Justices face thorny issues

Supreme Court to reconvene with gay rights, redistricting cases

■ It remains to be seen whether majority that fashioned conservative victories last term will hold together.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Gay rights, the role of race in political redistricting, the fairness of census counts and gambling on Indian reservations top the agenda as the Supreme Court starts its 1995-96 term.

To the justices' lengthening docket, the Clinton administration is seeking high court endorsement of its effort to shatter the 156-year-old tradition of excluding women at the Virginia Military Institute.

The high court completed one of its most conservative terms in 40 years last June by moving aggressively to the right in dramatic rulings on affirmative action, voting rights, school desegregation, religion and privacy.

It remains to be seen when the justices reconvene Monday whether the majority that fashioned those conservative victories, most often by 5-4 votes, will hold together. Also unknown is whether new cases will provide the conservative bloc with the opportunity to continue this rightward shift.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist leads the court's conservative bloc. Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas are its most enthusiastic members.

In key cases last term, they were joined by Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony M. Kennedy, who are considered more moderate conservatives.

Justices John Paul Stevens, David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer most often were united in dissent.

"Last term's results lead me to approach the coming term with some considerable degree of concern and anxiety," said Steven Shapiro, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"Last year, the (court's) moderate middle collapsed. The question of whether that trend will continue ... bears watching," he said.

Spectators came pulling wagons, aiming cameras and looking overhead in awe at Saturday's Confederate Air Force's AirSho'95, and in all likelihood, no one left disappointed.

A show to top all shows was promised and delivered by the many volunteers who worked to put the show together and overcome a tragedy earlier in the week.

Spirits at the Saturday air show were high despite the crash of a CAF Martin B-26 Marauder on Thursday that killed all five on board. This air show would be dedicated to them, CAF officials said Thursday.

Jeff Foltz, of Houston, who serves as a crew member for the B-17 Texas Raider, said he expected a spirit of sadness to be looming over the show when he heard about the crash.

"But, what I saw was a distinct lack of that," Foltz said Saturday after the first day of the show.

Canadian Snowbirds share moment of power above city

EDITOR'S NOTE: Staff writer Ed Todd had an opportunity to fly with Canada's Snowbirds.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

From startup to shutdown, "The Boss" gingerly commands the flight of nine aircraft, the Canadian Forces' center-stage precision aerobatic team — the Snowbirds.

"Start 'em up," radios the moustached flight commander, Maj. Steve Hill.

He is "The Boss" and, dutifully in flight, is so addressed — respectfully so — by his comrades.

Down the flight line, his wingmen — one by one but in the perfectly disciplined precision and unison of their flying maneuvers — crank up their whining J-85 jet engines. At 2,700 pounds of thrust, each of the finely honed engines will propel the Canadair CT-114 Tutor up to 412 knots, or 470 mph, at top speed.

Church to kick off $5 million fund-raising drive

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A renovation/expansion project for First Baptist Church is going to take about two years to complete, $5 million to finance and a little help from a higher power.

"This is an ambitious project," said Shirley Butts, who is one of four co-directors of a 38-member steering committee that drew up plans for the campaign to fund the construction. "We are going to be doing a lot of praying over this."

The church today will officially kick off its three-year fund-raising campaign to raise $5 million for expansion of its education facilities, Fellowship Hall and kitchen and renovations to the worship center and ancillary facilities.

"The big thrust of the campaign will be Oct. 1 through Nov. 12," Mrs. Butts said. "We will continue to remind members throughout the three years, but this is the big kick-off."

The congregation voted during a church conference in December 1994 to fund the expansion and it is the congregation that the committee will be turning toward to raise the funds.

"We are asking everyone to commit to giving more than their normal offering," Mrs. Butts said. "Of course, we may have some ex-members who would still like to contribute, but, we are mainly raising the money within the congregation."

The campaign is titled "Together We Share and Grow" and uses the theme "Giving as God Has Given."

The main event for the start of the campaign will be a banquet, scheduled for Oct. 23 at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, to present the campaign to the entire church membership, Mrs. Butts said. An event is scheduled for children at the Discovery Zone during the banquet.

Exhibition expected to draw more than 1 million to Paris museum

PARIS (AP) — Red apples flecked with gold. Intimate portraits of family and friends. Lush and vibrant landscapes culminating in geometric planes of color. And fleshy nudes — monumental and imperfect.

With the largest ever retrospective of Paul Cezanne's works opening today at the Grand Palais museum, the impressionist master Pablo Picasso once called "the father of us all" is finally getting his due. The artistic extravaganza costing a record $4.2 million has gathered nearly 200 works from museums and private collections in 17 countries.

Many pictures — including two versions of "The Grand Bathers" — are on display together for the first time since 1907, when Parisians turned out en masse to honor Cezanne a year after his death at the age of 67.

"Seeing these two paintings side-by-side is the greatest achievement of this exhibition," Francoise Cachin, head of the National French Museums and co-author of the show's catalog, told the newspaper Le Monde.

"Previous exhibitions focused on Cezanne's early or late works. For the first time visitors will be able to follow his evolution as an artist," she said.

The show runs through Jan. 7, 1996, then travels to the Tate Gallery in London for a Feb. 8-April 28 stint. It will be on display at The Philadelphia Museum of Art May 26-Aug. 18.

Nearly six years in the making, the exhibition features 109 paintings, 42 watercolors and 26 drawings spanning nearly a half century.

Although the colors, style and subject matter varies, Cezanne's continual search for the perfect evocation of feeling — "la petite sensation," as he called it — did not.

Cezanne distrusted words.

"Art talk is practically useless," he wrote to a friend in 1901. "I am but a poor painter, the brush is undoubtedly the means of expression the heavens gave me. So having ideas and developing them is not my business."

Born in Aix-en-Provence, Cezanne was the son of a hat maker who later made a fortune in banking. His best friend was the writer Emile Zola, and the two "went up" to Paris together to study.

But Zola didn't recognize his friend's talent, and they broke off after he published a novel with an unflattering portrait of an artist resembling the young Cezanne.

A solitary, difficult man prone to fits of temper, Cezanne had few friends and admirers outside his circle of colleagues, who included Camille Pissarro, Pierre Auguste Renoir, Claude Monet and Edgar Degas.

In contrast to them, he was repeatedly rejected from the official salons in which artists could exhibit their works — and was early on singled out as the worst exemplar of impressionist style.

Citizens of Okinawa want U.S. military removed

GINOWAN, Japan (AP) — Protest organizer Yoshimasa Karimata smiled as he looked out at the gymnasium overflowing with anti-U.S. military placards and 3,000 fist-waving Okinawans.

Opponents of America's military presence on this southern Japanese island are riding a wave of public outrage over a recent crime spree by U.S. servicemen, including the alleged gang rape of a 12-year-old girl.

But even as their protests swell, they are finding themselves as much at odds with the decision-makers in Tokyo as they are with the Pentagon.

"All Okinawans are outraged by what is happening, and we want the bases off our island," said Karimata, assistant director of the left-leaning Okinawan Peace Movement Center. "But all too often our voices aren't heard in Tokyo."

Japan's leaders fear that any renegotiation of the mutual defense pact under which 45,000 U.S. military personnel are stationed in the country could open a Pandora's box of politically divisive issues.

The experience of World War II has left a strong pacifist strain in the Japanese public. Japan's post-war constitution, written by U.S. occupation forces, bans the use of military force in settling international disputes — a clause that some Japanese say makes the Tokyo-Washington alliance illegal.

About 300 women from throughout Japan marched in Tokyo's business district Saturday to protest the rape, raising their fists and shouting "Condemn the U.S. soldiers!" and "U.S. military go home".

"American soldiers still think that they are occupying part of Japan," said Yoko Sumiyoshi, a member of the New Japan Women's Association, which organized the rally.

Polls indicate most Japanese support the status quo, however, and the government has stressed it is not considering any significant changes.

But on Okinawa, which bears the brunt of U.S. bases on Japanese soil, the contrasts are painfully clear.

As Karimata led his protesters to an American base in this central Okinawa city, Japanese negotiators in New York were vowing not only their support for the U.S. military presence, but promising to pay more for their upkeep.

Even Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama, head of the same Socialist party that on Okinawa is helping organize a protest expected to draw 30,000 or more people, has said high emotions should not be allowed to hurt the alliance.

Murayama has urged Okinawa Gov. Masahide Ota, an outspoken opponent of the U.S. military bases, to be less combative.

Ota, a historian and World War II veteran, has refused to help the central government force local landowners to renew contracts allowing the U.S. military to use their land.

At the center of the current tempest are two American Marines and a Navy seaman suspected of raping a 12-year-old Okinawan girl in early September. After three weeks in a U.S. military brig, the three were turned over to Japanese custody Friday.

Even before the rape, concern about the conduct of U.S. troops was building:

—Last May, Marine Pfc. Joshua Hill bludgeoned an Okinawan woman to death, beating her head more than 20 times with a hammer. He pleaded guilty before a Japanese court.

—In August, a brawl at Kadena Air Base put five people, mostly American servicemen, in the hospital, one with stab wounds.

—In a four-day period in September, one Navy seaman was hospitalized with multiple stab wounds after being jumped by three Americans near Kadena Air Base, and police in Okinawa City reported a sailor assaulted and an airman attacked. It was unclear who attacked them.

"There has been frustration. There is real anger over this," Col. Stuart Wagner, spokesman for the Marines on Okinawa, said in an interview. "It's a combination of a lot of things that have come together."

For many Okinawans, anger at Americans and their own Jaanese cousins in Tokyo runs deep. An independent kingdom for centuries, Okinawa's king was forced to abdicate.

AirSho'95 to fly under sunny skies

Staff Report

AirSho'95 spectators will once again be fortunate to have the weather on their side as the skies should be clear and the temperatures mild, according to forecasters with the National Weather Service located at Midland International Airport.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high near 80 and east winds 5 to 15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low about 55-60.

Monday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high near 85.

After an overnight low of 63, Saturday's high reached only 87, compared to the record high for that date of 104 set in 1977. The record low was 41 set in 1984.

STATE

The Texas coast remained under a flood watch through today as Tropical Depression No. 17 moved north into the waters of the central Gulf of Mexico and was expected to intensify.

Early Saturday, offshore reporting bouys indicated seas ranging from four to eight feet, with the highest seas being measured beyond 100 miles in the Gulf waters. The threat of coastal flooding was forecast to be greatest during the hours near high tide.

In South Texas, skies were expected to be partly cloudy Saturday with highs in the 80s and 90s.

Forecasters predicted clear to partly cloudy skies in West Texas through today with a chance of showers across the Panhandle. Also, a cold front was expected to enter the Panhandle on Saturday. Highs were expected mainly in the 70s and 80s, with 90s in extreme southern sections. Lows should be from the mid-40s north to the mid-60s south.

Isolated thunderstorms were reported early Saturday in the Big Country near Abilene, moving northeast. Elsewhere in North Texas, skies were clear to partly cloudy.

Early Saturday, temperatures in North Texas ranged from 65 degrees at Paris to 73 degrees at several locations around the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Farther south, temperatures ranged from 69 degrees at Junction and San Antonio to 78 degrees in Corpus Christi. In West Texas, readings varied from 53 degrees at Dalhart to 72 degrees at both Sanderson and Childress.

NATION

Snow fell in the mountains of Wyoming, Colorado and Utah on Saturday as thunderstorms brought 80-mph winds and hail to parts of Nebraska and Kansas.

Showers and thunderstorms stretched from the northern Great Lakes across the northern and central Plains into the central Rockies.

Rain spread across western Washington and Oregon, drenching Gold Bar, Wash., with 1.4 inches in the 24 hours ending at midafternoon.

Rainfall surpassed records in some areas, including Salt Lake City, where 1.01 inches fell at the airport to break the 1950 record.

Storms moving through South Dakota poured 3.3 inches of rain onto the Arlington area and 1-inch hail pelted parts of Minnehaha County.

Winds reached 80 mph in Pretty Prairie, Kan., overnight, causing some structural damage and downing trees and power lines around Omaha, Neb.

Morning lows dropped to 18 at Elko, Nev., and 19 at Stanley and Cascade, Idaho.

Mountain snow fell through the northern Great Basin and Intermountain regions. Up to 6 inches fell east of Salt Lake City on Friday.

The Atlantic hurricane season's 17th tropical depression strengthened into Tropical Storm Opal as it hovered off the northern Yucatan Peninsula.

The storm was expected to produce coastal flooding along the Texas coast and scattered showers and thunderstorms in Florida.

ISSUES: Controversial cases top high court's docket

(From 1A)

servative Institute for Justice, thinks the court is ready for a less-divisive term.

"There are no great overriding themes to the new term yet," Bolick said. "What we'll probably see are shifting majorities rather than the fairly stark division we saw last term."

The justices already have committed themselves to deciding 42 cases by next June. They will at least double that decision docket as they sort through thousands of appeals — including the VMI case — this fall and winter.

The most closely watched controversy already granted review is being called a watershed for gay rights.

At issue is whether Colorado voters may forbid their legislature and every community within the state from enacting laws and ordinances designed to protect homosexuals from discrimination.

The Colorado Supreme Court struck down that 1992 amendment to the state constitution, ruling it denied homosexuals an equal voice in government.

The nation's highest court displayed what gay-rights advocate Matt Coles called open hostility toward homosexuals when it upheld Georgia's anti-sodomy law in 1986.

"Lower federal courts picked up on that tone, he said. "The tone of the court's ruling this term may be as important as what it says about this denial of political access."

Last term, the court jeopardized political gains made by minority candidates from Congress to City Hall by ruling in a Georgia case that election districts drawn mainly to boost black voters' electoral clout must be presumed to be unlawful.

The legal and political impact of that ruling may become clearer this term, after the court decides voting-rights disputes focusing on congressional redistricting efforts in North Carolina and Texas.

The court could use the two cases to tell the nation's judges how to go about determining whether race has been a predominant factor. The justices also might clarify when racial considerations in redistricting can be deemed valid remedies for past bias.

Political redistricting could also be affected by how the justices rule on a challenge to the 1990 census.

The 1990 census was cause for dispute even before it began, and has been argued over in numerous courts for years.

The justices likely will focus their decision on a narrow, technical issue of how the courts untangle this legal jumble.

But their ruling may determine whether the government has to adjust the census figures to make up missing some 5 million people, most of them minorities.

Wisconsin and Pennsylvania would each lose one member of the House of Representatives, and California and Arizona would each gain one.

State and local election districts also might have to be redrawn, and millions of dollars in federal aid ultimately is at stake.

Likewise, the court's refereeing of a high-stakes battle from Florida over regulation of gambling on Indian reservations is likely to yield a narrow ruling with broad ramifications.

At issue is federal judges' authority to oversee negotiations between tribes and state officials about starting such gambling operations, and whether the Seminole tribe can sue the state to press allegations of bad-faith negotiations.

The case pits the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, a 1988 federal law that gave tribes new freedom to run big-money casinos and other gaming ventures on their lands, against the states' 11th Amendment immunity from being sued in federal court.

Reservation gambling has grown into a $6 billion-a-year industry for some 100 tribes in about half the states.

The court has also agreed to decide:

■ Whether the federal government must reimburse two chemical firms the $31 million they paid to settle health claims by Vietnam veterans exposed to the defoliant Agent Orange. Lower courts said no reimbursement is necessary because federal law would have protected the companies from liability.

■ What are the constitutional bounds of punitive-damage awards to punish and deter misconduct in product-liability lawsuits. At issue is a $2 million award to an Alabama man who sued over a $4,000 flaw in his luxury car.

■ Whether states may try to promote sobriety by banning price advertising for liquor. A lower court upheld such a Rhode Island ban.

■ If local telephone companies may enter the cable television business in their service areas. A lower court struck down the federal ban on such cross ownership, but Congress could change the law before any word comes from the justices.

■ Whether innocent owners can be forced to give up property used in a crime without their knowledge. The court could clarify the forfeiture power of law enforcement agencies in the case of a Michigan woman whose family car was seized by police after her husband used it for sex with a prostitute.

■ If copyright law applies to computer software. A lower court denied such protection to part of Lotus 1-2-3.

AIRSHO'95: Event goes on despite earlier tragedy

(From 1A)

the crash Thursday he was "shook and very upset."

"I thought a wet blanket would be thrown over the day, but I was pleasantly surprised," he said, and called the performances beautiful.

Thousands of people of all ages trekked to the CAF headquarters at Midland International Airport to watch the historic propeller-driven airplanes that wreaked havoc in World War II and the aerobatic jet age aircraft of the Canadian Forces' Snowbirds.

The 32nd annual air show continues today.

Up to 150 of the World War II-era in-line and radial piston-powered aircraft, including fighters, bombers, transports, liaison aircraft and trainers, are featured in the show in static display or in simulated aerial combat starting at 1 p.m. today.

The show also features the graceful aerobatic and precision-flight maneuvers of the Snowbirds, a nine-jet aircraft squadron, at 3 p.m.

The Snowbirds, based in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan and celebrating their 25th anniversary this year, will be performing 50 maneuvers in solo and formation flights.

As the Snowbirds took to the air Saturday, the crowds grew quiet to watch the awe-inspiring maneuvers of the planes as they flew by each other within 3-to-15 feet of the other plane's wings.

The crowds gasped at the feats and gathered around the pilots and their aircraft following the show.

Almost every plane featured in the performances lined the taxi-ways at the airport for guests to inspect and question the pilots and crews following the show.

The flight line will be open for spectators to view the aircraft before the air show from 7:30 a.m. to 11 a.m. and from 3:55 p.m. until 5 p.m.

Among the 150 CAF and privately owned 1939-1945-era aircraft are planes that flew for the United States, Germany, Great Britain and Japan.

At 11 a.m., there will be a fly-by of Korean War and Vietnam War aircraft. At noon, AirSho'95 will feature flights by aircraft from the U.S. Air Force arsenal, including the General Dynamics F-16 Fighting Falcon and the Rockwell International B-1 Lancer.

Aerobatic flying in civil aircraft will be featured shortly after noon with Julie Clark's aerial-ballet routine in the MOPAR T-34 and Jan Collmer's classic aerobatics in the Fina Pitts Special S-B2 biplane.

While Ms. Clark performed her daring stunts Saturday one little boy shouted "Wow that's a girl doing that!" obviously impressed.

Later, he added: "I really liked it when she went straight up, then down."

The CAF's airpower demonstration features aerial re-enactments of a number of battles, including the 1941 Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, "Tora, Tora, Tora," the 1944 D-Day Invasion and the atomic bombing of Japan in August 1945, which ended the war.

A missing-man formation to honor and salute all the downed airmen of all the wars ends the re-enactments.

The emcee of the show reminded those present to "remember what our freedom means and support our government."

No mention of the Thursday crash was made, but for Ken McCloud of Fullerton, Calif., that was OK.

McCloud enjoyed the show while here for a reunion of the 339th Fighter Squadron. He said 160 men and their families gathered this weekend to enjoy the air show.

When asked if the Thursday crash that killed five CAF enthusiasts dampened his spirits, he smiled faintly as he answered the question.

"We got used to that. It was an every-day affair. You soon learn to pass that off because everybody who gets in a military airplane has to expect it," McCloud said.

MOMENT: Snowbirds give media bird's-eye view

(From 1A)

On this day, Friday, the eve of the Confederate Air Force's AirSho'95 at Midland International Airport, the celebrated Snowbirds are taking members of the media for a spin to get a taste of formation aerobatic flying.

The two-place Tutor trainer is unlike the computerized, high-performance supersonic fighter, the CF-18 Hornet, which Hill and wingman Capt. Greg Carlow flew in combat.

"It's not fly-by-wire or computer," Hill told us before the flight. "The F-18 will fly itself. These airplanes don't have any of those computers. What you see out there is not done with radar or fancy-gismos. It's stick and rudder; that's it. It's all hands and feet. It's just raw flying ability."

So, blessed by fate, here I am, seated in the aircraft's left seat — which is the usual station of the pilot-in-command — of the Canadian Forces' subsonic aerobatic two-place jet trainer, the docile and agile Tutor.

To my immediate right is the real pilot, Carlow, who, like me, is securely strapped in the aircraft and bound by parachute, crash helmet and oxygen mask. Our cockpit seats, though secure, are armed and set to eject us should something go amiss once we are airborne.

"The only time you eject the seat is the last resort," Cpl. Tim Woodward, the Snowbirds' safety-systems technician, told us in a briefing before takeoff. "Pop the 'chute if there is a 'big' problem."

Momentarily, the flight of nine red-and-white Tutors would be taking off in unison for a 30-minute docile flight, a mere tease of the Snowbirds' intense demonstration of 50 flight maneuvers, which range from the "Big Diamond" and "Maple Leaf" to the "Concorde" and "Inverted Delta."

"We usually don't get any closer than 3 feet metal-to-metal vertical separation" with over-lapping wings, which is a Snowbirds' trademark, Hill told us after the flight. "The formation change requires nothing less than total concentration on the part of the wingmen and myself."

The pilots practice their formations five days a week during the off-season, November until April, near their headquarters at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada. And practice must make perfect becausethe Snowbirds' has an excellent safety record over the team's 25-year history.

While the Snowbirds are taxiing to the runway's threshold, two World War II fighters, the P-47 Thunderbolt and the P-40 Warhawk, are in flight to salute fallen comrades in the great war more than 50 years ago.

Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress and other vintage aircraft are airborne. Just behind us are two other old warplanes, the wide-stance and powerfully fast Grumman F8F Bearcat fighter and the hefty Consolidated B-24 Liberator. Their engines are turning, and, like the Snowbirds, the aircraft are rearing to take off and get to where they belong: the sky.

Once on the runway's threshold and cleared by air traffic control to depart, the pilots, on The Boss' command, thrust their throttles forward to build up airspeed. At about 100 knots, the airplanes lift off in unison.

In tight formation, the Snowbirds squadron is as one flight.

While The Boss leads, his eight wingmen are of one purpose and one mind: to fly the aircraft on The Boss' commands and to focus only on their commander.

Carlow, bright and enthusiastic, flies the inner left wing. While his feet, in flight boots, work the rudder pedals, his gloved hands grip the throttle on the left and the control stick to the right. In formation, his right thumb is constantly working the trim-tab button atop the control stick to lighten the pressure on the control surfaces. He uses his throttle and air brakes to move up or slow down on command.

Hill's job is to ensure the safety of the flight. He watches the horizon, the airspeed, the altitude, and constantly monitors flight attitudes to determine whether to abort or to continue a maneuver.

"For the guys on the wing, it is absolutely crucial that they pay total concentration to my airplane, so that they don't move out of their allowable position — the 'air box,'" Hill said following the flight.

"The only way to do that is to focus totally on their reference point, and, in most cases, it is me that they are looking at."

The squadron flies as low as 300 feet, which would allow for a safe ejection, to 2,000 or 3,000 feet in shows. Show airspeed is about 250 knots, more or less.

Occasionally, The Boss, taciturn in flight, authorizes his wingmen to break from the formation and from the pivotal point: Hill's aircraft.

Then, he orders, "Change hands." It was then that Carlow, on the intercom, told me, "You've got it."

With my feet on the rudder pedals and right hand on the control stick between my legs, it was my utmost delight and privilege to maneuver the jet aircraft most carefully. Carlow maintains throttle control. My assignment is to focus only on The Boss on the horizon and not on the airspeed indicator and not on the altimeter. I follow, or try to emulate, every move of the commander.

For benefit of the Snowbirds' cockpit guests, Hill flies the command aircraft mostly straight and level, though I push the control stick forward and pull it backward and bank to the right and bank to the left to maintain the same altitude and heading of The Boss.

Toward the end of the complimentary flight, The Boss brings the squadron back to the airport's air space. And in formation and in unison, the pilots decrease their airspeed, drop their landing gear, lower their flaps, and gently fly their stable aircraft to the runway for a formation landing but without over-lapping wings.

The consummate job of The Boss and his wingmen is to be par excellent — accomplished stick-and-rudder pilots whose passion is flying. And that the Snowbirds do exceedingly well. Thanks.

"The Boss," Hill, flew 56 missions in the Persian Gulf in the CF-18 Hornet. He has 4,300 flight hours, including hours in his two-year stint as a Snowbirds' wingman in the mid-1980s.

Carlow, a 2,000-hour high-performance jet pilot, logged 50 combat missions in the supersonic American-made McDonnell-Douglas CF-18 Hornet, a powerhouse and a flying arsenal, during Desert Storm.

"Ever since I was a kid, I wanted to fly fighters," Carlow says at debriefing. "And I was always intrigued by World War II fighters — all the warbirds."

It was his vision from childhood to be a fighter pilot. Carlow missed out in flying those "big iron" piston-propeller-powered World War II airplanes that had inspired and fueled his yearning to fly high-performance jet aircraft.

"It was a blast," Carlow said of flying the CF-18 Hornet. "It was my dream come true."

And then flying the jet fighter in Germany heading to the Persian Gulf "was about as close" as he could get to "flying in World War II.

"Then, we had the opportunity to go down to the Gulf War. That was my dream, too — to go fight in a war."

CHURCH: First Baptist begins campaign

(From 1A)

Major elements of the project will include:

■ a 16,128 square-foot, two-story addition to the Education Building on the north side to provide additional space for 400 adults and children. Mechanical equipment will be housed in the additional 5,300 square feet;

■ conversion of the 9,800 square-foot Fellowship Hall (cafeteria/auditorium) and kitchen to nine pre-school classrooms accommodating 180 children;

■ a 4,548 square-foot foyer and visitation court on the east side of the new pre-school department;

■ a 13,860 square-foot Fellowship Hall and kitchen north of the present Fellowship Hall to accommodate seating for 750 adults;

■ improvements to the worship center auditorium;

■ renovations to the former medical office west of the church on Louisiana Avenue to provide additional office space; and

■ a transportation storage facility.

Johnson Seefeldt Architects developed preliminary plans; the consulting firm of Miller Linscott and Associates of Tyler was hired to assist in planning the campaign drive.

Construction contracts are scheduled to be signed in January, and construction is set to begin in the spring. The construction is expected to be completed in the fall of 1997.

China denounces latest Panchen Lama incarnate

LUSHAER, China (NYT) — On a terraced hillside overlooking the gilded temples of the remote Taer Monastery here in western China, a young monk implored a visitor: "Would you please send me a photograph of the Dalai Lama? We are always waiting for him."

As he spoke, dozens of artisans were putting the finishing touches on an ornate guest residence for the Dalai Lama and the Panchen Lama, who serve as political and spiritual leaders for the Tibetan people.

The problem is that no one can say when these living Buddhas might ever get the opportunity to visit here.

The 14th Dalai Lama has lived in exile since 1959, and the latest reincarnation of the Panchen Lama, the 6-year-old son of a herder, has not been "approved" by the Communist Party leadership in Beijing.

For anyone who travels through western China, it takes very little time to discover the depth of support here for the Dalai Lama in secular and religious matters relating to the six million Tibetans who populate the sweeping landscapes of the Qinghai-Tibetan plateau.

"Because the Dalai Lama is the highest figure of authority for our Yellow Hat Sect, all of the believers and we monks worship him," said one of the monks who moments before had been chanting from ancient scriptures in the Temple of Longevity, one of the many sacred halls among the labyrinth of courtyards and buildings that can be seen from the terraced hills. "Whatever is decided needs to have his approval."

The monk then rose and moved nimbly around a tiny altar, on which he prepared an offering of lamb, yak butter and candy wrapped in colored foil to the memory of a 17th-century peasant named Luo Qi, who saved the life of the Panchen Lama by carrying him piggyback through the flood waters of the Yellow River.

Perhaps the most urgent matter for Tibetans lately has been the political standoff with Beijing over the reincarnation of the 11th Panchen Lama. The 10th Panchen Lama died in January 1989, and according to the tenets of Tibetan Buddhism, his soul has migrated to a new host.

In May the Dalai Lama announced from exile in India that after six years of searching, the 11th coming of the Panchen Lama had been found incarnate in the body of the boy, Gedhun Choekyi Nyima, in the Tibetan village of Nagqu.

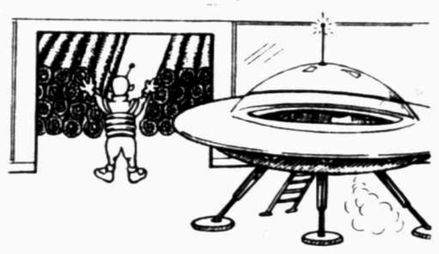

Recognition of the reincarnation "is a religious matter and not political," the Dalai Lama said, adding, "It is my hope that the Chinese government will extend its understanding, cooperation and assistance."

The proclamation was denounced by the authorities in Beijing, who for the first time since 1949 have an opportunity to select the Panchen Lama and control his upbringing and education. They have attacked the Dalai Lama's "split-ist" behavior and "illegal and invalid" act — accusing him of seeking to wreck the unity of the motherland and calling him every name secular leaders dare call a living Buddha without offending the Tibetan masses who worship him as a god-king.

But they have yet to challenge the religious verity of the Dalai Lama's choice: the boy with frost-reddened cheeks and an impish gaze who faces an uncertain future.

The struggle between the Communists and the Dalai Lama over who has the right to name the Panchen Lama is not just an arcane religious struggle; it is part of the collision of interests over who rules Tibet.

Scientist says Russian stockpiles not safe

Barbara Crossette
N.Y. Times Service

A Russian scientist who reported in 1991 that Moscow was secretly developing and testing chemical weapons after publicly renouncing them says in an article to be published Monday that his country's chemical arms stockpile is more vulnerable to theft and illegal production than the former Soviet nuclear arsenal.

The scientist, Vil S. Mirzayanov, was imprisoned twice — in 1992 and 1994 — for writing about the weapons program. He says in the article that security around storage sites is lax and that Russia does not have the money or technology to destroy its stocks safely. Officials with knowledge of the program and access to chemicals are being laid off and are desperate for money, he adds.

"Russia's stockpile is also a ticking ecological time bomb," Mirzayanov writes. He added that safety standards are routinely violated and that there have been instances in which Russian workers have been contaminated. In 1993 and 1994, he writes, scientists tried to destroy stocks of binary weapons by detonating them in the open air at the Shikhany test site, in the Saratov region. Binary weapons combine two separate compounds at the point of delivery and yield some of the most poisonous agents ever developed.

Mirzayanov's article appears in "Chemical Weapons Disarmament in Russia: Problems and Prospects," to be published Monday by the Henry L. Stimson Center in Washington, an independent organization for research into weapons and issues of war and peace.

Several dozen private Russian organizations and groups from the United States will meet in Saratov from Oct. 20 to Oct. 23 to consider the health and environmental consequences of further destruction of chemical arms, said Craig Williams, a spokesman for the Chemical Weapons Working Group in Berea, Ky., which opposes disposing of nerve gas by incineration.

Among those taking part will be Pacific Islanders concerned about the potential danger from an incinerator for chemical weapons opened in 1990 by the United States on Johnson Atoll, 700 miles southwest of Hawaii. Opponents of the incinerator say there are safer and cheaper ways to dispose of the chemicals.

Mirzayanov, 60, worked for the Soviet government in chemical weapons research for 26 years and lost his job after he revealed information about the program. Unable to get a new job in Russia, he is in the United States looking for work. In the Stimson Center article, he gives details for the first time of the extent and size of Russia's binary weapons research, which he believes has now ended.

In 1989 the Soviet Union and the United States exchanged information about each other's chemical weapons programs for the first time. Washington declared that it possessed 30,000 tons of material; Moscow reported that it had 40,000 tons, though some independent scientists believe the stocks were larger. By that time, both countries had renounced the use of such weapons, and Russian officials denied accusations Mirzayanov first made in 1991 and 1992 that the chemical weapons program had continued.

Moscow's program to produce binary weapons, code-named Novichok, or newcomer, began as an effort to match American research into binary chemical weapons, Mirzayanov writes, adding that tons of binary compounds were produced and tested from 1989 to 1993. Several of these were 5 to 10 times as powerful as the known so-called "nerve gases," a droplet of which can kill within a minute either by inhalation or through the skin.

Mirzayanov's earlier writings, in the Moscow newspapers Kuranty in 1991 and Moscow News in 1992, have been used by both sides of the debate in this country and abroad over the fate and importance of an international treaty barring the manufacture, sale, possession or use of chemical weapons. The treaty, the Chemical Weapons Convention, has been signed by 159 nations.

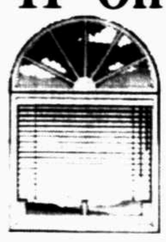

Only 39 nations have ratified the treaty, however, out of the 65 that are necessary to bring it into force. It is awaiting action in both the United States Senate and the Russian Parliament, which many experts believe is waiting to take its cue from Capitol Hill. Staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee say there is virtually no chance of a vote in the full Senate this year.

Scientists find new use for aspirin

ATLANTA (AP) — Taking an occasional aspirin can cut your risk of esophageal cancer by 90 percent, according to a study released Sunday.

The work is the latest to find beneficial side effects of the pain reliever, which has been around more than 80 years.

Many doctors already routinely recommend that men and women over 50 take an adult-strength aspirin every other day to lower their risk of heart disease.

Two years ago, scientists suggested that aspirin may reduce the risk of dying from cancer of the esophagus, the muscular tube that propels food from the throat to the stomach.

The latest study, by researchers at University of Alabama School of Public Health and St. Jude Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., offers evidence that aspirin reduces the risk of getting it, said Dr. Harold Frucht, director of gastroenterology at Fox Chase Cancer Center.

"Their results are the first definitive proof, in my opinion, that in fact aspirin does have an effect in reducing the risk," Frucht said. "It's a pretty dramatic number."

The study's authors warned against taking aspirin solely to avoid getting esophageal cancer, saying they did not know how much or how frequently people should take it to cut their risk.

More than 12,000 people — most over age 50 — in the United States are diagnosed with esophageal cancer each year, and nearly 11,000 people die annually, according to the American Cancer Society. The cancer is among the deadliest — only about 8 percent of its victims survive more than five years.

The cause is unknown, but doctors estimate that drinking and smoking play a role in 90 percent of cases.

That may prevent many of those at highest risk for esophageal cancer from taking aspirin, because the drug's side effects — stomach irritation and bleeding — can worsen other illnesses associated with alcohol and cigarettes, such as liver disease, Frucht said.

The new study was based on nationwide surveys of 14,407 participants followed for at least 12 years.

The researchers found a 90 percent drop in the lifetime risk of esophageal cancer, about one in 20, for those who reported at least occasionally taking aspirin sometime in the past six months.

The article appears in Sunday's issue of Cancer, published by the American Cancer Society.

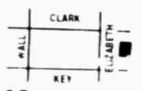

The study's lead author, epidemiologist Ellen Funkhouser of the University of Alabama, said she planned next to try to determine how much aspirin is needed to attain the most benefit.

Recent research suggests aspirin protects against certain cancers. Experts suspect it may result from aspirin's ability to block production of substances called prostaglandins, which may regulate cell growth.

Scientists said three weeks ago that taking aspirin every other day for 20 years can cut the risk of colon cancer nearly in half. Last week, a new study showed that people who take aspirin regularly can reduce the risk of heart attacks brought on by episodes of anger.

Donation of surplus warships draws fire from House Republicans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's practice of giving away millions of dollars in equipment to friendly countries has hit a snag in the House, where Republicans are trying to halt the proposed transfer of seven surplus ships.

The guided-missile frigates are worth a combined $420 million, making the deal one of the biggest recent giveaways of U.S. military equipment.

For all of 1994, according to the Defense Department, foreign nations were handed "excess defense articles," ranging from boots to airplanes, worth a combined $189.6 million.

The House International Relations Committee, led by Republican freshmen "budget hawks," voted recently to force the Navy to sell or lease the seven vessels instead of providing them free.

"It's a continuation of this attitude that the United States is the sugar daddy to the world," said Rep. Sam Brownback, R-Kan. "It's fine when you've got it to spend, but we're broke. We've got to maximize our value for everything we have."

The freebies don't just come from the Navy. Defense Department documents detailing 1994 giveaways included machine guns to Australia, X-ray equipment to Brazil, library furniture to El Salvador, M-60 tanks to Egypt, a 5-ton wrecker to Israel, thousands of boots and coats to Latvia, and a spotter airplane to Mali.

Proponents of the equipment giveaways say they build good will in strategic places and enable other nations to take part in military exercises and coalitions with the United States.

"The cooperation we get, military and diplomatic, from this gesture is often repaid tenfold," said Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., a senior member of the House National Security Committee. "It sounds good — 'let's get money for the ships.' But sometimes we get more than money."

Even more important to many members of Congress, repair or refitting work on ships and other large items usually takes place in the United States. That means jobs back home, and income for U.S. companies when spare parts, ammunition or items like helicopters are sold for the vessels.

House documents show the Navy is proposing to give away three frigates to Turkey, two to Egypt and one each to the Persian Gulf states of Oman and Bahrain. An eighth ship is to be leased to the United Arab Emirates for $15.5 million over five years.

In a letter to the House International Relations Committee, Navy Secretary John Dalton contended that the grants are "an integral part of our coalition-building objectives" and that simply mothballing the ships would cost taxpayers $13.8 million.

Refitting and updating the ships — again, at American shipyards — is estimated at between $52 million and $77 million for each vessel. If the ships were sold and that cost added, Dalton's letter said, the countries couldn't afford them.

"They would very likely view requirements for additional payments as a failure of the U.S. to respond in the same manner we have asked of them," Dalton wrote.

For example, Bahrain provided bases for U.S. warships and aircraft during the Persian Gulf war. Egypt permits access to the Suez Canal for Navy ships. And Oman allows U.S. aircraft landing rights.

Because of such considerations, the ship transfer sailed through the Senate Armed Services Committee without dissent.

Since 1988, the Navy has sold, leased or given 68 vessels to foreign countries, and $328 million in work was done on them at U.S. shipyards.

Between 1990 and 1992, the Pentagon transferred military equipment with a current value of $994.7 million to other countries, according to the General Accounting Office. About two-thirds went to Greece, Turkey, Egypt, Israel and Morocco.

Of that amount, only about $168 million resulted from sales. The rest was given away, the GAO found.

Even the items sold are vastly discounted. Those same articles were valued at nearly $720 million when they initially were procured by the Defense Department.

The House International Relations Committee action last month does not affect any of those other articles. The high price tag for the Navy ships caught the attention of Republicans who are enduring heavy criticism for proposals that cut Medicare and welfare spending to balance the budget by 2002.

"We must look carefully at each and every action of the federal government for its impact on the deficit," Brownback said.

If the House measure survives a floor debate, it will run into the Senate version that permits the ship giveaway. The two sides would have to settle their differences in a conference committee.

Perot woos reform party suporters

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — Wooing the crowd by bashing a lumbering federal government, Ross Perot challenged supporters Saturday to get the 890,064 signatures needed to qualify his Reform Party for the California ballot.

"This is going to be a challenge, but boy is this going to be fun," Perot told a wildly enthusiastic crowd of 500 supporters for the signature-gathering at the Orange County Sequoia Convention Center.

"Wouldn't it be neat if our government worked on problems this aggressively?" asked Perot, using a charming banter. The government "couldn't organize a group in silent prayer in a week."

The fast-paced signature drive began Monday.

To speed the process, Perot placed Sunday ads in 41 California newspapers with a combined circulation of 6 million. The ads were designed as ready-made petitions that could be clipped, filled out and sent in.

Volunteers have until Oct. 24 to gather 890,064 petition signatures or 89,007 voter registrations to win a spot on the California ballot for next year's presidential race.

Perot has until Nov. 20 to get 33,462 signatures in Ohio and mid-December to gather 25,000 names in Maine to get on those states' ballots. The remaining states have 1996 deadlines, allowing more time to gather support.

Perot, who got 19 percent of the vote as a 1992 presidential candidate, has remained quiet about whether he will run this time around.

Political analysts believe that if the financing and grassroots support are in place, Perot can meet the deadline.

"If they still have their mailing lists and phone trees, they can get people out there quickly, and it is not going to difficult at all," said Ron Ballard, editor of Ballot Access News in San Francisco. However, a spokeswoman for the California secretary of state said it would be "an incredible feat" if Perot can pull it off.

Meanwhile, feelings are running high among old Perot supporters. United We Stand America national spokeswoman Sharon Holman said, "There is a lot of awareness and enthusiasm."

But outside the Buena Park event, protesters who once supported Perot and remain members of the United We Stand organization he created in 1992, shouted that he now was the enemy.

Holding a sign reading "Endorse Buchanan now," for conservative Republican Pat Buchanan, Walter Scott, 71, yelled his message through a megaphone.

"Ross Perot is doing his bit to destroy the U.S.A.," Scott told listeners. "He wants to scrap our Constitution."

The billionaire Texan's speech was momentarily interrupted when he told a few protesters standing in the back of the room, "Can't y'all afford to have your own rally somewhere?"

One demonstrator had his "Clinton Puppet Party" placard ripped out of his hands before he was thrown out.

Wanda Martins, a 63-year-old from Palos Verdes came with a group of friends who all planned to get signatures.

"None of the politicians are attacking any of the things important to us, like balancing the budget," she said. "We're going to stand in parking lots and get those signatures."

Perot's hour-long speech included talks about NAFTA, Medicare and balancing the budget. Using down-home appeal and motivational skills, he urged the mostly elderly crowd, "We need action, action, action!"

National Archives finds flip side to constant advances

By William H. Honan
N.Y. Times Service

Last spring, at the National Archives and Record Administration on the Washington Mall, the people's memory suffered some minor lapses.

A 15-year-old electromagnetic tape containing White House electronic messages began to melt as it ran on a machine that spins a reel 10 times faster than earlier models.

Later, archivists discovered that some CD-ROM computer disks, whose laminated surfaces were supposed to seal the information on the disks for a century, were beginning to decay after only 10 years.

On one level, these were little more than annoyances to researchers. On another, they raise serious questions about the growing reliance on technology to preserve history.

Only a few years back, scholars, scientists, business leaders and archivists were heralding the information revolution and extolling computers whose previously unheard-of memory banks would transform the world.

Well, that revolution HAS changed things. In fact, the National Archives is currently experimenting with a new electronic indexing technique that may give researchers access to more than 300,000 cubic feet of records.

But what the earliest prophets of these high-technology marvels failed to foresee is that the tapes, disks, drives and software that make electronic records accessible keep being modified, updated, worn out and replaced.

"You can get an optical disk that may last for a hundred years, but in ten years you won't be able to find a drive to read the thing," said Kenneth Thibodeau, director of the Archives' Center for Electronic Records.

The concern is that "the long-term memory of our modern institutions" is in jeopardy, as a leading Canadian archivist, Terry Cook, wrote in the January 1995 issue of Technology Review, the national magazine of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Nowhere is this more keenly felt than at the National Archives, whose holdings are so vast as to compel its reliance on high technology.

All told, the Archives controls between 4 billion and 5 billion federal documents, including the original copy of the Constitution, official Air Force reports on UFO sightings, Lee Harvey Oswald's address book and the casualty lists used to create the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Only a fraction of this material is housed at the colonnade-fronted building on the Mall. Much of it has been shipped to Archives II, the Pentagon-sized, state-of-the-art center that opened in 1994 in College Park, Md. And plenty more is stuffed into the National Archives' 13 regional archives, spread from Anchorage to Atlanta, and into nine presidential libraries.

Add to this the steady burgeoning of virtually all federal records, the congressional mandate on the Archives to make its holdings readily accessible and the ruling of a federal court in 1993 that the Bush administration had been "arbitrary and capricious" in permitting the destruction of White House electronic mail and that federal guidelines must be applied to determine whether such material should be delivered to the Archives for permanent retention.

"We have no choice but to make use of the new technology," said John W. Carlin, former governor of Kansas, who has headed the Archives since June. "I would anticipate that by the turn of the century, more than half of our records will be electronic."

On the positive side, the new technology can help researchers by collecting and compressing vast quantities of information and making it easier to sort through and store.

At present, archivists acknowledge that they will probably never be able to account for every single tape or disk, let alone every piece of paper, under their control. Consequently, they try to gain what they call "intellectual control" and "physical control" of their holdings.

"Intellectual control means that we know we possess certain types of material, such as records of the Social Security system," said Lynn Bellardo, director of the Archives' policy and planning division. "Physical control means we know generally where they are.

"But there's a great difference between having that and having the item-level control that you see in, say, the Library of Congress," Ms. Bellardo cautioned. "We may have a mile-long series of boxes, and the contents are described only by a single paragraph in our finding aid. That's a long way from being able to direct a researcher to the exact box containing what he's looking for."

To make these holdings more accessible to researchers, the Archives last March marshaled its electronic resources and undertook an ambitious pilot project called the American West.

Peter Hirtle, coordinator of the Archives' public-access initiative, said the project would help researchers focus their efforts.

"We're attempting," he said, "to combine electronically under the heading 'the American West' the finding aids to a cluster of related record groups, including the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Land Management, military posts and federal courts. Those documents occupy more than 300,000 cubic feet of space.

"Let's suppose a researcher is interested in the history of a military post somewhere in Idaho. If the project is successful, that researcher should be able to use this new finding aid to tell him that somebody once wrote the history of that post, and that the document is located at our Seattle regional center. That will save him from making a trip here to Washington and going from building to building, and it will save us from having to service his request."

"The object," Hirtle continued, "is to empower the researcher. It's a learning experience for us. We want to get our feet wet and see what problems we run into. It's due to be completed next year, and if it works, and if we can get the funding, we can expand it to eventually include everything we have."

Witness recants testimony in Florida murder case

MIAMI (NYT) — At his trial, no physical evidence linked Joseph Spaziano to the murder of a young Orlando woman, only a drug-addled teen-ager's lurid testimony about being taken to a garbage dump and shown the sexually mutilated, decomposing remains of the victim. For the jurors, that was all they needed to convict him.

But now, 20 years later, with Spaziano's death warrant already signed and the electric chair waiting, that witness, Tony Dilisio, has come forward to say he lied.

He fabricated the story, he asserts, to please police investigators, who planted details of his testimony in his memory during hypnosis and promised to spring him from a drug rehabilitation center if he cooperated.

"I've been bound up in lies, and I finally made a decision to do what's right," Dilisio, a 38-year-old automobile restorer and lay preacher who now lives in Pensacola, Fla., said in a telephone interview. "I've been shaking inside for the last 20 years, and it finally came time to speak the truth. I had a path I had to choose because the man was going to be executed in two weeks."

But despite Dilisio's recanting his story and other irregularities that have been documented by lawyers, private investigators and newspaper reporters reexamining the Spaziano case, Florida is pressing ahead with its effort to electrocute Spaziano.

In September, Gov. Lawton Chiles denied that "there has been any rush to judgment on this thing," and assailed Spaziano's lawyer, saying his tactics "look pretty manufactured to me."

By his own admission, Spaziano was anything but a model citizen when he was arrested for the 1973 torture-murder of Laura Lynn Harberts, an 18-year-old hospital clerk. President of the Orlando chapter of the Outlaws motorcycle gang, Spaziano earned the nickname Crazy Joe from his erratic behavior after a truck ran over his head in his hometown of Rochester.

He was also well-known in Central Florida as a marijuana dealer, fence and pimp.

But transcripts of the trial reveal that the prosecution's case against Spaziano rested not on his notoriety but almost exclusively on the account of Dilisio, who was a 16-year-old biker wannabe at the time of the killing.

"If we can't get in the testimony of Tony Dilisio, we'd have absolutely no case whatsoever," one prosecutor told the judge in the case at the time.

What the jurors were not told was that Dilisio's testimony had been induced by hypnosis. Nor was the panel informed that his only visit to the murder site was conducted by police, who were frustrated at his inability to recall even the most basic details of the killing under hypnosis.

In 1985, a decade after Spaziano was convicted, the Florida Supreme Court ruled that testimony derived from memories refreshed by hypnosis is so intrinsically suspect as to be inadmissible in court.

But, in an effort to avoid a series of lengthy and costly retrials, the decision was not applied retroactively, and Spaziano's conviction stood.

"They should have ordered a new trial back then," argued Michael Mello, a lawyer who, until recently, had been representing Spaziano since the case was handed over to him the day he joined the public defender's office more than a decade ago. "This is the only capital case I am aware of in which the critical testimony was the product of hypnosis."

Mello now teaches law at the Vermont Law School in South Royalton, Vt., and had continued to handle the Spaziano case on a pro bono basis until the Florida Supreme Court recently removed him from the case, criticizing him for what the justices called his "flagrant disregard of this Court's procedures and directions."

Mello said in a telephone interview that he had represented more than 70 condemned men, but that Spaziano is the only one he was absolutely convinced was innocent.

According to affidavits Mello has obtained from jurors in the case, Spaziano's conviction was obtained despite lingering doubts, which threatened to deadlock deliberations, about the veracity of Dilisio's testimony.

To win over the skeptics, the jury compromised and agreed not to recommend the death penalty, voting 9-3 in favor of life imprisonment.

The judge in the case, Robert McGregor of the Seminole County Circuit Court, quickly overrode the panel's decision.

The Norplant controversy

Thousands sue over contraceptive's side-effects

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press

'Women who thought they made intelligent choices about birth control now hate themselves.'

— Jewel Klein, a Chicago attorney representing 4,100 women in a state class-action suit

It was all a frightening mystery to Kimberly Thompson: the throbbing migraines, the shortness of breath, the shocking 40-pound weight gain in just three months.

"It was the worst part of my life, wondering what is happening to your body," said the 25-year-old Chicago mother of two. "There were times I would cry and say, 'What's wrong? Is it me?' "

It was clear to Rhonda Rice something was terribly wrong when she was hospitalized five times in a year.

"I was having anxiety attacks, irregular heart beats, fainting spells," the 31-year-old Texas woman said. "Getting up out of a chair would exhaust me. I had severe hair loss. My face would break out in boils. I had a lot of problems."

Both women hope to prove their ailments had a common source: Norplant, a contraceptive touted as a major medical advance when introduced in the United States, and now, just 4 1/2 years later, the target of a flood of lawsuits that could jeopardize its future — and, some say, perhaps even the future of birth control research.

Norplant, the first major new contraceptive since the birth control pill came on the market 30 years ago, was hailed as a safe, effective, no-fuss form of protection. Six matchstick-sized silicone-coated rods are implanted under the skin of the upper arm, releasing a synthetic hormone into the bloodstream that prevents pregnancy for up to five years.

Nearly 1 million U.S. women tried Norplant. Now, 50,000 users have retained lawyers to sue over it, according to Chris Parks, a Texas attorney representing 600 women. Most claim they weren't adequately warned of the scope and severity of side effects — including headaches, weight gain, persistent menstrual bleeding, hair growth or loss, ovarian cysts, anemia and depression — or removal problems.

"They were sold a dream and got a nightmare," Parks said. "If you tell women all the facts about Norplant they will not be interested. ... The side effects don't go away and that's what (the company) wants everyone to believe."

"Women who thought they made intelligent choices about birth control now hate themselves," said Jewel Klein, a Chicago attorney representing 4,100 women in a state class-action suit, including Mrs. Thompson, whose implants were removed after three months. She says her health improved after that.

The manufacturer, Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories, a division of American Home Products Corp., maintains Norplant is a good contraceptive — the Food and Drug Administration recently reaffirmed its support — and claims the litigation has been orchestrated by avaricious lawyers, some of whom were involved in the $4 billion global breast implant settlement.

"We believe in Norplant and in its safety and its efficacy," said Audrey Ashby, a Wyeth-Ayerst spokeswoman. "We're going to defend the cases vigorously ... and we hope the product will be vindicated in court."

On Tuesday, attorneys head to court to ask a federal judge in Texas to certify a national class-action suit on behalf of women claiming Norplant injuries. All federal cases were consolidated last year.

The attorneys claim Norplant wasn't adequately tested (several trials were in Third World countries), doctors weren't adequately trained and women — many of them young and poor — weren't adequately counseled.

They also claim users weren't warned silicone, which has been so controversial in breast implants, could cause serious health risks.

The company says Norplant has been tested for more than 20 years — including on more than 1,000 U.S. women — and been approved for distribution in 39 countries. It also says it provided extensive training for doctors.

The silicone — less than a gram — is commonly used in medical devices, such as pacemakers, Mrs. Ashby said, adding that revised warning labels note the ingredient.

Mrs. Ashby contends the timing of the litigation isn't coincidental: While only about 20 suits were filed through 1993 when 800,000 women had Norplant, that number skyrocketed to 309 — 59 seek class-action status — in the past 1 1/2 years.

"We feel Norplant was a new mark," she said, with the increase coming as breast implant cases wound down and publicity intensified. She cited one day when nearly identical lawsuits with the same typographical errors were filed in Minnesota, Texas and Kansas.

"It's greed," said Dr. Elizabeth Connell, professor of gynecology and obstetrics at Emory University's School of Medicine in Atlanta and a contraceptive expert for 30 years. "You have a bunch of attorneys who have deep pockets. As soon as they empty one, they look for the next one. That's what's happened here."

She said attorneys have employed the same tactics as in breast implant cases: recruiting women through media advertisements, then conducting seminars on what experts to use.

And while no one disputes women are sick, the doctor said, data don't support a cause-effect relationship with Norplant.

Connell also fears this controversy could discourage companies from developing new contraceptives in what already is a shrinking U.S. industry.

"It's one of the worst things I've seen all my years in medicine and one of the worst things that's ever happened to women," she said.

Parks, however, insists this is no ploy by mercenary lawyers.

"It's impossible from a public relations campaign to blame 50,000 women, so you blame their lawyers," he said. "Lawyers aren't supposed to be popular."

While the legal battles have just begun, the publicity already has taken its toll: Daily sales have plummeted from 800 to 60, Mrs. Ashby said.

Dr. Richard Ellenbogen, a Detroit area obstetrician-gynecologist, said he has removed about three-fourths of about 75 implants he had inserted. "I don't know of any physicians putting them in anymore," he said.

Though Ellenbogen hasn't seen significant problems, he said at least half of his Norplant patients suffered side effects. "I don't think it's a very good means of birth control," he said.

Dr. Keith Brown, an osteopath in the Chicago suburb of Elmhurst who participated in a Wyeth-Ayerst training program, disagrees.

"It's as safe as any other form of birth control ... when inserted properly and people are counseled properly," he said, noting he has received few complaints among his few hundred Norplant patients.

Gloriane Angellotti, 37, recently had her implants removed after nearly five years and had no problems. "I thought it was great," she said. "It worked and it was convenient. That's the bottom line."

But those who've sued say some doctors told them nothing and warnings didn't include some illnesses, while downplaying others. For example, potential side effects mention weight gain and prolonged bleeding, but don't indicate that could mean 60 pounds or menstruation for 45 straight days.

Linda Salazar, a 21-year-old New Mexico mother of two, blames Norplant for gallstones, anemia, depression, a thyroid disorder and 16 consecutive months of menstrual bleeding that cost her a job.

"I couldn't nurse my baby," she said. "I couldn't sleep at night. I had joint pains. I shouldn't be feeling those things at 19 years old. ... I've never been that sick in my entire life. I was an emotional wreck."

Some women claim even more catastrophic illnesses, including strokes, paralysis and coma. Wyeth-Ayerst revised its adverse reactions in 1994, saying strokes and heart attacks have been reported in less than 1 percent of users, but the causal link to Norplant is unknown.

Climate changes indicate global warming

N.Y. Times News Service

The latest research extends a study last May, also led by Karl, which concluded that from 1980 through 1994, the greenhouse effect increased the incidence of drought, above-normal temperatures, wintertime precipitation and heavy rainstorms in many areas of the United States.

In a new study of weather trends in the United States, China, Australia and the former Soviet Union, scientists have turned up further evidence that some of the predicted effects of emissions of heat-trapping greenhouse gases on the world's climate are being felt.

Computerized models of the climate system suggest, among other things, that as concentrations of greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide rise, a greater proportion of precipitation will be in the form of heavy rainfalls and snowfalls. They also suggest that day-to-day and week-to-week differences in temperature will be less pronounced.

The new study, by American and Australian scientists, has found that both phenomena are occurring in some parts of the world, but not in others. It was conducted by Thomas R. Karl and Richard W. Knight of the National Climatic Data Center in Asheville, N.C., and Neil Plummer of the Australian Bureau of Meteorology and is published in the current issue of the British journal Nature.

Karl characterized the results as "another piece of the puzzle" of climate change that researchers are trying to assemble by investigating different climatic effects likely to be produced by increasing concentrations of greenhouse gases.

The latest research extends a study last May, also led by Karl, which concluded that from 1980 through 1994, the greenhouse effect increased the incidence of drought, above-normal temperatures, wintertime precipitation and heavy rainstorms in many areas of the United States.

As revealed in a draft report recently made available on the Internet, experts advising the world's governments are saying for the first time that at least some of the climate change being observed in the world is likely to have been caused by human activity like the burning of coal, oil and wood, which produces carbon dioxide.

The draft report also predicts that an increase in the incidence of extreme weather events will accompany a rise in the average global temperature of 1.44 to 6.3 degrees Fahrenheit over the next century if greenhouse gas emissions are not reduced.

According to the imperfect computerized models of the climate system on which the experts largely base their expectations, a warming climate could damp down short-term variations in temperature. Normally, high and low temperatures in the summer vary less from one day to the next than in other seasons. The models predict that as the climate warms, the swings should generally become more summerlike.

This has indeed happened, Karl and his colleagues found by examining temperature records from hundreds of sites in China, the former Soviet Union and the United States over the last 30 to 80 years. In this respect, temperate regions are becoming somewhat more like the tropics, where the temperature is relatively constant year-round.

Temperature records were also examined for Australia, but no clear trend was found. Different atmospheric circulation patterns in the Southern Hemisphere may account for this, Karl said.

The researchers also examined precipitation records from the United States, China and the former Soviet Union. They divided daily precipitation totals into five categories ranging from very light to extreme, then calculated the proportion of precipitation falling into each category. "Extreme" was defined as two or more inches of precipitation in one day.

The results from the former Soviet Union were inconclusive. Because the Russians have changed their techniques for observing and measuring rainfall many times, said Karl, reliable data are available only for the last 20 to 25 years. "That's not enough to get a good notion of what's happening in the long term," he said.

In China, where data exist from 1951 to 1990, no increase in the proportion of total precipitation falling in extreme events was found. One reason, Karl said, may be that China is heavily affected by monsoons; another may be that the effects of warming have not yet been felt in China, because that country's unusually heavy reliance on the burning of coal produces large emissions of sulfate aerosols that exert a cooling effect. The aerosols reflect some of the sun's energy.

In the United States, however, there was a clear pattern: from 1910 to 1990, the proportion of precipitation falling as part of extreme events grew, while the proportion falling in moderate and lighter events shrank.

New Jersey's Claude Lemieux, last year's Stanley Cup playoff MVP, is expected to be traded by the Devils ater a bitter contract dispute with management.

Lemieux out in NJ

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Less than 24 hours after winning a contract arbitration with Stanley Cup MVP Claude Lemieux, the New Jersey Devils on Saturday told the forward that he would be traded "in the best interests of the team."

Lemieux, 30, had played a major role in helping the Devils win the NHL championship by scoring 13 postseason goals. He also angered general manager Lou Lamoriello in recent months by challenging a contract he signed in the offseason.

The stunning development came on a day the Devils signed their last major restricted free agent in goaltender Martin Brodeur.

Midland High takes fourth straight match

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

Maybe comparisons to the 1993 Dallas Cowboys are a little bit premature but after an 0-2 start in District 4-5A play, the Midland High Lady Bulldogs are pulling off what some said would be a difficult, if not impossible, chore.

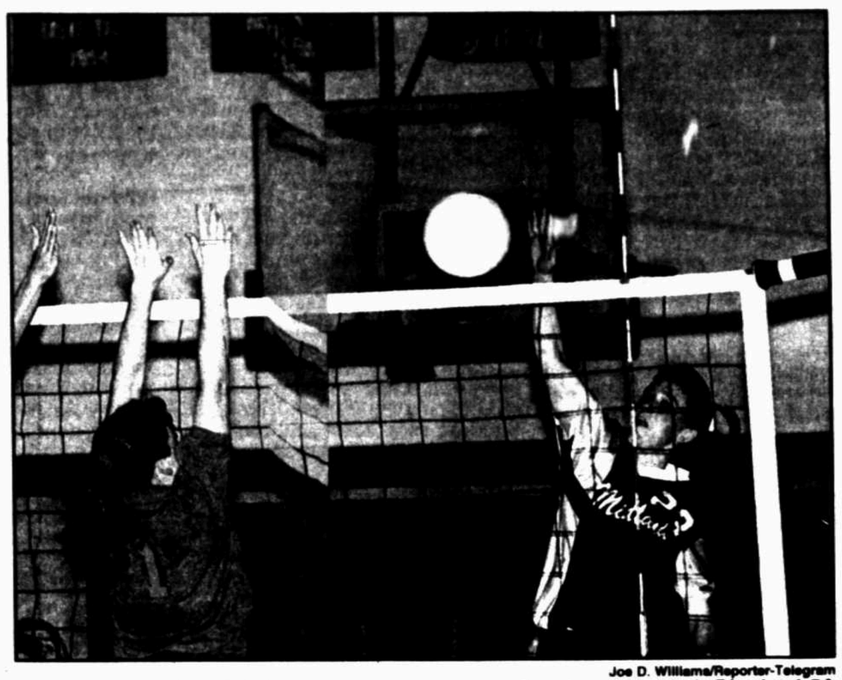

That Cowboy team, if you will remember, started the season with two losses and came back to win their second straight Super Bowl, making them the first to do so in the history of the league.

The Lady Bulldogs, who knocked off league-leading San Angelo Central 10-15, 15-10, 15-12 Saturday afternoon at the MHS gym, have now won four straight and are tied with two other teams for second place in league play. Only Abilene Cooper, who was tied with Central at 4-1 coming into Saturday's action, stands alone at the top with a 5-1 mark. Odessa defeated Abilene High to improve to 4-2 and a second straight loss puts the Lady Bobcats at 4-2 as well. MHS improved to 13-7 on the season.

The victory came against a hot San Angelo team, which until it fell for the first time in league play to Cooper, was the only undefeated team left in the district standings after the first two weeks. But the Lady Bobcats were missing top returner Patrina Pearson, lost to failing grades, and the Lady Bulldogs seem to be finally playing up to the potential that many observed was there at the beginning of the season.

"We just went in knowing that they (Central players) didn't think we were anything," said senior outside hitter Sara Pritchett. "But we played our game, we didn't get down when things weren't going good — and I don't think

Tech gets whacked in Waco

■ Baylor's Douglas runs for 157 yards as Baylor dumps Tech in SWC opener for both teams.

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

WACO — Texas Tech's road to the Cotton Bowl last season started with a rout of Baylor.

This year, the Bears may have knocked the 24th-ranked Red Raiders off that path with a 9-7 victory Saturday in the teams' final game as Southwest Conference members.

"The two of us playing to open conference play is really tough," Baylor coach Chuck Reedy said. "We are two of the upper echelon teams, and one team comes out of it in good shape and one team comes out of it with their backs to the wall. A game like this can turn your whole season."

Jerod Douglas rushed for 157 yards to set up three field goals by Jarvis Van Dyke and Baylor's defense, which is first in the nation against the pass and fourth overall, confounded Tech all day.

Douglas twisted and turned to make short gains into bigger ones, and exploded into the smallest flashes of daylight on his 25 carries, including runs of 38, 32 and 22 yards. He returned the opening kickoff 76 yards to set up Baylor's first field goal.

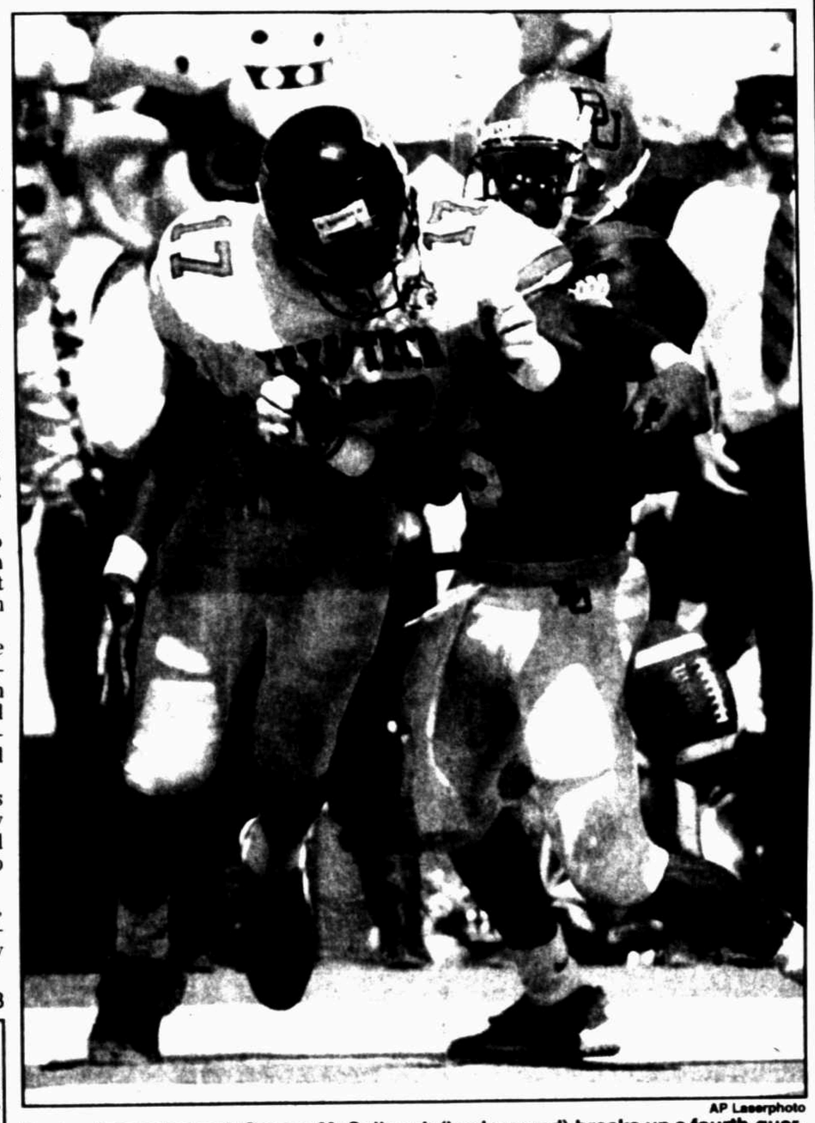

"It's amazing to me that a guy who is only 175 pounds can break as many tackles as he does," Reedy said. "Jerod is a remarkable back, who continues to play a bigger role in our offense."

The Bears (3-1, 1-0) allowed Tech (1-2, 0-1) across midfield only twice in the second half, stopping one of those drives by recovering a fumble at the Baylor 42.

Jacksonville a different team now

■ With Mark Brunell now in charge, the Houston Oilers will be facing a different Jaguars' club than it met in the opener.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — While Jacksonville is playing the Houston Oilers for the second time in five weeks, the Jaguars won't be facing the same team in the Astrodome on Sunday.

Houston's offense was struggling when the Oilers scratched out a 10-3 victory in the season opener with backup quarterback Will Furrer subbing in the second half for injured Chris Chandler and Gary Brown rushing for 101 yards.

This time, Chandler is healthy and coming off a career performance, hitting 23 of 26 passes for 352 yards and four touchdowns in last week's 38-28 victory over Cincinnati.

Houston's offense is clicking and the defense is still ranked No. 1 in the NFL.

Jacksonville coach Tom Coughlin realizes the Astrodome won't be a hospitable place for the Jaguars (0-4) to get their first franchise victory.

"One of the big differences in the Oilers is their offensive line has one a great job, and Chris has been able to negotiate some long pass plays," Coughlin said. "We've got to be able to handle that. Chris had an outstanding game last week. He reacted very well."

Rookie running back Rodney Thomas will be another new face in the Oilers lineup. Brown suffered a knee injury last week and will be out 4-6 weeks.

"Rodney is a good player, but he's different from Gary," Jaguars defensive end Jeff Lageman said. "Gary Brown has a little more power and Rodney is more of a slasher, speed type. We'd have trouble stopping either of them."

Thomas gained 76 yards on 25 carries in reserve against Cincinnati and has pronounced himself ready to start in the NFL.

"I can't believe they pay me to do this; it's going to be fun," Thomas said. "I will be physically ready to play. I've always said that I can play the game and I'm getting the feel for this offense."

Since playing the Jaguars, the Oilers also have lost two defensive starters for the season, middle linebacker Al Smith and safety Marcus Robertson. But the offensive improvement has helped the Oilers go 2-2.

Chandler threw touchdown passes of 58, 23, 8 and 46 yards against Cincinnati, but offensive coordinator Jerry Rhome doesn't promise another bombing raid on the Jaguars

"We don't just sit there and say,' We've got to go deep, because that's what we did last week,'" Rhome said. "The idea is to put points on the board, but you have to be smart about it. If they play us tight, we'll go deep. If they play us soft,' we'll go underneath."

It's worked to near perfection for one week. Now the Oilers want to gain con-

Cowboys, Redskins set for battle

By Joseph White
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — It might be the Cowboys vs. Redskins. Still, it's hard to ignore the records this time.

Not that you could ever write off the chance of an upset when these two longtime NFC rivals play, but the "bring-'em-on" passion of the 1970s and '80s was missing this year as the teams prepared to meet Sunday at RFK Stadium.

"If you go to the Pittsburgh Steelers, you know that the Pittsburgh Steelers hate the Cleveland Browns," said tight end Scott Galbraith, one of seven ex-Cowboys on the Redskins team. "I just don't get that same kind of feeling with this Dallas-Redskins thing. It's going to take me a while."

Sure, there was a lot of emotion in the Washington locker room this week, but it was from players debating the O.J. Simpson trial. On the field, the 49ers have replaced the Redskins as the Cowboys' chief nemesis, while the Redskins (1-3) will go into Sunday's game with a volatile psyche scarred by last-minute lapses in tough losses at Denver and Tampa Bay.

"These guys (Dallas) are just untouchable," said Redskins cornerback Darrell Green, making his 23rd appearance in the rivalry. "Yet here we are, a team that is just kind of struggling. So we have to concentrate on the basics — being a unit, stopping the run, stopping the pass, playing well and holding onto the ball and so forth."

Interest in the series has waned with the ebb-and-flow of both teams in recent years, although that didn't mean there weren't surprises. Dallas' 13-3 victory over a strong Joe Gibbs-coached team in 1989 was its only victory of the season. A rebuilding Redskins team pulled off a 35-16 Monday night shocker against the Super Bowl champions two years ago.

Fans greeted by protesters at Nebraska football game

The Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Fans going to the Washington State-Nebraska football game Saturday were greeted by about 30 protesters calling attention to violence against women.

Nebraska running back Lawrence Phillips has pleaded no contest to misdemeanor assault and trespassing charges for hitting a former girlfriend. He has been suspended from the team. Phillips wrote a letter of apology to the woman, who also is a student-athlete.

Madeline Popa, coordinator of the Nebraska chapter of the National Organization for Women, said the protesters support football, but want to keep violence confined to the field.

Fans had mixed reactions. "Give me ten bucks and I'll go up and punch one for you," one man said to his friend as they walked by.

Joe Frolio, 85, of Omaha, said he supported the protesters. "We need to protect these women who go to school here," he said. "They come here to be educated."

Eighteen members of the University of Nebraska Women's Caucus signed a document calling for a review of Phillips' status as a student and whether he violated student conduct rules.

Astros beat Cubs, stay alive

■ Dodgers clinch first NL Western Division title since 1988 with win over Padres.

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Houston Astros kept their NL wild-card hopes alive and eliminated the Chicago Cubs from the postseason picture, winning 9-8 Saturday on John Cangelosi's tiebreaking single in the seventh inning.

Craig Biggio, Jeff Bagwell, Derrick May and Rick Wilkins homered for Houston, which began the day one game behind the Colorado Rockies in the wild-card race. The Astros must beat Chicago in Sunday's season finale and hope Colorado loses to San Francisco.

The Cubs were unable to hold a 6-4 lead and had no more rallies left after Houston scored in the seventh. It was 8-8 when Ricky Gutierrez doubled with one out off Mike Perez (2-6) and took third on Milt Thompson's grounder. Cangelosi then lined a 1-1 pitch to center.

Greg Swindell (10-9) won in relief of Shane Reynolds. Todd Jones pitched two perfect innings before Mike Henneman who blew a 3-0 lead in Friday's ninth inning, worked the ninth for his eighth save, striking out Shawon Dunston with a runner on second to end the game.

Dodgers 7, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Los Angeles advanced to the playoffs for the first time since 1988, clinching the NL West title by beating San Diego.

Raul Mondesi, refusing to be sidelined by a knee injury, broke a 1-1 tie in the seventh with a two-run homer off Doug Bochtler (4-4), and Mike Piazza hit a two-run homer the following inning off Dustin Hermanson. Dave Hansen added an RBI double in the ninth and Brett Butler followed with a run-scoring single.

Rockies 9, Giants 3

DENVER — Larry Walker and Ellis Burks drove in two runs each as Colorado beat San Francisco and assured itselves of at least a tie for a postseason spot.

Colorado, which can do no worse than a tie for the wild-card berth, stopped a three-game losing streak and moved within a half-game of Los Angeles in the NL West. The Dodgers played at San Diego on Saturday night.

The Rockies maintained their one-game lead over Houston in the wild-card race. If the Rockies lose Sunday, they could wind up in a one-game playoff Monday against either the Dodgers or Astros. If Colorado wins Sunday, the three-year old team will play Atlanta or Cincinnati starting Tuesday.

Walker hit a solo homer, his 35th, and a sacrifice fly. Burks had a two-run double.

Bill Swift (9-3) allowed one run and 10 hits in 5 2-3 innings. Swift, pitching with frayed shoulder cartilage that will require surgery in the offseason, skirted trouble in the third, fourth and fifth innings. The Giants, who stranded 15, got two runners aboard with two outs in each of those innings, but Swift wriggled out of the jams, including a strikeout of Matt Williams in the fifth.

Cardinals 5, Pirates 1

ST. LOUIS — Alan Benes picked up his first major league victory, striking out 10 and coming within one out of a shutout as St. Louis beat Pittsburgh.

Jose Oliva and Brian Jordan homered for St. Louis and Danny Sheaffer added a two-run triple.

Benes (1-2), the Cardinals' top young pitching prospect, had surrendered 17 hits and 14 earned runs in 7 1-3 innings over his two previous starts. But against the Pirates, the 23-year-old righthander came within one out of a five-hitter.

Mets 8, Braves 4

NEW YORK — New York won their fifth in a row — all against playofi teams — by using a six-run sixth inning to beat Atlanta.

New York sent 11 batters to the plate in the sixth, getting six hits and taking advantage of an error by right fielder David Justice. Edgardo Alfonzo had a two-run single, Carl Everett and pinch-hitter Joe Orsulak had RBI singles, Rico Brogna doubled in a run and Todd Hundley hit a sacrifice fly which Justice dropped.

Blas Minor (4-2) got the win, pitching a scoreless sixth. John Franco got the last out for his 29th save.

.Phillies 3, Marlins 2

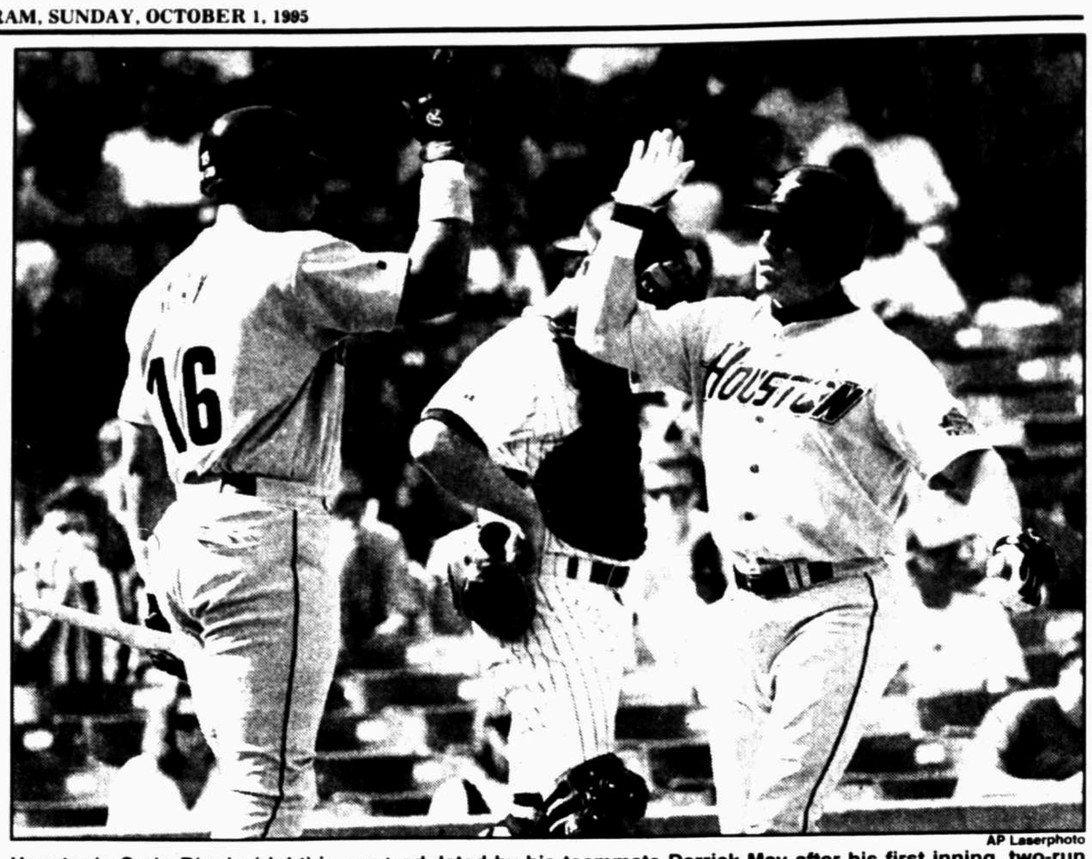

MIAMI — Heathcliff Slocumb struck out Alex Arias with the bases loaded to end the eighth inning and Philadelphia clinched at least a share of second place in the NL East by beating Florida.

Expos 6, Reds 1

MONTREAL — Kirk Rueter pitched two-hit ball over six innings and Montreal used two Cincinnati errors to score four unearned runs in the first inning and win the game.

Rueter (5-3), who faced the minimum 15 batters through five innings, extended his shutout streak to 17 2-3 innings.

Tettleton knocks two homers as Rangers stall Mariners' title chase

The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — The Seattle Mariners failed to clinch the AL West on their own Saturday night, losing 9-2 to Texas as Mickey Tettleton hit two homers and the Rangers knocked Andy Benes out in the second inning.

■ AL Roundup

Seattle, which lost for only the second time in 17 games, still had a chance to clinch the first division title in its 19-year history if the California Angels lost later Saturday night against Oakland.

The Rangers got to Benes (7-2) for seven runs in 1 1-3 innings and dealt the Mariners just their second loss in Benes' 12 starts since being acquired from San Diego in late July.

Tettleton's first homer, his 30th, came in the first inning after Will Clark had an RBI single and Juan Gonzalez singled.

Indians 3, Royals 2

CLEVELAND — Albert Belle tied the game with his 50th home run, and Carlos Baerga won it with an RBI single in the 10th inning as Cleveland beat Kansas City.

The Indians won in their final at-bat for the 27th time this year.

Belle, who homered in the sixth inning, matched Babe Ruth's record with 17 September home runs and became the 12th major league player to hit 50 in a season — the first since Detroit's Cecil Fielder hit 51 in 1990. Belle did it in Cleveland's 143rd game.

Ruth homered 17 times in September 1927, the year he set a record for a 154-game season with 60 home runs.

Jesse Levis led off the Cleveland 10th against Jeff Montgomery (2-3) with a double. An intentional walk to Kenny Lofton and a sacrifice bunt by Omar Vizquel put runners at second and third, and Baerga then blooped a single into right-center.

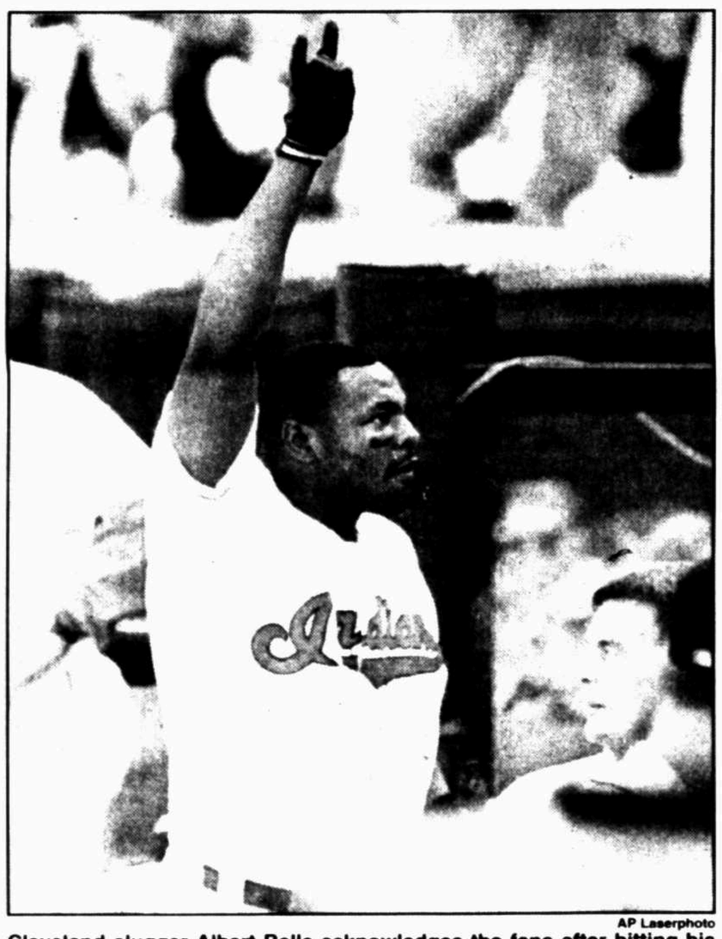

Alan Embree (3-2), Cleveland's fifth pitcher, gave up one hit in the 10th inning — Kansas City's fifth of the game.

The victory kept the Indians in reach of 100 wins for only the second time in franchise history.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — New York clinched a tie for the AL wild card Saturday, moving closer to their first postseason berth since 1981 by beating Toronto.

The Yankees would wrap up the AL's first-ever wild card Saturday night if California lost to Oakland.

Players that have hit at least 50 home runs in a season with total, team and year:

61 — Roger Maris, N.Y. Yankees, 1961
60 — Babe Ruth, N.Y. Yankees, 1927
59 — Babe Ruth, N.Y. Yankees, 1921
58 — Jimmie Foxx, Philadelphia A's, 1932
58 — Hank Greenberg, Detroit Tigers, 1938
56 — Hack Wilson, Chicago Cubs, 1930
54 — Babe Ruth, N.Y. Yankees, 1920
54 — Babe Ruth, N.Y. Yankees, 1928
54 — Ralph Kiner, Pittsburgh Pirates, 1949
54 — Mickey Mantle, N.Y. Yankees, 1961
52 — Mickey Mantle, N.Y. Yankees, 1956
52 — Willie Mays, San Francisco Giants, 1965

51 — Cecil Fielder, Detroit Tigers, 1990
50 — Jimmie Foxx, Boston Red Sox, 1938
50 — Albert Belle, Cleveland Indians, 1995

If not, a victory by New York on Sunday or a loss by the Angels on the last day of the regular season would clinch it.

Red Sox 9, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE — Troy O'Leary had three hits and two RBIs against his former team as Boston routed Milwaukee.

Boston claimed O'Leary when the Brewers placed him on waivers during spring training. He's hit .308 with 31 doubles, six triples, 10 homers and 49 RBIs in 112 games for the Red Sox.

Mike Maddux (4-1) starting for just the fourth time this year, allowed one run and four hits in five innings with four strikeouts and a walk. Four relievers followed.

Orioles 12, Tigers 0

BALTIMORE — Ben McDonald, Jimmy Haynes, and Jesse Orosco teamed to pitch Baltimore's fourth straight shutout and Brady Anderson hit his first career grand slam as it beat Detroit.

McDonald (3-6) had a no-hitter until Chris Gomez singled to center with one out in the sixth.

McDonald gave up one hit and five walks in six innings for his first victory since June 10.

Mike Mussina, who started the streak, will attempt to make it five in a row Sunday.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dave Winfield revealed Saturday that he won't be added to the Cleveland Indians' playoff roster.

"I'm a little shocked and very disappointed," said Winfield, who has more career hits than any active player. "I'm not here throwing darts or barbs or anything like that. Coming down the stretch, I haven't had opportunities to perform or produce."

Winfield has played with a sore left shoulder most of the year. Limited to occasional work as a DH and a few pinch-hitting appearances, he has batted .193 with two homers and four RBIs in 45 games.

He said his next step would be surgery.

"I will have the corrective surgery and go from there," he said. "I have no comment on what I plan to do after this personally or with my career."

The Indians signed the 43-year-old Winfield as a free agent in April so he could add some stability and experience to the team, particularly during a pennant race and the postseason.

But he missed more than a month of the season in June and July because of a strained left rotator cuff. He was on the disabled list again when playoff rosters were set Aug. 31, which gave the Indians the option of adding him any time before Tuesday.

Rice, Army fight to tie

By John Kekis
AP Sports Writer

WEST POINT, N.Y. — J. Parker kicked a 44-yard field goal as time expired Saturday, capping a furious last minute drive and giving Army a 21-21 tie with Rice.

Trailing 21-7 early in the third quarter, Army (1-2-1) rebounded on two field goals by Parker and a 5-yard touchdown run by Steve Carpenter to salvage a game the Black Knights seemingly had lost.

Rice (1-2-1), coming off a 52-7 drubbing by LSU, took the second-half kickoff and scored in just 2:11 to take a two-touchdown lead. Josh LaRocca hit Jeff Venghaus with passes of 14 and 18 yards on the first two plays to move the ball quickly to the Army 33. Five plays later, Keilone Gordon scored on a 14-yard run and Army was reeling.

With a near-capacity crowd of 39,069 on hand, including "Doc" Blanchard, Glenn Davis and 50 other members of Army's national championship teams of 1944-45, the Black Knights refused to give in.

Parker kicked a 42-yard field goal to pull Army within 21-10. The Army defense forced a quick punt, and the Black Knights came back again, converting two third-down plays and another on fourth-and-1 before Carpenter scored on a 5-yard run.

Ronnie McAda's pass fell incomplete on the 2-point conversion attempt, but Rice was whistled for what turned out to be a critical holding penalty and Carpenter ran the ball in on the second try to make it 21-18 with 13 seconds left in the third quarter.

Army gambled four times on fourth down in the final quarter and failed three times. But the one the Black Knights did convert came in the final minute — McAda gained 6 yards on a fourth-and-4 play — and set up the tying field goal.

Army took the opening kickoff and marched 65 yards to a 7-0 lead, converting four consecutive third-down plays along the way.

Ron Thomas keyed the drive with two clutch third-down plays. He caught an 8-yard pass from McAda on third-and-7. Army's only completion of the first half, and gained another 8 yards on a pitch to the Rice 32. John Conroy, who gained 166 yards on 24 carries the previous week against 18th-ranked Washington, scored on an 8-yard run.

Longhorns pound Ponies

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The Texas Longhorns had plenty of firepower to make up for an off day by quarterback James Brown.

Brown threw two touchdown passes and Shon Mitchell scored twice and rushed for 180 yards Saturday as No. 21 Texas rolled to a 35-10 victory over Southern Methodist in a Southwest Conference opener.

Texas (3-1) bounced back from a 55-27 loss to Notre Dame to win the 73rd and last scheduled game in a series dating back to 1916. With the breakup of the Southwest Conference, Texas heads for the new Big 12 and SMU (1-4) to the Western Athletic Conference.

The sore-shouldered Brown had a bizarre day. In addition to the two touchdown passes, he had three passes intercepted by SMU cornerback Cornell Parker. He was replaced in the second half by Richard Walton, who threw a 25-yard touchdown pass to Matt Davis.

Texas coach John Mackovic replaced Brown after he threw his third interception to start the third quarter.

"His arm was tired and he didn't have any strength in it," Mackovic said. "The arm needs some rest but he should be able to start against Rice next week."

Brown completed four passes for 62 yards as Texas marched 80 yards to a touchdown to set the tone for the day. The payoff came on Brown's 17-yard scoring pass to Davis.

A 19-yard Brown-to-Davis connection positioned the Longhorns for their second touchdown, a 3-yard run by Mitchell.

Mitchell dashed 65 yards for a touchdown in the second half as the Longhorns pulled away from the tiring Mustangs.

SMU got a gift touchdown in the third period when Mike Adams fumbled the ball away on a punt at the Texas 3. Three plays later, SMU scored on a 6-yard shovel pass from Chris James to Donte Womack, who also had 104 yards rushing.

SMU also got Ben Crosland's 34-yard field goal as a crowd of 26,921 watched in the Cotton Bowl. It was Texas' eighth consecutive win over SMU and ended the series at 47-22-4 in the Longhorn's favor.

TECH: Baylor nearly shuts out Raiders

(From 1B)

"Baylor had a great defensive game and they did what they had to do on offense," said Tech coach Spike Dykes. "They were able to get some pressure on the passer and we had a hard time executing our offense."

The Red Raiders, who play No. 9 Texas A&M next week, didn't score until quarterback Zebbie Lethridge's 1-yard sneak with five seconds to play. An onside kick failed, and Baylor, which is idle next week, ran out the clock with one final play.

"We really wanted the shutout, but as long as we win, that's all that matters," said Baylor linebacker LaCurtis Jones, who had a sack.

Last year, the Red Raiders held Baylor to 221 yards in a 38-7 victory in Lubbock. That victory — Tech's biggest point margin over Baylor in 21 years — started a four-game winning streak that put the Red Raiders in the Cotton Bowl. Next season both teams will join the Big 12 Conference.

On Saturday, Tech again had a big day on defense, limiting Baylor to only 253 yards — 209 on the ground — and forcing the Bears to settle for Van Dyke field goals of 33 and 32 yards in the first half and 19 yards in the third quarter.

But the offense never got going as Lethridge opened with five incompletions and Tech didn't pick up a first down or complete a pass until the second quarter.

Buckeyes roll up points in 45-26 win over Notre Dame

The Associated Press

Coming down from the press box and returning to the sideline sooner than expected gave Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz an up-close view of the Fighting Irish allowing the most points in his 10-year tenure.

Seventh-ranked Ohio State scored three touchdowns following Irish turnovers during a 5 1/2-minute span in the third quarter, and beat No. 15 Notre Dame 45-26 Saturday in the first meeting of the schools since 1936.

"I don't know how much people paid for tickets out there, but they got their money's worth," Ohio State coach John Cooper.

Wisconsin got its money's worth in State College, Pa., ending the longest winning streak in Division I-A with a 17-9 victory over No. 6 Penn State.

Penn State, which had won 20 in a row since losing to Ohio State on Oct. 30, 1993, was victimized by the precision passing of Darrell Bevell. The senior was 18-for-22 and threw two touchdown passes.

Holtz, who coached Notre Dame (3-2) from the sideline for the first time since undergoing spinal surgery Sept. 12, watched as the Irish gave the ball away on three straight possessions.

"I had planned to be upstairs, but I talked to (defensive coordinator and interim head coach) Bob Davie and he thought it would be better if I was on the field," Holtz said. "Once the game was over, I felt pretty beat. Maybe it was a mistake to be on the field. I have a lot of discomfort now, but the greatest discomfort of all is losing."

Eddie George rushed for 207 yards and two touchdowns for Ohio State and Bobby Hoying threw for 272 yards and four TDs. Terry Glenn caught two touchdown passes, giving him seven TDs in his last three games.

The most points scored against Notre Dame under Holtz had been in a 48-42 victory over Hawaii in 1991.

■ College Football Roundup

No. 2 Nebraska 35, Washington St. 21

At Lincoln, Neb., quarterback Tommie Frazier scored three touchdowns and freshman Ahman Green ran for 176 yards and a score as Nebraska (5-0) gained 428 rushing yards against the fourth-best rush defense in the country.

Washington State (2-2) came into the game allowing just 69.7 rushing yards. Chad Davis of the Cougars threw for 278 yards and two touchdowns.

No. 3 Florida 28, Mississippi 10

Danny Wuerffel threw three touchdown passes in Gainesville, Fla., his first two extending his streak of 10 straight possessions getting his team into the end zone and giving the Gators (4-0, 3-0 SEC) a 21-3 lead.

Ole Miss (2-2, 1-2) gained 325 yards, but Tim Montz, who was 6-of-6 on field goals, missed two of three attempts.

No. 5 USC 31, Arizona St. 0

Keyshawn Johnson set an NCAA record by becoming the first player with 100 or more yards receiving in 12 consecutive games. He had 13 catches for 171 yards as the Trojans (4-0, 2-0 Pac-10) didn't miss three suspended starters.

No. 4 Colorado 38, No. 10 Oklahoma 17

NORMAN, Okla. — John Hessler made Colorado history in his first career start Saturday night, throwing a school-record five touchdown passes in a victory over No. 10 Oklahoma.

Hessler, who came off the bench last week to lead Colorado (5-0, 1-0 Big Eight) past Texas A&M, had to lead the Buffaloes back from first-half deficits of 10-0 and 17-7. The sophomore did it in style, completing 24 of 34 passes for 348 yards.

Oklahoma (3-1, 0-1) has gone seven years without beating the Buffaloes.

Wisconsin 17, No. 6 Penn St. 9

Penn State (3-1, 0-1 Big Ten) was shut out in the first half for the first time since 1992 against Miami, 33 games ago. The Badgers (2-1-1, 1-0) took a 17-3 lead when Tony Simmons caught a 21-yard touchdown pass with 10 minutes remaining.

No. 8 Michigan 38, Miami, Ohio 19

Brian Griese, son of NFL Hall of Famer Bob Griese, threw two touchdown passes as Michigan (5-0) took a 31-0 lead at Ann Arbor, Mich.

Griese was 10-of-13 for 157 yards in the first half without an interception in relief of injured Scott Dreisbach against Miami (3-2).

No. 11 Virginia 35, Wake Forest 17

The Cavaliers (5-1, 4-0 ACC) beat Wake Forest (1-4, 0-2) for the 12th straight time as Mike Groh passed for 335 yards and two touchdowns at Charlottesville, Va.

This is the first time Virginia has won five games in a month since going 5-0 in September 1990 and rising to No. 1 in the rankings.

No. 12 Tennessee 31, Oklahoma St. 0

Jay Graham rushed for 108 yards and two touchdowns and Peyton Manning passed for two more scores at Knoxville, Tenn., as the Volunteers (4-1) scored twice in the final 70 seconds of the first half to break open a close game.

David Thompson led the Cowboys (1-4) with 104 yards on 27 carries.

No. 13 Auburn 42, Kentucky 21

Auburn took a 35-7 lead at Lexington, Ky., in beating Kentucky (2-3, 1-2 SEC) for the 13th straight time. Patrick Nix passed for three first-half touchdowns and 191 yards for Auburn (3-1, 2-1).

Kentucky's Moe Williams rushed for 164 yards and two touchdowns.

No. 14 Louisiana St. 20, South Carolina 20

LSU (3-1-1) needed Shedrick Wilson's 19-yard touchdown catch with 1:06 remaining and Andre Lafleur's extra point to salvage a 20-20 tie at Columbia, S.C.

The Gamecocks (1-3-1) took a 20-13 lead on Reed Morton's second field goal of the game. But quarterback Jamie Howard began the final drive with 3:59 left. He hit passes of 16 and 9 yards to Eddie Kennison and 7 yards to Wilson before the TD.

No. 16 Kansas St. 44, Northern Illinois 0

At Manhattan, Kan., Kevin Lockett broke the school record for touchdown catches and Bill Snyder became Kansas State's winningest coach as the Wildcats improved to 4-0 for the third straight season.

Lockett increased his career total to 14 and erased the record of 12 set by Andre Coleman. Snyder improved his record to 40-31-1 since 1989.

No. 18 Washington 26, Oregon St. 16

Huskies quarterback Damon Huard surpassed the 4,000-yard mark in career passing as the Huskies (3-1, 2-0 Pac-10) took a 17-0 lead at Corvallis, Ore., and beat Oregon State for the eighth straight time.

Beavers redshirt freshman quarterback Tim Alexander rushed for 182 yards on 24 carries, and passed for 140 yards and scored two touchdowns in his first start.

No. 20 Alabama 31, Georgia 0

Alabama's defense forced six turnovers at Athens, Ga., and combined with its special teams to score three touchdowns as Georgia (2-3, 1-3 SEC) was shut out for the first time in 48 games.

Cedric Samuel returned a fumble 25 yards for another and Kevin Jackson scored on a 26-yard interception return for Alabama (3-1, 2-1).

No. 23 Arkansas 35, Vanderbilt 7

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Madre Hill ran for two touchdowns and 200 yards and Barry Lunney threw for one TD and ran for one as No. 23 Arkansas routed Vanderbilt.

The Razorbacks rolled up 327 yards offense.

Other Texas Games

Angelo State 54, West Texas A&M 14

SAN ANGELO — Jerome Lee piled up 298 all-purpose yards, including a 100-yard kickoff return and a 56-yard rushing touchdown as Angelo State beat West Texas A&M in the Lone Star Conference.

Grambling 64, Prairie View 0

DALLAS — Prairie View had been tied with Division III Macalester (Minn.) for the NCAA consecutive defeat streak.

Grambling scored on five of its first six possessions and finished with nine touchdowns to extend Prairie View's streak to 51.

Grambling's victory was the 399th in the 54-year coaching career of Eddie Robinson. His first chance for No. 400 comes next Saturday at home against Mississippi Valley State.

Penn State badgered by Wisconsin in 17-9 upset

The Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Penn State was a confused team Saturday night. And, for the first time in nearly two years, it was also a loser.

Darrell Bevell completed 18-of-22 passes and threw for two touchdowns as Wisconsin upset the sixth-ranked Nittany Lions 17-9.

Joe Paterno made a couple coaching bungles, including forgetting what down it was late in the first half, costing Penn State (3-1, 0-1 Big Ten) a chance to get three points.

Bevell was nearly perfect as Penn State's linebackers were unable to keep up with Wisconsin's receivers and backs.

"We saw some holes in their defense after looking at the films," Bevell said. "We knew we could throw a lot of crossing patterns at them."

Wally Richardson, who set a Penn State record with 33 completions, hit Freddie Scott on a 5-yard pass to cut the lead to 17-9 with 5:49 remaining. Penn State faked the kick and went for two, but Jon Witman was stopped just short of the goal line.

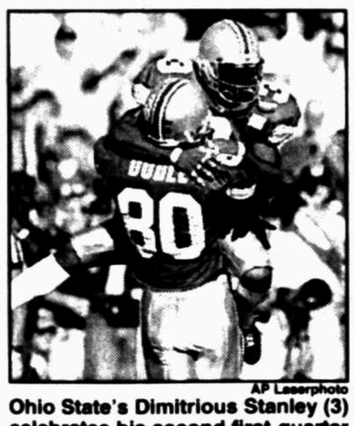

The Nittany Lions got the ball back one more time, but lost it on downs with two minutes left. Penn State had won 20 in a row since losing to Ohio State on Oct. 30, 1993, the longest streak in Division I-A.

Penn State fans thought that this streak would go at least one more game. Wisconsin was a two-touchdown underdog, and Penn State plays No. 7 Ohio State next weekend.

"It was a huge football game for us," coach Barry Alvarez said. "Coming into a tough environment, the kids responded and played their hearts out."

Wisconsin scored on their first two drives as flanker Michael London and tailback Carl McCullough consistently beat Penn State's linebackers in man-to-man coverage in the middle of the field.

London caught a short pass and turned it into a 25-yard gain to set up a 26-yard field goal by John Hall. On the next Badgers' drive, London caught a similar pass for 37 yards.

Ohio State's Dimitrious Stanley (3) celebrates his second first-quarter touchdown against Notre Dame in the arms of Rickey Dudley (80).

Two plays later, Bevell threw 21 yards to tight end Matt Nyquist, who easily beat cornerback Brian Miller and made an over-the-shoulder catch to put Wisconsin up 10-0.

The Badgers held Penn State to just 83 yards on the ground, its lowest total since 1991.

Richardson passed for 259 yards, but his longest completion was 18 yards, as the Badgers' zone defense prevented the big play.

"They forced us to play very patiently, which is something we're not used to," said Scott, who set a Penn State record with 13 receptions.

Scott said the offense was bewildered for much of the game.

With 20 seconds remaining in the first half and Penn State trailing 10-0, Engram dropped Richardson's pass on fourth and 4 at Wisconsin's 24-yard line.

"I saw third and 5 on the scoreboard," Paterno said. "If I knew it was fourth and 5, I would have gone for the field goal."

Irvan back, ready to put questions to rest

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. — Ernie Irvan is back after a 13-month hiatus. Now it's a question of what he can accomplish with one good eye and plenty of determination as he resumes his Winston Cup career in Sunday's Tyson Holly Farms 400.

"I tell you, if our stuff is ready to go to the front, I'm going to try to go to the front, just like I normally do," said Irvan, who will start seventh in the 36-car field at North Wilkesboro Speedway. "You can only go as fast as your equipment."

"It's tough to be prepared to go to the front, but it's a lot tougher to go to the front from the rear. We've already done one thing that enabled us to at least see the front."

Irvan was left near death and in a coma on Aug. 20, 1994 when he crashed during a practice session at Michigan International Speedway. His recovery has been nothing of miraculous, with the only remnant a frustrating double vision in his left eye that his doctors say may eventually go away.

In the meantime, the 36-year-old Irvan will race with a patch over the injured eye and an extra mirror in his car.

"I've added one little mirror on the left side, but it's not new," Irvan said. "I've run it at Daytona before. We've just had a year and a couple of months to fine one that works good."

Irvan, who has been testing race cars and trucks since last spring, had planned to begin his comeback a week ago in a SuperTruck race at Martinsville, Va. But rain doused that plan.

Still, his first real race experience since before his accident came Saturday in the SuperTruck race on the same .625-mile track where he will campaign a Robert Yates Racing Ford Thunderbird on Sunday.

Irvan acquitted himself well Saturday, starting second and leading twice in the early going. He slipped back to seventh place at the midway point, due to worn tires, but still appeared to be in the hunt.

The trucks take a halfway break in their races, and Irvan's crew attempted to change his swaybar during the intermission. They were unable to get the job done in time and Irvan retired without ever getting back into the event.

"We were running pretty good and faded there just before the break," the disappointed-but-buoyant Irvan said. "We were just trying to do too much during the halftime. We're not running for points or anything, so we'll just call it a day."

Still, he was competitive while running, and appeared to have no problem in traffic.

Looking ahead to Sunday's 400-lap race, Irvan said, "The last race we ran here (in April, 1994), I led almost every lap and ended up third because we had a bad pit stop — more my fault than anybody's. It's been a decent track for us.

"I'm not going to put any pressure on myself, and Robert and (crew chief) Larry (McReynolds) aren't going to do that, either. They've all sat down and said, 'Hey, you do whatever you feel like you can do.' The main thing we're doing, this is all a test session for me, for everybody to get ready for next year."

Roush Racing teammates Ted Musgrave and Mark Martin will start in the front row Sunday, followed by Bobby Hamilton and 10-time North Wilkesboro winner Darrell Waltrip, his brother Michael and Irvan's new teammate Dale Jarrett.

Jarrett, hired to replace Irvan this season, remains in the team's traditional No. 28, while Irvan's new car is painted nearly identically and bears No. 88. The two will switch numbers but run as teammates in 1996.

"What was really neat was that the first person to congratulate Ernie (after his qualifying effort on Friday) was Dale Jarrett," McReynolds said. "We came up and tested here two weeks ago and it was great to see the two guys working together."

Bliss leads final 21 laps to take SuperTruck race

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. — Mike Bliss, getting a big assist from new crew chief Barry Dodson, led the last 21 laps Saturday on the way to a victory in the Lowe's Home Improvement Warehouse 150 NASCAR SuperTruck race.

Dodson, who recently resigned from his job as Kyle Petty's Winston Cup crew chief, set Bliss' Ford truck up so that it ran better when the sun peeked out on the half-mile oval at North Wilkesboro Speedway. The sun finally made its appearance late in the race.

"I made a lucky guess and it worked," said the delighted Dodson, who helped Bliss, a former U.S. Auto Club sprint car champion, to his first SuperTruck victory.

"I never led a NASCAR truck race before and there was a lot of pressure the last five laps," said Bliss, who beat Butch Miller's Ford by 1.14 seconds, about six lengths. "The track was slick and the tires were giving out, but Barry said, 'Don't worry, it'll be OK.' And those guys did come back to us."

Ernie Irvan, making his first start in a race since his near-fatal crash at Michigan International Speedway in August of 1994, started second and led twice in the early going. He was seventh at the halfway break, but his crew was unable to replace a swaybar before the race was resumed and Irvan retired for the day."

Geoff Bodine, knocked out of the lead when he was spun by Jack Sprague on the 91st of 150 laps, came back to finish third. He was followed by Sprague, Ron Hornaday Jr. and Joe Ruttman.

Ruttman, who won the rain-delayed race Monday at Martinsville, Va., gained on series leader Mike Skinner in the points race. Skinner finished 10th Saturday, and now leads Ruttman by just 25 points with three races remaining.

Bliss, who won $30,650 and averaged 96.126 mph, was the seventh different winner in this inaugural SuperTruck season and the six race leaders Saturday were a series record.

IMSA Exxon Series

PHOENIX — Bill Auberlen won his fourth IMSA Exxon Supreme GTS-2 title of the year Saturday, beating David Donohue by 42.155 seconds in the 45-minute race at Phoenix International Raceway.

Auberlen, driving a Mazda RX-7, completed 42 laps on the 1.5-mile course with an average speed of 83.659 mph. Donohue drove a BMW M3 and John Paul Jr. was third in another BMW M3.

Jorge Trejos, who leads Auberlen by 14 points in the season series with one race remaining, finished fourth in a Porsche 911.

NHRA Sears Craftsman Nationals

TOPEKA, Kan. — Scott Kalitta set an NHRA record Saturday with a time of 4.660 seconds in Top Fuel qualifying for Sunday's Sears Craftsman Nationals.

Kalitta, who broke the mark of 4.690 set by Michael Brotherton last year at Englishtown, N.J., had a top speed of 302.52 mph for his quarter-mile run at Heartland Park Topeka.

Chuck Etchells led the Funny Car division with a run of 4.981 and 300.60 in a Dodge Avenger. Kurt Johnson topped the Pro Stock class at 7.046 and 194.84 in an Oldsmobile Cutlass, and John Myers led Pro Stock Motorcycle qualifiers at 7.584 and 174.92 on a Suzuki GSXR.

Twigg gets back world cycling title

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Rebecca Twigg, the first American to ever win a world title in the women's 3,000-meter pursuit, reclaimed her world record in winning that event Saturday at the World Cycling Championships.

Twigg, a silver medalist at the 1984 Olympics and the world champion in the 3,000 pursuit in 1982, 1984, 1985 and 1987, won the gold medal in 3 minutes, 36.081 seconds. She bettered the day-old record of 3:36.122 set by Marion Clignet of France in a qualifying race Friday. Clignet's mark had broken Twigg's record, set in 1993.

Antonella Bellutti of Italy was second in 3:46.611, followed by May-Britt Vaaland of Norway and Clignet.

Twigg's mark was the fourth world record set so far in the yearly competition.

Also on Saturday, Silvio Martinello of Italy won the men's 40-kilometer points race, a competition in which cyclists gain points depending on their position after a set number of laps.

In the finals of the men's 200-meter sprint, Darryn Hill of Australia beat Canadian Curt Harnett two races to one. Harnett had set a world record in an early round Thursday with a time of 9.865. In Saturday's final neither cyclist broke the 10-second barrier.

Australian Shane Kelly broke the record for the fastest kilometer on Tuesday with a time of 1:00.613, and Felicia Ballanger of France bettered her own world record in the women's 500-meter sprint with a time of 34.017.

Stars top Blues on Ledyard goal

ST. LOUIS — Defenseman Grant Ledyard's power-play goal at 5:43 of the third period gave the Dallas Stars a 3-2 win over the St. Louis Blues on Saturday night.

Ledyard took a low slap shot from the top of the right circle with the Blues two men short and beat goaltender Jon Casey low on the right side, breaking a 2-2 tie.

The win improved Dallas' preseason record to 4-3-1. The Blues dropped to 1-5-0.

The Stars had struggled on the power play, going 7-for-60 in preseason play before Saturday night. But they got two against the Blues, both by the defense.

Less than two minutes after the Blues took a 2-1 second-period lead on Adam Creighton's power-play goal, Dallas defenseman Kevin Hatcher returned the favor, beating Casey high on the glove side.

Dallas opened the scoring less than five minutes into the game when left wing Greg Adams followed his own shot from the right side, picked up the rebound and scored on a wraparound.

Then Blues defenseman Kevin Pronger scored his first preseason goal when he tapped in a centering pass from Brett Hull at 13:05 of the first period.

Teammate's pole position could hurt Hill in standings

By Nesha Starcevic

NUERBURGRING, Germany — David Coulthard's position as the pole sitter in Sunday's European Grand Prix could hurt Williams-Renault teammate Damon Hill's slim chances of overtaking Michael Schumacher in the Formula One standings.

Hill will start second, one position in front of Schumacher, the defending Formula One champion who holds a 17-point lead in the drivers' standings with four races left.

Defending Formula One champion Schumacher, the leader of this season's standings, was one of the few drivers to actually go faster Saturday, but the Benetton-Renault driver still will start from third position Sunday.

Coulthard, coming off his first Grand Prix victory, in Estoril, Portugal, last Sunday, is leaving the Williams team at the end of the season and knows he's in a delicate position with Hill.

"I won't hold him up unreasonably if he is quicker," Coulthard said. "My first duty is to the team and to help them win the constructors title. But we have the same equipment and if I'm quicker, I'm quicker."

Coulthard gained his third straight pole position with his Friday time of 1 minute, 18.738 seconds on the 2.822-mile Nuerburgring circuit, which is the setting for a Formula One race for the first time in 10 years. The Scotsman trails Hill by 16 points in third place.

Jones Jr. delivers KO to 'Postman'

By Bill Kaczor
Associated Press Writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Tony Thornton, known as "The Punching Postman," was nearly punchless as Roy Jones Jr. stopped him in the third round Saturday night to retain his IBF super middleweight title.

Jones dropped Thornton into the ropes and onto the canvas with a sweeping left hook at the bell to end the second round and then referee Brian Garry stopped the fight 45 seconds into the third.

It ended after Jones backed Thornton against the ropes and pummeled the challenger with a flurry of more than 30 unanswered punches.

"I set him up with a jab the whole fight, up and down, up and down, up and down," Jones said. "I jabbed up and faked jabbed down and caught him with a hook. That was it."

Boxing in his hometown, Jones remained undefeated in 30 fights including 25 knockouts. Thornton of Glassboro, N.J., dropped to 37-7-1 with 26 knockouts.

"I lost my left arm when I was blocking punches," said Thorton, who had a bad nerve in the arm before coming into the fight. "The referee was asking why I wasn't throwing punches. I said 'I can't, I can't.'"

He praised Jones as "the best super middleweight out there. He's the only one who could stop me."

Thornton had gone the distance in two prior title shots against James Toney and Chris Eubank.

It was Jones' third title defense — the second in Pensacola — since winning the 168-pound IBF title from Toney in a 12-round decision last November. He knocked out Antoine Byrd in the first round March 18 and stopped Vinny Pazienza in the sixth round on June 24.

Jones was expected to earn about $2 million as part of a multiyear contract with Home Box Office, which televised Saturday's fight. Thornton was to get about $250,000, his largest purse.

The bout took place at the Pensacola Civic Center.

Remember those who died in crash

The tragic crash of a World War II-vintage Martin B-26 Marauder that killed all five men on board Thursday understandably set a somber pace for the start of this weekend's Confederate Air Force (CAF) AirSho '95.

Investigators are still probing the cause of why the aircraft, called "Carolyn," crashed about 18 miles southwest of the CAF's headquarters at Midland International Airport shortly after takeoff for a training flight for the airshow. Two of the CAF's most experienced pilots were flying the aircraft which was nicknamed "widow maker" by pilots during World War II, reportedly because so many of the aircraft crashed.

Yet the only explanation for the crash that killed Walter A. Wooton of Harlingen, John Thomas Cloyd of El Paso and formerly of Midland, Vernon E. Thorp of Ocala, Fla., Colin Dunwell of Surrey, England and Chris Gardner of Essex, England came from the words of witnesses who saw the low-flying aircraft lose airspeed and plunge to the ground. Some of those witnesses said the light bomber's twin engines were making a sputtering sound as it seemed to slow and then the engines just stopped.

Following the tragic crash and with an airshow still to be performed, plans were hurriedly made to carry on with the AirSho '95 performance. There is no doubt that as thousands of people attended the show Saturday or today, many of them were thinking of the five men who had traveled to Midland to help the Confederate Air Force stage another reminder of the awesome air supremacy the United States put together in World War II.

Sadly, AirSho '95 is being performed without Walter Wooton, John Thomas Cloyd, Vernon Thorp, Colin Dunwell, Chris Gardner or "Carolyn." Their loss is a terrible tragedy. They will be remembered for the heritage they helped to preserve.

Rabin won't sacrifice security for peace

Twice in recent weeks I've seen Americans bemoan in print that Israel is committing suicide by living up to the peace agreement.

This is hilarious, not to mention indicative of the depth of both the ignorance and arrogance of some American Zionists.

Reese

Thinking that Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is going to sacrifice the security of Israel is like thinking Gen. George Patton was going to be timid in battle and diffident in speech. It's like presuming to advise Joe Stalin on how to handle domestic dissent. It's like worrying that Hulk Hogan is going to get mugged by a 6-year-old.

Idolize them or dislike them, agree with them or disagree, the Israelis are one tough bunch of folks, and Rabin is one of the toughest of the tough. Watching squeamish, soft-headed Americans claim that this man of flint and steel is giving away the store is, as I said, comical to the extreme.

In the first place, Israel isn't living up to the peace agreement and has no intention of doing so. In the Middle East, look at facts on the ground and disregard words out of the mouth. What the Israelis are doing is clear: They are keeping the settlements; building roads to connect the settlements; confiscating more Palestinian land; and keeping control of the water.

What Palestinians will end up with, as far as Israelis are concerned, are isolated, impoverished little centers of autonomy, much like the pattern of the South African homelands, where they will be free to pick up their own garbage and not much else. They will still, to all intents and purposes, be under Israeli control.

In the second place, in regard to power, Palestinians are to Israel what an infant is to a grizzly. The Palestinians have no military power, no money, no diplomatic leverage, no superpower allies; they are being impoverished and humiliated in the West Bank and are suffering malnutrition and near-starvation in Gaza.

Israel, a regional superpower with a world superpower in its pocket, can squash them in an instant. The only things Palestinians have going for them are their willingness to suffer and die for several more generations and the justice of their cause. They are entitled to their own state in their own land whether anyone recognizes that or not.

No need to pay any attention to Yasir Arafat's speeches. He's merely trying to save face. He struck a bad deal and he knows it, but it was a bad deal or no deal and he knew that, too.

It's no wonder that relations are often cool between Israelis and their American supporters. There is no more ridiculous sight in the world than an American, 7,000 miles away from any danger, strutting about, pretending to be tougher on Arabs than the Israelis.

There is nothing more absurd than an American who speaks neither Hebrew nor Arabic, who wouldn't know an Arab from Santa Claus, who hasn't read anything but AIPAC (Israel's lobby) news releases, presuming to advise Israelis on how to survive in the Middle East. They have, after all, managed to win five wars and last 47 years with precious few volunteers from the United States.

If you wish to be an apologist for Israel, then at least get up to date and stop using old 1948 canards that Israelis have discarded. There are a flood of books by Israeli authors in translation.

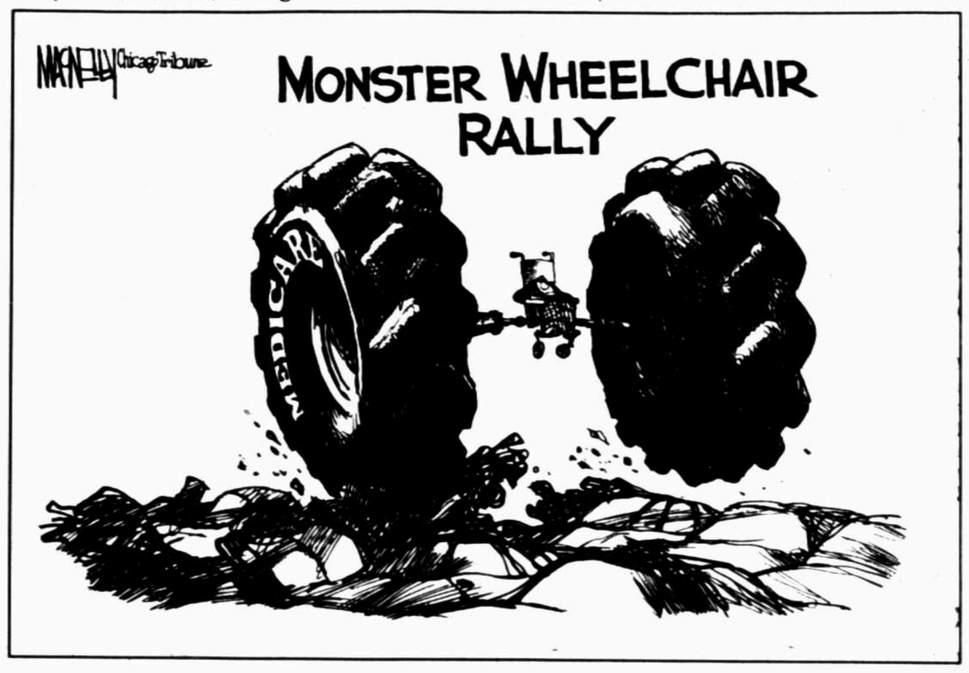

Israelis now admit Palestinians were driven out in 1948. Israelis well recognize that a few kilometers of West Bank territory do not amount to beans in the age of ballistic missiles, so please stop pretending that if they give up the West Bank, the Jordanian "camel corps" will rise up out of the rift and engulf Jerusalem. I suppose some American Zionists have not yet heard of satellites.

As for terrorists, Israelis will tell you they lose more people to automobile accidents than they've lost to all terrorist attacks since 1948.

It's the Palestinians who are at risk.

GOP budget reconciliation to alter winners, losers

Congress is in the process of formulating a budget reconciliation act that President Clinton will probably veto.

This will happen on or about Oct. 1 and will cause chaos ... nationwide as thousands of civil servants, and the services they render, just go away until the budget puzzle is put together. ...

The fiscal 1996 budget reflects GOP philosophy. OK, but we question the targets.

For example, Republicans will cut $270 billion from Medicare and $180 billion from Medicaid, and the old and poor wonder how it will affect them.

The GOP purports to save $19 billion by cutting the earned income tax credit, a tax benefit for workers who earn less than $11,000 a year. That's cruel to the working poor.

Meanwhile, according to the New York Times, a GOP-proposed change in pension law would give a $20 billion windfall to corporations.

The GOP budget also would open protected public lands to oil drilling; raise the federal speed limit to 70 mph — which will waste both lives and fuel; and gut the Securities and Exchange Commission, which oversees Wall Street's financiers. ...

The GOP vowed to govern better, but it looks like business as usual with a different set of winners and losers.

GEORGE WILL

Judges' ruling violates separation of powers

WASHINGTON — So exasperated is Nebraska's attorney general, Don Stenberg, with judges who legislate, he is audaciously asking the Supreme Court to breathe life into a rarely invoked clause of the Constitution. Otherwise, he says, self-government will be a mockery in his state, and about 130 murderers will have to be retried or released. However, if the Supreme Court does what Stenberg wants, the result may be more of what he rightly deplores — judges rampant, merrily legislating.

Will

In 1986 Ronald Williams had an argument with Eric Holmes. Williams shot and killed Holmes, who was unarmed. The jury convicted him of second-degree murder.

In a reform of the criminal code that became effective in January 1979, Nebraska's legislature deliberately removed "malice" as an element of the crime of second-degree murder. But in a 1994 appeal of a second-degree murder conviction the court simply asserted that malice must be a component of that crime. The court reasoned that otherwise there would be no grounds for distinguishing between second-degree murder and manslaughter. However, Nebraska's reformed criminal code makes clear that the difference concerns intent.

Before 1979 the crime was defined this way: "Whosoever shall purposely and maliciously, but without deliberation and premeditation, kill another, every such person shall be deemed guilty of murder in the second degree." In 1979 the definition became this: "A person commits murder in the second degree if he causes the death of a person intentionally but without premeditation."

The court disregarded the legislature's clear and considered judgment, ruling that juries must be instructed that malice must be an element of second-degree murder. Unless the U.S. Supreme Court overturns the state court, Williams and about 130 other killers, some of whom pleaded guilty, must be released or retried. Never mind the staleness or unavailability of old evidence, or the pain to the families of victims.

Stenberg says this ruling is not merely cruel, and reckless regarding public safety, it also shreds the doctrine of the separation of powers. That is a cardinal tenet of republican government, under which people are governed by laws written by their elected representatives.

Nebraska's judges usurped the legislature's power to define crimes. Stenberg wants the ruling declared a violation of the U.S. Constitution's Guarantee Clause, on which there is almost no case law. It says: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this union a republican form of government."

The judges on Nebraska's highest court have simply rewritten a statute. This in spite of the fact that the state constitution says "in this state all public offenses are statutory; no act is criminal unless the legislature has in express terms declared it to be so," and Nebraska's supreme court has hitherto held that "it is not within the powers of the judicial branch ... to enact laws or to define or punish crime."

Stenberg believes the state has no recourse other than to the U.S. Supreme Court because the legislature "cannot re-repeal the element of malice from its definition of the crime of second-degree murder. From the standpoint of the legislature, it is gone. Here its absence is simply being ignored by the judicial branch of state government."

But can the U.S. Supreme Court, with its itch to legislate, risk equating that activity with a violation of republican principles? And imagine how judicial activists on that Court might abuse the guarantee of "a republican form of government." Consider what people regularly do with the definition of "democracy."

In his book "Self Rule: A Cultural History of American Democracy," Robert H. Wiebe, professor of history at Northwestern, notes the tendency of intellectuals to define democracy less in terms of procedures, such as elections, than in terms of outcomes. As a result, "the subject of democracy comes to resemble a great pile of everybody's pet concerns." Democracy is defined as a political process that produces policies favored by the person doing the defining.

Arm judicial activists with the Guarantee Clause, and you will have judges using that sword to cut down state policies they dislike or to mandate those they do, saying things like, "There is only real republican government when there is (fill in the blank: no capital punishment, an entitlement to welfare, no large disparity of wealth, etc.)."

Absent such problematic relief as might be wrung from the Guarantee Clause, what can Nebraska do? Its legislature can re-enact its definition of second-degree murder, and deliver the law to the justices on a silver salver, together with a notice of impeachment proceedings.

Powell's book breaks sales records in Boston

Colin Powell is selling books like nobody ever sold books before. In a single bookstore appearance in Boston he easily smashed the one-day sales record held by Larry Bird, the greatest star in the New England literary firmament since Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Baker

When the figures are all in, Powell's sales may even exceed Hawthorne's. What a mind-blower that would be.

Outselling Bird's opus about a man devoting his entire life to throwing balls through hoops is amazing enough. Outselling Hawthorne's sex-drenched fiction about adultery and parsons would make the general a major player in American literary history.

His story, about a good scout who isn't quite sure whether he wants to be president but sort of wishes somebody would ask him, is powerful stuff, all right. But does it have that irresistible catnip of sex and schmaltz needed to take an author all the way to the top?

We asked that question in an interview Powell granted exclusively to this column. His answer:

"It is too soon to make a decision on a matter of that importance. At the moment I am touched by the kindness Boston book fans have shown me, even though I have never played basketball for the Celtics, ice hockey for the Bruins or right field for the Red Sox. It is humbling to break the one-day sales record of an author as beloved as Larry Bird."

Was he excited about his chances of beating Hawthorne's great record?

Not excited, he said, but humbled.

Had he heard the one about Hawthorne's vast sales? Hordes of people are lined up for blocks to buy Hawthorne's latest book, and a visitor from another planet goes to the end of the line and asks this guy, "What's everybody lined up for?" And the guy says, "Another opportunity not to read Hawthorne."

The general said he had not heard that joke. Personally, he had the highest admiration for Hawthorne, and he was sorry Hawthorne had died before he'd had a chance to meet him. He believed Hawthorne could have given him some priceless tips on such technical problems as avoiding the dangling participle and eschewing redundancy, tautology and ambiguity.

We asked the general who he wanted to face next if he succeeded in outselling Hawthorne in Boston. Was he willing to get into the ring and go a few rounds with old Mr. Tolstoy?

"You mean to say 'whom' would I like to face," he said with a kindly smile.

I was astounded. That a writer could know the difference between "who" and "whom" and still produce a best seller made me wish that if someone does finally ask him to become president of the United States, he will decline.

All sorts of nondescript people can be president, as we have seen lately. How many literate authors can write best sellers?

Naturally I was eager to draw him out on his views about grammar, syntax, diction, usage and his philosophy about the semicolon. He seemed to become impatient, however, as I asked if he thought it was ever justifiable to split an infinitive in a sentence that ended with a preposition.

"It's premature to take positions on nuts-and-bolts issues," he said, adding, "You are a newspaper columnist, aren't you?"

"Indeed," I told him. "And a most unique newspaper columnist too."

"You can be unique or not unique," he said. "You cannot be more unique, less unique, least unique or most unique," he added pedantically.

"And stop using Tom Swifties after your verbs," he said. "Now, in what does your uniqueness consist?"

"I am the only newspaper columnist in America who has not written a column explaining why Colin Powell should or should not be president, why he should or should not run as an independent, why he should or should not fight for the Republican nomination, why he should or should not —

"Please!" he cried. "Eschew prolixity. Tell me briefly what I should or should not do and get it over with."

I didn't know what he should do after he wore out his welcome as fresh material for jaded media types. So I told him he should try fiction. A nonfiction book may hit big now and then, but it's novelists who own tax-free Mediterranean islands.

Politicians have own special language

One almost has to be a politician to understand their language. For instance, when a member of Congress says that the budget is being cut for a certain bureaucratic office, what he means is that the rate of growth of the budget is being reduced, and when Bill Clinton says that he has reduced the deficit, what he really means is that the rate of growth of the deficit is being lowered. Is this honest?

And to top it off, Congress has stolen the Social Security "trust" fund to indicate that the deficit is lower than it actually is. Again, is this honest?

School needs more teachers, coaches

San Jacinto Junior High's staff does everything possible to meet its students' needs.

But there is an area that it needs help with. The P.E. classes are unsafe because of overcrowding and a lack of coaches. My son was in a class of more than 50 students. One coach is responsible for the discipline and supervision of this class. My son was injured (attacked from behind) in this class when the coach could not be in two places at once. All students need supervision during P.E. They deserve not only a place to learn but also a safe P.E. class.

More coaches are needed now. Continued lack of supervision puts our kids at unnecessary risk. They are worth having the teachers they need in P.E., as well as in other classes. Student/teacher ratios need to improve in classes besides P.E. as well.

City should get out of airport business

I appreciate all the eloquent letters in favor of building a new terminal building; however, to insinuate that those in opposition are a bunch of oddballs and have no say in the matter is absolutely absurd. That sounds just like former Speaker of the House Thomas Foley who, in so many words, told us they were going to pass Clinton's national health program whether we liked it or not.

For all those in favor of spending a substantial amount of money for the building of their dream, I have a question. If it is such a great deal, as you suppose, why do you not all get together and form a corporation and buy the terminal, and Midland Airpark also, from the city and do whatever you want with your money and whatever money you can get from the federal hog trough? If you can get there ahead of all the others.

It matters not what kind of answer the city comes up with to rationalize being in the airport business, the bottom line is: Nowhere in the Constitution of the United States will you find authority granted for any government entity to become engaged in competition with free enterprise.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and because there is no authority granted to the city of Midland by this document to own or operate an airport, why do we not get rid of this much-fettered "thorn" by insisting the city retire from its illegal operation?

Sell it to the airlines or some other enterprising entrepreneur. What to do with all that money? That would need to be decided at a later date.

Veterans deserve assistance center

The primary purpose of our government as stated in the Constitution of the United States is to provide adequate protection of the citizens of the United States.

Judge Norwood seems to think that the citizens of the United States need no protection.

There are about 40 or 50 minor wars going on in the world at all times. Our government does a pretty good job of keeping the United States out of those wars. I appreciate the work that the people in our government do on behalf of the citizens of the United States. I also appreciate the task that the active and reserve military force does in providing protection for the citizens of the United States.

War veterans who fought in World War II, as well as Korea and Vietnam, are second-rate citizens as far as Judge Norwood is concerned. People fought for our great country to protect the freedom and property of every American citizen. Many of the soldiers that fought in World War II, Korea and Vietnam were killed. Many others were injured and are disabled. Judge Norwood thinks these veterans need no assistance. He and the Commissioners' Court voted to eliminate the veterans service office.

Processing paperwork for veterans benefits can be very complicated. This often takes the expertise of a very knowledgeable person to process the papers that are necessary to adequately take care of our disabled veterans. That is why we need a veterans service office in Midland County. Almost every county in the United States provides a veterans service office to assist our veterans in dealing with the various agencies of the United States government. If we expect our citizens to participate in the defense of our country, then providing for the health and welfare of the injured and disabled veterans is a very necessary function.

Many don't cherish Todd's good old days

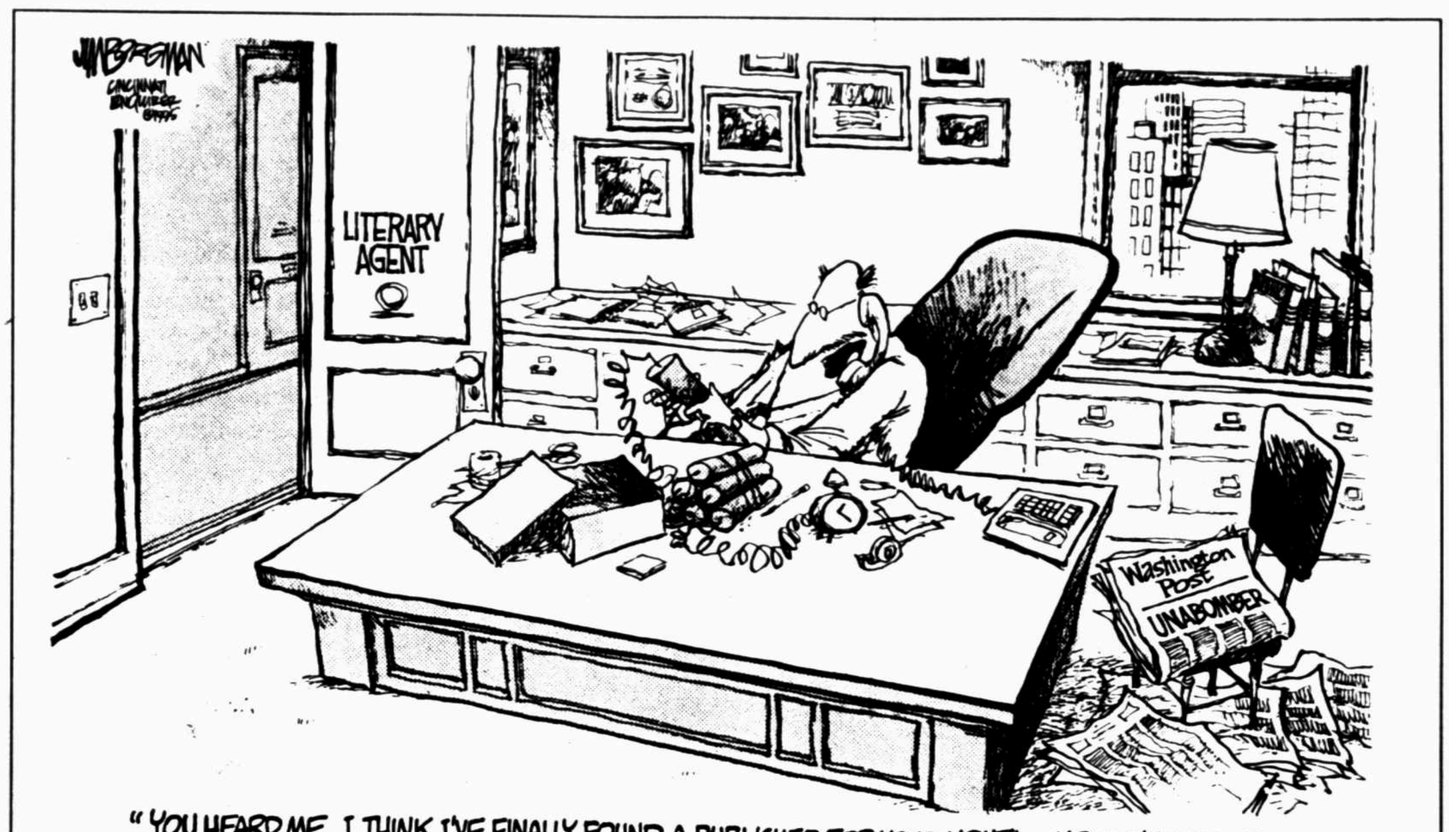

I am probably the only one who will ever complain in print about Ed Todd, but his prose is weak-minded maudlin hogwash. Case in point: "Today's modern conveniences are America's curse," (Sept. 21, Reporter-Telegram) in which Todd pines for the good old days before we got miracle drugs and credit cards, television and computers. Bad for our physical and moral health, Todd says.

Well, Mr. Todd, I didn't live during those times so they might have been as great as you say, but we do have plenty of testimony from those who did that seems to contradict your dream of a pre-modern American Eden. Read the chapter titled The Sad Irons in Robert Caro's biography of Lyndon Johnson, "The Path to Power." It describes in poignant detail the life of farmers and their families in the Texas Hill Country in the pre-rural-electric era of the 1920s and '30s.

"The one almost universal characteristic of the farm women was that they were worn out before their time, that they were old beyond their years ... old at thirty-five, bent and stooped and tired" from hauling water, from baking on wood stoves, from ironing with irons heated on a wood stove. Women suffered untreated perineal tears in childbirth ... The Hill Country farmer had to milk his cows by hand — rising at three-thirty in the morning ... there was danger of fire from kerosene lamps ... the farmer was forced to water his cows by hand ... which meant hauling up endless buckets from a deep well ... loneliness and isolation were terrible ... Living was drudgery then, says Carroll Smith of Blanco. No lights. No plumbing. Just living on the edge of starvation."

My grandmother used to tell me that folks who wished for the good old days must have had better days than she had. Mr. Todd, as a professional nostalgist, I wish you could get your time machine from the mad Dr. Brown in "Back to the Future" and go back there to check it out. If you really liked it, I'll bet you could find plenty back there who would gladly change places with you.

Soldier shows valor in U.N. assignment

To those who decry our growing involvement in the United Nations, the Michael New case is a call to action. Though the mainline press has all but overlooked this very important issue here's the story: Army Spc. New is in a unit that is being transferred to a U.N. "peacekeeping" assignment in Macedonia. He is a good soldier with a good record who is willing to go — but not under the U.N. flag. He says the oath he took when he joined the U.S. Army is inconsistent with the U.N. Charter and its objectives. I find myself in agreement with him and I'm gratified to know that there's a young soldier out there who has the guts and courage to question what we should have been questioning all along.

Little by little we have been sacrificing our sovereignty to the United Nations. It began in Korea in the '50s and has been growing through the years. During the Bush presidency, President Bush spoke of a "New World Order" and with Clinton the move continues. At times it seems that the secretary-general of the United Nations, Boutros Boutros-Ghali, is even directing our foreign policy. I find this abhorrent!

Many of the things that occur we don't even know about. The press is silent. And many things mentioned get scant attention. Few people realize, for example, that the casket of the soldier killed in the Korean helicopter incident was draped in a U.N. flag. I for one would not want any son of mine killed fighting for the world-government agenda of the United Nations.

If you agree with me that we should stand with Army Spc. New, then I would urge you to bombard Congress, the news media and others with your phone calls and letters of protest. Let's do something about this!

County government deserves thanks

It is extremely gratifying to me, and I trust it is to all of the taxpayers of Midland County, that a first step (and a major first step) has finally been taken toward implementing the basic financial controls that have been so desperately needed in our county government. The county's independent auditors, as well as its own auditor's office, have long criticized its poor internal control and have recommended year after year that several actions be taken, chief among them being the establishment of centralized purchasing. The primary purpose for this action is to prevent theft, misappropriation and other such crimes; however, simple arithmetic applied to the county's present practices proves that sound purchasing policies and procedures will result in substantial savings as well.

The county judge and commissioners deserve the gratitude of the citizens of Midland County for their courage, determination and perseverance. Most people are unaware of the powerful resistance they encountered as they labored to establish the purchasing function and hire a purchasing agent. They also are due thanks for adopting a conservative, though reasonable, budget for the county's 1996 year — again, despite strong opposition. Thanks also to the county auditor and her able staff for taking some of the heat and helping with the budget.

It should be clear to the public officials who have blocked such efforts in the past that the judge and commissioners intend to follow through and implement the entire plan for responsible financial management that was adopted in March of 1993 by Judge Charles Seltzer and the Commissioners' Court.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

■ Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.

■ We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

By Dr. Robert L. Cobb

I want to tell you about a project brewing in West Texas that will impact just about everyone in Midland, from the retail community, to the families, to the youth who are affected by cerebral palsy. I am referring to the West Texas Expo Center.

The West Texas Expo Center, to be built in Midland, is a non-profit organization created to provide facilities for recreational, educational and competitive events in the West Texas area. The facility will host a variety of family-oriented events, including livestock shows, rodeos, fairs, seminars, trade and craft shows, art exhibits and concerts. Included are an outdoor arena, an indoor arena that will seat 2,000-plus, a pavilion with a stage and dance floor, a museum and barns to accommodate 400 animals. The West Texas Expo Center will be a top-notch, first-class facility that Midlanders will be proud of and that will draw competitors from all over the United States.

I have served on multiple committees associated with the Texas Agricultural Extension and the need for a multi-use exposition center here in Midland has been a frequent topic of discussion. Events that could be held in Midland have to be held elsewhere because a suitable facility does not exist. Last year Joe Anderson, Candy Cowden and I decided to do something about it. After many hours working with a group of interested individuals in the community, we designed a concept with architects and located a possible site for construction and development at an estimated cost of $2.5 million. We have received assistance and support from the county commissioners and the Chamber of Commerce since the beginning. Many groups have written to express their interest in holding events at the facility once complete. What's needed now is the funding. This facility will be built and maintained without the use of tax dollars. Recefit approval of our non-profit status gives us the go-ahead to start accepting donations.

Dr. Robert L. Cobb is the owner and veterinarian in residence at Cobb Veterinary Clinic in Midland. He is a member of the American Veterinary Medical Association, the Permian Basin Veterinary Medical Association and the American Association of Equine Practitioners. As one of the organizers for the proposed Midland Exposition Center, Cobb is hoping for an increase in Midland's horse-related activities, as well as opportunities for local horsemen and local businesses.

The West Texas Expo Center will bring many benefits to our community. The economic impact will be tremendous. In Abilene, the closest facility of this kind hosted 147 events in the first six months of 1993. Sixteen percent of Abilene's convention sales market is derived from events held there. In Glen Rose, the Somervell County Expo Center reports "237 event days were scheduled in the first 12 months of operation. Two hundred thousand people and 10,000 animals crossed the thresholds at the Expo Center." A study performed by the Midland Chamber of Commerce estimates that 32 events alone will bring an estimated $16,016,000 to our motels and hotels, restaurants, gas stations and literally all retail business in our community.

Denny Gentry of the U.S. Team Roping Championships, which boasts a membership of 30,000, wrote to us: "The Midland area is strategically located to have many different kinds of super successful horse events. The only real fear we have around here is not having the ability to get bookings in hot areas. Just up the road in Abilene, we have not been able to get an event date the past two years. The regional placement for West of the Pecos, Texas central and southern New Mexico hits one of our hottest geographical regions." Midlanders, the demand is here!

There also will be numerous family and youth recreational benefits. Most of the events will be free to the public. The museum would provide many avenues for education in all areas of agriculture and West Texas heritage. We need to continue to educate the public about traditions and values created by our West Texas ranchers.

It is our intention to donate use of the facility to the Midland Cerebral Palsy Center's equestrian program, as well as monetary donations as funds become available. According to Jim Crawford, director of the center, programs would be expanded to include more children, offer a winter program (the program is in hiatus from November through March), offer indoor activities and play-day competition with peers and invite similar handicapped riding programs for workshops, demonstrations and competition.

With the recent growth in Midland's retail sector, a major attraction to draw people into Midland is essential. Do we want Midland to become the host for major events in our area? Do we want to fulfill and enhance the western heritage of our past? Please join in the support for developing the West Texas Expo Center.

Funk, Stricker lead pack at PGA Buick Challenge

PINE MOUNTAIN, Ga. (AP) — The Southern Open became the Buick Challenge. Maybe they should have renamed it the Buick Shootout.

With 31 golfers within five shots of the lead heading into Sunday's final round, the Buick Challenge is still anybody's tournament.

Fred Funk and Steve Stricker, two players trying to get into the $3 million Tour Championship, are tied at 11-under 205.

Funk shot a 69 Saturday and Stricker, who led by two strokes after the second round, shot an even-par 72 on the Mountain View Golf Course at Callaway Gardens.

Five players — John Morse, Loren Roberts, Larry Nelson, Kirk Triplett and Jeff Sluman — are one stroke back. Three more are two strokes back and six others are three behind.

"When fields are bunched like they are here, you know someone's going to get hot and shoot a low number on Sunday," Funk said. "Starting out today I sure didn't think 11 under would be leading after the round."

Currently 31st on the money list, Funk is trying to break into the required top 30 for next month's Tour Championship.

It would also qualify Funk for next year's U.S. Open, for which he does not have an exemption. He won the Ideon Classic in July for his second career victory.

Making three birdies on the back nine when everyone else seemed to be giving shots away, Funk finally took the lead with a 6-foot birdie putt on No. 17.

Earlier, Funk dropped 3-foot birdie putts on Nos. 13 and 15.

"I hit the ball poorly on the front nine, not doing anything that resembled my swing the first two days," Funk said. "I think the birdies on 13 and 15 turned things around for me."

Funk, who coached golf at the University of Maryland for eight years before joining the PGA Tour, made a birdie on No. 6 when he knocked in a 20-footer from the fringe, then bogeyed 7 to drop back to eight under.

Stricker, also in the running for a spot in the Tour Championship, made two birdies and two bogeys in his even-par round.

He is 37th on the money list, and has never won in two previous years on tour. His best career finish is a tie for second at last year's Northern Telecom Open.

"I feel fortunate to shoot even-par and still be tied for the lead," Stricker said. "Hopefully, this was my mediocre round this week and I left myself in good shape for tomorrow."

Stricker has never played in the final group in the final round. He bogeyed the first hole Saturday, then reached the par-5 7th in two shots and settled for birdie when his 15-foot eagle putt stopped inches short.

Giving another stroke back when he bogeyed the par-5 11th, Stricker then made seven straight pars before ending his round with a tap-in birdie after hitting a 5-iron six inches from the cup.

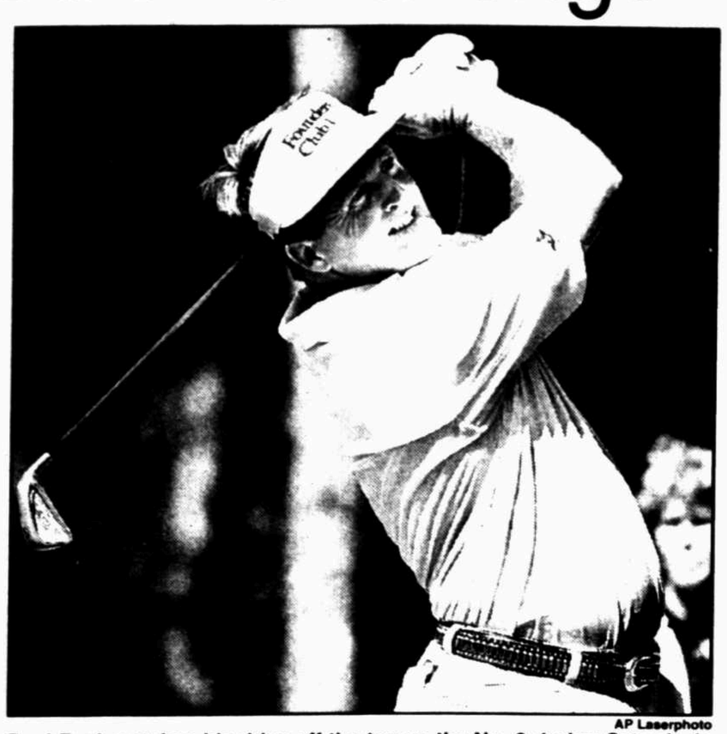

Among the group at 10 under is the 48-year-old Nelson, whose last victory on the PGA Tour was in 1988 and who is two years from playing on the Senior Tour.

Nelson shot a 5-under 31 on the front nine, including birdies on Nos. 7, 8 and 9, and he eventually got to 13 under, building a two-shot lead. He made four bogeys on the back nine, though, and shot 39.

Justin Leonard also held the lead for a brief time Saturday, making birdies on 9, 10, 11 and 14 to get 11 under. He made a clutch par save after hitting his second shot in the water on No. 15, but double-bogeyed the par-4 17th to fall to nine under.

Bob Lohr had the day's lowest score, a 65. Lohr is nine under for the tournament. Masters champion Ben Crenshaw shot a 69 and is among the group at 209.

Greg Norman, the world's top-ranked player, bogeyed his last two holes for 72 and was at 209, while British Open champion John Daly had a 74 and was at 215.

Fred Funk watches his drive off the tee on the No. 6 during Saturday's third round of the Buick Challenge. Funk and Steve Stricker lead the tournament but there are 31 golfers within five shots of the lead.

Kobayashi used a consistent short game and did not make a bogey until the 400-yard, par-4 17th. Her approach helped overcome occasionally windy conditions at The Peninsula Club.

"The wind was a little bit of a problem at times," Kobayashi said. "I felt good all through the day so I am really looking forward to tomorrow. I will have to make birdies tomorrow."

Farwig shot the lowest score of the day and her 65 tied the ladies' course record. She had an eagle on the 380-yard 5th when she dropped a 162-yard approach shot.

Senior Vantage Championship

CLEMMONS, N.C. — Dave Stockton and Hale Irwin had success with contrasting putting approaches on Tanglewood Park's bumpy greens.

"I like to die the ball into the hole, and that worked well here," said Stockton, who shot a 6-under-par 66 on Saturday for a share of the second-round lead with Irwin in the $1.5 million Vantage Championship.

"Hale and I are very fortunate. Any putt you make here, you go on to the next tee and just feel glad you got that one."

Irwin, who had a 68 to match Stockton at 10-under 134, took his chances with an aggressive style on the sandy greens he called "crustier" than the day before when he shot a 66 to take a one-stroke lead over Bob E. Smith.

"I don't know what it is," Irwin said. "The greens were a little more difficult today. They just didn't hold as well."

Virtually all the players noted the condition of the greens and pin placements close to the fringe on the course marked by 111 sand traps.

"We grew up playing on greens that weren't all that beautiful," said Gary Player, who won last week's event in Lexington, Ky. "They were cut like the way the fringe is today. This is a little like the old days."

Irwin eagled the par-5, 11th to lead by as many as two strokes over Stockton, who played one group ahead. But Irwin had to get up and down out of a bunker at No. 18 for par.

LPGA Fieldcrest Classic

CORNELIUS, N.C. — Gail Graham was able to salvage a bogey after dropping an approach shot into the water Saturday and clung to a one-stroke lead over Hiromi Kobayashi and Tammie Green in the LPGA Fieldcrest Cannon Classic.

Graham shot a 3-under-par 69 in the third round of the inaugural $500,000 event and was at 12-under 204 heading into Sunday's final round. Green birdied three of her last five holes in a 67, while Kobayashi had a 69.

In a group at 208 were Beth Daniel, Juli Inkster, Stephanie Farwig, Brandie Burton and Britain's Karen Lunn.

Graham, a Canadian who has never won an LPGA tour event, survived the 441-yard, par-5 9th after she shanked her second approach shot into Lake Norman. She two-putted from 50 feet to save bogey.

"I had a lot of fun out there today," said Green, one of just four players to make the cut in every LPGA event she entered this season. "All in all, I was playing tee-to-green as well as I have played all year."

MHS: Lady Bulldogs on four-match streak

that was our best game — and I think that's how we did it."

MHS coach Terri McColloch added, "We were not sharp. And for us to come away with the win and not be as sharp as we are capable of being, well, we'll take it. We've played two good games lately and we'll just have to see what happens next."

The match hinged on two crucial moments. The first came when MHS, hounded by missed serves, had a 12-10 lead in the second game and a chance to reach game point and force the third and deciding set. Junior setter Christi Trautman came through then with two strong serves and Pritchett dished up a nicely placed down-the-line kill.

"I just knew we had to pull together as a team or we would never be able to come back (after the first game)," said Trautman. "I think we all started to feel that. (During serving) I never know what the fans are doing. I've told my parents I can't even hear them. But I just went back there and took a deep breath and got it over."

The second crucial moment was actually the whole third game. San Angelo took a 4-1 lead off two MHS hitting errors and two aces, one each by Heather McGinty and Kristi Marschall. The Lady Bulldogs needed an offensive spark plug and they got one in junior reserve setter Becky Salgado.

"Thank goodness for Becky Salgado," said McColloch. "I knew we were going to need her to come up big in a game and today was that day. I expect her to do big things and today was a good starting point."

Salgado came in after seeing limited time in the first two games and finished with 10 assists, including two beautiful set ups on monster kills by senior middle hitter Toya Zachery to force crucial sideouts during an 8-8 deadlock.

A great dig by Pritchett off a Tara Savage hitting attempt set up a Salgado dink kill that gave MHS its first lead of the third game and the Lady Bulldogs never looked back.

"Becky came in in a tense situation when the other setters were not neccesarily on and performed very well in those circumstances," McColloch said.

MHS' lack of sharpness showed in the first game. Ahead 7-2 and 8-3, the Lady Bulldogs committed four service receive errors as San Angelo climbed back to tie the game at 9-9. A Central ace by Brett Thurman and another serve receive error pushed the Lady Bobcats ahead 11-9 as they took the game.

But the Lady Bulldogs, true to their new attitude, did not let the game one loss dominate their mindset for the second as they cruised to a 7-0 lead by taking advantage of strong serves by Pritchett and senior setter Valerie Anderson to force three San Angelo hitting errors and a block stuff by senior outside hitter Elesceeya King and Zachery.

The Lady Bulldogs held San Angelo at bay for an 11-4 lead on three more strong serves, two by Pritchett and one by Trautman but Midland's drive got stalled at points 11 and 12.

The Midland High junior varsity had an easy time of it over San Angelo in a 15-6, 15-6 win. The Lady Bulldogs improved to 11-7 overall, 4-2 in district.

Alicia Kirk led MHS by serving points six through 14 in the first game while Marisa Hernandez boosted MHS to an early lead in the second game by serving points six through 10.

Midland hosts Midland Lee on Tuesday to start the second half of league play.

The junior varsity game is at 6:15 p.m. while the varsity follows at 7:30 p.m.

COWBOYS: Perfect mark in 1995 on the line in nation's capitol

game, the rivalry was big," said linebacker Matt Vanderbeek, another Cowboy turned-Redskin. "I felt it then. I was new to it. After that, I didn't feel it as much. The record wasn't that good here. The Cowboys matched up really good and had a lot of confidence in beating the Redskins. (The 49ers) were something we were looking at every week, keeping up the pace with them."

From a rivalry standpoint, it also hasn't helped that the Redskins could be referred to as Cowboys East. The seven former Dallas players — plus the same offensive scheme that helped the Cowboys win two Super Bowls — were brought to Washington last year when Dallas offensive coordinator Norv Turner was named head coach.

"I don't think it's going to be a game where anybody's being fooled," Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman said. "Our defense has the luxury of having practiced against our offense all these years. A lot of the things they see from us are the things they're going to be seeing on Sunday. Likewise, their defense has the same advantages."

That means no surprises, no tricks, no trying to out-guess the opposition. But then again, the Cowboys (4-0) don't need to resort to that stuff. They have Emmitt Smith, Aikman and Michael Irvin, the Redskins have a weak defensive line and their enforcer at strong safety, ex-Cowboys player James Washington, is injured.

"It doesn't make any difference if they know what we're going to do," Dallas coach Barry Switzer said. "It's the talent level of the football team, going out and executing."

Turner and the Redskins talk about containing, not stopping, Smith, who has rushed for 100 yards in each of the first four games. Wide receiver Alvin Harper is gone, but that means more passes to tight end Jay Novacek, so the Skins still can't double Irvin every play.

"You know what they're going to do, but they disguise it a lot of different ways with movements and shifts and those kind of things," defensive coordinator Ron Lynn said. "If there were no blockers, it would be a difficult task to try to tackle Emmitt anyway."

The Redskins' hopes center on an offense that's ranked fourth in the league, but can't seem to punch the ball in from the red zone. The Dallas front four is tough against the run, although Cardinals quarterback Dave Krieg (324 yards) showed last week the secondary can be exploited, especially until Deion Sanders reports.

In other words, if there was ever a time for second-year QB Gus Frerotte to blossom, it's now. On Sunday, he says, the Redskins will think pass first, run second.

"If you can throw the ball well against them, you can open up the run a little bit later in the game," Frerotte said. "We have to be smart."

The Cowboys play San Francisco on Nov. 12, but Switzer said his team is not looking past the Redskins. The reason: He's been watching the 49ers, of course.

"After Monday night (when San Francisco was upset by Detroit), it points out that anybody could beat anybody in this league," Switzer said. "We've got to get ready to play every game and hope we remain healthy. And if we do, we're going to be favorites probably to win every ball game, and have a good chance to win every game."

OILERS: Second meeting with Jaguars

sistency.

"Our offensive line has arrived for one week," coach Jeff Fisher said. "Now they've got to go out and show the consistency to do it every week."

Coughlin thinks the Oilers will see some improvement in his team, too, since the franchise's first game on Sept. 3.

"We're a better football team now," Coughlin said. "Our experience is on the defensive side of the ball. We have younger players who are developing on offense and we all know it doesn't happen overnight."

The Jaguars rank last in the NFL in total offense and passing offense and they'll be taking on the No. 1 defense in the NFL one week after losing to Green Bay, which is ranked No. 2 in total defense.

Jacksonville quarterbacks have been sacked 22 times, four by the Oilers, and Coughlin knows the Oilers will be attacking again with the blitz.

"I think we've gotten a little better at that," Coughlin said. "What has to happen is we've got to make some big plays (off Oilers blitzes). They've got good cornerbacks, but at some point we expect some separation and some people making plays downfield."

PROTEST: Group disrupts college game

(From 1B)

University officials have said a decision has been made as to whether Phillips' case fell under jurisdiction of the code but confidentiality requirements bar disclosure of the outcome of any inquiry. Phillips remains a student at the school.

Popa said Phillips should not be allowed back on the team and she hoped the protest would send that message to coach Tom Osborne.

Judith Kriss, director of the UNL Women's Center, said she wanted fans to know that punishment must be given to people who commit violence against women. "It seems an abuser in this case has privileges and support," she said. "We want to show we support the football team but not violence."

Fans were encouraged to wear white and join the protesters. At least three university students did. Lynette Bender, Olivia Thoene and Candice Fryda held signs and joined the line. Thoene said it would be hard to convince some fans to support their cause. "Football's fun and all," she said, "but you have to play by the rules."

'Legends of Country Music' concert to feature 'Shaver'

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

When Centennial Plaza heats up Thursday during the "Legends of Country Music" concert at Centennial Plaza, performing on the venue with Willie Nelson and David Allan Coe will be singer and songwriter Billy Joe Shaver.

"We've got a three-piece band — actually I'm the fourth person, but I don't even play anymore," said Shaver, referring to the group known collectively as Shaver, which includes his son, Eddy, on lead guitar, Keith Christopher on bass and Craig Wright on drums. "I can sing with them, but I can't keep up with them. They're too good."

He's still writing songs, though.

"Patty Loveless just did one of my tunes on her album," Shaver said of the title cut "When Fallen Angels Fly."

"And Marty Stuart did one recently. The Highwaymen just did one. but I'm not getting as many cuts as I used to.

"A lot of the reason why is there's a certain formula that seems to be working here in Nashville, and I don't guess they'll desert it until it completely burns down or something and they're not making any more money."

Tickets for the 7 p.m. show, priced at $22.50 in advance and $27.50 the day of the show, may be purchased at Midland Sound; Dollar Western Wear, Midland and Odessa; Dos Amigos and Endless Horizons, Odessa; Sound Decision, Big Spring; Dan's Records & Video, Pecos; and KGKL, San Angelo.

Please see BAND/4C

Bishop travels to meet pope

Pope John Paul II waves to crowds from the altar as he prepares to celebrate Mass Sept. 17. The Roman Catholic leader visits New York, New Jersey and Maryland in early October on his fourth trip to the United States.

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff Writer

When Pope John Paul II last visited the United States, Texas and a stop in San Antonio were on his itinerary.

This time, Texans will have to go to the pope. One of those who will celebrate Mass with the leader of the Roman Catholic church is Michael Pfeifer, bishop of the San Angelo-based diocese of West Texas. Pfeifer will join bishops from around the country when the pope celebrates Mass at Baltimore's Oriole Park at Camden Yards.

Pfiefer

The pope arrives in the United States 3 p.m. Wednesday at New Jersey's Newark International Airport.

Although the pope has scheduled a full slate of activities during his five-day stay, the five major events on his schedule include:

- a speech to the UN General Assembly, 9:15 a.m., Thursday;
- celebration of Mass at Giants Stadium, East Rutherford, N.J., 6 p.m., Thursday;
- celebration of Mass, Aqueduct Racetrack, Queens, N.Y., 9:30 a.m., Friday;
- celebration of Mass, the Great Lawn of Central Park, New York, 9:30 a.m., Saturday.
- celebration of Mass, Oriole Park at Camden Yards, Baltimore, 10:45 a.m., Oct. 8.

The major news event of the trip will likely be the pope's speech to the U.N. General Assembly on Thursday.

"I believe he will be drawing on a number of statements he made during his recent visit to Africa," Pfeifer said. "He will probably draw from his two recent letters, 'The Gospel of Life,' and 'Ut Unum Sint' ('That They May Be One'), the latter being 'a call to bring humanity together on a global scale.'

"I believe he will draw on those two statements in reference to the concern we should have, and the concern the U.N. should have, for the global population. I also think he'll stress strongly for networking on a global level and global responsibility for humankind."

In regard to John Paul's Gospel of Life letter, which stresses the sanctity of life and the world's move toward what the pontiff calls a "culture of death," Pfeifer said the pope will "make a strong call (at the U.N.) to respect human life. I think

Pontiff's writings are bestsellers in many American bookstores

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff Writer

It has been an eventful year for the Catholic faith in America.

In the United States alone, Doubleday Books has recorded sales of more than 2.3 million copies of the paperback version of the "Catechism of the Catholic Church," an 822-page summary of the church's instruction. Pope John Paul II's "Evangelium Vitae," or "Gospel of Life" letter was released in April, a document that was written after the pope collected thoughts from the church's bishops worldwide. In May, the pontiff issued a letter regarding the church's position on the need for worldwide unity with the coming of the third millennium, and "Crossing the Threshold of Hope," a book written by the pope himself, sold 2 million copies in its hardback edition and just last week was released in paperback form.

On a lesser scale, Catholics also made news when the pope was named Time Magazine's Man of the Year for 1994; in April, he appeared on the cover of Newsweek, coinciding with the release of

Project provides unique study opportunity for utility industry

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

FORT DAVIS — West Texas' energy future may be being worked out in the Davis Mountains west of Midland, where an alternative energy project capable of serving 10,000-15,000 homes went on-line Friday.

One of the most comprehensive renewable energy projects in the nation, the $17 million facility is centered around 12 wind turbines and a wide variety of other solar applications. Operated by West Texas Utilities, it will feed current into the power grid of the utility company.

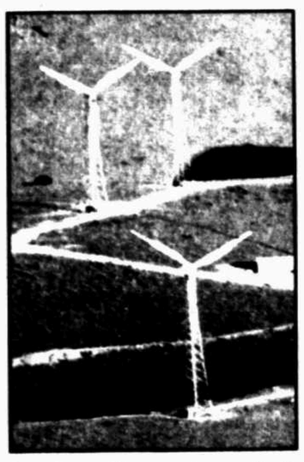

Dick Brooks, chairman, president and chief executive officer of Central and South West Corp., the parent company of West Texas Utilities Co., said the project would give the entire electric utility industry an exceptional opportunity to carefully study the costs and operation of a variety of clean energy systems.

The project, which includes the Department of Energy and Electric Power Research Institute, will research efforts to identify low-cost electricity, said Glenn Files, president of WTU.

The total system includes:

- Twelve wind turbines, generating 6,000 kilowatts, that will be located on a 75-acre wind

Landowners protest boundaries of groundwater conservation area

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Officials with the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC) received a less-than-warm welcome in Midland, with area landowners voicing resistance to establishing boundaries for a regional groundwater conservation area.

"We were hoping that there would be more people in favor," said Steve Musick, who met with Midlanders last week at a public hearing at the Sibley Learning Center Auditorium.

The TNRCC is responding to a petition signed by more than 50 landowners in the region asking state officials to designate a groundwater area for the southern margins of the Ogallala aquifer in Midland, Borden, Dawson, Ector, Gains, Howard, Martin, Terry and Yoakum counties.

This designation would provide a means for the four smaller groundwater conservation districts that serve this large area to work together to manage and maintain groundwater resources, Musick said.

"It is intended to promote a higher degree of cooperation between those four agencies," Musick said.

These groundwater conservation districts measure aquifer levels and keep records of such

Life is good in quaint saloon of historic French quarter

The stranger entered the bar and ordered a club soda with lime for himself and a round for everyone else. Since there were only four or five other people in the place, it wasn't a particularly extravagant gesture.

Ott

Still, it felt good as the stranger tossed the money on the bar.

He was, after all, already in a good mood. And why not? It was 2:30 in the afternoon on a Friday and instead of plugging away at the office he was relaxing in a quaint saloon located at the corner of Bourbon Street and St. Peter in the historic French Quarter of New Orleans. Sometimes life is good.

The stranger, who was alone, lit a cigarette, blew the smoke toward the ceiling and glanced around.

The bartender acknowledged his reasonably generous tip with a smile and returned to his duties, which at the time involved nothing more than wiping up a few wet spots on the bar with a towel that looked like it had seen better days.

Two waitresses, both of whom appeared to be in their early 20s, were huddled together discussing the goings-on from the previous night. Apparently, they had had a good time.

Over in the corner, next to a small stage where a Cajun band was scheduled to perform later that evening, an older couple was quietly talking to one another, all the while keeping a wary eye on the activity unfolding outside the bar.

At another table, a middle-aged man drank alone and seemed to be deep in thought.

And at the piano was a 74-year-old black man known simply as Mr. Bernard. If ever there was an image that perfectly personified New Orleans it was Mr. Bernard running his fingers up and down the keyboard while singing "Georgia on my Mind" in a marvelously raspy voice. He had a slightly crooked smile that gave his face a permanently contented look and when he closed his eyes and held his head back it was as though he were singing directly to God Himself.

If so, I'm sure God was pleased.

The stranger put a dollar bill in the tip jar, located on the edge of the piano, and requested "Stardust Memories."

Mr. Bernard, who was wearing a gray felt hat with the brim turned slightly upward, gave him a quick wink and began tickling the keys. It was good.

So were all of the songs, though the stranger didn't recognize many of them by name. In fact, he wasn't even sure they were "real" songs. More likely they were Mr. Bernard's own inventions, his improvisations. But in any case, the old man made it all look so easy, as though he had been destined from birth to end up in a place like this on a Friday afternoon play-

POLICE REPORTS

Evidence linked

Midland police officers said Saturday that a body found Friday morning had been involved in a disturbance and a traffic accident Thursday; however, police did not explain why they didn't find the body Thursday night.

Police received a call Friday morning concerning a dead body that was found in the 1100 block of South Midland Drive in a vacant field, Sgt. David Garcia said.

The body was identified as David Lynn Tovar, 33. He was found by people walking by the field.

Tovar was linked to a disturbance that occurred Thursday at the Taco Villa at Midland Drive and Andrews Highway, Garcia said.

A fight broke out shortly before 11 p.m. in the drive-through of the restaurant. Witnesses told police that one of the vehicles involved was gray and headed southbound on Midland Drive before officers arrived.

Garcia said Saturday that Tovar was in an altercation with some family members who were in the same vehicle as Tovar. He said the fight ended with the relatives getting out of the vehicle and Tovar driving away.

At 11:07 p.m. Thursday, a major traffic accident was reported in the 1100 block of South Midland Drive. The driver of a gray station wagon had apparently lost control on the curve, struck the curb, flipped or rolled several times before striking a telephone/electrical pole. The pole was sheared in half, which knocked power out in the immediate area.

Officers at the scene did not find anyone in or around the vehicle and no one was found in a search of the immediate area, Garcia said.

An autopsy has been ordered and the body was taken to Lubbock. Garcia said the results should show how Tovar died and what amount, if any, of alcohol was in his blood.

The Police Department is "looking into how the body was overlooked. We cannot speculate on how this happened until all personnel at the scene on Thursday, Sept. 28, are interviewed," Garcia said.

OTT: Mr. Bernard plays on in saloon

ing an old beat-up piano for an under-appreciative audience of seven.

He didn't seem bothered by the small crowd, though. He just smiled and played. And played. And played.

The bartender glanced over his right shoulder and the stranger lifted his glass slightly, indicating he was ready for more soda. "This guy's incredible," he said as the bartender placed the new drink before him. "Why isn't this place packed?"

The bartender just shrugged, shook his head sadly and said, "Hard to believe, isn't it?"

"Maybe people don't know about him."

"Perhaps, but he's been here for years."

The two men sat in silence, listening as Mr. Bernard expertly moved from one selection to another, stopping only to take an occasional sip from the glass of orange juice that was constantly at his side.

Another 45 minutes passed.

The old couple in the corner had long since moved on and the middle-aged man, who had not spoken to anyone, polished off two more gin and tonics. Three young women entered the establishment, but they clearly were more interested in laughing than listening to the music.

The stranger, checking his watch, tossed a handful of bills on the bar and reluctantly headed for the door. On his way out, he slipped a twenty in the tip jar patted the piano player on the shoulder and joined the throngs of people on Bourbon Street.

He headed south.

And Mr. Bernard played on.

BAND: Writing is the cheapest psychiatrist, songwriter says

(From 1C)

Partial proceeds will benefit the Midland Fraternal Order of Police. Sponsors for the Joint Venture Productions show include the Reporter-Telegram, NewsWest 9, KNFM Country and Jack Sherman Chevrolet Buick Mazda Geo. Johnny Blaine will open the concert. Gates open at 6 p.m.

During a recording career that spans more than 20 years and includes seven critically acclaimed albums, Shaver has earned a reputation as the poet laureate of the honky-tonk. His songs have been recorded by, among others, Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, the Allman Brothers, John Anderson, Bobby Bare, Johnny Cash, Tom T. Hall, Kris Kristofferson, Johnny Rodriguez and Waylon Jennings.

Although he first experienced success in Nashville in 1969 after hitchhiking there in 1966, his singing career actually dates back to his childhood. Raised in Texas by his grandmother, Birdie Watson, Shaver, unlike many singers and musicians, didn't grow up listening to the radio. His grandmother didn't have one.

"There was a general store up the road that had a radio," Shaver recalled, his tone soft and reflective over the telephone.

"And I'd get a little piece of one song or another, some Roy Acuff and Jimmie Rodgers or something, and I'd sing part of it and whatever I couldn't remember I'd just make it up.

"My grandmother raised me on her old-age pension, really. Sometimes the check wouldn't come in, and we'd have to get an extension down there at that store."

When his grandmother went to the store to ask for credit, the owners had their own request.

"They'd say, 'Yeah, if you get that boy to sing.' So, they'd stand me up on a cracker barrel, and I'd sing my heart out. I'd sing 'Pins and Needles in My Heart' (or) whatever was going down at that time. Just make up whatever I didn't know."

Shaver laughed, as he did frequently when he was talking about his life and career. "And everybody got to kinda liking what I was making up. So I just started singing my own songs. I'd go around singing about what was going on with me, and everybody liked it."

He also sold papers on the street corner for the Corsicana Daily Sun. Yet, when he was in school, he didn't sing or play music.

"They called you a sissy back then if you messed with music," Shaver said. "I kept writing poetry and stuff and some of my English teachers encouraged me a lot. But I went on and went in the Navy the day I was 17 and stayed in there a hitch and got out, and got married and had a kid.

"Every once in a while I'd write — you know it's the cheapest psychiatrist there is, writing — and I would jot things down. I knew I had some real good stuff."

When he was 26, he was in an accident at a saw mill. "I had to pull two of my fingers off to get it out of this big machine, they hung in a chain. On my right hand. I lost my first two fingers, about a third of the other one and the little finger is kind of crooked, messed up. Anyway, I shot a quick prayer up to God. I said, 'I'll get down to doing what I'm supposed to do if you'll just help me through this.'

"I almost lost my arm, but I managed to get it to moving. They put electric shocks on it. And when it did, I started playing guitar again."

His move to Nashville was second choice at the time. "I had kind of run off from home to tell the truth," Shaver recalled. "I'd kind of left my wife and kid in Waco, went down to Houston, got in a lot of trouble, and I got down to having nothing.

He wanted to go to Los Angeles, but couldn't get a ride standing on the California side of the highway. "I went on the other side of the road and a guy picked me up, took me all the way to Memphis. Fed me on the way, and when I was getting out he gave me 10 bucks.

"He said, 'Here.' I said, 'Man, I can't take that.' 'Yeah,' he said, 'Take it because somebody gave it to me. Just pass it on.' I've passed it on hundreds of times since then."

He found odd jobs and spent time traveling between Texas and Tennessee. And then Bobby Bare noticed his work.

"I finally caught hold with Bobby Bare, and he gave me $50 a week, and I got to stay in his office. And I was writing real good songs, and Kris Kristofferson heard one of them and did it, and kind of got the ball rolling. Everybody started paying a little attention to me.

"Bobby Bare had a hit with 'Ride Me Down Easy,' and Kris (Kristofferson) produced a whole album on me. He just borrowed the money from a bank to produce the album on me called 'Old Five and Dimers.'

That was my very first album. And then Waylon did a whole album of my songs called 'Honky Tonk Heroes.'"

At that time, Shaver was writing so many songs he almost burned himself out. Now, when he looks back, he can't recall when he first heard his songs on the air.

"I don't think it impressed me all that much. I had so many other things going, and I was writing like crazy. My well was full. I was really drawing it up as quick as I could. I was a slave to it for a long time.

"When an idea'd come, I had to finish it. In my rambling and running around, I was actually coming across too many songs I think, 'cause it just about killed me. Tom T. (Hall) told me one time, he said, 'Billy don't let your songs kill you. 'Cause they will. You need to pace yourself a little bit.' And after a while I finally learned how to do that."

Shaver remembered it felt great having his songs recorded.

"I went back and got my family and brought them up there. ... I think maybe I must have handled it right, or I wouldn't be here today. But there's a lot of things I did I wish I hadn't done. You know that probably slowed me down some. But I probably wouldn't have wrote the songs I'm writing today if it'd been any other way, so everything happens for the best."

A low point in his life, which proved to be a turning point for him, came just as he began writing "Old Chunk of Coal," later recorded by John Anderson.

"I was really about to die. I was doing too much everything. King of sinners. Doing it all and I was about to go away. And I knew it. And I had a vision of Jesus Christ sitting on my bed one night, 'course I was higher than a kite.

"I hadn't put a good sentence together, much less a song, in quite a while so I had to do something. And I drove out to this place that was kind of a spiritual place for me."

His son had showed him the spot on a cliff overlooking a river.

"There's a path that's pretty treacherous... I came out there in the middle of the night. It was dark, and it was a wonder I didn't fall off the dern thing. But I got out there, and I knew that I either had to jump off that cliff or get down. And I got down before I knew it, and I was asking God to help me.

"And I'm still a sinner, but at that particular time the old one died and the new one, just like a young baby nearly, came down that hill singing the first half of that song. By the time I got down to the bottom of it I'd completed the first half of 'Old Chunk of Coal.' Then it took me about six more months to write the second half.

"And that's when I changed. I still do the same things I do, but I'm just not that same guy anymore. I've slid back. I do things that any sinner does. I'm not any more special. It's just that at that time, it saved my life. I mean, I got to stay in this world longer."

Today, Shaver calls success "being able to do my job," which is writing songs. "I say job, but it is like a hobby to me. I love doing it."

He's grateful to the family and friends who've tolerated him through the years.

"My son and my ex-wife, Brenda, and my ex-mother-in-law, Mildred, and my mother, Victory, and my sister, Patricia, my aunts, uncles and cousins and my friends, Bruce Williams and John Young, the ones that aren't in the spotlight as much as the others have been, they put up with me and that's a lot.

"Actually, to tell you the truth, Willie and Waylon and Johnny Cash and Bobby Bare and all those people, they put up with me, too.

"I'd like to say thanks to them, and I'm sorry for anybody's toes that I've stepped on. I didn't aim to. I was just a little reckless. And I probably owe some people that I don't even remember, but one of these days I'll get them paid."

WRITE: Catechism can be intimidating to some

(From 1C)

"Gospel of Life." In addition, Catholicism and even the Virgin Mary found their way onto the Information Superhighway as both gained "homepages" on the World Wide Web.

Catholics' eventful year will likely come to a peak this week when the pope visits New York and Baltimore in a whirlwind five-day visit.

Ut Unum Sint

"Ut Unum Sint," Latin for "That They May Be One," Pope John Paul II's most recent writing, promulgated on May 25, 1995, stresses the world's need for ecumenism as the second millennium draws to a close.

"It is a writing of great importance," Pfeifer said. "It takes us back to the great final wish of Christ to His father that we would all be one as He is one with His father. Jesus gave His life for all humankind that we could be one in love."

Pfeifer said he thinks the pope felt an obligation to publish the writing "because it is the call of Christ."

In the letter, the pope says, "believers in Christ, united in following in the footsteps of the martyrs, cannot remain divided. If they wish truly and effectively to oppose the world's tendency to reduce to powerlessness the Mystery of Redemption, they must profess together the same truth about the cross."

Summing up the pope's letter on unity, Pfeifer pointed to the message delivered by Pope John XXIII at the Second Vatican Council: "Pope John said, 'In essentials, unity; in accidentals, diversity, but in all things love.' That summary of how to approach this question is beautiful. With 'Ut Unum Sint,' Pope John Paul II reverts back to Pope John XXIII's call to look at the whole question of ecumenism, which started a whole new dialogue that hasn't existed for centuries."

The catechism of the Catholic Church

At over 800 pages, holding it can be a bit intimidating. Reading it can be time consuming.

But buying it is what 2.3 million Americans have done.

The "Catechism of the Catholic Church" is the first new document outlining the tenets of the religion in almost 400 years.

"We didn't have a universal catechism until the 16th century after the Council of Trent," Pfeifer noted.

"As far as doctrine, that is dogmatically defined and does not change (in the new catechism). But the teachings of the church are constantly evolving. Not everything we hold is dogmatic, and the church adjusts its teaching."

Pfeifer said that in modern times the church has had to take controversial stands on issues such as abortion, birth control and nuclear war."

Catholics — as well as non-Catholics — are purchasing copies of the Catechism by the millions, but why?

"I think people today want some stability and guidance when it comes to moral truths," Pfeifer said. "There's so much wishy-washiness in politicians with people not taking stands; they just flow with the popular opinion. But the Catechism gives clear teachings from the Bible and sacred truths down through the ages. Many non-Catholics are purchasing the Catechism and it's because it gives them a clear direction on moral issues."

For those who purchase the document only to feel a bit overwhelmed by its contents, Pfeifer suggests those who plan to read it begin with Part Four.

"Part Four is on prayer, and that gives the reader inspiration, so I would encourage people to start there," the bishop said. "It's an excellent place for families to begin, and it would have more meaning even for children."

The Catechism is broken down into four headings: Part One is the Profession of Faith, or what Catholics believe; Part Two is the celebration of the Christian mystery, or Christian living; Part Three is Life in Christ, and Part Four answers the questions of prayer, including a line-by-line study of the "Our Father."

Evangelium Vitae

Scholars believe the "Gospel of Life" is the one document that will define John Paul II's reign as leader of the world's largest church. Controversial in scope, it delves into abortion, euthanasia, the use of human embryos for research, and capital punishment. The pope views all four practices as signs of a "culture of death."

What differs from most other papal encyclicals is that, with the "Gospel of Life," the pope solicited opinions from the church's bishops before issuing the letter. The writing is a compilation of the bishops' opinions.

Pfeifer said his input in the encyclical was summed up by his belief that "we need to stress a new concern for the sacredness of human life as a whole that is being downplayed in society, and the need to stress the sacredness of the unborn."

While the pope does not relent regarding the church's position on abortion, saying that it is never justified, he does back off a bit on the church's position regarding capital punishment.

As a result, the new catechism was revised to reflect the pope's writing.

"He does give a new position on capital punishment, saying that it be used only in extreme circumstances, and only when rehabilitation and punishment could not be handled," the bishop said.

Pfeifer said the pope's position on capital punishment "went further than what was approved in the catechism."

Referring to euthanasia and assisted suicide as "intolerable," the pope said that life in terminally ill patients need not be "prolonged by aggressive medical procedures," and "drugs that reduce suffering are acceptable even if they shorten life."

According to the April 10 issue of Newsweek magazine, "The effect of papal letters is never immediately apparent. But the issues the 'Gospel of Life' addresses are too volatile, too political — too personal and pressing — to be ignored. John Paul is betting that his words will incite a rollback of the culture of death. In the last phase of his papacy, he's acting like a prophet signaling revolution, roaring like a lion in winter."

WATER: Landowners protest districts

things as water usage and pollution. People associated with these districts promoted the petition delivered to the TNRCC, Musick said.

This area designation would not place any kind of financial or regulatory burden on area landowners or local government. It simply provides delineated boundaries in which the four groundwater districts will operate together, if the TNRCC decides to make the designation, Musick said.

What concerned many of those present at the public hearing, however, is that this designation is a necessary step in establishing a groundwater management district. Under state law, this management district is a taxing entity and regulatory agency that would have much power in regulating the use of groundwater in the region.

Landowners at the meeting, despite Musick's assurances, expressed grave concerns that this kind of entity could one day be brought into existence if the TNRCC designates the groundwater management area.

"This is not something that the state is going to come in and force down your throat," he said.

Musick said the designation could help landowners efficiently utilize groundwater and comply with federal regulations. By state law, the districts are intended to facilitate local action, he said.

"I'm not so much concerned about what it can do for me — but to me," one Midlander said.

Musick assured those present that the state cannot establish a groundwater management district, with taxing and regulatory authority, unless the measure is passed in a local election.

"If they don't want the groundwater district, they don't have to have it," he said.

The TNRCC will continue to accept written opinions and input on the groundwater area — which includes no burden on local landowners and governments — until Oct. 23.

TNRCC commissioners will then consider all the responses and make a decision on the matter, probably by December, Musick said.

Written comments on the proposed rule should mention log number 95128-294-WT and must be submitted to Lutrecia Oshoko, Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, Office of Policy and Regulatory Development, MC-201, P.O. Box 13087, Austin, Texas, 78711-3087.

Author to appear at booksigning, read children's Halloween story

From Staff Reports

Popular author, journalist and writers' workshop leader Nancy Masters will be honored at an author's reception and booksigning at 5 p.m. Friday at Pages & Prints Bookstore, located in Plaza Oaks Shopping Center, Wadley and Garfield Street.

Ms. Masters, who has also published a collection of her newspaper columns and a chronicle of some of the Confederate Air Force war birds, has written two children's books. At her reception she will read from "The Horrible Homemade Halloween Costume," the story of a little girl who wants a store-bought fairy princess costume for Halloween. Instead, her mother glues cotton bolls from the family farm to towels and dresses the child up as a bale of cotton. Ms. Masters will wear her own "bale of cotton" costume at the reception.

At the reception, Pages & Prints will launch its Homemade Costume contest. Children and their parents are invited to make a "dress-up" costume for judging on Saturday, Oct. 28. Winners will receive prizes. For details about the reception or the homemade costume contest, call Alathea or Jim Blischke at 570-5173.

Daughters of the American Revolution to honor Midlander with service award

From Staff Reports

Lt. William Brewer, D.A.R., and the National Society of Daughters of the American Revolution, will honor Dr. Will Morris with the Distinguished Community Service Award at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Midland Women's Club.

Six years ago Midland College launched the College Classics for persons 50 years of age and older. In that time, Morris has voluntarily taught world and American history 20 weeks of the year.

Morris, chairman of social and behavior sciences at MC, is a native of Colorado and received his Ph.D. from the University of Texas. Morris has taught in New Mexico, Tennessee and Texas.

To receive the D.A.R. award, three persons knowledgeable of history, must write letters of recommendations. Those writing on behalf of Morris were former District Judge Perry Pickett, Mrs. Martha Burkett, Mrs. Aida Dunlap, as well as nominator Mrs. Patti Carter. All are College Classic students of Morris.

The regent, the executive board of Lt. William Brewer and the membership of Lt. William Brewer approved the nomination, which was then approved by the Historian General NSDAR. After six months, the NSDAR presents the award.

Vietnam experience inspires law officer's words

By Jennifer Rankin
Weatherford Democrat

WEATHERFORD — Hidden behind a Parker County Sheriff's Department badge and a bushy red moustache, an artist lurks in the heart of Cpl. Barry Goodson.

Goodson spends his days as the community relations officer for the sheriff's department and his free time working on his two children's books, his adult novel, which is coming out in spring 1996, and his sandstone sculptures.

Goodson's first novel is titled "C.A.P. MOT," and is the tale of his tour of duty in Vietnam. Goodson worked with a group of eight men as a part of a U.N. operation, living in a village and helping the local people with crops, medical assistance and other factors of daily life.

"We worked in the fields, we helped build homes, we healed their sick, we trained their troops, and they began to help and trust us. Every trap in the jungles was marked, and they taught us how to recognize the marks. I never lost a man to a booby trap. That was the reason we survived, because people knew we were there to help. If they know you're there to help them, they help you help them," Goodson said.

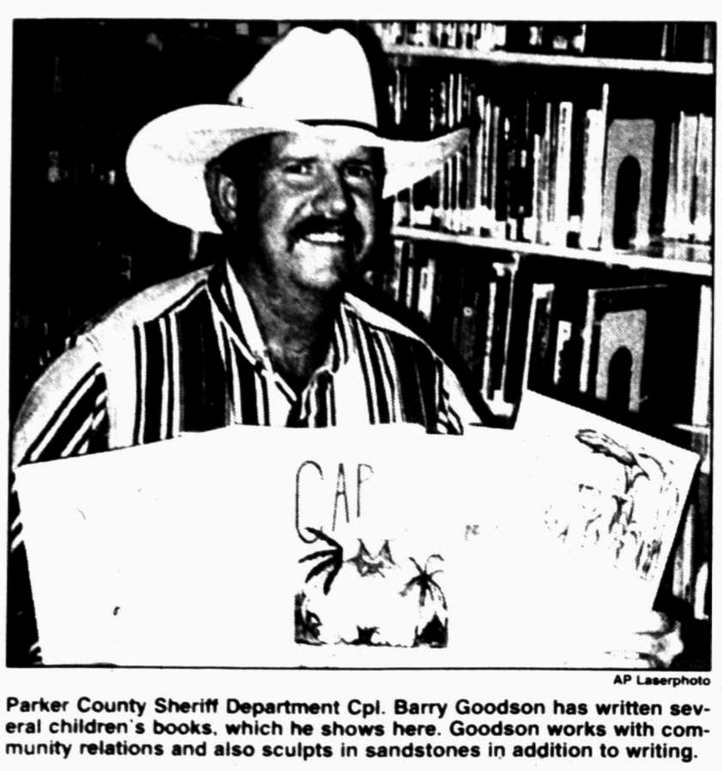

Goodson said the villagers would warn him of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese Army approaching the area. Because his group was so effective, a bounty was placed on Goodson's head of $500.

Goodson began working on his novel as a way of working through the emotions left from his efforts in the war, he said.

Goodson said his family and friends suggested writing what he couldn't talk about as a way of dealing with memories from the war. He said he had no intention, originally, of finding a publisher for his work when it began in 1982.

"C.A.P. MOT" is being published by the University of North Texas Press in Denton and was accepted in 1993 after two rewrites.

"I want people to understand that we were in Vietnam for a purpose, because we were needed. They need to understand the emotions of a 19-year-old boy who goes from a child to an animal overnight. A lot of people over there haven't dealt with their emotions, they just put them on a shelf," Goodson said.

AP Laserphoto

Parker County Sheriff Department Cpl. Barry Goodson has written several children's books, which he shows here. Goodson works with community relations and also sculpts in sandstones in addition to writing.

Goodson said that writing was his way of taking his emotions off the shelf and dealing with what he had avoided for so long.

"We had no choices, we had to live to survive. This was the first war where the soldiers didn't know who their enemies were. There were no front lines and we weren't allowed to take any territory. We weren't allowed to finish the war, and I'd wake up from dreams where I was still fighting," Goodson said.

Goodson said he wanted to write a novel for everyone, with less graphic violence, less profanity and a better understanding of the people fighting and living in Vietnam. The C.A.P. Marine unit existed for only three years because so many men were killed. Goodson said he joined the C.A.P. unit because "in the infantry, they lost hundreds of men and never saw past the killing. It was dangerous in the C.A.P. Marines, but it was for the people," he said.

Goodson said nothing has ever been published about the elite Marine group, except one thesis in Oregon.

"This was the only time in the history of U.S. wars where a unit lived with the people they were trying to help," Goodson said.

His children's books also reflect his years in Vietnam. Goodson said a teacher asked him to write something for children who were studying that war, and "The Chu Lai Child" was Goodson's first effort in that genre. Goodson's second book is similar, and his third will teach children to count in Vietnamese. He does all his own illustrations.

"These are stories about life in Vietnam as seen by a child. It is still a communist country," Goodson said.

Goodson said he used the children of his Vietnamese friends as models for the thoughts and ideas expressed by his fictional characters.

While Goodson's children's books have not been accepted by a publisher yet, he plans to attend a writer's conference in Dallas to search for a publisher.

Goodson said his goal for the rest of his life is to be a writer, illustrator and sculptor.

Goodson has been carving in wood for several years, but said his passion for sandstone started long ago as a way to deal with problems.

Goodson's first carving was of a bear scratching his back on a tree. He said he tried to market his art in a shop in Fort Worth, but has not yet found wide commercial appreciation.

Goodson said sculpture is the ultimate form of expression because the artist can bring thoughts to life in three dimensions.

"Working with sandstone is like working with the sands of time. Mother Nature put the grains together, and sometimes it's soft and sometimes it's hard," he said.

Goodson recently had a commission from La Buena Vida Gardens in Dallas for their wine-tasting rooms. Goodson is still working on a sandstone sculpture of a barrel surrounded by vines.

He seals his art and sometimes stains the rock to bring out different shades.

Goodson completed a sculpture of a whale surfacing on the ocean, which he titled "Breaking the Surface."

"I symbolized me, I think. I was coming out of my shell and expressing feelings I had suppressed for so long," Goodson said.

Goodson has plans for future sculptures, one of which he plans to donate to the Natural Life Museum in New Mexico.

The museum is similar to a zoo, but each animal is living in its own habitat. Goodson wants to donate a roadrunner carved from sandstone to the museum.

"I want to do a sculpture one day of an American soldier with children holding his legs and a baby in his arms as he stands. I want to title it "Baby Killer." I want to make people understand we tried to save the babies," Goodson said.

Zoo residents wreak havoc with landscaping efforts

By Lynn Bulmahn
Waco Tribune-Herald

Horticulturist Art Guilbault takes his job at the Waco zoo in stride. He'll tell you the prettiest season to see the tortoise exhibit is in the winter — when the giant turtles have been removed. That's the only time the grass gets green and lush.

WACO — If you get frustrated because your German shepherd tramps down your lawn, pity Art Guilbault.

He has to contend with elephants, giant tortoises and rhinos tramping down his newly planted grass. He also has gibbons and giraffes stripping his trees — sometimes within a matter of minutes.

Guilbault, the staff horticulturist at the Cameron Park Zoo, oversees 55 acres of some of Waco's prettiest landscaping and natural wooded beauty.

But little of his training at Texas State Technical College or experience in a similar job at Baylor University fully prepared him for his present position.

After all, his workplace is a zoo. And, Guilbault finds, his trees and plants are often crunched, scrunched or munched by animals.

For instance, before the new zoo opened two years ago, Guilbault and his six workers had the African area lush green with a nice carpet of grass. Then the animals came.

The rhinos soon had the place looking barren and sandy again. These animals start eating the grass when it's only sprigs — about an eighth of an inch high.

Giraffes prefer to munch up high. They devour tree leaves. Their two-foot-long tongues enable them to reach foliage that's been barricaded from them.

The gibbons, monkey-like residents of Gibbon Island, are just as bad.

One Arbor Day, Guilbault recalls, the zoo planted a tree on their island. Then the zookeepers let the animals out. Within minutes the gibbons had stripped the tree bare, eating all its leaves.

There are trees on Gibbon Island — all dead ones. They are anchored in underground sleeves. Zoo officials hope to replace them someday with realistic-looking concrete trees that are even more indestructible.

The tortoise exhibit along with the savannah, formerly a Little League ball park, are challenges to the horticulturist.

At both locales, the grass is pounded down by hoofs and feet, and many species graze on it.

Various sections are cordoned off to let the grass re-establish itself. But it's a never-ending battle.

"All they do is walk and chomp," Guilbault good-naturedly complains. This winter, he will re-seed areas with rye grass.

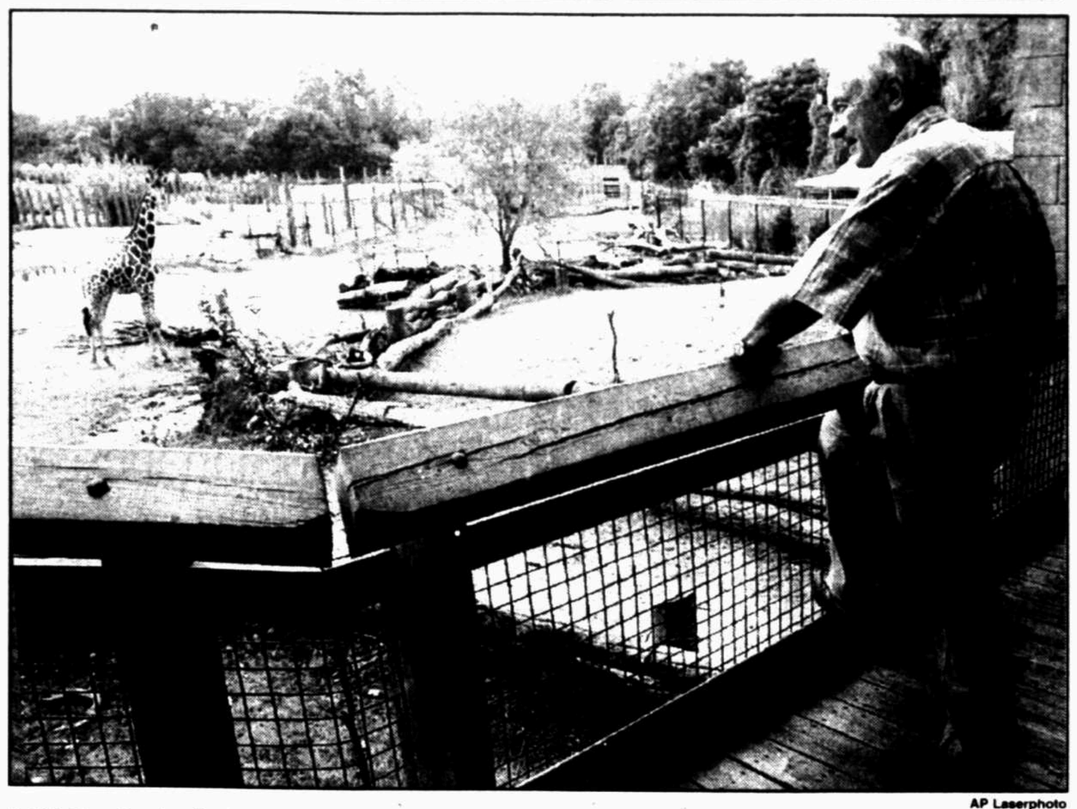

To thwart hungry giraffes, who have already destroyed one young tree, a newly planted replacement has been wired with a battery. Zoo officials hope the resulting mild shock will discourage the long-necked creatures from snacking on the tree's leaves.

Some of the downed trees are being used as barriers to keep the animals from snacking on what little greenery remains.

The kudus ate the cedar tree planted in the savannah, Guilbault said. "A cedar tree, you'd think, would be pretty nasty. But they must have liked it."

Another problem planting area is inside the tiger exhibit. Although the caged enclosure is occasionally planted with shrubs, no plant is a match for a tiger's claws.

If you've ever had a house cat sharpen its claws on your upholstered sofa, you'll know how the tigers destroy the bushes inside the cage.

AP Laserphoto

Art Guilbault, a horticulturist at the Cameron Park Zoo in Waco, looks over the savannah exhibit where various African animals have thwarted his landscaping efforts at the natural habitat zoo. Guilbault has to come up with new ideas and methods to prevent the animals from eating their environment.

"They're like the cats you have at home," Guilbault said. "They like to run, scratch, dig, slide and play."

It may be a contest of Guilbault vs. the animals, with the animals having the advantage. After all, the zoo is their home.

But Guilbault takes it in stride. He'll tell you the prettiest season to see the tortoise exhibit is in the winter — when the giant turtles have been removed. That's the only time the grass gets green and lush.

All in all, the horticulturist has a sense of humor about the animals interfering with his landscaping efforts.

Last Arbor Day, for example, the tree planting was done elsewhere in the zoo, not Gibbon Island.

But Guilbault didn't leave out the energetic little monkeys. Workers put a small tree in their island just for fun.

Guilbault timed them.

It took them eight minutes to eat off all the leaves.

Gaudy garage on wheels rescues stranded motorists

By John MacCormack
San Antonio Express-News

DELL JUNCTION — Had the Merry Pranksters and Pat Buchanan collaborated in decorating a school bus, they might well have come up with the head-turning red, white and blue spectacle that roams these distant West Texas highways.

"People say they never seen nothing like it, but when they are broke down, it's the prettiest sight they've ever seen when I pull up," said J.D. Brown, 51, mobile mechanic and jack of nearly all trades.

"I'm the only thing between El Paso, Van Horn and Carlsbad. I fix flats, I do diesel engine work, welding, build cattle guards, pull engines, belts, hoses, whatever," he said.

Brown, his wife, Iva, and their five children are the only residents of Dell Junction, which sits just south of the New Mexico line about 90 miles east of El Paso.

The family operates a small convenience store and gasoline station at the intersection of U.S. 62 and Texas 1437.

The bus, which is usually parked out front, hews to a patriotic theme right down to the American flag motif on the overhead water tank. Mrs. Brown painted all 50 stars on the tank, once on each side.

The result sometimes had a strange effect on tourists, particularly those in search of authentic rural Americana.

"We had a bunch here from England writing a book. They were here for three days off and on, taking pictures of that bus," he said with a chuckle.

But the bus is more than a gaudy roadside curiosity. It is a fully equipped garage on wheels, right down to a drill press, welder, air compressor, cutting torch and engine-pulling winch.

'I'm the only thing between El Paso, Van Horn and Carlsbad. I fix flats, I do diesel engine work, welding, build cattle guards, pull engines, belts, hoses, whatever.'

— J.D. Brown,
mobile mechanic and jack of nearly all trades

"I've also got an old .12-gauge for rattlesnakes," he said.

The odd-looking winch is Brown's most clever modification.

It is mounted on the roof and secured to the bus frame. Ungainly though the winch appears, Brown said he can easily lift the front of a car or restack heavy loads on a tractor-trailer.

The bus was grounded with a blown engine in Van Horn when Brown got it in a trade for a Mercury about a dozen years ago. It took Brown three years to overhaul and outfit the bus with a salvage engine, a new clutch and assorted other components.

First it was yellow. The fancy paint job arrived four years ago.

As the only roving mechanic in a vast expanse of West Texas and southeastern New Mexico, Brown answers distress calls day or night, although less often now that he also runs the store.

The only jobs he avoids are those on modern vehicles that have electronic components or onboard computers.

Brown sets his rates, in part, on how his customers treat him.

"I charge $1 a mile, $35 an hour, and parts. If they give me a problem, I'll charge 'em mileage both ways," he said.

"As long as people's nice and it's legal, I'll help them. But some people you can't satisfy, and usually you can tell within a few words what kind they are," he said.

And, he said, when the mechanic work slows down, he works construction or whatever else he can to put food on the table.

"You just have to do a lot of things. If I depended on that store, we'd starve to death. If I depended on this bus, we'd starve to death. You can't just sit here. You have to figure out a way to survive," he said.

To folks in Van Horn and the surrounding area, Brown's flamboyant bus is a familiar spectacle, and he has a reputation as a good man with a wrench or a blowtorch.

"I've known him for a lotta years. He worked for me at one time in a diesel shop. He's a good mechanic, and he's got everything in that bus to rebuild anything," said Don Collins, who owns the Chevron truckstop in Van Horn.

"He used to park his bus here at night at my truckstop, and people would wake him up to do the work. He did a real service to the community," he said.

Asked what his reputation is out here in lightly populated West Texas, where no man is a stranger and no dollar comes easy, Brown said, "People that's not envious think very highly of me.

"But there is a few that's envious because I make a living and try to do things, and they don't."

Former governor's daughter fights 'radical right'

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Cecile Richards was attending a State Board of Education meeting when something struck her like a "lightning bolt."

"I leaned over to the woman sitting next to me and said, 'When does our side come on?' There was no one but the far right there" to testify on education, said Ms. Richards, 38, daughter of Democratic former Gov. Ann Richards and a longtime labor and political organizer.

Thus was born the Texas Freedom Alliance, a group designed to keep tabs on what it terms the "radical right," organize mainstream Texans and provide an alternative voice on education and other issues.

"It was really sort of like a religious experience," Ms. Richards said of that first Education Board meeting.

"I don't believe we can complain about other people controlling the system unless we're willing to get in there and organize for what we believe in," she said in a recent interview at her office, which still is being organized but already plastered with her children's artwork.

The testimony at that January meeting concerned whether the Education Board should develop a policy on school health education and services. Conservative groups charged that the Texas Education Agency has promoted sex education and school-based health clinics, which some contend are used for abortion referral.

"It was so alarming. ... the testimony against any kind of health services for children being provided through the schools," said Ms. Richards. "It seemed to me that folks were speaking about what they didn't want for their kids without any understanding of what thousands of children in this state need in terms of basic health services."

After that, "we were off and running," said Ms. Richards, who is executive director of the alliance.

Since its creation in February, the Texas Freedom Alliance has weighed in on issues including school textbooks; conducted leadership conferences on "mobilizing the mainstream in support of public education and religious tolerance," with participation from clergy members; and made a videotape documenting a battle over the direction of the Round Rock school board.

The group's future plans include a focus on organizing clergy members and on ensuring there are election guides for "mainstream voters," although Ms. Richards said the alliance is nonpartisan and won't make endorsements in political races.

- Five rooftop solar systems generating two kilowatts each at residences in Fort Davis.
- One photovoltaic system that will operate an advanced heat pump at a Marfa residence.

Also included are solar applications for watering cattle, remote water pumping, street lighting and traffic signals.

The dedication of the solar park and the entire facilities were held in Fort Davis Friday and featured officials from the Department of Energy and Texas Public Utility Commission.

POPE: Holy Father is concerned over increasing violence in world

he'll make a call to the first-world countries, especially our country, to show more concern and share more resources with countries who have less. Many of these Third World countries have huge national debts, and I know he'll talk about the development of the national debts in these countries. And I think he'll stress, too, issues facing the planet Earth, the ecology and the environment."

Pfeifer said the pope is also expected to speak to the U.N. concerning Bosnia, world unity, and the importance of settling differences "through dialogue and communities."

The Rev. Fred Nawarskas, parish priest at Midland's St. Ann's Church, concurs with Pfeifer's assessment that the pope will focus on the need for respect of human life and unity during his U.N. speech.

"The Holy Father is very concerned about the escalating violence in the world and the dissolution of the family unit," Nawarskas said. "His letters address this, as well as many of the problems that seem to be coming up with this fast-paced world."

Nawarskas said world unity may not be attainable by the third millennium, but that trends that lead toward that ultimate goal are; trends such as "more respect for the family, and concern about the development and education for our young people that they may find a more meaningful life in society."

A sense of Style and taste

The formal living room offers plenty of space coupled with a series of windows overlooking the circular front drive. The mirrored wall in the dining room reflects the windows, creating an illusion of depth.

The deck (right) offers a pleasant retreat, as does the sumptuous master bedroom (below). The formal dining room (bottom) is an elegant place in which to entertain.

Recently updated with a redesigned floor plan, 3301 Stanolind is a house with a lot to offer. Listed for $135,000, this four bedroom property is simply magnificent - from the moment one drives up the circular drive until the moment one leaves.

Shaded by large mature trees, the house and garden are set in a very pleasant environment and the new floor plan makes the most of the location.

Sun rooms, views over shrubs and the deck at the rear of the house all help to create a restful atmosphere throughout the house.

Although very relaxed in feel this house also has a very formal side to it. The redesigned rooms are mostly the formal living areas and they are stunning. The division between the dining room and the living room has been opened up resulting in a a sweeping suite of rooms that maximizes the available light flooding in through the numerous windows.

This series of rooms - now one - provides a dramatic focal point for the house as it is the first thing one sees when passing through the tiles entryway. Not only that, but many of the other rooms, such as the sun room, open out into this space.

Aspects of the formal rooms, such as the imposing fireplace and surround, the mirrored wall in the dining room (it opens up the room by reflecting the wall of windows) help to define the space as somewhere to feel elegant in.

The sun room is a nice touch. It provides an extra living or studying space while seemingly extending the garden. It certainly is a friendly, airy room. The bedrooms are all in the east wing of the house and the master and spare room lead off from this atrium.

The master suite is, as is common in this home, very luxurious. Well proportioned with enough space for a four poster bed and a sitting area it leads into the en-suite master bath. With its tiled counters, whirlpool bath, double vanities and separate shower this is certainly a room that appeals to the creature comforts.

Other touches, such as the built-in book cases and shelves, which are dotted around the house, create a warm, home-like feel to the house. Found in the master suite as well as in the formal living room, these shelves are integral part of the home's design and add a great deal to it's flavor.

For more information about this house there is an opportunity to meet with the listing realtor, Dana Chandler, at the open house which is due to be held this afternoon between two and four o'clock.

To arrange an alternative appointment to view, call Langston Realtors at 682-9495.

Real estate school to open for courses

The formation of a new real estate propitiatory school, REC College of Real Estate was recently announced by Joanne Langston, Pat Orseth and Richard Langston, owners of The Real Estate Central Group.

Sandy Hicks, formerly of Midland College and West Texas' only real estate instructor certified by the Texas Real Estate Teachers Association, will be the principal instructor and operations manager.

Sandy Hicks

On Monday, October 2, the school will begin accelerated classes in core courses approved for real estate licensing requirements. Principles of Real Estate will be offered the week of October 2; Law of Agency will commence October 9.

Both day and evening sessions are scheduled for most topics. A wider range of advanced courses for the experienced realtor is being developed and should be offered within the next few months according to Langston.

"Our goal in establishing the school was to offer the entire West Texas real estate community more choices in educational courses, more flexibility in scheduling and a greater depth of staff," Langston said. "We also wanted to be able to respond to prelicenses and licensees who need a particular course within a specific time frame. Again, our flexibility in scheduling, depth of staff and permanent classroom space should enable us to offer courses as requested, even for a very low, minimum number of students."

Mrs. Hicks explained that one of the more unusual aspects of the school will be an invitation to all area Brokers of Record and Sales Managers to attend any of the college's sessions at no charge. "We feel that the exchange of experiences and ideas, and the opportunity to share the most up to date information on changes in our profession will be a great help to us all," Hicks said. "In fact, we hope to utilize many of the area brokers and professionals as instructors or guest speakers. We do want the ability to serve the entire West Texas market, even to the point of taking the courses to a group of out of town students if necessary," she added.

The school will be located at 1908 West Wall, Suite C, Midland, Texas. For more information call the school offices at (915) 687-3010, Mrs. Hicks at (915) 570-1028, or Mrs. Langston at (915) 685-0400.

EDUCATION

Education in Brief/3E
Making the Grade/2E

Reading is the POINT

Reading for sustenance has taken on a whole new meaning at DeZavala Elementary School. Students who develop an appetite for reading will be rewarded with breakfast with the school principal, Maria Mata.

"It will be a nice breakfast at the Hilton. We are hoping for a big crowd," Ms. Mata said. She said that students who earn 50 points will be able to join her for the special morning meal.

And while 50 points may not sound like much, it can translate into a lot of book reading and test taking.

"Some books are only worth a half of a point and some are worth up to four points. It depends on the length of the book and the grade level," said Irma Molinar, Accelerated Reader coordinator for DeZavala.

Students from many Midland public schools are reading to garner points and awards in the district's Accelerated Reader program. Although operating an Accelerated Reader program is a site-based decision, the program is in 21 of 23 Midland Independent School District elementary schools, according to MISD Reading Coordinator Karen Swisher.

Ms. Molinar said the program "helps students with comprehension."

"They are encouraged to take books home and read them with their parents and to read outside of class time," the educator said.

After reading a book, students go to the library to take a computerized multiple choice test that indicates how well they understood what they read. Students garner points for prizes including meals and school supplies and principals reward them by participating in silly antics such as spending the day on the roof of the school or wearing bizarre attire for a day.

"Students also carry around a reader's license, like a driver's license with their picture, height and weight. Everyone in the program gets one," Ms. Molinar said.

She said for kindergarteners, parents and teachers can read to the youngsters. "It helps them to build up comprehension just by listening," Ms. Molinar said.

A staff member at DeZavala for 17 years, Ms. Molinar was also once a student at DeZavala when the school was in the former building. "I grew up in the neighborhood and now I'm back teaching," she said.

Ms. Molinar said teachers and students at DeZavala are appreciative of ARCO for donating money and books to the school for the Accelerated Reader program. At DeZavala books are available in Spanish and English.

"This is our third full year of Accelerated Reading," Ms. Mata said. "Our test scores have been pretty good. We have been maintaining a 70th percentile in reading. This year we have a (schoolwide) goal of earning 30,000 points."

But more than getting points for reading, Ms. Mata said "students get turned on to reading — reading for fun and understanding what they read."

Accelerated reading teacher Irma Molinar (above left) assists Krystle Ramirez, 8, at DeZavala Elementary School with a computer test. Krystal Gomez, 8, takes a reading comprehension test on a computer (right) as Marissa Benitez and Rosey Rubio (far right) read together. Students earn points for their reading efforts in many Midland public schools.

Born to be Wild

■ University professor teaches about films from the era when Hollywood went wild and dared to subvert the norms of traditional American values. Subversion, rebellion, and disillusionment pervaded films from 1955-75.

It's the perfect college course. No tests. No theme papers to write. But students will have to watch movies.

The course that dares to challenge the norm focuses on American films with authority-defying themes.

The class will explore the underlying meanings of films like the 1955 film "Rebel Without A Cause," featuring the perpetually brooding James Dean.

"Rebel Without a Cause" is a wonderful film. It's astonishing how it stays with you," said Mark Wildermuth, film enthusiast and English teacher at University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Wildermuth will teach the course "Born to be Wild: Subversion, Rebellion, and Disillusionment in American Cinema, 1955-75."

"So much of the disillusionment of the young people in that film is still a part of our culture today," Wildermuth said.

The film also endures, he said, partly because of the sudden deaths of some of the actors. Dean was killed in a car crash Sept. 5, 1955, less than two months before the film's release. Natalie Wood drowned years later in a mysterious boating accident.

"It was ironic that all of the main characters lived on the edge (in their actual lives) and suffered violent deaths. It's kind of eerie and added to the cult mystique," Wildermuth said.

Other films featured in the course include "Five Easy Pieces," "A Clockwork Orange," "Straw

WILD: Course explores rebellious era

(From 1E)

Dogs," "Klute," "Magnum Force" and "Jaws." Many of the films feature characters who were self-destructive, and storylines that were unnerving, but also thought-provoking. The films presented ideas that questioned traditions.

"These films were all classics of their time. 'Easy Rider' really transformed the film industry. The films of this period challenged the Hollywood dream machine, which espoused traditional American values," Wildermuth said.

"These films are violent and overtly sexual, but they have a visceral quality that never fades," he said. "The films came out and made a statement, and took a hard and brutal look at society."

Wildermuth, who earned his doctorate in 18th century literature, said his passion for film has led him to offer the course that explores the deeper meanings of feature-length films from America's rebellious period.

But, heck, you might ask: was there really a deeper meaning to a great white shark terrorizing beachgoers in "Jaws"?

"Sure," Wildermuth said. "Jaws is about disillusionment."

Would it be that thousands of swimmers soon became disillusioned about their ability to avoid being eaten while frolicking in the ocean shortly after the movie came out?

Nope. It's deeper than that.

"It turns out there are worse monsters in town than the shark. We see all these people in Amity trying to cover up that the shark is there, because they are materialistic and want to make a profit off of the tourists," Wildermuth said.

He said the film has served as a real critique of America as a capitalistic society.

The university teacher said "Jaws" also established the blockbuster phenomena. "(Director) Steven Spielberg was at a crossroads with that film, he made a transition to softer (more popular and less brutal reality type) films. It was a crossroads for him and for American films," he said.

So, students will have to keep their thinking caps on and attempt to watch the movies to discern more levels than the literal.

Wildermuth will point out symbols and scenes that students should watch for before viewing the movies.

While modern-day rebels are back in vogue, Wildermuth said current films don't compete with earlier fare for substance. He said the films explored in his class "have a different quality. 'Pulp Fiction' doesn't hit you like these films."

Another film viewed and discussed in Wildermuth's class is the 1973 movie "Magnum Force," the second Dirty Harry film starring Clint Eastwood. The film features vigilante police officers as well as corrupt city officials.

"The movie — with good dialogue and plot beautifully crafted — was written by the same writer who also wrote the script for 'Apocalypse Now," Wildermuth said, noting that the message from "Magnum Force" is that you can possibly fight the system and win."

Wildermuth said he will play period music from time to time to "set the atmosphere."

The movies will be shown on a 50-inch television screen (courtesy of Colortyme Rent-to-Own) at the Permian Basin Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

After this course, the educator said he hopes to develop another film class for students clamoring to study great American western films. "The westerns are popular. There is a lot of interest in having a film course on American westerns," Wildermuth said.

"And I hope we can eventually buy a video projection system with a 200-inch diagonal screen."

But for now, the teacher just hopes to fill up rows with fellow movie buffs.

"Our only real limitation is that we can't eat popcorn in the auditorium," Wildermuth said.

Children often fall short of parents' academic goals

By Sharon Cox
N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH — The first six weeks of the 1995-96 school year are about done for many students, which clears the way for disbursing the first report cards.

Those report cards capsulize each student's "entire" performance for the past six weeks.

They reflect that Tiffany may have had a bad day and forgotten to turn in an algebra assignment, but they don't indicate that she has been worried about her grandmother, who had a stroke last month.

They disclose that Scott flunked a science test, but don't report that he doesn't get along with his new stepfather, so as much as possible, he avoids going home and studying.

There are many reasons young people often fall short of the high academic goals parents establish for them. As parents, it is difficult for us to remember that it's THEIR report card and not OURS. Consequently, we often exert too much pressure on our kids to "make the grade."

I recently visited Vanessa Dick's journalism class at Riverside Middle. These budding journalists were extremely sharp and quick to voice their opinions.

I asked them if parents exerted too much pressure on getting good grades. They overwhelmingly agreed that parents do.

Following are some of their responses:

■ "If you try to force your children to make A's, then they won't. My parents are satisfied with my grades as long as I do my best. I pressure myself to have as many A's as possible. I expect it from myself." Amanda Davis, 14.

■ "I don't think parents should put pressure on kids because that could be the reason they go down. I think that they should just encourage them. Maybe a treat every now and then...." Jeremy Batchelor, 13.

■ "All A's make you feel like a failure if you get a B. I'd rather be encouraged to get good grades than to be told to. Bribes don't work, either. Rewards are better. I'd much rather have positive remarks about my grades then to get bribes." Jill Montgomery, 13.

■ "Sometimes a lot of pressure can be a little too much to deal with. When you've had a bad six weeks and your grades don't meet your parents' expectations, it can create a lot of stress on the student's part. It can make you feel like a failure." Tammy Ferguson, 13.

■ "My parents put pressure on me to make straight A's. If I don't, I usually get a long lecture. If I get straight A's, I usually get a reward. At times, I feel like they're not being fair, but I appreciate the pressure because they know and I know that I can do my best." Jaqueline Kowena, 13.

■ "I think parents should set certain expectations of their children's grades and expect those grades to fall within that specified range. Parents know their own children and know their capabilities." Aimee Davis, 13.

Christopher Lawler, 14, said he believes in the reward system.

"Most of the people I know do it for themselves ... but personally, bribery always works for me!," he said.

MIT students know math, flub English

N. Y. Times News Service

If anyone doubted that math was the first language of most students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the proof came this fall in the school's freshman writing exam.

Only 17 percent of students taking the two-hour essay exam did well enough to satisfy the freshman writing requirement. Another 7 percent had proved their command of English through advanced placement exams before arriving at MIT, leaving three-quarters of the 1,100-member class in need of writing help.

In previous years, about 55 percent of students scored high enough to meet the writing requirement, but faculty toughened the grading this year.

"We're trying to send the students a clearer message about the kinds of writing skills they need while here and after they graduate," said Kip V. Hodges, a geology professor and chairman of the committtee on the writing requirement.

"The students scored about the same as in previous years, but we made a conscious effort to ratchet up the requirement. This is not a failing of the admissions process, and it's not an indication that high school preparation is getting any worse."

Among the freshmen at the renowned Cambridge, Mass. school, there was some grumbling about a change in standards without warning. And there was much consternation about failure from a group of high achievers. But there have been no protests.

"There was a lot less squawking than I expected," said Leslie C. Perelman, an associate dean who coordinates the writing requirement.

Students who flunked the test must either pass a course in expository writing or demonstrate by the end of their sophomore year that they have improved their skills by submitting an essay that is graded like the freshman exam. All students must also pass a second writing requirement in their major before graduating.

'As an editor of scientific journals, I'm sick to death of putting up with lousy papers.'
— Kip V. Hodges, MIT geology professor

The freshman test required the students to write two essays — in longhand — over two hours. All had to describe ways to improve one transportation system they used to get to campus. For the second essay, they could choose between the topic of conformity or how they learned a new task and how it changed them.

Asked why the faculty got tough this year, Hodges laughed. "I leaned on the committee to be more honest in scoring," he said. "As an editor of scientific journals, I'm sick to death of putting up with lousy papers."

Activities broaden college experience

'Just going to class and going home is not enough'

■ The Midland College Student Activities department offers students success through campus activities and fellowship.

The first priority for students at Midland College is achieving academic success, but there is more to college life than classes, homework, exams and grades.

The Student Activities department encourages students to participate in campus activities such as student organizations, fine arts programs, cultural events, intramurals, athletic events, field trips and special events.

According to Jan Reed, director of student activities, involvement in these activities can add a special dimension to the college experience and foster the growth of leadership skills, relationships, creativity and self confidence.

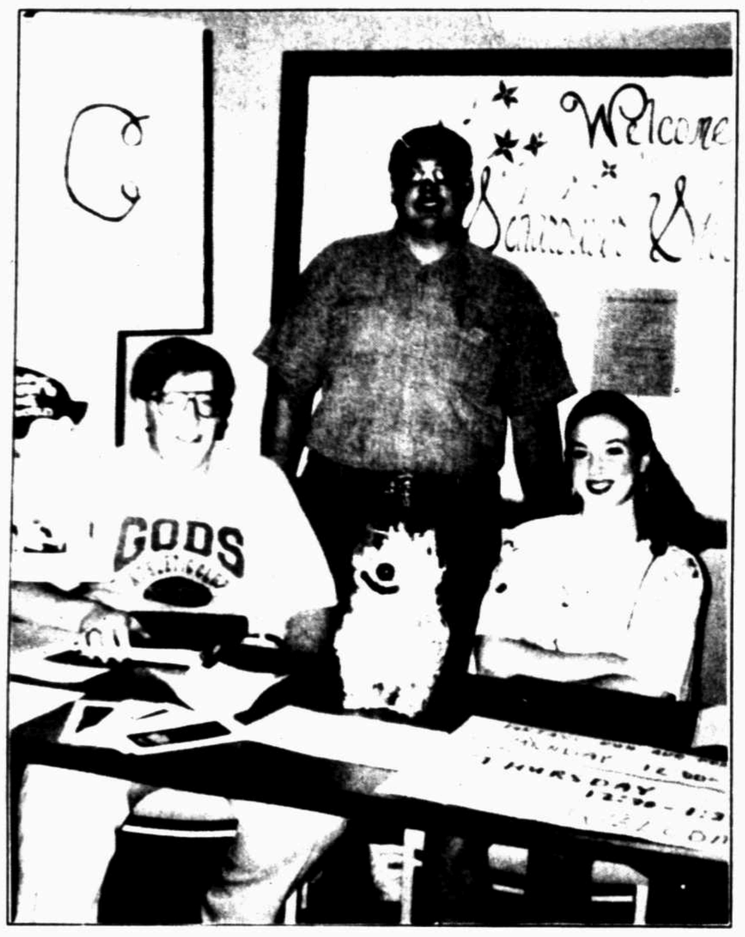

Students have a more successful college experience if they participate in activities because they meet people they wouldn't meet under normal circumstances, Reed said about the advantages of participating in these activities.

Laura Vaden, president of the Student Senate defines the goals of campus student government as offering opportunities for student involvement and providing a "true college life experience" for students.

"Students can have a lot more fun if they are involved. Just going to class and going home is not enough," Vaden said.

Vaden's involvement with Student Senate is now in its second year. She is also involved with Christian Life on Campus.

"My sister influenced me," Vaden said. "She was active in campus activities when she attended MC and encouraged me to get involved also. She said I would have more fun that way."

> "You get good leadership training and activities that go on your resume that show you're a well-rounded individual."
> —Jan Reed, Student Activities Director

A costume and mocktail party, sponsored by the Retreads, a club for older students, and Student Senate is planned for Oct. 28.

Education and Entertainment committees are still meeting to formalize plans for future parties, mixers and activities.

Student government also sponsors and addresses important issues and causes. "The Great American Smoke-Out" is one of many drives organized by the Student Senate.

Student participation and willingness to be involved is important, Vaden said. "Being active on campus gives students more experience with people and makes their time at Midland College more fun."

New campus clubs formed this year are Friends Unlimited, an organization developed to assist challenged students, Chaparral Campus Ministries and Students Discussing Religion and Philosophy.

Students also are invited to join The Fellowship of Student Athletes, Phi Theta Kappa, Spirit Club and many others.

The Student Senate is the college's oldest and most active student group. It is the students' voice to the college administration with senators elected by the student body. The Senate is responsible for direction and planning of various college social functions, speakers and activities.

Giving students opportunities is Reed's philosophy behind student activities. "You get good leadership training and activities that go on your resume that show you're a well-rounded individual."

MC trustees acquire skills to provide high level of leadership

Midland College Board of Trustees members, William Howard and Charlene Romero-Wurtz and MC President, David Daniel recently attended the Annual Convention of the Association of Community College Trustees (ACCT), where community college governing board members experienced the opportunity to acquire the skills and knowledge needed to provide the highest level of effective, quality governance on behalf of their communities.

Held in Seattle, Washington, September 20-23, the convention is a major trustee development activity offered by ACCT. Attending the convention were more than 1,400 community college governing board members from the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, and other countries.

Within the theme of "The Future Environment "Implications for Community College Governance," top speakers focused on the challenge of change, the community college of the future, creating an effective technology environment, and community colleges' role in a global society.

Special showcase technology sessions, presented by major high technology companies, featured the impact of technology on teaching, learning, and administration. The convention program also included four in-depth academies, 36 concurrent sessions, and more than 35 roundtable discussions.

The Seattle Community College District and The Community and Technical Colleges of Washington State hosted the convention, providing planning, promotion, hospitality, and on-site assistance.

The purpose of ACCT is to strengthen the capacity of community, technical, and junior colleges to realize their missions on behalf of their communities through the development of effective lay governing board leadership and advocacy at local, state, and national levels.

The Port of Galvestion affords visitors the opportunity to view sights not normally seen, such as this huge off-shore oil exploration rig docked along the ship channel.

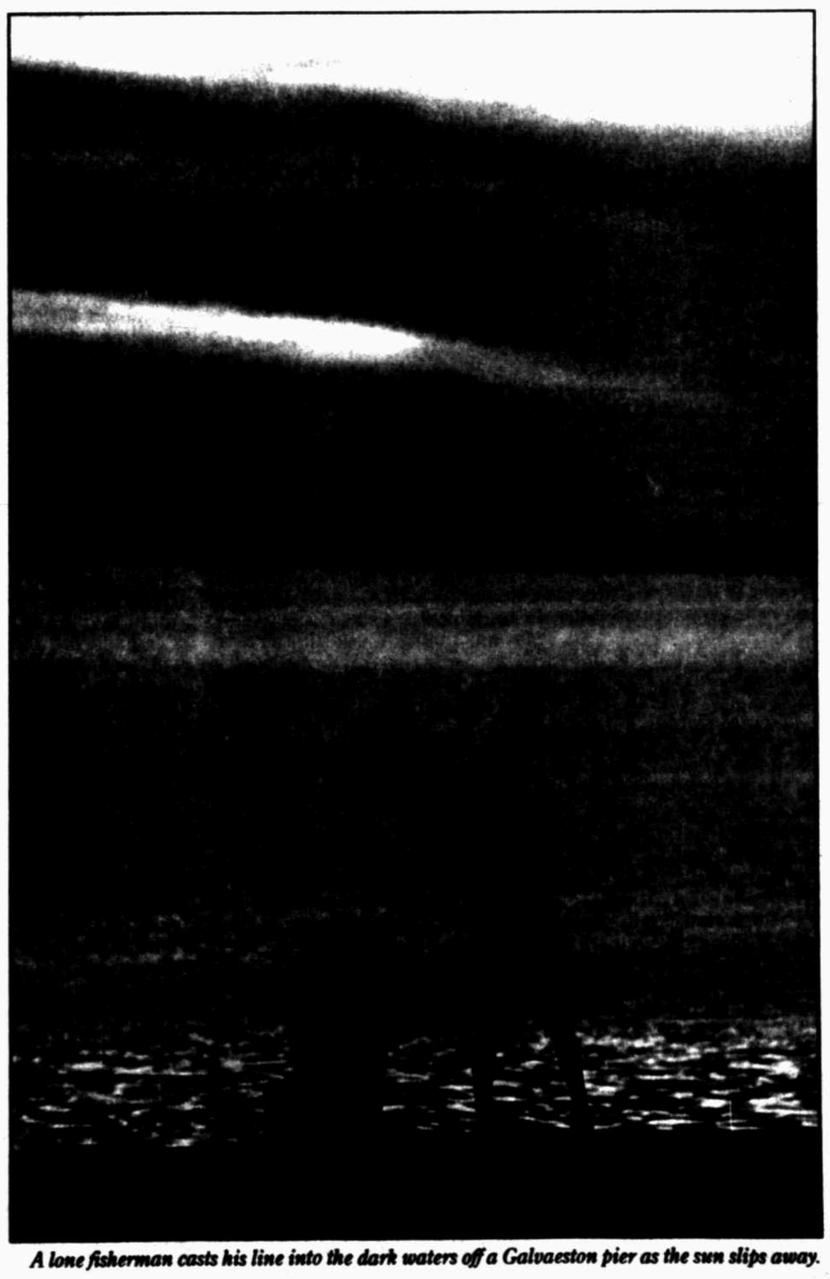

Shrimp boats, a familiar sight along most inlets and waterways, provide employment for many residents. Here, 'Shellbelly' awaits her next adventure along the Galveston ship channel near the historic port area of the Strand.

Waves gently caress the shore along the seemingly endless stretch of beach at Seawall Boulevard as brisk winds carry the aroma of the Gulf waters inland.

Columnist 'comes out of closet' with story of surviving breast cancer

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, and I have decided to come out of the closet, so to speak. If I can make one woman aware of the importance of better breast health, it will be worth my making a very private experience public.

McKnight-Harrison

My credo now is: "Life is what happens when you are making other plans." I was all set to make my annual visit to my native Kansas a couple of years ago when I was diagnosed with breast cancer. With a family history of the disease, I knew I might become a statistic — one out of nine women who contract breast cancer sometime during their lives, but it really was not a major concern with me.

When I first learned the results of the biopsy, I can recall the surreal feelings I experienced. Of course, there was fear, along with shock and denial, as though this could not really be happening to me. In addition, everything seemed to be occurring so quickly. A non-decisive personality type who had previously agonized over which pair of shoes to buy, I now had to decide on what course of action to take, and the decision had to be made immediately.

I opted for a mastectomy. It had been a good choice for my mother many years before, and I wanted to do what I felt was best for me. A caring husband completely supported my decision. My health was at stake, and the emphasis was on whatever it took to make me better.

On Aug. 9 1993, I had my surgery and started on the road to recovery. Although treatment followed, I was determined that my life continue as normally as possible. Therefore, columns were written and deadlines met, other work continued, appointments and social engagements were kept. Life went on.

I cannot say I did not have my difficult moments, but the experience gave me new insights and an inner strength I would not have discovered otherwise. It helped me put my priorities in order, and so many of the things I used to worry about are insignificant now. My husband, our two sons and friends are what is important.

Hopefully, what has been called an "epidemic" by some can be eliminated eventually as research, education, screening and treatment are advanced. I urge all women to follow a regular schedule of mammograms, annual breast examinations by your physicians, and monthly self-exams.

Remember, life continues after cancer, and how sweet it is!

ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S first woman geologists, longtime Midlander Maria Spencer was honored on her 88th birthday by the University Graduate Women.

The celebration took place during the organization's monthly luncheon meeting held in September at the home of Colleen (Mrs. Vince) Scury.

Among those attending were president Barbara (Mrs. Bill) Larsen, Joyce (Mrs. Jack) Hauke, Cecelia (Mrs. Bob) Davis, Martha Burkett, Gretchen (Mrs. Frank) Bell and Nita (Mrs. Bob) Ivy.

Miss Spencer, who was with Superior Oil Co., came to Midland in 1934. Among other places she worked were Los Angeles, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, and San Angelo. She is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma.

UNDER BEAUTIFUL SUNNY skies, the West Texas Geological society held its annual family picnic a recent Saturday afternoon in the backyard at the home of Frank and Pam Suttles.

The attendees enjoyed games, a meal featuring hamburgers, hot dogs and homemade ice cream, and visiting with old and new friends.

Former Midlander Sam Samford came all the way from Houston to slave over a hot barbecue pit and visit with many of his longtime friends.

Among others seen at the event were WTGS officers and families, president Ron Johnson, his wife, Cathy, and their sons, Russell and Ryan; second vice president Debbie Osborne and husband Jim; secretary Julie Gibbs and husband Bill; president-elect David Farmer, his wife, Sharon, and their children, Jayce and Jordan, and WTGS executive director Paula Mitchell.

THE MIDLAND WOMAN'S CLUB opened its doors to some 300 members and guests last weekend for the annual fall tea.

Spectacular arrangements of autumn flowers and foliage decorated the serving tables in the Great Hall and the Tea Room, and floral centerpieces and wreaths were used on individual tables. A beautiful fall wreath was won by Esta (Mrs. Cary) Geron. Flowers by Ron provided the decorations and the door prize.

The tea-time refreshments included finger sandwiches, cheese balls and straws, sausage balls, roasted pecans, assorted cookies, coffee, tea and punch.

Among those coming in from out of town for the event were former club member Clarice (Mrs. Harry) Douthitt and Joan Griffin, both from Lubbock, and Dr. Joy Edwards of Fort Worth. Ms. Griffin is the daughter of Allis (Mrs. W. Earl) Chapman, and Dr. Edwards is the daughter of Madge (Mrs. Porter) Wallis.

In addition to Mrs. Chapman and Mrs. Wallis, the hostesses were Dollie Ballenger, Frances (Mrs. Jack) Brown, Victoria (Mrs. J.H.) Chapple, Jo (Mrs. Michael) Cristiani, Wanda (Mrs. Ed) Franke, Minnie (Mrs. R.T.) German, Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert, Hilda (Mrs. Leslie) Hinds, Carole (Mrs. Robert A.) Galveston is unique Texas city

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

Galveston is unique among Texas cities for many reasons. Located on an island about two miles off the Texas Gulf Coast, the city has one of the most colorful pasts of any city anywhere.

According to the Texas Monthly Guidebook, "Texas Coast and the Rio Grande Valley" Second Edition, Galveston history can be dated as far back as 1528, "when it was discovered by Cabeza de Vaca, a Spanish explorer. The discovery, however, was made when he was shipwrecked and kept prisoner for six years by the Karankawa Indians, a fact that may belie the vanished tribe's reputation for cannibalism."

Named after Count Bernardo de Galvez, viceroy of Mexico in the mid-1700s, the island eventually was ruled under the flags of Spain, France and Mexico. Today, of course, it is part of Texas.

No tropical island is complete without a pirate or two in its past, and Galveston is no exception. "Jean Lafitte, the buccaneer, set up his base there (on Galveston Island) in 1817. Lafitte, who had become an American hero when he came to the aid of Gen. Andrew Jackson at the Battle of New Orleans in the War of 1812, founded the town of Campeche, which was literally a pirates' den. From here, he and his men ravaged the Spanish ships in the Gulf. He stayed until 1821 when the U.S. Government forced him to leave after his men made the undiplomatic mistake of privateering against an American ship. When Lafitte left, the settlers came," the guidebook continued.

(In fact, Lafitte's lore and legend is still a part of Galveston today. According to the book, "Day Trips from Houston," a currently popular pastime involves this figure from the past: "Legend says his (Lafitte's) treasure still lies buried in the shifting sands, and hunting for it with metal detectors is a favorite Galveston pastime.")

Galveston served as a temporary capital for the provisional government during the Texas War for Independence. "After the Texans won," the guidebook went on, "Michael B. Menard bought most of the eastern end of the island from the new republic for $50,000 and laid out the town site with the streets much as they exist today."

Galveston saw action during the War between the States, was the third-largest port in the country by the late 19th century, and became a cultural center complete with elegant homes, rich citizens and The Strand, which was "modeled and named after a street in London" and eventually "became known as 'Wall Street of the Southwest'," the guidebook went on.

Galveston also was the site of the most deadly and devastating natural disaster in the history of the U.S. In 1900, a hurricane struck the island with such force and fury that about 6,000 people died.

Today Galveston's businesses and homes — both historical and more modern — are protected by a seawall and the fact that after the hurricane of 1900, determined survivors worked for years to raise the elevation of the city by from 3 to 17 feet, according to the guidebook.

Frances Kay Harris wrote in "Fodor's Houston and Galveston 1988" that "the first seawall was less than four miles long. Over the years it has been lengthened, until today it extends for more than 10 miles from the east end of the island. It is the longest continuous sidewalk in the world."

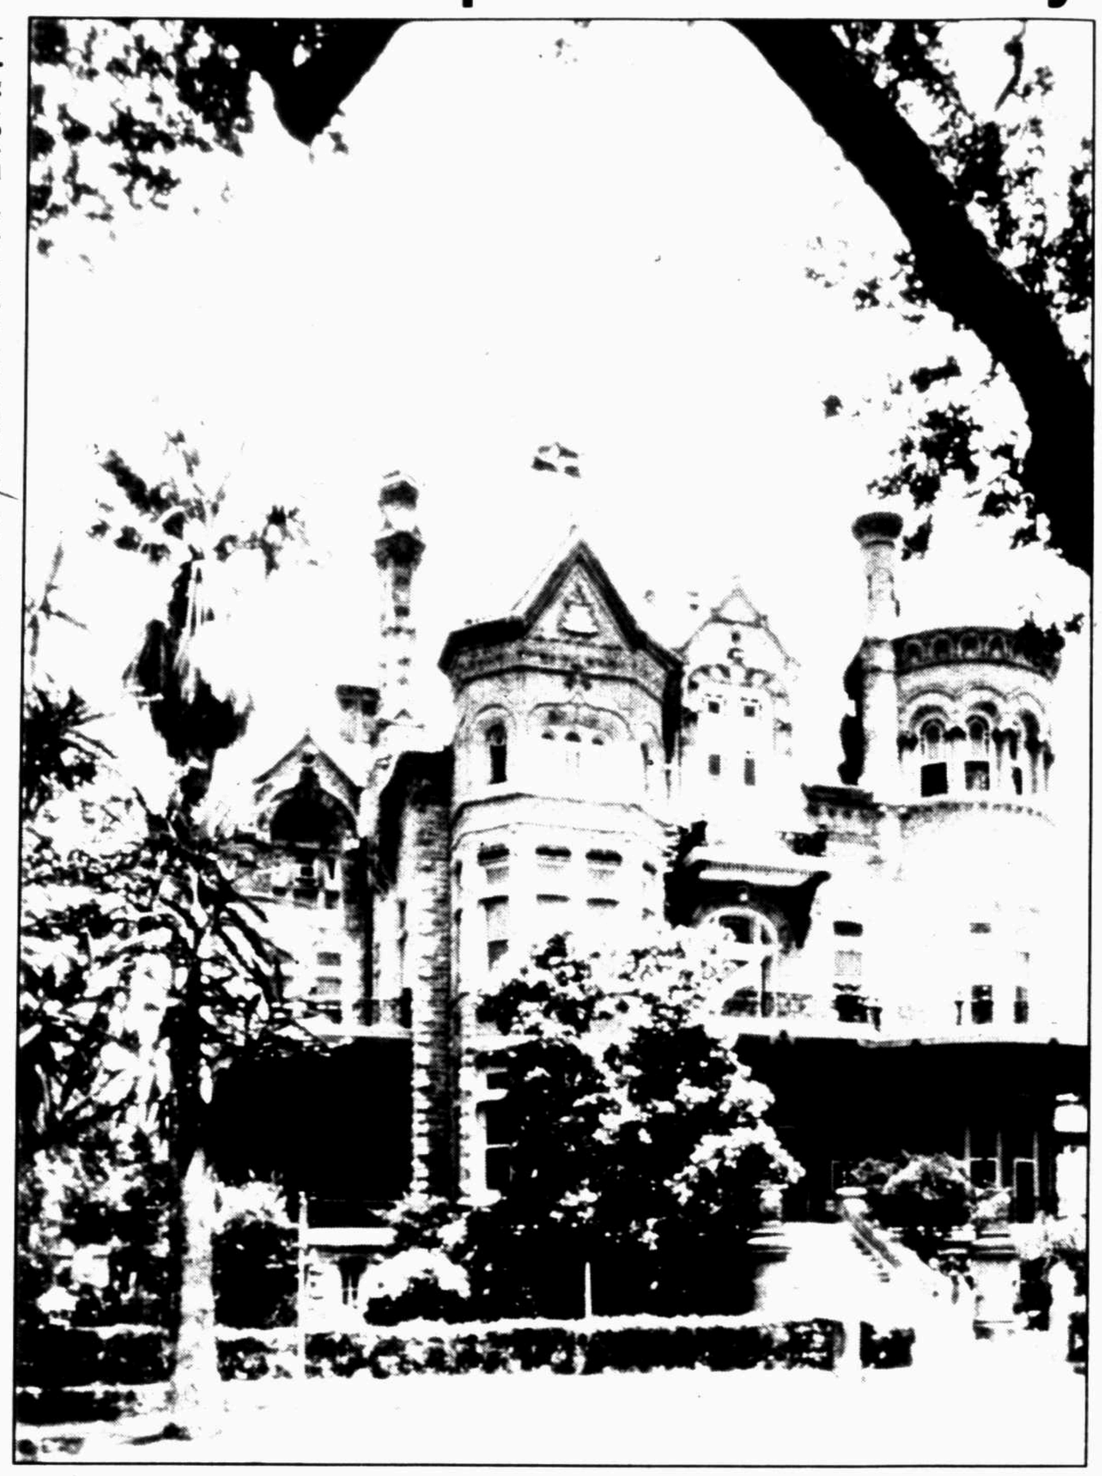

GALVESTON ALSO is the home of several outstanding examples of Victorian architecture, many of which have been lovingly restored and opened to the public.

Ashton Villa is one of the most popular. According to "Historic Homes of Texas," the home, which was built in 1859, "has serenely withstood the onslaughts of both man and nature — the Civil War, the 1900 Storm, Hurricanes Carla and Alicia, and even the very real threat of demolition.

"This grand Italianate mansion was built by James Moreau Brown, Galveston's wealthy merchant and entrepreneur, for his lively family and as a setting for their lavish entertaining. Brown designed his regal mansion himself and named it in honor of Isaac Ashton, a Revolutionary forebear of his wife. This was the first brick house in Galveston, and Brown owned the brick yard. From the mansion's balcony, the Emancipation Proclamation was read on June 16. ...

"The Villa remained in the Brown family until the 1920s when the El Mina Shrine Temple purchased it. In 1971, the Shriners announced plans to demolish the building and a horrified Galveston Historical Foundation and City of Galveston bought the property. The next three years were devoted to restoring Ashton Villa to its original opulence, and the restoration was placed under the direction of architect Raiford Stripling."

Using old photographs and some of the original furnishings, the workers were able to restore the mansion to almost exactly the way it was when the Brown family was in residence. Today, it remains in all its Victorian splendor at 2328 Broadway in Galveston.

Visitors to Galveston can tour the Bishop's Palace (above), and Ashton Villa (right), two of the city's famous historic homes which have been restored to near their original appearances.

THE BISHOP'S Palace in Galveston is another example of the elegance of days gone by. "Historic Homes of Texas" describes it this way: "Of all the opulent and grandiose historic homes in Texas, none can match the splendor of the Bishop's Palace, but before it became a palace, this magnificent mansion was a castle."

It seems that one Walter E. Gresham, a former Confederate colonel, arrived at Galveston after the Civil War "poor, but ambitious, and with a law degree from the University of Virginia," and determined to make a name — and a fortune — for himself. "By 1886, Gresham was one of the wealthiest men in Texas, and he was determined to build the most elaborate house in his adopted state. It took seven years, from 1886 to 1893, to build his home, and the people of Galveston called it 'Walter Gresham's Castle.' Gresham did live like a king indeed, and he and his wife, nine children and 13 servants reigned over the castle for 27 years."

To say the house is sturdily build would be an understatement. After the great hurricane of 1900, the Greshams opened their doors to "hundreds of refugees, for the house was completely undamaged," the book goes on.

In 1923, the house became the Bishop's Palace "when it became the residence of Bishop Christopher E. Byrne of the Catholic Diocese of Galveston until his death in 1950."

Today visitors can tour the mansion, which is under the care of the Catholic Diocese of Houston and Galveston. The book continues: "The American Institute of Architects has recognized the Bishop's Palace as one of the 100 outstanding structures built during the first 100 years of that group's activity. In addition, it is on a list of 15 buildings included in the Archives of the Library of Congress as representative of early American architecture. The Bishop's Palace is the only building in the country on both lists." It is located at 1402 Broadway in Galveston.

But beaches and old architecture are not the only attractions in Galveston. The city is the site of some of the best festivals in the state. The Blessing of the Fleet and Rainbow Festival is presented every year on the last weekend in April, according to "The Best of Texas Festivals" by Ann Ruff. The shrimp boats and pleasure crafts are decked out in tinsel, streamers, paper flowers, flags, crepe paper and any number of gaudy decorations, and blessed by Catholic and Greek Orthodox priests. In the meantime, the Rainbow Festival, which takes place on The Strand, is loaded with arts and crafts, food and souvenirs.

At the end of the year, the famous celebration of Dickens on The Strand takes place the first weekend in December. "The Strand is magically turned into a bustling busy London street scene of 1857," Ms. Ruff wrote. "Beefeaters resplendent in their traditional red and gold uniforms stroll the thoroughfare, not missing the Tower of London in the least. Besides, there's good Queen Victoria leading the parade assuring her charges that all is well. ..."

Food appropriate to the times, including hot roasted chestnuts, chutney chicken and Cornish pasties also are available.

The event was "begun as a fundraiser by the Galveston Historical foundation in 1973 for the restoration of this historic area," she continued, and "it was decided to go back to that glorious era when The Strand was known all over the world."

So whether you want to visit historic sites, hunt for buried treasure or just spend a day or two on the beach, Galveston is the place to go. And you don't even need a passport.

Santa Fe lodge is for familes

By Julie Cooper
Hearst News Service

SANTA FE, N.M. — The Bishop's Lodge, in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains of New Mexico, is family friendly.

The lodge, owned and operated by the Thorpe family since the early 1900s, is nestled among 1,000 acres, borders a national forest and is three miles from the Santa Fe Plaza.

It was named for its original owner, Bishop Jean Baptiste Lamy, whose story is told in Willa Cather's "Death Comes to the Archbishop." Lamy carved out the ranch and residence, built a chapel and planted fruit trees.

After his death, the ranch was sold to the Pulitzer family and finally to James R. Thorpe, a Denver mining man.

From Memorial Day through Labor Day, the lodge has a children's program for kids aged four to 12.

At 8 a.m., children meet on the porch of the main lodge. From there, it is off to a breakfast buffet in the children's dining room — with its Western motif and plastic tablecloths. Next stop: the playground with slide, swings, sandbox and full-size Indian tepee.

At the stables, youngsters take turns riding Daisy, a 25-year-old shaggy black pony. Kids also hike and do arts and crafts.

For toddlers, there is a chance to ride a pony on a lead rope in the mornings.

While the kids are supervised, mom and dad have time to enjoy themselves. At the lodge, there is hiking and horseback riding, fashion shows during lunch, bird-watching, relaxing by the pool and tennis.

In and around Santa Fe, there's shopping, gallery- and museum-hopping, Southwestern cuisine, Indian cliff dwellings and cooking schools.

Starting at 5:45 p.m., counselors preside over dinner in the children's dining room.

They entertain the youngsters until 9 p.m., leaving you time to enjoy a leisurely dinner at the lodge's three-star restaurant or head to Santa Fe. There also is baby-sitting available for kids under four.

There are 88 guest rooms at the lodge, ranging from standard to deluxe suites.

The adobe buildings blend into the landscaping. The rooms have beamed ceilings, Southwestern furniture, huge bathrooms and comfortable patios for outdoor dining.

Sixty-five horses are available for twice-daily trail rides during warm months.

The Bishop's Lodge is not a dude ranch.

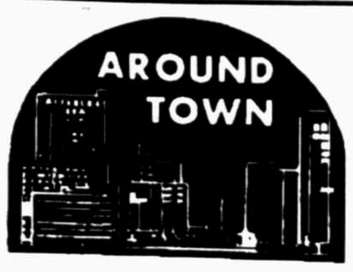

If you're expecting "City Slickers" type activities, you won't find them here. They don't expect you to herd cattle or saddle your own horse. The dining room is casual but elegant. Sunday brunch requires a reservation, and men should wear jackets or vests at dinner.

Images Modeling & Talent Center, 1105 Pueblo, to conduct a seminar for actors to explore improvisation and scene study. Students in the two-day session will work toward building confidence and strengthening authenticity.

Music lovers who prefer turntables face narrowing range of choices

By Terry Trucco
N.Y. Times News Service

For a while in the late 1980s, when compact disks and CD players swiftly saturated the audio market, record turntables appeared destined for the same fate as manual typewriters and rotary-dial telephones.

That never happened, much to the delight of audiophiles who insist that vinyl records offer a richer sound than CD's and to the cheers of music lovers with irreplaceable record collections.

But finding new and used turntables today is considerably more challenging than it was a decade ago.

"The LP is dead as a mass-market medium," said Ivan Berger, technical editor of Audio magazine. In 1983, when CD players were still new and costly, Audio listed 62 international turntable manufacturers and 251 turntable models in its annual equipment survey. This year there were 41 manufacturers and 110 models.

Prices start considerably higher today than they once did, with little available for less than $250. Increasing the price is the fact that arms and cartridges, which hold the stylus, are routinely sold separately.

INEXPENSIVE TURNTABLES are hard to find because the large Asian companies that once made them have switched to making CDs.

"A $99 CD player will outperform a $99 turntable," said Jack Shafton, chief executive officer of SOTA Industries, which has made mid-to high-end turntables since 1979.

That is because motors in inexpensive turntables are often placed directly under the turning device, creating sound-distorting vibrations.

In costlier machines, a belt connects the motor, which is off to a side, to the turning device.

Still, many audiophiles contend that the analogue sound of vinyl records, when they are played on costlier turntables with belt drives, speed accuracy, a high-quality motor, pitch stability and a sturdy base to reduce vibration, is superior to the digital sound of CDs. "For $500, you can get a turntable with a level of fidelity that's impossible to reach with CDs," Shafton said.

Choosing the right turnable can be time-consuming and confusing, with prices that skyrocket from $500 to $15,000.

Though turntables are carried by some branches of large electronics stores, like Nobody Beats the Wiz and Harvey Sound, choices are usually slim.

Even high-end audio stores, like Lyric Hi-Fi in Manhattan (1221 Lexington Avenue, near 82nd Street; 212-535-5710) and Innovative Audio in Brooklyn (77 Clinton Street, 718-596-0888) often carry a limited range of turntables.

To learn what is available, consult specialty magazines like Audio, then shop around.

Careful listening is required, too. "One guy might make a $400 turntable that sounds better than someone else's $1,200 model," Berger said. "But that doesn't mean all $400 turntables sound better than all $1,200 models."

WELL INTO the 1970s, speakers were more important than turntables for creating good sound, said Michael Nadler, a salesman at Sound by Singer, which sells high-end equipment. But improvements in vibration control, among other factors, mean records "sound better" on today's most sophisticated turntables than on turntables made 30 years ago, he said.

Sound by Singer sells machines by VPI, SOTA and Well Tempered Turntable, among others. Prices start at $650 and can top $15,000.

SOUND BY SINGER, 18 East 16th Street, New York 10003; (212) 924-8600.

MULTISPEED TURNTABLES that play 78's are hard to find. Good sources are shops that handle used equipment, including repair shops and stores that take trade-ins.

At Stereo Exchange, used turntables start at around $125 but may require repairs. "The resale value of turntables is not what it once was," Chris Brezil, a salesperson, said. "If it sold for $300 10 years ago, we don't want it." Stereo Exchange also stocks new turntables by Yamaha (from $250), Well Tempered Turntable (from $1,500) and others.

STEREO EXCHANGE, 627 Broadway, between Houston and Bleecker streets, New York 10012; (212) 505-1111.

TEN YEARS ago, Mike Stosich, an engineer, began Esoteric Sound, which modifies and markets new turntables with multiple speeds.

His current specialty is six-speed turntables at 33, 45, 71, 76, 78 and 80 RPMs, from a $249 model to $530 for one that plays 16-inch broadcast transcriptions as well as records.

"Lots of people buy these turntables as a second turntable to play 78s," he said. Collectors also use the turntables to record their 78s onto cassette tape. Turntables are sold by mail order and at Stereo Exchange in New York.

ESOTERIC SOUND, 4813 Wallbank Avenue, Downers Grove, Ill. 60515; (708) 960-9137. Free catalogue.

OLD TURNTABLES by manufacturers like Dual, Garrard, Technics and Thorens "were built like tanks with huge motors" and often work for years when properly refurbished, said Anthony J. Trincilla, general manager of Analogique Systems Labs, a 20-year-old audio-repair service.

The hardest aspect of restoration is finding the correct parts, particularly for models from the 1940s through the 60s. (Analogique frequently makes replacement parts). Analogique, an authorized repair center for over 10 turntable manufacturers, also carries used turntables.

Repairs cost $60 an hour; estimates cost $60, which is credited to any work done.

ANALOGIQUE SYSTEMS LABS LTD., 17 West 17th Street, New York 10011; (212) 989-4240.

SENTIMENT OFTEN prompts repairs.

Jeff Parkhurst, an owner of Simply Audio repairs, recalls a customer who brought in an RCA player that cost $39.95 when new in 1954. It took six months to track down old parts, make new ones and fix the machine.

And the final result, "the best it could be, sounded horrible," Parkhurst said. The customer called it perfect.

An authorized repair center for more than 10 turntable manufacturers, Simply Audio carries used turntables and specializes in repairing old Thorens turntables that play 78s. Repairs start at $45, which is the cost of estimates and is credited to work done.

Drive into parking lot and enter 'The Twilight Zone'

By Erma Bombeck

When you suggest to someone that your automobile reparks itself when you're in the supermarket, he looks at you as though you've just told Phil Donahue an alien from a UFO impregnated you with twins.

Bombeck

But it happens. The part about the restless car, that is.

The first 20 minutes when I wander hopelessly up and down three lanes with a carry-out boy who is maturing before my eyes, I want to turn to him and announce, "Someone stole my car."

But I've done that before, and you get a reputation.

(When I said that, and after we finally stumbled onto it, the carry-out boy snorted, "So this is the car you thought someone wanted to steal?")

There was a time when I thought I was the only one who parked my car in a spot, made note of where I left it and proceeded to shop.

But I was wrong.

Shoppers who try to find their lost cars all have a way of dealing with it.

The Mumblers are the ones pushing their own carts and carrying on a conversation with themselves.

"It has to be here. I remember I was going against the one-way arrow and had to take up two spaces, and the sun was coming in my windshield so I had to be facing east."

The Fakers are the people who pretend they know where their car is. They walk in and out of the rows, confidently pushing their carts to the end of each lane. They remain cool.

When they finally spot it in another lot, they whisper, "You little imp. Mother doesn't like it when you play games with her — especially when her ice cream is melting."

The Climbers don't mess around. They shinny up the nearest pole or climb atop a van and scope the entire area.

When they spot their car, they pursue on foot, only to find it has moved again.

No one has ever actually seen a driverless car finding a new spot in the parking lot.

Well, I've never seen Elvis at Wal-Mart, but I know he's there.

One rainy afternoon in one of those spiral parking garages that has the lighting of a mortuary, a car drove past me in the darkness. You can say the driver was picking something up off the floor, but I say, some poor woman who left her car on the E level, green concourse in slot 27, will go nuts trying to find it.

Husband, wife team give up comforts to help people who are disabled

By Jon McConal
N.Y. Times News Service

MULLIN, Texas — Ty and LaRaye Kelly now must bathe in shifts.

She has to spend hours cooking fresh breads and other food on an ailing kitchen stove.

They do this gladly while giving up a comfortable lifestyle in Fort Worth, 110 miles to the northeast, to furnish residential care for the mentally handicapped.

Their 5-acre New Hope Ranch sits high on a hill with a magnificent view stretching for miles. The Kellys and their "boys," as they call them, greet visitors instantly and warmly. So does their dog, Just For Grins, an amiable greyhound facing execution until the Kellys entered her life and rescued her.

"We take in all kinds," said Ty, laughing as the dog with splotches of orange and white colors flashed what looked like a large grin at him.

Then we walked into the tiny frame house where the Kellys live with their son, T.J., 26, Mike Boy, 35, and Steve Auld, 47, all three of whom are mentally handicapped.

Actually, it was T.J. who turned the Kellys to this rather drastic change in their lifestyle.

"He was living at a place for mentally handicapped and it seemed like they were just babysitting him," said Ty, 54. "We have always felt like the mentally handicapped need something to do ... need some structure."

Then came the gift of the 5 acres about six miles north of Goldthwaite.

Then came a friend who fixed a water well gone bad.

Then the Kellys gave up their jobs in Fort Worth and moved here in 1992.

Since then, another friend has begun an expansion that will double their space.

"I sit back in total amazement at the different people God has sent us."

— Ty Kelly, of New Hope Ranch

"I sit back in total amazement at the different people God has sent us," Ty said.

Auld is certainly glad that somebody sent him the Kellys. He described his former life this way: "I will put it the Christian way. I asked the Lord to put me where he wanted me and he put me here."

He paused and suddenly flashed a smile.

"I'm the greenhouse manager," he said.

The greenhouse is where the Kellys and the men grow a large variety of house plants that are sold to area nurseries.

"This gives the guys something to do and gives them pride in doing it," Ty said.

LaRaye, 49, spoke of the need for such facilities citing the 500,000 people in Texas classified as mentally handicapped.

The Kellys take no state money. They make it on donations from individuals and churches and money the residents may wish to contribute.

That does make for lean times, like not being able to buy a new stove.

"But we will get by," she said.

Then they led us to their herd of goats.

Just for Grins watched as the boys hugged the goats. Then the huge greyhound's smile flashed.

Sights like this make bathing in shifts tolerable.

Get the most from heating dollars by tracking down energy wasters

Associated Press

An energy audit of your home is one way to insure that you're getting the most from out of your heating dollars. Your local utility company can assist you in tracking down energy wasters, but there are many items you can check yourself. Here are some important checkpoints and additional energy saving tips:

One way to check for wall insulation from the indoor living area is to remove a switch plate on an exterior wall. Shine a flashlight around the switchbox to see if there is insulation present. Better yet, make a small hole in an exterior wall (in a closet or hidden spot) and measure the insulation. Then patch the hole.

Adding insulation to the walls of an existing home is costly and difficult to do thoroughly. A contractor uses special equipment to blow in insulation from holes bored in the walls. However, if you plan to reside your house, installing rigid board insulation before applying siding is cost effective.

Insulation on the foundation of the house, whethera basement, crawl space or slab foundation, is often overlooked. Insulation applied on the house exterior to cover the exposed foundation and to extend 1 foot below ground level is effective.

Other energy conservation measures for the foundation include caulking the sill plate where the sill meets the foundation blocks in a basement, and insulating the header above the sill plate.

If your basement is unheated, insulating the ceiling would make the floor of the first story much warmer, reduce heat loss and conserve fuel. If you do this, you must also insulate any heat or water pipes in the basement.

The energy efficiency of your home depends to a large extent on efficiently operating heating and cooling systems. In winter you should keep the thermostat constant at 68 degrees Fahrenheit during the day and 60 degrees at night. The elderly, infants and people who are ill will require higher temperatures. A clock thermostat, which automatically lowers the heat when you're in bed and raises it prior to your rising, aids in your comfort and convenience. Check radiators or registers to see that they are free of dust and not obstructed.

If you have gas-fired heating equipment have it cleaned every two to three years by a technician. From time to time you should check the burner plates to see if the unit is firing properly, because gas ports can become clogged with rust or dust. Clean or replace furnance air filters once a month during use.

If you have oil-fired equipment you should have the equipment tuned up and its efficiency checked annually. If the burner is not a flame retention head burner, consider replacing it. You should periodically inspect the burner for oil leaks.

Have your water heater — the second largest energy consumer in the home — drained periodically to remove built-up sediment. Insulate the hot water pipes and the water tank. On gas and oil water heaters, be sure to keep insulation away from the pilot light and controls. Repair faucet leaks immediately. Finally, consider installing flow restrictors in shower heads and faucets.

Honored by the presence of their 7 children, their spouses, 20 grandchildren and 4 great grandchildren, Mr. & Mrs. W. A. Skees, Sr. recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at THE PURPLE SAGE GUEST RANCH near Bandera, Texas, 8/11/95-8/14/95.

Family and relations and friends traveled from El Paso & Dallas, Tx; Arkansas, New Jersey, Colorado, and Arizona honoring their celebration.

Rev. Fr. James Wathen, OMI from Evansville, Indiana, offered the Latin Tridentine Mass, during which the couple repeated their wedding vows.

Hispanic fashion models gaining visibility

By Vilma Maldonado
Associated Press

McALLEN — Carissa Bazan wants the world to know models aren't always tall, willowy blondes with blue eyes and light skin.

Bazan, 16, of McAllen, is one of a growing number of Hispanic models in the Rio Grande Valley who are proving models come in all colors and sizes.

"I would like to make a difference and show what the real women of the world look like," Bazan said. "We are not all 6 feet tall and 100 pounds."

Bazan, who stands 5 feet, 7 inches tall and weighs about 119 pounds, has olive skin and long, naturally curly hair. She also is diabetic.

Last August, the teen-ager was a runner-up in the Hispanic Designers Model Search in San Antonio. She modeled two J.C. Penney outfits for the fashion show — one casual outfit and one evening gown — and won a $250 scholarship.

"I was in front of all these people casually dressed," Bazan said. "The J.C. Penney people handed the clothes to me. I memorized a speech to introduce myself, and I said it bilingually because I want to get my Spanish fluent."

ANOTHER RIO Grande Valley model, Gabriela Villarreal, 17, also has olive skin. She stands 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighs 110 pounds and has hazel eyes and straight, shoulder-length hair.

She was named one of the Top 10 finalists last June in the High School Covergirl Model Search in New York.

"Mostly my biggest challenge is to overcome the stereotypical Anglo model of blue eyes, blond hair," Villarreal, of Brownsville, said.

Villarreal plans to study fashion design when she graduates from Hanna High School.

"I dress different from other people," Villarreal said. "I am picky about my clothes and try not to wear the same outfit twice."

Bazan hopes to enter a Maybelline modeling contest later this year.

"My message to other youth interested in modeling is to be happy with yourself and never give up on hopes and dreams," Bazan said.

Donna Muslin, program coordinator of the Hispanic Designers Model Search of San Antonio, agrees that the fashion industry needs a variety of model types.

"MAJOR DESIGNERS of the fashion industry throughout the world, on the runway, are looking for women 5-foot-8 to 6-foot-1 — for the young men, it's 5-foot-11 to 6-foot-4 inches — proportionate weight, and an industry size 6 to 10," Muslin said. "But that does not mean a woman size 4 or 12 could not do it. When we are talking about photography or commercials, they don't have to be tall and skinny."

Muslin also notes that McAllen had more participants — eight — than any other city except San Antonio in the Hispanic Designer Model Search of San Antonio. The program, sponsored for the past 12 years by J.C. Penney, is a nonprofit organization that aims to boost visibility and nurture young Hispanic designers.

Due to the high representation from the Valley, plans call for hosting another model search in McAllen next year. Applications are available in May at all J.C. Pénney stores.

"WE ARE encouraging Carissa to join next year," Muslin said. "She competed with other models 22 and older, so she did extraordinarily well. She was always on time, focused as to what she was there for. And, it was nice to work with youth like her."

In the South Texas district, J.C. Penny and the modeling agencies Muslin works with have established a training program for young people who reach the semi-finalist level.

"We would like to take this contest a step further than just modeling," Muslin said. "They are novice models, but have had specific model training."

Models in the contest are critiqued on walking, turning and appearance.

"We bring in positive Hispanic role models as guest speakers," Muslin said. "The models are strongly encouraged to speak their language well and proficiently. The models work with a drama coach to work on their voice and diction. We have sent some of the local contest winners to ... San Antonio for Spanish classes."

MUSLIN BELIEVES young people hoping to pursue a modeling career must continue their education.

"A modeling career is on the way to another career," Muslin said. "It is important for youth to realize modeling is a business, and to be in it, you have to be one smart cookie, because there are many people willing to take advantage."

Young models must establish themselves with a reputable major agency, and avoid agencies that charge them an entry fee, she said.

Bazan, the local model who placed in the Hispanic Designer Model Search, was born and raised in McAllen, and has a younger brother and sister. Since she was 3 years old, she has appeared in fashion shows and loved shopping for clothes.

"I guess modeling in front of all these people is where I found my home," Bazan said, displaying her big smile and beautiful brown eyes.

BAZAN SAID she takes modeling seriously, but is looking forward to finishing high school and moving to a bigger city.

"I feel comfortable on the runway," Bazan said.

The Nikki Rowe High School junior said she loves fashion design and merchandising. She is taking an apparels class in school and hopes to study design at a Los Angeles institute.

"I love designing clothes and putting outfits together," Bazan, wearing a striped mini skirt, said.

Bazan also was a semi-finalist in the nationwide Avon Latina Model Search. She won $100 worth of Avon products.

When she is not modeling, Bazan plays softball and does aerobics.

"I take good care of myself — I eat the right food and take two shots of insulin daily," Bazan said. "I am thankful to God for every blessing. My parents are proud of me, and that makes me happy."

Rowe High School student Carissa Bazen, 16, of McAllen, is shown in San Antonio. She was a runner-up in the Hispanic Designer Model Search in San Antonio. Miss Bazen is one of a growing number of fashion models who does not fit the image of tall, willowy, blue-eyed blonde. Bazan is of Hispanic descent and is diabetic.

Up-and-down battle of dieting is wearing thin

By Patty Puckett
N.Y. Times News Service

I'm not fat. Nor am I particularly thin. Yet I have obsessed over my weight for more than half of my 26 years. My earliest memory of dieting was at age 10 or so, when I switched from regular Coke to Diet Rite Cola.

Since then, I have pored over countless diet books and memorized the calorie count of every food. I have pondered the merits of fat grams vs. calorie counting. I'm ashamed of how much effort I put into something as self-centered as dieting. Yet my relationship with the bathroom scale tends to be one of my life's most tumultuous.

I typically lose 10 pounds, then gain 20, a cycle I've repeated at least six times. Most recently, I shed 32 pounds on the advice of my doctor. It took four months of deprivation, plus a lot of Lean Cuisines and fat-free fudge Popsicles. When I modeled a sagging pair of size 12 jeans for my cat in June, it seemed worthwhile. I smiled and declared it the biggest coup of my dieting career.

I had reached my goal weight of 130 pounds. Kate Moss, I am not. But my clothes fit. This is it, I decided. I will never diet again.

Then came the study. The Harvard study. Those weight charts in doctors' offices cut us too much slack, according to the recent Harvard Medical School report. Ideally, women who are 5 feet 5 inches should weigh no more than 119 pounds. I'm 5 feet 4.

My roommate, Beth, is equally chagrined. ("What about bone structure?! Fat-to-muscle ratio? Hello?") We argued at the television as we flipped channels, watching in horror as one rail-thin anchorwoman after another repeated the story on the 6 o'clock news. We both swore the newscasters were smug.

Now, I must decide. Do I stock up on fat-free cheese and try to lose 15 more pounds? Dieting is, in some ways, a stable force in my life. I can't control it when the man in my life decides it's more fun to be single. But a plain Lenders bagel will always have 160 calories. Also, as any chronic dieter will tell you, dieting is easy compared with keeping the weight off.

But common sense must prevail. I look in the mirror and see somebody who is neither thin nor fat, somebody who has no idea why reaching an arbitrary ideal weight is so important. So I will try to be happy the way I am. If I put myself at greater risk for earlier death, so be it.

I have a 10-month-old niece, Katie, who is adorable and chubby. I watch her break into a grin as I swoon over her ineffable cuteness. She has never encountered harsh comparisons with other people's body types. Nor has she experienced the feeling that she is less attractive than anybody else.

I hope she never will.

DEAR ABBY

Windshield's banner makes good news follow bad

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can't thank you enough for mentioning the "Please Call Police" banners in your column. I ordered one; then two and a half months later — in 100-degree weather —the engine of my car went dead just outside Texarkana, Texas.

Van Buren

I put my "Please Call Police" banner on my windshield so cars and trucks could see it as they passed. In a few minutes, a police officer showed up saying someone had called in after seeing the banner. The officer drove me to a garage, then had my car towed in and drove me home.

Abby, that banner saved my life! I am 87 years old and have a heart condition. I couldn't have lasted very long in that heat. Thank you a thousand times. — APPRECIATIVE IN TEXAS

DEAR APPRECIATIVE: No need to thank me — that's what I'm here for. How fortunate you had the foresight to plan ahead for such an emergency.

You are not the only reader who has told me what a lifesaver these banners can be. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Last winter, a friend of ours had a life-threatening experience. She and her three children were driving on a major highway in Indiana. It was 10 degrees below zero when her car stalled. (It had snowed 16 inches the day before.)

We had been concerned about her driving in such weather, so we had given her our "Please Call Police" banner.

Abby, she managed to get the car to the side of the highway and then she placed the banner on her windshield. She and her children sat in the car in the bitter cold only about 15 or 20 minutes before a trucker came to their aid. (A driver going the other way had seen the banner and signaled an approaching truck driver to stop and assist her.) The driver graciously helped her restart her car and followed her to a truck stop several miles down the road.

I'm writing not only to tell you how valuable the banner was, but to ask you to print the address for others who may want to order them. We plan to give them to friends and family as gifts. — MRS. GEORGE WOLVERTON, CLARKSVILLE, IND.

DEAR MRS. WOLVERTON: Your letter highlights the importance of being prepared for highway emergencies. Many readers have written to tell me that the "Please Call Police" banners make excellent holiday stocking stuffers.

To order the banners, write to WCIL-Banners, P.O. Box 92501, Los Angeles, Calif. 90009. (WCIL is the Westside Center for Independent Living, a not-for-profit organization that helps people with disabilities live independently.)

Make your check or money order (U.S. funds only, please) payable to: WCIL-Banners. You will receive one "Please Call Police" banner as a premium for a $5 contribution, and another banner with each additional $4 contribution. Include $1 per order for postage and handling. (Many people order two banners — one for the windshield and one for the rear window.) Please allow eight weeks for delivery.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

DNA profiling can be done quicker

WASHINGTON (AP) — DNA evidence found at the scene of a crime is being used in a growing number of cases, and a new profiling method may speed up the work of laboratories. The DNA profiling method most commonly used in forensic laboratories can take up to six weeks, according to the National Institute of Standards and Technology, an agency of the Commerce Department's Technology Administration.

But a faster method, known as polymerase chain reaction — or PCR — takes just a few hours, the NIST reports, adding that it has issued a new quality assurance standard for DNA profiling by the PCR method.

"In addition to speed," the institute says, "another advantage of PCR is that it gives accurate results with tiny amounts of DNA, such as a suspect might leave in saliva on a cigarette butt or postage stamp.

"Laboratories can perform their own DNA profiles on the components in the NIST profiling standard. Results agreeing with the certified values from NIST indicate that a lab's results are accurate."

Leaves in New Hampshire's White Mountain National Forest begin to reach peak colors at "Upper Falls" on the Swift River in Albany, N.H.

Fall foliage appears as grand blaze of glory

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

Fall's annual parade of colors is about to begin, starring a variety deciduous trees in the nation's temperate climates.

As peak season varies by region, there is plenty of time to view countrysides awash in autumn hues. Climate determines when leaves change, so call local tourist information centers before taking to the trails.

In the Northeast, Vermont's mountainous landscape is covered in shades of red from early to mid October. For wide-angle viewing, drive east from Burlington along I-89 through expansive mountain vistas. Exit at U.S. Highway 4 and head west to Woodstock, a New England town with a village green, church spires and covered bridges. Continue west on U.S. 4 to Killington Mountain and ride the ski gondola to the top for a four-state scenic view. Back in the car, turn north on U.S. Highway 7 to picturesque Middlebury, Lake Champlain and back to Burlington.

In Western Massachusetts, the Mohawk Trail in the Berkshire Mountains offers a blaze of red, orange and gold. From Deerfield, off I-91, drive west along hilly State Road 2, stopping at Hairpin Turn and other designated lookouts.

At North Adams, detour left on Notch Road to the summit of Mount Greylock for a panoramic view of fall colors below. Continue on Route 2 to Williamstown, a colonial New England college town with outstanding art museums.

The peak foliage season for Michigan's Lower Peninsula is about the same as the Northeast's, but Michigan claims a greater variety of trees, thus a greater variation of color.

Prime viewing is in the northern reaches of Lower Michigan, along U.S. Highway 31 that skirts Grand Traverse and Little Traverse bays just above Traverse City. Drive further north to Charlevoix, on Lake Michigan, and into apple orchards with splendid pickings. Continue on U.S. 31 to Conway, then take back roads to Harbor Springs, a town of Victorian homes, and a 31-mile "tunnel of trees" to Cross Village.

In Minnesota and Wisconsin, fabulous foliage lines Great River Road which clings to craggy forested bluffs overlooking the upper Mississippi River.

FROM ST. PAUL, take U.S. Highway 61 south about 50 miles to Red Wing, a Victorian town on Pepin Lake. Follow the lake to the Wisconsin side and make a 30-mile loop, stopping at the lake at Maiden Rock and at the town of Pepin, home of Laura Ingalls Wilder, author of "Little House on the Prairie." Take State Road 23 west across Nelson Bottoms, a marshy forested area, back to Minnesota. Stop at Wabasha, Minnesota's oldest town, founded in 1836, before returning to the Twin Cities via Route 61 north.

In Virginia in mid to late October, take the Skyline Drive through the Blue Ridge Mountains from Front Royal south to Shenandoah National Park. The 105-mile drive includes some 70 lookouts.

Skyline Drive leads to Blue Ridge Parkway, a 470-mile scenic stretch along the ridges of the southern Appalachian Mountains between Virginia's Shenandoah and North Carolina's Great Smoky Mountains national parks. The 90 miles from Asheville to Blowing Rock are most spectacular.

AP Laserphoto

Reflected fall foliage casts shimmers of flame over the water of Becket Reservoir, in October Mountain State Park, near Becket, Mass.

Full fall foliage peaks a little later in Ozark National Forest in Arkansas. From Russellville about 75 miles northwest of Little Rock on I-40, go north on State Road 7 for 86 miles, twisting through the "Grand Canyon of the Ozarks" with its russet-colored forests.

At Harrison, take U.S. 62 west for about 40 miles to Eureka Springs for a mineral springs soak. Then go back onto Route 62 east to Berryville and turn south on State Highway 21 to "Pig Trail," a shady country lane that twists seven miles on White Rock Mountain to a splendid view.

Colorado's nearly 2 million acres of Aspens go golden throughout October. Highlights abound along the 71 miles from Denver northwest to Rocky Mountain National Park. Take U.S. Highway 36 north to Boulder, then go west on the Route 119, also known as Peak Highway, and turn north again on State Road 72, winding around rugged Indian Peaks Range. Connect with State Road 7 to Estes Park, the resort nestled at the park entrance.

Monterrey is better than ever

By Jennifer Mena
N.Y. Times News Service

MONTERREY, Mexico — This industrial city of belching buses and factories has been likened more often to Pittsburgh than to Acapulco. And although it's closer to Dallas-Fort Worth than any Mexican beach, it has never become a tourism mecca.

Although Monterrey focuses on business travelers, those who come for pleasure find few tips on having fun. That's too bad, because there are restaurants, sites and handicrafts that provide a flavor of northern Mexican culture. It just requires a bit of digging to find them.

Now, there is more incentive to get started. Before the devaluation, a decent hotel cost $100 a night. Prices are down now and Monterrey is still a lot closer than Acapulco.

I LIKE staying near the Zona Rosa, a heavily trafficked shopping zone close to the Macroplaza, a three-block-long park surrounded by ultra-modern and colonial architecture and carefully placed flowers and statues.

The tall, orange beacon of commerce salutes the century-old cement, glass, steel and beer companies that transformed Monterrey into a 20th-century business hub that is home to 2 million people and international companies such as glass conglomerate Vitro, cement giant Cemex and the makers of Tecate and Carta Blanca, Cerveceria Cuauhtemoc.

From the Macroplaza, walk east on Cinco de Mayo street to Dr. Coss to the Museo de Historia Mexicana, which includes vivid historical displays. The gift shop stocks some wonderful handicrafts from other parts of Mexico.

Just southeast of the Macroplaza is the Marco Museum, which often hosts spectacular exhibitions of Mexican art. Coffee, etc., is served in front of a shallow pool filled with balloons.

WAIT UNTIL about 2 p.m. to eat lunch, when Mexicans enjoy their largest meal of the day and some stores close for a two-hour period. Consider the nearby El Rey del Cabrito at Constitucion highway and Dr. Coss street, which serves traditional baby goat dishes as well as steaks.

A few other worthwhile eateries are: Mi Tio at Mexico and Hidalgo streets and La Cabana at Matamoros and Pino Suarez streets (also a nice place for cold mugs of beer). Near the Instituto Tecnologico de Monterrey on Eugenio Garza Sada Avenue, try Molcas, set up like a Mexican plaza, or Las Antorchas, where waiters make table-side salsas. On Lazaro Cardenas Avenue, visit La Fonda de San Andres, nestled in a two-room cottage decorated with artwork and handicrafts.

For dinner, take a short cab ride to La Palenque, at Morones Prieto 2525, where a parade of norteno performers dance and do rope tricks in a stadium-style setting.

Take in a few sights at Cuauhtemoc Brewery and Museums, which includes a sports museum, a baseball hall of fame, and an art gallery. Visitors can enjoy one beer free in the garden.

ESCAPE THE downtown commotion in Monterrey's richest suburb, San Pedro Garza Garcia. Note the plethora of satellite dishes beaming in American television. The Centrito, a shopping area between Rio Mississippi and Rio Orinoco streets, seems to attract a lot of wealthy teen-agers at night. Sushi bars have proliferated here recently. Pirata Memo, on Grijalva street between Rio Mississippi and Rio Orinoco, serves the best tacos I've ever tasted.

Tikal at Rio Missouri 316 offers a wide selection of quality silver, clay and wood handicrafts. (For cheaper souvenirs, try the Union de Artesanias at Cuauhtemoc and Madero streets downtown. Avoid Mercado Indio at Madero and Simon Bolivar, where prices change faster than street lights.)

On Sunday mornings, families hike in paths that surround the 835-meter-high mountain called Chipinque, accessible by heading north on Gomez Morin Avenue.

Those who want to hike Camel Back Mountain, an omnipresent site throughout Monterrey, can drive or cab to Abraham Lincoln Street in a suburban neighborhood called Contry until the road ends and a hiking path begins.

For a different mountain experience, check out Sierra Jeep Tours, which offers a $60, eight-hour trip into the mountains west of Monterrey. The telephone number is (011-52-8) 3-59-48-46.

IN STRIKING contrast to Monterrey, several stately colonial buildings mark a traditional Mexican plaza at Hidalgo and Juarez streets, including the colonial Saltillo Cathedral. A few small museums are around the cathedral. For a traditional meal, check out the elegant El Tapanco at Arizpe and Allende streets.

Whether in Saltillo or in Monterrey, keep asking around for more tips on where to eat or for interesting sites. Rely on word-of-mouth instead of the travel guides and promotional brochures. It's the best way to get a good glimpse of northern Mexico.

IF YOU GO...

Details: (800) 235-2438.

How to get there: Drive south on Interstate 35, over the international bridge into Nuevo Laredo. A new highway, with a $13 toll, offers a smooth, 150-mile ride from Nuevo Laredo to Monterrey. Don't travel by car at night because some roads are not well lighted and animals occasionally stray onto roadways.

Proof of auto ownership is required, as is Mexican insurance, available through such agencies as the American Automobile Association and Sanborn's (offices in McAllen and Laredo).

A flight from Dallas/Fort Worth Airport takes about 90 minutes.

Where to stay: Although it's a long walk from the Macroplaza, my top pick is the sparkling new Best Western Safi, where service is far better than in more expensive hotels in the city. The hotel, which has a small restaurant, bar and gym area, recently offered a $38-a-night weekend special. Other lower-priced hotels are Howard Johnson Plaza Suites Monterrey and Hotel Rio. For ultra luxury, check out the Hotel Ambassador, Quinta Real or Hotel Ancira. For a hotel in San Pedro Garza Garcia, try the Hotel Antaris.

Lizzie Borden's house to open as B&B

By Lois R. Shea
N.Y. Times News Service

FALL RIVER, Mass. — On the morning of Thursday, Aug. 4, 1892, breakfast at 92 Second St. was mutton. The very same mutton that had made its debut Sunday and resurfaced daily, without refrigeration in between. Some family members already appeared to have suffered food poisoning. But Abby Borden ordered the remains of the mutton served in broth for breakfast.

By 9:30 that morning, Abby Borden was dead, hacked to death with a hatchet. By 11:15, her husband Andrew had met the same fate.

Lizzie Andrew Borden, his daughter, was tried and acquitted of the murders. But fascination — some would say obsession — with the case continues. Borden buffs have long studied floor plans of the house, which was built around 1845. Searching for souvenirs, they have tried to swipe bits of clapboard. They have snapped photos, peered in windows, yearned to climb the front stairs that the killer climbed, to touch the doorjambs Lizzie touched. They have knocked, begged for tours, and been turned away.

No more. Next Aug. 4, the 104th anniversary of the murders, the owners of the house plan to open the doors to the Lizzie Borden House bed and breakfast. "I'll just be pleased to be there," said Carole Carter, a retired Postal Service worker from Studio City, Calif., who has reserved a room for the opening of the house. "Even if she was guilty, she was a spirited person. I admire her, in a way."

Martha McGinn spent part of her childhood in the house, sleeping in the small room that had been Emma Borden's. When her grandmother died and left the house to her and business partner Ronald Evans, they decided to open it to the public. Perhaps growing up in the house innoculated her against the willies. McGinn said she thought living here was "cool."

She smiles as she tells ghost stories: footsteps heard where no human had tread, the sounds of furniture being rearranged, dogs who sit and whine but refuse to go up the front stairs, the imprint of a head left on the pillow of an otherwise unmussed bed, the cleaning lady who in the 1960s claimed there were bloodstains on the woodwork that would yield to no cleanser, the door connecting Lizzie's bedroom with Abby's and Andrew's that mysteriously opens and closes.

McGinn cheerfully lists the eerie coincidences linking her family with the Borden murders. She was born Aug. 4, 1954. Her brother Jack was born Aug. 4, 1958. Her grandparents were married Aug. 4, 1923, bought this house on Aug. 4, 1948.

The neighborhood has changed since 1892. The McGinn family business, the Leary Press, abuts the house; a bus station is across the street and a housing complex stands next door. But the interior of the house — though in various stages of repair — is largely unaltered.

Borden aficionados who have studied crime scene photographs will recognize the Victorian woodwork and molding. The wall-to-wall carpeting is gone, but the curved front stairs, thick with a century's worth of paint, are intact.

Here are the narrow, dark back stairs — up which Lizzie called to maid Bridget Sullivan, "Come down quick! Father's dead. Someone came in and killed him;" Bridget's attic room, where she was sleeping off the mutton; the basement, where the handleless hatchet was discovered. Here is the sitting room, where Andrew Borden's body was photographed after the crime, a jacket stuffed under his head.

And here is the famous guest room, where the unfortunate Mrs. Borden was found, face down between bed and bureau, hairpiece hacked off, bloodstained cap nearby.

"This is our most requested room," says McGinn. So far, some 150 people have clamored for reservations to sleep here — from as far away as Texas and Germany.

Pam Sheldon of Middlebury, Conn., a lifelong Borden buff, is planning to be married in the house on August 4th, 1996. "I'll probably be too excited to sleep," said Sheldon. The couple will spend one night in the guest room — in a replica of the bed Abby Borden was making when she was killed — and a second night in the adjoining room that was Lizzie's bedroom.

Some Fall River residents find the whole thing peculiar. "That's the last place I'd want to go to sleep," said Florence Brigham, 95, whose mother-in-law was a character witness for Lizzie Borden at the trial. Her late husband recalled eating cookies Lizzie Borden baked.

For years, said Brigham, a former curator of the Fall River Historical Society, the murders were not discussed in polite society. "In my day, it was very hushed up." But today a Chamber of Commerce brochure gives Lizzie top billing. Chamber director Robert Boisselle sees her doing for Fall River what witches did for Salem. Once people get here, he says, they will see all the area has to offer.

"If it takes Lizzie to get them here — if she's the hook — so be it," said Boisselle.

The Historical Society houses the world's largest collection of Borden memorabilia (including the dinner pail from which Lizzie ate while imprisoned, the bloodstained dusting cap and bedspread, hair and blood samples). Curator Michael Martins says Borden souvenirs — books, T-shirts, posters, mugs — account for 50 percent of gift shop sales.

As renovations continue at Second Street, McGinn and Evans are trying to get the details right. A hat box from McWhirr's, the old Fall River department store where Lizzie was said to be an ardent shoplifter, will sit in Lizzie's room.

Guests will lounge on a replica of the black horsehair settee on which Andrew Borden died and dine at a table much like the one on which the corpses were laid for an autopsy.

There will be limits, however, to the authenticity. No mutton will be served for breakfast.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Versatile, tasty chilies can be decorative too

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Their culinary qualities are found world wide; they produce red pigments used in numerous products; they possess medicinal properties that can ease aching joints; and they are used as a decoration. What can provide all of this? Chile peppers. From the mild bell to the painfully fiery habanero, these intriguing peppers have much to offer.

Benge-Frost

Related to tomatoes, potatoes and eggplants, the family tree of the pepper is very interesting. Peppers belong to the Solanaceae or Nightshade family and the pepper genus is called Capsicum. In the Capsicum genus (related group of plants), there are 20-30 separate species. There are five domesticated species, and literally dozens of varieties within a species and hundreds of cultivars (cultivated varieties). In other words, there are lots of pepper varieties.

Not all peppers are hot, but that's the first thought that comes to mind. The fiery heat source for chile peppers is a chemical called capsaicin, which is produced by glands at the junction of the pepper wall and tissue that holds the seeds. Capsaicin will be more concentrated at this region. It isn't the seeds that provide the hot, but the tissue next to the seeds. If you have a tender mouth, avoid this part of the chile.

The heat in a chile has been rated on a scale called Scoville. Each unit of the scale represents 100. Based on the Scoville scale, peppers have been given a rating from zero to 10, with 10 being the hottest. These ratings are rather subjective and will vary and overlap with many factors, but it's the best way we've got to establish a heat rating.

To give you an idea of the heat ratings of peppers, take a look at this:

RATING

10 - approximately 20,000-80,000 Scoville units - Tabasco, Habanero varieties
9 - 15,000-20,000 units, Cayenne
8 - 10,000-15,000 units, Chiltepin, Jalapeno, Serrano
7 - 7,500-10,000 units, Floral Gem
6 - 5,000-7,500 units, Sandia, Cascabel, Rocotillo
5 - 2,500-5,000 units, Fresno, Mirasol
4 - 1,000-2,500 units, No. 6-4, Pasilla, Ancho
3 - 500-1,000 units, Big Jim, Rio Grande, Banana
2 - 200-500 units, Anaheim
1 - 100-200 units, Cherry, Pimento
0 - no units, Bell

Popularity of the pepper has climbed continually over the last 20 years, along with the popularity of Mexican food. Not only do they taste good, but they are full of vitamins C and A, low in calories and add quite a lot of taste and punch to foods.

These are a few of the various types of peppers you may encounter in the market, restaurant or garden:

■ Anaheim: The Anaheim was developed in California about 1900 from seeds carried from New Mexico. The name, Anaheim, is often used as a generic name for all green chile; however, it is one of the mildest of green chilies. This type of pepper accounts for more than 50 percent of the chilies grown in the U.S. Some of the Anaheim cultivars are (1) No. 6-4, a commonly used long green chile with heat that ranges from mild to medium hot; (2) NuMex Big Jim, a large mild green chile that's only slightly hotter than Anaheim, and that has a pod about 12 inches long; (3) Rio Grande, a medium hot green chile; and (4) Sandia, a smaller and hotter chile than any of the other Anaheim cultivars. It most closely resembles the first domesticated chilies.

■ Ancho is a 4-inch wide, fat and familiar dried black pod also known as Mulato and Chile Negro, the most commonly used chile in Mexico. "Ancho" means wide in Spanish, but in its fresh form, it is referred to as Poblano. In its dried form, it is commonly used in sauces, and in its fresh form, it is often used in chile rellenos.

■ Cascabel resembles a cherry pepper, but is far more pungent. In Spanish the name means "jingle bell," and it gets this name from the rattling sound of seeds inside the dried pod.

■ Cayenne is one of the hottest chilies known and is grown primarily in Asia and India, with smaller amounts in Mexico and the U.S. Wrinkled and dried, the cayenne pod can range from 2 to 12 inches long and is generally used in the dried form.

■ Chiltepin is the tiny peppers found growing wild in the Southwest U.S. to South America on perennial bushes. Other names of this pepper include bird pepper, chile mosquito and chilipequin.

■ Habanero is one of the hottest chilies in the world. These bright yellow and orange fruits come from the Caribbean and the Yucatan Peninsula. Sometimes called the Scotch Bonnet because of its shape, this chile has a truly unique flavor to match its heat.

■ Pasilla is often confused with the ancho because of the black color of the dried pod. Pasilla are long, slender pods, 7- to 12-inches long. This pepper is often used in the chocolate-flavored sauces called "moles."

■ Rocotillo is a small chile (about 1 inch) that is used in meat, stew and seafood dishes. It is the primary chile used in the French islands of the Caribbean.

■ Serrano is the primary hot ingredient of the fresh salsas of Mexico. It has a 2-inch long pod, and both the fresh green and red forms are used in cooking. These pods are often used in stir-fry.

There are others, but these give you an idea of the variety of chilies we have to choose from. One of the very best chilies of the Anaheim, long green chile group, is the No. 6-4, which will be used at the Chile Ristra Workshops, scheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. When left on the plant, long green chilies (as well as many of the other chilies) will turn a brilliant red. In this mature red stage, chilies can be left out in the sun to dry and then be used later in sauces and as seasonings. This method of food preservation has been used for decades in the Mexican and Indian cultures of Mexico, New Mexico and Texas. When tied in a string, these chilies are referred to as chile ristras. The strings of brilliant red pods decorate many a front porch in the autumn sun.

You can learn to make your own chile ristra in one of these workshops. Chilies, Indian corn and other decorations, and everything else needed to make chile ristras will be provided. Extension home economists Carol Arndt and Marian Farr will demonstrate and conduct the workshops.

Workshops are scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Tuesday and 8:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday. Cost is $22 per person. To register contact the Midland County Extension office (2445 E. Business Loop, right beside Midland County Exhibit Building) or Ector County Extension office (1010 E. 8th St. in Odessa). Registration deadline is 5 p.m. Monday. For more information call 335-3071 or 687-1351.

Little-known shellfish gaining popularity

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — Langostinos, which look like shrimp and taste like lobster or crab, are starting to show up on restaurant menus and in supermarkets across America.

Less than 5 inches in size, the langostino has a pair of lobsterlike front pincers and a tail containing a bite-size portion of meat. They are caught between May and September in the cold waters off Chile's coast, then processed, cooked and frozen within 12 hours.

The Fort Worth Dallas Ballet brings Balanchine's "Serenade" to Midland High School Auditorium Saturday, Oct. 7. Curtain is at 7 p.m. Tickets to the Ballet Midland-sponsored event may be purchased at the Midland Park Mall Information Booth. For more information call 687-0699.
Below, Maria Terezia Balogh dances "Serenade" with the Fort Worth Dallas Ballet.

Since its New York City premiere on June 9, 1934, Balanchine's "Serenade" has found its way into the repertoires of numerous companies in the United States as well as abroad. " 'Serenade' is one of the most widely performed classical ballets in this country at this point in time," said J.J. Wooten, Fort Worth Dallas Ballet company manager.

The company, under the artistic direction of former New York City Ballet principal dancer Paul Mejia, brings its production of this popular ballet to Midland High School Auditorium Saturday, Oct. 7. Sponsored locally by Ballet Midland, the evening of dance begins at 7 p.m. Tickets may be purchased at Midland Park Mall Information Booth.

"It really is breathtaking," Ms. Wooten said. "'Serenade' is sort of a story of blinding love. The dark angel comes in and steals the hero. The principal female dancer, Maria Thomas, is sort of a heroine. The dark angel is Maria Terezia Balogh."

Choreographed by Balanchine, the ballet features Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings."

"We are almost exclusively a Balanchine company," said Ms. Wooten, recalling a story she recently heard about Balanchine when he first arrived in the United States and "Serenade," which was originally presented by his students.

"He had very little to work with except the dancers themselves, so he was apt to incorporate as many dancers as he could find," she said. "One day when they were rehearsing 'Serenade,' and the girl playing the principal role fell. He thought it looked wonderful and kept that as the major part of the ballet. It became the climax of the ballet."

Also on the program will be "Brandenburg II," which was performed by the Company at the Dallas Morning News Dance Festival Labor Day Weekend, and contemporary dances set to the music of George Gershwin called "Who Cares."

" 'Who Cares,' since it is contemporary, will add to the diversity of the program," Ms. Wooten said.

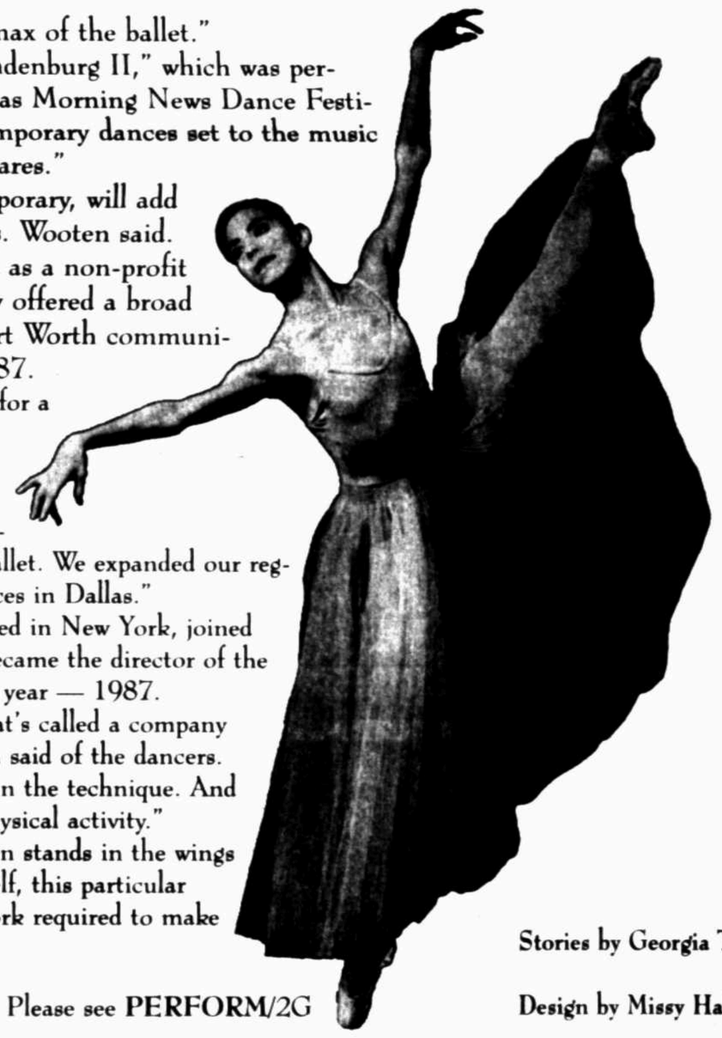

Formed in 1961 and incorporated as a non-profit organization in 1964, the Company offered a broad range of dance experience to the Fort Worth community. Then, Dallas Ballet closed in 1987.

"That kind of left Dallas with a void for a good classical dance company," Ms. Wooten said. "We began to build a broad range of supporters in Dallas, and they have expanded to become Dallas Supporters of Fort Worth Dallas Ballet. We expanded our regular season to include three performances in Dallas."

Mejia, who was born in Peru and raised in New York, joined the Company as artistic director and became the director of the Fort Worth School of Ballet that same year — 1987.

"We start every work-day off with what's called a company class given by Paul Mejia," Ms. Wooten said of the dancers. "It's an hour and a half long exercises in the technique. And it really is a grueling class. Grueling physical activity."

As the company manager, Ms. Wooten stands in the wings during productions. Not a dancer herself, this particular view has taught her much about the work required to make ballet look effortless.

Crimes of the Heart

Babe Mágrath will be out on bail Friday. She's charged with shooting her husband in the stomach. After her release, she can be found sitting around the kitchen table with sisters Lenny and Meg, who survey the disasters in their own lives, as they attempt to help their younger sister.

The address? Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"'Crimes of the Heart' is a charming play about sisters, and I think everybody who has a sister will recognize these women," said Shawn Watson, who is directing the comedy. "In fact, my sister is all three of these women. I think most people's sisters are all three of these women."

The Midland Community Theatre-University of Texas of the Permian Basin production, which is sponsored by Mobil, is onstage Oct. 6-21. Ticket prices are $8 for Sunday and Thursday performances and $10 for Friday and Saturday shows.

"This represents a co-production effort between UTPB and MCT," Ms. Watson said. "It's our joint venture, and the production class at UTPB is involved not only in the acting, but in the stage management and the technical side of the production. We're very pleased."

The comedy is rated PG. Curtain is at 8 p.m. except for Sunday 2:30 p.m. matinees. For reservations or more information call the

PERFORM: Ballet comes to Midland

(From 1G)

"You have these beautiful creatures that are just captivating when they are on stage," Ms. Wooten said. "And then to see them run out the wings after having that physical exertion and also the adrenalin rush of being onstage. It's obvious when they come off heaving and out of breath, what an incredible physical exertion it is.

"I'd put any one of our ballerinas against any football player you've got. They're incredible athletes."

The Company has shared the spotlight with a football player — Herschel Walker.

"Herschel Walker performed with us with Maria Terezia Balogh," Ms. Wooten said. "It was one performance several years ago. He was wonderful.

"Actually, several football players get involved with ballet because of the stretching and the different movement. It can increase their flexibility and also their strength and endurance."

Mejia has added 30 works to the company's repertoire since 1987, including 13 world premieres and 16 Fort Worth premieres of his own ballets including "The Nutcracker" and "Cinderella." Other works include 11 Fort Worth premiere stagings of ballets by Balanchine and Peter Martins and 11 revivals of Balanchine and Bournonville works.

"We're a quick-growing regional touring company with the regular season in Fort Worth and the expanded season in Dallas," Ms. Wooten said. "We're also performing a week-long tour of 'The Nutcracker' in San Antonio, Corsicana and also Nacadoches."

Five years ago, the total number of performances the company was producing in a year was between 21 and 22, said David Mallette, executive director.

"By expanding into Dallas and by committing ourselves to four or five weeks of touring annually, we've more than doubled that number of performances," Mallette said. "This year we're going to be doing over 50 performances."

The Fort Worth Dallas Ballet has made a "big" commitment to touring, Mallette said. "At this point, we're the only Texas ballet company that devotes a significant portion of its season to touring.

"From that respect, we're really happy to be coming back to the Midland-Odessa area. It's been three or four years since we performed in Midland."

The company has no desire to undermine the dance that is ongoing in the West Texas area. "What we hope to do from a professional standpoint is to enhance the work that is already going on," Mallette said.

While in town, the Fort Worth Dallas Ballet will offer a master class Saturday morning. The class will be taught by JaredRedick and Shannon Parsley. For more information call 687-0699.

At a time when many ballet companies are experiencing financial difficulties, Fort Worth Dallas Ballet is thriving.

"We're very fortunate to have the incredible base of supporters in Fort Worth," Ms. Wooten said. "Fort Worth is a town that centers around the arts, and they believe in keeping them alive."

PLAY: Cole Theatre to present comedy

theater's box office, 682-4111.

The Magrath sisters are played by Pam Keel as Lenny; Tracy Goodwin as Meg; and Christie Flynn as Babe.

"Each one of them represents a way in which women can mess up their lives," said Ms. Watson, who teaches dramatic literature and theater arts at UTPB. "One of them doesn't have a man. One of them has too many men. And the other one has the wrong fellow.

"They find that the way for them to get out of their individual dilemma is to turn to one another, and that's the charm of the play for me. They find out that because they have sisters, they are not alone in the world. And I think that's the real bottom line about sisters. As long as you have a sister, you're never going to be alone."

Also in the cast are Peter Simon as Doc Porter; Kellye Manning as Chick; and Quentin Taylor as Barnette Lloyd.

"The cast is so good," Ms. Watson said. "It's a dream cast as far as I'm concerned. The women are wonderful actresses. I think each one of them brings to the role a real insight into her particular character.

'It's a dream cast as far as I'm concerned. The women are wonderful actresses. I think each one of them brings to the role a real insight into her particular character.'

— Shawn Watson

"We've had a great time in the rehearsal process because the actresses are so inventive and so original that they feed off one another's energy and create new depths to the characters with almost each rehearsal. And we must not forget the men. They are ably supported by the men in the cast."

Set design is by Paul Fiorella with the light and sound design being created by Edward W. Taylor. The costumes are being fashioned by Mae Dawson. Set construction is by Greg Alexander. Stage manager is Deborah Morton.

"The set is going to look like everybody's grandma's kitchen," Ms. Watson said. "And we hope that we will adequately capture the feeling of Hazlehurst, Miss."

Ms. Watson's last directing effort at MCT was "Rainmaker."

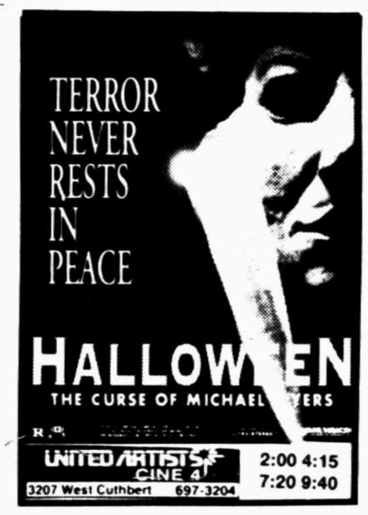

"It was a delightful experience, and this is even better for me," Ms. Watson said. "The cast of women that I'm working with is a real challenge. There's no excuses. If this show is not super, it's going to be the director's fault and not the actors' fault. That's a very exciting challenge to have."

Although the play is a comedy, it has its poignant moments. "The play is very funny in the conflicts that they have with one another which date from their childhood are handled very comically," Ms. Watson said. "But the resolution of the conflicts are quite touching and very meaningful."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A financial situation will stabilize, giving you the freedom to splurge now and then. Introductions made during the December holidays will result in exciting new professional and personal unions. 1996 brings a once-in-a-lifetime employment opportunity. Be prepared to change residences next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: actress Julie Andrews, baseball great Rod Carew, actor Randy Quaid, actress Stella Stevens.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Put more zip into your daily routine. A family conference will help you decide on the best way to aid a parent. A meeting with a social worker could also prove helpful. Be open-minded.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A Sunday sermon or impassioned plea proves inspiring. Get in touch with old friends. A project is in the works that could substantially increase your income. Be wary of love on the rebound.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A change of scene helps everyone relax and unwind. A young person is ready to leave the nest. Cut the apron strings without further ado. Passing on overheard gossip coul backfire. Keep your own counsel.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Depending on how you view things, a newcomer is either a breath of fresh air or a disruptive influence. Look inward and decide what you really want. Romance should be in full bloom soon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Use your detecting skills to get to the root of long-standing problems. Hold a candid discussion with all the parties involved. Although someone's open admiration is flattering, you may not be interested. Use tact.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Easy does it today. Major decisions should be postponed. Use common sense when dealing with difficult relatives. Heated arguments will get you nowhere. Adopting an indirect approach may convince someone you are right.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Discretion will help you tiptoe through a romantic minefield today. Avoid bringing up topics that will cause distress. A little rebellion is good for the soul. Read a best seller or watch a popular video tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your career is about to receive a welcomed boost. Dress fashionably to make a good first impression on a member of the opposite sex. New friends find your company stimulating. Put your best foot forward.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel, the media and long-distance communications claim your attention. Getting your household and wardrobe organized will make you more efficient during the work week. Displaying a caring attitude salvages a deteriorating romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The emphasis now is on promoting greater harmony within your family or neighborhood. Spend time just having fun with your children or siblings. Those with creative talents will eventually find their right niche.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Several important projects require your attention. Running errands brings you into contact with old friends. Make plans to get together. Someone wants to woo you. Avoid sending out mixed signals. Say "yes" or "no."

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A family reunion could be a source of excitement. If you want to learn new skills, consider taking a course in cooking or auto repair. Spiritual growth takes priority over strictly personal pleasures.

The bidding:

Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♠

There is an ever-growing body of bridge literature teaching you how to execute various technical plays that every competent declarer knows by heart. However, they do not always explain properly when to employ those tactics.

With only three-card support for hearts, North first made a waiting bid in diamonds, then leaped to game after partner rebid hearts. South had no further ambitions.

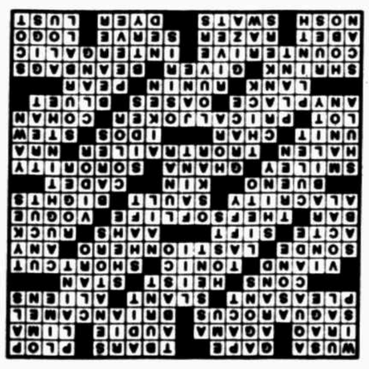

West led a low spade, declarer played low from dummy then jettisoned the jack of spades under East's queen to set up a finesse position in the suit. East returned a trump, taken in dummy, and a club was ducked to West.

Back came another trump, and a second club was ducked, completing the defensive book. West persevered with a trump, removing dummy's last fang, and declarer was now reduced to a finesse in either spades or diamonds to get rid of the losing club. It was a guess that declarer could not make correctly, so the contract went down two.

Had declarer stopped to count tricks before playing to the opening lead, the winning line might have become obvious. Declarer has six trump tricks, two diamonds and a spade, nine tricks in all. The sure way to secure a 10th is via a club ruff, and to accomplish that declarer cannot afford to let the enemy play trumps.

Declarer should win the ace of spades at trick one and immediately lead a club. Now declarer is a tempo ahead, and no matter what the defenders do declarer will always have time to ruff the third club and nail down the fulfilling trick.

BASIN ROOTS

BRIEFING

The bull wheel of the Santa Rita replica at the Petroleum Museum.

Drilling improves

The rig count dropped slightly this week from 125 to 123 in the Basin, but it is ahead of last year at 109. Activity in Leas was heavy with 18 rigs working.

The U.S. rig count was down with only 1000 rigs turning, compared to 1136 last year.

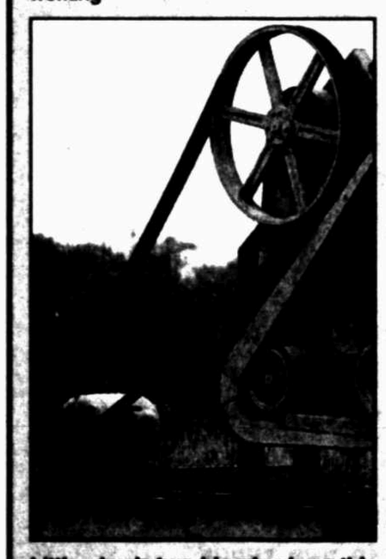

Well service rigs

The number of working workover rigs dropped slightly in August down two points to 66 percent, from 68 percent in July.

West Texas continues to be the number one region for working rigs with an inventory of 1250 rigs available. Total working rigs in August was 797 working in August, compared to 818 in July.

The number of working rigs for other parts of the oilpatch included: Mid-Continent with 845, which remained unchanged at 75 percent of its approximately 1100 inventory. The Rocky Mountains had 230 working rigs, for 55 percent utilization, while the Texas Gulf Coast and South Louisiana, which maintain smaller fleets had utilization rates of 52 percent.

Canada's utilization rate, which is based on approximately 650 rigs, was up slightly, from 72 percent to 74 percent, as 479 rigs were shown working

Crude rallies

Crude oil prices for the week, faltered, early in the week, losing a quarter then rallied in mid-week picking up a quarter on Thursday to finish the four days at $17.76. This was off last year's mark by only 40 cents.

The posted price Thursday was $16.50, the same price for this time last year. Inventories evaluations and re-evaluations have been listed at the reason for the on again off again oil prices.

DOE post filled

Kyle Simpson, a native of Wichita Falls and a former executive of Coastal Corp. and Brown & Root has been named Associate Deputy Secretary of Energy Programs at the U.S. Department of Energy, and will serve as the executive Secretary of DOE's offices of Fossil Energy, Energy Efficiency, Renewable Fuels, Nuclear Energy, the Energy Information Agency and Power Marketing Administration.

Simpson has held positions with the American Gas Association, Interstate Natural Gas Pipeline Association, Energy Council, Interstate Oil Compact Commission. He was Energy Coordinator for former Texas Governor Mark White, and was a top advisor to the Clinton for President team.

Dirt washing machine cleans up oilpatch

■ Remediation system uses non-toxic chemical process for cleaning oil spills and tank bottoms.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

A machine that actually washes hydrocarbon contaminated soil is expected to put a new twist on environmental remediation in the oilfield.

Designed and Built by Texas Incinerator, 10 of the machines have been ordered by an environmental company in Nevada for [illegible] refineries and service stations, but George Hancock expects the system to have a big impact in the oil industry.

"We expect about 30-40 percent of the total machines we will make will be devoted to the oil industry," said Hancock, whose company has been building soil incinerators for the past six years. "I think we will see more demand for the soil washing system than we will for the thermal, simply because of the complex permitting associated with the thermal units."

He said the washing system could replace thermal units in about 60 percent of the applications. And, while the machine which can process 150 tons per hour, and actually reclaims the hydrocarbon in the soil, won't pay for its total cost with reclaimed hydrocarbons Hancock says it will come close. He said the total cost to clean soil by washing was about $30 per ton, compared to up to $80 per ton to incinerate it.

Called the SRS 15-T, or Hydrocleaner, the dirt washing machine is the marriage of two companies and two technologies. Swan Industries of Odessa came up with the patented, non-toxic, non-flammable, chemical concept with a high Ph, surfactant and wetting agent. Texas Incinerator Co. designed the mechanical system to make it work.

The system works by shredding and crushing excavated soils, removal of debris then mixing it with a preheated solution which releases the hydro-

Collins & Ware sell position to Vastar in Lodgepole play

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Vastar Resources Inc. has entered into an agreement with Midland-based Collins & Ware for the exploration rights and a 55 percent working interest in 105,000 acres in the Lodgepole play of eastern Montana. Terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

The Lodgepole play, which was kicked off by a Conoco recompletion is on trend with the Dickinson and Eland field discoveries in North Dakota is one of the hottest plays in the industry.

"The Lodgepole play is one of the most exciting plays to emerge in recent history in the lower 48 states," said Dave Johnson, Senior Vice President of Vastar Exploration and Land. "We are pleased to obtain a significant position in this play."

Ted Collins called the Lodgepole the biggest boom in recent history. "It's a horserace. There is intensive leasing 100 miles away from the heart of the play, and leases near Dickenson, South Dakota where the play originated are selling for $3-$4,000 an acre."

Collins and Ware became involved in the play through Meridian Oil Co. who owns a checker board interest leasehold in the area. They will work on another project with Meridian of equally the same size while Vastar will shoot approximately 240 square miles of 3-D seismic during the last quarter of this year and the first quarter of next year, with drilling to begin next summer.

The Lodgepole play was kicked off near Dickenson S.D. in 1993, when Conoco was drilling a deeper Red River test to 12,500 and raninto the prolific Lodgepole formation at about 10,000.

Ted Collins said the Willisonton Basin is the largest sedimentary basin in the U.S. and the Lodgepole formation is proving to be one of the most prolific and biggest trends in the Basin.

Wells in the play are being produced at 1,000 to 1,500 bopd, with some wells producing as high as 5,000 bopd and an allowable for 13,000 being given for one well.

Among the other Permian Basin operators involved in the trend are BTA and Baytech.

Amerada Hess, Marathon, Shell, Vastar, Conoco and Texaco are the majors involved so far.

The price paid by Vastar to Collins & Ware was not revealed, but according to the Rocky Mountain Oil Journal, the rumored price was between $5 and $6 million.

The Journal said interest in this portion of Montana, which is 100 miles northwest of the Dickinson, North Dakota origins of the play, has been intensified as a result of the Montana State Lease Sale.

The other major oil company that bought a position in the play was Shell Oil, who acquired Lodgepole acreage from Armstrong Operating in North Dakota. Those who follow the play say Vastar will not be the last to buy a position in the play, which promises to be the hottest thing since the Austin Chalk.

Big jack shortage hits

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

During the boom years there were 260 pumpjack manufacturers in the U.S., today there are just five on the whole North American continent.

That shortage of manufacturers, the fact that many of the older units have gone to the scrapyard, and a new window of opportunity has opened for larger sized pumps has created a shortage of big pumping units that could have a profound impact on the production side of the business.

The shortage which became apparent about eight months ago, has been caused in part by the fact that, aging waterfloods new CO2 projects are requiring more and more larger units to move more fluid.

When it comes to moving large volumes of fluid, operators have three choices: the conventional long stroke 640s and over, the Rotaflex belt pump and downhole electric submersibles.

"We are getting a lot of our business from CO2 floods, because there is more fluid to move, and as the window of opportunity opens even wider for CO2 projects, the demand for big pumping units will be even greater," says Warren Bradshaw, president of Western Gear, which services and sells used pumping units and just recently began selling the LeGrand pumping unit from Canada.

LeGrand and Ampscot are the only two Canadian manufacturers left, while Lufkin, American International and Jensen remain in the U.S.

"LeGrand has never been a factor in the U.S. market until now," said Bradshaw. "The last thing that was needed in the U.S. market was another pumping

PLS sells interest in oil TradeBank

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

PLS Inc., a Midland-based, publishing, marketing and advisory firm has announced that it will spin off its TradeBank line to a Dallas group.

New owners will be: Mike Allen, a former consultant to PLS and Steve Fitzgerald, current director of sales for the company. Ron Wise, founder of the company said the sale of TradeBank for an undisclosed sum would provide the data company a needed degree of autonomy, while bringing new venture capital to PLS.

TradeBank, which maintains a database of over 15,000 records and records ownership interests in various fields, was formed in 1993 to help oil companies facilitate like-kind exchanges, trades and sales and today is used by more than 20 oil companies, including majors and independents. In addition to the database, the company also maintains a trade list of properties that have been targeted for trade.

Mike Allen, president and chief operating officer for TradeBank said the restructure would alleviate many of the concerns of clients who had expressed concern that PLS' other public services and data bases would overshadow TradeBank. PLS, which is patterned after the real estate industry's Multiple Listing Service, was organized in 1986 to provide the oil industry a centralized service for buying and selling oil properties.

"This transaction allows TradeBank to more forward in a disciplined and aggressive manner without the distractions of other PLS products," said Allen in a statement to the press. Steve Fitzgerald said that under new ownership, he expected membership in TradeBank to double in 1996.

Allen said TradeBank would still use PLS resources for marketing and advertising services, but it will be run as a separate company. Ron Wise said he was happy with the transaction, since the company had long been studying various restructuring options for its different product lines.

TransTexas prevails in suit

HOUSTON (SWN)—TransTexas Gas Corporation says that a jury in the 234th District Court of Harris County, Texas has returned a verdict in favor of its parent, TransAmerican Natural Gas Corporation, in a suit brought against TransAmerican by Alameda Corporation and in which TransTexas had assumed liability.

Alameda, a private entity controlled by Oscar S. Wyatt Jr., Chairman of Coastal Corporation, had alleged that TransAmerican breached a duty to market natural gas on behalf of Alameda and sought damages in excess of $20 million. The claim concerned a 1990 settlement, in TransAmerican's favor, of a take-or-pay dispute with El Paso Natural Gas for $360 million. The court had previously granted a motion for summary judgment in favor of TransAmerican dismissing Alameda's claim to any portion of the settlement with El Paso.

Richard Bianchi, TransTexas General Counsel said, "We have long maintained that this lawsuit was totally without merit."

carbons in a treatment chamber.

Separated hydrocarbons are continuously removed from the to a waste oil tank. At the other end of the treating chamber, which continually agitates the sludge material, solids are discharged into a vibrating screen to remove the excess solution which goes back into the treating process. A hydrocyclone removes all the fines and silt.

All of the Hydroclean system are trailer mounted and require a three-man crew to operate. The system is powered by electricity, natural gas or propane.

In addition to the recovery of hydrocarbons, Texas Incinerator says the advantages of the system include: lower operating costs, portability, a sealed process to prevent escape of vapors, and ability to handle soils with a high percentage of hydrocarbons.

Hancock said the system could have wide application in cleaning up tank bottoms and oil spills, and works well on everything from gasoline to crude oil. "The only thing it does not work well on is creosote, but we are working on that."

He said his company was already getting inquiries from Japan, Europe, South America and Russia. The units are fabricated by sub-contractors throughout the Basin and assembled by Texas Incinerator at its yard in Midland.

unit manufacturer."

Now thanks to NAFTA which has reduced tariffs and red tape, and the exchange rate of 70 cents U.S. for one Canadian dollar, the Canadian manufacturer which has been in business since 1874 has found a place for its big pumpjacks in the U.S. market.

Lufkin, which accounts for more than 60 percent of the pumpjacks in the U.S., and probably worldwide is still the king of the roost for all size pumping units and probably has enough capacity to supply the world, but that capacity has not been able to work off the demand for larger pumping units.

When it comes to moving large volumes of fluid, usually 800-1,500 barrels per day, operators have three choices: the conventional long stroke 640s and over, the Rotaflex belt pump and downhole electric submersibles. According to Bradshaw the conventional long stroke pumpjack is still the most economical to purchase, and the weight of the rod string determines when a submersible is used.

A 640 will sell for $48,000 to $52,000 while a 900 Rotaflex sells for $75,000, on location. Even though the Rotaflex has a longer stroke at 220 inches compared to 168 for the 640, the Rotaflex is able to make about 4 1/2 strokes per minute while the conventional pumpjack can make 12 strokes per minute.

Mike Huff, Lufkin sales and service manager in Midland, says the economics and dependability of the conventional large pumpjack has put it in short supply.

"We noticed that the supply was beginning to dry up about six to eight months ago, now they are getting harder and harder to find and the cost of used is approaching the cost of new. Used prices were about 60 percent of new. Now they are 80-85 percent." He said a new Lufkin 640 sells for about $52,000 compared to $40-45,000 for a used one." The LeGrand sells for about $48,000 installed.

Another thing that has complicated the shortage is the new desire of majors to purchase used pumpjacks. "At one time, major oil companies would not even entertain the thought of a used pumping unit," said Bradshaw. "Now, it is often the first choice."

Said Huff: "Lufkin builds a Maytag, and sometimes I think we are building a dinosaur. If you take care of a unit it will last you 40-50 years. I think the buyers of used equipment are aware of that."

"There has not been much of a market increase for normal sized units," says Bradshaw, "because the market has kept pretty much in balance with plugged wells and new wells. It is the big units that are seeing all the demand. We are counting on our LeGrand to help meet that demand." He said the unit was rugged and designed for ease of maintenance. When the shortage appeared, I wondered why nobody was importing the LeGrand, so I decided to do it ourselves." Western Gear acquired distribution rights for the Canadian unit in all of New Mexico, the Permian Basin and South Texas.

Huff said he expected the demand for larger units to increase even more as more fields go to CO2.

During the boom Lufkin was geared to produce 200 units a week, it is now producing 50 a week. "It would take two or three months, but if we needed to we could get back to producing 200 a week," said Huff. Lufkin also operates plants in Canada, Indonesia, Argentina, Venezuela and Turkey.

Benton reports prolific increase

CARPINTERIA, Calif.—(SWN)--Benton Oil and Gas Company announced that oil production from the Uracoa oil field located in Monagas, Venezuela has continued to increase and is currently at a level of 17,000 barrels of oil per day (BOPD). This compares to 6,700 BOPD approximately one year ago.

Benton-Vinccler, the Company's 80% owned Venezuelan subsidiary, is conducting the reactivation and development of the South Monagas Unit under an operating service agreement with Lagoven, S.A., an affiliate of the national oil company, Petroleos de Venezuela, S.A. (PDVSA). The Unit consists of three oil fields: Uracoa, Bombal and Tucupita.

The Company stated that production from the Uracoa field is currently from 36 wells which consist of 15 successfully reactivated wells and 21 new wells. To fully develop the field, an additional 65 wells are expected to be drilled over the next several years. The number of rigs working in the field has increased and currently consists of two drilling rigs and one workover rig. In addition, the second phase of production facilities, with a design capacity of 20,000 BOPD, was recently completed and is fully operational. When combined with existing facilities, total production capacity is 30,000 BOPD. Earlier this year, a $2 million, 2-D seismic survey was conducted over the South Monagas Unit. This survey is currently aiding in determining drilling locations. A $4 million, 3-D seismic survey has commenced over the Uracoa Field, with initial processing done on a real-time basis.

Benton Oil and Gas also announced that at its annual meeting of stockholders on July 26, 1995, Messrs. A.E. Benton, Michael B. Wray, Bruce M. McIntyre, William H. Gumma and Richard W. Fetzner were elected directors to serve terms of one year. The stockholders also approved an amendment to the Company's directors stock option plan and approved the appointment of Deloitte & Touche LLP as the Company's auditors for 1995.

Benton Oil and Gas Company, headquartered in Carpinteria, is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company which has domestic operations in the Gulf Coast region of Louisiana and international operations in the eastern region of Venezuela and the West Siberia region of Russia. Benton's common stock is traded on the Nasdaq National Market System (symbol: BNTN).

Drillers see better days

(NYT) —Boom times seem to be here again for the oil and gas drillers.

Drilling in the Gulf of Mexico is back at the levels of its heyday in 1990, when oil and gas prices surged because of fears that the Persian Gulf war would lead to shortages.

That rush to drill collapsed as oil and gas prices fell. Oil plunged to $14 a barrel in late 1993 from a 1990 high of $40. And investors who had bet on the volatile stocks of oil service companies took sizable losses.

Now, some analysts and industry executives say, the current upturn is likely to be different form the last one. The key, they said, is that the drilling boom is not being fueled by a spike in the price of oil and gas.

"What we're seeing is activity not being driven by commodity prices but by a fundamental change in the economics of drilling," said Mark Urness, an analyst who follows oil service companies for Salomon Brothers.

Although their stock prices are reaching peak levels, he is recommending such companies as Global Marine, which traded Wednesday at $5.125, off 12.5 cents; Noble Drilling, $7.625, off 6.25 cents; Tidewater, $24.625, up 12.5 cents, and Ensco International, $15.625, unchanged.

Kurt Hallead, an oil service analyst for Rodman & Renshaw Inc., is urging investors to buy Sonat Offshore, which traded Wednesday at $28.125, off 12.5 cents, and Global Marine.

"This recovery is taking place in a significantly different environment than in the past," Hallead said. "Oil companies are saying internally that they have to find projects that give them a return on investment at the current level of oil and gas prices."

The price of oil has recovered to about $18 a barrel, well off its highs but at least off the bottom, while gas prices are still in the doldrums, at about $1.50 for a million cubic feet.

Hallead said technological breakthroughs that allow companies to squeeze more reserves from existing fields are behind the current surge in drilling.

David Herasimchuk, the vice president of market development for Global Marine, pointed to a graph during a recent interview at company headquarters in Houston that showed a widening gap between gas production and reserves.

"This gives us the confidence that it's a long-term trend," he said.

Most companies are under growing pressure to replace declining gas reserves. The better technology and growing certainty that a well will pay off are causing companies to hire more rigs than expected.

Instead of drilling for long shots, said Jon Marshall, group vice president of Global Marine, oil and gas companies are taking a more conservative approach to exploration, one that involves hiring rigs to drill from existing platforms in search of smaller deposits that could not be spotted with earlier sounding and imaging technology.

"What's driving the upturn are the itty-bitty fields of one million barrels," Marshall said. "They're finding pockets that they couldn't see before."

Better seismic readings and the ability to image deposits through more advanced computers have greatly lessened the risk of coming up with a dry hole in a developed field.

With wildcat wells, finding a strike of oil or gas in one of five was considered very good indeed. Now its two of three.

Two big utilities merge

ANNAPOLIS MD. (Bloomberg) — Baltimore Gas & Electric Co. said it will buy Potomac Electric Power Co. for $2.9 billion in a stock transaction that will create the nation's ninth-biggest utility.

The companies said the utilities will save $1.3 billion over a 10-year period as they cut more than 1,250 jobs, roughly 10 percent of their work force in the Baltimore and Washington area.

The takeover is the latest and largest in an industry that's been consolidating since Congress mandated in 1992 that states deregulate utilities. That spurred market competition, forcing companies to slash costs.

"This is what had to happen," said Edward Tirello, an analyst with NatWest Securities Corp. "Without a merger, the chances are neither one — particularly Potomac — would have been a survivor."

Utilities need about 2 million customers to survive, Tirello said, and the combined company will serve about 1.8 million electric customers and 530,000 gas customers in Maryland and Washington.

In addition, said Christian Poindexter, chairman and chief executive of Baltimore Gas and soon-to-be head of the new company, combining will keep costs down.

"This enables us to ensure that customers in this big region will have very stable, low prices," he said.

The new company — still unnamed — will have annual revenue of $4.8 billion and assets of more than $15 billion. The only larger metropolitan areas served by single utilities are New York, Los Angeles and Chicago.

In this increasingly competitive industry, where utilities are on the prowl, size is important, Poindexter said.

"That's really why we're making this move right now," Poindexter said. "This positions us well as further consolidation takes place."

The company's headquarters will be in Annapolis, Maryland, though a site has yet to be selected.

The agreement pays a roughly 20 percent premium to Potomac shareholders, who will receive 0.997 share of stock in the new company for each of their shares. Based on Baltimore Gas's recent stock price, the transaction is valued at about $24.80 for each Potomac share.

Potomac's shares rose 1 3/4 to 23 1/4.

Baltimore Gas shareholders will trade in their shares 1-for-1. Shares of Baltimore Gas fell 1 to 25 1/8.

Duff & Phelps analyst Nathan Partain wrote in a report that Baltimore Gas may be paying "too much of a premium" to get into the highly regulated Washington market. Partain lowered his recommendation from "accumulate" to "source of funds," the equivalent of "sell."

Douglas Kimmelman, a vice president at Goldman Sachs and financial advisor to Baltimore Gas, said his client didn't pay too much because the purchase will only hurt earnings slightly in the first year because of merging costs. After that, he said, the acquisition will add to earnings.

"This will help over time," Kimmelman said

Standard & Poor's and Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co. reaffirmed their ratings on Baltimore Gas's debt and preferred stock.

The companies expect shareholder approval early next year and regulatory approval by early 1997. Poindexter will be chief executive of the new company. Ed Mitchell, chairman and chief executive of Potomac Electric, will serve as new company's chairman. A year after the purchase takes place, Poindexter will takeover Mitchell's job.

The company's new board will be made up of 16 people, nine from Baltimore's board and seven from Potomac's.

Industry experts expect utility merger fever to continue. Because of deregulation and competitive pressures, U.S. utilities are hunting for partners before the financially healthy utilities are taken, said Curtis Moulton, a managing director at Standard & Poor's, in a report last week.

NatWest's Tirello said to expect one merger announcement a month. Over the next decade, he said he expects the number of utilities to fall to about 40 from roughly 150 today.

"There's way too many companies," he said. "It's ridiculous."

Last month in Philadelphia, Peco Energy Co. made a hostile $3.8 billion offer for PP&L Resources Inc. PP&L's board rejected the bid earlier this month, setting the stage for a possible tender battle.

Union Electric Co. and Cipsco Inc., meanwhile, last month came to terms in St. Louis on a $1.2 billion merger plan.

Some power companies are looking overseas to compensate for expected slow growth in the U.S. This is especially true in Great Britain, where electric and water utilities have been hot takeover targets.

Mexico reports gas processing of 3.08 billion cubic feet

MEXICO CITY (Bloomberg) — Petroleos Mexicanos, Mexico's state-owned oil monopoly, said it processed 3.08 billion cubic feet a day of natural gas in the first half of the year.

The company didn't provide production figures for the year-ago period for comparison.

Pemex said that with such volume of natural gas, it manufactured 203,000 barrels a day of liquid gas, down 3.8 percent from the year-earlier period. It also manufactured 163,000 b/d of ethane, down 3.6 percent, and 85,000 b/d of gasoline, up 1.2 percent.

To process natural gas, Pemex uses 10 industrial complexes. Five are in the coastal state of Veracruz, three in the southeastern state of Tabasco, one in the southeastern state of Chiapas and another one in the northeastern state of Tamaulipas.

Houston firms promote natural gas transportation

HOUSTON (AP) — In the late 1980s, Charles Rumsey racked up over 100,000 miles driving a plumbing van he had fitted to run on natural gas. Such was Rumsey's start in the natural gas vehicle business.

On a quest to free his employer, Crown Services, from the high fuel prices and long lines that characterized the days of the Arab oil embargo, Rumsey tested and rejiggered equipment through countless breakdowns.

Today, Rumsey is executive vice president of American Natural Gas Power, a small Houston company that is seeking to take its expertise in the compressed natural gas arena nationwide. Crown, a founding shareholder, operates one of the largest private natural gas fleets in Houston, with about 100 vehicles.

American Natural Gas was formed to take advantage of new rules under the 1990 Clean Air Act that require certain fleet vehicles to run on alternatives to conventional gasoline and diesel fuels.

American Natural Gas, which builds and operates compressed natural gas refueling stations, also sells the fuel and converts vehicles from gasoline to compressed natural gas at two conversion centers.

While Rumsey and his partners have come a long way since he sputtered up the steeply graded Houston Ship Channel bridge, building the business remains an uphill battle.

"You have to kiss a lot of frogs before you find a prince," Rumsey quips.

The prospect of using clean, relatively inexpensive natural gas to power public and private vehicles has brought visitors from as far away as Japan and Equatorial Guinea to American Natural Gas' offices. Still, buyers are scarce.

Ultimately, big profits lie in building more stations to market compressed natural gas, but there just aren't enough users yet to justify quickly dotting the map with stations.

"We would like to own a network of well-located public stations and sell fuel," says Wayne D. Johnson, president of American Natural Gas. "Right now, we just don't have enough volume."

American Natural Gas' dilemma is shared by many small-business owners struggling to create a niche market.

The company has worked hard to build an infrastructure of 13 stations in the Houston area. But until regulations governing environmental emissions standards are finalized, fleet operators are hesitant to spend $3,000 on average per vehicle to convert them to natural gas.

In fact, the slow regulatory progress in the United States prompted the formation of Enveco. The Houston company is going overseas to help governments and investors study the feasibility of adopting alternative fuel transportation programs in developing countries.

The company not only undertakes initial studies, but aims to put finished plans in action, lining up funding and project partners.

"A study is nice, but that's a book on the wall," says Jean S. McLane, director of business development at Enveco. "A study that has generated actual business opportunities - that gets people's attention."

Still, the market in developing nations is young, and doing business requires a massive effort involving education, networking and financing.

While both companies face the challenge of making a profit in a developing field, they are working hard to lay a strong foundation for growth.

American Natural Gas recently bought Enfuels Corp. - its primary competitor in Houston - for about $3 million. The acquisition of Enfuels gave it eight fueling stations and a conversion center in the Houston area.

"It creates a mass that we just didn't have before," says Johnson, adding that its new-found clout will aid it in marketing to fleet owners who are considering converting their cars, vans or buses to natural gas.

The acquisition also will enable the company to cut costs in consolidating operations, including Enfuels' conversion center.

"We've done everything to keep our costs low during this period when it's tough to get a new business started," says Johnson, who doesn't have a secretary and routinely types his own letters.

But American Natural Gas faces the challenge of convincing fleet owners to switch to gas at a time when federal emissions standards are still being finalized.

"Until those (emissions) regulations are finally issued, fleet owners are sitting back," Johnson says. "What we're really competing against is gasoline. What we have to do is have the cost savings per gallon to support the economics of conversion."

American Natural Gas currently sells compressed natural gas for 78.9 cents per equivalent gallon, compared with a price for regular unleaded of about $1.20.

To fully implement its plan to develop gas refueling station networks across the United States, American Natural Gas needs more capital. It is looking for new equity investors and is in discussions to form an alliance under which another company would provide the funding for stations and lease them back to American Natural Gas.

Enveco was formed in 1994. It was the brainchild of Christopher Pedersen, an Austin, Texas, consultant on domestic alternative fuel programs, and McLane, who was a Chamber of Commerce membership marketing representative.

The two saw that developing markets were hungry to consider alternative fuel programs and that there was money to be made in implementing the programs.

Enron finds little respect in power hungry India

By John F. Burne
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW DELHI, India — A few months ago, it seemed like an ideal match. On one side was India, now open to foreign investment but starved of the electrical power needed for economic growth. On the other was a consortium of major American companies with a contract to invest nearly $3 billion in an advanced power plant outside Bombay.

When paperwork on the contract was completed in January, the consortium, led by the Enron Corp., of Houston, a big natural-gas supplier, was the jewel in the crown of a budding new business relationship between India and the United States.

Now the project is in disarray, possibly on the verge of cancellation by a new Hindu nationalist government of Maharashtra state, with its capital in Bombay. Threats by leaders of the state government to "bundle Enron into the sea" have reminded some Indians of the atmosphere in the 1970s, when Prime Minister Indira Gandhi forced Coca-Cola, IBM, and other big American companies out of India, driving away foreign investment for a generation.

The attack on the current project is based on accusations that the Americans obtained unduly favorable terms from the national government of Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao that will translate into onerous rates for Indians, an assertion that the parties to the deal deny. Critics have also noted that the contract was awarded without competitive bidding, a break with the tight rules that normally govern public contracts in India.

For the American companies, and for foreign investors in general, the attack underscores the uncertainty of doing business in developing nations. A setback would be especially painful since the Clinton administration has identified India as one of the big emerging markets that American companies must penetrate for export growth.

For Rao, who must call a national election by next spring, the attack is a challenge with a strong political subtext. He has built his record largely on an ambitious program of economic change, with a more open environment for foreign investors as a centerpiece.

Indians who have backed these changes fear that a collapse of the Enron deal could set off a chain reaction, with other foreign investors pulling out — leaving India, one of Asia's poorest nations, to fall still further behind its neighbors. Finance Minister Manmohan Singh, the architect of the changes, has called the Enron project a litmus test for the entire economic effort.

Amid the tide of good feelings that prevailed last year, the Enron project was lauded as an example of all that American investment could accomplish in India. The project, with the General Electric Co.'s GE Capital unit and Bechtel Enterprises as minority partners, was to be by far India's largest single foreign investment, with $990 million for the first, diesel-fueled phase of the power plant, to be completed in 1997, and a further $2 billion for a second, gas-fueled phase, with the details to be negotiated later.

India needs few things more than electric power. With chronic power shortages that regularly paralyze factories, offices, hospitals, and trains, India's state-owned electrical utilities have been the butt of recriminations for years. Under its program of economic reforms, the New Delhi government has plans to increase total power output by half by the end of the decade, with 60 percent of the increase to come from foreign-built plants.

If India seemed poised to gain from the Enron deal, so too did American companies, many of which had focused on India, with its nearly 900 million people, as a market that could not be missed. During a visit earlier this year by Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, U.S. officials boasted that, in India at least, American companies had stolen a march on Japan, which has led investment elsewhere in Asia.

Now, despite the controversy, Enron's engineers have forged ahead at the power-plant site on the rocky Arabian Sea coast 100 miles south of Bombay. Work stopped for a time in May, when demonstrators attacked the site, slightly injuring three Americans and wrecking vehicles. Since then, the Dabhol Power Corp., the Indian-registered company founded by the American partners, has laid foundations for the generating plant and begun work on other facilities.

But soon the Maharashtra government, a coalition of two Hindu nationalist parties, will begin a review of the deal it ordered after ousting the Congress Party in an election in March. The nationalists' victory followed a campaign in which they accused the Congress Party officials of guaranteeing windfall profits for the Americans, and of accepting kickbacks. No evidence has been offered to support that allegation.

Still, the nationalists struck deep chords in India's psyche. Gopinath Munde, Maharashtra state's deputy chief minister, told election rallies that the American companies were offering nothing India could not accomplish on its own and that Enron's profits would be paid "on the backs of India's poor."

The criticism has spurred a noisy debate across the country, with a torrent of articles in newspapers and magazines, some defending the Enron deal and many more decrying it. "India's status will be enhanced, not lowered, if it tells the world that it is no pushover, no banana republic ready to accept an atrocious deal," a commentary in the influential Times of India said.

The main Hindu nationalist party, the Bharatiya Janata Party, known as the BJP, has shown signs of using Enron as a trial balloon for a national campaign next year that would make a big issue of charges that the Rao government had "sold out" India to foreign interests. The Maharashtra coalition is composed of the BJP and an extreme Hindu nationalist group, the Shiv Sena.

In the last week, Enron executives have prepared for the worst. "I'm in grief," Rebecca Mark, the 40-year-old president of the Enron Development Corp., the subsidiary that concluded the deal, told reporters in Europe. Ms. Mark spoke after Indian newspapers said a Maharashtra review committee headed by Munde would condemn the Enron project and recommend that it be canceled without compensation.

Diplomats at the U.S. Embassy here have been ordered to say nothing to exacerbate the situation. But privately, they say that at least two big American companies have put negotiations for major Indian investments on hold. Other Western embassies report a similar cooling among foreign companies.

"Since the days of the East India Co., Indians have always been suspicious of foreign companies," a Western diplomat said. "It's too tempting a target for the nationalists to leave alone."

Hopes for saving the project appear to depend mainly on a last-minute reversal by the Maharashtra leaders, prompted perhaps by hints from Enron and its partners that they could use an arbitration clause in the contract, providing for settlement of disputes in London, to sue for compensation. Enron executives have suggested that claims could exceed $100 million, but at the urging of the U.S. ambassador, Frank G. Wisner, the company has toned down some of its tough talk.

Behind the scenes, Enron executives and American diplomats have met with the New Delhi government, hoping that, if all else fails, Rao will use power given the central government in the contract to block cancellation of the deal.

When Enron's negotiations faltered last year, Energy Secretary Hazel R. O'Leary led a succession of Clinton administration officials to India and persuaded Rao to approve guarantees that New Delhi would pay for the power generated by eight foreign-built power plants, including Enron's, if India's state electricity boards, notorious for their corruption and inefficiency, failed to pay.

One solution suggested by officials in India's power ministry is for New Delhi to compensate Enron and its partners if the project is canceled, and to recoup the money from the subsidies it regularly pays to Maharashtra. Another possibility is that the Rao government take over the project and transfer it to another state with chronic power shortages, possibly the eastern state of Orissa.

But for the moment, attention is focused on the risks of the Enron dispute torpedoing India's prospects of attracting other foreign investments, including an estimated $50 billion urgently needed to build more power plants, as well as to improve battered ports and roads. Overall investments have been painfully slow, with less than $2 billion coming in last year, a fraction of the amounts foreign companies are investing elsewhere in Asia.

Those who say that Enron and its partners have been given overly generous terms focus on a provision in the contract that guarantees a minimum return on investment of 16 percent, rising to a potential 30 percent if the Enron plant operates at close to its full 2,015-megawatt capacity. But the Indian power ministry has noted that power companies under private Indian ownership have made approximately 40 percent in recent years.

Critics have also noted the Rao government's decision to award the Enron contract, and seven others for foreign-led power projects, without the bidding process previously required under Indian law. But the power ministry said that India's dire energy needs justified giving a head start to the foreign companies.

Still, Ms. Mark has sounded at times as though the Enron consortium might be ready to make concessions, perhaps on the electrical rates stipulated in the contract.

"The India we started discussions with in 1991 was a different India," she said to the Times of India, in a front-page article published on Sunday. "We went there when no one wanted to go. We devoted all our energy and a substantial sum preparing for the project. It was done in a spirit of solidarity with India, not in a self-serving way."

Tesoro Petroleum executes cost cutting, reorganization

SAN ANTONIO (SWN) — Tesoro Petroleum Corporation (NYSE: TSO) today announced that expected cost savings as a result of a company-wide reorganization and the interest savings from debt reduction could total approximately $10 million annually. The company also announced that its Board of Directors had promoted several officers following the recent election of Bruce A. Smith as Tesoro's president and chief executive officer.

The company has identified annual cost savings of between $4 million and $5 million as a result of an organizational restructuring, with an approximate 7 percent reduction in the workforce, or about 60 positions. An approximate $5 million charge related to the reorganization will be reflected in third-quarter earnings. With the net proceeds from the recently completed sale of a portion of the Bob West field, the company expects to reduce the amount of public debt and outstanding borrowings on its credit facility. This debt reduction is expected to result in a savings of annual interest cost of approximately $4 million to $6 million.

The reorganization initiatives reflect reductions in both corporate and operations costs, as well as a decentralization intended to strengthen each operating segment's performance through a more direct line of profit accountability. This includes the recent naming of Robert W. Oliver and Steve Wormington to lead the company's Exploration & Production and Refining & Marketing businesses, respectively.

"These initiatives focus on aligning the responsibility for revenue enhancements and cost savings to maximize profitability," Smith said. "In dynamic markets, many decisions need to be made at the operating level rather than at the corporate level."

The Board promoted the following officers:

James C. Reed, Jr., General Counsel and Secretary, has been elected executive vice president. Reed, 50, joined Tesoro as an attorney in 1972, becoming senior vice president, General Counsel and Corporate Secretary in 1994. He has 25 years of experience in the energy industry and holds a bachelor's degree in business from Abilene Christian College and a law degree from Southern Methodist University.

William T. Van Kleef, formerly vice president and treasurer, has been elected senior vice president and will succeed Smith as chief financial officer. Van Kleef, 43, joined Tesoro as treasurer in 1993. He has 21 years of financial management and public accounting experience in the energy industry, including 10 years with Damson Oil Corporation, where he last served as vice president and chief financial officer until its acquisition by Parker & Parsley. Van Kleef is a Certified Public Accountant and holds a bachelor's degree in accounting from The University of Texas.

Apache acquires Aquila Energy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — UtiliCorp United Inc. said Thursday it has completed the sale of its Aquila Energy Resources Corp. subsidiary to Apache Corp. for $198 million.

The sale was announced earlier.

Apache, a large independent oil and gas company based in Houston, gets oil and natural gas reserves in the Gulf of Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico. It also gets about 156,000 acres of developed and undeveloped oil and gas properties.

UtiliCorp decided to sell the oil and gas reserves to concentrate on marketing. The sale isn't expected to significantly affect 1995 earnings.

Aquila Energy Resources is a subsidiary of UtiliCorp's Aquila Energy Corp. subsidiary. The sale does not involve any part of Aquila Energy Corp. or Aquila Gas Pipeline Corp.

Kansas City-based UtiliCorp sells gas and electricity across the United States and in several other countries.

U.S. looks for new oil routes

BAKU, Azerbaijan (AP) — Days before a controversial pipeline route to export Azerbaijani oil is to be decided, a senior U.S. official said Thursday that America wants to see multiple routes established.

The U.S. ambassador to Azerbaijan, Richard Kauzlarich told reporters that multiple routes would provide greater security for oil exports, according to the independent Turan news agency.

A Western oil producers aim to produce 700,000 barrels a day by 2000 from the former Soviet republic's rich oil reserves.

With construction of one pipeline running to well over a billion dollars, the costs of financing several could be prohibitive.

Proposals for the pipeline route to export the oil have fallen prey to high-powered diplomatic intrigue in efforts to wrest control of Azerbaijan's valuable and strategically important oil wealth.

Endemic instability in the Caucasus has added to the political difficulties of choosing a route.

Western countries including Turkey have battled hard to have the pipeline laid through Georgia and Turkey out to the Mediterranean port of Ceyhan.

Russia, intent on retaining control of the oil that flows from former Soviet territory, is determined to have the pipeline laid through its own troubled southern territory.

Australia warns of pullout from Vietnam oil field

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Australia's BHP Petroleum wants new terms for developing the Big Bear offshore oil field and suggested it would have to drop the project if it doesn't get a better deal. The field's production has been a disappointment for BHP. An industry source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the field has proven reserves equal to only about one-tenth of the 750 million barrels initially forecast.

BHP's general manager in Vietnam, Robert Mollah, said the company expects to start losing money under the current arrangement in April.

"The Dai Hung field isn't the bonanza everyone thought it would be," Mollah said. "We're getting down to a negative cash flow. This can't go on."

BHP has a 43.75 percent interest in the field, which lies 155 miles southeast of the southern port of Vung Tau. Malaysia's Petronas Carigali holds 20 percent, and France's Total and Japan's Sumitomo each have a 10.625 percent share. The Vietnam Oil and Gas Corp. owns the remaining 15 percent.

North Sea looks at turnaround in drilling

ABERDEEN, SCOTLAND (Bloomberg) — In the turbulent waters of the North Sea, oil companies are so busy drilling no extra rigs are available to work. Global Marine Inc., an offshore well driller, fetches $70,000 a day for rigs that rented for $25,000 in October. Company officials figure their rigs may bring in an additional $10,000 a day before the year is done.

Diamond Offshore of Houston and Santa Fe International, owned by Kuwait, are moving rigs to the region, according to Offshore Data Services, a consultancy.

Stronger oil prices and better technology have breathed life into the region's stagnant oil industry. Some believe what's happening in the North Sea is soon to happen in the Gulf of Mexico, West Africa and other oil drilling markets that have been depressed in recent years by weak energy prices and cost-cutting moves at major oil companies.

"The industry is in the early stages of a major cyclical recovery," said Russell Luigs, chairman of Global Marine. "We're seeing strength in all the major markets, and it's for the first time in 15 years."

Not all markets have recovered even now at the end of the second quarter, traditionally a strong one for the industry. In the Gulf of Mexico, for example, 80 percent of the rigs in the region had work, up only slightly from 78 percent a year ago, according to Tom Marsh, who tracks the region at Offshore Data Services in Houston.

"What happens later this summer will tell us if this is the long-term turnaround the industry has been waiting for in the Gulf of Mexico," Marsh said.

Still, Marsh said there is evidence demand is rising in the Gulf of Mexico. "There have been some oil companies that have not been able to get the particular equipment they wanted. There have been some crew shortages and some shortage of support vessels," he said.

Companies like Global Marine and Nabors Industries Inc. already believe they see a turnaround in the making, especially in the Gulf of Mexico. Both companies plunged into bankruptcy in the late 1980s after world oil prices crashed from $30 a barrel to less than $10 in a few weeks in 1986.

Luigs has been wrong before. Early last year, for example, his predictions of a turnaround were proved wrong when drilling activity slumped toward the end of the year along with oil and gas prices.

At the Robert W. Baird & Co. oil conference in New York, Luigs said the glut of rigs seeking work has narrowed dramatically in recent years — from roughly 335 rigs in the mid-1980s to just 101 rigs currently.

"That supply-and-demand picture is going to get closer and closer together sooner or later," said Eugene Isenberg, chairman of Nabors, a rival of Global Marine.

Technology is part of the reason. Oil companies such as Shell Oil Co. and British Petroleum Plc. have found cheaper ways to tap deposits as much as 3,000 feet below the ocean surface. Most offshore developments don't stray beyond 800 feet or so.

That's good news for McDermott International Inc. and its affiliate, J. Ray McDermott SA, the biggest marine construction firm.

"The big growth will be in the subsea markets," said Robert Howson, chairman of both companies. "Some claim it's the biggest play the U.S. has ever seen."

Shares of rig companies such as Reading Bates Corp. and Helmerich & Payne Inc. have soared since the beginning of the year on speculation more wells will be drilled in deep regions where their rigs are especially well equipped to work. Reading & Bates rose 1/8 to 9 1/4 today, up 54 percent year to date. Helmerich & Payne closed up 3/8 at 29 5/8, up 16 percent year to date.

Prices are another spur. West Texas Intermediate Crude oil futures that averaged $17.18 a barrel are up 10 percent to an average of $18.82 for the first six months of this year. Daily demand is growing at least a million barrels each year, or about 1.4 percent a year. Even nations in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are reaching their production ceiling, and won't be able to step the flow up without huge new investments —with aren't forthcoming.

For Nabors, that means companies are reworking old wells and drilling for new deposits, boosting its fortunes at the same time.

"People are projecting something like a 50 percent increase in operating profit this year, and I think we're pretty well on trend to get that," Chairman Eugene Isenberg told investors at the Robert W. Baird & Co. oil conference in New York. "The next couple, three, four quarters or so are going to be real good."

Deepwater oil deposits aren't the only source of growth. Natural gas drilling could pick up despite lower gas prices. On the New York Mercantile Exchange, gas recently traded for $1.53 per million British Thermal Units, about 60 cents, or 28 percent, below the price gas fetched a year ago.

James Wicklund, an analyst at Rauscher Pierce Refsnes analyst, said technology such as 3-D seismic data, which maps underground rock structures, has helped cut the costs of finding gas deposits, making the search for reserves potentially profitable even at lower prices.

"We have lowered the risk of not finding oil and gas significantly, and the offshore development programs have reduced that cost dramatically," Wicklund said. "Companies can today, and going forward, have a significantly higher return even with a lower commodity price. That's what's fueling (the rebound)."

Marsh, at Offshore Data Services, said many companies appear to believe gas prices won't drop much further.

"The only cloud on the horizon is that things look pretty good, and that always concerns me," said Isenberg, of Nabors.

Isenberg knows as well as investors do that the drilling

Hong Kong & China Gas loof for expanding market

HONG KONG (NYT) — Hong Kong & China Gas Co. expects gas sales to grow by about eight percent in the first six months of 1995, in line with growth last year, said Malcolm Matthews, the utility's managing director.

"We were forecasting about an eight percent increase in volume, and coming up to the half year we're pretty close to that," Matthews told the Bloomberg Forum. "We're pretty happy with where the year is going so far."

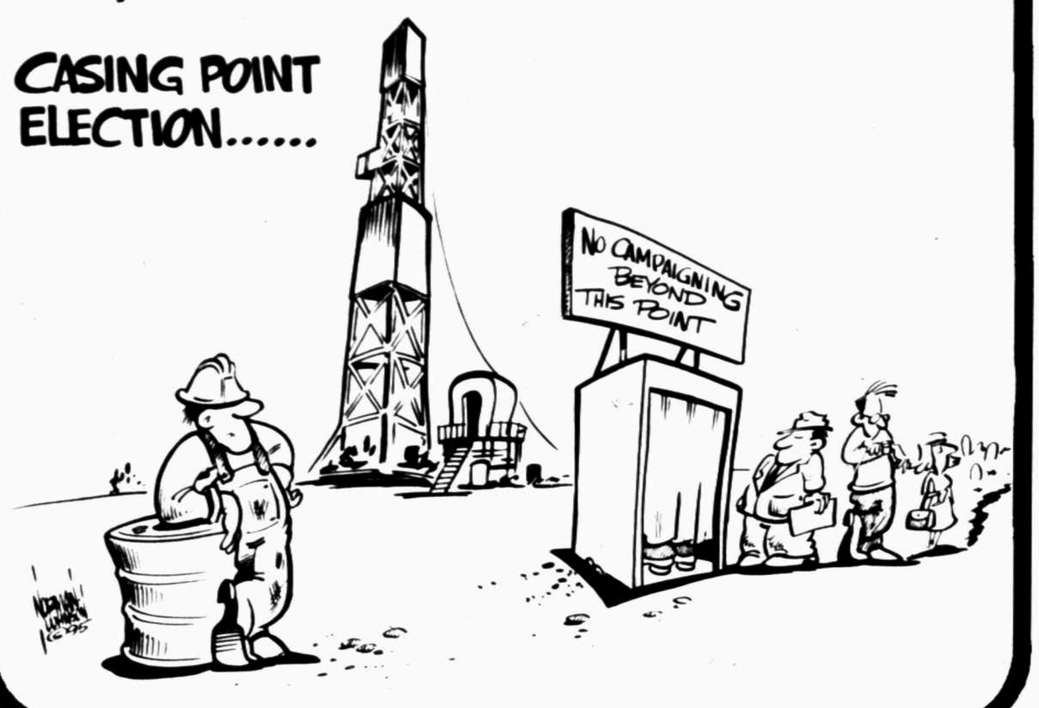

With sales on target in the territory, Hong Kong & China Gas is considering new projects to expand into mainland China, Matthews said.

The utility, the territory's dominant gas supplier for more than 130 years, may invest as much as $400 million to get some of those projects off the ground. That's more than 10 times the initial investment for each of its three existing gas projects in China, he said. "We have some other projects in prospect that could go up to $300 million to $400 million," he said.

"It's a tough situation," the executive said of Hong Kong & China Gas's expansion into China. "It is highly unusual -- in fact, maybe, unique -- to have a foreign company come in and actually operate a full utility operation in China."

HALLIBURTON PROVIDES SOLUTIONS

Case History #41

Location of Job: Crockett County, Texas

Type of Job: Coil Tubing clean out with Hydra-Blast and Hang Off Siphon String

Customer Challenge: Water production from this well had increased to the point where it was restricting flow from the producing open hole interval. Gas velocity was not high enough in the open hole and production string to bring the water production to the surface. Performing a major workover on this well could cause permanent damage to the formation.

Halliburton's Solution: Coil tubing was used to perform a Hydra-Blast cleanup of the formation using nitrogen. This kept the exposure of fluid on the formation to a minimum. The same coil tubing unit was used to set an extension of the production string by hanging off 1.5" tubing in a landing nipple below the permanent packer. Halliburton's PC based SIPHON program was used to determine the optimum pipe size to increase fluid velocity in the production string so that fluids could flow to to surface

Major Obstacles: The Hydra-Blast job would have to be designed for minimum exposure of the treating fluids to the formation. Extending the length of the production string would be necessary to increase the velocity in the open hole section.

Job Details:

Open Hole Producing Zone:	11,748' - 11,483'
Permanent Packer Set At:	10,710'
2 7/8" Tubing Set To:	Surface
Existing Production:	200 MCF/day
Formation:	Ellenburger
Equipment Used:	Halliburton 40K Coil Tubing Unit
	Halliburton Hydra-Blast Tools
	Halliburton Nitrogen Service

Job Procedure: Rig up Halliburton coil tubing unit and Hydra-Blasted open hole section to depth of 11, 483' with tool in downward blast configuration. Drop ball and convert tool to side blast. Side blast interval with five passes.

Spot 250 gallons of 15% HCL acid. Run in hole with 795' of 1.5" coil tubing. Cut pipe and install hanger of 1.87" nipple. Connect to 1 1/4" coil tubing with hydraulic disconnect tool. Run in hole and land hanger in nipple. Circulate ball and pressure up to disengage hydraulic disconnect. Pull out of hole with coil tubing.

Rig up 1 1/4" coil tubing hanger on wellhead. Run in hole with 1 1/4" coil tubing to 11,685'. Open coil tubing window and set coil tubing slips. Land tubing in hanger. Cut 1 1/4" coil tubing and install valve.

Results: Production increased immediately from 200 MCF/day to 1.2 MMCF/day. Well is currently up to 1.5 MMCF/day.

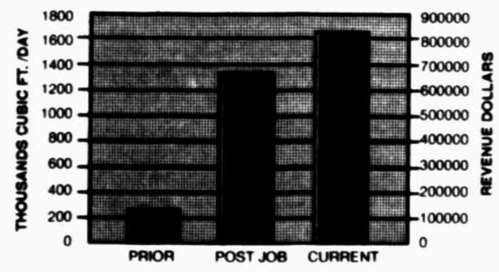

Customer Testimonial: "Halliburton's design predictions seem to be very close to what we are actually seeing from the well."

Uniqueness of Job: Two different size strings of coil tubing were hung off in this well at different depths to optimize the gas and fluid velocity at those respective depths.

Economic Benefit to Customer:

COST ANALYSIS:
Cost of clean out and Hydra Blast	$27,000
Cost of coil tubing hang off	15,000
Miscellaneous (consultant, etc.)	5,000
Total Cost	$47,000
BENEFIT ANALYSIS:
Increased production by 1,000 MCF/day @ $1.50/MCF for a period of one year	$547,000
ECONOMIC BENEFIT 1st YEAR:	$500,000

Balloons will take to skies of Tall City

They creep out in the dark of night, usually just before dawn.

Grins break out on their faces as they discover the wind to be weak-willed.

These are anarchistic aviators. They file no exact flight plans, but are happy to float where gentle breezes push them.

"Unroll the envelope, we're gonna fly!" shouts the pilot.

A gasoline-powered fan shoots ice cold air into a giant sack of flattened rip-stop nylon.

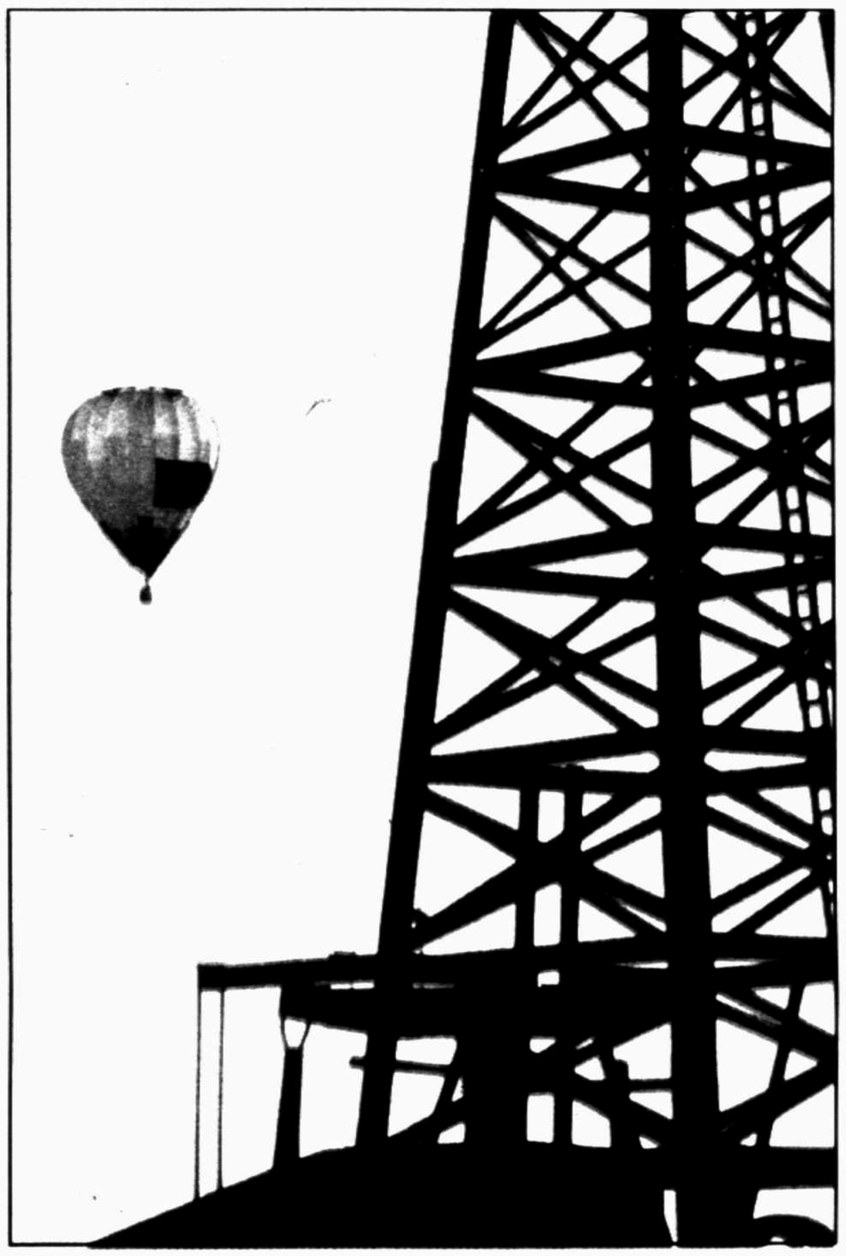

The pilot flicks a barbecue lighter and a propane burner roars to life, firing a blue flame into the mouth of the wakening balloon.

Like a crew of Lilliputians, handlers grab ropes, tethering the massive lightweight as it expands to full glory.

Straining against the ropes, the hot air balloon is a three-dimensional vehicle of whimsy.

A score of the aircraft and their pilots will be in Midland for the Third Annual Permian Basin Hot Air Balloon Festival, Oct. 28 and 29 at the Petroleum Museum.The balloon festival lifts off at 7:02 Saturday, Oct. 28 and 6:02 a.m. Sunday, Oct. 29, weather permitting. (Yes, the time shift is due

Good air service is vital to city's future

Wynn

By Marvin Wynn

A young conductor advised Chief Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to not worry about his lost or misplaced train ticket, just to mail it to the railroad when he found it. The chief justice is said to have reacted, rather anxiously, "Young man, I'm not worried about the Pennsylvania Railroad receiving my ticket, my immediate concern is 'where am I going?'"

That is a question we need to all be constantly asking ourselves, as individuals and as a community.

"Where is Midland going?"

A pioneering spirit built this modern sophisticated city on the West Texas plains, providing us an economy and lifestyle that continues to attract new citizens and new businesses and amaze many outsiders. The ranchers and wildcatters who traveled our way left a legacy that benefits each and every citizen of our community in some way every day of our lives. What will we leave for generations to follow?

We are a wealthy community by demographic measurements; the per capita income is higher in Midland than most cities. But does that tell the true story? Surveys conducted in 1994 by United Way of Midland for the Midland Introspective reveal the concerns of many Midlanders about jobs and income to support the basic necessities of life.

As a community we must be concerned not only about the total wealth of the community but also about the opportunities for all our citizens to earn a greater share of an expanded, not shrinking, community wealth. In other words, we need to be concerned about economic development.

There are many different definitions of economic development depending

Survey offers gold mine of consumer data

By Kevin Skipper

Midland's business community can explore a gold mine of data in the latest U.S. Department of Labor's National Consumer Expenditure Study (NCES). This periodic survey of consumers throughout the country measures weekly levels of expenditures for dozens of items.

Skipper

To place expenditure levels into perspective, DOL indexes them to national averages. For example, in the city of Midland, each household spends $120.92 a week on food. DOL assigns an index of 1.02 to this level. This means that our expenditure level is 2 percent above that for households nationally. Businesses can use this information to choose an ideal location for a store, select a new product to sell, or forecast sales.

The accompanying table shows just a few products and services covered in the NCES, namely food and selected miscellaneous expenditures. By looking across the columns, you can see how much Midlanders spend per person and per household each week. At the far right is the level of Midlanders' expenditures indexed to the nation as a whole. These index numbers tell us that we spend about average or slightly below average for most food items. Another finding: although we spend 2 percent more on food items as a group than Americans in general, we spend less than the national average on food consumed at home.

Midlanders show an affinity for eating out as we spend 5 percent more than the national average on food away-from-home. This helps explain why numerous restaurants have expanded into our market.

Other items of interest: Midlanders' expenditures for alcohol and tobacco are above average. Our homes must be clean and our gardens bountiful as we spend 5 percent more than the average American on housekeeping and garden supplies.

In addition to the items in the table, the NCES tell us much more about what we buy. For example, Midlanders

An item on which we spend less than most people is home repair supplies (8 percent less). Not surprising, we spend 8 percent more than the national average on home repair services. Apparently, we want our homes to operate smoothly, we just don't want to make the repairs ourselves.

The NCES is but one example of the computerized information available to the business community in Midland. As we skillfully use these databases to plan new businesses or expand existing ones, Midland's consumers will experience even more local shopping choices.

Bergen is named Top Achiever

Bergen

The President's Club is the Chamber's volunteer committee for membership recruitment and retention.

Each month volunteers meet to discuss their efforts to invite businesses to be a part of Midland's oldest continuously active business organization.

President's Club leader Debbie Bergen once again took Top Achiever of the Month honors, this time for the month of August. Ms. Bergen sold seven new memberships and assisted one member with renewal. Debbie is market manager for The CashBack Card, a program in conjunction with the Reporter Telegram.

In second place was Grace Graham of Grace Graham Advertising, with four new memberships.

Also active in August were Robert Curtiss of CMI with two renewals, Tami Wade of Featherlite with one new and one renewal, Joyce Reaves of Pinkies with one new membership and Vicky Hailey of Southwestern Bell with two renewals.

President's Club volunteers remind Midland businesses that each new member receives a free $195 value ad in this publication, the Midland Chamber Business Journal.

For more information about the President's Club or Chamber membership, call Jane Inskeep at the Chamber, 683-3381.

Party to kick off holiday season

Midland officially kicks off the Christmas season Friday, Dec. 1, with the World's Largest Office Party, hosted by the Chamber.

Jane Inskeep said the party's silent auction has grown tremendously over the past several years.

Companies are encouraged to donate items of at least $25 value by calling the Chamber, 683-3381.

"We're especially interested in framed artwork and also vacation packages," she said. "But we will consider anything of value."

Proceeds from the auction will help fund Chamber programs for 1996.

Buy the Basin posters available

Christmas shopping is just around the corner, and Midland merchants are united in promoting this concept: "Buy the Basin."

Store owners are encouraged to display Buy the Basin posters, which are available for $1 each at the Chamber office, 109 North Main St.

Discounts are available for bulk purchases, according to Chamber information secretary Carolyn Coleman.

Call 683-3381 for further details.

Marshall Huffman

Area loses 'hometown champion' as engineer retires

When Marshall D. Huffman retired in late August as district engineer, West Texas lost a hometown champion in the Texas Department of Transportation. Huffman never missed an opportunity to improve the quality of both transportation and life in West Texas.

"It was my chance to make a difference in all my 'hometowns,'" is how he sums up his career.

Born in tiny Tokio in Yoakum County along the Texas-New Mexico border, he has lived in Brownfield, Marfa, Kermit, Stanton, Midland, Fort Stockton, Pecos and Odessa.

Huffman served 35 years with TxDOT, the last eight as the top man in the sprawling, 18,000-square mile Odessa District, which includes Midland, Ector, Andrews, Winkler, Reeves, Ward, Martin, Loving, Pecos, Upton, Crane and Terrell Counties.

He was honored Aug. 29 by the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce and the Midland Odessa Transportation Alliance (MOTRAN).

"Marshall is solid as a rock, but with a touch of class," said Odessa attorney Ray Stoker, who served from 1985-93 on the Texas Transportation Commission.

"He was responsive not only to the needs of the department, but also to the needs of the communities he served.

"He is a good guy, a good engineer and a good employee."

Stoker said the tangible evidence of Huffman's accomplishments are easily recognizable around Midland and Odessa.

"He built the main lanes of State Highway 191, the overpasses on Loop 250 and the southeast quadrant of Loop 338," Stoker said. "All this was done within the framework of a meager construction budget."

Huffman climbed the TxDOT ladder rung by rung, beginning in the summer of 1960 as a Texas A&M engineering student hired to work in the district's construction lab in Odessa. He served as an engineer in Fort Stockton, resident engineer in Pecos, then back to the district headquarters in Odessa to work as district construction and maintenance engineers and as the district's design engineer before his final promotion.

During the heyday of interstate highway construction in West Texas, Huffman was part of building more than 100 miles each of I-10 and I-20, working as either an inspector, resident engineer or district staff officer.

His legacy with TxDOT and the region goes beyond his work on the roads. He championed environmentally sensitive landscaping that enriches the appearance of nearly every community in the district. Huffman also has been a TxDOT leader in the hiring and promotion of minorities and women, and helped to reshape the department as chairman of a transition team responsible for transforming the highway department into modern department of transportation in the early 1990s.

"Marshall was instrumental in developing urban arterials, such as Lamesa Road," said TxDOT executive director Bill Burnett. "He was also quite a pusher for Loop 250 development."

Burnett credits Huffman for leaving more than a legacy of good roads. "Any success I've had in my own career is from lessons I've learned from Marshall," said Burnett, who was hired by Huffman as a young engineer.

Huffman also trained the people who became district engineers in Abilene, Brownwood and San Antonio.

"He took raw talent right out of school and taught us how to practically apply what we had learned," Burnett said. "More importantly, he taught us how to work with people."

Huffman and his wife Eula plan "to do some traveling, some volunteer work and keep some options open," Huffman said.

"My playground is the Big Bend, Davis Mountains and the Trans Pecos, and that is where I plan to spend a lot of my time," he said. He is an avid amateur historian of the region.

The Huffmans have three children: Collerson, a software engineer for U S Data in Richardson; Carry, A U S Border Patrol officer in Lubbock; and Chrisee, the clerk for the Texas House Ways and Means Committee; they also have three grandchildren.

Gift certificates make shopping easier

Although the gift-giving season is months away, many people are making early preparations for Thanksgiving and Christmas, including Midland Park Mall.

They have updated their Gift Certificate program in time for all the birthdays, corporate incentive programs, bonuses and presents that need to be bought at this time of year.

When it comes to gift giving, spreading the financial load over a few months makes a lot of sense. Instead of a last-minute rush, the person who has shopped early is at a definite advantage.

Midland Park Mall's new computerized Gift Certificate Program has a lot in common with the previous system — they come in any denomination up to $25 and the certificates are honored by all 80-plus merchants in the mall.

Automation of the system has significantly changed the service and allows the giver much more flexibility. Available seven days a week from the Customer Service Center, the gift certificates are ready in moments.

As before, this is an easy way to guarantee that the recipient will like their gift; the variety of stores in the mall makes it easy for everyone to find something they like.

The gift certificates are great for companies as well as the public. Corporations can use them for incentives, safety awards, Christmas bonuses or other creative uses.The certificates can be purchased or ordered in advance by calling the mall office at 694-1663.

Celeste Carder, customer service representative at Midland Park Mall, helps a customer with gift certificates.

For the gift-giver, the certificates can take the guess work out of the holiday season; you virtually guarantee that the recipient will love the present and you save time.

The Gift Certificate program is just another way that Midland Park Mall is making shopping easier for the consumer:

Balloon festival

Annual event is set for Oct. 28-29 at Petroleum Museum

Tips for balloon watchers

■ Get there early. Most flights are scheduled for sunrise, when winds are calmest.

■ Be ready to wait. Because hot-air balloons are at the mercy of the winds, the weather must be nearly perfect for liftoff. Wear comfortable clothes, bring a lawn chair or blanket and join the crowd.

■ During the launch, look — don't touch — and stay out of the way. Inflation and liftoff usually take five minutes, so the ground crews are too busy to chat.

■ Never smoke during inflation because stray propane fumes could ignite.

■ Have your cameras ready — most of the balloons will be inflated and launched in the space of a few minutes, and mass launchings make for great photographs.

(From 1)

to the end of daylight savings time, and no, balloons don't fly in windy weather.)

In addition to the early morning flights, a spectacular balloon glow with "trick or treating" is scheduled Saturday evening at Odessa's Schleymeyer Field.

"It's going to be perfect for ballooning. The weather forecast is great," said festival chairman Ed Roland, crossing his fingers.

Up to 25 balloonists are anticipated.

Local balloonist Donna Potter serves as Balloon Meister this year.

Midland is home to three balloon pilots and owners. Ms. Potter flies Isis, Terry Potter pilots Ole King Cole and Jim Wilmes commands Jacob's Ladder.

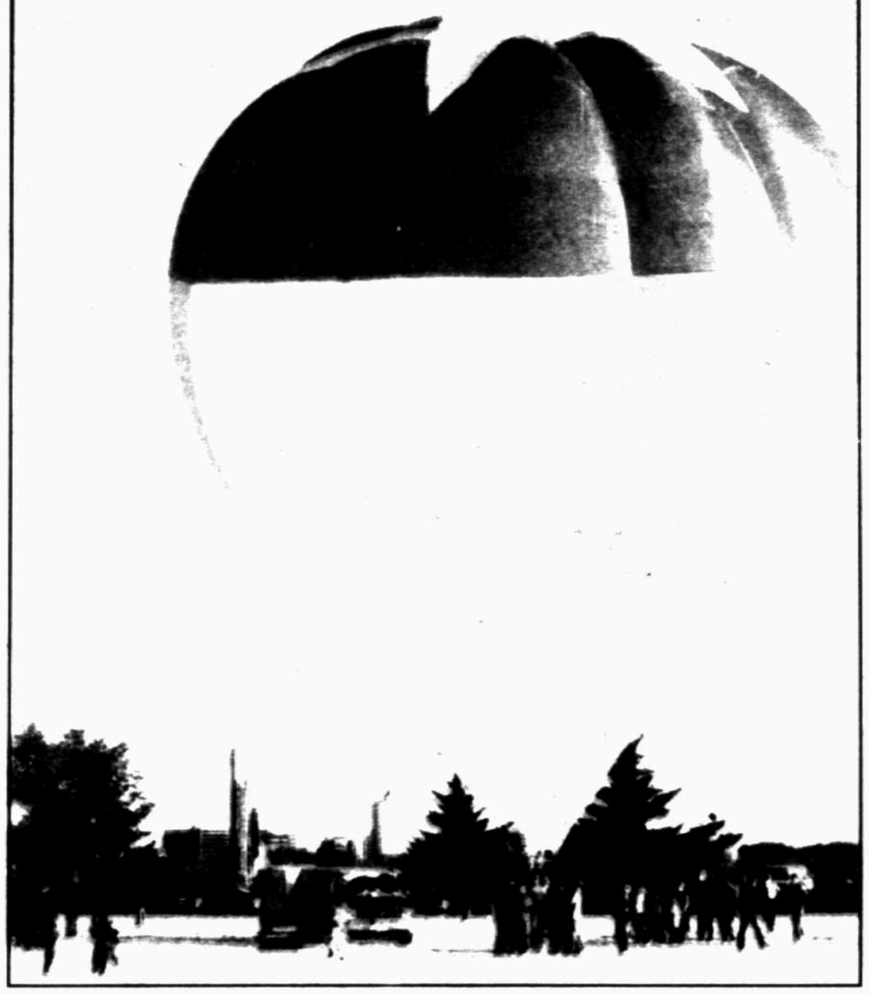

Other pilots expected to return for the festival are Jim Smith of Monument, N.M., Jim Moore of Artesia, N.M., Houston's Richard Phillips, Lubbock's Bill Fitzgerald, Amarillo's Robert Pendleton.

Some out-of-town balloonists will need volunteers to "crew" for them.

"This is a great way to meet folks, have fun and experience something new and exciting," Ms. Potter said.

If you are interested in crewing, call Ms. Potter at 694-3374 and plan to attend the crew training 5:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 24 at the Petroleum Museum.

For more information call Roland at 697-7870.

The annual Permian Basin Hot Air Balloon Festival is set for Oct. 28-29 at the Petroleum Museum.

FUTURE: New air terminal will help economic development

upon ones background, experiences and viewpoint. Most people accept a definition that includes creating new jobs and a broader tax base through new investments. I like to use a broader definition that includes not only creating something new but also "keeping what we have."

To do either requires proactive leadership. The American landscape is littered with hardscrabble towns that have withered away when the big employer went bust, relocated, or laid off thousands of workers. Midland is vulnerable to the same future unless we recognize that the oil and gas industry probably will not always provide the wealth necessary to sustain our current economy and way of life.

Even without a large "war chest" that many cities have developed through economic development sales tax or other means, Midland has been successful in retention and expansion and the attraction of "niche businesses." Lack of infrastructure and regional linkages could kill these development efforts in the future if we are not careful. The current debate over whether Midland should build a new terminal at Midland International Airport is a case in point in providing for the future.

The railroad was the first form of transportation of importance to the development of Midland. The railroad is still an important asset. But today air service and communications are to the future of Midland what the railroad was in the 1880s. Communications is a state and federal issue. The state Legislature recently passed new legislation designed to keep Texas competitive with other states and the world. Providing good air transportation is a local matter. The decision in 1993 by the Midland City Council to build a new terminal was a positive step toward answering the question, "Where are we going?" It is an example of the positive leadership that the community must exhibit if we are to avoid having "Midland" engraved on a tombstone of once great cities that have withered away because of a changing economic base.

There are many arguments that can and are being made both in support and against building a new terminal at Midland International. From an economic development viewpoint, let's look at the importance of good air service to the community from the standpoint of "keeping what we have." Keep in mind that Midland is isolated from the hubs of commerce and government that are so important to our existance, as well as future economy hubs such as Houston, Dallas, Austin, Washington DC., etc.

A loss or serious decline in the level of air service at Midland International Airport could severely cripple our economy and our way of life just as the closing or significant cutback of a major employer has hurt other cities.

Examples:

■ Almost every major oil and gas company and many independents have administrative offices in our city where they manage operations not only in the Permian Basin but also in other areas of the country and sometimes the world. These firms provide direct employment for more than 8,200 local citizens.

If our air service declined, would — or could — Texaco, Arco, Chevron, Oxy, Amoco, Exxon, Conoco, Marathon, Enron, Fina, Unocal, Parker and Parsley, Henry Petroleum, Wagner and Brown and all the other petroleum companies continue to operate the same territories with the same personnel from Midland? Or would there be reductions in the service area or relocation of operations? And loss of jobs?

■ Could the Midland Softball Association still bring all the new money to town like it did recently when more than 3,000 players, coaches, family and friends spent nearly a week in Midland for the Girls-16 and under Fast Pitch Softball Tournament? Or would some other city capture that business for their motels, restaurants, rental car agencies, gas stations, retailers and souvenir shops?

■ What about our major manufactures? Could Texas Instruments, Teraco and TomCat — which together employ approximately 400 people — continue to expand their worldwide markets from Midland? Or would they be forced to relocate nearer to major air service?

■ Could the Midland Angels continue to compete with the other teams in the Texas League in cities like Tulsa, Wichita, Little Rock, Shreveport, Jackson or even San Antonio and El Paso? Would they fly in and out of Lubbock and drive to Midland or eventually decide to relocate to Lubbock, which does not have a AA baseball team and would probably be very pleased to have the Angels?

■ The COM Mabee Aquatic Center and Theatre Midland both attracted large events this year that brought people to Midland from all over the country. These visitors all spent lots of dollars in our service establishments. Visitor dollars help support jobs for our citizens at restaurants, hotels, car rental agencies, gas stations, etc. Without good air service, Midland's attractiveness for these events would be seriously diminished.

An article in the Sept. 11 issue of Business Week magazine titled "Try As They Might, The Dead Seldom Rise" describes what happened in communities that lost an employer or saw severe cutbacks after many years of depending upon the steady employment of one or two major industries. BW described one town as "overrun with poverty and drug gangs because half of its households earn no money and the middle class has fled."

It probably didn't happen overnight in Homestead, Pa., and it's not about to happen in Midland overnight. But it could happen to us and there would be nothing we could do. Now is the time to do something to prevent future declines. Now is the time to ask the question, "Where is Midland going?" Not next year but the next generation.

Don't be misled by incomplete or inaccurate information about Midland's need for a new air terminal. Consider what could happen if we don't take bold action now to ensure good air service in the future.
