Turmoil Prevails Inside, Outside Of Capitol as Congress Assembles

Communists, Police Stage Fights as Session Opens

By JOHN F. CHESTER
WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—Several hundred communists picked the moment of the convening of congress today to stage a wild scene on the broad plaza of the capitol before tear gas bombs and policemen's sticks drove them away in a straggling march.

Dispersed with comparative ease, the demonstration nevertheless left behind them a fear of further reprisal. Capitol police, hours afterward, patrolled their stations equipped with army rifles, while Washington bluecoats gathered in knots near the White House and toured the city in police cars.

Communists Leave
Many of the communists, however, left the capitol before nightfall in special buses headed toward New York, and no further disorder was reported. At least six of their number remained in jail, while one required hospital treatment for a broken nose.

Nightsticks Reign
As the demonstrators moved down to the foot of Capitol hill, however, they fell into far less gentle hands. District of Columbia police rained upon them tear bombs and nightsticks more than once.

Judge Ben Lindsey Outlines Marriage Reforms Before N. Y. Churchmen After They Agree to Hear Him; Views Given

By The Associated Press
NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—Judge Ben Lindsey presented his views on marriage today to the New York Churchmen's association despite the objection of the Right Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal bishop of New York. Bishop Manning did not attend.

JUDGE BEN LINDSEY

The founder of Denver's juvenile court waited an hour while 70 members of the association, made up of Episcopal clergymen, ate luncheon. He waited another hour while they debated the advisability of hearing him, and an additional 30 minutes while they prepared a statement for the press to make clear their belief in the sanctity of marriage.

Felt Their Duty
In the official statement the clergymen said they were "governed by the conviction that it is the right and the duty of the clergy to hear speakers on matters vitally affecting the welfare of the people to whom they are called upon to minister."

Makes Record
Although a rising vote committed the members of the association to strict silence to the press, several said the position taken in debate by clergymen desiring to hear the exponent of companionate marriage was that Bishop Manning had no more voice in the association than any other member.

The executive has studied college life in England and on the Continent and declared that while American students are more care-free and attractive in dress than those abroad, they are not so interested in study or the affairs of their country as are the English scholars.

Why, an English youth never thinks of the political difficulties his country may be facing unless perhaps it deals with his university life, said Miss Wyal. "In England, on the other hand, a great interest is manifested by the under graduates who keep up with the accomplishments of Parliament."

"Then there is the matter of dress which occupies so much of the attention of the average college girl in America. She wouldn't think of wearing the same clothes two successive seasons and even the poorest co-eds manage to have chiffon hose and a silk dress or two in their wardrobes.

"Not so, in England, however. In fact many of the girls wear little hose almost exclusively to classes and their frocks are quite likely to be cotton prints.

"In the administration halls at Tech Monday morning I saw a girl with an afternoon dress under a tweed sport coat," laughed Miss Wyal. "And on crossing the campus I was met by a girl with a pretty face but my! She was wearing chiffon hose, a woolen sweater and velvet beret, and that's a combination you would hardly see in England or on the continent."

The visitor believes that the period of hula-halo through which the younger generation passed several years ago is a thing of the past, and that college students have accepted a higher standard of living than in former years.

Thinks Y Is Necessary "I think a Y. W. C. A. is necessary on a college campus," she declared. "One of the chief purposes of such an organization as I see it is to stimulate thought among the girls.

"The secretaries attempt to make thinking a popular indoor sport and try to create activities which enlarge the student's horizon," she continues.

"For instance," said Miss Wyal, "there is the simple interest that centers in an oriental bazaar sponsored by the Y. Of course, one purpose is to raise money, but, in addition, the activity that is created will be of great value to the girls."

Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock, Miss Wyal addressed members of the Tech Y cabinet and last evening she spoke on the life and work of Mahatma Gandhi.

Members of the International Relations club are scheduled to meet in room 302, Tech administration building, this morning at 11 o'clock to hear a discussion on "Nationalism in India" by Miss Wyal and at 2:30 o'clock, the Y. W. C. A. board of management will gather at the home of Mrs. William Dingus to meet the visiting secretary.

Miss Wyal is to make an address pertaining to student conditions in Europe this afternoon at the regular monthly meeting of Tech college faculty at 4:15 o'clock.

English and American Students in Colleges Have Different Views of Essentials, YWCA Secretary Avers

BY MARGARET TURNER Of the Woman's Department Faith, that intangible thing which is to be performed miraculously, is an essential for one to possess if he is to work with college students, according to Miss Winifred Wyal, associate executive of the National Student council, Y. W. C. A. of America, with headquarters in New York city.

The Woman's Angle

BY BLANCHE E. BEAN

Avantage Woman's Editor

PERCENT style notes have sold the new long, tight tunics that shimmer and shine and cling to the body closer than the old-style hobby skirts. These tunics are for evening wear and follow the lines of the figure closely to a point eight or twelve inches above the knee.

One fashion writer carries a warning that "only the slender and young should wear the tunics." But if they become popular enough, almost anyone is likely to be trying them, regardless of appearances.

Perhaps I'm terribly biased, but I can't understand why so many large matrons attempt to follow extreme in style when they are so much more handsome when conservatively dressed. A large woman in a tunic would be practically as bad as a large woman in knickers.

THEY'RE WORTH TRYING

The outcome of penal system experiments for the next few years are going to be more than interesting and are going to yield a mass of material for those who are for or against prison reforms.

Not long ago, I saw an article somewhere about a city that has erected a prison along the lines of an apartment house—providing comforts for prisoners and pleasant surroundings. This house was built in an experimental trend to determine the effects of environment on prisoners.

California is planning another such experiment now. A village is to be erected in the Tehachapi mountains to care for 120 women inmates of San Quentin penitentiary, although the place is to have accommodations for 500.

The superintendent and practically all employees are to be women. There are to be no grim walls, no watchtowers and no armed guards. Inmates whose behavior is not considered good and bedrooms will be escape-proof through special sash windows, but the village will be made up of architecturally beautiful structures and the majority of women will be housed in cottages surrounding a pretentious administration building.

This is a further experiment in the new penology which holds that the best penitentiary is the one which looks least like one.

Whether or not it is wise to give comforts to prisoners and give them a standard of living that is of the highest type in an effort to raise their ideals is to be proved by actual experiment within the coming years by just such institutions as there.

OUR CANINE FRIENDS

WE ARE always hearing stories of the dog who is so loyal to his master that he sacrifices everything in order to be near the man. Another sort of story came out of Baltimore the other day. Miller Henderson, trainer for some Maryland stables, was ill in a hospital and his paralytic dog was so grateful for the attention that he refused to eat. Unable to have his dog brought to him, Henderson dared the coldest weather to go to his dog, and pat him on his head before he fainted from exhaustion.

This was probably doing little more than many another man would do for his dog because man never has a better friend. I've always felt sorry for people who couldn't have a dog—a lap dog or necessarily pedigreed one—but just any old hound. Occasionally, women won't let their children even play with dogs "because they're so filthy." I think I believe in cleanliness as much as anyone, but the ordinary dog isn't going to be any dirtier than a lot of other things the children play with and the child who has missed the devotion of a dog has missed something invaluable.

There is one type of person I can never entirely trust and that is one who will hate and abuse a dog. I've got a lot of respect for dogs.

USUALLY, I'm several seasons behind on my reading, so I have just completed "Willie Carter's Death Comes for the Archbishop." The fact that I was not among the first to read the book did not diminish my enjoyment of it.

The story is interesting enough and I liked the style of writing, but the thing that made the tale entirely engaging was the setting. I like to read about the places that I have seen so I can better all of my friends repeating my impressions. I've always enjoyed the romance of the old church in Santa Fe and, along with the rest, I've touched the old bell in there with a feeling of awe for the hardy pioneers who brought it out from Spain in the days when only crude means of transportation were available.

There is romance in the territory about Santa Fe and Taos and Albuquerque, and I love stories about women about the picturesque territory.

It Depends On The Eyes

“Rich Man, Poor Man, beggar-Man, thief; Doctor, lawyer, merchant, Chief.”

The vocation to which a boy or girl is attracted often depends on the condition of the eyes.

If vision is normal it usually means good grades at school; a real desire to continue with school work until an education can be procured; and a desire to be fitted for some remunerative business or profession.

If vision is abnormal it usually means that there will be little or no desire to read or study; no desire to continue with school work; and little interest in a business or profession where good vision is required.

Statistics show that more than ninety per cent of our poor-house and penitentiary inmates have defective vision. The great army of misfits in all walks of life almost invariably have poor vision. Do not these facts show conclusively the need and the importance of having the eyes of all school children examined and their vision made normal?

We all appreciate the importance of the eyes, in acquiring an education. We know that a child with defective eyes is handicapped in his studies, and many of our failures can be traced directly to this cause. These defects not only retard a child in his school work, but will handicap him later in life. If neglected, they tend to grow worse, rather than better, and may do him permanent harm. On the other hand, eye defects may be in most instances quickly and definitely corrected, if detected in time.

Comfortable eyes and acuteness of vision contribute in a very large measure, to efficiency and success. Re-examination of your eyes should be made every year at least. Your optometrist is prepared to give you competent counsel in regard to your eyes. Call him for an appointment if a year has passed since your last examination, or if your eyes are troubling you in any way.

Uniform Air Laws

SO FAST is the airplane today and so wide its flying range that the difficulty of restricting its flights to one state need not be argued. When a pilot goes up near the boundary he can never be sure that he will not come down in an adjoining state, perhaps through no desire of his own. That means interstate flying, and, lacking a federal license, he has technically violated the law.

In the larger states as in Texas, there is actual commercial intrastate flying, which does not require federal regulation. There is a good deal of flying within a state in the hands of unlicensed aviators in unlicensed planes. It is flying hazardous and often results in fatal accidents. About 80 per cent of all flying accidents come to unlicensed planes. Licensed pilots flying ships transport thousands of passengers millions of miles in the course of a year with few accidents and those few rarely fatal.

So long as commercial planes can be flown within the boundaries of a state there will be resistance to the proposal of an all-covering federal law licensing every plane and every pilot in the air. That being the case, state regulation is essential. If these regulations are uniform, it will be a simple matter to keep airplanes operating in proper condition and piloted by competent personnel.

Child Health Problem Up

By CHARLES F. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer

ASHINOTON, Dec. 1.—The principal reason for the plan (disclosed during the recent White House conference on child health and protection) to transfer Miss Grace Abbott's most important duties as children's bureau chief to Dr. Hugh S. Cummins' jurisdiction as head of the public health service, seemingly is Miss Abbott's persistence in weighing entirely irrelevant considerations (irrelevant according to some folk) in connection with questions of the coming generation's welfare.

For example, in the course of the White House conference, here is one of the things Miss Abbott is on record as having said: "Eighty-seven per cent of the 24,000,000 families in the United States own only 10 per cent of the country's wealth, while 13 per cent of the people own 90 per cent of the wealth."

WHAT POSSIBLE bearing can one imagine these percentages as having upon problems of child health and maternity aid—which it was proposed at the White House conference to take out of Miss Abbott's hands and place under Surgeon General Cummins' direction?

It appeared almost as if Miss Abbott were trying to stir up discontent among 87 per cent of America's 24,000,000 families.

At least, such was the conclusion drawn by certain of her critics.

IT IS TRUE that her friends insisted she intended to imply that 10 per cent of the national wealth is not enough to go around among 20,880,000 families, and thus that a shortage exists in their ranks, from which great numbers of children suffer; mothers, too, hence the maternity aid.

If this was what Miss Abbott really did mean, it still was unsatisfactory to the conservative element at the conference, as much to radical.

Miss Abbott also was disagreeably outspoken relative to unemployment.

As if unemployment had anything to do with child birth and maternity.

Moreover, her comment did not jibe at all with statements by Col. Arthur Woods, President Hoover's unemployment relief director, who says the present situation would be far worse but for the administration's efficient advance preparations to cope with it.

Whereas, to quote Miss Abbott: "As a result of our lack of foresight we are now in the midst of confusion. We must resort to temporary expedients and the children of the unemployed will pay for it."

MISS ABBOTT even favors unemployment pensions, than which it would be difficult to think of anything more completely contradictory to the administration's whole economic policy.

She is not a bit easy to get out of the government service, either.

For one thing, there is no excuse for it, her advanced ideas not furnishing an explanation that her superiors would like to offer, to account for a move to replace her with more conservative-minded official.

Second, she has a tremendous following in labor circles, among women throughout the country—and inclusive, for that matter, of virtually everyone else who admires courage, capacity and enlightenment.

The widespread talk of her desirability as James J. Davis' successor in the secretaryship has been an unmistakable testimonial to the popular estimate of her qualities.

HOWEVER, though it looked like a hopeless (indeed, politically dangerous) step to undertake separating Miss Abbott from her job, there was the alternative of trying to separate her work, in large part, from Miss Abbott.

No sooner was this inspiration conceived than it was acted on.

I'm Proud That I Found It, Says Wichita Woman

Says Since Taking Argotane She Feels Better Than She Has In Eight Years

"I am now enjoying better health than I have in eight years and I owe it all to Argotane," said Mrs. Jack Stout residing on Wichita Street, in relation to her experience with this medicine.

"I am certainly proud and happy that I found Argotane for it is the first and only medicine I have taken in my eight years of suffering that seemed to do me any real good. My main troubles were with my liver and stomach and about five years ago my kidneys started to bother me considerably and I would have sharp shooting pains across the small of my back. After eating I would have a tight bloated feeling caused by the formation of gas.

"I read testimonials in the local Wichita Falls papers about the good Argotane was doing right around here and with hope that it might help me too, I bought a bottle and I want to say my relief has been simply wonderful. It may sound exaggerated, but it's the plain truth. I felt better after taking my first dose of Argotane. In place of irritating my stomach as other medicines do, it seemed to have soothing effects and after only a few days I found that gas had stopped forming after I would eat and all that cramping and distressed feeling had left my stomach entirely. My kidneys stopped troubling me and I can now eat anything anybody else can mention. Without the slightest discomfort afterwards and I haven't touched taking my first bottle yet. I feel like a different woman. I'm enjoying life more than I have in eight years."

SHIPMENTS HOLDING UP IN PLAINS AREA

Carload shipments into and out of the South Plains are holding up "better than was expected three months ago," W. E. Kancher, division freight and passenger agent of the Santa Fe, reports.

Seasonal shipments of merchandise into the territory to handle the Christmas trade in the stores, is aiding in increasing the totals of inbound shipments, Mr. Kancher said.

Cattle movements out of the territory are mostly to Kansas City, Fort Worth and St. Joseph, Mo. markets. While the shipments are not quite as heavy as last year, they are better than had been expected.

There has been a fair movement into the several towns over the South Plains where cotton oil mills are operating, of car loads of cotton seed, he said. Mills are located at: Lubbock, Slaton, Lamesa, Lockney, Sweetwater, Amarillo, Quanah and Plainview.

Cake shipments as well as cottonseed oil shipments have been started

"The meal was ended. As they returned to the living room Barney was still eagerly explaining how the camera caught 'action pictures.' 'You know I never dreamed your work was so fascinating!' Evelyn said.

"Of course, it is to me. Lots of folks think it's pretty dull. I like to talk to a person like you, Mrs. Parsons. You understand. You know I've got three or four pictures I'd like to show to you. These that cloud stuff I made during the air circus. They got me the job with Apex. Then there's a parachute leap and a shot I made of an engine. Would you like to see them?"

"I'd love to!"

"Some time I'll show them to you. Of course they're not wonderful, but—well, I'm sort of proud of 'em."

"Then I know they must be very fine," Evelyn lifted a box of cigars and offered Shields one. There was a lighter on the table. Shields lit the mechanism until it produced a flame. He held it to Evelyn's cigarette and then touched his own. He drew a deep breath of smoke, exhaling slowly.

Mrs. Parsons poured two more cocktails.

"You're going to be a very successful young man," she said. "You're going to make a name for yourself."

"Well, if I am it's a long way off yet."

Shields lifted his glass. Evelyn Parsons drank at the same time. Evelyn's eyes were on the rim of the glass. She was smiling.

"Call you Barney?" she asked.

"That's what everyone calls me. Makes me uncomfortable when I hear folks say Mr. Shields. Impulsively Barney leaned forward. You've been awfully nice to me," he said boyishly. "You seem to understand things. There's one thing I want to know terribly. You can tell me. Will you do it?"

"What, my dear boy. If there's any way that I can—of course I will."

"Thanks. You see I could talk to you about it better than to anybody else." Shields had put down his glass and his gray eyes were serious. "I'm awfully kind of Celia. He began and then omitted.

"Naturally. We all are!"

"Yes, but you see I feel differently. Well, anyhow, I mean—listen, Mrs. Parsons, what I want to do is do you think Celia cares anything about me?"

"Oh, but that isn't what I mean! I love Celia! I always have ever since the day I met her. Do you do you think she's marry me?"

"Oh! The explanation was sharp, high-pitched.

"She must have said something to you about the way she felt," Shields persisted. "You've seen her with these other fellows. Tell me, do you think I have a chance?"

"But didn't you know?" Evelyn exclaimed. "Oh, I'm so sorry! My dear boy, I thought of course you

"I know what?"

"Why—oh, I don't know what to say! I suppose of course she had told you. Celia assured me you and she were such close friends!"

"What is it she didn't tell me? What do you mean?"

Evelyn Parsons took the young man's hands in hers. "This hurts me deeply," she said in a moving voice. "I do think Celia should have told you herself. Of course it's not announced generally yet, but Celia's to be married. I supposed you knew!"

"Married? You mean Celia's promised someone else? They're engaged? Oh, I suppose it's that Jordan!"

Evelyn grasped at the suggestion. "Yes," she said. "She's going to marry Tod Jordan. Perhaps I shouldn't have said anything. Perhaps I should have let her be the one!"

Barney Shields shook his head gloomily. "No, it's better to know. It's a true. I suppose I might have guessed!"

He was silent, leaning back in his chair and staring straight ahead. Evelyn looked at Shields uncertainly. She lifted the shaker and refilled his glass. He took it, drank it without a word.

"If there were only anything I could do," Evelyn murmured.

"There isn't!" Suddenly the young man rose to his feet. "Well, Mrs. Parsons, it was certainly kind of you to have me here. I'd better be getting along now. Hope I didn't bore you with all that talk about photography."

"I enjoyed every word of it! Must you go?"

"Yes, I think I'll have to be on my way."

"You'll come again, won't you? Celia will be back in a day or two. I'm sure."

Barney smiled ironically. "I'd like to be sure, but I imagine Celia will be rather busy. Good night, Mrs. Parsons, and thank you again."

"Good night."

Evelyn's hand closed over the young man's and hung for an instant, but it was only too evident that though his eyes were on her, he did not really see her. Quickly he turned and left the apartment.

It was an hour later that John Mitchell and his daughter arrived. Mrs. Parsons greeted them cordially. Evelyn Celia and assured the girl she was delighted to see her. There was a little talk and then Mitchell departed. Celia went to the room she had called hers. Everything was as she had left it. She undressed, bathed and got into bed. Before she turned the light out Evelyn knocked.

"Celia," she said as she opened the door. "I'm terribly sorry for the way things turned out the other day. Truly, I thought I was acting for the best. I thought I'd have more influence with your father if he believed I didn't know Barney. It was just a little plot for your benefit, darling. I've been miserable ever since."

"That's all right," Celia said sleepily.

"You dear," Evelyn stooped and kissed the girl's cheek before she departed.

The following day was to prove eventful.

Libel Suit to Be Tried Here Next January

Defense Motion for Continuance Granted in Case of Fred Spikes Against Everts Haley and Syndicate

Hearing of the $200,000 libel action of Fred Spikes against J. Everts Haley of Austin and the Capital Reservation Lands Syndicate and its trustees, probably will be held during the January term of 1931 district court, it was decided yesterday when motion for a continuance, made by attorneys for the defendants, was received by Judge Clark M. Mullican.

It was indicated by the court, following an hour of discussion of the case with attorneys for both sides, that during the first or second week in January there will be discussions of preliminary matters, with the actual hearing probably the first week in February. These preliminary matters include questions of affidavits of witnesses and objections to defense affidavits by the plaintiff.

First of Five Suits
 The case is the first of five suits brought by members of the Spikes family in Lubbock courts against the syndicate and its trustees and J. Everts Haley, asking $200,000 damages in each case. Damages of $100,000 punitive and the same amount actual, are sought in each suit. Another suit for the same sum was filed in Crosby county.

Damages are sought for alleged libelous statements made by Mr. Haley in his book "History of the XIT Ranch" concerning a battle in 1902 in which two brothers of Mr. Spikes were killed and he himself wounded. It is charged that the statements in the book concerning the Spikes brothers are "false and malicious" and that the plaintiffs have been damaged by the publication and circulation of the volume.

E. L. Klett, of Bean and Klett, representing the syndicate, in his statement before the court in a continuance asked that the defendants were not ready because it was "not physically possible" for all of the work of securing depositions to support defense claims, to be completed in the time allowed.

Depositions Lengthy
 Mr. Klett pointed out that one deposition contained 100 typewritten pages and that there were several others nearly as long. It is expected the defense will have over 65 depositions to submit.

The plaintiffs will have more than that, it was indicated by attorneys for the syndicate. The testimony will be by statement in a deposition rather than by oral testimony. Some of the witnesses were interviewed in California, Arizona and even in Old Mexico.

Lockhart, Garrard and Brown represent the plaintiff in the case. Bean and Klett represent the syndicate and Bledsoe, Crenshaw and Dupree Mr. Haley.

Importance of the place of depositions in the case is indicated by an agreement that all depositions introduced as testimony in the Fred Spikes case and which are admitted as evidence, will be used in the four other cases.

In one week recently 4,030,000 pounds of sugar, valued at $176,000, were shipped from Porto Rico.

Kris Kringle, Himself, Denies Rumor Saying that "There Is No Santa Claus"

When Santa Claus himself denies rumors which skeptical youngsters have circulated here that "there is no Santa Claus," the most unbelieving should be convinced. The stout ruddy faced little gentleman made the denial in a radiogram to the Lubbock Retail Merchants association.

Let some children continue attempts to shatter faith in the old fellow of Christmas time, Santa has a representative here who is jotting down the names of those who spread such stories and there will be no Santa Claus for them, according to the message received here from the northland.

"My representative, now in Lubbock making a survey to learn the names of the boys and girls of the South Plains who have been good during the year and are therefore entitled to some of the many things I have this year, has wired me that some of the youngsters there are spreading a rumor that there isn't any Santa Claus," the radiogram read.

They Must Reform
 "My good man is taking the names of these youngsters and unless they reform before I arrive on December 9, there won't be any Santa Claus for them, but to the other kiddies and especially to those who come out to greet me on my arrival, I am bringing a big lot of candy as a little present for their good behavior."

"I have had a little trouble in getting packed but I'll have everything ready to go and will be on my way about Wednesday of this week. You may expect to hear from me as I come along and I want you to be sure and have a good reception for me, because I am anxious to see every little boy and girl in your territory."

To Stop Along Route
 "I will make a few stops along the route and expect to arrive in Lubbock about noon, December 9." Officials of the Lubbock Retail Merchants association are making arrangements to welcome Santa here. All South Plains kiddies are especially invited to Lubbock to see the old gentleman, receive some of his candy and, in moments when he is alone and calm, talk in confidence to him what they want for Christmas.

Unmasked Men Loot Service Station Here

Two Bandits Escape Monday Morning with $66.36 After Holding Up Attendant at Frye Rubber Co. Station

Two unmasked bandits Monday morning held up an attendant at J. F. Frye Rubber company's service station, Main street and Avenue Q, and escaped with $66.36 in cash.

Paul James, an employe, was opening the station at about 6:20 o'clock when a Buick coupe stopped there. Two men emerged from the car and James stepped out of the building into the station driveway.

Asked the right way to Slaton and how to get out of town, James went into the station with the two men and described the route to the smaller of the pair.

The other man, to whom James' back had been partly turned, stuck a revolver against the station attendant's side and said: "All we want is the money." The smaller man, whom James described to police as short and of medium weight, rifled the cash drawer but left all checks untouched. The two bandits then entered their automobile and rapidly drove eastward on Main street.

Both men wore grey hats and overcoats and the larger of the two had a scar on his upper lip, James told police.
