Proposition 13 supporters Peter Saul, left, Wendell Johannson and Irene Merrill celebrate Tuesday night in Los Angeles the tax relief initiative's approval by California voters. (AP Laserphoto)

13 TAX LIMITATION—INITIATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT. Limits realty tax to 1%: increases to 2%. Imposes 2/3 voting requirement on new taxes. Financial impact: Commencing with fiscal year beginning July 1, 1978, would result in annual losses of local government property tax revenues (approximately $7 billion in 1978-79 fiscal year), reduction in annual state costs (approximately $600 million in 1978-79 fiscal year), and restriction on future ability of local governments to finance capital construction by sale of general obligation bonds.

Proposition 13, as it appeared on the ballot.

Proposition 13 big winner in California

The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — California voters sent the message loud and clear to politicians Tuesday — they want drastic, unequivocal property tax relief.

Riding a bigger wave of ballots than anything in comparable elections, the tax-cut Proposition 13, an initiative which got on the ballot because the people — 1.2 million of them — earlier signed petitions to put it there, swept to an overwhelming victory.

And it was certain to send shockwaves across the nation as an encouragement to taxpayer rebellion leaders with their own special plans.

Similarly, the California state Legislature's alternative to the initiative, Proposition 8, fell far behind the winner.

It was a smashing personal triumph for the initiative's co-promoters: 75-year-old Howard Jarvis of Los Angeles and 65-year-old Paul Gann of Carmichael.

But the voters who were so thunderously clear on property tax relief were not so plain-spoken about the partisan candidates for governor.

Democrat Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Jr., who opposed Proposition 13, easily won renomination for another four-year term. He had no major opponent.

But retired Los Angeles Police Chief Edward M. Davis, an aggressive supporter of Proposition 13, was locked in a tight battle with Attorney General Evelle J. Younger, a passive Proposition 13 supporter in the fight for the Republican nomination and the right to face Brown in the November general election.

Assemblyman Ken Maddy of Fresno, who showed early strength in the campaign, was a far-back third and Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego was fourth.

The vehemence of the voters was unmistakable from the minute the polls opened at 7 a.m. Tuesday.

Long lines greeted some polling place officials and, all across the state, it was evident that the post-Watergate apathy of four years ago, when the voter turnout was only 53.9 percent, was long gone.

The ballot gave voters two chances to vote themselves property tax cuts — Propositions 13 and 8 — and opportunities like those rarely occur in politics.

The Jarvis-Gann plan cuts property taxes for homeowners and commercial property owners by an estimated $6 to $7 billion a year. The legislative alternative, keyed to passage of Proposition 8 and defeat of Proposition 13, gives a 30 percent cutback to homeowners, gives none to commercial property owners and puts a lid on government spending.

Given the choice, the voters turned to the biggest cut they could get.

The thunderous message was not lost on Brown.

"What we have tonight is the strongest expression of our democratic process that I have seen in a decade," the government said. "The message is clear — get these property taxes off my back and curtail government growth."

Even though he opposed the initiative, he said repeatedly that he reads a "mandate from the people" in the election returns and said, "I will seek a lid on state spending as well as on local spending, in the spirit of what the people want."

What is needed now, Brown said, is for the legislators, Democrats and Republicans alike, to work for the implementation of the initiative, which goes into effect July 1.

The worst thing that can happen, he added, is for the Jarvis-Gann plan to be challenged in the courts so as to delay legislative implementation.

But Brown's conciliatory attitude toward the initiative was lost on Assembly Republican leader Paul Priolo of Woodland Hills.

"We're not going to let Jerry Brown forget one minute that he opposed Proposition 13," the GOP lawmaker said.

It was a proud moment for Jarvis and he made it clear he intended to hold Brown and other politicians accountable for implementation of the initiative.

"The millions of Californians wh voted for this cause are not to b trifled with," he said. "To ignore us i political suicide."

The pent-up emotions of the proper ty taxpayers so dominated everythin else at stake in the campaign that th candidates for governor, for example found it hard to talk about muc else.

And it spilled over on the very firs measure on the statewide ballot, $350 million school construction bon issue. Early returns had the measure Proposition 1, losing. That's wha happened when it was on the ballo two years ago.

If the Jarvis-Gann proposal di anything to the candidates, it proba bly spelled defeat for Maddy an Wilson, when they decided to oppos the measure.

And so it didn't take either of them long to read the handwriting on th wall Tuesday night at Republica election headquarters.

Even before the balloting ended Wilson told his supporters in the Cen tury Plaza Hotel here that the cam paign had been "a magnificent expe rience," and that "certainly I'll b around for a long time" after thi election is over.

Maddy told his supporters in th same hotel that "we had some goo times," that his campaign prove that a candidate can come out "rural California, speak about agr cultural issues and have the peopl listen."

Then he headed for his home Fresno.

School district barred from using place system

A three-judge panel in Dallas has held that, according to the federal Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Midland Independent School District is prohibited from holding any more trustee elections under the current place system, schools attorney Charles Tighe said today.

The judges' decision climaxed a two-year attempt by the U.S. Justice Department to void a 1973 change in the Midland school district's election system from the at-large method to the place system. Justice Department officials contended the place system dilutes minority voting strength.

"It will be necessary for us (the school district) to go back to the at-large system," Tighe said unless the school board decides to appeal the ruling or go to a district court in Washington, D.C.

However, Tighe said he doesn't think the board will do so. He said the judges' decision does not apply to past trustee elections.

The schools attorney said the panel reached a conclusion based on oral arguments it heard in a March 28 hearing, involving the Midland district, several other Texas school districts and the Justice Department, and on briefs filed a few weeks ago by the lawyers for each party.

The Justice Department had tried at the March 28 hearing to prevent the Midland school district from holding its April 1 elections based on a U.S. Supreme Court decision this year that school districts do come under the Voting Rights Act.

Tighe said the school district held in its arguments to the panel that the Voting Rights Act is not applicable to the election system change it made in 1973 since Texas did not come under the act until 1975. Nevertheless, the Dallas panel ruled that the Voting Rights Act can be applied retroactively to Midland and other school districts in the state and that there is "nothing unconstitutional" about it.

Tighe said he was notified about the panel's ruling by mail a couple of days(ago. He said he has sent a copy of the opinion to Schools Superintendent Dr. James Mailey.

Rule would help used car buyer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Your chances of buying a lemon from a used car dealer would be reduced under a proposed rule expected to be made public next month by the Federal Trade Commission staff.

The proposal, now being put into final form, would require dealers to inspect used cars before they sell them, and to post windshield stickers telling of mechanical or safety defects.

The idea is that used car dealers are likely to correct the defects before putting a car bearing such a sticker on the sales lot.

Dealers say the proposal would increase their costs, meaning higher prices for customers.

"We would require sellers to inspect their cars...and to disclose to the buyer the results of the inspection," says Albert Kramer, director of the FTC bureau of consumer protection.

The proposal still has to be cleared by Kramer before it goes to the commission for a final vote. If the FTC approves the proposed new rule, as expected, it would go into effect late this year.

The rule would apply only to the nation's estimated 35,000 used car dealers and not to individuals selling second-hand cars to each other.

The FTC says that while about 12.5 million used car sales are reported each year by dealers, estimates of the number of used cars bought and sold in private transactions range up to 39 million.

Used car dealers are expected to reaffirm their opposition when the staff proposal is published in July for public comment.

Alleged jury problem may postpone trial

The possibility of irregularities in the manner of selecting names for a jury panel may postpone a capital murder trial scheduled in Midland for next week.

And if the alleged irregularities are judged valid, other cases slated for trial this summer may have to be postponed, District Attorney Vern Martin said Tuesday.

Martin said defense attorneys Allen McFall and Bill Smith, representing Anthony Dewayne Scott, scheduled to be tried on a capital murder charge, said there were at least 17 alleged irregularities concerning the manner in which names have been drawn this year from the jury wheel, as well as access to the jury wheel.

Scott is charged in the Aug. 4, 1977, stabbing death of Jackie Goodrum Burleigh. Mrs. Burleigh was stabbed during an alleged robbery of the B&B Liquor Store where she was a clerk.

Scott was arrested in Denver and was ordered extradited to Texas Aug. 9, 1977.

The objections were raised in a Tuesday hearing, which was recessed until today in order to give the prosecution an opportunity to study the allegations.

Martin said the hearing was to continue at 2 p.m. today and more defense submittals concerning the alleged irregularities were to be made at that time. A decision on the objection was possibility later today, he said.

Martin said he is considering joining in the defense motion to declare the panel of jurors called for the Scott trial ineligible. If he does so, Martin said, he also may ask 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp to order the present names in the jury wheel destroyed and to order a new roll to be compiled.

Since the law states that any objection to composition of the jury must be made before a trial, Martin said, there is no danger that any previously tried cases could be thrown out, should the allegations be proved.

The raising of the objection, however, does raise questions about whether other cases can be tried until the matter is resolved, Martin said.

Cowhand sips good coffee and talks about the changing times

BIG LAKE — Gordon Roach was sipping a hot cup of coffee on a Sunday afternoon best spent in the shade.

This old-timer looked friendly enough, and relaxed, sitting at the counter on a padded stool. He was leaning forward, as if he were on a slow-paced ride over a familiar trail.

So, you mosey on over from your place at a booth and strike up a chit-chat.

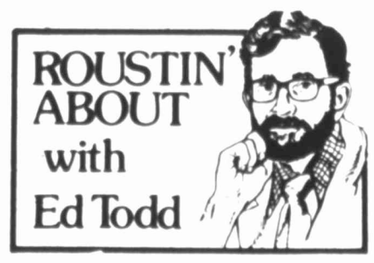

"Mr. Roach . . . ?" you begin, after getting wind of his name by listening in on cafe talk.

"I'm not a 'Mister,'" he says politely. "I was raised a cowboy."

Sure enough?

Sure enough.

Roach, who's now in his 81st year, has been ranching hereabouts since he was old enough to straddle a cow pony. He runs a spread about 25 miles north of town.

He had dropped by the cafe, Garland Eggleston's 67 Steak House, to sip the brew, which has to be just about the best drip coffee in this mesquite country since Arbuckle was the cowboys' favored brand.

Though shaded and cooled in the cafe, Roach kept his white hat on. Most cowboys do, except when they're sleeping.

A cowpoke would no more think about taking off his Stetson indoors than he would pulling off his boots for a ride in the saddle or a walk across range land.

Roach hadn't been in the cafe for long. He had spent a good deal of the day at the Texon Reunion, the annual get-together for ol' oilfield hands who had worked the oil patches here and their families.

Texon, which today is less than a ghost town, was the company town for employees of Big Lake Oil Co. The company developed the oil field, which was opened with the discovery of Santa Rita No. 1 west of here back in 1923.

The town is gone. Left in the wake of the boom are derricks and pumpjacks.

"I used to cowboy out there (at Texon) before they got that oil," says this rancher.

Those were prosperous years.

Before that, there was the drought of '17 that put many a rancher out of business, Roach recalls. A year later, he was out of cowboys boots and into Army footwear.

He was 21 when he got caught up in the war effort.

First, he underwent training at Austin's Camp Mabry, where he learned to work on the Liberty engines that powered overland trucks. Later, he was at San Antonio's Camp John Wise. There was where he learned about those observation balloons.

"Airplanes were very crude in those days."

Five months after he answered the call, Roach was out of uniform. The war in Europe was over, and soon Roach was back on the ranch.

He recalls, too, the old Reagan County seat, Stiles, and its demise not too many years after the Kansas City, Missouri, and Orient Railroad (now, the Santa Fe Railway) bypassed Stiles and passed through Big Lake and other points to the south and west.

•

The cafe where Roach was refreshing himself with coffee was about as country and as hospitable as any place you'll find in West Texas.

Waitresses Janie Aly and Fannie Collins made you feel like you were back home. And the jukebox music reinforced that atmosphere.

There were records spinning of Ernest Tubb singing "Waltz Across Texas," Al Dean playing "Cotton-eyed Joe," Willie Nelson putting his country touch to the old pop tune "On the Sunny Side of the Street," Boots Randolph blaring with Western sounds "Yakety Sax," and, yep, Linda Ronstadt singing — as if by request — "Old Paint."

•

Well, it was time to go. So you bid Roach farewell, and "saddle up" for your drive in your favored ol' Scout westward toward Rankin. It's the next town over.

So long, Mr. Roach.

Mercury dips to record low

Midland-area swimmers are having a cool time of it now, but it's not merely because of the water. A new record low temperature was set for Midland in the early morning hours today with a 55 degree reading, according to the weatherman with the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The previous record low had been 56 degrees set in 1970.

The Tall City also tied the record lowest high for June 6 with the mercury only hitting 76 degrees. The last time the high temperature was this low was in 1937, the weatherman said.

A cool front moved through the area Tuesday night, dropping the temperature 10 degrees from 74 degrees at 8 p.m. to 64 degrees at 9 p.m. Big Lake caught some of the rain that Midland missed, recording .98 inch, according to one report.

A 20 percent chance of rain remains tonight with the chances dwindling on Thursday, the weatherman said.

Skies should be partly cloudy through Thursday with the high to reach into the upper 80s. Low tonight should be in the lower 60s. Northerly winds of 10 to 15 mph will become light and variable tonight.

Area towns reported partly cloudy skies early today and cool temperatures.

WEATHER

Partly cloudy through Thursday with a slight chance of thundershowers tonight. Details on Page 4A.

Fans vote Gatlin top male artist

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Songwriter Larry Gatlin says his band and his fans deserve the credit for the three awards he won at the Music City News Popularity Awards show.

In fan voting, Gatlin was selected Tuesday night as male artist of the year and songwriter of the year. His group, "Family and Friends," was honored as band of the year.

He shared top billing with Loretta Lynn, who was chosen No. 1 female vocalist for the 12th straight year and joined Conway Twitty as top duet for the eighth straight time.

"Without John and Mary, it's all for naught," Gatlin said afterwards, referring to the fans. "And I'm so proud for the band, I can't stand it."

Gatlin currently has the No. 2 song on the country charts, "Night Time Magic," which he wrote. He also wrote and recorded a Top 10 country hit this spring, "I Just Wish You Were Someone I Love."

Brenda Lee accepted the award for Miss Lynn. A spokesman for Miss Lynn, David Brokaw, said she was confined to bed at her home 60 miles west of Nashville. "I think she's just run down," he said.

Country music veteran Ernest Tubb was presented the Founder's Award for contributions to the industry. He was selected by the staff of the Music City News, a monthly country music newspaper published in Nashville. This was the only award not chosen by fans.

Other winners were Don Williams, most promising male artist; Debby Boone, most promising female artist; The Statlers, vocal group of the year for the eighth straight year; The Osborne Brothers, bluegrass group of the year; Roy Clark, musician of the year; Mel Tillis, comedy act of the year; "Heaven's Just a Sin Away" by the Kendalls, single of the year; "Mostly Blue" by Elvis Presley, album of the year, and "50 Years of Country Music," best country music television program.

Presley's producer, Felton Jarvis, said in accepting the album of the year award, "Elvis' first love was country music."

No action taken

ODESSA — The Odessa City Council heard from the local manager of Texas Electric Service Co. (TESCO) on Tuesday, but didn't take any action on the company's request for a 24.4 percent statewide rate increase. The request is pending further study by the city staff.

The council did suspend the effective date for the rate changes from July 5 to Nov. 2 and authorized City Attorney Joel Roberts to initiate action to intervene in any proceedings before the Public Utility Commission relating to TESCO's request.

Softer 'brown lung' measures sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and the Labor Department are clashing over an attempt to protect textile workers from "brown lung" disease after a top presidential aide ordered proposed protective regulations softened to help hold down inflation.

Government sources familiar with the proposed regulation said on Tuesday that Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, directed Labor Secretary Ray Marshall to revise the regulations to cut down industry costs. The sources asked not to be identified.

Neither the Labor Department nor the White House would comment on the matter.

The issue involves a four-year battle by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to impose strict requirements designed to protect more than 800,000 textile workers from excessive cotton dust.

The dust over long exposure can cause byssinosis — or brown lung — which is a debilitating and sometimes fatal lung ailment similar to black lung which afflicts coal miners. By some estimates 35,000 active or retired textile workers suffer from the disease.

One source said Marshall was expected to appeal directly to President Carter to reverse the Schultze directive which, the source said, was issued on the president's instructions.

Critics of the cost-cutting order claim the changes would seriously soften the government edict and give industry broad latitude on what kind of protective devices to use.

For example, said one source, the industry might only require individual masks to meet the requirements, instead of developing a room ventilating system as would be mandated under the stricter regulations.

"The problem is that individual respirators just don't work," said the source. During OSHA hearings early last year a number of textile workers testified that they were unable to work an eight-hour day with the respirators because they are uncomfortable.

Dean of Senate to be honored

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sen. A.M. Aikin, D-Paris, dean of the Texas Senate, will be honored by the Democratic Party of Texas June 10 at a dinner at Paris Junior College, State Democratic Chairman Calvin Guest announced.

"Senator Aikin's service to this party is only overshadowed by his service to the people of Texas," Guest said. "I think it is very appropriate that the Democrats of Texas and Senatorial District No. 1 have taken this opportunity to recognize such a dedicated public servant."

Aikin is not seeking re-election this year.

Guest said those attending the dinner would include Attorney General John Hill, Democratic nominee for governor; Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Comptroller Bob Bullock, Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown and Ed Howard, Democratic nominee to succeed Aikin in District 1.

Judicial appointments subject of panel's plan

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Judicial Planning Committee has voted unanimously to recommend to the 1979 Legislature that the Chief Justice of the Texas Supreme Court make appointments of administrative judges in the state's nine judicial districts.

Such appointments are now made by the Governor.

And according to Presiding Judge Clarence Guittard of the Dallas Court of Civil Appeals, who chaired a committee task force on ways to streamline judicial administration, the "current Governor ... is not receptive to this proposal."

"Maybe the next Governor will be," Guittard told a meeting of the Judicial Planning Committee. Gov. Dolph Briscoe leaves office in January.

In presenting the task force report, Guittard said allowing the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, now Joe Greenhill, to appoint administrative judges "would enchance the administrative structure of the Texas court system."

Greenhill is not necessarily lobbying for such authority, but voted for the recommendation. He said the State Senate should confirm any appointments the Chief Justice makes for court administration.

In 1977, Rep. Ben Grant Marshall sponsored a bill transferring the appointment of administative judges from the Governor to the Chief Justice, although the bill died with little success.

The Judicial Planning Committee was created two years ago to advise the Governor's Criminal Justice Council on how millions of dollars in federal funds can be best used for court administration within the state.

Other recommendations for the Legislature as presented by Guittard and his task force are:

—The state's nine administrative judges need to form their own council to better handle the court caseload;

—The Supreme Court needs to have the power to develop rules for court administration; and —More statewide uniformity is needed in preparing court budgets.

The award recognizes students who achieve a straight A grade point average during six semesters of school.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State School Land Board received high bids of $19,120,305.51 on 207,072.45 acres of public lands at its lease sale Tuesday.

There were 479 bids, spokesman for the General Land Office reported, totaling $22,697,665.97.

High bids numbered 338.

The highest bid for the sale was that of Superior Oil Co., of $1,680,624 on a 1,440-acre tract in the Gulf of Mexico off Matagorda County, the GLO reported.

The bulk of the tracts offered were in the Gulf, where 259 tracts were offered, with bays and inlets accounting for another 319 of the 723 tracts.

Bryant anti-homosexual effort marks first year

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Eighteen months ago, Anita Bryant described herself as career woman, entertainer, orange juice spokeswoman, wife, mother and Christian. Crusader wasn't on the list. Not then.

But one year ago today, Dade County voters rejected a gay rights ordinance after an intense campaign led by Miss Bryant's Save Our Children Inc.

The former beauty queen had gone before the Dade County Commission on Jan. 18, 1977, to oppose a proposed ordinance prohibiting job and housing discrimination based on sexual preference.

That was the beginning. After the 2-to-1 defeat of the county ordinance, Miss Bryant moved into the eye of the gay rights storm.

Church groups honored her. Evangelists praised her. Homosexual rights activists marched against her, waving her picture with that of Adolf Hitler.

Even after a year, her battle continues. Tuesday night, Bob Kunst, self-proclaimed leader of local homosexuals, told commissioners he will begin a petition drive for a new homosexual rights ordinance.

Once Kunst's petitions are approved, he will have 30 days to collect 10,000 signatures to get the proposal on the Nov. 7 general ballot.

Commissioner Ruth Shack, author of last year's defeated ordinance, reacted angrily to Kunst's announcement: "You have already polarized this county. You are only going to open wounds that have just begun to heal."

Today, if you ask Miss Bryant how her life has changed, she laughs, shakes her head and says, "What hasn't changed?"

Miss Bryant, 37, and her husband-manager Bob Green say the convention bookings dwindled to six last year, from an average of 150. They have been replaced by appearances before religious meetings and church gatherings.

She lost a lucrative television contract and even her annual appearance as TV host for Miami's Orange Bowl Parade.

She managed to keep her $100,000-a-year job touting the state's citrus industry despite an attempted boycott of Florida orange juice.

She says she is not bitter.

"My career has really been redirected, but I have to praise the Lord for that," she said in an interview Tuesday.

Anita Bryant

The former Miss Oklahoma of 1959 has turned her energies to her religious beliefs, which she says led her to oppose gay rights laws in cities across the country.

She works with her group, now gone nationwide and renamed Protect America's Children, which has given either technical or financial support to groups who successfully overturned homosexual rights ordinances in St. Paul, Minn., and Wichita, Kan.

A similar successful movement [illegible] Eugene, Ore., refused her aid.

The successes have had their cost. The butt of jokes, crank letters and threats, the Green family has become increasingly more safety-conscious.

On the road Miss Bryant and Green stay with church members rather than at hotels where demonstrators seek them out; at home, each member of the household carries a radio alarm that can summon police in minutes.

The worst incident occurred last year when a gay rights activist slapped a pie into Miss Bryant's face during a news conference in Iowa.

The entertainer says such tactics have left her both wary and hurt. She says her intentions have been misunderstood from the start.

Now she and Green plan an "Anita Bryant Ministry," a national hotline and halfway house for homosexuals who are seeking "deliverance" from their lifestyle.

"We've gotten an indication that there is a need from the mail we have received from young people into the lifestyle who want out," she said. "We certainly couldn't force it on anybody just as if I wouldn't want their particular lifestyle forced on me. You cannot force a way out on them unless they seek it."

Losing cost $3.1 million

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Campaign spending for Gov. Dolph Briscoe's losing re-election bid vaulted over the $3 million mark, according to campaign financial statements filed in the Secretary of State's office.

In reports filed by Briscoe's main campaign committee and 14 local fund-raising groups, expenditures totaled $3.1 million and contributions were $2.8 million.

Candidates who won primary races and will face opposition in November, such as Briscoe's opponent John Hill and Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements, did not have to file final primary election reports Monday but had the option of including finances from April 28 to May 31 in an Oct. 10 report.

However, Clements' campaign mailed a report late Monday, a campaign worker said Tuesday.

The last figures filed by Hill in April indicated his campaign committees had spent $881,997 and raised $1,066,050. Clements said in April he had raised $236,886 while spending $1,512,829.

Briscoe's main committee reported $983,500 in outstanding loans as of May 31, out of a total of $1,170,000 in borrowed funds. The loans were guaranteed by various supporters.

During the month ending May 31, Briscoe's campaigners raised $469,529 and spent $474,824. Of that amount, $160,000 was paid to the Richards Group, Inc. of Dallas for media expense and an additional $30,000 remains to be paid to the company.

Briscoe's campaign unleashed a heavy newspaper advertising pitch during the week before the primary.

Health care felt good, too costly, survey indicates

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Most Americans have confidence in the health care they receive but 82 percent believe they should be able to get the care for less money and two-thirds think doctors are overpaid, a new Louis Harris survey reported today.

"A recurring theme, therefore, which runs through much of this survey," the report said, "is the contrast between the very favorable views which most people hold about the quality of health care, and the unfavorable views they hold regarding the cost of health care.'

Specifically, mos Americans were found to be dissatisfied with co.ts in hospitals.

"They believe that the inflation of both doctors' fees and hospital charges is out of line with, and cannot be justified by, the improvements in the quality of care that have taken place over the last few years," the Harris report said.

In a legislative effort to cut soaring hospital costs, Rep. Paul Rogers, D-Fla., introduced a bill in Washington Tuesday that would combine voluntary industry controls and mandatory federal measures.

The plan would allow hospitals and doctors to curb costs within a certain period of time, but if they failed, federal controls would be triggered automatically.

The Harris survey was commissioned by Hospital Affiliates International, a $400 million-a-year hospital management firm with headquarters in Nashville, Tenn. The firm said it owns or manages 115 U.S. hospitals.

The purpose of the survey, a spokesman said, was to see what the public wants in health care then use the results to help health planning and to affect health legislation in Washington.

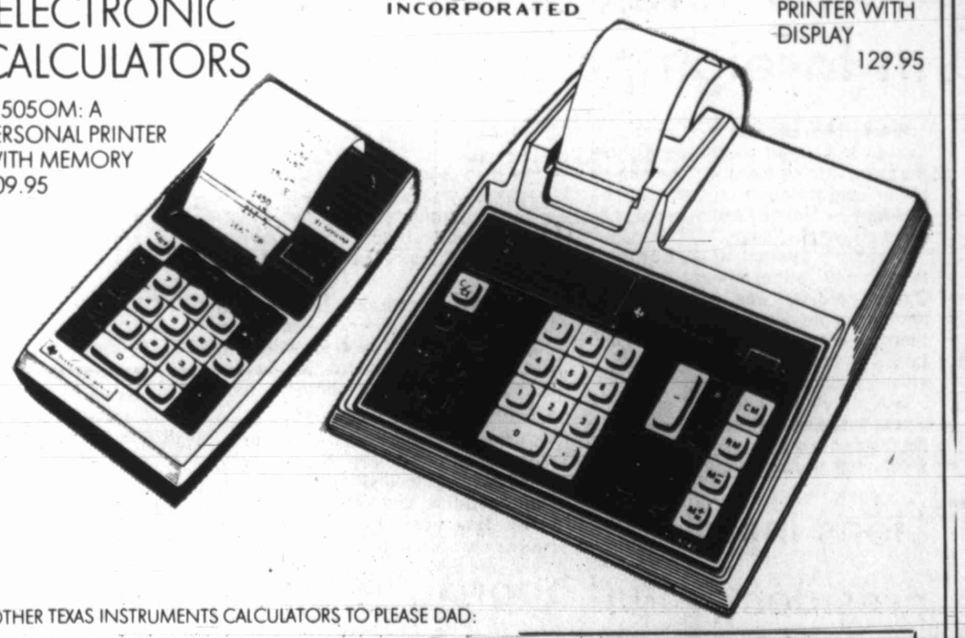

The public findings were based on interviews with a national cross-section of 1,503 adults during February and March. Such a survey is accurate within a margin of error of three percentage points in either direction 95 times out of 100, Harris says.

Plan may make tax reform easier

By The Associated Press

The passage of a sweeping property tax cut plan in California will make things easier for supporters of similar moves in other states, say the people who are backing the efforts for change.

"It will help us tremendously to get our proposal on the ballot," said Cal Williams, head of the Ada County Property Owners Association in Idaho. The association is one of several groups collecting petitions to get a measure on the November ballot limiting property taxes to 1 percent of market value.

Williams said the group has about 20,000 signatures so far and needs 26,000 by July 7 in order to get the proposal on the ballot. "I believe we've been picking up momentum in the last week and I think we're going to make it," said Williams.

Average per capita property taxes in fiscal 1976 ranged from $57 in Alabama to $1,048 in Alaska, according to the Tax Foundation Inc., a nonprofit research group.

A recent Associated Press-NBC News Poll showed 59 percent of those questioned felt the property taxes they paid were too high. Seventy-five percent of those surveyed said they agreed with the statement: "There should be a lid on property taxes, even if that means cutting back some government services."

An AP survey showed measures to eliminate or sharply curtail property taxes are under consideration in six states — Ohio, Montana, Michigan, Oregon, Pennsylvania and Nebraska — in addition to Idaho, although they are in varying stages of development.

In Ohio, for example, a committee is still pondering a proposal for a constitutional amendment to raise the state income tax and cut reliance on property taxes as a source of school financing.

Bills now in Pennsylvania's senate would abolish peoperty taxes as a way of financing public education, raise the state's 2.2 percent personal income tax and increase state funding for education, and raise the number of business taxes.

In Oregon, a petition drive is under way for a proposed constitutional amendment that would limit property taxes to 1½ percent of assessed valuation or, if the property has been sold since the last assessment, to 1½ percent of the sales price.

Rep. Al Shaw, a Republican from Roseburg, said the passage of California's Proposition 13 "will add fuel to our drive. It should give us a tremendous boost."

Richard Munn of the Legislative Revenue Office said the measure, if approved, would cut Oregon's average property tax of $22 for each $1,000 of assessed valuation to less than $15.

Montana Sen. Robert Watt, a Democrat from Missoula, said the California action "would indicate that the people are very unhappy about taxes."

Watt is supporting a petition drive on behalf of a measure that would abolish the property tax and replace it with a new tax on housing which would be based on income level. He said his plan differs from California's in that it "neither increases nor decreases the amount of revenue available. All this does is transfer all the taxes....to a person's adjusted gross income."

Michigan Taxpayers United for Tax Limitation is campaigning for an initiative that would limit any increase in state revenues to the increase in personal income and would require voter approval for increases in property taxes.

Unlike the California measure, it would not roll back existing taxes. "Ours is a far superior proposal," said Richard Headlee, president of the taxpayers' group. "It does not cause disruption of government."

Headlee said the California victory "will drive responsible officials into our camp because they have to realize ours is the only reasonable approach."

Gov. William Milliken and most other state officials oppose the proposal, saying it would merely shift the tax burden. "Everybody wants no more taxes," said William Marshall, president of the state AFL-CIO. "You have one hell of a time getting them to sit and listen to the cuts in services that would have to occur."

Jarvis labeled 'tea party's' hero

LOS ANGELES (AP) — They didn't look like revolutionaries, those screaming housewives, construction workers and assorted political novices, but they permitted no other description.

"You're damn right we feel like revolutionaries," said Dick Molinoy, a cigar-chewing swimming pool installer. "I'm here because this is American history being made. ... How do I feel about Howard Jarvis? He should be president. If he could cook, I'd marry him."

Howard Jarvis was the hero of the day as co-author of Proposition 13, an initiative limiting property taxes to 1 percent of market value and cutting property tax revenue by about $7 billion.

It swept to passage Tuesday by a thundering tide of taxpayers' outrage.

"Proposition 13 is a people's revolution," one little old woman exclaimed hoarsely. "This is our Boston Tea Party."

Many supporters wore tea-bags beneath their "Yes on 13" buttons.

At Proposition 13 headquarters at the Biltmore Hotel here, the crowd bubbled as each election report showed the initiative pulling further ahead. The excitement became barely controlled frenzy when Jarvis appeared. The screaming faithful greeted their hero with 10 minutes of unbroken adulation.

"This is a victory for freedom and liberty in the United States," Jarvis told his disciples. "This is a new revolution against the politicians and insensitive bureaucrats whose philosophy is spend, spend, spend ... tax, tax, tax.

"Don't be surprised if the politicians try to cut the heart out of Proposition 13," Jarvis said. "But to those politicians, I give this warning: We, the taxpayers, have spoken. Now we are watching you. To ignore us is political suicide."

Jarvis spoke of tax revolts in other states, saying the movement will "spread from Maine to California. Let's begin tomorrow to take our tax victory across the United States."

Paul Gann, co-sponsor of Proposition 13, said the victory showed "people have decided they are going to have to look after their own interests."

Across town, Proposition 13 opponents bemoaned what they called an emotional victory for the initiative, complaining that Jarvis exploited the angry mood of the California taxpayer. "The proponents of Proposition 13 have been very adept at tapping the public's frustrations and emotions," said Darlene Daniel, government finance director of the League of Women Voters.

Southside Lions complete annual mop, broom sale

The Midland Southside Lions Club has concluded its annual community wide mop and broom sale, termed the most successful ever.

The club members, in a two-week, house-to-house solicitation, sold $13,000 worth of mops and brooms, according to Lion Happy Bond, who added, "and that's a lot of mops and brooms."

He expressed appreciation on behalf of the club and its members to Midlanders for their excellent cooperation in and support of the fund-raising project. He said the club particularly is grateful to those persons who somehow were missed in the canvass but who placed orders by telephone.

Proceeds from the sale will be used by the club to fund its wide-ranging projects and activities during the coming year.

Judge refuses to lower bail, sets date for espionage trial

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Two Soviets who pleaded innocent to espionage charges are being held in lieu of $2 million bail each, despite assurances by the Soviet ambassador they would not flee if released under reduced bail.

After the two men entered innocent pleas at their arraignment Tuesday, U.S. District Judge Frederick Lacey rejected a defense argument that bail should be lowered.

The judge set Sept. 12 as the trial date on the conspiracy charges against Valdik Aleksandrovich Enger, 39, a political affairs officer at the United Nations Secretariat, and Rudolf Petrovich Chernyayev, 43, a Secretariat personnel officer.

They were arrested May 20 near the Garden State Parkway in nearby Woodbridge and charged with conspiring with a Soviet diplomat to obtain U.S. defense secrets by bribing a naval officer who had secret security clearance.

The officer, who was cooperating with the FBI, allegedly was paid $20,000 by the Soviets.

Vladimir Petrovich Zinyakin, the former third secretary of the Soviet U.N. mission, was named as an unindicted co-conspirator, but was not arrested because he possessed diplomatic immunity. He has left the country.

The judge refused to be swayed by two letters from Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, assuring the court the defendants would obey the provisions of reduced bail.

"I have been given no indication that Ambassador Dobrynin or the Soviet officials have any control over these defendants," Lacey said.

Defense attorney Donald Ruby, whose New York law firm also represents the Soviet mission in the United States, cited several cases in which other accused spies had been released on $100,000 bail after receiving a similar letter from the Soviet ambassador.

Midland outlets list gross sales

Gross sales for Midland County during the last quarter of 1977 totaled $250,974,065, according to a report released by the State Comptroller's Office.

Midland had 2,030 reporting outlets for the period.

State Comptroller Bob Bullock said gross sales for Texas for the last three months of 1977 totaled $51.7 billion compared to $43.3 billion for the last quarter of 1976.

The totals were subdivided into various classifications, such as agriculture, mining, food stores, retail outlets and eating and drinking places.

Carter takes tough line in foreign policy speech

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, in a major policy speech, told the Soviet Union today it "can choose either confrontation or cooperation" and find the United States prepared to meet either challenge.

Speaking against a backdrop of heightened superpower tensions, Carter said he was convinced the Soviet people want peace and that their government was trying "in good faith" to complete a treaty limiting strategic nuclear weapons.

But, by contrast, Carter said in a commencement address at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., the Soviets were exploiting instability in Africa as they try to expand their influence.

"To the Soviet Union," he said in his prepared remarks, "detente seems to mean a continuing aggressive struggle for political advantage and increased influence in a variety of ways."

Detente — accommodation between the two superpowers — must be "truly reciprocal," he said, with both the United States and the Soviet Union exercising restraint in troubled areas and in turbulent times.

Carter's speech, touted by his principal advisers as clarifying U.S. attitudes toward the Soviet Union, mixed both hard-line and conciliatory gestures. He consulted with Zbigniew Brzezinski, his national security adviser, and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, among others, in preparing it.

The speech went through several drafts and was certain to be read closely in allied and friendly capitals for insights into evolving U.S. policies abroad.

An administration official, briefing reporters before Carter flew to Annapolis for the ceremony, said completion of arms control agreements and peaceful solutions to African conflicts depended on the Soviet Union as well as the United States.

"The choice is not entirely up to us," said the official, who could not be identified under ground rules for the briefing.

Asked why Carter had concluded an outline of his foreign policy views was necessary now, the official denied there was any "difference in perception" among the various parts of the administration.

Rather, he said, "there may have been some feeling here some folks were inclined to be going off the deep end." He said he meant reporters.

The potential impact on Moscow was hard to assess. The Russians have rebutted administration accusations until now, training their fire principally on Brzezinski, who accused them of breaking "the code of detente."

Lions install president

The Rev. W. Jerry Pitman was installed as president of the Greenwood Lions Club at its officer installation meeting held Monday in the Greenwood Baptist Church.

Other officers installed include Roy Graham, Pat Anderson and Max Dickerson, vice presidents; Chris King, secretary-treasurer; Butch Price, Lion Tamer, and Leroy Ledford, tailtwister.

T. L. "Happy" Bond, deputy governor of District 2-A1, Lions International, and a member of the Midland Southside Lions Club, was the installing officer.

Rodeo to begin

ANDREWS — The four-day Andrews Rodeo, sponsored by the Andrews County Sheriff's Posse, gets under way at 8 p.m. today in the Andrews Rodeo Arena north of town and off U.S. Hwy. 385.

The rodeo is sanctioned by the American Junior Rodeo Association.

A downtown parade featuring riding clubs was to be held at 4:30 p.m. today to help pull the crowds to the show. Among the riders in the parade was to be Kelly Stewart, the 1978 rodeo queen.

South Africa opens score of playhouses to all races

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — In a major move to desegregate live entertainment, the South African government has opened 26 of the nation's leading stage theaters to all races.

The decision, under consideration for several months, was announced last week in Parliament by the minister of community development, Marais Steyn.

It was immediately hailed by South Africa's leading stage performers and playhouse owners as a significant breakthrough after years of appeals to allow racially mixed audiences.

"It will make life in the theater so much more bearable," said Pieter Toerien, who runs three Johannesburg theaters with actress Shirley Firth. "I can see those big actors from overseas coming out to South Africa now."

Many foreign actors and actresses have refused to perform here in recent years because of their opposition to the segregation of theater audiences. Some foreign playwrights have refused permission for their plays to be performed in South Africa, which has an official policy of apartheid — meaning the separation of races.

TaubieHushlik, who is regarded as the grand dame of South African theater, said she was delighted by the decision.

"It is the most wonderful thing that could have happened," she said. "At last we can hold our heads up."

The decision is another in a series of moves to dismantle minor social barriers within the scope of apartheid but there is no evidence it means the government is backing off from its whites-only policy in national politics and its general philosophy of the separation of races.

Officially, the nation's 18 million blacks are regarded as citizens of tribal homelands, constituting 13 percent of the nation's land area with no political rights in "white" South Africa.

Movie theaters are not affected by the decision and remain segregated. Key cities that so far do not have integrated playhouses include Pretoria, the capital; East London, Kimberley and Bloemfontein.

The decision applies to 12 theaters in Johannesburg, four in Durban, two in Cape Town, two in Pietermaritzburg, two in Stellenbosch, one in George, one in Somerset West, one in Grahamstown and one in Port Elizabeth.

Midland jury awards couple $100,000 in damage suit

A judgement of $100,000 was awarded to Louise Culver and her husband, Conner, today by a Midland jury as the result of a damage suit filed against Los Patios Enterprises Inc. and Los Patios Restaurant.

The firm was found to be "negligent in the mismanagement of a flambe," according to the jury's decision.

A flambe is a food served covered with a flaming brandy or other liquor.

Mrs. Culver had contended that she received severe burns over 10 percent of her body as a result of the flambe flaming out of control.

The Culvers had asked for $275,000 for alleged suffering, loss of earning capacity and Mr. Culver's alleged loss of the "companionship and society of his wife."

In its response to the plaintiffs' petition, the restaurant contended that Mrs. Culver had failed to exercise "ordinary care."

In testimony Tuesday, Dr. Reed Collins, Mrs. Culver's family physician, was called as a defense witness. Under questioning by defense attorney James Boldrick, Collins said he had never treated Mrs. Culver for burn injuries, and that he had noticed no deterioration in her general health since the March 16, 1976, incident.

Mrs. Culver testified earlier she had undergone treatment for burn injuries under another doctor, and had undergone two operations for burn injuries.

West Pointers who admitted cheating to graduate

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. Military Academy rings down the final curtain on its historic honor code scandal today by graduating 86 cadets who received an unprecedented second chance to become Army officers after they admitted cheating on their engineering homework.

The 176-year-old institution had a record 948 graduates.

A number of the 86 who were readmitted — most of whom declined to be named — maintained in interviews before the ceremony that West Point still teaches lessons of expediency and hypocrisy for survival despite radical reforms brought on by the scandal.

"It stinks," one graduate said of the honor system. "It's rotten, worse than it ever was. I came back to the same stuff because people are people. I don't care what they do around here — it's not going to be the way they want it to be."

Said another, "I think things are changing for the better, but I don't think it's as good as it should be. They still have the archaic honor system, which is the root of the problem."

Gen. Bernard Rogers, Army chief of staff and the main commencement speaker, obliquely referred to the 1976 scandal in his prepared remarks, most of which were devoted to a defense of the volunteer Army. Speaking of the Class of 1978, which absorbed 92 of the disgraced cadets, Rogers declared:

"It has known some turbulent times, has dealt with some difficult challenges — some unprecedented in nature — and it has performed in a most impressive manner."

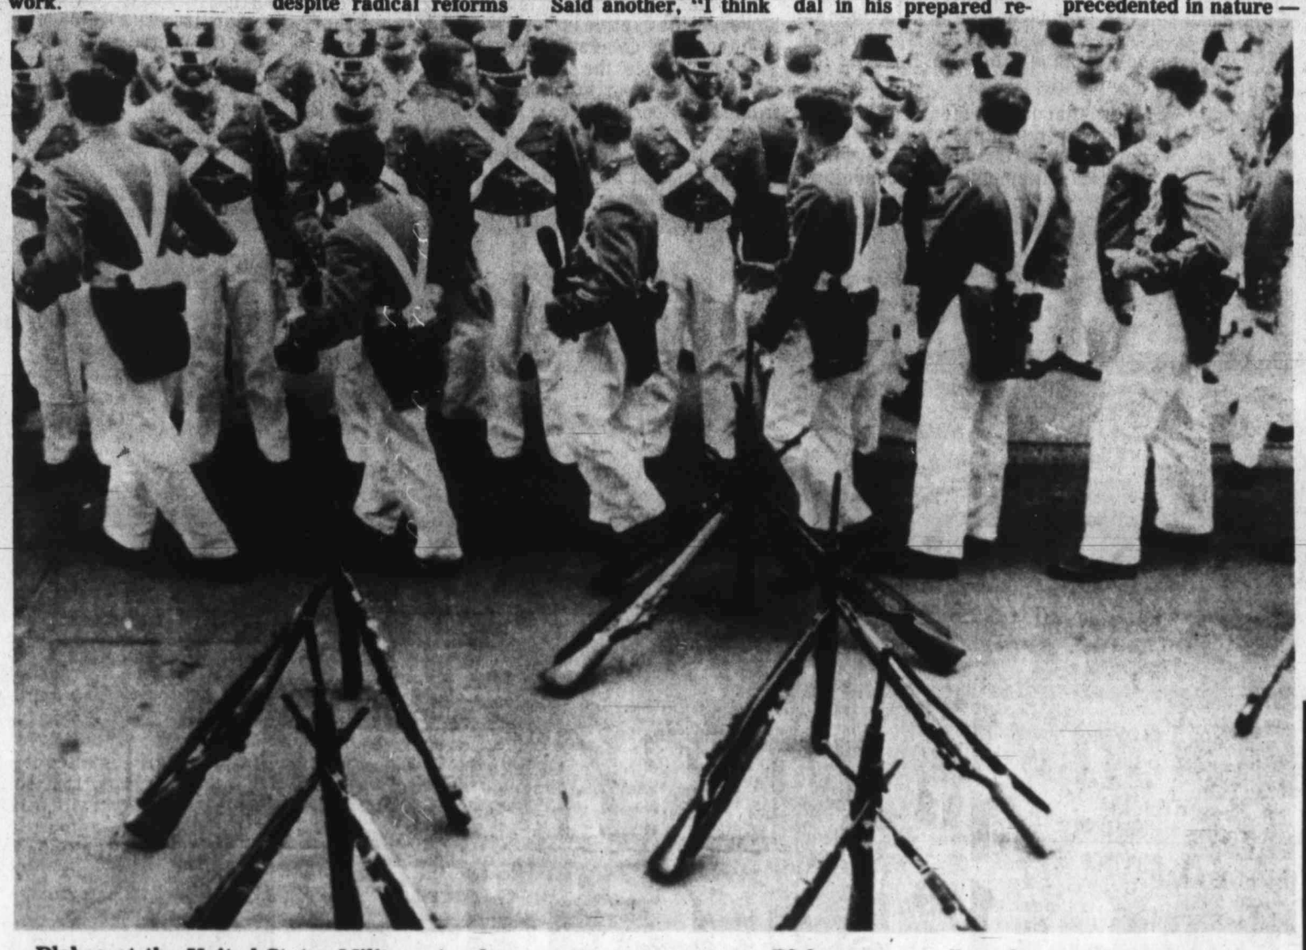

The chief of staff also said in his prepared remarks that West Point had given the graduates "a moral compass by which to chart your paths ahead."

To a man, the cadets interviewed said they encountered no overt hostility in the past year. To a man, not one would say for sure that he would stay in the Army beyond the required five years. Nearly all said the summer of scandal and the year of suspension matured them.

Of the 152 cadets who left in the wake of widespread collaboration on engineering homework, 98 returned after a bitter battle with the Pentagon to avoid dismissal. Of the 92 who entered the Class of 1978, five must remain for summer school. One awaits separation for conduct deficiencies.

The cadet who blew the whistle on the scandal, Timothy Ringgold, said he was glad he did. "It's been good for me and it's been definitely good for the corps," said Ringgold. He said the institution is "healthy and getting healthier" because it now concedes it has problems.

Attorney Michael Rose of Minneapolis last week accused 25 cadets of failing to pay him $15,233 of almost $37,000 in fees and expenses for his work.

Plebes at the United States Military Academy at West Point, wearing hats, hear the first words from upper classmen Tuesday after the parade on the grounds of the campus. Plebes are not allowed to speak to upper classmen during their first year. 948 are to graduate from the academy in ceremonies today. (AP Laserphoto)

Beef prices may continue to rise until autumn, Agriculture says

WASHINGTON (AP) — It may well be fall before beef prices stop rising and return to current levels, says the Agriculture Department as it sends out more bad news for shoppers already burdened with price increases on most other goods.

That bad news and another department report Tuesday indicate that supermarkets, food processors and wholesalers by mid-spring were not yet passing on to consumers the full impact of higher raw-product farm prices.

The lag, which can extend to two months for some foods, is traditional and officials of the president's Council on Wage and Price Stability still expect the middlemen to catch up this summer before food prices moderate in the fall.

But the higher beef-price forecast is a new wrinkle that could prompt reassessment of other inflation predictions.

The Agriculture Department's World Food and Agricultural Outlook and Situation Board predicted on Tuesday that average 1978 beef prices to consumers would rise 20 percent above the 1977 averages and those paid producers could grow 33 percent. This could mean more grocery shopping misery next year.

As the board noted, President Carter is considering whether to allow more foreign beef, used for hamburger and processed meats mostly, to enter the country this year "as a possibility for tempering some of the rise in meat prices."

The White House said a decision is expected very soon. The National Farmers Organization and Rep. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, warned Tuesday that "making the United States a dumping ground for surplus beef" would again wreck the beef producers' market.

Government economists have been saying that world beef supplies are not excessive and allowing more imports would only trim consumer prices by about 5 cents a pound by the end of the year.

The 1977 averages used in the department's forecast are $1.38 a pound at retail for a wide selection of choice grade cuts and $40 per 100 pounds for 900-pound to 1,100-pound choice steers at Omaha.

Some imports listed as part of 'vanishing breed'

By FRANK MACOMBER
Copley News Service

The American auto industry is disturbed by reports that some popular U.S.-made imports may vanish from dealer showrooms in the next few years.

Ford Motor Co.'s Ford Division general sales manager, Bernard L. Crumpton, has told Copley News Service the reports are premature — without flatly denying them.

Some auto experts have listed the endangered species as "captive imports" — models built abroad but sold in this country by U.S. automakers. They include the German-made Ford Fiesta; the Japanese-made Buick Opel, Dodge Charger and Colt, and the Plymouth Arrow and Sapporo.

Ironically, the scenario goes, these models may disappear because their fuel economy is so good. Here's the rationale:

Government agencies for many years have enforced stiff safety and emission standards for the auto industry. And beginning with the 1978 model years, fuel mileage levels are being enforced as well.

Each company's 1978 cars must achieve a combined city-and-highway average of 18 miles per gallon, as measured by Environmental Protection Agency test methods and calculated by a complicated mathematical formula.

The standard demands a 19-mpg average of 1979 cars, 20 mpg for 1980 and a gradual climb to 27.5 mpg for 1985 autos.

Now, that doesn't mean all 1978 cars must deliver 18 mpg. A company can continue to sell less efficient cars if he also can sell enough fuel-economical autos to maintain an 18-mpg average across its entire line.

So, for example, for every three Dodge Colts with manual transmission Chrysler sells, it also can sell two Plymouth Furys with 440-cubic-inch V-8s and still average 18 mpg.

And for every Ford Fiesta that Ford sells, it can peddle two Lincoln Continental Mark V's with 400-cubic-inch V-8s.

Beginning with the 1980 model year, however, the captive imports won't be counted in a domestic automaker's average. Hence the prediction that many such imports will be missing from sales floors two years from now.

Beginning with the 1980 model year, however, the captive imports won't be counted in a domestic automaker's average. Hence the prediction that many such imports will be missing from sales floors two years from now.

Ford, for instance, won't want Americans to buy imported 1980 Fiestas instead of its domestic Ford Pintos or Mercury Bobcats. For every such sale, Ford's fuel-mileage average would suffer.

The rub so far as the motorist is concerned is this: When a car model, especially an import, vanishes from the marketplace, parts and service generally become tougher to find. And resale values usually drop sharply.

But Crumpton says this is overstating the case.

"Only a portion (75,226 to be exact) of the more than 120,000 Fiestas we expect to sell in the United States this year can be counted in determining our corporate average fuel economy (CAFE)," he points out. "And while CAFE was a consideration, it was not the primary reason behind our decision to import the Fiesta."

Researcher discovers the 'charmed life' of common house fly

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

Buzzing annoyingly around your head in that distinctively contemptuous manner of his, the house fly seems to have a charmed life. No matter how hard man has tried to eradicate him, he's managed to outwit every scheme.

In fact, so foxy is he that scientists have had to re-think even such simple questions as "What is a dead fly?"

"We've had to define death in new terms for insects," Tom Miller, an entomologist at the University of California's Riverside campus, pointed out. "Loss of a small but vital section in the insect's nervous system has become our new yardstick of measurement," he said. "If a house fly can't fly — and, therefore, can't migrate to a place to eat — then it's dead."

Miller's laboratory is probing deeper than ever before into the mystery of how insecticides work, even to the point of connecting electrodes to a tethered fly and forcing him to walk on a miniature treadmill so his nervous system can be monitored.

He's trying to find out why the common house fly seems to survive one insecticide after another.

"Unless we can find out it's pretty hard to figure out how to improve them," he explained.

Significantly, he pointed out, after 30 years of insecticide development, there still are no endangered species of fly, mosquito or cockroach.

"Yet, without the insecticidal control we have," he added, "we would have lost 50 percent of our crops of cotton and vegetables. Mortality due to insect-carried diseases, such as malaria, would have increased 100 times."

Miller's studies are the only known experiments that work with living, intact flies. He records and charts the fly subject's response to poisonings by recording nerve impulses from brain to the flight muscles.

And, surprisingly, he has found that even after the fly has gone through characteristic convulsions and appears dead, its nervous system still seems to function normally.

The UC-Riverside entomologist uses sublethal doses of insecticide on his subjects and after 24 hours he identifies for further study those that are halfway between death and being incapable of flying. These flies can hop a little but they can't manage flight.

"Something has gone wrong and they have lost the ability to use their flight motors," he pointed out, "even though our electrodes show that their reflexes from each of the six legs to each of the 26 flight muscles still work perfectly."

House fly nervous systems then, Miller has found, are more complex than man had thought. A fly begins to fly, for example, when it loses contact with the ground — thus the hop before takeoff.

"As long as its feet are touching something," he said, "the insect will not beat its wings, even if it is suspended."

It also is necessary he pointed out, to understand that fly organs are not interdependent, such as are man's. A fly's heart, for instance, beats from zero to 300 times a minute, always fluctuating wildly. It's only when the beat steadies at a constant 175 beats a minute that death is near.

But not only are they resilient, they are normally short-lived and reproduce, as a result, in high numbers. And the more flies in one generation that are killed, the sturdier are the survivors and the offspring, Miller says.

"Insecticides," Miller pointed out, "have to penetrate the insect's skeletal structure — which is on the outside of its body — and then the poison has to remain active despite efforts of the insect's metabolism to break it down. And it has to be potent enough to kill."

Case loser in New Jersey; Cleveland schools lose

By DAVE GOLDBERG
Associated Press Writer

"Enough," California voters told their tax collectors, and the echo of frustration skipped across the country, helping to dump four-term Sen. Clifford Case in New Jersey and denying money to Ohio's largest school districts.

While California voters were overwhelmingly approving a cut in their property taxes by 57 percent Tuesday, New Jersey Republicans turned out the 74-year-old Case in favor of 34-year-old Jeffrey Bell, who favors a 30 percent cut in federal income taxes.

It was the busiest political day of this non-presidential election year and there were a number of noteworthy victories.

They included:

—The victory by former basketball star Bill Bradley in the Democratic Senate race in New Jersey;

—The nomination of Wayne Hays, the former Congressional power in a Democratic primary for a seat in the Ohio House;

—The victory of state Attorney General Evelle Younger over former Los Angeles Police Chief Ed Davis in the California Republican gubernatorial primary;

—The easy win by Rep. Max Baucus over appointed Sen. Paul Hatfield in Montana's Democratic Senate primary.

—Mississippi's first competitive Senate race in 30 years, in which Gov. Cliff Finch and lawyer Maurice Dantin qualified for the June 27 Democratic runoff, and Rep. Thad Cochran won the Republican race.

But the theme of the day was taxes. Voters in Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio, overwhelmingly rejected new tax levies that school officials said were necessary to keep their systems running next year.

And if California's tax rebellion — the approval of controversial Proposition 13 — was expected, the Republican primary in New Jersey was not.

Case, who has one of the most liberal records among Senate Republicans, had been expected to win easily against Bell. A former aide to Ronald Reagan who had campaign help from former Treasury Secretary William Simon and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, Bell was unknown statewide.

But he had one issue — his tax cut proposal, which an AP-NBC News Election day poll showed was important to half the peopbe who voted for him. Bell claimed that was the reason for his win. "From coast to coast, the American people are building to a tidal wave of tax revolt," he said. "They are saying enough."

But Bell also benefited from one of the lightest turnouts ever in a New Jersey GOP primary, meaning that conservatives with the most ardent interest in voting were the most likely to show up at the polls. Case conceded afterward he may have taken Bell's challenge too lightly.

Bell will now face Bradley, the former Rhodes scholar and New York Knickerbocker star who easily defeated former State Treasurer Richard Leone in the Democratic primary. Bradley capitalized on his image as a celebrity and the campaign help of celebrity friends — Robert Redford, Dustin Hoffman, Jack Nicholson, Paul Simon, Willis Reed. As of now, he is a heavy favorite for November.

California's property tax cut won by a vote of nearly 2-to-1. It puts a ceiling of 1 percent on taxes; rolls back assessments to 1975 levels and limits assessment increases to 2 percent. Opponents had charged it would curtail local government services and lead to thousands of public employe layoffs.

It was a major issue in the governor's race. Gov. Edmund Brown Jr., who adamantly opposed it, had only token opposition in the Democratic primary. But Younger and Davis, who both favored Proposition 13, ran 1-2 in the GOP primary against Assemblyman Ken Maddy and San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, who both opposed it.

In other races:

MONTANA: Baucus' win over Hatfield puts him up against 35-year-old investment banker Larry Williams, who won the Republican primary for the Senate. Tippi Huntley, widow of newscaster Chet Huntley, was locked in a tight race for a Republican Congressional nomination.

OHIO: The school tax votes and Hays victory overshadowed easy wins by Gov. James Rhodes in the GOP gubernatorial primary and Lt. Gov. Richard Celeste on the Democratic side.

IOWA: Former Lt. Gov. Roger Jepsen defeated state Commerce Commissioner Maurice Van Nostrand for the Republican Senate nomination. He will face Sen. Dick Clark, who faced only token opposition. Republican Gov. Robert Ray won renomination and will face Jerome Fitzgerald, who won the Democratic primary.

NEW MEXICO: Joe Skeen, who lost four years ago to Gov. Jerry Apodaca, won the Republican primary for governor and will face former Gov. Bruce King, the Democratic victor. Apodaca, a Democrat, cannot succeed himself.

SOUTH DAKOTA: Rep. Larry Pressler, a Republican, and Democrat Don Barnett will meet in November for the Senate seat being vacated by retiring Democratic Sen. James Abourezk. Democratic State Sen. Roger McKellips and Republican Attorney General William Janklow won gubernatorial nominations.

CALIFORNIA: In lesser races, Rep. Yvonne Braithwaite Burke, a familiar face at two Democratic National Conventions, held a narrow lead in the Democratic primary for attorney general. Mike Curb, leader of a singing group, was running ahead in the Republican primary for lieutenant governor.

President's resignation on agenda

BIG SPRING — The Big Spring Independent School District Board of Trustees is scheduled to consider a letter of resignation from board President Roy Watkins at its regular meeting at 5:15 p.m. Thursday in the administration building.

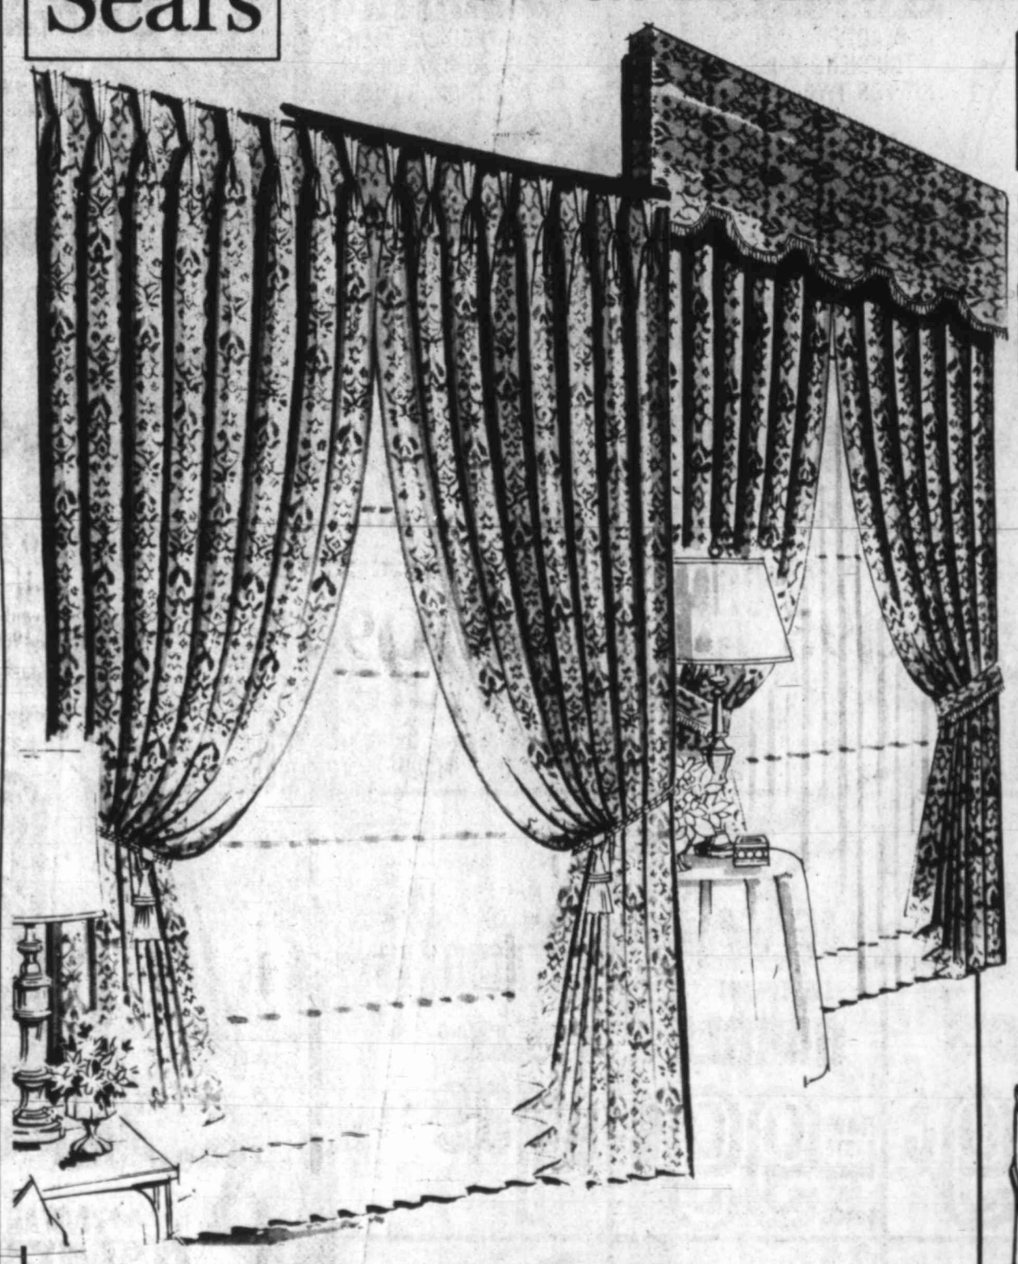

Schools Superintendent Lynn Hise said he preferred to "reserve comment" on the matter until the board meets. Although he would not specify why Watkins wished to resign, he did say the board president has served about 11 years as a trustee.

In addition, the trustees are expected to discuss repairs to the choir room at Big Spring High School, which earlier was damaged by fire, and relocation of portable classroom buildings. An executive session to consider personnel matters also is on the agenda.

Other business of the board includes renewal of a contract with the West Texas Educational Service Center at Midland Regional Airport and consideration of Social Security resolutions.

Elephants, farmers vie for land areas of Kenya

By DAVID LAMB
The Los Angeles Times

MWEIGA, Kenya — Panicked and enraged, the 200 elephants thundered across the plateau like a regiment of tanks, crashing through trees, fences, even villages. The earth seemed to tremble.

Dust clouds swirled into the early-morning mist and the trumpeting herd turned up the wooded valley, the calves struggling to keep up, the bulls and cows scrambling just ahead of the helicopter that hovered at treetop level with police siren screaming.

Darting to and fro overhead, warden Tedd Goss used the helicopter as a trail boss would have used his horse in an Old West cattle drive. He nudged the herd along, headed strays back into the group, picked out suitable terrain ahead and gave commands to the elephant drovers on the ground.

"There's a mob trying to break off to the south," he radioed. "I don't want that ... Okay, Bongo One, that's far enough with the vehicles. Leave them there to block. Phil, what have you got up there?"

Two thousand feet above, Phil Snyder, a warden from Berkeley, Calif., floated in lazy circles in his single-engine spotter plane, a floppy brown hat perched on his head, his long brown hair tied in a bun, a roll of toilet paper on the control panel to cope with a nagging cold.

"What you see here," Snyder said to a passenger, "is the cutting edge of a conservation conflict that's just beginning Kenya's committed to preserving its wildlife and also to becoming self-sufficient in food production.

"They're ambitious goals. But as the marginal land gets settled and farmers and wildlife compete for what land is left, Kenya is going to have to make a national choice. The question is, can Kenya accommodate both?"

Eventually, the elephants themselves may provide the answer. Of all the African game, they are the most susceptible to the pressures of man. And as of now they are succumbing to those pressures.

According to the World Wildlife Fund, Kenya, which had 70,000 elephants in 1973, has only half that number today. Elephants are still found in 30 African countries, and they number about 1.3 million in all, but they are on the decline almost everywhere.

Once great herds of elephants roamed these fertile Central Highlands in the foothills of snow-capped Mt. Kenya. Then, early in the century, British farmers came to settle and fence and cultivate and hunt the land. Slowly, the elephants were forced into the sparsely populated ranges around Samburu, 50 miles or so to the north.

But in 1969 drought devastated the rangelands. In 1973 the price of ivory shot sky-high, and Somali poachers, operating with local cooperation, decimated the herds. In 1974 — the year a ban on elephant hunting went into effect — Kenya licensed an American to capture and export to Nigeria 50 calves, an operation that threw the matriarchal herd into confusion and trauma.

So the elephants began migrating again to escape the two-legged predators, this time back to the Central Highlands. Last December 1,500 elephants started moving down the Ewaso Ngiro River from Samburu. By the time they reached Mweiga the protest of angry farmers were being debated in the chambers of Parliament and the Ministry of Agriculture was threatening to poison the whole herd. As a result, the Kenyan Game Department recently began herding the elephants out of the farmland and back into the national parks.

"I'm jolly well pleased they're moving the elephants out of here," said Mickie Ferandes, the manager of a 10,000-acre farm settled by his father-in-law in 1919.

"I lost 17 miles of fencing, and that costs 1,000 shillings ($125) a mile to repair. I planted maize three times and lost each crop. Now I'm going to have to graze it off with the cattle. And the breeding's been peculiar with the fences down and the cattle mixing with each other."

The farmers' plight has been exacerbated by a diminishing supply of new and fertile land in Kenya and a dramatic increase in Kenya's wildlife population during the past year. Wildlife experts attribute the increase to this season's unusually heavy rainfall and to a national hunting and shooting ban that was instituted in May of 1977.

But can Kenya, a developing country, afford the loss in agricultural production caused by the wildlife outside the national parks and at the same time preserve its wildlife, which is the backbone of a $100 million-a-year tourist industry?

Most farmers and some conservationists say no, not unless landowners can cull the game on their property as they did before the shooting ban. With the huge white-owned holdings slowly being subdivided into five- and 10-acre African-owned farms, they say, the land can no longer support man and beast without some controls. Additionally, the European had the capital to absorb wildlife damage to his crops; the small African farmer does not.

"The African won't look after the game," farmer Ferandes said. "He can't afford to if he's got only a small plot. As soon as this farm is sold to a cooperative and split up into little blocks, he'll kill everything, even the little dik-dik (a small antelope). You'll lose the whole blooming lot."

It is true that wildlife conservation in Kenya remains largely in white hands, and that the African has been slower than the European to recognize wildlife as a national resource. The reason is no more complex than economic survival.

Many — probably most—teen-age Kenyans have never been in a national park and have never seen an elephant or a lion. They don't have the $4 entrance fee, they don't have a car and they certainly don't have the $35 to stay in one of the posh lodges owned by European hotel chains. In short, the Europeans, not the Africans, are the people who are traditionally exposed to Kenya's wildlife heritage.

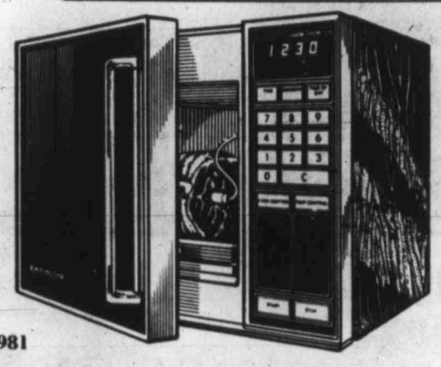

But that is changing. The wildlife clubs of Kenya, for instance, have grown to a school-age membership of 26,000 in the last decade, and it was the students' public demonstrations that helped bring about the ban last February on the sale of ivory and wildlife trophies and souvenirs.

"There never was any question of the Africans' interest in wildlife, but they've had little access to it," said Sandy Price, a New York fashion designer who came to Kenya nine years ago and is acting director of the African Wildlife Leadership Foundation.

Kenya's attempts to save its wildlife, aided by a $17 million World Bank loan, have been among the most dramatic undertaken in Africa. But the battle is far from won, and some conservation experts believe that as the pressure for land increases, the wildlife's only chance of survival is in the national parks. Even in those sanctuaries its greatest menace is still man.

NASA device developed to control wasted energy

By FRANK MACOMBER
Copley News Service

Not all the federal space agency's activities are unearthly.

For instance, a space engineer at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, Huntsville, Ala., says millions of electric motors used in the United States may be devouring far more electricity than they require. Frank J. Nola believes as much as 10 to 20 percent of this power could be saved. Maybe even more. And Nola has figured out a way to do it.

He says the problem with common AC (alternating current) induction motors is that a substantial percentage of the power they consume is cast off in the form of heat. Not only is it wasted but the process triggers similar heat losses out of transmission lines all the way back to the power station, he claims.

"Take a washing machine motor," Nola says. "It may need nearly 125 volts to operate under a heavy load. When it's working hard it probably is using about 430 watts of power at that voltage. But of the 430 watts, 250 is going to do the work, and 180 watts are lost in heat.

"When the motor runs unloaded, while water is filling the washer, for example, the total power used drops to about 160 watts. But almost all this is going to heat loss. Even when the motor is only idling, heat loss is scarcely reduced at all."

The reason, says Nola, is that even when idling, the motor still has 125 volts applied to it, creating the same current flow and resulting heat loss as when it's working hard.

Now any electrical engineer can tell you that a motor doesn't always need 125 volts. The voltage required varies constantly with the work the motor is doing. But voltage is supplied to your home at a fixed level. Hence, says Nola, vast amounts of power are wasted in millions of electric motors every day.

What to do about it?

Nola has invented an inexpensive yet revolutionary device he calls a power factor controller.

The device constantly determines the load being carried by the motor to which it is attached by sensing shifts in the relationship between voltage and current flowing to the motor.

When it senses a light load, it cuts back the voltage level going to the motor to the minimum required for the job. Current flow drops as well, reducing the wasted power going to heat loss, Nola explains.

With a power factor controller on a washing machine, the overall power use of an unloaded motor drops from 160 to about 55 watts. That's when the motor is idling.

Savings are less for a loaded motor, Nola conceded. But, because most motors never need the full 125 volts provided to your house, the controller still can save about 8 percent of the power used, even when the motor is operating under a heavy load, he says.

The energy savings possible for larger motors are even more dramatic.

"A good example," Nola says, "would be an escalator in a department store. Its big motor always uses a relatively large amount of power to move the escalator, even when only one or two people are riding on it.

"The voltage coming in is always the amount needed to move many dozens of people."

"A controller would limit voltage to only that amount required to move the exact number of people using the escalator at any given time."

Nola got the idea for his controller while he was working on a NASA solar heating and cooling project.

Himmicane supporter seeking equal time on titles, as well

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

I am happy for my side of the species (though my own particular given name is not soon due the honor) that we have moved toward parity with women in the province of tropical disturbances.

This year, storms arising from the Pacific tropics will be named for men as well as women. Fvery other storm will be a male, with male and female names alternating for the first storm each year.

There is still work to be done. The institution of the practice remains only "a probability" for Atlantic storms of 1979, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA).

I am proposing, therefore, formation of a lobbyist organiztion — Men Aren't Mice Anymore (MAMA)— that will represent us not only at the doorstep of NOAA, but in other maritime administrations where feminism is too firmly entrenched.

We should push for a few "he" ships.

They have always been "she" — even the military vessels that swagger with masculinity.

And American whalers, at least, should be required to determine the quarry's sex before just arbitrarily roaring, "Thar she blows!"

But, those are other campaigns. For the moment, I am content in the knowledge that the evening is not far distant (if MAMA does its work) when I'll hear Walter Cronkite say, "Winds swirling around the Atlantic'a second tropical depression of the season intensified to 75 miles per hour this morning, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration christened it "Himmicane Bob." Well, sure, "himmicane.' If we settle only for the name, we've won just half the battle. We want the title that goes with it. "Hurricane Bob?" Not on your life, fella.

As I understand it, women's groups actually have been playing into MAMA's hands all along, by their own pressure on NOAA to use men's names for hurr- ... uh, himmicanes. Perhaps they also will stand four-square with MAMA in its demand for title rights.

In return, it is only equitable that we recommend to NOAA a new adaptability of the names by which tropical storms are known in the Pacific quadrants. They all smack too sharply of masculinity (though I'd wager their roots are feminine).

Thus, we would have "Typhoon Norman," but "Typhene Iris," "Cyclone Cyrus," but "Cyclana Rose;" "Chubasco Roscoe," but "Chubasca Carlotta." And for every "maelstrom," let there be a "femaelstrom."

Pleased as I am that men finally are being allowed to identify with one of the most powerful forces on earth, I still must admit to a certain sense of inadequacy. I'm not sure we can fill the women's shoes, here.

It's the nature of the beast: Dark, romantic, springing, from warm, heavy air above deep, mysterious waters.

FORT STOCKTON — The bodies of two Pecos County men were found Tuesday morning by law enforcement officials near the Pecos County Coliseum.

Felix Rodriquez, 24, of Fort Stockton and Guadalupe Jiminez, of Pecos were found shot to death.

The search for the bodies, which were located about 500 yards north of the Pecos County Coliseum and 150 to 160 yards northeast of the Pecos Highway, began after Arizona authorities notified Pecos County law officers of a possible double murder following the arrest of four Pecos County residents in that state.

It was reported the officers think Rodriquez first was beaten and then shot in the head while Jiminez was shot several times in the head. A total of 13 shots were fired from a .22-caliber weapon, said police. Rodriquez' hands were tied behind his back with an electric extension cord.

The investigation is being led by the Pecos County Sheriff's Department with cooperation and aid from the Fort Stockton Police Department, Texas Rangers and DPS officers.

Guns and jewels taken in burglaries

Theft of guns and jewelry in separate burglaries were reported Tuesday to Midland Police.

Fred Montez of 302 E. Hickory St. told police someone had entered his house through the rear kitchen door and had taken a watch valued at $350 and a pearl necklace estimated at $35.

Enrollment record possible at Midland

With late registration still under way at Midland College, a first summer session enrollment record seems assured, according to Registrar Dee Windsor.

More than 800 students have completed their registration so far. Currently, the record enrollment is 841 students, set in 1976. Last summer, 773 students enrolled at the college for the first summer session.

Midland College officials Tuesday counted 823 students who earlier signed up for the summer session. Late registration and extension center classes in Fort Stockton and Big Lake are expected to push the final total near 1,000.

Windsor said late registration will continue from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Thursday and Monday in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building. For more information, persons may call 684-7851, extension 166.

Coma retains hold

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese doctors have failed to bring Harriet Rosenberg out of a 17-month coma, and her husband says she probably will spend the rest of her life in an American nursing home.

"Japan was my last hope ... There's nothing more that can be done. She will be put in a nursing home, probably for the rest of her life," said Ted Rosenberg, 38, of Monroe, N.Y.

Rosenberg, who is taking his wife back to the United States next week, said she "has no willful motion of her own. Harriet gives the appearance of someone who is blind, deaf and paralyzed — a human vegetable."

He said it will cost $21,000 a year to keep her in a nursing home.

"It's not the end of a nightmare," he said. "It's only just begun."

Mrs. Rosenberg, 34-year-old mother of two, went into the coma after a traffic accident on Jan. 25, 1977. Her husband is suing the other driver.

East West relations face Africa test

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S.-East German relations have moved slowly from a Cold War freeze to a cool correctness. And now there is Africa.

East German Foreign Minister Oskar Fischer, in a speech Tuesday before the National Press Club, denied any military involvement by his country in Africa.

Asked about a statement by Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security adviser, that not only Cuba and the Soviet Union but East Germany might have helped support the rebel invasion of Zaire's Shaba province, Fischer rep⅞/d: "Something that is not true does not become tue by repetition."

Fischer emphasized that events in Zaire were an internal matter. "I find that any external interference cn make (such situations) more complicated," he said.

Fischer's one-day appearance in Washington was a big political step for the communist East German government after four years of low-key diplomatic relations with the United States.

He is the highest-level East German official to visit here at the invitation of the U.S. government. The continuing African debate, overshadowing East-West relations as a whole, was a coincidence in timing.

At best, it is difficult to assess East Germany's real role in Africa.

Informed sources, who asked not to be identified, said the East German presence there is "not insignificant" and is concentrated in Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Libya.

The sources said the activity is mostly economic, though there have been reports of East Germans providing arms training of internal security forces.

Essentially, Fischer's speech was a repetition of slogans and policy positions as unyielding and longstanding as his country's efforts to gain worldwide diplomatic recognition.

"He didn't budge an inch," said John Sherman Cooper, the first U.S. ambassador to East Germany after Fischer's speech. "Not an inch. Just like the rest of their leadership."

Cooper opened the U. S. embassy in East Berlin in 1974. He left there to retire two years later. Of his own contacts with Fischer, Cooper said, "He's a very tough fellow."

The ambassador said there was little room for flexibility by the East Germans because of their strong association with the Soviets.

This, he said, was as much an obstacle to developing trade as is East Germany's lack of hard currency and salable goods.

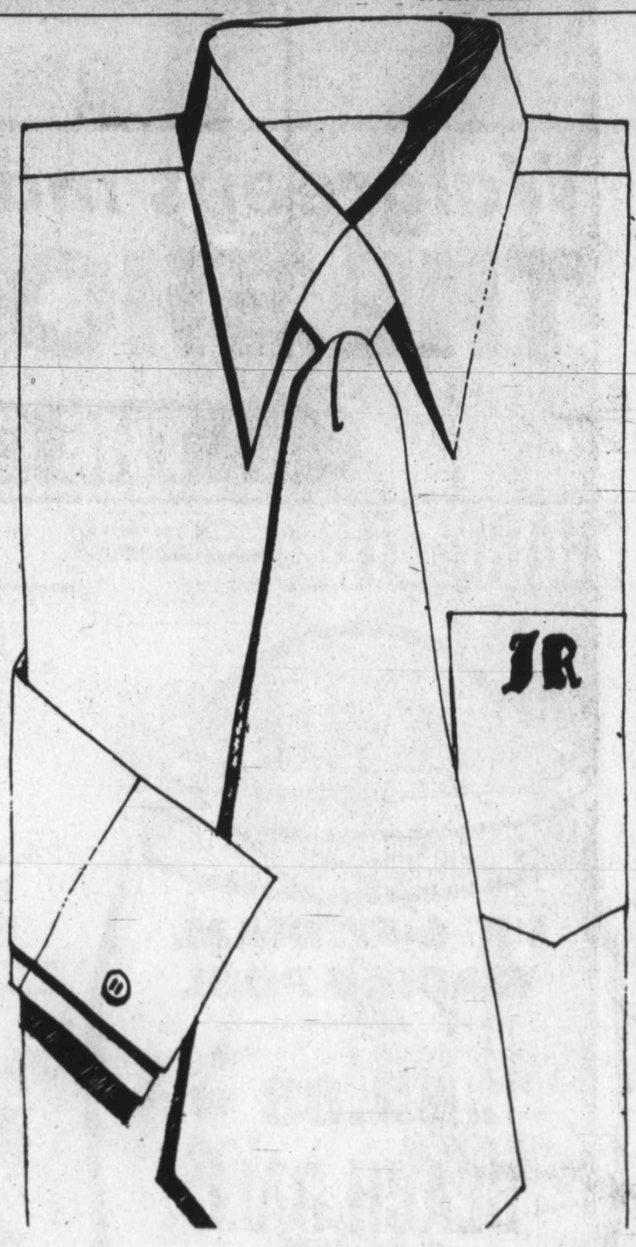

A hard-nosed Communist Party member since 1946 and foreign minister since 1975, Fischer did not blink when asked about East Germany's need for the Berlin Wall today, 17 years after it was built.

"The wall you do not welcome has done well for us," he replied.

Master craftsman, author pays visit to Tall City

By PATSY GORDON

"I like to do things nobody else can do."

And Truman Cottom of Austin, who was rated a master craftsman at the age of 18,can do many things nobody else can do. Woodworking, carving, sculpting, printing, writing, painting, photography and furniture refinishing and repair--to name a few.

Cottom, who is accomplished in each field, earns the bulk of his living from the last two since moving to Austin 5 years ago.

Cottom and his wife, Zaidee, are in the Tall City this week to demonstrate, free of charge, how to replace and repair veneer, reglue chairs, restore finish without stripping, and how to sharpen tools. In other words, how the consumer can do a professional refinishing or repair job at home or in the office at a lower cost.

Cottom is a true believer in do-it-yourself because he feels this is the only way to get the job done right.

The master craftsman has been doing just this some time. Born in Louisiana as the son of a woodworker and carver, he learned woodworking from his father. He built, at the age of 14, a desk out of apple boxes, and a cedar jewelry box inlaid with walnut and sycamore for his mother at age 16.

But his greatest accomplishment as a youth came when he reached 17 years of age. He entered an international competition sponsored by the Fisher Body Division of General Motors. His task was to build the most nearly perfect model of the Napoleonic Coach used as the Fisher Body emblem. In competition with more than a million boys, some as old as 20, Cottom was awarded a university scholarship for outstanding craftsmanship. This achievement rated him a master craftsman, an unprecedented accomplishment.

It took him 5,000 hours to assemble the coach, and he had to make some of the precision tools necessary to create the all-working parts. Not only did he win the scholarship, but the privilege of seeing his coach displayed in two world's fairs.

Cottom used his scholarship to attend one-year at The University of Texas at Austin as an engineering student. At the end of the year, he left school to help with the support of his mother and younger brothers and sisters.

But he kept up his studies by reading all the books prescribed for the engineering courses. One of his pastimes is reading the latest editions of encyclopedias.

Mrs. Cottom, a native of Tennessee, can fix things, too. She was one of the original "Rosie the Riveters' during World War II, serving as an aircraft inspector. She went into computer programming with the Veterans Administration after the war.

Apart from his furniture restoration, Cottom is an inventor and has designed and built many automatic precision manufacturing machines. He has patents on machinery which makes parts we all come in contact with every day, such as automobile components, plastic shoe and purse file bags for hanging these items in the closet, special grinding machines and others.

He has designed and constructed all of the tools and equipment for manufacturing plants he has set up himself.

He has made important contributions to the manufacture of mobile homes by constructing steel banding straps around the top to hold the entire framework together.

He has designed and built almost every type of fine furniture, working with fine woods such as rosewood, walnut, cherry, birch, padauk, satinwood, zebrawood, ash and oak.

He has perfected techniques for repairing fine art paintings, gold leaf frames, leather, glass, marble, synthetic marble, plastics and fabrics.

He is skilled in making technical drawings and illustrations and is handy with an airbrush.

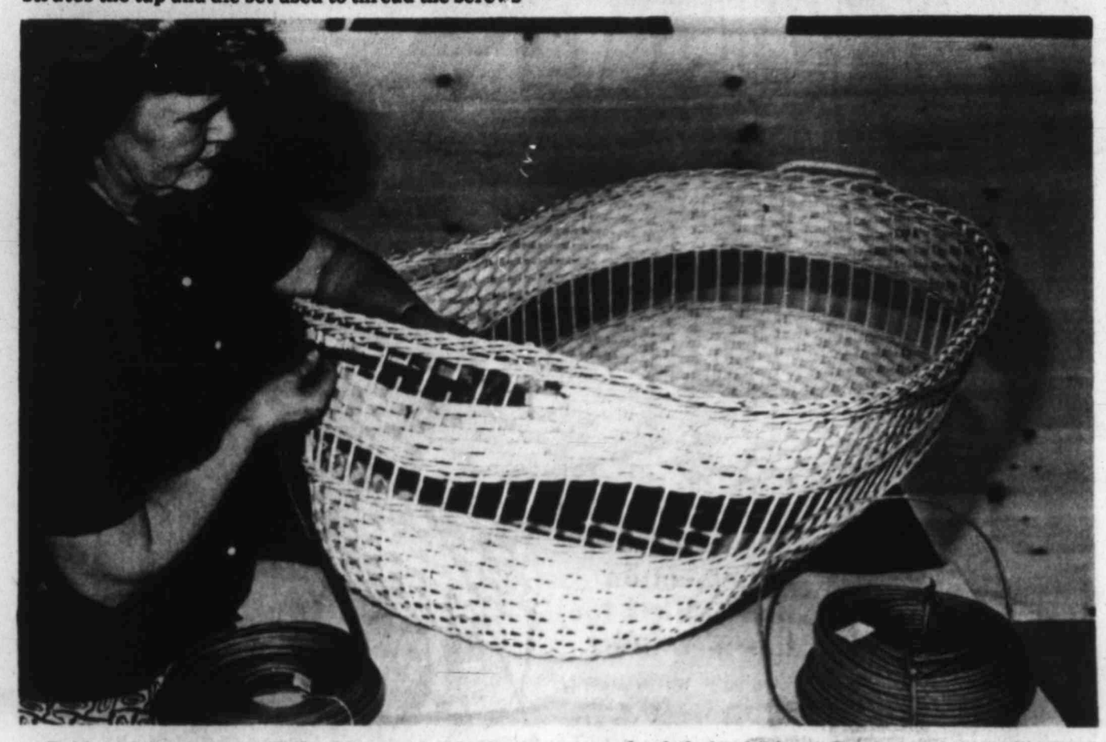

Cottom and his wife maintain that his type of work is good for children. "It helps to keep them off the streets and away from the drug scene, they said. Cottom started woodworking at the age of 7.

Cottom also is a published author by Prentice-Hall, and he has written several books which he has published and distributed. He also is a technical writer.

He got into the furniture restoration when a moving line caused serious damage to the couple's furniture. He went to work for a moving line to repair a lot of the damage to other people's possessions. "There is nothing that can't be repaired," said Cottom.

While with the moving line, he repaired things that looked impossible to repair such as a valuable Dresden piece, a porcelain coated Russian stove and a Grand Piano.

The demonstrations will be held from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. through Saturday at the Tru-Fix store in Imperial Shopping Center at Midkiff and Wadley. Evening sessions can be arranged by calling the store. Persons will be allowed to bring pieces into the store to get advice on restoration.

Zaidee Cottom is restoring the baby bassinet used by Lady Bird Johnson as a baby. She also used it with her daughters and they have used it with each of their children. It has been donated to the LBJ Presidential Library.

Sarah Ann Robertson of Austin, who is associated with the Austin schools, is hand weaving a cane chair set. She is a pupil of Cottom's.

Furniture dos, don'ts

The following tips for every furniture owner are taken from Furniture Restoration by Truman and Zaidee Cottom.

1. Do not use furniture polish in aerosol cans. Most of these polishes contain silicones which are added to facilitate the atomizing of the product to produce a fine spray. When attempting to refinish furniture to which the spray had previously been applied, the finish will not go on smoothly over silicone and will separate, leaving voids on the surface.

2. If alcohol or fingernail polish remover is spilled on any finish, do not wipe it off; let it dry. If alcohol is wiped away before it dries, the finish will be removed with it. If allowed to dry, there will be little or no damage.

3. Never attempt to squirt white glue (like Elmer's) into a chair joint or insert it with a hypodermic needle. Most of these glues are plastic and will not dry hard enough.

4. Brighten up dull metal furniture with rubbing compound found at most auto supply stores.

5. When the fabric on your upholstered furniture is slightly frayed or worn around the edges, it is not always necessary to have it reupholstered. Cottom says that often the problem can be alleviated by removing the tacks around the worn area, stretching the fabric over the area and then retacking it.

WHEN SELECTING furniture, keep in mind the most desirable woods.

There are different species of mahogany around the world, with Honduras mahogany considered the premier furniture wood. It is firm and straight with a beautiful pattern and available in wide boards.

Walnut has become scarce and expensive since the trees grow slowly and are not replanted as rapidly as they have been harvested. French walnut is lighter in color, leaning toward gray shades and American black walnut usually is a rich dark brown.

There are more than 50 species of oak in the United States alone. There are two basic classifications, red and white oak, with white having the highest commercial value.

American beech is used for carved furniture frames and bentwood chairs. It is strong and firm and easily identified by its small rays and closed grain. European beech was a favorite wood for the carved upholstered furniture frames of Louis XV furniture.

Birch, used as an interior trim for homes and imported modern Scandinavian furniture, is a hard, closed-grain wood, but easily split by nailing. Care should be taken in handling the wood to keep its natural light finish.

THERE ARE MORE than 20 species of maple found in the United States, classified as hard or soft. Sugar maple has a hard texture and is the preferred wood for floors, bowling alleys and bowling pins.

Pine is not a good furniture wood since it is easily damaged, easily split and not the easiest wood to work with. However, early American pine furniture is considered valuable.

Pecan is not the most desirable of the furniture woods because of its natural dark streaks and irregularities which pose a problem in finishing. Due to the shortage of other preferred woods, furniture manufacturers have turned to pecan. Finishing problems have been solved by a process in which the finished piece is sprayed with a translucent coating designed to even out the color variations yet allow part of the grain and pattern to show through.

Truman Cottom, sculptor and carver, releases the squirrel hiding in a claro walnut log thrown on the woodpile.

Antique power: new look at your castoffs

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

"Why in the world are you buying all that secondhand junk?" friends asked Gwen Znerold 32 years ago.

Today those same friends are saying, "Why didn't you take me with you?"

Gwen was a bride 32 years ago, furnishing her first home in South Dakota. The big furniture craze at the time was limed oak.

"It was rather unattractive, with a superfluous grain, and I didn't like it. And, like most young married people, we didn't have much money.

"So I went to secondhand stores, not antique stores at all, and bought castoffs that I thought were pretty."

Those castoffs, still in her home which now is in Des Moines, were solid walnut with burl embellishment, marble tops and carved fruit drawer-pulls.

"It's the sort of stuff our grandparents had during the Civil War," she said. "Today we call it American Renaissance."

Znerold (her last name rhymes with Harold, she said, and begins with a sort of a sneeze) in the last 15 years has become a recognized authority on the identification and appraisal of antiques.

"It happened because I am a true history buff interested in the background of everything," she said in an interview. "As I began to pick up old things to go with my old furniture, I wanted to know more about them. I began to research; I became a student, self-taught."

Stroke of tragedy...and victim's wife cries anew

By DOROTHY S. COOK
Copley News Service

I travel a path with Bill. We share love and tenderness and we are friends. I know utter dispair, hopelessness and deep loneliness. Someday, an institution looms to absorb my husband — and there he shall die.

One year ago, a ballon of blood in an artery in his brain began leaking. An aneursym. Slowly, at first, so that his only complaint was minor headaches. Then came the convulsions. No question here. An emergency. During surgery, the aneursym ruptured.

He is a stroke victim. Removal of scar tissue, due to the aneursym, left him brain-damaged. Outwardly, his forehead bears the results of his trauma. Deep valleys of dents and burr holes.

Bill is unable to communicate beyond a few words. Gestures replace speech. He is mostly child, not man, and must be restrained and cared for as such. I am all things to him, but never again to be a wife. Some nights he roams. Today, it was breakfast twice.

He had forgotten. Potty-training is a continuous thing.

I feel old and tired with little time for small pleasures. The work to be done stacks up into unsurmountable mountains. The days, weeks and months pass and I manage to climb an ant hill. I can't live like this, and yet I must.

I feel old and tired with little time for small pleasures. The work to be done stacks up into unsurmountable mountains.

We have been married four years, which results in mixed emotions as to loyalties. And yet, in many ways, we were closer and shared in ways not possible in our forever-and-ever first marriages.

Bill had been 24 years when his wife, a heart patient, died. My husband of 30 years was a suicide. We were desperartely solitary misfits in a strange world of senior singles. We were happy to be playing house again and to have some feeling of a normal existence. But we lacked the deep bonds that weather and age a good marriage. So short a time to rebuild and reinforce with a backlog of memories.

I kept a daily journal for the three months he was in various hospitals. I re-read now and cry anew. One word was a miracle. Two words or gestures a virtual raising of the dead.

So many, many doctors were involved that they became voices only. Reporting by phone. I never met them and knew some by their monthly communique ... Balance Due. I don't think there was an area of his body not tested or checked for the tiniest suspicion of contributing to his problem.

To their credit.

Never in our lifetime could we manage to pay these debts if it were not for insurance. Whatever we salvaged from our first marriages is gone. We are picked clean. More than 90 percent of bankruptcies declared today are due to medical expenses. Only statistics to me once, now a reality.

There are special moments. When he reaches for my hand and kisses my palm when I tuck him in for the night, then I know. My sweet, gallant, gentle husband has said Thank You and I Love You in the only possible way for him.

It is enough.

Efficiency tips given

CAROLE EICHEN
Copley News Service

Most apartment people have to put up with an "efficiency-type" kitchen which in reality isn't very efficient at all.

Some of the kitchens are so small it's almost impossible to turn around, let alone have someone else in there working with you.

In most cases what's really needed is a major remodeling where you knock out some walls, install new appliances and shelves, and open the entire area up. However, this usually won't happen unless you have a generous landlord.

There are a few things you can do to utilize the existing space and create the illusion that the kitchen really is larger than it appears.

One idea is to install mirrors on the walls behind the counter and below the shelves. This can do wonders to give the illusion of space and bring more light into a kitchen area that does not have a window exposure.

It's also important how the work area is organized. There is no correct system, it's just whatever works for you. in many of the smaller apartments, the access to storage areas is limited.

A fairly narrow door may lead to a large storage area that runs under a built-in stove top. in order to reach things way in the back you have to go through body contortions. The best idea is to visit a hardware store which carries some of the new kitchen accessories such as lazy susans and shelf extenders that can put more working storage space at your fingertips.

Paint can do much to make a small dark kitchen seem warm and more spacious. A white or bright-colored wall with matching ceiling makes the area seem larger.

Another warming touch is to use a richly patterned area rug on the floor, or if the floor coloring is a pattern get a rug of a matching or contrasting color that will highlight the design.

If there isn't enough storage space for all of your pots and pans or cooking utensils you can solve two problems at once by making them part of the design. Hang the utensils on the walls and integrate them into the decor, or look for funky old containers or baskets to hold an assortment of spoons and other cooking equipment.

The whole idea is to make the kitchen work for you. After moving in, it may take another complete shuffling of all the things in the kitchen so that they are placed in such a way to save you time and energy.

Stop unnecessary flushing to conserve water

By AL CARRELL

Even if there's no water shortage in your area, wasting water is wasting energy. It requires energy to purify the water supply, more to bring it into your home, and some more to handle and treat it when it goes through the sewage system.

The toilet is the biggest single user of water in the average home, accounting for about 40 percent. Certainly, you should make sure your toilet is in good repair. Next, don't flush it every time you toss in a dead bug or a cigarette butt. There are a number of new devises on the market to cut down on the amount of water per flush. some give your unit the ability to have two flushing strengths—one for liquid waste, and another for solid wastes. Some gadgets are good, and others seem to cause new problems.

Whatever you might do to cut down on the amount of water per flush, make sure that after the flush there is adequate water in the bowl. A toilet is self-trapped which means that water stands in the bowl as a guard against sewer gas. Some of these gadgets don't allow enough water to go from the tank to the bowl to refill the bowl after the standing water has flushed out. So after you add a gadget to your toilet tank, measure the level of the water as opposed to the top of the opening below. If there's not about two inches of water, adjust or remove the gadget. It's better to waste a little water than to gas your house.

Dear Al:

I made a temporary hot bed for seedlings from an outgrown little red wagon. I drilled a few holes in the wagon bed for drainage and put in soil. When the seedlings were planted, I covered over the top with strips of plastic sandwich wrap. I rolled the seedlings inside when we had a cold snap, and then rolled them outside when they were ready to transplant. It's a neat idea that I'll use over and over.—H.M.C.

A SUPER HINT—I was a recent guest on a talk show hosted by Myrna Bagley, and she came up with what sounds like a gem dandy idea. She has removed resilient floor tiles in the kitchen and was faced with removing all the leftover adhesive. She tried sanding and scrapping and solvents and maybe cussing, and found that all these ways were messy. Then she came up with her idea. She used a regular old common brick and some sand. The brick was a combination scraper and abrasive, and the sand was a combination abrasive and absorbant. The guck game up, and the sand made it easier to get rid of because it kept it from being so sticky. I have't tried this because I'm not about to rip up a floor just to have this problem, but it sounds good.

Dear Al:

By mistake, I grabbed a can of lighter fluid instead of penetrating oil. The cans are the exact same size and shape. The lighter fluid took care of the stubborn nut, and so I have used it several times instead of the regular penetrating oil. I think it works just as good, and I know that it costs less. Even if money is no object, it could help someone who's run out of penetrating oil.—A.D.C.

SHOP TALK—I just ran across a new product. It's a floating hand axe. It's made of metal and is hollow and for the camper-boater-fisherman. If he ever dropped it overboard, it would float. The tool is too light for use as is, but is designed so you can fill it with 30 oz. of sand for helf. Then I got to wondering if a guy who'd drop his axe overboard would ever be able to find any sand. Or maybe you'd think he would carry some sand along? What's to insure that he wouldn't drop the container of sand overboard instead of his axe? Anyway, it is a new idea.

Fruit rind sweetener

Copley News Service

Good news may be in store for mourners of saccharin in the not-too-distant future. As I have predicted right along, "Somebody will come up with an acceptable something" to take the place of saccharin.

Drs. Robert M. Horowitz and Bruno Gentili, chemists at the USDA's Agricultural Research Service in Pasadena, Calif., discovered and developed a citrus-derived sweetener in the early 1960s that has been the object of studies and tests ever since, now is showing great promise for commercial use.

The substance, Naringin, a very bitter compound found in the rind of grapefruit can be converted into a new substance called (this is a tongue twister) neohesperidian dihydrochoeone, mercifully simplified to "Neo DHC." The new product is said to be about 1,500 times as sweet as sugar.

At the USDA's Western Regional Research Center in Berkeley, Calif., Dr. Michael R. Gumbmann and Allen N. Booth have been receiving "extremely favorable results" adding Neo DHC to a commercial dog chow. This confirms earlier long-term studies done on rats:

Recent metabolic studies show that 90 percent of orally ingested Neo DHC labeled with a radioactive isotope, may be excreted within 24 hours, with no accumulation in tissues. Plans to use it in food, chewing gum, mouth washes and toothpastes are in the offing.

Grapefruit rind is currently the only known source of Naringin to supply sufficient quantity of Neo DHC for commerical uses. An estimated 5 million pounds appear to be recoverable from the 5 million tons of citrus by-products produced each year, according to the USDA. From such a supply of Naringin, officials estimate 1.6 million pounds of Neo DHC could be produced annually.

U.S. consumers of saccharin have used around 5 million pounds annually. It appears that this is about to change abruptly when the saccharin ban takes effect. Since Neo DHC is at least three times sweeter than saccharin, its potential output probably can equal that of saccharin, with little trouble.

Ex-secretary gambles as bondwoman

Attractive blond bailswoman Linda Chester does not at all fit the popular 'bad guy' image of the business as portrayed on TV cops-and-robbers serials. She described herself as a banker—of sorts—and says, "I'm loaning money at ten percent interest."

By RAY KIPP
Copley News Service

Linda Chester doesn't wear doubleknit suits made out of neon-sign patterns.

Nor does she have coffee stains on her shirt or nicotine stains on her teeth, deal in stolen goods, or puff on a foul-smelling cigar.

Most people in her business do not fit the sterotype portrayed on the television networks' cops-and-robbers serials.

Linda Chester — a tall, attractive blonde — makes her living getting people out of jail.

Chester is a bail bondswoman.

"I think television gets a little carried away with us for the sake of a story," she said.

Still, even discounting entertainment's "bad-guy image," Linda Chester is not what one expects to encounter in the bail bond business.

"Most people still think it's unusual for a woman to aspire to anything that is viewed as a man's work," Chester explained in an interview in her San Diego, Calif., office across from the courthouse and jail complex which supplies her clients.

"In the simplest terms, I'm a banker. I'm loaning money at 10 percent interest," she said.

In more complex terms, she is taking a gamble on a person accused of a crime. She is risking a large sum of money — for that 10 percent fee and whatever collateral she can get — on the assumption the person will show up in court when he or she is supposed to.

"Sometimes you win, sometimes you lose, and believe me, you lose your share," she said with a philosophical smile. That smile vanished a few minutes later when she learned a client with a $1,000 bond had skipped his bail minutes before he was to enter a court room.

> "Sometimes you win, sometimes you lose, and believe me, you lose your share," she said with a smile that vanished when she learned a client with a $1,000 bond had skipped his bail minutes before he was to enter a court room.

"That's the kind of thing that can drive you crazy and the thing people don't understand when they talk about what a big ripoff we are," she said.

"If I don't get this guy back in time, I'll have to write 10 $1,000 bonds just to recoup my losses, if there isn't enough collateral to cover them," Chester said.

In the little over a year she has been in business for herself, Chester has bailed out robbery, burglary, rape, theft and assault suspects as well as established business and community sted on traffic warrants.

Retrieving some of the shadier characters, if they skip out, can be both difficult and dangerous.

That part of the job is not for a woman.

"I don't get involved," she said, "I have a bail bond recovery agent for that."

During the interview, an agent from the service Linda uses arrived for information about outstanding forfeitures which must be tracked down.

The man nearly filled the doorway from top to bottom and almost needed to turn sideways to get his shoulders through the door.

If he finds the client, there is little doubt Chester will avoid most of her potential loss.

Bail bondsmen or their agents have the authority to arrest bond jumpers.

But even if the man is found, the bail bondsman must face court costs and recovery fees — generally 10 percent of the bond plus expenses — and will still lose money.

Lose enough or have enough forfeitures, and the insurance company backing you loses confidence, and you're out of business, Chester said.

"It's a big headache. People think I'm crazy. Sometimes I think I'm crazy — but I love it," she said.

Married and the mother of a 2-year-old daughter, Chester got her fill of the 9-to-5 job as a legal secretary for several years.

"I like being my own boss," she said.

She picked this profession after her attorney husband — he is in corporate tax law so there is no conflict of interest — jokingly mentioned she would make a good bail bondsman.

After six months of non-paid training at a local bail bonds office, passing the state-required exam and security check and getting the financial backing of an insurance company, Chester went into business.

Search for identity peaks in middle-age

COLLEGE STATION—Search for identity reaches its peak during the middle years of life, says a family life educaton

Preparation for this period of growth will determine the grace and fulfillment enjoyed or the disorientation and misery suffered in later years, Dorothy Taylor adds.

Miss Taylor is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

For some, the 35 to 55 age group is the prime of life—for others, it's over the hill, she continues.

Satisfaction that middle aged adults enjoy are:

—children are maturing and preparing for their own adulthood and careers,

—business and personal careers peak,

—more expendable money is available to the family,

—and, parenting responsibilities lessen, though children still need parental support.

Dissatisfactions with middle age seem to be:

—decline in physical appearance or beauty,

—loss of physical zest,

—less urgent sexual drive,

—appearance of chronic illness,

—more time and no selected leisure activities or interests,

—or, declining a lifelong career is not satisfying and starting a new, different career.

For couples, the empty nest may provide an opportunity for a renewed relationship, the specialist suggests.

Couples in middle age might try the following guideposts to renew their secure, old marriage rather than going middle-age crazy and trying to recoup their lost youth:

1. Achieve a new intimacy. Openly declare and share love and devotion for your spouse.

2. Learn to enjoy the other person' interests. Sharing roles or responsibilities of a spouse provides more time for togetherness.

3. Seek deeper relationships with friends and family outside the normal "favorites." New friends teach new interests, as well as extending the acquaintance of their close friends.

Help others. Develop or broaden avenues of service to others to fulfill the emptiness of too much leisure.

Summer styles play it loose

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

If you have walked through our department stores and boutiques lately, you will easily agree that big is in. Big, as in oversize. Big, as in soft and easy clothes that just kind of hang on and go along with you.

If you don't like this fashionable look, simply wait until fall when clothes are supposed to narrow down considerably. But for spring and summer, the fashion experts say, big is in.

And shopping big is fun. You start out by trying on your own size, then the next size down, then the next until you get the fit you're used to. But before you buy this smaller size — go back up a size and see if you can accept the new looseness and softness.

If you're determined not to buy the big look at all, watch for a soft translation; a bit more fabric and ease.

Watch for the natural fabrics, too, the silks and cottons and blends, and other natural touches such as ivory, bone, jute.

Here's a sampling of what you might check out in the stores: Jackets — Everything from batwing-sleeved jersey voluminous tops to oversize unlined blazers. Tunics and big tops. Tunics are long enough and loose enough for prevailing trends. White and neutrals such as bleached rose are your best bets, and sleeves usually are pushed or rolled up. Dresses — Some soft romantic looks around, but generally the peasant influence has gone back to the cottage. Lingerie touches, as in laces and satin straps. Blouson dresses, big and bloused at the waist with interesting tie belts, come in everything from cotton gauze to silk and crepe de chine. Sleeves are big and full. Skirts — Skirts are big favorites; dirndl, shirred at the waist, tiered to the hem. Pleats and uneven hemlines, generally longer, are popular. Lightweight-cotton prints and gauzes make for easy summer wearing. Vests — Big and loose, easy at the armholes and sometimes reversible, they give a finished look to summer layering.

Pants — Fuller at the top and shorter at the bottom. Pants — Fuller at the top and shorter at the bottom, often to the ankle; gathered or pleated or tucked at the waist for fullness. Long, full pants are rolled to the ankle.

The pretty blouse with ruffles, tucks and laces softens the simple jacket and skirt. Shorter jackets, softer fabrics.

Shirts — Big, but in soft fabrics. They can be layered over each other as jackets or slipped over camisole tops. Just so they are not too fitted because everything is too soft for that.

Accessories — Belts, smaller, softer bags sometimes worn in pairs across the body or over the shoulder. Thin white bobby socks, their cuffs trimmed in lace, worn with sandals. Long scarves to twist and wrap at the waist, over the shoulder, around the neck or head. Fabrics are gauze, airy cottons, anything light with a weave or an interesting pattern to it.

Shoes — Strappy sandals, but a switch to high heels from the low heels of last summer. Neutral colors. The sweet baby shoes (like the old Mary Janes) but in linen or canvas.

Jewelry — Stickpins, natural touches such as leaves, shells, wood. Dangling earrings (favorites in New York are crystal drop earrings) and shells. Bangle bracelets in solid or straw to hold shells or interesting pendants.

Makeup — Cosmetic companies are using words such as "pastoral pastels" or "tea garden colorations" to give you the idea. Natural colors, prettied up for spring and summer. Try a bluding cheek glow in a shade that really lights up your face.

Soft taupe eyeliner helps emphasize, not exaggerate the eyes.

Colors — Khaki's big, but so are the nothing neutrals; light beige, bone, celery, natural muslin.

Forecast for fall — The big slimdown is sure to begin, fashion experts say, pointing to the skinnier-legged pants this summer. Watch for clothes that skim the body, slimmer skirts, slightly blouson tops over slender pants or skirts.

DEAR ABBY

Doggone Mad tired of shoveling dirty tricks

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You wrote a whole column on the "dirty tricks" that humans perpetrate on dogs (such as letting them run loose and breed accidentally).

Well, I am tired of dogs leaving their dirty tricks on my lawn! I'm tired of shoveling dirty tricks off my yard so I won't have to warn each visitor to step carefully.

I think you left out an important law concerning care of dogs. Any parent who gives a child a dog should specify that the child is obligated to shovel up the dirty tricks his dog leaves on neighbors's lawns.

I have learned to cope with dogs tipping over my garbage cans. I rinse off meat papers and even sprinkle chili powder over anything that might interest dogs, and I always make sure the lid on my garbage can is tightly secured. Dogs have learned a new respect for my garbage cans, but not for my lawn.

Come on, Abby, be a friend to countless thousands of people who are abused by dumb animals, and print this letter.— —DOGGONE MAD IN MESA, ARIZ.

DEAR DOGGONE: The dirty tricks that dogs perpetrate on humans would be completely eliminated if every dog owner well should!

DEAR ABBY: I've been seeing a psychologist for about five months. He's a male and so am I. On my first visit to his office, he had me strip naked, stand before a mirror and talk about my body. I don't know if he asks his female patients to do this, but all of his male patients that I've spoken to told me that he did the same thing with them. (He asks his patients not to mention this procedure to others.)

We wonder if, perhaps, he is a voyeur. He's about 45 and has a nice wife and family.

If you lie on his couch and feel embarrassed or nervous, he sits on the floor beside you and holds your hand to relax you. I have never heard of a psychologist doing this, have you?

If you return for further sessions and lie on his couch, he asks you to remove your shirt. He has told me that he has seen some very good-looking young men in his practice.

I'd like your opinion.—JIM IN LOS ANGELES

DEAR JIM: MOST psychologists are competent, caring and strictly ethical in their manner of treatment, but if you question the professional ethics of YOUR psychologist, write to the State Board of Medical Quality Assurance, 1430 Howe Ave., Sacramento, Calif. 95825.

Those residing in other states should check out their therapists with their county psychological associations.

DEAR ABBY: A reader signed ALWAYS THE GUEST asked how to gracefully get the check in a restaurant. In this case, it was a woman who occasionally entertained gentlemen who were not as financially able to handle the check as she was.

You suggested that she go to places where she had credit and arrange with the management to add the gratuities to the bill and charge everything to her account.

I leave a major credit card with the maitre d' with instructions to charge the meal, taxes and appropriate tip to my account. This always works and is a surefire way of avoiding embarrassing squabbles over who is to settle the bill.

Whereas most people have major credit cards, many do not have restaurant accounts.—JOHN F. IN NORTHRIDGE, CALIF.

DEAR JOHN: Thanks for the tip!

He'll recall 40th birthday

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)-Mrs. Karl Person wanted to do something special for her husband's 40th birthday, so she put two ads in a local paper. They said, "Karl is 40 today. Call and wish him Happy Birthday after 8 p.m. 331-2666."

"Between 5 and 10 p.m. we had over 100 calls," Mrs. Person said later. "Then we lost track. Karl will never forget his 40th birthday."

'Best and last hope'

A hearing being held before the Texas Department of Water Resources at Austin today undoubtedly is one of the most important water sessions ever, insofar as this section of West Texas is concerned.

The hearing is on the application of the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) to create a reservoir on the Colorado River near Stacy, approximately 20 miles southeast of Ballinger. The application was filed last October.

Residents of a number of area cities, including Midland, Odessa and Big Spring, and individuals from rural areas throughout the region, are in Austin to testify in favor of the CRMWD application.

And well they should be, based on the overall importance of the proposed reservoir project to this region.

In fact, all of West Texas, and particularly the territory included in CRMWD's service area, is a deficiency area when it comes to water. Over the years, the CRMWD has emerged as the agency responsible for seeing to it that the region has ample water supplies for its cities, towns and industries, either as a total or a supplemental source of supply. And this is just what CRMWD has in mind in proposing the Stacy reservoir — taking care of West Texas' future water needs.

It is interesting to note that since the district last made application to the appropriate state agency for a surface supply, the demand for water has almost doubled—from 11.5 billion to 20 billion gallons a year. And the demand continues to mount.

At the time of the last request, four cities were supplied directly, now there are 12. Then there were six oil companies and industries being served; now there are 16. It is understood that several other communities and districts have applied to CRMWD for connections in the near and foreseeable future.

It also is noteworthy that a substantial amount of the water the district has sold to oil companies for secondary recovery has been non-potable water captured in an effort to improve quality of stream flow.

Midland and Odessa, of course, will be the prime beneficiaries of the proposed reservoir. It is reported that when the pipeline is built to the reservoir, it will be directly from Midland-Odessa to Stacy.

This would free the eastern part of the CRMWD territory to depend on existing reservoirs and sources (Lake Thomas and Lake Spence).

It all boils right down to the fact that West Texas has to have water. The Stacy project, as proposed, appears to be the best and last hope of additional surface supply to anchor or supplement existing sources.

If the region gets the water it can and undoubtedly will continue to grow. If it does not get the water it is doubtful if the present level of activity can be sustained. Our future growth depends on additional sources of water. It is just that simple.

Aside from the essentiality of water for unhampered growth and development of this area, it especially is noteworthy and appreciated that CRMWD has not asked for or received any state or federal funds for construction, operation or maintenance. Thus, it has not been a burden to others. All CRMWD projects have been financed through sale of water (via revenue bonds). This is the way it should be done.

Hopefully, the district soon will be authorized to proceed with its Stacy reservoir project on the same basis.

Still can't trust 'em

R.L. Vickery, in his editorial page column appearing in The Salem, Mo., News, writes:

"Reading in the papers about the new 'hard line' the administration is taking toward Russia, the thought came to me that it should be obvious to us that the Russians care very little about what we say. It seems they only understand one thing and that is raw power. But Harry Truman is the only president we've had in the last several who seemed to really understand this. He never trusted the Russians and never hesitated to say so. And, more and more, he appears to have been right."

Vickery is so very right in his observations. The Russians haven't changed one bit in the intervening years. Communist domination remains their No. 1 goal.

ART BUCHWALD

Stamp development: New 15-center is greatest

WASHINGTON — While many people have complained about a first-class stamp going up from 13 cents to 15 cents, the U.S. Postal Service is very proud of it.

I talked to one of the men who developed the 15-cent stamp and he considers it one of the greatest breakthroughs in mail delivery since the invention of the zip code.

"For years we've dreamed of a 15-cent stamp, but it is one thing to have the concept and another to make it a reality. Ever since the people upstairs said they wanted it, we have been working day and night to develop one according to their needs."

"What specifically did they want?"

"They said they wanted a stamp lighter in weight so we could get more letters on an airplane. At the same time it had to take a beating from hail and snow and sleet. The stamp also had to be flexible enough to bend when it was bought in rolls instead of sheets. And the most important requirement was that it would not be used again when the post office failed to cancel it."

"How did you solve the last problem?"

"That was the most difficult," he said. "The post office has been losing between $10 million and $20 million a year because when people got a letter with a stamp that was not canceled they steamed it off and used it again.

Art Buchwald

This is a federal crime, but very few federal attorneys will prosecute.

"They say it is too difficult to find a jury that will convict someone for recycling a postage stamp. So the people upstairs told us we had to come up with a stamp that couldn't be used twice. It wasn't an easy assignment. The first thing we developed was a glue with an explosive base. When a person tried to pry off an uncanceled stamp from a letter, the stamp would blow his hand off. We thought we had the solution but the Occupational Safety and Health Administration raised objections so we had to go back to the drawing board."

"That was tough luck," I said, "because it would have done away with the crime."

"Then we came up with a blue dye. If you tried to get the stamp off the envelope you would be covered from head to foot with this indelible dye, and then our postal inspectors would be able to make a foolproof arrest."

"The people upstairs didn't go for that?"

"They did, but the postal workers kept getting the dye all over their clothes and wanted the service to pay for new uniforms."

"What was the answer?"

"A secret glue which makes it impossible to steam the stamp off. It self-destructs if anyone tampers with it after it has been stuck on an envelope. It's the biggest breakthrough since the invention of air mail."

"Will the new 15-cent stamp speed up the delivery of mail?"

"I should hope so. With less weight and more stable corners, our new 15-cent stamp could break the record from New York to Washington by 45 minutes. A first-class letter can now get to any place within 500 miles in less than four days."

"That soon?" I said in amazement.

"Our only problem at the moment is that many people are putting the old 13-cent stamp and two one-cent stamps on their letters. This means that our people have to cancel three stamps instead of one. That will slow delivery down for a while. But once there are enough 15-cent stamps in circulation, you'll never have another complaint about the postal service again."

"There is a rumor that you people are now working on a 20-cent first class stamp that would make the 15-cent stamp obsolete in another year."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

HEW confirms expose of NIDA

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Federal investigators have confirmed in damaging detail our charges of last January that the National Institute on Drug Abuse is plagued with conflicts, cronyism and corruption. The director, Robert DuPont, has quietly been told to look for another job.

The agency is ensconced in ivory-tower splendor high in a government skyscraper in Rockville, Md. Its ostensible mission is to help millions of Americans who are hooked on dangerous narcotics.

We reported that it was run by a tight little clique who shared the gravy with friends and relations. Government contracts and fees were parceled out to close associates. And husbands began overseeing contractors who employed their wives. It was all very cozy.

Our stories were read with special fascination by Joseph A. Califano Jr. who presides over the sprawling Health, Education and Welfare Department but can't watch everything that goes on in the great marble maze. He instructed his inspector general to investigate our charges.

The inspector general has now admitted his findings. "We have conducted a review," he reported, "of the allegations contained in certain Jack Anderson columns relating to improper conduct by the staff, management, grantees and contractors of the National Institute on Drug Abuse ...

"The Anderson allegations are, in large measure, based on fact ... With few exceptions, our review has disclosed a substantial appearance of impropriety but no provable violations of law." Then point by point, he confirmed our charges.

Califano immediately fired off a sharp memo to his subordinates who are supposed to oversee the drug abuse program. "I am distressed," he wrote, "with the loose managenent practices and evidence of cronyism which (the) report reveals."

The secretary demanded an evaluation of excessive travel by top officials and approved several suggested reforms. Most important, he agreed to adopt a contracting system "in which no single individual can unduly influence an award."

Our reporters Howie Kurtz and Valerie Strauss spent months digging into NIDA. The inspector general, following in their tracks, covered the same ground. Here are highlights of his report.

— White House aide Lee Dogoloff used to be a high NIDA official. His wife, according to the inspector general, "received a total of $46,900 from NIDA contractors." We had traced $15,000 in such payments to Mary Lou Dogoloff. On some contracts, her salary "was reported to NIDA under her maiden name" but the checks were made out to Mrs. Dogoloff. Before the couple was married, while the romance was still blooming, Mary Lou was assigned to 16 task orders "which were signed by Mr. Dogoloff." One of the 16 was signed after the marriage, but "she did not work on the order."

— Lee Degoloff helped to award this contract to an old friend, Dr. Richard Katon, who hired Mary Lou. (When the contract expired in 1974 and was awarded to another firm, Dogoloff returned the favor to Katon for hiring his fiancee. Dogoloff extended Katon's contract for 15 days and gave him a dozen new work orders. "All of the work, amounting to about $118,000, was assigned to Katon Associates," declares the report. The other firm, which had won the contract, got no work for months.

— Not long afterward, Katon hired another NIDA insider, Paul Ryser, who had been a consultant to NIDA official and college chum William Spillane. After Ryser joined Katon's firm, it "received three contracts which were administered by (Spilane's) division, totaling $1,976,670." Spillane, meanwhile, dined with Katon personnel on at least 13 occasions, and the cost of those meals...was charged...to the NIDA contract." The cozy relationship between NIDA and Robert Katon Associates, said the report "is, of continuing concern." Some NIDA officials, it says, "express skepticism about the legitmacy" of the arrangement.

helped establish a Miami consulting firm called Social Systems, Inc. When he joined NIDA, "he transferred his stock to his wife." Inspectors found that "six states had awarded contracts to Social Systems" financed "through the use of NIDA funds." These contracts, totaling $215,000, "accounted for about 80 percent of Social Systems's total receipts." The official also "failed to include his interest in Social Systems in his confidential statement."

— Muriel Nellis was awarded a $150,000 NIDA contract last year to study women's drug problems. Her husband, Joseph Nellis, is chief counsel of the House Narcotics Committee, which is supposed to oversee NIDA. Significantly, the report reveals he "serves as secretary" of his wife's firm. Adds the report: "The contract was awarded on a sole source basis without screening other qualified contractors to determine their interest." Although there's no evidence Nellis used his congressional clout to help his wife land the contracts, "the appearance of favoritism is present."

— NIDA Director Robert DuPont was found to have traveled for 201 days over a three-year span, costing the taxpayers over $27,000. His trips took him to such faraway places as Bangkok, Honolulu, Nigeria, Paris and Rome. Other junkets, which we had reported, were confirmed. But the inspector general added: "Our review established that all the trips were properly authorized and were in line with both the agency's mission and the traveler's duties."

Jaded British amused at U.S. 'discovery' of Africa

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — Our government, the press and a good part of the citizenry is in a dither over Africa. This greatly amuses the jaded British, who see their star-spangled, fast-food cousins as suddenly discovering the so-called Dark Continent with all the apprehension of a pubescent feeling first glandular urges.

Once again, we show the world that we can quicky become earnest and fretful about anything which looks serious. Unfortunately, our sense of mission is often transient, and we drop one instant preoccupation in order to clutch another.

But in the meantime, some in Washington are polarizing on African strategy. "Whose side are you on, Brzezinski's or Young's?", a Carter Administration official asked me recently, partly in jest.

Egads, must we make such choices? Are we back to hawks and doves? Is it up or down for Zbigniew or Andy? Is there no room for militant moderation?

If the rhetoric of either man is advocated policy, what if each eventually waffles, as both have done in the past? And why must we buy, wholesale, either Brzezinski's assessment that the Soviets are building themselves a geopolitical ring around our interests in the Persian Gulf, or Young's that if we stay out of Africa, the intruding blue-eyed white devils will be swallowed up by that consuming continent like all such devils before them?

As the Carter Administration gropes to do something about Africa and the marauding Soviets and Cubans, an observation by that leonine, elfish senator, the Honorable Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D.-N.Y.) comes to mind. Recently, on public television's MacNeil-Lehrer program, the New York senator said:

"What we must do, we must do in the open, and do as the end-product of a series of principles which we propound in the world...which we are open about, and saying: Whatever we do, we're doing for these open reasons."

Moynihan's abiding interest in Africa stems from his time as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations where he suffered little nonsense from those Third World diplomats who yelped and nipped at Uncle Sam's heels. Moreover, he turned the volume up when, in 1975, he spoke against Soviet and Cuban interference in Africa.

He disagreed with his President, when Mr. Carter spoke hopefully last year about the U.S. and the Soviets cooperating in the Third World. The Soviets, Moynihan argues, intend no good for the West.

Now Moynihan is a dramatic man, given to huffing and puffing, like some British Tory caning the impudent. Press him, and he is more restrained in saying what exactly he would do in Africa now. But he certainly favors getting rough with the Soviets.

Whether the Soviets would respond to tough actions by the U.S. — stopping SALT talks, cutting off credits and technical aids — is open to guess. But surely the idea of the U.S. announcing to the world that we will support and supply nations threatened by marauders, though we won't send troops or "advisors," will clear the air.

The Soviets and Cubans will understand this message. And by stressing that we will give "open" support to threatened nations, and not by CIA-type covert operations, we can thwart a propaganda barrage.

Once U.S. policy is decided, and with the consent of Congress, we can then, in Pat Moynihan's style, thunder at the creatures nipping at our heels, and let the big dogs as well know that we mean what we say, and that we will support nations vulnerable to assault by invaders.

The Carter Administration should form that policy, offer it to Congress for consideration, and let all nations know where we stand. How can the world's most powerful nation do otherwise?

We should define our strategic interst in Africa, if we have one, or if it is a matter of declaring that we are backing African nations deserving our help, let's do that. If we choose to say we have absolutly no strategic interest in Africa nor are we interested in seeing legitimate states survive, well, then the world will see us for what we are. And that will clear the air, too.

Western aid to Zaire will top $100 million

PARIS (AP) — Western aid to help keep President Mobutu Sese Seko in power in Zaire is expected to total $100 million in the next three months, a senior American official says. This includes $40 million of American aid already pledged to the turbulent Central African nation.

The $100-million program was agreed on by representatives of the United States, France, Belgium, Britain and West Germany at a meeting in Paris this week. Next week they will meet in Brussels with representatives of Saudi Arabia and Iran, the two biggest anti-Communist Middle Eastern oil powers, and of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to try to get their help for the program.

The U.S. official, who participated in the Paris meeting but refused to be identified, said Mobutu's government is desperately short of spare parts, food, medicine and fuel to keep the army and the economy working.

The official said American contributions beyond the regular aid program probably would be limited to donations of military equipment and the air transport of Moroccan and other African troops being sent to Zaire to bolster Mobutu's army.

The Brussels conference also will take up longer-term needs of Zaire that run into billions of dollars.

Zaire's shaky economy was further undercut last month when anti-Mobutu exiles from Angola occupied the copper-and-cobalt mining center of Kolwezi, in southern Shaba Province. French paratroopers drove them from the area, but production from the mines was greatly reduced.

At Lubumbashi, Shaba's capital, French and U.S. transport planes by Tuesday had ferried in about half of the 1,500 Moroccan soldiers who will be the bulk of a French-sponsored, 2,000-man African peace force to protect the mines and the European personnel who run them.

The American planes also were to transport 300 troops from Senegal and Gabon.

The planes were returning to Morocco via Corsica to drop off the 750 men of the French Foreign Legion who recaptured Kolwezi. Mobutu gave the first planeloads a triumphant sendoff Tuesday, with tribal dancers and medals for about a dozen of the legionnaires for "exceptional service."

Col. Clyde Bennett of the Charleston, S.C., Air Force Base, said all the legionnaires should be on their way home by Thursday morning.

No information was available on the plans for 600 Belgian paratroopers still garrisoned in the Lubumbashi area. They were part of a force that dropped on Kolwezi the day after the French to rescue Belgian settlers.

The United States blocked French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's proposal to make the Moroccans and other foreign African troops being sent to Shaba the nucleus of a permanent pan-African peace force to shore up other pro-Western governments threatened by rebels and others supported by the Soviet Union and Cuba.

Giscard planned to draw the force initially from former French colonies, but the senior U.S. official said Washington would only back a force approved and manned by the 49-nation Organization of African Unity.

Angola, Ethiopia, Mozambique, Algeria and other OAU friends and debtors of the Russians and the Cubans were certain to veto any proposal for a force to counter Soviet and Cuban influence. But French officials said Giscard was determined to go ahead with some sort of French-backed peace force.

Board interviews school applicant

An applicant for the position of Midland High School principal was interviewed early today by the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees during a special executive session in the administration building.

Schools Superintendent Dr. James Malley said today he hoped the board would decide who to hire as the new principal sometime this month. He declined to say how many persons the board currently is considering for the position, but he did say the administrative staff has been searching for qualified persons since former Midland High Principal Audrey Gill announced his retirement in April.

Gill, 56, retired at the end of this past school year following more than 30 years of service with the school district.

D'Oyly Carte opera veteran like characters he portrays

By SANDY ROVNER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It is entirely plausible to believe that John Reed is a figment of W.S. Gilbert's implausible imagination.

And John Reed, O.B.E., aka: Sir Joseph Porter, K.C.B., Ko-Ko, Jack Point, John Wellington Wells, the Lord Chancellor, Major General Stanley, King Gama, the Duke of Plaza-of-Tro, Reginald Bunthorne, Robin Oakapple and one or two others, the designated "principal comedian" of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, does nothing at all to dispel the illusion.

Indeed, sipping a Scotch and ginger ale (warm) and nibbling at a plate of sausage and cheeses (cold), he says, at various times, of Jack Point (Yoeman of the Guard): "He's so me.: Of Ko-Ko (Mikado): "He's so me." And of Bunthorne (Patience): "He's so me."

And so he is essentially indistinguishable from the characters he has played for some 26 years now, this slight, mercurial, affable, sentimental, leprechaun of a man with his only-just-beginning-to-gray, only-just-beginning-to-thin curly red hair, his deep blue eyes, his chuckle and his sign and his use of "dear" almost as a comma in a very near nonstop patter song of an interview.

"Yes," he concedes, his eyes twinkling — they twinkle a lot, even behind the glasses he wears offstage — "I'm the daddy of them all," the veteran of the company, for the past quarter-century or so the acknowledged master of the uniquely Gilbert and Sullivan patter song, the definitive interpreter of the tragi-comic, hilariously funny, painfully human, outrageous, forlorn and infinitely lovable characters who wend their singular ways through the operas of Gilbert and Sullivan.

"Oh, I'm very nervous, dear," he says when he's asked how he keeps these characters fresh night after night after night. Then he says, very fast:

"Ooh, yes, I'm very highly strung. I'm nervous. It's not pleasant for me but I can't help it. After all this time I just take it. It always comes back to just one word: Caring. I really care. I care for my own pride in the performance, I suppose, and I care for the audience. All I want to do is please people so I do my utmost for them. Really, that's what I do it for. I do encores until I drop if they want me to."

It was all something of an accident, the extraordinary union of John Reed and the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company. "I had no idea what this D'Oyly Carte thing was at all," says Reed. He'd been acting and producing in a repertory company — just straight acting, no musicals. A friend heard the D'Oyly Carte was looking for an understudy-chorister and told him about it. "Learn the Nightmare Song (Iolanthe)," the friend had advised.

"Well," recalls Reed, "memorizing didn't seem much for someone in a repertory company," and that, to all intents and purposes, was that. He hadn't even seen one of the productions. "So I thought I'd better go along and see what this D'Oyly Carte is, anyway," and he saw "The Gondoliers."

When he learned he'd won the part, "in a weak moment," he recalls, "I said yes. If I'd stopped to think I'd 'ave said, "I can't do that. What am I doing going into an opera company? I'm not a singer.' I never professed to be a singer.

"Yes, but dancing. I've always danced ever since I could remember. Tap and balloroom — I have medals for ballroom — and a slight bit of ballet. It always stood me in good stead because for these particular parts you don't have to be the world's best singer, or the world's best actor or the world's best dancer. But you have to have an accumulation of the whole thing."

Soaring beef prices start cattlemen prospering again

By RAY KIPP
Copley News Service

Cattlemen say their four-legged product is still the consumer's best friend.

But convincing angry shoppers of that fact might be harder than stuffing one of their thousand-pound steers into a grocery bag.

Today's homemakers rank the cattle rancher as low as the guy who sets lettuce prices.

Beef prices have exploded. During the first quarter of this year prices jumped 13 percent and U.S. Department of Agriculture economists predict a 20 percent or more total increase by the end of the year.

Cattlemen, besieged by drought, high feed prices, price controls and oversupply, are making money for the first time in more than three years

But now they must explain those profits to the consumer or face another meat boycott..

The reason is simple — supply and demand. Cattlemen lost an estimated $30 billion in the years when their herds were bigger than the consumer demand. They cut back on production until the number fell in line with demand and now prices will remain up until the herds once again get larger than the nation's appetite.

That is the logic of the cattle cycle, a natural phenomenon that occurs every 9 to 11 years.

But logic doesn't make $1.10 a pound hamburger any easier to take.

"Beef prices aren't the cause of inflation, they are just occurring along with the inflation problem," said Roger Berglund of the National Cattlemen's Association in Denver. "Beef is still one of the housewife's best buys."

You can expect a salesman to hawk his own product but even independent analysis lends support to Berglund's claim.

"Beef prices have been a bargain for the last two and one-half years," said Dennis Steadman, an analyst for Chase Econometrics, owned by Chase Manhattan Bank. "The problem is the consumer has gotten used to inexpensive beef throughout the last couple of years and it just isn't going to stay that way."

But while beef prices are going up, they still lag behind other food prices and all non-food items generally cited in the Consumer Price Index, Steadman said.

Steadman said that if it were not for inflation 1977 beef prices would have been 10 percent below what they were in 1970.

But beef is beginning to catch up and by 1978 should be in line with other inflated food prices, Steadman said.

Berglund said this month's beef prices are 6 percent higher than they were in 1975 when they hit an all-time high USDA average pound price of $1.62.

"But the overall CIP is up 18 percent over the same time period and the average consumer disposable income — estimated for the second quarter — is up 27 percent from 1975," Berglund said.

"The consumer might not find much comfort in it, but income is still ahead of beef prices," he said.

College cops offer community service

DENTON, Texas (AP) — The situation isn't new — a distraught, armed man barricades himself in a house and SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactics) teams are brought in. Much fiction ends the drama with a rush by SWAT police, gunfire and death.

But in the scholarly atmosphere of North Texas State University, campus Police Chief Robby Robinson, Sgt. Vic Lauderdale and Lt. Frank Robinson take a more academic approach, forming a specialized crisis intervention team focusing on homework and psychology.

Chief Robinson is an instructor in abnormal psychology, Lauderdale has a degree in criminal justice and Lt. Robinson is a political science graduate.

Their expertise came to play recently when an 18-year-old man barricaded himself in a house that was quickly surrounded by SWAT teams from the Lewisville police department.

"The primary objective is the protection of human life, including the life of the suspect," Chief Robinson said. "We started active negotiations at 4:25 p.m. He came out of the house at 6:45 p.m."

The Lewisville incident was the first for the NTSU team.

Lewisville police called in the university team from the campus, about 20 miles away, after futile attempts to lure the suspect out of the house.

A telephone call from an 18year-old girl started the incident. She said that Glen Ellis had assaulted her. By the time police reached Ellis' house, he had barricaded himself.

Chief Robinson, a boyish-looking 31, acted as negotiator, Lauderdale was a liaison man and Lt. Robinson videotaped the scene for future study.

"We have to establish trust," Chief Robinson said. "And it has to be one person. In the event that I didn't work out, Vic would have tried out."

Robinson stood near the corner of the house, with Lauderdale nearby by out of sight of Ellis. Lauderdale relayed crypic notes — "Stall," and "The girlfriend is coming."

"We don't just stand there and talk (to the suspect)," Chief Robinson said. "Anybody can do that. It's a matter of doing your research and using it. Vic will send out for more information and bring it back to me."

He said many suspects in such a position threaten to kill police, but few commit suicide.

In the Lewisville incident, Chief Robinson promised Ellis he could have a chance to apologize to the girl. The apology was made, and Ellis eventually came out.

"Our training is a service we offer not only here at the university, but to anyone who needs it," Chief Robinson said. "So, whether it's someone in a rural area barricaded in a house or in a school building, whether hostages are involved or not, we are able to offer this service."

Women endorse proposal

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—President Anne Hecker of Women in Communications, Inc., WICI endorsed a federal bill filed in response to the U.S. Supreme Court decision on the search of newspaper offices.

Mrs. Hecker said the 9,000-member organization, which has its headquarters here, supports a proposal by Rep. Robert Drinan, D-Mass.

The Drinan proposal would prohibit the use of warrants to search newspapers and other newsgathering offices for information or evidence against lawbreakers unless an employee of the paper is suspected of a crime.

Mrs. Hecker called the Supreme Court decision a "confused and incredible mistake."

"We have seen that a court can violate the constitutional rights of citizens just like anyone else," Mrs. Hecker said in a statement. "The recent decision, which directly affects the news media, in reality involves the right of any citizen to be free of unreasonable search and seizure."

Mrs. Hecker is assistant executive director of the Washington State Dental Association in Seattle.

Hunters oppose elephant ban

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Three organizations of sports hunters have gone to federal court in an attempt to force the U.S. Department of the Interior to remove the African elephant from its list of threatened species.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Put three quarters in Andrew Ligon's hand and just like a juke box he gives out with a song.

Ligons, 49, is the Bay Bridge's singing toll collector.

While most toll collectors just hold out their left hand waiting to take the money from a motorist whose face they never look at, Ligons grins broadly at his customers and provides a little entertainment to lighten their hearts as he lightens their pocketbooks during his 10 p.m.-6 a.m. shift

"Just wanna be happy, happy

"jus' wanna be happy..."

Many motorists drive up mad for some reason, Ligons said, and take their frustrations out on the toll collector.

"I just sing and try to be happy all the time and figure then it will make other people happy," he said.

"It's like if you have a headache. If you go around thinking about it, it will hurt all the time, But if you think about something else yo don't notice it much," Ligons observed. "Found out ole Moses kicked the bucket. "Kicked the bucket and died. "Old Moses man dead, yes he gone..."

Ligons said he owns "four hi-fis and probably 100 records, but I never listen to them.

"Fact is, I don't know a single song all the way through to the end. So I just sing the parts I remember and make up the rest."

Ron Boroussal, a fellow toll collector, said Ligons "sometimes sings so loud at 4 a.m. that you can hear him a mile away. He sings all different lyrics, all to the same tune."

Of the dozens of motorists passing through Ligons' booth in the dead of night recently, some hardly stopped to hand over their money, some paused to listen for a moment before moving on and at least one growled, the unexpected entertainment failing to soothe his anger.

One of those who paused to smile and enjoy was Robert Leupold, 21, of nearby Albany. Sleepy-eyed, he handed over his money about 2 a.m., gave a perplexed look at the warbling toll collector and then broke into a grin as broad as Ligons'.

"He made me feel pretty cheerful, pretty good," Leupold said. "He made me realize there's other people as crazy as I am."

"Everywhere I go there's a pretty woman

"Won't somebody help ole lonesome me..."

Ligons said most other toll collectors shun him. "Some of them call me an Uncle Tom and some think I'm a bit crazy. But I don't care. It just fills my time and keeps me happy and makes other folks happy," he said.

Fellow toll taker John King, who like most of the people in the narrow metal booths keeps a radio blaring into the night and reads the newspaper when traffic is slow, said "Sometimes I turn off my radio just to listen to Andrew sing. I listen to get a good long laugh."

Ligons has been collecting tolls here for nearly 22 years. He started singing back in '61 because "I used to take my job home with me. So I started thinking what I could do that would be a deterrant to complaints people make against collectors because they're mad and want to take it out on somebody. And I started singing."

Ligons has gotten three or four letters of appreciation for his singing. He once helped prevent a suicide on the bridge, though he credits it to his mellow talking and not his semimelodious singing.

Occasionally, he said, a woman coming through stops to listen and then leaves her phone number.

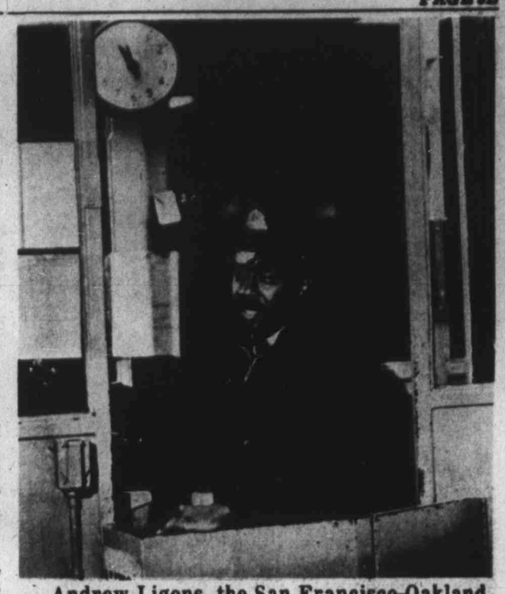

Sometimes people ask other toll collectors which booth he is in.

At Christmas, Ligons makes up Christmas songs. Many of his lyrics are mixtures of blues and the gospel music he heard as a kid growing up in Nebraska.

Not everyone responds favorably to the free entertainment. One truck driver looked down at him and demanded "What you singing for"'

"'Cause I like to, brother," Ligons said, returning to his song.

"Well, I don't want to be a superstar.
"I don't want to fly an aeroplane.
"I don't want to be rich.
"I don't want to be young.
"I don't want to be old.
"I just wanna be happy...."

Samson seems to be keeping Baby Greg Schneiderhan in bounds. After all, the bull terrier doesn't want Greg coming to grief again. Samson's repeated warning to Greg's mother recently was credited with saving the child's life when he became entwined in his bed clothing and was smothering.

Unlikely canine worthy of ticker-tape parade

Samson looks like an ordinary dog. But to to his Torrance, Calif. family, the 30 pound bull terrier is a hero. He is credited with saving the life of a 10-month-old infant.

By DAN REEDER
Copley News Service

Living in Los Angeles at a stocky 14 inches and 30 pounds, Samson doesn't look like a hero.

Some people would call him a mutt. Most would say he's just an ordinary dog.

But to a nearby Torrence family and a national dog club, Samson is a lifesaver worthy of a ticker-tape parade.

"If it wasn't for Samson, my baby wouldn't be alive today," says Fredricka Schneiderhan, whose family owns the dog.

"There's no doubt about it. The paramedics were adament about it. The baby never uttered a sound. If Samson hadn't alerted me that something was wrong, Greg would have died."

Samson is a purebred English Staffordshire bull terrier given to the Schneiderhans by Lynn Elitch, vice president of the National Staffordshire Bull Terrier Club.

He was given to them as a rescue case.

The dog's previous owner didn't have time to spend with him and the dog was characterized as stupid and an obedience problem.

But opinions of Samson later changed.

"I was on the phone to my mother-in-law when Samson came over to me," says Mrs. Schneiderhan. Her youngest of three sons, Greg, 10 months, was asleep in his room and the door was closed.

"The dog wanted some attention. I just thought he was lonely."

But Samson, whose breed is known for its inborn intelligence (as contrasted with the trained intelligence german shepherds possess) was insistent.

He began to pull at Mrs. Schneiderhan, but again she passed it off.

"He began to charge at my baby's door," Mrs. Schneiderhan says. "I didn't know what to make of it."

"When he came back to me and began to pull at me, I saw blood on his nose. I figured if there was something important enough to make him do that, I better find out what it was."

When she opened the door to Greg's room, Mrs. Schneiderhan was horrified.

The baby was tangled up in his blanket, choking and barely breathing. He was turning blue.

Greg was born with a heart defect and has blood sugar problems. He's suffered several heart attacks. Mrs. Schneiderhan says he's a very good baby, under the circumstances, and doesn't cry much.

"I untangled him, called the paramedics and began to give him mouth-to-mouth resuscitation," she says. "I got him breathing well again and the paramedics came and made sure he was all right."

"They said if it weren't for Samson behaving like he did, in all probability the baby would have died from strangulation or a heart attack."

When Samson came to the Schneiderhans, he needed some help physically and emotionally, said Mrs. Elitch. He was given to the family because they could provide some time and attention to the dog.

Fugitive polygamist spawns religious cult of followers

By MICHAEL D. LOPEZ
Copley News Service

To his small band of followers, he's known as "The Man Dressed in White Linen, the One Mighty and Strong."

In the hazy underground of Mormon splinter groups, he's feared as a man more deadly than Charles Manson, with a purpose more bizarre than "Helter Skelter."

Ervil M. LeBaron is a fugitive, sought by police in the U.S. West and in Mexico.

The district attorney in San Diego, Calif., has charged LeBaron with ordering the murder of a suburban National City man in 1975. One of his wives, Vonda White LeBaron, was earlier charged with actually committing the murder.

Polygamy is the major reason almost 300 groups have left the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints since the late 1800s.

The polygamy question delayed Utah's statehood until 1896, when the practice of plural marriage was officially dropped.

Since then, and continuing today, small bands of ultraconservative Mormons have left the mother church in search of what they call "religious freedom."

The splinter groups wandered the West and settled in colonies where men took several wives and raised large families believing their lifestyle followed God's teaching.

Ervil Morrell LeBaron was born Feb. 22, 1925, at Colonia Juarez, Mexico, to Alma Dayer LeBaron and his wife, Maude. He was the ninth of their 13 children.

Church records in the United States show that Ervil later joined the LDS church and became an elder. In the 1940s, he was sent back to Mexico as a missionary.

But he married more than one women. On June 6, 1944, according to records of the LDS Mexican Mission, he was releaed from his missionary duties and excommunicated from the church.

He joined his brothers Alma and Benjamin, and followed Benjamin, who claimed he was a prophet.

Benjamin, who used to roar like an animal to keep the evil spirits away, gained a few followers and was finally committed to the Utah State Mental Hospital from 1953-58. He is now in Canada.

The other brothers traveled to Salt Lake City, where they incorporated the Church of the First Born in the Fullness of Time under Utah law on Sept. 21, 1955. They claimed that brother Joel was a new prophet.

Apparently, they couldn't persuade many people, and they left Salt Lake City with only a handful of converts.

Brother Ross LeBaron remained behind and formed his own Church of the First Born, which he still leads. Utah sources said Ross has less than a dozen followers.

Joel and Ervil returned to the LeBaron ranch in Chihuahua, Mexico, where they renamed the community Colonia LeBaron. Joel became the church president and Ervil was appointed patriarch, but they left the settlement with a group of 13 families in 1962.

Joel claimed it was divine revelation that told him to take the group to a Mexican seacoast valley in Baja California, near San Quentin. There, Ervil engineered a system of windmill-powered pumps and the settlement came to be called Los Molinos (the windmills).

With Joel's religious guidance and Ervil's technical know-how, Los Molinos soon blossomed with vegetable gardens. Then the arguments began.

Ervil began pushing a plan to build hotels on nearby beaches to attract tourist dollars. Groundwater had turned increasingly saline and vegetable crops were suffering.

Joel argued to keep the colony free from outside influence and the villagers, by now more than 100, began taking sides.

Ervil wrote tracts saying Joel was a false prophet, and pointing out what he said were errors in Joel's teachings. He wrote that Joel's picture of a kindly, benevolent Christ was wrong, and he indicated a preference for the wrathful God of the Old Testament.

By now, the schism between Ervil and Joel was well-known to the residents. But few realized the depth of violence inherent in those differences.

Five shots ripped through the quiet of the Ensenada night on Aug. 20, 1972.

When Mexican police arrived at the two-story frame house, they found the bloody corpse of Joel LeBaron tied to a chair. He had been beaten and executed.

Fate of checkless society rests on American consumer acceptance

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

There is one thing certain about the highly heralded checkless society; politicians debate it; theoreticians dream about it; financial institutions plot and scheme to make sure they profit from it but the consumer will determine whether it ever really arrives.

And a determining factor in this decision by consumers may well be whether a checkless society will make it too easy for people to get neck-deep in debt or whether it might in fact make it more difficult for people to get overextended.

These are the observations of A.A. "Bud" Milligan, banker in Oxnard, Calif., and president of the American Bankers Association.

He has headed the bank since last fall and has personally observed the Washington in fighting as commercial banks, savings and loan associations, mutual savings banks, credit unions and other types of financial institutions wrestle for advantageous positions in the ongoing battle for consumer banking business.

During the 1960s and 1970s, politicians, government regulators, public representatives and the financial institutions have made many proposals and spent endless hours in testimony, but little has happened. "A great deal of legislation has been introduced but little has passed," said Milligan.

Commercial banks have more than $1 trillion in total resources; savings and loans have $440 billion, mutual savings banks (savings and loans-like institutions, mainly in the East) $140 billion and credit unions $54 billion.

Under current laws, each type of financial institution has an area of responsibility, but all are scrambling to invade one another's territory. Understandably, political clout makes the difference.

For example, credit unions today can pay higher interest rates because they are not restrained by regulation which puts a limit on 5.25 percent on what savings and loans can pay passbook savers and 5 percent on what banks can pay. Since they can pay higher rated (up to 7 percent in some areas of the country), they can attract more savings; by law, they are nonprofit cooperatives and don't pay income taxes.

With the help of friend-politicians, credit unions are expanding into mortgage and longer-term personal loans and are talking about providing certain kinds of trust services.

CLINT HURDLE of the Kansas City Royals is thrown out at second by Texas Ranger catcher Jim Sundberg after Fred Patek bunted in front of the plate. Ranger shortstop Bert Campernaris takes the throw, and the Rangers went on to win, 2-1. Story on Page 2-C.

January wind bites Cubs, 8-1

BY TED BATTLES

It's June in January when you're in love, so the song goes, but Tuesday night at Cubs Stadium, it was January in June and nobody loved it.

It was the kind of night when fans didn't leave after the game, right away, they couldn't. They were frozen to their seats.

And just to show how fouled up things were, Midland's Lee Smith retired 21 of the last 23 batters he faced, the last 19 in minimum fashion, yet it was Jackson pitcher Scott Holman who came with the victory.

Only trouble with Lee's 7 innings of no-hit pitching was that he was behind 8-0 when it began.

The Jackson Mets scored four runs in each of the first two innings to jump in front, which was bad news. Against the Mets pitching, Midland had totaled just eight runs in three previous games.

"And when that wind blew in out of the north," Cubs Manager Jim Saul observed, "Fly balls weren't going anywhere and there were some balls to center that were hit pretty good."

THE CUBS have seen a lot of good arms in this series, which Jackson squared at 2-2 Tuesday, "but none any better than the one we'll see tonight," Saul said. "When this Allen (Neil) throws, it's just whooom, whooom, whooom some more and when he needs a little extra, it's who-O-om."

Allen shut out the Cubs when he faced them in Jackson and, for that matter, so did Holman, 6-1 after his five-hitter Wednesday. He might have done it again, but the Cubs managed a couple of walks, an error and sacrifice fly by Joe Hernandez into a run in the seventh.

Over the last 31 innings, Holman, 19, a 3-11 relief pitcher last year, has allowed just two earned runs. And this was his second complete game, both against Midland.

Smith, after rocky start, the kind that has plagued him the last three games, reeled off a string of 13 batters retired in order before he walked Keno Perry to lead off the eight. Smight had plenty of cause to be cautious of Perry, since Keno hit a double in the first and a two-run homer in the second to help the Mets to their big early lead.

PERRY WAS quickly erased in a double play, so Smith, now 3-4, faced the minimum of 19 batters over the final 6 innings.

Actually, Smith really wasn't all that bad in the first two innings and the four runs in the second were all unearned.

Speedster William Wilson opened the game with a hard bunt to first and then beat Aaron Randall to the bag for a hit. Kelvin Chapman walked and Butch Benton beat out a bunt to load the bases with no one out. Dave Covert then singled home two runs and Keith Bodie singled home two more.

In the second, a couple of errors, a single by Chapman and Perry's two-run homer finished the Mets' scoring. And with the Jackson pitching staff, a couple of runs is usually all they get to work with, so the 8-0 cushion gave Holman a lead to which he isn't accustomed.

Holman struck out eight Cubs while Smith, usually plagued by control problems, walked only three and whiffed two.

BRUIN BREWIN'S— Allen, 3-5, but has suffered two shutout losses. His ERA is 2.45. The young fireballer has fanned 79 in 73 innings this season.... Jackson outfielder Bob Bryant sat out Tuesday's game, after umpire Seth Taran stepped on his hand as Bryant slid head first into third Monday and broke a finger...Pitcher David Overstreet has been returned to Pompano Beach to make room on the Cubs roster for Hernandez, who has been out since the season's opening series with a broken hand, the result of being hit by a pitch....Outfielder Jimmy Buckner has been Topps Minor League Player for the Month of May..."Joe hit a couple of balls on the nose tonight," Saul said, "despite all the time he missed."

Trojans batter Arizona State

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — "He gutted it out," Southern California Coach Rod Dedeaux said about pitcher Rod Boxberger after the top-ranked Trojans became the last undefeated team in the College World Series by beating second-ranked Arizona State.

Boxberger retired 12 of the final 13 Sun Devil batters as the Trojans took a 5-2 victory Tuesday night. He pitched his way out of a bases-loaded jam in the fifth inning after allowing a run-scoring single and gave up a solo home run to Jamie Allen in the sixth.

"Then Boxberger got tough. It took a lot of guts, "said USC's Chris Smith. who doubled home what proved to be the winning run.

The NCAA All-American team was announced before the gam, and USC pitcher Bill Bordley was selected along with three Sun Devils — none of whom could hit Boxberger very well.

Bob Horner, the Sun Devils' third baseman who was the first player selected in the major league draft earlier Tuesday, was hitless in four times at bat. Hubie Brooks, the third player taken in the draft, managed only a single and Chris Bando — Milwaukee infielder Sal Bando's younger brother — got two singles, flied out twice and struck out.

Brooks committed three errors in the game after a collision at second base in the third inning with Southern Cal's Bob Skube. Brooks turned the double play but had to get first aid for a cut on his shin.

"He (Brooks) was spiked and the trainer sewed him up. I felt the slide was out toward right center field," said Sun Devil Coach Jim Brock. "It's a judgment call. The umpire was there and is a good and honorable man. From where I was, it looked like an illegal slide."

"Anybody standing on the base is open season," said Skube. "The umpires knew what they were doing."

The biggest crowd ever to see a College World Series game — 15,261 — packed Rosenblatt Stadium for the showdown Tuesday night. Fans were lined up on the field along both foul lines all the way to the fence, but never interferred with play.

"You can play the Rose Bowl football game and it is all over," Dedeaux said. "But here, after a night like this before that crowd, you still have to come back again tomorrow."

San Antonio falls to Shreveport, 7-6

By The Associated Press

Ossie Oliveras singled to center to complete a three-run rally and provide the winning margin Tuesday night as Shreveport edged San Antonio, 7-6, in a Texas League baseball game.

In other Texas League action, Jackson defeated Midland 8-1 and Amarillo beat Arkansas, 61. The El Paso-Tulsa game was postponed because of rain and the second game of a doubleheader between Arkansas and Amarillo was rained out.

Shreveport took an early lead over San Antonio when John Dean slammed his sixth homer of the season. Randy Brandt, who relieved Bob Mazur in the seventh was the winning pitcher. He is now 1-3. Mike Wiggins, now 6-4, was the loser.

Ferguson moves to third round

TROON, Scotland (AP)—Midland golfer Ted Ferguson advanced to the third round of the British Amateur. Golf Championship here Tuesday, but it wasn't easy.

Ferguson edged out Ricardo Rossi of Brazil by one hole in the match play tournament, which features some of the best amateur golfers in the world.

Ferguson is one of four Americans to get through the second round. The remaining half of the second round plus the entire third round will be played today, with the fourth and fifth rounds Thursday, the quarters and semi-finals Friday and the final over 36 holes Saturday.

Don Roxburgh, a young, fringe player on the Scottish national team, eliminated Jim Gabrielson, an Atlanta insurance broker and chief American hope, 1-up on the 19th hole in second round play Tuesday.

Gabrielson, a Walker Cup player in the early 1970s, was losing finalist in the amateur four years ago. This time he was one of 28 Americans who won their first round matches Monday and Tuesday. Thirteen of those played their second round matches late Tuesday and by the end of the day only four were left.

The others play their second round matches Wednesday.

Tuesday's second round winners were Frank Campbell, the Huntsville, Ala., veteran who beat Ian Bradshaw of Scotland by two holes; John Eller Jr. of Winston-Salem, N.C., who defeated Peter Martin of Lithonia, Ga., 3 and 2; Richard Welch of Northbrook, Ill., who downed Gary Bartlett of Canada 5 and 2.

Gabrielson's defeat was a shock. He started confidently, collected five pars plus a birdie to go 2-up after six holes, then suddenly fell apart. He started to stray from the fairways and his chipping was too inconclusive to get him out of trouble near the greens.

Suddenly he dropped three out of the next six holes and despite taking a string of pars was still one down coming to the 223-yard, par 3 17th. Roxburgh bunkered himself there and Gabrielson, on the green 30 yards from the pin with his tee shot, putted to within a foot of the hole and was down in par.

That put him level again after Roxburgh ran off the green and was down for a birdie four.

On the par 4 18th, both were on the green's edge with their approaches and both were down with a couple of putts each to stay even.

But on the 19th Roxburgh recovered from the rough to within six feet of the pin, while Gabrielson, whose drive landed awkwardly on the side of a bunker, blasted over the green into the rough, chipped too short and took two putts for a bogey 5 to lose the match.

Earlier, Allen Waddell of Fort Worth, Texas, scored a notable first round win 3 and 2 against former British Walker Cup player Peter Hedges.

Fire draws investigation

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Authorities investigated today the cause of a motel fire that claimed the life of Auburn University head basketball Coach Paul Lambert early Tuesday.

Lambert, 43, was found sprawled on the floor of his smoke-filled room in the Airport Holiday Inn here after the fire forced some guests to slide to the ground on sheets.

Coroner Don Kilgore said Lambert died of smoke inhalation. Six other persons were taken to hospitals and were treated for smoke inhalation and minor burns before being released.

"We can't tell if he was groping for an exit, or what, but the room was so filled with smoke you could hardly see the body," Columbus Fire Chief George Lamb said.

He said there was no reason to suspect arson in the blaze, but he added that the cause of the fire was still under investigation.

"It's very possible someone may have walked up the corridor and the fire could have started from a cigarette, or it could have started in one of the rooms. We're trying to pinpoint it now," he said.

Lamb said there were about 50 to 75 sets of box springs and mattresses stored in the corridors of the motel while rooms were being renovated.

"They caught on fire from one end to the other," he said. "It was a major contributor to the intense heat because these things burn quickly and they burn very hot."

District Fire Chief Robert Ledford described the fire as a "hell of a holocaust at one time."

Bullets, Sonics save best for last tonight

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle SuperSonics and Washington Bullets have saved the best for last.

"I think the seventh game will be the best of the series," said Bullets forward Bobby Dandridge. "I think it will be even right to the last basket ..."

"Come Wednesday night," said Sonics forward John Johnson, "it's the biggest game in our franchise's history. And we're going to win."

So the stage is set for the seventh and final game of the National Basketball Association championship series tonight in the Seattle Center Coliseum.

The winning team in the final game of the longest NBA season ever will be crowned the league's 32nd champion. The losing team will find solace in the fact that it isn't a loser at all; it simply will finish second best.

Tonight's game — seven months, 23 days after the opening tap of the regular season — became necessary after Washington humbled the Sonics 117-82 at Landover, Md., Sunday, squaring the best-of-seven playoff finals at three games apiece.

The outcome of the contest matching these two evenly matched and well-coached clubs hinges on which club executes its game plan best. If the Bullets dominate the boards, get their running game going and work the ball in to their big men like Dandridge and Elvin Hayes, they should win.

If the Sonics can control the tempo of the game with their talented guard trio of Gus Williams, Dennis Johnson and Fred Brown, they should win.

It depends on who you talk to whether the site of the game, the 14,098-seat Coliseum where the Sonics have won 22 straight, will be a factor.

"We're happy to be playing in front of our fans," said Seattle Coach Lenny Wilkens. "The home-court advantage has to help us in a game like this."

Hayes sees it differently. "We're pros. This is a big game and we all know it," he said. "The crowd won't be a factor. The crowd can't play on the floor and the crowd can't put the ball in the hole."

Sunday's game was the worst Seattle has played in weeks. The Bullets, who needed the victory to stay alive in the title chase, dominated in every statistical department.

Washington is counting on a carryover from its 35-point triumph. The Sonics are banking that they can't play that bad twice in a row, and certainly won't look that miserable at home.

"Losing the way they did has got to be on their minds," said Hayes. "It's going to be very difficult for them to shake it so quickly."

Jenkins does it again

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Texas Manager Billy Hunter gave the ball to Ferguson Jenkins and said in so many words, "Do it again."

Of course, not even Hunter could expect a replay of Jenkins' four-hit, one-run performance against the Kansas City Royals earlier this season.

But that's what he got Tuesday night — exactly.

"He's phenomenal," Hunter exuded after watching Jenkins hurl a four-hitter while beating the Royals 2-1. "He can really pitch to spots — and with the team he was facing, you really have to do that."

To make Tuesday night's coincidence even more ironic was Dennis Leonard's presence for the Royals. He was also the losing pitcher when Jenkins last beat Kansas City on April 25.

"I was hoping for a repeat performance from Mr. Jenkins," said Hunter. "Like one run, four hits. And I certainly got it. Actually I would have liked more runs. Next time I'll be more specific in my request."

In other American League games, the Oakland A's pounded the Boston Red Sox 7-1; the Seattle Mariners tripped the New York Yankees 4-3; the Baltimore Orioles beat the California Angels 8-6; the Oilwaukee Brewers turned back the Detroit Tigers 5-1 and the Chicago White Sox defeated the Cleveland Indians 3-0.

While Jenkins was doing the pitching for Texas, Bobby Bonds was doing the hitting. The outfielder's 400-foot home run into the left field stands in the fifth inning proved to be the decisive run.

Bump Wills singled after Juan Beniquez doubled in the third inning for Texas' other run. George Brett homered in the fourth inning for Kansas City's only score.

Jenkins allowed only one walk and three singles in addition to Brett's homer while posting his sixth victory in nine decisions.

A's 7, Red Sox 1

Rookie Taylor Duncan drove in four runs with his first two American League hits, a double and a three-run homer, to lead Oakland past Boston.

The first six A's runs, charged to Boston starter Bill Lee, were unearned because of three errors by Red Sox third baseman Butch Hobson and one by shortstop Rick Burleson.

"I was 0-for-9 when I got the double," said Duncan, "so it felt good. It's hard to describe the feeling when I hit the homer, especially since I did it in front of some people from home. I'm from Sacramento."

Mariners 4, Yankees 3

Jose Baez scored from second on an error by second baseman Willie Randolph in the ninth inning as Seattle beat slumping New York.

Juan Bernhardt opened the Seattle ninth with a double that eluded the diving grasp of right fielder Reggie Jackson and Baez went in to run for Bernhardt. Then Julio Cruz bunted down the third base line and Yankee reliever Rich Gossage made the throw to first, but it glanced off Randolph's glove into the right field bullpen.

The loss was the seventh in the last eight games for the defending world champions.

Orioles 8, Angels 6

Larry Harlow collected three hits off Nolan Ryan and added three stolen bases to pace a 12hit assault against the California ace as Baltimore won its seventh straight game.

Eddie Murray also had three hits off Ryan and reliever Dyar Miller and drove in a pair of runs. The loss was the third straight for Ryan, 3-6, who has allowed 16 earned runs in the last 161-3 innings. Winner Dennis Martinez, 5-3, pitched seven innings before needing relief help.

Brewers 5, Tigers 1

Gorman Thomas belted a two-run homer and Paul Molitor hit a bases-empty shot to back Lary Sorensen's nine-hit pitching, leading Milwaukee over Detroit.

Sorensen's complete game was his seventh in a row, tying a Brewer record set last season

"Lary is going to be a very good pitcher," said Detroit's Ron LeFlore. "It's not often you get somebody right out of college and with a half-year in the minors whe will challenge the hitters the way he does. I expect Lary Sorensen t become one of the great righthanders in the league."

White Sox 3, Indians 0

Francisco Barrios scattered seven hits to lead Chicago over Cleveland. Barrios allowed three walks and struck out three to help the hot White Sox win their ninth game in the last 10.

The White Sox gave Barrios all the runs he needed with a two-run fourth capped by Jorge Orta's RBI double.

King Kong Kingman sets off fireworks

By The Associated Press

Dave Kingman's power was switched on, so Chicago Cubs fans got some great entertainment.

But because something switched the power off in Olympic Stadium, Montreal's fans had to settle for entertainment minus bats and balls.

Kingman belted a 400-foot grand-slam homer at Wrigley Field Tuesday to lead the Cubs to their 10th straight victory at home, a 9-4 verdict over the Houston Astros.

Kingman's sixth-inning power display shared the National League spotlight with a sixth-inning power blackout in Montreal, where the Expos led the Padres 2-0 when most of the lights surrounding the field went dim.

With no lights to play by and no explanation available for the blackout, the Montreal-San Diego game was suspended and will be completed tonight prior to the regularly scheduled game. Meanwhile, players from both team provided some impromptu entertainment for the fans.

With just enough light to see the on-field shenanigans, the fans were treated to acrobatics, match races and makeshift bowling matches.

Padres' second baseman Derrel Thomas was first back on the field and he started bowling balls toward third base from home plate and declaring them fair or foul.

Home plate umpire Bruce Froemming then joined in, rolling a ball down the first base line that the Expos' Warren Cromartie emphatically declared foul as the crowd howled.

Cromartie, Gary Carter, Andre Dawson, Larry Parrish, Pepe Frias and Ellis Valentine then conducted infield practice with an invisible ball.

San Diego shortstop Ozzie Smith started doing handsprings on the field, bringing Cromartie out of the dugout for some acrobatics of his own.

That was followed by a challenge race between Thomas and Dawson from their respective dugouts to second base, which Dawson won to the delight of the crowd.

In serious National League action, Philadelphia edged San Francisco 7-6, St. Louis topped Cincinnati 4-1, Pittsburgh beat Atlanta 4-2 and Los Angeles belted the New York Mets 8-2.

The Expos scored their runs in the first on Bill Almon's error on Tony Perez's grounder and Gary Carter's sacrifice fly. Wayne Twitchell was hurling the shutout when the park went dark.

Cubs 9, Astros 4

Houston Manager Bill Virdon made the mistake of ordering pitcher Oscar Zamora to walk Larry Biittner to load the bases and face Kingman.

"Whenever they walk someone to get to me, the ball looks double size," said Kingman. "It happened once before this season when Craig Swan of the Mets walked a guy in front of me. I hit a three-run homer and beat him."

"I can understand it. It's a percentage move ...a righthander vs. a right-hander. They're looking for the double play or the strikeout.

"But I'm a better hitter with men on base. Most of my hits come with men on base."

"I felt we had a better chance for a strikeout or a pop out with Kingman rather than Biittner," Virdon explained. "We took a chance."

Dave Roberts, 3-0, helped himself with a three-run double and raised his batting average to .417.

"I'm going after Ted Williams' record," said Roberts in reference to the last .400 hitter in the majors. "When you're hitting better than you're pitching, you have to talk about your hitting. I haven't struck out this year yet and I manage to keep the ball in play."

Phillies 7, Giants 6

Philadelphia rallied for the second straight night to overcome the Giants. Greg Luzinski's two-out, bases-loaded single knocked home the decisive runs in the ninth as the Phils stormed back from a 6-2 deficit. Luzinski entered the game in a 7-for-61 slump.

Rookie Jim Morrison belted his second homer in as many nights for the Phils, who won their fifth straight. Larry Bowa and Bake McBride pulled off two double steals, including a daring one with two out in the ninth.

Bill Madlock had three hits and scored three times for San Francisco, which remained a half-game in front of Cincinnati in the NL West.

Cards 4, Reds 1

John Denny handcuffed the Reds on five hits and Jerry Morales had two RBI in the Cards' four-run first inning. Tom Hume and Pedro Borbon held the Cardinals to three hits.

Pirates 4, Braves 2

Jim Bibby won his second straight start after being placed in the Pirates rotation, holding Atlanta to six hits over seven innings. Kent Tekulve relieved and picked up his sixth save with two innings of one-hit ball.

Dale Murphy hit his fourth homer of the year for Atlanta.

Dodgers 8, Mets 2

Los Angeles snapped its five-game losing streak as Doug Rau, 6-2, went all the way. He was supported by Steve Garvey and Davey Lopes, who each had two RBI.

Willie Montanez homered for New York.

Dick Motta sees title game as 'Death March'

By PAUL ATTNER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Bullets coach Dick Motta has likened the NBA playoff grind that will end for both Washington and Seattle Wednesday night to the sports equivalent of a death march.

"You start out with 22 teams in the regular season and then they make you travel 2,000 miles to get it down to 12 for the playoffs," he said. "Then they get it down to two survivors and then they just let 'em beat each other up.

"It consumes you. The only gray hairs you see on my head are the ones that have grown since the playoffs started. But that's the way I like it."

WHEN THE final game of this 32nd NBA season ends Wednesday, Seattle and Washington will have played the most contests in league history, 104 and 103, respectively. It will also be the longest season, finishing one day later than the 1976 playoffs. For the Bullets, the campaign has stretched from rookie camp in mid-September through the 82-game regular season to this title game, the one victory the franchise has been seeking for 17 years.

The rewards of course, for the long grind will be plentiful. For finishing with the third best record in the Eastern Conference the Bullets split $22,500; for defeating Atlanta, the players, divided $22,500; for defeating San Antonio $37,500; for winning the Eastern Conference the league pool was $50,000.

If the Bullets win the title Wednesday, (they are 4 1-2 point underdogs) they will split $150,000 (the 11 active players vote on shares, with the injured Phil Chenier and trainer John Lally likely to reap some of the bounty); if they lose, they divide $100,000.

The Bullets have been involved in four playoff series involving 20 games, about two-thirds of a normal college basketball season. It will have taken them five days short of two months to arrive at this contest, beginning with an opening miniseries victory over Atlanta on April 12, when even Motta had his doubts how long the club would last.

EACH PLAYER has been affected differently by the playoffs. Elvin Hayes has ridden an emotional roller coaster. Bob Dandridge has tried to protect his body from wearing out. zes Unseld has attmpted to be the steadying force. Mitch Kupchak has battled a maddening shooting slump. Tom henderson has wondered about playing time. And Kevin Grevey has counted his contusions.

"John Havlieck taught me what the playoffs are all about," said Dandridge. "He would play each game like it was his last one and then he would go and collapse in his hotel room from mental strain. I found out what it was like to be intense every time out."

Kevin Grevey doesn't recount the last two months with memories of wins or losses. Instead, he looks at his body and points out the various injuries he has sustained since April.

"I can't believe anyone could be hurt this much," he said. "Against Seattle alone, I've had four injuries. Four injuries. It's sickening to come this far and then have stuff like this ruin it. It takes the fun away from the playoffs because I can't contribute the way I want."

AS HE spoke, he fingered a brace on his left wrist, which he unknowingly sprained Friday in the fifth game against the Sonics. Of all his injuries, Grevey finds this one is the most irritating because it affects both his shooting and his ball-handling.

"People keep asking me if I am injury prone, but I'm not. I never missed a game in high school or college because of an injury. Now everything seems to be catching up to me at once."

Grevey, who was bothered by a hamstring pull, an ankle sprain, a sore neck and a scratched eye during the regular season, made it through the Atlanta and San Antonio series without major problems.

But against Philadelphia he pulled a neck muscle while drying his hair with a towel. And he irritated tendons in his knee by slamming into a table during a game. Then he sprained an ankle in the opener against Seattle, strained his knee so badly that fluid had to be drained from it before game three, and developed a hip pointer in game four. And now the wrist.

"I'm tired," he said. "Both mentally and physically. That has to be a reason I'm getting hurt so much. All of us are feeling it. Our resistance isn't as high as it was. You can take only so much and then there will be injuries because of fatigue.

"You can't believe the time I've spent in hospitals and training rooms getting therapy. No one asks me about strategy or anything anymore. All they want to know is about injuries. But after Wednesday, I at least can get away for a while and rest. That sounds like a great idea."

There were well-founded predictions two months ago that the Bullets, who had struggled to finish third in the Eastern Conference, would not survive if they got by the Atlanta Hawks in the playoff miniseries.

But Atlanta helped shape the Bullets into a championship contender. Hubie Brown's bunch made Washington work for every point. To win, the Bullets found they had to execute their offense and play more as a team, both of which had been problems in March.

They also discovered they could win despite injuries. After capturing the opener in Capital Centre, they took game two — and the series — despite the absence of Dandridge, who had a sore neck. Grevey scored 41 points in that overtime triumph and Greg Ballard, playing for Dandridge, contributed 13 points and 11 rebounds.

But Atlanta was no San Antonio and it seemed that the run-and-gun Spurs would be able to handle Washington in the Eastern Conference semifinals. They trampled the Bullets by 11 in the first contest.

But Motta had everyone healthy again so he could exploit San Antonio weaknesses. As long as the Bullets could rebound well, he felt they could beat the Spurs by fast breaking and working on their defensive weaknesses.

With Grevey scoring 31 points, Hayes 28 and Dandridge 16, the Bullets won game two at San Antonio, then ripped off two more victories in Capital Centre to take command of the series. Hayes, the playoff fall guy in years past, was rebounding, scoring and blocking shots and forcing San Antonio to concentrate its offense around the perimeter.

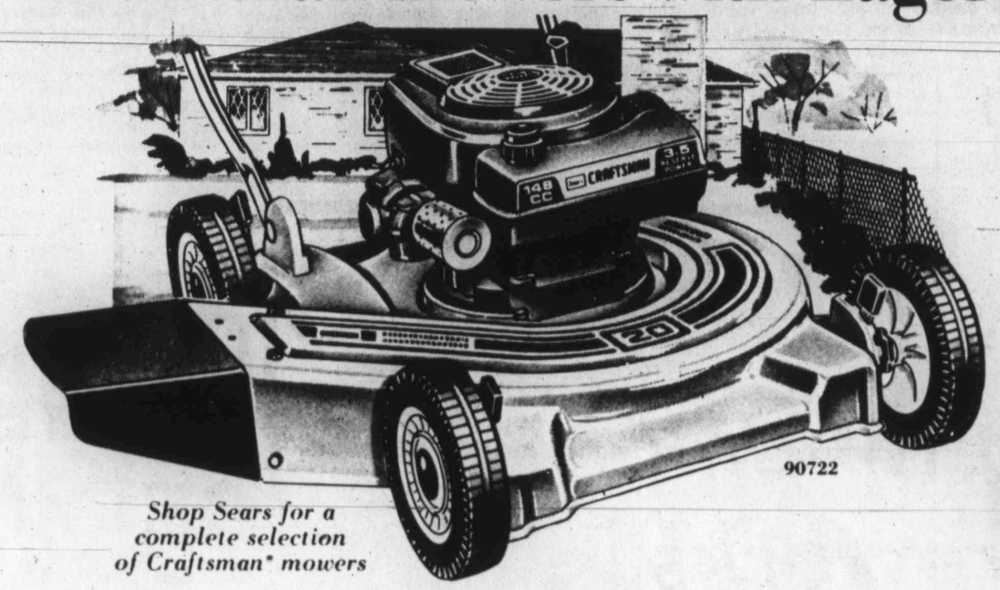

Only George Gervin, the Iceman, kept the Spurs competitive. He averaged 35 points before tiring in the final game, when a Hayes dunk and then his block of a Gervin drive wrapped up the series, 103-100, and sent the Bullets against the Philadelphia 76ers in the conference finals.

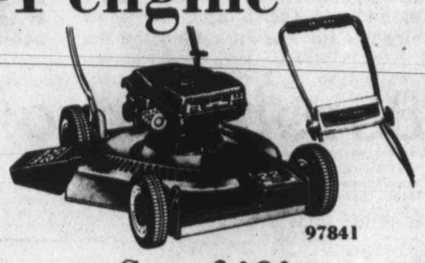

Washington set the pattern for the round in the first game, when Hayes scored nine points in overtime to pull out a victory at the Spectrum. He finished with 28 points and 18 rebounds for the game, but his effort was almost wasted when Philadelphia wiped out a four-point lead.

Charles Finley makes mundane draft a sparkler

NEW YORK (AP) — Charlie Finley, the owner and manager of the Oakland A's, was barking on the phone to his stand-in manager, Jack McKeon.

"Hey Jack, who you got pitching on Sunday?"

"Broberg," answered McKeon.

"Scratch him, I got a replacement."

"Who he?"

"Michael Thomas Morgan."

"Yeah?"

"Yeah!"

"That's the way to go boss."

Finley, the P.T. Barnum of the baseball world, had done it again, creating excitement and interest out of something as mundane as Tuesday's free agent baseball draft of amateur talent.

Before he even picked the 18year-old Morgan, a hard-throwing high school senior from Las Vegas, Finley had signed him to a bonus or more than $50,000. Then he decided to throw him into the starting rotation for the A's, leaders in the American League West.

"He has a lot of poise," said Finley from his office in Chicago. "He told me he'd go out there Sunday on that mound, take command, take control and challenge the hitters.

"I think there is a danger of him getting his head knocked off. But after talking with the kid, I realized there was no possibility of his losing his confidence. He impressed me very much with his cocky confidence."

Morgan was the fourth player selected in the draft, which continues today. Until Finley went on his youth kick, the major interest of the draft focused on the domination by College World Series contenders, Arizona State and Southern California.

Arizona State had four players selected, including No. 1 pick Bob Horner by Atlanta, No. 3 selection Hubert Brooks by the New York Mets, and Chris Bando by Cleveland. Bando is the brother of Milwaukee third baseman Sal Bando, who also once starred at Arizona State.

Southern Cal players were called six times Tuesday, including Rod Boxberger, the No. 11 pick, by Houston, and Rob Hertel, the Trojans' star quarterback in football and infielder in baseball.

Horner, the NCAA career home run leader with 56, expects to come to terms with the Braves after the College World Series this week. Then he will be sent to Savannah of the Southern League for seasoning.

The right-handed Morgan, who struck out 111 batters in 72 innings for Valley High School this season, will be thrown right to the wolves Sunday when he faces Baltimore.

It will be the third time Finley has made an instant major leaguer out of a high school pitcher. On July 16, 1961, Lew Krausse pitched a 3-hit shutout for the A's over the then Los Angeles Angels.

Mike Morgan shocked; now come Orioles

OAKLAND (AP) — "It was a shock to me that they invited me up here to play," said 18-year-old Mike Morgan who will pitch for the Oakland A's six days after graduating from high school.

It was a shock to several of the A's players, too, when they learned Tuesday that the righthanded pitcher from Las Vegas, Nev. will go on the roster Sunday and start against the Baltimore Orioles.

"You're kidding me!" one player said. "I don't care who you are, you don't come out of high school and pitch in the big leagues right away. He's going against Baltimore? I ain't coming. I'm not sure I want to see it."

A's owner Charles O. Finley is calling the shots, though, and decided on the immediate trial for the husky, 6-foot-3 pitcher who was given uniform No. 15 for his first workout with the team before Tuesday night's game against Boston.

Manager Jack McKeon said, "Who knows what he'll do? Charlie did the same thing with Lew Krausse and he pitched a three-hit shutout."

Finley referred to the 1961 debut of Krausse and also to the signing of Catfish Hunter, who joined the A's right out of high school, in announcing the plans for Morgan.

jbut the A's team's which Krausse and Hunter joined in Kansas City were at the bottom of the American League standing. The current A's are the surprising leaders in the AL West, and the pitching staff has the best earned run average in the majors, 2.60.

"Why don't they send the kid to double-A where he belongs?" one player remarked.

Morgan, who had an .068 ERA and allowed 26 hits while striking out 111 in 72 innings this season in high school, said he didn't ask to join the A's imkmediately.

"He (Finley) told me if I'm winning and looking good, I'll stay. If it turns out I need experience, I'll go down to the minors," Morgan said.

The first pitcher chosen in the annual baseball draft got a quick taste of big league ribbing when he walked into the A's clubhouse and was introduced to teammates.

First baseman Dave Revering told him, "We won't put any pressure on you, kid. If you win, it's okay. If you lose, pack 'em up."

Cauthen rode in on flying sausage

NEW YORK (AP) — Laz Barrera had just cleared the cold coffee and day-old doughnuts from his desk when someone asked if Affirmed had lost any weight in his bid to win the Triple Crown, which he can do by winning the Belmont Stakes Saturday.

"I lost weight," Barrera replied. "Patrice Wolfson (the wife of the colt's owner) lost weight. The groom lost eight pounds."

IT WASN'T meant to be a cute answer. It was a Barrerism — the trainer's way of getting to the heart of a question — in this instance an explanation that the Triple Crown takes something out of any horse person involved in it.

Once when asked to explain the unexplainable magic of 18- year-old Steve Cauthen, Barrera said it must be that he came from another planet "in a flying sausage."

Or in talking about the gutwrenching tension of training horses, on any level: "If you open up the stomach of every trainer and you find only one ulcer (apiece), it's a miracle. I guarantee you'll find three."

Laz Barrera has earned his ulcer. He's worked long and hard and now that he's on top he continues to pay his dues in hard work and worry. The worry isn't always visible. The hard work shows.

THE CUBAN-BORN trainer, winner of Eclipse Awards as the nation's top trainer in 1977-78, is having an incredible year. In a little over five months Barrera-trained horses, including Affirmed, J.O. Tobin, Barrera, Sensational, Star Spangled, Mashteen, have won 23 stakes and earned a little of $2 million. The record earnings for a trainer in a single year is $2.9 million.

"He doesn't like to pass up anything," said Barrera's son Albert, also a trainer, of his father's constant travel and attention to his job. "He's likes to keep a close watch on everthing ... including me."

And he leaves nothing to chance. He has three assistant trainers, including his 18-year-old son, Larry, and a payroll of $12,000 a week to attend to about 52 horses for various owners he has in New York and California.

But while he has capable help, Laz is the leader.

"I think my father devotes 99 percent of his times to his hores," said Albert.

THAT ONE percent then certainly goes to his family ... and it's a very big one percent.

"I worked for Laz for 16 years," said the trainer's older brother Luis. "He taught me a lot and, now that his sons are training, he helped me get started with my own stable."

Barrera takes particular pride in his sons. "Albert (24) is going to be one of the best trainers in the country," he said, adding "I'm very proud of Larry." Larry, 18, is more than an assistant-in-name to his father.

"He's full of advice all the time," said Albert, who dropped out of college in his junior year. "The foundation I have he gave me. That was the best college I could have."

"Larry and me are alike, more cautious," said Barrera. "Albert is more like his mother (Carmen)."

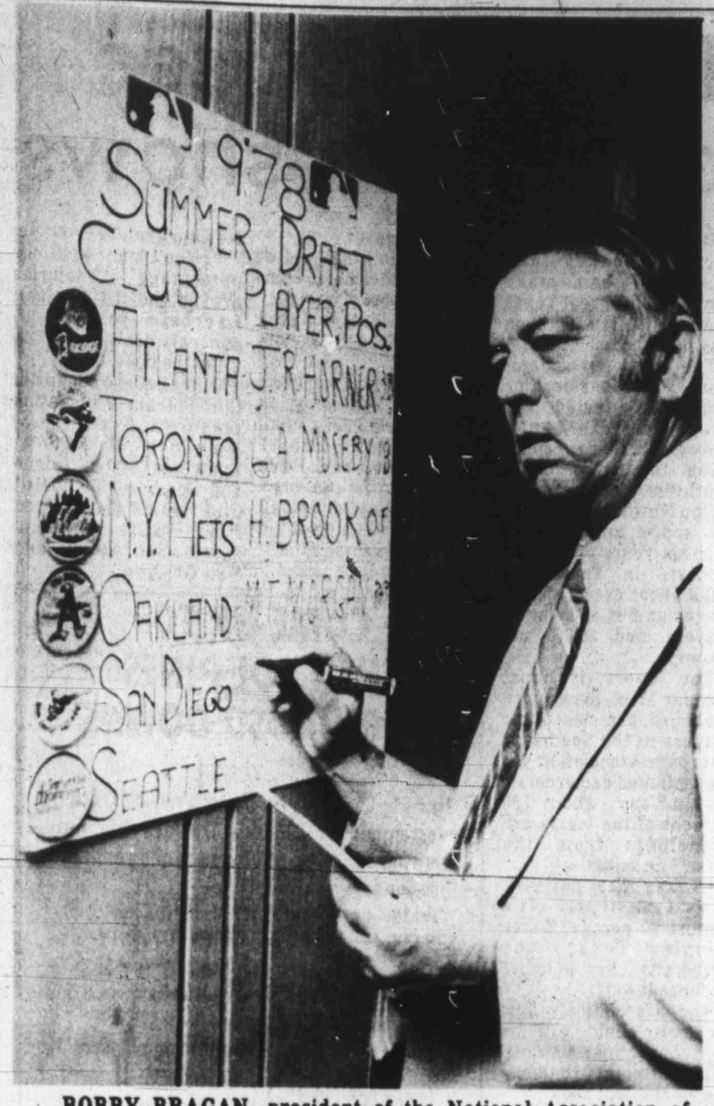

A sense of humor has been an integral part of Barrera's makeup, even under pressure.

Asked after Affirmed won the Derby how the victory differed from the 1976 Derby when he won with Bold Forbes, Barrera, a dapper figure in gray, said: "Last time I wore a blue suit."

Bold Forbes is the colt that brought prominence to Laz Barrera. Many horseman consider his training of Bold Forbes, a sprinter, to win the 1¼- mile Derby and the 1½-mile Belmont one of the great training achievements.

LAZ WAS born in Cuba, one of 12 children, 53 years ago. His father raced quarter horses — "my horse against your horse in a field" — and his mother's father "used to own a farm where the racetrack was built (Havana's Oriental Park). When my father married my mother they moved one block from the race track. Naturally, the race track was in my blood."

Barrera got a trainer's license in 1941 and trained in Cuba for four years before moving to Mexico City where he was a leading trainer for many years. In 1959, he moved to California and then made his headquarters New York in 1961.

Dibbs, linesman throw net darts

PARIS (AP) — Men's quarter-final competition began in the $400,000 French Open today with Sweden's Bjorn Borg and Argentina's Guillermo Vilas favored to advance toward a clash in the final Sunday.

Vilas, seeded No. 2 behind Borg, faced Chile's rising star Hans Gildemeister today, and Borg will play Mexican Raul Ramirez, the sixth seed, on Thursday.American Dick Stockton faced No. 5 Manuel Orantes of Spain today.

Borg, who celebrated his 22nd birthday Tuesday with a 6-2, 64, 7-6 victory over American Roscoe Tanner, has been playing splendid clay court tennis here in quest of his third French Open title.

Defending champion Vilas did not play impressively in his opening matches in this 14-day competition, but came back aggressively Monday to whip America's Arthur Ashe.

Italy's Corrado Barazzutti had little trouble whipping Czech Stanislas Birner 6-1, 6-4, 6-1 Tuesday, but the 25-year-old Roman says he doesn't feel content with his game and made a disappointed announcement.

"I don't think I'm playing well. I'm not very confident," said Barazzutti, Italy's No. 1 player. "I'm very tired. I'm not going to Wimbledon. I'm going home to Rome to rest for two weeks after this is over."

American Eddie Dibbs whipped Poland's Wojtek Fibak 6-3, 7-5, 6-1 Tuesday, but not without raising some hackles at famed Roland Garros Stadium.

Dibbs disputed a linesman's call against him and stalked across the court to see the mark the ball made when it struck the soft clay.

"Don't argue, Mr. Dibbs," the umpire warned. "Play tennis and don't argue."

"You keep quiet," Dibbs shot back. "You understand?"

An unidentified spectator thought to be an American stood and yelled: "Don't talk like that. You're an American, act like one. And you're an ugly American."

"Go home," Dibbs retorted.

Dibbs faces Barazzutti, also known for a quick temper, Thursday.

In other matches Tuesday, Ramirez downed Victor Pecci of Paraguay 6-2, 6-2, 7-6, and Orantes and compatriot Jose Higueras beat Stockton and fellow American Erik van Dillen in the doubles quarter-finals 6-0, 7-5.

In the women's quarter-finals, defending champion Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia beat American Kathy May 6-4, 6-2, and Czech Regina Marsikova downed Helga Masthoff of West Germany 6-3, 6-3.

Holmes shoves Ken Norton

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Challenger Larry Holmes agitated and finally shoved World Boxing Council heavyweight champion Ken Norton in a confrontation between workouts Tuesday at Caesars Palace.

Handlers quickly separated the two, who meet Friday night for the WBC title, before any closed-fist punches could be thrown.

The scrap occurred in the pavilion of Caesars Palace after Holmes had concluded his workout. It was Norton's turn, but the champion earlier had sent word he would not arrive until Holmes left the premises.

Neither had shown any respect for the other personally in news conferences, and Holmes decided he wanted to watch Norton work. First he sat in the stands, and later went down on the floor.

Norton had decided to start his rope-jumping session despite the presence of the challenger, but when Holmes walked over to the immediate area, the ex-Marine walked up face to face and that's when Holmes gave him a two-handed shove to the chest.

Even after the two were separated, Holmes remained in the area until executive officer John Mangiaracina of the Nevada Athletic Commission warned that fines would be levied if the two camps did not separate immediately. Holmes then left the arena floor.

Promoter Don King had attempted earlier to have the challenger return to his quarters, but Holmes said loudly, "You're promoting the fight and I respect you. I'm not going anywhere and nobody can make me."

Mangiaracina talked briefly with Holmes and said he thought the Easton, Pa., heavyweight was simply going to watch Norton for a couple of minutes and then leave.

Holmes earlier had climbed into the ring at 4 p.m., when Norton was scheduled to work, and held a Muhammad Ali-type dissertation with the approximately 150 fans who were watching the workout.

"I can't predict the round because I'm not a slugger, but I know Ken Norton will fall," said the undefeated Holmes over the ring microphone.

In a 10-to 15-minute session in the ring, Holmes gave a footwork demonstration and asked, "How is he going to catch me? He's a mummy."

Earlier at a news conference, Norton voiced his animosity toward Holmes and said the challenger had twice accosted him while they were here.

"The first time I was walking down the street for exercise and he hollered, 'That ain't going to help you.' The second time he said, 'Be ssre and show up Friday.'"

Norton said he rejoined, "I'll be there, pinhead. Don't wory about it."

Asked about the "pinhead," Norton replied, "It's not a nickname, it just fits him.

"I said Thursday he was ignorant and he showed how ignorant he was by keeping on talking at that news conference."

Argentina edges France crew, 2-1

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Another wild night of revelry in Buenos Aires. Yelling soccer fans paraded through the streets and motorists sounded a victory tattoo on their horns into the small hours.

Soccer fever mounted to an unprecedented level in Argentina as the home team edged France 2-1 in Buenos Aires' River Plate Stadium and clinched a place in the second round.

It was a night of agony and ecstasy for Argentines. The 77,000 screaming, flag-waving fans in the stadium saw their team lose its lead, falter for a while and then regain it.

Leopoldo Luque, their hero, scored tee winner with a spectacular shot from 27 yards and shortly afterwards was writhing on the grass in pain from an arm injury.

Luque was helped off, and came back in the final minute with his arm heavily strapped, just in time for the final eruption of enthusiasm as Argentina held out against the last dying French attacks.

Italy, impressive 3-1 winners over Hungary, also made sure of a place in the second round. The Italians and Argentines are joint leaders in Group 1, each with 4 points from two games, and cannot be caught.

For France and Hungary, the dream of the World Cup is over. They are scheduled to play each other Saturday, but then will go home.

The French provided the greatest thrill so far in the tournament, a classic goal by Bernard Lacombe after only 30 seconds against Italy last Friday.

Against Argentina Tuesday night, they lost their goalkeeper Jean-Paul Bertrand-Demanes. He crashed against the goalpost and injured his back in making one of the finest saves of the championships.

Hungary reached the end of the trail mauled and sadly depleted. They had two players sent off the field in a frenzied opening match and lost two more key players with injuries, and were no match for Italy.

Italian stars Paolo Rossi and Roberto Bettega wrapped up victory for their team with two goals in a fantastic 60-second spell.

West Germany, defending champion, went on a scoring spree and humbled Mexico 6-0. Karl-Heinz Rummenigge and Heinz Flohe helped themselves to 2 goals each against a wobbly Mexican defense.

West Germany and Poland, who overcame Tunisia 1-0, appear likely to go forward from Group 2. But both have one more game to play to make sure.

French forward Bernard Lacombe has Argentina's Daniel Passarella all over him as they run into each other during Argentina-France match of the World Soccer Cub Tuesday night. (AP Laserphoto)

AAU faces record try

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Tully and Mac Wilkins are primed for world record assaults at the Amateur Athletic Union Track Field Championships that open Thursday at UCLA, but an outstanding field of sprinters could rewrite some records, too.

UCLA's Tully recently set a pending — and disputed — record of 18 feet, 8¾ inches in the pole vault, and could top that at the familiar surroundings of Drake Stadium.

He'll face six others who have gone 18 feet or better — Larry Jessee, Jeff Taylor, Earl Bell, Ralph Haynie, Don Baird and Dan Ripley.

Wilkins holds the world standard of 232-6 in the discus, and the muscular Olympic champion said he hopes to rewrite that mark before he begins a European tour this summer. The AAU meet will be his last chance to do so.

The meet, running through Saturday, has attracted some 1,100 entries, and both the men's and women's fields appear to be the strongest for the nationals in recent years.

Chicano group sets scramble tourney

The Chicano Golf Association will hold an ABCD Four Man Scrambie golf tournament Sunday at Hogan Park.

Entry fee is $10, which includes green fees. Trophies will be given to the top three places.

To enter contact Jesse Moreno at 682-7526.

Brown keeps on looking

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — John Y. Brown, owner of the Buffalo Braves of the National Basketball Association, met with civic leaders Tuesday to discuss moving his club to Minneapolis.

Among persons Brown met with was Harvey McKay, the incoming president of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, said the Minneapolis Star.

Also in on the talks were Kenneth Dayton, chairman of the executive committee of Dayton Hudson Corp.; John Cowles Jr., chairman of the board of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune Co., and John Morrison, chairman of the board of Northwestern National Bank.

The Braves reportedly had been near completing a deal to move to Dallas, where the team would be called the Dallas Express.

One of the Minneapolis sources said, "I don't know which Brown favors, Minneapolis, Dallas or Buffalo.

Texas lacrosse big on no-shows

DALLAS (AP) — If soccer, hockey and basketball can make dents into the great Texas football heartland, then why not lacrosse?

The national champions from Johns Hopkins University tested the progress of Texas lacrosse Tuesday night when they took on a Southwest all-star squad.

Don Newbury has spent his spare time for the past six years promoting lacrosse in Texas. He talks about crowd size at league games as being 45 players and 30,000 no-shows.

The sport is most popular along the eastern seaboard, and most of the players in the Southwest Lacrosse Association are transplanted easterners.

"I'd say about 80 percent of the teams are transients from the East," he said.

"Texas A&M has very few transients. It's almost 80 percent Texas people. Texas (the university) has a lot of purebreds too."

The association's first lacrosse clinic will be held here this summer. It's an attempt to build up the local talent pool.

"That's our aim is to make it grow and close this gap in the middle of the country," Newbury said.

Members of the league are strictly amateurs. Many play only when their jobs and professional schedules permit.

They foot their own bills for equipment and travel expenses.

"This is the oldest North American competitive sport," Newbury explained. Indians played it, and French Jesuits named it.

The modern sport looks something like hockey on a soccer field, using a ball that is slightly smaller than a tennis ball. Each player on the ten-man team can handle the ball only in the webbing at the end of his lacrosse stick.

"It's a rough sport," Newbury said.

"I don't know what our percentage of injuries are, but they're the usual. Lacrosse players in general don't seem to mind the licks."

Other college squads in the 13-team association are from Texas Tech, Baylor, Houston, Louisiana State, Tulane and Southern Methodist. Club teams are entered from Dallas, Houston, Austin, San Antonio and New Orleans.

Spurs may file suit against UIL

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Assistant Coach Bob Bass of the San Antonio Spurs was quoted Tuesday as saying the Spurs are prepared to file a suit to test a rule against high school varsity basketball players attending summer basketball camps.

"We've gone past the stage of thinking about it; we've budgeted money for it," Bass, also assistant to the president of the pro basketball team, told the Austin American-Statesman.

The University Interscholastic League rule states that if a schoolboy attends a summer basketball camp, he can only play on the junior varsity the following season.

The rule was adopted after Dallas Jefferson won the Class 4A state basketball championship in 1962. Coach Archie Porter had taken a number of Jefferson players to his summer camp at Buena Vista, Colo., the previous year.

Associate sports editor Lou Maysel of the American-Statesman said Bass has hinted that the test case might be someone who attends the Spurs' camp this summer.

Coach Sonny Allen of Southern Methodist University said last year he would challenge the rule with his son, Billy, but he did not do so. Young Allen went on to win all-state honors in 4A and signed a scholarship to play with SMU.

Lasorda is just plain fun

By STEVE BISHEFF
Copley News Service

The Tommy Lasorda Show was a fresh, appealing act the first time around. All that talking, laughing, hugging and cajoling went over big, coming, as it did, after the almost comatose regime of one Walter Alston.

Lasorda following Alston was like Woody Allen following Eric Sevareid. It couldn't miss.

And it didn't. The happy, relaxed Los Angeles Dodgers hugged and smooched their way to the National League championship, some record attendance figures and a profit-and-loss statement so encouraging Walter O'Malley almost swallowed one of his $10 cigars.

Okay, so they didn't win the World Series. But look at it this way, how much more happiness could they have absorbed? They were about ready to O.D. on the stuff as it was.

Now it's a new season but the same old Lasorda.

Tommy is still the fastest mouth in the West. The Los Angeles dugout is still the scene of more squeezing and hugging than an Italian wedding. And the manager still swears he bleeds only Dodger blue.

The only difference is, this time the replays aren't drawing the same rave reviews. Some skeptics are tired of the act. They say it's worn thin.

John Schulian, a columnist for the Chicago Sun-Times, summed up the feeling of many.

"It is my considered opinion," wrote Schulian, "that Tommy Lasorda is trying to see who he can drive crazy first — his players or the writers who are subjected to his nonstop babble. If there really is a Big Dodger in the sky, he will convince the monologizing Los Angeles manager to take a vow of silence for the rest of the season. Or, if we're truly blessed, for the rest of his life."

Well, Schulian is a fine writer who is entitled to express his view on the matter. But, somehow, he seems to be taking this short, plump, 50-year-old former minor league guru far too seriously.

Sure, Lasorda's routine can be tough to take at times. You know, a manager's office at Dodger Stadium big enough to pass for a suite at the St. Bonaventure. The glass of vintage wine he sips after the game. The parade of celebrities constantly shuffling through his clubhouse.

But what you really have to do is look a little closer. You have to catch the gleam in Tommy's eye, the occasional wink that clues you in, that tells you he, too, understands. So he's putting everyone on a bit? So what?

Tommy Lasorda isn't trying to be phony. He's just trying to have some fun. He's waited a long time to sit in the manager's chair and now he's made it, he plans to enjoy the experience. He wants to savor every sweet second of it.

The Dodgers certainly don't mind. In fact, he makes everyone's job easier. With Tommy on the field, the club doesn't even need a public relations director. The manager does his own PR work. He never forgets a name or a face. He treats writers from even the smallest suburban papers as if they were nationally syndicated columnists.

Too many managers, coaches and, yes, even players, tend to take games, not to mention themselves, too soberly today. They treat reporters like so many condiments they're forced to accept. They prefer muttering and complaining to laughing and chuckling.

Maybe Lasorda's different because he's paid his dues. He labored for 27 long years on the Dodger organization before he arrived as Walter O'Malley's designated motivator.

He's ridden the buses and slept in the cheap hotels and eaten the junk food meals you must endure in the minors. He's seen what the other part of professional baseball life is like. He's been there.

To some, his chatter now bears a shallow echo; his Dodger loyalty oaths are about as exciting as last week's box scores, and his team never could be gullible enough to believe what he's saying for another full season.

Well, all I know is the Dodgers won the pennant last year. They won because Tommy Lasorda extracted improved performances from almost every single athlete on the roster. Under him, the club's enthusiasm never has wavered. The man not only cares for his players, they seem to care about him.

And win or lose, he never fails to make me smile.

His skeptics will have to excuse me. But no matter how hard I try, I just can't see what's so terrible about that.

Natural oases quite unlike 'phony' desert, naturalist shows

By JOHN PINKERMAN
Copley News Service

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — This winter resort city is best known for the glamour of its golf, night life and luxurious living, but there is another aspect of a stay here that deserves more attention than it gets.

This is the availability of desert expeditions. They can be a day trip, one of several days, even a week. Even the one-day trip into both high and low desert is a fascinating experience, particularly for one not familiar with this unusual North American environment.

An expedition is especially satisfying when led by a serious e Service. This man, who fled city and desk life of Los Angeles for the wide open spaces only 40 minutes from the busy pace of downtown Palm Springs, is heavily bearded — but he shaves his head.

Service knows the country around him and what he tells you is worth attention.

As he drives a heavy air-conditioned van over desert and mountain terrain that no normal car could manage, he will tell you, for instance, that desert isn't a series of sand dunes. It includes decomposed granite, mountains, all kinds of growth. Neither is a desert always hot; it is an area of extremes in temperature. He will take you to Grapevine Canyon and will note that the canyon is a desert but it gets up to 17 inches of snow some winter nights.

"We can have a 40-degree change in temperature between day and night," he said. "There are no moderate deserts."

Service will talk of the wild animals that inhabit the desert and if you are lucky he will point out bighorn sheep watching the human species with suspicion from a faraway hillside. He will maneuver his vehicle into what you would say are inaccessible areas, like Dead Indian Canyon, for instance.

And he will come up with all kinds of lessons in nature. One involves "spring" wild flowers. "There are no such things as spring wild flowers in the desert," he said, pointing to an aray of color (in December). "The wild flowers bloom right after a rain, regardless of the season. They respond almost instantly to the presence of water."

He will warn you that Hollywood's idea of a desert is phony, and he will take you to two genuine natural oases that are far more spectacular than anything Hollywood might produce.

Andreas Canyon, on the Agua Caliente Indian Reservation, is one, with one of the world's largest natural stands of Washington palms. "And," Service will warn, "palms are not trees; they are plants. They don't have rings and they are not of wood. They're plants."

Service has hundreds of other bits of knowledge that he will share with you and when you return to one of the comfortable Palm Springs hotels like the restored Ingleside Inn, you will be glad you spent a day on the desert with him.

There are more things to do in Palm Springs, however, and the pleasant nature of this city may be one reason why it is booming while other winter resorts like Miami Beach are suffering. There are 260 hotels (pride rejects the use of the word "motel") with nearly 7,000 rooms. There are 41 golf courses, including nine country clubs in nearby Rancho Mirage, which totals only nine square miles in area.

There are museums, botanical gardens and a tramway ride to the 9,000-foot level of Mt. San Jacinto. There is an abundance of good food at several price ranges.

There is much to do, but for an exciting and educational day with nature, you should not miss meeting bearded George Service and taking part in one of his desert expeditions.

Away from the glamour of Palm Springs, famous for its night life and luxurious living, one of the leading forms of recreation is a desert expedition such as those led by naturalist George Service, foreground. Framed by a view of the surrounding wilderness, he points out some of the wonders to his guests.

Savings official seeks same rights as banks

By CHARLES W. ROSS
Copley News Service

The head of the nation's seventh largest savings firm says the industry might be willing to give up its interest-rate advantage over banks, but in return wants the right to issue credit cards, make small consumer loans and offer checking accounts.

Kim Fletcher, president of Home Federal Savings and Loan Association, also said Congress should reduce the federal tax burden on savings associations, now 50 percent higher than on banks.

Fletcher's comments may startle the nation's savings industry since almost all executives oppose loss of their quarter of 1 percent interest advantage over banks. Most also are opposed to checking accounts, although the industry is experimenting with a type of checking account in the New England states.

Fletcher's comments came in an interview regarding the impending battle in Congress and the courts over a new federal regualtion that gives banks the ability to pay interest on checking accounts, a major blow to the thrift industry. The savings firms, in addition to filing suit to block implementation, plan to take the fight to Congress.

Recognizing there are trade-offs ahead as Congress examines the two monetary systems, the savings industry is preparing to combat an onslaught of bankers who want the S s and banks to have competitive parity, equality in the marketplace.

"They want parity only where we have the advantage," said Fletcher. Banks have many more legal advantages "than we do, including an opportunity to tie up completely the consumer financial relationship, from payroll checks, and savings, personal checking, to credit cards with a line of credit and higher return on loans."

Savings firms are limited to long-term home financing loans underwritten by savings deposits on which customers are paid the higher interest rate under laws passed by Congress to encourage home building.

Fletcher said if Congress would e ideal way would be for a five-year guarantee of the higher interest rate to the savings firms while credit cards, consumer loans and checking accounts would gradually be phased in.

"But most importantly, Congress must recognize that the savings industry is operating at a tax disadvantage with banks," said Fletcher. "Banks pay half the taxes S and L's do, and can't expand, can't serve the home building industry and still pay the taxes we do today."

Higer prices making way for steel can's comeback

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

The aluminum beer can, which has become well-nigh ubiquitous in just a few years, has now peaked — and may even go the way of the dodo in a couple of decades, says a Wall Street analyst.

The problem, says H. Edward Schollmeyer of the Mitchell, Hutchins wing of Paine Webber Jackson and Curtis, is that the aluminum beer and soft drink can is pricing itself right off the shelves — making room for a sturdy comeback by the steel can.

Schollmeyer said in an interview that there is a public reaction to aluminum recycling: "Another factor is the unwillingness of the American public to be the garbage collector for the aluminum industry."

In a second interview, another Wall Street analyst agreed with Schollmeyer's general line of reasoning

But a spokesman for Reynolds Metals, the big aluminum concern, rejected Schollmeyer's thesis point by point, and said aluminum's beverage can outlook has never been healthier.

"I see the demand for aluminum beverage containers peaking in 1978," said Schollmeyer. He believes that aluminum now constitutes 50 percent of the beer market, but the aluminum industry says it's close to 70 percent. Both agree that aluminum is about 30 percent of the soft drink market.

It got there from almost nowhere in the late 1960s on the argument that its seamless feature is aesthetic; that printing comes through better on aluminum than on steel; that the recycling appeals to environmentalists; that the light weight improves shipping; that the beverage chills faster and that the easy-opening end pleases consumers.

But price has hurt.

"According to Coors (Colorado brewer Adolph Coors), the price of aluminum went up 30 percent and had an adverse impact on the company's results," Schollmeyer said. Now the aluminum industry is plotting more upward price moves, he said.

Today, steel cans cost from $4 per 1,000 to $7 per 1,000 less than aluminum cans. Since the basic cost of cans averages $36 per 1,000 when a company is doing it in-house, and $58 to $65 per 1,000 when the cans are purchased from a supplier, the price gap is significant.

Because aluminum is a critical metal for automobile manufacturers searching for lightweight meterials, Schollmeyer believes that "aluminum would be better utilized in longer-life products, such as for auto bodies and for home sidings."

But an executive of Reynolds Metals, disagreed strongly: "We're building two aluminum can plants right now; we think the future of the business is better than ever — and we will be able to supply both the can and automotive markets," he said.

Borderland smuggler deals in many illegal trades

Alien smuggler Rogelio, who for obvious reasons prefers his face to remain a mystery, describes the risky but lucrative business of smuggling Mexicans across the border. (Copely News Service Photo)

"He smuggled 2,500 Mexican farmhands to U.S. ranches and farms with the help, he says, of Mexican authorities and friendly police officers in Nevada, Utah and Idaho. In two years years, he made close to $100,000."

By GEORGE RAMOS
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Rogelio was not an ordinary alien smuggler.

He smuggled 2,500 Mexican farmhands to U.S. ranches and farms with the help, he says, of Mexican authorities and friendly police officers in Nevada, Utah and Idaho. In two years, he made close to $100,000.

He smuggled other things, too.

He was a link in a chain that ensured the disappearance of stolen cars from the Canadian provinces of Quebec and Ontario into Mexico.

With Mexican officials looking the other way, he smuggled firearms to Mexican terrorists. On one occasion, he persuaded two Army buddies from Vietnam to instruct the terrorists on firearm use.

He worked with two Phoenix police officers in funneling millions of dollars worth of heroin from Mexico to major U.S. cities in the Midwest and East.

He supplied substantial quantities of heroin and cocaine to well-known entertainers in Las Vegas in exchange for special treatment from Nevada hotels.

He can describe alien smuggling operations that stretch from Mexico north to Idaho and east to South Carolina.

Rogelio, 28, grew up in a Mexican-American barrio in Phoenix. His father never spent much time with his mother and was known to have sired children with other women in the Phoenix area.

He was in and out of reform school. At 16, he spent several months in juvenile hall for stealing a car. He landed in the jail for the same offense at the age of 18.

He volunteered to enter the military in the late 1960s at a time when the draft forced the service of many high school graduates and college students at the height of the war in Southeast Asia.

Those three years in the Army were good for Rogelio. He was assigned with U.S. ground forces in Vietnam's central highlands.

He jumped on an exploding grenade, saving the lives of several Army buddies. For his actions, he was awarded the Silver Star, the Army Commendation Medal, the Purple Heart and a promotion to sergeant (F-5).

But political pressure in the United States forced a reduction in the number of U.S. troops stationed in Vietnam. And Rogelio was discharged from the Army.

Life on the "outside" was not easy.

Jobs were hard to come by.

For awhile in early 1973, Rogelio worked at a gas station.

He tried his hand at selling fruit door-to-door with friends. That brought long hours and little money. When he married Rita in 1973, he began to want more, to be a good husband by providing a comfortable income.

"I didn't have no money and I didn't have anything," he recalls.

In 1974, he learned of the Priest.

Good money could be made if one was employed and trusted by the Priest, a known alien smuggler. As much as $400 for each trip north with a load of aliens, he was told.

Rogelio's recruitment in alien smuggling is typical of cases that occur each day throughout the Southwest, Border Patrol and other sources contend. Rogelio and friend approached the Priest in a bar, but said nothing.

As soon as he saw the two, the Priest turned to the bartender and ordered, "Two Coors for these fine men."

"Well, how have you been?" he asked. "No, don't tell me.

"I'll bet you want to drive for me. Right, cousin?"

Rogelio, recalling the encounter, blurted back, "Are you some kind of a mind reader? What makes you think I'd do something foolish like that?"

The Priest, leaning back on the bar, replied, "That hungry look in your eyes, amigo."

Driving for the Priest was relatively easy, Rogelio would learn. Contact would be made with people who hustled the streets and bus stations in Mexican border towns — such as Tijuana, Nogales, Sonora and Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua — for people willing to sneak into the United States.

Groups of five to 20 persons would be put together in nearby hotels for the trip north. After nightfall, the Mexicans would cross the border on foot for pickup by the drivers hired to take them to farms and ranches in the North.

Rogelio would meet the Mexicans at a designated location — a fork in the road, a roadside table or under a particular tree — and load them into a truck. From there, via prearranged routes, they were taken out of the border area for destinations in Colorado, Utah and Idaho.

French adopt energy saving tactics with zeal, success

PETER LEWIS
Copley News Service

PARIS — France may be short on oil, the slogan goes, but the French are long on tips and tricks to save energy.

The slogan, which appears on television and radio spots nearly every day, along with suggestions on how to economize on gas, electricity and domestic fuel oil, forms part of a broad campaign launched by the French government three years ago to curb power consumption.

If the advertising campaign costs the authorities slightly over $2.5 million a year, the investment has paid off more than handsomely. In 1976 alone, the economy drive resulted in a billion-dollar savings on what would have been France's energy bill had nobody sought to save power.

When Jimmy Carter recently congratulated French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on his country's success in cutting back on energy consumption, he was evidently referring to figures which showed that the amount of power and fuel used in 1977 was acutally lower than the energy used in 1973, the year that the oil crisis struck the country.

And this decrease was accomplished despite a 10 percent climb in industrial activity, the construction of more than a million housing units and fast rise in the number of cars on the road in the meantime. The comparative figures were 174 million tons of energy in 1977 as compared to 175 million in France's last free-spending energy year. Since the French would probably now be using well over 200 million tons of energy if the fuel and power pinch had not come along when it did, the obvious question is this: How have they managed to cut back anywhere from 15 percent to 20 percent in their overall consumption?

The French have always used far less energy than the British or Germans; in fact, roughly half as much. The reason is not only that they are probably more thrifty by nature (tourists will recall the exasperating minuterie, a push-button light in hotel staircases that switches off automatically after a few moments, usually leaving one stranded in the dark) but also were much later than their neighbors to industrialize. It was not until the 1950s and '60s that France, a predominantly farming nation, went over to industry in a big way.

But the cuts in energy consumption also stem from the fact the French government holds wide powers over the economy and can, whenever it chooses, enact legislation to back up measures that would usually remain advisory or optional in other lands.

In other words, when the French authorities decide, as they did with energy conservation, to adopt a carrot-and-stick policy, they have the means to make the carrot attractive and to make the stick hurt.

The most eye-catching results of France's campaign to save energy were obtained in the home, but appreciable cuts were also made on the highways and in the factory. Roughly speaking, savings were made like this:

Homes: Heating in public buildings and apartment houses was kept to a maximum of 20 degrees centigrade (50 degrees Fahrenheit), quotas were slapped on the amount of domestic fuel oil used in buildings and a tax rebate of $1,500 to $2,000 was offered to householders installing heat-saving devices.

With regard to new construction, bonuses were offered to building firms to employ original heating systems (based on solar and geothermic energy whenever possible) and to improve insulation. Hot water meters were placed in each new apartment and tenants made to pay heavily for overshooting the quota.

Elsewhere, electricity and gas rates were raised, the lighting-up of unoccupied office buildings banned, and daylight savings time introduced for the first time in 1976. (Advancing the clock by one hour between April 3 and Sept. 25 resulted in a clear savings of 300,000 tons of energy.) The overall savings in the housing field in 1976 was estimated at 9 million tons...

Cars: The government jacked the price of ordinary and premium grade gasoline up to $2.25 and $2.50 per gallon and slapped a heavy road tax on the biggest "gas-guzzler" cars. It lowered the speed limit to 90 k.p.h. (55 m.p.h.), informed drivers on how to save up to 20 percent on gas by going lightly on the accelerator, offered free engine tune-ups on occasion and made it compulsory for car manufacturers to mention a make's energy performance in advertising.

Tax incentives were held out to firms doing research on gas-saving devices and the driving test was revamped to include questions on economy-minded driving. The upshot was an overall savings of 1.5 million tons of gas and oil in 1976.

Industry: Tax incentives, cash bonuses and low-interest loans are used variously as the carrot to coax firms into installing energy-saving equipment. The government has backed intensive research into heat pump systems and the recovery and recycling of "lost" heat, while laying down norms on insulation in plants and strict quotas on the amount of energy used. Any firm that oversteps its quota must pay $30 for every ton of heavy fuel it burns in excess of the limit.

The measures have so far failed to produce any big savings because energy conservation in industry happens to be a longer and more costly process than elsewhere. But the drive is expected to result in a 5 million ton cutback in energy by 1980.

X-ray space holds many new, exciting scientific surprises

BOB CORBETT
Copley News Service

Powerful x-ray bursts that dwarf the total energy of the sun and hint that suitable conditions for life may exist elsewhere in the universe are among the first results being relayed back to earth by the high energy astronomical observatory (HEAO).

The energy-laden bursts or flares were spotted coming from a source known as Cygnus X-1, a suspected "black hole," a collapsed star where matter has become so dense that nothing, not even light, can escape its gravitational field.

The power of these x-ray flares is almost unbelievable, according to Dr. Laurence E. Peterson, professor of physics and head of a University of California at San Diego team that designed one of the four experiments aboard the HEAO.

In just one second, Peterson said, a Cygnus X-1 flare can produce energy amounting to 10 to the 38th power ergs (a unit of energy). Interpret that as the number one with 38 zeroes behind it.

It represents, Peterson estimated, about one million times the total energy output of the sun and a billion times the sun's feeble efforts in the x-ray region.

Another surprising discovery, he said, is that Alpha Centauri, which at a distance of four light years (about 24 trillion miles) is the sun's nearest stellar neighbor, also is an emitter of x-rays.

These x-rays, Peterson said, are just about in the same range as those of the sun and suggest that Alpha Centauri's corona, size and composition duplicate the sun's. This hints, he said, at the idea that both stars were formed by the same dynamic processes.

For the sun, these processes resulted in the formation of planets, one of which gave rise to life, Peterson said. It can't be known now whether Alpha Centauri also has planets, but the evidence supports the idea that the sun's experience is not unique in the universe, according to peterson.

"Most scientists, including myself, strongly believe that something resembling intelligent life probably exists on other heavenly bodies," he said. "It's unproven, but can be speculated.

These are only two of the stronomical marvels that have been spotted by HEAO's first "quick look" at the x-ray universe and its strange population of black holes, quasars, neutron stars, bursters, pulsars and exploding galaxies.

Launched into a 235-mile-high orbit last August, the HEAO is sending back a steady stream of information that is exciting scientists around the world.

The main conclusion of the early date, Peterson said, is that the x-ray universe is much more powerful and much more common than previously believed.

Already, he said, more than a dozen new x-ray sources have been spotted by the HEAO's highly sophisticated and sensitive sensors. By extrapolation, he said, that could mean there are at least 1,000 such x-ray sources in the universie. Only 200 are known now, he said.

Just two weeks ago, Petterson said, the HEAO scanned a known low-level x-ray source, so low that it in fact had been dropped from some catalogs.

Suddenly, the object flared into one of the strongest x-ray emitters known, Peterson said.

Comic book ads draw FTC fire

By GRACE-MARIE ARNETT
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Federal Trade Commission is at it again. This time the subject of its major new federal investigation is comic books.

Comic book advertising, that is.

If this all sounds vaguely familiar, it's because the FTC already is attacking another form of kiddie entertainment, Saturday morning television ads. The agency wants to ban all TV advertising aimed at kids under 8, and all ads for highly sugared foods. It is holding two years of hearings on its proposed ban.

The Seattle office saw how much media attention the Saturday morning TV study was attracting, so it decided to cook up its own investigation.

It started out something like this: Several of the officials at the Seattle office, including Director Wulliam C. Erxleben, have small children.

One day Erxleben was sitting in his backyard talking to a neighbor about a toy army set the neighbor's son had ordered from a comic book.

Apparently the soldiers looked like they would be four or five inches tall from the pictures, but when they arrived in the mail, the green plastic figures measured only two inches.

"The boy was dissatisfied with the toy army set because it didn't live up to his expectations," said Seattle FTC attorney Michael Kipling

We all know what actually happened. The boy threw such a fit that Mother and Father had to comb toy stores for miles around to find toy soldiers that matched the child's "expectations."

Well, Erxleben mentioned this in the office one day, and lo and behold, another parent told a story of a toy racer that arrived without batteries. Someone else complained about the junk food advertised in comic books.

Voila! The seeds of an investigation.

The Seattle investigators proposed the idea of a comic book investigation to Washington It was approved, of course, and the lawyers were off and running.

"It is merely an investigation," Kipling was quick to point out, "and does not imply that violations of the law have occurred"

But during its 18-month study, the FTC said it wants to hear from "people who have been ripped off or whose children have been ripped off" from comic book ads, Kipling said. Then, investigators will contact the advertisers for information about products and promotions before the agency decides if it has a case warranting new regulations, penalties or advertising bans.

"Of course if people are happy, we want to know that, too," Kipling added.

Specifically, the FTC wants to learn whether manufacturers, mail-order houses and their ad agencies have failed to disclose in comic book ads what an advertised product's purchase price actually includes. The investigation will assess the failure of advertised products to perform as claimed end the use of comic book characters to promote commercial products.

The money involved here is not child's play.

The FTC estimates that comic book advertising revenues total about $66 million a year and are used to market products with a value of about $200 million annually. About 15 million kids are regular comic book readers.

"It is clear to us that industry practices now deserve a hard look by the FTC," Kipling said.

Telephone calls to a sampling of comic book advertisers show the industry doesn't know what it is in for.

Lewis Weis is president of a mail-order house called Fun Factory that markets $1 products like "switch blade combs, mini-skull flashlights and X-ray specs."

He hadn't heard from any FTC investigators. Neither had Barbara Rosenblum, media buyer for Encore House, which sells T-shirt decals and $1 jewelry. She isn't worried, though, because her products are good, proven, she said, by the number of reorders they receive.

But Rosenblum and Weis will hear from the FTC. Some companies will be forced out of business because they can't afford the legal fees. They are probably the same ones who would have gone under eventually because their products don't sell.

JOHN EPPS applies one of several ceramic coats to wax turbine wheels at the Torrance, Calif., plant of Garrett Corp., one of the Signal Companies, recently in the process called lost wax casting. The process dates back to the times of Egyptian Pharoah Tut-ankamen and beyond. When the ceramic shell hardens, the wax is melted, removed and replaced with molten steel. This results in in an exact duplicate of the wax. The process is used to produce high-performance turbine wheels and other precision rotating components. (AP Laserphoto)

Marine biologist believes sharks may return to Texas

By GREG THOMPSON

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Remember those thousands of sharks that cruised last June only a few feet off some Texas beaches and made landlubbers out of all but the fishermen and a few fearless swimmers?

Well, a marine biologist in Port Aransas said Tuesday the swarms of sharks could appear just as quickly again this summer — but without anyone becoming aware of them.

"It could happen again," Dr. Faust Parker Jr. said by phone from the University of Texas Marine Sciene Institute. "We don't know much about their habits or why they do it. It's all guesses on our part.

"Last year, the water was slick calm up to the beach and there was a lot of food available for them. You could really get a look at them from the air," he added. "But it's been pretty windy this year, so even if they swarmed out there, we probably couldn't spot them.

"I'd say it's probably not that uncommon for them to swarm like that," said Parker, the author of a paper on last year's swarms. "It might have happened a number of times without our being aware of it. We just had excellent viewing conditions last year."

The thousands of sharks, some more than 12 feet long, swarmed for about three days last June in the calm, crystalclear water off 20 miles of beach from Port Aransas to the northern end of Padre Island.

The sharks, Parker said, were taking advantage of the calm water to come close to shore and eat abundant young shrimp and crabs.

He said 12 species of sharks and five species of rays were spotted in the packs, some of which roamed in water only waist deep.

Most of the tourists that had crowded the beaches stayed out of the water, but hundreds more poured on the beach to get a look at the sharks. No swimmers were reported injured.

Parker said he doesn't know for sure that the sharks are even a threat to swimmers.

"I don't know that they are dangerous to swimmers. We assume they're concerned about other things, liking eating shrimp and crabs.

Five Basin areas get wildcat project sites

Wildcat operations have been scheduled in Fisher, Stonewall, Tom Green, Concho and Irion counties, and a discovery has been completed in Runnels County.

NRM Petroleum Corp. of Midland No. 1 XQZ Ranch will be drilled as a 6,000-foot wildcat in Tom Green County, two miles north of Knickerbocker.

Location is 1,980 feet from south and 467 feet from east lines of section 807, German Emigration Co. survey. Ground elevation is 2,005 feet.

The drillsite is 2.5 miles southeast of the Kenker (Palo Pinto and Strawn reef) field and the same distance east of the depleted Kenker, South (upper reef) pool. It is ¾ mile southwest of a 5,964-foot failure.

CONCHO TEST

A 4,900-foot wildcat has been staked in Concho County by M. M. Newberry of Midland.

The prospector, No. 1 Jacoby, is four miles west of Eden and 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from east lines of BS&F survey No. 70. The site is two miles east of the Speck, South (Canyon gas and King sand oil) pool. It is ¼ mile west of a 4,905-foot dry hole.

Modification will assist in energy change over

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas officials plan to strengthen a conservation order designed to reduce by 25 percent the amount of nautral gas being used in boilers to generate electricity in the state by 1985.

Jon Newton, member of the Texas Railroad Commission, says modifications that probably will be adopted this summer should provide greater flexibility in utilizing Texas gas within the state.

Newton told the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association convention Tuesday the current rule requires each industrial plant to phase down its use of natural gas.

"The proposed modification would allow utilities to meet the conservation goals on a systemwide basis rather than plant by plant and sell any excess to other users," he said.

"This will give industry needed elbow room to make the costly conversion necessary to meet our conservation and environmental goals."

Newton said the change also will keep more gas in Texas to be utilized by those who paid the price to produce it.

"It is my firm belief financial incentives of this kind are far more effective than governmental prohibitions," he said.

He said the proposed change also would prevent gas conserved in Texas from being wasted in other states. He explained that California had reacted to the commission's order by proposing a rule to prohibit the burning of liquid or solid fuel if natural gas were available, arguing that the Texas order would create a continuing surplus of gas that would be available for use in California boilers.

Newton also told the independents the new natural gas legislation being finalized in Washington "is such an administrative nightmare so as to be self-defeating, regardless of its merits, if any could be found."

Two hours later, the independents postponed at least until Aug. 18 any decision on endorsing or opposing the House-Senate conference committee compromise that would extend federal natural gas price controls to intrastate markets.

Chester R. Upham Jr., the association's new president from Mineral Wells, received approval for his suggestion the group stick with traditional policies until final language of the compromise bill can be studied.

The association's executive committee is to meet Aug. 18.

At Upham's suggestion, the independents meanwhile reaffirmed their support of gas price deregulation and described as counter-productive any deregulation approach that first extends controls to the intrastate marketplace.

Distribution territory available for KINE-FRAC Well Treatment Process

The KINE-FRAC process is a proven, cost-efficient well cleaning method which achieves selective formation fracturing or fracture initiation without severe stresses on well casings. While used primarily in oil and gas wells, the KNIT-FRAC process is also very suitable in water wells, fluid disposal wells, water injection wells and geothermal wells. Its excellent cost-to-benefit relationship has been demonstrated in numerous wells throughout the country. Documentation and test results are available upon request.

Distributorship is now available for west and southwest Texas plus southeast New Mexico. The market requires a service-conscious organization with an established distribution network and a solid track record. Tremendous growth opportunity for the right technically-oriented company.

BRIDGE

Avoid commitments as long as you can

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

A successful bridge player, like a determined bachelor, must avoid committing himself. There will be temptations on every side, but the secret of success is to yeild only to those temptations that leave you some freedom.

Opening lead — ♣ 9

South ran four rounds of clubs and three rounds of spades. Then he tried the heart finesse.

West took the king of hearts and returned the jack to the ace. South struggled on but gave up the last trick to East's queen of diamonds.

South's trouble was that he thought about wrong queen. Any bachelor could have told him that the queen of diamonds was more important than the queen of hearts.

After winning the first trick South should lead a spade to dummy and return a low diamond. If East has the queen of diamonds, South's jack will win a trick.

BOTH SUITS

If East doesn't have the queen of diamonds, South will later be able to try the heart finesse. When South tried the heart finesse first he was committed. After the finesse lost he couldnt try for a diamond trick.

Whenever you have more than one play from a contract, avoid committing yourself until the latest possible moment. Begin with the plays that leave you in position to go on to something else.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with 1 NT (16 to 18 points), and the next player passes. You hold: S-63; H-KJ1082; D-863; C-987. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. It would be no crime to pass 1 NT with your balanced distribution, but it is a trifle safer to bid a strong 5-card suit.

Kennedys like news

BOSTON (AP) — After years of watching reporters watch their famous elders, the younger generation of Kennedys seems more interested in chasing the news than making it.

Joseph and Rose Kennedy, whose children included a president and two U.S. senators, have at least five grandchildren dabbling in journalism. The dabblers are among 29 grandchildren whose interests vary from law to the political life that made their parents and late grandfather the quarry of reporters.

Caroline Kennedy, whose father John F. Kennedy was once a reporter, was the latest to get a journalistic job when she was hired last week as a summer reporter at the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.

"I guess it's because we're in contact with the press and become interested in it," Timothy Shriver, one of five children of Sargent and Eunice Kennedy Shriver, said when asked about the grandchildren's penchant for journalism.

"Everyone is exposed to you guys a lot, or has been at one time or another," the 18-year-old YaleLfreshman told an interviewer.

Timothy, who has no definite plans for the summer, says he cannot write well enough to seriously consider becoming a reporter. But both his older brother and sister have full-time news jobs.

Robert Sargent Shriver III, 24, is also a reporter for the Herald-Examiner. Shriver, in fact, has been building his career in the best tradition of a newspaperman migrating across the country — from the Annapolis (Md.) Capital, to the City News Bureau in Chicago, to the Chicago Daily News and, finally, to Los Angeles.

His sister Maria, 22, is in a production training program at KYW-TV in Philadelphia. And two sons of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy of New York are also showing a bent for journalism.

David Kennedy, 22, a junior at Harvard who plans to travel in Europe this summer, worked last summer in the Washington bureau of the Nashville Tennessean.

His older brother Robert Jr., 24, wrote a profile for The Boston Globe last August of Judge Frank Johnson Jr. of Alabama, President Carter's first choice for FBI director. His book-length biography of the judge will be published soon. Robert, who graduated from Harvard, is now studying at the London School of Economics and plans to go to law school.

In addition, when Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts led a family trip to China, Caroline and two of his children, Kara and Teddy Jr., sold pictures to newspapers and magazines. Kara, who is at prep school, will be spending this summer traveling in Europe.

Caroline, 20, has also exhibited photographs at a New York gallery. Last summer, she worked at the New York Daily News as a $156-a-week "copy person" in the city room.

She is now a junior at Radcliffe and a staff reporter for the Harvard Crimson, but Frank Connolly, president of the student daily, says "she doesn't have a regular beat, and she's not real active."

All of this interest in writing and news is in the family tradition.

John Kennedy wrote briefly for the Hearst newspapers after World War II and won a Pulitzer Prize for "Profiles in Courage." Before marrying him, Jacqueline Bouvier was the "inquiring camera girl" for the Washington Times-Herald and interviewed her future husband.

Not all the Kennedy kids are going into journalism. Robert and Ethel Kennedy's oldest son, Joseph, 25, considered running for state treasurer of Massachusetts before going to Washington to work for the Community Services Administration. Their oldest daughter, Kathleen, 26, is studying law at the University of New Mexico.

Teddy Jr., 16, whose cancerous right leg was amputated in 1973, wants to work again this summer for the Woods Hole, Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Steam Ship Authority. Last season he helped park cars in the authority's lot in Hyannis, but a family spokesman says he is trying to get a job this summer aboard one of the ferries.

Most of the Kennedy grandchildren are still in school.

Tech researchers work on mesquite

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech researchers are studying microbiological and chemical means to break down mesquite cellulose material and in that way make it more palatable to livestock, according to a representative at Texas Tech.

Dr. Robert C. Albin, chairperson of the animal science department, and one of the researchers, said that although one bacteria in cattle stomachs enables them to use cellulolytic material, breaking the mesquite down before feeding should make it much more digestible.

Other researchers involved in the experiments include Dr. Lloyd B. Sherrod, professor of animal science; Dr. Harry W. Parker, professor of chemical engineering; Dr. Donald Thayer, professor of microbiology; Thomas E. Vernor, research assistant in chemical engineering; and Cynthia B. Summers, research associate at the Texas Tech University Center at Amarillo.

So far all experiments have been conducted in the lab, although the next step will be to feed treated mesquite to experimental animals, said a spokesman.

The laboratory experiments showed that the microbiologically-treated mesquite would enable the animals to digest 30 to 40 percent more of the mesquite than if it were left untreated, said Albin.

The chemically-treated mesquite may be the best method due to economics, Albin said.

Though no research has been done on cost, he said that setting up microbial treatments might be too expensive.

The economics of the two treatments and the actual effect on livestock will be studied in the near future. Equipment to process large enough amounts of mesquite for feeding needs to be completed before research c8an continue, said the spokesman.

Allen buried Tuesday

By GARRY MITCHELL

GADSDEN, Ala. (AP) — James Allen, a United States senator for 10 years, was buried after being extolled by his colleagues as a fighter who would rather stick to his beliefs than be on the winning side.

"A giant oak has fallen and left a vacancy in the sky," said former North Carolina Sen. Sam Ervin, addressing Allen's family, Vice President Walter Mondale and a host of friends at the funeral Tuesday.

Allen, who died of a heart attack last Thursday, was a darling of conservatives. Ervin surmised that Allen's ardent work in the Senate "probably contributed to his demise."

Allen had attempted repeatedly to defeat the two Panama Canal treaties approved by the Senate in March and April.

Hundreds of people, including Gov. George Wallace and Allen's Senate colleagues, filled the pews of First United Methodist Church and a multitude of others stood on surrounding streets listening to the funeral on speakers.

Sen. Harry Byrd, D-Va., said Allen had given to the people of Alabama and the Senate far more than he received.

"Often he carried out his battles against great numbers. He believed there is something more important than being on the prevailing side," Byrd said.

Dr. Edward L.R. Elson, chaplain of the Senate, read one of Allen's favorite Bible verses, Psalm 27:1: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"

A choir sang the Navy Hymn and the body of the 65-year-old Democrat was buried on the western edge of Forrest Cemetery. Sailors fired a 21-gun salute and Mondale presented a folded flag to Mrs. Allen.

Wallace has been urged to appoint Allen's widow, Maryon, to fill the vacancy created by her husband's death.

American convicted in Tel Aviv

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A Tel Aviv district court convicted Sami Esmail, a 23-year-old American of Palestinian descent, of membership in a Palestinian guerrilla group today but acquitted him of the more serious charge of contact with a foreign agent.

There was no immediate indication when the sentence would be announced. Following the verdict, the court heard a character witness for Esmail, Prof. Robert O. Barr Jr. of the electrical engineering department at Michigan State University.

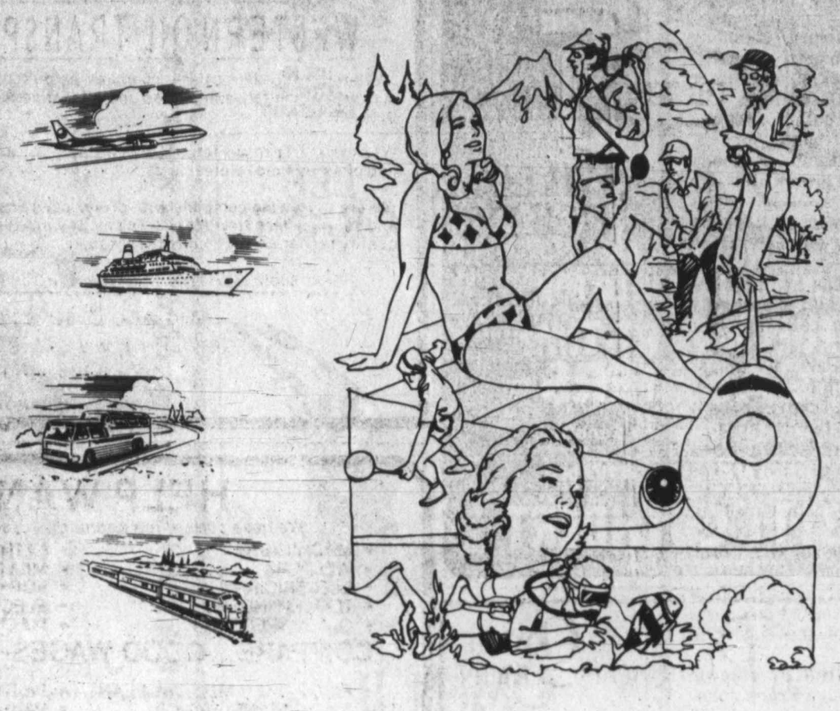

Esmail, a graduate student in engineering at Michigan State who was born in New York, was arrested at Ben-Gurion Airport on Dec. 21 when he arrived in Israel to visit his dying father, a naturalized American who lived in the occupied West Bank.

He was charged with membership in the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and with having contact at Michigan State and in Libya with foreign agents.

The case caused protests in America. There were allegations that the FBI provided the Israeli government with information on Esmail and that he was tortured to make him sign a confession. But his Israeli lawyer, Felicia Langer, failed in an attempt to get the confession thrown out.

The prosecution charged that Esmail took guerrilla training during a trip to Libya in 1976. The young man maintained it was only a student trip and no training was involved.

Jeep wrote the book on 4-wheel drive!

A few hard facts...

...that Jeep Cherokee's competition may not want you to know

Jeep Cherokee "S" 4-Door

We want you to know the advantages of owning a Jeep Cherokee. Only Cherokee has Quadra-Trac, Jeep's exclusive automatic 4-wheel drive - the system that's unsurpassed by the competition! Cherokee has an integral steel roof with an available roof rack that can be loaded with gear. Cherokee has the lowest cab height of all the competition. That comes in handy in tight situations. Cherokee has higher ground clearance than Ford, Dodge or Chevy and that means you climb over those large rocks, stumps and obstacles. Cherokee has a lower tailgate height and low entry height for loading ease and passenger convenience. Cherokee has a shorter hood for a better view of obstacles ahead. Cherokee offers a larger 6-cylinder engine as standard equipment. Cherokee has a greater payload capacity than the competition. So you don't have to leave behind the things you need. Cherokee also comes in a 2-door or 4-door with the same advantages. Take a Cherokee off the road some time. You'll be amazed and that's a fact.
