffman, 51, who he described as a "plain, ordinary person who gets money by counseling people."

How does he explain the number of deaths among her followers?

"She listens to people who are in extremely transient stages of their life," Time said.

Ms. Hoffman told The Associated Press she would answer questions only in the presence of Time, who said he would not allow her to speak to reporters while an investigation was pending.

Ms. Hoffman became known in Dallas in the late 1960s and early '70s for her meditation classes, a blend of mythology and metaphysics in which "masters" were said to be reached.

In 1974, Ms. Hoffman founded Conscious Development of Body, Mind & Soul Inc. to sell tapes and booklets of her teachings. She sold thousands, Time said, and attracted hundreds of followers.

David Goodman became one of them in the early '70s. He met Ms. Hoffman at Dallas' Southern Methodist University, where he was a business professor and she was teaching a meditation class, Emerson said.

Ms. Hoffman counseled Goodman during his first divorce, they became friends and, years later, made business investments together.

When Ms. Hoffman was sued by Ms. Cleaver's brother, Goodman testified on her behalf. And when he left SMU in 1987, she helped him start an investment newsletter.

Goodman married and divorced twice more before he met his fourth wife, Glenda, also a devotee. They continued to adhere to Ms. Hoffman's teachings years after most followers abandoned them.

Ms. Hoffman's classes began to dissipate in 1977 after the suicide of her second husband, Glenn Cooley. Some followers have said they became wary as Ms. Hoffman's meditations and spiritual sessions focused less on learning than on fighting "evil" forces.

Cooley killed himself less than a week after the couple's divorce became final, the first of the nine deaths police now are investigating.

In 1979, Devereaux Cleaver, the 14-year-old daughter of Sandra Cleaver, drowned rafting in Hawaii. Two years later, Ms. Cleaver and her housekeeper, who did not follow Ms. Hoffman's teachings, died in a car that tumbled off a Colorado cliff near land owned by some devotees.

In 1987, another follower, Robin Otstott, shot herself after telling people she had viral hepatitis. Like Don Hoffman, who said he had cancer when he took a drug overdose, an autopsy showed Ms. Otstott did not have the disease she claimed.

A Chicago follower of Ms. Hoffman, Mary Levinson, also killed herself in 1987. Just weeks before, she changed her will to dispose of her estate, valued at more than $125,000, in a manner that could not be traced, her parents told The Dallas Morning News.

Banc One wins bidding for Bright Banc Savings

DALLAS (AP) — Regulators have sold Texas' largest insolvent government-controlled thrift to Banc One Corp., which last year was awarded the failed MCorp banks in the second biggest bank bailout ever.

Banc One, an Ohio banking company with a reputation for profits and strong retail competition, paid $45 million to buy deposits and some assets of Bright Banc Savings Association, founded by former Dallas Cowboys' owner H.R. "Bum" Bright.

The Resolution Trust Corp., the government agency created to rescue the thrift industry, will provide $1.1 billion in assistance and keep assets with a book value of $1.4 billion.

Earlier this week, Banc One paid federal regulators $33.7 million for all percent of the voting stock of Bank One-Texas, comprised of the 20 banks seized last year from MCorp. Bank One-Texas had been managing the banks since last June.

The FDIC retains about $416.2 million worth of non-voting stock in Bank One-Texas, although the holding company is committed to purchase the stock within five years. The government also provided $2.5 billion in assistance.

Bank One-Texas Chairman Harvey R. Mitchell said Friday the institution will continue to expand through purchasing both insolvent and solvent financial institutions and constructing new branches.

The acquisition gives Bank One Texas a formidable retail network in Texas, with 107 branches and $14 billion in assets, among the 25 largest banking operations in the nation.

The sale is the largest since enactment of the S&L bailout law in August and comes after congressional criticism increased about the slow pace of the rescues.

The agency has taken over more than 350 failed thrifts, disposing of 43 of them. In most of the transactions, though, it has simply transferred the failed institutions' deposits to the new owner and retained the assets for later sale.

In addition to assuming all $2.6 billion of Bright Banc's deposits, Bank One-Texas will get $1.7 billion in performing assets, including $904 million in single family mortgages, $659 million in cash and securities, $145 million in consumer loans and $20 million in other assets.

The RTC is keeping $1.4 billion in assets, mostly sour loans and repossessed real estate. After it sells the assets, it estimates the government's total loss on the institution will be $1.4 billion, including the $1.1 billion paid to the Ohio company.

Banc One beat out four other bidders, which the RTC did not name but said included one other bank, two S&Ls and one non-financial institution.

The Ohio company, ranked among the top handful of most profitable banks in the nation, has a reputation as a pioneer in retail banking. It was one of the first banks to offer automated tellers. And, it has been a leader in packaging obligations owed by credit card holders into securities for sale to investors.

Bright Banc was created in the consolidation of three smaller S&Ls and invested aggressively in Texas commercial real estate. It got into trouble when property values began to decline following the 1986 collapse of oil prices.

The thrift was seized by the government on Feb. 8, only two days after Bush announced his bailout plan, and was put up for bid Aug. 30.

William C. Ferguson, a financial institutions consultant in Irving, Texas, said most of Bright Banc's problems were caused by loans made before the consolidation.

Maryland woman restoring treasured Texas artifact

SHARPSBURG, Md. (AP) — The San Jacinto battle flag, one of Texas' most treasured artifacts and symbol of the day the fledgling Republic won its independence from Mexico, is nothing more now than shards of silk spread across a workroom table.

In a house in the foothills of the Appalachians, textile conservator Fonda G. Thomsen is taking apart and, with the help of a microscope and techniques learned over years of study, putting together again what's left of the 155-year-old banner.

"How do you tell them they really don't have a flag left?" asks Ms. Thomsen, examining the fragments of original silk that remain glued or shellacked to a piece of linen.

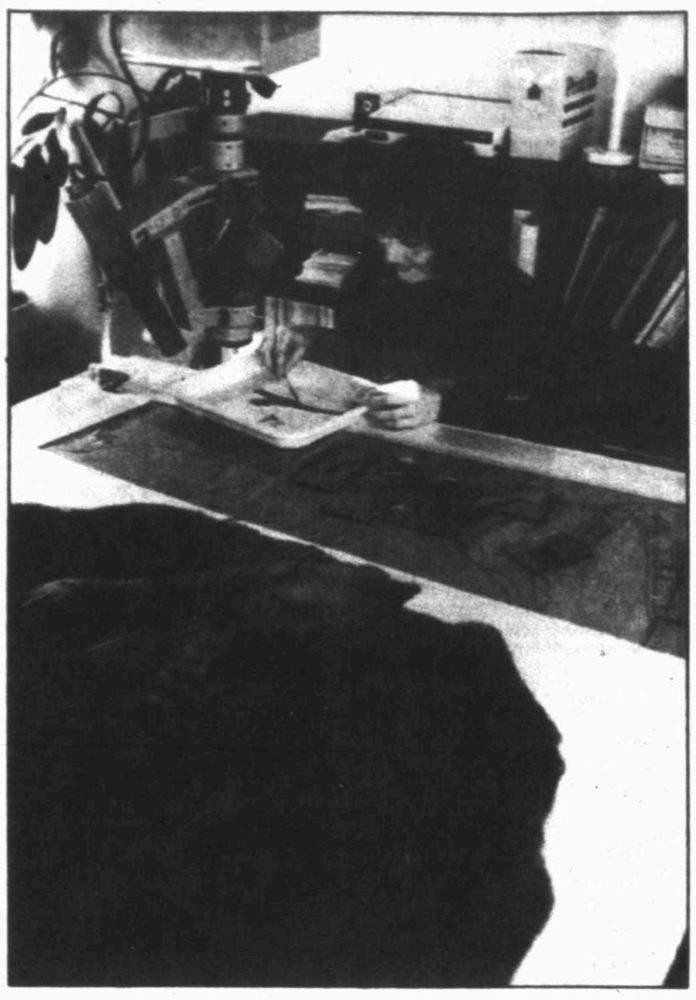
Ms. Thomsen was hired to do the second restoration of the flag carried into battle by a cadre of Kentucky men who volunteered to help Texas against Mexico.

When she and the banner left Texas last November, it was under the watchful eye of the Department of Public Safety. The flag is so precious to the state that DPS officers escorted a van carrying the flag, Capitol Curator Bonnie Campbell and Ms. Thomsen from the state Capitol in Austin to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

A DPS officer stayed at a hotel that night with the flag, and then made sure it was loaded safely into its own cargo container for the flight to Maryland the next morning.

Since bringing the flag to her home near the Antietam Battlefield, site of the Civil War's bloodiest day, Ms. Thomsen has been trying to undo the damage of the flag's first restoration in the early 1930s and years of deterioration from exposure to light. The flag has hung in the House of Representatives chamber since 1933.

Allen McCree, the architect restoring the Capitol, said the San Jacinto flag is a symbol not only of Texas' April 21, 1836, victory over Mexico, but also the cleverness of commander-in-chief Sam Houston and the fact that Texas, a former republic, is the only state in the union allowed to fly its flag at the same height as the American flag.



AP Laserphoto

Textile conservator Fonda G. Thomsen works to restore the San Jacinto battle flag at her home in Sharpsburg, Md.

"It was our resounding 20-minute victory at the Battle of San Jacinto, after that terrible defeat at the Alamo, that turned us around and gave us our independence," McCree said. "The flag is rife with the symbolism of victory."

So when the state decided to restore the flag as part of a $154.5 million restoration of the 101-year-old Capitol, Ms. Campbell looked "high and low" for a textile conservator before choosing Ms. Thomsen, said McCree.

Ms. Thomsen has advised the Smithsonian Institution on preservation of the original Star-Spangled Banner, and her many textile restorations include the Treasury Guard flag that John Wilkes Booth ripped with the spur of his boot as he fled Ford Theater after shooting President Lincoln.

Airport may not be necessary if Austin base closes, official says

AUSTIN (AP) — If Bergstrom Air Force Base is closed, the economic impact could cut commercial air traffic to the point that building a new municipal airport would no longer be necessary, officials said.

Since federal officials recommended last week that Bergstrom be closed as part of widespread defense cuts, city officials and airport interest groups have been debating whether to build the airport at the base or in Manor, Texas.

"Our position is we can't make any further commitments or even spend any more money at the Manor site until we know what's going to happen," said Bob Montgomery, chairman of the Airport Affairs Committee, which represents airlines operating out of Robert Mueller Municipal Airport.

"There have been reports that 25 percent of the Austin economy is related somehow to Bergstrom," Montgomery said Friday. "At the very least the loss of those jobs and the people who are employed there would decrease traffic, which may mean that maybe the demand will not necessitate a new airport for a longer period.

Montgomery said the airlines still want the base studied as an alternate site for the new airport.

The Austin City Council on Thursday approved a 60-day study of the Bergstrom site. The council also decided to halt the purchase of land at the Manor site until the study is complete, but it will continue with appraisals, land surveys and planning.

Mayor Lee Cooke said the city plans to study the effect Bergstrom's closing would have on air traffic forecasts.

"I can assure you, though, that to me Robert Mueller is not a long-term option for us. I want that signal loud and clear to the airlines," Cooke said.

Cooke also said he thinks the effect Bergstrom's closing would have on air traffic would be short term.

In 1989, 2.1 million passengers boarded planes at Mueller airport. According to estimates made by city consultants for the Manor airport, passenger traffic by 1995 is forecast at a low of 2.7 million passengers to a high of 3.3 million.

Montgomery, who is an official with Southwest Airlines but was speaking for all the airlines as chairman of the Airport Affairs Committee, said the city based its need for a new airport on projections that assumed Bergstrom would remain open. The committee met with city aviation staff last week to discuss airport options.

"When you look at the reasons for closing Mueller and moving it there were three big issues," Montgomery said. "One was air space conflicts with Bergstrom. Second was Mueller's ability to handle increased passenger demand. The third was the environmental impact of further development at Mueller."

Although the airlines have not signed an agreement to build the Manor airport, they have agreed to move forward with the airport master plan and land acquisition, City Aviation Director Charles Gates said.

Gates and Montgomery said they are confident the airlines and the city will continue to work together as they have been.

"The feeling is that we're partners in this, and we have to keep holding each other's hands to carry each other to the altar to get married in February 1995 at Manor or February 1995 at Bergstrom," Gates said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Miss Moscow may lose crown

HOUSTON (AP) — The second-ever Miss Moscow says that six months into her reign, she is being threatened with the loss of her crown because of several pictures of her that appeared in this month's Playboy magazine.

Larisa Litichevskaya, 20, told the Houston Chronicle that she was practically ordered to pose for the pictures shortly after being picked Miss Moscow.

Now, her promotional tour across the U.S.S.R. has been postponed indefinitely and her hopes of travel abroad have been dashed.

It all started shortly after she was crowned. Within hours after winning the pageant, Miss Litichevskaya and her mother, Elena, said she was "almost ordered" by contest officials to pose for some "very artistic" photographs that would be marketed in Scandinavia on posters and calendars.

"There was no mention of Playboy at all," she told the Chronicle.

No concerts planned

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND (AP) — Spring break at South Padre Island this year looks like it will be a little quieter and perhaps a bit more sober.

Two major breweries that have sponsored concerts at South Padre Island during past spring breaks have indicated they won't be doing it this year.

"Concerts are all right, but they're very expensive and they're not cost effective," said Tom O'Connell of Valley Beverage, distributor for Miller Brewing Co. at the southern tip of the state.

A spokeswoman for Anheuser-Busch said that company also has no plans for a spring break concert at South Padre Island.

Island officials say they don't think the lack of a big concert will affect spring break business, when tens of thousands of college students from all over the United States invade the resort.

Teen kills 'nagging mother'

HOUSTON (AP) — A 13-year-old youth told Houston police he shot his mother because he couldn't stand her nagging any more.

Houston homicide Sgt. Nancy Sovoia said Linda Wallace, 28, was pronounced dead at Ben Taub Hospital shortly after the shooting Friday in her home in Fort Bend County.

The teen-ager was taken before a Fort Bend County magistrate then brought to the Houston Police Department headquarters for questioning, Ms. Sovoia said. After questioning he was scheduled to be returned to Fort Bend County juvenile authorities.

The first officers to arrive said the teen told them, "She was nagging me, and I couldn't take it anymore."

Jackson may be looking in wrong political direction

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — After L. Douglas Wilder won the Virginia governorship and David Dinkins was elected mayor of New York City last year, Jesse Jackson suddenly had serious competition for national black political leadership.

Judging from the reaction among 104 star-quality high school students at a Pentagon briefing last week, there's another competitor who already carries a White House entrance pass: Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Powell, an Army four-star general and, at 52, the youngest JCS chairman ever, addressed the students and answered their questions in a Pentagon auditorium for 45 minutes.

When he had finished, many of the students — in the middle of a week in Washington as delegates to the Senate Youth Program — were talking about Powell "as the next president."

His audience of high school students, two from each state, the District of Columbia and schools operated by the Defense Department had been chosen on the basis of their demonstrated qualities of leadership from among elected high school student body officers who are active in civic and school-related organizations.

Powell impressed them with his knowledge, his belief in civilian control of the military and the constitutional role of the military. He also impressed them with his humor, his candor and his direct answers.

His comments included this brief civics lesson:

■ "What makes our military unique? The heart of the armed forces of the United States is the Constitution. It's all in the Constitution. The Constitution says that Congress will raise and support armies, meaning that when we need one, you raise it and you support it. When you don't need it, you get rid of it..."

■ Congress "serves the exact purpose the Constitution and our founding fathers intended it to serve... get the House of Representatives in there to make sure that the parochial and local constituent interests are served, and the Senate, which takes a much broader view of national needs.

"Just throw it all together and say, 'Have at it, guys. Go to it. Fight all you want, scream, shout, throw hand grenades, have press releases, call them nasty guys down at the executive branch.

"'Executive branch, scream at the Congress, and just to make sure we're really mixing it up and everybody is really shouting at everybody and everybody is unhappy with everybody, let's throw the media in, give them complete protection under the First Amendment, give them the Bill of Rights, and say, 'Have at it.'

Baker faces dozens of tough issues in talks with Gorbachev

By BARRY SCHWEID

NATION

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — With revolution in Eastern Europe accelerating and Germans driving to reunite, Secretary of State James A. Baker III is off this week on a diplomatic journey that tests the influence of the superpowers to shape these fast-paced events.

In Baker's bulging briefcase are a dozen tough problems, ranging from the German issue and the sometimes nasty turns the changes in Eastern Europe have taken to the lingering 12-year war in Afghanistan between the Soviet-backed Marxist government and U.S.-armed rebels.

The centerpiece of Baker's nine-day trip, which begins Monday evening, is a face-to-face session with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev toward the end of the week in Moscow. That will give Baker a first-hand account of the course the Kremlin is taking on German reunification and of how Gorbachev is addressing Soviet political and economic problems.

Rumors last week that Gorbachev might surrender his post as general secretary of the Communist Party at a Central Committee meeting Monday and Tuesday renewed U.S. interest in his personal fate and the course of Soviet reform.

Both President Bush, hailing in his State of the Union speech "the new era in the world's affairs" launched by Gorbachev, and Baker, praising "the reformers" in testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, are making a calculated effort to bolster Gorbachev as he tries to overcome resistance to his program of perestroika.

Baker is taking new offers of technical cooperation to Moscow, and in three days of talks with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze hopes to remove some of the remaining roadblocks to completion of a treaty to reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear missiles, submarines and bombers by 30 percent to 50 percent.

The idea is to have a treaty ready for Bush and Gorbachev to sign at a Washington summit meeting in June. Baker's talks with Shevardnadze, which begin Wednesday night, are intended as preparations for the event.

Baker also is prepared to extend the promise of trade privileges, provided the Soviets codify their recent easing of emigration restrictions.

At the same time, though, the Bush administration has to assess ways of encouraging democratic trends in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe in the event Gorbachev's powers ebb.

There seems to be little doubt, however, that the Bush-Baker team is determined to cooperate with Gorbachev. The question that hangs over Baker's mission, apart from the slow response of the Soviet economy, is how much influence the two superpowers working together can have on world events.

The accelerating drive by East and West Germans to form one country again — and the tremors this causes among some Europeans — apparently is only slightly responsive to U.S. and Soviet wishes.

Gorbachev last week softened his opposition, saying unification was not in doubt but must come as part of a revision of Europe's political and military structure.

Baker, meanwhile, reiterated U.S. support for reunification but steered clear of picking and choosing among the approaches that have surfaced.

Among them is one by Hans Modrow, the East German premier, for a neutral, single state that would belong neither to NATO nor the Warsaw Pact, and another by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that would keep Germany in NATO but leave the East German region demilitarized.

Baker met with Genscher on Friday night on the German question and planned a session with French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas at Shannon Airport in Ireland early Tuesday.

Pursuing a fast pace, Baker will then fly to Prague for 27 hours in the capital of Czechoslovakia, the Central European ally of the Soviet Union that is in the midst of an untroubled transition to democracy.

During that brief visit Baker will meet with President Vaclav Havel and other leaders of the new government and make a speech in which he is expected to strengthen his qualified endorsement of a 35-nation European summit meeting this year — a Gorbachev formula for easing East-West tensions.

Bush set the tone for Baker's trip in his State of the Union speech with a proposal to cut U.S. and Soviet troops in Europe to 225,000, with a limit of 195,000 in Central Europe.

That meshes with calls on Gorbachev by Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary to remove Soviet forces — and with Gorbachev's apparent willingness to comply — while leaving tens of thousands in East Germany.

What the Bush initiative may do to negotiations in Vienna is not clear. NATO and the Warsaw Pact are in the midst of completing a treaty to cut the troop levels to 275,000, as Bush proposed last June, along with reductions in tanks and other weapons.

Soviet breakup prompts U.S. military update

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cracking of the communist East bloc has opened a path to profound change in U.S. defenses, and the fallout for military chiefs and soldiers, weapons makers, political leaders and taxpayers is just coming into view.

"A revolution in military affairs could be in the making," says William Kaufmann of the Brookings Institution think tank and a frequent consultant to the Pentagon.

The precise features of this transformation are fuzzy but the direction is clear: smaller Pentagon budgets, fewer troops and a shrinking pipeline of new weapons.

The most frequently asked questions now are how radically will the military be reshaped, and will Congress switch defense dollars to social programs such as housing and education that were squeezed during the Reagan administration's military buildup?

Military planners already are rethinking traditional defense strategies — while trying to hold together the North Atlantic alliance — since few now believe the fractured Warsaw Pact armies pose a major threat to Western security. The glue that has kept NATO together for 40 years is fear of a surprise Soviet invasion of Western Europe. With those fears now fading, will NATO come unstuck?

While even the Pentagon's biggest supporters in Congress see more relaxed East-West relations, some caution against assuming that democratic reforms and moves toward free-market economies in Eastern Europe would last if Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was ousted.

"A return to past Soviet behavior is the biggest risk we must consider in reordering our priorities and restructuring our own defenses," Sen. John Warner of Virginia, the ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said recently.

Even so, the new world order means running a new-look U.S. military on less money — perhaps a lot less. President Bush proposed to Congress a slight trimming of defense spending, to $292 billion, for the budget year starting Oct. 1. Pressures are great on Capitol Hill to wield an even heavier ax.

"The reality is that we must plan on our defense budget going down several percentage points every year for the foreseeable future," says Gen. Colin L. Powell, the top U.S. military officer as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Kaufmann says military spending by 1999 should be cut to half today's level.

The new austerity, in turn, translates to tougher times for military contractors. The arms industry boomed during the Reagan administration and now employs one in five of the nation's manufacturing workers and one-third of scientists and engineers. The boom may not bust, but some industry workers and their communities already see reason to worry about layoffs and pay cuts.

"There can be a dark side" to the outbreak of peace, Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste said at a special conference of small- and medium-size military contractors Jan. 24.

The jobs of about 200,000 Ohio residents depend on the defense industry. Other states, including California, Virginia, Washington, Maryland and Missouri, are even more closely linked to the health of military contractors.

First human 'lung assist' implant performed

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A teenage girl was in critical condition Saturday after becoming the world's first recipient of an implant consisting of a slender bundle of fibers that works like a lung in supplying oxygen to the body.

The 20-inch device — designed to give damaged lungs a chance to rest and recover before it is removed — was implanted in a two-hour operation Friday at LDS Hospital, one of four U.S. centers approved for testing of the IntraVascular Oxygenator.

"This patient could live and the device could be useless," Dr. Alan Morris, the hospital's director of pulmonary research, said at an afternoon news conference. "She could pass away and it could be a perfectly useful device."

Morris emphasized that it was far too early to evaluate the devices's performance. "There is a grave risk of misrepresentation," he said, if the mechanism is seen as anything more than an experiment.

The IVOX is not an artificial lung but could lead to development of such a device, said its developer, Dr. J.D. Mortensen.

The family insisted that no details about the patient be made public, but sources confirmed the recipient was a teen-age girl with acute respiratory failure. The Salt Lake Tribune reported she is 16.

Morris described the patient as "a suffering individual whose privacy must be protected at all costs" for research protocol and ethical reasons.

Hospital spokesman Richard Nash said only that the patient was in critical condition. The device was implanted by Dr. Roger C. Millar.

Although he assisted in the surgery, Mortensen would not discuss particulars of the implant, which involved insertion of the device via the neck or groin into the inferior vena cava, the large vein that brings blood to the heart.

Two tubes the diameter of a soda straw are attached to the bundle and leave the body; one delivers oyxgen to the body from a hospital oxygen system or tank, the other removes carbon dioxide, a waste product of breathing.

AP Laserphoto

Dr. Michael Snider, a professor of anesthesiology at the Pennsylvania State University's Milton S. Hershey Medical Center in Hershey, Pa., displays a prototype of a lung-assisted device.

Mortensen said the initial experiments will involve only patients with acute lung disease, such as pneumonia or smoke inhalation, not long-term, chronic disorders such as cystic fibrosis or emphysema.

The only alternative for people with acute lung failure is an extracorporeal oxygenator, a large machine that requires pumping the blood outside the body.

Guidelines approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in September limit the implants to seven days in people with acute respiratory failure who have little other chance of survival.

"In patients with acute lung failure, the natural lungs can recover in four to five days if given a chance to rest," Mortensen said. If they do not recover by then, "they probably aren't going to. ... You have dead lungs."

The developer of the IVOX, CardioPulmonics Inc. of Salt Lake City, announced Jan. 11 the device would be tested in 10 patients at LDS Hospital, Penn State's Hershey Medical Center, the University of Michigan Medical Center in Ann Arbor, and the Los Angeles County-University of Southern California Medical Center. Several centers in Europe and Japan also have been selected to test the device.

"In patients with acute lung failure, the natural lungs can recover in four to five days if given a chance to rest."

— Dr. J.D. Mortensen, developer of 'lung assist' device

Mortensen said about eight of the 10 initial human recipients were expected to die from their illnesses.

Mortensen said the IVOX acts much like the natural membranes in the air sacs of the lungs. The device is an inch-wide bundle of 900 to 1,200 hollow fibers each about the thickness of a human hair. The polypropylene fibers have porous walls. The bundle is covered with a super-thin plastic membrane.

As the IVOX floats in the blood flowing through the vena cava, oxygen passes through the fiber walls into the oxygen-poor blood. Meanwhile, carbon dioxide passes from the blood through the fiber wall into the hollow fiber.

Mortensen said the initial human experiments are to determine IVOX's safety, not effectiveness.

"These are extremely sick patients that have advanced lung disease, whose lungs are unable to support life, and are in the process of dying from their lung disease," he said. "We're trying to see if the device will cause further complications for the patient.

"If it does not, then the FDA will release it for testing on healthier patients."

Jury in Hazelwood trial to be sworn in Monday

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Jury selection went faster than expected for the trial of Joseph Hazelwood, the ex-captain of the Exxon Valdez blamed for the nation's worst oil spill, clearing the way for opening arguments Monday.

The 12 jurors and three alternates are to be sworn in Monday for the criminal trial of Hazelwood, who was in command of the tanker when it struck a Prince William Sound reef last March and spilled nearly 11 million gallons of oil.

Attorneys for Hazelwood and the state had expected jury selection would take two weeks because of publicity about the accident that polluted pristine waters, tarred shorelines, killed wildlife and disrupted fishing.

But by lunchtime Friday, the fourth day of jury screening, the court had a panel of 12 members from among 52 candidates questioned in Hazelwood's criminal trial.

He faces a felony charge of criminal mischief and misdemeanor charges of reckless endangerment, negligent discharge of oil and operating a vessel while intoxicated. Conviction on all charges could produce a maximum penalty of seven years, three months in prison and $61,000 in fines.

Some prospective jurors were excused immediately after they said they held opinions about Hazelwood. Others were eliminated after questioning which determined they could not set aside their conclusions about the case.

Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone said toward the end of the selection process that the number of candidates whose acceptability went unchallenged by attorneys was high. Of 44 people questioned, 27 were in that category, he said.

Although everyone questioned knew of the oil spill, most said they had little or no opinion about it. Johnstone said he found that hard to believe, but added that such statements made under oath had to be accepted as the truth.

The judge granted attorneys for both sides extra peremptory challenges that allowed them to rule out candidates without saying why.

Hazelwood attorney Dick Madson said he needed additional challenges in part because two of the potential jurors were so familiar with the case they practically qualified as witnesses.

In granting the state an extra challenge, Johnstone said he detected "an undercurrent of feeling by jurors that perhaps there are others who are responsible for this (Exxon Valdez) incident, including the state."

District Attorney Brent Cole had not used his extra challenge by the time the jury was chosen.

Madson said the jury represents a good cross-section of the Anchorage-area population. Occupations of jurors include mail carrier, cook, homemaker, business executive, engineer, grocer, real estate agent and child-care worker. The trial that began with preliminary matters last Monday and then moved into jury selection could last six weeks or more.

HOW THEY VOTED

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Feb. 2.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House shuts off amendments on voter registration bill. Debate on a national voting rights bill began with a partisan bent in the House, which adopted 254-166 Jan. 31 a rule governing the conditions under which the bill may be considered when it arrives on the floor Tuesday.

Democrats unanimously supported the rule, which limits debate and prevents separate consideration of amendments to the so-called "motor voter" registration bill. Republicans opposed the rule 6-166.

The underlying bill would require states to establish procedures allowing eligible voters to register at driver's licensing offices, through the mail or in person at major government office buildings.

House Democrats said the bill reflected lengthy bipartisan negotiations and the rule would protect the compromises reached.

"I do not believe that any fair-minded person could take a look at how this legislation was developed over a period of well over a year and find any fault with the way in which the Democrats have dealt with the minority on this issue to develop a bipartisan bill," said Al Swift, D-Wash.

Republicans said the bill was flawed and members should consider it only after exhaustive debate and opportunities to amend it.

"It seems the majority leadership has seen fit to deny the voting rights of the House in considering a voting rights bill for the country," said Lynn Martin, R-Ill.

Voting for the rule on the "motor voter" bill: Gonzalez (D), Stenholm (D), Sarpalius (D).

Voting against the rule: Smith (R), Combest (R).

The Senate took no key votes this week.

Third teen-ager killed in week

NEW YORK (AP) — A boy who authorities said tried to rob a grocery store customer with an unloaded gun became the third teen-ager in a week shot to death by police.

In Brooklyn, where police fatally shot two unarmed teen-agers on Jan. 27 and Wednesday, residents held a largely peaceful march Saturday that ended with a demonstration at a stationhouse.

The latest shooting came Friday night in Harlem when 13-year-old Robert Cole was shot after he refused to drop a .32-caliber handgun after trying to rob a man in a grocery, said Sgt. Nick Vreeland, a police spokesman.

Cole, who was carrying 35 vials of what appeared to be crack, was struck in the chest by a bullet fired by Officer Larry Walton, 31, Vreeland said. He was pronounced dead at a hospital.

Cole was the eighth person fatally shot by police in the first five weeks of this year. In 1989, 30 people were killed by police; in 1988, 25 died and in 1987, 14.

Police Commissioner Lee P. Brown, who took office just last month, said Friday he wants officers to spend more time in the communities they protect to gain a better understanding of residents.

Tutu makes surprise visit

BOSTON (AP) — Jubilation over the pending release of South Africa's imprisoned black leader Nelson Mandela must be tempered with the realization that apartheid is far from ended, Archbishop Desmond Tutu said Saturday.

Tutu, visiting to confer with other opposition leaders and U.S. officials, said the fight for equality is not over and urged continued political and economic pressure on the South African government to dismantle apartheid.

"We have not yet the complete dismantling of apartheid and this is the pinpoint of the sanction program. We want apartheid totally dismantled," said Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize laureate.

The Anglican archbishop said his initial joy over the lifting of some political restrictions against blacks Friday was tempered later by the realization that apartheid still is far from over.

He said his change of heart came after "having pinched myself and convinced myself it wasn't a dream and it was real. ... Of course you see apartheid is still in place."

143 protesters arrested

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Police arrested and carried away 143 abortion protesters Saturday after they locked the entrances to two downtown abortion clinics with bicycle locks in an "all-women's rescue."

In an unrelated abortion protest, 35 men and one woman were arrested Saturday morning outside a clinic in northeast Philadelphia.

Police Sgt. David Brown said the protesters were taken to the Police Academy, where they were issued citations for trespassing.

Abortion-rights supporters held counterdemonstrations at all three sites, but Brown said there were no reports of violence.

Jean Hunt, executive director of the Elizabeth Blackwell Health Center For Women, one of the downtown clinics, said the protesters harassed patients and closed the clinic's back doors with bicycle locks that had to be cut off by the Fire Department.

Couple loses house, car

PALISADES, Idaho (AP) — Duff and Bernadette Jacobson have been married little more than a week, and it's been anything but wedded bliss.

Shortly after their Jan. 26 wedding, the Palisades couple was involved in a traffic accident. Their only car was totaled; they escaped injury.

On Thursday night, the couple's rented house caught on fire. The Jacobsons were not home at the time.

Duff Jacobson, 25, said he was able to retrieve some of their clothes before flames destroyed the home. They now are living with Bernadette Jacobson's parents.

Mrs. Jacobson, 19, said she has been shaken by the disasters, but the two agreed that their life together is bound to improve.

Miami has invested $100 million in restoration and renovation projects, such as the Waldorf Towers, since 1983.

Revival of art deco popular in Miami

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Ten years ago Miami Beach officials tried to block efforts to preserve the city's Art Deco hotels and apartment houses with their decorative architecture so popular in the late 1920s and 1930s.

But the preservationists won out and today Miami Beach is enjoying an economic and cultural renaissance tied to the funky, colorful buildings.

After the "Miami Vice" television series introduced much of America to the fanciful Art Deco revival look in 1983, the city poured more than $100 million into renovation projects.

But only recently have developers seen profits in neighborhoods recovering from decades of neglect.

Now South Beach, the southernmost part of Miami Beach, is in the midst of a full-scale building boom. On every block, apartments and hotels are being repainted or restored.

"It's very exciting," says Richard Hoberman, chairman of the Miami Design Preservation League. "This city has come to appreciate the benefits of historic preservation."

A five-year, $5.6 million plan to expand scenic Ocean Drive into a promenade lined by cafes and nightclubs was completed in time for the annual Art Deco Weekend Jan. 12-14, when an estimated 300,000 people jammed the street, dancing to swing bands, eating ethnic foods and buying antiques.

On Lincoln Road, the Miami City Ballet, the New World Symphony Orchestra and a dozen art galleries have taken up residence in buildings left vacant when glamorous stores moved out in the 1960s and '70s.

The city is cashing in on this cultural reawakening by making it easy for moviemakers and fashion magazines to operate in the district. Any weekday, a half-dozen film crews can be seen taking advantage of the splashy colors, palm trees and near-constant sun.

"It's a great industry to have. It's clean, attractive and it's great advertising you can't buy. You can't open a major magazine nowadays without seeing the Beach," says Jud Kurlancheek, Miami Beach's city planner.

Kurlancheek smiles now, but in his 13 years with the city, he's seen Miami Beach at its worst.

The resort town so fashionable in the 1950s was all but abandoned when its increasingly elderly residents died off or moved away and younger people looked beyond Florida for their tropical vacations.

The decline worsened in 1980, when Cuban vagrants and criminals from the Mariel boatlift flocked to South Beach to take advantage of depressed rents.

But economic indicators now show Miami Beach has turned around. In the past five years, resort tax revenues, hotel occupancy rates, vehicle registrations and the numbers of children going to public schools have been rising continually, says Kurlancheek, who credits Art Deco restoration work for the upswing.

And in September, the city commission approved zoning changes that will accommodate an expansion of the city's now-strict preservation laws to protect almost every building south of Lincoln Road, as well as the museum district north of Lincoln, between the Miami Beach Convention Center and the ocean.

It adds up to more than 1,500 hotels, apartment buildings, stores and homes, 70 percent of which have Art Deco flourishes.

Dole asks for removal of foreign forces from war-torn Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole on Saturday lamented Lebanon's "long night of death and destruction," saying all foreign forces should leave the war-torn country.

"For too many in Washington, Lebanon has fallen off the screen. The only 'issues list' that it tops is the list of those issues to avoid in the future," the Kansas senator said.

Dole said that factional strife among Christians in East Beirut, together with the continued presence of Syrian forces in the Middle Eastern country, does not point toward a peaceful resolution.

"Lebanon's long night of death and destruction continues," he said.

In a speech prepared for a dinner sponsored by the American Task Force on Lebanon, an organization of some 100 prominent Americans of Lebanese descent, he called on Christians "to end their bloody test of might and will."

A copy of Dole's Los Angeles speech was released by his Washington office.

As violence escalated last year, the United States withdrew Ambassador John McCarthy and other Americans on the U.S. Embassy staff. Only Lebanese remain at the embassy.

Dole urged appointment of a special American envoy — "someone who will devote full time and attention to Lebanon, someone who will make it clear that the United States is serious about Lebanon."

President Bush has deplored the increasing incidences of violence in Lebanon, and the administration went into federal court to win the ouster of Lebanese Gen. Michael Aoun's ambassador in Washington, Abdallah Bouhabib.

The State Department argued that his continued occupation of the building was "causing increasingly serious adverse consequences for the nation's foreign relations."

The State Department sought Bouhabib's ouster at the request of Lebanon's new government led by President Elias Hrawi, who was elected in November.

The United States recognized the Hrawi government last November and had been conducting its business with a Hrawi-appointed ambassador rather than with Bouhabib even before before the embassy was turned over to Hrawi representatives Friday under a federal court order.

Aoun, who controls Lebanon's Christian sector with about 1 million residents, refuses to recognize the Hrawi government and continues to hold out with 20,000 troops at the presidential palace in Beirut. The State Department has called for Aoun to step down.

Dole said the United States should put pressure on Syrian President Hafez Assad to remove forces from Lebanon and said the Arab League should press Assad for a troop withdrawal timetable.

He also said that Secretary of State James A. Baker, in talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in Moscow this week, should say that "as long as Moscow gives Assad the green light for aggression in Lebanon, the United States will keep out the yellow caution light on the path of U.S.-Soviet relations."

"I do believe it is my responsibility, as someone who cares deeply about Lebanon, to plead with every faction and every Lebanese leader (to) ... end the senseless killing," he said.

Gorbachev to propose eliminating party monopoly on power

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev will ask the Communist Party leadership to break its seven-decade hammerlock on power and accept the possibility of competing political parties, a Soviet news agency said Saturday.

The report also said the Soviet leader would propose a complete change in the party structure and tacitly endorse the concept of private ownership.

The stunning disclosures came just two days before a party Central Committee meeting that is expected to be a forum on the future course of the nation and probably the most crucial test of Gorbachev's five years in power.

If Gorbachev does indeed ask the party to break its monopoly on power, and the increasingly splintered party leadership agrees, it could thrust the superpower into a cycle of change that already is being played out on a smaller scale throughout the East bloc.

WORLD

A bitter fight over reform in expected at the closed-door Central Committee meeting on Monday and Tuesday. Progressives are calling for a multiparty system and a virtual apology for decades of dictatorship.

Diehard Communists want to retain their lock on power and keep central planning and collective farming, which have brought the country to economic ruin.

This is likely the last Central Committee meeting before local and republic elections in the coming weeks, where hard-liners could suffer humiliating defeats as did many of their colleagues last spring, when the nation held its first competitive elections.

The Soviet news agency Interfax says Gorbachev wants to trim the Central Committee from 251 members to 200, which could jeopardize the votes of many hard-liners in the key policy-making body.

Gorbachev, as usual, has placed himself squarely in the middle, according to the Interfax report.

He is proposing a new Communist Party platform where "the multiparty principle is not rejected, but is not treated as a panacea," reported Interfax, a news service of Radio Moscow.

The platform says the party "will fight for its leading role, but assume no state or government powers, nor lay any claim to having its role set down in the Constitution," Interfax said.

An attempt to remove the Communists' guarantee of supremacy inscribed in the Soviet Constitution failed during the December session of parliament.

The Soviet Union, ruled exclusively by the Communists since a few months after the 1917 Russian Revolution, is the last remaining Warsaw Pact nation to give the Communists a guaranteed monopoly on power.

Gorbachev's nurturing of greater social freedoms sparked the changes in the East bloc, but the pace of reform in those nations have quickly outraced change in the Soviet Union, overhauling the ideological landscape of Eastern Europe.

Interfax also said Gorbachev's platform does not reject the concept of private ownership, but did not say if that includes ownership of land and businesses by individuals.

The Central Committee is expected to vote on the platform, for presentation to a full party congress of about 5,000 delegates scheduled for October. Tass said Saturday some party members have suggested holding the party congress earlier, in two parts, with local party elections between the two sessions.

The fight in the Soviet Communist Party comes at a time of stunningly rapid change. Since the Central Committee last met six weeks ago:

■ The Communist split has come into the open, with reformers threatening to form their own party if changes are not made.

■ The Soviet Union itself tumbled closer to fracturing with open rebellion in Azerbaijan, and peaceful independence movements in the Baltics, particularly in Lithuania, where Gorbachev promised the people a choice on secession.

■ In four countries of Eastern Europe, the price paid by Communist hard-liners has risen. Men who fell from power in the autumn are now being arrested. Only in Poland and Hungary, where reform has come most gradually, are former dictators still free.

The Soviet press, too, has been full of portents of political change. A letter to the editor of Pravda suggested, "The Communist idea is dead," while Moscow News reported suggestions the party be disbanded.

Economic deprivation only worsens with each passing day as more daily necessities disappear from store shelves.

"It has become increasingly difficult to prove that an American worker with $2,000 a month in wages is suffering from exploitation, while his Soviet counterpart enjoys its absence with an income of 237 rubles ($395) a month," said Pravda this week.

Anti-government protesters jubilate Saturday at a rally in Alexandra, South Africa, township the day after President de Klerk announced the unbanning of the African National Congress.

Thousands march to celebrate new freedoms in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Long-silenced activists began speaking out and thousands of blacks marched in celebration Saturday after President F.W. de Klerk scrapped stifling restrictions on anti-apartheid groups.

A newspaper report, meanwhile, said jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela could be freed within a week.

But de Klerk's decision to legalize the African National Congress and lift a host of other restrictions brought an outpouring of activism elsewhere.

Large crowds marched in the streets of Port Elizabeth, the northern Cape province desert town of Graaf-Reinet, and Alexandra, a small township next to Johannesburg. About 7,000 people protested the appearance of a visiting English cricket team in Pietermaritzburg, the Natal provincial capital.

The African National Congress, meanwhile, said its guerrilla attacks would not be suspended but would have a lower profile.

"I think one can expect, in the context of the legalization of the ANC, that probably other aspects of our multipronged strategy will receive a much higher profile than in the past," said Pallo Jordan, the ANC's information chief at its exile headquarters in Lusaka, Zambia.

Jordan was one of several ANC leaders who could not be quoted in South Africa until Saturday, when notices were published in the Government Gazette, formalizing the stunning concessions announced by de Klerk on Friday.

The government repealed laws that banned 175 people, including ANC President Oliver Tambo, now recovering from a stroke in Sweden; the ANC's chief spokesman, Tom Sebina; and the leader of the South African Communist Party, Joe Slovo.

It removed state-of-emergency prohibitions on travel and public speaking on another 200 people.

Among those reveling in their new freedoms was 84-year-old Helen Joseph, the first white person ever placed under house arrest for anti-government activity.

She had been officially "banned," restricted to the Johannesburg area, placed under curfew in her home, and prohibited from meeting with more than a few people at a time or making public appearances. For the first time in 30 years, South African newspapers published her comments Saturday.

"This is a wonderful day. I am very excited about my personal freedom since I am no longer a listed person," said the wheelchair-bound activist, an old friend of Mandela's.

"Above all I am excited about the return of all my friends and comrades and all the exiles who will be coming back home, all my comrades who will be released from jail," she was quoted as saying.

De Klerk, in his speech to Parliament, also said that Mandela would be freed soon.

The Citizen, a pro-government newspaper, quoted an unidentified government source as saying de Klerk "moves very fast" and could free the 71-year-old Mandela any day.

"If there is no sudden outbreak of violence and people react in an orderly fashion, Mr. Mandela could be free by next weekend," the source was quoted as saying.

De Klerk's announcements met most of the conditions laid down by the ANC to begin negotiations on a new constitution to bring the black majority into the nation's political life.

However, many activists said the government must completely end the state of emergency, free all prisoners convicted of crimes related to political action and repeal laws that still would allow the arrest of returning exiles.

Senior leaders of the ANC, most of them banned until this weekend, gathered for an executive meeting Saturday in Stockholm, Sweden.

Japanese election called choice between democracy, communism

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu is telling voters that in two weeks Japan will face a crucial choice between democracy and socialism.

But as official campaigning for parliamentary elections began Saturday, voters didn't seem to share his concern.

"I need your support," he told an unenthusiastic crowd of several hundred people who gathered in front of a busy Tokyo train station.

Most of his audience appeared to be party supporters invited to the rally. Passers-by lingered only until traffic lights changed.Nearby, more than 1,000 people gathered to hear the leader of the main opposition Socialist Party.

The embattled prime minister, one of 953 candidates vying for the 512 seats in Parliament's powerful lower house, has said he will resign if his Liberal Democratic Party cannot retain a majority.

And for the first time in 34 years of unbroken rule, the Liberal Democrats are facing the possibility that even that goal may prove to be too much.

Kaifu said the Feb. 18 election will be "critical," and warned that voters will be deciding whether they want "freedom and democracy or socialism and communism."

"The world has already rendered its verdict on socialism," he said, referring to the ouster of hard-line Communist rulers in Eastern Europe.

At the Socialist rally, party leader Takako Doi said her party planned to defeat the Liberal Democrats.

"Before the last election I said the mountain would move," said the 61-year-old Ms. Doi, alluding to the Liberal Democrats' loss of their majority in the upper house of Parliament in July. "We will move the second mountain." Ms. Doi said the governing party lost in July because of its support for a 3 percent sales tax and because of its leaders' involvement in financial and sex scandals.

"It's been seven months, and they haven't changed a bit," she said. "The only road left is for each of you to change politics with your votes."

Ms. Doi, the only woman leader of a major party, is widely credited with increasing the Socialists' popularity.

Setsuko Isobe, 60, said she also was drawn to the rally by Ms. Doi. "Women in Japan have been looked down on in the past, but Ms. Doi shows that some of us can be very powerful."

Two of four candidates with Ms. Doi at the rally were women. No women are running for the Liberal Democrats.

Going into the election, the Socialists held 83 seats in the lower house against 295 for the Liberal Democrats.

The Clean Government Party held 54 seats, the Communists 26, the Democratic Socialists 25. Twenty-nine seats were either vacant or held by independents and minor party members.

The Socialists are only backing 148 candidates, and would need to form a coalition with other opposition parties to wrest the majority away from the Liberal Democrats, who are backing 325 candidates.

Kaifu assumed office in August after Sousuke Uno resigned to take responsibility for the election defeat in July and amid reports that he had an extramarital affair with a geisha.

Uno's predecessor, Noboru Takeshita, stepped down in June because of his ties to an influence-peddling scandal. Several other Liberal Democratic leaders resigned in the scandal, in which the information conglomerate Recruit Co. was accused of paying millions of dollars in exchange for political influence.

Colombian guerrillas propose truce

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Colombia's largest leftist guerrilla group on Saturday offered to call a truce until May so that the government can run congressional and presidential elections in peace.

But the defense minister said he was skeptical about the proposal by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia and noted another leftist guerrilla group has said it would disrupt balloting in the northeast.

Near the cocaine trafficking center of Medellin, police found six bodies Saturday with multiple gunshot wounds and their hands and their feet tied. Police said the latest victims brought the toll to 50 in a 6-week-old gang war. The cease-fire offer, published in the Bogota newspaper La Prensa, was made in a letter to four former presidents, a Catholic Church cardinal and a leading businessman.

"The eminent recipients of this proposal will be the overseers of what could be a new process of reconciliation and peace for the Colombian family," the letter said.

Defense Minister Oscar Botero told a news conference that leftist guerrillas, which have an estimated 5,000 fighters, had announced truces before but had failed to observe them.

"We have to see if the guerrillas fulfill their promise," he said.

Conservative Party leader Misael Pastrana, who served as president from 1970 to 1974, said he would be willing to form a committee to oversee such a truce, La Prensa reported.

The paper quoted Pastrana as saying that the government of President Virgilio Barco should take steps to ensure that the proposal leads to a permanent peace in the 30-year-old insurgency.

Botero said army troops would be sent to northeastern Colombia to protect polling centers from the pro-Cuba National Liberation Army, which has promised to disrupt balloting.

"Cosmetics" are preparations (except soap) applied to the body for beautifying, preserving, or altering the appearance of a person, or for cleansing, coloring, conditioning, or protecting the skin, hair, nails, lips, eyes, or teeth. At various times in history, both women and men wore make-up or cosmetics. Today, women are the primary users. AIDS spreading among drug users

GENEVA (AP) — AIDS is spreading nearly twice as fast among intravenous drug users in Europe than among the continent's homosexual men, the World Health Organization said.

More than 11,500 new cases of the deadly disease were reported worldwide in January, bringing the total to 215,144, the agency reported Friday in its weekly bulletin.

The United States had the biggest share of new cases, 4,500. Brazil and Tanzania recorded about 1,500 each, and Italy reported 644 new cases.

In Europe, total reported cases rose to 29,727 by the end of January.

A special World Health Organization survey of the continent found a sharp rise in acquired immune deficiency syndrome among intravenous drug users in the year ending last September. Reported cases in that group grew by 103 percent, compared to a 55 percent rise among homosexual and bisexual men.

The report did not specify the countries where the increases occurred.

But it noted that AIDS spread especially rapidly over the one-year period in Spain and Italy, where about two-thirds of all reported victims are intravenous drug users.

According to the survey, the biggest number of cases per week were recorded in France, followed by Spain and Italy.

AIDS destroys the body's immune system, leaving it vulnerable to other disease. There is no known cure.

Despite the shifting trends, homosexuals and bisexuals still account for 49 percent of all European cases reported over the years until Sept. 30, the World Health Organization said. Drug users were 30 percent of the total.

Christian militia gains control of Beirut port

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A Christian militia drove back rival forces loyal to Gen. Michel Aoun on Saturday and seized control of a vital Beirut port after some of his troops abandoned five days of fighting and began defecting.

Gunboats, tanks and cannons fell silent in response to a Vatican-brokered cease-fire, but the shelling resumed after three hours. More than 37 people were killed Saturday and hundreds of thousands were trapped in shelters.

Police said that overall, 164 people have been killed and 618 wounded in the clashes for control of Lebanon's Christian enclave between Aoun's 20,000 soldiers and the 6,000-strong Lebanese Forces militia. The Lebanese Forces, led by Samir Geagea, is the main Christian militia.

The Lebanese Forces emerged from the fighting in control of 60 percent of the Christian enclave, with Aoun's troops entrenched only in the eastern and northern edges of east Beirut as well as the mountainous Metn province northeast of the capital.

At the start of the fighting on Tuesday, each side controlled half of the Christian enclave.

Civilians said the fighting in dense residential areas had caused some of the worst damage in 15 years of civil war.

"We never had a war like this," said Robin Haik, 24, who fled to Cyprus aboard a ferry during a lull in the fighting. "The Lebanese Forces put all kinds of artillery between every house to try to get the army, and the army tried to hit them with all kinds of shells."

The five-day battle has kept half a million people, or half of the enclave's population, hiding in poorly equipped basements and bomb shelters with no electricity or water.

The brief cease-fire was reached after police said 1,000 members of Aoun's forces stationed at Beirut's port and along half of Beirut's three-mile dividing Green Line defected. Six hundred joined Geagea's militia and 400 went to the Lebanese army.

That stripped Aoun of the Beirut port and his only docks. The loss could disrupt his supplies, but both sides are believed to have several months' worth of ammunition stockpiled.

Aoun's failure to achieve a swift, clear-cut victory over Geagea's outnumbered and outgunned men has damaged his image of invincibility.

Although Aoun's troops outnumber their rivals 3-to-1 and were deeply committed to the war he fought last year against the Syrians and their Moslem allies, they apparently do not have the same high morale fighting fellow Christians, many of them relatives.

Geagea's troops have said they are fighting for the survival of their group. Geagea also kept some low-ranking army officers on his payroll.

The cease-fire — the sixth in the latest round of fighting — had been called by the Vatican through Papal Nuncio Pablo Puente and Maronite Catholic Patriarch Nasrallah Sfeir.

Aoun and Geagea, both Maronites, accepted the cease-fire and said they had ordered their forces to honor it.

The fighting resumed when artillery shells crashed into residential districts of Moslem west Beirut, which is outside the combat zone, and the city's eastern Christian sector.

The barrage caught unprotected civilians who had emerged from shelters to inspect damage and flee to safer areas carrying bagloads of belongings.

Many sought refuge behind sand barricades. Others rushed toward west Beirut on foot as Aoun's soldiers cocked their guns in preparation for battle.

At one point, shells fell on residential districts at the rate of six per minute, said a police spokesman who cannot be named in line with regulations.

The shelling set ablaze apartment buildings, warehouses, gas stations and supermarkets. Police said Aoun's gunners and Lebanese Forces militiamen were involved in the shelling, but it could not be determined who provoked the exchange.

Two Palestinians killed in clash

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — A radical Palestinian group said Israeli troops killed two of its guerrillas during a clash Saturday in Israel's self-proclaimed buffer zone in southern Lebanon.

The Palestinian Liberation Front claimed killing "several" Israeli soldiers in the fight, but an Israeli army spokesman denied any army casualties.

The group, led by terrorist mastermind Mohammed Abbas, better known as Abul Abbas, said in a communique that one of its guerrilla squads clashed with an Israeli patrol in Ein Ebl on the northern edge of the zone.

It said the three-man squad was heading out on an anti-Israeli "combat mission" inside the Israeli-occupied Palestinian territories when they were confronted by the patrol.

"Our heroes engaged the enemy in a pitched battle that left several enemy soldiers killed or wounded and destroyed a half-track armor vehicle," the communique said.

The communique, issued in Beirut, said two of the guerrillas were killed and that the third was wounded but managed to return to base.

Costa Ricans ready to pick new president

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — Luxury cars, gleaming tributes to this country's economic success, are lined up outside the garage where Jorge Arturo Jimenez sometimes finds menial work.

"It's not fair," said Jimenez, 28, the father of three.

"The rich keep getting richer. They have everything, but I can barely feed my family."

That sentiment, widely shared here, has persuaded Jimenez and many others like him to break a lifetime pattern and vote against the governing National Liberation Party when Costa Ricans vote on Sunday to choose a successor to President Oscar Arias Sanchez.

Arias, the Nobel Peace laureate in 1987 for his efforts to end conflicts in the region, is prohibited under the constitution from standing for a second term. And although he enjoys a popularity rating usually reserved for saints, his party's presidential candidate, Carlos Manuel Castillo, 61, is trailing, according to all the polls.

The polls give a narrow edge to Rafael A. Calderon Jr., 40, the son of a former president who has devoted much of his life to equaling his father's accomplishment.

The election is expected to be one of the closest in the 100-year history of Costa Rican democracy. Despite a monotonous speaking style, Castillo has steadily eaten into what was a deficit of 15 to 20 points.

"I feel like a dog who was beaten all his life in one home and then taken to a new home," a Castillo aide said in noting that the economist and veteran minister has trailed throughout the campaign.

"The dog can't be sure it won't be beaten any more."

In addition to a successor to Arias, voters will also elect new members to the 57-seat National Assembly and 1,000 municipal officials. Since legislators are prohibited by law from succeeding themselves, the next government will be composed entirely of new faces.

No matter who wins, the election, the third in Central America in the last year, underscores an ideological shift in the region.

The two presidents elected last year, Alfredo Cristiani of El Salvador and Rafael Callejas of Honduras, are both more conservative than their predecessors.

Both Costa Rican candidates have vowed to work on behalf of Arias' peace plan, which was signed almost three years ago by the presidents of the region's five countries. But both are more supportive of U.S. policy in the region and more critical of Nicaragua's Sandinista government than Arias.

Castillo dismisses the Sandinistas as "Communists." And Calderon has been quoted as criticizing Arias for his "political amateurism" in trusting the Nicaraguans and his peace plan as "a deformation of masculine values" that was "impugning the national virility."

While the election is being hailed as one more demonstration of Costa Rican democracy — Latin America's oldest and most stable — aides to Castillo say it also shows the fragility of that democracy.

Calderon's party, the Social Christian Unity Party, remains something of the candidate's personal vehicle. It was formed a decade ago from a coalition of four small parties and has nominated its founder for each of the three subsequent campaigns.

"He keeps coming back, and back and back," an aide to Castillo said. "He keeps flipping the coin and waiting for it to come up heads. He thinks he deserves to be president by virtue of birth."

Calderon, decisively beaten in his two previous presidential campaigns, attributes his defeat four years ago to his militarism in a country that prides itself on pacifism. So this time he has run as a social populist and foreign policy conservative.

Since Arias enjoys an 80 percent approval rating, Calderon has avoided criticizing the president. Instead he has attacked the governing party, which has won five of the last six elections, as corrupt and has charged that it is trying to set up a one-party state.

But polls show he owes his lead in large part to a widespread feeling that the government has not done enough to distribute the benefits of the country's economic growth equitably.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Ports paralyzed as strike renewed

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The nation's 2,800 dockworkers went on strike Saturday, paralyzing Greece's ports.

The dockworkers are demanding an extra $50 a day for handling hazardous loads, as well as improved pension and health insurance plans.

The Union of Port Employees of Greece says it expects the strike to last at least a week.

The dockworkers have staged repeated strikes and slowdowns in recent weeks. Some freighters have been redirected to other European ports while others languish at Greek docks.

In an interview with the Greek daily newspaper Ethnos, Spiros Marinakis, president of the International Shipping Union — a group representing firms in Athens — said the strikes are causing serious long-term damage to Greek shipping.

Greece has been plagued by labor unrest since last month, when the government announced austerity measures to battle an annual inflation rate of nearly 15 percent and a $1.6 billion budget deficit.

Demonstrators target IRA

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Irish Republican Army's political wing on Saturday discussed how to broaden its voter appeal, while demonstrators outside brought a coffin and signs saying "The IRA Kills Democracy."

The annual convention of the Sinn Fein party came a week after an IRA bomb accidentally killed a 16-year-old boy in Londonderry, Northern Ireland.

Although Sinn Fein President Gerry Adams said a year ago that such "mistakes" were retarding the cause of a united Ireland, there was no repeat this year of his call for the IRA to be "careful and careful again."

Instead, Adams asserted that the mainly Catholic IRA was winning in its 21-year-old battle to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and unite it with the Republic of Ireland. He called on the British government to open unconditional negotiations.

Peter Brooke, Britain's top official in Northern Ireland, a British province, said recently that talks could be considered only after the IRA campaign ended.

Outside the Mansion House, where Ireland's first legislature met in 1919, the armed campaign was denounced by members of the Irish Peace Council and New Consensus, a group that was formed to protest IRA bombings of the Dublin-Belfast railway line.

5 arrested for smuggling

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Federal agents arrested five men in northeastern Mexico this week who confessed they had smuggled more than 10 tons of marijuana into the U. S. the past two years, the attorney general's office said Saturday.

The news release said the arrests were carried out Thursday and Friday in Matamoros, across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas, and in the neighboring town of Valle Hermoso.

Jesus Alvarado Contreras, 43, the leader of the gang, said admitted when questioned, the drug was grown in western Michoacan state and he and his four accomplices hired men, women and children as mules to smuggle it in small quantities into Texas, the news release said.

Two of the men were caught at bus stops in Tamaulipas state each carrying about 20 pounds of marijuana.

Bandits rob treasures

NAPLES, Italy (AP) — Masked gunmen bound and gagged unarmed guards early Saturday at Herculaneum, a Roman city destroyed when Mount Vesuvius erupted in 79 A.D., and stole hundreds of treasures, news reports said.

Baldassare Conticello, the superintendent of the archaeological areas of Herculaneum and nearby Pompeii, said the inventory of the stolen goods was still incomplete, the Italian news agency AGI reported.

The missing items included about 200 gold bracelets and earrings, a first century bronze vase in the form of a woman's head and a 32-inch silver-and-copper inlaid bronze statue of Bacchus, he said.

At least four bandits wearing ski masks surprised four night watchmen at their station, AGI quoted investigators as saying. The custodians were forced at gunpoint to turn over the keys to a building that houses hundreds of artifacts, the news agency said.

It said the custodians were tied up and their mouths taped with bandages. After a few hours, one of the guards was able to free himself and sounded an alarm.

Consul ordered expelled

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — The government Saturday declared the Greek consul general in Istanbul "persona non grata" and asked him to leave the country within a week in retaliation for Athens' expulsion of a Turkish consul.

The Turkish consul ordered to leave was in Komotini, a town in the Greek region of Western Thrace troubled by ethnic unrest by the 120,000-strong Moslem minority there.

Both sides gave a week for the departure of the Turkish consul, Kemal Gur, and the Greek diplomat, Elias Klis.

"The reprisal for Komotini is Istanbul," Turkish Foreign Minister Mesut Yilmaz was quoted as saying Saturday.

Greece said Friday that the Turkish consul was "persona non grata" for referring to the Moslem minority as "fellow countrymen." Turkey had said earlier that Gur's phrase was misunderstood because of a translation difficulty.

Proposal to save Mexico $1.7 billion in interest

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico and its foreign creditor banks sign an historic debt reduction agreement Sunday that will save the country $1.7 billion a year in interest and provide a measure of security to the banks.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari has called the renegotiation essential to solving Mexico's economic problems but warned it will not alone guarantee growth.

"The result of the negotiation has been rational for the creditor banks and satisfactory for Mexico," Salinas said in a speech Thursday in Switzerland.

The first major agreement under U.S. Treasury Secretary James Brady's debt reduction strategy will lop $7 billion off Mexico's $48.5 billion commercial bank debt, save $1.7 billion a year of the $9 billion a year the country pays in interest and bring in $1.5 billion in new loans over the next three years.

Mexico's total foreign debt is $92 billion, down from $107 billion in 1987, according to the government, the second highest in the developing world after Brazil's $114 billion.

Sunday's agreement will be signed by the heads of 15 major banks who made up the so-called "steering committee" that negotiated the accord in representation of all the creditor institutions.

Of the about 460 banks participating in the three-option plan, 41 percent chose to reduce the principal on their loans to the Mexican government by 35 percent; 47 percent will drop interest to a fixed rate of 6.25 percent annually, and 12 percent will grant new loans of 25 percent of their current outstanding Mexican debt.

Many banks combined options. Reductions of the principal account for $20 billion of the renegotiated debt, interest reductions for $22.5 billion and new loans for $6 billion.

In exchange, banks picking the principal and interest reductions receive Mexican government bonds for the remaining debt. The bonds are backed by U.S. Treasury zero coupon bonds and the first 18 months of interest on them is guaranteed by a $7 billion package of multilateral and Japanese credits and Mexican funds.

"I believe it helped the banks quite a lot. For at least a couple of years more they can feel calmer about the quality of the Mexican debt," said Manuel Sanchez, director of the Center for Analysis and Economic Research, a private institution. "For us, they reduced the transfer of funds abroad by a little."

New foreign commercial bank loans to the government, apart from those included in the agreement, are likely to be few, officials and analysts say.

"What we have to do and what we are doing in Mexico is to create attractive conditions for doing business in Mexico," Assistant Treasury Secretary Angel Gurria, the government's debt negotiator, said.

Salinas' government has opened Mexico's heavily protected domestic market to imports, stepped up the sale of the varied assortment of state-owned businesses and industries to the private sector, relaxed tight foreign investment controls and brought down inflation with an economic stability program that holds down both wages and prices.

If the government continues such steps, Gurria said, money will come.

Sanchez warned that the progress toward stabilization is precarious.

"We are on a fine line, very thin, in which any event can make us fall into another crisis," he said in an interview.

"We continue depending a grat deal on petroleum. We are experimenting, having opened the markets without having stabilized. Any failure in coordination or an error can lead to a crisis in the balance of payments," he added.

Sanchez said the service payments will still be too high and the government should look for new renegotiations and try to buy back discounted debt on secondary markets.

Gurria said the savings in debt service will go into the government's general fund to improve health, education and help meet other basic needs.

Texas Monthly calls commercials for Williams campaign 'best ever'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

In the arcane process of designing a high-dollar advertising campaign for Republican gubernatorial hopeful Clayton Williams, somebody got a little more creative than usual.

That somebody turned out to be three advertising executives from Midland who have been together a little more than 10 years.

Admarc Inc. producer Joe Milam, art director Rebecca Harrison and creative director Darrell Dunton have gone up against the "big guns" of the advertising and consulting industry from New York, Los Angeles and Washington D.C.

And they've won.

Williams' television commercials have been cited in the February issue of Texas Monthly as "the best ever to appear in a Texas governor's race."

Here's why the magazine rated them so effective:

■ Quality. Admarc put up the money to hire cinematographer Don Reddy, whose film credits include "Benji," "Terms of Endearment" and "Lonesome Dove." The spots also were shot on 35 mm film instead of video tape.

■ The right issue. The drug problem pushed Republican voters' buttons on education, family, crime and race.

■ Texas imagery. The reference to teaching prisoners "the joy of bustin' rocks" was pure genius.

■ Efficiency. Williams' early start gave him a monopoly on voters' attention. Instead of needing one set of commercials to build awareness and another to build support, he achieved both objectives in a single media campaign.

Milam, a graduate of the University of Texas at Austin with a degree in radio, television and film production, said there was never a question of using Williams in the political spots.

"He's absolutely the best thing we've got going for us. There's nobody who can talk about Clayton Williams with the believability that Clayton Williams can," he said.

Take Williams' anti-drug plan, for instance, which calls for stiff penalties for first-time felony offenders. If you can't say "no" to drugs, Williams says that, if elected, he'll introduce you to the "joy of bustin' rocks."

The commercial, filmed at Williams' ranch near Alpine in the Davis Mountains, established the Midland oilman as a personality figure, transforming him from a long-shot challenger to the GOP frontrunner.

Admarc had stayed out of political advertising prior to Williams' decision to enter the Republican race for governor. "But Williams wanted us ... he expected us to do a good job," Milam said.

The affiliation between Admarc and Williams originated in October 1984 when the Midland oilman launched ClayDesta Communications, and announced that he would hold a "beauty contest" to determine what agency could develop the best campaign for the fledgling telecommunications company.

Admarc won the contract hands down, beating out other competing agencies from Midland, Dallas and Amarillo.

Dunton, who oversees Admarc's creative department, wooed the Williams' bunch with an historical theme — the Pony Express — for the first ClayDesta ads, because "it was first high-speed delivery mechanism for a form of long distance communication."

Bobby Trimble, president of Midland's Christmas In April program to repair houses of the low-income elderly, is concerned over lagging funds for building materials.

Christmas in April needs more workers, supplies

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

More involvement.

That's all Bobby Trimble is asking for.

More.

"It's everybody's problem — not just a few."

What he's talking about is more money, sooner, and more help, voluntarily, for the Christmas In April (CIA) program he oversees in Midland.

The year-round program, which repairs and rehabilitates about 250 houses of low-income elderly people, is unusually low on funding for this time of the year. The program's 1990-91 budget of $150,000 is $120,000 short. "We're just budgeting what we spent last year."

The budget year starts with the April 28 community-wide CIA effort in which 2,500 to 3,000 volunteers from churches, businesses and social clubs break into work gangs to repair houses.

Volunteers "work on just about as many (houses) during the year as we do on the 'big day' " in April.

Most of the money goes toward tools and building supplies — from new roofing materials to paint to nails to lumber to water, sewer and gas lines.

Occasionally, specialized help in plumbing and electrical work has to be hired. But work such as carpentry, painting, re-roofing, replacing hot-water heaters, installing siding, bolstering foundations, replacing windows, and putting in walls and ceilings is donated.

It all takes money.

"We're freelance," Trimble said of CIA's funding.

"It's not the rich person's problem anymore than it is the fellow who makes $1,000 a month."

To Trimble's notion, CIA's concerns are in the community's interest. And that viewpoint is rooted in the philosophy that a community ought to attend to the needs of its own people. It's a philosophy shared by the United Way of Midland, which funds 18 human-services agencies.

Strength of abortion issue studied

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas political leaders are looking toward two upcoming events to help clarify how deeply the newly hot abortion issue will alter the state's political landscape.

One is the March 13 Republican primary, in which two candidates are keeping with the traditional GOP pro-life stance and two others have staked out pro-choice positions.

The other should come early next summer, when the U.S. Supreme Court could further modify public abortion policy by deciding a pair of cases from Ohio and Minnesota.

In 1989, a conservative court majority found in the now-famous Webster case that states should have more leeway in regulating abortion.

Seen initially as a victory for pro-life forces, the decision had the effect of energizing abortion rights advocates, whose activism played a role in New Jersey and Virginia Democratic gubernatorial victories this past November.

This past week, results from a survey conducted by University of Houston pollster Richard Murray indicated 8 percent of Texas voters say they will decide their gubernatorial vote solely on the basis of abortion.

The figure impressed some in the state's political hierarchy.

State Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle noted that "you can win or lose elections based on one vote out of ten." Bill Price, president of Texans United for Life, agreed that the number "is enough to turn an election."

Murray, whose poll appeared in the Houston Chronicle and Dallas Morning News, said a combination of events could bring the abortion issue even more heatedly to the fore.

Results indicated that 58 percent of Texans already see the issue as "one of several important factors" in deciding their vote.

Should either pro-life Republicans — Midland businessman Clayton Williams or Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance — win the GOP primary, abortion will take on additional prominence because all three major Democratic candidates are pro-choice, he said.

Currently Williams and Hance are their party's front-runners, far ahead of their competition, former Secretary of State Jack Rains and Dallas attorney Tom Luce.

Should Williams or Hance take the primary, "Democrats will try to do what they did in New Jersey and Virginia — split the Republicans and independents on the abortion issue," Murray said.

State Republican Party Chairman Fred Meyer said he is unconcerned by the split in the party. "The Republican field offers "a range of choices ... which clearly says there is no litmus test," he said.

But Democrat Slagle viewed the Republican dilemma with satisfaction, recalling Republican hay made on the issue during the 1980s

The GOP "never thought the court would let the states pass regulations on abortion," Slagle said. "Republicans felt perfectly safe and beat up on Democrats."

Pro-life activist Price was not comforted by the course of state Republican Party politics since abortion rights forces showed such strength in elections this past November.

Now, the state party, "is dancing like a cat on a hot tin roof," Price said. "If the Republican Party continues to dance any farther away, they're going to hurt their chances," he said.

Price said that an apparent flip-flop by Rains and resulting publicity "became known across the nation as an example of how not to handle the abortion issue."

"You just cannot waffle," he said.

Rains in October had attended a Texans United for Life fund-raiser and pledged support to the group, only to publicly announce himself as the pro-choice Republican alternative after the November elections.

The candidate's spokesman, Jim Warren, did not deny the timing of events, but said the brouhaha is all in the game of politics. "Bill Price you have to understand is basically a consultant for the Hance campaign," Warren said.

On the Democratic side, at least one pro-choice activist is hoping to draw like-minded Republicans into the Democratic primary because of the Republican bickering.

Planned Parenthood celebrates anniversary

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Seeking to bring some conscience to the "free love" of the 1960s, a group of Midland women turned a garage into a distribution center for free contraceptive foam and condoms.

Some 25 years later their idea has grown into Planned Parenthood of West Texas, with clinics in Midland, Big Spring, Lamesa, Monahans, Pecos, San Angelo, Seminole and two in Odessa.

"That's an important milestone in an affiliate's history," Jane Johnson, Planned Parenthood Federation of America vice president, said of the quarter century mark.

Ms. Johnson was in the Permian Basin on Friday to visit local Planned Parenthood offices and tour the area.

Her visit was part of "First Things First," a nationwide push to cut the teen pregancy rate in the United States in half by 1999. About 500,000 U.S. teens give birth every year, she said.

Planned Parenthood members will try to make their group more visible, Ms. Johnson said. They plan to work through community organizations — such as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and YMCA — to educate teens about their sexuality, she said.

The First Things First effort also will involve encouraging public schools to include more sex education in kindergarten through 12th-grade curriculums, she said.

Ms. Johnson said children on one hand are told they should abstain from sex, while movies and television sometimes give a different message.

"We send young people very mixed messages about their sexuality," she said. "We make it very difficult for children to discuss it, even among themselves.

"We really cripple our young people in their management of their sexual and reproductive lives. Ignorance is our biggest foe."

Jane Hellinghausen, Planned Parenthood of West Texas Inc. director of education and community development, said officials here are still developing strategies for localizing First Things First.

But something must be done soon to curb a Permian Basin teen pregnancy rate which soars above the national average, Hellinghausen said.

In 1988, about 17.3 percent of the 7,211 births in the area were to teen mothers, Texas Department of Health statistics show. The national

GARY OTT

Is passionate kissing now acceptable behavior in public?

— Ott

Maybe it's a sign that I'm growing old, but I don't mind telling you that what I saw the other day took me aback — almost offended me, in fact — but not quite, mainly because I take great pride in not being able to be offended by anything.

"Shocking" is a word I rarely use. It has something to do with being a crusty old newspaperman.

Still, the scene did cause me to do a quick double-take.

It went like this. I was in my car heading home for lunch. I passed one of the local high schools and that's when it happened.

Are you ready? Well, hold on to your hat, because here we go.

Two students were, uh, well, we used to call it, "making out." Yeah, they were doing some serious kissing during their lunch break. They may have been off campus, but that's beside the point. The fact is, they were right out in broad daylight. Smooching.

Can you imagine?

We certainly didn't do that sort of thing when I was in high school. No, indeed. We did our kissing in private where it was meant to be done. Thank you, very much.

Apparently, though, that standard has changed. Passionate kissing is now acceptable behavior in public.

And not just by high school students, either. You see it done all the time. People just pucker up and plant big old juicy kisses on other people while the whole world watches.

Well I, for one, do not accept this change.

Heavy necking, like breast feeding, simply should not be done in full view of other people, especially if I happen to be one of the "other people."

Hide behind the barn if you must, but stay out of my sight.

I have mentioned this pet peeve to others, but they don't seem to share my concerns.

"Who cares?" is the most common response, although others have said, "You're just jealous."

No, I'm not.

"Then you're a prude," they reply.

That's ridiculous. You happen to be talking to a guy who once watched an entire naughty movie on the satellite dish without blushing. You can't be a prude and do that. Take my word on it.

"Then what's your problem?" I'm asked. "Why does a little harmless kissing bother you so? Weren't you ever young and in love?"

Of course.

"Didn't ya'll allow kissing in Small Town, U.S.A.?"

"Certainly," I quickly reply. "It's just that we did it behind the barn. When we got older, we used the back seat of a car. In other words, we were civilized."

One friend in particular finds my views to be terribly old-fashioned.

"Aren't you the same person who gets angry when people tell you to not to smoke in their presence?" He knew he had me there.

"Well, uh, yeah, I suppose so," I stammered.

"And what do you tell them?" He was sporting a mischievous grin.

"I tell them to breathe in a different direction." I was dead serious.

"Then why don't you do the same thing — look in another direction when someone starts kissing in your presence?"

"I would," I said. "But, I can't take any chances. If I look away I might miss something good."

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Coupon distributor boosts canned food drive

From Staff Reports

Second Harvest National Food Bank's first national canned food drive has gotten a major boost from Valassis Inserts, a Sunday newspaper coupon insert distributor.

The company will kick off the program today by giving its most visible positions — the front cover and first three pages — to the food drive, encouraging 52 million households to buy extra cans of food and drop them in a Second Harvest bin at a participating store.

"We appeal to individuals to support their local food bank and their community's needy by making a contribution in their local stores," Phillip R. Warth Jr., Second Harvest's president and chief executive office.

Valassis' inserts will appear in 330 newspapers across the country today, including the Reporter-Telegram.

CLINICS

average is 10 percent.

The births-to-teens rate here has been between 17 percent and 21 percent for at least the past decade. In 1980, 20.2 percent of the 7,634 births here were to teen mothers.

Midland and Odessa had separate Planned Parenthood affiliates until 1970, when they merged and became Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin.

Additional federal funding during the 1970s enabled the affiliate to open clinics throughout West Texas.

Its purpose today is to provide free contraceptives, free screening and treatment for sexually transmitted diseases, and even counseling services among other services.

The affiliate has 24 board members, 90 clinic volunteers and an annual $1.2 million budget, about $70,000 of which is from donations. The clinics serve about 10,000 women and 30 men per year.

The national organization's birth in 1916 had a similar beginning to that of the the local Planned Parenthood.

Alarmed by the growing number of women and girls burdened by unexpected pregnancies, a New York City nurse named Margaret Sanger became a one-woman family planning service.

Ms. Sanger, eventually joined by other volunteers, offered family counseling and distributed diaphrams smuggled into the country from Europe. The services provided by the group, which became known as the Mother's League, were considered illegal and against the social grain of the times.

"She (Ms. Sanger) was a pioneer," Ms. Johnson said. "She was a revolutionary type woman who thought women's rights were more important than laws which forbade men and women from wearing birth control."

Despite spending time in jail and having her life threatened on numerous occasions, Ms. Sanger never gave up.

As the laws changed and social acceptance of Ms. Sanger's efforts grew, similar organizations popped up in cities throughout the country. They eventually united to become Planned Parenthood in 1948.

The organization now has 174 affiliates, 900 clinics and more than 17,000 volunteers.

"The resistance we run into now is still considerable, but when you're on the right side of an issue, you ultimately win," said Ms. Johnson, whose organization takes a pro-choice stand on the abortion issue.

However, West Texans for Life, the local Planned Parenthood antonym, is not showing signs of retreating.

"Our main problem with Planned Parenthood is they support the killing of an unborn child," said Mark Mosely, West Texans for Life president. "I question their intentions."

Mosely said the root of his group's loathing for Planned Parenthood reaches all the way back to Ms. Sanger, whom he said supported immoral views and practices.

"Until the Planned Parenthood organization renounces its founder's principles and policies, I will continue to fight against Planned Parenthood," he said.

Members of West Texans for Life, which takes an anti-abortion stance, have picketed Odessa abortion clinics and almost every Planned Parenthood-supported event in recent years.

However, Hellinghausen said opposition has not curbed the organization's efforts.

"Every time we get picketed we get more volunteers and donations," Ms. Hellinghausen said. "They give us publicity we can't afford ourselves."

ABORTION

League, said that 46 percent of Republicans Murray interviewed favor maintaining the current pro-choice stance of Texas abortion law.

Of those, one-third still are undecided whom to support in their party's primary, a figure she called "phenomenally high."

Many pro-choice Republican woman Dunham has contacted "are delighted to have a Luce or a Rains to turn to," she said, but others are "very, very torn."

Price said that "for some reason" women in particular tend to feel deeply about the abortion issue, whether they are pro-life or pro-choice.

Other Murray poll results have identified a gender gap in the Democratic primary race that may or may not stem from candidate positions on abortion, past declarations on the issue or other work in its favor.

The survay indicated that 43 percent of Democratic woman support Treasurer Ann Richards, the party's front-runner, 25 percent support former Gov. Mark White and 6 percent support Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Dunham said that both Richards and Mattox "are adamantly pro-choice and have been for years without question."

Mattox spokesman Kelly Fero said his candidate was on the record on the issue as far back as when he served in the Texas House of Representatives in the mid-1970s.

Richards was campaign manager in 1971 for attorney and former state Rep. Sarah Weddington. Weddington successfully argued Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court case that originally established a woman's right to an abortion.

More than a gender gap, Dunham saw the issue as "galvanizing" to women and to pro-choice activists in general.

But Price maintained that Democratic and pro-choice forces have "peaked," and upcoming events should play more into pro-life hands.

The Ohio and Minnesota cases up for decision by the Supreme Court are on the comparatively narrow question of whether parents should give consent or at least receive notification of their daughter's abortion.

Price called the issue the Democrats' "Achilles heel."

Hance spokesman Mark Sanders said that internal campaign polls indicate "Texans don't like abortions without restrictions."

Insurance agent announces bid for peace justice post

From Staff Reports

Independent insurance agent Barbara Owen has become the second Republican to announce for Midland County Justice of the Peace, Place 2, launching her campaign with promises to offer a "fresh approach" on the bench.

Owen

"I have been vigorously encouraged by friends, business associates and acquaintances to pursue this position for a long time. I prayed about this decision and I know this is the right choice," she said.

Ms. Owen, an independent insurance agent serving Midland and Odessa, attended Odessa College, Sul Ross State University in Alpine and Rutherford College in Dallas. She also has attended a number of insurance schools.

She is active in her church, is an 18-year member of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority, a charter member of the Juliets of the Globe Theater, member of Life Underwriters and has worked as a volunteer in a number of community service organizations.

Midland County has two justices of the peace, each elected to a four-year term. Their major responsibilities are to preside over the Justice Court and the Small Claims Court.

Their jurisdiction includes misdemeanors punishable by fine only, civil disputes of $2,500 or less, and small claims when the amount in controversy is $200 or less and no attorney is required.

NEEDS

"People take it for granted," he said. "They give to United Way, and they think that covers everything — takes care of their town."

Not so, Trimble said.

"People who give to the United Way are doing good things," Trimble said, but the agencies are not reaching all the needs.

Neither does CIA. But it serves specialized needs — home repairs — and requires donated funds to carry out its program.

And Trimble understands the burden people are under to give money to various causes.

"I realize people are hitting them from every direction," he said. "If you need money to help buy food or clothes for people, I'll help," he said, "because there's a big difference between needs and wants. But I'm not interested in paying anybody's way to Six Flags or to see the Dallas Cowboys. Those are 'wants.'"

But if a roofs leaks, or a water, sewer or gas line breaks, then that "becomes a need in a hurry."

Before CIA was formed, Trimble, 59, was involved in his church's program to help satisfy the house-repair needs of "women without husbands," he said.

"What the Scripture says to us is 'Put works into action'" and help others.

Most are appreciative.

"It's always nice when you get a letter of thanks. But if you were doing something just to get praises, you'd be doing it for the wrong reasons anyway."

Trimble views CIA as a community-action effort.

Elderly homeowners who are physically and financially unable to make needed repairs on their houses "may call other agencies" for help.

However, CIA is "the only one that does anything about it," Trimble said. But, he is careful to acknowledge that "We can't do it all. We're limited in what we can do."

But that niche to repair houses of the low-income elderly gave purpose to CIA — to serve a need — from the outset.

Since 1973, the CIA program has repaired more than 2,000 houses in Midland.

"A lot of elderly people wouldn't have a home to live in had it not been for Christmas In April," Trimble said. "Their houses would have fallen down had it not been for Christmas In April."

For example, Trimble noted that "Once that roof goes, if you don't have it fixed, you will have ruined the ceiling, floor, furniture, walls." In the last 10 years, CIA has replacing about 35 roofs a year.

Since 1989's "big day" in April, CIA workers have replaced plumbing, installed new gas and sewer lines, repaired heating units and hot-water heaters, replaced roofs, and fixed ruptured water pipes in the winter's freeze.

"There is just as much a need today as there was 18 years ago" when CIA was launched, Trimble said.

That's why Trimble is seeking funds for CIA.

"It's just a constant fix-up," he said. "You don't ever get through with any old house. There's always going to be needs."

And the low-income elderly can ill afford to pay for repairs or to do repairs themselves.

"When you have elderly people living on $300 to $400 a month income, they don't 'live,'" he said. "They exist."

But without money to buy tools and building and repair materials, the program would falter.

"We could have 4,000 volunteers," Trimble said, "but if we don't have the money to buy the materials, they can go home."

AGENCY

Williams bought the idea and incorporated it into the first ClayDesta commercial. The spot depicted Williams the cowboy as a "self-made Texan," who had the ability to look a person in the eye, make a promise, and keep it.

His famous line, "You can count on us," is delivered as the horse lopes into the sunset, with the tops of the prairie grasses and the drifting dust turning a florescent shade of amber.

According to Milam, the first time the Admarc team went out to the ranch to shoot a series of ClayDesta commercials, they didn't know Williams well at all, and he didn't know the process very well.

"What we had to do was couch him in a role that suited his personality. We couldn't make him into anything that he wasn't ... we would have destroyed his credibility, and it would have been impossible to get him to do it. As we found out later, we really had him pegged well," he said.

Williams has to work "very, very hard" to appear natural on TV, according to Dunton, who received his training in advertising and commercial art at Texas State Technical Institute in Waco.

Ms. Harrison, a University of Georgia graduate, agreed. But she noted, "You can take chances with Clayton, because he's so strong."

In the political campaign, Admarc's job is to translate Williams' personal integrity, honesty and persona on to film, just as it did in the ClayDesta commercials.

With a crew that's "100 percent Texan," Admarc has utilized state-of-the-art lighting and sound equipment to produce a total of six commercials to date, including Williams' most recent ad filmed in an inner-city Dallas high school.

To make his remarks more genuine, Williams often chooses to transform the essential elements of the script into his own words. That process has become known in Admarc circles as "Claytie-izing" the script.

Milam said it's imperative Admarc do its best work, especially for Williams, because his personal integrity is on the line.

"When he says something, he actually believes it," Milam observed. "There isn't a lawyer in the world who can write a contract as binding as Williams' word and handshake."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Chaps, fans ready for two home games; Lubbock art show closing

By H.A. TUCK

This is a crucial week for the Midland College basketball team ... and a fun week for fans. Midland is at home for both its games this week, but faces the top two teams in the conference.

The league-leading Howard College Hawks come to Chap Center on Monday. This game will help the Ronald McDonald House of the Permian Basin as pre-game ticket proceeds from tickets purchased at McDonald's in Midland or Big Spring will be donated to Ronald McDonald House. Tickets will be $2 for adults and $1 for students at those sites. Tickets at the door Monday night will be the regular $4 for adults and $2 for students.

On Thursday, the second-place South Plains College Texans visit. Both games have 7:30 p.m. starts. Howard College and South Plains both got conference victories over the Chaps in December, but that was at Big Spring and Levelland...not Chap Center!

After this week, there are just six games left and four of those are on the road. The final home games are Feb. 19 against Odessa and Feb. 22 against Clarendon College.

At this point, the Chaps are fighting for one of the top four places in the conference, which gets them into the Region V Tournament. The regional event this year is being held at Snyder March 8-10, with the winner going directly to the National Junior College Athletic Association Championship at Hutchinson, Kansas, March 20-24.

The Chaparral players really would like to have you on hand for both games this week. However, if you can't make it, all the action is carried live on KCRS Radio, 550AM.

This is the final week for the Lubbock Arts Association's touring show at Midland College. Displayed at McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building are a wonderful collection of paintings, ceramics, watercolors, and multi-media creations. The show closes Friday afternoon.

Hours for the gallery this week are 1-5 p.m. today, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday. Admission to McCormick Gallery is free.

Coming next is "Interieurs Parisiens," a selection of photographs by internationally known Eugene Atget. This show opens Feb. 12, and closes March 9.

College Classics, the popular four-week courses for folks at least 55 years of age, starts its first spring session on Monday, Feb. 12. That makes this week the time to register ... if you qualify.

Each class meets for an hour or two, usually one afternoon a week, for four weeks. There are 15 classes offered each session ... and the spring term has three different sessions of College Classics.

Now, here's the best part: the total cost is just $25 to enroll in as many classes as desired in all three sessions. (It's beginning to sound like a pitch for a new gadget on TV, but you don't need to use your credit card, make an 800 call, or add $5.95 for shipping and handling).

Session I is scheduled for Feb. 12-March 9, Session II will be March 12-April 6, and Session III is April 17-May 11.

Your first registration should be in the person at the Cotninuing Education Office, located in the Administration Building. After that, you can register for other College Classics courses by telephone ... if they aren't already filled.

Four Chaparral tennis players this week head for Minneapolis, Minn., and the 1990 Rolex National Small College Championships. This brings together the top players from the junir college ranks, NAIA, and NCAA Division II and Division III.

Janneke Garos, ranked the number one junior college tennis player in the country by the Volvo ITCA pre-season rankings, will be competing in the women's singles. She's also in the women's doubles with regular partner Sharla Barone. Barone might contest the No. 1 ranking, since she defeated Garos last week in the finals of the ITCA National Junior College Indoor Tournament.

In the men's doubles, Mohamed Ridaoui and Amine Kadiri will be gunning for the title. But it was MC doubles players Jesper Witt and Bernt Gade, not Ridaoui-Kadiri, who took the men's doubles crown last week.

Does that give you an idea how tough the Chaparral tennis teams might be this year? Think also about this: it wasn't Barone and Garos, ranked No. 1 in the country, who won at Corpus Christi last week. It was their teammates, Alison Bradford and Maria Vago!

Midland College, despite its many tennis successes, has never won a title in the previous three years of the Rolex ITCA Small College Tournament, but our three opportunities this year make the odds a bit better than in the past.

This week's events conclude Saturday with a country-western concert at Chaparral Center featuring The Judds, with top male vocal star Ricky Van Shelton also performing.

Show time is 8 p.m. Tickets are $18.50, with all seats reserved. A few tickets are still left and may be purchased this week from the Chap Center box office or Endless Horizons in either Midland or Odessa. Ticket sales are cash only.

This will be the first time for the MC maintenance staff to take up the new portable basketball floor, put down the old flooring covering, get the stage and chairs in place, then reverse the procedure after the concert.

• • •

Black History Month is being observed at MC with several different events. There's a Black History Display in the Student Center Wednesday from 11 a.m.-1 p.m. and a James Brown Party after the basketball game on Thursday from 9:30 p.m.-1 a.m. There will be other events the next two weeks.

If you're bored or haven't found exactly what you are seeking, try one or several of the 11 different Continuing Education Department classes which start this week.

Your choice includes: Assertiveness Training, Ballroom Dance, Driver Education, Private Pilot Ground School, Speed Reading Clinic (two sections of this one), Beginning Country-Western Dance, The Art of Magic, Marketing: The Competitive Edge, Retirement Planning Strategies, Effective Parenting for the '90s, and Beginning Swing/Push Dance.

Communists gone or are they really?

The announcement the other day that the communists in Poland had dissolved their 41-year-old party and split into two pro-reform groups should have caught no one by surprise. Poland, long a hotbed of independence, had always been a thorn in the side of the world communism movement and a virtual breeding ground for rebellious factions.

One had to admire the spunk and determination of those Poles.

It was Poland, for example, that led the whirlwind of democratic reform in the East bloc during the past year and thrust the Solidarity Party into control of the Polish government, displacing the communists who had held onto their rule despite growing opposition. Through the years, Poland has been the site of numerous protests staged by courageous Poles against the communist system and in favor of individual freedoms.

One would assume that Solidarity leader Lech Walesa's long-standing battle against the oppressive communistic form of government had been concluded favorably for the Polish people.

But amid all the excitement generated by the announcement that the Communist Party in Poland has been dissolved, there were uneasy rumblings that something may be amiss in the transformation of Poland's government into one embracing democratic principles. One was the assertion by former Gdansk party chief Tadeusz Fiszbach that it's impossible all the old communists had instantly become believers in democracy.

Underscoring that point, Solidarity's Walesa accused the newly formed Social Democrats party of "political arrogance" for taking over the holdings of the disbanded Communist Party. The property, Walesa correctly argued, "belongs to the whole society. That is why none of the newly created parties has the right to take possession." Interestingly, most of the former Communist Party members joined the Social Democrats when the communist organization was dissolved.

Apparently what has been taking place inside Poland has been a little sleight-of-hand. See them? Now they're communists; now they're not, they're Social Democrats.

It's getting difficult to distinguish the good guys from the bad, and that's enough to give political reform a bad name.

The situation evolving in Eastern Europe puts increased pressure on the United States to offer assistance, encouragement, and guidance to countries such as Poland where the flame of freedom has been ignited, but is buffeted by the winds of political change. Freedom-loving nations can't permit the failure of the nations of Eastern Europe struggling to break the bonds of communism.

As President George Bush noted in this week's State of the Union address, "Today, with communism crumbling, our aim must be to ensure democracy's advance."

South Africa has nothing on Mauritania

WASHINGTON — When peace and freedom are becoming the international norm, it is wise to remember that people whose names you cannot pronounce and whose stories you will never hear suffer atrocities every day in countries that the average American couldn't find on the map.

Jack Anderson

Mauritania, on the northwest coast of Africa, is just such a country. Its sister on the tip of the continent, South Africa, gets all the press, but the racism in Mauritania is no less virulent.

A military republic ruled by Arab "white Moors," Mauritania has been the scene of mass expulsions of blacks, hundreds of politically motivated arrests and numerous cases of torture and execution since last April.

The white Moors run the nation, although they make up only 40 percent of the almost 2 million population. The black Mauritanians are expendable, and the government is going to great lengths to demonstrate that.

Mauritania's contribution to modern torture methods is a technique known as "the jaguar." The victim is hung upside down from a metal bar and beaten on the soles of the feet. One who allegedly spent his last hours on the jaguar was Mohamed Yero Ba, a black school headmaster. His torturers suspended him over a fire. Witnesses who saw his body said he was covered with burns.

Ba's crime was that he sent letters to others documenting abuses committed against blacks by security forces in the Senegal River Valley. One of the recipients of Ba's letters was a Mauritanian teacher named Abou Hamady Ba. He was reportedly arrested and tortured, just because Ba wrote to him.

The United States gives Mauritania $7 million a year, but that apparently doesn't buy much leverage. A spokesman for the State Department told our reporter Greg Moore that the United States has protested human rights abuses in Mauritania, and the government there appears to have scaled back the expulsions since that protest in August. But, the United States views Mauritania as a rare bird — a moderate Arab nation — and wants to maintain good relations.

The regime of Mauritania's president, Col. Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya, does not seem to be making much effort to end the torture and executions. In a recent report on Mauritania, the human rights group Amnesty International listed the ongoing abuses. Taya has ruled Mauritania since 1984 when he took over in a bloodless coup.

That report concluded that Taya's failure to prosecute his security forces for human rights abuses indicates a "policy which amounts to condoning the use of torture."

The Mauritanian minister of information has issued statements denying Amnesty's claims. The Mauritanian Embassy in Washington did not return our phone calls.

In 1986, a group of black intellectuals released a booklet they called "The Manifesto of the Oppressed Black Mauritanians." They urged blacks to unite against the Arab-dominated system which they described as being "as pernicious as apartheid."

Those who spoke up paid a high price. Thirty people were arrested in connection with the manifesto and sentenced to prison in a remote village. One of them was writer Tene Youssouf Gueye. According to the Amnesty report, he and other prisoners were forced into hard labor, beaten regularly, chained at night and fed only small amounts of rice.

In September 1988, Gueye died in prison at the age of 60 from severe diarrhea and beriberi. Three more political prisoners died in the same prison in late 1988. The remaining 64 were transferred to a new prison, but were reported to be so weak that they could move only by crawling.

Severe drought for two decades in Mauritania has exacerbated the tensions between blacks and white Moors as various groups vie for the fertile land along the Senegal River. Last April, disputes along the river gave the Mauritanian government the excuse to confiscate the land and cattle of black farmers and force the farmers to cross the river into neighboring Senegal. Between May and September, 50,000 black Mauritanians were rounded up and expelled.

Hundreds who resisted were reported to have been arrested, and, in some cases, tortured and executed. Two boys, ages 10 and 12, were arrested when they tried to sneak away with their goats and sheep. They were later found with their throats cut.

Williams needing more beef, less ham

AUSTIN — Clayton Williams is a real stuntman.

Not in the Hollywood sense, although the Midland businessman and Republican gubernatorial candidate, a neophyte, rolls with the punches pretty well.

Brown

I mean that for better or worse he has a good head for the catchy event that will draw cameras and reporters. In my parents' day it was flagpole sitters and marathon dance contests. Now we have Clayton Williams.

We love to watch the man pull a stunt because we know it will be interesting. We know that he is interesting.

He looks up at you with his face kind of screwed to one side like a younger-day Gabby Hayes. He has that infernal A&M business going for him.

He has a quickdraw grin always at the ready. He should blow smoke away from the thing after he finishes with it.

A few years ago, when he was just an entrepreneur trying to help his long distance phone business survive, he rode his horse up the Capitol steps to protest deregulation of AT&T. Texas took notice.

Hell, he knows he is interesting, and therein lies the problem.

In the news business, we are too often suckers for such people because they help sell newspapers — and we do, after all, offer a product for sale. We like to fill our pages with interesting things to read.

But part of what readers expect when they buy a newspaper is integrity, and if we are used too easily we just lose it with our customers. That's it, we just lose it.

We don't lose it with every customer, mind you; there are lots of indiscrimininating people out there. But we lose it with enough of the vocal ones, the ones ad agencies call opinion makers, that it puts a pallor over what we do.

That's not to mention the feeling we ourselves get after being used. There are lots of kinds of prostitution, but I imagine the feeling after committing any of them is about the same.

So we need to watch out for people like Clayton Williams, especially when they aspire to a serious job like governor. That is the point where we should forswear this interesting business and steel our integrity.

In Williams favor, he has put serious thought into many of his campaign positions, especially those having to do with drugs and education.

His commercials about sending drug offenders to Big Bend Ranch to bust rocks may be most memorable, but beyond that he has a multi-point program, and if they aren't all good ideas, there are at least one or two.

Before any of them reach reality they will have to pass muster with the Legislature anyway, a disclaimer that should go on every single gubernatorial candidate's commercials, Republican and Democrat.

But just when you think Williams is someone you would like to take seriously, up pops the Lonesome Guv, which was his CB handle while leading a convoy of trucks from Grand Prarie to Austin this past week.

Imagine Williams on the horn gabbing with truckers as he tools it down 135. Imagine Williams talking CB lingo, good-buddying his way into our hearts. The scene demands a soundtrack.

The issue was trucking deregulation, but who cares? As was the intention, I suspect, the execution enjoyed prominent coverage because it was so damn interesting as a stunt and not much beyond that.

Maddeningly interesting, if you ask me. Positively diabolical.

Clayton Williams is the front-runner in the Republican gubernatorial race and may well be our state's next chief executive. Given the fact that even actors can become president, he may have a bright future beyond that.

It would be nice if the man would take himself more seriously and tone down the Lonesome Guv act. More beef and less ham is what we need.

But the problem is that Williams is too seductive a personality, probably even to himself.

I bet that within a year or two we either will be watching a movie about Clayton Williams or, more likely, some savvy scriptwriter will rip off his character and put him in a movie under a different name.

The rest of the country will be laughing its head off, but the joke may be on us.

Budget shows president chose not to choose

WASHINGTON — The 40th President's tenth budget went to Congress (all the way from California — Reagan must have some fax bill) and the 41st President delivered the State of the Union address. The address, following the budget, further defined the Bush administration as a limousine without a transmission, nothing connecting motor (mind) with wheels (action). Meanwhile, Pat Moynihan has been demonstrating that his party, the Democratic, is a jalopy with no motor.

George F. Will

Bush's budget and address are suitable punctuations of his first year, exercises in the politics of impeccable sentiments (save more, balance the budget, read to the children). But to govern is to choose and Bush, given his first crack at a budget, chose not to choose. His budget is like his foreign policy of being comfortable with whatever is, be it the Beijing regime or Gorbachev's use of force to suppress yearnings for self-determination.

Bush's speech in praise of good works would have been better had it not been preceded by a budget that refutes it.

Bush's budget expresses how completely comfortable he is with the straitjacket Reagan put on government with his deliberate deficits. The deficits, after all, do not inhibit the expression of impeccable sentiments.

The State of the Union telecast did contain one wonderfully droll moment, doubtless lost on Bush. His entire political program is the avoidance of new taxes, which depends on squandering the Social Security surplus as fast as it flows in. So when he intoned that we must not "mess around with Social Security," Republicans rose, as so many sheep, to bleat approval. But also rising and slowly clapping and savoring the irony of it all was New York's Democratic senator, Moynihan.

Moynihan proposes cutting Social Security taxes, thereby turning off the spigot that enables Bush to continue the pretense that the government's operating deficit is disappearing. Bush's retort is Augustinian. Like the young and far from saintly Augustine, Bush says, "Lord make me chaste — but not yet." Not until 1993, naturally. Bush promises he then will attack the Social Security problem with more creative bookkeeping.

Moynihan has put on his party's plate an idea. His party, unused to such a rich diet, has developed heartburn. Many Democrats now mirror the mindlessness of the many conservatives who believe that any tax cut, at any time, for any reason, is good because governmental anemia is good. (And why not? Even the anemic can have impeccable sentiments.)

The Democratic Party is increasingly, perhaps incorrigibly and terminally, the party of government as an interest group. It is the party of people who provide or receive government benefits. Its credo is: Any tax cut, however compensated for, is not worth the risk that it might not be compensated for.

Why is the AFL-CIO so squeamish about Moynihan's proposal, so tentative in semi-endorsing it? One reason is that in a few years a majority of AFL-CIO members may be public employees. So never mind that the Social Security tax is regressive and suppresses job creation. Public employment always grows. (Federal civilian employment grew 211,000 during the Reagan "revolution.")

The Social Security surplus is growing $1 billion a week. In a few years, the rate will be $3 billion a week. Public employees know a bird in the hand when they see it. The birds in the bushes — alternative revenue sources — might be more equitable and economically efficient, but $1 billion a week isn't chopped liver, so why "mess around with Social Security"?

A better question is: Why not mess around with some other frauds?

For four years, Rep. Bob McEwan, an Ohio Republican, has been nudging two Republican Presidents, and his colleagues, to pay out or cut back the highway and airport trust funds.

Nine cents on every gallon of gas and 8 percent of every airline ticket price are dedicated taxes that can only be used for highway and airport improvements. But the monies are not being spent. They are being hoarded to mask the size of the deficit.

McEwan wants the money spent for the purposes for which it has been collected, or he wants to "end the lie" and cut those taxes, putting the trust funds on a pay-as-you-go footing. He has asked the help of the chairman of the Water Resources, Transportation and Infrastructure Subcommittee of the Senate Public Works and Transportion Committee. Who is? Moynihan, who says there is indeed too much money — $28 billion — sloshing around in the funds.

If we start now and spend $315 billion (in current dollars), we can by the year 2000 have highways as good as ... they were in 1983. But bad roads suit a nation in which one political party lacks a transmission and the other a motor.

Budget more than bean count; It's a story

Last week we had the budget. The budget is a big story in Washington, which is probably why we have it. To understand the budget, remember: The budget is not a budget. The budget is a story.

Russell Baker

Naturally the news industry loves it. It sets up so many stories to get the news industry over the dull patches in the coming year. Examples:

"President Accuses Congress of Busting Budget."

"Congress Accuses President of Budget Fakery."

"GOP Blames Dems for Budget Overruns."

"Dems Charge GOP With Etcetera ... "

New presidents innocent about Washington ways always ask: "Why are we wasting time and energy on this budget rot? Let's forget it and do something useful."

These presidents are soon visited by delegations from the news industry explaining the facts of the presidency. Fact One: presidents who cut off the industry's budget story get 90,000 reporters looking for dirty pool in all 45,000 agencies for which every president is responsible.

Wouldn't the president rather waste energy on budget rot than read a daily rat-tat-tat of news stories about the director of superfluous excess ignoring reports of a growing excess gap? And don't forget the Department of Bureaucratic Presentability: always plenty of scandal to be mined there, Mr. President, what with dozens of assistant secretaries appearing on television looking unpresentably barbered and tailored.

You get the idea. So do presidents. They play along, and we get the annual budget story. Here are a few of the better story elements:

1. Silly revenue estimate: Revenue is the money the government takes in. Budget writers have to guess how much the coming year's take will be. To get the story rolling, they guess absurdly high.

2. Gramm-Rudman: Gramm and Rudman are two guys who had one of the dumber ideas of the era; to wit, that you could stop Congress from spending the country bankrupt if you just passed a law putting a limit on how much it could spend.

3. Off-budget items: "Off-budget" is Washington code talk and means, "This baby is going to us cost us the whole farm, but let's pretend it doesn't count." It is the president's and Congress's favorite way to avoid the Gramm-Rudman problem.

4. "Read my lips": Many tired but beloved stories flow from the president's promise not to raise taxes, which would be necessary if anybody were serious about conquering the infamous mountain of debt and dealing honestly with the bashable Japanese.

The most interesting potential story this year: how finaglers in White House and Congress will manage to continue avoiding an income-tax boost by using the constantly rising soak-the-downtrodden Social Security tax to pay the daily bills.

Dust from caliche road dangerous, annoying

The traffic on the caliche-topped alley between West Illinois and Ohio Avenue starting at Crestview and ending at Midkiff has become a serious nuisance for the residents. The reason is the blinding clouds of dust stirred up by cars and vans rushing to deliver or pick up children from the Discovery Day Care Center located on the corner of Illinois and Midkiff.

Dust swirls over fences, into backyards, onto garden plants, over clotheslines in use, and in the summer even infiltrates our home through the air conditioner pads. Powdery dust hangs in the air continually for about 1½ hours, mostly during weekday morning and evening hours. Ironically, these are the most comfortable times to work in my garden. But, alas, I must quickly vacate my backyard to escape the choking dust.

It seems quite unfair that our once casual alley has become such a frenzy of non-residential traffic. Apparently the drivers' primary purpose in using the alley is to save a minute or two of their time.

The logical alternative seems obvious: Stay on the paved streets — simply enter and exit the Day Care parking area from Midkiff. Such a route switch would indicate that some folks out there do care enough about the welfare of others to endure a slight inconvenience to themselves.

Our sincere thanks to those who currently avoid using the alley while traveling to the day care center.

'Sting' helped protect Midland citizens' safety

In regard to Fred Jones' letter in the Sunday, Jan. 28, edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, I feel that Jones should stick to facts when engaging his pen. To my knowledge, Midland County Sheriff's Office has never been unknowingly involved in a "sting" with Department of Public Safety undercover officers. If this ever occurred, it would have been prior to Sheriff Painter taking office.

Midland County Sheriff's Office's most recent involvement in a Ward County sting was with five other agencies, one of which was the Department of Public Safety. This sting resulted in the arrest of seven long-time traffickers, and the seizure of $469,000. Four of these arrests took place in Midland County.

I would remind Jones that in effecting any arrest there is the possibility of the law enforcement officer being injured or killed. The county where the arrest takes place has very little to do with the risk factor.

Since I failed to notice Jones' presence during the operation, and based on his distorted account, it seems that neither Jones, nor the person who informed him, possessed any personal knowledge of the event.

The public's sake is exactly the reason Midland County Sheriff's Office was involved.

Odessa shows support for its police officers

Hats off to the city of Odessa for showing its pride and support to their new police officers. This must have been a morale boost to the fine men who know that being a law enforcement officer is not an easy job.

These men are very fortunate to have a caring city that shows its concern by putting them on television and letting the community know of the achievements and pride of these men.

It's a shame that Midland does not exhibit these feelings towards its new police officers. Midland recently installed two new officers in its department and very little public recognition was given to them. The economic problems that existed did not keep these men from fulfilling their desire to become police officers. Midland policemen go through a long, hard process to become officers. They chose this career and it's not an easy job to get into. It takes special qualities to become a good law enforcement officer.

These people deserve special recognition, respect and support, but how is one supposed to convince our society of this if our own city doesn't acknowledge their worth? Our city needs to set an example and so far it has not. Who is responsible for the lack of recognition for these fine people? Where are they?

Speed limit not enforced in Michigan Street zone

Before a child is killed, the school crossing zone on Michigan one block east of Garfield needs to be enforced or eliminated. Michigan is structured, with its one-way flow, to carry a maximum of traffic downtown. In the mornings it carries much downtown working traffic as well as Midland High School traffic.

The school crossing zone does not have a crossing guard, only a 20 mile-per-hour speed limit marked with signs. If there is any parent left who sends their child to cross Michigan going to school, please be aware their life is at risk.

On a recent morning in this school zone a fancy brown pickup with two boys going to Midland High flew by me driving at a speed in excess if even the 30 mile-per-hour speed limit on Michigan.

The Midland Police Department has been notified previously and has not acted to enforce the speed zone at this location. They have promised again to try for compliance. If this school zone is not enforceable, why not eliminate it? It only misleads people. Anyone who thinks there is protection for anyone crossing this intersection could be tragically mistaken.

Nursery, city helped cultivate our future

In celebration of Arbor Day, the First United Methodist Church preschool class of four and five year-olds recently planted a redbud tree at Wadley-Barron Park. Because of the generosity of Aldredge Gardens in donating the labor to plant the tree, the children were able to purchase a magnificent tree with money they had earned at home.

Our thanks to Richard Oglesby at Aldredge Gardens for all of his help and support. We would also like to thank the City of Midland Parks and Recreation Department, especially Mike Casey and Stewart Gerhart, for finding a suitable place for our tree and for allowing us to use the park for our project.

The children were excited to contribute to the landscaping of our community and hope all of you will enjoy watching their tree grow.

Swim team coaches deserve our praise

I am the mother of two swimmers with the COM Swim Team here in Midland. During the swim meet in Odessa and especially during the Mid-Winter Invitational in Midland, I had the opportunity to witness our coaches and compare them to the coaches of other Texas swim teams.

While other coaches were yelling and acting a little overzealous with some of their children, our coaches remained calm and very supportive. Brad, Mike, Beth, Valerie, Julie, Jane and the others with whom I am not yet familiar, remained quiet and encouraged each swimmer before an event. Jose, our super secretary, is as dedicated as our coaches.

We here in Midland are extremely fortunate to have such a fine group who make this sport one of the most rewarding experiences these athletes are ever going to have.

God bless you all.

Upheaval in Eastern Europe affecting Ethiopia policies

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Ethiopia is a long way from Eastern Europe, and the distance is growing.

Flora Lewis

The East Germans who set up its security police, intelligence system and Communist Party are pulling out.

This hungry, war-torn country is another example of the effect of upheaval in the Soviet bloc and changing East-West relations on far-off lands.

The Moscow magazine New Times, distributed here in English, now describes the Soviet protege as a country on "the brink of national disaster," where the "military adopted an authoritarian model of barrack-type Socialism" and "any opposition to the regime was ruthlessly suppressed."

Moscow still sends military supplies. But it is openly urging Mengistu Haile Mariam, the revolutionary soldier who runs the Government officials acknowledge that the Horn of Africa is losing strategic significance now that the U.S. and Soviets don't see themselves as rivals here.

Ethiopia has to look elsewhere for friends.

Here, too, one cycle of history is drawing to a close. Foreign residents speculate about Mengistu's future.

"He could be out tomorrow or hold on for several years," said one diplomat. A military coup attempt failed last May, thanks to East German advisers. But the military, the only organized force, is said to remain disaffected.

So the government is starting reforms, and looking to the West for more aid.

"We realize a superpower is a superpower, and there is no vital conflict of interest with the U.S.," Foreign Minister Tessfaye Dinka said in an interview.

After the Italian invaders were defeated in World War II, Ethiopia became a U.S. client state, with a big military base and 20,000 Americans here.

Those who overthrew Haile Selassie in 1974 didn't turn against the U.S. immediately, however.

When neighboring Somalia, then a Soviet client with an important naval base, launched a war to impose its claim on the Ogaden region, Ethiopia asked for U.S. arms. It got some, but not nearly as much as it wanted.

"So we asked the Soviets. That's why the switch. The ideological and other things only followed later," Tessfaye said.

At first, Moscow tried to reconcile the enemies and control both. That wasn't possible, so it naturally chose the more significant of the two.

Ethiopia kicked out the Americans, and Moscow and Washington in effect traded clients, and bases.

But now, government ministers contend that the regime never really became as Communist as it used to boast it was.

They point out that the feudal land and social structure had to be reformed, but that agriculture is still largely in peasant hands and small business is mostly private, if regularly harassed.

They want foreign investment, express thanks for Western food to stave off widespread famine, and [illegible] of the need for Western help to [illegible] the country to feed itself.

But international officials say the government is still spending a staggering 60 percent of its budget on military and security forces.

Investors aren't tempted in such a climate.

The war in the separatist eastern province of Eritrea has been going on for over 25 years and has spread to other areas.

The population of nearly 50 million is growing at a whopping 3 percent a year, despite the starving. Nothing more effective than Band-Aids can be applied until there is peace. And it's not in sight.

For the cold war was only a distorting mask that exaggerated old conflicts and scars. Ethiopians speak proudly of 2,500 years of independence, of their resistance to Islamization, and somewhat wistfully of the importance they feel the West should give to keeping their Red Sea Eritrean coast out of pro-Arab hands.

That is why Israel and the U.S. are at odds now about support for Mengistu. Jerusalem has no special love for him. But from Israel's independence, it has followed a strategy of seeking friendships with the non-Arab lands surrounding the Arabs who surround the Jewish state, especially Turkey, Iran and Ethiopia.

It isn't clear how much military and intelligence aid Israel provides; probably less than reported and doubtless more than admitted.

The desire to resettle Ethiopia's Falasha Jews, now some 17,000 here and 17,000 already in Israel, plays a part. But underlying regional strategy, divergent from evolving U.S. global strategy, is more important.

After Cold War aberrations, older, deeper forces are resurfacing. They are more enduring than regimes. If the world is a global village, neighbors aren't getting on better for it.

Bush's civil rights nominee showed character at Attica

On the night of Friday Sept. 10, 1971, a nervous group of civilian "observers" entered D-Yard at the Attica State Correction Facility in upstate New York, where more than 1,000 rebelling inmates were holding 35 hostages.

Tom Wicker

In the flickering light of fires burning in trash cans, each of the observers — a racially mixed group who were more nearly negotiators — introduced himself to the skeptical and shouting inmates. Most of the latter were black or Hispanic, and all were in the heady euphoria of temporary freedom within the walls.

Each observer received scattered applause, perhaps just for being there; but the inmates responded with a real ovation for only one of them — state Sen. John Dunne.

He was well known at Attica as the chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Crime and Correction; though a suburban Republican, he was applauded because of his repeated inspection trips to state prisons and his dogged legislative work to aid inmates.

Now former Dunne is President Bush's new nominee to head the civil rights division of the Justice Department, a post for which some civil rights leaders say he has too little experience. But if character is as important as experience — and I believe it is — Bush has found a good man.

That opinion was formed during four days of close association with Dunne, during several meetings with inmates in D-Yard, and in the Steward's Room at Attica, where the observer group held its fruitless meetings.

(In the end, 39 men, including 10 hostages, were killed by indiscriminate gunfire from the state police who stormed D-Yard on Sept. 13.)

It was John Dunne, for example, who with other elected officials succeeded in having the observers readmitted to the prison on Sept. 11, after they had spent the night outside the walls and some prison officials had attempted to keep them out. That prolonged the effort for a negotiated solution at Attica.

Sunday afternoon, Sept. 12, when several of the observers decided that the only hope for a peaceful settlement lay with Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, it was John Dunne, a Rockefeller political ally, who provided the governor's private phone number at Pocantico Hills.

At some personal political risk, he also was one of the four observers who made a futile plea for Rockefeller to come personally to Attica.

"Time can be on our side," Dunne told him — but only if the governor moved directly to provide it.

That night, again acting as an elected official, John Dunne objected vigorously when Russell Oswald, the head of the state prison system, instead proposed to the governor that he agree to come to Attica only after the inmates had given up the hostages.

That would require the inmates to surrender their bargaining power, Dunne argued, and thus would not deal with their demands for improved prison conditions.

Later on the night of Sept. 12, Dunne learned that the armed attack on D-Yard was scheduled for the next morning. He argued for and obtained a pledge that at 7 a.m., before the resort to violence (the observers believed correctly that much bloodshed would result), one last appeal would be made to the inmates for a settlement.

That appeal was made and failed, as did the other efforts of the observer group to avoid the deaths of hostages and inmates alike.

After D-yard was recaptured, following six minutes of sustained police gunfire, Dunne and other officials were given a tour of the prison. At one point, he saw naked inmates being forced to run a punishing gantlet of corrections officers.

"I see something I shouldn't be seeing," he told Walter Dunbar, Oswald's deputy, "and it had better stop right away." It did — though after Dunne left, reprisals were resumed.

Throughout the ordeal of the observers at Attica, when it was difficult to conceal one's true self, John Dunne proved to be personally and politically courageous, willing to act, concerned for "the least of these" — as Rep. Charles Rangel has called him, "a decent person."

Is that not worth at least as much as a more conventional civil rights "experience"?

Dunne surely learned something about his fellow men at Attica, where the observers were known to be opposed to an attack on D-Yard.

A white corrections officer, bringing a box of sandwiches to the Steward's Room, remarked with contempt: "If I'da known this was for you guys, I'da never brung it."

Dunne turned to me, clearly shocked. "And these are our people," he said.

Bush's State of the Union address shows his vision

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Critics have frequently accused President Bush of lacking vision, but he has confounded them once again.

Hearst

In his first State of the Union address, he outlined his scenario for "A Better America." It was a broad outline of what he hopes and believes can be achieved for the future betterment of our country, starting in this new decade.

In what impressed me as one of the most inspirational speeches of his presidency, he did not dwell on gloomy predictions about the deficit and national debt or what will happen if Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev falls from power.

Instead, the president showed a positive, optimistic outlook about the solution of most of our domestic problems and the conclusion of arms reduction agreements with Gorbachev. What he has in mind would make it difficult, if not impossible short of all-out nuclear war, for a future Soviet Stalinist to reverse the freedom movements in Eastern Europe or attempt to conquer Western Europe.

Relieved by Gorbachev's denial of rumors he planned to resign, President Bush announced he had informed the Soviet leader he was willing to have each superpower's combat forces in Europe cut to 225,000 troops instead of the previously proposed 275,000. The new proposal would constitute a reduction of 80,000 U.S. troops and 370,000 Soviet troops.

President Bush is eager to conclude nuclear and conventional arms reductions with Gorbachev while he is still able to make such agreements. He knows Gorbachev desperately needs to cut military spending so he can spend more on food supplies and development projects to avert an economic catastrophe.

The president's trump cards in his arms reduction negotiations with the Soviets are the cuts he is willing to make if he gets a satisfactory agreement that will significantly lessen Soviet military strength in Eastern Europe. That is why President Bush doesn't want the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives depriving him of his bargaining cards by imposing unilateral cutbacks in defense spending while negotiations are underway with the Soviets.

Confident there will be a rainbow on the horizon of our domestic problems within a few years if Congress cooperates with him, the president said his plans would balance the budget by 1993 and do so without any new income taxes.

His hopeful vision is that by the end of this decade everyone capable of and willing to work will have a job; mothers will be assured of child care; the homeless will be off the streets; and schools and their neighborhoods will be drug free.

Declaring that we must "get our house in order," President Bush listed his additional major domestic goals as follows:

"A better America where everyone enjoys the same opportunities to live, to work and to contribute to society. Where 'Made in America' is recognized around the world as a symbol of quality and progress.

"By the year 2000 every child must start school ready to learn. The United States must increase the high school graduation rate to no less than 90 percent.

"By the year 2000, U.S. students must be the first in the world in math and science achievement. Every school must offer the kind of disciplined environment that makes it possible for our kids to learn.

"We will do what it takes to invest in America. The money is there. It's there for research and development. It's there for housing — to help everyone from first-time home buyers to the homeless. It's there for education and for space exploring. It's there to plant a billion trees a year. It's there for Social Security. The last thing we need to do is mess around with Social Security."

Obviously, the key to success for the president's goals is congressional cooperation. President Bush, who is noted for his consensus-oriented, compromise-minded approach to solving problems, hoped the appropriate Democratic members of Congress would sit down with him and his advisers and work together in seeking agreement on the budget for fiscal year 1991, which starts Oct. 1.

However, there are disturbing signs the congressional Democratic leadership is prepared to sacrifice the economic interests of our country for partisan political purposes in this election year. They apparently do not want a budget agreement until after the November elections so that a budget battle can be fought on welfare cuts and defense spending. If failure to reach a budget agreement this year pushes us into a recession, the Democrats will be to blame.

On a personal note, I am happy to report that when you read this column I will be back home after a week in New York Hospital where I underwent an operation for a compacted hip fracture. Like so many accidents that occur at home, I slipped on the stairway of our house at San Simeon, Calif., recently and landed on my back and head. The fracture was not discovered until after my return to New York Jan. 15. A three-hour operation a week ago Friday took care of the problem and now, except for a little post-operative discomfort, I feel fine.

With the assistance of Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor in Washington, I was able to get this column out in time for Sunday publication. We should all be thankful for the miracle of modern surgery.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

James Bradford, chairman of Lee High School's social studies department since 1973, has been honored by the Parent-Teacher-Student Association as its most recent winner of the Super-Teacher of the month award. He was selected both for his achievements as department head and as a favorite of the students in the classroom.

Bradford

The award was also given in recognition of Bradford's accomplishments as sponsor for the past five years of Close-Up, an extended-study program in which he has taken Lee students to Washington, D.C. to directly observe government in action. He also heads the Mock Trials program, in which Lee students reenact courtroom procedures. The group has been selected several times to represent Region 18 in state competition in Dallas. In addition, Bradford has been very active in district curriculum planning and currently serves on the West Texas Regional Council of Social Studies Teachers.

Bradford hold a masters degree from Texas Southern University and has done work toward his doctorate at the University of North Texas. Outside the classroom, he has exemplified his commitment to the ideals of citizenship through his active community involvement. He has served as a board member of United Way and on the county redistricting board. He presently serves on the board of Midland Housing Authority and is a hearing officer for District 16-Bs grievance committee for the State Bar of Texas.

Goodbye
Volkswagen

During the past five years Rogers Ford has been an authorized Volkswagen dealer. During that time, sales of this German import did not keep pace with the market.

Therefore, we have formally resigned as an authorized Volkswagen dealer and will no longer represent them in the market.

Sales of Fords and Volvos continue to grow at a strong pace and expansion of parts and service facilities has become our top priority.
Consequently, it became necessary for us to reconsider our desire to continue with Volkswagen.

We have concluded that time and space should be utilized to expand to meet the growing needs of our Ford and Volvo customers.

We appreciate your loyalty and we pledge ourselves to continue to provide uncompromising quality in every area of our sales and service to you.

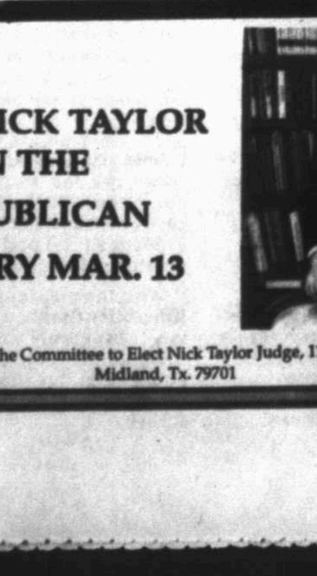
GARY D. DOUGLAS ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE



As a lawyer and long-time resident of Midland who has a deep concern about the future of our city, I feel that the upcoming District Court election is extremely important. Over 80% of the cases in the 238th District Court are civil cases which demand a judge with a broad and diverse legal background.
Nick Taylor will bring to the Court the legal knowledge and temperament he has gained in 26 years of handling a wide variety of civil matters. It takes a fair-minded, knowledgeable and experienced lawyer to make a great judge. Nick Taylor is such a lawyer.

Met star enters rehab

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Darryl Strawberry entered a treatment center for alcohol rehabilitation Saturday, the latest chapter in the story of the New York Mets' struggling star.

Strawberry, jailed last week in a dispute with his wife, voluntarily checked into the Smithers Center in New York shortly before noon. It is the same facility that treated teammate Dwight Gooden for cocaine trouble in 1987.

Last week, Strawberry was arrested at his home in Los Angeles after allegedly hitting his wife and threatening her with a pistol. He spent a short time in jail before posting $12,000 bond and a hearing will be held next Friday to determine if misdemeanor charges will be filed.

Two days before the incident, blood tests showed Strawberry was the father of a child born to a Missouri woman in 1988. He did not dispute the finding and a court is determining how much support he will pay.

The Mets said it was too early to tell how long their five-time All-Star would be at Smithers. The average length of stay there is approximately 28 days. Gooden spent a month there and Mets reserve catcher Mackey Sasser was admitted for a month last year because of an alcohol problem.

"Our first concern is for Darryl's welfare," Mets executive vice president Frank Cashen said. "Dr. (Allan) Lans has worked closely with Darryl and has spent several days with him in Los Angeles this week, and we are confident this will be the best thing for Darryl."

Lans is director of the Mets' employee assistance program. He is associated with Smithers.

Lans went to Los Angeles on Wednesday and returned to New York with Strawberry on Friday night. Strawberry spent the night at Lans' home in Teaneck, N.J., and was admitted to Smithers in the morning.

"I don't really know if Darryl's had a drinking problem for any length of time or not," Mets vice president Al Harazin said. "I've seen Darryl take a drink, but I've seen lots of other people take a drink, too."

Strawberry, 28 next month, was the National League rookie of the year in 1983 with the Mets. He was touted as baseball's next superstar and has played that way at times, although his talent has often been tainted with trouble.

'Shoe' crosses final finish line

Racing legend out of the money at Santa Anita

By STEPHEN CRIST
N.Y. Times News Service

ARCADIA, Calif — Bill Shoemaker, riding for the 40,350th and last time in his 42-year career, finished fourth Saturday in the $100,000 "Legend's Last Ride" at Santa Anita Park, Calif.

Shoemaker's mount, Patchy Groundfog, was second most of the way, and looked ready to take the lead in the stretch of the one-mile grass race for older horses.

Then Exemplary Leader burst through between horses to take the lead and draw off to victory, and two others passed Shoemaker's weary mount in the final yards.

Patchy Groundfog, the top weight under 118 pounds, was only a slight morning-line favorite at 3-to-1, but sentimental and suspicious bettors sent him off as a heavy 3-to-5 choice.

Shoemaker was paid a reported $100,000 for his appearance Saturday at Santa Anita.

Shoemaker won a record 8,833 races, a winning percentage of .219, along with 6,136 second-place finishes and 4,987 third-place finishes.

His mounts have earned $123.3 million.

Training camp doubtful

Associated Press

NEW YORK — For two hours, Chuck O'Connor stood near a slide machine and explained what baseball owners want.

A few hours later, on Thursday, a few blocks away, Donald Fehr spent two hours saying that players don't see any reason to agree.

"You seem to be on different planets," someone suggested to the players' union head. "Like Mars and Venus."

"Farther than that," said Lauren Rich, the union's assistant general counsel.

So with less than two weeks to go before the start of spring training, it appears very likely that it won't happen at all.

In 1972 there was a strike. Four years later, a lockout. In 1980 and 1981 there were strikes and again in 1985. Now, Lockout II is looming.

"We're both captives of history," management negotiator O'Connor said. "The relationship is one that at this stage is permeated with mistrust."

Despite record profits for owners and record salaries for players, negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement have made little progress in 16 sessions since Nov. 28.

The union is skeptical of management's revenue-sharing proposal and continues to argue for the free-market system put in place in the 1976 agreement.

"The association's position does not respond to the need for a workable solution to the problem of maintaining competitive balance."

That statement isn't from this year, it's from Feb. 23, 1976, when American League president Lee MacPhail and National League president Chub Feeney announced baseball's first lockout.

That one lasted until March 17, when Commissioner Bowie Kuhn ordered the camps open.

"While nobody is more disappointed than I that we do not have solid progress to a final agreement," Kuhn said, "the fans are the most important people around and their interests now become paramount.

Lee kickers roll over rookie OHS program

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It didn't take long for Mark Ferguson and Jordan Reed to make sure their Midland Lee soccer team would capture sole possession of first place in the fledgling District 3 soccer race.

After Ferguson set up Reed just to the left of the net for the latter's seventh goal of the season in the second minute of Saturday's match against Odessa High, the Rebels kept up the pressure in a 5-0 wipeout at Lee field.

Lee, 5-0 overall and 2-0 in district play, outshot the hapless Bronchos 26-0 and dominated every other aspect of the game. By the second half, the OHS kickers were barely able to keep the ball from in front of beleaguered goalkeeper Eduardo Figala.

In other district action Saturday, Midland High evened its district mark at 1-1 with a 3-0 whitewash of Odessa Permian, while San Angelo opened its district season by nipping Abilene Cooper 3-2.

Gaines shrugs off credit

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

More than a month after Odessa Permian won its fifth state football title and was dubbed mythical national high school champion with a perfect 16-0 season, Panther head coach Gary Gaines is still being inundated with congratulatory greetings.

Saturday was no different for the self-effacing Gaines, who was one of the more than 100 coaches attending the Region IV meeting of the Texas High School Coaches Association at Midland High. Gaines could little more than shake one hand before another palm or pat on the back was offered by one of his peers.

He has also received recognition of a more official vein, having been named the 1989 District 4-5A coach of the year and finishing as runner-up in balloting for for the Texas high school coach of the year.

But no matter how many accolades come his way, Gaines is quick to point to the players, staff, fans and anybody besides himself as reasons for the success of his teams during his 11 years as a head coach.

"I've been real fortunate. I have been in some real nice places, been around good people, had good coaches working for me and, at most of the places I've been, had good athletes willing to work hard," said Gaines, who has posted a head coaching record of 96-34-8 at Petersburg, Denver City, Amarillo Tascosa, Monahans and Permian.

"The personal honors are nice, but head coaches tend to get too much credit when a team wins. That's just the nature of the game. Of course, a lot of times they receive a lot of the blame when a team is losing, but that's the coaching business," said the 40-year-old Crane native, who in four years at Permian has amassed a 46-7-1 record, two state semifinal appearances, one state title and the mythical national championship bestowed by one show on the ESPN television network.

The 1989 season also saw Gaines and Permian overcome a couple of Passing one's time without football

With the final whistle of the NFL Pro Bowl today, the 1989-90 football season will finally be over.

Price

The question now is, what will fans of professional sports do until the start of baseball season, if there is a baseball season?

Oh sure, there is the National basketball Association, where referees never heard the phrase "traveling," and so many teams make the playoffs that regular season games have almost as little meaning as NHL games. But the majority of NBA fans don't get interested until the playoffs in May, well into baseball season.

Just a few thoughts on how many of these fans will be biding their idle February:

■ Eagerly awaiting the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue, which should be on the newsstands within a matter of days. Few SI readers are neutral on the subject, either loving the publication or hating it. Personally, I like the little break from stories on cocaine abuse, gambling addiction and the stupidity of the NCAA (no matter how much I agree with that particular slant).

I equally enjoy the following issue that contains diatribes penned by outraged subscribers, who probably don't realize their children can see the exact same thing in the J.C. Penny catalog.

■ Watching, I shudder at the thought, professional wrestling. Let's get one thing straight: I have no question that the participants are athletes, but what they do for money is closer to theater than sports.

The matches are obviously predetermined. What escapes me is why people watch the stuff. Even though they may not want to admit it, plenty of people tune in to televised "rasslin," or else it would not be all over the air waves at each waking hour.

It used to be that the stereotypical wrestling buff was named something like "Cooter," had a week-old beard, and guzzled beer until it was time to grab the shotgun and turn the coon hounds loose.

These days, though, it is obvious that pro wrestling (as opposed to the real wrestling practiced in high schools and colleges) has some sort of mass appeal and the fan base covers a wide spectrum of stereotypes.

No wonder everybody is so critical of the American education system.

■ Wondering if the Major League Baseball Players Association will really strike, or if the team owners will really lock the players out of training camp.

The union and owners seem to have irreconcilable differences at the moment, but the overriding opinion is that there is too much money to be lost if the big leagues don't play.

That money will be thrown out the window not necessarily by reduced or no fan attendance, but by lost revenue from the new television pact with CBS and ESPN. All these new salaries that make a different person the highest-paid player in baseball with each dawning day are based on those television revenues.

It also would make sense that with all that money flying around, for the players to strike would be tantamount to them cutting their own throats. But the main problem here is that players with little experience are left out of the monetary orgy.

"So what?" says you average fan. "If I couldn't get by on half a million a year for hitting .265 and wielding an average fielder's glove, something serious is wrong," he adds.

If we don't play ball, talk of a fan boycott upon the game's return will abound. But it always does, and the fans always crater to the money-grubbers.

O'Meara beats bad weather

Associated Press

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Mark O'Meara's early starting time enabled him to escape the full fury of the wind and emerge with the third-round lead Saturday in the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

PGA

"First off, first in, first out of the wind," O'Meara said after extracting a 3-under-par 69 from wind-blown Cypress Hill.

O'Meara, the defending champion and the first man off the tee, completed a rotation of one round on each of three Monterey Peninsula courses in 209, seven under par and one shot ahead of his closest pursuer, Rocco Mediate.

Mediate got to the back nine at Cypress Point about three hours after O'Meara and caught the full force of the 40 mph wind.

"It was unplayable," he said and shook his head. "Amazing. I never saw anything like it.

"The last four holes were the hardest I've ever played in my life," said Mediate, now in his fifth season on the PGA Tour and still in search of his first title.

He bogeyed the last three holes for a 73 and a 210 total, then began spinning tales of shots blown 50 yards off line, winds that rocked his 215-pound body away from the ball, and a well-hit 5-iron shot that traveled 106 yards.

At one point he said, he was checking yardage with his caddy and said, "Not that it matters, but how far do I have?"

demons. First, a Gaines-coached Panther team finally beat 4-5A rival Midland Lee (17-13) after three straight losses. Then Mojo made it past the semifinal round of the playoffs, where Permian had been stopped two years in a row.

"It was a gratifying year from every aspect. When you have a chance to win the state championship, as far as any coach or player is concerned, it's just a dream year for everybody concerned.

"Obviously, you have got to have great players to win it all, but at the same time you have got to have unselfish players who want to win as a team. That's the thing I will always remember about this season — how the kids played well together, the good senior leadership we had and how we improved as the season went along," he said.

Gaines, who has only been through two losing seasons as a head coach, also said the winning tradition at Permian has its accompanying pressure.

"Sure, I think there's pressure to win. The people here expect a good product every Friday night. The coaches feel that and the players feel that," he said. "I don't think it's all that bad, within reason. It certainly gives the team a boost to have great fan support.

"Our fans support us well and want to see us perform as well as possible."

Already looking to next season, Gaines and Permian will be hard pressed to come anywhere near duplicating 1989. Lost to graduation will be 22 starters, including offensive standouts Lloyd Hill (an all-state wide receiver), running back Chris Comer, and quarterback Stoney Case. Also gone will be defensive stars like Chad Williams and Steve Womack.

"It's going to be a major rebuilding job. We lost some great senior players. You just don't go to the next class and pull up six or seven guys of that caliber," Gaines said.

But, considering Gaines past track record, no matter who plays for Mojo in 1990 the Panthers again will be one of the teams to beat in 4-5A, and maybe the state.

Baylor wins fifth straight

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Dennis Lindsey scored a game-high 25 points to help Baylor to an 85-77 Southwest Conference basketball victory over Texas A&M Saturday.

Three other Baylor Bears were in the double digits: Julius Denton scored 19 points while Ivan Jones and Kelvin Chalmers counted 11 each as Baylor won its fifth straight game. The Bears are now 12-8 overall and 4-5 in SWC play.

Tony Milton's 19 points led four Aggies in double figures. Lynn Suber added 15, Brooks Thompson had 14 and Darren Rhea scored 10.

Center David Harris set a school record with eight blocked shots.

The Aggies fell to 11-12 on the year and 4-5 in the SWC. It was A&M's fifth loss at home in seven appearances this season and interim coach John Thornton's record is now 2-2.

The Bears led 42-40 at halftime and broke out of a 48-48 tie with a 6-0 run early in the second half to lead the rest of the way.

The Aggies had 19 turnovers and Baylor came up with 15 steals.

"Five straight feels great," said Baylor coach Gene Iba. "This team has come a long way since November."

The Bears lost starter Joey Fatta with an injured left leg four minutes into the game, and Iba said he is questionable.

"We are not sure about Joey Fatta at this point," he said. "It really doesn't look good at this point, but David Chandler will take a long look at it tonight and first thing tomorrow and see if he can go next week."

"I thought A&M was tough as we've seen them in a long time," Iba said.

Aggies' interim coach John Thornton said he was disappointed with the offense. "It was like pulling teeth," he said. "I thought our defense was all right. It seemed we were fighting outselves on offense. It seemed every time we got close, they would come up with a loose ball or hit a big bucket."

Texas Christian scored the first eight points, led by 40-19 at the half and went on to rout Southern Methodist 86-43 behind the 17 points of Craig Sibley.

Sibley had 14 points by halftime, but the 6-6 senior saw little action in the second half as TCU reserves saw a lot of action.

TCU improved to 11-0 in the SWC and 4-5 overall. SMU fell to 7-19 and 2-8.

Michael Strickland, who drilled his first three three-point attempts early in the second half, finished with 14 for the winners, with Reggie Smith adding 13 and Tony Edmond providing 11.

Only SMU's John Colborne managed to score in double digits. He had 10 points the first half but got only two points the second half for a total of 12.

O'Neal leads LSU in OT; Kansas shuns Oklahoma

Associated Press

Shaquille O'Neal had 20 points, 24 rebounds and a school-record 12 blocked shots and No. 14 LSU took advantage of No. 20 Loyola Marymount's horrendous long-range shooting and won in overtime, 148-141.

Hank Gathers scored 48 points for Loyola. But the Lions hurt themselves by shooting just 6-for-45 from 3-point range. Chris Jackson scored 34 points for LSU before fouling out with 2:53 left in overtime.

The highest-scoring game at the LSU Assembly Center broke the record set last year when Illinois beat LSU 127-100. The pace was so fast Saturday that LSU's play-by-play typewriter burned up and had to be replaced with 3:16 left in the first half.

LSU led 72-58 at halftime. It was was 134-all at the end of regulation as both teams, each now 16-4, missed foul shots at the end.

Gathers scored the first four points of overtime, but Loyola did not score again until Bo Kimble's 3-pointer with 59 seconds left. LSU, meanwhile, scored nine straight points for a 143-138 lead.

Kimble, the nation's leading scorer, finished with 32 points. His 3-point play with 1:13 left tied it at 134, seven seconds after LSU's Maurice Williamson missed the front end of a 1-and-1.

Vernel Singleton missed the front end of another 1-and-1 for LSU with 1:06 remaining and Loyola's Terrell Lowery missed the first shot of a 1-and-1 with 10 seconds left. Gathers got the rebound of Lowery's miss, but was off on a turnaround jump shot.

No. 2 Kansas 85, No. 9 Oklahoma 74

Rick Calloway and Kevin Pritchard keyed a second-half run that stopped an Oklahoma rally and carried No. 2 Kansas past the ninth-ranked Sooners in a rugged rematch between the 1988 NCAA finalists.

The Jayhawks (22-1, 5-1 in the Big Eight) shot just 38 percent in the physical, foul-filled game, far below their NCAA-leading 54.3 percent.

Oklahoma (15-3, 4-2), playing without William Davis, its No. 2 scorer and No. 1 rebounder, was held 38 points below its scoring average. A spokesman said Davis was suspended one game for disciplinary reasons.

Terry Brown's 3-pointer at the buzzer gave the Jayhawks a 38-29 lead at the end of a first half. It unexpectedly low-scoring for the two No. 2 and No. 6. point-producers in Division I. Oklahoma never got closer than five in the second half.

Top 25 Basketball

Less than 11 minutes into the game, Kansas starters Jeff Gueldner, Mark Randall and Pekka Markkanen had two fouls each. With 8:06 remaining in the half, Oklahoma's Jackie Jones had three fouls and Skeeter Henry and Damon Patterson had two. With 10:57 left in the game, Oklahoma's Terry Evans picked up foul No. 4.

No. 4 Michigan 77, Wisconsin 63

Terry Mills scored 18 points and sparked a first-half surge that sent No. 4 Michigan over Wisconsin.

Rumeal Robinson and Loy Vaught each added 15 points points for the Wolverines (16-4, 6-3 in the Big Ten). Danny Jones scored 25 points for Wisconsin (11-11, 2-8).

Both teams were missing top players. Michigan was without third-leading scorer Sean Higgins and reserve guard Michael Talley. Higgins sustained a stress fracture in his left foot in a game Wednesday and Talley had a virus and didn't make the trip.

No. 6 Georgetown 74, No. 18 St. John's 67

Mark Tillmon scored 20 points and No. 6 Georgetown used its depth and height to pull away from No. 18 St. John's.

The Redmen (17-6, 6-4), who lost their third consecutive game, lost the services of starting power forward Jayson Williams, their second-leading scorer and leading rebounder, when he reinjured his right foot three minutes into the game.

No. 7 Syracuse 90, Florida St. 69

Billy Owens scored 25 points, including 12 during a decisive 10-minute stretch in the first half, as No. 7 Syracuse beat Florida State.

The Orangemen (16-3) have won four straight, including three in a row on the road. Florida State (13-10) has lost six of its past eight games.

The game was the Seminoles' second in a row without leading scorer Tharon Mayes. He was suspended indefinitely after being charged with aggravated battery against a university parking services employee.

Michigan St. 64, No. 8 Purdue 53

Steve Smith made seven free throws in the final two minutes as Michigan State handed eighth-ranked Purdue its first Big Ten loss of the season.

The Boilermakers (16-3, 8-1), who shot only 29 percent from the field, rallied from a 14-point deficit to pull within four points after Woody Austin hit a 3-pointer with 1:33 left.

No. 13 Connecticut 92, Providence 77

Connecticut, led by Chris Smith's 21 points and helped by Providence's foul trouble, extended its winning streak to nine games with a 92-77 Big East victory.

Smith and John Gwynn powered Connecticut (19-3, 7-2) to a 21-point lead with 9:55 left and the Friars (12-7, 5-5) could get no closer than 13 after that.

The Huskies got 13 points from Tate George with 11 apiece from Nadav Henefeld and Rod Sellers.

Connecticut went to the foul line 14 times in the final 7:06. Smith gave the Huskies their biggest lead at 22 points when he sank the first of two free throws with less than two minutes left.

No. 15 La Salle 89, Iona 73

Lionel Simmons scored 26 points and No. 15 La Salle scored 24 of the final 32 points, holding off Iona in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

La Salle (16-1, 7-0 in the conference) led 47-37 at halftime but Iona (8-12, 3-6) fought back and took its first lead at 59-58 on a steal and dunk by Joey Johnson with 12:28 left.

Kevin Cooper's tip-in extended the Gaels' margin to 61-58 after Sean Green blocked Simmons' shot at the other end.

No. 16 UCLA 87, DePaul 77

Trevor Wilson, Don MacLean and freshman Tracy Murray each scored 18 points as 16th-ranked UCLA beat DePaul.

UCLA led 71-59 before DePaul rallied behind Stephen Howard and David Booth, who hit a 3-pointer and a layup to cut the Bruins' lead to 77-74. But MacLean then made a free throw, Wilson dunked and Derrick Martin made a layup to give UCLA an 82-74 lead.

UCLA improved to 15-4, while DePaul fell to 12-10.

No. 17 Georgia Tech 90, Maryland 84

— Dennis Scott scored 17 of his 26 points in the second half and 17th-ranked Georgia Tech twice rallied from 11-point deficits to defeat Maryland in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The Yellow Jackets fell behind 41-30 in the first half and 55-44 with 17:56 remaining before winning their second straight ACC game, raising their record to 4-4 in conference and 14-4 overall.

Maryland, which got a career-high 34 points from Tony Massenburg, fell to 3-4 in the ACC, 13-8 overall.

After erasing a 67-62 deficit, Georgia Tech got a 3-pointer from Brian Oliver with 5:02 left that gave the Yellow Jackets only their third lead of the game at 76-74.

No. 21 Oregon State 84, Stanford 70

Gary Payton scored 32 points and had 10 assists, seven rebounds and five steals to lead No. 21 Oregon State past Stanford.

Oregon State (17-3, 10-1 Pac-10) never trailed after the opening five minutes in sending Stanford (12-7, 4-6) to its fourth straight setback.

Payton scored 21 points in the first half and led a Beaver defense that forced 14 Cardinal turnovers as Oregon State bolted to a 47-29 halftime lead. It was 54-31 two minutes into the second half as Earl Martin scored seven straight points.

No. 23 Xavier of Ohio 88, Dayton 81

Jamal Walker scored 16 second-half points, including six free throws in the final 75 seconds, as No. 23 Xavier of Ohio held on for an victory over Dayton.

Xavier (17-2, 6-1 Midwestern Collegiate Conference) trailed 44-40 at halftime when Dayton shotg 56 percent and Walker was 1-of-5 from the field and committed five of 14 Xavier turnovers. But Walker hit a pair of layups early in the second half to put Xavier ahead to stay.

Walker also hit a short-range basket and a 3-pointer to cap a 17-9 run that gave Xavier the biggest lead of the game, 77-67, with 5:29 left. He then sank six free throws in the final 1:15 to stymie a Dayton rally that closed the margin to three points with 34 seconds left.

College hoop year marked by surprisingly successful teams

Associated Press

There will be a meeting this weekend of all the college basketball experts who picked Purdue, Kansas and Connecticut to be at the top of their respective conferences this season.

It will be held in a phone booth and there should be enough room for a television crew or two.

Purdue (16-2, 8-0) currently leads the Big Ten by 2½ games over Michigan State (bonus points if you had the Spartans that high as well).

The eighth-ranked Boilermakers, who were not selected in the first division in any preseason poll and were as low as ninth in some, won just eight conference games last season. Purdue received one lone point in the AP's preseason poll and that tied the Boilermakers for 68th with East Tennessee State.

The Big Ten does not have a postseason tournament so the league title and automatic NCAA tournament berth could be locked up soon.

No. 2 Kansas (21-1, 4-1) is second only to Missouri, the team which handed the Jayhawks their only loss, in the Big Eight.

Kansas was tabbed fifth in the conference preseason poll and the Jayhawks, who held the No. 1 spot for two weeks, were 38th in the AP preseason rankings.

Connecticut (18-3, 6-2) is tied with Georgetown atop the Big East after being selected eighth in the coaches' voting for the seedings for the challenge series with the ACC.

The 13th-ranked Huskies beat Georgetown, Syracuse and St. John's in consecutive games last month. They did not receive a vote in the preseason poll.

Two coaches — Tom Penders of Texas and Kevin Mackey of Cleveland State — were reprimanded by their conferences last week for remarks made about officiating.

It seems there are more coaches than ever before stepping to the forefront and remarking on the quality of the work of officials.

Here is what North Carolina coach Dean Smith said last week after the Tar Heels' 83-60 victory over Clemson in a very physical game:

"I'm not talking about officials — I want you to know that because I'd like to coach the next game — but I am worried about the game of basketball. In watching television across the country, hardly anything is called any more."

The NCAA has done a lot of work with trying to eliminate geographical differences in the way games are called but it may be time for a look at using some of that huge television pact on standardizing officiating thus eliminating quite a bit of the rough play and trimming the length of games.

Division I independents are becoming a rare breed — there were 19 when the season started — and two more schools have left the ranks.

Central Florida (3-16) will join the American South next season, while Florida International (4-14) will become a member of the Trans America Athletic Conference.

Wright State (15-4) has the best record among the independents followed by Notre Dame (11-6). The tournament selection committee could be hard-pressed to find a spot in the 64-team field for any of the independents and that's the reason the schools — with the exceptions of Notre Dame and DePaul — are all trying to affiliate with conferences.

Duke fans are known for their ingenuity with cheers and jeers, but they may have crossed the line of good taste lately.

The Dukies have always greeted the opposing starting lineup with choreagraphed remarks ranging from sarcastic greetings to derogatory comments about problems on or off the court.

Against North Carolina State last month, the students threw sneakers on the court when Chris Corchiani was the final member of the Wolfpack to be introduced. It was a reference to the sanctions against the program by the NCAA over the issuance of sneakers to the players.

When Georgia Tech's Dennis Scott, who lost 30 pounds since last season, was introduced last week, the students showered the court with treats and snacks, both wrapped and unwrapped.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski was visibly upset. As he walked toward the Georgia Tech bench to talk to Yellow Jackets coach Bobby Cremins, a bagel rolled along the floor into his path and he kicked it away in disgust.

Duke could face a technical foul if objects are thrown on the court again.

"Certainly, there's something to be said for being funny and creative and cute," said Atlantic Coast Conference supervisor of officials Fred Barakat. "But there's a fine line there. My concern was the physical welfare of the players."

The students apparently got the message as the introduction of Clemson players on Wednesday night saw the court stay clean.

Jim Boeheim has been the head coach at Syracuse for 436 games and he won 332 of them. What's even more impressive than the .761 winning percentage is that no team has ever scored 100 points against a Boeheim-coached team.

Oklahoma scored 98 in a seven-point win at the Carrier Dome in 1983-84 and Louisiana Tech matched that in an eight-point loss in last year's Carrier Classic.

The last team to reach the century mark against Syracuse was St. John's in a 100-78 home victory in 1975-76, the final season of Boeheim's predecessor Roy Danforth.

Syracuse has scoredd 100 or more points 68 times since Boeheim has taken over at his alma mater.

REHAB

He has feuded with teammates and Manager Davey Johnson, fought with opponents and been fined several times by the Mets. His disputes with wife Lisa, 25, have been well publicized and the couple briefly separated in 1987.

"We know what he has been through during the off-season this winter and we just hope things can start to get better for him now," teammate Ron Darling said.

Strawberry currently is in a contract dispute with the Mets. He is seeking a four-year, $12 million deal, but Cashen recently said Strawberry has not lived up to his potential and has not performed like a $3 million-a-year player.

Strawberry slumped to .225 last season with 29 home runs and 77 RBIs. In 1987, he hit 39 homers with 104 RBIs and stole 36 bases. In 1988, he led the league with 39 home runs and had 101 RBIs, although he batted just .238 in the second half of the season after hitting .301 in the first half.

In the 1986 and 1988 NL playoffs, Strawberry drove in 11 runs in 13 games. In the 1986 World Series victory over Boston, he batted just .208 and homered for his only RBI.

In 1989, Strawberry tried to punch Keith Hernandez and then walked out of spring training. Soon after returning, he got into two fights during an exhibition game with Toronto.

Strawberry's success and struggles have come in the glare of New York's media, to which he has sometimes stopped talking. His accomplishments often show up as front-page news, but his problems have frequently made back-page headlines in the tabloids.

SHOE

Shoemaker led the nation's jockeys in victories five times, between 1950 and 1959, and in earnings 10 times, between 1951 and 1964.

Shoemaker won the penultimate ride of his career, scoring his final career victory in the Hallandale Handicap aboard Beau Genius by a nose at Gulfstream Park on Jan. 20.

Saturday's race was his first ride since then.

Shoemaker, who rode his first winner on April 20, 1949, at Golden Gate Fields, has spent the last nine months making a 51-stop farewell tour of paid appearances at tracks throughout the world.

Shoemaker, who received a trainer's license after passing a state examination last Wednesday, will now try his hand at training horses and expects to start out with at least a dozen runners in California.

Alhough he won the Kentucky Derby at age 54 and maintains that he can still beat jockeys less than half his age, fewer horse owners have given Shoemaker mounts in the past few years.

He was not offered rides in the Breeders' Cup races of either 1989 or 1988.

Disappointed but not bitter, Shoemaker announced plans to retire but remain in the sport as a trainer.

He then set out on a much-publicized international tour from Malaysia to Paris, for which he has earned about $1 million, including a reported $100,000 for today's final appearance.

The steady, shy athlete known as "Silent Shoe" was inducted into Racing's Hall of Fame in 1958, more than 30 years before his final ride.

While many of his records have been surpassed, Shoemaker is assured his place in racing history.

Shoemaker, a tiny man who began working with horses at age 15, won his first race in the third start of his career on April 20, 1949.

Since then, he has ridden to victories in 1,009 stakes races,including 11 Triple Crown events.

He won the Kentucky Derby four times, the Belmont five times and the Preakness twice.

He holds the record for most Kentucky Derby rides with 24, and he has won 6 races on one card 9 times.

He has said his greatest Kentucky Derby winner was his last, Ferdinand, but his favorite was Spectacular Bid.

BASEBALL

Opening the camps and starting the season on time is what they want."

Fourteen years later, owners are insisting that they won't open camps until the framework for a new contract is agreed to. And they are insisting on their revenue-sharing and pay-for-performance proposals.

O'Connor feels the proposal hasn't received a fair hearing, so he outlined many details in a two-hour briefing Thursday.

"Nothing is cast in stone on it," he said. "It's all subject to negotiation."

The owners' proposal is radical. It calls for players with less than six years in the majors to be paid according to statistical forumulas and eliminates multiyear deals, guaranteed contracts and bonuses.

"There's always a never-never land in how you evaluate guys," said New York Mets general manager Frank Cashen, designer of the plan along with Milwaukee GM Harry Dalton. "In my opinion, this system evaluates players better than any system I know."

"We don't have some sort of philosopher-king who can set salaries precisely," O'Connor said.

The plan divides players into four groups: starting pitchers; relief pitchers, first basemen, third basemen, outfielders and designated hitters; and second basemen, shortstops and catchers.

Starters would be paid based on an adjusted formula for games, innings and won-lost record. Relievers would have saves, games finished, ERA and runners per nine innings factored in.

Position players would be paid on games, plate appearances, total bases, runs, RBIs and times on base. Second basemen, shortstops and catchers would have double plays, chances, chances per game and games per error counted along with Gold Glove votes. Catchers would have passed balls taken into account.

Cleveland forward John Williams (18) battles Detroit's Bill Laimbeer for a rebound Saturday at the Richfield Coliseum.

Spurs, Robinson nip Michael, Bulls

Associated Press

David Robinson had 33 points and a season-high 21 rebounds to offset 44 points from Chicago's Michael Jordan in a 112-111 San Antonio victory.

A free throw by Maurice Cheeks gave the Spurs a 111-105 lead with 15.4 seconds left. The Bulls' Craig Hodges responded with a 3-pointer at the 7.2 second mark making the score 111-108.

Robinson then hit one of two free throws with 3.2 seconds left to seal the victory for Spurs coach Larry Brown, who recorded his 500th professional win. Brown's career record is 500-343, with 229 wins coming in the American Basketball Association.

The Spurs' victory was their 19th straight at home, giving them a league best 20-1 record at home.

San Antonio's Willie Anderson and Terry Cummings scored 18 points apiece, and Anderson had 10 assists. The Bulls' Scottie Pippen had 22.

Robinson totally outplayed Chicago center Bill Cartwright, who fouled out midway through the fourth period with two points and three rebounds in 19 minutes.

The Spurs shot 56.2 percent from the field, connecting on 41 of 73 field goals.

Robinson made 10 of 17 field goals and 13 of 16 free throws in 41 minutes.

Jordan, who played 46 minutes, was 17 of 32 from the field and eight for eight from the line.

Suns 130, Rockets 105

Jeff Hornacek scored 20 of his season-high 30 points in a lopsided first half as the Phoenix Suns beat the Houston Rockets for their 11th consecutive victory at home.

Kurt Rambis added 16 points, rookie Kenny Battle a season-high 16 and Tom Chambers 15 to pass the 14,000-mark in his nine-year NBA career as Phoenix won for the 18th time in its last 22 games.

Pistons 105, Cavaliers 100

Isiah Thomas, playing with five fouls, scored seven of Detroit's final nine points Saturday as the Pistons beat Cleveland for their sixth straight victory.

The Cavaliers, who had a three-game winning streak end, have lost their last six games against Detroit.

Cleveland rallied from a 16-point second-quarter deficit to get within two points several times in the fourth quarter, the last time at 98-96 on a pair of free throws by John Williams with 2:55 left.

Clippers 113, Magic 110

Danny Manning and Charles Smith each scored 23 points as the Los Angeles Clippers' front line picked up the slack for their injury-depleted backcourt to beat the Orlando Magic.

Benoit Benjamin added 22 points for the Clippers, who broke a six-game road losing streak.

Los Angeles was without starting point guard Gary Grant, who suffered a broken bone in his left ankle in Friday's loss at Miami. Grant is expected to be sidelined six weeks. Clippers shooting guard Ron Harper was lost for the season last month with a knee injury.

SuperSonics 94, Bullets 92

Derrick McKey hit a 17-footer at the buzzer to give the Seattle Supersonics their second straight road victory, over the Washington Bullets.

McKey finished with 17 points for the Sonics, who had dropped 12 consecutive road games before beating Indiana by one point on Friday night.

Knicks 112, Pacers 98

Patrick Ewing scored 38 points, including 17 in the fourth quarter and the first seven of a tiebreaking 9-0 run that lifted the New York Knicks over the Indiana Pacers.

The Knicks, 19-2 at home this season, took a half-game lead over second-place Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division.

REBS

It was apparent from the beginning that Lee would make short work of the Bronchos. Ferguson got the carnage going by beating the defense with a crossing pass to Reed, who then simply beat the OHS keeper with a routine shot.

Reed added his eighth goal of the season in the 48th minute, while Mark Steward, Chris Jones and Michael Lawrence all got into the scoring act.

Meanwhile, Rebel head coach Eddie Bull was busy shuffling around his personnel with gusto, because he wants to be prepared when the Rebs travel to San Angelo on Tuesday for what should be a key district battle.

"I want to make sure I have depth," Bull said. "I want several people to be able to play every position."

Bull even kept regular keeper Joel Renner out of the net, instead using Renner at halfback with the hope of giving backup Chad Skipper some experience in the net.

Ha.

Though Skipper was forced to play the ball on occasion, OHS attempted nothing remotely approximating a shot, even when the Bronchos had the wind at their backs in the first half. By the second half, Skipper was reduced to the role of spectator, taking in most of the action on a knee except for the few times that the ball got loose in Lee's defensive area.

"When we had the wind at our backs, I knew my defense could take care of me," Skipper said.

The offense did, too. Reed, in particular, was eager to buck the Broncho defense at the earliest possible opportunity.

"I felt like we had to go in there and take it to them," Reed said. "You can go into a game like this and let down and lose it."

Midfielder Greg Pepper said the Rebs still have a ways to go despite their gaudy won-loss mark.

"I feel like we have a great team, but we have a lot of room for improvement," he said. "If we don't play well every game, there are teams in this district that can beat us."

For OHS coach Jose Lozoya, the lopsided loss was a step back after the Bronchos had stayed in the hunt against crosstown rival Odessa Permian before losing 3-2, last Tuesday.

But Lozoya realizes that the road might be a long one this spring.

"I don't have any players who have played since elementary school," he said. "We're just learning how to play as a team."

SPRING CAUSING SHIFT SLIPPING

Dear Tom and Ray:

I've had a problem with my 1987 Plymouth Voyager mini-van for some time. The automatic-shift indicator keeps slipping. For instance, the indicator will show the van to be in Drive when in fact it is in Reverse. The van has been back to the dealer at least four times in an effort to fix this problem, but the problem persists. My main concern is that there is a major problem I won't be told about until after the warranty runs out. What do you think? — Marilyn

RAY: First of all, don't worry about the warranty running out. Our lawyers at the firm of Dewey, Cheetham and Howe say that if you've complained about a problem during the warranty period (and you can document it on a repair order, for instance), the manufacturer should honor its obligation to fix that problem, even if the warranty expires before he figures out HOW to fix it.

TOM: Second, this problem shouldn't be very diffcult to fix. The little needle that points to "P," "R," "N," "D" and "L" is connected to the shift lever by a small cable. When you pull the shift lever down, the cable pulls the needle toward "L." On the other side of the needle, a small spring is trying to pull it back towards "P." Your spring is probably loose or sticking, so when you push the shift lever back up, the needle doesn't follow.

RAY: There's probably nothing wrong with your transmission (unless of course you've been driving on the highway in "L" thinking you were in "D"). The problem is that the mechanic at the dealership is too lazy to fix this correctly, so he keeps spraying it with WD-40 and crossing his fingers. That works for a short while, but as you well know, it soon starts sticking again.

TOM: This is a van, right, Marilyn? Tomorrow afternoon, stop at the high school and pick up four of the biggest football players you can find. Go back to the dealer and with these guys standing behind you suggest that they put in a new shift-indicator assembly — the needle, the cable and the spring. It's neither complicated nor expensive. This is the same mechanism they used on the Conestoga wagons that took Ward Bond across the Continental Divide. Replacing it should allow you to shift happily ever after.

• • •

Dear Tom and Ray:

Car companies are constantly coming up with names like Pinto, Taurus, Mustang, etc. Do they pay for new names? Who would I write to? — Joe

RAY: You've got a name that you want to sell, huh? Unfortunately, you can't protect a trademark on your name unless you actually produce a product.

TOM: So what you have to do first is develop the car. Then name it and apply for the trademark. Once you've gotten the trademark, all you have to do is convince General Motors to buy you out.

RAY: I understand they pay $100 to $200 for names, so after the research, development and production costs are paid off, you should only be out about $70-80 million. Good luck!

LIGHT OF A THOUSAND DAYS

By JILL HANCOCK

Only an etched window in a southwestern motif gives a clue to the fabulous interior that awaits a person as soon as one enters the front hall of this week's featured home. Not only does this contemporary-style home have sunlight cascading through many walls of windows and transoms, it also comes alive with a variety of colors that are displayed throughout this two-story home.

The front door, with etched side windows, opens into an entrance hall that provides a visitor a glimpse of the interior of this professionally decorated, three-bedroom home. Situated to the right of the front door, the formal living room comes to life with two walls of windows that overlook the back yard and a fireplace that is highlighted by a copper inset that spans into the vaulted ceiling.

The formal dining room is adjacent to the living room, but is creatively hidden from guests behind a wall in the entrance hall. This area has a sliding glass door that not only brightens this room, but provides access onto the back patio that overlooks the golf course at Green Tree Country Club. A wet bar is inset along the left wall and features a stainless steel sink, a wine rack and a mirrored back. Glass shelves are positioned on the side walls.

A VERY UNIQUE feature in this home is a butler's pantry that is located next to the dining room. A plum colored fabric decorates the walls in this area and a built-in server with a marble top is ideal when serving guests formally. An etched window is placed above the server and overlooks the back yard. A large walk-in pantry opens onto this corridor and is spacious enough, not only for the storage of food items, but also for a freezer. The butler's pantry connects the formal dining room and the kitchen.

A long hall is situated to the left of the entrance and leads to the guest bath, laundry room, kitchen and family room. The guest bath has a neutral fabric lining the walls, a marble vanity and a purple cabinet.

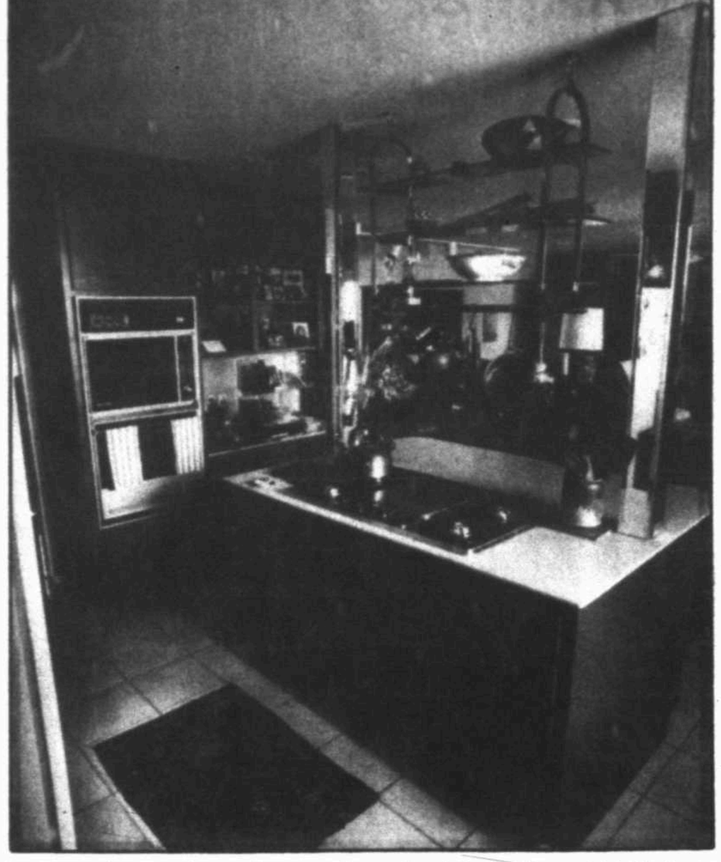
The contemporary style of this home can be seen in the formal living area. This room is highlighted by a fireplace that has a copper inset spanning into the vaulted ceiling.

Adjacent to the living room, the formal dining area has a built-in wet bar and a sliding glass door provides access into the back yard.



The color purple can be seen throughout the kitchen which features a central work island. The kitchen opens into the family room.

The family room has a mauve tile fireplace with a rustic mantle. Plantation shuttered windows overlook the golf course at Green Tree Country Club.

LIGHT

Sunlight flows through a large window in the laundry room, which is situated at the left end of the hall. An L-shaped cabinet provides for storage, in addition to a deep sink that can be used for hand washables. A closet can be used for stowing away cleaning items. A purple, rose, gold and blue wallpaper in a leaf pattern highlight the walls of this room.

The first doorway on the right side of the hall opens into a lovely kitchen that is definitely very colorful. Purple cabinets stand out against a neutral color fabric that adorn the walls of the kitchen and the Corian marble counter tops. A central work island has mirrored posts — adding to the contemporary feel of this home — and a rack that ascends from the ceiling is perfect for displays copper pots and pans. A Thermador gas cooktop with a griddle is placed at one end of the island and a breakfast bar that is situated at the other end is ideal for fast meals. The other appliances include a Thermador Option: 3 Microwave-Convection oven, a Kitchen Aid dishwasher and a Whirlpool trash compactor. A built-in desk is inset against one wall and will help keep a homeowner better organized. An etched window is placed above the kitchen sink and frames the backyard pool and hot tub. A door provides access to the back patio and pool area.

The family room is visually separated from the kitchen and the hall by two antique panels. These panels are placed at the front part of the outer walls and the third wall in the room displays the focal point of this room — a mauve tile fireplace with a rustic mantle. Plantation shuttered windows views the back yard.

Access is also made through this hall into the two-car garage that has a built-in work area.

A staircase that is placed to the left of the front door leads past a beautiful etched window upstairs to the home's three bedrooms. The first two bedroom have spacious closets and are connected by a lovely bath. Both of these rooms have doors that lead onto a balcony that has a great view of the golf course. Shades of peach and blue decorate the bath that has a two-sink marble vanity and a bathtub.

The master bedroom and bath are located at the end of the hall and feature many elegant qualities. The bath is situated to the left and has a two-sink marble vanity lining one wall that includes a make-up area. Bevelled-edged mirrors are placed on the cabinets above the vanity. A bathtub, with acrylic shelves placed against one wall, is located under a stained glass window. The bath also has a built-in shower and is decorated in shades of plum.

An unbelievable dressing closet is located between the bathroom and the bedroom. The closet is divided into three parts and includes a cedar closet for out-of-season clothing. A purple fabric not only covers the walls of this enormous closet, but it also lines the customized shelves and drawers that can be used for storing shoes and clothing.

The color purple is also seen on the wall in the bedroom. Three floor-to-ceiling windows overlook the backyard and a door opens onto a private patio where owners can relax in the evening as the West Texas sun is setting.

The other amenities in this exquisite home are ceiling fans, a sprinkler system, an alarm system and beautifully landscaped yards.

Chaparral, Realtors is offering this home for $210,000.

The spacious master bedroom provides a wonderful haven for owners and opens onto a private balcony.

Cathie and Mark Parchman were transferred back to Midland recently and were assisted in their homefinding search by Norma Barnes, right, of Don Harvey, Realtors.

Former Midland couple pleased to be back in the Tall City again

Cathie and Mark Parchman have just been transferred back to Midland by Mark's company, Oxy Petroleum. Although neither were actually born in Midland, Midland has been home to both in the past.

Mark was born in Loving, New Mexico, where his family remained until Mark completed the seventh grade. They then moved to Carlsbad, New Mexico, where he finished high school. Following high school, Mark attended New Mexico State University at Las Cruces, where he earned a bachelor of science degree in geology. He completed his masters degree in geology at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque.

Cathie was born in Lubbock and lived there through the sixth grade. Her family moved to Midland and Cathie later graduated from Midland High School. Her parents, Charles and Ann Upchurch, and their family have lived here about 20 years. Cathie also has a sister here, Caren and her husband Darwin Frost, and a brother, John, who will be married in April.

Mark's parents, E.W. and Wilma Parchman, still reside in Carlsbad, New Mexico. Mark's brother, Russell Parchman, however, has lived in Midland one-and-a-half years. He is pastor of First United Methodist Church.

After completing his master's degree, Mark accepted a position with Cities Service Oil and Gas in Tulsa, Oklahoma. One year later he was transferred to Houston, where he lived until his transfer to Midland in 1979.

"When I first got here," Mark said, "the boom was in full swing, homes were very expensive and rentals were very difficult to find." Mark bought his first Midland home in 1982. He and Cathie met here and were married just three months before he was transferred to Oklahoma City in 1987.

Late last year, Mark and Cathie were asked to transfer back to Midland. They were referred to Don Harvey, Realtors and associate Norma Barnes for their homefinding trip.

The Parchmans called Norma and described what they wanted in a home and neighborhood. For Mark, an important priority was finding a home with a place to park their boat.

"Midland has changed so much since they last lived here," explained Norma, "that I felt we should begin with a general overview and look first just at subdivisions until we identified the areas they would want to concentrate on."

"We began looking at pre-owned homes," Norma added, "but when Mark and Cathie really seemed to like one of the new homes we looked at, we began to focus more on new construction. They liked some of the homes being offered by builder Jim Rasnick. We eventually looked at one of Rasnick's homes in Vista West which was not yet completed — and Mark and Cathie decided this was the one for them. Cathie fell in love with the kitchen and master bath, and Mark liked the cul-de-sac location and the extra space they had for a dog run."

The couple moved into their new home just in time for Cathie to complete her Christmas shopping. Now that they have settled in, Mark and Cathie are beginning to look forward to their new future in Midland. One of the biggest events they are looking forward to is the birth of their first child, due in June.

Cathie and Mark love water sports such as skiing, wind surfing and fishing. Mark also enjoys golf, bowling and shooting sports. Cathie's hobby is sewing. She is now preparing wedding garments for two weddings and eventually plans to take up quilting.

Fate seemed to be really in Mark and Cathie's favor, as they were moved back to Midland and close to family members just as they were expecting their first child. However, only two weeks after their transfer to Midland, an ironic twist changed the picture. Cathie's parents were notified by her father's company that they were being transferred to San Antonio. So now, Charles and Ann Upchurch have a Don Harvey for sale sign in their front yard just as the sold sign has come out of the front yard for Cathie and Mark.

At least San Antonio is not too far away. And with frequent flyer mileage, fun fares and discounts often offered by the airlines, no doubt Charles and Ann Upchurch will return to Midland often to visit friends and their grandchild Whitney Frost, as well as the one that the Parchmans are expecting.

Trinity West has a variety of quality built homes for sale

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

In just nine months time, a new subdivision has appeared on the horizon in northwest Midland and is becoming very popular for homeowners who want to build or buy a new home that is located inside of Loop 250. According to Gilbert Bates, one of the developers of Trinity West, out of 66 cul-de-sac lots, 15 of these lots already have homes that are lived in or are currently under construction. There are also 22 lots that have been bought by other builders — Bill Brown, James Morris and Mark Payne. Bates feels that this neighborhood, which is situated north of Wadley Avenue and east of Midland Drive, has a lot of appeal to families who want to be close to schools, shopping and downtown.

Open today from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. is a home located at 4105 Radcliff. Bates Construction built this lovely family home that features two living areas, a formal dining room, four bedrooms, three-and-a-half baths, a gourmet kitchen and a breakfast area. The house contains over 3,500 square feet and was decorated in a southwestern decor in neutral tones by Kay Bates.

The front door displays only one of the quality amenities that can be seen throughout the entire house. Inlaid bevelled glass provides a visitor a peek into the home's entrance which is also brightened by a transom window. The tile entrance hall displays a flame stitch wallpaper in shades of rose, mauve, blue, teal and taupe. These colors are seen in the wallpapers throughout the kitchen, breakfast room and baths.

The entrance flows past the formal dining room, to the right, into the formal living room. The dining room has a floor-to-ceiling window that overlooks the landscaped front yard.

A window with a transom above are place on each side of the fireplace and brighten the entire formal living room. A built-in cabinet is inset along the left wall. The open flow between these two room are ideal when entertaining.

The tile entrance leads past the dining room into the spacious kitchen. Ash cabinets line the walls and the Whirlpool appliances include a double, self-cleaning oven, a microwave, a European cooktop and a dishwasher. A work island is placed in the center of the kitchen, making the kitchen very functional for the owner who loves to cook. The adjoining breakfast room has a window that frames the side yard and a French door provides access into the area. A doorway next to the built-in desk in the breakfast room opens into the living room.

A corridor that is adjacent to the breakfast room leads to the family room, guest bath, laundry room and the three-car garage. A door in this hall leads into the backyard

Ash paneling with picture frame moulding adorn the walls of the family room. A fireplace with a curved hearth is situated between two windows and serves as the focal point of the room. Other features include a wet bar with a mirrored back and glass shelves, a built-in bookcase and a storage closet.

A half-bath is located next to the family room and is brightened by a skylight. The bath has a marble vanity and a bevelled-edge mirror.

The laundry room almost makes this chore more enjoyable. This room has a sink and space for an additional refrigerator or freezer. It could easily accommodate a sewing area and a skylight brightens the entire room.

The rear-entry, three-car garage has an automatic door opener and a door opens into the backyard.

Three of the home's bedrooms are located to the left of the entrance. The first and second bedroom have windows that view the front yard and spacious customized closets. A hall bath is situated across from the first bedroom and features a marble vanity, bevelled-edged mirror, a linen closet, in addition to a separate bathing area.

The third bedroom has two windows that overlook the side yard and is connected to the second bedroom by a roomy bath. The bath has a two-sink marble vanity and a bathtub.

Bates Construction has built a lovely Trinity West home which is open today from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. This house is located at 4105 Radcliffand exhibits the type of homes that are seen throughout this subdivision.

The master bedroom is also situated off of the living room, to the left of the fireplace. This spacious room has a French door that leads to the backyard, as well as two windows which view the yard. A cathedral ceiling adds to the open feel of this area which has a sitting area at one end.

A door leads into the master bath that has a two-sink marble vanity, with mirrors above, lining one wall. A mirrored door above each sink opens into a cabinet and can be angled for more than one view. The bath also has a bathtub with a tramsom window, a built-in shower and two large customized walk-in closets.

The other amenities in this wonderful home include a cedar closet, ceiling fans, a sprinkler system and landscaped yards. The home is being offered for $196,000. Go by today for a preview or call Gilbert Bates at 697-4306 for more information.

RE/MAX of Midland has contemporary style home open today

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

RE/MAX of Midland has a four bedroom home that is located in old Midland which was updated with a contemporary look six years ago. From the exterior, a visitor will not believe the unusual floor plan and quality amenities that this home affords.

A French door opens onto the entrance hall that flows into the formal living room, to the left. This room has a fireplace and an entertainment cabinet inset along one wall. The living room stares through a wall of windows onto a private yard that is surrounded by well-manicured flower beds.

Around the corner of the living room, a second sitting area is located and is ideal for a game table. A wet bar is used to divide this area from the entrance. Two doors open to reveal a mirrored interior which reflects the cut crystal glasses and decanters.

A hall, to the right of the entrance, winds its way through the entire house and leads to many unique rooms. The formal dining room is very private and opens onto a side courtyard. This room also has a closet that is designed for storage of silver, crystal and china.

The exterior of this home does not even begin to display the unique floor plan and quality amenities that this RE/MAX of Midland home displays inside. This four bedroom home is located at 1515 Douglas and is open today from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated across from dining room and invite all sort of family activity. The kitchen is lined with white laminated cabinets that have been specially designed for a gourmet cook — pull-out drawers, a baking center and updated appliances. The appliances include a Thermador gas stove and dishwasher, and a Kitchen Aid self-cleaning double oven and a trash compactor. The kitchen sink is located on a large cabinet area that faces the breakfast room.

Possibly one of the most inviting rooms in this house, the breakfast room has a fireplace and is enclosed with many windows that frame the back yard. An atrium door leads onto the covered patio.

Beyond the kitchen, the hall leads to the master bedroom. This room is brightened by two large windows and two doors open onto a large walk-in closet with storage shelves. The master bath is decorated in soft colors of plum, peach and taupe. The vanity area has three mirrored walls above the sink with many lights reflecting in this area. This room also has a tile bath with a shower.

THE LONG GOOD-BYE

Kathryn Nichols holds a picture of her mother, who died with Alzheimer's disease.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is first of the three-part series "The Long Good-bye" which focuses on the plight of Alzheimer's patients and their caregivers.

Kathryn Nichols watched her mother's personality, and mental and physical abilities diminish during her painfully slow death due to the process of Alzheimer's disease. "I always imagined my mother would grow old gracefully and would spend time making quilts or playing dominoes. I never expected to see a haggy woman, sitting, rocking and screaming, 'Leave me alone.' But that is what happened," Ms. Nichols said.

The brain-killing disease progressed over the course of 10 years, eventually leaving Ms. Nichol's mother in a bedridden stupor.

"Every year we would look at mother and say, 'This is going to be mother's last year.' She had nasal feeding tubes inserted into her nose because she wasn't expected to live long. Yet, she lived four years longer than anyone expected," Ms. Nichols said. "I used to pray for her to die. I asked the Lord why she had to live another day. She had lost every bit of life as we know it."

Marlene Groce's mother is in a nursing home suffering from Alzheimer's, bedridden and battling kidney infections. "She hasn't known me in a while," Ms. Groce said. "I have watched Alzheimer's destroy her mind and her awareness and my mother — who once taught school — has unlearned everything she once knew."

AFTER ALZHEIMER'S disease progressed for years, Ms. Nichol's mother did die, from pneumonia. That was 18 months ago. But the trauma of seeing her mother change so dramatically — to the point of not even recognizing her own daughter and exhibiting such bizarre traits that she couldn't be taken out in public — has convinced Ms. Nichols of the special needs of caregivers, and especially to the necessity of respite (temporary relief) care for caregivers of Alzheimer's patients.

Ms. Nichols, patient and family services chairperson for the Midland Chapter of the national organization of Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, said the public needs to be educated about the disease and the lack of services and facilities to accomodate Alzheimer's patients in Midland.

Alzheimer's, rated as the fourth leading cause of death in the United States, causes degeneration of the brain. Because the disease causes the victim to exhibit such bizarre traits as undressing in public, reliving the past through hallucinations, talking to people who aren't there and mistaking strangers for loved ones, caregivers are often reluctant to go out in public with their charges.

"Caregivers are often stuck home alone day after day with no help or support from anyone," Ms. Nichols said. "It's a tragic situation."

Alzheimer's: the baffling brain disease

"Once people found out my husband had Alzheimer's, the phone quit ringing and we were avoided. We became social poison. Alzheimer's carries a stigma, like AIDS ... there is a lack of hope. If someone has cancer, they will either get better or die fairly quickly. If they have Alzheimer's, they may act like a violent raving lunatic for years, until every vestige of mind and identity is stripped away. It's devastating, and entire families become the victims."

Everyone forgets where they put their keys on occasion. But forgetting what keys are and how they are used may indicate something much more serious than forgetfulness. In fact, forgetting what objects are is indicative of Alzheimer's disease, a progressive, degenerative disease which attacks the brain and results in impaired memory, thinking and behavior.

Until recently, any sign of impaired mental decline was labeled as "senility" and considered a normal part of aging. However, physicians now know mental decline is not normal and these changes should be diagnosed immediately.

Many types of dementia (mental deterioration) are treatable and some can even be reversed. But Alzheimer's is progressive, and the only 100 percent positive diagnosis available at this time is done during an autopsy when the brain tissue is examined.

Alzheimer's, now rated as the fourth leading cause of death in the United States, is a relatively new disease according to medical literature. In fact, it wasn't even isolated from other bodily disabilities and given a name until 1906 when it was described by German physician Alois

Alzheimer's patient Grace Baughman suffers a moment of anguish during a family visit.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Jan. 26, was an exciting and busy day at Midland Country Club, beginning with the Ladies Association monthly luncheon meeting and culminating with the annual President's Ball.

The evening function, a Black Tie and Boots Ball (i.e., tuxedo jacket and jeans), featured the two-stepping music of Jody Nix and the Texas Cowboys from eight o'clock until midnight. You will recall that Jody and his group played for the Texas Society Inaugural Ball in Washington, D.C., last year and on the Texas float in the Inaugural Parade.

As club members arrived, they were greeted in the foyer by outgoing president Johnny Warren and his wife, Carole, and the 1990 president, Paul Davis and his wife, Betty Rae.

Hors d'oeuvres and cocktails were enjoyed throughout the evening, and a breakfast buffet was served at 10 o'clock in the upper dining room.

A festive red, white and blue color scheme was carried out in decorations.

Among those seen at the ball were Judy and Bill Jackson, Charlotte and Newnie Ellis, Karen and Tim Thompson, Sharon and Gene Floyd, Pat and Parker Humes, Jeannette and Loren Bryant, Sudy and H.G. Bedford and Kaye and Bill Franklin.

The Ladies Association program featured a spring fashion forecast. The style show was presented by Sally (Mrs. Bill) Reeder of Paggagallo to celebrate the shop's 20th anniversary in Midland.

The halter tops and sarong skirts opening the show drew a round of applause, as did the zebra striped print skirt and coat. Also well recieved were the black, dressy culottes worn with a burgundy, cream and black checked jacket, as well as the sequined evening wear. The fashions shown were knee length and longer.

Among club members modeling were Jan (Mrs. Bill) Kalil and Sandy (Mrs. David) Sledge.

Some 165 women enjoyed the showing. Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan, Louise (Mrs. Garland) Lang and Altie (Mrs. Bill) Russell.

A red, white and pink Valentine theme was featured in the decor, which included tulips and centerpieces of wooden hearts and cupids.

The new president, Bonnie (Mrs. Orman) Hubbard, introduced her 1990 board of directors, and plans were announced for next month's program on Feb. 23. Rosemary Rumbley of Dallas will present her interpretation of "Entertainers at the White House — From George (Washington) to George (Bush)!"

A few of those spotted in the crowd were Barbara (Mrs. Earl) Bruno, Kay (Mrs. George) Smith, Toya (Mrs. Charles) Moncrief, Helen (Mrs. William) Ahders, Nancy (Mrs. Al) Langford, Jan (Mrs. Robert) Hover and Juanita (Mrs. Durward) Goolsby.

MEMBERS OF THE FORMER Terminal Lions Club gathered at Odessa Country Club recently for a reunion. Hosted by Midlander Bill Brown, the luncheon brought together a group of men who met weekly over a number of years at Midland Air Terminal (now Midland International Airport) to further the worthy causes of Lionism and to enjoy good fellowship.

The club was chartered in 1951 and disbanded in 1986 after a successful 35-year history as one of the best little clubs in Texas. Its original meeting place was Rodenhieser Hall, located at the Midland Army Air Force Base during World War II. In more recent years, they met at the airport's High Sky Restuarant.

The asemblage chose to make a donation to the Texas Lions Clubs' Crippled Children's Camp at Kerrville in memory of a charter member, the late Hoyt Morgan.

In addition to Bill, the get-together was attended by Darrell Adams, Mac Davis, Jack Barton, Howard Barbee, Richard Brandt, Marry Harrison, former Midlander Monte Rogers of Austin, and Fred Martin and Tony Mendoza, both of Odessa.

TO CELEBRATE the marriage of Rosalie Carter and Allen Hitchcock, a housewarming/open house was held here last weekend. Guests enjoyed hors d'oeuvres, champagne punch and a wedding cake while visiting in the couple's spacious new home.

Family members present included Rosalie's son, Kenneth Carter; her niece, Sherry (Mrs. Ron) Draper of Roswell, N.M.; Allen's sons, Andrew Hitchcock and David Hitchcock; his parents, Marge and Ed Hitchcock; his aunt, Helen McCrary, and his sister, Nancy (Mrs. Ed) Seiple of Austin. Among the other guests were Brenda and Ron Hughes, Margaret McInturff, Patty (Mrs. Jim) Slaton, Timber Floyd, Patti Lankford, Agatha Culpepper, Nell Scott, Bill Spence and Gary Biggs.

The couple were married on Jan. 19 in the chapel at Manor Park, where Allen's parents reside. Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe officiated.

PURINA MILLS honored Pat Thomas at a retirement dinner party recently at Green Tree Country Club. Pat has completed 32 years with Ralston Purina Co. and Purina Mills.

Among the 80 persons attending were Purina dealers and their wives from the West Texas area, Purina Mills district sales managers and their wives from Texas and Eastern New Mexico, and Pat's family, including his wife, Jean, and their children, Jere and Bruce Thomas of Sterling City, Sylvia and Larry Cook of Midland and Mary Ellen and Rick Thomas of Dallas. Another son and his wife, Carla and David Thomas of Atlanta, Ga., were unable to be present.

Executives from the Purina Mills Manufacturing Plant in Lubbock and from Purina Mills headquarters in St. Louis, Mo., hosted the party.

Pat has just completed a term as president of the National General Sales Managers Advisory Board. He and Jean will attend a meeting of the board in Montreal, Canada, this spring.

Nursing home adapted to patients

Subdued decorating discourages bizarre behaviors

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Alzheimer's patients sometimes mistake their shadows for pools of water and try to jump over. Sometimes, they mistake their shadows for holes in the ground and freeze, terrified of falling ino an abyss.

To help avoid that kind of confusion, nursing homes should stick to the plain and simple, with a minimum of decoration, in housing Alzheimer's victims, say a neurologist and an interior designer. Their advice goes against the trend in many nursing homes toward lamps, mirrors, lively colors and shiny floors.

Managers of the Levelland Nursing Home say patients in the Alzheimer's wing have been calmer and need less medication since Texas Tech neurologist J. Thomas Hutton and design professor JoAnn Shroyer redid the interior.

"I don't know if we can say they're less confused, but we have simplified their environment. Their living spaces are almost sterile," Ms. Shroyer said. "There are no pictures, and the wall coverings don't have any patterns. The furniture is very simple, and there are no lamps."

Mirrors, televisions and radios don't have a place in the wing, either, because they create too much confusion, Hutton said. "These people misperceive their environment."

About 4 million older Americans suffer from Alzheimer's disease. No one knows the cause and there is no cure for the disorder marked by dementia — an inability to remember, reason or understand what is going on. Because it is a progressive disease, many patients can live at home under the care of friends, family or nurses. Hutton and Ms. Shroyer's research focuses on patients whose conditions have worsened to the point they must be institutionalized.

IN ADDITION to mistaking shadows for puddles or holes, Alzheimer's patients have been known to try to pick the flowers in floral-print wallpaper, to sit on the floor and try to gather the "pebbles" they see in terrazzo linoleum, to believe that gunfire in TV shows is directed at them, and to be threatened by the person in the mirror who doesn't respond to their greeting.

The researchers hope to use their six years of study and their experiments at Levelland, about 30 miles from Lubbock, to write guidelines for other homes to increase the safety and comfort of Alzheimer's patients.

Part of Hutton's research involves tracking the eyes of Alzheimer's patients as they look at photographs and describe what's happening. "What we found was they tended to be distracted from relevant parts of the picture," he said. "They had the inability to suppress the irrelevant and focus on the parts they should pay attention to."

Alzheimer's patients sometimes have trouble eating because they are distracted by placemats, silverware and napkins — so much so that they barely notice the food, he said.

Hutton used his research to create a videotape in which the viewer sees a nursing home the way an Alzheimer's patient might. The camera is drawn toward house plants and toward the listener, instead of the speaker, in a conversation involving two people. Exit signs and clocks go unnoticed: one symptom of the disease is that sufferers find it difficult to cast their eyes upward.

AT THE END of the 10-minute vignette, the elderly man playing an Alzheimer's patient looks in a mirror, shouts "Who are you?" and throws a tantrum when the image won't answer.

Before Levelland created the Alzheimer's unit in 1986, Alzheimer's patients were mixed in with the rest of the residents and often had to be restrained in their rooms because of outbursts, said Director Charlene Turner. "Now they have a much more calm atmosphere and they're happier."

Patients also use less medication, and staff morale is higher, she said.

Because Alzheimer's patients tend to wander — sometimes into other people's rooms — the wing is separated from the rest of the home by a locked glass door.

Floral wallpaper decorates the hallways in most of the building, but walls in the Alzheimer's wing are covered with an off-white plastic that looks like plaster but absorbs sound because echoes confuse Alzheimer's patients.

The floor in the Alzheimer's wing is white linoleum; in the rest of the building, it's "pebbly" terrazzo linoleum.

Recessed fluorescent lights in the Alzheimer's wing are brighter than those in the rest of the building to reduce shadows and improve visibility. Lavender wainscotting in much of the building is muted and calming in the wing.

In the dining room in the Alzheimer's wing, the tables, utensils and chairs are in contrasting colors to make it easier to distinguish one from the other.

Ms. Shroyer and Ms. Turner said they still see some problems. For example, the glare from the white linoleum floors is harsh and might be confusing, and the furniture, though soft and free of sharp corners, is hard to get out of.

MS. SHOYER said she has had to unlearn the "magical art" of fooling the eye. "In this situation, interior designers can't practice the magical art. We want to eliminate as many distortions and illusions as we can."

Study of elderly twins sheds light on dementia

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Lissy Jarvik disliked the notion she was doomed to get senile when she grew old, so as a young psychologist in 1946 she began to study how age influences the brain.

"I didn't want to believe our intelligence would go down from then on. It didn't seem like a good thing to face for the rest of your life," said Jarvik, now a psychiatrist, pediatrician and geriatrician.

By giving intelligence tests to 134 pairs of elderly twins over four decades, she concluded that old age alone doesn't rob people of their mental abilities and that when people do get senile, it's due to disease.

So it's possible "we'll die with all our marbles, and that's all I care about," said Jarvik, a psychiatry professor and chief of neuropsychogeriatrics at the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research may help explain why some elderly people become senile, while others remain sharp until death.

"I don't think mental decline is necessary in old age. We don't know yet how to prevent it, but we have a lot of clues," including the possibility that a healthy lifestyle — including good nutrition and exercise and avoiding drugs, alcohol, cigarettes and pollution — may help prevent or delay senility.

JARVIK'S RESEARCH also led her to speculate that people, through lifestyle improvements, might someday live to 120 or even 150, and that intelligence test scores might be used to identify people who face senility and need treatment.

Dementia, the preferred medical term, is the loss of the ability to think clearly, express oneself intelligently and do complex intellectual tasks.

"Her work certainly has contributed to change in the general idea about what happens in normal aging," said psychologist David Arenberg of the National Institute on Aging's Gerontology Research Center in Baltimore.

The once-controversial idea that old age doesn't necessarily doom people to senility now is "almost universally accepted," said Arenberg, who studies how the elderly remember, learn, solve problems and process information.

But there still is disagreement over whether subtle loss of people's mental faculties is due to disease.

Jarvik said the elderly do tend to slow down mentally and physically, and that some memory loss may be due to aging, not disease.

But even if mental deterioration often — rather than always — results from some underlying disease, there is hope that science can learn to help people postpone any loss of their intellectual abilities.

Jarvik started her lifelong research project in 1946 when she went to work for Columbia University psychiatrist Franz Kallmann.

KALLMANN HAD just started studying the 134 pairs of twins in their 50s and 60s to learn what environmental factors, like lifestyle, might be responsible for intellectual differences between members of each pair.

Because identical twins are genetically identical and fraternal twins share inherited traits, scientists assume somewhat simplistically that differences between them tend to be due to differences in their environment.

Jarvik took over the study a couple years later, administering intelligence tests to the twins about every five years. Many findings were published in the 1960s, but the study continued until 1986, after the last twins died.

The twins didn't necessarily decline intellectually after 60. Indeed, as their average age rose from 64 to 73, they did better on all intelligence tests except those related to speed. Only as they reached their 80s did scores fall.

Jarvik's conclusion that disease, not age, was responsible, was based on two other major findings of the study:

- In every pair, the twin who first showed a decline on certain intelligence test scores also was the first to die.
- Those who initially scored low on the tests were roughly four times more likely than high-scorers to become senile 20 years later.

THE FINDINGS "indicate we're dealing with some sort of a disease process that affects the brain," she said. Such ailments may include those that attack the brain directly, such as Alzheimer's disease, and "some process taking place elsewhere in the body that affects the blood supply to the brain."

That suggests that declining intelligence tests might be a way to detect the subtle beginnings of Alzheimer's attack on the brain or of brain impairment caused indirectly by other diseases, Jarvik said. Older people who believe they are losing their mental abilities might want to "check with their doctor to see if they're physically ill," she said.

Jarvik said her study also suggests that if science ever finds a way to prevent or treat Alzheimer's, intelligence tests could be administered to aging people every three to five years to identify those likely to develop dementia.

Controversy wages over aluminum, Alzheimer's

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Autopsies of persons who have died from Alzheimer's disease reveal a higher concentration of aluminum in the brain than people who die of other causes, according to Dr. Michael Weiner in "Reducing the Risk of Alzheimer's." Although a direct link between aluminum and the onset of Alzheimer's is still being investigated, Weiner claims increasing evidence suggests that ingesting aluminum should be avoided at all costs.

An autopsy of a suspected Alzheimer's patient will also show tangles of fibers and clusters of degenerating nerve endings in areas used for memory and intellectual faculties, according to "The American Medical Association Encyclopedia." Autopsy results also will reveal a lack of certain brain chemicals which are vital for normal communication between nerve cells, along with excessive aluminum deposits.

"We had evidence of the relation of diet to cancer and heart disease long before we did anything about it," Weiner writes. "There were strong clues to the ravages produced by smoking long before the Surgeon General's warning appeared on cigarette packages. Alzheimer's is a 20th century phenomenon, and aluminum is a 20th century metal that a great many of us ingest unknowingly when we cook in aluminum pots and pans, use over-the-counter antacids and analgesics that are buffered with aluminum, wrap food in aluminum (which is leached into food from the foil), and drink from aluminum cans where soft drinks have been swishing around in aluminum."

Despite Weiner's conviction that aluminum may be a major contributing factor to Alzheimer's, other doctors say the disease can be triggered by a number of unrelated situations and not necessarily by a single cause. It may be onset due to a series of small, undetectible strokes, the side effects of certain medications or a head injury which pounds the brain against the back of the skull.

In a recent issue of "Newsweek," New York neuropathologist Dr. Danile Perl disputed the theory of aluminum as a contributor to Alzheimer's altogether. Perl, who has spent years trying to determine whether aluminum exposure contributes to the disease advises that people, "Go for the bargain on aluminum pans and call your congressman to demand more money for research."

Other researchers have shown that rabbits develop tanglelike lesions when an aluminum solution is injected into their brains. But the theory is disputed since everyone on the planet is exposed to aluminum (the most abundant metal in the earth's crust) and only a small percentage of the population has Alzheimer's.

According to The American Medical Association (AMA), aluminum-induced dementia (a form of mental disorder) has developed in some patients undergoing dialysis (artificial purification of the blood, used to treat kidney failure) due to the aluminum content of the water used. However, the condition can be prevented by adequate monitoring procedures and the report from the AMA states "There is no convincing evidence linking aluminum with Alzheimer's disease."

Alzheimer's researchers explore genetic, brain trauma links

The causes of Alzheimer's disease, a progressive condition in which nerve cells degenerate in the brain and brain substance shrinks, are unknown. Research into the causes of the mysterious disease has gained momentum only in the last decade. Theories have been proposed, ranging from the effects of a chronic infection to those of toxic poisoning by a metal such as aluminum. Other theories involve the lack of certain brain chemicals and a genetic factor.

An autopsy of a suspected Alzheimer's patient will show tangles of fibers and clusters of degenerating nerve endings in areas used for memory and intellectual faculties, according to "The American Medical Association Encyclopedia." The autopsy will also reveal a lack of certain brain chemicals which are vital for normal communication between nerve cells.

According to a recent issue of "Nursing" magazine, researchers are beginning to believe there are actually two forms of Alzheimer's: familial and sporadic.

"My grandmother died with Alzheimer's and my mother has it now. I'm a prime target for getting it myself," said Marlene Groce, a local real estate agent.

In sporadic Alzheimer's, there appears to be no previous history of the disease within the patient's family.

Links also have been found between Downs syndrome and Alzheimer's. Both conditions show a defect in chromosome 21 and a threefold higher incidence of Down's syndrome has been noted in families who have a history of Alzheimer's according to "Nursing."

Researchers at the University of California have found that patients with a history of head trauma are more predisposed to developing Alzheimer's and usually develop it at an earlier age than those who did not experience some type of head trauma, according to "Nursing."

"I attended a recent area seminar which explored head trauma and the Alzheimer's patient. The instructor asked for persons in the room who knew their loved one (an Alzheimer's patient) had suffered some type of accident or blow to the head in the past," said Midlander Kathryn Nichols, whose mother died with Alzheimer's. "Over half the room raised their hands. The theory involves the break in the blood brain barrier. The break can allow infection to enter the brain. The trauma theory and genetic links are being researched by top scientists in the Alzheimer's field," she said.

Although several drugs are being used to soften the effects of the disease, there is no specific treatment for the disease itself apart from the provision of suitable nursing and social care for both the victims and the patients.

In familial Alzheimer's, it is believed the victim seems to have inherited a predisposition to the disease from immediate family members, thus suggesting a genetic link in the disease.One study conducted at the Veterans Administration Medical Center showed a 50 percent cumulative incidence of probable Alzheimer's by age 86 in relatives of Alzhemier's patients, — a risk four times greater than the control group.

AARP predicts caregiving boom

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the population ages, it is almost certain that at some point in his or her life nearly every American will become a caregiver, according to the American Association of Retired Persons.

"Caregiving is a growing national concern that will likely become a reality for the vast majority of Americans," said Horace B. Deets, executive director of AARP. "It affects our families, our communities and our businesses."

A recent AARP survey found that during 1987, nearly 7 million Americans were functioning as caregivers. Of those, 55 percent were employed outside the home and 31 percent also cared for children.

SUPPORT

Odessa in the early 1980s, offered solace to area caregivers, including caregivers from Fort Stockton, Monahans and Kermit.

"Alzheimer's is namely a disease which effects a vast majority of the elderly," Ms. Nichols said. "Oftentimes, a spouse is totally burdened with caring for their loved one with Alzheimer's and can't even attend a support group meeting."

Ms. Groce, committee chairman for income development of the local Alzheimer's support group, said, "Until I began coming to the support group, I had no idea what to expect — how the disease would progress. The group helped prepare me for what was going to happen."

Due to the nature of the disease — progressive damage to the brain — there is a fear of persons with Alzheimer's since they appear to be insane.

"My mother would sometimes live in a hallucinary state. She would relive her childhood of feeding chickens and act like she was scattering feed all day. At times my mother — who taught school for 20 years — would teach school and instruct students who weren't there," Ms. Nichols said. "You had to watch her every minute. She would point to a bare area of the room and say 'I'm going to sit in that chair over there.' Then she would attempt to sit down on air. This frightening behavior is what isolates caregivers from the rest of society."

Ms. Nichols said persons with Alzheimer's often attempt to undress in public for various reasons. "An Alzheimer's person may think they are getting ready to take a shower or getting ready for bed," she said. "People don't know how to respond. Sometimes it's best to play along. My mother once was upset when she imagined noisy children were in the room. I told her I would ask the children to leave and she calmed down."

Caregivers often see their charges exhibit behavior that isn't explained in books. "Doctors hardly have time to deal with Alzheimer's patients and caregivers on a weekly basis and most people can't afford to see a doctor for every new development," Ms. Nichols said. "Support groups offer suggestions for people to cope with strange behavior and to handle difficult situations."

In addition to the emotional, physical and mental stress of caregivers, they also must face the devastating costs of caring for an Alzheimer's patient, Since most insurances — including Medicare — do not cover Alzheimer's disease.

With the tremendous responsibilities caregiver's face, the pace begins to wreak havoc with their immune systems. According to recent studies by immunologist Ronald Glaser and psychologist Janice Kiecolt-Glaser of Ohio State University College of Medicine, chronic stress reduces the disease-fighting immune cells and causes detrimental changes in other components of the immune system.

In one study, 34 family caregivers of Alzheimer's disease patients were compared with 34 control subjects. The study showed that caregivers had lower percentages of total T cells, helper T cells and helper/suppressor T cell ratios, as well as highter antibody titer (concentrations) to the Epstein-Barr virus (implying poore. T cell control over the virus) than comparison subjects. Correspondingly, those caregivers more closely associated with the patient showed a lower percentage of natural killer cells.

There is hope for Alzheimer's caregivers, however. According to the same study, caregivers involved in a support group had significantly higher percentages of natural killer cells than those not involved with a support group. But even in areas where support groups are established, caregivers often have trouble finding the time to be able to attend a meeting.

According to Ms. Nichols, the lack of respite care in Midland often makes it impossible for a caregiver to leave their loved one with someone.

"There is a need for a daycare or a place to take a person with Alzheimer's in order for their caregiver to get out of the house for a few hours," she said.

Staffing daycares are expensive, and to be cost effective, an Alzheimer's daycare would need a steady supply of volunteers. Yet, Ms. Nichols said people are not as likely to volunteer to help Alzheimer's patients or their caregivers because the disease is so unfamiliar and frightening.

"Fear is involved and there is the stigma of having someone who seems mentally ill and exhibits bizarre behaviors," she said. "Because of this, caregivers tend to hide the Alzheimer's person at home and try to deal with everything alone. They are afraid other people won't understand the manifestations of the disease, and they stay home alone, afraid to leave their loved one with anyone else."

For many Midlanders, the local Alzheimer's group is the only affordable lifeline of education, information and support offered. When caregivers don't get help, they put their own mental and physical health at risk, according to Ms. Groce.

"My grandmother had Alzheimer's and my grandfather was her primary caregiver," she said. "He got cancer and was so emotionally and physically stressed from caring for grandmother, that he was too exhausted to fight the cancer. He died before she did. It's not uncommon for the caregiver to precede the Alzheimer's patient in death. It's that emotionally and physical exhausting."

"When it's your mother or your spouse who has Alzheimer's you are reluctant to put them in a nursing home," Ms. Nichols said. "You've got to learn how to manage their behavior and how to keep them from hurting themselves. But most of all, you've got to get help."

"The Long Good-bye Part II" will focus on the dilemmas faced by Alzheimer's caregivers.

ALZHEIMER'S

Alzheimer, from whom the disease was named.

If Alzheimer's existed in the past, it was extremely rare. It is a form of dementia, a global neurological impairment characterized by slowly progressive and irreversible deterioration of the cognitive functions of the brain — speech, abstract thought, emotion, memory. Hence, it takes away the ability to take care of oneself, to identify time and place, to relate socially to others, and to think and act in a clear and reasonable way.

However, the disease is being addressed widely by the media in light of newly released figures on the incidence of Alzheimer's which show that the disease is more prevalent than previously reported. Based on updated statistics reported in a recent issue of the "Journal of the American Medical Association," the National Institute on Aging (NIA) estimates that 4 million Americans (versus the previously reported 2.5 million) are now afflicted with Alzheimer's disease and the number is expected to grow significantly as baby boomers age.

The NIA projects that by the year 2040, the number of cases could total between 12-14 million, and the American Association of Retired Persons announced that if statistics of Alzheimer's continue to rise at current levels, at some point in his or her life nearly every American will become a caregiver to an Alzheimer's patient. It is becoming a national health concern as Americans are living longer, thus increasing the risk of having the disease.

AMERICANS AGE 65 now have a 10 percent chance of developing the disease in the next year and persons age 80 have a 40 percent chance of developing it next year, according to David L. Carroll, author of "When Your Loved One Has Alzheimer's: A Caregivers Guide."

According to Carroll, the deterioration of a single brain cell is inconsequential. But in Alzheimer's, whole areas of the brain eventually die en masse. "Persons who were once witty, cordial and quick on their feet become reduced to the status of deranged children," Carroll wrote. "Memory loss is the most obvious symptom of Alzheimer's, which includes an inability to perform familiar tasks, trouble with organizing and sequencing familiar information: knowing where something goes, how it goes, and why it goes there and changes in habitual behavior patterns."

The disease causes degeneration of the brain, which some caregivers describe as a fate worse than death. It debilitates not only the patient but his or her spouse and family who must care for the sufferer who is unraveling before their very eyes. The stress on caregiver's of Alzheimer's patients is so great, that studies are being conducted on the effects of stress on the caregiver's immune systems. (See related story, Page 3E.)

Mere forgetfulness not necessarily a symptom of Alzheimer's disease

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Alzheimer's disease, which indicates the loss or impairment of a person's ability to use his or her mind, initially interferes with social and occupational functions.

According to "Alzheimer's: A Caregiver's Guide and Sourcebook," by Howard Gruentzner, early warning signs of Alzheimer's includes the inability to perform familiar activities. For example, an accountant may gradually be unable to perform his job because of impairments in memory, reasoning and calculation abilities. A person with Alzheimer's may have difficulty in social situations because they cannot follow conversations or remember names. Other early warning signs include confusion, forgetfulness and inability to perform routine tasks such as cooking and dialing telephone numbers.

Short-term memory is affected while long-term or remote memory remains clear.

When daily activities become a problem, help should be sought and a professional diagnosis should be made by experts. It should be remembered, however, mere forgetfulness is normal and not necessarily a sign of Alzhemier's disease.

Likewise, organizations like Hospice can't intervene because of the prolonged stages of the disease. Hospice, an organization which usually assists with the terminally ill and their families, begins assistance when the patient's life expectancy is expressed in a matter of six months or less. Alzheimer's patients may linger for 10 years in the later stages of the disease, the typical lifespan from the onset of the disease eing 6-20 years.

According to the global deterioration scale theory for Alzheimer's patients, the pattern of the disease parallels that of regressing to the state of a child and finally to that of a helpless infant.

The disease eventually spreads into the primitive area of the brain which controls respiration, heartbeat and breathing, leaving the person in a vegetative state.

IN THE LATER stages, gag and swallowing reflexes may disappear, at which point the patient may need tube feedings. Problems with eating may cause patients to lose a lot of weight and to become susceptible to infection. Death usually results from aspiration pneumonia or a related infection.

The hidden victim's of Alzheimer's are the caregivers, who watch their loved ones undergo complete personality changes; changes so drastic that the patient has no identity left.

Many caregivers are reluctant to let their friends and family know what is happening to their loved ones and chose to become isolated instead. One Midland caregiver, who wished to remain anonymous, said she received no social invitations at Christmas this year, a devastating blow to someone who had more holiday invitations than she could handle in previous years.

The caregiver said, "Once people found out my husband had Alzheimer's, the phone quit ringing and we were avoided. We became social poison. Alzheimer's carries a stigma like AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome)," she said. "The most frightening aspect of it is there is a lack of hope. If someone has cancer, they will either get better or die fairly quickly. If they have Alzheimer's, they may act like a violent raving lunatic for years, until every vestige of mind and identity is stripped away. It's devastating, and entire families become the victims."

LIKE MUCH OF the public, much of the medical community also is baffled by the brain-killing disease. However, strides are being made (see related story, Page 2E), and researchers are attempting to link the disease to genes, infectious or toxic agents (including aluminum) and to flaws in the machinery by which cells build and break down vital chemicals.

As scientists grope toward an understanding of the disease, the big push in research tends toward a drug to combat Alzheimer's. Until then, "man needs to gain every ounce of knowledge available to arm himself against this disease," according to James Jolly, the son-in-law of Alzhemier's patient Grace Baughman. "Caregivers need to renew and re-establish life where life once was," Jolly said. "We have to get Alzheimer's into the light. It can't be faught in the dark."

Alzheimer's diagnosed during autopsy

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Forgetting where an object is, losing something or forgetting an appointment happens to everyone at one time or another. Minor memory difficulties come with aging and may result from stress, fatigue or attempting to remember too much information at one time. But minor forgetfulness is neither progressive nor disabling. People usually remember that elusive word or where they put their car keys later.

Persons with Alzheimer's disease will not remember something later, and whole gaps in short-term memory may be evident. Alzheimer's — a progressive, degenerative disease which attacks the brain — can only be used as a diagnosis after all other diseases have been ruled out, and the only way a 100 percent diagnosis of Alzheimer's can be made is when brain tissue is examined during an autopsy.

Anyone suspected of having Alzheimer's should have a complete physical, psychiatric and neurological evaluation, according to the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, Inc. (ADRDA)

Diagnosis is imperative since several other treatable disorders mimic Alzheimer's.

Nancy Winkler of Midland, a caregiver for Alzheimer's patient Edith Crawford, said her father was mistakenly diagnosed for Alzheimer's several years ago. "He exhibited all the traits of Alzheimer's, but it was later discovered that my father — who was a farmer — had absorbed toxic chemicals," Ms. Winkler said. "Once the toxins were cleared out of his system, he got better and was completely cured."

Illnesses showing symptoms similar to Alzheimer's are strokes and vascular disease, Huntington's, Parkinson's, Pick's and Creutzfeldt-Jakob diseases according to the ADRDA. Also similar are a number of conditions such as depression, drug reactions, thyroid disorders, nutritional deficiencies, brain tumors, head injuries, alcoholism, hydrocephalus and infections such as meningitis, syphilis and AIDS.

Comprehensive evaluations for Alzheimer's are only 90 percent accurate. But testing should be done to rule out any other forms of treatable conditions.

Food choices for the post-wedding reception can blend with the season and setting. This arrangment of harvest fruits, cheeses and breads was part of the fare for the autumn farm party following the wedding of Susan and Donald Waite.

Farm fare perfect for festive feast

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

Offering guests a festive meal after the wedding ceremony is a way of sharing the happiness of the bride and groom, so part of the feast reflecting the couple's ethnic backgrounds is appropriate, says Molly Siple, who with partner Gillie Holme catered the Sunday afternoon country wedding of Donald and Susan Waite.

While you do need one dish that virtually everyone will like — in New York, chicken, turkey or poached salmon fulfill the requirement — other selections can be more adventurous. If ingredients of a particular ethnic favorite are available locally, professional caterers will enjoy the challenge of preparing these dishes for your guests, Siple says.

Food served can take a cue from the season and time of day. Of course, practical considerations of budget and cooking facilities also need to be considered in menu planning.

The menu at the Waites' wedding was dictated by minimal cooking facilities, the outdoor setting, autumn season and the country locale.

Requests for a healthful menu light on saturated fats and sugar and dishes prepared without alcohol also were taken into consideration. All these factors made a harvest theme natural, says Siple.

The menu included ham, roast turkey and condiments, New England baked beans, a melange of seasonal squashes and cornbread on the main buffet table. There were a separate salad station (tomatoes with basil, marinated mushrooms and greens), a table for cheeses and fruit and another for the wedding cake.

The Waites' choices are part of a trend to more healthful fare and ethnic dishes, according to Modern Bride editor Cele Lalli. The use of several different buffet stations, making it easy to offer a variety of dishes and serve a crowd more efficiently, also was typical, she says.

Lighter fare, such as a choice of fish, chicken or beef, is being offered at many weddings around the country. Some invitations arrive with a request for guests to indicate their main course preference — a practice Lalli finds unappealing. It's more gracious to have the choice made just before the meal, she says.

One reason for more adventurous menus is that "more couples now are actually planning and paying for their own event. As a result, their tastes and budgets are taken into account," says Boyce Brawley, a partner in the catering firm, New York Parties, and co-author of a new book of the same name.

Brawley says that when the couple plan the wedding, they're more likely to opt for an informal event than their parents might have been. Younger people prefer an extended cocktail party with finger foods and passed foods and several serving stations. As a rule, that's less costly than a sit-down meal, "but not if you want everything that you would have had at a dinner," says Brawley.

"Weddings of this type are not quite so formal and are more conducive to conversation," he says. People have a chance to circulate. Formalities and traditions of toasting and cake cutting, however, are observed just as much by the young, he says.

Late afternoon teas are increasingly popular. "Since this is not necessarily a period when parents are paying for the wedding, the lesser expense of a tea is welcome."

Brawley says that mixing ethnic foods with more standard dishes is becoming more common. If the bride and groom are of different ethnic backgrounds, it's a practice to serve foods from both traditions. "Nothing is wrong with mixing ethnic flavors. After all, this is a union of two families, and you want to make everyone feel comfortable. We may even ask the couple for family recipes."

Brawley says that while more variety is sought in dishes, a few foods turn up often. "Nine times out of ten some form of salmon will show up, and meats such as lamb, duck and quail are being ordered far more often. People are ready to experiment."

Wedding planner Marcy Blum says the eclectic menu makes for a more festive party: "Food becomes part of the entertainment. With six or seven buffet stations, the party flow works better at a large wedding," she adds.

Blum, who is based in New York but helps plan weddings in many areas, says many people prefer to offer fowl rather than red meat. She agrees that ethnic foods are popular — and part of a trend toward ethnicity throughout the event.

Women remember wedding scenes well

By MARY CANTWELL
N.Y. Times News Service

A friend and I are sitting together at a wedding reception. The bride and groom — she in lavender, he in navy blue — are on the dance floor, and the band is playing "The Yellow Rose of Texas."

"Of course I don't know that I'll ever marry," my friend says, "but I can't help wondering what I'd wear if I did. What did you wear?"

"Beige silk taffeta," I answer, quick as a wink, "and I carried white roses and ivy." Ask any woman about her wedding, and no matter how long ago or how ill-fated it was, she will describe it down to the last hors d'oeuvre.

"I wore a white silk suit," another guest said, "because I thought I was too old for the full bridal get-up. But I tried one on anyway, and oh, the feeling when that thing floated down over my head." Remembering the feeling, she smiled.

Ah yes, we all remember. We remember everything. I do, and it is not because I'm especially sentimental. (The beige silk taffeta went to the Salvation Army a long time ago.)

It is as if a hammer and chisel wielded by ... the fates, maybe ... had pounded the scene into my brain.

Let me call it up, and I see the chilly December day, the gray-haired judge, the fireplace banked in red carnations, and my darker red shoes. Capezios.

I see the groom, in dark blue, and his hands, which were sporting the first manicure he ever had. I had a manicure, too, my fourth and last. Three high school junior proms, one wedding: no gala since has matched those four. Ergo, no more manicures.

The champagne was in the bathtub, two dozen bottles or so heaped on big chunks of ice, and my roommate and I had iced the petits fours ourselves. My new sister-in-law had done the flowers, and an hour or two before the ceremony my mother had gone to Bergdorf's, the store nearest her hotel, to buy me a blue garter.

My younger daughter imagines her wedding — "Long white dress, band and a professional makeup job," she snaps — and is much in demand as a bridesmaid.

Her college classmates are getting married now, and I suppose she will be among them one of these days. Their weddings are elaborate and expensive and followed by sit-down dinners — none of this standing in a meadow and promising "so long as we both shall dig it" stuff.

"You'll get no such nonsense from me," I promise. "Only watercress sandwiches and a harpist." I mean it, too.

But I'll buy her a blue garter anyway, and be wet-eyed when I see her in her dress ("off-the-shoulder, with a little waist," she tells me).

After the guests are gone, I'll get into my old gray bathrobe and take out the old photograph albums and breathe a sigh of relief — that my child is settled down at last. Which is stupid of me because it is decades since marriage was equivalent to settling down at last and because it is a relationship about which I am, to say the least, ambivalent.

My ambivalence is less out of my own experience than out of what I perceive of others' experience. But I cannot quite trust these perceptions because no outsider can penetrate the wall that surrounds somebody else's marriage. Even so, too often I do not like what I see.

Yes, I've seen people who fit one another as nicely as do the pieces of a jigsaw puzzle. But I've also seen wives who are forever walking two steps behind and husbands condemned to sit out their marriages in the emotional equivalent of the kitchen.

Then I've wondered if it is worth it, if never having to wake up in an empty bed is worth a life in a deep freeze. Certainly someone I once knew thought so. Never married, and dying, she called a mutual friend and said, "You musn't live alone. You musn't do what I did."

Had I known about that phone call at the time, I would have run to her house and told her she had made the right choices, that the life she'd had was the right life for her.

Then I'd have told her about how in childhood I'd overheard the town's district nurse tell my mother about patching up a woman who'd been beaten yet again by her husband.

"She had a black eye and a bruised jaw and a few missing teeth. And you know what she said to me. She said 'Miss Graham, you ever been married?' And when I said no, she grinned this toothless grin and said 'Poor thing.'"

I would have told her how my mother and the nurse laughed, and of how marriage was no guarantee of companionship and understanding. But who am I kidding? She wouldn't have believed me. At the end of her life she was, in a sense, at the beginning of her life and dreaming, as we all dream early on, of the perfect partner.

The places to which those dreams lead us! There is poor Carol Stuart, wife to Charles, dead in Boston, and a legion of women with blackened eyes and hopes that have been stamped on.

There is a legion of men as well with hopes that have been stamped on, and perhaps some of them would have black eyes too if women had better right hooks.

Still, we do it. We take the chance. We marry. Ask me about my wedding and I'll tell you how it felt to slide on my garter and zip up my beige silk taffeta and pin a wreath of white roses in my hair. I won't tell you the rest, but I'll tell you that, and when I do I'll glow.

Check for differences between sterling silver, silver plateitems

N.Y. Times News Service

This is time of year when most brides-to-be shop for silver.

Diana Shiel, public relations director for the Silver Trust, a trade association, said the difference between sterling silver and silver plate is the amount of silver used.

And she advised: "Don't take the salesperson's word for it. Check."

Here are some other tips.

STERLING SILVER

- MARKINGS: Ask to see the sterling mark (the words sterling or sterl) or the number .925.
- SILVER CONTENT: 92.5 percent and 7.5 percent copper or other metals.
- USEFUL LIFE: Indefinite.
- PRICE: Five-piece place settings by Cristofle range from $780 to $1,600.

SILVER PLATE

- MARKINGS: No stamp or markings, except thay some pre-1920 items and some made in Britain are marked epns for electro-plated nickel silver.
- SILVER CONTENT: Has a base of nickel, lead or brass. The percentage of silver coating is measured in microns; 35 microns in about average.
- USEFUL LIFE: 25 to 50 years before replating.
- PRICE: Five-piece flatware settings by Cristofle are $165 to $325.

In this high-tech age of electronic media there are many ways to stay informed.

Why then, do so many people still turn to their newspaper as the medium of choice for news and information?

Consider this:

- Newspapers are always ready when you are and fit easily into your schedule.
- Newspapers travel light and allow you to digest information at your own pace.
- Newspapers provide more in-depth coverage and freedom of choice—you select what is important to you.
- And lastly, newspapers give you so much more. Like advice, movies, comics, puzzles, coupons and sales. It's no wonder people from all walks of life love

Brain surgeon, young woman battle virulent tumor

By JENNY VOGT
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Dr. David Baron confronts death nearly every day.

Sometimes it brushes by his patients, sometimes it hovers for weeks or months. Sometimes it strikes from nowhere, unexpected and terrifying.

It is Baron's job to help make sense of it all for the sake of his patients and their families.

"It never makes you feel happy to tell a patient they have a terminal disease," the 42-year-old Palm Beach County neurosurgeon said. "Sometimes I have tears in my eyes when I tell a family, so it affects me. I get very emotional."

He works 60 to 80 hours a week. That leaves little time to dwell on the tragedies he has seen. But, clearly, this upbeat, chatty man doesn't want to.

"I wonder how he deals with it all sometimes," says Baron's wife, Rebekah. "He has a great capacity for sleep, and he's got a great sense of humor. I would say that's his main way to vent it all: his humor."

Said Baron, simply: "You can't let it all stop you from being afraid to move ahead."

After all, he added, "There are a million stories in the naked city."

One of those is Lara Bryan's story.

AN OUTGOING 21-year-old, Lara Bryan collapsed on Halloween while eating a pizza with her husband and their 5-month-old daughter at their West Palm Beach home.

She had planned to attend her second session of paralegal training later that night.

"I thought I would take her (to the hospital) and they would give her something and we'd go back home," said Lara's husband Jim. "I didn't think we'd have this."

But by the time he got her to Palm Beach Regional Hospital, Lara was almost dead. Baron, who was leaving the hospital at the time she arrived, saved her life in the emergency room by drilling holes in her skull to drain fluid in her brain.

The cause, it turns out, was a large brain tumor. Suddenly, her dizziness, memory lapses, headaches and blurred vision of the past few months begin to make some sense. Surgery is scheduled for, a scant 36 hours after her collapse.

A FEW HOURS before the surgery, Baron looks in on Lara. He cups the nervous young woman's hand. She is in a private room at Palms West Hospital in Loxahatchee, where she has been transferred.

Her left side is paralyzed; her right leg twitches uncontrollably as Baron gently answers her questions.

"If I go into a coma, I would like my stepfather to sit next to my bed and read Scriptures to me. Would that be OK?" she asks, her high-pitched voice timorous, her eyes searching his face.

"Fine, fine," he assures her, patting her pale hand.

He has already done his best to prepare her for the risks: hemorrhage, shock, infection, brain damage, coma, death. But he also holds out the possibility of recovery.

Trembling, Lara worries she will awaken during surgery. She is clearly terrified.

The doctor assures her, "You will know nothing about what's going on."

Outside Lara's room, Baron confides to a reporter: "It's my experience that she'll have a malignancy and she'll die. ... It just seems like the bad things happen to good people. I don't know why ... "

DAVID BARON came late to medicine, even later to neurosurgery.

While attending college in California in the mid-'60s, he realized school wasn't much fun. So, he dropped out.

"I played my music (Baron is a guitarist), and I worked in quality control engineering for Mattel," he says. "I was a toy doctor."

After five or six years, he returned to school with a reinvigorated spirit and began studying to become a real doctor.

"I'd gotten to that point in my life," he explains. "I was a good musician, but I wasn't going anywhere. I had the proverbial day job."

More than a decade later, Baron came to Palm Beach County in 1986 to set up practice as a first-year neurosurgeon. Today, he is one of only 11 such doctors in the county and about 3,600 nationally.

Baron quickly obtained a reputation for his enthusiasm and level-headedness.

Although confident, he is not known for throwing his weight around, say those who have worked with him. Baron keeps his many diplomas tucked in his desk drawer, choosing instead to display the acrylics he has painted.

He savors his little time with wife Rebekah and 15-month-old daughter Rachel. Occasionally, he sails his 33-foot sailboat on weekends if he is lucky.

And this 5-foot, 7-inch man charges around hospital floors like a general leading the way into a great battle; instead of a sword at his hip, he has a pager. And his humor is legendary.

He trades hearty jokes with nurses and staff while making hospital rounds. In between a long string of visits to comatose patients, he pokes fun at his job.

Neurosurgery, he grins, is "three hours to open, 15 minutes to go 'tsk, tsk, tsk' and three hours to close."

"You can't lose your sense of humor," he says over a cup of coffee before surgery one morning.

He has frequently taken cases his colleagues were afraid or unwilling to take because of a malpractice threat or lack of insurance. He unhesitatingly accepted Lara Bryan as a patient, although Jim Bryan told him up front he had no insurance and no money for his wife's surgery.

"I don't care what the form of payment is, everyone gets equivalent care," Baron insisted. "I guess I kind of thrive on it all."

He added later: "You know, you get paid every year on Yom Kippur — with a good inscription in the Book of Life."

HEADSTRONG. Free-spirited. Person-oriented. Caring. Stubborn.

These are words Lara Bryan's family use to describe her.

"She is a very vibrant, vivacious, beautiful blond-haired young lady who, five minutes after you meet her, has you wrapped around her little finger," said Bernadine Eggen, Lara's mother.

Born in Decatur, Ill., Eggen's daughter grew up in South Carolina, where she exceled in school and extracurricular activities. She was second runner-up for the Modern Miss Contest of South Carolina in 1985.

"She'll try anything once," said Jim Bryan, 25, who married Lara on Sept. 12, 1987, after a whirlwind courtship. Their daughter, Elizabeth, was born June 9, 1989.

Lara Bryan's biggest dream is of being a model or stewardess, but she settles happily on becoming a paralegal. She is, after all, a new mother.

Now, however, all dreams are put on hold because of the surgery.

"My wife," Jim Bryan says, "wants to be everything in this world."

Lara lies on an operating table at Palms West Hospital with 10 monitors attached to every part of her body.

With her eyes closed and her sandy blond hair hanging over the end of the table, she looks pale and vulnerable.

Baron, who has already completed one operation, is anxious to begin. Swathed in baby-blue surgical scrubs and mask, he entered the room, quickly taking over for a nurse who has begun clipping off Bryan's shoulder-length hair.

"Vidal Sassoon I'm not," Baron quips as he lops off the rest of the hair. The nurse gathers it up into a plastic bag and tosses it on a nearby shelf.

The night before surgery, Bryan lamented to her mother, "I'm going to be bald."

Her mother responded, "That's how you were born into this world. I had to tape a bow in your hair until you were 2. It's not so bad."

Later, smoke drifts lazily from an electric saw as Baron carefully slices through Lara's skull.

The piercing whir of the blade sends an otherworldly shriek through the operating room, redolent in antiseptics. It drowns out tinny music flowing from a portable radio.

The squarish incision completed, the neurosurgeon scoops out the piece of skull cap and drops it in a bowl of preservative. He cuts through the tough, outer covering of the brain and finally — an hour or so after elaborate preparations have begun — reaches his destination.

Baron pauses briefly to consider the vibrant pink organ as it pulsates like an oversized heart. The swollen brain bulges out of its neat little window.

EVENTUALLY, THE lights are dimmed and a television monitor attached to the plastic-shrouded microscope is turned on. Slowly, the sole item illuminated in the darkened room — a 21-year-old's swollen brain — comes into stark focus on a 19-inch color screen.

In the shadows, hovering over his mammoth microscope's viewfinder, his voice muffled by his mask, Baron says, "Let the show begin."

Five hours and 10 minutes after she was wheeled in, Lara Bryan is on her way out of the operating room.

"Open your eyes, Lara," Baron calls to his patient as attendants prepare her for the trip to the hospital's critical-care unit for recovery. She moves her lips in response as her head is wrapped in many layers of thick, white gauze.

For the first time in two days, she moves her left side when it is stimulated.

"She looks good, good, good," says Baron, tired, but exultant.

Baron, his shoe covers drenched in blood, paces in tight circles as five attendants complete the transfer of his patient to a recovery bed.

Before he meets with the family, he dives into a break room and pours a cup of black coffee. Cup in hand, he walks through the automatic doors that lead out of the operating area to where Lara's family has been anxiously waiting, clutching bouquets of grape Tootsie Pops she has requested.

"I think I got all of it, but I don't know," Baron tells Lara's husband of the brain tumor.

The pathologist on the case had tentatively diagnosed a "low-grade" malignancy, possibly treatable with radiation. But Baron stresses a definitive finding will not be available for as long as 24 hours.

"We'll see what the follow-up studies say," he cautions before trailing his patient to her darkened room where a bank of monitors busily hum.

Once there, he consults with a nurse, checking his patient's vital signs.

THEN, HE bends low over his patient, whose eyes are closed.

"Lara," Baron asks, "how you doing?"

A pause, and then, Lara's lips quiver and her eyes flutter open.

"I'm still here," she murmurs.

At 2 a.m. the next morning, Baron was asleep in his suburban West Palm Beach home when the phone rang.

Lara Bryan is having problems, a nurse told Baron. She's in a coma and no longer responsive to voices and her pupils are dilated. She is having trouble breathing.

He orders an emergency CAT scan and when its daunting results come back, Baron returns to the hospital at 4 a.m. — just five hours after his arrival home from work the previous evening. Lara's family is notified of her worsening condition.

The swelling of Lara's brain is violent and uncontrollable. Medicine doesn't help.

During one of his many visits to his patient that day, the neurosurgeon gently opens one of Lara's eyes and tickles it with the tip of a puffy cotton swab.

"Jesus Christ!" he uttered before walking out. There had been no reaction to his stimulation.

Recalling the moment, Lara's mother said, "As a mother I knew she was gone. When a woman has a baby, I can't explain it except to say your arms are full ... and when it dies, no matter how old, your arms go empty.

"I felt that."

LARA LEE BRYAN died Friday, Nov. 3, 1989, with her family gathered in a tight clutch around her hospital bed.

They waited, weeping and holding hands, as her respirator was turned off at about 11 p.m. Overcome with grief, Jim Bryan waited in a nearby room until his wife's heart gave out on its own 35 minutes later. Her brain had given out hours before.

Earlier in the day, he fell across his young wife's bed in tears and pleaded, "You promised you would never leave me."

Lara's mother crawled onto her daughter's bed and held her close one last time, before the respirator was turned off.

Lara's nurse, who was seven months pregnant, became so distraught over Lara's condition that she went into early labor and had to be hospitalized.

When the pathologist's report became available, it was finally clear what was wrong: Lara had glioblastoma multiforme, a type of brain cancer Baron described as "very malignant." Her brain was reacting to the cancer and the trauma of the surgery.

"She was in bad shape no matter what," Baron said. "But I told them this was one time I felt God had really been merciful because it could have been a slow and agonizing death."

"He (Baron) tried to be so gentle telling us (about her brain cancer), and I cut through all his gentleness and said, 'Is this what you're telling us?' and he'd say, 'But that sounds so cold,'" recalled Lara's mother. "He was trying to be so sensitive. I've never seen a doctor with so much empathy."

She and other family members worried later about how Baron copes with his young patient's death. They vow to send him letters to comfort him — and themselves.

"Dr. Baron gave me two extra days with my wife," said Jim Bryan. "If it hadn't been for him, she wouldn't have had those two days."

LARA BRYAN was buried in Pueblo, Colo., next to her grandmother. Her hair and a Tootsie Pop were placed with her.

"If I didn't have her," Jim Bryan said, nodding at his 5-month-old daughter Elizabeth Bryan, "I don't know what I'd do. She's the only thing left."

When he thinks of his wife, he still can't believe she is dead.

Occasionally, he presses his unshaven face into his hands. His words come out raggedly.

"I feel the loss of her, but I don't feel sad because she would have been in so much pain," he said, twirling one of the Tootsie Pops he had brought to his wife's bedside.

Less confidently, he added, "We'll be all right."

Three days after Lara died, David Baron was dining on a late dinner of warmed-over roast beef and potatoes at his home. His wife munched on nuts as he recounted his more than 12-hour workday.

Baron's thoughts drifted to Lara Bryan, as they inevitably do these days.

"I've never seen anyone go this bad, this fast," said Baron, nodding his head sadly. "This was the first patient I've ever had with such bad brain swelling. I was really in shock over the whole thing. It really hit me hard.

"Because of her age it's upsetting," he said. "If you're 75, it's more acceptable."

Out of 500 or 600 non-trauma patients he has operated on in more than three years, six (including Lara Bryan) have died within 30 days, Baron said.

"I don't like to lose and, occasionally, I do," he said. "I don't like it for the family. I don't like it for me. I don't like it for anybody."

He is thankful, though, that Lara's family respected her dignity enough to sever life support as quickly as possible.

"They were sophisticated enough to realize the soul had left the body," he said. "Some people don't realize the brain is anything more than meat between the ears.

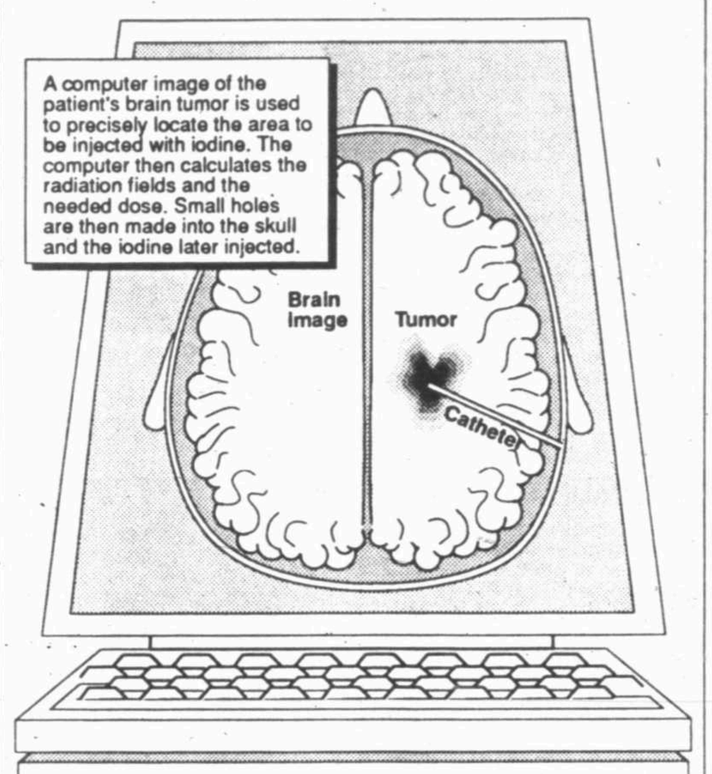
"Really, the brain is what makes us a human being. The heart is a pump. Our heart and our humanity reside in our brain.

"I can almost assure you if she'd been a dirtbag, she'd be alive today. Don't ask me why. That's just how it seems to work out. When you're viewing God from the point of view of a neurosurgeon, you don't say 'God is nice and kind to everyone' because it's not true.

"It's not an easy situation. None of it is easy."

Better treatment for the worst of tumors

Radioactive iodine can now be implanted directly into the worst of malignant brain tumors, glioblastomas. The breakthrough discovery – called brachytherapy – has doubled life expectancy for some patients.



- Glioblastomas, the most virulent of tumors, account for about 25 percent of all brain tumors.
- Some patients who received treatment survived for two to three years, compared to the average 40-week expectation.

Treatment for strokes found

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists reported today they have discovered a gene for a protein that helps govern brain cell communication, a potential step toward new treatments for stroke and severe head injury.

Further work also may help explain how the brain learns and remembers, scientists said.

"This discovery is extremely important," commented Charles Stevens of Yale Medical School, whose editorial appears with the study in the British journal Nature.

The work is the first finding of a gene that tells brain cells how to make a protein called a glutamate receptor. When this receptor senses a natural substance called glutamate outside a brain cell, it makes the cell more prone to fire off messages to neighboring brain cells.

In this way, the receptor acts as a fundamental regulator of brain cell communication.

The newfound gene is for one type of glutamate receptor, but it can be used to find genes for the other types, said study co-author Stephen Heinemann. Finding the gene is a first step toward studying a receptor's structure and behavior.

Eventually, glutamate receptor studies may lead to development of drugs that limit brain damage from strokes, head injury or repeated seizures, and to new understanding about learning and memory, the scientists said.

The NMDA receptor also triggers a process called long-term potentiation, a strengthening of communication links between certain brain cells that is thought to underlie some forms of memory and learning. So studying the receptor may illuminate brain function in those tasks, Stevens said.

Volunteer credit program aids elderly

MIAMI (AP) — Cassie Brown cooks breakfast and lunch for Josh Thomas every other day when he's not on dialysis, and does laundry for his grandmother.

"I understand elderly people because I'm 63 years old and I have an older father, too. He's 90," said Ms. Brown, a team leader with the Greater Miami Service Credit Consortium, a volunteer program for the elderly and disabled.

She collects one service credit for each hour she volunteers. Working three to five hours a day, she takes clients to doctor's appointments, fixes meals and runs errands. She can save the credits for herself or donate them.

"It's kind of like insurance. The best kind is the kind you never have to use," said a volunteer in Missouri. Other states with programs are California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma and the District of Columbia. Only in Michigan and Missouri are they statewide.

Service credit programs, operating much like barter banks, are run by groups ranging from a health maintenance organization serving Hassidic Jewish and Italian communities in New York City to the Area Agency on Aging in San Francisco's Mission District.

VOLUNTEERS ARE most commonly used for respite care, giving a break to the person with the primary responsibility for a sick or disabled relative. Federal studies show families provide about 80 percent of care to the ailing elderly.

Service credits "can be used to target specific needs that are a public priority," said Edgar Kahn, a Florida International University professor and head of the project at the Southeast Florida Center on Aging.

Kahn, a speechwriter for then-Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and later for Sargent Shriver in the War on Poverty, devised the idea of service credits nine years ago while teaching law at the University of Miami. He worked out the economic implications during six months at the London School of Economics.

"The purchasing power of a service credit may or may not be that important, but just accruing them seems to make people feel better," he said.

In Missouri, 26 agencies from churches to hospices and neighborhood groups send service-credit volunteers to play checkers, read, go for walks and write letters but not get involved in household chores, bathing or medical services.

In Miami, 515 volunteers are working up to 6,000 hours a month, mostly performing services that were never done before and are not funded by Medicare or other federal programs. The average age of volunteers in a program run by the HMO in the New York City borough of Brooklyn is about 75.

Credits are recorded, usually on a computer, and monthly or quarterly statements may be mailed, given at meetings or on the phone.

"The beauty of it is that it says everybody's time is valuable. We just can't put people on the scrap heap," said Kahn. "I think we're really talking about a redefinition of the roles of the market economy and what it does well and the non-market economy and what it does well."

PRESSURE ON THE government to provide more services can be resolved with service credit programs at little or no cost, said Kahn, who also helped write the blueprint for the Legal Services program, led an American Bar Association citizens watchdog group that produced a pioneering report on hunger in America, and served as special counsel to the chairman of the Navajo tribe.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation invested $1.2 million in six groups as a test of the concept. Miami is in the second year of its three-year grant.

"The programs are feeling that they're riding a crest now, that everybody feels the money isn't there to solve social problems so there's got to be another solution," Kahn said.

The mobility of the American family also played a role in his thinking. "It fills a critical gap in a community where we live as strangers" by giving a way for people to help. "If this didn't go on, neighbors could live next to each other in abject need with no mechanism to bring them together."

"We are not attempting to reinvent the volunteer services," said Eric Berry, of Michigan's Volunteer Incentive Service Credit Accounting Program.

"Our programs are asked to network with the existing volunteer programs, so if we are alerted to a caregiver at such and such an address, if there is a church group that already has volunteers available, that volunteer receives the service credits."

Michigan, which offered its first services in January, has recruited young volunteers who can offer their credits to grandparents as Christmas or birthday presents. Miami is working with schools to recruit teen-age volunteers.

Widow of Alzheimer patient helps others

Associated Press

For eighteen years, Hilda Pridgeon has been on the front lines of a battle she knew she couldn't win. It's not a task she would wish on anyone else.

Alzheimer's disease gradually robbed her husband Al of his memory, his personality, and his health. He died Jan. 12 at the age of 65. Despite having a husband who needed constant care, two kids in college and a young teen-ager at home, Hilda Pridgeon accepted the hand life dealt her.

In 1979, she helped establish an Alzheimer's support group in Minneapolis-St. Paul, one of the first in the country. This after getting a job and earning a college degree at night. Later that year, she helped found the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association Inc., now based in Chicago.

Mrs. Pridgeon, 63, is still fighting, in hopes her experience can help other families overwhelmed by the needs of a stricken relative.

Mrs. Pridgeon now is on the association's board, chairs two of its committees, and is a member of two others. She also spends a good deal of time speaking to some of the 200 local chapters that run 1,500 support groups.

She credits much of her success to her employer, Control Data Corp., which gave her a year's social service leave, with full pay and benefits, to organize the Alzheimer's groups. It also let her use company resources at night.

There's no cure, only treatment, for the brain disorder that affects more than 2.5 million Americans over age 65. No one has proven what causes it.

"If this was a disease that affected people between 18 and 30, we would have had an answer by now," Mrs. Pridgeon said. "It's been neglected because of the age of its victims.

"Life is — and should be — precious no matter what age."

Alzheimer's is only positively identified by a brain autopsy. Due to the possibility it might have some genetic link, Mrs. Pridgeon urges families to consider having an autopsy performed when a relative dies.

"If you don't arrange for a brain autopsy ahead of time, it doesn't happen."

Alzheimer's causes a progressive loss of memory and mental abilities, and affects between 5 percent and 7 percent of those over 65, as well as an unknown number of younger people. The association believes the figures are conservative since they are based on the 1980 census and don't include younger victims.

The current estimates wouldn't have included Al Pridgeon, who began showing symptoms at 47. He was diagnosed as having Alzheimer's three years later.

"At the very onset of the disease, there's the terrible strain of not knowing what's wrong," Mrs. Pridgeon said. "Very often there's the short-term memory loss — they can't remember appointments, agreements, promises. It's very frustrating, it leads to all sorts of arguments."

Alzheimer's is financially as well as emotionally devastating, she said. "Spousal impoverishment is a huge issue. It's amazing that the richest country in the world can't take care of its older people without impoverishing their spouses. People are going through their resources very rapidly."

A report by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment, titled "Losing a Million Minds," estimated that in 1987 it cost around $40 billion to care for Alzheimer's patients in the United States.

As someone who knows first-hand about the strain, Hilda Pridgeon reminds other families not to forget their own mental and physical well-being.

"It's long-term grieving. You go through these stages again and again. It never stops. But you have to go on living, too. It's not a short illness. You must go on with your life as they go downhill."

Elderly population setting health care precedents

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the Census Bureau is done officials expect to report there are more people aged 65 and over than there were Americans at the time of the Civil War.

The 1860 Census found 31.4 million Americans. The 1990 count is expected to find 31.6 million people 65 and older, 13.2 million of those being 75 and older. The 1830 Census counted 12.9 million people.

"There is no historical precedent for the aging of our population. We are in the midst of a new social phenomenon," wrote Beth J. Soldo and Emily M. Agree in "America's Elderly," a study for the private Population Reference Bureau. "We cannot foresee all the repercussions, implications, or social changes stemming from the presence of so many older persons and the aging of society."

People born in 1900 could expect to live 47 years. Life expectancy passed 50 in 1908, topped 60 in the 1930s and hit 70 in the '60s. Americans born today can expect to live about 75 years, thanks largely to better medical care.

The elderly comprise about 12.2 percent of the population. Well over half are women, 70 percent say they're healthy and three-fourths own their homes. They also spend a greater percentage of what are often fixed incomes on food, housing and health care than younger people.

But take a closer look.

By definition the elderly are 65 and up, but the mix is changing. In 1960, 6.1 percent of the population was 65 to 74 and 3.1 percent was 75 and older. By 1987, 7.2 percent were 65 to 74 and 5 percent were 75 or older.

A half-century ago, men and women comprised equal numbers of the elderly, but women began living longer in the 19[illegible] as pregnancy-and childbirth-related deaths began declining. Women now live an average 78.3 years, compared with 71.5 years for men, and comprise 59.2 percent of those age 65 and over.

As of 1988, 10.3 percent of all American males were 65 or older, compared with 14.3 percent of all women.

"The problems of old age in America are largely the problems of women. Six out of every 10 older Americans are women," said Dr. Robert Butler, a former director of the National Institute on Aging.

"In general, older women have fewer financial assets and, because they typically outlive their spouses, are more dependent on adult children and formal health care services," Agree and Soldo wrote.

And that poses a problem, with the need for home care for many elderly rising just as social change threatens to undermine the traditional source of that care, says researcher Alice T. Day. In a 1985 Population Reference Bureau report, she estimated 6.6 million elderly people needed long-term care but only 1.4 million were in nursing homes. The rest were helped by families. But small families mean fewer young people to care for the elderly and most of them face other obligations, including jobs.

Time travel not likely, many scientists say

By JAMIE RENO
Copley News Service

Time travel, a time-honored concept in literature and films, has long captured the imagination with its fantastic and preposterous implications.

H.G. Wells tapped a less technologically advanced culture's capacity to wonder in 1895 with his classic volume, "The Time Machine," which in this century was made into a movie that was a critical and popular success.

And recently setting the all-time big-screen box-office record for biggest non-summer weekend — and still collecting millions — is "Back to the Future Part II," the frenetic sequel to the popular film about a capricious scientist and a carefree kid who, in a Delorean with a Mr. Coffee carburetor, cross barriers of time and space the way you and I cross the street.

But fiction is fiction, Hollywood is Hollywood. Mention time travel in the company of an astrophysicist, and you're still likely to elicit a cynical scoff.

Even with all that has been learned about time and space, from Einstein's theory of relativity to a provocative new theory suggesting the existence in space of "wormholes" — supposed tunnels through space-time (the combined mathematical representation of space and time) that link distant regions of the universe, many experts still view time travel as nothing more than naive science fiction — fodder for novelists and filmmakers, not physicists.

"The general feeling is that if it (time travel) were really possible, we'd probably see it happening somewhere in nature, and we simply do not see it there," Don Cottrell, a professor of physics at San Diego State University, said flatly. "Time travel is highly, highly unlikely."

SIGNIFICANTLY, COTTRELL would not go as far as to say that it is impossible.

"It has not been scientifically ruled out, no," he said.

The wormhole theory perhaps suggests that time travel is possible.

If you imagine the curved surface of an apple as space-time, a worm tunneling through the pulp obviously can cover a shorter distance between two points than by inching over the surface. This same principle would apply to a wormhole.

If you could travel inside one of these wormholes, which, proponents of the theory suggest, connect distant spots in space, you could take a shortcut from point A to point B, creating your own "time machine."

"If you consider Einstein's theory of relativity, and the possibility that wormholes exist, time travel does in fact seem possible, if not probable," said Art Huffman, a lecturer in the physics department at the University of California at Los Angeles. "But we're talking about the manipulation of super-dense matter, and we do not have the technology in the present to test such a thing."

"WE DON'T yet fully understand the structure of space-time," offered George Fuller, an astrophysicist at UC San Diego. "I have my doubts, however, that a macroscopic object (visible to the naked eye) could travel as fast as the speed of light. And even if such a device could be constructed, which is very doubtful, humans could not survive such a trip. I just don't see time travel, at least as we think of it, with a human being actually going forward or back in time, as a real possibility."

If time travel were proved possible in future civilizations, wouldn't we have already been paid a visit from someone?

"I agree that it would seem that if time travel were possible, we would have seen people from the future visiting the past, and as far as we can tell, the past has not been tampered with," said Huffman. "Surely, if time travel were possible, there are people who would want to go back and change the past, to kill Hitler or some such thing.

"Some theories say that, no matter when or how you constructed a time machine, you would not be able to go back to a time before it was built," he said, admitting that all of this consuming introspection "is confusing even to me sometimes."

The implications of time travel, of course, are far-reaching; they threaten the very foundations of knowledge. Consider: If you could travel in time, you could change history, even to the point that you were never born. That, for many, must sound like an unimaginably frightening concept.

BUT THE law of causality precludes the possibility of traveling to the past to kill your own grandfather (which current physics casually refers to as the "grandfather paradox"), because that would alter the present — not to mention the fact that it challenges the nature of free will.

Huffman suggested candidly that the scientific community just hasn't yet come to terms with these far-reaching implications.

"Time travel's a very controversial thing," Huffman said, "and that's probably why there aren't too many people out there willing to address what the possibility of time travel means. 'Back to the Future' takes a fun look at it, but if it were really possible, it would change our perception of the universe, change reality."

DEAR ABBY

Weekend guest wearing welcome out

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband, Ray, and I have been married for almost a year. He is a farmer and works at least 12 hours a day, so all he feels like doing afterward is eating, taking a shower and going to bed. He has two weekends off a month, and that's really the only time for us to spend together.

Van Buren

Here is the problem: Ray's friend Jeff comes over every Saturday night. Jeff is 25, single and living with his parents. I wouldn't mind Jeff's coming over for a normal visit, but when we are ready to go to bed, Jeff is still here. Sometimes he falls asleep on our couch watching TV, and we hate to wake him, so he sleeps there all night. That means when I get up to fix breakfast on Sunday morning, Jeff is here, so I have to include him. Not only that, but he hangs around all day Sunday. Ray and I never seem to have time alone together.

I've asked Ray to talk to Jeff about this, but he's afraid of hurting Jeff's feelings and spoiling their friendship of many years.

Abby, I'm at the end of my rope. Please tell me what to do. — FED UP IN VIRGINIA

DEAR FED UP: Your husband must be a medical miracle — he is walking around with no guts and no brain. Insist that Ray tell Jeff he should not come to your home without calling to find out if it's convenient. And when he does come, do not permit him to sleep there. If he dozes off, wake him up and send him home!

DEAR ABBY: I am at my wit's end trying to deal with a painful family situation. My son has been married for 12 years. He and his family are included in all of the family gatherings at the homes of his brothers and sisters.

Abby, not once in 12 years has he invited anyone from his side of the family to his home for anything special. He and his wife are always entertaining her parents and relatives.

This hurts. Please help us deal with this situation. — FRUSTRATED MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Twelve years is a long time to suffer in silence. What are your options? "Remind" your son that it's time he and his wife reciprocated the hospitality they have accepted from his brothers and sisters. Or, continue to nurse your wounds while the hurt and resentment build.

I opt for a good-humored, timely nudge in the form of a "Well, Sonny, you'd better order that turkey now, because next Thanksgiving it's going to be your turn to have the family." (And don't let him off the hook. Around the 15th of November, call him up and ask him if you can bring the cranberry sauce.)

DEAR ABBY: The following is something that has been on my mind for a long time and will not go away. In this machine age, as a result of war and accidents, a great many men and women have lost a right hand — or arm.

The problem occurs when someone wishes to shake hands with that person, and offers his or her right hand to a one-armed person who has only a left hand. Nothing can make a one-armed person feel more awkward than trying to shake hands that way.

There is no reason why a person with two hands should not offer his or her LEFT hand to a person who has only a left hand. I happen to be one of those persons, and I avoid shaking hands whenever possible because it's usually such an awkward affair.

Abby, if you print my letter, it will be read by thousands who will pass this information on to others and many will benefit from it. It could save a lot of embarrassment. Sign me ... "LEFTY"

DEAR LEFTY: Consider it done. (Let's shake on that!)

Wedding bells! Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. AT WIT'S END

Impossible dream makes everyday life bearable

By ERMA BOMBECK

While I was waiting in line at a convenience store, the woman in front of me giggled to a friend, "Hey Deb, did you hear Tom Cruise is a bachelor again?" Deb turned and said, "You know what that means, Sandy? There's hope for us."

Bombeck

I watched Sandy balance a baby in one arm and a gallon of milk and a carton of ice cream in the other. Deb had a toddler who clung to her leg like ivy climbing the walls at Harvard. I thought, "Hope for what?"

This had to be the height of optimism. This was as good as fantasy got. Driving home, I couldn't shake the absurdity of imagining what the odds were of Tom Cruise stopping off at a convenience store in Phoenix and whisking away Deb and Sandy. Were they crazy?

Then I remembered the lottery ticket I had just purchased. What were the odds of those little pingpong balls coming up with the ages of our family? I remembered this morning when all the cars in the family started — all five of them. That has never happened before, and if someone had told me that five motors would turn over without one of them needing a jump-start, I'd have laughed.

I guess we all dream in the darkness of a theater and in the secret corners of our minds. If we didn't, then how come all those servicemen who yearn for home have Kim Basinger's calendar hanging over their bunks instead of a picture of Sara Lee pound cake?

I used to fantasize about giving an Amway party and the only person who showed up was Robert Redford, but it didn't last long. When I told my husband it was over, he said, "Why? It sounds great." I told him I was nine years older than Redford. He said, "For crying out loud, it's a fantasy. What difference does it make?"

I didn't want to tell him I also hadn't turned in an order in three months. It had to stop. How could I expect a man to understand whose idea of a fantasy was to dream of being a contestant on "Jeopardy" and answering every question under Greek mythology?

Men probably don't sit around lip-syncing records. I was alone in the house one day and put on a cassette of Liza Minnelli singing "New York, New York." I had every move down. As I was bowing for the applause, my head resting on my knee, I saw another pair of feet belonging to one of the kids. I pretended my back went out and crawled to the couch.

We all feel a little foolish pretending, but if Deb and Sandy believe that Tom Cruise will pull up in front of a convenience store in Phoenix and ask them to split a burrito, who am I to take the smiles off their faces?

Professor fits all needed math facts on one page

N.Y. Times News Service

TEMPE, Ariz. — Come forward, you digit-ducking cowards, you flagrant finger-counters, you mutton heads at math. Alvin Swimmer has got your number. On one page — a single, solitary page — he has put all you need to know about the topic you loathe.

Math, says Swimmer, is so overloaded with overbearing techno-jargon that it can be boiled down to a handful of simple formulas that fit neatly on a single page.

And that page happens to be the last page of his soon-to-be-published book, "The Key to Arithmetic," a title he hopes becomes the last word on basic math.

"Most people who fear or don't like mathematics think there are millions of laws, and there aren't," Swimmer said. "It all can fit on one page."

He put together the pagelong summary after teaching a summer course called Theory of Arithmetic for about 10 years. The class was aimed at prospective elementary school teachers, but Swimmer discovered his students knew little about arithmetic.

"It turns out a lot of people who go into elementary education do so because they think they won't need a lot of math," he said. "But then they're the first ones to expose our children to mathematics, and their fear comes through."

So, Swimmer threw out the textbook he was using and wrote his own handbook. In it, the basic laws, definitions and theorems for arithmetical calculations are outlined.

"Arithmetic is mostly common sense, but when you first see the formulas, it's scary," said Swimmer, who has taught at Arizona State University for about 26 years. "It can be intimidating."

Apprehension about math is perpetuated by tedious and boring math classes in elementary school, Swimmer said. When teachers teach arithmetic right out of textbooks, it leaves little room for creativity.

"A lot of the people who are training our kids have no comprehension of what the subject is about," Swimmer said. "They can't waver one little bit or they don't know what to do. Their fear prevents them from allowing anything creative to come out. There has to be some sort of inspirational spark besides the dry facts."

A trend in elementary schools that has grade-school children punching out arithmetic problems on calculators is making it easy for students to avoid learning basic theories and laws.

"If students can get an answer in a few seconds from a battery-operated machine, why learn it at all?" Swimmer said. "I have nothing against calculators, but if it's going to have any meaning, you have to get some internal experience."

People's aversion to math mystifies Swimmer.

"I honestly like math. It's marvelous. You couldn't understand how marvelous it is until you get into it," Swimmer said. "It's just a mental stimulation that you can't get anywhere else."

Swimmer said he has always enjoyed math although he didn't know he could actually make a living as a mathematician until he was a junior in college.

"My brother said, 'Why don't you become a mathematician?'" Swimmer said. "I didn't even know what one was."

Now he believes in teaching arithmetic to adults, helping them better their math skills so they can cope with new technology, such as computers.

"The world is becoming more and more mathematized, but fewer and fewer people can handle it," Swimmer said. "Most of the time, it stems from a weak background in arithmetic."

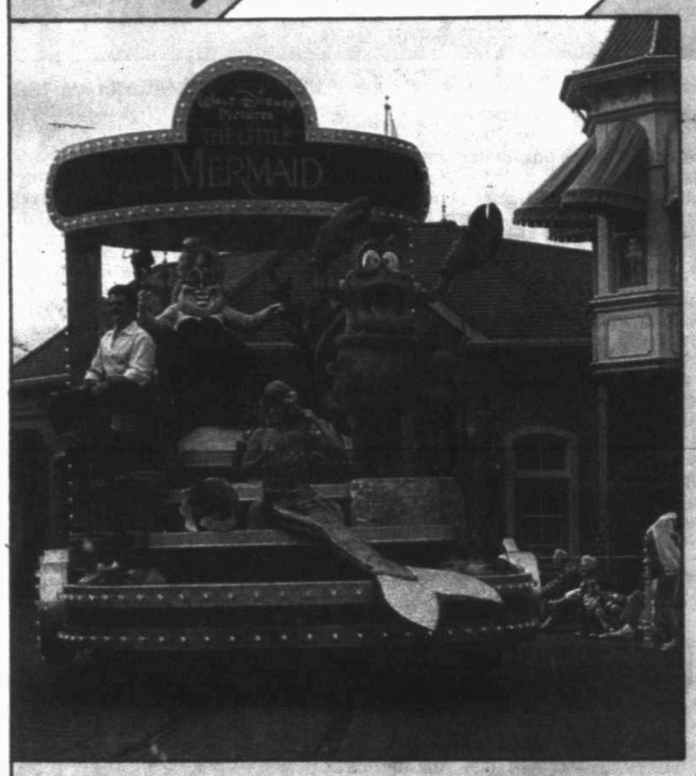
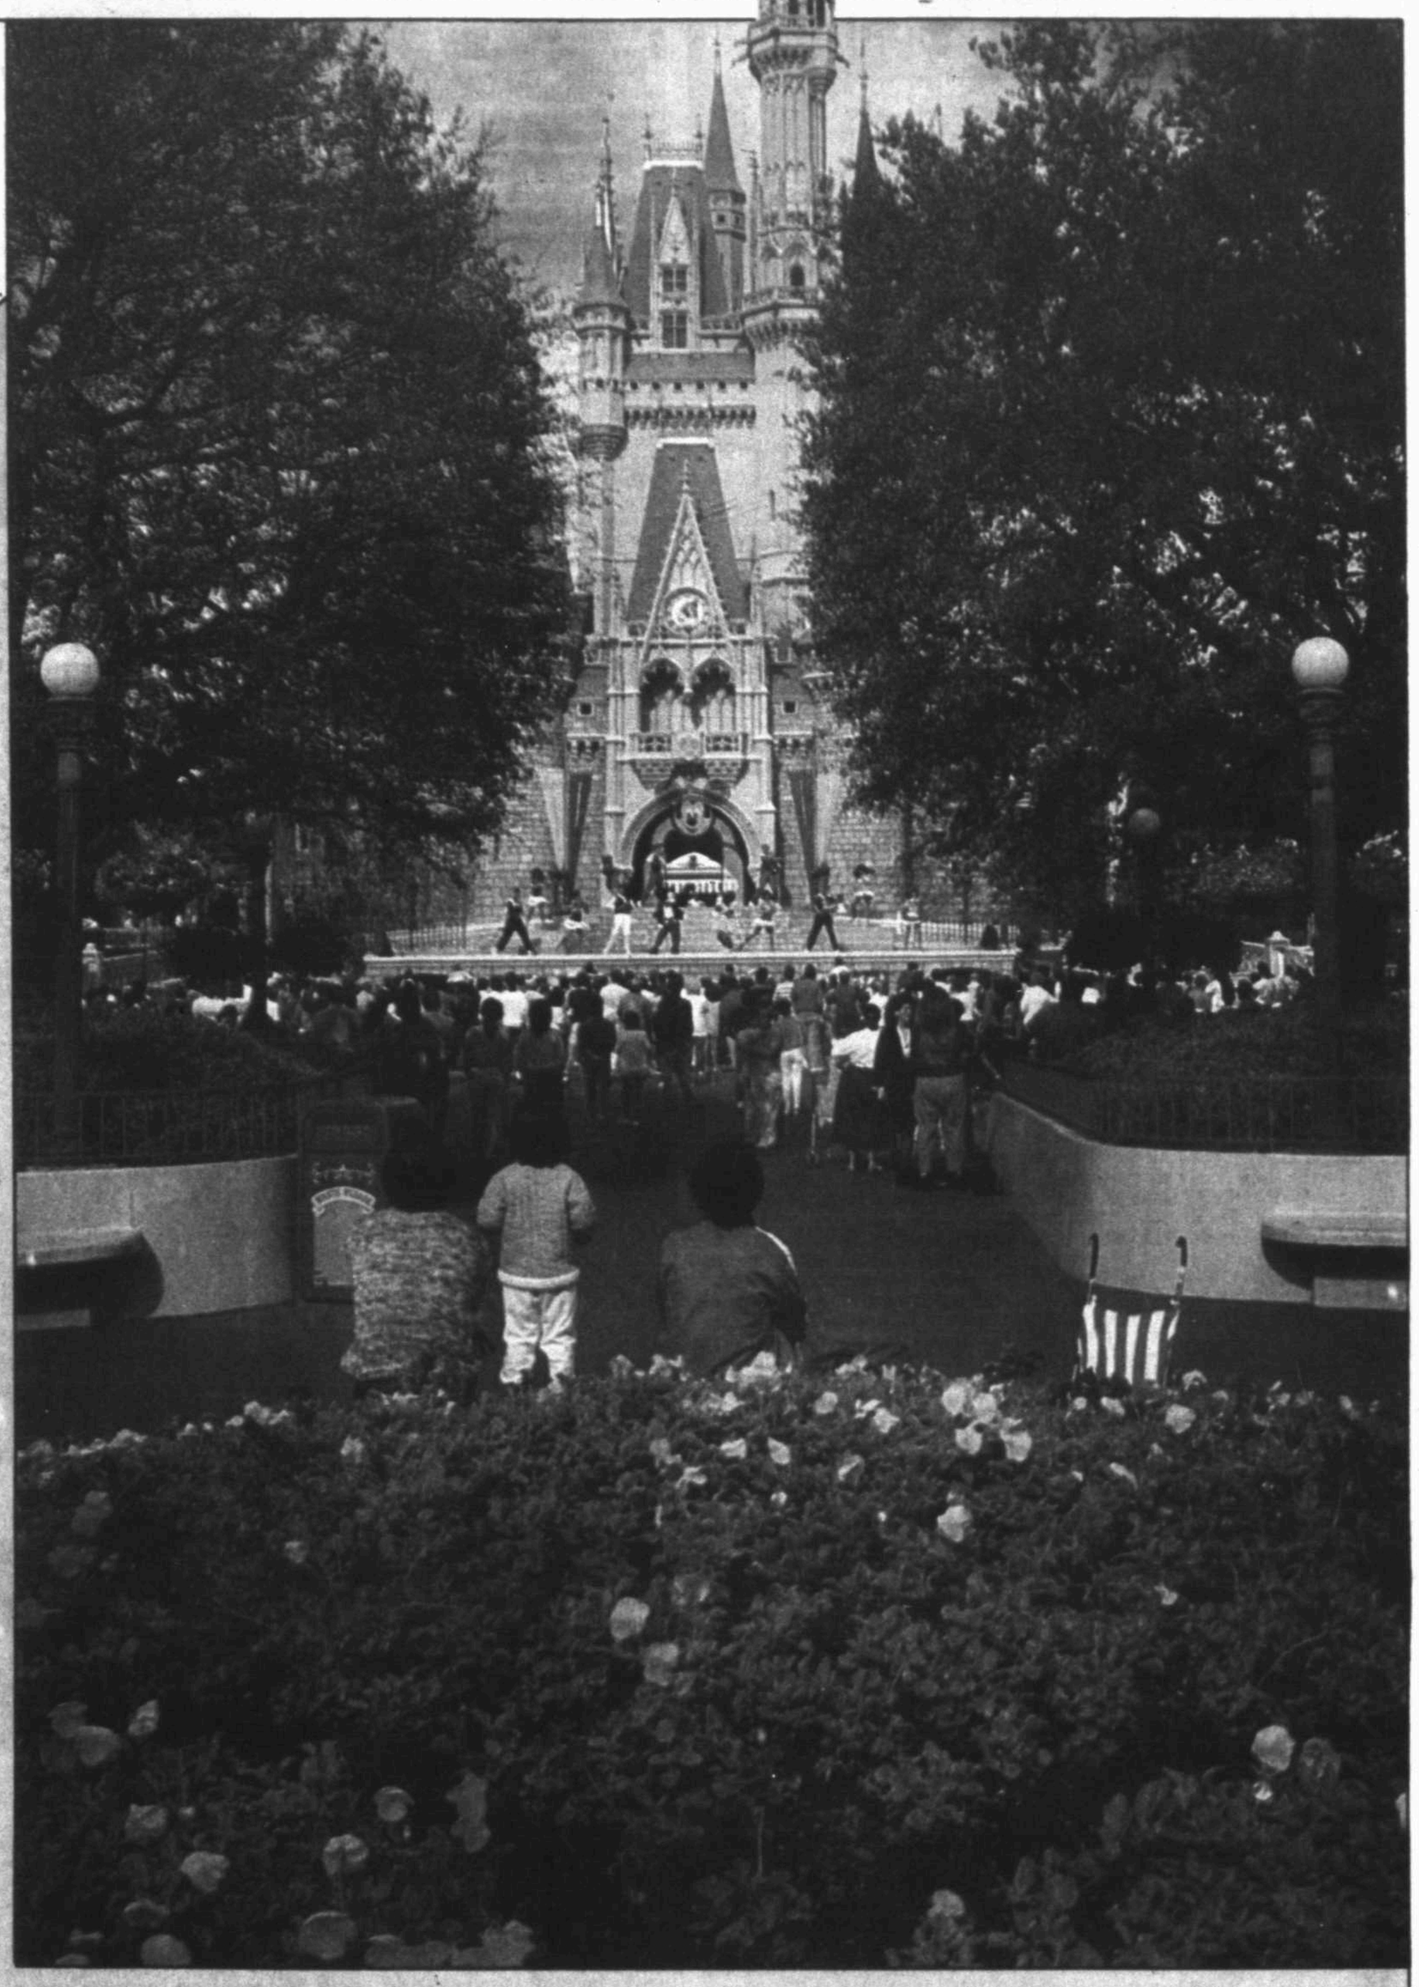
It's MAGIC





LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — When most people hear the phrase "Disney World," what they think of is the area called the Magic Kingdom.

The 18-year-old amusement park is the oldest of the three major parks in this 43-square-mile Central Florida vacation empire.

Although it is only one element of the far-flung, ever-growing entertainment complex, the Magic Kingdom remains the heart of Disney World.

The 100 acres where a 62-year-old mouse named Mickey reigns supreme has its 45 adventures divided into six "lands" around a central hub — Main Street USA — lined with boutiques, theaters and shops.

At the end of Main Street, Cinderella's Castle looms as the focal point of Fantasyland and a key navigational point for the entire park. In the forecourt of the castle, Mickey, Minnie and their friends perform song and dance shows several times daily.

One of the best times to "meet" costumed characters from dozens of Disney movies — including the "The Jungle Book" and "Snow White" to Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck shorts — is following the shows.

Surrounding the castle, Fantasyland spreads gracefully like a miniature Alpine village with fantasy-theme amusement rides such as It's a Small World, Mr. Toad's Wild Ride, Peter Pan's Flight, 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea and the Mad Tea Party.

A cable-mounted Skyway connects fantasy to Tomorrowland, where the centerpiece is Space Mountain. A roller coaster hurtling through the dark, Space Mountain is the wildest thrill ride in any of Disney's three Florida Parks and my favorite.

Other attractions in Tomorrowland seem a bit like forerunners of EPCOT center, which they were. Among these are Delta Airlines' Dreamflight; the American Journey, a 360-degree circle-vision travelogue; and the scenic WEDway PeopleMover, which offers a peek inside Space Mountain for the faint of heart.

Please see MAGIC, Page 2F

Magic Kingdom sights include, clockwise from top left: Ariel and her "Little Mermaid" friends lead off the afternoon parade; Cinderella's Castle is the one landmark visible from throughout the park; the castle court is center stage for several daily shows feature Mickey and Minnie; Winnie the Pooh and Tigger are parade favorites; Big Thunder Mountain Railroad is an entertaining ride through a whimsical Disney landscape. The futuristic monorail contrasts with the historic Grand Floridian Resort station.

The first of four major resort hotels to open at Disney World this year, the Swan, operated by Westin Hotels, sports four huge swans, each atop a hotel wing.

Disney decade destined to bring big expansions

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Corporate planners have dubbed the '90s the "Disney decade," ten years of massive expansion at all three Walt Disney World theme parks and surrounding developments.

The most ambitious plans revolve around the resort hotels. The first two — the Walt Disney World Swan, run by Westin Hotels, and the Walt Disney World Dolphin, run by Sheraton Hotels — introduce what Disney calls entertainment architecture, using bright pastel colors and animal figures and sculptures to set a Disney mood.

The Swan opened this winter, while the Dolphin is slated for a summer opening. The two facilities will add 2,277 rooms to the approximately 10,000 in Disney and non-Disney hotels in the resort complex.

Also nearing completion in the EPCOT Resort Area are the Yacht Club and Beach Club, with a total of 1,214 rooms, are expected to open by the end of 1990. The four-hotel complex southwest of EPCOT Center, is connected by bus, boat and the new International Gateway bridge.

All three theme parks are in line for major new attractions — a total of 29 are in various stages of planning and construction.

The newest park — Disney-MGM Studios — is growing the fastest with the slated addition of 16 shows and attractions over the next five years. This year alone, Here Come the Muppets, a stage and screen musical spectacular; the Magnificent Muppet All-Star Parade up Hollywood Boulevard; the Dick Tracy Revue showcasing movie makeup magic; Disney Channel Auditions; a studio revival of Let's Make a Deal; and the Honey, I Shrunk the Kids Adventure Zone are all scheduled to open.

Later in the decade, The Muppet Studios, will open in 1991 with the premiere of Kermit the Frog Presents MuppetVision 3-D. 1992 will bring the debut of Andrew Lloyd Webber's ("Phantom of the Opera," "Cats," "Evita" and "Jesus Christ Superstar") lavish, symphonic water-borne production of Noah's Ark, touted as "the most ambitious nighttime spectacle in Disney history."

The second major attraction in Muppet Studio land is expected in 1993, when The Muppets' Movie Ride is unveiled, offering Muppet-style interpretations of great silver screen scenes complete with heckling commentary by Statler and Waldorf — the balcony crumudgeons from the television show.

The next year will showcase another entirely new theme area in the park — Sunset Boulevard, home to Roger Rabbit's Hollywood simulator ride, Dick Tracy's Crime Stoppers and the historic Mickey's Movieland.

EPCOT's World Showcase is preparing for the arrival of two new national pavilions. The Soviet Union' towering onion-dome spires will add a distinctive new silhouette to the skyline.

The ice-covered adventure of the Matterhorn Mountain & Bobsled Ride will be the centerpiece of the picturesque new Switzerland pavilion.

In the park's Future World, Journeys in Space is planned to present visitors the ultimate thrill ride — space travel.

In the Magic Kingdom, the first additions will be new character shows this year, in preparation for the park's 20th Anniversary Party in 1991.

Longer range plans call for the addition of Splash Mountain, a five-story log flume ride through sets based on the movie "Song of the South" in 1993; Alien Encounter, a George Lucas-inspired intergalactic adventure in 1996; and the first addition to Fantasyland since the park's 1971 opening, an underwater adventure with The Little Mermaid.

With more than 11,000 rooms expected to be in place by year end, hotel development will not slow down in 1991 as plans move ahead on the 1,008-room Port Orleans Resort, offering French Quarter-style accommodations; 2,048 moderately priced rooms at the Deep South-themed Dixie Landings Resort; and the Boardwalk entertainment area and suites with a sand-and-sea atmosphere of Atlantic City, circa 1900.

As demand warrants, construction will begin on Mediterranean Resort and Kingdom Suites Hotel, both near the Magic Kingdom; the Wilderness Lodge and Buffalo Junction Resort at Fort Wilderness; two 1,000-room Hollywood-theme hotels are slated in the EPCOT Resort Area; and a 500-unit shared-ownership resort.

MAGIC

Next door to Tomorrowland is the newest area, which premiered in 1988 in time for the "big cheese's" 60th birthday. Currently called Mickey's Birthdayland, it will be renamed Mickey's Starland later this year.

Designed for the park's youngest visitors, Birthdayland attractions include live stage shows, a petting zoo and playground area.

Conversely, probably the most adult-oriented of the lands is Liberty Square, home to the Hall of Presidents and Haunted Mansion. The Audio-Animatronics and special effects in the two attractions are among Disney's best.

I say that because my favorite robotic characters populate the Pirates of the Caribbean ride through Adventureland. Also in this schizophrenic land — a mix of New Orleans/West Indies funk and African safari — are the Jungle Cruise and the Swiss Family Treehouse playground.

The pirates who line the canals have eyes that follow you along the journey and their fires of plunder look authentic. The jungle animals, from hippos to crocodiles and elephants along the cruise are likewise convincing.

From the tropics to the Old West, a visitor rounds the corner into Frontierland, the home of the kingdom's second roller coaster ride — Big Thunder Mountain Railroad. True to its Disney heritage, the emphasis is on humor and scenery rather than on high-speed thrills.

Nevertheless the tame ride of the "runaway mine train" is 3½ minutes of solid enjoyment.

Other than some fairly standard boat and minicar rides, that's most of the Magic Kingdom — except for several highly touted live and Audio-Animatronic musical shows.

Not being a big fan of singing robotic birds and bears or Wild West revues, in my two visits I've never caught the Country Bear Jamboree, the Diamond Horseshoe Jamboree, the Enchanted Tiki Birds or the Carousel of Progress. However, the first two are rated as "not to be missed," by Bob Sehlinger's "Unofficial Guide to Walt Disney World & EPCOT."

That leaves the enjoyable WDW Railroad that circles the Magic Kingdom on a quick, scenic ride that can help a first-time visitor on a leisurely visit gain their bearings.

Next to the Main Street train station is City Hall, headquarters for most visitor services including lost and found, foreign language assistance and in-park and area information.

One thing you need to find out at City Hall is the time of the Main Street Parade and if there will be an Electrical Parade on the day you are visiting.

Characters from Disney's newest feature-length movie "The Little Mermaid," lead off the current edition of the parade to the strains of the Golden Globe award-winning song "Under the Sea."

Singing and dancing characters on floats from more than a dozen Disney movies manage to enchant kids of all ages, if you'll pardon the cliche.

Toddlers look on with wide-eyed delight as Winnie the Pooh, Tigger and Eeyore stroll down the street, while parents "Chim Chim Cheree" along with Mary Poppins and grandparents tap their toes to the "Song of the South."

Soon the grumpiest visitors are happy, smiling and humming along by the grand finale — a rolling version of Cinderella's Castle with Dumbo the Flying Elephant, Mickey, Minnie and friends aboard.

Even transportation to and from the Magic Kingdom has a flair as visitors have a choice of land or sea.

The monorail system connects the kingdom with three resort hotels — the Contemporary, the Polynesian Village and the Grand Floridian Beach Resort — which surround the Seven Seas Lagoon, as well as with the Transportation and Ticket Center, where visitors arrive by bus from other WDW hotels and by tram from the massive parking lots.

Dreamflight offers visitors an informative trip through the history of aviation. One era visited is the age of the "flying boat" Martin M-130 clippers.

Take the plunge

Typhoon Lagoon, a nine-slide water park is one of five "minor" parks in Walt Disney World. It's a 50-foot drop for swimmers on the Humunga Kowabunga speed slide.

Make the most of vacation time, money

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

While there are no definitive answers to the best way to enjoy Walt Disney World, travelers from top professionals to rank novices are all willing to offer their opinion.

So, why should I be any different?

First, start planning early. Even with the abundance of rooms inside the vacation kingdom, six-month advance sell-outs are not unusual during peak seasons.

If it's possible plan your trip during off-peak times. January, May and mid-September through mid November are the slowest times of year, Disney offers Florida residents special prices to encourage visits in the slow seasons.

Orlando's 65,000 rooms — in and outside WDW — rank second only to New York City in terms of accommodations, so don't be discouraged if you can't get your first rooming choice, rooms are available almost anytime.

However, upon consideration, the higher prices commanded by the WDW hotels and premium rate of the "on the monorail" resorts, may be worth it in terms of comfort and convenience. Disney prices range from $69 at the Caribbean Beach Resort to well over $250 a night at the Grand Floridian and other resorts.

Guests in Disney resorts have day-long complementary access to bus, boat and monorail systems linking all points in the vacation empire — making a rental car unnecessary in most cases.

Give yourself plenty of time. The most popular ticket purchase arrangements are the four- and five-day, three-park passports which offer unlimited admissions to EPCOT, the Magic Kingdom and Disney-MGM Studios for the specified number of days. Current prices are $97 adult and $77 children under 10 for the four-day passport and $112 adult and $90 child for the five-day. Children under three are admitted free. Single day admission tickets, good atonly one park each day cost $29 for adults and $23 for children 3-10.

The sights at Disney World aren't limited to the three major theme parks.

Last summer, nighttime entertainment took its initial bow inside Disney World at Pleasure Island, a six-acre complex of seven nightclubs, a dozen shops, six restaurants and a 10-screen cineplex.

There are also two water parks — Typhoon Lagoon and River Country — Discovery Island, a certified zoological preserve and aviary; Disney Village Marketplace; three championship golf courses, tennis courts, cycling and jogging trails, boating, sailing and water skiing.

Water enthusiasts find an abundance of watercraft at the Walt Disney World Caribbean Beach Resort's Barefoot Bay Boat Yard, which offers everything from small sailboats and runabouts to "water-cycles" and paddle boats.

Theme park offers variety of sights

By JAYNE CLARK
N.Y. Times News Service

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — A man in his 40s, balding and revealing the beginnings of a paunch, stretched out on a soft, white blanket of sand, and lazily watched his two small children playing tag with the gently rolling surf.

"Ah, the Caribbean," he sighed, with such palpable satisfaction you could almost reach out and touch it. "Tomorrow, maybe I'll take the kids to Norway."

The tourist was reclining on the shores of a man-made lagoon — a Walt Disney World, man-made lagoon, to be precise.

After all, where else but in Walt Disney World could travelers take such fanciful leaps from one locale to another?

Go ahead. Sneer if you must. Say what you will about theme parks being for adventureless souls who don't mind fast food and slow lines.

But, the fact is this land appeals to people who desire a glimpse of the present, past and future, and maybe even grab a quick thrill or two while they're at it. And they want it all in a clean, safe, predictable manner.

WALT DISNEY World, the granddaddy of theme parks (if not in age, then certainly in sheer girth), delivers on all counts with remarkable efficiency and style that's bound to impress even those who aren't amused by amusement parks.

And since Disney's is an ever-expanding world, even repeat visitors will find new places to explore.

In October, the park unveiled the Wonders of Life pavilion in the Future World section of Epcot Center. Future World's ninth pavilion focuses on health and fitness themes, but its key attraction is a high-speed thrill ride called Body Wars that just might make you sick.

Other recent additions at Disney World make it possible for visitors to spend the morning basking on a tropical beach, the afternoon barnstorming through the history of aviation, and the evening dancing in a trendy nightspot.

One aspect of life at Disney World that's bound to appeal both to world-weary travelers and to those who prefer hanging around their own back yards, is that getting around the park is simple. Buses and monorails are clean, safe and predictably on-schedule, just as Disney World visitors expect them to be.

By the way, Southern Californians who think they have seen it all in Disneyland take note: Disney World's Magic Kingdom is but a tiny fiefdom in this vast land.

Disney's central Florida spread covers 28,000 acres (6,600 acres have been developed) and employs enough people (28,000) to make a good-size town.

Besides the Magic Kingdom, Walt Disney World is made up of Epcot Center (with its Future World and World Showcase pavilions), Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park, River Country, Discovery Island, Typhoon Lagoon and Pleasure Island.

And besides that, the park has more hotels and restaurants than we care to count.

THE DISNEY people recommend at least four days to take it all in. Four- and five-day passports are the best value. (They include admission to the Magic Kingdom, Epcot and Disney-MGM and are priced at $97 for adults and $77 for children for the four-day pass, and $112 for adults and $90 for children for the five-day pass. Single-day passes, good for one of the three parks, cost $29 for adults and $23 for children. All prices are subject to tax. Rates for children are available to those age 10 and under.) Bring your wallet. Fun isn't cheap.

Among the newest attractions to spring up at Walt Disney World are:

■ Typhoon Lagoon: A 56-acre water park that Disney chairman Michael Eisner swears will be "the standard by which all future water parks will be measured."

Serious water-park aficionados will probably agree. The park has surfing and snorkeling facilities, water slides and three different rafting adventures for rafters of varying ability.

In the middle of the park is "Mount Mayday," a towering mountain crowned by a shipwreck perched 95 feet in the air.

The mountain is ribboned with spiraling water slides that propel the daring at speeds of up to 25 mph. A 2½-acre wave-making lagoon spits out waves that rise up to six feet.

Snorkelers can dip into Shark Reef, a 362,000-gallon saltwater pool stocked with a variety of tropical fish and nurse sharks.

Those who prefer to remain semi-dry can try one of three rafting trips gauged at varying degrees of wildness.

Admission to Typhoon Lagoon (separate from other Disney World attractions) is $17.50 for adults and $14 for children ages 3 to 9.

■ THE CREATION of Pleasure Island, an enclave of nightclubs, restaurants and shops, means Disney World's inhabitants don't have to leave the kingdom in search of after-hours diversions.

Access to shops and restaurants on the island is free (not including what you buy or eat, of course), but entrance to the seven themed nightclubs is $14.95 for admission to all of them, $10 for a three-club admission and $6 to get into one club.

Club themes range from country-western at the Neon Armadillo to hyperactive teen at the no-alcohol-allowed Videopolis East. There's roller skating and live music at XZFR Rockin' RollerDrome and migraine-inducing strobe lights at Mannequins Dance Palace.

At the Comedy Warehouse, a troupe of helpful, well-scrubbed, smiling Disney actors poke fun at other helpful, well-scrubbed, smiling Disney employees.

A favorite: The Adventurers Club, a cozy mishmash of dusty, overstuffed couches, masks and trophies. A group of slightly-off-the-beam regulars mingle with paying guests, inviting them to "meet me in the library for my next lecture."

Others offer bits of wisdom like this one: "Some days you eat the bear; some days the bear eats you. But always be dressed for the hunt."

■ Dreamflight, the latest Magic Kingdom attraction, takes visitors on a flight of fancy through aviation history.

Highlight of the trip: a ride down a runway that makes you feel if you're traveling at 300 mph.

For more information, contact Walt Disney World Co., P.O. Box 10,000, Lake Buena Vista, Fla. 32830; (407) 824-4321.

Renegade spirit prevails in Florida Keys

By LAURIE WERNER
Copley News Service

For centuries the Florida Keys have been the refuge of rascals.

Buccaneers, rum runners, writers — all have dropped out of civilization here.

One reason is the supremely laid-back attitude of the natives — no one gets too judgmental about anything around here.

Another reason, though, is the location.

This wispy string of islands extending down the Atlantic from Miami was pretty isolated before a railroad was built in 1912 (then destroyed by a hurricane in 1935) and a highway constructed in 1938.

The southernmost island, Key West (known as Cayo Hueso or Island of the Bones by Spanish conquistadores a couple of centuries back) was almost completely on its own. You had to be pretty desperate to chase someone down there.

These days, it's a bit easier to get to Key West — jets do fly in and the modern Overseas Highway goes all the way down — but the desperado spirit still prevails. It's even encouraged. After all, Key West itself is a municipal outlaw; in dispute with the U.S. government over Border Patrol roadblocks to search for illegal aliens and drugs, it officially seceded from the Union in 1982. It's known to its residents as the Conch Republic.

CNS Photo

A registered national historic landmark, Hemingway House is now a museum open to the public and one of Key West, Fla.'s most popular attractions.

TO CELEBRATE itself, the republic hauls out some conch, a white shellfish mollusk, for a conch-blowing contest (not exactly mellifluous but fun) during the Old Island Days festival, running from Jan. 1 to May 23.

The fest, which gets a bit rowdy (especially when another festival, Conch Republic Days, takes place concurrently in April) does have its sedate moments, too: chief among them, the house tours of the distinctive shingled gingerbread houses. Residents prune their hibiscus and bougainvillea, drape their houses with lights and invite visitors in.

To see one of the island's most famous houses, though, you don't have to wait for this celebration. At 907 Whitehead St. is Hemingway House, which the famed author bought in 1931 and sold just before his death in 1961.

The furnishings that "Papa" Hemingway and his second wife Pauline collected all over the world are preserved here just as he left them; the office where he wrote "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "A Farewell to Arms" and "Snows of Kilimanjaro" has been left intact as well. So has the swimming pool, the first in Key West.

As the story goes, Hemingway was so stunned when his wife told him that the pool cost $20,000 (this was the '30s, remember) that he threw a penny on the ground, yelling, "Here. Take the last penny I've got."

She did and framed it in cement. That penny is still there, as are approximately 40 to 45 cats, many of them six-toed descendants of the Hemingway originals (the house is open 9 to 5 daily).

HEMINGWAY FANS should come to Key West on July 21 for the five-day festival in honor of his birthday. (Highlights: the billfish tournament and Hemingway Look-Alike Contest.)

Fans can remember Hemingway during the rest of the year, though, by bar-hopping on Duval Street, the island's lively, if slightly seedy, main drag.

Hemingway hung out at Sloppy Joe's at 428 Greene St., just off Duval, and its successor at that site, Capt. Tony's. (There is another Sloppy Joe's at 201 Duval but it has the name, not the history.)

Capt. Tony's is a must for Key West nightlife, anyway, although not for the faint of heart — raunchy, loud behavior is the way to go here. If you're lucky, you'll get to meet the captain himself, a roguish local character who, after repeated tries, recently became Key West's mayor.

Another prime night spot is the Pier House at 1 Duval, where the street meets the Atlantic. Start off the evening just down the pier at Sunset at Mallory Square, a nightly carnival (with fire-eaters, performing house cats and other eccentric acts) to celebrate the sun going down, then go to the Pier House for dinner.

The fish here is outrageously fresh: conch chowder, clams on the half shell, yellowtail in saffron sauce. For dessert, have the area's signature pie, Key Lime — creamy, slightly tart and yellow, not green. Then if you're up for it, go dancing at the top harbor-view deck. (If you really want to be in the center of action, The Pier House also has hotel rooms: doubles $185 to $325; (305) 296-4600.)

If the downtown area is just too noisy, though (it often is), you may want to retreat to the other side of the island, to a resort of some elegance and calm. Marriott's Casa Marina was built in 1921, from plans begun by Standard Oil co-owner and railroad tycoon Henry Flagler, and it looks like a grand hotel used to receiving wealthy visitors.

THE LOBBY is a vast expanse of polished wood — floor, desk and pillars — decorated with Oriental rugs, bronze ceiling fans and wicker peacock chairs; rooms also are large, and are reproduced, in the main house, with a period feel. Many have water views (1500 Reynolds St., Key West, Fla. 33040; (305) 296-3535; doubles $195 to $295).

On Sundays, the entire island seems to gather at Henry's, the main restaurant, for the epic outdoor brunch. You're faced with table after table of omelets, pancakes, sausages, muffins, clams and oysters on the half shell, seafood salads, roast meats, desserts. If you're a glutton with no sense of shame, this spread is for you (brunch: $22.95).

You can walk it off by checking out Duval Street by day for the shops, or some of the area museums — Mel Fisher's at 200 Greene St., in which treasures rescued from the Spanish galleon Atocha are displayed is a popular one (open daily 10 to 5). Or you can stay seated and get an overview of the area on the Old Town Trolley.

After some time in Key West, though, the crowds can get to you; you may want to go north in pursuit of sustained quiet. About 28 miles away, at Mile Marker 28.5 is the deluxe and leisurely Little Palm Island. Reached only by the island's launch, the island is utterly remote and truly luxurious: romantic, pastel-decorated suites contained in South Seas-style thatched roof huts come complete with Jacuzzis, decks with water views and hammocks.

For activities, you can swim in the island's pool or take to the water for sailing, fishing or snorkeling and scuba diving in the majestic coral reef at nearby Looe Key ($435 a night with all meals — sophisticated, excellent meals — and activities; Route 4, Box 1036, Little Torch Key, Fla. 33042; (305) 872-2524).

FOR A unique experience, although one that has been the subject of major controversy recently, you might try for a swim with the dolphins. There are several dolphin arenas in the Keys but the one that seems most humane because it's a research and care facility, not a commercial, performing circus, is the Dolphin Research Center on Grassy Key near Marathon.

Dolphins who have been stressed out in other places come here to recuperate and to live in a natural environment, not a tank. Under carefully controlled conditions, several swimmers at a time are allowed (at $50 a head) to swim with these gentle creatures and once you have done it, you never will forget it (Dolphin Research Center, Mile Marker 59; (305) 743-9102).

If catching fish is more your game, though, continue north to Islamorada. The town has proclaimed itself the Sportfishing Capital of the World, a title obviously confirmed when impassioned angler George Bush stopped by pre-inauguration to try his luck.

DRIVING NORTH from Islamorada, the roadside stores get a bit tacky and the wide-open views of the Atlantic start to close in. But if you stop in Key Largo, you can have one more rendezvous with nature before heading back toward civilization in Miami.

John Pennekamp State Park has a spectacular coral reef with 40 types of coral and 300 species of fish, available for viewing by either glass-bottom boat, scuba or snorkeling. If you go, you'll never want to get out of the water (for information: (305) 451-1621).

Caribbean offers vacation paradises

Associated Press

As the winter cold bores through your bulky garments, thoughts inevitably turn to warm weather, to sandy beaches, to the Caribbean.

You remember the Caribbean — that 1-million-square-mile region of clear blue skies, white-sand beaches and tall palm trees swaying atop islands that got in the way of Hurricane Hugo last September.

Hugo is long gone, but the Caribbean beaches remain — most of them, anyway. Many hotels and resorts increase their prices by 20 percent to 100 percent in mid-December and lower their rates again in mid-April. Hotels on Hugo-hit islands could find rooms harder to fill this winter and may offer inducements in the form of lower rates.

Here are some good bets for a Caribbean vacation, according to Changing Times magazine.

■ Best for Couples: Stay at a SuperClub in Jamaica called, appropriately, Couples. For seven nights and eight days at the Ocho Rios spot, an ocean-view room costs $2,130 until Dec. 21, $2,400 until Jan. 11 and $2,500 after that.

Remember, though, that if you feud with your partner, people will notice: The club and its activities are for couples exclusively: no singles, no children, no buddies.

Sandals runs Carlyle on the Bay, a less pricey competitor across the street from the beach at Montego Bay ($1,315 to $1,415 per week until Dec. 21, $1,465 to $1,570 thereafter).

The one-price concept used by Club Med, SuperClubs and Sandals has caught on big in the Caribbean. "People seem to love the values the clubs offer them," says Paul Santana, of Sunbird Vacations in San Jose, Calif. "They like the idea of having one fee take care of meals, tips, snorkeling, golf — whatever they might do on vacation."

■ Best for Budgets: The larger islands of the Caribbean — Jamaica, Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic — offer some of the best values, simply because their size allows for a greater range of accommodations. Jamaica, with more than 10,000 rooms at hotels, motels and inns, in particular represents a good value.

During the winter several small hotels close to the beach have double rooms for $70 a night or less, and even top resorts are less than $150 for a double a night (not including meals). Of these islands, only Puerto Rico was hit by Hugo, and virtually all hotels had reopened by early October.

■ Best for Shopping: The U.S. Virgin Islands, particularly St. Thomas, are the traditional stopping point for vacationers looking to buy linens, jewelry, electronics and other goods. Don't worry about currency conversions — official currency is the U.S. dollar here and in Puerto Rico.

St. Thomas was hard-hit by the storm, but authorities expect resorts to reopen most of their rooms. Not so lucky was St. Croix, where the storm took out the cruise-ship dock at Frederiksted and leveled a good bit of the rest of the island.

If you shop in the U.S. Virgin Islands, you can bring up to $800 worth of goods back into the U.S. duty-free — that's $3,200 for a family of four. The limit for the other Caribbean islands is $400 per person. There is no duty on goods bought in Puerto Rico.

Other good islands for shoppers: Curacao, St. Martin, Jamaica and Puerto Rico. In most shopping districts throughout the Caribbean, you won't have any trouble finding someone with whom you can negotiate in English. You may find imported goods selling for 20 percent less than in the U.S., but check out prices at home before you hit the islands, advises Changing Times magazine, since not every buy is a good buy.

■ Best for the Quiet High Ground: St. Kitts, population about 40,000, is only one of many islands with beautiful beaches. Unlike some of the larger and more-developed islands, though, it has a quiet nightlife.

Many of the guest houses on this island were damaged by Hugo, and 2,000 people were left homeless there and on nearby Nevis. But tourist-related facilities are expected to be repaired in time for visitors.

The daytime activities here will make you glad for the chance to rest at night. There are rain forest tours that take you up mountain trails and past waterfalls that dot the remarkably lush island. There's even a first-rate fortress with great sight lines: the Brimstone Hill Fortress, which sits 750 feet above the ocean and affords a view of the islands of St. Martin-St. Maarten, St. Barthlemy (St. Barts), Saba, St. Eustatius, Montserrat and Nevis.

■ Best for Nightlife: Jamaica and Puerto Rico, by virtue of their size, will please vacationers who enjoy a beautiful beach but aren't content unless they have access to nightlife, clubs and crowds. For the West Indies version of carnival, go to Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, anytime during the week before Ash Wednesday for seemingly nonstop calypso singing and dancing.

Carnival is celebrated on other islands at different times during the year. Good bets for carnival among smaller islands: Aruba, Antigua, Curacao and St. Martin.

Mall working to fill number of vacancies

Closings not due to local economy

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Shoppers strolling through Midland Park Mall are finding they have fewer stores to browse through.

However, mall management says that is only a temporary situation and is already hard at work filling those vacancies.

A number of closings in the last 60 days has lowered the mall's occupancy to approximately 81 percent.

Mall manager Cory Skinner says that, while vacancies are always a concern, "compared with the national average (of mall vacancies), we're comfortable with 81 percent."

A variety of factors caused the closures, he explains. Among them:

■ Several chains went bankrupt and closed large numbers of stores, not just ones in Midland.

■ Several stores decided not to renew their leases because they wanted to relocate or the parent company wanted to pull out of retailing. This isn't too surprising, says Skinner, noting that the mall will be 10 years old this year.

"Most of these closings were not because of something we did or because of the local economy; they were beyond our control," he points out.

He emphasizes that the mall and its owner, Melvin Simon & Associates is working aggressively to fill vacancies at the mall. He points out that a new hair salon, MasterCuts, has just opened, and construction is set to begin Monday on a new toy store, KayBee toys, and locally-owned Trendy Ts has just signed a permanent lease. He adds that two new stores opened in the Food Court in December.

In addition, "we have several irons in the fire," Skinner says, declining to elaborate until negotiations are completed.

His office continues to get inquires from prospective tenants, and Melvin Simon's leasing agent in charge

The ComfortCare tub, above, backed by Midlanders could become a major breakthrough in the senior market. Investor Kevin Blonkvist, left, engineered the venture capital project behind the tub, which allows safety and ease-of-entry for senior citizens.

Midland investors promote new tub

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A group of Midland investors is sinking money — not in an oil well — but in a bath tub. Really.

But not just any bath tub. The odd-looking ComfortCare tub which is being backed by 26 Midland investors is unlike any other bath tub on the market, and just may revolutionize the senior market.

A unique product aimed for the senior, home care and health markets. Investment Counselor Kevin Blonkvist, says he is hopeful the venture capital project will be as successful as other unique venture capital projects he has backed.

He notes that 34 million Americans now need assistance with bathing. "Just eight-tenths of one percent of the available market could mean $16 million to our company in five years," said Blonkvist, who is earning a reputation for putting together successful unique venture capital projects aimed at broad niches.

His last project — importing beaded tennis shoes from China — was so it gained him statewide publicity attention. Now sold in some of the finer apparel stores througout the nation and a number of fashion catalogs, Blonkvist says 8,000 pair of the stylish, hand-crafted shoes were sold this month. They sell for about $70 a pair.

Now, he is looking to repeat with the odd-looking bath but which fits into a conventional tub space and features a unique tilting system that provides easy accesss and safety to the disabled and elderly. The individual simply sits on a stationary seat, presses a button and the tub rotates up to surround the bather and seat.

Called the ComfortCare System, the tub was invented by Jack Zellner of Oxford, Mississippi, and was seven years in the making. Zellner says he hopes to make the company a premier company in the rapidly growing senior market.

"There is a critical need," says Zellner, "for custom designed products that will allow seniors to carry on a lifestyle with dignity."

Zellner said the bathroom was the most dangerous room of the house, and said many seniors over the age of 65 often have an intense fear of

Playing the S&L name game

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A new name has been added to the thrift rolls, and will be flying above the Permian Basin, as Olney Savings becomes AmWest and another Texas institution takes on an ambitious title.

How is the name game played? When a major corporation decides to switch out a 63 year old name for a more ambitious title, do all the officers go out to coffee and write names on napkins?

There may be some doodling, but it's actually a complicated and costly affair that goes far beyond that, according to Jeanne Prejean, a spokesman for AmWest Savings Association which recently changed its name from Olney Savings.

"First you start with a concept," said Prejean, "our chairman Don Adam is very patriotic and said he wanted something that incorporated America and the American flag."

However, a check of telephone books in Texas towns where the company operates revealed endless listings using the name "America." Said Prejean: "They ran from plumbing companies to secretarial services, and we were afraid of getting lost in 'America.'"

She says it took months of research before the final name and logo were decided upon. It was decided the flowing flag represented forward motion for a corporation in motion and that the brilliant colors spoke for themselves.

After deciding upon a name and design more months of costly and intense legal work were undertaken to make certain no one else was using the name.

She could not reveal the full cost of finding the new name, but despite the costly and serious research there were some hitches — all good natured.

"AmWest...sounds a lot like Amway...I'll take a car loan and a bottle of silver polish."

"We have heard those jokes," says Prejean, "some have claimed that AmWest really means A&M West, since Don Adam, our chairman, is an Aggie. The folks up in Amarillo, jokingly claim the Am really stands for Amarillo. But I can assure you it stands for Ameican."

She said that generally there had been great excitement for the new name from employees and customers. "We did a survey of the employees and found they were very excited about the name."

While the intention is still to promote AmWest as a "Texas-owned, Texas-grown bank that would keep

From left, the late John T. Dorrance Jr., son of Campbell Soup founder; the late newspaper heir Edward W. Scripps II, and David Rockefeller. Emotional ties to a family-owned business can weaken with each passing generation, when a company's asset value comes to outweigh sentimental value.

ALL IN THE FAMILY

Asset growth dilutes sentimental value

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rockefellers have sold control of the Manhattan landmark bearing their name to a Japanese firm, and several grandchildren of Campbell Soup's founder want that company auctioned to strangers.

How can they sell the family businesses, especially those with famous names? As time goes on, it becomes easy.

Emotional ties to a family-owned firm, hatched from scratch and sweat by entrepreneurial ancestors, can weaken with each passing generation until the company's asset value outweighs its sentimental value and the corporation becomes an albatross to its owners.

For $846 million, the Rockefellers turned over a controlling interest in Rockefeller Group Inc. to Mitsubishi Estate Co. In relinquishing control, the Rockefellers parted with New York's Rockefeller Center, the most visible and tangible symbol of their family fortune, and also surrendered exclusive rights to the Rockefeller name.

Meanwhile, three grandchildren of Campbell founder John T. Dorrance Sr. have split with other relatives and want the company sold. The dissident Dorrances' names aren't emblazoned on soup cans, but they're willing to sever their connection with a brand name familiar to millions worldwide.

In some ways, the Rockefellers and Dorrances are like many other heirs of successful business entrpreneurs. Having grown away from the family company, they want to take their inheritance and move on.

David Rockefeller Jr. is the great-great-grandson of John D. Rockefeller and the great-grandson of John D. Jr., the builder of Rockefeller Center.

"I don't know how far the family, as individuals, would have wanted to go if they had been asked to pump capital funds into keeping up these buildings, compared to supporting charitable causes or pursuing their own careers," Rockefeller said in an interview in the magazine Manhattan Inc.

Sunday DIGEST

Out with green ink

What's in and what's out in office products. Fax machines and fax products are in, says Reliable Corp., a marketer of office products. Fountain pens, purple ink and colored filing systems are also in, along with untearable Tyvek envelopes and computer furniture.

Green ink, desk calendars, typewriters and wood pencils are a few of the items that are out, says the Chicago firm. Small copy machines and single line telephones are also items on their way out of the business world.

Fewer big buys seen

The number of Americans planning to make major purchases or spend money on recreation has declined from last year, according to a poll just released by the Gallup Organization.

Asked what they planned to do differently with their money in 1990 compared with last year, 6 percent of 1,000 heads of household surveyed said they would shell out for big ticket items or leisure activities.

Asked the same question last year, 12 percent said they would spend more money in those areas.

The Princeton-based firm conducted the poll in conjuction with Bank Advertising News of North Palm Beach, Fla., to determine Americans' anticipated financial behavior in 1990. The randomly chosen respondents were interviewed by telephone last month.

As in the previous two annual polls, the survey found that about 40 percent of Americans expected to have more money this year than last; 45 percent expected to have about the same amount; and about 16 percent expected to have less.

The survey also found that 27 percent of the respondents said they would put more money into savings or certificates of deposit, roughly the same number as gave that answer last year.

Passbook savings accounts remain the most popular savings vehicle, being cited by 52 percent of those surveyed.

"Despite the talk of a sluggish economy, the poll illustrates some confidence and even optimism at the grassroots level for the economy in the coming year," Bank Advertising News Editior Frank J. Diekmann said.

"There is also some evidence that more people are looking at increasing their savings rather than purchasing goods."

First the Walkman, now the Discman

A bit more than 10 years after it brought out the Walkman, Sony Corp. has provided a glimpse of one of the device's most offbeat descendants: the Data Discman, for people who would rather jog through the park reading encyclopedia entries than listening to Simon and Garfunkel.

At an unusual public showing of yet-to-be-released technology, Sony executives last week displayed prototypes of the 1-pound Discman, which the company is calling its first electronic book.

The Data Discman fits in the palm of the hand and can search for data from a 3-inch CD-ROM, a close cousin of the compact disk that can store up to 100,000 pages of data.

The Discman was one of the biggest surprises of Sony's show, because it could revolutionize the uses of CD-ROM technology; the initials stand for compact disk-read only memory.

Voice dialing ready for phone market

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Harried business travelers weighed down with suitcases and overcoats will soon be able to let their voice do the dialing for long-distance calls.

US Sprint, the nation's third-largest long-distance company, announced Monday it would offer the first voice-activated dialing service sometime between April and June to customers in selected markets.

The service would allow a caller to say his name and a password instead of using Sprint's long-distance travel card, which requires a caller to punch in as many as 24 digits.

In addition, the caller could speed-dial certain preregistered numbers by barking orders such as "call home" into a phone.

"These are the features the traveling public tells us they want," said Syd Courson, spokesman for Kansas City-based Sprint.

Basin, U.S. rig counts slide

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts continue their first-quarter slump.

Baker Hughes Inc. reported that the U.S. rig count fell 27 to 937, but remains considerably higher than the 797 posted for the same time in 1989.

The Permian Basin rig count also fell, five to 116. It too remains well above last year's total of 77.

In the previous week, the U.S. count tumbled, dropping by 55 to 964. Experts blamed the decline on bad weather in some states and a general seasonal decline.

Among major oil producing states, Louisiana lost 17 rigs and Oklahoma was down 12. Wyoming lost six, Michigan was down by four and Pennsylvania lost two.

New Mexico, Kansas and Texas each gained four rigs, while North Dakota's count increased by two.

National chains dominate music stores

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — It's a rainy afternoon at the chain-owned music-video mega-store, and the customers are pouring in.

An old man in glasses is thumbing through scores of classical compact discs. A leather-clad teenager is checking out the latest cassette singles. A yuppie couple is trying to decide on videos for themselves and their kids, and the father is saying: "OK, how about 'Roadhouse' and this dinosaur thing?"

Welcome to the land of sound and vision.

"This is really like heaven, you know," says Jack Riley, a businessman combing through rows of pop/rock cassettes in the Tower Records/Video store. "All I need now is my Walkman, my headphones and my VCR. I could camp out. It's like being in a supermarket for music and videos."

He's not far off the mark.

Mom-and-pop shops — where a customer might waltz in and listen to a single or LP before buying — and record departments in large stores dominated during the 1950s and '60s. Then chain-operated midsize stores popped up everywhere, stocking plenty of vinyl as well as eight-track tapes — the latter doomed to be replaced by bins and wall racks of cassettes.

Today, advanced technology, the slow demise of vinyl, the video revolution and the compact disc boom have led to the emergence of mega music-video supermarkets in large cities. The "sacred store," as Don McLean labeled quaint little places selling records in his 1971 hit "American Pie," isn't sacred anymore.

Consider these facts:

■ Of the more than 10,000 U.S. record stores, about half are owned by large chains. And almost half of the chain-owned music stores are in malls, according to Billboard Magazine.

■ The Musicland Group, the industry's biggest chain, opened more than 120 stores across the country in 1988-89. The Minneapolis-based company now owns 827 stores nationwide, two in the metro area.

■ Target Stores Inc., with more than 390 department stores nationwide, ranked in the top five on Billboard's music chain list.

■ Thirty-six of the 37 largest record store companies in the country have substantial video rental and sales business.

■ Late last year, Super Club North America Corp. of Dallas reached an agreement to buy Turtle's Records & Tapes of Marietta, Ga., with 114 outlets in the Southeast.

■ That announcement came weeks after the Super Club North America agreed to buy Record Bar Inc. of Durham, N.C., which operates 176 Record Bar and Traxx Music and Video stores nationwide. A company spokesman said the acquisitions would make Super Club the nation's third-largest music and video retailer, with annual sales exceeding $300 million.

And the volume of business keeps rising — with a bullet.

In 1987, record stores accounted for 66 percent of all the recorded music sold in the country. That figure rose to 68.6 percent in 1988, and is expected to climb higher after last year's figures are computed, according to a recent report by the Recording Industry Association of America. Conversely, tape and record club sales slipped from 10 percent in 1987 to 7.8 percent of the market in 1988.

"How record stores are changing has been a serious topic of discussion in the industry for some time now," says Geoff Mayfield, Billboard's associate director of retail research. "Today, most stores are owned by huge chains and are located in malls.

"Some of these chains, like Tower, are doing a fine job of marketing their products while making their stores appealing to customers," he says from Billboard's New York offices. "But some have fallen into the trap of making their stores, well, look sterile."

Sterile or stylish, many corporate officials and store managers say they're simply giving the public what it wants: slick, sophisticated, well- shelved music and video playgrounds.

Tower Records — with 14,000 square feet of space in Atlanta — is a prime example. The California chain's cavernous Atlanta outlet is among the largest record stores in the city — if not the largest.

"This is a very hot market," says Michael J. Ludvik, Southeast regional manager for Tower Records Inc.

Ludvik, who's been with Tower for 14 years, says the store carries everything from rap to classical to jazz to reggae to classic rock. But Tower, which opened locally in November, hardly stands alone in offering a variety of music.

Other chain stores — such as Camelot Music, Coconuts, Sam Goody's, Sound Warehouse, Traxx/Record Bar and Turtle's — each claim to have a leg up on the competition, whether it's lower prices, special selections or larger inventories. They sound like broken records: "If we don't have it in stock, we can get it, fast," most sales personnel and managers say.

"What consumers really have to look at is titles and selections," says Brian Poehner, director of purchasing for Turtle's. "Right now, there are only about 20,000 to 30,000 CD titles on the market. So if a store is saying it has 60,000 or 70,000 CDs, they're counting things two or three times."

That is, they're counting multiple copies of the same title.

Some insiders say large companies must be aware of who's minding the store. "What we in the industry have to be very careful of is legal and financial people controlling the direction of our stores," says Terry Caruthers, a regional director for Camelot. "You want people running stores and managing departments who feel this way, people who think like customers."

Some chains have almost avoided malls.

"We like to locate near malls, but not necessarily in them," says Brian Smith, a field operations manager for Turtle's. He cited high rental fees and parking problems as two major reasons.

Despite the trend toward mall locales and chain ownership, some independent outlets have managed to carve out their own groove, especially among shoppers looking for vinyl, underground material and/or less-expensive used items.

"Heck, we still carry between 8,000 and 10,000 albums," says Madison Dougherty, owner of Chapter 3 Records in Atlanta. "Our customers like a little of everything — CDs, cassettes and LPs. Also, a lot of obscure or offbeat stuff won't make it to some of the larger chain stores. That's where we have them beat."

"That's basically why I come to places like Wax N Facts and Chapter 3," says 22-year-old Martin Perkins, browsing through used LP bins at Chapter 3. "You can still find albums and (independent) titles. Some of the chain stores, like Tower, are fine. But this just feels more like a record store."

Austin entrepreneur tops in T-shirt printing

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN, Tex. — Marty Bebop started printing T-shirts on homemade equipment in his office over a downtown deli. He sometimes slept on the back porch, wrapped in a blanket.

"I wanted a shop, and I couldn't afford a home too," the 27-year-old businessman said.

Six years later, the annual sales at Bee-Bop Printing totaled $2.5 million. A large part of that came from nearly 1 million T-shirts he printed last year with touts for everything from beer to Mexican food, rock 'n' roll to shampoo.

"Our business has doubled every year," Bebop said, attributing a large part of his growth to satisfied customers. "It's all word of mouth."

Bebop left his loft two years ago. Last month, he left his most recent facility, a 6,000-square-foot shop to move into a leased 13,000-square-foot facility.

This year, Bebop expects to buy $200,000 worth of automated printing equipment, including a seven-color printing press capable of printing 1,000 shirts an hour. Bebop plans to beef up his 30-member staff with another 10 workers.

What sets Bee-Bop apart in the highly competitive T-shirt printing business is the company's ability to handle complex designs and to quickly turn out shirt orders. One client turned to Bee-Bop when it needed 22,000 shirts printed within 30 hours for a special Halloween promotion last year.

"We stayed up all night," recalled Bebop, who said he regularly works 16-hour days.

About $250,000 worth of Bee-Bop's sales last year were to Armstrong-McCall, an Austin-based wholesale beauty products distributor with about 75 franchises nationwide.

MARK LEAVERTON ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As an oil and gas lawyer, I know that it is important to our community to have a judge with the experience to effectively preside in cases affecting the oil and gas industry. I know Nick Taylor both as a person and as a lawyer. A judge should possess at least four uncompromised traits: fairness, integrity, the experience that allows a common sense approach to resolve disputes, and the intellect to comprehend and apply the law in a broad range of legal matters. Nick Taylor is such a man, and I am proud to endorse him to be our District Judge.

MALL

of this region is also working to get regional or national chains to Midland.

"That's the advantage of being the largest mall manager in the country and second largest developer — we have contacts all across the country," Skinner says.

Among his goals is bringing in more local retailers, stating that they give a shopping center its flavor or character. As he looks for potential retailers, he tries to match space and operations, and improve the mall's mix of merchants and merchandise, such as more high-end ladies fashions.

Asked what businesses he would like to see in Midland Park Mall, Skinner lists a sit-down Mexican food restaurant and a cafeteria.

The mall is coming off a good 1989 — Skinner says preliminary indications are sales were up 9 percent in 1989, and continues to see good sales and strong traffic. Mall management and retailers are expecting a good 1990, particularly if oil prices retain the strength they've shown since December.

For the immediate future, as management works to attract new retailers, the mall is gearing up for Valentine's Day. Susan Perkins, marketing manager, says the mall will be offering mylar balloons with a $50 purchase.

The mall is also trying something new: A drawing. The mall will be giving away four sweetheart balloon bouquets. Entry blanks are available at mall retailers, and the drawing will be held Feb. 13; delivery will be Valentine's Day.

Also on the agenda are spring fashion shows and an Easter celebration that includes a visit from the Easter Bunny. And Skinner and Perkins are busy planning a 10th anniversary celebration, to be held sometime this fall.

FAMILY

"Frankly, I'm not so sure that if it came down to that, that they would have said, 'The way we want to spend our money is to buff up the marble down at the Center,'" Rockefeller was quoted as saying. He refused to be interviewed for this story.

It's nothing new for the descendants of a company's founder to sell off the family business and its well-known name — the Fields of Chicago did it twice.

Marshall Field III, grandson of retailer Marshall Field, sold the family's famous department store in 1941, and turned instead toward journalism, building the Field Enterprises Inc. media empire.

But more than 40 years later, in 1983, Marshall III's own grandsons, Marshall Field V and Frederick Field, dissolved the second family company after a dispute and went separate ways.

Marshall Field V's current holdings include Field Corp., which owns Funk & Wagnalls Inc. and other publishers. Frederick Field is among the investors in the group that bid recently for BAT Industries PLC, the British conglomerate with properties that, ironically, include Marshall Field.

On the other hand, the Philadelphia-based department store company Strawbridge & Clothier, founded in 1868, is still controlled by the Strawbridge and Clothier clans. Just about all other big department stores across the country have long since been sold off by their founding families.

Strawbridge & Clothier also has dealt with dissident relatives who wanted out. In 1984, a group of Strawbridges decided to sell their 17 percent stake. The company, facing a takeover, bought the shares to retain family control.

Even in some of the biggest corporations, founding family descendants are active. Nearly 190 years after DuPont Co. was created, members of the DuPont family still have ties to the chemical company. Several are board members.

In 1988, two great-grandsons of Ford Motor Co. founder Henry Ford became the first of their generation elected to the board of the automaker, still 40 percent owned by the Ford family. Both men are also Ford executives.

Some families have reasserted total control over their businesses. Southland Corp.'s founding Thompson family, for example, took the company private in a 1987 takeover, borrowing money to repurchase the stock.

Other families who preside over publicly held corporations want to be sure they maintain control over their companies. So they've issued different classes of stock with voting rights that puts most power in family hands.

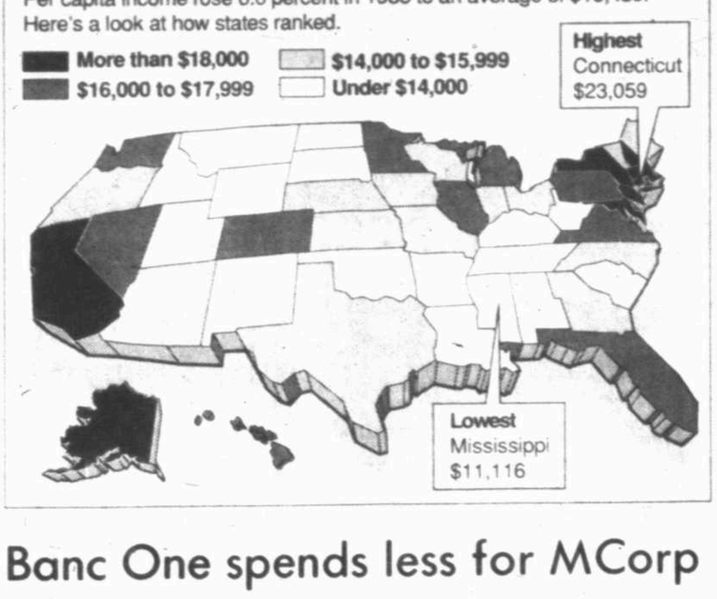
Such an arrangement helped the Bryan family that owns Media General Inc. defeat a takeover bid by investor Burt Sugarman in 1988. The family held about 71 percent of the company's Class B shares, which controlled six of the nine seats on the Media General board, allowing the family to easily defeat Sugarman's attempt to win the other seats.

But sometimes, when a company is losing money, a family must choose the bottom line over emotional ties. In 1982 E.W. Scripps Co. decided to sell United Press International, which had been losing money for years.

UPI was a project of company founder E.W. Scripps, who believed in 1907 that American newspapers needed competing wire services. Scripps Co. executives and members of the Scripps family decided 75 years later the subsidiary's losses were too much to carry any longer.

Average income

Per capita income rose 6.6 percent in 1988 to an average of $16,439. Here's a look at how states ranked.



Banc One spends less for MCorp

DALLAS (AP) — Banc One Corp. says it spent $3.8 million less on its takeover of 20 subsidiary banks of Dallas-based MCorp than it anticipated when regulators approved the transaction last summer.

Banc One is paying less for the Texas bank because the bank's assets have declined to $11 billion currently from $13 billion last summer, said George Meiling, treasurer for Banc One.

The Columbus, Ohio, bank company said it would pay $33.7 million for the Class A voting stock of Bank One, Texas. It had said on June 29 that it expected to pay $37.5 million.

Meiling said the assets were deemed lower in a reappraisal of loans secured by Texas real estate, Meiling said. Banc One executives have spent several months marking down the assets and liabilities of the Texas franchise to reflect current market values.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. is also investing less money in the transaction — $416.2 million for the Class B and Class C shares instead of $462.5 million forecast last summer.

Banc One, which has been managing Bank One, Texas, since June, has committed to buying all of the FDIC's shares within five years.

Banc One originally had planned to complete the acquisition of the 20 former MBanks by late November. But the action was delayed twice because of the complexity in marking the bank's assets to current market value.

The bank company said it would transfer about $2.5 billion in bad assets to a special collection pool. Under terms of a preliminary agreement announced June 29, regulators said troubled assets initially amounting to between $3 billion and $3.5 billion would be transferred to the workout bank.

The company kept the right to transfer more bad loans to the workout bank, after the first and second years.

Banc One had assets of $26.6 billion and common equity of $2.25 billion at year end.

Texas money at home," Prejean said the institution did not want to be penalized with a Texas tag if it decided to go out-of-state. She referred to the initial resentment of Texans that came when NCNB (North Carolina National Bank) began to put its signs throughout the state. "This is not to put down NCNB. They have done a great job, but there is a disadvantage to operating in any state with another state name."

This thinking was also prevalent earlier this year when Texas American changed its name to TeamBank to escape the Texas label.

There was also some serious thought about abandoning the Olney tag? Founded in 1927 by a group of Olney businessmen, Olney Savings was a historical and recognized name with a valued reputation, and when Don Adam, a wealthy cable TV system owner paid cash for 11 defunct savings organizations in 1988 he let Olney, the most recognized name, survive as the umbrella.

Adam says the name was fine as long as the savings institution was centralized but that it was hardly representative of an $4 billion institution with 80 locations and 1,000 employees throughout West Texas and Central Texas.

"We discovered that the future for our company required a name that projects a broader awareness of our trade area and depicts the opportunities in the future," said Adam at the name dedication at Bryan earlier this week.

Said Blonkvist: "Seniors represent the largest single market in the U.S. for sales. They have more purchasing power than any other group."

The investment adviser says Midland, with its entrepreneurial bent, is a town where new corporations with innovative products can find support.

While the Midland Chamber uses the venture capital approach to bring new business to town, Blonkvist says his main concern is to diversify the investment portofolio of those who invest with him.

Blonkvist says his venture capital proposals come from many sources. "The ComfortCare System came on the recommendation of a bank in Mississippi. I must have looked at 50 proposals before deciding on this one."

Corporate America helping establish inner-city schools

By SHARON COHEN

CHICAGO (AP) — Phyllis Pelt's workday is consumed by the grim realities of the ghetto: the evicted family, the girl who goes hungry, the boy whose mother was murdered. It's part of life as a school nurse.

Only minutes and miles away, Chuck Ruder's day on the 51st floor of the sleek Sears Tower is devoted to the fast pace and steady pressures of retail and finance. It's part of life in the Fortune 500.

Little children and big business, rich and poor, two worlds seemingly destined to remain apart. Instead, they've united in an experiment in which corporate America's money, muscle and management are being used to develop a desperately needed product: academic success in the inner city.

The Corporate-Community Schools of America is a tuition-free academy created, guided and financed by United Airlines, Baxter International, Sears, Quaker Oats, McDonald's and other Chicago-area powerhouses that donate dollars and sense to matters ranging from purchasing to personnel.

"We must manage our schools as we manage our major corporations — with accountability, responsibility, skilled, talented, paid people," said school founder Joe Kellman. "If there was a profit motive ... is there any doubt IBM, General Motors and Sears Roebuck would be in the school business?

"If you try to run major city school systems with volunteers that have no skill, get no money and have no time, then you get what you've got — bankrupt systems," he said.

Big city education is a billion-dollar business, Kellman says, so who better to oversee it than experienced executives such as Ruder, from Sears? He's among seven corporate board members; eight others are area residents or educators.

Such partnerships aren't new. America's corporations have poured millions into education programs ranging from adopt-a-school systems to guaranteed jobs. Organizers say this is different.

"They're supporting and assisting; we're building," said Bud Kraus, assistant to the chairman and chief executive officer at Baxter, a medical and hospital supply company.

The 1½-year-old private academy, in predominantly black Lawndale, one of Chicago's poorest neighborhoods, is designed to be a lab to find ways to teach inner-city children, then duplicate the process in urban areas nationwide.

"We're looking to influence change in the system, not educate 300 kids," Kraus said.

The school's small size and independence set it apart. Unlike urban systems, there are no powerful unions, no tangled bureaucracies, no crumbling buildings. Teachers' salaries are 10 percent to 15 percent higher.

As far as duplicating this in Chicago, "I can't see how you can do it with prevailing resources," said Robert Saddler, deputy school superintendent and a board member of the corporate school.

Still, he said, "I don't think you have to replicate it on a mass scale to gain from it."

Chicago's schools are doing their own experimenting with a reform plan establishing local councils in each of some 600 schools, giving parents major decision-making powers.

Kellman thinks success will be limited, considering 68 percent of Chicago's 409,000 public school students live in poverty. "The underclass will never manage their schools," he said. "They're having trouble managing their lives."

Kellman concedes he's no educator — he quit school after eighth grade to join his father's glass business and now runs the $100 million corporation.

But the 70-year-old philanthropist knows business, and he's devoted to Lawndale, his childhood home. Today, it's in trouble.

More than half Lawndale's residents get public aid. More than a third of the housing is substandard. Recent studies found a murder rate six times the national average, infant mortality almost three times as great.

"If you walk into a typical class and ask a group of children how many know someone who's been shot ... hit by a car ... in jail ... or been killed, virtually all the hands go up," said Primus Mootry, the school's project director, who grew up in the area.

Despite such brutal surroundings, educators hope to prove these children can learn as well as those raised in affluence.

"(We do) not accept any of the stereotypes that might travel with the neighborhood the school is situated in," said teacher Kathy Irwin. "We do not put numbers on their heads in terms of IQ. (Some say) there are social or biological limits. We reject that."

"The example we're setting is that educating children in the inner city ... is not only possible, but the children deserve it," said principal Elaine Mosley.

To smooth the way, the school has taken special steps.

Classes, for example, are held year-round to minimize exposure to street life. The building is open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. to accommodate working parents — pre-school takes children as young as 2 — and high school equivalency degree programs are offered.

Each room has a teacher and an aide. There are no grades, and children up to age 9 are grouped in two-year clusters, an idea that appeals to Elaine Finley, whose two sons and daughter are pupils.

"They're learning at their own speed. ... Public school would have pushed them aside," she said. "They're active participants in learning. In public school they would sit back behind a desk all day."

Mrs. Pelt cuts red tape, working with dozens of social service agencies. She weighs children, helps them get eyeglasses, makes dental appointments, supplies gloves, accompanies parents to doctor visits and even allows them to do their laundry at the school.

"The role of the school is everything that needs to be done to enhance learning," she said.

Money helps. More than $2.8 million has been invested, mostly by 55 corporations providing annual contributions ranging up to $150,000.

The $5,200 annual per-pupil cost, compared with $4,624 in Chicago, will drop as enrollment increases from the current 200 to the 300 maximum, Kraus said. All pupils are chosen by lottery.

Businesses also provide resources. Sears, for example, donated carpeting, air conditioners and cabinets. But just as vital is white-collar wisdom.

"There are parts of the school that are much like a business — personnel practice and policies, for instance," said Ruder, Sears' vice president of corporate public affairs.

Still, there are skeptics.

Business leaders don't have the "magic answer" to education problems, said Don Moore, director of Designs for Change, a group involved in Chicago's school reform. "I'm just as content to see the manager of a store or a bus driver or a policeman on one of these councils," he said.

Moore also wonders, "How long are these corporations willing to put up this much money? ... The history of these kinds of efforts is they fall on hard times after awhile."

School officials say it's too early to gauge success. But Kellman predicts that at the end of three years, pupils' test scores will be better than their public school counterparts.

Mootry said the school already has helped by bringing movers and shakers to Lawndale.

"They see the families," he said. "They realize it's not just a bunch of poor, drug-crazed underclass folks but people struggling to make their lives better. It's drawing attention to the plight of the community. ... It's bringing some hope."

Quaker Oats financing more studies

CHICAGO (AP) — Quaker Oats Co. has disclosed it is funding research aimed at substantiating the health benefits of oat bran, challenged by a recent Harvard medical study of the the heavily marketed food product.

Quaker, which controls about 70 percent of the oat-bran cereal market, said it is providing partial financing for two studies. Spokesman Ron Bottrell said they have been under way for more than a year.

Bottrell said he saw no conflict in the company financing research that theoretically would help sales of its products. He declined to further elaborate on the studies or who was performing them.

"We're not saying the new studies will be a direct refutation of the medical study, but we think it will add to information about the benefits of oats and oat bran," Bottrell said.

A Harvard University study published in the Jan. 19 issue of the New England Journal of Medicine disputed previous findings that oat bran can help lower cholesterol levels in the bloodstream when eaten daily as part of a low-fat, low-cholesterol diet.

The study rattled the processed food industry, which had seized upon oat bran and its presumed benefits as an important allure to health-conscious consumers.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox filed suit against Quaker, disputing the company's claims to the effectiveness of oat bran.

Chicago-based Quaker has aggressively advertised on television, featuring grandfatherly actor Wilford Brimley eating oatmeal and calling it 'the right thing to do."

Quaker at first responded to the Harvard study with newspaper ads citing 10 other studies conducted over the past 27 years that indicated oat bran has special cholesterol-lowering properties.

Bottrell said five of those studies were partly funded by Quaker, with additional money from health or government agencies. He said Quaker has a long history of funding oat research.

"We are in the oats business and we consider it our business anything pertaining to oats," Bottrell said in a telephone interview.

American Airlines tries diversification

By JOHN A. BOLT

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Interested in buying one of the government-owned properties acquired in the savings and loan bailout? Want to make a reservation at any one of a number of well known hotel chains?

Just call a toll-free number that will be answered in Fort Worth by employees of a company called AMR Information Services Inc.

Or maybe you've got some information you need typed into a computer, or you're planning a huge convention and need to know where you can find enough rooms at the right price. Again, turn to AMRIS.

Those are just some of the services provided by eight businesses under the umbrella of AMRIS, a wholly owned subsidiary of AMR Corp., whose main business is running American Airlines, the nation's No. 1 carrier.

Why does an airline company own a telemarketing operation?

Two reasons, said AMRIS President Russell J. Harrison: to cushion the cyclical downturns of the airline business and to tap the experience, investment and success of AMR's computer reservations system, SABRE, the largest in the industry.

"An awful lot of what affects the airline industry is out of control of the airline business," Harrison said, pointing to recent increases in fuel cost which turned a record year for AMR into a disappointment in just a few weeks.

"With their powerful computer and telecommunications and reservations resources, it's a natural opportunity or extension to do some incremental business," said Mark Daugherty, who follows AMR for Dean Witter Reynolds investment firm.

The subsidiary, created in May 1986, does not yet provide much of a cushion, although Harrison said it has been profitable since 1987 and has grown about 49 percent a year.

"Profit is growing faster than our revenue," he said.

While he doesn't predict maintaining that level, Harrison says 20 percent growth per year is reachable.

The idea grew from an effort to make use of the time when reservations agents weren't selling airplane tickets.

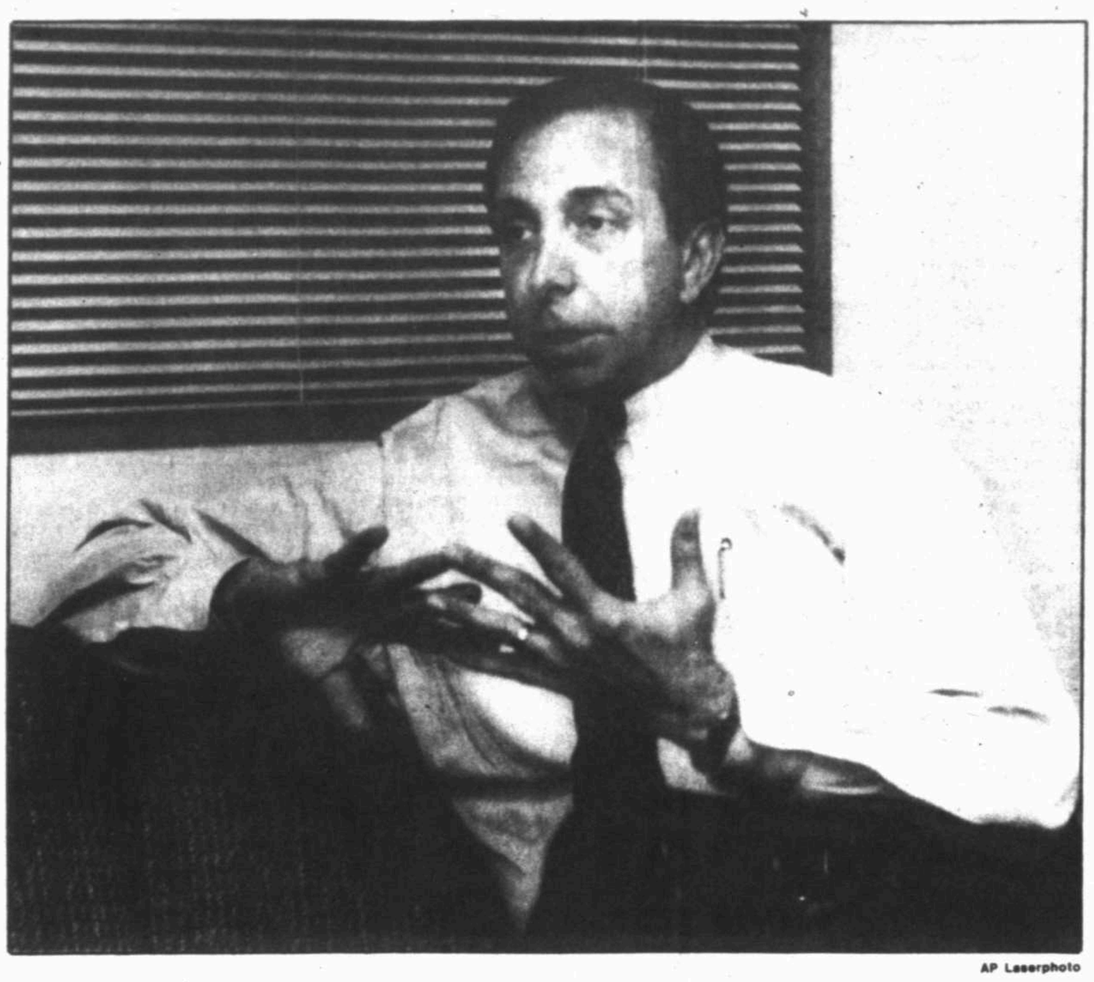
What started as a time-filler now has its own computer system, separate from SABRE, and last year brought in $100 million in revenues. It is projected to reach $130 million this year.

AMR, by comparison, had overall operating revenues last year of $10.48 billion.

Harrison, who has worked for Ross Perot at Electronic Data Systems Inc. and for Bank of America, describes his role as a "change agent," in many ways re-creating the same freewheeling idea factory that made Perot a billionaire.

"It's OK to have fun," Harrison said. "It's OK to laugh and celebrate."

Harrison said employees are encouraged to ask, "What do you think we could do if we didn't know we couldn't?"



AP Laserphoto

Russell J. Harson, president of AMR Information Services, a wholly-owned subsidiary of AMR Corp., says diversification into such businesses as telemarketing cushions the company from the cyclical downturns in the airline industry. AMR is parent company of American Airlines

AMRIS's only corporate directive comes from AMR Chairman Robert L. Crandall, who "has said 'go build me a business,' " Harrison said. "I'm just kind of manufacturing businesses."

AMRIS is comprised of eight divisions and accounts for about 4,000 of AMR's 77,000 employees. While some of the businesses are tied to the airline industry — such as meeting planning and travel agent training — others are not.

"The linkage between all these businesses is that they tend to be transactions over long distances," Harrison said during an interview at his office, tucked into AMR's supplementary office building across a freeway from company headquarters.

The largest division is American Airlines Direct Marketing Corp., which answers the telephone and makes sales calls for a variety of customers.

Most of those customers are confidential, Harrison said, because "they want you to think you're talking to one of their employees," when you call for hotel reservations and such. In reality, the phones are answered by 880 people in a building at AMR's Centreport office complex south of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

However, the division recently landed a high-profile contract: taking calls for the Resolution Trust Corp., the federal agency created to bail out the thrift industry. People who called a toll-free number to order the list of foreclosed properties being offered for sale got AMRIS.

And AMRIS isn't shy about saying what kind of ealls it doesn't take — those generated by television ads. "We do not sell Ginzu knives or Zamfir records," Harrison said.

Another significant component of AMRIS is Caribbean Data Services, located in Barbados and Santo Domingo, where employees turn written information into computer data.

About half of the work involves culling information from American Airlines' tickets; the rest is from other companies such as Equicorp, which uses the company to type in health claims information.

The paperwork is flown to the Caribbean on American Airlines jets, the information typed in, and then either fed directly to a computer or put on computer disks and sent back to the customer.

Other divisions sell SABRE to other airlines, provide automated freight tracking systems, operate a hotel reservations system similar to SABRE or provide computer services for other airlines.

Another division — what Harrison calls his "R&D shop" — provides non-airline computer services and information management.

Harrison realizes his subsidiary would be a likely candidate for the auction block should AMR be bought out. The company was a target last year of billionaire developer Donald Trump, whose $7.5 billion proposal fell through in the wake of a sharp drop in the stock market in October.

"I love being a part of AMR," Harrison said, "but I could run the company outside."

"We have build the platform for our business on firm, solid ground and if we are cut lose, we can continue to grow."

Soviet computer experts visit American convention

N.Y. Times News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — At a decidedly capitalist gathering at a resort here in the desert, eight people in the personal computer industry in the Soviet Union met informally this week with their U.S counterparts.

The Soviet representatives were invited to an annual computer conference to explore ways to cooperate in developing the primitive computer industry in their country, but the Americans expressed a desire to see more changes in the Soviet economy.

The Soviet visitors at the Westin Paloma here were the guests of Esther Dyson, a computer industry analyst who leads the conference, which is known for its informal atmosphere and the deal-making among the several hundred executives who attend.

Among those gathering this year were William Gates, chairman of Microsoft Corp.; Steven P. Jobs, president of Next Inc., and Rod Canion, president of Compaq Computer Corp.

Ms. Dyson said she wants to extend the deal-making process to include the Soviet Union.

The Soviet representatives here included people in the computer business, Communist Party officials and even independent-minded programmers known as hackers.

Among the guests was Levon Amdilyan, principal deputy director general of the International Computer Club, an organization trying to make business deals with foreign companies.

Ms. Dyson also plans a computer conference in Hungary this October.

But many of the United States executives appeared to be baffled by the process of doing business in the Soviet Union.

Buyer demand accelerates auto safety features

By PAUL C. JUDGE
N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — After years of insisting that safety features do not sell cars, automakers have noticed that many prospective buyers think differently. Suddenly, many car ads talk of little else.

The new attention to safety is credited partly to the baby boomers, the largest generation of consumers in history, whose safety concerns are being sharpened by parenthood.

The car companies are also trying to put the best face on new fEderal regulations requiring them to add safety features whether or not buyers want them.

Chrysler Corp., once a staunch opponent of air bags, now hails itself in many advertisements as the only American auto company offering driver's-side air bags as standard equipment in all of its 1990 cars sold in the United States.

Ford Motor Co. raised the ante two weeks ago, with a pledge that air bags would be standard for both front-seat passengers by the mid-1990s in all Ford cars sold in the United States.

Volvo credits its longtime practice of emphasizing safety in its advertising for raising its United States sales last year even as other European car makers suffered declines.

BMW, the first manufacturer to claim anti-lock braking systems as standard equipment on all of its models, now focuses on the steering, acceleration and braking capabilities of its cars as features that can help avoid accidents.

Toyota and Nissan are telling consumers in ads that the sheet metal in their car bodies gives better structural integrity and crashworthiness.

General Motors Corp.'s Cadillac division is even promoting the size and power of its luxury sedans as safety features. Cadillac recently tested the market appeal of safety with a series of ads that stressed features like anti-lock brakes and reinforced side-door beams.

Sales increased twice as much in the 10 markets where the ads ran as in areas where the pitch was standard luxury appeal, according to Cadillac.

"Several of these features have been built into Cadillacs for several years," said William J. O'Neill, a Cadillac spokesman. "But we elected not to talk about them because we thought it wasn't worth it."

Many such ads are created with baby boomers in mind. "They represent half of all car buyers, and many of them have families," said Christopher W. Cedergren, an analyst for J.D. Power & Associates.

"They are still interested in performance, styling and value, but now they also want safety, which has become a much more important issue now that they have children."

Beyond the baby boomers, safety is increasingly a selling point, particularly among more affluent car buyers, analysts and auto executives said.

"There is an awareness of safety among the car-buying public," said Maryann N. Keller, an analyst with Furman Selz Mager Dietz & Birney. "People are willing to pay for safety features such as anti-lock braking systems."

Marketing executives for the major automakers have watched safety rise on the list of attributes prospective buyers consider important.

In 1981, according to Ford market analysts, customers ranked safety near the bottom of a dozen selling points that include performance, styling and fuel economy. Last year, customers listed safety among their top seven considerations. Ford analysts noted that safety was the only attribute to rise on the list.

"It's almost a cultural change," said Robert Rosenfeldt, manager of occupant protection and impact dynamics at Ford. "People are becoming more technically sophisticated, and they are getting bombarded with the safety message."

The new emphasis on safety also stems from a desire by some car makers to make the most of new federal laws requiring some kind of passive restraint, whether it be the less expensive automatic seat belt or the more expensive air bag, in the driver's seats of all new cars sold in the United States, starting with this year's models.

The Big Three have said that by choosing the higher-cost air bags for many models, they have had to raise prices for 1990 cars more than their Japanese competitors, which equipped nearly all their models with the less costly automatic seat belt.

The Big Three raised their prices an average of $805, compared with $205 for Japanese cars.

"After being forced to make huge investments in passive restraints, the auto manufacturers want to point out how much safer their air bags or automatic seat belts are," Cedegren said.

Allison Davis is one 14-year-old girl who knows what she wants.

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Allison Davis wants to be an actress. What sets her apart from other 14-year-olds is her determination and desire in pursuing her goal.

"I have a lot of people that do believe in me so I can believe in myself," Miss Davis said in a recent interview.

These include family, friends and two local businesses — J.C. Penny and Bridal Fantasies — which together paid her way to California to compete in the International Modeling and Talent Association's competition, held in Los Angeles in January.

She didn't disappoint them and surprised herself.

She received honorable mentions in eight categories: dramatic monologue, fashion print, T-shirt, commercial print, best smile, singing, TV beauty and action, where the models dress in clothes appropriate for their favorite sport. Miss Davis chose aerobics and demonstrated a routine on the runway.

She was surprised at her success in the modeling arena.

"It felt really good. I was so happy. I didn't think I was going to win anything in modeling. I'm just not the modeling type."

The final day of the competition participants met agents, many of whom had been judging the various categories. The agents compiled a list of the girls they wanted to meet personally and requested they come by in the afternoon.

Miss Davis' list of agents included Bobby Ball Talent, Joseph Heldfond and Rix, Rose Management, World Top Inc., Maxine Arnold Agency, Prima Model Management, City Model and Talent, Teen Magazine, Starrs and Wilhelmina Agency.

She was in a hurry because she also had to retape her TV Real People segment — in which she played a dingy teenager who was able to demonstrate how user-friendly a particular computer was — that afternoon at 3:45 p.m.

"I was running around handing out my resume and things. It was really hectic. We had been strictly told 'No makeup' because the agents wanted to see you naturally. They can put makeup on you. They wanted to see what you look like before you put all the makeup on. By the time I got down there to TV Real People, my hair was a mess, I had no makeup on. I walk into this room, and they wanted me to be cheerful for this callback. I was exhausted."

That was the second problem she had experienced during the week of competition. The first was due to scheduling. She had just completed her dramatic monologue, in which she did a bit from "Brighton Beach Memoirs."

"Right after I got out of the dramatic monologue I went straight to the comedy monologues competition, but they had already finished with the juniors when I got there. They told us that we could not do it again.

"I went up to my room, and I was just about to walk out the door to go swimming because I was really mad and I wanted to blow off a lot of steam, and then the phone rang."

Opportunity knocked twice. Miss Davis was able to act her comedy monologue in front of the same agents who judged her dramatic monologue.

"I got laughs so that was good. The judges seemed to like it, too."

Her efforts paid off. At the awards banquet she was named second runner up for sit-com, and first runner up for TV Real People, comedy monologue and soap opera. So far she had received eight honorable mention ribbons and four trophies. Although not all competed in each category, somewhere between 800 and 1,000 girls from across the United States were in the total competition, which included junior and senior divisions.

"Then I won Junior Star Talent of the Year — that means that I had the overall highest points for all these competitions. I was so surprised. I did not think I was going to win it. There were two people left, and when they called my name, I cried.

"It puts a lot of prestige and recognition behind your resume interview with agents or in an audition. Junior Star Talent of the Year — real high honor and people know it. You've got to have something in you to win that award. It's going to be really helpful in this career that I want to pursue. It's really been great for me."

Her goal is being a film actress. Midland audiences may remember Miss Davis, an honor roll eighth-grader at San Jacinto Junior High, from her portrayal of Nora, the sister, in Midland Community Theatre's production of Neil Simon's "Brighton Beach Memoirs."

The next obstacle Miss Davis has to overcome is moving to California. Most agents have told her she needs to live in California, at least for a while, so that she can become a union member and they can accept her as a client.

Dallas is a major marketplace for commercials and does have several modeling agencies, but Miss Davis says her connections are in Los Angeles, not Dallas.

"Getting into an agent in Dallas could be hard but I could do it, but I'm really shooting to go to L.A. because people know who I am down there now. Most of them have seen me. The ones who have seen me are going to recommend me to people who haven't seen me. In Dallas, I would have to start over again. They would understand this competition, but not in the same way."

She is looking into the prospect of hiring a personal manager who, she says, "Is supposed to help us pick out the agency that he thinks will be best for me.

Singer credits luck, timing for his success

Ricky Van Shelton

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Luck and faith play major roles in succeeding in today's music business. At least, that's the way country performer Ricky Van Shelton sees it.

The winner of eight awards in 1989 including Country Music Association's Male Vocalist of the Year, Shelton, who plays Midland's Chaparral Center Saturday along with The Judds, knows exactly what he would tell a young talent who asked him what it takes to become successful in today's country music business.

"You've got to be lucky, 'cause you do," Shelton says in a recent interview. "You've got to be at the right place at the right time

"You've got to have total faith in yourself if you're going to get into this business, because you are going to have to face rejection. You gotta realize that.

"You gotta be where the action is, and you got to be out there peddling yourself every night trying to meet the right people — trying to figure out where these people are is the hard part, trying to get to them is the hard part.

The Judds, along with Ricky Van Shelton play Midland's Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. Saturday. Tickets, priced at $18.50, may be purchased at the Center's box office and Endless Horizons.

"You have to keep your voice in shape, your mind in shape, and you got to constantly be on the ball. You will never get discovered lying on the couch watching TV."

He also would tell them to move to a major marketplace.

"If you want a piece of the action, you have to go where the action is.

"Who's going to discover you playing in a little moose club in a small town? Nobody's going to discover you. You got to go where those people are that can do you some good are."

That's what Shelton did. His first opportunity to move to a major marketplace, Nashville, came when his wife Bettye accepted a job there.

The two made the move from Grit, Va., in December of 1984. Later, she convinced a co-worker to play Shelton's tape for her husband, Nashville newspaper columnist Jerry Thompson.

In a short period of time, Shelton was in a recording studio working on his debut album, "Wild-Eyed Dream." Released in June of 1987, the title cut broke into the 20s of the singles chart. The second single, "Crime of Passion," made the Top 10. Three more Top 10 songs off the album — "Somebody Lied," "Life Turned Her That Way" and "Don't We All Have the Right" — signaled Shelton was a performer who was on his way.

His second album, "Loving Proof," includes a song written by himself about 10 years ago.

"I like it, and my producer liked it, and we put it on there. It's kind of a simple thing, not much to tell about it."

Boothe portrays spy because of dislike for him

By JOHN ENGSTROM
Hearst News Service

"Family of Spies" makes you take a second look at your neighbor.

The guy across the street driving off every morning, is he really climbing telephone poles for a living, like he says, or is there something bigger on his agenda?

Boothe

In the five-hour CBS miniseries, which airs tonight and Tuesday night, Powers Boothe turns in a chill-your-soul portrayal of John Walker Jr., the spy who eluded the FBI and Navy for 18 years because he didn't walk like a spy, look like a spy or quack like a spy.

That's why Boothe said he chose to play Walker "as a human being, not the second cousin of Satan," although Walker was, by some accounts, the most damaging U.S. spy in history. He delivered to the Soviets the very backbone of the American military code system.

That's the kind of spying that forces U.S. Navy officers, red-faced in their betrayed blue suits, to revamp the service's entire procedure for handling secret documents.

Boothe recently told TV critics in Los Angeles that his dislike of Walker made filming "Family of Spies" a personal trial.

Walker was a brutish husband who casually called his wife and three daughters "bitches," a macho player who strutted into bars and called for "a double with my name on it," a womanizer who returned from sea duty and kissed off his family with a drive-by so he could drop anchor with bar bait on his first night ashore.

Caught in a cash squeeze, he saw an opening marked "top secret" and crawled through, eventually dragging his brother, his son and his best friend into the abyss, while his wife and one daughter teetered on the edge.

From 1967 to 1985, Walker operated his spy ring with the crude savvy and plaid-jacket bravado of a used-car salesman. The Navy eventually became aware that someone was giving away the store to the Soviets, but they couldn't find him.

"Walker didn't fit the mold. He wasn't angry at the military. He wasn't politically motivated. He hadn't been turned by a Soviet operative. So they didn't know where to look," said Boothe.

It is Walker's ease at turning master spy that hurts "Family of Spies." By taking his success for granted, the miniseries runs for long stretches forgetting to weave in the spying that went on for nearly two decades.

And there are only rare suggestions of the dangers to us all in Walker's deeds. We need more of those and fewer fleshbar scenes that make us intimately familiar with a stripper's backside.

Nearly matching Boothe's riveting work as Walker is Lesley Ann Warren as Walker's wife, Barbara, a man-dependent mother of four who nestled up to alcohol when her husband began cuddling elsewhere.

She lived for years with the knowledge that he was spying for the Soviet Union.

In a candid interview after his arrest, Walker said his wife was the one chink in the armor he had created to hide behind, and he said his biggest mistake probably was in not killing her.

That is a horrific thought, but just as disturbing are the seemingly light sentences given Walker, his brother Arthur and son Michael. They pled guilty in the fall of 1985 after aiding the government in convicting Jerry Whitworth, the only member of the spy ring who went to trial.

John and Arthur both got multiple life terms and Michael several sentences of 10 and 25 years, yet all three will be eligible for parole consideration by the middle of this decade. Whitworth, convicted in July 1986, was hit with a sentence that locks him up until at least 2046.

As for Barbara Walker, executive producer Jennifer Alward told the TV critics that she was paid a "decent" amount for her story but continues to lead a tragic life.

"She's living on welfare and raising the little boy Tommy by herself in Rhode Island.... She has a bad back and she gets work where she can."

SHELTON— DAVIS

He's been writing songs since he was a teen-ager.

"I was always writing and making up stuff 'cause I was just always singing. It was so much a part of my life."

Shelton has to be in the right frame of mind to write songs.

"I usually have to have inspiration to write a song. I don't have to be inspired about a certain thing, but it's more like having to be in the mood, the right mood to write."

Cutting his own song felt "great," Shelton says.

"If you've got a song that you believe in, that you've written and you get to record it, put it on an album, it's a little personal thing, it's a real satisfying feeling to be able to do that. If you can imagine if you'd written some songs and you like them and believe in them and your producer don't, that can be kind of disheartening.

"But, I realized a long time ago everybody's not going to like what I do and everybody's not going to like every song I write and that doesn't matter as long as I believe in it. So you have to look at it realistically."

Realistically, 1989 was "excellent" for Shelton.

"I won eight awards and I sold 1 million records off my album and played lots of concert dates, and I was healthy. It was just a good year. Everything was good. I worked hard and it paid off."

Each award came as a surprise.

"Every time I won one I was surprised. There was not one of them I thought I had in the bag because I knew I didn't have none of them in the bag."

Things haven't always gone smoothly for Shelton. He remembers the time three years ago when he was playing clubs, became ill and could not perform.

"I totally lost my voice and couldn't talk. And the band was already over there setting up the sound check and the guy held my band hostage for three or four hours, wouldn't let them leave. I had to get the law, the lawyers, all that stuff to get them out. He was just mad because I couldn't play.

"I don't know what he was going to do with the band. I guess he was going to feed them bread and water. I don't know. But he wouldn't let them leave. Had his thugs in there, had his doors bolted. That was kind of funny."

Shelton traces his love for music back to singing gospel as a child.

"I started singing at a real early age in church, and I was singing three or four times a week in church from the time I was 3 or 4 years old up until I was 18. I got interested in old rock 'n' roll and soul music of the late '50s and early '60s."

Then, in 1964, his brother, who played a mandolin, encouraged him to join him in playing country music.

"He didn't have a band, but he would just go to his friends' houses and they would sit around the kitchen table and play all night long.

"I started hanging around with him because he'd let me drive his car and I was 14, 15 years old. Through that I became interested in country music and by the end of the '60s I was totally hooked on country music."

Shelton, who has held various jobs to pay the rent, never had any doubt he wanted to be a singer.

"I started singing at such an early age it just became a driving force in my life. There's never been anything else I wanted to do."

Prodigies interest producer

Steven Bochco says he has wanted to make "Doogie Howser, M.D.," an ABC television series about a 16-year-old doctor, for a long time.

He says, "The only reason I didn't develop it sooner is the last place I worked fired me."

Bochco says he always has been intrigued by prodigies because his dad was one — a violinist.

"A personal manager manages about eight people and sends one out to each audition that he thinks is right. An agency will send like 100 out. I think I'm going to be on a freelance basis and then go with it from there."

Miss Davis is considering personal manager Charles Worthington with Edie Robb. "He got the one who plays Rozanne Barr's daughter in 'She Devil' the job."

Her mother, Marilyn Davis, is a single parent employed in the accounting department at Exxon. She supports Miss Davis and her 10-year-old brother, Tyson, a student at Bowie Elememtary.

Ms. Davis respects her daughter's determination, but hasn't solved the dilemma of owning a home and being employed in Midland when her daughter's future appears to be in California. She is considering finding a temporary home for her daughter in California.

Miss Davis knows where she has been. Last year at San Jacinto she was on the student council, the track team and a cheerleader.

This year, she limited her activities, although she made the A honor roll. She studied commercial acting at PS Images, the local organization which trained and accompanied the seven Midland girls — Miss Davis; Nicole Myers, who received third runner up to Star Model of the Year; Karmen Hendrix; Erika Paige; Dena Mason; Ivi Brossman, the top-10 finalist for child star model; and Shannon Ausberger — to the IMTA competition this January.

Miss Davis knows where she is going, but she has to figure out a way to get there. She feels certain she will come up with an answer.

When asked what her plans are she says, without pause, "To move to California and pursue a career in acting."

Fourteen-year-olds Karmen Hendrix, standing from left, Nicole Myers, Erika Page, Allison Davis, and Dena Mason, 19, left foreground, and Ivi Brossman, 9, as well as Shannon Ausburger, were local girls sponsored by PS Images in this year's IMTA competition in Los Angeles.

Ex-Midlander's play to be staged

LUBBOCK — The latest production of the Texas Tech University Lab Theater will be a new play written by former Midlander David J. LeMaster.

LeMaster was graduated magna cum laude last December.

While in Midland, he was active in theater at Lee High School, where he performed the one-actor presentation "Mark Twain Tonight" under the direction of Horace Griffin. Midlanders also will remember the young playwright as Midland Community Theatre's "Bullshot Crummond" and "Chicken Sukiaki" in the Summer Mummers.

He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. David R. LeMaster of Midland.

The play will run Thursday through Saturday. Tickets are $5 and may be obtained through the Lab Theater Ticket Office, 1-806-742-3601.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Gallery 1114 is featuring an exhibition of photographs by Michael Nye and David Stence through March 1.

The show consists of works from their "Suites: Photographs in Series."

Nye's work has been called modern day hieroglyphics. Separate images are taken over a period of time and arranged vertically or horizontally, in a manner that creates a new space or reinterprets an existing space. His series are linkages of images which suggest that perception, like life, is seldom what we expect.

A practicing attorney in San Antonio for seven years, Nye left his law work for full-time photography in 1984. He exhibited in an Arts America tour and his photographs are in the Museum of Photography, Mexico City, and the Gernsheim Collection at the University of Texas, Austin.

Stence works on an intuitive level within classical photographic tradition. His subjects: dams or parking garages, tourists or businessmen, use texture, light or perspective to gain symbolic or spiritual quality.

Stence received his bachelor of fine arts degree from the Rhode Island School of Design where he studied with Aaron Sisking and Harry Callahan. His work has been featured in Texas Monthly and he has shown nationally and internationally. His images are in the Museum of Modern Art, New York, and the Biblioteque National in Paris. He lives in Austin.

Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., a contemporary artists' co-operative, is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday or by appointment. For more information call 685-9944.

Watercolor workshop set

The Palette Club, 906 W. Wadley Ave., will sponsor a watercolor workshop Feb. 13-16 conducted by Betty Lynch.

Mrs. Lynch uses the "seek and find" approach in which the artist begins with no preconceived idea of the end result.

"From an abstract pattern of color, students are encouraged to be creative and intuitive in their attitude utilizing the negative painting process to bring forth some suggestion of subject or attain interesting shapes and patterns," says a release from the Palette Club.

"The workshop participants are invited to realize the full potential of creativity and expand the scope of their talent."

Mrs. Lynch has conducted workshops in California, New Mexico, Montana, Texas, England, Spain, France and Italy, the latter in conjunction with tours.

Her most recent honors include being published on American Artist Magazine's watercolor page; accepted in the American Watercolor Society shows, 1983 and 1985; American Watercolor Society's traveling exhibit, 1983; Purchase Prize, Texas Watercolor Society, 1983; and being included in the May-June issue of Western Art Digest, 1986. She participated in a show going to China which was held in the Cultural Palace of Dongying, Midland's sister city in China.

For more information on the workshop call 685-1118.

Singer's UTPB show part of Black History Month

ODESSA — Jenifer Lewis salutes the black Broadway musical Feb. 24 at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Student Lounge.

The event is part of UTPB's Black History Celebration held in honor of Black History Month. Sponsored by the UT Permian Basin Cultural Committee and supported in part by the Odessa Cultural Council, dinner and the show is $20 to the public and $10 for faculty, students and staff at UTPB. The show only is $10 for the public and $5 for students, staff and faculty at UTPB.

On stage, Ms. Lewis created the smash role of Effie in the Broadway hit "Dreamgirls" and has starred in such Broadway favorites as "Eubie," "Ain't Misbehavin'" and "Mahalia." In 1986, she dazzled off-Broadway critics with a lengthy sell-out in her own show, "On the Couch."

Dubbed the "queen of cabaret," Ms. Lewis' nightclub appearances have spread from New York to Los Angeles, from Monte Carlo to the Bahamas, from Atlantic City to Cape Cod. She toured Europe starring in "Harlem Story" and traveled nationwide performing with Bette Midler.

"For years, college audiences have watched, laughed and cheered Jenifer enthusiastically as she performed her one-woman show, 'From Billie to Lena with Jenifer,'" says a release from UTPB.

This year, she has added another show to her repertoire, a celebration of the Black Magic that has been seen on the Great White Way.

Some of the shows Ms. Lewis highlights were written and composed by blacks, while others featured black casts. All reflected the culture of their times.

Tickets are available in the PASS Office at UTPB and must be purchased by Feb. 23. For more information call 1-367-2125.

Tritt will give concert

ODESSA — Travis Tritt will perform at Ector County Coliseum at 8:30 p.m. Feb. 14, Valentine's Day.

"Travis Tritt is a rising star who performs a new and exciting blend of country music geared for the '90s," says a release from Evelyn Shriver Public Relations firm, Nashville, Tenn.

His first singe, "Country Club," was released on Warner Bros. in August 1989 and rose straight to the Top 10 on the country singles chart, rare for a debut single and a new artist.

Tritt, born and raised in Marietta, Ga., began his musical career as a soloist in his neighborhood church. Expanding his musical tastes in later years, Tritt was influenced by the "outlaw" movement in country music as well as Southern rock including the Allman Brothers and Lynyrd Skynyrd.

His debut album on Warner Bros. Records, also called "Country Club," will be released this month. His follow-up single, "Help Me Hold On," a song co-written by Tritt, was released in January.

Strait to perform at rodeo

HOUSTON (AP) — Country-western singers George Strait, Willie Nelson, Alabama and newcomer Clint Black along with comedian Bill Cosby head the list of performers at next month's Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo, officials have announced.

Strait, a popular attraction during the annual two-week rodeo, will be performing Feb. 21 and Feb. 22.

"We're very pleased that Strait has agreed to do two shows this year," said Dan Gaddis, general manager of the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo. "We're very appreciative of that because we've been selling out so fast every year and this will give more of the public a chance to come."

Cosby, he said, had concerns about being able to perform in the Astrodome. He is scheduled for Feb. 26.

The rodeo opens Feb. 18 with Black, a native of nearby Katy, and runs through March 4 with a performance by Alabama.

Another star attraction includes The Highwaymen — a quartet of Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Johnny Cash and Kris Kristofferson — on March 3.

Others set to perform include The Judds, Conway Twitty, George Jones, Chicago, Rodney Crowell, Restless Heart, Ricky Van Shelton and Steve Wariner.

Also Vikki Carr, Roberto Pulido y Los Classicos, Emilio & Rio, The Oak Ridge Boys, Patti LaBelle, James Ingram, Expose, Lisa Lisa & Cult Jam, Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Tanya Tucker and Anne Murray.

Winners selected in young artists' competition

From Staff Reports

A distinguished panel of judges selected four outstanding young musicians ranging in age from 13 to 23 as performing wnners of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's 28th annual National Young Artist Competition held at Midland College the last weekend in January.

Over 40 contestants from throughout the United States competed for $8,000 in prize money with the four performing winners also receiving an opportunity to perform with the Midland-Odessa Symphony on its March 6 and 8 regular subscription series concerts.

One of the few competitions in the country to have both a secondary school and college division, contestants competed in the categories of piano, strings and winds as well as a voice category in the college divisions.

Pianist Sayaka Tanikawa was selected as the performing winner in the secondary division. Winners in the college division were tenor Michael galanter, alto saxophonist Patrick Falso and violinist Kai Glewsteen.

One of the youngest competitors, 13-year-old Sayaka Tanikawa is a student at Edgemont Junior High in Scarsdale, N.Y., and studies with Machiko Noriniko. A veteran of the concert stage, she won the grand prize at the UCLA-Samick Piano Competition in 1989 and was a finalist at the YKAA Competition in Michigan in 1987-88. Miss Tainkawa performed Prokofiev's Piano Concerto No. 3, Opus 26 at the Jan. 27 competition.

Tenor Michael Galanter, 19, studies at the Juilliard School in New York City with Enrico DiGiuseppe. His awards and honors include being first place winner in the New Jersey State Opera Featival and Monmouth Civic Chorus Voice Competition and finalist in the Macallister Awards Voice Competition.

He received the New Jersey's Governor's Award for Excellence in Opera and the Susan W. Rose Scholarship from the Juilliard School.

For the NYAC finals, Galanter performed "E lucevan le stelle" by Puccini and Leonard Bernstein's "Something's Coming" from "West Side Story."

Alto saxophonist Patrick Falso, 21, performed "Ballade pour Saxophone" by Frank Martin at the competition finals. He is a senior at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., where he studies with Dr. Fred hemke.

He has been a soloist with the Northwestern Symphony Orchestra and Interlochen Arts Academy Band. He has received various regional and state awards with the Pennsylvania Music Educators Association.

Originally from Calgary, Canada, violinist Kai Glewsteen, a 23-year-old student at Rice University, currently studies with Camilla Wicks. Glewsteen was selected as a NYAC winner with his performance of Walton's Concerto for Violin in A minor. A Rhodes Scholar at the university of Michigan, he has won first prize in concerto competitions in Houston, Ann Arbor, Mich., Australia, Scotland and Canada.

Judges for the competition were pianist Jose Feghali, Roger Jacobi, past president of the Interlochen Center for the Arts, violinist Norman Paulu, soprano Blanche Thebom and pianist Albertine Votapek.

The NYAC was founded in 1962 by Lara Hoggard, then music director and conductor of the MOSC, to help launch the careers of talented young musicians. Since that time, the competition has had winners who have made major solo careers and those who have become prominent in the music world. The NYAC is hosted in alternate years by the Midland and Odessa symphony guilds.

The money this year for cash awards and administrative expenses has been provided by the Beal Foundation, Mrs. W.D. Noel, Mrs. Raiford Burton, The Davidson Family Charitable Foundation, Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Earle R. Bruno, Dr. and Mrs. John E. Bauman, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Fullinwider, Dr. and Mrs. Patrick Leung, Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Anguish, Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Anson, Mr. and Mrs. M.O. Boring Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Jones and the Midland Symphony Guild.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You are on the right track where your career is concerned. A little more derring-do will pay big dividends! Studying for an advanced degree boosts your earning potential. Travel and good health go hand-in-hand. Take an overdue vacation or trip in October. Comparison shopping will help you beat the high cost of living. A stay-at-home Christmas promises to be one of your happiest holidays in years.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Barbara Hershey, quarterback Roger Staubach, slugger Hank Aaron, comedian Red Buttons.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Major gains are on the horizon but you will have to work longer hours. Complete work projects on time. A hobby could lead to a second income. Keep in touch with parents.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Sound advice is yours for the asking. Keep in touch with former employers. Joint endeavors go well but could still slow you down. A bit of mystique makes you more attractive romantically.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Let loved ones know how much you care. Help a friend who has a family emergency. Computer courses speed progress at home or at work. Do nothing to upset a sensitive acquaintance or relative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A more relaxed atmosphere boosts your productivity. Try to be more flexible with co-workers and family members. A loving gesture quickly heals bruised feelings. Romance should be happy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your keen intuition helps you make all the right moves today. Your recent indecision comes to an abrupt end. Productivity rises. Expect a bonus or other award. Romantic partner is supportive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The fewer personal questions you answer today, the better. Mate helps you find your true purpose in life. Children influence an important decision. Try a new tactic if pursuing a job. Romance beckons.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You play a more important role at work than certain people realize. Turn down invitations that involve spending money. You will not enjoy something you cannot afford. Entertain at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investigate stock tips from well-intentioned friends or relatives. A "sure thing" may be anything but. It is only natural to feel ambivalent about a relationship that has had its ups and downs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Business takes a backseat to romance. Your whole world narrows down to just two people. Postpone non-essential appointments. Get away from your home base and do something really different.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You will increase your effectiveness by becoming part of a team. Give loved ones the independence they need. A writer has wonderful luck with a first work of fiction.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pursue your goals even if influential business people prove difficult to reach today. Large organizations bring you luck. Romantic partner could set off fireworks. Apologize for making a mistake.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Beware of someone who makes promises to extract a favor. Mixing business with pleasure will bring more trouble than happiness now. Turn down any invitation that will cost you money.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Opening lead: Three of ♠

The magician astounds the audience with clever tricks, which are really quite simple to perform. Similarly, the feats of the bridge expert have a simple explanation. Often, it involves no more than counting.

When a hand is suitable in other respects, a five-card major is no bar to opening one no trump. South wisely chose that bid because the intermediate cards, together with a five-card suit, made the hand worth more than its 15 high-card points. With a solid source of tricks in clubs, North's raise to game was automatic.

Since the opponents had not explored a major-suit fit, West elected to lead his fourth-best spade and declarer took East's king with the ace. Next came the jack of clubs, covered by the queen and taken by the king. East's diamond discard was a lethal blow. There was no way for declarer to set up his long clubs. He had to be satisfied with three tricks in the club suit and a one-trick defeat when diamonds produced a second trick.

Declarer was unlucky to run into a rare 4-0 club split and his play was correct had he needed six club tricks for his contract. But with four sure tricks in the other suits, five club tricks were all that were required to fulfill the game. There was a simple way to assure that. At rubber bridge, declarer should simply have allowed East's queen of clubs to win the first trick in the suit!

Duplicate is another matter. A specific 4-0 break is about 20-to-1 against. It's not worth giving up a trick in a normal contract to protect against such a long shot.

Spillane says he always writes punch line first

By GEORGE CHRISTY
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — "I write the ending first. Always. And that didn't get blown away, but the rest of my manuscript did," says Mickey Spillane about his 13th Mike Hammer novel (all told, he has written 24 books). Mickey was talking about Hurricane Hugo devastating his beach house in Murrell's Inlet, a fishing village in South Carolina.

"We had 6 feet of debris and water inside, one of my boats ended up in the living room and a pelican took up residence in the bathroom.

"We live south of Myrtle Beach and north of Charleston, and it's as if Godzilla walked over us. We ate K rations, which I've always liked. Matter of fact, I've never met a meal in the service I didn't go for — I was a pilot with the Air Force, enlisted the day after the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, trained fighter pilots and flew combat missions."

Mickey remembers writing in the late '30s for the "pulps" and "slicks" (magazines) and comic books such as "Captain America" and "Captain Marvel" — "always made my living by writing, but now that I'm 72, I can't concentrate straight through for a full day. I'll work four hours during the morning, then four or five hours at night, usually put in an eight- to 10-hour day, but I quit when I know what's going to happen next, so I won't face a blank page the next day."

He proudly relates he's the fifth most translated writer in the world — "after Lenin, Tolstoy, Gorky and Jules Verne. No, I don't do any research. I sit and dream it all up. But my writing isn't of any great importance. It's entertaining, and people like to be entertained."

"Manuscripts are sent to me for advice, and I can tell whether they're worth reading after looking at one page. You'd think some of these writers were describing brain surgery — a lot of words, a lot of pages, and they call that a book?...I keep hearing plot is the most important thing when you're writing. I disagree. Characterization's more important."

— Author Mickey Spillane

MICKEY AND his wife Jane (of six years) came to town in behalf of his latest Mike Hammer thriller, "The Killing Man," and they were enjoying lunch at Toscana, where Mickey couldn't understand why the best Italian olive oil is called "extra virgine" — "hell, that's a redundancy."

He laughs that he'll eat anything, even airplane food, but loves Mrs. Smith's pies — "Why bake pies when you can get them this good, from deep-dish apple to blueberry."

He offers that his favorite Los Angeles hangout was the now-gone Cock and Bull — "One morning I flew here just to have the deviled ribs and went back to South Carolina the same day."

He muses about how long Jane has known him, when he was a neighbor of her family's at the inlet and she was a kid, playing in the yard, swimming or jumping off the pier and her parents wouldn't allow her to read Mickey's "dirty books." She went off to college, married, divorced, returned to South Carolina, vowed she'd never wed again.

"We got together gradually," confesses Mickey. "I'd ask if she needed to go to the post office to pick up any mail. Or to the grocery or hardware stores, and I'd offer her a ride in my pickup truck. Finally, I asked her out to dinner, and we'd sometimes drive out to the garbage dump, where we courted. Speaking of garbage, would you believe tourists come by and steal my old beer cans for souvenirs."

He moans that they've been on the road too long promoting "The Killing Man." "The only trip I like is going home. Jane loves to get away to the North Carolina mountains, but I like the Florida Keys in the summertime and enjoy winter in the North, with the leaves turning in Vermont. I like snow and ice and skiing.

"MANUSCRIPTS ARE sent to me for advice, and I can tell whether they're worth reading after looking at one page. You'd think some of these writers were describing brain surgery — a lot of words, a lot of pages, and they call that a book?

"There are tricks with books. You can't have a page of solid type, it looks terrible. You need dialogue to break the text into an easy-to-read pattern. A sense of pacing. And mood. I keep hearing plot is the most important thing when you're writing. I disagree. Characterization's more important.

"I bang with two fingers on an old Smith Corona manual typewriter, had 11 of them, but am now down to four. Whenever I spot one in a hock shop, I buy it and cannibalize it for its parts. You can't find parts anymore for the manual machines.

"I feel I'm really typing with the manuals, can hit them as hard as I like, and bells ring. You barely touch an electric typewriter, and it jumps for the moon. I like a brown ribbon and type on yellow paper.

"Why do I write the ending first? It's like the punch line of a joke — you have to know what you're building to.

"I'm all for heroes, and heroes never die. Mike Hammer's had a good run, with Biff Elliott, Ralph Meeker, Darren McGavin, Stacy Keach. We're now discussing a movie of 'The Killing Man,' and Jay Bernstein's my buffer with the film people.

"I LIKE movies like 'Robocop' and 'Terminator' — if they aren't killing people up there on the screen, I leave.

"But Jane and I aren't stay-out-late people. We eat supper by 5 o'clock, but here in L.A. it's 9 o'clock. Too late, but that's when friends like to eat. Usually we're in bed at home by 10 o'clock. Where we live, if you go out for a breakfast of sausages and biscuits by 6 a.m., people wonder why you're so late and where you've been.

"I'm not one for cities, New York tries to destroy you. You can't find a place to sit down when you're tired. Where I live you can park yourself on the grass. Besides, New York people are flaky, but then L.A. people are, too.

"In New York they scurry like ants into a hole in the ground, then come up and hide in their caves. They don't want to know their neighbors, won't ever help you get rid of your garbage. I say wrap your garbage as a gift and leave it in your car, and they'll take it every time. All those New York rich people with their showy display of wealth do nothing for me.

"The Bible's right about the love of money being the root of evil. Donald Trump has a yacht so big in Palm Beach he can't get it up his dock, and they won't dredge the dock for him.

"Today, everyone wants more and more, but then you have a hurricane and see it all go. Anyway, if you haven't used something for a year, throw it away."

HE RECALLS that when he wrote "I, the Jury" in 1946-47, he received an advance of $1,000, and for "The Killing Man," his advance was $1.5 million.

Widow tells Civil War vet's story

"Oldest Living Confederate Widow Tells All," by Allan Gurganus. Knopf. 718 Pages. $21.95.

By M.R. AIG
Associated Press

Imagine living through the Civil War and surviving until the latter part of this century.

History has no better spokesman than the common man — or woman, in this case.

A Review

And, technically, Lucy Marsden, born 1885, didn't live through the Civil War herself, but she married a man who took to war at 13, saw his best friend killed and came home a Confederate hero, living out his long life as a public figure — even when he had no idea what was going on.

Allan Gurganus has made Lucy an American Everywoman in his lengthy and detailed saga of her life in the South, from her marriage to The Captain when she was a mere 15, through her nine children, more wars, disasters left and right, until she is settled, at age 99, in a charity home.

Age doesn't dim Lucy's irascible self, which comes through in her ungrammatical, sometimes wandering, but nonetheless determined recounting of her life.

The Civil War was her war because it was The Captain's, and she tells his sad story as if it were her own. Her own life has always taken a backseat to his, until his own life becomes a shadow of living and Lucy proves her own strength without having to hide behind matrimonial courtesy.

"Oldest Living Confederate Widow Tells All" is a funny, sharp and often touching tale told with all the eccentricities of its heroine neatly intact.

Stephen King's 'The Dark Half' provides mystery, mayhem, gore

"The Dark Half," by Stephen King. Viking. 431 Pages. $21.95.

By WILLIAM J. CASTELLO
Associated Press

Every creative person relies on an inner self to drive his expressions into art. Often, the inner self is a stranger. Sometimes, it is "the dark half."

A Review

Thadeus Beaumont is a mildly successful author of romance novels. He is also a man with a dark secret in his past. His work pays the bills for his wife and himself, but that's all. Within him is living a creative spirit that emerges and pens gory crime novels under the pseudonym of George Stark. His novels about a brutal killer named Alexis Machine are wildly successful and rocket the Beaumonts to affluence.

When Beaumont writes as George Stark, however, a strange transformation comes over him. Upon the birth of their twins and the revelation of Stark's true identity to the public by an outside source, the Beaumonts decide to bury, once and for all, Stark and all his unpleasant attributes. The story begins as Stark supposedly ends.

This novel is brilliantly written in the style of King's earlier books. It is mysterious and inviting, horrible and witty, and it seems to be the personal fantasy of an author whom the public found to have a dark half in the form of Richard Bachman. It is a study in alter ego and the mysterious bond of twins.

King again proves to be a master of the macabre and a storyteller of extraordinary skill. This tale is told on many levels and from several perspectives, giving the imagination a multicamera effect during the reading of this dark piece.

King is back in full stride, providing his fans with a good dose of the mystery, mayhem and gore in which they revel.

Do you have a dark half somewhere within, or are you the product of someone else's imagination?

Read "The Dark Half" and hope not!

McMurtry novel like roller coaster ride

"Some Can Whistle," by Larry McMurtry. Simon & Schuster. 348 Pages. $19.95.

By M.R. Aig
Associated Press

Reading a Larry McMurtry novel is akin to riding a roller coaster.

There's a slow start and then the gradual rising and falling, until the final plummeting, falling so fast that your heart stops and you grab hold so tightly that your knuckles whiten.

A Review

You know it's coming, but you can never prepare enough for it.

While McMurtry's Pulitzer Prize-winning "Lonesome Dove" was a series of such rides, his new book is just a single trip, so beautifully crafted that the final descent is as devastating to the reader as it is to the characters.

Danny Deck is a famous writer whose long-running TV series has left him money to burn.

Living in a splendid Texas house with an eccentric housekeeper and a bisexual scholar working on the influence of Euripides on the Rolling Stones, Deck is a recluse, aloof from the outside world until a phone call links him to a daughter he has never seen.

T.R., his 22-year-old child, charges full speed into his life, bringing her own two small children and an assortment of characters, all of whom are willing to make haystacks of Deck's cash and burn it for him.

Deck embraces his long-lost child and her joie de vivre, in spite of the hardships she has had.

She, in turn, struggles to accept his love as sincere, since he has such a hard time showing it and she has only dreamed about her fantasy father.

Everyone seems, and is, happy — for a time — until McMurtry's inevitable twist.

McMurtry is such a good writer that you forgive him everything — especially since he tends to give us real life over the novels that let everyone live happily ever after.

He has again triumphed here.

THE BOOM THE BUST THE BALANCE

Midland and the Eighties....the bust and the boom....a look at the Midland peak growth period in the mid-eighties, the years leading up to it, and the economic bust following the oil price collapse. How the city and its people reacted to the bust. It was a case where Midlanders once again proved they are people with spirit in a town where down does not mean out . . .

Areas to be explored:

- The slow climb back to economic stability.
- Prospects for the 1990's.
- A history of the Permian Basin petroleum industry throughout the 1980's, from pre-boom to post-bust, and a look at what's ahead.
- Political activism comes to the basin; the result, a completely new approach to local government. How single-member district voting is changing city, school and other local governments.
- Business growth. The long-awaited development of retail business in the Tall City.
- How Midlanders opened their pocketbooks to spark tremendous civic achievement in the 1980's.
- Midland's business, economic, petroleum and governmental leaders look at what they believe is ahead for Midland in the 1990's.
