New explosions hit tanker

■ Coast Guard officials say more blasts increase the possibility that the Norwegian tanker could sink, as well as hindering a full-fledged assault on the fire.

By Michael Graczyk

GALVESTON (AP) — A series of powerful explosions Sunday aboard a blazing supertanker that was carrying 38 million gallons of oil sent burning crude spilling into the water, officials said.

"This is a real big one," Coast Guard Chief Petty Officer Todd Nelson said. "We've got burning crude oil rolling off the stern into the water." Authorities also said they were concerned that the ship's stern appeared to be listing.

The five explosions hit nearly 1½ days after a blast and fire killed at least two crew members and forced evacuation of the 853-foot-long Norwegian tanker Mega Borg in the Gulf of Mexico. They were the latest in a series of smaller explosions that began Saturday afternoon.

The ship's stern, where the fire was concentrated, has dropped by 58 feet since the first explosion Saturday, indicating either that the cargo had shifted or the Mega Borg was taking on water, Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Frank Whipple told a Sunday evening news conference.

"We're uncertain what that means," Whipple said earlier.

"It's not good," said Nelson. "We don't know the possibility of it sinking.

"There certainly is a larger chance of the ship sinking than before the explosions," he said. "We're still optimistic that the ship and cargo can be saved if there is an effective firefighting operation."

By 9 p.m., the stern had stablized at 5 feet above the waterline, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Howard J. Holmes.

The latest blasts, which began late in the morning and ended around 12:30 p.m., came shortly after members of a salvage team boarded the crippled ship to begin a full-scale assault on the blaze. They were off the ship before the blasts began, and there were no reports of injuries.

Members of the Smit America Galveston Bay Salvage Team, hired by the ship's owners, were able to shut off some valves to the ship's tanks, Whipple told an earlier briefing.

A spill about one mile long north of the vessel and one about 20 miles long to the south were visible Sunday evening. Prevailing currents and winds were expected to push the oil toward a 150- to 200-mile stretch of Texas coast between Freeport and Corpus Christi.

Thousands of feet of containment booms were being brought in as a precaution in case a larger spill developed. The tanker, 57 miles southeast of Galveston, held 38 million gallons of light crude oil.

A commercial C-130 airplane dropped dispersant over parts of the spill within a five-mile radius of the tanker late Sunday, Holmes said. Dispersants are used to make oil break up more quickly.

ELF, a Houston-based oil distributor that was going to market the Mega Borg's cargo, is paying for the cleanup, Holmes said.

Czech election

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The two political groups that broke the grip of Communist rule on Czechoslovakia won the first free election in 44 years and Sunday began considering possible partners in a new coalition government.

Official results showed that Civic Forum and Public Against Violence — the Czech and Slovak sister organizations that led November's pro-democracy revolution — had captured the most seats in the new federal Parliament.

The big surprise was the strong showing by the Communists, who finished in second place with 48 seats.

Fujimori wins presidential race in Peru

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Alberto Fujimori, a political unknown four months ago, soundly defeated celebrated novelist Mario Vargas Llosa in a presidential runoff Sunday and promised to improve the economy of this bankrupt nation.

Vargas Llosa conceded defeat. He wished Fujimori success in trying to turn the country around, fight drug trafficking and battle a decade-old guerrilla insurgency.

Voting took place despite a wave of attacks in one Andean region by Maoist guerrillas who had vowed to sabotage the balloting. At least one voter was killed.

Exit polls gave Fujimori, 51, an agricultural engineer and former university rector, a 13-to-19 point lead.

The projections "give us overwhelming support," Fujimori said at a news conference two hours after polls closed. He invited all political parties to participate in his government in areas where agreements could be reached.

He said he recognized the "titanic task" of governing Peru and invited all political parties to participate in his gov-

Women seek to break 'thick glass ceiling'

■ Victories by Texas' Ann Richards and California's Dianne Feinstein could help other women running for Congress, as well as open up the road to the White House.

By Jill Lawrence

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 1990 elections may not greatly increase the number of women in governor's mansions and Congress, but female candidates hope to smash a symbolic barrier by winning the top jobs in Texas and California.

Democratic governor nominees Ann Richards in Texas and Dianne Feinstein in California are the bright spots in a year that, at best, may bring incremental progress in electing more women to top-level offices.

Three women already are governors of smaller states, but claiming control in major states like Texas and California would "break a big, thick glass ceiling," said Sharon Rodine, president of the bipartisan National Women's Political Caucus.

While numerical gains at the top are likely to be slim, more women than ever are running for state legislatures, statewide offices and Congress, according to the caucus. These candidates are receiving tens of thousands of dollars from a growing number of groups promoting women's candidacies.

But all eyes and a good deal of money are on California and Texas, where the new governors will have a strong hand in the redistricting expected to add up to 10 new seats to their congressional delegations next year.

"California and Texas are key in terms of presidential politics and reapportionment," said Jane Danowitz, executive director of the bipartisan Women's Campaign Fund. "These are not local posts. We are talking about chief executive officers for two of the largest entities in the country."

The practical, powerbroker aspects of Feinstein and Richards victories would be matched by their symbolic import, many women say.

"Until we crack the stereotypical barrier of women as executives of major states, we will not have a woman in the White House," said Wendy Sherman, executive director of the Democratic EMILY's List, which supports women candidates.

Feinstein faces Sen. Pete Wilson in November and Richards is up against Midland oilman-rancher Clayton Williams. Both women survived bruising primaries and are considered viable contenders.

"Those women have been through tough, ugly primaries and shown they've got what it takes to hold those offices," Rodine said. "Both of them are hungry for the job."

Two women governors are retiring this year — Democrats Madeleine Kunin of Vermont and Rose Mofford of Arizona. There are 11 others running for governor, including Republican Kay Orr who is up for re-election in Nebraska.

In addition to Feinstein and Richards, Democrat Barbara Roberts in Oregon is considered a strong contender for an open seat. Republican Arliss Sturgulewski of Alaska will be in the same category if she wins her Aug. 28 primary.

Republican Barbara Hafer of Pennsylvania won her primary but has an uphill

Midland police seek armed robbery suspect

Staff Report

Midland police said they were searching for a man who used a semiautomatic weapon Sunday to rob a gas station.

A man walked into the Rapid Oil Change Inc. station, 1101 Andrews Highway, about 6 p.m., pulled out a semiautomatic pistol and demanded that the clerk give him money, police said. No shots were fired and no one was injured in the robbery, officials said.

The robber — described as a 5-foot-10 white male wearing a T-shirt, baseball cap and blue jeans — took more $450 in cash and two bank bags containing an undetermined amount of money, authorities said.

The man escaped in an older model, panel-type white van, police said.

Sunny skies continue

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the mid-90s and 10 to 20 mph southeast winds, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be fair with a low in the mid-70s, the NWS said. Tuesday's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the mid-90s, NWS said.

Sunday's record high of 103 was set in 1958. Today's record low of 51 was set in 1975, the NWS said.

STATE

Scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms continued over the coastal plains Sunday, dampening what was otherwise a sunny day over most of the state.

However, widely scattered thunderstorms were developing late Sunday over east Texas.

Skies were mostly cloudy along the coast, and partly cloudy skies dominated other parts of the state.

Southerly winds blew across Texas except for easterly breezes in the east and central parts of the state. Wind speeds were mainly in the 5 to 15 mph range. However, gusts up to 30 mph were recorded in the Panhandle.

Temperatures at 3 p.m. were in the 80s and 90s Sunday. Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio was the hot spot with a 96-degree reading. Afternoon rains cooled the mercury at Palacios down to 80 degrees.

NATION

A cold front brought scattered showers from the northern Rockies to Southern California, and rain also fell in the southern Appalachians and western New England.

Showers and a few thunderstorms developed from western Arkansas to southeastern Nebraska and scattered thunderstorms formed along the Gulf Coast.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

TANKER: Texas firm paying for cleanup

cued were injured, none seriously, in Saturday's explosion. Two remained hospitalized Sunday in good condition.

The Coast Guard's Atlantic Strike Team from Mobile, Ala., and other spill response groups brought a high-seas barrier boom and other supplies, including foam, to the ship.

Four Coast Guard cutters were in place around the supertanker Sunday, Whipple said. Two Smit America ships were spraying water on the Mega Borg's deck to keep the ship as cool as possible, while two other salvage team ships were in position.

Whipple said a full-fledged assault on the fire was scheduled for early this morning, when two other Smit America ships were expected to arrive at the scene. The full complement of salvage ships was expected to blanket the aft section with fire-extinguishing foam.

The Mega Borg's owners also have contracted for an airplane to spread dispersants over about 7,000 gallons of oil spilled so far, Nelson said.

Fireboats worked through Saturday night spraying water to cool the decks of the supertanker, said Petty Officer Richard Miled in Galveston. There were several minor explosions overnight, he said.

Flames shot hundreds of feet high from the ship's air vents and thick, black smoke could be seen from 40 miles away after the engine room explosion at 1 a.m. Saturday.

In addition to the two confirmed dead, two other crewmen remained missing Sunday and were presumed dead after a search for them was called off. Coast Guard Chief Petty Officer Rich Muller said the missing men from the crew of 41 were probably still aboard the ship.

The blast occurred as part of its cargo was being transferred to a smaller tanker.

fight against popular Democratic Gov. Bob Casey. The other governor candidates, all facing primaries, are Republican Marlene Woodson-Howard of Florida, Democrat Joan Finney of Kansas, Democrat Evelyn Murphy of Massachusetts and Republicans Mary Mead and Nyla Murphy, who will face off in Wyoming's GOP primary.

Seven women are running for the Senate, which now counts two women among its 100 members. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., is up for re-election, and Sen. Barbara Mukulski, D-Md., comes up for re-election in 1992.

The one Democratic woman making a Senate bid this year, Josie Heath of Colorado, is expected to win her party nomination but faces a formidable opponent in GOP Rep. Hank Brown.

Three GOP women are quitting the House to run for Senate: Reps. Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island, Lynn Martin of Illinois and Pat Saiki of Hawaii. Saiki is given the best shot at winning; her Democratic competitor is Daniel Akaka, who recently was elevated from the House to the Senate upon the death of Democratic Sen. Spark Matsunaga.

Schneider and Martin are putting a scare into two entrenched Democrats, Claiborne Pell and Paul Simon.

Longshot Senate candidates are M. Jane Brady, a Republican challenging Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., and Republican Christine Todd Whitman, taking on Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J.

There are 28 women in the 435-member House, including three certain departures by those running for the Senate. There also is speculation that Rep. Lindy Boggs, D-La., whose daughter is very ill, may retire this year.

In addition, a few incumbent women in the House could be vulnerable, among them Democrats Jill Long of Indiana and Jolene Unsoeld of Washington.

On the plus side of the ledger, California Democrat Maxine Waters is a shoo-in to win the seat being vacated by retiring Democratic Rep. Augustus Hawkins. There are a number of strong candidates among the more than 50 women running for Congress, and analysts are predicting a net gain of up to four seats.

The most encouraging sign to Rodine is the crowd of women running for statewide and state legislative offices that traditionally are jumping-off points for governor and congressional races. For example, four women besides Feinstein won nominations last week for statewide office in California.

Many women are looking to 1992 as a watershed year that could break the pattern of incremental gains at the federal level.

Redistricting will open up new opportunities for women in states gaining House seats, and a large crop of incumbents is expected to retire because it will be the last year legislators can take their campaign war chests with them.

PERU: New president says economic issues a priority

ernment in areas where agreements could be reached.

Fujimori said his government would stress economic development over military and police repression as the best way to fight both leftist subversion and cocaine trafficking.

He did not indicate where the money would come from for economic development. The treasury is running a $100 million current deficit, and the nation has a $20 billion foreign debt.

Before 1,000 supporters outside his campaign headquarters, Vargas Llosa conceded, wishing Fujimori "success in the difficult responsibility the Peruvian people have placed on him."

"Respectful of democratic traditions, I accept the decision of the Peruvian people."

Vargas Llosa's chief political aide, Alfredo Barnecha, called it a protest vote.

"It has not been a vote for a political program but a vote to stop Mario Vargas Llosa," Barnechea said after the televised projections were released.

Fujimori, the son of Japanese immigrants, was vying with the center-right Vargas Llosa to replace populist Alan Garcia, whose five-year term ends July 28. Garcia, leader of the Aprista Party, is ineligible to serve a consecutive term.

The election comes as Peru is weathering its worst economic crisis of the century. The impoverished Andean nation also is being bloodied by the savage, leftist insurgency that has claimed nearly 20,000 lives.

The independent polling firm Apoyo gave Fujimori 51.1 percent to 37.8 percent for Vargas Llosa, with 11.1 percent blank and null votes.

N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — The pilot of a passenger plane was sucked out of the cabin window onto the nose cone of the jet Sunday after its windshield blew out at 23,000 feet. But he was saved by crew members who clung to his ankles for 15 minutes until the co-pilot landed the plane safely in southern England.

Several of the aircraft's 81 passengers said they had watched in horror as crew members frantically wrestled to pull Capt. Timothy Lancaster back into the cockpit. The plane went into a dive, but with half of Lancaster's body hanging outside, the co-pilot flew the aircraft to Southampton Airport, 70 miles southwest of London.

The Civil Aviation Authority immediately announced an investigation into the incident, which police said began 20 minutes into British Airways Flight 5390 from Birmingham, England, to Malaga in Spain.

Lancaster, 41, a pilot for 21 years, was taken to Southampton General Hospital suffering from shock, a fractured elbow, wrist, and thumb, and frostbite on one hand. The police said that all the crew members were taken to the hospital and that four passengers were treated for shock. Everyone except the captain was later released.

Another plane was sent to Southampton to take the passengers on to Malaga. All except seven continued their journey.

Passengers said the aircraft, a BAC 1-11, was gaining altitude over southern England when they heard an explosion as the cabin window blew out. The windshield was later found in Didcot, Oxfordshire.

"I could see a body hanging out of the window, with two men and a woman hanging onto his legs," one passenger, Margaret Simmonds, told the Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency. "They were trying to stop him being sucked out."

Chris Opie, another passenger, told the agency: "There seemed to be some smoke immediately after the bang and suddenly there was sheer panic. An air hostess standing near us at the back of the plane started to cry. I thought we were going to crash and began praying. My girlfriend, Nichola, who was sitting next to me, was crying, and hugging our son, James.

"Then one of the men on the flight deck came onto the loud speaker announcement radio and said the windscreen had blown out and warned us to prepare for an emergency landing."

The air pressure dropped dramatically and the sudden decompression sucked Lancaster through his seatbelt and into the hole left by the windshield, which the Press Association said had been replaced Friday in a routine maintenance check. His clothes were ripped from his body by the slipstream, the police said.

The co-pilot, Alistair Atcheson, 39, put on an oxygen mask and flew the plane, as a steward, Nigel Ogden, who was also on the flight deck, grabbed the captain's legs and clung to a chair. Another steward, Simon Rogers, rushed onto the flight deck, strapped himself into the pilot's seat, and relieved Ogden, who had gashed his hand trying to save the captain.

Helped by other crew members, Rogers clung to the captain until the aircraft landed. Other crew members calmed passengers and told them to fasten their seatbelts.

Seconds after the 18-year-old plane taxied to a halt, passengers left the aircraft by emergency chutes, while firemen worked from outside and pulled the captain clear. As the plane stood on the tarmac, bloodstains could reportedly be seen in the cockpit and pieces of clothing flapped from the window.

A British Airways spokesman said that Lancaster owed his life to quick thinking by the crew.

"The crew were tremendous," the spokesman, Anthony Cocklin, said. "We have nothing but praise for them. It was a tremendous example of alertness and we are very proud of them."

A spokesman for the British Air Line Pilots' Association told the Press Association that the incident was "a freak occurrence which will not unduly worry cockpit crews."

Later Sunday, Lancaster was said to have had an emotional reunion with his wife, Margaret, at the hospital. His son, Simon, who described his father as "flying mad," said he was "sitting up and already handing out the orders."

CIA linked to Mandela's arrest

ATLANTA (AP) — A CIA tip to South African intelligence agents led to the 1962 arrest of anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela, who remained imprisoned until this year, according to a report published Sunday.

The CIA had a "deep cover" agent in the Durban, South Africa, branch of Mandela's African National Congress, Cox News Service reported. Mandela, who had gone underground, was arrested on Aug. 5, 1962 while trying to leave Durban after secretly attending a dinner party there.

Mark Mansfield, a CIA spokesman in Washington, said Sunday that agency policy ruled out any official comment on the allegations.

Edward Ndlovo, a member of the ANC delegation in Geneva, Switzerland, dismissed the report, noting that CIA ties to the Mandela arrest have been rumored for years.

"That's an old, old story. I'm sure the press must have dug it up from newspaper cuttings from about five years ago," Ndlovo said.

The report quoted an unidentified former U.S. official as saying that Paul Eckel, then a senior CIA operative, had told him within hours of Mandela's arrest that the capture was "one of our greatest coups."

The former official said Eckel told him: "We have turned Mandela over to the South African security branch. We gave them every detail, what he would be wearing, the time of day, just where he would be. They have picked him up."

Eckel, who retired about 10 years ago, died in 1986.

Ndlovo said that when the allegations first surfaced, the ANC did not pay any attention to them. "We just disregarded it. It's neither here nor there."

Bushes' style gives social scene new flavor

EDITOR'S NOTE: The days of wine and roses and hostesses with the mostest have departed the Washington scene. Reading George Bush's lips, capital social life is Tex-Mex, flicks and popcorn on the side.

By Robert M. Andrews
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — After the Hollywood glitz of the Reagan years, the Washington social scene under George Bush seems as flat as last night's champagne and as boring as the last guest to leave the party.

Black-tie parties for jet-setting glitterati from Beverly Hills have given way to folksy barbecues at Camp David and cozy evenings of popcorn and movies at the White House for a few close friends.

Jelly beans are out. Tex-Mex junk food is in. Leave the Bill Blass gown in the closet, and grab a Ralph Lauren sweater for Kennebunkport. Scratch that candlelit soiree in Georgetown: the president's heading for the horseshoe pit.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL, in short, is gurgling down the drain.

"What social scene?" asks Robin Weir, former hairdresser to Nancy Reagan and her California friends.

Bemoaning the decline in star quality of his salon's clientele, Weir sniffed: "We've gone from Betsy Bloomingdale to Roseanne Barr."

Jayne Ikard, wife of a former Texas congressman and a fixture on the local party circuit for 20 years, says her waistline tells the story.

"Let's just say I gained 8 pounds during the first month of the Reagan administration, and this year I'm staying on an even keel. I'm not gaining and I'm not losing."

No one is complaining about George and Barbara Bush, who are popular and energetic hosts. But times have changed. The Reagans are basking in the golden West, and the grande dames of society have gone the way of dance cards and white gloves. The nights belong to the nouveau riche whose ideas of fun is throwing a charity ball.

WHEN BUSH took office, everyone eagerly awaited the emergence of Georgette Mosbacher, wife of Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, as Washington's hostess with the mostest.

But Mrs. Mosbacher, perhaps wary of dipping her toe in the shark pool, stayed in New York to run her cosmetics business. The other prime candidate, Penne Korth, a Bush pal from Texas who co-chaired his inaugural, shipped out as ambassador to Mauritius.

"It's as though somebody unplugged the Jacuzzi and we were all sitting there wet and waiting for the action to start," said society columnist Diana McLellan. "The whole feeling of the city has changed enormously."

What's different is that the epicenter of the capital's social life has shifted to the White House, where the gregarious, fun-loving Bushes are setting the pace with their own parties, receptions and "y'all come on over" evenings with family and old friends.

"The Bushes know everybody," said Mrs. McLellan. "They've been here a long time, and they know all the players." Mrs. Ikard compares capital society under the Reagans and the Bushes by saying, "It's the difference between a flirtation and courtship and a stable, happy marriage."

Says Gretchen Poston, former social secretary under President Carter: "This is a very serious White House, and they're not going out to dinner parties like the Reagans. The Bushes' focus is on the home."

IT'S A FAR cry from 1981, when the Reagans came to town with a galaxy of social luminaries — the Walter Annenbergs, William French Smiths, Caspar Weinbergers, Charles Z. Wicks — to excite the most jaded partygoers.

Bush, an old Washington hand, ushered in the '90s with a Cabinet full of old, familiar faces. His idea of a surprise was John Sununu, the White House chief of staff and former New Hampshire governor, who is something less than a party animal.

John who? Not even the social set's pricey face-lifts could hide the frowns of dismay.

"The Bushes are well-liked and they entertain in a warm, gracious manner," says Barbara Gamarekian of The New York Times. "But Washington feeds on new faces and personalities, and after eight years of the Reagans, people got tired of guest lists with the same names, over and over again.

"Everyone was looking for a change, and they didn't get it," she said.

IN TRUTH, Washington has grown up. Urban sprawl is rampant. Traffic is getting impossible. Distant cow pastures have been bulldozed for million-dollar mansions. Tiffany, the jewel of New York's Fifth Avenue, has branched into a suburban Virginia shopping mall.

Long gone is the sleepy Southern town where the old-money doyennes of high society entertained a small circle of friends at lavish dinner parties sprinkled with senators, Cabinet members, diplomats and Olympian newspaper pundits.

Nobody has filled the vacuum left by the late Perle Mesta and Gwendolyn Cafritz, the legendary Washington hostesses who made headlines by catering to the powerful. Today's career-minded congressional and Cabinet wives show little interest in playing the hostess game.

"The reason things are so dull is that nobody has come to town with the ambition to rise above the crowd and fill that role," said society watcher Charlotte Hays of The Washington Times.

THE HOTTEST invitation in town these days arrives in a White House envelope, or in a casual telephone call from George or Barbara Bush.

"Everyone wants to be on the guest list for those very small, very intimate parties that the Bushes give every month or so," he said. "They invite about 30 people over for a light buffet supper and a movie. There's almost a family feeling, with the Bushes walking around greeting each guest."

Those invited represent an eclectic mix of society figures, corporate executives, political insiders, Bush children, old Texas friends, a few media types and an occasional celebrity.

"The Bush circle seems endlessly expansive. There is no Bush clique — it just seems to go on and on," said Mrs. Ikard, who was a guest at Bush's recent state dinner for Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez.

Mrs. Ikard recalls past presidents who shunned outsiders.

"The Carters had their inner circle of Georgians. The Reagans had the Californians, and never invited anyone up to the family quarters on the third floor. Camelot was strictly for the Kennedy people. Either you were in or you were out," she said.

BUSH DOESN'T seem to have an "A list" of social favorites that appear regularly on White House guest lists. But his inner circle, if there is one, probably would include such unfamiliar names as Russell Train, John E. Chapoton, Fred Zeder and Dean Burch.

Train is chairman of the World Wildlife Fund. Chapoton is a Washington lawyer and former chief tax official at the Reagan Treasury. Zeder is chairman of the Overseas Private Investment Corp. Burch is director general of Intelsat and a former Republican speechwriter.

Bush delights in asking out-of-town guests to spend the night at the White House if a party is running late. He sometimes takes a snapshot of them lying on Lincoln's bed.

Among those who have taken toothbrushes and pajamas upstairs in the Bush White House are Kentucky horse breeder Will Farish, Hollywood producer Jerry Weintraub and Baine Kerr, executive committee chairman of Pennzoil.

Old Bush friend Jack Steele of Houston was so awed during his sleepover in the Lincoln Bedroom that he stayed up gazing at the Washington Monument and writing notes at the desk where Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation.

Bush also actively courts the friendship of show business celebrities. Recent guests at the White House or Camp David have included muscleman and actor Arnold Schwarzenegger and entertainer Michael Jackson.

A DEVOTED fan of country music and the movies, Bush invited Jimmy Dean and the Gatlin Brothers to join him as weekend guests for a screening of "Coupe de Ville" at the presidential retreat in the Catoctin mountains of western Maryland.

The president's movie fare is as diverse as his choice of friends. In recent months, while scooping up handfuls of popcorn from silver bowls, he has seen "Scandal," "Field of Dreams," "The Hunt for Red October," "The Fabulous Baker Boys," "Naked Gun" and "Stella," as well as Oscar winner "Driving Miss Daisy" and nominees "Glory," and "My Left Foot."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your financial prospects will improve dramatically. By August, you can splurge a little without guilt. Your on-the-job efforts begin to pay off in October. A December vacation will bring happy encounters and sweet romance. An important project can be completed in January 1991.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: quarterback Joe Montana, actor Gene Wilder, oceanographer Jacques Cousteau, actress Adrienne Barbeau.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A gift of money arrives unexpectedly. Be sure you have adequate home owner's insurance. Business expansion is favored now. Forgive and forget past disappointments if trying to rejuvenate a relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Fresh starts enjoy favorable influences. Your best rapport could be with a former school chum. A new business venture will provide greater financial security. Things begin to shape up fast in romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Partnerships are in the spotlight. Improve your work environment and productivity will rise. What other people do today will have a direct bearing on your plans.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Gather more information before making a financial decision. Someone close to you should learn to be thrifty. An idea you have put on hold should be promoted. Love sparkles with a Taurus or Libra.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A misunderstanding can be straightened out. Put personalities aside and stick to the facts. A correct decision may be difficult to reach. Your evening plans could change at the last minute.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Others are happy to follow your lead in business. Blowing your own horn will pay off handsomely! Your exceptional understanding of people is a boon to collaborative ventures. Romance is favored.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Steer clear of your friends' financial entanglements. Boredom could lead you to act out of character. An associate's entertainment idea could prove too expensive. Spend the evening at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New doors are opening to you. Fulfill your promises to old friends. A community project will keep you on the move this afternoon or evening. Learn to adapt to changing situations.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Deception is possible today. Keep your eyes open. Stash extra cash in the bank. Romance may not live up to your expectations. Secrecy can be helpful when dealing with influential people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Prominent people make themselves available. Someone who feels competitive could make unfriendly comments. Be pleasant, but keep your distance. An old friend offers some wonderful advice; follow it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Family members could be difficult to please. Humor them! Romance takes an exciting turn. You feel in love with love. Afternoon is the best time to ask a friend or relative for a favor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Meet your obligations on time. Any mistakes should be corrected at the earliest opportunity. Go over financial records carefully. You need to handle a sensitive colleague with more diplomacy.

GOREN BRIDGE

With Omar Sharif and Tannah Hirsch

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠75 ♡Q6 ◇J83 ♣KQJ762
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—Whether you play two-over-one as a game force or not makes no difference here. You respond two clubs and rebid three clubs at your next turn. That switches off the two-over-one game force and says that you have an invitational hand with a good club suit.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J9 ♡A832 ◇A76 ♣A1065
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—North almost surely has six spades on this auction and you want to be in game. It is a close decision between three no trump and four spades. We opt for three no trump—this could easily be one of those hands where you can make nine tricks but not 10.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK8 ♡A984 ◇AK6 ♣K73
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Your opening two no trump is all prime and you have excellent spade support. You can convey all this to partner by cue-bidding four diamonds now.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ3 ♡AQ72 ◇95 ♣A762
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—Whether you play four- or five-card majors, the answer is the same. Bid two clubs. Why not jump raise partner's suit to three spades? Because that promises four-card support. Why not respond two hearts, your stronger four-card suit? Because that promises a five-card suit.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ97 ♡A ◇AKQJ95 ♣J3
What is your opening bid?
A.—If you play strong two-bids, by all means open two diamonds on this four-loser hand rich in playing tricks. But if you play weak two-bids with two clubs as your only force, open one diamond. Why? After a two-club opening, you won't be able to start describing this hand until the three-level, which could propel you past what might be your only makable contract of three no trump.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠985 ♡AK763 ◇K5 ♣KJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What do you bid now?
A.—Your shape would be described perfectly by a no-trump rebid, but you can't afford that action without a spade stopper. And you can't raise partner's suit with a doubleton. That leaves only two hearts. When partner's response has consumed all or most of your bidding space, a rebid of your major does not promise a six-card suit.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Comedian Flip Wilson gave his tickets to a Portland Trail Blazers basketball playoff game to a hotel cleaning woman after deciding she was "one of the biggest Blazer fans that ever lived."

Wilson

Wilson, here for the Rose Festival, paid scalpers prices for a pair of tickets to Tuesday's game. But during the course of his stay at the Marriott Hotel, he struck up a friendship with Carolyn Bell.

"I ran into her in the lobby, and she said, 'You did buy a Blazer shirt this morning, didn't you?' I said, 'Yes, I did.' Then she said, 'Well, if you've got a Blazers shirt, you're supposed to have it on.'

"In my opinion that lady must be one of the biggest Blazer fans that ever lived," Wilson said. "If I went to the game, I don't know who I'd be yelling for, so I thought it was worth the money to send the lady to the game."

Bell said she and her husband, Clarence, had not been to a Trail Blazers game in four years.

"I don't know where the seats are and I don't care," she said. "They're inside the building. I still don't believe it."

Portland is playing the defending champion Detroit Pistons in the NBA finals.

LONDON (AP) — The most precious gems among Britain's crown jewels were hidden in a lake at Windsor Castle during World War II to keep them out of German hands if the country was invaded, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Sunday Telegraph said the only people who knew of the hiding place were King George VI, who chose it, and Sir Owen Morshead, his librarian.

The king, father of Queen Elizabeth II, died in 1952 and Morshead in 1977.

The newspaper said that in 1940, when a German invasion was anticipated, the king ordered the royal jewelers to take the gems from the Tower of London to Windsor Castle, about 20 miles west of London.

The king and Morshead then wrenched the most important gems out of their settings with pliers and other tools provided by a chauffeur, according to the newspaper.

"The gems, including the Koh-i-Noor diamond, were then wrapped in cotton wool, placed in a tin and submerged in one of the lakes at Windsor. There they remained until the defeat of Germany and for a long time only the king and Sir Owen knew," wrote the newspaper's anonymous columnist, Mandrake.

The Koh-i-Noor is an Indian diamond of 108 carats presented to Queen Victoria in 1849. Its name means Mountain of Light.

The wartime hiding place of the jewels, which today are on public display at the Tower of London, has always been a mystery in Britain.

But the Sunday Telegraph said it had discovered that the facts were revealed in 1972 in a book that was never translated from French — a biography of the military leader Jean-Marie Lattre de Tassigny by his widow, Simonne.

The newspaper said it was told of the story by Lattre de Tassigny's British aide, John Saint-Clair Smallwood, who said he accompanied the general and his wife on a visit to Windsor in 1949 at Morshead's invitation. Smallwood said Morshead related the secret to them as they gazed out of the castle windows onto the grounds where there was a round pond.

VINCENNES, Ind. (AP) — Retired Army Gen. William Westmoreland led a parade honoring the American flag and took the opportunity to blast those who want the right to burn it.

Westmoreland

In comments a day before the Knox County Flag Day Celebration, Westmoreland called flag burners "people who do unusual things" to attract attention.

Westmoreland said he didn't think anyone has the right to desecrate the flag, but those that do should be ignored.

Saint James

Saint James, who lives in Litchfield, had an 8-pound, 14-ounce boy at about 10:30 a.m., said spokesman hospital Richard Bisi. Both mother and child were doing fine, he said.

Saint James, 43, has a long career as a television actress. Most recently, she co-starred with Jane Curtin on CBS' situation comedy, "Kate and Allie." She starred in "McMillan and Wife" with Rock Hudson from 1971-1977.

Equal access rule sets boundaries

While the ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that student religious groups cannot be denied access to meet in public secondary schools may fall far short of what some Americans would have preferred, it did remedy a mistaken impression that had resulted from previous court rulings on the separation of church and state.

The ruling, issued last week, said in effect that any public secondary school that allows other clubs and organizations the use of their facilities for meetings during times not reserved for class cannot deny the same access to religious groups. The Equal Access Act, said the court, means that public schools can't discriminate against groups either because they have a religious orientation or do not.

Although some Midlanders have pointed out, even prior to the ruling, that the Equal Access Act also means that school districts cannot refuse undesirable groups such as the Nazis use of facilities, that likely is a matter on which the court eventually would have to rule. It's entirely possible that on the basis of their prior disruptive activities, some groups could be denied access.

But that is hunting for problems to solve before they arise and is better left to the future.

For now, the court ruling clearly reaffirms that religion, a part of the fabric from which our society is woven, definitely does have a place in the public schools. Of course, that place isn't evangelizing or espousing denominational dogma. But neither is the answer removing an important element in the glue that holds our society together. Tragically, that seemed the consequence in the 27 years since the Supreme Court banned compulsory prayer in public schools in a suit filed by atheist leader Madalyn Murray O'Hair.

From past rulings, we know that a state-sanctioned dogma on religion cannot be spoon-fed to students and that students may participate in meetings by student-led religious groups on campus outside regular classroom times. It's the area between those "poles" that promises more court-haggling.

In the next several years there likely will be more cases involving church versus state questions appearing before the court as it attempts to better define the boundaries of acceptability.

Gas tax used to paint falsehood

The federal gasoline tax is always among the first things mentioned when Washington talks about "revenue enhancement," and frankly, an increase in the gasoline levy makes a certain amount of sense — but not until the Bush administration agrees to quit using money acquired in that fashion to make the federal deficit look smaller.

The problem, to quote from an Associated Press story, is that "your highway dollars are at work in Washington, but they're not necessarily building roads and bridges."

What they are building is a false picture of the amount of money in the federal Treasury, and no increase in gasoline taxes should even be considered ... until that practice is stopped.

The highway account of the Federal Highway Trust Fund takes in between $13 billion and $14 billion a year from the gasoline tax. ... Part of the fund is used for mass-transit projects and the rest is supposed to be spent on building and maintaining highways.

Those were the rules laid down in the Federal-Aid Highway act of 1956... That law specified that 75 percent to 90 percent of money collected through the federal gasoline tax be used to reimburse states for work done on highways.

Unfortunately, it does not work that way these days. ... The Highway Trust Fund is being hoarded to make it look as if the government has more money than it really does.

As a result, states are reluctant to undertake highway maintenance projects, no matter how sorely they are needed, because they have no guarantee when — or even if — they will be reimbursed.

That is an intolerable situation, one that would be made even more so should the taxes that finance the Highway Trust Fund be increased. ...

Hobby's 'last-hurrah' more like death march

This was supposed to be Bill Hobby's last-hurrah sort of year, with plenty of opportunity for the lieutenant governor to collect all the huzzas and hoopla and honors that mark the end of a long and distinguished career in office. Hobby is finishing up 18 years as lieutenant governor and is not seeking re-election.

But what a long pull, what a draggletail, never-ending, frustrating year it has been for Hobby and the other Texas legislators who have sat through three marathon special sessions on school-finance reform and are now facing the prospect of a fourth special session on that subject.

This looks less like a last hurrah and more like a death march. If the lieutenant governor hadn't planned to quit already, it would surely be foremost on his mind after this legislative nightmare. Last hurrah? A bout of hog cholera would be as much fun.

Despite vote, Burma slow to change

WASHINGTON — The worldwide wave of democracy swept over Burma last month, leaving behind a testament to the human spirit.

Anderson

The people of Burma wanted to vote, and they did, against all odds. Burma's military government did everything imaginable to rig the election. Opposition leaders were jailed. Gatherings of more than four people were outlawed. Campaign speeches were censored. The military launched a downtown "beautification" project in Rangoon, not to spruce things up but to widen the sidewalks so police would have quick access to demonstrators. The military bulldozed homes, forcing the people to move to the countryside where voting would be more difficult.

Given that prelude, the Burmese election should have been a sham. But the people raised their fists and voted out the military regime that had turned Burma in to one of the poorest nations in the world. What was once the "world's rice bowl" has become the world's heroin pit.

The military says it will honor the results of the election and turn the reins over to the newly elected National League for Democracy. But the brave people of Burma will have to hang on for a while longer. The military says it will not relinquish power until a new constitution is drafted, and that could take as long as two years.

On the eve of the election, our associate Jim Lynch traveled to the tense Burma-Thailand border and spoke to a leader of the democratic resistance, Ate Saung. Like many of the rebels camped on the border, Saung was sweating out a bout of malaria.

He had no notion of how the election would turn out and no hope of a peaceful settlement with the military no matter what the outcome at the polls. Saung said the resistance lost its best chance to topple the military by force when the Burmese government was running out of money and bullets last year. But the Thai government and Thai business people intervened to prop up the military with a business deal.

Thailand has logged its own forests to death, and in late 1988 negotiated the rights to cut Burma's lucrative teak forests. Teak sales to Thailand last year were what refueled the Burmese military. Chinese, Indian and Japanese logging interests are also reportedly scalping Burma's lush hillsides.

Part of the deal with Thailand was to trade in human flesh, too — the return of Burmese refugees hiding out in Thailand in trade for more logging rights. Arms for hostages shocked the United States, but logs for refugees didn't faze most of the Thai people.

Now, the fighting in Burma goes something like this: The military marches brazenly into a resistance camp. There is a brief skirmish before the rebels run out of bullets. "We fight, and we run away," Saung said.

Is there any outside help for the resistance? Congress talks of boycotting Burmese products, but it is just talk. And while the talk goes on, some U.S. firms are buying oil rights in Burma and other American businesses peddle their wares there.

Saung sent a message back to Congress and the White House: "They should recognize that this military regime is really repressive. The people are justified to get rid of it. They should stand beside the people of Burma."

UNGUIDED MISSILE — Boris Yeltsin is either the last best hope for the Soviet Union or its ultimate destroyer. The newly elected president of the Russian Republic is at loggerheads with Mikhail Gorbachev, and is so popular that he is in a position to do Gorbachev some serious damage. We met Yeltsin last year in Moscow and sized him up as an unguided missile whose warheads could strike anywhere. He wants to see the breakup of the Soviet federation into a loose confederation of republics. And he wants the laws of each republic to supersede the laws of the union. Yeltsin even wants the Russian Republic to have its own seat in the United Nations. The last thing Gorbachev needs now is Yeltsin's fast-forward approach to perestroika.

CHARLEY REESE

Crimes against humanity sad commentary

Barbarism is in the eye of the beholder. Typically, we can easily see the barbarism of others while totally ignoring or rationalizing our own.

We rightly condemn terrorism for inflicting death and injury on civilians. In fact, we call it a crime.

But the morality is not that simple, for we make, like lawyers, fine distinctions between deaths of some civilians and the deaths of other civilians.

An American officer in the Vietnam War was prosecuted for participating with his company in the shooting deaths of about 100 civilians. It was called a massacre. But if the same 100 civilians had been killed by bombing or artillery barrage, their deaths would have been simply classified as "incidental" civilian casualties and no one would have been criticized, much less charged with a crime.

It goes without saying, of course, that the victors not only write the history books, they also decide who is the hero and who is the war criminal. If Japan had somehow emerged the victor in World War II then Harry Truman and many other Americans would have been tried for crimes against humanity, not only for dropping the atomic bombs on two cities but for also ordering the systematic destruction of many Japanese cities with incendiary bombs. The firestorm created in Tokyo by these incendiary attacks was actually more lethal than either of the atomic bombs.

Ironically the concept of strategic bombing of cities originated with the British, whom we generally regard as among the most genteel and civilized of people. It is a fact — and this is no attempt to avoid evil of the Nazis — that it was the British who first launched area bombing attacks in World War II against a city while the original German intention had been to attack the RAF bases preparatory to an invasion.

The cost of strategic bombing can be seen in the case of Munich, Germany, which received about 70 Allied bomber attacks. It's true that industrial capability was the military justification for the raids.

But 6,000 civilians were killed; 15,000 civilians were wounded; 12,000 were listed as missing; 265,000 were rendered homeless; 108 of 206 churches and chapels were destroyed or heavily damaged; 40 percent of all office buildings; and 50 percent of all hospitals, clinics and schools.

In fact for the first time civilian casualties in World War II exceeded military casualties by a ratio of about 10 to 1. Moreover the concept of strategic bombing remains firmly entrenched among all the governments of the world. The nuclear warhead is the creme de la creme of strategic bombing. When those are used, the ratio of non-combatant casualties to military casualties will run in the hundreds to one.

I write this as a sad commentary on human beings, myself included, and not as a self-righteous judgment. I am as guilty as anyone else of rationalizing barbarity. I have stoutly condemned, to cite just one example, terrorist attacks by Palestinians and just as stoutly defended retaliatory bombing raids by the Israelis. Yet if your child is killed, what difference does it make if it is by a bullet or bomb? Is one child less innocent than another? Are people in the vicinity of a terrorist raid any more terrified than people on the receiving end of a bombing attack?

My generally harsh attitude toward politicians is based on the fact that the millions who died in this century and those who continue to die and those who will die, die because of the venality, the stupidity, or the faulty judgment of politicians.

No soldier leaves his barracks, no plane flies, no bomb falls, no missile engine ignites, no firing squads form, until the politicians and the diplomats have set them all in motion.

If you hate war, if you value life, then pay attention to domestic politics. Politics is always pregnant with war and death.

Is this Moscow's (in)convenience store?

Welcome to the first convenience store in Moscow, the 7-11ski.

"May I help you with something, Comrade?"

"Yes, where are your Twinkies?"

"Your papers, please."

"My papers?"

"Your passport, Comrade."

"I didn't come in here to take a trip. I just want some Twinkies."

"I'm sorry, but I must insist. Under the new measures to privatize the economy, the government insists I make certain you are a Muscovite and not some out-of-towner here to strip my shelves bare."

Grizzard

"OK, then, here it is. Boris Brezhnev, 117 Borscht Boulevard."

"Any relation to THE Brezhnevs?"

"My mother married Leonid's second cousin."

"Your papers seem to be in order. Now, you were inquiring about the Twinkies?"

"Yes."

"I'm sorry, but I don't have any Twinkies. The shipment from the West was hijacked by Lithuanian extremists bent on revenge for President Gorbachev cutting off their gas supply."

"Tattoo Head sticks it to us again."

"Who, Comrade?"

"Tattoo Head. Silly Scalp. Daffy Dome."

"Be careful, Comrade. The night has a thousand eyes."

"The KGB can eat my shorts. And they may have to. OK, I'll just take some Fritos and bean dip."

"No Fritos."

"What happened to them?"

"Before the new measures were passed, an out-of-towner came in and bought them all."

"That's all we needed, the Frito Bandito in the Soviet Union. How about the dip?"

"You mean my son-in-law, Dimitri? He doesn't come in until 5."

"No, I mean the bean dip. I'll just have that."

"Figures. OK, then where is your bologna?"

"In Italy."

"You got a can of Spam?"

"No Spam."

"Then how about some cheese spread and a box of saltine crackers?"

"I may have a couple of beets and one potato over where you would usually find the chicken noodle soup."

"You're out of chicken noodle?"

"Split pea, too."

"Let me see if I have this straight: You've opened a convenience store and all you've got for me to buy is a couple of beets and one lousy potato?"

"There are a couple of copies of the Enquirer left over at the magazine rack."

"I can't eat that."

"Fine. I'll have a Coke."

"No Coke. Just Pepsi."

"Where have I heard that before?"

"Beats me."

"Forget the beets. I'll have the potato. Got any toilet paper?"

"Got the Enquirer."

"Sold."

Bush, Salinas lay groundwork for bilateral trade agreement

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush dined privately with Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari at the White House Sunday night and laid the groundwork for formal negotiations to lift trade barriers between the two countries.

A White House spokesman said both presidents believe their countries would "derive substantial and long-term benefits" from a trade pact.

The statement by White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater stopped short of announcing the start of formal negotiations to forge a free trade pact, but administration officials said they expect that announcement to come Monday.

Both presidents declined to answer reporters' questions about free trade as they posed for photographers on the mansion's North Portico facing Pennsylvania Avenue.

They went inside for a reception with top U.S. and Mexican economic officials, including, on the U.S. side, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, trade representative Carla Hills, national security adviser Brent Scowcroft and Vice President Dan Quayle.

Later, they dined alone in their second White House meeting in less than nine months.

Salinas, who is in the United States on a private visit to address the Business Roundtable, will meet with Secretary of State James Baker III and members of Congress on Monday, and will resume "consultations on the free trade issue" in those meetings, Fitzwater said.

Summing up the presidents' private meeting, Fitzwater said: "Both leaders believe that the United States and Mexico would derive substantial and long-term benefits from a comprehensive bilateral trade agreement. They agreed that bilateral efforts to maximize trade and investment opportunities can and should complement the trade liberalization achieved in the Uruguay Round of the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade)."

They also discussed the recent superpower summit, the fight against drug trafficking and other issues. Bush reiterated the U.S. desire for "close cooperation with Mexican authorities" in the drug fight, said Fitzwater.

Administration officials said beforehand that the Bush-Salinas meeting would be followed by a formal announcement on Monday of negotiations to create a free trade pact. The officials asked not to be identified.

Bush earlier Sunday declined to predict how long it might take to achieve a free trade agreement with Mexico.

"I want to talk to him first before I can say on that," Bush told reporters as he walked off the golf course at Andrews AFB in suburban Maryland earlier Sunday. But he called the meeting with Salinas "very important."

If successful, the trade negotiations could bring all of North America — 335 million people — into a single market free of tariffs and other barriers to trade. The United States and Canada entered a free trade agreement two years ago.

Bush has close ties with Salinas, who paid a formal state visit to the White House last Oct. 3. This time, their get-together was an informal one, with the two presidents dining without aides present.

Preparatory trade discussions are expected to begin shortly with an eye toward launching the formal negotiations before Bush and Salinas next meet in Monterrey in December.

Texas lawmaker sponsors protection bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Animal rights protesters who attack farms or research labs could spend up to three years in federal prison under a bill being considered this week by the House Agriculture Committee.

"I want to emphasize that this bill deals only with terrorist acts," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, sponsor of the measure. "It brings the full weight of our laws against the extremists who have gotten out of control."

The Farm Animal and Research Facilities Protection Act is scheduled for a committee vote Thursday. Stenholm wants it included in the 1990 farm bill.

The measure applies to facilities or premises where an animal is kept for food, agriculture, research, testing or education.

It makes it a federal crime to:

—Disrupt the activities of the premises.

—Steal or damage property or animals.

—Enter a facility with the intent to commit a violation.

—Remain in a facility despite notice that entry was forbidden.

Violators could be fined up to $10,000 and jailed for up to three years, or both.

Any person harmed by a violation may recover damages and court costs.

Stenholm's office released a list of 91 incidents between 1981 and last January, ranging from bomb threats and trespassing to break-ins and arson, that were linked to groups associated with the animal rights movement.

Most were associated with the Animal Liberation Front, also known as Band of Mercy or Animal Liberators.

Legislation similar to Stenholm's was approved by the Senate last November. Under that bill, violators could be fined up to $5,000 and jailed for up to one year, or both, unless a person is harmed by the protest.

Last year Americans spent $17,035,220,000.00† to protect themselves.

Ship's mishap cancels cruise

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — Hundreds of cruise ship passengers had to be ferried ashore Sunday after the ship ran aground in heavy fog and began taking on water, but no injuries were reported.

The 617-foot Bermuda Star's hull was holed in two places when it slammed into submerged rocks about two miles from this village seaport on the southwestern tip of Cape Cod, the Coast Guard reported.

None of the 680 passengers or 380 crew members was ever in danger, said Coast Guard Lt. Peter Keane. "There was no panic on board," Keane said.

Leakage was stabilized because the vessel was holding steady on the rocks, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Greg Creedon. Flooding aboard the ship was under control by midday.

The accident canceled the cruise, but was considered relatively minor. "This is a kind of fender-bender for the marine world," Creedon said.

Barry to abandon bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry, on trial for alleged perjury and drug use, is expected to announce Monday that he will not seek re-election, sources close to Barry said Sunday.

Barry, 54, has told advisers he will abandon his hopes for a fourth, four-year term in an effort to restart stalled plea-bargain talks in his cocaine possession and perjury case.

"He knows that his re-election plans represent one of his best bargaining chips," said one source familiar with Barry's thinking. "This is a move he hopes will break the logjam around the plea talks."

The mayor has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor cocaine possession charges, one misdemeanor cocaine conspiracy charge, and three felony counts of lying to a grand jury about his alleged drug use.

Crude reaches beach

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Tar balls from a major oil spill washed up on a New Jersey beach about 25 miles away Sunday, but the Coast Guard increased its estimate of how much oil will be recovered.

A significant quantity of tar balls hit about a mile of Sandy Hook beach on Sunday, said Manny Strumpf, a spokesman for the Gateway National Recreation Area.

Coast Guard Capt. Robert North said the cleanup will recover more than half the 260,000 gallons that leaked Thursday from a British tanker.

Pizza going high-tech

NEW YORK (AP) — Pizza makers are slinging the high-tech pie of the 1990s across America — nitrogen-frozen, credit-card ordered via satellite and with pineapple and bacon on top.

The state-of-the-art pizza methods — all already in use — were touted over the weekend at the National Pizza and Fast Food Show in Manhattan, where the American version of the Italian dish was introduced in 1895.

"There's a re-emergence of upscale, deep-pan pizza with varied toppings," said Charlie Bowen, director of sales and marketing for Lucks, a Seattle-based oven manufacturer. "The pizza nuked in two seconds is not what people are looking for."

The traditional stainless-steel oven will take pizza into the next millennium, said Bowen, rather than the newest conveyor-belt oven baking 70 pizzas per hour.

And, from Murray Hill, N.J., Airco uses liquid nitrogen to chill out the forgetful pizza lover who otherwise might reach into the freezer past a pizza's prime.

To quick freeze a pie, liquid nitrogen at minus 320 degrees is sprayed on a pizza for several minutes, said a company spokesman.

Rappers free on bond after 'arresting' performance

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A rap group kept its promise to sing lyrics from an album ruled obscene and authorities kept their word, arresting two members of 2 Live Crew on Sunday after an adults-only concert.

The early-morning arrests came four days after a federal judge declared obscene the Miami group's album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be," and two days after a local record dealer was arrested for selling the popular recording.

Broward County sheriff's deputies arrested 2 Live Crew leader Luther Campbell, 29, and singer Chris Wongwon, 26, shortly after the show at a Hollywood nightclub.

"We didn't want to create any commotion in there, so I told them to let them get out of there and arrest them away from the premises," said Sheriff Nick Navarro, who has led a campaign to ban sales of the group's records.

Deputies pulled over the rappers' limousine a couple of blocks away from the club, said sheriff's spokesman Al Gordon.

Only Campbell and Wongwon were taken because the group split up after the performance, heading in different directions in three vehicles, Gordon said.

Campbell and Wongwon were booked at the Broward County Jail on the misdemeanor charge of violating a prohibition against obscene performances. The charges were based on the group's performance of material from the album, which has sold more than 1.7 million copies.

They were freed without bond. No court appearance was set.

About 15 police officers and 300 fans were on hand Saturday night as the rappers performed an early show for patrons of all ages at Hollywood's Club Futura. At that show the group performed what it calls the "clean" version of the album's songs, omitting the controversial lyrics. Many of the young concert-goers shouted the "nasty" lyrics themselves.

About 400 people showed up for the later, adults-only "nasty" set early Sunday.

Old hotel repository for Rankin's history

Story By Ed Todd

There may not be ghosts rummaging around upstairs in the closed-off quarters of the old Yates Hotel. But tales abound.

The hotel, a spinoff of rancher Ira Yates' gushing fortune from the prolific Yates Oil Field south of here, has long since closed. For the last 15 years, it has been a museum that reflects Rankin's ranching, railroading, farming, and oil-well drilling periods — booms and busts.

The wind stirs around in the museum and gives rise to the story of ghosts.

"I tell the (school) kids that, and their eyes get as big as (silver) dollars," said Helen Hurst, museum curator. The story about ghosts is "just a figment of my imagination," she confessed, but the true tales aren't.

One particular tale came about in the winter of 1928 when two alleged bandits, turned bank burglars, were shotgunned to death by lawmen waiting outside the Rankin State Bank.

"Throw up your hands!" the Upton County Sheriff, J.O. "Bud" Barfield, had warned before the outlaws and lawmen began exchanging gunfire.

Texas Air Races attract thousands

SHERMAN (AP) — Unlimited air class racing and aerobatics demonstrations drew thousands of spectators to the Texas Air Races at Grayson County Airport here.

Between 7,000 and 10,000 people were expected to watch the final day of races Sunday, when winners from Saturday's bronze, silver, and gold races were to be tested by 15 other pilots for places in the winner's circle.

About 7,000 spectators packed the area behind the airport terminal Saturday for the first day of the races, said Becky Powell, Texas Air Races spokeswoman.

"The weather conditions were perfect," Ms. Powell told the Sherman Democrat.

The national competition was formerly held in Reno, Nev., she said.

"We were very pleased with the crowd," Ms. Powell said. "The pilots were very happy. We encouraged people to come out (Sunday) for the finals."

Pilots were to begin unlimited practice at 9:30 a.m. Sunday, and an aerobatics demonstration was to follow the practice flights at 11:10 a.m. The first races, including the bronze unlimited, were scheduled to start at 11:30 a.m. said Ms. Powell.

She said aerobatics events were also scheduled between the bronze and silver races and a silver and gold event. The silver unlimited race was to get under way at 1 p.m., with the gold unlimited race to begin at 2:30 p.m.

Officials said Steve Hinton, a pilot from Chino, Calif., took the gold honors Saturday with a speed of 369.963 mph. Bill DeStefani and John Putnam, both of Bakersfield, Calif., finished second and third in the gold race.

The weather was ideal for this weekend's Texas Air Races at Grayson County airport near Denison. Above, spectators get a closer look at modified military P-51's.

Border-to-border race a first for Texas

JEFFERSON (AP) — Hundreds of bicyclists will make history as they traverse Texas in six days in the state's first-ever border-to-border bicycle rally.

Called "Seabreeze to Pine Trees," the 450-mile Texas Chainring Challenge will take the cyclists from Boilivar Peninsula through scenic East Texas.

The tour will end in historic Jefferson with a town-sponsored end-of-the ride party.

HOTEL: West Texas' ranching history preserved

(From 1B)

Dead were W.M. Miller and a fellow called "Whitey." Both, the story goes, fitted the description of a couple of bandits who had held up the Sylvester bank.

Three years later, in 1931, Barfield, by then the ex-sheriff; Clarence Shannon, a former deputy sheriff, and former McCamey Police Chief Hugh Gillespie were indicted and jailed for the slayings to collect the Texas Bankers Association's $5,000 "dead bank-bandit" reward which, in the Rankin case, totaled $10,000.

Supposedly, the bank heist was a set-up deal, a "planted" scene, similar to the ones over at Stanton and Odessa, to collect dead bank-bandit rewards.

Texas Ranger Frank Hamer had testified before the grand jury just before the indictments came down in June of 1931. But before year's end, the charges were dismissed. Still, the story lives on.

"Back then, there was a bounty in Texas on bank robbers," reflected Joe Salman, who was going on 5 years old on Jan. 12, 1928, when the Rankin bank shootings occurred. "If you caught a bank robber dead or alive, you could collect a certain amount ($5,000) of money. That was the law."

That law was changed.

The museum records the really big boom that came to Rankin and environs in 1926 when the Yates Oil Field busted wide open. And Ira Yates, the Pecos County rancher, became a multi-millionaire in no time.

He was 67 then and soon become a legend.

And by the time he was 79 in 1939, when he died, Yates was lauded as a "pioneer West Texan of fabulous wealth, luck and life whose story was one of 'ups' and 'almost downs.'" His story could have come out of a Horatio Alger novel: poverty to riches though hard work, virtuous living, and luck.

Yates "never forget a friend and never was able to discover that any of his friends could do anything wrong."

The Rankin Museum, through words, photographs and artifacts, tells of the founding of the old Upland community, now in ruins and dust, the coming of the Orient Railway, which bypassed Upland, and the re-occurring droughts of the 1910s.

"The town of Upland had not developed as promoters had hoped," wrote Upton County historian N. Ethie Eagleton. "The poor soil, the excessive summer heat, the recurring droughts and the inability of the residents to obtain water for irrigation caused them to drift elsewhere."

Today, about all that's left of Upland, now on the DeWayne Lindsey Ranch north of town, are remains of the Upland Cemetery and the old courthouse and jail.

The railroad, now the Santa Fe, runs through Rankin, which is the county seat associated with ranching and oil, and neighboring McCamey, which was born out of the oil boom of the 1920s. Rankin, a sheep-goat-cattle ranching town, predates the 1923 Santa Rita discovery oil well that triggered big-time petroleum exploration in West Texas.

The museum is not all serious. There's the levity of the one-armed bandits, the slot machines.

Recently, elementary-school children toured the museum and were delighted in pulling the levers and watching the reels spin.

"They were just tickled to death," Mrs. Hurst recalled. "They went home to tell their mothers they had been gambling."

Typical of a rural-ranching community, the museum is well into horse- and mule-drawn farm implements, ranching gear, tack, branding irons, barbed wire, old churns and crocks, hat pins, bullets molds and McGuffey's Eclectic Reader. There's much more: the upright piano, pump organ, pews, Hamp and Gladys Carter's old outhouse, and Duke's Mixture and Bull Durham roll-your-own tobacco bags, pre-World War II Lucky Strike "green" cigarettes, and sketches of national rodeo cowboys Walton Poage and Allen Holder and Upton County rancher Hamp Carter. Then there is what's left of rancher Tyson Midkiff's iron-soled left shoe from his childhood.

"He (Midkiff) said you could hear him coming to church," Mrs. Hurst said. "He couldn't slip in."

There are things as modern as an old cathedral-style radio and an old electric permanent-wave machine that favors a wired-up robot version of mythology's Medusa, a snake-haired Gorgon.

"We've got a little bit of everything," said Mrs. Hurst. And the credit for the preservation of those priceless "things" called artifacts that make up a museum goes to Upton County historian Ann Clark. She is the moving force behind the museum, which came into being in the 1970s, and is the spirit behind sprucing up the old cemetery in this community of 1,200 or fewer people.

"Thank goodness Ann Clark gathered up all of this stuff," Mrs. Hurst said.

Among the stuff, not including the windy ghosts, is the restored 1940 Ford red fire engine with its American-LaFrance body.

"Isn't that pretty?" remarked Donna Bell, a rancher's wife who is a museum board member. "It runs." The old Rankin Volunteer Fire Department engine, long since retired, came into the museum's fold by way of Dr. James Gossett, Rankin's physician, who also donated medical instruments and a birthing table to the museum.

The fire engine is cranked up for hometown parades, which crop up fairly frequently.

"We have a parade for about any occasion," Mrs. Bell said. "In a small town, you can do that."

Veteran shrimper nets gutsy reputation

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The shrimp boats of Corpus Christi's Bayfront harbor sit idly in their slips as shrimpers like Joe Salinas relax after a long day in the bay.

There's nothing unusual about being a shrimper, or being a shrimper who happens also to be a good bowler — unless you've lost an arm and a leg.

Salinas, 52, of Corpus Christi, lost his right arm and leg 27 years ago after touching a high-voltage electrical line.

The accident might have been enough to keep most people confined to their couch, living the life of a TV turnip. But Salinas returned to the strenuous life of a fisherman.

Salinas is captain of the 42-foot shrimp boat, the Sundowner. He's worked for the boat's owner, Jerry Armstrong, for the past three years. But he's worked as a professional fisherman for the past 30 years, he says.

Rather than talk about himself, Salinas prefers talking about fishing or shrimping in the bay or about the problems shrimpers have trying to do their jobs and make a profit.

But most of all he likes to talk about bowling, his favorite sport.

He doesn't talk much about the accident that left him near death.

"I had the accident March 23, 1963," Salinas says, his wooden leg propped on a shelf in the boat's cabin as he sat on a bench, leaning against the bulkhead.

The cabin of the old Sundowner has all the character of The African Queen with Humphrey Bogart at the helm. It is cluttered with boxes, bottles, cans, boots, an old beat-up coffee pot, match books, pocket knives, old tools and a broken clock.

Salinas lights a cigarette and continues the story.

"At 2:30 that afternoon, I was working on an electric high line for Freestone Electrical Construction Co. out of Teague. The line was supposed to be off. I was working about 35 feet up when I reached out to touch the line. All I remember was a flash of fire and the pain," he says.

Salinas was rushed to the nearest hospital emergency room, where the first doctor to examine him thought he was dead. Another doctor examined him and saved his life, rushing him into surgery.

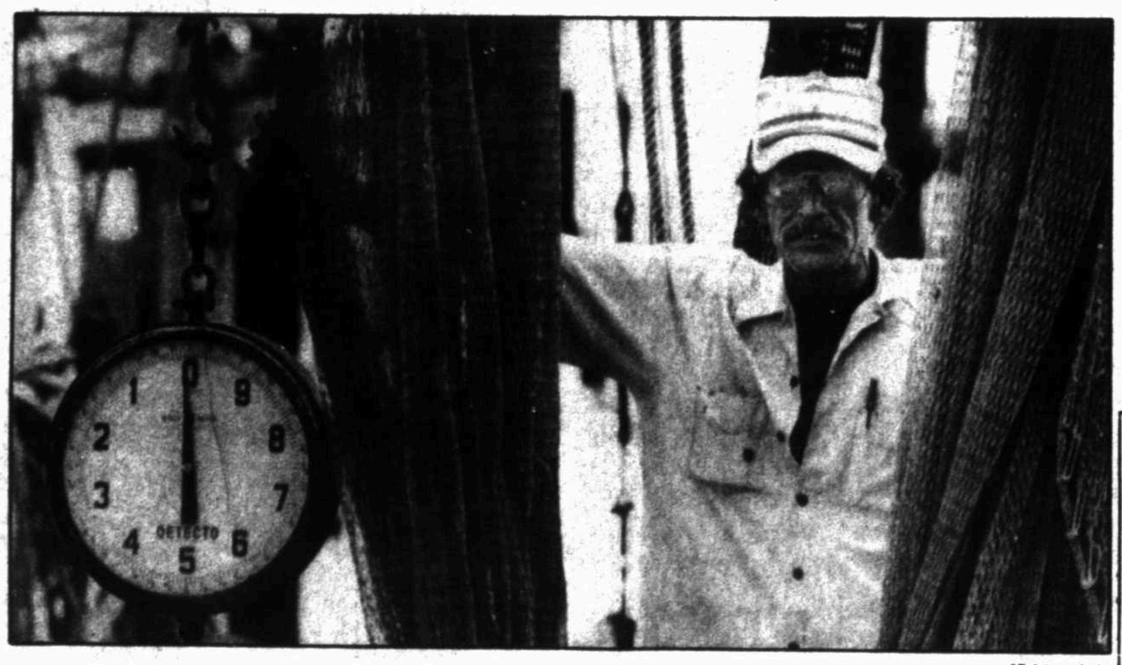
Today, with his buddy Pancho Llamas, he will take a daily catch of between 120 and 135 pounds of shrimp from Corpus Christi Bay, he says.

Armstrong, a tall, weathered retiree wearing black-frame glasses, gray hair and a ready smile, extolls Salinas as "tough, tough as a boot. You know, he's an ex-Marine."

Armstrong shakes his head as he stands on the stern and recounts how he's been in the bay with Salinas when the seas were rough, watching him work the lines with one arm and his teeth.

"I've never seen anything like it. He's gutty — he'll grip a rope in his teeth and tie it off with his right arm."

To challenge the sea demands endurance, strength and courage. But to battle in the bowling league requires different talents: balance, timing and power.



AP Laserphoto

With an average score of 183, Salinas is competitive.

"I started bowling when I was 11 years old," he says. "Me and my brother were pin boys at Ayers Bowling Lane in 1950."

He chuckles at the thought of being a 72-pound kid, handling an automatic pin machine that required 150 pounds of pressure to push it down.

Against the modernistic Corpus Christi skyline, the Sundowner — worn with time and duty — seems an anachronism, a relic of the past tolerated for the nostalgia its presence elicits.

Californian dies in plane crash

MINERAL WELLS (AP) — A California man was killed Sunday after the single-passenger aircraft he was piloting crashed in western Parker County, officials said.

The pilot has been identified as Martin L. Decker, 42, of Yuba City, Calif.

Investigators said Decker was on a confidential experimental flight when his plane went down just after 8 a.m. Sunday. The wreckage was found in a rural area about one mile north of the Mineral Wells Airport.

"There was some sort of experiment involved, but we don't know if it was on the plane or if it was the plane itself," said Jim Towe of the Department of Public Safety.

The single-engine Canard was owned by California-based Litton Applied Technologies, Towe said.

He said the Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the accident.

Dallas mayor said to back Love's limits

DALLAS (AP) — American Airlines appears poised to get what it wants — continued restrictions on flights at Love Field and retention of its dominant position in the Dallas market.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that Mayor Annette Strauss and other council members are on the verge of undoing a resolution that urges Congress to repeal the Wright Amendment and replace it with looser restrictions.

The Wright Amendment is a federal law named after former House Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth. It limits non-stop flights out of city-owned Love Field to Texas and its four bordering states.

The amendment has been challenged unsuccessfully in federal court but still faces opposition in Congress on grounds that it restricts interstate commerce and is unfair to travelers.

Last Sept. 27, Dallas City Council members voted 9-2 to limit flights from Love Field to a 650-mile radius.

Soon afterwards, American's chairman, Robert Crandall, came out fighting. American threatened to delay its $3.5 billion expansion at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport and to shift up to 200 daily flights to the smaller Love Field.

"When you've got a man like Bob Crandall, he doesn't joke," the mayor said. "When he says something, it's because he means it."

Support for the city's resolution began to wane and council members and business people alike started to jump off the bandwagon, said Jerry Bartos, the councilman who cosponsored the measure with Mrs. Strauss.

In a speech Feb. 1 to the North Dallas Chamber of Commerce, Crandall said that forcing American to compete at Love Field as well as at DFW would split its market and reduce its economic vitality.

Even Bartos concedes that people are listening to Crandall's message.

"Until the very last moment, everybody was behind this — until they found out American was against it," Bartos said. "Now it's really turned into a heavyweight bout."

Mrs. Strauss and council member Harriet Miers are preparing a resolution not only to rescind the previous measure but also to reaffirm support for the Wright Amendment.

They say they will present it to the council June 27.

But at least four council members — Bartos, Jim Buerger, Al Lipscomb and Dr. Charles Tandy — say they will not change their previous positions.

"I think we're being held hostage by a certain airline at DFW, and I refuse to be held hostage," Lipscomb said.

Abilene is 'All-American City'

PHOENIX (AP) — Abilene, Texas is among 10 cities in eight states that were proclaimed "All-America Cities" by the National Civic League in ceremonies here Saturday night.

Also chosen were Bakersfield, Calif.; Charlotte, N.C.; Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Hamlet, N.C.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Sioux City, Iowa; Southgate, Calif.; South St. Paul, Minn.; Tampa, Fla.

Delegations from the 10 cities and 20 other finalists gave a 10-minute presentation on Friday, spotlighting three projects the city undertook to show its leadership and cooperation between private and government factions.

That was followed by a 10-minute question-and-answer session with the judging panel. The 41st annual competition, a program of the National Civic League, was sponsored by The Allstate Foundation.

Cities that demonstrate an ability to solve local problems through community leadership, citizen participation, government, civic education and philanthropy are chosen, organizers said.

Abilene showed its push for better health care and, in an effort to boost a sagging economy, lobbied for and was granted a new maximum-security prison.

Coeur d'Alene was cited for its effort in dealing with its racial and economic problems. The presence of a neo-Nazi faction in the almost all-white town led citizens to push for legislation against hate crimes, which was later passed by state lawmakers.

Bakersfield, Calif. talked of efforts to address the teen pregnancy issue and a volunteer group that helps feed the needy in the largely migrant population.

Charlotte, N.C. was given the distinction after presenting its program to provide affordable housing and reliefs efforts after Hurricane Hugo hit the southeast coast last fall.

Hamlet, N.C., the second-smallest town in the competition with 6,640 residents, received the distinction for its efforts to retain its hospital and improve its library.

Harrisburg, Pa. was designated for meeting economic troubles over the past four years.

Sioux City, Iowa put together an emergency contingency plan that came into play last year with the crash of a United Airlines flight headed for Chicago.

Student's 'Internet' network scholarly as well as steamy

HOUSTON (AP) — Homework for some students has become anything but mundane now that personal computers can be used to access a sophisticated pornography ring.

The Houston Chronicle reported in a copyright story Sunday that material found on Internet during a four-month period included hundreds of sexually explicit stories and pictures, intense discussions about freedom of expression and details of underground political strategy.

The tax-supported Internet also offered the scientific exchange it touts as its purpose, the newspaper reported.

Westbury High School student Jeff Noxon, 17, said his homework was rudely interrupted recently when he stumbled across the hi-tech porno setup.

After musing at the novelty of seeing sexually explicit material, Noxon moved on to other studies. He glimpsed only part of an electronic catalog of erotic art and literature that offers titles such as "Cindy's Torment" and "The Education of Rachel."

Although Internet is a capable research tool, it is also an equally efficient purveyor for pornography and an easy target for computer hackers.

The material can be accessed by almost any computer user with equipment common to most personal computers.

"There are a lot of 12-year-olds getting their heads filled with a lot of ideas they're probably not ready for yet," Noxon said.

About 60 miles from the computer in Noxon's bedroom, Internet has helped propel one historically black university to the forefront of high-energy physics.

Prairie View A&M University is working on a crucial element of the superconducting super collider.

Prairie View and other institutions wire their computers together in a network, allowing individual users to share information and expensive resources. Each such network is then connected via phone lines, fiber optics or satellite to other networks, thus allowing the users to work together.

Honor students at Clear Lake High School will be able to access Internet beginning this summer. School officials know about the network's explicit content.

No shirt? No Shoes? No Problem

You don't need all the essentials of proper attire to shop or eat at the small market. You don't even have to have money.

"People call up here right before we're leaving sometimes and ask us to leave something out by the front so they can pick it up later," said store owner Linda Martin.

"It's usually there for them to get. They come in later and take care of the bill."

Being able to leave some bread or fresh tomatoes out on the doorstep is one reason Mrs. Martin and her husband Johnnie decided to move from Tyler in 1977 to the far northern portion of Wood County. Situated about 10 miles away from Winnsboro, Quitman, Yantis and Como, Coke is isolated without being too far out of the way.

School kids go to class in all different directions and the telephone exchange is listed as Sandy Creek. The village might have an identity crisis if not for the store, which would be downtown if there were such a thing.

The country store, with its grill and fresh vegetables, has been in continuous operation since the early 1900's, said Mrs. Martin, who has owned it since 1988.

"I think there have only been about seven or eight owners since it was opened," she said. "It used to be a general store, a long time ago.

It carried shoes, clothes — things like that. A man asked me not too long ago if we were going to start carrying those things again. I said, "Tom, when you drive a horse and buggy into town, then we'll sell what you want."

Clean and uncluttered, the store is stocked with some of the modern necessities of rural living. Gas pumps out front, groceries, plumbing and hardware supplies inside. It conforms to the architectural norm of the early 1900s — long and thin — though it is noticeable for not having anything on either side to constrict its shape. Near the top of the 10-foot high ceilings are two air-conditioners, helped out by old ceiling fans.

The store is housed in a red brick building, the most noticeable building in the small community besides maybe the old school house which now serves as a community center.

Two Farm-to-Market highways converge to make the center of Coke, population somewhere between two dozen and several hundred.

"I'm not sure what Coke covers," said Mrs. Martin when asked the hamlet's population. "If you go a quarter of a mile in any direction, you're out of town. I live right down the road and I'm really out of Coke.

Besides serving a good cup of coffee, 44-year-old waitress Rosa Mendiola provides good conversation. A native of Michigan, Ms. Mendiola has found her calling at the Laredo Truck Stop Restaurant, which serves as many as 600 long-distance truck drivers each week.

Border truck stop illustrates a slice of life on the road

LAREDO (AP) — Juice, two eggs any style, ribeye steak 8 oz., $6.95. "You want anything, sweetheart? — is part of the breakfast menu and pitch as you step out of Laredo's border culture into an enclave for Road Bosses.

Truck Stop Restaurant, a haven for truck drivers from throughout the United States, caters to a minimum of 600 truckers per week. It is one of several such establishments on the north side of town.

Rosa Mendiola, one of the waitresses and a native of Michigan, says she likes the tips and the people. "You find them all. Some are nice. Some are not that nice," said Mendiola, 44, "but looking good."

You do find them all, including John Stradling, 28, of Mountain Grove, Mo., who owns JJJ Transportation in the Show Me State and rarely gets out. In fact, his most recent stay in Laredo will be his last for the year, one of two trips to which he is limited by business responsibilities.

As an independent trucker, Stradling's pet peeve is the property broker. To hear Stradling tell it, the property broker is somewhere near the lower levels of humanity, what with his license to move freight and farming out the transportation to truckers — for a piece of the action, of course.

"There's too many people taking a bite out of the truck. The property broker has no place in our business. Freight rates are cheaper today than they were 10 years ago," Stradling said.

Juan Gomez, a 33-year-old civil engineer from Colombia who has owned Truck Stop Restaurant for three years, says that you can count on at least 200 truckers per day visiting his place.

Gomez says he owns a construction company with Cesario Porras and that about three years ago he and his associate noticed that the trucking industry in Laredo was on the verge of a massive boom so they "rented a truck stop ... decided to go ahead and buy it."

"We've been remodeling since we bought it and changed to a computerized system in the pumps. And we're in the process of building a 36-room hotel," he said.

Amid the bustle of hundreds of truckers entering and leaving, checking in and out, eating, watching TV in a makeshift dayroom, even praying in a small chapel furnished by Truck Stop, Gomez speaks well of his clients.

"Truck drivers are very nice people. A lot of people have the wrong concept of truck drivers. They come to get good service and they pay for that service.

"Life on the road is real tough. So the normal environment for a truck driver is toughness," Gomez said.

"But they are real nice, and if you serve them well, you get the feedback 110 percent," he added.

Yet there are those, who although longtime veterans of the trucking circuit from coast to coast, exude a subdued air, relaxed, content, sipping coffee in preparation for their next runs.

So, too, are Roger Carl, 59, and Ronald Bowen, 56, members of a truck drivers' corps who seem to take things in stride, part of the demeanor, perhaps, of trucking conglomerates whose lives are not hampered by the issues more thorny for small independents.

Carl and Bowen haul edible products, mostly orange juice, for Oakley out of Lakewells, Fla., from Mexico back to their state headquarters.

"I've always had the contention you have to have a bit of the gypsy in you" to be a truck driver, says Carl, who hails from Mount Vernon, Va., and has been a truck driver for more than 26 years.

Bowen, a native of Binghampton, N.Y., has been trucking for 35 years. He began as a driver of dump trucks and went on the road when a neighbor, who owned two automobile carriers, asked him to substitute for a sick employee.

"I've been driving trucks ever since. I like it or I wouldn't be out here. You get to see a lot of country," Bowen said.

"You could say I'm a professional tourist," Carl said.

"I get to see a lot of the most beautiful country in Mexico and Canada and get paid for it.

"I love Mexico. I love the people. If I didn't have children to visit, I would easily live in Mexico," he said.

Larger migrant labor force likely in Red River Valley

CROOKSTON, Minn. (AP) — Raul Torres and his family may be part of a larger-than-normal migrant labor force in the Red River Valley this year, officials say.

Torres didn't call Harold Erdman before bringing his family up to work in Erdman's sugar beet fields this year.

"I don't have to anymore," Torres smiled. "They know I'll be here."

For 20 years, Torres has been traveling from his home in Uvalde, west of San Antonio, Texas, up to this northwestern Minnesota community every spring to weed and thin beet fields with a hoe.

In the past two years, Torres has been among about 5,000 workers, plus perhaps another several thousand family members, who have migrated up to work in sugar beet fields in North Dakota and Minnesota. That was the most in about two decades, but far fewer than all-time highs.

In 1989, 11,000 migrant workers, along with 7,000 other family members, came to the area for the sugar beet season.

This year it may be more than 5,000 workers.

"We've been informed that there's supposed to be more than last year," said Crookston Mayor Doug Oman.

"We're anticipating an increase, but to what extent we can't say at this time," said Efren Tovar Leon, director of the Minnesota Migrant Council based in St. Cloud.

A record number of acres were planted to sugar beets this year in the Red River Valley and southern Minnesota. American Crystal Sugar Co.'s five districts seeded 396,000 acres, the Minn-Dak Co-op in Wahpeton, N.D., planted 65,000 acres, and the Southern Minnesota Co-op planted 80,000 acres.

That doesn't necessarily mean there will be more demand for migrant workers than last year, said Dick Fitzsimons, executive director of the Red River Valley Sugarbeet Growers Association in Fargo, N.D. Too much depends on the weather and how well chemical herbicides work to know yet.

"But with the number of acres the way they are, it could very well be an increase this year," said Fitzsimons, who represents the 1,960 member-growers of American Crystal.

So far, though, the arrival pace has been slow.

Armando Cuellar of the state Jobs and Training Department has registered about 300 migrant families so far, compared with 600 this time in 1989.

There are at least two reasons for that, Fitzsimons said.

A December freeze required a late replanting of many crops in Texas. "So there was work for people later than normal," Fitzsimons said.

"The second reason is that every year there are more and more workers with families that stay until school is through," Fitzsimons said. This year school is not out in Texas until later this week.

There won't be much work in the beet fields for at least another week or two, but some migrants already are working at picking rocks or other jobs, Cuellar said.

Some of the workers remain after the beet work is done, finding work with the August grain harvest and fall potato and beet harvest, Cuellar said.

He's trying something new this year, funneling about 16 migrant workers to work in the fledgling vegetable growing industry near Fosston and Clearbrook.

Captive condors to be released into the wild

By Gordon Smith
Copley News Service

SESPE CONDOR SANCTUARY, Calif. — The place where the condors once flew is a vast expanse of rugged mountains and inaccessible cliffs that rise into the clouds.

It is a wild and hushed domain where humans seem out of place, where the earth is coarse and dark, and the dense green chaparral seems to stretch forever.

It was here, high above oil wells and citrus groves, that the giant birds used to soar on wind currents, using their 9-foot wingspan to effortlessly glide up to 100 miles a day.

There are still many wild creatures in Sespe Condor Sanctuary — black bears, golden eagles and others — but there are no California condors. The last free member of that ancient line was trapped on a barren, windswept hill south of here in April 1987, and taken to San Diego's Wild Animal Park for a captive-breeding program.

Since then, the breeding program has turned into a rousing success. There are currently 38 condors at the Wild Animal Park and the Los Angeles Zoo, up from 27 in 1987.

The bird's long road back from near extinction doesn't end with the hatching of chicks in stark, brightly lighted incubation rooms. But the growing brood of captive young condors has led experts to rethink their plans for the next crucial step in the condor recovery program — releasing birds back into the wild.

ONCE PROJECTED for the mid-1990s at the earliest, a release could now come as soon as 1991. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has petitioned Congress for funds to release the condors and expects to have sufficient condors for release by 1992 at the latest, according to Teresa Nichols, acting coordinator for the fish and wildlife service's California condor recovery project.

The site of the first release almost certainly will be the 53,000-acre Sespe sanctuary, established in 1946. But many questions await.

Among them: Why were wild condors steadily dying before they were trapped for the captive-breeding program? Will the newly released birds find Sespe any more hospitable than their ancestors did? Will they even stay within it? And in the end, can condors survive in a region increasingly overrun with humans and development?

In addition those questions, some experts say that the nearby Bitter Creek National Wildlife Refuge, acquired in 1986 as foraging habitat for condors by the fish and wildlife service, is potentially too hazardous for the birds to feed in. Unlike Sespe, the sprawling Bitter Creek refuge is easily accessible to poachers and is surrounded by federal and private land where condors could, as they have in the past, eat carcasses tainted with lethal amounts of cyanide or bullet fragments.

NEVERTHELESS, EVEN those who say the $4.5 million Bitter Creek purchase will be important for condors only in the long run, if at all, are optimistic that condors will flourish in Sespe and other places.

"This is a happy time to be with the condor program," said Lloyd Kiff, leader of the condor recovery team, a group of wildlife biologists that helps set policies for the condor. "This thing is going to work."

Part of Kiff's optimism stems from research currently being done in Sespe with Andean condors from South America. Thirteen of the birds — related to the California condor, but not as rare — have been released in the sanctuary since December 1988.

Jim Wiley, who heads a condor research team for the fish and wildlife service in Ventura, is studying the Andean condors to learn about condor behavior. Wiley said the Andean condors have been sighted from Santa Barbara to Big Bear Lake, Calif., a range of nearly 160 miles. Hang gliders have reported flying wing tip to wing tip with the huge birds as they soar high over the landscape.

For the most part, though, the condors "seem to be staying in the mountains. And the interesting thing is they have used much (of) the same areas the California condor did" for roosting and foraging, Wiley said.

Using techniques that will also be used on California condors, Wiley and his team put out food for the birds only at night and observe them only from within sheltered "blinds" during the day. The less accustomed to human contact that condors are, the warier they will be and the longer they're likely to live, he said.

THE BIRDS — carrion scavengers in the wild — are fed with fresh meat on platforms that loom above the chaparral. For now their diet consists of stillborn calves donated by a nearby dairy.

Before they are released, new birds are kept for two to three months in large enclosures near the feeding platforms, where they feed on carcasses and observe how their older relatives eat. In this way, the new birds learn crucial feeding behavior, Wiley said. Different platforms are used on different days so the wild birds won't get used to only one site.

CNS Graphic

Wiley said the Andean condors have stayed in the general vicinity of the feeding platforms, which means that researchers should be able to maintain California condors largely within the protection of Sespe. Many of the bird's historic nesting sites lie within Sespe, so Wiley is confident that California condors will have a safe home once they are released.

Nichols pointed out that experts have only a sketchy picture of why the birds were disappearing in the wild before the captive breeding program began. Condors have died after being shot, after eating cyanide-tainted meat that ranchers set out for coyotes, and after ingesting lead bullet fragments in the carcasses of animals killed by hunters. But so few condor deaths have been thoroughly documented that experts simply aren't sure what the prime causes of death are.

"We need California condors to tell us what those mortality factors are so we can control those factors," Nichols said. "We fully expect to lose California condors when we release them."

Bill Toone, bird curator at the San Diego Wild Animal Park, put it more bluntly: "To prove what's wrong with condor habitat, you need to have birds die and lay them on somebody's desk."

WILEY AND Nichols got a graphic lesson in condor "mortality factors" in February 1989 when one of the Andean condors collided with a power wire. Another bird died as it was being transported to a release site two years ago. But overall, Wiley, Kiff and other members of the condor recovery team are encouraged that nearly all of the Andean birds have survived so far.

Kiff is confident that the California condors will be relatively safe for the first few years as they are fed in and around Sespe. But the birds will be exposed to more hazards as they are weaned from feeding platforms and forced to forage for food in other areas — including the Bitter Creek refuge.

Kiff is glad to see Bitter Creek protected, but he considers the area of little use for the condor recovery program for the time being because of the risks that hunting on surrounding land poses to condors.

The open, grassy hills at Bitter Creek are considered better foraging habitat for condors than the chaparral-covered mountains in Sespe, and may prove to be important for the long-term survival of the birds, Kiff said. He called the $4.5 million cost of the land insignificant compared to the nation's defense budget.

OBLIGATED TO protect the condor because of the Endangered Species Act, the fish and wildlife service has spent an estimated $8 million to $10 million on the bird since 1978. The service now spends about $300,000 a year on condor programs, while the Wild Animal Park spends about $120,000 a year on breeding captive condors, Nichols said.

It's a lot of money, and never mind that it's being spent to comply with federal law. But the Wild Animal Park's Toone insisted that "every dime we've spent on the condor has been worth it." The condor is not only a magnificent creature, he said, but it has become a figurehead for attracting support to the preservation of wild animals and their habitats.

Some environmentalists have said that the condor would have done more for the cause of conservation by becoming extinct and provoking outrage, but that would have been a symbol of failure, Toone said, and "we need symbols of hope."

The exact date when California condors will be released hasn't yet been determined and depends on when there are enough young birds with the broad range of condor genes considered necessary for release. That, in turn, depends partly on how many chicks hatch.

Toone said the condor recovery project shows "that man can set right what he's screwed up.

"But for every day there are condors out there," he cautioned, "there will have to be battles fought to keep them there."

DEAR ABBY

Parents' house rules keep daughter away from home

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our 30-year-old daughter, who lives out of state, refuses to visit us because we insist that while visiting in our home, she and her live-in male companion have separate bedrooms. Meanwhile, she tells friends and relatives that we will not allow her to visit us!

Van Buren

We need some advice about how far parents should go toward making their children feel comfortable and loved while visiting. — MOM AND DAD IN FLORIDA

DEAR MOM AND DAD: I can understand parents refusing to allow a daughter or son of any age to hunker down in the guest room with any Tom, Dick or Mary, but some people may feel that long-term committed relationships deserve special consideration.

In your home, you make the rules, and your rules should be respected. If you are uncomfortable with the thought of your daughter doing in your home what she does in hers, say so — with no apologies.

Telling friends and relatives that you will not allow her to visit is her way of getting even. Should this come up in conversation, promptly set the record straight. In this case, silence is not golden; it would be accepting a bad rap.

DEAR ABBY: I read in The Chicago Tribune that a judge had ordered a drug dealer to pay for his keep while he served his time in jail, so I wrote the following letter to the editor:

"Why not a crime tax, or 'housing' fee? Each criminal sentenced to serve time in jail should be assessed a housing fee. This would put the financial burden where it belongs — on the criminal.

"Cook County currently pays the Salvation Army $1.7 million to provide 140 beds a year for its 'surplus' inmates. This figures out to $33.27 per day, per person. If the county collected $33 per day from each resident, it would cost a dope pusher or drunk driver $900 per month for lodging, goods, clothes and medical expenses. By comparison, a crime victim has to pay that much for only two days' room and board in an average hospital.

"Cook County jail now has more than 5,000 inmates. At $33 per day, the residence fee would generate more than $60 million in revenue per year."

Is my theory sound? — JAMES A. COHEN, SKOKIE

DEAR MR. COHEN: Your theory is sound, but it's not practical, because most prison inmates cannot afford to pay $990 a month for their lodging, food and clothing. The fact is, most prison inmates are not only broke when they are incarcerated, their families have to go on welfare.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column on spanking children, you indicated that your readers' response to spanking was 10-to-1 in favor. You may be interested in the results of a 1990 survey done by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, which measures attitudes and actions about child abuse and its prevention. Of the parents in the survey who have children under the age of 18, 49 percent said that they never spank their children. And 26 percent said that they "hardly ever" spank or hit their children. In addition, 72 percent said they believe that physical punishment of a child can lead to injury. Overall, as an organization dedicated to the prevention of child abuse, we were encouraged by these new statistics.

Parenting is a challenging, sometimes very difficult job. When pressures build up, it is tempting to use physical punishment on a child. However, spanking a child when you are angry can be dangerous. Children are often injured when an angry parent loses control.

In a society that values the "quick fix" solution to everyday problems, it seems easier to hit a child than to help the child learn self-control. Children who are disciplined by constant hitting and spanking soon learn that the way to deal with life's frustrations is to lash out physically at others.

Teaching children discipline is important. But discipline can be achieved without hitting or spanking. Children will do what we do more than what we say. If you want children to obey rules, to solve their own problems, to control their anger, and to live in peace with themselves and others, then parents must set that example.

For a free pamphlet on teaching children discipline without spanking, please ask your readers to send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: Teaching Discipline, P.O. Box 2866, Chicago, Ill. 60690. — JOY BYERS, NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR PREVENTION OF CHILD ABUSE

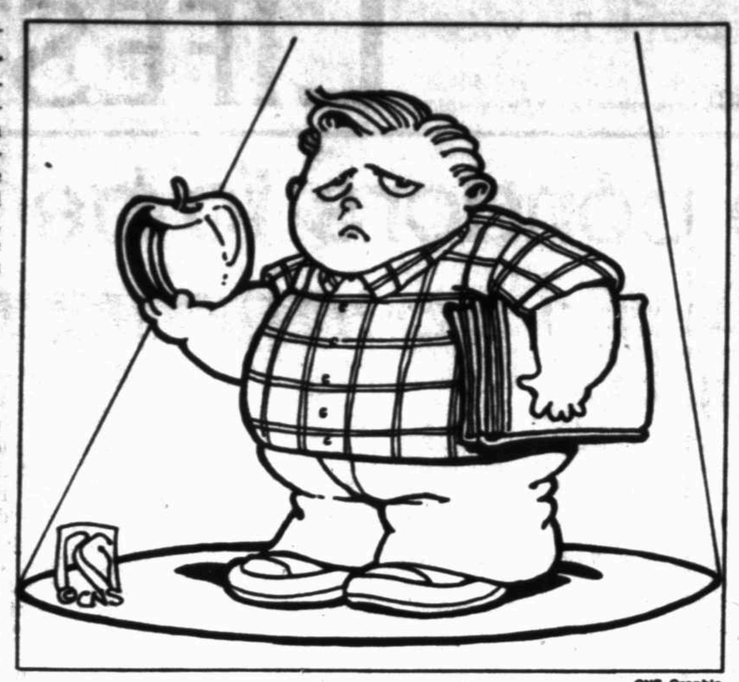
Overweight children carry heavy burden

By Jamie Reno
Copley News Service



CNS Graphic

The first one up, 6-year-old Katie walked sleepily from her bedroom to the bathroom where, in pigtails and PJs, she unceremoniously stepped onto the scale. She had performed this quiet ritual countless times, but this morning, when the scale coldly told her she had reached 80 pounds, she was stilled.

Crying out, she studied her body in the mirror and came to a hard conclusion.

"That was the moment it really hit me: I was a fat girl," she said.

That night she tearfully prayed that with the new day she would have a new, thin body like the kind she saw on television. That prayer continued futilely throughout her childhood.

"It took me a long, long time to realize I wasn't a bad person just because I was fat," said Katie, now 18 and recovering from a severe eating disorder doctors say developed because of a poor self-image.

The potential negative physical effects of being an overweight child — hypertension, respiratory complications and orthopedic problems, among them — are serious. But the psychological effects, say doctors and counselors, are just as damaging — sometimes more so.

BEING THE last person chosen for team sports in school, being unable to swing on a swing or slide down a slide, being called wicked names by classmates — all this can promote feelings of alienation and deep depression in the overweight child that, if ignored, can even lead to thoughts of suicide, caution therapists.

Katie, for example, who is a diabetic, admits she would skip her insulin shots so her blood-sugar level would increase so she would lose weight.

She lost weight that way, but she almost lost her life.

"She was in the hospital several times and almost died before she realized it was time to seek help," said Dr. Daniel Einhorn, of San Diego's Sharp Cabrillo Hospital.

Einhorn, who has been treating Katie, added, "She's in therapy now, eating normally, exercising and finally establishing a positive self-esteem. She's doing wonderfully."

Katie said she still doesn't have the perfect figure she prayed for, and she admits she probably never will because of her body type. But that's OK; she realizes now that only a very few have that perfect body she sees on TV.

"I'm just beginning to like myself, and now I'm determined to show other kids that you don't have to go through what I did," she said. "Our society has to do more to show overweight children that they're not bad people. I can't think of anything harder than being a fat little girl or little boy."

Although America is seemingly more fitness conscious than ever, weight problems among the nation's children are at an all-time high: A study of almost 22,000 children by the New England Medical Center and Harvard University School of Public Health found "pronounced increases in pediatric obesity" in the United States.

THE STUDY showed that since the 1960s, obesity has increased by 54 percent among children ages 6 to 11 and by 39 percent among children ages 12 to 17.

A Metropolitan Life Foundation/Lou Harris survey of 500 parents, 211 teachers and 4,738 pupils in approximately 200 public schools found that less than one-third of those schools have certified physical education instructors, 19 percent of the children in these schools skip breakfast, and 13 percent do not get exercise even twice a week in school.

Although the schools are evidently not doing their part, solutions start at home, said Murray Rosenthal, a psychiatrist who treats children with eating disorders.

"Parents must emphasize their children's strengths and not their weaknesses. Of course, it's such a common misconception that the fat child is a weak child, that the fat child is a lazy child. That, most often, just isn't the case. It has more to do with genetics than behavior," Rosenthal said.

Susan Ward, a licensed clinical social worker who counsels overweight children, said she showed a selection of pictures to 4-and 5-year-olds, and asked them who they thought were bad. They all selected the fat people.

"IT JUST tells me that we have a long way to go," said Ward, who thinks much of the blame for the emotional pain overweight children bear must be levied against television — children are watching it instead of exercising, and what they're watching promotes negative stereotypes and unrealistic expectations.

Ward agreed that parents can help children cope with being overweight by talking realistically about body image — stressing health and fitness — and the functions of the body.

Parents can also set a good example by admiring different, less obvious types of beauty.

"We always have to remember that obesity is unhealthy," Rosenthal said, "and that, though we can't let overweight children feel ashamed about their bodies, we also must always encourage them to exercise and be as healthy as they can be with what God has given them."

DEALING EFFECTIVELY with an overweight child, Rosenthal added, takes delicately combining discipline and sympathy.

Susan, the mother of six children, none of whom is overweight, said she emphasizes fitness in her family. She tells her children that children who are heavy are no better or worse than they are and should be treated just like everyone else.

"But I know for a fact, from what my kids tell me when they come home from school, that there is still a lot of teasing going on in my kids' schools," Susan said. "Kids can be cruel and should be taught early that just because a person is different, it doesn't mean that person is necessarily bad."

It's Las Vegas!

NEW YORK (AP) — Las Vegas casino owner Steve Wynn won the right to promote Buster Douglas' first defense of the heavyweight championship against Evander Holyfield with a purse bid of $32.1 million on Sunday.

Wynn outbid promoter Dan Duva of Main Events, who bid $29,101,000. There were no other bidders.

The purse bid was conducted by the World Boxing Association, whose turn it is to have a mandatory title defense, because no promoter was able to sign the fight. The match is scheduled for Sept. 20 at Wynn's Mirage Hotel and Casino.

"It's great news to me," said Holyfield, ranked as the No. 1 contender by the WBA, the International Boxing Federation and the World Boxing Council for about a year. "I think my luck is changing."

Pistons break up Blazermania run

■ Joe Dumars, who learned only after the game of his father's death, leads Detroit to a 2-1 advantage over Portland in the NBA playoffs.

Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Detroit Pistons bucked the weight of history and Blazermania Sunday for a 121-106 victory and a 2-1 lead in the NBA Finals.

Joe Dumars, who learned after the game that his father had died 1½ hours before tipoff, scored 33 points and Vinnie Johnson broke out of an abysmal shooting slump with 21 as the Pistons snapped a 16-year, 20-game losing streak in Portland and the Trail Blazers' nine-game home playoff winning streak.

The Pistons, stung by Portland's 106-105 overtime victory on Thursday, — and playing without starting forward Dennis Rodman, who sprained an ankle — recaptured the coveted homecourt advantage with Sunday's performance.

It was the first time in the playoffs that Detroit won while allowing more than 100 points. The Pistons were 0-5 when the opposition broke the century mark.

Joe Dumars Sr. died Sunday in Natchitoches, La., after a long illness, according to Pistons spokesman Matt Dobek. The elder Dumars had been in intensive care for two weeks with diabetes and heart trouble, Dobek said.

Dumars had asked that he not be notified if his father died before the game and he was told of his death over the phone by his wife after the game ended, Dobek said. He added that Dumars left on the team's jet to join is family in Louisiana.

Johnson, who was 2-for-25 shooting over the last four playoff games, scored 15 points in the second quarter, lifting the Pistons to a seven-point halftime lead. He finished 9-for-13 from the field.

Dumars then scored 13 in the third period as the Pistons took a 90-82 margin into the final 12 minutes. Detroit led 86-71 with 2:30 left, but Jerome Kersey, who scored 14 of his 27 points in the period, led an 11-4 run with six in the last 2:21.

The Trail Blazers then missed their first five shots and turned the ball over three times in the first 3:30 of the fourth quarter, enabling the Pistons to start the period with an 8-0 run for a 98-82 lead.

The closest Portland got after that was 109-98 with 3:15 left.

Clyde Drexler added 24 points and Terry Porter 20 for the Trail Blazers, while Isiah Thomas scored 21 for the Pistons.

Two more games — on Tuesday and Thursday nights — will be played in Portland, but even if the Trail Blazers

Hill, Fennell lead COM win

■ Robin Hill and Stacy Fennell go on scoring spree to insure a Doug Russell Invitational victory for the City of Midland Swim Team.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

City of Midland swimmer Robin Hill won four events in the 11-12 girls' division Sunday and teammate Stacy Fennell accumulated a meet-high 96 points in the 13-14 division to lead the home team to the top of the standings of the West Texas Invitational at the Doug Russell Pool.

COM swimmers combined for 2,478 points during the three-day meet, easily outdistancing the First Colony Swim Team of Houston which garnered second place with 979 points.

"It was a good meet for us," said COM swim coach Brad Swendig, who added that his team's good showing in the distance races Friday was especially pleasing. COM won nine of the 10 long distance events

"It's early in the season, and we concentrate more on endurance and hard work in practice than on winning meets. If we'd hadn't done so well in the distance races then I'd say we were behind schedule," said Swendig. "We didn't do quite so well in the sprints, but I think that's just indicative of the type of work we've been doing in practice.

"I think as the season progresses that our times will come up, and a meet like this shows us where we stand in terms of the competition. And the competition here was good."

Hill, the top point winner among the 11-12 girls with 83 points, said the level of competition at this year's Invitational — the 43rd annual — was more than welcome.

"I was glad to have such good competition, it helped out a

Angels lose, fight in ninth

Jerry Brooks must have though he was in a delicatessen Sunday night.

The 6-0, 195-pound San Antonio right-fielder hit the grand salami, a four-run homer, over the left field wall in the first inning to lead the Missions to a 9-3 victory over Midland in front of 4,216 sold seats at Angels Stadium.

But that was just the beginning for Brooks, who came back for a second helping in the eighth with a solo shot to left that gave him credit for knocking in all of San Antonio's runs at that point in the game. But quite possibly the most memorable event of the night for Brooks was yet to come.

When he came up in the ninth with the Missions on top 9-0, Angel reliever Luis Merejo threw his first pitch up and in to the right-handed hitting Brooks. Merejo followed with another ball in the same general vicinity, but maybe a little more up and and a teensy bit closer in.

As a matter of fact, Brooks thought it was too close to his head and began to approach the mound, hesitated until Merejo yelled an obscenity at him, then charged the pitcher as both dugouts emptied for the brawl that was about to begin.

"Usually after a guy has a good day at the plate, it's inevitable (that he will see inside pitches). I wouldn't have minded if he had of smoked me in the ribs, it's sort of his job to get me off the plate, but when he got into the head area I couldn't take it," Brooks said.

"My first instinct after that second pitch was 'somebody's going to get hurt (by starting the brawl),' but he said something not worth repeating and I went," the former Clemson Tiger said.

For the Angels' part, Midland manager Eddie Rodriguez only said, "You have to move him off the plate, and possibly that's what Luis was trying to do."

However, for Midland, the brawl — which saw Merejo, Brooks and Mike Knapp and San Antonio's Adam Brown

Czechs embarrass U.S. in World Cup

■ After 40 years out of World Cup action, it may take the U.S. another 40 to erase the memory of the return.

ROME (AP) — It took the United States 40 years to get back to the World Cup. It might take another 40 to erase the memory of its first game back among the world's elite soccer teams.

Betrayed by its supposed strengths — defense and goalkeeping — and displaying the inexperience that comes with so many years away from the sport's top level, the Americans were routed 5-1 by Czechoslovakia. It could have been much worse.

"The most frustrating thing about this is that we made all the oddsmakers look like they were kings," goalie Tony Meola said. "It's really an injustice to our team.

Not even having scored a goal, something many people said the United States wouldn't do in this tournament, provided any solace. Paul Caligiuri got that goal, early in the second half, but it already was 3-0 by then.

"A lot of aspects were in disarray," said Caligiuri, whose goal against Trinidad and Tobago got the United States into the tournament for the first time since 1950. "I think we had some mental breakdowns. On the other hand, this is a positive team and we have to believe in ourselves because the biggest challenges lie ahead of us. Against Italy (on Thursday), it's not going to get any easier."

The Czechoslovaks, not exactly a powerhouse, were far too tough for the Americans. Tomas Skuhravy scored twice and Michal Bilek, Ivan Hasek and Milan Luhovy once each for Czechoslovakia, whose players dedicated the victory to President Vaclav Havel and his Civic Forum party.

"The U.S. defense seemed more concerned with going on the attack than playing defense," Skuhravy said. "They gave us a lot of room."

Just how does the United States rank right now? Czechoslovak coach Jozef Venglos gave mixed reviews.

"We expected a little bit more from the U.S. team," he said. "At the beginning, the U.S. team played us even, but then we started to play to our potential.

"The U.S. team will be strong in 1994. I know they've had a very serious program, but it's difficult to reach an international level in one or two years."

Midfielder Eric Wynalda was thrown out of the game for committing a foul when play was stopped at 53 minutes. The U.S. team played the final 37 minutes a man short.

"When the red card came, they created a lot more chances," Caligiuri said. "The score possibly could have been much more."

The hot spot away from the actual soccer shifted to Milan, where police clashed with rowdy fans before West Germany's 4-1 victory over Yugoslavia Sunday night. At least 20 people were injured and 36 were taken into custody.

ejected — brought life to an offense that had scattered eight hits through the first eight innings. But the Haloes had also stranded all eight runners.

Midland came back with all three of its runs in the bottom of the ninth with two scoring on a bad throw to first by Mission catcher Homar Rojas.

Angel starter Mark Holzemer (1-7) took the loss, despite throwing five shutout innings after giving up the grand slam. San Antonio's Dan Opperman picked up the win to go 5-4, and Tim Scott earned his second save of the season.

"Holzemer did a fine job and settled down after having a tough first inning. But he made a couple of bad pitches in the first and got hurt. We out-hit them, but just couldn't manufacture runs early in the game," said Rodriguez, whose club went to 21-36 with the loss.

"We just haven't been able to put things together completely. We score eight runs one night and get beat, then come back and allow two and get beat. We just haven't had defense, offense and pitching all at the same time."

As for the inside pitching, Brooks said he holds no grudges.

"It's not a personal vendetta with me. It was a heat of the moment type thing, and I guess it's a part of the game," he said.

The teams will have at least three more opportunities before the mid-season break to see if any bad feelings have set in, as the Angels host San Antonio (30-26) again at 7 p.m. tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Stars lose to Warriors in 2-1 style

Staff Report

The Permian Basin Shootin' Stars keep playing them close, but it isn't translating into victories.

Sunday at Hogan Park, the Stars dropped a 2-1 decision to the Oklahoma City Warriors to fall 0-6 for the SISL season.

The Warriors took a 1-0 lead in the first half when Sean O'Connor scored unassisted at 14:30 into the game.

Oklahoma City increased its lead and took what proved to be the winning margin at the 28:30 mark of the second half when Richard Hayden scored.

The Stars got a goal from Alex Vasquez at 31:29 into the second half, but couldn't come up with a another score.

The Stars travel to Waco Saturday to face the Waco Kickers.

Javier Castillejos made his debut this week as the new coach of the Stars, both losing causes. His debut Saturday was a 3-2 overtime loss to Tucson's Amigos.

Texas' Brown wins, 2-1

Associated Press

Kevin Brown recovered after being hit in the head by a line drive and pitched a five-hitter, outdueling Mark Langston as the Texas Rangers beat the California Angels 2-1 Sunday.

Brown (7-4) was hit in the head by Luis Polonia's liner in the third inning, and the ball caromed into right field for a single. He stayed in the game, struck out and walked one in his first complete game.

Brown lost a bid for his first professional shutout when Dave Winfield homered with one out in the ninth. Winfield hit his seventh home run of the season and fifth for California.

Langston (4-6) struck out a season-high 12 in eight innings, but allowed both Texas runs on four hits in the first four innings. He has gone 14 straight starts without a complete game since last season, his longest drought ever.

Yankees 5, Orioles 2

New York beat Baltimore, ending an eight-game losing streak and giving manager Stump Merrill his first victory after four defeats.

Jesse Barfield drove in three runs and Steve Sax had three hits as the Yankees stopped an 11-game road losing skid, including six on their current trip. New York won for only the second time in 15 games.

The Orioles, who had been at .500 for the first time since April 24, had their their four-game winning streak snapped. Baltimore lost for the second time in nine games.

Jimmy Jones (1-0), promoted from the minors Saturday, scattered three hits in five innings in his first major-league appearance of the season. Dave Righetti pitched one inning for his 11th save.

White Sox 5, Twins 3

Ivan Calderon hit a two-run homer and Chicago beat the Twins for its first three-game sweep in Minnesota in 11 years.

Bobby Thigpen saved all three victories as the White Sox completed their first sweep since Sept. 25-27, 1979, at Metropolitan Stadium.

Chicago has won 11 of 15 games. Minnesota has lost four in a row.

Greg Hibbard (5-4) gave up two runs, one of them earned, in seven-plus innings. Thigpen, the fourth Chicago pitcher, worked the ninth.

Calderon's sxith home run of the season put Chicago ahead 2-0 in the third. The White Sox made it 4-0 in the fourth when Lance Johnson's RBI double finished Roy Smith (4-6) and Robin Ventura hit a run-scoring single off Mark Guthrie.

AL Roundup

Athletics 3, Royals 2

Bob Welch settled down after a shaky start to win his sixth straight decision and Oakland completed a three-game sweep, beating Kansas City and sending the Royals to their sixth consecutive loss.

The last-place Royals matched their longest losing streak of the season and fell 16 games behind the American League West-leading Athletics. Oakland won for the fifth time in six games and improved to 38-17, the best record in baseball.

The Athletics again played with star Jose Canseco. He is out of the lineup with a disc problem that is causing back pain, and Athletics team doctor Allan Pont said Sunday that he could not predict when Canseco will return.

Welch (9-2) tied teammate Dave Stewart for the second-highest victory total in the league, one behind Roger Clemens. Welch gave up two runs on four hits in the first inning, but then shut out the Royals on three hits until Dennis Eckersley relieved with two outs in the eighth.

Blue Jays 13, Brewers 5

The Toronto Blue Jays scored 10 runs in the fourth inning, the biggest outburst ever against Milwaukee, in a rout that sent the listless Brewers to their 14th loss in 18 games.

George Bell, Junior Felix and Mookie Wilson each drove in two runs as the Blue Jays combined seven hits, four walks and an error for the second-biggest inning in team history. They scored 11 against Seattle in 1984.

Toronto recorded the biggest previous inning against Milwaukee, scoring nine runs in an inning in 1987.

Indians 4, Red Sox 0

Tom Candiotti pitched five-hit ball for 8⅓ innings and Cleveland ended a six-game losing skid, beating Boston and stopping their seven-game winning streak.

Boston, which charged into the AL East lead with its winning streak, lost for only the second time in 10 games.

Candiotti (6-3) struck out two and walked one. He was trying his first shutout since 1987, but was pulled after a double and single in the ninth. Doug Jones retired two batters for his 19th save.

Tigers 4, Mariners 3

Mark Salas snapped an 0-for-19 slump with a solo home run that broke a sixth-inning tie, leading Jack Morris and Detroit over Seattle.

Morris (5-7) won his third straight decision.

Astros have Reds reeling

Associated Press

Casey Candaele snapped a seventh-inning tie with a run-scoring triple as the Houston Astros beat Cincinnati 4-2 Sunday to send the suddenly-slumping Reds to their sixth loss in seven games.

The first-place Reds won 17 of their first 21 games on the road, but have lost eight of their last 12 away from Riverfront Stadium.

Danny Darwin (2-1) allowed one hit in three innings of relief to earn the victory.

With the score tied 2-2 in the seventh, Rich Gedman reached on a fielding error by second baseman Mariano Duncan and Eric Yelding came on as a pinch runner. Candaele then lined a triple down the right-field line off starter Jack Armstrong (8-3) to score the go-ahead run.

After Rob Dibble relieved, Candaele scored on a fielding error by first baseman Todd Benzinger on Bill Doran's grounder. Both runs were unearned.

Armstrong pitched 6⅓ innings allowing five hits and four runs. He struck out nine.

The Reds tied the score 2-2 in the sixth off starter Jim Deshaies when Chris Sabo singled, moved to second on a wild pitch, to third on a fly ball and scored on a single by Rolando Roomes.

Houston took a 2-0 lead in the first on Franklin Stubb's two-run homer, his sixth. Stubbs' homer was the first allowed this season by Armstrong.

Cincinnati made it 2-1 in the third when Sabo hit his 11th home run of the season, tying his career high. He hit 11 homers as a rookie in 1988, but had only six in 82 games last season.

It was the Astros' third straight victory over the Reds after losing the opening game of the series on Thursday.

Padres 2, Dodgers 1

Roberto Alomar singled home Bip Roberts from second base with one out in the 10th inning to give surging San Diego a victory over Los Angeles.

The victory moved the Padres within 5½ games of the slumping Cincinnati Reds in the National League West. The Padres, who have won five of six, trailed the Reds by 10 games on June 3.

After Benito Santiago flied out to center leading off the 10th, reliever Jay Howell (2-4) hit Roberts with a pitch. Roberts moved to second on Howell's wild pitch and scored on Alomar's single to center. Alomar's double in the eighth tied the score.

Ramon Martinez, who struck out 18 last Monday against Atlanta, carried a five-hit shutout into the eighth.

Mets 8, Pirates 3

Darryl Strawberry, busting out of a season-long slump, hit his fourth homer in three games and drove in four runs to carry New York past Pittsburgh for its third straight victory.

NL Roundup

New York won three of four from first-place Pittsburgh to move within 6½ games of the Pirates. The Mets hit the road this week for four games each at Chicago and Pittsburgh.

In their last three games, the Mets pounded Pittsburgh's pitching for a total of 35 hits and 24 runs.

Strawberry, who hit five homers in his first 40 games, has seven in his last 13 after hitting one in the fourth.

Bob Ojeda (2-3) allowed nine hits and three runs in eight innings for the victory, and John Franco wrapped it up before a capacity crowd of 46,868.

Cubs 7, Phillies 3

Joe Girardi hit his first home run in 145 at-bats this season as Chicago won its third straight game at home for the first time this year.

The Cubs had not won three straight at home since last Sept. 21-24 en route to the division championship.

It was another good day for Len Dykstra, though. Dykstra extended his hitting streak to 23 games with a fourth-inning RBI single. He trails Chuck Klein by three games for the longest hitting streak in Phillies' history since 1900.

Dykstra finished the game 2-for-5 and is batting .407. During the streak he is 42-for-98 (.429). With men in scoring position, he is hitting .478 (22-for-46).

Mark Grace added a pair of RBI singles for the Cubs. In his last 10 games, Grace has reached base safely 19 times in 34 plate appearances (13 hits, six walks) to raise his average from .258 to .285.

Giants 9, Braves 3

Matt Williams drove in four runs with a three-run homer and a single, powering San Francisco over Atlanta.

It was the eighth victory in nine games for the resurgent Giants, who gave rookie John Burkett (6-1) a 4-0 lead in the first inning.

Burkett, who retired 10 in a row during one stretch, allowed five hits, struck out seven and walked one in eight innings. Jeff Brantley retired the side in the ninth.

Cardinals 5, Expos 3

Joe Magrane struggled to win for only the third time this season and St. Louis avoided a four-game sweep by beating Montreal.

Magrane, who was 18-9 in 1989, walked five and allowed seven hits in 6⅔ innings to improve to 3-8. The left-hander struck out seven en route to his first victory since beating Cincinnati on May 20.

Ripken Jr. plays in 1,307th game

BALTIMORE (AP) — Cal Ripken Jr. on Sunday tied Everett Scott for second place on baseball's all-time list of consecutive games played.

Jack Nicklaus walks off the 18th green as the champion of the Seniors TPC with second place finisher Lee Trevino. Nicklaus has won two of his three Senior starts.

Bear legend is back

Nicklaus, who has won two of his three Senior Tour starts, buried the field Sunday in the Senior TPC, winning with a record 261, 27 under par and six strokes better than runner-up Lee Trevino.

It was the best 72-hole score since the Senior Tour started in 1980, breaking the 263 by Orville Moody in 1988.

The victory has the Bear charged up for a run at an unprecidented fifth U.S. Open championship, which begins Thursday at Medinah, Ill.

"I hope Medinah's greens will be just like this," said Nicklaus, who needed only 111 putts. "I imagine they'll be a tad faster, but probably not much.

"I'll take 27 under at Medinah. But I'll probably be about 24 below that. Par's a good score over there. Medinah's a tough golf course."

A WIN in the U.S. Open would enable Nicklaus to complete a goal he set for himself when he turned 50 in January; win on both the Senior and regular PGA tours.

"I putted for 11 eagles in this tournament," Nicklaus said. "That's a lot of eagles. I don't think they set the pins as tough here as on the regular tour."

Trevino, who didn't even try to qualify for the U.S. Open, said he thought Nicklaus still has the skills to win it.

"He's really putting well right now, and next week he's going to a golf course where putting is important," Trevino said. "I have high expectations for him next week.

"If Jack played 18 or 20 times a year, he could win on the regular tour, easily."

Nicklaus made four trips around the 6,665-yard Dearborn Country Club course in 65, 68 and record-tying 64s the last two days.

"I don't think I've ever putted like this, anytime in my career," Nicklaus said.

The last of Nicklaus' 70 victories on the regular tour was the 1986 Masters, another major title.

Coming to the Senior TPC, Nicklaus had played only four competitive rounds in seven weeks. He hadn't planned on coming to Dearborn and he was the last player to enter the tournament.

But there was pressure from the Senior Tour and from Ford Land Development Corp., for which he designed TPC Michigan, the course just three miles away that will become the eventual permanent home of the tournament.

"The break just freshened me up," Nicklaus said. "It was probably the best thing I ever did."

Nicklaus won his senior debut, The Tradition, by four strokes the week before the Masters. The week after the Masters, in which he finished sixth, Nicklaus was third in the PGA Seniors Championship.

THE SENIOR TPC, sponsored by Mazda, is of three majors for the 50-and-over set and the richest.

The victory was worth $150,000, his largest official paycheck on either the regular or senior tours, and increased his lifetime earnings to $5,454,964. Nicklaus' biggest previous payoff was $144,000 at the 1986 Masters.

It also put him No. 2 on the Seniors money list, behind Trevino.

"My caddy) said the only chance we had against him today was if he signed the wrong scorecard," Trevino said. "That's the only shot I had at him today. I mean, what else can you do? Throw a club, break his ankle or something?"

Trevino had won five of his 10 Senior Tour starts before the Senior TPC and has earned $490,633 this season.

Nobody else was even close to the two superstars. Charles Coody and Jim Dent tied for third at 16 under.

Nicklaus started the day at 197, 19 under par and three strokes better than Trevino.

But in the span of holes 3, 4 and 5, Nicklaus went eagle-birdie-birdie to go to 23 under. He also birdied No. 9 to make the turn at 24 under.

Levi coasts after fast birdies

PGA Western Open

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Wayne Levi birdied the first two holes and never looked back in a front-running, four-stroke victory Sunday in the Western Open.

Levi, virtually unchallenged after his fast start, shot a final round 69 in posting his second victory in three weeks.

His 13-under-par 275 tied the course record at Butler National Golf Club set by Mark McCumber last year.

It was the ninth individual title in a 14-year PGA Tour career for Levi, who broke a five-year winless string with a victory in Atlanta two weeks ago.

And the victory over the strongest field of the year — 89 of the top 100 money-winners started — stamped the 37-year-old Levi as a force to be considered in the 90th U.S. Open next week at nearby Medinah.

"The way you had to play here, the way you had to grind, it was a good test for the Open," Levi said.

He began the final round with a 1-stroke lead, had three in hand after two holes, led by three at the turn and had a margin ranging from three to six the rest of the way.

His task was eased by a mass collapse of would-be challengers on the final hole. Peter Jacobsen, runner-up in the last two Western Opens, was in position to do it again until he made double bogey on the 18th. Mark Brooks also found the water and made a 6.

And Tom Watson, second alone and three shots off the lead after 15 holes, lost five shots to par over the last three holes.

Sheehan holds off Okamoto, Albers

LPGA

WILMINGTON, Del. (AP) — Patty Sheehan, playing a steady final round of 1-under par 70, held off early challenges from Japan's Ayako Okamoto and Kristi Albers Sunday to win the LPGA McDonald's Championship by four strokes.

Sheehan, shooting par or better for 61 of the final 62 holes, completed the four-day event at 9-under par 275 over the 6,366-yard DuPont Country Club course.

Okamoto came from three strokes back to tie Sheehan after nine holes. But she had bogey at No. 13 and double bogey on No. 16. Meanwhile, Sheehan refused to wilt in the hot and humid weather. She went up by two as she birdied the 12th, while Okamoto lost a stroke to par at 13.

Albers, who started the final round six shots back, birdied 14 and 15 and eagled 16 to draw within three of the lead at 6-under. But Albers, a non-winner in five years on the tour, couldn't get any closer. Sheehan responded with a birdie at the 16th to go 10 under, while Albers bogeyed 18.

Sheehan broke a string of 61 consecutive holes of par or better when she missed a 12-foot putt on the 18th green for a bogey. She hadn't bogeyed since her 10th hole of the first round.

Deadlocked at 4-under 280 were Jane Geddes, Barb Mucha and Colleen Walker, who joined the career $1 million club.

Sheehan earned $97,500, which boosted her to second on the 1990 money winning list with $297,474, behind Pat Bradley. She remained sixth on the career money list with $2,195,346.

The McDonald' Championship has been kind to Sheehan, who in eight appearances in this event has earned $297,681.

Schultz, Olivas team for win

Staff Report

Ralph and Doris Schultz teamed with Manny and Gaylea Olivas for a 125 to win Green Tree Country Club's monthly Sunday's Couples tournament.

The foursome was two strokes better than the team of Larry and Barbara McIntosh and Grady and Marty Yester.

There was a tie for fourth at 137 with Joe and Hazel Harbert playing with Merle and Anna Spence and the team of Frank and Jean Gray, who played with Frank and Sue Mullins.

lot," said Hill, who captured firsts in the 100 and 200-meter freestyle races as well as the 100 backstroke and the 50 butterfly. "It takes a lot of hard work to get ready for a meet like this, and it's nice to see how you can do against other good swimmers."

Fennell provided COM with two first-place finishes Sunday, winning the 200-meter butterfly with a time of 2:40.61 and the 100 breaststroke in 1:27.32. She also turned in a pair of second-place efforts in the 200 intermediate medley and the 100 freestyle. And she teamed for a victory in the 400 medley relay.

"I'm pretty happy. I tried for high point because that usually means you're dropping time or doing the things you need to do to get better," Fennell said. "I just went out and tried to do the best I could.

"I was tired there at the end," she admitted.

Of the 10 divisions (five boys, five girls) seven were won by Midlanders. Besides Hill and Fennell, COM high points included: Gregg Strauss, Ellen Brown, Amber Goodwin, Curt Kieffer and Clay Brown.

Gomez ends tennis frustration

PARIS (AP) — Andres Gomez took the thunder out of Andre Agassi's game and served up his own firepower Sunday to win the French Open's men title and end 10 years of Grand Slam frustration.

Combining a soft touch with raw power, scoring at will with a big first serve and winning most of the crucial points, the 30-year-old Ecuadoran beat Agassi 6-3, 2-6, 6-4, 6-4 for his first Grand Slam championship.

"I've always been dreaming of this moment," said the fourth-seeded Gomez, who had never advanced past the quarterfinals in nine previous French Opens. "It's just been too long."

"I've been here more than he has," he said. "Experience has got to play a big part."

The 20-year-old Agassi, seeded third and playing in his first Grand Slam final, couldn't sustain the all-out baseline attacking style that had carried him throughout the two-week tournament.

"I didn't think power was necessarily the way to go today," he said. "The big problem today was I could never get him down. He always had the edge. If I just could have gotten a game ahead, I think it could have been different."

Agassi did have his chances. After winning the second set to even the match, he squandered two points that could have put him up 5-4 in the third. In the fourth set, he lost a break point that would have brought him back to 4-4. Each time, Gomez picked up his game and closed out the sets.

"The first set I felt like I lost it, he didn't win it," Agassi said. "As the match wore on, things fell for him and he did win it. In the third and fourth sets, he just beat me."

Gomez never let Agassi get into his hitting groove. The 6-foot-4 Ecuadoran controlled the points with a booming forehand and always looked for chances to come to net in the 2-hour, 32-minute match.

Ecuador's Andres Gomez
...captures first Grand Slam event

"I didn't want to get into long rallies with him," Gomez said. "I had to try to take advantage of any short ball. I wanted to change the rhythm, give him slow balls and whenever I get an opening, go for it."

Gomez was the aggressor. He served 10 aces and went to the net 44 times and won 31 of those points, while Agassi had one ace and went to the net 10 times for nine winning points. Gomez piled up 58 winners and 72 unforced errors, compared to 24 and 27 for Agassi.

"It might seem like a strange tactic to some people," Gomez said. "But I've said it through the years. I'm not a Wilander. I don't have a great pair of legs to go six hours. My game doesn't base itself on how many errors I make, but how many winners I make."

Gomez had lost four times to Ivan Lendl at the French Open, three times in the quarters. With Lendl skipping the event this year to train for Wimbledon, Gomez knew that this was the year to win the tournament he has always coveted most.

"It hasn't hit me yet," he said. "I'll have a few beers and tomorrow I'll read a few papers and see that it's true."

For Agassi, it was a sputtering ending to an otherwise explosive tournament. He struggled through a stormy, tantrum-filled opening round match, but then plowed through the draw. With impressive wins over Jim Courier and defending champion Michael Chang, he established himself as the title favorite.

"If I didn't feel disappointed about taking second place, I wouldn't be one heck of a competitor," Agassi said. "There are things you can control and things you can't control. I gave it my best shot."

Agassi had also made headlines for calling Philippe Chatrier, president of the French and International tennis federations, a "bozo" for criticizing his neon-pink and black outfits. The feud was apparently put to rest Sunday when Agassi and Chatrier shook hands and patted each other on the back at the post-match award ceremony.

Wallace muscles past Rudd

Banquet 300K

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — Rusty Wallace, gaining a measure of revenge, muscled past Ricky Rudd 15 laps from the end and went on to win Sunday's Banquet Frozen Foods 300-kilometer stock-car race.

Wallace's second victory of the season was his fifth in the last seven visits to road courses by the NASCAR Winston Cup stock cars, dating to the fall of 1987.

One of the two he didn't win was the inaugural Winston Cup race here last June, when Rudd bumped Wallace aside at the end of the final lap to win by just 0.05 seconds.

This time, Wallace made a clean pass of Rudd on lap 60 of the 74-lap event on the 2.52-mile, 12-turn road course at Sears Point International Raceway.

A caution flag on lap 62 — the seventh of eight in a race in which the winner averaged only 69.245 mph — kept Rudd's Chevrolet Lumina right on the rear bumper of Wallace's Pontiac Grand Prix. But Wallace, the defendjng Winston Cup champion, pulled away after the green flag waved, and then Mark Martin slipped past Rudd on lap 72 to claim second place.

The race finished under the eighth caution flag, brought out after Terry Labonte and Davey Allison bumped in the hairpin turn and Labonte stalled with one lap left.

Geoff Bodine was fourth, followed by Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr., Sterling Marlin and Ernie Irvan. Hillin, having one of the best races of his year, led for three laps past the mid-way point.

Martin, who trailed Morgan Shepherd by 32 points in the Winston Cup standings coming into the race, moved into the season lead by 62 points over Shepherd.

Shepherd, who had finished in the top 10 in each of the 11 previous races this season, was running fifth when his engine broke with just four laps remaining. That dropped him to an eventual 29th-place finish.

Rudd started from the pole and led the first 11 laps, with Irvan and Dale Earnhardt close behind.

There was plenty of bumping and banging on the tight circuit and Rudd's bodywork was pushed in enough to cut down a tire on the 12th lap, forcing him to slow and then pit, giving the lead to Irvan.

Earnhardt fell to 31st and Rudd to 40th by the time they emerged from pit road.

With the help of several caution periods, those two sliced through the field, with Earnhardt getting to sixth before making a long stop on lap 37 to repair a broken transmission. Rudd moved up to sixth at that point.

Canizales retains bantamweight title

EL PASO (AP) — Orlando Canizales and Paul Gonzales didn't like each other before they fought Sunday afternoon for the International Boxing Federation bantamweight championship.

But after the fight at the El Paso County Coliseum, the bad blood was dramatically worse.

Gonzales suffered a 2-inch cut on his left eyelid early in the first round, and as the bleeding grew worse, ringside doctor Paris Bransford advised referee Barry Yeats to stop the fight.

"It was a short overhand right," Canizales said of the blow which cut Gonzales. "He bent down, and I caught him. I saw it on the replay. (The cut) opened up right away. After that I put on a lot of pressure, tried to hit him on the cut. It was swelling up real bad. It's a good thing they stopped it."

Gonzales and his corner said the cut resulted from a head butt from Canizales and that the fight shouldn't have been stopped, or at worst that a technical draw should have been called.

"His overhand right never touched me, it only grazed my glove and the top of my head," the challenger said.

Seles rules women's tennis after French Open win

PARIS (AP) — Riding a 32-match winning streak with six straight tournament titles, Monica Seles rules women's tennis — for the moment.

But after becoming the youngest winner of the French Open on Saturday by beating Steffi Graf, Seles has to turn her attention away from the clay court, which gave her much of her success.

Saturday, her aggressive game, pounding away with two-handed forehand and backhands from the baseline, stopped Graf, 7-6 (8-6), 6-4.

Since March, the Florida-based Yugoslav has dominated the women's ranks. She has played everyone and beaten them all, including Graf twice in a row and Martina Navratilova for the title at the Italian Open last month.

But the clay court season is over. Now on the faster grass at Wimbledon both Graf and Navratilova await. In order to win there, Seles will probably have to meet both.

Despite her first Grand Slam title at the expense of Graf, Seles will still be ranked No. 3 — and probably the No. 3 seed at Wimbledon. Barring upsets, Seles will face one in the semifinals and the other in the final. Graf will be top seeded and Navratilova No. 2. Both have made the final there the last three years.

But that's in two weeks. For the time being, Seles is trying to relax, then make the change from the slowest surface to the fastest.

"I will definitely be taking several days off completely so I can get recycled because Wimbledon is a totally different tournament both mentally and physically," Seles said. "I have to forget about the clay court game now."

During her winning streak, Seles has victories over Graf and Navratilova on clay. On May 20 she beat Graf at the German Open to end Graf's 66-match winning streak. She whipped Navratilova, 6-1, 6-1, at the Italian Open in Rome a week earlier.

But Seles has lost to Graf and Navratilova on faster surfaces.

Graf routed Seles last year at Wimbledon, 6-0, 6-1 and Navratilova beat Seles, 6-3, 6-0, earlier this year indoors.

"I'm going to play totally different. I'm going to serve harder, come to the net," Seles said. "I have a pretty good return already. The only thing I have to do well at Wimbledon in order to do as well as here is to serve and volley consistently."

both, Detroit would still have a chance to go back to Auburn Hills, Mich., for a shot at repeating as NBA champions.

Detroit is trying to become the third franchise — after Boston and the Minneapolis-Los Angeles Lakers — to repeat.

Rodman, the NBA's defensive player of the year, reinjured his ankle in Game 2 and was in uniform Sunday but did not play. Rodman, who was replaced by Mark Aguirre, is considered day-to-day.

Kersey, the man who Rodman would have covered, had 24 points in the first two games and 12 of those came in the first quarter of Game 1.

Johnson was 5-for-7 and scored 13 points in the first 7:18 of the second quarter, lifting the Pistons to their largest lead of the first half, 50-39.

Portland closed to 54-50 with 50 seconds remaining after five straight points by Kersey, but a jumper by Bill Laimbeer with six seconds to go made it 58-51 at halftime.

The Trail Blazers, who beat Detroit 102-82 in Portland on Nov. 26, led 22-16 with 5:14 left in the first period as Kevin Duckworth scored eight of his 10 first-quarter points in the opening six minutes.

A three-point play and a driving layup by Thomas started a 15-3 run that gave the Pistons a 31-25 edge. But a rebound basket by Drexler with 3.1 seconds left, Portland's eighth offensive rebound of the period, got the Trail Blazers within four at the end of the quarter.

Portland, which snapped Detroit's 10-game playoff winning streak at home on Thursday, won its first nine postseason appearances at Memorial Coliseum, which has been sold out for 579 consecutive games.

Portland outrebounded Detroit 14-8 in the period.

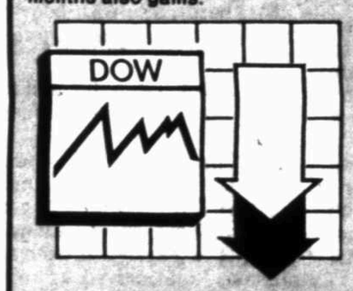
Futures mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Wholesale gasoline prices tumbled Friday while home heating oil and crude finished moderately higher.

Energy analysts said futures on the New York Mercantile Exchange bobbed up early in the session on rumors of a possible OPEC meeting to address the recent slump in oil prices. But the buying subsided when there was no confirmation that the oil cartel would meet.

Crude and heating oil managed to end the day with minor gains due to short covering, which is buying to compensate for previous sales.

The contract for July delivery of West Texas Intermediate closed at $16.78 a 42-gallon barrel, adding 11 cents. The contract lost 25 cents Thursday. Later months also gains.



Dow shows loss

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices showed a broad loss today as the decline of the past three sessions continued.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 37.86 points over the last three trading days, dropped 32.04 to 2,865.29 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 376 up, 1,065 down and 500 unchanged.

Rates were narrowly mixed in the credit markets today.

Dollar stronger

NEW YORK (AP) — Gold prices finished a sluggish week Friday on an upbeat note and the dollar finished the day stronger against major currencies.

Gold, which has been increasingly shunned by investors may have hit bottom on Thursday when the price in London reached a four-year low at $351.50 in morning trading, one analyst said.

"I think if the market was going to break $350 it would have happened this week," Bernard Savaiko, senior metals analyst at PaineWebber Inc. said.

Bullion for current delivery rose $1.10 to $355.70 a troy ounce on the New York Commodity Exchange. Republic National Bank of New York later quoted a bid of $355.00 a troy ounce, up $1.40 from late Thursday.

Coors recognizes Permian Distributing

There was some sparkle in the local beer industry Friday as Permian Distributing received a prestigious award from Coors Brewing Co.

PDI, which distributes Coors products throughout the Permian Basin, is one of only three Coors distributors nationwide — out of 680 — to receive the prestigious Founders Award.

Coors

The award is in recognition of two years of outstanding performance in the marketplace, according to PDI Vice President Tony Valadez.

"We're tickled to death," he stated, adding praise for the community support PDI has received.

Peter Coors, president of Coors Brewing and the fourth generation to head the company, traveled to Midland to present the award. "We're very proud of Larry (Stewart, PDI president), and his organization," he said.

The brewery, founded by Peter's great grandfather Adolph Coors in 1873, has traveled a bumpy road the past few years. The industry in general is suffering through a period of flat growth and intense competition, and Coors sees little change.

"I see industry trends as staying basically flat, which I think is pretty good, when all things are considered."

He went on to note that Coors is aggressively doing research and development on new products, and while he wouldn't elaborate, he said "there are some exciting things we're working on."

The problem, he says, is that his company is at full capacity, and until capacity is added, the company won't introduce any new products. In an effort to

Indictments send message to banks

■ Texas banks are being told they will be held responsible for officers' actions by indictments of several bank officers in a money-laundering scheme.

DALLAS (AP) — The recent indictments of several bank officers in connection with a money-laundering scheme should send a message to other Texas banks that they will be held responsible for their officers' actions, an Internal Revenue Service official said.

U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins said Frank W. Steele, former president of what is now NCNB-Texas Corsicana, and three other bank officers pleaded guilty to charges in a 42-count federal indictment.

James Kenneth Ward, former president of Red Oak State Bank, pleaded guilty to failing to keep and maintain bank records.

Two other former Corsicana bank officers, Melvin D. Novotny and Pamela K. Allen, also pleaded guilty Thursday, Collins said.

Pat Dorsey, chief of the IRS Criminal Investigations Division in Dallas, said the case should send a message to other Texas banks.

"The lesson for other banks to learn is that they will be held criminally responsible for the action of their officers," Dorsey said.

Dorsey said the guilty pleas are the state's first under new federal money-laundering statutes.

The indictment alleges that Steele and the others set up phony accounts and paid bonuses to themselves and other employees. It says the cash was kept in accounts at the Corsicana bank and other financial institutions under names to disguise its origin.

The indictment alleges the officers misapplied funds between March 1984 and December 1987. More than 100 employees, some of whom still work for the bank, were involved in the scheme, Dorsey said.

Corsicana employees were told the cash bonuses they received during a three-year period would not be reported to the IRS. None of those employees reported the awards to the proper authorities, Dorsey said.

Steele and Novotny, a former cashier, also are charged with conspiracy to make false bank entries and aiding and assisting in the preparation of false income tax returns. They face a maximum penalty of eight years in prison and a $500,000 fine.

GM, Soviets sign $1 billion pact

■ General Motors signs $1 billion agreement with the Soviet Union to sell auto parts. GM will receive payment in U.S. dollars rather than rubles.

By Doron P. Levin
N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — In a move that could foreshadow closer ties between the Soviet Union and American companies, General Motors signed a $1 billion agreement in the Soviet Union to sell auto parts to the largest Soviet auto maker.

Aside from the size of the five-year contract, the deal is significant because GM will receive payment from the Soviets in U.S. dollars.

It may also prove a test of whether American-style capitalism can profitably contribute to an important Communist industry that plans to expand exports to the West.

The currency issue has stymied many foreign corporations trying to do business in the Soviet Union, because of the difficulties of obtaining payments for products or services.

The Soviet ruble cannot be easily converted into dollars on international markets, the country's foreign currency reserves are not large and the Soviet Union has few products to trade to the West other than oil, vodka, furs and caviar.

GM, which has been talking to Soviet automotive officials for 18 months, said it would supply fuel injectors, wiring, electronic controls and catalytic converters to the Volga Automobile Works, known as VAZ, in Togliatti, 700 miles southeast of Moscow.

Shipments will start in 1992, GM said.

The parts, for systems that make fuel burn efficiently at lower levels of pollution, will be installed in two models of the Lada passenger car, GM said, so the cars can meet pending clean-air standards in the European Community.

The Soviets plan to export the Ladas to Western Europe after 1992.

"Pollution respects no international boundaries; neither should the proven technology to control it," said William Hoglund, a GM executive vice president in charge of component operations.

Hoglund acknowledged that GM, the world's largest auto maker, understood it was accepting some risk in the deal because of the Soviet Union's currency problems.

Moreover, the volume of GM sales to VAZ will ultimately depend on how well the Lada is received by European consumers.

Current versions of the economy car, which is based on the 20-year-old design of the Fiat 124, are sold in some Western European countries and in other markets, including Canada.

Britain is its largest European market. VAZ hopes at least to double current sales in Western Europe of about 50,000 cars a year, and perhaps reach sales of 150,000, GM said.

"If everything hangs together, this could be a good business opportunity for the Soviet Union," said David Nash, vice president of Autofacts Inc., an automotive consulting firm in Paoli, Pa.

It sells for about $10,000 in Britain, where cars tend to cost more than in the United States.

GM will manufacture the parts at several factories, including those in Melbourne, Australia; Southampton, England; Coopersville, Mich.; Rochester, N.Y., and Milwaukee.

COMPUTER NOTES

Pascal is good language for beginners

By Dennis Sever

Sever

Q. My twenty-three year old son will be hospitalized for an extended period after an auto accident. He has an interest in computers and programming and we would like to encourage him to pursue this interest. What programming language would you suggest he learn first?

A. I would suggest that he learn Pascal first.

This language has the kind of features in it that force the programmer to use good problem solving techniques. Pascal is also a very powerful, useful language and it is relatively simple and easily learned.

BASIC could be a first language. It is very simple to learn but it leaves a lot to be desired when it comes to forcing beginning programmers into the correct structuring of programs.

Q. I recently bought a box of diskettes that wouldn't work on my computer because they were hard sectored. I couldn't tell the difference between the diskettes that wouldn't work and those that do. How are they different?

A. If you examine the hard sectored diskettes carefully by turning the disk inside the jacket, you will see that there are several indexing holes (the small hole near the hub) in the coated mylar media. The soft sectored diskettes will have only one indexing hole in the media.

Q. My IBM-AT clone has recently been giving me fits every time I boot I have to go through the setup feature to reset the date and tell the computer about my disk drives and monitor. What has happened to my computer and what can I do about it?

A. I suspect that all that has happened is that your battery has lost its charge.

Somewhere on your motherboard or your clock/calendar card there is a small lithium battery (about the size of a quarter).

You need to replace this battery. Do not attempt to recharge a lithium battery (they explode). The procedure is simple. Just open the PC case and find the battery. It should be easy to spot and not too difficult to remove. Be sure to take care that you don't discharge a static shock to any of the system components.

Q. If I upgrade my operating system to OS/2 will I have to shelve all my MS-DOS software?

A. Not all of it.

Most MS-DOS software will execute in OS/2's MS-DOS compatibility mode. Of course, if you're in the DOS compatible mode, you will be unable to take advantage of OS/2's special features, such as multitasking.

Q. I am having trouble with a dBASE memo field. When I try to save after editing, it sometimes just beeps and I have to abort the save. What can I do?

A. That beep means that your memo field has exceeded 64 Kilobytes, which is the maximum size for a memo field.

All that you can do when this error occurs is delete enough text to reduce the field size to within the 64K limit, and then resave the field.

Q. Can I take my desktop computer to Europe with me? I've heard that the electricity over there is different.

A. Yes, the electricity is different. You will need a step-down transformer to change the electrical circuit from 220 volts at 50 mhz to 110 volts at 60 mhz.

You will need to plug the computer into the transformer and plug the transformer into the European circuit.

Regulators close four more banks

DALLAS (AP) — Four more banks were closed in Texas last week, bringing the total this year in Texas to 55.

All reopened with new owners.

Hulen National Bank of Fort Worth, Richmark Bank of Houston, Clifton National Bank of Clifton and Texas National Bank of El Paso were closed by federal regulators.

The closings Thursday bring the total number of failed banks in Texas this year to 55.

Richmark, with assets totaling $42.9 million, will reopen as part of the Hibernia National Bank of Pflugerville. Hibernia will assume about $41.5 million in deposit accounts and will pay the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. a purchase premium of $1.25 million.

Hibernia also will buy about $26.8 million of the failed bank's assets, including $2.6 million of the bank's small loans.

The FDIC will advance $13.5 million to Hibernia and retain the assets of the failed bank with a book value of $16.2 million, the agency said.

Hulen will reopen as a branch of First National Bank of Decatur, which will assume about $12.1 million in 2,300 deposit accounts and will purchase about $12.1 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of about $120,000, the FDIC said Thursday.

Clifton National Bank will reopen as part of First National Bank in Valley Mills. First National will assume about $12.9 million in 1,800 deposit accounts and will pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $2,500. It also will buy $10.8 million of the failed bank's loans and other assets.

The FDIC will advance about $2.1 million to the assuming bank and retain assets of Clifton with a book value of about $2.4 million. Clifton had total assets of $13.3 million.

Texas National Bank becomes branches of Texas Commerce Bank, El Paso, N.A., and its depositors automatically will become depositors of the assuming bank.

City officials offer to build repair complex

HOUSTON (AP) — Entering the bidding for a Continental Airlines project, city officials here offered to construct a $250 million aircraft repair complex in an effort to land 5,000 new jobs.

Twelve other cities also submitted bids Friday to attract a new Continental maintenance hangar and an engine overhaul operation. The airline will pick a list of finalists in the next few months and solicit sweetened offers.

The proposed Houston construction project is part of a large incentive package that includes job training, utility discounts, nearly $2 million in employee relocation benefits and the possibility of new road construction, officials said.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire put the value of the package at more than $100 million.

City officials initially had intended to approach Continental with three possible sites for the facilities, with two at Houston Intercontinental Airport and one at Ellington Field.

But Friday's proposal included only one site, a 300-acre lot on the south side of Intercontinental's east-west runway, said airport and economic development officials. Continental officials have expressed interest in the site over the last year.

"I think we put, absolutely, our best foot forward," Houston Aviation Director Paul B. Gaines said. "But you never know."

Meanwhile, Continental officials were noncommittal.

"We really are thrilled with the interest the proposed facilities have received," said airline spokesman Richard Danforth. "Any comment prior to the completion of the review would be premature."

Officials said Continental is seeking a 150-acre site for a $175 million aircraft maintenance facility that ultimately will employ 4,000 and have an annual payroll of $150 million.

The airline needs an additional 35 to 50 acres for a $75 million engine overhaul operation, which will provide 1,000 jobs and a $35 million annual payroll.

Competing with Houston for the Continental operations are Denver; Beaumont; San Antonio; Austin; Corpus Christi; El Paso; Texarkana, Ark.; Shreveport, La.; Phoenix; Tucson, Ariz.; Albuquerque, N.M.; and Tampa, Fla.

Continental said new maintenance facilities will replace a hangar at Denver's Stapleton Airport, which is slated to close in 1993.

Industry observers said that, of the 13 candidates, Houston and Denver are the leading contenders, since they are hubs, or primary links, in Continental's route system.

An airline, by placing repair facilities next to a hub, can save the time and money it would take to ferry planes to an out-of-the-way city.

Mediation fails in suit against Southwestern Bell

DALLAS (AP) — An attempt to resolve a federal lawsuit filed by the city of Mesquite against Southwestern Bell in a case that has wide-ranging implications has failed, according to court records.

Attorneys said talks will continue between the two sides although formal mediation has failed.

The city claims the phone company underpaid the city more than $10 million in franchise frees dating to 1975.

The case has drawn interest from other Texas cities and other utility companies because it could set important precedents, not only in terms of cities collecting fees they claim have been underpaid but also in the way future franchise agreements are negotiated.

Houston officials last year submitted a claim to Southwestern Bell for what they said was an underpayment of $35.8 million in franchise fees from 1984 through January 1987. Dallas officials currently are attempting to reach a new agreement with the company.

The fees are paid to cities by Southwestern Bell for access to public rights of way such as streets, alleys and sidewalks.

"Although the mediation session was not successful in setting the case, it has created a much more cooperative atmosphere among and between the parties and their counsel," Mesquite attorney Ray Besing wrote in a letter to U.S. District Judge Robert Maloney.

Travelers find alternatives to Greyhound

By David Briscoe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Train ridership is up, small bus companies are picking up more passengers and Lera Dwyer's van service is keeping two dozen Texas towns linked to the big city.

As Greyhound Lines Inc. tries to reorganize its finances under bankruptcy laws while pledging to continue most service with replacements for striking drivers, many travelers already are finding ways to cope without America's only nationwide bus system.

They may be paying more, waiting longer for connections and resorting to other transportation modes, but few have complained to Washington since 6,300 Greyhound drivers walked out March 2 in a pay and job security dispute.

"I haven't received a single call from any legislator, mayor, governor or anyone complaining about a lack of service because of the Greyhound strike," said Wayne J. Smith, executive director of the United Bus Operators of America.

"If there really is such a lack of service out there, I'm sure we would have heard from somebody," said Smith, whose group represents many of the nation's more than 2,000 independent bus companies.

In urban America, regional carriers are filling in where the scaled-down Greyhound has cut service, Smith said. In rural America, he said, people are relying more on the automobile or finding other alternatives.

Mrs. Dwyer, who owns Skylark Transportation in Wichita Falls, Texas, said the size of her little line has quadrupled since the Greyhound strike, with 10 small vans making daily round trips to Paris, Texarkana, Abilene and other communities abandoned by Greyhound.

Her drivers pick up vital farm machinery parts, fresh produce that has to arrive overnight, thread to keep a clothing plant running, valuable bull semen and perhaps a dozen passengers over loops of 170 miles or so.

With connections to Greyhound in Wichita Falls, trips that used to take a couple of hours can take six or more, but Mrs. Dwyer said she carries people to visit relatives and doctors they otherwise couldn't see.

"When Greyhound stopped, the buses were able to keep running on the freeways, but some of the little communities were without bus service," she said by telephone Tuesday. "And I've always been service-oriented."

"It would be a great blow if we lost Greyhound everywhere," Mrs. Dwyer said. "An awful lot of people who cannot or would not fly, I don't know how they would get around."

Amtrak officials are reluctant to credit the Greyhound strike with huge increases in passengers, but spokesman Clifford Black said, "We have gathered some Greyhound refugees and made them our own."

Overall, ridership on the national passenger railroad was up three percent over the previous year in the month before the strike. In March, it rose seven percent, and in the April figures released Tuesday, it was up 12 percent.

The new figures showed Amtrak ridership up 35 percent between Detroit and Chicago; 43 percent between Chicago and Carbondale, Ill.; 29 percent between Chicago and St. Louis; and 43 percent on the Chicago-Cincinnati-Washington-New York route.

Black said Amtrak personnel report that some passengers say they used to take the bus but will now keep riding the train even if Greyhound resumes full service.

Several small bus companies report increased ridership, although some say they are suffering along with Greyhound.

COORS: Concerned with improving the environment expand capacity, Coors recently purchased a brewery from Stroh's.

"We see tastes and attitudes about our projects changing, and we're trying to change to accomodate those changes," he said.

Besides his company, another subject near and dear to Coors' heart is the environment, and he is making sure his company is environmentally friendly.

"We started voluntary recycling in 1970," he points out, "and I've been trying to get the industry involved for the past 20 years."

The company is now working on a program to recycle its paper packaging, and Coors said that by this time next year, 50 percent of his company's corrugated paper packaging would be recycled, and within 5 years 100 percent of the packaging would be recycled.

He is also instituting a project, set to begin in August, called "Pure Water 2000" to which Coors is contributing $1 million in cash and advertising to clean up the nation's water supply by the year 2000. This project will be worked in conjunction with the company's distributors.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Late stock certificate not 'primrose path'

By Bill Doyle

Q. On Jan. 24, I purchased 100 shares of stock in a very large company through a broker. When the stock certificate had not been delivered by the end of February, I phoned the broker and was told it takes six to eight weeks for delivery.

I phoned again early in April and told the broker I still hadn't received the certificate and asked him to check on it. A few days later, I received forms to fill out and return. I did. On April 24, I called the broker again and was told to be patient and check back in the middle of May. That time has passed. Still no certificate.

Am I being led down a primrose path? If so, what recourse do I have?

A. My dictionary lists a number of definitions for primrose path, including: "A course of action that can lead to disaster." It's most unlikely you need to worry about that. Inconvenience, yes; disaster, no.

Doyle

You became the owner of those 100 shares the very minute your buy order was executed. The date of your purchase — the "trade date" — is listed on the confirmation statement you received from the brokerage firm.

Since then, you should have received periodic statements — typically monthly — from the brokerage showing you are "long" those 100 shares, meaning you own them.

The stock you named in your letter pays dividends every three months. The periodic statements should show that money is being held in your brokerage account. Tell the broker to send you a check — immediately.

The disaster part of the primrose path definition just might apply if you did not receive a confirmation statement shortly after your purchase, if you are not receiving periodic statements and/or the dividend has not been credited to your brokerage account.

In that case, you should complain to the Securities and Exchange Commission and the stock exchange in which the brokerage firm is a member.

When everything goes properly, a stock certificate is delivered to an investor who requests it about two or three weeks after the trade date. But delays such as you have encountered do happen.

Q. We would like to have our stocks registered in my name "or" my wife's name. Transfer agents for the stocks say this is not permitted. They say that, rather than the word "or," we must use "and." Is this true?

A. Absolutely. Think it through and you will realize why.

Each share of stock represents a share of ownership in a company. Ownership of an asset — stock — can be by one person. Ownership can be by two or more persons, with the word "and" between the names. An asset can't be owned by someone "or" someone else.

To head off a batch of mail, I am well aware that U.S. Savings Bonds and U.S. Treasury securities can be in co-ownership form with "or" between the names. But those securities are debt obligations of the federal government — not shares of ownership. The same co-ownership arrangement applies to bank deposits, which are liabilities of the banks.

Q. My broker recently wrote me that his firm has a new policy prohibiting the purchase of securities issued by companies registered or incorporated in South Africa.

Do SEC regulations permit licensed brokers to refuse clients's instruction to purchase shares of stocks listed on exchanges?

A. Sure. Brokerage firms are not required to accept every purchase or sale order they receive. Many brokerages refuse various types of business. Lately, an increasing number have been turning down buy orders for South African stocks.

Conagra to purchase Beatrice for $1 billion

N.Y. Times News Service

In a surprise announcement, Conagra Inc. said Thursday that it had agreed to buy Beatrice Co. for $1.34 billion in a combination that will create the nation's second-largest food company.

For Beatrice's owners, Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., the sale will end a frustrating ownership. The buyout specialist took Beatrice private in 1986 in a $6.2 billion leveraged deal that was later dwarfed by its $25 billion buyout of RJR Nabisco Inc.

Aggressively selling off Beatrice assets in the first two years, Kohlberg, Kravis has recently found few buyers for the remaining assets, partly because of sluggish earnings prospects for the food business.

Indeed, the firm originally expected to get as much as $3 billion for Beatrice, but it is settling for less than half that.

Revolutionary parties win Czech election

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The two political groups that broke the grip of Communist rule on Czechoslovakia won the first free election in 44 years and Sunday began considering possible partners in a new coalition government.

Official results showed that Civic Forum and Public Against Violence — the Czech and Slovak sister organizations that led November's pro-democracy revolution — had captured the most seats in the new federal Parliament.

The two movements won 169 of the 300 seats in the bicameral Parliament, but they fell short of the three-fifths majority needed to make key constitutional and economic reforms necessary to fulfill the goals of the revolution.

Havel

The Civic Forum, founded by President Vaclav Havel, had said before the election Friday and Saturday that it would seek a coalition government.

The big surprise was the strong showing by the Communists, who finished in second place with 48 seats. The Christian Democrats, who had been favored for second place, finished third with 40 seats.

Both Civic Forum and the Christian Democrats have ruled out a coalition with the Communists.

Three parties representing separatist, regional interests were the only other groups to clear the 5 percent minimum vote required in either the Czech or Slovak republic to get votes. The seat totals for all the parties may change slightly under the complex system of allocating votes.

Turnout among the 11.2 million electors was 96.7 percent, the highest percentage in central or Eastern Europe's recent spate of elections.

"Already now, we can say that the longing for freedom, democracy and a different order prevailed in this election," Havel told state TV just after the results were announced on national television.

The outcomes reflect the very different histories of six nations who share only the common past of four decades of Stalinism, with the voters choosing parties that most embody the varying national traditions.

In Czechoslovakia, Havel has assumed a role very similar to that of a man he often cites as a model, Thomas Garrigue Masaryk, the founder of modern Czechoslovakia in 1918. Masaryk's motto, "Truth will prevail," has given way to Havel's: "Truth and love must prevail over lies and hatred."

Liberian rebels may be in control of airport

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Rebels won control of Liberia's international airport and recaptured most of a rubber plantation outside the embattled capital, witnesses said Sunday.

The rebels now maintain control of most of this West African nation of 2.5 million. The 5½-month-old civil war has left more than 1,000 dead.

The main Robertsfield International Airport outside Monrovia had already been closed for a week by fighting.

Witnesses said Sunday the rebels had taken Smell-No-Taste, a village that had a small army garrison a few hundred yards from the runway, putting the airport under their control.

The village's names dates back to World War II, when U.S. soldiers were camped at the airport and villagers nearby could smell their cooking but never tasted it.

The reports of rebel gains came on the eve of peace talks that were to begin today at the U.S. Embassy in Freetown, in neighboring Sierra Leone.

The rebels, led by Charles Taylor, and the government were sending delegations, and the Liberian Council of Churches was to mediate.

People fleeing the fighting outside the capital said Sunday that the rebels held most of the American-managed Bridgestone-Firestone rubber plantation 35 miles from Monrovia during the weekend.

The rebels appeared to have cut off some of 300 government troops who had been sent on a counter-offensive to recapture the world's largest rubber plantation.

Witnesses said soldiers appeared to have been driven into two of the plantation's many compounds. With them were thousands of refugees of who have fled fighting further north.

The United States arranged to fly 362 people from the small Spriggs Payne Airfield aboard three chartered Air Guinea flights to Ivory Coast's capital, Abidjan, and then on to Charleston, S.C.

"We're tired, we're happy to be out, but we left a lot of friends back there, so we're sorry for them," said Johnny Connelly, a 26-year-old missionary from Madison, Ga., who arrived in Abidjan Sunday with his wife, Janice, and their 2-year-old son, Josiah.

Rosalind Towe put her 3-year-old daughter, Zanwhea, an American, aboard a flight out of Monrovia. Although the child is American, Towe is Liberian and could not board the plane.

"It is better if she leaves," she said. "If I have to run for my life I can't run with her."

The West German Embassy said Sunday it had arranged for a charter flight to evacuate its citizens today.

80 graves desecrated in American Jewish cemetery

JERUSALEM (AP) — Vandals desecrated 80 tombstones in the American section of the more than 2,500-year-old cemetery on the biblical Mount of Olives, police said Sunday.

Police took the cemetery's Arab guard in for questioning after the desecration was discovered early Sunday. A police spokesman said there were no suspects.

Israel television said, however, that police suspected Palestinian nationalists were behind the attack.

Jewish tradition holds that the Mount of Olives is where the Messiah will appear and the Prophet Ezekiel will blow the trumpet of resurrection. Many prominent rabbis are buried in the cemetery, the largest and oldest Jewish graveyard in the world.

Rock-hewn tombs at the foot of the mountain date back to the time of King Solomon's temple, which was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C.

Some 80 tombstones or raised limestone graves were smashed, crushed or toppled in two sections of the graveyard, located on the side of the biblical mount in annexed east Jerusalem overlooking the walls of the Old City.

Flowers and memorial candles were strewn over the site, and the names of many of the deceased could not be read because of the damage.

"They must have come here with 12-pound hammers. I don't know how they didn't hear this," Yonatan Shamai said, pointing to Arab homes some 50 yards away.

Ruling party takes lead in Bulgaria

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — The ruling Socialist Party, formerly the Communist Party, held a commanding lead over the opposition in initial projections of Sunday's voting in Bulgaria's first free elections in 58 years.

The winner in the balloting will set the tone for what is expected to be a coalition government.

The ruling Socialist Party, formerly the Communist Party and once Moscow's most loyal follower, favors slow economic reforms. The main opposition alliance, the Union of Democratic Forces, wants a swift move to a Western-style market economy.

In Bulgaria, unlike other East bloc countries where street demonstrations brought down Communist regimes, reform Communists engineered the nation's drive to democracy.

The Communist Party also has a long and successful tradition in Bulgaria. The party predates its Soviet counterpart and captured 20 percent of the vote in the nation's last free elections in 1932.

The Association for Free and Fair Elections, a Bulgarian monitoring group, gave the Socialists 48.3 percent of the ballots against 34.9 percent for the Union of Democratic Forces and 8.3 percent for the Agrarian Party. The association has 10,00 people monitoring the elections.

Its projection was based on results from 37.7 percent of the vote cast in the 200 races that will be decided by a proportional vote. The forecast was supported by the U.S. National Democratic Institute for International Affairs.

Half of parliament's 400 seats are allocated on the basis of proportional representation while the other 200 go to candidates who receive more than 50 percent of the vote in direct balloting.

The West German polling organization Infas also said the Socialists were leading the opposition coalition in the elections, state media reported.

In areas heavily populated by the 1.5 million ethnic Turk minority, the Movement for Rights and Freedoms led by Ahmed Dogan apparently received about 80 percent of the vote, the state BTA news agency reported.

BTA said final official results were expected to be released by late today.

The main task of the unicameral parliament, the Grand National Assembly, will be to write a new constitution to usher in democratic and economic reforms.

The Central Electoral Commission said late Sunday that at least 84 percent of Bulgaria's 6.4-million eligible voters cast ballots.

Bulgaria, a country of nearly 9 million, last held multiparty elections in 1932.

There were scattered reports of irregularities, including allegations of stolen ballot papers and last-minute campaigning, banned under electoral law. In some polling stations, voting was suspended because of a shortage of ballot papers, officials said.

Electoral Commission President Zhivko Stalev said voting was only delayed to put new ballot papers in booths.

"Given the fact that these are the first free elections, and against the background of the elections as a whole, I would say that those minor infractions could not be regarded as something discrediting the elections as a whole," he said.

In the race, 3,143 candidates from 38 parties vied for seats in the Grand National Assembly.

Sofia residents began voting as soon as polls opened at 7 a.m. The voting stations officially closed at 6 p.m. but remained open in some areas so all those on line could cast ballots.

The assembly's goals will be to deal with growing inflation, a $10 billion foreign debt and acute shortages of basic consumer items including sugar and cheese.

The country's march toward democracy began with the ouster of Zhivkov in November. Bulgaria becomes the fifth Soviet bloc nation to hold multiparty elections in the last four months after decades of one-party Communist rule.

Many survivors just now dealing with Holocaust trauma

By Nicolas B. Tatro

JERUSALEM (AP) — Only now, 45 years after World War II ended in Europe, are many Jewish survivors coming to grips with the trauma they suffered at the hands of Nazi Germany.

A recent survey found that 302,404 of the nearly 1 million Holocaust survivors who fled to Israel from Europe were still alive. Most are 65 to 80, an age at which experts say they will be taking stock of their lives.

"The natural process of aging takes people back to deal with their pasts, to make an account with their souls," said Ilana Nahmias, director of Amcha, which provides psychological counseling for survivors.

Many seek a sympathetic ear for their nightmares, paranoia, loneliness.

Scores have turned to Amcha, which has about 35 volunteer workers at its offices in Jerusalem and Ramat Gan, a suburb of Tel Aviv. Many of the volunteers are children of survivors.

Amcha, a non-profit organization, was the first recipient of reparations from East Germany, in the form of a $3.6 million grant in April. Its name means "people" or "your people" in Hebrew, and was a password Holocaust survivors in Europe used to identify each other.

Its cases include:

■ A 60-year-old man who spent the war years hiding from the Nazis with the help of farmers, and never shared his experiences with his family. The home atmosphere became tense and his children had trouble "fitting into the outside world."

■ A 72-year-old survivor, not given to dwelling on the past, who began thinking constantly of his life in a concentration camp. He was overwhelmed by a need to talk, but did not want to burden his wife with his private terrors because she, too, had lived through the Holocaust.

■ A man in his 70s who could not sleep because of a secret he could not tell his daughter: that he had had a first wife and son who were killed by the Nazis while he stood helpless.

Counseling helped the first two and their families, but the third man left the program after one session and refused the center's proposal to arrange for his daughter to join him in a meeting with counselors.

Nahmias said there were several cases of survivors who had not told relatives and close friends about first families, either because it was too painful or because they felt shame for not preventing the deaths.

"We don't say we can cure pain," she said. "We have no recipe. But many feel they are going to explode, that they have to tell about their experience now or it will be lost. If they feel a little better, it's a lot."

Some prefer talking to a tape recorder, she said, and the center has 200 hours of recorded testimonies.

"The survivor can come and talk about what he wants," said Nahmias, a former colonel in the army women's corps. "We don't try to find out if it's true or matches historical events. It's enough if that's how he remembers something or how he wants to be remembered."

Several cases involve survivors who were children during the Holocaust. About 50,000 child victims live in Israel. To protect their privacy, Nahmias did not reveal the names of any of the survivors.

The Amcha director related the case of a 55-year-old woman who, when her daughter left home to get married, was suddenly faced again with the fear of separation she felt as a child. While on the run from the Nazis, she had been passed from family to family 17 times.

Nahmias said many child survivors were reluctant to speak of their experiences because they felt the suffering of those in the death camps was so much greater.

"I didn't want to talk as a child; I was ashamed of it," said Yossi Peled, who survived by hiding with a Christian family in Belgium and now is a major general in Israel's army.

Eli and Shoshana Heyman, a German-born couple who survived work camps and Auschwitz and now work as Amcha volunteers, said Holocaust victims have difficulty speaking of it because non-survivors cannot relate to their experience.

"Sometimes you see it in their eyes; they want to understand, but they can't," said Shoshana Heyman, who is in charge of Amcha's archives. "It's impossible. When you want to explain, it sounds so horrid that you can't explain."

Likud forms new government despite defection threats

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir won approval Sunday from his right-wing Likud bloc to form a new government, but several key coalition members threatened not to support the alliance in a crucial vote.

Late Sunday, top officials in the ultra-Orthodox Shas Party presented Likud with a series of ultimatums demanding an end to a police inquiry into the actions of Interior Minister Aryeh Deri, the Shas leader. Shas is a member of Shamir's proposed coalition and was instrumental in toppling the last government.

Israel television said Shas' spiritual leaders, the Council of Torah Sages, would decide whether to support Likud in the vote today after it received a reply to their demands.

Likud's ruling Central Committee gave Shamir its blessing by an overwhelming show of hands after the 74-year-old prime minister outlined the policies of his new coalition in an passionate speech, promising to strive for peace.

"Tomorrow we open a new page in the life of the state, in which Likud will play a central and essential role," he said. "We shall talk peace to all the world, and shall not become tired in assuring everybody that we want peace, and shall not stop working for peace."

Shamir is due to present a government with religious and right-wing parties to the 120-member Parliament on Monday, but he left open the possibility of seeking a delay. A new government would replace Likud's alliance with the left-leaning Labor Party, which fell apart in March over how to proceed with a U.S. peace plan.

Friday, Likud signed a coalition agreement with nine small factions, claiming 62 votes in the 120-member Knesset, or parliament, which has to approve a government before it takes power.

But last-minute difficulties arose Sunday after four legislators belonging to various factions within the Likud, angered by Shamir's refusal to give them Cabinet posts, threatened to abstain or vote against the government.

Shamir indicated he might try to postpone the parliament vote due to the internal bickering.

Late Sunday night, Shas, which has five parliament seats, held an emergency meeting and presented Likud with demands and ultimatums aimed at stopping the inquiry into Deri's actions.

A communique released by national police spokesman Adi Gonen Sunday said Deri would be investigated on suspicion of "fraud and breach of confidence in what is linked to allocations of money from the Interior Ministry budget to all kinds of religious institutions."

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S. Jews praise Mandela's views

GENEVA (AP) — U.S. Jewish leaders who met with Nelson Mandela Sunday praised the black nationalist for recognizing Israel's right to exist and said he should be warmly welcomed when he visits the United States.

The Jewish leaders said their meeting with Mandela exceeded their "fondest expectations," even though they said he called for direct talks between Israel and the PLO and urged Israel to surrender the occupied territories.

Henry Siegman, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, told journalists after the 2½ hour meeting that Mandela said his African National Congress "accepts unequivocally the existence of the state of Israel, not only de facto but also its legal right to exist ... within secure borders."

There was no immediate comment from Mandela. Officials said he left on a Swissair flight for Frankfurt, West Germany.

Several U.S. Jewish groups recently said they would protest Mandela's visit to the United States because he compared the struggle of Palestinians to that of black South Africans and publicly embraced PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

Singer ends 31-year exile

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South African singer Miriam Makeba, who won international acclaim during her 31 years in exile, had an emotional homecoming Sunday.

Ms. Makeba, often called "Mama Africa" and "the Empress of African Song," left South Africa in 1959 and has lived since in the United States, France, Guinea in West Africa and most recently in Belgium.

"I'm very happy to be home," she told an airport news conference. "But I think I'll be even happier when I can come back to sing before my people, where I'll not have to explain my songs because they will understand."

Ms. Makeba, who said she would spend one to two weeks visiting family and friends, did not plan to perform during her stay.

She was greeted by a crowd of fans and friends including leading South African musicians who joined her in singing "God Bless Africa," the anthem of the anti-apartheid movement.

Iran's fair backs Moslems

BAALBEK, Lebanon (AP) — In an odd mix of commercial boosterism and Islamic solidarity, Iran staged a huge trade fair here Sunday to show its support for Moslems fighting the Christians in Lebanon's 15-year-old civil war.

Among the wares on display were racy underwear to be worn under women's all-concealing chadors and children's books praising bloody Islamic martyrdom.

An Iranian deputy minister of commerce, identified only as Zaferian, said the event was designed to "indicate the special concern that officials in Iran feel for the Moslems of Lebanon."

Lebanon is the only country outside Iran where the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's brand of Shiite Moslem fundamentalism has taken root. Although Lebanon's 1.2 million Shiites make up the country's largest single sect, they have long languished at the bottom of the social ladder.

INDOOR SLIDE

When the weather keeps the kids indoors, they become easily bored. But when you build this indoor slide for them, they can channel their pent-up energies into safe, constructive play. Built from one 24" x 24" sheet of exterior plywood, one 48" x 48" sheet of hardboard and a few 2 x 2's, the finished slide measures 20" wide by 36" high and 61" long. Just follow the photos, drawings and step-by-step directions.
