Hyde considers trimming inquiry

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — White House and House Judiciary Committee lawyers will meet next week for the first time to discuss the impeachment inquiry into President Clinton's conduct. The session next Tuesday will be held as the committee's chairman considers trimming back the allegations.

Paul McNulty, a spokesman for the committee, said Wednesday the panel's lawyers would invite White House counsel Charles F.C. Ruff "to provide us with exculpatory information."

The meeting also would cover how the House and the White House could "work together to expedite the process," McNulty said.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the committee's chairman, said he may reduce the number of allegations against Clinton in order to finish the panel's work by the end of the year and recommend whether or whether not the House should begin impeachment proceedings. Democrats suggested Hyde was reacting to public opinion polls.

As Hyde was declaring his intention to "streamline" the inquiry, a new poll indicated a majority of Americans disapprove of the way Republicans are handling the impeachment investigation.

In remarks that an aide insisted were unrelated to poll numbers, Hyde, R-Ill., told a reporter, "We might have to reduce" allegations against Clinton if the inquiry is to meet Hyde's self-imposed deadline of Dec. 31.

Republicans postponed on Wednesday the only impeachment-related hearing scheduled prior to the election, an Oct. 22 subcommittee session at which scholars were to testify on historical standards for removal from office. Since the House has remained in session longer than expected this year, lawmakers did not want to interrupt their campaigns to return for the hearing, GOP officials said.

Rep. Bobby Scott, D-Va., ranking Democrat on the Constitution subcommittee, said if Republicans really want to streamline the inquiry, they would hold the hearing on schedule. Then, he said, the Judiciary Committee could determine standards for impeachment and decide whether the allegations meet those standards.

In a written statement, Hyde said the committee would "focus on the core charges against the president of lying under oath, obstruction of justice and witness tampering." Chief committee investigator David Schippers has prepared 15 "substantial and credible" grounds for impeachment, four more than Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr presented.

Asked whether he was giving lesser weight to Schippers' allegation that Clinton "may have been part of a conspiracy with Monica Lewinsky," Hyde said, "I couldn't make that judgment now."

Hyde, who also mentioned in Wednesday's edition of The Washington Post the possibility of reducing the number of charges, emphasized his voluntary deadline won't be met "without cooperation from the White House and committee Democrats."

SUN COUNTRY GENTLEMEN

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

The Sun Country Gentlemen, a barbershop-style singing group with members from around the Permian Basin, rehearse Mondays at Our Savior's Lutheran Church.

Barbershop harmony alive and well in basin

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

They're a bunch of romantics, those barbershop-quartet fellows who sing songs of great sentiment and with much joy and harmony.

"The harmony, that's what the society is all about, the harmonizing," said David Malehorn, 36, a baritone and genetic engineer.

He is one of 30-plus tenor, lead, baritone and bass singers in the Sun Country Gentlemen — the Permian Basin Chapter of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America (SPEBSQSA).

The award-winning chorus was organized in 1962 and still has two of its original members: bass G. Thane Akins and tenor William "Bill" Shaner, both of Midland.

The chorus recently won the SPEBSQSA's Southwestern District Division I championship for Plateau A choruses for fewer than 40 singers in West Texas and New Mexico. Now, the chorus is honing up on its 1998 contest tunes, "Sam, the Old Accordion Man" and "Georgia," for the Southwestern District (Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and parts of Arkansas and New Mexico) championships in New Orleans later this month.

To tenor Larry Elkins of Andrews, the common love of singing evokes a camaraderie.

"These are the kind of fellows that your mom always told you that it's OK to bring home. 'Bring 'em home. Let 'em stay the weekend. Feed 'em. Fatten 'em up. Send 'em home Sunday night.'

"And now we just do it and call it barbershopping," Elkins said.

Barbershoppers harmonize those old songs and some new arrangements. Elkins said that he favors the old hymns, such as "The Lord's Prayer" and "Standing in the Need of Prayer," and likes Dixieland arrangements "where you can actually be the ham and show off. You want to have a glow on. You want (the audience) to feel your love for the music

Relief replaced by skepticism of Kosovo promise

By Jeffrey Ulbrich
Associated Press

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — NATO warned Wednesday that Slobodan Milosevic isn't doing what he must to avoid airstrikes and ethnic Albanian refugees remained reluctant to return to their charred homes as skepticism replaced relief over the Kosovo agreement.

Even as the U.N. refugee agency resumed aid convoys to Kosovo, questions remained over whether the Yugoslav president would meet international demands and refrain from further hostilities toward ethnic Albanians.

Demonstrating that it's not taking him at his word, NATO positioned warplanes at bases in Italy for possible air attacks on Serbia.

"NATO airstrikes have not yet been averted by Milosevic," said an official at the alliance's headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"We'll be keeping up the military pressure for some time to come."

Milosevic reluctantly agreed Monday to the demands of world leaders determined to halt his seven-month offensive against ethnic Albanian separatists in Kosovo and avert a tragedy among tens of thousands of refugees living outdoors as winter approaches.

The 16 NATO members have given Milosevic until Saturday to fully comply or face the renewed threat of airstrikes.

But even before an agreed-to 2,000-member unarmed monitoring force is assembled, it is clear Milosevic has not met at least one key demand: withdrawing his forces to levels before the crackdown on the southern Serb province began Feb. 28.

The official in Brussels said a number of Yugoslav units remain dug-in in Kosovo and must be withdrawn, including what he called a "notorious" special police unit from Nis, Serbia. He declined to say how many troops remained in the province but said they "far exceed" the level required by NATO.

State Department spokesman James Rubin said Western monitoring teams reported a much smaller Serb police presence in Kosovo on Wednesday, as well as signs of refugees returning.

But he called the early assessment of Milosevic's compliance "a mixed bag" and said a full monitoring force is needed to ensure that police aren't just being moved around or hidden.

The key to success "is whether we will have the verification system that will

Linda Foster, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, kicks off the 1998 Buy the Basin campaign on Wednesday.

Campaign urges shoppers to Buy the Basin

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Borrowing the motto of President Harry S. Truman, "The Buck Stops Here," the Midland and Odessa chambers of commerce Thursday kicked off their sixth annual Buy the Basin campaign.

"This program is vitally important to the chambers of commerce and to the Permian Basin as a whole," said Guy Andrews, chairman of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce.

"Some ask why we need to buy the basin," he continued. "First, to gain a higher degree of service. If you buy from a local merchant, you'll get better service. Also, buying locally will help merchants expand their selection. Second, you're supporting local employment and strengthening the local tax base. Property taxes and sales taxes help fund local government, and help fund local charities."

Linda Foster, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, pointed out that the first 'Buy the Basin' campaign in 1993 was one of the first joint programs of the two chambers.

She pointed out that "It's not just about retail. It's about professional services — architects, doctors, advertising agencies, even attorneys. It's also not just about buyers, it's about sellers. I encourage local retailers and professionals to treat customers as though they have $1 million in their pocket and they're going to spend it in your shop. The bottom line is, this means jobs for our economy."

Mary Kay Moore, assistant city manager for the city of Odessa, said that one-third of the city's general revenue fund comes from retail sales taxes.

"That reduces property taxes," she said. "I've never heard of anyone asking to have the sales tax reduced, but they all say 'Keep the property taxes low.' As we generate sales tax revenue, that helps keep property taxes low."

Berry Simpson, a member of the Midland City Council, said that "I'm proud the two cities are working on this project together. We're growing together as an economy and as a people."

It's important to shop locally, Simpson said, because with funds generated from the sales tax, "we pave streets, we hire police officers and build nice parks. Also, buying locally is part of being a member

Is Israel's famed old warrior ready to work toward peace?

By Laura King
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — It was a moment like so many in Ariel Sharon's storied military career: he marched straight in and took charge.

Sharon — aging ex-general, master political survivor, revered by some as a war hero and reviled by others as a war criminal — formally assumed control of Israel's foreign ministry Wednesday, a day before his departure for a crucial Mideast summit outside Washington.

The 70-year-old Sharon gave every indication of relishing his reemerge..ce in a leadership post after a decade and a half of disgrace and political exile.

Even before he showed up to start work at the ministry, he made his first foray abroad as foreign minister — a quick trip to Jordan, in the company of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, to brief leaders about the upcoming summit.

Later, meeting with top ministry officials and, briefly, with reporters — the burly, white-haired Sharon turned on a typical mix of diplomatic formulations, unyielding doctrine and blunt-force charm. Asked about the powers of his new position, he laughed.

"I'm not the kind of man people give things to," he said in his trademark trumpeting voice. "I take them!"

Emphatic though his entry was, Sharon's ability to shape the ministry's agenda is likely tied to the success of the U.S. talks. After all, he got the job mainly because Netanyahu needs him to help quell right-wing opposition to any accord reached there.

Probably no other Israeli public figure arouses such conflicting passions. To his partisans, Sharon is the daring, brilliant tactician whose battlefield victories helped turn the tide of three of Israel's wars, the only politician with the force and stature to lead the right-ist camp.

> 'Sharon is a man of surprises, and not only on the battlefield. No one is able to assess what Sharon will really do.'
> — commentator Avraham Tirosh

To detractors, he is a destroyer. The Israeli left despises him. Palestinian senior negotiator Saeb Erekat flatly describes him as a war criminal.

Many Palestinians hold him responsible for Lebanese Christian militiamen's 1982 massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees, and angrily recall his aggressive promotion of Jewish settlement growth during a stint as housing minister.

Sharon returns the ill feeling: he has said publicly he won't shake Yasser Arafat's hand, even in his post as Israel's principal negotiator of peace with the Palestinians.

Perhaps to avoid any awkwardness over greeting Arafat, Sharon is arriving late for the summit. While opening handshakes occur in Washington, Sharon will still be in Israel, attending a ceremony for soldiers slain in the 1973 war. Only once the venue has moved to the privacy of the conference center at Wye Plantation, Md., will he arrive.

Many of Sharon's allies on the right reacted with dismay to his appointment as foreign minister, considering him an opportunist who betrayed principles to fulfill his own political ambitions. His acceptance of the job, they believe, amounts to endorsement of a land deal with the Palestinians — something they bitterly oppose.

Even Sharon's own boss doesn't much care for him. Sharon has publicly disparaged Netanyahu in the past and the prime minister repaid him by relegating him to the second-string post of infrastructure minister.

Some observers believe Sharon's desire to rise above past disgrace — he had not held a top government position for 15 years, since being held indirectly responsible for the massacres at the Sabra and Shatilla camps south of Beirut — could be the key to his stance at the summit and in months to come.

The word being used over and over by commentators is pragmatism. Sharon is viewed by friend and foe alike as hard-headed and hard-nosed, unlikely to sign onto an accord unless he really thought it would work on the ground.

And his background gives him greater credibility than anyone else on questions of Israel's security, something on which any accord will hinge.

Sharon could play a role similar to that of the late Moshe Dayan, a lifelong military man who turned to statesmanship in his final years and participated in the Camp David process that brought peace between Israel and Egypt.

For a tactician like Sharon, the unexpected is often a weapon of choice.

"Sharon is a man of surprises, and not only on the battlefield," commentator Avraham Tirosh wrote in the Maariv newspaper. "No one is able to assess what Sharon will really do."

Weakened Yeltsin returns to work at Kremlin

MOSCOW (AP) — Appearing weak yet animated, President Boris Yeltsin defied doctors' orders and showed up unexpectedly Wednesday at the Kremlin, quashing rumors he is seriously ill.

Still, his appearance didn't silence the growing number of calls for his resignation. Hours after he returned to work, the generally pro-Yeltsin upper house of parliament fell just 11 votes short of passing a motion urging him to step down over his social welfare policies.

Yeltsin, 67, has a respiratory infection that forced him to cut short his first foreign visit in months on Monday.

Whenever Yeltsin falls ill, speculation arises about his ability to govern. This time, however, the prospect of him leaving office has aroused less panic because he has largely faded from public view in recent months and left his government to grapple with Russia's economic crisis.

"There will be no turmoil if Yeltsin leaves the political arena. The government is already in charge, (Prime Minister Yevgeny) Primakov is strong enough and has the support of the security services," said Yevgeny Volk, director of the Moscow office of the U.S.-based Heritage Foundation.

"Everyone knows Yeltsin is ailing and is politically weakened," he said.

Yeltsin has a history of health problems, and underwent multiple heart bypass surgery in 1996. Still, he insists he has no major illnesses and plans to serve out the remaining two years of his term.

"I can't even sneeze" without someone making a fuss, Yeltsin joked to Primakov during a meeting Wednesday.

In the Kremlin, Yeltsin discussed developments in Kosovo with Primakov, Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov and Defense Minister Igor Sergeyev, Russian news agencies said.

Yeltsin looked pale and tired and walked stiffly on Wednesday. But he also smiled, gestured animatedly and joked with his ministers at the start of the meeting, which was shown on Russian television.

Scholar whose work helps poor wins Nobel

By Judie Glave
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Amartya Sen, who saw the effects of starvation firsthand as a child in his native India, won the Nobel Prize in economics Wednesday for his work on how famines unfold and how to take the poor into account in calculating a nation's wealth.

Sen, a master at Britain's Trinity College in Cambridge, was honored by the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences for his contributions to what is known as welfare economics. His work looks at such factors as income distribution and health in measuring poverty.

"I was surprised and quite pleased when I got the call," Sen, 64, said in New York. "But I was even more pleased when they told me the subject matter was welfare economics, a field I have long been very involved in. I am pleased that they gave recognition to that subject."

In his best-known work, the 1981 book "Poverty and Famines: An Essay on Entitlement and Deprivation," Sen challenged the view that famine is caused solely or primarily by a shortage of food.

He wrote that famines sometimes result from distribution problems — like the ones many African nations experienced in the late 1980s and early 1990s — and simple economics.

"Famines can occur even when the food supply is high but people can't buy the food because they don't have the money," he said.

In the 1974 Bangladesh famine, for example, he said flooding significantly raised food prices, while jobs for agricultural workers declined. Because of this, the real incomes of agricultural workers declined so much that they were disproportionately stricken by starvation.

Sen became interested in the dynamics of famine in part by his own experience during India's famine in 1943, when he 9 years old.

The former Harvard professor has also said economists must look beyond gross national product when studying a nation's wealth because GNP "overlooks the fact that many people are terribly poor."

Sen developed alternative indexes that also include factors such as income distribution. "We have to pay attention to the downside of what's happening and not just the average, majority position," he said.

Economists agreed that the field has long been overlooked and that the usual indicators of a nation's well-being are not enough.

"Just looking at GNP or GNP growth for a country like India might not be a very good way to say, 'Is the development plan of the country really helping people?'" said Jerry Hausman, economics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Joseph Duncan, a former government economist and current chief economic adviser to Dun & Bradstreet Corp., said Sen's choice was an interesting contrast to last year's winners, Americans Robert Merton and Myron Scholes, whose work generally benefited the rich.

The Americans were honored for their work on valuing risky investment known as derivatives. But they came under a cloud last month after the near-collapse of a giant hedge fund in which they were partners.

The Nobel Prizes were established in the will of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish industrialist and inventor of dynamite. The final Nobel to be given this year — the peace prize — will be awarded on Friday.

Black magic murders bewilder Indonesians

BANYUWANGI, Indonesia (AP) — Lying in a hospital bed with his teeth smashed and his body bruised, Rahmad could not understand how he was caught up in a wave of attacks on Muslims accused of witchcraft.

Two weeks ago, a mob dragged the screaming 21-year-old through the streets, accusing his family of dabbling in black magic and denouncing his father as an evil sorcerer.

"I don't understand why mobs wanted to attack us," he said from his bed, his abdomen and buttocks badly scraped. "My father is a Muslim and we are only poor peasants."

Rahmad, who like many Indonesians uses only one name, was alone in the house when the mob came. His family is said to have fled the village.

He is among a growing number of victims of such attacks as a string of eerie executions have occurred in recent months in Banyuwangi, about 500 miles east of the capital Jakarta.

Witnesses and police say machete-wielding gangs dressed in black have killed at least 153 people in nighttime raids. In scenes reminiscent of the Salem witch hunts, crowds have lynched suspected evil magicians.

On Monday, about 100 villagers attacked 55-year-old Haji Jajul bin Suhaemi outside a mosque in Serang, a small town about 75 miles west of Jakarta, the official Antara news agency reported.

Police said the crowd accused Jajul of being a sorcerer. Some wanted to test him by immersing him in a pool of water. Others couldn't wait and killed him with sticks and stones.

The surge in violence, which erupted as Indonesia grapples with political turmoil and the worst economic crisis in decades, has bewildered police and terrified villagers.

Looting and rioting that broke out after violent protests killed about 1,200 people and helped drive former President Suharto from office in May had usually targeted members of the mostly Christian or Buddhist ethnic Chinese minority.

The new violence, however, is plaguing Indonesia's Muslim majority. Amid the social confusion of the economic crisis — skyrocketing inflation, unemployment, poverty and food shortages — no one is sure who is doing the killing or why.

National police chief Lt. Gen. Rusmanhadi has speculated that the slayings might be in revenge for the slaughter of tens of thousands of communists in the mid-1960s when Suharto took power.

Historians say Muslim clerics helped the army carry out the carnage. With Suharto gone, many fear old scores are being settled.

Others believe the killings may represent a bloody power play before general elections to be held next year under proposed democratic reforms.

A third possibility is that some Muslim groups want to stamp out ancient and lingering beliefs in mysticism that permeate Indonesia hundreds of years after the arrival of Islam.

About 90 percent of Indonesia's 202 million people are Muslim, making it the world's most populous Islamic nation.

Nevertheless, some who regard themselves as devout Muslims often worship spirits. Shamans are in high demand by those who want good luck, a better love life, improved health or revenge against an enemy or rival.

Whatever the cause, people are frightened.

Wardiyah, a 50-year-old mother of two in Banyuwangi, was attacked in the dark by two men last Sunday.

"They grabbed my hand and beat my neck, then stamped on me," she said, pointing to injuries on her shoulders, neck and arms.

A man named Salam was not so lucky. A neighbor said he was hauled from his house, beaten with sticks and stamped to death.

Mobs demolished his tiny house, next to a small mosque where Salam's family had prayed every day.

Many victims have been members of Indonesia's largest Islamic organization, the 30 million-strong Nahdlatul Ulama. The group has dismissed speculation that the attacks have anything to do with retribution for the '60s and say they have more to do with the current political turmoil.

Hundreds of people fear they might be targeted and have sought police protection.

Haji Abdullah Misbach, a Muslim preacher and Nahdlatul Ulama member, has twice narrowly escaped attack by masked groups. Neighbors guard his house each night.

He has stayed at home for the past month, too frightened to go out.

"I'm scared that I am one of their targets," he said.

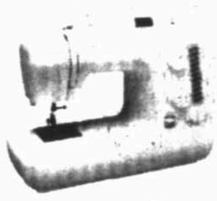

The military has promised to step up security in town and villagers, but worried residents have already taken matters into their own hands.

Vigilantes with sticks, swords and sickles patrol the otherwise deserted streets of Banyuwangi. They guard alleys, watch the houses of Muslim clerics and look out for mobs or strangers.

"It's like a war now, so we have to be careful," said a stick-bearing villager, Hadi Sucipto.

Tonight's forecast calls for increasing cloudiness and breezy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low near 60.

Friday's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies and windy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms with a high near 80.

After an overnight low of 61, Wedneday's high reached 89, compared to the record high for that date of 92 set in 1992. The record low was 39 set in 1969.

PROBE: Hyde cites possible 'burnout factor'

(From 1A)

Paul McNulty, a spokesman for Judiciary Committee Republicans, said: "Unlike the Democrats, chairman Hyde has remained consistent in his views on this matter. He promised to conduct a fair, focused and expeditious inquiry, and he continues to deliver on that promise."

Hyde said he believed the public was tired of the Clinton-Lewinsky matter but insisted, "I haven't looked at any particular polls. My sense is there's a burnout factor."

Last Thursday, Hyde led the debate as Republicans won a bitterly partisan 258-176 vote to authorize an investigation without limits on subject matter or time. Hyde has often expressed his yearend goal, but only in the last two days has he talked of streamlining the allegations.

The new poll released Wednesday, by CNN, USA Today and the Gallup organization, indicated that 55 percent of likely voters disapprove of the way Republicans are handling the current investigation, while 43 percent approve.

That disapproval crosses party lines, however, because half the likely voters disapprove of the way Democrats are handling the investigation as well.

A majority of likely voters, 54 percent, favors holding impeachment hearings, although they oppose an impeachment trial or Clinton's ouster.

The poll of 1,004 adults was taken Friday through Monday and has a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points. The sample of 461 likely voters has a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.

Some Democrats on the committee, who have pushed unsuccessfully to impose time and subject limits, said they believe Republicans have been affected by a backlash resulting from an unpopular investigation.

"What changed on their side is they are getting killed in the court of public opinion," said Rep. Jerrold Nadler, D-N.Y. "People are saying, 'Drop this or do it fast.'"

Nadler commented that after Republicans won their resolution for a limitless inquiry, they faced the "practical problem" of "How are we going to do this? How are we going to get a handle on this now that we're dealing with reality?"

Joe Lockhart, the White House press secretary, said Wednesday: "We have a situation where there was a referral now, four or five weeks ago. There was a House vote last week ..., where charges went from 11 to 15. And then this week, after the House vote, there seem to be some signals that they're being reduced.

"Given this being this close to the election, it's hard to not sense that there may be some politics at work here."

Rep. Martin Meehan, D-Mass., said Hyde "must be reading the polls, which indicate the public doesn't have a lot of faith in his Republican counterparts to conduct the inquiry in a fair manner."

GENTLEMEN: Group keeps tradition alive

radiating from you."

Today's barbershop music originated in the late 1800s in community barbershops and joins jazz and the Negro spirituals as "one of the three original, unique-to-America musical art forms," said Akins, 65, a petroleum engineer and former Midland mayor.

"It's an emotional experience (has its) own unique structure ... lends itself to amateurs," he said.

"When you do it right it's an exciting music," Akins said. "We sing a lot about sweethearts and wives and others that can evoke, depending on your situation, all kinds of emotions. There are happy songs, sad songs, funny songs, in-between (songs)," including those from the 1890s and World War II songs, such as the "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square" and "From the First Hello to the Last Goodbye."

The joy in barbershop-quartet singing comes in the "synergy of those four guys singing," Akins said. "The sound that comes out is greater than the four chords. It's an exciting thing when it is done right. When it's done wrong, it's terrible."

At a recent rehearsal, a group of barbershoppers was "wood-shedding," adjusting the pitch and working out the kinks to produce the barbershoppers' rainbow — the harmony, the perfect tuning on each chord.

When barbershop choruses about five times the strength of the Sun Country Gentlemen get on stage, the sight and sound are entrancing, Akins said.

'We sing a lot about sweethearts and wives and others that can evoke ... all kinds of emotions. There are happy songs, sad songs, funny songs, in-between ... It's an exciting thing when it is done right. When it's done wrong, it's terrible.'

— G. Thane Akins

"It's as good as it gets on this Earth," he said. "They are so good from the standpoint of musicality. It's just hard to imagine that this is just a bunch of guys like us" but in greater numbers.

Among those in the Sun Country Gentlemen are Midlanders William P. McClure, 66, and his son, W. Park McClure, 30. "It's a family affair," said the senior McClure, a bass. His son sings lead. "We just try to do our thing and do it well."

Big Spring twins Donald and Ronald Wheeler, 38, "won't sing the same because they try too hard to be different," said their mother, Norma Wheeler. Donald Wheeler sings bass. His brother sings lead.

To Midland barbershopper Dan Shackelford, 48, barbershop singing is a ministry that brings spiritual and emotional uplifting to people in the community from the Yucca Theater, Midland Centennial Plaza, and Christensen Stadium to hospitals, nursing homes, and on special occasions, such as Valentine's Day and birthdays.

For 1999, the barbershoppers are working on Irish tunes, including, "Mother Machree," "If There Had Never Been an Ireland," "Wild Irish Rose," "Irish Blessing," "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," and "That's an Irish Lullaby" (Tooralooralooral, Tooraloorali, Tooralooralooral).

Many of the old barbershop songs are from the old Irish sea chanteys and folk songs.

Midland musician-piano tuner Michael Sherrod, who sings bass, said that he enjoys the fellowship, "getting the guys together, having a good time together singing, harmonizing songs that really picture a story" such as the upbeat swing tune, "Sam, the Old Accordion Man."

"To sing that keeps us really excited and full of life, and that's why we come to barbershop: to enjoy the old songs."

Among Sherrod's favorites are "My Wild Irish Rose," "Bicycle Built for Two," and "Georgia," which speaks of "deep love that's pure and natural.

"And when we sing (of) spiritual love, it is special and it does warm the heart ... intimate love," Sherrod said.

The true feelings of love are "the best memories to keep," said Sherrod, who is a piano player for The Midland Community Theatre's Summer Mummers and a trombonist for Midland College's Jazz and Concert bands.

"Music is good therapy," Sherrod said. "It stimulates the soul."

Sam Carter, Kermit public-schools choral director, is the Sun Country Gentlemen's director. He said the barbershop chorus is a "melting pot of the really great voices and those who claim that they have no voice at all. They meet together in the middle, and we come out with the barbershop sound.

"It is one of the last bastions of something that promotes morality and kindness and respect and love ... not only love for another person but love for country, love for an ideal, love for your heritage ... love for the singing itself."

The barbershop fellowship is "far and away ... the world's happiest hobby," Carter, 54, said. "It makes for good relationships. The guys are friends; we don't have any enemies. It's a good place to go to get your week started. It's an opportunity to bond with the guys in some other environment besides knocking each other down in the stadium rooting over a football team."

KOSOVO: Milosevic agreement brings skepticism

give the people of Kosovo confidence that this isn't a shell game, that this isn't hide the police ... one day and come back in the next day," Rubin said in Washington.

The advance party of monitors — Milosevic's final concession after more than a week of intense negotiations with U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke — arrived in Kosovo from neighboring Macedonia on Wednesday. The several dozen Americans, Canadians and Europeans had been evacuated Monday.

But the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, which is responsible for assembling the monitoring mission, says it may take weeks to recruit enough personnel from its 54 member nations.

"I'm worried that the international community will be too slow and leisurely in getting them there, and they'll take six months to get there, when we need them there in six days or at least six weeks," Holbrooke said in an interview with CNN.

In Geneva, the U.N. refugee agency said it had resumed aid convoys, suspended Monday for fear of Serb attacks if NATO launched airstrikes.

Many refugees are still in hiding in Kosovo, fearing reprisals from Serb special police who have torched their villages and been accused of atrocities against ethnic Albanian civilians — not just the rebel fighters fighting for Kosovo's independence.

"Until the NATO planes fly here, Milosevic will say whatever people want to hear," said Hajdin Mehmeti, a 70-year-old refugee in the forested hamlet of Baks, northwest of Pristina. "One hundred times he has lied."

Another refugee, Maher Shpati, said unarmed monitors could not do the job. "They must be soldiers, like in Bosnia," he said, referring to the NATO peacekeeping force in that former Yugoslav republic.

British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook warned that NATO would be watching closely for evidence of compliance and that Milosevic should take alliance warnings seriously.

"We don't trust President Milosevic — let's be clear about that," Cook told BBC radio. "The united consensus within NATO that we were ready to take military action was there at the beginning of the week, is still there, and ... is still on the table. We can reactivate these plans any time we feel it is necessary to do so."

In addition to withdrawing his forces, agreeing to monitors and helping refugees return, Milosevic must show serious steps toward restoring the autonomy he stripped from Kosovo in 1989.

The Serb government took a step toward that late Tuesday, outlining a plan for a separate parliament and saying Kosovo Albanians would have their own parliament, judiciary and police.

Warrant issued for suspect in Olympic bombing

By Steve Lash
Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The massive manhunt for Eric Robert Rudolph will intensify after a federal court Wednesday issued a warrant for his arrest in connection with the Olympic Park bombing and two other attacks in Atlanta, Attorney General Janet Reno said.

"Eric Rudolph is on the run. Hundreds of agents are on his trail," Reno added. "We are not going to rest until we bring him to justice."

Rudolph, 32, has been a fugitive since last spring, when he was charged with the deadly Jan. 29 bombing of an abortion clinic in Birmingham, Ala. The explosion killed city police Officer Robert Sanderson and wounded the facility's head nurse, Emily Lyons.

The attorney general said she has not decided whether to seek the death penalty against Rudolph if he is convicted of the July 27, 1996, bombing in Atlanta's Centennial Olympic Park. That blast killed Alice Hawthorne, injured 120 other people and cast a pall over the Summer Games.

The Justice Department has also charged Rudolph with setting off explosions at an abortion clinic in Sandy Springs, Ga., which injured 54 people Jan. 16 and at a gay bar in Atlanta, wounding five people on Feb. 21.

FBI Director Louis Freeh said forensic evidence links Rudolph to the Atlanta attacks. "There is similarity among some of the devices," he said.

Freeh also mentioned letters claiming responsibility and signed "Army of God" sent after the gay bar and Birmingham bombings.

Federal, state and local police are continuing to focus their search for Rudolph in western North Carolina, a heavily wooded, mountainous area that has so far provided cover for the elusive fugitive, Freeh said.

The Justice Department is offering a $1 million reward for information leading directly to the arrest of Rudolph, who has been on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted List since May 5.

Freeh called the search for Rudolph one of the largest manhunts in U.S. history, involving hundreds of federal, state and local agents. In addition to the FBI, agencies involved in the search include the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; the Georgia, North Carolina and Alabama bureaus of investigation; Georgia Department of Corrections; Macon County, Ga., sheriff's office; and the Atlanta and Birmingham police departments.

of the community. We live in these towns together, we live in the Permian Basin together, and buying locally helps us support each other."

Guy Speck with Martin Outdoor Advertising displayed a scale model of a Buy the Basin billboard poster that will be put up on 10 billboards each in Midland and Odessa. Local companies can sponsor a bulletin board for $200, he said.

Bruce Partain, membership and communications chairman with the Midland chamber, said that chamber officials believe the campaign has had an impact.

"We feel a lot of the sales tax increases since 1993 can be attributed to the Buy the Basin effort," he said. "We haven't tried to track results scientifically, but there's anecdotal proof that it's working. People tell us they're looking here more before they go to Lubbock or Dallas, or their kids remind them to buy locally. Plus, sales tax collections have increased since 1993. We know not all of that is due to this campaign, but we feel we've had an impact."

White House, Congress on verge of budget deal

Republicans scored a win when White House bargainers dropped Clinton's demand for nearly $1 billion a year to help communities leverage bonds for school construction and modernization, said a participant who spoke on condition of anonymity.

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House and congressional budget bargainers all but completed agreement Wednesday on a $500 billion package of spending for education and other programs, breaking an impasse that has delayed Congress' departure for the year.

"We're down to the basically wrapping up," said Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss.

Other participants said an announcement of the agreement seemed imminent, though Christina Martin, press secretary to House Speaker Newt Gingrich, said it could take hours to complete final details and to announce them.

"We're very close to a deal," Gingrich, R-Ga., told reporters. "Pretty close, we'll see," said a Clinton administration official.

Agreement would clear the way for Congress to vote on a giant measure financing dozens of departments and agencies for the federal fiscal year that began Oct. 1. Included are the departments of Health and Human Services, Education, State, Commerce, Justice and Interior, as well as the foreign aid program.

The final vote, which could come as early as Thursday, would allow lawmakers to go home for re-election campaigns — something many incumbents have been itching to do. A deal also would end of a week of political brinkmanship that the two political parties waged leading up to the Nov. 3 elections that will determine who controls Congress the next two years.

After weeks of stories on President Clinton's possible impeachment dominating the news — including last week's vote to launch a House impeachment inquiry — Democrats tried to use the budget battle to turn the focus to their fight for more education money.

During the talks, Clinton demanded — and won — $1.1 billion to hire 100,000 more teachers, though Republicans apparently won concessions that would allow some of the money to be spent for other purposes.

"We've already won," Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., said even before the deal was completed. "If we'd have gone out with our last vote being on impeachment, that would be the end of it. But now we've been struggling and we've forced them to debate about education."

Republicans also expressed satisfaction, saying the package included extra defense spending, some anti-drug legislation and local controls over how the additional money for education would be spent.

"I think most Republicans are going to regard it as stronger defense, stronger anti-drug, stronger local control," Gingrich said during a break in the talks.

Lott said compromise had been reached on the education issue, but it was not immediately clear what the middle ground was. Republicans had been insisting that local officials control how the money would be used and that the money also be eligible for special education and items such as computers and books.

Republicans scored a win when White House chief of staff Erskine Bowles and other administration bargainers, as expected, dropped Clinton's demand for nearly $1 billion a year to help communities leverage bonds for school construction and modernization, said a participant who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Republicans were also expected to prevail in their fight with Clinton over his plan for voluntary national testing of elementary school students. Likely language would allow the development of those tests but no field testing or implementation — the same restrictions that exist under current law.

It was unclear what had been done about another major disagreement over a Democratic plan to require federal workers' health plans to cover prescription contraceptives.

A modest package of expiring tax breaks for business and others might still be included in the massive spending measure, Lott said. An aide said the measure would include breaks for corporate research and development, farmers, and for companies hiring workers from some low-income areas.

The aide said $17 billion would be included in the spending package for so-called emergencies. This would include nearly $6 billion for farmers hard hit by falling crop prices — a figure closer to the $7 billion Clinton wanted than to the $4.2 billion the Senate had approved. Most of the spending in this category would be paid for by expected budget surpluses. Some of the money also would be used to prepare federal computers for the year 2000, to upgrade security at U.S. embassies abroad and for U.S. troops in Bosnia.

Democrats were dropping their demand for taxpayer-financed needle distribution to District of Columbia drug addicts, said one aide. Republicans were dropping language blocking gay adoptions in the nation's capital.

The package was expected to allow the administration to give North Korea $35 million in food and other items in exchange for North Korea's cooperation in withholding development of nuclear weapons. But Republicans would get some language restricting how the money could be distributed.

Before the negotiations ended, GOP lawmakers were already talking about the additional $7.5 billion or so the emergency package was expected to have for anti-missile defenses, intelligence and other military programs.

As the negotiations proceeded, Congress voted to let federal agencies remain open through Friday night.

The stopgap measure — the fourth since fiscal 1999 began on Oct. 1 — cleared both the House and Senate on voice votes, and Clinton signed it. The previous short-term bill ran only through Wednesday night.

The two-day extension was designed to give bargainers more time to reach an agreement and to read the massive bill they were likely to produce. Aides said the legislation would probably stack at least a foot high.

Report: HIV test should be standard for pregnant women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Making a test for the AIDS virus a routine part of all pregnant women's prenatal care could help cut the number of babies born with the deadly infection, a panel of top medical experts advised Wednesday.

The Institute of Medicine, in a study requested by Congress, said too many pregnant women who should be tested are not, meaning they miss taking the drug AZT, which can significantly cut their chances of spreading HIV to their babies.

Adding HIV testing to the battery of tests all pregnant women routinely get — just like they're all tested for syphilis — would help find more women in time to help, the institute concluded.

"The message to women is, this is a disease for which we can do a great deal right now," said Dr. Marie McCormick of Harvard University, who chaired the study. "If you find you're positive, there's a great deal we can do to keep you healthy and, more importantly, to prevent transmission to your child."

The recommendation is already causing a mixed reaction. Some worry universal testing would be impractical or might interfere with programs in some states that require everyone given an AIDS test to have counseling first.

Current federal guidelines urge doctors to counsel pregnant women about HIV, including risk factors for infection, and ask them to be tested. But many doctors told the institute they don't discuss HIV because it is a burden or they don't think their patients are at risk.

Under the new recommendation, doctors would tell women they will automatically be tested for HIV as part of regular prenatal care unless they object. Women must be given a chance to refuse, the report stressed. More extensive counseling would come if a woman asked questions, or once test results were in.

Kosovo accord puts tense peace in place of war

The crisis in Kosovo has been averted for the moment, thanks to the diligent diplomatic work of U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke. Earlier this week, Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic agreed to end his crackdown on Kosovo's ethnic Albanians, ostensibly averting a bloodbath in the Yugoslavian province.

Now the waiting game begins. Will Milosevic abide by the agreement reached in Belgrade? Essentially, it calls for:

- Removal of Serbian troops from Kosovo where for months they have terrorized and in many instances butchered ethnic Albanians.
- Return of about 300,000 refugees to their villages. With winter rapidly approaching, that fact alone could ensure that those who would have perished this fall and winter in the harsh Yugoslavian countryside will survive.
- More international verification that Milosevic's troops have actually pulled back and ended their assault.

Now the waiting game begins. Will Milosevic abide by the agreement reached in Belgrade?

There is, of course, no guarantee that the Yugoslav leader will abide by the terms of the agreement. If he does not, his country will likely be subjected to NATO airstrikes that had been threatened prior to the announcement of the agreement. In fact, on Sunday U.S. bombers had been positioned for possible NATO airstrikes.

Yet NATO airstrikes in Yugoslavia were considered far preferable to other means for ending the Serbian atrocities taking place in Kosovo. Other options such as deploying U.S. ground troops into Kosovo were not considered reasonable as a means of stopping, for a time, what many view as another open-ended deployment of U.S. forces.

So Milosevic, who some observers describe as another potential Saddam Hussein, is in the spotlight. The next move is his. It should be hoped that he makes the correct choice. Even an uneasy peace is better than outright warfare.

'Megan's Law' use could boost safety

Los Angeles is not the first city that comes to mind when considering new and alternative measures to fight crime. That may have to change.

County officials in Los Angeles deserve praise for an aggressive approach regarding "Megan's Law," the law named after a New Jersey girl murdered by a repeat sex offender. Officials are enacting measures the rest of the nation would be well-advised to also consider.

The county Board of Supervisors in Los Angeles has directed local law enforcement agencies to distribute letters by mail, notifying the public when a high risk sex offender moves into the neighborhood.

"Megan's Law" allows the public access to information on registered and repeat sex offenders. While "Megan's Law" provides the public with vital information, the decision by Los Angeles city officials to distribute information through the mail sets a precedent.

Mike Van Winkle, Megan's Law specialist for the California attorney general, said he didn't know of any city or county that does targeted mailings.

County officials hope the 88 cities in the county, including Los Angeles, follow the county's lead, and the rest of the state will enact similar measures.

Hopefully, it will not stop there.

We hope the rest of the nation will notice this aggressive and preventive approach and make the welfare and safety of the public a top priority.

Adding hate crime categories just identity politics

WASHINGTON—Matthew Shepard, a gay student at the University of Wyoming, was beaten and left lashed to a fence near Laramie through a cold high plains night. He has died. His assailants should die: Wyoming has capital punishment for first-degree murder. Now, imagine the trouble they would be in if Wyoming were one of the 21 states with laws against "hate crimes" based on sexual orientation.

Will

President Clinton has rushed to re-endorse broadening federal hate crime laws to cover crimes motivated by the victim's sexual orientation, disability or gender. Currently, federal hate crimes include only those based on race, color, religion and national origin.

Congress continually uses the criminal law as a moral pork barrel, for indignation gestures. Compassion is today's supreme political value, so politics is a sentiment competition. It is less about changing society than striking poses: theatrical empathy trumps considerations of mere practicality. But the multiplication of hate crime categories — statutes stipulating that some crime victims are especially important — is an imprudent extension of identity politics.

In their book "Hate Crimes: Criminal Law & Identity Politics," James B. Jacobs and Kimberly Potter define such politics as individuals relating to one another as members of competing groups defined by race, gender, religion, sexual orientation, disability and so on. In such politics, it is strategically advantageous to be recognized as victimized or otherwise disadvantaged.

Hate crime laws are, Jacobs and Potter argue, "morale-building legislation" because they confer such recognition. But does the competition for special government-conferred status for particular groups advance the aim of hate crime laws — a more tolerant society?

Such laws mandate enhanced penalties for crimes committed as a result of, or at least when accompanied by (can juries be counted on to distinguish causation from correlation?), particular government-disapproved states of mind. Granted, law has the expressive function of stigmatizing particular conduct. However, should government plunge deeper into stigmatizing thoughts and attitudes? The consequence will be more and more crimes presented by prosecutors as especially wicked because the defendants had odious (but not illegal) frames of mind.

Should we saddle juries with the task of detecting an expanding number of impermissible motives for acts already proscribed? Should jurors decide:

Is the utterance of a racial or ethnic slur during an assault conclusive evidence that the assault is a "hate crime," more odious than the same assault absent the slur? Does a black (white) mugger presumptively choose his white (black) victim because of his race? Are rapes invariably hate crimes because rapists pick their victims because of gender?

Was the 1989 Central Park "wilding" — the near-fatal rape and beating of a white jogger by a gang of black and Hispanic youths — a hate crime? No, the youths did not suffer enhanced penalties, because they also assaulted Hispanics that evening. They got more lenient treatment because of the catholicity of their barbarism.

For the flavor of the future under broad hate crimes laws, consider an Ohio prosecutor's questions when trying to prove a white man's racist motive for having a dispute with a black person at a campground. The prosecutor asked about the white man's relations with his black neighbor:

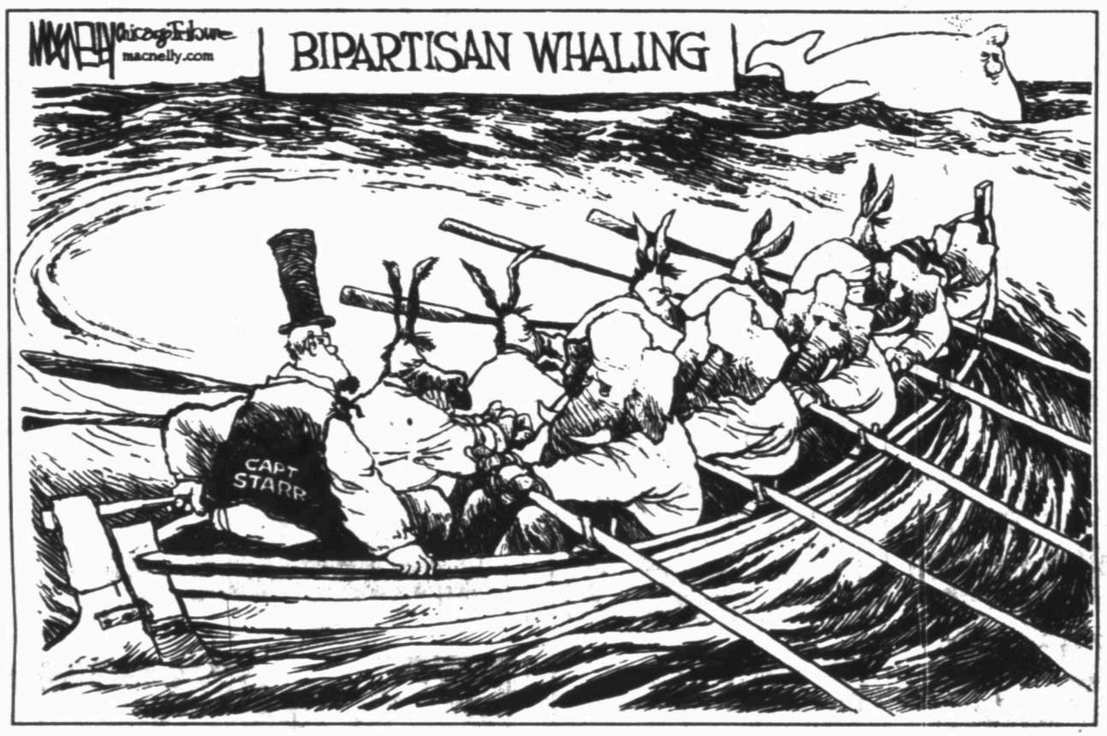

"And you lived next door ... for nine years and you don't even know her first name? Never had dinner with her? Never gone out and had a beer with her? You don't associate with her, do you? All these black people that you have described that are your friends, I want you to give me one person, just one who was really a good friend of yours."

Before passing laws that will make such inquisitorial questioning routine in millions of cases involving violent—and nonviolent— behavior, consider that, according to the FBI, in 1996 there were just 12 murders classified as hate crimes. And the many thousands of reported hate incidents include a small fraction of 1 percent of all crimes. Most are vandalism (e.g., graffiti) or intimidation (e.g., verbal abuse).

Now, some motives for seemingly similar deeds are so much worse than others that they make some deeds different not only in degree of odiousness but in kind: Painting "Beat Michigan" on a bridge is not quite the same offense as painting "Burn Jews" on a synagogue.

However, surely the criminal law can take cognizance of such distinctions without codifying an ever-more-elaborate structure of identity politics. And surely Shepard's assailants would deserve no less severity if he were not gay and their motive had been, as it may partly have been (how do we disentangle motives?), pure sadism.

To impeach or not to impeach...

To impeach or not to impeach, that is the question. Whether it is nobler to impeach as a Republican or as a Democrat and do away with a president is something to be devoutly discussed.

This is what has to be done. The Republicans must call the same people that Ken Starr called in the past.

Buchwald

"Monica Lewinsky, do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, or any version of it that you already told Linda Tripp?"

"I do."

"Would you call yourself a clothes horse?"

"I like good clothes."

"Were you and the president of the United States close friends?"

"I was a good intern, and he was a good Commander-in-Chief, and when there was nothing else to do we played spin the bottle in the Oval Office."

"Did the president ever buy you any gifts to reward your internship?"

"We gave each other presents, but we never bought tables at fund-raisers for each other."

"Linda Tripp. Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth and ... "

"You can save the rest of the oath. Ken Starr told me what to say."

"Is it true that you taped everything Monica Lewinsky told you when you stood by the water cooler?"

"Monica was a loudmouth. She told me everything that took place between her and the president, except his plan to bomb Sudan."

"Why do you think the president failed to tell Monica that?"

"He didn't want to mix their emotional relationship with our cruise missiles."

"When you were taping Monica, did you feel it was a weighty job?"

"The FBI made it easy on me by making me take a course at Weight Watchers."

"Vernon Jordan, will you take the oath?"

"Of course."

"Did you ever offer to find a job for Monica Lewinsky?"

"Yes, because I believed she was the best person to lead our troops in Kosovo. I knew she could speak the language and the president trusted her."

"Would you trust her with lipstick colors at Revlon?"

"She is the only one I can trust."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 15, the 288th day of 1998. There are 77 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 15, 1917, Mata Hari, a Dutch dancer who had spied for the Germans, was executed by a French firing squad outside Paris.

On this date:

In 1914, the Clayton Antitrust Act was passed.

In 1928, the German dirigible Graf Zeppelin landed in Lakehurst, N.J., on its first commercial flight across the Atlantic.

In 1945, the former premier of Vichy France, Pierre Laval, was executed.

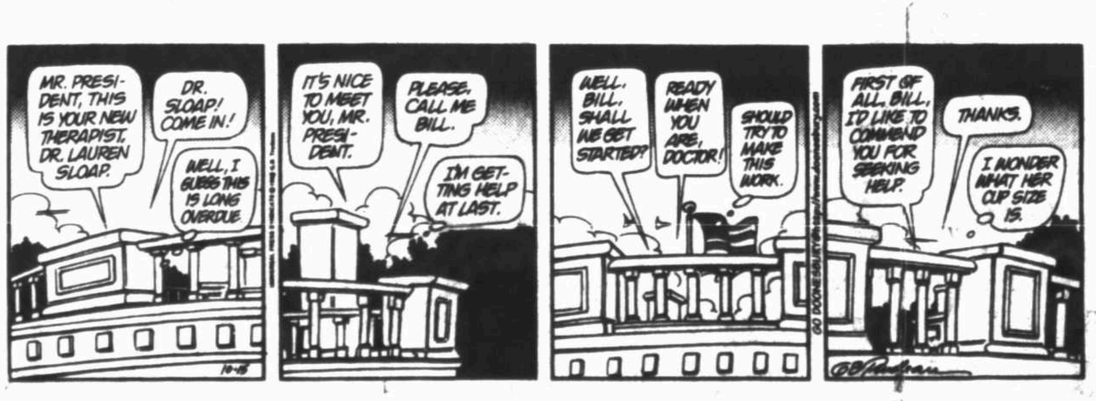

In 1946, Nazi war criminal Hermann Goering poisoned himself hours before he was to have been executed.

In 1966, President Johnson signed a bill creating the Department of Transportation.

In 1969, peace demonstrators staged activities across the country, including a candlelight march around the White House, as part of a moratorium against the Vietnam War.

In 1976, in the first debate of its kind between vice-presidential nominees, Democrat Walter F. Mondale and Republican Bob Dole faced off in Houston.

Democrats decry GOP 'meanness' when they lose

Three weeks before the election, Democrats of the liberal persuasion are bawling about the "meanness" of Republicans in an attempt to divert attention from substantive arguments about important issues, such as impeachment.

Thomas

When they are losing, Democrats invoke meanness and its evil twin, fairness. They subscribe to the old European "divine right of kings" philosophy, under which political power belongs to them forever. Republicans who challenge this notion and win positions of authority are to be regarded as trespassers and usurpers.

President Clinton continues to play to this mentality. Only he (and Mrs. Clinton) care about the American people. Everything they propose to do is right and good, and anyone who opposes them is wrong and mean. Only the Clintons care about your health, your children's education, the poor and minorities. Support them, and the country will prosper. Elect Republicans, and religious fanatics will be telling you what to do. Bipartisanship occurs when Republicans give in to Democrats, never the reverse.

Andrew Sullivan played on this discordant theme in a New York Times Magazine cover story on Sunday. Sullivan delivered a diatribe titled "Going Down Screaming," illustrated by a man breathing fire. The subhead said: "American conservatism has met with extraordinary success in the last quarter-century, but now the movement has traded liberation from the state for moral righteousness." He accuses the right's intellectuals of having "lost touch."

This is a familiar complaint by those who see their power eroding. When social liberals want to ram something down our throats, we must swallow it and thank them for caring enough to save us. But when we refuse to swallow their line and prefer to stand on our principles and convictions that what they are trying to cram down our throats is wrong, "even unrighteous," then we join the company of the "damned" (by the liberal establishment) and are declared out of touch, intolerant and, above all, mean.

People are mean when they try to save the nation from the consequences of liberal ideology. They are mean when they say there is more to life than succumbing to the perceived pleasure of the moment. Linda Tripp is mean because she taped conversations with Monica Lewinsky. Ken Starr is mean because he is after the president. No one suggests that Bill Clinton is mean for the way he has debauched himself and the presidency. Monica Lewinsky labeled as "meanies" staff people in the White House who tried to prevent her face-to-groin contacts with President Clinton.

This is the philosophy of self-centered people, a characteristic widespread among many who are part of the generation known as "Boomers." That philosophy apparently is also impacting many in "generation next." For 35 years the peace-and-love bunch has opposed teaching honorable things, and then they feign shock when dishonor abounds, even in the White House. In fact, they have trouble recognizing dishonor when they see it because they have been inattentive to that high and holy principle.

In the budget debate, Republicans are mean for wanting "to rob" Social Security by suggesting that overtaxed (by Bill Clinton) Americans ought to be able to keep just a little more of their money. But when the President and Mrs. Clinton announce plans to spend some of that surplus they claim should be preserved to shore up Social Security, they're being good.

Republicans are mean because they don't want to submit to the president's bogus proposal that hiring 100,000 new teachers will teach kids to read. They express meanness when they ask why kids once learned to read in one-room schoolhouses. When Republicans suggest that maybe class or budget size is less an influence than what and how the kids are taught, they are accused of saying mean things.

Some of us thought our parents were mean for making us eat our vegetables and roll out of bed to get to school or work on time. Most of us now know they were wiser than we were. Maybe we'll see that the real meanies are politicians who give us candy when we ought to be eating our vegetables.

Sensitive nuclear information almost released to American public

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department and Pentagon discovered sensitive nuclear weapons information in boxes of Cold War-era materials that were about to be publicly released at President Clinton's orders. In some cases, highly classified material was mistakenly made public.

The discoveries sparked a hasty scramble by Congress to block the release of information that energy officials warned could advance the capabilities of emerging nuclear states such as Pakistan and India. The congressional solution, which critics contend will slow the release of Cold War documents to a crawl, is part of the 1999 defense authorization bill awaiting Clinton's signature.

White House officials were alerted to the problem this summer in a letter from Kenneth Baker, a senior official in the Energy Department's Office of Nonproliferation and National Security. The letter concerned the discovery of pages marked "Restricted Data" or "Formerly Restricted Data," in boxes of 25-year-old classified documents slated for release without review. The government applies those designations to material on the design, production, performance and use of nuclear weapons.

Clinton's executive order, which requires automatic declassification by the year 2000 of documents more than 25 years old, includes an exception for restricted data. But the order contains no provision to search every document in every box — a task involving billions of pages and as many as 67 different agencies — looking for the sensitive material.

"This problem poses a great national security risk" because it involves the potential release of "the nation's most sensitive secrets," Baker wrote. "Some of the compromised information found in these file series involved design information of special value to proliferants seeking to weaponize their nuclear devices, such as India and Pakistan." Those two countries tested nuclear weapons earlier this year and are developing ways to deploy nuclear weapons on planes and missiles.

"We have no way of estimating how much information of great potential value to proliferants is now on the open shelves or scheduled to be placed there," Baker wrote.

An Energy Department official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said "there have been some examples" of classified documents on nuclear weapons-related data having been made public inadvertently. For security reasons, DOE is unwilling to describe those instances, including some that occurred after Clinton's 1995 executive order. Such sensitive documents have since been removed from public-access archives, but it is unclear if some information may have leaked out.

Enormous amounts of material on how to build nuclear weapons are publicly available — enough that college undergraduates have written creditable papers on how to build a bomb. But there remain highly sensitive secrets about weapons design, particularly the control of explosive yield and techniques of miniaturizing a nuclear weapon for use as a missile warhead.

Republican Sens. Jon Kyl of Arizona, Bob Smith of New Hampshire and Richard Shelby of Alabama, alerted to the Energy Department's discoveries, complained to National Security Adviser Sandy Berger that "in a frenzied attempt to meet the (year 2000) deadline," agencies were releasing whole boxes of classified material without looking at the documents.

The president's executive order was intended to aid historians and reduce an enormous backlog of 25-year-old documents awaiting declassification by permitting release with little or no review of each individual document.

After an intense internal debate, the administration has now accepted page-by-page declassification review. In a compromise that settled differences within the administration, the legislation allows bulk declassification when boxes are deemed "highly unlikely" to contain nuclear weapons information.

"We still think it's somewhat burdensome," said a senior administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

David Leavy, spokesman for the National Security Council, said the measure will protect against "inadvertent release of records containing nuclear weapons information while also preserving the goal of speeding the declassification and release to the public of older records that no longer need protection."

Polka King Frankie Yankovic dies at age 83

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Frankie Yankovic, the accordion-playing Polka King from Cleveland who had folks rolling out the barrel and asking who stole the kishka for generations, died at his home Wednesday. He was 83.

Yankovic wowed dance-hall crowds throughout the Midwest for more than 60 years with his rollicking, toe-tapping performances, won the first Grammy ever awarded for polka in 1986 and more recently reached a whole new generation by teaming up with TV's Drew Carey and "Weird Al" Yankovic, who was thought to be a distant relative.

"His appeal, it was the same thing as Elvis Presley," said Joe Miskulin, a Nashville recording artist who started playing with Yankovic at age 13. "You saw a guy who came from very poor beginnings achieve exactly what he wanted to do. He had charisma. He'd walk through the dance floor and you'd watch heads turn and everyone want to touch him."

Yankovic fell last week at his home in New Port Richey, near Tampa, and was briefly hospitalized. The cause of his death was not immediately known.

Yankovic was the best-known practitioner of Slovenian-style polka, which is heavy on the accordion, clarinet and saxophone. Polish-style polka features accordions and trumpets and has a faster beat.

"The beat that I gave it was different. It was acceptable to teenagers as well as the older folks," Yankovic said. "I took the real old-time polkas and modernized them."

Yankovic had his two biggest hits in the late 1940s. His signature polka, "Just Because," sold more than 1 million copies in 1948, as did "Blue Skirt Waltz" the following year.

His other hits included "In Heaven There Is No Beer," "Dizzy Day Polka," "Accordion Man Waltz," "Champagne Taste and a Beer Bankroll" and his version of "Beer Barrel Polka."

On his album "Songs of the Polka King, Volume 2," which this year earned him his fourth Grammy nomination, Yankovic teamed up with the song parody king "Weird Al" Yankovic for a version of "Who Stole the Kishka."

A tune about the theft of a sausage (pronounced keesh-KA), the song includes the verse: "Round and firm and fully packed, it was hanging on the rack. Someone stole the kishka! Won't you bring it back? Hey!"

The album also included a duet with Carey. The tubby fellow Clevelander joined Yankovic for the "Too Fat Polka," which proclaims: "I don't want her, you can have her! She's too fat for me!"

Yankovic earned a reputation as polka's iron man by playing for hours on his feet, tapping his toes and squeezing his hefty accordion, while others played while seated.

More recently he had given in to the limitations of age and health and started performing while seated, though reluctantly. In January, he missed a command performance at Washington's Kennedy Center after undergoing heart surgery.

Yankovic was born in Davis, W.Va., in 1915. His family moved to Cleveland when he was 5 months old. When he was 9, he began playing a friend's button-box accordion. His parents got him a piano accordion when he was 15, and he began playing socials in Cleveland's ethnic neighborhoods.

He had TV shows in Cleveland and Chicago during the 1960s.

Yankovic married three times and had 10 children.

His wife, Ida Yankovic, said last year the reason for her husband's success was simple: "Frankie played from his heart. I believe that's why he was put on this Earth, to bring happiness to a lot of people."

A funeral will be held Monday in Cleveland.

Democrats like look of Congress' long goodbye

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After a year of sputtering, the Republican-controlled Congress is stumbling toward adjournment under pressure from a resilient President Clinton and congressional Democrats eager to turn election-year talk to education and other popular issues.

Since muscling an open-ended impeachment inquiry through the House last week on a largely party-line vote, Republicans have been forced into a prolonged series of closed-door negotiations with the White House on other matters.

A year's work hangs in the balance — from legislation on national issues such as education and contraceptives to the individual projects that many lawmakers crave — and the daily script has been predictable. Chief of staff Erskine Bowles spends hours in private talks with GOP leaders inside the Capitol, and the president roughs up Republicans in brief, once-a-day public appearances before the television cameras.

"I wish I had time to win the philosophical debate with our friends on the other side, who somehow see helping more teachers teach and providing more school buildings as an intrusion into local affairs. It is not," Clinton said this week at a campaign-style appearance at an overcrowded Maryland school a few miles from the White House.

Republicans counter that the Democrats are merely defenders of a large bureaucracy. "The president has disagreed with us all year," says House Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas. "He vetoed our education agenda to put the dollars in the hands of teachers and parents instead of the Washington bureaucracy."

The polls say that education remains an issue that works to the advantage of Democrats, despite gains Republicans have made in the past two years in an attempt to reposition themselves.

Whatever their momentary optimism, Democrats speaking privately concede there's plenty of time for Republicans to assert control over the election campaign. The GOP will have more money to spend on advertising, their voters remain highly motivated to go to the polls and the Republicans appear well-positioned to run strongly for a number of seats where Democrats are retiring.

Still, the polls indicate that Democrats have been able to energize their own core voters by underscoring their opposition to the GOP plans for a no-limits impeachment inquiry, and now they're pressing for election-year trophies on issues that appeal to key voting blocs, as well.

Republicans have known all year that Clinton would seek billions in extra social spending as the price for adjournment. The alternative to yielding was unthinkable — a rerun of the politically disastrous government shutdowns of three winters ago.

"The president has a lot of leverage and he's emboldened to use it," said Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif, the third-ranking Democrat in the House. "In terms of public opinion he's not as weak as Republicans hoped or believed." In addition, he said, "They're clearly nervous about a backlash from the Lewinsky matter."

Republicans discount such talk.

"Our (poll) numbers are looking better and better," said Rep. John Linder of Georgia, head of the GOP House campaign committee. "They (Democrats) need to get home and campaign. Every one of our incumbents is ahead. That's not true of theirs."

The polls are mixed. One survey reported that Democrats enjoy a healthy lead among likely voters. A second reported a substantial advantage for Republicans. A third found a statistical tie.

> 'The president has a lot of leverage and he's emboldened to use it. In terms of public opinion he's not as weak as Republicans hoped or believed. They're clearly nervous about a backlash from the Lewinsky matter.'
> — Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif.

The surveys also show a split on impeachment proceedings. Likely voters approve of the Republican approach. The country as a whole does not, and the GOP is treading carefully.

A week ago, the Judiciary Committee chairman, Rep. Henry Hyde of Illinois insisted on an impeachment inquiry unlimited in time or scope.

In the days since, he's emphasized a desire to finish by the end of the year, and told reporters during the day he intends to "streamline" the 15 counts of impeachable offenses outlined by his chief counsel. "My sense is there's a burnout factor" among the public, he said.

The crush of the final few days of the session stands in sharp contrast to a leisurely pace of most of the year.

And this year's list of legislative casualties is long.

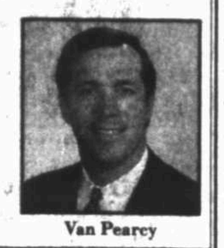

Republican infighting prevented agreement on an overall budget for the year as well as a large election-year tax cut, many of the regular spending bills and a measure to rewrite Depression-era laws governing financial service organizations.

GOP unity killed off a variety of initiatives that Clinton outlined in his State of the Union Address last winter, notably anti-smoking legislation, a bill to rein in HMOs and an increase in the minimum wage. A bipartisan push for campaign finance overhaul also fell to GOP objections.

The two accomplishments that GOP leaders cite most often — a highway bill and legislation to restrain the IRS — were holdovers from 1997.

The list of accomplishments expected to be featured in GOP campaign commercials include the balanced budget deal and tax cut, enacted in 1997, and the welfare overhaul measure passed in 1996.

GOP women host court hopefuls

By Rick López
Staff Writer

Now that news polls indicate that most Americans still support President Clinton, it is crucial for Republicans to make their presence felt at the polls and uphold the presidential investigation, Texas Supreme Court justice hopeful Greg Abbott said Wednesday.

"Americans are disappointed by the way Republicans are investigating Clinton," Abbott said, quoting polls conducted by news sources. "We have a lot of people who are behind the president while he's under attack. We can't be apathetic to the next election."

Abbott was one of four political candidates invited to speak at the Midland County Republican Women's monthly meeting. He was appointed to the Texas Supreme Court in 1995 after working as a state district judge.

The upcoming elections could provide Texans with a chance to make history and have more Republicans in office than ever before, Abbott said.

"For the first time in election history, we can elect a Republican to governor, attorney general, comptroller ... and restore Texas with conservative policies," Abbott said.

Other guests at the meeting included Harriet O'Neill, candidate for Supreme Court justice, Place 2; Deborah Hankinson, candidate for Supreme Court justice, Place 4; and Mike Bradford, who spoke on behalf of lieutenant governor hopeful Rick Perry.

Congregation lauds pastor with gifts to show appreciation

■ Big Spring's First Christian Church members performed tasks ranging from planting a tree to washing a car to show gratitude for their pastor.

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — Although it is said in the Holy Writ that a prophet is without honor except in his own country, it should be stressed that they aren't always without honor in their own country. Especially in Big Spring, where they not only honor their prophets, but hold month-long celebrations for them.

Just ask Gary Groves, pastor of the First Christian Church for the past five years, who walked into the church house Oct. 4 to find that his congregation had a little surprise for him.

Instead of the normal Sunday service, Groves found that his congregation had completely usurped control of the proceedings in an all-out, no-holds-barred celebration that lasted all that Sunday, and is still going on.

"We're having a pastor appreciation month, and we won't quit until Halloween night," said First Christian member Johnnie Lou Avery.

The congregation began preparing in August for the marathon celebration, urged into action by a committee headed by Joycee Davis.

"Gary has done so much for the church and for Big Spring in the short five years he's been here, that I thought it was time for us to show how much he means to us," she explained. "Since October is Clergy Appreciation Month, we decided this would

Student group formed to help define needs

■ Committee to review programs needed by Midland youth and relay information to city leaders.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

As the next step in providing quality social programs for Midland's youth, a new Youth Advisory Council has been assembled from students throughout the city.

A committee of 32 students has been assembled to provide input on the creation of future programs and to act as representatives of the city's youth population, said Billy Merritt, youth development coordinator for the city of Midland.

The council was selected from applicants from Lee and Midland high schools, Lee and Midland freshman schools, Coleman High School, Trinity School, Midland Christian School, as well as Goddard, San Jacinto and Abell junior high schools.

The goal of the Youth Council is to discuss and interpret the needs of Midland's youth and provide this information to the city's leadership, Merritt said.

"We're going to try to make Midland a premier place for youth development activities," he said.

As part of the application process, each of these youth were asked to identify a weakness in the city's "youth programming" and design some form of solution, Merritt said.

These applications were used to select the representatives and will also serve as study material for designing future youth programs.

"They (the Youth Council) will not be creating public policy — they will serve in an advisory capacity," Merritt said.

The representatives include: Serena Duffin and Richard Rouse from Trinity; and Seth Denson, J.P. Duffy, Mary Dulaney, Meredith Lee Martin, Alexis Milmine and Sarah Wilhite from Midland Christian.

From Lee High there will be Ashlei Miller, Jay Vaden, Bryan McHenry, Lindsay Hammond, Arthur Washington, Krystal Kimble, Melanie Cadena, Elizabeth Black and Tyler Seibold.

Lee Freshman representatives include James Hershberger and Stefani Scott. Midland Freshman will be represented by Christian Waddell.

From Midland High School there will be Garrett Morgan, Kathleen Coleman, Rene Rodriguez and William Franklin.

Clint Cronin will represent Coleman High School, while Goddard Junior High will have Sharla Crisp, Kendra Waddell and Alex Munoz.

From San Jacinto there will be Kyle Davis and Joseph Davis and from Abell Laura Carr and Chelsea Evans will be joining the council.

These students were officially recognized Tuesday by the Midland City Coun-

John Sharp's wife stumps for husband in Odessa

■ Charlotte Sharp voiced husband's concerns about proposed school voucher system.

By Rick López
Staff Writer

ODESSA — She plans on riding through the Trans-Pecos in just two days, squeezing in nine stops from Plainview to Pecos.

It's not impossible, said Charlotte Sharp, who campaigned in West Texas while her husband, lieutenant governor hopeful John Sharp, would fulfill appointments in Dallas, San Antonio and then retire to a fund-raiser in Austin before sunset.

"He loves this state, and he wants to do right for Texans," Mrs. Sharp said.

While visiting residents of the South Side Senior Center in Odessa, Mrs. Sharp talked about her husband's doubts with the school voucher system that his opponent, Rick Perry, is supporting as the solution to mediocre education offered at some public schools.

"There is a huge difference between John and his opponent. John is proud of public schools, but recognizes their need for improvement," Mrs. Sharp said. "He doesn't feel the need to give up on them and then take up a voucher system."

Public schools would lose up to $2 billion under the voucher program, Mrs. Sharp said. Some might not even be operating and teacher jobs would be lost.

"This state can't afford to give money to private schools with some of the things that are going on," she said. Paying children to go to private schools on state funds could be dangerous, she added.

Most of the private schools are religious, which would provoke some parents to file lawsuits against the state for crossing the boundaries that separate church and state.

"It could be a dangerous thing," she said. "I think John has looked at this and didn't do rule it out, but we're in no shape to look at school vouchers."

She says her husband has proposed sweeping changes to the public education system — including boosting the

ED TODD

Word 'love' isn't used in lyrics, but lingering romance conveyed

Yes, indeed, you may count yourself blessed more than lucky if there is a sweet, old song in your heart.

Todd

It is good for the soul.

One of the sweetest, of course, in the spiritual and secular worlds is John Newton's "Amazing Grace! How sweet the sound that saved a wretch (soul) like me."

Believer or non-believer, "Amazing Grace" exhilarates and smoothes the heart and mind for awhile and offers peace.

Whether you are an ever-hopeful romantic on the quest for idealized love or an old naysayer, a lost curmudgeon, how could you not be cast into a spell by "My Wild Irish Rose, the sweetest flower that grows."

Another Irish tune, sentimental, sad, and so lovely, is the lingering "Cockles and Mussels," which sings of "Dublin's fair city where the girls are so pretty" and therein lies the tale and legacy of sweet Molly Malone crying "Alive, alive o!"

Whatever the elixir, there are tunes by the droves, often stemming from early memories, that make more tender the kind heart and which become medicine to the hardened heart.

Who cannot yearn for the consoling and understanding arms, smile, heart, and embrace of a mother singing "Tooralooralooral, Tooralooralooral, Tooralooralooral, Hush now don't you cry" in the perennial "That's an Irish Lullaby."

The lyrist writes of times long gone: "... I'd give the world if I could hear her sing that song today."

The past is long gone but deeply embedded into the memory just as is hope ingrained in times to come.

In "I'll Fly Away," similarly to "In the Sweet By and By," there is the faith that "when this life is over, I'll fly away" to Gloryland on "God's celestial shore, O Lordy. I'll fly away (in the morning). When I die, Hallelujah, by and by, I'll fly away."

What has been described as "the greatest love song ever" is George W. Johnson's 1800s poem to his beloved Maggie Clark who died in the year of their 1865 marriage: "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

Not once is the word "love" used in the lyrics, but great affection and lingering romance rule every line. The mournful poet imagines their life together.

"And now we are aged and gray, Maggie,/And the trials of life nearly done;/Let us sing of the days that are gone, Maggie,/When you and I were young."

For friends and lovers who pass on by, there is the "Red River Valley," which laments their going toward other horizons: "You are taking the sunshine/Which has brightened our pathway awhile."

And ever so endearing is the golden oldie, "You Are My Sunshine." It is a song of smiles and tears: "You are my sunshine, my only sunshine./You make me happy when skies are gray./You'll never know, dear, how much I love you./Please don't take my sunshine away."

Blessed, yes, are those who sing sweetly and tenderly in the heart.

state's investment in public schools, moving all students out of portable buildings and into permanent classrooms and creating the Lone Star Scholars program, which is a program designed to provide tuition, fees and books to any Texas high school graduate who maintains a "B" average in college.

His cost-cutting proposals have identified more than $8.5 billion in taxpayer savings and avoided a state income tax, she said.

"There is a lot of criticism from the opposing side," Mrs. Sharp said. "They're saying his proposal will not bring real savings, but yet, they all voted in favor of it. I want you to know that."

Sharp also helped create the Lone Star Card, which has eliminated food stamp coupons and helped more than 1 million Texans leave the welfare rolls behind, and the Texas Tomorrow Fund, which allows 80,000 families to save for their children's college expenses while freezing current college tuition prices, his wife said.

"He asks you to place a look at the records of the other candidates, and when you do, you will see the difference," Mrs. Sharp said.

Plains, Morton, Muleshoe, Dimmit, Tulia and Plainview are the cities she will visit today as part of her whirlwind campaign.

to the 14th Court of Appeals in Houston, said it is important for people to be aware of how the Supreme Court serves the community.

"It is important that we make sure who our judicial candidates are," she said. "A judge has more influence in your life than other candidates. They are the last jurisdiction for juvenile matters."

It's important to elect a judge who should apply the law as it is written and not be concerned with modifying it, Ms. O'Neill said. Preserving a conservative judicial system is something she promises to do if elected, she said.

Hankinson

O'Neill

Ms. Hankinson, who was on the court of appeals two years ago, was appointed by Gov. George Bush to replace Supreme Court justice John Cornyn, who left the court to run for attorney general.

A job as a special education teacher with a Dallas school piqued her interest in the judicial system.

"In the late '70s, a law was passed the allowed all children to be educated," she said. "I have first-hand experience watching the point when law reaches out and touches our lives."

She promises that her service on the bench will be fair to all citizens if she continues to serve on Supreme Court, Ms. Hankinson said.

Bradford, recently elected as Midland County commissioner, Precinct 2, said Perry, agriculture commissioner, has the professional attitude and integrity to run for lieutenant governor.

"You should see the respect other legislative bodies have for him," Bradford said. "He is outspoken ... and is respectful to both governmental bodies that bring their concerns to him."

PASTOR: Group worried about maintaining surprise element

be a perfect month to do it."

Ms. Davis said she first began whispering to various members of the congregation one Sunday to spread the word that there was going to be a meeting the following Wednesday to decide "what we were going to do about Gary."

She said she typed up a list of suggestions to consider, "...and when I passed out copies, everybody said they wanted to do every one of them!"

First Christian member John Fort solicited letters and cards from the congregation. Youth sponsors Alan Hollandsworth and Ann Fritzler directed the creation of posters and banners and yard signs bearing messages of thanks and praise.

Members Roy Don and Beverly Beachamp arranged for the planting of a tree in Groves' honor.

Music minister Ronnie Moss, organist Roy Hughes and the First Christian choir brought out all of Groves' favorites, and retired organist Virginia Martin coordinated the music with special youth choir presentations.

Members signed up to wash Groves' car, to take the family out to eat, to prepare casseroles for them, and to give other special gifts of time and talent to the Groves family.

A group of prayers was assembled to ensure that the Groves family would have special prayers said for them daily, not only to seek blessings on them, but expressing thanks for their special ministries.

Ms. Avery said that although they knew they'd have an overwhelmingly enthusiastic response, they had some concerns about whether they could maintain the surprise element.

"When you get that many people involved, it's hard to avoid leaks," she said.

The CIA should have a team like Big Spring First Christian Church. Gary and Judy Groves and their three daughters, Jenna, Kelsy and Claire, didn't hear a word — not even a whisper.

They walked in that morning to find a church full of flowers, banners, family and friends.

"I was so surprised — humbly surprised," Groves said. "And not only that Sunday, but it keeps going on. Every day, there are cards on my desk.

"We've just been overwhelmed."

The congregation also honored associate pastor, Paula Waters, who has been in the clergy 17 years, with an engraved gold cross inset with 17 diamonds.

Groves, who was formerly an associate minister and youth director at Memorial Christian Church in Midland, has been an active member of Big Spring Rotary, served on the board of the Northside Community Center, is on the Big Spring State Hospital Volunteer Council, and is the president of Big Spring's Isaiah 58 project, a food and clothing outreach for persons in need.

He also serves on the steering committee of the Big Spring satellite of the Regional Samaritan Counseling Center, as well as other community activities. His wife, Judy, is a petroleum engineer with Arco Permian in Midland.

Groves said with all the pampering and prayers, there has only been one area of the family's life untouched: their dog. Nobody has come forward to offer to wash the family's 94-pound, 13-year-old Rhodesian ridgeback.

"I invite anyone to wash the dog," said Groves, grinning. "I implore anyone to feed, or walk, or do anything at all with the dog."

As youth development coordinator, Merritt is responsible for coordinating and promoting various city recreational programs and other events geared toward the city's youth. He serves as a liaison between the city and local youth-oriented organizations and sports organizations.

Merritt and other city officials are trying to secure a building that can house the sports and other social events being created by the Youth Council.

Programs being considered include sports and other recreational activities, summer day camps, arts and crafts, drama, and smaller, regional activities that make use of the city's neighborhood parks, Merritt said.

It is hoped that some of these future activities will involve not only the young, but the entire family as well, he said.

STATE IN BRIEF

■ Confiscated horses to be auctioned

DALLAS — A Dallas County woman who said she didn't have enough money to feed her starving horses pleaded no contest Wednesday to animal cruelty.

Lula Mae Crawford, 52, must serve two years' probation and do 100 hours of community service. She will help to dispose of euthanized animals.

Crawford was charged after 17 neglected horses were seized in August from a small pen, with no water or food. One horse later died.

The surviving animals were nursed back to heath by Dallas County sheriff's deputies and sold at auction last month.

■ Fire damages Houston high school

HOUSTON — An early Wednesday fire in a copier room at a Houston high school forced cancellation of classes for two days.

Investigators don't believe the overnight fire at Lamar High School was suspicious. An overheated copy machine is the suspected culprit for the blaze, which damaged offices and sent soot and the stench of burned wood, plastic and paper throughout the building.

The strong odor forced school officials to cancel classes Wednesday and Thursday. Lamar is projected to reopen Friday, the Houston Independent School District said.

Student Morgan Whitney said she awoke to the news "and I started crying, because I love Lamar so much. It was really shocking, because I feared the worst."

Other students and teachers said they were delighted about the unexpected holiday.

■ Fort Hood soldier killed

WACO — A soldier has died after he was apparently shot during a live-fire training accident Tuesday night.

The Fort Hood soldier was taking part in an infantry exercise when he received an apparent gunshot wound, according to a faxed statement from the Central Texas army post. The soldier was flown to Darnall Army Community Hospital and pronounced dead around 10 p.m., the statement said.

The soldier is not being identified publicly until his family is notified.

The shooting is being investigated.

It's the third death of a Fort Hood soldier in the past month. On Oct. 7, a soldier died while he was training in a gym on post. On Sept. 25, one soldier died during a training hike.

■ Teen gets probation for lewdness

FORT WORTH — A teen-ager who pleaded guilty to public lewdness over videotaped incidents on a school bus has received probation.

A Tarrant County Juvenile Court judge on Wednesday ordered six months probation for the boy, who just turned 15, in the delinquent conduct case.

Another Fort Worth boy, age 13, also pleaded guilty last week to the same charge will be sentenced later because his lawyer was unavailable Wednesday.

Both boys were convicted earlier this month of delinquent conduct/public lewdness, a Class A misdemeanor.

Two other boys accused in the Sept. 15 melee have been granted continuances.

A security camera recorded the boys' actions during an after-school bus ride. The woman driving the bus was fired.

Authorities say the tape shows images of children hitting each other and the four boys groping girls' breasts and making sexual gestures. The atmosphere on the bus appeared to be one of disorder and chaos, police said.

■ Victim of train accident identified

SARITA — One of six men run over by a train while apparently sleeping on the tracks has been identified.

The man was identified as Amador Pasfillas Sosa, 28, of Tepechitlan, Zacatecas in Mexico, Kenedy County Sheriff Rafael Cuellar Jr. said Wednesday.

Sosa's identification card had been found among the remains and debris at the site of the accident.

Cuellar said no details were available about Sosa's journey from Zacatecas to Norias, Texas, where he and five others were run over by a Union Pacific train Monday morning.

Officials have said Sosa and his traveling companions were probably sleeping on the tracks because they believed a myth that the rails would keep snakes at bay.

Deputies arrested, charged with theft of inmate trust fund

By Chris Newton
Associated Press

LUBBOCK — Two deputies who allegedly bilked the Lubbock County inmate trust fund of almost $19,000 were arrested and charged Wednesday with felony theft, according to county officials.

Former deputies Melissa Jameson, 30, and Terri Bird, 38, oversaw the fund, which holds money donated by family members that prisoners can use to buy envelopes, stamps and snacks from the jail commissary. The deputies were assigned a $2,500 bond and were not expected to be entered into the jail population.

Sheriff Earl Bartley said he considered the arrests a tragedy.

"It is hard because deep in your heart you don't want to have to do this," Bartley said, shortly after the suspects surrendered to authorities. "I don't hate the ladies, they were good employees and were well thought of."

The two deputies resigned from the sheriff's office last Thursday.

County officials noticed missing money from the inmate trust fund earlier this month during a superficial audit ordered by Bartley, who became sheriff this year.

Captain Billy Timms, who conducted the investigation, said personal checks the deputies had put into the deposit rolls drew suspicion.

"We feel what was happening was they were taking money with the intent of replacing," Timms said. "It probably just got out of hand and they weren't able to replace what they took."

The jail deposits all of the inmate funds into one account while internally keeping track of how much each inmate has. The county auditor determined that $18,682 was stolen from the inmate trust fund starting in January.

Bartley said both deputies have signed confession statements, but an attorney representing Ms. Bird said he expects to enter a plea of not guilty for his client.

"We haven't seen any offense reports yet," said Lubbock attorney Rob Hobson. "But that is what I expect at this time."

Ms. Jameson's attorney could not be reached for comment.

Bartley said the women didn't seem to understand the gravity of what they had done.

"They just wanted to pay it back," Bartley said. "Just like someone who is caught speeding and wants to drive slower..."

According to a department report, the women had also lost track of how much money they had taken, believing the amount to be about $5,000.

If convicted of third-degree felony theft, the women could face from two to 10 years in prison and fines up to $10,000.

Judge appeals to Gov. Bush for more funding to go to child welfare system

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush wants to increase funding for the agency that investigates Texas' child abuse cases, his spokeswoman said after a judge argued that the state is failing young victims of violence and neglect.

Bush and state legislators received an unusual petition Wednesday from District Judge Scott McCown calling for more state resources to ease the strain on an overburdened child welfare system.

"If Gov. Bush is reelected I want him to do for Child Protective Services what he did for juvenile justice," said McCown, who has presided over 1,400 cases involving 2,500 children since becoming a judge in 1989.

Using a citizen's grievance procedure outlined in the Texas Constitution, McCown recommended that two cents of every dollar from the state's anticipated multibillion-dollar budget surplus be set aside to help abused and neglected children. With a federal match, that would raise about $200 million, McCown said.

Included in the 42-page study McCown turned over to legislators, the judge said he found that too few reports of child abuse are investigated because of a lack of resources and overworked caseworkers.

"I'm not talking about a problem that we've lived with forever, we're talking about a problem that's gotten steadily worse," McCown said. He said the worst cases get costly attention, but the state should also focus on early intervention.

"Although funding for CPS has increased, he (Bush) agrees with Judge McCown that we need to do more," said Linda Edwards, spokeswoman for Bush.

Bush will consider McCown's proposals and is already working on a plan to increase funding for caseworkers and for foster care services, Ms. Edwards said. The governor, who is seeking reelection against Democrat Garry Mauro, has not decided how much of an increase he will recommend, she said.

Child Protective Services—which is managed by the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services—has a $990 million budget for 1998-99, but will ask that it increase to more than $1 billion for the next two-year cycle, said agency spokeswoman Marla Sheely.

The Legislature has worked to decrease the time it takes get children out of foster care and increased the number of caseworkers, said Rep. Toby Goodman, who heads the House Juvenile Justice and Family Issues Committee.

Goodman, R-Arlington, said while he respects McCown's opinion the state is already addressing problems with Child Protective Services. "I do not want to adopt a policy where we are going to go into people's homes with the assumption that abuse is going on," he said.

McCown found that the average caseload for Texas child abuse investigators was 27, more than twice the average caseload of 12 recommended by Child Welfare League of America.

But Goodman said while those numbers may look high, the real impact depends on the makeup of the caseloads. Many of the reports "are unfounded and take no time to discard," he said.

Comptroller John Sharp also will address child care issues in his next Texas Performance Review, which will published before the Legislature convenes in January, said his campaign spokesman Kelly Fero. Sharp is running for lieutenant governor.

The proposals are still being drafted, but will focus on how Texas deals with young children, particularly from birth to three years old, Fero said.

Additional findings in McCown's report:

- Texas investigated only 60 percent of child abuse and neglect allegations in 1997-98, the lowest rate in eight years.
- Staff per 1,000 children in state custody has declined 24 percent since 1985.
- 1997 survey found one in four Texans witnessed an incident of child abuse or neglect in the past year.
- 1.8 of every 1,000 Texas children were in state custody in 1985. In 1997, 4.3 of every 1,000 children were in state custody.

Investors sue over ownership of Selena's bus

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Two investors who'd hoped to make a profit with Selena's tour bus are suing the father of the slain Tejano singer to get the bus back.

Julio Giraldo and Armando Cardenas Jr. claim that Selena's father Abraham Quintanilla Jr. and the producers of the film "Selena" have wrongfully taken the bus away from them, the Corpus Christi Caller-Times reported Wednesday.

Giraldo, of New York City, and Cardenas, of Nueces County, have sued for the return of the bus and lost income they would have made using the bus for promotions. The case has been set for Oct. 23 in state District Judge Max Bennett's court.

The 1964 Silver Eagle bus was the vehicle in which Selena and her band traveled and was prominently featured in the film "Selena."

Giraldo and Cardenas say they bought the bus from Quintanilla for $12,500 shortly after Selena was killed in March 1995. At the time they hoped to make a profit by promoting it as collector's memorabilia.

In August 1996, the investors agreed to lease the bus to Quintanilla and the makers of "Selena" for use in the movie. Giraldo and Cardenas received $6,100 and agreed the filmmakers could use the bus until Nov. 22, 1996, according to the lawsuit.

The filmmakers then contracted for more than $12,000 in repairs and billed Giraldo and Cardenas, who did not pay.

When November 1996 rolled around, Quintanilla kept the bus and threatened to sell it to pay the repair bill, according to the suit.

'Real' son of Confederate veteran says his father wouldn't talk much about war

By Kevin Tankersley
Waco Tribune-Herald

MOODY — Men like Paul Alexander are becoming more and more scarce. In the Sons of Confederate Veterans organization, Alexander is what's known as a "real son," someone whose father served as a Confederate soldier during the Civil War.

John Newton Alexander, Paul Alexander's father, enlisted in the Confederate Army on March 17, 1863, and served until the end of the war. He then moved to Moody, where Alexander was born Nov. 20, 1915, when John Alexander was 71. Paul Alexander had one sister and 10 half-siblings, who were born to John Alexander's first wife, who died in 1909. John Alexander died in 1931, at age 87.

Alexander said his father didn't didn't talk much of the war, relating only a few tales.

"He wasn't very wordy," said Hazel Potter, Alexander's niece.

Alexander can remember only a couple of tales his father told of the war, one in which he got the tip of his finger shot off, and one where, tired and hungry, he chased a hen off her nest to get at the eggs resting there.

After the war, John Alexander moved to the Moody area, where he lived in his wagon for two years while working. He then bought some land, at 50 cents an acre, and built a log house. He eventually ended up owning about 1,600 acres of land in the area. Paul Alexander's house is on part of that land now.

Alexander remembers the pigeon house his father built, where 742 pigeons called home.

"He used to go get 20 or 25 squabs, dress em and fry the breasts," said Alexander, 82. "He would use the rest to make dumplings."

Alexander said "everything was tight" after the war, and his father always emphasized the importance of saving, whether it be money or lamp fuel.

"Anytime my sister or I asked for money, he always said to try and bring some back," Alexander said.

"When he would come into a room and there were two kerosene lamps burning, he would at once blow one of them out. That was wasteful."

Alexander was born and raised in Moody, and aside from two years in Waco, has been there all his life. He is retired from a farming career in which he grew cotton, corn and wheat.

Alexander and his wife Doris, 80, will celebrate their 62nd wedding anniversary in January.

"They ran off and got married," Potter said.

"We did not run off," Alexander replied, with a smile.

"I'm 90 years old. I can tell it any way I want to," Potter said.

"Oh, he was timid," Doris Alexander said of her husband. "He asked me to go to a party and that was our first date."

"That was the start of 66 years together," Paul Alexander added.

"You know Doris, I think you've got it made," Potter said. "I think it's going to last."

Alexander and his wife had two children: Paula Dickenson, who lives a couple of miles from her parents on Alexander Road; and Mike Alexander, who was killed in a car wreck in 1972. Mike's daughter, Julie Adams, the Alexanders' only grandchild, lives in California.

Alexander is a fairly recent member of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, said Jim Shannon, a past president of the local Felix H. Robertson Camp 129.

"Paul is the second (real son) we have had in this camp," Shannon said. The one other real son died four or five years ago.

"There are very few of them anywhere," he added. The national headquarters of the organization, in Columbia, Tenn., has said there is not an exact count of real sons available.

Shannon said the group is a heritage organization that is nonpolitical, nonpartisan and is open to any man who is a descendent of a Confederate veteran, "regardless of race, creed or color."

"The sole criteria is they must be able to genealogically document they are descended from one who served in the Confederate military."

Shannon said the local camp has about 55 members.

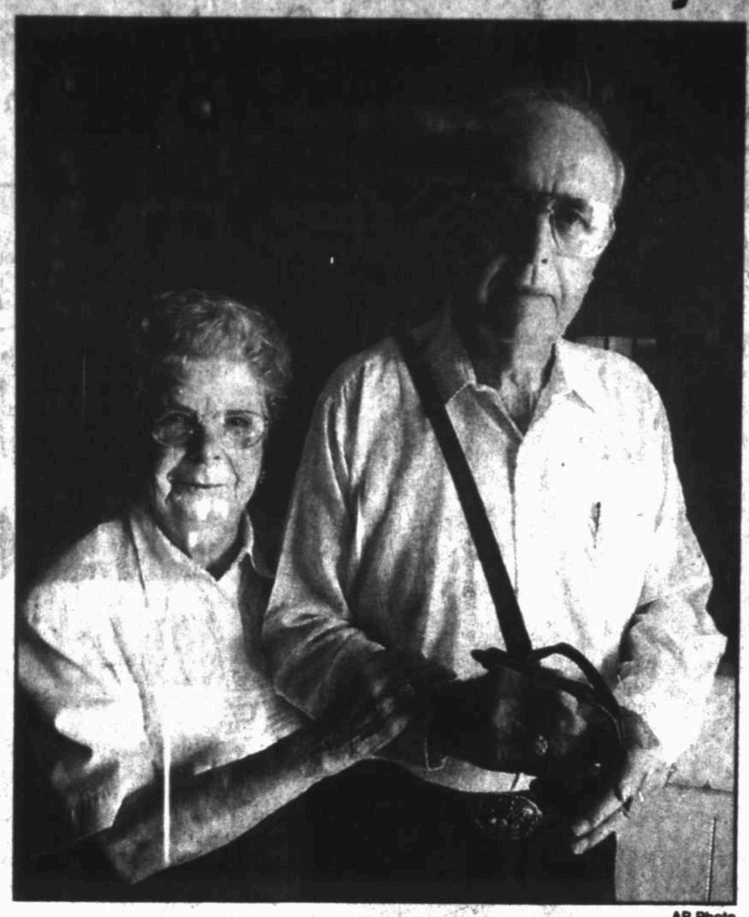

Shannon also pointed out that although the war is usually called the Civil War, "there was nothing civil about it," and his organization always refers to it as the War Between the States, "or more correctly, the War For Southern Independence."

One of the major efforts of the Sons of Confederate Veterans is to locate graves of soldiers and assure that they are properly marked with a government-provided headstone.

"We have people in our camp literally walking through cemeteries," Shannon said.

Alexander's father is buried in Naler Cemetery, which is located west of Moody.

Woman found guilty of not protecting children

ABILENE (AP) — Jurors on Wednesday found a Granbury woman guilty of failing to prevent an ex-boyfriend from raping and killing her daughter and severely beating her son.

It took the jury just under four hours to convict 37-year-old Schwana Patterson on two counts of injury to a child by omission.

Ms. Patterson had adamantly denied the charges against her and showed little emotion during the eight-day trial, but tears welled in her eyes as she listened to the verdict.

As she was led away by sheriff's deputies, she said a few words to her sobbing 19-year-old daughter, Rebecca, who had testified that Schwana Patterson was a loving mother.

"Head up, kid. Shoulders back," Schwana Patterson said as the elevator doors closed.

Defense attorney Donna Guion expressed shock at the jury's decision.

"I'm flabbergasted," she said.

"The jury said what they said and I respect that, but we don't always agree with it," Ms. Guion said.

Hood County District Attorney Richard Hattox left the courthouse without comment, but told reporters later he believes that Ms. Patterson deserves life imprisonment.

"I don't believe there's a mother on earth that would not hear her child scream and cry as (she's) being raped on the bed 15 feet away and fail to respond," he said. "If there is such a mother, we've seen her in the courthouse today."

The sentencing phase was set to begin Thursday. Ms. Patterson faces up to 99 years in prison and a $10,000 fine for each count.

Prosecutors argued she heard and ignored her children's screams as they were abducted on the morning of April 30, 1997. Ms. Patterson says she slept through the incident.

During closing arguments Wednesday morning, Hattox said Ms. Patterson could have saved her children in any of three ways: By stepping in when the attack began, by reporting the attack to police or by telling police the following morning that her ex-boyfriend, Bobby Wayne Woods, had kidnapped the children.

"Parents have duties to protect their children," Hattox told the jury of nine women and three men. "That's the law."

He said later that Ms. Patterson chose instead to defend Woods — at her children's expense.

Woods took 11-year-old Sarah Patterson and 9-year-old Cody Patterson from a bed they shared. Sarah's body was found on the shore of Lake Granbury. She had been raped and her throat slashed. Cody was found wandering near a cemetery after being beaten and left for dead.

Woods is now on death row for the crime.

Ms. Guion warned jurors during closing arguments they'd have to reflect on the case afterward with a clear conscience.

"If you have doubts, now is the time to have those doubts," Ms. Guion said. "She doesn't have a tomorrow. Today is her one and only chance."

The trial was moved to Taylor County because of extensive news coverage.

Cody, now 10, testified against his mother last week via closed-circuit television. Prosecutors also played a videotape in which he told Child Protective Services workers that his mother had acknowledged hearing screams from her children but doing nothing because she feared Woods.

Ms. Patterson's lawyers criticized the boy's credibility as a witness and said the investigation was flawed.

Residents call a downtown old lounge building home

Hearst News Services

SAN ANTONIO — For many people, urban living evokes pictures of cold-water flats in crumbling concrete neighborhoods dotted by skinny, struggling trees or sleek brushed-steel and black and white interiors favored by artist-dilettantes in the early '80s.

The Lounge at 1032 S. St. Mary's St. has nothing of the post-punk-partum blues one associates with similar multipurpose structures. Even from the outside, there's the feel of cozy homeyness coupled with the curious facades.

Mosaic tile covers portions of the front surfaces and a mysterious pair of question marks denotes a door. A window is set at a 45-degree angle. It looks like a house that children's book heroine Pippi Longstocking would live in during her professional years, a little off-kilter and a lot of fun.

Three inhabitants occupy the Lounge in collaborative bliss. The roommates are S.T. Shimi, a local performance artist and dancer; Darryl Ohlenbusch, a building designer and UTSA professor; and Oscar Alvarado, mosaic-tile artist, found-object furniture designer and historical renovation expert.

"When I first moved in and married Oscar, we called it being married . . . with Darryl," Shimi jokes of the relationship between the three. Alvarado and Ohlenbusch were longtime friends who had been slowly renovating the lounge when Shimi entered the pict

The three have developed a working arrangement about the interior design, which reflects each of their sensibilities.

"More than anything, I provide an opinion," said Shimi. On first moving in, Shimi adjusted well to the ongoing renovation, which keeps the Lounge fresh. But, after several months of showering at friends' houses, the little matter of having a place to bathe finally came up.

Alvarado hurriedly set about putting a shower in the space, which had been a tire shop in the late '20s, a cafe in the '40s and a bar in the '60s and '70s. But he hit a snag in the tiling project because he wanted to include a picture of Shimi in the mosaic work. However, the face just wasn't going right.

"He eventually just made a cubist portrait," Shimi laughed. The interior of the shower boasts several images including the figure of a woman that looks much like Shimi, except for her blank square-tile face.

The rest of the structure exists as an homage to the found-object art Alvarado, Shimi and Ohlenbusch adore. Ghostly remnants of the original bar structure appear through the touches added by Alvarado.

A fully tiled kitchen has a range of images over the stove. The eye can pick out objects such as a mermaid and an interlocking swirl that ends in a yin-yang symbol. A small, curved mini-bar near the back of the room is painted with similar iconography, the result of an art project on a few hot afternoons with artist Robert Tatum, a former neighbor.

Ohlenbusch's contributions to the space have the self-conscious air of a scholarly architect exploring artistic tangents. Two of his more recent works, slim chairs made of plywood occupy the center living space next to the collaborative "Shrine to San Antonio."

"I'm very committed to the idea of revitalization of older urban neighborhoods," Ohlenbusch said. "I'm involved with building single-dwelling apartments and am part of the neighborhood associations for King William and the Lavaca District."

HE ADMITS to having more demure tastes than his roommates when left to his own devices, but the "experiment," — the occupants' term for Lounge living — has affected and broadened his perspective.

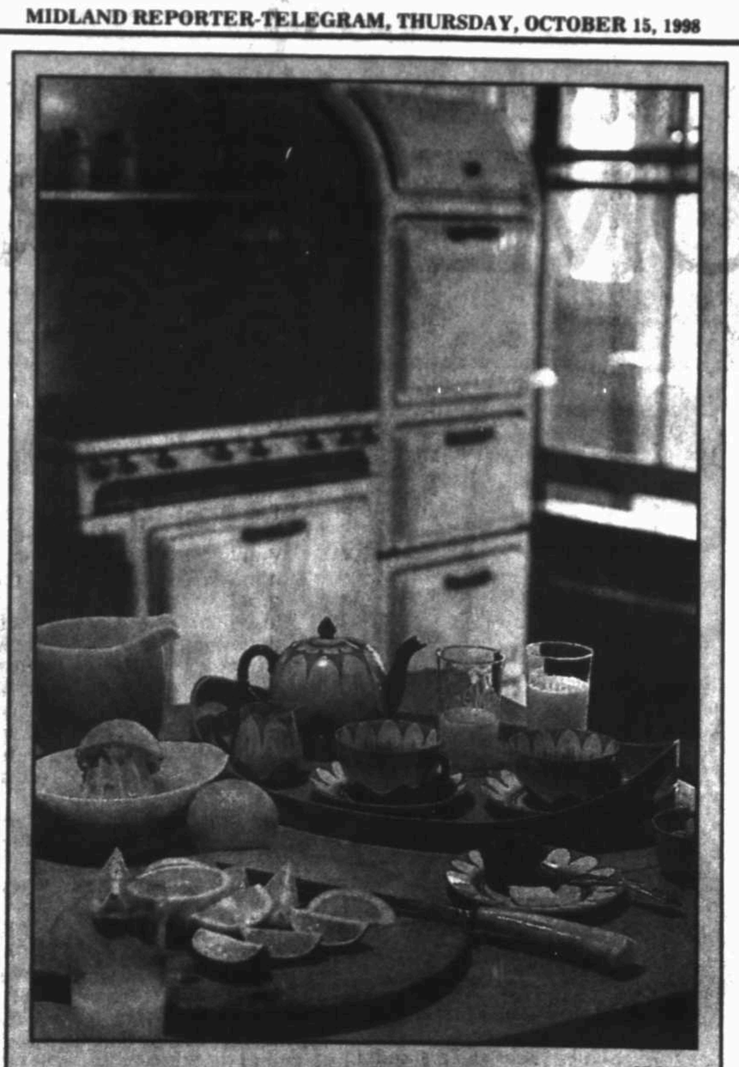

"In terms of the structure, it's about the use of found objects," he said. He could be referring to the decorated '50s car hood that serves as a porch overhang. Or the back yard, which is full of junk-treasures and installation art, a place the roommates call "the Serenghetto."

A dog house covered with mosaic tile stands as a memorial to a beloved pet. Woven into the mosaic is an abstract depiction of the animal.

"I was crying when I drew the portrait," Shimi explained of the rendering completed by Alvarado.

The dog house serves as an example of what makes the Lounge an interesting space to visitors. Instead of being dominated by solely by paintings or singularly by installations, the character of the house exists in strange nooks and open spaces.

Each object — a lamp, a serving bowl, a knickknack — is a loved property of a member of the household.

Wild tulips add variety to garden

Associated Press

Wild tulips sound like a contradiction of terms. After all, tulips are aristocrats of the garden, stately and formal. But among the many species of tulips available, there are many wild ones, the so-called "species" tulips. Species tulips bring charm and informality to the spring garden. Many are small plants that you'll want to admire close up. Plant species tulips in a rock garden, poking up through creeping thyme, or near your terrace. Plan for earlier color from species tulips, because many bloom with early crocuses, a time when color is especially welcome.:

■ For a waterlily out of water, one whose blossoms unfold with the early crocuses, grow waterlily tulip. The creamy yellow petals, brushed on their outside the color rose, sit on stalks 6 inches above the ground. A thin margin of red borders each broad leaf.

■ For a late blooming tulip, try Lady tulip. This one has a slender flower, white inside, with crimson bands from top to bottom on the outside. Flowers are short-lived, but fragrant.

DEAR ABBY

Carelessness with cell phone causes death of beloved boss

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: On Sept. 8, one of the dearest men I have ever known was killed in a tragic accident. A woman trying to pick up her ringing cell phone crossed the median of the interstate and hit him head-on.

Van Buren

Not a day has passed that I haven't thought of the joy this man brought to my life, or how quickly that joy turned to sadness. He was not my husband, my father or even a family member. He was my boss.

Stephen T. McGill was a brilliant attorney who always tried to create a win-win situation for everyone. I can't begin to tell you how impossible he is to replace. He treated me with respect, and his praise gave me a newfound confidence in myself. His kindness, compassion and generosity taught me what it really means to have class. He never gave me orders or treated me as a subordinate. He referred to me as his "partner" and we worked side-by-side for two wonderful years.

If something is to be gained from the loss of this great man, I hope two lessons will be learned. First, treating others with respect is the only way to be respected by others. Second, everything we do has the potential to affect those around us. If our behavior isn't governed by the effect it has on those around us, "sorry" may not be enough to repair the damage. We are short one hero in Nebraska. — CAROL RUSHING, OMAHA

DEAR CAROL: You have written a heartfelt eulogy for a most remarkable man. Indeed, there are lessons to be learned from his sterling example. I have another thought: Perhaps it's time to amend the traffic laws to require drivers to pull over if they're going to use a cell phone.

DEAR ABBY: I must respond to "Want My Privacy in Phoenix," the woman who didn't want her picture taken at family gatherings. My sister was one of those who hated having her picture taken. She said she didn't photograph well. She died suddenly in a car accident nearly 11 years ago. In the scramble to put together a memorial service, the only recent picture of her we could find was a 2-year-old Polaroid. Now, all these years later, all I have of my sister is a scant handful of photos, most of them taken before she turned 20.

I am the photo historian in my family. I also teach people how to preserve their photos in safe scrapbooks. Many of my customers also hate to have their pictures taken. I used to feel the same way. I am a plus-size woman who doesn't look in a lot of mirrors. When I saw an occasional photo of myself, it was always a shock. Did I really look like that? I guess I figured if no one took the pictures, I would "look" better.

One day I realized that I may see myself only occasionally, but my family and friends see me looking like this every day, and they love me anyway. I now make sure that at least one photo is taken of me at every family gathering.

"Want My Privacy" may have more of a vanity problem than a privacy issue. I hope she will stop depriving her family and friends the privilege of remembering her in a realistic way after she is gone. All I have left of my sister are memories. — PHOTOBUG FROM CONNECTICUT

DEAR PHOTOBUG: I hope "Want My Privacy in Phoenix" sees your letter. Photos of friends and family are precious. They can provide hours of pleasure, as well as moments of quiet reflection. Put your ego aside, step in front of the camera, and keep your pictures current. If nothing else, an annual informal family portrait will be a valuable pictorial history.

Help at Home

Museum shops offer touch of class

By Anu Manchikanti
Scripps Howard News Service

You've finally found a place of your own, a great house or apartment to mold into a home. One problem, though.

You're broke. You just took out a loan that you'll be paying for 20 years or chose an apartment that was almost out of your price range. After the bills, there's not much left for decorating.

When the excitement of a new place is met with the sound of an empty piggy bank, museums offer a few decorating options which will leave your home looking classy. Here's a few options that the Smithsonian Museums in Washington, D.C., offer. All these items can be purchased for less than $100.

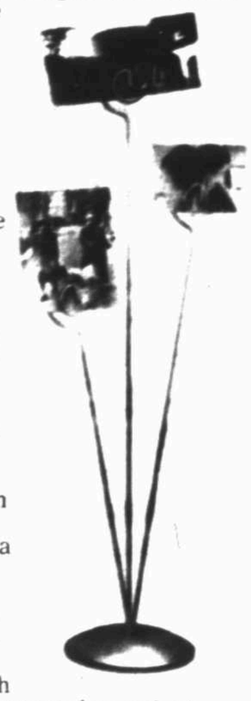

How does your garden grow? With this large pot from the National Museum of Natural History, you can bring a little life into your home. The intricate designs make the pot suitable for any room in a home. ($22.50)

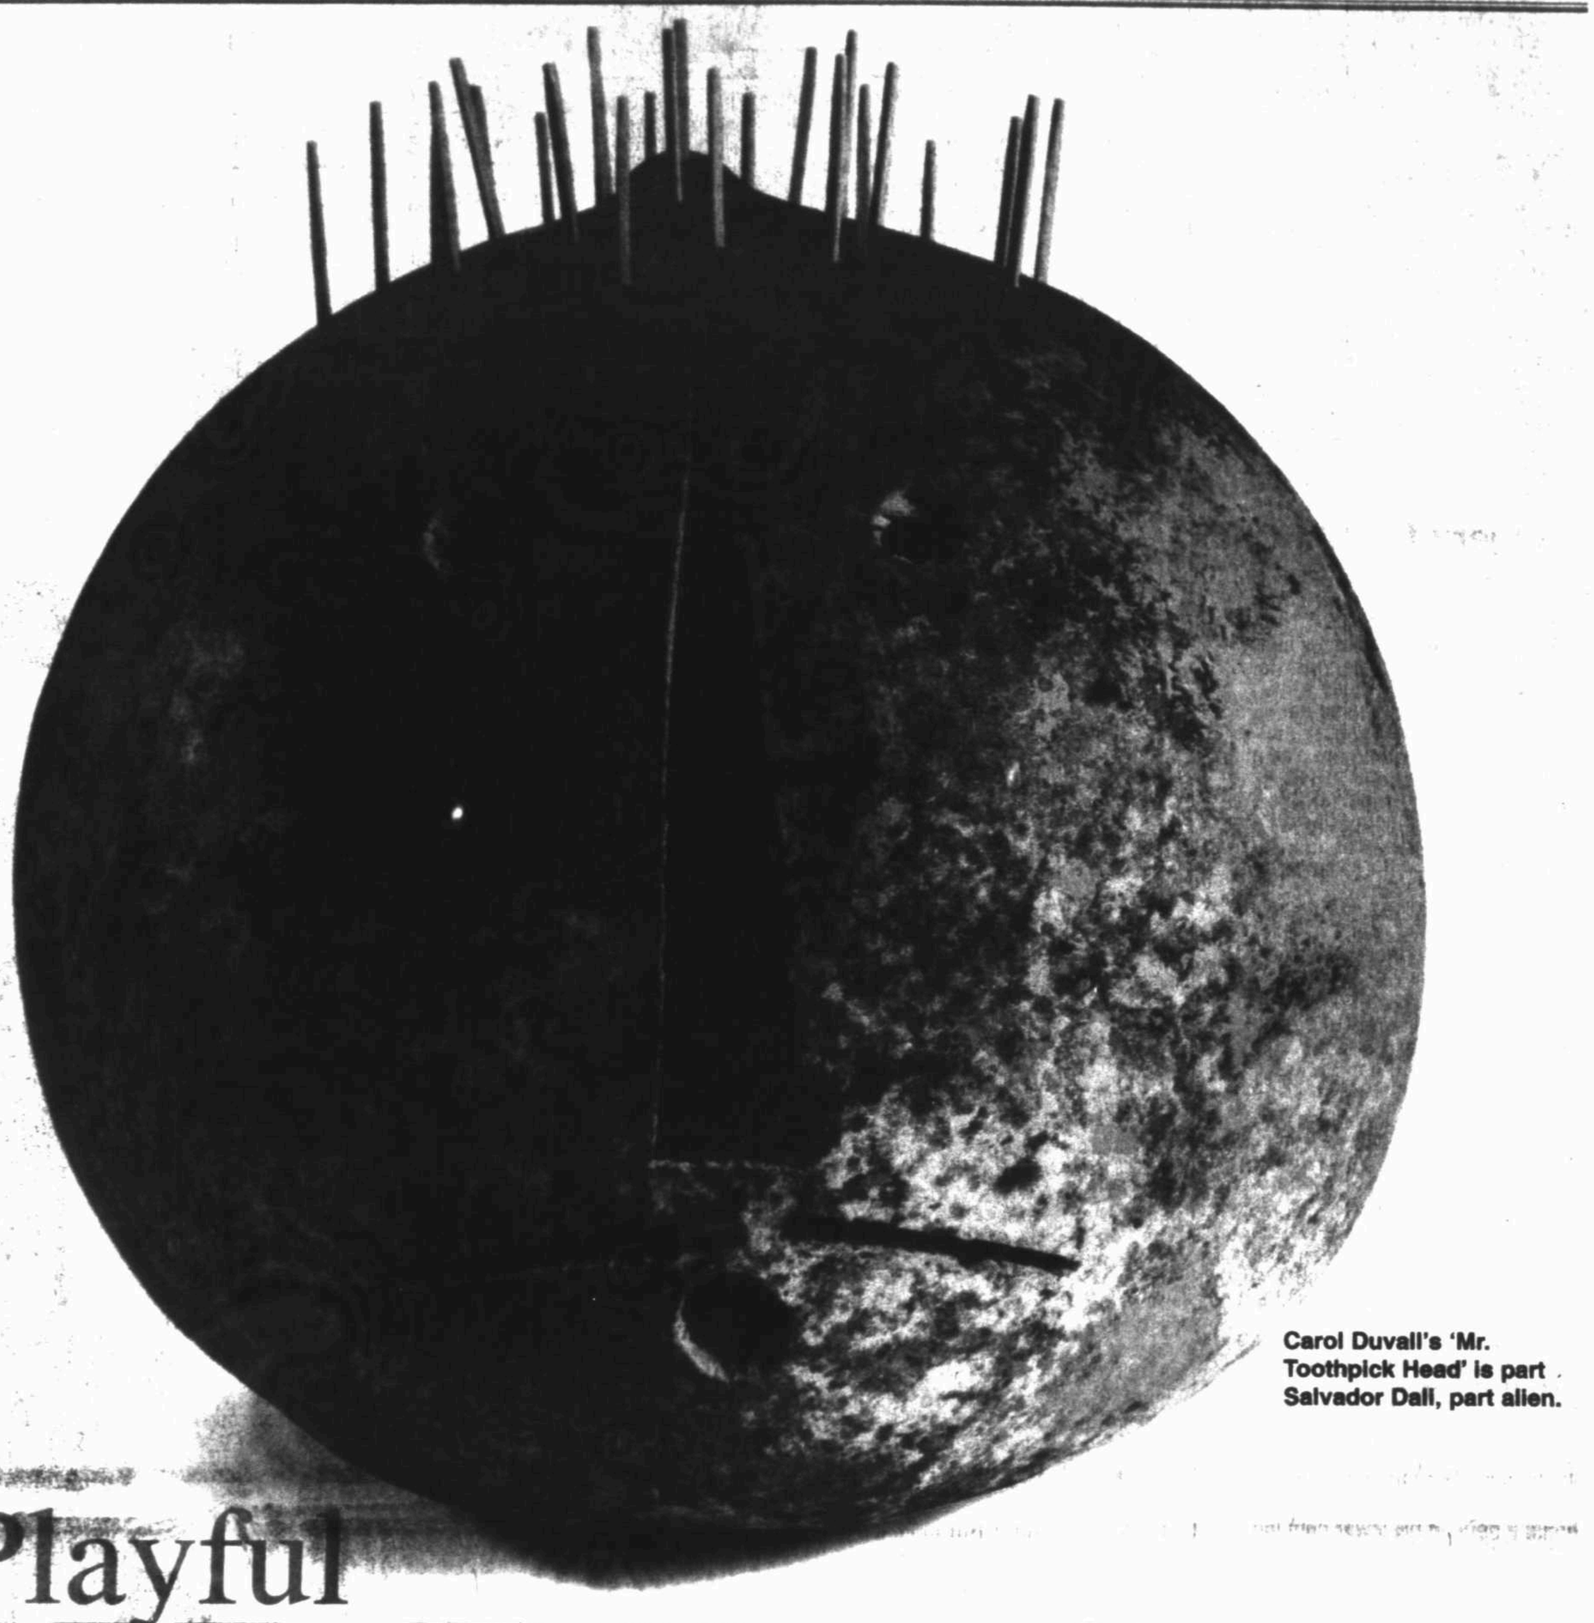

Beautiful Japanese ceramics are suitable for display in a bookcase or on a coffee table. ($10-15, Arthur M. Sackler Gallery)

A small iron teapot might not be ready for high tea with the Queen, but it also adds a nice flavor to your favorite room. ($12, Museum of Natural History)

There's nothing that will make a new house feel like a home more than a few photographs, and this three-way borderless frame at the Hirshborn Museum and Sculpture Garden is a unique way of displaying them. Place three of your favorite snapshots in the small spirals for a modern look. ($20)

What's a home without a little art? Though you might expect the work of Monet or Renoir to come at no small price, items at the National Gallery of Art defeat this stereotype. Find a calendar featuring your artist's favorite work, and use the individual pages as the months pass as decorations themselves. ($10-$15). A box of notecards can be used to create a small display of art on a wall, like those by Mark Rothko ($7-13). Postcards can give the same effect (45 cents). Nice museum prints, suitable for framing, can be inexpensively purchased. These collections feature the museum's best, from Dali's "Last Supper" to "The Scream" by Edward Munch, and include 19th and 20th century European and American art, as well as more classical styles. ($1.50). The Freer Gallery of Art also offers a few inexpensive wall decorating options.

Carol Duvall's 'Mr. Toothpick Head' is part Salvador Dali, part alien.

Playful PUMPKINS &GOURDS

If your autumn decor calls for a little more sophisticated pumpkin than a traditional jack o-lantern, pumpkin carver Amy Campbell is ready to take you to the next level of creativity.

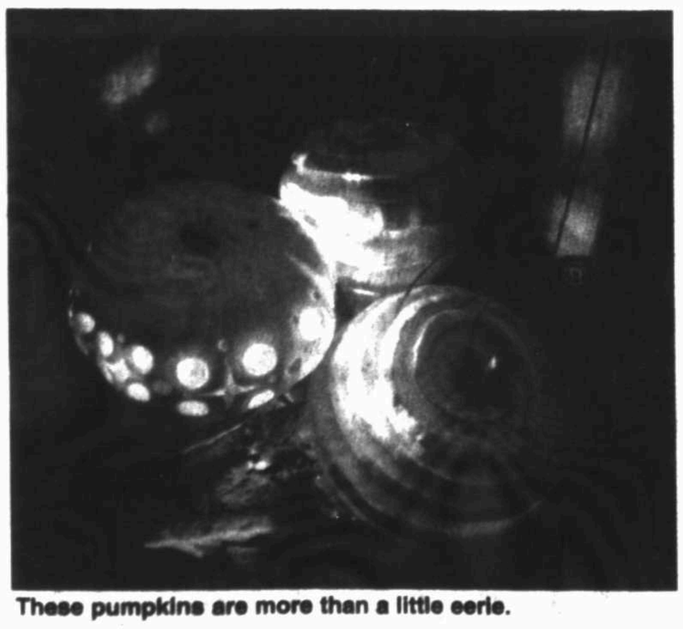

Campbell created her grownup glowing orbs with just a few tools: A sharp melon scooper, a skinny paring knife and a clay tool called a "loop" (you can find one at an art-supply store). Her canvas: white pumpkins. The trick to this treat is to let enough light out of the pumpkin to ward off evil spirits without blinding innocent passersby. To create the subtle glow, Campbell punched out round holes and other shapes with the end of her paring knife and scooped and looped out spirals that don't cut all the way through the pumpkin's skin. She made a hole in the bottom of the pumpkin for removing pulp and for the candle. The effect is translucent and beautiful.

Another fun look for fall is to decorate dried basketball gourds (thick-shelled cousins to the pumpkin). Traditional pumpkin-carving tools won't work on gourds. Instead, you can use everything from drills and power tools to leather paint and glue guns.

To dry a gourd, store it in a dark, dry place. Don't be alarmed if it begins to mold. Once it's dried, the mold can be cleaned off with a three-fourths water, one-fourth bleach solution. You'll know your gourd is ready to decorate when it becomes very light and you can hear the seeds rattling inside.

To start, pencil a design on the face of the gourd, drill an outline and carve out the openings with a Dremel or other drilling tool. You can also carve a hole in the back of the gourd so a candle can light it from inside.

If small children are helping, consider using a bottle of glue to make eyes, a nose and a scary smile using lug nuts, bolts, and steel wool. That way, no carving is necessary.

These pumpkins are more than a little eerie.

OTHER IDEAS:

- Place the gourd in the center of a an artificial fall wreath and top it off with fruit and leaves. This makes a perfect centerpiece of front-porch decoration.
- Try spray-painting a gourd with orange spray paint. Add yellow lines for dimension. Then glue preserved fall leaves purchased from a floral shop all over the gourd. Make several in a variety of sizes and line them up on the front porch or as a centerpiece.

A PUMPKIN PRIMER

Michele MacDonald
HGTV

If you knew that pumpkins are part of the Cucurbitaceae family, (along with gourds, cucumbers, squash, watermelon and cantaloupe) then you'll have no trouble answering these questions:

1. Pumpkins were part of the Plymouth Pilgrims' first harvest festival. When was this first Thanksgiving held?
2. Name the top two pumpkin-producing states.
3. Pumpkin seeds are rich in what nutrients?
4. True or false? Pumpkins and squash bear both male and female flowers and are self-pollinating.
5. U.S. farmers grow how many pumpkins each year?
6. How many tons of pressed pumpkin are canned in the U.S. annually?
7. True or false? Squash and pumpkins originated in the Americas?
8. Giant pumpkins are the largest of the plant kingdom's fruits. What is the world record weight?
9. How do you cook pumpkin seeds?
10. Pumpkins were an important food staple until after which war?

ANSWERS

1. October, 1621.
2. Illinois is No. 1 (6,400 acres), California is No. 2 (4,088 acres).
3. Protein, B vitamins and iron.
4. False. They depend on bees for pollination.
5. 100 million.
6. 145,000 tons.
7. True. The early people of the Americas grew pumpkins and squash to eat the seeds, discarding the meat.
8. The world record weight is 1,061 pounds. The first to break the record was Dills Atlantic Giant in 1996.
9. We like them baked. Spread lightly salted seeds on a cooking sheet and bake for 20 minutes in a 375-degree oven.
10. World War II.

Stanton faces 3-2A test in Seagraves

By Oscar LeRoy
Sports Writer

In just the second week of district play, there could be some games which could decide whether or not a team is a playoff contender.

In District 3-2A, there could be a game which could decide the district championship when the No. 1 ranked Stanton Buffaloes (6-0 overall, 1-0 in district) travel to face the Seagraves Eagles (5-1, 1-0) at 7:30 p.m. Friday. This should be a mammoth matchup in one of the smaller classifications.

Both teams come into the contest with convincing district opening victories — Stanton, a 40-6 winner over Plains, while Seagraves blanked Coahoma, 40-0. Stanton coach Mark Cotton, one who usually gives plenty of respect to the opposition, is calling this game, "our biggest challenge of the year."

"This is by far the best football team we'll face this year," Cotton said.

The Eagles possess one of the best Class 2A running backs in Brandon Luckey, who ran for 1,094 yards on 137 carries in 1997. What concerns Cotton the most about the Eagles is their defense.

■ 3A, 2A Area Teams

"We haven't played anyone close to their quickness and aggressiveness," Cotton said of Seagraves. "They are so good defensively that they've given up less points than we have."

The points allowed by each team is close as the Buffs have only given up 42 points, while the Eagles have been even stingier, limiting teams to just 38 points.

The main difference may lie in the offense where the Buffs appear to be more potent, scoring an average of 43.2 points per game, while Seagraves is putting up an average of 27.2 points per contest. Other than points, both like to run the ball and both teams possess running quarterbacks.

"We have to be real patient on offense. And on defense, we have to try to control Luckey," Cotton said. "But it just may come down to who makes the fewest mistakes."

Despite being the defending champions, don't look for the Buffs to be overconfident going to the home of a perennial playoff and district championship team.

"They're not going to be overconfident against this bunch," Cotton said about his Buffs. "Seagraves has got a lot of weapons. Against Coahoma, they returned two interceptions for a touchdown and they also returned

Surgery for Chi Chi

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Chi Chi Rodriguez, one of the most popular regulars on the Senior PGA Tour, underwent a successful angioplasty operation after suffering chest pains, his agent said Wednesday.

Rodriguez, 62, had what he thought was severe indigestion Tuesday while preparing to play in the Raley's Gold Rush Classic senior tournament, which begins Friday at Serrano Country Club in nearby El Dorado Hills.

He went to a doctor, who found a partially blocked artery, said a statement by Eddie Elias Enterprises Inc. of Akron, Ohio.

"The doctors performed a successful angioplasty procedure and Chi Chi is resting comfortably and doing well" at a Sacramento hospital, said the statement.

Vikes' QB to miss

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — Don't expect to see Brad Johnson this month.

The Minnesota Vikings won't get their starting quarterback back until the Nov. 1 trip to Tampa Bay at the earliest, coach Dennis Green said Wednesday. Johnson is scheduled for X-rays on his broken right leg this week.

"We expect to see that it's where it should be as far as the healing process," Green said. "Then, that's when the rehabilitation starts."

Johnson, who has been getting around without his protective walking boot for more than a week, broke a bone in his lower right leg early in the fourth quarter of the Week 2 victory at St. Louis.

The Vikings (5-0) originally hoped he might be ready in time for this weekend's game against the Washington Redskins, but Green said even the Oct. 25 game at Detroit would be too soon for Johnson's return.

"That's only 10 days away. I would say no," Green said. "I think it's going to have to be after that."

Playing without their No. 1 quarterback hasn't been a problem for the Vikings, though. Randall Cunningham is the NFL's top-rated passer, with 10 TDs and no interceptions.

Houston NFL bid

HOUSTON — A dispute is brewing between competing Houston groups trying to lure a new NFL team and the 2012 Olympics because both would hope to use the same stadium now under consideration.

Steve Patterson, the executive vice president of Houston NFL Holdings, the company trying to bring the football league back to Houston, said the insistence of the local Olympics group to use the stadium proposed as replacement for the Astrodome could prompt the NFL to veto Houston's bid for an expansion NFL franchise.

"If anybody is saying this plan put forward does not inconvenience the potential NFL team, they're misrepresenting what the facts are," Patterson told Houston television station KRIV on Tuesday night.

"In order to get this facility up to 70,000 seats, the NFL team would have to be out of the building and its office for a year and a half and we'd have to be out of the playing conditions of the facility for virtually half the season, which would eliminate the ability to play the 2012 season.

"I talked to the NFL today and they were very clear in saying they're not going to grant a franchise to a city that doesn't have a home field during some future year."

Houston businessman George DeMontrond, who is heading an effort to attract the 2012 Olympics, denied the possibility of a conflict and said it was being addressed, although renovations in the design could cost from $5 million to $7 million to accommodate other seating demands and the inclusion of a running track.

"That's still under the design parameters right now," DeMontrond said. "The construction people are working on that. We should not have a problem being able to play football in that stadium after the Olympics in 2012."

Harris County Judge Robert Eckels cautioned it was much too early to characterize a set of plans as placing the NFL bid in jeopardy but expressed irritation at the NFL's reported stance.

Pads finish Braves off with 5-0 win

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

ATLANTA — Next stop on this surprising trip for Tony Gwynn and the San Diego Padres — Yankee Stadium.

The underdog Padres chalked up another 100-win victim Wednesday, reaching the World Series for the first time since 1984 when MVP Sterling Hitchcock beat the Atlanta Braves 5-0 in Game 6 of the NL championship series.

"Not many people gave us a chance against Houston. Not many people gave us a chance against Atlanta," Gwynn said. "But here we are."

"It's been a long wait," he said. "We're going to be confident. I don't know if anybody else around the country will be confident in us."

The Braves had won two straight games, fueling speculation they might become the first team in baseball history to overcome an 0-3 deficit in the postseason.

But the Padres wrecked that plan, winning the series 4-2 with a five-run sixth inning off Tom Glavine. October hero Jim Leyritz broke a scoreless tie with an RBI grounder.

Now, it's on to New York for Game 1 Saturday night against the team that set an AL record with 114 victories. Kevin Brown will start for San Diego against ALCS MVP David Wells.

"For me it's a big thrill. I've never been to Yankee Stadium," Gwynn said.

At 38, Gwynn is the last remaining member from the Padres' only other trip to the Series, a five-game wipeout by Detroit. The eight-time batting champion contributed two hits in the clincher against Atlanta.

For the Braves, the loss meant the end to yet another disappointing year. Despite having reached the postseason a record seven straight times, they have just one World Series championship to show for it. And with 106 victories, they are the winningest team to fail to reach the Series.

"This team is good. We don't need to re-evaluate much," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "If you don't get hot in these things, you're just not going to win them. We don't have anything to be ashamed about."

Hitchcock, forced to move up a day in the rotation because of Kevin Brown's relief appearance in Game 5, came through again. Just 9-7 in the regular season and with a history of pitching poorly on three days' rest, he improved to 3-0 with a 1.13 ERA in postseason wins over Houston's Randy Johnson and Atlanta's Greg Maddux and Glavine.

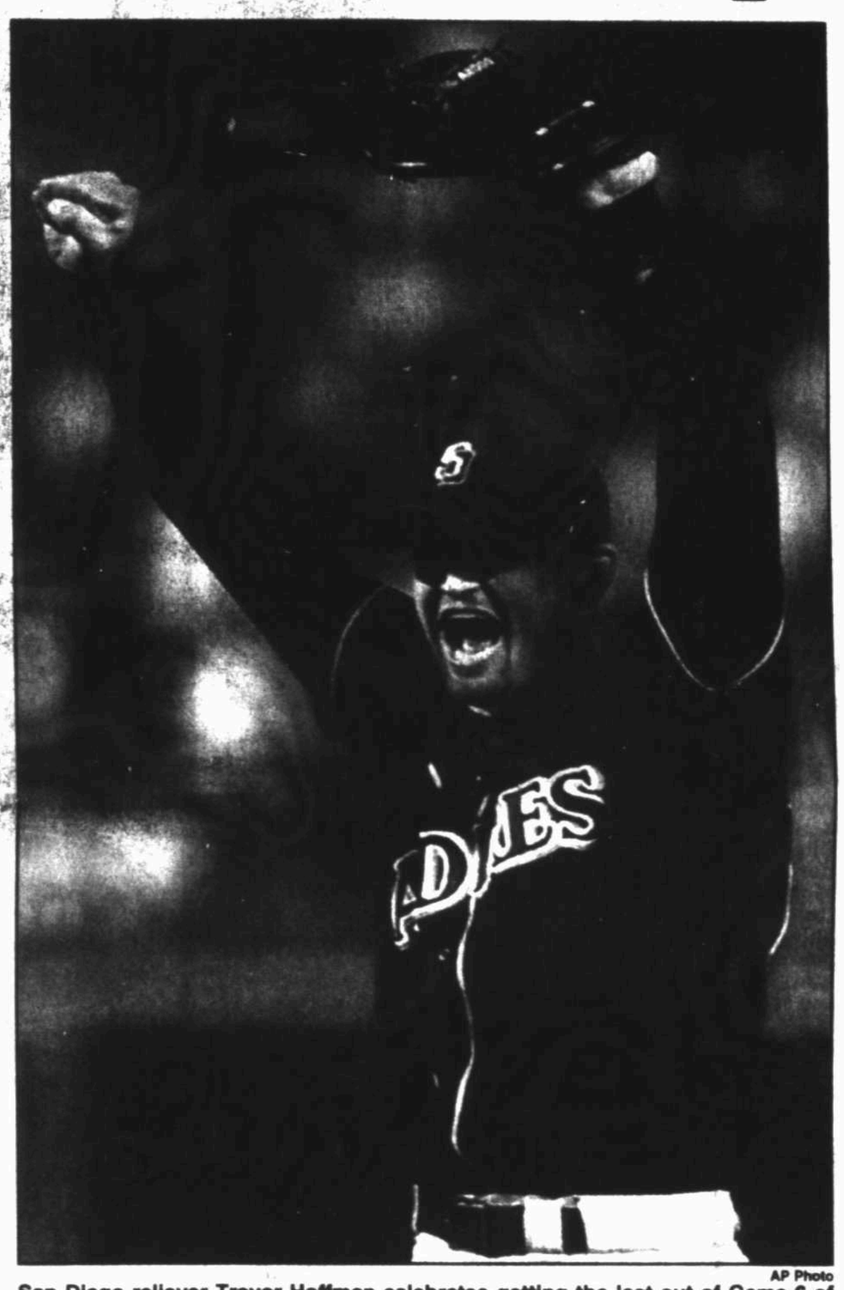

"Whether I was going to New York, whether I was going to Tokyo, it doesn't matter," said Hitchcock, a former Yankees pitcher. "It's going to be the time of my life."

Hitchcock allowed only two hits in five innings and struck out eight. Leading 5-0, he left after a pair of leadoff walks starting the sixth and then Brian Boehringer — also formerly of the Yankees — relieved and got three quick outs.

With the game scoreless, Glavine and the Braves ruined themselves in the sixth.

The inning began innocently enough when Gwynn grounded out. Greg Vaughn, back in the starting lineup for the first time since leaving the opener because of a strained left quadriceps, singled and ran to third when Ken Caminiti grounded a broken-bat single through the vacant hole on the right

Garden City, Rankin hope to get benefit from off week

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

Most of the teams in District 7-A have the unusual luxury of entering this week's district openers coming off an open week, and when Rankin hosts Garden City Friday at 8 p.m., both schools are hoping the benefits of a bye show up on the field.

■ 4A, 1A Area Teams

The Red Devils and Bearkats enter the game with identical 2-3 first half records and lingering questions of where they'll fit into the district race. No team from the district looks like a juggernaut, but nobody looks like a doormat either. That makes the Garden City-Rankin matchup as legitimate as any other in 7-A this year.

Rankin certainly had to be glad to see a bye coming two weeks ago if for no other reason it gave the Red Devils a chance to heal up a few of their injured players. They entered the off week with some momentum, having beaten Christoval 23-14.

"The first five games I felt we got better but we still weren't as good as we could have been," said first-year Rankin coach Mickey Owens.

A major reason the Red Devils might not have performed up to their potential in the first half of the season was because it seemed like they only had half of their roster. The most devastating injury occurred to fullback and returning starter Ricky Guadarrama, who tore the ACL in his left knee in a preseason scrimmage and will miss the entire season.

For every bit of good news the Rankin offense has received on the injury front, it has always been offset by bad news. While linemen Rick Stewart and Kevin

Red Raiders get chance to earn more respect

The Texas Tech Red Raiders needed to beat Oklahoma State to get enough national respect to be voted finally into the Top 25. After couple of weeks of just missing getting ranked, the Red Raiders beat OSU, 24-17, Saturday. As a result, they're ranked No. 22.

Peden

Now they can take another step up the respect ladder with a win Saturday in Boulder against No. 19 Colorado.

The last year and a half has been a strange ride for the Buffaloes. They were highly-regarded entering last season, but they collapsed to a 5-6 record. They entered this season unranked, but jumped into the rankings at No. 16 after beating then-No. 15 Colorado State in the season-opener. Colorado moved up slowly, reaching No. 14 with a 5-0 record before falling to Kansas State last week.

Tech and Colorado have some similarities in their schedules. Colorado won close games over Fresno State and Baylor at its home field; and Tech also narrowly escaped upsets against both those teams in Lubbock. Most of their other wins are against unimpressive opponents; Tech and Colorado are going in opposite directions in the polls mainly because Colorado's most impressive victory came in the first week and Tech's best win was last week.

This game should be close — so close that Colorado's home field will provide the only difference.

It'll probably be the best game in the Big 12 this week. There's only three games in the nation that feature two Top 25 teams: Tech-Colorado; No. 11 Oregon at No. 2 UCLA; and No. 7 Virginia at No. 25 Georgia Tech.

Texas A&M must guard against a letdown this week after the Aggies' stunning upset over Nebraska. The Aggies jumped up to No. 10, but they must play at Baylor this week. They haven't lost in Waco since 1986, but the Bears have shown no fear this year, beating then-No. 20 North Carolina State in Waco and coming so close to winning at Tech and at Colorado.

The Oklahoma State Cowboys should be glad when October is over. They've already lost to Tech and Nebraska; they've got No. 4 Kansas State this week; and they've still got A&M, not to mention the in-state rivals Oklahoma Sooners. They'll have to settle for 1-for-5 for October.

The league's cellar dwellers play at ranked teams this week: Oklahoma at No. 20 Missouri and Kansas at No. 8 Nebraska. Expect Kansas to pay for A&M's victory.

WAC: It's the Battle of the Metroplex, as Texas Christian (4-1) at Southern Methodist (1-5) square off for bragging rights. TCU is off to an amazing start (4-1) under new coach Dennis Franchione, while SMU (1-5) may never get over the Death Penalty — they're nearly comatose now. TCU should go to 3-0 in WAC play with a win.

San Jose State is leading the WAC's Pacific Division at 2-0. The Spartans put that on the line at Texas-El Paso (1-4), which is coming off its first win this season at New Mexico. This is a toss up. San Jose's WAC wins are against Rice and New Mexico, both of which are struggling.

The other Texas WAC game is Tulsa (2-3) at Rice (1-4). Both are capable of losing any game. Rice showed signs of life last season but its one win this season came against SMU.

City of San Diego celebrates as Padres clinch National League Championship

By Michelle Williams
Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO — Padresmonium!

Businessmen in suits hugged waitresses. College students spilled out of classrooms and high-fived each other in hallways. Commuters honked horns and flashed their lights on the freeway.

For the second time in the franchise's 30-year history, the San Diego Padres are going to the World Series and the city is bursting with pride.

"I've been waiting since 1984 for this," said Richard Peffley, 52, who wore a 1970s Padres batting helmet and waved a World Series towel as fans entered the stadium parking lot for an impromptu party. "There's nothing like this. I'm stoked!"

The Padres beat the Atlanta Braves 5-0 Wednesday to win the National League championship series 4-2.

At Pacific Beach, people flooded out of bars and into the streets. Revelers played the hoods of slow-moving cars and sidewalk trash cans like drums as others formed a conga line, dancing and hugging, stopping traffic for a couple of hours along the beach community's main drag.

Later, an accordion and trombone joined the band and people on rollerblades shook pom poms as they glided past to the boardwalk.

"Wally Joyner and company packed their bags for five days because they knew they were going from Atlanta to New York," said Greg Wiest, 36, who was part of an enthusiastic crowd at Garnet Bar 'n' Grill.

The lifelong San Diegan was lured into the tiny tavern by the toll of "Hell's Bells." The AC-DC rock song is a favorite of Padres closer Trevor Hoffman.

Jim Brewer, 23, said he and his friends probably put $200 in the jukebox during the game.

"They've been stuffing quarters in that thing all day," he said.

Downtown in the historic Gaslamp District, traffic crawled along the crowded bar-line streets, honking horns, waving white rally flags and Padres hats out of their windows, and yelling at the tops of their lungs.

"We're going all the way!" exclaimed Tony Belasto, 34. "This is our year!"

The Padres Pub in Mission Valley near the stadium was filled with business people dressed in suits and ties, taking long lunches to watch the game. Cell phones were at the ready in case they had to do a little work, said Paul Hastings, who took a break from his real estate office to see the Padres win.

"At the beginning of the season, I said it would be the Padres and the Yankees in the series," he said. "If I can get tickets, I'm going to New York."

At the stadium, nearly 100 people jammed the Padres Store to buy championship T-shirts, hats and pins. Five fans who wanted to be first in line watched the last inning of the game on television at the store, clerk Dave Smith said.

It was the second busy day at the stadium. Despite two straight losses at home and Atlanta having the momentum going into Wednesday's game, San Diegans bought up World Series tickets in just hours Tuesday. Authorities expected 4,000 people to show up but it was more than 10,000.

Peffley, who took the day off from work to watch Wednesday's game, was so confident the Padres would make the World Series that he submitted a vacation request last April.

Atlanta Braves: Team of the '90s going home empty-handed again

By Paul Newberry
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — The team of the '90s is running out of time. There's only year left for the Atlanta Braves to win a second World Series title.

Returning to Turner Field with grandiose plans of becoming the first team in major league history to rebound from an 0-3 deficit, the Braves instead gave their tomahawk-chopping fans another winter to ponder what went wrong.

Those 106 regular-season wins are merely the most ever for a team that didn't make the World Series. No one will remember that the Braves became the first team to force Game 6 after losing the first three games, actually coaxing their lackadaisical fans into a sell-out Wednesday.

San Diego is going to the World Series after a two-hit, 5-0 victory clinched the NL championship series four games to two.

"I guess we could take the easy way out and never get to this point," John Smoltz said. "It stinks having to sit here and answer these questions again. But that's reality. I'm sure there's hundreds of players who would like to be sitting here in this position."

Danny Bautista was probably an exception.

He stood uncomfortably in front of his locker, trying to explain what happened in the sixth inning when Sterling Hitchcock's soft liner ricocheted off his glove for an error, allowing three unearned runs that turned the game into a blowout.

"As soon as he hit it, I thought I had it," Bautista said. "But I lost it when it went into the lights. I did my best."

Manager Bobby Cox doesn't think another World Series win is required for the '90s Braves to earn proper recognition.

"We love to win in April, May, June," he said. "I don't know if it validates anything. Some of other good teams got knocked out even earlier than we and Cleveland."

At least the Braves used to wait until the Series before losing. The last two seasons, they haven't been able to get that far — both times eliminated at home in Game 6 of the NLCS, both times with Tom Glavine on the mound, both times scuttled by one big inning.

A year ago, Florida scored four runs in the first, eliminated the Braves with a 7-4 victory and went on to beat Cleveland in a seven-game Series. Apparently content with having just as many championships in the '90s as the Braves, the Marlins promptly disbanded their team.

On Wednesday, a five-run sixth inning — helped along greatly by Bautista's fielding gaffe — earned the Padres a meeting with the New York Yankees.

"We're disappointed that we didn't win this year," Glavine said. "We'll come back next year in spring training and try to win again. I'm proud as hell to play in this organization. I've got a chance to play in the World Series every year."

Bautista, an obscure outfielder who plays mostly against left-handers, found himself at the center of the game-clinching play. The Padres were leading 2-0 in the sixth and had the bases loaded, but Glavine needed only to retire his pitching counterpart to survive the inning.

Hitchcock sliced a liner to left, prompting a collective sigh of relief from the crowd, but Bautista seemed to get a late break, wobbled with uncertainty and finally tumbled to his knees as the ball deflected off the web of his glove and fell to the ground.

Two runs scored to make it 4-0, and another would come home before the disastrous inning came to an end.

Bautista can't take all the blame, however. The Braves managed only two hits — both in the fourth inning — and finished the series like they started, having scored only three runs in the first three games.

Kent named top driver

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Midland's Bill Kent earned the title of Pennzoil Driver of the Weekend last Sunday for his performance at the 11th annual AutoZone Pennzoil Nationals.

Kent reset four national C-Dragster records over the four-day event. His first two record breakers occurred during qualifying when he ran a 7.109 second lap in 189.28 which reset both the elapsed time and actual speed time for C-Dragsters. In the second round, Kent ran a 7.107 lap in 189.44.

Blast girls on a roll

The Midland Blast '88 girls have won their last four games in the West Texas Premier League play.

All four wins have been against '87 teams. Blast is now 15-4 in the fall league and tournament play.

Blast defeated Midland 2-1 on goals by Sara Alvarado and Haley Ford. Blast then shut out Lubbock Elite 2-0 with Kellye Cox and Ford scoring. Blast slipped past the Amarillo High Plains Drifters 2-1 on goals by Elizabeth Gates and Ford.

The most recent win was a 2-1 verdict over Midland with Gates and Alvarado scoring. Defensemen Cynthia Beal, Anna Paulson, Sara Sandel, Kristine Tuck and Kathryn Gates never allowed over one goal to score.

Mirage '88 takes third

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — Midland's Mirage '88 under-11 girls soccer team finished third in the silver bracket of the Whole Enchilada Tournament this past weekend.

Mirage had to go to the consolation bracket after losing 2-1 to the El Paso Kangaroos with Ashley Heredia scoring Mirage's only goal. They then routed the Albuquerque Tidalwaves 11-0 as Jana Bradley had three goals, Sydney Froistad had two and Heredia, Jamie Hastings, Brittany Murphree, Alex Ochsner, Nicole Vest and Kayla Weant all had one apiece while Lauren Herr and Melissa Schulze had assists.

Mirage defeated Albuquerque Rio Grande Rapids 1-0 on a penalty kick by Murphree and beat Albuquerque United in the consolation finals on a shootout goal by Cathryn Copeland.

Trinity changes starting time

The start time of the Sanderson-Trinity football game on Saturday has been moved back one hour.

The game will be played at 3 p.m. Saturday at Midland Trinity.

This was done to accommodate Sanderson who has several football players in the marching band contest in Odessa that afternoon.

Up stepped Leyritz, whose three-run homer for the Yankees in Game 4 of the 1996 World Series at Atlanta sent them on to the title. He didn't hit the ball out of the park, though his RBI groundout put the Padres ahead.

Wally Joyner followed with a single and Glavine pitched around No. 8 hitter Chris Gomez, loading the bases with a two-out walk. Hitchcock hit a low liner that seemed to confuse Danny Bautista, and the left fielder got a bad break in toward the ball.

"I saw the ball right away, but then I lost it in the lights," Bautista said.

Bautista made a late dive and it was no good. The ball clanged off his glove and the Braves could only watch as two runners scored. That finished Glavine, and Quilvio Veras greeted John Rocker with an RBI single for a five-run lead.

The big inning quieted the crowd of 50,988, which had come hoping the Braves could force a Game 7 showdown between Maddux and Brown.

The Padres relied on their strong bullpen to close out the combined two-hitter, with relief ace Trevor Hoffman getting the final three outs.

Having already beaten Houston (102 wins) and Atlanta, the 98-win Padres will try to do it again against the Yankees.

"To go against two great ballclubs like Houston and Atlanta, it doesn't get any greater than this," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said.

"I never knew I'd like New York so much," said Bochy, who also will visit Yankee Stadium for the first time. "I'm looking forward to this."

With a combined 212 wins, the Yankees and Padres have the most victories among World Series opponents. The previous mark was 210 by Baltimore (108) and Cincinnati (102) in 1970.

The Braves got their two hits in the fourth. Cox started a right-handed hitting lineup, benching lefties Ryan Klesko and Game 5 hero Michael Tucker.

Notes: Gene Michael, the Yankees' head of major league scouting, was in the stands. So was former President Jimmy Carter, sitting next to Braves owner Ted Turner. ... Hitchcock slung Gerald Williams' bat back toward the plate after it slipped out toward the mound during a swing in the first. ... Glavine is 9-11 lifetime in postseason play. He has lost a record eight games in the LCS.

Following a scoreless first period, the Jacks fell behind 2-0 in the second period before turning on the offense in the final period. Chris Morque scored Odessa's first goal of the season on an assist by Ryan Equale then Paul Fioroni tied it for the Jacks 2-2 on a power play goal assisted by Johan Hagman.

Then after the Ice Pirates took the lead on a goal by John Hanson, Rodrigue blew a slap shot past Lake Charles goalie Bryan Schoen to force the extra session. Schoen wouldn't be beaten the rest of the way, though.

In the overtime, Hanson and Troy Kennedy scored for Lake Charles while Jay Hern, Christian Wibner, Dan Lavergne and Sami Laine took their turns for the Jacks but were stonewalled by Schoen to seal the win for Lake Charles.

The Jacks continue their six-game trip to open the season Saturday at 7 p.m. when they travel to face the Monroe Moccasins.

Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre pushes Minnesota Vikings linebacker Jeff Brady after a late hit in a game last season. The last thing the Detroit Lions wanted to tangle with Thursday night was a frustrated and angry Brett Favre. He's tough enough when happy and content.

Lions must contend with angry QB Favre

By Harry Atkins

PONTIAC, Mich. — The last thing the Detroit Lions wanted was an angry Brett Favre. He's tough enough when content.

The Lions (1-4) desperately need a victory Thursday night when they face Favre and the Green Bay Packers (4-1) in a critical NFC Central matchup.

Yes, critical.

The Packers, after a 37-24 loss to undefeated Minnesota on Monday night, don't want to fall any further behind the Vikings. The Lions, who already have lost three divisional games, can't afford any more losses.

Against the Vikings, Favre was 13 of 23 for 114 yards, with no touchdowns and three interceptions.

"I had guys open and I missed them, and I made some throws I wish I had back," he said. "It's hard to sleep at night. When you don't have a game the next week, it makes it even tougher because I'm ready to go play right away."

He now goes to a stadium where he has known plenty of heartache — to say nothing of headaches.

Favre has thrown 14 interceptions against 12 touchdown passes in the Pontiac Silverdome. Last season, he had an ugly day there, throwing three interceptions, including one from his knees that linebacker Reggie Brown returned for a score. The Lions won 26-15.

"We just had a game plan and everything clicked, and we got it done," Detroit defensive end Robert Porcher said. "That's what we have to do this week."

This is the second meeting of the season between these rivals. In the season opener, at Lambeau Field, Favre was superb. He completed 24 of 32 for 277 yards and two touchdowns with one interception, spreading the ball around to eight receivers. The Packers won 38-19.

"He is a dynamite quarterback," Porcher said. "He is, I think, the best of what he does because he's able to get out of a lot of things, and he makes a lot of things happen.

"But the flip side of that is that if you put a hat on him, he becomes very ordinary. If you keep hitting him and knocking him around. And that is what we're planning on doing."

Favre has thrown six interceptions in Green Bay's last two games. Coach Mike Holmgren suggested that Favre might be pressing, trying to do too much by himself.

"Well, I always try to do too much," Favre said. "This is just my own opinion, but I think every player who plays this game should look at it the way I do: If I don't do too much, who will?"

Green Bay plans to create a little defensive havoc, too, most of it aimed at confusing rookie Lions quarterback Charlie Batch. In his first three starts since replacing Scott Mitchell, Batch has seen defenses stack eight and nine men near the line, daring the rookie to beat them with his passing.

Not surprisingly, Batch — a second-round draft pick out of Eastern Michigan — has struggled.

In the fourth quarter of a 31-27 upset loss at Chicago, the Lions couldn't generate a first down on three possessions. Yet he is No. 12 in the NFC with a rating of 68.7. Batch has thrown two touchdown passes with two interceptions. That's better than Peyton Manning or Ryan Leaf, the first and second draft picks.

"That's the reason why those guys have 12 and 14 interceptions, because they're forcing the ball," Packers safety LeRoy Butler said. "Batch does not force the ball. He does not make a whole lot of mental errors on the run and it's hard to confuse him."

Batch also brings another element to the game — the run. He already has scrambled for 160 yards, making him the second-leading rusher on the team behind Barry Sanders.

"Any time you change quarterbacks it's a big decision and a tough decision for the coach," Holmgren said. "Charlie has come in and led that football team and I think done really a great job."

'Boys benefit from rejuvenated Smith

By Neil Hohlfeld
Houston Chronicle

IRVING — For the first time since December 1995, Emmitt Smith has put together back-to-back 100-yard games.

With 529 yards through six games, Smith leads the NFC in rushing and is third in the NFL. He is on pace to gain 1,411 yards, which would be his best total since 1995.

But don't expect the Dallas Cowboys running back to stick out his tongue and pick on the skeptics who thought he was on the downside of his career.

Smith gained 1,074 yards last season, his lowest total since his rookie season in 1990, and scored only four touchdowns — by far a career low. This season, working under a revamped offensive system and behind a rejuvenated line, Smith is looking like the Emmitt Smith of old, not like an old Emmitt Smith.

"What do you want me to do?" Smith asked Wednesday before the Cowboys' practice. "You want me to gloat? No way.

"I always knew what I could do. It's all the doubters who seem to be surprised about what's going on. I felt like all along things were going to be better, and we had an opportunity to get better as a team. That's what we're doing.

"But let's not lose the fact that we have 10 more games. You say that I should be going, 'Uh-huh, see.' Well, just as quickly after next week, you could come back and say, 'Uh-huh, seeeee.' You want to take it one game at a time because you can't look back to what has happened or look ahead to what might happen. We're not at that point yet."

As the Cowboys (4-2) prepare to face the Chicago Bears (1-5) on Sunday, Dallas' offense has shown signs of becoming the diverse attack new coach Chan Gailey wanted to establish.

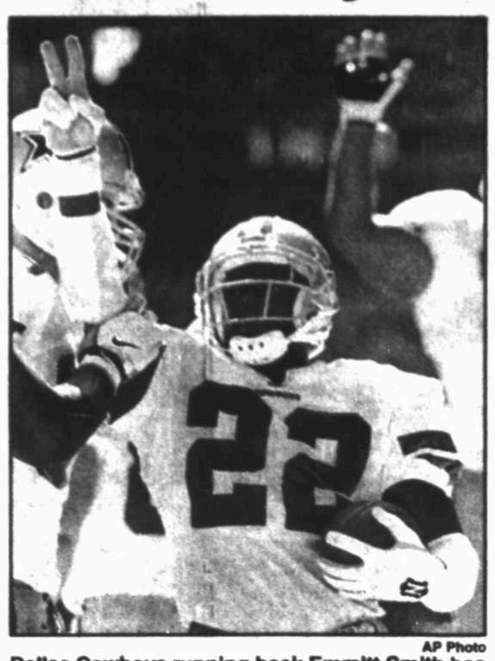

The Cowboys are fifth in the league in rushing and 10th in passing despite playing without injured quarterback Troy Aikman the last four games. They have allowed only seven sacks in six games.

In Sunday's win over Carolina, Smith gained 112 yards while two receivers each topped 100 yards — Michael Irvin with six catches for 146 yards and Ernie Mills with five grabs for 110.

That marked only the third time in club history Dallas has had a running back and two receivers surpass the 100-yard mark in the same game. The last time was in 1991, when Smith, Irvin and Alvin Harper did it.

The big difference, according to Smith and others, has been the consistency of the line.

"They're doing a great job pass protecting and run blocking, giving us some lanes to run through," said Smith. "The difference is the technique. My technique is really different, too. The whole offense is really different from the way it was.

AP Photo

Dallas Cowboys running back Emmitt Smith has thrived under the new system of coach Chan Gailey, and he's helped carry the Cowboys to a 4-2 record and command of the NFC East.

"I think that in itself allows me to be a better runner. We have made adjustments that needed to be made to get the offense back to where it should have been all along.

"The new system itself has put us in a position where we can excel. We're throwing the ball downfield, making the big plays. That's something that was missing last year. We're putting the ball in the end zone."

Bears coach Dave Wannstedt, an assistant coach with the Cowboys until January 1993 who saw Smith during his first three NFL seasons, believes Smith has regained confidence in his blockers.

"The offensive line is playing as well as it has in the last three years," said Wannstedt. "Emmitt looks like he's got a lot more confidence that guys are going to block people. You really can't compare this year's offense to last year's because of the different philosophy and the way people are playing."

The line has been improved in several areas:

After three straight Pro Bowl seasons at right guard, Larry Allen was moved to the critical left-tackle spot and has become the anchor of the line.

Left guard Nate Newton lost nearly 60 pounds to get down to 320 as he made a commitment to regain his Pro Bowl form.

On the right side, veteran Erik Williams and free-agent newcomer Everett McIver were a solid tandem until McIver suffered a knee injury two weeks ago. Rookie Flozell Adams moved to right guard Sunday against Carolina, and the offense didn't miss a beat, rolling up 428 yards.

But the biggest improvement probably is in the middle. Center Clay Shiver, a third-year pro and second-year starter, admits he was overmatched in 1997. This year, it's a different story.

"My first two years in the NFL were extremely humbling," said Shiver. "There were times when I felt like I shouldn't even be playing in the NFL. Coming from Florida State and being an All-American and everything, I thought this was going to be the next step.

"I went from that feeling to thinking that I wasn't even a very good college player. I had my confidence whipped. I was tested spiritually. My faith came into play. When I went home at night, a lot of times after a game that's all I had was my faith."

Shiver, a third-round draft pick in 1996, felt he needed to gain strength physically and mentally to turn his career around. He bulked up to 295 pounds in the offseason and took solace from the fact he was still learning his way around the NFL.

This season, he has been able to make in-game adjustments that have improved the line play.

"It was much harder last year," said Shiver. "One, because the offense was different. And two, because of my lack of experience and confidence in being in the NFL.

"Many times last year, I felt like I was the weak link out there. I wasn't aggressive, because I wasn't always sure what I was doing or who I was supposed to block. Now, I do.

"I knew I had to increase my level of play. A year of experience is just priceless on the offensive line in the NFL. Things would catch me by surprise (last year). Teams were able to adjust and do things differently. It took me longer to catch up. Now, I'm able to shift on the fly."

And because of it, Smith is flying around again. He has three 100-yard games already after having only two all last year. In his career, Smith has gone past the 100-yard mark 50 times. But he insists he is looking ahead, not behind.

"I think it (the back-to-back 100-yard games) makes me more appreciative of what we have now and where we are right now," said Smith. "I've always thought that individual things like leading the NFC in rushing or the NFL in rushing are only as important as helping your team win games.

"That's what I want to do now, get us back into the playoffs."

Saints claims Carolina cast-off Collins

By Joe Macenka
AP Sports Writer

Kerry Collins was claimed on waivers by the New Orleans Saints on Wednesday, one week after losing his job as starting quarterback for the Carolina Panthers amid criticism that his heart wasn't in the game.

Collins broke his weeklong silence about his demotion and subsequent release from the Panthers, saying he never told coach Dom Capers that he didn't want to play any more.

"That hurt," Collins told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from his agent's office in Newport Beach, Calif. "That wasn't what I was trying to get across. At no point did I say that."

Collins said he met with Capers last Wednesday to talk about his frustrations with the way the season was going. By the end of the meeting, Collins had been demoted to the team's third-string quarterback, and six days later, he was waived.

Collins said he was happy to get another chance to play, but he made it clear that he wasn't satisfied with the way he left the Panthers, who in 1995 made him the franchise's first-ever draft pick.

"Everything happened so fast. It just got out of hand, really, and before I knew it, it was too late," he said. "I feel bad about it. Obviously, this is very hard for me. I never said my heart wasn't in it."

Instead, Collins said he had what he thought was "a very good, civil discussion" with Capers about the Panthers' winless start and the quarterback's role in it.

"I told him, 'If this is all happening because of me, if it's my fault, I would understand if you wanted to go in another direction,'" Collins said. "I never intended to quit. I never intended to withdraw my services. I basically wanted to feel them out."

After the meeting, Capers said Collins had told him that he felt partly responsible for the team's poor start and that he felt his heart was no longer into leading the team. Based on the meeting, Capers said, he decided to make Steve Beuerlein the starter, Shane Matthews the backup and Collins the third-stringer.

Many of Collins' teammates heard about the lack of heart remark and questioned whether he could ever return to lead the offense.

At that point, Collins said, he realized that his days with the Panthers were numbered.

"Once that happened, I knew it was going to be tough. Obviously I didn't want it to get to that point," he said. "I'm not a quitter. I never wanted to quit on those guys."

Collins said he's excited about the opportunity to play for New Orleans, whose quarterback shuffle included benching Danny Wuerffel on Wednesday and replacing him with Billy Joe Tolliver. Third-stringer Jake Delhomme was cut.

Collins, who becomes a free agent at the end of the year, said he hopes the spot with the Saints will allow him to try to change how other people view him.

"In life all you can do at this point is move on and try and live for the future," he said. "Once people understand and kind of hear my side of the story, I would think that at least they wouldn't have the same opinion because this thing just got out of hand."

The Saints will pick up the remainder of his 1998 contract worth $1.153 million. Coach Mike Ditka said it would have been foolish not to claim Collins.

"He's a first-round pick ... (who has) played very well in the league," Ditka said. "He's got some problems. He's got to understand that this is another opportunity in life for him. Everything changes. You wipe off the slate and start again."

Franchione gets TCU back to winning again

By Aaron J. Lopez
AP Sports Writer

■ WAC Roundup

The Pied Piper of the Western Athletic Conference is at it again.

After leading New Mexico to its first bowl game in 36 years last season, Dennis Franchione packed his magic flute and moved to Fort Worth in hopes of resurrecting a Texas Christian team that went 1-10 in 1997.

The results have been immediate as the Horned Frogs are averaging 6,000 more fans per home game on the strength of a 4-1 start.

"People are excited and fired up. It's been great for our campus and our community," Franchione said. "In some regards we're almost a venue of curiosity as to how this is happening."

Texas Christian (2-0 WAC) plays at Southern Methodist on Saturday. The Mustangs were the only team to lose to TCU last year, falling 21-18 in the season's final game.

"I don't think there's any surprise to us here," SMU coach Mike Cavan said of TCU's success. "They're focused. They're playing awfully hard. Certainly, I would be sorely, sorely disappointed if this football team didn't get ready and play as good as we can play."

In other WAC games Saturday, Tulsa plays at Rice; Fresno State is at Utah; Wyoming travels to UNLV; San Diego State visits New Mexico; San Jose State plays at Texas El-Paso; and Brigham Young is at Hawaii.

Colorado State plays a non-conference road game against New Mexico State, and Air Force is idle.

While Franchione has established a reputation for rebuilding beleaguered programs, he admits that TCU's strong start is beyond even his expectations.

"I did feel like that if we got a win or two early, we could get hard to handle," he said. "But there was no way that I could have sat around and said, 'Hey, we could be 4-1 if this happens or 3-2.'"

While TCU is on the rise, SMU is struggling in nearby Dallas. The Mustangs (1-5, 1-2) have lost two games in overtime and are waiting for someone to emerge at quarterback.

Sophomore Chris Sanders has been sharing time with freshman Josh McCown, but the two have combined for nine interceptions and took five sacks last week in a five-point loss to Wyoming.

"We're at the point right now that neither one of them is taking over and we've just got to play the same game-to-game," Cavan said. "I don't like that, but that's where we are right now."

San Diego State (2-3, 2-0) can empathize with SMU. The Aztecs started the season with losses to nationally ranked Wisconsin, Southern California and Arizona before winning their first two conference games.

"Obviously, losing is not good for morale, and it's not good for confidence," San Diego State coach Ted Tollner said. "But I do believe this: If you can honestly maintain those things, playing against good people makes you a better team. Even though our overall record isn't strong, we became a stronger team by playing those people."

San Diego State will face a New Mexico team trying to find its identity without Franchione. The Lobos (2-4, 0-3) won the WAC Mountain Division last year but have dropped four straight as they adjust to Rocky Long's West Coast offense.

Pepsi 400 fireworks finally get underway

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Expect fireworks, even though the Pepsi 400 isn't being run on the Fourth of July.

And that's not counting the post-race pyrotechnics scheduled Saturday night following the first event under the lights at Daytona International Speedway.

The Winston Cup race was supposed to take place more than three months ago, but was postponed because of wildfires in northern Florida.

Now, before an expected sellout crowd of more than 150,000, the race is being run as the second half of back-to-back restrictor plate weekends.

Since the restrictor plates came into use in 1988 — slowing the Winston Cup stock cars at Daytona and Talladega Superspeedway, the longest and fastest tracks in NASCAR — close racing and big wrecks have been the rule.

Last Sunday's race at Talladega was no exception. Midway through the race, 37 of the 43 starters were running not only on the same lap, but in a huge pack.

Inevitably, there was a melee, an 11-car tangle that cost Daytona 500 winner Dale Earnhardt and championship contender Mark Martin a shot at winning.

He can wrap up the championship by finishing 16th or better the rest of the way.

"I really want this championship to come down to just pure fighting on the race track with competitiveness," said Gordon, whose second-place finish in Talladega was his 16th consecutive top five. "But anything can happen to us in these final four races, just as it has to Mark."

The Talladega race was won by Dale Jarrett, a two-time Daytona 500 winner who understands what it takes to run up front in restrictor-plate races.

"I'm really looking forward to Daytona," Jarrett said before beginning practice on the 2 1/2-mile, high-banked oval. "We've made a lot of progress on our restrictor-plate program since February."

Jarrett struggled in this year's Daytona 500, finishing 34th in the race that introduced Ford's new Taurus entry.

AP Photo

Smoke shrouded the Daytona U.S.A. racetrack in Daytona Beach, Fla., on June 30. The Pepsi 400 was originally scheduled for July 4 but was postponed because of Florida wildfires. More than three months later, the Pepsi 400 will finally be run Saturday night.

"Certainly we were kind of behind at the beginning of the year," Jarrett said. "With each race, we've learned a little bit more about the Taurus. ...

"We knew we could make this Taurus a little better at these race tracks, and Doug Yates and everybody in the engine shop have worked endless hours, too. We have a tremendous amount more horsepower than we came here with in the first race."

Despite the restrictor plates, the prospect of night racing is appealing.

"Everywhere else that we go and race under the lights, I actually see better, I think," Jarrett said. "The only thing that would be a problem is if we get any type of reflection at all with running in a big pack. That would give you a false sense of somebody being there or not, and you really go by feel and peripheral vision at these places."

But if the race is like ones at other Winston Cup tracks that run at night, there should be no problem.

"At Talladega, there's so much glare (from the sun) and you're operating inches apart," said Michael Waltrip, who finished ninth on Sunday.

ANDREWS: Mustangs host Lake View

(From 1C)

McSpadden are back from injuries, tailback Jim Burgess is out for at least three weeks with a knee injury while sophomore quarterback Chris Mendez, a bright spot thus far, strained knee ligaments against Christoval and will be out against Garden City.

It perhaps seems appropriate that former starting tailback Jeremy Armendariz takes over at quarterback since Owens has had to move players around on offense like a mad chess-master due to injuries.

"We just can't get anything going in workouts," said Owens of his team's lack of offensive bodies. "If you don't have everybody there you can't get better. This is the worst injury year I've ever gone through."

Like Owens, Garden City's Michael Meek is a first-year head coach who has had to deal with losing his top athlete for the season with a knee injury. Returning all-district halfback and defensive back Adam Frysak was injured against Water Valley in the second game of the season and won't return.

With the exception of an opening 25-6 loss to Forsan, the Bearkats have been competitive in every game so far, win or lose. The team has been solid defensively, but has appeared to lack continuity offensively.

"The first half could have definitely been better but I think we learned some things that we can carry over into district," Meek said.

During the off-week, Meek emphasized that his team start doing the little things better than they had been doing them.

"We went back to basics quite a bit," said Meek. "I've always been real basics oriented."

The first district test of Basic Football 101 for Garden City will come Friday night in Rankin. A final grade won't be given to any of the teams until after Nov. 13, when the 7-A regular season ends.

Who comes out of the district as a valedictorian is hard to forecast, especially for Meek and Owens, two coaches who have never coached a down in 7-A competition.

"Anybody's got a shot," Owens said. "This year anybody's capable of beating anybody. It's not like it's just Wink and Rankin (playoff representatives each of the last two seasons)."

In any case, Meek knows it all starts Friday night.

"We're going to have to play extremely well," said Meek. "(The Red Devils) have lost three games like we have but they've got a lot of quickness."

Andrews bracing for air attack

No. 3 Andrews (6-0, 1-0 in District 5-4A) is about as representative a team from 5-4A to receive a lofty state ranking. In a district which emphasizes the run, the Mustangs boast the leading 4A rusher in the state in senior Shaud Williams, who has 1,365 yards this season and needs only 82 yards to move past Corsicana's Ketrick Sanford into second place on the state's all-time 4A rushing list.

Friday night, the Mustangs run into the one 5-4A team which won't try to counter the brilliance of Williams on the ground when they host San Angelo Lake View at 7:30 p.m. Lake View (3-3, 0-1), which almost upset No. 9 Sweetwater 20-19 in last week's 4-5A opener.

The Chiefs boast the district's leading passer in Alonzo Robinson, who has thrown for 800 yards this season, but Andrews coach Mike Lebby knows that in this district the run is still the No. 1 priority.

"We still have to stop the run first," said Lebby. "If we do that we still might be able to defend against the pass."

Defending against the pass was one of the few weak points that could be found for Andrews in rolling to its unbeaten mark. El Paso Eastwood and Hereford both completed some big passes on the Mustangs in the first two weeks of the season, but Andrews has since tightened up that area.

The Mustangs opened the district impressively last week, thumping Snyder 35-7 as Williams ran for four touchdowns, but it was far from a perfect effort.

"We turned the ball over four times and made a lot of mental errors, but Snyder had a lot to do with that," Lebby said.

Big Spring bounces back

All teams should come back from a bye week the way Big Spring did in its 5-4A opener against Fort Stockton last week. The Steers (2-4, 1-0 in district) routed Fort Stockton 56-14 to open district and serve notice that they shouldn't be ignored in the district race.

This week Big Spring will see if it can do to Snyder (3-3, 0-1) what Andrews did, or at least post a win which would make the Steers 2-0 in district and make them a legitimate playoff contender.

This will be the second straight week the Tigers, who host Big Spring at 7:30 p.m. Friday, will have to contend with a top drawer running back. While everybody knows about Williams, Big Spring sophomore fullback Colby Ford is also making a name for himself. Ford, second behind only you-know-who among district rushers, actually outrushed Williams last week, gaining 260 yards in the rout of Fort Stockton.

Midland Christian back on road

Midland Christian (4-2) played what was the only competitive area game last week and had to leave the state to do it, beating Jal, N.M. 38-34. The Mustangs make a lengthier trip Friday, going to the Metroplex to face Nolan Catholic at 7:30 p.m.

It would have been expected that Midland Christian might have a rough time after tailback Josh Miller left the lineup in a 53-12 rout of McCamey two weeks ago with a deep thigh bruise. Yet, the offensive deluge has only picked up with Miller out of the lineup. Trey Bohannon ran for 221 yards and scored five touchdowns and topped that against Jal, running for an astronomical 415 yards.

Nolan Catholic represents Midland Christian's final tune-up before starting its Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools district schedule. Whether it's Miller or Bohannon carrying the ball for the Mustangs, they should be tough for 1-5 Nolan Catholic to stop.

a punt for a touchdown. This is a team with good tradition"

Rangers hope to take sting out of Yellowjackets

After a convincing win like the Greenwood Rangers had against Presidio last week, one would guess that the Rangers are beaming with confidence.

Back to reality.

"Any win is big for us," said Greenwood coach Bob Purser about his team's 56-6 win over the Blue Devils. "But (Presidio) was really out-matched and we did what we wanted to do. They just don't have many kids and our kids realized that they weren't like anybody we've played before."

The Rangers (3-3 overall, 1-0 in District 4-3A) should face a bigger challenge when they head to Kermit this Friday for a 7:30 p.m. critical district contest.

The Yellowjackets (4-2, 1-0) faced a much tougher opponent in their district opener against Alpine but still managed a 27-12 win. Kermit led just 14-12 in the fourth quarter when a 24-yard interception return for a score propelled the Yellowjackets to the victory.

"Kermit is a lot better than they were earlier in the year," Purser said. "They have a lot of size and a lot going for them right now."

While the Kermit defense is continually making big plays, a big concern for Purser and his Rangers lies in the offense where running back Louie Bossett (6-foot, 215 pounds) commands a lot of attention.

"Bossett is built like Earl Campbell, although not quite as big. He destroyed us last year," said Purser, referring to last year's game in which Kermit won 34-14 and Bossett ran for two touchdowns.

"Their defensive line is huge and they have kids playing which played last year," said Purser, who expects a very physical game. "The kids are going to have to whip 'em and that's the only way we're going to win this game."

Tors blow into Denver City

The fight back to respectability has been a long one for the Lamesa Golden Tornadoes. With a 21-0 win over Slaton in the District 3-3A opener last Friday, Lamesa took a giant leap into gaining the respect among its new district opponents.

"That was a big win for us. We needed that," said Lamesa coach Tim James. "It's nice to start off district with a win. That's been a long time coming."

The fight doesn't get any easier for the Golden Tors (3-3, 1-0 in district) as they travel to face Denver City (3-3, 1-0) at 7:30 p.m. Friday.

"Denver City is going to be a tough test for us. They have a lot of tradition," James said. "They've got some good athletes and their quarterback (Luis Villegas) is a dandy. He had over 200 yards rushing against Colorado City (a 39-24 win last week). They also have a good tight end in Patrick Boyd."

Against Colorado City, Villegas rushed for 222 yards and scored three touchdowns. Villegas also returned an interception for another score.

Obviously, the dangerous QB is top concern for the Golden Tors.

"We're going to have to contain him and not give up the big play," James said. "This is one of the better football teams we faced all year. A win could help us tremendously. Whoever wins this game will certainly be put in the driver's seat for a playoff spot. We're going to have to be hitting on all cylinders going into the game."

Chargers look for victory on Homecoming

The Trinity Chargers were looking for a big win to get their morale back up. They certainly got a big boost of confidence with a 58-6 victory over Victory Christian of Carlsbad, N.M., in a game which was called off at halftime thanks to the 45-point mercy rule in six-man football.

"I think it helped a lot of our kids get a little playing time," said Trinity coach Karl Kitto, whose team improved to 2-4 for the season. "They weren't a very good team so we played everybody. I've been on the other end so I know what it feels like."

The Chargers might get a test at 3 p.m. Saturday whey they host Sanderson JV in a homecoming contest. Sanderson is ranked No. 6 in the state and the Chargers might see some of Sanderson's varsity players since the JV has suffered injuries.

"It's listed as a JV game but their coach told me they're bringing everybody," Kitto said. "We may have to look at some of their first string people."

Trinity faced Sanderson in a preseason scrimmage game so the Chargers know what to expect.

"They beat us handily in that game but I feel we're much improved since the last time we played them," Kitto said. "Hopefully we can try and stop them. They run the option real well for a six-man team. Their coach has done a real good job of implementing the option.

"Turnovers once again is going to be the key to winning this game. If we can eliminate the turnovers, get some scoring early and wear them down, hopefully we can stay with them."

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll have: 5-Dymanic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, Oct. 15, 1998:
A partnership plays a significant role in your year, both emotionally and financially. You'll find that because of a newfound trust, you will be able to share more of the vicissitudes of your life. The realizations and conclusions that you arrive at are a direct result of your willingness to pull back and look within. If you are single, romance knocks on your door. 1999 presents many choices, but make sure the person you choose is emotionally available for you. If attached, the two of you become even closer as you seek to make each other even happier. VIRGO reads you cold.

BORN TODAY
Duchess of York Sarah Ferguson (1959), director Penny Marshall (1942), author Mario Puzo (1920)

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Get into work, and pace yourself. There is a lot that you need to accomplish quickly. You have more energy than you think, once you start rolling. Schedule a dental checkup. Take advantage of someone's sound financial offer. Tonight: Don't work too hard!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Your serious approach helps you, but don't deny your creativity. Follow through on an idea; it might hold a lot of surprises. An attraction could be building. Think before you leap. Others respond to you quite strongly. Tonight: Let more naughtiness into your life.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Direct your high energy appropriately. You operate from a solid footing as you make various necessary changes. A family member questions your decisions. Listen carefully to the feedback; it allows you to be even more grounded in your choices. Tonight: Homeward bound.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Communications are enhanced by your ability to tell it as it is. Reach out for others, and make a difference where it counts. You are strong-willed and know what you want. Expand friendships, and be willing to meet new people in new places. Tonight: At a favorite spot.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Yes, expenses can get out of whack, and easily. Stay centered, knowing what you need to do. Honor responsibilities, no matter how uncomfortable you are. Someone is demanding, but you aren't going to change him; consider negotiating. Tonight: Indulge.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Your smile rarely wins as much agreement as it does now. Ask for more of what you want, while the universe gives you the high sign. Read between the lines with someone who is at a distance. It isn't what he says but what he doesn't that's important. Tonight: Beam.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Take a deep breath before taking any strong action. One-to-one relating is instrumental to building a good relationship. Seriously weigh financial matters before you commit in any way. Don't feel pressured by others. Take your time. Tonight: Do your own thing.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ A partner might not mean to corner you, but ultimately that is what he does. Act on ideas, and remaining focused. Listen carefully to someone. Make strong decisions about what you want. Someone will agree with you eventually. Tonight: Be with the crowds.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Stay on top of work, as challenging or perhaps burdensome as it can be. You might not feel up to snuff, but you can handle whatever situation arises. A boss pushes hard to get what he wants from you. Stay focused on the ultimate goals. Tonight: In the limelight.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Allow more creativity and caring in your life. Inadvertently, you could be cutting off someone. Stay centered as news comes from a distance. A lot of activity surrounds communications. Don't listen to any gossip, especially in the office. Tonight: Let your mind wander.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Stay focused on what you want. Listen carefully to a partner who means well. Together, you create a new understanding. A business venture succeeds beyond your wildest imagination. Be willing to put yourself on the line. Tonight: Happy with your favorite person.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Evaluate what others are saying. You might not like the style of communications, but you will find that they are worthwhile. You need to keep discussions open, even if you want to walk away. Your ability to handle high tension helps you. Tonight: Visit a friend.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	1♠	Pass
1NT	Pass	4♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♣ Study all four hands. How would you play four hearts after the lead of a low club?

This is a routine five-card major auction. North's hand is clearly worth a raise to game opposite almost any sort of first-seat vulnerable opening bid.

West leads a fourth-best club and obviously the hand is easily makable if trumps are 3-2 and you can guess the location of the missing diamond honors. In addition, a winning spade finesse or a 3-3 spade break will also land the contract. Complicating matters is the need to draw trumps early to prevent a possible defensive ruff, which removes a crucial entry to the table. South found a pretty way to maximize these chances.

East was allowed to win the queen of clubs, and the club return was taken with the ace. The ace and king of trumps were cashed, and the third club was ruffed with the ten. Declarer came to hand with the ace of spades and drew the remaining trump.

Now declarer ran the ten of diamonds to East's jack, and the trap snapped on the defender. Stripped of clubs and hearts, it made no difference whether East returned a diamond, setting up the table's king as the fulfilling trick, or led a spade into the table's king-jack tenace for the 10th trick.

What if East still had a club to return? Declarer would be no worse off. After ruffing the club, declarer would have to guess in which suit to try for the fulfilling trick, and the odds clearly favored running the nine of diamonds.

Cash hospitalized for second time this month

Cash has disease in Parkinson's family.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Johnny Cash is back in the hospital for a check on his medication for a nervous-system disorder.

The 66-year-old country star has Shy-Drager syndrome, a disease in the Parkinson's family.

He was admitted Monday to Baptist Hospital. Cash was released from Baptist on Oct. 2 after a week and a half for treatment for pneumonia.

NEW YORK — Marv Albert and Michael J. Fox will bump into each other at Madison Square Garden on an episode of "Spin City."

It should be an easy role for the sportscaster — he will play himself. The episode hasn't been shot and an air date hasn't been set.

Albert's career as an NBA play-by-play man collapsed last year after he pleaded guilty to biting a lover. But he landed a job last month with cable's MSG network.

LONDON — A tabloid story about a haircut-gone-bad for 14-year-old Prince Harry has his father threatening a complaint to press watchdogs.

The Mirror said Wednesday on the front page that Harry and his Eton classmates tried to copy soccer player Michael Owen's short haircut, but something went wrong and the prince wound up with a Marine-style crop.

The paper included computer-generated images of how "Harry the skinhead" might look.

Sandy Henney, Prince Charles' spokeswoman, said the story and pictures "raise a general issue about the extent to which individual news stories about Prince William and Prince Harry cumulatively constitute an intrusion into their privacy."

Mirror editor Piers Morgan said the paper told Charles' office about the story Tuesday. The office "agreed with our belief that it was both amusing and harmless and provided us with official confirmation."

WASHINGTON — Rep. Mary Bono will be entertaining a few thousand people for dinner Saturday as host of the National Italian American Foundation's annual gala.

Notables such as Barbara Sinatra, Tommy Lasorda and Angelica Huston will be saluted at the dinner, which has a guest list of several thousand, including stars Liza Minnelli, Joan Collins and Quentin Tarantino. Tenor Andrea Bocelli will sing the Italian and American national anthems.

President Clinton and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton traditionally have attended the gala, which helps fund the foundation's scholarship and education programs.

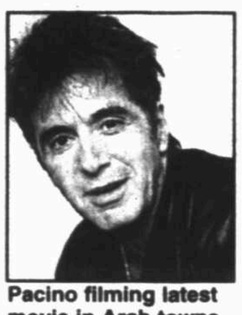

Mrs. Bono, R-Calif., is the widow of Republican Rep. Sonny Bono, who died in a skiing accident in January.

JERUSALEM — Al Pacino has taken to the dusty streets of Arab towns to film "Man of the People."

Pacino, on the set Tuesday and Wednesday, plays a "60 Minutes" producer who interviews a leader of the guerrilla organization Hezbollah, the daily Yediot Ahronot reported.

When plans for filming in Lebanon fell through, mostly Arab towns in Israel were chosen instead.

LOS ANGELES — Those were the days.

Norman Lear, creator of the groundbreaking 1970s CBS-TV series "All in the Family," doesn't think the satirical comedy would survive on network television in today's hypersensitive atmosphere.

"This isn't the best time for America laughing at ourselves. I think political satire thrives much more at a time when we're in a mood to laugh at ourselves," Lear said. "The degree of political correctness has just gotten terrible."

Lear recalls the furor that greeted the arrival of "All in the Family" in 1971, the year the bigoted Archie Bunker was introduced into America's living rooms. Lear produced three separate pilots and the first, which was never broadcast, will be shown Saturday on Nickelodeon's TV Land as part of its "Museum of Television & Radio Showcase."

AUBURN, Ala. — Twenty-six years after "The Candidate," Robert Redford is on the stump, but he's not running for anything.

He is promoting Alabama congressional candidate Joe Turnham in radio spots focused on clean water and is also campaigning in Wisconsin for Democratic Sen. Russ Feingold.

The radio ad began Tuesday. Turnham, a Democrat, is trying to unseat freshman Republican Bob Riley.

"The incumbent, Congressman Bob Riley, doesn't want to talk about protecting Alabama's water," Redford said in the ad. "According to the League of Conservation Voters, Riley has voted against clean air and water 94 percent of the time. He's spent more time on a partisan agenda in Congress than paying attention to water quality at home."

House Speaker Newt Gingrich will be in Auburn on Monday to stump for Riley.

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 406 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

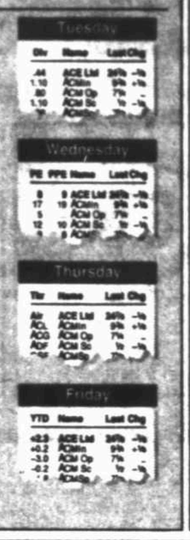

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
Tkr: The stock's ticker symbol.
How to use: The ticker symbol can help you get information about a company. Two important uses: Most services that provide stock quotes over the phone require the ticker symbol. Second, stock brokers and analysts can recognize stocks more easily with a ticker symbol.

Generally, ticker symbols resemble the company name although some – BUD for Anheuser Busch Cos. and FON for Sprint Corp. – are more related to what a company does. Tickers on the New York and Amex usually don't exceed three letters. On Nasdaq, they go up to five letters.

The names you see in this paper are abbreviations of the company name supplied by The Associated Press. Companies can help determine what their abbreviation will be. Overall, AP tries to use an abbreviation that will most closely match the full company name.

Stock Footnotes: cc – PE greater than 99. dd – Loss in last 12 mos. d – New 52-wk low during trading day. g – Dividend in Canadian $. Stock price in U.S. $. n – New issue in past 52 weeks. s – Split or stock dividend of 25 percent or more in last 52 weeks. Dividend begins with date of split or stock dividend. u – New 52-wk high during trading day. v – Trading halted on primary market. Unless noted, dividend rates are annual disbursements based on last declaration. pf – Preferred. pp – Holder owes installment(s) of purchase price. rt – Rights. un – Units. wd – When distributed. wi – When issued. wt – Warrants. ww – With warrants. xw – Without warrants.

Prices sink

Crude oil futures sank Wednesday to their lowest level in six weeks on the New York Mercantile Exchange amid speculation U.S. inventories grew sharply last week as an absence of storms in the Gulf of Mexico allowed imports to rise.

Crude oil futures retreated ahead of weekly inventory figures from the American Petroleum Institute, which were expected to show continued gains in energy stockpiles.

The API report, released after the close of trading, bore out their predictions. Crude oil stocks rose 8.220 million barrels last week to 327.351 million barrels. Gasoline stocks fell, however, dropping 7.023 million barrels to 198.954 million barrels.

Refineries were operating at 97.5 percent of capacity last week, a bit lower than the 88.0 percent operation level the previous week.

Despite attempts from world oil producers to boost prices by slashing daily output, a barrel of crude remains about 30 percent cheaper than a year ago.

Crude for November delivery fell 18 cents to $14.05 a barrel; November heating oil fell .43 cent to 38.16 cents a gallon; November unleaded gasoline rose .06 cent to 43.52 cents a gallon; November natural gas fell 4.3 cents to $2.041 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

PASPB meeting

The Petroleum Accountants Society of the Permian Basin will meet Tuesday at the Petroleum Club beginning with a technical session at 11 a.m. The technical session will be presented by Jon Gear, COPAS director, who will give an update on current COPAS activities.

Lunch will be served at noon and the luncheon speaker will be Wayne Scott, former chief financial officer of Occidental Petroleum.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar edged higher against the mark Wednesday after German central bankers appeared divided on whether an interest rate cut was imminent.

The dollar slipped against the Japanese yen.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 118.98 yen, down from 119.15 late Tuesday. The U.S. currency also was changing hands at 1.6426 marks, up from 1.6342.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Tuesday: 1.3360 Swiss francs, up from 1.3233; 5.5062 French francs, down from 5.5780; 1,626.00 Italian lire, up from 1,616.45; and 1.5415 Canadian dollars, down from 1.5478.

The British pound was quoted at $1.7056, up from $1.7042.

Stocks gain

NEW YORK — A sharper advance fizzled, but stocks resumed their rebound Wednesday as the early rush of company reports on the third quarter remained generally encouraging.

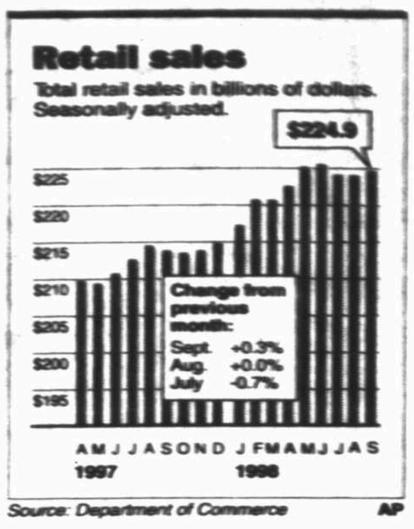

The Dow Jones industrial average swung from an early 60-point drop to a 110-point gain, but finished just 30.64 higher at 7,968.78 after a late pullback.

The Nasdaq composite, which took the heaviest pounding before last Thursday's turnaround, rose 31.52 to 1,540.97 as leading technology names continued to meet or beat Wall Street's skeptical profit projections.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a 3-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where composite volume totaled a hefty 928.79 million shares

The Standard & Poor's 500 rose 10.73 to 1,005.53, and the NYSE composite index rose 4.84 to 496.98. The American Stock Exchange composite index rose 5.15 to 583.01, and the Russell 2000 index rose 4.65 to 324.98.

Consumers cut spending, just a little

Source: Department of Commerce AP

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Consumers are pulling back, but not a lot, from their free-spending ways in the aftermath of the stock market's sharp correction. They still bought cars in September to catch up from the General Motors strikes, but spending on clothes and furniture fell.

Sales rose a mediocre 0.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted $224.9 billion last month after showing no change in August, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

Auto sales shot up 0.9 percent in September, the best gain in four months, following a slight decrease of 0.1 percent in August and a plunge of 4.3 percent in July, during the strikes.

However, excluding autos, sales crept just 0.1 percent higher in September, the same as the increase the month before.

Economists said the report suggests consumers have turned somewhat cautious after world financial turmoil spilled over into the U.S. stock market in late August.

"Not long ago, it looked as if American consumer spending was just going to steam ahead regardless of anything happening elsewhere in the world. Now ... the consumer mood has indeed been dented," said economist William Cheney of John Hancock in Boston.

"We'll have a Christmas season that's kind of uninspiring, from the point of view of retailers," Cheney said.

Though lackluster, September's retailing performance was far from a collapse, and analysts pointed to other factors that affected it. Hurricane Georges battered sales in parts of the South, unseasonable warmth delayed spending on fall clothing and declining gasoline prices cut service station receipts.

Job growth, though weaker than earlier in the year, should continue to support spending, as will low interest rates — and the prospect of further rate cuts by the Federal Reserve, economists said.

"It should be a soft landing," said economist Ira Silver of J.C. Penney in Plano, Texas. "The Fed has lowered rates and it appears to be willing to continue if conditions require that."

Fed board member Roger W. Ferguston Jr. reinforced that view Wednesday. He told a small business group in Tallahassee, Fla., that risks to the economy "have been altered signficantly in the past month or so" and that monetary policy-makers "must be vigilant to guard against a shortfall of aggregate demand."

Despite recent weakness, retail sales, which account for roughly a third of the nation's economic output, were 4.1 percent higher in the July-September period than a year earlier.

Clayton Williams to buy oil fields

■ Local oil operator joins General Electric unit in $46.5 million acquisition.

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — Clayton Williams Energy Inc. and a unit of General Electric Capital Corp. agreed to buy Texas oil and natural gas fields from a Sonat Inc. unit for about $46.5 million in cash.

Clayton Williams Energy will own initially own 10 percent of the properties. The Midland-based oil and natural gas exploration company will form a partnership with GE Capital, the largest nonbank finance company, to buy the rest, and will oversee production of oil and gas on the holdings.

Once the fields in eastern Texas are producing a sufficient rate of return on the companies' investments, the GE unit will turn over part of its share of the partnership to the oil company, said Mel Riggs, chief financial officer for Clayton Williams Energy.

The result will be that GE Capital unit will own a 55 percent stake in the properties while Clayton Williams Energy owns the rest.

"The acquisition of these properties is consistent with our emerging exploration program which emphasizes the development of long-life gas reserves," said Clayton Williams, chairman and president of the company in a statement.

The oil and natural gas properties are located in three fields, and contain proven reserves of 65.2 billion cubic feet of natural gas. The transaction is expected to close on or before Nov. 20, though its official closing will be backdated to April 1, 1998.

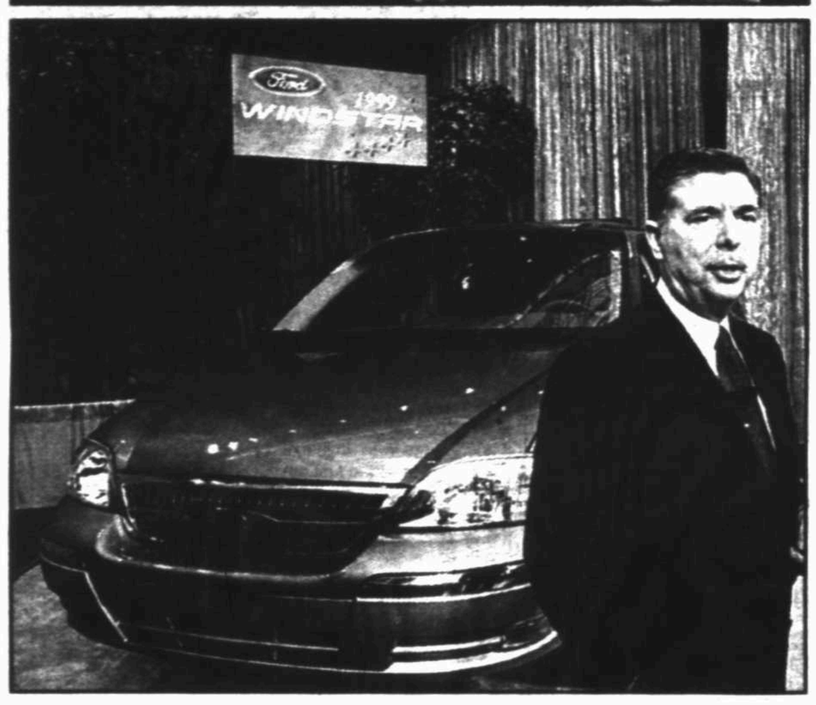

An estimated $3.5 million will be deducted from the purchase price for natural gas and oil removed from the site between April and November, Riggs said.

Apple Computer earnings rebound

Steve Jobs, Apple's co-founder and the company's chief executive officer, gestures beside an IMAC computer Wednesday in Cupertino, Calif. Apple computer Corp. reported its first profitable fiscal year since 1995, as sales of the new IMAC helped the rebounding computer company earn a healthy $106 million in it's fourth quarter.

Stock market will follow road higher, but road has dips

By M. Ray Perryman

Perryman

Recent volatility in the stock market has many Texans shaking in their boots. Watching the value of one's investment portfolio rise and fall with the Dow Jones Industrial Average is, of course, unsettling in the extreme. Every observer seems to have a different opinion about what is to come, ranging from a small dip to a big drop. Some are predicting a minor financial hiccup; others see nothing short of a global meltdown. Where does the truth lie? Only time will tell. In the meantime, here are a few points I think are being lost on some folks.

I get asked this question all the time: can the stock market rise forever? The answer is yes and no. "Yes" in that, over time, as corporate profits continue to increase, there is no fundamental constraint on the market's capacity for growth. The "no" component reflects the fact that history (or common sense) tells us the path of growth will have dips along the way of varying severity and longevity.

So how ferocious will the next bear be? Predicting the stock market may be even more difficult than predicting the economy; however, it appears that the next bear will fall into the middle of the range of prior market downturns.

The good news is that a repeat of the worst market downturns is highly unlikely at this time. The circumstances preceding the very worst of the bear markets have typically involved a period of rising interest rates and otherwise lackluster economic performance. In such an environment, it becomes increasingly difficult for companies to continue to expand earnings and support rising stock prices. (The downturn of 1929 involved a major collapse of the nation's money supply, a circumstance the Federal Reserve Bank would not allow to happen today.)

By contrast, the U.S. is currently in the midst of a long-lived expansion with little inflation and falling interest rates; economic fundamentals such as productivity also continue to improve. In such an environment, corporate earnings and profits have far more room to grow; long-lived stock price difficulties are, thus, less likely.

On the downside, weakness in global markets (notably Asia and Latin America) continues to impede the earnings progress of companies doing business in those regions. Moreover, the problems have the potential to continue to spread. The recent difficulties in Russia have the capacity to become far worse before they improve. These factors would tend to increase the ferocity of the next bear market. Needless to say, enough things are going on at present to have the Fed, the International Monetary Fund, the G7 or P8 (the "Political 8" includes Russia), and everybody else jumping into the mix.

What to do? An objective look at the long-term, historical performance of various investment types can help in the buy-sell-hold decision matrix. Historically, long-term stock market investments have yielded overwhelmingly better returns than other investment classes. Such a long and positive track record is hard to argue with. A key issue, of course, is the level of risk such investments have entailed; every investor's tolerance for risk is different. Short-term investors face a more difficult circumstance in that they may not have the option of riding out a bear market; the stock market is no place for next week's grocery money.

For long-term investors, the best thing to do may be just sitting tight. Leaving the arena of market professionals aside, the average investor's portfolio suffers from efforts to "time" the turning of a bear or bull market. There are always those who seem to get lucky and guess right, making money in the process. However, just as many guess wrong. Buying or selling on the latest advice or on today's market movement can be very bad for returns.

NBA owners take look at luxury tax

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — The NBA's negotiating team spent Wednesday studying the union's luxury tax proposal to see if it will actually slow the growth of player salaries.

Plugging in the numbers, one thing quickly became clear: As presently constituted, the formula would produce only a trickle of "tax revenue."

"We are going to examine every element of this tax to see whether under some circumstance, at the right levels and in the right amounts, a tax could work," commissioner David Stern said.

If the owners latch onto the concept and adopt the tax system in a counterproposal Friday, it could signal that the sides have found an acceptable mechanism for solving the biggest rift between them — a new economic operating system for the next collective bargaining agreement.

The lockout is now 3 1/2 months old, and the league took the unprecedented step Tuesday of canceling the first two weeks of the season.

Both sides are awaiting a ruling from arbitrator John Feerick on the union's grievance over whether more than 200 players with guaranteed contracts should be paid during the lockout.

Feerick's decision, which could have a major impact on the negotiations, is due by Sunday.

The union made its tax proposal Tuesday, indicating to owners that they are willing to give ground to get the season started. The tax would theoretically be a deterrent against owners signing their own free agents to overly lucrative long-term contracts.

Stern and deputy commissioner Russ Granik said the tax proposal was far from a breakthrough, yet they seemed surprised nonetheless that the union was offering a way to control superstar salaries.

"Amongst the players who came into town and spent a couple of days here, I think there was a sense on their part that they were making a new offer that was different and might be designed to make some progress," Stern said. "We want to make sure that we've analyzed it every possible way to show our good faith here."

Under the union's offer, a 50 percent tax would be levied on the amount of any annual salary over $18 million, with the tax money to be redistributed to low-revenue teams.

Of all the players currently under contract for the upcoming season, only one — union president Patrick Ewing — has a salary that exceeds the proposed threshold. Ewing is due to make $18.5 million, meaning $500,000 of his salary would qualify for the 50 percent tax.

Last season, only Ewing ($20.5 million) and Jordan ($33 million) had salaries that would have triggered the tax.

Clearly, a middle ground would need to be found to make a tax palatable to the owners.

"The numbers are negotiable," union attorney Jeffrey Kessler said.

One thing a luxury tax might not do is reduce the amount of basketball-related income being devoted to player salaries.

In the last labor agreement reached in 1995, the owners agreed to pay the players between 48 percent and 51.8 percent of revenues. If the percentage went higher — and owners claim it reached 57 percent last season — they had the right to toss out the old deal.

Owners have proposed a hard salary cap that would reduce that number to 48 percent over four years, while the union has proposed two cap-tightening measures if the number rose to 63 percent.

Stern indicated that the owners might accept a luxury tax proposal if it included a fall-back provision that included a hard cap. That way, if the tax system wasn't keeping salary costs down, another system would kick in to ensure cost certainty.

Closing arguments center on Jordan's agent Falk

CHICAGO (AP) — When the defender on the basketball court is Michael Jordan, opponents try to go around him. The same held true in a courtroom Wednesday during closing arguments in the breach-of-contract lawsuit against the Chicago Bulls star.

Robert Maland, lawyer for the makers of the 1991 film "Heaven is a Playground," spent much of his time attacking David Falk, Jordan's agent, who is not on trial. Maland charged that Falk maneuvered to keep Jordan out of the film, which he had agreed to appear in, because he saw the possibility of bigger profits down the road.

With Bo Kimble in the role that was to have been Jordan's, the film was a box-office bust. Heaven Corp., maker of the movie, is seeking at least $16 million in damages, which it says represents the profit it would have made if Jordan had appeared in the film.

"This movie would have been in the right place at the right time with the right guy," said Maland, who launched into a series of superlatives to describe the positive effect Jordan would have had on the movie.

"Michael Jordan, simply put, has the Midas touch," Maland said.

"When he returned to basketball, the stock market went up noticeably," Maland said, drawing laughter from the audience and an objection from the defense.

Calcavecchia seeks Presidents Cup slot

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Mark Calcavecchia played Wednesday like a man determined to achieve his season goal — a spot in the Presidents Cup competition later this year in Australia.

Calcavecchia didn't come close to a bogey all day, shooting a 7-under-par 65 under nearly flawless conditions to tie Robert Damron for the first-round lead in the 90-hole Las Vegas Invitational.

"I figured when the year began that if I made the Presidents Cup team I would have had a good year," Calcavecchia said. "The Presidents Cup is my goal. If I can hang on and do that, it's been a good year."

Calcavecchia, getting a break by playing in the morning before the wind came up, made seven birdies on the TPC Summerlin course to beat by a stroke the opening-round 66 he shot here last year when he ended up in a tie for fourth.

Calcavecchia also finished third here two years ago.

"I've had chances to win both years," he said. "I've been on a pretty good roll here for three years now."

Paul Azinger topped a group of seven golfers a shot back at 66, while U.S. Open champion Lee Janzen and 13 others were at 67. Among those at 67 was Chip Beck, who only last month ended a streak of missing the cut in 47 straight tournaments.

All in all, it was a very crowded leaderboard with 39 golfers within three shots of the lead.

Calcavecchia is currently in 10th place on the points list for the team, and needs to hold that position through the season-ending Tour Championship if he wants to make the United States squad.

The top 10 automatically make the team, while captain Jack Nicklaus said he will likely round out the team with the Nos. 11 and 12 players on the list.

To make sure he has a good showing in town he clearly enjoys, Calcavecchia has put some self-imposed limits on his stay for the $2 million tournament.

"I just like to have fun here," he said. "I like to gamble but I put an 8:30 p.m. curfew on myself here."

Damron also posted his score early at TPC Summerlin, one of three courses used for the first three days of the tournament.

In the 93rd spot on the money list, Damron doesn't have to worry about a spot on the Presidents Cup. He also doesn't have to worry about dropping out of the top 125 spots on the money list — which means he is almost guaranteed a tour card for next year.

"My goal this week is to have a good time," Damron said.

Damron made the cut in last week's Michelob Championship, only to pull out on Saturday, saying he was burned out on golf. He didn't pick up a club until Wednesday, then went out and made eight birdies before hitting a ball into a greenside bunker on the 17th hole and missing a 4-footer for par.

In a tournament in which low scoring is an annual event, the first round scores were not as low as a group as in recent years although the leaderboard was dotted with scores in the 60s. That was largely a result of afternoon winds, which are predicted to continue through the rest of the week.

The early players got the benefit of better conditions, including John Daly, who shot his 4-under 68 at the Desert Inn Country Club, probably the toughest of the three courses in the rotation.

Daly, showing no effects from jet leg after winning all his matches over the weekend in the Dunhill Cup, hit every green in regulation and never made a bogey in what for him was an uncharacteristic steady round.

Crime Stoppers CRIME OF THE WEEK

This week Midland Crime Stoppers and Riley's Bar need your help in solving an abduction and aggravated sexual assault of a child.

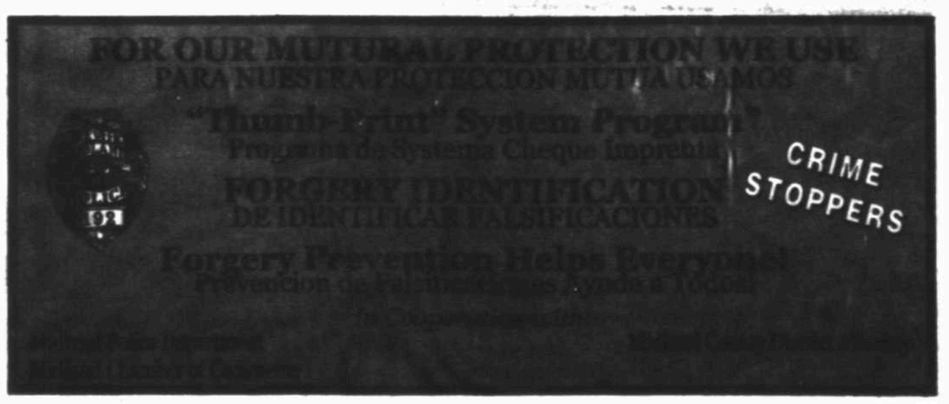

On August 8, a 15 year old girl was abducted from Riley's Bar located at 3421 W. Wall in Midland, TX. The victim was then taken to an unknown location in Midland County and sexually assaulted. The car used in the abduction and assault was a 4 door, white older model vehicle. The vehicle has bucket seats and were either leather or vinyl.

There were two actors involved in this crime. The first actor is described as being a Hispanic male 23-24 years old, approximately 5'7 and 150 lbs. He has short black hair which was parted in the middle at the time of the crime. The other suspect is described as being a White or Hispanic male approximately 48 years old, 5'9 and about 150lbs. with short black hair.

Break the silence, your silence keeps the problem going. Call Midland Crime Stoppers at 694-TIPS or 1-800-7-LOCKUP with information that leads to an arrest or indictment and you can be paid up to $1000 in cash.

I'm Sgt. Jim Crouse for Midland Crime Stoppers.
