Story sounds like modern 'Grapes of Wrath'

HEMATITE, Mo. (AP) — Half a century after the Great Depression, a former oil-field roustabout was preparing to put his three young sons to bed beside a rural highway.

It was the last stop of the day for Perry and Carolyn Archer in a desperate search for work that started six weeks ago when Archer lost his job in Phoenix, Ariz.

Fortunately, the roadside scene just south of St. Louis last Friday evening touched the hearts of two passing motorists, Gene and Mary Glover, who stopped to help.

"I just wanted to help the kids. They were all huddled down on the side of the road, getting ready to spend the night," Mrs. Glover said Wednesday in a telephone interview. "Two of the children were in diapers."

Glover, a truck salesman, put the three boys, ages 4, 2, and 10 months, into his car and persuaded the family to come home with them, where they set up cots in the basement.

Directors of charitable organizations in the South and Midwest report a growing stream of families taking to the road in search of survival.

"It's changing from before when you had single men," said Michael Klein, director of family services for the Salvation Army in St. Louis.

Klein said families typically are being uprooted after the husband loses his job and the family is unable to keep up mortgage payments on their home.

Many are lured from depressed northern industrial states by the prospects in Sun Belt states like Texas.

"We've seen an unusual increase over our normal out-of-state people," said Carol Frank, director of social services for the Salvation Army in Dallas.

"People are coming here with a storybook picture of Dallas only to find there are limitations on our resources," she said. "We try to be generous, but there are certain realities."

Mrs. Frank said the Salvation Army sleeps up to 150 people every night at its shelter and has seen a 25 percent increase in its transient population recently. Others sleep in cars, tents or in parks.

The problem, she said, is that most job opportunities in Dallas are for skilled positions while the majority of the jobless are blue collar workers. Once they experience the limitations of Dallas, some families go on to other communities. Others return home, preferring to be miserable and broke among friends.

"It almost a repeat of the days of the Grapes of Wrath," said the Rev. Larry Rice, director of the New Life Evangelistic Center in St. Louis. Rice said that more husbands also are leaving their families to take to the road, hitchhiking or hopping freight trains from city to city looking for jobs.

And the dimensions of today's problem may be much larger than is generally realized because the homeless no longer gather in one place.

"We don't have a skid row anymore," Rice said. "The streets aren't safe. They move from city to city now rather than from street to street."

Reagan asks reductions, not freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is trying to blunt a congressional drive for an immediate nuclear arms freeze by saying it would leave the United States dangerously behind the Soviet Union and prompt the Kremlin to spurn real weapons reductions.

Declaring there could be no winner in a nuclear war, he invited the Soviet Union "to join with us now to substantially reduce nuclear weapons and make an important breakthrough for lasting peace."

Reagan told the nation Wednesday night that the freeze proposal by Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would maintain a "definite margin of superiority" favoring the Soviet Union.

"The Soviets' great edge is one in which they could absorb our retaliatory blow and hit us again," he said at a prime-time news conference.

Hatfield and other proponents of an immediate freeze reacted coolly.

"When he talks about the Russians being able to absorb a retaliatory strike, that indicates fantasyland thought or feeling," the Republican senator said.

Reagan threw his support to a rival resolution, backed by a majority in the Senate, that would not block his plans to deploy new strategic bombers, missiles and submarines pending a Soviet-American accord on arms reduction.

Reagan said the proposal, by Sens. John Warner, R-Va., and Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., was "an important move in the right direction."

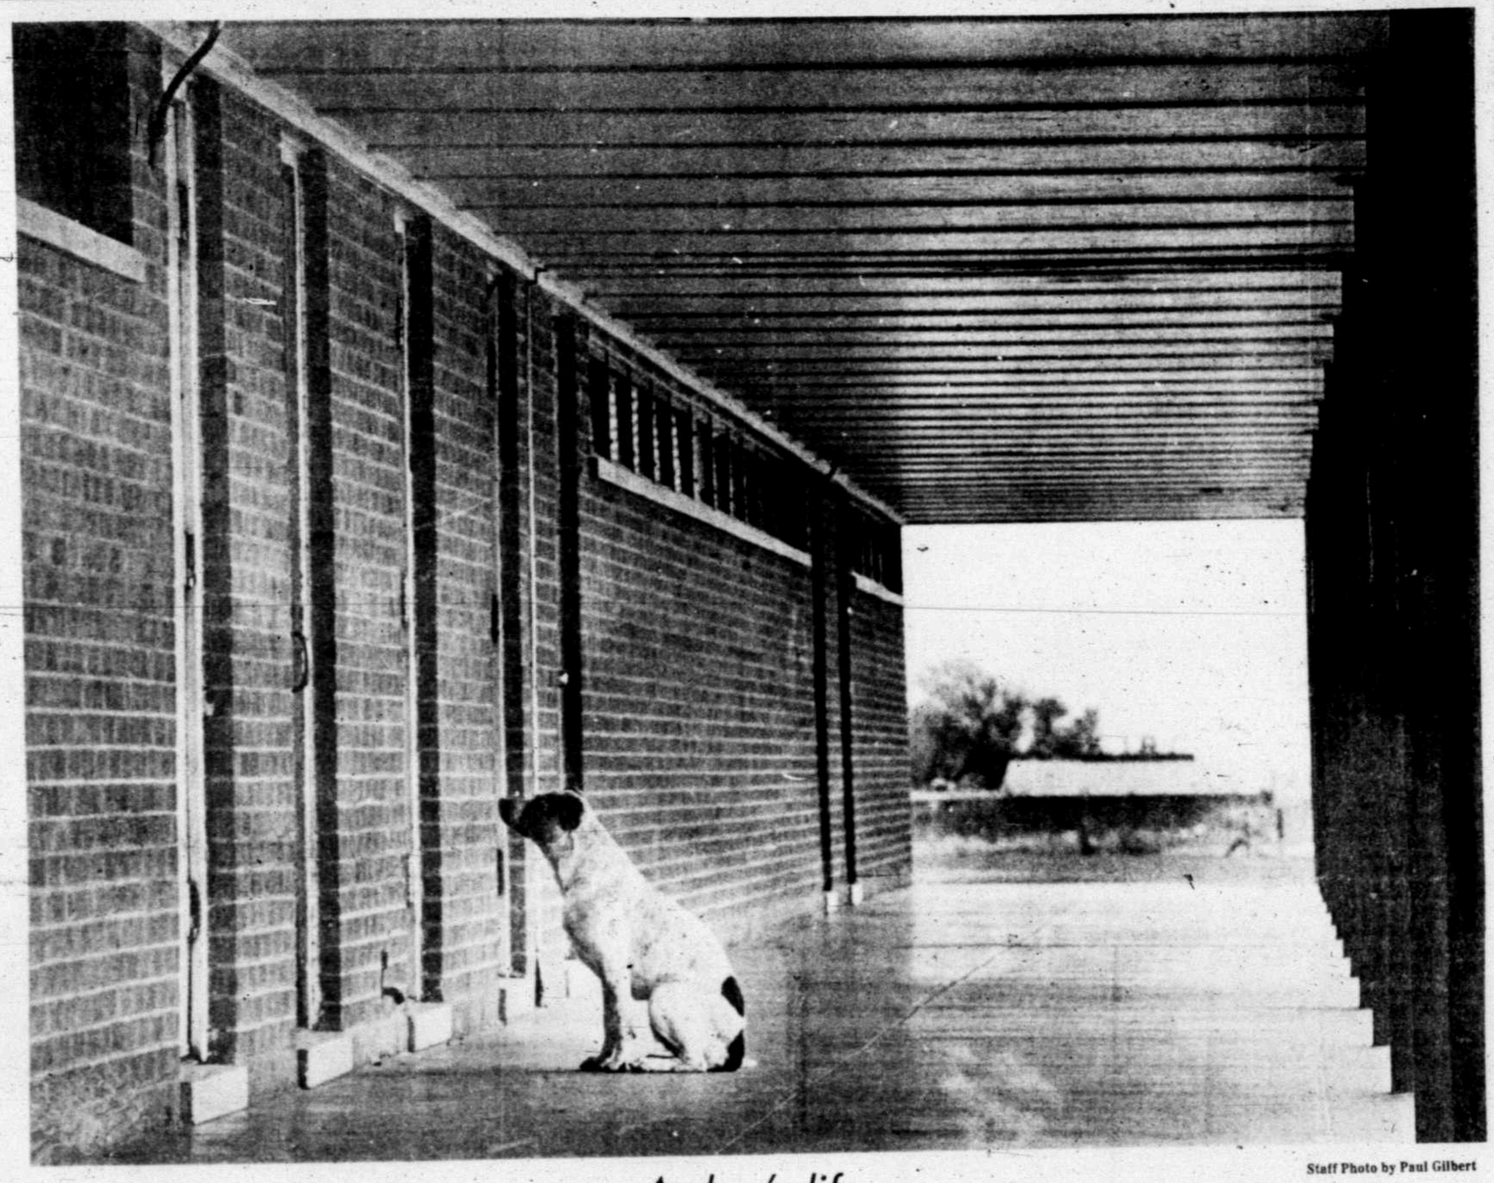

Its call for major, verifiable reductions in U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons to equal force levels are "essential elements of a truly effective arms control agreement," the president said.

Reagan's assertions of a Soviet "margin of superiority" were backed today by Deputy Secretary of State Walter Stoessel, who said on NBC-TV's "Today" show that to ensure a U.S. position of nuclear "inferiority" would "diminish the credibility of our deterrent."

Interviewed on the same program, Kennedy said there was no question on either side that the United States has more than enough nuclear warheads to "completely destroy ... effectively evaporate" the Soviet Union in a retaliatory strike. "So if we can defend ourselves, why not have a freeze?" he asked.

The Kremlin, responding today in a statement broadcast on Radio Moscow, said, "The president supported a speedier buildup of U.S. strategic armaments, including new bombers and ground- and sea-based nuclear missiles.

"Only when that was completed, he said, would his administration begin talks with the Soviet Union on nuclear weapons. This proves President Reagan's intention to break strategic parity and to achieve military superiority over the Soviet Union," the Soviet statement said.

Some city bond proposals may look familiar

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the 12th in a 14-part series examining the candidates and bond issues appearing on the ballot in the April 3 city, school and hospital elections.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

It will be the same song, second verse when voters go to the polls April 3 to decide on expanding City Hall and rebuilding streets, the first two proposals on the $7 million bond package.

In September 1979, Midland voters were faced with the same issues. The question on the City Hall expansion failed miserably while the money for streets squeaked through with only a 100-vote margin.

The $6 million approved in that issue has been used up and Fred Baker is seeking another $3 million for a two-year program in rebuilding major streets. And while $750,000 was requested earlier for expanding City Hall, this time the City Council is asking for $1 million.

Both items are needed, say city officials, because of growth during the past 2½ years.

Caught in the crunch of growth has been City Hall, which was built in 1966 "and was too small when we moved in," said City Manager James Brown. Architect Peter York had designed a five-story, 35,000-square-foot facility to provide city workers with then-needed space, plus some expansion based on a moderate rate of growth.

VOTERS THAT YEAR approved a $500,000 bond package, but it wasn't enough to finance the entire project. So the plan was scaled down to 24,000 square feet and three stories. But the site and building design left the city with the options of either expanding outward or upward, according to Brown. The direction City Hall will take in its expansion will be left up to an architect, which won't be hired until after the bond issue passes, said Brown.

Construction of City Hall cost $475,000 back in 1966 and another $160,000 was needed to add the fourth and fifth floors and make the building to York's specifications. "But the city was in such poor financial condition then, we couldn't afford even that," Brown said.

While the city has grown about 30 percent in population since the 1960s when City Hall was built, personnel also has been added to take care of those multiplying numbers of residents.

Brown noted the planning department started out with two persons in 1966 and today employs 11; the personnel department has mushroomed from the original two employees to its current six. And the building inspections department has expanded from six to 11 employees.

Brown pointed out the latter department issues the building permits "and requests for a record-breaking number of permits has reduced the waiting area to standing room only."

The Customer Service Department, located on the first floor, is undergoing some remodeling to add an area for two telephone operators, who also will serve as City Hall's information center. The city manager pointed out the addition will take a large chunk out of the customer service area.

THE PERSONNEL Department has only one chair for potential employees to fill out forms. And Brown said if a typing test is to be given, they have to pull a secretary off her desk.

A safety and training coordinator has taken over the media's telephone room in the Council Chambers.

The Purchasing Department started out with two persons and now has four — with the two additions housed in closets.

The Tax Office moved out of its second floor slot in City Hall last year to Dellwood Mall and that space is being remodeled for the Planning Department and Finance Office. With the additional space in finance, "We're back to where we started out," Brown said.

And the Planning Department's move gave some elbow space to its people, but no room for growth. "We're full to the hilt right now in the Planning Department. We've utilized all the space the Tax Office left us."

Upstairs, on the third floor and the now vacated Planning Department, that space is being taken up by the director of public utilities and an engineering department, according to the city manager.

THE ENGINEERING AREA was designed for seven persons, but will have 15, he noted. Fred Baker, director of public works, said developers who

Brezhnev resting in Moscow hospital

Leonid Brezhnev

MOSCOW (AP) — Leonid Brezhnev the Soviet Union's ailing, 75-year-old president and Communist Party chief, is resting in a Moscow hospital to recover from a visit to Soviet Asia, unofficial Soviet sources and Western diplomats report.

They indicated the leader of the Soviet Union's ruling Politburo for the past 18 years was not in serious condition. Since his return a week ago, the government-controlled media have published a number of messages and communiques signed by him.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry refused to answer reporters' questions about Brezhnev's health. But the unofficial and diplomatic sources said he was taken to the Kremlin Polyclinic, Moscow's VIP hospital, last Thursday, when he returned from a four-day visit to Tashkent, the capital of Uzbekistan, in Soviet Asia 1,800 miles southeast of Moscow.

Neighbors of the hospital said the street on the west side of the building was closed off Thursday night. Brezhnev was said to be staying in a third-floor suite overlooking the barricaded block.

Witnesses also reported a pair of black Zil limousines parked outside the hospital Thursday night, and Brezhnev is the only member of the 13-man Politburo who travels in a two-Zil motorcade.

Yevgeny Chazov, a cardiologist said to be Brezhnev's personal physician, cancelled an official trip to London Wednesday. His office said the doctor was ill.

In Washington, the State Department said it was "aware of rumors and unconfirmed reports circulating in Moscow" of Brezhnev's hospitalization. The department said it had no confirmation of any of the reports and could neither confirm nor deny them.

Brezhnev's precarious health and the prospects of a power struggle when he dies have been the subject of speculation and discussion in Moscow and foreign capitals for years. He is rumored to suffer from cancer, heart trouble and the after-effects of a stroke. His ailments were believed responsible for a 51-day period of silence about his activities in the winter of 1974-75 and a similar disappearance from public view in March and April 1976.

The Soviet president has had an unusually strenuous schedule for him in the past month.

Chicago Mayor Jane Byrne "high-fives" young blacks outside the entrance to her apartment at the Cabrini-Green housing project in Chicago last year. One year later residents claim the gangs are still present.

A year later, fear remains in Cabrini-Green

CHICAGO (AP) — Gang members still loiter in graffiti-scarred hallways. Some now carry baseball bats instead of guns. But one year after Mayor Jane Byrne's moved into the Cabrini-Green housing project, fear remains the big enemy.

The mayor set up temporary housekeeping at the crime-ravaged project in March 1981 after a bloody gang war exploded, leaving 11 people dead in three months. Mrs. Byrne vowed to remain a Cabrini-Green resident until the frequent shootings stopped and peace was restored.

Three weeks later, saying "crime is almost zilch," at Cabrini, she returned to her posh high-rise apartment on the city's Gold Coast.

A year later, many Cabrini residents say the presence of police and the mayor — who last visited the project in December — brought a brief respite from the bullets, the gangs, the terrorizing of residents, but the days of fear never disappeared.

Others disagree. Some community officials and police say the mayor's stay at Cabrini sparked a turnaround in the community and life is now better for the 13,600 residents of the 26 high-rises and 55 row houses that make up the Near North Side project.

"Life has improved 100 percent," said Commander Dominic Rizzi, head of the police division's public housing force. "I think Cabrini-Green is the safest development in the city." He cited a 60 percent drop in crime there from last May to January.

Yet, even those who believe a change has occurred say fear and gangs remain facts of life.

"I'd say fear is our biggest enemy," Rizzi said. "Unfortunately, fear is a very real thing."

Rizzi and state Rep. Jesse White say gang activity has diminished.

"We still have gangs over there," White said. "There are no ifs, ands or buts about that. The kids are intimidated by some of these young men."

Their mothers are not immune either, said White, who lives a few blocks from the project. A gang member, he said, may tell a mother of a teen-age boy that if she pays $2 a week, her son won't be harmed.

Some mothers who are afraid they won't be able to make "protection payments," send their sons to live with relatives in the south, he said.

Cabrini gangs, White said, have certain buildings as their turf.

"They say to others, 'We run it,' " he said. " ... They do run it when the police aren't around ... If you are from another building, you're in trouble. You are invading their turf."

"The biggest thing going on is drugs being sold there," White said. "You have to give a percentage of your cut to the gangs if you want to do business there."

Third murder trial ordered for Ybarra

Austin Bureau

A third trial on murder charges has been ordered for Danny Orona Ybarra by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, which called the legal assistance given Ybarra in his first trial in Ector County "shockingly ineffective."

Ybarra was convicted Jan. 22, 1971, and sentenced to 99 years in the Oct. 18, 1969, killing of Israel Hinojos, shot to death outside his parents' home.

Ybarra's conviction had been upheld ealier by the appeals court, but the 70th District Court, Ector County, granted him a new trial on June 8, 1981, after agreeing that he had been denied effective assistance of counsel.

Ybarra then pleaded guilty and received a 30-year sentence.

On Wednesday, the appeals court said the Odessa court did not have the authority to grant "an out of time motion for new trial."

However, the appeals court agreed that Ybarra had been denied effective assistance of counsel, and ordered a new trial for him in Ector County.

In its opinion, the appeals court noted that Ybarra's lawyer had stated at the habaes corpus hearing in Odessa that he "was not competent to try the case and "did not give his effective counsel" because of lack of trial experinece.

The attorney was the newest member of the law firm retained to represent Ybarra and had less than 12 hours to prepare for trial.

House Speaker Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts embraces Rebecca Snyder, the current lead in the musical "Annie," during the Democratic Congressional Dinner Wednesday in Washington. The annual $1,000-a-person event benefits the Democratic Congressional and Senatorial Campaign committees.

Senators leave tax break intact through September

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has decided to leave intact a congressional tax break to offset the cost of living in Washington, but the battle over the issue is far from over.

By a narrow vote on Wednesday, the Senate decided to put aside the tax issue, thus allowing a temporary spending measure to be approved and sent to the White House for President Reagan's signature.

The Senate's 81-16 vote on the continuing spending resolution, which already had cleared the House, means that seven government departments will be able to operate through Sept. 30, the end of fiscal 1982.

Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., led a two-day effort to repeal the tax break, which permits members of Congress to deduct $75 daily for each day Congress is in session.

Armstrong said he wanted to have "members of Congress taxed on the same basis as other taxpayers."

In more than 10 separate votes, the Senate supported Armstrong's efforts as the midnight Wednesday spending bill deadline approached.

"This is an absolute travesty," an exasperated Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said at one point. "Once a year we run off the cliff just for the exercise of it."

But by late afternoon, Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., arranged for a procedural vote that allowed the Senate to forgo deciding the merits of the tax issue.

Specifically, the Senate voted 51-48 to declare the repeal proposal out of order because it was unrelated to the spending legislation to which it was attached.

"This will allow them (senators) to show that they voted against the controversial tax benefit even though the net result was that it remains in effect," said one Senate aide who asked not to be named.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he would help find a compromise changing the present law in a way that would meet criticism of a congressional tax break.

Under the law passed last year, members of Congress may chose among three alternatives to reduce the cost of being a legislator in the capital.

The first allows the $75-a-day deduction. The second would allow a $50 daily deduction combined with tax and interest deductions for homeowners. A third sets no limit on Washington expenses so long as they are itemized and documented.

Under the last option, some critics have charged that some members of Congress might escape paying federal income taxes all together.

It was estimated that an average member of Congress would pay about $7,500 less in taxes in 1981 because of the new law that was quietly enacted last fall and winter.

The issue has proven particularly touchy in an election year.

Once the Senate disposed of the tax issue Wednesday, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., indicated he might use the spending bill as the vehicle for a fight over busing for school desegregation.

Helms withdrew his busing proposal but said he would attach it to either supplemental appropriations bill or a government debt limit measure which the Senate must act on when Congress returns from an Easter recess in about 10 days.

Lower highway deaths puzzle government

WASHINGTON (AP) — Deaths on the nation's highways went down last year for the first time since 1974, but the government doesn't know why.

Raymond A. Peck Jr., administrator of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, told a Senate panel Wednesday that fatalities were down nearly 4 percent in 1981 from the previous year.

The agency's statistical branch estimated 49,125 fatalities resulted from car and truck accidents in 1981, compared to 51,091 recorded in 1980, he said.

Peck called this "a significant decline" but gave no reasons for the development. He was not asked about it by members of the Senate Commerce subcommittee on surface transportation.

Questioned on the matter later by a reporter, Ed Pinto, a spokesman for the highway safety administration, said, "We're not sure yet of the reason why. We are studying that. It may turn out that the vehicle miles traveled is down."

During the hearing, Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., chairman of the subcommittee, was more interested in berating Peck about his withdrawal of safety regulations proposed during the Carter administration.

Danforth leveled his most severe criticism at the administration's withdrawal of a proposal to require either air bags or automatic safety belts in cars. "No one seriously denies that this decision ... will result in the deaths of over 9,000 Americans every single year and the disfigurement of countless others," he said.

Peck responded that Danforth was "seriously and grievously mistaken."

Danforth said the agency aggressively worked for consumer protection during past administrations of both parties.

"In barely a year, this can-do spirit has been replaced with an 'un-do' spirit," the senator said. "The list of existing or proposed safety regulations which have been undone in the past year is staggering."

Robber reportedly used microwave

An astute police officer is credited with foiling a convenience store robbery on North Midkiff Road early this morning.

Officer Frank Gonzales said he was on routine patrol when he saw a suspicious-acting man enter the 7-Eleven Store at 3208 N. Midkiff about 1:15 a.m. Gonzales pulled into a parking lot across the street and used binoculars to see what was going on inside the store.

After the man emerged from the store, Gonzales began questioning him on the parking lot of a nearby restaurant when word of a holdup at the 7-Eleven came over the radio. He told the man to place his hands on the patrol car while he radioed for a description of the robbery suspect.

While Gonzales was on the radio, the man allegedly reached into his jacket pocket. Gonzales drew his service revolver and ordered the man to put his hands in the air. A search revealed the man was carrying a .22-caliber starter pistol, according to police.

Store employees said a man had come in and asked about the price of brownies about 12:30 a.m. He then left the store but returned about 45 minutes later, indicated he had a weapon and took a six-pack of beer, two ham and cheese sandwiches and a pack of cigarettes worth a total of $7.38.

Before departing, he began eating the sandwiches after heating them in the store's microwave oven. As he remained in the store, a patrol car drove through the store's parking lot but didn't stop. Store personnel said when the man saw the officer — apparently not Gonzales — drive through, he pulled a pistol and said, "Don't worry, I'll drop the (expletive deleted)."

He then left the store, only to be confronted by Gonzales and placed under arrest. The suspect, a 41-year-old southside resident, was in the city jail this morning, pending the filing of formal aggravated robbery charges later today.

One man was jailed on possession of cocaine charges following a disturbance at the Joker's Lounge, 3704 W. Wall, about 9:55 p.m. Wednesday. Officers said when they attempted to place the 26-year-old man under arrest for disorderly conduct, he took a small bottle from his jacket pocket and threw it away.

Officers said they retrieved the bottle and field-tested a white powdery substance found inside. The test determined the substance to be cocaine, according to police. The man gave a Star Route address and remained in jail this morning.

A woman shot during an argument with another woman Tuesday has been taken off the critical list at Odessa's Medical Center Hospital and now is listed in stable conditon with three or four gunshot wounds to the chest and left arm.

The victim, 58-year-old Ida Mae Ross of 1727 E. Oak Ave., was shot about 5 p.m. Tuesday in a residence at 405 S. Mineola. Arrested at the scene was 55-year-old Ethel Munson Tyler of 1717 Morgan Way. Justice of the Peace Robert Pine set bond of $25,000 on aggravated assault charges Wednesday. Police said the shooting ended a day-long argument between the women.

In a burglary complaint to police, Bobby Torres of 516 Holmsley said two TV sets, an 8-track stereo unit, a clock radio and a CB radio were taken from his residence Wednesday night. Officers said there was no sign of forced entry.

Fire caused by a leaking fuel tank destroyed a 1969 Chevrolet pickup truck owned by John Cowen of 2301 E. Front Ave. The blaze broke out at the intersection of Front and Fairgrounds Road shortly before 9 p.m. Wednesday.

Fire attributed to a plumbing torch heavily damaged the bathroom of an apartment occupied by David Griffin of Sutton Place Apartments, 601 George, about 3:20 p.m. Wednesday. Thirty gallons of water were used to extinguish the blaze and two adjoining apartments sustained water damage.

Shortly after 4 p.m. Wednesday, fire believed caused by an electrical short heavily damaged the bathroom and a hallway of a mobile home owned by David Vincent of John's Trailer Park on Cottonflat Road, about a mile and a half south of Interstate-20. Four fire department units responded to the call and used 500 gallons of water in bringing the blaze under control.

Symphony general manager resigns

Woodward

Sam Woodward resigned Wednesday as general manager of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale.

Woodward, who joined the symphony in September 1979, was the first professional manager in the Symphony and Chorale's history.

"I am leaving to enter the private sector of this community," Woodward said late this morning in explaining why he was leaving his post. "I intend to be very active in the arts and I will continue to work for the Midland-Odessa Symphony on a volunteer basis."

The symphony's activities have grown from six to nine subscription concert pairs, developed a regular concert series in Big Spring and inaugurated a "Cabaret Pops" winter series of light concerts.

"My experience in the past 2½ years has led me to believe that the ongoing success in the field of culture and arts is guaranteed by the nature of the dynamism of the two communites of Midland and Odessa. I commend the activities of the Symphony and other cultural efforts to continue to grow for the improvement of the quality of life in the most unique part of the country," Woodward said in a prepared statement.

Gusty winds expected in area Friday

Gusty winds are expected to breeze through the city Friday with continued warm afternoons.

According the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, gusts traveling 20-30 mph are expected for Friday.

It should be partly cloudy tonight, becoming fair and windy Friday with warm afternoons and mild nights.

Low tonight should be in the middle 50s, climbing to the upper 70s on Friday.

Winds are expected to be southerly 10-15 tonight, shifting westerly and increasing Friday to 20-30 mph with gusts and blowing dust.

Wednesday's high of 77 fell 20 degrees short of the record high of 97 set in 1946, but the overnight low of 54 was quite pleasant compared to the record low of 29 set in 1936.

Leadership Midland Alumni group says propositions essential to future

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

After hearing a presentation on the city and school bond issues last week, members of Leadership Midland Alumni group today departed from their normal impartial stand by endorsing all the propositions.

During a news conference this morning in the Chamber of Commerce, Alumni President Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer annouced the group's support of the issues, calling each of the propositions "critical" to Midland's future growth and development.

The city's bond issues total $7 million with the money going to construct two fire substations, remodel the Public Safety Building, expand City Hall, add on to the Vehicle Maintenance Building and rebuild major thoroughfares. The city's $9.475 million bond issue is designated to construct two elementary schools and 20 additional classrooms at existing schools.

While the group's constitution prohibits the organization from becoming involved in partisan politics, said Seltzer, it doesn't eliminate endorsing a bond issue. "After listening to presentations by (Councilman) Steve Davidson and (school board president) Parker Humes, we decided we could endorse both issues," he added.

"It is the feeling of the alumni group that due to the unprecedented growth experienced in the city, each of the school and city bond proposals is needed," Seltzer said. He contended that neither school nor bond issue includes any frills "and the passage of these minimum requirements is essential if Midlanders wish to continue to enjoy educational and city services at the level of proficiency which we all expect."

Seltzer pointed out the alumni group was formed in 1979 after the first Leadership Midland class concluded its training. The LM classes, sponsored jointed by the chamber and Midland College, focus on teaching selected professional persons about the community and its needs. "Peole who are alumni are involved in the community and care about the needs of the community," he explained.

Stressing that Leadership Midland Alumni isn't "a political action group," Seltzer said, "As a group representing some current and potential future community leaders, the Alumni group feels compelled to inform other citizens of the urgent need to approve each of the bond issues being proposed."

Appearing with Seltzer was Alumni member Jumper Davis and Councilman Davidson.

The bond election is included on the ballot in Saturday's election.

City salaries take 17 percent jump

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Starting today, most city employees will be making 17 percent more money than they were a year ago year at this time.

The city council last week approved recommendations made by an outside group commissioned to study city pay in the wake of high employee turnover rates in various city departments, notably the police department, which went public early last fall with complaints about low pay and a growing personnel shortage.

City Manager James Brown said original fiscal plans called for a 6 percent increase last Oct. 1, with another 6 percent to come today. Instead, employees received a 12 percent hike Oct. 1 and will get another 5 percent today.

This brings the total increase for fiscal 1982 to 17 percent. The extra 5 percent general increase was recommended by the study, said Brown.

Excluded from the 5 percent hike, suggested by James Yarger and Associates, are administrative officials and department heads, according to Brown, who said in addition to the 5 percent general increase, certain job classifications are being upgraded as a result of the study.

Chief of Police Wayne Gideon said today the increased pay "most definitely" has improved morale and stabilized the department's turnover rate. "We're at full strength now," he added. "The officers are thrilled to death."

City bond proposals may seem familiar

are discussing their plans with the engineers "don't want everyone else to hear. We wind up with a lot of people in on a conversation. As a result, developers are reluctant to give us all the information we need."

Brown noted the conference room in the basement will be turned into an Emergency Operating Center later this year, leaving the Council Chambers as the only meeting room option available for various boards and commissions, as well as staff training sessions, orientations and other conference needs.

And City Hall has only one reproduction area for one machine. "This more often than not prohibits clerical employees in all areas from making efficient use of time," Brown said.

And part of the overcrowding in City Hall comes from the need to store records, he added. "City Hall has a cluttered look all the time with all the stuff stacked around.

"We've lost personnel because of this overcrowding," Brown said. He cited the example of employees in the Tax Office who moved to bigger quarters at Dellwood Mall and their attitude became more pleasant.

If Proposition 1 on the bond issue fails, Brown said the alternative will be to rent space. "When you pay rent, you get nothing for it. And you have to run citizens all over town" because the price of office space downtown is too expensive for the city to pay.

ALTHOUGH THE COUNCIL designated almost $1 million in the current budget for street improvements, another $3 million is needed to bring some major streets in line with their increased usage, and this item constitutes Proposition 2 on the ballot.

The lion's share of the money will go to rebuilding sections of three major thoroughfares — Illinois, Midkiff and Midland Drive. According to Baker, these streets have been impacted by the increasing traffic amounts. Built in the 1950s, "they weren't designed for that traffic load. The streets weren't salvageable by overlaying or some other remedial work."

A sanitary sewer system report will tell the city officials where new sewer lines need to be placed along these streets before the road work is done, Baker said.

He pointed out that the Garfield section which stretches from Michigan to Haynes street was designed as a residential street. Today, it's a major thoroughfare.

"These are the prime parts of the street system in immediate need of reconstruction," he added.

This $3 million will be added to the $800,000-plus in the 1981-82 budget. That money, said Baker, is designated for resurfacing some downtown streets, such as Texas and A Street.

"Any funds left over from the bond sale will be applied to other areas of streets and drainage that are high priority because of traffic or the condition of the roadway. The $3 million will take care of part of the priorities" and is about all that can be accomplished over the next two years.

BAKER POINTED OUT that contractors are busy with Loop 250 assessment paving and subdivision development. "They can't handle a lot of additional work," he said.

In addition, he said, the city doesn't want to put several major thoroughfares out of commission at the same time while being reworked.

If the bond issue doesn't pass, only remedial work can be done on those streets to "provide a more acceptable level of service. But it would be only short-term work with the funds available."

Growth in Midland will continue for the next few years, Baker prophesied, and that means more rehabilitation of city streets. City officials are reluctant to plan too many years in the future on a street bond issue because location of developments may change traffic patterns. What is a busy street today may see fewer cars on it in five years, he noted.

Leftover funds also will be used to correct drainage problems that may become apparent once a development is finished and one of the Southwest's 100-year rains comes down.

"It's possible a highly-traveled street, such as Wadley, may need some storm sewer attached to it once the developments are in," Baker said.

Friday: Police, fire and vehicle maintenance on the city bond issue.

Six polling places designated

Six locations have been designated polling places for registered voters who want to voice their opinion in Saturday's city-wide elections.

The precincts and polling places are as follows:

—Precincts 306, 208, 206: Fire Station No. 3, 1710 N. Edwards Drive.

—Precincts 307, 104, 402, 205, 204: Senior Citizen Center, Delano Street and Circle Drive.

—Precincts 403, 207, 404: Fannin Elementary School, 2400 Fannin.

—Precincts 105, 106, 103, 102: Fire Station No. 6, Thomason Drive and Midland Drive.

—Precincts 405, 408, 406, 407: Lee High School, 3500 Neely.

—Precincts 305, 304: South Elementary School, 200 W. Dakota.

—Precinct 202, Greenwood High School. Voters in this precinct will mark their ballots in the hospital election, in addition to voting on trustees for their school board.

Precinct numbers are indicated on the voter registration cards.

The City Secretary's office will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturday to provide voting information. Call 683-4281, extension 235.

Temple says White favors increase in oil, gas tax

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Attacking both his Democratic Primary opponent and the incumbent, gubernatorial candidate Buddy Temple held a brief news conference this morning at Midland Regional Airport.

A former eight-year veteran of the Texas House of Representatives and a current railroad commissioner, Temple said that he would be "committed as governor to operate Texas with existing revenues" while attorney general Mark White, also a Democratic candidate for the governor's office, is "for new taxes."

"Mark White is the number one advocate of increasing the state's oil and gas severance tax and, in fact, demanded that Gov. Bill Clements add the tax hike to the call of last summer's special legislative session," he said. "We don't need new taxes."

Temple, in a press release, claimed White wanted a severance tax increase to retaliate against the state of Montana's 30 percent severance tax on coal. A similar severance tax on oil and gas in Texas would increase the average motorist's taxes from about $25 to $80 annually, said Temple.

"Mark White's idea of getting back at Montana coal producers is to burden Texans with new taxes," said Temple. "That's a ludicrous idea and something that I'll oppose at every step."

Temple admitted that when he entered the gubernatorial race two months ago he trailed White by 25 percentage points, but said that "today, Mark White and I are in a virtual dead heat." He noted, however, that regardless of who is selected as Clements' opponent in the November election, "I don't think anyone can approach (Clements') level of spending for the campaign."

He stressed, however, that "the voters of Texas are clearly displeased with Gov. Clements," and epitomized him as an "arrogant, uncaring person" whose "growling, snarling, mean-government approach" was not aligned with the personality of Texas citizens. The governor has reflected this attitude, said Temple, most intensely in the fields of public education and crime.

"He has attacked our public school teachers," he said. "He fought pay increases...saying (teachers) are lazy and incompetent."

Temple said Texas has a "constitutional responsibility and a moral responsibility" to provide its young people with the best education possible. "If you don't have that quality teacher in the classroom, you're not going to have quality education," he noted.

He said one way to ensure quality teachers is to increase the pay scale to make it competitive with that of other professions in the state.

As for a solution to the growing crime rate, Temple said that the state must "go back to the basics. We've got to put more policemen on the street, more prosecutors in the courtroom. Swift justice is the best deterrent against those violating the law."

Temple also said the state's prison system is in dire straits, and that both short-term and long-term action must be taken. "We've clearly got to build more prison cells," he said. "Judges all over the state privately admit they give probation to many offenders simply because they know there's not enough room in prison system for them."

He suggested that persons convicted of non-violent crimes be placed in halfway houses, and that the parole system be reformed.

When Temple was in Midland a few weeks ago, he attacked Clements' guest-worker proposal as a solution to the illegal alien dilemma, and indicated his own plan would be forthcoming shortly. However, this morning he had different thoughts on the matter.

"I made the mistake, like so many people, of assuming that just because our immigration laws weren't being enforced, that they couldn't be enforced," he said. "Now I believe that we can enforce our immigration laws...but you're not going to solve the illegal alien problem simply by legalizing illegal aliens."

Temple stressed, however, that the state is virtually helpless in dealing with the root of the problem, since it lies in another country.

"The ultimate solution is on the other side of the border," he said, explaining that as long as the economy in Mexico makes the United States seem attractive, illegal aliens will continue their influx into the nation to some extent.

He added, however, that "with greater effort we can disrupt that."

Workers move the body of a drowned Haitian into a refrigerated truck at the Broward County Medical Examiner's office in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Wednesday. Despite the claims of six survivors that only 10 people were aboard the Esperancia, which was wrecked Sunday, officials believe all 21 bodies which have washed ashore since were people on the boat.

Officials still looking for bodies after wreck

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — All six known survivors of a Haitian shipwreck say only 10 people were aboard, but already 21 bodies have washed ashore and officials fear they might find more.

"We don't have any idea of how many more (bodies) are out there. So we're just sitting here watching the beach," said Patrolman John Ballard of Hillsboro Beach, where five bodies presumed to be those of would-be Haitian refugees have come ashore in the past three days.

Authorities say the bodies of 21 people — 13 men, seven women and one whose sex is still unknown — have been recovered since 15-foot seas washed over Florida's southeast coast Sunday night, sinking the Esperancia. The bodies have been found along a 10-mile stretch of the exclusive Gold Coast from Highland Beach to Pompano Beach.

The wooden-hulled freighter left Port-au-Paix in northern Haiti on March 4. Engine trouble forced it to spend two weeks in the Bahamas before it set out for Miami Saturday. On Sunday night, the freighter was broken apart by pounding surf off Highland Beach in southern Palm Beach County.

Because of current shifts, authorities said, bodies from the wreck could continue to show up through today.

As the death toll climbed, the survivors stuck to their story that only 10 people were aboard. But the Coast Guard said Wednesday it had suspected all along the freighter was smuggling refugees to Florida.

Coast Guard officers in the cutter Ingham boarded the Esperancia Sunday morning because of their suspicions that more Haitian refugees might be aboard.

But because the Esperancia agreed to the boarding, officials didn't "go tapping on walls, banging on bulkheads, looking for places where they can hide." Under the federal government's interdiction policy, the Coast Guard would have needed permission from the Haitian government to conduct a full search of the vessel.

Haitians' transfer to Arizona cancelled

FLORENCE, Ariz. (AP) — The director of the federal Bureau of Prisons says he has decided not to move a group of Haitian refugees to Arizona because there is not enough room here for all of them.

"We already had approved the move for next Tuesday," Norman Carlson said Wednesday after coming here to inspect the federal detention center where the refugees were to have been housed.

"There are 158 Haitians, and the facility in Florence could take only 75 or 80 of them," Carlson said. "We decided early on that they would not be split up in any way, and there just aren't the facilities in Florence to take them all — we'll have to find some other place."

The Haitians were being housed at a federal prison in Ray Brook, N.Y., that served as the Olympic Village for the 1980 Winter Olympics in neighboring Lake Placid.

Carlson also looked in on a $22 million, planned 600-bed federal prison north of Phoenix near the Pioneer Village historical museum.

Jerry Quatsoe, community-programs manager for the Bureau of Prisons in Phoenix, said that when the new prison opens in 1985, the government then will "evaluate the possibility" of transferring the federal prison at Florence to Arizona's prison system.

Said John Turner, an Arizona Corrections Department spokesman, "We're looking for any type of facility we can get our hands on, if the price is right."

The federal facility at Florence is double-bunked and can handle 150 prisoners.

Dollar rises against franc

LONDON (AP) — The dollar reached record levels against the French franc and Italian lire but was mixed against other major foreign currencies in early trading today. Gold prices rose.

In Tokyo, where trading ends just as it begins in Europe, the dollar dropped to 247.90 yen after the Bank of Japan intervened. The dollar closed Wednesday at a 23-month high of 248.30 yen.

The British pound was unchanged from Wednesday at $1.78425.

Trooper's funeral Friday

NEWTON, N.J. (AP) — An honor guard of state troopers will attend the funeral Friday of the state police sergeant who died in a cave while leading Boy Scouts on a spelunking expedition, state police say.

Sgt. Donald Weltner died of hypothermia, or severe exposure, according to an autopsy performed Wednesday by the Sussex County medical examiner's office, said Sgt. Thomas Gallagher, a state police spokesman.

"Dr. Eugene Tschekunow, the deputy medical examiner, could not give an exact time of death, but estimated it was between late Sunday and early Monday," said Gallagher.

Wednesday's autopsy was performed at Newton Memorial Hospital.

Weltner, 48, was pulled from a crevice 18 feet deep in Crooked Swamp Cave in Lafayette Township at 11 p.m. Tuesday, after rescuers worked for more than three days to free him.

Dr. Lucian Fletcher of Newton Memoria Hospital had crawled into the narrow limestone cave and pronounced him dead at 10:45 p.m., puncturing the slim hope that despite extremely low body temperatures had kept the scoutmaster alive.

Weltner, of Perrineville, was wedged in a key-shaped crevice at about 3 p.m. Saturday while leading 18 Boy Scouts from Millstone Township on the nature trip in the Blue Heron Rookery — a bird preserve.

Gallagher said that hypothermia victims lapse into unconsciousness. Breathing and the body's circulatory system slow until the heart beats irregularly and then stops, he said.

Plane crash investigated

HUGHES, Ark. (AP) — Investigators say the left wing of a twin-engine airplane that crashed near the Mississippi River levee snapped off shortly after the plane's takeoff from Memphis, Tenn.

Ira Furman, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board, said Wednesday in a telephone interview that the board is checking the similarity of Monday's crash near Hughes and a recent accident in Argentina.

Roger Kenneth Perry, 32, of Rayne, La., died Monday when the Gulfstream American 840 he was piloting crashed in a Lee County pasture. Perry, a demonstration pilot for Gulfstream, was en route to Dallas and was the only one aboard the plane.

Meat prices lead month's 1 percent hike in grocery bills

AP Laserphoto

An increase of about 1 percent in grocery bills last month was led primarily by increases in meat prices, as shown in this chart comparing prices in AP Marketbasket cities throughout the nation.

By The Associated Press

Led by higher meat prices, grocery bills rose by almost 1 percent last month, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey.

The AP also found that the cost of a sample of food and non-food items increased 1¼ percent during the first quarter of 1982, a sharp contrast to the 3.6 percent decline in prices in the same period of 1981.

The survey covered 14 commonly purchased products, selected at random. The items originally were priced at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973, and have been repriced on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The latest survey showed that the marketbasket bill went up at the checklist store in nine cities during March, rising an average of 2.4 percent, and declined in four cities, dropping an average of 2.5 percent. Overall, the marketbasket bills increased by an average of nine-tenths of a percent last month.

Prices also increased in January, but they declined in February, helping limit the rise so far this year. The U.S. Department of Agriculture is predicting that food prices alone will rise by about 6 percent this year. That would compare with a 7.9 percent increase last year and would be the smallest rise since a 3.1 percent boost in 1976.

In its latest survey, the AP found meat prices up sharply in several areas. Meat accounted for 21 percent of the items on the AP checklist, but it accounted for 29 percent of the increase reported during March.

Chopped chuck went up in price at the checklist store in nine cities — more than any other item. The price of center-cut pork chops increased last month in four cities and all-beef frankfurters rose in five cities.

The price boosts generally reflect the situation on farms and in feedlots.

The USDA said, for example, that the number of cattle being fed for slaughter as of March 1 was down 4 percent from last year and 8 percent from 1980. The hog herd was down by about 10 percent from 1981 levels.

The lower supplies result, in part, from lower prices that farmers received for their products last year. Many ranchers and hog producers lost money and cut back to avoid further financial hardship.

While meats were to blame for much of the latest boost in grocery prices, there were other culprits as well.

The AP found that the price of a dozen eggs, for example, increased at the checklist store in seven cities last month and peanut butter and sugar each went up in six cities. Increases in the wholesale price of orange juice which followed a winter freeze in Florida also are showing up on retail shelves; the price of frozen orange juice concentrate increased at the checklist store in five cities during March.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed more increases during March than during February. Here are the percentages of increases and decreases:

	Feb.	Mar.
Up	20.9	34.6
Down	27.5	20.9
Unchanged	43.4	37.9
Unavailable	8.2	6.6

No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percent of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes or comparable substitutes were used for the survey. Items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all total.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

Here is a city-by-city list of what happened during March:

ALBUQUERQUE: The marketbasket bill rose 3 percent, from $20.21 to $20.82. Frankfurters, which were on sale at the start of March at $1.58 a pound, jumped to $1.89 at the start of April. Chopped chuck, paper towels, peanut butter, detergent, milk and sugar also increased. Orange juice, coffee, eggs, fabric softener and tomato sauce declined. Pork chops and butter were unchanged.

ATLANTA: The total dropped from $20.97 to $20.96, a decrease of less than one-tenth of a percent. Increases in the price of chopped chuck, eggs, peanut butter, detergent and frankfurters were offset by lower prices for pork chops, orange juice, coffee and sugar. Everything else was unchanged.

BOSTON: The bill went up half a percent, from $18.86 to $18.96. Butter, peanut butter, detergent, frankfurters and sugar went up; pork chops, orange juice, coffee, paper towels, fabric softener and tomato sauce went down. Chopped chuck, eggs and milk were unchanged.

CHICAGO: The total for 12 available items went from $16.40 to $16.11, down 1.8 percent. Chopped chuck increased, while butter and eggs decreased. The checklist sizes of coffee and fabric softener were unavailable at the store used for the survey. The remaining nine items were unchanged.

DALLAS: The bill for 13 available items rose six-tenths of a percent, from $20.01 to $20.13. Chopped chuck, orange juice, eggs and frankfurters went up; pork chops and butter went down. The survey brand of paper towels was unavailable at the checklist store. Other items stayed the same.

DETROIT: The total for 12 available items went up four-tenths of a percent, from $18.15 to $18.23. Orange juice, eggs and sugar went up. There were no declines. Center-cut pork chops and quart containers of milk were out of stock on one of the survey dates. Other items were unchanged.

LOS ANGELES: The bill for 11 available items went from $15.78 to $15.97, up 1.2 percent. Pork chops, coffee, butter, eggs, peanut butter and detergent went up. Chopped chuck, orange juice, paper towels, tomato sauce and frankfurters went down. Fabric softener, quart containers of milk and sugar were temporarily unavailable at the checklist store.

MIAMI: The total for 13 available items went from $19.60 to $19.99, up 1.5 percent. Chopped chuck, pork chops, orange juice, coffee, frankfurters and sugar were higher. Butter, peanut butter, tomato sauce and detergent were lower. Milk was temporarily unavailable at the checklist store and the remaining three items were unchanged.

State regulation to exclude Texans from GM's interest rate program

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A new Texas Motor Vehicle Commission regulation that prohibits incentive offers requiring dealer contributions will exclude Texans from a new 12.8 percent interest rate program for General Motors cars.

Commission Executive Director Russell Harding said GM representatives declined to negotiate the effect of the rule adopted by a 5-1 vote Wednesday on the interest rate incentive program.

"General Motars Acceptance Corp. made the decision not to offer its special 12.8 percent retail financing rate program in Texas very reluctantly," said GMAC President Robert F. Murphy in Detroit.

He said the company wanted to offer the program in Texas but the new regulation specifically prohibits the plan.

"No other state prohibits this type of incentive program," said Murphy.

GM officials announced Tuesday that Texas would be excluded because of the new rule and because of the state's pending lawsuit against the automaker's "Let's Get Moving" rebate offer that expired Wednesday.

The interest incentive is banned by the rule because dealers must agree to give up 70 percent of the finance charge income — about 1 percentage point on a loan — they normally receive to finance a car through GMAC.

"That's a considerable amount of money to dealers," Harding said, "It would be unrealistic to expect dealers to ignore that. The whole point is there are ways to design these programs where they are open and aboveboard."

Harding said Ford and Chrysler offered rebate programs in Texas and did not require dealers to contribute to the cost. Ford's program did require dealer contribution, but not in Texas, he said.

Texas Attorney General Mark White declined to endorse the new rule Wednesday, but he defended the lawsuit.

He said as long as dealers must contribute part of the cost of the incentive, consumers can expect to pay hidden costs.

"I think in this case General Motors has acted in bad taste, if not worse, and I think they have attempted to be abusive and intimidating, and I will not permit the office of attorney general to be intimidated by any corporation," White said.

Asked if the rule was based on a presumption that dealers would deceive consumers, White said no.

"I'm going on the basis they're all human," White said. "Human nature tells you he (a dealer) is going to try to recover his loss."

"Honest business people with honest deals, that's all we're asking for," White said.

White said the lawsuit over the rebate program — which required dealers to contribute 25 percent of the rebate — was still awaiting a trial date.

A state district judge here denied the state's request for a temporary injunction against the program last month. White said he was going ahead with the suit because GM would be liable for about $10,000 in penalties if found to have operated a deceptive program.

GM did amend its rebate advertising, telling consumers dealers were contributing to the rebate, so "make your best deal."

AMC talks should resume soon

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — American Motors Corp. contract talks, snarled by union objections to "excessive" numbers of AMC supervisors, should resume within "a couple of weeks," bargainers for both sides say.

AMC and the United Auto Workers have reached basic agreement on the centerpiece of the negotiations: an employee investment plan.

But talks broke down Wednesday because the union "could not agree to a new contract that failed to address the wasteful and inefficient practices that would in part squander away our sacrifices," UAW secretary-treasurer Raymond Majerus said.

"AMC adamantly refused to deal with the problem of excessive numbers of foremen and supervisors in their Kenosha, Wis., Milwaukee and Toledo, Ohio, operations," Majerus said.

But having a labor union try to dictate to management how many supervisors to employ "represents a problem," said Richard T. MacCracken, AMC vice president of industrial relations.

The employee investment plan, submitted by the company in November, calls for AMC's 14,000 U.S. autoworkers to give up parts of their annual wage increases, cost-of-living allowance raises and paid days off over 22 months to help the company pay for a $1 billion product development program.

Repayment to workers with 10 percent interest would begin in 1985. AMC lost $136.6 million last year.

"We're disappointed we got so far as we did and they broke off on one issue," MacCracken said. "We had the impression we were very close to an agreement."

"We tried to explain to them (UAW bargainers) that the people perceived to be extra are there because we are on the brink of manning new operations (for new products)," he said. "As that starts up, we think the perception of excessive numbers of supervisory people will change."

AMC is set to begin production of its new car, X-42, at Kenosha later this year and is gearing up for a new Jeep series in Toledo. Scores of hourly workers will be calmed back once producton is ready to go, officials said.

AMC reported 6,100 autoworkers on indefinite layoff last week.

MacCracken said the union had brought up the idea of establishing a formula to link the number of supervisors to hourly workers, but he said the union never said what numbers would be acceptable.

UAW spokesman Donald Stillman said AMC had not given the union enough information on the current and past numbers of foremen to allow UAW bargainers to judge what would be fair.

"But we know by virtue of firsthand observation" that there are too many supervisors kept on payroll when hourly workers are laid off, he said.

Majerus and MacCracken said resumption of talks would focus on the superqnsor problem and hat resolutions already negotiated for other issues would be retained. ! The current contracts at Kerosha and Milwaukee expire Sept. 14, 1983, while the contract at Toledo expires Feb. 1, 1983.

Meanwhile, bargainers for the International Union of Electrical Workers said talks would continue with General Motors Corp. today.

African Queen finds home

By CINDY POWERS
Hearst Feature Service

KEY LARGO — The last time most of us saw the African Queen, she was floating on Lake Victoria, filled to the gunwales with explosives, waiting to blow up a German patrol boat. We had just enjoyed two hours of Humphrey Bogart and Katharine Hepburn steaming down the river, fighting leeches and love — not to mention Germans and rapids.

Today, the African Queen, third co-star of the 1951 movie of the same name, rests in another spot boasting connections to Bogie — Key Largo. The small coral island in the upper Florida Keys has become the unofficial headquarters for Bogart fans and Bogart memorabilia since the actor's death in 1957.

As for the rusty 76-year-old, 30-foot riverboat, it has dropped anchor just off U.S. Route 1, two miles from the Caribbean Club Bar where the Bogart movie "Key Largo" was filmed in 1948.

The boat is owned by Jim Hendricks, a post commander with the U.S. Power Squadron and U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary instructor who plans to use the Queen as a private pleasure craft.

Hendricks bought the boat for $65,000 on Feb. 15 from Hal Bailey, a Bogart buff who used it to ferry tourists on Oregon's Sun River. Bailey had purchased it in 1970 from a San Francisco restaurateur who used it as an attraction to raise money for cancer research. The restaurateur had bought it from the Ugandan government for $730 shortly before that.

Bailey kept the boat in drydock at his Ocala, Fla., horse ranch until selling it to Hendricks earlier this year, but not before making $60,000 in improvements.

The boat has found a permanent home, claims Hendricks. "I've already turned down several offers," he says. "I'll get her shipshape one way or another. She could be painted and made into a sharp-looking boat. But I'm going to leave her like she is."

The Queen was moved to Miami in late February for a boat show, and Hendricks hopes to enter her in the steamboat race held in Louisville, Ky., during Derby Festival Week in late April. But for now, the rusty-hulled, mahogany-decked, eight-horsepower steamer is docked in Key Largo.

Mexican ex-official to be tried for car theft

By BENJAMIN SHORE
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department is expected to approve prosecution of Mexico's former director of federal security on charges of participating in a massive car-theft ring in the United States, administration officials said Tuesday.

Prosecution of Miguel Nassar Haro, who until January had directed Mexico's Directorate of Federal Security, had been delayed by the Justice Department because Nassar also was a top source of information for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

But a well-informed CIA official said Tuesday the agency made clear to the Justice Department that its concern over protecting Nassar's CIA role diminished greatly when Nassar was replaced as DFS chief.

"The CIA raised questions that we wanted the Justice Department to consider, but we always had said it (the decision to prosecute) was their call," said the official, who requested anonymity.

"After Nassar lost his job, most of those concerns became moot," he added.

In a related development, Justice Department officials said Tuesday that no decision has been made on whether to take disciplinary action against U.S. Attorney William Kennedy of San Diego for having confirmed for the San Diego Union the CIA's role in causing prosecution to be delayed.

AFTER THE story was published last Friday, Associate Attorney General Rudolph Giuliani telephoned Kennedy and ordered him to Washington Monday to explain his actions to Giuliani and other top department officials.

Kennedy had two sessions with his superiors, then returned to San Diego Tuesday. The department hopes to resolve this week the question of whether Kennedy breached department rules on public disclosure of pending cases.

One official suggested Kennedy would not be fired, adding: "There are many U.S. Attorneys with letters of reprimand in their files."

As a presidential appointee, a U.S. Attorney can be fired only by a president. However, an attorney general can request a resignation without White House involvement.

Nassar is understood to be in Mexico and unlikely to submit voluntarily to prosecution in the United States. However, the United States has an extradition treaty with Mexico that would permit Nassar to be returned involuntarily for trial, a Justice Department official said.

Nassar, 52, has been implicated by U.S. investigators in a multimillion-dollar car-theft ring that smuggled into Mexico cars stolen in Southern California.

KENNEDY'S confirmation of Nassar's relationship with the CIA has raised questions concerning whether Kennedy's action would be illegal under a bill, expected to be approved shortly by Congress, that is designed to protect the identity of agents, American or foreign, working for U.S. intelligence agencies.

An official of the Senate Intelligence Committee said Tuesday that Kennedy's role in assisting the publication of the Nassar story by the San Diego Union would not violate the proposed law "based on what is known about Nassar's job" as DFS chief.

The official said that as the official liaison officer between the DFS and American intelligence agencies, Nassar would not fit the definition of a "covert agent."

"The U.S. was not trying to keep his identity a secret," he added, noting that the top officials of friendly nations' security agencies normally have overt liaison relationships.

But, the official said, "The committee has no information to indicate that Nassar acted outside his role as a liaison."

Court upholds doctor's conviction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald was back in federal custody about one hour after the Supreme Court reinstated the former Green Beret's murder conviction in the slaying of his wife and two daughters, his lawyer says.

The 38-year-old MacDonald was arrested by FBI agents at his apartment in Huntington Beach, Calif., Wednesday, shortly after the Supreme Court acted, attorney Bernard L. Segal said.

MacDonald, who has been sentenced to life imprisonment, was taken to a federal detention center in Los Angeles. He will pursue further appeals.

Segal recalled he was talking to his client by telephone from San Francisco Wednesday when he heard a loud knock at the end of the line.

"It was like a stage knock," the lawyer said in a telephone interview. MacDonald had just said to Segal, "The Supreme Court has decided 6-3 against us. What can we do, if anything," the lawyer said.

MacDonald was informed of the Supreme Court's decision by a friend in Washington who saw the news on the wire service tickers, Segal said.

At the time of the February 1970 slayings at Fort Bragg, N.C., MacDonald was an Army captain serving as a physician. He has steadfastly maintained since then that his family was bludgeoned and stabbed to death by drug-crazed "hippies" who chanted, "Acid is groovy. Kill the pigs."

The FBI arrested MacDonald after U.S. District Judge Franklin Dupree in Raleigh, N.C., revoked a $100,000 appeal bond. Dupree had presided over MacDonald's trial.

Brian Murtagh, the supervising Justice Department attorney in the case, said the main reason for the quick action was the "risk of flight" by MacDonald.

The justices reinstated — at least for now — his convictions for the murders of his pregnant 24-year-old wife, Colette, and daughters, Kimberly, 5, and Kristen, 2.

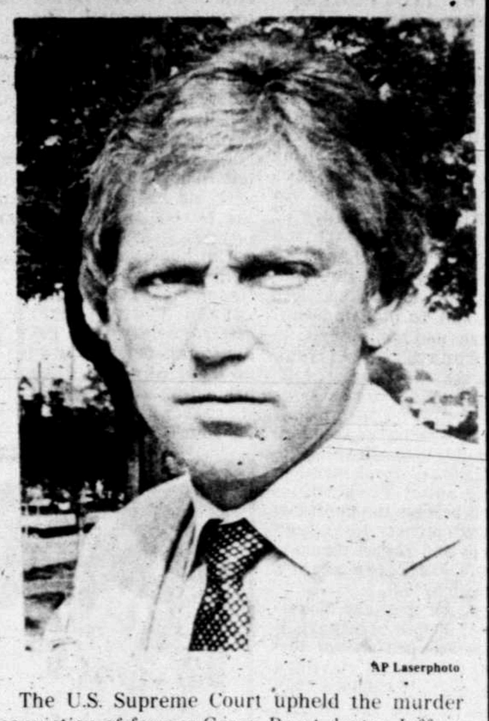

Writing for the court, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger said a five-year delay between the deaths and the indictment by a federal grand jury did not violate MacDonald's right to a speedy trial.

But the high court sent the case back to a federal appeals court for consideration of a dozen remaining issues, including whether the the five-year delay violated MacDonald's constitutional right to "due process."

The appeals court must also determine whether the trial judge improperly excluded incriminating, out-of-court statements by a woman who once indicated she took part in the murders.

Segal said MacDonald's case could return to the Supreme Court for a fourth time, even though MacDonald has lost his latest round before the justices.

"To the best of my knowledge, this is the first criminal case that has been twice fully heard and twice fully decided by the Supreme Court," Segal said. "Why not three times?

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the murder conviction of former Green Beret doctor Jeffrey MacDonald for the slayings of his pregnant wife and two daughters.

The justices once turned down one of MacDonald's claims without a hearing and written decision.

"We will press these remaining issues quite vigorously," said Ralph Spritzer of Philadelphia, another of MacDonald's lawyers. He said there is a "fair likelihood" the case will be brought before the Supreme Court again.

MacDonald has been serving as a staff physician at the emergency unit at St. Mary Medical Center in Long Beach. Center spokeswoman Maureen May said MacDonald's future at the facility is uncertain.

MacDonald's lawyers also said they will attempt to have him released on bail pending the further proceedings.

Alfred Kassab, the father of MacDonald's slain wife, rejoiced when he learned of the decision.

"It's been very, very hard on my wife and I ... it's been a constant thing for 12 years, trying to get him indicted and then having it overturned. I sure worked at it," said Kassab, who lives in Kings Park, N.Y.

Striped bass snag expressway

NEW YORK (AP) — Rejecting a contention that part of the Hudson River along lower Manhattan is a "biological wasteland," a federal judge blocked landfill work for an expressway because the area is a "highly significant" home for striped bass.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Griesa held that the Army Corps of Engineers violated federal law in issuing a permit for landfill needed in the construction of the controversial $1.7 billion Westway project.

The judge charged the corps ignored and failed to make public data "which proved that the proposed landfill area is an important habitat for juvenile striped bass prior to their becoming a part of the Atlantic Coast fishery."

The judge rejected the contention of the state Department of Transportation and Federal Highway Administration in an environmentral impact statement that the 200-acre landfill area was a "biological wasteland."

Michael Garabedian, a spokesman for the Sierra Club, one of the plaintiffs in two suits which led to Griesa's ruling, said the decision had put Westway "back so far that it is practically dead."

Gov. Hugh Carey urged the engineers "to make every effort to comply promptly with the requirements of the court, so that further delay is minimized and New Yorkers will not be further penalized by costly delay of this important project."

Federal funds are supposed to pay for 90 percent of cost of the Westway project, which calls for a new highway on the West Side of Manhattan, from 42nd Street to the tip of the island, much of it covered over with built up. The state is supposed to pay the remaining 10 percent.

Mayor Edward Koch, who supports Westway, said the project "has had more ups and downs than any project since the Panama Canal, which was finally built."

City Council President Carol Bellamy, who would become mayor if Koch wins this year's governor's race, said that a smaller roadway should be built to replace the crumbling West Side Highway, much of which has been closed to traffic for years, and any left-over federal funds traded in for mass transit aid.

"Today's decision clearly means there will be no federal money for Westway for some time, and possibly forever," she said. "As opponents and proponents of this project agree, every day of delay increases our highway construction costs.

Griesa ordered the Army corps to start new proceedings on whether the landfill permit should be issued, "carried out under the legal requirements, with safeguards provided by the court."

FBI to investigate Albuquerque police

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The chief of the Albuquerque Police Department says he has asked federal authorities to investigate allegations of misconduct among Albuquerque police officers, including himself.

Police Chief E.L. Hansen said Tuesday he asked U.S. Attorney William Lutz to investigate allegations about Hansen's conduct while working as a police officer during the 1970s.

Hansen said federal authorities also are to investigate allegations that past and current officers committed illegal break-ins, firebombings and civil rights violations during the early 1970s.

The investigation is necessary to "clear the air," Hansen said.

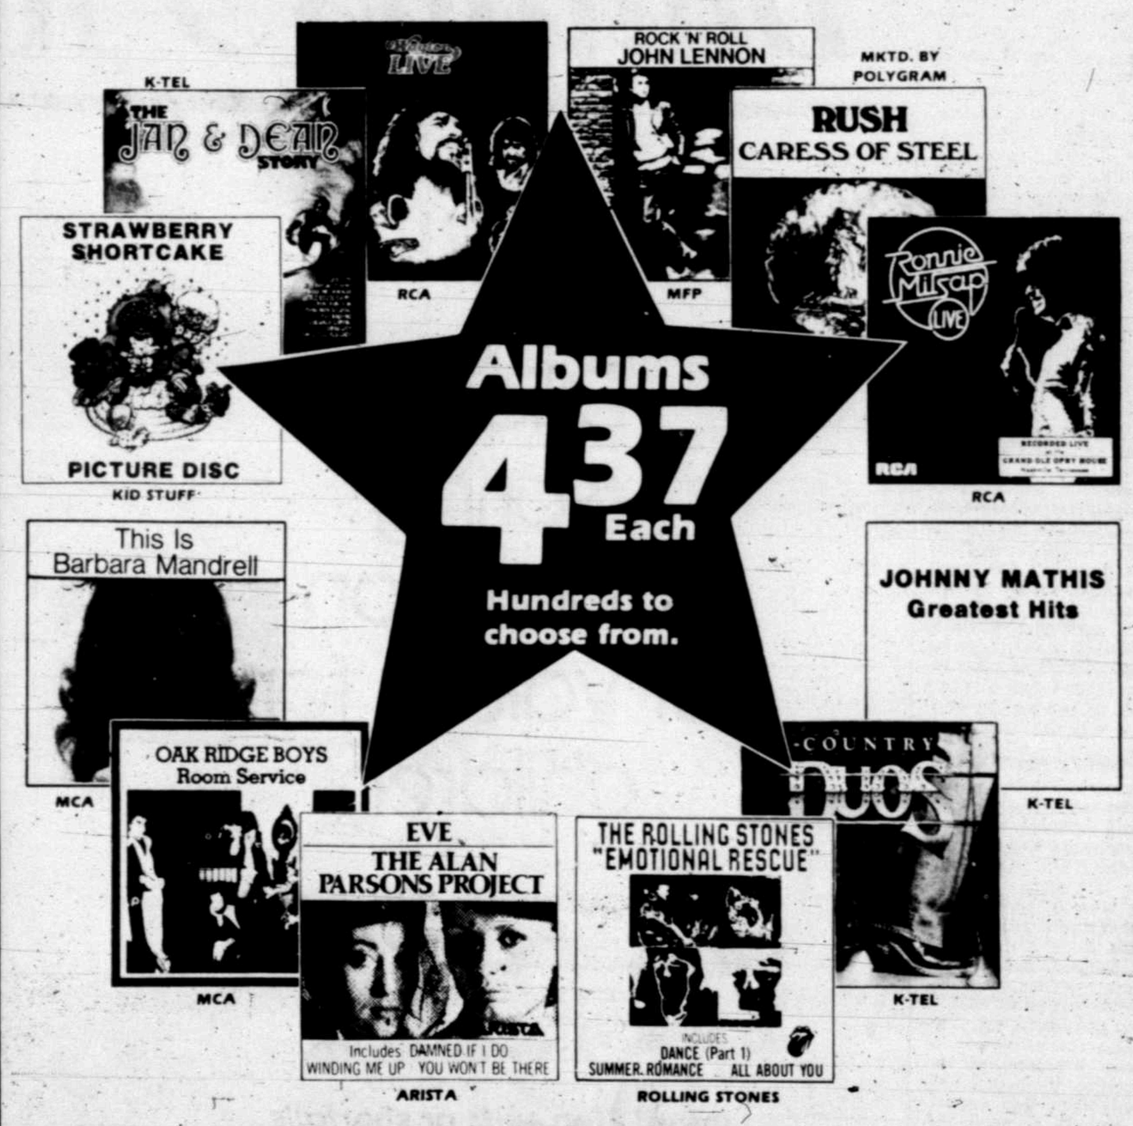

Lutz, who received Hansen's request in a hand-delivered letter, said he did not know how long it would take the FBI to complete its probe. But he said if evidence of civil rights violations was uncovered, it would be forwarded to the U.S. Justice Department for prosecution.

Some of the allegations against the department have come from four former APD officers who recently admitted involvement in a robbery and burglary ring that is believed to have spanned six years and seven states.

Three of the four officers, Robert Davis, Robert Hobson and John Harper, are serving prison sentences. All three men pleaded guilty to various armed robbery and burglary charges.

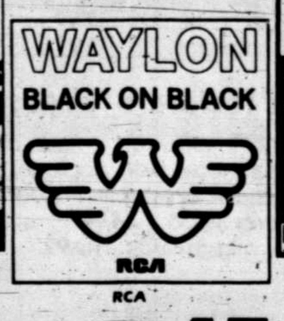

The fourth officer, Donald Bailey, currently is free on bond, awaiting sentencing on similar charges.

27% of Midland's Teachers Won't Be Coming Back.

During 1981, 230 of Midland's 849 teachers left the public school system. Some chose better paying jobs, some moved, and many quit because they could not afford to live in Midland on a teacher's salary. Other problems are the lack of quality working conditions, effective discipline, and demanding schedules. Being a competent teacher is a tough job. It requires persons who are teaching because that is what they really want to do.

And the conditions of teaching in Midland are getting tougher each year. Solving the problems requires a person who not only has the abilities and qualifications, but who has demonstrated the maturity and courage to stand up for what's right, and act.

In developing a statewide business network during the last seventeen years, Paul Thorpe has faced and solved these very problems. He has worked with several hundred employees in twenty-five different locations in developing salaries, benefits, working conditions, and career programs. The success of his business system is shown by the fact that it is now franchised in several areas of the Southwest.

Paul Thorpe has demonstrated his ability to be both sympathetic and successful in employee relations, and to get the job done. Put his proven management expertise to work for you on the School Board, Saturday, April 3.

Cary Tibbetts

Graveside services for Cary Tibbetts, 35, of Abilene and formerly of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today at Resthaven Memorial Park in Midland with Alton Towery officiating. Services are under the direction of Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday in an Abilene hospital.

Tibbetts was born Dec. 25, 1946, in Midland. He moved to Austin 15 years ago.

Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Bell of Monahans; three brothers, Kim Tibbetts of Fort Stockton, Dane Tibbetts and Khan Tibbetts, both of Monahans; a stepbrother, Monte Bell of Andrews; a sister, Tonya Maus of Monahans; his grandfather, Koe Tibbetts of Corten, Colo., and his grandmother, Dean Gordon of Moab, Utah.

Thunderbirds team to keep flying

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — The Thunderbirds precision team will keep flying and will switch from training planes to advanced jet fighters, the Air Force says, despite the deaths of four pilots whose planes slammed into the desert last January.

The status of the aerobatics group was in limbo until the investigation into the Jan. 18 accident was over, Gen. W.L. Creech, commander of the Tactical Air Command at Langley Air Force Base, said Wednesday.

The investigation determined that the lead plane was unable to pull out of a loop because of a mechanical problem, and all four planes rammed into the ground in the accident at Indian Springs auxiliary base, 40 miles from Nellis Air Force Base near Las Vegas, Nev.

"THE THUNDERBIRDS ARE a very valuable asset," Creech said at a news conference. "They're helpful for recruiting...for showing the flag overseas. They more than pay for their cost."

The team will start looking for replacement pilots for training in their new F-16s, Creech said.

All scheduled performances through mid-August have been canceled and the pace of practice will determine when the team flies again.

"We hope to be back by the end of the year," the general said.

The Thunderbird pilots and their F-16s will be available for immediate deployment in the event of war, Creech said, something that was not possible when they used T-38 trainers.

In their 29-year history, the Thunderbirds have lost 25 aircraft and 19 pilots.

The accident happened because a device called the horizontal stabilizer load relief cylinder, which acts as a sort of shock absorber, jammed in the lead plane, piloted by Maj. Norman Lowry III.

Lowry couldn't get the stabilizers into the angle needed to pull out of the loop, Creech said. A videotape of the accident showed the stabilizers moving from 4.3 to 7 degrees during the back side of the loop; they should have been at 17 degrees.

BECAUSE THE JAM was in the rear of the plane, Lowry would have had no indication of the problem, the general said. By the time he could see that he was too close to the ground, it was too late to pull out.

The other three planes were flying in such close formation, "looking over their shoulders" at Lowry, they followed the leader into the ground.

"Their job is to fly in very close formation, paying attention to the leader," Creech said. "They were flying an excellent formation. Because the leader had such belated clues, he never had time to warn them."

Air Force investigators were not sure what jammed the device, but speculated it could have been a rivet, bolt or washer jarred loose during normal wear and tear of flight or inadvertently left in during maintenance. They said it might have come loose and migrated during moments of near-weightlessness at the top of the loop.

Such problems have happened before to Air Force planes, Creech said, but he called the fact that it happened just when it did during the practice flight "a highly random occurrence."

The odds were extremely small that it would happen to a Thunderbird plane, he said, even smaller that it would happen to the lead plane and even smaller that the problem would show up as the pilot was trying to come out of a loop.

"THIS DOES NOT have profound implications for the rest of the fleet," he said.

The Navy's precision flying team, the Blue Angels, recently resumed air shows after an accident killed a team member Feb. 22.

Blue Angel Lt. Cmdr. Stu Powrie was killed in a training crash in the California desert near El Centro. Powrie was replaced by Lt. Cmdr. Jim Ross. The team resumed giving air shows March 21 with a show at El Centro.

The Plasma Diagnostics Package at the end of the space shuttle Columbia's robot arm gathers information from the wake flow around the orbiting craft. The collection of material was one of several shuttle experiments labeled successful as the reuseable craft returned from its third test flight.

Technicians ready shuttle for 'flight'

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — Technicians hurried to ready the space shuttle Columbia for its return flight to Florida, while astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton started two weeks of debriefings in Houston.

The space shuttle, looking slightly scorched and dirty from its successful eight-day mission, squatted Wednesday beneath giant cranes that will lift it onto the back of a modified jumbo jet early next week for the ferry flight.

Once it is returned to Florida, special pains will be taken to strengthen its heat-resistent tiles.

The shuttle "appears in terrific condition," said George Page, director of shuttle operations.

He said blowing sand posed some problems after the spacecraft landed but technicians quickly put covers over engines and other exposed fixtures on the craft.

Makeshift work stands have been moved into place so technicians can clamber aboard the 56-foot-tall spaceship to check systems and secure the shuttle for the flight back to Florida.

Page said the operation on the white gypsum flat here took on new importance with the confirmation that at least 38 of the tiles that protect the craft from intense heat on re-entry were lost during the flight.

Lousma and Fullerton had counted 37 missing tiles — all in non-critical areas of the spacecraft — after the shuttle reached orbit. Page said Wednesday the missing tiles were counted after the shuttle's smooth landing Tuesday at Northrup Strip here and "there may have been one or two more than we thought."

"We're pretty confident at this point that the damage we've found from the missing tiles is pretty much superficial," he said, but added that a plan to prevent tile loss could delay Columbia's fourth test mission, scheduled for June 27.

Columbia has made three of four test flights. After its final test mission, the spacecraft — which is launched like a rocket and lands like an airplane — will be ready to fly loads for paying customers.

The third mission started with a March 22 launch from Kennedy Space Center and was to have ended Monday but a sandstorm at White Sands delayed the landing until Tuesday.

Meeting the June 27 launch date "will be a challenge," Page said, "but we haven't ruled it out."

The plan to strengthen the adhering agent for 1,200 of the tiles means it is even more important that the "turn around" procedure at Northrup run on schedule, Page said.

Shuttle flights soon to be secret

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Space buffs who have followed the ins and outs of space shuttle missions closely had better enjoy it while they can, because many details of the flights may soon be cloaked in military secrecy.

The Air Force will start using the Columbia to launch military cargo during its fourth flight in late June or early July of this year, and officials say the military's policy will be a far cry from the sort of openness the public is used to with the civilian National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"It's likely that some types of information the public is accustomed to will not be released," said Brian Duff, NASA's chief of public information. "We will at some time say that there are aspects of a space flight that won't be discussed."

There are at least 25 military satellites scheduled to be taken aloft by the shuttle. Some of the missions will be all-military — part of what is referred to as the "blue fleet."

The first "blue shuttle" mission is tentatively scheduled to take place in a year. Air Force officials say national security requires that no information be released about military payloads the shuttle will carry into orbit.

Defense Department officials also want to withhold details about shuttle flights that might give clues to the type of military satellites being launched.

NASA has always prided itself on the openness of its space program, and some of its officials are bristling at the security demands. But, Duff said, "We have no choice — the decision has been made by the president that we are to share the shuttle with the Air Force."

NASA and Air Force officials say the details are still being worked out but restrictions under consideration include:

— Carefully controlled air-to-ground conversations with astronauts to avoid giving clues about the military satellites the spacecraft is carrying.

— Restriction of television beamed from space to make sure there are no pictures of military hardware. During the first three flights of Columbia, hours of television showed the payload bay and its scientific cargo. Such pictures, instead of being transmitted live, might be tape-delayed and restricted when there are Air Force satellites aboard.

— Withholding details about shuttle maneuvers. There is concern such information would reveal when and where Air Force satellites have been released. Restrictions, officials said, could include such things as the altitude of the shuttle, its inclination of orbit and its location in space at a given time.

The Air Force is developing its own launch and landing site for the shuttle at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., 165 miles north of Los Angeles, to share the load with Cape Canaveral. The first shuttle scheduled to use Vandenberg is the Discovery, in 1985.

One Air Force official said he could even visualize instances when there would be a blackout on the precise time and date of a launch. Military satellites often are launched on unmanned rockets without public warning, but the official admitted a secret shuttle launch would be almost impossible because of the hundreds of technicians involved.

Some NASA officials say the Air Force proposal to make the orbit and altitude of the shuttle secret also would be impossible. They noted that a group of British amateur radio operators have for years monitored Soviet space satellites and can easily plot the altitude and orbital path of the craft.

"The Air Force may put the American public in the position of getting information about the shuttle from a group of British amateurs," a NASA official said.

Manuel Piler Huezo Lopez just sits under a tree in San Salvador, watching the world and fighting drift by in the Central American nation. The 89-year-old El Salvadoran says he's content just to watch over things and add patches to his clothes as the need arises.

Senator talks of vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Nancy Kassebaum says officials of El Salvador's Christian Democratic Party, which won a plurality in Sunday's elections, are not as politically "shrewd" as the head of an ultra-rightist party.

The Kansas Republican, who led a delegation of U.S. observers at the elections, also said Wednesday that Robert D'Aubuisson's far-right party used a simplistic slogan — "Vote For Peace" — to appeal to Salvadoran voters.

"You can say he was a very effective politician because he used a slogan people responded to," she said. D'Aubuisson's party, the National Republican Alliance, known as ARENA, gained the second highest vote.

Referring to the Christian Democrats, Mrs. Kassebaum said: "They're not as shrewd in the politics of all this as D'Aubuisson."

"He was out implying he had a coalition formed when really it wasn't," she said of the military leader, who has been linked with terrorist squads. "He's really shrewd."

The United States had backed the junta led by Christian Democrat Jose Napoleon Duarte in the elections for a constituent assembly, which will draw up a new constitution for the war-ravaged Central American country.

Town quiet after guerrillas leave

USULUTAN, El Salvador (AP) — Hours after the guerrillas left El Salvador's fourth largest city, the quiet was broken only by the rumble of an occasional ox cart on the cobblestones and the pealing of a church bell.

Then people stuck their heads out of their doorways, and life in Usulutan, a city of 60,000 on the edge of the rebels' eastern mountain strongholds, edged back toward normal.

White flags of truce fluttered from bullet-scarred houses and shops. Even cars, bicycles and ox carts carried truce flags.

"We just waited for the will of God," said the portly owner of a corner store, telling a reporter about how she and her family passed the time.

"There is nothing we can do under the circumstances."

The central market was virtually empty, but troops stood guard on rooftops.

Spent cartridge casings littered the streets of some districts; remnants of the four-day battle here. But the children who slipped out to play in the sun didn't bother to pick up the now familiar residue of war.

Motorists drove around trees downed by guerrillas for roadblocks. Peasants with machetes moved in to cut up the trees for firewood.

There has been no electricity here for days and downed powerlines snaked across a number of streets.

For four days the leftists had mounted their strongest effort yet to take a major population center.

They virtually cut off the city, 60 miles southeast of San Salvador, during last weekend's national Constituent Assembly election.

While an unexpected tide of Salvadorans turned out to vote in other cities, the polls in Usulutan were closed.

Initial reports said 15 soldiers and 100 guerrillas were killed in the fighting. The military later said the figures were inflated, but gave no new account.

Residents said the guerrillas withdrew from Usulatan around 5 a.m. Wednesday.

The apparently fell back to the nearby town of Palo Galan with army troops in pursuit.

Combat patrols left the barracks here in a steady stream amid the crunch and chatter of artillery and automatic weapons fire a mile or so away.

U.S. embassy attacked

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Rocket-propelled grenades and a volley of automatic weapons fire slammed into the U.S. Embassy here, but a spokeswoman said no one was hurt. There was no indication who mounted the attack.

Wednesday night's hit-and-run attack was the second assault on the U.S. Embassy in five months.

No arrests were reported after gunmen sprayed the building with automatic weapons fire last October and there were no immediate claims of responsibility for the latest attack.

Lou Telich, the embassy's public affairs officer, said two grenades pierced the embassy walls in the 7 p.m. attack, but apparently did not cause extensive damage inside the three-story complex. No officials were inside at the time of the assault, she said.

It all started in the little town of Shallowater, Texas. Now, as we move into our seventh year . . .

Moscow's China card

If Washington can play the so-called China card, so too can Moscow. Or, more precisely, Moscow can try.

That appeared to be just what Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev was doing when he declared that his country was "prepared to come to terms" with China. It cannot be a coincidence that Brezhnev's overture comes at a time when relations between Peking and the Reagan administration are strained over the unresolved issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan.

Clearly, the Soviet leadership views the continuing Sino-American dispute over Taiwan as a window of diplomatic opportunity. By exploiting Peking's presumed doubts on the value of its American connection, the Soviets obviously hope to dilute China's militantly anti-Soviet foreign policy.

Thus, Brezhnev announced that Moscow wanted to end the long-standing Sino-Soviet border disputes and to "normalize" political relations between the two communist giants.

From Brezhnev's standpoint, there is everything to gain and nothing to lose in offering the olive branch now. A genuine rapprochement between China and the Soviet Union would vastly increase Moscow's political leverage in dealing with Western Europe, the United States, and Japan. And, Brezhnev may reason, even if the olive branch is rejected, the mere fact that it was offered may tend to diminish the fear that drives China to cooperate with the West.

Fortunately for the United States and its allies, there appears little chance of a significant reduction in the mutual suspicion and enmity that pervades Sino-Soviet relations. China and Russia are natural competitors in Asia and have been since long before either country fell to communism.

The Chinese have not forgotten Russia's bullying and land grabbing of decades past. And the ethnic Slavs who rule the Soviet Union today are still obsessed with a historic fear of the "yellow peril" that dates to Mongol invasions centuries ago.

Then, too, the patently expansionist foreign policy pursued by the Soviets today presents an unmistakable danger to China. The Chinese can hardly be expected to forget that Brezhnev himself hinted at the possibility of a "preemptive" Soviet nuclear strike at Chinese missiles and nuclear test facilities during the early 1970s.

Still, the Reagan administration would be well advised to keep careful watch for any signs of a possible Sino-Soviet rapprochement, and be prepared to react accordingly if one seemed to be developing. That reaction should not entail abandonment of Taiwan; a craven act more likely to convince Peking that the United States lacked the backbone to be a reliable partner in time of need.

But the administration should even now be pressing ahead with an active diplomacy designed to keep the mainland Chinese mindful of the fact that their current geo-political interests are shared more by Washington than by Moscow.

Space for mankind

When the space shuttle Columbia touched down on Rogers Dry Lake in California April 14, 1981, there was electricity in the air along with a sense of accomplishment. When Columbia made its third landing Tuesday morning — less than a year later — at White Sands, N.M., sending astronauts aloft and bringing them home successfully was becoming "old hat" again for American space-watchers.

Maybe that's partly because of the success of the space program. Just in the shuttle program itself, the skill of the astronauts and technological fine-tuning of the spacecraft has made space flight part of "the norm" in everyday life.

Yet we all should watch the shuttle program a little closer and take a bit more interest because what we are seeing is the early stages of what likely will revolutionize life on this planet. Just as the early years of space flight and the resulting technology greatly altered our lifestyles — in fact, lifestyles throughout the world — so is it to be expected that technological and scientific advances resulting from the shuttle program will literally open "new worlds" to mankind.

Already the technology and science of the Space Age have given man satellite communications, tiny electronic devices used throughout modern industry, enhanced medical skills, even special ceramic materials used in making such everyday basics as frypans!

It would be safe to say that had mankind not received the benefits he did from space technology, society would not be as far along as it is today.

But with the shuttle program winding down the testing phase of its mission, it's imperative that the nations of the world pledge to utilize the technology gleaned from the shuttle program for the peace and betterment of mankind.

Such a goal may prove to be only wishful thinking. But it does not have to be so. With concerted effort on the part of the United States and other peace-loving nations, the future conquest of near space can be accomplished in the interests of all the people on earth.

Days of the dolphins

In a spy novel, there would be CIA computer wizards releasing documents to the enemy. In real life, which is, of course, much stranger than fiction, there were two janitors at a top-secret University of Hawaii marine laboratory who five years ago released dolphins into the ocean.

Obviously they couldn't be charged with treason, although their boss said they had been "plotting to destroy the laboratory." In fact, it wasn't clear what to charge them with, since the dolphins were said to have intelligence "comparable to humans." The press called the crime dolphin-napping; the prosecutors went for theft and won two convictions.

The dolphins — Puka and Kea — were, to add to the story, part of a study of communication between dolphins and humans. What they might be doing now is intriguing in itself; they have not been seen in five years. University researchers are sure they were too domesticated to have survived in the wild; the defendants' sympathizers say the dolphins were becoming morose in captivity and would have committed suicide if they had been "imprisoned" any longer.

The case — and the speculations — resurfaced in a Honolulu courtroom last week when a circuit court judge ordered one of the thieves to pay the state for Puka and Kea's full value. It's now up to the Hawaii State Adult Probation Office to figure out what that is.

The task has resurrected the old debate. Puka and Kea, all sides agree, were invaluable. But the laboratory researchers say they were so highly trained as to be irreplaceable, while the dolphin-nappers say they were "as human as you or I. As such, they were no man's property."

Of course, the defendants also maintain that their liberation of the dolphins was a matter of conscience, while the laboratory director points out that they had been fired only a few days earlier and were known to be seeking revenge. How Puka and Kea saw it, we'll never know, or will we?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Brezhnev playing nuke missile shell game

WASHINGTON — To be fitting, Leonid Brezhnev should have waited until today to announce his missile "freeze." It would have been a grim April Fool joke.

Jack Anderson

Top-secret documents make it clear that the Soviet boss is playing a deadly shell game with his nuclear missiles. And it could well be a game of winner-take-all.

Brezhnev's offer to halt deployment of his SS-20 medium-range rockets in the Western Soviet Union was an empty gesture. Not only would it lock NATO into a dangerous disadvantage (if the West agreed not to deploy 572 additional nuclear systems starting next year), but the Soviets were giving away nothing. Brezhnev was offering to stop at the 300-missile level — but that's the number the Soviets had always planned to stop at.

With 300 missiles to secure his European flank, Brezhnev could easily afford to deploy future SS-20 missiles east of the Urals. In fact, intelligence sources told my associate Dale Van Atta there's a harrowing possibility that the purported "pullback" of SS-20s would give the Kremlin many more missiles capable of reaching the United States.

Here's why:

By attaching a third-stage rocket, the Russians' two-stage, intermediate-range SS-20 becomes a full-fledged SS-16 intercontinental ballistic missile that can hit targets in North America. And adding the 10-foot third-stage component to an SS-20 is a relatively simple process.

The Soviets' SS-16 ICBM is a fearsome weapon that has been developed and tested in extraordinary secrecy since at least 1973. According to top-secret CIA reports, the Russians went to elaborate lengths to keep the SS-16's performance from being monitored by Western intelligence agencies. The precautions included "the use of canvas and camouflage netting at test ranges, test-firing only at night, and building roofs over rail sidings at a production plant" — all designed to thwart U.S. spy satellites.

Despite these measures, the CIA was able to gather information on the super-secret SS-16. The agency counted a total of 32 test firings, and detected five failures. The final launches were made by soldiers during troop exercises, which indicated that the ICBM was about ready for deployment.

Toward the end of their series of SS-16 tests, the Soviets began regular tests of its precocious "kid brother," the SS-20. The CIA discovered a scary thing: Both missiles use the same basic elements and the same mobile truck launchers. As a result, the CIA report said, "it may not be possible to determine which missile a support base contains." The only way to tell for sure is to check the missile's performance after launching.

The SS-20 is a super-smart missile. It has, according to the CIA, "an accuracy of about .02 nautical miles if a pre-surveyed launch position is used." That's less than half the length of a football field.

Not only that, but the SS-20 is fully mobile; it's fired from the same truck that carries it around. It "can be launched within 30 seconds if it is at its highest state of readiness," the CIA reported, adding: "Otherwise, about 20 to 30 minutes are required ...." And a new missile can be launched within a few seconds if major reaiming isn't needed.

That's the SS-20, the missile arrayed against our Western European allies. Brezhnev has offered not to deploy more than the 300 already in place — if no new U.S. missiles are sent to Europe.

What many Europeans fail to understand, though, is that each SS-20 can be converted into a long-range missile. Realizing this, U.S. negotiators at the SALT II talks got the Russians to agree not to produce the third-stage "conversion kit" for its SS-20s. That concession, of course, is now inoperative.

The CIA estimates that the Soviets already have at least 100 of the third-stage components in their secret stockpile. And one CIA agent in Russia estimated that the Russians plan to produce 1,600 to 1,700 of the versatile, pinpoint-accurate SS-20s.

That's what makes Brezhnev's pious promise to keep his additional SS-20s in Siberia such a sham. By attaching the extra rocket, the missiles would be able to hit Europe anyway — or even the United States.

KOCH-Y KLATSCH: In a recent, exclusive interview with my associate Bill Gruver, New York mayor and gubernatorial candidate Ed Koch was his usually candid self. Some examples of Kochismo:

— "The United Nations has become an abomination. It is a claque for the Arab and Soviet majority ... It is a tool of the Arabs and doesn't serve the cause of peace anymore."

— "The Democratic Party has left its own people — the middle class who built the party... In 1980 the voters rejected not just Democratic candidates but the party as well. We tried to embalm our past success ... We have become an echo, not an alternative. We must get the center back if we are to win elections."

— "I didn't vote for Ronald Reagan, but I like him. He kept two promises he made to me" (on taking over Medicaid and giving New York City credit if its fiscal affairs were put in order).

— "I didn't want to run for governor and I told (Hugh) Carey that. I urged him to run. He would have won. When he is good, he is superb. I would have been with him all the way."

— "Most people are fearful that we may return to the 1930s. They smell it and are deathly afraid it will happen again."

GEORGE F. WILL

El Salvador demonstration frivolous

WASHINGTON — Ours is a temperate country, politically and climatically. Voter turnouts vary with the weather, low when the sun shines, even lower when it rains. Spring had sprung last Saturday, so 23,000 of the old reliables rallied here. They were folks from the Vietnam "peace movement," now with another guerrilla war to support. They demanded (guess — fill in the blanks): "Get _____ out of _____!"

George F. Will

"Get 100,000 Russians out of Afghanistan"? No.

"Get 2,000 Cubans out of Nicaragua"? Wrong again.

Their demand was "Get the United States out of El Salvador" (where there are 52 U.S. advisors — one for every 442 demonstrators here last Saturday).

The demonstration, cheering the communists who would try to disrupt Sunday's elections in El Salvador, was both poisonous and frivolous. It was the Left out for a lark at the expense of the Salvadorans who hiked miles and crawled beneath gunfire for the right to broil in the sun for hours in lines at polling places.

The U.S. ambassador to El Salvador was ebullient about the turnout. Asked (on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley") about the need for "a political settlement that brings the leftists in," he said: "I think it is being demonstrated today that there aren't many leftists to be brought in." But numbers are not decisive. About three percent of the Polish people are communists — one hundred percent of Poland's government is communist.

Now most of the occupying army of American journalists has been withdrawn. The euphoria will abate, the killing — supported by Nicaragua, Cuba, the Soviet Union, the PLO, Vietnam, North Korea, Libya — will not. Neither will the demonstrations by American and European friends of the enemies of elections. U.S. policy will remain focused on the chimera of a "political settlement," perhaps with the calamity of Cuban involvement — at U.S. initiative — in negotiations about the region.

Since 1978, about 90,000 persons — one of every 150 persons — have been killed in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala. El Salvador's 32,000 dead are a portion of its population comparable to 2 million Americans. What political engineer can build a bridge across that river of blood and bitterness?

There are two armies in El Salvador. Under a political settlement, who would control which? Who — which — could go where? We are invited to hope for negotiations with Nicaragua. But Nicaragua says it is doing nothing now, so what will it agree to do less of?

From Czechoslovakia in 1948 to South Vietnam in 1975, we have seen the results of political "settlements" that seek to reconcile irreconcilables. Attempts to split differences that can not be split produce social disintegration and victory for the most ruthless.

The unvarnishable truth is that the Reagan administration's feeble response to Poland's crisis has made it hard for any government, or guerrilla force, to take the administration seriously. Now the administration's image of impotence has been compounded by its approach to Cuba. Perhaps the existence of Castro's Cuba (and since 1979 a clone of it — Nicaragua) has made the Monroe Doctrine void. But, remarkably, the administration is managing to make matters worse by trying to enter negotiations with Cuba, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Soviet Union. If the administration is determined to involve the Soviet Union in this hemisphere, it should at least eliminate the middle man, thereby eliminating his — Castro's — pretense that he is autonomous.

If the United States negotiates with Cuba about Central America, every Latin American government will instantly draw this conclusion: Better make arrangements with Cuba before the United States makes arrangements for you. Every guerrilla group now active, and some not yet active, will learn this lesson: Create enough chaos and the United States will initiate negotiations with your Cuban sponsors.

The administration's theory really may be — incredible though it sounds — that Castro can be bought, or at least bribed. That is, the United States can offer him a larger subvention than the one he subsists on from Moscow — the one he pays for by selling Cuba's young men in places like Angola. Once bought, he will (so the theory goes) be tame, motivated by the desire to improve the material well-being of the people he has, until now, been terrorizing and selling.

Perhaps Republicans think everyone is, deep down, a Republican: Everyone thinks like a banker, or a tractor dealer, or an aluminum-siding salesman. Economic motives are primary, economic calculations control everyone, everywhere. But as has been said, if Castro were governed by economic motives, he would be a banker in Havana. And, besides, he would die of boredom running a Caribbean Sweden.

It is, to say no more, unclear what the administration thinks it is doing with Castro. But sometimes Republicans do seem swaddled in a thick blanket of incomprehension about the 20th century. That is no small defect in a political party.

ART BUCHWALD

Getting folks for the wars will be easy!

The big debate over defense expenditure is how many wars the United States should be prepared to fight at the same time.

Art Buchwald

When you ask to spend a trillion and a half dollars over five years, there are always a few sourpusses in America who want to know where the money is going.

Every president sees it differently. President Eisenhower believed nuclear weapons were enough of a deterrent to stop the Soviets, and he was for the "big-bang-one-war" theory.

John F. Kennedy was a two-and-a-half-war man and wanted us to be prepared to fight the Russians, the Chinese and some Third World country, all at the same time. Then, as luck would have it, the Soviets and the Chinese had a falling out, so he scaled down our military strategy to fighting only one-and-a-half wars.

Lyndon Johnson was also for one-and-a-half wars (the big one with the Russians, and the half one against the Vietnamese).

But before he could say "bang," the half-a-war turned into a whole one in Indochina, and the military started having doubts that you could fight a half-a-war without escalating it into something bigger.

People who know about these things say Nixon's defense strategy after the Vietnam war ended was to also prepare us for one large war and one small war, not necessarily in the same area.

President Carter came along, and while his critics say he only was interested in fighting one big war, he did start building up the military to fight two, though there was some question as to whether we could even fight one with a volunteer Army.

Now we have President Reagan, who insists we must prepare for a "nuclear war," a "conventional war" and a "protracted war," and that's why it's going to cost us one trillion and a half big ones.

Unlike his predecessors, who talked in terms of the numbers of wars we should be able to handle at the same time, the president and his Defense Secretary are thinking in other terms.

At the minimum we must have a three-ocean Navy, and prepare for "horizontal escalation," which means rather than confront the enemy at the target of his choosing, we should attack him or his client state at a place where he is weak. All this is predicated on the assumption that only non-nuclear weapons are put into play.

The Reagan strategists have also added a new deterrent which ups the defensive ante, which is that we must also prepare ourselves for a "protracted war," rather than the short one that other administrations were counting on. The reason for this, according to an article written by Richard Halloran of The New York Times (from which I stole most of this information), is the Reagan people don't want the enemy misled into thinking he could outlast us in a conventional war.

Although the Defense Department is certain how much money it needs to get us even with the Soviets, it has not explained where it will get the troops to fight a horizontal war, a protracted war and possibly a nuclear war all at the same time. But I'm sure once they get the weapons they'll be able to find the people.

If you think I'm crazy discussing what defense options are open to us these days, you should talk to the people in Washington who are thinking them up for us.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, April 1, the 91st day of 1982. There are 274 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 1, 1933, the persecution of Jews began in Germany.

On this date:

In 1572, the Dutch War for Independence began.

In 1964, Francois Duvalier had himself installed as president of Haiti for life.

In 1970, France called for a general conference on Indochina to make the whole area "a zone of neutrality and peace."

In 1974, after an intensive search with Mariner 10's cameras, scientists concluded the planet Mercury does not have a moon.

Ten years ago: Thousands of communist troops swept through South Vietnam's northernmost province in an attempt to seize control.

Five years ago: Defense Secretary Harold Brown expressed doubt any new arms agreement with the Soviets would be reached soon.

One year ago: A videotape at the Abscam bribery trial of Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., showed he agreed to have a concealed interest in a mining venture that turned out to be a set-up by FBI undercover agents.

Today's birthdays: Actress Debbie Reynolds is 50. Baseball star Rusty Staub is 38.

Janitor charged in girl's death

TAYLOR, Texas (AP) — A former school janitor has been charged with murder in the brutal attack on a 17-year-old girl stabbed six times, authorities said.

Arcadio Torres, 27, was accused Wednesday of slaying Gina Reichenbach on the school running track Tuesday. He was jailed in Georgetown under $100,000 bond.

Assistant Williamson County Attorney Jim Jarvis said Torres served 15 days in jail in 1980 for making a "terroristic threat" against Miss Reichenbach and had been committed to Austin State Hospital twice in the last two years.

About 60 schoolboy athletes were practicing near a high school field at the time the girl was attacked. Members of the boys' track team subdued the assailant and held him until police arrived, police said.

Athletic director Eddy Spiller said when the man "saw us coming, he turned, looked at us and her and stuck the knife in her stomach."

High winds, snow bring havoc to West, Midwest

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
Associated Press Writer

March went out with a roar Wednesday, clobbering the West Coast with up to 2 feet of snow and storming across the Midwest in a flurry of tornadoes and high winds that wrecked homes and toppled utility poles like bowling pins.

Avalanches roared through the Alpine Meadows ski resort in the California Sierra Nevada, killing two people and injuring two. Two more people were reported missing. The resort has been closed to skiers since the weekend because of heavy snow.

Authorities closed the nearby Squaw Valley ski resort, site of the 1960 winter Olympics, because of the extreme avalanche danger. Five people were rescued unharmed after avalanches there.

Eleven more bodies washed ashore on the beaches of Florida, bringing the total to 20 deaths in the breakup of a Haitian freighter in a storm earlier in the week.

One man drowned in Iowa trying to swim a wind-whipped lagoon at Mason City, officials said.

Twisters and winds gusting at hurricane force Tuesday and Wednesday left a trail of splintered homes and topless buildings in numerous communities across Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio.

At least 15,000 homes and businesses were without power in southern Michigan.

A twister plowed into Mount Vernon, Ohio, on Wednesday, hitting a high school and running through an area four blocks wide and three-quarters of a mile long. None of the students was hurt, but seven other people received minor injuries and at least four homes were destroyed.

"I know there are some houses blown down," said Sheriff Paul Rowe in Mount Vernon as state disaster officials were dispatched to the scene. "I know there are some trailers blown apart. I know some trees are down and some power lines are down."

Ohio Gov. James A. Rhodes sent 15 National Guardsmen to Mount Vernon to prevent looting and vandalism. Damage was estimated at $300,000.

The high wind was a factor in a fire that destroyed four buildings in Buffalo Center in Iowa.

About a dozen people were injured late Tuesday when a tornado touched down in the southern Illinois town of Ina, destroying nine homes and damaging 40 others for total damages estimated at $1 million. One home was thrown 60 yards, landing on another house and injuring a 30-year-old woman and her two children.

In the West, another storm was hammering the Pacific coast with powerful winds, drenching rain and heavy snow from California to Oregon.

IN SQUAW VALLEY, A California ski resort about 200 miles east of San Francisco, five people were rescued after an avalanche buried their homes Wednesday under 20 feet of snow. There were no reports of injuries.

Up to 2 feet of snow snarled traffic in the mountain passes of Oregon. Sgt. Phillip Mohr of the state police in Newport said numerous cars and trucks were stalled in the Van Duzer Corridor between McMinnville and Lincoln City.

Gusty winds Tuesday hit Fort Irwin in the California desert, where four paratroopers were killed and 156 were injured in a massive training exercise of the 82nd Airborne Division from Fort Bragg, N.C. An airplane flipped as it was landing in Des Moines, Iowa on Tuesday. Winds gusting to 60 mph ripped up part of a roof being installed on the new auditorium at North Scott High School in Eldridge, Iowa.

Charges dropped in fire

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecutors asked a judge to dismiss charges against a night desk clerk and the manager of the West Chase Hilton Hotel because they did not want to damage the investigation of the March 6 blaze that killed 11 people.

Municipal Court Judge Sam Alfano agreed Wednesday to drop misdemeanor charges of negligence against James Harvey, a night desk clerk, and hotel manager Erich Huemer.

Harvey was accused of failing to immediately report the fire, and Huemer was charged with failing to submit an evacuation plan to the city fire marshal's office.

"We have concluded that the pursuit of the prosecution of the two gentlemen would be detrimental to the overall investigation of the fire and not in the best interest of an accurate, coordinated conclusion of the investigation," said prosecutor Randy Ashby.

Cooperation between the investigators and others involved in the inquiry had been hampered since the complaints were filed, officials said.

"There could have been some files asked for, some information asked for that maybe our investigators did not want to release at this time," said Deputy Fire Chief Dale Everitt.

Ashby said the dismissal of the charges, which each carried a maximum $200 fine, would not affect civil lawsuits filed by survivors or the victims' relatives.

The cause of the deadly fire is still under investigation, but fire officials have said they believe the fire was accidential, possibly sparked by a burning cigarette left in an overstuffed chair.

DRAMA IN REAL LIFE

Remembering tragedy of sunken oil-rig

By EDWARD HUGHES
Special from Reader's Digest

EDITOR'S NOTE: The sinking in February of the oil-drilling rig Ocean Ranger, 180 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, resulted in 84 deaths and was a tragic reminder of the constant peril faced by the men who work these behemoths. Since 1976, over 200 people have died in drilling-platform disasters — more than half of them in the 1980 wreckage that claimed 123 lives. Here is what happened:

On the Alexander L. Kielland, a huge floating dormitory platform among the drilling rigs in the North Sea's Greater Ekofisk oil field, the day shift had just ended. Dozens of men headed for the dining hall for supper. Sixty or more flocked into the rig's cinema.

Outside, a gale was tossing 25-foot waves against the platform's legs. No cause for concern; the Kielland was a marvel of modern engineering, designed to withstand any weather.

Suddenly a shudder came from deep below, then a loud bang. The movie hall tilted to a perilous 40-degree angle. The movie screen lurched upward to become the ceiling, chairs plunged down into the rear exits. A ping-pong table from the adjoining recreation room and heavy rig equipment crashed through the thin wall into the theater, crushing many of the screaming men now scrambling to reach the doors.

Thus, at 6:29 p.m. on March 27, 1980, began the worst disaster, in terms of lives lost, in the history of offshore-oil exploration. The Kielland housed 212 workers at the time. Bigger than a football field, the 10,105-ton rig resembled a huge ship on stilts. Its two decks were a maze of machine shops, storage rooms, generators. Above were four stories of prefabricated-steel bedrooms. Looming over the top deck helicopter landing pad was a 160-foot derrick.

The Kielland floated on pontoons anchored to the bottom. It had done four years' service in Norway's storm-tossed sector of the North Sea. Now the platform nosed over into the waves.

Emergency sirens shrieked; men clawed toward the open-air deck. Two Norwegians — Gerry Stigen, 26, and John Nilssen, 36 — were among those who made it out of the theater.

Thomas Greenwood, 36, a Briton, rushed into the corridor where men were pulling themselves up a handrail toward the deck. He made it almost to the top, then slipped and plummeted to the bottom. Someone yanked him back to the railing where he again pulled himself hand over hand to the exit. By now, frigid sea water was flooding the structure, and the men below were drowning.

The deck, tilting at a 50-degree angle, resembled a surrealistic battlefield: Steel cable slashed like lethal spaghetti through clumps of men. Others were knocked over by large acetylene-gas bottles flying loose.

Scores of workers had climbed into the superstructure, clinging to girders like human flies in the howling winds, some falling into icy waters 100 feet below.

A few dozen determined men managed the precipitous climb to the rear platform boats. Greenwood reached No. 7 to find Stigen and others already inside. He managed to loosen the boat from its davits; but, as it dropped on its wires, No. 7 was blown against the rig. It broke up, spilling occupants into the sea.

At this point, a quick-witted crane operator on the next drilling platform swung his huge boom out toward the collapsing rig and lowered a rope basket to wave-top level. Into it scrambled Stigen and several others.

As the basket was about to be raised, John Nilssen bobbed out of the waves and grabbed the bottom of the net. Dangling perilously below the basket, he and the rest were lifted to the deck of the drilling platform 150 feet above.

Back on the Kielland, Greenwood spotted two men at the edge of the platform hanging helplessly by their life jackets, which had caught in a fence, and cut them free. As the pair fell into the sea, he muttered a prayer that they would make it to a nearby piece of a broken boat. Amazingly, both succeeded.

Seconds later, the Kielland slid beneath the waves and turned turtle. (The pontoons kept it from sinking.) Greenwood and his companions were hurled into the sea.

As he was swept out in the giant wave churned by the platform's final plunge, Greenwood saw boat number five's upturned hull. He and 20 half-drowned men managed to grip the boat's outer railing.

"Rock it, rock it!" someone shouted. Suddenly the boat turned upright and the men in the water were stunned to see a hatch pulled open by someone inside. The water-soaked men were hauled aboard. Uncounted others were adrift on bits of wreckage, or bobbing about in life jackets.

Word of the disaster had gone out over the radio of the neighboring oil rig. A swarm of vessels — tankers, freighters, small fishing boats — moved onto the scene.

After two days of nonstop rescue operations, the tragic toll was counted. In all 89 men had been saved, leaving 123 known dead or missing.

The cause of it all was traced to a crack that had spread from a hole drilled in the leg brace to hold an electronic device for positioning the rig.

Shipment cleared for export

BLAINE, Wash. (AP) — After a four-day delay, Customs officials have determined that a shipment of 19 trucks of oil exploration equipment bound for the Soviet Union does not violate export regulations.

Mike Fleming, regional spokesman for the Customs Service in San Francisco, said officials determined the equipment from the Merz Co. of Ponca City, Okla., did not require an export license.

...As part of the 70th anniversary of the Girl Scout movement, the Midland Girl Scouts are holding a spring fair birthday party on Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at St. Ann's Parish Center.

Purpose of the annual fair is to acquaint parents, friends and the community with the activities of the Girl Scout program. There is no admission charge and all area residents are invited to attend.

The spring fair will begin with a flag ceremony at 10 a.m. Following will be a birthday party highlighted by a package decorating contest. Each participating troop will bring a beautifully packaged gift for the Girl Scout Program Center. Decoration will be judged during the fair and prizes awarded.

Booths will be set up designed to exhibit each troop's Girl Scout activities. In addition to the demonstration booths, food booths manned by the older Girl Scouts will offer major concession items such as Cokes, hot dogs, tacos, nachos etc. As an example of some of the activities, one troop will decorate and personalize shoestrings. Others will feature candy making, knot tying, facial tissue carnations demonstrations and making of friendship sticks.

Chairman of the spring fair birthday party is Fran Polston.

Camp Fire candy sales begin Friday

Camp Fire Inc., a United Way Agency, announces its annual candy sale beginning Friday.

This year there will be four different types of candy from which to make a selection. They are Heath Almond Clusters, Mint Patties, Toffee candies and Stuckey's Pecan Log Rolls.

Money raised this year will go to support various council activities and the individual groups. The summer activities sponsored by Camp Fire will include local day camps, camping and hiking trips, resident camp and local learning experiences.

These activities are open both to members and members-at-large. The member-at-large program is open to the public for a small registration fee.

All the activities that the local Camp Fire Council offers are in keeping with the ideals set forth in conjunction with the National Camp Fire organization. They promote the member's individuality, diversified interests and relationships.

For more information, please call 694-7704. "Please show your support of the local Camp Fire Council by buying their candy when a member contacts you," said Amy White, publicity chairman.

Helpful children

NEW YORK (AP) — "It's ironic that before children are old enough to be very useful at home tasks their one passion is to help Mommy. Alas, by the time they are 10 or 12, and could give working parents a real hand, excuseitis has set in," says Esther Hautzig, author of a number of activity books for children.

"I wasn't told ... I didn't know how ... I couldn't read your note ... you forgot I had a meeting ... the job was too hard." These are some of the common excuses of children, along with the old favorite, "I forgot," notes Mrs. Hautzig, whose book, "Life With Working Parents," is written from the child's viewpoint.

If parents need chores done after school, without supervision, it's better to settle for modest help given regularly, instead of spasmodic major efforts, she advises. By planning, they can forestall alibis and structure tasks as "set-ups for success," she explains.

"If you and your children agree on what is reasonable, and make sure the task is do-able, they find a lot of satisfaction," she observes. "Then there's a chance for helping to become a habit."

Ingredients for a working plan, she points out, include a family calendar, so a chore assignment won't overlap a play rehearsal, for instance. Then there's "Message Central," a bulletin board or chalkboard everyone learns to consult automatically upon coming home.

After that, parents can identify areas where a little regular help is most useful, and reach agreement with the kids, says Mrs. Hautzig, who adds that these tips from an informal poll of working mothers conducted by the Regina Corp. will help dehassle after-school jobs and ease children into more responsibility successfully:

—Quick Cleaning: A once-over-lightly is easier when equipment is convenient for youngsters to use: a lightweight electric vacuum cleaner for whisking over rugs and floors; a hand brush and squeegee mop for spills; a pump-spray cleaner and sponges for spritzing the kitchen appliances.

—Room-tidying: Many parents sigh and surrender to a closed-door policy, but if a child's room is always cluttered, maybe more storage space will help. Work with the child to add shelves, hooks, cupboards, until there can be an assigned place for everything.

—Shopping: A common plaint is "You didn't say what kind you wanted!" One answer is a photocopied quantity of Mom's customized shopping list, showing all regularly used items, with brand and size preferences.

A quick morning checkoff does it, or a call from the office — and the child has confidence about choosing correctly.

—Dinner: The easiest phase-in is to ask kids to put a premixed casserole from the refrigerator into the oven at the right time. Non-cooking preparations like washing salad greens are simple.

If children want to tackle a whole meal, have them cook the whole menu several times on weekends, when you're around, so it will be tried-and-true when they're on their own.

—Laundry: It's not hard to get family members to put dirty clothes in a hamper or utility room, and washer-dryers do the actual cleaning job. But, as any weary sock-matcher can testify, the real bother is sorting and restoring items to bureau and closet.

It's a big help to supply each child with large zippered netting bags to use for socks, underwear or other knitted clothes requiring no ironing or folding. Bags can go from hamper to washer and dryer and back into rooms with no sorting on anybody's part.

Different kind of turkey soup

TURKEY CORN SOUP

A dividend — after roasting a turkey.

10-to 12-pound roast turkey carcass, (broken up), drumstick and wing bones
2 quarts water
1 medium onion, halved
2 inner ribs celery with leaves
1 large carrot, pared
2 teaspoons salt
4 peppercorns
1 small bayleaf
8¾-ounce can creamstyle golden corn
12-ounce can shoepeg whole kernel white corn, undrained
Diced remnants of roast turkey

In a large saucepot being all the ingredients except the corn and turkey remnants to a boil, cover and let bubble gently for two hours. Strain and reserve carrot. Dice carrot and reheat with broth, corn and diced turkey. Makes 2 quarts.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Use paper tablecloth for wrapping gifts

DEAR HELOISE:

Instead of using several rolls of expensive wrapping paper that have to be pieced together to giftwrap an extra large box, save time and money by using a decorative paper tablecloth (they're sold in card shops).

Quick and pretty! — Grace Marinello

BOBBIN-LESS

Dear Heloise: I do a lot of sewing and often find when I have no empty bobbins that the filled ones have an unusual shade of thread.

A good way to clear these bobbins, I've since found, is to use the odd colors as basting and gathering thread.

It keeps me from wasting thread, clears my bobbins, and helps me spot those basting threads when it's time to pull them out. — Cathy Tannahill

NO-SEW PROJECT

Dear Heloise: I can tell you that I'm no whiz with a needle. About the only sewing I can do is putting on buttons.

So I'm delighted to share my latest discovery. My 3-month-old daughter really splashes in her tub. She seems to think that, since she has to take a bath, I need one too.

Rubber aprons are hard to find around here and expensive, to boot. So, on a whim, I placed my cloth barbecue apron on an old vinyl tablecloth (a shower curtain would work too).

I traced around the apron with a pen, then cut out the shape. It worked! Now I have a waterproof apron for bath time, and I never had to thread a needle! — Chris Kamble

+++

Smart gal! Wish all sewing were so easy. Just make sure the neck straps and ties are wide enough to prevent tearing. — Heloise

QUICK CLEANUP

Dear Heloise: A child's broom and dustpan are small enough to tuck away in the bathroom storage area.

So much easier to use to sweep up ever-constant hairs than making a trip to the kitchen for the regular broom. — Mary Heagle

CLEANER-UPPER

Dear Heloise: At age 80, I have a handy cleaning device — a car radio antenna (I found it in my yard).

Secure a small cloth or nylon net scrubber to the end with a rubberband. It does a great job in small spaces under the washing machine, refrigerator, behind cabinets, and under low tables, etc.

You can lengthen or shorten it, and it's lightweight and easily stored. — Elvera Brown

THOUGHTFUL GESTURE

Dear Heloise: When I started a new secretarial job, I was pleased (and amused) to find that my predecessor had written reminders of routine jobs on the desk calendar.

For example, every Friday the calendar reminded me to water the plants.

This went on for a month or so, then the watering reminder stopped. But, after another month had elasped, on a Friday page I found, "Did you remember to water the plants every Friday?"

There were also notes about when to send meeting notices, letters, etc.

What a thoughtful person this secretary was, and I thought I'd pass her idea on to you. — Carol Landis

+++

Sure makes a new job and unfamiliar routine and surroundings much more pleasant.

She's a treasure, for sure! — Heloise

+++

Send an amusing anecdote to Heloise, P. O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't reply to your letter personally but, as space permits, she will use letters that are good for a giggle in her column.

AT WIT'S END

Safe topics

By ERMA BOMBECK

Sometimes it seems like the whole country is at odds with one another. We can't agree on anything anymore.

There was a time when all you had to do to get a standing ovation was to mention God, motherhood and flag and hot cocoa before bedtime, and an audience would rise to its feet as one.

In recent times, I have seen speakers booed for advocating peace, clean air and children.

There are no more one-size-fits-all conversations.

I can't stand rejection, especially when I'm eating, and it's getting tougher and tougher to attend a dinner party and get a topic on which everyone agrees.

I've kept a file of safe topics. They're all here. You're welcome to them.

"TV is a cultural wasteland!" No one will say anything good about television in public. Count on it. Despite the fact that 150 million people watch an average of 42 hours of television a week, no one will defend it . . . even the couple who skip dessert to get home in time to watch "Dallas."

"Don't you feel sorry for Brooke Shields?" Never has compassion been put to such a strain, but no one, trust me, no one will risk being labeled a green-eyed monster. I have seen telethons put together to buy Brooke Shields a childhood.

"There's something wrong with a country that can put a man on the moon, but can't save the Asian Jocular from becoming extinct."

You've never seen outrage until you make this statement, despite the fact that there is no such animal as the Asian Jocular. Everyone wants to save something.

"The trouble with kids these days is they get too much." Kids are a cheap shot, but they're home in bed, so what the heck. You can blame them for pollution, the devaluation of the peso, mudslides in California, the inefficiency of the post office and the atrocities in El Salvador. Not one person will disagree.

"I simply won't pay $1.35 for a head of lettuce." This statement is usually made by a woman who hates lettuce anyway, but it always arouses an entire room to complain about the economy and reminisce about when cars "with everything" sold for $135.

"Have a good day" used to be pretty safe, but the other night when I said it a man leered, "What kind of crack is that? It's easy for you to say. You're working!"

Scratch "Have a good day."

DEAR ABBY

Mother, daughter have communication gap

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem many teen-agers have. I can't communicate with my parents — especially my mother. My father works most of the time, and when he gets home, he's tired. The last thing he wants to do is hear about my problems. He just reads the paper, has dinner and goes to bed.

My mom is another story. She's from Europe, and when she was my age, all she did was study and milk cows, so I can't blame her for being "dumb" when it comes to understanding American teen-agers. I can't seem to get through to her. I try to talk to her when she's not busy, but our hostilities get in the way and we always end up in a big fight. We're better off not talking to each other at all. I'd really like to have a good mother-daughter relationship.

I hope you have space in your column for this letter. My mother reads you faithfully, and if she sees it, it might open up some channels of communication. Thanks for listening. — N. in L.A.

DEAR N.: You are a very intelligent girl, and your sincerity comes through. Better communication can be established between you and your mother if, when you engage in a dialogue with her, you make it a point never to interrupt. Listen carefully, and when you speak, maintain a controlled, soft tone. If you disagree, do so respectfully. European-born mothers whose youth was spent studying and milking cows are far from "dumb." They're udderwise.

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorcee in my late 30s and I go to singles functions quite often.

I keep running into the same problem, and I don't know how to deal with it. After having a conversation (or a few dances) with a man, he comes on to me and asks for my telephone number, and whether I'm attracted to him or not, I always give it to him because I don't want to hurt his feelings.

Anyway, I end up not answering my phone for a week to avoid this particular man.

I used to say (when a man asked for my phone number), "I'm going with someone," but this is an old line, and besides, why would I be at a singles function if I were going with someone?

I know there has to be a better way of turning someone down diplomatically, but what is it? — HONEST AMY

DEAR AMY: Tell him if it's romance he has in mind, the "chemistry" isn't right for you, but you have this terrific girlfriend he might hit it off with, and if he's interested you can arrange it. That way, you're off the hook, and you could be doing two people a favor. One woman's leftovers can be another woman's banquet.

DEAR ABBY: You advise that when friends and relatives phone to say they are coming to visit — expecting to be houseguests — if you don't want houseguests, to say, "Lovely. We will be glad to make hotel or motel reservations for you."

Our question is, who picks up the tab? Our relatives (and friends) assume that because we live well, we can afford to pick up the tab. It's true that our income is more than most of our relatives, but we aren't that well-off.

We love our relatives, but we can't accommodate them in our home without inconveniencing ourselves, which we don't want to do. And we're afraid if we offer to make motel reservations for them, they will assume we'll pick up the tab. So how can we make this clear without appearing cheap? — BARELY MAKING IT

DEAR BARELY: Tell them you will be glad to inquire about motel rates and let them know what it will cost to be sure it's within their budget.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "QUIET IN KOKOMO": Better to remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak and remove all doubt. (P.S. Today is April Fool's Day.)

New concept in home buying unveiled

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

Normally, the purchase of a $100,000 home will require a down payment of $20,000 to $25,000. Not so with a newly unveiled home-buying plan.

The new concept would allow a family to acquire that $100,000 dream home with a $3,000 to $5,000 down payment.

The plan, now emerging in several Western and Southern states, is a unique variation of the "shared ownership" plan. It pairs an investor, who provides most of the down payment, with a home buyer qualified to make the monthly mortgage payments.

In return for interest-free use of the investor's money, the buyer agrees to share ownership of the property and appreciation (profits) when the home is sold.

For example, a family wants to purchase a $100,000 home but has only $5,000 as a down payment. The family's real estate broker finds an investor who is willing to put up the additional $20,000.

The investor and buyer sign a special partnership agreement. The investor owns 20 percent of the home and a specified proportion of the value appreciation. It is also agreed that the partnership arrangement will culminate at a selected time — usually at the end of a five- or seven-year term.

At that time, the buyer and investor have several options. They can extend the agreement. The occupying owner may buy the investor's share, or the investor may buy the occupying owner's share. Or they can agree to sell the home and share the profits equally.

It's a good opportunity for investors because it provides part-ownership in a premium type of real property with no management hassles or maintenance costs.

There's no mortgage payments required of the investor. He can share in the partnership's write-off for tax purposes. And he receives a substantial return on his investment if the property appreciates as expected.

The occupant-owner benefits from a no-interest source of most of the down payment. And he will receive a share of the value appreciation profit.

This type of "creative financing" was given a boost recently when the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. announced it would purchase mortgage loans tied to this type of special arrangement.

The Mortgage Corp. is a major secondary buyer of mortgages. It purchases loans after they are first granted to a home buyer by a primary lender (savings and loan association, bank, etc).

The corporation is a congressionally chartered multibillion-dollar firm, created to bring more funds into the home mortgage market.

Q. How many buildings and how much land is owned by the U.S. government?

A. According to the General Services Administration, the federal government owns about 405,000 buildings with over 2.65 billion square feet of floor space. And it owns 744 million acres of land.

Q. Will President Reagan's proposed budget cuts affect the production of new housing?

A. The president of the National Association of Home Builders put it this way:

"The budget cuts will reduce to a bare trickle the number of housing units built for those who need them. It will prolong and deepen the worst housing slump in post war history. It would indicate the administration has abandoned the nation's long-standing commitment to decent, affordable shelter for all Americans."

Inquiries are invited and may be answered in this column. Write: James M. Woodard, 825 N. San Marcos Road, Santa Barbara, CA 93111.

Looking at careers

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — Fifteen Pleasantville High School students interested in veterinary medicine took a period from their regular class schedules recently, gathered in a meeting room, and listened attentively as a veterinarian from a neighboring town discussed his work.

"There are two things you need to keep in mind in working as a veterinarian," Dr. Joseph T. McQuade told the students. "The first thing is, you're working with life. That's sacred. It supersedes everything else. The other thing is that you need to be sensitive to people because animals fulfill many psychological needs of their owners."

The session was part of a new career education program implemented at Pleasantville High School through the combined efforts of the school's guidance department, the Exploring Division of The Boy Scouts of America, and Al Farber, an IBM manager on loan to the organization.

The IBM program gives employees a year's time off with pay to work on socially constructive programs.

Career education is a new effort for the Exploring organization. Twenty-five years ago, Exploring was, for the most part, advanced Boy Scouting oriented to the out-of-doors. At that time it was all male.

After a nationwide survey found that most teenagers regarded the program as "kid stuff," the Scouts' national headquarters completely revamped the Exploring Division. It formed coed career-oriented posts that meet in facilities provided by sponsoring organizations, often major corporations.

Nationwide, there are 23,046 Explorer posts, with men and women sharing their professional knowledge in such varied fields as medicine, law enforcement, oceanography, banking, auto mechanics, electronics and journalism with nearly 500,000 Explorers — male and female.

Now, the division has begun to expand the program even further by helping local high schools develop personalized career education programs.

Using the career survey sheet that Explorers developed to recruit new members, schools determine students' career interests, then group them for seminars in career areas of special interest. Farber recruits and screens speakers and serves as liaison between the Exploring Division and six high schools in Westchester and Putnam counties.

"There would not be enough hours in a day for me to implement a program like this without the assistance of the Exploring Division and Al Farber," said Pleasantville guidance counselor Donna Rider, who divides her day between counseling high school and middle school students.

The Exploring organization also likes the arrangement, Exploring Director John Lafata of the Westchester-Putnam Boy Scout Council said.

"Now, we've become partners with guidance counselors to bring career awareness into the schools," he explained.

"For me, it's a rare opportunity to further an interest in young people and career education, yet maintain an income," says Farber.

When his leave is over in September, he'll go back to IBM, where he has worked 19 years. Prior to taking leave, he was a customer service manager in Manhattan.

THE ART OF LIVING

Of pasta, Puccini and an April fool

By JEFF DAVIDSON
(Special from Reader's Digest)

"Nyet puossibul," says the voice on the house phone in a thick Ukrainian accent. "You order harpsichord, we deliver harpsichord."

The voice is mine, the plaintive one at the other end is my wife's — threatening to call the police.

"I give lessons when husband away," I breathe ardently into the mouthpiece before she bangs down the receiver. Moments later, I am standing at our front door inside a six-foot-high carton — a red rose in my teeth — waiting for my wife to answer the bell and unwrap me.

This is not her first encounter with the April Ripper. Last year I was a Japanese rock group that answered her ad for a summer sublet. Two years ago, in the middle of the night, I nailed a dozen full-grown cabbages to a board in the garden, where she had scattered a packet of seeds the day before.

I can't help it, Doctor.

For 364 days a year, I am an honest, upright citizen, devoted husband, model father. But at midnight March 31st, I turn into a cunning charlatan who victimizes his wife and children.

I am not alone.

No one knows exactly how all this foolishness began, but the custom is surely very ancient. The holiday was widely observed in 16th-century France after adoption of the Gregorian calendar.

People who continued to celebrate New Year's Day on April 1st, where it had been under the old calendar, were dubbed "April Fools" — or "April Fish" — and regaled with elaborate mock gifts.

Whatever its origins, on every April 1st, large surfaces of the planet break out in a rash of exploding cigars, squirting coins, chocolate-covered golf balls, stray banknotes controlled by invisible wires. Most of these amateurish pranks are of only marginal interest to serious Aprilfoolologists, but the work of experts can approach high art. Some noteworthy ones:

In late March 1857, tickets were sold to the Annual Ceremony of the Washing of the Lions. The ritual ablutions were to take place at the White Gate of the historic Tower of London — on Sunday, April 1st.

Not only were there no lions to be washed but there wasn't even a White Gate. Like the traitors of old, the bamboozled visitors had indeed been sent to the Tower.

Some of the most distinguished modern contributions to the field are made by the news media in a once-a-year frolic as organs of misinformation. All over Europe, newspapers snare credulous readers with items whose respectable setting turns them from preposterous to plausible: "Swiss Big-Game Farm Markets Discount Giraffe Milk" . . . "Passage Over Italy of Two-tailed Comet Postponed Until Next April Due to Bad Weather" . . . "Thomas Cook Travel Agency to Celebrate Centenary by Offering Around-the-World Tours at 1872 Prices." (On the morning of April 2nd, Cook's London offices were deluged with applications.)

A Dutch newspaper once reported its changeover to new tulip-scented printer's ink and had readers all over Holland sniffing page one.

Everybody knows that money doesn't grow on trees. But what about spaghetti? A classic of media madness was a British Broadcasting Company television documentary on spaghetti-harvesting in Switzerland. Viewers throughout England watched attentively as natives of a Ticino village clambered up tree ladders to pick bountiful strands of spaghetti that chuckling cameramen had draped over the branches prior to filming.

A later sequence showed the happy harvesters at their dinner table, forking down the freshly gathered pasta. After the program, BBC phone lines were jammed with hundreds of calls from garden-loving English who wanted to know where they could procure spaghetti saplings.

My own all-time great April-Fool prank occurred some years ago in Italy during a performance of Puccini's opera, "Tosca." The heroine, grief-stricken at the pitiless execution of her lover, leaps to her death from a castle parapet.

During the last act, a waggish member of the company quietly substituted a springy trampoline for the deep mattress used to cushion Tosca's offstage fall. At the climax, with the orchestra in poignant, heartrending crescendo, the anguished soprano hurled herself off the battlements. But no sooner had she disappeared than she bounced back up again, and again, to provide a convulsed audience with the only happy ending in all Puccini.

Plant valuable vegetables

Copley News Service

I've never really thought of gardening in monetary terms nor totted up what my vegetable garden has produced nor compared my costs to the cost of buying what I grow.

But given the inflation rate of recent years and its impact on the average family's food budget, more of us will be looking to plant those vegetables which yield the highest dollar value in the home garden — often a garden which occupies a limited space, perhap even just containers on an apartment balcony.

Last week, in discussing intensive gardening methods, I mentioned a National Garden Bureau survey which found that the most highly rated vegetable for the home garden in terms of dollar value of yield per square feet is the tomato, followed by green or bunching onions.

The third most valuable vegetable is leaf lettuce which, like green onions, can be sown very early. And though most leaf lettuce takes about 45 days to mature, you can begin pulling every other plant when the seedlings are only half grown. Thinning makes room for the remaining seedlings to fill out. Mixed leaf lettuce varieties make a most attractive row filled with nice contrasts in leaf color, shape and taste.

If you can put together some plastic covered tunnels to place over your lettuce row, then you can plant even earlier and be munching tasty greenery while travel-worn equivalents are selling for high prices in the supermarkets.

The fourth most valuable vegetable is a surprise. Although in 15th spot in general popularity among home gardeners, the turnip was judged highly valuable because of its quick maturity and its many uses. Sown in a cool part of the vegetable garden very early in spring, turnips yield a quick crop of tangy greens to include in a mixed salad or to steam. Thickly sown turnips will yield their nutritious greens from the thinnings. The turnip roots improve in sugar content and flavor as fall weather grows cooler.

Fifth in value to the home gardener is summer squash. Zucchini, for example, once turned on by warm weather, becomes a veritable green machine that can produce two to three squash per week all summer. To obtain maximum monetary value from summer squash, don't pick them till they weigh over one pound.

However, I must confess I don't follow this last rule myself because I like my zucchini tiny. But then, I'll never be rich either. Zucchini is available now in both green and gold varieties and they're tasty cut in sticks for dipping or quickly stir-fried in butter with onions and tomato — an easy and versatile vegetable for the home gardener.

Garden peas have never been a high dollar-value item in the home garden but most of us have always planted them anyway, just for their incomparable taste when plucked fresh from the vine, shelled and eaten raw out of hand or cooked lightly.

But now the edible-podded peas have sharply increased the value of this vegetable, doubling the food production from each row. So snap peas rank sixth among vegetables for value per square foot of garden space.

Fatherhood causes some to feel lonely

By DON CARTER
Hearst Feature Service

"Society has a tradition of ignoring a father's feelings, so the poor guy with troubles feels very, very lonely," says Boston psychiatrist Dr. Gregory Rochlin.

Rochlin complains that there is a "remarkable scarcity" of literature dealing with fathers. What there is, he says, consists mostly of guidebooks to instruct fathers about what they're supposed to do for the sake of the children.

There is a tradition for men to give no voice to their own fatherhood," he continues, observing that while Bertrand Russell, Dwight Eisenhower and Winston Churchill wrote about their relationships with their fathers, "the remarks they wrote about themselves as fathers were perfunctory."

The psychiatrist believes women are better conditioned to handle parenthood by both culture and biology. He says that women have nine months to experience bodily change and the instinctive feelings of nurturing to prepare for the new role. "They feel these enormous changes in their bodies, but man can be only a spectator."

Fatherhood brings a more sudden change and some conflicts into a man's life, Rochlin observes. He says childbirth gives an immediate boost to a man's sense of masculinity, but also produces feelings of femininity; many men are threatened by the maternal instincts aroused by a new child.

Other conflicts are caused by the new father's changed relationship to his wife, the new responsibilities that bring home the reality that the father's boyhood is over, and the confusion of stereotypes about a father's varied roles as provider, disciplinarian and friend.

In his practice, Rochlin has seen a number of troubled fathers. Among them:

A father with a wife Rochlin described as "overly dependent" who had problems with the demands of a new family. "It means I have to quit thinking 'Me First,' because the child and wife come first," he told the doctor.

Scientist disguises enzyme in yarn to use in new treatment of cancer

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst Feature Service

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — By disguising a valuable, but risky anti-cancer enzyme in plastic "yarn," a New Jersey scientist has made it safe and helpful in four dying cancer patients.

Dr. Frank F. Davis, professor of biochemistry at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, reported results of experiments with the enzyme asparaginase at a meeting for science writers sponsored by the American Cancer Society.

He cautioned that the new drug system is still in the testing stages and "several years away" from use by other cancer victims.

Scientists have long seen a role for asparaginase in cancer treatment because it breaks down asparagine, a chemical in the blood certain cancer cells need to grow.

By starving cancer cells of this nutrient, doctors have induced rapid remissions or diappearance of certain cancers.

But asparaginase quickly disappears after injection, requiring repeated shots. It also creates a severe immune response in the patient, which destroys the enzyme and later may "oversensitize" and destroy the patient's ability to fight cancer.

This made it useful only for a brief period. Davis, a biochemist, reasoned that by fiddling around with the enzyme's ability to sensitize the patient, he might overcome these problems.

He attached strands of a simple plastic nicknamed PEG (polyethylene glycol) to the naked enzyme and found that asparaginase lost its ability to trigger immune responses. It also gained some life span in the blood.

Further purification and the selection of a modified form of the enzyme also removed the risk of suppressing immunity.

After testing the PEG-wrapped enzyme in animals, Davis and his coworkers tried it in four patients with hopeless lymphomas, cancers of the blood forming tissue.

Treated at the Veterans Administration Hospital in East Orange, N.J., all four showed "slight evidence of improvement" and no significant ill effects of the treatment.

A second PEG enzyme, PEG-uricase, has been given to five patients with high uric acid levels in their blood.

After injection of PEG-uricase, the uric acid level in the blood fell to invisible levels in an hour.

"By breaking down uric acid," Davis said, "Many cancer patients will be able to withstand more aggressive drug treatment and fewer side effects."

The New Jersey scientist said his goal is to produce a "bank" of PEG-wrapped enzymes useful in treating human cancers.

Animal studies reported at the same meeting earlier described progress toward preventing sterility in the majority of men treated with drugs for Hodgkin's Disease.

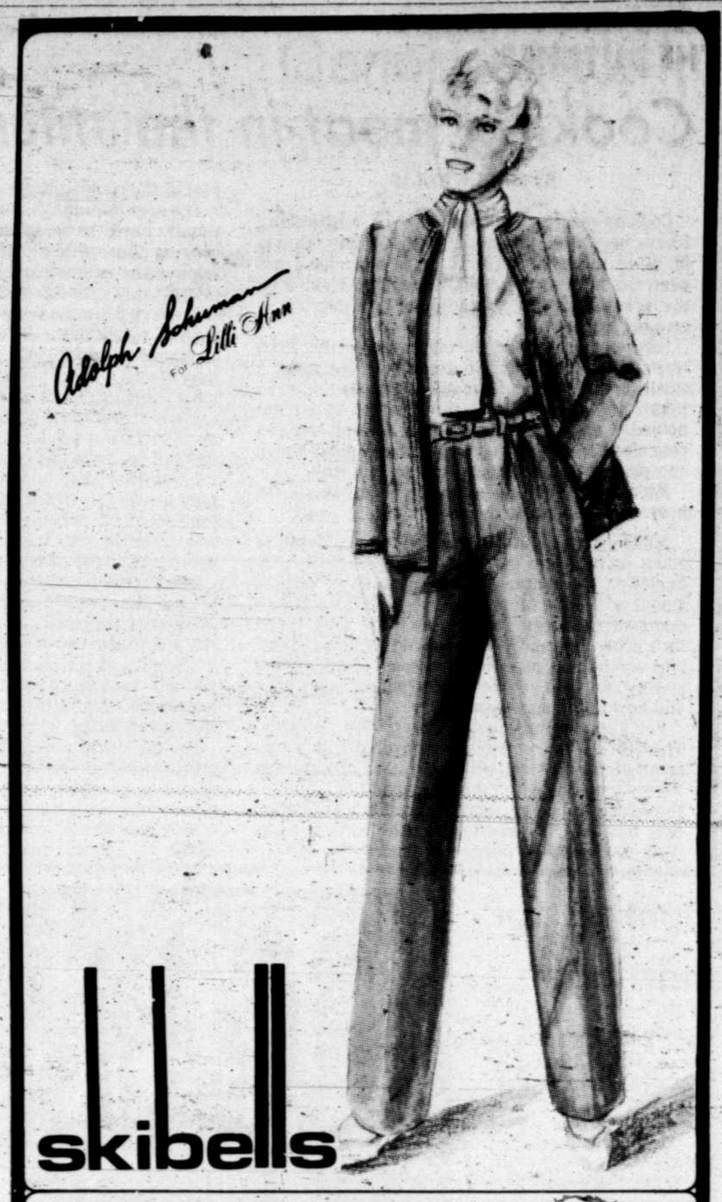

However, the drugs used produce permanent sterility in 80 percent of the men.

Cooking meat in the microwave

By MERLE ELLIS

Cooking meat in a microwave oven is something I have been slow to embrace. Most of my failures in using the microwave to cook meat have not been the fault of the oven, but can be blamed on my lack of basic understanding of how microwave cooking works

I have spent a good bit of time over the years trying to correct that shortcoming. I've spent a small fortune on microwave cook books and even taken a few classes on the subject. It all has helped. I am now a lot more confident and can pass along some of what I've learned about which cuts do best in this kind of cooking and why.

Microwave cooking is unique because all the heat is created inside the food.

Microwaves penetrate the surface to a depth of about an inch and then the heat is gradually conducted to the center. Meat is made up of varying amounts of lean, fat and bone, all of which absorb microwave energy at different rates and, therefore, cook differently. Understanding how the various component parts of meat react to microwave energy can help you determine which cuts to buy and how to prepare them.

Fat absorbs microwave energy very quickly. Therefore, a roast completely covered with a thin layer of fat (barded) will cook more quickly and evenly than one with fat on only one side. Also, for the same reason, when cooking a roast with fat on only one side, be sure to keep the fat side away from the source of microwave energy for at least part of the cooking time.

The area around the bone also cooks quickly and usually needs to be shielded for a portion of the cooking time with a piece of aluminum foil. Or, remove the bone entirely. A boneless roast cooks more evenly than one with the bone left in.

Some cuts are made up of two or more muscles, each of which has a different density and degree of tenderness and cooks at a different rate in the microwave. I have had best success with cuts of meat made up of one solid muscle.

Even stews cook more evenly and come out more uniformly tender if the cubes are of uniform size and are from one solid muscle.

Remember that in a microwave each piece of meat cooks independently, so size and shape are important. If cubes are of different sizes, the smaller ones may become overdone and tough before the larger ones are cooked.

The time will come when butchers will help out by providing "meats for the microwave" in special sections of their meat cases; roasts cuts the proper size and shape, cubes and strips cut with regard to uniformity of size and density. In the meantime, you will have more success cooking meat in your microwave if you do your own cutting, rolling, slicing and dicing.

Round is the ideal shape for a roast for the microwave, so select roasts that are as nearly round as possible. A boneless rib eye comes out better than a rib roast with the bone left in. Any evenly shaped and compact roast will cook more evenly than an irregularly shaped one.

Protecting home from mildew

Copley News Service

Q. I have plastered walls in my 30-year-old Cape Cod home. The outer walls in my bedroom have developed mildew. I wash it of, but it keeps reappearing. Now the whole house has developed a musty odor.

Could you suggest something that I can do to correct this? — Mrs. W.T.A., Keonie, N.J.

A. The microscopic mold spores that form mildew are in the air everywhere, and you can never completely eliminate them. But they flourish and grow most noticeably in areas of the house that are damp, dark, warm or poorly ventilated, such as cellars, bathrooms and closets, and in sections of the country where the climate is especially humid. As molds grow, they leave a musty odor and a greenish-black, soil-like discoloration.

If left unchecked, the mold can eat away into materials and cause very noticeable and even permanent damange. Since you cannot eliminate mold spores in the air, you must prevent the conditions necessary for their growth.

The basic reason for the trouble, as noted above, is simply too much moisture inside the house. You have to get rid of it one way or another. Use an exhaust fan in one or more areas where the moisture is produced, such as the kitchen and the bathroom, or perhaps the laundry room. Sometimes just opening a window a couple of inches when cooking is being done or directly after a shower will help. Or you can get window ventilators or even small vents that are installed in the side of a house.

In short, your job is to see that the moist air is permitted to escape. If it has a way to get out, it will not condense on cool wall or window surfaces. An alternative is to use a dehumidifier, which will trap moist air.

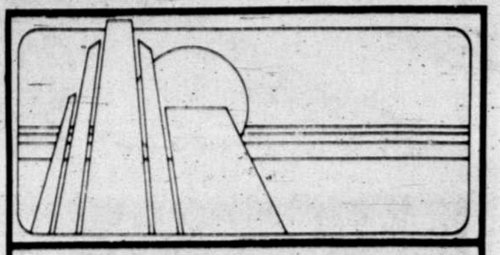

By the way, many heating furnaces are equipped with humidifiers to prevent air becoming too dry. If there is one on your furnace, be sure it is inoperative.

Q. I hope you can offer a solution to cleaning off candle wax from our brick hearth. We blew out the candles and the hot wax splashed onto the hearth, leaving a stain. It has been scraped up, but the stain remains. — Mrs. James E.

A. If any candle wax remains, be sure that you scrape off every bit of it. Then make a poultice of powdered whiting and naphtha. Cover the surface and allow it to dry, then brush off.

If a stain remains, scrub the hearth with a solution of trisodium phosphate and warm water, using aobut one cup of TSP to a gallon of water.

Fighting for marriage

By FREDERICK P. SZYDLIK
Hearst Feature Service

Remember that lovely couple, Nancy and Harry? No one every heard a bad word pass between them; they never seemed to fight. Wonder why they're getting a divorce?

The dam burst, that's why.

One day, mild-mannered, agreeable Nancy (or was it Harry?), had enough of keeping all that fuming aggression bottled up, from Nancy's disdain for the way her husband left the cap off the toothpaste tube to Harry's loathing of the way his wife let their teen-aged daughter get away with not doing her homework. They exploded in such a torrent of hateful bile against each other that there was no possibility for reconciliation.

So Harry's leaving Nancy.

Or is it the other way around?

Fighting might have saved the marriage. Family therapists and counselors agree that couples that don't fight are the ones with problems.

There are constructive ways to fight and destructive ways to fight. Constructive fighting leads to compromise. One technique to insure that fights are constructive is to think of a fight as a labor negotiation. There are demands and counter-demands and offers and counter-offers and lots of bargaining. The ultimate goal is a contract.

Here are a few ground rules, based on interviews with psychiatrists:

• Keep it clean and keep it oral. People who expect to live together have to fight clean. Save the violence for the wood you're chopping or the dough you're kneading.

• Yell if you want to. Some things people have on their minds just don't get said in nice, quiet discussions. Fighting gives people a chance to air their grievances and preferences with the appropriate amount of feeling.

Sometimes, the appropriate feeling is "That really makes me angry." Raising the voice can be a deliberate attempt to create an impact as opposed to a loss of self-control.

The ideal situation would be for a person who is angry to express that anger in some way so that the other person hears it and has a positive response.

• Fight the small battles first. It's best if people resolve things piecemeal rather than try to settle all the issues at once. Start with the least troublesome one. Success seems to lead to success, so getting people to resolve minor problems gives them encouragement to try to resolve larger problems.

• Fighting is like telling jokes: Timing is important. Each couple has to see which time works best and which doesn't for bringing up annoying issues. For many people, the first thing in the morning is NOT the right time to pick a fight.

• Don't try to hide a fight from the children and don't use the children in a fight.

Various causes, treatments for urinary incontinence

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is 87 years old and has begun to wet the bed at night. Can you tell me what causes this and whether anything can be done about it? — Sam, Columbus, Ohio

Dear Sam: There are any number of reasons for urinary incontinence in an elderly patient. For example, it may be triggered by an illness, such as pneumonia, which can cause confusion and temporary loss of bladder control. Various medications, including some sedatives and antidepressants, may also result in incontinence.

As for treatment, bladder training is sometimes helpful in patients who are well motivated and understand what is expected of them. This involves keeping records and timing trips to the bathroom accordingly.

Certain medications inhibit contractions and are sometimes used in conjunction with bladder training. And, of course, pads and disposable diapers may sometimes become necessary.

The important point is that there are various reasons and various treatments for urinary incontinence. Your father should see a physician so that the specific reason in his case may be determined and appropriate treatment undertaken.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son called me from college to tell me he is in the school infirmary with infectious mononucleosis. He says the doctor was worried at first about his spleen, but he is O.K. now. Is the spleen usually affected when a person gets mononucleosis? — Mrs. M.R., Austin, Texas

Dear Mrs. R.: Rupture of the spleen occurs only very rarely in patients with infectious mononucleosis. When it does happen, however, it is a very serious complication and, therefore, a concern of physicians.

Although the disease seldom results in death, the mortality is about 30 percent when the spleen ruptures.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My blood pressure was a little high the last time I went for a checkup, and the doctor said he wanted to see me in two months so that he could check it again. Will I have to take drugs to control it if it is still too high? — Alvin, Tampa, Fla.

Dear Alvin: How high is high? Some people with high blood pressure have to take drugs, but that doesn't mean that everyone should. Depending on the severity, many physicians try to use non-drug methods of controlling high blood pessure before resorting to drugs.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My brother has a hyperactive child. I have an eight-year-old boy and I don't know whether he's hyperactive or just active. Is there some sort of test he can be given to show which one it is? — Mrs. A.Y., N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Y.: The only way to tell if a child is hyperactive is to observe him. For this reason, parents and teachers, who see the child for extended periods of time, are probably in a better position to evaluate a child's behavior than a doctor who sees the younster only briefly.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D, 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

General testifies about need for new M-1 tank

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

Washington — The incoming chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has talked matter-of-factly about the "next war" during statements in support of the Army's controversial new M-1 tank.

Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., nominated by President Reagan for the nation's top military job, told Congress that a balanced force of tanks, fighting vehicles, helicopters, artillery and air support was necessary for success in the "next war."

"The Soviets have continued to field new tanks," said Vessey, in his capacity as Army Vice Chief of Staff, "and it is imperative that the U.S. Army have a tank which can survive on the next battlefield."

An Army spokesman said Vessey's use of the term "next war" should be "put in perspective" against an earlier statement by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Edward C. Meyer.

"In the statement Gen. Meyer referred to the Army's symbolic 'three days of war'," the spokesman said. "On the first day we deter, on the second day we fight and win, and on the third day we end the conflict with an acceptable level of U.S. security."

Vessey also noted that in a "classified briefing" he had explained "why the threat posed by the new generation of Soviet tanks makes the early fielding of the M-1 so important."

Pentagon officials explained that information on new Soviet tanks remained classified in order to conceal from the Russians what the U.S. knows about the vehicles, and possibly the intelligence methods through which the knowledge was obtained.

Vessey, a former sergeant who was commissioned during combat in the Anzio, Italy, beachhead in World War II, faces confirmation as chief of staff by the Senate, a move regarded as virtually certain.

"To survive and win on the next battlefield the (M-1 Abrams) tank must be agile, possess sufficient firepower and armor protection, and have a well-qualified crew," Vessey told the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Investigations.

The M-1 is named after World War II Gen. Creighton Abrams, an armored force commander.

Vessey described the $2.7 million M-1 as "the best tank in the world" and one "in which the soldiers who operate it have great confidence and which will help keep them alive on the battlefield."

The Army plans to buy 7,058 M-1s to replace its aging fleet of M-60 tanks.

Controversy has surrounded the M-1 tank since its inception, particularly about the price increase to $2.7 million from a 1972 estimate of $507,000. The Army says the increase is mostly due to inflation.

Some foreign-made tanks, notably new British models, are more expensive than the M-1, it was noted.

Vessey was candid about faults that dogged the 60-ton vehicle during its development, and which have attracted criticism from technicans and congressional investigators.

"More improvement is essential and we have placed a high priority on maintenance procedures, manuals and test equipment," Vessey said. "Good progress is being made."

Vessey disclosed that initial "pressing problems" in the M-1's engine centered around some subcontractors' "inability to manufacture certain critical parts." He added: "The Abrams tank is not a perfect tank, and we have had a number of problems with it."

For example, Vessey noted, "tests...show that the commander's weapon station is not as well designed as we would have liked...and we haven't found a good solution yet...we'll continue to seek one, but the problem is not sufficiently serious to delay fielding the tank."

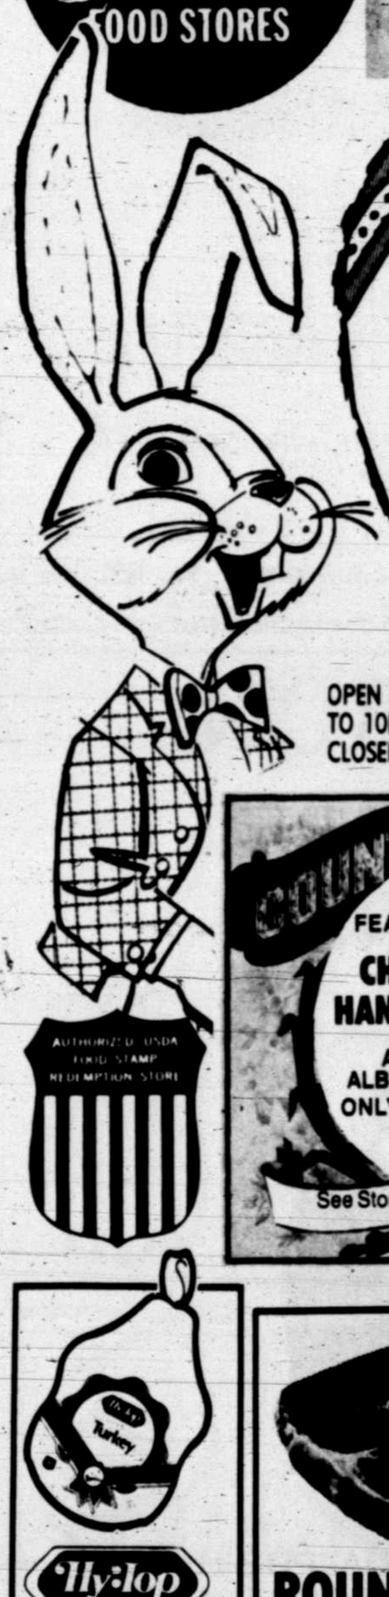

Since Vessey's testimony the Army has said that most of the M-1's problems have been solved and that some are now operational with armored units in West Germany.

The Army claims that a principal feature of the M-1 is that it provides "unprecedented" crew survivability due to "revolutionary" improvements in protective armor.

He said that one cost-cutting measure resulted in the elimination of planned air-conditioning units in M-1 tanks, despite the fact that studies of tank battles in the 1973 Arab-Israeli War had demonstrated the need for such units in high temperatures.

Air-cushion vehicles' future bright

LONDON (AP) — Descendants of the 22-year-old Hovercraft, the boat that flies on a cushion of air, are headed for a bright future, including overnight trans-Atlantic passenger and cargo service "cheaper than a plane but swifter than shipping," an authoritative British publication says.

Already, the 1982 edition of "Jane's Surface Skimmers" said, the Soviet Union is experimenting with a "Caspian Sea Monster" to carry 900 fully equipped soldiers at speeds of 350 miles per hour.

The 400-page annual was published Wednesday by Jane's Publishing Co. Ltd., which also issues a wide range of military yearbooks.

Britain launched the Hovercraft, which skims above the surface of the water on a cushion of compressed air that it supplies for itself, in June 1969 with a maiden trip at Cowes, on the Isle of Wight.

The craft now are used for regular service across the English Channel, while others are operating in China, Australia, Canada, Venezuela and Zaire.

One contributor to the Jane's survey, American scientist Stephan Hooker, predicted that wingships, a cross between the air-cushion Hovercraft and a plane, would fly the Atlantic at speeds of around 450 mph with cargoes of 1,000 or more tons, making the crossing in around nine hours.

"A passenger leaving New York in the late afternoon, for example," he wrote, "could spend a leisurely overnight journey, arriving in Europe the next morning.

"I envisage the wingship providing transport for time-critical cargoes cheaper than aircraft but swifter than shipping."

The wingship, Hooker continued, "is neither ship, Hovercraft, hydrofoil nor aeroplane; but embodies the fundamental principles of aerodynamics and hydrodynamics engineered into a new type of craft."

Man given 37-year sentence for burglary

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The seemingly impassive man called "Papa" Milton Clyde Keith was meted a 37-year prison term Wednesday night by a six-man, six-woman jury. The sentencing came after the jury had found the 23-year-old defendant guilty of burglarizing a house last March 12 in central Midland and taking a safe, jewelry, cash and firearms.

The punishment came almost three months after Keith was given a 46-year sentence by a jury which had found him guilty of murdering 18-year-old Tracy Andres in a cash-and-cocaine dual murder-robbery last May.

Keith, who is appealing the murder conviction, is yet to be tried for the slaying of Ms. Endres' friend, reputed cocaine dealer Charles Thomas Cole, 26, at Cole's residence last May 31 in southwest Midland. Both were shot in the head.

HOWEVER, whether or not the two prison terms awarded Keith will be "stacked" for an aggregate term of 83 years will be up to 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin, who presided over both trials.

"He (the judge) has left it open for argument," defense attorney R. Sandy Torres said following the two-day burglary trial.

Keith, who has been held in Midland County Jail for 10 months, was charged with burglarizing the Dale Forse house at 2401 Neely Ave. more than a year ago and with taking jewelry, bonds, memorabilia, other valuables and $5,000 in cash.

The stoic defendant remained silent throughout the trial, even during the return of the guilty verdict and rendering of the 37-year punishment.

"His outward emotions are hardly none," observed Torres, a court-appointed attorney who defended Keith in the murder trial. "That's the way Papa is," he said. But after Baskin had dismissed the jury Wednesday night and the impact of the punishment began "hitting" him, Keith began to appear as if he had "seen a ghost," Torres said.

NEVERTHELESS, the defense attorney said he was impressed by the "super intelligence" of the Midland jurors, who apparently reject the "flip-a-coin-type" approach in reaching verdicts. "I have a lot of faith in Midland jurors," Torres said.

District Attorney Vern Martin said the jury's guilty verdict and 37-year punishment "reflect the fact that the people of this county are tired of this kind of (criminal) activity." Martin also noted that the jury "had no idea that this man (Keith) was a convicted murderer."

"The victim (Forse) had a lot to do with the punishment in this case," the district attorney surmised. "This man had saved and worked a lifetime...and the jury could identify with that. He represented the people who work for a living instead of stealing for a living."

As the trial wound down, defense attorney Torres rejected his chance for a closing argument even after co-prosecutor Jim Rex reviewed the testimony of the seven state witnesses, including Ollie Glynn Kemp, Keith's former companion, who admitted his role in the burglary. Rex exhorted the jurors to find Keith guilty of the crime. Range of punishment for burglary of a habitation is five years to 99 years or life.

"Kemp was trying to get the unnecessary stuff, when I ("Papa" Keith) was trying to get that safe," Rex said in paraphrasing a statement which Keith allegedly made to a girl friend, Juanita Louise Fairfax, 19, last March.

KEITH DID not testify in his own defense; no defense witnesses were called to the stand.

The seven witnesses called by the state to prove its case against Keith included:

—Three lawmen who had investigated the burglary;

—Forse, who identified some of the recovered stolen jewelry;

—A convict who admitted taking some of the stolen jewelry behind Keith's back;

—Miss Fairfax, who said Keith gave her coins and jewelry after a burglary; —And Keith's former companion, Kemp, 22, who admitted that he and Keith burglarized the house, which was the residence of the stepfather and mother of Kemp's former common law wife.

Kemp, Miss Fairfax and convict John Wesley Kendrick, 28, were granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for their testimony to link Keith to the burglary.

"YOU ARE now not in any danger of prosecution if you testify in this trial," Baskin told Kendrick, who is serving a four-year term in the Texas Department of Corrections for forgery. "I am now guaranteeing you against any incrimination." The judge made similar offerings, at the request of the prosecution, to Kemp and Miss Fairfax.

Kendrick testified that Keith, while visiting in Kendrick's house on Pennsylvania Avenue last March 14, had "something" in a paper sack.

"He turned his back, and I got a (gold) chain and a music box," Kendrick said.

Miss Fairfax had testified that Keith told her the jewelry and cash which he gave her were stolen and later said he told her the items were taken from Kemp's "mother-in-law's house."

Kemp testified in piecemeal fashion.

"You've been offered immunity, and you're compelled to testify," prosecutor David Joers said to Kemp.

"That is correct," said Kemp, who could have been held in contempt of court had he not testified. Kemp said he and Keith broke into the Forse house, towed the 340-pound safe out of the house, placed it in his car, and, once at Keith's backyard, pounded the safe with a sledge hammer to open it.

"He (Keith) kept all the merchandise and stuff," said Kemp. "I didn't have any place to keep it." Kemp said all he got out of the burglary was "just cash" and "some little old jewelry."

LAST January, in the Keith murder trial, Kemp, who also was indicted for murder, testified as a state witness in exchange for a 25-year sentence for his role in the dual murder. Indicted in the murder of Ms. Endres and Cole is James Harris, also known as James Posey, who is at large.

Keith allegedly masterminded the cash-and-cocaine robbery of Cole at 507 Spraberry Drive last May, and, according to a written confession signed by Kemp, Harris shot Cole and the woman on impulse.

Filipinos protest visit

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger today met with Pesident Ferdinand E. Marcos who welcomed him as "a son coming home" to the Philippines, while student demonstrators denounced his 26-hour visit as a trip of a "warmonger."

Police in riot gear dispersed about 200 fist-waving demonstrators who gathered in front of the U.S. Embassy at about the same time Marcos, in a nationally-televised luncheon toast at the Malacanang Presidential Palace, paid tribute to Weinberger's service here as an intelligence officer on Gen. Douglas MacArthur's staff in World War II.

Nancy's a hit before Gridiron Club

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan was nervous. Her speechwriter was worried. Her press secretary's head was throbbing. And her social secretary nearly burst into tears.

All of the first lady's staff members seemed to feel a personal stake in Mrs. Reagan's self-effacing performance at the annual Gridiron Club dinner Saturday night.

It was a rare chance for the first lady to disarm her critics by poking fun at herself. Mrs. Reagan's staff members, who have stood by helplessly for the past year while their boss was criticized for accepting free clothes and ordering new china, seemed to want her to succeed as much as she did herself.

After two standing ovations, they were elated.

"I had terrible throbbing pains in the back of my head and they were gone as soon as she was finished," said Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Sheila Tate. "Everybody was so excited."

Even Mrs. Reagan, a former actress, "confessed she did get nervous," said Mrs. Tate.

White House speechwriter Landon Parvin fussed about whether the lyrics he had written with Mrs. Reagan's help were funny.

At the end of the act, the first lady's chief of staff, James S. Rosebush, bounded backstage. "And I said, 'Oh, Mrs. Reagan! That was so terrific!'" he recalled.

Mrs. Tate said social secretary Muffie Brandon "almost burst into tears" when she heard the applause.

To Mrs. Reagan's delight, her appearance surprised President Reagan as well as the Gridiron's 600 guests at the white-tie affair.

The idea for the first lady's skit took form about 10 days ago when Mrs. Tate contacted Gridiron representatives to see if there would be room for Mrs. Reagan in the show that traditionally lampoons politicians.

Betty Ford and Rosalynn Carter, two former first ladies, were both well received when they appeared in Gridiron skits in past years.

Gridiron representatives suggested Mrs. Reagan sing a number mocking reporters, but the first lady declined, saying she wanted to make fun of herself, her staff said.

In the middle of the elegant dinner, Mrs. Reagan left her seat at the head table to change into her costume backstage. Her husband was unaware of where she had gone.

Her aides helped her assemble her outfit — a pair of yellow rubber boots borrowed from Mrs. Brandon's daughter, and a blue-flowered Hawaiian skirt loaned by her secretary's daughter. She added a red print blouse, long fake pearls, a white feather boa and a plumed hat that her staff had made for her last birthday as a joke.

Following a skit that accused her of paying too much attention to clothes, the first lady peeked out of a rack of clothes at an unsuspecting audience and burst into song to the tune of "Secondhand Rose."

"Secondhand clothes
I'm wearing secondhand clothes
They're all the thing in spring fashion shows
Even my new trench coat with fur collar
Ronnie bought for 10 cents on the dollar
The china is the only thing that's new
Even though they tell me that I'm no longer queen
Did Ronnie have to buy me that new sewing machine
Secondhand clothes, secondhand clothes
I sure hope Ed Meese sews."

Then, she casually dropped a heavy plate, symbolic of her new White House china. She had practiced with paper plates and this heavy version didn't break. So Mrs. Reagan sang an encore and dropped the plate again, this time with such gusto that it shattered. The audience applauded.

"The feeling I got was that she really had fun and she was glad she did it," said Mrs. Tate. "And I think part of her fun was this idea that she was going to surprise the president."

Speechwriter Parvin, who also had helped Reagan prepare his remarks, worried that the president had no prepared reaction to his wife's Washington stage debut.

But Reagan took a few moments during dinner to pen his remarks for his introduction.

"I arrived as a happy husband," he cracked. "But I'm leaving as a stage door Johnny."

Long distance phone bill fouled up

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — Peter Illyn's telephone bill looked as though he'd reached out to touch someone and forgot to let go.

Pacific Northwest Bell computers billed Illyn $2,622.92 for the month of March, and claimed $2,552 was for a single call placed March 5.

The long-distance bill for 7,598 minutes works out to five days, six hours and 38 minutes.

Illyn, a pastor at Yakima Four-Square Church, said the thought struck him as he read the bill, "... What if I'm responsible for this and have to pay it?"

The only thing on the bill that looked faintly familiar was the sales tax — $25.97 — which was a lot closer to his normal monthly phone bill.

The phone company told Illyn not to worry. He was one of 73 Washington residents who fell victim to a computer foulup.

Now's chance to insure four-legged friends

MONTICELLO, N.Y. (AP) — Only cats and dogs qualify, but New York residents who want an extra measure of protection for their four-legged car-chasers and tree-climbers can invest in pet health insurance starting next month.

Starting April 27, the Monticello-based Frontier Insurance Co. will offer dog and cat owners the opportunity to insure their household pets against accidents or illness.

Company literature, soon to be cropping up in supermarkets and veterinarian's offices across the state, shows a picture of a dog and cat.

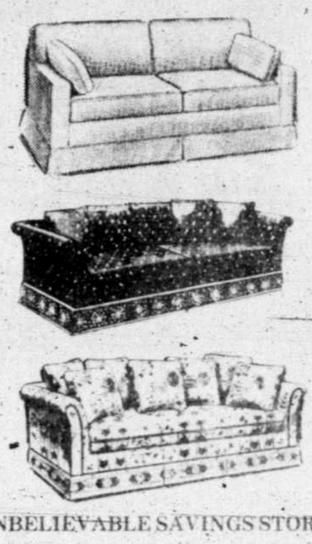

"Pet health insurance," it says, "because they're family too."

The premiums will cost $87.50 a year for a dog and $77.50 a year for a cat, said Walter Rhulen, president of Frontier Insurance.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Actor James Stewart, once her leading man, summed it up for everyone: "She's the top of the class, with the accent on class."

Philadelphia gave a Hollywood-style tribute Wednesday night to native daughter Grace Kelly, better known today as princess of Monaco.

Huge spotlights pierced the night sky and a sell-out crowd of 970 people applauded the former film star. Tickets were $150 each.

Frank Sinatra was there, along with Bob Hope, Stewart Granger, Brian Aherne, Ricardo Montalban, Arlene Dahl and Rita Gam.

"You are sensational," Sinatra said, quoting a song he sang when he co-starred 26 years ago with Miss Kelly in the movie "High Society." Hope acted as master of ceremonies.

Gowned in yellow silk taffeta, her blond hair braided in a bun in back and then carried across the top of her head like a crown, the 52-year-old princess walked to the stage of the University of Pennsylvania's Annenberg Center for the Performing Arts as the crowd gave her a standing ovation.

"What can I say?" she said, her voice muted by a cold. "I am overwhelmed. I am so touched. I would like to hug every one of you. I am so full of love."

The gala party featured clips from most of her 11 movies, including "The Country Girl," for which she won the Academy Award for best actress in 1954.

The crowd later dined on turkey, roast beef and fancy cakes and fruits, drank champagne and danced to the music of Peter Duchin.

The party was the kickoff for the Grace Kelly Film Festival, to be held the next four days at the Annenberg Theater. But the princess won't stick around to see the films. She was to fly back to Europe today to Prince Ranier III and their children who couldn't be here "because they were busy with other things."

Earlier in the day she met briefly with reporters, posed for photographers, and complained a little that movies aren't like they were two decades ago.

"Everything goes today," she said. "There's a different style now. There are many people making films who are interested only in the commercial aspects, and not in the artistic aspects. It is not necessary for so much sex and violence. The way of life has changed."

"No one really looks forward (to growing old)," she said, "but there it is. So far, it is not too bad."

Could she be enticed to return to the screen?

"I'm very delighted, touched and flattered that people ask, but it is very unlikely," she said. "Acting is a full-time job, and I don't have the time."

Twelve Lee students attend convention

Twelve students represented Robert E. Lee High School at the Texas Association of German Students convention and competition in Houston Friday. The students were accompanied by LHS German teacher David Kleinbeck.

Students representing the first level were Karen Leung, Teressa Dunn, Allison Milner, Jeanne Pare and Bruce Pullig. Tim Green represented the second level and third level representatives were Margaret Gallick, Michael Slattery, Lloyd Whittington and Lois Hall. Rodney Mack and Suzanne Johnston represented the fourth level.

Lloyd Whittington won first place in memorized prose for those students who have studied German for a minimum of three years.

Rodney Mack and Tim Green won third place in musical ensemble competition.

Winners of the most prestigous award of the competition, the Pass Auf, were Suzanne Johnston, Lloyd Whittington, Margaret Gallick, Tim Green and Rodney Mack, captain.

The five students competed against 23 of the best teams in the state in the competition, which is similar to the College Bowl. Five hours of rapid questions and answers included topics such as German culture, grammar history and proverbs.

Council recommends HSA grant approval

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Statewide Health Coordinating Council has recommended approval of a $185,000 grant being sought by Permian Basin Health Systems Agency.

The council Friday recommended that the grant be approved by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Permian Basin HSA is seeking the grant to finance general operation of its offices for a one-year period beginning in April.

A spokesman for the council said Permian Basin HSA probably will recieve no more than $100,000 of the request.

The grant previously had been recommended by the council's Application, Budger and Project Review Committee.

HHS is scheduled to award the grants by May 1.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Former Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart is stepping out of retirement to sit as a justice-in-residence at his alma mater.

Stewart will teach and meet informally with law students and undergraduates at Yale University next month and, during his stay, will sit on a panel to judge the Law School Moot Court and award the Thurman Arnold argument prize.

A graduate of Yale College in 1937 and Yale Law School in 1941, Stewart, 67, retired from the court last summer after 23 years as a justice.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Former astronaut Al Worden has decided to enter his name as a candidate for Florida's projected U.S. House of Representatives seat.

Worden, a Republican, said Wednesday he will run on his technical background and knowledge of defense matters.

The boundaries of the new district still are uncertain, but it is expected to encompass parts of nine Florida counties along the Atlantic coast.

Worden, 50, walked in space for 38 minutes when he was the command pilot aboard the 12-day Apollo 15 flight in 1971, the fourth lunar landing.

He retired as an astronaut in 1975 and moved to Palm Beach County, where he is is now a business consultant to several firms, including a charter plane service.

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was almost like another episode of American Bandstand at the Smithsonian's National Museum of America when entertainer Dick Clark presented a selection of No. 1 hit records for the last 25 years.

The host of the TV program also presented the museum Wednesday with the original bandstand lectern.

As part of an exhibition that's open to the public, Clark, 53, also contributed black and white photographs showing teen-agers waiting in line to dance on the show, which Clark began hosting in 1956, and entertainer Chubby Checker with his hit record "The Twist."

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of entertainers who believe they can make a difference are campaigning for an end to nuclear weapons.

"I believe we have just as much credibility as the president. After all, he was an actor," choreographer Eliot Feld said Wednesday.

Author and cartoonist Jules Feiffer said he was participating in the project "because I'm scared."

The group, Performing Artists for Nuclear Disarmament, also includes singers Harry Belafonte, Judy Collins, Carly Simon and James Taylor; actresses Jill Clayburgh, Meryl Streep and Colleen Dewhurst; producer Joseph Papp; directors Robert Altman and Arthur Penn; and playwright John Guare.

Among other things, the group plans a children's rally in Central Park in May, performances in conjunction with a United Nations disarmament conference in June, talk show appearances and festivals at small theaters.

Sweden gives Lake Vanern back to fishermen

By HARALD MOLLERSTROM

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Sportsmen and commerical fishermen are pulling 70 tons of fish a year from Lake Vanern in what amounts to a major victory over pollution in Sweden's largest lake.

In the 1960s the lake was so foul bait died on the hook.

The rapid turnabout — the pollution-decimated yield reached a record-low of only 1,100 pounds in 1971 — is due to a crash lake-saving project involving strict new environmental controls and seeding with young salmon.

Success in saving Lake Vanern has raised environmental hopes in outdoor-minded Sweden, where fish population in thousands of lakes has been virtually eliminated by "acid rain," a condition similar to that in the northern areas of the United States and southern Canada.

"The latest official figure for 1981 indicates commercial catches at about 60 tons," said Ulf Widen, a fisheries regional inspector, speaking of Lake Vanern. "But because the lake also is used by 50,000 game-fishing fans, we estimate the overall catch at at least 70 tons and probably more.

"It has been a dramatic increase. In the last four years catches have more than doubled. With a continued similar trend we may attain our aim well before the end of this decade."

From that level, the figures steadily slipped with the expansion of hydroelectric power plants and increasing discharge of wastes, primarily mercury.

Authorities had been lukewarm about undertaking renewal projects until the disastrous fishing output in 1971. A project to plant 200,000 smolts (young salmon) in the late 1960s was too little and too late.

But the 1971 disaster jolted Sweden's wildlife and fishing officialdom, and environmental regulations relying on improved anti-pollution equipment and the release of about a million smolts have brought the turn-around.

Today, only marginal areas of the 2,234-square-mile lake — one-quarter the size of Lake Erie — have unsafe levels of chemical pollutants.

"With decreasing discharges of mercury, we hope to take these areas off the blacklist within the near future," Widen said.

The rejuvenation program involved government lawsuits against companies alleged to be responsible for the pollution.

The Uddeholm Co., for example, is under a court order to supply 60,000 smolts a year for a indefinite period because of damage caused by its hydroelectric plants on a river draining into the lake.

Its chemical division has been held responsible for damage caused by the discharge of mercury in the lake and was ordered to provide 40,000 smolts annually for a five-year period ending in 1983.

The company, which has reduced its annual discharge of mercury wastes from 15 tons in the 1960s to 33 pounds in the late 1970s, may be forced to foot yet another bill.

Environmental authorities are trying to get Uddeholm to pay an extra $90,000 a year, retroactive to 1968, to compensate for loss of income by fishermen.

The large-scale project in Lake Vanern is part of a national scheme. A similar program so improved a Stockholm stream that last year an angler caught a 30-pound salmon with a rod and reel just across from the Sheraton Hotel in the heart of the city.

Authorities have planted large numbers of smolts in rivers discharging into the North and Baltic Seas.

Because many of the matured salmon have ended up in the nets of Danish and other foreign fishing fleet trawlers, however, the Swedes have started to concentrate on larger plantings in Vanern and other lakes to keep the catches within Sweden.

France continues to peddle weapons

PARIS (AP) — France, the world's third largest arms dealer, continues to peddle weapons for profit and political advantage despite a changeover to a socialist government with an avowed distaste for the arms race.

French arms exports in 1981 totaled about $5.6 billion, mostly to countries in the Middle East and North Africa. France has 11 percent to 12 percent of the international arms market and shows no indication of phasing out an arms industry which employs 280,000 people.

The difference is the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand has dropped some old customers and added a few new ones for ideological reasons. The only restrictions on the previous administration were imposed by France's energy needs and the U.N. sanction against arms sales to South Africa, according to government sources and independent analysts.

A shipment of 30 tanks to the military government in Chile has been canceled, and no new contracts will be signed with other right-wing Latin American governments. Deliveries have been resumed to Libya, and the arms embargo against Israel has been lifted.

The largely symbolic sale of a few dozen trucks, a couple of helicopters and gunboats and some air-to-ground rockets to Nicaragua provoked an angry reaction from the United States.

According to Jean Klein, an international arms sales expert with the Institut Francais des Relations Internationales, a non-government think tank, France "defied the United States" because it believed Nicaragua would be pulled into the Soviet orbit if isolated from any other source of military supply.

"The way the French government looked at it, Nicaragua was a country which had just rid itself of dictatorship and was moving along the road to socialism, and it was up to France to play a moderator's role," Klein said.

When Gen. Charles de Gaulle, as president of France, suspended arms deliveries to Israel following the 1967 Six-Day Middle East War, there was sharp subsequent decline in French sales to other countries.

The lifting of the arms embargo against Israel by Mitterrand angered France's Arab oil suppliers. But the French External Affairs Ministry points out that no arms contracts have been signed with Israel, and one government source said the move may have been symbolic.

Mitterrand is considered "emotionally closer" to Israel than his predecessor, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, according Dominique Moisi, another IFRI analyst.

France says it wants to normalize relations with Libya and will consider new arms contracts with the government of Col. Moammar Khadafy.

The warming diplomatic relations are partly a response to the withdrawal last year of Libyan troops from the former French African colony of Chad, but Klein said it also reflects the feeling that "all the bets are not yet down on Libya. Khadafy is not just a Soviet pawn, and the role of France is to reduce temptations to Khadafy."

French officials say the changes are part of what French Defense Minister Charles Hernu called last October a "certain degree of moralization" of France's arms exportation policy.

A swimming pool... it's a good idea.

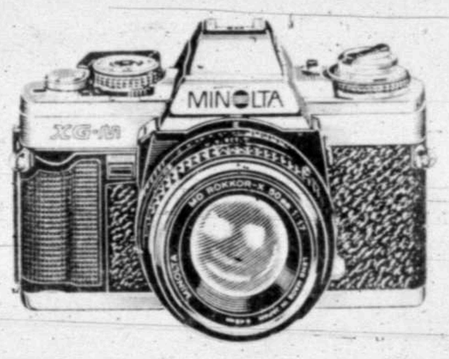

If you're thinking about spending your money on club memberships, lake properties, campers, motor homes, motor boats or overseas trips...Compare those with an investment in a permanent family recreational center...an inground swimming pool. Although it is generally accepted that inground pools keep pace with replacement value in most property evaluations, pool owners will talk most about those invegorating morning dips, long lazy weekends, poolside parties...almost by accident. But more importantly, in a society laden with pressure, a pool can be a very effective release from tensions. Swimming is the most enjoyable and healthy exercise you can imagine. It should be a vital part of your life body and condition your heart and lungs. Your kids can benefit, too. They will grow up in a healthier atmosphere and develop good active exercise habits.

Aqua-Tron Custom Pools will send you to either Cancun, Puerto Vallarta or Aculpulco for a weekend*. All expenses paid (*Includes: Round trip air fare, Continental Airlines for two, first class hotel for three nights, and a vacation kif.) Mexico is a great place to start your summer. In Latin America unemployment leads to underemployment

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — In most of Latin America, losing a job can mean a quick trip to destitution: no unemployment compensation, no food stamps, no welfare to fall back on.

Men and women thrown out of work in South and Central America because of recession or political upheaval usually are left to survive by their own resources. They join the hemisphere's uncountable legions of "underemployed" — people doing odd jobs for a peso here and a peso there.

An Associated Press survey of 17 Latin American countries, with a total population of 330 million, found unemployment running from 5.6 to 65 percent, the latter figure in most cases including the underemployed.

In limited cases industry or union guarantee funds tide laid-off workers for short periods. A few countries have severance-pay laws, but fired workers often must go to court to get their money. Chile is alone in the region with a government unemployment protection system, but the money it pays is not really enough to live on.

In Buenos Aires, Argentina, once the most prosperous capital in South America, Domingo Cejas, 48, a dockworker, has been out of work for three months. Argentina doesn't have unemployment compensation, but Cejas' labor union has a special plan that keeps paying him half his former salary — the equivalent of $300 a month — if he shows up every day at 7 a.m. at the docks to see if there's any work.

Cejas has to get up at 4:30 a.m. to make it on time. If he misses punching the time clock more than once in any given month, he loses the benefits.

"WE'RE NOT STARVING yet, but we're eating a lot more spaghetti and soup," said Cejas, in a city where working families used to eat steak every day.

Neighborhood soup kitchens are opening in some areas of Argentina for workers without such union aid.

Ana Bolivar, a 27-year-old seamstress from Caracas, Venezuela, recently lost her $100-a week job at a shirt factory where she had worked for six years.

Because of Venezuela's relatively progressive labor legislation, she got one month's severance pay for each year she worked. But with an out-of-work husband and three children to support, the money didn't last long.

So Mrs. Bolivar became "underemployed." She started selling beer illegally to neighbors in her slum, constantly on the lookout for police or tax authorities.

"Taking the narrow economic view, countries in Latin America simply are not rich enough to be able to afford unemployment compensation and welfare," explained William H. Crane, a political analyst in the U.S. Consulate in Rio de Janeiro. "Social benefits such as these are regarded as luxuries in this part of the world."

In some countries, workers can go to labor courts when they feel they are unjustly fired, but the result isn't always immediately rewarding.

In Colombia, for example, Julio Cesar Navarrete, 48, an electric company worker in Bogota, the capital, was crippled in a traffic accident unrelated to his job. The company fired him.

With no unemployment compensation or welfare to soften the blow, Navarrete went to Labor Court to sue for a disability pension. He won, but it took the court 12 years to decide the case, and he won't start getting his money until he reaches the legal retirement age of 60 — about 12 years from now.

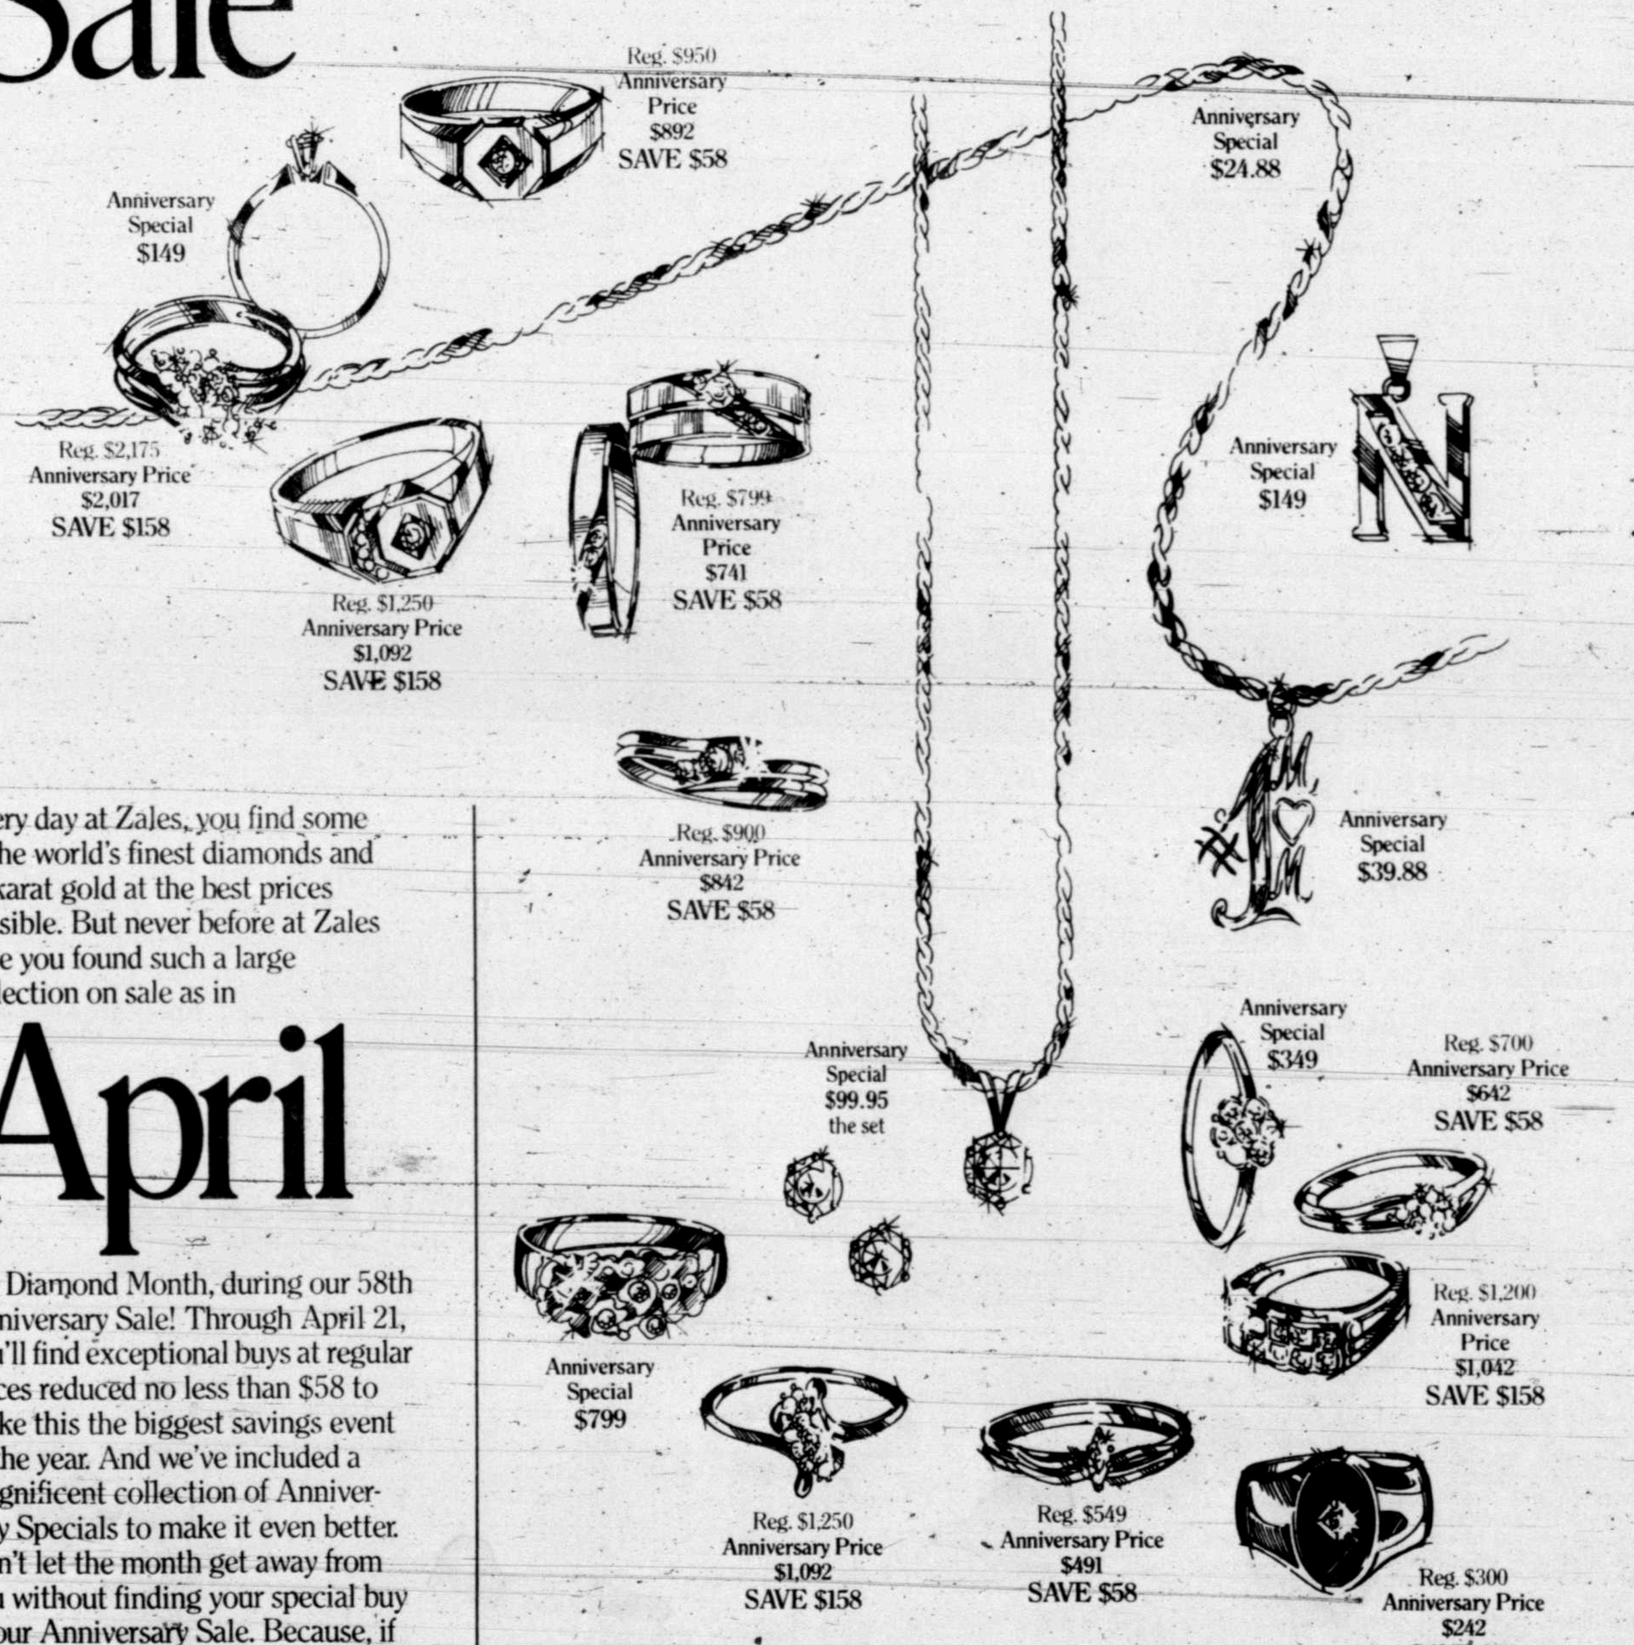

In Peru, where no one has accurate unemployment figures, long-time residents say there are more "underemployed" people around Lima than ever before. They run errands, wash cars, mow lawns and shine shoes.

IN SANTIAGO, CHILE, where there is a recession, steelworker Bernardo Epuyao showed up at the construction company where he was working to collect his weekly paycheck, only to discover that the firm had gone bankrupt and all the bosses had disappeared.

Through the Chilean government's unemployment compensation program, Epuyao can get $100 a month for three months and then apply for a final three-month extension. After that, if he still hasn't found work, he can join a community service work project squad under the government's Minimum Employment Plan. The pay is $33 a month.

In Rio de Janeiro, 1,800 bus-factory workers found themselves locked out because, company officials said, the firm had run out of money. When the workers complained, the owners called in the state police, who dispersed the workers with clubs.

Food producers won't be aided by earlier lowered farm prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The brief recovery of farm commodity prices early in the year faded in March when the Agriculture Department's index dropped 0.8 percent.

Officials said Wednesday that the decrease pushed the overall average of farm prices 7.7 percent below a year ago.

Prices rose 3.1 percent in January and an additional 0.8 percent in February, the first increases in more than a year.

Although lower farm prices have helped dampen food price increases at the consumer level, they have done so at the expense of hard-pressed producers who are seeing another crunch on net farm income.

Department economists now expect retail food prices to rise an average of 6 percent this year, compared to a 7.9 percent gain in 1981. At 6 percent, the increase would be the smallest since food prices rose 3.1 percent in 1976.

In a related report, the department's Economic Research Service said farm income "will likely remain at a reduced level for the third consecutive year" but include no estimated figures.

Agency economists indicated earlier, however, that net farm income could range from $13 billion to $18 billion, compared to a depressed level of around $20 billion the past two years.

Higher prices were reported for cattle, calves, eggs, hogs and lemons, which partly offset the decline for other commodities.

Meanwhile, the index of prices farmers pay to meet expenses rose 0.6 percent from February and was 4 percent higher than a year earlier.

According to the preliminary March figures — which are based mostly on mid-month averages — prices of meat animals as a group were up 3.4 percent from February and averaged 5.5 percent higher than in March 1981.

The vegetable price index dropped 17 percent from February and averaged 22 percent below a year ago.

Farm prices in March averaged 132 percent of a 1977 base price average used for comparison, according to the preliminary figures, compared to a February reading of 133 percent.

The March parity ratio was 57 percent, the same as it has been in recent months. A year ago, it was 64 percent.

According to USDA records, the ratio the past six months has been the lowest since it averaged 54 percent in April 1933.

At 100 percent, the indicator would mean, theoretically, that farmers have the same buying power they had in 1910-14.

For example, the average actual price of corn in March, according to the preliminary figures, was $2.41 a bushel. That was 48 percent of the March parity price for corn of $5.03 a bushel.

Avoiding sugar support difficult

WASHINGTON (AP) — It will be "difficult at best" for the government to avoid having to buy huge supplies of domestic sugar under its new price support program, a top Agriculture Department official warns.

Although the people who designed the program said it would not result in the government having to buy sugar, Thomas Hammer, deputy under secretary for international affairs and commodity programs, said Wednesday that a plunge in world prices has changed all that.

"In spite of all our good efforts and good intentions not to take over sugar in this program, there is a price where we would take over sugar," Hammer told the House Agriculture sugar subcommittee. "We're within a penny to two pennies of that price now."

The critical price range is 8 to 9 cents a pound, he said.

Faced with the prospect of having to buy sugar it doesn't want, Hammer said the Agriculture Department is reviewing every possible option to avoid any sugar takeover. Among them are import quotas and charging interest on forfeited sugar loans, he said.

The Reagan administration originally opposed any sugar price support program in the farm legislation passed last year, but dropped that opposition in return for the support of sugar-state House Democrats on key budget-cutting votes.

Critics of sugar price supports, which had not been in effect since 1979, warned a revival of the program would lead to huge government acquisitions and increased consumer costs.

Under the sugar price support program, the government is to use a system of import duties and fees to keep domestic sugar prices at or above a set level — now 16.75 cents a pound. If the duty-fee system doesn't keep import prices high enough to make domestic sugar a bargain, the government must offer to buy sugar from processors at the support price.

Hammer said the price support program is in trouble because of a surge in sugar imports last December just before the new program took effect. He also said the generally depressed economy, reduced demand and high interest rates have contributed.

Commidities users' fees debated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-dominated Senate Agriculture Committee, ignoring a Reagan administration threat of a possible veto, is siding with commodity futures traders against imposition of user fees.

Calling a user fee "a very uncertain tax," Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said, "Its impact needs to be known before there's disruption of the market."

Lugar is one of the primary drafters of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission legislation endorsed by the full committee Wednesday.

The user fee plan, intended to raise $22 million next year to finance CFTC operations, has been the focus of industry criticism of the administration's proposal to keep the regulatory agency functioning beyond this year.

Budget director David Stockman has advised key committee members by letter that "the (government) could not support enactment of the CFTC reauthorization bill without a user charge provision which would be effective upon enactment."

"We should advise Mr. Stockman that his correspondence has been duly noted," countered Sen. Walter Huddleston, D-Ky.

Instead of the fee, the committee voted to require the commission to conduct a thorough study of the impact a user fee would have on the market and report its findings to Congress in early 1984.

Although the user fee was rejected, the panel did endorse a number of other administration proposals, including increased enforcement powers over off-exchange commodity frauds and authority to share sensitive information with states and other agencies in pursuing futures trading violators.

The industry contends a user fee would reduce trading activity and undermine a proposed self-regulatory program through the fledgling National Futures Association. That association is to be financed by fees voluntarily paid by the industry.

Supporters of the administration's user fee say it is unfair for taxpayers to pick up the bill for regulation they say generally protects only the limited number of people involved in futures trading.

Britain, Holy See trade ambassadors

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II today received the credentials of the first British ambassador to the Vatican in 450 years and expressed the hope that the upcoming papal visit to Britain would further promote unity between Anglicans and Roman Catholics.

Sir Mark Heath, 54, who has served as London's representative here since May 1980, became the first British ambassador to the Holy See since King Henry VIII broke with the Roman Catholic Church in 1534 in a showdown over divorce.

In London last month, Roman Catholic Archbishop Bruno Heim, 70, was received by Queen Elizabeth II as the apostolic pro-nuncio.

As fully accredited ambassadors, the two envoys will have easier access to host government and church officials and more responsibility and prestige in carrying out other diplomatic activities.

The pontiff called the Vatican ceremony an "historic moment" in the relations between the Holy See and Britain.

"It serves as a sign of the understanding and goodwill and it affords a basis for expecting still closer collaboration in the future," the pope said, speaking in English.

Heath told the pope his government "admires the forthright stand" John Paul has taken over the Polish crisis and in championing human rights around the world, including Northern Ireland, where sectarian violence between Catholics and Protestants has claimed 2,200 lives since 1969.

In his response, the Polish-born pontiff said no nation can fully enjoy its own freedom, "knowing that in other countries the dignity of the human person is being violated.

"It is a sad fact of our time that basic personal rights are not everywhere respected and ensured. Social and cultural discrimination still exists in far too many forms, and many people lack true freedom of conscience and the right to practice their religion, even in their own homelands. We cannot remain silent in the face of such injustices."

He said there can be no enduring international peace as long as basic human rights are denied anywhere "for a fundamental human bond links the destiny of the peoples of every nation."

John Paul said he looks forward "with joyful anticipation" to meeting with the queen, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie and the British people during his six-day visit starting June 28.

"These meetings, together with the prayers of so many, will undoubtedly further the great work of promoting unity among Christians," he said.

Earlier this week, the Vatican said a decade-long dialogue between Roman Catholics and Anglicans has failed to produce any "truly substantial" agreement for unity.

But it called the work by a joint theological commission "a significant step toward reconciliation" between the Catholic Church and the Anglican Communion, which split in 1534 when King Henry VIII rejected the Vatican's refusal to annul his marriage.

Army leaves defiant occupants alone

YAMIT, Occupied Sinai (AP) — Opponents of Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai defied a midnight deadline to leave, but the army made no move to remove them.

Leaders of the Stop the Withdrawal movement claim they have 3,000 squatters in the area ready to resist attempts to eject them, but they declined to disclose their tactics. Many movement members are non-resident Israelis who arrived recently to fight the Sinai handover to Egypt.

Only some 60 of Yamit's original 2,000 settlers remain in the sand-swept desert outpost. They marked the withdrawal deadline with tearful parties and reminiscences before moving on. They have been given until April 15 to move out.

Israel is to return the final third of the occupied Sinai to Egypt on April 25, under terms of their 1979 peace treaty.

Armed troops patrolled the town's streets in groups of three or four. But no attempt has been made so far to dislodge the ultra-nationalists who have occupied an air raid shelter and roofs of buildings, some protected by sandbags and stocked with food and even portable toilets.

"I am very happy that the army has taken no action yet," said Geula Cohen, the firebrand right-wing member of Parliament who defiantly moved to Yamit to help fight the withdrawal.

About a dozen nationalists today fortified the observation deck atop an 81-foot memorial to Israeli soldiers killed in capturing the Sinai from Egypt in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. Troops made no move to dislodge them.

But Israeli navy gunboats turned back five boats that sailed from Tel Aviv with about 30 nationalists aboard trying to get around the army lines sealing off Yamit.

"Under no circumstances must we raise a hand against a soldier," said Bennie Katzover, addressing several hundred of his followers through a bullhorn at this Sinai town Wednesday.

The militants did not prevent the evacuation of Yamit settlers from proceeding Wednesday. Trucks laden with furniture headed north to Israel. Banks closed for good at noon Wednesday, the supermarket sold its last stock and sand swept across roads strewn with discarded possessions.

UNCLE SAM WANTS YOU... TO KEEP PAYING RENT.

OUTFOX HIM!

Rent payments aren't tax deductible. Interest payments are. Town Plaza's low interest package plus the tax benefits of owning instead of renting result in net monthly payments about the same as apartment rental. The interest rate offered during March is 13.25%, and is guaranteed for three years. Minimum down payment 5%. Families welcome. One and two bedroom units $43,175 to 64,020. Let Town Plaza show you how to outfox Uncle Sam.

WILD RIVER CANYON IS FOR SALE

Bids are being sought for over 14 acres of C-3 zoned land, appraised at over $2,000,000, located near the southeast corner of Andrews Highway and Loop 250 and which contains Wild River Canyon theme park. Approximately 10 building are included in the sale, along with numerous water structures. Personal property and equipment are not included unless bids specifically state.

The property is ideal for continued use as a theme park, or for conversion to apartments, condominiums, townhouses or office and commercial use.

Plans are available for conversion of the park land and adjacent 30 acres, also zoned C-3 into an office complex. In addition the numerous landscaping improvements, waterways, and existing buildings make the site ideal for an architecturally pleasing apartment, condominium or townhouse development.

Separate bids are being solicited for personal property and equipment, arcade equipment, architecutural specialties and ride equipment. Minimum bid on any grouping of these items is $5000. Items will not be sold on a piecemeal basis.

Although runners may need treatment...

Tall City Relays offer treat for true track fans Friday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

One can only wonder how, but Midland athletic director Gil Bartosh and his assistant, Edwin Nixon, have assembled a fine field for the Tall City Relays at Memorial Stadium Friday. Now if the runners can perform on the dark narrow cinder lanes without killing each other, Midland track fans could be in for a treat.

A battle royal is expected between Midland Lee and Odessa Permian for the team title with Midland High, Big Spring, San Angelo, Amarillo Palo Duro and Amarillo Caprock having a say on where the rest of the points fall. Palo Duro and San Angelo both have strong squads and could possibly be contenders for the team title if the out-dated cinder track causes a few teams to self-destruct.

FIELD EVENT finals and running prelims begin at 2:30 p.m. in both the varsity and junior varsity divisions and finals at 7 p.m. The 5-5A girls meet is also being held in conjuction with the Tall City "Run on Dirt" affair.

That means that a lot of visitors will invade the Tall City this weekend to get a "sore" eye view of the beautiful facility that Midland has for track.

"People ask why we aren't faster, but look what we have to run on," said Lee thinclad Troy Barber while pointing at the cinder oval at Lee. "It's even worse over at Memorial Stadium and it's so dark around the curves that we are going to need flashlights on the batons to see who to hand off to."

Bartosh and Nixon have done all they can do to make the meet as pleasant as possible with the addition of a new high jump pit and new long jump pit, but what can be done about the 36-inch lanes, the darkness and a gone-by-the-way-of-the-buffalo cinder track. Everytime visitors come to Midland for football and track, Midland gets another black eye.

STILL, THE competition is great for this one and one wonders how they ever pulled off getting this type of field for the meet. No one wants to run here, so there must have been some trade-offs along the way.

"You never know about running at Memorial Stadium, but I expect Lee and Permian to battle for the team title," Lee coach Sam Volpe said. "Who ever gets the breaks early will probably win it."

Lee's Darren Williams and Permian's Billy Howell could give a show in the 100 meters while Lee's Damon Polk and San Angelo's Steve Yarbrough have a war going in the hurdles.

The 200 meters is another key event where Howell and teammate Randy Ensch take on Barber, Big Spring's Bobby Earl Williams and Midland High's Ricky Madrid, who is running this event for the first time Friday.

There could also be a war in the 800 meters between Big Spring's Javier Calderon and Midland High's Chuck St. Germain. Palo Duro is also strong in the distance races. The 400 meters is a tossup with Lee's Sam Morney, San Angelo's David Jackson and Permian's Thurman Hines.

THE BATTLE of sophomores may take place in the shot put between Lee's new found ace Issac Garnett and Permian's stout Britt Hager. MHS' Byron Campbell is a threat in the discus with a strong trio from Permian.

Lee's Wayne Brandt and Permian's Coy Brown will battle in the pole vault. Lee is favored in both relays, but Permian is also good. The high jump has MHS' Troy Bush, San Angelo's John Johnson, Lee's Mike Barton and Permian's Blake Foy. Lee's Roosevelt Fort has lost only once this year in the long jump.

Midland High could be a strong threat in the junior varsity division. The Bulldogs are loaded with sophomores and they scored 106 points in a meet earlier this year. MHS coach Johnny Williams is keeping some of his younger runners in the JV division.

You might have noticed that times and distances have been omitted because in this meet times are just not that important. The runners are used to 42-inch lanes, so the winners on Memorial's 36-inch lanes are more like survivors. The runners with the biggest elbows just might be the best.

Running around the Old Lady is more like war than track.

Midland honors MC Chaps

It was labeled Chaparral Appreciation Night, but if Midland College basketball Coach Jerry Stone has his way, it was what Master-of-Ceremonies Bill Rigney, Jr., called the first annual "We're No. 1 in the Land" banquet.

"It was no accident that we won, despite what you might have read in the papers," Stone said of the MC Chaparrals' National Junior College Athletic Association championship at Hutchinson, Kan. "After we won that first game against defending champion Westark (Ark.), I thought, 'Watch out, here we come.'"

STONE WENT on, "We have a good program, but we've got to get the word around. Go out next season and bring three people...wait a minute, I'm beginning to sound like church," he grinned.

MC, which has been playing basketball for seven seasons, won the five-day Kansas tournament by beating previously undefeated Miami North-Dade, 93-88, in double overtime and a reminder of the feat was posted on the scoreboard as Midlanders entered the gaily, green and gold, naturally, decorated Chaparral Center "dining hall."

IT WAS a night to be savored and it was, to its fullest with player presentations, congratulatory telegrams from all over the country and which included the governor of Texas (William Clements) and the vice-president of the United States (George Bush).

And fans relived those Four Fantastic Nights in Hutchinson through a taped video presentation of The Incredible Season.

John O. Sullivan, the Chaps host during their stay in Hutchinson, was a special guest. It was uncertain whether Joe's primary concern was to celebrate or seek a release from a pledge to "two large Texans", who suggested he wear a St. Patrick's Day green-tie gift "until the Chaparrals lose one."

"It's a long time until next fall," he said, "And I'd like to change my tie," which he was wearing with his blue suit.

AMONG the highlights were the Chaps presentation of Player awards for the season and to the surprise of no one, sophomore Puntus Wilson and freshman Anthony "Spud" Webb were named co winners of the MVP trophy.

Chester Smith, the 6-6 postman, won the Most Improved Player award and the Defensive Player award, after he shut down all of the much-publicized Big Men at Hutchinson, although he gave away inches in every instance.

Sophomore Lance McCain, who missed the last two games, received the Fighting Chaparral Award, given on the basis of "attitude and desire." "Lance is one who cares. He worries when things aren't going right and does all the little things you have to do on the court," said Stone. "I think he would make a good coach."

Midland College Coach Jerry Stone describes The Incredible Season for Chaparral fans during Chaparral Appreciation Night.

Councilman Steve Davidson proclaimed Wednesday MC Chaparral Appreciation Day throughout Midland on behalf of Mayor Thane Akins.

W.H. "Bill" Collyns presented certificates to each of the players and trainers for the Chamber of Commerce, declaring, "In 46 years in Midland I've never seen anything like this. It's good for Midland, it's good for West Texas and we're all proud of them."

Dr. Jess Parrish, president of Midland College, needled former President Dr. Al Langford, "It doesn't take six or seven years to win a national championship. With the right leadership at the top, it takes only six or seven months," which is about how long Dr. Parrish has been in office.

Athletic Director Delnor Poss, who coached the Chaps into their first regional back in 1976-77 and handpicked Stone as his successor, recognized the Chaps' National champion cheerleading team.

Cooper girls favored

But Bulldogs lurk in bushes

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

The girls of Abilene Cooper are expected to march into Memorial Stadium Friday and capture the District 5-5A girls track title, but the big surprise this year is that the Midland High Bulldogs are lurking in the shadows.

"I think it's going to be a real dog fight between Midland High and Cooper," say Lee track boss Linda Caraway. "Brenda (Mitchell, MHS track coach) just might sneak in there and take Cooper."

And if Caraway is right, Mitchell's Bulldogs will be the surprise of the year, considering the fact that Lee and MHS tied for last a year ago in the district meet in San Angelo.

"It's really hard to say if we have a shot at the district crown or not," says Mitchell. "We've run only against Lee, Permian and Odessa High this year and we know Cooper has a lot of depth. I do think we are much improved over last year."

And improved the Bulldogs are. They finished second in three meets this year and won their first crown last weekend in Seminole. The talent is there.

Arlene Adams is unbeaten in the 200 meters with a best of 25.9, but she hasn't been tested. Adams will have to face Big Spring's Carla Jackson (25.03) and Cooper's Carla Seldon (25.2) in the battle for the Region 1 berths. The top two finishers in each event earn Region berths.

Lydia Jackson has been beaten only once in the 100 meters and owns a 12.38. Cooper's Sandra Greene and Tracy Scott both have a 12.3 and teammate Renee Bryant owns a 12.8.

Sheila Christian is another Bulldog with eyes on a Region berth with her 1:02.55 in the 400 meters. San Angelo's Patricia Harle has a 1:01.9 this year.

The Bulldogs are also strong in the relays with the 400 meter and 800 meter relays the strong points. Demetra Fort, Christian, Adams and Jackson form the sprint relay team with a 49.68 while Big Spring has a 49.55. In the 800 relay, MHS has posted a 1:46.52 with Penny Griffin, Virgie Cooks, Jackson and Adams and Big Spring owns a

Digger blows whistle on payoffs

Response is 'So what?'

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Notre Dame's Richard "Digger" Phelps opened up a can of worms — Pandora's box or a hive of bees, whichever suits your fancy — with his charge that college coaches are paying as much as $10,000 a year for select basketball beef on the hoof.

"A conservative figure," responded Oregon State's Ralph Miller, named Coach of the Year for 1982 by the Associated Press. "They were talking about that kind of money 10 and 15 years ago. We've now got inflation."

"DIGGER MUST have had his reasons," said Tex Winter, 60-year-old coach at Long Beach (Calif.) State, new president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches. "But there is a time, a place and a method to handle such charges. It might have been wiser if Digger had followed the prescribed procedures."

Phelps' informal comments created a mild tempest in New Orleans last weekend and stole some of the pre-game attention from the business at hand — deciding the NCAA national basketball championship, which North Carolina won dramatically over Georgetown.

Coaches were sharply divided on whether Phelps was discreet in blowing the whistle as he did. But the most alarming feature of the controversy was the "So what?" attitude with which the charge was treated generally.

"They've been doing it for years and years," coaches conceded. "The only thing that's changed is the size of the payments."

THE NCAA acknowledged as much.

"I wouldn't say abuses are rampant," said David Berst, director of the NCAA enforcement staff, from his headquarters in Mission, Kan., "but there's no doubt they exist. Little is different except the scope of it.

"Remember the University of Illinois slush fund in the 1960s? Athletes were getting paid $40, $50 and $60. That seemed like a lot then. It might be trivial today.

"We believe a vast majority adheres to the rules. There are occasional violators who are seeking that extra edge. There always have been."

Berst and his staff are kept busy rushing around answering alarms such as posed by Phelps and putting out brush fires. But it must seem to them that, when one blaze is extinguished, two or three pop up some place else. It's almost a losing cause.

Berst said 17 of the nation's colleges are currently undergoing some sort of sanctions while 30-odd are under investigation. One of the latter is Clemson, which produced the 1981 national football champion. "The largest illegal payment we've investigated," Berst said, "was between $50,000 and $75,000 a few years ago." The violator, unidentified, was properly punished.

COACHES, congregating in little clusters in New Orleans last week, talked openly of recruiting skullduggery — ranging from visiting limits to automobiles, insurance policies for the parents, race horses and even $100,000 bonuses.

"It's one thing to repeat these rumors and another to document them as fact," said the NCAA enforcement officer. "We welcome disclosures such as Digger made. They open the public's eyes and may inhibit other coaches similarly tempted."

The abuses have a far more sinister reach than the outcome of a campus game. They are inclined to erode young people's morals.

If it's okay to accept money under the table and get while the getting's good, a kid might rationalize, what's wrong with fixing points for a few extra bucks?

IN 1951, 31 players from seven of the country's leading basketball powers were involved, and in 1957-61, 41 players from 27 colleges covering 43 games. Bribes ranged from $75 to $4,500. Most players were given immunity for cooperation.

Since then, the college game has gone really bigtime, competing with the pros for TV's millions. The mad scramble for talent is fierce, recruiting costs are astronomical.

Bigness carries with it big pressures. The talent search is a jungle. To remain competitive, the coach feels he must get players the best way he can — or else. He compromises his own moral judgment and scandal ensues.

It's become a fact of life. As long as money flows so freely, who can stop it?

CFA may add basketball

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The College Football Association is considering branching into the sport of basketball, its exeuctive director said Wednesday.

The association board, which meets Sunday in Atlanta, will consider whether it wants to propose an amendment to the CFA Articles of Association that would take in basketball, it was reported in Oklahoma City.

Executive Director Charles M. Neinas said Wednesday that interest in the expansion has been expressed by three conferences — the Atlantic Coast, Southeast and Southwest — and some of the Southern independents.

"The interest is two-fold," he said. "Some of the problems in basketball parallel the problems in football, such as recruiting and academic standards and, second, one of the continuing assets of the CFA is to bring coaches together to talk about common problems."

Kramer released

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnesota Vikings quarterback Tommy Kramer was released Wednesday night from a California hospital where he underwent nearly a month of treatment for an alcohol problem, Vikings officials said.

Kramer reportedly told friends that his treatment at Care Unit Hospital in Orange, Calif., was a success. He voluntarily admitted himself into the hospital March 3.

Hobbs hires coach

HOBBS (AP) — Ken Clearman, 41, an assistant coach for several years at Port Neches-Groves High School in Texas, has been named head football coach at Hobbs High School, succeeding Don James, who resigned to become Amarillo Palo Duro coach.

Clearman was an assistant coach at Hobbs under Doug Ethridge from 1968 to 1972, then joined Ethridge's staff when the latter became the head coach at Port Arthur Jefferson High School at Port Arthur, Texas.

Clearman, an assistant to Ethridge for 14 years, went to Port Neches-Groves when Ethridge was named head coach at that Texas high school.

A graduate of Eastern New Mexico University, Clearman was chosen from an original field of 19 candidates. That list was trimmed to seven applicants that were interviewed by a four-member committee.

TWC hires Newman

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Texas Wesleyan College has hired Tommy Newman of Baylor to be basketball coach and athletic director, College President Jon H. Fleming announced Wednesday.

Newman, who was first assistant coach at Baylor for five years, will replace interim coach Curt Pickering. Pickering took the job following the death of coach Johnny Howerton in November.

Newman, a Fort Worth native, complied a 158-64 record in six seasons of high school coaching before taking the Baylor job. He was twice named president of the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches.

Bird's 35 sparks Celtics over Washington Bullets, 119-109

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Larry Bird, who had just scored 35 points and pulled down nine rebounds, still wasn't satisfied with his game.

"I did well on the offensive end, but there's other things out there too," said the 6-foot-9 forward after he led the Boston Celtics to a 119-109 National Basketball Association victory over the Washington Bullets Wednesday night.

"I felt the passing and rebounding weren't going my way," said Bird, who came off the bench for the 12th straight time since returning from a broken cheekbone. "Luckily, my shots were going in. It seems like anytime I'm shooting well, the rest of my game goes down."

Bird hit 15 of his 20 field goal attempts and all five free throws as the Celtics won their first game since Philadelphia snapped their 18-game winning streak Sunday.

Nuggets 120, Mavericks 119

Alex English scored 27 points and Kiki Vandeweghe added 25 as Denver won its 11th straight game, a club record.

Dallas had a chance to win the game twice in the final seconds. First Jim Spanarkel missed a shot from the corner and Jay Vincent, who scored 31 points, tried a tip-in that bounced off the rim at the buzzer. Mark Aguirre added 30 for the Mavericks.

Kings 116, Sonics 109

76ers 99, Bulls 98

Julius Erving scored 18 of his 32 points in the third period and scored Philadelphia's last four points in its victory over Chicago.

Pacers 108, Pistons 106

Billy Knight's basket from 20 feet with three seconds left lifted Indiana over Detroit.

Kelly Tripucka, who led all scorers with 32 points for Detroit, tied the game for the seventh time with a basket before Knight's winning hoop. Don Buse led Indiana with 18 points.

Nets 103, Cavaliers 87

Backup guard Darwin Cook scored 19 of his 23 points in the second half to lead New Jersey past Cleveland, which lost its eighth game in a row and 22nd in 23 contests against Atlantic Division teams.

Suns 127, Clippers 106

Phoenix handed San Diego its 11th straight loss as Walter Davis scored 24 points and Dennis Johnson added 21.

The Suns, who are tied with Golden State for the sixth and final playoff spot in the West, never trailed after taking a 35-23 lead after one quarter behind Johnson's 10 points.

Tom Chambers led all scorers with 30 points for San Diego.

Rangers trade Al Oliver for Parrish

(Compiled from R-T wires)

BASEBALL—Outfielder Al Oliver was dealt by the Texas Rangers to Montreal for third baseman Larry Parrish and first baseman Dave Hostetler. "We've been working to get Oliver for 10 years," said Expos GM John McHale. "It looks like a deal made in heaven because both clubs are going to be helped. I know it gives us good balance from the left side of the plate."

Oliver has batted over .300 for the last five seasons, including a .309 mark in 421 at-bats in 1981. In 1980 he drove in 117 runs. The Parrish, 28, the Expos' regular third baseman since 1975, has a .263 career average. After batting .307 in 1979, his best season, Parrish slumped to .254 and .244 in 1980 and 1981 respectively. Hostetler, 26, is a power-hitting first baseman who had 27 home runs and 103 RBIs in 1981 with the Denver Bears, Montreal's Class AAA affiliate...

Wyoming second baseman Eric Brock was named WAC Northern Division Player of the week after collecting 7 hits in 16 trips last week and knocking in nine runs and three homers, one in the 12th and one in the 13th innings of a 16-12 win over Colorado State...

BASKETBALL—Major independent college basketball teams plan to form an organization to deal with the NCAA and major conferences, according to Don Smith, AD and basketball coach at the University of New Orleans. "I guess the main reason behind this would be to have better representation at NCAA meetings and maybe representation on selection committees." In addition, Smith said such an organization, tentatively called the National Association of Basketball Independents, would be able to help ease scheduling problems for schools going it on their own. Eventually the NABI could also include Division II independents. "We go to an NCAA convention now, and we're 28 independents speaking as individuals. The Southeastern Conference sits together. The Sun Belt sits together, so why not 28 independents sitting together and speaking with one voice. The chairman might be able to help lobby for independents at the NIT and NCAA."...

Texas AD Deloss Dodds recommended fired basketball coach Abe Lemons stay on the staff in the new job of assistant AD. Lemons, 59, needs one more year of state employment to qualify for state retirement benefits. "Nothing's in writing," Lemons said. "I'm waiting to get something in writing so I'll know what I'm supposed to do before I decide on it."...

North Carolina's win over Georgetown Monday had the second highest TV rating in NCAA history for a championship game, trailing only the 1979 game that matched Indiana State's Larry Bird and Michigan State's Earvin Johnson, 24.1 to 21.5 on the Nielsen ratings...

Ray Meyer is recruiting as though he expects 6-9 Terry Cummings to turn pro. "I hate to say it but I think he might be going," said Meyer. "We have been recruiting the last week or so from that standpoint." Cummings has until May 15 to notify the NBA of his intentions. Meyer, 68, who has 676 wins and 339 losses in a 40-year career at DePaul, said "Nothing is definite but I am leaning toward coaching next season. What I am thinking about now is how long I would stay."...

Oregon State's Ralph Miller says Georgetown center Patrick Ewing is as good a college freshman as he has seen in 31 years as a major college coach. "If he plays four years, he will be the best. It's hard to spot a real weakness. Ewing is not only tall, he's big. He's mobile, agile. He can jump. He has a nice touch away from the basket. All he lacks is experience."...

Ben Lindsey, whose Grand Canyon College teams won two NAIA cage titles, is new basketball coach at the University of Arizona, succeeding Fred Snowden, who resigned in mid-season. Lindsey's teams at GRC were 317-137 with titles in 1975-78...

TRACK—The state Arkansas Court of Appeals upheld the conviction of Olympic runner Glenn Cunningham for cruelty to animals. Cunningham, who competed in the 1932 and 1936 Olympics, was fined $500 in Faulkner County Circuit Court at Conway last year for neglect of his horses in 1980. State witnesses said about 12 horses were starving. Their testimony was based on circumstantial evidence. Cunningham said the horses were not starving and that swamp fever could have caused their weakened condition...

Scandal rocks Cowboys

The Super Bowl hopes of the Dallas Cowboys were rocked today by the disclosure that several Dallas players have been declared academically ineligible by Coach Tom Landry.

Landry gave the squad an unexpected pop test during an off-season meeting and was unable to conceal his disappointment at the results. "Several key players failed and I have no recourse but to declare them ineligible."

Upon questioning, Landry disclosed a passing grade is 40 on a 1 to 100 scale.

"What is so distressing is that it wasn't the rookies we are trying out or the first year players who failed, but some of our veterans, players we expected better of."

IT WAS also learned that two players had been dismissed from the team for smoking, another for cribbing and still another after being caught with a pinch between his cheek and his gum in the mushrooming scandal.

When asked what the ground the test covered, Landry said it was the usual playbook stuff. "Most people aren't aware of it, but all NFL teams require players to master their playbooks during the off season. It isn't just what goes on on the field that counts. There's more to pro football than playing a game on Sunday."

Landry added players are expected to maintain a classroom load. "Of course, expectations vary from team to team, but as America's Team we have higher entrance requirements and once accepted student-athletes are expected to maintain lofty, but not unreasonable standards. Besides our Playbook is very difficult."

LANDRY said he was aware of the rumors that some teams, like Philadelphia, Washington, Oakland, Houston and Pittsburgh, bend the rules. "However, there is no way to substantiate reports that these teams are rewarding players who score well on their examinations with bonuses."

According to TASS, other teams like New Orleans, the Chicago Bears, Tampa Bay, Boston Patriots, and Cleveland Browns permit who have scored as low as 10 to play.

Landry wouldn't confirm rumors that Danny White, Tony Dorsett, Randy White and Tony Hill were among the flunkees. "But we won't be able to keep it secret for long. They just won't be in uniform, unless they take makeup courses."

The disclosures recalled other Cowboy classroom scandals when Pete Gent, Clint Longley, Thomas Henderson and Duane Thomas expelled for writing, fighting, talking and not talking, respectively.

Landry said the only way academically soiled players would be able to regain their eligibility would be "to voluntarily learn both the offensive and defensive play books."

AND WHILE Landry was ruling his classroom with a firm hand, there were signs of rebellion among the Cowboys over compensation. Several were openly hostile over the Cowboy management's tight fisted approach to rewarding their successes at the season's end.

"You wouldn't believe how we are treated, especially in comparison with other teams," groused Ed "Too Tall" Jones.

"They just don't appreciate what we have done for Dallas or the organization," chaffed Harvey Martin.

"You all saw it last year," said Charley Waters. "We won the division championship and Landry made us celebrate with Dr Pepper and Pepsi."

Landry stated that as long as he was coach of the Cowboys, there would be no beer or champagne in the Dallas dressing room.

MEANWHILE, TEX Schramm, who has been under fire around the NFL for campaigning to have playoff games moved from frigid places like Bloomington and Pontiac, top or no top, to warm weather sites, admitted the Cowboys may move some of their hot weather games to cold weather sites. "Yes, we are thinking of moving some of our early season games to colder climates to escape the Texas heat.

"We'd like to play some early season games in Montreal, Toronto, Edmonton and Vancouver and exhibitions in Cutbank, Mont., Fargo, N.D., Moose Head, Me., and Fairbanks, Alaska. Of course, I expect some opposition, but it's a perogative we enjoy as 'America's Team'."

And, no, the shocking disclosures above have nothing to do with the fact that it is April 1.

JIM MURRAY

DeCinces happy to escape haunted Baltimore

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

PALM SPRINGS — One of my favorite all-time stories concerns the time Spencer Tracy was the king of the MGM movie lot and he was introduced to the young James Whitmore who was being billed as "the new Spencer Tracy." The old Spencer Tracy sized him up and then allowed, "They tell me you're the 'new' Spencer Tracy. Well, let me give you a piece of advice: When they come to you with the idea of doing Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, don't."

Doug De Cinces could have used that same advice. Doug was the young infielder in the Baltimore Orioles organization who was being groomed as "the new Brooks Robinson." The old Brooks Robinson should have come to him and said, "They tell me you're the 'new' Brooks Robinson. Well, let me give you a piece of advice: When they come to you to play in Baltimore, don't."

THE PUBLIC never forgives an icon-blaster. The public never forgives the guy who whips Dempsey, shoots Billy the Kid, takes Babe Ruth's place in the lineup, comes after Knute Rockne at Notre Dame. Even the guy who shot down the Red Baron got snubbed by history. Name him, can you? Recall the guy who took Ruth's place in right field for the Yankees? The heavyweight champions were John L. Sullivan, Jack Johnson, Jack Dempsey, Joe Louis and Ali, weren't they? Name all the others, can you?

Brooks Robinson was almost the only big league ballplayer Baltimore had for the first 10 years of its existence. And he was larger than life. He hit 20 or more home runs a year, he drove in runs with almost every hit he got, but, most of all, he almost made the ground single and the double-down-the-line obsolete. Oldtimers swear he leaped in the air to stab line drives six feet over his head that would have been home runs had they got by him. He smiled a lot, signed autographs, and he had the outlook on life of a Little Leaguer to the day he retired. He never heard a boo in his life, he was never injured, and only about a half-dozen major leaguers played more games than he did. A lot of people suddenly felt 20 years older the day Brooks Robinson retired.

DOUG DE Cinces walked into this haunted house like Snow White into the witch's castle. Squeamish observers couldn't bear to look.

Doug was a nice enough kid. He was good to his mother, he got to church on time, stood at attention for the Flag and he signed autographs.

You would have thought he sold defense secrets the way Baltimore treated him. De Cinces' scalp still prickles at the recollection. "You could FEEL the hostility," he recalled the other day, still shuddering. Guys he didn't even know were glaring at him. "You ever walk into a room and everybody stops talking?" he asked. Well, here, a whole city stopped talking.

At first, it was the little things. A bullet off a bat, a 130-mile-an-hour line drive went screaming by him, visible only to the camera eye. "Brooks woulda had it!" screams the fan in the upper deck. "Brooks woulda got two!" corrects the fan behind the dugout.

IT GOT to where when the delegation approached Doug De Cinces, he would check to see which one had the rope. Pie Trayner couldn't have succeeded in that situation.

"It was a no-win situation," De Cinces recalled as he sat in the dugout at the Angels' camp here the other day. "If they just introduced my name in a lineup, they'd boo."

It wasn't as if De Cinces were a butcher. He had as much range as Brooks Robinson, and as much power. He just didn't have the smile. Nor did he have that eerie sixth sense Robinson seemed to have for where the ball was coming from next. Of course, neither did anyone else in the game. Sparky Anderson, from whom Brooks Robinson stole the 1970 World Series, turning about a dozen doubles into double plays, once swore an angel whispered in Brooks Robinson's ear before every pitch: "Get ready — move two feet to the left, and jump." There were people who couldn't recognize Brooks Robinson unless he were horizontal.

IT ALL CAME to a head one day when 53,000 people crowded into Memorial Stadium in Baltimore. Oh, not for the pennant race, although this was close. It was "Brooks Robinson Day." They gave their favorite son a car, a boat, and waves of love. But the manager gave the glove to his successor. "They'll kill me!" Doug De Cinces protested. "Listen!" Manager Earl Weaver told him. "We're in a pennant race, not a historical pageant!"

The record shows De Cinces hit a home run that day to help beat Boston and push them out of the pennant race. "I felt like 10,000 pounds of pressure were taken off me," he recalls.

But Doug De Cinces is delirious over being traded to the Angels. It's not that it's his home area. It's something that happened in 1979 when the Angels and Baltimore were in the pennant playoff. Baltimore led two games to one, and were leading 3-0 in the bottom of the fifth inning of Game 4. The trouble was, the Angels had the bases loaded, one out. And if the Angels rallied and won that game, Game 5 would be played in the twilight the next day with Nolan Ryan pitching for the home team.

THE BATTER hit a smash down to third. De Cinces fell to his knees, lunged to his right, got the ball, tagged third with his foot and then threw off-balance to first for the double play. That play won the pennant for Baltimore.

Doug De Cinces felt elation for all of two minutes after the game. As he was peeling his shirt off, some well-wisher came up to him, face shining, to clap him enthusiastically on the back. "Brooks Robinson couldn't of done it any better!" he shouted in his ear.

That's when Doug De Cinces knew he had to crawl out from under that load, knew he had to get someplace like the Angels, where, if someone came up and said, "Hey, that reminds me of Brooks!" another fan would lean over his popcorn to him in puzzlement and then say, "Brooks Who?"

Lee, MHS girls eye 5-5A golf crown

Cooper hogs boys lead

By CHAD PUERLING
R-T Sports Writer

District 5-5A girls golf teams wrap up their season today at Hogan Park in their final district meet. Midland High holds a slim one stroke margin over cross-town rival Lee High in the team competition 753-754. Big Spring is a distant third at 813.

Bulldog coach, Mary Baird, is hopefull her girls can repeat as district champions despite not having as strong of a squad. "Last year we won district by a bunch," she said. "I just hope we play as well as we did last Friday."

Last Friday was the Midland Invitational Girls Golf Tournament in which the Lady Bullbogs finished second to Lee, by one stroke. Should the same margin of victory occur today there would be a playoff between the two Tall City schools to determine the district title.

But regardless of who wins district it appears both teams will be going to the regionals in Lubbock in late April.

EVEN THE restrained Baird admitted the 50-plus strokes between second and third place was "a pretty good lead," and would be sufficient to assume the local schools would finish 1-2, thereby qualifying for regionals.

First year Rebel mentor, Mrs. Chris Watson, seemed to be on cloud nine over the prospects of her golf team.

"I have a good feeling about it," she said. "I'm making reservations, we're going to regionals."

Both coaches said their teams are in good shape physically and mentally for the final round but they have different oppinions on the key to todays play.

"THERE'S NO way to predict a golf match," said Baird. "Every district meet our girls have improved their scores, I just hope we can do that Friday."

"The short game and putting will make the difference," said Watson, "and we've been working on that all week."

Despite the fact that both coaches have spent all year fighting for the same goal they are close friends. Watson credits Baird with being a big help to her all year, while Baird said, matter of factly, "It was her first year so we worked together on things."

But for Watson, Thursday presented a funny situation. "Mary and I were going to pick up all the district trophies and the entire time we were together knowone said a thing about the district meet," she said.

There will be little time for celebration following today's round as both teams will head out for the Amarillo Relays later today. The "relays" are actually a multi-sport event being held Friday and Saturday. The Amarillo golf tournament should provide some insight to the competition the girls will incounter in the regional meet later this month.

THE DISTRICT 5-5A boys golf teams will travel to Odessa Friday for the third leg of their five stop golf tour.

Abilene Cooper's No.1 team jumped to an 18 stroke lead over Abilene Cooper No.2 last week as the district squads stopped in Midland. San Angelo moved into third but remains 16 strokes behind Cooper No.2.

It was a disappointing week for the local schools as both coaches hoped to gain some ground on the front runners with the home advantage.

Instead the Cooper squads jumped in front of the rest of the pack.

Chap golfers place sixth

OKLAHOMA CITY—Midland College took sixth place in the nine-team Sooner Classic Golf tournament, posting a 1014 for the 54 hole event, which was 14 strokes better than Temple JC, the only other two-year school entered.

The University of Oklahoma took first place. MC Coach Susan Holland said the weather was much better the final day of play as the Chaps shot a 330. "We improved our score each day," said Holland. "And that was encouraging."

Midland College—Jill Himmelmann 80-248, Wendy Swift 82—251, Ann Coombes 82-251, Rebecca Bradley 88-264, Deborah Latham 90-278.

3 teams stay unbeaten

Three teams remained unbeaten after three weeks of play in the Midland Adult Soccer League as the Black Sundaes suffered their third straight shutout, this time when George Bugg booted home a second half goal to give the Green Gators a 1-0 win. Oddly enough, the Sundaes have surrendered only one goal per game.

In other action, the Maroon Mavericks beat the Orange Thunderducks, 10-2, as Lalo Castillo, John Bergman and Tom Frantes supplied the offensive punch. The Gold Nuggets rallied to beat the Blue Hot Spurs, 4-2, as Carl Fiduk scored two goals and William McDonald and Dan Verrillo scored. Frank Prokop and Mike Rodgers scored for the losers. The Red Animals, with Curly Woodcock scoring twice and Mike Smith once, beat the Blue Max, 3-0.

MC netters sweep

Midland College defeated Schreiner in the men's matches 9-0 and in women's competition 6-0. The women raised their record to 12-6 in dual play in beating the team with whom they shared the national title last year.

The men, led by Tony Macken, who handed Barry Mills his first dual defeat of th year, raised their record to 11-3 and headed for a four-team meet with HSU, Odesssa College and Abilene Christian in Abilene Friday. The Chaps draw ACU at 2 p.m. Friday.

Women—Liz Alvarado d Kathy Pairier 6-1, 6-0; Jody Wertenberger d Sam Flynn 6-0, 6-0; Karen Mannheimer d Brigitte Rankin 6-0, 6-0; Kim Summerville d Sarah Maline 6-0, 6-0. Doubles—Alvarado-Mannheimer d Pairier-Flynn 6-2, 6-0. Donna Dickey- Laurie Runyon d Rankin-Maline 6-0, 6-1.

Men—Tony Maken d Barry Mills 6-2, 7-5, first defeat. Barry King d Nick Lawrence 6-3, 6-3, Louis Zavala d Carlos Herrera 6-4, 6-0, Andre Peters d Ernest Delgado 6-0, 6-3; Norm Weber d Mike Williamson 6-0, 6-3; Brendap Macken d Mike Streety 6-1, 6-0. Doubles—Macken-Zavala d Lawrence-Herrera 6-3, 8-1; King-Brendan Macken d Mills-Williamson 6-4, 6-4. Weber-Peters d Delgado-Streety 6-4, 6-0.

Mitchell also feels that Fort and Griffin both have shots at Region berths in both the long jump and triple jump. Fort owns an 18-7½ in the long jump and a 34-9 in the triple jump while Griffin has a 17-6 and a 34-6.

The Bulldogs also expect help from Rochelle Gill and Cooks in the high jump, Paula Simmons in the discus, Connie Sutherland in the 800 and Sandy Rodriquez, who is coming off food poisoning, in the 1600 and 3200 meters. The mile relay team could be a surprise with Penny Griffin, Arlene Griffin, Christian and Cooks. This is a team Mitchell has had to change every week due to injuries.

Lee's best Region hopes ride in the 400 meters with Lois Hall, who will have to run strong against the likes of Christian and Harle. She has a 1:03.0 this year and is in the hunt. Also Terri Minor, with a best of 36-2 in the shot put, could make a strong Region bid.

Kerri Orrell is another Rebel hopeful in the 100 meter hurdles. She owns a 16.0 this year, but Cooper's Greene (15.0), Permian's Armentha Kay Redman (15.2) and Permian's Terre Clark (15.0) all own better times.

The Rebs also expect points from Felicia Farias and Rozena McCabe in the high jump and hope for points in the 1600 and 800 meter relays. The Rebs will, however, be missing sprinter Faye Oudems due to an injured thigh.

"I think we will score some points," Caraway said.

San Angelo's Bambi Lopez (5:37), Cooper's Noemi Espinoza (5:39) and Permian's Paula Baccus (5:41) top the 1600 meter field while Cooper's Angie Dunnam (2:29) and San Angelo's Elsa Ornelas (2:30) appear to be headed for an 800 meter shootout.

The girls District 5-5A meet is being run in conjuction with the Tall City Relays this year, but is the most important meet of the year for the district girls. Girls action will begin at noon with the discus and triple jump while running preliminaries will start at 2:30 p.m. Running finals will begin at 7 p.m. with the boys.

Canadiens' Sevigny shows old form

By The Associated Press

Montreal goalie Richard Sevigny has been idle since early January due to a broken hand.

It didn't look like the layoff hurt him much Wednesday night, however, as Sevigny lead the Canadiens to a 5-1 National Hockey League victory over the Hartford Whalers.

The outbreak of fighting resulted in three players being ejected and 197 penalty minutes being assessed by referee Ron Wicks.

Oilers 7, Kings 3

Dave Lumley and Matti Hagman scored goals 23 seconds apart early in the third period and Mark Messier scored his 49th and 50th goals to lead Edmonton over Los Angeles in a bitterly contested game.

Referee Bruce Hood had his hands full in the game between the two first-round Smythe Division playoff rivals. He handed out 165 minutes in penalties, including three game misconducts and one match penalty.

Wayne Gretzky had three assists for the Oilers, but his failure to score virtually ended any hopes he had of reaching the 100-goal mark this season. Gretzky has 92 goals with only one game left.

Rangers 4, Black Hawks 1

First-period goals by Ed Johnstone and Mike Rogers started the New York Rangers to a relatively easy victovy over Chicago.

Red Wings 4, Jets 2

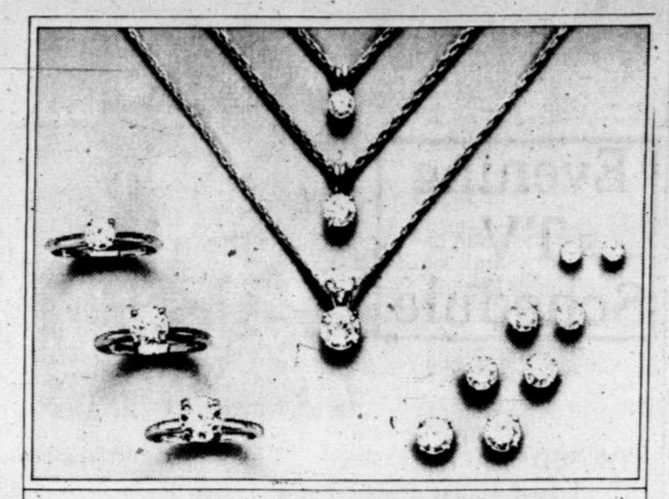

Vaclav Nedomansky scored a goal and assisted on another, while Gilles Gilbert tended goal for the first time in 13 games to spark Detroit over Winnipeg.

Caps 4, Penguins 4

Rick Green scored a power-play goal with 7:51 left in the final period to lift Washington into a tie with Pittsburgh. The game had no bearing on NHL postseason play, since Pittsburgh has already clinched the fourth and final playoff berth in the Patrick Division and Washington was one of five NHL teams who did not qualify for the playoffs.

Rockies 4, Canucks 4

Rookie Neil Belland scored on a 50-foot shot midway through the third period to give Vancouver a tie wtie with Calgary in the Smythe Division. Each team has two games remaining in the regular-season schedule.

OUTDOOR WRITERS ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Crappie fisherman would do well to consider the posibilities of increasing their catches by the use of attractors. There are several medthods of building an attractor.

One of the oldest is using brush piles or Christmas trees. Another is to install a series of stakes to make a stake bed sttractor. Where a surplus of old tires is available, they will make a very effective shelter area to attract fish.

IN MANY areas these shelters are called freshwater reefs but by any other name their main purpose is to get the fish and the fisherman together.

The beginner may want to start with an attractor made of bush. Hardwoods usually last longer than the softer woods. Oak brush seems to be the most effective and long lasting.

As far as design goes, it seems that the fish are not into architecture. Nonetheless, the trend is for a flatter more spread out design in shallow waters, while in deeper water the taller structures seem to work best.

An attractor constructed of bales of hay is extremely effective. As the hay decays, the growth of insect larvae and other natural fish food increases. This attracts minnows and the crappie follow soon after. Hay bales are probably not effective for longer than one season, but seem to be very effective for that period of time.

OLD TIRES work well and are durable. Holes must be drilled into the tread portion of the tire about ten inches in diameter. Most tire reefs must be weighted down with cement blocks or anchors. Two tires with one folded and pulled through the other make an effective reef for a small pond but n large lakes as many as 50 tires in a bunch may be used.

Before putting a reef in your favorite fishing hole, select a type that will not extend above the water at low levels. Secondly, check with the local lake commission or managing agency to avoid violations of any regulations. After getting proper clearence go ahead and build.

IT'S ALWAYS wise to use some method to mark where the reef is built. A bouy can be constructed from a PBC pipe. The pipe should be four to five feet in length with ten inches of cement poured into one end. Fasten the marker to the reef with a plastic covered steel cable.

There are a number of lakes in Texas that have several freshwater reefs in them. Through a lot of effort of the TPWD and various private bass and fishing clubs these new reefs are providing a lot of angling entertainment for hundreds of Texas fishermen.

From time to time TPWD personel have checked these planted reefs. With the aid of underwater scuba divers, they have reported that some of the reefs are alive with gamefish.

POSSUM KINGDOM Reservoir in North-Central Texas has five reefs installed several years ago and now host a great array of freshwater gamesters. Largemouth bass and crappie are the main fish that cruise the man-made reefs in search of food and protection, but channel catfish and smallmouth bass are frequent vistors.

Most lakes and reservoirs in Texas will allow the individual to place various types fo freshwater reefs in their lakes, but be sure to check first. Some lakes will allow the use of tire reefs only, while others allow only the more natural brush and trees to be used.

WHATEVER LAKE may be your favorite, your chances of catching more fish increase about 70 per cent if you have your own reef.

The bucket seats recline. Firenza moves down the road with a sporty feel thanks to front-wheel drive for traction and MacPherson strut front suspension for smoothness. The sporty coupe's hatch opens the way to a whole lot of storage space, too. Very practical.

Firenza: it's quite a sporting proposition—with a 1.8-liter, 4-cylinder engine and 4-speed manual transmission standard, and a 2.0-liter, 4-cylinder engine and automatic transmission available soon. Test-drive a new Olds Firenza soon!

INTRODUCING CUTLASS CIERA!

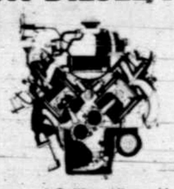

Cutlass Ciera. It's the first Cutlass with front-wheel drive. With all that Cutlass style, plus impressive traction. A 2.5-liter L4 engine with electronic fuel injection is standard. Cutlass Ciera, a new Cutlass up with the latest automotive technology.

NO. 1 SELLER CUTLASS SUPREME!

Over the past seven years, more new car buyers chose Cutlass than any other car. Total value is why. The ride. The room. The comfort. The fine Olds quality. The traditionally high resale value. The 1982 Oldsmobile Cutlass Supremes offer all of this—plus the added value of popular standard features like power steering, power front disc brakes, automatic transmission and extensive anti-corrosion measures... and a lot of style. Engines? A 4.3-liter diesel V6, popular 5.7-liter diesel V8 and a new 5.0-liter gasoline V8 are now available. Isn't it time you traded for the solid value of a stylish Cutlass Supreme? Drive one today at your Olds dealers.

INTRODUCING NEW DIESEL V6!

A brand-new 4.3-liter diesel V6 joins America's best-selling diesel family. Available on all Cutlass Supreme and Cutlass Ciera coupes and sedans.

PRESENTING OMEGA ES!

That smart, sophisticated ES package that gave Omega sedans the grand-touring look inside and out is now available on Olds Omega coupes!

THE BEST NEWS OF ALL, EVEN TODAY, THERE'S STILL ROOM TO DO IT WITH STYLE.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, April 2, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Among the celebrities sharing this birthday with you are playwright Rochelle Owens and actors Alec Guinness and Jack Webb. Today marks the beginning of a happy period for parent-child relationships. Short trips prove highly rewarding. Your hard work results in new financial gains, paving the way for you to spend more time with loved ones. A change of residence is a distinct possibility in September. If unemployed, be willing to move where the jobs are. Love grows stronger between you and a childhood sweetheart who recently reappeared. Relinquish long-range promises in return for immediate gains. Partner applauds a tough decision.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Those who work at home should find this a particularly productive day. A financial windfall makes certain decisions easier. People are impressed by your outright honesty.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Home is where you prefer to be, but you may have to travel to get business moving. Be imaginative! You will probably have to search out commercial prospects in unlikely places.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not rely on the promises of someone you have just met. Investigation shows that this person has often been unreliable. Someone close to you knows the location of a document you need.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The stage is set for you to solve a financial problem that has caused tension between you and mate. Be willing to try unusual work methods to boost business.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This could be the busiest day of the week for you. Solidify your contacts and improve the cash flow. Patience does not come easy for you but it pays off handsomely now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A matter of principle is involved in a business decision. Stand up for your beliefs. Return a favor to a friend. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A long-distance call helps you make an important decision. Exercise self-discipline and you will get the jump on a competitor. Diversify your investments.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Silence makes you mysterious to a member of the opposite sex. Stop blaming yourself for a business failure. It was the fault of events, not people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those who give the orders are understanding now. Search for missing information until you find it. Do not expect too much from romance this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Offer friendship whenever the occasion invites it. A check could arrive unexpectedly. A special matter requires your personal attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A day requiring collective thinking and joint action. Set a good example for a young person who is very much in awe of you. A long-time hope is fulfilled.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't push too hard or too fast today or you could make a costly mistake. A little information is a dangerous thing. Wait until all the facts are known.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	6 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♡.

Here's a chance to test your declarer play. Cover the East and West hands and decide how you would play six hearts.

The bidding might not have been scientific, but it was certainly effective. North's hand revalued to a good 19 points, and South decided that there was no way to find out how much duplication there was in the diamond suit, so he bid what he thought he could make. He was right, but he had to play well to land his contract.

West led a trump. Declarer won in hand and drew the remaining trump, ending in dummy. Then he cashed the ace of diamonds, and discarded a club from his hand! Declarer led a club to the king and continued with a low club. Had West followed suit with a low card, declarer intended finessing the ten. If East won the trick; it meant that the suit would break and declarer's spade loser would be discarded on the fourth club in dummy.

When West failed to follow suit, declarer's care in discarding a club on the ace of diamonds was rewarded. Declarer rose with the ace of clubs and led a spade from the table. He intended just covering any card East played. When East played low, declarer inserted the eight. West won, but he was end played.

Since a diamond would have given a ruff-and-sluff, West returned a spade. Declarer won the jack, cashed the king, then crossed to dummy with a trump to discard his last club on the ace of spades.

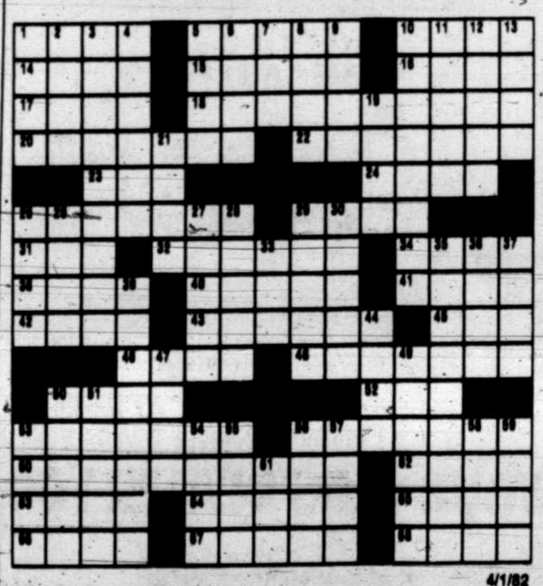

Naturally, all of our readers made the contract. After all, it is the same theme as we used in Tuesday's hand, just disguised a little!

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Drilling declines as oil prices fall

By MARK IVEY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — In January 1981 President Reagan deregulated petroleum prices in a move that seemed to knock down the last economic barriers for American oil producers — an industry already steamrolling along after two years of spiralling oil prices and soaring profits.

Exploration and drilling activity continued to intensify. The number of operating rigs grew almost daily in America's overcrowded oil patches. Profits flowed from the country's largest oil titans to the smallest, one-man production companies as lofty oil prices created a modern day gold rush.

Today, a little over a year later, the Hercules of American industry is struggling. Weak demand and a world awash in oil has sent petroleum prices plunging in recent weeks, forcing company profits down in the process.

Now several energy experts are predicting that the glory days of the traditional oilman may be over, at least for the next five to 10 years. Money will still be made in the business, they say, but not in the same fashion as in the last 12 years, when oil prices rose from $1.80 a brrel to over $38 a barrel.

John E. Olson, energy analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert, is among those monitoring the quiet revolution within the oil industry.

Olson is the founding director of the National Association of Petroleum Investment Analysts and a consultant to several large oil companies. His background in research encompasses all phases of the oil business and his office is in Houston, a city that had its phenomenal growth fueled by the energy industry in the 1970s.

"We are seeing what may be the greatest changes within the industry in over 10 years," Olson said in a recent interview. "Just as overadjustments were made after the last energy crisis — bankers started throwing money at every project, rig manufacturers popped up everywhere — now we are seeing an accelerated movement in the opposite direction.

"You can see what's occurring by looking at Aramco (Middle East consortium made up of Texaco, Exxon, Mobil, and Standard of California). Aramco is paying $34 a barrel to buy oil from the Saudis, but receives only $30 for its refined products. Added up, they're losing $20 million a day or $7 billion a year."

Worse still will be the effects on a number of smaller oil production companies, particularly those wth heavy debt and with meager track records.

"You may see up to 30 percent of these falling by the wayside or being absorbed by other companies," Olson said. "Some of the first casualties will be the small operators. In the last couple of years a lot of geologists and engineers who knew about a certian territory jumped into the business and began raising money. Now that they've got everything on the line they're hanging by their toes because of the soft market."

Reasons for these producers' problems are not complicated. Whereas oilmen have been able to buck high interest rates and high operating costs in recent years because of soaring oil prices, that is no longer the case. In the last year the price these companies receive for their oil has fallen, about $6, now down to $28 a barrel on the spot oil market.

As Olson says, "The same oil drilling deal that looked so profitable at $34 a barrel is not that attractive when you're only making $28 a barrel."

The result is that domestic productin of petroleum will likely fall in the next several years, Olson said.

But declining oil prices will go far beyond just affecting the thousands of petroleum producers. Steel companies, rig makers and a variety of oil service companies are already feeling the pinch as demand for their products and services begins to fall.

U.S. Steel Corp., for instance, has laid off 1,800 people since Jan. 1 at its Lorain Ohio facilities, according to Oil and Gas journal, the oil industry's main trade publication. Likewise, Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. is starting to lay off 1,600 workers at its pipe manufacturing plants in Aliquippa, Pa. and Youngstown, Ohio.

Both of these layoffs are due largely to the declining demand for oil company tubular goods.

Firm posts bond to free drilling rig

HOUSTON (AP) — The Zapata Corp. has posted a $2.5 million bond to free a drilling rig that broke loose from its moorings and was seized under salvage laws, company officials say.

A Halifax, Nova Scotia, attorney was authorized Tuesday to post bond to the Canadian government and a harbor master. However, company officials said they were uncertain when the rig would be released.

The 10-story rig, worth $57.2 million, broke loose from its moorings during a March 5 storm in a Halifax harbor. Eight tugboats, five of them property of the Canadian government, captured the rig before it smashed into a bridge.

The rig was to be moved to a site about 50 miles south of Halifax on Friday, but lawyers for the Canadian Department of Natural Defense stopped it under a salvage claim.

Donald Kerr, attorney for Zapata, argued the Canadian's expense for retrieving the barge could not have amounted to more than $40,000.

The tugboats' captain and crews had sought an additional $2.5 million bond from Zapata, but they agreed to drop the claim, said Zapata spokesman Barney White.

Opera 'Rigoletto' comes to life at Theatre Midland

Rigoletto (Rodney Stenborg) bemoans the curse placed upon him and his daughter's misfortune as she (Nicole Philibosian) tries to console him in the second act of Texas Opera Theatre's production of Verdi's "Rigoletto." The TOT production was staged Tuesday in Theatre I at Theatre Midland for a sellout house of 500-plus opera buffs.

"Power and wealth are but empty illusions. Let me adore you, my darling, my angel," the Duke of Mantua says of Gilda, the daughter of Rigoletto and the fair young lady he has been watching for some time. From his words, he sounds as if he's in love. Alas, how fleeting is love.

Man's fickle nature brings the duke in Act III of Texas Opera Theatre's production of "Rigoletto," to an isolated inn near Mantua, where he woos and wins Maddalena, while singing about the fickleness of women.

Unknown to him, Maddalena is the sister of and co-conspirator of Sparafucile, a murderer who has been paid by Rigoletto to assassinate the duke. Rigoletto describes the duke thusly: "His name is evil," while referring to himself as "justice." Once the duke has won Maddalena, she pleads for his life. Her pleas are unknown to her, overheard by the innocent and hopelessly in love Gilda who decides to make the ultimate sacrifice — her life for his.

And the curse lies over all.

A sellout house at Theatre Midland Tuesday night watched as Giuseppe Verdi's first critical and popular success "Rigoletto," adapted by him and his librettist, Francesco Piave, from Victor Hugo's play about French royalty, "Le Roi S'amuse," came to life on the stage at Theatre I. Both Hugo's book and Verdi's opera were considered politically dangerous in their day because each dealt with a king rather than a duke. Verdi was forced to demote his king to a duke and change the setting to a non-existent city to avoid censorship.

TOT's production of this 1851 hit was smoothly done with the cast working well as an ensemble. None of the voices was great, but all were strong enough for their respective roles.

Perhaps the most memorable solos were performed by Gran Wilson as the duke and Rodney Stenborg as the hunchback, jester, Rigoletto. Lynn Beckstrom as Maddalena played a marvelous harlot, adding life and vigor to the stage. She would have been more effective had she not had a 20th century bathing suit line in a 19th century costume.

Act III, which contained a number of onstage visual contrasts, was the most effectively staged of the three acts.

The set was done in muted tones against which the players were well highlighted.

Comments from patrons leaving following the production ranged from enjoyment to amazement with one lady saying to a friend, "I'm surprised that I enjoyed it as much as I did."

All in all it was a most delightful evening, with deserved compliments going to TOT for a fine presentation, and to Midland College, the Midland Opera Advisory Committee, Theatre Midland, the Texas Arts Council and Midland National Bank for making this Midland engagement possible.

'Gala of Stars' benefits youth tour

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

It isn't a car wash, or a cake sale, or a door to door blitz of cookies, candles or cards. But it has something in common with all of them.

It's a benefit.

Although it utilizes adult talent onstage, the tickets and advertising were sold by a youth group — the Westminster Ringers of First Presbyterian Church.

The Westminster Ringers are going on an extensive tour this summer with performances planned for the White House, Carnegie Hall, Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N.J., and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States at Columbus, Ga.

Although First Presbyterian Church has budgeted the necessary amount for the tour, the bell ringers wanted to show their "appreciation to the church for its sponsorship" by raising monies of their own, said Tom Roberts, musical director at First Presbyterian.

They wanted to do something different.

In a discussion session among the bell ringers and their parents, the idea of a youth talent show was suggested. This suggestion led to the idea of a show containing popular scenes from productions presented at Theatre Midland in the past — an idea Midland Community Theatre had successfully used to raise money some years ago when it presented Encore '78. Thus, the "Gala of Stars" idea conceptualized from a previous success presented by MCT.

The next step involved contacting those who had appeared on Theatre Midland's stage to see if they would volunteer their time and energies to do again what they'd done before. And that is precisely what those involved in the "Gala of Stars" benefit at Theatre Midland did Sunday. One other performance is scheduled at 8 p.m. Saturday.

The production's cast includes Bill Pomeroy, Mona Gale Gibson, Bob Fennell, The Ladies Handbell Ringers, Bill Shaner, Coila Morrow, Andrew Ray, Pat Baskin, Janice Archer, Louis Kluck, D.A. Plumlee, Charles Dixon, Paula Cahoon, Shawn Whelan, Oza Whitten, Dee Rose, Janet Pollard, Graham Pollard, Jim Salners, The Westminister Ringers and the Gala Orchestra.

Members of the production staff include Ted Strickland, production director, Roberts, musical director; Jan Specht, production organizer, and Shaun Gilstrap, technical director. Production crew members include Gary Lyons, Danny Streetman, Jim Beverley, Scott Stuckey, J.J. Baskin, John Yuronka, Gene Bartus, Dalys Atkinson, J'Nell Carr, Karen Kowert, Diane Collins, Melinda Mayes, Donna Yuronka and the Symphony Debs.

Scenes include, among others, those from "Oklahoma," "I Do, I Do," "The Music Man," "The King and I," "Fiddler on the Roof," "Annie Get Your Gun," "Mame," and "Die Fledermaus."

Tickets, priced at $6, may be purchased at the theater, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., or reservations may be made by calling the theater's box office at 682-4111.

Tryouts for 'Who's Happy Now?' to be Sunday, Monday

Tryouts for Oliver Hailey's off-Broadway comedy hit "Who's Happy Now?" will be held at 3 p.m. Sunday and at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Redfern Room at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"Who's Happy Now?" will replace "Talley's Folly," which was originally announced, but has since become unavailable.

During its first production in 1969, "Who's Happy Now?" was hailed as "a funny, robust, cockeyed comedy with some exceedingly entertaining characters and a great deal of warmth." Set in a bar in Sunray, Texas, the play focuses on the efforts of a boy to hold his family together. The boy's mother brings him to the bar because it's the only place he will ever have a chance to see and get to know his father. Unfortunately, he must also see and get to know his father's girlfriend at the same time.

Roles are available for three men and two women. Richard, the boy, should be in his early 20s, but must be able to play himself at the ages of 6, 16 and 21. Mom, Dad and the girlfriend should be in their late 20s to early 40s and must also be able to play themselves at the ages of 25, 35 and 40. The bartender can be played anywhere from 30 to 65 years old.

"Who's Happy Now?" will be performed in Theatre II May 14-26. The production is directed by Ted Strickland, Midland Community Theatre's assistant director.

Perusal copies of the script are available at the theater. For more information call the theater business office at 682-254-

ENTERTAINMENT

'The Importance of Being Earnest' continues this week

Midland Community Theatre's production of Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest" continues in Theatre II, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., with performances tonight, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, April 1-4 and 8-10.

"The Importance of Being Earnest" is set in Victorian England and much of the play's humor comes from the strict rules and regulations set for society during the reign of Queen Victoria. The play was first presented at the St. James's Theatre Feb. 14, 1895. It was subtitled "A Trivial Comedy for Serious People." Some of those serious people in the audience took the play a bit too seriously and were unable to accept the mockery being made of the stringent etiquette of the social set.

However, the play was a hit with the majority of the audience, perhaps due to the relaxation of behavorial standards toward the end of Victoria's reign. She died in 1901. Those others were excited by seeing themselves being parodied on stage and the play started a trend of making fun of exaggerated manners within social cliques.

MCT's cast include Robyn Rose as Gwendolyn, Lisa Livingston a Cecily, Mark Schneider a Jack, Phillip Coffield a Algernon, David Perkin as Chausable, Gloria Stephenson as Prism, Lore Fitzgerald as Lady Brack nell, Andy Kimbrough a Merriman and Michae O'Rourke as Lane.

Reservations may b made by calling the the ater's box office at 682 4111.

Adams exhibit on display

An exhibition of photography by Ansel Adams opens today in the Midland College McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building. The show will be on display through April 30.

Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday. "Ansel Adams: A Survey" will open today with a 7:30 to 9 p.m. reception, which is open to the public.

This 40-work traveling exhibition of Adams' photography, each of which was chosen by Adams himself as being representative of his works, was organized by the Center for Creative Photography at the University of Arizona, Tucson. It is the first time an exhibit of his works has been in this area.

Museum deadline April 15

Deadline for slide entries in the Museum of the Southwest's annual juried competition is April 15. The competition is open to all media with the show hanging at the museum from May 15 through Aug. 8.

This year's juror is William Peterson, editor of Artspace magazine. Purchase awards will be given by the Midland Arts Association, the American Association of University Women and the museum. All purchases will become a part of the museum's permanent collection.

For more information contact the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., by calling 683-2882.

Wienie, marshmallow roasts thing of the past

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Remember those rare, scrawled, cryptic postcards that used to arrive at long last from the kids at summer camp?

"Dear Mommy and Daddy,

"There was a snake in our tent. My sailboat sank in the raee. The counce lors are always yelling at us. My friend burnt his pancho at the marshmallow roast. The food stinks. Please send some cookies ..."

If the staccato prose style here induces a nostalgic pang of panic, you have just dated yourself into another generation.

Kids being packed off to camp in the computer age are having an entirely different wilderness experience than when yesteryear's parents exiled the urchins to a green gulag for a couple of weeks to keep the nuclear family from exploding.

POSTCARDS FROM the front these days might yield these nervous nuggets of misinformation:

"Dear Mommy and Daddy,

"We hit the dining room roof in rocketry class. My minicomputer has lice. I got the lead in 'Streetcar Named Desire.' The wheel came off and we had to make a pit stop. My sharing, caring, sensitive, child-oriented counselor is mad because I only lost a half-pound this week. I hate Granola."

Read the camp advertisements in the tonier Sunday papers and you'll realize halfway down the first column how much the summer scene in the woodlands of juvenilia has changed since you and I cremated a hotdog around the council fire and shuddered through some spine-chilling, psyche-bruising ghost stories.

Hot dogs and marshmallows apparently are among the endangered species at today's "nutrition controlled" and "culturally enriched" kiddie camps, gone the way of the early morning bugle call, pingpong paddle discipline and the outdoor latrine with the crescent cut in the door.

"SUPERB NATURAL cuisine," trumpets the ad for one of the more mod summer retreats. "No sugar, chemical additives or junk food. Resident dietician."

Mulligan's Stew

Kids don't go to camp anymore to learn how to pitch a tent, tie a bowline on a bight or tell a yellow bellied sapsucker from a double breasted seersucker. The ax, the canteen and the compass are as abosolete as the old campaign hat that Lord Baden-Powell wore at the siege of Mafeking.

Now the little bleeders amid "pollen free, rustic surroundings" pursue "activity behavior modification" and "independent living skills" in a "structured environment" that offers "therapeutic group dynamics" and a "pressure-free child-centered program of elective daily activities."

Fun and adventure may still await in the great outdoors, but "stress management" is the name of the game.

The modern camper retreats from the steaming city pavements to some bosky dell to undergo "attitude adjustment" and "improve self-image" in "an encouraging productive atmosphere."

The prospectus for some of these camps reads like a college catalogue interspersed here and there with a textbook on clinical psychology:

"INDIVIDUALLY STRUCTURED elective program. Choose from kartate, ham radio, soccer, computer sciences, video taping, rocketry, rodeo riding, dressage, pottery, weaving, visual arts, main streaming (which I trust is different from mainlining), aerobic dancing, aquacises, slimnastics, grooming, makeup."

The ole swimming hole and the cow pasture masquerading as a baseball diamond have been replaced by "olympic-sized pool, lighted tennis courts, AM radio station, TV studio with five cameras, gigantic recreation hall with professional stage, complete video taping facilities, Go-Kart Indianapolis blacktop track with pitstops ..."

No doubt as an adjunct of stress management, "lead parts are guaranteed" for all turning up at the casting call for the camp play.

And the counselors aren't just a bunch of unemployable klutzes wearing T-shirts from colleges no one ever heard of anywhere.

A kid goes off to camp these days confident, in keeping with the promises of the brochure, of learning football at the kneepads of "Too-Tall" Jones, tennis from Don Budge, baseball from Rick Cerone, Davey Lopes or Ted Williams, ballet from an exiled member of the Kirov or Bolshoi.

THE GIRLS are still on one side of the lake, and the boys on the other, but apparently the intervening minefields have been cleared, the barbed wire removed and the torpedo patrol boats decommissioned.

"Separate but interacting" programs include co-ed overnight hikes or what are now termed "backpacking wilderness experiences." These should provide some interesting postcards home.

"Diet education ... weight control clinics ... resident MD and dietician ... whirlpool baths ... and jogging track" promise the overweight camper a loss of anywhere from "5 to 50 pounds."

Don't think it's as easy getting into camp as in the days when the whole neighborhood gang went off to scout camp. "Personal interviews by appointment required upon application," one ad states.

But consider the rewards of acceptance:

"Our core program of creative camping emphasis self-realization, individual learning needs and life skills. Pollen-free. Deluxe accommodations. Mature, experienced staff. No tipping."

An army recruiting sergeant couldn't have said it more persuasively.

How Seattle was lost and Mount Richard was founded

By MARLENE AIG

NEW YORK (AP) — Sometimes, even mapmakers lose things.

It happened about 20 years ago to the American Automobile Association.

The AAA lost Seattle.

No one knows just how it happened, but somebody somewhere for some reason left it off the AAA's official United States road map. The organization spent many weeks and dollars putting the nation's 23rd largest city back where it belonged — reprinting the maps.

"It just fell through the editing cracks," says Orth Rader, director of publications for the AAA.

It also happened to the public works department in Boulder, Colo.

Richard Ciacci was working as a draftsman for the county in early 1970s when he decided to "leave his stamp" on the county map, as public works director Alex Ariniello puts it.

Suddenly, there was a Mount Richard on the Continental Divide where there hadn't been a mount anything before. It was two years before the mythical mountain was discovered and the map revised.

Such are the travails of making maps. While the rest of us worry about how to follow them or fold them, the manufacturers worry about getting them right. It's a business with a history of error.

Medievalists, you'll recall, believed the Earth was flat and based their maps on the Bible, putting Jerusalem at the center of the universe.

And as any American schoolchild knows, Columbus set out for what the maps called the "Indies" when he stumbled onto a New World in 1492. That's what you get when you have flat-Earth maps.

Actually, making maps — the science is called cartography — has always been a complex, tedious task in a relatively small and highly competitive business both in this country and Europe.

Major mapmaking companies — some of which produce millions of maps a year — employ as few as 25 people to figure out just where the states, cities, towns, rivers, lakes, highways, bridges, parks and pastures belong.

Local planning departments, whose work is crucial to bigger mapmakers, sometimes employ a single soul to portray an entire community's streets, hospitals, monuments and public buildings.

With so much detail and so few people involved, it's understandable that things sometimes are forgotten or put in the wrong place.

But things are improving. You should have seen the old days.

George Washington is credited with paternity of the U.S. road map, when he complained to Congress in 1777, "The want of accurate maps of the country ... has been a great disadvantage to me."

Congress quickly remedied the problem, and some historians say that had Washington not procured maps for Princeton, N.J., Williamsburg, Va., Baltimore and Philadelphia by 1781, the American Revolution would have dragged on longer.

Railroad, bicycle and local maps were available by the 19th century, but mapmaking didn't boom until the advent of the automobile and motoring clubs turned well-known paths into paved thoroughfares and long-distance travel became a frequent reality.

"It was extremely chaotic," says Con Erickson, spokesman for Rand McNally, one of the nation's biggest mapmaker. "One state would name a road one thing with one color, while the same road would change names and colors when it went into the next state."

In the 1920s federal and state governments started giving roads numbers and, "It was the genesis of road maps as we know them today," says Erickson.

The next major breakthrough came in the 1920s, when Otto Gustave Lindberg, founder of General Drafting, pioneered in maps for the AAA the categorization of roads as good, fair and poor.

He persuaded Standard Oil of New Jersey to back his mapmaking on a multistate basis. The maps were given out free.

Village battles over patriotism

ANTRIM, N.H. (AP) — A conflict over peace and patriotism has been escalating in this village ever since the night its residents voted both to urge a freeze on nuclear weapons and to "adopt" the Navy's newest missile-firing warship.

Posters with slogans such as "Warships are not healthy for children and other living things" have been stapled throughout the village, but in many cases they've been torn down and replaced with photos of the 445-foot-long USS Antrim.

"Like any other little town we have our nucleus that are against anything, and the ship is just one of the things they're against," said Katherine Ring, one of Antrim's three selectmen, the elected officials who run the town. She said "it boils down to patriotism."

"Warships are warships," Laurence Craig Green told the selectmen Monday night. "They are weapons of war and they serve no other purpose than that (for) which they were created — to kill and destroy."

The disagreement began three weeks ago at Town Meeting when residents of the village of 2,000 people voted 2-to-1 for a resolution urging the United States and the Soviet Union to stop building, deploying and testing nuclear weapons. At least 50 New Hampshire towns have approved such a resolution and at least 13 have rejected the proposal, placed on the ballots after a petition drive.

At the same meeting, in "a fairly close voice vote," according to town clerk Martin Nichols, residents officially agreed to become the hometown of the new 3,600-ton Oliver Hazard Perry class frigate. Perry class frigates, according to Jane's Fighting Ships, can carry nuclear-tipped Tomohawk cruise missiles.

Last September, Navy officials had offered six communities named Antrim a chance to become the official namesake of its new ship.

Only the voters of the picturesque village in the southwestern part of New Hampshire expressed an interest in the Pentagon's offer.

Antrim school children became pen pals with the ship's crew, some townspeople went to the ship's commissioning in Seattle last September and the ship's flag flies over the village.

So it was no surprise that at the Town Meeting three weeks ago, residents officially agreed to "adopt" the ship and her crew of 179 and "become known as the hometown of the USS Antrim."

"The whole thing has become kind of weird but I guess it's better to put up with it than having a ship out in the middle of the Atlantic that no one cares about," said Nichols, a former Navy man.

The village of Antrim, N.H., voted earlier this month for a freeze of nuclear weapons and also to "adopt" one of the country's newest guided missile ships. Laurence Green is one of several people who view the two votes as paradoxical.

Since the vote, he said, "Some people have really gone gung-ho for ship — hook, line and anchor."

"We've got T-shirts, posters, banners and the crew is coming here this summer for 'old town days,'" Nichols said. "I can just imagine what 200 sailors will do in this town. But we've also got some people who don't like anything about the ship. It could be an interesting summer."

Ragan Cary said that at first she thought "a few little warmongers want to play with the ship, so what."

"But when it became apparent that much of the town was in favor of it, I became worried," she said. "Perhaps the people who are against the promotion of the warship are activists, but that doesn't mean they are rabble-rousers. It means they don't like war."

"There's a lot of discussion about the ship but people have made up their minds," said Police Chief Brian Brown, "and being New Englanders, no amount of talking is likely to change those minds."

Houston to host special convention

Over 10,000 teachers, administrators and college students are expected to attend the 60th annual National Council for Exceptional Children Convention in Houston April 11-16.

The convention will be held at Albert Thomas Convention Center, the Hyatt Regency Hotel and the Sheraton Houston Hotel.

The opening general session will feature a performance by the American Deaf Dance Company. Other activities include leadership conferences, film festivals, research forums, and over 350 sessions, seminars and hands-on workshops.

Workshops will feature all areas of handicapped students and gifted students.

There also will be numerous exhibits and a special center established for the recruitment of teachers.

The President's Event, a social session, has been entitled "The Best Little Hoedown in Texas."

This is the first time the annual convention has been held in Houston. The program chairman is Dr. Joye Thorne, director of special education for the Aldine Independent School District. Publicity chairman is Opal Hamilton, assistant superintendent for special services for the Cypress-Fairbanks Independent School District.

Lee senior gets award

Nguyen's scholarship was awarded by the Texas A&M Chemical Engineering Department.

UTPB group to fund study of university

ODESSA — "Friends of UTPB," an organization which supports four-year status for The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, has retained a consulting team to study the university and make recommendations on how the needs of the area can best be met.

A.K. Barlow, UTPB chairman, said the two-man team will look at the total picture of area education, including high schools, community colleges and the university.

"They will be considering whether there is a need for four-year status, but that is not all they will study," he said.

"They will consider the demand for various educational programs and will make recommendations concerning alternatives to better meet the needs of the population. They will consider how the university can work in coordination with other educational institutions to provide a quality educaton here."

Members of the consulting team are Dr. Harold Enarson of Boulder, Colo., president emeritus of Ohio State University, and Dr. Paul Sharp of Norman, Okla., president emeritus of Oklahoma University.

"We wanted professional help of the highest credentials to help us in the planning for the future of UTPB, and after a great deal of research, we decided on these two men. They have vast experience in higher education and are well respected in this field," he said.

Enarson and Sharp will be visiting the Permian Basin area Thursday through Sunday performing research work relating to their study, which they hope to complete by early June.

Barlow said the "Friends of UTPB" also are involved in other activities in support of the university.

"We are now in the process of soliciting a larger membership who will agree to support UTPB in a meaningful way. We are asking them to use their time, talents and influence on our behalf," he said.

Several committees are now working within the organization to accomplish this support. Included are committees soliciting support of all communities in the Permian Basin, and committees for support of the UTPB ex students, community colleges, the UT System Board of Regents, the state Coordinating Board, the legislature, governor and governor's task force on higher education.

'Flower of music world' dead

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Ray Bloch, 79, a composer and conductor dubbed by Jackie Gleason as "the flower of the music world," died Monday of a heart attack. Bloch composed and conducted music for the Ed Sullivan Show from 1947 to 1971 and for Gleason's TV variety shows.
