Bush, barely

NEW YORK — President Bush, whose approval rating has dropped to an all-time low of 39 percent, barely defeated Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton in a preference poll released Saturday. Americans were almost evenly divided when asked to choose between Bush and Clinton: 48 percent were for Bush and 44 percent were for Clinton, Newsweek magazine reported in its March 30 issue. The poll of 750 adults, conducted by the Gallup Organization on Thursday and Friday, had a margin of error of 4 percent.

Kansas split

GARDEN CITY, Kan. — Is southwest Kansas really going to secede and create a 51st state? "It's not a serious effort," House Speaker Marvin Barkis, D-Louisburg, said Friday. "The hell it ain't," business owner Eric Schiffelbein of Lakin replied. "It's gone a lot farther already than I ever thought it would." Reviving the taxation without representation complaint of the 13 original colonies, southwest Kansans are attacking the statewide property tax levy proposed by Gov. Joan Finney. Schiffelbein and about 140 other secessionist-minded people from 24 Kansas counties met here last week.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Dwight Yoakam says he's a wiser, quieter man than the one who stormed the country music scene in 1986. Yoakam was a brash newcomer, often critical of the country music establishment, but he thinks would-be singers shouldn't follow his example. "I'd say, 'In deference to your music, don't be as candid about your subjective opinions with regard to specific artists and musical styles,'" Yoakam, 35, told The Tennessean in an interview published Saturday. "The public doesn't really care about those issues in a specific sense, and it will only serve to distract from the central issue, which should be your musical performance."

Japan takes yen home

Foreign investors buy Japanese stocks, bonds

■ Lower interest rates, bad deals cause cash flow to reverse.

By James Sterngold
N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — After investing hundreds of billions of dollars abroad during the 1980s, Japan has reversed course and is pulling money into the country at a rapid rate.

Japanese banks are lending less to foreign customers, particularly in places where business conditions are difficult, like California. Japanese corporations are building fewer plants abroad and acquiring fewer companies. And big Japanese investors are selling, rather than buying, the American securities they spent nearly a decade buying in large sums.

At the same time, foreign investors have become the largest purchasers of Japanese stocks and bonds. The result is that instead of $100 billion or more flowing out of Japan each year, $30 billion to $40 billion a year is flowing in.

The sharp and unexpected swing in Japanese capital is putting upward pressure on interest rates in the United States and making it tougher for other countries — including Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union — to import the money they need to grow, some economists say.

With the flood tide of Japanese money having dried up, these other countries must find alternative sources of money, reduce their demands or compete harder for what money is available by offering higher interest rates to attract investment.

During the years of enormous Japanese investment in the United States, some economists warned that the United States was left vulnerable to an abrupt withdrawal. If the Japanese merely slowed their purchases of U.S. Treasury bonds, the economists cautioned, it might cause havoc in the markets.

ALS robs two Midland men of their athletic abilities

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

In their dreams, Larry Jones and Jimmy Martin walk.

In their dreams, they run, unencumbered by muscles that no longer work and free of wheelchairs.

But in reality, Martin, wearing an "Air Jordan" T-shirt, talks about the time he ran a marathon and seasons spent playing softball. He remembers roller skating and working outside.

Jones, athletic in photographs from five or six years ago, had arms like thick ropes. He remembers lifting a refrigerator, and in some photos, he smiles in a football uniform.

But today, both Midlanders are confined to the chairs, their muscle control deteriorating, arms and legs emaciated.

Both suffer from the effects of ALS, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis — a progressive disease that causes loss of voluntary muscle control. It is better known as Lou Gehrig's Disease, named for the New York Yankee first baseman who contracted it in 1939.

"ALS is like prison. I'm trapped in a chair," Jones said, his mind sharp despite the slurred, weak quality of his speech. His 7-year-old daughter drew a family picture that shows her father in his wheelchair surrounded by a bubble, sepa-

Congress gets more tense as voters wise up

By Maureen Dowd

WASHINGTON — A guillotine has not yet appeared on the Potomac, but the mood here is very tense.

For years, the capital has had a caste system that allowed its top officials immunities and emoluments and deference and perquisites.

Now that voters have sent a message that they are fed up with pampering, preening and prodigal behavior among the Washington aristocracy, many here are gloomily assessing whether it is worth living in a world where they are expected to behave like ordinary mortals.

"You might as well be in Des Moines," grumped John C. White, a lawyer and

The governing body will take its regular meeting Tuesday to Midland Center, beginning at 6 p.m. The meetings normally begin at 10 a.m. at City Hall.

Rick Menchaca, assistant to the city manager, said the event is set for the East Bay Room, which will hold 150 people. Some local groups and organizations have been notified of the change, hoping to ease the adjustment to the new time.

Menchaca said anyone with special needs due to a disability can call his office at 685-7436.

Everywhere, spring is a time for cleaning, fixing up and starting anew. In Midland, for the last 19 years, it also has been time for "Christmas in April."

Program volunteers, including founder Bobby Trimble, got a head start on the season Saturday, working on Worth Burnett Jr.'s home at 801 E. Kentucky. Burnett's home has been passed over by participating groups the last two years because of the extent of work needed on the house.

Trimble's crew replaced the roof Saturday, in anticipation of replacing the doors, windows and siding during the regular CIA work day on April 25.

YEN: Japanese take cash home

symptoms has been the U.S. recession, said Kenneth S. Courtis, an economist in Tokyo with Deutsche Bank Capital Markets, because the slowdown reduced demand for money.

But as the U.S. economy struggles to shake off recession, the pinch may be felt more. "It is not a matter of pulling the trigger in Tokyo and having the gun go off in New York," Courtis said. "It's more like a slow squeeze."

Last year Japan brought home $36.6 billion more than it invested overseas. (Figures are not yet available on the flow of money between the United States and Japan.) That was the first time since 1980 that Japan imported more long-term capital than it sent abroad.

Long-term capital involves acquisitions of real estate, stocks or bonds and investments in companies, the building of plants and long-term bank lending.

These include the construction of large automobile plants by the big Japanese automakers and such prominent takeovers as the $2 billion purchase of Columbia Records by Sony in 1988, the $6.13 billion acquisition of MCA by Matsushita Electric Industrial in 1990 and the $846 million deal for control of the Rockefeller Group, the owner of Rockefeller Center in Manhattan.

While some experts thought the 1991 figures might be temporary, many economists are concluding that the flood of money Japan sent abroad during the 1980s was an aberration that may not be repeated soon.

Two years of volatile declines in the Japanese stock market and a looming economic slump in Japan are accentuating this trend by making the money supply much tighter at home.

From 1985 to the end of 1990 Japan exported an astounding $596.2 billion in long-term investments, helping finance the U.S. budget deficit, corporate takeovers, construction of Japanese auto plants abroad and a host of other investments around the world.

One broad lesson is that in an era when borders are increasingly open to large shifts of money, often with a few keystrokes on a computer in a brokerage house trading room, the flow of money can change direction swiftly than most people had thought possible.

The United States in particular is finding out that the huge flow of Japanese investment, on which it came to depend, is not a given.

"What you saw in previous years was in some senses not a normal situation," said Hirohiko Okumura, a former Bank of Japan official and now chief economist at the Nomura Research Institute.

"It is not well-appreciated on Wall Street nor in Washington, but the character of Japanese money is changing. It is not automatic that that money will flow to the United States anymore. Japanese investors are getting more sophisticated, and more cautious."

The huge shift by no means suggests Japan is getting poorer or losing its ability to influence the global financial markets. Indeed, Japan remains the world's largest creditor nation.

What is in some ways puzzling about the trend is that Japan's trade surpluses, which helped fuel the original investment boom, are swelling to record levels after narrowing briefly in the late 1980s.

Last year Japan's trade surplus with the world reached $103 billion, and it is expected to grow this year. Forty percent of the surplus comes in trade with the United States.

But Japan is now marshaling its money for use at home, as it nurses a creaky financial system, awakens to the sobering reality that many overseas investments were ill-advised and tries to revive a slowing economy with heavy government spending.

The government announced Thursday that the economy actually shrank slightly in the fourth quarter of 1991.

"The first priority should be to provide money to Japanese borrowers, even though loan demand in Japan has not been very strong," said Yoshihiko Miyabe, deputy general manager of the international planning department of Yasuda Trust & Banking Corp. "No bank can increase its exposure overseas now."

The poor planning behind many investments is another factor. For example, a Japanese investor recently suffered what is believed to be a $340 million loss after owning the famous Pebble Beach golf club for just 18 months.

Many wealthy Japanese have lost so much money at home as stock market lost nearly half its value in the last two years that they have no means or appetite for investments overseas.

Billions were also lost through the purchase of foreign stocks and bonds because of sharp swings in the value of the yen against other currencies. Many big Japanese investors were relatively new to international investment and failed to protect themselves by hedging their investments

China's economy recovers, but inflation rises, officials say

BEIJING (AP) — China's economy rebounded in 1991 from a three-year slump but the government paid the price in a record budget deficit and higher inflation, officials said Saturday.

In separate reports to the national legislature, Finance Minister Wang Bingqian and Vice Premier Zou Jiahua proposed more borrowing and investment in 1992.

Wang also called for increasing the military budget by 12 percent, to $6.7 billion, the third consecutive annual increase.

Zou warned against pumping too much money into the economy.

"There is too much credit and currency in circulation and latent inflationary pressure still exists," said Zou.

Zou heads the State Planning Commission, which sets quotas and allocates supplies in a nation where central planning plays a bigger role than market forces.

China's gross national product grew 7 percent in 1991 to $359 billion while many developed countries suffered recessions, the officials reported.

But Wang said the deficit hit a record $3.86 billion, 71 percent higher than planned. The gap would have been greater if the government had not increased borrowing 50 percent.

Wang's draft 1992 budget allows for a $3.8 billion deficit, but if the pattern of recent years holds, the actual deficit will be much larger.

A major reason is the burden of propping up state-owned factories that have too many workers and make unsellable products. The government fears shutting the factories would cause social unrest, so it is trying to force them to make new products and increase efficiency.

The state also paid out $6.8 billion — more than the budget deficit — to subsidize prices. As it was, Zou said the cost of living rose 8 percent in major cities including Beijing, up several percentage points from 1990.

Chinese jokingly call the factory and price subsidies the "stability fee."

The government fears high prices and unemployment could drive city residents into the streets in protest, threatening the Communist r gime.

Senior leader Deng Xiaoping recently ordered faster economic growth this year in order to raise living standards and keep the public satisfied.

But high growth in the 1980s invariably was accompanied by high inflation, waste and graft because of weak central controls over the provinces.

Wang projected a 9 percent increase in state revenues in 1992, to $71.6 billion, and 8.6 percent increase in expenditures to $75.4 billion.

For the first time, Wang proposed separate operating and capital construction budgets. More than one-fifth of the draft operating budget of $55.3 billion was earmarked for price and factory subsidies.

Wang also projected lower revenues from state enterprises that are earning a profit.

He proposed raising $14.5 billion through bank loans and selling treasury bonds, but more than half of that would go to repay old debts.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Sunny skies on slate today

Staff Report

Today's forecast is for sunny skies with a high in the mid-60s and winds from the north at 10-20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be fair with a low in the upper 30s.

Monday's is forecast to be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-60s, the NWS said.

Saturday's high was 76, compared to the record high of 87, set in 1934. The record low for today's date is 22, set in 1989.

STATE

Clouds returned to Texas Saturday and temperatures were lower. Forecasters said readings would drop even lower as a cold front clears out the clouds.

Southerly flow remained strong over the western two-thirds of Texas, helping to bring moist gulf air that caused showers in the eastern half of the state. Winds remained strong from the south at speeds from 10 to 20 miles an hour. Winds were northerly behind the cold front in West Texas.

High temperatures reached the 80s in sunny portions of the state but stayed in the 50s to 70s elsewhere.

West Texas should see decreasing showers and clouds today with mostly fair skies by tonight. Partly cloudy Monday. Highs today should range from the upper 40s in the northern Panhandle to the upper 70s in Big Bend valleys. Lows tonight should from the middle 20s in the northern Panhandle to the mid-40s in Big Bend valleys. Highs Monday were to be from the upper 50s north to near 70 in the Big Bend.

NATION

Winter-like storms dumped snow from the Rocky Mountains to the East Coast Saturday, adding to the thick blanket of snow that already covered parts of New England and the Midwest during the first days of spring.

The strongest part of a New England storm moved into the Atlantic Ocean by noon after leaving 14 inches of snow at Kennebunkport, Maine.

And snowfall diminished across the upper Mississippi Valley after leaving overnight accumulations of 13 inches at Stillwater, Minn., 11 inches at St. Michael, Minn., and 10 inches at Hugo, Minn.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Midland statistics

Today: Sunny, high in the mid-60s, winds north 10-20 mph and gusty.

DISEASE: ALS steals mens' bodies, not minds rated from his wife, Karin, and three children.

Diagnosed with ALS four years ago, Jones was one month out of college with an engineering degree. He discovered the disease was the reason he had been losing his balance and couldn't easily close his hand into a fist.

From there it was a slow descent into the chair, depending on his family and others for even the most routine activities.

Martin, like Jones, needs help to eat, drink and dress. He is two years into his battle with ALS, and he and his wife, Nancy, are learning about the experience from the Joneses.

Both couples attend a local support group sponsored by the muscular dystrophy association. They are learning to cope with the uncertainty of a terminal disease.

"It's something every minute. It never goes away," said Mrs. Martin, whose husband is 28 years old. She — now 30 — cares for him and their two children, ages 5 and 2, when not working at a local restaurant.

"There's stress, but you just try to keep a smile on your face and go on," Mrs. Martin said.

At a precarious point financially, the Martins were unable to find a nursing service they could afford, but weren't needy enough to qualify for aid. "You feel like you can't win sometimes," Mrs. Martin said.

Mrs. Jones understands.

"It's so hard to know what to do, how to find help," she said. "We would sell the car, just do anything we could to afford the things he needed." Now they live modestly, and support from Jones' status as a veteran of the U.S. Army pays for his visits from a trained caregiver.

Both families are frustrated by the lack of knowledge about ALS, and wish for at least treatments if not a cure.

"Obviously this hasn't hit anyone famous enough for people to get really worried about it," Mrs. Martin said. But besides Gehrig, actor David Niven died with ALS and scientist Stephen Hawking is stricken with it. The problem, others say, is that little is known about its causes.

Theories have been developed linking ALS with toxins — pesticides or other common chemicals; but another school of thought holds the disease may result from a virus or a head injury. It is not even known whether ALS is hereditary, although small "clusters" of people with the disease appear throughout the country.

Both women try to cope with their fears, but at times feel guilt and self-blame.

"I try to look at what we might have done, what could we have done differently, that he wouldn't have gotten it," Mrs. Martin said.

Both say they have seen a series of physicians with different philosophies.

"A lot of doctors we have talked to have the attitude like, 'It's terminal, don't bother me with it,'" Mrs. Jones said.

Although ALS, attacking motor neurons that control movement, gives its victims a weak, sick appearance, it leaves the intellect and the senses alone. So Martin and Jones, mental faculties intact, often face ridicule and misunderstanding because of their appearance and speech.

"People think it's like a mental retardation," Mrs. Jones said. But her husband is a skilled with computers. Punching the keys with a pointer held in his mouth, he communicates with people all over the world.

For the two men, a thin thread of hope has come in the form of a new treatment, now in use mainly in California. Mr. and Mrs. Jones went to the west coast to get quinidine and dextromethorphan, and found an Odessa doctor to help them continue the treatment program at home.

"It's amazing, already to see how he has improved. It's been only one week," Mrs. Jones said, as her husband showed a visitor his accomplishments. He can lift one hand and place it on his chest. He holds his neck upright.

But right now, Martin is without that kind of hope for recovery. He and his wife say they can't afford the new drug. They can't afford to go to California, much less the doctor visits. Yet social services won't support them because the drug is still considered "experimental" — not yet FDA-approved, they say.

"This seems so unfair," Mrs. Martin said. "We've found something that might do some good, and it's hard to understand why we can't try it."

To help Martin, his relatives have begun trying to raise money for the medication and a trip to California. Contributions can be directed to the Jimmy Martin Medical Fund, Attention Sue Courtney, Texas National Bank, P.O. Box 3090, Midland, Texas 79702. Contributions for the Martins are not tax-deductible.

Anyone who has questions about Martin or his treatment fund can call his sister Janet Dixon at 689-7859 in the evenings or 688-3848 during the day.

Hope does not come easily for the families of ALS victims, Mrs. Jones said. They have hope the drugs will do more good, allow her husband to gain some control of his movement. But she said they try not to think about the future too much.

"With this, you have to take it one day at a time," Mrs. Jones said. Perhaps tomorrow her husband will swallow more easily, and perhaps soon their friends the Martins will have the same chance for hope, she said.

Martin, who ran the Capitol 10,000 marathon in Austin shortly after being diagnosed with ALS, remembers how it felt.

He struggles to describe it.

"Knowing . . . made me want to run it that much more."

PERKS: Taxpayers question House benefits

(From 1A)

former Democratic Party national chairman.

Joseph Canzeri, a public relations consultant who was an aide to Nelson A. Rockefeller, complained, "It might as well be Albany."

Tom Korologos, a Republican lobbyist, said, "Why not just go to Salt Lake City and open a gas station?"

Jack Brooks, the cigar-chomping veteran Texas congressman, said he was not enmeshed in the House banking affair but that he was disgusted with what he sees as the sanctimonious tone of the debate on privilege.

"There is a move afoot to destroy the Congress as we know it," he drawled. "In the future, the kind of people who run for Congress will be coming up here living in sleeping bags and sleeping in their offices and riding bicycles to work."

Pause. "Or they'll be right-wing extremists getting chauffered around in Cadillacs," he went on, in a cutting reference to Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, the minority whip who has been prodding the Democratic leadership on the scandal but who wrote overdrafts himself and still rides in the limousines of the leadership.

White, another ebullient Texan, agreed that "the Great Man syndrome is important."

"They've already taken the sex and drinking out of politics," White said. "Hell, if they get this thing to where you can't exhibit a little sense of power — that's what drives this city," he went on, a bit tongue in cheek.

"If you can't have a private elevator and be able to cash checks, I really don't see any reason to go through this rigamarole. If you don't have a policeman to stop traffic to let you walk across the street like you are somebody, how are you going to know you're somebody?"

And with that insight into the psychology of power, White raised intriguing question about politicians' struggles to take a more spartan stance, pushed by voters whose tempers are ragged from the long recession: How can Beltway mandarins who signal their status through their trappings and perks — from Nancy Reagan's "borrowed" designer dresses to John H. Sununu's trips to the dentist on military aircraft — feed their egos in a no-frills universe?

Or could the zealous reformers be going too far? Is it so wrong for members of Congress to have, say, free use of a gym, and a modest one at that?

"Clearly, the bloom is off the place, so far as members feeling fed up with having to put up with this kind of nickle-and-dime criticism," said Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C.

"A member of Congress from a sun belt state came up to me today and said: 'I gave up a good job as county executive with good pay to come up here in the middle of all of this. I could be playing golf this afternoon if I was home.'"

Canzeri, in a burst of wheeler-dealer nostalgia, agreed: "Give me some smoke and some back rooms."

Under Washington tribal customs, there were always Fixits like Bobby Baker to provide anything a legislator desired, from a bag of cash to a willing young lady, or men like Jack Russ, the recently deposed sergeant-at-arms responsible for the House bank, who rose by making life a bit easier for his 435 bosses.

Now, such faciliators and fixers are being banned. Following Russ' ouster, the House postmaster, Robert V. Rota, resigned. Rep. Bill Thomas of California, the ranking Republican on the House Administration Committee, which has jurisdiction over the post office, said the resignation signaled the "post-plantation" mentality in Congress.

And Rose, the chairman of the committee, said the problem with "Can't Say No Rota" was an "overabundance of trying to be helpful to everybody.

That used to be the whole point. It is just another example of how Washington figures can get caught in a political and moral wind shear, when practices that are de rigueur in one era suddenly seem sleazy in another.

All last week, Rep. Jim Nussle, a 31-year-old freshman from Iowa and the youngest member of Congress, sat in his office like Robespierre, scribbling a bill that would ban all luxuries for House members, from free flowers from the Botanical Garden to free prescription drugs to cut-rate hair cuts to free parking at National Airport.

When Speaker Thomas S. Foley announced Friday that he was ending many of the perquisites that Nussle and other young legislators had complained about, Nussle was jubilant.

"Boy," said Nussle, who wore a bag on his head on the floor of the House a few weeks ago to show how embarrassed he was about the banking scandal, "this is a red-letter day for the Nussle reform movement."

Nussle said that, for his constituents, the Judiciary Committee's televised hearings last autumn on Professor Anita F. Hill's charges of sexual harassment against Judge Clarence Thomas were the last straw.

"That really woke them up that we needed sweeping reforms," he said. "They didn't realize that those guys in Congress were that old or that they can't talk off the cuff anymore."

Nussle's ideas are embodied in "The Nussle Congressional Reform Package," which he says has been written in language he picked up from his constituents. Typical chapter headings are: "New Blood," "Use a Stamp," "Go Home" and "Stop Special Treatment."

Nussle's efforts are playing well at home. The Waterloo Courier ran a picture of what it called THE BAG used by Nussle, who says he has had inquiries about whether it belongs in the Smithsonian as a symbol of the voter uprising of the 90's.

Rep. John Boehner of Ohio, another of the freshmen Republicans who call themselves the Group of Seven, who are rebelling against privilege, agreed that the American people now realize that politics does not have to be "all dirtbags" like it is in New York and Chicago, where "people almost expect politicians to be less than honorable," but that politics can be "clean and decent like where I come from in Cincinnati."

"I've been telling all those guys on the floor for a year that 'Your constituents at home have rifles pointed at your heads and you don't see 'em,'" he said. "They just thought I was some dumb freshman Don Quixote tilting at windmills."

Self-indulgence is fast becoming an unfashionable affectation. In tune with the new puritanism, the caricature of pot-bellied lawmakers pursuing young women on Capitol Hill is fast fading with the chilling effect of the Thomas hearings and the undoing of Sen. Brock Adams of Washington amid accusations of sexual misconduct.

"There's a mortal death fear sweeping Washington that the voters have finally figured it out, that they've discovered they can take matters into their own hands," said Michael McCurry, a Democratic consultant. "Politicans are afraid that the game is up."

Mitch Daniels, a business executive in Indianapolis who worked as the political director in the Reagan White House, said that every few years, Washington goes through "tremors" on the issue of cleaning house in "the Club," as the old boys' world of Congress is known.

This time, Daniels said, he believes that "this could be the year the tremors get a little more seismic."

Kenneth M. Duberstein, a Republican consultant, said that many political observers are predicting that there may soon be as many as 90 to 125 new members of Congress.

"It will be interesting as we go to a perkless society," Duberstein mused. "Will they turn the House gym into a day-care center?"

Although Democrats threaten to make the privileged backgrounds of President Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle an issue in the general election, the White House does not seem overly concerned about the sensitivity of the issue.

A White House official told a House Appropriations subcommittee this week that a putting green and a swimming pool have been built on the grounds of Quayle's official residence, paid for from a fund of about $390,000 in "private donations" for renovations desired by the Quayles.

As if the source of the money mattered. Everyone in Washington knows that when private donors give to a putting green they know this is not one of the thousand points of light. They are trying to secure something, whether it is a chance to be heard on business regulations or an invitation to a state dinner.

CIA: Program gets early start

(From 1A)

Volunteer groups will meet April 2 at the Alamo Heights Baptist Church fellowship hall to select work projects for this year.

"We have projects for one person, five people or a whole company," said Trimble, who helped start the group that has spread to 205 cities in 26 states.

The organization uses cash donations to buy building materials for the volunteer work crews to use. Last year, more than 3,000 volunteers from churches, businesses and civic groups used $176,000 in materials on 271 homes.

Trimble expects to spend about the same amount this year. The group is still surveying homes in need of repair, but Trimble said he expects to have 120-130 selected in time for the April 2 meeting.

He and fellow members of Alamo Heights church established the program in 1973 to help the elderly and those physically or financially unable to repair their own home.

meet in the evenings once every quarter — probably at the last of six meetings in the three-month period. The council meets the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month.

This week's briefing, a discussion session planned before each meeting, will begin at 4 p.m. Tuesday in the basement conference room at City Hall.

Evening meetings were proposed by some local citizens at a Town Hall meeting early this year as a way to allow more residents opportunity to attend the sessions. Council members said they will try the change and monitor attendance, continuing the new time only if attendance warrants it.

In a February Reporter-Telegram CITYLINE Community Pulse, 86 percent — or 80 of 93 callers — said they would be more likely to attend a council meeting in the evening.

U.N. ballistic team begins talks in Iraq on weapons demolition

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq claims to have destroyed significant numbers of missiles, chemical bombs and other arms, but United Nations inspectors on Saturday said they were skeptical of the word of a government that has repeatedly defied the world body.

U.N. inspectors arrived in Baghdad Saturday on a nine-day mission to verify Iraq's new weapons disclosures. The U.N. cease-fire resolutions on the Gulf War call on Iraq to surrender all of its weapons of mass destruction.

Derek Boothby, British leader of the 35-member team, met for four hours Saturday with Iraqi officials at the Industry Ministry.

Afterward, Boothby said by telephone from Baghdad he was seeking "as much new information concerning Iraq's ballistic missiles and chemical weapon capabilities as they're able to provide, and then endeavor to assess that information for its completeness and verify it for its accuracy."

Also Saturday, an Iraqi team was at the International Atomic Energy Commission in Vienna to discuss demolition of installations at Al Atheer nuclear plant outside Baghdad. The plant had escaped damage in allied attacks during the Gulf War last year.

Iraq on Friday admitted having more weapons than it previously disclosed, but claimed it had destroyed most of them.

It also agreed to destroy missile-production equipment, dropping earlier demands for converting these to civilian use.

But diplomats cautioned that the new information had to be verified, a comprehensive disclosure still was needed, equipment had to be destroyed and Iraq still must accept long-term U.N. monitoring.

In the past, Iraq has hindered U.N. weapons inspections teams. In one incident, Iraqi soldiers fired shots over the heads of inspectors to prevent them from taking photographs at a nuclear site. Another team was prevented from taking documents related to Iraq's nuclear program, leading to a 4-day standoff in a parking lot.

Other U.N. experts were roughed up by Iraqi demonstrators outside their Baghdad hotel.

The U.N. Security Council has warned of "serious consequences" if Iraq continued to flout the cease-fire terms. President Bush and British Prime Minister John Major have threatened military strikes against weapons installations.

According to Boothby, Iraq said in its latest disclosures that in June it had destroyed a large amount of ammunition and spare parts, long-range Scud missiles and their modified al-Hussein versions, missile launchers, and chemical bombs and nerve gas warheads.

The quantities were "quite significant," Boothby said, speaking to reporters before leaving for Baghdad from Bahrain, regional headquarters of the U.N. Special Commission overseeing the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

During its stay, Boothby's team will verify Iraq's new weapons disclosures, receive Iraqi proposals for destroying missile production and repair facilities, and possibly destroy some weapons, he said.

Iran freezes Red Cross activities, orders foreign staff out

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The Tehran government, apparently angry over a U.N. report criticizing its human rights record, on Saturday ordered the expulsion of all foreign Red Cross staff and froze the group's operations in Iran.

The move came days after Iran accused the humanitarian group of helping the United Nations compile a report on human rights earlier this month.

In it, the U.N. Human Rights Commission cited torture of political prisoners and discrimination against religious minorities, and said Iran should be kept under special scrutiny.

The report was regarded as a further setback to President Hashemi Rafsanjani's drive to improve his country's international stature, mend fences with the West and lure back Iranian exiles who have the expertise the country needs for reconstruction.

In Geneva, spokesman Thomas Rudin of the International Committee of the Red Cross confirmed the expulsion order and said staff had been given a week to leave Iran. He denied any inappropriate activities by Red Cross staff, and said the group hoped to negotiate with Iranian authorities and avoid a suspension of its activities.

Most of the approximately dozen foreign staffers are Swiss, and the case could be another confrontation in a diplomatic dispute over Swiss plans to extradite to France an Iranian wanted in last year's murder of Shahpour Bakhtiar, the last prime under Iran's late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Iranian officials have said that Swiss interests in Iran would be jeopardized if Zeyal Sarhadi were extradited. He was arrested on Dec. 23, and the quarrel over his case has led to the closure of the Swiss Embassy in Tehran.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency said the Red Cross' chief delegate in Iran, Bernard Pfefferle, was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and notified of the decision.

IRNA, monitored in Nicosia, quoted Manuchehr Mottaki, deputy foreign minister for international affairs, as saying "violations committed by (Red Cross) officers were in contradiction with the normal expectations and the declared goals" of the organization. It gave no details.

Last week, Ayatollah Mohammad Yazdi, head of the Iranian judiciary, had threatened to curtail the activities of the Red Cross and suggested that it be barred from investigating human rights in Iran in the future.

In New York, Andrew Whitley, executive director of the human rights group Middle East Watch, denounced the Iranian move and disputed Iran's accusation that the Red Cross had contributed to the U.N. report.

Turkish security forces, Kurds clash; 26 die

CIZRE, Turkey (AP) — At least 26 people died Saturday in clashes between Kurdish separatists and security forces using tear gas and armored vehicles, officials said.

It was the worst such violence since Kurdish radicals began seeking independence in 1984.

There were renewed clashes between a Kurdish group and security forces in Cizre after dusk, Anatolia news agency reported.

"The total death toll stands between 26 and 30," Interior Minister Ismet Sezgin told reporters before joining a Cabinet meeting in Ankara. He did not give further details.

Earlier, Sezgin said 10 people, including seven Kurdish guerrillas, were killed and 20 were wounded in fighting in this southeastern city.

Eleven demonstrators and a police officer were killed in a clash that broke out in nearby Sirnak after protesters opened fire on government offices, Sezgin said.

Another policeman was lynched in his house in Sirnak, he said.

Anatolia reported that one demonstrator was killed in a similar clash in the southern city of Adana and another protestor died in the southeastern town of Nusaybin.

The fighting resumed in the evening in Cizre, when a Kurdish group opened fire on a police patrol vehicle, Anatolia said.

The fighting continued near a hotel where some 40 local and foreign journalists were staying, Anatolia added. Anatolia said bullets hit the hotel's outside wall, but no casualties were reported inside the building.

It was unclear whether police or Kurdish rebels were hurt in the firefight outside.

The Marxist rebels of the Kurdish Labor Party, or PKK, want a separate state in southeastern Turkey. Kurds make up one-fifth of Turkey's population.

The separatists have become more active since Kurds in neighboring Iraq launched an uprising against Saddam Hussein.

■ U.S. investigates Patriot sales report

JERUSALEM — A U.S. team of experts has arrived to look into reports that Israel sold American-made Patriot missiles or missile technology to China, Israel television reported Saturday.

The United States embassy confirmed that the team was coming but declined to provide any further information.

The team is headed by State Department officials and includes investigators from the Defense Department and the U.S. Armed Forces. Team members will examine the two Patriot anti-missile missile batteries in Israel, television said.

Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens acknowledged last week that Israel has an arms trade agreement with China, but denied any violation of U.S. law. Arens has promised full cooperation with the investigators.

■ Seven die on massacre anniversary

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — An election including blacks this year would sweep the white government from power, African National Congress leaders said Saturday, the anniversary of a 1960 massacre that spurred the struggle against apartheid.

Also Saturday, 10,000 armed supporters of the Inkatha Freedom Party, the ANC's main rival in the black opposition movement, marched through Johannesburg in a major show of strength. Pedestrians fled at the sight of the chanting, shouting Inkatha supporters carrying spears, clubs and shields.

Police and soldiers kept a close watch but made no effort to disarm the Inkatha marchers, despite a government ban on weapons at political rallies and marches. Police said seven people were injured in scattered assaults during the march.

Police also said seven blacks died in continued violence in townships near Johannesburg, including a 12-year-old boy killed by a gunshot from a passing train.

The ANC, the leading black group, held several rallies commemorating the deaths of 69 blacks on March 21, 1960, when police opened fire on thousands of protesters outside the police station in Sharpeville, a township south of Johannesburg.

■ Tensions increase before Albanian vote

TIRANA, Albania — Slayings of a police officer and a well-known member of Albania's old guard heightened tensions on the eve of a vote today that could sweep away the power of the former Communists.

Voters in Europe's poorest nation go to the polls for the second time in a year today in an effort to put the legacy of 45 years of xenophobic Communist rule behind it.

Socialists, the former Communists, won last year, thanks in large part to support in the countryside. But strikes and protests made it impossible for them to govern the country of 3.2 million people. This year the anti-Communist Democratic Party says it is confident it will win.

Nearly 2 million eligible voters will choose today among about 520 candidates from a dozen political parties. The number of lawmakers chosen will be around 150, depending on how many parties clear the 4 percent hurdle for additional seats under the proportional system.

Final results may take several days to compile.

■ Cambodian prime minister visits Japan

TOKYO — Visiting Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen called Saturday for Japan to send peacekeeping troops to his war-shattered country.

Hun Sen made the plea in a meeting with former Foreign Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka held hours after his arrival for a three-day visit to Japan, Mitsuzuka's aides said.

The Cambodian leader is scheduled to meet with Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa and Foreign Minister Michio Watanabe before leaving for Washington Monday for a five-day visit to the United States, his first.

Japanese officials, including Watanabe, have said the government is ready to contribute money to rebuild Cambodia, where a recent peace treaty ended nearly 13 years of civil war.

Debate in Japan continues over whether it can send peacekeeping troops abroad because its constitution bans the use of force to settle international disputes.

Rescue workers pull survivor from quake wreckage in Turkey

ERZINCAN, Turkey (AP) — Rescue workers on Saturday found a woman who survived for more than a week in the wreckage of a hospital flattened by a deadly earthquake here, a news report said.

The survivor was identified as 22-year-old Nurcan Eraslan, a nurse in this eastern city's main hospital, the semi-official Anatolia news agency reported.

It said Eraslan told rescue workers that two of her friends also were alive and trapped under the rubble eight days after the quake. Turkish rescue workers immediately started trying to locate them.

Doctors reported that Eraslan was in good condition.

"I cannot believe my daughter is alive. I had been waiting to obtain her dead body for all those days," Enver Eraslan, the nurse's father, told Anatolia.

Gov. Recep Yazicioglu said Eraslan was saved by Turkish rescue workers.

Japan's police investigate extremist group

TOKYO (NYT) — The Japanese police began an investigation Saturday into a small, militantly right-wing group after one of its members was charged with attempting to assassinate Shin Kanemaru, a leader of Japan's governing party and arguably the country's most powerful politician.

The suspect, Hiroshi Watanabe, 24, reportedly told officers that he took three shots on Friday at Kanemaru, all of which missed, on behalf of an extreme nationalist group, Yukoku Seiwa Kai. No one was wounded.

According to Japanese press reports, Watanabe told the police during questioning Saturday that he decided to shoot the 77-year old vice president of the Liberal Democratic party because rightist friends had told him that "Kanemaru was a traitor" for his role in trying to normalize relations between Tokyo and the hard-line Communist government of North Korea.

The Tokyo police said Saturday that Yukuku Seiwa Kai, which is based in the capital, is believed to have only seven or eight members. In 1988 it was named in an attack on a bank and on the headquarters of the ruling party. There are hundreds of such small groups in Japan, and their memberships tend to be fluid.

The attempt against Kanemaru came at the end of a speech he gave at a municipal hall in Tochigi prefecture, north of Tokyo.

Tatars support independence, results show

KAZAN, Russia (AP) — Early results from an independence referendum in Tatarstan indicate that voters ovewhelmingly ignored Russian President Boris Yeltsin's appeal that they reject it.

Even opponents of independence predicted passage of the referendum.

Results released early today by Tatarstan election commission member Anvar Bagaudinov showed the referendum winning by a wide margin. With five of Tatarstan's 60 voting regions reporting, the referendum was being approved by more than 70 percent; two of the regions gave it more than 90-percent approval.

It was not immediately known what percentage of Tatarstan's voters these results represented.

In a televised address on the eve of the Saturday vote, Yeltsin said the referendum was aimed at secession and could lead to ethnic violence.

But Tatarstan's president denied any plans to secede. He said the region was trying to gain control over its oil and other natural resources, to give its people a better life.

"We have never raised the issue of seceding from the Russian Federation and advocate the closest union with it," Tatar President Mintimer Shaimiyev told reporters after casting his ballot.

Turnout was heavy on a clear, sunny day. Two hours before the polls closed at 10 p.m., 79 percent of the 2.5 million eligible voters had cast ballots, according to the Tatarstan Election Commission.

But because the votes were to be counted by hand, preliminary results were not expected until today.

Tatarstan is one of 20 so-called "autonomous" republics inhabited by ethnic minorities in the Russian Federation.

Weight Loss Surprises Researchers

WASHINGTON --A nutrition organization was hopeful that a nutritionally complete "hi-tech" food tablet would help erase world hunger problems, until a study revealed that one of the ingredients could cause significant weight loss.

Although other studies and scientists may not agree, researches in Europe found that the ingredient, a natural plan colloid, actually caused people to lose weight, even though specifically instructed not to alter normal eating patterns, according to one study published in the prestigious British Journal of Nutrition. Researchers in an earlier study had speculated that the weight loss was due to a decrease in the intestinal absorption of calories.

While the development of the product called Food Source One, a project of National Dietary Research, would not be used to successfully ful-fill its original goal, the formula which has since been improved with other natural colloids has been a windfall for some overweight people. A Daytona Beach, Florida woman fighting a weight battle for 12 years used the product on a recommendation of her physician and lost 30 pounds. She stated, "Not only have I lost 30 pounds but my cholesterol has dropped from 232 to 143. I have two closets full of clothes which have not fit me in two years that I can now wear." In a separate report, a telephone interview revealed that a Wilmington, North Carolina pharmacist lost 14 pounds in 3 weeks on the product and was over hungry.

Food Source One tablets are part of National Dietary Research's comprehensive plan to bring a rapid end to obesity in this country. A variety of nutritionally sound diet plans, specially prepared by NDR, accompany each bottle and provide a natural drug free alternative for confronting the problem of obesity.

Youth group cleaning graffiti damages prehistoric cave paintings

AP Laserphoto

Two unidentified members of Eclaireurs de France, the Protestant group assigned for cleaning caves, brush graffiti in a cave near Montauban earlier this month. The damage to the cave was done last Sunday.

By Maurice Leroy
Associated Press writer

MONTAUBAN, France — The idea was to clean up graffiti, but a youth group in southwestern France got carried away and wiped out a bit of prehistory as well, damaging cave paintings thousands of years old.

French cultural officials are furious, and say they plan to file a complaint against the group.

"Absolutely stupid!" fumed Rene Gachet, director of cultural affairs for the Tarn-et-Garonne department, 400 miles southwest of Paris.

The damage was done last Sunday when about 70 members of Eclaireurs de France — a Protestant youth group whose name means "Those Who Show the Way" — descended on the Mayrieres cave near the village of Brunquiel, armed with steel brushes to clean up graffiti.

Southwest France is dotted with hundreds of caves containing paleolithic art, the most famous being the Lascaux caves in the Dordogne region, discovered by schoolchildren in 1941.

Group officials acknowledged Saturday that the youths damaged a portion of the Mayrieres cave's 15,000-year-old bison paintings before realizing what they were. In a statement, they expressed regret but were also "indignant that the actions of well-meaning youths should be called into question."

The head of the caving club that arranged the cleanup blamed officials for failing to designate the site a historic treasure and act to protect it.

"We told them that the cave was in danger, that people were writing on the walls," Thierry Montheillet, whose spelunkers group discovered the paintings 40 years ago, told France-Info radio. "They did absolutely nothing."

Accounts of the damage vary. Cultural officials say two paintings were severely damaged by vigorous brushing.

"On one bison, the hindquarters have practically disappeared, while on the other animal, there's nothing left but the tail and the back legs," said Francois Rouzaud, a state archaeologist.

Montheillet said one bison was damaged, losing part of its back and one hoof.

Gachet said the Culture Ministry will file a civil complaint against the spelunkers club and the youth group. The action could result in a fine, but the site was not officially classified a national treasure, and thus not protected.

The caving club discovered the faded paintings in 1952 about 200 feet from the cave entrance. The paintings are the only ones of their kind in the region, and draw tourists even though the cave is located on private property.

Gachet said that his office had been in consultation with regional authorities to declare the site off-limits, but that a decision had not been reached before the incident. The club and the youth group had not sought permission from local authorities for their clean-up operation, officials said.

U.S. awaits word on Russian biological warfare program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union denied it had a germ warfare program. The United States didn't believe that then, and wants Russia to come clean now.

"Now is the moment of truth for Russia," said one U.S. official.

The United States wants Russian President Boris Yeltsin to adhere to an April 15 deadline — agreed to by signatories of a 1972 treaty banning germ warfare — to reveal the full scope of former and current biological weapons programs.

And while they await confirmation that the program exists, U.S. officials are scrambling to find work for the scientists to keep them from being lured to Third World powers that want to produce biological weapons, often called the poor man's nuclear bomb.

The United States, which destroyed its own germ warfare stocks 20 years ago, has long insisted the Soviet Union maintained a secret offensive biological weapons program. The Soviets were equally insistent that their program was purely defensive.

U.S. intelligence over the years discovered some 20 facilities devoted to research, production and storage of biological weapons, one official said. A test site was located in the Aral Sea in central Asia, he said.

U.S. officials gave that information to Yeltsin last year, said the official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Yeltsin has promised — both privately and publicly — to adhere fully to the 1972 treaty, but hasn't moved to dismantle the offensive program, the official said.

Treaty signatories decided in September that each nation would declare by April 15 the full scope of its former and current biological warfare programs.

If the Russians reveal their offensive program and agree to destroy it, they could likely count on help from the United States, which has already promised to help destroy Soviet nuclear and chemical weapons.

Igor Khripunov, a senior diplomat at the Russian Embassy here, said Russia plans to make its biological weapons program "transparent," as the United States has done by giving a list of its facilities and programs to the United Nations.

U.S. officials say no nuclear or biological weapons scientists are known to have accepted offers to work for other countries. But Russian and U.S. officials are worried nonetheless about finding work for those who would likely be laid off if the Soviet program is scaled back.

Officials have identified at least 10 countries — including Libya, Iraq, Iran, Syria, North Korea, China and Taiwan — that have or are trying to develop biological weapons.

Chinese army budget to get 13.8 percent boost in funds

BEIJING (NYT) — The government announced Saturday that it would give the army a 13.8 percent budget increase this year, apparently a reward for helping to keep the government in power.

The rise in the military budget is bigger than the increase in any other major spending category and comes on top of a substantial boost in army spending in each of the last few years. This year's military budget is more than 50 percent larger than the one for 1989.

Increasing military spending, particularly at a time when the threats along China's borders are diminishing, is sure to raise eyebrows and anxieties among some of China's neighbors.

Not only has the principal threat to China, an attack from the Soviet Union, virtually disappeared for the time being, but tensions have also been considerably eased between China and two other neighbors with which it has fought border wars: India and Vietnam.

The announcement Saturday by Finance Minister Wang Bingqian in a speech to the National People's Congress, the rubber-stamp Parliament now holding its annual session, did not give any clues about how the allocation to the 3.1 million-member army would be spent.

But the military has been focusing lately on acquiring high-tech weapons and on gaining equipment to project power at sea.

A stronger navy would threaten Taiwan, which China insists is an errant province that it has the right to invade. It would also concern several Southeast Asian nations that have competing claims with China over islands in the South China Sea.

Ever since the army was called upon in June 1989 to suppress the Tiananmen democracy movement, the military has also played an important role in internal security.

Domestically, the army is particularly concerned about the possibility of unrest in ethnic minority regions like Tibet and Xinjiang.

The official military budget, which in 1992 is projected to be $6.85 billion, includes only some of the money actually made available to the military, but no more comprehensive figure is available.

Wang portrayed the 1992 increase as 12 percent, but that was because military spending in 1991 was over budget. The increase in the budgeted amounts is 13.8 percent.

In contrast, agriculture spending will rise 7.2 percent this year.

Volunteers help homeless shelter residents file their tax returns

AP Laserphoto

Tax consultant Paul Heimer, right, counsels Clifton Thomas, a resident at the Alexandria Community Shelter in Alexandria, Va., Wednesday. Volunteers have helped shelter residents in the Washington area with their income tax returns, earning the homeless refunds an average of $602 apiece.

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — At first blush, it may sound silly to offer income tax preparation services to the homeless.

But no one at the Alexandria Community Shelter or 17 other homeless shelters in the metropolitan Washington, D.C., area is laughing.

So far this year, volunteers have helped 105 shelter residents file income tax returns that will earn them refunds of more than $63,000 — an average $602 each.

Many homeless people are "unaware of the way the system works — that they are probably due a refund if they worked" last year, said Paul Heimer, a 36-year-old employee of the Alexandria shelter who began the effort four years ago when he realized how few of the homeless file tax returns.

The rate at which income taxes usually are withheld assumes the person will work throughout the year. If the person works only part of the year, then too much in taxes may have been withheld and the worker would be due a refund.

That's the case with Efrem Perkins, who worked as a professional cook for seven months last year before he was laid off and lost his housing. With Heimer's help, he has filed a return and expects to get federal and state refunds totaling nearly $1,100.

"Hopefully, by the end of April I'll be moving. I want to get a car and put money in the bank," said the 31-year-old Perkins. "I worked for seven years straight and I never thought I'd be in a position like this."

Perkins is not unlike many other homeless people, according to a survey Heimer conducted last fall. Of 252 residents in 17 Washington, D.C.-area homeless shelters who were surveyed, 85 percent said they had worked at some point in 1990. Of those who worked, only 44 percent said they filed federal returns in 1991.

Heimer was a volunteer at the 65-bed, suburban shelter in 1989 when he conceived what has developed into the Homeless Income Tax Self-Help Initiative. A Mr. Mom with a young son and a working wife, he had no tax-filing training, except what he had learned doing his own returns.

From the beginning, the idea has been simple.

"I was hoping to get them (shelter residents) enough money to get them out of here — seed money" for a housing deposit, a car or anything else that would help them get back on their feet, Heimer said.

Heimer concedes that some won't get a refund and might even be found to owe the Internal Revenue Service money. Others, he said, could have their refund tapped for unpaid child support or delinquent student loans.

But for most, the IRS has a check with their name on it, Heimer said.

"This kind of thing is important to dispel some of the stereotypes people have about the homeless," said Joan Alker, assistant director of the National Coalition for the Homeless, an advocacy and education group. "Most people who are homeless, we wouldn't know that unless they chose to tell us. They don't look like the stereotype we have in our minds."

The coalition's surveys have found that about a third of the homeless are working, she said.

Alker said Heimer's network of tax-filing volunteers appears to be unique, though she knows of some shelters that bring in accountants who donate their time to help residents file their returns.

In one respect, however, Heimer's initiative goes further by aiming not just to get the returns filed but to teach those who are able to fill out the forms themselves.

Thomas Clifton, 28, worked only in December last year and expects to get just $56 refunded. But more important, he said, he now knows how to file his own form — rather than relying as he has on the IRS doing it for him.

"For years, I just signed the form and sent it off for them (the IRS) to do," he said. But when he sat down with Heimer, "he said all you have to do is read it and do exactly what it says to do."

Bush, Kohl discuss world trade, trouble in former Soviet republics

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP) — President Bush and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl on Saturday renewed commitments for speedy completion of world trade talks in a wide-ranging meeting that also focused on troubles in former Soviet States and Eastern Europe, a spokesman said.

The two leaders, meeting informally in the snowy Maryland countryside, "reviewed the status" of the thorny negotiations between the United States and European Community nations on trade," said White House spokesman Bill Harlow.

They "agreed to give them their full support with the aim of completing the round as soon as possible," he said.

He did not elaborate on any specifics of the discussion, but Kohl earlier had played down reports that he was bringing ideas to break the logjam between the U.S. and European negotiators over agriculture in the ongoing Geneva talks.

"After all, we're not going to have a formal negotiation here," Kohl said as he and Bush spoke briefly to reporters after his helicopter arrival at the hillside presidential retreat.

The two leaders planned to hold a news conference today after returning to Washington.

Harlow said they discussed the U.S. role in Europe, with a "complete meeting of the minds" on the need for continued U.S. military presence.

They also stressed the importance of supporting democratic reforms in the former Soviet states and Eastern European nations through international financial institutions and coordinated efforts among the world's leading industrial nations.

Other topics included the Middle East, Iraq, Magreb, Yugoslavia and the environment, Harlow said, adding that he had no details.

On trade, he said there were "good discussions" and a commitment for rapid progress in Geneva. But he said "there was never intention to reach agreement" at Camp David on the complicated trade issues.

Bush earlier told reporters he would give Kohl details about his morning telephone conversations with Ukraine's President Leonid Kravchuk and Armenian President Levon Ter Petrossian.

Bush said he and the presidents, each of whom called him, discussed the problems in Nagorno-Karabakh, the embattled Armenian enclave within Azerbaijan, and nuclear proliferation.

Kravchuk briefed Bush on Friday's meeting in Kiev of the 11 former Soviet republics, an administration official said.

At the session, Kravchuk refused to sign an agreement pushed by Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin to establish a unified military command over the former Soviet armed forces for two years.

Kravchuk also has halted removal of tactical nuclear weapons from Ukraine to Russia until an international commission is created to supervise their dismantling.

Before Kohl arrived at Camp David, Bush nodded affirmatively when asked whether he expected they would make progress on the 107-nation trade talks known as GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

■ Hospital releases Helmsley in better condition

NEW YORK — Leona M. Helmsley, who nearly collapsed on Wednesday outside a Manhattan courthouse after a federal judge ordered her to prison for tax fraud, was released from New York Hospital on Saturday in improved condition.

Mrs. Helmsley, the self-styled hotel queen whose lawyers had argued that a jail term for her would kill both her and her husband, left her private room in the cardiac care unit at 10:45 a.m. She has been instructed to surrender on April 15 to begin a four-year jail term, probably at a federal medical prison in Lexington, Ky.

Mrs. Helmsley did not suffer a heart attack when she stumbled on her way to her limousine outside court, a hospital spokeswoman, Kathleen Robinson, said. Mrs. Helmsley, 71, was admitted to the hospital with elevated blood pressure, complaining of palpitations and chest pressure.

Mrs. Helmsley, free on $25 million bail, has asked for a new trial on the basis of what Alan M. Dershowitz, one of her lawyers, has called new evidence that would show her ignorance of any tax fraud.

Mrs. Helmsley was convicted of underpaying federal income taxes by $1.2 million. Mr. Helmsley was ruled incompetent to stand trial on the charges.

■ Elephant dies during transfer attempt

LOS ANGELES — A 5-ton African bull elephant died after an attempt to tranquilize him for a move from the Los Angeles Zoo to a larger one in Mexico.

Los Angeles Zoo veterinarian Ben Gonzalez said it would take up to two months to determine what killed the 16-year-old elephant, named Hannibal.

Zoo keepers used tranquilizing darts Thursday to calm Hannibal so he could be placed in a steel-reinforced container for the trip to the Zacongo Zoo in Toluca, Mexico. Shortly after entering the structure, the elephant knelt and would not come to his feet again.

He died early Friday.

"We're outraged by this and we're going to call for the closure of the Los Angeles Zoo forever more," said Bill Dyer, spokesman for the Los Angeles-based Last Chance for Animals, an animal protection group.

Newly-appointed zoo director Mark Goldstein defended the attempts to move Hannibal, and expressed doubt that the drugs killed the elephant.

"As a veterinarian with 10 years experience, I have no reason to think there was an overdose," Goldstein said.

■ Bush's nominee to head FAA withdraws

WASHINGTON — President Bush's controversial choice to head the Federal Aviation Administration has asked Bush to withdraw the nomination.

Jerry R. Curry, head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, came under fire from both consumer groups and former FAA chief James B. Busey after Bush nominated him in November.

Curry, a black conservative, will be offered another job in government, Bush administration sources said Saturday. And Transportation Secretary Andrew H. Card Jr. said in a statement that Curry "continues as a valued member of the president's team."

Until now, Curry had resisted attempts to persuade him to step aside, reportedly buttonholing Bush in person in his quest to retain the appointment.

In his formal letter to the president, Curry offered thanks for being considered for the FAA post.

"I am certain I could have served you well in that capacity," he said.

It was not immediately clear whom Bush might name, but Card recently has praised acting FAA administrator Barry L. Harris. Busey left the job to take the No. 2 post in the Transportation Department.

Pentagon plans $1 billion overhaul of building

By Eric Schmitt
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Cold War is over, the Soviet Union has collapsed and the United States is cutting the size of its military. But the Defense Department says it needs more room.

The Pentagon's 6.5 million square feet, incorporating five floors and nearly 18 miles of corridors, are insufficient, the Defense Department argues. And so it is charging ahead with a 10-year, $1 billion plan to renovate and add a 500,000-square-foot annex to its behemoth of a headquarters on the banks of the Potomac River in northern Virginia.

No one disputes the need to spruce up the Pentagon, which hasn't been overhauled in its 50-year history and is in violation of local fire codes, riddled with asbestos and suffers multiple daily power outages that shut down banks of computers.

But the plan to enlarge what is already one of the world's largest office buildings is running into some stiff opposition on Capitol Hill.

"I don't like the thrust of what's happening," Rep. John P. Murtha, D-Pa., who heads the House Appropriations subcommittee that oversees military spending, said in an interview. "Building more space when we're reducing people doesn't make any damn sense."

Pentagon engineers and planners concede they have a public-relations problem on their hands, given that the military is closing dozens of bases and is slated to shrink by 25 percent by 1995. But they also insist they have a serious space crunch.

The Defense Department owns about two-thirds of the 22.4 million square feet of office space it uses in the Washington area and leases the remainder at market rates, usually at more than $30 per square foot.

About 25,000 civilian and military employees work at the Pentagon, which represents about 30 percent of the total space.

Officials who manage the department's office space say that it costs at least twice as much to rent space in the Washington area as to own it. "I can understand congressmen asking, 'Why are we building more buildings when the military's going to be cutting back by 25 percent over all?'" said L. Walter Freeman, the Defense Department's director of real estate and facilities. "But the reason is, it's cheaper to own than to lease."

Freeman said building the 500,000-square-foot annex would save the Defense Department more than $10 million a year in rent, once the department's overall construction and renovation project is completed by 2001.

The two-story, arrowhead-shaped addition would be built off the Pentagon's mall entrance, replacing a 600-space parking lot.

Missouri police suspect murder-suicide in 6 deaths

SULLIVAN, Mo. (AP) — A county commissioner believed to be struggling with depression apparently shot and killed his wife, two children and two grandchildren, then committed suicide, authorities said Saturday.

Neil Schatz, 55, and his relatives, including an infant grandson, died from the blasts of a 12-gauge shotgun after a family gathering at his rural farmhouse Friday. His mother and another family member found the bodies Saturday morning.

"He was a highly respected man; I guess something just snapped," said Franklin County Sheriff Gary Toelke. "Right now, we're treating it as a murder-suicide."

Schatz was found shot in the head in the basement of the home outside Sullivan, a town of 5,500 about 60 miles southwest of St. Louis. The other five bodies were found in bedrooms, Toelke said.

"Everybody is shocked," said Mark Vincent, county counselor. "Shock, dismay, unbelief ... what more can you say?"

Schatz's mother, who lives next door, went to the home about 7:30 a.m. Saturday, but left when no one came to the door, Toelke said. She returned about an hour later with another family member and found the bodies.

Relatives told Toelke that Schatz had seemed depressed recently. Capt. Don Jones of the Franklin County sheriff's department also said he was taking medication for a heart ailment.

"I don't know the seriousness or nature of that because we have not been able to contact his doctor," Jones said.

The owner of Schatz Construction Co. had lost a close election last fall as the Republican candidate for a seat in the Missouri House. Some neighbors speculated that he may have been depressed over the loss.

Slain were Sarah Schatz, 53, Schatz's wife; Neil Schatz Jr., 32, his son; Brett Schatz, 8, his grandson; Cindy Schatz Lamb, 30, his daughter; and Ryan Lamb, 3 months, another grandson.

Lamb and the baby, who were visiting from Dallas, were staying at the home.

Schatz lost last fall's legislative race to Democrat Francis Overschmidt 3,000 votes to 2,471. Afterward, he was appointed to the Franklin County Commission and gave up his post as chairman of the county Republican Central Committee.

County Clerk Tom Herbst described Schatz as highly religious.

"He seemed very pleasant to work with. He was quiet, and the last month or so he was very, very quiet," Herbst said.

Russian defector dies before family brought to U.S.

BELLEVUE, Wash. (AP) — A Russian geologist who jumped ship in Seattle during the Soviet coup last August failed to win permission to bring his family to the United States.

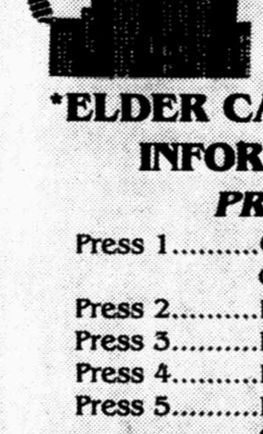

Instead, his wife and parents have been allowed to travel to this Seattle suburb to attend his funeral.

Anatoly Speransky died Thursday night of injuries sustained in a traffic accident in central Oregon.

The defectors said they feared returning to their homeland. Speransky, 26, a Roman Catholic, also said he could be persecuted for his religion if he returned.

Friends put him in touch with St. Louise Catholic Church in Bellevue, where he was allowed to live at the rectory. He applied for political asylum and for his wife, Anastasia, 25, and 4-year-old daugher, Elizabeth, to join him.

After his death, the church offered to fly his relatives in for the funeral.

Clinton accuses Brown of hypocrisy in New York debate

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Democratic front runner Bill Clinton turned the tables on rival Jerry Brown in a debate on Saturday, accusing the former California governor of hypocrisy on the issue of campaign contributions.

A week after Brown accused Clinton of funneling money as governor of Arkansas to his wife's law firm, Clinton accused Brown's law firm of taking "$178,000 in taxpayer money for defeating California contribution limits."

It came at the very end of a 90-minute debate in a Buffalo movie theater and it prompted Brown to grab the microphone and demand more time, claiming he had no chance to answer Clinton's new allegations and challenging him to another debate "in Harlem at the Apollo Theater."

Clinton later turned down the challenge, telling reporters, "We've got more than enough debates."

The outburst triggered by Clinton came after a debate that was generally low key. The usually combative Brown made no new personal attacks on Clinton.

It was the first debate since the withdrawal last week of former Sen. Paul Tsongas, a move that made Clinton the prohibitive Democratic front runner.

"We're coming down now to a two-person race," Brown said. "It's going to be a difficult race. It's not going to be won just on competing personalities. Its one of competing visions."

Then he paused and said of Clinton, "He has a very good personality. I wouldn't want to take that away from him."

When Clinton's turn came to give his final summation, he accused Brown of hypocrisy in refusing to accept contributions of more than $100 apiece.

"Governor Brown says this is a race between two people," Clinton said. "It's also a race between slogans that sound good and new ideas and new leadership. By his own admission, he was still shaking the money tree in the 1980s when I was out working for real political reform ..."

"In 1990, Gov. Brown testified in California against limits on campaign contributons and his law firm got $178,000 in taxpayer money defeating the California contribution limit," he added.

California voters in 1988 passed a limit on California contributions of $1,000. State legislative leaders and other officials opposed the ruling and hired Brown's law firm to challenge it legally, according to Clinton aides.

Brown, then state party chairman, testified against the limits, said Clinton spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers.

At their last debate, one in Chicago last Sunday night, Brown had accused Clinton of funneling money to the law firm in which his wife, Hillary, is a partner. Clinton angrily denied the accusation, and party leaders later jumped on Brown, claiming that his charges were misleading and not factual.

Saturday's exchange came as the two candidates shared the stage at the Shea Theater in Buffalo.

Key figures in check scandal have past ties

By Stephen Labaton
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In 1988, eight Democratic members of Congress formed a company to buy a tiny island in the Bahamas — an old pirates' lair with pink beaches and palm trees — with the idea of turning it into a resort.

One of them was Matthew F. McHugh, the upstate New York representative who is now leading the ethics committee investigation of the House bank affair. Two of the others were Robert J. Mrazek of New York's Long Island and Edward F. Feighan of Ohio, who figure prominently in that affair and who are now appealing to McHugh's panel for exoneration on the ground that they did not "routinely and repeatedly" overdraw their accounts by significant amounts.

The Bahamian business venture used at least one account at the House bank, that of Mrazek, to help pay for the island. But the venture does not appear to have violated any laws, and it is unclear whether Mrazek overdrew his account to make payments for the island.

Still, the venture sheds light on personal relationships among members and their behind-the-scenes financial dealings. It shows the unrealistic business visions of lawmakers who hoped to make a big profit on the island, which ultimately produced a loss for most investors as real-estate prices tumbled.

And it reflects the absence of clear-cut written guidelines on how to avoid potential conflicts of interest in congressional ethics cases. Such questions are generally left to the discretion of ethics committee members, who find themselves in the awkward position of sitting in judgment on scores of friends, political allies and enemies.

The eight lawmakers formed a Bahamian corporation, Douglas & Chamberlain Ltd., to buy a 17-acre vacation property, Pierre Island, for $475,000. Near the Bahamian island of Eleuthera, Pierre is all but barren, with three cottages, a tennis court, an electric generator, a water purification system and a dock.

Some of the lawmakers vacationed on the island, but Douglas & Chamberlain never found enough renters to help pay the mortgage and maintenance costs, and it ultimately began losing money. Last fall, most of the lawmakers decided to pull out of the venture.

In an interview Friday, McHugh said he saw no conflict of interest in judging the check-writing practices of his business partners.

"I don't anticipate anybody recusing themselves now," he said. "I'm not sure on what basis somebody would recuse himself. It's inherent in the ethics committee review that you will know the people you are investigating. Even if there were no business relationship, we have personal relationships."

Since he gave back his shares to Douglas in exchange for a promise that any lawsuits against him arising from the deal would be paid by the company, McHugh said his business relationship with Feighan and Mrazek was "essentially terminated" and, in any event, "has nothing to do with the House bank."

He said that the ethics committee, known formally as the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, had not investigated the purposes for which members wrote checks on the House bank and that he had no knowledge of any payments from House bank accounts for the island.

Judge: Dentists can't deny service to patients who are HIV-positive

ST. PAUL (AP) — A dentist who refused to treat a patient infected with the virus that causes AIDS was ordered to pay the patient $10,000.

An administrative law judge, George A. Beck, said dentists who refuse to treat patients infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, violate Minnesota's human rights law.

"This record demonstrates that there is no scientific, medical or dental reason for a dentist to refuse routine dental care to an HIV-infected person," Beck wrote in his decision, released Friday.

"Such discrimination, based on fear rather than medical knowledge, cannot be tolerated."

The patient, James B. Busby of Minneapolis, complained that dentist Donald J. Clausen, who had treated him regularly, denied him treatment after learning Busby was HIV-positive.

Clausen claimed he referred Busby to another dentist but did not deny him treatment. He also said his actions constituted a reasonable medical or dental judgment.

Beck rejected both arguments, ordering Clausen to pay Busby $10,000 for mental anguish and suffering and to pay a $5,000 civil penalty to the state. Clausen can appeal the decision.

Erica Jacobsen, special assistant to the attorney general, said the ruling could have a broad effect.

"A lot of HIV-positive people in Minnesota cannot find a dentist to perform routine dental work on them," said Jacobsen, who represented Busby.

Clausen did not return a telephone call Friday. There was no answer at the office of his Washington, D.C.-based attorney.

Cholesterol treatment reaches only third who need it

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Two-thirds of Americans with cholesterol levels high enough for treatment are not getting it, said researchers who criticized doctors for missing opportunities to reach more sufferers.

A report by the national Centers for Disease Control said the percentage of people receiving treatment to lower cholesterol rose by 50 percent between 1988 and 1990.

But only one-third of the 36 percent of all Americans who need such treatment were getting it at the end of 1990, said Dr. Robert Anda of the Atlanta-based CDC.

"There are signs that rapid progress is being made, but there's a long way to go, because this is such an important problem," he said. "It would be nice if more young people were being screened and educated."

He presented his findings Friday at the American Heart Association's annual epidemiology conference.

Providing cholesterol-lowering treatment for those in need who aren't getting it could lower the nation's heart disease rate dramatically, Anda said.

"There's the potential for it to make a great difference in heart disease incidence," he said.

High cholesterol can be treated by reducing fat in the diet or through drugs.

The study, based on a survey of 95,448 adults nationwide, found that the groups least likely to receive treatment for high cholesterol were men, blacks, the poor and the young.

Patricia J. Elmer, an epidemiologist at the University of Minnesota and an organizer of the heart association conference, said doctors were not being as aggressive as they should in diagnosing and treating high cholesterol.

"I think we could do a lot better," Elmer said. "I think the public has caught on faster than the medical community" to the dangers of high cholesterol.

Many people are being screened in community programs to determine their cholesterol levels, but doctors are not doing enough to reach those with high cholesterol to offer them treatment, Elmer said.

Anda and his colleagues found that a number of people in the survey had seen doctors recently but had not been screened for cholesterol problems.

"Among 20- to 34-year-olds, about 60 percent had a missed opportunity, compared to 20 percent of people 65 and older," Anda said.

Missed opportunities were also common among women seeing obstetricians and gynecologists, Anda said. Forty-seven percent of the women surveyed reported seeing a doctor but not being tested for cholesterol, he said.

Anda said new recommendations on cholesterol screening were adopted in 1987 and word about them is spreading slowly among doctors. That was the reason for the 50 percent increase in the percentage of Americans who are getting the treatment they need, Anda said.

Shuttle plans include study of atmosphere

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

Above the stratosphere, mesosphere and thermosphere, the atmospheric layer cake enveloping the planet, the space shuttle Atlantis will be carrying scientific instruments this week to study the chemistry and physics of the air sustaining life on Earth.

The planned eight-day mission, scheduled for launching at 8:01 a.m. Monday at Cape Canaveral, Fla., is to conduct detailed measurements of the upper atmosphere and its response to natural and human-induced changes, including the accumulation of gases that trap heat and could lead to a gradual warming throughout the world.

NASA scientists and officials said the flight of the atmospheric laboratory for applications and science, or Atlas, would be the first of a series of surveys over the next decade, all part of a program known as Mission to Planet Earth.

The investigations are expected to play a critical role in globai environmental policy decisions.

Dr. Marsha Torr, chief mission scientist at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., said the multinational Atlas laboratory, to be operated from the shuttle's open cargo bay, is the "most comprehensive suite of instruments we have ever flown to study the atmosphere."

The plan is for shuttles to fly the Atlas instruments annually throughout one solar cycle, the 11-year period in which the Sun goes from intense turbulence to relative calm.

The Sun has just passed the peak of turbulence, a time of explosive solar flares, sunspots and other magnetic storms, and should be growing increasingly quiescent.

Most of the 12 Atlas instruments are designed to investigate the influence of changing solar activity on the composition, temperature and pressure of the atmosphere at different altitudes.

Scientists want to determine the fluctuations of solar heat reaching the outer layers of the atmosphere and how this drives atmospheric circulation and climate.

Of particular interest will be the upper regions known as the stratosphere, from about 6 miles out to 30 miles; the mesosphere, from 30 miles out to 60 miles, and so little studied that it is jokingly called the "ignore-o-sphere" by scientists; and the thermosphere, the extremely tenuous layer of atmosphere extending to outer space, at altitudes of several hundred miles.

"The entire atmosphere is the way it is because of its interactions with sunlight, each layer absorbing different wavelengths of sunlight," Dr. Torr said in a telephone interview. "The sun is the battery for this whole system."

One of the instruments is designed to make infrared observations for mapping trace molecules, including carbon dioxide and ozone, in the middle atmosphere.

The buildup of carbon dioxide, mainly from the combustion of fossil fuels, could be creating a greenhouse effect, trapping solar heat and causing global warming.

The ozone layer, which protects Earth from dangerous ultraviolet radiation, is threatened with depletion from chlorofluorocarbons used in air-conditioning, refrigeration and certain industrial processes.

Other instruments are expected to provide scientists with a detailed inventory of trace gases in the atmosphere and vertical profile measurements on ozone, methane and nitrogen compounds at altitudes of nine miles to 93 miles.

The Atlas instruments were developed by an international team of scientists from NASA, the European Space Agency, Belgium, France, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands and Switzerland.

Rebels hit sour note

Abilene Cooper uses 13-run 5th inning to rout Lee, 24-7

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

By the time Abilene Cooper's Sultans of Swing had ended their 13-run fifth inning Saturday at Johnson Field, the Midland Lee Rebels were in dire straits.

The Cougars rocked the Rebels, and rolled to sole possession of the District 4-5A baseball lead by virtually ignoring the 5-3 edge Lee held after four innings and jamming 21 runs into two innings while strolling to a 24-7 win.

The Cooper romp also sent a shock wave throughout 4-5A that the Cougars are back with a vengeance after missing the playoffs while enduring last year's firing of former coach Andy Malone.

In other district games Saturday, Abilene High outlasted Midland High, 17-16 in eight innings, while San Angelo defeated Odessa High 13-4. Odessa Permian played a non-district game at Carlsbad, N.M.

The win puts Cooper at 2-0 in the district, 11-3 overall and extends its winning streak to 10 games. The Rebels (6-5 overall) fell from a first place tie to 1-1 for a fourth-place deadlock with Abilene High.

The new Cooper pretty much resembles the old one, as the Coogs pounded out 17 hits and made the Rebels pay for each of their five errors and four of the seven Cougar batters walked.

Pam Hults/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Lee leadoff hitter David Galvan executes a bunt Saturday in the Rebels' loss to Abilene Cooper. The ball eventually rolled foul, nullifying Galvan's effort.

"We hit the ball pretty well today, obviously," first-year Cooper coach Lee Driggers said with a wry smile after the game.

And even though Lee got 12 hits in the game and scored a usually sufficient number of runs, the performance didn't even come close to the Cougars.

The final score, the big 13-run fifth inning and an eight-run sixth that saw Cooper launch three home runs were more than eonugh to make the estimated 200 fans present forget that the game

Swoopes leads Red Raiders

Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Sheryl Swoopes scored 28 points and 12th-ranked Texas Tech overcame an 18-point first-half deficit with the help of deafening crowd support to defeat Santa Clara 64-58 Saturday in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

Texas Tech (27-4), the fourth seed in the West Regional, earned its first NCAA tournament victory in four tries dating back to the 1983-84 season. The 12th-seeded Broncos, who upset seventh-seeded California 73-71 in the first round, finish the season 21-10.

Swoopes, the Southwest Conference player of the year, was the difference in the second half, when she scored 15 points, including nine in a row to put the game out of reach, 60-54 with 1:40 to play.

Santa Clara pulled within 60-56 on two free throws by Jenny Baldwin with 1:17 left, but could get no closer.

Sheryl Staub led Santa Clara with 13 points, and Laura Hughes added 12.

Tech opened the second half with an 11-2 run highlighted by four points from Swoopes which helped give the Lady Raiders their first lead of the game and a 38-34 advantage with 15:54 to play.

Santa Clara opened the game 5-of-6 from three-point range and built a 28-10 lead as the Lady Raiders fumbled through their offensive plays.

By whatever name, they're still champs

At first they were nicknamed by necessity. But now there's a sort of moniker madness afoot in the Rebel soccer camp.

With enough 'Jasons' on his roster to cast a horror film — replete with extras — Midland Lee coach Eddie Bull decided to get a handle on who was who. He attached nicknames of his own choosing to the confusing few.

Wyatt

But it didn't stop there.

Bull's propensity for personalizing players produced a plethora of pet names, and now the majority of the District 3 champion Rebels have been re-christened by their coach.

"The nicknames got started because we had so many players with the same first names," said Bull, who was first buffaloed by a herd of 'Codys' in 1991.

"Last year we had a bunch of Codys. This year it's Matts and Jasons. I used nicknames to end some of the confusion, and it just kind of grew from there to almost everybody."

'Jasons' Brown, Gotcher and Meyers are now 'Cookie', 'Post' and 'Zeus', respectively.

"He (Bull) does it for fun for the most part," said Tommy 'Tic Tac' Tipton, who got his label for hoarding dinner mints on a long bus trip home from El Paso. "Nicknames stick. They're fun."

They can also be confusing for the opposition. When Bull, whose powerful voice can reach the four corners of any soccer field, bellows, 'Grape Juice, right! Come up Easy!", those seated on the opposing bench wonder what such code words might mean in the way of new tactics. But Bull is simply redirecting Cody 'Grape Juice' Welch and Dennis 'Easy' Ehler.

"Our nicknames kind of loosen things up in practice," Ehler said as the Rebels prepared for their bi-district game against District 4 runner-up Burkburnett at 7 p.m. Monday in Abilene. "They help get the tensions out."

It's easy for Bull to distinguish between his two 'Matthews'. Matt 'Schizo' Lawrence's nickname stems from his aggressive on-field play. The characteristics of Matt 'Woody' Perkins remind Bull of the bartender on "Cheers."

Bull is thinking of an actor on "Gilligan's Island" when he calls to Garrick 'Professor' Roegner. And Todd Meade has to respond to 'T', "Pigpen' or other familiar names, depending on Bull's frame of mind.

Brett 'Buck' Ramsey and Denver 'River' Renfro have their special names, as does Tim Tucker, the victim of a typographical error in the Midland Reporter-Telegram early in the season, which mistakenly identified him as Tim Ticker.

Moments into the game that followed the misprint, Lee assistant coach Mike Gonzales called to the team's leading scorer. "Way to go Tim Ticker," he said. "Way to hustle, Ticker."

But Gonzales was quickly overruled by Bull.

"He (Tucker) will always be 'Granny'," Bull said after the game.

"He calls me 'Granny' because he says I gripe a lot," Tucker said. "I guess I do complain pretty much."

But 'Granny' and the rest of the Rebels have no complaints about Monday's meeting with Burkburnett. Lee posted a 5-0 shutout over Burkburnett in the second game of the season. A repeat of that performance will lift Lee into an area-round game against either El Paso Hanks or El Paso High, which clash in bi-district action on Tuesday.

The coins have already been flipped, so if Lee beats Burkburnett, the Rebels would either travel to El Paso High or host Hanks.

Tipton is right about nicknames sticking. But forever is a long time, and only one tag is sure to stay with each of the vastly divergent Rebels from here on out.

They can never shake being called 'Champions of District 3'. That moniker sticks no matter how the playoffs unfold.

Duke dunks Iowa; 'Bama wimps out against UNC

Memphis State, Georgia Tech pull off big upsets over Hogs, Trojans

Associated Press

NCAA Tournament

A pair of North Carolina neighbors moved into the same NCAA tournament neighborhood on Saturday, while Memphis State upset a regional rival to join them in the final 16.

Defending champion Duke beat Iowa 75-62 in the East Regional to reach the Sweet 16 for the seventh straight season, and North Carolina earned its 12th consecutive trip to the regional semifinals by downing Alabama 64-55 in the Southeast.

Memphis State edged Arkansas 82-80 in the Midwest to make its biggest advance in the tournament since 1985. David Vaughn followed his own miss with eight seconds remaining for the winning basket.

Brian Davis had 21 points and 10 rebounds to lead top-ranked Duke to an easy win at Greensboro, N.C. But he said defense was the key.

The Blue Devils (30-2) took a 59-37 lead on a dunk by Grant Hill, but Iowa then ran off 14 consecutive points to cut it to 59-51. Following a timeout, however, Duke responded with an 8-0 run to put the game away.

"We needed to establish ourselves on defense again," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "I thought our defense had let down, therefore we were being a little bit passive offensively."

Duke started strongly, taking a 21-5 lead as Iowa missed 10 of its first 11 shots and committed numerous turnovers.

"Our slow start was uncharacteristic of this team," Iowa coach Tom Davis said. "It has been poised all year, but it's tough to play in this situation, in front of about 15,000 Duke fans."

Christian Laettner had 19 points, eight rebounds and three blocked shots for the Blue Devils, while Bobby Hurley had 12 points and nine assists. Acie Earl led Iowa (19-11) with 19 points and 12 rebounds.

At Cincinnati, Hubert Davis snapped out of a one-game tournament slump with 16 points for the No. 18 Tar Heels (23-9), whose string of final 16 appearances is one shy of UCLA's record 13 in a row from 1967-79.

"A lot of people counted us out against Alabama," said George Lynch, one of four Carolina players in double figures with 10 points. "They said we didn't have great athletes."

No. 13 Alabama (26-9) failed to capitalize on Eric Montross' foul problems. The 7-foot North Carolina center sat out the last nine minutes of the first half with three fouls, but the Tide shot just 29 percent for the half against the Tar Heels' switching defense.

James Robinson scored 20 of his 22 points in the second half to keep Alabama close. He hit a jumper and two consecutive 3-pointers to cut the lead to 57-52 with 1:39 left, but Carolina sank four free throws and got a dunk from Lynch to pull away.

Carolina switched from man-to-man to zones and traps, and Alabama could never get on a roll. Forwards Latrell Sprewell and Robert Horry, who combined for 44 points in a first-round victory over Stanford, managed just 19 Saturday on 8-for-30 shooting.

"We had some shots we normally make that we didn't make, and they did an excellent job on the defensive end," said Sprewell, who hit just two of 15 from the field.

Vaughn, nephew of Memphis State coach Larry Finch, scored 26 points on 11-for-15 shooting to lead the Tigers (22-10) over No. 9 Arkansas (26-8) for the second time in six weeks.

Lee Mayberry missed a long 3-pointer with three seconds left for Arkansas, which blew a 12-point second-half lead. Reserve Darrell Hawkins had 22 points for Arkansas, including two free throws that made it 80-80 with 55.3 seconds left.

On its next possession, Memphis State worked the 45-second clock near expiration before Vaughn took a 16-foot jumper that hit the rim and came off. The freshman then chased down the rebound and put in the winner.

MIDWEST

Georgia Tech 79,
No. 8 Southern Cal 78

MILWAUKEE — Freshman James Forrest made a lunging 3-pointer at the buzzer as Georgia Tech stunned No. 8 Southern Cal to advance to the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals.

Rodney Chatman's jumper with three seconds left had given USC a 78-76 lead. Tech inbounded the ball to Jon Barry and he lost his dribble at midcourt, but the ball went off Southern Cal with eight-tenths of a second left.

Matt Geiger then threw the ball into Forrest, who caught the ball at the NBA 3-point line to the left of the basket and tossed up his game-winning, 24-foot shot. Forrest was mobbed by his teammates and Tech fans swarmed the court.

Seventh-seeded Tech (23-11) moves on to Kansas City to play Memphis State in the regional semifinals. The Tigers (22-10) beat Arkansas 82-80 in Saturday's first game at the Bradley Center.

Barry made six 3-pointers and finished with 20 points. Malcom Mackey had 16 and Forrest 15 for the Yellow Jackets. Southern Cal (24-6) was led by Harold Miner with 18 points — 14 in the second half — and 14 from Yamen Sanders.

After Travis Best's jumper gave the Yellow Jackets a 71-69 lead, Barry hit his sixth 3-pointer to cap a 13-2 run that made it 74-69 with three minutes left.

But Mark Boyd's follow-up basket brought the Trojans within two and then Miner hit a jumper in the lane to tie the game with 1:44 left.

Lorenzo Orr got a rebound and scored after a Tech turnover to give the Trojans the lead, but Barry hit a jumper for a 76-76 tie with 53 seconds left.

EAST

No. 19 Seton Hall 88,
No. 16 Missouri 71

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Seton Hall became the next team to qualify for a shot at top-ranked Duke, as Jerry Walker led a free throw barrage that sent the No. 19 Pirates past No. 16 Missouri 88-71 in the second round of the NCAA East Regional.

Terry Dehere had 20 points and Walker had 19 for Seton Hall (23-8), which will next face Duke on Thursday in Philadelphia. Duke advanced by beating Iowa 75-62.

Walker scored 15 points in the second half, including nine at the free throw line, to help the Pirates reach the round of 16 for the third time in four years.

Anthony Peeler closed out his career at Missouri with 28 points, 19 in the second half. The Tigers (21-9) ended their season with five losses in six games.

Missouri's excessive fouling put Seton Hall in a one-and-one situation with 16:12 left in the game, and the Pirates were 28-for-36 at the line after halftime. They took only two free throws in the first half.

Seton Hall expanded its 36-33 halftime lead to 62-47 by making 14 free throws in the first 10 minutes of the second half. Walker sandwiched six free throws around a baseline jumper by Terry Dehere to make it 44-35, and moments later his three-point play and two foul shots by Dehere upped the margin to 17 points.

After Missouri closed to 64-54, Walker made successive layups and the Tigers never cut the gap below 11 points the rest of the way despite the play of Peeler, who scored 17 of the Tigers' first 28 points after halftime.

WEST

No. 5 Indiana 89,
No. 25 LSU 79

BOISE, Idaho — Calbert Cheaney scored 30 points as No. 5 Indiana overcame a 36-point performance by Shaquille O'Neal to beat No. 25 Louisiana State in the second round of the NCAA West Regional.

O'Neal scored 27 in the second half but got little help from his supporting cast as Indiana coach Bob Knight ran his record to 3-0 against LSU's Dale Brown.

The Hoosiers (25-6) advanced to the regional semifinals for the 12th time in Knight's 21 years at Indiana. They'll meet Florida State Thursday in Albuquerque.

O'Neal, a 50 percent free-throw shooter during the season, was 12-for-12 from the foul line and had four three-point plays. The 7-foot-1 junior had 12 rebounds and five blocked shots.

Cheaney's total was a season-high and two points short of his career best.

Alan Henderson scored 19 and Matt Nover 13 for Indiana. Vernel Singleton had 14 points for the Tigers (21-10).

Indiana took the lead for good, 35-33, with five minutes left in the first half and had a 45-38 advantage at halftime.

O'Neal scored his team's first nine points of the second half but the Tigers never could get closer than two and Indiana rebuilt a 69-59 lead on Henderson's three-point play with 8:07 to play.

O'Neal's two free throws with 4:04 remaining cut Indiana's lead to 73-70. Damon Bailey sank a 3-pointer for the Hoosiers to boost the lead to six and, after O'Neal scored inside, Cheaney's three-point play made it 79-72 with 2:42 left.

Indiana sank 10 of 11 free throws over the final 2:03 to clinch the victory.

Unlike the game between the two teams five years ago, there were no fireworks from the coaches. In the 1987 Midwest Regional final, Knight slammed a telephone during a tantrum that ignited a comeback that resulted in a one-point victory for his eventual national champions.

Dale Brown has insisted that his team is a legitimate NCAA title contender. For the first eight minutes of the game, the Tigers lived up to his billing.

The comeback featured Indiana scoring runs of 9-0 and 12-0.

SOUTHEAST

No. 3 Ohio St. 78,
Connecticut 55

CINCINNATI — Jim Jackson scored 23 points after missing his first nine shots as third-ranked Ohio State overcame a 12-point deficit and beat Connecticut in the second round of the NCAA Southeast Regional.

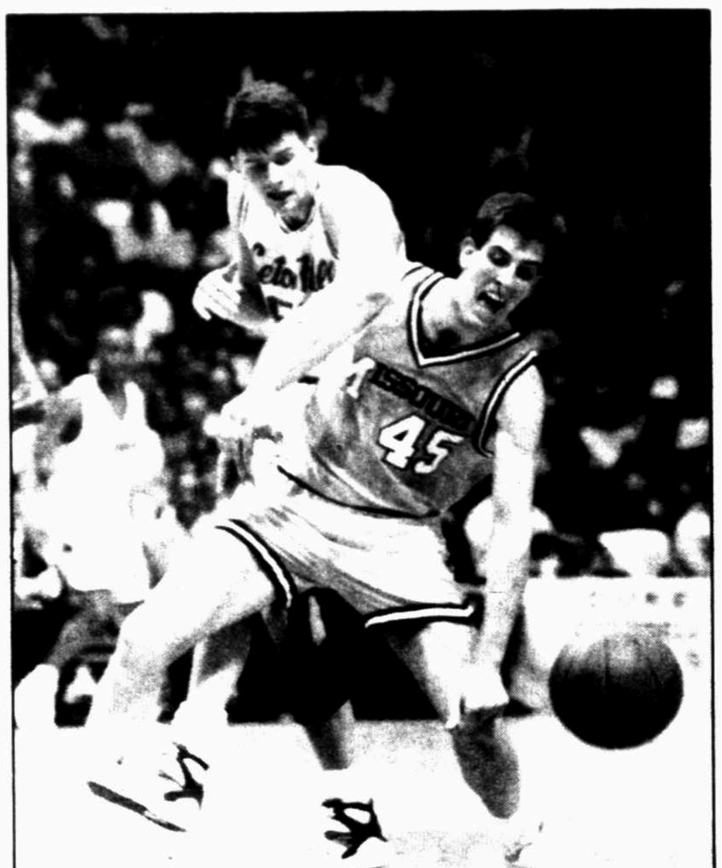

The Buckeyes (25-5) advanced to the Sweet 16 for the second straight year. They will play No. 18 North Carolina on Friday in Lexington, Ky.

UConn (20-10) dominated the first 13 minutes, buoyed by the return of center Rod Sellers from a one-game suspension. Sellers helped the Huskies control the offensive boards, and they repeatedly got tip-ins and easy follow baskets for a 28-16 advantage with 7:20 left in the half.

But a 3-point shot by Jamaal Brown with seven minutes remaining in the half brought the pro-Ohio State crowd back into the game and started a 15-2 run that gave the Buckeyes their first lead at 31-30.

Jackson, who had gone 0-for-9 to that point, scored four of the last six points in the flurry, including the short jumper that put them ahead for good with 28 seconds left in the half.

Ohio State carried the momentum into the second half, hitting four straight long jumpers — an 18-footer and 3-pointer by Chris Jent and two 3-pointers by Jackson — that expanded the lead to 42-34.

TECH: Lady Raider has big second half

(From 1B)

Tech's 2-3 zone was no match for Santa Clara's outside shooting, led by Staub, who was 3-of-3 from three-point range and finished with 11 points in the first half.

But Tech, inspired by the deafening roars of a never-say-die sellout crowd of 8,323, closed the first half with a 17-2 run. Swoopes scored seven points in the spurt which helped narrow the Broncos' lead at halftime to 30-27.

No. 13 Vanderbilt 75,
Connecticut 47

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Heidi Gillingham's 13 points led a methodical Vanderbilt offense that buried Connecticut in the second round of the women's NCAA tournament.

Eleven Commodore players scored as Vanderbilt (21-9) advanced to the NCAA's Sweet 16. Vanderbilt will play the North Carolina-Miami winner in Charlottesville, Va.

Connecticut wrapped up its season at 23-11.

Vanderbilt kicked off the game with eight straight points before Wendy Davis drove the baseline to score Connecticut's first two points with 16:36 in the half.

A Jade Huntington layup at 4:05 gave Vanderbilt its largest lead of the half, 18 points.

Tennessee 97, Rutgers 56

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee used its superior depth and relentless pressure to wear out Rutgers and begin its quest for a second consecutive NCAA tournament championship.

The Lady Vols (28-2) were led by Nikki McCray with 19 points, but it was Tennessee's depth and tenacious defense that turned the second-round Mideast Region game into a rout.

Rutgers (21-11) committed 30 turnovers and Tennessee scored 28 points off them. The Lady Vols also took 75 shots to 50 for Rutgers, and had 12 players score.

Dena Head had 14 points for Tennessee. Lisa Harrison came off the bench to add 11 and Kelli Casteel scored 10.

Tanya Hansen scored 34 points for Rutgers. Caroline DeRoose had 13, but only four other Lady Knights scored and none had more than four points.

Texas Tech's Sheryl Swoopes (22) goes up for two of her game-high 28 points Saturday against Santa Clara.

No. 5 Mississippi 72,
S. Illinois 56

OXFORD, Miss. — Senior Jackie Martin scored a career-high 27 points as No. 5 Mississippi beat Southern Illinois in the second round of the NCAA women's tournament.

Martin scored 17 of her points in the first half, including a 15-footer in the closing seconds.

Miami 86, North Carolina 72

MIAMI — Francis Savage bounced back from a sprained ankle to provide Miami with an emotional lift as she led the Hurricanes over North Carolina.

Savage, recently named Sports Illustrated's Women's College Basketball Player of the Year, scored 25 points and teammate Jeannie Hebert added a season-high 26.

Jayhawks would have home court edge in region finals

Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio — Michigan State, Cincinnati, Texas-El Paso and Kansas are all hopeful of advancing to the Midwest Regional semifinals next week at Kansas City.

No matter what happens, the Kansas Jayhawks will already be there.

"Everybody wants to talk about going back to Kansas City," Jayhawks coach Roy Williams said. "We're going back to Kansas City either way. We can either fly home happy or sad."

Their mood will be determined by the top-seeded Jayhawks' second-round game Sunday against ninth-seeded Texas-El Paso. Fourth-seeded Cincinnati meets fifth-seeded Michigan State in the other game at the University of Dayton Arena.

NCAA Midwest

The Bearcats (26-4) and Spartans (22-7) are not strangers to each other.

"Usually, the NCAA committee stays away from rematches in the second round," Michigan State coach Jud Heathcote said. "I'm surprised we're playing Cincinnati."

The teams have met twice in the past two years, with Michigan State rallying from 18-point deficits in each to win on last-second shots. Two years ago, the Spartans won 65-63. On Dec. 7, Kris Weshinskey hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer, giving the Spartans a 90-89 victory at home.

"I think those games were heartbreaking for them and a good time for us," said Michigan State center Mike Peplowski, nursing an injured ankle but expected to play. Peplowski had 20 points and 12 rebounds in the December game.

"They killed us ... twice," Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins said. "We got leads in both, then got tentative and they did a good job of attacking us. We missed some free throws and we didn't rebound well. In games where teams are fairly evenly matched, you've got to hit free throws and rebound down the stretch. We didn't do that in either."

Cincinnati relies on its full-court pressure. The Bearcats pressed and had starters on the floor until the final three minutes of their 85-47 first-round victory over Delaware.

Michigan State, which edged Southwest Missouri State 61-54 in the first round, can play a variety of styles, but is a perfect fit in the Big Ten with its brawn inside.

"It's simple what they want to do: throw it in as close as they can to the basket to those big guys — they look almost like professional wrestlers," Huggins said. "And it looks like professional wrestling in there sometimes."

Heathcote joked that if Cincinnati again builds a big lead, Michigan State will be right where it wants to be. The Bearcats disagree.

"If we get up 18 tomorrow, I think it'll be over," Huggins said.

The contrasts in the nightcap are equally clear.

Kansas (27-4) is led by fourth-year coach Roy Williams, who was in the 10th grade when UTEP's Don Haskins won a national championship in 1966. Kansas is deep, with 11 players scoring in a 100-67 romp over Howard in the first round. Only five players scored in UTEP's 55-50 victory over Evansville.

"We do hope depth gets to be a problem for them," Kansas' Williams said.

But it is Kansas' defense which most concerns Haskins.

"I don't think you can win a big one if you can't guard somebody," he said.

Times are changing at Tulane

Associated Press

ATLANTA — When Perry Clark took the Tulane basketball job four years ago, he had no team, no players and no assistants.

Things have changed.

Clark now has Tulane in the second round of the NCAA tournament, facing one of the nation's top powers, Oklahoma State, in the second round of the Southeast Regional Sunday.

"I didn't have an office," Clark said Saturday about the situation he faced when he was chosen in July 1988 to revive the Green Wave program. The team was entering the final year of a four-year self-imposed exile from the game in the wake of a gambling scandal.

NCAA Southeast

"I didn't have a courtesy car," Clark said. "I had no assistants, no files, no basketballs. ... absolutely nothing."

After spending six seasons as a top assistant to Bobby Cremins at Georgia Tech, Clark began assembling a staff to recruit a team for the 1989-90 season. The Greenies were 4-24 in the first season and improved to 15-13 last year.

This year, Tulane won the Metro Conference championship.

The Green Wave will take a 22-8 record against the 11th-ranked Cowboys (27-7), who have a 17-0 record against teams outside the Big Eight Conference this season.

The second half of Sunday's doubleheader in The Omni matches No. 15 Michigan (21-8) agaiunst Southern Conference champion East Tennessee State (24-6), which made 10th-ranked Arizona its ninth victim in a row Friday night, 87-80, in the biggest upset of the tournament's opening round. Arizona was seeded third, East Tennessee State 14th in the region.

Sunday's winners meet at Lexington, Ky., next week in the regional semifinals.

Oklahoma State advanced with a 100-73 first-round triumph over Georgia Southern, Tulane beat St. John's 61-57 and Michigan, featuring an all-freshman starting lineup, eliminated Temple 73-66.

"The first year was survival," Clark said. "We had to go out and get the best athletes we could. After the first year, I felt what we needed was some toughness. The next recruiting class we wanted quickness and ability."

Once his team was in place, Clark decided on a 10-man rotation. His reserves are called "the Posse." They enter a game in a five-man wave, trying to create havoc with their pressing style of defense.

During the regular season, the Posse averaged just over 40 of the 83 points a game Tulane scored.

Kim Lewis leads the Greenies in scoring at 15.4 per game. David Whitmore, a transfer who was recruited by Clark to Georgia Tech, averages 12.9 per game. The top scorer among the Posse is Carlin Hartman, 9.1 per game.

"This is a three-year evolution," Clark said of Tulane's success. "I don't think anything's going to awe 'em or scare 'em."

Clark says being in the NCAA tournament is a reward for his players.

"I don't want our guys to be uptight," he said. "There is no pressure on us. They should enjoy it and play hard."

He knows Oklahoma State has one of the nation's top players in Byron Houston, a second team All-American averaging 20.5 points per game. He also knows coach Eddie Sutton has a three-guard attack built around experienced players who likely won't be rattled by Tulane's press.

Clark says now is not the time to change styles.

"We are going to play our game," he said. "We're going to trap, we're going to press, we're going to run. We have to do the things we do well. Hopefully that will be enough to get us a victory."

Sanchez-Vicario downs Sabatini

Associated Press

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — When fans in one corner of the stadium began singing "Don't Cry for Me, Argentina," Arantxa Sanchez Vicario smiled and Gabriela Sabatini frowned.

They wore the same expressions after their match.

Sanchez Vicario lured Sabatini into a duel from the baseline and then withstood the Argentine's late charges for a 6-1, 6-4 victory Saturday in the women's final at the International Players Championships.

Sabatini, who lives on Key Biscayne, clearly had a home-court advantage in crowd support. But shouts of "Gaby, Gaby" gave way to cheering by supporters for Sanchez Vicario, a sly and steady Spaniard.

Her fans chanted and waved Spanish flags, and at 4-4 in the second set, they broke into the sentimental song from "Evita."

"It was funny, because everybody was shouting for Sabatini," Sanchez Vicario said. "I laughed first, and then I concentrated on the game."

Sabatini glared at the source of the serenade.

"I didn't like that very much," she said. "To my country, that hurts sometimes."

The loss hurt, too. Sabatini came into the match with an 11-3 edge over Sanchez Vicario, momentum from a semifinal victory over Steffi Graf, and a shot at her third tournament title this year.

"Probably I overconfident myself a little bit," the third-ranked Sabatini said.

The result earned Sanchez Vicario $120,000 and Sabatini $60,000, but it cost Argentina a chance at a sweep this weekend. Alberto Mancini of Argentina plays Michael Chang of the United States in the men's final Sunday.

Sanchez Vicario will go for a sweep herself Sunday, playing in the doubles final with Natalia Zvereva against Jill Hetherington and Kathy Rinaldi.

The singles championship was Sanchez Vicario's biggest since winning the 1989 French Open. Though considered a clay-court specialist, her last two titles have been on hardcourts.

REBELS: Coogs score 21 in final two began as a pitching duel. Seriously.

Rebel starter Jimmy Patton, a right-handed senior, held Cooper scoreless in the first two innings and none of the three runs the Cougars scored in the third were earned as the Lee defense battled a 25-mph wind for fly balls and committed three errors.

Meanwhile Carey Paige (4-0) shut Lee out in the first and second, and none of the Rebs' three runs in the third were earned.

A Cooper error with two outs in the bottom of the third allowed the Rebs to tie the game on Allen Chase's RBI ground-rule double down the right field line. Lee even took a lead after Patton shut the opposition down in the fourth, as Patton drove in a run with his second double of the game and Brian Cordova sent a sacrifice fly to center field.

But then Lee's tortuous fifth came. Jimmy Frush opened the inning by reaching on a Lee error, Paige doubled and Eric Gibson smashed a two-run hit up the middle. Then Patton's control began to fade, as he issued his fifth walk and allowed another base hit before being replaced.

But Cooper breezed right through replacements Jason Baker and Julian Urquidez, who threw a complete game Tuesday, and the Rebs didn't even get the first out until after 11 runs had scored.

In the Cooper sixth, Paige hit a three-run homer to give him a 3-for-5, five RBI game while pinch hitter Cody Childress hit a three-run homer run and Judge Roberts a two-run shot.

"You've got to give credit to them, but we think we can play with them if we just make the plays. Things were really looking good through four innings. We've just got to forget about this game and get ready to go to Odessa Permian Tuesday," said Lee head coach Jesse Benavidez.

Eagles outscore MHS, 17-16

Staff Report

ABILENE — Tony Vasquez hit a lead-off home run in the bottom of the eight inning here Saturday, guiding Abilene High to a 17-16 District 4-5A baseball win over Midland High.

The AHS win evens the Eagles' 4-5A record at 1-1 and sends them to 7-9 overall. The Bulldogs fell to 0-2 and 4-11.

The Eagles stole 17 bases on MHS while the Bulldogs stranded 16 runners, and MHS lost despite out-hitting the War Birds 19-14 and watching Abilene commit seven errors. Dewayne Culpepper took the pitching loss for the 'Dogs to move to 1-3 for the season, while Eric Montelongo (3-2) claimed the win for AHS.

First baseman Jimmy Stanton was MHS' leading batsman, going 5-for-6 with three RBI. Mike Melzer and Culpepper were both 3-for-7 from the plate, while Richite Greth's 2-for-5 performance yielded three RBI.

The Eagles are now tied for fourth place in district with Midland Lee, a 24-7 loser to Abilene Cooper Saturday. Cooper (2-0) is in first place while Odessa Permian and San Angelo are tied for second at 1-0.

The Bulldogs return to action Tuesday, when they host Odessa High (0-2) at 4 p.m. in Angels Stadium.

Political interest on upswing here

It has been a surprising year in politics with the nation's electorate seemingly on the verge of a backlash because of rising taxation, concern over the direction of government and a perceived elitist attitude from elected officials. This week that mood materialized in Midland as the filing deadline for city, school and hospital district offices approached.

The result is that five individuals are seeking the position of mayor while half of the other positions up for election on the city council, the Midland Independent School District board of trustees and Midland County Hospital District board of directors will see contested races this spring. The attention being shown to local government is a refreshing change from previous recent elections when virtually all positions up for election attracted only a single candidate each.

The number of candidates this year underscores the fact that Midlanders are taking their local government seriously and, beyond that, are willing to go beyond the complaining stage to try to bring about a positive change. With such an attitude apparent among the local electorate, the outcome hopefully will be responsive and responsible government.

Participation by individuals of strong views and unwavering dedication to the common good — even to the point of seeking political office — is critical to the best operation of our form of government, at ALL levels. It is the responsibility of individual citizens to take the initiative in changing government for the better.

When he served in the United States Congress, Sen. Sam J. Ervin of North Carolina once remarked, "If men and women of capacity refuse to take part in politics and government, they condemn themselves, as well as the people, to the punishment of living under bad government."

The groundswell of interest in politics being shown across the United States could well be attributable in part to the change that has been taking place in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union for years. It may be that Americans have seen that the people in those regions of the world have taken it upon themselves to improve their form of government, and consequently Americans are awakening to the fact that the quality of their own government is largely dependent on their involvent in politics and government. The people in this nation can make a change for the better — if they will only become involved in the political process.

It begins at the grassroots level — and that appears to be what Midland is experiencing now.

Tighter rules for admission to mental hospitals needed

The power to admit patients to psychiatric hospitals in Texas should only be in the hands of psychiatrists — trained medical doctors who specialize in treating the mentally ill. The privilege should not be re-extended to allow psychologists, who do not have M.D. degrees, to make these critical decisions.

For two years, owing to a loophole in Texas law, psychologists were allowed to admit patients to the state's private hospitals. As of March 1, the state Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation denied psychologists the right to admit patients. The Texas Psychological Association has filed a lawsuit against MHMR to let those in their professional number admit patients.

. . .the admittance of patients to Texas' private psychiatric hospitals some time ago reached the point of being little more than a bounty hunt in many cases. . . .

Without question, admittance privileges have been misused by both psychiatrists and psychologists. The situation is changing, but only after the media spotlight was shined on it.

. . . the state regulators' grip (should) be tightened over the whole process. That should begin with limiting admittance privileges to those with the medical training and specialization to do so.

Nixon says things worth hearing

Richard Nixon, famous for debating with Khrushchev and negotiating with Brezhnev, now has spoken out about another Russian leader, and America would do well to listen to the former president on this subject.

Nixon thinks Boris Yeltsin desperately needs more help from the West, especially the United States, to get him through the rough transition from a communist economy to one based on free enterprise.

If Yeltsin fails, his likely successors would be either communist hard-liners or Russian nationalists suspicious of the West and eager to restore their nation's superpower prestige. The Cold War could reignite.

As Nixon points out, almost everything that America has gained by the Soviet Union's collapse would be lost.

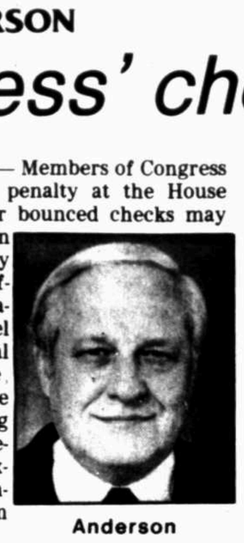

Forty-five years after the fact, everyone considers the Marshall Plan for Western Europe a major success, an easily justified investment of U.S. taxpayer dollars. Why does America shrink from organizing a similar plan for Eastern Europe to finish the job?

Congress' check bouncers aim at GAO

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress who paid no penalty at the House bank for their bounced checks may pay a higher price in November when they are bounced out of office by the "rubbergate" scandal. High-level officials at the General Accounting Office, which exposed the scandal, are bracing themselves for the rebound. Some fully expect a shoot-the-messenger response from Congress.

Anderson

Before the lawmakers rushed to their press conferences to confess that they were check bouncers, the GAO was inundated with requests for information about the names and numbers on the list of check kiters. Lawmakers sent their staffers through back channels to beg the GAO for early copies of the political death list. Those back channels were already clogged by reporters, and by challengers trying to get the goods on congressional incumbents.

GAO officials began complaining to their bosses about how "nasty and arrogant" some of the congressional staffers became in their desperation.

Until the list was officially turned over to Congress 10 days ago, only a half-dozen top GAO officials had access to it — a burden that one official said was "driving us crazy." The names were in the agency's vault along with the most sensitive classified information currently under review by the GAO.

It was worse than guarding the crown jewels, a GAO source told us, because at least the crown jewels are worth keeping. The check-bouncers' list was not a secret the GAO relished knowing. For a watchdog agency to possess such embarrassing information about the people who hold its purse strings is too dangerous.

The messenger has been in this uncomfortable position before. In recent years, the GAO has tackled sensitive investigations that have made its bosses look bad. All things considered, a lawmaker who asks the GAO to look into something would rather have the investigation end with blame being placed on the administration, or at the very least with the other political party.

The GAO can't comply, although it has been known to give a heads-up to a member of Congress who asks for an investigation when the audit isn't going the way the lawmaker expected.

Adding to the angst at the GAO this time around is the fact that some people on the rubber-check list serve on the committees that determine the GAO's budget. The agency was in hot water with its overseers in the Senate even before the rubbergate scandal broke in the House.

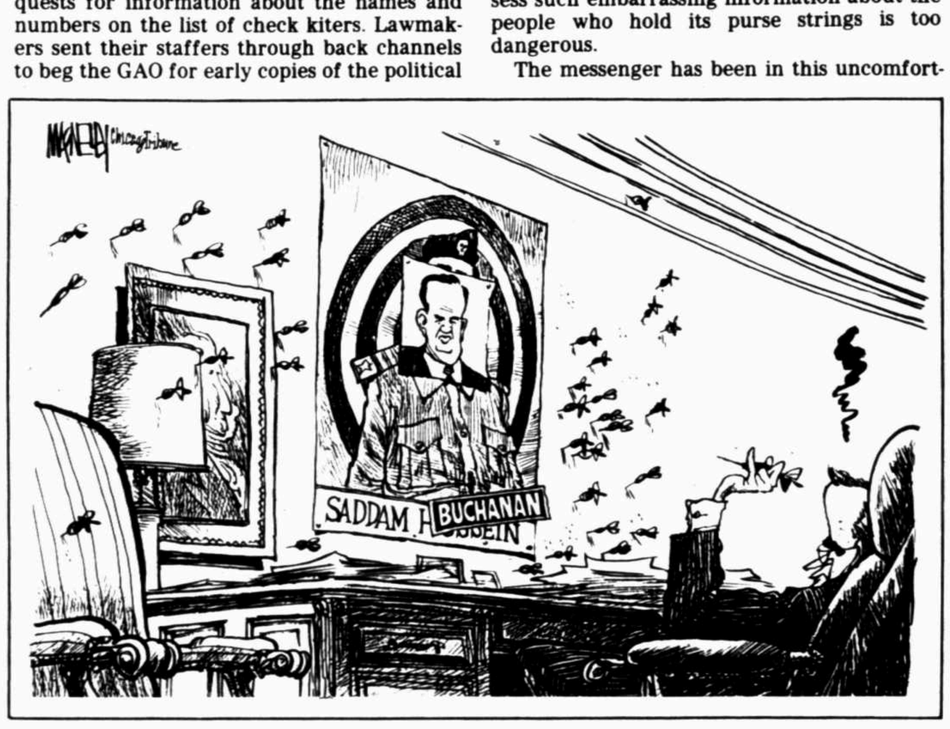

Over in the Senate, the GAO has been tiptoeing around Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev. He is chairman of the appropriations subcommittee that manages the GAO's budget, and he is on the warpath. Last year the GAO reviewed the fees that ranchers pay to graze livestock on federal land and concluded that those fees don't come anywhere near covering the government's cost of managing the land.

Although the GAO was careful not to recommend raising the fees, other senators began agitating for a huge increase. That didn't go over well with cattle grazers in Reid's home state, and he has been fighting the fee increases ever since while railing at the GAO for shoddy work.

The irony of the latest topic — rubbergate — is that the House asked for it. The GAO was under orders to routinely audit the House Bank and had even run up a red flag with an earlier investigation. Now the members of the House find themselves in the same spot Gary Hart was in when he challenged reporters to follow him around and see if he was involved in any monkey business. They did and he was.

The GAO followed orders, found some monkey business and may pay the price in budget cuts.

Arizona's John McCain leads way for changes

WASHINGTON — Sen. John McCain, the Arizona Republican, is a man of unquenchable spirit who, because of his zest for lost causes, needs all that spirit. He survived five and a half years in a Hanoi prison, where he made himself useful to America by being a nuisance to the people who ran the prison. Recently he has done that in the Senate.

Will

A few weeks ago he annoyed West Virginia's Billion Dollar Industry (also known as Robert Byrd, chairman of the Appropriations Committee), and he made a majority of the other senators unhappy. He did this by forcing them to vote on empowering presidents to exercise a line item veto. They voted that down, of course. They love pork even more than they hate being seen voting to protect their ability to bloat the budget with it. But McCain had another arrow in his quiver.

Last week he shot it, forcing a vote on a measure that would have required a "supermajority" — 60 senators — to pass a tax increase. He lost, of course, 58-37. But it was a constructive defeat because it was an essentially party-line vote.

McCain's measure would have reversed a perverse supermajority requirement now in place. How many Americans know that under the 1990 budget agreement of which President Bush is so fond, a supermajority of 60 senators is required to pass a tax cut?

Seven states have experience with provisions similar to McCain's — and in those states spending and tax revenues per capita rose slower than the national average during the 1980s. McCain argued that his measure would increase the likelihood that any tax increase would be backed by a broad national consensus.

There is nothing novel or undemocratic about supermajority requirements. They are as American as the Constitution, which has ten of them (for overriding vetoes, ratifying treaties, amending the Constitution, etc.). Such requirements say that some decisions are especially grave and should be made only on the basis of special support.

Given the ferocity of today's only nationwide political passion — taxaphobia — perhaps a supermajority requirement for raising taxes is not only unnecessary, it could be harmful. Arguably, the starvation of the public sector is a clear and present danger.

But it is at least as arguable that a measure like McCain's is necessary because of the power of public employee unions and other special interests, and because of incumbency-protection spending by legislatures not operating under term limits.

John Randolph of Roanoke (1773-1833) was witty, caustic, dyspeptic and intermittently insane, but he also was a congressman and a senator who knew whereof he spoke when he warned against "the most delicious of privileges," that of spending other people's money. That deliciousness, combined with the incumbents unsleeping attempts to buy votes, is why legislatures have an inherent bent toward increasing taxation.

When term limits are imposed on Congress and all state legislatures, there will be a chance that revenues will be spent more rationally than now — more sensibly than as lubrication for the incumbency-protection machine. Until then, McCain's measure is a needed inhibition.

Life for gangsters isn't what it used to be

The rich compote of gangster lore filling New York newspapers takes me back to 1935 when I entertained the idea of a career in gangstering. I had seen Paul Muni and George Raft do it and admired the elegant cars, expensive suits and fancy fedoras that were standard gangster equipment.

Baker

On the negative side, Muni and Raft spent a lot of time listening to Ann Dvorak sing about Casey Jones at the piano. Joan Blondell tickling the ivories at my hideout might have been tolerable, but Ann Dvorak was not my type.

The job-related risk of being shot wasn't as forbidding then as it is now. In those days bullets entering shot gangsters like Edward G. Robinson, James Cagney and George Raft didn't produce the disgusting results now all too common.

The bullets went in neatly and the shot party grabbed his rib cage like a man remembering too late that it was his wife's birthday, grimaced and collapsed tastefully.

It looked quick and painless, quite different from the abattoir mess we've come to expect nowadays every time we check out a passel of gangsters from the video shop. Why then did I turn down the job? Because of the complexity of the rules.

Gangstering had more rules than baseball, in which I was also interested. In fact I would never have considered the gangster life if Bill Terry had offered to groom me to replace Dick Bartell at shortstop for the New York Giants.

The rules of gangstering were so complex that I was amazed the average gangster could master them. Take the nickname problem: "What's your nickname?" a personnel man asked me. I didn't have one. "Rules say you got to have a nickname," he said, so I said, "Fats, I'll take Fats for my nickname."

"Whattaya wanna scuttle across the floors of sandy seas with the lobsters?" he said. (This was 1935, remember. I gather from movies that high-flown poetic borrowings are now against the rules and people are asked simply if they yearn to "sleep with the fishes." Such is the decline of delicacy in our era.)

By choosing "Fats" I had broken a rule that forbids anybody below the rank of underboss to use irony. The irony in my choice of "Fats" arose from the fact that I was 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighed only 59 pounds.

I would have been taken for a ride immediately if I had been a little older, but the rules, I was told, stated that no children or women could be taken for a ride, shot in the kneecaps or forced to eat broccoli more than three times a week.

Even more dangerous than infringing on the bosses' exclusive right to irony was a violation of the dread code of the buttoned lip ("Boutonnez! Toujours boutonnez!") which prescribed death for such infractions as:

1. Telling the police who shot your kneecaps;
2. Warning your best pal to get out of town if he wants to escape being served a six-course broccoli dinner;
3. Mentioning aloud the name of the gangster organization you work for.

How is it possible to conduct gangster business without violating this last rule? By giving the organization a code name. Nowadays the code name seems to be Cosa Nostra ("Our Thing"), but in 1935 it was Ganga Nostra ("Our Gang").

Suppose your organization needed your help in a business operation. The term "Ganga Nostra" let you know the orders were official without requiring anyone to utter the organization's unspeakable secret name.

For instance: Your phone rang. A man important enough to use irony said, "Be at Otto's Veggie Bar tonight to help Ganga Nostra put six courses of broccoli into your best pal so we can fill him full of bullet holes and watch the green run out."

These few examples hardly begin to plumb the complexity of the rules gang members had to learn in 1935. Fortunately for me, 1935 was the year James Cagney, though raised by a crime boss, joined the FBI after his pal was killed by gangsters, and starred in "G-Men."

Shortly after that I turned 11 and became far more interested in Joan Blondell than tommy guns, which is probably why I am here to wax nostalgic about it. Can you imagine Marlon Brando calling a sitdown of all the bosses to say, "The kid can't help being hopelessly addicted to irony — let's give him a break"?

Not a prayer. My kneecaps ache at the mere thought of it.

Historic District wants to clarify news article

The members of the Midland County Historic District Committee have met and wish to address certain statements and make some corrections to information contained in the article entitled, "Midland Historic District schedules walkathon, tour" which appeared in the Permorama Edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Feb. 25. The article was written by staff writer Georgia Temple.

First, the Midland Historic District does not schedule the M.S. (multiple sclerosis) Walkathon and is not one of its sponsors. The Historic District Committee members are not aware of any regular meetings of the group to plan activities for the district. While the Historic District would be pleased to share in such activities, it has not at any time thought of or planned an architectural tour of the neighborhood.

Contrary to a reported statement by Jean Hagman, director of the Museum of the Southwest, there are a number of homes in the Historic District that are several years older than the Turner home which houses the Museum of the Southwest. This is confirmed by research done by members of the committee of the Historic District and the Midland County Historical Society as well.

Members of the Historic District Committee designed the blue diamond-shaped marker inspired by possibly Midland's first logo. The committee requested that the district be further marked with blue dots down the center of each of the streets in the Historic District. The committee took photographs of the homes to be featured in a brochure and wrote a brief history of each home. These brochures were paid for by the Midland County Historical Society and are available at the Midland Chamber of Commerce or one of the members of the Historic District Committee. We think the public should know that members of the Historic District Committee met with the City Planning & Zoning Department, the city council, the Midland County Commissioners and the chamber of commerce. All put their stamp of approval on our plans to establish the Midland Historic District.

While residents of the Historic District are pleased to share in any neighborhood activity, they do not like to see misinformation printed about it.

BB guns pose dangers to both pets, children

We have been hearing on local TV channels lately that there is going to be a ban on the shooting of guns in the city limits except for BB guns and air guns.

We have a six-foot fence around our backyard with padlocks on both gates so that our dogs can't get out of the gates. The gates are opened and locked after entrance and exit of the gardener, repairmen, etc.

About two months ago one of our dogs stopped running and playing with our other dogs; he barely ate and slept most of the time. The vet could find nothing wrong until he X-rayed the dog last week and found a pellet next to the dog's spine. The surgery necessary to prevent the pellet from moving and causing the dog to be paralyzed will cost between $100 and $150. We don't know how the dog was shot or who did it; but with cracks in the fence it wouldn't be impossible for a pellet to come through one of them.

We feel that all guns should be included in this ban, since it's possible for children to be hit by pellets from BB guns, or any person in range of the gun. We raised two sons and in most places we have lived there were bans on BB guns inside the city limits because there had been instances were children lost an eye from the pellets. We believe BB guns are dangerous to children and pets.

Therefore, we believe the shooting of all guns should be banned inside the city limits. The above injury by a BB pellet occurred to one of our dogs that we care for and love, but such an injury could have happened to an innocent and beloved child.

Before criticizing, one should get facts right

In the Sunday, March 15th, letters in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, I could not help but notice the letter of Don Knight criticizing some people in Midland for writing outrageous letters full of misinformation, in his opinion.

Knight criticized Don Book for his letter concerning the timing of the plowing of Midland Air Park. Knight stated that most people are not aware of safety mandates of the FAA. By the way, FAA stands for Federal Aviation Administration not Federal Aeronautics Administration. In the same edition, the Reporter-Telegram also questioned the timing of the plowing.

Knight stated safety concerns, but how about safety concerns when an aircraft engine ingests large amounts of blowing dirt? What happens when a pilot is approaching a runway and is blinded by blowing dust?

Knight also criticized Don Kyser for his letter concerning the master plan at Midland Air Terminal. Kyser did not criticize the City of Midland for the report, but did question the assumptions of the report. Kyser stated that he had read the master plan cover to cover, has Knight?

Maybe before casting stones at fellow citizens and the Reporter-Telegram for content of letters some might need to get their own facts straight.

Insider-elites deny other Republicans their dues

I think Republican Party insider-elites are getting what they wanted but in so doing, they are denying the great majority of working Republicans half of what they deserve.

Working Texans deserve a juristic, rather than a political, judiciary on all levels and they have lawyer talent in depth to place conservative judges on all benches, not on just a few of them. Touted bipartisanship is a legislative, not a judicial function.

But we marvel at the capacity of the Republican hierarchy in Texas to self-destruct. Ever since that leadership abandoned Clayton Williams for governor, we are watching Republican bench vacancies being filled with liberal and special-interest lawyers by a Democratic governor.

We must be careful, as working Republicans and conservative candidates, that we don't give the insider-elites of the Republican Party manipulative power to support a mixed slate of their "chosen" of both parties as the price of special-interest support and for privileged homogeny.

We must not let the Republican insider-elites stoop to deceptive trade practices or RICO patterns of manipulation in monopolizing registration services and collecting candidates' application fees. For my part, the Four Horsemen's tortious interferences with prospective advantage and their premeditated agency to repudiate contracts for a level playing field will mature at the Nov. 3rd General Election.

For my part, also, I will continue to reach the 40 major newspapers in Texas about juristic qualifications, law practice experience and straight-forward integrity — then trust informed voters' judgment and good sense in elections to the Texas Supreme Court.

Poe doesn't deserve criticism he's receiving

The extensive criticism aimed at Fred Poe recently is absolutely undeserved! I have worked for and with Poe for close to 11 years. At times he and I have had serious disagreements, and some of his decisions have disappointed me. But he has always done what he thought was best for the city of Midland — with no exceptions I could ever tell.

Some recent deeds attributed to Poe should not be. He is under intense pressure from all directions. How would you like to have a job with seven bosses and 100,000 people to satisfy? And very limited funds to do it with?

Were Poe employed in private industry with similar responsibilities he would command twice the salary. Also he would have a private jet at his disposal, a limo, company-paid country club memberships, an unlimited expense account, and probably much more.

Poe is an outstanding manager and person. Those who know him appreciate him. The person replacing Poe when he retires will definitely have his work cut out for him or her.

Increased gas prices don't make sense

What possible justification can the local service station owners give for the recent price increase in gasoline. All the latest market information indicates that the prices for oil and petroleum products are still falling.

What I cannot understand is why gasoline prices are at least 10 cents a gallon lower in Abilene, and some 15 to 20 cents lower in Houston. I have just recently returned from these cities. It is hard to realize that the distributors would discriminate this much against the local suppliers.

What is even more puzzling is why the price was increased on March 5 and then on March 7 (the day I left for Abilene) the prices were lowered back to the previous price. Sometime between the seventh and when I returned on the 10th, the prices were hiked back up.

Maybe someone with the strong local retail service station operators' organization can explain what is going on.

READERS' VIEWS on:

Legislators in Congress writing hot checks

Polls should deliver justice for legislators

Those scoundrels in the Congress are going to get away with it.

Now it is that they have no blame. It is the fault of the bank's sloppy management. That old dog should not be allowed to hunt. Whether each culprit was told of an overdraft is quite immaterial. No person who makes a deposit and then writes checks for thousands of dollars in excess of that deposit is not without knowledge that those checks are worthless.

Hot-checking is a criminal offense and in some jurisdictions, perhaps in all, the amounts for which these miscreants wrote them is a felony. They each and every one should be prosecuted just as any private citizen would be. But they will not be. The only bar of justice before which they will be brought will be the polls where they may face such justice as the voters in November may wreak. And even that is a NIMBY — Not In My Back Yard.

Scholarship payment can't buy morality

Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., having admitted to writing 160 bad checks through the House Bank commented that due to the fact he had contributed to a scholarship fund he was in "moral balance on the issue." Moral balance?

Since when has the correct position been halfway between morality and immorality? Is morality now an extreme to be avoided? If I rob a local bank and then share the loot with my church am I in "moral balance?" If I beat up my wife, but buy her a great birthday present am I in "moral balance?" Maybe if I only make every other house payment I would be in "moral balance."

I hope Rep. Hunter and others involved in this scandal, after granting themselves pay raises and extraordinary retirement benefits, will feel "morally balanced" after losing their jobs following the next election.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Let's count those Patriot missiles in public

WASHINGTON — Terrorists are blowing up Israeli embassies.

A fanatic urged on by Iranian mullahs slashes and kills Israeli schoolchildren.

In Washington, George Bush declares that unless Israel knuckles under to his demand that only Arabs and no Jews be permitted to move to the West Bank, refugees from the former Soviet Union will have to shift for themselves.

Safire

By extraordinary coincidence, just before the announcement of the Bush decision to scuttle all Senate compromises to house the refugees, a spate of stories was leaked from the State and Defense departments to justify the Bush-Baker intervention in Israel's election.

Defense leakers worked through The Washington Times, which provided a banner headline, "China may have Patriot from Israel;" State and Defense had been working for six weeks through The Wall Street Journal's Washington bureau, which the next day cited an unnamed official's "overwhelming" evidence that Israel had re-exported U.S. technology.

ABC News trumpeted an anonymous allegation about the Copperhead missile. And old reliable Evans and Novak had Israel abandoning America for China. (Don't Jews like Chinese food?)

The Israeli Defense minister, Moshe Arens, in Washington to get the bad news on the loan guarantee, said that "there is not a grain of truth" to the missilery allegations from ambush.

When he asked our Defense secretary where this intelligence speculation was coming from about the resale of Patriot missiles, Dick Cheney told him it was classified; that probably meant our Defense Intelligence Agency was too busy spying on Israel to be able to track a slow missile freighter through the Persian Gulf.

Arens offered to take a team of U.S. military men to Israel to count Patriot missiles; he is certain that all the not-very-accurate missiles are there, accounted for. But a State Department man was assigned to do the counting, enabling the Joint Chiefs to scoff at the inspection.

When that specific story is laid to rest, it will be discovered that some component of some Israeli missile or tank contains some U.S. technology that some inspector acting at the behest of Baker, Scowcroft or the Joint Chiefs considers unapproved for re-export.

A loud "A-hah!" will change the subject from the headlines about selling the Patriot — the charge that most offends Americans.

Here is what is going on: We are watching bureaucratic elephants fighting under a huge tarpaulin.

The pro-Israel elephant is part of the technology control establishment at the Pentagon, which fought for decades against accommodating dictators with our most modern arms; their Cocom allies are a handful of State officials at the fringe of policy and a few CIA men who rely on Mossad to fill in gaps in our humint.

The pro-Arab elephant, embarrassed at having supported Iraq before Kuwait, and irritated at criticism of the intelligence blunder that ended the war prematurely, is out to seize control of mid-level policy planning.

It claims Israel took in naive Bill Casey on Iran-Contra, and is now emboldened by serving a president with a lifelong pro-Arab tilt.

This bureaucratic breakout cries out for a profound study of fault lines and old grudges, of prideful Arabist starkers and intimidated supporters of Israel.

But first, let the Pentagon issue an inventory of Patriot missiles in Israel. Let objective media do the on-site inspecting. Reporters can count.

U.S. seems poised for economic recovery, numbers show

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — There are encouraging signs we are beginning to move out of the recession and toward a fragile economic recovery later this year or next year.

Hearst

I use the word "fragile" because if current predictions prove accurate, we may have close to a $400 billion federal budget deficit in fiscal year 1993 unless there are sharp spending cuts and some tax increases.

Nevertheless, there is good economic news for us as Joe Kingsbury-Smith, our Washington National Editor, informed me in the following report:

The Commerce Department announced a few days ago that construction of new homes and apartments soared 9.6 percent in February. It was the biggest one-month gain in a year and reflected higher housing starts than at any time since 1974. With housing costs and mortgage rates lower, new housing is more affordable in most sections of the country.

Factory production had the first rise in three months. The Federal Reserve reported that industrial production, the total output of factories and mines, rose 0.6 percent last month for the first increase since last September.

Nearly half of 490 business executives surveyed in a recent N.Y. Times-CBS News poll believe the nation's sluggish economy is at last beginning to show a favorable trend.

All this will help President Bush win re-election in November. It is also a tribute to the president's wise action in issuing orders in December to speed up the spending of $9.7 billion of federal funds to stimulate the nation's listless economy.

President Bush told a business group in Michigan recently that: "All we seem to hear on the news is gloom and doom, but let's not overlook some of the fundamentals that indicate we are poised, not there yet, but poised for an economic recovery."

Of particular interest are media reports that Japan's economic boom is collapsing and it, too, faces a recession. We should have sympathy for the Japanese people but also be aware that some of the nationalistic fanatics in Tokyo were hoping they could revenge Japan's defeat in World War II by defeating America economically.

A report by Washington Post columnist Robert Samuelson attributed the economic slump in Japan to the bad judgment of the Japanese government in allowing the Bank of Japan to keep interest rates too low between 1985-89. That led to speculative investments. The boom burst last year. Business bankruptcies rose 66 percent. The stock market has plunged to almost half of the peak reached in 1989.

Japan will recover economically because of its advanced technology, the quality of its exports as well as the Japanese workers' discipline and fast, efficient work. Hopefully, however, the Japanese diehards will stop daydreaming about economically defeating the U.S. by taking our foreign markets away from us and undermining our future prosperity by withdrawing their huge assets in this country.

The Feb. 9 issue of the New York Times Book Review devoted its major story to a list of books that contend Japan is out to get us. A book by William S. Dietrich entitled "In the Shadow of the Rising Sun," published last year, claims Japan "threatens our way of life and ultimately our freedoms as much as past dangers from Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union." Far-fetched as these books may be, it is evident we must strive to restore good relations between Japan and the U.S.

Albuquerque set to host NIT and NCAA games

Associated Press

Both major postseason college basketball tournaments arrive at the Pit on the campus of the University of New Mexico this week, first with a second-round NIT game Monday night, a sort of warmup before the NCAA West Regional finals Thursday.

The city of Albuquerque has a major rooting interest for the first event if not for the second.

New Mexico (19-12) takes to its home court Monday night to face Washington State (22-10) as the NIT resumes action at six campus sites.

Also scheduled are Texas Christian (23-10) at Purdue (17-14); Kansas State (16-13) at Notre Dame (15-14); Tennessee (19-14) at Virginia (16-13); Manhattan (24-8) at Rutgers (16-14), and Florida (17-12) at Pittsburgh (18-15).

NIT

The second round concludes Tuesday with Rhode Island (21-9) at Boston College (17-13), and Utah (21-10) at Arizona State (19-13).

Winners advance to the third round Wednesday and Thursday, also at campus arenas. The NIT semifinals will be held Monday, March 30 at New York's Madison Square Garden with the championship Wednesday, April 1.

The Pit is a raucus bunker of a building that is not noted for its impartiality. New Mexico was 15-6 there this season, a record that included victories over three NCAA-bound teams — Miami of Ohio, Texas-El Paso and Brigham Young, and a first-round NIT win over Louisiana Tech.

The record also included a troubling five-game losing streak in the season's first month that began with a two-point loss to Texas Tech and left the Loboes struggling. Once New Mexico snapped out it, though, it won 13 of its last 14 in the Pit, hardly an encouraging prospect for Washington State.

The most recent victory, 90-84 over Louisiana Tech in the NIT opener, was the 300th for New Mexico coach Dave Bliss. Will Scott scored 20 points, his seventh straight game in double figures.

Meanwhile, playing at home in Pullman, Wash., Washington State beat Minnesota 72-70 to advance to the second round. "It wasn't pretty," winning coach Kelvin Sampson said. "The main thing is we found a way to win on a day that we didn't play very well."

If Washington State is concerned about going into the Pit, Texas Christian doesn't worry about hitting the road.

The Horned Frogs won their NIT opener 73-61 over Long Beach State at home, then packed their bags for Purdue, secure in the knowledge that 12 of their 22 regular season wins this season came away from home.

Purdue, which beat Indiana on the final day of the regular Big Ten season to knock the Hoosiers out of a tie for the conference title and probably a No. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament, opened the NIT with an 82-56 home victory over Butler and gets to stay at West Lafayette, Ind., for the second NIT game.

Not as fortunate is Tennessee, sent on the road to Virginia for the next game after opening with a 71-68 victory over Alabama-Birmingham.

Syracuse point total drops

Orangemen face high octane U-Mass today

Associated Press

WORCESTER, Mass. — Is Syracuse, which beat Princeton in the opening round of the NCAA East Regional, becoming the new Tigers of the tournament?

Syracuse, known for first-round draft picks, 20 wins and at least 80 points per game, has won its last four games and bettered 60 points only once.

So, are the sixth-seeded Orangemen, who play third-seeded Massachusetts (29-4) in Sunday's second round, reverting to Princeton's style?

"I don't think so," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said Saturday. "There should be more points scored, that's for sure, maybe in the first half. I expect a quicker pace and a much higher-scoring game."

The Orangemen (22-9), who won the Big East tournament by averaging 60.3 points in three games, beat Princeton 51-43 in the first round, a far cry from Massachusetts' 85-58 blowout of Fordham.

"The Big East tournament scoring was down, but I don't know if both teams played that way or one was able to defend the other," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "Syracuse can play both ways. They can get 94 or 65 and win either way. I don't know which way you'll see, but hopefully we can dictate it some."

The other second-round game Sunday will have second-seeded Kentucky (27-6), which beat Old Dominion 88-69, against No. 10 Iowa State (21-12), which beat North Carolina-Charlotte 76-74.

NCAA East

The winners will meet next weekend in the East Regional semifinals at Philadelphia.

Princeton was the team with the reputation as a tough first-round opponent, but Syracuse showed as much patience as the Tigers and was able to win. It won't be the same kind of game Sunday.

"This will be Syracuse basketball," Orangemen guard Mike Hopkins said. "This will be a good change of pace for us because Princeton was such a different type team. Massachusetts is like Syracuse."

Calipari thinks that may be true on the court, but certainly not off for his Atlantic 10 champions who have won 14 in a row.

"Syracuse goes beyond the Big East," he said, referring to the conference in whose shadow the Atlantic 10 and all others in that region reside. "They are a national program, one of the best with a great coach and great athletes. They are a tournament school. We're here for the first time in 30 years."

Kentucky's wait hasn't been that long, but a three-year absence can seem much longer to a program which has made a record 34 tournament appearances.

The Wildcats broke open the game against Old Dominion (15-15) in the final eight minutes and coach Rick Pitino had two possible explanations why it took so long against the team with the worst record of the 64 in the field.

"When you are a pressing team, you wait for your run," he said. "Against a great team you may never get one, but sooner or later you get one and break the game open.

"Our best games are against the Louisvilles and Indianas. For our best game we have to overachieve. I was very worried about that yesterday. (Iowa State) is different. This is a big-time team."

The Cyclones, who entered the tournament with the worst-ever conference record of an at-large selection (5-9 in the Big Eight), start three juniors and two freshmen.

"If you'd seen us all year, you'd never believe this would happen," Iowa State coach Johnny Orr said. "We pulled out so many great wins against some great teams. It's been exciting to see this team play together and now we'll have to play even better than we've played all season to beat Kentucky."

Orr had one complaint about the tournament — the two-minute timeouts dictated by network television. During the season, timeouts are 90 seconds.

Hakeem sits, Rockets trip

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hakeem Olajuwon, given medical clearance earlier in the day, refused to play and that changed everything for the Houston Rockets and Sacramento Kings.

Sacramento, which snapped a 10-game losing streak at Dallas Friday night, beat the Rockets 100-97.

Olajuwon, who has an injured hamstring, was listed in the halftime boxscore as "refused to suit up."

The hamstring pull occurred Tuesday and Olajuwon didn't play in Thursday's loss to Seattle.

Doctors said that Olajuwon could suit up Saturday night but Olajuwon, dressed in street clothes, watched from the Rockets' bench.

Team physician Dr. Charles Baker said there was no significant evidence of muscle injury to the hamstring, no tear, no hemorrhage, and no swelling.

Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich said he didn't know what was wrong with his star.

"I heard what the doctor said and that's all I know," Tomjanovich said. "We need Hakeem. We have good chemistry when we are healthy."

"He's not refusing to play," Rockets guard Kenny Smith said. "He's hurt and when you're hurt, you can't play in this league. Hakeem wants to play. Only you know how it feels."

Mitch Richmond scored 27 points for Sacramento, including two critical free throws with four seconds left.

Olajuwon's absence figured heavily in the Kings' game plan.

"Without his shot-blocking, we had no fear of going inside," Richmond said. "I don't want to give the idea that we had it easy but we had good drives. It's a worry off your mind."

The Kings led by 16 points late in the second quarter, but the Rockets edged back into contention in the fourth quarter and took a 92-90 lead with 2:45 to play.

With Sacramento leading 98-97, Vernon Maxwell missed a shot and Matt Bullard fouled Richmond, who then made two free throws.

Lionel Simmons scored 21 points for Sacramento and Wayman Tisdale added 16.

Otis Thorpe scored 26 points for Houston and grabbed 17 rebounds. Larry Smith, starting in Olajuwon's place, got 18 rebounds before fouling out with 1:57 left.

Spurs 101, SuperSonics 96

SAN ANTONIO — Rod Strickland scored seven of his 21 points in the final seven minutes Saturday night as San Antonio rallied and beat the Seattle SuperSonics 101-96.

San Antonio has won 16 of 18 home games under interim coach Bob Bass.

Seattle led 88-81 with 7:33 remaining following a basket by Eddie Johnson, but Strickland led a 9-2 run with two baskets and the Spurs tied the score at 90 with 4:33 remaining.

After two free throws by Johnson, Strickland made one of two free throws to cut Seattle's lead to one. Johnson, who had 12 of his game-high 23 points in the fourth quarter, then made an 18-footer for a 94-91 lead.

NBA Roundup

Knicks 105, Heat 88

NEW YORK — Xavier McDaniel led a balanced New York offense with 18 points Saturday night as the Knicks defeated Miami 105-88, their third straight win and the Heat's fourth straight loss.

McDaniel led the Knicks in scoring for just the 11th time this season and snapped Patrick Ewing's seven-game streak in that category. Ewing, who was held to 12 points, half his average, has led New York's offense in 44 of 67 games this season.

The Knicks, winners of eight of their last 11 games, held the opposition to under 100 points for the fourth straight game and for the 15th time in their last 19 outings.

Magic 111, Bulls 108

CHICAGO — Chris Corchiani made a pair of free throw with three seconds left, capping a comeback from a 20-point, fourth-quarter deficit Saturday night as the Orlando Magic beat the Chicago Bulls 111-108.

It was Orlando's first victory in Chicago and only its third in 12 games against the Bulls. The loss, just the fifth in 33 games at home this season, stopped Chicago's eight-game winning streak and prevents the Bulls from winning 70 games.

Clippers 114, Nuggets 87

DENVER — Danny Manning scored eight of his 18 points in a decisive third quarter as the Los Angeles Clippers beat the Denver Nuggets 114-87 Saturday night for their third consecutive victory, all on the road.

Los Angeles led 52-47 at halftime, then pulled away with a 33-15 third quarter. In addition to Manning's spurt, Ken Norman and James Edwards scored six points each in the quarter.

Utah 95, Portland 77

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 22 points and pulled down a game-high 18 rebounds as the Utah Jazz beat the Portland Trail Blazers.

Malone scored 14 second-half points after being held to a single basket in the first half by the double- and triple-teaming Trail Blazers.

Suns 121, Timberwolves 105

PHOENIX — Tim Perry scored three straight baskets late in the fourth quarter to cut off a Minnesota rally Saturday night as the Phoenix Suns sent the Timberwolves to a franchise-record 12th consecutive loss, 121-105.

Couples on track for another win

Associated Press

PGA Nestle

ORLANDO, Fla. — Fred Couples missed his target, and not by a little bit. Big time.

Going into Saturday's third round of the Nestle Invitational, Couples said "71 would be a good number to shoot at."

He beat that goal by eight shots with a 9-under-par 63 and put the tournament in his pocket on the strength of a six-shot lead over the strongest field yet assembled this year.

There's still one round to go in the chase for a $180,000 first prize, but Gene Sauers, the only man within 10 shots of the runaway leader, all but conceded.

"I'll just be playing for second," Sauers said, looking ahead to the formality of the final round Sunday.

"The way Freddie is playing, I'd have to shoot 57 or something to catch him," Sauers said after completing a 65, losing ground despite bettering par by seven shots.

The way Couples is playing, even a 57 might not be good enough. Not since 1981, when Tom Kite put together a string of top-10 finishes, has anyone played so well so long.

In the last nine months, Couples has won four times and been sixth or better in 18 of his last 22 starts around the world.

And it just keeps getting better.

In the last three weeks, for example, Couples won at Los Angeles, was second in the Doral Open and last week lost a playoff in the Honda Classic.

For the year, he's averaging $74,916 a start, and only 68.2 strokes a round.

None of those rounds were any better than Saturday's romp over Arnold Palmer's Bay Hill Club course on what Couples called "a gentle day."

The big-hitting, easy-going Couples had seven birdies and an eagle and wasn't even close to making bogey in one of his career-best efforts.

"A round I'll remember for a long time," Couples said after finishing 54 holes at 199, 17 strokes under par and a tournament record.

"A perfect day," Couples said. He may have been referring to the warm, sunny weather. Or he may have been talking about his round. An example of the quality of his play was the 15th hole, a par-4.

Couples covered the flag with a 6-iron second shot that went over the stick and came to rest in the fringe, about 20 feet from the pin.

He was upset. By his standards, on this day, it was a poor shot. He didn't like it. He frowned and ducked his head and scolded himself.

So he made up for it by dropping the 20-foot putt for birdie, the first of a string of three that put him out of reach of his pursuers.

"I've never had a lead like this before so I don't know what to expect," Couples said.

But then, no one else has had a lead of these dimensions since Jose Maria Olazabal went eight strokes in front after 54 holes of the 1990 World Series of Golf.

Not knowing what to expect in his pairing with Sauers in Sunday's round, Couples said he will "just go out and play like we're tied."

No one else is in it.

Larry Nelson was third alone at 209 — 10 strokes back — after a 70.

Ammaccapane takes lead

LPGA PING

PHOENIX — Defending champion Danielle Ammaccapane fired a 4-under par 69 Saturday to rally past second-round leader Marta Figueras-Dotti and take the third-round lead in the LPGA Standard Register Ping tournament.

The field waited through two rain delays totaling 2½ hours at Moon Valley Country Club.

Figueras-Dotti, 34, shot a 1-under 72 for a three-round total of 8-under par 211, one stroke behind Ammaccapane in the $550,000 event. She took a one-stroke lead over Ammaccapane after a birdie at the 14th hole, but collected two bogeys in the final four holes to lose it.

Ammaccapane, 26, fired a 3-under-par 33 on the front nine, in which she and Figueras-Dotti, playing together in the last group, finished after the second rain delay. Ammaccapane's only career victory was at this tournament last year.

Figueras-Dotti, a nine-year tour veteran, has never won a tournament.

Kristi Albers compiled a 2-under par 71 to finish the third round three strokes behind Ammaccapane.

First-round co-leader Meg Mallon shot a 2-under par 71 to stand four strokes back, tied with Kris Tschetter, who shot a 1-under 72.

First-round co-leader Nancy Scranton, Dottie Mochrie, Alice Ritzman, Vicki Fergon and Dawn Coe trail Ammaccapane by five strokes. The other first-round co-leader, Muffin Spencer-Devlin, shot a 1-over 74 to head a group of six players six strokes off the pace.

Ammaccapane and Figueras-Dotti each made the turn at 8-under par, but Figueras-Dotti took the lead on the 10th hole when she drained a 6-foot birdie putt on the 530-yard par-5. Ammaccapane tied her at 9-under on the 12th when she holed out on a 30-foot chip shot from behind the green.

That marked the defending champion's second hole-out of the day. She employed a sand wedge to do the same on the par-5, 504-yard fourth hole from 50 yards, good for an eagle.

Aaron's hot shooting paces Senior field

Associated Press

ARCO Seniors

INDIAN WELLS, Cal. — Tommy Aaron fired a second consecutive 7-under-par 65 Saturday to take a three-shot lead entering the final round of the Vintage ARCO Invitational seniors golf tounrament.

Aaron, the 1973 Masters champion with two regular PGA Tour victories, is looking for his first ever on the Senior Tour.

Mike Hill's second-round 66 gave him a two day total of 133.

Aaron birdied five of the final six holes at the 6,907-yard Mountain Course.

"It was especially nice to birdie the last two holes," the 55-year-old Aaron said. "It was tougher to play out there today. The wind was blowing pretty good."

Aaron's 25-foot downhill putt at the par-3, 144-yard 17th hole and a 15-foot birdie putt on the par-5, 503-yard 18th were from tough positions.

"At 17 and 18 the putts were fast, and I just wanted to get it started on line," he added. "And I made a poor choice on the last hole.

"I should have layed back with an iron. Instead, I hit in the right rough."

Jim Colbert and Lee Trevino were six shots back after after rounds of 69, a shot ahead of Dale Douglass and two better than defending champion Chi Chi Rodriguez and Simon Hobday.

Dale Douglass shot 67, Rodriguez 68 and Hobday 70.

Hill birdied three fo the first four holes and earned his only bogey at the par-5, 552-yard 9th hole.

"I played well," he said. "But to catch Tommy I'll have to play better."

Douglass started the day with a bogey, but remained in contention with consecutive birdies on Nos. 9, 10 and 11.

"I made some putts today for a change," Douglass said. "I haven't been making the five- and six-footers. I hit the ball low today so the wind wasn't a factor."

Leyland miffed at Bucs' management

Associated Press

BRADENTON, Fla. — Pittsburgh Pirates manager Jim Leyland — who watched John Smiley get traded and Bill Landrum get released — confronted his bosses because he felt they were making moves without his input.

It especially hurt when Smiley — a popular 20-game winner — was dealt Tuesday to the Minnesota Twins.

"It hurt me that I wasn't involved, but that's the way it is," said Leyland, who met Friday with general manager Ted Simmons and Mark Sauer, the team president.

Simmons wouldn't comment on the meeting, saying it was a private matter.

Leyland said he felt better after the discussion.

Leyland said he merely wanted to let Simmons and Sauer know about his concerns.

Bar plan helps bring justice to court system

■ The bar plan sets up a system where attorneys can be placed in a pool for court appointments or be excluded for a fee.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Anyone accused of a crime is constitutionally entitled to legal representation. But imagine being charged with a first-degree felony and appointed an oil and gas attorney who has never tried a criminal case.

A system employed by the local district courts — in the interest of Midland attorneys — helps prevent such a scenario for those who can't afford legal counsel.

Loosely referred to as the Midland County bar plan, local lawyers can be placed in a pool for court appointments or be excluded by paying a $250 annual fee.

Both groups are part of a list of all Midland lawyers. That list is used by judges to select court appointments on a rotating basis. The pool attorneys substitute for the pay-in attorneys, whose fees are divided among the first group.

"It allows people who don't want to take criminal cases help subsidize compensation for those who do to ensure a continuing pool of lawyers interested in taking those cases," said Michael Morgan, who manages the bar plan for the Midland County Bar Association.

Those who don't take part in the plan are required to periodically represent criminal defendants whenever their name comes up in alphabetical sequence.

Midland County pays court appointed attorneys about $40 an hour for out of court work (not including research), $50 to $70 per hour for in-court time, $300 for a felony guilty plea, and a maximum of $1,500 for an appeal to the Court of Appeals.

During the 1991 fiscal year, Midland County paid $325,588 to court appointed attorneys in the three district courts and the lower county courts.

Pool attorneys get a bonus of about 10 percent from the bar plan, Morgan said. The subsidy depends on the number of lawyers who pay into the plan and the amount received from the county.

More than two-thirds of the roughly 300 local attorneys take part in the plan, with about 20 to 30 in the pool. The remainder take court appointments in turn.

"I don't know of another place that operates a system exactly like this," Morgan said.

The majority of Midland attorneys like the plan, Morgan said. Pool attorneys can concentrate on a criminal law specialty and receive bonus compensation. Pay-ins can focus on their practices and contribute to the judicial system with donations.

And the remaining lawyers — who don't want to pay in to the plan — can fulfill their normal ethical responsibility to represent people who can't afford counsel.

"It helps the court, the defendant. It helps everybody," Morgan said.

"(The defendant) gets the benefit of having highly experienced counsel who is eager for the work," he said.

Workshop addresses education challenges

America can invest in early childhood programs now or pay the price later, according to Al Stewart of the Texas Education Agency.

"Legislators should put money into housing preschoolers now, so they don't have to spend money down the line on housing for prisoners," Stewart told 389 attendees at the Saturday workshop "Preparing Future Leaders for Tomorrow."

Teachers from private, public and home schools packed into First Baptist Church early Saturday to hear Stewart's presentation.

The TEA early childhood specialist — in the special education division — was the keynote speaker of the workshop co-sponsored by Creative Schoolhouse and the Texas Department of Human Services.

"We can't put our heads into the sand. We've got to confront the issues," Stewart said. "Despite all the pie charts, graphs and validation, the reality is that the first years of a child's life are very important."

Stewart said educators of young children are challenged with preparing their young charges for an

Trost to run for mayor

Staff Report

Midland restaurateur Michael Trost, candidate for mayor, said his business experience and history of civic involvement make him a good candidate.

Trost

"As a long-time resident and small business owner, I empathize with other small business owners and will respond to their concerns," said Trost, owner of Bayou Wadley restaurant, in a prepared statement.

If elected, Trost wants to improve public safety and law enforcement as well as promote greater cooperation between governmental agencies, he said.

"This is not a partisan political contest," he said. "The mayor must be able to work with all local, state and federal officials of whatever party to solve the problems facing Midland and West Texas."

Trost said he wanted to see a complete budgetary review to insure tax dollars are being spent "appropriately, effectively and wisely."

A member of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Trost has appeared in Midland Community Theater Productions and sung with the Midland-Odessa Sympho-

White announces candidacy

Staff Report

Hugh G. White, who has announced for the Midland City Council, Place 3, said he is running on a platform of "fiscal and economic conservatism."

White

"Midland has to stop this irresponsible practice of taxing and spending so prevalent in our local government," White said. "Although this malaise is epidemic from the Congress down, infecting the Texas Legislature and each of the local taxing entities, efforts to cure it must start locally.

"The recent defeat of the council's attempt to raise the sales tax is a good start," he added. "Now, if we can replace the current tax-and-spend council with fiscal conservatives, the taxpayers of Midland will well be on the way to correcting this situation. It is hypocritical to continue to raise taxes and simultaneously seek to lure industry and retirees to Midland."

He also noted that a better auditing program "is obviously needed in view of the financial irregularities concerning the Loraine Street police building and the airport."

White is a semi-retired consultant with degrees in accounting, computer science and geology.

White, who is married, is a Republican and has been a Midland resident for 34 years. He previously served on the Midland Zoning Board of Adjustment and the Midland County Public Library Advisory Board.

GARY OTT

Did those pants really just walk out of the room?

There is an old saying that mothers have used for years when talking to their children. Invariably it draws a snicker from everyone involved.

The scenario leading up to the wonderfully apt quote goes something like this.

Ott

The kid, generally a young person in his early to mid-teens, will look around his incredibly messy bedroom for a particular object, usually a piece of clothing. He quickly surmises that the item in question cannot be located and so, with nothing left to do, turns to his mom and officially announces that the search is doomed. The desired item has in fact been lost.

The mother, being a wise and worldly individual, will then say, "Well, it didn't get up and walk out of this room on its own."

For years I have sided with the mothers on this question. I have never seen a pair of socks stand up straight and in single file march out of a room to the sound of military music. Ditto for underwear, sweaters, shirts, windbreakers and shoes.

When a piece of clothing comes up missing there is always a logical explanation. Look hard enough and you will find the item in question. Maybe it will be under the bed, or stuffed behind one of the cushions on the couch or perhaps even in the refrigerator, but if you really put your mind to it, you can find it. So don't go whining to mom about mysterious disappearing acts. In the real world, that just doesn't happen.

Until now.

I have lost a pair of pants. Not just any pair of pants, either. No, indeed. These were my favorites . . . a light brown, go with any shirt, snappy-looking when freshly pressed, $40 pair of pants.

For months, I wore them twice a week, often drawing such rave reviews as, "My, Gary, those sure are snappy looking pants you have on."

Now, just like that, poof, they're gone.

What's a man to do? I'll tell you what a man's to do. He panics. Then he looks in every conceivable nook and cranny for his pants, including under the bed, behind the cushions on the couch and in the refrigerator.

Nothing. My pants are no where to be found, though I did locate four shirts under the bed and a pair of high top tennis shoes next to the onion dip in the refrigerator.

Still, my pants are missing.

This can't be. I mean, I'm not Teddy Kennedy. I don't remove my trousers at parties. (OK, I did once, but I put them right back on before anyone saw my legs, and, besides, that was during my drinking days, so it doesn't really count.)

The point is, I'm stone cold sober now and my pants are still missing.

I've searched high and low for them, even leaving a note for the maid that read, "If you find some snappy-looking trousers in the freezer, please defrost, fold and place in top left drawer."

The maid had no luck. She did leave me a note, however, that said, "No pants, but I did find an ugly turtleneck next to that green stuff in the back of your refrigerator. I would have removed it, but the green stuff snapped at me when I made a move in its direction. Does your home insurance cover this kind of injury?"

Who knows? Who cares?

I just want my pants back.

Now, you might be saying, "Oh, Gary, quit whining. It's not that big a deal. Just go buy some more brown pants."

If only it were that simple. But it's not. No indeed. Have you ever had a piece of clothing that just fit perfectly? The kind that would hang precisely the way you wanted it to?

Of course you have. We all have.

And once you find such an article of clothing, you treasure it forever, refusing to part with it under even the most extreme circumstances.

Such is the case with me and my pants. Besides, we had been through so much together. If only those pants could talk. The stories they could tell.

Now they are gone.

Making matters worse, my mother lied to me.

They did get up and walk out of the room. There can be no other explanation.

WORKSHOP: Speaker got audience involved

uncertain future. "In the year 2000, there will be approximately 200 new careers — jobs we haven't even thought of," he said. "We are having to prepare children for something that hasn't even happened."

Stewart — a former Head Start teacher — peppered his talk with humor and garnered laughter from his description of a four-year-old who was considered unmanageable by several teachers. "The very first day he was in my classroom we had to establish who was going to be in control," he said. "From the look on his face I can tell you where he would like to have sent me."

Stewart said that after a few months, the preschooler's behavior changed. "I was consistent. He didn't get away with anything, and he knew I cared."

He said that educators need "to nurture children to prepare them to be leaders."

"They also need to encourage children to be thinkers and problem solvers. This presents a risk because it means the children will even question you. But if you aren't going to give a child a choice, then don't ask for his opinion," he said. "If you ask for his opinion and then ignore it, you are telling him that his thoughts don't matter."

The keynote speaker led several activities requiring audience participation and wrapped up his lecture by interpreting the song "Bless the Beasts and the Children" through sign language.

"If we don't stand up to protect the lives of young children, no one will," he said.

Kathy Clayton, also with the TEA, was the second featured speaker. She spoke on the learning environment, before the lunch break. Following the noon break, workshop participants attended several sessions with early childhood themes.

Emmy Ulmschneider presented a session on "The ABC's of Science." Ms. Ulmschneider, a Midlander with masters degrees in biology and geology, said adults tend to discourage a youngster's interest in science.

"They (children) are naturally interested in science all on their own," she said. "Out in the backyard they turn things over, classify things, put them into their mouth and attempt to discover the world around them."

Ms. Ulmschneider said science is integrated into simple tasks and observation in daily life. "Just getting up in the morning and looking into the mirror to see if you've changed involves a little science," she said.

Other workshop topics included "Tunes for Tots," "Spring into Art," "Storytelling," and "Discipline Tried and True."

Participants could earn six certified training hours in early childhood education.

PLAN: Defendants' special needs are considered

(From 1C)

Judge John Hyde, who presides over the 238th District Court, agreed that the plan works to provide a defendant with an attorney that has expertise in criminal law.

"As a practical matter, the vast majority of appointed counsel are in the pool," Hyde said.

A pool attorney is called up from the list about once a week and a non-pool attorney about twice a year on the average, Hyde said.

Court appointed attorneys are assigned by the presiding judge during criminal arraignments.

"The overwhelming majority are court appointed. Most defendants charged with felonies are financially unable to hire their own attorney," Hyde said.

About 80 percent of such defendants — who can't afford private counsel that may cost a few thousand dollars — are assigned an attorney, Hyde said.

Whether a defendant is financially able to afford an attorney must be decided by the judge.

Hyde said he inquires about whether a defendant works and for how long, and whether they have any property or assets. Sometimes he makes the defendant speak to an attorney to determine financial ability.

Each is assessed on a case by case basis, Hyde said.

"The standard is suppose to be loose enough so no one goes without counsel," he said.

Appointments are not entirely random so as to provide fairness among attorneys and competent representation to defendants, Hyde said.

"I try to equalize the appointments among the pool attorneys," he said.

"I try to appoint the younger attorneys with not much experience to third-degree felonies ... and eventually up to first degree," he added.

Special needs are also considered such as Spanish-speaking defendants being paired with a Spanish-speaking attorney, Hyde said.

Overall, defendants are matched dependent on the alleged crime and an attorney's expertise.

United Way launches program with training sessions

Staff Report

United Way of Midland will be launching the 1992 Ambassadors program with a training session on Tuesday.

The session will start at 9 a.m. in Exxon Building 4 Training Room. The office building is in the complex located at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and A Street.

"Not everyone wants to work in the annual fundraising efforts, but they do like to tell the United Way story to others," said Libby Cheney, Ambassadors chairman and volunteer. She is an Exxon Co. U.S.A., employee. "The Ambassadors program teaches these volunteers about all aspects of United Way and how to tell the story."

The training is open to anyone who is interested in becoming an ambassador, she said. The agenda calls for an overview of United Way, a closer look at Midland Introspective, a discussion of major issues of United Way, "role playing" on how to answer questions, and tours of some agencies.

At the training, ambassadors will be given their assignments. They are asked to visit businesses or other concerns. Not only will the ambassadors be talking about United Way, but also telling the services the 17-member agencies provide, Ms. Cheney said.

For additional information, contact Ms. Cheney at 688-6195, or Lana Cunningham at the United Way office, 682-4358.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

No charges filed

Staff Report

ODESSA — No charges are expected to be filed in the Friday night accident resulting in the death of a 64-year-old pedestrian.

A taxi was traveling southbound in the outside lane of Farm-to-Market Road 1936 about 8 p.m. Friday night when Robert Worth Maves of Odessa stepped in front of the vehicle. Maves was crossing FM 1936 from east to west when he was struck.

He sustained massive head injuries and was pronounced dead on arrival to Medical Memorial Center.

No charges were filed in the incident that was deemed an accident according to Texas Department of Public Safety reports.

Man killed

UPTON COUNTY — An Odessa man was killed Saturday morning when he was struck by a drill collar at a rig site.

Jeffrey Carl, 26, was pronounced dead at 8 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Margaret Robertson. He was working on a rig three miles east of Crane when the accident occurred, according to the Upton County Sheriff's Department.

Pickup accident

ODESSA — Three Odessans were transported to Medical Center Hospital Friday night following a 6 p.m. accident.

Obed Valenzuela, 17, was driving a 1979 Chevrolet pickup at a high rate of speed on U.S. 385 eight miles south of Odessa when the accident occurred.

According to reports from the Texas Department of Public Safety, a passenger in the car opened the right door, distracting Valenzuela. When the driver returned his attention to the road, he swerved left to avoid hitting a truck directly in front of him. The pickup went into a broadside skid into the center median. Valenzuela and his two passengers — Philip Martinez and Rita Villalon, both 18 — were all ejected from the vehicle.

Late Saturday, Valenzuela was reported in stable condition. Martinez had been treated and released, and Villalon was in the intensive care unit reported in critical but stable condition.

None of the pickup's occupants were wearing seat belts, the DPS reported.

ny and Chorale. He was chairman of the Midland Coalition for Environmental Action, the group that planted the Peace Pole in Windlands Park in 1990.

He said the office of mayor would be a chance for him to help Midland emphasize its good qualities.

"I am a person who knows that living on the positive side of life is much more joyful than emphasizing the negative," he said. "I want to utilize the office of mayor to build the community spirit and work toward resolving the problems that divide our community. I want to create a climate for our city to grow and prosper."

MC hosts annual kite flying contest

By H.A. Tuck

The second annual Midland College Kite Flying Contest takes place Monday at 1 p.m. on the large open area just inside the Chaparral Circle behind the flagples. And entrants can only hope that the March breezes are somewhat less than when last year's contest was held ... with gales that would have threatened wings of a Boeing 747.

Tuck

John Edgar, architecture and design instructor, instigated the kite flying event last year and is staying with it again this year. Although many of the kites were demolished upon launching, the designs made the contest worth seeing.

PURPOSE

The purpose of the Midland YMCA 1992 Corporate Cup Challenge is to "Promote health, physical fitness and a sense of community through the spirit of friendly competition." Toward this end, measures are being taken to assure fair and equitable competition for all participants. Specific rules have been developed for each of the events: these rules will be enclosed in your team packet. Eligibility requirements governing the competition are provided below.

ELIGIBILITY

1. Team members must be at least 18 years of age.
2. Team members must be employed by the sponsoring company or agency at the time of the competition or, if laid off, must still be covered under the company's health insurance plan. In addition, contract labor that is on site full time at a facility where they are supplying a required service of that company, may also participate for that company. A written request to the Registration Committee listing these participants must be made.
3. In general assignment of teams to divisions based on the number of employees will be as follows:

Division I	300 and up
Division I	100 - 299
Division III	1 - 99

However, the Corporate Cup Registration Committee will reserve the right to realign the divisions based on the number of teams entered in each.

4. Up to five companies/businesses of the same or similar professions having 25 or less than 25 employees may combine to enter a team. They must make a written request to the Registration Committee in order to be officially entered.
5. In the division categories, spouse participation will be allowed based on the number of company employees. This scale is listed below:

of Employees	# of Spouses
99 - 75	9
74 - 50	14
24 - lower	24

In order to insure participation in the Cup by Division I and II, these teams will be individually evaluated when lacking enough participants of one sex to competitively participate. Rulings allowing additional spouses for these companies and businesses will be made by the Registration Committee and each case treated accordingly upon a written request.

6. Team members must be employed within Midland or one of its reporting district offices.
7. Team members must sign the Midland YMCA Corporate Cup waiver prior to competition; this must be submitted with the team roster.
8. Individuals not employed by a corporation, company or agency may enter the competition provided they form teams as representatives of their professional group(s). Examples are as follows: Midland Medical Society, Midland Bar Association, etc. Groups needing special assistance, may submit a written request.
9. The Midland YMCA Corporate Cup Registration Commitee reserves the right to review all team entries relative to eligibility.

5K Team Run

4 x 100 Sprint

TEAM COMPOSITION

1. A team shall consists of no more than 30 members and no less than 20 members; each team must have identifying uniforms consisting of, at the minimum, matching T-shirts. A 1992 Corporate Cup Challenge t-shirt will be provided to team members prior to the event with the intention that teams will have the backs of these shirts screened with their own logos.
2. Team rosters are due by April 3, 1992. It is assumed that each team's roster is final as of that date. Rosters must be typed and all information included. Failure to do so may result in ineligibility for those events.
3. Each team member may participate in up to five events. The Banner and Spirit events will not be counted as part of these five events as we would like everyone to partcipate in these two.
4. Corporations that enter more than one team may not share or cross-enter members between teams. Each team scores its own points. No points will be shared or split.
5. Protests affecting the eligibility of any team member to compete or represent any agency, company or corporation in any event shall be made in writing to the Corporate Cup Registration Committee before the event is held.

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:

★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you do not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases ... even more!

➥ OK ... but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday - Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

An initial $100 deposit is required.

Feast your eyes on this charming, custom-built, patio-concept home. A beautifully landscaped front presents a lovely face to the world with its raised flowerbeds, mature trees. Count among them a peach tree, plum tree, two pecans, five live oaks and many yupons. A covered entryway boasts yet another flower bed, with full-grown trees.

Open the door and find a delightful entryway, papered with jaunty grasscloth. To the right lies an enormous living area. Windows line the front wall. The facing wall is also windowed and has a door that opens to a covered courtyard. A brick wall is situated on the left — a raised fireplace is nestled within it.

To the far right of the living area stands an exquisite formal dining room, with delightful built-in glass shadow-box shelves and a linen/dish/servingware closet all its own.

To the left a cheery breakfast area, then a huge country kitchen with two bars. It also boasts a large pantry, sizeable lazy susan, pull-out and adjustable shelves and doughboard. Appliances include Jennaire convection-conventional oven, dishwasher, compactor and ceiling fan.

Behind the kitchen is a truly workable utility room with sink, cabinets, broom closet, out-of-season closet and space enough for a freezer or refrigerator.

Continue toward the back of the house to a three-quarter bath with oversize shower with bench.

Starting once again from the foyer, but turning left, one finds first a delightful, sunny guest room. Continuing down the hall a built in cabinet, with shelves to the right and a verdant, luxurious bath to the left.

The bath's focal point is an atrium — plants and trees rise to a skylight that opens. A floor-to-ceiling mirror reflects light and greenery.

A little farther down the hallway, to the right, find another sizeable bedroom. Then there's an expansive master bedroom. Lots of windows allow streams of light to bounce in. To one side, a door opens on a luxurious master bath with glorious oval sunken tub, long vanity with sink, tons of mirrors and built-ins and a large walk-in closet.

Step onto the courtyard for a few more delightful surprises. A gazebo for warm-weather enjoyment. A separate 17-foot-by-26-foot workshop/storage area. A two-car garage that offers still more storage. And a detached 8- by 22-foot workshop.

Other amenities include double-paned, wood-cased windows throughout, ceiling fans in bedrooms, central vacuum system and humidifier. Also block fence, garage-door opener, sprinkler system and paved alley.

The home is being offered by Langston Realtors at the recently reduced price of $99,900.

This home will be open from 2 to 4 p.m. today. Call 682-9495 for information.

Be sure the price is right when selling your home

Kelly

Setting a proper price for selling your home is an important step for homeowners who are preparing to put their home on the current real estate market.

"Underprice your home and you will lose money. Overprice the home and you may very well scare away potential buyers as well as make it difficult or impossible for a buyer to get the necessary financing," says Dene Kelly, President of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors.

She also said that today's home buyer is looking for value — that is, the best house for the price. "Setting the lowest price may not always be in the best interest of the seller, though. A lower priced home may be perceived by some potential buyers as not being as well built or not located in as desirable an area as a higher priced one," she said.

Dene Kelly Realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, headquartered in Chicago. The RELO network has approximately 1,400 member companies and provides transfer-related real estate services, including rental and commercial real estate services, to meet the relocation needs of transferees and their corporations in the U.S., Canada and other countries. RELO is the largest independent real estate network in the country.

"Home seller should consult several sources before implementing a marketing plan for the sale of their home. This will ensure the price is in the best interest of the seller," Kelly said.

She added that a reputable real estate broker is one of the best sources when investigating the current price of comparable homes. "Dene Kelly Realtors agents are a great resource because they are familiar with your community from having worked with other area homesellers in the past," Kelly said.

Local title insurance companies represent another source for help in home pricing. They often have listings of comparable home sales. Kelly said, "Be sure to check fees when seeking the services of title companies. Some do not charge, while others may charge a fee for the information they provide."

If you would rather not price the home yourself, you could also consider hiring an appraiser, Kelly said. Appraisers' fee can vary widely, depending on the one you select, the size of the home and the scope of the services being performed.

"Once you have established a fair market price, you might want to add a small margin, such as 3 to 5 percent, for negotiations," she said.

Kelly also said that the key to arriving at an asking price is to be as sure as possible that this price is realistic in today's housing market — considering your particular home, its condition, amenities and the community in which you live.

Don Harvey, Realtors reaps harvest of national awards

Bruce Wallin, vice president, general manager of PHH Network Services (left) presents Kim Young with the VP Relocation Award and Don Harvey with the Relocation Dept. Award at HFC's annual national conference.

Orlando, Fla. was the chosen location for the Homequity Relocation Center (HRC) National Conference hosted March 12 through 15. This was the latest in the series of annual conferences sponsored by PHH Homequity Corporation for its national network of brokers. As the leading broker network in the nation, the Homequity affiliation now boasts 44 of the nation's top 100 brokers; 325 leading, market-dominant real estate companies with 50,000 sales associates in 1,800 offices handling in excess of $75 billion in residential real estate annually.

The theme of the conference was "Together We're Magic!" It was quite appropriate considering recent Homequity accomplishments as well as the setting for the conference itself — The Walt Disney World Resort. The conference also lived up to its magic theme for Don Harvey, owner and president of Don Harvey, Realtors in Midland.

At the awards ceremony, Harvey spent almost as much time on stage as he spent in the audience. He received a multitude of verbal accolades in addition to the following awards:

■ Cost and Service Award. This award recognizes companies who have provided excellent management and have demonstrated a high level of teamwork together with PHH Homequity to address the specific needs of Homequity clients and their transferring employees.

■ Circle of Excellence. This award recognizes those companies that have met or exceeded their outgoing referral goals during the calendar year.

■ Three Star Circle of Excellence. This award recognizes companies that have achieved their outgoing referral closing objective for the calendar year.

■ Five Star Circle of Excellence. Recognizes companies that have attained the highest combined rate of closings as compared to opportunities.

■ Achievers Club. Companies who have met or exceeded both their outgoing referral standard as well as their individual outgoing closing target.

The winners of the Achievers Club will meet in St. Petersburg, Fla. at the Don Cesar Hotel in May in order to exchange and share successful marketing tools and strategies. Only 10 brokers nationwide qualified for the Achievers Club. Kim Young, director of relocation and business development, will be representing Don Harvey, Realtors at this year's meeting.

This is the second year they've won this award.

"The recognition and awards are great in and of themselves," Harvey said. "Yet, in consideration of the high quality and caliber of all the members of our broker network, these awards are even that much more special. To have reached a level of accomplishment worthy of such recognition in this elite group is almost like what winning an Oscar or a Grammy must be for an entertainer — or about five holes-in-one in a row for an avid golfer.

"But, just as our company is a part of the total team that has helped make the Homequity broker network successful, our Midland based company itself is so successful because of the quality of and contribution by the associates and employees that make up and support the Don Harvey team.

PHH Homequity is the largest third-party relocation company and provides services world-wide for its clients. Don Harvey, Realtors is the HRC broker for Midland.

BRIEFING

1992 Blow Out

The Mobil cooking team above relaxes at the 1991 PBPA Blow Out. The event this year is expected to draw even more cooking teams, according to Harry Spannaus, executive vice president. A story on the 1992 Blow Out and Energy Appreciation Week is found inside.

Executive pay

How much is that vice president of production worth? With corporate America under attack for overcompensation of executives, KMPG Peat Marwick is offering a special, confidential CEO HOTLINE for oil companies and other public corporations in Texas. The purpose of the line is to advise the CEO on matters of executive compensation. The number for the free service, which can be dialed 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and Saturday from 8 a.m. to 12 noon is (713) 221-0186.

Rig Count

The U.S. rig count dropped 11 to 649, for a new record low. The Permian Basin rig count stood at 95, down two for the week of March 13. The previous record low for the U.S. was 663, set at the end of January 1992.

Please see MAP/2E

Oil prices

An aerial view of a lonely well pumping away. Oil prices rose above the $19 mark this week, the highest since February. The posted price averaged $18 for the week.

Crude purchasers say they are now setting different tiers for posted prices in an attempt to narrow the gap between the spot and posted price.

The multi-tier pricing began last week with Phillips and has now spread to other crude oil purchasers.

Please see GRAPH/2E

Land sale

The Bureau of Land Management will hold its next oil and gas lease sale in Santa Fe, April 22.

The sale will include 99 New Mexico parcels, 21 in Texas and 9 in Oklahoma. Copies of the sale notice are available from the BLM office by calling (505) 988-6000.

ENERGY POLICY

Bush details policy

■ President Bush responds to a list of energy questions drafted by Permian Basin oilmen.

Staff Report

In January 1992, the Permian Basin Petroleum Association formulated a list of questions regarding the plight of the oil industry and sent it to all the presidential candidates of both parties.

Bush

To date only one, President George Bush, has responded with answers. "This is a new policy with PBPA, said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president. "We are hoping that all of our members will agree to not support any candidate at the federal or state level, of either party who does not respond with positive answers and plans for getting the oil industry out of its desperate state.

"We are tired of vague promises. We want definite answers we can evaluate," said Spannaus. Following are the oil groups questions and President Bush's response:

PBPA — Is it desirable to develop and produce domestic energy resources rather than to rely on imports?
BUSH — Yes, and one year ago I sent Congress a National Energy Strategy (NES) that included a number of steps to stimulate production of our domestic energy reserves, to increase energy efficiency and to promote energy conservation and the use of alternative fuels. I am pleased that the Senate recently passed legislation based on my NES, except that the Senate billdoes not provide authority to develop the small portion of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge that is the best hope for recovering a new giant U.S. oil field. I will keep the pressure on until Congress approves balanced, comprehensive energy legislation.

PBPA — What are your proposals to restore the domestic oil and gas industry to high levels of exploration and development?
BUSH — With respect to oil, I was pleased to sign into law a 15 percent tax credit for new or significantly expanded enhanced oil recovery projects. The Department of the Interior will issue a new five-year offshore oil and natural gas program later this spring that, consistent with our shared concern for the environment, will offer promising areas for resource exploration and development. The Department of the Interior has just announced that it will shortly issue a rule reducing the royalty rate for stripper wells on federallands from 12.5 percent to as low as .5 percent, depending on production volume, to extend the productive life of thousands of wells on federal lands.

In addition, I am asking Congress to approve $47 million this year alone to develop and demonstrate advanced oil

1992 SIPES ANNUAL CONVENTION

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Advances in horizontal drilling — as shown by this control panel used in short radius horizontal drilling — will be among the topics covered during technical sessions at the SIPES convention.

SIPES papers cover many topics

■ One of the highlights of this week's SIPES national convention will be the technical sessions, which cover a wide range of topics.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The Midland chapter, Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists, will host the organization's national convention Wednesday through Friday at the Midland Hilton.

Among the activities will be an exhibit hall, visits to area ranches — including the Yellow Rose ostrich ranch — and the Petroleum Museum as well as seminars by the SIPES Foundation on computes, Indian Rock Art and Genealogy. Activities for the spouses include trips to the Museum of the Southwest, a tour of historic Midland and a lunch and style show.

Guest speakers will be Gene Ames Jr. of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, who will speak on "The Independent's Voice on Capital Hill." He will speak at the All Members Luncheon Friday.

Keynote speaker at the Awards Banquet Friday evening will be T.B. O'Brien, who coordinated the well firefighting efforts in Kuwait last year. O'Brien will speak on "Kuwait Come Back to Life."

The convention concludes with an optional three-day field trip through Big Bend country and the Chihuahan Desert. The trip includes two nights at Lajitas and travelers will return to Midland Monday afternoon.

One of the highlights of the convention will be the technical sessions, which begin at 8 a.m. Thursday with registration and opening remarks.

The first presentation will be from 8:05 to 8:35 a.m. and is by Gerry G. Calhoun, who will give "Fluorescence Signatures in Geochemical Evaluation Research." He states that "Fluorescence analysis of soil samples proved effective in predicting the outcome of wildcats in the Geochem Research Team effort.

Fluorescence spectra from 255 to 530 nm from produced oils match soil analysis to a high degree. There is a good concidence between source rocks and surface samples, as well. If

Road blocks stalling recovery

■ SIPES speaker says the near-collapse of the oil industry poses a national emergency.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

The domestic oil industry, which is in danger of collapse, could be made strong and viable again, if only the federal government would remove the road blocks leading to recovery, says the chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

Eugene L. Ames Jr., 58, president of Venus Oil Co. of San Antonio said that is the message he and the IPAA are trying to get across in Washington.

"It is a matter of a national emergency to have an industry of this magnitude on the verge of collapse," said Ames, who will speak at the annual convention of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists (SIPES) which begins March 25 in Midland. His topic will be: "The Independent's Voice on Capitol Hill."

"One thing we have to do on Capitol Hill," said Ames, "is dispel the myth that there is no more oil and gas left to be found in the U.S. There is lots of oil and gas to be found yet, particularly in areas like the Permian Basin."

Ames said he agreed with William Fisher, director of the Bureau of Economic Geology at the University of Texas, that there is at least 100 billion barrels of oil and 1000 trillion cubic feet of natural gas to still be found in the U.S.

He said it was a myth that was hard to dispel, but nonetheless there seems to be a growing concern for

Oil enemies: Are they real or imaginary

Pitts

Lick your finger, hold it up and you will notice the political mood is blowing a different direction these days.

The quiet desperation of the silent majority is becoming louder. Tepid discontent with the political system is turning to a stew of outrage, and term limitation bills abound across the nation. "Throw-the-bums-out" has become the rallying cry for a bonafide national movement.

That negative mood, if anything, is even more intense in the oilpatch, where the domestic oil industry has not had a political victory in more decades than anyone cares to remember.

One oilman put it bluntly: "We have to stop electing political whores who will crawl in bed with our political enemies."

"We have to stop sending people to Washington that come back to Midland and tell us it is politically impossible — that we will have to settle for another winless compromise. I have heard that all my life," said Dick Beveridge, a Midland oilman.

Gene Ames, agrees that the compromise game has not gone well for the oilpatch. "We have to stand our ground, let them know our bottom line and not settle for anything less."

"There is little question that the "fed-up" mood in the oil industry is getting stronger everyday," said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association. The association is now trying to extract firm energy answers from politicans before pledging funds or support.

There is even talk of political coalitions to pour it back on the traditional political enemies of oil and gas. It is the talk of desperate men in desperate times, willing to take desperate measures.

With an industry on the verge of collapse, many are saying its time to counter attack and take it to our enemies. But are there really enemies of oil? Or it is just pumped up paranoia and rhetoric on the part of the oil industry?

Who are these enemies? Legend has it that for the most part they are from the North and Northeast. They are liberal and they are Democrats. True or false? Let's take the last energy vote.

When the U.S. Chamber of Commerce released, recently, its tally of how U.S. senators voted on key issues. One of the issues analyzed was the November 1991 vote to limit debate on the National Energy Stategy.

By voting 50 to 44 not to limit debate, the senators prevented the NES, which would have allowed for drilling in ANWAR, from being considered by the full Senate and effectively killed it.

Just for fun, before I read through the list of states and how they voted against the original NES, I made my own list. I wrote: Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Delaware, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Wisconsin, Minnesota. Then I looked to see how each of these states which have been "suspected" of being against oil voted.

To no one's surprise, including mine, I found that in nine of the 16 states both senators voted against debate on NES, and five others split their vote. Only Indiana's two Republican senators voted to send the bill to the floor.

BUSH: Tells energy plan

strate advanced oil recovery technologies that can keep marginal fields in operation and maximize the amount of oil that can be recovered from domestic reservoirs, to open up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge and selected areas of the Outer Continental Shelf to exploration and development.

With respect to natural gas, I well recognize that natural gas is vital to our energy future, and in the National Energy Strategy I announced last year I proposed a series of initiatives to spur its development and use.

I asked Congress to repeal outmoded and inefficient regulations that hamper gas producers, to streamline the procedures for approving the construction of gas pipelines, to reform the way rates for gas pipelines are designed, and to provide gas producers with better access to natural gas pipeline transportation services.

In addition, pursuant to the government-wide regulatory review I announced during my State of the Union address in January, the federal agencies with jurisdiction over natural gas matters are actively looking for ways to reduce the burdens of government on the gas industry.

In particular I have just announced steps to improve both economic conditions in the natural gas industry and reduce utility rates to consumers. These include removing regulatory barriers to the use of gas by electric utilities, and removing regulatory barriers that prevent increased usage of natural gas vehicles.

In this year's budget I am seeking more than $108 million for research and development related to the production, distribution, storage and end-use of gas. The Department of Energy just sponsored a conference on state regulation of natural gas markets to identify state laws impeding the efficient use of gas as an energy resource.

PBPA — What are your proposals to reduce the extreme price volatility which has decimated the domestic petroleum industry?

BUSH — Sudden changes in the tax laws or in the regulations governing the production and distribution of oil and gas can exacerbate the normal fluctuations in prce that result from changes in supply and demand conditions. I know from my own experience that conditions in the marketplace are already uncertain. As a result, throughout my administration I have worked to create a stable investment climate not only for the petroleum industry but for all industries. I want to increase investment across the board, for that will create jobs and economic growth.

PBPA — What are your proposals to create incentives to prevent premature abandonment of marginalwells which make up approximately 35 percent of daily domestic production?

BUSH — As I have already indicated, the Department of the Interior will shortly issue a new rule reducing the royalty rate for stripper wells on federal lands. It's estimated that this alone could increase domestic production by 4.7 million barrels.

In addition, at my direction, the Department of Commerce has issued export licenses to producers of heavy crudes in California. Without the ability to export this oil, some California production would have had to have been shut down. Moreover, the Department of Energy will cofinance a number of projects this year where advanced oil recovery techniques will be tested on the wells and reservoirs most likely to be abandoned.

Finally, I am in favor of changing the alternative minimum tax treatment of intangible drilling costs as they apply to independent oil and gas producers.

PBPA — What are your proposals to limit or reduce petroleum imports? To disallow oil and product importation from countries hostile to the United States or who participate in or endorse terrorism?

BUSH — One of the principal objectives of my National Energy Strategy is to reduce U.S. vulnerability to oil supply disruptions.

Accordingly, my administration has called for increasing domestic oil supplies by development and use of advanced oil recovery technology in order to provide access to 300 billion barrels of domestic oil that is unrecoverable using conventional methods; we have and will continue to call on Congress to allow exploration and development of ANWR and selected areas of the OCS under strict environmental safeguards; and we have completed expansion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve storage capacity to 750 million barrels of oil.

PBPA — What are your proposals to limit exploration and development disincentives such as the alternative minimum tax?

BUSH — I remain concerned about the continuing low level of domestic drilling activity. This trend could weaken our energy security by reducing our nation's oil and gas reserves and making us more dependent on imported oil. This, of course, is flatly contrary to the goal I set out in my National Energy Stragegy.

One of the reasons why drilling is off is the impact of the alternative minimum tax on independents. The way intangible drilling costs are treated can deter producers from undertaking projects that would otherwide be attractive. As a result, I support action to reform the alternative minimum tax treatment of intangible drilling costs.

PBPA — What are your proposals to encourage the use of natural gas and to find and develop new reserves for natural gas?

BUSH — My National Energy Strategy contains a series of initiatives to stimulate the production and consumption of natural gas and streamline the rules for building new pipelines, transporting and storing it.

Some of the most promising areas for significant new natural gas discoveries are located offshore, and they will be included in the five-year leasing program being developed by the Department of the Interior.

As part of my 90-day regulatory relief initiative, I announced several steps my administration is taking to improve economic conditions in the natural gas industry and, at the same time, reduce utility rates to American consumers. These actions are outlined in my NES and include the removal of regulatory barriers that impede the use of natural gas by electric utilities through the final so-called "WEPCo" rule and incentive regulation for electric utilities and natural gas pipelines. When fully implemented, incentive regulations should ultimately reduce total electricity and natural gas transportation costs by $1 to 3 billion per year.

My administration is also working toward the removal of regulatory barriers that prevent increased usage of natural gas vehicles such as issuing emission standards for these vehicles and removing regulatory barriers to the sale of compressed natural gas.

Transportation remains one sector of our economy where technology limits the use of gas. In my budget for 1993 I have asked Congress to support research and development on work that would permit the greater use of gas in the transportation sector. I have also directed federal departments and agencies to aggressively purchase natural gas-powered vehicles for the federal fleet and support local transit authorities to acquire gas-powered buses. We now have 675 CNG vehicles in the federal fleet. With federal support another 800 buses and trucks have been purchased by state and local authorities.

Other policies I have pursued as president will open up new markets for natural gas. The North American Free Trade Agreement we are negotiating will provide greater opportunities for a vibrant North American natural gas market. The Clean Air law I signed in 1990 puts the emphasis on clean-burning fuels and should provide many new opportunities for gas.

PBPA — What are your proposals to provide a sensible approach to environmental issues so as to obtain a balance between production, protection and preservation?

BUSH — Protection of the environment and the conservation and wide management of our natural resources has a high priority on my domestic agenda.

We can preserve and protect our nation's environment while enhancing the energy security of the United States. America today relies too much on imported oil. My National Energy Strategy seeks to strike a balance between the need to preserve our environment and the need to improve our energy security.

the oils in a multipay prospect are distinct enough, an estimate can be made as to which oil is trapped and fingerpriting in surface samples."

Calhoun is president of New Paradigm Exploration Co. in Midland. His experience includes employment with Exxon Co. U.S.A., Texaco Inc., Bruno Hanson and Pennzoil Exploration and Production Co.

Bartley

Following the presentation and discussion, Jerald Bartley will present "Exploration Using Satellite Imagery" from 8:45 to 9:15. He will discuss the source and make-up of satellite images, explain why satellite images are preferable to aerial photos in relative exploration for oil and gas accumulations, discuss image patterns and their relation to accumulations of hydrocarbons and other gases in the subsurface and also explain why and how subsurface hydrocarbons and other gases can be detected on satellite images.

Bartley is an independent oil operator and owner of Satellite Imagery Exploration for Oil and Gas in Midland.

Philip H. Stark of Petroleum Information in Denver will present a "Status of Horizontal Drilling" from 9:25 a.m. to 9:55 a.m.

He noted that U.S. horizontal drilling activity, spurred by success in the Austin Chalk and Bakken Shale, increased throughout 1989 and 1990 before peaking at 120 completions in January 1991. Horizontal drilling declined thereafter, setting at about 80 completions per month in mid-1991.

Despite the setbacks, Stark said, the Austin and Bakken continue to yield good results for leading operatiors. And during the past year, horizontal technology was applied to many additional reservoirs, identifying several promising new plays.

Continued horizontal drilling successes in the Austin and Bakken and establishment of new plays indicate current levels of activity will continue in 1992. Increased oil and gas prices and elimination of tax disincentives probably will be required to stimulate renewed growth in horizontal drilling activity.

Following discussion and a break for coffee and refreshments, Howell Pardue and Steve Blaylock of Dawson Geophysical Co. in Midland will present "Use of 3-D Seismic Data by Independents."

The two will offer a case history of a 3-D survey in the Pinnacle Reef Trend in Scurry County to show that 3-D seismic surveys are both economically and technically viable today.

Design considerations will be explained in detail from both theoretical and practical points of view and processing flows and concepts will be discussed.

Pardue is vice president and processing manager at Dawson and has 30 years experience in processing seismic data. Blaylock joined Pennzoil as a geophysicist after graduating from Baylor University in 1970.

After spending a year with Hamilton Brothers, he became a consulting geophysicist in 1978 and continues in that occupation.

The final presentation of the day will be from 10:55 a.m. to 11:25 a.m. and will be by Cole S. Patterson, a financial analyst for Rod A. MacLean. He will speak on "Raising Capital for Exploration."

Patterson noted that while American capital markets are virtually dead as far as oil and gas projects are concerned, European markets are interested in funding high quality ventures and will provide an overview of various European avenues of financing.

Friday morning, technical presentations will resume at 8:15 a.m. with a presentation by Walter Ayers Jr. on "Coalbed Methane Resources." According to Ayers, coalbed methane resources in the U.S. are estimated to be 400 trillion cubic feet, and recoverable gas may be as great as 90 Tcf.

Annual production of coalbed methane was less than one billion cubic feet in 1981 and rose to approximately 200 Bcf in 1990. By 1994, coalbed methane production will most likely reach 1 Tcf or approximately 5 percent of the nation's gas supply.

The San Juan Basin is the largest producer of coalbed methane in the nation.

Ayers is a senior exploration geologist with Taurus Exploration Inc. in Birmingham, Ala. He holds a doctorate in geology from the University of Texas at Austin.

Harris

From 8:55 a.m. to 9:25 a.m., Kirk Harris will present "New Completion and Stimulation Techniques." He will concentrate on the use of ultrafine cement, noting that ultrafine cement was recently introduced in oilfield remedial operations, and is increasingly being used in various cementing applications in place of conventional American Petroleum Institute cements.

Harris' presentation will give an overview of the many uses of ultrafine cement and includes several case histories. The overall success rate has been astoundingly high and its impact has been dramatic. The new technology is now being used around the world to solve both common and unique remedial problems.

Following discussion of Harris' presentation and a coffee break, Hans Hansen will moderate a roundtable discussion on "Environmental Laws as they Impact the Independent Operator." Speakers include Arthur J. Pyron and Corby Considine.

which would have allowed for drilling in ANWAR, from being considered by the full Senate and effectively killed it.

Just for fun, before I read through the list of states and how they voted against the original NES, I made my own list. I wrote: Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Delaware, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Wisconsin, Minnesota. Then I looked to see how each of these states which have been "suspected" of being against oil voted.

To no one's surprise, including mine, I found that in nine of the 16 states both senators voted against debate on NES, and five others split their vote. Only Indiana's two Republican senators voted to send the bill to the floor.

Of the possible 32 votes, 22 voted against a strong energy policy, eight voted yes and two did not vote. Of the 22 "no" votes 18 were Democrats.

That, however, is only one vote on one issue, and not conclusive evidence of an enemy conspiracy. But look at the historical record.

■ The oil industry is the most regulated industry in the nation, and nearly all the regulations have negative value in that they discourage rather than encourage oil and gas production.

■ In the last three decades, Congress has not passed a single, solid piece of legislation that offered incentives to producers to produce more oil. The oil industry, in the meantime, has come to measure its success by how few punitive bills Congress imposes on it.

■ The only time Congress has ever voted favorably for the oil industry was to repeal punitive legislation such as Windfall Profits Tax and Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

■ Because of continuing hostile legislation, the oil industry expends an inordinate amount of time and resources fending off political attacks from its political enemies.

■ Texas or the oil industry has never had a friend or political ally from any of the above states. Moreover, they are home to some of our most notorious enemies. Mention the name Kennedy (Massachusetts), Rostenkowski (Illinois), Dingle (Michigan) and Metzenbaum (Ohio) in the oilpatch and it's like waving a red flag in front of a bull. These avowed oil haters have made a sport of "putting it on Texas and the oil industry."

Put it all together and the evidence is pretty conclusive.

The answer: Yes, the oil industry does have real and committed enemies in Congress. Yes, they have imposed incredible hardship on the industry, and continue to beat on oil even as it is on its knees. "The oil bashing of today has not changed in 25 years," says Buddy Sipes.

When one looks at the record the answer is pretty obvious. There is a devoted band of political enemies that will seize any opportunity to render political punishment on the oil industry. It doesn't matter how right the cause, how clear the logic, or how desperate the situation, when it involves a yea or nay, they will vote against oil every time — even if it means the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. Even if it means putting the security of the nation in the grips of treachery.

The question: How much longer can the industry take this "business-as- usual" politics before it decides to fight back. How many more compromises can it take before it decides to take off the gloves and take some nose-breaking politics to our enemies. There are ways to fight back and desperate men will find them when they get mad enough.

John Paul Pitts is business/oil editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

the plight of the oil industry, from Congress, the administration and all the presidential candidates. "In the last three to four weeks we have seen more expression of concern on part of government leaders than in last five years. They are finally beginning to act like they care about the future of this industry, but what we need now is action."

He said the ailing industry needs action immediately to remove all the regulatory barriers preventing revitalization of the oil industry. Chief among the barriers, is the Alternative Minimum Tax, which he said penalizes drilling as discourages investment in the industry.

Ames said this lack of capital prevents independent oilmen from being exploring for new reserves or developing reserves already discovered.

"The pull-out of the major oil companies offers a great opportunity for independent oilmen today, but the lack of capital is spoiling that opportunity," he said.

The University of Texas geology graduate said capital was not moving into the industry, because there was a perception on the part of the capital markets that things "are not going to get better." He added that removal of AMT would be a signal that things are getting better.

"We are getting some very encouraging words from the politicians about the removal of the AMT, but we need action," he said.

Energy industry lobbying brings tax relief proposals

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — With energy legislation moving slowly through Congress, independent energy producers and environmentalists have focused on this year's tax bills to win policy decisions. So far, the producers seem to be coming out ahead.

The success of the independent producers, who won the inclusion of an $800 million tax credit over five years in the Senate tax bill, reflects in part intensive lobbying aimed at the White House.

On Capitol Hill, influential members of the Senate Finance Committee, from its chairman, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, to John B. Breaux, D-La., and David L. Boren, D-Okla., represent states in which drilling is important.

By contrast, environmental groups, who gathered less than $150 million worth of tax credits over five years in the Senate bill, never agreed on a common goal and failed to mount an intensive lobbying effort.

"There was some, but it was not well focused or well designed," said Sen. James M. Jeffords, R-Vt., referring to the lobbying by groups advocating conservation and alternative energy sources.

Even so, the tax bills that House and Senate negotiators will take up Wednesda include nearly $50 million for an increase in the tax credit — to $60 a month per employee from $21 a month — for companies providing mass transit subsidies to employees. The cost would be covered by a cap on tax credits for companies that subsidize employee parking.

The Senate bill also includes $100 million for the extension of an existing tax credit for solar and geothermal power.

Senior legislators from the House and Senate on Tuesday scheduled meetings to begin at 5 p.m. Wednesday to work out differences between the two chambers' tax bills.

Environmentalists know the people who work on congressional committees concerned with environmental regulations, but they do not know the staffs of the tax-writing committees and were slow to lobby them this year, said Dawn M. Erlandson, a lobbyist with Friends of the Earth, a Washington-based group.

"We were there, but we haven't been there for the last 10 months in force, like the environmental community was on the energy bill, for example," she said.

Neither the energy bill passed by the Senate last month nor the one that the House Energy and Commerce Committee sent to the House floor last week require automakers to make more fuel-efficient cars, a provision conservation groups had promoted. But neither measure opens the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to drilling, a step environmentalists had bitterly opposed.

The broad measures in the energy legislation, which is expected to arrive on President Bush's desk before Election Day, are concentrated on regulation of the electric power industry.

Tax policy becomes energy policy because the United States, like many countries, uses its tax system to nudge companies and individuals toward some industries and away from others. The House bill contains $89 billion worth of tax credits over six years, nearly $50 million of which involve energy. The Senate measure has $71 billion worth over five years, $1 billion of which are energy-related.

On the tax front, the oil and gas industry's biggest break came last fall before the House and Senate measures were even drafted. Neither chamber seriously considered an increase in the gasoline tax, which would have been needed to pay for any significant energy policy changes.

"Had we put a gasoline tax in, we would have lost all the Southern oil-producing states" in votes on the tax bill, said Rep. Robert T. Matsui, a California Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee.

Oil and gas producers received their next break in the Senate Finance Committee, which produced a tax bill allowing most small-and medium-sized producers to write off more drilling expenses against the alternative minimum tax, to which both corporate and independent producers are often subject.

The alternative tax is intended to make everyone with substantial income pay some tax by denying some tax breaks that are allowed under the regular tax system. The producers had asserted that their limited ability to claim drilling expenses had deterred exploration.

The producers acknowledge that one of their biggest political liabilities lies in their image as a collection of wealthy speculators like the J.R. Ewing character in the television program "Dallas." Lobbyists and lawmakers from oil states worked hard to portray the producers as a group of highly educated, technologically adept professionals laid low by a slump in gasoline prices and unfair tax policies.

Obviously, the image of J.R. Ewing is not correct if half of them have gone out of business since 1986," said Boren, who insisted on inclusion of the producers' tax credit.

Eugene L. Ames, the president of Venus Oil Co., a 25-employee natural gas exploration and production company in San Antonio, said that the tax credit would allow him to hire four or five more workers and drill several more wells.

"There's a big multiplier," he said, "because there are 5,000 guys out there like me."

PBPA gearing up for annual Blow Out

By Melia McEwen

Late April will bring the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's sixth annual Energy Appreciation Week, set for April 26-May 2.

The highlight of the week will be the Energy Appreciation Luncheon at the Holiday Inn Country Villa. Keynote speaker will be Charles J. DiBona, president, of the American Petroleum Institute.

The API is the energy industry's largest association with over 200 corporate and 5,000 individual members representing all segments of the industry.

DiBona joined API in 1974 after serving as a special consultant to the President and deputy director of the White House's Energy Policy Office. Before that, he was president and chief executive officer of the Center for Naval Analyses and served in the Navy from 1956 to 1967.

DiBona holds a bachelor's degree in engineering from the U.S. Naval Academy and was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University from 1957 to 1960, where he earned bachelor's and master's degrees in philosophy, politics and economics.

The week will kick off Sunday, April 26 with visit to the church of choice.

The next day will be the Fifth Annual PBPA Golf Tournament, a four man scramble to be held at Mission Dorado Country Club. The tournament has a shotgun start with tee times of 8 a.m. or 1 p.m. Cost is $65 per individual or $260 per team. Deadline is April 22.

On Tuesday, the 28th, the PBPA will sponsor a seminar on "Endangered Species Issues and Concerns" from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Sibley Learning Center, 1300 E. Wadley. That evening, at 7:30 p.m., the Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series will have Tumbleweed Smith and "The Sounds of Texas" at the Petroleum Museum.

Thursday April 30, the endangered species seminar will be repeated.

Friday, May 1, preparation for the "Blow Out" will begin with cooks beginning to set up at noon at the American Legion Woods Post 19, 501 Air Park Drive.

Oil company income drops, API survey finds

Staff Report

WASHINGTON — The net income of a group of 20 major oil companies fell almost 21 percent in 1991 compared to the previous year, according to an analysis by the American Petroleum Institute.

For 1991, API said, net income of the 20 companies amounted to $13.2 billion. In 1990, the 20 had an income of $16.6 billion.

According to the Institute, last year's fourth quarter was a particularly difficult one for the industry, with net income plunging to 2.3 billion compared to $3.6 billion during the same period a year earlier - a decline of 34.8 percent.

Non-oil companies fared even worse, API noted. For a group of 100 non-oil companies, net income declined 59.7 percent for the year and 72.4 percent in the fourth quarter.

The profitability - net income for the year as a percent of stockholders' equity - of the 20 oil companies also declined in 1991 from 12.8 percent to 9.8 percent, while non-oil company profitability dropped from 13.0 percent to 5.1 percent.

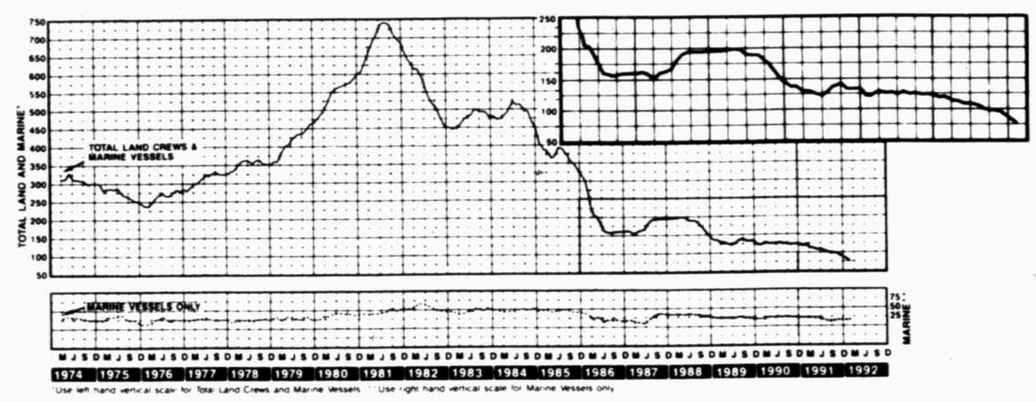

Operating earnings - net income before special and non-reoccuring items of 16 of the 20 companies - were down for upstream (exploration and production) operations between the two full years, the API analysis showed. The decline occurred both here and abroad.

Upstream operating earning declined 45.4 percent in the U.S. and 27.0 percent overseas. Domestic downstream operating earnings (refining, marketing and transportation) were off 16.8 percent compared to 1990.

Comparing the fourth quarters of 1990 and 1991, API reported declines in domestic and foreign upstream earnings and in domestic downstream earnings. However, operating earnings for the foreign downstream sector rose 14.6 percent.

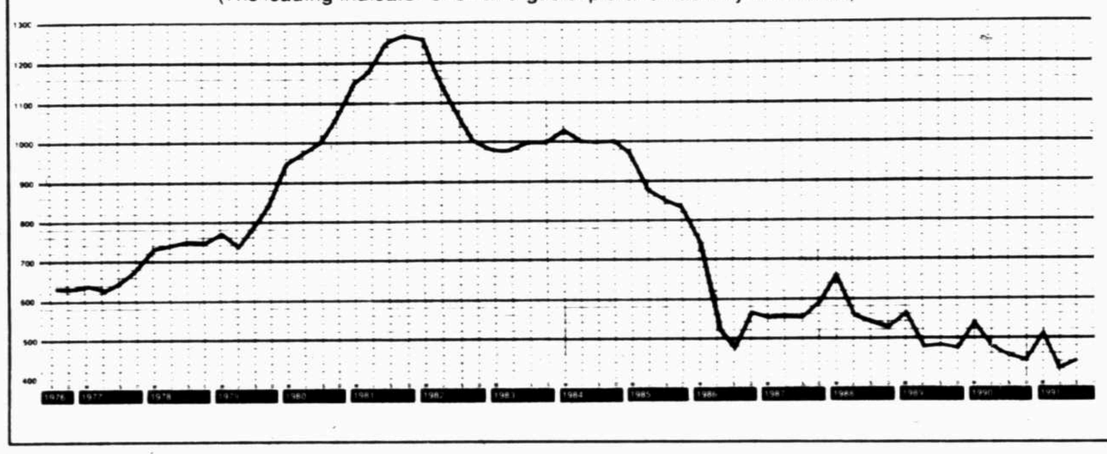

The inability of the industry to obtain access to federal lands where the best prospects for petroleum discoveries are believed to exist is one of several factors reflected in a modest increase of 4.4 percent in domestic upstream capital expenditures for the full year, and an 18.4 percent decline in the fourth quarter compared to the same period in 1990.

According to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists, another new low was established in the number of crews and vessels working in the U.S. and U.S. waters — top graph — since it began its survey in 1974. For February, the land crew total rose one to 62 while the marine crew total fell five to 13, bringing the total to 75. At the same time, worldwide seismic exploration rose by 15 land crews and 10 marine vessel crews — bottom graph — during September 1991 for a net increase of 25 crews, bringing the total to 444 crews and vessels active around the world. Increases were reported in Canada, Mexico, Central and South America, Europe, the Middle East, Africa and the Far East.

Dwight's Energydata unit purchases GII assets

Staff Report

DENVER, CO. — A newly formed company formed by Dwight's Energydata, Inc. and investors has purchased the assets and technologies of Denver-based Graphics Information, Inc. (GII), including the company's national digital land survey. The purchase by Graphics Information Technologies, Inc. (GITI) was recently approved by the courts and GII's creditors, ending GII's reorganization efforts under Chapter 11.

Dr. Charles Ivey, CEO and President of Dwight's and the newly elected President of GITI, announced the purchase. The motive for the transaction, he said, was to ensure continued energy industry access to GII's widely used digital land survey and to other products the company had developed. This acquisition positions the new company as a key player in the digital mapping business.

The GII survey provides consistent, contiguous mapping coverage of virtually all the nation's oil and gas states, an important consideration for companies with interests beyond the regional level.

Formed by Dwight's and the Private Investment Consortium, Ltd., a Memphis-based investment group, GITI will concentrate on customer needs. Ivey said, "It's rewarding to acquire an essential, strategic asset and then develop a solid business plan to go forward. We plan to make this a vital business of real value to oil and gas companies."

GITI already has agreements in place with both Petroleum Information and Dwight's to receive well spot locations from these data vendors' respective well history files. The company is actively seeking additional date vendors interested in registering their information on the GITI grid. In addition, the company will expand its support of related products, such as culture and hydography date that are typically associated with digital mapping.

Many of the former GII employees have been hired by GITI. None of the senior management was retained. Building on an excellent product foundation, GITI will strive for the quality assurance, service and support for which Dwight's is well known in the industry. Ivey further stated, "We're rolling up our sleeves and giving the business the hands-on-care it needs to become the de facto oil and gas mapping standard. The industry has supported us in this acquisition, and we are firmly committed to serving its needs."

GITI is based in the Dwight's office at 1560 Broadway, Suite 900, Denver Co. 80202. The new phone number is 303-831-3555. The company also has an operational office in Austin, Tx.

Lebanon invites foreigners to look for oil

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Lebanon has invited companies to explore for oil and gas for the first time since the civil war broke out in 1975, the Middle East Economic Survey reported this week.

The oil newsletter, published in Nicosia, said the Ministry of Industry and Oil set a July deadline for companies to submit bids for onshore or offshore exploration.

Before 1975, exploration in Lebanon was restricted to two dry wildcat wells drilled by the Elwerath company of West Germany in 1960-61, and a third drilled by Ausonia Mineraria of Italy in 1963 that found water, not oil.

What used to be Art has now become Science.

When you need the best scientific data about the most critical element in well stimulation design — frac height at the wellbore — the controlling factor for fracture length and well productivity, choose Smith Energy Services. It's a job we know well.

In fact, our 3D Frac Model predicts the height, determining if the fracture will stay in zone, whether multiple layers will be effectively stimulated and if you should design a single- or multi-stage treatment.

And with the power of our new 486-based computers and the expertise of S.A. Holditch Associates behind us, why settle for less. After all, we can model up to 11 different layers and four different fluids to give you the best design analysis in the industry.

Our frac model eliminates guesswork and offers the operator the opportunity to make adjustments to optimize the treatment scientifically and accurately. Every time.

Not to mention doing wonders for your profits.

Smith Energy Services. We work best under pressure.

FWA leading Texas driller

WICHITA FALLS — FWA Drilling Co., Inc. was Texas' leading contract drilling firm last year in total footage drilled according to information compiled by Petroleum Information Corporation. The 300-plus wells FWA drilled in the state during 1991 averaged nearly 8,900 feet in depth for a cumulative total of more than 2.7 million feet.

Nationally, FWA ranked third even though 95 percent of its total footage was drilled in the state of Texas. As part of a corporate restructuring, FWA announced last October that it was closing operation sin Oklahoma and West Virginia and would operate exclusively in Texas.

FWA President Tommy L. Knowlesd said, "Despite the declining rig count and difficulties being experienced by the domestic oil and gas industry, this No. 1 ranking reflects FWA's continued commitment to provide Texas operators quality, reliable services. This past year we added five rigs to our Texas fleet, bring our total rig count here to 27."

FWA is headquartered in Wichita Falls where it was founded in 1938. It has a district office in Midland which oversees operations in West and South Texas; a district office in Tyler handles East Texas.

Exxon faces tough year, analysts say

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Last year was the most profitable ever for the Exxon Corp., mostly because of stunningly high earnings from its European and Far Eastern refining operations when prices for jet fuel and kerosene rose sharply during the Persian Gulf war.

But 1992 is shaping up as much tougher for Exxon and the other oil giants. Analysts expect first-quarter earnings to drop by 50 percent for Exxon and even more for most other global oil companies.

Prices of crude are moderately lower than the first quarter a year ago and domestic natural gas prices have collapsed to the lowest winter level in more than a decade. Recession in the United States has crimped profits from gasoline and other refined products, and for chemicals.

Meanwhile, weakening economies overseas could make things worse for Exxon, which derived three-fourths of its $5.6 billion in earnings last year outside the United States. Europe, led by Germany, appears on the verge of recession. Even the fast-growth economies of the Far East, from Hong Kong to Japan, have slowed.

"I'm writing this year off," said George F. Friesen, senior oil analyst at the Deutsche Bank Capital Group. "I don't see the fundamentals improving for the industry until 1993."

Through March 17, Exxon's share price this year had dropped 7 percent. That is better than oil stocks generally, which are down 9 percent since Jan. 1. But it is worse than the broader index of the Standard & Poor's industrials, which are down 1 percent for the year to date. In New York Stock Exchange trading on March 17, Exxon shares were unchanged at $56.875.

Analysts fret that oil stocks, with the exception of Exxon, now are into their fifth consecutive quarter of underperforming the broader market — an unusually long losing streak for the once-mighty sector. Friesen thinks the slump will extend at least into the summer.

Last year, share prices of the 15 largest oil companies declined 2 percent as a group, compared with a 27 percent gain in the Standard & Poor's industrial index.But shares of Exxon, the world's largest oil company, bucked the downward trend among oil stocks, with a price gain of 17 percent in 1991.

If economic recovery brings higher demand for gasoline, chemicals and other petroleum products in the United States this summer, oil companies whose businesses are more dependent on the domestic market, like ARCO, Unocal and Amoco, will benefit more than global behemoths like Exxon.

"The place to be in 1992 is in U.S. refining, rather than in Europe or the Far East," said Bryan Jacoboski, an analyst at Paine Webber Inc. Chevron, ARCO and Unocal, which lost money in gasoline pricing battles on the West Coast early last year, he said, are now benefiting from lower refinery output there and firmer prices.

Yet William H. Brown III, an oil-market analyst and vice president of E.T.- Petroleum Inc., in New York, said oil companies "are desperately looking" for, but have not seen, signs of rising gasoline demand throughout the United States.

Despite Exxon's strong 1991 performance, slumping demand overseas for refined products threaten to turn Exxon's shares into an industry laggard for awhile, said Michael Mayer, an oil analyst with Wertheim Schroder & Co.

Mayer estimated that Exxon's 1992 earnings, excluding special items, would fall by 13 percent, to $3.65 a share, from $4.20 in 1991. (Net income including special non-recurring transactions was $4.45 last year.) The Wall Street consensus currently is for Exxon's earnings to fall to $3.90 a share.

"Earnings will be down this year for virtually everybody" in the major oil group, Mayer said. "But if you look further out, you can see some nice increases in 1993."

Mayer said he expected Exxon to earn $4.10 a share next year. He bases that forecast on several projections: a rise in crude prices to an average of $21 a barrel, from near $19 now; an increase in natural gas prices to perhaps $1.50 for 1,000 cubic feet, compared with the current $1.20, and rising demand for chemicals and gasoline.

He also expects Exxon to approve a modest dividend increase later this year, to an annual rate of $2.80, from $2.68. That would keep its dividend yield near 5 percent if, as he predicts, the stock rises to about $60 a share by year-end.

"The yield is a good reason for owning energy stocks now," he said.

As with most major oil companies, the biggest jolt to Exxon's earnings is likely to be the first quarter. Mayer said the company's profits in foreign refining and marketing will plunge by more than $700 million, to about $250 million, from $937 million in the first three months of 1991 — the company's best quarter ever.

Earnings for the first quarter should fall by about $1 billion, Mayer said, to 85 cents per share.

Marketing changes anger Chevron dealers

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Chevron dealers are angry about recent marketing changes at the San Francisco-based oil company that could increase their service station rents more than 200 percent in some cases.

Chevron Corp., which struggled financially during the last fiscal year, this month introduced a new rent structure, began charging dealers a 3 percent fee on non-Chevron credit card purchases and discontinued a $365 monthly rent credit for stations open 24 hours daily.

Dealers estimate that the cumulative cost of these changes will range from $20,000 to $50,000 a year. There are 1,425 Chevron dealers in California and 925 of them rent their stations from the company.

The impact on consumers from the additional costs is unclear. Bill Berghoff, Chevron's general manager of retail brand services, said that the competitive nature of gasoline sales, especially in Southern California, could make it hard for dealers to make up these expenses by raising pump prices.

"We would like for him to be able to recover it in the marketplace ... but it's going to be tough to do," he said.

In response to the changes, Chevron dealers have formed a committee that will research whether there are any grounds to challenge the oil company's action in court.

"Based on today's operating expenses, it's getting virtually impossible to operate a business at a profit," said Chuck Novak, owner of the Warner Center Chevron in the Los Angeles area of Woodland Hills. Novak estimates that the new rental rate structure and credit card fee will increase his expenses by $36,000 a year.

But Berghoff said that the company's new strategy makes it more competitive with what other oil companies are doing.

"On a periodic basis we evaluate all aspects of the program and we try to keep it consistent with other players in the industry," he said.

John Hilton, an analyst at Argus Research in New York, said that Chevron's new rental program is not "out of line" with those of other oil companies.

"The (dealers) are certainly willing to share in the gain, why wouldn't they be willing to share in the pain during bad times?" he said.

Chevron currently has 13.1 percent market share of gasoline sales in the Los Angeles area, fourth among the major oil companies, according to Whitney Leigh Corp., a Tulsa, Okla. consulting firm. Atlantic Richfield Co. ranks first with 28.5 percent of the market.

In the past, Chevron dealers' rents were based on two rates, one tied to gasoline sales and another to the income potential from operations such as automotive repair or a food market. Both of these rates could be reduced if a dealer met certain gasoline sales targets.

The new plan sets a fixed rental rate for non-fuel businesses that is based on the income potential of those operations. This rate cannot be reduced. The rate tied to gasoline sales could still be reduced, but it also could be increased depending on the volume of business.

Abilene to get first CNG station

Staff Report

The Abilene area will soon be getting its first natural gas fueling station that will be open to the public. The station is being developed under a joint venture between CNG Environmental Fuels, Inc. and Wylie, Inc., and will be located at the Wylie Convenience Store's Diamond Shamrock facility at 2550 S. Clack.

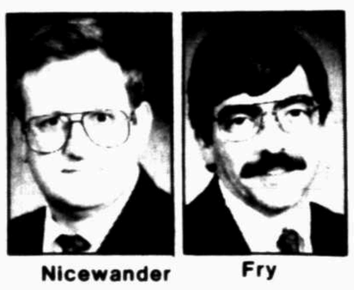

The natural gas pump will be just as fast and easy to operate as a gasoline pump. According to CNG Environmental Fuels President, Charlie Taylor, "This will be the first public access retail natural gas fueling station in Texas, and perhaps the nation, that is being installed by private businesses, and not a gas utility or pipeline company.

The installation of public access fueling stations such as this one will make it feasible for fleet owners and individuals to have their vehicles converted to operate on natural gas." Taylor also stressed that these vehicles will still be able to run on gasoline, as well as natural gas. CNG Environmental Fuels is an Abilene company, formed by Taylor and Greg Rinehart.

Natural gas is gaining in popularity as a vehicle fuel for many reasons. Prompted in part by federal and state environmental legislation which promoted or mandates the use of alternate fuels, natural gas has emerged as the fuel of choice. It has distinct advantages over the conventional fuels like gasoline or diesel, and other alternate fuels such as propane, methanol, and electricity.

It is clean burning and produced fewer harmful tailpipe emissions. It is in abundant domestic supply, especially in this part of the country, which helps to reduce our dependence on imported oil. It is very economical, with the retail price being 20% to 50% less than gasoline. The target price for gas sales at the Wylie Station is 59.9 cents per equivalent gallon. Natural gas is considered to be one of the safest fuels. It is non-toxic, does not pool if leaked, (since it is lighter than air it will dissipate) has a higher ignition point than gasoline, plus ha an octane rating of 130, compared to 87 to 92 for gasoline.

Access Energy is the nation's oldest and largest independent marketer of natural gas, with more than 8,000 customers and 300-plus suppliers. The purchase of Gulf Ohio adds to Access' existing base of business in Ohio and surrounding states.

Access Energy, which posted sales of $200 million in 1992, expects the acquisition to increase revenues by approximately 10 percent. The transaction closing date was March 3, 1992. The effective date was February 29, 1992.

DOE makes rules to protect 'whistleblowers'

Secretary of Energy James D. Watkins has acted to protect those who identify health and safety issues as well as waste, fraud and abuse within the Department of Energy (DOE) complex. The final "Whistleblower Protection Rule" published established procedures for the investigation, hearing and review of allegations of employer reprisal from DOE contractor employees.

DOE plans assessment of SPR in New Orleans

The Department of Energy will perform a comprehensive assessment of environment, safety and health programs at DOE's Strategic Petroleum Reserve based in New Orleans. The assessment is part of Secretary of Energy James D. Watkins' 10-Point Initiative issued in 1989, to strengthen the department's environmental protection and waste management activities.

Edisto unit says pipeline section operational

DALLAS — Edisto Resources Corp. downstream subsidiary, ESCO Energy, Inc. says that the first portion of its planned 57-mile pipeline to Franklin County, Missouri, is operational. This pipeline, operated by ESCO's subsidiary, Missouri Pipeline Company ("MPC"), delivers gas to Laclede Gas Company ("Laclede") to serve existing gas customers in the western part of St. Louis County. Laclede is expanding its gas distribution system in Franklin County to serve the communities of Washington, Union, St. Clair, and Pacific. With the completion of the first portion of the MPC pipeline to Franklin County, ESCO's 10-year gas supply contract with Laclede increases from 25.0 million cubic feet per day ("MMcf/d") to 55.0 MMcf/d.

DeKalb Energy has write down

DENVER — DEKALB Energy Company reports that an $18.6 million fourth-quarter writedown of its U.S. oil and gas assets led to a $15.4 million net loss for the three months ended December 31, 1991. DEKALB also took a $47.4 million after-tax writedown in the first quarter of 1991, and together, the tow non-cash adjustments produced a $62.6 million loss for the full year. Cash flows from continuing operations in 1991 were $43.4 million, compared with $57.8 million in 1990.

"The $47.4 million first-quarter writedown reflected sharp declines in oil and gas prices, while the fourth-quarter writedown resulted primarily from value adjustments in DEKALB's U.S. assets," said Bruce P. Bickner, chairman and chief executive officer. "During 1991, we took significant measures to reduce overhead and capital spending consistent with low energy prices in both the United States and Canada and our lack of exploration success in the United States. In January 1992, we announced a further 30 percent reduction in our U.S. staff, a restructuring of our management team and the closing of our Houston office. All of the changes should have a positive impact on cash flow of about $6 million in 1992, about half of which should be reflected in lower general and administrative expense and the balance in reduced capitalized overhead.

Valero Energy to buy natural gas plants

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Valero Energy Corp. of San Antonio has announced plans to buy several South Texas natural gas liquids assets for about $83 million.

The assets, owned by Oryx Energy Co., would complement the firms' natural gas liquids business and provide additional butane supplies to its Corpus Christi refinery.

The company recently began a $230-million upgrade project that will allow the Corpus Christi facility to convert butane into MTBE, a clean-burning, high octane gasoline blend stock that is a key ingredient of reformulated gasoline.

According to a letter of intent, Valero wants to acquire two natural gas processing plants in Starr and Dimmit Counties that can extract a total of more than 11,000 barrels per day of natural gas liquids.

New refinery projects bring $1.4 billion to Corpus Christi

By Eduardo Montes

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Investment in the refinery industry, according to analysts, is nothing if not uncertain these days.

In South Texas, three oil companies are plunging into the unknown.

The companies have recently announced or begun refinery projects in Corpus Christi valued at more than $1.4 billion. The expansions and improvements are expected to present a financial boon to the city as well as boost the facilities' flexibility and, as a result, their profitability.

With changing oil markets, analysts say, such ventures are necessary. But they're also potentially hazardous.

"Refining really is now a major risk carrier," said Larry Goldstein of the New York City-based Petroleum Industries Research Associates. "You have to put your money down today without a clue of what the market is going to be like three years down the road when your investment" comes on line.

A majority of the expansions in Corpus Christi are aimed at meeting requirements for cleaner burning fuels set by the Clean Air Act.

One of the largest projects, by CITGO Petroleum Corp., will include $480 million in improvements and expansions at the company's Corpus Christi refinery, which also has undergone a name change. The former Champlin Refining & Chemicals Inc. is now CITGO Corpus Christi Refinery.

Meanwhile, Koch Industries Inc. of Wichita, Kan., has announced an expansion of $600 million to $700 million.

San Antonio-based Valero Energy Corp. will construct a $230 million plant to upgrade butane to methyl tertiary butyl ether, or MTBE, a key ingredient of the reformulated gasoline mandated by amendments to the Clean Air Act. Valero recently finished a $300 million hydrocracker-reformer unit, which is used to upgrade products.

The proposed expansions will translate into about 650 permanent jobs in the area by 1995, said Gary Bushell, president of the Corpus Christi Area Economic Development Corp.

"Of course initially we'll get several thousand construction jobs," he said.

Specifically, Bushell said the projects getting under way this year will create "very close" to 3,000 construction jobs.

The companies, meanwhile, hope to profit from the expanded capability of their South Texas facilities.

Bill Johnson, an analyst with Houston-based Jofree Corp., said the planned improvements are in line with an industry trend evident in recent years.

Although he did not speak specifically to the Corpus Christi developments, Johnson said oil companies have been concentrated on upgrading refineries for "maximum versatility and maximum profitability."

John Hilton, an analyst with New York-based Argus Research Corp., sees an industry in a state of flux.

"You see two basic trends," Hilton said. "You see one trend toward upgrading, increasing flexibility ... but you also see a trend of refineries that are just so outdated that they're being closed down."

The CITGO refinery is one of the former. The five-year expansion program includes plans for a facility to produce MTBE and a similar blend stock, tertiary amyl methy ether, or TAME. The company also will make improvements required by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

The improvements at Koch include construction of several heavy sour crude oil conversion units. Construction will begin after all the necessary permits have been issued in about 9 to 12 months, said company spokesman Rich Tuttle.

Valero is "in the midst of a pretty substantial expansion," said spokesman Keith Booke.

In early January, Valero completed the hydrocracker reformer-unit. By May 1993, Valero is expected to complete work on a $230 million butane upgrade project.

"This is something that has been part of our strategic planning for the last several years," Booke said. "Obviously our goal is to produce as much quote-unquote clean fuel as possible. We think that's where the market is going."

There's safety in numbers.

Product numbers for Tretolite® oil and gas production chemicals have been expanded from simple identification codes into mini information packages.

CR O 2413 F

CORROSION INHIBITOR | OIL SOLUBLE | PRODUCT NUMBER | FLAMMABLE TOXIC/IRRITANT

Now every one of our products— corrosion inhibitors, paraffin controllers, scale inhibitors, demulsifiers, biocides, water clarifiers and all the rest— comes labeled with a new product number* that reveals its function, solubility and potential hazard— important safety information.

Our safety in numbers program is widely useful. Include it in your training, for example, and it will help your employees understand proper chemical handling procedures of our products. This emphasis will reinforce the importance of alertness and awareness when applying production chemicals.

These informative numbers will also help you and your staff act quickly to protect people and the environment in case of a mishap. And, because the new product identification numbers are built around our original codes, they're easy to learn.

A brochure explaining the details and many benefits of this new system is available from your local Tretolite representative, or from the office below. Putting safety in numbers is one more example of the lengths we're going to at the Tretolite Division to help protect you, your employees and the environment.

Retailers pin sales hopes on collecting, recycling oil

N.Y. Times News Service

First came the drives to recycle newspapers, glass bottles and aluminum cans. Now, an effort is revving up to collect and recycle another widely used commodity — motor oil.

Since last fall, such companies as Exxon Corp. and Kragen Auto Parts have opened their own oil recycling centers in many states. They see it as a way to boister sales in the hotly competitive lube oil business. After all, customers who bring in used oil are likely to replace it at their outlets.

The programs also show companies pitching in to clean up the environment — an image that helps any player in such a sticky business.

Consumers are typically allowed to bring up to five gallons of used motor oil to service stations or auto-parts stores. The oil is placed in waste-storage facilities and later sent to refineries, where it is turned into fuel for power plants and other industrial facilities.

One company, Houston-based Lyondell Petrochemical, in which Atlantic-Richfield Co. is the main shareholder, will soon begin recycling used lube oil into gasoline.

Exxon, Mobil Corp., Amoco Corp. and Kragen have some of the largest oil-recycling programs, but Chevron Corp. and Unocal Corp., among others, are moving fast. San Francisco-based Chevron is looking at recycling larger quantities of oil, said Keith Siefker, a manager in the company's lubricants division.

Since launching programs, Exxon estimates that it has collected 500,000 gallons of used oil and Kragen estimates that it has collected nearly 200,000 gallons.

Lawmakers are supporting the burgeoning oil-recycling business, largely because of environmental concerns.

On October 1, a little-publicized new California law that requires consumers to pay a 4 deposit on every quart of motor oil will take effect. The money is refundable only if you return the used oil to an oil company service station, auto-parts retailer or other recycling center. (Industrial oil is not subject to the program.)

"Every year, an amount equal to nearly seven times the oil spilled by the Exxon Valdez (almost 80 million gallons) is poured down drains, dumped in the countryside, burned, or otherwise spread across our state," said State Assemblyman Byron Sher, D-Palo Alto, who introduced the legislation. "The result is pollution of streams and groundwater, adverse effects on sewage treatment, and containment of landfill sites."

The impact can be devastating. For example, one quart of motor oil can contaminate about 250,000 gallons of drinking water, Sher and others point out.

Much of the pollution is caused by people who change their own vehicle's motor oil, according to regulators. Nationwide, the "do-it-yourself" oil-changers generate more than 200 million gallons of used oil a year, and nearly 180 million gallons — or 90 percent — of it is disposed of improperly, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

In California, home mechanics use more than 36 million gallons of lube oil, with nearly 33 million gallons improperly dumped — more than any other state.

Part of the problem, experts agree, is a lack of oil recycling centers. In California, the number of collection centers actually has dropped to 700 from 2,500 in 1985, according to the Waste Management Board, a state agency that regulates disposal of solid wastes.

The decline stems largely from the increased cost of disposing of contaminated oil, the agency said. Disposal of this oil, called a "hot load," can cost up to $5,000 per 2,000-gallon truckload.

"Recycling oil is a zero (profit) transaction or slightly negative," particularly with today's low oil prices, said Dave Allan, a manager who helped get Exxon's program started.

California's new law seeks to help offset these costs by providing incentives for groups, both private and governmental, to collect the oil. Grants and loans would be offered to local governments and nonprofit groups to open oil collection centers and even start curbside collection programs.

Commercial centers such as Jiffy Lube would be able to keep incentive payments — in this case, the 4-a-quart rebate. This has raised concern from some observers that the law may be creating a windfall for these companies. Sher counters that some incentive is needed to help offset the rising recycling costs, and points out that the amount is modest.

In fact, some critics wonder if the 4 a quart — averaging only about 20 per oil change — is enough incentive to persuade consumers to bring their dirty oil back for recycling. But even at such a low rate, Sher calculates that at least half the deposits — or millions of dollars annually — will be made available for loans, grants and other incentives to open more collection centers.

Oklahoma to cut natural gas rates

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The House the week succeeded in its second attempt to pass the emergency clause on a bill designed to cut production on some of the state's natural gas wells.

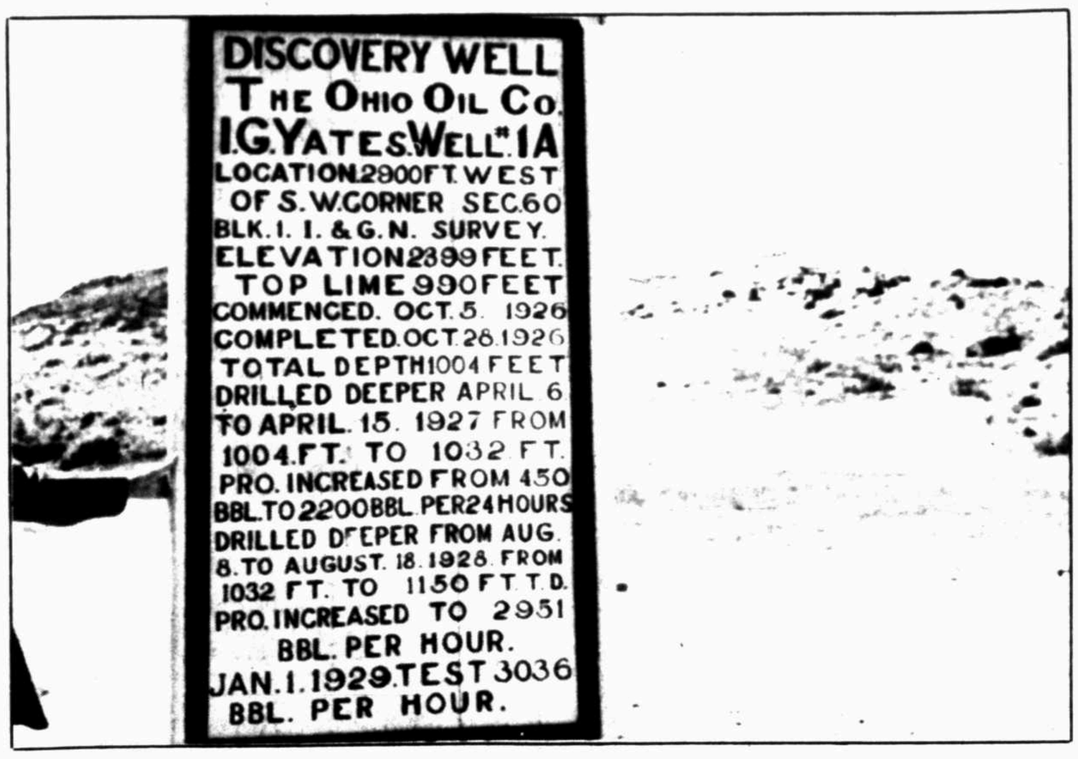

The bill had passed 70-29 on Monday, but there was an objection to the routine motion to have the vote on the bill stand as the vote on the emergency. The emergency, which takes a two-thirds vote, then failed on a 56-42 roll call.

Rep. Larry Rice, D-Pryor, the House author of Senate Bill 663, held the bill on a motion to reconsider the vote on the emergency clause, which allows a bill to become law as soon as it is signed by the governor.

Rice brought it up again Tuesday, and this time the emergency clause passed 68-27.

The bill sets emergency allowable production limits on a seasonal basis.

BACK THEN IN THE BASIN

A major discovery

The sign tells the story. The Yates field discovery well opened a new era in oil and gas exploration in the Permian Basin. Previously, it was thought that no oil existed west of the Pecos River. The Yates field, operated by Marathon, is considered a world class field.

Compressor group formed

HOUSTON — Executives from gas compressor companies in North America met in February to organize a new group, Gas Compressor Association, that will promote quality, safety and standards for gas compressors used in the natural gas industry. Membership is open to North American manufacturers of gas compressors and their engine drivers used in compressor service, the fabricators and assemblers of gas compressor packages and those companies engaged in the selling, leasing, renting or contract operation of gas compressor packages.

Another purpose of the February meeting was to hear a speech on alternative fuels (natural gas) by Soll Sussmen, Executive Assistant to Garry Mauro, Texas Land Commissioner.

Kansas oil industry taking a dive

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — The Kansas oil industry is hitting rock bottom.

A study by the Kansas Geologic Survey shows that as of Feb. 21, only 26 drilling rigs were searching for oil and natural gas in Kansas. Earlier in the month, that number was even lower — 23.

Those are the lowest figures since the OPEC oil embargo of 1973.

"We're gradually going out of business," said Donald Schancke, executive vice president of the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association. "Unless we straighten out national and state tax policy, the future of the industry is not good."

"It's a sick industry," agreed Jim Robinson, chairman of the Kansas Corporation Commission, which regulates the oil industry in the state. "(But) it's not on its last legs. The true oil men in this state are independents. They're fighters."

David R. Collins, petroleum economist for the Kansas Geological Survey at the University of Kansas, said the number of rigs in Kansas was in the low 20s in 1973, once dropping to eight.

After drilling in the state increased because of the oil embargo and the price of crude climbed to $38 a barrel, the rig count reached 224 in November 1981, he said.

"Rig counts have dropped dramatically since then," Collins said. "It's almost totally the result of lower crude oil prices and expectations for lower future prices."

The condition of the Kansas oil patch is no different than those in Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico and other oil-rich states. The Baker Hughes Tool Co., which makes weekly counts of drilling rigs, reported there were 667 rigs operating nationwide as of Feb. 21, compared with 967 at the same time a year ago. That's a drop of almost a third.

"The Kansas figures simply reflect the overall decline in domestic exploration," Collins said.

That's also meant fewer jobs for Kansans. Schancke said at one point 20,000 Kansans worked in the oil fields; today that number is about 10,000.

Schancke attributed the collapse of the domestic oil industry in part of the federal government's failure to come up with a national energy policy.

"The federal government has refused to come to grips with this problem," he said.

The 1986 federal tax reform act removed incentives for investing in oil exploration, a high-risk venture, by preventing investors from writing off losses.

"We haven't recovered since," Schancke said.

Robinson agreed a national energy policy could stabilize the industry in the state and keep some small operations going for years.

It appears the large oil pools in Kansas are gone, along with the major oil companies, Robinson said. That's left the independents to search for smaller reservoirs, he said.

A national energy policy could set a floor price of $20 for a barrel of crude, for example, to prevent the roller-coaster prices that keep independents on the edge of wealth and poverty, Robinson said.

Price drops invariably lead to few rigs in the field.

Collins said prices have held at around the $20 per barrel range through most of 1991 but dropped to $17 late in the year. That led to a drop in the number of Kansas rigs.

Companies can respond immediately to a price drop by suspending drilling, Collins said.

"It takes longer for them to respond to a price increase, and it takes time to gear up to drill a well," he added.

Current oil and gas prices almost are comparable to those in the early 1970s, before the embargo, if inflation is taken into account. Oil that sells for $17 a barrel today would have gone for $5 in 1972 dollars, only slightly above the actual prices at that time, Collins said.

Gasoline that sells for 95 cents a gallon today would equal about 29 cents a gallon in 1972 dollars, also slightly above the actual price of gasoline then, he said.

Schancke also said the state could help the industry by repealing the severance tax on wells that produce between two and four barrels a day.

"These are the wells that are the next ones to be abandoned," he said.

RRC officials urged to modify prorationing

Staff Report

HOUSTON — The Texas Railroad Commission (TRC) should make some specific correction but should not eliminate its established method for prorationing natural gas in Texas, Robert Tierney, senior consultant for Houston-based Jofree Corp., told a meeting of the Spring Branch Memorial Desk & Derrick Club this week.

"Specifically, the commission needs to modify the way it determines market demand and provide more protection for operators who believe they are being drained by the current allocations system," Tierney said. "The system is not perfect by a long shout, but it's not that bad either.

"Gas production has been a tool that the TRRC has used consistently over time," Tierney continued. "But because gas proration is by reservoir and not statewide, there is a general feeling that it is complex, cumbersome and unworkable. However, the real problem is that the natural gas industry is in a depression. And when depressed, a scapegoat is a convenient way to transfer one's inability to resolve one's problems. SO the method of regulation is a convenient scapegoat."

Tierney pointed out that Texas prorates oil between reservoirs but prorates gas within a reservoir. The state has more than 11,000 separate, designated gas reservoirs of which approximately 22% are prorated. However, these reservoirs produce about 75% of the state's gas.

Tierney explained that the Commission is required by law to determine how much gas should be produced from each reservoir to meet gas demand for the upcoming month. While this process is complex, the Commission has successfully kept production within 93% of allowable for the last five years.

"To listen to the critics, one would think the allowables were way out of line," he noted. "But there's no guarantee that a new system could improve upon 93%."

Tierney expressed concern about the Commission's proposal to replace nominations with a system to determine market demand based on past production.

Job prospects look bleak in Gulf drilling

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Diamond M-ODECO Drilling Inc. will trim its New Orleans staff from 150 to 12 employees in the next 45 days because of bleak prospects for renewed drilling in the Gulf of Mexico, the company's president said.

Diamond M bought ODECO Drilling in January from Murphy Oil Corp. Diamond M, which bought ODECO Drilling in January from Murphy Oil Corp., will maintain its headquarters in Houston, said Robert E. Rose.

Also remaining in the New Orleans area will be a claims, marketing and personnel office, located probably in Metairie, Rose said.

Rose said rig crews are unaffected by the merger creating the world's largest drilling company, but the remainder of the ODECO staff would be offered transfers or will be laid off.

About 100 additional jobs will be created in Houston, he said.

Rose spoke at a news conference during the annual convention of the International Association of Drilling Contractors and Society of Petroleum Engineers.

Before the merger, Diamond M and ODECO had 3,200 employees. The new company will have approximately about 3,000, he said.

Rose said the merger is the first major consolidation in the offshore contract drilling business. Contract drilling is one area of the energy industry that has not consolidated after the 1986 price collapse.

Already, the new company has decided to take nine of its 52 mobile rigs — 17.3 percent of its total — out of service and may remove another two to two or three more.

The problem is that day rates — how drilling companies price their services — are low. To get them up will require companies to take old equipment out of service.

In the ODECO deal, Diamond M was the smaller of the two companies but had deeper financial resources to buy ODECO from Murphy, headquartered based in El Dorado, Ark. Diamond M is a division of Loews Corp., the New York holding company controlled by CBS Inc. Chairman Laurence Tisch.

The combined fleet works primarily in the Gulf of Mexico but also has seven rigs in the North Sea and 11 in other foreign markets.

"The Gulf of Mexico is the worst market to have a big exposure in," , Rose said.

He said Diamond M has d no plans to shift its fleet overseas, but instead would like to see other drilling operators pare down their fleets.

"Unless things change, the Gulf market won't be here," Rose said.

About 43.4 percent of the available rigs in the Gulf are under contract, according to Offshore Data Services, a Houston energy newsletter.

The Diamond M philosophy is to operate its rigs, even if the rates are so low that a rig can't cover its cash expenses. Such a loss is less than the amount the company would have to spend to maintain an idle rig, Rose said.

The ODECO cutback is only a sliver of the jobs which have been and are being lost in the energy industry, he said. Since 1981, more than 300,000 energy jobs have been eliminated.

Each energy lost loss in this area could cost almost four other jobs in services, trade and manufacturing.

"As a nation we have been starving our domestic oil and gas industry by relying on foreign sources," Rose said. "Our energy strategy has amounted to 'imports and send in the troops.'"

The U.S. United States imports about 45.5 percent of its oil, which would be the equivalent of 14 supertankers of oil arriving at U.S. ports daily. The supertankers can carry at least 150,000 tons of oil.

Rose estimated this oil is costing consumers more than the $20 a barrel they pay for domestic oil. One group has estimated the real cost at closer to $90 a barrel last year.

"If oil is worth dying for in the Middle East, it's worth drilling for in America," he said.

Slumping oil city seeks role as new LA outpost

N.Y. Times News Service

The growth of the high-desert city of Bakersfield, Calif., has come in lurches over the last decade. Now it is counting on affordable housing to help propel it into a new role as the latest suburban outpost of Los Angles, 100 miles to the south.

In the mid-1980s, when energy was a growth business, Bakersfield, close to oil fields and refineries, expanded. The collapse of oil prices later in the decade, however, resulted in the loss of 10,000 jobs, the departure of several major employers and foreclosure for a clutch of office buildings.

The real estate market had nearly recovered when the combined force of the savings-and-loan fiasco and the real estate slump hit, leaving empty and unfinished buildings in its wake. Downtown vacancy rates are a sobering 30 percent.

But in the slow economy, the combination of affordable housing, low office rents and abundant cheap land has made the city attractive to corporations.

Affordable housing, in particular, helped persuade the State Farm Insurance Companies to choose Bakersfield as the site of a 500,000-square-foot regional headquarters. By 1996, the company plans to have 1,000 employees at work there.

Many State Farm employees are expected to relocate to the city from other parts of California and to be able to buy homes here, despite the state's notorious reputation for out-of-reach prices.

"You can buy a fine home in Bakersfield for about half of what you would pay in Orange County," said Roger Tompkins, a State Farm vice president in Westlake Village, Calif.

In August, the median home price in Bakersfield was $95,000, compared to $241,300 in Orange County, according to the California Association of Realtors.

Home prices also figured in a decision last year by Chevron USA to locate its Western Production Business Unit in Bakersfield. A Chevron spokesman, Jonathan Lifa, said home prices looked "especially affordable" compared to those in San Francisco, Chevron's corporate base, where the median price was $290,000 in August.

Bakersfield represents the dividing line between urban southern California and the San Joaquin Valley, an agricultural area that stretches 230 miles north to Stockton. The region — the destination of the Joad family in John Steinbeck's Dust Bowl-era novel "The Grapes of Wrath" — remains largely agricultural, although California's urban growth is gnawing away at its edges.

Although some Bakersfield residents cringe at the suburbanization of their city, the phenomonen is familiar in southern California.

Since the 1960s, the quest for affordable housing, coupled with the willingness of Californians to commute long distances, has pushed the suburban frontier of Greater Los Angeles south to Orange County, north to the San Fernando Valley and Santa Clarita, east to Riverside and San Bernardino Counties and west to Ventura County.

The Antelope Valley, a Los Angeles County region a few miles south of Bakersfield, was the state's hottest homebuilding market in the late 1980s.

The Bakersfield boom is part of that larger growth phenomenon. Its population, now 185,000, leaped 65 percent in the last decade, according to the city's planning department, while the number of nonagricultural jobs grew 19 percent in the same period, to 171,000, the state Economic Development Department says.

Bakersfield's resilience, as well as the occasional shocks to the local economy, can be traced to its role as an oil city. It is the seat of Kern County, one of the busiest oil-pumping regions in the country. Although the oil slump of the 1980's induced several "majors" to leave the city, Big Oil is now retur. ing.

Chevron surprised the region last year by pulling up stakes in Ventura, 80 miles south, where the company had already built a luxury office building, to lease offices in Bakersfield. Besides the lure of affordable housing, Lifa, the Chevron spokesman, said, the move reflected a new company policy to locate management near drilling sites.

Another recent arrival, Santa Fe Energy Resources of Houston, has leased 40,000 square feet in a suburban office building.

Despite hopeful signs from the oil industry, the city is not out of the woods. Some problems in downtown Bakersfield have so far defied solution.

A half-finished 293-room hotel, abandoned by both developer and lender, and an empty, foreclosed office building have been persistent headaches for the Central District Development Agency, the city's redevelopment arm. It has tried to bring new activity to a downtown area that resembles a time capsule from the 1940s and '50s.

When the seven-story, 92,000-square-foot City Center office building was completed in 1989, the local office market was still reeling from the contraction of the oil industry.

Developers of other buildings had slashed rents to induce companies to sign leases; much of that space ultimately went for less than $12 a square foot, considerably less than anywhere in southern California.

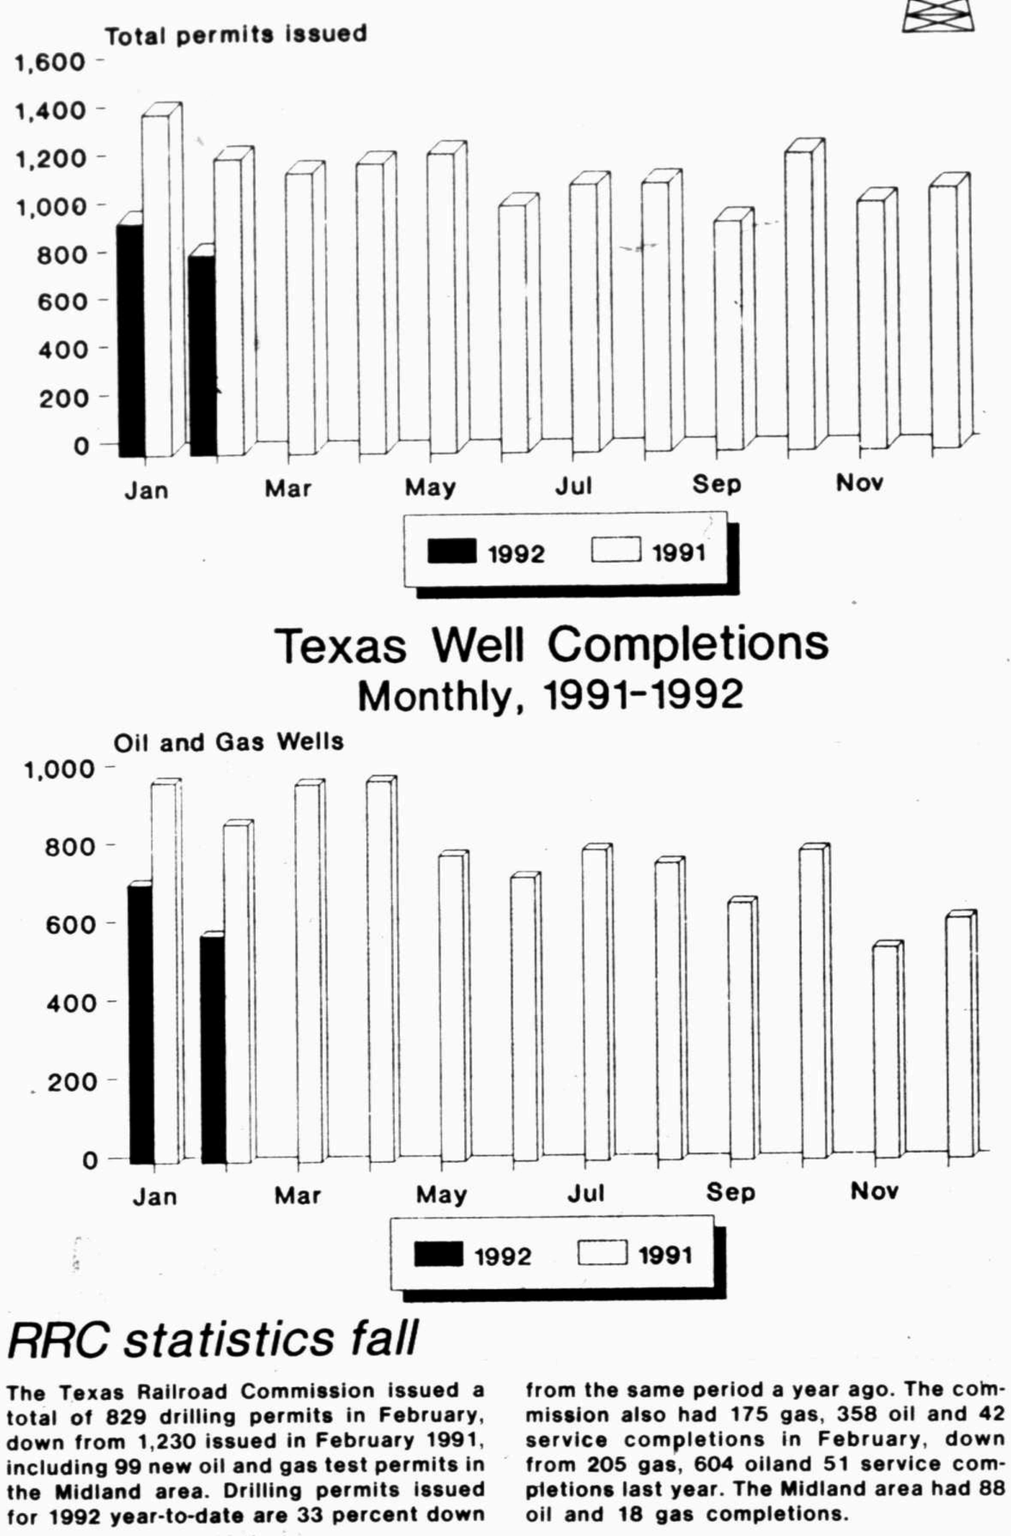

Those low rents, in turn, undercut the economics of the City Center building, which needed at least $17.40 a square foot to pay its mortgage. An affiliate of U.S. Bancorp foreclosed on the empty building last year.

The city itself foreclosed on the hotel project when the lender, a savings-and-loan institution, became insolvent; the city was the landowner and was entitled to the project if there was a default. Now it is having little luck finding another developer to buy the rusting, gray hulk.

As in many aging downtown areas, government itself has become a valued tenant. In January, Kern County employees will move into the $32 million, 276,000-square-foot County Courts and Administration Building, where the county plans to employ 600 people.

With homebuilding continuing steadily in Bakersfield and other high-desert areas, the city has been drawn into the commuter orbit of greater Los Angeles.

RRC statistics fall

The Texas Railroad Commission issued a total of 829 drilling permits in February, down from 1,230 issued in February 1991, including 99 new oil and gas test permits in the Midland area. Drilling permits issued for 1992 year-to-date are 33 percent down from the same period a year ago. The commission also had 175 gas, 358 oil and 42 service completions in February, down from 205 gas, 604 oiland 51 service completions last year. The Midland area had 88 oil and 18 gas completions.

Critics have doubt about new pipeline

N.Y. Times News Service

SOUTH COMMACK, N.Y. — After a decade of planning and construction that has provoked fierce opposition from environmentalists, homeowners and oil executives, a major natural gas pipeline from Canada began operation here in January, providing the largest single new source of energy to the New York region since the 1950s.

The pipeline, the Iroquois Gas Transmission System, has been the region's most contentious energy project since the failed Shoreham Nuclear Power Station, which is being dismantled 30 miles east of here. The Iroquois pipeline, along with projects under way to expand pipelines from domestic oil and gas fields, would increase the capacity to pump natural gas to New York, New Jersey and New England by more than 50 percent.

With the Iroquois pipeline nearing completion, experts in the energy industry say it may lead to a historic shift in a region that is far more dependent on oil from the Middle East to heat its homes and fuel its power plants than other sections of the nation are.

More than a dozen utility companies and gas distributors have signed 15-year contracts to buy all its gas and dedicate most of it to home heating and other residential uses. The pipeline will pump enough gas each year to replace 30 million barrels of oil, and its capacity can be doubled by a series of compression stations in upstate New York sites that have yet to be determined.

For customers, the most immediate impact will come in aggressive marketing campaigns that promote natural gas over other fuels. Already, the Long Island Lighting Co. has said it plans to convert 10,000 Long Island houses each year from oil to gas furnaces, and in Connecticut, the Yankee Gas Services Co., another distributor that will buy gas coming through the Iroquois system, plans to offer natural gas service for the first time in Groton and New London.

Another major market for the Canadian gas could be in new electrical generating plants, which, in the aftermath of the failed project at Shoreham, are planned in New York and New Jersey with gas as their principal fuel.

Anyone hoping for a windfall in immediate cuts in gas prices will be disappointed. As part of their contract to buy the Canadian gas, signed in 1987, the utilities and distributors in the Iroquois project have agreed to tie gas prices to those of other fuels, including heating oil and gas produced in the U.S. Oil Patch, the fields from the Gulf Coast to West Texas.

That means that even if a surplus develops, as some economists are predicting, gas prices will not decline any faster than the costs of alternative fuels.

But proponents of the project say its economic benefits, both to individual users and to the region's economy, will become more apparent over a decade or more, as more plentiful natural gas prevents oil prices from rising and lets industry expand.

"There have been very legitimate questions raised about this project, but any new source that will lessen our dependence on foreign oil is a positive for New York," said Richard M. Kessel, executive director of the New York State Consumer Protection Board.

As a project planned a decade ago, when the national trauma of energy shortages was still a fresh memory, the pipeline will begin sending gas into a different economic environment. Although all agree on the New York region's need for more access to natural gas, some experts now say it may get too much of a good thing.

"There is certainly going to be a period, whether it lasts for a decade or more, when we have more pipeline capacity than we need," said Ronald Derhardt, a partner in Jensen Associates, an energy consulting company based in Boston.

Threading its way seven feet below the ground for 370 miles, the Iroquois pipeline runs south from Iroquois, Ontario, through upstate New York, across western Connecticut, and beneath the Long Island Sound to a muddy construction site here, just down a quiet residential side street from an Amoco service station. It will then hook up with smaller existing pipelines.

It has been built for $655 million by a consortium of utilities and gas distributors that will sell its gas in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. In New York, the Brooklyn Union Gas Company and Lilco are members of the consortium and have pledged to buy the largest amount of gas from the Iroquois line.

Spring officially began Friday, which means school will soon be out for the summer and once again it's time to start thinking about vacation — really thinking about possible destinations and really making plans, not just wishing about it.

Real vacations can be a challenge for everyone, but especially for families with small children. You can only take so many trips to go see Grandma or Uncle Fred and still maintain a certain amount of family devotion. Besides, a vacation can be an opportunity to go somewhere totally different and see what the scenery is like where the other half lives.

Jane Wilford and Janet Tice, in their book, "What To Do With The Kids This Year," list 100 vacation places in the United States, Canada and the Caribbean that have special programs just for children — and of course, their parents. Most of these vacation locations are on the pricey side, but if money is no object (or at least not a major consideration), these might be what you are looking for.

While Ms. Wilford and Ms. Tice have listed 100 choice spots in their book, none of them are in Texas. However, some are in New Mexico, which isn't too far away:

● Angel Fire Resort (Drawer B, Angel Fire, N.M. 87710 (505) 377-2301 or (800) 633-7463). Of course, skiing is the first thing you think of when you imagine Angel Fire, but the resort offers other activities too. Open all year — not just during ski season — Angel Fire also offers "fantastic opportunities for hiking, backpacking and horseback riding," according to the authors, as well as fishing, canoeing, sailing, swimming, playing tennis, riding bicycles or golfing. For children "Angel Fire has an extensive children's program in both summer and winter," they wrote. The younger set can enjoy swimming, snacking and playing games in their own special events programs.

● The Bishop's Lodge (P.O. Box 2367, Santa Fe, N.M. 87501 (505) 983-6377). Located five minutes north of Santa Fe, this resort really was a churchman's home. "In the 19th century," Ms. Wilford and Ms. Tice wrote, "the ranch was the home of Archbishop Jean Baptiste Lamy, a Roman Catholic missionary who established the first school for teaching English in Santa Fe. ... For the past nearly 70 years, the Thorpe family (descendants of James Thorpe, who acquired the property in 1918) has operated the Lodge as a vacation resort for the months of April through October. The facilities have undergone expansion and renovations during the years, but the private chapel built by the archbishop still stands, a sentinel to the Lodge's history."

Guests can enjoy such activities as horseback riding, hiking, fishing, swimming, playing tennis, skeet and trap shooting, golfing or relaxing in the whirlpool and sauna — and of course, sightseeing in Santa Fe. Younger guests are treated to various supervised activities and programs, such as swimming, riding ponies, going on picnics or fishing.

● Inn of the Mountain Gods (P.O. Box 269, Mescalero, N.M. 88340 (505) 257-5141 or (800) 545-9011). Located just outside of Ruidoso, N.M., Inn of the Mountain Gods has already been visited by many Midlanders. One of the few resorts that is located on an Indian reservation, the inn is a place where "your family can enjoy all the amenities of a full resort and learn some of the history and customs of the Mescalero Apache tribe," the women wrote. Horseback riding, playing tennis or golf, swimming, fishing or boating are a few of the activities available to guests there.

For the younger set, "Children's events are low-keyed," the authors wrote. "Every day from May through October, youth activities such as nature walks and volleyball games are scheduled, freeing up parents' time for a round of golf or a game of tennis." Doesn't that sound pleasant?

IF MONEY is an object for your family, you might want to check out some of the unusual — and free — attractions all around the country. Mary VanMeer and Michael Anthony Pasquarelli had just that in mind when they wrote their book, "VanMeer's Guide to Free Attractions, USA." And some of these attractions are in Texas. The list goes on and on (Texas is a big state, after all), but here are a few of the highlights:

● Fort Phantom Hill, 10 miles north of Abilene on Ranch Road 600, is "ruins of an old fort built during the gold rush days," VanMeer and Pasquarelli wrote.

● Governor's Mansion, 1010 Colorado Street in Austin. Visitors can tour the mansion and see how the state takes care of living-arrangements for its highest elected official. Besides, if the White House in Washington, D.C., belongs to the people of this country, doesn't it follow that the Governor's Mansion belongs to the people of the state? We may never live there, but we can see what it looks like. For more information call (512) 475-2121.

● State Capitol, north end of Congress Ave. at 11th Street in Austin. If you're going to tour the Governor's Mansion, you might as well go take a look at the Capitol too. The authors wrote: "Built in 1888, it is the largest state house in the United States." Of course it is. It's in Texas, isn't it? For information call (512) 475-3070.

● Blue Bell Creamery; 1000 South Horton Street in Brenham. The book's description reads "See how ice cream is made and packaged." But this isn't just ordinary ice cream, it's Blue Bell, one of Texas' finest ideas. Ice cream lovers won't want to miss it. For more information call (713) 836-7977.

● Fort Bliss Replica Museum, Pleasanton Road and Sheridan Drive in El Paso (across from the main parade ground in Fort Bliss). This museum features "Reproductions of the adobe buildings which housed soldiers from 1854-68. Inside is a museum with exhibits showing the history of Fort Bliss and El Paso," VanMeer and Engagement party hosted by parents

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

To announce the engagement of their daughter, Kippy Hunt of Dallas and Jim Clapp of Fort Worth, Carol Ann and Lynn Hunt hosted a festive party at their home last weekend.

McKnight-Harrison

The invitations, decorated wtih drawings of red chili peppers, set the tone for the event, which featured a Mexican theme. Decorations featured pinatas, sombreros and brightly colored balloons.

Guests could fix their own nachos at a table containing all the necessary trimmings. In addition, there was a table featuring a variety of hors d'oeuvres. Dessert included pralines and Mexican wedding cookies, and Sangria, beer and iced tea were served.

Sally (Mrs. Bill) Stella assisted the Hunts with the party.

Special guests included the future bridegroom's parents, Jo Ann and Jim Clapp of Houston. Among the many friends dropping by were Kathleen Kelly of Dallas, Maria Bakke, Debbie and Steve Kempton, Shelley and Alan Warren, Billie Hunt and Joan and Pat Baskin.

The couple will wed on July 4 in White Castle, La., in the same church where Kippy's parents were married almost 26 years ago.

MIDLAND HIGH SCHOOL senior Shelley Betton was honored at a St. Patrick's Day luncheon at the Racquet Club, with lots of green and Irish symbols used to decorate.

The hostesses were Margaret (Mrs. W.F.) Ortloff, Bay (Mrs. T.W.) Ortloff and Cindy Burleson.

The honoree's great-great grandmother, Willie Mae (Mrs. C.H.) Campbell, was a special guest.

Shelley, daughter of Carole and Dr. Steve Betton and granddaughter of Wanda and Roy Campbell, plans to attend Texas A&M University. Her activities and interests include National Honor Society, Senior Girls, The Canopy Modeling Board, Young Life and Community Service, including "Dress-A-Live Doll."

AS MISS 1992 MIDLAND-ODESSA, Tiffany Thornton will represent the Permian Basin in the Miss 1993 Texas World Pageant in San Antonio in August. The winner of the state event will compete in the Miss 1993 World America Pageant.

A student at Midland College, Tiffany is the daughter of Jan and Eddie Thornton of Odessa.

The state event is being produced by GuyRex Productions, the duo who is responsible for six Miss Texas USA's becoming Miss USA winners (five of those receiving the title in consecutive years). Native Midlander Barbara Buckley Collinsworth is a former Miss Texas USA.

PAUL STALEY, a graduating senior at Midland High School, was honored recently with a dinner party at La Bodega Restaurant.

Balloons, confetti and serpentine provided a festive atmosphere.

Host couples were Nadine and Tom Craddick, Lynda and Carty Beal, Linda and Rodney Satterwhite, Sue and Dan Secker, Betty and Al Schorre, Ann and Dick Dunbar and Sherry and Jerry Hewett.

Paul is the son of Sandra and George Staley.

MARCY STANDEFER of Dallas and former Midlander Lt. Mark Tate of Cheyenne, Wyo., met in a grocery story at College Station during their undergraduate days at Texas A&M University, and as they say, the rest is history.

The couple were married Feb. 22 in Dallas. After a honeymoon in Puerta Vallarta, where they enjoyed para sailing, they are at home in Cheyenne. Mark is stationed there with the United States Air Force.

The Postman's Slogan, which begins, "Neither snow, nor rain, nor heat nor gloom of night..." applies to the pair, who drove through rain, fog, snow, sleet and hail to reach their destination by the appointed time.

The wedding in Dallas' St. Patrick's Catholic Church was followed by a reception given by the bride's parents, Paulette and Larry Standefer of Dallas, at the Plano Country Club. The groom's parents, Gina and Gordon Tate of Midland, hosted the rehearsal dinner at a Dallas restaurant. It featured entertainment by a piano player and a slide show of the couple from their infancies through their college days. The evening would not have been complete without the traditional Aggie War Hymn, sung by the many Aggies in attendance.

Pre-nuptial festivities included a miscellaneous shower at the home of June Adams of Dallas, a shower hosted by Zoe Weinrick and a couple's shower given by the bride's sisters, Laura Lynch, Karen Hines and Sara Standefer.

Mark is a graduate of Lee High School, and both he and Marcy have their degrees from A&M.

TRIPS: Destinations unusual

(From 1F)

Pasquarelli wrote. For information call (915) 568-4518.

■ Hueco Tanks State Historical Park, 26 miles east of El Paso on US 62-180. This park is the site of Indian petroglyphs and "natural water basins (huecos) store water from the rainfalls." There are places for picnicking and plenty of rocks for young ones to climb. Information number is (915) 859-4100.

■ W.J. McDonald Observatory, 15 miles northwest of Fort Davis on State Highway 118, then two miles southeast on Spur 78. The museum is open all year, with its "astronomical exhibits and audio-visual presentations," the authors wrote; however, tours of the 82-inch reflecting telescope are limited to the last Wednesday of each month, and the authors warn: "There is a long waiting list; reservations three to six months ahead of time are recommended." For more information call (915) 426-3423 or write P.O. Box 1337, Fort Davis, Texas, 79734.

■ Vereins Kirche, 112 West Main Street on Market Square in Fredericksburg. Ever wanted to see an eight-sided building? Here's your chance. The building, which was built in 1847 and served as the town's first public building, a community church, school and town hall before becoming home to the Chamber of Commerce, also houses historical exhibits.

WANT TO GO visit some of the goofier attractions, both in and out of Texas? Jane and Michael Stern, in their book "Amazing America," have listed some of the more, shall we say, unusual attractions in the country.

For strange and unusual sights close to home, try:

■ The Oldest Continuously Inhabited Town in the United States, Acoma, N.M., off NM 23. Acoma was founded in 1075, the Sterns wrote. "The recorded history of Acoma began in the 11th century when Indians living on nearby Enchanted Mesa were starved off after an earthquake. They called this new town Acoma, which means 'close to heaven.'"

■ Old Rip, Eastland Courthouse, Main Street between Seamon and Lamar in Eastland. Generations of Texas children have grown up with the story of Old Rip, the horned toad who survived 31 years in the cornerstone of the Eastland Courthouse. The Sterns wrote that Justice of the Peace Ernest Wood placed the horned toad in the cornerstone of the courthouse in 1897. "By 1928 when the courthouse was about to be demolished to make way for a new one, all of Eastland knew about the toad that Mr. Woods had placed into the cornerstone. A crowd showed up at the demolition ceremony to see what had become of the amphibian... Judge Ed Pritchard removed some of the other things that had been placed into the cornerstone, including a Bible. Underneath it sat Old Rip. Eugene Day, a wealthy oilman, reached in and lifted up the dusty toad. He handed it to the town preacher, who handed it to Judge Pritchard, who held it up for all to see. Suddenly Old Rip started to shake and snapped back to life after a 31-year nap. A legend was born."

When Old Rip died a year later, he was embalmed and put on display at the Eastland courthouse, resting in his red velvet and silk-lined coffin.

■ The Stamp Window, Eastland Post Office. Eastland must be the place to go if you want to see the more unusual sights of Texas. A giant collage-mural, created by Marlene Johnson Johnson and 11 years in the making, is in the lobby of the Eastland Post Office, the Sterns wrote. The mural is made of 11,217 postage stamps. "The mural, which is 6x10-feet, contains enough stamps to send the whole building anywhere in the country by first-class mail," they wrote. Of course, between 1957, when the mural was begun, and 1968, when it was finished, first-class stamps cost a lot less than 29 cents.

YOU HAVE TO drive farther to see some of these sights, but you have to admit they are unusual:

■ The Most Exotic Signpost in America, junction of Routes 35 and 5 in Lynchville, Maine. The Sterns wrote that: "In the middle of Lynchville is the all-time hokey but true guidepost. It points in all directions, giving mileage to the town of Paris, Naples, Poland, Peru, Mexico, China, Norway, Denmark and Sweden, Maine — all authentic down-easter hamlets."

■ Lake Chargoggagoggmanchauggauggagoggchaubunagungamau, Route 12 and 197 in Webster, Mass. According to the Sterns, "The above-mentioned lake has an Indian name that is supposed to mean 'You fish on your side, I'll fish on my side, and nobody fishes in the middle.'" Does anybody really know how to pronounce it?

■ Mystery Hill, Haverhill Road south of Route 111 in North Salem, N.H. This location is billed as "America's Stonehenge," the authors write, "because it is supposed to be a neolithic computer that once determined solar and lunar events for ancient peoples. In 1975, stone fragments were unearthed here that linked the megalithic complex to Celts who once lived on the Iberian peninsula. In fact, the signature of the stonemason is believed to be written in Iberian Punic on one stone ..."Not everyone believes this, however. The Sterns admit that "Doubting Thomases have attributed Mystery Hill's stonework to an eccentric early 19th century farmer. If, in fact, he did build these rocks, caves and altars single-handedly, then he is surely one of our country's most imaginative environmental artists." In either case, the site is bound to be interesting.

■ THE CAMPBELL Museum, 1 Campbell Place in Camden, N.J. Really, no kidding, this museum is dedicated to soup bowls. Not just your ordinary plastic bowls either — the Sterns wrote: "There are Spode china, Wedgewood and laquered serving sets from the Orient. There are gold-embellished bowls and bowls of pure white porcelain. There are soup containers made to look like chickens, cabbages, rabbits, cows' heads, frogs and fish. There are broth bowls, ladles, soup plates and pot-a-oilles. There are even soup bowls here that date back to the sixth century B.C."

■ The Moonbow, Cumberland Falls State Park, U.S. 90 southwest of Corbin, Ky. This is only one of two places in the world where moonbows are visible, the Sterns wrote, and since the other one is on the Zambezi River in South Africa, your best chance of seeing a moonbow will be at Cumberland Falls. "It occurs about four or five days each month, when the moon is full and atmospheric conditions are right. The light from the moon is refracted in the mist produced by the falls, which results in an arch of white light occurring at the base of the Falls and continuing downstream."

■ Brown Mountain Lights, off NC 181 between Morgantown and Lenoir, N.C. The North Carolinian version of the Marfa Lights, these mysterious lights are visible only on fall nights. The Sterns wrote that in spite of legends attributing the lights to ghosts or couples cuddling in parked cars, "scientists say they are an electrical discharge, like slow lightning, that turns the air over Brown Mountain from a pale red glow to something that occasionally resembles skyrockets." Which, they wrote, is the perfect way for couples to test their love — if the "skyrockets" don't go off, forget the romance.

■ The Kitchens of Sara Lee, 500 Waukegan Road in Deerfield, Ill. Learn about America's second-favorite baker (after Betty Crocker of course) while touring the production line, the cheesecake room, Danish pastry room, oven room and freezing chamber, the Sterns wrote. And of course, at the end of the tour indulge in an assortment of goodies. Sounds well worth the trip, if only for the cheesecake.

■ The Longest Road Without a Curve, Route 46 between Route 81 (I-29) and North Dakota Route 30. And you thought our roads were straight and flat! According to the Sterns, this "arrow-straight highway" heads west about 15 miles south of Fargo, N.D., and goes 110 miles "until you've got to wake up and turn the wheel."

OF COURSE, if you want to stay really close to home, there's always the World's Largest Jackrabbit and the Meteor Crater in Odessa. Sights don't come stranger or more unusual than that.

N.Y. Times News Service

Recession in and recession out, there's really only one way to protect yourself from the vicissitudes of the economy. And that's to live cheaply.

To free-spenders horrified by the thought of reusing aluminum foil, snitching sugar and salt packets from the company cafeteria, or freezing leftover scrambled eggs, take courage from Amy Dacyczyn.

She lives in Leeds, Maine. She's the publisher of The Tightwad Gazette — and she may be the tightwaddiest person in America.

And proud of it.

Hers is a rags-to-riches story that also includes recycled juice-can lids, egg cartons and homemade baby wipes.

Since Dacyczyn launched her monthly newsletter in June 1990, its circulation has shot from 12 to 91,000. At $12 a pop, that translates into a very neat — and very untightwaddy — income of about $1 million a year. Add to that another six figures from a book deal she's negotiating with a division of Random House.

But it's not like Dacyczyn needs the dough.

Before she launched the Gazette, the homemaker and graphics artist was able to wring riches from her husband's $30,000 Navy salary. On that alone, in seven years, she and Jim Dacyczyn and their four children lived so frugally they were able to save $49,000 for the down payment on their dream home: a $125,000, rural pre-1900 New England farmhouse.

Today her husband is retired from the Navy and is chief executive officer of the Gazette. The couple has two more children — twins who are 8 months old — and they've become America's royal family of life on a shoestring. They've appeared on network television — the "Today" show and the "ABC Evening News" — and on the cover of numerous publications, including Parade magazine and The Wall Street Journal.

The Dacyczyns' world, of course, is a place where, instead of time, cheap is of the essence. So if you're a person who doesn't have two hours to make saltine crackers you could buy for 79 cents, then maybe you're not tightwad timber.

But in any case, you're safe. The Dacyczyns not only have taught us to pinch a penny until Lincoln hollers, along the way they've helped make the world a place where skinflints aren't social outcasts.

"During the 1980s a lot of people were saving, but they were kind of in hiding," Dacyczyn said. "Now they're coming out of the closet. It's getting more respectable not to be a spendthrift."

Quilters sew friendship

By Jennifer Scott

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Four women sit around a huge wooden frame quilting an intricate pattern of interlocking circles. Called the the double wedding ring, the popular quilting pattern originated in the 19th century.

The pattern of interlocking circles represents not only the pattern of the fabric, but also the friendship of the quilters.

The lives of four San Angelo women interlock every week as they meet to enjoy both quilting and fellowship as the "Friendship Quilters."

All with individual quilts to their credit, Janet Hightower, Barbara Keilers, Donna Landers and Elenora Middlebrook belonged to a larger quilting club in San Angelo but broke off to form a more intimate group interested in more progressive quilting.

Together the four women have 85 years of quilting experience and even more years of life experience.

"We quilt for each other and for our own pleasure," Janet says.

The women explain that quilters have to develop a certain rhythm so that the stitches flow naturally.

Sharing each other's lives also has become natural. "We solve all the world's problems right here," Janet says.

WHILE QUILTING, the women discuss an endless variety of topics ranging from their families to world events and entertainment.

"Sometimes it's the latest TV show," Barbara says.

"Today we talked about prison sentences," Elenora says.

"There's nothing we can't tell each other," Janet adds.

In the fast paced world of the '90s, quilting also is a way to slow things down.

"You can't hurry it," Donna says.

"If I'm troubled about something, I can sit down" and quilt, Janet says.

Elenora, who has been quilting for 35 years, says she enjoys "the satisfaction of being able to accomplish something that's beautiful and everyone loves."

She has tried other needlework such as sewing and embroidery, but none are as satisfying as quilting, she says.

AP Laserphoto

The "Friendship Quilters," from left, Donna Landers, Elenora Middlebrook, Barbara Keilers and Janet Hightower, get together once a week to quilt. Together they have a total of 85 years quilting experience.

Elenora adds that the creativity among the four flows when they quilt as a group.

"When we work together, we throw out ideas," she says.

Recently, Donna, Janet, Elenora and former group member Norma Smith won recognition for having the first-place group quilt at the International Quilt Festival in Houston for their Baltimore Album Quilt "Our Hearts Have Wings." Now the group is busy making a wall quilt for Smith, who has moved to Roswell, N.M.

A quilt Donna made in 1976 also has been recognized. Her red calico and white muslin Virginia Reel quilt is featured in the book "Lone Stars: A Legacy of Texas Quilts, 1936-1986."

"I come from a long line of quilters. I just have an affinity for it. I'm drawn to it," says Donna, who has been quilting for 22 years.

"I enjoy quilting together, but also alone," she adds. "I do it for the quietness of spirit."

OVER THE years, each has made individual quilts as gifts for family members as well as for the enjoyment of the craft.

Pieced quilts, in which the quilter cuts and sews pieces of material together in a pattern before the quilting begins, require not only technique but planning and imagination.

Barbara, a quilter for 22 years, says planning a quilt gives her an "adrenalin high" like an exerciser gets from working out.

"At the beginning that rush is just wonderful," she says.

"I've stayed up all night long," Donna adds.

Each of the quilters is self-taught, except Janet who has been quilting for about six years and learned from the other quilters. Janet says she already is addicted.

Regardless of whether for the sake of art or companionship, the age-old craft of quilting seems to be making a revival. Quilting groups are springing up across the nation and books documenting both historical and modern quilts are being published.

"Young women today must work and don't have time to make a large-size quilt," Barbara says.

But that should not deter them from trying the worthwhile hobby, she says, suggesting that women interested in quilting learn the technique by first trying a project that takes less time, such as a baby quilt, wall hanging or pillow.

For less-ambitious or beginning quilters, "Cheater's Cloth" is available that includes a pattern pre-printed on the fabric, eliminating the need to piece the quilt before quilting.

DEAR ABBY

Grandma says mouths need potty training

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have several grandchildren under 10 years of age, and I am so concerned about how they talk to their parents — name-calling and naughty words that I, as a child, would have never been allowed to use. I have suggested to their parents that they should not allow this, and they say, "They hear it from other kids" and, "We have tried sending them to their room — nothing works. We guess they will grow out of it."

Van Buren

I can't believe all children are that disrespectful to their parents. Our children never would have been allowed to say such disrespectful words — they would have gotten a punishment that they would have remembered for a long time. We weren't child abusers, but we believed in discipline.

As a result, we raised very polite and respectful children, so it is a mystery to both my husband and me why our children did not teach their children courtesy and respect as they were taught. I am very worried about our future world. — CONCERNED GRANDMOTHER

DEAR GRANDMOTHER: Don't give up so easily. When they are in your care, insist that they meet your standards, and correct them firmly and consistently. Children will push adults to the limit, testing to see how much they can get away with. Reward them for good behavior and punish them for bad behavior. Surprisingly enough, children feel more secure knowing what their limits are. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 32-year-old, struggling single mother with a very intelligent 4-year-old daughter.

After being out of school for 15 years, I decided to return to school and make a career for myself.

Recently I learned I'm pregnant. Abortion is not an option for me. So, I decided to give up the baby for adoption, as the father of the child does not want any responsibility.

I will be showing shortly, and my question is how — and what — do I tell my daughter? A sister and a sister-in-law recently had babies, and my daughter knows when tummies get "fat," there is a baby on the way.

I don't know how to tell her I am giving our baby away. Your advice is needed, Abby. — WORRIED IN A BIG CITY

DEAR WORRIED: Answer her questions honestly. She may not be able to comprehend everything you tell her, but stick to the truth. There are some compassionate, non-judgmental counselors at your local Planned Parenthood facilities. Seek them out, and tell them that "Dear Abby" suggested you call on them. Good luck, and God bless you.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the article about the 70-year-old lady who talked to herself. I am recently widowed and 81 years old, and have decided it is all right to say, "What am I going to do today?"

Or, watching TV, I might say, "Isn't that funny?" And when I am looking for something, I might say, "Where did I put it?"

Living alone is a new way of life for me, and I rather enjoy using my voice once in a while in this big, empty house. It's sad enough to be left without your spouse without giving up your voice, too.

Is there anything wrong with that? — SYLVIA IN IDA GROVE, IOWA

DEAR SYLVIA: Nothing whatsoever. Another widow wrote to say, "I talk to myself when I feel the need for intelligent conversation."

AT WIT'S END

Forget presidency - go for bucks

By Erma Bombeck

There was a time when the aspirations parents had for their children were narrowed down to two choices.

A daughter could do no better than to marry a doctor. If you gave birth to a son, the ultimate goal for him was to grow up to become president of the United States.

Bombeck

Not anymore. Malpractice suits could tie your daughter's community assets up in court for the rest of her life, and the theme song for this year's election is "Mamas, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Presidents."

It is fast coming to the point where I don't want to elect anyone stupid enough to want the job. First, there is no security. A president can look forward to four to eight years' employment — tops. Then what does he do? Write his memoirs? Play a little golf? Build houses? Visit his library?

The job of running doesn't teach the candidates anything about life. They hang around the house (in a married or celibate state) until they're 35 years old. Then they try to raise $8 million from strangers to tell who they are to people who want to know who they were. They do this by flashing their pictures on television and displaying photos on every telephone post and in every store window. It's reminiscent of the 500 friendship pictures my son ordered in high school. He should have told me he had only three friends. I'm still using them for tips and coasters.

The presidency is a job without dignity. Candidates beg for bucks, kiss babies and fannies, and hang out with people they wouldn't sit next to on a crowded bus. They wear funny hats and act like they're enjoying weird food their mothers could not pay them to eat.

But the worst part is that in some jobs you can please some of the people most of the time and most of the people some of the time, but as president, you can't please any of the people any of the time. If you're humble, you're a wimp; assertive, you're strident; compassionate, you're weak; polite, you're dead in the water.

The presidency is a dead-end job with no chance for advancement. Why five men would stomp around the country, working 18 hours a day, to try to get the attention of voters who vow to write in Pee-wee Herman on Election Day is beyond me.

Personally, I'd advise my daughter to become a rock star and my son to become a second baseman for the Chicago Cubs. So, they shouldn't die poor.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

"BANDAID" HYSTERECTOMY
"In practice for life"

Hysterectomy remains one of the most common surgical procedures in the United States. Approximately two-thirds of these procedures are performed through an abdominal incision, increasing the pain after surgery and delaying a woman's return to normal activity. The most common reasons for the abdominal over the vaginal approach are a large uterus, a need to visualize or remove the ovaries, or suspected pelvic scar tissue.

A new procedure called laparoscopically assisted vaginal hysterectomy (LAVH) combines the principles of "bandaid surgery" and vaginal hysterectomy to eliminate the need for a large abdominal scar and shorten the recovery period and hospital stay. Two or three one-half inch incisions are made on the abdomen and special staples or sutures are used to disconnect the ovaries and main blood vessels to the uterus. The rest of the procedure is done through the vagina. LAVH will not entirely replace the need for abdominal surgery but represents an important advance in modern women's health care.

If you or someone you love are considering surgery, contact our office without obligation for more information on LAVH.

Book on marriage gets mixed reception

By Jamie Reno
Copley News Service

In the living room of his suburban San Diego home, Evan Keliher is sitting not so pretty.

Toking on a fat cigar, the 59-year-old author and former teacher is reading aloud from his new book, a chauvinists' manifesto titled "For Men Only! (How to Survive Marriage)."

In the book, Keliher tells men that to make it postnuptially they should, among other things, participate in extramarital affairs, refuse to do housework, marry money if possible, and add new vices now and then as a sign of independence.

The book, Keliher contends, is strictly satire. "It's not meant to be taken too seriously. It's humor."

But some women who have read it are not laughing.

"It's disgusting," says Dorothy Blaire, an attorney who works in a downtown law firm. She read only four of the 38 chapters before concluding it was filled with stereotypes about men and women.

"It might be funny if it weren't for the fact that so many people still think this way," Blaire says. "This book is really damaging to women."

Barbara Dilsaver, a homemaker and mother of three who read the entire book, didn't find it the least bit amusing.

"Oh, it's hilarious — unless you're a woman," she deadpans. "The attitudes in this book are what women are fighting against. If this was about a race of people or any other group besides women, it never would have been published."

But Benny Hamilton, a manager of a sporting-goods store, laughed out loud as he read it.

"I don't agree with some of the things he says. The writer is definitely not living in the '90s," Hamilton says. "But the book is funny, and it's good for guys. There's been enough books putting us down."

Chapters include "Stopping Her Nagging," "Having a 'Boys' Night Out,'" "Winning Arguments" and "Feminist Wives," in which Keliher suggests that women aren't happy because they are trying to be more like men.

"They've found out it's no fun working at some dreary job for some ignoramus who underpays 'em and drives 'em half nuts eight hours a day," he writes.

Does he really believe all this?

"Well, no, not all of it entirely," he says in a diplomatic voice not found in the book.

He says he's just trying to make the point that men need to get their manhood back.

"There are a lot of wimps out there who are letting women control their lives," he says. "That just isn't manly."

In spite of the book's unabashed arrogance, Keliher insists it is tongue-in-cheek. He says he is not a misogynist.

"I'm no dyed-in-the-wool sexist pig," he sniffs. "I am no Andrew Dice Clay. I believe in equal rights and equal pay, and I absolutely believe women can do anything men can do. And I am disgusted by the mean-spirited comedy and music out there, the stuff that really victimizes women. I don't hate women. I love women."

But, he adds, "Men and women are forgetting what make them unique. We are all victims somewhat of our genetic code. Men need to be men."

Keliher says he wrote the book to good-naturedly counter what he thinks is an increasing amount of male bashing.

"Watch the talk shows. Read the women's magazines. Look at the books in the bookstores. Everywhere you go, women are saying what clumsy, worthless oafs men are and getting away with it," he says. "Men are mostly just sitting back and taking it. In a fun way, this book tells men they have to stick up for themselves."

Across the book's cover, in bold print it reads, "Don't EVER let your wife read this book."

But at least one man's wife has read it.

Patricia Keliher, 57, who has been married to Evan Keliher for 39 years, is quick to note that she is not the woman and not the wife depicted in her hubby's book.

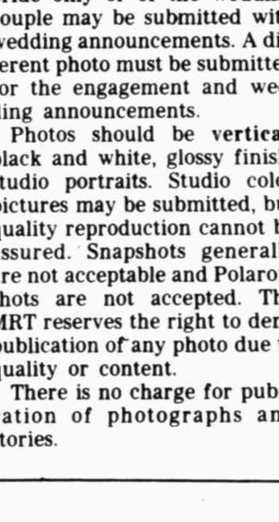

She has a master's degree in library science and has always worked — "except when the kids were real young."

"I consider myself a liberated woman, and frankly, I hated Evan's book when I first read it," she confesses. "But I think he's a good writer, and I know what kind of marriage we have. That's what counts. I hope it's a best-seller."

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Oak wilt fungus is destructive to trees

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

Live and red oak trees have become a very important part of Midland landscapes. They are both very beautiful and popular trees for landscapes and if something were to happen to these two types of trees, many Midland landscapes would suffer. Oak Wilt Fungus is a destructive disease of live, red, shumard and blackjack oak species.

Yes, this is the oak disease that you've heard so much about in the Texas Hill Country. In the late 70s it was reported that oak wilt fungus was the primary cause of oak mortality. The fungus is reported to exist in over 50 Texas counties ... one of which is Midland County.

There is one leaf symptom that is a good indicator of oak wilt fungus in live oak trees. Infected trees will have a general yellow appearance to the leaves, but the tale, tale signs are brown leaf veins with light green leaf tissue in between the brown veins. Leaves will defoliate soon after these leaf symptoms appear. This is a key characteristic leaf symptom of oak wilt fungus on live oak trees. But there are several other leaf symptoms that are less dependable as disease symptoms and they make diagnosing oak wilt fungus very difficult without a laboratory test.

With red oaks, like the shumard and Spanish red oaks, the symptoms are very different. Wilting is the first symptom. Tips of the leaves turn brown and this continues, progressing toward the leaf mid-vein, until the entire leaf is brown. Leaves are retained on the tree for several months after the tree has died. In the case of red oaks, the trees die within about seven to 10 days after the symptoms are observed.

Red oaks also will develop fungal mats on the wood beneath the bark of diseased trees. These mats are usually football shaped and gray to black in color. Then only outward evidence of fungal mat is a slightly raised bark that could possibly have a crack in it.

The disease spreads in a number of ways. Sap feeding beetles are attracted to the oak wilt fungus spore mates. The spores become attached to their bodies and then they fly to nearby trees to feed on tree sap that can be found at the surface of pruning cuts and injuries. The spores attached to the insect enter the trees vascular tissue and it is spreads throughout the tree.

Firewood from diseased red oaks, Spanish oaks and shumard oaks is a method of spreading the oak wilt fungus from one area to another.

Roots of oaks will graft with one another that are growing in the same area. This is a common way oak wilt fungus will spread from one infected tree to another tree or trees.

There are two methods of controlling oak wilt fungus. One is to prevent oak wilt fungus from becoming established in an area and the other is controlling the disease that is established in an area.

Since most of Midland fits into the first category, let's look at how to prevent the establishment of the disease in an area.

This is for susceptible oak species only: Paint pruning cuts and wounds with a pruning paint or wound dressing to prevent the sap feeding beetles from spreading the disease to the trees.

Prune susceptible oak species during January and early February, when the sap feeding beetle is least active.

Firewood that could harbor the spore mats can be cut and stored during the summer in direct sun and dried to prevent spore mats from forming on logs. Wood should be covered with clear plastic sheeting with ends tucked under so temperatures will build up high enough to kill oak wilt fungus.

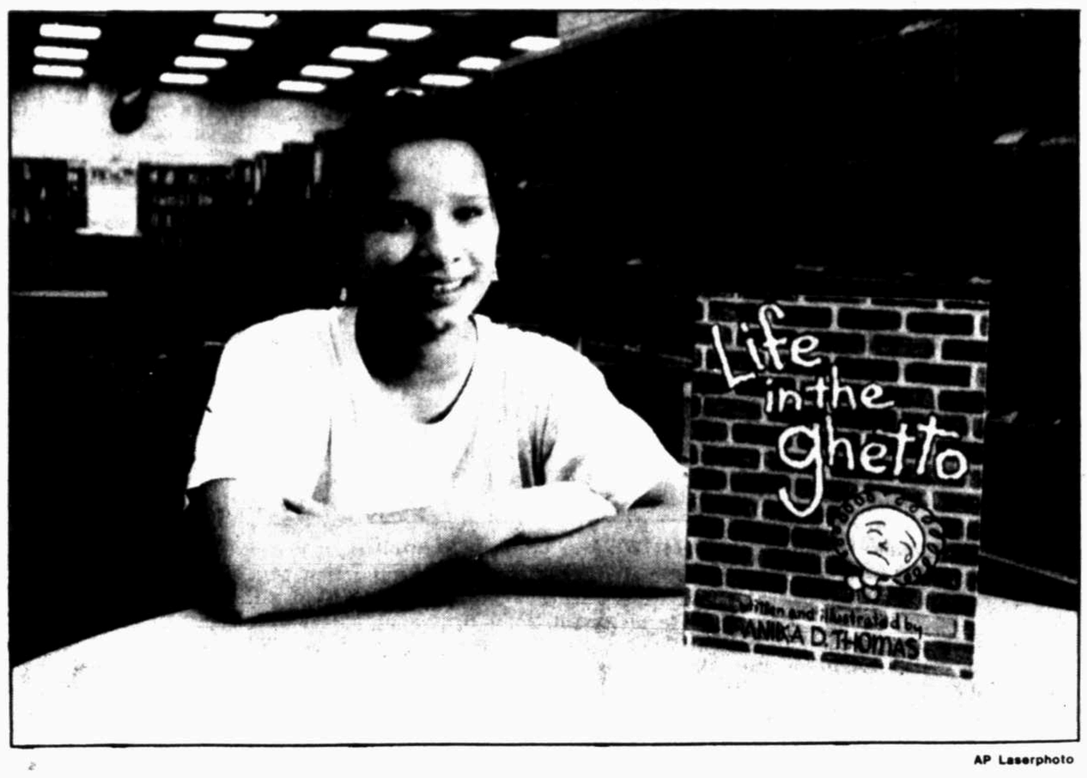

Wednesday at 7 p.m. there will be an Oak Wilt Fungus Update Extension Educational Program at Midland College in the Chaparral Student Building, 3600 N. Garfeild. If you are concerned about your oak trees or you work with trees, you'll want to attend this informative meeting.

Dr. Jerrel Johnson, Texas Agricultural Extension Plan Pathologist will be present to evaluate the Midland County situation, how to protect, how to identify and treat infected trees. Johnson has had extensive experience with the oak wilt fungus disease throughout Texas.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Girl's book chronicles ghetto life

By Jim Urban

AP Laserphoto

Anika Thomas sits with her book, "Life in the Ghetto," in her high school library last December. Thomas' book, about life in an urban jungle, was chosen from 7,000 entries to be published by Landmark Enterprises.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Anika Thomas has written a book about the ghetto — about crack houses, crime and boarded-up buildings, about racism and despair. She has written a children's book that makes grown men cry.

Anika is 13 years old. And the world she writes about is the world she sees through the windows of her family's home.

"I sometimes wish I could be like Dorothy in 'The Wizard of Oz.' I wish a tornado would grab mom and me up and blow us far away to another land," she writes. "But if that tornado never comes to take us away ... then I will do it myself."

Anika's autobiography, "Life in the Ghetto," was one of three winners selected from more than 7,000 submissions to the nationwide "Written and Illustrated By ... " contest sponsored by Landmark Editions Inc.

Landmark Editions has published the 29-page, hardback book; a first printing of 7,500 copies has sold out, and a second printing is under way. Anika gets a 5 percent royalty on all book sales, along with a $5,000 scholarship.

ANIKA'S BOOK may be for children, but it is a far cry from Dr. Seuss.

She tells of children who taunt and beat her because her skin isn't as dark as theirs even though she herself is black. She describes how drug abusers leave used syringes on the street outside the home she shares with her widowed mother in Pittsburgh's rough Hill District neighborhood.

And she tells of 11 prostitutes who share the apartment below when they weren't walking the street in the front of the building.

She has illustrated her book with her own drawings — drunks, portraits of her relatives, even a depiction of that make-believe tornado.

"It's just gripping," an American version of "The Diary of Anne Frank,"said David Melton, creative coordinator for Landmark Editions Inc.

"The first time I read the book, I had tears rolling down my cheeks. I flipped back to the beginning and started reading again. It was one of the most touching documents written by a child that I've ever read."

ANIKA IS A shy girl, but she promotes her book in visits to elementary schools throughout Pennsylvania. She presents a slide show, answers any questions the students ask — Has she seen weapons? Are the drug dealers dangerous? Is she scared? The answers are yes, yes and yes — and sells copies of the book.

All the money is placed in a trust fund that will be used to pay for her college education.

If "Life in the Ghetto" is the work of a child, in many ways it is a testimony to her mother, Barbara Jones. It was Barbara Jones who first suggested that Anika chronicle her life, but Anika gives her far more credit than that — it was her mother's guidance that has kept her off the streets.

"There's people getting beat up and shot at," Anika said in an interview at Brashear High School, where she is in ninth grade.

"There's needles on the sidewalk and people fighting over drugs. Some kids go behind our building in the alley and start drinking, smoking and using other stuff. Some were between the ages — I think — of 4 and 8."

YEARS AGO, Anika said, she cried because she wasn't able to play outside without her mother watching. It meant she had to spend a lot of time inside. She cherishes that time now.

But Mrs. Jones did not raise a shrinking violet. Where once she chastised children who abused or stole from Anika when the girl was young, Mrs. Jones pushed her to become more aggressive as she grew older.

Once, when her daughter was bothered by a classmate, she told Anika not to come home until she fought the girl and won.

Six of Anika's five brothers and four sisters attended college and three have their degrees. Mrs. Jones said Anika learned from her siblings, gaining maturity and direction.

Mrs. Jones was always at home, having quit her job as a neurology technician in 1973 when her daughter Shono began suffering epileptic seizures.

The book is dedicated to Mrs. Jones and Shono, who died in 1988 after falling and hitting her head during a seizure. She slipped into a coma for several days before passing away, as Anika and her mother watched.

"I miss Shono every day," Anika writes in the book. "I loved her so much and know I always will."

EVENTUALLY, ANIKA says, she wants to move to California and attend college there, taking her mother along. Mrs. Jones doesn't like the idea. As bad at it is in their neighborhood, she said she's read enough about California to know what it is like there.

"They have earthquakes and gangbangers — or whatever they call them," she said. And "I don't like those drive-by shootings."

But Anika is undeterred. She wants to be a newspaper reporter someday: "After I graduate from college, I am going to find a good job and I am going to get us out of here," she writes at the book's end.

"Time has a way of passing fast, so it won't be such a long wait."

"Life in the Ghetto" is available in bookstores, or by mail from Landmark Editions Inc., 1402 Kansas Ave., Kansas City, Mo., 64127. Enclose $12.95 and $3 for shipping and handling.

Group tours can make travel plans easier

By George L. Rosenblatt
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Group tour — these are two words that often conjure up the image of a roving menagerie of renegade petit-bourgeois party animals rudely stampeding foreign lands.

Some tours may still fit that image. Fewer still offer a paradise for the independent traveler.

But the world of global travel — especially in Europe — has a niche for group tours that can prove both welcome and constructive for all concerned.

For many tourists — especially first-timers — joining a group tour can provide nearly all the essentials of touristic life in a cocoonesque environment — transportation, lodging, education, food, companionship, security, even a sense of purpose.

The price can be marginally or substantially below what an individual would pay for the same trip.

FACTORS AFFECTING what a tour participant gets for the price include the operator's professional acumen, the season, the destination and assorted economic conditions.

But other influences are hard to price or quantify except in terms of temperament.

"Any time you are on a group tour, you compromise some freedom," said David Love, spokesman for the American Society of Travel Agents. With 21,000 members in 129 countries, the Alexandria, Va.-based ASTA is the world's largest travel trade association.

Given the fact that group travel is governed by consensus, he suggests that people considering group travel find a package closest to what they are looking for in terms of pace, temperament and approach, as well as itinerary and price.

"When you talk to your travel agent, say up front what your wants and needs are," Love said.

WHILE GROUP travel appeals to a broad base of people, even those in the business recognize that it is not for everyone.

"A certain percentage of people just doesn't want to be around other people," said Michael Rudd, Kansas City-based regional sales manager of Travellers International.

The St. Louis-based firm is a U.S. operator of upscale motorcoach tours in Britain, Europe, the Middle East, Africa, Latin America and the South Pacific.

Long a supplier of Getaway vacation programs for financially troubled Trans World Airlines, Travellers next month will start servicing 29 itineraries for British Airways.

'We get an average of 50 percent who have never been to Europe before. We have clients who have been to Europe on their own, and they come onto one of our groups and say, 'Oh, we missed all that!' '

— Dr. Letizia Taddeo
tour director

Rudd and Love agree that group tours are the way to go for for some travelers, especially those who have not done much traveling or are going to a new area.

Group travel can reduce anxiety levels rooted in fear of the unknown — strange places, strange languages, strange foods.

Food is especially important to group travelers, Rudd said, citing an ambivalence between the solace of the familiar and the adventure of the unfamiliar.

Whether to try? What to try? Where to try? And is it safe to walk there? These are among the questions most often asked by group travelers who look to the group's guide for the answers.

NOVICE TRAVELERS account for a lot of such inquiries, but by no means all, for group ranks include numerous experienced travelers, too.

"We get an average of 50 percent who have never been to Europe before," said Dr. Letizia Taddeo, a Travellers tour director based in Florence, Italy.

"We have clients who have been to Europe on their own," she said, "and they come onto one of our groups and say, 'Oh, we missed all that!' "

Going alone generally forfeits whatever benefits would accrue from having an experienced, knowledgeable guide who can immediately point out or explain the worthwhile, the significant, the historic, the interesting.

BUT PERHAPS most important among group-tour draws may be the changing nature of the tours. They are gradually featuring more latitude, more free time, more options than in years past.

Travelers fit into 'psychological profiles'

NEW YORK (AP) — In this wide world of vacation possibilities, why do you choose an adventure cruise to Antarctica while your neighbors opt for a motor home trip to a familiar resort?

Dr. Stanley Plog, a noted psychologist and author of "Leisure Travel, Making it a Growth Market ... Again!" (1991, Wiley, $39.95) says your travel choice is determined by your travel personality profile.

There are two distinct travel personality types — psychocentric and allocentric — he says, and travel professionals need to understand them to better serve vacationers.

The psychocentric ("psyche" refers to the self, therefore one who focuses his thoughts or concerns on small problems in daily life) is home-loving and family-oriented, preferring to go places that are similar to their home environment, Plog says.

Psychocentrics like to eat familiar foods, to travel with family and friends or organized tours with structured itineraries and to go only where their language is native. They travel by car or motor home and visit well-developed resorts not too far afield. Disneyland is an ideal destination, as are cities where family members live. In the extreme, psychocentrics don't leave home at all. Rather they spend vacation time and discretionary income on home improvement projects.

Allocentrics (the Latin root "allo" means varied in form — thus those with varied interests) are adventurous and like to wander the globe in search of unspoiled environments and undiscovered pockets of indigenous cultures.

Allocentrics like exotic foods, don't mind traveling alone, collect native arts and crafts and spend more money on travel than psychocentrics do. They want to visit different places on each trip and will alter itineraries as they hear of appealing places. They trek through Tibet one year, study weaving in Oaxaca the next. In the extreme, they throw caution to the wind, venturing into areas or situations others might consider uncomfortable, even dangerous.

Most travelers combine psychocentric and allocentric traits. They neither cling to home nor test fate but find varying degrees of pleasure in the range of possibilities that fit between the extremes.

Plog's research has helped shape the travel industry. One study of traveler preferences led to development of the Boeing 767 aircraft with its comfortable seating configurations.

Another study concerned travel habits of readers of Endless Vacation, a magazine distributed to time-share owners. It was assumed that time-share owners — people buying for a few weeks annually a home away from home — are psychocentric. But those interviewed proved to be allocentric, using time-shares to spend with family and then taking additional vacations to cultural capitals abroad or to go white-water rafting. As a result of the study, Endless Vacation expanded editorial coverage and changed marketing strategy.

Getting to know your own travel personality profile can help you select destinations more successfully. Ask yourself whether you enjoy familiar places or those that are totally different from any place you've been before. Do you need traveling companions or like to go off on your own? Does the thought of speaking a foreign language terrify you, or are you willing to struggle to communicate in Spanish, Swahili or sign language?

If you prefer the unusual, traveling alone and will try languages, you have an allocentric bent and can choose almost any destination, except those that are overly touristy.

If you prefer the familiar, you're probably psychocentric. The greatest danger for you as a traveler is that you might narrow your horizons so much that you don't get to see anything of the rest of the world.

Spring Fiesta showcases city's history

Staff Report

NEW ORLEANS — New Orleans has one of the most colorful histories and cultures of any city in the world. Each year beginning the Friday after Easter, the Spring Fiesta Association shares that heritage with visitors and locals alike during the Spring Fiesta celebration.

This year's celebration will be April 24-29. The Fiesta opens with the traditional presentation of the Spring Fiesta Queen and her court, followed by the "Night in Old New Orleans" parade through the French Quarter.

Throughout the event, several of New Orleans' finest private homes open their doors to the public to give them a taste of life in another era. A series of walking tours covers homes in the French Quarter, Uptown, Garden District and Lower Garden District. Women dressed in antebellum finery serve as hostesses to adorn the homes and tell of their histories and furnishings.

The event also includes day-long plantation tours. Participants experience the majesty and graciousness of the old South as they are transported to Oak Alley, Houmas House, L'Hermitage and Bocage.

The Spring Fiesta Association is a nonprofit organization dedicated to preserving, enhancing and encouraging the living trust of New Orleans and Louisiana history, culture, habits and customs. For a complete schedule of Spring Fiesta events, call (504) 581-1367, or write New Orleans Spring Fiesta, 826 St. Ann Street, New Orleans, La., 70116.

Dan Burt critiques a watercolor by Mackay Jackson during his recent workshop at the Museum of the Southwest . The workshop was sponsored by the Midland Arts Association and the museum, and held in conjunction with the Midland Arts Association Spring Show. Doris Spires' oil (above) was among the entries chosen for the Spring Show.

Symphony of Colors

By Georgia Todd Temple

Greg Price's oil titled "Peonies" (above) received the Best of Show award. Dorothy Baird's watercolor titled "A Spring Show" received the Paint & Palette art store's award for realism.

Pleasure is the motivating force behind artist Dan Burt's works.

"I try to please myself," he said. "I'm sure that's true for thousands of other artists. Otherwise, I don't see any reason to paint."

Burt, an artist from Kerrville who began painting in 1965, was in Midland recently serving as juror for the Midland Arts Association's Spring Show, hanging through April 18 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

While he was here, Burt, who is currently working in watercolors, also conducted a watercolor workshop attended by 15 artists.

"As I get older, I'll have to find new avenues, and I may even have to find a new medium, but right now transparent watercolor suits my needs," Burt said.

"I use color for value. Color for me plays a primary role in this imaginary emotional statement I'm trying to make for my own pleasure."

ART: Show contains various styles

(From 1G)

In talking about art and artists, Burt said he finds many parallels between music and art.

"I think it's the same thing — music and painting. You do both on scales. The scales in painting are color values and you try to make a symphony that visually pleases rather than pleasing the ear. Instead of the sound stimulation it's a visual stimulation."

He finds certain frustrations inherent in juroring a show.

"They're always hard to judge because it's sort of like comparing apples, oranges and bananas. One is not better than the other. Different styles and techniques to me are not better than others. I would personally like to see six or seven awards that are all the same, but no show is that way so I did the best I could."

He enjoyed the art he found in MAA's show.

"I had a good time looking at it," Burt said. "It contains varied styles, techniques, imaginations, content and concepts so it was a pleasure to see."

For MAA's Spring Show, 151 entries from 73 artists were received, and Burt chose 82 pieces of art work.

In his juror's statement, Burt said: "It was a pleasure to see so much imagination, emotion, intuition and originality under one roof, and I enjoyed every minute of it. I regret that many worthwhile pieces could not be included due to space limitations."

'I think it's the same thing — music and painting. You do both on scales. The scales in painting are color values and you try to make a symphony that visually pleases rather than pleasing the ear. Instead of the sound stimulation it's a visual stimulation.'

— Dan Burt

MAA has two shows annually.

"In the fall we chose a judge that is either a professor at a university or a curator of a museum so that the show leans towards a contemporary look at art," said Cynthia Wolfe, MAA treasurer.

"In the spring, we look for a working artist. This working artist usually will lean towards the realistic approach to art. This way we give our members an opportunity to display their work in whatever style they chose. That way, we try to satisfy everybody."

This year, MAA and the museum are entering into a closer working relationship due to an accreditation process the museum is undergoing.

"Now that we are going to be an affiliated organization to the museum, we now can have our meetings at the facility," said Ms. Wolfe. "We are now allowed to have one-man shows featuring a Midland Arts Association member. These changes increase our creditibility."

Mrs. Wolfe said the artists participating in MAA are pleased with this closer association with the Museum of the Southwest.

"This broadens our base," Mrs. Wolfe said. "We're letting Midlanders know that there is a working community of artists here."

The upcoming season features the Pasadena Roof Orchestra and dancers of London, showcasing favorites of the 1920s and '30s; The New Christy Minstrels Dec. 15 in a Christmas show; Neal Ramsey and the Meridian String Quartet; pianist Laura Spitzer; and guitarist Terrance Ferrell.

"They have written some of the music they sing. They are both very good on the guitar. They both share the singing duties. Their music is clever. Some of it is very humorous. They are just fun to listen to. They make you enjoy the folk music they play," Kay Nolan, Community Concerts representative from New York said.

Season memberships are being sold between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through March 28. To speak to a volunteer call 688-3111 during those hours or 684-5673 anytime.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 22, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Creative endeavors deserve top priority now. Delegate routine tasks to trusted associates while you search for novel outlets for your varied talents. June could bring an interesting change in personnel. Be open-minded. Contact with those in distant places will be rewarding, as long as you not invest in overseas firms next fall. Others will lavish time and money on you at Christmas. Be appreciative. New romantic and financial gains will make you smile early in 1993. A change of residence is possible by this time next year.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: sportscaster Bob Costas, actor Karl Malden, pantomimist Marcel Marceau, composer Andrew Lloyd Webber.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Things should go according to plan today. You feel more secure following a conversation with a romantic partner. Greater domestic harmony is achieved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Loved one makes you feel needed and appreciated. The day gets off to a happy start. Go ahead and take on more responsibility if you feel you can handle it. Promote marital bliss.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ties with family members and friends are under particularly favorable influences now. You are able to go against the odds and still gain an advantage. Guard against indiscreet behavior.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The social invitations you receive now may be linked to educational pursuits or travel. A relative who has been critical in the past begins to see things your way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take advantage of a spur-of-the-moment invitation, possibly related to unexpected visitors from out of town. Business advantages as well as a fun evening could be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look for a surprise in connection with an influential friend's overseas interests. Your advice may be sought. Maintain a practical outlook at all times and remember to listen.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Family matters and spiritual concerns occupy you today. Joining a religious or community group holds special appeal. Be careful not to promise more of your time than you can spare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A message from afar intrigues you. Friends offer their insights regarding your goals and aspirations. Entertaining at home will be fun if you include people of all ages.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Distant places still beckon to you. You are ready to unveil a secret financial source or pleasant surprise. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your mood changes rapidly today. It may be best to stay home and catch up on your reading. Refuse to quarrel with someone who has a chip on the shoulder. Be conciliatory.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid authority figures and get your mind off career pressures. A change of scenery will do wonders for your psyche. Find out what old friends have been doing. Meeting new people proves invigorating.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A platonic relationship may offer more rewards than romance. Visit a place you have long wanted to see. Plans for a brighter tomorrow could take root today. Be honest about your goals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
3 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

Falsecarding works both ways. Just as declarer can paint a false picture of the hand for the defenders, so clever defenders can entice declarer away from a winning line by offering a reasonable alternative.

South's preempt was perhaps a smidgeon light by normal standards, but the vulnerability was at its most favorable. East-West had some play for three spades, but neither was able to enter the auction and, if either did, the other was likely to commit the partnership to a hopeless game.

Since there was no point to a holdup, declarer won the first trick in dummy with the ace and led the three of trumps, which fetched the six, queen and four. Declarer exited with a low trump and was fortunate to find East had started with a doubleton ace. When declarer regained the lead, the last trump was drawn, and declarer lost just one trick in each suit to make the contract.

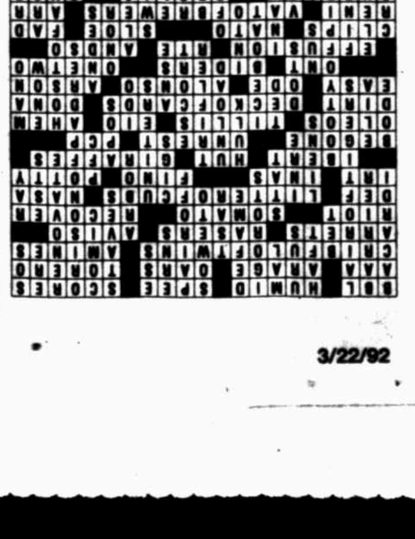

It all seems harmless enough. However, a crucial error was made. Did you spot the culprit?

West made life easy for declarer by following to the first trump trick with the four. With the A J 10 of trumps still missing, the only way declarer could limit losers in the trump suit to one was to hope that East had been dealt a doubleton ace.

Suppose that, instead, West were to drop the ten of trumps. Suddenly declarer has an alternative—South can continue with the king, playing West to have started with J 10 bare. This falsecard comes with no guarantee, but it does offer a reasonable chance. Who can ask for anything more?
