Elderly care plan provides insurance

By JERRY ESTILL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's proposal to provide the elderly with Medicare protection against massive hospital and doctor bills is being greeted as a welcome but limited step by health care activists in Congress.

While the plan embraced Thursday by Reagan also outlines potential approaches for improving health insurance for Americans under 65, as well as long-term nursing home care, the immediate focus is on acute care for Medicare beneficiaries.

Under the proposal, Medicare recipients could insure themselves against more than $2,000 a year in out-of-pocket hospital and doctor bills by paying an additional $4.92 a month under the Part B coverage that now costs $17.90 monthly.

Part B generally covers doctor bills and is voluntary, although about 98 percent of the elderly take the coverage. Part A of Medicare pays hospital bills and is financed through Social Security tax deductions.

Still not covered under the expanded Medicare program drafted by Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen would be bills for drugs and eye and dental care, as well as long-term nursing home care.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House Commerce health subcommittee, said the president's move was "an important first step," but noted the plan does not offer a specific solution to paying for long-term nursing home care.

"Now we in the Congress will have to make the hard decisions about whether this limited proposal is an adequate response or whether we can do more to assist Americans who are severely ill," Waxman said in a statement.

Reagan overruled conservative opposition within his administration to recommend the Bowen plan, which already has received wide bipartisan support.

Moon greets Friday the 13th

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — As if it weren't bad enough that today is Friday the 13th, there's a full moon tonight.

Barbara Janus, a self-proclaimed witch who lives in East Millstone, says the 13th and a full moon combine to create extra pressure for procrastinators who let problems brew.

A purple candle should help, she said.

However, astrologers said Thursday that the so-called unlucky number only plays on people's fears.

A full moon exerts a greater gravitational pull on the Earth, and astrologers said it also affects the human body by bringing emotions to the fore.

"People might like to stay home and make love," said Steven Joseph Sinopoli, an astrologer and teacher at the Academy of Astrology in Clifton. "That's the best thing to do."

Madame Mary, a card and palm reader in Clementon, said more babies were conceived during full moons.

The last two times a full moon and Friday the 13th fell on the same day were July 13, 1984, and Nov. 13, 1970, said Edison astrologer Judith Aurora Ryan.

Christmas retail sales: Santa takes a pounding

By LARRY HOLLIS
News Editor

Hampered by continuing economic troubles, total 1986 Christmas sales in Pampa dropped to the lowest amount recorded in the past five years, according to state Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Pampa received a sales tax payment this month of $175,289, representing the city's rebate from its 1 percent sales tax on retail sales and services made in December.

The payment indicates total sales of $17.5 million during the Christmas season. While the December sales more than doubled the $7.4 million registered in November, the monthly total fell approximately $4.7 million from the $22.2 million in sales achieved in December 1985.

Christmas sales improved the percentage of total payments for the first two payments of 1987, but sales are still down more than 20 percent from comparable 1986 payments.

February's check makes the first two payments for the year stand at $248,894, representing total sales of nearly $25 million for November and December. But those two months together equal the nearly $25 million recorded for December 1986 alone.

According to Bullock's monthly report, Pampa's sales for the last two months of 1986 are down 22.77 percent from the last two months of 1985. Then total payments stood at $322,274, representing sales of approximately $32.2 million for November and December.

Last month, when the first check for the new year was received, Bullock listed Pampa with a 26.29 percent drop from the previous year.

February checks represent taxes collected on sales made in December and reported to the Comptroller by Jan. 20. Under Bullock's reporting system, January's payments represent the first payment of the year even

Valentine's Day lovers: A renewal, a beginning

Newlyweds double-dated with other partners

Love is the key to 70 years of wedlock

WHITE DEER — Newlyweds Gary and Amy O'Neal of White Deer, both 23, were settling into their new home when Wheeler's Howard and Martha Leake celebrated their 70th anniversary Feb. 4.

For the O'Neals, love was better the second time around.

They met as freshmen at Clarendon College. At that time, the closest the O'Neals came to a romantic relationship was a double date — with other people.

"We were just friends, lab partners in one class," the former Amy Kennon recalls. "Then he went to Lubbock, and I went to West Texas State University."

Amy got her degree in elementary education from WT and her first job as a third-grade teacher at Skellytown Elementary School.

WHEELER — Howard and Martha Leake's room at the Wheeler Care Center is sparse.

The walls are decorated only with valentine cards and a feed store calendar. Over Martha's bed, however, there is a small wooden plaque bearing 1 Corinthians 13 — the Bible's "love chapter."

She says love has been the key to keeping the couple married for these 70 years and 10 days.

"I don't know how to do it, except just being happy," she said.

"He says giving and taking is the reason," Martha adds, gently taking Howard's quivering hand in hers. "He always said you do what you need to for the house, and I'll get what I need for the barn."

Howard, 96, and Martha, 90, wed Feb. 4, 1917, in Hall County.

They had met but a year earlier; they don't re-

Fire report

Newlyweds

Gary, fresh out of Texas Tech with a degree in animal science, had come home to farm with his father in White Deer.

"I heard she was up there, and I wasn't dating anyone at the time, so we went from there," Gary remembers.

This time, Cupid was ready.

"The third date, we started talking about marriage," she remembers.

"I just knew she was very special," he says. "I know she is very sincere, very honest."

"And he's got the best sense of humor," she says. "He always made me laugh. We had such a good time."

Like the Leake's courtship 70 years earlier, there was no formal wedding proposal with Gary and Amy. They just kept it quiet through fall.

"We made it common knowledge around Thanksgiving," Amy says.

During that time, the couple not only went on dates to dinner and the movies, they also underwent pre-marital counseling.

"We met with her pastor in Amarillo for about five times," Gary recalls. "He told us to set a good foundation for our marriage, and that's kind of what we both felt about it."

"We promised each other that we would not go to bed angry," she says.

And, so far, it has worked, he says, adding they have had no disagreements in their two-weeks of marriage.

"We'd sure recommend pre-marital counseling for people wanting to get married," she adds.

Gary and Amy say they had no trouble getting parental approval for their marriage.

The couple wed on Jan. 30 and settled into their school-owned duplex after a rushed weekend honeymoon at a posh Amarillo hotel. Amy had to get back to school that Monday, after all.

"The kids at school were so excited about it," she says. "I recently took our wedding pictures to school, and they got to look at them. They thought that was exciting."

Although the couple is still at the taking - things - one - day - at - a - time stage, they are looking toward the future.

"We'll want to have kids some time," she says. They have no idea what to expect from their 50th wedding anniversary.

"I know it will take lots of love and understanding," she says.

"What we're doing now," he interjects.

"I guess it's easier for us," he adds. "We have pretty much the same goals for the future. And it seems like we think along the same lines."

She is thankful that they completed college before they got married.

"We have our careers and our personal lives pretty much in order," she says. "We don't have to struggle through school."

"I don't know what to expect from a 50th anniversary," he reflects. "But I know we'll get there."

Love

member where, when or how. They disagree on whether it was love at first sight.

"Oh, no," she says with a coy laugh.

He flashes a sly smile and nods.

"I had a good looking horse and buggy," he says.

"That was what the girls always fell for."

He had come to the Texas Panhandle with his family from Alabama; she from Fort Worth.

They spent their early days together along the sandy banks of the Red River, taking Kodak pictures, Martha recalls.

"We'd take pictures of us, and take pictures of our friends," she says. "Summertime was the most fun time. We'd go out and steal watermelons at night in the summertime."

The Leakes don't remember a formal marriage proposal.

"We just gradually worked up to it," Howard says.

She remembers her parents were pleased when Leake asked for her hand in marriage.

"We were married on a cold and snowy day," Leake recalls.

Their courtship lasted through the summer and fall of 1916 — that last innocent year before American doughboys went "Over There" in World War I.

Howard Leake didn't go, however.

"He was too good of a farmer," his wife explains.

"I was already married and had one child," he recalls.

The newlyweds settled near the tiny riverside community of Plaska and soon gave birth to a daughter, Zorene, a combination of Zola and Irene, two of Leake's former girlfriends. The couple eventually had four children.

Martha remembers the early days on the farm.

"He farmed with a plow and six mules," she said. "He paid $800 for a spread of mules to farm with. And Mary Bledsoe (a longtime family friend) said 'I would have quit him for that.' But I didn't dare say no."

In 1921, the couple moved to their farm east of Shamrock, where they stayed for 65 years.

During that time, Leake went from farming and cotton hulling to clerical work at Sims' Grocery, to work on oil well casing crews, to Depression years government work, to carpentry.

"I couldn't work in my fields too much, I had asthma too bad," he says.

She was a dressmaker who did alterations at a women's ready-to-wear in Shamrock for several years before she quit and did private work at her home.

"And I never had a customer who wasn't pleased," she says, beaming.

Howard and Martha couldn't think of any advice for newlyweds. They didn't even have much to say to their children when they got married.

The couple's daughter, Cornelia Gehrke of Stillwater, Minn., recalls her mother's advice: "The only thing mom told me when I got married was, 'Don't bother to come back, because if you do, I'll turn you around and send you back to him.'"

Martha's advice to young lovers today: "I really don't know what I'd say. If they don't know, what could I tell them?"

Sales

though the sales figures are from November.

The past December sales don't represent the greatest drop in the past five years, however. In December 1983 total sales of $18 million were approximately $6.9 million under the nearly $25 million recorded in December 1982.

Christmas season sales climbed back to $19.8 million in December 1984 and then upward again to $22.1 million in 1985 before plummeting again last year, dipping about half a million dollars below the 1983 Christmas season.

There's some minor discrepancies in comparing the figures accurately for the past five years, however, since additional goods, items and services were made subject to the sales tax just over two years ago. But the figures can be used for general comparison.

The downward trend for Pampa is matched in varying degrees throughout the state. Bullock sent checks this month totaling $125.1 million in local tax payments to the 1,038 cities levying the 1 percent local sales tax. The comptroller said payments to date this year are down 5 percent from a year ago. In February 1986, the state as a whole was recording a 12 percent increase over 1985.

The two other Gray County cities having the sales tax also showed significant decreases in Christmas sales.

Bullock sent Lefors a February check for $1,944, approximately $540 under the $2,485 payment received a year ago. Total payments for the year to date are the same, since Lefors received no January check. Bullock listed Lefors with a 21.77 percent decline; at this time last year, Lefors was registering a 67.93 percent increase above the previous year.

McLean had a check this month for $2,605, approximately $750 less than the $3,356 payment received last February. Total payments for the year to date are $3,600, dropping 15.31 percent from the $4,251 total listed a year ago.

In surrounding cities having the sales tax in The Pampa News' circulation area, only two bucked the trend to record higher sales for November and December.

In Roberts County, Miami had a February check for $2,938, up from the $2,669 received a year ago. Total payments for the first two months of the year are $3,916, jumping 15.43 percent above the $3,393 total listed a year ago, according to Bullock's report. In February 1986, Miami recorded a 6.69 percent decline from the previous year.

Mobeetie had a check this month for $551, down approximately $420 from the February 1986 payment. But its total yearly payments to date, standing at $1,240 including the January payment (it had no payment in January 1985) pushes the Wheeler County city 27.48 percent above a year ago. Then Mobeetie was listed with a 28.21 percent decrease from the $1,240 in payments recorded for the first two checks of 1986.

Elsewhere in Wheeler County, however, the trend held.

Wheeler had a February payment of $5,842, down from the $6,407 received a year ago. Its yearly payments to date total $8,021, falling 11.73 percent below the $9,087 total registered at this time in 1986. A year ago Bullock listed Wheeler with a 23.96 percent increase in sales.

The state sent Shamrock a sales tax payment of $14,505 this month, some $2,200 less than the $16,741 check received last February. Total payments for the year to date are $19,447, dropping 15.15 percent from the $22,919 total for the same period a year ago. In February 1986, Shamrock was recording a 3.40 percent increase.

In Hemphill County, Canadian had a payment this month of $14,691, down nearly $3,200 from the $17,862 check received last February. Its yearly payments to date stand at $20,444, dropping 22.90 percent from the $26,518 total listed a year ago, when it registered a 0.52 percent increase above comparable 1985 period payments.

In Carson County, all four cities were down from a year ago.

Skellytown had the largest decline. It had a check this month for $1,120, down from the $1,472 received last February. For the year to date, its payments stand at $1,773, plummeting 31.70 percent from the $2,596 recorded in February 1986. A year ago Bullock listed Skellytown with an 8.41 percent drop from comparable 1985 payments.

Bullock sent Groom a February check for $2,228; a year ago it had a payment of $2,571. Its yearly payments to date are $3,064, down 22.62 percent from the $3,960 total listed at this time last year. A year ago Groom was registering a 32.70 percent jump over comparable 1985 payments.

White Deer received a payment this month of $2,624, dropping $700 below the February 1986 payment. For the year to date, the city has received checks totaling $3,923, down slightly 0.11 percent from the $3,928 a year ago. But in January White Deer was listed with a 31.64 percent hike from the previous year.

The state sent Panhandle a payment of $6,938, down more than $2,200 from the $9,177 payment a year ago. Its total payments for the year to date are $9,050, falling 14.92 percent under the $10,638 recorded at this time last year.

Appeals court upholds award Texaco must pay Pennzoil

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil Co. won the second round of its multi-billion court battle with rival oil giant Texaco Inc. as a Texas appeals court upheld most of an unprecedented $10.53 billion judgment against Texaco for interfering in a planned Pennzoil-Getty Oil Co. merger.

The 1st Texas Court of Appeals Thursday in a 162-page ruling rejected Texaco's contention that 90 errors occurred in the 1985 trial in a state district court in Houston.

The appeals court confirmed one claim, Texaco's contention that the punitive award of $3 billion was excessive. It lowered that award to $1 billion but kept the $7.53 billion in compensatory damages.

"There is a point where punitive damages may overstate their purpose and serve to confiscate rather than to deter or punish," the three-judge panel said. "In this case, punitive damages of $1 billion are sufficient to satisfy any reason for their being awarded.

"Though the compensatory damages are large, they are supported by the evidence, and were not the result of mere passion, prejudice or improper motive."

Texaco angrily criticized the ruling, promising an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

"Today's decision continues to support an outrageous judgment totally at odds with both the law and the facts surrounding Texaco's acquisition of Getty Oil Co. in 1984," said James W. Kinnear, chief executive officer of the White Plains, N.Y.-based company.

"The court's reduction of the unlawful and outrageous punitive damage award cannot be allowed to mask the absurdity of today's basic ruling. The modified judgment of the $8.53 billion plus accrued interest is so clearly unlawful and grossly excessive that it demands reversal by a higher court." Pennzoil lead attorney Joe Jamail, asked what his next move would be, replied, "We cash the check."

"It's very exciting, very gratifying to have the actual damages confirmed totally," J. Hugh Liedtke, chief executive officer of Houston-based Pennzoil, said. "It also is gratifying to find that while the court did reduce the punitive damages somewhat, it still left a billion intact."

The decision emphasized that Texaco's actions interfering in the planned Pennzoil-Getty merger were deliberate and would not be tolerated, he said.

"I feel pretty good, I'm a happy man today. I've been waiting for this a long time," Jamail said.

According to Pennzoil estimates, the appeals ruling lowers the interest to $2.5 million a day — down by $500,000 daily — and decreases the total award, which had reached $12.4 billion, to $10.2

billion, said company spokesman Bob Harper.

In any event, the judgment is the largest in U.S. history.

The appeals panel said that although it had received many briefs complaining the award would have a negative impact on states, industries and Texaco shareholders, it legally could not change the jury's decision.

"We are sympathetic with those who might be affected by the verdict through no fault of their own," the judges said. "(But) we are not authorized by law to substitute our judgment for that of the jury and to make redress as we deem appropriate."

State District Judge Solomon Casseb Jr., who stepped in as presiding trial judge when State District Judge Anthony Farris became ill, upheld the damage award.

"This is a clear signal to Texaco that they better try and settle this thing,"

Gerald Treece, a South Texas College of Law professor who has followed the case closely, said of Thursday's ruling.

Both sides have negotiated several times but have been unable to reach agreement.

Last July, Texaco asked the appeals court to set aside the judgment, but to appeal under Texas law, Texaco had to post a potentially ruinous $12 billion bond. A federal court in White Plains, N.Y., Texaco's headquarters, ruled that Texaco need only put $1 billion in security while the case is pending.

On Jan. 12, the U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments on the bond issue. Pennzoil attorneys contended Texaco went to the federal court in New York in an end run to overcome the Texas state court ruling.

Texaco attorneys argued that no evidence was presented showing the company knew of any contract between Pennzoil and Getty.

Groups battle for $210 million funding

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers are being tugged by a variety of special interest groups wanting a share of more than $200 million the state won in lawsuits against energy companies.

A representative for on group urged legislators on Thursday to put some of the money into programs aimed at making low-income homes energy efficient, while another asked the money be used to relieve airport congestion.

The money is the state's share of lawsuit settlements with companies that violated federal price controls on crude oil and refined petroleum products.

Thursday's meeting was the second of four hearings the Special Joint Committee on Oil Overcharge Funds is holding to find the best use for the money, said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple.

The money must be used for federally approved programs, including low-income energy assistance, energy conservation for hospitals and schools, and transportation projects.

"We would like to see as many of the dollars as possible get down to the people really in need," said L. Dewitt Hale, attorney for the Texas Association of Community Action agencies.

Hale told the committee he represents groups that teach low-income households how to conserve energy and reduce their utility bills.

John Hull, a Coryell County commissioner, asked the committee to set aside 50 percent of the funds for weatherization of low-income homes.

In addition, the majority of the funds should be dedicated to small businesses wanting to make their firms more energy efficient, said Wayne Brown, president of Austin-based Planergy Inc.

"We've got close to 400,000 small businesses in Texas," Brown said. "Most of these small businesses do not have the technical expertise nor the funds to modify their own facility" to make it energy efficient."

The committee also was asked to allow the Aeronautical Board to use some of the money to improve airports in Texas and reduce air traffic in urban areas.

Committee members were urged to set up a multiple-year plan to allocate the funds.

"Texas has over $200 million to return to the consumers, I hope to see the money spent wisely over a five-year period," said Michael Hart, president of Energy Engineering Associates, Inc., an energy conservation firm.

Official says HB72 helped, but not enough

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston-area school official says the 1984 school reform act provided more state funding for low-wealth school districts but there is still a "substantial gap" to be bridged.

"There is still wide disparity among schools in Harris County, and we have a very high tax rate," testified John Sawyer, superintendent at North Forest.

North Forest "made greater progress in financing in 1984 than any other district in Harris County?"

"Yes, but there is still a substantial gap," Sawyer replied.

Sawyer was a witness for the 67 school districts that claim House Bill 72 financing discriminates against low-wealth districts. Turner is an attorney for a group of the 48 districts that have sided with the state in claiming the 1984 changes are fair and legal.

The trial began Jan. 20. Some of the attorneys predict it will last until mid-March.

Rick Gray, an attorney for the low-wealth districts, said the plaintiffs still have five or six more witnesses to present.

Turner showed figures that 15 of the 20 schools in Harris County received more money as a result of HB72, while five schools with larger tax collections lost state money. Turner spent much of his cross examination comparing North Forest with the adjoining Aldine school district.

Sawyer said that North Forest spends $2,244 per student per year while Aldine spends $1,750 per student. He also agreed that Aldine pays an average teacher salary that is $600 a year higher than North Forest — $23,441 to $22,841.

Turner presented figures showing that North Forest has 4.1 administrators per 1,000 students, compared with 3.1 per 1,000 at Aldine.

Bullock: Drop sales tax rate; expand base

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas should pay a lower sales tax but it should be added to bills for lawyers' fees and other professional services, according to state Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Under a proposed tax overhaul plan released Thursday by Bullock, the state sales tax would drop to 4.5 percent from the current 5.25 percent. The sales tax is scheduled to roll back to 4.125 percent in September, but Gov. Bill Clements and many lawmakers say it should remain at 5.25 percent.

Bullock said his plan would mean $3.3 billion for the state in 1988-89.

"Restructuring the state's major taxes will assure tax equity and fairness and junk an outmoded tax system," he said.

Any changes in Texas' tax laws would require legislative approval.

In addition to the sales tax change, Bullock supports keeping the state gasoline tax at 15 cents per gallon, a temporary rate set last year to help battle the state budget crunch.

The gasoline tax is scheduled to roll back to 10 cents per gallon in September.

Clements has said he opposes any tax overhaul plan that adds up to a net increase in Texans' tax bills. Bullock said his plan meets Clements' no-new-taxes stand because it is "virtually revenue neutral." Simply continuing the temporary sales and gasoline tax hikes would add $2.9 billion to state revenue in 1988-89.

The Bullock plan would not solve the projected $5.8 billion deficit the comptroller has said the state faces. But Tony Proffitt, Bullock's spokesman, said the tax plan provides a "new and better base that should grow with the economy," as opposed to the current plan that depends heavily on oil and gas revenue.

Bullock's plan retains the sales tax exemptions for groceries, residential rent and utilities, agricultural items, sales for resale, sales to exempt groups, medical care and prescription medicines.

It would extend the sales tax to services such as fees for lawyers, architects and other professionals. Bullock said services are "a major sector of the Texas economy which is growing but virtually untaxed."

Bullock also proposed revisions in the 80-year-old business franchise tax, which is now paid by businesses at a rate of $5.25 for each $1,000 in capital the corporation holds in Texas.

The comptroller said the current tax, because it is based on capital investment, does not collect fair revenue from lightly capitalized companies. It also discourages investment in the state by taxing it, according to Bullock.

He said his plan would remove 90,000 small corporations from the tax rolls by basing tax collections on the ratio between a firm's capital and receipts. The lower the ratio, the less tax the firm would pay.

Texas prisons still remain closed to admission of additional inmates

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — For the second straight day, the Texas Department of Corrections will not be admitting new inmates today because the prisoner population has exceeded a state-mandated 95 percent population count, officials said.

The Texas prison system, the nation's second behind California, closed its doors Wednesday after a record number of inmates were admitted, prison spokesman Charles Brown said.

As of midnight Wednesday, the inmate population totaled 38,675, or 95.76 percent of capacity, Brown said. The figure represents 306 inmates over the 95 percent mark.

Only 118 inmates were scheduled to be released Thursday, he said.

Next Tuesday appears to be the earliest day the system can reopen since prisoners are not generally accepted on the weekend and Monday is a holiday, he said.

"That gives us a chance to release some more," Brown said.

State lawmakers mandated the 95 percent limit in 1983 after a federal judge ordered the prison system to reduce overcrowding.

The prison system turned out more than 100 inmates Thursday, but it wasn't enough to keep the doors open. The closing marks the third time in a month.

Prisoners may be released Friday and during the weekend if the corrections department gets parole certificates, Brown said.

Prison officials were forced to stop accepting new inmates Wednesday after some 700 new prisoners were admitted from county jails. The jails had been jammed with inmates awaiting transfer because of earlier prison closings.

If the system remains over 95 percent capacity for five consecutive days, state law requires the governor to declare a prison emergency. Brown said he believes only working days are counted toward the emergency declaration.

Under such an emergency, inmates classified as trustees and some other non-violent inmates would be advanced 30 days "good time" toward their parole. But Brown said only about 50 inmates would become eligible for release under that provision.

The next step of such an emergency would be a 60-day good-time advance that would increase the pool of inmates eligible for release.

The latest closing came after a one-day record 455 inmates were admitted to the state system Tuesday. Although business began Tuesday with a 215-inmate cushion and release of another 124 inmates, the record intake put the system over the top.

No gas rate increase for Miami residents

MIAMI — Despite the recent takeover of Consolidated Utilities by High Plains Natural Gas Co., residents will not see any increase in their gas rates, a High Plains representative told Miami City Council members Tuesday.

Carol Story, a representative of the Canadian-based utility appeared before the council to answer Miami residents' questions about how the recent takeover will affect their gas rates.

When High Plains bought CU in January, utility officials stressed there would be no immediate increase in utility rates because of the takeover.

However, according to Miami City Secretary Betty Anderson, several Miami residents were apparently surprised by their January gas bill, their first from the new company.

Story explained to council members that the new billing merely breaks the rates down in a different way than in the past and does not constitute a rate increase.

In other business, council members voted to continue the $65 annual residential sewer rate and the $70 business sewer rate.

Council members will meet with engineer Gene Barber of Pampa March 10 to determine which city streets need paving work.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Dole's policy steps on individual rights

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole was well within her rights as an employer when she announced last week that she would require random drug-testing for the 26,500 workers who have safety and security-related jobs in her own department. She probably is within her rights to require the random tests for employees of Conrail, the government-run freight railroad, and Amtrak, the government-run passenger railroad.

Dole stepped over the line, however, with her announcement that the testing would also be required of private companies in the aviation and railroad businesses. That's a decision for individual employers to make.

Some may. Many private-sector companies — not only in the transportation and safety fields — are moving in that direction. But the fact that some companies may not require the tests is no reason for the federal government to come up with a blanket mandate.

Individual employers have the right to set conditions of employment; employees have the right to accept or reject those terms; and consumers have the right to make marketplace decisions based on those conditions.

But Dole created a whole new set of "rights" when she told a press conference that "People have a right to expect and receive a drug-free transportation system." Actually, people can expect anything; they have a right to get exactly that for which they contracted.

There is no way the government, or any earthly individual or group, can guarantee a risk-free environment, no matter how many people expect it. Individuals and groups can take steps to eliminate as many risks as possible — but those steps must always acknowledge individual liberty and freedom. Dole's drug-testing mandate does not.

Serious constitutional questions do emerge about how far the government can delve into personal lives in the name of public safety. Dole's argument, that "you must look at a balance between the safety and security needs of the public and the constitutional rights of the individual," makes constitutional rights subservient to governmental whim. They are not.

The drug-testing question remains, and must remain, one for individual employers to answer. Dole's goal is worthy: to make the nation's transportation systems as safe as possible. Her plan of attack leaves much to be desired.

Drug tests erode freedom

The negative public reaction evoked by the decision of a Chicago-based manufacturer to forbid smoking by its employees, whether on or off the job, is both legitimate and wholly understandable. What many Americans rightly fear is the erosion of generally accepted notions of personal privacy under the assault of a growing intolerance.

USG Acoustical Products, a producer of building products with nearly 2,000 workers in eight states, is one of the first employers to require employees to refrain from smoking or risk losing their jobs. But it isn't the first to intrude into regulating its workers' private conduct. In the last few years, the rage among corporations has been testing the urine of applicants and employees for the use of illicit drugs. After a period in which the social and legal constraints on certain types of behavior were relaxed, there is an impulse in both corporations and government to impose conformity.

USG may be a special case. The company says it is trying to reduce the danger from smoking combined with the inhalation of various fibers produced in its factories. That may be a reasonable way to minimize its exposure to lawsuits by workers. But other employers, including several hospitals and municipal governments, have less of an excuse for intruding into the private lives of those who smoke.

In the private sector, this sort of surveillance is usually justified as an efficiency measure, intended to relieve the company of the economic burden imposed by drug-impaired workers.

Professional scare-mongers like to throw around frighteningly large estimates of the costs of drug abuse, but the estimates are generally phony, serving only to rationalize curbs on conduct the employer dislikes.

The real impulse is apparent in the sort of tests commonly chosen. They are not designed to measure impairment on the job, which is the true danger to productivity. They are not limited to employees who display symptoms of drug abuse. They are not meant to detect the drug that undoubtedly causes more economic losses than any other, namely alcohol. What they are meant to do is to detect and deter the use of illegal drugs, anywhere, anytime, whether it affects job performance or not.

When executives get involved in policing their employees' lives, they generally do it clumsily and dangerously. One result of corporations' enthusiasm for drug testing is that a lot of corporations are getting fleeced. Some of the most widely used tests are highly inaccurate, and many of the technicians interpreting the results are careless or incompetent.

New York state regulators who checked the proficiency of drug testing labs found that errors were made by 66 percent of them — a rate triple that of labs that don't test for drugs. In most cases the labs failed to detect the presence of drugs, but in many instances labs also falsely incriminate the innocent.

Some admirers of these tests insist that the corporation and its stockholders shouldn't have to bear the cost of drug abuse. But when the tests yield unreliable results, they are a waste. And those tests that are accurate, and interpreted accurately, may be too expensive to justify their use.

But the real dangers go beyond the economic ones. Private firms are properly free to use whatever criteria they choose (aside from race, sex, religion and the like) in hiring and firing. But a tradition has long been established that what an employee does on his own time is his own business. If it affects one's work, the boss has a right to intervene; if not, he's obliged to butt out.

That is not a policy that ought to be enforced by the government, but it is a sound one nonetheless. One of the things Americans find unattractive about socialism and communism is that the employer wields too much control over affairs that have nothing to do with one's work. That control will always be less in any capitalist enterprise, because workers can choose from other employers. But if most corporations start meddling in the personal affairs of their workers, they will surely be able to force many employees to do things against their will, for no good reason.

One of the nice things about living in this society is the widespread deference to the prerogatives of the individual, a deference marked not only by our legal and constitutional rules but by the informal customs of daily life. It grows out of an admirable American conviction that people should make choices — particularly moral choices — according to their consciences, not according to the demands of the group. It would be a shame to lose it.

Beware ideas of eggheads

Intellectuals separate us into three categories.

At a "lower level" are people who are capable of talking only about other people. These feed their literary appetite on tabloid newspapers and scandal columns.

A second level of intelligency includes people who are mostly concerned with "things." These are those who preoccupy themselves with houses, cars, jewelry, possessions.

The "upper level" of intelligence enables people to concern themselves mostly with "ideas."

The latter few, intellectuals insist, are the only ones worth listening to.

Author Paul Johnson's intellect is adequate to command respect from the intelligents, but he does not return that respect.

He is convinced that intellectuals "love the idea of humanity" but do not necessarily love the actual individuals who compose it.

Mrs. Billy Graham has said that Billy's greatest weakness is his greatest strength. Lacking the academic credentials of his theological peers has kept him in touch "with people."

Angel, my wife, has a foundation for helping unwanted and misused animals.

Intellectual friends applaud the "idea" but it is grass-roots, caring folks who support it. Intellectuals tend to be concerned, in theory, about "endangered species" — but not about the suffering of individual animals.

Intellectual clergy are generous in their support of the "idea" of far-flung missions, much less willing to serve soup to neighborhood needy.

Most all intellectuals "love humanity" but not necessarily men and women.

Paul Johnson recently told the Institute for Contemporary Studies that "insensitivity to the needs and views of other people is, indeed, a characteristic of those passionately concerned with ideas."

He calls it "the heartlessness of ideas."

Percy Bysshe Shelley was devoted to progressive ideas but his treatment of other individuals was atrocious.

He was particularly skillful at exploiting women and servants, landlords and tradesmen.

Karl Marx was another who put ideas before people, emotionally and financially exploiting his wife, his daughters, his friends.

Lenin, also, was a library socialist, never set foot in a factory until he became a dictator. These, for the sake of their own "ideas," were willing to impose all manner of violence on uncomfoming people.

Mr. Johnson says, "Beware the intellectuals. Keep them well away from the levers of power."

Mega primary could make Nunn the one

By Ben Wattenberg

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., will soon decide whether to run for president in 1988. Nunn told me the chances were 60-40 that he would decide against running, but noted that a couple of months ago his self-determined odds were 80-20 against.

If Nunn decides to run, he has some big factors in his favor, some surmountable problems he can surmount, and one particularly big tactical decision to make.

In Nunn's favor: Should Nunn say yes he would immediately get the support of a large piece of the center-right establishment of the Democratic Party. They are now scared that their wing of the party may have no horse in the race. Former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb would travel and help raise money for Nunn. Robert Strauss — still "Mr. Democrat" to a lot of people — would work for a Nunn campaign and help raise funds. Such backers give Nunn instant political credibility.

Not that Nunn needs much credibility-bolstering. Of the possible Democratic candidates, he has the most national political experience (elected to the Senate in 1972). He is regarded as a "senator's senator" — diligent and knowledgeable.

Nunn is well positioned to attract attention. He is the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, a member of the Iran investigating committee and chairman of the Permanent Senate Investigating Subcommittee which has the franchise to poke into almost any sexy issue its chairman chooses.

As the field now shapes up, Nunn would have a clean shot at a large natural constituency — the moderate and/or Southern voters. Do not underestimate that constituency. The 1984 New York Times exit polls show that voters in the Democratic primaries identified themselves this way: conservative 21 percent, liberal 27 percent, moderate 47 percent. Thus: A moderate can win; liberals don't have an insurmountable veto.

Nunn is indeed a moderate. His aggregate National Journal rating on economic, social and foreign issues for the latest three years is 44 percent liberal. By contrast, the other three legislators with NJ scores are Sen. Gary Hart (88 percent liberal), Sen. Joseph Biden (74 percent liberal) and Rep. Richard Gephardt (69 percent liberal). Conservative senators have single-digit ratings.

If Nunn runs, a wise general tactic might be to calmly and unabashedly note that the 1988 Democratic primaries are a contest between the very liberals, the liberals, the somewhat liberals and just one little old moderate, Nunn.

Election-watcher Richard Scammon says if Nunn declares he will immediately be a candidate with an identifiable base, a status Scammon now accords only to Rev. Jesse Jackson, Gov. Mario Cuomo, and Hart; interestingly, a very liberal, a liberal and a somewhat liberal, in the order named.

What makes a Nunn-run so plausible is that when no one was watching America moved a giant step toward a national primary. The sequential primaries have been upstaged by the advent of Mega-Tuesday, the so-called "Southern Primary" on March 8, 1988. Already 16 states, 10 from the South, have signed up, representing about a third of the electorate. The following week comes Ohio, Illinois and Minnesota, yielding another 11 percent of the electorate.

The key tactical question Nunn must figure out is how to get to Mega-Tuesday without being swamped by a media-wave from the field of candidates who have for years been living off the land in the media-heavy but electorally meaningless states.

In any event, if Nunn says go, he will automatically be in the first tier of the field. And the moderates will have a horse.

Waste managers allege

Energy department 'posturing' violates waste act

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The U.S. Department of Energy is circumventing the 1982 Nuclear Waste Policy Act by forcing Congress to take a stand on construction of a second long-range nuclear waste storage site in the Eastern United States, charged Washington and Texas waste managers.

"By undoing the balance in the Waste Policy Act, they're building a political constituency that rushes toward a Western repository," said Steve Frishman, director of Texas' Nuclear Waste Programs Office.

"This gets the flies from around their head so they can charge at what they want," he said Thursday.

The DOE announced in May 1986 that it had selected three sites in the Western United States as finalists for the country's first high-level nuclear waste dump, but deferred the search for a second site in the East.

Energy Secretary John Herrington announced Wednesday that the DOE will resume efforts to find a site for a second waste dump, this time in the East, if plans to postpone the second repository aren't approved by Congress.

Herrington said delaying the second site is proper because the nation may not need two dumps, but he said his department would be willing to reverse its decision to indefinitely postpone the second site.

Frishman and Terry Husseman, director of Washington state's Program for High-Level Waste Management, said the act guarantees geographic equity, and DOE has ignored that.

"The act is compromised," Husseman said. "By deferring the search for the second site they've ultimately solved disposal of all wastes.

"DOE will use the balance in Congress (of more representatives from the East) to force Congress to say, 'All right, it's all right to have a repository in the West, but not necessarily in the East.'"

DOE spokesman Roger Gale said Congress has never authorized construction of a second site but reserves the right to vote on the issue. He said he did not want to speculate on what Congress might do with the second repository.

The allegations by Husseman and Frishman came at a quarterly meeting of the DOE, states and Indian tribes affected by the waste dump issue. It was the first meeting attended by both the states and tribes.

Sites in Washington, Texas and Nevada have been selected as finalists for the first repository for highly radioactive wastes from commercial nuclear reactors.

DOE managers at the three sites said site characterization preparations are proceeding on schedule. Draft documents on portions of the preparations have already been released, with the release of other portions coming this spring and summer.

Managers also discussed the Mission Plan Amendment, or a five-year delay to construction of the waste dump.

Steve Kale, associate director for geologic repositories for the DOE's Office of Civilian Radioactive Waste Management, said the amendment dictates that construction of an exploration shaft at the Yucca Mountain, Nev., site begin in the spring of 1988.

Construction of a shaft at the Hanford nuclear reservation in southeastern Washington will begin in the fall of 1988, and construction of a shaft in Deaf Smith County, Texas, in late 1989.

Final environmental impact statements would be submitted by late 1994, with site selection coming soon after.

License applications would be forwarded to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in early 1995, with authorization for construction from the NRC expected in early 1998.

Construction would begin soon after, with acceptance of limited amounts of waste beginning in early 2003. Full operation would begin in 2006.

Barrett estimated that five shipments of waste would be sent to the waste dump daily. That translates into 500 to 2,000 shipments annually, but Barrett said that could vary with the type of transportation used.

Three charged in scheme

NEW YORK (AP) — Three executives who worked for top Wall Street investment companies have been charged with insider trading that prosecutors say reaped millions of dollars in illegal profits.

Wall Street veterans were shaken by the arrests announced Thursday, the latest in a series of insider-trading cases that have plagued the securities industry during the past year.

U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani said the investigation was continuing, but would not say if he expected more arrests.

"You don't know how far this goes, how deeply imbedded it is," said Monte Gordon, a vice president and director of research for the Dreyfus Corp.

"I think it's a great blow to the prestige of two of the most honorable firms on Wall Street," said Raymond DeVoe, an analyst for Legg Mason Wood Walker Inc.

Those charged are a vice president and former vice president from Kidder, Peabody & Co., and a partner at Goldman, Sachs & Co.

"It's probably just one of many more shoes to drop," DeVoe said.

In November, stock trader Ivan F. Boesky, settling charges that he illegally used non-public information in trading stocks, agreed to pay the government $100 million in penalties and to cooperate with the continuing investigation. He also agreed to plead guilty to an unspecified criminal charge.

Giuliani, who announced the charges, refused to say whether they were connected with the Boesky case.

Richard Wigton, 52, a Kidder vice president; Timothy L. Tabor, 33, a former Kidder vice president; and Robert M. Freeman, 44, a partner at Goldman, Sachs & Co. were arrested and charged with using secret information to make millions of dollars in illegal profits for Kidder.

All three denied any wrongdoing. They were released on bond after being arraigned, officials said. They did not enter pleas, pending indictment.

Tabor worked for Chemical Bank after leaving Kidder and then Merrill Lynch Inc., said Bill Clark, a Merrill Lynch spokesman. Clark said Tabor was fired from the investment company in January for reasons unrelated to his arrest.

According to complaints filed by the government, an informant told investigators the three swapped inside information used to trade stock for Kidder's own account, "resulting in millions of dollars in illegal profits for Kidder." The amount was not specified.

Liberace services

More than 1,000 fans, friends and fellow entertainers were on hand Thursday at memorial services in Las Vegas for pianist Liberace, who died last week. Singer Robert Goulet delivered the eulogy and members of the crowd wept when a soloist sang Liberace's theme song, "I'll Be Seeing You," to conclude the services.

Aspin: More than $3 billion may be needed to fix bomber

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than $3 billion may be needed to fix the B-1 bomber, and even that might not solve all the problems of the world's most expensive airplane, the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee says.

"The Air Force is requesting $800 million over the next two years to develop fixes for the B-1's problems," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis. "But that is only the tip of the iceberg. The fixes are likely to cost in excess of $3 billion — and perhaps way in excess."

Aspin advised other committee members that he has identified six major problems with the airplane, and that for some of them "a solution isn't yet in sight at any price."

Each B-1 costs $265 million, and Congress has authorized 100 of them.

They already are operating out of Dyess Air Force Base in Texas and Ellsworth Air Force Base in South Dakota. In all, 52 have been completed, with another 10 in final production, Aspin said.

"The option to kill the program no longer exists," said Aspin, who voted with the Carter administration to block B-1 production in the 1970s and unsuccessfully fought President Reagan's plan to revive a later version of the plane, the B-1B.

Sen. Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, said in a hearing last month that the fix "may cost $7 billion to $10 billion."

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Larry D. Welch have defended the B-1, and are asking Congress for $415 million for 1988 and $387 million in 1989 to fix it.

Welch, in an interview Jan. 16, said, "There is no cause for great alarm about the airplane."

Weinberger has said the B-1 can perform all of its missions, which initially include deep penetration of Soviet territory in wartime and later would involve launching cruise missiles from outside hostile airspace.

Aspin said in the memo, dated Feb. 10, that he had assigned staff members to determine which of the problems could be solved, at what cost, "who's to blame," and what lessons the Pentagon and Congress should draw from the experience.

"Some of the problems are readily correctable — though at a price," he said.

Researchers identify new AIDS-like virus in cats

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists have identified a new virus in cats that gives felines a disease much like AIDS, a discovery they say could signal a threat to the nation's cat population while helping human AIDS research.

Researchers at the University of California, Davis, say the new cat virus is related to, but genetically different from, the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome in humans.

While both viruses belong to the subgroup called retroviruses, there is no indication the cat virus can infect people, they noted.

No one who had worked closely with infected animals showed any signs of infection by the cat virus or by the human AIDS virus after repeated testing, indicating the new virus is not a human disease agent, they said.

"There is no evidence for cat-to-human or human-to-cat infection," said Niels C. Pedersen, professor of veterinary medicine and the principal scientist involved in studying the virus found in a California cat refuge.

Although there is preliminary evidence suggesting the new virus may be widespread, the researchers say, no one yet knows how much of a danger it could pose to the domestic cat population.

"If the disease-causing potential of the virus in general cat populations is as great as it is in the catery described in this report, its clinical importance will be substantial," the scientists wrote.

Demonstration

(AP Laserphoto)
Palestinian women waiving loaves of bread demonstrate across the streets of West Beirut Thursday to protest a four-month blockade imposed by pro-Syrian Shiite Moslem militias against fellow Palestinians in Beirut and South Lebanon. The besieged refugees have reportedly run out of food and started eating dogs, cats, rats and wild plants.

Texan is among three winning Japan prize

TOKYO (AP) — Two scientists who developed disease-resistant rice strains and a man considered the father of laser technology won the third annual Japan Prizes in science and technology, the prize foundation announced Thursday.

The winners, two Americans and an Indian, will be awarded the $326,000 prizes, given for achievements that contribute to world peace and prosperity, in ceremonies April 14, officials said.

Henry M. Beachell of Alvin, Texas, and Gurdev Khush of India jointly won the prize for "biological improvement" for their work in creating high-yield and robust rice, said Masao Yoshiki, chairman of the prize committee.

One-fifth of the world's 375 million acres of rice paddies has been planted with varieties of the rice they developed, said Yoshiki, also president of the Science University of Tokyo.

Their work brought a "green revolution" in Asian agriculture, and gave many hunger-stricken Asian nations the opportunity to achieve self-sufficiency in their staple crop, the foundation said in a statement.

Winner of the prize for "electro-optics" was Theodore Maiman, who in 1960 developed the forerunner of the lasers used today, said Shigebumi Saito, a member Japan's Space Activities Committee.

Maiman persevered beyond the conventional ideas of his day to develop a ruby crystal laser that is "so practical it is still being used today, 24 years later," said Saito.

Each year, the foundation, a non-profit organization under the direction of the Prime Minister's Office, selects two science and technology fields in which to make the awards. Next year, prizes will be given in energy technology and preventive medicine, officials announced.

Beachell, 70, now a consultant to Farm of Texas Co., a private agriculture research firm in Alvin, Texas, developed a strain of rice in 1966 while working with the International Rice Research Institute in Los Banos in the Philippines.

The rice was a sturdy short-stemmed strain that responded exceptionally well to fertilizers and yielded double the harvests of conventional rice varieties.

Khush, succeeding Beachell in 1972 as head of the IRRI's plant breeding department, carried on Beachell's work and created an even stronger high-yield rice resistant to disease, insects and poor soil.

The rice, which has the same nutritional value as conventional strains, has become the most widely grown variety of any food crop in the world, the IRRI said in a pamphlet.

Advances in the wake of Beachell's and Khush's breeding work have led to an 80 percent increase since 1965 in global rice production, to 450 million tons in 1984, said Kunio Toriyama, a member of the selection committee.

The 52-year-old Khush, currently a resident of Manila, called the prize "an honor for the institute and for the rice growers of the world," in a statement released by the foundation. Beachell said he felt "humility, gratitude and delight" at winning the prize.

Maiman, a resident of Marina del Rey, Calif., said after learning of his award that "of all the many applications of the laser, those that have given me the most satisfaction are the exciting advances in medicine made possible by the use of the laser," the foundation reported.

Maiman developed the first ruby laser, a highly focused and intense laser beam, in 1960 at a time when scientists believed ruby systems would not work, foundation officials said.

The foundation cited Maiman for clearing "numerous technical obstacles" in his research, and said his achievement triggered the development of a multitude of successive lasers used in fields from medicine to telecommunications.

Security agents break up demonstration

MOSCOW (AP) — Security agents today lunged fist-first into a crowd of protesters seeking freedom for a jailed Jewish activist, punching them and smashing Western journalists' cameras. Police briefly detained three journalists.

It was the fifth straight day of protests on a central Moscow shopping street to demand emigration rights and the release of Josef Begun, and the second time plainclothes security agents used force to break up the demonstration.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov on Thursday blamed young right-wing vigilantes, called "Lyubers" after the Lyuberts neighborhood where they supposedly live, for violence during that day's demonstration.

But during today's protest, as on Thursday, at least a half-dozen uniformed policemen stood by and did nothing to stop the violence. The men who broke up the protest were highly organized, and afterward about two dozen of them piled into a police bus and drove off.

Begun, a Hebrew teacher, was sentenced in October 1983 to seven years in prison for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

Begun's son, Boris, who was wearing a blue-and-white stocking cap bearing the Star of David, was dragged away today by the plainclothes security agents before he could unfold a placard he was carrying.

Begun was taken to a nearby militia station along with Vladimir Pimonov, who shouted: "They're fascists, fascists." Pimonov reported earlier this week that Soviet authorities denied him permission to emigrate so he can rejoin his wife and daughter in Denmark.

Another protester, Nastasha Bekman, was shoved off Arbat Street and dragged down a nearby alley in front of the Ministry of Culture. As uniformed policemen looked on, she was punched and kicked by the men in civilian clothes.

Western reporters who tried to film or photograph the scene were struck or shoved away by the plainclothes men.

Athletes threaten boycott

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The sponsor of a major high school track tournament withdrew its support today and 100 white athletes threatened a boycott because a black student was barred from competing.

President P.W. Botha, meanwhile, canceled negotiations with newspaper publishers on easing the government's tight censorship rules, citing "the abuse of the media by revolutionary elements."

The foreign minister said U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz would not be welcome in South Africa to discuss dismantling apartheid.

The decision to keep a black student athlete from taking part in the Annual South African Foundation Schools Athletics Meeting, scheduled for this weekend, prompted 100 out of 279 white athletes from 13 Natal province schools to announce a boycott.

Nkululeko "Squeegie" Skweyiya, 17, a sprinter and relay runner, was to represent his integrated private Durban-area high school at the games. But Menlo Park High School in Pretoria, which has been host for the games for the past 15 years, barred Skweyiya because he is black.

It was unclear who made the decision and could not immediately be determined if a black ever has participated in the event. The principal of Menlo Park, C. Van der Merwe, has refused to comment.

The Sports Foundation of Southern Africa, which sponsors the meet, said today it was withdrawing support. In a statement, it said it has "for the past 21 years rendered assistance with sports training and coaching to all in South Africa on an equal basis."

Postmaster routes love messages

By DORALISA PILARTE
Associated Press Writer

VALENTINE (AP)—For the past 34 years, Leila Doris Kelley has been getting love letters from all over the world.

And without a second thought, she promptly sends them on their way again.

It's not that Mrs. Kelley is hard-hearted — her twinkling blue eyes and friendly manner hint that she's a softie. She's just doing her job as postmaster of this West Texas hamlet.

"Last year we lacked only two states getting letters from, but I forget which," she said.

Mrs. Kelley last February received packages containing more than 7,000 cards and letters from people who wanted their Valentine's Day greetings to loved ones stamped with this village's postmark.

"I don't think this year we'll get near that," she said. "Last year, it was the Texas Sesquicentennial and Valentine's Day came just as the wagon train came through here. That's the most we've gotten in one year."

Texas celebrated its 150th anniversary in 1986 and the year-round festivities included a horse-drawn wagon train that traveled across the state, including a stop in this town, located about 150 miles east of El Paso.

So far this year, the Valentine post office has received mail from as far away as Italy, West Germany, Ireland and Australia to addresses in Sweden, Canada, Saudi Arabia, the Philippines, Scotland and West Malaysia, said Mrs. Kelley.

"Some of them ask me to hold (the pieces of mail) until the official February 14th cancellation date," she said. "It's a collector's item."

Mrs. Kelley won't get around to figuring out exactly how much mail went through the post office this year until March when she adds up the number of Valentine greetings that she logs in a notebook by the customer counter.

Some of the writers are people who have lived in this part of the state and moved away. Others have friends and relatives who tell them about Valentine, Texas, said Mrs. Kelley.

"People who travel in this area stop by all during the year and say they've read (newspaper) articles," she said.

Mrs. Kelley, a native of Petersburg, a town northeast of Lubbock, moved to Valentine in 1946. She has been postmaster here since 1953.

"I was appointed by President Eisenhower and confirmed by Lyndon B. Johnson. He was a senator at the time," she said. "When I first came into the post office, there were six or 10 Valentines at each season. Just within the town and round up about."

Every year, the number increased.

"In the last 10 years, people have become more conscious of Valentines," she said. "Different things appeal to young people."

The special postmark—in red ink, of course—is used in addition to the regular round black rubber stamp from Feb. 1 through the 13th, but on Feb. 14th it is used alone.

For the past four Februaries, a special postmark has been designed for the occasion—a heart with "Love You" in 1984, a heart with three arrows and "I (heart) You Sta" (post office shorthand for station) in 1985, and last year, a heart with three arrows and the number 86.

This February, the postmark is three hearts, each overlapping the next.

Some of the 328 residents of Valentine also send out their greetings, but getting thousands of pieces of mail in a two-week period poses no problem to Mrs. Kelley.

Lawmakers illegally use legal-size paper

HOUSTON (AP)—The Texas Legislature illegally is doing business on legal-size paper which goes in illegal legal-size filing cabinets.

The legal dilemma stems from a 1985 law which bars the 8½-by-14-inch paper in favor of 8½-by-11-inch paper. The law was following a national movement toward the shorter paper and smaller filing cabinets as a means of saving money.

The law, however, has caused much confusion, says Wilbert Reichenbach, director of the commission that distributes office supplies to state-run agencies in Texas.

For example, the judiciary is exempt from using the shorter paper.

And the lawmaker who sponsored the measure two years ago, Rep. Bill Ceverha, R-Dallas, told The Houston Post Austin bureau that his law also exempts the Legislature.

But Ron Dusek, a spokesman for Attorney General Jim Mattox, says an opinion from Mattox's office does not mention the Legislature.

Ceverha, meanwhile, has filed a bill to clarify the agencies exempt from the shorter-paper mandate.

Join Us In Worship IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

DO YOU RECALL.....

THOSE WONDERFUL YEARS...

They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness... The Lord has blessed us with children and now grandchildren. Our lives, and now theirs have been molded in the church. One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts. Pass on this priceless heritage to your children and grandchildren.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Finally, brothers, whatever is true, whatever is noble, whatever is right, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is admirable—if anything is excellent or praiseworthy—think about such things. (Philippians 4:8 NIV)

The young son of some relatives was upset because his parents wouldn't allow him to do something he wanted to do.

He went into the bathroom, stood in front of the mirror and watched his reflection as he worked himself into a child's perception of an appropriate crying spell. He was quite fascinated by this tragic image of himself.

After a while of enduring the wailing, the little boy's father went to the bathroom to try to calm him. He pulled out his handkerchief and wiped the boy's face and nose.

Not quite ready to end his great dramatic scene, the child sniffed, "Don't wipe off my tears, Daddy. They're a part of my cryin'."

Our modern world is caught up in rage born of fear.

The possibility of nuclear accidents or war; the rise in crimes; the conflicting theories of the New Ice Age and the Hothouse Effect; the alarming spread of AIDS; the astonishing list of immoral, self-destructive lifestyles; the deceit and chicanery of our politicians; the injustices in our jurisprudence; the threat of overpopulation; the soaring unemployment percentages; the starving masses—the panoply of very real horror seems infinite.

We become fascinated by our perception of our world as evil and of ourselves as victims, and we refuse to have our tears dried because they are a part of our image of our tragic selves.

The problems can't and shouldn't be ignored, but beauty and goodness can't be built out of a fascination with ugliness.

Positive thinking was invented by God, and He gave us sensual aids that distract us from fear and dry our tears.

In a sunrise, we see promise; in a child's laughter, we hear exuberance; in rest, we discover revitalization; in a grandparent's smile, we witness love; in music, we experience tranquility; in the dreams of sweethearts, we see hope; in Jesus Christ, we find eternal life.

Northwest Texas Methodist men plan retreat at Lubbock

Rev. J. Stanley Cosby of Tulsa, Okla. will be the speaker for the Northwest Texas Methodist Men's Spiritual Life Retreat Friday and Saturday, Feb. 20-21, at Lubbock.

Rev. Millard Bucholz of Bedford will be the worship leader.

The men's 24-hour retreat will be held at the Koko Palace, 5201 Avenue Q, in Lubbock. It is sponsored by the Northwest Texas Evangelical Fellowship for men of the Northwest Texas area.

The Friday evening session begins at 7 p.m., with registration from 4-6 p.m. and a supper from 6-7 p.m. Opening session on Saturday will be at 9 a.m., with the final general session concluding by 5 p.m.

Rev. Cosby is preaching associate at First United Methodist Church at Tulsa. A native West Texan, he received his bachelor of arts degree from McMurry College at Abilene and earned his master of divinity degree from Asbury Theological Seminary at Wilmore, Ky.

Rev. Stan Cosby

He has pastored churches in Kentucky, Oklahoma and Texas. He formerly served Trinity UMC at Amarillo for five years.

Cosby is recognized as an evangelist with experience in leading numerous revivals, conferences and youth camps. In Oklahoma he is presently serving as a member of the board of evangelism of the Oklahoma Annual Conference and as spiritual director of the Green Country Emmaus Community.

Music and worship will be an integral part of the all-men's retreat, enhancing study and fellowship.

Rev. Bucholz has served in the pastoral ministry and is presently minister of music and worship at the FUMC in Bedford.

He is an accomplished musician and vocalist, with three vocal solo albums recorded. Bucholz studied music and Bible at Southern California College at Costa Mesa, Calif., and the University of California at Fullerton.

Though a tentative registration deadline was set for Feb. 6, walk-in registrations will be welcomed. Those wanting further information may contact Richard Smith, Minister of Music, Lakewood UMC, Lubbock, or call 1-794-4015 for reservations.

Registration costs vary, depending on whether men want a room and full participation, meals or just attendance at the sessions.

The Harvesters

Group to be at Calvary Assembly

The Harvesters of Southwestern Assemblies of God College at Waxahachie will be ministering at the Calvary Assembly of God, Crawford and Love, at 9:45 a.m. Sunday.

The Harvesters, one of the most outstanding and versatile groups in contemporary Christian music today, have gathered from across the United States to blend their talents in music, said Pastor R.G. Tyler.

Representing Southwestern Assemblies of God College, the musicians usually travel in two groups to extend their coverage throughout the Southwest region.

"These young collegians feel that they are involved in a definite ministry of reaching people for the Lord Jesus Christ," Tyler said.

The group members are chosen not only for their musical ability but also because of their Christian character and academic ability. The Harvesters travel weekends and make two tours each year, one at spring break and one during the summer.

"This concert is something you will want to attend," Tyler said. "If you love good music, love to worship and love to become acquainted with young people consumed with a vision and a purpose, you are invited to attend this event."

There is no admission charge.

Denominations head westward

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Several big Protestant denominations are quitting their Eastern city bastions and moving their headquarters westward to the heartland of America, closer to the pulsebeat of common folk.

The shift has built up like a wave, with one mainline church after another — now totalling three — recently taking steps toward transferring their bases to the middle part of the country.

Others may yet join the migration away from the East.

"It seems to be partly tied in with a yen to get closer to the grass roots, closer to the needs and attitudes of ordinary members," says James M. Wall, editor of the biweekly Christian Century, published in Chicago.

He says past concentration of denominational headquarters in the East "has been a mistake, giving them a distorted view of the country." The move west "is long overdue," he adds, aligning them with more typical environments.

This has been urged persistently by many local and regional church voices, which complained that denominational bureaucracies had lost touch to some extent with rank-and-file constituencies.

But economic and other factors also were behind the movement, as delineated by several of the denominations making initial decisions to move to the midlands, subject to ratifications by national conventions this spring.

Latest to line up for the parade west — to Missouri — were the Presbyterian Church (USA), booked to settle in Kansas City, and the United Church of Christ, its top offices headed for St. Louis.

The newly forming Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, was ticketed to plant its headquarters in Chicago after three Lutheran bodies merge this spring. The largest participant is now based in New York.

Altogether, denominations making Western shifts total about 10 million members. Their headquarters staffs number in hundreds, with many in the lower echelons likely to quit rather than move, and have to be replaced.

This is particularly the case for the 3.1-million-member Presbyterian Church, whose overall staff of about 1,000 have long been settled in New York and Atlanta, the dual headquarters since North-South branches merged in 1983.

A fourth major denomination, the 3-million-member Episcopal Church, for several years has had a committee studying possible moves out of New York, considering mid-American sites.

Another mainline denomination, the 9.3-million-member United Methodist Church has widely dispersed national offices — New York, Chicago, Washington, D.C., Nashville, Tenn., and Dayton, Ohio.

Be a real sweetheart on St. Valentine's Day

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Don't tell me tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day again! We just finished with Christmas. Well, it's true, so be a sweetheart and call someone you love and say, "I love you." Make two or three calls. Who said you can't love more than one person — in different ways, of course.

Go through your closets and get rid of all those clothes you've been saving until you lose 10 pounds. Your favorite charity can turn those good-as-new garments into money.

Visit someone in a nursing home and take him or her for a ride. Forgive an enemy, hug your children, neuter your cat, spay your dog, listen to a bore, tell your parents you appreciate them, send a donation to CARE, the Salvation Army or your United Way, fix up a date for someone who doesn't get many, quit smoking, get some exercise, count your calories, pay your dentist, donate some blood, return the book you borrowed, update your will, drive carefully, and if you're walking, thank God you're able to, and watch where you're going. And don't wait until next St. Valentine's Day to be a sweetheart again.

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular: You're Never Too Young or Too Old," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Prison data aids research

Gena on Genealogy

Gena Walls

Prison records have valuable information for the family researcher and can usually be obtained from the state. These records vary, but most include a description of the "convict," length of sentence and when the term begins and ends, the nature of the crime and whether a plea of guilty or innocent was entered at the trial, and the names of the judge and attorney.

Other information might be occupation, marital status and religion. The name of the nearest relative or friend to notify if necessary with their address often provides another source.

Individual state archives can tell what information is available and how it can be obtained. For example, New Mexico penitentiary records are filed with the New Mexico Records Center and Archives, 404 Montezuma, Santa Fe, N.M. 87503. When requesting material, ask for "all data" and indicate that you will pay for copies. Sometimes correspondence will be included with the file.

Some county jails have ledger books that list prisoners with the crime and can be located at the sheriff's office.

Are you planning a family reunion? Send details for a column and include the name of a person to contact for additional information. Gena Walls, 1525 Pamp Valley Blvd. No. 907, Round Rock, Tex. 78664.

All-State Choir members and alternates from Pampa High School are, from left, Chris Wilson, third chair state; Cyndi Epperly, second alternate; Ricky Chapman, second alternate; and Anissa Bradsher, first alternate.

Wilson to perform Saturday in All-State Choir concert

A Pampa student will be performing with the high school All-State Choir during a concert Saturday night at the Convention Center Theatre in San Antonio.

Chris Wilson, selected as third chair in the second bass section, is in San Antonio for the choir, sponsored by the Texas Music Educators Association. Directing the choir is Dr. Rodney Eichenburger from the University of California at Los Angeles.

This is Wilson's second year to participate in the All-State Choir, said Pampa High School choir director Fred Mays.

The All-State Choir members gathered in San Antonio Thursday for practice before the Saturday night concert.

Three other Pampa students were chosen as alternates in their sections of competition, Mays noted. These are Anissa Bradsher, Ricky Chapman and Cyndi Epperly.

Mays said students who participate in the All-State Choir selection have gone through a series of auditions.

First they compete at a regional level and then advance to the area level of competition, then finally to the state level, Mays said.

In each section, seven students are ultimately chosen to be members of the All-State Choir. Two alternates are chosen in each section to replace any of the seven if one of them is unable to attend.

Fitch reaches milestone in Rockets' win

Fitch wins No. 700

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Bill Fitch believes that coaching 700 NBA victories is a steppingstone to greater things, not a milestone to be savored.

"It's like being ahead at the the half; you're happy to be there but there is still work ahead of you," Fitch said after the Houston Rockets' 121-99 decision over New Jersey Thursday night gave him victory No. 700 in his 17th pro season.

"I'd like to win another 700." His NBA coaching career started with an expansion team in Cleveland that won only 15 games in 1970-71. But Fitch said this season has been the hardest for him.

The defending conference champion Rockets have had to overcome injuries to Akeem Olajuwon, Ralph Sampson and Robert Reid, a 10-17 start and having two players banned from the league because of cocaine use.

But the Rockets have come back to win 16 of their last 21 games, and Fitch recently was given an extension on his contract.

"This season has been tougher than all of them," Fitch said. "But I could have 40 wins instead of 26 and I would not be happier with the way these players have responded."

"We continue to win because they haven't lost faith and they haven't lost the work ethic."

At age 52, Fitch has no victory goals in mind. He is the fifth coach to reach 700 victories; Red Auerbach of the Boston Celtics retired with a top mark of 938.

"No one looks that far ahead," Fitch said of his chances of breaking Auerbach's record. "But I believe that if you work hard, good things will happen to you."

Rockets forward Cedric Maxwell, who played four years for Fitch in Boston, including a championship season in 1980-81, before being traded to Houston last month, said a willingness to work sets his coach apart.

"The way he prepares is unbelievable," Maxwell said. "He's the best in the league at getting you prepared for a game, and he's especially valuable in the playoffs. He'd have made a great spy or one of those detectives who goes on stakeouts."

Maxwell said Fitch still is tough on players, "but he is mellowed than he used to be. I think he joined the 20th Century. He lets us wear headphones and watch television in the locker room, and when I was in Boston he never did."

Olajuwon, who was 7 years old when Fitch earned his first coaching victory, said Fitch makes his players work hard, but they need it.

"He makes us watch film when we don't want to," Olajuwon said. "He wants everyone to be perfect, but I want to be perfect, too. I enjoy playing for him both as a coach and a person."

It took Fitch nine years at Cleveland to win his first 304 games. He didn't surpass the 500 level for one season until his sixth year with the Cavaliers in 1975-76, when they were 49-33 and he won the first of two Coach of the Year awards.

"When you start with an expansion team, you don't think about ever reaching 700 wins," Fitch said. "They were betting in New York that we wouldn't win one game. I'd never had a losing season in college (in 12 years of coaching), so that first year in Cleveland was tough."

"Winning this many games is an accumulation of a lot of work by those around me," Fitch said.

TCU prepares for NCAA invitation

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH (AP)—Texas Christian Coach Jim Killingsworth just dares the NCAA to snub the Horned Frogs this time.

TCU hasn't been in the NCAA basketball playoffs since 1971. The Horned Frogs clinched their third 20-victory season under Killingsworth Thursday night with a 69-50 Southwest Conference victory over Southern Methodist.

TCU got National Invitational Tournament bids in 1983 and 1986 when the Frogs won 20 games.

TCU has only had five, 20-win seasons in its history.

"You're talkin' NCAA bid now," Killingsworth said. "Twenty is the magic number. I feel with 20 victories and beating LSU and Oklahoma on the road we should get an NCAA bid no matter what happens in the conference tournament. They'll have to come up with a new excuse if they don't give it to us this year."

Carven Holcombe scored 17 points and Larry Richard added 16 for the 18th ranked Horned Frogs.

TCU is now 20-4 overall and 11-1 in SWC play. It was the Horned Frogs' 23rd consecutive victory at Daniel-Meyer Coliseum.

The Frogs have a three and one-half game over second-place Baylor in the SWC. TCU is idle this weekend.

Killingsworth said "I'll be afraid to practice on an open date. The last time we did that (guard) Carl Lott broke a finger."

Lott is expected to get a go-ahead from the doctors on Friday to begin practicing with the team again.

"I hope he's ready for our next game at Texas on Wednesday," Killingsworth said.

The Horned Frogs convinced SMU Coach Dave Bliss they deserve to get an NCAA bid.

"TCU is just one excellent team," said SMU Coach Dave Bliss. "Our players tried hard but TCU was just too good. I thought we played awful hard."

Dolphins compete in Altus swimming meet

Seven Pampa Dolphins competed in a BC swim meet in Altus, Okla. recently with Bobby Venal winning the 50 freestyle.

Venal came in first in the 100 individual medley, but was disqualified. He improved all his times as did Johnny Haesle.

BC meets are used to develop A swimmers and team points are not compiled. Teams from Altus, Ardmore, Wichita Falls, Enid, Edmond, Harrah, Kerr McGee of Oklahoma City, Weatherford, Moore and Lawton were entered in the meet.

One of the most exciting events was the girls 10 & under 200 free relay, which was won by Pampa. Talitha Pope, Rene Hill, Jamie Hill and Heidi Venal won the event with only 2 seconds separating the first three teams.

Jamie Hill, a 10-year old, had to compete in the senior division because she had already achieved A or AA times in all her events. She competed with the seniors to improve all her times and lowered her 200 individual medley time to 6 seconds in the AA category. She also achieved AA times in the 100 butterfly and 100 backstroke and placed high in the seniors group. Fourteen Dolphins will compete next weekend in an ABC meet in Amarillo.

Pampa's individual results are listed below:

Bobby Venal (boys 8 & under) — 2. 25 freestyle; 2. 25 backstroke; 4. 25 breaststroke; 1. 50 freestyle.

Rene Hill (girls 10 & under) — 5. 100 individual medley; 4. 50 butterfly; 7. 50 backstroke; 9. 50 breaststroke; 4. 100 freestyle.

Heidi Venal (girls 10 & under) — 14. 50 freestyle; 10. 50 butterfly; 11. 50 backstroke; 15. 50 breaststroke.

Rhea Hill (13-14 girls) — 2. 200 individual medley; 6. 50 freestyle; 3. 100 butterfly; 3. 100 backstroke; 2. 100 freestyle.

Jamie Danner Hill (senior girls) — 4. 200 individual medley; 7. 50 freestyle; 4. 100 butterfly; 3. 100 backstroke; 10. 100 freestyle.

Talitha Pope (girls 10 & under) — 4. 100 individual medley; 7. 50 freestyle; 4. 50 backstroke; 10. 50 breaststroke; 6. 100 freestyle.

Johnny Haesle (boys 11-12) — 10. 100 individual medley; 16. 50 freestyle; 13. 50 backstroke; 5. 50 breaststroke; 10. 100 freestyle.

Pampa seventh-grade Blue closes with perfect year

Pampa's seventh-grade boys' Blue team finished the season unbeaten with a 41-28 win over Canyon Valley Silver Thursday night at the Pampa middle school gym.

Pampa, coached by John Charles, finished with an overall 16-0 record and 9-0 in the Panhandle Junior High Athletic League.

Leading the way for Pampa was Paul Brown with 18 points, shooting 9 of 13 from the field. He also had 5 steals and 2 assists.

Cedric Wilbon contributed 10 points while Randy Nichols had 6, Joe Yurich 5 and Donnie Medley 2. Nichols and Yurich each had 4 rebounds and 2 assists.

Coach John Charles said Albert Carillo came off the bench to play an outstanding defensive game, stealing the ball three times.

"This has been a real enjoyable group to coach. They played together as a team," Charles said.

UTEP athletic director announces resignation

EL PASO (AP) — The athletic director at Texas-El Paso announced his resignation from the job he's held since 1982 and denied rumors he was being ousted.

"I am not being forced out. This

Cords, 45, made the announcement at a news conference Thursday afternoon.

Astros' Scott presented with Cy Young Award

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Former teammate Enos Cabell came to Houston pitcher Mike Scott following a disappointing performance in 1984 with some sage advice.

"He told me 'You stunk, we've got to do something about that,'" Scott said, recounting his 5-11 record and 4.68 earned run average that year.

But 1984 was a dim memory Thursday night as Scott two years later accepted the Cy Young Award as the top pitcher in the National League for 1986.

Scott pitched a no-hitter last Sept. 25 clinching Houston's second NL Western Division title. He finished with an 18-10 record, and led the major leagues with 306 strikeouts and a 2.22 ERA.

Scott received his trophy at the second annual Houston Baseball Dinner sponsored by the Houston Athletic Council with 1,200 fans looking on.

Houston Manager Hal Lanier was honored as the Major League Manager of the Year by The Associated Press and the Baseball Writers Association of America.

American League Cy Young Award winner Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox, a resident of nearby Katy, received an award for his major league 20 strikeouts against Seattle last season.

Scott became the first pitcher to throw a pennant clinching no-hitter Sept. 25 when he blanked San Francisco and gave the Astros their second Western Division title.

Kings edge by Mavericks

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Jerry Reynolds was ecstatic about his first victory in the NBA as interim head coach of the Sacramento Kings.

"It's a great feeling, no doubt about it," Reynolds said after the Kings posted a 129-125 triumph over the Dallas Mavericks Thursday night.

Dallas Coach Dick Motta was a little bit more reserved.

"They had to win sooner or later," Motta said of the victory that allowed the Kings to break a six-game losing streak. "It just happened to be us. They played a good game."

Reynolds was named interim coach after the Kings' management fired Phil Johnson as well as Johnson's top assistant, Frank Hamblen, on Monday.

Reynolds' decision to give rookie swingman Harold Pressley his first start in the NBA paid off as Pressley scored six points early in the first quarter off steals.

Before television, college football games averaged 2:10 from kickoff to final whistle; today the games run over three hours.

As the Dallas Mavericks continually sell out every game at Reunion Arena, I keep remembering it was former WTSU and Detroit Lion performer CLOYCE BOX who initially gambled that pro basketball would sell in Dallas as owner of the ill-fated American Basketball Association club, managed by BILL BLAKELY, who later went through a stormy career at North Texas State.

Thornton averaged 19 tackles a game and was all-district his junior and senior years. He was also named to the Amarillo Globe-News Super Team.

A two-way performer, Thornton was also a first-team, all-district running back after rushing for 1,010 yards on 149 carries for a 6.9 average and 16 touchdowns.

Softball players reject proposals

The Pampa Softball Players Association rejected city proposals to turn over a portion of recreational fees and maintenance responsibility to the association during a meeting Thursday night in the Energas Building.

Instead, the players association elected a slate of officers to meet with city officials on a regular basis to discuss needed changes in the softball program.

Association members turned down a written list of proposals presented by Reed Kirkpatrick, Director of the Pampa Park and Recreation Department, that would require the association to purchase trophies and bases, pay scorekeepers and umpires and perform various maintenance duties.

In turn, the city would provide water and electricity in addition to some maintenance.

Kirkpatrick said the city had to turn over more of the financial responsibility and workload to the association because of a tight budget...but a majority of the players felt the city had not provided proper maintenance of the playing fields and voted down the proposals.

The association voted to form a board of directors, consisting of John Moen, Ed Ferrell, Jo Karbo, Robby Harris and Kenny Smith, to work with PPRD (Pampa Park & Recreation Department) officials with the number one item being proper field maintenance.

Association members agreed to finding a person with a landscaping background and pay him a nominal fee to upkeep the playing fields. Other suggestions included obtaining a monthly financial statement from the city on the softball program, having a master schedule available of the games and setting players' fees.

The association agreed to meet again at 7 p.m. Feb. 26 at a site yet to be determined.

Astros' Bass wins hearing

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros outfielder Kevin Bass won his arbitration hearing and will receive $630,000 for the 1987 season, the team announced Thursday.

The club had offered Bass $560,000, but he sought $630,000, said Astros spokesman Chuck Pool.

Bass, who earned $310,000 in 1986, hit .311 with 20 homers and 79 RBIs last year.

Earlier this week, Astros second baseman Bill Doran lost his arbitration hearing and third baseman Denny Walling won.

Doran, who was paid $550,000 in 1986, was seeking $825,000 for 1987. An arbitrator ruled he would receive the club's offer of $625,000.

Walling will get $595,000 for the 1987 season.
