Careful, kid! It's a jungle out there

Everytime Marcel LaGrange, 8, borrows his older sister's skates, it's an adventure. On a recent outing through the Kennedy Park housing complex in Portland, Maine, he was joined by dancing zebras, a larger-than-life mural painted on a wall.

Reagan's plan may survive House odds

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's economic program headed for its first showdown vote in the full House today with outnumbered Republican optimistic they can deliver a victory for Reagan and Democratic leaders working hard to bring defectors back into the fold.

Less than 40 hours after the president personally appealed to a joint session of Congress to act quickly on his package of spending and tax cuts, the House began deliberations that will lead to a vote on whether to endorse a budget resolution backed by the president or a still-developing alternate plan being pushed by the Democratic leadership.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said today that prospects for a Democratic alternative "look a lot better" because many Democrats are beginning to realize how deeply the budget-trimming plan favored by the administration will cut social programs.

O'Neill told reporters that he was "pounding it to" Democrats to make them understand the impact of voting with Republicans on the budget cuts.

But Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois said flatly that the president would win, adding that he could count "just over 30" Democratic votes behind the Reagan-backed plan.

He said he was hoping to "isolate Republican defections" to two or three but conceded it was possible that as many as four or five GOP members would vote against the administration.

O'Neill said, "We have 16 Republicans, but I don't know that we can hold them."

Michel spoke at a breakfast meeting with reporters and an aide relayed his comments.

The House is the big hurdle for Reagan. His program is virtually assured of passing the Senate, where Republicans hold a majority.

Rep. Delbert L. Latta of Ohio, the ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee, said Wednesday Reagan will "absolutely" prevail when the votes are counted in the House.

O'Neill, D-Mass., predicted Wednesday: "We'll either win this thing by five or six votes or lose it by 60, because if you start to lose it, the swing will come."

Meanwhile, one congressman said as many as 35 of a group of 47 conservative Democrats probably will support the president's proposal over an alternative budget plan still being pieced together by the Democratic leadership.

Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, predicted that six to 10 Democrats who are not members of the Conservative Democratic Forum also will go along with Reagan.

If those shifts occur and Republicans sustain only two or three defections, as GOP leaders claim, it would assure Reagan of victory when a final vote in the House occurs next week, probably Tuesday. Democrats hold a 52-vote majority in the House and a net switch of 27 Democrats would enable the president to prevail if all the Republicans vote together.

However, Republican Whip Trent Lott of Mississippi remained cautious, saying, "We've still got a few ways to go."

O'Neill on Wednesday discounted the impact of Reagan's speech, saying it had not generated additional support for the president, as Republicans had predicted. He also assailed the administration's plans for "brutal (spending) cuts that are going to hurt people in ways they don't even know yet," large budget deficits and "big tax cuts for the rich."

Hospital reporting record revenues during March

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital once again showed record revenues for the month of March, finance committee members told both hospital boards Thursday and the hospital should fare well on a survey recently completed by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

Hitting an all-time high of $1,603,575, the hospital outdid its previous record of $1.5 million established during January.

With $165,000 worth of expenses over budget, the hospital's increased revenues were depleted quickly, however, showing a deficit of $17,000. Including depreciation of machinery and building facilities, the deficit grew to $111,000 for the month. Depreciation is set at $94,750 for each month. Still, the hospital is ahead of budget figures.

Cost overruns for the month were "due mostly to salary increases," legal fees, additional audit fees and two months' worth of food bills, according to Dale Miller, chief financial officer for the hospital.

Roy Campbell, president of the trustees, said he was optimistic about the hospital's JCAH accreditation review.

"I was embarrassed last year and I was delighted to be in the room this year," Campbell told directors. "A great deal of improvement has been made since last year. We've been shaping up a lot of areas in an awfully short period of time," he added, crediting Administrator Ray Branson with many of the improvements.

"I feel we're going to get the two years," Campbell said.

Given an option of two years accreditation, one-year or no accreditation, the JCAH last year authorized only one year's approval for the hospital forcing a review this year as well.

Branson was less enthusiastic about the review, however. "I hesitate to be too committal until we get the final result," he said. "We won't know until we get the final report." However, he said he felt sure the hospital would receive at least a one-year approval.

Ray Moudy, hospital trustee and chairman of the finance committee, also reported the hospital had brought down the number of days it takes for an account to be paid.

"The collection process on accounts receivable is down from 93.3 days in January to 81.6 days in March," he said.

In addition, Moudy said the hospital would begin service on Medicare accounts called Periodic Interim Payments (PIP), which he said would decrease the accounts receiving days by another 10 days.

"If we can get down to 70 days," Moudy said, "we can increase our cash position by $1 million."

Referrals to collection agencies, or bad debts, continued to be high at $132,005 for the month.

In the directors' meeting, Miller presented a 12-page listing of "follow-ups" done on some 25-30 accounts before the charges were passed to the collection agency. Director Pat Estes had asked Miller to verify those accounts when they were included in the $155,000 to be written off last month.

"At least three or four follow-up efforts had been done on it" before the account went to the charge-off list, Miller said, reciting some examples.

Of $39,000 in outstanding debts referred to him by Mrs. Estes, Miller said $140 had been collected after she intervened.

"What it really indicates is the accounts are dead and the only thing to do is pass them on to the collection agents," Ed Magruder, president of the directors, said.

"Due to the fact that we haven't gotten much result from last month," Mrs. Estes agreed, "I won't submit a

Belfast areas barricaded as Sands continues fast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Roman Catholics threw up street barricades in their sections of Belfast today and formed local defense committees in anticipation of Protestant attacks as Bobby Sands and three other IRA hunger strikers rejected another plea from Pope John Paul II to call off their fast.

Sands, 27, was reported slipping into unconsciousness frequently as he continued to refuse food for the 61st day. With his weight reduced from 155 to 90 pounds, he was on a water bed to ease the pain of his bones pressing through his flesh, and his joints were bandaged to keep them in place.

Sinn Fein, the legal political arm of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, said he was "extremely weak" and could die "at any moment."

The other three hunger strikes are Frank Hughes, 27 and in the 48th day of his fast, and Raymond McCre5sh and Pat O'Hara, both 24 and in their 41st day. Visitors to the Maze Prison said Hughes was in critical condition while the condition of the other two was considered serious.

With the mostly Roman Catholic IRA promising widespread violence if Sands died and armed Protestant groups warning they would fight back, the outnumbered Catholic community prepared for war.

Housewives cleared some shops of bread, kerosene and canned foods. Hijacked excavators threw up street barricades in Catholic West Belfast. Plans were made to evacuate women and children to the Irish Republic, which is predominantly Catholic.

Meanwhile, Protestant paramilitary groups were reported stockpiling provisions in Lisburn, eight miles from Belfast.

Also on the Protestant side, 10 Presbyterian church leaders announced they would fly to the United States Monday for a three-week visit to argue the Protestant case to Catholic Irish-American leaders.

"The Irish-American community obviously identifies with one side of our community, and there are a great many sentimental ties," said Jack Weir, the secretary of the Presbyterian General Assembly, "but we must show that there is another tradition which also has its fears and worries."

Northern Ireland's million Protestants outnumber the province's 500,000 Catholics 2 to 1.

Thirteen people have been killed in Northern Ireland since March 1, when Sands began his strike demanding that imprisoned IRA guerrillas be treated as political prisoners. The British government refuses because that would constitute recognition of the terrorists as a legitimate political movement.

There was sporadic violence in Belfast Tuesday night. Shots were fired at army patrols, a van was hijacked, and gasoline bombs set a tobacco factory and a furniture warehouse afire. Security forces scattered bands of rioters with plastic bullets.

The Rev. John Magee, Pope John Paul's personal secretary, was expected to return to Rome today after failing in two visits to Sands to get him and the others to end their strikes.

Magee also met Tuesday with Humphrey Atkins, the cabinet minister for Northern Ireland, who reiterated the refusal of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government to make any concessions.

Polish party panel names workers to ruling Politburo

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist Party's Central Committee named two workers to the ruling Politburo at a 20-hour session devoted mostly to demands from rank-and-file members for reforms within the party.

Gerard Gabrys, a miner from Chorzow in the Silesian mining district of southern Poland, and Zygmunt Wronski, a metalworker from the Ursus tractor factory near Warsaw, were chosen by secret ballot during a marathon 20-hour Central Committee meeting that ended at 4 a.m. today, the official PAP news agency said.

It could not be learned immediately if the two men are members of the independent Solidarity labor federation.

During hours of speeches and debate, committee members demanded that workers be elevated to the Politburo, that the nation's social and economic problems be resolved speedily, and that there be a reckoning with former officials responsible for those problems.

Hospital's boards reach management agreement

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

The Midland County Hospital District board of directors adopted a new management agreement with the hospital's board of trustees Thursday as part of an afternoon of meetings.

Following an intensive study of the governing boards by the Tribrook Group Inc., the directors and trustees have undergone two months' review of the study recommendations in preparing the new criteria for the 3-year-old agreement.

Replacing the March 30, 1978, agreement between the two bodies, the management agreement approved Thursday spells out the relationship between the district and the foundation of Midland Memorial Hospital.

For the first time since the hospital became a district, the hospital's governing bodies have a clear delineation of duties, according to board members. Many of the functions previously assigned to the trustees during the recent renovations period have been given to either the hospital administrator or the board of directors. In addition, each body, committee and administrative worker is held accountable in an upward pyramid to the others.

Basic operations of the hospital continue to fall under the jurisdiction of the board of trustees. Specifically, the agreement reports the trustees are given "the general authority to govern, manage and operate the hospital."

Directors, it clarified, "retain and shall exercise all duties and authority over the assets and operations of the hospital."

However, each of the 42 agreement items mentions the Foundation's duties, but not all mention the District.

Some items contained in the agreement include:

—Control over the medical staff appointments and dismissals to fall to the trustees and the medical staff.

—Indigent care policies and implementation to be done by the trustees.

—Periodic financial condition reports and hospital progress reports to be implemented by the trustees.

—Joint meetings "to insure adequate liason between the District and the Foundation" to be called "at reasonable times and from time to time upon at least five days written notice."

—Joint planning of goals and objectives for the hospital and district to be done by the directors and the trustees.

—Hospital compliance with governmental statutes and laws, in addition to the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospital standards coming under the jurisdiction of the trustees.

—Preparation of the annual budget and supervision of the hospital's accounting system by the trustees.

—Collection of all hospital accounts due to the district to be done by the trustees, with an emphasis on minimizing "the number and amount of bad debts."

—Recommendation of room rates from trustees to directors.

—Disbursement of gifts and donations received by the Foundation to

But the "slight" probability of that occurring is 30 percent tonight.

The likelihood of rainfall on Friday — May Day — is 20 percent, said a weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

With today's overcast comes temperature peaking in the upper 80s, a drop tonight into the low 60s and a high Friday in the mid-80s.

Winds today and Friday are to be southerly at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight, the southerly winds are to decrease to the 10 to 15 mph.

The high temperature for Thursday was 82 degrees, which lagged the record high of 95 degrees for the date in 1947. The overnight low of 52 degrees was nowhere near the record low of 41 degrees for the date in 1960.

Firefighters prepared Wednesday to climb down into the crater left by the explosion and collapse of a huge jet fuel storage tank cleaned by a seven-man crew in Newington, N.H. Two members of the crew are missing. Authorities believe the two are underneath the tank's steel cover and six feet of earth on top of it, seen at right on the tank's bottom.

Bulldozer, backhoe work ruins

No bodies found yet by rescue teams

NEWINGTON, N.H. (AP) — Authorities brought in a bulldozer and backhoe today to help remove the ruins of an Air Force jet-fuel storage tank destroyed in a powerful explosion that trapped two tank cleaners.

"We haven't found any bodies yet," said Police Officer Tom Gordon as search teams poked carefully through the debris.

But acting Fire Chief Larry Wahl said there was little chance the men could have survived the flaming blast, which lifted the tank's 100-foot-round lid, a one-foot layer of concrete and a six-foot cover of earth several feet into the air.

The lid then plummeted to the bottom of the 24-foot, 3.3-million gallon tank, the steel beams that had supported it piercing the cover.

Two other members of the seven-man cleaning crew suffered second- and third-degree burns, but were described as "doing quite well" at nearby Portsmouth Hospital. The other crew members were uninjured.

The cause of the Wednesday morning explosion was not known, and Wahl said, "I don't think we'll ever know." The tank had been emptied for cleaning.

As rescue crews looked for the two missing eployees of Jet Line Services Inc., many of the fire trucks and firefighters not directly involved in the search were pulled back to minimize injuries and loss of equipment should there be another explosion, said Wahl.

"If something should happen there is a good chance that the people that would be down there would get hurt and the equipment be put out of service, so that's why we pulled everybody back," he said.

Police Chief John Stimson identified the missing men as Ken Anderson of South Portland, Maine, and Jim Audlee, 26, of Stoughton, Mass.

Stimson said authorities would bring in a large crane to help remove at least 100 tons of debris that fell to the bottom of the tank.

"I saw a guy flying through the air," said Thomas McManus, a pipefitter who saw the explosion. "The whole top of the ground lifted. We just took off for cover."

The tank was entirely covered by earth, and as such was described as being underground. However, the surrounding earth actually was built up around the tank, forming a high grassy mound around and over the structure.

Wahl said he ordered an adjacent liquified petroleum gas and liquified natural gas terminal and two oil terminals closed until the danger of a second explosion passed.

He said officials at the terminal were confident another blast would not damage their huge tank 100 yards from the damaged fuel tank.

The damaged tank was one of six that stored fuel for nearby Pease Air Force Base. It is owned by the Air Force and managed by Defense Fuel Supply Center, which is run by the Defense Department's Defense Logistics Agency.

Wednesday was the first day of a routine cleaning operation.

Supreme Court limits 'one person, one vote' rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, further limiting its "one person, one vote" principle, says a government-backed Arizona water district can be controlled by people owning at least an acre of land.

The justices, on a 5-4 vote, ruled Wednesday that it was constitutional to exclude the non-landowners from choosing directors for the Salt River agricultural and power district.

The district, referred to by the high court as a "governmental entity," sells electricity to virtually half the population of Arizona through its hydro-electric operations.

The district was authorized and given substantial taxing and other powers by the state Legislature, although the Supreme Court said it had only a "nominal public character."

The project also involved flood control and environmental management and provides water to 236,000 acres of land in the central part of the state.

The Supreme Court set down the "one person, one vote" principle in a 1964 decision governing the election of state legislatures. The ruling said allotment of a legislature's seats must be based on population, not geography, to emphasize the importance of a popular elections.

"The functions of the Salt River district are ... of the narrow, special sort which justifies a departure from the popular election requirement of the (1964 decision)," Justice Potter Stewart wrote Wednesday for the majority.

The court expanded the 1964 principle to include county officials and later said popular elections were required for trustees of a community college district.

However, in 1973, the justices said the "one person, one vote" principle didn't extend to control of a water district serving a sparsely populated, agricultural population.

The 1973 ruling was based on a finding that the district didn't exercise enough governmental powers to require popular elections.

The court came to the same conclusion Wednesday, even though the Salt River district exercises some traditional governmental powers such as condemning land, selling tax-exempt bonds and levying taxes on real estate.

"The district simply does not exercise the sort of governmental powers that invoke the strict demands of (the 1964 decision). ... It cannot enact any laws governing the conduct of citizens, nor does it administer such normal functions of government as the maintenance of streets, the operation of schools or sanitation, health or welfare services," Stewart said.

Stewart also said the size of the district, which began in 1895 as an farmers' cooperative, did not bring it within the "one person, one vote" requirement.

list for this month because it seems we are wasting a lot of man hours." However, after looking over the list, she added, "After studing this, I may just ask for a few."

According to current guidelines for bad debts, directors have 10 days after the monthly meeting to submit accounts to the finance office for further work before approving its referral to collection agencies.

Indigent care came to $66,627 for the month, while capital equipment costs for budgeted purchases was $54,-797.

Other equipment purchases approved for the month include a Collimater, a Microprocessor Farmer Dosimeter, a Film Densitometer System, a Styroformer, a general purpose centrifuge, and a microfilm system for a total of more than $37,-000.

Most of that equipment will be used in the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center scheduled to open in June. The Collimater is an adjusting device which attaches to the orthovoltage machine to direct and shape the size of its beam, Assistant Administrator of Operations A.C. Buchanan explained. The dosimeter tests the accuracy of the beam of the linear accelerator. A Styroformer is used in constructing radiation shields.

The microfilm system will be used in converting medical records more than five years old into a microfiche catologueing system. Since the hospital's records go back 31 years, Buchanan said if two typists were working on the machine full-time, it would take them 2½ years to "catch up" the records on microfiche. However, Miller added finding an outside firm to do the conversion for each year would cost more than the $24,120 system approved Thursday.

In other board news:

—Recently elected directors Ed Magruder and Wanda Mohr were sworn in to office by Judge Pat Baskin. Dr. Henrie Mast, who also was re-elected, will be sworn in at the June meeting.

—Officer elections for the year were held, with Ed Magruder named president, Henrie Mast vice president and Pat Estes secretary.

—Plans to set up a long-range planning committee were discussed and members of all three boards, the hospital staff, the medical staff and community members will be asked to join the committee. The list of members will be established at the June meeting.

the District.

—Recruitment and pay scales of employees fall to the trustees for approval.

—Bonding of both the Foundation and the administrator for fidelity to the district.

In addition, specific dollar amounts were set up to delineate an approval system for extending cash requirements each month, with $250,000 the figure at which the trustees must have the directors approve such an item.

Republicans draft bill to end VISTA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Key Senate Republicans are circulating draft legislation that would implement the Reagan administration's plan to end the VISTA volunteer service program by the end of fiscal 1983.

Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., chairman of the subcommittee handling VISTA legislation, plans to introduce the bill within a few days.

But in the House, where Democrats hold the majority, the administration bill has yet to find a sponsor, and Rep. Austin Murphy, D-Pa., has introduced a rival measure that would keep VISTA alive for four more years.

Murphy was opening hearings today on his proposal.

Denton, chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee on aging and the family, declared his support for the administration plan at the opening of his panel's recent hearings on VISTA's future.

VISTA, the acronym for Volunteers in Service to America, began 15 years ago as part of the Johnson administration's anti-poverty program. VISTA had 4,800 volunteers serving 2,000 communities as of last September, but budget cuts are forcing a reduction to 2,725 in 1,400 communities by the 1982 fiscal year beginning Oct. 1

Volunteers are paid a stipend averaging $375 a month for living expenses and are forbidden to take other jobs. They are assigned to work with non-profit local community organizations or government agencies.

The Reagan administration is trying to end VISTA because officials say the program's "limited successes do not justify the continued outlay of federal funds," said a memo announcing the decision April 3 to employees of VISTA and its parent agency ACTION.

Several private organizations are campaigning to save the program and are building some support among Democrats.

The draft Senate bill carries Denton's name and was prepared by his subcommittee staff members who declined to discuss the contents until the measure is formally introduced in the Senate. The staff is circulating the draft to other subcommittee members for comment.

The draft bill would trim the authorized budget for VISTA and two smaller ACTION programs to $25.8 million for fiscal 1982 and $15.4 million for fiscal 1983. The current budget for VISTA alone is $32 million.

Meanwhile, Murphy, chairman of the House subcommittee on select education, proposed extending the VISTA program for four years. That bill would keep spending next year at $32 million and authorize 8 percent annual increases in the VISTA budget.

Fraud firm in town

Anyone contacted by a firm attempting to sell ads in a driver's safety pamphlet on behalf of the Dawson County (Lamesa) Sheriff's Department is urged to contact local authorities immediately.

A Midland Sheriff's Department spokesman said this morning that the Dawson County Sheriff's Office has no knowledge of such a pamphlet and has not authorized its name being used in connection with it. The firm has been calling local businesses by phone trying to sell the ads.

UAW, AFL-CIO merger necessary at this time

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor leaders are heartened by the United Auto Workers' decision to reunite with the AFL-CIO, saying union solidarity is essential in a time of Reagan administration assaults on cherished social programs and job safety regulations.

By voting overwhelmingly in favor of the reaffiliation, UAW delegates endorsed an idea that has been promoted heavily by UAW President Douglas Fraser and AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

All that remains is for the leaders of the two union giants to iron out details of the reaffiliation, a process that is expected to be completed by the end of the summer.

"It will greatly strengthen both unions," said Glenn Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America and member of the AFL-CIO's executive council.

"It will certainly make the AFL-CIO a more significant force," he said.

Watts said he had no doubts that the administration's policies on labor issues hastened the the 12 million-member UAW to move back into the ranks of the nation's largest labor federation.

"I believe that the sense of urgency was in fact impacted by recent political and economic developments," he said.

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, agreed.

"I think it's very important in terms of strengthening the entire labor movement," he said. "The fact that we're having all these budget cuts and an administration that seems hostile to labor in some areas" contributed to the auto workers' decision.

Shanker said he hopes other unions now independent of the AFL-CIO, such as the National Education Association, will follow suit.

One source close to the labor movement, declining to be identified, said the UAW move reflects an understanding of what's going on in the political arena and the relatively poor standing of the labor movement.

Discussions on the arrangements through which the reaffiliation will be accomplished are sure to surface at a meeting of the AFL-CIO's executive council in Baltimore next week.

Fraser and other top UAW officials already have said the linkup will not result in higher dues for union members, saying the $2.7 million-a-year assessment will come out of the international UAW's resources. They also have said that local and state affiliates will be able to remain independent of state AFL-CIO federations.

Kirkland has said he wants to bring disaffected unions back into the AFL-CIO's "house of labor" and has extended an invitation to the Teamsters to rejoin.

The two unions have held talks at the committee level, but the next move is up to the Teamsters, whose convention begins June 1 in Las Vegas.

Three local children injured in two separate accidents

Two separate traffic accidents Wednesday injured three Midland children, one of whom was admitted to Midland Memorial Hospital.

Listed in satisfactory condition this morning with extensive facial lacerations was six-year-old Theresia Ruth Rounsville of 2204 W. Cuthbert. She was a passenger in a 1978 Cadillac driven by 41-year-old Alice Rounsville of the same address.

According to police, the Rounsville vehicle was southbound on Big Spring Street and attempting a left turn onto Schabauer Drive when it and a 1969 Ford driven by 37-year-old Bobby Littleton collided about 9:15 p.m. Littleton was northbound on Big Spring at the time.

Another passenger in the Rounsville car, 16-year-old David Royce Rounsville, was treated for minor injuries and released from the hospital.

Ten-year-old Dean Williams of 1103 Delmar also was treated and released following an accident in the 3300 block of Andrews Highway Wednesday afternoon.

Police said the Williams boy was attempting to cross the street on his bicycle when it and a 1978 Chevrolet driven by Billy Ray McFarland, 34, of 2715 Franklin, collided about 3:35 p.m. McFarland swerved but could not avoid the collision. No charges were filed.

Li Cunxin, 20-year-old exchange student from the People's Republic of China, and his new bride, 18-year-old Elizabeth Mackey of West Palm Beach, Fla., leave the Chinese consulate in Houston after gaining Li's release Wednesday.

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — A Chinese ballet soloist and an American ballerina today were enjoying a honeymoon that almost got off on the wrong foot because of a diplomatic tug-of-war.

Their 20-hour drama had a storybook ending Wednesday, when Chinese officials allowed Li Cunxin, 20, to leave their four-story, steel-grated consulate with his bride of two days, Elizabeth Mackey, 18.

Li, a big hit as guest soloist with the Houston Ballet, was scheduled to return to China on Wednesday. Instead, he informed consulate officials Tuesday that he had married an American girl and would not be returning after all.

At that point, Li was forcibly detained, said his attorney, Charles Foster.

When he and his bride emerged nearly a full day later, both appeared weary but happy.

Li said the Chinese "regretted but respected" his decision.

Foster said Li planned to apply for U.S. citizenship. He said Li would not seek political asylum.

"I am very happy to stay with my wife in America and work in America," Li said in halting English as the new Mrs. Li clung to him.

She did not speak to anyone as the couple dodged a crowd of reporters.

The newlyweds, whose romance blossomed in the Houston Ballet Company, hurried into a waiting car and sped away to a destination so secret even the bride's mother didn't know it.

"They need time by themselves," said Janet Mackey of her daughter and her new son-in-law.

"She knows it's not going to be easy," said Mrs. Mackey, who arrived in Houston on Sunday from her home in West Palm Beach, Fla.

She said Li and her daughter, who moved to Texas to study at the Houston Ballet Academy, would return to West Palm Beach and live there "a couple of months, to establish residency" after their honeymoon.

Li originally came to the United States as a scholarship apprentice but the dancer impressed the critics last summer and was named a soloist for one season. At that time, China granted him an extension to remain in the United States beyond the normal 18 months usually given cultural exchange artists.

Mrs. Mackey said Li met her daughter in November 1979 when the Houston troupe was on tour in Florida.

"I found out they were in love last November, but it was growing before that — you could see the signs," she said.

However, the marriage apparently took ballet officials by surprise.

"We didn't know they had been out (dating) and we were shocked that they could do something like this and we not know about it," said Marcia Carter, assistant to the company's artistic director.

When the ballet officials learned of the wedding, performed Monday by a justice of the peace, they advised Li to discuss his plans with Chinese officials.

So Li, his wife and nine Houston Ballet officials went to the consulate to break the news. When three Chinese officials forcibly removed Li from the room, the others stayed through the night, Foster said.

A U.S. deputy marshal who tried to serve a summons to Chinese officials at the consulate was turned away.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said officials of the two nations had been in "urgent communication" about the case.

Finally, Jack Kirkland, chairman of the Houston Ballet Foundation, emerged and announced Li would be freed.

"The Chinese were just concerned because in China men are not permitted to marry until they are 22," he said. "They wanted to make sure he fully understood his decision and that it was in his best interests."

Kirkland praised the Chinese for the way they resolved the issue.

"We talked and reasoned and learned from a great nation," he said.

Carey seeks church's sanction

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Hugh Carey will seek to have the Roman Catholic Church sanction his marriage to Evangeline Gouletas-Carey by convincing a church marriage tribunal that her three previous marriages were not valid, Carey aides confirmed late Wednesday.

Mrs. Gouletas-Carey will seek to have her first and third marriages nullified on the grounds that her first husband was a bigamist and there was "no cohabitation" with her third husband, they said.

Mrs. Gouletas-Carey's second marriage would not present a problem for a Roman Catholic marriage tribunal because it was by a civil ceremony, not recognized by the church as a valid marriage.

However, The New York Times reported in its Thursday editions that Frank Kallaniotis, now a Los Angeles restaurateur, denied that he was married when he and Mrs. Gouletas-Carey wed in 1955.

The newspaper also said Evangelos Metaxes, her third husband, declined to respond to an allegation by Mrs. Gouletas-Carey that he "did not like women."

"It is not true anyway, but I don't want to bother anymore," Metaxes was quoted by the newspaper.

Carey, a Roman Catholic, and his new bride were married April 11 in New York City in a Greek Orthodox Church ceremony. The marriage has not been recognized by Carey's church.

The 44-year-old Greek-born Mrs. Gouletas-Carey was a co-founder of American Invsco, one of the nation's largest condominium conversion companies. She and two fo her brothers founded the firm in 1969.

The 62-year-old Carey was a widower whose first wife, Helen, died in 1974 of cancer.

Jill Schuker, the governor's press secretary, said negotiations had been underway with the Roman Catholic Church "for the past week." She said there had been talks with church officials in Chicago, but that an approach to a marriage tribunal might be made in some other city, such as Albany or New York City.

New York farmers fight against burial site for PCBs

Hearst Special News Service

FORT EDWARD, N.Y. -- Fifty-four years ago -- when burly Bud Grant was nine months old -- his father moved his family to the rolling, grassy pasture just south of here that they still farm. The Grant family, in fact, has farmed in the area for 200 years, "when they still had to fight Indians to do it," he says.

But now, just west of his 400-acre dairy ranch, looms a threat to the Grant family's livelihood. New York State has pinpointed the 250 acres of unused farmland lying between Grant's farm and the Hudson River as the spot where it wishes to bury thousands of tons of cancer-linked PCBs dredged from the Hudson.

In a classic case of "yes, I would like that but not in my neighborhood," Hudson River fishermen and environmental groups so far support the idea. It is mostly residents like Grant who are fighting the program.

"Say, you know when you get a bunch of farmers mad it is about the worst thing you can do," Grant says, referring to his county's $60 million-a-year farm industry. "We'll go all the way to the Supreme Court if we have to but we're going to stop this thing. And I'm not going to run. After all, I was practically born here."

The feistiness shown by Grant and his neighbors hardly seems to have discouraged the state Department of Environmental Conservation. Since 1975, when polychlorinated biphenyls were discovered to be a problem in the river, environmental officials have considered ridding the river of the chemicals a top priority.

Their determination -- and Grant's stubbornness -- is a reflection of the potential deadliness of PCBs. In large amounts, they can sicken and even kill animals and humans. In small amounts taken over a long time, scientists fear they can cause skin disease, reproductive disorders, liver damage, and even cancer.

How much of this clear, odorless, molasses-thick liquid killer is in the Hudson? The state Department of Environmental Conversation estimates at least 500,000 pounds, much of it mixed into the river's bed. "And remember, that is just an estimate," department spokeswoman Barbara Hogan says.

It is there because the General Electric Co. used to use PCBs -- which are excellent electric insulators -- in building electrical capacitors at its plants in Hudson Falls and Fort Edward, Washington County. The company used to dump an average of 30 pounds per day of the toxics into the river. The state got GE to stop the dumping in 1977 in an out-of-court settlement reached the previous year. But much of the damage had already been done.

Studies have found that the Hudson's water, sediments, animals, and plants have all been affected by PCBs. Its levels in fish from the river are so high that New York has banned all fishing north of Troy, and most commercial fishing south of there.

Several communities -- including Waterford in Saratoga County and Poughkeepsie in Dutchess County -- derive their drinking water from the river. While scientists consider the river water safe to drink, there is a recognition that the PCBs cannot be ignored.

"I don't think we have a health problem for people breathing the air," said Cornell University biochemist Dr. Edward H. Buckley, referring to the estimated 7,500 pounds of PCBs that evaporate from the river each year. "And the milk from cows in Washington and Saratoga Counties is okay. But if we forgot about the existence of this, we may find it will all catch up with us."

Late last year, Washington approved the spending of $20 million in federal funds to help clean up the river -- providing New York puts up $6.7 million of its own. Gov. Carey recommended spending that amount in his proposed budget last month. The state intends to dredge as much of the PCBs as it can from the river and "encapsulate" it -- or bury it in a clay-lined site that will be carefully monitored -- next to Grant's farm.

But consider the limitations and problems:

--State officials estimate the $26.7 million in federal and state funds will be enough for them to remove about 100,000 pounds of PCBs, or just one-fifth of what is there.

--Some 40 "hotspots," or areas of greatest PCB concentration, were located three years ago. They may have moved since then.

--A season of heavy rains could cause serious problems. "What really worries us is that with an unusually heavy waterflow, sediments in the river could be shifted and we might never be able to get some of it out," Cornell's Buckley said. "Or it would take at least another couple of years to relocate it," And,

--The dredged PCB-laden sediments will have to be stored and monitored at the Ford Edward site indefinitely, because state officials say no affordable way of destroying PCBs has been discovered. And no PCB storage project as large as the proposed Fort Edward site has ever before been attempted.

Environmental Conservation officials insist that local residents have nothing to worry about. Through studies, meetings, and pamphlets on the topic, they have repeatedly tried to assure local residents that the dredged PCBs will be securely stored and meticulously monitored.

Treatment, help available on scuba diving accidents

Dear Dr. Solomon: A few weeks ago I twisted an ankle during running. When it continued to bother me, my doctor referred me to a sports medicine clinic which is based at a local hospital. The injury turned out to be a minor one, and a week later I was out jogging again. While I was having my ankle taped, I asked the doctor about another of my hobbies, scuba diving, and the kinds of injuries associated with it. However, he confessed that he did not know much about it since he had never had occasion to treat anyone involved in a scuba diving accident. I realize there are more joggers than scuba divers, but is anyone trained to handle diving accidents the way some doctors are now equipped to handle other sports-related injuries? — Marty

Dear Marty: While joggers certainly outnumber scuba divers, the number of divers now active is not insignificant. Dr. Peter Bennett, of the Laboratory for Environmental Sciences of the Duke University Medical Center, estimates there are from 2 million to 4 million sport, scientific, and commercial divers, and about 250,000 more are being trained each year. Nevertheless, it is rare for a doctor to be called upon to treat a diving-related injury.

Now, however, help in the treatment of scuba diving accidents is available to anyone in the United States. Dr. Bennett, who is a professor of anesthesiology, administers the United States National Diving Accident Network (DAN), which offers the type of assistance you refer to in your letter. Although DAN is based at Duke University, its services are available to anyone in the country. All a physician or other person in need of emergency assistance in a scuba diving-related accident has to do is call 1-919-684-8111 and ask for the Diving Accident Network. The call is referred to one of the trained, experienced physicians who are on call 24 hours a day.

The doctor who takes the call either advises the person on how to handle the patient, or explains how the person can get in touch with the nearest regional coordinator in the seven-region network. If the physician does not feel that the region closest to the patient has the necessary equipment and staff, the caller is referred to the next nearest region.

Each region has recompression chamber facilities that are operated by trained technicians, and a physician who is trained in diving medicine and who is on call around the clock. The regional coordinators are even prepared to assist with arrangements for jet or other transportation which may be needed to get the patient to the proper facility.

The two most frequent serious scuba-related accidents are arterial gas embolisms (blockages due to bubbles in arteries carrying blood to the brain) and decompression sickness, which includes joint pains (the bends), chest pains and shortness of breath, numbness, paralysis, and other symptoms caused by surfacing too rapidly from a dive. Both of these conditions may even result in death.

Reversing the trend

President Ronald Reagan appears within striking distance of an economic package that could reverse the treacherous path this nation has been following some time.

In fact, early this week House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said enough Democrats may cross over to give Reagan the support he needs to pass his history-making tax and spending cut proposals. That truly would constitute a major victory for the American electorate.

If the politics of the 1960s and 1970s was for more social programs and federal involvement in the daily lives of Americans, then the politics of the 1980s will be — at least at this point — for government within the means of the taxpayers and less federal involvement in our daily lives. The taxpayers of the United States have witnessed the economic pitfalls inherent in the economic programs of those politicians who promise only pie in the sky.

This time around the taxpayers were looking for some honest-to-goodness economic proposals that could begin to pull the nation from this economic tar-pit.

Ronald Reagan was elected with the mandate to enact legislative proposals he convinced the taxpayers are the only course back to the good life. We knew what we were doing when we elected Mr. Reagan. It's true that we may not yet have realized the full intensity his proposals will bring to bear on the nation. But we did recognize the importance of this change.

It hasn't been easy, even to this point. Some members of Congress have nearly choked swallowing the austerity pill. Others still are unable to accept the reality that this is what the American public wants. They're being dragged kicking and screaming through the motions of enacting the economic program.

But, for the most part, it seems Mr. Reagan's proposals are gaining momentum in Washington, as they have throughout the nation.

As Mr. O'Neill noted earlier in the week, the members of Congress "go with the will of the people and the will of the people today is to go with the president."

"I've been in politics an awful long time and I know when you fight and when you don't fight," the speaker added.

If Mr. O'Neill is correct and Congress does go along with Mr. Reagan's proposals we will all be responsible for enacting what may be one of the most distasteful programs of all time. We also will have had a part in possibly saving the nation from financial ruin.

Learn now or later

Three recent Gallup poll findings are suggested reading for members of Congress.

One poll shows most Americans are not opposed to budget cuts because they believe that 48 cents of every tax dollar taken in is wasted.

The second shows that of persons acquainted with the concept that a lower minimum wage for teen-agers would mean more jobs for teen-agers, nearly half are in favor of the proposal.

The third shows that half of the black population thinks that busing to bring about school integration "has caused more difficulties than it is worth."

The politics of the 1980s may prove that people are getting smarter and smarter about what went wrong in the 1960s and 1970s.

The question now is whether elected officials correct their policies or learn their lesson the hard way at the hands of the voters.

ART BUCHWALD

'Some people can't speak 'body language' correctly

Art Buchwald

Phyllis Schlafly testifying in front of the Senate Labor Committee on sexual harassment in the workplace: "When a woman walks across the room, she speaks with a universal body language that most men intuitively understand. Men hardly ever ask sexual favors of women from whom the certain answer is 'No.' Virtuous women are seldom accosted by unwelcome sexual propositions or familiarities, obscene talk or profane language."

I never accept a statement from a Senate witness without first checking it out. So I went to a government agency the other day run by a friend of mine and showed him Mrs. Schlafly's statement.

"What do you want to do?" he asked.

"I would like to observe the universal body language of your female employees, to see if they're saying anything."

"Be my guest," he said.

I went out into a large office and stationed myself near the water cooler.

In a few moments I noticed a woman walk across the room with a folder in her hands. Intuition told me she was trying to tell me something.

When she got to the cooler I said, "What were you saying with your body when you were coming over here?" I asked her.

"I was thirsty and wanted a drink of water."

"There was more to it than that," I challenged her. "I got the feeling you were going to say 'Yes.'"

"Yes, what?"

"Yes, please."

"Get out of my way, buster, before I kick you in the shins."

"Please don't get upset. I'm just doing a study on sexual harassment in the office, and I felt that because of the way you were swinging your hips as you crossed the room, you were sending me a message."

"What kind of message?"

"Well, if it wasn't clearly a 'yes,' it certainly wasn't a definite 'no.'"

"No what?"

"No, like in 'what kind of a girl do you think I am?'"

"What department in the government did you say you were from?"

"I'm not in any department. You see, Phyllis Schlafly, who is an expert on sexual harassment, testified that you can tell a loose woman from a virtuous woman just by the way she walks. There are certain women who men know instinctively are asking for it all the time."

"She sounds sick."

"On the contrary. She's a very distinguished member of the far right, and because of her walk she's never been propositioned in her life."

"Maybe it's her face."

"Oh, no, she's a very presentable woman, but there is something about her that would keep any man from wanting to accost her. She exudes virtue and has never been pinched once."

"That's because she's never run into Sammy."

"Who's Sammy?"

"That creep over there. He's got more tentacles than an octopus."

"Maybe he's a student of body language, and he can tell when a woman wants to be harassed and when she doesn't," I suggested. "I'll bet he wouldn't lay a hand on Phyllis Schlafly."

"You don't know Sammy. He doesn't care how women walk as long as they are wearing a skirt."

"But if what you say is true, that means that Mrs. Schlafly's theory about women is all wet."

"I don't know about that. But if she walked next to Sammy she'd be black and blue by the end of the day."

"Even if everything about Mrs. Schlafly's body language says, 'No.'?"

"Sammy says those are the easiest kind."

FBI's bigger budgets cover fishy expenses

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — The FBI's crime statistics are the official yardstick of just how much evil lurks in the hearts of men. The arithmetic does not reflect favorably on the FBI, which seems powerless to cope with the rising crime rate.

The G-men nevertheless show no embarrassment over the increase. The more crime that is committed, the more money they require to fight it. So at appropriations time, they point to the grim statistics not as evidence of their own inadequacy but as justification for a bigger budget.

Usually, Congress is duly impressed and votes the FBI the funds it requests to safeguard the nation. Yet the Justice Department's internal documents show this money is sometimes misspent. Here are just a few of the improprieties documented in records that the public was never supposed to see:

"We've found some pretty disturbing evidence of improprieties, some of which were unearthed less than a year ago," a congressional aide told my associate Indy Badhwar. "We suspect these abuses are continuing."

The "improprieties" involve individual corner-cutting as well as serious violations of contracts involving millions of dollars. Here are some examples:

— "Emergency purchases" — which do not require contracts or even purchase orders — have been used by G-men to avoid regular accounting channels. These supposed emergencies result in expenditures of millions of dollars each year, and have included payments for agents' physical exams, auto repairs, conference expenses, laundry, office supplies, parking, tuition and utility charges.

— The bulk of FBI contracts were found to have gone to "sole source" suppliers — noncompetitive awards that are an open invitation to sweetheart arrangements. The investigators found cases in which contractors submitted unsolicited proposals and then coached bureau officials on ways to justify contract awards without competitive bidding.

— A 1976 internal investigation found that FBI officials had been guests of the Remington Arms Co. at a weekend hunting retreat a few years earlier. The company paid for accommodations, hunting licenses, liquor, ammunition and guides. The investigation concluded that it was OK, however, because Remington had no FBI contracts at the time. But documents show that the bureau was buying thousands of dollars' worth of Remington shotguns under small-purchase procedures.

— The bureau recently bought new office furniture, though it had $279,000 worth of furniture in storage — in a warehouse that costs $16,909 a year.

— When the Marriott Corporation's food service contract for the FBI Academy at Quantico, Va., came up for renewal some years ago, an FBI official recommended soliciting competitive bids only to "keep within the sphere of federal ... regulations." The time for submitting bids was so "unduly restrictive," the auditors concluded, that only one competitor made the deadline. The result was succinctly summarized by the routing slip of the review committee: "Memo with our recommendation on way up! Of course it is Marriott." In 1976, Marriott offered $15,000 to the FBI recreation association's snack bar. Marriott says it was not a donation, but was "intended as our own investment to upgrade the existing facility." The FBI's legal counsel shot down the proposal.

About 1,000 revolvers were purchased solely from Smith & Wesson on grounds that non-uniformity of handguns would create a safety hazard. FBI officials also said the S&W revolver was the only weapon used in most of its gun battles. But government auditors found that agents are in fact allowed to carry either Smith & Wessons or Colts, according to personal preference.

— In the absence of documentation, auditors were unable to determine whether the FBI had actually received many of the goods and services which invoices showed had been paid for.

Footnote: At least one member of Congress is not willing to give the FBI a blank check. He is Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, whose investigators are checking up on the FBI expenditures. The senator is planning to take up the matter with FBI Director William Webster.

ARAB TILT?: Robert Neumann, President Reagan's nominee for the sensitive post of ambassador to Saudi Arabia, has aroused concern in some circles for what is perceived as his pro-Arab, anti-Israel "tilt."

He has been an enthusiastic supporter of the proposed sale of sophisticated U.S. aircraft to the Saudis, which Israel and its friends in Congress are vehemently opposed to. "The Saudis have made this a test of faith," he told my associate Lucette Lagnado. "If our relations nosedive before I get there, God help us."

At a recent dinner at the University of California at Los Angeles — closed to the press — Neumann was guest of honor. His speech upset a number of those present, who detected a definite anti-Israel bias in Neumann's remarks. They interpreted his statement that the Reagan administration would not "crawl on our bellies before certain people" as a reference to Israel.

"When he got to Israel, it was rather shocking," one listener recalled. "He revealed some very hostile feelings."

Neumann, who was born in Austria 65 years ago and spent part of his youth in a Nazi concentration camp, denies that he is either anti-Israel or anti-Semitic. Those who think he is are "paranoid," he told us.

He was the author of a critique of the Camp David accords in a publication of Georgetown University, where he works. He wrote that the Egypt-Israel agreement was not fair to the Palestinians, and declared that no peace is possible in the Middle East without solving the Palestinian problem.

A CHANGING WORLD

8 reasons — but no solutions — for the crime problem

John Pinkerman

The attempted assassination on March 30 of President Reagan, as shocking as it was, had no unique aspects to it insofar as life in America is concerned.

A tourist from Finland, raped by a gang of young hoodlums in Honolulu, had this to say after a jury found the defendants innocent even though they had confessed to their crime:

"Your whole (American) legal system is a big gamble. What's right and wrong really have nothing to do with it. Whichever side can think of better tricks to defeat the other side wins. Justice has nothing to do with it."

To a great extent, she is right. But there are many other reasons — eight come to mind immediately — for the staggering upsurge in violent crimes, including murder, rape, assault and armed robbery.

The even sadder aspect of the problem is that it is so complex and so accepted by a battered public that there is little chance of improvement in most of our lifetimes. The more tranquil and law-abiding days of the 1920s and '30s are gone forever.

1. There is the breakdown in family life. Of course there are exceptions, but the days of close association between parents and offspring are vanishing. Working mothers have no time and scant desire to spend recreation hours with sons and daughters. Our youngsters wander aimlessly and without supervision — and they wander along the road to first petty, then serious crime.

2. There is our permissive society. Reckless behavior is an accepted part of everyday life in this era. Cheating is applauded rather than despised. Immoral association is envied. The permissiveness breeds hostility toward the "establishment," whatever that might be, and the result is unlawful behavior starting with shoplifting, ending with murder and terrorism.

3. Our minorities are part of the problem, whether they like it or not. They are underprivileged and undereducated. They have a tough time, and to make things less tough they resort to crime of all sorts — against their own and against the hated whites. Their crime rate far exceeds their share of the population.

4. There is the matter of lawyers — and police. Police are frustrated by their inability to get convictions once they catch a criminal and by the frequency with which young thugs attack officers. The matter of lawyers is more complicated and it relates directly to the "tricks" the unfortunate Finnish woman spoke of.

Generally, defense lawyers are more qualified than prosecutors. District attorneys seldom prosecute in the courtroom these days — they leave such work to young and mostly untrained assistants. Prosecutors frequently have more interest in the politics concerned with their positions than with convictions in court. Defense lawyers' collective aim is to get rich — so they try harder, succeed more (despite what we may say about defying justice) and their "tricks" are more effective than those of prosecutors.

5. There is the matter of judges and juries. For reasons that are difficult to understand, too many judges these days show more concern for the criminal than for the victim of a crime. In most cases they interpret the law liberally on the side of the criminal, far beyond the admonition to find a defendant guilty "beyond a reasonable doubt." Juries are a product of our permissive society. They behave in reflection of that association and the accompanying hostility toward law and order.

6. Prisons are part of the problem. Practically every jail and prison in the nation is overcrowded. This breeds more hostility toward authority, more determination to get revenge on release — and it also breeds an ultraliberal policy regarding early release and the freeing of criminals to resume their "profession." Likewise, there is less stigma concerned with going to prison these days and this fact of life does little to discourage crime.

7. There is the matter of parole boards. Even when a rare judge does put a dangerous criminal away for a long period, thus partly insuring the public's safety, parole boards, again loaded with liberals and social reformers, find a way to send the rapist back to resume his horrible crimes.

8. The system of probation and bond is part of the problem. Few men and women seized by police are held in jail awaiting trial these days. The result is that there is a tremendous increase in crime by men out on bail and awaiting trial on a previous count. Probation officers are overcome with too many "clients" and the result of this is that freed felons easily and quickly drift back into the behavior that put them behind bars in the first place.

In Honolulu, 1,500 citizens went into the streets to demonstrate against the defiance of justice in the case regarding rape of the Finnish woman. Americans across the nation are outraged by the conduct of all those soft on crime.

However, sadly, there is little in the future to be cheerful about. Expensive government and private studies tell us much — almost everything but how to reverse the trend toward more violent crime and acceptance of it.

Horseplay involves more than race

Folks in Louisville already kicking up their heels

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Two minutes after the world's fastest 3-year-olds line up at the post, the 107th Run for the Roses will be history and 150,000 spectators will start hoofing it out of Churchill Downs.

But the Kentucky Derby won't be run until Saturday. Until then, folks in Louisville are kicking up their heels in an annual 10-day display of continuous horseplay.

With a turtle race here and a Jockey Ball there, Louisville counts down to race day with 70 separate events, a prescription for Derby fever guaranteed to infect the healthiest of citizens.

The name of the game is anticipation, in the form of a pre-race romp billed by Derby Festival organizer Rosemary Bailey as the biggest civic celebration in the country.

"Everything's a sellout," Mrs. Bailey said. "This is New Year's Eve, Mardi Gras and Easter all rolled into one."

Box seats for the Sport of Kings' premiere event rent for several thousand dollars. But commoners have their fun, too.

Not all the critters racing in Louisville during Derby week live in stables, like top contenders Proud Appeal, Cure the Blues, Top Shoes and Class Go Go.

Turtles are fair game, as are rats and paddle wheelers, hot-air balloons and Porsches.

Firefighters battled the clock last Saturday. The city's waiters ran their obstacle course Tuesday, balancing trays of wine in an event dubbed — what else? — the Run for the Rose.

Elsewhere in Louisville, the zoo gives a birthday party, the city's puppet population performs and street vendors dish out endless servings of barbecue, beer and burgoo, a regional stew made with various meats and vegetables.

The fever burns everywhere — even in the newspaper. No fewer than 92 horses pranced through the pages of Sunday's editions of The Louisville Courier-Journal, decorating ads for everything from music boxes that tinkle renditions of "My Old Kentucky Home," to Horse Race Analyzers that electronically calculate your best bet. The cost of this calculated victory? Just $39.99, plus tax.

But Derby week in Louisville is more than just fun and games. For people like Don Lord, it's also hard work, careful planning and more than a little worry.

Lord is chief gardener at Churchill Downs, a post he has held for 17 years. While the tourists frolic and the locals romp, he frets over 12,000 tulips that may blow away.

By late Tuesday, the odds were still 50-50 that the tulips, a Churchill Downs hallmark, would have to be ripped out and replaced before Saturday's race.

"If the wind stops, we could be OK," said Lord, who said this spring's unusually warm temperatures caused the flowers to bloom early, and strong winds could blow the fragile petals away.

If that happens, Lord, who each autumn plants tulip bulbs by some divine instinct, could be forced to pull a night raid on the geraniums and begonias blooming at the Downs' three greenhouses.

These are tense times, too, for track publicist Bill Rudy, who over the years has found himself in the middle of more than one domestic dispute. In the event of divorce, he says, custody battles over Derby tickets can be brutal.

The Downs generally stays out of it, he said, but the track has intervened this year in a number of cases where tickets have been pilfered from the mailboxes of estranged spouses. The Downs has issued duplicate tickets to the rightful owners and will confiscate the originals at the gate.

Rudy is expecting up to 150,000 race fans on Saturday, provided the weather is good. Some guests are less welcome than others; pickpockets love crowded race tracks, he said.

"Pickpockets are always a problem," Rudy said, adding that some track officials will have the sole duty Saturday of keeping tabs on them.

An estimated 1,000 police officers and security guards will be on the job Saturday. By the time they report for duty, Les Nichols hopes to be off the phone and in the grandstands.

Nichols, executive director of the Greater Louisville Hotel-Motel Association, has the task of keeping tabs on the city's 15,000 hotel rooms. By Tuesday, only 100 were empty — and for Nichols, the finish line was finally in sight.

The Newspaper BIBLE

HE'S ALIVE! HE WAS DEAD BUT HE'S ALIVE!

Very early on Sunday morning they tookthe ointments to the tomb-and found that the huge stone covering the entrance had been rolled aside. So they went in--but the Lord Jesus' body was gone!

They stood there puzzled, trying to think what could have happened to it. Suddenly two men appeared before them, clothed in shining robes so bright their eyes were dazzeled.

The women were terrified and bowed low before them. Then the men asked, "Why are you looking in a tomb for someone who is alive? He isn't here! He has come back to life again! Don't you remember what He told you back in Galilee--that the Messiah must be betrayed into the power of evil men and be crucified and that He would rise again the third day?"

Then they remembered, and rushed back to Jerusalem to tell His eleven disciples--and everyone else--what had happened.

(The women who went to the tomb were Mary Magdalene and Joanna and Mary the mother of James, and several others.)

But the story sounded like a fairy tale to the men--they didn't believe it. However, Peter ran to the tomb to look. Stooping, he peered in and saw the empty linen wrappings; and then he went back home again, wondering what had happened.

Tall building getting on up in the years

NEW YORK (AP) — King Kong swung from it. An errant B-25 bomber smashed into the side of it. Sixty million people have savored the view from the top of it, and 17 have jumped from it to their deaths.

The Empire State Building begins celebrating the 50th anniversary of its opening Thursday, no longer the world's tallest building but still the most famous tower in the Manhattan skyline.

Although Kong was only Hollywood illusion, and Fay Wray was never in peril high above 34th Street and Fifth Avenue, the great ape's exploits symbolized the skyscraper's siren call: Get to the top.

The Michelin guide to New York gives the building three stars, its highest rating, and recommends two visits: during the day for the view, which is 80 miles in clear weather, and at night for the city's spectacular lights.

Derisively called the "Empty State Building" when it opened in the midst of the Depression, it is said the Empire State Building relied on visitors for several years to help pay its taxes. Last year, almost 2 million people — a record for the building — took the trip to the top.

John Raskob, the Empire State Building's millionaire principal developer, posed one question to architect William Lamb:

"Bill, how high can you make it so that it won't fall down?"

Lamb's answer was 1,050 feet, or four feet higher than the spire on the new Chrysler Building eight blocks uptown. But Raskob was said to fear a trick — perhaps a pole popping out of the Chrysler Building's spire — so he added a 200-foot mooring mast for dirigibles, envisioning his building as the debarkation point for airship passengers from Europe.

Only one small dirigible ever moored there. Another managed to drop a bundle of newspapers while almost yanking assembled celebrities to eternity in a test in 1931. The top of the mast, 1,250 feet, is the building's official height, although a television transmitter added another 222 feet in 1950.

In 1970, the World Trade Center became the world's tallest building at 1,350 feet. Soon afterward, the Sears Tower in Chicago reached 1,450 feet.

Lamb's restrained Art Deco essay in Indiana limestone, granite and chrome-nickel steel was admired by Frank Lloyd Wright and Le Corbusier, the great French architect.

But it is sheer height, not taste, which lures the sightseers and helps sell the souvenirs.

Some people have been married at the top, and a few have had their ashes committed to the winds there. In 1938, the Congo's Shogola Olaba dancers chose the observatory as an auspicious site for dispelling the evil spirits thought to be cursing their New York engagement.

Since 1978, a race up 1,575 steps to the 86th floor has been an annual event. The best time for a man is 12 minutes, 19 seconds; for a woman, 14:03.

Even before it opened, the Empire State Building also attracted desperate people. One discharged worker hurled himself down an elevator shaft. Eighteen months after the opening, a man jumped from the dirigible platform at the 103rd floor; 15 other people have jumped from the 86th floor.

One woman got over the fence in December 1979, but a gust of wind blew her back to the building. She landed on a ledge at the 85th floor, fracturing her hip.

The building's darkest day was July 28, 1945, when Lt. Col. William Smith, a veteran of 500 hours of combat flying in Europe, got lost in a morning mist and crashed his B-25 bomber into the north side at the 79th floor.

The building rocked. The B-25's fuel tanks ruptured in the 200 mph impact, and flame spewed as high as the 86th floor. Thirteen people were killed, 26 seriously injured. It cost $1 million to repair the damage.

The building has changed hands only three times. In 1961, when the building, 2½ acres of land and the operating lease sold for $65 million, the closing took four hours and 3,600 signatures. When the ink dried, Prudential Insurance Co. was the owner and real estate investors Harry Helmsley and George Wein held the lease.

It is generally agreed that even a limitless amount of money could not duplicate the building's craftmanship or quality of raw materials. Robert Tinker, the building manager, suggests it would cost 10 times more to tear down today than it cost to build. It would be no easy job.

"Back in the '30s when they built this baby," said William Stassen, chief engineer, there were no precedents for building anything so big, so it was overengineered. Where a one-inch piece of steel would do, "they used 10 inches," he said admiringly.

Since the New York World Fair in 1964, the top 30 floors of the building have been lighted at night.

Crackdown linked to Atlanta deaths

ATLANTA (AP) — As police searched for a missing 13-year-old black youth, authorities were cracking down on prostitutes and petty criminals in an effort to extract information about the slayings of 26 young Atlanta blacks, officials said.

The disappearance of Sean Collier was being handled by the missing persons unit, rather than the special task force that is investigating the 26 deaths and one disappearance over the last 21 months.

Collier was last seen about 4:30 p.m. Wednesday near the southwest Atlanta street where he lives, said police spokesman Benjamin Sims.

Collier, who attends Southwest High School, had no prior history of running away, Sims said. He was reported missing by a friend of the family, who told police Collier's mother was too upset to call.

The boy is 5 feet 6 and weighs 110 pounds, Sims said.

The special task force is looking into the disappearance of only one youth — 10-year-old Darron Glass, who vanished last year.

The task force generally has not taken over investigations of missing youths until 72 hours after disappearance is reported.

During police sweeps last weekend, 74 people were arrested on charges ranging from sodomy to the possession of drugs and firearms, officials said Wednesday. The people rounded up in the sweeps were then questioned about the rash of slayings since July 1979, officials said.

Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson told reporters police "have sent the word through the criminal element" to fill in police on any information in "the underworld grapevine" about the slayings.

Although the criminals "don't like the heat we're giving them," Jackson said, so far informants have not given any useful information to the special police task force.

Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said police officers were told before the raids to "never overlook what our No. 1 priority is. And the priority at this time is to bring closure to the unsolved cases of our children and our young adults."

Meanwhile, officials of the Georgia Department of Human Resources said child-death investigators haven't asked them for mental health records from Georgia. Officials at two mental hospitals in Florida reported receiving a request for the names of all patients discharged to the Atlanta area during the last five years.

The Florida hospital officials said the request came from the FBI, which is working with the Atlanta task force and also conducting a separate probe.

FBI agent Roy Klanger said in Tampa, Fla., Tuesday that agents requested information from mental hospitals in several states in an effort that he called "a long shot."

Neither Brown nor FBI spokesman Dick Berry in Atlanta would comment on Klanger's disclosure.

Extradition of private begun

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The head of a task force investigating the slayings of seven Buffalo-area blacks has begun extradition proceedings against Joseph G. Christopher, a white Army private, his attorney says.

The move came Wednesday after a grand jury returned a sealed indictment charging an individual with three counts of second-degree murder in three of last year's slayings.

Erie County District Attorney Edward C. Cosgrove refused to identify the suspect, saying the name would be revealed after he was extradited from Georgia and arraigned.

Mark Mahoney, Christopher's attorney, told The Associated Press in Atlanta that Cosgrove informed him extradition proceedings had been initiated against Christopher.

However, Mahoney could not say who was named in the indictment.

Meanwhile, detectives from Rochester and New York City, where similar attacks occurred, arrived here to confer with authorities.

"There are basic similarities in the cases," Cosgrove said, adding the person named in the indictment could be a possible suspect in the other slayings here.

The killings began Sept. 22 and 23, when three black males were shot to death in Erie County by a white man using a .22-caliber weapon. The next day, a black man was shot with the same weapon in nearby Niagara County.

Niagara County District Attorney Peter Broderick said he hoped to review the evidence with Cosgrove "within a week or two."

"I think there are enough connections to warrant the presentation of the case to a grand jury," he said. "But our case has to stand or fall on its own merits, and I want to go slowly on it to make sure it will stand. As long as he's in Erie County, he's not going to go anywhere."

On Oct. 8-9, two black cab drivers were found here with their hearts cut out. On Dec. 22, four dark-skinned men were stabbed to death in New York City, reportedly by a lone white assailant.

Another black man was stabbed to death while waiting for a bus in Buffalo on Dec. 29. In Rochester the next day, another black man died in a similar fashion. On Dec. 31, in Buffalo, a white man knifed a black man in the heart. The black man survived.

Christopher joined the Army on Nov. 13 and was on leave Dec. 19 to Jan. 4.

Witnesses had described the ".22-caliber killer" as a young white man with dirty blond hair, aged 25-35 and from 5-8 to 6 feet tall, police said.

Christopher, 25, of Buffalo, who stands a few inches under 6 feet, has dark curly hair and wears wire-rim glasses. He was described by acquaintances as a quiet man, a hunting and fishing enthusiast who reads the Bible frequently in his barracks.

"He was a quiet kid that you really wouldn't notice that much," said Burgard Vocational High School Prinicpal J. Patrick Curry. "He had a good average record."

Cosgrove saidthe firsttip on the supect camefrom a military policeman at Fort Benning, Ga., who had read about the cases.

Christopher, who is stationed at Fort Benning, is being held on a charge of attempted murder stemming from a knife attack on a black soldier.

Two Army nurses from Fort Benning provided key testimony to the grand jury Tuesday, Cosgrove said. The Evening News said the two nurses — 1st Lt. Dorothy Anderson and Capt. Bernard Burgess — treated Christopher for self-inflicted razor cuts at a base hospital and overheard Christopher brag about killing blacks in Buffalo and New York City.

The two testified despite objections by Chistopher's lawyers, who contended that remarks the private allegedly made in the hospital were "privileged communications" by a patient, according to the Courier-Express.

Efforts by Buffalo investigators to question Christopher at Fort Benning were twice rebuffed on the advice of his attorneys.

Cosgrove said physical evidence found at the home of the suspect's mother and at family hunting lodge "ties in ballistically" with evidence found at the scene of the slayings cited in the indictments.

Officers armed with search warrants found ammunition, the sawed-off barrel of a .22-caliber Ruger rifle and sawed-off stocks from two rifles, court records reportedly say.

Police had said that tests of bullets taken from the victims indicated that a sawed-off .22-caliber Ruger rifle had been used.

Published reports had quoted unidentified sources as saying the ballistics tests were inconclusive. "I have never indicated the evidence was inconclusive," Cosgrove said.

The indictment was returned in the deaths of Glenn Dunn, 14; Harold Green, 32, an industrial engineer; and Emmanuel Thomas, 30, an unemployed painter.

Commissioners, others plead guilty in kickback scheme

TYLER, Texas (AP) — A Bowie County commissioner and four others indicted by federal grand jurors investigating road material procurement irregularities in three states have pleaded guilty to accepting bribes and kickbacks.

Commissioner Milton Minter resigned his post Wednesday after the panel indicted him, former Bowie County Commissioner Howard Martin of Texarkana, Dallas Thompson of Arlington, John F. Lands of Atlanta, Texas, and George W. Tyson of Murphy.

Minter pleaded guilty Wednesday to one count of accepting bribes and kickbacks from road material vendors and Martin pleaded guilty to two counts of the same charge before U.S. District Judge William Steger.

Both men face a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Thompson pleaded guilty to a single count of racketeering and faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison and a $25,00 fine.

Lands entered a guilty plea to one count of promoting illegal acts and faces up to 5 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Tyson, his former son-in-law, faces a possible maximum penalty of three years in jail and a $500 fine for hiding the fact that Martin and Minter had accepted bribes.

Steger scheduled sentencing for May 26.

U.S. Attorney John Hanna Jr. indicated more indictments may be returned, saying the grand jury is still meeting and the investigation, involving possible road materials kickback schemes in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, is continuing.

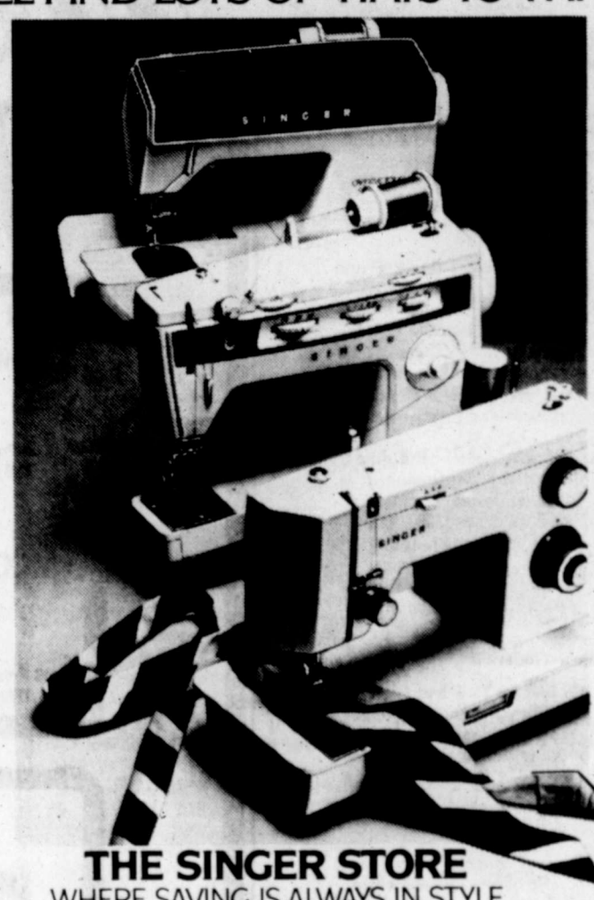

In Oklahoma, seven county commissioners, one former commissioner and the owners of two supply companies were charged Tuesday with participating in kickback and fraud schemes.

They were accused of violating the Hobbs Act, which relates to interfering with interstate commerce and face maximum sentences of 20 years each and $10,000 in fines, if convicted.

U.S. Attorney Larry Patton and C. Edwin Enright, special agent in charge of the Oklahma City FBI office, said the investigation has been in progress for almost three years.

Dozens of present and former county commissioners' court members were investigated.

'Gestapo tactics' are alleged

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A retired Army First Sergeant whose daughter is married to convicted drug smuggler Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra says federal agents are using gestapo tactics in their investigation of the assassination of U.S.District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

"I fought against communisim and gestapoism and come back here and find the Justice Department is doing the same thing," said Leon "Red" Nichols, whose daughter, Elizabeth, is married to Chagra.

Nichols made his remarks as a federal grand jury questioned his son, Edward, about the May 29, 1979, shooting of Wood, who was known as "Maximum John" because of the stiff sentences he handed drug traffickers.

Chagra, a target of the panel's investigation into the shooting, is serving a 30-year sentence in federal prison for a narcotics conviction.

His brother Joe and convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson also have figured prominently in the investigation.

The grand jury is expected to resume its investigation today.

Harrelson is being held without bond in Harris County jail on state narcotics and firearms charges. Joe Chagra is his attorney.

Nichols, who fought in Korea and served two tours of duty in Vietnam, said federal agents tapped phones belonging to him and nine other Chagra relatives.

Deliberations resume in trial of Williams

NEW YORK (AP) — Jurors in the Abscam trial of Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. returned to court this morning for their first full day of deliberations on bribery and conspiracy charges against the New Jersey Democrat.

The jury of eight men and four women began deliberating about 10 a.m. EDT on the nine-count indictment against the 22-year Senate veteran and co-defendant Alexander Feinberg, a lawyer from Cherry Hill, N.J. The panel had spent the night at an undisclosed hotel in the custody of federal marshals.

Williams' lawyer, George Koelzer, in four hours of summation Wednesday, claimed the government used "the greatest con man in the world" and the "world's greatest undercover agent" to frame Williams. He referred to the government's use of Mel Weinberg and FBI agent Anthony Amoroso.

If found guplty, Williams, 61, would be the first sitting senator convicted of a federal crime in 76 years.

Federal prosecutor Thomas Puccio followed Koelzer with a one-hour rebuttal Wednesday afternoon, claiming that despite all of the senator's excuses and explanations, neither he nor his attorney "answered what happened in those tapes."

Riot murder trial jury 'nowhere near' a verdict

MIAMI (AP) — A jury of two blacks and 10 whites is "nowhere near" a verdict in the case of Nathaniel Lane, the black teen-ager accused of leading a mob attack that killed three young whites during last year's race riots here, the panel's foreman says.

Dade Circuit Judge Mario Goderich ordered the jurors to resume their deliberations today.

Lane, 19, was charged with three counts of first-degree murder in the beating deaths of Benny Higdon, 21, Robert Owens, 15, and Charles Barreca, also 15. The three were dragged from their car when they unwittingly drove through Liberty City on May 17, the first night of the three-day riot.

The jurors deliberated nearly seven hours Wednesday before Goderich asked them whether they wanted to break for the night.

"Your honor, we are nowhere near a verdict," replied foreman Thomas Donaldson.

Goderich told the jurors they had to return a separate verdict on each count in the indictment.

The state's key witness, Doris Jones, said she saw Lane smash Higdon's head with a large rock.

She said she did not see Lane hit anyone else.

Lane's was the last of four murder trials stemming from the rioting, which claimed 18 lives. The violence erupted after an all-white jury in Tampa acquitted four white former police officers on charges stemming from the brutal beating death of black Miami insurance man Arthur McDuffie.

One young black was convicted of second-degree murder and two others were found guilty of manslaughter in earlier trials stemming from the beatings of Higdon, Barreca and Owens. A fourth defendant was acquitted.

Witness swapped testimony for immunity

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The government's chief witness said today he agreed to testify in former Gov. Ray Blanton's liquor license kickback trial because income tax irregularities could have sent him to federal prison.

Jack Ham, a liquor dealer and heavy contributor to Blanton's 1974 campaign, s too ill to appear in U.S. District Court and his videotaped testimony is being shown at the extortion trial of Blanton, former campaign manager James Allen and former special assistant Clyde Edd Hood Jr.

Asked why he began to cooperate with the Internal Revenue Service, Ham said: "I will be very honest with you. They advised me they had a place in Kansas and I could go to the pen ... My lawyers and I had a conference and came to the conclusion I didn't have a chance."

The government concluded its questioning of Ham after he testified that his tax returns for 1977, 1978 and 1979 were under investigation.

Blanton, Allen, and Hood are charged with extortion, conspiracy and mail fraud and have pleaded innocent to dividing up state liquor licenses in Nashville for a cut of the profits. If convicted, each faces a maximum of 70 years in prison and $29,000 in fines.

Ham taped his deposition in December and January and, as the key government witness in the case, has been granted immunity from prosecution on income-tax charges and other counts.

Defense lawyers objected repeatedly to Ham's testimony. Judge Bailey Brown of Memphis will rule later whether the six men and six women on the jury should consider it.

Ham said Blanton called him about money after leaving office in 1979.

"I told him I had the federal people on me and I couldn't issue any money in any way," Ham said. "He said he didn't want me to give him any money, he just wanted to borrow some. I said I had the federal people on me and I didn't think I could loan him any.

"He said he would get it elsewhere."

Subsequently, Ham said, Hood told him he loaned the money to Blanton.

A year earlier, he said, Hood objected to Ham's paying $23,000 toward a bank loan for the former governor as "a bad deal." Ham testified the $23,000 represented 20 percent of the 1978 profits from his suburban Donelson liquor store, licensed while Blanton was governor.

Ham said his nephew paid another $15,000 on the $38,000 Commerce Union Bank loan with which Blanton purchased stock in alsour Texas oil venture. Ham testified the $15,000 was a finder's fee paid to Blanton for arranging financing for a Jackson housing project in which Ham, his nephew and Hood were partners.

The $2.5 million project was financed by the state's Housing Development Agency.

In return for the $38,000, Ham said, he and his nephew, Bert Ham, took over Blanton's oil stock.

Later, Jack Ham testified, he sold his interest in the stock to his nephew for $334.50.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Bob Lynch asked Ham why he bought the stock.

"I was purchasing it for one reason and that was to clear my debt with the governor for my liquor store," he said. "I didn't consider it an investment."

"What value if any did you place on it?" Lynch asked.

"Not any," Ham replied. He said he wrote off $6,000 on his income tax return because of the deal.

Lederer giving up his seat in House

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Rep. Raymond Lederer, the only congressman to win re-election after being indicted in the Abscam inquiry, says he is giving up his House seat because of the "time and energy" needed to fight his conviction.

Lederer's announcement that he will step down May 5 came one day after the House Ethics Committee recommended he be expelled for his conviction in the FBI's undercover bribery-conspiracy investigation.

"It is in the best interests of the people of the Third District for me to resign my seat," said a Wednesday statement from the 49-year-old Pennsylvania Democrat.

"This was a difficult decision for me because I believe that the mandate the voters gave me in November is something that must be taken seriously. On the other hand, those same voters have the right to a congressman who can devote his full energies to their service," said the statement.

Lederer was one of six House members convicted in the Abscam investigation, in which FBI agents masquerading as the representative of a fictitious Arab sheik offered money in return for favors.

He sent resignation letters to House Speaker Thomas O'Neill, Ethics Committee Chairman Louis Stokes and to Pennsylvania Gov. Dick Thornburgh.

His resignation letter was read in the House chamber Wednesday.

"I leave with nothing but the highest respect for this House and with great appreciation to all of its members for the advice and support that has been given me during my tenure here," the letter said.

On Tuesday, the ethics panel voted 10-2 to recommend Lederer be expelled.

Last year, another Philadelphia Democrat, Rep. Michael Myers, was expelled, the first congressman to be thrown out of the House since three were ousted for joining the Confederacy.

Parole power play goes on

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements' bill tightening his control ove paroles has won tentative House approval after representatives rejected another measure taking the governor out of the parole process altogether.

The governor's bill advanced, 105-35, and final passage was expected today. That would send the measure to Clements' desk for signature.

Before passing Clements' bill, the House voted 89-58 to table a measure by Rep. Craig Washington, D-Houston, stripping the governor of his power to approve or deny paroles.

In the forefront of the debate was the fact that Clements has denied 26 percent of the paroles submitted to him since he took office in 1979 — probably more than any other Texas governor.

Rep. Gerald Geistweidt, R-Mason, sponsor of Clements' bill echoed the complaint of the governor's staff that the Board of Pardons and Paroles recommends too many prison inmates for parole.

"Texas has one of the most lax and most lenient parole systems of any state. You can be released after serving one-sixth of your time," Geistweidt said.

When Clements vetoes paroles, "he is speaking with the voice of the people. He is speaking with the street sense of the man on the street," Geistweidt said.

Washington said the governor and his staff lack the expertise to judge parole cases and he predicted that the system could lead to some future governor selling paroles.

"We will have a scandal in the governor's office by some governor who sells paroles," he said.

The three-member board and the six independent parole commissioners make up three panels that recommend paroles to the governor. The governor may grant only paroles recommended by the panels.

Clements' bill would take away the commissioners' independence and make them employees of the board. The governor, instead of the board members, would designate the chairman and vice chairman of the board.

Also in Clements' bill is provision for state-funding of halfway houses for parolees.

Washington's bill would have given full authority to grant parole to nine parole commissioners, with no involvement of the governor. The Board of Pardons and Paroles would have had authority only to recommend pardons and revocation of paroles. The governor would retain authority to grant pardons and revoke paroles.

The Legislative Budget Board estimated Washington's bill would save the state $6 million next year and $11 million in 1983 by increasing paroles and reducing the prison population.

Geistweidt said in 67 percent of Clements' denials, one member of a parole panel had voted against giving parole.

"The governor is there on behalf of the people, closing the door," he said.

Geistweidt, without naming anyone, said there are some "bad eggs" among the six parole commissioners, and Rep. Jerry Benedict, D-Angleton, asserted there is an ongoing "battle between the board and the commissioners."

Benedict said there have been numerous cases where an inmate eligible for parole had a family and a job waiting for him and has obeyed prison rules, yet was rejected for parole by the governor.

Crying out for help, above, and being comforted by an unidentified California Highway Patrol officer are a woman and her children, among the victims of a three-vehicle accident Wednesday. The mishap, involving a motorcycle, a car and a pick-up loaded with teen-agers en route to the beach, occurred on the Santa Monica Freeway. At least one person was killed and as many as eight others were injured.

House OKs bill earmarking funds for family shelters

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House has tentatively approved a bill that would use some of the state tax on mixed drinks to finance shelters for battered wives and children.

The bill advanced on a voice vote Wednesday, with final passage expected today.

Four percent of the state's revenue from the tax on cocktails — over $3 million a year — would be dedicated to family violence centers.

A shelter could get up to 75 percent of its funding from the state if the bill passes.

The Texas Department of Human Resources would contract with centers to provide shelter and services to victims of family violence.

To qualify for state funds, a shelter would have to provide access to a number of services, including a 24-hour-a-day hotline, emergency medical care, counseling, legal assistance and job information.

Rep. Mary Polk, D-El Paso, the sponsor, said there are not enough centers to meet the need.

Similar legislation is in a Senate committee, where Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, objected it would undermine the family.

Dr. Dennis O'Leary gestures during an interview Monday in his office at George Washington University Hospital, where he was spokesman to the nation on the condition of wounded President Ronald Reagan. O'Leary says his reports may have been optimistic, but he has no regrets at how he handled the situation.

O'Leary stands by his optimism

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was a month ago today. Dr. Dennis O'Leary, describing President Reagan, said this: "I gather he seemed a little bit lightheaded, but he was cracking jokes and in very good spirits. He was in no time in any serious danger. He was alert and awake with stable, vital signs."

President Reagan remembers it differently.

"The more I tried to breathe and the deeper I tried to breathe, it kept seeming as if I was getting less air and you know that panic that you can get if you're strangling or something...."

O'Leary's optimism became a nation's reassurance, coloring the headlines; the ..... went to bed that night assured the president, shot in the chest in an assassination attempt, would be able to function and make decisions when the sun arose the next day.

O'Leary says he may have put an optimistic spin on the facts, but he didn't distort anything a month ago today when — after hours of agonizing tension — he gave America that reassuring report on the health and the prospects of a wounded president.

"I think everybody had had all the drama they could handle that day," he says in a retrospective look on how he performed as medical spokesman on the president's condition.

That day and in the days to come, the soft-spoken, cigarette-smoking dean at George Washington University Hospital offered an upbeat picture.

He relayed word of a president who walked into the hospital under his own power, cracked jokes on the operating table and "stunned" his doctors with his recuperative powers.

O'Leary's assurances were subsequently contradicted by far more alarming reports. These suggested that Reagan was on the edge of a life-threatening situation when he collapsed in the emergency room doorway. But the surgeons who operated on Reagan back up O'Leary.

O'Leary says his words were chosen deliberately; he wanted to be upbeat but credible.

If his pronouncements were optimistic, they reflected his own "anti-dramatic" style, he says.

Where he made mistakes — errors which had the effect of portraying the president's condition as better than it had been — they resulted from his having been misinformed or having "gleaned" the wrong interpretations from what the surgeons told him, he says.

He has no regrets, he says, "although someone else might have handled it differently and just as effectively."

As for the surge of contradictory reports, the doctor says they were inevitable. He dismisses most as mere speculation.

Reagan's recovery from his shooting has been steady and appears to justify O'Leary's optimism. The doctor won national praise for his calm, soft-spoken report that night. A Washington Post editorial hailed him as "the nation's chief handholder." He is still getting grateful letters.

Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, heaps praise on O'Leary, too. "He lent assurance and calmness to reports on the president's recovery," Speakes says. "He gave us a heavy dose of credibility."

O'Leary, in his briefing seven hours after Reagan had been shot, understated by about one-half how much blood Reagan had lost and how much blood and intraveneous fluids Reagan was given through transfusions. He made no mention of Reagan's collapse in the emergency room. He said the bullet in Reagan's chest missed his heart by three to four inches, not the inch or so reported later by surgeon Benjamin Aaron, who removed it.

And he said nothing at all about Aaron's frantic five-minute search for the dime-shaped bullet.

"Had I known about it, I think it would have been another thing that I would not have dealt with," O'Leary says.

"Five minutes doesn't sound like a lot, but I'm sure it was a millennium for Ben Aaron. I'm sure for five minutes there was a hell of a lot of drama in that operating room.

"But," he says, "the fact is he found the bullet and he took it out. That's the fact."

O'Leary said his soothing briefing that evening reflects his personal way of doing the job he had been given.

He says: "My own style, and it's really more subconscious than conscious, is anti-dramatic. The New York Times calls it 'upbeat' but I call it anti-dramatic.

"I think we could have presented a far more dramatic picture without question.

"My own feeling is that would have been self-serving for the institution because we could have presented a very dramatic picture and then demonstrated how we bailed everyone out of the situation and it would have looked good for the institution. But I do not think it would have been in the public interest."

As an example of the sort of dramatic detail he purposely left out, he cites the president's physical appearance shortly after he arrived at the hospital:

"When the president got down on one knee, he looked pale, gray; he was sweating; he was complaining of being short of breath. He looked awful."

But O'Leary said nothing of that at the time; instead he described a joking president who was "alert and awake" and "in no time in any serious danger."

Was there a contradiction here?

No, says O'Leary. "It's all true. He was joking. He did walk in under his own power. He did not know he had been shot. He was stable post-operatively. It's all true."

Before O'Leary went before the television cameras and the press, he was briefed for about 20 minutes in his office.

Attending that hectic meeting were the emergency room and operating room doctors and the top layer of White House officialdom. O'Leary says nobody from the White House told him what to say and what not to say.

Doctors still optimistic on Brady's condition

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors say they are optimistic about White House press secretary James S. Brady's recovery despite the probable existence of a small rip in the lining surrounding his brain.

"We may have a long, complicated way to go, but we think he's going to make it," said Dr. Dennis O'Leary, spokesman for George Washington University Hospital, where Brady has been confined since he was shot in the head during the March 30 assassination attempt on President Reagan.

The White House issued a regularly scheduled medical bulletin Wednesday disclosing that approximately four drops of fluid dripped from Brady's nose Monday evening while he was drinking iced tea.

O'Leary said in the bulletin that doctors are concerned that spinal fluid may have escaped through "probably a little rip" in the dura, the membrane which seals the brain.

The statement said an X-ray showed a slight increase in air in the brain and what may be an abnormal passage between the sinuses and brain which could have opened and closed "like a snapshot," permitting an exchange of air and spinal fluid.

There has been no indication that the leakage recurred, O'Leary said, and Brady has been told to remain on his back without shifting position in hopes that the apparent passage will repair itself.

"If there is evidence of additional leakage ... further studies will (assess) the potential need for further surgery," the statement said.

Brady underwent five hours of hastily scheduled surgery April 22 to seal an apparently unrelated air passage along the path of the explosive bullet that wounded him.

"What we're dealing with now," O'Leary said, "is something on the bottom of the brain. It's not something you can see without lifting the brain and compressing the frontal lobe. That's not something you want to do."

The bulletin said Brady "remains alert" and is confined to bed for 10 days to two weeks, his upper torso elevated 20 degrees "to minimize the risk of recurrent leakage" and to promote healing.

Man convicted of threat letter sent to prison

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A man convicted of writing a blood-stained letter to President Reagan has been ordered to serve five years in federal prison for threatening the president's life.

U.S. District Judge George C. Young imposed the maximum sentence Wednesday for Bobby Deen Wilson, 26, who was in the Seminole County Jail awaiting trial in a local case at the time he was charged with making the threat, which is a federal violation.

Wilson was ordered to serve the federal term after he serves a five-year sentence for a Seminole County burglary conviction.

Dentists hang on by skin of teeth

BOSTON (AP) — That old advertising pitch — "Look, Ma, no cavities!" — has come true for millions of American children. Fluoridated water, better toothpaste and good care are making the piercing whine of the dentist's drill a worry of the past.

But the good news for patients may mean uncertain times and a changing role for the 448,000 men and women who make their livings repairing tooth decay.

Study after study in recent years has documented a remarkable improvement in the health of American teeth.

Fluoridated water, now available to about half of all Americans, is given much of the credit for conquering cavities. But a soon-to-be-published report shows a dramatic drop in tooth decay even in towns where the water is not fluoridated.

Between 1958 and 1978, Dr. Robert Glass examined the teeth of 1,776 children in the school systems of Norwood and Dedham, two Boston suburbs. In 20 years, he discovered a 50 percent drop in the number of decayed, filled and missing teeth.

Glass, a researcher at the Forsyth Dental Center in Boston, said he found the statistics "amazing" because neither town had fluoridated water during that period. He attributed the change to fluoride toothpaste and mouthwash, more emphasis on brushing and flossing and the introduction of high-speed drills that have improved the quality of dentists' work.

The National Institute of Dental Research in Bethesda, Md., has noticed similar changes. Dr. William Bowen, chief of the institute's Caries Prevention and Research Branch, is overseeing a nationwide study of 49,000 children who live in both fluoridated and non-fluoridated areas.

The results are not all in yet, but Bowen predicts they will show a 25 to 30 percent reduction in cavities in the past 10 years alone.

The institute also is working on a cavities vaccine that Bowen says could be introduced within the next decade. It, too, would help eliminate cavities.

For dentists, cavities are big business. In 1979, Americans spent $3.7 billion on fillings, or about 27 percent of the nation's total dental bill.

The loss of a large part of this work may force a reduction in the dentist workforce.

"I think there will probably be a gradual decline in the numbers (of dentists) required," Bowen said. "But not for several years yet. The kind of work will shift. The traditional forms of treatment are certainly in less demand."

At Forsyth, a private research institution, director John Hein says an oversupply of dentists is a definite possibility. "I think the drop in cavities ... may well eventually result in a need for less dentists," he said.

Pedodontists, dentists who specialize in children's dental care, are already feeling the pinch.

"Pedodontists used to figure that they needed 1,500 to 2,000 children for a practice," Hein said. "Now it's closer to 6,000 or 8,000 children. A number of pedodontists are taking additional training to incorporate orthodontics into their practice. And dental schools are having a hard time in some parts of the country finding enough children to provide work to train the dental students."

The enrollments of the nation's 60 dental schools grew steadily through the 1970s and reached a record level of 22,842 students this year. The Department of Health and Human Services projects a 22 percent increase in the number of working dentists during this decade. Some schools, however, have cautiously begun to cut back. Tufts Dental School in Boston, for instance, plans to trim its enrollment 20 percent over the next four years.

Some dentists say that the reduction in cavities — what they call caries — will give them more time to treat other oral diseases.

"Dentists have been so swamped with taking care of the results of caries that they have not been able to turn their attention to the prevention of periodontal disease and other abnormalities," said Allan Formicola, dean of Columbia University's dental school. "There is plenty of work to do even if we get rid of one of the major diseases."

Periodontal disease erodes the gums and bone around the teeth. Most adults have it to some degree, and if left untreated, it can lead to loss of the teeth.

Formicola says dentists need to keep regular check on the progress of the disease, instruct patients on good flossing and brushing habits and occasionally scrape the buildup of foreign deposits off the roots of the teeth.

Dr. John Coady, executive director of the American Dental Association in Chicago, notes that even with the current number of dentists, only half of the people in the United States get regular dental care.

"Any profession's ultimate goal is to put itself out of business," Coady said. "However, I just don't see that happening."

Senate panel ready to OK price supports

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Agriculture Committee, like a House subcommittee before, is headed toward approving major crop price-support loan programs opposed by the Reagan administration.

"We're marching up a hill we're going to have to march back down before we report a bill," Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the committee chairman, said as the general framework for price supports was being set.

On a narrow vote Wednesday, the panel approved a wheat price-support plan setting loan rates higher than the administration wanted and including provisions for target price or deficiency payments, which President Reagan wants eliminated.

After easily rejecting the administration's wheat plan, the committee approved the alternative with target prices despite a statement by Agriculture Department economics chief William Lesher that the administration would try to accommodate a slightly higher loan rate than it wants.

But William Lesher said the administration remained opposed to target prices, which call for government payments to farmers when the average national price of wheat is below a set level.

Committee members, including sponsor Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the wheat proposal should serve as a guide in fashioning the remaining commodity support programs.

Dole, who already has accused the panel of "breaking the bank" on other support programs, said the the administration did not support his wheat plan although it is less objectionable than others.

The cost of that program, coupled with the cost of a dairy price-support program and an export credit plan approved earlier over administration objections, has put the commodity program costs in the 1981 farm bill over initial 1982 budget limits. Feed grains, rice, cotton and other commodities still must be considered.

Helms, who proposed the export credit fund, has warned his colleagues they face the possibility of veto if their four-year farm bill bears little resemblance to the one offered by the president.

The administration's proposal, which would have cost nearly $700 million next year and $2.2 billion over four years, called for complete discretion for the agriculture secretary in setting loan rates. Some of the loan program's cost is recovered in later years as loans are repaid.

But after talking to Agriculture Secretary John R. Block, Lesher told the Senate committee, "There is some room for latitude in regard to increasing the loan rate a little bit."

"About the maximum we can go," he said, is a wheat support program costing about $290 million more than the administration proposed and some $1 billion more over four years.

The cost of Dole's program generally could fall within those budget limits with a minimum loan rate of $3.60 a bushel for crops from 1982 through 1985, Agriculture Department officials said, but it includes target price payments if wheat stocks exceed 1 billion bushels at year's end.

This year's loan rate is $3.20. Lesher said the administration was considering a $3.35 loan rate for 1982.

Farm program finding more opposition on Capitol Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's farm program is running into increasing trouble on Capitol Hill, and the chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee has begun warning his colleagues of the consequences.

"If we send a bill down to the White House that doesn't have a fair relationship to the (agriculture) secretary's, it's going to get vetoed and then we wind up with nothing," Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said.

Helms' committee on Tuesday added a multi-billion-dollar export loan program to the 1981 farm bill after administration officials said the government couldn't afford the initial expense.

The committee also seems bent on approving major commodity price-support loan rates above those Agriculture Secretary John R. Block thinks are economically feasible. A straw vote among the members showed substantial support as well for retaining the crop target prices President Reagan wants eliminated.

"This committee is going to act within the parameters of fiscal responsibility and what we are allocated," Helms said. "I can tell you now that adjustments are going to have to be made at the end."

While some farm programs may get more money than the president wants, "I'm hopeful that in other areas of the bill we can cut down expenditures," Helms said.

In the House, where Democratic-dominated subcommittees are still drafting their sections of the new farm bill, Reagan lost fights over price-support loan rates and target prices for wheat and substantial cuts in dairy subsidies.

The Agriculture Department estimates those items alone would cost billions of dollars more than Reagan wants to spend over the four-year life of the farm bill. The full House Agriculture Committee will begin considering the farm bill late this week.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., who has been warning other senators about excessive spending, said he briefed Reagan on the farm bill's progress Tuesday.

"He did not look too happy," said Dole, the second-ranking Republican on the Agriculture Committee and chairman of the Finance Committee.

The only substantial victory Reagan could claim Tuesday was in the food stamp program, where the House subcommittee on nutrition accepted his proposal to reduce the income limits for benefit eligibility, eliminating about 1 million current recipients at a savings of $275 millin next year.

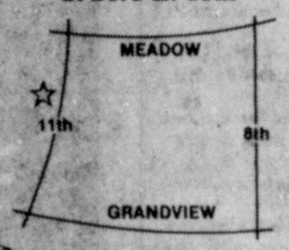

That same subcommittee, however, rejected the administration proposal to save $600 million in 1982 food stamp costs by reducing benefits to families with children receiving free school lunches.

Helms proposed the export loan fund endorsed by the Senate Committee, saying the government must do more to expand important foreign markets for farmers facing financial difficulties at home.

But while loans from the fund would eventually be repaid, more than $1 billion in government money will be needed to get the program going next year and an even greater amount in 1983.

Only a day earlier, the committee ignored the administration and adopted a dairy price-support program that could exceed Reagan's cost estimates by almost $500 million next year and more than $1 billion over four years.

Demonstrators march through morning rush hour traffic in Boston's Charlestwon district as part of a citywide protest against police and fire cutbacks. Traffic for the past several mornings has been held at a virtual standstill for inbound commuters.

Inmates stage work stoppage

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — About 2,800 inmates are taking part in a peaceful work stoppage at a maximum security prison, the second protest this week at a Texas Department of Corrections unit, a TDC spokesman said.

The prisoners, all at TDC's Ellis unit, described the strike as a "peaceful protest" over "a number of grievances" put forth by the inmates, TDC spokesman Rick Hartley said Wednesday.

Hartly said the prisoners taking part in the protest have been confined to their cells. The unit houses about 3,050 inmates.

A warden and a prison farm manager were killed April 4 at the Ellis Unit during a scuffle with a prisoner. The inmate charged with murder in the deaths, Eroy E. Brown, has said he was acting in self defense.

The protest Wednesday comes on the heels of a "bad food" strike and another work stoppage at TDC's Ramsey Unit in Brazoria County south of Houston.

Hartley said the leaders of the strike at the Ellis Unit had not met with prison officials.

He said the grievances include a request for the state to drop its appeal of a federal court ruling that orders sweeping changes in the state prison system, the replacement of TDC director J.W. Estelle and higher inmate wages for agricultural work performed by the prisoners.

'Captain of the night shift' keeping station shined up

BOSTON (AP) — Helen Vaillancourt had never been in a police station until two weeks ago. Now the 61-year-old grandmother is "captain of the night shift" at People's Police Station Three and keeps the former District 6 station clean for the day the cops come back.

Mrs. Vaillancourt is one of dozens of housewives and retirees who became activists when the city, trying to cope with tax-cutting Proposition 2½, laid off 400 Boston police and firefighters and closed seven police stations and three fire stations.

"The whole neighborhood is very united about this," Mrs. Vaillancourt said. "We want our police back and we're not leaving until that happens."

Protests have been widespread in the weeks following the April 10 public safety cuts:

—Closed police stations have been stormed and occupied in the city's South Boston, East Boston and Brighton neighborhoods. Protesters remain at two of the stations.

—Angry residents blocked the driveways of fire stations slated for closure to prevent officials from removing fire equipment.

—Demonstrations have blocked the entrance of tunnels under Boston Harbor, snarling traffic between the city, Logan International Airport and Boston's North Shore.

The demonstrators say they are trying to focus attention on what the cuts mean to far-flung neighborhoods.

"We are an island," says Judy Hickey, a firefighter's wife and one of the occupiers at the Engine 50 stationhouse in Charlestown. "You have to get to Charlestown by a bridge and we're isolated in heavy traffic."

To keep Station 50 open, the occupiers pulled the district fire chief's car in front of a $95,000 pumper, flattened the car's tires and chained it to a post.

"I'm very disturbed about the coverage in the neighborhood," says Mary LaPorte, a 71-year-old Charlestown resident who has spent the past two weeks sitting outside the fire station in good weather. Mrs. LaPorte's four sons are all firefighters.

"It was once a job you took for job security," she said.

Anger has focused on Mayor Kevin H. White, who ordered cuts in face of an $118 million loss in tax revenues due to Proposition 2½. The tax law passed in November limits property taxes to 2½ percent of market value. Some areas of Boston are taxed as high as 10 percent.

Some protesters said White is using Proposition 2½ as an excuse to cut some jobs, while protecting members of his own staff.

"He's using the money to pay for his political machine," said Jane McLaughlin, another Charlestown resident. "It's finally hitting the little people and the people are getting mad."

The demonstrators are carefully separating their anger from their occupation. Mrs. Vaillancourt's crew spends its nights washing and waxing the station's floors; local merchants have donated new shades for the windows.

"We wanted to fix up the place for the police when they come back," she said.

The only signs of disruption are posters calling for White's impeachment and urging residents to call local legislators.

The protesters say they will stay in the stations until their demands are met. "They'll have to drag us out," said June Martin.

But officials have no immediate plans for confrontation.

One police officer, assigned to watch over the stationhouse, sat watching soap operas with the protesters as pre-school children thumped through the empty station house, munching on donated donuts.

"I'm not in the position to express myself publicly," said the officer, who declined to give his name. "It's an assignment and that's what I do."

Boston still getting bad news

BOSTON (AP) — As the mayor warned that financial woes are changing this city "from Camelot to Cleveland," the state Supreme Court was hearing arguments today on whether Boston's penniless school system would stay open for the rest of the academic year.

Meanwhile, citizens angry over the layoffs of hundreds of firefighters and police officers pledged to continue the highway blockades that snarled rush-hour traffic Wednesday morning.

The schools exhausted their $210 million budget Tuesday.

The full bench of the Supreme Court scheduled a hearing today to decide whether a lower court acted properly when it ordered the city to keep the schools open even though they are broke.

Mayor Kevin H. White met late Wednesday with two City Council members in an effort to break a deadlock that had prevented agreement on a school bailout plan.

White said he offered to reopen recently closed police and fire stations to get council backing, but the two council members also insisted he rehire laid-off officers.

Council member John W. Sears, who was in touch with the negotiators, said White and the two City Council members agreed to authorize the city to issue a $75 million bond issue to pay court-ordered tax refunds, allowing the city to spend other money on the schools.

The three negotiators concluded their meeting Wednesday night without an agreement, but said a breakthrough was possible.

At the heart of the city's problems is Proposition 2½, a law passed by voters last November that limits the amount of money communities can collect through property taxes.

Because this means a dramatic drop in tax income, White had refused to let the school system overspend its budget, as it has routinely done in the past.

The city already has laid off 400 police and firefighters and more layoffs are expected. Meanwhile, another court has ordered Boston to repay millions of dollars in tax overcharges.

White warns that Boston may go bankrupt by July 1.

On Wednesday, hundreds of sign-carrying demonstrators — including off-duty and laid-off firefighters — blocked major highways, bridges and tunnels into the city for about 90 minutes during morning rush hour to protest the layoffs.

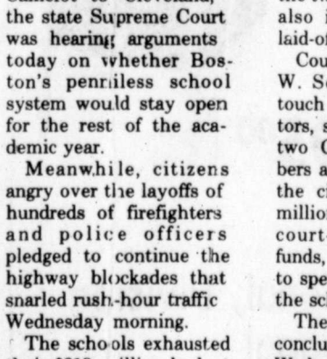

No arrests were made, police said.

"We want to tell the people that the firefighters and police have enough problems protecting the city and can't deal with the 1½ million people coming in from suburbia," said fireman Richard Besse as demonstrators walked arm-in-arm into major thoroughfares.

A day earlier, as the schools ran out of money, Suffolk Superior Court Judge Thomas Morse ordered the city to keep classes open for the 180 days required by state law, which would mean another 35 days of school after today. The 180th day would be June 19.

Lawyers for the city went to state Supreme Court Justice Ruth Abrams on Wednesday in an unsuccessful effort to fight that order.

...“Mine is a world of laughter and tears, bumps and bruises,” writes Judy Ashworth, 19, of Midland, in an article detailing her experiences as a professional circus clown, in the May issue of “Seventeen” magazine.

Judy was featured in an article in The Midland Reporter-Telegram in 1980.

“After seeing the circus in my hometown of Houston, at age 12, I left the tent determined to become a clown,” writes Judy. “Some people laughed, but I persisted.” Unsure of how to go about it, she read about a school called Clown College in Florida, where they hold classes for two months each fall. Some 60 students are chosen each year from more than 40,000 applicants.

Since the competition for admission was so keen, Judy taught herself to juggle, using the oranges in her mother's fruit bowl, and to learn acrobatics. At age 17, she finally felt ready to display her circus skills before the admissions board at Clown College. She was accepted.

She not only learned the proper way to juggle and tumble, but also mastered the arts of walking on stilts, performing magic, applying clown makeup, building props, sewing costumes, and, of course, being funny. Graduation ceremonies included a three-hour performance which doubled as an audition for Ringling Brothers, and to her surprise, she was offered a contract as an apprentice clown.

Today, she makes her home in a 3x6-foot room aboard the circus train. Last season, she traveled across the country to more than 50 cities, doing two or three shows a day, six days a week, falling down, getting slapped and chasing spotlights...

Fashion shows feature lace trim and classical look

NEW YORK (AP) — While Geoffrey Beene has brought beautiful lace trim back to clothes, Bill Haire for Friedricks Sport has revitalized a centuries old classical look.

In his long program recently at his Seventh Avenue showroom — done up in his trademark grey flannel — Beene featured comfortable and airy clothes in silks, wools and sweater knits.

Fragile gold lace trimmed tweedy outfits, giving them a somewhat dressier look. And sweaters with high pronounced ruffles changed their intent.

Beene used pink, not usually considered a fall color, in some designs in his Beene Bag collection. There were silks in hot neon pink and knits in a paler, baby pink. Above-the-knee tunics in the paler shade had gold lace trim.

Sweater coats in purple and also in blue had designs of art deco women.

For his fall collection, shown at the Parson's School for Design, Bill Haire presented what he called a “poet's coat,” a sort of classic frock coat done in mohair. It later was shown with metallic embroidery worn over a fern green corduroy skirt.

Throughout the collection, Haire used deep earth tones with occasional flecks of gold and silver.

“The lines are curved and loose, moving away from the body but cinched in to reveal the shape,” Haire said.

A tiered mohair cape was worn over a lurex tiered skirt and blowse, and a bell-sleeved mohair and lurex coat was worn over a tissue lurex tunic top and bloused pants.

A leather smock in a pewter color, had a metallic cast. It was worn over fern green velvet knickers.

A quilted fur lined jacket was reversible. It was worn with corduroy pants. A brushed nubby jacket in fern green appeared with a tweed skirt.

For evening, Haire showed an irridescent tissue lame coat and camisole over leather pants. And, entirely in the flimsy tissue lame fabric, he showed a karate-style top, camisole and pants.

Not clothes to wear to work

NEW YORK (AP) — Kansai Yamamoto's clothes are not the sort you wear to work.

You would not, for example, take Kansai's spangled lavender gown, the one with the gilded birds dangling tassels from their beaks, to the grocery store.

The black ostrich-feather vest would be quite out of place at the PTA. And people at the bank would stare if you stepped into line with Kansai's Korean tiger leering at them from the back of a full length fake fur coat.

For the clothes of Kansai Yamamoto, you need An Occasion.

That may be why the elegant and frequently startling fall line of this diminutive Tokyo designer was shown to such good advantage at New York's flashy discotheque Xenon Tuesday.

There, under three mirror balls and dozens of spotlights, what could be more natural than a padded four-color windbreaker with a scowling Oriental face?

Who, with the green Xenon sign glowing in the dark, could quarrel with an embroidered Chinese lion with flaming green hair?

What impassioned dancer would pause twice to see the satin jacket over two-color spangled miniskirt?

Kansai himself adds to the theatrical nature of the presentation of his fall fashions by charging up and down the ramp, cuing sound and light men and putting the models through their paces.

His face is masked at first. But when the applause swells at the end, he throws the mask into the crowd like a bride tossing a bouquet.

"Engineers devote themselves to the best in technology; I devote myself to the best creations for people," the slick, color program quotes the designer as saying.

But Kansai owes much of his inspiration to technology — in particular to metallurgy.

Metallic gloves sheathe his models' hands. Metal grommets line their belts. Four-inch slivers of brass dangle from their ears. Kansai himself wears a belt of half-moons of some shiny yellow metal.

One ensemble, called "Zippers," is nearly pure high tech: The material is wool. But zippers sprout where stitches should be, outlining pockets, drooping from the hem, running up and down legs and arms where there's nothing to be zipped.

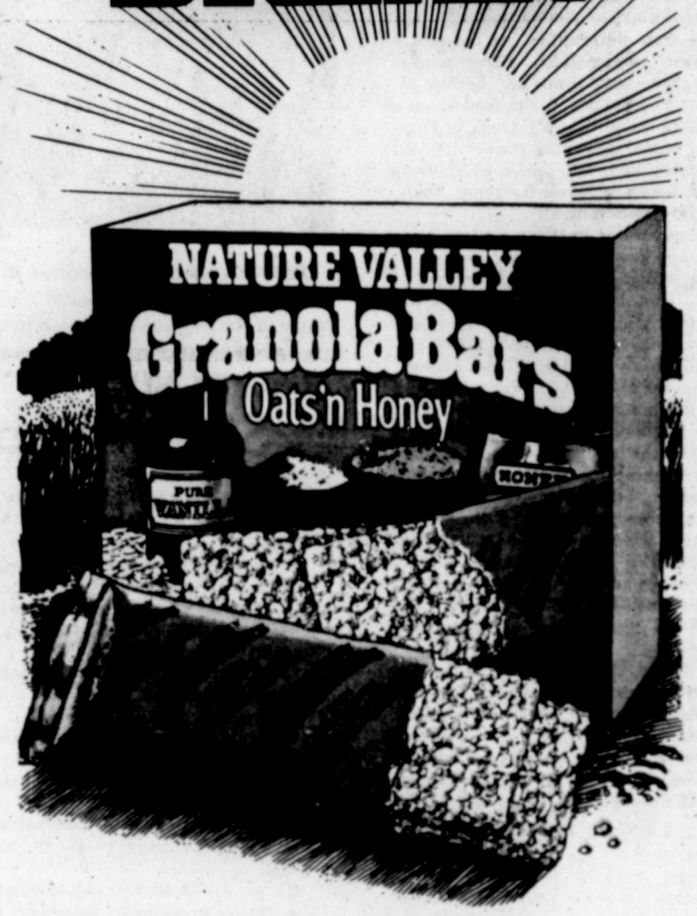

Kansai's spots of brilliant color are set off by the deep black backgrounds of his wool pants and vests.

He's also enamored of an artificial leather, marketed under the trade name Sofrina, which its makers claim is made of fibers that are only three one-thousandths the thickness of silk and are "finer than collagen fibers of natural leather."

It's an arresting line of clothes, and not recommended for the timid.

DEAR ABBY

Whole truth will mend parents' broken hearts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is 28 and a nurse. She took a job several thousand miles from home and has been gone nearly a year. We were hoping she'd come home last Christmas, but she said she'd come home next summer and bring her fiance. (She has written about a young man whom she'd fallen in love with, describing his "beautiful attitudes, brilliant mind and outstanding character.")

Now we know why she didn't bring him home for Christmas. He's an amputee! He lost both legs just below the knee in an accident. We learned this yesterday from a letter she wrote us.

We are heartsick. She's such a beautiful girl and could easily get a whole man. Abby, how do parents adjust to knowing their daughter will spend the rest of her life caring for an invalid? — BROKENHEARTED PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: What makes you think he's an invalid? You would be amazed how well some people can manage on artificial limbs. There is no reason to be heartbroken. If he's "whole" enough for her, it says a great deal for her values. Theirs could be a completely beautiful and fulfilling marriage.

Auction house opens third center

NEW YORK (AP) — Sotheby's, the auction house, has opened a third auction center in New York City.

Its 84th Street Galleries for Books, Stamps and Coins is believed to be the first separate auction center ever established to be devoted entirely to these three popular collecting areas.

This past fall, Sotheby's opened its block-long York Avenue Galleries to house all of its decorative arts department, while its Madison Avenue Galleries continue to handle sales of fine arts and jewelry.

The firm has now divided all of its facilities by collecting category, rather than by price, extending the concept of more specialized auction services introduced last fall.

Mrs. Vincent Bash, chairman of the Perinatal Clinic, discusses nutrition with expectant mothers. The Clinic is conducted by the Junior League of Midland Inc. every Thursday in the City-County Health Dept. These classes, taught by League volunteers, are designed to teach women in the areas of nutrition, Lamaze methods, hospital procedure, coping with emotional stress, birth control, fetal development, care of the baby and the mother. They are free to any woman who can not afford conventional prenatal care. Classes in post-partum instruction are also given at Midland Memorial Hospital. These classes provide teaching in the areas of the handling and hygiene of infants. The Junior League offers these classes as a service to the community.

Voluntary sterilization said leading birth control method

BALTIMORE (AP) — Thirteen million Americans were sterilized during the last decade compared with 3 million the decade before, says a Johns Hopkins report which concludes that voluntary sterilization is now the world's most common birth control method.

Such surgery increased fivefold in the 1970s, according to the report released Tuesday by Population Reports, a university publication.

An estimated 100 million men and women — a third of the people who practice some form of bith control — are relying on sterilization as a result of increased legal and cultural acceptance of the technique, and, in some countries, outright government pressure, the report said.

"The fact that voluntary sterilization has a success rate of about 99 percent, few side effects in connection with surgery and virtually none afterward probably accounts for much of its popularity," said Phyllis T. Piotrow, one of the report's authors.

The technique is most common in China, where an estimated 40 million people have been sterilized, and in India where 25 million have undergone vasectomies or tubal ligation.

In Latin America, the report said, the number of voluntary sterilizations hay grown from 1 million to 4.5 million.

The study was conducted by researchers of the Population Information Program at the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health. The study received support from the U.S. Agency for International Development.

The report refers to the number of couples voluntarily sterilized. But Ward Rinehart, editor of Population Reports, said the study actually counted single people and couples, and tallied just one sterilization if both the man and woman in a couple were sterilized.

A recent survey suggested "safety and effectiveness are the two keys to deciding whether a given form of contraception will gain broad acceptance," Ms. Piotrow said. The development of new surgical procedures for women resulted in a dramatic increase in female sterilization, the report said.

The governments of India and Pakistan stressed male sterilization in the 1960s. Female sterilizations outnumbered vasectomies in South Korea, Taiwan, Malaysia, Thailand and the Philippines, the report said.

Latin Americans showed an even greater preference for female sterilization because the "macho" ethic equates virility with fertility, the report said.

The report focused on legal issues associated with voluntary sterilization, saying that major changes in laws and regulations have accompanied the increased use of voluntary sterilization.

"There are a few countries — China, India and Singapore — where governments emphasize this form of birth control," said Ms. Piotrow.

"In many others, though, there has been little government involvement and irtually no publicity," she added, saying the increased popularity appears to result from word-of-mouth.

At least 21 nations have eased restrictions on voluntary sterilization in the past decade, the Johns Hopkins report said, while four — Iran, Saudi Arabia, Chile and Peru — tightened them.

Austria, Denmark, Italy, New Zealand, the Philippines, Taiwan, Iraq, Tunisia, Colombia, El Salvador and Mexico had taken major steps to ease restrictions, the report said.

In China, sterilization is officially voluntary, although the official press has reported cases of government coercion. Pressures include loss of privileges granted those who have only one child and economic sanctions imposed on people with more than two children.

Lebanese army soldiers look out over the embattled Christian city of Zahle Wednesday, watching for activity on the part of the Christian forces who hold the town.

Syrians boost defenses

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria wheeled Soviet anti-aircraft missiles into Lebanon to beef up its defenses against Israeli jets after they shot down two Syrian helicopters near the besieged Christian city of Zahle.

The missiles were deployed Wednesday in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley as Israeli aircraft pounded Palestinian guerrilla positions to the south, along the Israeli-Lebanese frontier, and the guerrillas fired at least two rocket salvoes over the border into the northern Galilee.

Palestinian gunners claimed one of the raiding jets was shot down, but Israel said all its planes returned safely.

Witnesses said four launchers, each carrying three SAM-6 surface-to-air missiles, were positioned about three miles south of the Rayak airbase, near where the Syrian helicopters were shot down Tuesday.

Diplomats in Beirut warned that the chances of war between Syria and Israel would be increased if one of the Syrian missiles brings down an Israeli jet. But Israel Radio said Prime Minister Menachem Begin and his top aides have resolved that "Israel will not draw back from a confrontation with Syria."

Israel said it shot down the two helicopters because they were attacking Israel's Christian allies in mountaintop emplacements around Zahle, the Christian stronghold roped off by a 30-day-old Syrian siege. Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori said it was a warning that Israel will not tolerate "Syrian air activity in Lebanese skies."

In Washington, Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said the Reagan administration has asked the Soviet government to pressure its Syrian allies to end the warfare in Lebanon.

"The Syrians have got to back down," said a U.S. official, who declined to be identified by name. "We do not feel that morally we can sit idly by and watch a blood-bath develop."

American Ambassador Samuel Lewis conveyed to Begin the "serious concern Washington has about recent military actions in Lebanon," U.S. officials said.

But Israel Radio said Lewis did not criticize Israel's direct military intervention on behalf of the embattled Christians.

Damascus claims it is fighting to drive pro-Israeli Christian militiamen out of Zahle to prevent them from aiding a possible Israeli end-run attack on Syria through the Bekaa Valley.

U.S. seeks Soviet help in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, describing fighting in Lebanon as ripe for a "blood bath," is asking the Soviet Union to persuade Syria to pull back its troops.

"The Syrians have got to back down," one official source, who asked not to be identified, said Wednesday. "We do not feel that morally we can sit idly by and watch a blood bath develop."

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said the fighting in Lebanon is "very worrisome" and said the situation is being monitored on an around-the-clock basis by a special working group at the State Department.

The Reagan administration has made appeals for Soviet cooperation both in Moscow and also directly to Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin in Washington, the source said.

Specifically, officials want the Soviets to use their influence with Syria, whose troop movements into mountain-top positions between Beirut and Zahle threaten to worsen the fighting.

From there, the source said, Syrians can fire artillery in all directions, including at positions occupied by Christian Falangist forces and the port of Junieh, which Israel uses to supply the Christians.

The United States wants the Soviets to tell the Syrians to "cease and desist," according to the source.

The Soviets have a defense treaty with Syria, whose troops have been deeply involved in the fighting, especially against Christian forces around Zahle. Syria has about 20,000 troops in Lebanon as an Arab-sponsored peace-keeping force.

Ruling National Party retains control; Botha sees setback

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Election returns today continued the ruling National Party's stranglehold on the South African Parliament, but a sharp drop in voter support gave Prime Minister P.W. Botha the worst setback the party has suffered since coming to power in 1948.

Unofficial returns from the general election Wednesday gave the conservative Nationalists 99 of the 165 seats in the lower house of Parliament. The liberal Progressive Federal Party had won 24, six more than they had in the last Parliament; the centrist New Republic Party had 5, and 37 were undecided.

The government television network predicted the Nationalists would get 135 seats, two less than they held when Parliament was dissolved.

Despite this overwhelming majority, the Nationalists were getting only about 50 percent of the popular vote, compared with 65 percent in the last general election in 1977.

The drop in the Nationalist vote was attributed to growing liberalism, as evidenced by the Progressive Federal gains, coupled with ultra-conservative dissatisfaction with Botha's cautious removal of some of the restrictions put on the non-white majority by the apartheid system of racial segregation. This resulted in a bigger vote for the ultra-rightist Reconstituted National Party and an increase in the number of voters who stayed away from the polls.

Although the Reconstituted Nationalists appeared unlikely to win a seat, they were tripling the 34,000 votes they got in the last election. And in several districts, they ran close races with the Nationalist candidates.

Casa de Amigos enlisting help

Volunteerism is nothing new in Midland. From Boy Scouts to theater arts, almost any group imaginable is supported by a dedicated force of volunteers.

But one existing human service agency has found a new source of volunteer help and is developing a new way to turn volunteer time into bread on the tables of the population it serves.

Casa de Amigos, a United Way funded local outreach agency serving primarily senior residents of east and southeast Midland, recently received approval from the federal government to recruit two Vista volunteers who will establish co-operative food buying clubs in low income neighborhoods.

The volunteers each will receive $300 per month in living expenses, and for that stipend, will work full-time organizing neighborhood residents who wish to participate in the co-ops.

Mary Hinkle, Casa's executive director, feels that it is a very special person who will volunteer to help other people full-time for a year at $300 a month. The one Vista volunteer recruited by Casa is a Midlander and already is a participant in Casa's other programs.

Blas Zuniga, although not a senior citizen, has been active at Casa for some time. He is disabled and can not do work which requires physical labor, but, says Mrs. Hinkle, he is a pro at persuading other people to be involved, one of the qualifications for the Vista position. Not only does Zuniga help in promoting activities at Casa, he spends a great deal of time visiting people who are unable to attend the center.

"I believe it will be nice — my help," says Zuniga. "I like this kind of help."

"This kind of help," predicts Mrs. Hinkle, will enable participants in the co-ops to save as much as 20 to 50 percent of their food bills. She anticipates 10 clubs of up to 50 families each will be established in the first year of the program.

However, if the program is to begin on schedule, a second volunteer must be recruited soon, Mrs. Hinkle explained.

"We hope to find someone already living here in Midland — a person with some kind of business experience. Volunteerism is so strong here that I feel we have an excellent chance of finding just the right person for this job," she added.

Mary Hinkle, executive director, and Blas Zuniga, Vista volunteer, review plans at Casa de Amigos for the food co-op program to be started this year at Casa de Amigos.

Zuniga spent three days earlier this week in Austin participating in Vista training. When another volunteer joins him, they will begin organizing the co-ops at Casa, whih is providing office space and administrative support and supervision for the program.

Persons in southeast or east Midland who are interested in participating in a food buying co-op should contact Mrs. Madrid or Zuniga at Casa de Amigos, 1101 Garden Lane (682-9701) after Friday.

An ethnic food journey through the vegetable garden

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Eggplant, zucchini squash, plum tomatoes, peppers, oregano and basil should conjure up visions of an Italian chef, or at least savory aromas in the kitchen. Your vegetable garden can produce the items to induce this.

One garden catalog is offering a new Italian Vegetable Gardening Kit containing seeds for the items listed above plus broccoli, endive, chicory, Florence fennel, parsley and rue.

Italian cooking makes strong use of vegetables in pastas, soups, meat and fish dishes and in sauces and salads.

Easy to grow in areas with a long growing season is eggplant, an Italian staple. In northern climates, lengthen the growing season by starting seeds indoors six weeks before the last expected frost. Use a soiless mix of peat moss, vermiculite and perlite, or a commercial medium.

When the soil warms to 55 degrees Fahrenheit atnight, transplant seedlings to a sunny spot, sidedress with 5-10-5 fertilizer monthly and keep soil fairly moist. Two months later the self-pollinating flowers should be purple eggplants.

Zucchini is a prime ingredient of a number of dishes, such as minestrone, rich vegetable soup, antipasto and salad, or is breaded and fried in oil.

Roma tomato is an essential to pungent sauces and pastes. Who can resist sweet pepper with Italian sausage and onion?

Tomatoes, pepper and eggplant basically need the same soil, care and location.

Broccoli is also an important Italian cooking ingredient. It is available in large-head and non-heading varieties. The head type is common; the other forms inch-wide buds and edible strap-like leaves that can be used in salads. Cooked stems and buds are flavorful and colorful.

Broccoli is a cool-weather plant. Start seeds indoors eight weeks before the last frost date and move seedlings outdoors to harden for a week before transplanting about the time of the final frost. Fertilize with 5-10-5 when plants are 16 inches tall, again when 12 inches and when buds begin to form.

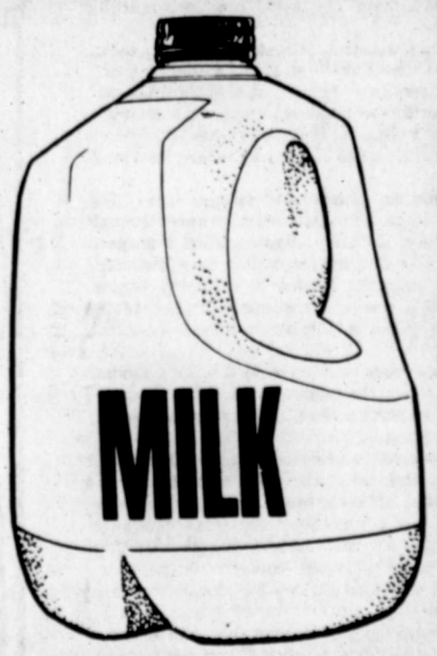

Florence fennel, or "Finocchio," has the taste and texture of celery. Eat the bulby base raw in salads; braise or steam stalks. Treat fennel as you do broccoli. Sow seeds directly in the garden in summer for fall harvest where spring is short and summer hot. Blanch base as plant thickens by covering with soil.

Italian parsley looks like ordinary parsley but has flatter, finely-cut leaves and stronger flavor. Spring-sown seeds will produce plants by midsummer and supply sprigs all the way to winter. It is a biennial and will flower the second year. It tolerates some shade.

Basil and pasta go together.

Bloodhounds on right track

EAST GREENBUSH, N.Y. (AP) — No one has ever called David Onderdonk's dogs cute, and he doesn't recommend their kind as pets. For one thing, they slobber a lot.

As trackers, though, bloodhounds like Boozer, Jigger and Brandy are so good they're the only animals recognized as witnesses in a court of law.

"I'm a hound man," Onderdonk proclaimed, producing a business card for Renssalaer County Search and Rescue Inc. that reads, "Have Bloodhounds — Will Search."

"I'll take my dogs anyplace — for free — that there is a missing person who wants our help. This is my contribution to mankind," he said.

Even as Onderdonk, 59, and his wife, Hilda, 54, extolled the big dogs' virtues, he noted that great patience and dedication is required to work with them. While bloodhounds are affectionate and fond of children, he cautioned, "If you don't do something like we're doing, you'll think the hound's a big slob of a dog."

Since 1971, Onderdonk, an East Greenbush police officer, and his three dogs have tallied more than 100 finds, nosing out competition ranging from other dogs like German shepherds, coonhounds and beagles to state police and Civil Air Patrol helicopters.

"The bloodhounds have the God-given ability of a nose that can trail a person on a scent 10 days old," he said. "Everyone has different fingerprints, we all know that. To a bloodhound, everyone has different scents."

Onderdonk said bloodhounds have been unjustly slandered as savage and ugly dogs in legend and literature, such as the famous phosphorescent beast in "The Hound of the Baskervilles" and this line from the poet, Lord Byron: "To have set the bloodhound mob on their patrician prey..."

Onderdonk recalled having "one mother tell us she was afraid of having our dogs trace her child because of what she had seen in the movies. But when we brought the dogs over, they began licking and playing with her other child so she was reassured."

The bloodhound's characteristic bleary eyes, drooling mouth, oversized floppy ears and folds of wrinkled skin under the chin haven't done much for its image, either. While some find the features noble and endearing, others view the dog as one of nature's bizarre tricks.

Actually, Onderdonk said, each feature has a purpose. The floppy ears and great jowls — called "flews" — work together by dragging on the ground and stirring up the scent. The drooling produces moisture, which intensifies the scent. The bleary eyes are caused by a second, inside eylid that drops protectively over the dog's eye when it tracks in underbrush or wooded areas.

Onderdonk conceded that German shepherds are by far the better bomb detectors, narcotics dogs or guard dogs. But when it comes to finding lost people, Onderdonk said, bloodhounds have it all over the more excitable shepherds.

On Boozer's first assignment, at 18 months, she sniffed an 18-hour-old track left by an amnesia victim, then walked past the volunteers and a host of rescue squads to find her man alive, unharmed.

Ten years later, one of Mrs. Onderdonk's most prized possessions is a letter of appreciation from that man's wife.

"In my heart, your Boozer will always have first place along with my family," the grateful woman wrote. "Because of her, my family is whole again."

The searches have not always ended so happily. Sometimes, the trail ends in a bog in the Adirondack Mountains of upstate New York or at the edge of a pond.

Once, during a search for an escaped convict, the searching bloodhounds stopped beside a railroad track and refused to go farther, Mrs. Onderdonk recalled. Authorities were asked to stop and search the train at the next station. The convict was apprehended in the boxcar, just as Jigger had sensed he would be.

In addition to search and rescue work, Onderdonk is on call to help solve crimes throughout the county. Recently, Jigger trailed a suspect from a broken soft drink machine over a highway, across a parking lot behind a shopping center, around a bank, through a woods and back to the garage housing the soft drink machine — and the suspect.

Criminal searches are tough on the dogs, Onderdonk said, because the criminal is rarely so thoughtful as to leave behind a shoe, a hat or a handkerchief for the dog to smell.

But bloodhounds can surprise you, he added with a smile. Take the time his dogs tracked down a man on a 10-day-old scent long after other searchers had given up and gone away.

And the same day that one woman called the dogs "majestic," Mrs. Onderdonk said, she overheard a man tell his wife that "those are the ugliest dogs I've ever seen in my life."

The next winter, Jigger rescued that man after he lost his way while deer hunting. Then, Mrs. Onderdonk recalled, he told her, "Those are the most beautiful dogs I've ever seen in my life."

Astronauts to marry

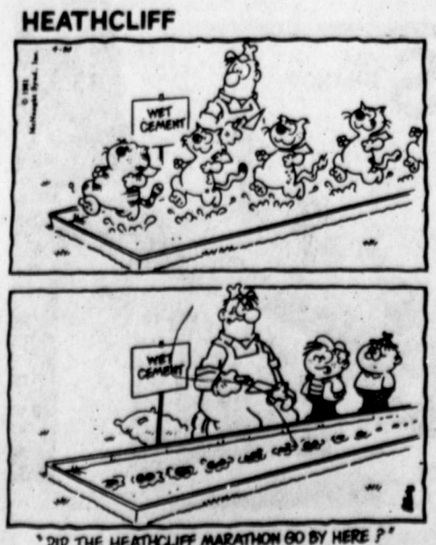

NSHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Astronauts Margaret Rhea Seddon and Robert Lee Gibson will be married May 30 at Murfreesboro, a Nashville newspaper revealed in a copyright story Wednesday.

Miss Seddon, a physician, is the daughter of a Murfreesboro attorney and a graduate of Murfreesboro's Central High School, The Tennessean reported. She graduated from the University of California and the University of Tennessee College of Medicine at Memphis.

Her fiance, a Navy lieutenant commander, is a native of Westminster, Calif., and a graduate of California Polytechnic State University.

Both Dr. Seddon and her fiance were selected for astronaut training in 1978. At the time, she was a resident in nutrition at City of Memphis Hospital and he was a Navy fighter pilot.

Officials worry spraying problem could hurt cranes

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — State and federal wildlife officials are anxiously scanning the skies of eastern Montana so they can shoo whooping cranes from fields that have been sprayed with deadly insecticides.

There are believed to be only 94 wild whooping cranes in the world, including a flock of 78 Texas-wintering birds whose migration routes can include eastern Montana, where farmers are trying to fight an infestation of army cutworms.

If whooper sightings are confirmed in sprayed areas, "we will probably employ aircraft or ground teams to haze them out of there," said Wayne Brewster of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's endangered species division in Billings.

The state Department of Agriculture said last week about 195,000 to 225,000 acres of winter wheat, alfalfa, pasture and native range infested with cutworms has been sprayed with pesticides since March.

Most spraying, done by state-licensed applicators at the direction of farmers, has been with endrin and toxapehene, which like DDT do not break down rapidly in the environment.

Lowell McEwen, a Fish and Wildlife Service biologist in Fort Collins, Colo., an authority on endrin, said the chemical is "1,000 times more toxic than common pesticides. It is one of the most toxic pesticides to all bird species we've tested, and there is no reason to think whooping cranes would be more resistant."

The rare cranes are four feet tall and white with black-tipped wings that span about seven feet.

The main flock of 78 birds winters on the Aransas Refuge near Corpus Christi, Texas. The whoopers have begun their spring migration to a refuge in northern Alberta and Saskatchewan on a route that can include five eastern Montana counties, said Morris Anderson of the Wildlife Service's whooping crane sighting center in Pierre, S.D.

Fifteen counties have been sprayed.

The other flock, of 16 cranes, winters in New Mexico's Rio Grande Valley and usually migrates to the Grays Lake Refuge in Idaho, although one whooper was spotted this spring in the Red Rock Lakes Refuge in southwestern Montana.

In the 1940s, the nearly extinct species dropped to 15 birds. Their numbers have been gradually coaxed to the present level of about 125 birds through such techniques as a sandhill crane "foster parents" program.

The Grays Lake flock was started in 1975 by taking whooper eggs from the Wildlife Service's caged flock of about 25 at Laurel, Md., and putting them in the nests of sandhill cranes at the Idaho refuge. The young whoopers then began migrating with their surrogate parents.

Biologists say they don't know if the Montana spraying program is a threat to repopulation efforts, but they don't want to take chances.

State wildlife officials also fear the pesticides will contaminate deer, antelope, game birds and fish. There has already been one fish kill from endrin and toxaphene in a small creek in eastern Montana.

McEwen said that "the idea of releasing endrin into the environment over large areas is something entomologists call Stone Age pest control. There are alternative materials that are not nearly so hazardous and are more selective. They are poisoning everything under the sun."

Oakford Bain, a state Agriculture Department entomologist, said endrin is safe when properly used. State agriculture director W. Gordon McOmber said he is asking the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to approve use of an alternative pesticide called Lorsban 4-E, which is effective but isn't as hazardous to the environment.

GM gives up on perfecting air bag

DETROIT (AP) — After spending 11 years trying to perfect dashboard air bags to cushion car crash victims, General Motors Corp. says it is giving up because "we could hardly give them away."

"We just don't think they are a commercially viable product. Most Americans just refuse to use them," said GM spokesman Stan Hall in announcing Tuesday that the nation's No. 1 automaker was following the lead of No. 3 Chrysler Corp. in ending development of the air bags.

GM had been in the forefront in research and development of the air bags. But the requirement for passive restraints — in the form of either air bags or seat belts that fasten automatically — has met with strong opposition from the auto industry.

Earlier this month, the Reagan administration delayed by one year implementing the first part of the law's requirement. It put off mandatory installation of the restraint system on large cars in the 1982 model year and said it would review the entire law.

GM has urged withdrawal of the regulation, which eventually would require either air bags or automatic safety belts in all new cars.

Supporters of the passive restraint requirement say air bags would save the lives of 9,000 people a year, prevent an estimated 65,000 serious injuries and cut auto insurance costs.

The requirement was a top priority of Joan Clayrook, who heaed the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration under President Carter.

Air bags, installed in special dashboard compartments, are designed to inflate suddenly on collision, cushioning the occupants of the car.

From 1974 to 1977, when GM offered air bags as optional equipment on its cars, it sold only about 10,000 units at a price of $300 each — well below cost, Hall said.

If the air bags were currently available, GM estimates, air bags would cost about $1,100 each, assuming a yearly output of 100,000.

Hall could not estimate how much money the company had spent on research and development of the air bags.

Chrsyler halted its research on inflatable restraints about five years ago, for much the same reasons as GM.

"We decided that safety belts did a much better overall job and for a fraction of the cost," said Chris Kennedy, Chrysler's director of federal government affairs.

Earlier this month, Ford Motor Co. said it would not offer air bags on certain 1982 models as originally planned, saying it needed the manpower and resources to devote to other areas of research.

"We'll continue with testing on the air bags, but we'd prefer to go with making the present seat belts mandatory," said Jerry Sloan, Ford director of corporate information. "The seat belt in the car right now would be just perfect if people would just use them and it wouldn't cost a penny."

Studies have shown that only 10 percent to 20 percent of people use seatbelts.

If the government regulation is not withdrawn, passive restraints would be required on all full-size and intermediate cars by the 1983 model year and on other cars by 1984.

"A far better alternative is to encourage greater use of the safety belts that already are in most cars on the road," Dr. Betsy Ancker-Johnson, vice president of GM's environmental activities staff, said in a statement.

Panel opposes aid to El Salvador

AP Laserphoto

A 76-year-old man totes a container of water into the refugee camp at Labermuda, about 30 miles north of San Salvador, El Salvador, Tuesday. Residents of the camp carry in water as pipes have been damaged in continued guerrilla fighting.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Foreign Affairs Committee, rebelling at a "blank-check" policy on El Salvador, wants a ban on U.S. military aid and advisers unless President Reagan certifies that the ruling junta is promoting democracy and not abusing human rights.

The stand, set forth in an amendment to the pending foreign aid bill, was approved 26-6 Wednesday with support from 18 Democrats and eight Republicans.

Administration officials said the amendment, which sets forth six conditions for U.S. aid to the embattled Central American republic, could tie the president's hands in fopeign affairs. Nevertheless, they added that nothing in the measure conflicts with administration goals.

To become effective, the amendment must be approved by the full House and Senate. Congress then would have to determine what conditions, if any, have not been met and enact separate legislation to withdraw aid and advisers.

"This vote represents a decisive repudiation of the blank-check military policy of the Reagan administration in El Salvador and constitutes a significant victory for those who believe we should not provide unconditional military aid to the government of El Salvador," said Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y.

The amendment was sponsored by Solarz and another New York Democrat, Jonathan B. Bingham, who said it was meant to "make use of this military assistance as leverage to help achieve the goals we all support in El Salvador."

The amendment would require Reagan to certify that the Salvadoran junta headed by President Jose Napoleon Duarte:

—Is not engaged in "a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights."

—Has achieved "substantial control" over all government security forces "so as to bring to an end the indiscriminate torture and murder of Salvadoran citizens by those forces."

—"Is making continued progress in implementing essential economic and political reforms," including land reform.

—"Is committed to the holding of free elections at an early date."

—"Has demonstrated its willingness to negotiate with opposition groups an equitable political resolution of the conflict."

—Is making a "good-faith effort" to investigate the slayings of three U.S. Catholic nuns, a social worker and two American labor representatives.

The conditions are similar to ones that Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., says he will propose when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee considers its version of the aid bill.

Solarz attempted to make the amendment stronger by authorizing an immediate assistance cutoff if Congress finds White House assurances inadequate. But this was rejected by committee Republicans.

Also defeated by the panel were proposals by Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., to cut off military aid immediately and by Rep. Michael D. Barnes, D-Md., to force withdrawal of all U.S. military advisory and training personnel.

Earlier Wednesday, James L. Buckley, undersecretary of state for security assistance, told the House Appropriations Committee that leftist guerrillas have made a "quantum jump" in efforts to disrupt El Salvador's economy by attacking facilities such as power plants and bridges.

He said the stepped-up sabotage underscores the need for expanded U.S. aid to help the Salvadoran economy and encourage land reform.

Judge dismisses nine-count indictment for mail fraud

ABILENE — Chief Judge Halbert O. Woodward dismissed a nine-count mail fraud indictment here Friday against Don M. Martin, Doma Corporation and Caprock Services Co., Inc., all of Abilene.

Doma Corporation, which is in the crude oil marketing and transportation business, also has an office in Big Spring.

Martin and the two firms were indicted Feb. 3 in connection with an allegedly fraudulent crude oil business scheme. Martin is president and chief of operations for the two firms.

Motions of dismissal had been presented by attorneys for both parties during a pretrial evidentiary hearing before Woodward April 16 and 17.

Woodward's dismissal was based on his finding that the constitutional rights of the defendants were violated when their former attorney, Reagan Martin of Dallas, voluntarily and without consent of the defendants, testified before the grand jury.

Bill Neal of Vernon, Martin's attorney, said, "On behalf of Don Martin, I am very pleased with the court's decision, and feel that the judicial process has worked properly to vindicate his rights."

Judge Woodward also recently dismissed a $3 million civil suit filed in U.S. District Court here by Reagan Martin, part-owner of the two Abilene firms, against Don Martin, Doma Corporation and others.

In that suit, Reagan Martin accused Don Martin, his cousin, of "diverting corporate opportunities" into his own pocket by conducting oil speculation in Doma's name and then, if oil was discovered, transferring ownership to another company formed for this purpose.

AT WIT'S END

Jeopardizing image with metric talk

By ERMA BOMBECK

Look, just because I was in the park in a $33 pair of running shoes and a sweaty T-shirt, do you really think I sold out?

Can't you take a joke?

Figure it out. You all know how I feel about physical fitness. Would I jeopardize my pillow image by converting to fresh air?

The truth is, I got sick and tired of being on the outside of every conversation. It doesn't matter that only one out of every ten Americans maintains a regular physical fitness program. What is significant is that ten out of every ten Americans pretend they do.

It's a status thing. Do you know what it's like to stand around at a party and not have three purple toenails in the process of falling off? You're nothing!

For the first time I really understand Rosie Ruiz at the Boston Marathon. It only takes a few minutes each day. I go to the park, throw my body against a tree and groan for five minutes. Then I ask the first person I see about his or her split time. Then, I run with the first jogger for a few feet and stop to re-tie my shoe. From then on in, it's a slow dawdle.

I cannot tell you what a difference this has made in my social life. When people discover I run, they tell me how healthy I look and how much weight I've lost. They share with me their pain and their secrets. (A perfect stranger confided to me one night that his hemorrhoids were no longer a problem.) There is nothing to set you apart from the rest of the room like speaking metric. ("Anyone run the 10,000-meter race last Sunday?")

And not the least of it has been the actual time I've spent walking around the park. Have you any idea what it does to a woman in her midlife to hear someone breathing heavily down her back? You can't buy that kind of excitement over the counter.

The charade has been working for weeks now, but yesterday, as I was stretching followed by my "run," a breathless, sweaty woman next to me asked how far I had run that day. I shrugged, "Four or five miles. I'm having such a good time, I lose track."

"I find it hard to believe you're that kind of a runner."

"What gave me away?" I asked.

"The handbag. Few runners carry 'em when they run."

First lady of Minnesota shows food artistry

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

When food editors and writers meet for their annual convention, the governor of the state in which the meeting is located, and his wife, are usually invited to one of the dinner events.

But the tables were turned when the convention was held recently in Minneapolis: Gov. Al Quie and his wife, Gretchen, invited the food writers to the executive mansion for a buffet dinner that emphasized the foods of Minnesota.

Gretchen Quie decided upon foods traditional to Minnesota's heritage.

The sponsor of the party, Pepperidge Farm, provided these recipes:

BEEF TENDERLOIN SNACKS

2 lbs. beef tenderloin
Salt, pepper, garlic powder
2 pkgs. (3 ozs. each) cream cheese, at room temperature
1 tbsp. horseradish
1 tbsp. prepared mustard
48 slices party rye slices

Sprinkle beef with salt, pepper and garlic powder. Roast in a preheated hot oven at 400 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes or until rare on a meat thermometer. Cool, wrap and chill. In a bowl mix cream cheese, horseradish and mustard. Spread evenly on party rye slices. Cut beef into very thin slices and put on top of cheese mixture. Serve with small carrot flowers, radish roses, green pepper and celery slices, tiny white onion rings and button mushrooms. Makes 48 open-faced snacks.

SHERRIED WILD RICE SOUP

One-fourth cup butter or margarine
1 medium onion, finely chopped
One-half lb. sliced mushrooms
One-half thinly sliced celery
One-half cup flour
6 cups chicken broth
2 cups cooked wild rice
One-half tsp. salt
One-half tsp. curry powder
One-half tsp. dry mustard
One-half tsp. dried chervil
One-fourth tsp. white pepper
2 cups half-and-half
Two-thirds cup dry Sherry
Chopped parsley or chives

In a large saucepan melt butter over medium heat, add onion. Cook and stir about five minutes until golden. Add mushrooms and celery, cook and stir two minutes. Mix in flour. Gradually add broth, stirring constantly five to eight minutes until slightly thickened. Stir in cooked rice, salt, curry powder, mustard, chervil and pepper. Reduce heat to low. Stir in half-and-half and Sherry. Bring to a simmer, stirring occasionally. Ladle hot soup into individual bowls, garnish with parsley or chives. Makes about three quarts.

CUCUMBER COTTAGE CHEESE MOLD

1 pkg. (6 ozs.) lime gelatin
1 cup boiling water
1 cup plain yogurt
2 cups (1 lb.) low-fat cottage cheese
2 large cucumbers, 1 lb. each, peeled, seeded and shredded (about 3 cups)
1 small onion, grated (about 3 tbsps.)
One-fourth cup lemon juice
One-half tsp. salt

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Cool to lukewarm. Beat in cottage cheese and yogurt. Fold in remaining ingredients and pour into a lightly oiled two-quart mold: Chill until firm, about three hours. To unmold, dip mold into lukewarm water for a few seconds, tap to loosen and invert onto a serving plate. Serve garnished with thinly sliced unpeeled cucumbers.

Adding yeast dough to kuchen makes recipe 'real thing'

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I've baked apple kuchen with a quick-bread base, but I understand that kuchen made with yeast dough is "the real thing." Is that true? - HOME BAKER.

DEAR HOME BAKER: According to Webster, a kuchen is "any one of several varieties of coffee cake typically made from sweet yeast dough and variously shaped, flavored and frosted." To corroborate this definition, I looked into a turn-of-the-century cookbook that devotes a short chapter to kuchen recipes. Sure enough, every one of these calls for a sweet yeast dough. Guess I'd better pass along the following recipe. — C.B.

APPLE OAT KUCHEN

3 cups unbleached all-purpose flour
1-3rd cup granulated sugar
1 package dry yeast
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
½ cup very warm (120 to 130 degrees) water
½ cup butter (1 quarter-pound stick), melted
3 large eggs
1 cup quick-cooking or regular oats
3 cups sliced peeled apples
Streusel, recipe follows
Confectioners' sugar, if desired

In the large bowl of an electric mixer stir together well 1 cup of the flour, the granulated sugar, yeast, salt, cinnamon and nutmeg. Add the water and butter; beat at medium speed for about 2 minutes. Add the eggs and another cup of flour; beat at high speed for about 2 minutes. Stir in the remaining 1 cup flour and the oats. Spoon batter into two well-greased 9-inch round layer-cake pans, spreading evenly. Cover; let rise in a draft-free warm (about 80 degrees) place until nearly double in size. Gently arrange apple slices on top of batter. Evenly sprinkle the Streusel over the apples.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until edges of kuchen are a light golden brown. Place on wire cooling racks for 10 minutes; turn out on racks; turn right side up. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar. Makes two 9-inch round kuchen.

Serve warm. Or completely cool one of the kuchen for future use: wrap in airtight foil; freeze. To reheat, preheat oven to 350 degrees. Place unwrapped kuchen on a cookie sheet in the preheated oven until hot through — 14 to 16 minutes.

Streusel: in a medium bowl stir together 1 cup unbleached all-purpose flour, 2-3rds cup firmly packed light or dark brown sugar and 1½ teaspoons ground cinnamon. Slice ½ cup butter (one quarter-pound stick) into 8 pats and add. With a pastry blender, cut in the butter until the mixture is crumbly.

Maternity ward affairs

GARLAND (AP) — A room in the maternity ward at Garland Memorial Hospital this week contained two mothers, three daughters, two sisters, a grandmother, an aunt and a niece - but there were only four people in the room.

How could that be? Well, it was like this:

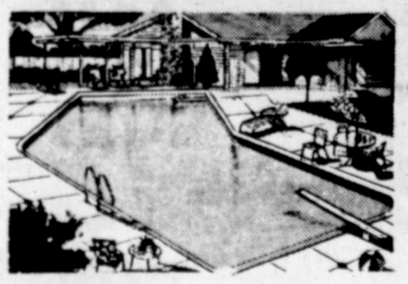

Last Friday, Jimmie Bosley became a grandmother for the first time when her daughter, Sue Duncan, gave birth to a 6-pound, 6-ounce girl, Lindsay Rachelle.

Sunday, grandma gave birth to Jodie Juanita, who is Sue's sister and Lindsay's aunt. Jodie, the aunt, who is two days younger than Lindsay, the niece, weighed in at 6 pounds, 14 ounces.

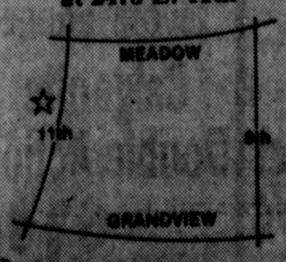

Mother and daughter shared a room in the maternity ward while their daughters shared the nursery.

"Mother was so excited when I had my baby, that I think that's why she came on in and had hers," said Mrs. Duncan. "I just couldn't believe it. My baby's aunt was born just two days late."

Neither Mrs. Duncan nor her 38-year-old mother had expected to be having their babies so close together.

Together again — in a way

NEW YORK (AP) — They weren't together to record it and aren't back together as a group, but the three surviving Beatles have combined their talents on a record for the first time in more than 10 years, according to published reports.

George's Harrison's new single, "All Those Years Ago," features Ringo Starr on drums and Paul McCartney and his wife, Linda, singing harmony, say the New York Post and New York Daily News.

The Post said the song was about the early years of the Beatles and was a tribute to John Lennon, who was shot to death here last year.

The three former Beatles, who split up in the early 1970s, taped their contributions separately and sources said the reunion was a one-song affair, the Post reported.

But after Starr's marriage to Barbara Bach on Monday, the survivors of the Fab Four spontaneously took to the stage of a London club, the first time they performed together in 11 years, the Post said.

"Men were crying openly," said one club worker. "They sounded as if they had never been apart."

•

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter wants to do some traveling now that he's not in the White House, and he's interested in visiting China this fall, according to a Carter aide.

Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, are "interested" in making a trip to China sometime this year, possibly with their daughter Amy, aide Phil Wise said Wednesday. Carter earlier expressed an interest in visiting Japan this year.

Wise said there has been "some contact" with Chinese officials, but "there's not been any formal contact."

•

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Danny Kaye, who says conducting an orchestra is "the greatest feeling of neurotic power in the world," will get a chance to display his brand of lunacy with the New York Philharmonic.

Conductor Zubin Mehta will yield his baton to Kaye in a Sept. 23 "Live from Lincoln Center" broadcast on PBS. The concert will benefit the musicians' pension fund.

"When you think of it as a symphonic concert, it is really not," Kaye said Wednesday. "A lot of craziness goes on."

Mehta said orchestra rehearsals by Kaye are professional and serious. "He has got a clearer beat than three-fourths of my colleagues," the conductor said.

Kaye, who studies by listening to records but can't read a score, has raised $5.5 million for musicians' pensions funds with his concerts.

•

Cs090 LONDON (AP) — Although the material up for bid was comic, the cash was serious at Christies auction house in London.

Elton John

When the gavel fell, rock musician Elton John had spent $31,000 for 232 original scripts from the popular British radio series, "The Goon Show."

The comedy series, which starred the late Peter Sellers, still has a big following in Britain despite having ended more than a decade ago.

The scripts were put up for auction by Spike Milligan, a former Goon. Christies officials said the scripts sold for almost twice the anticipated price.

The notes and sketches show the development of such Goon characters as Yogurt Muleboot, described as "a displaced Siberian haddock stretcher," and Bluebottle, "a short, thin shivering youth, heavily wrapped in rice paper and dental string."

•

NEW YORK (AP) — An expensive automobile leased by the widow of baseball great Jackie Robinson was stolen from a Manhattan street along with $20,000 worth of tickets left inside it, police say.

Rachel Robinson, who lives in Stamford, Conn., had parked the silver 1979 Mercedes Benz on Fifth Avenu between 104t and 105th streets around 5:30 p.m. Wednesday and attended to some personal business.

When she came back an hour later the car was gone, police said.

In the car's trunk were 1,000 tickets for a Jackie Robinson Foundation jazz concert scheduled for June 28. Each ticket was valued at $20.

Tennis star will sue woman who filed 'palimony' suit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Billie Jean King's attorney says the tennis star will file suit against a hairdresser who contends she and Mrs. King lived together as homosexual lovers during the early 1970s.

Marilyn Barnett, 32, a former employee of Mrs. King, filed a "palimony" suit Tuesday seeking an interest in the house that she says Mrs. King bought for her. Ms. Barnett, confined to a wheelchair after a fall in the late 1970s, has lived in the house since 1974.

Mrs. King said in a statement Wednesday that Ms. Barnett's allegations were "untrue and unfounded."

The professional tennis player also said she was "shocked and disappointed" by the action of her former secretary, who used to make her travel arrangements and screen her telephone calls.

Mrs. King's attorney, Dennis Wasser, said he will file suit to have Ms. Barnett evicted from the house, owned by Mrs. King and her husband, Larry.

Wasser said he was an expert in defending such "palimony" cases, which have proliferated in California since Michelle Triola Marvin won $104,000 from her long-time lover, actor Lee Marvin, after they split.

Wasser contended Ms. Brnett's lwsuit stems from the Kings' attempt to empty the Malibu house so it can be sold.

Ms. Barnett contends Mrs. King promised to take care of her financial needs and gave her access to blank checks signed by Mrs. King.

"On or about May 1972 in Los Angeles, Calif., (Ms. Barnett) and (Mrs.) King met and began dating on a regular basis," the suit said. "Sexual intimacy between (Barnett) and (Mrs.) King commenced approximately six months after their first date."

Ms. Barnett said she gave up a hairdressing career to become secretary, confidante, companion and cook so that Mrs. King's energy "could be totally directed toward playing tennis."

Senior citizens get act together

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — After leaving audiences yelling for encores in Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi, the Peabody Senior Citizens Center's choral and drama group is taking its act north — all the way to the White House.

The 25-member troupe has been invited to perform Monday at a White House reception for Foster Grandparents, a favorite project of First Lady Nancy Reagan.

"Everybody is on cloud nine," Margie Holmes, director of the Peabody Senior Citzen's Center, said Wednesday.

Mrs. Holmes said each member of the troupe has been asked to contribute $100 and the center will try to come up with the balance to finance the $6,000 trip, including plane fares.

Mrs. Reagan is to preside at Monday's reception, but it's not known whether the president will attend.

The choral and drama group was formed five years ago when Peabody opened as the city's first senior citizen's center.

"They started out going to nursing homes and churches in Memphis," Mrs. Holmes said. "Then they began going into Mississippi and Arkansas."

Gwen Shoup, assistant director of the center and a former professional entertainer, directs the troupe, Mrs. Holmes said.

"She doesn't like to book them over twice a month, but they've become so popular she's been booking them once a week," Mrs. Holmes said. "We are booked six months in advance."

The average age of the performers is 75.

"The youngest one is 57 and the oldest one is 82," Mrs. Holmes said.

Several months ago, the players got the idea of taking its act to the White House.

The performers contacted Mayor Wyeth Chandler and Shelby County Mayor Bill Morris, both fans of the troupe, to set the wheels rolling. Finally, with the help of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., and Rep. Ed Jones, D-Tenn., it appeared an invitation to the White House would be forthcoming.

That was before President Reagan was shot on March 30.

"We sort of gave up hope at that point," Mrs. Holmes said. "Then, a week ago Thursday, the White House called and said they wanted us to perform May 4. They caught us kind of short because they only gave us 10 days notice."

Since then, the troupe has been practicing faithfully and working on cutting their usual hour-long show — "The Roarin' '20s — 'Dem Was the Good Ole Days" — down to 30 minutes.

Mrs. Holmes said the troupe does a new production every year, but the current show, a musical comedy, is a holdover from 1980.

"We like to keep everything light, nothing deep," she said. "We like to think of lively things."

Death detours 'Dallas' plot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The death of actor Jim Davis and a television writers' strike has made the upcoming plot twists of the popular "Dallas" CBS-TV series tougher to figure out than last year's guessing game about "Who Shot J.R.?"

"Dallas" executives were faced Wednesday with the tough decision of how to handle the role of family patriarch Jock Ewing, played by the 65-year-old Davis, who died of a heart attack Sunday.

If they decide to end the oil baron role with a death that becomes part of the scenario, a major rewriting would have to be completed within the next few weeks.

And that poses a problem because the striking Writers Guild of America already has announced they will not allow its members to return to work rewriting five 1981-82 "Dallas" scripts to deal with the Jock Ewing situation.

"One option that none of us wants is the possibility of recasting the part," producer Leonard Katzman said. On a hurry-up schedule, Lorimar Productions planned to start refilming the five shows May 14.

Katzman said the possibility still exists that the guild will reconsider its refusal to exempt "Dallas" from the strike because of Davis' death. He said he thought the writers' refusal was only "conditional." He declined to elaborate.

The possibility apparently also existed that Lorimar Productions would defect from the producers' negotiating committee and try to reach an independent contract with the writers.

"There was much speculation (about a Lorimar defection). "But I think Lorimar is going to hold firm," Katzman said when reached at the Lorimar offices at MGM Studios.

The May 14 production start is two months earlier than usual, Katzman acknowledged, because of a chance the Directors Guild of America will strike when its contract expires June 30. A directors' strike would virtually shut down film and television production.

The "Dallas" current season ends Friday, with the studio planning another fictional cliffhanger executives hope will attract as much iterest as the "Who shot J.R.?" situation that remained unanswered for six months. But Jock Ewing is not involved in the season-ending episode, Katzman said.

Davis died Sunday at his suburban Northridge home. He had been recuperating from March surgery on a perforated ulcer. A memorial service was scheduled for Friday at 1 p.m. at Forest Lawn's Church of the Recessional in Glendale, Lorimar officials said Wednesday.

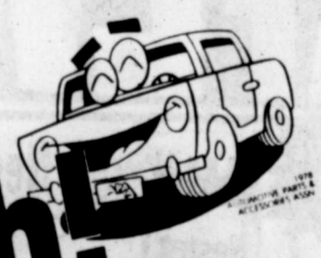

Meanwhile, a writers' spokeswoman said Wednesday the guild has made "excellent" progress in separate talks with independent producers.

The strike issues include residuals for home video — pay TV, videocassettes and videodiscs. Writers have said the producers' home video offer would give them "a percentage of nothing."

Midland Lee will be looking for a state berth in the 400 meter relay with, front to back, Darrin Williams, Troy Barber, Carlton Johnson and Arthur Williams Friday and Saturday in the Region I track meet at Texas Tech.

Strong field awaits Lee, MHS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — The Midland Lee Rebels and Midland High Bulldogs combined to set seven District 5-5A track records last Friday, but despite the record smashing assault, Tall City entries will be favored in only two events when the Region I track meet convenes here Friday and Saturday at the Texas Tech oval.

However, the favorites are determined by season bests posted in an event and that is not always a good guage in which to judge.

LEE'S ARTHUR Williams, one of the state's premier 200 meter entries, is the lone Tall City favorite heading into the key meet which will determine state track berths in two weeks in Austin.

Williams' 20.97 recorded in the 5-5A meet last Friday is by far the best time in the 200 meter field. Arthur is unbeaten this year in this event. The key challenge will come from Killeen-Ellison's Angelo Bryant, 21.35; Killeen's Dewayne Kidd, 21.8; El Paso High's Monty Dailey, 21.81; and Lubbock Coronado's Percy Hines, 21.9.

LEE'S ROBERT Schooler will be highly regarded in two events and even though he has lost only once in the 3200 meters and once in the 1600 meters, he will be the favorite in only the 1600 here.

Schooler's 4:20.40, a District 5-5A record, is the top 1600 meter time this year, but he will face stiff competition from Killeen's Carlos Quinones, who has a 4:21 to his credit and was third in the state meet last year.

Quinones qualified for both the 1600 and 800 meters and it is not known if he will run both events. Schooler's time is better than Quinones this year, but the Killeen product has state experience. Still, Schooler's looks like a shoe-in for a couple of state berths.

Schooler must go against Amarillo Tascosa's David Williams in the 3200 meters. Williams has the best time this year with a 9:21 while Schooler's best is 9:22.59. These two have faced each other twice this season, splitting each race. However, Schooler has not lost to Williams in the 1600 meters this year.

MIDLAND HIGH sophomore James Beverley has sailed through all the major competition in West Texas unbeaten in the 800 meters. He owns one of the state's top marks with a 1:53.56, but most feel he can go even faster. Quinones, if he runs this event, will be the favorite with the state's third best time of 1:51.

Strangely enough, Lee's Michael Goodley, a surprise qualifier in the 800 meters, owns the third best qualifying time with a 1:54.95 and if he continues to knock off seconds like he has the last three weeks, he could be another big surprise. The best of the rest are Hereford's Felix Soliz, 1:55.9; and Don Davis of Waco Richfield, 1:56.20.

The Tall City will have two entries in the 300 meter intermediate hurdles also with Lee's David Piccolo and Midland High's Robert Crawford. Piccolo set the 5-5A record with a 38.82 while Crawford owns a 38.83, both beating Piccolo's old mark set last year.

Neither, however, will be favored to win and earning a state berth will be hard. Three runners will enter the meet with better times. Killeen's Mark Smith appears to be the best with a 38.07 while Bryan's David Harris owns a 38.06. El Paso's Terry Greene has a 38.15. Lubbock Monterey's Steve David has a 38.8. This could be a wicked race.

LEE'S KEITH Brown appears to be in position to earn a state berth in the shot put if he can keep his most recent performance of 58-9¼ intact. El Paso Eastwood's Jim Jordan owns a throw in excess of 61 feet this year, but the rest of the field has no one over 56 feet except Big Spring's Greg Jones, who has a 58-6. Brown has not lost to Jones this season. In fact, Brown is unbeaten this year in the shot put.

Midland High's Jim Kemper appears headed for a tough assignment in the pole vault. Kemper was a surprise region qualifier with a 12-6, his best height in competition. But this field is filled with stars. El Paso's Toby Bell leads the way with a 16-0 vault this year. Amarillo Tascosa's Charles Alexander and Mike Lister have both been 13-6 as has Killeen's Ricky Dow while Lubbock Coronado's Barry Kirpatrick is also a 13-foot vaulter.

LEE ALSO has two relay teams in the region meet, which gives the Rebels a legitimate chance at winning the team title. Neither of Lee's relay teams will carry a favorites role.

Lee's sprint relay team owns a 5-5A record time of 41.80, but Temple is favored with a 41.53 while Ellison has a 41.46. Two others under 42 seconds are Odessa Permian, 41.87; and Eastwood, 41.97. Darrin Williams, Troy Barber and Carlton Johnson and Arthur Williams will compose the Lee team.

The forecast is even dimmer in the 1600 meter relay where the Rebels rank fourth. Ellison has a 3:14.57 this year and has not been over 3:18. Killeen owns a 3:17.18 and Eastwood has a

Cubs edge Gold Sox, 4-3

Win second in a row

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Cubs beat Amarillo's Gold Sox 4-3 again, but this time made it look easier. But not so easy that a few hearts didn't flutter fearfully in the suspenseful ninth.

Dave Owen's two-out bunt in the bottom of the 10th gave Midland its win Tuesday, but the Cubs made a 4-3 lead stand up over the final four innings Wednesday for their second straight Texas League win.

Lefthander Craig Lefferts notched his second win in four decisions with a late inning save from Rob Blyth, who, in turn, was beneficiary of a saving catch in the ninth in by centerfielder Mel Hall.

TONGIHT EL Paso invades Cubs Stadium for a five-game series, starting at 7 p.m., lefthander Tom Spino will pitch for Midland. El Paso took the recent series in the Border City 4-1 over the Bruins.

Blyth relieved Lefferts with one out in the eighth after the southpaw from the University of Arizona walked Joe Lansford. Blyth fanned Dan Gausepohl and John Steels, but then walked pinchhitter Jerry DeSimone to open the ninth.

After Aaron Cain whiffed, pinchhitter Doug Slettvett drove deep to center and the game's outcome went with it.

"I saw it good all the way," said a battered Mel Hall, "But I wasn't sure I could get it."

"I was afraid if would be high off the fence," Harsfield said.

The Cubs' centerfielder reached up as he hit the wall and one-handed it for the second out. Blyth then whipped a sinking slider by Jeff Pyburn for the strikeout that notched his third save of the season.

HALL REACHED across the plate for a fastball and drove Tim Hamm's third pitch of the game over the left field fence to give Midland a 1-0 lead in the first. Dan Gausepohl, who won the first game of the series with two homers, tied it with a solo shot to left in the second before the Cubs rallied for three runs, what proved to be difference, in the fourth.

Tom Grant clomed a double off the scoreboard, Jack Upton's single to center plated the run and Bill Morgan looped a single down the right field line as Upton scored. Craig Kornfeld singled to advance Morgan to second and Randy LaVigne drilled a single up the middle for what was to plate Morgan with the winning run.

Amarillo made it close with two runs in the sixth when Jerry Johnson walked and then Hall lost John Alvarez fly ball in the twilight. It went for two, but "It was well hit. Mel couldn't have caught it even if he had seen it," Manager Roy Hartsfield said.

John Steels was to drive in Alvarez to close the Midland gap to 4-3.

AFTER THAT it was a question of whether Lefferts could hold the fort. He got into the eighth before he needed help in collaborating on an eight-hitter. "Craig did a good job, but they had hit the ball hard during the game. We came up with a couple of double plays and since Amarillo is predominantly a righthanded hitting team, I thought I'd bring in Blyth, who was well-rested, and let them look at a righthander."

In reflecting on the Cubs win, Hartsfield was pleased, "over the two-out hits we got in the fourth inning (three of them). That's something we haven't been getting."

What disturbed him was a leadoff walk in the ninth, "Something we can't afford to do."

Although he was a loser, Hartsfield was impressed by the Gold Sox' Hamm. "He got stronger as the game progressed and I didn't think we'd get another run off him." Happily, another run wasn't necessary.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Tuesday night Hall retired from action after getting a knee between the eyes in a slide at second. Before Wednesday's game, he was holding an ice pack to his face. A pop up had hit him on the nose in practice, but Mel was counting his blessings, "That ball I lost could have hit me, too. I never saw it and with my luck...."

Hall, Morgan and LaVigne all had two-hit nights for the Cubs and third baseman J.W. Mitchell turned some of the Gold Sox' best shots off Lefferts into quick outs....LaVigne also came up with a long run and nice catch on Gausepohl's foul in the fourth...

Bulldogs rally for 8-7 win

McLean leads rally

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Frank Garramone, leading off the bottom of the seventh inning, crashed a tremendous home run over the left field fence to tie the game and Doug McLean punched a one-out RBI single to right to lift the Midland High Bulldogs to a wild come from behind 8-7 win over Odessa Permian in a makeup District 5-5A baseball game Wednesday afternoon at Memorial Stadium Field. MHS stays in the thick of the second half title chase with the win, 2-1, 12-11 overall, while the Panthers slip to 1-3 in the race and 5-14 on the year.

The pitching victory went to McLean who turned in five excellent innings of relief work. McLean gave up two hits, two runs, walked two and struckout three during his stint on the mound. For McLean, who has had injury problems all year, it was his first district win against one loss. The loss went to Steve Moore, who gave up Garramone's homer and walked Castaneda in the seventh, after pitching well for two innings in relief.

On his homer, Garramone said, "It was a fastball about belt high; just where I like it."

After Garramone's homer tied the game, Moore walked Joel Castaneda on five pitches and Teddy Bartley sacrificed him to second to set up McLean's winning hit. With Bruce Hollender on the mound, a count of one strike and the Mojo infield playing in, McLean got a fastball on the outside of the plate and punched it over first basemen David Donaway for the winning RBI.

McLean said after the game, "Coach (Tim) Whalen called me over before I batted and told me if the ball was on the outside of the plate just go with it and stroke it to right. I had been pulling everything but this time I hit it just like the coach told me."

Coach Whalen agreed, "He hit the ball just like I teach them." Whalen added, "Didn't Garramone get a hold of that ball; that's the second time this year he has hit one out to save our ...." Whalen was taking about a home run Garramone hit to win a game against Big Spring in the first half.

In the early going it didn't appear the listless Bulldogs would even get a chance to make the game close.

Before the sparse crowd had a chance to settle down, Jimmy Morris opened with a double to right off MHS starter Mark Hewitt. Robbie Goetz followed with an infield hit and Mike Williams dumped a Texas leaguer to right for one run.

Michael Feldt make a fine catch on a drive by Rusty Inzer to left and second baseman Fabian Ramos gloved a hot smash off Coy Stribling to force Williams at second before Greg McDonald hit a bullet up the middle to knock in another run. Donaway flied to center to end the inning.

Mojo was at it again in the second. Mark King lead off with a walk, Brad Phillips sacrified him to second and Morris dumped a single in right. Robbie Goetz then executed a perfect squeeze bunt to score one run, Williams double to right for a run and Inzer golfed a RBI-single to left. Stribling singled to put men at the corners but the threat ended when Tim Davis hauled in McDonald's long drive to center.

McLean took over for Hewitt to start the third and put the Panthers down in order. In the fourth, Mojo tallied twice on a hit by Morris, a walk to Williams and a single to center by Stribling netted one run. When Davis mishandled Stribling's hit, Williams raced home with the Panthers' seventh run.

Phillips, Mojo's starter, put runners on each of the first three innings but kept the Purple Pack at bay.

In the bottom half of the fourth that streak came to an abupt halt. Phillips walked Castaneda and Bartley on eight straight pitches. Kyle Ford struckout but McLean laced a single to left for two runs. Jose Carrasco rifled a single to center and Mojo coach Lonnie Hobbs went to his bullpen.

Moore came in to strike out Davis but Feldt walked and Jerry Zachery legged out an infield hit that netted a run. Garramone lashed a single to left for another run and when the Mojo infield misplayed the throw in, Zachery scored the Pack's final run of the inning.

After the trouble in the fourth, Moore retired six of the next seven Pack hitters until the seventh. Moore served up Garramone's homer and walked Castaneda. Hobbs went with Bruce Hollender, making only his second appearance with the varsity. The results are history.

Doug McLean, pitching and batting hero of Midland High's 8-7 win over Odessa Permian Wednesday, is mobbed by teammates Michael Feldt (12) and Tim Davis (9) after delivering the game-winning hit in the bottom of the seventh inning. McLean also picked up the pitching victory.

Last pick; high hopes

HYATTSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Phil Nelson feared he had missed his only chance to play professional football by dropping out of Delaware after academic ineligibility forced him off the team midway through last season.

But Nelson was the last player picked — No. 332 — when the National Football League completed its college draft Wednesday. The 6-foot-6, 225-pound tight end was the choice of the NFL Champion Oakland Raiders.

Midland High's Richey Hodek, on the left, and Lance Armstrong, on the right, practice some volleys with tennis coach Pete Barizon as they prep for the Region I tennis meet to be held in Lubbock Friday and Saturday. Armstrong, who has won the District 5-5A tennis title twice in a row, is the defending Region I champion. Hodek, who has finished runnerup in district the last two years, also finished as runner in the Region I meet last season. The top two finishers in the region tournament advance to the state tournament in Austin.

MHS netters vie for trip to state

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

Midland High's tennis aces Lance Armstrong and Richey Hodek will be looking to take it all this season after repeating as champion and runnerup in District 5-5A when they open play in the Region I tennis tournament Friday at the Lubbock Municipal Tennis Center.

Last year Armstrong and Hodek finished one-two in the district, Region I meet, before losing in the first round in their bid for a state title in the state meet in Austin. Armstrong lost to the eventual state champ Tom Ogden from Houston while Hodek dropped his opening match to the netter that was state runnerup.

Armstrong two-year district champion and defending champion in Region I, suffered from arm miseries early in the season but still won tournaments in Abilene, Lubbock and the district. Tennis coach Pete Barizon says, "Armstrong has played well all year. He should be a a strong threat to go all the way to the state championships this year."

Hodek has spent most of the year as a runnerup to Armstrong. In district, Hodeck lost to Armstrong 0-6, 6-0, 10-8 in the finals to end up runnerup in district for the second straight year. Barizon called the district finals, "One of the most bizarre an exciting tennis matches I've ever seen, and I've seen a lot of them."

On Hodek, Barizon said, "Richey has really been coming on strong." In the Midland Tennis Tournament held over this past weekend, Hodek defeated Armstrong for the title in the men's open singles.

In meets at Abilene and Lubbock, Hodek was defeated in the semifinals. In the district meet, he skipped past Big Spring's Kip McLaughlin, 6-2, 7-5, in the semis for the right to face Armstrong.

Barizon stated, "It is an honor just to get two boys to the region meet. The district had several outstanding players but Armstrong and Hodek were up to the challenge. Now all we need is a little luck and some steady play and we should have two players in Austin again."

Hodek takes a 5-2 mark in dual matches to Lubbock while Armstrong did not complete in any dual matches because of his arm problems. Twelve other netters from the region will be waiting in Lubbock to knock Armstrong from his throne, but the stiffest challenge for the title may come from his teammate. Hodek wouldlove dearly to escape from the runnerup role.

The top two finishers in the meet advance to the state meet in Austin.

Lee Trevino heads list at Houston tourney

HOUSTON (AP) — Lee Trevino, a winner the last time out, heads a tour-tested group of Texans who rank as the major challengers in the $350,000 Michelob-Houston Open golf tournament.

Of the 17 Professional Golfers' Association Tour events held so far this year, six have been won by a handful of Texans who are expected to exert a major influence on the 72-hole test which started today on the 6,918-yard, par-71 Woodlands Country Club course.

The winners include Trevino (Tournament of Champions), Dave Eichelberger (Tallahassee), Tom Kite (Inverrary), Bill Rogers (Heritage) and Bruce Lietzke (San Diego and Bob Hope).

THEY'RE JOINED by such proven performers as Ben Crenshaw; John Mahaffey, a former PGA champ and now representing the host club; Charles Coody, Don January and Miller Barber.

"It's a thrill to win any tournament," said Rogers, who shot a 64 in Wednesday's pro-am event, "but, yes, it would be something special to win here."

Trevino, Kite and Rogers have a history of success here. All finished in the top seven last year.

THE COURSE this season is lined by extremely deep, difficult rough, which places a premium on accuracy. And Trevino, Kite and Rogers are among the more accurate players in the game.

"Man, you get it off the fairway and you've got no chance of reaching the green," said Trevino, a playoff loser in this tournament a year ago.

"The rough is like (U.S.) Open rough. And I like it," he said. "That's the kind of course I like to play."

Curtis Strange is the defending champion. Although he has yet to win this season, he's played well most of the year and won more than $100,000, while finishing second in one event and third in two others.

Other standouts include Johnny Miller, winner of two 1982 titles, Hale Irwin, Hubert Green, Lanny Wadkins, Jerry Pate, Tom Weiskopf and Arnold Palmer.

Tom Watson, the Masters champ and a winner last week in New Orleans, is not competing.

NBC will provide national television coverage of portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Stacy has chance for piece of LPGA history

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — For 26-year-old Hollis Stacy, this week's $125,000 CPC International women's golf tournament at nearby Moss Creek Plantation is an opportunity to write a small piece of LPGA history.

All she must do is successfully defend the crown she won last year, a feat no other female golfer has been able to achieve in the tournament's five years.

Stacy won the 1980 International by posting a tournament record 279, nine under par for four rounds on the treacherous Devil's Elbow course.

Even then she had to birdie the first sudden-death playoff hole to beat Amy Alcott and join the dean's list of players who captured this event: Sally Little, Sandra Palmer, Jan Stephenson and Nancy Lopez-Melton.

"It's a very hard, demanding golf course," Stacy said. "It's an easy place to get into trouble."

Stacy is admittedly pointing for a run at victory at Moss Creek. Currently ranked 15th on the 1981 money list with winnings of almost $29,000.

Just a way of life in racing

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Whenever the U.S. Auto Club tightens its restrictions on the exotic machines that race in the Indianapolis 500, drivers and mechanics try to find ways of overcoming the obstacles while living within the rules. It's called progress.

Eight years ago, following the disastrous 1973 race in which three people were killed and a score of spectators seriously burned, USAC clamped down severely. Speeds dropped about 10 mph the next year, but within four years the state of the art had improved to the point where speeds were higher than ever.

TOM SNEVA set a track record with a four-lap average of 202.156 mph in 1978, but the next year new USAC restrictions on engine "boost" — manifold pressure which governs air intake and thus horsepower — dropped the top qualifying speed to 193.7.

The chaotic 1979 race was also the last time USAC had any major trouble with cheating. Some teams tried to circumvent the lower manifold pressure by altering the cars' exhaust wastegate to build up the pressure and simply overwhelm the relief valve.

The normal 33-car field got an extra two participants in a special session of time trials that year. It followed an appeal to USAC by owners of 11 cars which were either bumped from the original lineup or were disqualified for alleged cheating.

THIS YEAR, USAC has banned both movable and fixed skirts, which normally hang from the bottom of the car's edges to the ground to create an aerodynamic downforce. Crews have been working for months on improved chassis design to negate the effects of the no-skirt rule.

And the top speeds already are roughly up to defending champion Johnny Rutherford's pole-winning run of 192.256 mph a year ago.

"I can't think of anything" that might be done to cheat this year, said USAC technical chairman Jack Beckley, the man responsible for certifying each entry as acceptable to race at the Speedway. "You'd have to go back two years ... that was the last attempt at cheating, although a lot still go right up to the limit of the rules."

THE MAJOR reason the skirts were outlawed, Beckley said, was "probably the expense. In other races, they would go through a set (of skirts) each race; out here, they'd go through a set each day. The cost just got prohibitive.

"We ran tests and found out that the cars without skirts went only about two miles per hour slower (than the ones with skirts). So we didn't feel it was worthwhile to keep the skirts," Beckley said.

Some drivers, including Rutherford, have been critical of the no-skirt rule, claiming a loss of stability makes the turns more dangerous.

Beckley, however, discounted that contention.

"The drivers' first reaction is that it upsets the chassis, but when they get the car dialed in (with chassis adjustments), it doesn't really make that much difference. In Formula One, they ran without them and within three races the speeds were back up."

Dykes looks to plug line holes in spring drills

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

When you lose the likes of All-District linemen Keith Brown and Irl Conally, it's not hard to figure out where Midland Lee football coach Spike Dykes will looking Friday at 4 p.m. when his Rebels begin the three-week spring training grind.

The Rebs, who were 6-3-1 last fall in Dykes' first year as head coach, appear to be strong with a good receiving corps, a veteran tough secondary and skilled running backs. But the offensive and defensive lines have been depleted to graduation and will have to receive a lot of attention this spring.

"We have to rebuild the offensive and defensive lines," Dykes said this week as the Rebs near the starting gun. "Last year we had an altogether situation when we started. We had no secondary, no wide receivers and very little running back experience. This year those may be our longest suit. At least, we have experience in those positions."

THE REBELS still should be ahead of a year ago since there will be no introductions needed. Last year, Dykes said, "We're all a bunch of strangers to each other." This year that won't be the case. And most of the Rebels will be famaliar with Dykes' split back offense and 4-3 defense. That in it self should give everyone concerned a head start.

"It's got to be better when you know people to start with," Dykes assessed. "You know much better what to expect and what talents some of them possess, but the biggest advantage is the kids know better what to expect from me."

The Rebels have 21 days in which to work in 18 workouts. The spring training ritual will climax for the Rebels Thursday, May 21, with the annual Maroon-White scrimmage game at 7:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium. The scrimmage will be open to the public.

Dykes is expecting about 150 athletes to take part in the drills. He also expects over 80 to be from the freshman ranks.

THE REBELS have a good nucleus to start with. Calvin Riggs, 5-5A's second leading rusher last season, returns at fullback, shooting for another 1,000-plus yards again this season. Riggs will also be back at a defensive end slot where he had a lot of playing time last year.

Van Gravitt returns at center and to handle the extra point and field goal assignments while middle linebacker supreme Terry Thompson is looking for his best season, and that could be an awesome thing to behold.

Wide receivers Kenneth Brown, Kevin Sparks and Jesse Fennell also return. Fennell and Brown also had a lot of secondary experience to go along with veterans Bart Ryan and Chris Parker.

The Rebs have over 20 lettermen returning and that also has to be a plus.

ONE OF the most watched battles of the spring will be at quarterback where seniors-to-be Ryan, Parker and Dondi Dominquez will vie for the spot vacated by Barry Corley.

Gravitt helps ease some of the problems in the line as should Alan Kyle, a defensive end and offensive tackle who had playing time last year.

"I think the kids are looking forward to spring training," Dykes said. "After all, its a chance to improve as a football team and I hope that's what they want to do. Our goal is to improve with every turn of the clock."

The Rebels will workout daily at 4 p.m. with the exception of Saturdays when they will hold a morning workout. UIL forbids Sunday workouts. Dykes was not certain of the exact times of the Saturday workouts.

Dykes also indicated that the Rebels would hold one or two scrimmages each week. "Scrimmages help break things up a little and the kids like it, so we will try to scrimmage once or twice a week."

MIDLAND HIGH coach Pat Culpepper will start the spring training test Monday for the Bulldogs and that will be reviewed in Sunday's edition.

Philadelphia 76ers Caldwell Jones retrives the rebound over Boston Celtic Cedric Maxwell while Lionel Hollins watches during National Basketball Association action Wednesday night at Boston Garden. The Celtics nipped the 76erd 111-109. The 76ers lead the best of seven series 3-2 as the teams travel to Philadelphia for game six.

Roscoe Tanner survives temper tantrum in meet

DALLAS (AP) — Roscoe Tanner, talked out of walking off the court by his coach in the stands, survived two match points Wednesday night to advance to the semi-finals of the World Championship of Tennis.

Tanner outlasted India's Vijay Armritraj 6-2, 1-6, 2-6, 7-6 and 6-4 and will play Friday against the survivor of tonight's meeting between Poland's Wojtek Fibak and South Africa's Johan Kriek.

Brian Gottfried and top-seeded John McEnroe will meet Friday in the other semi-final leading up to Sunday's championship match for $100,000.

Before Wednesday night's match, Tanner got permission from WCT officials to use Dennis Ralston as his coach. Armritraj was told of this before hand and played although he was less than excited about the prospect of Tanner getting help during the court changes

"I thought it was very unfair for Ralston to be telling him (Tanner) what to do at every change over," said Armritraj. "It was poor sportsmanship. Roscoe has played enought to know what's right or wrong.

"It upset me to a point. But the WCT said it was OK so I played. But it was poor court etiquette. I would never use a coach in the stands."

Tanner became so upset with some of the calls that at one point in the fourth set he put on his warmup jacket and threatened to leave.

"That was the one big thing Dennis did for me," said Tanner. "He told me not to quit and I sure was thinking about it.

"I was just frustrated with the rules where the umpire is not supposed to be able to overrule a linesman then they have this little code where he can actually do it."

Asked about the fairness of having a coach, Tanner said, "I beat Vijay last week and Dennis wasn't there. I've played where Vijay's brother was behind him. But the way I look at it a guy can't hit the ball for you."

Tanner dodged two match points during the fourth set which he won on a tie-breaker 8-6.

"I thought I was dead on one shot Vijay made," said Tanner. "I had already turned toward the net to shake his hand when I saw it go out. It was that close."

Armritraj said he was disappointed with Tanner's display of temper which included spiking a towel and barking at referee Joe Lynch.

"There was no necessity for a tantrum," said Armritraj. "I didn't expect it from Roscoe."

Spinks ordered to pay

DETROIT (AP) — Former world heavyweight boxing champion Leon Spinks, who has filed for divorce, has been ordered to pay temporary alimony to his estranged wife.

Wayne County Circuit Judge Charles Kaufman ordered the former World Boxing Council champ to pay $375 a week to his wife Nova.

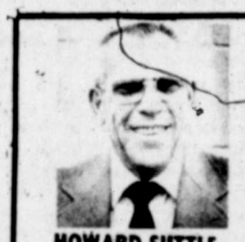

The judge Tuesday said Spinks would have to increase the weekly sum to $500 a week if the 27-year-old fighter prevails "in his anticipated fight with (current WBC champ) Larry Holmes." The fight has been scheduled for June 22 in Las Vegas, but Spinks wants the site changed to Detroit.

Kaufman also ordered Spinks to make immediate payments of $1,000 to his wife and another $4,000 by June 1 to her attorney for court fees.

Spinks filed for divorce Feb. 17 in Wayne County Circuit Court. Spinks and his wife, who have been married for seven years, have been separated for "close to two years, on and off," said Carl Becker, Mrs. Spinks' attorney.

Spinks also was ordered to make mortgage payments on the couple's northwest Detroit home and on a Des Moines, Iowa, home where Mrs. Spinks' mother lives. The judge also ordered Spinks to pay utility and telephone bills from the Detroit home and to pay for the school tuition of his wife's son.

Spinks gained the WBC title in 1978 when he defeated Muhammad Ali. But Ali regained the title seven months later.

Celtics nip 76ers to stay alive

BOSTON (AP) — Reserve guard M.L. Carr, who scored just seven points in the game, sank three free throws in the final 20 seconds to enable the Boston Celtics to beat the Philadelphia 76ers 111-109 Wednesday night and stay alive in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The 76ers, who led for the entire fourth quarter up until the closing 20 seconds, will get another chance to wrap up the Eastern Conference finals Friday night in Philadelphia. The 76ers lead the best-of-seven series three games to two.

Boston, which trailed by 10 points at halftime, took an 82-77 lead in the third period but fell behind again 85-84 going into the fourth quarter. Philadelphia was never able to pull away, however. The 76ers had their biggest margin of the quarter at 109-103 with 1:51 to go before a three-point play by Nate Archibald and a driving basket by Larry Bird brought the Celtics to within one with 47 seconds left.

Philadelphia had trouble getting off a shot and the ball was knocked out of bounds several times, the last one giving the 76ers possession under their own basket with five seconds left on the shot clock.

The inbounds pass went astray and was scooped up Bird, who missed a driving basket, only to have Carr grab the rebound and get fouled.

He made both free throws for a 110-109 lead with 20 seconds to play. Philadelphia tried to set up Julius Erving for a shot, but he was double-teamed and passed to Bobby Jones, who missed an off-balance attempt. Carr grabbed the rebound and was fouled with one second to play as hundreds of spectators from the tumultuous crowd of 15,320 at Boston Garden poured onto the famous parquet floor.

After the court was cleared, Carr made the first of his free throw attempts, then intentionally missed the last two. Philadelphia got the final rebound and was able to call a time-out. But Celtics center Robert Parish picked off the inbounds pass to seal the victory.

Bird led the Celtics with 32 points and Archibald scored 23. Lionel Hollins topped Philadelphia with 23 and Erving and Darryl Dawkins added 21 apiece.

Bouton's comeback most bizarre game

By SCOTT OSTLER
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Of the hundreds of baseball games I've watched over the last few years, the one I enjoyed the most was late in the 1978 season when Jim Bouton made his bizarre major league comeback.

That wasn't a gifted star standing out on the mound that afternoon, waiting to face the Los Angeles Dodgers lineup. It wasn't the young Bulldog Bouton whose fastball sizzled in the early '60s.

IT WAS an old (39) skinny fellow who since leaving the game in 1970 had written a controversial book, "Ball Four," and had been a sportscaster and game-show panelist. And he was serving up batting-practice fastballs and knuckleballs that had longer hang times than Ray Guy punts. It was some idiot on a Walter Mitty trip, trying hard to suppress a grin and wondering when he would be discovered and hustled off the mound by the park police.

Without trying to sound too corny, Bouton that day was the official representative of all he has-beens and never-weres who still daydream.

H was us.

WELL, WE struck out Davey Lopes to open the game, and we retired the side in order. We ran off the mound that inning, and as we got near the dugout we raised out arms like Rocky to acknowledge the cheers.

We pitched with style and even a little success the rest of that season, then retired again. But only from baseball. As baseball's self-proclaimed resident deviant, we're still around.

Bouton passed through Los Angeles recently on a tour promoting his new book, "Ball Four Plus Ball Five." It's a re-release of "Ball Four" with a 70-page update on Bouton's life the last decade. You don't need to buy the book, just spend your lunch hour in the bookstore reading the new part, which is funny and good. Unless, of course, you mis ed "Ball Four," which makes you guilty of an inexcusable cultural oversight.

I TOLD Bouton I was there for his comeback game in Atlanta, and that most of the sportswriters had been quietly rooting for him. Partly it was because he was having so much fun, when almost everyone else in the sport seemed so serious, and we could relate easier to fun than to serious.

Bouton explained.

"In high school, they called me Warmup Bouton, because thats all I ever did. I didn't ever expect to make it to the big leagues (the irst time), so when i finally did, it was a big surprise to me. "If you've been a great athlete all your life, you don't appreciate how fun it can be. A lot of players lose perspective, they become convinced they're doing something important. So many people come to watch, and you get paid so much, it must be important. And of course it's not.

"The more important it becomes to you, the more serious it is. So many players never appreciate the fun and good life they have. I couldn't understand why Roger Maris would have so many prolems while hitting 61 home runs."

Bouton's comeback included two sea ons in the low, low minors. Hard times to anyone but Bouton. He was aware of the alternatives out there in real life.

"It was fun," he said. "I like traveling in buses with the kids, eating chili at 3 o'clock in the morning, staying at a 'Day's Inn,' eating popcorn in the bullpen, talking to the fans. To me that was baseball, what the game is about."

It was that kind of warped attitude that made his book so good, and which upset just about everyone in baseball.

THAT WASN'T his intent. To this day he's a little amazed at the players' negative reaction to "Ball Four."

"Why so much anger?" he writes in "Ball Five." "It couldn't have been that I said Mickey Mantle hung out in bars. Last time I flipped on the TV there was Mantle in a bar, bragging about how much beer he used to drink...

"It couldn't have been that I said Whitey Ford used to scuff up the baseballs.... In his own book, Whitey recently went into even greater detail about how he used to doctor the balls. (Maybe these guys are mad because they wanted the stories for their books.)"

The book established Bouton's deviant reputation, and he has worked hard to uphold it.

"I didn't plan on being a deviant," said Bouton, who showed up for the interview wearing a conservative sport coat and tie, and with his hair neatly trimmed. "I grew up in a conservative family, in a small town. I always felt there was something wrong with kooks, people with different ideas.

"It was the baseball establishment that turned me. I never had long hair, I had a crew cut. I always did what the coach said, always got to bed early, ate right, I didn't do any of the things you'd associate with rebellion, except speak out.

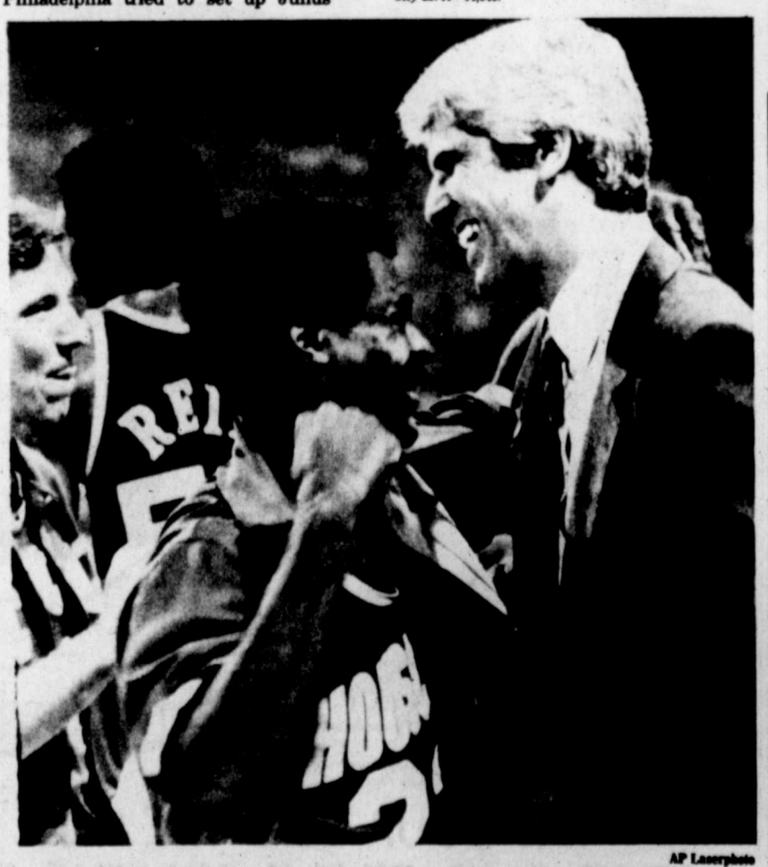

"Everything else I did was a model of decorum. People tell me what an explosive situation it would have been if I'd ever played for Billy Martin. I tell 'em Billy Martin would have loved me. I came out to the park early, I'd crash into second base on the double play. All my managers liked me. But I was always a contradiction to them — a clean-living kid who had a big mouth.

"It wo7ld have been easier for them if I'd been black or Jewish or a long-hair hippie, but I wasn't. I looked like an advertisement for baseball. Until I started talking. The picture never went with the voice."

BOUTON TODAY? He looks great, smiles a lot. He says he got all the satisfaction out of baseball he could hope for. He's in love and living with a woman who walked up to him three years ago and said, "I think we're destined to meet," and who changed his entire outlook on life. He's got a swell family, and he's got about 20 projects going, all of which are in some way connected with people laughing and having fun.

Yep, we're having a great time.

Fast count protest disallowed

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — New Jersey Athletic Commissioner Jersey Joe Walcott has rejected Murray Sutherland's protest that a fast count cost him Matthew Saad Muhammad's World Boxing Council light-heavyweight title last weekend.

But Walcott said he will recommend to the WBC that Sutherland maintain the seventh-ranked position he held before Muhammad scored a controversial ninth-round knockout Sunday.

Sutherland, 26, a Scotsman-turned-Canadian fighting out of Bay City, Mich., was ruled out at 1:16 of the ninth round of Muhammad's seventh title defense.

It is to early determine winners

An AP Sports Analysis

NEW YORK (AP) — It is, of course, far too early to determine just who "won" and who "lost" in the National Football League's 1981 college draft. But the St.Louis Cardinals appear a likely bet to get the most out of their top picks.

The Cardinals used the entire 15 minutes alloted to them in the first round before selecting E.J. Junior, the All-America defensive end from Alabama who is projected as a linebacker in the pros.

"The braintrust back in St. Louis was really agonizing over that," said Gordon Beattie, the man ("a friend of the management" he called himself) who handled the Cards' phone at the NFL draft headquarters in New York.

Beattie said there were no deals pending during that 15 minutes, shooting down reports that the Los Angeles Rams, trying to improve on their No.9 position in the first round, were burning up the phone lines to St.Louis.

The Cards also had to be thinking about replacing veteran quarterback Jim Hart some day. The last time they thought really seriously about it, they drafted Steve Pisarkiewicz in the first round.

He was a bust and, when Coach Bud Wilkinson ignored team owner Billy Bidwills' demands that he play Pisarkiewicz, he was fired in 1979. Coach Jim Hanifan cut Pisarkiewicz during training camp in 1980.

When the Cardinals choice in the second round rolled around, Neil Lomax was still there — and St. Louis pounced on the quarterback from Portland State.

"Just luck," Beattie said. "We were surprised — amazed, sort of — and delighted that he was still available."

Lomax, a 6-foot-3, 215-pounder, holds a bunch of NCAA all-division career records including most completions (938), most yards passing (13,220), most touchdown passes (106) and most 400-yard games (12).

He has been called by some the best small-college quarterback since Terry Bradshaw.

The only quarterback rated ahead of Lomax — and not by everybody — is California's Rich Campbell. The Green Bay Packers, looking for a return to the glory years when Bart Starr was their quarterback and not their embattled coach, picked Campbell in the first round.

That first round Tuesday was the "celebrity round" when Heisman Trophy winner George Rogers, the South Carolina running back, was selected No.1 by New Orleans. North Carolina linebacker Lawrence Taylor was taken No.2 by the New York Giants and the rest of the 28 teams put their futures — not to mention some small fortunes — on the line with their picks.

On Wednesday, the circus atmosphere at the draft was gone, replaced by the routine business of calling off one little-kown name after the other.

The draft took 16 hours, 19 minutes after Rogers had been selected, the fastest draft since the 1967 merger. The dubious distinction of being the last man selected, No.332 — by the Oakland Raiders — went to Phil Nelson, a tight end from the University of Delaware.

He need't fear that he hasn't got a chance. After all, in 1980, Tyrone McGriff, a guard from Florida A&M, was the final pick by Pittsburgh. He not only made the team, but, thanks to an injury to Steve Courson, was a starter before season's end.

Defensive backs, starting with UCLA's Kenny Easley, were the most popular players in this draft, 54 of them being selected. Running backs were next, 46, followed by linebackers, 45.

Pittsburgh contributed the most players, 12. Southern Cal of the Pacific-10 Conference lost nine. The Pac-10 was the top conference for draftees with 42.

Among the no-names of Wednesday's seventh through 12th rounds were a few recognizable names. Samoa Samoa, the Washington State quarterback, was picked by Cincinnati. The Bengals also have his cousin, "Throwin' Samoan" quarterback Jack Thompson, who also went to Washington State. Florida linebacker David Little, whose brother, Larry, was an All-Pro guard for Miami in the 1970s, was chosen by the Steelers.

As usual, a college quarterback was drafted to fill a defensive secondary position. This year's was J.C. Watts, the director of the Oklahoma wishbone offense, picked by the N.Y. Jets.

For "name" players, the Jets most certainly were the winners. Among their selections was Admiral Dewey Larry. He's a defensive back from Nevada-Las Vegas. Yes, that's his real name.

Kentucky Derby attracts bluest of bluebloods

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Look out, world! The state that gave you the atomic bomb and golfer Nancy Lopez might just have another surprise in store.

It's Bold Ego, a 3-year-old colt whose name was to be dropped into the box today as an entrant for Saturday's 107th running of the Kentucky Derby.

In a sport of bluebloods, the Derby attracts the bluest. So a lot of people have been snickering at Bold Ego's New Mexico breeding as if he were a mule.

But this is a legitimate thoroughbred runner, despite his home state and his less-than-sterling pedigree (his sire was Bold Tactics, and his dam the equally unknown Coya's Ego).

His record (10 wins in 13 starts) and earnings ($382,676) make him the winningest and richest 3-year-old colt in the country. Among his trophies is the Arkansas Derby, where he was 1¼ lengths better than Top Avenger, another likely Derby starter.

Trainer Jack Van Berg, the nation's winningest trainer six times in his career, has heard all of the jokes before.

"If you think they can't run in New Mexico, bring all of these Kentuckians out there and see what they can do," said Van Berg. "Shoot, those boys out there know how to train a horse to survive."

Survival instincts will be important Saturday, with a full complement of 20 horses expected to start in the Derby.

J.B. Barton, 35, the colt's breeder and half-owner, describes the land around his Double B Ranch just north of El Paso as "desolate country" and thinks that Kentucky breeders used to soft bluegrass would "think they are on Mars."

But it was "on Mars" where Bold Ego developed into a runner. As a 2-year-old, he campaigned in New Mexico for trainer Cliff Lambert, winning all seven of his starts. His only loss last season was in the Hollywood Juvenile Championship in California.

Lambert couldn't find enough races for Bold Ego, so he passed him on to Van Berg for more seasoning against stiffer competition.

"After the 2-year-old season, you have to leave the state," explained Barton. "There just aren't any races for horses that might want to go a distance."

Bold Ego was fifth in each of his first two starts this year for Van Berg, then won a six-furlong race at Oaklawn, the Rebel Handicap at a mile and 70 yards and then the Arkansas Derby.

"Oh, I'm pleasantly surprised," said Barton. "I never really thought of him as a Derby horse. I've just seen it on T.V. When Jack took over the colt in February, he went ahead and nominated him.

"Obviously, I'm glad he did."

As for Van Berg, he refuses to get sentimental about the Derby. Bold Ego is here for a day's work.

"I'll get a kick if he wins, but no kicks if he's just practicing," said Van Berg. "I want to win, and I don't care if it's a $20,000 race or the Kentucky Derby. I'm not here for my health."

Rankin golfers go to state

LEVELLAND — Coach Dewayne Turner's Rankin Red Devil golf team is headed for the state golf tournament for the eighth time in the last 11 years after posting a two-round 653 here Tuesday and Wednesday to win the Region I Class A golf title.

Also earning a state berth was Iraan with a second place 661. Rankin and Iraan were followed by Follett, 731; Claude, 734; Aspermonte, 753; and Klondike, 760.

Iraan's Joe Sconiers won a sudden death playoff over Rankin's Bradley Baines to win the Region I medalist title. Both players finished with 153, but Sconiers won on the first hole of the playoff.

Other Rankin golf members are Todd Ratliff, 162; Ricky Kelley, 167; Michael Northcott, 171; and Kevin Smith, 172.

In those eight trips to the state meet, Rankin has captured five state titles. They will be shooting for their sixth in two weeks in Austin.

IU barred from TV

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) - Because of the controversial eligibility case of University of Illinois quarterback Dave Wilson, the Big Ten Conference plans to bar Illinois from post-season play in all sports for three years and withhold television revenue for two years, it was reported today.

It would be the most serious setback to UI athletics since the slush-fund scandal 14 years ago.

University sources say the Big Ten decision could cost the school $2 million and wreck its athletic programs, the Champaign-Urbana News Gazette said, and some favor leaving the conference rather than accepting what they consider unfair sanctions.

"The financial blow is of a magnitude that would bankrupt half the athletic programs in the conference," a university official said, but added that the loss of revenue was only one factor.

"It's what it does to the program in terms of recruiting, elimination of post-season play as a goal, the splintering of the staff, all those side effects."

The Big Ten notified Illinois of its decision, and UI officials met Wednesday to discuss the case. They declined public comment, saying the Big Ten wanted to make the first announcement, probably at a Saturday news conference in Schaumburg, where the Big Ten is headquartered.

Privately, UI officials said they were stunned.

"It is as though the conference members want to force us out," a source told the News-Gazette. "It's almost as severe as the slush-fund penalties and yet the University of Illinois has done nothing wrong."

Grebey reject lastest player contact proposal

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray Grebey, chief negotiator for baseball's club owners, formally rejected Wednesday the players' latest proposal in the free agent compensation dispute, saying it was up to the players to make a move that would avert a threatened strike May 29.

Grebey labeled the proposal, presented Tuesday at the latest negotiating session, "unacceptable." The measure, the third by players in recent negotiations, outlined criteria that would limit the number of premium players or ranking free agents to 32.

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Tigers, looking for help to end their 10-game losing streak, have recalled first baseman Rick Leach from their Evansville, Ind., farm club of the Triple-A American Association.

Leach, a former All-American quarterback at Michigan, spent the spring in the Tigers' training camp as a non-roster invitee.

DENVER (AP) — Tony Reed, once a 1,000-yard rusher who became a malcontent and eventually fell from favor with the Kansas City Chiefs management, was asked what it felt like to be traded to the Denver Broncos.

"Fantasy Island," responded Reed. "When I was told about the trade, I was so excited I just couldn't talk. This is where I wanted to be. It's like being a rookie all over again."

Reed spoke to the Bronco media Wednesday, just 24 hours after being dealt to Denver in exchange for the Broncos' third-round choice in this year's draft and the fourth-round pick next year.

Customers want good deals all of the time

By STEPHEN FOX

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — "People may respect you in the profession where they see you half the year," says the co-owner of John Cappelletti Associates. But in business, he knows, customers want good deals all the time.

"They're not going to use our company just because of my name or because I'm sitting there in front of them," says Cappelletti, the 28-year-old fullback with the San Diego Chargers.

Cappelletti's firm supplies computer programmers to large companies that need them for temporary projects. Among the company's customers are Lockheed, Hughes, Rockwell International and a number of other large corporations which find it more economical to lease programmers than hire them full-time.

Cappelletti won the Heisman trophy at Penn State in 1973 and dedicated the trophy to his little brother, Joey, who was suffering then and later died from leukemia.

RECENTLY Cappelletti finished his seventh season in professional football, his first with the Chargers after being traded by the Los Angeles Rams. He's now in his second season with his namesake firm, a contract programming company which Cappelletti owns with partner John Discola.

The two met through mutual friends several years ago and decided to join forces, an arrangement that has suited both well.

"The hardest part of any business is generating new business," says Cappelletti. "I may have an edge in getting in the door, but once you get in there you have to know what you're doing."

Discola, a veteran of the computer business, directed Cappelletti to several schools and into a lengthy tutoring program by a former IBM executive.

3:15.15 to its credit. Lee's best is 3:18.36, but many feel they can beat that with good competition and if they keep Arthur Williams close to the lead on the final lap. The key for Lee may rest on how well Barber and Goodley do on the first two legs. Darrin Williams and Arthur Williams have the last two legs and can burn it.

THE TEAM battle should be between Killeen, Killeen-Ellison, Tascosa, Eastwood and Lee. Lee has six individuals and two relays while Tascosa has 12 individuals and one relay. Killeen has eight individuals and one relay while Ellison has four individuals and two relays. Eastwood has two relays and four individuals.

Action begins at 10 a.m. Friday with some field event finals. Running preliminaries start at 2:30 p.m. Saturday's action begins at 10 a.m. when Brown goes in the shot put and Kemper goes in the pole vault. Running finals will start at 1 p.m. Saturday. Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for students each day.

Carlton is first lefthander to reach 3,000 strikeouts

The Associated Press

Philadelphia's Steve Carlton generally takes personal achievements with aplomb, but Phillies Manager Dallas Green says even his star pitcher was caught up in the excitement of becoming the first left-hander in baseball history to surpass 3,000 strikeouts.

Carlton struck out the side against the Montreal Expos in the first inning Wednesday night to join just five other pitchers in the 3,000-strikeout club.

The 36-year-old hurler went on to scatter nine hits and strike out nine as the Phillies beat the Expos 6-2. That gave the three-time Cy Young Award winner a 4-0 mark for the season.

In other National League action Wednesday night, Cincinnati topped San Diego 8-5, Houston nipped Atlanta 5-4, Pittsburgh crushed the New York Mets 10-0, San Francisco upended Los Angeles 3-2 and the Chicago Cubs ended a 12-game losing string by beating St. Louis 6-1 in the first game of a doubleheader. The second game was suspended by darkness with the score tied 2-2 after 11 innings.

"I really had good stuff tonight," Carlton said in a post-game radio interview. "My slider wasn't great at the beginning, but my fastball really was good."

Phillies' Manager Dallas Green said he thought Carlton was a little more excited than normal.

It took Carlton only about four minutes to get rookie Tim Raines swinging and Jerry Manuel and rookie Tim Wallach on called strikes.

Montreal Manager Dick Williams said that he feels Carlton has a chance to break major league baseball's all-time record of 3,508 strikeouts, established by Walter Johnson.

"He's a great athlete and competitor. He also helps himself with the bat," Williams noted, referring to Carlton's two hits and two runs batted in for the game.

A sacrifice fly by Garry Maddox brought home a Philadelphia run in the first and Carlton's RBI single made it 2-0 in the fifth.

The Phillies wrapped it up for Carlton in the seventh when Larry Bowa and Bob Boone singled, Carlton doubled home his second run of the game, Pete Rose was intentionally walked and pinch-hitter Del Unser hit a three-run double.

Cubs 6-2, Cardinals 1-2

The Cubs ended their 12-game losing string in the opener behind the three-hit pitching of Mike Krukow, who said, "I don't know what it's like in the seventh game of a World Series, but that's what it felt like."

Lee Smith came on in the ninth inning and got Ken Oberkfell to hit into a game-ending double play after Krukow gave up his sixth and seventh walks of the game.

Bill Buckner's two-run, tie-breaking double with two outs triggered a five-run rally in the eighth that enabled the Cubs to break their streak and end St. Louis' eight-game winning string.

The Cardinals took a 2-0 lead in the first inning of the second game on a two-run triple by Darrell Porter, but Leon Durham tied it with a two-run homer in the seventh. The game will be resumed July 3.

Reds 8, Padres 5

Dave Concepcion raised his major league-leading RBI total to 20, driving in six runs with two singles and his first two homers of the season.

The shortstop's leadoff homer in the seventh off reliever John Littlefield, 0-2, broke a 5-5 tie and boosted the Reds to their fifth straight victory over San Diego this season.

Paul Moskau, 1-0, held the Padres scoreless in the seventh and eighth, but gave way to Tom Hume after giving up hits to the first two batters in the ninth. Hume then picked up his second save of the season, retiring the next three batters in order.

Astros 5, Braves 4

Jose Cruz cracked a two-out, run-scoring single in the top of the ninth inning to give Houston the victory after the Braves had scored three runs in the eighth to tie the game at 4-4.

Denny Walling singled and Craig Reynolds doubled with one out in the ninth off Atlanta reliever Rick Camp, 2-1. Walling was thrown out at the plate on a bouncer to third by Cesar Cedeno, but Cruz then lined his winning hit to right field to give the Astros their third straight victory. Atlanta has lost four in a row.

The Astros built a 4-1 lead with the help of consecutive homers by Walling, a two-run shot, and Reynolds in the seventh. But the Braves came back to tie the score with three runs in the eighth on Dale Murphy's two-run homer and an RBI single by Bruce Benedict.

Pirates 10, Mets 0

Jim Bibby, 1-0, stopped the Mets on five hits and the Pirates buried New York with five runs in the second inning as they came up with a shutout for the second straight night.

A two-run homer by Gary Alexander, his first of the season and first for Pittsburgh, got the Pirates off and running in the second. Alexander later added a run-scoring triple and a sacrifice fly.

Giants 3, Dodgers 2

Vida Blue and Greg Minton combined to six-hit the Dodgers, giving San Francisco its first series victory in Los Angeles since 1976.

Blue, 2-2, struck out four and walked only two before being removed after a single by Dusty Baker and Steve Garvey's one-out, two-run homer in the ninth that cut the lead to one run.

Minton came on to grab his third save of the season. He walked the first man he faced, but retired pinch hitters Rick Monday on a strikeout and Reggie Smith on a pop fly.

Milt May doubled home two runs in the fourth off loser Bob Welch, 1-1, and the Giants added a run in the seventh when Johnnie LeMaster doubled, Blue sacrificed and LeMaster scored on Bill North's ground out.

Oakland brawling like old

By The Associated Press

The Oakland A's were involved in two fights with the California Angels, and Manager Billy Martin was right in the middle throwing punches, right?

Well, not exactly. He acted as a peacemaker for the most part as the two teams tangled during and after Oakland's 6-4 victory Wednesday, giving the A's the best April record (18-3) in baseball history.

The first fight occurred in the eighth inning after Dan Ford hit a homer for California's final two runs. As he rounded the bases, A's catcher Mike Heath asked plate umpire John Shulock to inspect Ford's bat for doctoring, which incensed the Angels outfielder enough to grab Heath, emptying both benches.

Martin was more involved in fight No.2, which occurred after the game in a walkway leading to both clubhouses.

Mike Norris, a principal in a brawl involving Oakland and Seattle earlier this season, stayed out of the fights this time. He concentrated his energies on pitching his fourth complete game and picking up his fifth straight victory this season with a five-hitter.

Tim Hosley had a three-run homer for the A's, his first major-league homer since 1977.

Rangers 5, Red Sox 0

Danny Darwin tossed a one-hitter as Texas registered its third straight shutout against Boston.

John Grubb smacked a three-run double in the first inning and Al Oliver added a two-run homer in the eighth for the Rangers.

Darwin, 2-2, did not allow a base hit until center fielder Rick Miller stroked a soft single to left in the sixth inning.

Yankees 3, Tigers 2

Dave Winfield's two-run homer broke a 1-1 tie in the third inning and handed Detroit its 10th straight loss.

Winfield, who signed a eight-figure, free-agent contract during the offseason, has hit well for the Yankees so far, but his shot into the right field seats off Detroit starter Jack Morris, 1-3, was his first homer in a Yankee uniform.

Left-hander Rudy May gave up nine hits and allowed two runs over the first 62-3 innings to improve his record to 4-1. Reliever Ron Davis went the rest of the way and picked up his first save of the year.

Mariners 7, Twins 7

Seattle took a 7-4 lead into the bottom of the eighth inning, but a two-run double by Danny Goodwin and Dave Engle's triple tied the score for Minnesota before heavy rains stopped the action.

The game will be completely replayed at a later date, but all of Wednesday's individual statistics are official. That means that Seattle Manager Maury Wills' two-game suspension for doctoring a batter's box is over and Richie Zisk's streak of home runs in consecutive games was snapped at five, one shy of the league record.

Orioles 3, White Sox 0

Benny Ayala hit a two-run homer and Dennis Martinez held Chicago to seven hits and gained a victory with ninth-inning relief help from Tippy Martinez.

The White Sox seemingly scored a run in the first on a sacrifice fly when Greg Luzinski flied out, but Bill Almon was called out for leaving third base too soon.

Blue Jays 5, Brewers 0

Barry Bonnell triggered a five-run inning with a two-run double that broke a scoreless tie in the 14th inning.

Alfredo Griffin and Ernie Whitt both had run-scoring singles after Bonnell's double, and Lloyd Moseby capped the inning with another RBI double.

Luis Leal, 2-2, the fourth of five Blue Jays pitchers who combined to hold the Brewers to just three hits, was credited with the victory. Leal allowed one hit from the 11th through the 13th innings.

Goddard, Midland Frosh capture tennis championships

Goddard and Midland Freshman won titles in the Midland Junior High City Tennis Championships at the Midland High tennis courts Wednesday.

Goddard won the seventh and eighth grade titles by edging Trinity in points, 42-40. Midland Freshman won the ninth grade title with a 34-23 margin over Trinity.

Goddard's Jeff Ciacco and Walter Hickman defeated Scott Kidwell and Paul Colwell of Goddard, 6-1, 6-0, to win the eighth grade boys doubles crown while the girls title went to Kelly Munn and Deedee Dyer of Trinity with a win over Goddard's Missy Kibler and Leigh Ann Rinyan.

Miles Boldrick of Midland Freshman took the ninth grade boys singles title with Midland Lee's Eric Griffin placing second. Trinity's Kathy Boles won the girls title while Midland's Natalie Dunagen got second.

Midland's John Atlee and Perry McIntosh won the ninth grade boys doubles with Midland's Mike Boswell and Scott Brown taking second. Trinity's Jana Bullard and Kathy Scott won the girls doubles as Midland's Jamie Henry and Jill Giebel placed second.

Over 90 junior high and freshman tennis players participated in the city championship.

Chaparrals host 13 team Region V net tournament

Thirteen junior college tennis teams converge at Midland College Friday and Saturday for the Region V tennis tournament, all of them seeking spots in the National Junior College Athletic Association tournaments later in May.

Matches begin at 8 a.m. each day on the Midland College courts.

MIDLAND COLLEGE and New Mexico Military Institute are among the favorites to take regional titles, with MC getting the nod for the women's brackets and NMMI the choice to get the men's crown.

Coach Brian Gilley's women players walked off with the Western Junior College Conference title last weekend at the tournament in Hobbs, N.M., hosted by New Mexico Junior College. NMMI held off a bid from MC to take the men's title.

THE CHAPARRAL women's team already had the conference title wrapped up, based on round-robin points, before their first match in Hobbs. They held a 13-point lead over NMMI with a maximum of 12 points up for grabs in the conference meet. When the action stopped, MC had lost only one singles match.

The MC men were not able to make up their seven-point deficit as they captured two singles titles and one double title, with NMMI winning the remainder of the matches.

The top two teams in both men's and women's regional tournament action advance to the NJCAA tournaments, which will be held in Ocala, Florida. The national women's tournament is slated for May 11-14 while the men's tourney is set for May 26-29.

In 1980, Midland College finished fourth in the national tourney after taking second in the region. The MC men finished third in the region and failed to qualify for the nationals.

THE STRONGEST challenge to MC and NMMI likely will come from Cooke County Community College, Gainesville and McLennan County Community College in Waco. Both Cooke and McLennan are traditionally strong in both men's and women's play.

South Plains and Odessa College also are entering both men and women teams while NMJC has entered its women's team.

THE CHAPS have two national championships for its women's team and one national title for its men's squad. NMMI has had a national men's title while OC has won national titles frequently in both divisions.

"This region has always had good teams that have finished high in the national tournaments, so we know we'll have to play well here just to advance," MC tennis coach Brian Gilley said, "We've played against all the schools in the conference at least twice, so we know them pretty well. However, we aren't sure what Cooke and McLennan have this year, but we know they'll be tough."

PGA kills tour split

HOUSTON (AP) — The plan to split the PGA Tour into two segments was, effectively, killed at a meeting of pro golf's touring players Wednesday night.

Two other proposals — one for a tour composed entirely of exempt players and another of some 25-30 "super" events — received strong support and will be presented by the PGA Tour Policy Board at its next meeting.

"The split tour concept involved some changes in the relation of the players and the sponsors," said PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman, who presented the plan to the players at a closed door meeting.

"THE PLAYERS as a whole were not receptive to making those changes. Overwhelmingly, they were not interested in pursuing that plan. They felt the Tour would be more effective by consolidating its strength than in splitting its strength."

Part of the split-tour concept, however, was a plan to do away with the system of qualifying rounds for non-exempt players.

And it was out of the discussion of the two-tour concept, Beman said, that the other two plans grew.

ONE PLAN, proposed by Gary McCord, would leave the tour structure much as it is, but would limit the number of tour players to approximately 170. All would be exempt. The top 144-156 wishing to play in any event would have the opporunity to do so.

Another proposal, made by veteran Don January, involved what Beman called a "super-tour."

Eagle soars high

Eagle Elliott of Midland, United States Chess Federation rated 1254, took second place (catagory 4) in the 1981 Barnaby Burger Open. The five round tournaent was held at the La Quinta Inn in Fort Worth April 26 and 26.

Elliott's victory over J. Roberts, U.S.C.F. rated 1644 is expected to raise him into catagory three. Elliott siad that Roberts was no push over. It took Eliott 73 moves to mate this tough player.

Uneasy peace prevails in racing

An AP Sports Analysis
By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An uneasy peace prevails in Indy car racing with the opening session of practice for the 64th Indianapolis 500 just one week away.

Ticket sales for the $1.5 million Indy Classic on May 24 at Indianapolis Motor Speedway reportedly were well ahead of last year's disappointing pace. The big name drivers will be there, along with a large group of young lions, several big new sponsors and plenty of impressive new cars.

However, a bitter battle continues to tear at the roots of the Indy car sport, just as it has for the past three years. It is muffled now but still boiling just below the surface. It could erupt any minute.

The combatants in the war are the U.S. Auto Club, the longtime sanctioning body of what has been known as championship racing, and Championship Auto Racing Teams, known as CART, which split from USAC several years ago, taking with it nearly every top team and leading driver.

The dissident team owners — a number of whom also are drivers — wanted a bigger voice in the running of the sport.

USAC, a conservative organization which holds tradition as a value next to godliness, bristled at the challenge. Full-scale war followed in 1979 with each group running its own schedule.

What resulted was chaos and disappointment.

Each series had trouble fielding more than a skeleton lineup in a sport in which the expensive, high-powered cars are not always available in large numbers. Neither series drew many fans and sponsors — the lifeblood of Indy car racing — became disenchanted.

A winter of peace talks brought what appeared to be a longterm compromise in 1980 in the form of the Championship Racing League. The CRL combined the CART and USAC schedules and gave them both a voice in the rules, the purses and the operation of the races.

But the pot still boiled, and the apparent euphoria of that agreement lasted just long enough to get the Indy 500 and the Pocono 500 out of the way.

Without warning, John Cooper, president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, scared USAC officials by publicly declaring that the organization could lose its sanction of the Indy 500 if it continued to let car owners and drivers set policy.

Cooper said the CRL was allowing "the inmates to run the asylum."

A week later, the CRL was history. USAC had retained the sanction for the Indy 500 for at least one more year.

CART shook off its embarrassment at the behind-closed-doors coup and suddenly discovered that it was in the unlikely position of being virtually the only game in town.

Every race in the second half of the 1980 CRL schedule originally had been sanctioned by CART. For all intents and purposes, USAC was out of the championship car business for at least the rest of the year.

Then came a mad scramble to tie down racetracks for 1981. CART won that race, coming up with a 10-race schedule and announcing a $1 million series point fund sponsored by PPG Industries.

When USAC's champ car schedule finally was announced, it was greeted by many racing observers with disbelief.

It included the 1981 Indianapolis 500, three races on one-mile dirt ovals and the 1982 Indianapolis 500. The Pocono 500 was added after a bank turned down CART's offer to take over the mortgage of the financially strapped Pocono International Raceway.

At the same time that USAC announced its schedule, it also let it be known that the 1982 Indy race would inaugurate a new rule requiring the use of stock block engines. That brought a vehement reaction from a number of the CART teams, which rely heavily on the dominant turbo-charged Cosworth-DFX engine.

Cooper has admitted, however, that the speedway has not yet signed an agreement with USAC for the 1982 race. And he has said in the past that he feels the prestigious Indy race must be part of "a viable racing series."

That leaves the door at least slightly ajar for CART, which would like nothing more than to supplant its hated rival as the Indy sanctioner.

USAC insists it still is working to enhance current and future schedules and will regain its place of prominence in the sport.

Meanwhile, this year's Indy race has a record number of entries and everyone is planning to attend — USAC and CART teams alike.

The on-track racing is expected to be exciting and highly competitive, but the controversy continues.

Malone leads Houston win

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Moses Malone scored 36 points, Robert Reid and Billy Paultz scored 12 apiece and Paultz grabbed two crucial rebounds in the final two minutes Wednesday night, propelling the Houston Rockets past Kansas City, 98-88, and into the championship finals of the Natonal Basketball Association.

The Rockets, who never led until midway through the fourth quarter, outscored Kansas City, 12-4, in the final three minutes to win the Western Conference championship, four games to one.

ERG increases activity in U.S. and Canada

Energy Reserves Group is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company with operations all over the U.S. and Canada.

Headquartered in Wichita, Kansas, ERG has branches in Midland, Houston, Denver, Golden, Oklahoma City, Great Bend, Albuquerque, Casper and Calgary.

The Midland office is resposible for the West Texas operations. Williard R. Green, divison exploration manager manages 10 employees. The production staff headed by district production manager Richard L. Zimmerman has 32 employees.

The group has 704 oil wells in this area of which 276 are company operated and 428 non-operated, plus 19 company operated gas wells and 30 non-operated.

The 1980 average net production was 2,100 barrels of oil and 4.5 million cubic feet of gas per day. Net revenues from oil and gas sales are currently $2.5 million each month. During, 1980 41 gross and 31 net wells were completed in the West Texas area.

A sizeable increase in well completions is anticipated for 1981. The company spent $49 million in 1980 for exploration and development drilling, of which $8.2 million was spent in the West Texas area.

The company's primary goal is asset appreciation in proven oil and gas reserves. As of January 1, 1981, proven oil reserves were 23.8 million barrels and gas reserves at 228 billion cubic feet.

These reserves have an estimated future net revenue and present worth discounted at 10% of $1,245,577 and $670,799,000 respectively.

The company also owns western coal leases worth over a 100 million tons of coal and has a 50% interest in a gold property containing 45 million tons of gold ore reserves grading 0.054 ounces of gold per ton.

ERG's main growth will come from its large inventory of exploratory acreage, 2.8 million gross, and is well represented in the major exploratory plays: the Overthrust Belt, Hingeline, Tuscaloosa Trend, Williston Basin, Anadorka Basin and offshore in the Gulf Coast.

To help with the prospecting and developing these properties, the company has 120 geologists, geophysicists, landmen and engineers.

The company also has a strong balance sheet, cash flow and borrowing capacity. Operating cash flow was $68 million in 1980. Total debt is $110 million, which is considerably less than the group's $200 million revolving credit.

DOE makes plans to get rid of loopholes

By STU HENIGSON
(c) Dallas Times Herald

WASHINGTON — The Department of Energy has decided to try to eliminate a loophole that would have allowed oil companies to slip in several hundred million dollars worth of higher prices after the end of price control.

The department sent normal notification to the Federal Register this week proposing to retroactively nullify three interpretations of the rules that had created the loophole.

At least two months of public hearings and comment will follow before the new rules could take on the force of law. In addition, because the action is retroactive, department lawyers said they expect to be sued by some of the losing companies.

The loophole was created when the Department of Energy, following President Reagan's decontrol of crude oil in January, tried to wrap up a special program for the extra expenses of so-called tertiary recovery. It permitted oil companies to charge more for their controlled oil to offset expenditures extracting extra oil from depleted fields.

A company could recover 75 percent of its expenditures, up to $20 million per project, by charging world market prices for oil that otherwise would sell for a controlled price. The difference just before decontrol was $30 a barrel.

When Reagan decontrolled oil prices, there was no further economic reason for the program. But the Department of Energy interpreted three rules to give the oil companies one last crack:

—It said the companies could start projects through March and recover their expenditures by retroactively charging refineries for oil that had been sold from November through January.

—It said the companies could prepay expenses — that is, pay now and recover the cost of the chemicals and equipment needed for a project even though the materials would not be used for years.

—A third ruling permitted the companies to recover the costs of "in-house" expenses, in which subsidiary or affiliated companies would pay each other for services and then recover the money in higher oil prices.

That triggered a rush to announce new projects and get them on the department records. More than 80 new projects were filed in February and March, compared to the average of 24 a month during the first 13 months of the program. Some of the new filings involved projects planned for the mid-1980s.

Many oil producers reported prepaid expenses for existing projects or filed new projects and pre-paid the expenses — in many cases to their own subsidiaries.

In the Federal Register document, a copy of which was obtained by the Dallas Times Herald, Barton House, head of the department's energy regulatory administration, wrote, "We are concerned that, in fact, little more than . . . accounting entries may have been used to justify in-house expenses, and that our inability to audit all firms invites abuse."

Rio Grande Valley fighting for radar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayors and civic leaders from the Rio Grande Valley sought the support of Federal Aviation Administration officials Wednesday on their attempt to win approval for a $6 million radar system for airports at McAllen, Harlingen and Brownsville.

The three airports are too small to meet the FAA's criteria for a radar system, but the Texas officials said they apparently have won their argument that the three airports be considered collectively.

J. Lynn Helms, the new administrator for the FAA, agreed to a 9 a.m. meeting Wednesday with mayors Randy Whittington of Harlingen, Cesar Gonzalez of San Benito and Emilio Hernandez of Brownsville.

David Allex, president of the Harlingen Chamber of Commerce, said Helms was reported to have a proposal on his desk Monday to initiate approval for their request.

"If he okays it, that would leave us with just the funding to worry about, but that might be tough the way everybody's screaming about money and budget cuts," Whittington said.

Rep. Kika de la Garza arranged for the delegation from the Rio Grande Valley to meet with the FAA staff at 3 p.m. Wednesday. The valley officials also were meeting with Texas senators John Tower and Lloyd Bentsen, both of whom have supported their efforts.

They were originally scheduled to testify before the Appropriations Committee's transportation subcommittee, but that session was postponed until May 5. Whittington said he plans to return to Washington next week to represent the valley.

In remarks prepared for delivery before the subcommittee, Whittington said his region "is a relatively silent, but festering air crash disaster waiting to happen."

Nine municipal airports and 10 private airstrips are within a four-county area in the Valley, Whittington added.

More than 60 commercial flights take off and land daily at the airports at Brownsville, Harlingen and McAllen and the nearby Mexican airports of Reynosa and Matamoros. More than a million passengers arrived at or departed from the Texas facilities last year, Whittington said.

The Valley is bordered by the Rio Grande and Mexico on the south andd on the north by controlled air space reserved for military flights from two Naval stations and four Air Force bases, officials added.

Air traffic controllers frequently encounter foreign pilots with little or no ability to speak English, and controllers must rely on visual and radio contact to avoid in-flight collisions, Whittington said.

Reliable, safe test found for sickle cell anemia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists say they have developed a reliable, safe method to detect crippling sickle cell anemia before birth.

Researchers at the Medical College of Georgia, in Augusta, say the prenatal test, which uses genetic engineering techniques, is being tested at a local hospital and results should be available in a few weeks, the National Science Foundation announced Monday.

But preliminary results on adults afflicted with the inherited blood disorder indicate the test should be very reliable, the researchers reported to the foundation, which is sponsoring the work.

"The test can be performed easily and should be 100 percent accurate, and it is much safer for the fetus and the mother than the test used now," Dr. Lois Wilson said Monday in a telephone interview,

The biochemist, who developed the test with her husband, Dr. John T. Wilson, said any well-equipped hospital laboratory should be able to do the test once it is perfected.

Sickle cell anemia is an inherited, incurable disorder that causes the body to produce abnormal hemoglobin, the protein in red blood cells responsible for transporting oxygen throughout the body.

The condition primarily affects blacks but also is seen in whites of Mediterranean origin.

About 10 percent of the black population has a genetic tendency toward the disease, called a trait, which does not affect their health. But up to 1 percent of blacks are believed to have varying forms of the actual disease.

With the disease, the blood cells become more rigid than normal and take on a "c" or sickle shape, which prevents them from getting through small blood vessels.

These blockages cause painful "crises" in bone joints and contribute to disability and, in many cases, early death.

The present method of prenatal diagnosis, called fetoscopy, requires drawing a small sample of blood from the umbilical cord and looking for sickle cells. While accurate, the method can cause spontaneous abortion of the fetus in 10 percent to 20 percent of the cases.

The new test, which takes about a week to run, uses the relatively safe and more common procedure of amniocentesis, in which fluid in the sac around the fetus is drawn off with a large needle.

Cells in this fluid contain DNA, the basic hereditary substance, and the new test uses genetic engineering techniques to analyze it.

The new method requires isolating a small amount of this DNA, which comes in long strands, and mixing it with a substance called a restriction enzyme, the researchers said.

This enzyme acts like a chemical scalpel. When a hemoglobin gene, made of DNA, is normal, the enzyme cuts it into two parts. When sickle cell trait is present, the DNA strand breaks into three parts.

But when abnormal sickle cell genes are present, the restriction enzyme does not cut the DNA, the scientists said. By analyzing the lengths of these DNA strands, doctors can tell if the disease is present, they said.

"The technique is experimental and can't be done everywhere right now," said Dr. Lois Wilson in an telephone interview from the Medical College of Georgia. "But eventually it should be as simple as any other genetic screening test done in a well-equipped hospital lab."

She estimated the test would cost about $250, about the same as other tests for genetic abnormalities. Such tests usually are covered by health insurance.

Quadriplegic fights back, wins settlement

MARGATE, Fla. (AP) — For 11 years, quadriplegic Bill Connolly fought despair. Later, he fought Maryland Casualty insurance company and finally won a settlement of up to $2.23 million.

The 34-year-old decorated Vietnam veteran escaped the war uninjured, but broke his neck when he fell from a roof 12 years ago.

His wife divorced him. He couldn't pick up a book or take care of himself without help.

"I woke up one day and said, 'This is it. You're going to see what you're made of. You're going to stop feeling sorry for yourself," Connolly said, as he recalled his battle against despair, the courts and hospital wards.

His perserverence paid off and last week he won an award for medical care and living expenses in an agreement that calls for workman's compensation payments of as much as $2.23 million over 30 years for him and his new wife and three children.

After his accident, Connolly said Maryland Casualty, who had insured him in his roofing business, promised him it would provide for his lifetime medical needs.

But Connolly did not want to spend the rest of his life in a nursing home.

"I wanted to die," he said. "I went on hunger strikes and drinking sprees. I spent months and months just staring at my hand, saying what a fine, fine beautiful instrument. And now it's gone forever."

In 1973, with the help of his family, he left the hospital, enrolled in Miami-Dade Community college, and asked Maryland Casualty for a van with a wheelchair lift and special steering.

"I was going to Miami-Dade college in 1975, and all I had was a manual wheelchair," Connolly said.

Alligator killing case dismissed

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A charge of killing an endangered animal has been dismissed in the case of a teen-ager who beat a 5-foot long American alligator to death with a shovel.

Justice of the Peace Adam Serrata ruled Tuesday that Texas Parks and Wildlife officials had insufficient evidence for the charge against Joe Rodriguez, 19.

Parks and Wildlife officials had charged Rodriguez with a Class C misdemeanor, carrying a fine up to $200.

Rodriguez, who speaks Spanish, said he thought an "endangered species" meant "a dangerous animal" and that he had done a good deed by taking a shovel to the reptile which appeared at a favorite swimming hole for neighborhood youngsters.

Then, Rodriguez said, a Texas Parks and Wildlife agent showed up and issued him a citation.

Rodriguez said the alligator came at him and two companions who were fishing in Leon Creek on the southwest edge of the city two weeks ago, so he went to his nearby car, got the shovel and beat it to death.

"We didn't know we were breaking the law," the teen-ager said. "I panicked. I got scared. What would you do if you saw an alligator coming at you?"

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Glenn Ford was born on this day, a day that also marks the beginning of Senior Citizens Month. You have a real talent for handling money and should be able to make considerable financial progress this year. Avoid being caught up in trivial matters that others can handle. Your desire to work hard is commendable, but no one individual can do everything by himself. A true leader knows how and when to delegate authority. Generous and outgoing, you attract both loyal friends and hangers-on. Let your keen intuition tell you which is which! Choose a mate who shares your confident approach to life's challenges.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The spotlight is on career matters. The direct approach works best now. Stick to the truth and you will come out on top. Romantic possibilities abound this evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some excellent financial trends are working in your favor. A positive, optimistic attitude will help you over any rough spots. Open up new lines of communication with young people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Telephone call brings good news. Money could be involved. Try not to exaggerate. Let the facts speak for themselves. You are in the mood to take a trip. Discuss plans with romantic partner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Discard outdated work procedures to increase efficiency, boost profits. Teamwork is richly rewarded. This is a good day to discuss educational matters, purchase books and read professional papers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do your best to cut through red tape. A legal matter can be settled out of court, in your favor. Family relationships are in the spotlight. Partners pull together for their common good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A letter from an old friend will give you new business insights. Profit from someone else's experience. Ask for a face-to-face meeting if planning to request a favor or loan.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial tangles can be straightened out. Brother or sister could play a major role in a business deal. Cancel social engagement if feeling tired tonight. Loved one will understand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An excellent day for business, finance. You more than hold your own in any negotiations that take place. Career prestige is on the upswing. Evening is a good time for quiet meditation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): As long as you refrain from making unreasonable demands, others will be cooperative. Be more considerate towards loved one and romance will become happier for both of you. You find answer to old question.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may want to plan a surprise for a loved one who has something special to celebrate. You and mate draw closer together. Sharing increases your chances for lasting happiness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may have to use a little flattery to win an argument. Money matters could be a source of concern. Be honest with yourself. Lay your cards on the table when talking with mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You should be very pleased with the plans other people make for you now. If bored at work, be careful not to let it show! Otherwise, career goals could suffer.

Opening lead: Ace of ◇.

Even a seemingly impregnable position can become vulnerable to a guerilla assault. Declarer failed to consider the possibility and paid dearly.

With only 16 HCP and a freak hand, South realized that it was unlikely that an opening bid of one spade would be passed out. North dredged up a one no trump response in the hope of getting to play the hand in one of his suits, but he began to regret his action when his partner jumped to four spades at his next turn.

West led the ace of diamonds and continued the suit. Declarer ruffed the second diamond and led the king of trumps, feeling very secure in his contract. He was soon disillusioned. West took the ace of spades and, since declarer had not tried to ruff any clubs, the defender reasoned that declarer was not worried about that suit. Therefore, West shifted to a heart.

Declarer made the technically correct play of the king from dummy. East won the ace and returned his remaining diamond. Declarer's goose was cooked—whether he ruffed high or low, East's ten of trumps had to score a trick. Down one in a contract that should have been made.

Had declarer been aware of the potential threat to his trump holding, he could have taken a simple but effective countermeasure. A loser-on-loser play would have made the contract safe as long as trumps divided 3-2.

After ruffing the second diamond, declarer should have entered dummy by ruffing one of his club winners. Now, he leads a diamond from dummy but, instead of ruffing, he discards his heart loser!

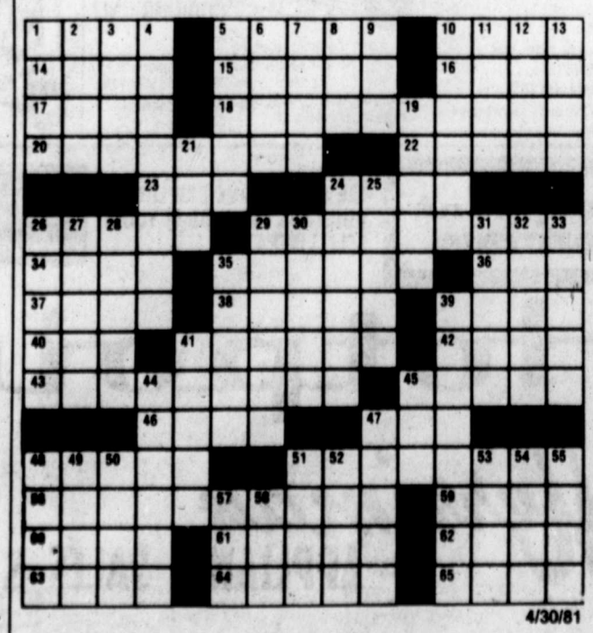

By exchanging his heart loser for a diamond loser, declarer breaks communications between the defenders' hands and neutralizes the threat of a trump promotion. No matter what the defenders do, declarer can get to his hand twice with almost complete safety to draw trumps and thus make his contract.

Brazilian government steps up contacts with Soviet Union

By PETER EISNER
Associated Press Writer

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — The military-backed government, which came to power in an anti-communist coup in 1964, is stepping up technological, scientific and trade contacts with the Soviet Union — a move that will bring Soviet technicians to Brazil for the first time in 17 years.

Wrestling with economic difficulties at home, Brazil is seeking to develop new economic frontiers and exert a commercial independence from the United States, its biggest trading partner.

Foreign Ministry officials have just concluded a round of meetings in Moscow that yielded accords that provide for increased official contacts in all but political areas.

For the first time since 1964 — when the right-wing military overthrew the democratically elected, left-leaning government of President Joao Goulart — Soviet technicians will be working with Brazilian counterparts in a search for oil here. There also will be joint research in the field of alternative fuels, possible Brazilian purchases of Soviet hydroelectric equipment and the promise of increased bilateral cultural exchanges.

Brazilian exports to the Soviet Union increased by 50 percent to more than $320 million in 1980 on sales of cocoa, soybeans and coffee. Brazil underscored its independent line last year by avoiding former President Carter's boycott of grain sales and by sending a regular team of athletes to the Moscow Summer Olympics following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Brazilian trade specialists foresee significant gains in commerce with the Soviet Union and with all of Eastern Europe as the nation follows its aggressive policy directed toward diversifying its trade.

The United States remains Brazil's largest single trading partner, with total commerce of almost $7 billion last year, an increase of about 25 percent over the previous year. But Foreign Ministry specialists are quick to point out that trade with the European Common Market now exceeds U.S. trade, and that the rate of commercial advances with other countries is picking up.

The Brazilian effort includes a special Foreign Ministry division that has sponsored trade fairs and mission in Eastern Europe, where trade figures registered a general 30 percent increase last year, to $1.4 billion, based on 11-month trade statistics, the latest available for 1980. Poland is Brazil's largest single commercial partner in the region.

Brazil also is opening new commercial ties with African nations and China. The government also lifted a ban on contacts with Cuba recently to permit entry of an official Cuban trade mission interested in buying equipment for making alcohol fuel from sugar cane.

U.S. diplomatic sources say they have no complaint about Brazilian commercial policy.

"I wouldn't say that we're jumping for joy," said one U.S. source, who asked not to be identified because of the sensitivity of his post. "But the Brazilian position of expanding its markets is predictable and responds to a basic economic imperative."

Brazilian officials are wary of possible U.S. trade restrictions that might hurt Brazil as it looks for trade advantages to ease its $60 billion foreign debt and 120 percent inflation rate fueled by high costs for importing crude oil.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Brazil often finds it easier to deal with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. Unlike the case in Western countries, "we are not dealing with private industry," said the source, who asked that he not be identified. "We are dealing with a state-controlled market in which there has been a low level of trade. It's a novelty situation and there's lots of room for advancement."

One key element in the Soviet-Brazilian agreement involves a plan for Soviet oil exploration in the southern industrial state of Sao Paulo. The Brazilians had been delaying a long-standing Soviet offer for help in finding oil here — especially in the remote northern Amazon region, viewed as a security area by military forces here.

However, Brazil approved only limited oil exploration in Sao Paulo state, headquarters of the nation's most outspoken anti-communist military leader, Gen. Milton Tavares, commander of the 2nd Army.

Tavares, in his most recent in a series of warnings about left-wing subversion, displayed on nationwide television a small cache of rifles and ammunition he said had been captured by security forces.

"In terms of probability," he declared, "it is very probable that this has been the work of the international communist movement."

Accordingly, the Foreign Ministry warns against placing too much emphasis on the new Soviet contacts, drawing a distinction between commercial and political policy.

Missile transfer interpreted as escalation of hostility

By STEVE K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria's introduction of antiaircraft missiles into eastern Lebanon constitutes a "measured" escalation of Syrian-Israeli hostility, Western diplomats in Beirut say.

The transfer of the SAM-6 surface-to-air missiles to the Bekaa Valley after the Israeli air force shot down two Syrian helicopters amounted to a direct challenge to Israeli Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori's statement that Israel would not allow any Syrian air activity in Lebanese skies, the diplomats said.

"I see it as a measured escalation that won't really mean much until the Syrians bring down an Israeli jet — then there is real danger of an all-out conflict," said one observer.

Israel said it shot down two Syrian helicopters engaged in combat operations against Lebanese Christian forces in the snow-capped Mount Lebanon range as a warning to the Syrians not the press their battles against the Christians too far.

But the diplomats said they saw the Israeli attack as a violation of the unwritten rules under which Israel has supported the Christian forces since the Syrian-Christian fighting began April 1. The Syrian missile response was viewed as another infraction although a defensive one.

Israeli aircraft have downed 13 Syrian Soviet-made jet fighters in the past year and a half in Lebanon. The diplomats said the Syrians showed great forebearance by not introducing the Soviet-built SAM-6s earlier.

"The Syrians are demonstrating they are not going to have the Israelis booting them around in Lebanon any more. It's very humiliating to them to have the Israelis shooting down whatever they want, whenever," said a Western envoy.

The diplomats asked to remain anonymous because of the sensitivity of their postions.

The heart of the Syrian-Israeli conflict is that the perceived interests of Lebanon's two powerful neighbors intersect in the peaks of Mount Lebanon.

Fighting between Syrians and Christians broke out April 1, when the Syrians served notice they would not have an Israeli-supported group — the right-wing Christian Phalange Party — establishing itself in the Lebanese city of Zahle, 20 miles from the Syrian border and 25 miles east of Beirut.

In negotiations to end the fighting, Foreign Minister Abdul-Halim Khaddam of Syria drew a red line around the entire Bekaa Valley and said his government would not accept an Israeli-supported force inside that line.

The Syrians laid siege to the city and chased the Phalangists westward up the slopes of Mount Lebanon. The Israelis shot down the Syrian helicopters after Syrian troops moved up the mountains, for centuries the heartland of Lebanon's Maronite Christians.

By establishing itself as protector of the Christians, Israel has effectively drawn another red line around the Christian enclave east of Beirut.

Romanian minister to visit with Haig

WASHINGTON (AP) — Romania's Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei will visit the United States next month for discussions with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., the State Department announced Wednesday.

The May 15 talks will mark the first visit of a high official of a communist nation since the Reagan administration took office.

Dean Fischer, the State Department spokesman, said Haig and Andrei will discuss East-West relations, the Middle East, developments in the third world and Romania's most-favored-nation trade status, which is up for renewal in June.

Generic drug bill approved

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Senate has approved a bill consumer groups claim could save Texans millions of dollars a year in drug costs.

The bill would allow pharmacists to substitute lower-cost — or generic — drugs for brand-name products.

The measure was sent to the House on voice vote Tuesday, possibly the next-to-last step in what Sen. Chet Brooks called "six years of long, hard work."

He said the proposal should be particularly helpful to the elderly, who purchase 25 percent of the drugs in Texas.

Texas is one of two states that do not allow pharmacists to substitute a generic equivalent for a brand-name prescription.

The prohibition dates back to the 1950s when, according to a bill analysis, a large number of counterfeit drugs were sold to consumers.

Brooks, D-Pasadena, accepted an amendment worked out on the floor after stressing that the bill had been approved by major medical, consumer and pharmaceutical organizations.

The amendment specifies that the intent of the bill is "to save consumers money by allowing the substitution" of lower-priced generic drugs for brand-ame drugsand says pharmacies should "pass on the net benefit of the lower costs" of the generic drugs to the purchaser.

Brooks said pharmacists need to make profits on generic drugs to cover the cost of extra paperwork and to build up drug inventories.

Sen. Betty Andujar, who offered the amendment, said, "It is not our intent that the pharmacist should not make a profit, but he should not make an inordinate profit."

"In reality," Brooks said, "there will be no substitution if there is no incentive to substitute. ... The pharmacists want to pass the savings on, and there will be an absolute demand on the part of consumers for cost savings."

He said, however, two states that had enacted laws requiring 100 percent pass-through on savings had repealed those laws.

"The Board of Pharmacy will not only be responsible but will be obligated to see that the cost savings are carried out," said Brooks.

Brooks' bill prohibits a pharmacist from selecting a generic drug that costs more than a brand-name drug.

A physician could refuse to substitute a generic drug by signing the prescription on a line next to the preprinted words "dispense as written." Also, the patient would have the "absolute right" to insist on a brand-name drug.

House tentatively OK s teacher pension increase

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The House tentatively approved a bill Wednesday that would raise retired teachers' pensions by 2 percent to 21 percent, at a cost to the taxpayers of $95 million over the next two years.

The Senate-passed measure advanced on a voice vote and was expected to gain final passage on Thursday.

Teachers who retired before Sept. 1, 1963, would get a 21 percent rase; those who retired between that date and May 31, 1971, would get a 16 percent raise; teachers who retired between May 31, 1971, and May 31, 1977, would get 14 percent; and those who retired between May 31, 1977, and Aug. 31, 1979, would receive a 2 percent increase.

A teacher who retired on Aug. 31, 1979, and did not get an increase from a bill passed in 1979 would receive a raise of 7 percent.

The concert represents the Midland-Lee Youth Centers' major fund raising event of the year. Proceeds go to keeping the centers in operation.

In a professional career spanning approximately 16 years, Hall has written a variety of songs on such subjects as sneaky snakes and old dogs to beer and miracles. Nicknamed the "Storyteller," Hall writes and sings about subjects and people he has experienced in his life.

Some of his best known tunes include "Sneaky Snake," "I Love," "Old Dogs, Children and Watermellon Wine," "I Like Beer," "Your Man Loves You Honey," "The Year Clayton Delaney Died" and "Country Is."

Following an eight-year stint with the U.S. Army, where he was stationed in Germany, Hall began his career as a radio disc jockey in Roanoke, Va. He started forwarding songs he had written to publisher Jimmy Key in Nashville. Key urged Hall to move to Music City.

His beginning salary as a writer was $50 a week. He lived on this until the royalities from his songs began coming in.

His solo recording career began in 1967 when he signed with Mercury Records. Since then he has had 11 number one records and eight albums, including two successful children's records.

In 1968 Jeannie C. Riley recorded a Hall song — "Harper Valley PTA." It sold over 6 million copies. A respected writer by many, Hall had, at one time, six songs in the charts recorded by other artists.

He has authored two books, "How I Write Songs, Why You Can" and "The Storyteller's Nashville." He is currently working on his first novel for Doubleday.

Tickets for the performance may be purchased at area record stores or at Chaparral Center.

Lowell Hohstadt

Hohstadt composition wins

Lowell Hohstadt, 16-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Hohstadt, has recently won the Composition Competition at the Julliard School of Music. His winning work was "Le Bazar," a festive overture written for a full symphonic orchestra.

The Julliard Orchestra has performed the composition during a regularly scheduled concert in Lincoln Center.

Lowell began composing at the age of 13. His first piece was "Gypsy Jazz," a work for string quintet and percussion. Other compositions include "Christmas Festival" for piano, "Sunset" for violin trio, "Fantasy Variations" for piano, and "Trilogy" for unaccompanied violin, which he performed this spring in Lincoln Center's Paul Hall. He is currently working on a string quartet. He is a composition student of Craig Schuller.

Lowell has performed seven times as the featured soloist with such orchestras as the Oradea Philharmonic of Romania, the Midland-Odessa Symphony and the Julliard Pre-College String Ensemble. He has also appeared frequently as a recitalist, most recently in Paul Hall and at Meadowmount with David Garvey as his accompanist.

During the past season he placed first in the Julliard Bach Competition. He has also received the Benno Rabinof Award and won the string division of the Friday Music Club Competition, for which he will perform two recitals this spring in the New York City area.

A second-year scholarship student, he lives with his teacher, Margaret Pardee, in New York and is completing his high school requirements by correspondence from the American School of Chicago.

His father is the director-conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra.

'Hill Street Blues' saved

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Somewhere, "United States" is smiling. "The Associates" is avenged. "Paper Chase" is enjoying a vicarious victory. Is there a canceled-TV-show heaven? If so, hosannas ring out.

"Hill Street Blues" has been saved. NBC, you done good.

Despite horrible ratings, a brutal time period and the label of critics' darling — the kiss of death in television — "Hill Street Blues," a series that deserves to live, is going to. NBC gave Mary Tyler Moore Productions a renewal on the show, which means that it will have at least 13 chances next fall to woo viewers.

This time, the good guys might win.

When a producer of a good television show says, "It just hasn't found its audience," he's usually copping an excuse for failure. But when Grant Tinker, MTM chief employs the phrase regarding "Hill Street," it rings true.

NBC is only just now givng the show areal shot on the schedule, moving its repeats from Saturday night — where any comer was murdered by ABC's "Love Boat"-"Fantasy Island" tandem — to Tuesdays, where it will probably land next fall, too.

Fred Silverman and his chief programmer aren't being altrustic here; "Hill Street" isn't just good TV, it's commercial TV. The downbeat elements to this realistic cop show are carefully tempered by characters and situations of such breadth and simple comic appeal that success seems inevitable.

New York City Ballet, music sparkle in season opening

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Crispness, grace and sparkle defined opening night of the New York City Ballet season Tuesday night at the New York State Theater.

The music was an equal partner with the dancing, atonal for Stravinsky — no smoothing off the jagged edges — and lightly swinging for Gershwin. Robert Irving conducted.

Jacques d'Amboise was the star of the final ballet, "Who Cares?", to 16 songs by George Gershwin. He had the three big romantic duets, with three different ballerinas, and a debonair solo to "Liza." Heather Watts and Karin von Aroldingen looked good with d'Amboise but it was the Patricia McBride-d'Amboise duo that took the breath away.

The two dancers, flowing toward each other, were as convincingly in love as Academy Award actors, and a lot more graceful. And nothing could be more lushly romantic than the orchestral arrangement of "The Man I Love" to which they swirled and embraced.

Earlier, Renee Estopinal had been a standout in "Somebody Loves Me" for five young women and Christopher d'Amboise had been a charming partner to Delia Peters in "That Certain Feeling."

The evening started with "Agon," which George Balanchine choreographed to Stravinsky in 1957. It still looks elegant, and more modern than many ballets 20 years newer. Suzanne Farrell and Peter Martins received many loud bravos after a brilliant duet. They are certainly partners who look like a partnership, rare in ballet, and greatly to be treasured.

Martins' newest choreography is a plotless ballet to Stravinsky's "The Soldier's Tale." Ib Andersen and Darci Kistler looked as though they were born to dance it. Jean-Pierre Frohlich was totally impressive, spry, graceful, moving in front of six men like a natural leader of men.

The corps de ballet looked superb throughout and so did soloists in supporting roles.

Wadley Ave., are dancers, from left, Billy Cook, Sheldon Millsap, Elroy Villafranca, Bill Hossley and Robert Walter. Trial opens for couple accused of selling baby

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — The attorney for a couple accused of selling their 7-month-old baby says he will argue that no crime was involved because human beings do not have transferable "title."

The couple, Air Force Tech. Sgt. John Raaen and his wife, Jantee, are accused in federal court of selling their daughter for $2,000 last November. The case is being tried in federal court because the alleged offense occurred on federal property, but since there are no applicable federal laws, the charges are based on a state law. The charges carry a maximum penalty of 14 years in prison and $5,000 in fines.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Deborah Bail said as far as she can determine, this case is the first prosecuted under the Idaho law. And she said few such cases have been tried anywhere in the country.

Defense attorney David Wishney said in opening arguments Tuesday he would attempt to prove no crime occurred under Idaho laws.

"Selling" means passing title to something for money, he said. Wishney argued no "title" to 7-month-old Shannon Raaen was given to the couple who allegedly purchased her in a transaction videotaped by security officers.

Wishney also said he would attempt to prove the child was "purchased" with a $2,000 check that was no good, and therefore no money changed hands.

After charges were filed, state welfare officials took custody of the infant. Officials said Tuesday that Shannon was adopted through the regular process and is living with parents who have not been identified.

A second child, Sean, 3, also was taken into custody but later was returned to his parents.

Dance theatre to perform this weekend

Midland Dance Theatre will present "It's a Musical World" at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The concert consists of two acts with an intermission. Act I, "Rainbow Valley," combines the acting and dancing talents of the 35-member cast, while Act II features tap, ballet, jazz and speciality routines.

Included in the cast are five, two-generation families and a three-generation family, participating either as performers or production staff.

The primary production staff includes Cherry Jones, choreographer; Greg Hancock, audition choreographer; John Michale Warburton, stage director; Jimmy Linton, assistant stage director; Dottie Fox, stage manager; Jan Petty and Jolene Stroker, assistant stage managers; and Mary Ann Harris, costumer.

For reservations call the theater's box office at 682-4111.

'20-20' arson report in hot water

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Investigative journalism, Geraldo Rivera style, has taken the Hip One from the jungles of Laos to a spat with little Gary Coleman, with the aggressive "Look at Me" Rivera style chafing more than a few hides along the way.

But now Rivera is enmeshed in a controversy that may threaten his career and calls into question television's role as the probing eye.

The rather curious dogfight erupted between ABC News and CBS' Chicago station, WBBM, over a Rivera "20-20" newsmagazine report on an alleged arson-for-profit ring in Chicago. In the half-hour "20-20" piece, Rivera told of an alleged arson scheme involving one Charles Roberts, identified by "20-20" as one of several profiteers connected to 29 fires, some of which were fatal. (Roberts has sued ABC for libel.)

WBBM's documentary team, headed by producer Scott Craig, put together an expose-styled television report on expose-styled television reporting, focusing, in part, on Rivera's arson-for-profit story. The documentary, which aired last week, attacked the "20-20" report on points of accuracy and style, suggesting that Rivera & Co.'s "findings" were not valid largely because the U.S. Attorney's office had not been able to get a grand jury indictment against Roberts.

But the WBBM report further called into question the investigative methods routinely employed by Rivera and other TV-Eyes, specifically the flashy technique dubbed "the ambush interview." Rivera was chastened for approaching the startled Roberts on the street, cameras rolling, and giving him the third degree. It's a method designed, suggested the WBBM report, for "picture," not truth.

ABC News came down on the WBBM documentary hard and fast, and understandably so. The news profession, print and electronic, seems to be in the throes of a self-devouring frenzy in the wake of the Janet Cooke-Washington Post-Pulitzer Prize affair. ABC News and Geraldo Rivera were being spoken in the same breath as Janet Cooke, and ABC News didn't like it.

Indeed, the "20-20" report in question won television's version of the Pulitzer, an Emmy Award.

Anyway, ABC issued a nine-page rebuttal to WBBM's report and is planning a "20-20" rebuttal to be broadcast at least in the Chicago area, and possibly nationwide.

"We think we've been maligned," said ABC News Vice President David Burke. "We've been unfairly attacked and our integrity has been put on the line."

WBBM producer Scott Craig says he rather welcomes a "David and Goliath battle," if that's what ABC wants. But he insists that the purpose of his "Watching the Watchdog" documentary was merely to "open up a dialogue among journalists about the techniques used by television in investigative reporting, their use and abuse.

"If all of this means we've opened up that dialogue, I'm glad."

ABC's Burke isn't interested in dialogue right now.
