Florida, Louisiana residents flee storm

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Coastal counties from Florida to Louisiana were under declarations of emergency today after more than 145,000 people fled homes and offshore oil rigs as 350-mile-wide Hurricane Elena, pumping 95 mph winds and picking up steam, churned toward land.

"It's a very serious storm. This will be well over a $1 billion storm," said forecaster Bob Sheets of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables. "It's a fairly large storm."

As Elena slowed it altered its northwestward course across the Gulf of Mexico slightly to the east. National Weather Service forecaster Mike Pass said that meant it could hit near Pascagoula, Miss., or Mobile, Ala., late today.

A hurricane warning was posted from Morgan City, La. to Apalachicola in the Florida Panhandle.

Botha's assurance sought on anti-apartheid talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, showing increasing impatience with the pace of change in South Africa, is calling on President P.W. Botha to make a clear commitment to open talks with black leaders on ending apartheid.

A senior State Department official who briefed reporters Thursday said Botha has indicated he wants negotiations with black leaders but he has done so "in a manner so opaque as to be difficult to understand, in a manner that has led to further confusion."

The official, who insisted on anonymity, also appeared to hold South African authorities responsible for much of the violence that led to 16 reported deaths on Wednesday and Thursday.

"We do not ignore the obligation of any government to maintain order. That isn't the issue. The issue is that repression in this climate does not defuse the atmosphere," he said.

■ Latest South African riots among fiercest — Page 5A

"What is clearly needed is talking and negotiating and constructive signals to build a better climate, not jailings and beatings and bombings and burnings," he said.

The remarks came three days after President Reagan had praised the South African government as a "reformist administration," and they indicated an administration desire to cast the Pretoria authorities in a more negative light than Reagan did.

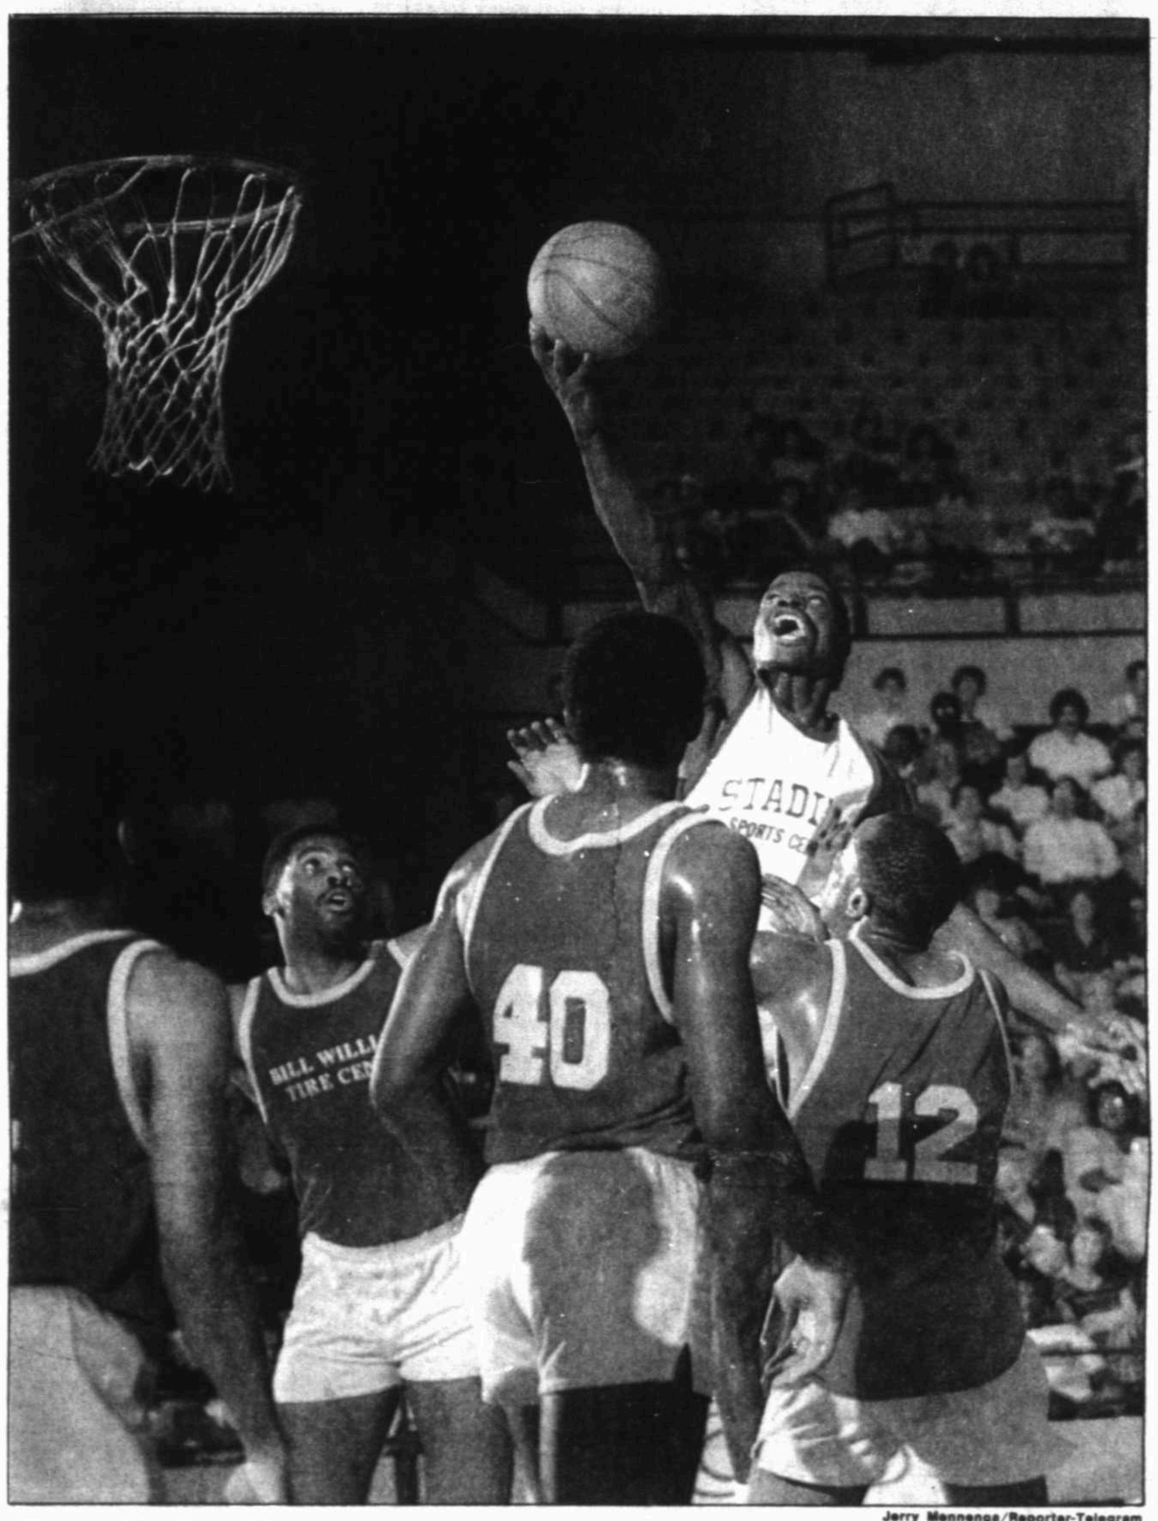

Nonetheless, the official defended Reagan's remarks by noting that the South African government has implemented changes and that the administration has a duty to call attention to them when they occur.

"It is not to say that they (the South Africans) have gone far enough," the official said. "They haven't."

He also noted that last December, during a period of relative calm in South Africa when other world leaders were remaining silent, Reagan called on the Pretoria government to move aggressively to dismantle apartheid.

The official also said the administration remains skeptical about the usefulness of sanctions against South Africa. But he said Reagan will await the completion of congressional action before deciding whether to veto sanctions legislation now pending.

He indicated the administration's reservations about sanctions stem from its view that punitive measures could reduce its influence with South Africa.

Teacher shortage may limit state's progress in education

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The legislative phase of education reform is, for the present, over. Now educators are moving toward the second, and often most difficult, phase of reform: implementation.

But a statewide teacher shortage may hamper its progress, the president of Texas Federation of Teachers said Thursday.

The Houston Independent School District, which once predicted it would face a local shortage of 2,000 teachers, reported about 265 teaching positions were still open late last week.

By comparison, the Midland Independent School District reported this week a shortage of only six teachers.

"There is no teacher shortage," TFT President John Cole said. "There is a shortage of teachers willing to teach in the schools."

Non-competitive teacher salaries is one reason, he said. "All salaries in education are too low, but some people are overpaid and some are underpaid. School districts ought to be talking about paying teachers $75,000 a year."

Cole told teachers in Midland Thursday that "TFT takes very seriously its role as a leader in education reform. We want these reforms to work, because we think education reform is vital to the well-being of this state."

He added, however, the teaching profession has become less attractive in recent years and, until the trend is reversed, the teacher shortage will continue.

"We've got our priorities screwed up," he said. "We need to straighten these out, otherwise the teacher shortage will never be resolved."

Cole said teachers across the state should monitor individual school districts to ensure that each follows through on the Legislature's intention.

To help monitor progress, Cole said TFT has developed a "Reform Report Card," which it will use during the coming year to grade school districts in 10 areas of reform implementation.

Preliminary plans call for districts to be graded in the following areas: the implementation of class size limits, tutorial programs, local tax effort, use of qualified and certified teachers, student discipline reforms, higher teacher salary, career ladder, paperwork reduction, teacher testing and duty-free lunch.

School districts will be required to obtain a 70 percent score to earn a passing grade in each of the 10 areas, Cole said.

Project Tejas raises famine relief funds

AUSTIN (AP) — State employees who dug into their own pockets and sold snow cones, bakery goods and barbecue chicken dinners have contributed more than $113,000 to send Texas grain and powdered milk to famine victims in Africa.

State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower on Thursday recognized eight state agencies that led the way in the fund-raising effort for Project Tejas.

"To raise more than $113,000 in just about three month's time took a lot of organization, and it showed a tremendous amount of caring towards our less fortunate neighbors," Hightower said at an awards ceremony at the Capitol.

He said 64 agencies with a combined workforce of 41,000 employees participated in the drive.

"This $113,000 contribution will allow Project Tejas to purchase nearly 33,000 bushels of Texas wheat, enough food to feed 80,000 starving African children for a month," Hightower said.

The latest contribution, he said, brings to more than $680,000 the amount that has been raised since Project Tejas was launched on March 1.

Already, 120,000 bushels of Texas wheat and 120,000 pounds of powdered milk have been purchased, Hightower said. When mixed with water, the powdered milk will make 2.4 million cups of liquid milk.

The largest amount raised by a single state agency was $51,525 by the Department of Human Resources.

Hightower said a food shipment is set to depart from Corpus Christi aboard the ship Iris early in September, which is scheduled to arrive at the port of Assab, Ethiopia, between Oct. 6-15.

Commissioner indicates probe of road maintenance 'political'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioner Scott Welch today said his investigation by the Midland County Grand Jury for his ordering the maintenance of a county road was a "misuse of the judicial system for political sabotage, for political reasons."

Welch, 31, said he appeared before the grand jury for about three minutes on Wednesday but that he was not indicted for any wrong-doing or misuse of office.

"And whoever is responsible" for the bringing the investigation before the grand jury also misused the system, he said.

Last summer, Welch ordered the grading and caliching of the mile-long road so the school bus could pick up children along the route. The road, off South Midkiff Road, borders Welch's home and rodeo arena, which was site of the Cowboy Carnival, an event of Midland's Centennial.

Human transplant remains 'on hold'

Copeland

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The youngest person to receive a Jarvik-7 artificial heart was winning a battle for survival today, but his doctor said today it would take one to three weeks for him to regain the strength needed for a human heart transplant.

Even if a human organ were to become available in the next few days for Michael Drummond, 25, implant surgeon Dr. Jack Copeland said he would not accept it. He said he first wanted Drummond's condition to stabilize.

"Anywhere from about a week to three weeks would probably be our window for going ahead," he said. "If we wait longer than three weeks, he's going to develop scar tissue around the heart. That's going to make it difficult to go back in. We want him to get well but not too well."

Copeland said Drummond was still in critical but stable condition today, but "looks 1,000 percent better than he did ... before we made the decision to put in the heart."

Drummond was awake and his color was normal, Copeland said.

"All of his organ functions are really normal," added Copeland. "The artificial heart's working just fine. He's looking very good and we're very encouraged."

Copeland said he thought Drummond was recovering "in about a pattern we generally see in any patient who has open heart surgery. So, it's a fairly normal recovery."

Administration backs rebound predictions

Associated Press

The government's economic barometer, the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, rose 0.4 percent in July and the nation's trade deficit declined 22 percent from the previous month, the government said in separate reports today.

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration stuck to its prediction of a strong rebound in the economy through year's end in an updated forecast prepared for release today.

The Commerce Department said the July rise in the index of leading indicators matched a revised gain for June. Although the increase in July was above the expectations of most private economists, the June rise was reduced from an earlier report of a robust 1 percent gain.

The index is designed to forecast turning points in economic activity.

The Commerce Department also said the nation's merchandise trade gap narrowed to $10.5 billion in July, the lowest level since January.

For the first seven months of the year, however, the trade deficit totaled $81.2 billion, or 10 percent higher than in the same period a year ago, when the trade imbalance was growing to a record height.

The administration's mid-year economic forecast predicted overall economic growth of 3 percent for 1985.

Since first-half growth was a sluggish 1.1 percent, the expansion in the second half would have to approach 5 percent to meet that goal, a pace many analyists doubt can be achieved.

The forecast also projects the unemployment rate will be 7.1 percent for the full year, slightly below the 7.2 percent jobless rate that has prevailed since February.

In an earlier report, the government said sales of new single-family homes have hit the highest level in almost two years, rising 1.4 percent in July.

Marking the highest annual sales pace since December 1983, new single-family homes were sold at an annual rate of 704,000 units, the departments of Commerce and Housing and Urban Development said Thursday.

The government also revised upward its sales figures from April through June to show far more strength than originally reported. The June sales, which last month were reported to have dropped 0.1 percent, actually rose a strong 2.2 percent, following an even better 4.6 percent May increase.

In other economic news Thursday:

— Dun & Bradstreet Corp. said a record 163,051 new businesses were incorporated in the first quarter, 1 percent more than the previous high of 161,389 in the first three months of last year.

— The Labor Department said 370,000 people filed first-time claims for unemployment benefits for the week ended Aug. 17. That was down 21,000 from the previous week.

— The Investment Company Institute reported that assets of the nation's 346 money-market mutual funds fell $2.03 billion in the week ending Wednesday. The seven-day average yield on the funds fell in the week ended Tuesday to 7.07 percent from 7.14 percent the previous week, according to Donoghue's Money Fund Report, a trade journal based in Holliston, Mass..

Leading indicators rise as trade deficit declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main forecasting gauge of future economic activity posted a healthy increase in July while the country's trade deficit dipped to its lowest level since January, the Commerce Department said today.

The Index of Leading Economic Indicators rose 0.4 percent in July. This matched the revised June gain and was somewhat stronger than most private economists had been expecting.

Meanwhile, the country's merchandise trade deficit declined to $10.5 billion last month, a 22 percent drop from the June level.

Both these improvements came in a month when most economic statistics have been uniformly weak, casting strong doubts on hopes for a rebound in activity this year.

The big improvement in trade stemmed from a 19.3 percent drop in imported oil shipments and a 20.3 percent decline in imports of Japanese autos.

These declines sent overall imports down 9.5 percent from the June level to a new total of $27.9 billion. Exports dipped a slight 0.2 percent in July to a total of $17.4 billion.

For the first seven months of the year, the trade deficit has soared to $81.2 billion, 10 percent ahead of the same period in 1984.

For all of 1985, the deficit is forecast to go as high as $150 billion, far above last year's record $123.3 billion total.

The country's trading problems have been cited as the key reason that economic growth has been so anemic this year.

As measured by the gross national product, the overall economy expanded at a slight 1.1 percent annual rate for the first six months of the year.

This weakness has been reflected in the Leading Index, which has declined five times since June of 1984, reflecting the sluggishness since the middle of last year.

The 0.4 percent July gain left the index at 168.7 percent of its 1967 base.

While the higher-than-expected July increase was welcome, analysts noted that the government revised the June gain down sharply from an originally reported 1 percent surge to only a 0.4 percent increase.

The Reagan administration is forecasting that growth in the second half of the year will rebound sharply to a strong annual rate of 4.9 percent.

But most private forecasters believe that prediction is far too optimistic. They are calling for the economy to grow at around a 2.5 percent annual rate, only slightly better than in the first half of the year.

David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc., said a key problem is that consumer spending, which has been a driving force behind the recovery, is beginning to slow as consumer debt burdens grow and personal income shows only modest gains.

FBI arrests suspects in Puerto Rico

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 200 FBI agents arrested 14 persons in Puerto Rico today and sought others in connection with a $7 million armed robbery believed to have been carried out by Puerto Rican terrorists in Connecticut two years ago, federal sources said.

The sources, who declined to be identified by name, said agents had traded gunfire while making the arrests and searches early today on the Caribbean island.

FBI spokesman Lane Bonner said bureau agents were making searches and arrests on the island in connection with the Sept. 12, 1983, armed robbery of a Wells Fargo depot in West Hartford, Conn. Some $7 million was taken in that robbery, Bonner said.

Among those charged in connection with the case is Victor Gerena, one of the FBI's Ten Most Wanted Fugitives. Gerena has been identified in published reports as a member of the Macheteros, a radical Puerto Rican independence group that has claimed responsibility for a number of violent attacks on U.S. military targets on Puerto Rico.

The Macheteros claimed responsibility for helping Gerena with the robbery, and said he was a member of the group.

Bonner declined to say whether Gerena or anyone else had been apprehended yet. He would not say how many persons were sought or how many or what locations were being searched.

Bonner also declined to say how many FBI agents were participating in the operation, but sources said dozens of agents had been sent to the island from mainland FBI offices in the United States.

In the West Hartford robbery, police said, Gerena bound and gagged an armored truck driver and a Wells Fargo security manager after the truck, with Gerena as the guard, returned from picking up money on a route that began in Springfield, Mass.

Gerena, a part-time guard who made less than $5 an hour, fled with $7,017,153 in what was described as the second largest cash robbery in U.S. history, authorities said.

The cash theft was the largest since $11.1 million was taken from a Sentry Armored Car warehouse in New York City nine months earlier.

Federal arrest warrants issued then charged Gerena with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, theft from an interstate shipment of funds belonging to Federal Reserve member banks, theft of those funds and using a weapon in the theft.

The Macheteros, a Spanish word for machete-wielders, also are known as the Puerto Rican Popular Army. They are among three Puerto Rican independence factions which claimed responsibility for the bloody ambush of a U.S. Navy bus outside the Sabana Seca naval base on the island in December 1979.

TEACHERS

"These are tough standards, but we think our districts can earn passing grades if they all apply themselves to their work and try hard to do their best," he said. "We will stick with the task of reform all the way through the 'second phase' of implementation, and we are going to work hard to make sure the school districts of Texas stick to their task as well."

Cole chastised other teacher "unions" who historically have fought to stop the reform.

Efforts by the Texas State Teachers Association to halt planned competency testing of teachers who are already certified brought quick criticism from from Cole.

The Texas Federation of Teachers Union said last week it approved the competency test.

"I think it's a controversy about nothing. Throwing out testing is like showing up with a fever of 102 and breaking the thermometer," he said.

The suit, filed Thursday in an Austin state district court, contends the teacher testing provision of the 1984 major public school reform act is unconstitutional and asks an injunction.

The competency test provision requires all certified teachers and administrators to pass a basic skills test by June 30, 1986.

Cole said the test, alone, will not accurately measure teacher performance, but added that "public opinion delegates that this test be given and if a teacher can't read and write then they shouldn't be in the classroom."

He added, "What we, as educators, should do is say these reforms are not good enough. We're going to do better and go off and leave the state behind."

WELCH

"It was investigated," Welch said. "There's absolutely nothing there (wrong). What I did was totally correct. I did nothing wrong."

Former County Commissioners Ed Gideon, Clark Moreland and Jack Leonard earlier said they had maintained the road when they were in office. Gideon said he was a commissioner when the road was dedicated in 1958.

However, Welch's predecessor, former Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis, whom Welch defeated in Davis's s bid for re-election last year, had not maintainted the road and apparently had viewed it as a private road.

Welch said the road incident was a "political problem and not a legal problem."

"It should have been taken care of at the voting polls and not by the grand jury. I hope this is the end of it all. It should be."

Welch said he suspects who brought the incident before the grand jury, but "I can't name names."

District Attorney Al Schorre said he is forbidden by law, by ethical considerations and District Judge Vann Culp from commenting on any grand-jury case which is not indicted. Reputations could be damaged, he suggested.

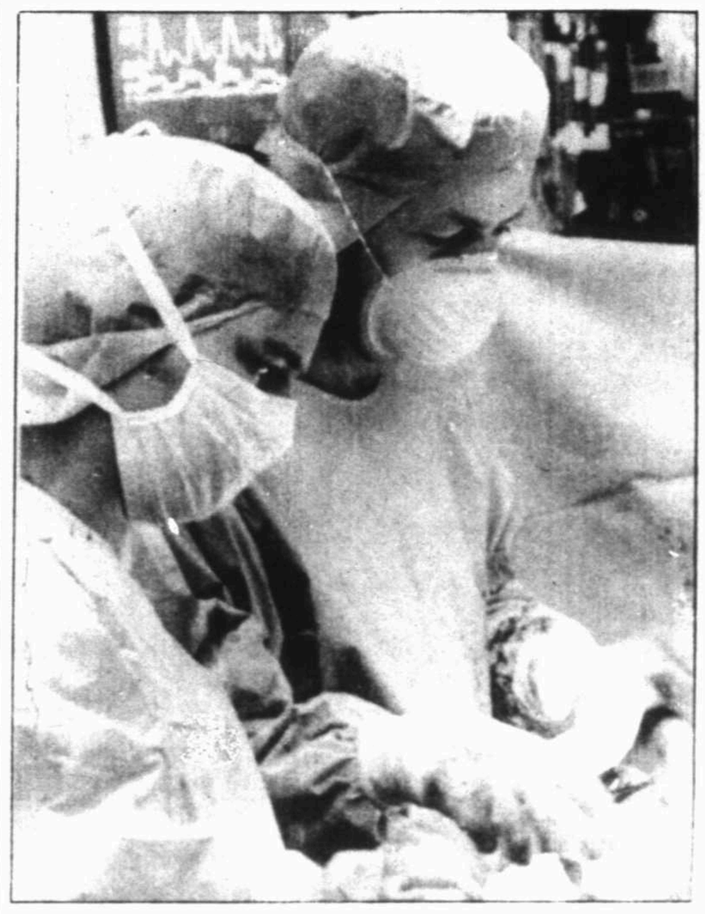

Former Commissioner Charlie Welch, Scott Welch's father, today said the investigation was politically motivated.

""Any time you're successful in politics, there's always someone who would like to harrass you," he said.

Dr. Jack Copeland, right, and another member of the University Medical Center's heart transplant team perform implant surgery on a 25-year-old Phoenix man.

HEART

The assistant supermarket manager from Phoenix had been given 12 to 24 hours to live without the implant. He was the victim of a viral infection that attacked his heart. The mechanical pump was chosen as a temporary measure.

Drummond's heart rapidly deteriorated after he was transferred to the University of Arizona Medical Center Monday from a hospital near Phoenix, Copeland said. "We were getting a clear message from his heart that he didn't have much time to survive," he said "We caught him in the process of dying and we were able to rescue him with the artificial heart."

Drummond's vital signs were good after the operation and doctors noted a lessening of fluid that had been in his lungs before the operation, Copeland said in a briefing Thursday.

Assisting Copeland was Dr. Cecil Vaughn of St. Luke's Medical Center in Phoenix. The two surgeons implanted the experimental Phoenix Heart into Thomas Creighton on March 7. Creighton died of complications following a subsequent human heart transplant. Also assisting was Dr. Robert Emery.

Drummond was the sixth and youngest recipient of an artificial heart, and the operation was performed only a week after the hospital received U.S. Food and Drug Administration approval to use the Jarvik-7. Three previous implant patients, including one in Sweden, are still living with the pumps.

Dr. Robert Jarvik, inventor of the mechanical device, who flew here Thursday from Salt Lake City, said Drummond had a better chance of survival than other recipients because his other organs had not suffered major damage. Jarvik called the surgery "a very routine and a very excellent operation that essentially went without a hitch."

He said he agreed with Copeland that the artificial heart could be used as a temporary bridge until doctors can find a human heart.

Drummond's heart trouble began early this year with a viral infection. He had been bedridden since March with a cardiomyopathy, or diseased heart muscle, Copeland said. He moved from Cottonwood, Ariz., where he was assistant manager of a Safeway store, to Phoenix to stay with his parents after his condition worsened.

ELENA

At 6 a.m. EDT today, Elena was centered near latitude 27.8 north and longitude 87.5 west, about 175 miles south of Pensacola. Drawing power as it lingered over warm Gulf waters, Elena was moving north-northwest at 5 to 10 mph, spinning off 95 mph winds.

Its diameter spanned about 350 miles over the Gulf and gales from the storm's fringe reached the Florida Panhandle coast early today, the weather service said. Up to 10 inches of rain are expected in the hurricane's path and tornadoes were possible in parts of northwest Florida and southern Alabama today.

Elena's indecision on landfall and drop in speed was giving the storm more time to beef up its winds, said Wade Guice, Civil Defense Director in Harrison County, Miss., and a hurricane veteran. By the time Elena hits land, its winds could range from 120 mph to 150 mph, putting it in the class of Hurricane Betsy, which ripped into New Orleans in 1965, Guice said.

As an estimated 50,000 people left their homes and businesses in Mississippi Thursday, major highways from the state's three coastal counties were crowded with traffic as far north as Meridian, about 150 miles inland.

The giant Ingalls Shipyard in Pascagoula, a major military contractor, shut its doors and sent its 11,500 workers home. Ingalls workers refloated a ship that had been in dry dock and secured others that were under construction.

In Gulfport, Miss., trainers at Marine Life Oceanarium used trucks packed with water and ice to move their dolphins from their harbor pens to hotel pools and doctors at Memorial Hospital who set up a maternity waiting room for women more than six months pregnant said a hurricane's dramatic pressure changes can induce labor.

Biloxi, Miss., police called on an interpreter to broadcast warnings of the storm to the Gulf Coast's Vietnamese community.

Besides fierce winds, the storm could raise tides by 8 to 12 feet along the coast, cutting off escape routes when it hits land, the weather service said.

Elena, the fifth named storm of the 1985 Atlantic hurricane season, became the fourth hurricane when sustained winds topped 74 mph at 9 a.m. EDT Thursday.

Squalls from Elena's northern fringes were reported on the Florida Panhandle shortly before midnight Thursday. A flash flood watch was issued in northwest Florida counties west of the Chattahoochee River.

In the Panhandle, people jammed stores and gas stations to stock up on food, gasoline, batteries, candles, canned goods, duct tape, beer, distilled water and lamp oil.

"The place has gone crazy," said Ann Newman, a bookkeeper at Albertson's grocery in Pensacola. "There's over an hour wait to get through the check-out."

Florida Gov. Bob Graham declared a state of emergency in seven Panhandle counties and called out 250 National Guard troops to help with evacuations.

About 40,000 people were evacuated from coastal communities.

'Perfect' desert tree created

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The search for the perfect desert tree may be about over.

The perfect tree is no small trick in a climate and environment that doesn't exactly nurture trees, but does attract human beings who want them.

Such a tree should offer both shade and greenery. It should grow rapidly, since home builders typically scrape their lots clean of all vegetation.

It should not demand lots of water. It should resist both disease and heat. It should offer a showy flower display. It should not be thorny, so it can be pruned. It should not be messy, dropping leaves and other debris all over the front yard.

So where can one find such a marvel?

About 80 of them are growing, in private, at the Arizona-Sonora Desert Museum. They are saplings but in about two years will near maturity and will be offered for sale to the public.

Partly by accident and partly by green-thumb alchemy, the curator of plants at the museum, Mark Dimmitt, created what he believes is a tree "with superior characteristics for residential desert landscaping... superior to just about anything we have available here now."

"Most people like the desert," he said, "but they don't want a completely cactus yard. They want some green. It just seems to be something we need."

Few trees work well.

The blue paloverde offers reasonable shade and great flowers, but it is thorny and does not grow quite fast enough. Also, because the native tree thrives best in arroyos, which offer more water, it demands extra moisture to do well in front of houses.

The Chilean hybrid mesquite offers most of the pluses but is very thorny. Same goes for the native sweet acacia, which makes a good patio tree and has lovely, fragrant flowers, but is fairly small, too small for good shade.

The mulberry does pretty well but demands a fair amount of water to look good, is susceptible to disease because it is not native and tortures the sinuses.

Dimmitt's tree is a hybrid paloverde that combines the best and eliminates the worst features of all three naturally occurring species of paloverde here — the Mexican, the blue, and the foothills (or little-leaf) varieties.

The new tree, says Dimmitt, grows fast, has small, clean leaves, offers a good canopy, is completely thornless, doesn't demand much water, has very large, bright-yellow flowers and appears to be disease-resistant.

"It's got the best stuff...by far the best qualities we can find anywhere for this purpose," he said. "And I'm 99 percent sure we've got the secret now to doing it, to propagating this tree."

The recipe for this particular hybrid is one-quarter Mexican paloverde, one-quarter foothills and one-half blue paloverde.

Just how well Dimmitt has succeeded "will remain a secret for the time being," said a museum official.

Texan trying to save white rhinocerosi

STINNETT, Texas (AP) — While the plains of the Panhandle may still be wild, there have been changes.

If rustlers ever rode into the Turkey Track Ranch north of here, they might be shocked into becoming salesmen.

Over some mounds of loam and sand, across an 8-foot-deep trench, a herd is grazing.

White rhinocerosi!

Six of them, in fact.

They represent the second largest breeding herd of the white rhinos in captivity.

"It's something I always wanted to do," said Jim Whittenburg, owner of the ranch and rhinos.

He said he was concerned about the species because it was facing extinction and wanted an effort to save the white rhinoceros.

The animals are not called by name.

They seem to go without the status of pets. Instead, they are treated delicately and reverently, like any expensive thoroughbred. Whittenburg said the animals were registered with members of other herds to prevent in-breeding and, generally, to genetically insure a better breed.

He said the animals are docile, although no one but their caretaker, Michael Lamkin, is allowed near.

Whittenburg watches Lamkin stand inside the acre-long "pen" while a rhino approaches him and lets him rub its horn.

Whittenburg said he acquired the animals from a dealer in Los Angeles. The rhinos were originally intended for the zoo in Clovis, N.M. The zoo, however, did not have the facilities ready. The rhinos were trucked to the Panhandle earlier this summer.

Whittenburg said the three-day journey in crates was hard on the herd. One bull died of trauma shortly after arriving.

Now, however, the group is thriving, Whittenburg said.

The climate and environment of North Texas is very similar to their native Africa, he said.

They eat the same things most livestock eat. In addition to a bale of alfalfa hay daily, the adult rhinos eat grass and sweet feed.

Tent camps of Hawaii's 'beach people' create controversy

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MAKAHA, Hawaii — Tua Myers and her children live on one of the loveliest pieces of real estate in the world. The cobalt-blue waters of the Pacific lap gently on the white sands 100 yards from their door, and the stunning beauty of the cloud-topped Wainae Mountains looms above. Condos here sell for $125,000, and the Sheraton rents an ocean view for $125 a day, mountain view for $110.

But the Myerses have no home. They are among Hawaii's homeless "beach people," and they live in an Army surplus tent near a muddy lagoon.

They are part of a small but growing group of about 300 homeless people who have laid claim to beach lands on the island of Oahu. The beach people have become an emotional and political issue on Oahu, where housing is scarce and the most expensive in the United States. The average house sold for $183,000 this year.

The beach people are poor. Many live on the land because they assert that their Hawaiian ancestry gives them rights to the property under the 1920 Hawaiian Homes Act. The law set aside 200,000 acres to be preserved for native homesteading to compensate for the encroachment of the haoles, the white settlers who came here as missionaries and whose descendants reaped profit from sugar cane, pineapple and, ultimately, tourism.

"Some people think we like living this way. We don't," said Myers, who has been on welfare since a bitter divorce. "Sometimes, at night, we are just crying. The weather is so hot, and the bugs, the centipedes." She perspired profusely as she greeted a visitor inside her stifling tent, which lacks electricity. Their water comes from a hose near the portable toilets and outdoor shower erected by the city government.

"This place is bad, but we try our best," Myers said. She shares the tent with four children, 9 to 15 years old. She has placed carpet scraps over wood scraps to provide a floor. Old car seats and mattresses are the furniture. Food is stored in an Igloo cooler and cooked on a Coleman stove. The diet includes Spam and limu, an edible seaweed that the children collect in the surf and sell to a local market.

Squatters have lived on several Hawaii beaches for years, but the issue came to a head last spring, with growing numbers residing on public beaches, taking over desirable campsites, building shanties and offending the tourists.

"It looks like a suburb of some Central American slum," Honolulu Mayor Frank Fasi told the Honolulu Star-Bulletin last month, explaining his order to tear down shanties in an area he described as a "pigsty." Squatters were relocated to various sites, including the city-owned spot where Myers and about 40 others live in donated Army tents.

The demolition order by the mayor, who runs Oahu's city-county government, ended a running battle with beach people who had obtained permits to camp but overstayed their welcome, erecting ever-larger structures out of plywood, plastic, ropes and wire.

On June 3, a dozen beach people were arrested and several injured when police arrived to tear down their houses. A contingent of more than 40 homeless later headed for Honolulu where they staged a sit-in at the state Department of Hawaiian Home Lands, bringing their pots, pans and bedding for a long stay. A dozen more were arrested there.

Under the 1920 law, the Home Lands agency distributes land under 99-year leases to residents who have at least 50 percent Hawaiian ancestry. Hawaii had a population estimated at 300,000 when Captain James Cook discovered the islands in 1778. Thereafter, disease and encroachment decimated the native population. Today, about 300 people claim to be 100 percent Hawaiian, and an estimated 30,000 are considered 50 percent native. The native population is also the islands' poorest, with more than half having no reportable income, according to a 1975 state study.

The beach people's sit-in was staged to demand faster action in getting land. But the much-criticized department has a waiting list of more than 9,000 families — while only 3,000 families have been given homesteads in the program's 60-year history.

North Carolina island holds out against progress

By HUNTER JAMES
Cox News Service

OCRACOKE, N.C. — Everything was going along just fine until the stranger came to town.

He came with a smile and a friendly greeting for the people on the street. But when he began talking about his dream for this isolated island community the natives began to shudder.

What he wanted, he said, was to build a motel that would be "the most imposing structure on the island." Wasn't that just what the island needed? Ocracoke was no longer just a fishing village or a refuge for mainlanders who couldn't afford Nag's Head or Myrtle Beach. It was a big tourist town now. It needed more and better motel accommodations. It needed restaurants, gift shops, a broadened tax base.

The more he talked the more the natives began to wonder about the stranger's intentions. And now that Scott Cotrell's dream, the three (soon-to-be-four) story Anchorage Inn has begun to take shape, their bewilderment has turned to anger. Because even at its present three stories, Scott Cotrell's motel has become the dominating — even overpowering — feature of a waterfront that previously has known only weathered clapboard houses and shops, and the quiet, softly lapping waters of Pamlico Sound.

Talk to any of the natives, most of whom date their ancestry to the time of the first white settlers, and they will tell you that Cotrell's Anchorage Inn simply does not accord with island tradition. It is out of character, they say. It ought to be on the interstate somewhere, or maybe at some fancy resort like Myrtle Beach.

Yet in an unincorporated town of fewer than 1,000 permanent residents, a town with no zoning ordinance or building code, there was nothing to prevent Cotrell from doing exactly what he pleased. Not that the natives didn't have their chance. Even as the Anchorage was going up, the islanders voted down a proposed zoning ordinance by a margin of almost two to one.

The reason the ordinance failed, Ocracokers say, is that it was too complex, too sophisticated, and would have done more than was needed. Or maybe it was just that it wasn't explained properly. Besides, they hadn't seen enough of the Anchorage to know what Cotrell really had in mind. Now they have. And they fear that other buildings of similar size will soon follow.

At most fast-developing high-rise beach resorts, the Anchorage would pass virtually unnoticed. But here, on an island that has no hankering for such things, it dominates the waterfront the way a granddaddy bullfrog dominates a pond.

"Fort Ocracoke is what we call it now," says W.J. Garrish, a 70-year-old retired naval officer who came back to his native Ocracoke 10 years ago.

Another motel operator, Foy J. Shaw, who operates the historic Island Inn with his partner, Larry Williams, says: "From my point of view, it's not at all in keeping with the island. But from Mr. Cotrell's point of view, I'm sure it's an absolutely beautiful building. It suits him to a T."

Kay Riddick, operator of the Bluff Shoals Motel, is more direct: she calls the Anchorage a "monstrosity."

That and a lot more — some of it unprintable — have been said about Scott Cotrell's dream. The 45-year-old Cotrell still has a smile and friendly handshake for everyone. But he is getting a little tired of hearing that kind of talk about his fine new imposing motel.

"The only thing I can say, there may be a few that don't like it," he said. "But there are an awful lot that do like it, and it's the most successful motel on this island."

Zoning?

"I'm for it," he said. "I voted for it. When this building was half built, and people started calling over to Swanquarter (the county seat) to complain, the county manager would say, 'If you don't like that, then I would suggest you be sure and vote for zoning so there won't be any more. But zoning failed two to one. The mentality here is, don't you dare try and tell me what to do with my property, but don't you do such-and-such with yours."

The Anchorage isn't even finished yet. Maybe, says Cotrell, the islanders will find it a little less offensive when the roof is finally on. After all, he points out, it isn't the first "monstrosity" that has been built on the island.

As he talks he points to the other - a huge structure with a steeply pitched dormer-laden roof, built by a foundry owner from Norfolk, Va., some years ago which was, in the eyes of many natives, an intolerable architectural disgrace.

Fires destroy businesses in South African rioting

WORLD

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Some of the fiercest rioting in a year of protests against apartheid left a school, a paint factory and dozens of stores in Cape Town townships in smoldering ruins today.

The state-controlled South African Broadcasting Corp. reported that at least 150 people, including 27 people, were wounded in the mixed-race townships of Mitchells Plain and Guguletu since Thursday. Sixty-three people were arrested, the radio said.

Nineteen others have been killed across South Africa since rioting erupted Wednesday as people of all races tried to march to Cape Town's Pollsmoor Prison to demand freedom for black leader Nelson Mandela. Police and witnesses reported six deaths Thursday in fierce rioting in Cape Town and Johannesburg.

A fact-finding group of three Common Market foreign ministers was to arrive in South Africa today to prepare a report for a Sept. 10 meeting of the European community's 10 members.

Sections of Cape Town's five major "colored," or mixed-race, districts including Mitchells Plain, Swartklip, Athlone, Mannenberg and Bellville South, were in flames overnight.

A spokesman at Cape Town's central fire station, who refused to be identified, said 36 emergency calls from black and mixed-race districts had been received in the previous 18 hours, but the situation appeared to have calmed.

Burning shops had lit the night sky over Bellville, Athlone and Swartklip, residents reported. A Cape Town fire department spokesman, who refused to give his name, said Thursday: "We're not going in tonight, there's insufficient police protection."

Dozens of roads into Mitchells Plain were impassable today, littered with burned cars, mattresses and smoldering tires, witnesses reported.

Victims of the violence included three boys, aged 12, 13 and 16, shot to death Thursday as police firing live ammunition raced through the partly middle-class Mitchells Plain, relatives and witnesses said reported.

Harold Bailey, whose 13-year-old son Quinton was one of the victims, told reporters: "They were not doing anything. They were just curious."

Police headquarters said no officer was available to comment on the incident.

In Johannesburg's Soweto township, police fired into a crowd stoning a bus and a private car, killing one black and seriously wounding another, police reported. They said two blacks were killed in disturbances at Paarl, 25 miles from Cape Town, and at KwaThema, east of Johannesburg.

At the Spine Road secondary school in Soweto, principal Eshaan Harris said two dozen officers fired rubber bullets at students, and then rampaged through the building, smashing windows and doors, when the students threw stones back.

WORLD in brief

Exclusion of evidence upheld in Aquino trial

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Supreme Court today upheld a trial court's decision to exclude key evidence against the armed forces chief and seven others on trial in connection with the assassination of Benigno Aquino.

The high court, on a 10-3 vote, agreed that testimony the eight had given to a civilian investigation board would be self-incriminatory if introduced at trial.

The lawyer for armed forces chief Fabian C. Ver had said he would seek immediate dismissal of charges against his client if the high court upheld the lower court ruling. The lawyer, Antonio Coronel, was neither at his office or home and could not be reached for comment.

Prosecutors say they have little other evidence against Ver, who has been on leave as the closest military adviser to President Ferdinand E. Marcos since last October, when the fact-finding board concluded that Aquino was not killed by Galman, but by soldiers in a military conspiracy.

Friend could be spy

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Officials who questioned and released the chief of a West German counter-espionage unit say they are looking for a friend of his who they suspect of being an East German agent.

Bonn security sources said West German and Austrian authorities were hunting for Eberhard Severin, who was said to be a long-time friend of counter-espionage section chief Reinhard Liebentanz.

Liebentanz works for the Constitutional Protection Office, the same agency that employed Hans-Joachim Tiedge before Tiedge defected to East Germany earlier this month.

One secretary has been arrested, and three others suspected of spying are missing in the widening espionage scandal. Chancellor Helmut Kohl has fired his intelligence chief, Heribert Hellenbroich, and appointed veteran diplomat Hans-Georg Wieck to replace him.

Nigeria frees prisoners

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) -- Nigeria's new military rulers freed 25 political prisoners and set up a committee to screen several hundred more for possible release, state radio reported.

The radio said the new president, Maj. Gen. Ibrahim Babangida, set up the committee to determine which prisoners were "unduly detained" by the previous military rulers. The radio report was monitored in Abidjan.

Maj. Gen. Muhammadu Buhari, who led the government that was overthrown Tuesday, had been criticized for holding more than 400 people without charges 20 months after a 1983 coup.

Shehu Shagari, the civilian president he deposed, is among those detained.

Vote victory for Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — A union's surprise rejection of a nationwide rail strike gave Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher another victory in her battle to tame the traditionally militant labor movement and streamline British industry.

But it remains to be seen whether the humbling of the railworkers' leadership will lift Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Party from its worst slump in the opinion polls in four years.

Confounding most political pundits and labor leaders who had predicted a long and bitter rail dispute, the 11,000 conductors narrowly voted Wednesday to reject their leaders' call for a strike.

The immediate effect is that the uoion, which has defiantly refused even to talk with management about productivity measures, now says it is ready to negotiate.

Argentinian unions strike

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Unions backed by opposition political parties launched a half-day general strike and staged a rally to protest the government's austerity measures.

The strike Thursday shut down the highly unionized industrial belt that rings the capital, but many medium-sized and small shops continued to operate.

Organizers estimated that 250,000 people attended the downtown rally, but reporters put the figure at 150,000.

The General Confederation of Labor, controlled by the opposition Peronist Party, called the strike.

Bolivia acts on currency

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — In an effort to control an annual inflation rate of 14,000 percent, the government has taken action that will devalue the currency by 95 percent, increase gasoline prices and freeze salaries until December.

Congress approved the measures Thursday after a 24-hour meeting that included the military high command and police commanders.

The government decree calls for a floating exchange rate for the peso, effectively devaluing it 95 percent. Gasoline prices will increase from 3 cents to 30 cents a liter, or $1.14 a gallon.

President Victor Paz Estenssoro, a centrist, made the move three weeks after he was sworn in as Bolivia's new leader.

Labor Day safety

Today thousands of Midlanders will pack the car, feed the dog extra rations and drive out of their driveways to join thousands of other Americans on the nation's highways, heading for destinations where they'll enjoy the long Labor Day holiday.

If they live, that is.

That's one of the saddest facts of our society. Not that people travel to enjoy their holidays, but that they make mistakes on those outings that cost themselves — or others — their lives. All of a sudden, a happy, carefree holiday trip turns into a nightmare.

The Labor Day holiday is a traditional favorite for out-of-town travel. Viewed as the last long weekend of summer before the onset of school and the rigors of fall workloads gearing up for the end-of-the-year crunch, Americans take advantage of the extra days to visit grandparents, get in a final fishing trip or a first dove-hunting excursion, or to take the boat to a lake for a final outing of the warm weather. People literally flock to lakes, rivers, campgrounds and other leisure areas to have a good time. That's as it should be, of course.

But in all that excitement, it's easy to forget the simple rules of staying alive on the nation's clogged highways: Do not exceed the speed limit, drive defensively, don't drink alcoholic beverages immediately before or while driving, take "rest stops" at least every two hours and make certain that every passenger wears a seat belt.

Those are simple rules that will not guarantee your safety while on the highways, but will greatly increase your odds of surviving a crash, should one occur. If every driver and passenger followed those rules, the holiday traffic counts would not be so large.

This weekend, be certain to follow all those rules and live to enjoy yet another Labor Day.

Learning experience

No one can rightly accuse Secretary of Education William Bennett of being the ivory tower type. To be sure, he talks a lot about improving the quality of teaching in American schools, but he also puts into practice what he preaches.

He can be a working teacher. President Reagan emphasized this in a radio broadcast from his California ranch the other day.

"When it comes to education," said Mr. Reagan, "it's the classroom, not Washington, where the real action is.

"That's why, starting in the next couple of weeks, Bill Bennett ... will be traveling to eight elementary, middle and senior high schools across the country, and teaching a class in each one."

Mr. Reagan went on to observe that teaching is not necessarily a one-way street:

"Secretary Bennett will not only be honoring the teaching profession and paying tribute to the art of teaching, he should be having something of a learning experience for himself as well."

We wish teacher Bennett well. It's refreshing to have an educator in his position who is willing, and able, to lend a hand at educating where, as the president pointed out, it really counts — in the classroom, not Washington.

Another View: Liberty for Liberia

Unhappy Liberia has its own version of one man, one vote. There, only one man's vote matters. The man is Samuel K. Doe, the former sergeant who at age 28 ensconced himself as president in 1980 after his soldiers bayoneted a civilian predecessor. Doe is now a five-star general whose most conspicuous victory is over the calendar. He has added two years to his age so that, officially, he will be 35, as required by the constitution, when the people of his West Africa country choose him as president in November's election.

To assure that result, all serious opposition parties have been ruled ineligible, their leaders jailed, their newspapers silenced. His most formidable challenger is Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, candidate of the Liberal Action Party. Harvard-educated and a former minister of finance, Johnson-Sirleaf has been Citibank's representative in Nairobi.

In a speech she gave recently on a visit to Philadelphia, she faulted Liberia's lavish public spending. For this, she was arrested on her return to Monrovia, accused of endangering stability. Last week, incredibly, she was put on trial for sedition.

All this cries out for more than a routine response from Washington. Americans have special historic ties to Liberia's 2 million people. Liberia was established in 1822 with American help as a haven for freed black slaves. Its use of English, its constitution and even its flag reflect this history. But the promise of liberty has never been realized. Liberians have endured poverty and corrupt misgovernment, and Doe's erratic despotism now outdoes his predecessors'.

Nonetheless, since his coup, U.S. foreign aid to Liberia has quadrupled, to $83 million this year, the highest per capita figure in Africa. To induce him to hold the elections he promised, $250,000 of this aid was earmarked to help pay the costs. Doe denounced Washington for interfering and vowed to return the money. Wholly in character, he hasn't.

The general seemingly assumes that the Reagan administration will put up with anything so long as he makes anti-Communist noises and causes no trouble about a vital Voice of America transmitter. But jailing a Citibank representative for preaching fiscal conservatism shows neither scruple nor sense. If Johnson-Sirleaf and other challengers are barred from Liberia's elections, a healthy cut in Liberian aid — especially $13 million in military aid — is one vote that America can cast.

Mob tries 'busing' into casinos

WASHINGTON — Ever since Atlantic City legalized gambling, Mafia families in the Northeast have been trying to grab a piece of the action. So far they have failed to acquire control of the casinos that line the boardwalk — but not for want of trying.

Jack Anderson

Crime families have tried to infiltrate through various labor unions and companies that provide essential services to the gambling palaces. They've also zeroed in on the lucrative "superbus" junkets for big-stakes gamblers.

These aren't the widely advertised bus rides that lure older folks away from their Bingo games with free meal tickets and a roll of quarters for the slot machines. The superbus deals are tailored for usually no more than 25 high rollers who can — and do — drop large amounts at the crap tables.

Our associate Tony Capaccio has reviewed evidence gathered by New Jersey State Police investigators during a two-year undercover mission called Operation Eagle. They learned that at least 90 of the 200 junket operators licensed to do business in Atlantic City have been associated with an interstate network of junket organizers controlled by a reputed "capo" in the Bonanno crime family, Charles Musillo of Staten Island, N.Y.

A statement the Jersey cops submitted to the President's Commission on Organized Crime last June identified four casinos the network did business with: Caesar's, the Claridge, the Tropicana and the Sands. None of the casinos has been accused of any wrongdoing; on the contrary, they were the victims.

Musillo is among 11 men who were indicted for a junket operation that allegedly milked $1.6 million from Caesar's between March and August 1983.

Musillo refused to talk with us. His attorney did confirm that Musillo was one of several persons convicted in 1977 for their roles in a scheme that led to the collapse of the Bank of Bloomfield, N.J. But he said his client's involvement in the junket business was "minimal," and said that "in thousands of pages of grand jury testimony his name was mentioned only once by one witness."

The state police statement, however, identified Musillo as a Bonanno family member who "indirectly" received commissions from licensed junket operators. The commissions went to Casino Caravans Inc., a now-defunct firm in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., that was incorporated in late 1982 by Musillo's two sons.

"Casino Caravans controlled the network's operation into (the) four casinos in Atlantic City," the police statement said.

During Operation Eagle, the Casino Caravans office manager boasted to an undercover cop that he "had 75 percent of Caesar's business" since it had opened.

The indictment charges that Caesar's paid the "front" company under Casino Caravan's control $1,200 to $1,800 per superbus, for a total of $1.6 million during the five-month period.

The payments were based on ratings of the high rollers' value to the casino, figuring the amount they had "dropped" at the gaming tables during the junket. The more money the customers lost, the more likely the networks' casino business would increase.

But the police investigators found evidence that the player ratings made by the pit man presiding over one of Caesar's crap tables were systematically inflated to make the losses bigger. In one audit, for example, the state investigators found that Caesar's paid commissions based on a total of $500,000 lost by about 1,000 crap shooters on 61 junkets. But when they interviewed the gamblers, the police added up only $67,200 in total losses.

A Caesar's attorney told us the casino hasn't seen any evidence of large-scale exaggeration of junket customers' losses. He added that Caesar's stopped doing business with the junket firm in late 1983, and the suspect pit man quit that year.

CONSUMER REPORT: Better late than never, the Department of Health and Human Services has decided to look into HMOs — health maintenance organizations. These are group health plans that charge their subscribers an annual fee for total health care, with a nominal charge for each use of the system. The emphasis is on preventive health care, and growing numbers of hospitals are giving discounts to HMOs and their patients. It could be the wave of the future. And after years of ignoring the concept, HHS has finally ordered a study of HMOs to determine if they are the answer to cheaper and more effective health care.

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: In any given Soviet-American crisis, U.S. television networks invariably feature interviews with Soviet "experts." The Kremlin's official spokesmen are able to spiel the party line at length and are given respectful attention for their views. The reverse is not true on Moscow television, though. According to the U.S. Information Agency, American experts' access to Soviet TV audiences is both rare and tightly controlled. USIA Chief Charles Wick is hoping to correct this propaganda imbalance. He wrote to his counterpart in Moscow, Leonid Zamyatin, outlining suggestions for a more equitable arrangement.

McFarlane atop policy ladder

WASHINGTON — Two events last week, one shrouded from public view and the other in the open, confirmed that Robert D. McFarlane's influence as President Reagan's national security adviser has reached a commanding height in the competition to control policy for the coming U.S.-Soviet summit.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The private event: Overriding the wishes of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and defense-oriented Republican senators, McFarlane struck the name of Zbigniew Brzezinski from a new Pentagon advisory panel.

The public event: By delivering a hard-hitting speech about the summit whose text was not even available to the State Department, McFarlane showed an independence that must derive from belief in Reagan's full confidence.

This conduct suggests it is McFarlane more than Weinberger or Secretary of State George Shultz who has the inside track with Ronald Reagan on national security. His relative hard-line attitude toward the Kremlin may put the administration in a political posture closer to Reagan's own instincts than the pro-detente views held inside the bureaucracy.

The Brzezinski incident, while less important, is even more revealing of the way McFarlane operates. He was not about to broaden the administration's national security policies with strategic input from the dynamic and imaginative Brzezinski, who was President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser but whose views are close to Reagan's.

McFarlane's decision to strike his name from the Pentagon's list of experts embarrassed Weinberger. It also stunned Pete Wilson and other Republican senators concerned that Reagan's arms program will only widen the gap between Soviet and U.S. strategic power. They had asked Weinberger to invite Brzezinski to sit on the new panel, and Weinberger quickly agreed.

McFarlane in the past would have felt compelled to go along, but not so now. He dropped Brzezinski with no attempt to justify his action beyond an offhand observation that it might make Reagan look as though he needed Democratic help.

Those self-confident McFarlane qualities were put on display in his toughly-worded Aug. 19 warning to the Soviet Union. He tried to foreclose U.S. concessions by saying that not even "incremental improvements" in U.S.-Soviet relations would be possible without basic changes in the Kremlin's policies. White House insiders told us the only official who was aware that the speech was about to be made — much less what it would say — was the vacationing president.

Shultz has given no indication that he fears McFarlane's rise as Reagan's mentor, or even resents the national security adviser delivering a speech that should have been in the secretary of state's province. McFarlane's quiet, even stealthy, progression up the power curve has been possible because so far he has not been regarded as a menace at the State Department.

An example: When Foreign Minister Roelof Botha of South Africa made a clearly unacceptable request to meet with President Reagan in Washington three weeks ago, the White House suggested that a high State Department official should instead go to Vienna for talks with the South African. But Shultz picked McFarlane, who at Vienna became a major player in the South African crisis.

Inside the White House, McFarlane's ascent has not produced cheers from Donald T. Regan. Instead of cultivating the new chief of staff, McFarlane used the transition to stake out a new independence for himself and his staff. Since then, swords'-point confrontations with Regan that marked that earlier period have softened.

McFarlane has started a deliberate, so far successful, campaign to assure policy dominance over the State Department on preparations for the Reagan-Gorbachev summit. The progression has been lonely, with his top-level allies seemingly limited to CIA Director William Casey (whose worries about the summit parallel McFarlane's). He also has been the target of personal rumors —unproved and, he has sworn to friends, untrue.

Thin-lipped and taciturn, Bud McFarlane is not an ex-Marine colonel who wears his heart on his sleeve or complains in public about private grievances that his friends say tear at his soul. Suffering silently, he has continued his slow ascent with every piece of evidence suggesting that he does so with full support from his boss as they approach a diplomatic confrontation of vital consequence for the nation.

CHARLEY REESE

Foreign aid issue needs close look

In the face of a $200 billion deficit on top of a $1.7 trillion federal debt, the House passed a $12.7 billion foreign aid bill.

Charley Reese

Since the end of World War II, Americans have been taxed to provide around $300 billion in foreign aid. If you look at the present state of the world, you have to conclude the results have not been worth it.

Has it promoted democracy? Nope. Only about 25 of the members of the United Nations can be called democracies even with a loose definition.

Has it promoted prosperity? Nope. Africa is an economic catastrophe, much of Latin America is bankrup, and unemployment runs high in Europe and America.

Has it promoted peace? Pardon me while I laugh sadly.

How about friendship for America? Definitely not. The only two nations which get voted against and verbally abused more than America at the United Nations are Israel and South Africa.

If you read the Constitution, supposedly the supreme law of the land, you will find nothing that could be used to justify taxing Americans and handing their money over to foreign governments.

You have to stretch both interpretation of the Constitution and common sense far out of shape to justify foreign aid on the basis of promoting the general welfare of the American people.

Foreign aid needs a fresh look. Not only is the concept itself faulty, but its execution is ridiculous. Congress mixes up policy decisions, domestic politics, and even ideological quirks into an expensive stew they call the foreign aid appropriations bill.

At a time when the Philippines probably needs military aid more than at any time since it defeated the Huks, the House cut it to the bone to "protest" the policies of Philippines president Ferdinand Marcos. One, it is typical of cowardly U.S. politicians. Marcos has been president for 20 years. They are upset with him at this late date only because he's in trouble. Two, if the purpose of foreign aid is to benefit us, not the recipient, then it's irrelevant whether our politicians like their politicians.

Foreign aid should not be used as a bribe. We have no right to interfere in the internal affairs of another nation. A great many Congressmen, however, who are incompetent to run their own country, cannot resist trying to run other people's countries, especially if they are small and weak countries.

Nor should foreign aid be used to buy an ally. A bought ally is unreliable. Furthermore, if the so-called ally is a dictator and he gets knocked off or thrown out of the country, the "investment" frequently gets flushed down the toilet as is currently happening in Sudan.

And speaking of Sudan, foreign aid should never be used to grease the way for American business. The recently deposed Sudanese dictator, Mohammed Nimeiri, was a tyrant generally credited with 500,000 deaths. What possible interest do we have in Sudan? Well, Standard Oil of California made a big oil strike there some years ago.

We must insist that business and state be as separate as church and state. If corporations have to pay bribes to operate in foreign countries, then let them pay them out of their own funds. Let us not spend tax dollars and American lives to protect private corporate interests as the State Department seems ever ready to do.

Whenever you hear a politician, pundit or foreign policy type speak about "American interests" is such and such a place, insist that they define those interests explicitly. I kept a State Department guy on the phone for 10 minutes once, asking what specific interests we had in Chad, and he never did think of any he would admit to.

The touchy point on foreign aid is Israel. I'm a big fan of Israel. It's a brave and noble country, one of the few which we can rely on and which has made an honest effort to pay back its loans. Still, we have to face facts. Is Israel a viable, independent nation or not? This bill includes more money for Israel than some state governments spend. If Israel has to be permanently dependent on U.S. taxpayers, then maybe it should apply for statehood. We should also examine the question of whether massive U.S. aid actually helps or harms Israel. The answer might not be as obvious as you think.

Of this, I am certain: The whole question of foreign aid needs to be re-examined and debated. The record would indicate it is a failed policy, botched both in concept and in execution. Besides, in most countries the money is stolen anyway.

Spy dust greatest health threat to Soviet agents who apply it

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet agents who U.S. authorities claim sprayed a chemical spy dust on American cars and desks in Moscow probably ran a far greater health risk than the diplomats whose movements they were trying to track, medical experts say.

Rep. Dan Mica, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs International Operations subcommittee, said Thursday he was told by Dr. Charles Brodine, the State Department's chief medical adviser, there was a "very low probability" the health of any U.S. personnel in Moscow has been adversely affected by ingesting or inhaling the substance or by absorbing it through the skin.

"The bad news is that the individuals at highest risk would be the Soviet agents that have been applying this substance, apparently in the form of an aerosol," Mica told a news conference. "It's ironic, but spraying it around and taking it into the lungs could place them at the highest risk of all."

Mica said the State Department believes it is likely the chemical tracking powder nitrophenylpentadienal, or NPPD, was used at least once by Soviet agents inside the United States.

"There are indications it has been used outside Moscow, in the United States," Mica said. "I have been told there is one highly possible use in the United States."

But Mica said the State Department did not give him details of where and when the chemical may have been used in the United States or for what purpose. He said there is no evidence any U.S. agency has ever used it.

"The bad news is that the individuals at highest risk would be the Soviet agents that have been applying this substance, apparently in the form of an aerosol. It's ironic, but spraying it around...could place them at the highest risk of all."

—Rep. Dan Mica

The Florida legislator said the only reason the United States discovered this spring that the Soviets had begun to use the tracking substance heavily in Moscow was that they "made a mistake" and applied so much of the chemical at an unidentified site that the powder became visible.

Mica said the United States plans a short-term test of the health effects of the substance on laboratory animals.

He said a long-term test, which would take at least two years to complete, might be ordered, depending on the results of the preliminary testing.

"The situation is that we don't have all the answers," Mica said. "And it could take two years to get all the answers on the long-term effects on humans."

Mica said a crash program has been ordered to find out how to remove the sticky powder from automobiles, desks, typewriters, clothing and other places where it might have been sprayed.

"What it is put on, it tends to stick on," he said.

Americans in Moscow were told earlier Thursday that attempts will be made to see if the powder can be removed completely either by vacuuming or through the use of detergents.

But Dr. Ernest McConnell, the head of a team of American experts sent to brief U.S. personnel in Moscow, said there is a good chance the Soviets already have removed the chemical from surfaces to which it had been applied.

Mica said his subcommittee will continue to look into the situation and try to learn why U.S. personnel were not told about the eight earlier occasions between 1976 and 1985 when U.S. agents found small traces of the chemical.

The Soviets have strongly denied using the "spy dust," but Mica said, "notwithstanding the denials, everything I have heard indicates the substance was being used."

Shuttle crew preparing to repair satellite with 'hot-wiring' effort

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Discovery's commander guided his spaceship to within 2,000 miles of a lifeless $85 million satellite today as he edged toward a Saturday rendezvous and a daring spacewalk salvage effort.

Firing the shuttle's engines and steering rockets with precision, Joe Engle was gaining on his quarry by 63 miles each hour, a pace that increased as the hours passed. Hunter and hunted were more than 200 miles high.

Engle plans to pull alongside the 7½-ton Syncom 3 early Saturday, and spacewalkers James van Hoften and Bill Fisher will step outside to attempt to revive it with a tricky "hot-wire" electrical repair job. The task will be slowed because Discovery's 50-foot robot arm is not fully functional.

Van Hoften and Fisher would like to complete the repairs in one space walk of eight hours or less, as originally planned. But because of the arm problem, flight directors said they'll probably have to make a second excursion Sunday to finish the job.

Syncom 3 was 3,300 miles ahead of Discovery and about 20 miles higher when Engle and pilot Dick Covey began the chase Thursday after the crew successfully launched a third communications satellite. The flight plan called for them to circle the globe 24 times, 660,000 miles, before catching the target.

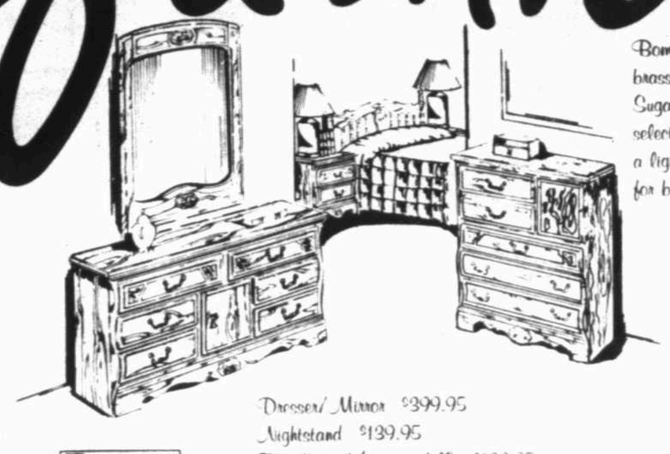

As the gap narrowed, van Hoften and Fisher checked out their space suits and other equipment and Mike Lounge studied detailed instructions from Mission Control on how to operate the arm in its arthritic condition.

The cabin pressure was lowered from 14.7 to 10.2 pounds per square inch, and van Hoften and Fisher donned helmets to breathe pure oxygen for more than an hour. This reduces the amount of nitrogen in their systems to prevent the "bends" — gas bubbles in muscles and joints that can cause intense pain — when they step into the outside vacuum.

Conditions forecast for 8 a.m. Saturday

West Texas, sunny and very warm through Saturday with highs ranging from the mid-90s to the mid-100s and lows from the upper 50s to lower 70s.

In North Texas, mostly sunny and clear through Saturday. Highs in the 90s, lows in the 70s.

In South Texas, partly cloudy and continued warm through Saturday. Highs in the 90s, lows in the upper 60s and 70s.

Rain may arrive by Sunday

From Staff and Wire Reports

Labor Day events in the Midland area may best be held early in the weekend as fair conditions are expected to become partly cloudy with a chance of thundershowers by Sunday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Fair skies and a low in the upper 60s tonight are expected to heat to a high in the upper 90s Saturday. Winds will be from the south at five to 10 mph. Conditions are expected to become partly cloudy by Sunday with a slight chance of thundershowers. Lows for Sunday and Monday will be in the upper 60s warming to highs in the lower 90s.

Thursday's high of 94 was 10 degrees below the record set in 1964. This morning's low was four degrees above the 1971 record of 61.

STATE

A weak high pressure system centered over the central part of the state continued to highlight the weather across Texas.

Meanwhile, a line of very heavy thunderstorms had developed along the upper coast from near Port Arthur to Sabine Pass, extending offshore into the Gulf of Mexico.

Otherwise, skies were clear over the northern half of the state while partly cloudy skies were common over the rest of Texas.

Winds across the state varied in direction and were generally under 10 miles an hour.

Statewide, temperatures were mostly in the 70s except for readings in the 50s over the mountainous southwest.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled across the Midwest today and rain from Hurricane Elena, which was building steam in the Gulf of Mexico, dampened much of the Gulf Coast.

Thunderstorms ranged from western Ohio across Indiana and Illinois into eastern Missouri and eastern Iowa.

Strong thunderstorms hit Indiana Thursday night, with wind gusts of up to 70 mph recorded at Indianapolis. Golf-ball sized hail fell west of Indianapolis, the National Weather Service said.

Thunderstorms also stretched from the Mississippi delta across northwest Florida.

A high wind warning was issued overnight for southeast Oregon and western Idaho.

Love has a way in Open

NEW YORK (AP) — Love came in second-best in the second round at the U.S. Open as Chris Evert Lloyd and her husband, John, were separated by the steel-and-concrete walls of the National Tennis Center.

Chris, ranked No. 1 in the world and seeded No. 1 here, swept past outgunned, 19-year-old Raffaella Reggi of Italy 6-0, 6-3 on the stadium court Thursday night while, only a brief stroll away on the grandstand court, John was losing 4-6, 6-1, 7-6, 7-5 to 13th-seeded Tim Mayotte.

In today's major matches it was Pam Shriver, the women's fourth seed, against Hu Na, the 22-year-old defector from the Chinese mainland; No. 4 men's seed Jimmy Connors vs. Hank Pfister; No. 2 men's seed Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia against Bill Scanlon; and, in a night match, No. 2 women's seed Martina Navratilova vs. Lisa Bonder.

Chris had the opportunity to watch John's first set — the only one he won, as it turned out — before heading to her own match.

"Obviously, I was thinking about his match," she said. "I was surprised how well I did because I did hear a lot of noise.

"It's bad luck in the scheduling. I'm sorry it had to be that way. I wish maybe one of us could have played in the afternoon, one in the evening, but I guess that was too tough for them," she said of the referees' office that draws up the schedule.

"I am disappointed," she went on. "I don't get to see John play that much. I really care how he does and I know how much he wants to do well here, especially after last year," when he reached the quarterfinals. "I probably feel more nervous for his matches than I do for mine, but I knew there was a danger of my being too distracted, so I left after one set because I was getting too emotionally wound up."

She said such a scheduling conflict has never happened before and that it never occurred to her to ask the U.S. Open officials to schedule them separately until last night, when she saw their starting times had been posted. By that time, there was nothing she could do about it. "Pressure from TV," she said, offering her own opinion.

She also said his early departure from the tournament would enable her to redirect all of her concentration on her own game, "but I'm always happier when he's in the tournament. I think that reflects on my tennis, too. I think I'd play just as well, if not better, if he was in it."

Defeating Reggi, No. 26 in the world, did nothing to prepare her for the tougher matches ahead, "but it was good for me to get on center court, to get a feel for that. I think all the courts are different.

"I think the top seeds are scared of getting into close matches since what happened to John McEnroe," the men's No. 1 seed and defending champion who barely escaped with a five-set, first-round victory Tuesday night over Shlomo Glickstein of Israel.

Chris is, barring an upset, on a collision course with Navratilova, whom she beat in the French Open, another Grand Slam event, but who beat her in the past two finals here and the past two Wimbledon finals as well. Navratilova is No. 2 in the rankings and seedings at the moment.

"Since it is split," Chris said of the Grand Slam titles, "I think that if we should both reach the final, I think we'll both know how much this tournament will mean in terms of world rankings."

A Slamming good time

By BOB BRUNDAGE

Phi Slamma Jamma was in evidence Thursday night at Chaparral Center. And, it wasn't the University of Houston ex-PSJers providing all the rim-rattling, backboard-bending slams. They were coming from all angles in the Bill Williams Tire-Stadium Sports benefit game for the Spud Webb scholarship fund.

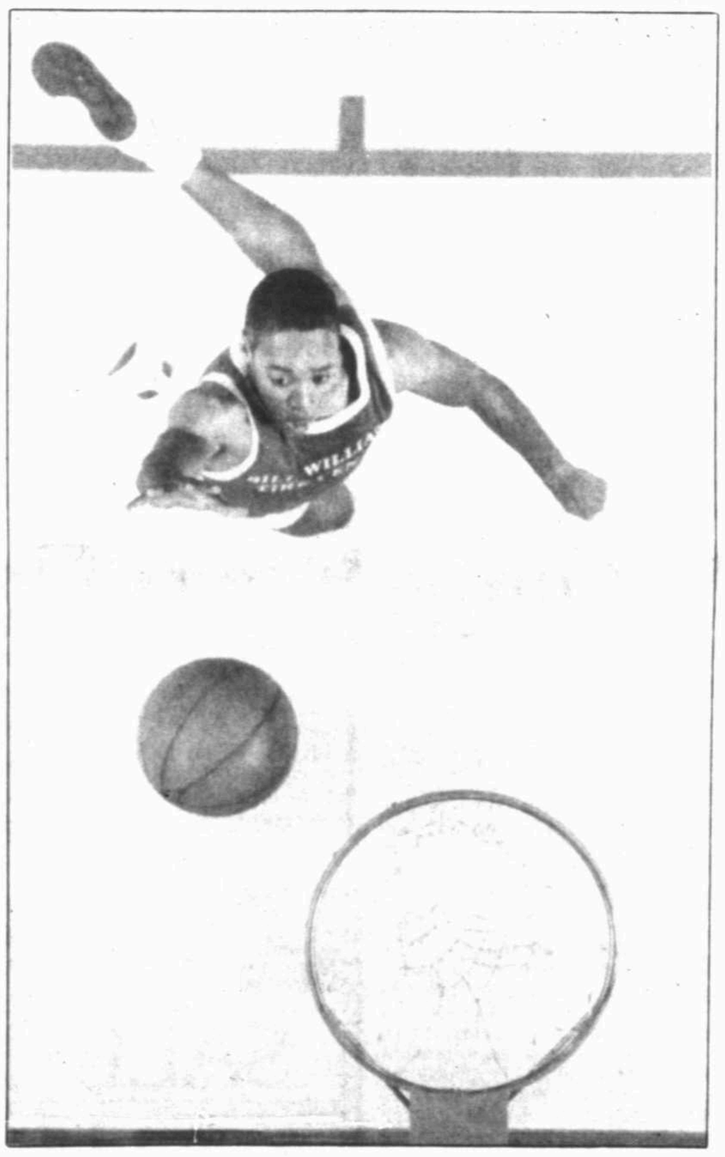

Along with PSJ alumni Clyde 'The Glide' Drexler and Michael Young, slam dunks were provided by nearly every player on the court, players from both college and professional ranks.

But, none were appreciated more than Midland's own slam artist, Spud Webb. The 5-foot-7 star of the 1982 JUCO National Championship Chaparrals, could still bring the cheers with his dunks. The little-guy-succeeding-in-a-game-of-giants was just as popular Thursday night as it was in his 'I'm a Spud Nut' days at MC.

And, befitting the occasion, it was Webb's Bill Williams Tire team that came away with a close victory, 132-126, high scoring despite a real slow start. Spud contributed 20 points to the cause, third highest on his team.

Leading the way for BWT was Jerry Everett, the second-round draft choice of the Phoenix Suns with 28 points and Drexler, now with the Portland Trail Blazers, with 26. Pam McGee, of Southern Cal/1984 Olympic Gold/Dallas Diamonds/Harlem Globetrotter hopeful fame dropped in 16 as did Utah Jazz slammer, Karl 'Mailman' Malone.

For the losing Stadium Sports team, names from Midland College history set the scoring pace. All-American Puntus Wilson led all scorers with 29 points while MC's first All-American, Charles Johnson added 26. Paula McGee, twin sister with the same background as Pam, added 21, Houston Rocket Michael Young 17 and MC All-American Chester Smith 12.

Former Midland College, NC State star Spud Webb goes aerial for a slam dunk in Wednesday's benefit basketball game.

FOR THE professionals, charity games are a common event, a chance to perform in front of new faces and in new towns. The atmosphere is a 180-degree turn-around from that of their profession.

"This is the third game I've played in this year," said Young, who is leaving the Continental Basketball Association Detorit Spirits to join PSJ teammate Akeem Olajuwon with the NBA Houston Rockets this fall. "I played in a couple of wheelchair fund raisers in Houston. These games are a lot of fun.

"You get a chance to play with a lot of different NBA players and with training camp about to start, it helps you stay in shape."

Malone, who was given the nickname 'Mailman' "by a reporter a couple of years ago" has also played in three fund raisers this year, two in two nights.

"I played in Monroe, La., last night," said Malone. "This is a lot of fun."

Pam McGee also enjoys these chances to play before new crowds and likes the looser atmosphere involved.

"I play every summer," said Pam. "It's a way of giving back what basketball has given to me."

IN THE course of their careers, which have spanned most of their lives, all three have different high points they look back on with pride.

For Young, it was the 1983 season with the Cougars.

"That season, being No. 1 ranked in the nation was the highest point and the lowest point was that same year when we lost to North Carolina State for the title in Albuerqurque. Now, I'm really looking forward to playing with Akeem and Larry Micheaux (another UH alum with the Rockets)."

For Malone, "Being first-team All-American," was his reply.

Pam McGee has several she looks upon, two national titles at USC and her Olympic gold medal currently top her list but, if she makes the Globetrotters, that would move to the top also. "It would be up their in the ranking because it would be a history-making event," she said.

THE GAME never got one-sided for either team for any amount of time, mostly staying in the four to eight point range. After the slow first quarter start, which was scoreless for 90 seconds, Stadium Sports took a 35-32 lead into the second quarter and held a 67-62 maring at the half.

During the intermission, a slam-dunk contest was held and the winner was, of course, Spud. The contest gave announcer 'Fast' Eddie Clements of KCRS plenty of ammo to work with in the second half.

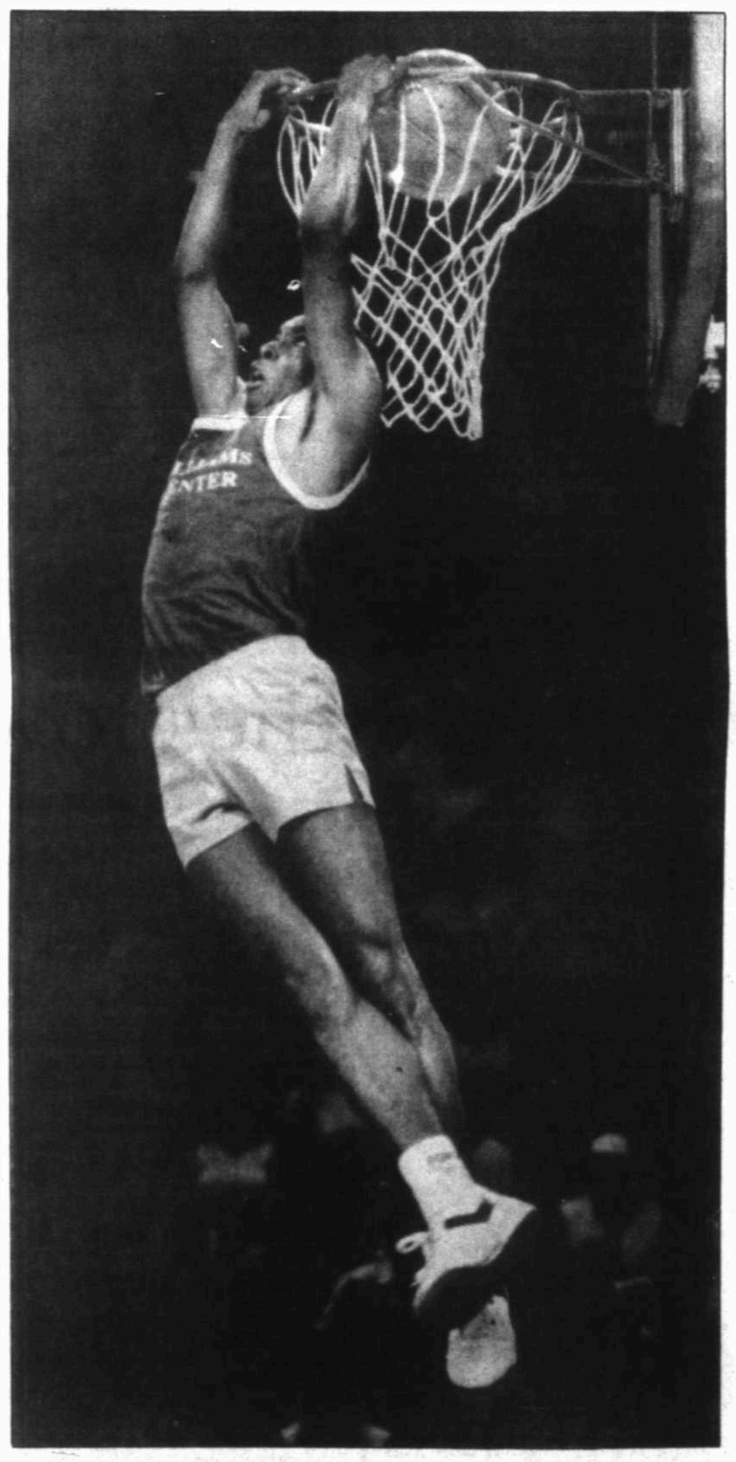

Continually pointing out that Drexler and Malone, both in the 6-foot-5 range, finished second and third respectively to the 5-foot-7 Webb. At one point, after bringing up the dunk results when Drexler was at the free throw line and then watching Drexler miss his first shot, Clements said, "Drexler is a part-time brick-layer in the summer."

Drexler took it in stride and it was the beginning of a little fun over the loud speakers at Chap Center, with Clements aiming barbs at everybody on the court and the players taking the mike and getting him right back. It was "the fun" the players were looking for.

Angels again one-hit shy in ninth

From Staff Reports

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

San Antonio's 11-10 victory over the Midland Angels Thursday night at Angels Stadium is in truth just another game in the dragging days of August and the Texas League baseball season. Still, Midland manager Joe Maddon would have liked to see another hit.

The Angels left Mark McLemore stranded at first base after a three-run ninth inning rally. San Antonio pitcher Adrian Meagher, who gained his second save in as many nights, struckout Mike Madril to end the game.

"We scored 10 runs, but we left 10 men stranded on base. We came back and came back, but we were still just short. We were swinging the bats well, but we still are leaving men on base," said Maddon.

It was a night that saw the Angels trying to catch a runaway train after San Antonio jumped to a 5-0 lead in the second inning, scoring all of those runs after two were out.

The Dodgers' Ken Harvey started the offensive onslaught against five Midland pitchers with a two run triple off of Angel starter and loser Doug McKenzie. McKenzie had worked himself in position of getting out of the inning when he got Joe Szekely to ground to second, but McKenzie walked Dan Cataline to give Harvey a chance to open the gates. His liner to right got past James Randall for the triple.

From there it was an uphill climb for Midland, which couldn't quite take that final step on the mountian.

The Angels erupted for four runs in the fourth on Brian Hartsock's three-run homer to left to cut the margin to 7-4. Phil Stephenson then hit a solo shot to left in the fifth inning to cut the margin to 7-5, but that was as close as the Angels could come until the ninth when they made a run at victory.

In the ninth, Hartsock blasted his second homer of the night, a two-run shot off winner Bill Scudder. Scudder was relieved by Meagher, who gave up a two-out double to Greg Key and a run scoring single to Mark McLemore. Just as it looked like Midland was in the hunt, Meagher KOed Madril, who had two singles in the game.

In all Midland slammed four homers as Randall had one in the seventh. San Antonio's only homer came from No. 9 hitter Mike Ramsey, his first of the year, in the sixth, but the Dodgers had six doubles and the big triple.

There was one bright spot for the Angels. Billie Merrifield singled in the sixth inning to run his consecutive game hitting streak to 21.

"I don't really keep up with my stats," noted Merrifield. "I didn't know until yesterday that I had that kind of streak going. I knew I was hitting at a .400-plus clip over a certian period, but I didn't know about the streak.

"I'll take the streak. It's at that part of the season where you just try to salvage something. It gives you something to look forward to when you come to the park."

Maddon isn't surprised by the late season surge of Merrifield. "He was Player of the Month in July last year in the Midwest League and was hot from then on," said Maddon. "His balance is better at the plate now and when he sees the ball, he's making good contact."

The Angels and Dodgers are just two games away from finishing the 1985 Texas League season. The teams meet again today at 7:30 p.m. and end the season Saturday with Fan Appreciation Night.

White to use flak against state rival

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Just in case the Houston Oilers give him some heavy flak Saturday night, Dallas quarterback Danny White has decided to wear a flak jacket for the first time in his National Football League career.

White will be protecting a bruised left rib cartilage which was injured Aug. 17 against San Diego.

He missed Monday night's 15-13 preseason victory over the Chicago Bears but began throwing Wednesday and is expected to play at least a half against the Oilers.

However, White said he won't play if it jeopardizes his playing in Dallas' Sept. 9 regular season opener against Washington.

"Either way it goes I'll be ready for the Redskins," said White. "Any play I get against Houston would certainly help even if it's just a series."

Houston and Dallas tangle at 8 p.m. in a nationally televised game (CBS) in Texas Stadium for Lone Star state bragging rights and the "Governor's Cup" which has been missing for almost a decade.

Dallas holds a dominating 14-4 record over the Oilers in the preseason and is 3-1 against Houston regular season games. The two teams meet again at Houston Sept. 29 in the regular season.

For the Oilers, the game marks the debut of first-round pick defensive lineman Ray Childress of Texas A&M and cornerback Richard Johnson of Wisconsin. Both finally signed after holding out most of camp.

The Oilers are 1-3 with a series of narrow losses while the Cowboys are 3-0 with two last-second victories.

"We're so far ahead of last year at this time it's not even close," said Houston Coach Hugh Campbell.

Horford says he's really sorry

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — An apologetic Alfredo "Tito" Horford said Thursday he was confused during his odyssey which ended with the 7-foot-1 inch basketball star attending classes at Louisiana State University.

"Thank you for coming and giving me this opportunity to say I never tried to hurt anyone but I did make some mistakes and I'm sorry about that," Horford said during a news conference at the LSU Assembly Center.

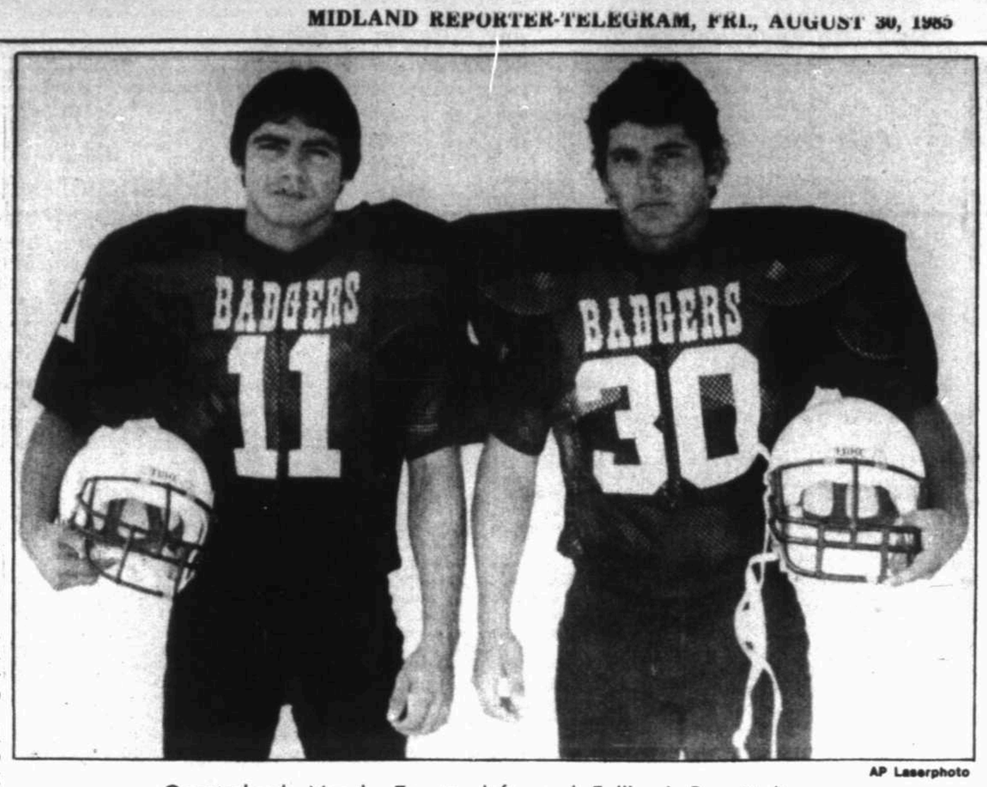

"Coming to America was scary for me and very hard because I had to leave my family and my country. I now had to put my trust in others and some of them gave me poor advice but I forgive them.

"After my father died, I lost a close friend who helped me a lot. Now, things became even more confusing to me."

LSU officials said his father died about two years ago.

The Dominican Republic native, who starred in prep ball at Houston's Marian Christian High School, also apologized to officials at the University of Houston where he had been expected to enroll Monday.

"I thank all the people in Houston that treated me nice and I apologize if I hurt any of them. I also want to thank Coach Dale Brown of LSU for giving me another chance and I hope I don't disappoint anyone."

Badgers bank on 19 returnees

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of previews on area high school football teams. Today, a look at the McCamey Badgers. Sunday, Greenwood.

Area Football

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

McCAMEY — If it's experience that marks a contender, then 1985 will be an interesting year for head coach Buster Leaf and the McCamey Badgers.

Leaf welcomed 19 letterman back to camp this summer, and 15 have extensive starting experience which should make McCamey a season-long threat in the District 8-2A football race.

"Our biggest asset this season is our experience with our returning starters. We've got a number of kids that started all 10 ballgames for us last season," Leaf said of a team that was 7-3 in 1984. "That experience is invaluable, you can't coach it. We've got all our lineman but one back and if you have an experienced line you've got a good start for a winning football team."

Winning is a habit the Badgers have fallen into since Leaf took over three seasons ago. Actually it has become more of a tradition. McCamey made it all the way to the state semi-finals in 1983 posting an 11-4 record in Leaf's first year and he sees a lot of the same qualities in this year's team.

"THERE ARE A lot of similarities, we have a lot of returners, a good bunch of seniors, 13 of 'em in all," Leaf said. "And when you have good seniors, you have a chance to be good.

"Size is the difference though. We were a big football team that year. This season we don't have a kid on the varsity that is over 6-feet tall. No starter is over 200 pounds. We have a lot of kids that weigh 180-190 — a good weight for a high school player.

"Strength and quickness make up for our lack of size, though. But when you're our size, you'd better be quick."

Heading up that speedy bunch is a quartet of All-District performers last season in Nandy Zarate at linebacker, Mike Sample at tackle, Adam Arana at safety and Rodney Terry at tailback.

BEST KNOWN for his play on defense, Zarate will pick up the chores at quarterback as well this season. Zarate started two games at QB as a junior but will inherit the job full-time this fall. The 5-9, 170-pound senior was also a fine punter and placekicker averaging over 38 yards a punt and converting a 33-yard field goal attempt last season.

His savvy and experience will make McCamey a potent offensive threat, but he is far from the only weapon in the Badger backfield.

The Badgers breakaway threat again this season is junior Rodney Terry, one-half of the Badgers' tailback combo. Terry has gained over 1,900 yards on the ground in his first two seasons of high school ball and Leaf again expects big things from the 178-pound speedster even though he splits time with another all-district performer Arana.

ARANA EARNED his post-season honors at the strong safety spot but fills in effectively for Terry at tailback as well.

"We run a tandem at tailback and it's really helped us," Leaf said. "It's really helped Rodney, too, because he starts at cornerback also and it gives him a rest once in a while."

Up front, 185-pound Mike Sample packs the biggest wallop for the Badgers and he also has an All-District tag to prove it. Sample and the rest of the defensive front four will have some big shoes to fill in departed All-State James Kennedy, who went on to TCU.

"We're a lot stronger physically than we have been in the past because of the success of our off-season program," Leaf said. "We're two deep with quality all the way across our backfield, and we have good depth in the offensive line, depth plus experience.

"WE'VE GOT a good bunch of high school players is what we have."

But Leaf knows that good just might not be enough this year in 8-2A with nearly all the programs returning strong.

"It's going to be real difficult to go undefeated in this district this season. This is one of the toughest, most well-balanced 2A districts in the state," Leaf said.

McCamey opens with Iraan, it's only Class A opponent of the non-district schedule, then tackles 7-2A favorites Marfa and Van Horn sandwiched around 3A's Alpine before traveling to traditional rival Crane in the last pre-district game.

BYU beats BC, eyes to UCLA next

College Football

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — One down and two to go for Brigham Young.

The team the critics said beat 13 nobodies last year en route to college football's national championship is off and running — sorry, passing — again in 1985.

Having disposed of Boston College, last year's No. 5 team, 28-14 in Thursday night's Kickoff Classic, the Cougars next face two traditional powers —UCLA on Sept. 7, Washington the following week. They finished ninth and second, respectively, in last year's rankings and were 20th and 12th in this year's preseason Associated Press poll.

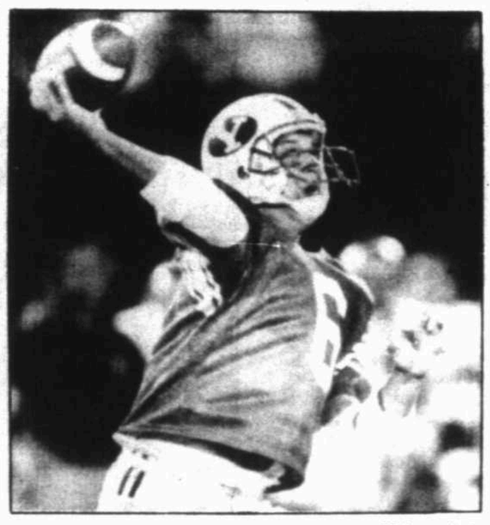

If BYU goes 3-0, it may even dispel some of the leftover criticism.

"I don't think you ever silence all of the critics," said split end Glen Kozlowski, who fought off leg cramps and caught 10 passes for 241 yards and a touchdown. "I think we gained some respect here. Our goal is to go undefeated again."

Brigham Young has won seven national team passing titles in LaVell Edwards' 13 years as head coach and the Cougars got off to a flying start as Robbie Bosco completed 35 of 53 attempts for 508 yards — all personal highs — and three touchdowns. Bosco's experience was evident as he outperformed BC's Shawn Halloran, who has the unenviable task of trying to fill the shoes of Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, major-college football's career passing king.

"Nobody has thrown like them — ever," said BC Coach Jack Bicknell, whose own teams are known for throwing the football. "They make a living throwing."

BYU threw every conceivable kind of pass against the Eagles — screen passes, swing passes, curls, out patterns, post patterns, fly patterns, dump-offs. They even aired it out a few times, with Kozlowski catching passes of 30, 23, 40 and 51 yards to set up the first three touchdowns. For good measure, he grabbed a 22-yard scoring pass with 8:32 remaining that sealed the Cougars' 25th consecutive victory, the nation's longest winning streak.

Robbie Boscoe at work.

"There are a lot of people I will never silence," Edwards said. "There are a lot I'm not even going to try to silence. This has absolutely no bearing whatsoever on what happened last year. We have a chance this season to be a good football team. I hope we are a lot sharper.

"It was a typical opening game — a lot of mistakes, a lot of great plays. Defensively we played an outstanding game. We made the big plays. How about the night that Bosco had. The kid had one tremendous night.

"Kozlowski? Well, you see what he does. The last touchdown was actually a curl, but he lost his man somewhere on a blitz or something. I don't know what happened to him, but then he ran a post and beat the man deep."

Bosco said that "all I have to do is get the ball near Glen and he's going to catch it. We usually have two options off each play, and if they aren't open I'll just drop it off to a running back. I didn't think they were respecting our receivers deep and we took advantage of that."

Bosco's other touchdown passes were to Mark Bellibi, a 6-yarder early in the second period and a 12-yarder late in the third quarter to snap a tie after BYU blew a 14-0 lead. Bellini caught nine balls for 111 yards.

Halloran, who spent the last two seasons backing up Flutie, finished with 18 completions in 37 attempts for 165 yards, with three interceptions.

"I got rattled a couple of times in the second quarter," he said. "I have to learn to sit in the pocket. I wasn't expecting great things. I just wanted to come out and move our football team. I wasn't disappointed at not throwing the winning pass on the final play of the game, or anything like that."

The opening weekend of the season has 10 more games on tap, including the Citadel at No. 17 South Carolina and No. 19 Florida State at Tulane. The rest of the schedule finds Purdue at Pitt, Memphis State at Southwestern Louisiana, Virginia Tech at Cincinnati, Texas-El Paso at Air Force, San Jose State at California, Kansas at Hawaii, Oregon at Washington State and, on Monday night, Alabama at Georgia.

Niekro inches toward 300th win

Associated Press

Phil Niekro picked up his 297th career victory as the New York Yankees moved to within four games of idle Toronto in the American League East with a 4-0 victory Thursday night over the California Angels.

The loss cut the Angels' lead in the AL West to just 1½ games over Kansas City, which was rained out in Milwaukee.

Niekro was bidding to become the oldest pitcher in major league history to pitch a shutout, but he was removed after falling behind leadoff batter Gary Pettis in the eighth inning. Dave Righetti blanked the Angels the rest of the way without allowing a hit.

"I'm actually more concerned and involved in the pennant race," Niekro said. "I've seen pennants lost by one game. Three hundred wins has no effect on the club at this point. I can't be thinking of too many things at the same time when I'm out there."

Dave Winfield gave Niekro, 13-9, the offense he needed with a two-run single in the first off loser Kirk McCaskill, 9-9.

Don Baylor of the Yankees was hit by a pitch for the 190th time in his career, breaking Minnie Minoso's AL record. Baylor is now two short of the single season AL record of 24 shared by Norm Elberfeld in 1911 and Bill Freehan in 1968.

The major league record of 243 is held by Ron Hunt, who also set the one-year record of 50 for the Montreal Expos in 1971.

Red Sox 17, Indians 2

Tony Armas drove in five runs and Rich Gedman had four RBI to back Bruce Hurst's six-hitter. Boston broke a five-game losing streak. Hurst, 9-10, tied his season high with 11 strikeouts and pitched his sixth complete game. Gedman hit his 14th homer, Bill Buckner his 15th and Mike Easler had three RBI. Brook Jacoby hit his 14th homer for Cleveland.

Orioles 7, Mariners 0

Baltimore's Larry Sheets drove in four runs and Mike Young had two RBI as Mike Boddicker, 12-13, struck out a season-high nine batters in six-hitting Seattle. The rookie Sheets broke out of a 1-for-13 slump while Young hit his 22nd homer and 12th in his last 23 games.

Tigers 3, A's 2

Detroit's Lance Parrish singled off Oakalnd's Steve Mura with the bases loaded to drive in Lou Whitaker with the winning run in the 12th inning. Parrish, who drove in two runs, also hit his 23rd home run. Dave Bergman hit his third for the Tigers. Dave Kingman drove in both Oakland runs.

White Sox 6, Rangers 5

Reid Nichols singled home the winning run in the 10th inning for Chicago, which earlier squandered a 4-1 lead and was forced to tie the game on Greg Walker's ninth-inning double. Tom Seaver, who lost the lead, was going for his 301st career victory. Walker had three hits and Harold Baines two, including his 14th home run. Pete O'Brien hit his 15th for Texas.

Expos 8, Padres 5

Andre Dawson's three-run double capped a seven-run seventh inning as the Montreal rallied from a 5-0 deficit. San Diego's Dave Dravecky had a two-hit shutout through six. Tim Raines had three hits, including his eighth homer, for the Expos and major league leader Jeff Reardon got his 33rd save. Kevin McReynolds had a three-run homer, his 13th, for the Padres.

Giants 6, Mets 3

San Francisco's Chili Davis hit a three-run homer off reliever Terry Leach in the 10th inning as New York lost its third straight game to fall three games behind idle St. Louis in the NL East. The homer was the 12th of the season for Davis, who had two other hits and five RBI. Gary Carter hit his 18th homer for the Mets, and Wally backman added two RBI.

Braves 9, Cubs 6

Bruce Benedict drove in four runs, three on a tie-breaking single in the sixth inning as Atlanta Manager Bobby Wine's record increased to 4-0. Rick Mahler, 17-12, was the winner for the Braves. Leon Durham led Chicago with two homers, his 14th and 15th, and drove in five runs.

Reds 6, Pirates 0

Cincinnati's Buddy Bell homered and doubled, knocking in five runs as Tom Browning, 14-9, pitched a seven-hitter. Pete Rose scored twice and had a single, leaving him eight hits shy of breaking Ty Cobb's all-time record of 4,191. The loss was Pittsburgh's 18th straight on the road, four short of the major-league record it shares with the New York Mets.

Phillies 3, Dodgers 2

Garry Maddox scored the winning run from third base with two outs in the 10th inning Thursday night when Los Angeles third baseman Enos Cabell bobbled Glenn Wilson's grounder for an error. The Phillies had tied the game 2-2 on a two-run homer by Jaun Samuel in the eighth inning. Mike Marshall hit his 16th homer for the Dodgers and Ken Landreaux his 10th.

Young wrestler in critical condition

DALLAS (AP) — Mike Adkisson, 21, the youngest of the locally popular wrestling Von Erich brothers, was reported in critical condition today at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas with an unspecified infection.

Adkisson was in the intensive care unit with a 106-degree fever and had lost the function of his kidneys, a brother, Kerry Adkisson, told The Dallas Morning News.

Adkisson injured his left shoulder wrestling this summer and underwent an operation on Thursday of last week.

He was released Monday from Morton Cancer and Research Hospital, but developed a 105-degree fever Tuesday

Nihilator fails in world record bid

DU QUOIN, Ill. (AP) — Nihilator failed in his latest attempt to pace a world-record mile, but his owner said the 3-year-old son of the great Niatross will try again next month at the scene of his sire's success.

The colt already holds the record for the fastest mile ever raced by a pacer — 1:49 3-5. But the record of 1:49 1-5, set by Niatross in a 1980 time trial, eluded his son Thursday on a windy Du Quoin State Fairgrounds track.

"Nobody can say we didn't try," principal owner Lou Guida said after Nihilator bucked a strong wind in finishing the time trial in 1:50 4-5.

The bay colt was ahead of his sire's time at the quarter and half-mile marks and was more than a second ahead after posting a three-quarter time of 1:20 3-5. But Nihilator slowed perceptibly while running into a 15 mph wind down the stretch and came up 1 3-5 seconds short. His final quarter was timed in 30 1-5.

"What can you do with that kind of wind?" Guida asked. "Well, we gave it our best shot. Now, it's on to Lexington."

It was at The Red Mile in Lexington, Ky., that Niatross set the mile record during an October 1980 time trial. In a time trial, a harness horse is flanked by two thoroughbreds.

"We were going to Lexington next month anyway, whether we set the record or not," Guida said. "From now on, he'll go in all the major stake races. I'd like to keep him racing right through December."

The owner said Nihilator would make another record bid in a time trial in late September at The Red Mile.

"He's still going to get the record," Guida said, and assistant trainer Ernie Gaskin agreed.

"I don't think it's a matter of if he'll win, but when," Gaskin said. "He may take just a little off the record or a lot. But we'll be happy either way."

Guida was more specific in his predictions, saying Nihiltor could complete the mile as fast as 1:47.

"It's a gargantuan task, but I think it's within the realm of possibility," the owner said. "My educated guess is that he'll go between 1:47 3-5 and 1:48 3-5.

"Before the year is out, given the right conditions, there's no question in my mind this horse is capable of going in '47."

Nihilator was syndicated earlier this year for $19.2 million, but Gaskin said subsequent performances have boosted his worth at stud by several million dollars.

"It's like buying stock and having it go up," the trainer said. "And for Mr. Guida and the investors, setting this record will only increase the value — maybe $5 million, maybe $7 million.

"Certainly, they feel it is worth more than winning a lot of the prestigious races that are going on at the same time."

He said the record also would be good advertising for Niatross, since Nihilator is from the first generation of horses sired by the 1979 and 1980 harness horse of the year.

"But at the same time, here comes one of his sons right up behind him that's perhaps better than Niatross, a little faster," he said. "It kind of weighs itself out.

"He (Niatross) becomes greater in value, but a lot of mares may sneak away and go to Nihilator instead."

Celtics, Clippers okay Walton swap

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics and the Los Angeles Clippers have agreed tentatively to a Cedric Maxwell-Bill Walton trade, Maxwell's lawyer says.

"It's contingent upon both players passing physicals and both players having their contracts rewritten to conform to salary cap regulations. It'll be finalized," he said.

BASEBALL—The Pittsburgh Pirates said they plan to buy the contract of lefthander Bob Kipper, who played for the Midland Angels earlier this season, from their Hawaii affiliate. The Pirates acquired Kipper's contract Aug.16 from the Angels as the player to be named later in a trade Aug. 2....

Texas traded DH Cliff Johnson, to Toronto for three players to be named. He was hitting .257 with 12 homers and 56 rbi...

Toby Nivens, a right-hander with a pitch that has been clocked at 95 mph, has signed with San Jacinto. Nivens, drafted by the California Angels this year, struck out 95 hitters in 57 innings last season, Waldrep said....

Former Kansas City Royal ace Dennis Leonard gave up a home run and nine hits for the Class AA Memphis Chicks Thursday, but figured he was rehabilitated enough to at least return to the Royals bullpen. He left the Chicks trailing 4-2 against the Huntsville Stars after pitching five innings, but his teammates came through to win 8-5. "This was another little step forward," said Leonard, who has undergone a series of four operations since his left knee collapsed during a game in Royals Stadium in May of 1983....

AUTO RACING—Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. redesigned its superspeedway radial race tires so they will give more advance warning in the event of a puncture from track debris. The redesign decision came after an investigation of the sudden deflation of two tires on July 20 during final practice for the Michigan 500 for Indianapolis cars at Michigan International Speedway...

Ex-athlete blows whistle

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — A former University of Oklahoma athlete told The Tulsa Tribune on Thursday that he received money "in the low hundreds" from an agent while he was competing for the Sooners.

But the player, who asked to remain anonymous, said he paid the money back.

The athlete is the second Oklahoma player to admit receiving money from sports agent Brent Barnes.

Three players whose names were listed in a lawsuit as having agreements with Barnes have denied contracting with him. Other players have not been available for comment.

NCAA regulations prohibit athletes from signing with agents while they have eligibility remaining.

Martin Jischke, interim president at the University of Oklahoma, said Wednesday that the school has begun an investigation into the allegations. Neither the NCAA nor the Big Eight Conference is currently investigating, officials said.

The claims were contained in a lawsuit filed by Triad Bank of Tulsa, which says Intersouth Sports Management Corp. of Tulsa defaulted on a $125,000 loan. The bank said in the lawsuit that security for the loan included seven sports contracts allegedly signed with Sooner athletes.

THE LAWSUIT also listed four promissory notes with Oklahoma athletes dated Sept. 30, 1984. The bank said its loan to Intersouth was made Oct. 5, 1984.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, August 31, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You and mate should have more time for each other now. Guard your privacy and new domestic bliss is possible. The financial picture looks especially bright after September 15. Keep your standards high. A civilized approach pays off handsomely. Refuse to be deflected from your goals. Honest and outspoken, you sometimes offend others with your pithy comments. Learn how to soften any criticisms you must make. Avoid making impulsive romantic commitments. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: comedian Buddy Hackett, lyricist Alan Jay Lerner, actors Richard Basehart and James Coburn, violinist Itzhak Perlman, Baltimore Orioles coach Frank Robinson, the Atlanta Braves' Claudell Washington, playwright William Saroyan.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spirit in which you give or receive today will determine the kind of weekend you have. Be both generous and gracious. Meet with someone who needs your help.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money isn't everything. Focusing on spiritual values helps you discover what you really want from life. Give romantic partner or offspring a second chance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Devote more attention to money matters and family arrangements. Something could be going on that you are not aware of. Ask questions. Loved one is eager to confide. Listen carefully.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A sudden breakthrough makes this a happy day for you and your loved ones. Include family members of all ages in your recreational plans. You thrive when you keep faith with yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotional confrontations are counterproductive. Keep your temper in check. Romance needs more time to develop. Pull back a bit. This is not the right moment to press for a commitment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An older family member presents you with facts you are unable to ignore. Do whatever you can to make this a happy weekend for your loved ones. Be more affectionate with offspring.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Making some small home repairs now will save you money later on. Secrets could be revealed at a family reunion. You find it hard to believe your ears! Be discreet.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It's okay to extend yourself for a friend, but refuse to be taken in by a stranger. A startling disclosure should not be ignored. Romance is more exciting than you thought possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You greatly enjoy the company of an older person. There's nothing wrong with a May-September romance if you share the same interests. Plan a special end-of-summer celebration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Go ahead and accept an unusual invitation. You could meet someone very special. Welcome a break in your regular routine. Exercising on a daily basis gives you extra energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Recognize what is happening around you and you can avoid being caught in an embarrassing situation. Seek inspiration from your family. A loving relationship gives you the incentive to do the right thing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A new friend helps you realize your potential. A simple approach works best when seeking either money or romance. Show that you have compassion as well as ambition and you'll go far.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ◇.

The two most common uses for a holdup play are to run a defender out of cards in a suit so that, when he gains the lead, his side cannot cash any more tricks in that suit; or to stop a player from gaining the lead to give his partner a ruff. A more nebulous use of the tactic, with equally satisfying results, is to gain time by forcing the defenders to switch suits.

North's raise to four hearts is classic. He had long, good trumps, a hand worth less than an opening bid, virtually no defense and a singleton.

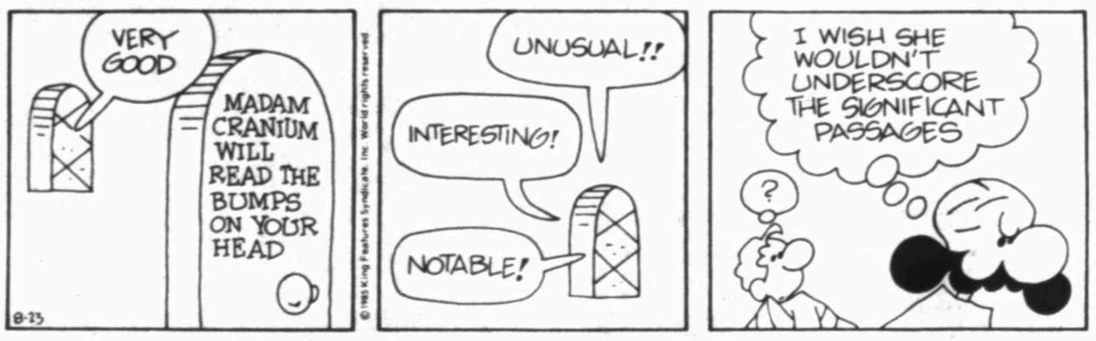

West led the king of diamonds. Since there was a singleton in dummy, East could use the occasion for a suit-preference signal. He followed with the four to show an interest in clubs. West duly shifted to the eight of that suit, declarer tried the ten from dummy and East contributed the jack. Declarer took a few moments to consider his play.

If the spade finesse were to succeed, the hand was cold. However, if West held the king of spades, the contract would be in jeopardy if South won the ace of clubs at trick two. When in with the king of spades West would be able to revert to clubs, and the defenders would score two club tricks to go with the diamond and spade they had already banked.

Declarer countered by allowing East's jack of clubs to win. Since continuing a club would present declarer with an extra trick in that suit, East was forced to shift. He exited passively with a trump. Declarer drew a second round of trumps, ending in dummy, then tried the spade finesse.

West won the king and attacked clubs again, but it did not help. Declarer won the ace, cashed the ace of spades and crossed to the table with a diamond ruff. He discarded his losing club on the jack of spades and claimed his contract.

Carter joins Cosby on childrens' show

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter got high marks from his producer and other cast members when he became an actor for a day, co-starring with Bill Cosby in a television special for children.

In the program, "Kids Just Wanna Have Fun," Carter plays himself, granting an interview to a group of middle school students. He stresses the importance of being able to separate "a thrill from a risk."

The Georgia Public Television production addresses the dangers of alcohol, tobacco and not wearing seat belts. Cosby plays a T-shirt vendor in the one-hour special.

Cynthia Stevens, co-producer of the program, said Thursday Carter, in his first dramatic role, "responds well to direction. He's a very responsive actor."

One of the students, John Champion, 13, said Carter was "real good to work with." But, he added, "He's about as nervous as we are."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Dustin Hoffman, who has worked behind the camera as well as in front of it, said a good director knows how to "become part of the scenery."

The star of "Tootsie" and other films said he suspects he has a reputation for being difficult to work with because "nobody really wants to collaborate."

"It's like being in front of a canvas and some guy next to you is saying, 'No, use only this color and don't mix it with that,'" Hoffman said in an interview in the September issue of Vanity Fair. "Each person really believes he's right, and, as a matter of fact, they both are."

Hoffman, who has completed a film version of his revival of "Death of a Salesman," said, "The directors that I like best are the kind that don't march up and down in front of the camera before the take, but the kind that get lost, you know, become part of the scenery. And yet they're very strongly there because they know where to put the camera."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Jerry Lewis, gearing up for his annual Labor Day telethon for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, says, "I can't for the life of me recall how many times I've turned tears into adrenaline."

The deaths of children afflicted with the disease constantly spur him to give more time and effort to battling it, Lewis wrote in an article for Sunday's Parade magazine.

He said his work with the MDA has given him rewards he "never dreamed of," although he says contact with the children he calls "my kids" can cause pain as well as happiness.

"The child laughs and my heart soars...the parents smile and I'm back in kindergarten. The nurses appear hopeful and I want to dance...until the black veil of doom drops in and takes the child from us...and I die again."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bryant Gumbel, morning television anchor of the "Today Show," will host NBC's new monthly after-school program aimed at teen-agers, the network said.

Gumbel, who will still perform his early morning anchor chores on "Today," will be host on eight "Main Street" programs beginning Sept. 24. "All of the story subjects will be about young people as seen through their eyes," NBC said of the news magazine format.

Gumbel was chosen "because he's extremely good with kids," said executive producer Herb Dudnick. "He's done a number of pieces over the last six months where kids have been involved."

The one-hour programs, to be produced by NBC News, are the network's entry into the after-school program market dominated by ABC and CBS. Both the "ABC Afterschool Specials" and "CBS Schoolbreak Specials" are primarily dramas.

• • •

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Nepal's King Birendra, accompanied by Queen Aiswarya, left this morning by special aircraft for Australia on his first state visit to a country in the southern hemishphere.

Before leaving, the king told his subjects that Australia has been making important contributions to the cause of international peace and justice.

"We hope the present visit will further promote the goodwill and understanding so happily subsisting between our two countries," he said.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Public Broadcasting System correspondent Bill Moyers was named 1984's outstanding interviewer as PBS led the list with 11 Emmys for news and documentaries form the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

CBS, which earned 10 awards Thursday evening, was close behind, followed by ABC with six and NBC with five.

The awards were presented at an awards dinner attended by teacher Sharon Christa McAuliffe, chosen to be the first civilian rider of the space shuttle Challenger; and Capt. John Testrake and Uli Derickson, the pilot and purser of hijacked TWA flight 847.

The ceremony recognized excellence in television journalism in such areas as background analysis, investigative reporting and interviews.

A total of 120 winners were selected from about 600 entries for programs broadcast between Jan. 1, and Dec. 31, 1984.

• • •

CHICAGO (AP) — Ronnie Dugger, publisher and owner of the Texas Observer, is one of three winners of the Hugh M. Hefner First Amendment Award, the Playboy Foundation announced.

Jack C. Landau, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, and Clifford McKenzie, who spoke out about the use of government travel funds at the Bureau of Indian Affairs' Technical Assistance Center, also were named as winners of the sixth annual award on Wednesday.

Dugger was honored for his persistence in challenging vested interests and politicians in his biweekly "Journal of Free Voices," the foundation announced.

Mountain families tune in to satellites

HUNTSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Like mushrooms on a summer hillside, satellite dishes have begun dotting the Appalachian skyline as rural families trade their rooftop antennas for high-tech entertainment.

The sleek dishes are changing the rural living room as well as the country landscape, as mountain people tune in to a spectrum of sophisticated programming denied them for decades, according to a communications specialist.

"We can tell that it has an amazing impact in terms of (the) diversity that all of a sudden presents itself," said Harold Morse, president of The Learning Channel, formerly Appalachian Educational Satellite, in Washington.

"It certainly helps them in bringing in the rest of the world," Morse added.

The people living in the Appalachian mountains, tired of wresting what little signal they could receive through ungainly antennas sometimes placed high on neighboring ridges, are paying up to $6,000 to get the 1980s' multiple-TV choices.

Even the most modest of households has sprung the $1,000-$1,400 it takes for a basic system, and sometimes the stark, modern dishes can be found alongside small, weather-beaten houses, he said.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Devote more attention to money matters and family arrangements. Something could be going on that you are not aware of. Ask questions. Loved one is eager to confide. Listen carefully.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A sudden breakthrough makes this a happy day for you and your loved ones. Include family members of all ages in your recreational plans. You thrive when you keep faith with yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotional confrontations are counterproductive. Keep your temper in check. Romance needs more time to develop. Pull back a bit. This is not the right moment to press for a commitment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An older family member presents you with facts you are unable to ignore. Do whatever you can to make this a happy weekend for your loved ones. Be more affectionate with offspring.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Making some small home repairs now will save you money later on. Secrets could be revealed at a family reunion. You find it hard to believe your ears! Be discreet.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It's okay to extend yourself for a friend, but refuse to be taken in by a stranger. A startling disclosure should not be ignored. Romance is more exciting than you thought possible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You greatly enjoy the company of an older person. There's nothing wrong with a May-September romance if you share the same interests. Plan a special end-of-summer celebration.

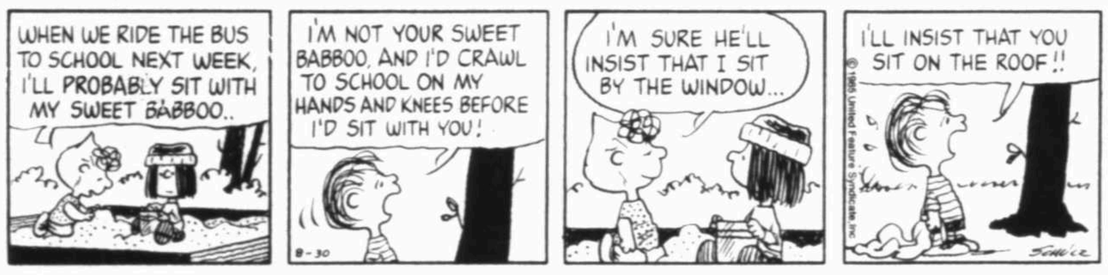

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Go ahead and accept an unusual invitation. You could meet someone very special. Welcome a break in your regular routine. Exercising on a daily basis gives you extra energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Recognize what is happening around you and you can avoid being caught in an embarrassing situation. Seek inspiration from your family. A loving relationship gives you the incentive to do the right thing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A new friend helps you realize your potential. A simple approach works best when seeking either money or romance. Show that you have compassion as well as ambition and you'll go far.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of ◇.

The two most common uses for a holdup play are to run a defender out of cards in a suit so that, when he gains the lead, his side cannot cash any more tricks in that suit; or to stop a player from gaining the lead to give his partner a ruff. A more nebulous use of the tactic, with equally satisfying results, is to gain time by forcing the defenders to switch suits.

North's raise to four hearts is classic. He had long, good trumps, a hand worth less than an opening bid, virtually no defense and a singleton.

West led the king of diamonds. Since there was a singleton in dummy, East could use the occasion for a suit-preference signal. He followed with the four to show an interest in clubs. West duly shifted to the eight of that suit, declarer tried the ten from dummy and East contributed the jack. Declarer took a few moments to consider his play.

If the spade finesse were to succeed, the hand was cold. However, if West held the king of spades, the contract would be in jeopardy if South won the ace of clubs at trick two. When in with the king of spades West would be able to revert to clubs, and the defenders would score two club tricks to go with the diamond and spade they had already banked.

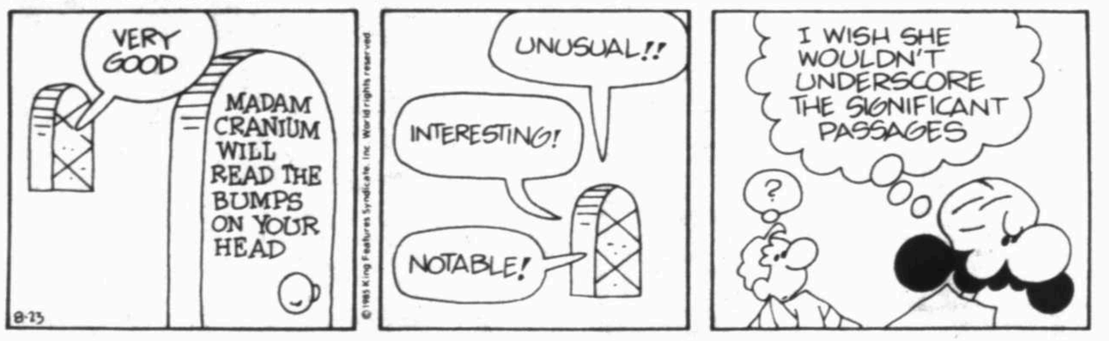

Declarer countered by allowing East's jack of clubs to win. Since continuing a club would present declarer with an extra trick in that suit, East was forced to shift. He exited passively with a trump. Declarer drew a second round of trumps, ending in dummy, then tried the spade finesse.

West won the king and attacked clubs again, but it did not help. Declarer won the ace, cashed the ace of spades and crossed to the table with a diamond ruff. He discarded his losing club on the jack of spades and claimed his contract.

Carter joins Cosby on childrens' show

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter got high marks from his producer and other cast members when he became an actor for a day, co-starring with Bill Cosby in a television special for children.

In the program, "Kids Just Wanna Have Fun," Carter plays himself, granting an interview to a group of middle school students. He stresses the importance of being able to separate "a thrill from a risk."

The Georgia Public Television production addresses the dangers of alcohol, tobacco and not wearing seat belts. Cosby plays a T-shirt vendor in the one-hour special.

Cynthia Stevens, co-producer of the program, said Thursday Carter, in his first dramatic role, "responds well to direction. He's a very responsive actor."

One of the students, John Champion, 13, said Carter was "real good to work with." But, he added, "He's about as nervous as we are."

NEW YORK (AP) — Dustin Hoffman, who has worked behind the camera as well as in front of it, said a good director knows how to "become part of the scenery."

The star of "Tootsie" and other films said he suspects he has a reputation for being difficult to work with because "nobody really wants to collaborate."

"It's like being in front of a canvas and some guy next to you is saying, 'No, use only this color and don't mix it with that,'" Hoffman said in an interview in the September issue of Vanity Fair. "Each person really believes he's right, and, as a matter of fact, they both are."

Hoffman, who has completed a film version of his revival of "Death of a Salesman," said, "The directors that I like best are the kind that don't march up and down in front of the camera before the take, but the kind that get lost, you know, become part of the scenery. And yet they're very strongly there because they know where to put the camera."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Jerry Lewis, gearing up for his annual Labor Day telethon for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, says, "I can't for the life of me recall how many times I've turned tears into adrenaline."

The deaths of children afflicted with the disease constantly spur him to give more time and effort to battling it, Lewis wrote in an article for Sunday's Parade magazine.

He said his work with the MDA has given him rewards he "never dreamed of," although he says contact with the children he calls "my kids" can cause pain as well as happiness.

"The child laughs and my heart soars...the parents smile and I'm back in kindergarten. The nurses appear hopeful and I want to dance...until the black veil of doom drops in and takes the child from us...and I die again."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bryant Gumbel, morning television anchor of the "Today Show," will host NBC's new monthly after-school program aimed at teen-agers, the network said.

Gumbel, who will still perform his early morning anchor chores on "Today," will be host on eight "Main Street" programs beginning Sept. 24. "All of the story subjects will be about young people as seen through their eyes," NBC said of the news magazine format.

Gumbel was chosen "because he's extremely good with kids," said executive producer Herb Dudnick. "He's done a number of pieces over the last six months where kids have been involved."

The one-hour programs, to be produced by NBC News, are the network's entry into the after-school program market dominated by ABC and CBS. Both the "ABC Afterschool Specials" and "CBS Schoolbreak Specials" are primarily dramas.

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Nepal's King Birendra, accompanied by Queen Aiswarya, left this morning by special aircraft for Australia on his first state visit to a country in the southern hemishphere.

Before leaving, the king told his subjects that Australia has been making important contributions to the cause of international peace and justice.

"We hope the present visit will further promote the goodwill and understanding so happily subsisting between our two countries," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Public Broadcasting System correspondent Bill Moyers was named 1984's outstanding interviewer as PBS led the list with 11 Emmys for news and documentaries form the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

CBS, which earned 10 awards Thursday evening, was close behind, followed by ABC with six and NBC with five.

The awards were presented at an awards dinner attended by teacher Sharon Christa McAuliffe, chosen to be the first civilian rider of the space shuttle Challenger; and Capt. John Testrake and Uli Derickson, the pilot and purser of hijacked TWA flight 847.

The ceremony recognized excellence in television journalism in such areas as background analysis, investigative reporting and interviews.

A total of 120 winners were selected from about 600 entries for programs broadcast between Jan. 1, and Dec. 31, 1984.

CHICAGO (AP) — Ronnie Dugger, publisher and owner of the Texas Observer, is one of three winners of the Hugh M. Hefner First Amendment Award, the Playboy Foundation announced.

Jack C. Landau, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, and Clifford McKenzie, who spoke out about the use of government travel funds at the Bureau of Indian Affairs' Technical Assistance Center, also were named as winners of the sixth annual award on Wednesday.

Dugger was honored for his persistence in challenging vested interests and politicians in his biweekly "Journal of Free Voices," the foundation announced.

Mountain families tune in to satellites

HUNTSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Like mushrooms on a summer hillside, satellite dishes have begun dotting the Appalachian skyline as rural families trade their rooftop antennas for high-tech entertainment.

The sleek dishes are changing the rural living room as well as the country landscape, as mountain people tune in to a spectrum of sophisticated programming denied them for decades, according to a communications specialist.

"We can tell that it has an amazing impact in terms of (the) diversity that all of a sudden presents itself," said Harold Morse, president of The Learning Channel, formerly Appalachian Educational Satellite, in Washington.

"It certainly helps them in bringing in the rest of the world," Morse added.

The people living in the Appalachian mountains, tired of wresting what little signal they could receive through ungainly antennas sometimes placed high on neighboring ridges, are paying up to $6,000 to get the 1980s' multiple-TV choices.

Even the most modest of households has sprung the $1,000-$1,400 it takes for a basic system, and sometimes the stark, modern dishes can be found alongside small, weather-beaten houses, he said.

National softball play at Hogan tonight

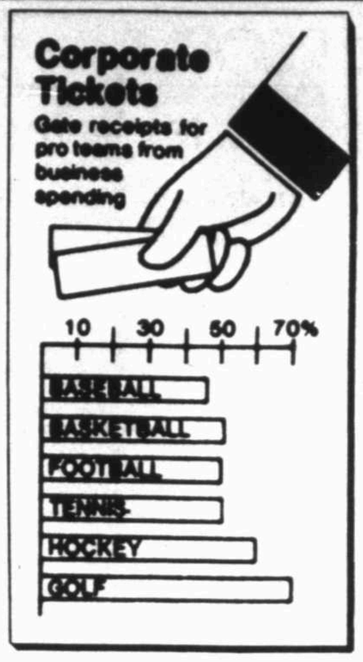

From Staff Reports

The National Class A Church League slow pitch softball tournament begins with opening ceremonies at 7 p.m. followed by the first game at 8 p.m. tonight.

The Amateur Softball Association event at the Bill Williams Softball Complex in Hogan Park will continue Saturday and Sunday with the championship game scheduled for noon Monday.

Two Midland teams, both from the Golf Course Road Church of Christ, will be entered. Golf Course Road White, the 1984 state champion, is composed of Scott McGraw, Jeff Hatfield, Scott Savell, Tim McKinney, Kyle McGraw, Clint Waddell, Travis McGraw, Randy Moss, Greg McCubbin, Scott John, Tim McGraw and Jack McGraw. The White team is composed of Scott Manley, Gil Pyle, Mike Beard, Steve Manley, Matt Simmons, Jeff Hartsell, Greg Eubank, Gordon Autry, Van Kimbrok, Randy Tanner, Greg Copeland, Ed Connally and Manager Steve Manley.

Other teams competing are: Temple Baptist of Odessa, Holy Angel of San Angelo, Bible Church of Waxahachie and St. Mary's of Brownsville. Out of state teams are here from Oregon, Washington, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama and Indiana.

Sports' new economy

More giving way to less

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer
New York Times News Service

More is giving way to less in a new, emerging economy aimed at restoring stability to sports.

Less competition from rival leagues. Less in salary increases and other costs. Less reliance on television for money and fan support.

Partly by design and partly by natural progression, the change is already under way:

—Salaries are leveling off, and while superstars like basketball's Pat Ewing will still get the big contracts, owners and players predict that overall increases will continue to decline.

—The United States Football League, after a two-year salary war with the National Football League, has dropped out of the bidding for most college stars, easing pressure on the NFL.

—The National Basketball Association operates under a salary cap limiting team payrolls. The immediate result last season: While 10 teams still lost money, that was seven fewer than the year before.

—BASEBALL'S new collective bargaining agreement calls for revenue sharing to help struggling teams, and owners estimate they will save $400,000 a year per team, starting in 1987, from salary arbitration changes.

It is a gradual transformation deemed necessary after unparalleled growth led to unparalleled spending over the last decade.

That doesn't mean sports will go broke, only that it won't get much richer.

"Maybe this latest golden age of sports is coming to an end," said former baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, "but it's not turning to lead."

The arbitration changes in baseball should be no more than a temporary setback for most players.

A player will need three years' major league service instead of two to be eligible for arbitration.

And players with three to five years of major-league experience no longer will be able to use inflated contracts of players with six or more years' experience in making their cases at arbitration hearings. It means that when setting one player's salary, an arbitrator can't consider the pay of other players with similar statistics who signed inflated contracts because they were free agents or could have become free agents.

"A player could be hurt for one year," Houston Astros second baseman Bill Doran said. "But the good players will make their money in the long run."

"One or two years do not make a career," added Charlie Hough, a Texas Rangers pitcher in his 13th season. "The owners figure if you play long, they'll pay, and I kind of agree."

"If you put a couple of years back-to-back, you'll get the money," said Mike Flanagan, a Baltimore Orioles pitcher. "This keeps the one-year flash-in-the-pan from making it big."

PLAYERS really made it big because of competition for their services — from rival leagues in football, basketball and hockey, and from free agency in baseball. And, as water seeks its own level, so does sports now.

"I've lived through the demise of the World Hockey Association, the World Football League, the American Basketball Association," sports agent Bob Woolf said. "I've represented a lot of players who had wonderful contracts that weren't fulfilled. There's no sense having a great contract if you've got no place to play. And more and more players realize that."

NFL and NHL salaries rose about 25 percent when they were bidding against rival leagues; since then, they've gone up 12-15 percent per year. The NBA's experience was similar.

Baseball player salaries, which leaped 47.6 percent immediately after players gained free agency in 1976, are now rising about 10 percent, less than the average just before free agency.

The owners estimate salaries will increase no more than 10-15 percent per year over the next four years; the players say it will be closer to 6-7 percent.

"I don't think the salary structure for the top players will be affected because they'll get the market price," said Mike Krukow, a pitcher for the San Francisco Giants. "But the rest of the guys will be getting less."

NEGOTIATING the superstar contracts could be more difficult in baseball under a new requirement for up-front financing of all long-term contracts. If a player is to be paid for years after he leaves the game, the money has to be put in escrow; teams may no longer mortgage — or bankrupt — their future.

That's less of a problem in football, where only about 1 percent of the 1,545 players have money deferred beyond 10 years. Most players' salaries are paid off in 1-5 years.

One reason, said union spokesman Jay Benoit, is that players have found they can make more by investing the money themselves.

Just as television was pivotal in the money boom, it will be a key to the retrenchment.

"I don't think our television contract will go up 2½ times to over $4 billion for five years," said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who negotiated a record $2.1 billion, five-year contract with the three networks in 1981. "I think we will have an increase, but it's not going to be an increase that will compensate for continual escalation of player salaries of 25-30 percent."

The proliferation of money led to a proliferation of sports on the air. Will there be less sports on the air in the future?

"What's necessary," said Bob Igiel, a senior vice president and director of programming at the N.W. Ayer advertising agency, "is to reduce the number of games to make them more meaningful and then to reduce the number of events telecast, to make those more important, too. That's why the NFL ranks so highly — because it's still a relatively short season and every game means a lot.

"AND HOW important is it to go to the baseball stadium when so many people can sit home, turn on the cable and watch a hundred Braves games, Mets games, Cubs games?" Igiel mused. "TV may be where the money is, but you've still got to have the people in the stands.

"Having the people at home doesn't mean anything. The USFL is a perfect example of that. If somebody's watching on TV and he sees empty seats, it means the game doesn't mean anything and, click, he's gone, too."

Tex Schramm, the Dallas Cowboys president who made NFL cheerleaders a national institution, and baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth agree.

"Everybody is looking for other sources of revenue," Schramm said. "Sports will have to stay financially strong to remain stable. We have to spread the income the best we can."

But TV alone is not enough.

"We must fill up stadiums, develop new sources of revenues and cut costs wherever possible," Ueberroth said.

Especially, Schramm said, keep the fans coming out.

Oddly, that also means bringing television technology into the ball park, with big screens giving the fan an armchair view from a stadium seat.

"We're going all the way, showing every play as it unfolds, then an immediate replay," Schramm said, "so it'll be a better view than sitting at home.

"Going to a game has to be an enjoyable experience or the fans will look elsewhere."

Battle over those deductions

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest battle in sports these days is not in the World Series or the Super Bowl. It's in the White House and Congress over deductions for business entertainment, including corporate ticket purchases.

Baseball, basketball, football, hockey and golf say Reagan administration proposals to eliminate or limit the deductions would cut deeply into ticket sales, driving up prices, hurting attendance and squeezing budgets already stretched by ballooning salaries.

They miss no opportunity to lobby.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth even coupled an announcement of the end of the baseball strike with a pointed plea for relief from the tax proposal. Since negotiators had reached quick agreement as urged by Congress and Reagan, he reasoned, Congress and Reagan should return the favor by exempting ticket sales from the tax rewrite.

Not everyone on Capitol Hill sees it that way.

"If you're considering taxing people's Medicare benefits and freezing their Social Security cost-of-living increases, how can you justify deducting the cost of baseball tickets?" said Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., a member of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee. "In cases like this, you have to look at what's most important."

SOME INSIDERS, however, say Congress will come up with a compromise package that will allow businessmen to deduct a moderate amount — perhaps $20 per person — for an outing. Reagan's proposal was for a $25 total limit for business meal deductions, no matter how many people were included.

"I look for similar treatment of meals and entertainment after this is worked out," said Clete Uhlenhopp, chief legislative aide to Ways and Means member Henson Moore, R-La. "Nobody's doing the fine-tuning on that idea yet, but that's what a lot of members would probably find acceptable."

But even if a compromise is found for individual ticket purchases, many companies say they would reconsider buying season tickets or luxury boxes now written off as a business expense.

And that could hurt.

Baseball says more than 46 percent of its gate receipts come from business spending. The NBA says its share is 51 percent, the NFL's about 50 percent, the NHL's better than 60 percent. In tennis, it's about 50 percent and in golf about 70 percent.

Corporate income "can be the difference between making a little money and losing a lot of money," said Dick Glover, vice president and chief administrative officer of the NBA's Washington Bullets. "The key to a profitable sports franchise is up-front sales that you know you have coming in before the season starts. We anticipate losing 30 to 50 percent of those advance season tickets if the tax plan passes. Only the most wildly successful franchises, of which we aren't one, can survive it without raising ticket prices."

AND THE league's executive vice president, Russell Granik, said the tax proposal is "profoundly unfair and discriminatory and unreasonably picks on sports and other business. It would have a severe impact on the NBA and all professional sports."

Jim Cook, who coordinates the NEC World Series of Golf, said the proposal "would be disastrous if it passes. ... The way it is now, a lot of business is done around sporting events because the atmosphere is conducive to carrying on relationships. ... Without the business deduction offered by sports tickets, they'll stop doing business there and they'll do business somewhere else, where it's deductible."

Jerry Hurley, executive vice president of the National Club Association, said golf clubs will lose nearly one-fifth of their revenue if the tax reforms become law.

"Our figures show that clubs will lose 18 percent of their revenue and that 5,000 clubs will have to lay off 81,000 full-time employees if the bill passes," he said.

Sports In Brief

SWIMMING— DOVER, England - Paul Asmuth of San Francisco, a professional marathon swimming champion, failed to break the record for the fastest swim across the English Channel.

Asmuth, 28, made the 21-mile (33.6-km) swim from Dover, England, to Cap Gris Nez, France, in 8 hours 12 minutes, said association secretary Audrey Scott.

That was the fastest-ever crossing by a male, but it was short of the record of 7 hours, 40 minutes set in 1978 by Penny Dean of San Jose, Calif., who also swam from England to France.

GOLF—WEST ORANGE, N.J. — Randy Sonnier thought the luck of the draw was in his favor when he drew defending champion Scott Verplank in the opening round of match play in the 85th U.S. Amateur championship, and it almost was.

Verplank edged Sonnier 1-up in the rematch of last year's dramatic semifinal in this event and then bested James Benepe 3-and-1 as he continued his quest to become the ninth player to win consecutive amateur titles.

TWIN LAKES, Mich. — A 70-year-old Upper Peninsula man with one arm and blurred vision says he was "a little excited" after pulling off golf's most coveted accomplishment, a hole-in-one.

Frank Kaarto of Ontonagon County's Mass City used a five iron to ace the 140-yard, par-3 third hole at Wyandotte Hills Golf Course in Twin Lakes.

BOXING—NEW YORK — A hamstring injury to International Boxing Federation junior middleweight champion Carlos Santos of Puerto Rico has forced a postponement of his defense against American Davey Moore, set for Saturday.

Santos called promoter Murah Muhammad to tell him of the injury. Doctors in San Juan confirmed the injury for the IBF.

HORSE RACING— DEL MAR, Calif. — Tangent, $23.20, rallied through the stretch and scored a narrow victory over Foggy Moon in the $40,000 feature race for older fillies and mares at Del Mar.

NEW YORK — Bright Bliss, $2.80, led wire-to-wire under Eddie Mle to post an easy 3-length victory in the $69,400 Mohawk Stakes for 2-year-old New York-bred fillies at Belmont Park.

NORTH RANDALL, Ohio — Running Princess, $7.20, took a 1½-length victory in the featured eighth race at Thistledown.

Angels best bargain

Slick promoter David Harum would have loved the California Angels. So would have P.T. Barnum, W.C. Fields, Nick the Greek. Any guy with his own deck.

This was not a franchise, it was a philanthropy. They were a hustler's dream. They spent money faster on more dubious merchandise than a sailor just off a whaler with a year's pay.

They were baseball's wax museum. Yesterday's stars. What they got looked good in the team picture but they played the game in slow motion.

The Angels were the baseball equivalent of guys who would buy the Brooklyn Bridge or underwater lots in Florida. They never seemed to get the shell with the pea under it. Every agent in the country kept their number next to his heart. The bought reputations, not performances. As a friend, Chuck Champlin, once wrote, the team rallying cry should have been, "Wait till last year!"

BUT, ON Dec. 5, 1977, the Angels momentarily reversed that trend when they dealt off a superstar and a bonus pick to the Chicago White Sox for a package of nobodies. The idea when they let Bobby Bonds and Thad Bosley and a minor league pitcher named Rich Dotson go to Chicago was to get pitchers Dave Frost and Chris Knapp. The White Sox threw in a sore-armed catcher with a lifetime average of .243 because General Manager Buzzie Bavasi saw something in Brian Downing that reminded him of Gil Hodges.

The fans were irate. Bonds was a guy who used to hit 30 home runs and steal 30 bases in the same seasons. Bonds was a star. Who in the world was Brian Jay Downing?

Well, Brian Jay Downing may just have been the biggest bargain the California Angels ever got.

Downing was not born to play baseball. He did not roll out of bed one morning with the ability to hit the curveball. But he was born with a strong streak of stubbornness and determination that can often substitute for raw talent. Downing's family motto should be the Latin for "I'll show you!" The coat of arms should be a mule chasing lions.

NATURE GAVE Brian Downing some help and he took it from there. He was not exactly a 98-pound weakling but nature stopped well short of making him Babe Ruth.

You get a pretty good fix on Brian Downing when you know that his first big league hit was an inside-the-park homer. Downing is a guy who keeps going.

His catching career with the Angels didn't last long. Just till he shattered an ankle trying to tag out Rickey Henderson at home plate in 1980. He was not Gabby Hartnett, either, but those who thought the incident would end his career, and that was a lot of people, didn't know him, also a lot of people.

Downing was never a guy to say: "Well, that's it," and he soon was working out on a Nautilus machine so indefatigably that he bulked up almost 20 pounds and looked like a taxicab playing left field.

He installed a pitching machine and batting cage in his backyard, relieving his wife of the chore of teeing up baseballs for him. He consulted a nutritionist.

He needed all that to make himself a major leaguer. Lots of people squander what nature gave them. Downing improved on it.

He was in a long tradition of players who outdid themselves, who outstripped their natural gifts by sheer effort of the will. Lou Gehrig, for example, as clumsy a rookie as ever was, ended up alongside Babe Ruth, no less, as a legend in his time.

DOWNING NEVER played off the income of his talent. He put the whole poke out there on every pitch. Downing swings at every pitch as if it were a rattlesnake he found in his bed. He plays as hard as anyone in the game – not your dirty-uniform, head-first-slide show-business brand, but the determined, gritted-teeth hard. Downing paid the price.

Downing could not turn it on and off. He was not a guy who could sleep for two years and get up and hit a ball hard someplace as was, say, Roberto Clemente. Downing had to play himself into top form, had to get all the parts moving right. If April or May could be removed from some of his seasons – he hit .176 in May of '83, .200 in May of last year and .194 this year – Downing would be crowding Rogers Hornsby.

This year, Downing slammed into August hitting .447 with 13 home runs and 44 runs batted in since June 21.

The other night, the Angels found themselves backed into a corner in their division fight. With a bare 1½-game lead, they were down, 6-0, to the Detroit Tigers and seemed to be going gently into that good night when, in the sixth inning, with Rod Carew on base, Downing jumped all over a fastball and slammed it into the left-field seats.

Those two runs were important because, in the ninth inning, the Angels unaccountably came back with a series of walks and Tiger errors. The score was suddenly tied and Downing was at bat with the bases loaded.

TYPICALLY, he hit the ball hard. The third baseman had to make a diving stop and, in getting to his feet and seeing Downing flying down the line, he threw wildly and the Angels had won a "lost" game. Very good for morale.

In the locker room later, Downing spoke evenly. "We don't like it when people say we're too old, or too slow, or too jaded," he said. "What we are is too proud to quit."

Across the locker room, his superstar teammate, Reggie Jackson, was dressing. "I'll tell you one thing about Brian Downing," he said. "If you took his heart and put it in a lion, that lion would be tougher. I'm proud to be on the same team with him."

Meagher seeks 4th Gold

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Halfway through the 1985 World University Games, swimmer Mary T. Meagher will be seeking her fourth gold medal for the United States, which already has won more events than it did in the 1983 Games in Canada.

If she wins the 200-meter butterfly Friday, Meagher would tie teammate Matt Biondi, who has four golds but will not get a chance for a fifth in the 400-meter medley relay because of a leg infection.

Meanwhile, Soviet athletes were among the favorites in at least four of the eight track and field finals. Aside from the eight golds in track, five were to be decided in swimming, one in men's springboard diving and another in women's team foil fencing.

After Thursday's events, the Soviets led with 42 medals, including 20 gold. The United States was next with 32 medals and 14 gold. At the 1983 Games in Edmonton, Alberta, the American team captured 12 gold compared with the Soviets' 59.

Japan, which has won all three of its golds in the native sport of Judo, and China each had 12 medals after Thursday's competition and Romania 10.

At Kobe's main stadium Friday, Soviets were among the favorites in the hammer throw, the men's long jump, the women's 100 meters and the women's 10,000 meters.

Leann Warren of Eugene, Ore., and Darlene Beckford of Cambridge, Mass., are among leaders in the women's 1,500 meters. Defending champion Beate Peters of West Germany is in the field in the women's javelin.

In the men's 100, defending champion Chidi Imoh of Nigeria faces a challenge from Michael Morris of Solvay, N.Y., and Lee McNeill of Greenville, N.C. Romanian Cristieana Cojocaru is favored in the women's 400-meter hurdles, where the field also includes Olympic champion Nawal El Motawarel of Morocco. Meagher, of Louisville, Ky., who holds two world records, one in the 200-meter butterfly, helped the United States win the women's 400-meter medley relay Thursday, overtaking a Bulgarian rival in the third, or butterfly, leg of the race. The Americans won in 4:11.24, breaking the Games record of 4:14.0 — one of 18 Games records that have fallen in 25 races so far. Bulgaria was second in 4:14.59 after the anchor leg of Jenna Johnson of La Habra, Calif., who now has two golds.

Stacy Shupe of Corritos, Calif., won the Americans' other swimming gold of the day with an 8:45.87 in the women's 800-meter freestyle.

According to U.S. swimming coach Don Lamont, Biondi, 19, of Moraga, Calif., cut his leg while shaving it Wednesday night and suffered an infected boil that forced him to drop out of Friday's relay. Had he won a fifth gold here, he would have tied a Games swimming record.

However, Lamont added: "We have a lot of capable people on the U.S. team."

The Soviet Union's Igor Polyanski became a double medalist, winning the men's 100-meter backstroke in 56.26 and breaking the Games mark of 56.64. Soviet swimmer Svetlana Korchikova won the women's 200-meter individual medley in 2:18.11, beating the old mark of 2:18.23.

Beaumont defeats El Paso in TL

Beaumont's Francisco Oliveras allowed only one hit and struck out five through six innings as the Golden Gators dominated the Texas League's best team, the El Paso Diablos, in a 9-2 victory Thursday night.

El Paso's Doug Norton went all the way for the Diablos and yielded all nine Gator runs and 11 hits.

The floodgates for the Gators burst open in the fourth inning, when Beaumont sent 11 men to the plate, drowning the Diablos for seven runs on six hits.

In other Texas League action Thursday, San Antonio outlasted Midland 11-10, Tulsa defeated Jackson 8-3, and Shreveport defeated Arkansas 4-1.

John Tutt and Jaime Moreno contributed two-run singles in Beaumont's big fourth inning.

Sports' new economy

More giving way to less

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer
New York Times News Service

More is giving way to less in a new, emerging economy aimed at restoring stability to sports.

Less competition from rival leagues. Less in salary increases and other costs. Less reliance on television for money and fan support.

Partly by design and partly by natural progression, the change is already under way:

—Salaries are leveling off, and while superstars like basketball's Pat Ewing will still get the big contracts, owners and players predict that overall increases will continue to decline.

—The United States Football League, after a two-year salary war with the National Football League, has dropped out of the bidding for most college stars, easing pressure on the NFL.

—The National Basketball Association operates under a salary cap limiting team payrolls. The immediate result last season: While 10 teams still lost money, that was seven fewer than the year before.

—BASEBALL'S new collective bargaining agreement calls for revenue sharing to help struggling teams, and owners estimate they will save $400,000 a year per team, starting in 1987, from salary arbitration changes.

It is a gradual transformation deemed necessary after unparalleled growth led to unparalleled spending over the last decade.

That doesn't mean sports will go broke, only that it won't get much richer.

"Maybe this latest golden age of sports is coming to an end," said former baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, "but it's not turning to lead."

The arbitration changes in baseball should be no more than a temporary setback for most players.

A player will need three years' major league service instead of two to be eligible for arbitration.

And players with three to five years of major-league experience no longer will be able to use inflated contracts of players with six or more years' experience in making their cases at arbitration hearings. It means that when setting one player's salary, an arbitrator can't consider the pay of other players with similar statistics who signed inflated contracts because they were free agents or could have become free agents.

"A player could be hurt for one year," Houston Astros second baseman Bill Doran said. "But the good players will make their money in the long run."

"One or two years do not make a career," added Charlie Hough, a Texas Rangers pitcher in his 13th season. "The owners figure if you play long, they'll pay, and I kind of agree."

"If you put a couple of years back-to-back, you'll get the money," said Mike Flanagan, a Baltimore Orioles pitcher. "This keeps the one-year flash-in-the-pan from making it big."

PLAYERS really made it big because of competition for their services — from rival leagues in football, basketball and hockey, and from free agency in baseball. And, as water seeks its own level, so does sports now.

"I've lived through the demise of the World Hockey Association, the World Football League, the American Basketball Association," sports agent Bob Woolf said. "I've represented a lot of players who had wonderful contracts that weren't fulfilled. There's no sense having a great contract if you've got no place to play. And more and more players realize that."

NFL and NHL salaries rose about 25 percent when they were bidding against rival leagues; since then, they've gone up 12-15 percent per year. The NBA's experience was similar.

Baseball player salaries, which leaped 47.6 percent immediately after players gained free agency in 1976, are now rising about 10 percent, less than the average just before free agency.

The owners estimate salaries will increase no more than 10-15 percent per year over the next four years; the players say it will be closer to 6-7 percent.

"I don't think the salary structure for the top players will be affected because they'll get the market price," said Mike Krukow, a pitcher for the San Francisco Giants. "But the rest of the guys will be getting less."

NEGOTIATING the superstar contracts could be more difficult in baseball under a new requirement for up-front financing of all long-term contracts. If a player is to be paid for years after he leaves the game, the money has to be put in escrow; teams may no longer mortgage — or bankrupt — their future.

That's less of a problem in football, where only about 1 percent of the 1,545 players have money deferred beyond 10 years. Most players' salaries are paid off in 1-5 years.

One reason, said union spokesman Jay Benoit, is that players have found they can make more by investing the money themselves.

Just as television was pivotal in the money boom, it will be a key to the retrenchment.

"I don't think our television contract will go up 2½ times to over $4 billion for five years," said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who negotiated a record $2.1 billion, five-year contract with the three networks in 1981. "I think we will have an increase, but it's not going to be an increase that will compensate for continual escalation of player salaries of 25-30 percent."

The proliferation of money led to a proliferation of sports on the air. Will there be less sports on the air in the future?

"What's necessary," said Bob Igiel, a senior vice president and director of programming at the N.W. Ayer advertising agency, "is to reduce the number of games to make them more meaningful and then to reduce the number of events telecast, to make those more important, too. That's why the NFL ranks so highly — because it's still a relatively short season and every game means a lot.

"AND HOW important is it to go to the baseball stadium when so many people can sit home, turn on the cable and watch a hundred Braves games, Mets games, Cubs games?" Igiel mused. "TV may be where the money is, but you've still got to have the people in the stands.

"Having the people at home doesn't mean anything. The USFL is a perfect example of that. If somebody's watching on TV and he sees empty seats, it means the game doesn't mean anything and, click, he's gone, too."

Tex Schramm, the Dallas Cowboys president who made NFL cheerleaders a national institution, and baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth agree.

"Everybody is looking for other sources of revenue," Schramm said. "Sports will have to stay financially strong to remain stable. We have to spread the income the best we can."

But TV alone is not enough.

"We must fill up stadiums, develop new sources of revenues and cut costs wherever possible," Ueberroth said.

Especially, Schramm said, keep the fans coming out.

Oddly, that also means bringing television technology into the ball park, with big screens giving the fan an armchair view from a stadium seat.

"We're going all the way, showing every play as it unfolds, then an immediate replay," Schramm said, "so it'll be a better view than sitting at home.

"Going to a game has to be an enjoyable experience or the fans will look elsewhere."

Battle over those deductions

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest battle in sports these days is not in the World Series or the Super Bowl. It's in the White House and Congress over deductions for business entertainment, including corporate ticket purchases.

Baseball, basketball, football, hockey and golf say Reagan administration proposals to eliminate or limit the deductions would cut deeply into ticket sales, driving up prices, hurting attendance and squeezing budgets already stretched by ballooning salaries.

They miss no opportunity to lobby.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth even coupled an announcement of the end of the baseball strike with a pointed plea for relief from the tax proposal. Since negotiators had reached quick agreement as urged by Congress and Reagan, he reasoned, Congress and Reagan should return the favor by exempting ticket sales from the tax rewrite.

Not everyone on Capitol Hill sees it that way.

"If you're considering taxing people's Medicare benefits and freezing their Social Security cost-of-living increases, how can you justify deducting the cost of baseball tickets?" said Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., a member of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee. "In cases like this, you have to look at what's most important."

SOME INSIDERS, however, say Congress will come up with a compromise package that will allow businessmen to deduct a moderate amount — perhaps $20 per person — for an outing. Reagan's proposal was for a $25 total limit for business meal deductions, no matter how many people were included.

"I look for similar treatment of meals and entertainment after this is worked out," said Clete Uhlenhopp, chief legislative aide to Ways and Means member Henson Moore, R-La. "Nobody's doing the fine-tuning on that idea yet, but that's what a lot of members would probably find acceptable."

But even if a compromise is found for individual ticket purchases, many companies say they would reconsider buying season tickets or luxury boxes now written off as a business expense.

And that could hurt.

Baseball says more than 46 percent of its gate receipts come from business spending. The NBA says its share is 51 percent, the NFL's about 50 percent, the NHL's better than 60 percent. In tennis, it's about 50 percent and in golf about 70 percent.

Corporate income "can be the difference between making a little money and losing a lot of money," said Dick Glover, vice president and chief administrative officer of the NBA's Washington Bullets. "The key to a profitable sports franchise is up-front sales that you know you have coming in before the season starts. We anticipate losing 30 to 50 percent of those advance season tickets if the tax plan passes. Only the most wildly successful franchises, of which we aren't one, can survive it without raising ticket prices."

AND THE league's executive vice president, Russell Granik, said the tax proposal is "profoundly unfair and discriminatory and unreasonably picks on sports and other business. It would have a severe impact on the NBA and all professional sports."

Jim Cook, who coordinates the NEC World Series of Golf, said the proposal "would be disastrous if it passes. ... The way it is now, a lot of business is done around sporting events because the atmosphere is conducive to carrying on relationships. ... Without the business deduction offered by sports tickets, they'll stop doing business there and they'll do business somewhere else, where it's deductible."

Jerry Hurley, executive vice president of the National Club Association, said golf clubs will lose nearly one-fifth of their revenue if the tax reforms become law.

"Our figures show that clubs will lose 18 percent of their revenue and that 5,000 clubs will have to lay off 81,000 full-time employees if the bill passes," he said.

Sports In Brief

Associated Press

SWIMMING— DOVER, England - Paul Asmuth of San Francisco, a professional marathon swimming champion, failed to break the record for the fastest swim across the English Channel.

Asmuth, 28, made the 21-mile (33.6-km) swim from Dover, England, to Cap Gris Nez, France, in 8 hours 12 minutes, said association secretary Audrey Scott.

That was the fastest-ever crossing by a male, but it was short of the record of 7 hours, 40 minutes set in 1978 by Penny Dean of San Jose, Calif., who also swam from England to France.

GOLF—WEST ORANGE, N.J. — Randy Sonnier thought the luck of the draw was in his favor when he drew defending champion Scott Verplank in the opening round of match play in the 85th U.S. Amateur championship, and it almost was.

Verplank edged Sonnier 1-up in the rematch of last year's dramatic semifinal in this event and then bested James Benepe 3-and-1 as he continued his quest to become the ninth player to win consecutive amateur titles.

TWIN LAKES, Mich. — A 70-year-old Upper Peninsula man with one arm and blurred vision says he was "a little excited" after pulling off golf's most coveted accomplishment, a hole-in-one.

Frank Kaarto of Ontonagon County's Mass City used a five iron to ace the 140-yard, par-3 third hole at Wyandotte Hills Golf Course in Twin Lakes.

BOXING—NEW YORK — A hamstring injury to International Boxing Federation junior middleweight champion Carlos Santos of Puerto Rico has forced a postponement of his defense against American Davey Moore, set for Saturday.

Santos called promoter Murah Muhammad to tell him of the injury. Doctors in San Juan confirmed the injury for the IBF.

HORSE RACING— DEL MAR, Calif. — Tangent, $23.20, rallied through the stretch and scored a narrow victory over Foggy Moon in the $40,000 feature race for older fillies and mares at Del Mar.

NEW YORK — Bright Bliss, $2.80, led wire-to-wire under Eddie Mle to post an easy 3-length victory in the $69,400 Mohawk Stakes for 2-year-old New York-bred fillies at Belmont Park.

NORTH RANDALL, Ohio — Running Princess, $7.20, took a 1½-length victory in the featured eighth race at Thistledown.

Angels best bargain

Slick promoter David Harum would have loved the California Angels. So would have P.T. Barnum, W.C. Fields, Nick the Greek. Any guy with his own deck.

This was not a franchise, it was a philanthropy. They were a hustler's dream. They spent money faster on more dubious merchandise than a sailor just off a whaler with a year's pay.

They were baseball's wax museum. Yesterday's stars. What they got looked good in the team picture but they played the game in slow motion.

The Angels were the baseball equivalent of guys who would buy the Brooklyn Bridge or underwater lots in Florida. They never seemed to get the shell with the pea under it. Every agent in the country kept their number next to his heart. The bought reputations, not performances. As a friend, Chuck Champlin, once wrote, the team rallying cry should have been, "Wait till last year!"

BUT, ON Dec. 5, 1977, the Angels momentarily reversed that trend when they dealt off a superstar and a bonus pick to the Chicago White Sox for a package of nobodies. The idea when they let Bobby Bonds and Thad Bosley and a minor league pitcher named Rich Dotson go to Chicago was to get pitchers Dave Frost and Chris Knapp. The White Sox threw in a sore-armed catcher with a lifetime average of .243 because General Manager Buzzie Bavasi saw something in Brian Downing that reminded him of Gil Hodges.

The fans were irate. Bonds was a guy who used to hit 30 home runs and steal 30 bases in the same seasons. Bonds was a star. Who in the world was Brian Jay Downing?

Well, Brian Jay Downing may just have been the biggest bargain the California Angels ever got.

Downing was not born to play baseball. He did not roll out of bed one morning with the ability to hit the curveball. But he was born with a strong streak of stubbornness and determination that can often substitute for raw talent. Downing's family motto should be the Latin for "I'll show you!" The coat of arms should be a mule chasing lions.

NATURE GAVE Brian Downing some help and he took it from there. He was not exactly a 98-pound weakling but nature stopped well short of making him Babe Ruth.

You get a pretty good fix on Brian Downing when you know that his first big league hit was an inside-the-park homer. Downing is a guy who keeps going.

His catching career with the Angels didn't last long. Just till he shattered an ankle trying to tag out Rickey Henderson at home plate in 1980. He was not Gabby Hartnett, either, but those who thought the incident would end his career, and that was a lot of people, didn't know him, also a lot of people.

Downing was never a guy to say: "Well, that's it," and he soon was working out on a Nautilus machine so indefatigably that he bulked up almost 20 pounds and looked like a taxicab playing left field.

He installed a pitching machine and batting cage in his backyard, relieving his wife of the chore of teeing up baseballs for him. He consulted a nutritionist.

He needed all that to make himself a major leaguer. Lots of people squander what nature gave them. Downing improved on it.

He was in a long tradition of players who outdid themselves, who outstripped their natural gifts by sheer effort of the will. Lou Gehrig, for example, as clumsy a rookie as ever was, ended up alongside Babe Ruth, no less, as a legend in his time.

DOWNING NEVER played off the income of his talent. He put the whole poke out there on every pitch. Downing swings at every pitch as if it were a rattlesnake he found in his bed. He plays as hard as anyone in the game – not your dirty-uniform, head-first-slide show-business brand, but the determined, gritted-teeth hard. Downing paid the price.

Downing could not turn it on and off. He was not a guy who could sleep for two years and get up and hit a ball hard someplace as was, say, Roberto Clemente. Downing had to play himself into top form, had to get all the parts moving right. If April or May could be removed from some of his seasons – he hit .176 in May of '83, .200 in May of last year and .194 this year – Downing would be crowding Rogers Hornsby.

This year, Downing slammed into August hitting .447 with 13 home runs and 44 runs batted in since June 21.

The other night, the Angels found themselves backed into a corner in their division fight. With a bare 1½-game lead, they were down, 6-0, to the Detroit Tigers and seemed to be going gently into that good night when, in the sixth inning, with Rod Carew on base, Downing jumped all over a fastball and slammed it into the left-field seats.

Those two runs were important because, in the ninth inning, the Angels unaccountably came back with a series of walks and Tiger errors. The score was suddenly tied and Downing was at bat with the bases loaded.

TYPICALLY, he hit the ball hard. The third baseman had to make a diving stop and, in getting to his feet and seeing Downing flying down the line, he threw wildly and the Angels had won a "lost" game. Very good for morale.

In the locker room later, Downing spoke evenly. "We don't like it when people say we're too old, or too slow, or too jaded," he said. "What we are is too proud to quit."

Across the locker room, his superstar teammate, Reggie Jackson, was dressing. "I'll tell you one thing about Brian Downing," he said. "If you took his heart and put it in a lion, that lion would be tougher. I'm proud to be on the same team with him."

Meagher seeks 4th Gold

KOBE, Japan (AP) — Halfway through the 1985 World University Games, swimmer Mary T. Meagher will be seeking her fourth gold medal for the United States, which already has won more events than it did in the 1983 Games in Canada.

If she wins the 200-meter butterfly Friday, Meagher would tie teammate Matt Biondi, who has four golds but will not get a chance for a fifth in the 400-meter medley relay because of a leg infection.

Meanwhile, Soviet athletes were among the favorites in at least four of the eight track and field finals. Aside from the eight golds in track, five were to be decided in swimming, one in men's springboard diving and another in women's team foil fencing.

After Thursday's events, the Soviets led with 42 medals, including 20 gold. The United States was next with 32 medals and 14 gold. At the 1983 Games in Edmonton, Alberta, the American team captured 12 gold compared with the Soviets' 59.

Japan, which has won all three of its golds in the native sport of Judo, and China each had 12 medals after Thursday's competition and Romania 10.

At Kobe's main stadium Friday, Soviets were among the favorites in the hammer throw, the men's long jump, the women's 100 meters and the women's 10,000 meters.

Leann Warren of Eugene, Ore., and Darlene Beckford of Cambridge, Mass., are among leaders in the women's 1,500 meters. Defending champion Beate Peters of West Germany is in the field in the women's javelin.

In the men's 100, defending champion Chidi Imoh of Nigeria faces a challenge from Michael Morris of Solvay, N.Y., and Lee McNeill of Greenville, N.C. Romanian Cristieana Cojocaru is favored in the women's 400-meter hurdles, where the field also includes Olympic champion Nawal El Motawarel of Morocco. Meagher, of Louisville, Ky., who holds two world records, one in the 200-meter butterfly, helped the United States win the women's 400-meter medley relay Thursday, overtaking a Bulgarian rival in the third, or butterfly, leg of the race. The Americans won in 4:11.24, breaking the Games record of 4:14.0 — one of 18 Games records that have fallen in 25 races so far. Bulgaria was second in 4:14.59 after the anchor leg of Jenna Johnson of La Habra, Calif., who now has two golds.

Stacy Shupe of Corritos, Calif., won the Americans' other swimming gold of the day with an 8:45.87 in the women's 800-meter freestyle.

According to U.S. swimming coach Don Lamont, Biondi, 19, of Moraga, Calif., cut his leg while shaving it Wednesday night and suffered an infected boil that forced him to drop out of Friday's relay. Had he won a fifth gold here, he would have tied a Games swimming record.

However, Lamont added: "We have a lot of capable people on the U.S. team."

The Soviet Union's Igor Polyanski became a double medalist, winning the men's 100-meter backstroke in 56.26 and breaking the Games mark of 56.64. Soviet swimmer Svetlana Korchikova won the women's 200-meter individual medley in 2:18.11, beating the old mark of 2:18.23.

Beaumont defeats El Paso in TL

Beaumont's Francisco Oliveras allowed only one hit and struck out five through six innings as the Golden Gators dominated the Texas League's best team, the El Paso Diablos, in a 9-2 victory Thursday night.

El Paso's Doug Norton went all the way for the Diablos and yielded all nine Gator runs and 11 hits.

The floodgates for the Gators burst open in the fourth inning, when Beaumont sent 11 men to the plate, drowning the Diablos for seven runs on six hits.

In other Texas League action Thursday, San Antonio outlasted Midland 11-10, Tulsa defeated Jackson 8-3, and Shreveport defeated Arkansas 4-1.

John Tutt and Jaime Moreno contributed two-run singles in Beaumont's big fourth inning.

She's 'Fonda' foundation

Jane Fonda arrives at New York's Palladium with (from left) daughter Vanessa Vadim, actress Lauren Hutton, and Courtney Kennedy. The foursome attended the premiere of Fonda's new movie, "Agnes of God," with proceeds benefitting the Ms. Foundation.

Tilly serene about 'Agnes of God' role

By Nancy Anderson
Copley News Service

MONTREAL — Fawnlike Meg Tilly could star in a Disney cartoon. She's so graceful, so doe-eyed, so much like Bambi.

But, instead, she's title star of Columbia Pictures' "Agnes of God" in which she's seen in the demanding role of a nun who bears a child in a convent and whose hands bleed as though she's been nailed to a cross.

The film opened the Montreal International Film Festival this year with Tilly and co-star Jane Fonda attending.

Meg went after the role of the religious hysteric with relentless determination.

She'd been cast in the film "Amadeus" and was in Czechoslovakia rehearsing when actor Tom Hulce told her she'd been born to play the part of Agnes in a play called "Agnes of God."

Since Tilly was in Czechoslovakia to make a major movie and hadn't been approached about playing "Agnes" anytime anywhere, it didn't seem likely that she'd ever be cast as the beset sister.

But, just before the shooting of "Amadeus" began, she tore leg ligaments in a cast/crew soccer game and had to be replaced in the film.

Recuperating back home, she read in Variety that Columbia had gotten screen rights to the John Pielmeier play. And, with that, she began her campaign to get the title role.

MARRIED TO producer Tim Zimmerman, Meg says, "I know that producers toss actors' names around while they are working on a screenplay."

ENTERTAINMENT

"Though I wasn't well known, I thought that if they were going to go with some Hollywood bimbo it might as well be me. I started calling about the role nine months before they shot the picture. I probably made a nuisance of myself."

— Actress Meg Tilly

And she wanted her name to be among those tossed while Pielmeier was preparing his play for the screen. So she memorized parts of it and asked her agent to introduce her to Norman Jewison who would produce and direct. She all but wheedled.

Tilly says, "If Amanda Plummer (who played Agnes on Broadway) had gotten the part, I would have wished her luck and not felt bad about losing it.

"But, though I wasn't well known, I thought that if they were going to go with some Hollywood bimbo it might as well be me.

"I started calling about the role nine months before they shot the picture. I probably made a nuisance of myself."

Tilly admits that it was very hard to have lost "Amadeus."

"But, because of the torn ligament, I had to have an operation. Otherwise I would have been crippled.

"So I kept reminding myself, 'I didn't get to do that picture, but at least I can walk.'

"I always count my blessings. And I have a lot to count.

"I know I'm very lucky, because I have a wonderful family.

"Besides, I'm the kind of person who believes that what will happen will happen."

SO PERHAPS Meg would have survived the loss of "Agnes of God" with relative good cheer.

However, she got the role and it probably will determine the future course of her career.

She knows, she says, that if the film is successful, she'll get a lot of credit and that, if it fails, she'll be blamed.

But she's not on pins and needles waiting for the verdict.

She and her husband have a baby daughter, Emily, and Meg's husband and child mean incomparably more to her than her career.

"I could work three months of the year and spend the rest of the time at home cooking and cleaning house," she claims. "I may be weird, but that's how I feel.

"...I have a love/hate thing with acting."

When "Agnes of God" was shooting in Montreal, Tilly took Emily on location with her and breast-fed her, although she didn't take the baby to the set on the days she played her most emotionally taxing scenes.

"Emily didn't recognize me with my nun's habit on," Tilly laughs. "She couldn't smell me under all those clothes."

MEG MET her husband during a rodeo scene for "Tex" and thought he was a ranch hand of some kind.

"I'd never seen a producer before," she explains.

They married on the first day of 1983 while she was making "The Big Chill." When Meg began campaigning for a part in "Agnes of God" she didn't know who'd be cast in any of the roles.

So to find herself working with Jane Fonda and Anne Bancroft was an unexpected delight.

"You know," says Tilly, "you can put cheap gas into a car and it will go, but it will only chug along. When you put in high-quality gas, it will run smoothly with a lot of power.

"Working with Jane and Anne was like using the very best gasoline."

Newcomer Michael J. Fox hauls in box office profits

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Michael J. Fox in any form is popular at the box office as "Back to the Future" led the list of weekend film showings followed by "Teen Wolf," where Fox portrays a werewolf.

The Atlantic Releasing Co.'s "Teen Wolf" earned $6.1 million during the weekend, making it the largest opening in the company's history.

The diminutive Fox has become a threat to muscle-bound Sylvester Stallone's reign as the summer's top box office draw.

"Back to the Future" amassed $6.7 million during the weekend and $119.8 million since its opening eight weeks ago. "Rambo: First Blood Part II," which stars Stallone, grossed $1.1 million during the weekend and has total earnings of $144 million.

Pee-Wee Herman also demonstrated box-office muscle for Warner Bros. as "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" earned $4 million in receipts over the weekend.

Fewer audiences took up the call for "Volunteers" as it dropped from second to fourth place earning $3.6 million for Tri-Star.

"Year of the Dragon" Michael Cimino's violent look into corruption in New York's Chinatown, drew a smaller audience, grossing $2.9 million to earn fifth place.

Here are the top seven films at the box office this past weekend, with distributor, weekend gross, number of screens, total gross and number of weeks in release:

1. "Back to the Future," Universal, $6.8 million, 1,523 screens, $119.8 million, eight weeks.
2. "Teen Wolf," Atlantic, $6.1 million, 1,416 screens, $6.1 million, one week.
3. "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure," Warner Bros., $4 million, 892 screens, $19.8 million, five weeks.
4. "Volunteers," Tri-Star, $3.6 million, 1,468 screens, $10.8 million, two weeks.
5. "Year of the Dragon," MGM-UA, $2.9 million, 970 screens, $8.9 million, two weeks.
6. "The Return of the Living Dead," Orion, $2.8 million, 1,500 screens, $9.3 million, two weeks.
7. "Summer Rental," Paramount, $2.3 million, 1,231 screens, $17.2 million, three weeks.
8. "Ghostbusters," Columbia, $2 million, 990 screens, $2 million, one week reissue.
9. "National Lampoon's European Vacation," Warner Bros, $1.7 million, 1,082 screens, $43 million, four weeks.
10. "Cocoon," 20th Century Fox, $1.7 million, 774 screens, $66 million, nine weeks.

Dollar up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar advanced in Europe early today in continued thin trading. Gold bullion prices changed little.

In the first hours of European trading, the dollar was being quoted at higher levels against all other major currencies except the British pound.

Dealers said, however, the market continued to lack direction and was awaiting further U.S. economic reports due later today. Monday's Labor Day holiday added to the market's slow pace, they said.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Thursday included:

—2.7820 West German marks, up from 2.7780

—2.28275 Swiss francs, up from 2.2752

—8.5000 French francs, up from 8.4835

—3.1317 Dutch guilders, up from 3.1250

—1,870.75 Italian lire, up from 1,865.00

—1.3633 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3628

The British pound rose to $1.40 from $1.3985.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 237.10 Japanese yen, up from 236.95 yen. Later in London, the dollar was little changed, at 237.08 yen.

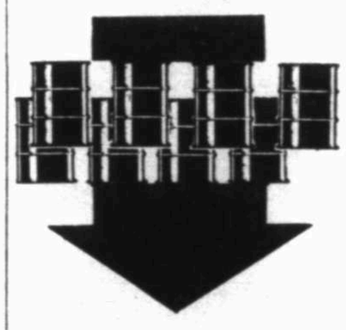

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $335.75 a troy ounce, up slightly from late Thursday's bid of $335.50.

The metal was bid at $335.60 in Zurich, down from $336.50.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid of $336.35, down from $338.61.

Silver was quoted at a bid of $6.23 an ounce in London, down from $6.30.

Sales of new single-family homes reach two-year high

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Sales of new single-family houses rose 1.4 percent in July, to the highest level in almost two years, the government said Thursday. It also revised upward its figures for April, May and June, showing a much stronger performance than previously reported.

Sales in June, reported a month ago as a drop of one-tenth of 1 percent, actually rose 2.2 percent. The Commerce Department and Department of Housing and Urgan Development said the upward revisions stemmed from late reports containing stronger results than the earlier data.

Economists were heartened by the new figures.

"We are back in the comfort zone," remarked Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers of America.

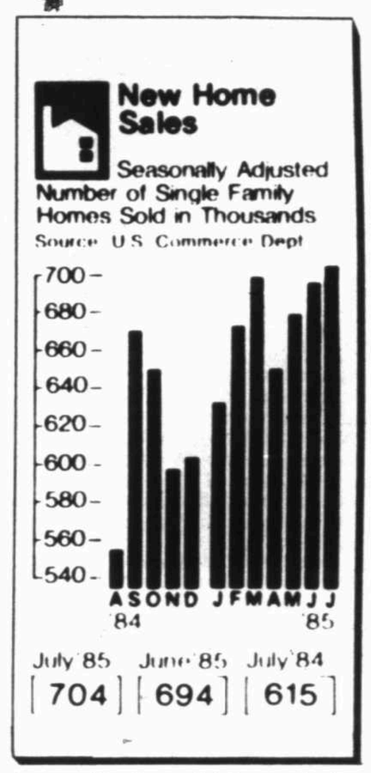

Lasko said he was puzzled last month by the report that June sales of new homes had dropped while mortgage rates kept falling to their lowest levels in five years.

Analysts said sharp revisions like those reported Thursday — the May gain was increased to 4.6 percent, for instance — are troublesome because they affect other predictions.

But Adren Cooper, economic information officer at the Commerce Department, said economists know that the figures are always subject to change. "Eventually we go back and revise several years," he said. "You can't put much reliance on the first numbers."

As a result of budget cuts some years ago, "there have been problems with the collection and the quality of data," said James Christian, chief economist for the U.S. League of Savings Institutions. Like Lasko, he had been puzzled by the earlier report of a June decline.

Besides a 14 percent sales increase since July 1984, the new figures indicate that the backlog of unsold homes is down to 6.2 months, the lowest level this year.

Analysts said this decline, from 6.3 months in June, should spur housing construction starts in coming months. Starts in the last three months have been disappointing.

Housing sales and housing starts are key indicators of future economic activity. With the July figures, housing sales seem to reflect what most economists had expected. New single-family homes in July were sold at an annual rate of 704,000 units, the fastest pace since December 1983. And sales of existing homes rose 1.6 percent in July, to an annual rate of 3.11 million units, the highest rate in almost five years.

The strength in the housing market is due partly to falling interest rates. At 12.25 percent for fixed-rate mortgages, rates are about three percentage points lower than a year ago.

"A good number of buyers have decided that interest rates are as low as they are going to go for a while, and they are buying homes," said Lasko of the Mortgage Bankers Association.

The average price of a new home climbed sharply in July to $101,900, up $3,300 from the June level. However, the median price of a new home fell by $3,500, to $82,100. Economists say that the median price — the point where half the homes sell for more and half sell for less — provides a better picture of what housing prices are doing. A drop in the median price is a sign that first-time buyers are in the market again.

The July sales gain reflected a strong 10.7 percent increase in the West and a 3.8 percent gain in the Middle West. Sales dropped 3.2 percent in the South and showed no change in the Northeast from the June level.

Gannett purchases Evening News Association

Directors unanimously approve $717 million deal

DETROIT (AP) — Gannett Co.'s purchase of the Evening News Association for $717 million adds five daily newspapers, four weeklies, five television stations and two radio stations to the communications group.

ENA's flagship, The Detroit News, is the nation's ninth largest newspaper, with a daily circulation of 647,000.

Gannett Chairman Allen H. Neuharth and ENA Chairman Peter B. Clark concluded the deal Thursday, for $1,583 per share in cash, apparently blocking a $1,250 per share hostile offer by television producers Norman Lear and A. Jerrold Perenchio.

The transaction, unanimously approved by directors of both companies, ends 112 years of ownership of ENA by the founding Scripps family and puts Gannett in direct competition with the Detroit Free Press, where Neuharth was assistant executive editor from 1960 to 1963.

"From a family point of view, it is of course, saddening that the direct and personal involvement of the descendants of the founder is ending," Clark said at a news conference. "These things happen. It's a matter of evolution. I think we did very well in sustaining it for five or six generations."

Clark said he and current directors will oversee the acquisition of the 3,700-employee company and then step down.

Besides The Detroit News, the ENA also owns the Indio (Calif.) Daily News; Palm Springs (Calif.) Desert Sun; Milville (N.J.) Daily; Vineland (N.J.) Times-Journal, and four weekly newspapers.

The holdings also include television stations WDVM in Washington, D.C.; KOLD in Tucson, Ariz.; WALA in Mobile, Ala.; KVUE in Austin, Texas, and KTVY in Oklahoma City, as well as radio stations WWJ and WJOI, both in Detroit.

Neuharth said the two Detroit stations would have to be sold because of Federal Communications Commission regulations regarding competition.

Clark said ENA decided to seek a friendly buyer after Lear and Perenchio's offer, through their company, L.P. Media Inc., "visibly exposed the ENA to outside attention."

A meteoric rise in the price of ENA shares, from around $150 to $1,250 and above, "produced a problem for ENA shareholders," who found themselves suddenly in a position to trade in their shares for cash, he said.

L.P. Media spokeswoman Sima Nahum said the company had no immediate comment, adding that it has not ruled out increasing its bid.

Besides newspapers, Gannett owns six TV stations and 16 radio stations, as well as the Gannett Outdoor Advertising Group, which leases billboard space.

The Detroit News was founded in 1873 by James E. Scripps, who had come to the United States from Britain. He saw the newspaper as a "people's press," 3 cents cheaper than competing newspapers and filled with short news stories appealing to the working man.

Settlement approved in Gulf oil price suit

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has approved an out-of-court settlement in which Gulf Oil Corp., now part of Chevron Corp., agreed to pay its customers $142 million plus interest to settle a dispute over oil prices.

U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald also dismissed a lawsuit Gulf filed against the Department of Energy in a dispute over a government order requiring it to deliver oil to a small refinery in Alabama in 1979. Gulf claimed the refinery abused government regulations by turning around and selling the shipment to a major Gulf competitor.

McDonald's consent order Tuesday came after lawyers reached a negotiated package of settlements in a series of lawsuits involving Gulf, said John R. Knight, an attorney for the oil company.

Gulf was one of several major oil companies the Energy Department sued, alleging the firms violated regulations that dealt with allocations and oil prices. Those regulations were abolished when oil prices were decontrolled in early 1981.

McDonald's order also ended a suit Gulf filed against Marion Corp. and the Energy Department in 1982, three years after the federal government forced Gulf to sell more than $9 million worth of crude oil to Marion's Alabama refinery.

Under federal regulations then in effect, major oil companies were required to supply small refineries with crude oil if they were running short. Such regulations have since been rescinded.

Gulf alleged in its suit that Marion was not eligible under the regulations to receive the crude and that the smaller company abused the laws by forwarding the crude shipment to Exxon Corp, Marion's primary supplier.

The suit also claimed the Energy Department unfairly refused Gulf's demand that an equal amount of the oil shipped to Marion be returned.

Marion filed sought bankruptcy court protection from creditors shortly after Gulf filed its suit, according to court documents. Gulf claimed that action reduced its chances of collecting damages from Marion.

Revlon launches battle against takeover bid

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Revlon formally began its offer Thursday to buy back 26 percent of its own stock and disclosed details of the refinancing intended to burden the company with debt and thus repel the takeover bid of financier Ronald Perelman's Pantry Pride.

In a prospectus outlining a note swap that may be worth as much as $575 million, Revlon also offered its version of the encounters between Perelman and Revlon Chairman Michel C. Bergerec that preceded Pantry Pride's unfriendly offer.

In this recounting, Bergerac and Perelman met last June, but Bergerac gave no encouragement to Perelman's offer to buy the company at a per-share price in the low $40s. Bergerac said the company was not for sale and that the offer was for far less than the company was worth, the prospectus says.

According to Pantry Pride's version, as outlined in the prospectus for its $47.50-a-share tender offer, Bergerac was initially receptive to Perelman's inquiry and said a deal might be struck for a per-share price in the $50 range.

Revlon, a cosmetics and healthcare products maker, said the buyback offer and its intended sale of $250 million in assets will swell the company's debt to $942 million from its current $467 million. Equity, meanwhile, will drop to $560 million from $1 billion, as the purchase of up to 10 million Revlon shares reduces shareholders' investment in the concern.

As reported, Revlon plans to buy back the stock with notes and preferred stock that together have a face value of $57.50 per share. Revlon said its financial adviser, the investment banking concern of Lazard Freres & Co., believes the notes will trade at face value.

Donoghue's Money Fund Averages (tm) (Averages for all 259 taxable funds)		45	7.07	7.32

Yield columns represent: annualized total return to shareholders for past seven days and 7-day compounded (effective) rates of return. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. (r) -- restricted availability.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 259 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (R) of Holliston, Mass. 01746 decreased $597 million to $200.0 billion during the week ended Aug. 27, 1985. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 7.07 percent from 7.14 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average yield increased to 7.07 percent from 7.06 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity shortened one day to 45 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "Money fund asset activity was quiet this week as investors wait until after the holiday weekend before making financial decisions. The average maturity for all taxable money funds shortened by one day as many fund managers tightened the maturities of their funds' portfolios. The 7-day average yield for all taxable funds dropped to 7.07 percent from 7.14 percent due to lower yields reported by money funds that invest primarily in U.S. government securities. The 7-day average yield for government-only money funds dropped to 6.89 percent from 7.08 percent."

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Howard sees development activity

Two firms active in Moore field

From Staff Reports

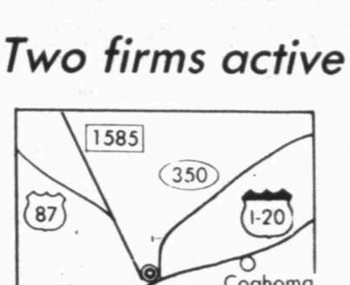

Eight wells have recently been completed in the Moore field of Howard County, just west of Big Spring. Six wells were completed by REPUBLIC MINERALS CORP. of Big Spring, and two by ENDURO OIL CO., INC. of Houston.

Republic potentialed the No. 16 C.R. Russell "A" to pump 15 barrels of 30.2 gravity crude, four Mcfd and 12.24 barrels of water through perforations 3,164 to 3,197 ft. Pay was topped at 3,161 ft.

In the same lease, Republic completed the No. 12 C.R. Russell "A" to pump 39.44 barrels of 30.2 gravity crude, 10 Mcfd and 44.08 barrels of water through perforations 3,167 to 3,196 ft. Pay was topped at 3,164 ft.

A third well in the C.R. Russell "A" lease, the no. 14, potentialed to pump 1.16 barrels of 29.9 gravity crude, three Mcfd and 150 barrels of water through perforations 3,169 to 3,204 ft. Pay was topped at 3,170 ft.

The No. 2 Houston Cowden "A" finaled to pump 9.69 barrels of 29.5 gravity crude, three Mcfd and 30 barrels of water through perforations 3,203 to 3,235 ft. Pay was topped at 3,201 ft.

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Republic completed two wells in the Wilkinson-Fierer "B" lease. The No. 10 Wilkinson-Fierer "B" potentialed to pump 35 barrels of 30.2 gravity crude, 9 Mcfd and 22.08 barrels of water through perforations 3,162 to 3,193 ft. Pay was topped at 3,141 ft.

The No. 12 Wilkinson-Fierer "B" was completed to pump 39.64 barrels of 30.2 gravity crude, eight Mcfd and 65 barrels of water through perforations 3,186 to 3,215 ft. Pay was topped at 3,082 ft.

Enduro completed two producers in the Moore field. The first, the No. 4 Ingram, potentialed to pump 19 barels of oil and 14 barrels of water through perforations 3,168 to 3,182 ft. Pay was topped at 3,082 ft.

The second producer, the No. 3 Quinn "E" potentialed to pump 45 barrels of 29 gravity crude, 30 barrels of water through perforations 3,252 to 3,270 ft. Pay was topped at 3,168 ft.

Snyder well finaled

WALSH AND WATTS, INC., Wichita Falls, completed the No. 40 Snyder "E" as a producer in the Snyder field of Howard County, pumping 30 garrels of 38 gravity crude and 76 barrels of water through perforations 2,963 to 3,075 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,000 gallons of 15 percent acid and fractured with 23,000 lbs. sand and 15,000 gallons gel.

Drilled to 3,315 ft., the well was plugged back to 3,302 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing is set.

The well topped the San Angelo at 2,580 ft. and the Clearfork at 2,900 ft. on ground elevation of 2,331 ft. Pay was topped at 2,963 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from south and 1,650 ft. from east lines of Section 21, Block 30, T-1-S, T&P survey, three miles southeast of Coahoma.

Varel producer tested

MWJ PRODUCING CO., Midland, has added a San Andres producer to the Varel field of Howard County with completion of the No. 4 Hall. The well potentialed to pump eight barrels of 28.4 gravity crude and 12 barrels of water through perforations 3,190 to 3,224 ft. The interval was acidized with 4,000 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 3,300 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 3,248 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,496 ft., include the Yates at 1,770 ft., Seven Rivers at 1,896, Queen at 2,410, Grayburg at 2,186, and the San Andres at 3,032 ft. Pay was topped at 3,190 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from south and 990 ft. from west lines of Section 13, Block 34, T-1-N, T&P, 10 miles west of Big Spring.

Union Texas reports Pakistan find

HOUSTON–(SWN)–Union Texas Petroleum and its partners report a natural gas discovery in the Badin area of southeast Pakistan, the group's fifth find in Pakistan this year.

Located about 100 miles east of Karachi, the Sonro No. 1 well was tested at a rate of 16.3 million cubic feet of gas daily on a one-inch choke with 880 pounds-per-square-inch flowing tubing pressure from a zone in the Cretaceous Lower Goru formation. The perforated zone was from 3,860 feet and 3,896 feet and gas gravity was 0.78.

Union Texas, as operator, has a 30 percent interest in the discovery. The remaining interest is held by Occidental Petroleum with a 30 percent interest and Oil and Gas Development Corporation, the Pakistani government-owned company, with 40 percent.

Texas American declares dividend

Texas American Energy Corp. has declared a 5 percent common stock dividend, payable September 30, 1985, to shareholders of record as of September 4, 1985, according to William F. Judd, president of the energy-related company.

The dividend will increase the number of common shares outstanding from 6,719,153 to a maximum of 7,055,110.

NRM to purchase common units

DALLAS–(SWN)–Natural Resource Management Corp., general partner of NRM Energy Company, L.P., has announced that NRM Energy plans to purchase as many as 500,000 of its Common Units on the open market or private transactions. James R. McNab, Jr., managing director and chief executive officer of Natural Resource Management Corp., stated:

"NRM Energy is conducting the Common Unit purchase program because management believes, in light of current market conditions, that the Common Units present a desirable purchase opportunity. By reducing the number of outstanding Common Units, the purchase will increase the amount of NRM Energy's oil and gas reserves per Common Unit.

In effect, this represents an attractive reserve acquisition for the remaining holders of Common Units. The purchases will be made from time to time in the open market and may take up to a year, but probably will be completed in the next six months."

All Common Units purchased will become authorized but unissued Common Units available for general partnership purposes.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

EE series savings bonds' interest tax-deferred

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Can you suggest an absolutely safe way for me to invest approximately $5,000 in something that will give me income in about five or six years? At the present time, my monthly income is $241 from Social Security and $490 from a mortgage I took back on a home I sold. I manage to save some of this, but I will need more income in the future. I would like something that is tax-deferred.

Doyle

A. U.S. Savings Bonds seem just right for you.

My suggestion is to buy Series EE bonds. Interest builds up on those bonds, tax-deferred. If you hold them for at least five years, the interest will accumulate at a variable rate — technically called a "market-based rate." You're guaranteed an interest buildup of at least 7.5 percent annually. But, unless interest rates in general fall, you'll get a higher variable rate.

Buy a bunch of $50 or $100 bonds, rather than a smaller number of large denomination bonds. Then, when you need money, you can cash one or a couple of bonds at a time. Doing that, you'll get back the price you paid for each bond, plus that interest that has accumulated on it.

That interest will be subject to federal income tax. However, you'll have deferred that tax bite until the EE bonds are redeemed.

Or, five years or more down the road, you might consider exchanging the EEs for Series HH bonds. By doing that, you'll postpone the tax on the accumulated EE bond interest until you redeem the HHs received in the exchange or until the HHs mature.

HHs pay taxable interest by check twice a year and will give you steady income. The interest on HHs now being issued is at a 7.5 percent annual rate.

U.S. Savings Bonds, of course, are direct obligations of our federal government. That makes them the absolutely safe investment you're looking for.

• • •

Q. Series EE U.S. Savings Bonds must be held for five years to qualify for the variable interest rate. After five years, is that variable rate retroactive to the bond's issue date, or does it start in the sixth year?

A. It's retroactive. More correctly, it will be retroactive for every EE and E bond that is at least five years old and has passed a semiannual interest accrual date on or after Nov. 1, 1987.

Confusing? You know it is, as are many things about the savings bond program. Let's try to boil it down.

If you buy an EE bond now, you'll have to hold it for at least five years to get the variable rate. If you bought an EE bond on or after Nov. 1, 1982, you must keep it for five years or longer to get the variable rate. If you bought an E or EE bond before Nov. 1, 1982, you have to hold it until Nov. 1, 1987, or its first interest accrual date following Nov. 1, 1987, to get the variable rate.

One big kicker. E bonds issued before November, 1947, will reach their final maturities before November, 1987, and will never receive the variable rate. The oldest E

United announces flight from Chicago to Austin

CHICAGO (AP) — United Airlines announced Wednesday it will operate an all-time high of 325 departures daily from Chicago's O'Hare International Airport beginning Oct. 1.

The company said the previous record high was 321 daily O'Hare departures in May, before a month-long strike by the airline's pilots severely curtailed operations.

The additional flights provide passengers with a greater selection of choices to the Florida markets of Fort Lauderdale, Fort Myers, Orlando, Sarasota and Tampa, the Chicago-based carrier said.

United also is reinstating a non-stop DC-10 flight to Maui, Hawaii, and adding flights to Austin, Texas; Charlotte, N.C.; Kansas City, Mo., and John F. Kennedy Airport in New York.

In addition, United will re-enter the Cleveland-Newark market with four daily round-trip flights, a spokesman said.

Lack of conviction seen until Labor Day

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market continues to show a lack of conviction, and many Wall Streeters figure the indecisiveness will last at least until Labor Day.

Some observers are even looking beyond the next few sessions and instead trying to determine which collective course the market might take after the Sept. 2 holiday.

In the meantime, one need only look at trading volume to see that many investors also have been willing to give the market less-than-full attention while the vacation season continues.

Daily trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange has failed to climb above 100 million shares for the past two weeks — the first time that has happened since the last two weeks of 1984.

"Labor Day is sometimes regarded as the beginning of the new business year," Eldon Grimm, senior vice president of Birr, Wilson & Co., wrote in his latest market letter. "Then the fantasies of summer disappear and the financial markets return to the cold facts of the real world."

But there are serious doubts about whether Wall Street can sort out the cold facts with any more conviction after Labor Day than it is doing now.

"People seem to be more confused now than they've ever been," said Charles Jensen, technical analyst at MKI Securities Corp. "We have so many conflicting signals coming down the pike it certainly would take more evidence in a consistent way to sway people to be either completely negative or positive. And the market is reflecting the confusion."

Many economists still think the economy will accelerate, albeit moderately, as the year progresses. But indicators lately have portrayed the economy as continuing to sputter, raising doubts about the expected recovery and frustrating the stock market.

This past week, for example, the Commerce Department said new factory orders for durable goods fell 2.8 percent in July, the biggest decline since March. Orders for non-defense capital goods alone, a gauge of future business investment plans, skidded 6.3 percent last month.

During the two days before the department's report, the stock market had mounted what many analysts considered a suspect advance. They viewed the rebound as largely technical and selective toward the blue chips and other market favorites.

It appeared they were right. After the durable goods report, the market again straddled the fence and surrendered most of the gains from the two previous sessions.

Still, when the week was over the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials had recorded its first weekly advance in five weeks, gaining 5.60 to 1,318.32.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index of all its common stocks rose 0.58 to 108.49, but the American Stock Exchange market value index slipped 0.04 to 231.65.

GM plans to close diesel engine plant

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. says it must close a diesel engine plant because of increasing imports from Japan and Europe and the ill effects of foreign competition on its customers.

Operations at GM's Detroit Diesel Allison division plant in the Detroit suburb of Romulus will be consolidated over the next two or three years with those at a plant in nearby Redford Township, GM said Wednesday.

Detroit Diesel Allison is a specialty maker of all sizes of diesel engines, outfitting them in about 1,000 configurations. Most of its engines are used in school buses, heavy trucks, earth-moving equipment and mining machines.

The closing will displace 1,370 workers. The division's engine, transmission and parts plants in Indianapolis, Muncie, Ind., and Moraine, Ohio, won't be affected, the company said.

"Some of those people will be moved to the Redford plant. Some who are surplus to DDA could be eligible for recall at one of the other 28 GM plants in the Detroit area," division spokesman John McCardle said.

The Romulus plant makes 8.2-liter diesel engines. The tooling for those engines will move to Redford.

"Many of the industries we have traditionally served, such as heavy construction, oil exploration and mining, have not recovered from their depressed levels of business," Ludvik Koci, general manager of Detroit Diesel Allison, said in a statement.

Houston firm buys Beverly Hills oil

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Texas oilmen who poked around this glitzy city of movie stars, moguls and megabucks found something they liked on the athletic field of Beverly Hills High School.

On Wednesday, Wainoco Oil Corp. of Houston announced it will buy the 16 oil wells on the field and leases on 400 acres in the heart of the city from Waverly Oil Co. of Los Angeles for $17 million.

The wells produce up to 1,500 barrels of oil a day and 1.1 million cubic feet of gas daily. Their estimated reserves are 3.5 million barrels of oil and 3.4 billion cubic feet of gas.

The oil and gas site is bordered on the west by Century City and on the east by Beverly Drive. Olympic Boulevard marks the south border and Elevado Avenue and Bedford Drive the north and northeast.

The area, known as Beverly Hills West Field, is a major source of revenue for the city and its school district. During its last fiscal year, Beverly Hills earned $1.6 million in royalties from the oil property and the school district reaped $1.3 million.

John B. Ashmun, president of Wainoco, said the purchase will double the Houston company's oil reserves and daily oil production.

"In addition, we believe that there is significant potential for development and exploration under Waverly Beverly Hills West Field leases," Ashmun said in a statement without elaborating.

Under the agreement, subject to approval by directors of both companies, Wainoco will pay $13.5 million in cash and $3.5 million in company stock for Waverly's oil and gas properties.

Waverly, owned by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., First Interstate Bank of Denver and Bank of California, was formed last November by bank creditors of Beverly Hills Oil Co.

That company, founded more than 25 years ago, had earlier filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code when it was unable to make loan payments to two banks and ran up $40 million in debts.

ClayDesta Center Downtown expected to open in October

David Jones, president and chief executive officer of ClayDesta National Bank, has announced that the ClayDesta Center Downtown, formerly the Gulf Building, is expected to open sometime between Oct. 1 and Oct. 15.

The bank has been aggressively seeking oil and gas loans, Jones said, and the downtown facility will give downtown customers a more convenient depository and access to lenders.

The bank will occupy the first floor of the ClayDesta Center Downtown once the $2.5 million renovation is complete.

MCHD board OKs three percent hike in ad valorum tax

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District's board of directors approved an increase in ad valorum taxes and accepted a proposed 1985-1986 budget at Thursday afternoon's monthly meeting.

The budget, which includes Midland Memorial Hospital, MCHD, Midland Medical and Surgical Building (a recent purchase by MCHD) and West Texas Pathology Laboratory, reflects a general increase in some costs, particularly indigent care, which is expected to increase by three percent from fiscal year 1984-1985 and a governmental freeze on Medicare rates.

MMH Vice President of Finance Ron Peterson told the MCHD board of trustees that the Medicare reimbursement rate freeze "would have an affect on us" and that some change in Medicaid reimbursement methodology is also anticipated.

Following approval of the budget, the directors discussed and approved a tax hike for Midland's property owners of three percent for the next fiscal year.

The increase, will levy 6.53 cents per $100 valuation for Midand residents, up from 6.34 cents per $100 valuation during the current fiscal year. Tax revenues are expected to increase by the end of fiscal year 1986 by $118,065 from the end of the current fiscal year.

The three percent tax hike is the maximum the board could approve, according to attorney Ted Kerr, without holding a public hearing. MMH President Ray Branson, told the directors that "the three percent increase produces a bottom line amount with which to operate the district."

"If we had needed more, we would have brought it up before the board regardless of the need for a public meeting," he said.

Indigent care expenses were partially blamed for the increase, with both Tevis Herd, president of the board of directors, and director Dr. Walter Parks, indicating the problem was one of the largest expenses in statements during the meeting. The proposed budget anticipated a three percent increase in indigent care expenses over the fiscal year 1984-1985 budget.

In a monthly financial report to the board of trustees, Peterson stated that July "had been an exceptional month" for the hospital, with the financial position of MMH continuing to be strong.

Peterson attributed the favorable report in part to an unexpected rise in patient days from the same time last year.

"The most exciting point is that the census did not drop in July as has occurred in previous years," he told board members.

Peterson also reported that the new budget anticipates a two percent increase in patient days during the coming fiscal year.

Also discussed briefly at the board of trustees meeting was the possibility of adding luxury suites to MMH for V.I.P.'s.

"We've been working with a decorator to come up with private suites," said Branson, as he stood before several contemporary and traditional displays.

He indicated that the suites could be located in the east wing on the fourth floor after current construction and remodeling is completed.

"We used to have the V.I.P. rooms prior to the 1978 construction program," he said. "It was in demand and we want to re-implement that program."

One spokesman said that several well-known Midlanders had stayed at the suites over the years, including one who had stayed there during the remaining years of his life.

A presentation by Rauscher, Pierce, Refsnes, Inc. on bond financing, was also given at the trustees meeting. Members listened as a representative from the firm hired to handle re-financing of bonds for the hospital, discussed the pros and cons of re-financing — including the problem of paying off bonds not yet called in — and presented a calender through the bonds' closing in October.

The board approved the advance refunding and offering statement from the firm.

Several expenditures were approved by directors following the tax and budget approval.

Included were, $176,605 for routine construction payments, $137,591 for nursing equipment, $194,000 for construction equipment, $100,283 for indigent care patients in Fort Worth, two bills for election costs and $2,000 in letgal fees.

Also discussed and approved were two IBM computer systems at $14,000 for West Texas Pathology Laboratory and planning and marketing purchased from Computerland, $192,000 for a new CCU monitoring system (to be partially financed by the Midland Memorial Auxilliary), a new microgrill for the surgery room, $9,750 for a monitor recorder in the recovery room, $17,100 for window hardware and decoration, $50,900 for a surgical/neo-natal monitor for the new nursery, $7,150 for surgical generators in the delivery areas and the purchase of phototherapy equipment.

Woman on trial for injury to a child

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

A 35-year-old Midland woman charged with injury to a child sat in the 142nd District courtroom Thursday and shook her head with disgust as a 15-year-old girl accused her of throwing Drano in the girl's face.

Christi Harris is accused of throwing the caustic solution at Terry Willingham, who was then 14, outside the girl's home at 1201 S. Connell St. after a May 18 fight between members of two neighboring south Midland families.

According to Ms. Willingham, the incident resulted from a longstanding feud between her family and Ms. Harris and her 15-year-old daughter Nicki. The origin of the feud, she testified, was Nicki Harris' alleged interest in the common-law husband of Terry Willingham's sister Laurie.

"Before she (Ms. Harris) poured the bucket on me, she said, 'Now I'll teach you not to mess with me,'" said Ms. Willingham, who admitted having hit Ms. Harris several times during a melee between the two families which occurred shortly before the Drano incident.

"I hit Christi 'cause she hit my mama," she said.

Ms. Willingham told the seven-man, five-woman jury the Drano scarred her on the elbow, chest and leg, and her vision is blurred "whenever I'm watching TV or sitting in the dark."

"It really hurt really bad," she said.

Under cross-examination, the 15-year-old grew petulant as defense attorney Allen McFall pointed out several contradictions between her testimony and the statement she gave police the day after the incident.

"I made a mistake, OK?" she responded sharply at one point. McFall asked if she'd made any other mistakes in her testimony.

"I don't know," she replied.

The contradiction which most interested McFall was Ms. Willingham's statement to police that Nicki, not Christi, had brought the bucket of Drano out of the Harris house.

"When I said 'Nicki,' I probably meant 'Christi,'" she said under redirect questioning from Administrative Assistant District Attorney Tom Morgan.

Among other prosecution witnesses Thursday were the doctor who treated Ms. Willingham in the Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room, and a man who was visiting a family down the street when the incident occurred.

Dr. Robert L. Stafford testified that Ms. Willingham was "hysterical, in fact we had to forcibly restrain her" to treat her eyes. And he parried McFall's suggestion that the girl's prognosis was "good" if her treatment was prompt: "It depends on the chemical, particularly if it's a caustic substance."

Gary Hale of Andrews, the man who was visiting a family several trailer houses away the evening of May 18, said he saw two black women arguing with "two or three" white women and a black man (apparently Tyrone Wright, the brother of Ms. Willingham's brother-in-law).

"The older black woman is the one who threw the stuff," said Hale.

Ms. Harris is black; Ms. Willingham is white.

If convicted of intentionally or knowingly causing serious bodily injury or serious mental or physical deficiency to Ms. Willingham, Ms. Harris faces a first-degree felony punishment range of five to 99 years or life in prison and up to a $10,000 fine, because the victim was 14 at the time of the incident.

But if the jury finds Ms. Willingham's injuries were not serious, Ms. Harris would face only a third-degree felony range if convicted — two to 10 years and up to a $5,000 fine. And if they find she acted recklessly instead of intentionally, she would face only a Class A misdemeanor punishment.

Testimony was to continue this morning with Tyrone Wright and Ms. Willingham's mother, Rebecca Brockington, expected to be called to the stand.

State appeals halt on tests of teachers

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Thursday appealed a federal judge's order requiring it to stop using a basic skills test given to prospective school teachers.

The attorney general's office asked the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to block a preliminary injunction issued Tuesday by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

Elna Christopher, spokeswoman for Attorney General Jim Mattox, said the request was filed with the New Orleans court Thursday afternoon.

The temporary injunction Justice issued says college students must be allowed to take education courses even if they haven't passed the standardized Pre-Professional Skills Test. Justice said he would rule later on the validity of the test.

Clearing brush could help sweep out water woes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Clearing West Texas of its brush could be additional insurance to a future water supply for the citizens, according to State Sen. Bill Sims, who spoke to the Midland League of Women Voters Thursday evening.

The state senator outlined changes made by the last session of the State Legislature during his talk at the Coors Building on West Highway 80. He focused also on the water package, tying it in with brush control legislation that he supports.

The two-part water package will go before the voters in November for adoption. Sims explained that Proposition 1 calls for issuing $900 million in bonds to keep the water clean, while Proposition 2 would allow the state to issue $200 million in bonds for agricultural conservation research.

Proposition 1 also would allow underground water districts to be set up across the state in an effort to get better control of the water. Sims said New Mexico controls the water in that state and residents can't drill for a water well without a permit.

"If there were more water districts it would show we're more concerned. West Texas is very fortunate. It has the best underground water in the state," he said, citing the Ogallala, Edwards and Trinity aquifers. And construction of Stacy Dam and Reservoir will add a better quality of drinking water to West Texas supplies, according to Sims.

But at the same time that Stacy will ensure a water supply for the future of West Texas, Sims called for support of the Texas Brush Control Act. He explained that mesquite, juniper and salt cedar — called collectively "brush" — use a tremendous amount of water. "Mesquite will use approximately 120 million acre feet of water a year," he said.

Meanwhile, the next generation's water needs will be 10 million acre feet of water a year more than what is being used today, according to Sims. To illustrate how much water mesquite uses, the legislator said a scientist at Texas A&M had discovered a mesquite with a root 180 feet long.

"Think of the amount of water lost to mesquite," he said.

Sims said under the Brush Control Act, the state would find an area where recharge is known to occur, such as in the Edwards Aquifer. About 1½ million acres could be cleared of brush in a controlled manner and that would leave more water for future drinkers.

Such a plan has been used by some West Texas ranchers for several years. Sims said some ranchers along a dried-up creek known as Rocky Creek cleaned up about 60,000 acres of land. The creek, which hadn't flowed since about 1930, suddenly began flowing again and it hasn't stopped since, according to Sims.

Clearing the land of mesquite is a difficult task when the federal government won't allow chemicals to be used, he said. But some help may be coming from Dow Chemical in the future. The company is waiting for approval to sell a new chemical that has proven to have 80 percent root kill, he said. Previous chemical compounds had about a 25-30 percent root kill.

When clearing the brush, it should be done according to a plan that would leave strips 20-50 feet wide to allow refuge for wildlife, Sims added.

In his references of Stacy Dam, Sims referred several times to a "little snake" that could stop the project. When questioned, he explained it is the Concho River Snake that is about 12-18 inches long and lives in the area proposed for Stacy Dam, about 25 miles southeast of Ballinger. "He's not endangered, he's not even threatened," said Sims. "But the Department of the Interior is concerned there's not enough to propogate the species."

If the Interior Department rules the snake is endangered, the action could delay construction of Stacy Dam, which is proposed to be ready by 1990, he said.

Concerning the lawsuit filed Thursday by the Texas State Teachers Association against the requirement they must take a competency test, Sims remarked, "It's strange they sued before they took the test. The question I have is whether the state has the right to take a lifetime teaching certificate away from a person."

Of the bills passed by the Legislature, the San Angelo rancher-businessman said he opposed the indigent care bill. Theoretically, it sounds good, he said. But in reality, "it's a bad deal. It will break some counties." The hospitals which provide health care to indigents need some monetary help, Sims said. But he would have preferred if another way to fund them had been found.

Out of a $37 billion budget for the next two years, education will be taking half of that, or $19.2 billion. Of that, $11.5 billion is designated for public schools while $7.7 billion will go to higher education. He supported the increase in college tuition, saying Texas had been 50th on the list of tuition costs in the country.

Prisons will be getting $950 million for the biennium, which is a sizeable increase over the $600-plus million in the last budget, he said. "I'm still not convinced the hanging tree should have gone out," Sims joked.

The oil and gas industry wasn't affected much by the Legislature. And the agriculture industry was lucky this time, he said. "The Legislature forgot about us."

District attorney chasing felony hot check writers

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

There's a boom in felony hot checks in Midland County.

"We're getting the big ones now," said District Attorney's Investigator Dewey Lee.

Evidence of that is a recent $10,837.12 check which bounced on a closed bank account in Odessa and ended up in the district attorney's office after the merchant, a Midland oilfield pipe supplier, had accepted the check from an Odessa couple in exchange for pipe.

In that case, the wife, 31, had "dropped the check" on the merchant and picked up the pipe.

The incident, commonly called a "hot-check" scheme, by law is "theft" and could net the perpetrator a prison sentence or at least probation and a fine.

"She and her husband were kind of pipe brokers," Lee said. "They sold the pipe in Dallas and insisted that they be paid on a (bank) wire transfer. They were smarter than our people here. They made sure they got their money."

Lee said he didn't know how much money the couple got for selling the stolen pipe.

"You can bet they made a profit. If she sold it for half (the purchase) price, she made a profit."

In that case, the Odessa couple was "smart enough" to know when to buy the pipe: on the weekend or late afternoon when the bank was closed and the seller couldn't verify the check's validity.

Lee noted the Permian Basin oilfield business virtually is set up for such a scheme.

"It's been a trusting business throughout the years," he said.

Lee noted that it "ain't nothing" for deals — transactions — to be made by handshakes or telephone calls.

"Unfortunately, it's still that way, and it makes it easy for them (schemers) to prey on merchants."

Lee's chief function under District Attorney Al Schorre is to collect felony hot checks — checks for $750 or more — used to commit theft.

Through the first seven months of this year, Lee has collected $158,000 from writers of hot checks and forwarded the money to the cheated merchants.

"Every check we accept we work to the end," said Lee. "We either collect the money or we file (a criminal complaint). We don't just stack them back. We don't box them up and send them out to the barn." He noted that a complaint has been filed against the Odessa woman who wrote the $10,837.12 check and that a warrant has been issued for her arrest. "She'll turn up," he said. "We're patient."

Lee gave assurance that the district attorney's office does "everything we can to help the merchants claim the money" they've lost to hot-check writers.

"The DA's office is not just a collection agency," he said. "We are prosecutors first and foremost, and we will prosecute. Either they pay or we will prosecute."

Schorre agreed.

"We try to help the merchants if we can," said the prosecutor. "Our main emphasis is on felony prosecution."

"People who pass felony hot checks are fooling themselves if they think the district attorney won't prosecute," Lee said. "That's a fact."

The 54-year-old investigator noted the slowdown in the economy has resulted in a surge of hot checks.

"Businesses are writing other businesses hot checks," he said. In cases, building contractors are writing suppliers hot checks.

Felony thefts by checks are committed to buy cars, furniture, building supplies, merchandise, contract labor and other supplies, equipment and services.

"The way the economy is now with the layoffs," he said, "check writing goes up. Everything slows down. The economy has slowed down. People are losing their jobs."

Lee noted that "so many merchants wind up eating" contract-labor checks and payroll checks which turned sour due to the economic downturn.

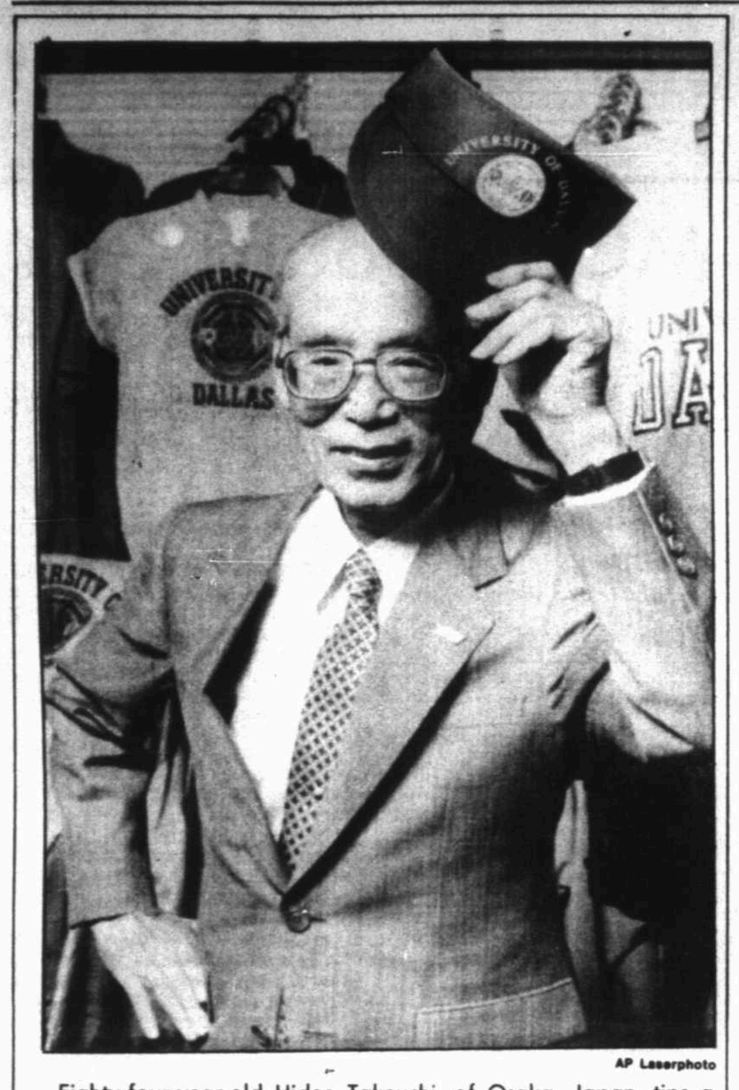

Once he gets hot checks to collect on, Lee contacts the writers by letter, telephone or in person to get restitution. Many pay up. Others don't.

"Strange as it may seem," he said, "when you file a (criminal) complaint on them, they come up with the money for bond and find the money to pay off the checks.

"They come up with the money from somewhere. Before that, they (often) ignore the phone calls and letters. They make promises....We bend over backward in trying to work with people on checks."

TSTA files suit to halt teacher testing

AUSTIN (AP) — Efforts by the Texas State Teachers Association to halt planned competency testing of teachers who are already certified brought quick criticism from high state officials.

"I think the suit will fail," said Gov. Mark White. "I don't think they have a leg to stand on.'

The suit, filed Thursday in an Austin state district court, contends the teacher testing provision of the 1984 major public school reform act is unconstitutional and asks an injunction.

"The main goal of this suit is to stop the indictment of over 200,000 educators simply because some people suspect there may be a few incompetents within the profession," TSTA President Charles Beard of Beaumont told a Capitol news conference.

But White countered that the tests would be "imposed in a fair way. They are not going to be difficult for people who are literate.

"I think you will find it will be an encouragement and give pride to people in the profession," White said.

Jon Brumley of Fort Worth, chairman of the State Board of Education, said he believed the basic skills test on reading and writing to be given first in March 1986 would be upheld by the courts.

"It is unfortunate that the TSTA is concentrating its efforts on trying to block a test that will no nothing but improve the public image of the teaching profession while weeding out a very small percentage of Texas educators who do not possess the basic skills necessary to provide a quality education to our children," Brumley said in a statement.

State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby estimated that 95 percent of Texas' teachers would pass the competency test with "flying colors."

The Texas Federation of Teachers Union said last week it approved the competency test.

The competency test was mandated by the major public school reform act passed in the 1984 special legislative session. It requires all certified teachers and administrators to pass a basic skills test by June 30, 1986.

"Texas teachers are angry at the prospect that a single paper and pencil test will determine whether or not they will remain in the profession after years of dedicated and effective service," said Beard, the TSTA president.

He added that others were apprehensive about the "unfair thrust of losing their retirement and health insurance benefits they have earned in the course of many years of dedicate service."

Beard said TSTA has long contended that "on-site observations with written or oral evaluations are the only effective means of assuring quality teaching."

Kirby disagreed.

"Unfortunately, the existing system was not doing the job in eliminating those few teachers, so the legislators had to take steps to ensure public confidence in the teaching profession by mandating the basic skills teat," Kirby said in a statement.

"We are well aware that we have a shortage of teachers in Texas," Kirby said, "but we have no vacancies in our classrooms for teachers who cannot adequately read and write."

DEATHS

Dr. Lewis W. Tanner

Graveside Services for Dr. Lewis W. Tanner will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at Resthaven Memorial Park. Arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday following a brief illness.

Freshman, 84, says not too late to learn

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press

IRVING (AP) — When Hideo Takeuchi reached the youthful age of 62, he took up the study of spoken English. Now 84, he has become the oldest student at the University of Dallas.

He won a year-long scholarship to the small private school by winning an English oratory contest at the Tennoji English Academy in Osaka, Japan, his native country.

"It was held in Aspire Hall," he said Thursday. "Quite appropriate."

The title of his speech was "It's Never Too Late To Learn."

"I studied only by myself," he said. "By reading and memorizing many words, phrases and fundamental expressions or watching TV or listening to radio. I have no foreign friends and my business has nothing to do with English."

His first day on campus went at a breakneck pace that Takeuchi seemed to find completely agreeable.

He was interviewed by reporters. He posed for pictures in the campus bookstore, chatting with fellow students all the while. He registered for classes. And he dropped in at one of the many area malls, engaging shoppers in animated conversation.

His escort is 60 years his junior. But Taito Nakagawa, a native of Osaka and a senior at the university, said he couldn't keep up with the man he calls "Pops."

"He doesn't need me," Nakagawa said. "He just needs my car."

Takeuchi said it was difficult to leave his hometown of Kakogawa, a city west of Osaka, for a year-long stay Dallas. His family was reluctant for him to undertake the journey at his age.

"They asked me not to go so far. But my desire was very severe. So they allowed me to come here," he said.

He smiled and smoothed his tie with a slender hand.

"I am an unkind husband. I left my wife alone at home."

Aside from a 40-day tour of Europe, this is Takeuchi's first trip abroad. He hopes to refine what he calls his "practical" English and plans to audit courses rather than taking them for credit.

Takeuchi said his studies keep his mind limber.

Some elderly Japanese while their hours away at mah-jongg, he said. ("They play all through the night.") But Takeuchi was intrigued by learning to speak English.

He sat for numerous English language examinations, savoring the challenge.

"I think we can get healthy when we study, when we have some object to pursue," said Takeuchi, a professional nutritionist.

He laughs, then quotes the title of his prize-winning speech: "It's never too late to learn!"

Takeuchi was born in 1901 in Himeji City, about 100 kilometers west of Osaka. He worked for one of Japan's leading textile manufacturers for 23 years until he reached the mandatory retirement age of 55.

After retiring from the textile business, he became managing director of the Better Diet Association of Hyogo Prefecture, a government agency in Kobe that promotes good nutrition.

Takeuchi said he used to study English while commuting by train from Kakogawa to Kobe every day.

He will live on campus during his stay in Dallas. And he said he hopes to get involved in some senior citizen organizations in his spare time.

Takeuchi appears to be a man with a mission.

"I will try to promote the relationship between the United States and Japan in a private form," he said, grabbing his walking stick, donning his cap and heading off to his next appointment. "How do you say it? Ah, yes. Person to person."

District attorney to testify in probe of Beaumont judge

BEAUMONT (AP) — District Attorney James McGrath, considered a material witness in a grand jury probe of a state district judge, was removed as prosecutor in that case by another district judge.

Criminal District Judge Larry Gist removed McGrath at the request of a grand jury on Thursday. Gist said he would appoint a special prosecutor to the case investigating State District Judge James Farris.

Farris is accused by Colorado lawyer Martin Blitstein of withholding a court document from him.

McGrath claims he is not a material witness in the case, but Curtis Tomplait, the grand jury foreman, said on the witness stand that he and the other grand jurors believe McGrath is a material witness.

"The consensus is that McGrath and Blitstein talked about the case before notifying anyone," Tomplait said.

McGrath had no comment when reached by The Associated Press.

Assistant District Attorney Lavon Jones, representing McGrath, said that under state law, a special prosecutor can be appointed only in three instances — disqualification of the district attorney, his inability or his absence. Jones says none of the stipulations applies to McGrath.

"He must decide under the code of professional conduct whether he will proceed," Jones said. "It is not the court's function to make that determination."

Blitstein has accused Farris of withholding a certified Colorado court order from him in a domestic relations case.

Farris, his clerk, Diane Wheat, and District Clerk John Appleman have denied withholding any documents from Blitstein.

Farris had agreed to handle the case for an absent domestic relations judge. He said he found the case file incomplete and rescheduled it until the file was complete.

Blitstein, however, contends the court document was complete and therefore approached McGrath about filing a complaint against the district judge.

McGrath said he refused to accept a complaint against Farris and suggested that Blitstein instead file a complaint with the state Judicial Conduct Commission. He said Blitstein insisted on filing a complaint with the grand jury.

"That's as far as we would go," McGrath said. But, a week later, Farris and Blitstein went to the grand jury.

Dutchover found guilty in robbery

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 161st District Court jury today will set punishment for 18-year-old Larry M. Dutchover, found guilty late Thursday of the armed robbery of Harrigan's Restuarant in Odessa last February.

The jury deliberated nearly five hours to return a verdict of guilty for Dutchover, who also is charged with two other robberies during the month pf February. Three other individuals have also been indicted in connection with the robberies of the Whataburger Restaurant on E. 8th Street twice last February and the robbery of Harrigan's.

Judge Tryon Lewis recessed the Dutchover trial about 6:30 p.m. Thursday, instructing jurors to return to court at 9 a.m. today to hear evidence and final arguments in the punishment phase of the trial. Deliberations on sentencing were expected to begin before noon.

Gold chips missing at TI

From Staff Reports

Several employees of Texas Instruments were scheduled to undergo lie-detector tests Thursday after 10,000 gold chips worth $1,700 turned up missing, according to sheriff's office reports.

The chips were taken from a safe sometime between Aug. 16 and Aug. 18. The company, located on Interstate 20 and FM 1788, had compiled a list of possible suspects, and was bringing in the polygraph equipment Thursday, reports said.

In other reports, Uben Natividad, 1102 S. Main, reported the loss of a $315 cassette stereo and a $250 television in a burglary which occurred sometime between Aug. 20 and Thursday, reports said.

The First Mexican Baptist Church, 505 N. Tyler, reported the loss of a $400 component for its public-address system in a burglary which occurred sometime between Wednesday night and Thursday morning, reports said.

The Midland Independent School District reported the loss of 30 "San Jacinto" jackets taken from the junior high school sometime between June and Aug. 15. The jackets were worth a total of $875, reports said.

Billy Maddox, 1809 E. Magnolia, reported the loss of $450 worth of tools and auto parts in a burglary which occurred sometime between Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning, reports said.

Drugs found when alarm sounds

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 28-year-old woman, charged on two drug possession counts, was released from the Ector County Jail late Thursday after posting $10,000 in bonds.

Cheryl Ann Womack, 2416 Bob White, was arrested by Odessa police late Thursday afternoon after responding to a silent burglar alarm at the residence and finding substances believed to be cocaine and marijuana in plain sight.

Officers S.R. Lyle and A.L. Nalley, arriving at the scene, found the garage door and the door to the residence unlocked. The alleged illicit substances were found in a northeast bedroom as officers searched to determine if a burglary was in progress. The woman was arrested as she returned home shortly after 5 p.m.

Twenty-nine-year old arrested on indecency with child charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Armed with an arrest warrant, issued by Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly Thursday night, Odessa police arrested a 29-year-old man on the charge of indecency with a child.

A probable cause affidavit filed by Detective Roger Toles, seeking the warrant, alleged the man exposed himself to an 11-year-old boy and committed an indecent act, while attempting to entice the boy into doing the same thing.

The arrest occur at a residence in the 2200 block of [illegible]ky Lane about 10:30 p.m. Thursday.

Man, wife arrested in burlgary

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 22-year-old man and his 20-year-old wife were arrested by Odessa police late Thursday afternoon on charges of burglary of a building in connection with the theft of nearly $7,000 worth of household appliances from mobile homes at Larry Spruill's repossessed home storage lot, 2327 E. 2nd Street.

The Monahans couple was to be arraigned in municipal court this morning on formal charges of burglary of a building.

The man and woman were apprehended about 3:30 p.m. Thursday on Interstate 20 West near the intersection of Farm-to-Market 866 after they had sold a refrigerater allegedly taken in the burglary to an Odessa furniture dealer.

Family seeks donations for girl

From Staff Reports

The family of 3-year-old Rebecca Joy Stacy is requesting local donations to help pay medical expenses following a freak accident involving a tricycle and child's bow and arrow set that critically injured the youth two weeks ago.

She remained in satisfactory condition Thursday at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Rebecca is the daughter of Bobby and Joy Stacy of Midland, granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Miller, 3112 Kessler, and great-granddaughter of former Midlander Alta Mae Williamson. The family claims to be without health insurance and unable to pay medical expenses.

Contributions may be sent to MMH's pediatrics division, 2200 W. Illinois Ave. In addition, a fund has been set up at RepublicBank First National Midland. Donations may be sent to Lobby Service Staff, Valerie Fields, Account 3130827.

San Antonio clinic to test AIDS vaccine

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Scientists at the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research say they are ready to begin testing a preliminary version of an AIDS vaccine on rabbits and mice and hope to use primates this year.

The research has resulted in the laboratory synthesis of two proteins, called peptides, found on the surface of the AIDS virus, said Gordon Dreesman, director of virology and immunology at the foundation.

"We are looking forward to testing in chimpanzees, I would suspect, by about November," Dreesman said Wednesday. Tests are financed by an $89,887 grant from the National Institutes of Health.

Dreesman said scientists hope the proteins, similar in structure to the AIDS virus, will make the body produce antibodies to defend itself against the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"We can take it and innoculate a chimp with the peptides and then challenge the chimp with the AIDS virus," he said. "We can see if they (the peptides) can prevent this infection."

Chimps, he said, do not show visible signs of AIDS infection, but invasion of the virus can be detected by studying the animal's white blood cells.

Dreesman disputed claims by other researchers and physicians that a vaccine likely will take decades to develop. "We do things in a couple of months that used to take us 10 years," he said.

Head of Guatemalan university struggles just to survive

By JAMES LeMOYNE
New York Times News Service

GUATEMALA CITY — The rector of the University of San Carlos here is out to set an unusual record. He would like to be the first head of the school to finish a term in office since 1978.

But the rector, Dr. Eduardo Meyer Maldonado, is aware that it may not be an easy task. Overseeing Guatemala's national university has proved to be a high-risk occupation of late, as political violence, much of it government-directed, has swept the country.

The last two heads of the school were shot dead, in 1981 and 1983. Another former rector fled into exile, fearing for his life. Six weeks ago, Maldonado's possible successor and close friend, Dr. Edgar Leiva, was also killed, shot twice while walking to a morning class on campus.

A surgeon and a teacher, as well as the head of the university, Meyer himself narrowly escaped death in 1983 when gunmen opened fire on his car, shattering a window. He escaped, he says, by ramming his assailants' vehicle and speeding away.

"It's part of what you need to know how to do," he said with a smile, much as an American college president might discuss the slightly bothersome necessity of meeting alumni associations or attending fund-raising dinners.

The last of more than 20 death threats Meyer says he has received arrived last week. It was a polite missive that ended with the words, "You will pay with your life as was the case with your predecessor."

In the last two years, according to university records, at least 36 students and 10 teachers have been killed or have disappeared, 12 of them in the last six months. The police have not solved a single case, Meyer said. Several students attributed the attacks to government security forces.

Such violence has become an accepted part of life in Guatemala, where a strongly conservative army and a Marxist guerrilla movement have warred for years and where the military appears to have killed many thousands of people in an effort to quash any challenge to its authority.

In the midst of the repression, the national university has become a center of political resistance to Guatemala's military regime, a haven for young leftists and one of the few spots where the country's future is openly debated.

Political solution may be near for Northern Ireland

By MARK S. SMITH

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Beneath the surface of turmoil, the pace is quickening toward a new political deal in Northern Ireland.

Britain and the Republic of Ireland are in the final stages of talks that both sides hope will yield an important step in healing 16 years of sectarian bitterness.

The aim is a written agreement giving the Irish government in Dublin a formal consultative role in the running of Northern Ireland, which officially is the British province of Ulster, and in protecting the rights of the Roman Catholic minority. It also would assure Ulster's Protestant majority that their future as part of the United Kingdom is secure.

"It is not an easy one...but that is the objective," Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain said in a recent TV interview. "We are making progress. (But) we have not yet reached a conclusion."

Both sides have set the goal of a written agreement for Mrs. Thatcher and Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald of Ireland to initial this fall. Any agreement would then go to the British and Irish Parliaments for approval and perhaps to a referendum in both Ulster and the Irish republic.

"(It is) make-up-your-mind time," FitzGerald said recently. "The British have to make up their minds and we have to make up our minds."

The prospect of a role for Dublin in Northern affairs gladdens most Northern and Southern Catholics, who would prefer a united Ireland but oppose the Irish Republican Army's violent campaign to sever Ulster from Britain and create an all-Ireland socialist union.

BUT THE prospect infuriates most Northern Protestants. They warn of dire consequences, ranging from an upsurge in Protestant extremism to a province-wide general strike, like the one in 1974 that brought the collapse of Britain's attempt to share power between Protestant and Catholic communities.

Both London and Dublin agree that a pact will not mean Britain will have to give up its sovereignty over Ulster.

"Nothing must be done that infringes British sovereignty. That is the line that has to be drawn," Nicholas Scott, parliamentary undersecretary in Britain's Northern Ireland Office and No. 2 man in the province, told The Associated Press in an interview.

He said both governments are committed "to establish a relationship that will bring practical results on the security front and allow the government in Dublin...if necessary (to) speak up for the nationalist minority in Northern Ireland."

"I think both governments realize there would be substantial penalties to be paid for a failure in this round of talks."

ON SECURITY, the British are looking for a structure, perhaps a joint commission, in which government ministers and security chiefs from both Britain and Ireland would map strategy in the fight against terrorism, Scott added. The IRA and other paramilitary groups are outlawed on both sides of the Irish border.

Scott said a way is being sought to formalize an advisory role for Dublin in Ulster affairs.

"At the moment, (Irish ministers) have no choice but to express their concerns after the fact," he said. "If there's a structured way they can express their concerns in advance and they can be taken account of in good faith, that would be for the good."

That notion has outraged the two main Protestant parties. In July the mainline Official Unionists and the Rev. Ian Paisley's hardline Democratic Unionists formed a united front to fight any accord.

Even a consultative role "is a contradiction of the assertion of sovereignty," James Molyneaux, leader of the Official Unionists and a member of the British Parliament, said in an interview.

"Would not the good citizens of America object if the American government accorded to the government of Mexico a consultative role in the affairs of Texas?"

Molyneaux added that if London goes ahead, elected representatives will soon "be replaced by paramilitaries. That's the reality."

That kind of rejectionist view was what inspired the British-Irish talks in the firt place.

EAMON HANNA, general secretary of Ulster's main Catholic party, the Social Democratic and Labor Party, agrees it's time London and Dublin sorted things out.

"Northern Ireland politicians are trapped," he said in an interview. "They are trapped by history."

His party could benefit from an agreement.

Allie Nelson, 86, tosses hay to part of her herd of cattle in a pasture on her ranch near the West Texas community of Lohn. Ms. Nelson bought the ranch at age 68, just before she retired from teaching. She works the 800-acre ranch full time.

Retired teacher manages, owns 800-acre ranch

LOHN, Texas (AP) — Octogenarian Allie Nelson, who looks dainty and fragile as Victorian lace, owns and manages an 800-acre ranch at Lohn, north of Brady.

How does an 86-year-old woman round up a herd of 50 lumbering polled Herefords?

"I drive my pickup to the pasture and honk. They come right up. I throw hay out the back of the truck." Mrs. Nelson's voice was soft. She had to catch her breath often; her tiny hands fluttered. Her nails were painted red.

OK, how about corraling the half-ton critters?

"They just follow me into the corral," she said.

How does she load them up for market?

"My goodness, the commercial men do that."

Mrs. Nelson retired from teaching school when she was 68. For Mrs. Nelson, the sunset years signaled a new career. The high school biology teacher had purchased the ranch a year before she retired. She fully expected to make the ranch a paying concern, and she has done so, she said.

"Oh, heck, I'd been too active in my life. I couldn't sit down. I'd go crazy."

Last year a pet goat butted Mrs. Nelson. She fell to the ground and broke her hip. She spent eight weeks recovering in a convalescent home. "I nearly went nuts in the nursing home. I have to be out doing things."

Mrs. Nelson has recovered fully from that accident. She walks carefully, with a lop-sided gait.

Mrs. Nelson's home reflects an inquiring mind. A stone fireplace is filled with rocks she picked up through the Southwest, such as turquoise, quartz and geodes. "My friends brought me rocks, too," she said.

Indian baskets made of yucca woven by the Papago Indians hang on the walls. Mrs. Nelson taught on their reservation near Tuscon, Ariz., shortly before she retired.

A collection of silver souvenir spoons are in a case. A small, framed ivory fan, a memento of Mrs. Nelson's childhood, hangs on the wall beside her bed.

When Mrs. Nelson bought the ranch, she purchased a half-Shetland pony named Bruno to ride to the fields. "I thought I needed a horse to round up cattle. I was wrong. A pickup works better." But Bruno remained on the ranch as an oversized pet. He is at least 20 years old, according to Mrs. Nelson. "I call him and he comes from the field. He's a good old horse."

At 4 p.m. one day not long ago, a little earlier than her usual schedule, Mrs. Nelson decided to feed the cattle. She donned a floppy straw hat and called to her 12-year-old granddaughter, Jennifer Nelson.

Jennifer and her grandmother spend as much time together as possible, strengthening a bond that began between them when Jennifer was only 6 weeks old. Her mother had died, and Mrs. Nelson, then 74, took the baby because she believed her son had his hands full with two teen-agers. She kept Jennifer until she was 3½ years old, when her son remarried and Jennifer went to live with her parents in Burleson.

Jennifer drove the pickup to the field, her grandmother on the seat beside her. "Start honking the horn, honey," directed Mrs. Nelson.

Beep, beep, beep. The noise split the quiet summer afternoon. Cattle appeared over the edge of the hill. The animals hurried toward the pickup, which Jennifer had parked near a barn and some pens.

The temperature was in the mid-90s. Mrs. Nelson reached over the gate of the pickup and pitched hay to the cattle. She cut a diminutive figure against the bulk of the brown, skittish animals.

Jennifer surveyed the cattle as they shoved their way toward the hay. "Y'all share now," she admonished the animals. When half the herd had followed her into the barn, she turned and ordered, "The rest of you stay." They stayed.

The work never has been too strenuous, Mrs. Nelson said. "I always got someone to help me."

Mrs. Nelson had watched her father raise polled Herefords when she was growing up on a ranch in the Texas Panhandle. "I knew they were a gentle breed of cattle," she said.

When Mrs. Nelson purchased her ranch, it was a wilderness. In fact, unknown counterfeiters had hidden fake silver dollars, half dollars and quarters in a cave on her land. A hired man filled a gallon bucket with the phony money and brought it to Mrs. Nelson. "I took some for souvenirs, he took the rest to the sheriff."

Gradually the land was cleared, and Mrs. Nelson has seeded some fields with grass. Her cattle herd has numbered as high as 100. In November Mrs. Nelson sold her goats because of the drought.

The former school teacher still finds time to go to Abilene to attend operas and plays. She is also a member of the Retired Teachers' Association.

Mrs. Nelson's heart belongs home on the range. One or two pickups pass her home each day.

"I would never live in town. Too much hubbub."

Pecos farmer starts pistachio cultivation

PECOS, Texas (AP) — While laying pipelines in Iran, Gene Kribbs of Pecos became familiar with mass consumption and cultivation of pistachios.

Here in West Texas, he wants now to raise and produce pistachio nuts in a market where the demand is much higher than the supply.

"I worked over in Iran and found out that pistachios grow in a country that looks geographically like here," he said. "I figured out that it would work in Pecos."

Kribbs' pistachio orchard, which is located near Pecos, consists of nearly 167 trees planted over a 1½ acre area.

Even though his project is a relatively small one, he says he would someday like to expand it.

"I'd like to get comfortable with the trees first," he said while checking the bud of one of his five varieties of pistachio trees.

He said his favorite is the California variety, Gold II, because it is growing twice as fast as the rest of the tress.

"Those are the ones we're going to try," he said, pointing toward a small green and marroon-colored tree that looks healthier than most of its counterparts.

Although pistachio cultivation is relatively new here, Kribbs said that Californians have been cultivating the nuts for many years.

At a pistachio tree seminar held recently in Pecos, Kribbs said a member of Pioneer Nursery of Bakersfield, Calif., told the audience to be concerned about the cost involved in producing the nuts.

The seminar, which was attended by nearly 60 West Texas farmers, produced doubts among the farmers here.

Said Kribbs: "The Californian told us that it would be too costly to cultivate pistachios here. But Californians spend a lot of money on farming.

"West Texans are more into self-sufficient farming."

Effort to unite Nicaraguan Indian groups foundering on mistrust

By ROBERT J. MCCARTNEY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TEGUCIGALPA, HONDURAS — An effort this summer to unite all Nicaraguan Indian groups battling the Sandinista government appears to be foundering because of continuing mistrust between the two largest Indian organizations.

One of the two major Indian rebel groups, called Misura, said earlier this week that the other group's leader, Brooklyn Rivera, had been expelled from the Indian movement as a whole. A tribal council of elders, which is linked to Misura, expelled Rivera about a week ago because he was considered a traitor for having held peace talks with the Sandinistas, Misura officials Roger Hermann and Adan Artola said.

Rivera does not recognize the council's authority, and he was still trying to reach an understanding with Misura, a spokesman for Rivera said. But the dispute seemed to signal that the unification plans were headed for failure, and that Misura and Rivera's organization would continue to struggle independently to achieve autonomy for the Indian region on Nicaragua's eastern coast.

The persistent division in the Indian movement was likely to please the Sandinista government, which has been trying to reach a separate peace with Rivera. Plans were made in June to unify the Indian movement after Rivera broke off his negotiations with the Sandinistas to protest their unilateral action in forming their own commission to consider how to grant the Indians a measure of self-government.

In a separate development, Honduran officials said Tuesday that they expected that Misura's former military chief Steadman Fagoth would be deported from Honduras. The Honduran army detained Fagoth, one of the Indians' best known leaders, on Aug. 10 immediately after a two-day incident in which Fagoth took a group of Indian leaders as hostages in an abortive effort to regain control of Misura.

Fagoth and about 30 supporters took 12 Indian leaders and guerrillas as hostages just inside Nicaragua near the town of Waspuk on Aug. 8, the two Misura officials said.

Other Misura military leaders refused to back down, however, and Fagoth gave up and fled across the border to Honduras, the officials said.

The Honduran army detained Fagoth at a base in the northeastern town of Mocoron on grounds that he was not supposed to be inside the country. Fagoth technically has been barred from entering Honduras since January, when Honduran authorities deported him after he embarrassed the government by telling a news conference held on Honduran territory that Misura intended to execute 23 prisoners.

The Misura officials said that Fagoth had also been expelled from the Indian movement, together with Rivera, for having taken the hostages. Fagoth was Misura's military chief of staff from 1982 until last March, when he was demoted.

The Miskito, Sumo and Rama Indians live on Nicaragua's Caribbean coast, where they are isolated from the majority of the country's population living in the highlands along the Pacific coast.

The Indians generally supported the 1979 Sandinista revolution against the Somoza family dictatorship, but many Indians later turned against the Sandinistas because the new government was unwilling to grant autonomy to the region.

Don't be stumped by dead trees in your landscape

AGRICULTURE

Trees are a major part of the landscape around our homes. They enhance the beauty of our homes, as well as shade them from the hot summer's sun. Unfortunately, trees die and when they do, the homeowner is left with the problem of tree removal. In most instances the upper portion of the tree can be easily removed, but what about the unsightly stump?

It's no secret that stump removal ranks "rock bottom" on the list of popular activities for the homeowner or gardener. However, sometimes it does become a "necessary evil."

Unfortunately, there is no cheap, easy or quick way of removing tree stumps, but here are some hints on what can be done.

If you have the patience, letting it rot is probably the cheapest and easiest method of stump removal. Rotting or decaying is accomplished by fungi feeding on and breaking down the wood. The decaying process can be accelerated by warm temperatures and moisture. We can do little to control the temperature; however, we can keep the stump moist by watering.

How rapidly the stump decays will depend greatly on the tree species. Some trees, such as cypress, cedar, oak and mesquite are very resistant to attack by fungi and will take years to decay.

The quickest method of stump removal is simply digging and cutting the stump out of the ground. This process requires a strong back and may involve many hours of hard, sweaty work. The procedure consists of digging a ditch or trench around the stump from one to two feet wide and deep, severing the roots with an axe and dragging the stump out of the hole.

Burning has long been a popular method of stump removal. However, because of strict local fire ordinances against burning and because this method can be dangerous, other methods of stump removal should be used.

Still another way to solve the "How do I get rid of the stump?" problem is to call a local arborist or tree service company. They have machines which will remove the stump quickly by grinding it into small chips. The process takes only a few minutes, but may be expensive.

What about the chemicals offered for sale which claim to be effective in stump removal? For the most part these chemicals are ineffective and disappointing. Unfortunately, there are no magical chemicals on the market which will dissolve a stump in a few days, or even a few months.

So what if none of these methods appeal to you? Fine. If you don't feel like going through the hassle of removing a tree stump, then try to make good use of it in your landscape. A tree stump can be made into an interesting container for growing annual flowers. Planting ground covers or vines can often be used to effectively cover the stump. Or, you may just decide that it would make a good plant stand for that large fern, wandering jew, ivy or other potted plant.

Farm Aid may have tough row to hoe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Merle Haggard, Willie Nelson and others who want to raise money for farm relief will have their work cut out for them, considering the number of producers who are deeply in debt and the awesome size of that debt.

Haggard recently announced plans for a coast-to-coast campaign by train this month to raise money for farmers. Nelson has scheduled a farm-aid benefit in Champaign, Ill., on Sept. 22.

The country music stars are following in the wake of the Live Aid concert put on in July for African hunger relief, when performers in London and Philadelphia raised $55 million.

If the new venture is as successful, it will require tactful and wise management to select the relief projects to help the most farmers. There is no way that enough money will be raised to wipe out all farm debt in the United States.

Of course, that is not the intention of Haggard and Nelson. Money might help prevent the loss of some farms in imminent danger, they say, but mostly the effort this month will be to call attention to the plight and importance of American agriculture.

It also comes as Congress returns to work and tries to put together a new farm bill, including price support programs that will have much to do with the financial shape of farmers over the next few years.

The Live Aid benefit in July for African relief resulted in something highly visible, money to buy food shipments. It was easy to understand from pictures of starving children in Ethiopia and Sudan how even a few dollars worth of wheat would help.

But no farm family in the United States has undergone the horror of mass hunger that pervades much of the African continent. The predicament of American farmers is much more subtle and expensive.

For example, according to Agriculture Department statisticians, total farm debt was about $212 billion as of Jan. 1. This year, farmers are expected to pay about $21 billion in interest on that debt, an average of about $58 million a day, including weekends and holidays.

In other words, a successful concert might raise enough money to pay one day's interest on the money that farmers owe.

That may be startling to non-farmers, but it's a familiar reality in today's world of commercial agriculture. It takes big bucks to crank out the grain, oilseeds, cotton, rice, milk, beef, pork and poultry needed by American consumers and foreign buyers.

Consider a recent report by USDA's Economic Research on expenditures by farmers in 1984, when they spent $128.3 billion. Services, including rent, custom hire, insurance and marketing expenses, accounted for $23.6 billion of that tab. Feed for livestock was another $18.3 billion.

Net farm income in 1984 was estimated at $34.6 billion, up sharply from $16.1 billion in 1983. The jump was due largely to USDA bookkeeping procedures which allowed for rebuilding of farm inventories, depleted in 1983 by drought and government acreage cutbacks. This year farm income is forecast at $22 billion to $26 billion.

But the big numbers can mask the hardships of thousands of individual farmers who have seen land values and total assets erode in recent years. When that happens, they have less collateral and find it harder or impossible to borrow more money to pay bills.

In a report released earlier this summer, the Economic Research Service pointed more specifically to the ailments of agriculture.

Full-time city employment up

WASHINGTON (AP) — American cities have an average of 21 police officers per 10,000 residents, the largest category of city employment, the Census Bureau says.

School teachers constitute the next largest proportion of city workers at 16 per 10,000 residents, followed by firefighters at 13 per 10,000, according to Census Bureau figures released Thursday.

Overall, the Census Bureau reported, the number of full-time city employees increased last year for the first time since 1979.

Total city employment had edged up slightly in 1983, but that was a result of added part-time workers, the report said. The 1984 figures were the first to show increased full-time employees.

Full-time city workers increased from 1,973,025 in 1983 to 2,006,610 last year, the report said. In 1979 the cities had 2,074,137 full-time employees.

At the same time, the number of part-time workers hired by city governments dropped slightly, from 450,324 to 427,458.

That meant the combined total of workers in city governments increased by about 10,000 last year.

Total employment by the nation's cities as of last October was 2,434,068, up 10,719 from October 1983, the study said.

While the number of city workers rose 0.4 percent in 1984, payrolls climbed by 6.4 percent to $3.9 billion. Full-time workers averaged $1,860 for the month of October 1984, up from $1,770 a year earlier.

Total employment by cities was equivalent to 148 workers per 10,000 residents, down from 158 employees per 10,000 in 1979 and 161 in 1974.

Cities of fewer than 50,000 residents had 104.6 workers per 10,000 residents and averaged $1,545 in pay last October.

Cities of 300,000 to 500,000, though, averaged 153.8 workers per 10,000 residents with pay of $1,922.

And the few cities of a million or more had 277.8 workers per 10,000 people, and paid them $2,191 each for the month.

Police protection was the single largest category of city workers, accounting for 373,196 employees. Second was local schools, at 292,657, followed by local utilities, 218,580; fire protection, 191,433, and hospitals, 123,240.

That trend was not consistent among city classes of cities, however.

Police protection was the largest source of city jobs for communities smaller than 100,000 and for those with between 300,000 and 500,000 people.

Cities of 100,000 to 300,000, however, and those with more than 500,000 residents had more school workers than police, the study showed.

Chemical like 'ecstasy' drug found to destroy brain fibers in animals

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — A chemical similar to the illicit drug known as "ecstasy" appears to destroy selective nerve fibers in the brains of animals, a finding that may apply also to the popular, abused drug, researchers say.

In a report published today in the journal Science, scientists from the University of Chicago's Pritzker Medical School say the chemical cousin of ecstasy decreased levels of the important neurological chemical serotonin in the brains of rats.

The illegal drug also seemed to reduce the number of sites where serotonin is taken up by nerve cells, they say, and may be toxic to some nerve cells themselves.

Serotonin is a brain-regulating chemical that is partially responsible for setting the rate at which nerve cells transmit their communications with one another.

Drs. George Ricaurte, Charles Schuster and Lewis Seiden said it appears the drug MDA, shorthand for 3,4-Methylenedioxyamphetamine, "induces prolonged serotonin neurochemical deficits by destroying serotonin nerve terminals."

Seiden said in a telephone interview that MDA is so chemically close to ecstasy, also known as MDMA for 3,4-Methylenedioxymethaamphetamine, that the results should cause concern.

"Here we have a drug that causes brain damage in rats at doses reasonably similar to those that human beings take," Seiden said. "If you have a drug that does this to other mammals, you have to be concerned that it will do this to humans."

Ecstasy is a synthetic amphetamine derivative that recently gained popularity as a "designer drug." It is one of a family of very similar compounds, some of which are used legitimately to treat mental illness, that can cause mood altering or hallucinogenic effects.

Designer drug is a term used to describe a substance that is a chemical variation of another substance already regulated under the federal Controlled Substances Act. Chemists make designer drugs by changing a few molecules of an existing illicit drug so a new one is different enough to fall outside the law.

Because of its widespread abuse, the Drug Enforcement Administration on July 1 made MDMA a Schedule-One illicit drug like heroin, making it illegal to prescribe it for treatment and a felony to possess it for other than legitimate research.

Seiden said a number of researchers have been interested in MDMA for therapeutic use, but he cautioned them to consider the animal data with the closely related MDA.

NATION IN BRIEF

Children with AIDS should be in school

(AP) — A day after the federal Centers for Disease Control recommended that children with AIDS be allowed in classrooms, school officials are mulling over how to deal with 183 people under 18 known to have the deadly disease.

One of the most celebrated cases involves Ryan White, 13, a hemophiliac who got AIDS through a blood transfusion. The Kokomo, Ind., seventh-grader has been banned from school and listens to classes at home via telephone.

Students in Connecticut and New Jersey also have been barred from school, but New York state health officials issued guidelines Thursday recommending that most children with AIDS be allowed in school.

Student loans default

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary William Bennett is asking Congress to stem what he calls an alarming increase in student loan defaults, which he says will top $1 billion this year alone.

Bennett released a study Thursday predicting that government payments on defaulted student loans will jump 45 percent in the current fiscal year from $749 million to $1.08 billion.

The study by Education Department analysts predicts the Guaranteed Student Loan Program's default rate will jump from 10.7 percent to 11.7 percent in the current fiscal year and to 13.6 percent by 1990.

Dorms computerized

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — The University of Illinois plans to put personal computers in dormitory rooms in a unique study to determine how students will use them and how they will affect the students.

The $700,000 in computers and software will be provided by International Business Machines Corp. for the 261 residents of Saunders Hall.

"This is the first time a major research institution with a large residential component has made a commitment to set up a study of this type," said Howard Diamond, assistant vice chancellor for student affairs and manager of the project.

Fabulous '50s finding favor

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — The 1950s gave us Elvis, James Dean, sliding glass doors, the Gugenheim and screaming kitsch.

Atomic clocks, boomerang tables, Formica bars, dogbone sofas upholstered in hedonistic shades of pink, flying saucer lamps (the Russians put up Sputnik, we did lamps) and the Howdy Doody Phono Doodle — the hyperbolic bad taste of the period cannot easily be forgotten. Nor can the nostalgia such objects resurrect for a bygone era when life was (perhaps) simpler, options fewer, sex roles more clearly defined, atomic energy still considered a great idea and bliss was a two-tone Chevy with rocket fins.

Today, for reasons having to do with how the culture clock ticks, the '50s have begun to inspire an unprecedented number of collectors ready to pay thousands of dollars for zebra-striped sofas, kidney-shape coffee tables with speckled Formica finish and any number of other furnishings in the style defined as mid-century modern.

Okey-dokey. So here is Metro, a new gallery store flaunting '50s collectibles with the ultrachic of the tail fin on a pink Caddy Coupe de Ville.

The shop was opened recently ago by Beverly Gardenhire, a '50s fanatic who had collected so many flamingo figurines and electric neon clocks that she no longer had space for them in her home. So Gardenhire located a building — a sort of late Southern California Bauhaus structure built in the '30s by a French milliner and clothing designer who kept a suite for a lover upstairs— leased some space and decided to share the collection with the world.

So far, Gardenhire has one of the hottest businesses in town. Weekend night crowds sometimes jam the place like kids waiting for "Howdy Doody Time."

A lot of people don't even blink at things such as pink dogbone sofas and wrought-iron tables selling for $1,000 and up. Or, mind the irony of a rocket ashtray now selling for $10 when it once was a commerical giveaway. The buyers range from doctors and lawyers to students who like the idea of furnishing an apartment with a piece of '50s glitz. A psychiatrist bought a plastic zebra-upholstered couch. Talk about value scales — or, maybe, we'd better not.

"Everybody seems to love the '50s right now," says Gardenhire, who describes the era with her favorite word — "atomic."

Signals warn of dropping out

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — There isn't much that can be done once the decision is made, but parents can watch well in advance for signals that their child is considering dropping out of school, say the editors of Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

There may be signs as early as the seventh grade, say the editors, including frequent absences, skipping classes, poor grades, and lack of involvement in school activities. The inability to handle family problems is also a factor, and early counseling can be important.

Critical to a resolution, according to counselors, is listening to what a child really says. Teenagers often drop hints about emotional troubles and anxieties.

Many schools offer special programs for "disaffected students."

DEAR ABBY

Bridegroom's father rates bachelor party 'X'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I hope you can offer a practical solution to me and millions of other fathers who face the following dilemma:

A son, about to be married, invites his father to his bachelor party that takes place the night before the wedding. In 1985, it seems that an X-rated, sexually explicit film is shown as part of the program. Fathers and prospective fathers-in-law are invited to attend, along with the bridegroom and his male friends.

How can a male parent who really doesn't want to attend this kind of party decline without making himself appear prudish or square? Or, if he does attend in order to be accepted as "one of the boys," what is the proper conduct at such parties? — OKIE FROM MUSKOGEE

DEAR OKIE: A male parent can decline by saying, "Thanks, but if you don't mind, I think I'll pass."

And if he attends, he should sit in the back of the room and be himself.

DEAR ABBY: My name is Angel Wiltz. I am 9 years old and I am a captain in one of the "Just Say No" clubs, helping other kids to say no to drugs. These clubs are being started all over the country. They were formed last February under Oakland Parents in Action, a program to educate parents in early drug prevention.

Our aim is to get kids to say no to drugs because drugs will mess up their minds, hurt their bodies, ruin their chances in life, hurt their grades, make their parents sad, and get them in trouble with the law.

If any of your readers would like to know how to start a "Just Say No" club in their own communities, they can send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Oakland Parents in Action, 1504 Franklin St., Suite 610, Oakland, Calif. 94612. Or call: (415) 836-6078.

Thank you, ANGEL WILTZ

DEAR ANGEL: Glad to help. Please give me a progress report.

DEAR ABBY: I live in an area of Texas where tornadoes are apt to occur, so I try to learn all the safety precautions I can.

Lately, people have been telling me that I should keep my windows closed during a tornado.

Abby, I've always heard that you should keep your windows open. Could you please straighten this out for me? — CONFUSED IN TEXAS

DEAR CONFUSED: My experts say to leave at least one window open on each side of the house to keep it from imploding. (That's the reverse of "exploding.")

DEAR ABBY: What's the proper etiquette here? A friend of mine is expecting triplets. Must everyone who attends her baby shower give her three presents, or is one gift acceptable? Any suggestions? — OVER BUDGET

DEAR OVER: Give her three gifts, one for each baby; the cost of all three should amount to whatever you would have spent had she been expecting a single. She may appreciate a gift certificate for a diaper service.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Bodytalk noisy

By ERMA BOMBECK

I walked into an aerobics class the other day after an absence of three years and the instructor's first words were, "Listen to your body."

I stopped and didn't breathe for a moment. At first, I didn't hear anything. Then I heard my stomach whisper, "My God! What is that!"

"It's you," I said. "You're looking into a mirror."

"If I told you once, I told you a million times," it growled. "NO MIRRORS!"

"Just shut up and contract," I said.

At that moment my arms said, "You think you've got trouble. Try touching your elbow to your knee."

"You'll get used to it," I said.

"Sure, and how many calls do you think I'm going to get for that? I'm telling you it's a waste."

Just then my buttocks, which had been in a tight tuck for 30 seconds, said, "Honey, I hope you know what you're doing. After three years of just 'hanging out' back here you can't expect miracles in one session."

"Will you sit on it!" said my knees. "You don't know what pain is until you start pulsating in a squat. Does she know what she's doing?"

"Does she ever?" asked my hip joints. "She just tried to raise me off the floor with that moose of a leg."

"Did I hear my name mentioned?" asked my leg. "Look, Sweetie, it's no day at the beach for me. Every time she lifts me up I run into stomach there."

"Tell me about it," gasped my stomach. "She's sucked me in for three years and nothing moves anymore. Oh, oh, hang on, they're playing the 'Theme from Exodus.'"

"What does that mean?" asked my abdomen.

"You'll find out," said my stomach. "It's the old pelvic tilt. Where are the lungs, out to lunch?"

"I'm here! I'm here!" gasped my lungs. "And I'm ready to burst. At least, once in a while all of you get a rest, but not me!"

"Oh, come on," said my feet. "You haven't done anything in three years. The last time you breathed this hard was when she took seconds on a chocolate mousse."

"Easy for you to say," said my legs, "but I'm the one who's going to be up all night with acute cramps. She has so many varicose veins now that the back of my knees look like a bas relief map of Brazil."

"You wanta walk down memory lane? There was a time when I used to bulge."

"Who's that talking?" asked a thigh.

"It's the hipbone," said the stomach. "I thought she was dead."

"Will all of you knock it off?" I shouted. "I can't hear the music. What was that? Did someone say it felt good?"

The nymph exercising next to me said, "That was my body talking."

I moved away quickly. I didn't want my body talking to hers.

In a recent column, it was stated that Brenda Dickson on "The Young and the Restless" walked off the set during a taping after announcing on-camera that she had quit. Miss Dickson and the producers have informed the column that this incident did not occur and she is still on the show.

University uses wood-based energy

MOUNT PLEASANT, Mich. (AP) — Central Michigan University is converting its heating plant from gas-oil burners to a wood-fired system, according to Energy User News.

The system will supply steam for heating, cooling and hot water to 68 buildings on the Mount Pleasant campus.

Cost of the wood over a 10-year period is estimated at $11 million, some $20 million less than the projected costs for gas and oil, the publication reports.

University officials note that wood supply is plentiful because of overgrowth. There reportedly is so much overcrowding and junk wood in the area the university would need to harvest only one acre of each 1,600-acre block within a 50-mile radius each year.

High tech provides health care

WASHINGTON (AP) — Computer-based technologies can improve the health and functional ability of older persons, according to MIS Week.

The journal says these include programmable wheelchairs, voice-activated robots and a variety of prosthetic devices, along with personal computers themselves.

Information technology can be used by the elderly for health purposes in many ways, notes the management information systems publication.

One use is computer-assisted health instruction through evolution of home-based computer programs for self-help for health maintenance and disease management. Computers can be programmed to instruct older persons or their family on special diets, rehabilitation practices and to give audible reminders of medication times.

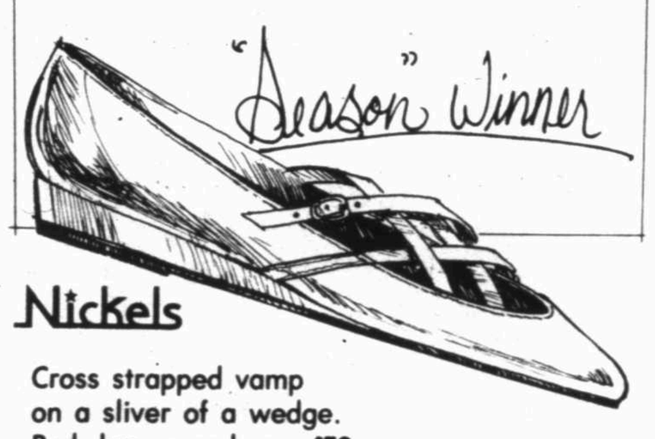

Blood pressure, pulse rates, body temperature and heart electrical activity also can be sensed and measured by microprocessors.

Course list offers something for all

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Art of Exotic Kosher Chinese Cooking" is among the courses being offered to the public this fall and winter by Yeshiva University's Center for Continuing Education. It will be taught by the master chef at the Moshe Peking Restaurant.

Among the most popular study areas, according to Dr. Abraham Stern, director of the center, is an extensive appraisal program. The 16 courses, eight workshops and two seminars include appraisal studies for everyone ranging from the casual flea market browser to the professional in such markets as the fine arts, jewelry, antique dolls and Judaic art and antiquities.

From a catwalk on the dome of the Texas Capitol in Austin Thursday, Gov. Mark White and State Architect Roy Graham take a closer look at the Goddess of Liberty statue.

Campaign should free 'Liberty' from disrepair

AUSTIN (AP) — To help mark next year's 150th anniversary of Texas independence, Gov. Mark White suggests Texans might want to contribute money for restoration work on the Capitol.

White climbed to the uppermost reaches of the 309-foot building Thursday, saying he found the experience an inspiration.

The governor scaled spiral staircases inside the dome ceiling to a point some 280 feet up. He then went outside the structure to look over scaffolding being used to inspect the damaged Goddess of Liberty statue, which has stood atop the dome for 97 years.

"It was inspirational," White said. "She looks real pretty on top of the Capitol building, but like some of us, she looks better at a distance."

Capitol architect Roy Graham, who led White on the 40-minute dome tour, said he has been encouraged by preliminary reports on the statue, which suffers from cracks, rust and other structural problems.

"We're hoping it can be repaired in place. The general reports coming in are that we'll be able to," Graham said. Earlier this week, Graham had said the worst findings would mean removing the zinc statue and replacing it with a duplicate made of more durable material.

The 19-foot statue weighs between 1.5 tons and 3 tons. Holding a star in an upraised hand, the statue makes the Texas Capitol seven feet taller than the nation's Capitol in Washington, D.C.

After climbing down to the attic level, where he used a narrow board catwalk to inspect an attic above the House chamber, the governor said he hopes Texans will contribute to help restore the pink granite building that has housed state government since 1888.

"Sometimes, I think it's easier to build something than to repair it," White said.

The building's cornerstone was laid on March 2, 1885, and the structure was dedicated on May 16, 1888.

Before his climb, White kicked off the fund-raising drive by saying restoration of the Capitol would be a fitting project to mark next year's 150th anniversary of the Texas Republic.

"I can think of no better time to begin this restoration effort than on the eve of Texas' year-long independence celebration," White said.

White signed a proclamation designating Sept. 9 as "Bring a quarter for the Goddess day" and praised the PTA for encouraging the state's 3.2 million school children to donate 25 cents each for the statue's restoration, a project estimated to cost $350,000.

"Just as the nation's children came to the rescue of the Statue of Liberty, so will Texas school children participate in a statewide fund-raising effort to restore our own Goddess of Liberty," White said.

Architect Graham, a former director of the Colonial Williamsburg project in Virginia, was hired last year to oversee restoration of the entire Capitol, parts of which have fallen into serious disrepair.

During White's dome tour, he noticed large buildups of dirt on ledges and areas near the top of the rotunda, where workmen are unable to reach.

One thing the building needs, the governor said, "is a good bath. It hasn't had one in a hundred years."

Cole's verdict postponed

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Army Capt. Peter Cole's lawsuit seeking to regain his rank in the Army, with back pay, has ended after nine days of testimony and presentation of more than 300 exhibits.

Judge Mastin White of the U.S. Court of Claims said he would make his decision after a transcript of the trial is prepared and attorneys for both sides present post-trial written arguments — estimated at more than 90 days from Thursday.

There were no final oral arguments.

In a last minute decision Thursday, attorneys decided there would be no need to call additional witnesses in Washington, as considered earlier.

Cole, 38, now a civilian employee at Fort Hood, was the principal witness in his case, contending he was relieved of his job as battalion supply officer in Germany in 1976 because of his critical reports on the combat readiness of Army units. He said he was coerced into offering a resignation, then claimed higher military officers refused to return his resignation when he changed his mind.

Cole often referred to a personal computer he took to the witness stand with him.

A lengthy list of former high ranking Army officials, including several retired major generals, testified for the government saying that Cole was not relieved from his job, merely assigned to another unit because he was unable to get along with fellow officers. They said Cole's resignation had been offered voluntarily. They said there was no conspiracy among them to keep him from taking it back, although all recommended that he be given an honorable discharge, which occurred Jan. 7, 1977.

One of the final witnesses appearing Wednesday and Thursday was retired Army Maj. Gen. George Patton, son of the famed World War II general. Patton, former commander of the 2nd Armored Division at Fort Hood said he gave final approval to Cole's request for a discharge before it went to Washington. The resignation later was approved by a Army board there.

"Peter Cole was the prince of guardhouse lawyers," Patton, who now lives in South Hamilton, Mass., testified Thursday. "He was the the absolute top of all I have ever known."

Cole testified last week that he took his complaints to members of Congress and the news media after military superiors refused to let him withdraw the resignation he offered in 1976.

Patton said, on cross examination, that he agreed that Cole was a proficient supply officer and "he violated no Army regulations" which could be the subject of a court martial.

It was Cole's letter of resignation that caused him to recommend Cole's discharge from the Army, Patton testified Thursday.

Cole's four-page resignation, introduced as evidence, showed Cole felt enlisted men in the service were below average and he had lost confidence in the ability of fellow and superior officers.

"I agree that the Army is recruited from a low level of society but it is the officer corps' job to take what the U.S. gives them and produce a superior unit," Patton testified.

"By God, you accept that and do the best you can with what you have," Patton told the U.S. Court of Claims in a booming voice.

Patton said from his experience, based on 34 years of active Army duty, he had found that "on the battlefield, there must be mutual trust between an officer and his superiors."

"I felt I could not visualize this particular person (Cole) on the battlefield," Patton said.

Aggie band starts new tradition

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University, rich in traditions, may have started a new one this week when three females were admitted into the once all-male Texas Aggie Band.

The male-only entrance requirement for the band was dropped after an agreement reached earlier this year between the school, the U.S. Justice Department and Melanie Zentgraf, who filed a lawsuit in 1979 while she was a student at A&M.

In a news conference Thursday, university officials identified the trio as Jennifer Peeler of Ennis, Carol Rockwell of Corpus Christi and Andrea Abat of Houston. The three are part of this year's 105-member freshmen band class.

"I'm very determined to make it," Ms. Rockwell, 17, said. Asked whether she thought an Aggie tradition had been broken, she said, "I believe we started a new one."

Ms. Rockwell, a pre-med major, said that she had encountered no hostility and that "all the other freshmen and band members are behind us."

She said she decided to join the band after seeing the 300-member band perform. "I was impressed. I always played in a band," she said.

"My desire to join the band was made before that case was settled," Ms. Abat, 18, said. "I feel it's the finest organization."

The trio was among a panel of 15 corps members assembled for a news conference after officials refused requests from reporters to interview each of the female band members.

"There's a lot of paranoia," said school spokesman Lane Stephenson. "They just want to be accepted as members of the band."

Another freshmen band member, Ronald Felden of Hondo, termed the hoopla over female band members, "a big deal over nothing. I consider them as freshmen buddies."

The Corps of Cadets, which include 2,000 of the school's 36,800 students, gained notoriety a year ago when a cadet member died after being put through motivational exercises.

That incident plus introduction of the women band members has had no effect on the morale of corps members, Cadet Col. Thomas Hale, commanding officer of the band, said. "This is by far the most motivated class I've seen."

Hale denied the corps was trying to shield its new female members from the media.

Ms. Abat, a building construction major who's planning a military career, said she was worried when she decided to join the band because of news reports about the all-male organization.

"The male members see there have been no problems," said Lt. Col. Joe T. Haney, director of the band. "We're pleased. We've been positive all along."

All three women said they expected to continue in the corps and in the band for the duration of their college career.

"I started, I'll finish," Ms. Peeler, a bio-chemistry major, said.

Texas A&M has existed since 1876 and has had a band for 91 years even though it does not have a music department. Band members practice each day after class and perform at football and basketball games and military reviews. They also make out-of-town appearances.

Ms. Rockwell plays a clarinet; Ms. Abat a trombone; and Ms. Peeler plays flute.

'Boss' gives Dallas double dose

DALLAS (AP) — People wanting to see "The Boss" in concert at the Cotton Bowl will get another chance today. Tickets for a second Bruce Springsteen concert are scheduled to go on sale at 10 a.m., officials said.

Despite a 45-minute "absolute lull" in sales Thursday for the rock singer's Sept. 13 appearance at the Cotton Bowl, 64,000 tickets sold out within 4½ hours.

Another Springsteen concert, the night after the other one, was announced Thursday.

Ticket sales for Springsteen's Sept. 13 appearance at the Cotton Bowl began at 9 a.m. Thursday. By 1:30 p.m., fans had snapped them up, said Stan Allen, marketing director of the company overseeing ticket sales.

Thousands had camped out in all-night vigils to get the $19 tickets. And others were getting in line Thursday night to buy tickets today.

Thursday's sales averaged about 300 tickets a minute and during peak times between 450 to 500 per minute, said Allen, of Rainbow-Ticketmaster.

"We got hit with the lull and then boom," Allen said. "The majority of the people back in line (after the lull) may have been the same age but they were not the same type of crowd. To be honest, I got hit with the yuppies at 12."

The second wave of ticket buyers probably couldn't camp out because they have families, so they stopped by ticket windows during lunch, Allen said. Although ticket windows were bare around 11 a.m., the telephones continued ringing as fans also purchased tickets by credit cards.

Beachcombers like these helping push a stuck truck at Crystal Beach are expected to jam the Texas beaches this weekend, despite oil sightings in the Gulf of Mexico.

Texas beaches to be 'swamped'

PADRE ISLAND (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of visitors are expected to crowd Texas beaches over the Labor Day weekend, with as many as 100,000 beachgoers here despite oil sightings in the Gulf of Mexico last week, officials say.

Nueces County Commissioner J.P. Luby says Padre Island beaches are looking good and that rains Wednesday and Thursday helped pack sand to make it easier to drive on the beaches.

"There are traces of tar, but it's no major problem," Luby said. "The beaches will be in excellent condition for this weekend."

But the weather more than the tar will be the deciding factor on beach attendance this year, and it won't be so cooperative, according to the National Weather Service.

The extended forecast for South Texas calls for partly cloudy skies through Monday with scattered thunderstorms mainly along the coast each day.

Meanwhile, condominium and hotel owners on the islands said they've had some problem with the tar, but not enough to hurt their business.

Rodger Strickland, assistant property manager for the Leeward Cove Condominiums on Padre Island, said the tar has not been a major problem with renters for the weekend.

"There has not been a single complaint from my renters about the tar. It's kind of shocked me," he said. "There have been some tar tracks in the rooms, but it's no big problem."

Richard Dinkins, assistant manager at the Holiday Inn-North Padre, said there have been a few cancellations in the past week, but nothing major.

"Some people have canceled because of the tar, but for every cancellation we have someone waiting in line to get their room," he said. "There are traces of tar, but it's no major problem."

Dinkins said there may be more cancellations because of bad weather that may prevail throughout the weekend.

Early last week, patches of oil washed onto the beaches, causing the Texas Department of Water Resources to set up a cleanup unit. Later in the week, fishermen reported seeing a five-mile-long slick of oil about 35 miles east-southeast of the Port Aransas jetties.

STATE IN BRIEF

Dog owner convicted when pet mauls child

CONROE (AP) — A Magnolia man was convicted and sentenced to five years in prison for reckless injury to a child after a pit bull terrier fatally mauled his girlfriend's 4-year-old son.

James Bryant Traxler, 30, who later married the child's mother, was convicted Thursday by a seven-woman, five-man jury that deliberated for four hours. Traxler was ordered by visiting State District Judge Ernest Coker Sr. to serve the five-year sentence concurrently with a 10-year prison term he's serving on drug-related charges.

Officials arriving at the Traxler residence on Feb. 23, 1984, found the dog covered with blood and the body of James Miller nearby.

Defense attorney Roy Rowland said Traxler was in shock after the boy was killed. He said the dog was sick the day of the incident.

White will 'buckle up'

AUSTIN (AP) — The mandatory seat belt law taking effect Sunday is a good one that will save lives, says Gov. Mark White.

White said he hopes Texas motorists will understand why the law was enacted.

"It's best for all of us to recognize that we save lives and injuries. It's the law now," he said Thursday.

Asked about critics who say the law is too much government interference, White replied: "We'd hope that government doesn't ever have to interfere with them in an emergency room in a hospital because they didn't have their seat belts on."

The law requires motorists in cars and most pickups to buckle up. Violations can be punished by $25 to $50 fines, although that part of the law doesn't take effect until Dec. 1.

Travel advertisers sued

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox on Thursday sued a Houston company and its owners for allegedly defrauding 300 consumers who paid for weekend vacations.

Mattox's suit alleges that Lee Britton, Edward Britton and Sheila Hubbard, doing business as Texas Weekend Vacations Inc., advertised weekend vacations for $29.95 and $49.95 in Texas and $59.95 anywhere in the country.

The suit claims that the defendants made no firm arrangements with hotels or motels for rates equivalent to or less than the amount offered in the advertisements. Therefore, consumers who had paid for the vacations did not receive them, the suit says.

Mattox is seeking up to $10,000 in civil penalties and full restitution to consumers.

Writers get fellowships

AUSTIN (AP) — Two San Antonio writers have been selected to receive the 1985-86 Paisano fellowships sponsored each year by the University of Texas at Austin and the Texas Institute of Letters.

Sandra Cisneros will reside at Paisano, a ranch west of Austin that belonged to the late J. Frank Dobie, from Sunday until mid-February. Rosemary Catacalos will live there from mid-February through July.

The two were selected from 85 applicants.

Runners-up for the fellowships were Jan Seale of McAllen and Dagoberto Gilb of Los Angeles.

Building official jailed

DALLAS (AP) — The highest-ranking Dallas official ever convicted of a major crime was sentenced Thursday to four years in prison for soliciting and accepting a bribe of more than $15,000 from two architects.

Former Dallas Building Official Robert Gahl, 52, was convicted last month after a four-day trial. He faced up to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine when State District Judge Pat McDowell sentenced him.

Prosecutors and Gahl's defense attorney agreed that audio and video tapes secretly recorded by police provided the key evidence presented during the trial.
