U.S. trade deficit shrinks in March

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit shrank dramatically to $9.7 billion in March — a drop of more than $4 billion — as American producers sold a record amount of goods overseas, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that American exports shot up 23 percent to an all-time high of $28.97 billion while imports were up 3.6 percent to $38.72 billion. The trade deficit is the difference between the two.

The March deficit was the lowest monthly imbalance since March 1985 and represented a 29.5 percent improvement from the February deficit of $13.83 billion.

The March improvement was a major surpise and triggered an immediate rally in the value of the dollar on foreign exchange markets. Stock markets opened sharply higher.

"Everyone is breathing a tremendous sigh of relief. This is the breath of fresh air we have been waiting for," said Jay Goldinger, an analyst with Capital Insight, a Los Angeles investment firm.

Goldinger predicted that the trade improvement would strengthen President Reagan's position and make it more difficult for Congress to override his promised veto of the omnibus trade bill.

The February report, issued a month ago, had sent the dollar reeling on financial markets around the world and pushed the Dow Jones industrial average down by 101 points, its fifth-worst loss ever.

The monthly trade deficit has become the most closely watched barometer of U.S. economic health.

A narrowing of the deficit is seen as a sign of strength for the American economy because it means more jobs in the manufacturing sector.

Additionally, smaller deficits usually translate into less downward pressure on the foreign exchange value of the dollar, which is also important for the country since sharp declines in the dollar can send stock and bond markets tumbling because of investor fears that inflation will rise.

The $28.97 billion in exports sold represented a $5.4 billion increase from the February level, reflecting gains in sales of U.S. machinery, computers, aircraft, chemicals and telecommunications equipment. In addition, $600 million of the increase came in gold sales to Taiwan.

The $1.3 billion rise in imports to $38.72 billion reflected a small rise in imports of manufactured goods, which offset a decline in oil imports, which fell 15.2 percent.

For the first three months of the year, the trade deficit has totaled $36.01 billion, which translates into an annual deficit of $144 billion. If that pattern holds for the entire year, it would represent a substantial improvement from the record 1987 trade deficit of $171.22 billion.

As usual, the trade deficit with Japan was the largest of any country, an imbalance of $4.55 billion. The deficit with Canada, America's largest trading partner, was $1.14 billion.

The Reagan administration was particularly embarrassed by the sharp deterioration in the February deficit and the turmoil it caused on financial markets.

That was because the February trade report, issued on April 14, came only a day after the United States and the six other biggest industrial countries had reaffirmed their pledge to keep the value of the dollar stable.

The finance ministers, in Washington for the annual spring meetings of the International Monetary Fund, had to scramble to make good on that pledge, conducting hurried meetings to plot a rescue effort through joint intervention.

Intervention is the process by which governments buy a currency on the open market to support its value. While the intervention succeeded, it cor the United States and its allies an estimated $700 million in dollar purchases.

The trade deficit has become closely linked to the value of the dollar.

Arms pact has good chance, senators say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile treaty has a better than even chance of winning Senate ratification before President Reagan meets with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Moscow later this month, two senators said today.

"I'd say a 60-40 chance at least, maybe better," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said on NBC-TV's "Today" program.

"I would say 75-25 to the good," added Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The remaining obstacles to beginning floor debate sometime today were removed Monday, ending a process of intense scrutiny that began soon after the treaty was signed in early December.

Three Senate committees told Senate majority leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., that last week's agreement in Geneva between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze satisfactorily resolved disputes about how to implement the treaty's on-site inspection provisions.

Byrd then announced he would call up the treaty for debate sometime today.

Nunn and Lugar said they have felt considerable pressure to ratify the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces or INF treaty before the upcoming summit. However, Nunn said INF ratification before the superpower summit will have little effect in producing a U.S.-Soviet agreement on strategic arms.

"I don't visualize a START treaty coming out of the summit, no matter what the Senate does on INF," Nunn said. "I think we will continue to discuss START and try to make progress."

Officers of law honor slain comrades

Dozens of Midland area law enforcement officers gathered under sunny skies Monday for a memorial ceremony to remember the city's two officers killed while on duty.

Texas law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty during 1987 were also remembered in the ceremony, which marked the first day of National Police Officers Memorial Week.

Following introductory music played by the Midland College Brass Ensemble, the national anthem was played.

Mayor Pro-Tem Oralia Corrales, standing in for Mayor Carroll Thomas, read a proclamation designating the week of May 16 as Police Officers Memorial Week.

Dr. Daniel Vestal, pastor of the First Baptist Church, then read a roll call of all officers killed in Texas during 1987. He referred to the officers present and "all peace officers" as "ministers of God" because they protect the people from harm, and from evil.

Watching from a platform were members of the families of patrol Lt. Gordon Smith Jr. and Officer Brian Scoggins, officers whose portraits hang over the front desk of the department.

Smith, 40, was killed just before daybreak on Nov. 28, 1961. He had participated with other officers in an all night manhunt for a man who allegedly murdered a Midland woman the night before.

Smith was fatally wounded in an exchange of gunfire with the suspect, who was also killed.

Crime Stoppers reports 50 percent increase in telephone tips

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The number of telephone tips to Midland Crime Stoppers surged more than 50 percent during the first quarter of this year compared to last, according to statistics released Monday by the agency.

The value of narcotics and stolen property recovered also increased the first three months of this year compared to the same period in 1987, according to the figures.

Midland police — who answered more than 58,000 calls for service in 1987 — are also recovering more narcotics and property, and the boost in tips might be a natural reaction to a recent increase in crime, a department spokesman said.

"Our detectives are filing lots of cases," especially burglary and theft, Cpl. Jim White said. "Crime Stoppers usually reacts to our cases. Most of their activity deals with city cases."

Police recently reported a more than 30 percent jump in major crimes the first quarter 1988 compared to the same period in 1987, which fits the increase in the number of tips.

"The number of calls they get is directly related to the amount of crime we have," White said.

Although the agency also receives some tips through the mail, the vast majority of information comes over the telephone, and the agency's highly publicized phone number, 694-TIPS.

"I would say mostly the people in Midland are getting to know us better," Sgt. Milton O'Bryant of Crime Stoppers said of the increase in tips. "The longer we are here, the more established we become."

In the last two-year period, officers have seen a chain reaction, with the population and the crime rate declining — and a drop in tips. Now that trend appears to have reversed, O'Bryant said.

"It is hard to figure out," he said. "I can say that the narcs (narcotics detectives) are working harder. They have been out there working our tips more. They have learned how to better use our information, and we are getting to know them better."

During the first quarter of 1987, the agency received 341 telephone calls. That number rose to 528 the first three months of this year, a 54.8 percent increase.

The number of arrests dropped slightly, from 37 the first quarter of 1987 to 33 the first quarter of '88, but the number of cases solved rose from 21 in 1987 to 36 in 1988, according to the statistics.

Crime Stoppers paid $7,375 in rewards the first three months of this year, compared to $5,510 the first quarter of 1987.

Fuel tank on bus involved in fiery crash didn't meet safety standards

CARROLLTON, Ky. (AP) — The fuel tank of a bus that burst into a fireball when a pickup truck slammed into it head-on didn't meet federal safety requirements, investigators said after the truck's driver was charged with 27 counts of murder.

At the time of the accident, one of the nation's deadliest bus crashes, truck driver Larry Mahoney's blood-alcohol level was nearly 2½ times the legal definition of drunkenness, authorities said Monday.

John Ackman, Carroll County commonwealth's attorney, said he planned to seek the death penalty against Mahoney, 34, who was in serious condition at Humana Hospital-University of Illinois.

Mahoney's northbound truck was traveling in the wrong direction on Interstate 71 when it struck the church bus filled with teen-agers and adult chaperones returning from an amusement park near Cincinnati.

Twenty-seven people were killed and 42 injured. The victims died from smoke inhalation as they tried to scramble out of the burning bus, said state medical examiner Dr. George Nichols. Seventeen people remain hospitalized, most in critical or serious condition.

The former school bus used by the First Assembly of God Church in Radcliff did not meet post-1977 safety requirements for a caged fuel tank, said Joseph Nall, a National Transportation Safety Board investigator.

The tank had a 3-inch gash and was pushed back 26 inches by the crash's impact, Nall said Monday night.

Asked if a caged tank might have prevented the fire, Nall said, "That's the ultimate question we'd like to answer, but now it would be premature."

The 1977 Superior bus with a Ford chassis, which the manufacturer said was equipped to carry 66 passengers and a driver — the number aboard the night of the crash — did not appear to be overloaded, according to Nall.

Texas town reacts to loss by beginning fund

GAINESVILLE (AP) — Residents outraged that a local woman died while awaiting a heart transplant she couldn't afford vow they won't let such a tragedy happen again.

Citizens have created the Norma Jean Bridges Memorial Fund for catastrophic illnesses.

"I've never heard of a permanent or semipermanent catastrophic health fund," Lisa Stark Walsh, acting communication director for the Texas Medical Association, told the Dallas Times Herald Sunday.

The fund's namesake died the day before her transfer to a specialized heart institute in Houston. Residents of this North Texas city had held bake sales and benefits to raise $10,000 for her cause, but Ms. Bridges' heart was not strong enough to hold out.

Gainesville's concept is similar to a community chest program that faded in the 1930s when federal government programs began taking over care for the needy, said Richard Teske, deputy assistant secretary at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

"We applaud what the community is doing," Teske said. "In this country, the answer to many of our problems is not a huge new government program. It is the community getting involved.... Hurrah for Gainesville."

Ms. Bridges, 43, died April 24. She was born with a deformed heart and underwent four operations between 1974 and 1984. In the past four years, her condition had deteriorated steadily.

Ms. Bridges' husband, Harry, lost his family's health insurance coverage in 1985 as part of employee wage and benefit cuts. He was unable to get a new insurance policy to cover his wife's medical bills.

Doctors told her in December that a heart transplant was her only hope. In March, her condition worsened, forcing her back into Gainesville Memorial Hospital.

Such transplants cost about $100,000. But the Texas Heart Institute in Houston agreed to take her if Medicare coverage could be arranged. About $10,000 was needed to take her to Houston in a specially equipped plane.

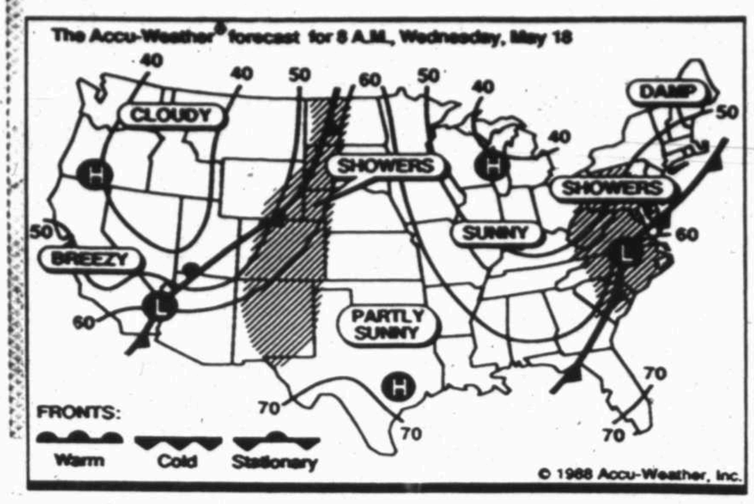
WEATHER SUMMARY



Cloudy conditions anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies are expected to be partly cloudy tonight with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s, and southeast winds will blow at 10-15 mph.

Wednesday will have partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of thundershowers. The high is expected to reach into the upper 80s, and southerly winds will blow at 10-20 mph.

Monday's high of 92 was eight degrees cooler than the record of 100 degrees set for that date in 1946. The overnight low of 63 was 16 degrees warmer than the record low of 47 set for this date in 1986.

STATE

Thunderstorms were expected to spread across portions of West Texas tonight and Wednesday, but most of Texas was not expected to receive any precipitation.

High pressure kept skies mostly clear and temperatures across most of the state.

Forecasts called for widely scattered thunderstorms over West Texas tonight and Wednesday.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s in West Texas and North Texas and in the 60s and 70s in South Texas.

Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s except in South Texas where readings will climb to near the 100-degree mark in the area away from the gulf coast.

A few small thunderstorms were reported early today in extreme West Texas east of El Paso.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 60s and 70s except in the mountains of Southwest Texas where readings were in the 50s. Extremes ranged from 58 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 74 at Laredo.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 62 at Amarillo, 68 at Wichita Falls, 67 at Fort Worth, 65 at Waco, 70 at San Antonio, 67 at Corpus Christi, 60 at Houston, 68 at Brownsville, 64 at San Angelo, 69 at Lubbock and 67 at El Paso.

NATION

Scattered showers and thunderstorms fell from South Carolina to New England today after strong storms in Dixie killed two men, flattened buildings and knocked out power to thousands of people.

Temperatures dipped into the 30s and 40s in the upper Mississippi Valley and the upper Great Lakes this morning, and a frost advisory was issued for northern Wisconsin.

However, on Monday high-temperature records up to 95 years old were broken in nine cities and tied in three, mostly in the West.

The showers and thunderstorms which wreaked havoc in the South on Monday afternoon and evening were abating today. Widely scattered showers and thundershowers also lingered from the southern High Plains to California.

Fair weather prevailed across the central third of the country, but brisk winds prevailed in the northern Plains.

During Monday's storms, lightning struck a flag held by a 19-year-old University of Georgia freshman playing golf on the Athens campus, killing him, officials said.

Just east of Atlanta, a construction worker was killed and his injured brother had to be rescued when high winds flattened the two-story apartment building where they were working, authorities said. Three others walked out of the demolished structure unharmed.

The five men had moved into the building's breezeway for shelter when they saw the storm heading their way, said DeKalb County Fire Chief Thomas Brown. "The building came down in what we call pancake fashion, straight down on them," Brown said.

In South Carolina, the storm produced winds reaching 63 mph that flipped a mobile home in Santee, blew down a garage near Chesterfield and downed large trees and power lines.

Cable car plunges down rainy hill

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A clanging cable car barreled down a hill into a truck at Bay Street Monday, flinging passengers to the pavement in one of the historic transit system's worst accidents.

The late-morning crash knocked the cable car off the tracks and ripped off its front end, pinning a young man under the wheels and sending about 20 riders to seven hospitals.

"We were holding on," said computer programmer Frances Peterlin. "All of a sudden, there weren't any people in front of us."

Rescue workers used the "Jaws of Life" to extricate the young man from beneath the wheels.

"It was a battering nightmare," said tourist Michele Chunko, 29, who fell from the right-front running board and slid down the wet pavement.

Her knee was bleeding.

"You didn't know where you'd end up," she said. "I'm very lucky."

Passengers said crew members shouted warnings as they tried to brake the 20-ton vehicle's descent on one of the steepest hills in the system.

Spokesman George Newkirk, who was at the scene, said the braking systems were working.

"Everything worked the way it was supposed to," he said. "If the truck had not been there in the intersection, we would not have had an accident. The truck was on the tracks. The cable car was going 9 mph. There just wasn't time to stop it."

About 40 passengers, mostly tourists, were aboard the car as it rolled down the hill with the bell clanging and the gripman shouting. Many could see the truck stopped in the street ahead.

AP Laserphoto

San Francisco firefighters work to free a man trapped under a Hyde Street cable car after in collided Monday with a truck.

Transit General Manager William Stead said: "The passengers had a short time to brace themselves for the impact. They knew they were going to hit."

He said the gripman, Gerald Bolden, had been with Muni since 1981 with "an outstanding safety record."

As in a 1967 collision that killed two passengers and injured 41 when a cable car lost its brakes and hit two cars in the same intersection, rain had slickened the tracks on the hill above Ghirardelli Square and Fisherman's Wharf.

Newkirk said the gripman hit a pedal that puts sand on the rails to increase friction. Then he used the slot brake, a wedge-shaped device that drops into the cable slot. It's supposed to bring the car to a stop so quick that it's used only in extreme emergencies.

Instead, the cable car collided with the big white truck with a crane. A sign identified it as property of the Kingston Contracting Co., an electrical construction firm. The driver, who suffered a hand injury, declined to talk to reporters.

Frank Dirschka, 60, of Titusville, Fla., who suffered minor scrapes, said he and his son, Eric, 22, had been sitting on the right side of the car when they noticed it was going faster than 9.5 miles an hour, which is said to be the maximum speed.

He said the driver called out, "Hold on, everybody!"

He thought to himself, "We're going to hit that truck."

"There were people flying," he said. "There were people hanging on the outside bars. They all flew off. It was terrible."

Karl Wenger, a tourist from Switzerland, said he was sitting inside the tram when the car started moving faster. He said the driver yelled, "Hold on" a couple of times.

"We're lucky there was a truck there or we would have been all the way down the hill," he said.

Newkirk, the Muni spokesman at the scene, called it a freak accident. An investigation began immediately.

Mike Doria, 23, a tourist from Vermont, was hanging on the left side of the car from a pole — one of those sheared off by the crash. He said:

"The cable car was on top of Hyde (Street) going down, and everything seemed normal. We were going real fast but I wasn't afraid because, you know, everybody says a cable car is like a rollercoaster. But we hit near the bottom and it started to get real fast and everybody started to fly."

Bob Breckenridge of St. Charles, Mo., said: "All I saw were people flying, people were holding on for their lives. I saw legs flying."

Newkirk said the cable itself wasn't damaged, and empty cable cars tested the Hyde Street hill several times before operations were resumed in the early afternoon.

Blind man sentenced to prison

HOUSTON (AP) — A state district judge sentenced a blind man to 25 years in prison for stabbing a neighbor in the face during an argument before he lost his eyesight.

Judge Joe Kegans sentenced Jesse Rodriguez Trevino after convicting him Monday of aggravated assault in the stabbing of James Carr, 28, on May 11, 1987, during an altercation in Carr's home.

Trevino, 53, was not blind at the time of the attack on Carr. He said he lost his sight after he was stabbed while being robbed later in Corpus Christi.

Trevino, a three-time ex-convict who has a prison record dating to 1951, was on parole from a 1957 life sentence for robbery in San Antonio.

Carr testified that Trevino stabbed him during an argument while visiting him at his home. Trevino stabbed him through the face, he said. The knife went through Carr's left check and exited behind his right jaw.

Trevino said he then left Houston and went to Corpus Christi. He said he was robbed and stabbed there, and lost his vision due to brain damage suffered when he went into cardiac arrest during surgery for his wounds.

ARMS

The INF treaty, signed at the White House on Dec. 8 by Reagan and Gorbachev, would require the elimination of all U.S. and Soviet missiles with a range of between 300 miles and 3,400 miles.

The decision to begin Senate floor action on the pact followed testimony in which Shultz said that in the Geneva talks, "we got what we needed and wanted."

Shultz said that included both the on-site inspection and a Soviet agreement that medium-range weapons using such futuristic technology as particle beam generators are banned by the treaty.

Both issues had delayed consideration of the treaty on the Senate floor with Byrd vowing not to schedule action until they were resolved.

Byrd said Monday that he had been assured by the Senate Foreign Relations, Intelligence and Armed Services committees that the problems had in fact been resolved.

"I feel satisfied that we're justified in taking up the treaty and I plan to do so," Byrd said.

Byrd said he hoped the treaty could be ratified by the May 29 opening of the Moscow summit but could not guarantee it.

Finishing the treaty by the time of the summit will depend on the nature of the debate and the number of amendments that are offered, he said.

Byrd said he plans to call up the treaty and stay on it but noted there may be some roadblocks.

For example, he said that if President Reagan vetoes the trade bill, an attempt to override that action would take precedence over the treaty and would interrupt its consideration.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said he may seek to make the Soviet diplomatic note resolving the futuristic weapons issue a part of the treaty itself.

He said he would offer a reservation to the treaty of the kind that requires agreement by the Soviet Union before the pact can go into effect.

Chief U.S. arms control negotiator Max Kampelman told Warner that would send a potentially disruptive message to the Soviets that they cannot be trusted.

But Warner said the issue had taken five weeks to resolve and should be nailed down.

Testifying before the Foreign Relations Committee on Tuesday, Shultz reminded senators they shouldn't be alarmed at a rough spot here and there as the two superpowers struggle to put the treaty into action.

"We are breaking new ground with this treaty," Shultz said. "On-site inspection is a major step forward in arms control agreements. We shouldn't be surprised if this process isn't always smooth."

But he said that as a result of the Geneva talks "we and the Soviets not only agree on the rights and obligations established in this treaty, but also on procedures to carry them out."

"The bottom line is that the verification provisions of this treaty get the job done," he said.

Scoggins — who was 32 at the time of his death — was injured in April 1961, in a traffic accident as he rode a motorcycle funeral escort. The four-year veteran of the department died April 14, 1961.

After Vestal spoke of the Midland officers, the 10-member police honor guard appeared at one end of Texas Street, which was closed to the traffic for the ceremony.

As the guard neared the flagpole, two officers marched to it and lowered the flag to half-staff.

The remaining officers then fired three volleys from their rifles in honor of the officers, and a lone trumpet played "Taps" as the wind whipped down the street.

Dozens of officers, from police, Midland County Sheriff's Department, Department of Public Safety, Midland County Constable's Office, as well as several federal agencies attended the half-hour ceremony.

BUS

Some survivors said the seats that were supposed to hold three people were too small, resulting in some people hanging in the aisle.

"There were too many people on that bus," said Conrad Garcia. He said he had to sit on a girl's lap in the back row because the bench wasn't wide enough.

NTSB investigators will remain in Kentucky for several more days, and it could take up to 10 months before a final report is released, Nall said.

Investigators on Monday examined the accident site, about 45 miles northeast of Louisville, and noted some braking by both drivers before the accident, Nall said.

Only two survivors were interviewed as of Monday night, but more interviews of witnesses were planned, Nall said.

Federal investigators attempted to interview Mahoney on Monday, but "he would not talk to investigators for reasons of his own," Nall said.

Mahoney, who was served with warrants in his hospital room, will be arraigned once he is released. District Judge Stanley Billingsley denied bond.

Tests on Mahoney, of Worthville, found a 0.24 blood alcohol level, said state police Capt. Neal Brittain. State law defines intoxication at 0.1.

Mahoney had a drunken driving arrest in 1984, for which he paid a fine, and pleaded guilty twice to disorderly conduct, court records show.

He was twice divorced and has been living with his first wife. He has two children.

A friend, Dennis Mefford, said he was with Mahoney until 8:30 p.m. Saturday, about 2½ hours before the accident. Mahoney was very tired, he said.

Mahoney, a chemical operator at M&T Chemical Co. in Carrollton, had worked 12-hour shifts for three consecutive days before getting off at 7 a.m. the day of the accident, Nall said.

"I can't remember seeing him drive in that bad a shape," Mefford said.

Friends described Mahoney as a quiet man who likes to hunt and shoot pool.

"He was just an easy-going, good ol' country boy," said Mefford's wife, Linda. "He was a little backward — shy and quiet-spoken. But people should know that he wasn't some kind of wild maniac."

Flags were at half-staff Monday in Radcliff and sympathies were spelled out on marquees and display signs at businesses and restaurants in the main business district.

Among those killed were Army 1st Sgt. Lee Williams' wife, Joy, and two daughters.

"He has no one else," said Jean Grimes, Joy Williams' identical twin. "Joy and the kids were all he had."

FUND

"We decided after we got through with this, we should not stop, we should go ahead and periodically have fund-raisers...so if anything like this ever happened again, we wouldn't be starting from zero," said Jan Herzog, a leader of a fund drive and the wife of Ms. Bridges' doctor, Gene Herzog.

"If we already had the money, maybe we could have (transported Ms. Bridges) in time."

To raise the transportation expenses, a spaghetti dinner, benefit country-western concert, bake sale, raffle and auction were held for Ms. Bridges within a week. Forty businesses in the city, about 60 miles northeast of Dallas, donated raffle prizes.

When the Herzogs went to church, members of their congregation handed them checks.

"Everyone was pulling together harder than I've seen them do in Gainesville," Gene Herzog said. "People just seemed to be able to identify with them (the Bridges)."

The goal was reached and Medicare coverage approved before Ms. Bridges' death.

"Sadly, it takes a tragedy like this to get a community thinking about the costs of health care," said Teske.

"It's a sad, sad story, but there was something positive coming out of it...I would hope that other communities would look at the Gainesville example and see if it applies" to them.

CRIME

Stolen property valued at $87,503 was recovered the first quarter of this year, compared to $44,782 in 1987, according to the figures.

Narcotics with a street value of $51,520 was recovered the first quarter of this year, compared to only $18,035 in 1987, the figures said.

Bus driver still unable to tell about accident

CLINTON, N.Y. (AP) — The driver of a converted school bus carrying mentally handicapped people has been unable to talk to investigators about how it crashed at the bottom of a steep hill, killing three people and injuring 20.

"It's really going to depend on his medical condition" whether he can answer questions today, said state police Sgt. Dennis Cody.

Investigators want to know whether mechanical failures or high speed contributed to Monday afternoon's accident, Cody said.

The driver, Lewis Taylor, 44, of Poughkeepsie, was listed in stable condition in Northern Dutchess Hospital in Rhinebeck. He suffered head injuries, cuts and broken bones.

Eight of the 20 injured were admitted to hospitals, six in critical condition, authorities said.

The bus was traveling down a steep hill when it failed to make a sharp right turn at an intersection, Cody said. The bus hit a utility pole, tipped over on its right side and came to rest 30 feet from the road, a few feet from Little Wappingers Creek.

Killed were John Dalyrymple, 44, and Raymond Phillips, 25, both of Clinton Corners, and Patricia Russo, 23, of Clinton Hollow, authorities said.

The bus was owned by Laidlaw Transit, where Taylor has worked for 2½ years. Betty Guffy, a spokeswoman for the company's corporate offices in Van Nuys, Calif., said Laidlaw would release information on the accident today.

Except for Taylor and Gussie Veach, a 54-year-old bus attendant, all the passengers were mentally handicapped people working for Rehabilitation Programs Inc. of the Town of Poughkeepsie.

Correction

Two typographical errors were made in Sunday's "Speaking Out" article by Rosalind Haley. In the first, the population of Johannesburg was listed as 750 million when it should have been 7½ million. In the second, the population of Soweto was written as 250 million instead of 2½ million.

The error was the result of attempting to avoid using fractions in favor of using whole numbers. The decimal points were mistakenly dropped.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Have we made an error? Call 682-5311, ext. 130, and a correction will be published.

Soviets portray retreat from Afghanistan as victory

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet news media found a diplomatic victory in the retreat from Afghanistan, portraying the Soviet pullout as a triumphant end to eight years of aid to a neighbor in need.

The state-run press, while conceding that military victory proved elusive, nevertheless put a positive spin on the withdrawal that began Sunday.

"Homeward!" the Communist Party daily Pravda declared on its front page Monday, showing a smiling Afghan officer chatting with a Soviet major just before the major's departure for home.

"We were heading for this for a long time and with difficulty," Pravda wrote. "But life, with its imperious hand, moves aside the most sincere strivings and spoils the best-laid plans."

Pravda depicted the withdrawal as a diplomatic triumph over countries that supported the anti-communist guerrillas in their battle against President Najib's Moscow-backed government.

The party daily claimed that the April 14 Geneva accord that set the timetable for withdrawal was the result of opposition forces finally realizing that the war could not be won by military force alone.

"We never laid claim to a military victory in Afghanistan," Pravda said, adding: "If we speak of defeats and victories, then there is a victory, too-...The return of our sons is a victory for perestroika."

Perestroika refers to Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reform program aimed at rebuilding society.

Television news coverage, such as reports by the nightly news program Vremya, have focused on the ceremonial send-offs given the Soviet soldiers by the Afghan government.

Afghan soldiers and citizens were lined up on the streets of Jalalabad when the Soviets pulled out of their base there Sunday and in Kabul, where about 1,300 troops marched out on Monday, the first contingent to leave the country under the Geneva accord.

But while he ceremonies took place, gunfire could be heard in the distance, a reminder that the war continues. Guerrilla factions have vowed to continue their fight to topple the Marxist government.

The Jalalabad departure and a message from the Communist Party leadership congratulating the troops topped Vremya newscast Sunday night, but the ceremonies from Kabul were carried late in Monday's broadcast.

Soviet media also have looked at the human side of the war, noting the relief felt by families of soldiers serving in Afghanistan.

Notably absent from the coverage, however, has been any emotional display or questioning of the wisdom of having entered the war in the first place.

The party message delivered to the soldiers on Sunday thanked them for "fulfilling their internationalist duty" to the Afghan government, whose power remains threatened by guerrilla groups armed and trained by Pakistan and the United States.

Military court scolds Israelis for firing in village

■ Related story, Page 5A

JERUSALEM (AP) — A military court scolded two soldiers today for firing live ammunition in an Arab village where a teen-ager was killed. Troops shot and seriously wounded a Palestinian who tried to wrest a gun from a soldier.

An army spokesman said the shooting today occurred in the Kalandia refugee camp north of Jerusalem after soldiers tried to stop an Arab man from violating a curfew.

The man got out of his car and tried to take a gun from one of the soldiers, and the troops opened fire, wounding the Palestinian in the abdomen, the army said.

A doctor at Ramallah Hospital identified the man as Ali Asnan Youssef, 31, and said he also had bruises on the abdomen indicating he was beaten before the shooting.

Kalandia was one of four refugee camps and towns under curfew in the occupied territories on the second day of the three-day holiday that ends Ramadan, the Moslem holy month of fasting.

Underground leaders of a five-month-old uprising have urged Palestinians to make the holiday one of "national mourning" for the 190 Arabs killed in the rebellion.

In clashes Monday, troops killed two Palestinians in Gaza and the village of Azmut in the West Bank and 13 people were wounded.

The army said an officer was "severely scolded" and another soldier given a suspended jail sentence of 35 days for the shooting incident in Azmut.

Officers were still investigating whether the 15-year-old teen-ager reported killed in the confrontation was shot by soldiers.

An army spokesman said the soldier involved, who was not identified by name, fired against regulations and his officer did not stop him.

The army, meanwhile, lifted a four-day curfew from the West Bank's largest city of Nablus and from the Shati refugee camp in Gaza, but later declared the camp a closed military area, barring residents from leaving and reporters from entering.

Also today, the army said a military court had extended by 18 days the detention of an Arab woman from the village of Beita who could be tried for murder or attempted murder for the death of a Jewish teen-age girl there last month.

The woman, Muneira Salah Daoud, is suspected of stoning a Jewish guard, prompting him to fire his weapon, the army said.

An army investigation determined that the teen-ager, Tirza Porat, died of a bullet fired from the guard's weapon.

Israeli news reports said Ms. Daoud attacked the guard only after he shot and killed her brother during the melee.

Israeli officials have warned, meanwhile, that the Palestinian uprising was severely straining Israel's budget.

Monday Economics Minister Gad Yaacobi, meanwhile, told Israel army radio that the cost of putting down the uprising has severely strained Israel's budget.

"There is no choice but to add the minimum essential sums to the defense and police budget, but it is clear that we will not be able to absorb for long sums of hundreds of millions of shekels without this badly damaging the readiness of those two forces," Yaacobi said.

He gave no figure for the cost but Israeli news reports have put it at 800 million shekels or about $530 million.

Israeli army radio censors Baez song

JERUSALEM (AP) — Army radio canceled a scheduled live broadcast of a concert by American folk singer Joan Baez because she included an Israeli protest song it has banned, a station official said Monday.

The song "Shooting and Crying" was written by Israeli singer Si Himan after the Palestinian rebellion in the occupied territories began Dec. 8. It criticizes the army's use of beatings and live ammunition to quell the violence.

Shahar Ben Barak, head of the archives at army radio, said: "The station is an army radio station. We can't allow her to sing a song with a clear political line. The station has to be objective."

Because the song was included in the concert, the station taped the performance Sunday night and broadcast it later with the controversial selection edited out.

In an interview Monday with Israel television, Ms. Baez accused the station of censorship. She said she decided before coming to Israel to include the song.

Rights not matter of 'political convenience,' pope says

ASUNCION, Paraguay (AP) — Pope John Paul II, in one of his sternest lectures to a head of state, told President Alfredo Stroessner that the granting of human rights "is not a question of political convenience."

In an address Monday night to Stroessner, top government aides and foreign diplomats at the presidential palace, the pope said "respect for human rights...stems from the dignity of the person by virtue of his condition as a creature of God."

Stroessner, 75, has ruled Paraguay since a coup in 1954.

The pope also defended the church's role in social causes, saying, "You can't corner the church in its temples."

Today, the pope met for an hour with 1,000 priests, nuns and seminarians, then left by car for a Mass with peasant farmers in Villarrica, a regional agricultural center of 50,000 people 100 miles southeast of the capital.

In his meeting in the National Cathedral, the pontiff told the clergy they must give preference in their ministries to the poor "who in Paraguay, as in so many parts of Latin America, suffer every kind of privation."

"So many peasants, laborers and workers without employment or being exploited lack their badly needed bread," John Paul said.

John Paul flew from Peru to Paraguay, the last stop on his four-nation South American tour, and met privately with Stroessner for 30 minutes before delivering his speech.

Stroessner responded by declaring his government was democratically elected and saying, "Here we don't suffer the scourge of terrorism, hunger or drugs." He described Paraguay as a country "without social or political crises, tumult, street violence, political prisoners or hate."

Relations between the Stroessner government and the Vatican were strained last week when Paraguayan authorities canceled a meeting between the pope and a church-sponsored civic group that includes opposition figures. After talks with the church, the government lifted the ban, but members of Stroessner's governing Colorado Party were expected to boycott the meeting today.

The pontiff arrived in Paraguay Monday afternoon. Minutes later, police picked up a Roman Catholic priest, the Rev. Donald Bahlinger of Baton Rouge, La., and three Paraguayan labor and peasant activists as they left a downtown church in Asuncion, the capital. People had gathered in the church for a fast and prayer service protesting Stroessner's authoritarian rule.

Radio Caritas, Asuncion's Catholic-run station, later said Bahlinger had been released but there was no word on the whereabouts of the Paraguayans.

In his speech at the presidential palace, the pontiff said:

"It is the duty and obligation of political power to create and make possible those social conditions that favor the real and complete good of the person...respecting the legitimate freedom of individuals, families and intermediate groups."

"We live in democracy in Paraguay," Stroessner responded. He said the last presidential election in February occurred "in an atmosphere of order and civic maturity, without spilling a drop of blood."

Soviets air film critical of Stalin

MOSCOW (AP) — A film debating the leadership of Josef V. Stalin premiered on nationwide television after censors held it back for eight months and the director was reprimanded for putting the nation's history on public trial.

"The Process" discusses the late dictator's repression of real and imagined political opponents, mass deportation of people who resisted the spread of Soviet rule in the Baltic and the Ukraine and other topics.

Most of the Soviets interviewed in the two-hour documentary aired Monday night condemned Stalin's 29-year leadership. But there were others who saw him as the force that transformed a peasant nation ravaged by revolution and war into an industrial and military power.

"Instead of wasting time and talking about how to catch up with the highly developed countries, it was necessary to make people work," an academician identified as Medovar stated in the film. "How could it have been done? By persuasion? No, only in this way."

Anna Bukharin-Larina, widow of Nikolai I. Bukharin, had harsh words for Stalin. "He was cunning, perfidious, artful, vindictive," Ms. Larina said. "I consider him a criminal."

Bukharin, an early member of the Communist Party Politburo, was expelled in 1929 for disagreeing with Stalin and was executed in 1938 after a show trial.

Foreign press faces verbal fire in Philippines

By ROBERT H. REID

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Foreign reporters, once lauded for their role in the ouster of President Ferdinand Marcos, have gone from heroes to heels for alleged unflattering coverage of Corazon Aquino's Philippines.

In recent weeks, Philippine columnists and government officials have accused the foreign press of scaring off foreign investors, depicting Manila as a decadent, crime-ridden slum and even paying communist rebels to stage ambushes.

The foreign "press-bashing" is a far cry from the adulation heaped on the international press for its coverage of the anti-Marcos movement.

Many Filipinos believed the presence of so many foreign reporters was responsible for Marcos' tame response to the February 1986 uprising which brought his downfall.

A year after Marcos' ouster, a private group with government backing even awarded certificates to foreign reporters who covered the 1986 uprising, identifying them as "heroes of the revolution."

Philippine media have themselves been sharply critical of Mrs. Aquino's stewardship as the country grapples with such problems as the communist insurgency, widespread poverty, inefficient bureaucracy, deteriorating roads and bridges and a burgeoning population.

But the renewed sense of national pride that followed the Marcos downfall also has shortened the patience of many Filipinos for criticism by foreigners.

A former communist rebel, Gemma Magallona, was quoted as saying unidentified foreign reporters paid her group to stage an ambush in southeastern Luzon and even provided weapons and ammunition.

The report, published in the Philippine Daily Inquirer last week, drew little response until Defense Secretary Fidel V. Ramos said in a television interview Thursday that the military had evidence the journalists were from a European television network.

Later, the military identified the crew as from the British Broadcasting Corp. The BBC in London denied the allegation and said it had no crew in the country at the time of the ambush.

It appeared the charge may have been raised to frighten foreign reporters from contacts with the rebels and from visiting their camps.

The military has offered no evidence beyond the woman's allegation. But opposition Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile, a former defense minister, claimed the military had extensive files proving that foreign reporters often paid rebels to stage attacks in exchange for scoops.

"These foreign journalists go to the enemies of the government and ask them to ambush soldiers so they can show to the world that the country is in a state of turmoil," Enrile claimed.

Sen. Ernesto Herrera called for curbs on the foreign press if the former rebel's allegation was true.

The immigration chief today said foreign journalists who pay communist rebels to stage ambushes against government forces can be deported.

"If there is sufficient evidence against the aliens, and the reports can be verified, then, that would constitute a deportable offense under the immigration act," Immigration Commissioner Miriam Defensor-Santiago told reporters.

Mrs. Aquino's spokesman Teodoro Benigno, a former bureau chief of the French news agency Agence France-Presse, said the government would look into the allegation about the BBC.

But when pressed for comment, Benigno told Filipino reporters: "You are journalists yourselves. Do you believe that thing really happened?"

The Foreign Correspondent's Association of the Philippines has so far issued no statement on the charge, only the latest in a series of allegations against the international media.

Last week, Benigno's office claimed foreign reporters had painted a distorted picture of Manila as a crime-ridden city by reports on killings by communist rebels.

The presidential press office released figures which showed Manila with a lower crime rate than Hong Kong, Tokyo and New York.

Filipino critics claim foreign press reports, which often focus on the communist insurgency, coup attempts and political turmoil, have distorted the image of the country and frightened off foreign investors.

"The cumulative effect of such garbage that has lately been featured in some sectors of the U.S. press could not be lost on the American reader, who knows less and less of the real Philippines and her people and more of the seamy side as viewed from the gutter," wrote columnist Hernando Abaya.

Meese seeks public relations help after firing Eastland

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese III is turning to an outside public relations consultant to improve his image after firing the Justice Department's chief spokesman, prompting accusations by conservatives that he wants "blind loyalty."

Despite the department's annual $1.7 million public affairs budget, it is negotiating a contract with an employee of the public relations firm Hill & Knowlton to help depict Meese as a tough drug-buster.

Word of the planned outside public relations contract surfaced Monday along with the news that Meese had fired department spokesman Terry Eastland.

At a news conference, Eastland said that with Meese under criminal investigation since May 1987, "it would be difficult for me to be as aggressive as he might like" in defending the attorney general.

Meese said he simply thought it was time for "new leadership" and denied that Eastland's dismissal had anything to do with his own legal problems.

But department sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Eastland was fired Friday for refusing to provide unconditional support to Meese in the face of the criminal investigation.

Eastland

In a letter to Meese, Eastland said that "you have expressed to me your desire to have as director of public affairs someone willing to aggressively defend you against, in effect, any and all criticism...You have concluded that my efforts have not sufficed."

As soon as Eastland's firing was disclosed, the head of Meese's speech-writing unit, William Schambra, abruptly quit, saying he was "perplexed and deeply disturbed by the attorney general's decision."

The outside public relations contract is being negotiated with Charles Crawford of Hill & Knowlton's Washington office.

Hill & Knowlton chairman Bob Gray emphasized that the contract is to be a 60-day arrangement with Crawford personally on drug enforcement issues and that "it's not a contract with me or the firm."

However, he also said, "I've always felt that whoever had" Eastland's position "had too much to do on a day-to-day basis to spend much time on departmental problems."

Gray has close ties to the Reagan administration, but he denied having anything to do with Eastland's dismissal, saying it was "news to me."

NATION

Conservatives lamented the firing of Eastland, a staunch conservative who helped craft many of Meese's most controversial speeches on subjects ranging from civil rights policies to Supreme Court rulings.

"I think it is a severe blow to the overall effort of the Meese Justice Department to change the conventional intellectual wisdom," said conservative scholar Bruce Fein, a former department official. "Terry was devoted to challenging the liberal nostrums of the past."

Meese "has fallen prey to bad advice from those who confuse blind loyalty with good government," said Gary L. McDowell, a political conservative and Meese's former chief speechwriter. He called the firing "the single greatest mistake Ed Meese has made since becoming attorney general."

Meese told reporters that there "are times when you need new leadership in a particular division and that's what happened here."

He contradicted the statement in Eastland's letter about a perceived lack of a sufficiently aggressive defense, saying the dismissal "had nothing to do with a defense of me."

Meese replaced Eastland with his No. 2 spokesman, Patrick Korten, who told reporters he intends "to be very aggressive about every part of the job."

Meese's "ethical conduct has been entirely aboveboard," said Korten. "I think he's a very ethical man. I think he's a very moral man."

Independent counsel James McKay has been investigating the attorney general's ties to scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp. and a $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline project. Meese's longtime friend E. Robert Wallach is under indictment in the Wedtech case.

McKay also has subpoenaed records of the $40,000-a-year job held by Meese's wife, Ursula. Her salary with a Washington charity is being paid by a wealthy Washington family that leases offices to the Justice Department.

McKay is expected to issue a report shortly raising numerous questions about Meese's ethical behavior, and Eastland said "someone like me could not be indifferent to what might be contained or flow from the independent counsel's report."

Education Secretary William Bennett, who once wrote a book with Eastland, immediately offered him a job at the Department of Education.

Democrats face off in Oregon; Robertson returns to evangelism

Associated Press

Democrats Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson battled it out today in the Oregon primary, while Pat Robertson, who went from television preacher to presidential candidate, was returning to electronic evangelism.

Robertson, who abandoned his Republican campaign on Monday, was going back to work at his Christian Broadcasting Network, which he had left in order to run for president. He was scheduled to appear today on the show that made him famous — the "700 Club."

Robertson

Meanwhile, Republican nominee-to-be George Bush took angry exception to the most recent published report linking his staff to a drugs-and-arms network involving Nicaragua's Contra rebels. Bush hinted it would take expletives to express his feelings on the matter, and accused Sen. John Kerry of Massachusetts of leaking "information that's not fair or true."

Dukakis, the far-and-away Democratic front-runner, was favored to win today's contest in Oregon, which offered a prize of 45 delegates. But Jackson, who campaigned persistently and passionately in the state, was making a final appeal for votes today.

Oregon's secretary of state, Barbara Roberts, predicted a low turnout — about 50 percent of the state's registered voters — for today's primary. Only a few statewide items were on the ballot.

A poll taken last month gave Dukakis a wide lead in Oregon, but Jackson has spent much more time in the state.

"I want to win in Oregon...and take that momentum to California," Jackson said on a primary-eve stop in Eugene, Ore. California's contest, three weeks from today, is the granddaddy of all primaries, with 314 delegates.

Bush, who was campaigning today in California, told a rally at California State University at Fresno on Monday night that he couldn't wait to take on the Democratic nominee in November.

But a poll published today suggested Bush trailed Dukakis in a hypothetical matchup. According to the CBS-New York Times survey of 1,382 adults, taken by telephone from May 9-12, Dukakis was backed by 49 percent and Bush by 39 percent, with 10 percent undecided. The margin of error was 3 percentage points, CBS said Monday night.

That was in line with a poll by Louis Harris & Associates, released Monday, which gave Dukakis a 7-point lead. The poll, of 2,138 voters, put the hypothetical race at 50 percent for Dukakis, 43 percent for Bush and 8 percent undecided, also with a 3-point margin of error.

Bush, who won praise from Robertson as the latter left the presidential race, in turn wooed Robertson supporters in Washington state, where Robertson won a Super Tuesday straw poll.

The vice president said after Monday's "unity meeting" with Robertson backers: "I didn't have to pledge anything." But he praised Robertson's "family and faith" agenda.

Bush, campaigning in Washington state on Monday, was asked about a Newsweek report suggesting his national security adviser, Donald Gregg, had links to an arms and drugs network involving the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

"It's just pure unadulterated...I've got to watch my language," he said. Later, he termed the report "slanderous."

"I would challenge Sen. Kerry...to show some evidence and stop leaking out information that's not fair or true," Bush said in Seattle.

Kerry, who chairs a Senate subcommittee that is looking into the allegations, could not be reached for comment Monday night, but he was quoted in today's editions of The Washington Post as saying neither he nor his staff leaked the information.

Bush was also fending off questions about embattled Attorney General Edwin Meese and Panama's military strongman, Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The vice president, who has advocated the death penalty for some drug crimes, was asked by reporters in Seattle on Monday whether that should apply to Noriega, who is under federal indictment on drug charges. He declined to comment.

The administration's dealings with Noriega have been raised as a campaign issue by the Democrats.

The vice president, also asked by reporters in Seattle about Meese's firing of his chief spokesman Terry Eastland, again declined to comment. Eastland said the attorney general, who is under criminal investigation, felt his spokesman had not been aggressive enough in defending him.

"Meese has abandoned justice," Jackson said as he campaigned in Oregon.

Israeli-Arab peace plan discussed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A planned meeting today between President Reagan and Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres aims at breathing life into a stymied U.S. plan for peace talks between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Reagan, who has warned Israel and Jordan against rejecting the peace plan, is expected to stress his view that the U.S. blueprint is the only solution to the five-month rebellion in which 180 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli troops.

But neither side held out much hope that Reagan would be able to budge the plan initiated earlier this year by Secretary of State George Shultz.

"There are several new ideas, but they're minor and we don't expect great progress," said a senior Israeli official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. He declined to discuss the ideas, saying they were not meaningful in the short run "but incremental in the big plan."

Peres explored these ideas with Shultz at a meeting Monday and was to continue discussions with him at two sessions today. Shultz will bring Peres' ideas to Jordan and Egypt when he visits the region on his fourth peace shuttle of the year starting June 3.

Peres supports the Shultz plan, which calls for Arab-Israeli peace talks to be held under the auspices of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council — the United States, Soviet Union, China, England and France.

But his rival in Israel's fractious governing coalition, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, has rejected the formula out of concern that the five powers would pressure Israel into relinquishing lands it captured from the Arabs in the 1967 Mideast war.

General elections scheduled in Israel for November are expected to serve as a referendum on the plan.

Underscoring support for his stand, leading administration officials attended a luncheon in Peres' honor hosted by Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arad. The guest list included Shultz — who toasted Peres' "creativity" in searching for peace formulas — as well as Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, White House chief of staff Howard Baker and Senate leaders.

Peres aides say he is counting on this show of support for his election campaign.

But at a speech Monday night to some 2,000 pro-Israel supporters, Peres sought to underscore the unity in his country rather than the divisiveness, saying Israelis are united in their rejection of a Palestinian state.

"We shall not support a Palestinian state equipped with Russian weapons and Russian advisers," he told the annual conference of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, the major pro-Israel lobbying group in the United States.

Peres said the "best solution" for Palestinian self-determination is within a confederation with Jordan, which already has a Palestinian majority.

His view reflects a plan put forth by Reagan in September 1982 and rejected at the time by Shamir's predecessor, former Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Peres also said Israelis would never return to Israel's 1967 borders, thereby rejecting the main Arab demand that Israel cede the territories it captured from Jordan, Syria and Egypt.

Peres' Labor Party favors giving back some lands but keeping enough to ensure defensible borders, while Shamir's Likud bloc rejects any land concessions.

At a meeting with House and Senate leaders, Peres also underscored the need to launch peace talks.

Congressional aides present at the closed-door meeting said Peres also expressed concern at Saudi Arabia's purchase of Chinese-made intermediate-range missiles. The CSS-2 rockets have a range of 1,800 miles and could reach Israel.

Lawyers begin arguments in IUD trial

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — G.D. Searle & Co. withheld information about the Cooper-7 intrauterine device's potential for causing infertility, attorneys maintained as they prepared to begin their case against the manufacturer today.

"The evidence will clearly show that the company was not telling the doctors or the women what they knew and, in fact, was telling them things that were contrary to what they knew or had every reason to know," said Roger P. Brosnahan, one of a team of lawyers from the Minneapolis law firm Robins, Zelle, Larson & Kaplan.

After the Copper-7 was approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in 1974, Searle sold between 300,000 and 400,000 of the IUDs in the United States annually. It was taken off the U.S. market in 1986.

Searle denies its Copper-7 IUD caused any injury.

Brosnahan's law firm, representing more than 30 women in separate Copper-7 lawsuits, also represented plaintiffs in earlier litigation against Dalkon Shield maker A.H. Robins Co., settling 198 cases for a total of $38 million.

A jury of five women and three men, including two unspecified alternates, was chosen Monday to hear the U.S. District Court civil suit brought by Esther R. Kociemba, 29, and her husband, William, of the Melrose area northwest of St. Paul.

The trial is expected to last up to two months.

Attorneys were to begin presenting their opening arguments today.

The Kociembas are seeking unspecified damages for injuries Mrs. Kociemba allegedly suffered as a result of using a Copper-7 IUD in 1977 and 1978.

According to the suit, which sought $1 million when it was originally filed in 1984, Mrs. Kociemba experienced infertility, illnesses and "great pain, suffering and mental anguish."

While the Kociemba case is the 18th against Searle involving the Copper-7 nationwide to go to trial, it is the first taken up by Robins Zelle. Brosnahan said it will introduce internal Searle documents showing the company marketed the IUDs without regard for women's health and safety.

Jobless rate drop Reagan's legacy

As President Reagan enters the final months of his eight years in the White House, the healthy economy that has been the hallmark of his administration continues. That was one of the reasons we supported his candidacy nearly eight years ago.

The latest evidence pointing to a robust economy came a few days ago with announcement that unemployment in the United States had fallen to a 14-year low. Only 5.1 percent of the nation's work force was unemployed during April, the U.S. Labor Department announced. Not since the administration of former President Gerald Ford has the unemployment rate been so low. The lowest it fell during the administration of President Jimmy Carter was 5.6 percent in May of 1979.

A total of 62.3 percent of the nation's work force, the highest figure in history, is currently employed. The president has much of which to be proud as he winds down his eight-year term.

The biggest job gains were registered by adult males, whose unemployment rate fell to 4.6 percent. The 4.8 percent unemployment rate of women held firm from the month before. Obviously more must be done to cut the 12.2 percent unemployment rate of blacks and the 9.3 percent jobless rate for Hispanics. The 15.9 percent unemployment rate for teen-agers — who generally occupy the low end of the wage scale because they are still developing their occupational skills — shows that Congress may be moving too fast in legislation that would boost the minimum wage from $3.35 an hour to $5.05 during the next four years.

Many of the new jobs reflected in the lower unemployment rate are the result of the manufacturing segment of the economy. Factory employment increased by 45,000 jobs in April, mostly in export-related businesses.

Of course, when you are talking about the economy, there are limits even on the good things. As the unemployment rate sinks, economists say this means the labor pool is shrinking. That phenomenon, they say, means wages will soon start to climb, with their inflation.

But to those Americans who want to work, the lower unemployment rate means they probably already have a job or are on the brink of finding one. President Reagan could not ask for a better legacy to leave the nation.

Greece playing both sides in gulf war

WASHINGTON — No matter which nation emerges victorious in the Iran-Iraq war, Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou will be prepared. His government has been selling munitions to both sides in the Persian Gulf conflict.

Jack Anderson

We reported in December 1986, that Greece was regularly selling weapons to Iran for cash or bartering them for crude oil. The payment was being delivered to a high-level official in the Greek Ministry of Defense. The oil was either refined in Greece or sold on the world market at a large profit.

Now we have documentary evidence that the state-owned arms company in Greece has branched out to do business with Iraq, too. It has been scouring the world on both sides of the Iron Curtain in search of munitions to fulfill contracts with Iraq. Ironically, some of the munitions were bought from Israel for later sale to Iraq, one of Israel's deadliest enemies. And some of the arms ending up in Iraq apparently came from the United States.

The internal documents, all dated in 1986, are on the letterhead of the Greek government-owned munitions firm, PYRKAL. They are primarily applications to the Greek defense ministry for permission to buy munitions and parts from foreign countries. Each would authorize George Haloftis, director of PYRKAL's production plant, to carry out the transaction. Each document states that the purchase will be made to fulfill a 1985 contract with Iraq.

We have also seen two of the approvals that came back to PYRKAL from the Greek defense ministry during the time that PYRKAL was busy shopping for the Iraqis. The approvals are marked "confidential-urgent," and they authorize PYRKAL to buy munitions components from the United States. American policy prohibits the resale of American munitions to either of the "belligerents" in the Persian Gulf war without U.S. permission. At our request, officials at the State Department and the Defense Department searched their files to see whether Athens had been granted permission to resell U.S. munitions to Iraq. No record of any such action could be found.

This may explain why the two official approvals for the purchase of American munitions don't mention Iraq. When PYRKAL asked for permission from the ministry of defense to buy from the United States, the applications specified Iraq. When the defense ministry sent back the permission, it said only that the munitions were for a 1985 contract with a "foreign country."

We can say with certainty that the destination was Iraq because we have copies of both the applications to buy from the United States for the contract with Iraq, and the defense ministry purchase approvals to buy from the United States for an unnamed foreign country. The terms match in all specifics.

All items mentioned in the documents we have seen were components for 105mm howitzer rounds. The applications from PYRKAL include one dated March 21, 1986 to buy 240,000 detonators for the 105mm shells from the United States "for the program for Iraq."

PYRKAL also asked permission to buy 366,000 units of fuse components and 160,150 fuses from the United States in April, May and July 1986.

In June, PYRKAL asked to buy 35,000 smoke projectiles from Israel to fulfill "the contract with Iraq."

The documents also show that PYRKAL arranged purchases from Italy, Spain, Holland, England, Germany, Albania and Bulgaria. All of the applications specified that the munitions would go to Iraq. They included shells, cartridge cases, gunpowder and other explosive materials.

We attempted unsuccessfully to reach George Haloftis in Greece. We also asked the Greek Embassy in Washington for a statement from Haloftis and for a Greek government response to this story. An official spokesman would say only this: "In its export transactions, Greece fully complies with its obligations arising from international agreements. It is strange that a matter which was definitively closed in 1986 is being raised again."

THE CHECK'S IN THE MAIL — The issues that divide nations are not always monumental ones. For instance, the State Department has been at odds with the government of Uganda for four years because a Ugandan citizen who received helicopter pilot training in Texas apparently didn't pay his bill.

According to an official Ugandan government audit of its Washington embassy, the student pilot "cunningly got the embassy to underwrite the cost of his training. ... The embassy has so far not settled the bill which stands at $16,882." The Texas flight instructor contacted the State Department which contacted the Ugandan embassy. The auditor advised, "For the sake of a good relationship between this country and the USA, I would recommend that a way of settling this matter amicably be found as soon as possible."

MINI-EDITORIAL — Washington D.C. Mayor Marion Barry has promised a $1,000 prize to every high school student in the city graduating in the top 10 percent of his or her class next month. Barry isn't sure where the $550,000 will come from, but he will find the money. Last year, Barry gave savings bonds to class valedictorians and salutatorians. The noble goal is to encourage urban students to hang in there while those around them are dropping out. Before you take Barry to task for checkbook education, remember that Washington is a city where children are murdering other children for drugs, boom boxes and fancy clothes. Rewarding the student who stands out under such circumstances is not a bad idea. In the process of excelling at school, the student motivated by cash may learn a more valuable lesson — that education is its own reward.

Take stock of children

When was the last time you, as parents, had a friendly conversation with your children? Do you really know them or is there a wall between you? Was your conversation just from your side? Was it limited to bawling them out and considering only your opinions and feelings? Opinions and feelings need to be discussed and not forcefed. Were all your words, "Don't do this. Don't do that"?

Take stock. Look at your children no matter what age and say, "He is a human being with thoughts and desires." Do you know what they are? Do you know whether he is thinking good thoughts, troubled thoughts, bad thoughts or fearful thoughts?

Be a listener and let your kids talk. Yes, it's hard to do. Yes, it takes time away from what you want to do. But oh, if you do, what joy!

If your child is in trouble, help him no matter what. Be there. Stick with him. He is alone. Be with him, and help him work it through.

He might be moody and you say, "What's the use?" Don't give up. Stay with it. They'll thank you later. Pray about your children. When words have no effect, prayer does.

You may not believe in prayers, but test it out. I dare you.

Ballet Midland a delight

To those readers who missed the performances of Ballet Midland on April 29-30 and May 1st, my deepest regrets!

Our city has a very fine corps of young dancers who performed superbly under the direction of Diane Gaddy. The staff of Ballet Midland was a more than creditable addition as principal dancers.

The production of La Fille Mal Gardee, a full-length comedy ballet first presented in Bordeaux, France, in 1789, was a delightful ending to an enjoyable evening. Ms. Gaddy is not only a prima ballerina and creative choreographer, but a talented actress as well! Midland is fortunate to have her and her staff at the helm of this phase of our performing arts.

You will be rewarded if you attend one of the next performances.

Lock program successful

The Midland Crime Prevention Unit would like to publicly extend a big thank you to Casa de Amigos' director, Lael Pitts, and her dedicated staff for their contribution toward the "Lock and Security Awareness Program" which was completed in April 1988.

Casa's staff screened all the applicants and filled out numerous necessary forms for them. Their expertise in dealing with family necessities helped the program to become very successful and we feel that between both agencies, we touched many families in need.

'Night' proved inspiring

I was privileged to attend the "Night to Honor Israel" at the Holiday Inn on Monday, May 2. I have never witnessed such a thrilling and meaningful program. It was the finest example of how people of different religious backgrounds can come together as one in mutual goals. It was true interfaith dialogue!

I want to commend Jack and Judy Stone who produced this event. I also want to praise the city of Midland for the caliber of its citizens. Kudos to you all!

I hope to produce a similar event in my city, Waco!

U.S. needs strong president in White House

I don't think we've had a really good president in the White House since Truman and Eisenhower and I'll tell you why.

A president is the chief executive officer and has three tasks he must do: think, make appointments, and make decisions. None of those can be delegated. All of them have been delegated in recent administrations.

Charley Reese

The first thing a president-elect should do is bid farewell to his campaign staff. Under no circumstances should campaign people be brought into the government. Most recent presidents have, however, and their administrations have suffered for it.

The second thing a president should do is reduce the White House staff to no more than 15 or 20 people. A president can either run his staff or let his staff run him and it is impossible to run a staff that numbers 1,800 to 2,000 people. If Franklin Roosevelt could run the country and fight a global war with a White House staff of 15, then a modern president should be able to do it, too.

Large staffs become bureaucracies and bureaucracies decrease efficiency. The more people between a decision-maker and the people whose job is to execute the decision, the more opportunity there is for delay or miscommunication.

A president must control his own schedule. He must leave himself time to think. He must be free to talk to the people he wants to talk with and to go places he wants to go. Any president who allows his staff to fill up his calendar is being run by his staff.

Nor should a president allow his staff to determine what his options are. Presidents who choose options from a multiple choice list prepared by their staff are being run by their staff.

A president should make all of his key appointments personally and he should insist that everyone in his administration either follow his orders or get out. The business of different members of an administration pursuing their own separate agendas is an intolerable absurdity. The president should make clear to the Cabinet members that they are, as the Constitution says, his advisors and not rulers of their own fiefdoms.

He should also insist they trim their own staffs and eliminate all the trappings of imperial government such as private dining rooms. Ours is a republic, not a monarchy.

A president should also remove the White House press corps from the White House grounds. He should put a press office in another building and post his schedule, copies of his speeches, and notices of his appointments. That's all the press needs to know. He should end the business of having a mob shout questions at him everytime he walks out the door. An imperial press is just as bad as an imperial government.

At the same time the president should root out of government all but essential secrecy. There is one and only one justification for secrecy and that is to prevent an enemy from gaining information which could be harmful to the United States.

State and Commerce, however, are worse offenders than Defense. For some reason, they think diplomatic and economic relationships with the Soviet Union and other foreign powers should be kept secret from the American people. They refuse, for example, to reveal the details of U.S. corporate business dealings with the Soviet Union. That is pure hogwash. Any information the Soviet Union has, the American people should have. After every negotiation or meeting, including summits, transcripts of what transpired should be made public. There is no valid reason on God's earth why what our government has communicated to the Soviet government should be kept secret from the American people.

Unless the information will provide a military advantage to our foreign enemies and is not known by them, we should insist that there be no secrets in American government.

Personally, I'm thirsty for a strong leader in the White House, a man with the energy and intelligence of a Truman or a Teddy Roosevelt. I've had it with media creatures and professional politicians.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, May 17, the 138th day of 1988. There are 228 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 17, 1954, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its landmark Brown vs. the Board of Education of Topeka, Kan., ruling. The court unanimously reversed its 1896 "separate but equal" Plessy vs. Ferguson decision, declaring that racially segregated public schools were inherently unequal.

On this date:

In 1792, the New York Stock Exchange was founded by brokers meeting under a tree located on what is now Wall Street.

In 1814, Norway's constitution was signed, providing for a limited monarchy.

In 1875, the first Kentucky Derby was run at Churchill Downs in Louisville. The winner was Aristides.

In 1938, the radio quiz show "Information, Please!" made its debut on the NBC Blue Network.

In 1938, Congress passed the Vinson Naval Act, providing funds for a two-ocean navy.

In 1939, Britain's King George VI and Queen Elizabeth arrived in Quebec on the first visit to Canada by reigning British sovereigns.

In 1940, the Nazis occupied Brussels, Belgium, during World War II.

In 1946, President Harry S. Truman seized control of the nation's railroads, delaying a threatened strike by engineers and trainmen.

In 1948, the Soviet Union recognized the new state of Israel.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Learning to counter sensitivity's important

I was watching Connie Chung's television special "Stressed to Kill" when she interviewed Indiana basketball coach Bobby Knight and he made the statement, "If rape is inevitable, just relax and enjoy it."

Grizzard

Knight knew immediately he had made a mistake, and he appealed to Connie Chung "not to make anything of that," or words to that effect.

But she did not comply. Knight's remark was left in the interview and now we have another in a long series of people getting into deep trouble for what comes out of their mouths.

I doubt seriously Knight will be fired — there would be a revolution in basketball-crazy Indiana if that happened — but his words have been denounced by the Indiana president, not to mention various groups of feminists.

I'm not going to defend Bobby Knight. He seems to me a pompous, driven man with an awful temper and an even worse vocabulary.

Still, Knight did appeal to Connie Chung — his way of apologizing, I think — not to make anything of the comment because he had no deep-seated ill-intent.

His comment was his way of saying, "If they're going to run you out of town anyway, smile and people might think you were leading a parade."

Knight's example was crude, but not worth the commotion it has stirred. But loose lips have sunk a lot of ships lately.

Al Campanaris got fired from the Los Angeles Dodgers for remarks he made about black people.

Jimmy the Greek did the same thing and CBS canned him.

Jesse Jackson made a remark about Jews years ago, and New York Mayor Ed Koch has yet to let him forget about it.

Again. Bobby Knight shouldn't have said what he said, given the sensitivity involved in the example he used.

And Al Campanaris was wrong, as was Jimmy the Greek, Jesse Jackson and Happy Chandler.

But how far is this thing going to go? Are we going to become so sensitive to such a point free speech and free thought are ultimately going to suffer?

Are we going to become a society where we have to warn one another, "You'd better watch what you say"?

Steve Cokely, an aide to Chicago mayor Eugene Sawyer, was fired recently for making alleged racist remarks. Cokely, who is black, said Jewish doctors were infecting blacks with AIDS. He called Christopher Columbus a "Hispanic Jew" and he said the Christian cross is a "symbol of white supremacy."

But rather than cast people like Mr. Cokely out of our midst, might we rather offer him a hand and say, "Steve, you got a right to your opinions, but let's try to reason together and let us show you where you're wrong"?

We better do something. The way we're handling this sort of thing now serves only to divide us further.

Bill becomes vehicle for Noriega deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is trying to pass a Pentagon budget bill that has become a vehicle for anti-drug efforts and changes in U.S. policy toward Panama and strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega.

"We'd like to get this done and I think we can, but we have these two Panama-related amendments to finish first," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said Monday.

Both amendments were aimed at Noriega, who has been indicted on U.S. drug trafficking charges. The Reagan administration is negotiating with him to drop the charges if he agrees to leave power, a plan that has drawn intense criticism in Congress.

The Senate was scheduled to consider the amendments today and leaders then hoped for a final vote approving the huge bill.

One amendment, proposed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., would provide that no U.S. aid be sent to Panama until Noriega leaves power and until President Reagan certifies that no Soviet or Cuban troops are in the Central American nation.

The second proposal, offered by Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, opposes any deal in which U.S. drug trafficking charges would be dropped.

"The American people are never going to understand if we dismiss indictments against Noriega," Dole said. His amendment is a non-binding, "sense of the Senate" resolution.

He said dropping the charges against Noriega would "undermine the so-called war on drugs."

Also unresolved was a separate proposal by Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., which would let courts impose the death penalty on drug dealers convicted of killing people.

"The American people are entitled to this protection," said D'Amato. "I think we have to find a clearer message for those who deal in drugs...The death-dealing drug lords fear no one."

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said D'Amato's proposal had nothing specifically to do with the Pentagon budget and should be considered in another forum. Senate rules do not require that amendments be germane.

Levin also opposed the amendment because he said studies have shown that people sometimes are wrongly convicted of crimes.

"The main reason I'm opposed to capital punishment is that you cannot correct your mistakes," Levin said. "Time and time again, we've found that we've convicted the wrong man."

The overall bill authorizes Pentagon spending of $299.5 billion in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Senate passage would send it to a House-Senate conference committee to be reconciled with the House version of the Pentagon budget. Although both measures propose $299.5 billion, there are a number of major differences.

Warden Ted Wallman surveys damage in the "east dormitory" at Mack Alford Correctional Center in Stringtown, Okla. after hostages were released and prisoners surrendered.

Guard reflects on hostage ordeal

STRINGTOWN, Okla. (AP) — At least one of eight guards taken hostage by inmates in a 2½-day prison siege says he may not go back to work because of the ordeal.

"I made it through Vietnam, and I almost got killed in my own hometown," said Corrections officer Ron Scott, who along with Sgt. Harold Yoder, was released as the siege ended shortly before noon Monday. "I'm just glad I'm alive. I'm going to try to live one day at a time."

Meanwhile, prison officials today continued to investigate the riot and assess millions of dollars worth of damages at the Mack Alford Correctional Center in Stringtown while state lawmakers, who say the inmates should live with the problem they created, vow to take their time in rebuilding the medium-security prison.

And other, already overcrowded, state prisons are creating space for inmates displaced when their dormitories were damaged or destroyed in the riot.

Scott, 36, and Yoder were held the longest of eight guards who were taken captive by knife-wielding inmates at Mack Alford late Friday.

Scott provided the first detailed account of the hostage taking.

He said he was attending a briefing Friday night before taking his position in one of the guard towers when a disturbance began.

Officials said one guard was taken hostage as authorities attempted to round up three inmates for discipline following a fight over a theft earlier in the day.

"They wanted us to go out there and see what could be done about it," Scott said.

Scott said he and other guards went to a building known as the "west dormitory" in an effort to keep the disturbance from spreading. But 45 minutes later, Scott said, inmates in the adjacent east dormitory went on a rampage.

"We heard a bunch of shouting going on and windows breaking and things being toppled over, it sounded like," Scott said.

Scott said he and six other officers barricaded themselves inside the dormitory by putting a filing cabinet against a metal door while the rioting inmates outside pushed against it. Officers kept the door closed, but inmates got in through a side door, Scott said.

"Before I knew it, several inmates came in with knives," Scott said.

The seven captive guards were moved in a line to a third building. Scott said he saw the first captured guard, Jeff Byington, sitting with his hands tied behind him and wearing inmate clothing.

Scott said about 10 to 12 inmates were directly involved taking the guards hostage. The officers were placed in several cells in a basement detention unit, Scott said.

Over the next several hours all but three of the guards were released, but the inmates threatened Scott's life to convince negotiators to provide them with food.

"They had me down on my knees and they had the knife at my throat," Scott said. "At those times, my heart kind of skipped a beat. My hands got a little sweaty."

Over the next hours, Scott was ferried back and forth between two buildings under inmate control, he said.

During that time, a knife was held to his throat on two other occasions, once when inmates feared snipers waited on an adjacent building.

Scott, a Choctaw Indian, said he feared for himself and fellow captive Capt. Lewis McGee, a black man who was released about 10 p.m. Sunday. Inmates had displayed "White Power" signs from the building they held. Yoder is white.

"If there was anybody who was going to get killed, it was going to be us two," Scott said.

Scott said at least one black inmate was among his captors, but he said many of those participating in the hostage taking blamed black inmates for the trouble that led to the uprising.

Scott said his captors treated him well, for the most part, offering him food and providing fans to ward off heat and humidity. Temperatures were in the 90s.

Scott, a former construction worker, said he has not decided whether to return to his job at the prison.

"I'll just have to sit and think about it a couple of days — take a week off," Scott said.

Scott's wife Theresa and sons, 11 and 13, held a long vigil outside the prison fence waiting for his release.

PTL to sell park, keep TV ministries

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — PTL said it has issued a final plea for supporters to save the ministry from liquidation under a bankruptcy plan its fallen founder Jim Bakker called a "literal giveaway."

PTL, in a revised reorganization plan filed Monday, outlined plans to sell Heritage USA in Fort Mill and then lease the property required to carry on its church and network television ministries.

"Because of past scandals and credibility problems, PTL and other television ministries are facing extinction," said the document signed by PTL trustee David Clark.

Although the plan filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Columbia provides for the sale of all PTL assets to pay creditors, it leaves an opening for PTL supporters to "save the ministry" by increasing contributions to forestall a complete liquidation.

"If the ministry does not receive such support, it is possible that it will be lost forever," the plan said.

Bakker, who founded PTL in 1974, developed the Christian retreat and cable television network and then lost it in March 1987 after a sex scandal, reacted with disdain to the developments.

"I am deeply saddened that PTL trustee, former CBN executive David Clark, would attempt a literal giveaway of PTL and Heritage USA to a secular organization," Bakker said Monday in a recorded message on the answering machine at his Palm Springs, Calif., home.

Several potential buyers have expressed interest in the retreat. One is George Shinn, a sports entrepreneur from Charlotte, N.C., who wants to build a minor league baseball stadium and a training center for his fledgling National Basketball Association team.

PTL, located about 10 miles south of Charlotte, has an estimated $130 million in assets, some of which is contested. PTL has been under protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code for 11 months.

On April 21, the Internal Revenue Service revoked its tax-exempt status because of an audit that concluded Bakker and his aides profited excessively from donations to the ministry and because much of PTL's operations are commercial rather than ministerial.

Also last month, Clark told U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds that PTL would not be able to pay the $5.7 million initial installment on its debt by May 2 as required in the original bankruptcy plan filed in December.

Reynolds then ordered PTL to come up with a liquidation plan to pay creditors.

In the revised plan, PTL blamed unspecified scandals and unforeseen attacks on television ministries for the inability to raise enough money to pay its debts.

"Due to various scandals and concerns over the use of contributions, donations dropped drastically," the document said.

Under the revised plan, Reynolds would appoint a board of three businessmen to preside over PTL as a self-liquidating trust, said David West, PTL director of public relations.

The amended plan establishes a priority for the sale of $160 million in assets in a 60-month period and will authorize leasing of ministry assets to a separate, non-profit corporation called Heritage Ministries Inc., West said.

The next major step for PTL will come June 16 when Reynolds hears objections to the amended plan.

Kodak agrees to $150 million pact

CHICAGO (AP) — Eastman Kodak Co. plans to buy ads in 100 Sunday newspapers detailing a $150 million settlement that should end a class-action lawsuit covering at least 4.2 million owners of its obsolete instant cameras.

The settlement announced Monday gives each U.S. owner between $50 and $70 in cash and coupons.

Kodak stopped selling instant cameras and instant film after a federal court in 1985 said the company had violated patents held by Polaroid Corp. Millions of people own one of the 39 cameras that are now useless.

"From the start, cur primary objective has been to make an attractive exchange program available to our Kodak customers," said Wilbur J. Prezzano, group vice president of Kodak's Photographic Products division.

"We have worked hard to help reach this settlement, and we are pleased with the results," Prezzano said.

Under the proposed $150 million agreement, filed with Cook County Circuit Judge Thomas Rakowski, instant-camera owners would receive $50, $55, $60 or $70 in cash and Kodak coupons, depending on the model of their instant camera.

Cash and coupons will be disbursed when Rakowski gives his final approval to the settlement, which is expected Sept. 19.

The proposed settlement is limited to U.S. owners.

When Kodak's instant film was no longer available, a group of Chicago attorneys, led by Burton I. Weinstein, filed a class-action lawsuit on behalf of camera owners in 1986.

Kodak, based in Rochester, N.Y., said the settlement could cover as many 16 million people since the company made that many instant cameras for domestic sale between 1976 and 1985.

AIDS hearing marked by protests

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Civil Rights Commission hearing on AIDS turned surreal when gay protesters in clown masks hummed "America the Beautiful," shouted insults at witnesses and commissioners and held up wristwatches to denote that "time is running out" for AIDS victims.

Monday's hearing became so heated that one witness said he would rather die "in the street" than in the hospice run by another, and a third said gay pressure groups are thwarting public health efforts.

The hearing also featured feuding commission members denouncing each other's remarks and tangling with witnesses over racism, "sexual addiction" and other issues with little direct relation to the subject at hand — AIDS and discrimination.

At one point, the 65 gay protesters in clown masks turned their backs on the proceedings to show their disdain for the commission and its efforts.

"This is a waste of time," said Duncan Osborne, one of the protesters. "This is a waste of money."

Osborne said the money would be better spent testing new drugs or educating people on how to avoid getting AIDS.

The commission proposed its hearings, part of a larger study, in a memo that discussed state sodomy laws in the same footnote as Biblical denunciations of homosexuality.

Osborne and others said the commission could play a legitimate role investigating employment, housing, health care and insurance discrimination against AIDS victims. But they said the panel has no business reopening debate on how AIDS is transmitted or hearing inflammatory testimony from witnesses who are not medical or public health experts.

Jim Johnson, executive director of a religious hospice in Long Beach, Calif., called Beyond Rejection, said homosexual activists had bombed his hospice and threatened him because he had left behind "the narcissism and contempt of my earlier life" as a homosexual.

Jeffrey Levi, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, noted the prevailing medical belief that a homosexual orientation cannot be changed.

"If I had to make the choice between dying in the street and dying in his hospice, I'd choose dying in the street," Levi said.

Dr. David Pence, a University of Minnesota radiologist, Vietnam war protester and civil rights worker, alleged that gay pressure groups have thwarted public health efforts to stop the spread of AIDS.

"Twenty-five years ago it was Southern bullies in jeans that we had to fight. Now it's Northern smoothies in ties," Pence said.

An outraged Levi demanded a retraction and an apology.

"He has just likened us...to the Ku Klux Klan," Levi said. "That is so deeply offensive that I question whether I can continue to sit at the same table with him."

He said gay people oppose reporting techniques which identify victims by name because they fear discrimination of all types, even prosecution for violating sodomy laws, if anyone finds out they are victims or carriers of AIDS.

If there were federal laws barring discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, Levi said, "we wouldn't have to be here." He said the commission should recommend that type of law and recommend extending to the private sector a law barring discrimination against handicapped people who are not a public health threat.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said public health officials had not been influenced by any lobbying groups in determining AIDS policy or interpreting AIDS research.

"It is totally preposterous to even imagine that any scientist I know-...would take a stand on how the virus is transmitted based on pressure," he said. "The evidence is overwhelming."

Teen-age pregnancy, babies with AIDS and incest in migrant families were among the concerns discussed by commissioners and witnesses. So was "sexual addiction," a condition Pence described as likely to lead to AIDS and defined as engaging in "compulsive coital behavior outside of marriage."

Friendly face reminds farmer of his wife

LUCKEY, Ohio (AP) — For more than a decade, a friendly face and message painted on the side of Joe and Gertrude Carpenter's white barn has graced the quiet Wood County landscape and greeted travelers.

It has served as a landmark and way station, of sorts, for motorists seeking directions or shelter from driving snowstorms.

The barn needs painting now, said Carpenter, a 75-year-old retired farmer. But when the new coat's on this summer, he's going to have the smiling face, the friendly "Hi!" and the words Joe and Gertie repainted on the side of the barn.

After all, the message is a sign of love for his wife, who died last year after a long illness.

"Everytime I look at it, I think of the old memories and the people who stopped and admired it," he said.

"We were married 51 years. It's a loss. We did everything and went everyplace together," Carpenter said. "I miss her every day."

The 18-foot-wide smiling face is visible from Interstate 75 and Ohio 582, which runs from Haskins to Woodville in northwestern Ohio. Carpenter's place is about 20 miles south of Toledo.

The face on the barn was his wife's idea. Mrs. Carpenter, known as Gertie, decided the face would be a fun gift to give her husband to celebrate their 41st wedding anniversary in 1976. A year later, a sign painter added the names Joe and Gertie.

"People laughed when they first saw it. But it has become a local landmark," he said.

The barnyard greeting has often been photographed and has become a point of reference when local folks give directions. Curious motorists often visit the Carpenter farm to hear the story of the anniversary gift.

"People stop and say they want to meet Joe and Gertie. They ask about the face. They say looking at it makes their day. We've gotten a lot of enjoyment out of it over the years," Carpenter said. "People tell me, 'Don't ever take that face off the barn.' "

He said his wife was a trusting person who opened the house to stranded motorists.

During a 1978 blizzard, he said, 14 people spent the night in the Carpenter home.

"I remember that like it was yesterday. All these people couldn't go any place because the highway was closed. It was either spend the night here or in their cars," he said. "Then she got up in the morning and cooked breakfast for everybody."

She also had a keen sense of humor.

For some years, two mannequins sat on the front porch of the Carpenter home. Sometimes, the mannequins sat there like a young couple courting. Mrs. Carpenter, he said, changed their clothing with the seasons.

Motorists did double takes as they passed the porch. But when Gertie sold one of the mannequins, the courtship was over.

These days, Carpenter spends most of his time making wooden clocks and ornaments. Two of his three children live nearby.

Mars' river beds could show evidence of life

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ancient rivers that once flowed across an Earthlike Mars may have harbored primitive forms of life that flourished briefly before the red planet turned bitterly cold and dry, scientists say.

Steve Squyers, a planetary scientist at Cornell University, said that most evidence now indicates that Mars and the Earth were very similar shortly after their formation some 4.5 billion years ago and that conditions that led to the formation of life on Earth may also have existed on Mars.

Squyers was among the scientists discussing planetary research at a meeting Monday of the American Geophysical Union. In an interview, he said the most likely place for finding proof of Martian life is soil laid down billions of years ago when water is thought to have flowed freely across the planet's surface.

"We know that life developed on Earth very early and we know that conditions on Mars very early were, if not Earthlike, were very much more Earthlike than they are at the present," Squyers said.

No evidence of life on Mars has been found so far in studies by satellites and by robot craft that landed there. But Squyers and others believe Mars holds out that possibility, and even if life never evolved there, that finding also would be important.

"If you don't find life, you've found out that despite the fact that you had really Earthlike conditions, they weren't Earthlike enough to produce life," he said. "That will provide more information on the type of conditions you must have to enable life to develop."

Susan Postawko of the University of Hawaii said most scientists studying the planet now accept the idea that water once flowed on Mars in massive rivers that cut channels across the surface. She said that idea once was considered outrageous because of conditions on Mars now.

"It's virtually impossible to have water flowing on Mars under the current conditions," said Torrence Johnson, a Jet Propulsion Laboratory scientist. The planet has only seven one-thousandths of the atmospheric pressure of Earth and is very cold. Water would either evaporate or freeze, said Johnson.

But pictures taken in 1976 by the Voyager spacecraft clearly showed river beds and this finally persuaded most experts that water once covered part of Mars' surface.

"There is really no other way that the channels could have been formed," said Postawko. "At first it was thought they could be lava channels, but the way they look is more like water channels. There is no other abundant liquid that could have formed them."

NATION IN BRIEF

Inmates threatened with loss of television

ALDEN, N.Y. (AP) — Violence and intimidation, traditional sources of power behind bars, have declined in a maximum-security prison here since officials began using a simple kind of leverage long known to parents of unruly children: threatening to turn off the TV.

Drug use, too, has lessened among the 800 inmates at Wende Correctional Facility.

"It's become a very effective sanction," said prison director Dominic Mantello. "All we have to do is threaten to take it away."

Two years ago, the Wende inmates voted unanimously to give up their right to receive packages from the outside in exchange for the option to buy personal television sets for their cells.

The program was originally designed to stop most drugs coming into the prison, but authorities quickly noticed another benefit.

"They know if they act up, they'll lose their TV privileges," said Robert McClellen, deputy superintendent for security at Wende. "Now they walk away from most fights and turn their backs on trouble."

Ford recalls ambulances

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hoses improperly installed by ambulance operators may have caused coolant to leak and set fire to engines, Ford Motor Co. said after regulators were asked to order a recall.

A petition filed by a consumers group with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration requested the recall of 16,000 1983-1987 Ford E-350 ambulances after reports of four engine fires in March and April.

"In each case, the vehicle emitted an antifreeze odor, had a recent service history involving coolant loss or was identified as having a coolant line rupture after the fire," said the petition by the Center for Auto Safety, a consumers group often critical of the auto industry and its regulators.

Ford spokesman Chuck Snearly said Monday the automaker was gathering information on the reports and will act accordingly.

In most of the cases Ford had investigated, the hoses had been replaced to reroute coolant to an auxiliary heater in the back of the ambulance, Snearly said.

Study disputes Bennett

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study commissioned by Education Secretary William Bennett's own department disputes his frequent claim that teacher unions are a major obstacle to school reform.

Bennett had no comment Monday on the RAND Corp. study, which was financed by his Office of Educational Research and Improvement.

The report, "Teacher Unions and Education Reform," said that unions generally have accommodated reforms, even when they had misgivings.

But it also said rank-and-file teachers are unwilling to accept reforms as a substitute for bread-and-butter improvements in their basic working conditions.

Eighty percent of America's nearly 2.3 million public school teachers belong to unions, and 60 percent of them are covered by collective bargaining contracts.

ACT celebrates 20 years

NEW YORK (AP) — Peggy Charren said when she started Action for Children's Television in 1968, she thought she'd have about a two-year job tidying up the kiddie TV market.

On Monday, she was joined by Garrison Keillor, Jay Leno, Jane Pauley, Phylicia Rashad, Maurice Sendak and Shelley Duvall, plus congressmen, heads of networks, Mickey Mouse and Mr. Rogers, to celebrate ACT's 20th anniversary.

"When we started in 1968, our goal was really to put ourselves out of business," said Charren. "We thought we'd make children's television so great, there would be no need for an advocacy group for children's television. I actually thought we'd do it in two years."

The Massachusetts-based advocacy group is still fighting against commercialism and violence in children's programming. Its latest foes are "30-minute commercials," children's shows that revolve around commercially available toys.

Motion reveals indictments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The defense has revealed that former national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane is named as an unindicted co-conspirator in the case against Oliver L. North and three other Iran-Contra defendants.

McFarlane was named in that capacity in the charge that the retired Marine lieutenant colonel and three co-defendants conspired to divert U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits illegally to the Nicaraguan rebels, according to a defense brief filed Monday in the case.

The names of McFarlane and other unindicted co-conspirators in the case are contained in a version of the indictment that was filed under seal in U.S. District Court.

But lawyers for North revealed McFarlane's legal status in a request that North be tried separately from former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord.

North's three co-defendants also filed motions for separate trials.

Mecham trial to begin

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Former Gov. Evan Mecham's criminal trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan must begin Thursday as scheduled, an appellate court has ruled.

The intermediate level Court of Appeals, in a 3-0 decision Monday, rejected a defense bid to have the charges against Mecham and his brother, Willard, dismissed or returned to the state grand jury.

"To be honest with you, I expected it just the way it came out," said Mecham, who sat in the front row during oral arguments.

His lawyer, Michael Scott, said he will appeal to the state Supreme Court, but probably not before jury selection begins in Maricopa County Superior Court.

Evan and Willard Mecham, his 1986 campaign treasurer, were indicted by the grand jury Jan. 8 on charges of perjury, willful concealment and filing false documents.

Dealer was hero to some

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — An American businessman arrested after federal agents seized a record 8,700 pounds of cocaine had a reputation as a successful entrepreneur and was regarded as a hero in a remote Colombian village.

But federal authorities say Michael James Tsalickis had links to a South American narcotics organization known as the Cali Cartel.

Acting on a tip, agents on May 3 found the cocaine concealed in hollowed planks of Brazilian cedar in Tsalickis' warehouse in Tarpon Springs. Authorities estimated the street value of the drugs at about $2 billion.

Tsalickis, 60, was arrested with two Colombians, Fredy Perez-Rivera and Pedro Narvaez. All three were being held without bail at the Hillsborough County Jail on drug trafficking and distribution charges.

Tsalickis' attorneys won't comment on the charges, or allow him to be interviewed.

Local geologist commended for civic leadership

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland civic leader Ed Vogler has been commended by the Midland City Council and United States Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas for his industry and "outstanding" civic leadership in behalf of Midland and West Texas.

Vogler, a consulting geologist, played key roles in gaining Port-of-Entry status and an impending Foreign Trade Zone at Midland International Airport and in cutting construction costs on the $70-million Stacy Dam-Reservoir project.

Vogler is chairman of Midland's Airport Planning and Development Advisory Board, which was "instrumental in gaining" the new status at the airport.

His efforts were merged with those of Gramm, who used his senatorial influence to elevate the airport status and to delete most of the $3.7-million budgeted by the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) to fund research into the Concho River water snake and to build shallow-water habitats for the once-deemed "endangered" species.

In his interest in saving taxpayers' dollars, Vogler launched research to prove that the snake, once considered rare, was plentiful and could live outside of its shallow-water habitats in the Concho River and Colorado River.

The Stacy Dam, to be completed in early 1990 by the CRMWD, is to impound water to serve West Texas water needs well into the 21st Century. Cities to benefit from the Stacy Reservoir near Ballinger in West Central Texas include Midland, Odessa, San Angelo, Big Spring, Abilene and Snyder.

Ultimately, construction costs of the Stacy Dam-Reservoir will be paid for by the city users.

"Ed Vogler has again distinguished himself as an outstanding civic leader through his efforts in persuading the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service that the construction of the Stacy Reservoir on the Colorado River would not endanger the survival of the Concho water snake," said the resolution of commendation signed by Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas and the other City Council members.

Vogler's efforts caused the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service "to withdraw its mandate for the Stacy Reservoir project that millions of dollars be spent to fund research into the water snake and to build shallow-water habitats for the snake," said the resolution.

"The Council is unanimously of the opinion that Ed Vogler's devoted, unselfish and skillful civic leadership and service to this community should be publicly recognized," the resolution said. Vogler's efforts in "saving millions of dollars" on the Stacy Dam-Reservoir project were "so vital to this community."

But Vogler said that those airport and Stacy Dam-Reservoir accomplishments could not have been realized had it not been for Gramm's support and influence.

"I wish to point out that without the personal efforts of Sen. Phil Gramm on behalf of the citizens of the entire Permian Basin," Vogler said, "we would not have been able to accomplish any of the projects that the commendation makes reference to."

In response to Vogler's initiative and to the resolution, the senator said that Vogler deserved the resolution of commendation.

"I have worked hard on the Stacy Dam matter and other issues confronting the Permian Basin," Gramm said in a letter to Vogler, "and intend to work harder in the months and years ahead. Your help and support has been important to me, and I hope we can continue to work together to promote economic development in the Permian Basin."

Texas Chamber to serve entire state

Group can help businesses speak with 'one voice'

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The president of the newly created Texas Chamber of Commerce says the organization will better serve the interests of the entire state.

Rex Jennings, a native Texan who served for 21 years as president and chief executive officer of the Denver Chamber of Commerce, explained that the Texas Chamber is the result of combining regional chambers in west, east and south Texas.

In an interview following his recent speech at the Odessa Chamber of Commerce Small Business Appreciation luncheon, Jennings said that, while offices of the three regional chambers in Abilene, Tyler and San Antonio will close, Texas Chamber staff members will be working all areas of the state.

"It's a change of structure rather than an abandonment of (regional) programs and concerns," said Jennings of the consolidation.

He said there will still be a board of directors of the West Texas Council, with representatives who will serve on the board of the Texas Chamber.

"The whole idea (of the consolidation of regional chambers) is that business needs to speak with one strong voice...in the affairs of Texas, particularly to pull us out of this economic slump and that this was the best way to go about it.

"The thing that distinguishes the Texas Chamber from other statewide business organizations," he said, "is our relationship and networking capabilities with local chambers. There's a natural tie there."

Jennings said the state chamber will be able to work with Texas' 500 local chambers and through them the Texas Chamber will have contact with about 250,000 businesses which are members of chambers around the state.

"So, when it comes to strategic legislative issues, when we're all in accord, we've got the capability of networking and getting grassroots input to impact on state legislators when they debate issues we consider of vital relevance to the Texas business community," he said.

"We see that as one of the major strengths," Jennings said of the new Texas Chamber of Commerce.

Odessa city manager 'in no hurry' to fill assistant's post

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — City Fiscal Services Director Frank Muser has been named acting assistant city manager pending hiring a successor for Curtis Snow, who was fired last week by City Mananger Bill Brown.

Brown said Monday he plans to fill the position permanently but is "in no hurry to do so."

The firing of Snow, 40, comes on the heels of the April elimination of the administrative services department and the termination of Director Diana Larson and her secretary, Diana Hanaway.

Jaime Rodriguez, southside councilman, said early today he was not surprised by the firing of Snow. It "had been in the works" for some time, he said.

The councilman said Brown had asked Snow to "sign on" to his programs, but Snow had categorically refused.

Rodriguez said Brown's management style is the "hands on" type. "He wants to be where the rubber hits the road."

He expressed the belief that Brown's administrative realignment ultimately will result in a savings of taxpayers' money and will be beneficial to the city.

Mayor Don Carter, commenting on the dismissal of Snow, said, "We're in the position that, between the city manager and assistant city manager, the direction of the city that we need to take and the philosophy of management just didn't jive.

"So, as a result, that office, for one reason or another, has been somewhat ineffective for about six months. We just couldn't have that."

Carter said it's the city's aim that the changes Brown has made will make city government more effective and save taxpayers' money.

Concerning what seems to be a change in cooperative efforts between the city and county, Carter said, "There's no doubt that Judge (Jan) Fisher and Mr. Brown have not hit it off too well at the start but the hostility that's been implied just doesn't exist."

He expressed hope the judge and Brown "can reconcile their differences before very long."

Since becoming city manager last November, Brown has been examining various service agreements between the city and county.

Monday he rejected the suggestion this was being done to make sure agreements were beneficial to the city. Agreements are being re-evaluated to make sure they are "mutually beneficial," he said.

Shortly after coming to Odessa Nov. 16 last year, Brown asked city council members to withhold approval of the agreement between the city-county for transfer of control of the animal shelter-control program from the county to the city.

The original agreement, which was to have become effective Dec. 1, called for the city to assume responsibility for all phases of the operation, including collection of animals outside the city limits.

Brown's re-evaluation of the animal shelter-control agreement led to only one major change, that the county retain responsibility for collecting animals outside the city limits. This conflicted with the county's desire to completely remove itself from any responsibility for animal control.

Recently, Brown called into question the city-county health department agreement, contending he is only attempting to make sure this agreement is "mutually beneficial" to the city and county.

Correspondence with Ector County Health Authority Dr. C.S. Patterson has prompted speculation Brown would recommend ending the contract.

Of the state of the current relationship between the county judge and himself, Brown said Monday he talks to the judge all the time and tries to "keep her informed on the issues."

He says he's "confused" by her recent reaction to things that have been happening in the city, but suggested he would rather the mayor or council members comment on the state of relations between the city and county.

"As far as hostility between the two bodies," Carter said, "it just doesn't exist. Jan (Fisher) and I are on excellent terms. The council and commissioners court are on excellent terms," he stated.

As to the review of contracts initiated by Brown, "We're simply reviewing all contracts regardless of whether it's with the county or who it is because, quite frankly, we've had some contracts over the last 10 or 15 years that just weren't in the best interests of the city," the mayor said.

"It's just a matter of good policy and business that when one comes up you take a look at it."

Two area pilots win in aerobatic contest

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland-Odessa aerobatic pilots won first and third places in Pecos in a regional aerobatic contest that was marked by safe flying and West Texas hospitality.

"It was super. It was wonderful," Connie Day, the contest's volunteer coordinator, said of the West Texas Aerobatic Club's second annual Wildcatters Championship Aerobatic Contest. "It was a safe contest, and the weather was outstanding. The hospitality the town of Pecos gave us was really outstanding," Ms. Day said. "They were behind us."

More than 20 aerobatic pilots from Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arizona and "all over Texas" competed in the four-category contest last weekend. The pilots flew biwing airplanes — mostly Pitts Specials and a Star Duster.

From the Midland-Odessa area, James Jones of Odessa flew to first place in the intermediate category in his Pitts Special, and Pat Day of Midland placed third in the sportsman category in his Star Duster.

"This is a very unforgiving sport," Day said. "There is no margin for error. None. One (wrong) tap of the rudder, and you've lost."

In the contest, pilots fly in a aerobatic box — a 1,000-cubic-meter or 3,300-cubic-foot airspace. The contest was sanctioned by the International Aerobatic Club (IAC).

Results of the contest by categories include:

— Sportsman: 1. Geary Blair, Weatherford; 2. Jim Eiland, Colleyville; 3. Pat Day, Midland.

— Intermediate: 1. James Jones, Odessa; 2. Scott Edgerton, Burleson; 3. Drew Lundgren, La Porte.

— Advanced: 1. Jerry Holtzweig, Dallas; 2. Janet Crosby, Albuquerque, N.M.; 3. Kirby Chambliss, Tempe, Ariz.

— Unlimited: 1. Eoin Harvey, La Porte; 2. John McGuire, Fort Worth; 3. Kirk Fulton; Lubbock.

The contest's chief judges were Debby Rihn of La Porte and Mike Crosby of Albuquerque, N.M.

Other judges included Royan McGrath of Lubbock, Jerry Holtzweig of Dallas, Janet Crosby of Albuquerque, Jim Olterman of Montrose, Colo., Dan Clark of Fort Worth, and Eoin Harvey and Drew Lundgren, both of La Porte.

Scientists to send turtles out to sea

AP Laserphoto

Charles Caillouet, chief of the Life Studies Division at the National Marine Fisheries in Galveston, handles one of the 1,100 Kemp's Ridley sea turtles that will be released today off Port Aransas into the Gulf of Mexico.

GALVESTON (AP) — Marine biologists say they're not discouraged that of the more than 12,000 endangered sea turtles released into the ocean in a 10-year population-boosting experiment, none has ever returned to nest.

"You have to be patient to be a sea turtle scientist," Charles W. Caillouet, chief of the Life Studies Division at the service's Galveston laboratory, said Monday.

About 1,100 laboratory-raised Kemp's Ridley sea turtles are scheduled to hit the water today.

"When that last turtle hits the water, it's like a lead weight has been lifted off our backs," said Tim Fontaine, a research fishery biologist. "We've done our job."

Today's operation off Port Aransas marks the 10th annual release of the turtles, although none of the 12,422 turtles let go since the so-called "head start" program began in 1977 has returned to the western Gulf of Mexico beaches to nest.

Researchers are still trying to figure out why.

Members of the latest sea turtle group have so far spent their lives circumnavigating small circular tubs, one turtle to each container, stored in climate-controlled greenhouses at the National Marines Fisheries Service laboratories in Galveston.

Early this morning, the turtles were to be transported the 200 miles to Port Aransas, where they would be taken several miles into the Gulf off Padre Island.

Fontaine has overseen the growth of the turtles since they were 3 to 5 days old and about the size of silver dollars weighing just 15 grams.

Now, the year-old turtles weigh about 2½ pounds each. And for the first time this year, 98 2-year-old turtles weighing about 25 pounds each will be released as biologists hope the more mature animals will stand a better chance of surviving.

Survival of the species itself is the goal.

Scientists are looking for the answer to attract the turtle back to the western Gulf of Mexico beaches, its only known nesting area.

Turtle eggs were taken a year ago to the North Padre Island beach and the hatchlings scurried across the beach into the water before they were captured and moved to Galveston.

It's hoped when they reach sexual maturity, the turtles will return instinctively to the beach.

"That's the critical objective," Caillouet said. "It's documented very clearly our turtles survive for a long time and mix themselves in with the natural stocks."

For example, Galveston-grown turtles — marked with metal tags or special skin grafts or electronic and magnetic devices — have been found as far away as Morocco, France and Newfoundland. The mystery, however, is what triggers the animal's nesting and a return to the Gulf.

Teen mother Cynthia Unger, 16, has collected 500 names on a petition she hopes will persuade the Deer Park school board to provide on-campus day care facilities for her 8-month-old daughter, Deanna, and other children of student parents.

Teen mother petitioning school to provide on-campus day care

DEER PARK (AP) — Teen-age mothers attending high school face a daily struggle in filling the dual demands of school and family, says one young mother seeking at-school day care.

"I've missed several classes since having my baby," says Cynthia Unger, 16, who has an 8-month-old daughter. "It's hard to keep up my studies."

Ms. Unger, a freshman who envisions eventually attending college and becoming a department store buyer, collected 500 names in a petition with the aim of getting day care at Deer Park High School, which she attends.

Opponents of the idea, fearful the day care would strain school resources, also began circulating a petition. Both groups have been told to stop the actions on school grounds because it violates district policy, said Deer Park Principal Bobby Grisham.

"They (the opponents) had far-reaching thoughts," Grisham said. "They think that possibly a lot of others would move to the district and that it would have to pay for their care, too."

Other students opposing Ms. Unger's proposal say it would make the school district appear to condone teenage pregnancy by offering convenient child care facilities.

Lynn Hale, superintendent of the Deer Park Independent School District, said officials are studying alternatives to helping student mothers, but that the answers must come from the community.

School-funded day care "is not our mission, but we want to help any way we can," Ms. Hale said.

She said teen pregnancy will be one of the factors examined in a district study of students "at risk of dropping out."

"Recognizing students who are at risk is part of our responsibility, but I'm not sure public schools should be responsible for child care," she said.

At least five mothers now attend district schools, officials reported, and of the 11 other students now pregnant, six will graduate next month.

The Pasadena school system, which borders Deer Park's, does not provide day care for students or teachers, spokeswoman Kirk Lewis said.

Limited day care is available in the Houston Independent School District through Urban Affairs Corp., a private non-profit organization funded by the Texas Department of Human Services.

Teen mothers at nine area secondary schools may take children between 2 weeks and 6 years old to the UAC Development Center at H.P. Carter High School. But Donna Bryant, UAC executive director, said a waiting list has mushroomed to 150 children because the 7-year-old center has reached its 92-child capacity.

The center has 24 staffers and an annual budget of $309,000.

"There is a tremendous need for day care. There's no way of tracking dropouts because of teen pregnancy, and we need to know who these people are," Ms. Bryant said.

Ex-Miss Galveston suing to regain title

GALVESTON (AP) — The coordinator for the Miss Galveston-USA beauty pageant testified she never advised the pageant's queen to drop out of high school and seek an equivalency diploma to qualify for the title.

The testimony came Monday from a lawsuit filed by Karen Anita Wilson, the former Miss Galveston 1988, against pageant coordinator Michelle Hatmaker, claiming Ms. Hatmaker unfairly stripped her of her title in March because she did not meet a pageant rule that contestants be high school graduates by June 1988.

The 18-year-old Texas City High School junior also claims Ms. Hatmaker, who is countersuing for the return of several gifts, never told her of the requirement and even suggested she drop out of school and seek a General Equivalency Diploma if she wanted to keep her crown.

"Her mother brought up the GED," Ms. Hatmaker said referring to a January meeting with Ms. Wilson and her mother. "I tried to discourage them from doing that."

Ms. Hatmaker said she later sent Ms. Wilson a letter offering to give her the title of Miss Galveston Teen or allow her to compete for free next year if she would give up her title.

She said the suggestion of dropping out of school was added as an option only after Ms. Wilson's mother first mentioned she and her daughter were looking into the possibility of an equivalency degree.

Nine other participants in the pageant testified during the three-day hearing that Ms. Hatmaker mentioned the graduation requirement in a group meeting.

Shortly after receiving the letter in February, Ms. Wilson sued Ms. Hatmaker. The following month, Ms. Hatmaker stripped Ms. Wilson of the title and countersued, claiming Ms. Wilson had misled her into believing she would graduate in June.

Ms. Wilson is seeking the return of her title, the remaining prizes promised to her and the right to compete in the Miss Texas-USA pageant in San Antonio later this year.

Ms. Hatmaker is seeking more than $10,000 in attorney's fees, the return of a membership to Gold's Gym, a $700 queen's pendant, sash and $175 in gift certificates or the cash equivalent.

State District Judge Ed Harris ordered attorneys for both sides to file briefs and said he will rule by Friday.

Former TCU dean to head Denver college

DENVER (AP) — Thomas Bowman Brewer of Georgia State University in Atlanta — and former dean of Texas Christian University — has been named the new president of Metropolitan State College here, officials say.

Brewer, 55, is vice president for academic affairs at Georgia State. He will assume the $99,000-a-year post at Metro State on July 1, officials said Monday.

After a five-month selection process, Brewer was named to head the 16,000-student school at the Auraria Center for Higher Education following a five-month selection process.

He was chosen for the job over interim president William Fulkerson, president of Adams State College, and Otto F. Bauer, vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Nebraska.

Brewer has 20 years of administrative experience in higher education. He previously was chancellor of East Carolina University, and vice chancellor and dean of TCU.

"I have a lot of ideas that I will develop when I get there," Brewer said during a telephone interview Monday from his office in Atlanta.

"I'm deeply committed to higher education in an urban setting."

Georgia State is similar to Metro in that both schools serve older, working students who need classes on flexible schedules.

DEATHS

Andy Arbuckle

Funeral services for Andy B. Arbuckle of Decatur, were to be at 3 p.m. today in the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel, with the Rev. Daniel Vestal, pastor of First Baptist Church, officiating. Burial was to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Arbuckle died Sunday.

He was born Dec. 19, 1947 in Frederick, Okla., and was a 1966 graduate of Lamesa High School. He attended West Texas State University in Canyon and Arapaho Junior College in Denver, Colo. He met Cynthia Hale in Denver and they were married on May 12, 1969 in Monte Vista, Colo. The couple moved to Midland in 1977 and resided here until 1984, when they moved to Decatur. Arbuckle was self-employed and a member of the Denver Temple Baptist Church.

He was preceded in death by his sister, Mary Lee Arbuckle on Oct. 18, 1943.

Survivors include his wife, Cynthia Arbuckle of Decatur; a son, Jay Arbuckle of Decatur; two daughters, Kimberley Miller of Denver, Colo., and Kay Arbuckle of Decatur; his parents, the Rev. and Mrs. Milo B. Arbuckle of Midland; and his mother- and father-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. James Hale of Englewood, Colo.

Pallbearers are Charlie Kittle, Carroll Nall, Paul Long, Bob Brown, Gene Britt and David McAmis.

Mrs. Eddie Conner

Funeral services for Mrs. Eddie Frank (Obera) Conner of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at the First Baptist Church, with the Rev. Daniel Vestal officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Conner died Monday at a local hospital.

She was born Aug. 26, 1912 in Prescott, Ariz., and moved with her family to Lamesa in 1924. In 1927, the family moved to Midland. Mrs. Conner graduated from Midland schools and was first office secretary at First Baptist Church. She was employed by the church in various capacities until her retirement in 1977. She married Eddie Frank Conner in 1936 in Midland. He preceded her in death in 1984.

Survivors include a daughter, Jeanna Edwards of Red Oak; two sons, Charles Conner of Brownwood, and Bill Conner of Midland; a sister, Dorothy Moore of Brownwood; a step-brother, J.D. Montgomery of Midland; eight grandchildren; and a great-granddaughter.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland Inc., P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, or to the Building Fund at First Baptist Church.

Earring-wearing Marine dropped from program

LUFKIN (AP) — A Marine who was spotted wearing an earring while off-duty says he was dropped from an officer training program as a result.

Sgt. Jon Patric Ainsworth, 23, of Lufkin, who re-enlisted for six years as a condition of enrollment in the training program, says now Marine officials won't give him an honorable discharge from the service.

"I can totally assure you there is nothing in my past that set off this thing," he said. "It was totally the earring. I couldn't believe it was happening to me," said.

Marine officials say Ainsworth knew it was not acceptable to wear an earring and he was dismissed from the program because of poor potential.

Before the earring incident, Ainsworth, who had served four years, had a good record and had been selected for the Marine Enlisted Commissioning Education Program. Those chosen enter college and receive commissions when they graduate.

He entered the Reserve Officer Training Program at Texas A&M University for the fall term. But, by early October, he was on his way out.

According to Marine documents, trouble began when Ainsworth was observed by the senior marine officer instructor wearing an earring while on liberty, or off-duty.

Ainsworth said the major who saw him told him to meet him the next morning, but added that he did not expect disciplinary action for wearing an earring.

"There were no regulations at all against it," he said. "The regulations encourage conservatism in dress when you are off duty. But when you are on your off time you can do what you want, as long as it's legal and moral," he told the Lufkin Daily News.

Ainsworth said when he saw the major the following day he was told to get in uniform and appear before a review board. He said he was given less than an hour's notice, although regulations require a seven-day notice.

Ainsworth said he appeared before the board, and was told he was being dismissed from the officer training program because of "poor commissioning potential" and would be ordered back to the fleet to serve another six years.

He said he thought arguing would be counterproductive and was already under stress because he was separated from his wife. Ainsworth agreed to sign a statement saying he made a mistake in entering the program and wished to withdraw voluntarily.

Ainsworth maintains that wearing an earring while off duty is "not illegal — even in the Marines." He also lists other military regulations he said were violated during his hearing, including the right to proper notice, the right to call witnesses and the right to submit a written statement.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

An important aspect for administering volunteer programs is recognizing volunteers who give their time and talents to the clients and employees of an organization. In fact, expressing gratitude has become second nature to most of us who work with volunteers.

Sometimes, though, the words "thank you" don't convey the extent of our appreciation for volunteers. If only there were more hours in the day to sit down and put our thoughts on paper, thoughts that express our true feelings and views about these valued colleagues.

"Volunteerism flourishes in a free society among individuals who live by The Golden Rule, yet see the need for self-actualization."

— Mary Lawrence

The following opportunities are available for those individuals wishing to become more involved in our community...

- Person interested in the criminal justice/counseling field, needed to give two (2) hours per week to assist with an alcoholism support group
- "Girl Friday" needed for busy non-profit organizations a few hours a week to help with clerical needs
- Individuals with good typing skills, switchboard operators, and surveyors are desperately needed to assist busy Midland offices
- Persons to assist with coordinating volunteers for organizations

Special Need of the Week: The Volunteer Center is in need of assistance at their office during the day for a few hours a week. Individuals with pleasant telephone manners, public relations, and light clerical skills are very much in need.

For more information on how you or your family can become more involved with the Midland community, please call The Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

TURTLES

"We don't know how long it takes for them to mature in the wild," Caillouet said. "We would guess we are looking for 8 to 10 years for early maturity in the wild, but we really don't know."

In the late 1940s, as many as 40,000 turtles nested in a single day near Rancho Nuevo, Mexico, about 200 miles south of Brownsville, Texas.

Today, less than 600 turtles nest in the entire season from April through July or August, Caillouet said. There may be as many as 100 eggs incubating over 60 days in each nest. Upon hatching, the tiny turtles flee into the Gulf.

The decline in population came as the beaches and turtles and eggs were exploited from the 1940s until the 1960s.

"That problem has been resolved, but we yet don't see any of the increase in the number of nesters," Caillouet said. "So something's happening to the turtle at sea."

No one is really certain, although the turtles face pollution, debris and fishing trawlers as enemies, he said.

One turtle being treated at the Galveston laboratory was found tied up with hundreds of feet of plastic fishing line. Its front flipper had to be amputated.

Once they reach adult growth, the turtles only known natural predator is shark.

It's somewhat ironic the turtle's survival is so threatened.

"They are the bulldogs of the sea," says Fontaine. "They are a highly aggressive animal."

The captive turtles are constantly swimming, their flippers splashing water out of their containers. Fontaine tells of his workers gaining experience by being bloodied by the turtles' bite.

"Assuming our turtles survive, we should be seeing the first vanguard of nesters or we might have seen them a few years ago, depending on how soon they mature," Caillouet said.

CONTEST

Chief Judge Debby Rihn, who is a member of the United States Aerobatic Team, will be competing in Red Deer, Alberta, Canada in July and August in the World Aerobatic Championship.

Paul Erdmann, president of the West Texas Aerobatic Club which sponsored the contest at the Pecos Air Center, said that the contest was "probably one of the safest-conducted aerobatic contests I've seen.

"There wasn't even a minor infraction — nothing," Erdmann said. "Everything checked out according to every rule. It was just perfect."

Erdmann said that to enhance the enjoyment and camaraderie at the contest, contest officials "usually try to find a 'goof-up' and give him the rear-end-of-the-horse award. Nobody qualified for it," he said.

"Our hats go off to James Jones for being the contest director and Pat Day for assisting him," Erdmann said.

The aerobatic pilots "performed well" in their precision maneuvers, Erdmann said.

"The main thing was safety," he said, "and our contest was flown extremely safe."

Skirt lengths cause mixed emotions in buying public

By SUSAN HARTE
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA - The topic, ladies and gentlemen, is the Short Skirt. It has everyone from the most wily Seventh Avenue manufacturer to the most nervous fashion Franny wringing hands and fussing over prayer beads. How short can short be without being too short? Should I make it? Should I sell it? Should I buy it? Do I dare to eat a peach?

The phenomenon started about three years ago when Karl Lagerfeld and Emanuel Ungaro showed in Paris some svelte skirts that were 2 to 3 inches above the knee. At that moment, a tiny hope was born, smiling like a pink cherub in the collective heart of the rag trade.

Then came doubt. But what if all the flower children of the 1960s have evolved into feminist lawyers disinclined to mortgage their minds for a mini? What if Reagan conservatives stick to their midcalf lengths?

That is why the century's third debut of The Short Skirt did not bounce full-grown from one season. (Flappers wore them during the 1920s, and in the 1960s just about everyone did.) The current revival huffed and puffed over the course of several seasons.

CONSUMER REACTION was mixed. Some women rushed out to buy short. Others mumbled and grumbled. Most either did nothing or wore some items short and others long. Professional women find short skirts impractical.

In short, the new mini has been a revolution that never happened. Sales of short lengths varied according to a store's clientele. Trendier retailers have been more successful with short skirts than conservative stores. According to Neiman-Marcus fashion director Sally White, "People are too sophisticated to be a victim of something. It's got to be moderation in fashion as well as anything else."

In an effort to make short skirts palatable to today's consumers, most retailers avoid using the term "miniskirt," preferring instead "shorter lengths."

But where there is even one designer gathered together with an ego, hope for nurturing a new trend springs eternal.

When fall 1988 clothes were introduced in New York last month, three lengths were shown. Very short is for the young woman and the extremely fashion-conscious one. Very long is for the woman who never went short at all, for the avant-garde dresser or for the sassy soul who doesn't give a rap. Midcalf is for everyone else.

A CHECK of local street corners will show a variety of skirt lengths. There will be a few long skirts, some long by design and others long by indifference. There may be one or two very short skirts, those hitting nothing below midthigh, worn by teenagers or by the terribly chic. Most will fall somewhere between the kneecap and the lower calf.

Aside from those who make and sell clothes, there are probably five classes of people who actively care about skirt lengths.

The first type is the Fashionette. The organizing theme of her existence is "I dress, therefore I am." Every detail is fashion-magazine perfect, no skirt lengthened before its time.

Next, there's the Secret Male Admirer. He likes women's legs, but doesn't necessarily want women tripping like chorines around the office. "Short skirts give me lascivious thoughts," said a highly placed and quite dignified bureaucrat who then insisted that his name not be used.

Teenagers, who are the shorter lengths' biggest fans, are the third group. "Kids at school wear skirts very short or real long, to the ankle," says high school senior Margo Adams. "At least the ones who aren't chunky or don't have yucky legs." And, she adds, "guys like shorter skirts."

THAT BRINGS up group four: Women Not Blessed With Pin-up Legs. Some women with bad legs will grumble about the trend, praying for its quick demise. Others graciously acknowledge that the skirts aren't for them. Then there are those who wear them anyway.

The fifth group are those women whose professional standing would tend to preclude their thinking very much about clothes.

"A short skirt is awkward in the office, and I won't wear one here," said a 40ish physician who declined to be named. "But you don't want to look frowzy, so you adapt - conservatively. I never say never, and who knows? In February 1989, we might be coming in here wearing hot pants."

Fashion designers resurrect Spanish look

Copley News Service

Gail Sekiguchi's hair this spring faintly evokes the exotic and dangerous world of blood and sand.

Sekiguchi is no bullfighter — she's the fashion director for a major West Coast department store chain — but she has borrowed a flourish from the world of matadors and toreadors.

Pinned in her hair or on her lapel, brightly-colored fake flowers trumpet the return of the Spanish accent.

In the fashion world, flamenco ruffles, Carmen flounces, red roses, bolero jackets and slender toreador pants are back.

This spring, traditional Spanish touches abound, from spiffy black-braid trims to black or white lace mantillas for the hair.

It took a Frenchman to revive these Spanish accents. A year ago, Christian Lacroix resurrected such items as ruffles and flounces for his spring 1988 couture collection.

His ideas were echoed by designers of everything from young junior clothes to top-of-the-line creations.

These touches are "pretty, young and a lot of fun," Sekiguchi says. "We're just coming off a very dark fall, and the Spanish feeling is unexpected.

"But it's easy to accomplish with accessories, such as flowers or black lace. I think the Spanish looks this spring have made everyone feel wonderful."

California designer Jessica McClintock agrees.

McClintock, known for her dresses embellished with Victorian laces and ribbons, said that "a strong Spanish influence" marked her spring and fall 1988 collections.

"There is a lot of ornamentation for fall," McClintock said from her workshop in San Francisco.

"For fall, I did a lot of black with white passementerie (a kind of braid trimming) in Spanish patterns on it. Some of my irridescent taffetas with black flocking designs also were very Spanish-looking.

"Most of the fabrics for fall have a very festive, bright, glittery kind of effect, which is very Spanish-looking."

Denise and Gilda Padilla, who have operated a boutique in Tijuana, Baja California, and now run one in San Diego, are enjoying the Spanish resurgence.

"We are of Spanish descent," Denise said. "We like flowers in our hair, big earrings, all the things in fashion. We love dots — lunares in Spanish — and faroles, which are dresses for the fiesta.

"Mexican people dress differently from Americans. Mexican women will dress up to go to a shower for a friend. They will go and shop for something to wear to a shower. They really like shopping."

New fall fashions show strong focus on trousers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Before the first models took to the runways last month as the fall and winter fashion openings unfolded on and off Seventh Avenue, some basic trends for the new season seemed securely established.

The prevailing skirt length is one that clears the knees by an inch or two, though shorter hems are still being shown. Some midcalf lengths, usually narrow, turned up. Ankle lengths are an alternative.

But the strongest focus is on trousers. The newest looking pants shown so far are cut with some fullness and have gently molded short jackets that can also look smart with skirts. But there are all kinds of variations, from narrow pants that fit like tights to very full styles, more like skirts than culottes.

Carolina Herrera was one of the designers who jumped the gun. Introduced at a crowded presentation at the Plaza, the collection revealed her development in the seven years since she left the ranks of smartly dressed society women and became a designer herself. Her daytime clothes, in particular, have strengthened. Her tailored suits, often in chalk-stripe woolens, have a strong, sophisticated look. Wide pants with snug jackets are a specialty.

When skirts appear, they stop above the knee. Herrera, no advocate of calf-length styles, calls her shorter evening dresses ballerina styles; they reach almost to the ankles and are always cut full.

Pants are as prominent for evening as for day, in soft crepe, taffeta or velvet, with sequined or metallic jackets. A group of sequin-embroidered jackets is patterned in stripes and dots.

Eleanor Brenner also showed growth. Her short clothes are very short, stopping about four inches above the knee. Leather skirts and jackets that hug the body, skintight jumpsuits and skinny midcalf dresses in wool jersey are all in the forefront of fashion. Princess dresses and silk jacquard suits with long, tailored jackets should have wide appeal.

Pants seen as solution to fluctuating hem lengths

By BERNADINE MORRIS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — With the American fall and winter collections now open, it is clear that pants have made a clean sweep of the world's fashion centers. With almost the same enthusiasm that they showed in adopting midthigh skirts just a year ago, designers everywhere have opted for trousers as an all-purpose style for both day and night.

Recently, just before the fall showings began, the uncertainty over hem lengths was so strong that designers settled on trousers as the great compromise. There was precedent for this: in 1970, when women rebelled as the miniskirts of the 1960s turned into the awkward midi or midcalf length, the pants suit became the fashion world's salvation.

The two major styles then were the double-knit pants suit introduced by Yves Saint Laurent in 1968, and tailored styles in worsted and gabardine. Even these relatively conventional styles caused some commotion as a few restaurateurs denied entrance to women in pants, and some employers said they were not appropriate to wear to work.

The flurry of objections soon passed, and hemlines returned to their periodic rise and fall. This pattern was interrupted last year when almost every designer, spurred by the brilliant success of Christian Lacroix in Paris and his short bouffant skirts, lifted hemlines well above the knee. This revival of the mini dominated last fall's collections, introduced a year ago, and continued unabated in the next collections, for this spring and summer.

BY THIS time, complaints were being registered by women who felt that for reasons of age, profession or the state of their legs, they were unwilling to wear above-the-knee hemlines. Some retailers attributed lagging sales to the dominance of short skirts.

Although it is rare to find a designer who will find fault with short skirts, some did acknowledge that perhaps fashion had gone too far in focusing exclusively on very brief clothes. A few designers had even jumped the gun. In his spring couture collection for Chanel, introduced in January in Paris, Karl Lagerfeld presented a group of slender suits with calf-length hems that were acknowledged as sophisticated and suave. At the same time, Donna Karan showed some long cotton summer dresses.

When it came to developing their collections for next fall, designers wavered. Some, like Geoffrey Beene, continued their love affair with very short skirts. Others, like Oscar de la Renta, offered a neat balance between above- and below-the-knee styles. Karan tilted to long and slender lengths. Most collections offered a choice. The majority of retailers said that just-above-the-knee would be their most important length for fall and that the long, slender styles would be their fashion leaders.

But there was no problem about pants: they were everybody's choice. Retailers, along with designers, believe that if women feel uncertain about choosing either long or short hemlines, they will turn to pants. What's more, the choice of trouser styles is almost as wide as the choice in skirts, ranging from sliver-thin to full circle.

IN THE best all-around collections in New York, trousers have major billing. Beene offers jump suits as an alternative to his short skirts. Calvin Klein's pants range from knitted cashmere tights to styles that fit smoothly over the hips and widen to the ankles. Karan's trousers have the same sleek, sophisticated look as the rest of her collection.

De la Renta shows pants in strong colors like orange and yellow with small jackets for day and wide-leg velvet or brocade pants for evening. Bill Blass likes evening pants paved in sequins as well as lace styles embroidered with jet beads and wide-leg plaid taffeta outfits with matching tops. Louis Dell'Olio varies his repertory for Anne Klein with all-pleated and cropped-above-the-ankles pants styles; the most satisfying are velvet with gold or jet embroidery.

From tailored gray flannel to sweeping, glitter-trimmed crepe or velvet, there is no dearth of pants for women who are not sure where they want their hemlines.

It seems likely that fashion is about to enter a new pants era. This does not rule out one hem length or another; it is simply a way of enlarging the fashion options. Designers feel that this time they are on to a sure thing.

Take right clothes on business trip

By CARRIE DONOVAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — No matter how long or short your business trip, you should carry a wardrobe that works. Knowing that your clothes are right leaves you free to concentrate on more important things.

Select suits, dresses, separates and accessories that you have worn successfully in the past, not new and unproven items. What looked great on a hanger or in a quick try-on can have a maddening way of failing you at a crucial moment.

If you have a new coat or jacket, wear it a few times before your trip. That way, you find out about its quirks. Do not take it along if the shoulder pads do not fit comfortably, for example. If you wear a shoulder bag, make sure the coat keeps the strap in place.

Incidentally, a jacket or coat that you wear traveling should have pockets big enough to stash airline tickets, a passport or other items.

Shoes should be broken in before being packed. It is a rare pair that is not an instrument of torture the first few wearings.

Smart travelers always take along items that are not necessarily part of their regular wardrobe. A woolen or cashmere shawl can be a cozy and convenient wrap in a drafty airplane or in an air-conditioned hotel room. And a synthentic-fiber shirt or blouse that can be washed and dried quickly is a boon when there is little time for clothing upkeep.

DEAR ABBY

Nurses' loose lips give man that sinking feeling

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, someone complained about a nurse who had broken the code of confidentiality by talking too much. My wife is an RN who never discusses her patients with others, but she has shared with me numerous fascinating cases knowing that I would never repeat anything she told me.

Recently, a male patient in her section was hospitalized for pneumonia. One of the nurses who was caring for him let the word out that he was impotent and had been fitted with some kind of prosthesis. When my wife told me of the ribald remarks being bandied about around the nurses' station concerning this man and his prosthesis, I resolved that should I ever become impotent I would never go to a local physician.

Abby, medical records, be they in a hospital or a doctor's office, are accessible not only to nurses, but to all of the office help. The only way one can be absolutely sure of confidentiality is to take his or her business to another town, or clear across town if you live in a large city.

My definition of a secret is something that is known only by one person. The moment it is revealed to a second person, it becomes public knowledge. Sign me ... SEALED LIPS

DEAR SEALED LIPS: Your wife broke the code of confidentiality when she shared with you "numerous fascinating cases." I refer to the final paragraph of your letter.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow who has just started to date again after several years. If I date someone who is desirable, I feel insecure about the correct formalities — especially when he takes me home at night.

Is it all right to say good-night at the elevator downstairs? Or would this throw a wet blanket on future dates? If I let him take me to my door, wouldn't it be awkward if I didn't invite him in for a few minutes? (I am assuming that he is the "right" one for me — I know what to do about the others.)

I don't mind losing someone who isn't worth keeping, but I don't want to lose a desirable man through ignorance. — UNCERTAIN

DEAR UNCERTAIN: A gentleman should see his date safely to her door — women have been mugged in elevators and halls. If you like him well enough to want to see him again, and consider him the "right" one, invite him in for coffee, tea or conversation.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "No-Boss Office," who complains because they (the three underpaid female employees) do all the work while their boss is in the back room playing with the new computer.

I work alone in an office, and without the computer my job would be almost impossible to do by myself. The office complainers in the "No-Boss Office" are probably the reason the boss bought a computer in the first place. The boss is probably looking to replace one, or maybe even two, of them with the computer.

Employees are not there to judge their bosses; they are there to do whatever the boss asks them to do. If I had employees like the above trio, I'd be replacing them with computers, too. Computers don't talk back. — DISGUSTED IN OCALA, FLA.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Talk back? Communication and honest dialogue between employee and employer are essential if both are to prosper in a productive atmosphere.

DEAR ABBY: Re men wearing wedding rings: As our wedding date approached, the issue of wedding rings came up.

My fiance asked, "Do you want me to wear a wedding ring?"

I answered, "If you don't want to wear one, then neither will I."

The idea of his bride not wearing a wedding ring was shocking!

We had a double-ring wedding ceremony. I put a ring on his finger, and he has never taken it off. — BEATRICE IN WACO

Individuals' definition of 'success' not in dictionary

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I can't remember the name of the man who spoke at my high school commencement, but I remember what he said. He told us the future of the world rested on our shoulders and he charged us with finding our destiny and fulfilling it. He went on to say we alone must cure disease, hunger and poverty throughout the world, and above all, we must find success.

I glanced over at Jack, the class deficient who couldn't even find his parents after they parked the car, and I got an uneasy feeling. Not only that, but for those of us who planned to sleep in for a week, the speech was very depressing, as it seemed to call for a lot of work from such a small class.

After the speech, the entire group scrambled out of the auditorium in search of success as if it were the first item on a scavenger hunt. We had no idea what it was, where to look for it, how much it cost, whether it was in season or what it looked like, but from that day on, we got up early in the morning and pursued it till late at night. Sometimes we heard that another classmate had found it, but when we confronted him, he assured us that if he had, he would be happier.

By our 10th reunion, no one had found it yet. The men struggled in their jobs and fertilized their lawns on weekends, and the women raised babies and polished the bottoms of their Revere Ware. It seemed we were never rich enough, thin enough, secure enough, educated enough, fulfilled enough or important enough to qualify for success.

I've spent a lifetime trying to figure out who has success. I thought Olympic skater Debi Thomas was a success because she was on the cover of Time magazine and won a bronze medal for her country. But obviously she didn't think so because she looked so sad and cried when she got third place.

On the other hand, Eddie the Eagle, the skier from Great Britain, was in last place in his event and didn't even get a medal, yet everyone said what a success story he was because he did what he thought was not possible for him to do.

Could it be that success is not a judgment of society, but can only be self-administered? Is it possible that success isn't a plateau of wealth and honors, but a condition that lies within each of us?

When a handicapped child takes a step, isn't that success? When a person puts an old hatred to rest, isn't that success? When you hold in your arms the baby experts said you'd never have, isn't that success?

In Fresno, Calif., a group of third-graders were asked to spell success on a spelling test. Their answers ranged from "cexses" to "sugses" to "secksis" to "sexsece." If the graduating classes of 1988 are reading this, maybe it's not important how you spell it. Maybe what is important is knowing when you've got it.

Fashions in umbrellas changing

By CARRIE DONOVAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Like many another elegant fashion flourish that was once de rigueur — say, short white cotton gloves for summer — the long-stemmed umbrella is fast becoming an anachronism. As handsome as an umbrella can be, especially if it has a swanlike handle and a thin, silky skin, the fold-up, tuck-'em-away version has it beat by far.

Granted, it takes a few seconds to get used to opening and closing one of these ugly, small-scale, chubby devices. But once you have mastered the flip and flick, you will probably never go back to your old standard models.

There are practical reasons why the fold-up umbrella makes sense today. First of all, wet or dry, it fits into a a shoulder tote. This eliminates the hazard of poking strangers in odd places. Then, too, small umbrellas are inexpensive. Some people buy half a dozen, knowing they are bound to leave one behind eventually.

The grand-size umbrella is still bought. For some reason, it is favored as a Christmas present (the recipient usually gives it to someone else). Perhaps that's why Paloma Picasso has included some really swell umbrellas in her new accessory collection. A black silk evening version even has a highly impractical but pretty red satin ribbon at the rim.

Fashions regress

PARIS — Are you old enough to remember the Age of Aquarius? If so, you are lucky: now is the time to haul out your old beads, stone necklaces, cuff bracelets, outsize brooches and belts with filigree buckles. While you are at it, resurrect the rest of your hippie regalia, including the caftans and tunics of crushed velvet, embroidered or tie-dyed fabrics.

The ready-to-wear fashion shows for fall 1988 recently ended here, preceded by those in other European cities. There were a variety of notable trends, but the most unexpected was the rekindling of the lavish look of the late 60s.

In Milan, Italy, this was most apparent in the Callaghan collection designed by Romeo Gigli. In Paris, Christian Lacroix piled on copious amounts of vaguely ethnic-looking accessories. Karl Lagerfeld and Jean-Paul Gaultier, among others, had a go at it, too. By the second day of showings, some of the faster-moving fashion editors were appearing in T-shirts bedecked with layers of necklaces or with handsome tie-dyed tunics swinging over their crisp shirts and tight blue jeans.

What gives this 60s look the '88 twist, however, is the addition of ropes of pearls wrapped Chanel-style around the throat, and a generous soupcon of modern silver jewelry added to the already abundant jangle of accessories.

Haynes: Defendant not only person with motive for killing

STATE

Houston defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes sits next to his client, Jane Ada Callaway, during her murder trial. Callaway is accused of hiring a gunman to kill Judy Woods Saragusa.

AP Laserphoto

AMARILLO (AP) — Flamboyant defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes said Monday at a Houston secretary's murder-for-hire trial that other people had motives for killing her boss' wife.

Haynes returned to the Panhandle city where he pulled off a stunning acquittal for former millionaire Cullen Davis 11 years ago.

This time, Haynes represents Jane Ada Calloway in the murder of Judy Saragusa, 39, who was shot to death at home in Houston on Sept. 2, 1987.

Ms. Calloway, a twice-divorced, 36-year-old and the former executive secretary of businessman Michael Saragusa, is accused of hiring Leon Hawkins Jr. to kill Mrs. Saragusa.

As the prosecution's first witness, Saragusa testified that he and Ms. Calloway had a brief sexual affair, but that he ended it two months before his wife's death. He said he told his wife about the affair, but the Saragusas continued to socialize with Ms. Calloway.

Ms. Calloway is free on $50,000 bail and had to be ordered by a judge to stop telephoning her ex-boss.

After police identified a car seen leaving the murder scene as belonging to Ms. Calloway, she said she lent her car to Michael Richardson, the alleged middleman in the murder plot, on the night of the shooting.

Richardson has agreed to testify for the state under a plea bargain in exchange for a 10-year prison term, said his attorney, John Ackerman.

Richardson's stepbrother, Hawkins, surrendered to police two days after the shooting and was charged with capital murder.

The case was moved here from Houston on a change of venue — the same circumstances that brought Haynes to Amarillo from Fort Worth to defend Davis in 1977.

Haynes said the trial "may develop a lot more questions than are answered," but said there are others who had motives to kill Mrs. Saragusa.

Haynes said Ms. Calloway was used by her boss to handle his mounting personal bills and "run them through the company," Quality Beverage Co. of Houston.

Following the killing, Haynes said, her loyalty to Saragusa led her to protect him by lying to police about her love affair with him and about the car seen leaving the murder scene.

Saragusa began the affair with Ms. Calloway and was involved in an unhappy marriage, Haynes said. He said Mrs. Saragusa was "domineering and abrasive" and talked about her sexual practices which "annoyed Mr. Michael Saragusa."

His wife, who was contributing to Saragusa's $4 million to $5 million debt, spent most evenings with her horses and a female friend, Haynes said.

"Judy spent thousands and thousands" on her horses and remodeling the couple's $1 million Houston home, he said.

Ms. Calloway was portrayed in opening arguments as a capable secretary who craved wealth and status and who was pursued and seduced by her unhappily married employer, to whom she had great loyalty.

Prosecutor Chuck Rosenthal said Ms. Calloway wanted Mrs. Saragusa dead "because she was covetous of her possessions and covetous of her social position in Houston."

She wanted the wealth and status associated with being the wife of a wealthy co-owner of the lucrative wholesale liquor business, he said.

Saragusa's finances were expected to be a principal component of both defense and prosecution testimony, with several Houston bankers on the witness list.

Rosenthal charged that Ms. Calloway, who had the authority to transfer money among Saragusa's accounts, transferred $135,000 the month before the slaying to an account she controlled and used some of the money to pay Hawkins.

Haynes said that, despite a $400,000 annual salary, Saragusa faced mounting debts and was sometimes overdrawn several thousand dollars at the bank.

Testimony is expected to last more than a month. State District Judge Michael McSpadden ruled that a gag order, issued before the trial for attorneys and witnesses, continue during court proceedings.

Let The Skin Institute pamper your face

Faces that need shaving can benefit from a facial by the experts at The Skin Institute.

"Daily shaving, extensive exposure to the scorching West Texas sun and dry climate can leave anyone's face irritated," explains Patsy Jackson, aesthetician. "A facial can remove some of the grim of daily life as well as restoring moisture to a man's face."

Specializing in deep pore cleansing, facials are probably the most popular of services offered by The Skin Institute. If ingrown hair is a problem for you, the exfoliation that occurs during the cleansing cycle of a facial will allow the hair to grown normally.

The Skin Institute, located in The Fountain, 2706 W. Cuthbert, is very private, with individual rooms for facials, electrolysis, manicures, pedicures, body massage and beauty make-overs. Once you've had a facial from The Skin Institute, you'll know why they are so popular. Cleaning your skin as well as providing an relaxing interlude to your week.

Patsy Jackson, an aesthetician and registered electrologist, has 25 years of experience in helping men and women look and feel their best.

Gift certificates are available and these make a great gift for Father's Day or any occasion.

The Skin Institute's aestheticians, trained in skin care, use Pantheon products. Dr. Sheets of Sheets & Associates Eye Centers first began advising his patients about this line of skin care products after he discovered that many eye infections are caused by abrasive cosmetics. The Mario e' Raquel line of Pantheon products is hypo-allergenic and has no alcohol to dry your skin or mineral oil to clog your pores.

Other products especially for the man in your life include shampoo and conditioner, an after-shave balm and a rose water spray. "Men love to use the rose-water spray after shaving," Patsy pointed out. "It helps to cool their face. We also have a cleansing gelee that men like to use as a shaving cream. It deep cleans the skin as they shave."

Call Patsy Jackson at The Skin Institute, 697-8206 for an appointment for yourself or your favorite guy. You'll both be glad you did.

Robbie Davidson enjoys a relaxing facial administered by Patsy Jackson. The Skin Institute, 697-8206, has a growing number of male clients that appreciate the soothing comfort of a facial, as well as the manicure and pedicure services available.

Some federal prisoners end hunger strike

SEGUIN (AP) — Guadalupe County Sheriff Melvin Harborth says federal prisoners at the county jail were apparently swayed more by their stomachs than by the urgings of the leader of a hunger strike.

Harborth says more than half of the 27 federal prisoners who had refused food for two meals accepted an evening meal Monday.

"I guess they were hungry," the sheriff said.

The protest, which began Monday morning when the prisoners skipped breakfast, was initiated by admitted San Antonio bank robber Robert Chavez, Harborth said.

One of Chavez's chief demands was for more food and greater access to the jail's commissary to purchase candy and sodas.

Chavez, 29, pleaded guilty May 9 to robbing a branch of San Antonio Savings Association. He is awaiting sentencing set for July 14.

A self-proclaimed gang member, Chavez once asked Mayor Henry Cisneros for better treatment for gangs.

"He says he's not getting enough food," Harborth said. "He's requesting bigger portions. He says if he's going hungry, he might as well go hungry all the way."

The sheriff said Chavez sent him a note last week threatening to convince "all those within shouting distance" of him to refuse food unless Harborth agreed to increase the portions, increase the commissary operation from two days to seven days a week, allow four visitation days instead of two and permit him 24-hour access to a phone.

"He wants to rewrite my policy manual, and I'm not going to let him do it," Harborth said. "We offered him supper (Monday) and he refused. He asked to go to the commissary to get candy and soda water, but I'm not going to make an exception for him. He'll just have to wait until (today) to get his Snickers bar and Coca-Cola."

Only the federal prisoners awaiting trial in Chavez's cell block participated in the strike, the sheriff said.

Two ministers arrested for not paying support

DALLAS (AP) — Two ministers who owed a total of more than $30,000 in back child-support payments have been jailed as part of a new program that puts some muscle into Attorney General Jim Mattox's battle against non-payers.

Glen Robinson, 33, minister of Hill Avenue Baptist Church, and Raymond Herford, 45, associate minister of Trinity Temple Full Gospel Church, were indicted last week by a Dallas County grand jury on Class A misdemeanor charges of criminal non-support. The maximum punishment is two years in jail and a $2,000 fine. Subsequent offense is a third-degree felony.

Robinson owes $13,354 in back payments, and Herford, $17,174, according to court records.

Herford was arrested Friday. He posted a $1,500 cash bond and was released from Lew Sterrett Justice Center. Robinson was arrested Monday and remained in custody late Monday.

In February, Mattox named a six-member enforcement team in February to combat non-payment of child support.

Russell Wilson, Dallas-Fort Worth special enforcement agent, said that if the team brings in even 5 percent of the child-support payments owed, the statewide total will reach $1.1 million a month.

Wilson said 22 percent of parents pay court-ordered child support, another 50 percent pay sporadically and the remainder do not pay at all. The enforcement team seeks those who do not pay even though they have the financial means.

"We're the attention-getters," Wilson said.

He said the Dallas arrests are part of a second swoop by the enforcement team. Other arrests were made in March in Houston, San Antonio, Abilene, Brownsville and Fort Worth, where Albert Brewer awaits a court hearing on $11,000 in overdue payments.

Wilson said in-house investigators in the attorney general's office previously worked non-payment cases by telephone, contacting offenders about overdue payments but not working in the field to bring them in. Too often, he noted, those who owe money either ignored court documents or could not be found to be served with court papers.

Enforcers now put offenders under surveillance and hand-deliver information on their whereabouts to the sheriff's department. Non-payers who do not have personal property that can be seized and sold to make restitution are arrested.

Arrest is a last resort meant for those who consistently refuse to adhere to the rules, Wilson said.

How principal handled reports of alleged abuse being probed

KATY (AP) — An elementary school principal was reassigned pending an investigation into her handling of child abuse allegations against a cafeteria monitor.

Freddye Kelly, 49, principal of West Memorial Elementary School for two years, will begin working at the Katy Independent School District administrative building today.

The temporary reassignment is being made while the district is completing its investigation, ditrict spokesman Charles Rogers said Monday.

The investigation was sparked after parents complained that Ms. Kelly failed to notify Harris County Children's Protective Services in a timely fashion after a cafeteria monitor was accused of touching the breasts of three 9- and 10-year-old girls during his duties at West Memorial.

The monitor, Charlou Koenig, 34, who also teaches Latin at Taylor High School, was charged last week with three counts of indecency with a child. He was relieved of his elementary school duties last month, but he continued to teach Latin classes until his arrest May 11. He was placed on administrative leave with pay.

Several parents were outraged to learn about a February memo to Koenig from Ms. Kelly that warned him that touching the shoulders and chests of female students could be grounds for child abuse.

The memo indicated Ms. Kelly had been aware of the allegations since September, although CPS was not notified until April 26. The Texas Family Code requires suspected child abuse be reported to proper authorities within 48 hours of its occurrence.

Three people tortured by suspected drug dealers

DALLAS (AP) — Three Dallas residents were stabbed and tortured by two suspected drug dealers who were attempting to recover $90 worth of missing drugs, police say.

Officers said one of the victims was cut and stabbed in the chest and legs more than 80 times Sunday with a survival knife and was doused with boiling water before the assailants poured salt into his wounds.

The man, 28, was in fair condition at Parkland Memorial Hospital late Monday with multiple knife wounds and second-degree burns on his back and buttocks, a hospital spokesman said.

The man's wife, 27, suffered welts on her wrists and back when she was bound and whipped. A third person, 17, was treated at Parkland Memorial Hospital for second-degree burns he suffered when he was doused with boiling ater.

Dallas Police Sgt. Bobby Little said no arrests have been made.

Police reports indicate that the two assailants came to an apartment occupied by the 28-year-old man to collect daily drug-sale proceeds.

The victims told police they sold crack and cocain in the apartment and two Jamaican men are their suppliers. The men were trying to recover either the crack or $90.

The crack had been flushed down the toilet the night before, one of the vicitms said, because of rumors that the Dallas police were going to raid the apartments Saturday night.

When someone rang the doorbell, they panicked and flushed the crack down the toilet. They ransacked the apartment to make it appear there had been a raid and that police had seized the drugs.

The men apparently did not believe the story and began torturing the victims, police said.

Mid-West can save you time and money by making your home maintenance free

If you are like other homeowners, your time is valuable. It always seems as if something needs to be done around the house. Free time seems non-existing.

Mid-West Door and Window wants to help you in your quest for free time.

For starters, why not rid yourself of exterior painting by installing steel siding to the exposed wood on your house? The professionals at Mid-West can show you how they can cover all the wood, not just part of it.

They start with your wood overhangs and install steel fascia with aluminum soffit around the perimeter with a ventilated soffit panel periodically to help insure proper ventilation.

Then they go to work on your gable ends. Installing steel siding from bottom to top and making gable vents, again to ensure proper ventilation, in the siding itself.

Then its on to your wood window, and door frames. Using a matching steel coil they can break and bend, Mid-West can cap all window and door facings including your garage door facings.

Covering your porch ceilings using the same aluminum soffit used underneath overhangs, this can also be used to cover carport ceilings, giving your home a complete, clean look that is easily maintained by an occasional watering down to keep clean.

Mid-West uses only the best materials. You can choose from Alside or revere in steel. Both have lifetime, transferable warranties with 59 year warranties against hail.

Both Alside and Revere also have a wide variety of styles and colors to choose from. This way you are not limited to plain whites and browns.

The nest step toward maintenance free housing is aluminum or vinyl replacement windows. If your home has wood windows, chances are they are either deteriorating with age or they have been painted shut. No you can replace them with insulating windows that feature paint free frames and minimum labor expense.

Replacement windows are custom made so that they fit your existing opening and thus eliminate a lot of unnecessary expense in labor.

If your existing windows work properly, but you want better insulation and less dust in your home, then you can install custom fit storm windows.

Storm windows are less expensive than replacements and offer excellent insulation, protection as well as added security.

And now through June 30, with any complete home purchase of these products form Mid-West Door and Window you will receive a new peerless fullview storm door.

The folks at Mid-West are so confident in these doors that they put their own five year warranty on them.

So if you find yourself in the market for more free time, give the friendly professionals at Mid-West Door and Window a call at 682-4632 or stop by 2400 W. Front in Midland. Mid-West Door and Window is a division of Mid-West Glass and has served Midland for more than 40 years.

Don't take chances with fly-by-night contractors or be pushed around and hassled by high-pressure salesmen. Call Mid-West Door and Window and set up an appointment at your convenience.

Who's living in your fireplace?

After a winter of heavy use, many home-owners stop using or caring for their fireplaces as they did in the fall. Ernest Meyer of All Seasons Chimney Service states, "Preventive care for your fireplace should occur during all seasons and not just fall or early winter."

It's now officially springtime in Texas, with this season come a variety of elements. "Spring-time is usually the wettest time of the year, and rain causes the most destruction to a chimney. An un-capped chimney allows water to settle inside your chimney, and when mixed with the creosote, creates a highly corrosive acid which eventually seeps down and attacks the mortar joints in the back of the fireplace. This results in the mortar weakening and the bricks becoming loose and eventually cracking."

Not only will All Seasons Chimney caps protect your fireplace from the elements, they will screen out birds and other animals due to arrive shortly. "The average family of birds will leave behind approximately two to three pounds of debris in the chimney," Meyer explained. "This debris can be a fire hazard if not removed, and will attract bugs and insects."

All Seasons Chimney Service recommends installing a cap on your chimney for safety and protection. "Every chimney, damper, and fireplace needs protection from damaging moisture, embers, and animal pests," Meyer added.

All Seasons Chimney Service has several types of caps to choose from. Their flue caps fit standard masonry chimneys, providing a heavy duty spark arrestor and moisture deterrent. "These caps offer complete protection to the internal parts of the fireplace, and extra protection to homes with wood shingles, which are very vulnerable to roof fires, caused by blowing embers."

"Our custom caps cover the entire chimney top, protecting both the mortar top and inside, while providing an attractive piece of fireplace hardware," Meyer stated.

All caps are made of heavy gauge galvanized steel, stainless steel, or copper ensuring top quality protection. Free estimates on caps are available at the home-owners request.

Another problem which usually surfaces this time of year is chimney odor. "This can result from various elements," explains Meyer. "If it's been over a year since you've had your fireplace cleaned, you're probably smelling the creosote build-up which formed during last season. The odor is stronger this year because of the very wet months we had last fall."

"We have a very effective deodorant which is designed especially for fireplaces," Meyer continued. "Deodorizing your chimney is part of our over-all cleaning package." If you've had your fireplace cleaned recently, but still have a musty odor, All Seasons Chimney Service can supply you with a deodorizer to neutralize that creosote odor.

All Seasons Chimney Service is offering the following specials:

- Chimney Caps: $25 off on custom caps. Free estimates available at the home-owners request.
- Chimney cleaning: $49, this includes chimney cleaning, ash removal, deodorizing, and a 20-step written inspection.
- Firebox Repair: $75, this includes all firebox cracks sealed, damper lubricated and adjusted, entire firebox painted with heat resistant paint.

In addition to these services, All Seasons Chimney Service offers brick and masonry work, damper installation and adjustments, smoke problem correction, flue extensions and a variety of fireplace accessories.

M-Angels win in 10th, 8-5

From Staff Reports

JACKSON, Miss— The Midland Angels used two singles, a stolen base, a wild pitch, three walks and an error to score three runs in the 10th inning to take an 8-5 Texas League victory over the Jackson Mets.

The Mets scored first when Ron Gideon belted his sixth homer of the season in the second inning, but Midland came back in the third when Jim Thomas scored a run on a Tom Alfredson double.

In the fifth inning, Marcus Lawton scored for Jackson on a single by Miguel Roman, but the Angels came back in the sixth to tie the game 2-2 when Dan Grunhard came home on a Mike Knapp single.

Midland took the lead for the first time in the eighth when Jeff Manto scored on an error with two outs. Midland scored twice in the ninth, first when Lee Stevens scored on a Manto single and Manto scored on a single by Eric Pappas.

The Mets came back and tied the game at 5-5 in the bottom of the ninth. Lawton led off with a double, Zoilo Sanchez walked and Roman singled, sending Lawton home. Sanchez then scored on a Gary Jones single and Roman scored on a sacrifice fly by Alan Hayden.

But the Angels came back in the 10th when Jim Thomas singled and scored after a stolen base, a wild pitch and a single by C.L. Penigar. Tom Alfredson, Lee Stevens and Manto all walked, forcing Penigar home. An out later, Alfredson scored on an error.

The winning pitcher was Colby Ward, 7-1. The loser was Mike Santiago, 1-1. Ward continues to lead the Texas League in wins despite pitching exclusively in relief.

Chris Collins, 1-3, starts on the mound for Midland in tonight's 7:00 game. The Mets will counter with Brian Givens, 2-3.

JOHN BARFIELD allowed only three hits in pitching the Tulsa Drillers to a 3-1 victory over the Wichita Pilots.

In other Texas League action Monday night, Shreveport blanked San Antonio, 3-0, Midland defeated Jackson, 8-5, in 10 innings and Arkansas blasted El Paso, 9-1.

Barfield struck out six and walked one in a complete-game performance against Wichita in the first game of a scheduled doubleheader. The second game could not be played because of lighting problems and will be played as part of a doubleheader tonight.

Mike Scanlin had a solo homer for the Drillers in the first inning.

Wichita tied the game at 1-1 in the fourth when Jimmy Lester tripled and came home on a sacrifice fly by Christ Knabenshue.

MHS honors Spring sports

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Kim Carson, Michaela Hasek, Theresa Brown and Eric Boyt were the big award winners at Monday night's annual Midland High School Spring Sports Banquet, held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Monday night ceremonies made every competitive athlete feel like a winner, though, whether they received singled-out recognition or not.

"Coach (Doug) McCutchen did a great job with the football program," said basketball coach Jack Stephenson, who also served as the evening's Master of Ceremonies. "And for those of you who were in attendance at Angel Stadium over the weekend, I think you'll agree — what a way to conclude things."

STEPHENSON, alluding to the Midland High Bulldog baseball team, which finished the year Saturday as District 4-5A champions, brought the spring sports season to a grand finale.

Carson, the No. 1 Lady Bulldog golfer, was named the girls golf team's Most Valuable Player, and the senior with the highest grade point average. Carson will conclude the year with a 4.71 GPA, ranked seventh in her class. She was also a nominee for the girl's Scholar Athlete.

Hasek, a multiple honoree in girls swimming, including representing the Lady Bulldog swim team in two events (breaststroke, 200 IM) at the state swim meet, is a junior who will return next year to head coach Jessie Marsh's team. Named girl's outstanding athlete and outstanding girls swimmer, Hasek is also under consideration for All-American high school swimming honors.

BROWN, WHO, with a 6.45 GPA, also lettered as a swimmer, track star and All-District volleyballer was named girl's recipient of the Scholar Athlete Award, a combination of academic and athletic performance.

Boyt continues to rack up the awards. An obvious choice to the District 4-5A All-District baseball team, to be released at a later date, Boyt was named baseball Most Valuable Player, boy's recipient of Scholar Athlete and all-around boys Outstanding Athlete.

Booster Club Scholarship recipients were Kim Carson and Jimmy Ray Frazier.

Before announcing the scholarship winners, Booster Club head Terry Stone led the crowd of almost 1000 in one of the loudest ovations of the evening.

Dallas' Sam Perkins gets off the shot and draws a foul from Denver's Blair Rasmussen. NBA series resumes tonight in Denver. The series is tied at games apiece.

Hawks square series with Celts

By BILL BARNARD

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Hawks took some of Boston's best shots Monday night and came out of it with a 2-2 tie in their NBA playoff series.

NBA

Glenn "Doc" Rivers tied an NBA playoff record for assists and Dominique Wilkins scored 40 points as the Hawks defeated the Celtics 118-109.

"We're even now, that's what's important," Wilkins said. "We felt a lot looser. The game yesterday relaxed us."

The Celtics, who hit only 38.6 percent of their field-goal attempts Sunday, shot 70 percent from the field in the first quarter and opened a 10-point lead.

Then the Hawks outscored the Celtics 60-31 over a 21-minute span of the first and second half, turning the early 10-point deficit into an 88-69 advantage with 4:49 left in the third quarter. Boston rallied after that, closing the gap to 101-99 with 7:31 left before an 8-0 run by Atlanta put the Hawks back in control.

"WHEN THEY cut it to two, we didn't want to panic or get nervous," Wilkins said. "When you panic, you just make more mistakes."

Rivers had 15 of his 22 assists in the first half, tying Magic Johnson's mark for a half established on May 3, 1985 at Portland. Johnson set the single-game playoff mark of 24 in 1984 against Phoenix.

"I don't mind that at all, tying Magic Johnson," Rivers said.

Despite the victory, the Hawks still must find a way to win at Boston Garden, where they have lost 13 straight since 1985. Game 5 is scheduled for Boston on Wednesday night, with Game 6 at Atlanta on Friday night and Game 7 Sunday at Boston.

"What we've got to remember is that we won two games in a row," Rivers said. "We've got to go to the (Boston) Garden and just play."

"We've got to start playing some ball," Boston's Larry Bird said. "We wanted to put some pressure on them."

THE WINNER of the series advances to the Eastern Conference final against the winner of the Detroit-Chicago series, which the Pistons lead 3-1.

If Atlanta wins, it will become only the fifth team in NBA playoff history to win a best-of-seven series after trailing 2-0. The Celtics have never lost a series after leading 2-0.

"At home, we're more active, you just get a little higher and you feel better," Bird said.

Bird led Boston with 30 points, while Kevin McHale had 22 and Danny Ainge 18. Kevin Willis had 19 and Spud Webb 17 for the Hawks.

Atlanta outscored Boston 22-10 in the first 7:11 of the third quarter, extending a seven-point halftime lead to 88-69. During that run, Boston Coach K.C. Jones was called for two technicals and was ejected.

The Celtics cut the deficit to 90-81 before the end of the period, however, and continued narrow the margin in the fourth quarter until Atlanta started its decisive 8-0 spurt.

A three-point play and 3-point goal by Ainge made it 109-105 with 3:07 left, but the Celtics didn't threaten again after a 3-pointer by Rivers.

Bird scored nine of his 13 first-quarter points in the opening 3:31 as Boston grabbed a 13-8 lead, but Atlanta got its running game going and scored the next eight points.

The Celtics then outscored the Hawks 21-8 in the next five minutes, taking a 34-24 lead with 2:01 left in the first period.

After an exchange of baskets, Webb scored six consecutive points, starting a 21-4 spurt that gave the Hawks a 49-42 advantage with 6:16 left in the half.

Mario back and it's same old Indy

By STEVE HERMAN

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mario Andretti's luck at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway doesn't appear to have changed. But now he has family going through hard times with him.

500

Andretti has spent the years since his Indianapolis 500 victory in 1969 trying to win the race a second time. To simply say that he has failed to do so only scratches the surface of his run of bad luck.

Take last year, for example. He led — no, dominated — the race for 180 laps, only to have his engine quit within 50 miles of the finish. A wreck in the pits knocked him out of the 1984 race and a collision at the start ended his bright hopes of victory in 1982.

In 1981, he was actually declared the winner when Bobby Unser was penalized a lap for passing under the yellow. Four months later, a review panel gave the trophy back to Unser. That's how things have gone for Mario at Indy.

On Saturday, at the wheel of a car that had gone over 221 mph during practice, Andretti was preparing to take a four-lap run at the pole position for the May 29 race. As perhaps only an Andretti car could, the Lola found a tiny patch of the 2½-mile long, 50-yard wide track that had been dusted by oil dry. The chemical soaks up oil spills, but in this case it absorbed Andretti's handling.

His right front wheel went haywire, robbing the car of its handling, and Andretti settled for a qualifying speed of 214.692 mph. Quick, to be sure, but not what he wanted.

IN FACT, IT wasn't even good enough for a spot on the front row. The three Penske Racing cars driven by Rick Mears, Danny Sullivan and Al Unser swept the top three spots. Andretti will start on the inside of the second row.

"As it turned out, we're not as badly off as I thought," the 48-year-old Andretti said Sunday. "We'll be behind three seasoned, totally reliable drivers, and alongside two other equally talented drivers (Al Unser Jr. and Arie Luyendyk).

"I won't hide the disappointment, but I can't dwell on it," Andretti added. "That was yesterday. We're looking ahead. Concentration on the race is what we're concerned with now."

There are two other Andrettis who are learning about hard luck. Michael Andretti, Mario's 25-year-old son, has struggled with his March-Cosworth since the track opened for practice. On Saturday, Michael put together the 10th-fastest qualifying speed, but it was 9 mph slower than Mears' 219.198.

"We've really been climbing a hill all week long, and we're not at the top yet," the younger Andretti said. "I was very consistent throughout the run, and I'm very happy with that. ... I went out flat all the way around. I talked to my right foot a lot, the whole time telling it to stay down, but it didn't listen to me on the first lap."

And then there's Mario's nephew, Jeff Andretti, a 25-year-old rookie trying to make the field for the first time. A driver gets three chances to qualify, and Jeff has used two without getting the job done.

ON THE FIRST run Saturday, he went three laps at over 205 mph before burning a piston. On Sunday, just as he prepared for his second try, he realized that his turbocharger wasn't working. Without that assist, he had no hope of getting up to speed.

But, because he'd crossed the starting line before realizing the extent of the problem, it counted as his second qualifying attempt.

"It's kind of my fault that I took the attempt," Jeff said. "I could have come off (turn) four into pit lane and not taken it. Once I started my warmup, I knew there was a problem. You could see it right away on the gauge. I started fiddling with the gauge, but it didn't change anything. ... There was no power there. ...

"We've been behind the 8-ball all week and it keeps getting worse."

Mario Andretti could tell his nephew all about the dark side of that 8-ball. He's been a resident there for years.

MC, WJCAC basketball, it's special....and getting better

Battles

I wonder if Midland really recognizes and appreciates the caliber of college basketball fans here are treated to on those long and sometimes empty winter nights.

Last week two more Chaparrals from the 1987-88 team signed letters-of-intent to play for four-year colleges. David Martin opted for Jackson, Miss., State and Nathaniel Curvey picked Nicholls, La., State.

Earlier Stewart Barnett, the off-the-bench sparkplug guard, was signed by Wyoming, and Clifton Jones wound up at Idaho State.

Biggest waves, however, were created when Herman "Skeeter" Henry became the third Chap in three years to sign with the University of Oklahoma and Billy Ray Smith announced he was bound for Kansas State, both Big Eight Conference teams and the hottest league in college basketball last year.

THREE BIG Eight teams made the final eight and two wound up playing for the NCAA championship, appropriately, in Kansas City. You don't get much hotter than that.

The WJCAC plays as good a brand of basketball as you'll see on the junior college level and better than most four-year colleges play.

The WJCAC always has been at a superior level and it's only getting better because of Proposition 48, the rule which raised college entrance requirements and, subsequently has made it necessary to "farm out" some high grade talent for a couple of years for academic preparation.

BUT THE past is evident in the NBA where Craig Ehlo, Odessa College, can be seen on TV filling a role withthe Cleveland Cavaliers; Paul Pressey, Western Texas College, needs more help at Milwaukee; and Spud Webb Sunday came off the bench to ignite the Atlanta Hawks to victory over the Boston Celtics and win game MVP honors for his 13-assist effort.

Further proof that the WJCAC has a history of outstanding basketball is the league's record at Hutchinson, Kan., the site of the nationals each year.

And in 1981, Nolan Richardson coached Texas Western College to the NJCAA title and then took his team with him when he went to the University of Tulsa to become head coach.

Richardson and his Western exes simply went on to win the NIT.

MAYBE IT'S understandable that Midland may not realize the kind of basketball it is privileged to see here.Even former MC Coach Jerry Stone left Midland after a decade for the status of coaching a four-year college.

However, unless you are a Dean Smith, John Thompson, Lew Carneseca, Don Sutton or Bobby Knight at one of the perennial powers, chances of recruiting the kind of talent those schools go after is better here than at many four-year colleges.

With Proposition 48 and the success for JC's that has gone with it, the national recognition is beginning to come to the WJCAC. In the past year, MC has received more national media attention than all of its previous years combined.

Stone left for UT-Arlington and may have soon realized that this was where it is now at. Luckily, Reggie Franklin, after a year away, realized it and couldn't wait to get back when MC beckoned.

Think of it, the 1986-87 team not only had six players signed by Division I schools this year, but last season's sophomore class saw Lincoln Minor wind up with NCAA champion Kansas while Mookie Blaylock became TV's darling at Oklahoma of the near-miss.

That's eight players from the 1986-87 team. The verdict on the 1988-89 bunch must wait. Six already have signed and you can bet the four-years saw some talent on this year's MC club that they'll just have to wait a season for.

Royal home runs Texas' downfall

ARLINGTON (AP) — Bo Jackson and Kevin Seitzer homered and Floyd Bannister raised his record to 18-4 since the 1987 All-Star Game as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Texas Rangers 7-6 Monday night.

AL

Bannister, 6-2, allowed two runs and five hits in eight innings and left with a 7-2 lead as the Royals handed the Rangers their second straight setback after they equaled the club record with an eight-game winning streak. Bannister was 7-11 with a 4.85 ERA in 22 previous career appearances against Texas.

The Rangers trailed 3-2 after Steve Buechele's solo homer, his sixth, in the sixth inning. But Jackson, who had three hits, hit the first pitch from loser Paul Kilgus, 5-3, 426 feet into the left-field stands, scoring Frank White, who singled. It was Jackson's seventh homer.

The Royals added an unearned run off Dale Mohorcic in the seventh on third baseman Buechele's two-base fielding error and a single by White. Seitzer hit his second home run in the ninth off Dewayne Vaughn and that proved to be the decisive run when Texas scored four times in the bottom of the ninth.

Ruben Sierra greeted Bud Black with a double and Pete Incaviglia hit his eighth home run. After singles by Pete O'Brien and Larry Parrish, Dan Quisenberry relieved Black.

RBI singles by pinch hitter Oddibe McDowell and Buechele brought the Rangers within 7-6 before Browne, attempting to sacrifice, forced McDowell at third.

Steve Farr took over and recorded his first save by striking out pinch hitter James Steels and retiring Scott Fletcher on a grounder.

Texas got a run in the first inning when Ruben Sierra drove in Bob Brower with an infield hit. Kansas City went in front 2-1 in the second on Jackson's RBI single and Mike Macfarlane's run-scoring double. The Royals added a run in the third on doubles by Seitzer and Danny Tartabull.

A's 3, Red Sox 0

BOSTON — Dave Parker hit a two-run homer and Storm Davis worked out of two early bases-loaded jams to lead the Oakland Athletics.

Davis allowed six hits, walked five and threw three wild pitches in six innings but the Red Sox were unable to score for Jeff Sellers, 0-4. The Red Sox have been shut out in Sellers' last three starts and have scored just three runs in his five starts.

Yankees 3, Mariners 1

NEW YORK — Jack Clark hit a two-run homer as New York scored all its runs with two out in the first inning.

Clark's seventh home run the season followed a two-out walk to Mike Pagliarulo off Mike Moore, who allowed four hits in 7 1-3 innings. The Yankees made it 3-0 when Claudell Washington doubled and scored on a single by Dave Winfield.

Winner John Candelaria allowed eight hits, including Alvin Davis' eighth home run.

Brewers 3, Tigers 1

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount became Milwaukee's all-time RBI leader with a seventh-inning double and the Brewers got strong pitching from Chris Bosio and Dan Plesac. Bosio scattered nine hits in seven innings-plus and has allowed only one earned run in his last 24 innings.

One of the six hits allowed by loser Walt Terrell was Yount's two-out double in the seventh that gave the Brewers a 3-1 lead. The hit enabled Yount to pass Cecil Cooper as the Brewers' career RBI leader with 945.

Blue Jays 5, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Dave Stieb continued his mastery of Chicago with a four-hitter and Pat Borders and Kelly Gruber homered as Toronto snapped a three-game losing streak.

It was the first complete game of the season for Stieb, who struck out four and did not walk a batter in boosting his record to 15-4 over the White Sox. He is 9-1 against the White Sox in Comiskey Park, where he has won six in a row since his only loss in May 1982.

Joel Cartaya doubled home Chad Kreuter in the seventh inning and singled home Jose Vargas later.

Barfield is 4-1. Matt Macy, 1-5, was the losing pitcher.

The Shreveport Captains took a 3-0 victory over the San Antonio Missions in a game that was highlighted by the ejection of a San Antonio pitcher and Missions manager Kevin Kennedy.

Pitcher Mike Pitz was ejected after he hit shreveport catcher Jose Pena in the back with a pitch. Kennedy was also ejected.

Joe Olker, 6-1, limited San Antonio to five hits with relief help from Mike Hogan and Jose Dominguez.

The Missions didn't get a man past second base.

Aussie cage team defeats Nebraska

NEWCASTLE, Australia (AP) — The Australian national team posted a 109-84 victory over the University of Nebraska in an exhibition basketball game Monday night.

Australian coach Adrian Hurley allowed the touring Americans to use players who had fouled out for the final four minutes when Nebraska was left with only four men. There were 62 fouls called in the game.

Astros' Davis bad news for NL

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros manager Hal Lanier has bad news for the rest of the National League: Slugger Glenn Davis is still improving.

NL

"He's learning more and more. He has a much better idea of what to do with a pitch this year than he had last year," Lanier said after Davis drove in two runs to increase his National League-leading total to 36 and lead the Astros to a 9-2 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Monday night.

Davis' two-run single capped a four-run third inning that put the Astros ahead to stay. Denny Walling drove in three runs with a bases-loaded walk and a two-run single to back Jim Deshaies' five-hit pitching over eight innings.

Deshaies, 3-2, walked two and struck out one before Larry Andersen came in to pitch the ninth. The only run off Deshaies came on Barry Bonds' 10th homer of the year, a one-out shot over the right-field fence in top of the third inning.

But the Astros scored four runs in the bottom of the third off loser Bob Walk, 4-2. Alan Ashby and Craig Reynolds started the inning with singles and Deshaies reached first, loading the bases, when catcher Junior Ortiz misplayed his sacrifice bunt for an error.

Ashby scored when Gerald Young forced Deshaies at second and Reynolds scored on Billy Hatcher's fielder's choice grounder, with Hatcher reaching first on the throw to the plate. After Bill Doran grounded out, Davis singled in Young and Hatcher.

Mets 7, Padres 4

SAN DIEGO — Gary Carter said a trip to San Diego was just what the doctor ordered for the New York Mets' ailing bats. "We needed a night like tonight to get things going after losing three games in San Francisco," Carter said after his tie-breaking three-run homer in the seventh inning.

Reds 4, Braves 2

Chris Sabo had a two-run double and Tom Browning, 2-0, had a four-hit shutout entering the eighth when Paul Runge walked and Ron Gant followed with his second homer. He walked one and struck out two. Frank Williams and Rob Murphy pitched the ninth, with Murphy getting the final two outs for his first save.

Paul O'Neill singled home a run in the first off loser Kevin Coffman, 2-3, in the first. Sabo gave the Reds some insurance in the seventh when he doubled home two runs off reliever Zane Smith and scored on Ron Roenicke's single.

Phillies 3, Giants 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Shane Rawley pitched the first two-hitter of his career and the Philadelphia Phillies got sixth-inning home runs from Lance Parrish and Chris James to beat the Giants.

The Phillies' left-hander pitched his first complete game of the season and dealt the Giants their sixth shutout.

Rick Reuschel, 5-2, took the loss on his 39th birthday. Mike Schmidt, who came into the game in an 0-for-30 slump, had four hits and went 4-for-4 for the 12th time in his career.

Knight remains at Indiana

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Bob Knight said Monday he would remain at Indiana University because, after 23 years as a college basketball coach, he wasn't convinced he could approach a new job with the necessary energy or enthusiasm.

Knight turned down the vacant coaching job at the University of New Mexico, he said, even though said he was attracted to its basketball program and to that area of the country.

"I had a strong attraction going based on things I like — living conditions, fishing, hunting, the weather," the 47-year-old Knight told the Associated Press.

But he added:

"It comes down to the job itself. There's a certain energy level to every job. We have developed a situation here where we can do it effectively with 'x' energy. If I go to New Mexico, then it's 'x' plus quite a bit. I'm not sure I'm at a point I can put the energy in the situation to do the best job possible."

Bliss interviews with Lobos today

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist basketball coach Dave Bliss is not just another gym rat with a resume.

When Bliss visits University of New Mexico officials today in Albuquerque to discuss the Lobos' vacant basketball-coach job, he'll bring a legacy of leaving programs stronger than when he arrived.

"His No. 1 strength is that he's not stuck in one system. He's very good at adapting his system to his players," said Paul Ridings, sports information director at SMU.

"In 1985 we were very strong inside and used a zone defense. This year, when we had really good outside shooters, we developed a run-and-gun type game," he said.

Bliss, 44, is stepping out of the shadows of his former boss and mentor, Indiana Coach Bobby Knight, Ridings said. "He's outgrown the Bobby Knight-protege image."

Maybe the image — but in a sense, if Bliss takes the Lobos' job, he will be following in the footsteps of the man he worked for at Army and Indiana University.

Bliss said the meeting also included SMU president Kenneth Pye. "I told them I'm very happy with the program here, but I'm professionally interested in going to Albuequerque," he said, adding that both men were encouraging.

Kareem, Lakers still alive

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar isn't finished yet, and neither are the Los Angeles Lakers.

Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer, was held to a total of 16 points as the Utah Jazz won two straight games to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven series.

NBA

But the 41-year-old center regained his touch in Game 4, scoring 20 points to help the Lakers even the series with a 113-100 victory Sunday in Salt Lake City.

"Jabbar looked like an 18-year-old kid from New York again," Utah coach Frank Layden said.

James Worthy scored 29 points and Magic Johnson 24 for the Lakers, who are trying to become the first repeat NBA champions since 1969.

"The obituary that was written for our top three guys obviously was a little premature," Coach Pat Riley said. "We have only begun. I think we have to learn a lesson from the last two games that we cannot take anything for granted at all."

Game 5 of the Lakers-Jazz and Denver-Dallas series are scheduled for Tuesday night. The Mavericks and Nuggets also are tied 2-2.

The Lakers appeared headed toward a third straight loss when they fell behind by nine points with 9:05 left in the third quarter. But they outscored the Jazz 28-11 over the remainder of the period to take an 84-76 lead and Utah never got closer than six point the rest of the way.

"We knew that sooner or later if we kept the score close, we'd get our game going," said Lakers guard Byron Scott, who finished with 20 points. "The Jazz were riding high on emotion, but I think the edge has turned."

Mark Eaton, Utah's 7-foot-4 center, shut down Jabbar in Games 2 and 3 but was plagued by foul problems in Game 4. He was called for his fourth foul with 6:40 left in the third period and played only 21 minutes in the second half.

Scott said Eaton's foul trouble gave the Lakers "more options, but I don't think that was really a factor in this game. We came back like true champs. We are the champs and I think the last couple of games we forgot about that."

Denver-Dallas

Despite a loss in Game 4, Denver still has the home-court advantage in the series.

"All in all, I feel pretty good coming away with a split in Dallas," Nuggets coach Doug Moe said. "It's nice to come away with one win, but we really wanted two."

This Date in Baseball

May 17

1903 — In a regulation game played at Columbus, Ohio, because of Sunday restrictions in Cleveland, the Indians beat the New York Highlanders 9-2 behind Addie Joss. Clark Griffith took the loss and Elmer Flick had three hits for Cleveland.

1906 — Ty Cobb's bunt single ruined Rube Waddell's no-hitter as the Philadelphia A's beat the Detroit Tigers 5-0.

1925 — Cleveland's Tris Speaker got his 3,000th career hit off Tom Zachary in a 2-1 loss to the Washington Senators.

1963 — Don Nottebart pitched the first no-hitter in Houston baseball history as the Colt 45s defeated the visiting Philadelphia Phillies 4-1.

1970 — Hank Aaron became the ninth man in baseball history to get 3,000 hits when he reached on an infield single against Cincinnati's Wayne Simpson. The hit, which came in the nightcap of a doubleheader, wasn't enought to prevent the Atlanta Braves from being swept by the Reds.

1979 — Dave Kingman of the Cubs hit three home runs and Mike Schmidt of the Phillies hit two as Philadelphia beat Chicago 23-22 in 10 innings at Wrigley Field. The slugfest included 11 home runs, 50 hits, and 109 at-bats.

1984 — Alan Wiggins of the San Diego Padres tied a National League record by stealing five bases against the Montreal Expos.

Today's Birthdays: Pascual Perez 31, Greg Mathews 26.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: New projects and close alliances are essential. Success in the financial markets is imminent. Travel in December will restore your faith in someone special. Do not dismiss health signals, but do not dwell on them either. You will be just fine. Keep an open and active mind; it is the secret to eternal youth.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Perry Como, country singer George Strait, baseball's Reggie Jackson, Pope John Paul II, actors Bill Macy, Robert Morse and James Stephens, longtime New York Sen. Jacob Javits, catcher Jim Sundburg, director Frank Capra, dancer Dame Margot Fonteyn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If you are behind schedule at work, this is the day to catch up. Duck telephone calls about subjects you are not up on yet. Research will put you in the driver's seat.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Shrewd business manipulations, aided by computer science, could help you leapfrog over competitors. A newspaper article provides a how-to idea that will save you money. Follow instructions to the letter. No shortcuts!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You have to find out the facts and go from there. A thorough investigation is important, but so is timely action. You learn an important lesson by observing others. Make a weekend date.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Secrecy and intrigue work for you, but you do not like either one. Borrow a chapter from a parent's book when dealing with a troublesome financial situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It is time to clean out closets and drawers. You could make a wonderful discovery. Share an idea with a friend who has the resources to put it into practice. Postpone travel.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Trying to reach too far too soon could prove embarrassing. Member of opposite sex presses you for a quick decision. Explain your own plan of attack. Romance takes an interesting turn. Go slow.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be more willing to listen to well-informed people. A good day for tying up loose ends and discarding unused items. Tend to a minor ailment before it becomes more serious. Consult a doctor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Check the legality of all business dealings. An unexpected event will cheer you. Travel is best postponed. Think twice before revealing your thoughts. You are very popular with the opposite sex.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Complete one project before accepting another. Consider the negative side of changing jobs. Discuss your plans with an older, wiser individual before saying yes. Romance has you walking on air. Be tender.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Teamwork may not be as satisfying as working on your own. Check details and trust your own judgment. Give more thought to those who are less fortunate. Practical help is vitally needed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis now is on how you develop ideas. Ignore the flattery of those who may have ulterior motives. Scrutinize a new proposal very carefully. You are invited to a smashing social event.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Artistic and creative ventures will boost your income. Seek help from mate or romantic partner. Tact and understanding will help you adjust to loved ones' needs.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

Sometimes you can combine two lines of play to greatly increase your chances of making your contract. On other occsaions your thoughtful play might only gain an extra percentage point or two; but that doesn't mean you should ignore that added edge.

The auction was routine. North had nothing to spare for his raise, but to pass would have been craven.

West led the top of his spade sequence, and declarer paused to count his tricks. Assuming that the club suit would run, declarer had eight fast tricks—two spades, one heart, one diamond and four clubs. The obvious place to find the extra trick was in hearts; if East held at least one of the two missing heart honors, a 3-to-1 shot, a second heart trick could be developed via two finesses. Careful manipulation of the club spots would make that suit furnish the necessary dummy entries.

However, the fact that declarer and dummy combined held seven diamonds, including the jack and ten, offered an additional chance. On about one hand in 20, either West or East will hold a singleton honor in diamonds, and it makes no difference whether it is the king or the queen. When that honor drops under the ace, the jack-10 between the two hands will furnish the game-going trick regardless of the heart position.

Since the opponents will set up their spade suit as soon as they gain the lead, you cannot afford to lose a quick trick. Therefore, you must test the diamonds before taking even one heart finesse. Win the king of spades and cash the ace of diamonds. When the king drops, simply continue with a diamond to set up your ninth trick. Had no honor appeared, you would have cashed the king and queen of clubs and then overtaken the ten with dummy's ace to run the ten of hearts. The six of clubs would be the entry to repeat the heart finesse.

WATCHES

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

Andrew Lloyd Webber receives ASCAP's first Triple Play Award

Lloyd Webber

NEW YORK (AP) — Composer Andrew Lloyd Webber received the first Triple Play Award from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in recognition of his three hit musicals on Broadway.

It's the first award because Lloyd Webber is the first composer with three "blockbuster hits" simultaneously on Broadway, said Morton Gould, president of ASCAP, which licenses Lloyd Webber's music in the United States.

"It is a wonderful honor for me as an English composer to be honored by the American society," Lloyd Webber said Monday.

His Broadway shows — "Cats," "Starlight Express" and "The Phantom of the Opera" — are also running on the London stage.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Actress Christine Tudor, who plays Gwyneth Alden on the soap opera "Loving," says a junior high school teacher rescued her from a violent past in which she began drinking at age 12.

Her life in working-class south Baltimore was "filled with the emotional baggage of poverty, of late-night arguments that brought violence and police intervention at home," Ms. Tudor said in the May 21 issue of TV Guide.

Ms. Tudor, the youngest of five children of an alcoholic father who left the family when she was 9, says she grew up "angry.... Drinking fast became my way of dealing with the guilt and torment."

She skipped school and failed seventh grade. When she returned to school, she met a remarkable teacher, Grace Guarino. By the end of the eighth grade, Ms. Tudor had stopped drinking and street fighting, and was an honor student.

Today, she spends 20 hours a week helping troubled youths, working in the non-profit Youth at Risk Program of the Breakthrough Foundation.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — "Hollywood Squares" regular Shadoe Stevens will replace Casey Kasem as host of "American Top 40," ABC Radio said.

"The minute I heard Shadoe audition for 'American Top 40,' I knew we had found the perfect host for us," Tom Cuddy, network vice president of entertainment programming, said Monday.

Stevens, 41, signed a seven-year contract and will take over in the summer. Kasem left ABC to be host of a similar program for the Westwood One Radio Network.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — The hype surrounding Madonna didn't bother one of her co-stars in David Mamet's Broadway production of "Speed-the-Plow."

"At 40 years old," actor Joseph Mantegna said, "I really have to admit that the whole aura of the thing did not have the same impact on me as perhaps it would have if, say, they had told me I'd be doing the play with Ernie Banks" — referring to the Chicago Cubs baseball star of the 1950s and '60s.

Madonna, in an interview published Monday in The New York Times, says she wasn't surprised by the mixed reviews she received in her Broadway debut.

"I expected it because I get it with everything I do," the pop star said. "There are people who are violently opposed to the fact that I exist on this Earth.

"So I was just thankful there were people who liked it and also who reviewed the play as objectively as possible and didn't let who I am...get in the way."

• • •

Collins

NEW YORK (AP) — "Dynasty" star Joan Collins has signed a contract to start her own line of fragrances next year.

She was chosen "because as a Hollywood personality she is the ultimate at this point. She is the most visible, probably in the same league as Elizabeth Taylor," said Gerard Semhon, chief of Parlux Fragrances Inc. of New York City.

The name of the new product is undisclosed pending some legal technicalities but will include Miss Collins' name, Semhon said.

Miss Collins accepted a down payment of less than six figures against future royalties of 5 percent of the net proceeds, Semhon said. A spokeswoman for the company said first-year sales are expected to be about $10 million.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A rose growers cooperative has developed a new rose in honor of House Speaker Jim Wright's wife.

The Betty Wright rose developed by the Co-Operative Rose Growers of Tyler, Texas, is two shades of lavender, darker on the edges of the petals and lighter inside.

Larry J. Burks, a member-grower of the cooperative in Tyler, which calls itself the Rose Capital of the World, said at a Capitol Hill reception last Thursday that the Betty Wright rose was four years in the making.

Wright, an avid gardener, and his wife said the Betty Wright roses would be planted in a bed in their front yard.

"It's a wonderful thing," the Texas Democrat said. "You couldn't do anything to please a man more than to do something nice for his wife."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Veteran actor Andrew Duggan, whose distinctive face, voice and bearing brought characters to life on screen, stage and TV since the close of World War II, has died of cancer at age 64.

Duggan died Sunday at his Westwood home.

He got into show business after Army service in India, China and Burma during World War II, when he was assigned to a Special Services Company led by actor Melvin Douglas.

His first starring television role was Cal Calhoun in the 1959 detective series "Bourbon Street Beat." He also starred as Dwight Eisenhower in the 1979 miniseries "Backstairs at the White House"; Colonel Deiner in "Rich Man, Poor Man"; and played Gen. Ed Britt in the 1965-67 series "Twelve O'Clock High."

Duggan's movies included "Three Brave Men," "Merrill's Marauders," "Seven Days In May," "In Like Flint," and "Doctor Detroit."

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, a son, two daughters, and a brother and sister.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Controversy over the cover of rock star Prince's new album, "Lovesexy," on which the singer appears nude but with his legs strategically placed, doesn't appear to have hurt sales.

The album has sold at least 1.6 million copies since its May 10 release even though some record outlets are refusing to sell it, Prince publicist Robyn Riggs said Monday.

LTV granted extension

DALLAS (AP) — A federal bankruptcy judge in New York Monday granted The LTV Corporation a 90-day extension to file a reorganization plan for the company and its 65 subsidiaries.

LTV officials filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy on July 17, 1986, citing problems in the steel industry, debt and pension problems.

With the extension, LTV has until Aug. 18 to present a reorganization plan to the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of New York. A plan was submitted to creditors last week.

When the company achieves a plan agreeable to creditors, a disclosure statement will be filed with the bankruptcy court for a hearing. The hearing will be followed by a vote on the plan by all creditors and shareholders, after which the bankruptcy court will conduct a hearing to confirm the plan.

Try to resolve board differences

Ichan

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. and Carl Icahn, its biggest shareholder and main potential antagonist, are discussing how to resolve their differences without continuing a proxy fight over five seats on the oil giant's board.

The company said late Monday that it and Icahn also had agreed to support a one-week adjournment of its June 7 annual shareholder meeting — if each party requested it — in order to facilitate the discussions.

Icahn, who is chairman of Trans World Airlines Inc., has nominated five candidates including himself for Texaco's 14-member board. The election is scheduled for the June 7 annual meeting in Tulsa, Okla.

Texaco, the nation's third-largest oil company, has filed a federal court suit to block Icahn from soliciting proxies and accusing him of securities law violations.

The company claims Icahn is trying to get Texaco to buy back his 14.8 percent stake at a premium, to force Texaco's acquisition by a third party or to acquire Texaco and liquidate its assests.

But in a statement late Monday from White Plains, Texaco said it and Icahn were "engaged in discussions seeking to resolve their differences without continuing a proxy contest."

The statement said Texaco and Icahn stressed that any resolution of their differences "will not include consideration for any shareholder that is not equally available to all Texaco shareholders."

"Any such resolution would also require that Texaco be satisfied that it would retain an investment grade credit rating," the statement said.

"To facilitate such discussions, Texaco and Mr. Icahn have agreed that each of them will vote the shares and proxies under their control to support an adjournment of the annual meeting from June 7 to June 14 if a request is made by the other party to do so," it said.

In trading on the New York Stock Exchange on Monday, Texaco fell 62½ cents a share to $48.87½.

Icahn began buying stock in Texaco while Texaco was negotiating a settlement with rival Pennzoil Co. over a $10.3 billion judgment awarded Pennzoil after a Texas jury found Texaco had interfered illegally with Pennzoil's merger with Getty Oil Co.

Texaco filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code last year to forestall payment of the massive judgment. It emerged from Chapter 11 last month under a court-approved reorganization plan that included a $3 billion settlement with Pennzoil.

Bullish trading boosts oil prices

From Staff and Wire Reports

While not showing as strong an advance as on Monday, oil futures prices continue upward, gaining 3 cents to stand at $17.69 at midmorning.

Oil prices moved higher Monday as traders grew more bullish on the demand for petroleum products in the second half of the year.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for June delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark crude, advanced 17 cents from Friday's close to settle at $17.66 per 42-gallon barrel.

Among refined products, wholesale prices for unleaded gasoline increased 0.39 cent to 52.73 cents per gallon, while heating oil moved up 0.51 cent to 47.98 cents per gallon.

Analysts said the market was bolstered by European forecasts that OPEC would have to boost production in the months ahead to meet demand later this year.

Those reports said production by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would have to increase to 19 million barrels per day, from the current 18 million.

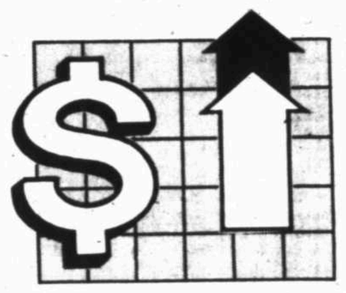
Dollar leaps on trade deficit news



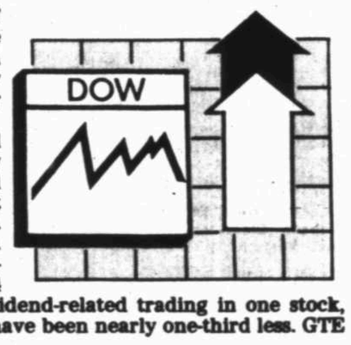
LONDON (AP) — The dollar skyrocketed in Europe today after the U.S. government reported that the U.S. merchandise trade deficit improved sharply in March.

The pound plunged after British commercial banks cut their base lending rate by half a percentage point to 7.5 percent, heeding a signal from the Bank of England.

The combination of the two developments pushed the dollar up more than three cents against the British pound.

The Commerce Department reported that the merchandise trade deficit shrank to $9.7 billion in March from $13.8 billion in February.

Stock prices pass 2,000 level



NEW YORK (AP) — A mild burst of late-afternoon buying helped salvage a directionless stock-market session Monday and nudged the key Dow Jones industrial average back over the 2,000 level.

The Dow average of 30 industrial stocks, which seesawed in a narrow range for much of the day, closed 17.08 points higher at 2,007.63, its first finish above 2,000 since last Tuesday. Broader market indicators also rose.

NYSE volume totaled 155.01 million shares, compared with 147.24 million Friday. But without the dividend-related trading in one stock, GTE, the volume on Monday would have been nearly one-third less. GTE closed unchanged at 35¾.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by slightly more than 3-to-2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 901 up, 559 down and 508 unchanged.

White House issues trading guide

Recommends few changes in stock market

New York Times News Service

Treasury Secretary James Baker III presents President Reagan a report on the October stock market crash at a meeting in the Oval Office Monday.

WASHINGTON — The White House working group on the stock market crash recommended a series of changes on Monday that would only slightly alter the way trading is conducted on the nation's exchanges.

Amid what many market experts described as modest recommendations to stave off another market crisis, the members of the group acknowledged that their proposals would not necessarily protect investors from losses and dampen the wild price swings like those during the Oct. 19 market crash. But they contended that the proposals were aimed at promoting the integrity of the nation's financial markets. "What this group focused on was safety and soundness measures," said the group's working chairman, George D. Gould, undersecretary of the Treasury for finance.

Though Gould is the working chairman, the group's titular head is Secretary of the Treasury James A. Baker III.

The panel, formed two months ago, was expected to issue a set of proposals along the lines of the broad recommendations made last January by the Presidential Task Force on Market Mechanisms, headed by Nicholas F. Brady, a former New Jersey senator and current head of Dillon Read & Co. But the working group came short of endorsing the much more rigorous recommendations of the Brady commission.

The group's primary proposal, as expected, was an agreement with the nation's stock, options, and futures exchanges on a giant "circuit-breaker." Under this plan, trading would be halted for one hour in all United States markets if any one market fell or rose the equivalent of 250 points on the Dow Jones industrial average.

That way, investors would know that a free-fall would at least pause, giving them a breather to decide more calmly whether to buy or sell. The boards of all the exchanges would have to approve such a plan, as would the commodity commission and the SEC. There is already an agreement in principle to move in this direction, even though some market experts have questioned the effectiveness of such a plan.

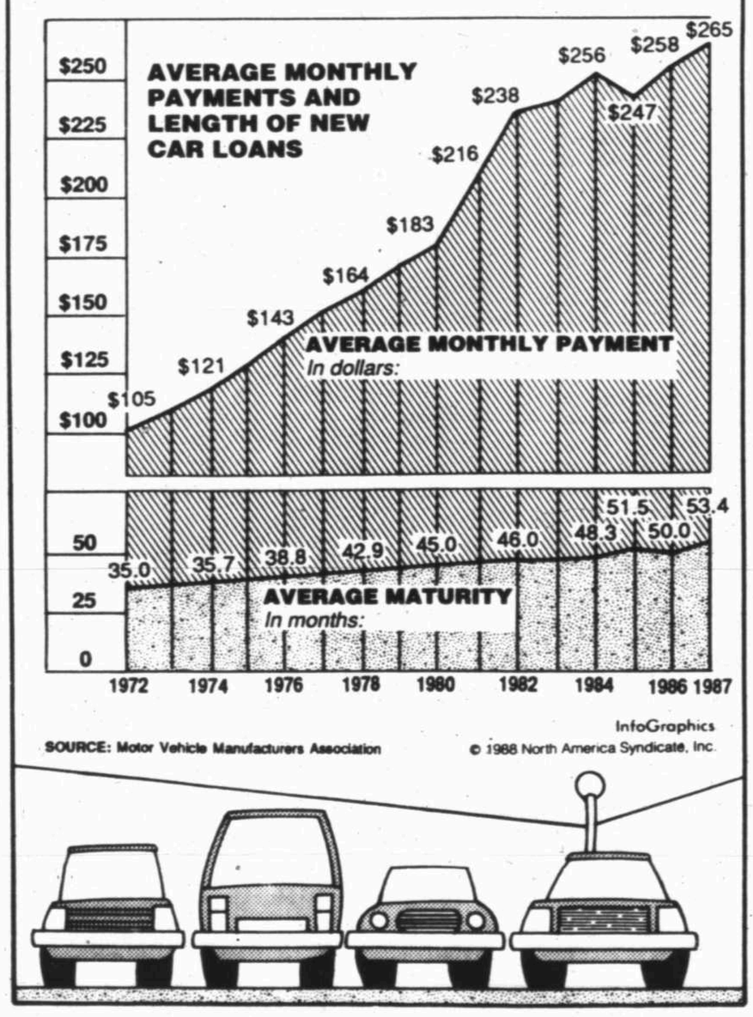
But in a position that was also expected, the working group did not back a recommendation that the Federal Reserve Board be designated the super-regulator, the agency that would be the final arbiter in the few but significant regulatory issues that affect both the stock and stock-index markets.

The working group also proposed a series of technical changes in how stocks, options, and futures trades are cleared and settled, and suggested that it should play the ongoing role of coordinating both emergency contingency planning in the event of another market crisis and regulatory policies among the nation's stock and futures markets.

But the Working Group on Financial Markets did not propose any increase in the current level of margin, or down payment, requirements on stock-index futures, arguing that current margin levels of 12 percent to 15 percent are high enough to protect the financial integrity of the futures markets. Neither did it recommend any restrictions on the use of computerized trading.

New car loan payments go up

In 1972, the average length of a new car loan was 35 months; by 1987, it had risen to 53 months. In 1980, the average monthly loan payment was $183; seven years later it was $265.



Midland gets lower airfares for summer

From Staff and Wire Reports

New airfare cuts announced by Eastern Airlines and Continental Airlines on Monday will make summer travel for Midlanders cheaper.

The airlines announced new cut-rate fares for children and senior citizens for the summer, and at least one other major airline quickly followed suit.

The two airlines also said they were easing some restrictions now attached to regular "MaxSaver" deep-discount fares.

The new Junior and Senior MaxSavers, which range from $29 to $99 one way, are about 30 percent lower than current MaxSaver fares. They are available for travel between June 1 and Sept. 11 for children under 18 and seniors over 65.

The Continental Airlines office at Midland International Airport gave examples of how the new fares would work. From Midland to Denver, the off-peak MaxSaver fare is $94. The special fare for children and senior citizens would be $59, a savings of 37 percent. To Seattle or Portland, the off-peak fare is $134; the special fare would be $96, a savings of 28 percent. For travelers flying to Los Angeles, the regular MaxSaver would be $124; the special fare is $96, a savings of 22 percent.

"These new fares make summer travel more affordable for the entire family," Continental President Martin Shugrue told a televised news conference originating in New York and Los Angeles. "Grandparents can share in a summer excursion at a price that is practical, even on a fixed income."

Continental launched a media blitz to publicize the new fares, including a series of television commercials featuring nonagenarian comedian George Burns.

"I don't think this is a panicked response" to lower passenger demand, said Anthony Hatch, an airline analyst for Argus Research Corp. He said the new fares, mainly designed to garner favorable publicity for the beleaguered carriers, are not likely to have a significant impact on their profit.

Eastern and Continental, both subsidiaries of giant Texas Air Corp., are the targets of new, highly publicized federal investigations into their finances and the safety of their fleets.

The two airlines said they were cutting fares for children and seniors because they have found those segments of the flying public to be very sensitive to price changes. Airlines normally raise fares at this time of the year since it is the start of the peak travel season.

Some observers suggested privately, however, that Eastern and Continental may have introduced the cheap fares to fill seats made vacant by slack summer bookings — partly due to negative publicity from the new federal inspections.

United Airlines, the nation's largest carrier, said Monday it will match the special fares in the markets where it competes with Continental.

"Continental is a major competitor of ours," said United spokesman Joe Hopkins, noting that both airlines have major hubs at Denver.

Spokesmen for Northwest Airlines, American Airlines and Delta Air Lines said officials of those carriers were studying the new fares and considering matching them.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

IBM seeks retroactive fees for clones

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp. has shocked personal computer "clone" manufacturers by demanding retroactive payments from them for patents used in PC clones over the past several years.

The impact of IBM's demands is likely to be greatest on small companies, many of them Asian, that make low-priced computers compatible with IBM's old line of personal computers. Many of them operate on thin profit margins and were caught flat-footed by IBM's unexpected demand.

An IBM spokesman told the Wall Street Journal the company would accept payments totaling 1 percent of sales on computers sold through this past April 1, assuming the clone companies settle up with IBM by the end of 1988. After that the fee could rise.

Energy education topic of SIPES meeting

Alan B. Sowards, director of education and industry affairs for Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association will be the guest speaker at Wednesday's meeting of the Midland chapter of Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists. The meeting will begin at 11:30 a.m.

Sowards discussion will cover "Energy Education: Are We Doing Enough?"

Boeing, Airbus share record airplane order

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The biggest commercial airplane order in history has been split between Boeing Co. and Airbus Industrie of Europe, with Boeing grabbing the lion's share of the $5.04 billion, 130-plane purchase by International Lease Finance Corp.

The planes are to be delivered over the next six years to International Lease Finance, which leases planes to many of the world's airlines for periods of three to 11 years.

Judgement against insurance firm upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has upheld a $1.8 million judgment against an insurance company that had been ordered to pay the money to an injured Mississippi man whose $20,000 claim it wrongfully rejected.

But the justices declined to decide the constitutionality of large punitive damage awards in personal injury cases.

Kodak to pay $150 million settlement

CHICAGO (AP) — Eastman Kodak Co. has agreed to reimburse at least 4.2 million owners of its obsolete instant cameras as part of a proposed $150 million settlement of a class action lawsuit against the company.

Under the settlement proposal Monday, U.S. owners of the cameras would receive between $50 and $70 in cash and coupons.

Kodak stopped selling instant cameras and instant film after a federal court in 1985 said the company had violated patents held by Polaroid Corp.

Hutton pleads guilty in laundering scheme

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — E.F. Hutton & Co. has paid $1.01 million in fines for a money-laundering scheme in which $1.5 million in cash was hidden from the government for clients, some of them members of organized crime.

Hutton attorney E. Lawrence Barcella Jr. signed a guilty plea to three felony counts and turned a check for the fine over Monday to U.S. Attorney Lincoln C. Almond.

U.S. Industry utilization highest in eight years

WASHINGTON (AP) — American industry operated at 82.7 percent of capacity in April, the highest level in more than eight years, the government reported today.

The Federal Reserve Board said that U.S. factories, mines and utilities saw their operating rate increase by 0.3 percentage point from March. It was the highest operating rate since March 1980, when it was 83.7 percent.

The April gain was the first increase since January, when the rate stood at 82.5 percent. The level fell by 0.1 percentage point in February and was unchanged in March. Before that, the operating rate had climbed for four successive months, beginning in October.

The April advance was led by the second steep monthly increase at auto plants, where the operating rate has risen from 76.8 percent in February to 79.4 percent in March to 80.9 percent last month.

Analysts had expected the April increase as production gains outstripped capacity. An overall operating rate of 85 percent is generally considered inflationary. Although the overall rate remains below that, some economists have pointed to high operating rates in selected industries as an early warning sign of inflation.

They fear prices will rise as factories operating near capacity have difficulty meeting both the rising demand for U.S. goods abroad and demand in the United States.

However, other economists point to corporations' plans to expand capacity as an offsetting factor, easing the strain. In a survey by the Commerce Department earlier this year, businesses said they would spend 8 percent more than last year on new plant and equipment.

The operating rate for manufacturing plants jumped to 83.0 percent in April.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Mobil finals 339 barrel producer

From Staff Reports

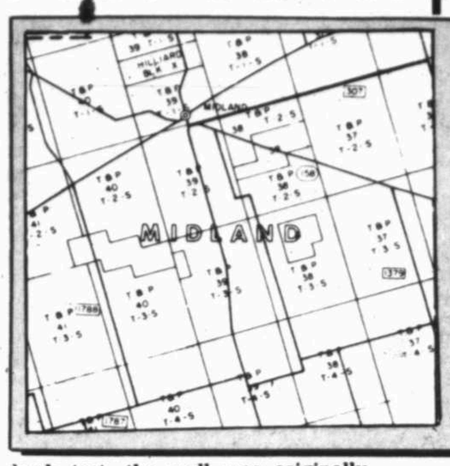
MOBIL PRODUCING TX & NM, INC., Midland, has added to Strawn production in the Kelly Stephens field of Midland County.

On potential test, the No. 16 Kelly Stephens flowed 339 barrels of 46.3 gravity crude, 811 Mcfd and no water on a 12/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,021 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,300 to 10,368 ft.

Drilled to 10,450 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 10,400 ft.

The well topped the Strawn at 10,244 ft., Wolfcamp at 8,646, and Spraberry at 7,129 ft. on ground elevation of 2,645 ft. Pay was topped at 10,300 ft.

Location is 3,080 ft. from south and 1,700 ft. from east lines of Section 43, Block 36, T-1-S, T&P survey, Abst. 127, 12.5 miles northeast of Midland.



Strawn producer

Mobil has completed a Strawn producer in Midland County to flow 339 barrels of 46.3 gravity crude.

Borden reentry nets 42 barrel producer

A reentry project in Borden County has yielded Leonard production in the Reineck East field.

SHARP IMAGE ENERGY, Big Spring, reentered and plugged back the No. 1 Wolf, potentialing it to flow 42 barrels of 42 gravity crude and 10 barrels of water from perforations 5,540 to 5,582 ft. The well flowed on a 24/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 50 psi.

Planned as a 6,880 ft. wildcat plugback test, the well was originally drilled to 7,200 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 6,950 ft.

Location is 1,600 ft. from south and 1,100 ft. from west lines of Section 43, Block 25, H&TC survey, 19 miles southeast of Gail.

Midland operator still active in Sugg Ranch

Development continues in the Sugg Ranch field, with IP PETROLEUM CO., INC., Midland, adding new Canyon production to the Sterling County portion of the field.

IP completed the No. 3 Bailey "12" to flow 142 barrels of 49.5 gravity crude, 290 Mcfd, and three barrels of water on a 13/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 1,020 psi. Production is from perforations 7,676 to 7,881 ft., which had been acidized with 600 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 95,000 gallons of gel and 130,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 2,042:1.

Drilled to 7,962 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 7,910 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,531 ft., include the Spraberry at 4,760 ft., Dean at 6,110, Wolfcamp at 6,355, Canyon Marker at 7,645, and Canyon Sand at 7,670 ft. Pay was topped at 7,670 ft.

Location is 1,780 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from west lines of Section 12, Block A, GC&SF, 16 miles southwest of Sterling City.

Mobil, AGIP announce Louisiana discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc., and AGIP Petroleum Co. have announced a wildcat discovery in Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana located approximately 20 miles south of New Orleans.

The Mobil No. 1 CITRUS LANDS OF LOUISIANA well tested 10.7 million cubic feet of gas per day and 707 barrels of condenstate per day on a 10/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 9,450 psi from perforations at 14,443 to 14,454 feet.

Mobil and AGIP each hold 50 percent interest in the well and Mobil is the operator.

Gulf strike flows 1,391 barrels, 1.04 Mmcf

DALLAS (SWN) — Sun Exploration and Production Co. has completed an oil and gas discovery well in the Gulf of Mexico offshore Louisiana that tested more than 1,300 barrels of oil and one million cubic feet of natural gas (MMCF) per day.

The discovery well is located 100 miles offshore on Green Canyon Block 154 in 1,452 feet of water and tested oil and gas from Mid-Pleistocene sands. The OCS G-5908 No. 1 well flowed at a rate of 1,391 barrels of oil per day and 1.04 MMCF of gas through a 20/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 1,450 pounds per square inch. This is the first well drilled on the block and the fourth well of a continuing drilling program encompassing Green Canyon Blocks 110, 153 and 154. Block 1 is the south offset to Block 110, where Sun participated in an announced discovery in November 1984.

Sun E&P potentials California discovery well

DALLAS (SWN) — Sun Exploration and Production Co. has announced the discovery of a gas well in California's Sacramento Basin that tested nearly 3 Mmcfd.

The G.M. Faye No. 1, located in Section 4, T13N-R1E, Colusa County, Calif., tested gas from the Forbes formation. The well flowed at a rate of 2.867 MMCF/D through a 14/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,170 psi from perforations between 8,160 and 8,165 feet and between 8,172 and 8,176 feet. A second zone behind pipe, also in the Forbes formation, was drillstem tested for 2.043 MMCF/D. The discovery well is five miles southeast of the town of Grimes and about one milessouthwest of Forbes production in the Grimes Field.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Mutual funds' capital gains handled differently

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We own shares of an "option income" mutual fund. On March 30, we received a quarterly distribution of 37 cents per share, of which six cents was "dividend income" and 31 cents was "short-term capital gains." At the same time, the per share net asset value was reduced by 30 cents. Therefore, all the fund did was return our own money.

The fund's literature says the current distribution rate is 16.88 percent, based on $8.77 per share asset value. Why is the fund allowed to state that percentage, when it is only returning our money?

Doyle

A. Beginning with 1987, federal tax laws require most mutual funds to distribute to their shareholders 97 percent of their net dividend income and 98 percent of their net capital gains.

After deducting its operating expenses, a mutual fund passes on to its shareholders the interest and/or dividends it has collected on securities it holds as investments. The capital gains come from the net profit a fund realizes by selling some of those securities at higher prices than it paid for them.

With an option income fund, part or all of the capital gains distribution can come from "premiums" collected from the sale of options on stocks the fund holds.

A mutual fund's asset value per share is calculated by adding up all the fund's assets — mostly investment securities and cash on hand — and then dividing by the number of fund shares "outstanding," meaning owned by investors. That per share asset value can change day-to-day, as the market values of its investment securities go up or down.

When the fund makes a distribution, it has less cash. So the amount of the distribution is automatically deducted from per share asset value on the ex-distribution date. This is similar to the ex-dividend procedure on individual stocks.

That downward price adjustment on your shares had to total 37 cents — six cents for the dividend and 31 cents for the capital gains. Because the per share asset value dropped 30 cents at the same time, it's clear that the market values of the fund's holding rose seven cents.

The statement about the current distribution rate being 16.88 percent could be misleading. It will hold up only if, over the full year, the fund makes four quarterly distributions of 37 cents each. That would total $1.48 and, on $8.77 per share asset value, that does work out to 16.88 percent.

However, as every mutual fund prospectus is required to point out, "Past performance is no guarantee of future results." Dividends seldom change too much, but capital gains can swing wildly from one period to the next.

Q. I heard that some mutual funds do not distribute their capital gains to shareholders. Instead, they use some complicated tax procedure. Is that true?

A. Yes, for a small number of mutual funds. Rather than passing the capital gains along to shareholders, that type of fund pays income tax on those gains. Then each shareholder takes a credit for his or her proportionate share of the tax when filing an income tax return.

You're right about it being complicated. The procedure, which such a fund spells out when it sends each shareholder a Form 2439, is enough to send most taxpayers up a wall.

Q. A young man approached me about investing in a government securities mutual fund. I have enclosed the brochure he gave me, which seems skimpy on details. What can you tell me about this?

A. If that was the only thing he gave you, don't buy. As all mutual fund sales literature must, the small print on the back panel of that brochure states, "This material must be preceded or accompanied by a prospectus." He was supposed to give you a prospectus at or before the time he made a sales pitch.

A prospectus is a disclosure document, revealing pertinent information. Never invest in a mutual fund without studying the prospectus.

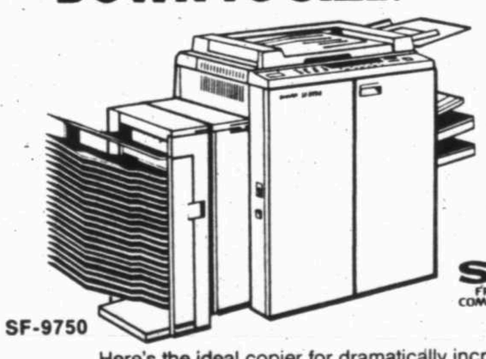
THE COPIER THAT CUTS BIG WORKLOADS DOWN TO SIZE.



SF-9750

Here's the ideal copier for dramatically increasing productivity—the SF-9750. Its great features, high speed and high volume copying capabilities increase office efficiency, save time, reduce errors and save money.

For starters, it's fast—60 copies a minute. Then there's its many time-saving automatic features like zoom copying for reducing and enlarging and duplexing for two-sided copies. 4-way paper feed and advanced editing functions speed up the workload. And an automatic document feeder and 21-bin sorter make fast work out of big collating jobs.

See for yourself how much more productive you can be with the SF-9750. See it today.

Andrews celebrates Contel commitment

From Staff Reports

Andrews has proclaimed today Contel Appreciation Day, recognizing the phone company as a good corporate citizen. Andrews serves as headquarters for Contel's Western District operations. The company employs 68 people and provides telephone service to more than 38,000 customers in Andrews and surrounding areas.

Today's festivities include an appearance by Don Weber, chief executive officer and president of Contel Corp., from Atlanta, who will keynote the official luncheon at the Andrews Civic Center. Also appearing will be Robert Abrams, president, Western region, telephone operations, from Bakersfield, Ca.; and Bill Hegmann, president, Contel of Texas, from Dallas. The group will tour the city and meet with chamber officials.

The recognition was bestowed by the Andrews County Chamber of Commerce and the Andrews Industrial Foundation. The award was created in 1987 by the chamber after several oil companies consolidated and closed their area operations. Faced with a depleting economic base, the chamber created a program that would encourage existing businesses to retain operations in the city. Last year's recipient was Kirby Vacuum, which employs 300 in the county.

"The appreciation award will not be given every year," said James Roberts, president of the industrial foundation. "We will give the award when a company has consistently demonstrated its commitment to Andrews."

Contel, a company with $3 billion in revenue and sales, provides a broad range of telecommunications and information processing products and services through telephone operations, federal systems and information systems. Locally, Contel of Texas provides local telephone service to more than 161,000 customers throughout the state.

Swit in documentary that explores U.S.' forgotten war

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Loretta Swit, who spent 11 years playing a nurse in a Korean War field hospital on "M*A*S*H," finally got to Korea for a new documentary that explores America's forgotten war.

She is the host of "Korean War — The Untold Story," a one-hour documentary put together by Oscar winner Arnold Shapiro and Emmy winner Carol L. Fleisher.

The war, which claimed 54,000 lives in three years, is a neglected chapter in U.S. history. It was the first war involving jet fighters, the first in which American troops fought Communist troops and the first in which the enemy attempted to "brainwash" American prisoners of war.

The one-hour documentary combines historic film with new interviews with people who participated in the United Nations "police action." The nationally syndicated special will be televised around the country through the end of the month. So far, 118 stations have signed up to air the show.

The United States keeps 40,000 troops in Korea to enforce a cease-fire that is now 35 years old. The show notes the truce anniversary and the Summer Olympic Games in Seoul this September.

"After all those years of pretending, they took me in hand and said it's time to go," said Swit, who was Nurse Margaret Houlihan in the comedy series. "I'd never been to Korea before. We went up to the DMZ. I was standing just a few feet away from a concrete line that divides the country."

Loretta Swit

"We were all astonished at the border," said producer Fleisher. "You don't realize we're technically still at war. It's the longest cease-fire in history. The tension is there at all times."

Swit said North Korean loudspeakers bombard the border with propaganda urging the South Korean soldiers to defect. Not far away is "Propaganda Village," a facade to try to lure South Koreans across the line.

"The flag flying over the village weighs 600 pounds, and the day we were there it stood straight out from the flag pole," said Swit. "That's how strong the wind was. It was 20 degrees below zero. My fingernails froze. My nose turned blue. I had to do some narration there and I could hardly talk."

Swit went to the Inchon site where Gen. Douglas MacArthur's forces landed in 1950 and turned the tide in favor of the United Nations, until the Chinese intervened a few months later. She also visited the new Olympic stadium in Seoul in her week-long stay in Korea.

Shapiro, who won an Academy Award in 1979 for "Scared Straight," was the executive producer, and Fleisher, who won an Emmy for co-writing "The Singing Cowboys Ride Again," was the producer, writer and director.

"We talked to veterans who had lost arms and legs and they said they would do it again," said Fleisher. "They felt the war was worth it."

"It was an illuminating experience for me," said Swit. "I thought I knew the subject, having served my time on 'M*A*S*H.' I found out how little I really knew."

Asked about "China Beach," the new ABC series about women in Vietnam, Swit said, "I'm so glad people will know that women were in Vietnam. I'm involved in trying to get a memorial for women near the wall in Washington."

Swit also works with the Audubon Society, which she calls "my other occupation," to support animal rights. She has worked with the society on documentaries and recently teamed with Robert Redford as hosts of a PBS series on species threatened with extinction.

She returns to comedy in a movie made in England with Peter Cook, called "Whoops! Apocalypse."

"I play the president of the United States," she said. "I took a lot of kidding from people who said I had peaked as a major in 'M*A*S*H.'"

Woman's anniversary surprise turns into embarrassing situation

YEADON, Pa. (AP) — John Hunsberger hopes nobody is embarrassed by his wife's little anniversary prank, because even she was surprised when the fake cop she hired to ticket him began taking off her uniform at a church league softball game.

"See, it was all in fun," Hunsberger said. "But she (wife Debbie) thought it was only a thing of where I would get a citation. She didn't find out about the Strip-O-Gram — or whatever — part of it until it was too late."

As it happened, the shortstop for the other team, Manoa Presbyterian, doubles as that church's pastor, and he didn't find it entirely humorous.

"The pastor saw it, and came over to our coach to express his concern about it all," Hunsberger said. "I mean, after all, it is a church league.

"See, it was all supposed to happen after the game — when the other people had left. But people were still around, and there were even some kids there...it all happened so fast."

Hunsberger said nothing offensive was intended and he hopes nobody gets in trouble with league or sponsoring church officials over it.

Some had an inkling before it happened. Hunsberger's brother, Billy, gave John an emphatic "Stop" sign from the third-base coaching box as John rounded third after hitting a grand slam.

But poor John didn't get it, until the "policewoman" arrived, nattily attired in a blue uniform and badges, searching for "the owner of that red Cavalier over there."

"He thought it was real at first," said Hunsberger's teammate Paul Azarian. "But after about 30 seconds he figured it out."

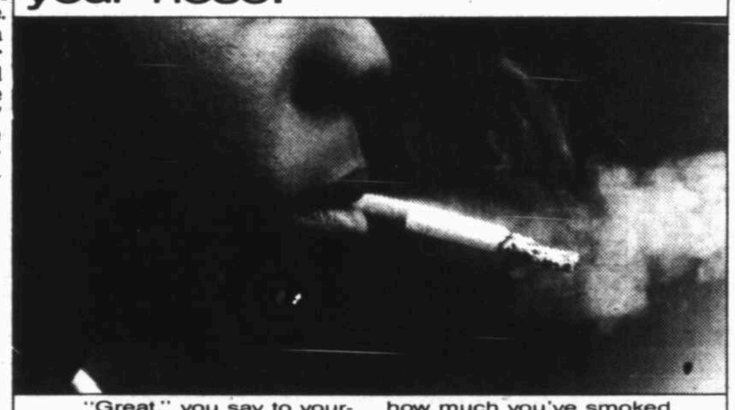
One of the biggest threats to your heart is right under your nose.



"Great," you say to yourself. "Here they come with more bad news."
Okay, so we do have some bad news for you. But you need all the facts you can get when it comes to making a decision about smoking.
Like the fact that if you smoke, you're twice as likely to have a heart attack as a nonsmoker. And if you do have a heart attack, you're more likely to die.
Suddenly.
But here's the good news.
Regardless of how long or how much you've smoked, your risk of heart disease will begin dropping rapidly the day you stop. Which means that 10 years after quitting, it can be almost the same as if you had never smoked at all.
So take the good with the bad, but take our word for it: it's never too late to quit.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Indian commandos raid temple

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — About 90 Indian commandos pushed into the Golden Temple complex today to try to dislodge Sikh militants from two towers overlooking the golden-domed shrine, police said.

It was the first major probe into the complex, Sikhism's holiest shrine, since a police siege of the shrine began May 9.

The advance came after Sikh extremists, in an apparent effort to divert attention from the besieged temple complex, killed 44 people Monday and early today in the highest 24-hour toll in their 6-year-old campaign to form an independent nation in Punjab.

Punjab Police Chief K.P.S. Gill told a news conference tha anti-terrorist Black Cat commandos had taken over the upper basement of a building, which is attached to the temple's dining hall, east of the pool surrounding the temple.

Militants have been using the building's two towers to fire down on security forces surrounding the shrine's perimeter.

About six Sikh extremists were believed trapped in a lower basement, Gill said.

The building is not considered the temple's inner sanctum.

Any attempt to storm the inner sanctum would be viewed by devout Sikhs as the gravest desecration.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated by Sikh bodyguards on Oct. 31, 1984, four months after she ordered the army into the Golden Temple to uproot armed Sikh militants. More than 1,200 people, mostly Sikhs, were killed in that assault.

Today, security forces fired scores of incendiary shells and machine gun rounds at the 120-foot towers to force the militants to retreat to the basements.

South African police gas squatters

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police used tear gas and birdshot to disperse black squatters who have been protesting a decision to charge them rent for their shacks, authorities said today.

Officers used tear gas against a group of black protesters who gathered Monday at the Weiler's Farm Shantytown, then later used birdshot to disperse blacks who threw stones at buses and taxis, police said.

The Sowetan, a black-oriented newspaper, said thousands of Weiler's Farm residents stayed away from work Monday to protest the imposition of a $17 monthly rent. Many of them earn less than $50 per month.

The Sowetan said a female protester was arrested and a man was hospitalized after he was bitten by a police dog.

Weiler's Farm is designated as an temporary squatter camp. Whites in the area, 25 miles south of Johannesburg, have complained about the settlement, and its estimated 7,000 residents are scheduled to be moved later this year.

London subway station evacuated

LONDON (AP) — Several hundred rush-hour commuters were evacuated from two of London's busiest subway stations this morning after smoke from an electrical fire filled tunnels and spread onto the platforms.

"As far as we know there were no injuries," said a spokesman for the London Fire Brigade, who by custom was not identified.

Police and firefighters, using loudspeakers, cleared choking commuters from Embankment Station, where the fire started, and Waterloo Station just across the River Thames, where smoke spread through underground tunnels, the spokesman said.

135 MEETING PEOPLE

I'VE searched for years for a warm, honest, family minded woman, and at 27 and still single, I'm beginning to believe that these expectations are too high. I've found party animals who live for the moment, and bitter divorcees who dwell on the past, and I've found women who think that there is something better in store for them than a man that makes her happy, or a man who is happy because of her. I hear that single men are outnumbered. I believe it, because there seem to be a lot of women who want the shining armor without the knight. Are you holding out for something you saw on T.V., or am I just too old fashioned? I own a wonderful business, a beautiful home, a nice car, am dependable, financially stable, very artistic, have brown hair, hazel eyes, and cannot find a loving woman to share it all with. Maybe I'm crazy, but I still believe that there is nothing more important in life than a happy family, and if you can handle that, I'll buy your dinner.
