Former president's son calls for GOP victory

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Rangers owner George W. Bush urged Houston Republicans to vote for Kay Bailey Hutchison in Saturday's runoff election for the U.S. Senate and then join in a victory celebration.

"We Bushes haven't been to too many victory parties lately," the former president's son said Thursday night at a rally where Mrs. Hutchison was greeted by mariachi music.

Bush also told Houston Republicans that his parents have voted for Mrs. Hutchison, who led U.S. Sen. Bob Krueger in scientific polls.

A Mason-Dixon Poll, commissioned by Fort Worth television station KXAS and released Thursday, showed Mrs. Hutchison with 53 percent of the vote to 36 percent for Krueger. Eleven percent were undecided. Pollsters surveyed 808 likely voters and the margin of error was 3.5 percent.

Krueger, appointed by Gov. Ann Richards as interim senator when Lloyd Bentsen became U.S. treasury secretary, Thursday emphasized the need for Texas to have a Democrat who can work with the majority in the Senate.

Krueger made stops in Wichita Falls, Marshall, Livingston and Paris before going to San Antonio Thursday night for a rally organized by U.S. Rep. Frank Tejeda.

"This election is not just about Bob Krueger vs. Kay Bailey Hutchison," Krueger said. "It's also about the importance of having a Democrat in the U.S. Senate to fight for Texas military bases."

Krueger said having two Republican senators would be disastrous for the state because at a time of military cuts, the state needs representation on both sides of the aisle and access to the Democratic administration.

"Texas cannot afford to be the largest state in the union without a Democrat in the Senate to protect its interests. A large part of Lloyd Bentsen's legacy in the Senate was his success in securing and protecting federal projects and jobs from Texas," Krueger said.

"Whether Kay Bailey Hutchison likes it or not, the Senate, the House and the White House are controlled by Democrats. That's why Texas needs at least one hard-working Democrat in the U.S. Senate," he said.

Mrs. Hutchison has received the endorsement of Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition, as well as other conservative groups, while Krueger's support has come from Democratic organizations such as organized labor and senior citizens' groups.

A Dallas Morning News poll released May 27 shows Hutchison with a 19 percent lead in the race.

Mrs. Hutchison said that the poll's results coupled with Thursday's announcement that United We Stand America, Ross Perot's group, wants to support her would not make her too confident about the outcome of the election.

"Never, never, never will I say this is locked up," Mrs. Hutchison said.

U.S.-Russian warriors become comrades

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Slowly but surely, U.S. and Russian warriors who used to regard each other as arch-enemies are getting to know each other as comrades-in-arms.

They have begun exchanges that would have been unthinkable during the Cold War: High-level Russian officers recently conferred with members of the Joint Staff in the most top-secret sanctum of the Pentagon; Russian officers have visited military bases around the country and one spent the past year soaking up U.S. Army thinking at the service's prestigious command and staff college at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

The explosion of contacts, which began at the highest levels under former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Adm. William Crowe, will get a boost when Defense Secretary Les Aspin meets with Russian Defense Minister Pavel Grachev in Germany on Saturday.

Aspin hopes to gain Grachev's agreement on a U.S.-Russian framework for defense contacts and cooperation, which the two defense chiefs would sign during Grachev's visit to the Pentagon in late June, a senior defense official said Thursday. He spoke on condition he not be identified.

The U.S.-Russian contacts are a priority because of Russia's size and resources, but the Pentagon also intends to improve its military contacts with other independent nations that once were part of the Soviet Union, such as Ukraine, and with former Warsaw Pact nations in Eastern Europe as well.

Why? Friendship is much less expensive than the alternative.

The military exchanges began, and continued for several years, at the highest levels. Crowe invited his counterpart, Soviet Marshal Sergei Akhromeyev, to visit the United States in 1988.

The present chairman of the Joint Chiefs, Gen. Colin Powell, wants to expand those contacts to mid- to lower-level officers.

That led to the historic visit last month of Lt. Gen. Andrei Nikolayev, the third-ranking military officer in Russia and first deputy chief of its general staff, and about a dozen of his staff officers. They held three days of talks in the Pentagon with their counterparts on the Joint Staff, officials said.

The Pentagon official said the talks helped both sides clarify each other's inner workings, military doctrine, structure and strategy.

"Neither side really had a very good understanding of the decision-making structure of the other side," said one top-level officer who participated in the talks. Such an understanding is a major step toward avoiding military confrontations.

Other ideas include exchanging entire units for short periods and possibly establishing sister-city style relations among units; co-sponsoring seminars and conferences on military issues and even cooperating in training for peacekeeping operations.

As relations have warmed, the exchanges have increased.

In 1991, there were five high-level visits. In 1992, there were 26, a number expected to increase in 1993.

There were six delegations exchanged in 1991 and 21 in 1992. There were only two ship visits in 1991, but seven ship and aircraft exchanges in 1992.

And while there were no joint exercises in 1991, seven were held in 1992 and more are set for 1993.

A second senior Pentagon official, speaking recently during a visit to NATO headquarters in Brussels, described the administration's plans.

"We expect ... to get our general staff concepts in line, get intelligence-sharing underway, develop cooperative programs in the way defense ministries work together and organize themselves, (their) logistics command and control," the official said.

The official said the relationship has "no-losers, no winners." No one is attempting to take military advantage of another nation.

Report: FBI's Sessions negotiating resignation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — FBI Director William S. Sessions is demanding that if he steps down his departure is not linked to a Justice Department report that found he abused his office, a newspaper reported today.

Discussions over his possible resignation also include whether he will remain FBI director until year's end, which would affect his pension size, the Los Angeles Times said, citing sources it did not identify.

Sessions has almost half of his 10-year term left, but his job has been in jeopardy since a Justice Department report prepared at the end of the Bush administration found he had committed improprieties.

Among other things, the report found that Sessions had visited family members at government expense, improperly avoided paying taxes on the use of his limousine and improperly billed the FBI for a $10,000 fence around his home.

Although President Clinton can fire Sessions without cause, discussions apparently are aimed at procuring his resignation.

In those informal negotiations with Deputy Attorney General Philip B. Heymann, Sessions is said to be insisting that his departure be publicly unconnected with the Justice Department report, which he has called flawed.

The Times said the discussions began after a May 21 meeting between Heymann, Attorney General Janet Reno, Sessions and his two lawyers.

Clinton has said he will await Reno's recommendation before deciding Sessions' fate.

But if Reno accepts Sessions' condition, she could be put in the position of rejecting the report of her own department's watchdog Office of Professional Responsibility.

The other key issue, sources said, is whether Sessions will serve out the remainder of 1993.

One scenario has him stepping down to accept a lesser, temporary assignment through December. That would keep him on the payroll and his annual retirement income would be more than $69,000 — $5,000 more than if he retired now, FBI officials said.

Students failing TAAS can don caps, gowns

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two judges have ordered the San Antonio Independent School District to allow 209 students to participate in high school graduation ceremonies even though they failed a required test.

The ruling meant the students can walk across the stage in caps and gowns. But they won't receive diplomas until they pass the required Texas Assessment of Academic Skills.

Thursday's action in two state district courts came hours before graduation ceremonies Thursday night at Sam Houston and Edison high schools.

Other graduations in the school district, Bexar County's largest, continue through Tuesday.

Cheers from students and parents filled the 131st District Court about 5:30 p.m. as Judge John D. Gabriel let stand a temporary restraining order signed earlier in the day by Judge Carol Haberman.

School Superintendent Victor Rodriguez said the students had been told they could not participate in ceremonies because they had failed the TAAS test. Rodriguez said less than 10 percent of the seniors failed the TAAS test.

"If 90 percent of the kids master all requirements for graduation, it infringes on their rights to let the others participate," Rodriguez said.

But Gabriel agreed with a lawyer for the students that the harm to them would be "irreparable" if they weren't allowed to participate in graduation exercises.

The boards of several of Bexar County's 15 school districts have voted to permit students who failed the TAAS test to participate in ceremonies and receive their diplomas later.

Sheepdogs on trial this weekend

The 3rd annual Top of Texas Sheepdog Trials are scheduled for Saturday and Sunday on a two-acre course two miles south of the city on the Bowers City Highway.

Kurt Foster, president of the West Texas Sheepdog Association, is hosting the event and said he's expecting a good turnout.

The competition will begin at 10:30 a.m. both days and Foster expects dogs and handlers from Texas, Colorado, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

The event is sanctioned by the United States Border Collie Association and points can be earned towards the U.S. finals.

Competition mainly involves fetching, flanking and penning, according to Foster. In 1991, Foster and his dog Bill took first place in the ranch class. Last year, they won the open ranch class.

Trials involve placing three to five sheep at one location on the course with the dog and handler positioned at a distance.

The dog is commanded by voice or hand signal to run along a given line past the sheep, "pick up" the sheep and start moving them to a designated area.

The competition is divided into three classes: ranch, open ranch and open and, depending on the class, dogs are asked to fetch, drive, separate or pen the sheep on command. Points are awarded based on how smoothly and efficiently the dog works.

Trained dogs can do the work of several cowboys on horseback, said Foster. For several hundred years, dogs have been bred and trained to perform ranch functions.

Foster pointed out, "These are border collies and not old English sheepdogs."

The competition is free and open to the public.

Condition of ailing Connally worsens

HOUSTON (AP) — Ailing former Gov. John Connally was on the critical list early today as his conditioned worsened nearly three weeks after he was hospitalized with pneumonia complicated by scarred lung tissue.

The 76-year-old Connally entered Methodist Hospital on May 17 complaining of breathing problems. Before Thursday, he was listed as stable and he seemed to be improving.

"Gov. Connally has had an underlying lung problem called pulmonary fibrosis, which is a scarring of the lung tissue," the hospital said in a statement released by Dr. William Eschenbacher, medical director of respiratory care services, and Dr. Antonio Gotto, chief of internal medicine.

"He is critically ill in the intensive care unit where he is receiving treatment for the pneumonia, which is complicating his underlying lung problem," the statement continued. "We have no way of predicting when Gov. Connally will return home."

John Connally

Nellie Connally asked the public tor prayers for her husband: "Please pray for John and help us to get him well."

Connally was wounded by the gunfire that killed President Kennedy as the two rode in the same car in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963. Connally, then a Democrat, served as Texas governor from 1963 to 1969.

After his longtime political ally Lyndon Johnson died in 1973, Connally became a Republican and briefly served as President Nixon's treasury secretary. He also made a failed bid for the GOP presidential nomination in 1980.

Connally, who is a member of a Houston law firm, filed for bankruptcy in 1987 with $13 million in assets and debts of $93.3 million, mostly from oil and real estate deals that went sour like the rest of the state economy.

To pay creditors, the Connallys auctioned most of their belongings.

Only days before he fell ill, Connally announced he was participating in an effort to build the Houston area's first pari-mutuel horse race track.

In Pampa, 5.6 percent of the people in the city were unemployed for April as opposed to 5.1 of the residents in March.

As for Gray County, the unemployment rate in April was 5.8 percent, an increase of 0.5 percent over March's total of 5.3 percent.

In the four counties around Gray County, Hemphill, Carson, Roberts and Wheeler, the unemployment rate had, in general, increased. The only decrease came in Wheeler County as its unemployment rate dropped from 5.3 percent in March to 4.6 percent in April.

In Hemphill County, the unemployment rate in March was 4.8 percent. For April, the unemployment rate in the county was at 5 percent.

In Carson County, the unemployment rate rose from 3.2 percent in March to 3.8 percent in April.

Despite the increase in the number of unemployed, Carson County had the lowest unemployment rate of the five Panhandle counties surveyed for the month of April.

Roberts County had the highest unemployment rate of the Panhandle counties surveyed by the Texas Employment Commission.

Its unemployment rate rose from 5.6 percent in March to 6.4 percent in April.

Richards shoots down gun bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards said it was an easy decision to veto a bill that would have let Texans give their opinion on whether they should be allowed to carry handguns.

"This bill was wrong from the beginning. This bill is wrong now," she said Thursday, signing the veto message while surrounded by supportive law officers.

The measure, which started as a bill to allow Texans to carry concealed handguns, went through several transformations before lawmakers stripped it down to a nonbinding referendum and sent it to the governor. She called it a taxpayer-funded opinion poll for gun interests.

"They kept putting lipstick on it, and they kept hanging earrings on it, but it is still a pig," said Richards.

And although she is a hunter, the governor said, "I know the difference in hunting for sport, and packing a pistol or a gun in your pocket or purse."

A crowd of about 250 people attended the veto signing, including law officers invited and arranged around Richards by her staff; families of crime victims, among them officers killed in the line of duty; representatives of the Center for Battered Women; and lawmakers, clergy and youngsters.

"I especially want to thank you for choosing to stand by me on this day, when we say 'no' to the amateur gunslingers who somehow think they are going to be braver and smarter with a gun in their hand," Richards told them.

She cited Robert Kennedy's shooting death 25 years ago in California, and the 3,692 Texans killed by firearms in 1991, whose names were listed on banners hanging nearby as she signed the veto message.

She noted that two officers at the ceremony were in wheelchairs after being shot in the line of duty: Tony Crawford of the Dallas Police Department and Israel Rosa of the San Antonio Park Rangers.

Dallas patrol officer Glenn White added in support of Richards, "By arming the citizens, we do nothing to reduce violence in this state. We would turn the ... state of Texas into the wild, wild west."

Richards also was lauded in a statement from James Brady, who was shot in an assassination attempt on former President Ronald Reagan.

"Richards, by vetoing this dangerous bill, adds Texas to a growing number of states across this country, where people are standing up to the gun lobby and saying, 'Enough is enough,'" he said.

But elsewhere, the governor was criticized by those who said she was denying Texans the opportunity to have their say.

"I think it's not at all fair to have the governor of the state of Texas refuse the citizens of the state of Texas the right to vote," said Rob Key, owner of Just Guns near downtown Austin.

Rep. Bill Carter, a sponsor of the legislation, and Milner said supporters would try again to pass a right-to-carry measure in the next regular legislative session in 1995.

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a move that enraged the civil rights community, President Clinton withdrew the nomination of Lani Guinier, a friend of two decades, as his civil rights enforcer. She insisted today "I could have been confirmed" but said Clinton believed her hearings would have been racially divisive.

Clinton withdrew the name of the University of Pennsylvania law professor late Thursday, saying her views would have been "very difficult to defend" against Senate critics.

He announced his decision after a 75-minute Oval Office meeting with Guinier. Attorney General Janet Reno, who had staunchly supported Guinier and who attended the White House meeting briefly, said today: "It's time to move on."

Guinier, interviewed on NBC, said Clinton told her in their meeting "that a Senate confirmation hearing would have been divisive and potentially inflammatory... I disagreed with the president on that ... but I do agree that the last thing we need in this country is a discussion of race that polarizes people."

In abandoning her nomination, Clinton conceded he had not read her legal writings.

She declined to criticize Clinton on that, saying "my mother has a tough time reading my academic writings. ..."

She called the session with Clinton "painful" and "a very honest conversation ... between two people who have tremendous respect for each other. ..."

"I told the president whatever he decided, I would still respect him. And I do," she said.

Even so, Guinier said, "I do believe that I could have been confirmed and that I would have been an assistant attorney general for civil rights who would have made the president and the people of the United States proud."

Robert Bork, a former federal judge and unsuccessful Supreme Court nominee, said Guinier "was hung out to dry by the president." Bork told Fox Morning News: "I certainly feel sorry for her. She is probably suffering more than I did."

Clinton's withdrawal of the nomination, the latest crisis in his beleaguered presidency, drew angry outcries from the civil rights community.

"I'm convinced that the administration has taken a giant step backward," said Kweisi Mfume, D-Md., chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus. "Fairness and due process were abandoned for political expediency."

Clinton said he understood the anger civil rights leaders would feel and vowed to consult them as he sought a new nominee, saying he hoped to make a decision within several days. But civil rights activists said they had no immediate candidates.

Reno, who came to the White House lawn early today to make the round of television morning news programs, said: "I care deeply about the people involved and I want to do what I can to support them personally and I want to address the issues of concern to all Americans."

Clinton's announcement ended days of news reports that he was going to abandon Guinier. The speculation became so intense that Guinier even made an extraordinary televised plea Wednesday night for a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing that would let her defend herself against critics who she said "distorted" her academic writings to make her views appear radical.

Mfume publicly warned Clinton that dropping Guinier would cost him the caucus' political support on a number of issues, and noted that the president will need their votes to pass his programs. The caucus has 40 members, 39 of them in the House that passed Clinton's budget package last week by just six votes.

After Clinton announced his decision in a brief, televised news conference, Mfume said in an interview that the Black Caucus "must now reassess and re-evaluate its relationship and role with this administration into the future."

Clinton has been trying to move to a more centrist position after sliding to a 36 percent approval rating in some polls, but he maintained that he abandoned the nomination over principle, not politics.

Guinier, he said, had views that "clearly lend themselves to interpretations that do not represent the views that I expressed on civil rights during my campaign."

He singled out her article in the March 1991 Michigan Law Review as unacceptable, saying it "seemed to be arguing for principles of proportional representation in minority veto as general remedies that I think are inappropriate as general remedies and anti-democratic — very difficult to defend."

Guinier, a 43-year-old University of Pennsylvania law professor who attended Yale University Law School with the Clintons, was attacked as a "quota queen" with far-out views about the federal Voting Rights Act. The initial criticism came from conservative activists but it spread to the centrist Democratic Leadership Council and a number of Senate Democrats.

Roger Wilkins, a close friend of Guinier's and a former Justice Department official, said: "Lani Guinier ... was nibbled to death by cowardly, anonymous White House aides."

Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women, told a Bloomington, Ind., audience that the nomination was blocked because Guinier was "willing to speak out articulately, persuasively and effectively against the exclusion of African Americans and women from the position of power."

Clinton drew praise, however, from Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

"While Ms. Guinier has a distinguished record as a civil rights litigator, the controversy around her writings would have been divisive and counterproductive to the goals of civil rights enforcement," Mitchell said in a statement.

When he nominated her in late April, Clinton said, he knew her work as a civil rights litigator — including her 7 1/2 years leading the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund's voting rights project in the 1980s. However, he said, he was not familiar with her academic writings of the past five years.

"Had I read them before I nominated her, I would not have done so," Clinton said.

He backed down not out of fear of defeat, he said, but when he realized after reading her work that the confirmation battle would have been fought "over ideas which I myself cannot embrace."

Jesse Jackson said it was "late in the game" for Clinton to make that discovery, and said he believed a lack of backbone, not a lack of reading, prompted the decision.

"There was this capitulation. It was unfair. She was never able to face her accusers or face the public," Jackson said.

"We said Lani was our best and our brightest," said Elaine Jones, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund often mentioned as a possibility for the civil rights job. She said she is not interested.

Woman charged with assaulting alleged rapist

LUBBOCK (AP) — Reiko Phillips was enraged with a boy accused of raping and taunting her teen-age daughter, so she confronted him. Now, she faces trial on assault and disorderly conduct charges.

"He was harassing her on the school bus, making fun of her and telling everybody that they raped her and that she liked it," Ms. Phillips said. "It made her cry."

So the 33-year-old single mother waited at the bus stop one morning until the boy arrived. Then, she says, she caught him by the collar, shook him and warned him to cut out the taunts.

Now Ms. Phillips faces trial Tuesday on a Class C misdemeanor assault charge and four counts of disorderly conduct. Each count is punishable by a $500 fine.

She feels victimized again.

"I didn't hurt the kid. Most parents would have," Ms. Phillips said. "I feel like I showed incredible restraint, and I'm getting prosecuted. Surely the DA has better things to do."

Lubbock County District Attorney Travis Ware said juvenile law prevents him from discussing the alleged rape last summer.

Ms. Phillips said two boys repeatedly raped her 13-year-old daughter at a neighbor's house. She called police but never brought the girl in so authorities could take her statements.

Ms. Phillips said the boys were set to plea bargain but instead pleaded not guilty and were given what attorney Floyd Holder called pretrial diversion, which means they will avoid conviction if they fulfill probation terms.

Holder said he first thought the charges against his client were mistakes.

"What interest of justice is being served here?" Holder asked. "They have to make this mother sit there in the dock and look at those boys, held up as the victims, for God's sake. Those thugs will point the finger at her with ... all the power and majesty of the state behind them."

Ms. Phillips' daughter claimed one of the boys teased her in the school cafeteria, at recess and anywhere else he saw her. Ms. Phillips said she went to the bus stop intending to scare him.

"I grabbed him by his shirt and said, 'If you harass my daughter, I'll kick your ass.'"

When four of the boy's friends screamed at her, she said, she screamed they should mind their own business.

According to the Sept. 8 police report, Ms. Phillips cursed repeatedly, pointed Mace at the teen-agers and threatened to kill them in an alley.

The confrontation ended when the boys boarded the bus.

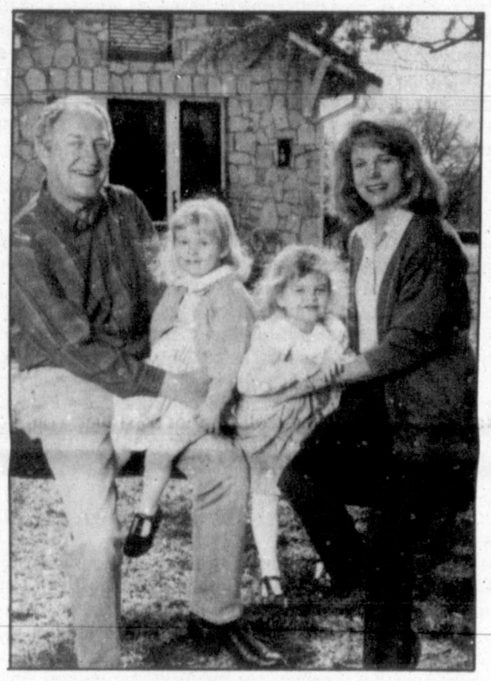

Ware said his office had to prosecute the case.

"Otherwise you have folks taking the law into their own hands and complete anarchy," he said

Ware said the legal system never got a full shot at the alleged rapists because Ms. Phillips did not allow her daughter to cooperate.

"Somebody was frustrated where their child was a victim. I would be too," Ware said. "The problem is that the law does not allow an exception or a defense where we are frustrated."

"Every dollar government wastes is a dollar stolen from our children, our elderly, and our communities.

I'm fighting to put a stop to that."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Abilene Reporter-News on party hosts:

A toast may not be in order, but we'd still urge three cheers for the Texas Supreme Court.

No, Mothers Against Drunk Driving didn't like it, and they've reacted as expected. But the Texas Supreme Court ruled hosts of parties are not responsible for guests who might subsequently injure themselves or others through drinking.

In a 6-2 decision, the court ruled drinkers are the only guilty parties in such instances.

Expect to hear lots of howling about it. In this age of irresponsibility, there's a pathetic trend under way that calls for shifting blame haphazardly. ... Had the court decision gone the other way, it could've had disastrous effects, whether for the neighbor throwing a simple hot dog party next door or the charitable organization holding a fund-raiser at which beer and wine happen to be served.

MADD and other groups rightly concerned with drinking – indeed, all of us – must be more responsible in battling alcohol abuse. That means stiff fines for drunken driving and public intoxication, more emphasis on the dangers of alcoholism through educational programs in our schools, more civic programs stressing the need for designated drivers (why just New Year's Eve?) and, finally, more intelligent, more restrained advertising campaigns by beer and wine companies. Frankly, there are enough villains in this blurry scenario without inventing a few more.

El Paso Herald-Post on crime and guns:

The shooting death of 16-year-old exchange student Yoshihiro Hattori was not just a tragedy for two families, one American, one Japanese. For Americans, it should provoke a tough self-examination.

The acquittal of Rodney Pearis on manslaughter charges ... closes the legal case. But court proceedings aren't the whole story. More stubborn is the culture of crime, fear and reliance on guns that prompted Pearis to respond as he did to a stranger at his door. ...

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan wrote recently that Americans live with so much deviant, antisocial behavior that we have adjusted by "defining deviancy down" – learning to tolerate uncivilized levels of violence. What national shame will it take to change us from a people so afraid of crime that we would shoot first and ask questions later?

Corpus Christi Caller-Times on foreign nationals charged with crimes in Texas:

In a move that could ease strained relations between Texas and Mexico, Texas officials have announced that in the future they will inform diplomatic personnel when Mexican citizens are charged with capital murder. That will make it possible for Mexico to provide legal and other aid to its nationals ...

This seems a sensible, constructive step toward dealing with the tensions that have developed as a result of the presence of eight Mexican nationals on Texas' death row. The death penalty was abolished long ago in Mexico, and the issue is a highly emotional one in that country.

On one point, however, Texas officials can and should give no ground. Mexican citizens – and persons of any other foreign nationality – who commit grave offenses within the state of Texas can reasonably expect no special treatment when it comes to the assessing of punishment. The existing dispensation of their country of origin is no argument for leniency.

Berry's World

Chin up! Be personly!

William F. Buckley Jr.

Perhaps it is a Freudian effort to block out the news from Bosnia, Cambodia and Haiti, but one does occasionally focus on the little oppressions. It may seem trivial in a genocidal season to bring it up, but there are some of us who are going nuts with the feminist assault on the language.

To the question, "Do you prefer to retain the beauty of the language?" or "Do you want to go the last inning on women's rights?" one is tempted to use Jack Benny's reply: "I'm thinking."

There is of course no reason the integrity of the language and of women's rights should be mutually exclusive, and there is no reason to doubt that the majority of women who have ears themselves deeply resent what is going on in their name. But as is so often the case, the most strident get the bullhorns, and people who like to think of themselves as sensitive to human rights causes are the first to yield. They do so without paying any serious attention to what they are doing. What they are doing is, pure and simply, helping to ruin the language.

When two years ago I first happened upon a directive from the editors of the Yale Daily News to the effect – as I advised in this space a fortnight ago – that henceforward first-year students would be referred to as "freshpersons," I concluded that some pubescent fanatic had got hold of the editor's chair, but that he was bound to grow up in a month or two.

But over the weekend I would discover, reading the commencement issue, that "freshpersons" is now standard usage in the paper, though I caught one lapse into "freshpeople." One would be tempted to say that boys will be boys, but that is of course excluded under the current protocols, leaving us with what? Young persons will be young persons? The flavor of that will get you a diet Popsicle.

The day before, looking in at a forum on race relations, attention focused on the master of ceremonies. Charles Ogletree is a distinguished black professor of law at Harvard, whose skills as a parliamentarian and moderator put him in great demand on the circuit to protect the audience from discursive speakers. So he is introducing one of the participants, William Gray, president of the United Negro College Fund, and until recently a senior member of Congress.

Professor Ogletree introduces him as a "prominent spokesperson for the Afro-American community." But you look at Mr. Gray, and listen to Mr. Gray. He is a perfectly normal, virile, middle-aged male, a foundation executive and a doctor of divinity. Why suddenly does he have to be a "spokesperson"?

It has got to be because Professor Ogletree fears that to introduce him as a "spokesman" would offend. Would offend who? Mr. Gray didn't come in drag, so what would he be trying to conceal that requires him to be designated as a "person" in order to avoid the word "man"?

The tyranny offends at all levels. The Wall Street Journal recently attracted attention to the proposed new English version of the catechism. Luke 17:33 has for a few hundred years read, "He who seeks to save his life will lose it, but he who loses his life will save it." To replace that lustrous sentence the new barbarians have come up with, "Those who try to make their life secure will lose it, but those who lose their life will keep it."

That whole thing, for the sole purpose of burying the word "his." It would be preferable to substitute "her" for "his" and let the poetry go on.

Or we go to Genesis 9:6: "Whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed; For God made man in his own image." Brace yourself. That now reads, "Whoever sheds the blood of a human, by a human shall that person's blood be shed; for in his own image, God made humankind." It must have required a summit meeting of church leaders to consent to use the word "his" before image, which would suggest that it's still OK to refer to God as "him."

And there is the "him" or "her" business, which is increasingly hard to avoid. "The new law authorizes the DEA to confiscate his car." Oh no. "Confiscate his or her car." Either you do that, or you go the gender-inclusive route, which is, "The new law authorizes the DEA to confiscate the car of drug offenders." Distinguished stylists are going the his/her route, though it convulses the brain why people should take offense at the gender-inclusive "his" or "man."

"Man was born free, but everywhere he is in chains." You can say that again. These are the chains of Lilliputian Amazons of verbal correctness, who have beseiged, and threaten to corrupt, the English language, one of the great glories of personkind.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, June 4, the 155th day of 1993. There are 210 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 4, 1942, the Battle of Midway began during World War II, resulting in America's first major victory over Japan and marking a decisive turning point for the United States in the Pacific theater.

On this date:

In 1647, the English army seized King Charles I as a hostage.

In 1812, the Louisiana Territory was renamed the Missouri Territory.

In 1878, Turkey turned Cyprus over to the British.

In 1892, the Sierra Club was incorporated in San Francisco.

In 1896, Henry Ford made a successful test run with his car in a nighttime drive through the streets of Detroit.

In 1940, the Allied military evacuation from Dunkirk, France ended.

Medicine dreaming big now

Paul Harvey

President Clinton will soon announce a plan for reforming government health care that will cost $40 billion – and maybe $80 billion – which we don't have.

George Lundberg, M.D., notes that 28 percent of our federal health budget goes to keep dying patients "alive" for a few more months. Maybe, he says, we can't afford that.

Not since Morris Fishbein has any editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association been willing to prescribe such strong medicine.

Before we resort to remedies that drastic for the debilitating hemorrhage of red ink, dare we dream big?

With each day bringing some new development in the field of preventive medicine, is it too much to hope that soon enough we might prevent the diseases that are costing us too much to cure?

Two studies at Harvard Medical reached the same conclusion – that vitamin E pills may reduce the risk of heart disease by 40 percent.

Before we have learned appropriate post-stroke therapy we are learning how to prevent strokes, how to prevent blood clots with drugs.

If the marriage between traditional medicine and nutrition was a shotgun wedding, so be it. It's working out well with some promising offspring.

As recently as five years ago nutrition was rarely mentioned in any medical publication; today there is something related to nutrition in every issue.

We now have a new vaccine for preventing bacterial meningitis.

Evidence is accumulating that zinc (with a trace of copper added) may retard, even reverse, certain eye ailments – including macular degeneration, which had been thought irreversible.

Twenty percent of elderly Americans have cataracts. Vitamin E shows promise of preventing cataracts. Nuts, wheat germ, sunflower and canola oils are a good source.

Accutane, a prescription drug sold as an acne medicine, is now demonstrating that it can slow the growth of – or even erase – certain cancers of the skin and mouth, and maybe cervical cancer.

Accutane is nothing more than a synthesized form of vitamin A.

Other potential cancer-fighting nutrients now acknowledged include calcium, beta-carotene, tannins and selenium.

The National Cancer Institute acknowledges that we may be able to prevent many cancers with soybeans, lavender oil, orange peel.

Michael Sporn, M.D., says, "Nutrition to prevent disease has gone from being a dream fantasy to exciting reality!"

More and more skin and colon cancers are being intercepted, prevented.

A significant category of breast tumors – which formerly required diagnostic biopsy – are now disappearing with no treatment more drastic than abstinence from coffee.

Dental science, having virtually eliminated cavities, has been able to shift its emphasis to less urgent cosmetic dentistry.

Might the practice of medicine, per se, similarly progress past the curative to the preventive?

We can dream big, but we dare not bet big.

Presently we can prevent many diseases that are caused by overeating, overdrinking and illicit sex – but we don't.

Clinton walks mirrored hallways

Walter Mears
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) – In the mirrored hallways of political image making, the product is in the perceptions, and the work of changing them is not risk-free. That is the potential down side in David Gergen's sudden enlistment to return to the White House, this time for a Democrat.

After tours there with three Republican presidents, Gergen said his job as counselor to Bill Clinton is to use the talents of the Democratic campaign to better advantage, and to develop and communicate a vision of the president's objectives.

"The message here is we are rising above politics," Clinton said in appointing Gergen, a friend for nearly 10 years.

But there's another, less positive message for the skeptics who complain about the way things are done in Washington, and it is that insiders prevail, party and policy ties notwithstanding.

That's the Ross Perot argument about the way decisions are made inside the Beltway. He feeds the suspicion that they're all in it together, that the establishment insiders wield power no matter who is elected to govern.

That Beltway crowd and the brain-dead politics of Washington were targets in Clinton's own campaign for change. Clinton ran as the outsider; the new look at the White House doesn't quite fit that mold.

"I just think it's time we get beyond some of these games that we play in this town," Gergen said in a CNN interview. "The people in this country are sick of it."

He was talking about partisan infighting. When Perot says much the same thing, it is about the Washington establishment although he too is close enough to Gergen to have tried to hire him for a top job in the 1992 campaign.

Gergen may well prove a real asset to the administration, as he did a dozen years ago in selling the Reaganomics program Clinton denounces and seeks to undo with his economic plan.

Indeed, Clinton hardly can afford to let it be otherwise. In Gergen, the president has hired a Republican media celebrity for a publicly announced effort to change his image. Saying that makes it more difficult to do. And to have it end badly would be a political disaster.

"I have been very concerned that the cumulative effect of some of the things which are now very much in the news has given to the administration a tinge that is too partisan and not connected to the mainstream, pro-change, future-oriented politics and policies that I ran for president to implement," Clinton said last Saturday as he announced Gergen's new role.

That roundabout sentence suggests that he hasn't changed, just that impressions of him have. But Clinton signed off on the strategy that sought to push his economic proposals though Congress on party lines, with Democratic votes – the course that undid his jobs spending bill when Senate Republicans blocked it.

Clinton emphasized issues and agreed to appointments that seemed to his centrist Democratic allies – and to Gergen the commentator – a lurch to the left.

In the process, some campaign pledges have faded or have been reversed.

In politics as in big league baseball, the instinct is to change managers. That's not enough to end a losing streak unless the players deliver. With his campaign foundering, President George Bush summoned his old manager, Jim Baker, back to the White House. But what change there was was neither soon enough nor convincing enough to turn the course of a losing campaign.

Gergen said he believes Clinton wants to be more of a centrist than he has seemed. "No one individual is going to ... save this presidency," he said in an ABC interview Sunday. "The presidency doesn't need to be saved."

What it does need, he said in the CNN interview, is to "develop and communicate a vision of where this president wants to go ... so the people know where he wants to go and are willing to march behind him."

While moderate and conservative Democrats praised the Gergen appointment, Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican leader, said on ABC that "it may be more PR than anything else."

And that, Dole argued, isn't the real problem.

"It's not the messenger, it's the message."

Some Navajos see mystery illness as divine retribution

By ED MORENO
Associated Press Writer

RAMAH NAVAJO RESERVATION, N.M. (AP) — From the dense pinon-juniper woodlands in the southern reaches to the vast flatlands punctuated by startling spires of stone in the north, sheep shearing is under way in Navajo country.

Ranching families are moving their sheep to camps, shearing the wool and selling it at wool barns, as generations before them did.

But fewer Navajos are actually ranching these days and many other traditions are falling by the wayside. And to some traditional Navajos, that may explain the mysterious illness that has killed 13 people, eight of them members of the tribe.

Some Navajo say the outbreak may be divine retribution for their neglect of the old values.

"Perhaps it's some kind of punishment," Martha Pino said. "I don't know."

Elders all over the reservation are decrying the way more and more Navajos are eating fast food, playing video games, frequenting video stores and watching MTV.

Ethel Lee, who sold a couple bags of wool at a barn Thursday, said she, too, believes the illness is "a message from the gods" telling Navajos they are on the wrong course.

She said the time her sheep disappeared was a similar message: They were gone for four days from her wood-and-stucco house and didn't return until she had a medicine man bless the area.

The woman said Navajos must continue simple traditions — like the often-neglected prayers of thanks for the pinon nuts that are about to be harvested — in order to stay in good health and balance.

However, economic factors are making the traditional land-based Navajo lifestyle less attractive for many younger people. At the wool barn in Mountain View, growers are getting 27 cents a pound for white wool, less than half of last year's price.

"We're losing it," Rolland Ellsworth said of the livestock-based culture. "We recognize we're losing it, and we're trying to encourage young families to get into it."

Jobs are scarce in the region, said Ellsworth, vice chairman of the Ramah Navajo Chapter. The chapter government, law enforcement and school support only about 400 jobs.

A small wood-cutting operation has allowed a few more men to earn extra money selling firewood, and a new mini-mall brought 24 jobs, but that's not enough to support the few thousand people who live on this remote reservation-within-a-reservation about 60 miles south of Gallup.

Some Navajos commute to border towns for jobs; others are on public assistance or subsist on homegrown food, Ellsworth said.

Navajos on the tribe's 17-million-acre reservation in New Mexico, Arizona and Utah are taking modern and traditional approaches to the mystery illness. About 175,000 people live on the reservation, which encircles a 631,000-acre Hopi reservation where about 12,000 live.

Government epidemiologists have been sent in to help state health officials and doctors from the Indian Health Service.

Also Thursday, a Navajo medicine man performed a purification rite at a state park near Gallup where a 13-year-old Navajo girl collapsed from the disease May 28. She died the next day. Navajos had refused to set foot in the park for fear of evil spirits.

The medicine man, Mark Charley, said after the closed ceremony that the evil spirits had been driven out. His son, apprentice medicine man Johnny Barbone, said he was confident that the mystery illness would soon pass, too.

"A flu hit here," he said. "That's all it is."

Bosnian Serbs agree to peacekeeping monitors in Gorazde

By MAUD S. BEELMAN
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs besieging Gorazde say they will allow peacekeepers into the Muslim enclave, but only under conditions that will stall the process indefinitely, U.N. officials said today.

U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said Bosnian leader Radovan Karadzic agreed Thursday to permit such monitors but insisted details would have to be worked out on the military level.

"Who knows how long that might take?" Eckhard told reporters, as international negotiators Thorvald Stoltenberg and Lord David Owen met with Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic.

The Bosnian Serbs had promised last month to permit U.N. observers into Gorazde, one of six designated U.N. "safe areas" meant primarily for the protection of Muslim civilians.

But local commanders have blocked the United Nations, asserting they needed written permission from Gen. Ratko Mladic, commander of Bosnian Serb forces. Meanwhile, Serb artillery is pounding Gorazde.

Owen and Stoltenberg met with Karadzic on the monitor issue Thursday in Pale, the Bosnian-Serb stronghold east of Sarajevo, but "the meeting ... was not productive at all," Eckhard said.

He quoted Owen as saying the Serbs were "cocky and confident," after their battlefield gains and their rebuff of international attempts to impose a peace plan they opposed.

Owen and Cyrus Vance, Stoltenberg's predecessor, are co-authors of a peace plan that would divide Bosnia into 10 largely autonomous provinces along ethnic lines while preserving its pre-war borders.

The Serbs oppose the plan because it would force them to relinquish some of the 70 percent of Bosnia they have conquered during the 14-month-old war and because it runs counter to their dreams of linking up with Serbia proper.

Serb opposition has forced the international community to consider interim plans to end the killing.

In New York, the United States and its European partners were trying to line up votes today among the U.N. Security Council's 15 members for a resolution enforcing the havens.

But many developing nations agree with Bosnia's government that the United Nations should take even tougher action.

They say that setting up U.N.-guarded regions is tantamount to confining Muslims to ghettos and recognizing Serb territorial gains. The United States, France, Britain, Spain and Russia argue, however, that the havens are only temporary, meant to save lives pending a political settlement.

For their part, the Serbs appear to taking advantage of the world's indecision by advancing beyond the 70 percent of Bosnia they already control.

The resolution authorizes sending a total of 5,000-10,000 additional U.N. peacekeepers to Bihac, Srebrenica, Gorazde, Tuzla, Zepa and Bosnia's capital, Sarajevo. They would "deter attacks" on themselves and on civilians in and around these cities and "promote the withdrawal" of Bosnian Serb soldiers.

The United Nations already has 9,000 peacekeepers in Bosnja but they are authorized only to guard food and medical deliveries and to protect themselves.

Owen appeared pessimistic about the new plan.

"It's no use in New York changing the mandate without giving them the resources," he told the British Broadcasting Corp. "It is all too easy to will the end and fail to provide the means and this is the real problem of the United Nations."

Security Council resolutions "mean nothing unless they are matched by resources," he said.

Bosnia's vice president, Ejup Ganic, said that even without the Serbs, Croats and Muslims would try to start implementing the plan in one Muslim-dominated and two Croat-dominated provinces.

Croat-Muslim distrust has built over past weeks because of intense fighting in central Bosnian between the two ethnic groups. Bosnian Croat leader Mate Boban was scheduled to join Izetbegovic and the mediators later today, and Eckhard described the meeting as "peace building between allies that have begun fighting."

Meanwhile, the Sarajevo airlift, now almost the only source of food for Sarajevo, remained suspended. On Wednesday, U.N. officials halted the mission after four French soldiers were wounded by snipers, and gunfire hit an American relief plane and a French transporter evacuating wounded.

Ethnic Serbs took up arms in Bosnia after Muslims and Croats voted to secede from Yugoslavia in February 1992. Fighting has left more than 138,000 people dead or missing.

Sihanouk abandons plan for interim government

By DENIS D. GRAY
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Prince Norodom Sihanouk abandoned his plan for an interim coalition government today after his son, who leads the main opposition party, complained the arrangement robbed him of his election victory.

Sihanouk had announced only the night before that at the insistence of the Vietnamese-installed government and the opposition FUNCINPEC party, which won last week's U.N.-organized election, he was immediately stepping in as prime minister and supreme commander of the armed forces.

He said the vice prime ministers were his son Prince Norodom Ranariddh and Hun Sen, prime minister of the Vietnamese-installed government.

But in a short statement addressed to the Cambodian people today, Sihanouk said his plan has "now met a large obstacle which prevents me from successfully setting up a new government."

Officials said Sihanouk changed his mind after receiving a protest from Ranariddh, who is believed to be either in FUNCINPEC-controlled areas in the country's northwest or in neighboring Thailand.

"Ranariddh wanted more balance in favor of FUNCINPEC," said Raoul Jennar, a specialist on Cambodia who saw the message to Sihanouk.

The election, the first multiparty polls here in 21 years, concluded a week ago. With the count nearly finished today, FUNCINPEC had 45.3 percent of the votes and the ruling Cambodian People's Party had 38.7 percent. The opposition Buddhist Liberal Democratic Party had 3.7 percent.

It is projected that FUNCINPEC will win 58 seats, the People's Party 52 and the Liberal Democrats nine in the 120-member constituent assembly. The assembly is to adopt a new constitution within three months, then form a permanent government.

FUNCINPEC was formed by one of three guerrilla groups that fought the government for 13 years before the 1991 peace accord.

This week, as the counting showed FUNCINPEC in the lead, the government alleged irregularites in the balloting and demanded a new vote in several provinces.

Tension mounted as government and government party officials said they may not recognize the results and warned of military unrest.

In a meeting with U.N. mission chief Yasushi Akashi this morning, Hun Sen and Foreign Minister Hor Nam Hong continued to challenge the results, said a U.N. official who demanded anonymity.

In a message to his son Thursday, Sihanouk said he had proposed the interim government to "avoid a bloody conflict which His Excellency Hun Sen helped me to see."

Sihanouk said that in abandoning the plan he was putting the responsibility for any more bloodshed on the shoulders of the two competing parties.

U.N. sources said Sihanouk had not consulted the U.N. peacekeeping mission before making his move, even though the mission is charged with overseeing the country's administration.

U.N. mission spokesman Eric Falt said today that in the three months before the constituent assembly forms a new government, arrangements should be sought to avoid conflict and Sihanouk should be at the heart of the solution.

Sihanouk said in his proposal Thursday that he recognized the newly elected constituent assembly — making clear his government was only to be an interim one.

Sihanouk, a 72-year-old former monarch who had ruled for three decades, is widely seen as the only leader capable of drawing support from all of Cambodia's factions.

The election was seen as a chance to bring peace to Cambodia after war and revolution that has killed some 2 million people in the past two decades.

Six Good Reasons To Vote For Kay Bailey Hutchison For U.S. Senate
1. Her budget as State Treasurer is down by 8%, yet she still earned more for the taxpayers than ever in the state's history.
2. As a small business owner, she will fight taxes and push for more spending cuts.
3. Her #1 priority is reducing the federal deficit by cutting spending, not by raising taxes.
4. She's for across-the-board cuts in the $300 billion the Federal government spends for overhead and has a plan to save $1 trillion by limiting the growth of spending.
5. Kay is a strong supporter of term limits and reform of Congress.
6. She wants to stop frivolous lawsuits that clog our courts and drive up health care costs.

Best workplaces combine shrewd business with – fun

By CHRIS REINOLDS
Associated Press Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Cutthroat stockbrokers at A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. can turn around and drive their BMWs right back home. They're not welcome there.

The St. Louis-based securities brokerage, the largest outside of New York, is "Wall Street without the rat race," say the authors of a book that named A.G. Edwards among the nation's 100 best places to work.

Robert Levering and Milton Moskowitz set out 10 years ago to find America's most congenial workplaces. They revised the list for the second edition of "The 100 Best Places to Work in America," published earlier this year.

At a time of layoffs, job burnout and soaring employee health costs, they were surprised to find a growing number of "best" companies to choose from.

"The 100 companies profiled in this book may account for only a small fraction of the total U.S. work force, but as exemplars they represent a growing force," they wrote. "They are magnets for people looking for meaningful work. They are models for companies trying to get it right."

Levering and Moskowitz weighed such factors as pay and benefits, opportunities for advancement, job security, company pride and friendly relations among colleagues.

They reviewed some 400 companies, visiting each to interview employees from the assembly line to the chief executive's office. The 100 finalists were not ranked.

When Levering visited A.G. Edwards, he found employees who clearly were having fun — wisecracking and joking — sometimes a foreign concept in the serious world of stockbrokers.

"It seems silly, but if we dedicate our lives and savings to make a company good, we ought to at least enjoy it," said chairman Ben Edwards, who took over the firm from his father in the late 1960s.

Founded in 1887 by Edwards' great-grandfather, the brokerage employs 9,446 people with 25 percent of the work force based in St. Louis. It has brokers in cities in 48 states, including, of course, Carefree, Ariz.

Fel-Pro Inc. in Skokie, Ill., a leading maker of auto and industrial gaskets, drew praise for the generous benefits it offers to workers with families.

When a "Fel-Proite" baby is born, the company sends the mother flowers, gives the baby a pair of inscribed leather shoes and buys a $1,000 savings bond in the child's name. Fel-Pro also provides on-site child care for its 1,900 workers.

But that's not all. Fel-Pro offers low-cost tutoring for employees' children who have problems in school and contributes $3,000 a year for those who go to college.

Spokesman Rich Morris said Fel-Pro has focused on the family since its founding in 1918. In fact, the company now employs people who grew up on Fel-Pro benefits.

"When an employee has less distractions in their life, they can devote their energies to doing the best job they can ... and we can serve our customers the best way possible," Morris said.

Hershey Foods Corp., based in Hershey, Pa., got high marks for fostering community spirit and corporate pride. It is the nation's leading candy maker.

One of the first stops on the company tour for new employees is the Milton Hershey School, which cares for 1,150 students who were orphaned or born into troubled homes.

The school is the company's largest stockholder, controlling 77 percent of the voting shares, so employees know the company's dividends are going directly to care for disadvantaged children.

Patagonia Inc., a sports equipment company in Ventura, Calif., made the list because of its free spirit and dedication to play. Patagonia's 425 employees are encouraged to follow their outdoor obsessions, from rock climbing sabbaticals to surfing lunches.

Company officials say it makes no sense to hire surfers, kayakers and mountain climbers and keep them cooped up indoors.

"It's a great place to work," said employee Jeannie Wall, an Olympic hopeful in Alpine skiing. "There's a lot of flexibility and people who share the same passion and sense of adventure."

Wall said she is free to leave early to go windsurfing if her work is finished. Besides, she said, it's good business. "Being out there with other people who use the products ... you pick up new ideas and learn what people like and don't like," she said.

Epileptic beaten to death while in police custody

By KAREN MATTHEWS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An epileptic in police custody was beaten to death as he lay face down on a hospital floor, handcuffed from behind, the medical examiner said in ruling the death a homicide.

Police said 40-year-old John Cromartie had become violent and was trying to escape when he was restrained by four officers supervised by a sergeant.

But C. Vernon Mason, a civil rights attorney representing Cromartie's 70-year-old mother, said that there had been no escape attempt and that two white officers shouted, "Nigger!" throughout the beating.

The officers were assigned to desk duty pending internal and criminal investigations.

"What they did to my son was unnecessary," Cromartie's mother, Laura Pruitt, said Thursday after release of the medical examiner's report. "You don't do that to a dog."

Cromartie died May 25, three days after his arrest on a gun-possession charge. He had been taken to the hospital after suffering an apparent epileptic seizure while in a lockup awaiting arraignment, authorities said.

Lt. Raymond A. O'Donnell, a police spokesman, said that while in the hospital, Cromartie became violent and tried to escape.

The medical examiner's report said Cromartie's death was caused by blows to the head, neck and other parts of the body and by his being put in a face-down position that made it hard to breathe.

Two of the officers and the sergeant are white; the other two officers are black, O'Donnell said.

Cromartie had exhibited agitated behavior "consistent with delirium tremens," or alcohol withdrawal, the report said.

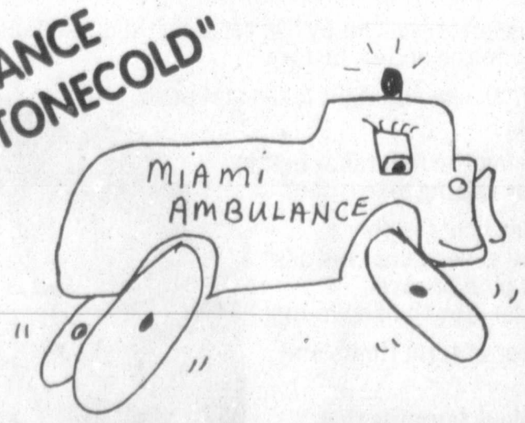

Mason said Cromartie may also have become agitated because of high blood pressure or epilepsy. Mason said his account of Cromartie's death came from a witness who has not been identified.

Tennessean dives like 'Kamikaze' to capture National Spelling Bee

By CONNIE CASS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — They lobbed a softball toward Geoff Hooper in the 66th National Spelling Bee and he knocked it out of the park with a grin: "k-a-m-i-k-a-z-e."

Spell "kamikaze" — that's all it takes to be named the nation's top young speller. But first get through "malaxage," "isonomy," "mutinously," "slalom," "tragedian," "oleander," "ankh," "anorak," "neutercane," "empyrean," "isopleth," "pharisaical," "caparison," "stupefacient" and "enchilada."

Geoff, 14, aced all those words during two grueling days of the World Series of spelling. He emerged as champion Thursday after 15 rounds that eliminated 234 youngsters.

After his last competitor, David Urban, 13, of Amarillo, Texas, misspelled "renascent," all Geoff needed for victory was one correct spelling. When the pronouncer said "kamikaze," the 963rd word of the bee, Geoff smiled broadly. He knew he had won.

"I guess there wasn't much pressure on me then," Geoff said afterward, holding a trophy in his lap. But if luck helped, studying an hour a day beforehand didn't hurt.

"I did not flat-out guess any of my words," said Geoff, who plans to put his $5,000 prize in the bank when he gets home to Arlington, Tenn.

David, who had never heard the word "renascent" before, wished he could have changed words with Geoff. But he wasn't bitter. He won $4,000 and topped his performance last year, when he finished 66th in the bee.

"I'm excited," David said. "I didn't expect to get in the top 20."

The crowd's favorite by far was the youngest speller, 9-year-old Wendy Guey of Palm Beach Gardens, Fla. After sounding her way through "symbiosis" and "carcinolytic," she faltered in the 11th round over "meiosis."

Ali Soleimani, 13, of Olathe, Kan., also dropped out in the 11th round, missing "glosseme." That narrowed the field to three — Geoff, David, and Yuni Kim, 12, a seventh-grader from Pottsville, Pa.

All three spelled their words correctly through two tense rounds.

But in the 14th round, Yuni was mystified by the word "apotheosize." She turned away from the audience, stared at her feet a few seconds, then spelled it "a-p-o-t-h-e-t-i-z-e." Disappointed, she quickly turned and marched off the stage, leaving the two boys to duel it out.

The 66th annual national bee began Wednesday with 131 girls and 104 boys from 49 states, the Virgin Islands, Guam, Mexico, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia and even Germany, where one girl's father is in the U.S. military. The youngsters, ages 9 through 15, won contests sponsored by their local newspapers to advance to the national meet, sponsored by Scripps Howard Newspapers.

Most of the first day was spent on impossible-sounding words such as "supralapsarian," "slobberhannes" and "whorlywort" that competitors had memorized from a 1,200-word list.

The competition grew tougher in the later rounds as contestants were given words that were easier to spell but had not been provided in advance. A few youngsters fought back tears as they struggled with tough words on stage.

"You never know when you get up there if you're going to spell it right," said Geoff, who spelled it right every time.

Cook wins Lotto pot

AUSTIN (AP) — A 28-year-old cook from Richmond became the latest Lotto Texas winner, claiming a $9.2 million jackpot.

Martin Castellanos accepted the first installment of $335,558.91 Thursday for being the only person to match all six numbers drawn Wednesday night. He will receive payments from Lotto Texas every June 15 for the next 19 years.

"My family and I are blessed," said Castellanos, who added that he picked the winning numbers — 8, 15, 25, 36, 44, 50 — randomly.

Castellanos, who won $9,282,054, said that he plays Lotto Texas only when he has a few extra dollars.

Prior to Wednesday's drawing he had not purchased any tickets in the past two weeks. However, on Wednesday, he says he had a little extra cash and bought five tickets.

Castellanos says that the first 10 percent of his winnings will go to his church in Rosenburg. He says he and his wife will consult on other investments.

Seminary professor's retirement marks end of an era

By DANIEL CATTAU
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — Like other great collaborators, Dr. Schubert M. Ogden and Dr. John Deschner are not clones of each other, even though they've taught theology together for more than 35 years.

Their era at Perkins School of Theology is passing, an era in which they and their institution developed far-reaching reputations.

Ogden, for example, has served as president of the American Academy of Religion; Deschner was moderator of the World Council of Churches' Commission on Faith and Order for nearly a decade. Ogden is a member of the Methodist clergy; Deschner is an ordained elder. Both have published and lectured widely.

Yet "perhaps no two people could have been less alike in their preparation and temperament than these two," wrote Lewis Howard Grimes in "A History of Perkins School of Theology."

"Deschner received his graduate training in Switzerland under Karl Barth; Ogden at the University of Chicago. Deschner was a native Texan, a pastoral professor who became the confidante of both students and colleagues over the years.

"Ogden tended to seem brash to many students, though in his personal relationships he was not nearly so demanding as in the classroom. There he believed that students should know what they were talking about and be able to express their thoughts logically and precisely."

Ogden is among five senior faculty who are retiring this year from Perkins, which is part of Southern Methodist University. Deschner retired from full-time teaching two years ago, although he has remained active off campus as an emeritus professor.

When they came to Perkins in 1956, seminarians were mostly white males who came directly out of college. Today, that homogeneity is giving way to diversity at theological schools across the nation.

About 40 percent of Perkins' 351 students are women, and 20 percent are minorities. The median age is the mid-30s. The faculty is also increasingly diverse, with more women, Hispanics and African-Americans.

Some people have divided Perkins' history roughly into three eras: the first was 1915-50, the time of a small denominational school with modest academic pretensions; the second, an era of burgeoning academic reputation, lasted from 1950 well into the 1980s; and the third is emerging.

The two theologians are firmly rooted in the second Perkins, and share some trepidation about the third.

Deschner alluded to some tensions at Perkins during the past two years over the competing claims of the "communities and sub-communities" that the school serves. Both expressed concern about Perkins — and Methodists generally — keeping their academic standards high and their distinctiveness intact while confronting the changing demands of society.

"The Methodists are never going to have a fight like the Baptists are having," said Deschner. "They are not skilled at drawing the kind of distinctions that lead to schisms."

In the minds of two generations of students, the theological twosome is connected not only to each other but also to Dr. Albert C. Outler.

A renowned churchman and ecumenist who died four years ago — he had been the Methodist observer at the Second Vatican Council from 1962 to 1965 — Outler also helped revive interest in John Wesley, the founder of Methodism.

In scholarly circles, Methodist meetings and ecumenical gatherings, Deschner, 69, and Ogden, 65, have lived up to the Outler legacy They have taken seriously the task of theology — to continually examine the church and its teachings, as they see it — but they have not lost their souls doing it.

"In different ways, each of them is a protege of Albert Outler," said Dr. William R. Farmer, a New Testament scholar who recently retired from Perkins.

For a while, the three — Outler, Deschner and Ogden — formed a teaching trilogy. "They learned theology as they listened to one another," Farmer said.

In a recent interview in Ogden's office, Deschner joined in the discussion about Perkins, tradition, the task of theology today and the ghost of Outler.

"He was one person I knew in my life who was bright in every way and as near to being a Renaissance man in his approach to learning as anyone I have ever met," said Ogden.

"He was interested in how gadgets worked and knew what the dentist ought to know even if the dentist didn't know it."

Deschner jumped in: "And how sheep were born."

Repeating a litany in praise of Outler three times — "he was a remarkable man" — Ogden talked about his mentor's grace and power with the spoken word and his ability to speak "for the church in a theologically intelligible way. ... We realize we were shaped by that gift."

Outler received a tip of the theologians' hats for his early awareness of a coming liberal-conservative rift, and his foresight in heading off a more serious split with a return to the Wesleyan tradition.

The emphasis on education and learning is another moderating influence for Methodists, they said.

"This preoccupation with the life of the mind in the service of the heart and the church, that's a very genuine Methodist thing," Ogden said.

"This is crucial," added Deschner. "Methodists love education. The reason is they were taught sanctification by John Wesley. And education for Methodists somehow belongs to recovering the mind which was in Christ."

With a winsome flash of insight, he said: "When Lutherans really bare their souls they talk about sin and forgiveness .. When Methodists really get going they talk about self-improvement."

All this talk of tradition is not without relevance for today. Witness the Branch Davidians and various other new religious movements that attract people who are desperately searching for meaning.

"There has been this enormous lapse of memory or loss of the sense of the past," said Ogden. "It's an American problem. We're open all the time to these new pitches which retail the old goods."

Theology — and good theologians — are needed today more than ever, both professors said.

"I can't imagine a theologically more important time," Ogden said. "The role of theology is not directly to answer this quest for meaning, but it is to help persons think through a critical way the answers they get ... that can lead them into wholeness, health and well-being."

Referring to the theology that led to the self-destruction of the Branch Davidians, he said: "There is some real primitive stuff going on there. But the margin of difference between that dumbness and the dumbness that is present in the churches — that margin of difference is not all that great."

Evangelist used to dealing with doubters

By RHONDA DUEY
The Odessa American

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — Evangelist Lucy Rael is used to dealing with doubters.

And admittedly her claims do sound a little far-fetched.

Rael has spent 21 years trying to convince people that her palms really do flow oil and bleed during services. Medical science has failed to find an explanation for the phenomenon. But Rael has no trouble explaining it.

"It's like when Jesus appeared after his resurrection," said Rael, in Odessa this week for a crusade. "He showed his hands and said, 'I loved you. I died for you. I gave my blood for you.' I'm constantly telling people to remember the sacrifice of Jesus."

Still, Rael isn't surprised when people have a hard time swallowing the supernatural aspects of her ministry. "We're not trying to make believers out of people," she said. "Everyone has a choice on how to think.

"But I wish everyone would take the time to analyze what this really is. It's a sign of God speaking to the people and the message that he's giving them."

Rael's stigmata began 21 years ago when she, her husband Sito, and a few other members of his church in Taos, N.M., began praying and fasting for "a movement of the Holy Spirit in the city of Taos." During a worship service, Rael felt something splash her face as she was clapping.

"Oil began to appear on my hands," she said. "I didn't know much about this sort of thing." Members of the church began showing her Scriptural passages dealing with the anointing of oil. During a service three days later, things got even stranger.

"I looked at my hands, and there was blood," she said. "At first I wasn't scared — I thought I'd cut my hands on something." A search of the pews and her clothing revealed no sharp surfaces. Meanwhile, the wounds got deeper, until they had gone through her hands, she said.

There was no pain associated with the wounds, she said, "just a sensation."

Rael said she was frightened at first, but then, "the peace of the Lord came over me. I knew that God was doing something." That conviction has led her to establish a worldwide ministry, Lovesign Ministry. Her unusual claims have led to television coverage in several countries. But she maintains that she is no celebrity.

"I'm very, very careful to tell people not to get their eyes on the woman," she said of herself. "I point them to Jesus."

Rael and her husband now operate out of Tulsa, Okla., traveling up to 10 months of the year. She's excited about the opportunities she's had as a woman evangelist.

"There are a lot of women out there now, so God is using the men and the women to spread the Gospel," she said. "I'm glad that I can be one. I'm sure that many, many years ago women had a harder time. But they've paved the way for us. Seldom do we get flak from anybody."

She also sees a great opportunity for evangelism within the Hispanic community. For instance, the church that sponsored her crusade in Odessa, Templo Monte Calvario, has a Spanish-language gospel radio station, KXOI-AM . These stations are rare, but their numbers are increasing, she said.

"This is something very special to me, because I'm Spanish," she said. "I want to be able to minister to them and let them know that God has great things for them as we've seen with other races."

Rael has no intention of changing her methods at this point. "Right now my calling is being an evangelist," she said. "I'll continue doing that until the Lord changes my direction. I'm here to do whatever he wants me to do."

Watchdog group says China steps up persecution

By GENE KRAMER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chinese authorities, concerned about "explosive growth of Christianity" among young people, have intensified a crackdown against Protestants and Roman Catholics operating outside government-approved "patriotic churches," a human rights monitoring group says.

Escalation of abuses against Muslims and Tibetan Buddhists was also noted in "Continuing Religious Repression in China," a survey by Asia Watch released Friday.

Increased religious repression since early 1992 has included beatings, arrests, forced relocations, surveillance, property confiscation and other coercion, especially against Chinese engaging in worship at home or otherwise outside government-controlled churches, Asia Watch said.

It disputed a Chinese government contention that some 18 Catholic prisoners were freed in February and March, saying two were known to be still detained. The survey included details of 56 clergy or lay workers known to be in detention and 36 partially restricted.

Supreme Court contender exonerated of allegation

By RON FOURNIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading contender for the upcoming Supreme Court vacancy, federal Appeals Court Judge Gilbert S. Merritt, was cleared six months ago of an allegation of judicial misconduct in a 1988 criminal investigation.

Colleagues of the appeals court judge are quietly defending Merritt as President Clinton nears his decision on a replacement for retiring Justice Byron White.

The White House remains concerned that even an unproven allegation could be an embarrassment if Merritt, chief judge of the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, is nominated.

"We've taken a look at this and it's on the up-and-up, but we want to see how it plays out," an administration official said Thursday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

White House aides dealing with Supreme Court candidates are a bit gun-shy in the wake of the Lani Guinier controversy. Clinton on Thursday withdrew Guinier's nomination to be the civil rights enforcement chief at the Justice Department, saying he never would have offered her if he had known of some of her views on civil rights issues.

Merritt, 57, of Nashville, is on Clinton's ever-changing short list of prospects, a list that grew by at least one name in recent days. Officials said Thursday that Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt was under consideration, along with Merritt and at least two other federal judges.

The president was not expected to make his choice before next week.

In 1988, a lawyer friend told Merritt that a mutual friend, Nashville Sheriff Lafayette "Fate" Thomas, was being investigated by the FBI for allegedly accepting bribes.

According to newspaper accounts at the time, the attorney, John J. Hooker, said he told another mutual friend, The (Nashville) Tennessean publisher John Seigenthaler, that Thomas was under investigation. At Hooker's urging, Merritt also agreed to tell Seigenthaler about Thomas being under investigation.

Seigenthaler asked his attorney about the accusation. The attorney, William Willis, also represented Thomas.

According to the newspaper accounts, Thomas reportedly found out about an FBI sting, presumably from his lawyer. Law enforcement officials said the leak delayed their investigation of Thomas, who eventually went to jail on an unrelated charge.

Although Merritt never warned Thomas directly and did not pass on information from law enforcement sources, Tennessee resident H.S. Branch Jr. filed a complaint in December 1991 — more than three years after the incident — with the U.S. Court of Appeals. A newspaper story was attached to the complaint.

The acting chief judge of the Judicial Council of the 6th Circuit exonerated Merritt in March 1992. On appeal, the full panel unanimously upheld the ruling in December. The panel's ruling was made public Thursday.

"Conversations among friends about events affecting public officials in their community violate no canon of judicial conduct," read the memorandum by Judge Damon J. Keith.

Merritt said Thursday there was "no dispute as to the facts," but that he did not do anything unethical.

"I am pleased that two completely independent reviews found unanimously that a person does not lose his right of free speech and freedom to associate with family and friends as a result of becoming a judge," he said.

Judge Nathaniel Jones of the 6th Circuit and U.S. District Judge John Holschum of Ohio have written White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum to support Merritt. They both sat on the panel that exonerated him.

Merritt is one of three centrist judges considered to be serious contenders for the Supreme Court post. The others are Stephen Breyer of Boston and Jon Newman of Hartford, Conn.

Merritt appears to be better positioned than Breyer and Newman because he has been asked to complete documents for his background check, while Breyer and Newman have had little or no contact with the administration.

Seigenthaler said Thursday night that Merritt was not trying to help the sheriff, but was simply trying to keep his publisher friend from associating with a person in legal trouble. He said Merritt did not like the sheriff.

"He didn't have any other motive other than to say, 'I just don't want you embarrassed if it's true,'" said Seigenthaler, who is chairman emeritus of the paper and head of the First Amendment Center at Vanderbilt University.

Seigenthaler confirmed that he asked his lawyer about Merritt's information.

Attempts to reach Branch by telephone were unsuccessful Thursday.

Employees hurt in mock drill

EULESS (AP) — A mock emergency response drill became too real for seven city employees who had to take real-life trips to the hospital for smoke inhalation and other minor injuries, a city spokeswoman says.

Spokeswoman Katherine Thompson said the combination of afternoon heat and smoke from a smoke bomb prompted the employees to complain of dizziness.

All seven were listed in good condition at Harris Methodist H-E-B Hospital late Thursday.

"They came walking out, it's nothing that serious," Ms. Thompson said.

The exercise involved a mock disaster simulating a chemical plant explosion and involved more than 100 city employees, police Cpl. Gary Kopecky said.

Six of the injured employees were acting as "victims" inside a vacant hospital that was serving as the fictional chemical plant. Ms. Thompson said she did not know what role the seventh person was playing.

Officials ended the mock emergency drill several hours early because of the problems, Ms. Thompson said.

The Book Report

by
Ellen Malone, Lovett Library Staff

Angel by Barbara Taylor Bradford
Four childhood chums make a solemn pledge that they have trouble keeping. Bound by a loyalty deeper and fiercer than friendship, orphaned friends Rosie, Kevin, Gavin, and Nell vow to stick together. But, as the years go by, the lure of fame, wealth, and power and the machinations of two interlopers pull their little family apart and take them from the streets of New York, to the studios of Hollywood, to the boulevards of Paris.

The Cat Who Went into the Closet by Lilian Braun
In the most recent of the immensely popular The Cat Who... mysteries, Quill and his inquisitive felines must crack another bewildering case. When they rent a mansion in Moose County, they find fifteen closets full of what they assume is junk. Meanwhile, the mansion's owner does in Florida after an alleged suicide attempt. And what connection does this case have to the dead potato farmer, Gil Inchpot? Qwill and the cats must piece together a family mystery in time to prevent another murder.

Mary, Mary by Ed McBain
Attorney Matthew Hope undertakes a case not exactly out of a fairy tale. He must defend retired schoolteacher Mary Barton, whom her neighbors refer to as "Mary, Mary, quite contrary," against charges that she sexually mutilated and murdered three young girls and then buried the corpses in her garden. The beleagured lawyer must overcome the prosecution's endless array of witnesses and, more importantly, the obstinacy of his difficult client.

Perfect by Judith McNaught
In a sweeping tale of romance, passion, and adventure, the noted author of Passion creates her most intriguing heroine yet. Hillary Spencer, the survivor of a not-so-perfect childhood, believes firmly in giving people a second chance. However, she never expects to discover "Mr. Right" in such an unlikely place and to be swept up into a whirlwind of passion and an eternal romance with this smoldering lover straight out of her dreams.

A World Waiting To Be Born by M. Scott Peck
This book is a plea for returning civility to American society by the author of The Road Less Traveled. How did we lose sight of the true meaning of civility in our lives? The renowned diagnostician and healer traces the disintegration of public civility in America, outlines the various ill effects of this decline, and offers a compelling argument for rediscovering civility in marriage, family life, and the workplace.

Assembling California by John McPhee
The long-anticipated conclusion to Annals of the Former World probes the geological and human history of one of the nation's most important regions. Based on information gathered on numerous field trips made by the author with tectonicist Eldridge Moores, the work takes a cross section of California history - the gold rushes of the nineteenth century - and shows how geological forces such as plate tectonics have helped shape the state's history.

Gay talk: It's not a choice, folks

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Why can't people get it through their thick skulls that being gay is not a choice; gays are born that way?

I have yet to hear a talk-show host correct those who say, "Well — if that's the lifestyle they choose ..." etc. Gays have such a problem staying safe, staying alive, staying employed — why in the world would anyone choose that lifestyle?

Abby, thank you for educating some folks. Please try to reiterate the facts often; maybe someone will listen and learn.

PHILADELPHIAN

P.S. I am not gay.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My mother died when I was an infant, and after her death my father lost all his faith in God, and he never set foot in his church again. Consequently, he never had me baptized.

I am now 21 and have met a wonderful man who is very religious, and I would like very much to be baptized. I was recently godmother to my nephew and I felt like a hypocrite up there at the altar taking part in a sacred religious ceremony, knowing that I had never been baptized. Is it too late? I'm too embarrassed to ask anyone else.

UNBAPTIZED

DEAR UNBAPTIZED: You need not feel embarrassed. Adults are frequently baptized. In fact, some churches baptize their members only after they have reached adulthood.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: With summer vacation approaching, I am compelled to relate our story to your readers.

My daughter, her husband and their three small children drove to another state to attend a wedding and visit relatives. On their trip, they stopped at a reputable motel to spend the night.

The following morning, just as they were packing to leave, the 4-year-old very excitedly said, "Look, Daddy, I found a balloon." Then he put it in his mouth and proceeded to blow it up. This so-called "balloon" was a used condom — left on the floor near the commode by a previous occupant!

For the next three months, this sweet little boy must get hepatitis shots, and must be tested periodically for HIV- positive blood.

To prospective travelers, I beg you, don't take for granted that your room will be clean and safe for your little ones. Check it out very carefully.

To motel cleaning staff, please clean and sanitize each room as though your family will be the next occupants.

To the previous guest of that motel — if you had enough sense to use a condom, why did your good sense stop there? Proper disposal of the condom would have eliminated the mental anguish our family is going through — not knowing if our precious little guy will be OK, plus the pain and discomfort he will have to endure from the needles and testing.

HEARTSICK GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: On behalf of my readers, I thank you for caring enough to write this letter of warning.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order send a long (business-size), self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Discipline in your material affairs is a must today. Make due with what you have without borrowing from others. Also avoid taking speculative risks in unfamiliar areas. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Rely more upon your own judgment today than upon the advice of associates who lack your experience. If they miscalculate, their mistakes could be greater than yours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Guard against inclinations today to sweep things under the rug in hopes that situations will work themselves out if left unattended.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Gratifying nonessential needs could exceed your budget today if you let your extravagant whims dominate. Practice prudence at all times.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Serious career matters should not be treated indifferently today nor shelved to a later date. Situations that deserve priority should be given priority.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Treat others considerately today, but avoid using flattery. Insincerity could damage the relationship instead of bolstering a pal's ego.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Be optimistic regarding your financial needs today, but also be realistic. Don't spend what you don't have hoping to cover it later.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In order for a partnership arrangement to be mutually effective today, both parties must be in complete accord in all areas. Even a slight deviation could hurt.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You'd better keep an eye on the clock today if you hope to maintain a productive schedule. Once you begin to fall behind, it could be very difficult to catch up again.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Social graces could be more important than usual today. Be on guard in group involvements so you don't say or do anything that could tarnish your image.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) When dealing with subordinants or people in your charge today, be kind and tolerant, but don't overindulge them in order to gain their approval. It could backfire.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today if you hope to manipulate others through promises you can't deliver it could turn out to be a disastrous maneuver. Those to whom you make a commitment will call in the marker.

Pampa's McFall will be back in the saddle

By DAN FROMM
Sports Writer

AMARILLO — "I'm just thinking about how it's gonna feel and how I want it to look," Pampa High School senior Chad McFall said after his saddle bronc ride Thursday night in the Tri-State High School Rodeo Association finals at Bill Cody Arena.

Tri-State rodeo

McFall, who got bucked after about a five-second ride, said the bronc had "a strong front end."

Chad, currently fourth in the Region I saddle bronc standings, said "I'll be back tomorrow night." McFall will have two more chances to improve his standing. The second session begins at 7:30 tonight and the final will start at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Chad's father, Gary McFall, and older brother, Marty helped Chad get mentally prepared for his ride. "I just try to build his confidence up," Gary said. "Both (Chad and Marty) know a lot more about it than I do, but I just make sure he's got everything he already knows in his mind."

"They just come to support me," Chad said. "It really helps a lot."

A few riders before McFall, Stratford's Tye Townson was taken out of the arena in an ambulance after being thrown and the bronc stepping on his back. Townson was conscious when he left the arena.

With the potential for injury always looming, Gary said, "You just try not to think about it. You know the possibility is there ... it's something that can happen."

Chad agreed, saying, "It really bothers you if you think about it too much."

As for the competition, Chad said he and the three riders ahead of him (Brady Pool, Gruver; Rance Bray, Dumas and Lance Gaillard, Cimarron County) have a supportive relationship. "We ride together every weekend so we always tell each other good luck ... but we're competitive," he said.

Overall, it was a much more successful night for Wheeler's Travis Goad, a senior at Fort Elliott High School, who turned in the second-fastest time in the ribbon roping with a 10.699-second run. Goad also continued his success in the steer wrestling stopping the timer at 7.576 seconds, more than two and a half seconds faster than the second-place finisher.

Canadian's Jim Locke, a junior at Miami High School also turned in an impressive performance in the calf roping, grabbing second place behind teammate Jered Norris with a time of 10.109.

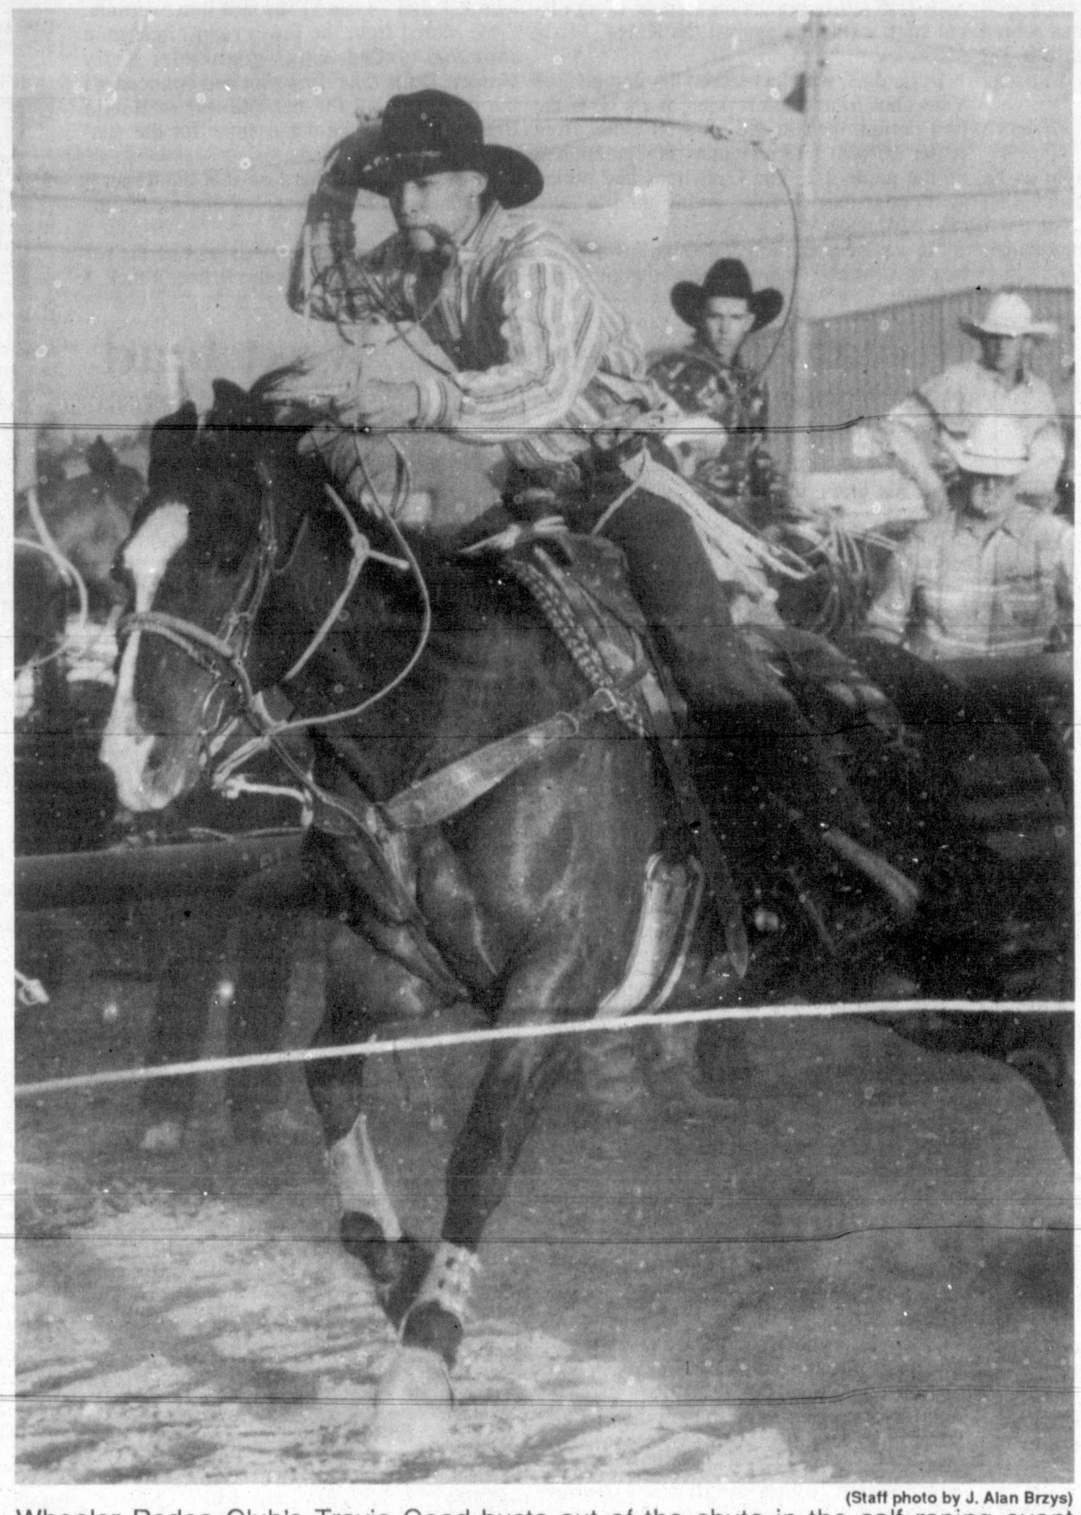

Locke and Goad currently are second and third in the overall standings behind Gruver's Brady Pool.

Pampa's Matt and Michel Reeves were also shining in their respective events. Matt surprised the field by coming in second behind Goad in the steer wrestling despite coming into the competition ranked 12th.

Michel, who entered the finals in sixth place overall, won the barrel racing with a 17.389.

Pampa's Angie Underwood, ranked 15th in pole bending, grabbed eighth place in the event with a 22.470.

Stock contractors are Hext Rodeo Company of Canadian and McCloy Rodeo Co. of Morse. Tri-State executive secretary is Jane Thomas of Wheeler. Justin McKey handled announcing duties and Perryton's Doug Munsell protected rough stock riders.

Sonics force seventh game

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle SuperSonics shackled Charles Barkley and Dan Majerle on Thursday night, beating the Suns 118-102 and forcing a Game 7 of the Western Conference finals in Phoenix.

Barkley, who scored 43 points in Game 5 Tuesday night, was limited to 13 points on 4-of-14 shooting. Majerle, also a hero in that Phoenix victory with 34 points and eight 3-pointers, was held to 12 points and one 3-pointer on 4-of-11 shooting.

On Thursday night, Ricky Pierce scored 27 points and Shawn Kemp had 22 points and 15 rebounds for the feisty Sonics, who scuffled with the frustrated Suns three times in the second half.

With the best-of-7 series at 3-3, the Sonics and the Suns will play Saturday in Phoenix to decide the winner. Phoenix is trying to make the NBA Finals for the first time since 1976, while Seattle hasn't made a championship series appearance since 1979.

Kevin Johnson had 22 points for the Suns, including his team's first 11 of the fourth quarter.

Sam Perkins added 18 points for Seattle, including four 3-pointers, and Derrick McKey and Gary Payton had 16 each. It was the first time in the series that all five of Seattle's starters scored in double figures.

Tempers got hot with 1:53 gone in the fourth quarter when Danny Ainge fouled Michael Cage hard on the shoulder after Cage got a rebound. Cage retaliated by shoving Ainge, who was called for a foul on the play.

Perkins later appeared to be sending a message to the Suns when he ran hard into Frank Johnson and knocked him down at midcourt with 1:09 left.

The game was decided early in the fourth quarter when the Sonics outscored the Suns 11-4 in the first 4:51 for a 97-79 lead with 6:21 to go. Kemp had a pair of baskets in the run.

The Suns got a second-half lift from Cedric Ceballos, who did not play in the first half, then scored eight quick points in the third period. Then he aggravated an injury to his left foot and was carried off the court by teammates.

Top cager

Pampa's Dwight Nickelberry (50), driving for the basket in this file photograph, was honored by the Amarillo Chamber of Commerce during a luncheon Thursday. Nickelberry, who graduated this year, received a merit award and was recognized as the area's outstanding high school player. Nickelberry, a 6-0 guard, was a three-year starter for the Harvesters and averaged 24.2 points a game his senior season. Nickelberry was selected to play in the McDonald's High School All-Star Game July 26 in Fort Worth.

Pair share lead in Memorial tourney

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — A steady drizzle and no wind left Muirfield Village Golf Club all but defenseless against "the guys" in the first round of the Memorial Tournament.

"When you've got easy conditions, the guys are going to tear it up," said course designer and tournament founder Jack Nicklaus after more than half the field finished under par Thursday.

Donnie Hammond and Davis Love III each shot 6-under-par 66 to lead a parade of top players around and over the treacherous spots on the course.

Foreman goes up against Morrison

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Tommy Morrison figures it's about time both he and George Foreman fought a credible opponent.

Come Monday night they'll at least have each other.

"People are finally ready to see me fight somebody and him fight somebody," Morrison said. "People are sick of him making $5 million a fight fighting nobody. I may have fought a few nobodies myself, but it wasn't for $5 million."

Nobodies indeed. So many that it would be hard for all but the most dedicated boxing fans to recognize any of the names on Morrison's 36-1 record.

Only Ray Mercer's name sticks out, and it was Mercer who gave Morrison a brutal beating in handing him his only loss two years ago.

"I was a very one-dimensional fighter then," Morrison said Thursday. "I also didn't handle the pressure of a big fight well. But I've gone through a maturing process as an athlete. This time I believe I belong here."

The betting public apparently believes Morrison belongs, making him a 7-5 favorite.

Glo-Valve slams Dixie Parts

Glo-Valve Service slammed 10 hits in the first inning, scoring 12 runs and went on to overwhelm Dixie Parts, 17-4, Thursday at Optimist Park in the Optimist Major Bambino National League.

Cody Shepard led Glo-Valve with three runs on three hits, including two doubles and three RBI. Leo Ramirez tallied three times on two hits and one RBI. Brent Phelps had a triple, a single, one run and three RBI. Heath Cowan scored two runs on two hits, one of which was a double, and two RBI. Heath Keaton and Brian Doss each had a run, hit and RBI. Kyle McCullough, Eric Lemons and Josue' Silva also scored for Glo-Valve.

Leading the way for Dixie Parts was Rodney Mendoza, who had two hits, including a triple, one run and one RBI. Jamie Howeth singled and scored. Justin Hampton and Dusty Fortin scored the other two runs for Dixie Parts.

Ramirez won his first game of the year, allowing one run and two hits in two innings pitched. He struck out three and walked one. Shepard and Cowan also pitched for Glo-Valve.

In the late game Thursday, Dunlap Industrial Engine stayed a half-game behind first-place Glo-Valve Service in the Major Bambino National League.

Jose Rodriguez scattered three hits and contributed to his own cause with a home run in an 11-1 win over Dyer's Barbeque.

With every player on the roster seeing action, the Pampa Shockers turned in a strong showing in its West Texas League opener against Borger.

At the end, however, Borger hung on for a 7-4 win Thursday night at Harvester Field.

"I was real pleased with the way we hung in there, especially with the young guys we have on the team. We got 19 players in the game and Borger went with their starters most of the way. We made only three errors, but we gave up three home runs and left eight on base," said Pampa coach Terry Bob Moore. "That really hurt us."

Pampa loaded the bases in the very first inning, but couldn't get a runner across.

Hank Gindorf started the mound for Pampa and allowed five hits in three innings while striking out three and walking two.

"Hank hadn't pitched in two years, but I thought he did a good job. He's got a good arm on him and once he develops a breaking pitch, he should be tough," Moore said.

The Shockers had six hits, including a solo home run by Kurt West. Brad Smillie and Devin King each had a double while Jason Warren, Gregg Moore and Todd Finney each had singles.

Shortstop Todd Finney, catcher Ross Watkins and first baseman Floyd White were the defensive standouts, Moore said.

Montreal draws even in Stanley Cup finals

MONTREAL (AP) — Eric Desjardins got himself in the record books and the Montreal Canadiens even with the Los Angeles Kings in the Stanley Cup finals.

"He had a great night," Montreal coach Jacques Demers said after Desjardins scored three goals to lead the Canadiens to a 3-2 overtime victory over the Kings on Thursday night, tying the best-of-7 series 1-1.

"He's been a steady defenseman. He has a great shot."

He certainly had it Thursday night as he became the first defenseman in Stanley Cup finals history to get a hat trick. Not even Bobby Orr, the model for scoring defensemen, did that.

"Usually I don't get three shots in a game," Desjardins said.

He found himself in a position to play the hero when the Canadiens got a power play with 1:45 left in regulation because of an illegal stick infraction against the Kings' Marty McSorley.

Desjardins, who had scored his first goal on a slapshot from the left point at 18:31 of the first period, then scored on a 50-footer from center ice with 1:13 remaining in regulation to tie the game 2-2. The Canadiens had pulled goaltender Patrick Roy, giving them a two-man advantage.

"It was very exciting," Desjardins said. "I was still excited from that second goal (when the game went into overtime). It was something you dream about."

This time, it was two dreams.

Desjardins didn't wait long to score the winning goal — just 51 seconds into overtime.

He scored from the lower right circle on a shot that eluded Kings goaltender Kelly Hrudey. Desjardins' first shot had bounced off the glass behind the net and out to Benoit Brunet, who fed the defenseman for the winning goal.

"I tried to go too hard on that one-timer," Desjardins said of his first shot that missed the net.

"I was lucky it hit the metal part of the bar on the glass and bounced onto Brunet's stick.

Cooper plans roping reunion in Childress

CHILDRESS — Roy Cooper, eight-time world champion roper and a resident of Childress, is hosting a benefit roping and concert in his home town Sunday.

This special reunion will honor 20 world champions, including Toots Mansfield, Dean Oliver, Don McLaughlin, Ray Wharton, Jim Bob Altizer, Glen Franklin, Junior Garrison, Phil Lyne, Ernie Taylor, Tom Ferguson, Jeff Copenhauer and Jim Gladstone. Current stars include Dave Brock, Paul Tierney, Joe Beaver, Chris Lybbert, Rabe Rabon, Troy Pruitt and Fred Whitfield.

Cooper is known as one of the top calf ropers in the history of the sport. At 37, he is still active on the PRCA circuit, having made the National Finals Rodeo the past two years. He ranks 14th in the world standings, but he has been slowed by a groin injury suffered at a roping in Roswell, N.M., several weeks ago.

The reunion will also pay tribute to the late Troy Fort, the 1947 and '49 world champion.

The event, which begins at 1 p.m. will also feature 50 of the top calf ropers in the world competing on two head and a finals, highlighted by a 10-head match between 1991 world champion Whitfield and last year's reserve champion, Brent Lewis.

A concert featuring Charlie Daniels will close the event at 7:30 p.m. at the Roy Cooper Indoor Arena.

All proceeds from the benefit going to the Museum of Champion Ropers in Childress.

Physicals set for Pampa athletes

Physical examinations for Pampa athletes from the 7th through 12th grades will be held throughout the summer.

The physicals are for both male and female athletes and will be held from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday in Dr. Keith Black's office at Northcrest Medical Building.

Pampa athletic trainer Stuart Smith said no fee will be charged and he urged 7th and 9th graders to have their physicals completed as soon as possible.

Royals take over AL West lead

By DOUG TUCKER
AP Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — For the first time in six years, the Kansas City Royals are alone in first place.

"It's nice to be in first, but it's even nicer that we're playing well," said Jeff Montgomery, who picked up his league-leading 18th save Thursday night in the Royals' 6-5 victory over Milwaukee. "This club is starting to come together."

George Brett hit his fifth home run of the season and Greg Gagne had a two-run double as the Royals moved a half-game ahead of idle California in the AL West. The Royals had not been alone atop the standings since June 8, 1987.

"Six years? That's hard to believe," said Mark Gubicza, who went 2 2-3 inning in relief of Mark Gardner as Kansas City spoiled Mike Boddicker's return to Royals Stadium.

Boddicker (3-4), traded from Kansas City to Milwaukee on April 27, gave up six runs and eight hits in 4 2-3 innings.

"I've been pitching in some tough luck, I guess," Boddicker said. "I've had some balls fall in that normally don't fall in, but that's just baseball. This is a beautiful park. I just wish I could have done better tonight."

Boddicker, winless in four starts since May 14, said he's not sure what his role will be on the Brewers.

"I'll do whatever that man wants me to do," he said, pointing toward manager Phil Garner's office. "He's the boss."

Gardner (4-2) gave up four hits and five runs in 5 1-3 innings and Montgomery got the last three outs.

The Royals, who went 7-2 on a just-concluded road trip, moved five games over .500 for the first time since Oct. 2, 1991.

The Royals scored three runs in the second off Boddicker, who played two seasons in Kansas City.

After Wally Joyner singled and Hubie Brooks was hit by a pitch, Keith Miller doubled home Joyner. Greg Gagne then lined a two-run double for a 3-1 lead.

Brett, who had only seven homers last year, homered in the third. It was his first of the season at Royals Stadium.

Consecutive doubles by Dickie Thon, John Jaha and Tom Lampkin made it 4-3 in the fifth. But the Royals scored twice in the bottom of the inning on RBI singles by Brian McRae and Brooks.

Greg Vaughn led off the Milwaukee sixth with his 13th home run. Robin Yount then hit his second double of the game and brought the Brewers to within one run when B.J. Surhoff singled him home.

Cards get big boost from unlikely heroes

CINCINNATI (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals got a big boost from a couple of unlikely heroes Thursday night.

Paul Kilgus got his first major league win in nearly four years, and backup catcher Hector Villanueva homered and drove in five runs as the Cardinals beat the Cincinnati Reds 9-2.

Villanueva was supposed to be in the game for his defense and to help starter Omar Olivares, who had lost his past two decisions. But he also contributed on offense, going 3 for 5 with a home run and a double.

"I wasn't expecting to be in the lineup," said Villanueva, who had been used only when Rene Arocha was pitching. "It kind of caught me by surprise."

Manager Joe Torre, who made the catching change despite Erik Pappas' 15-game hitting streak, said Villanueva would get to catch Olivares from now on.

"Omar and Hector seem to communicate better," Torre said.

Three of Villanueva's eight hits this year have been home runs. The trouble was that he was hitting just .109.

"He adjusted tonight," Torre said. "He was coming off the ball just a little too soon. You could see he was just that far too quick. Then he got his timing."

Olivares, the guy Villanueva was supposed to help, left the game after 4 1-3 innings with a strained groin muscle. But that gave Kilgus, just called up from Louisville, a chance to shine.

Kilgus (1-0) got his first major league win since July 25, 1989 — which was against the Cardinals, when he was with Chicago.

"I've been waiting since spring to get back," Kilgus said. "I've been down there a year-and-a-half. You don't want to be a career Triple-A guy."

He allowed just four hits in 4 2-3 innings, struck out three and walked none.

The Cardinals got 17 hits off three Reds pitchers, a season high for St. Louis. It was the third straight loss for the Reds, who are 5-5 since Davey Johnson replaced Tony Perez as manager.

Cincinnati took a 2-0 lead on Barry Larkin's RBI single in the first and Reggie Sanders' RBI single in the third.

Tim Pugh (3-6) pitched out of jams twice after allowing runners to reach third, but was hurt by wildness in the sixth.

"Things aren't going my way right now, but I'm going to keep battling," he said.

Gregg Jefferies doubled in the sixth and scored on a pair of wild pitches by Pugh.

Fernandez advances to finals against Graf at French Open

PARIS (AP) — At the time, it sounded like bravado. Now, heading into the French Open final, Mary Joe Fernandez' claim that she can beat anyone seems almost matter-of-fact.

The 21-year-old Floridian has made a major breakthrough here, converting newfound aggressiveness into consecutive upsets over third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini in the quarterfinals and No. 2 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in the semis.

On Saturday, Fernandez goes after her first Grand Slam title against top-seeded Steffi Graf, who Thursday reclaimed her No. 1 world ranking from sidelined Monica Seles. Graf's record against Fernandez: 10-0.

"I can beat anyone," said Fernandez, the No. 5 seed, after a third-round win last week. "It's just matter of believing in yourself and having the faith that when you get to the big matches, to win the last couple of games."

That faith was displayed vividly in her comeback from a 1-6, 1-5 deficit against Sabatini. Fernandez watched replays later on TV and was inspired.

"I found myself getting more nervous watching myself play than actually when I was there," she said Thursday. "It showed me the way that I should be playing, and what it takes to win those matches."

Fernandez, whose only previous Grand Slam finals were two losses at the Australian Open, won't be the only newcomer to the French Open finals. At least one survivor of the men's semis today will be playing in a Grand Slam title match for the first time.

The only veteran is two-time defending champion Jim Courier, who faced No. 12 seed Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands.
