City to put sales tax on ballot

Increase would fund property tax cut, economic development

Odessa City Council to decide whether to set election on sales taxes

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Odessa may join the growing number of Texas cities that use a ½ cent sales tax to promote economic development in the city.

A special meeting of the Odessa City Council has been called for Sept. 2, when they will vote on setting an election.

Bob Barnes, chairman of Jobs for Odessa, requested that the council put the matter to a popular vote.

In the Odessa proposal, voters would decide to remove a quarter cent in the sales tax from the portion of that tax currently collected by the Ector County Hospital District.

This is a necessary first step since Odessa is already at the maximum 8¼ cents sales tax rate.

Voters will then, on the same ballot, decide whether they wish this extra ¼ cent of sales tax to be used to establish an economic development fund, according to Odessa officials.

"Odessa has relied on an economy based heavily on the oil and gas industry," Barnes said. "As a result, we have been subjected to tragic boom and bust economic cycles. Odessa's businesses and, more importantly, Odessa's families should not continue to be left vulnerable to an unpredictable economic environment," he said.

Midland's current sales tax is more than half a cent below the maximum, so the double proposal will not be needed here. But in Odessa, the two-part proposal means that voters could theoretically vote to cut the sales taxes collected by the hospital district and vote against using it for economic development.

Proponents hope, however, that voters there will see the need for using the funds to expand the job base there.

"This is not a new tax. This is a reallocation of existing tax," Barnes said.

The Odessa election is set for Nov. 4, the same date as the Midland vote.

As in Midland, proponents there stress that the future depends on expanding and diversifying the local economic base.

The Midland City Council voted unanimously to let Midland voters decide if a ½ cent sales tax increase is the way to secure the city's economic future.

At a Nov. 4 special election, voters will be faced with a proposition to increase sales taxes in favor of a 15-16 percent decrease in city property taxes plus the creation of a $3 million-per-year fund to help lure industry to the area. Of the half-cent increase, ¼ cent would be used to fund a decrease in property taxes and ¼ cent would be used to establish an economic development fund to be administered according to state regulations.

At a public hearing at City Hall Tuesday, a number of citizens voiced their opinions on the proposed tax changes. Most of those present were in favor of the measure, even though a similar economic development proposal — but without the property tax decrease — was turned down by Midland voters six years ago.

Some people voiced concerns about the way the funds would be managed, but did not oppose the measure.

D.L. Willis of the Permian Basin Central Labor Union said his organization does not support bringing in low-paying jobs, but would support any measure that brings in better-paying jobs for Midland area workers.

'I'm tired of losing to Amarillo and Abilene and every other city in the country.'
— Mayor Bobby Burns

The proposal would require the council to appoint a five-member board of trustees to oversee expenditures from this fund and Mayor Bobby Burns, who initiated the move, has vowed to have all members of the panel announced before the election.

Willis asked the council to make some appointments from outside the business sector so that working families have representation on the board.

Midlander Manual Lujan said the board also should reflect the city's diversity. Burns made assurances that the board would vary regarding ethnicity, gender and background.

Several people referred to a failed deal that would have brought hundreds of good paying jobs into the city — a failed negotiation that still has many city leaders angry.

In the spring, Forward Midland and other city leaders were putting the finishing touches on a deal to bring Nationwide Insurance Co. to Midland. More than $1 million had been raised from private sources for the deal, but Amarillo managed to buy Nationwide out from under Midland with a $4 million cash deal, Burns said.

Amarillo could do this because of the city's economic development capital funded through a sales tax increase.

"It broke my heart," Burns said. "We worked excruciatingly hard on the Nationwide deal," Burns said.

"I'm tired of losing to Amarillo and Abilene and every other city in the country," Burns said.

Bush tries to quell speculation about presidential aspirations

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Fresh from a Republican gathering where he was touted as prime presidential timber, Texas Gov. George W. Bush on Tuesday downplayed such speculation and said had he known the event was going to be a "beauty contest" for potential candidates, he might have stayed home.

"I left my bathing suit at home, as a matter of fact," Bush told an impromptu news conference in Austin.

Bush delivered the keynote speech Saturday at the Midwest Republican Leadership Conference, a three-day meeting in Indianapolis that was billed by some party leaders as a preview of prospective GOP presidential nominees in 2000.

A host of Republican heavyweights attended, including former Vice President Dan Quayle and Jack Kemp, the party's vice presidential nominee last year.

Bush insisted Tuesday that he attended the event to help raise money for the party. His focus, he said, was on winning reelection next year as governor, not moving to the White House three years from now.

MISD trustees approve 1997-98 budget, vote down tax increase

By Alice Ashmore
Staff Writer

MISD Board of Trustees Tuesday approved the 1997-98 school budget, but not everybody got what they wanted because a proposed one-half cent tax increase was voted down by board members.

The $116 million budget approved by the board is a 6.2 percent increase over last year's $110 million budget, said Art Martin, executive director of business services for Midland Independent School District.

The approved budget increase was accomplished without raising taxes. "I understood my direction clearly — that we were not to raise taxes," Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. told the board.

Board members wrestled for the better part of an hour on which part of the more than $300,000 in cost overruns to fund.

The most costly of the overruns, a $140,000 proposal to increase experienced teachers' salaries in steps 21 through 26, was turned down by the board.

MISD board President Jackie Hamilton said teacher steps "would be taken care of first thing next year."

CITY: Midland voters to decide on sales tax increase

(From 1A)

Retired Midlander Joe Castillo spoke against putting the proposal to a vote. He argued that on his fixed income, it would wind up costing him money that he didn't have.

Burns brought out figures compiled on the average home in Midland, which this year is valued at $65,000. For this average home owner, the extra half cent sales tax would amount to about $20 a year, Burns said.

In return, the cuts in property taxes would amount to about $64 a year, he said.

"For home owners, the answer is simple," Burns said. "You give us 20 and we'll give you 64," he said.

Edna Walger, a representative of Citizens Against Tax Payer Abuse, was staunchly against putting the measure to a popular vote.

"Six years ago, voters said they did not want the sales tax — what part of 'no' did you not understand?" Ms. Walger said.

Although a proponent of decreased taxes, Ms. Walger argued against the tax reduction and asked that the ½ cent sales tax for economic diversification be left alone on the ballot.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Connie Ladd was among those who addressed the City Council Tuesday on the proposal to increase the sales tax by ½ cent, along with decreasing property taxes 15-16 percent, to create an economic development fund.

Burns responded that he would not support one without the other, as this would weaken the overall effectiveness of the measure. "The property tax cut is a key component," Burns said.

Council members Dale Brown, Pat Schneider and Barry Simpson admitted to opposing the last sales tax for economic development election. But with more than 300 cities in Texas now empowered to make multi-million dollar deals for new industry, they voiced support for the new proposal.

> 'Six years ago, voters said they did not want the sales tax — what part of 'no' did you not understand?'
> — Edna Walger, representative of Citizens Against Tax Payer Abuse

Most citizens speaking at the meeting were supporting the proposal, and sustained applause broke out after the council voted to call the special election for Nov. 4. The council now will begin the search for appointees to the governing board.

MISD: Board votes down motion to open executive session

(From 1A)

Association, said "The TCTA was disappointed that the steps were not funded." She added, "I do believe we will get them next year."

Cindy Bond, a Lee High School economics teacher who is a member of the Midland Federation of Teachers, was not as positive. "Once again the MISD has paid for the Agreed Judgment on the backs of experienced teachers."

"I am not at all hopeful about next year," she said. "Not with this board; they have shown us how important we are."

"I really hate this," said MISD board President Jackie Hamilton. "We need to put students No. 1 before we look at stipends and raises."

Board members did see their way clear to hire 5½ clerks, so that each elementary school campus would have a full-time clerk.

Patty Bates, a secretary at Bush Elementary School asked board members Tuesday night to "give us the help we need."

"I like my job," Mrs. Bates said. "This would allow secretaries to do everything that needs to be done and meet their deadlines."

The staffing cost of the clerks is about $66,000 according to Martin.

Also funded by board members was an increase in the salaries of four interns at the secondary level, a part-time grant writer's position and a $600 increase in the stipend of four head golf coaches to make their salaries equivalent with other head coaches in the district.

Three of the seven board members felt a one-half cent tax increase was the best way to fund all the requests before them.

"Let's go for it," said board member Martha Manulik, who proposed increasing taxes by ½ cent. "No place in Midland, Texas, can people tell you that prices have stayed the same for the last five years. We need to be able to pay people to do their jobs."

"I don't understand how we can't go up and still provide what the district demands, which is exemplary performance," Mrs. Manulik said. "There is a difference in being managed well and being stingy."

"We should raise taxes and get on with it," board member James Fuller said.

Mrs. Manulik, Fuller and board member Adela Marmolejo voted in favor of the increase.

Martin compared MISD with other districts across the state.

The MISD cost per pupil is $4,053, compared with the state average of $4,692, Martin said. "This is $14 million to $15 million less district-wide than the average school district."

Martin told board members that student spending in the new budget was up 2.9 percent over last year.

Taxes on a $100,000 homestead in Midland are $1,176 a year as opposed to the state average of $1,309 per year.

Among the 50 largest districts in the state, the taxes on a $100,000 homestead average $1,355. Midland is included in the 50 largest districts, Baressi said. Midland currently ranks 35th among the 50 largest districts.

Martin told the board that Midland has a below average tax rate, and that taxes will remain below the state average even with the 6.5 percent increase approved by Midland voters in a bond election earlier this year.

Board members also took action to approve a public hearing on the 6.5 percent tax rate increase. "You must advertise to the community your intentions," Baressi said.

He noted that the district's final tax rate will be set in September.

If approved, the tax rate will rise to $1.44 from $1.38 per $100 of valuation.

In other action, Dr. Viola Coleman, a plaintiff-intervenor in the MISD Agreed Judgment, addressed the board. Ten other intervenors stood behind her at the podium during the presentation.

"I come before you again tonight to reiterate my offer to work together as co-partners," she said. "There are three new board members since I last addressed the board on this issue."

"Much has been said about the lack of trust on both sides," Dr. Coleman said. She noted that she would be willing to meet with board members as individuals or as a group to address this issue."

"The intervenors are interested in all children in Midland getting the best education the district can afford," she said.

Fuller made the motion that the executive session, following Tuesday's meeting, be open to the public as a show of "good faith."

"It should be nothing secret. The public needs to know what we are thinking," he said.

Fuller's motion was defeated.

"I will never stand up before them again asking to work with them, Dr. Coleman said. "I have to say I was ignored."

MISD board members and the district's attorneys went into executive session to discuss the matter of unitary status. The outcome of that meeting was not available at press time.

Conservatives decry Clinton's education plan

By Nancy Mathis
Hearst News Service

EDGARTOWN, Mass. — President Clinton's push for voluntary testing of the nation's fourth- and eighth-graders faces a tough test of its own, with critics decrying the proposal as redundant and a step toward a national curriculum.

Eight months ago, Clinton challenged the nation's schools to increase standards and test students to ensure they were meeting those standards.

He ordered the Education Department to develop a national test that fourth-graders and eighth-graders could begin taking in 1999.

The plan faces political attacks from many quarters and moves in the Republican-led Congress to shut off funding.

"There is a fanciful effort to find things wrong with it," said Mike Cohen, the president's education adviser.

Jennifer A. Marshall, the education policy analyst for the conservative Family Research Council, said: "A national test is a step toward a national curriculum." Many conservatives see a national curriculum as trodding on states' turf.

Mary Elizabeth Teasley, government relations director at the National Education Association, suggested politics was at play in Clinton's proposal.

"A part of this is also about defining the differences in the parties around issues of education," she said. "Every poll that's been taken says education will be the No. 1 issue again in 1998, even more important than it was in 1996. It outpaces crime."

A poll released Tuesday by Phi Delta Kappa, a professional society for educators, indicated that 57 percent of the American people back Clinton's testing plan. The survey showed an even greater number, 77 percent, said "establishing national standards" would help students "a great deal or quite a lot."

A leading opponent of the Clinton plan, Rep. Bill Goodling, R-Pa., claimed the poll shows public support is dropping.

"Just last week, the White House and the U.S. Department of Education indicated that more than 80 percent of the public support national tests," said Goodling, chairman of the House Education and Workforce Committee.

When Congress returns next month, Goodling will take a series of steps to stop the program. He intends to place an amendment in the Education Department's budget to bar expenses for developing the tests. He also has a resolution banning the department from developing any tests.

"We already have plenty of tests," Goodling said. "Nearly all the states have their own testing programs. Why have another measurement instrument to tell us what we already know?"

Some critics also question why the president wants to create a separate testing program instead of expanding the National Assessment of Education Progress tests. Those tests, which cover many subjects, are given to a sampling of students nationwide to keep track of their progress.

In a recent speech to the National Governors Association, Clinton acknowledged some problems.

"I know there is some reluctance here," he said. But he pledged that it was "not a federal government power grab" and that the national test would not interfere with state achievement tests.

"I do not believe that we will be the leading economy in the world 50 years from now unless we can do a more uniform job of getting people out of high school with excellent, world-class educations," Clinton said.

Despite the president's repeated challenge, which began with his inaugural address in January, the idea has hardly generated a groundswell of support.

Last month, Clinton's standards and testing proposal received its biggest boost when 15 urban school districts signed on. So far, only six states — North Carolina, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Kentucky and West Virginia — have embraced the idea.

Also, the department held an Aug. 19 session about the tests that representatives from 43 states attended. Cohen said the large attendance was a "sign of very serious interest" in the idea.

"As states look at what we've done, I think it will go forward and more places will come on board," Cohen said.

BUSH: Governor says he has his hands full

the state, there are some obligations and duties to help raise money for the Republican effort, and that's exactly what I did," Bush said.

"I was not interested in getting all involved in the swirl of presidential politics. ... Had I known this was going to be some giant beauty contest, where people were going to make a huge scene out of this, I don't know what I would've done. I might not have gone," he said.

Despite his repeated statements that he is not a candidate for president, Bush continues to be a focus of speculation.

He said again Tuesday he would address the "presidential question" when he formally announces he is running for re-election as governor later this year.

Some political observers note that getting re-elected is crucial if he indeed does have aspirations for higher office. A failed gubernatorial campaign in the nation's second biggest state would not do much to win the hearts of GOP voters across the country.

Bush, the 51-year-old son of former President George Bush, has enjoyed strong approval ratings in Texas.

He is not taking anything for granted despite his apparent popularity with Texas voters. He noted that his father also was quite popular a year before he lost to President Clinton in 1992, and that his predecessor, former Gov. Ann Richards, also seemed unbeatable.

"I'm focused on my re-election for governor," he said. "I've got my hands full in the state of Texas."

But he also will continue to travel outside the state "on occasion," he said. He has committed to three more fund-raisers outside the state — but none is in New Hampshire or Iowa, states with the earliest presidential primaries.

Others who spoke at the Indianapolis gathering were House Speaker Newt Gingrich; former GOP presidential contenders Lamar Alexander, Steve Forbes and Alan Keyes; and Sen. Fred Thompson of Tennessee.

Bosnian president mounts media campaign against former leader

BANJA LUKA, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs got their first taste of variety in TV programming Sunday when opponents of Radovan Karadzic aired a broadcast depicting a key supporter of the former leader as a criminal.

Until Sunday, all broadcasting in the Bosnian Serb substate born in the Dayton peace deal of 1995 was controlled from Pale, a Karadzic stronghold southeast of Sarajevo.

Supporters of President Biljana Plavsic — a former protege of Karadzic, the West's No. 1 war crimes suspect — organized the broadcasts. Plavsic accuses Karadzic and his aides of profiting while starving their people.

A source in the new broadcasting outlet, headquartered in the western city of Banja Luka, said programming began after technicians at a powerful transmitter 25 miles northwest of the city finished the necessary adjustments. Previously, all broadcasts went to Pale, where they could be checked for content before retransmission.

The range of the new outlet covers the western part of Bosnian Serb territory and reaches into areas controlled by the Karadzic camp. Plavsic's powerful new tool likely will widen the split slowly dividing Bosnian Serb territory into two entities.

Plavsic has NATO on her side in her fight with Karadzic, who had picked her to replace him as Bosnian Serb leader then watched her turn on him. But until Sunday, the Karadzic camp had the mightier weapon — a near media monopoly through state television.

> 'We got fed up with lies.'
> — Bosnian President Biljana Plavsic

NATO can protect Plavsic from physical harm. Last week, units of the NATO-led Bosnian peace force moved into Banja Luka, the western city that is her headquarters, to pre-empt any attack by pro-Karadzic police.

But NATO troops cannot mold public opinion the way television can. Mostly poorly educated, Bosnian Serbs generally believe what they see on the screen. And with the exception of a few, sparsely read independent or pro-Plavsic newspapers, there had been little alternative to pro-Karadzic state television and radio.

Since the struggle broke open in July, television has accused Plavsic of betraying Karadzic, the wartime leader in the struggle that gave Serbs their semi-independent substate in Bosnia. Broadcasts claimed she conspires with the enemy — NATO, which bombed the Serbs into accepting peace in 1995, and with the rest of the outside world.

Late Saturday, Bosnian Serb television officials bent to Western pressure and broadcast a week-old message of international support for the return of refugees to their prewar homes. Immediately after, however, they rebroadcast a video likening NATO troops to Nazi occupiers.

That broadcast followed a threat by the top international peace envoy in Bosnia, Carlos Westendorp, to shut down Bosnian Serb television because of its "deliberate misinformation, inflammatory commentary, insulting language and highly biased reportage."

Until Sunday evening, Plavsic's claims — that Karadzic and his aides are corrupt and keep the Bosnian Serb people impoverished — were barely heard outside Banja Luka. The new broadcasts debuted with a live report from a rally in Plavsic supporters.

"We got fed up with lies," Plavsic told 5,000 people attending Sunday's rally. She also said she will meet with army commanders on Monday — an occasion that should reveal how much support she has within the military.

A newscast followed. Among the items: accusations that Momcilo Krajisnik, a key Karadzic aide and member of Bosnia's joint presidency, is guilty of smuggling and bribing police, and word of aid to Serb refugees from the same international community that broadcasters in Pale condemn as enemies of the Serbs.

The new broadcasts are the work of 18 Serb TV journalists, based in Banja Luka, who went on strike Friday to protest censorship.

There were predictions of clashes with pro-Karadzic police units if Plavsic's people moved in on the transmitter. That was avoided because technicians already there decided to make the changes permitting broadcasting independent of Pale.

Given the bitterness of the struggle between Karadzic loyalists and Plavsic's supporters, few were surprised by the strident tone of the new TV outlet.

"Most likely they are to become utterly pro-Plavsic," said Perica Vucinic, editor of the Reporter, a biweekly partially funded by the U.S. government. "But still, the change is for the better."

Japan gripped by summertime crime wave

TOKYO (AP) — A woman is arrested after her husband's dismembered corpse is found rotting in their bathtub. A teen-age couple is caught trying to rob a bank. A man confesses to randomly assaulting dozens of young women with stones, beer bottles, metal pipes.

And that was just last week.

Japan has an international reputation for safe streets, but this summer has been gruesome — and authorities fear the rise in violence is more than just a seasonal fluke.

Throughout the summer, headlines have chilled Japanese because of the frequency of the crimes and the cold-bloodedness displayed by some criminals.

In the robbery department, Japan has seen two of its biggest armored car heists during the past month. In one, robbers got away with $900,000. No arrests have been made.

As for murders, Japan was shocked in June at the arrest of a 14-year-old Kobe boy suspected of killing two younger children; in July by the capture of two men in their 20s for the grisly murders of two young girls; and, this month, by the Bathtub Killing, so named because that is where most of the victim's body was found.

Japanese long have taken a special pride in crime rates that are among the lowest of the industrialized nations. That sense of security is beginning to erode, however.

"Every day we see hateful murders, crimes against small children and women," read one typically outraged letter recently to the editor of a major newspaper. "I don't think it will be so long until the Japanese islands are awash in crime."

The recurring involvement of children — as victims and perpetrators — frequently has been noted by commentators as a particularly unnerving aspect of the current rise in crime.

In the most disturbing case so far, the Kobe murders, police arrested the 14-year-old for allegedly murdering an 11-year-old neighbor and displaying the decapitated head outside a school gate.

The boy also is suspected of bludgeoning a 10-year-old girl to death and stabbing another girl in March. He is in custody and a family court has jurisdiction over his case.

The brutality of the murders resulted in widespread calls for tougher punishments of criminals in their early teens.

So far, the Justice Ministry has said high emotions over a single incident aren't a good reason to make major changes in the criminal system. Still, officials acknowledge that young offenders, especially violent ones, are becoming an increasingly difficult problem.

Summer crime statistics are not yet compiled, but police earlier this month reported that violent crimes committed by juveniles through the first half of the year had jumped by nearly 60 percent.

In the meantime, a growing number of Japanese are buying up personal safety devices, including mace sprayers disguised as lipstick cases and gadgets for children to send out an ear-splitting distress call with the pull of a pin.

"The Japanese used to think security was like water — that it could be taken for granted," said Shoichiro Takahashi, whose Toa Security Co. markets such goods nationwide. "With all the crime these days, they are beginning to have some serious doubts."

Yeltsin, Russians complain that Mir problems overdramatized

MOSCOW (AP) — Mir's crew was alive, well and breathing oxygen Tuesday, and the space station's main problem seemed to be crossed wires between NASA and Russian Mission Control.

Mir itself sailed on serenely, slowly regaining power after last week's successful repair mission.

NASA announced Monday that the station's oxygen-generating systems had gone down, igniting urgent news reports that caused a brief panic.

On the defensive after a string of mishaps in recent months, Russian officials insisted all was normal on board and lashed out at the reports of a serious problem.

"The station is alive and will live," declared President Boris Yeltsin, who has leaped to the Mir's defense during its recent travails with both praise and a proposed budget increase.

The widespread reports — all based on NASA information — characterized the latest trouble with the Mir's balky air supply systems as potentially serious.

NASA said both the main and backup oxygen-generating systems were not working, and that without swift repairs, the Russian-American crew might have to abandon the space station.

Russian ground controllers branded that "utter nonsense," saying a minor technical problem had been blown out of proportion. The two systems were both a bit obstinate, they said, but never failed simultaneously, and the problem with oxygen canisters was fixed by replacing an igniter. The trouble had passed even before NASA announced it.

"Don't worry — there is no reason to say that the air on board is bad, and we have no intention to stop the flight. Everything is fine," Mission Control chief Vladimir Solovyov said.

"As we are switching systems back on (after the repair mission) we are facing some problems, but none of them has had any impact on the station's operation, its life-support systems or the crew's environment," he said.

NASA officials in the United States made no comment Tuesday, and Mission Control aimed no criticism toward the American agency that has paid Russia about $472 million over five years to use Mir. The Russians said there was no need to change the system of communication.

"We think we coordinate things quite well" with NASA, Solovyov said. "It's all the media's fault."

The U.S. and Russian space programs approach problems differently. The Russians have been slow to report some incidents, and have expressed less concern about many others compared to NASA. After keeping Mir aloft for more than 11 years, the Russians view many breakdowns as routine and don't bother to announce them.

Mir has had more than 1,500 breakdowns during abou[illegible]00 days in space, or about one every 2½ days, space officials have said. Most are minor.

The Russians, for instance, waited hours before notifying NASA about the Feb. 23 fire aboard Mir and then played down its seriousness. It wasn't until American astronaut Jerry Linenger returned to Earth in May that NASA learned how harrowing the fire was.

NASA has not yet decided whether to send another American astronaut to Mir once Michael Foale returns in September, White House spokesman Barry Toiv said during a briefing from Martha's Vineyard, where President Clinton is vacationing.

"The safety factor obviously is the critical factor for us in determining whether an American astronaut goes on the Mir," Toiv said.

NASA spokeswoman Kathleen Maliga, based at Russian Mission Control, said she went home sick Monday and only heard about the oxygen malfunction late at night, after Russian officials had gone home.

It wasn't clear how NASA officials in Houston learned about the problems. Repeated telephone calls to NASA officials in the United States went unanswered Tuesday.

Yeltsin, speaking to Russian reporters on a trip to Saratov in south-central Russia, was upbeat about the Mir after last week's repairs.

"There is nothing tragic there," he said. "On the contrary, the guys did a fine job even in the opinion of American space experts, who believed that the station had already been written off."

Russian flight controllers said the crew was using newly restored power to recharge various systems.

Women's Care Update

FERTILE OPPORTUNITIES

Whether a couple is trying to conceive or avoid pregnancy, it is important to know when in a woman's cycle she is most likely to become pregnant. While some major studies concerning this window of opportunity suggest that it remains open from three to four days before ovulation to two to three days after, or even longer, a recent study by researchers from the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences suggests a shorter and different fertility window. Their study of 221 women indicates quite clearly that those who conceived during the course of the study did so within a six-day period in their cycles, ranging from five days before ovulation through the day of ovulation. None of the pregnancies occurred when intercourse followed ovulation. While the study is not definitive, the tests it used to confirm the time of ovulation and conception was more accurate than any previously available.

As they say, timing is everything For women who have been trying to conceive without luck, or for those who time their cycles in order to abstain when fertilization is likely, this study is of great interest. for women who've been unable to conceive, a comprehensive fertility work-up may save a lot of time and frustration -- sometimes, the problem preventing conception is one that can be simply and quickly corrected. Britain affirms commitment to Montserratians' choice

LONDON (AP) — Britain will help Montserrat residents move off their volcanic Caribbean island, but will not force anyone to leave and it still intends to spend millions of dollars on development there, officials said Tuesday.

About 5,000 of the island's 11,000 people still remain on Montserrat, one of the last outposts of the British empire. The others have fled since the Soufriere Hills volcano rumbled to life two years ago.

Britain will send its deputy development minister, George Foulkes, to Montserrat on Sunday to see the damage done by a series of eruptions and check the living conditions of people remaining on the island, 250 miles southwest of Puerto Rico. Many of them have spent months in overcrowded emergency shelters.

"He will talk to the people of Montserrat to enable them to make informed choices about their future and to ensure that the British government policy is clearly understood," Development Minister Clare Short said.

A voluntary evacuation offered by Britain last week attracted few takers.

Members of Britain's newly formed Montserrat Action Group agreed Tuesday on a strategy to help island residents exercise their choices, Foreign Secretary Robin Cook said.

"Those who wish to leave can do so and make new lives for themselves either in the U.K. or elsewhere in the region," Cook said. For those who stay, Britain will work "to ensure that the necessary infrastructure is there," he said.

In an article published Tuesday in The Times, Short said Britain is committed to spending $64 million on developing the north of the island, an area believed to be relatively safe, and $16.8 million to help relocate residents wanting to leave.

She wrote that problems developed after the Montserrat government said it wanted major development in the island's north and proclaimed that no residents there should be helped to leave.

"I said then, and have held the view ever since, that it is wrong to trap people on the island. They must be able to make their own choices," Short wrote.

Montserrat's chief minister, David Brandt, says that infrastructure projects in the north should be allowed to continue.

"People in Montserrat are still living in churches, in schools, they are still sleeping in their cars," he told British Broadcasting Corp. radio.

The British governor, Frank Savage, has acknowledged that some aid programs were on hold while the number of islanders intending to leave was being assessed.

Landslide survivor wished for death after wife died beside him

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — For a moment, when he realized his wife Sally lay dead beside him in the icy mud of a landslide, Stuart Diver wanted to die too.

"'Get it over with,' I thought. 'If you're going to take me, just do it. Cover me up and make it quick,'" said Diver, the sole survivor of a July 30 slide at a ski lodge that killed 18 people, including two Americans.

But the 27-year-old ski instructor also credits the memory of his wife for providing him with the spirit to survive 65 hours buried alive.

"In my heart, I know that it was Sally's will, her resilience of spirit, that gave me the strength I needed to hold out, to hold on, when all logic told me hope had vanished," he said.

In interviews published and broadcast Tuesday, Diver gave the first detailed accounts of his ordeal, which started when a landslide swept one ski lodge onto another at the Thredbo Alpine Village in southeast Australia's Snowy Mountains. Authorities suspect a stream had eroded the hillside.

Diver survived three days trapped in the icy water, with frostbitten feet as his only serious injuries. He believes he has yet to confront his grief, however — and plans a return to Thredbo.

That night at the lodge, after dinner and an early evening, a noise "like an explosion" awoke the couple, and a second later the world around them collapsed.

Everything was pitch black and choked with dust. Both survived the initial impact, and for a few seconds, Diver struggled to help his sobbing wife, whose body was pinned to the bed and whose head pointed down the mountain.

"She was screaming, and then I heard the water coming," Diver told the Channel Seven of the agonizing minutes as his wife drowned.

Trapped in a cavity barely mansized next to the body of his dead wife, death for him seemed "a pretty good option."

"It was hell. I am scared of the dark and I'm claustrophobic," Diver said.

But anguish turned to anger and that, along with the knowledge his relatives waited in hope outside, steeled his determination to survive.

"I couldn't let them down, not when I had come so far," he said.

As time wore on, Diver gradually lost feeling in his feet, and became hungry and thirsty. He drifted in and out of consciousness. Hallucinating periodically, fantasy and reality became difficult to distinguish, the passing of time vague.

"I could hear the work going on above me and I knew they were searching for people. They had to be. I could hear the machinery, the choppers. Even conversations," he said. "No matter how much I shouted or what noise I made, I couldn't make then hear me."

Rescuers first discovered Diver using sensitive sounding equipment. Early on Aug. 2, firefighter Steve Hirst called out, "Is anyone there?"

"That was the moment I came back to life," Diver said. "The second I heard that voice, I was alive."

Rescuers intensified their efforts, fearing more landslides. First physical contact came hours later, when paramedic Paul Featherstone poked a hand through a hole punched in the concrete wall. After more hours of digging, Diver was pulled free.

Diver is still amazed at his survival — a drama that had Australia riveted — and at the praise of him as a hero.

"I did what had to," he said. "I didn't pick myself out to survive — it just happened. That was fate."

Israeli tear gas hits Palestinian school, injures students

BETHLEHEM, West Bank (AP) — Coughing and crying, Palestinian girls ran out of their classrooms Tuesday when Israeli tear-gas canisters aimed at stone-throwing rioters landed in their Bethlehem schoolyard.

About a dozen third- and fourth-graders were treated for tear-gas inhalation. Palestinian police carried away those girls overcome by the gas.

The school's 650 tudents, dressed in gray- or green-striped uniforms, were forced to evacuate. Many covered their faces with handkerchiefs or pinched shut their noses.

Israeli troops fired rubber bullets at the Palestinian stone-throwers, injuring five of them.

Bethlehem has been the scene of daily protests this week against Israel's closure of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which bars Palestinians from entering Israel. The biblical town has been hardest hit: Its 60,000 residents are prohibited from leaving their city, and tourists cannot enter.

Israel imposed the closure July 30 in response to a suicide bombing by Islamic militants that killed 16 people at a Jerusalem market. Israel reportedly suspects that two militant leaders possibly linked to the bombing are hiding in Bethlehem.

The Palestinian Authority said Tuesday that the closure costs the Palestinian economy $8 million each day, including $3.2 million in lost wages of workers who cannot get to jobs in Israel.

The 1997 Palestinian budget deficit, initially expected to be around $51.8 million, will grow to $400 million because of the closure, said Khaled Salam, an economic adviser to Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat. The annual budget is about $800 million.

The Palestinian economics minister, Maher Masri, said a partial boycott of Israeli goods, called last week in retaliation for the closure, was being observed by Palestinian consumers and shopkeepers.

Tuesday's violence in Bethlehem began when 35 Palestinians threw stones and empty bottles at Israeli troops guarding Rachel's Tomb, an Israeli enclave in the Palestinian-controlled city.

Soldiers fired tear gas and rubber bullets to quell the riot. Seven tear-gas canisters landed in the nearby courtyard of the elementary school, witnesses said. Classrooms had their windows open because of the hot weather.

Soldiers complied with Palestinian requests to stop firing tear gas so the students could evacuate the school.

Cali mayor ordered arrested for drug corruption

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The mayor of Cali was arrested Tuesday in a widening of Colombia's drug corruption scandal.

Cali Mayor Mauricio Guzman surrendered to police after prosecutors ordered his arrest for allegedly accepting money from the drug cartel that long dominated both his city and the international cocaine trade.

Guzman, 42, who testified before prosecutors in Bogota last month, is suspected of taking $200,000 from a company fronting for the cartel to finance his election campaign.

He won office in 1994, when the now-jailed Cali cartel kingpins were at the height of their power.

The mayor, who studied public administration at Harvard University, has repeatedly denied wrongdoing and worked to promote Cali business and erase the city's image as a drug trafficking center.

Also Tuesday, a judge in Cali sentenced Manuel Francisco Becerra — a former comptroller, education minister and governor — to six years in prison for taking $375,000 from the Cali cartel to finance the 1994 congressional campaigns of political allies.

Becerra has been in jail for nearly two years awaiting sentencing. His lawyer said the sentence would be appealed.

THE LIVENS LAW FIRM
Stephen J. Livens, C.P.A. and Attorney cordially invite you to attend a free estate planning seminar
The Federal Government has recently changed the ESTATE TAX LAWS...Learn how the changes can affect you and your heirs.
If you own a home...or have assets worth at least $100,000...you owe it to yourself and your family to get the facts on living trusts. If you think you are protected by a simple will...think again...A Will guarantees that your estate will go through probate, which means your family may not be able to take possession of your estate for many months, or possibly years!
Plus, if your estate is over $600,000, your family may owe estate taxes which could amount to 37-55% of the value of your estate. This means that your family may have to sell some of the assets just to pay the estate taxes! A living trust avoids all of this by avoiding probate and minimizing estate taxes. Further, a living trust will protect your estate if you become incapacitated during your lifetime by avoiding a guardianship. This means your estate will be managed as you see fit, not as a court-appointed guardian sees fit.
To find out more about the benefits of living trust, attend one of these free seminars...

Building on campuses increases

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — The usual summer silence on the Bentley College campus was broken this year by the pounding of jackhammers and heavy equipment.

For the first time this decade, the private business university is building to meet an anticipated increase in enrollment. It's part of a national building boom at universities and colleges that were forced to delay construction projects during leaner times in the early 1990s.

But there's a twist. Much of the work is going into dormitories, student unions, dining services and fitness centers to meet rising expectations of new students, who university officials say pit one school against another based on amenities.

"We are compared to our competition, so if they have a fantastic athletic center, students want to know if we have a fantastic athletic center," said Joanne Yestramski, chief financial officer at Bentley, which has 6,400 students.

With tuition, room and board already at $22,310 a year, Bentley is spending $9 million to convert apartments into contemporary suites, remodel the cafeteria and build offices to accommodate the new faculty advisers demanded by students.

Competition isn't the only thing driving this boomlet, university officials said. Administrators cite renewed donations, low interest rates, rebounding enrollment and technological advances that require extensive rewiring. They also point out that some buildings dating from the last big expansion in American higher education in the 1960s are more than 30 years old.

"If things have been on the drawing board for a while, dollars are available again to do some construction," said Wayne Leroy, executive vice president of the Association of Higher Education Facilities Officers.

Dorms and dining halls are easiest to add or rebuild because the work can be underwritten using loans or bonds leveraged against future revenues from student fees, rather than contributions that could take years to collect.

But keeping up with the Joneses seems a major motivation.

"Having a gymnasium is not enough any more," said Retha Lindsey Fielding, spokeswoman for Keene State College in New Hampshire. "Our students are asking for a building where they can enjoy indoor recreation year-round. They want office space for their organizations and more than just books in the bookstore."

St. John's University in New York and William Paterson University in New Jersey are building food courts with Burger King, Taco Bell and other franchises, while Notre Dame is upgrading a food service facility to increase menu selections to more than 100 entrees. It is also renovating three residence halls and building a new recreation center, and has already spent $7 million on a residence hall computer network.

These trends make some uneasy. Critics contend the flurry of construction hides the fact that classrooms and offices continue to be neglected. Two industry associations estimate American colleges and universities need $26 billion in long-delayed maintenance.

"Revenue-producing buildings are easy to justify, but many of us are not solving our deferred maintenance problem because it's hard to raise money for maintenance," said William Brown, president of Bryan College in Tennessee, which plans a new fitness center, student union and dormitory renovations.

Many of the improvements also come with extra costs for students and their parents — not in tuition, but in separate residence and dining fees.

The new apartment suites opening this week at the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay, for example, have private rooms with common living areas and cost students $2,280 per year — $400 more than traditional dormitories.

Air bag debate continues

Associated Press

Airbags have been blamed for 80 deaths — including 44 children — in low-speed accidents they otherwise would have survived, according to federal records.

WASHINGTON — Can Americans be trusted to decide whether they want to be protected by automobile air bags?

That question has been perplexing federal regulators, automakers and safety advocates for nearly nine months, with no date set yet for a decision.

"The proposal all along has been to allow some form of disconnection," Phil Frame, a spokesman for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, said Tuesday. "How you achieve that ... has been the discussion."

A decision originally was expected in the spring but has dragged on in the face of opposition from various interest groups. Frame said action is planned soon, but he declined to be more specific.

An estimated 2,000 lives have been saved by air bags in recent years, according to the agency.

But the devices have also been blamed for 80 deaths — including 44 children — in low-speed accidents they otherwise would have survived, according to federal records.

Youngsters and smaller people, mostly women, appear most vulnerable to serious or fatal injuries when struck by the rapidly expanding bags, a situation that has roused public fears.

In January, NHTSA, which regulates auto safety, suggested allowing vehicle owners to have their air bags disconnected. The proposal came amid a continuing series of reports of air-bag-related fatalities. It was endorsed by President Clinton.

A month earlier the agency had appeared to rule out cutoff switches because officials were convinced they would divert automakers' resources from developing more technologically advanced air bags.

However, General Motors Corp. began to push for the switches and Ford Motor Co. soon followed suit. The automakers are also working on air bags that deploy with less force.

Automakers, insurers and air-bag suppliers have lobbied the government intensely to limit air-bag deactivation to special cases when a vulnerable passenger must sit in front, such as for a medical reason. The industry wanted the agency to define who was at risk and grant waivers to disconnect air bags on a case-by-case basis, as it does now.

Already swamped with nearly 15,000 requests from consumers for waivers to disconnect air bags, officials said restricting who could deactivate an air bag would impose a large administrative burden and would prevent consumers from making their own decisions.

Hundreds of citizens — especially the short and elderly women — have written the agency saying they should have the choice.

Some air-bag advocates have urged shutoff switches as the better option, contending it gives consumers the flexibility of leaving the bag on or off depending on the circumstances of each trip.

The debate has been under way throughout this year with periodic reports that federal officials were leaning one way or the other.

Police launch area task force in wake of attacks

New York Times Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — Law enforcement authorities from seven Oakland-area agencies have launched a task force to investigate a string of sexual attacks on women during the past six weeks.

The task force, which convened for the first time Monday, pledged to have daily sessions to share information and pool resources in the search for one or more suspects linked to at least 13 assaults.

The meeting came the same day as a 19-year-old woman was sexually assaulted in a North Berkeley housing cooperative, but escaped rape when the assailant "was physically unable to do so" and abandoned the woman tied up and blindfolded in a bathroom, Berkeley police Capt. Bobby Miller said.

Authorities said, however, they did not consider Monday's attack part of the serial investigation because the woman said her assailant, who wore black clothing and a mask, was about 5-feet-6, much smaller than the attacker described by victims in other attacks reported in Oakland, Berkeley, Hayward and San Leandro.

"It could be a copycat," said Oakland police Capt. Pete Dunbar, leader of the task force.

As authorities continued their investigation, women gathered for a rally at the Bay Area Rapid Transit's MacArthur station just a few blocks from where one of the assaults occurred earlier this month.

"What fear and terrorism does is it takes away our joy," said Linci Comy, an Oakland resident and martial arts expert.

The Hand to Hand self-defense center of Oakland offered a free workshop in the BART plaza to teach women techniques they could use if they were attacked. Yelling something as simple as "Back Off! Stop!" can deter an attack, they were told.

Anarchist festival flares in Nevada desert

Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — On the blank expanse of the northern Nevada desert, a temporary city has arisen that will be home to artists, performers and free spirits drawn to what may be the ultimate anarchist party.

Burning Man, a festival that began 11 years ago on a San Francisco beach as a woeful tribute to scorned love, starts Wednesday and culminates Labor Day weekend with the torching of a 40-foot-tall wooden man in a barren desert basin.

"Events like this are kind of needed, to go someplace and be really goofy," said participant Jarico Reese of Los Angeles. "It brings creative people together."

Thousands are expected to attend the esoteric mix of pagan fire ritual and sci-fi Dada circus where some paint their bodies, bang drums, dance naked and wear costumes that would draw stares in a Mardi Gras parade. One woman last year wore oil funnels on her breasts Madonna-style, with more funnels extending from her ears.

"We are, in terms of art jargon, outsider art," said founder Larry Harvey, a Bay Area artist.

A mile-long esplanade will be lined with large-scale works, such as Jim Mason's "Temporal Decomposition," a huge ice sundial with clocks and watches frozen inside. The melting sculpture will be covered with 50 gallons of cherry snow cone syrup and offered for communal licking.

> 'Events like this are kind of needed, to go someplace and be really goofy. It brings creative people together.'
> —Jarico Reese, festival participant

Mason, a sculptor, said the event intrigues and inspires artists.

"The project has captured the imagination of a lot of people," he said. "Something is happening here."

What that "something" is — and the prospect of more than 15,000 people sprawled across the remote desert 150 miles north of Reno — worry Washoe County officials.

The county imposed a list of conditions, including an $11 million insurance policy and money up front to pay for law enforcement and fire protection. Most of the conditions have been met.

"It will be a disaster if we let 10,000 to 15,000 people out there with no restrictions," Sheriff Dick Kirkland said. "Whatever is going to happen out there is going to happen, so maybe we should figure the best way to manage it, to salvage it."

The makeshift Black Rock City is a conglomeration of "theme camps."

They include the "Alien Abduction Camp" and "Womb with a View," where, according to the program, "you walk through a 74-foot-long pregnant female body, complete with orifice entrance, torso and breasts." "Blowin' in the Wind" will attempt to create the world's largest wind chime.

Many of the creative works, along with the wooden man himself, are burned during the festival's finale after sunset on Sunday. For that reason, the county demanded on-site firefighters.

The ritual began in 1986 when Harvey built a man representing his girlfriend's new love and burned it on San Francisco's Baker Beach. The event was moved to Nevada's Black Rock Desert as the annual bonfire drew increasingly large numbers of people.

When 10,000 people showed up last year at a site on public land in neighboring Pershing County, northeast of Reno, county commissioners there worried that the festival was getting out of control.

Three people were injured, one critically, by a drunken driver who slammed into their tent. A man was killed when his motorcycle ran head-on into a van.

By holding the festival on a private ranch this year, organizers said they will be better able to control vehicles, which will be banned in camping areas.

Festival-goers are warned to bring their own food, shelter, and most importantly, lots of water. In late August, the desert is unforgiving, with daytime temperatures near 100 under a scorching sun and overnight lows in the 40s.

Pledge week leads to death at LSU fraternity

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — One Louisiana State University student died and three others were hospitalized Tuesday after a drinking binge to celebrate fraternity pledge week, the chancellor said.

The student died of acute alcohol poisoning, said deputy coroner Chuck Smith. An initial autopsy showed the blood-alcohol level to be nearly six times what is considered legally drunk, Smith said.

A final autopsy report will not be available for weeks, he said.

School Chancellor William Jenkins said there was no evidence that anyone had been forced to drink as part of any hazing ritual.

LSU has long had a reputation as a "party school" where many students drink heavily. The death comes a week after the Princeton Review, not affiliated with Princeton University, published a guide for high school seniors that listed LSU as tenth on a list of the nation's top party schools.

Campus police received an emergency call from the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house early Tuesday, just after midnight, and found about a dozen people passed out on the floor, LSU police chief Randy Watts said.

They had been drinking off campus, Jenkins said. Alcohol is illegal on campus and none had been found during a routine check of all fraternity houses on Monday, he said.

"What is frustrating is that there is no way to manage them (students) off campus," Jenkins said. "It is difficult enough managing on campus."

Watts said he could not yet say if the students did their drinking in a bar.

A bar could lose its license for selling liquor to anyone under the age of 21 and the dead student, Benjamin Wynne, of Covington, was 20, officials said.

Ages of the other students weren't available. Two were released after treatment and one remained hospitalized in stable condition.

This is the first full week of class on the campus of 28,000 students and a number of the 20 fraternity houses had parties Monday, including SAE with its 130 members and pledges.

Disciplinary action could be taken against the fraternity but nothing can be done until the investigation is complete, Jenkins said.

Despite its reputation, heavy drinking at LSU is "a myth," said university health services coordinator Nancy Matthews.

Surveys taken at LSU "show that we are about average" compared to other colleges and universities when it comes to drinking and drugs, said Matthews. About one-fourth of the students report drinking or using drugs frequently, one-fourth do not use drugs or alcohol and the rest imbibe only infrequently, she said.

Signs were posted on the front doors of several fraternity houses Tuesday telling members and pledges not to talk to reporters. The person who answered the SAE phone hung up when the caller identified himself as an Associated Press reporter.

Vacation goes on for Clintons

OAK BLUFFS, Mass. (AP) — Most of the guests had left, the parking lot was nearly bare, the waiters gone, but President and Mrs. Clinton partied on, singing rock 'n' roll tunes and sharing kisses on the dance floor.

"It was party, party, party. After that, they may want to rest up — at least their vocal cords," Josh Silverman, a White House spokesman, said Tuesday, just hours after the first couple called it a night.

The Clintons continued their Martha's Vineyard vacation routine Tuesday, with the president emerging later than usual — in early afternoon — from the 20-acre estate where the first couple are staying for three weeks.

Hillary Rodham Clinton spent a quiet day on the property, reading and walking, while a refreshed looking president hit the golf course before hitting the dinner party circuit for the seventh time in the 10 days.

"Too far right!" Clinton shouted after teeing off on the first hole in his fourth full round in a week. "It didn't go in the woods did it?"

Nah, but close, prompting onlookers to call out, "Fetch! Fetch!"

The president, who hit a bucket of balls before play, was partnered with Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J. Clinton's pal, attorney Vernon Jordan, and Tommy Lee of the Democratic National Committee completed the foursome.

Earlier Tuesday, the Clintons closed the Farm Neck Golf Club, ending their partying around 1 a.m., not long after the president requested a reprise of "In the Midnight Hour," and led stragglers in a swaying song.

"Thank you all!" Mrs. Clinton cried into the cool and starry night after her husband gave a thumbs up and goodbye to his fellow warblers.

The president's frequent golfing partner, Jordan and his wife, Ann, organized the party under an open-air white tent with Christmas lights and torches for illumination and salmon and tenderloin for sustenance.

The 120 guests included island regulars Walter Cronkite, Diane Sawyer, The Washington Post's Katharine Graham, politicians and administration officials and Clinton friends. Sylvester Stallone read a speech from his new movie, "Copland," but the music was the main hip-swiveling entertainment.

The president, a rhythm and blues aficionado, spent much of the five-hour evening standing in front of the Gordon Healy band, requesting song after song and clapping, singing and dancing.

Jobless rating favors strong fall

The unemployment rate for Midland fell to 4.2 percent in July, which indicates a strong local economy going into the months of fall. That could mean that Midland businesses will finish 1997 with an exceptionally strong showing.

In fact, noted Donna Duree, district manager for Manpower, "Those wanting to work have a job. Others are making a transition, moving from one company to another; some are relocating, but not many. The new businesses that have come to town have also added to the tight labor market."

Essentially, said Ms. Duree, "Industry out here is looking pretty good."

Promising to make the employment outlook even better, the survey is projecting a 6 percent increase in hiring in the final three months of this year with the best employments prospects existing in durable and non-durable goods manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade and services.

In fact, 16 percent of the local companies questioned in the Employment Outlook Survey indicated they plan staffing increases while 10 percent expect cutbacks and 58 percent anticipate no change. The remaining 16 percent were uncertain what they would do.

Ms. Duree also noted that "there's an increase in employers needing more workers and that's made the market pretty tight."

Overall, that employment outlook bodes well for job-seekers in Midland this fall — and should help to create a strong final quarter for Midland business and industry. That's positive for all Midlanders!

Video confronts insurance fraud

PORTLAND, Maine — Dollar-wise, insurance fraud is the largest economic crime in the country.

Anderson

Yet prosecutors across the United States only rarely charge a con artist with insurance fraud, and even if convicted, chances are he'll get little or no time in prison. This happens despite the fact that Americans pay significantly more for goods and services when insurance prices go up because of fraud.

That's one of the ongoing frustrations of the nation's top insurance companies, many of whom have had aggressive Special Investigative Units (SIUs) in place for several years now.

"It's hard to get them interested in these kind of cases," confided a source at the UNUM Corp., the largest disability insurer in the country. Disability insurance is an $11 billion annual business, and UNUM writes about $1 billion of that total.

UNUM has had an SIU operating since 1988, but it was bubbling along for years under the assumption that only 1 to 2 percent of the claims were fraudulent. "We knew there would always be people who would cheat, and we at first thought it wouldn't be that many," a UNUM official told our associate Dale Van Atta.

But in 1994, after checking a variety of data, UNUM discovered that fraud probably accounted for about 10 percent of the claims it paid out.

Sometimes, it is extraordinary the lengths to which people will go to "retire" on lucrative disability claims.

A 38-year-old Florida dentist, for instance, had his own finger chopped off to collect on a $72,000-a-year disability policy, which would have continued, with annual increases, through age 65.

Dr. John Rende agreed to have a pair of brothers, Robert and Kenneth Alberton, chop off his right index finger with an axe. The Jacksonville dentist got $1.3 million from the Albertons' homeowner's insurance company for the "woodcutting accident."

Because he could no longer practice dentistry without the crucial digit, Dr. Rende was set to collect disability for nearly three decades. But he got frightened when the Albertons began blackmailing him for a bigger cut, and Rende went running to confess to the FBI.

In 1994, Dr. Rende was sentenced to 27 months in jail for his part in the fraud. The Albertons were sentenced to 33 months each, and all are required to make restitution.

County and state prosecutors tell UNUM and other insurance companies not to bother alerting them unless the money collected is more than $100,000 — or the insurance company caught the claimant on camera doing something he wasn't supposed to be able to do.

When it comes to catching a crooked claimant, nothing equals the value of a video camera. A picture may be worth a thousand words, but videotape is worth tens of thousands of dollars and more in the disability and workers' compensation arena.

"Surveillance investigations are a powerful tool which will pay for themselves by a factor of five to 10," an Oregon state investigator told us. In one year there, some $2 million was saved when video surveillance proved seven individuals fraudulently claimed to be "permanently partially disabled."

The same is true around the country. For instance, a sympathetic judge in New Orleans was noticeably moved when a restaurant worker wept uncontrollably while describing how the pain of his back injury meant he could no longer putter around in his beloved garden. The judge stopped the trial, handed the workers' comp claimant a tissue and waited until he could continue.

But the judge's visage changed noticeably as he watched a two-hour tape of the claimant shoveling fertilizer from his truck. The case was over.

A North Carolina official with the state workers' compensation commission told of a chairman who became so incensed that an insurance carrier was offering an insultingly small sum to an injured worker that he called the carrier's lawyer to ream her out.

"This fellow walked around with a walker, and so on," the state official recalled. "Our medical records indicated this person was almost certainly a permanent total disability case, and would have a long, slow road to recovery. Our then-chairman saw a settlement agreement for a relatively modest amount of money to terminate the case. And the chairman got angry. He got really, literally angry. He knew the lawyer for the insurance company and picked up the phone. He asked her what they were trying to pull.

"She said, 'Just calm down and wait for my videotape to get there.' And they had a tape of this fellow using one of these big gas-powered weed-eaters. He was walking along doing weeding on one side of this wrought-iron fence, and then he'd vault over the fence and do the other side of the fence."

ANOTHER VIEW

Paying taxes by card could benefit some

Any move to make it easier for Americans to conduct their necessary business with the Internal Revenue Service should be welcomed.

Still, one can't help but have at least a little concern about a proposal to allow Americans to pay federal taxes with credit, debit or charge cards. The tax legislation signed into law by President Clinton recently contains a little-noticed provision that permits such transactions.

This certainly would reduce some of the Internal Revenue Service's costs. Credit and debit card transactions are essentially electronic. ...

But considering that Americans already carry record levels of high-interest credit card debt, it seems almost certain that some people will make their tax problems worse by adding them to credit debt at double-digit interest rates. ...

Despite these misgivings, it's not a bad idea.

For many people, paying with plastic allows them the small satisfaction of gaining frequent flyer miles or other credit card incentives in exchange for the tax bite. And with debit cards coming into increasing use, that option makes some sense, too.

I got in considerable trouble with my sister by telling her daughter a joke about kudzu. It was the one about the Yankee who asked the old farmer how to plant the vine. "Throw it on the ground and run like hell," the farmer advised.

Johnson

My niece, Chelsey, waited until her Brownie troop held a parents' night and then proudly repeated the story. None of the Kentucky Brownies — and only a few of the adults present — knew about kudzu.

The Brownie leader chastised Chelsey for her language. The other parents looked askance. My poor sister was mortified.

I don't usually cuss around children, but that joke seems the best way to explain kudzu to the uninitiated. It grows a foot a day and covers 7 million acres in the South. To people outside our region, however, it's a real novelty.

Long ago I wrote a column about a Huntsville, Ala., man who had created a screenplay for a horror movie that featured killer kudzu. It was scary stuff, if you knew the creeping vine.

I felt a little sorry for him, considering movie moguls mostly hail from other parts of the country. I doubt the writer ever sold his story. Who would believe a pretty vine with sweet-smelling purple flowers could be sinister?

Personally, I love kudzu. I love its topiary effect on telephone poles and pine trees, the way it covers an abandoned house like so much trash under a rug. You can make baskets with the vines and tea from its leaves. Besides, it's one Southern thing that thwarts those dedicated to bulldozing away regional distinctions.

So it bothered me a little when I read a story about a U.S. Forest Service discovery that may rid us of kudzu. In South Carolina foresters found a field of kudzu being eaten up by caterpillars. The soybean looper is a caterpillar loaded with parasites, giving it a voracious appetite that makes it overeat and then die. Scientists think this looper with the munchies might be a better solution than herbicides for getting rid of the weed.

The plan brings to my mind the Great Alligator and Beaver Debacle of Leland, Miss. That little town sits alongside a beautiful creek and once had a problem with its beaver overpopulation. So Leland imported alligators to control the beavers. Guess what?

Then there was the story I read in a book called "True Tales of the Everglades." Coloradan developer Richter Clyde Perky bought himself Sugarloaf Key, Fla., in 1919. He paid $10,000 for the island and planned to build a fancy resort.

When Perky discovered that mosquitoes made Sugarloaf uninhabitable, he sought the help of one Charles Campbell, a San Antonio physician. Campbell had patented a bat tower baited with bat droppings and ground sex organs of female bats. The towers and gross bait cost Perky more than he paid for the island itself. The smell from the bait was so bad that people working nearby complained. The bats also kept their distance.

"Legend has it that Keys mosquitoes ate the bats, not the other way around," author Stuart McIver wrote.

You can still see one of the bat towers, now designated a historic landmark. "Dedicated to good health at Perky, Fla, by Mr. and Mrs. R.C. Perky, March 15, 1929," an inscription says.

It's not nice, or easy, to fool Mother Nature. Fiddle with the fundamentals and compound the problem. Maybe the only way to handle kudzu is to run like hell.

A hundred grand doesn't buy the access it used to MARTHA'S VINEYARD — It goes without saying that everyone on Martha's Vineyard wants to see the president.

Nobody wanted to see him more than Luke Larson.

Buchwald

Larson's neighbors back in Toledo knew that Luke was on the island, and if he didn't see the president at least once he would turn out to be one of Toledo's stumblebums.

The night Clinton arrived on the island Luke rushed out to the airport only to discover that he had missed him by 10 minutes. He watched tearfully as the president and his entourage disappeared down a dirt road.

His wife told him, "Why don't you go to the golf course tomorrow morning? He's sure to show up."

Luke got up at 5 and went out to Farm Neck Golf Course. He set up his portable chair and started on his doughnut and coffee. By 8 o'clock there were hundreds of people standing around, hoping to get a glimpse of the prez.

In the distance Luke could see four figures surrounded by Secret Service men advancing toward a fence. Just at that moment a man on a large motorized lawn mower yelled at the crowd, "Please move out of the way — I have to cut the grass."

Luke yelled, "But the president is coming."

"That's why I have to mow the lawn now. He doesn't want to lose his ball."

Everybody moved away from the fence, and no one caught so much as a glimpse of Mr. Clinton.

Luke was so discouraged that he went home for a bowl of clam chowder.

His wife said, "I hear that Ted Danson and Mary Steenburgen are giving a birthday party for the president's 51st. Maybe you could see him from the road in Chilmark."

Luke let out a triumphant yell, dashed out of the house and drove up South Road. He parked his car, climbed onto the roof and tried to peek over a stone wall. Nothing. Then he heard sirens and ran to the side of the road. In front of the presidential vehicle was a TV truck with a cameraman on the roof. It completely obscured Luke's view — all he saw was the side of the truck with the lettering: "Channel 5 — All the News When You Want It." When he got back to his car there was a parking ticket on the windshield. The fine was $50.

Feeling dejected, Luke went home and took a hot bath.

The next day he heard that the president was going boating. He went down to the dock of the Edgartown Yacht Club only to discover that the boat had been moved to the Vineyard Haven Yacht Club.

This made him sick. He walked home and said to his wife, "That does it. I'll never give $100,000 to a Clinton campaign again."

FDA seeks apple juice warning labels

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the fall apple season starts, the Food and Drug Administration asked makers of unpasteurized apple juice and cider Tuesday to warn customers that the drinks could contain bacteria dangerous to children, the elderly and people with weak immune systems.

Only a small share of the nation's apple juice is not heat-treated to kill potentially deadly bacteria such as E. coli. But the FDA's call for voluntary warning labels comes after an E. coli outbreak in unpasteurized apple juice a year ago killed a child and sickened 66 other people.

The FDA said its request was just a first step, taken because it didn't have time to complete stronger federal rules governing all unpasteurized juices before fall harvests.

Later this fall, the FDA said, it will propose forcing makers of all untreated juices to take new safety steps.

Critics questioned whether the interim call for voluntary warning labels came too late — apple season already is starting now in northern states.

"This is not a little Montezuma's revenge or flu-like bout with diarrhea," warned Laurie Girand of the advocacy group Safe Tables Our Priority. Her daughter was hospitalized for a week and required two blood transfusions last year after drinking unpasteurized apple juice in California.

But small cider producers say the FDA's plans could put them out of business. If they're ultimately forced to pasteurize, the equipment alone could cost about $40,000.

"I wasn't even aware of E. coli being in cider," said Rick Kimes, owner of Kimes Cider Mill in Bendersville, Penn.

He said he has no plans to put warning labels on his cider, nor to begin pasteurizing it, a heat treatment that easily kills E. coli. Pasteurization, Kimes argued, would destroy cider's distinctive tangy taste and turn it into traditional apple juice.

But one small cider maker who quietly began "flash pasteurizing" after last year's outbreak says consumers are demanding the change.

McCutcheon's Apple Products of Frederick, Md., didn't immediately label its cider as flash-pasteurized for fear that customers who demand an "all-natural" cider wouldn't buy. But now, says Robert McCutcheon III, customers are so scared of E. coli that they don't mind the slight change in flavor that the method causes.

"We've had people take unpasteurized cider to the register, say 'Is it pasteurized?' and when you say no, they take it back and leave the store," McCutcheon said. "After last year, a lot of our customers are looking forward to having a pasteurized product."

Once thought a threat only in undercooked meat, virulent E. coli now has surfaced repeatedly in apple cider. The biggest outbreak came last year among children who drank a trendy gourmet brand of unpasteurized apple juice. Cider is another name for unpasteurized apple juice.

Other unpasteurized juices can be risky, too. Salmonella, for instance, has surfaced in unpasteurized orange juice. But apple cider is getting special attention because E. coli outbreaks, although rare, are increasing.

In addition to the voluntary warning labels, the FDA this month will work with the apple industry to educate cider processors and consumers about the E. coli risk.

Later, the FDA will propose requiring makers of all unpasteurized juices to adopt a stringent new safety program tracking juices from harvest to grocery store.

Nurse visits prove useful, study finds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unmarried poor mothers regularly visited by nurses were less likely to use drugs, collect welfare, abuse their children or tangle with the law, according to a study that followed the families for 15 years.

While the program was conducted in the rural, mostly white town of Elmira, N.Y., a companion study found similar, early results among black women in Memphis, Tenn.

The findings give new hope to researchers frustrated by the difficulty of working with teen mothers, who historically have gone on to long-term welfare dependence.

"It's among the most encouraging evidence we have," said Rebecca Maynard of the University of Pennsylvania, who studies home visiting and other programs aimed at teen mothers but was not involved in this research.

Other home-visiting programs have not produced such positive results, and researchers are unsure what makes this one different.

One key may be the use of nurses who began offering medical, child-rearing and life-skills advice to women pregnant with their first child. The regular visits continued until the child turned 2.

"Mothers and other family members can trust what nurses have to say," said lead researcher David Olds, a pediatrics professor at the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center who began working in Elmira in 1977. His research was being published Wednesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

But expanding the program on a broad scale poses problems, including how to pay for it and how to duplicate it without losing what makes it work.

"Will the program still work if it is a large-scale social program run by public agencies, rather than a locally controlled experiment run by scientists who were heavily invested in their theoretical model?" asked an editorial written by Terrie E. Moffitt of the Institute of Psychiatry in London.

Still, Moffitt called the results "impressive" and suggested they might hold a key to the profound troubles of the poor.

The federal government is studying whether a similar program that used non-nurse visitors was effective in Chicago, Portland, Ore., and Dayton, Ohio. Olds also is running an experiment in Denver using non-nurses, who are paid much less.

North Korean officials given asylum, defect to United States

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Korea's ambassador to Egypt defected to the United States, apparently the highest-ranked diplomat from the secretive communist Asian country to take refuge here. The prize could be valuable information on North Korean missiles.

Chang Sung Gil defected along with his brother Chang Sung Ho, a diplomat on a trade mission to Paris, the State Department announced Tuesday. The two officials were granted asylum, and their families defected with them, said department spokesman James P. Rubin.

The ambassador had, at a minimum, a bird's eye view of North Korean missile transactions in the Middle East. Iran received most of the technology, a source of concern for the United States and Israel, a senior U.S. official said Tuesday.

North Korea also sent technology to Syria and Egypt and is a major supplier in other areas of the world, said officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Upcoming Wednesday was a third round of U.S. negotiations with North Korea to try to curb its missile sales and a buildup at home. And, the Clinton administration was deciding whether to suspend trade with an Egyptian company for dealing with North Korea, one of the officials said.

Rubin, the State Department spokesman, gave few details on the defections and asylum. "Cases of this nature are very sensitive to concerns involving the people, and their interests are always very sensitive," he said.

Chang Sung Gil left his post in Cairo and almost simultaneously his brother left his assignment with a North Korean trade mission in Paris. Egyptian government sources said in Cairo that Chang was flown out on Monday using a false name and American travel document.

AP Photo

North Korean Ambassador to Egypt Chang Sung Gil is seen in this image from Egyptian Televison during his Aug.19 meeting with the Egyptian minister of state. Chang Sung Gil has defected and been granted asylum in the United States, possibly bringing valuable information about his country's missile sales to Iran and Syria.

His defection was the first by a senior diplomat from the communist state. In 1991 and 1996, two mid-level diplomats in Congo and Zambia defected to Seoul separately.

President Clinton, after teeing off on the first hole Tuesday at the Farm Neck Golf Club on Martha's Vineyard, told reporters he had been briefed on the defection. He gave no details.

At the Pentagon, Navy Capt. Michael Doubleday declined to answer whether the U.S. military had provided any assistance to the defectors, such as providing transportation to the United States.

In the past, North Korea delivered entire missile systems to Iran, but Tehran has advanced to the point where North Korea helps now with technology and training.

According to U.S. and South Korean officials, North Korea can produce 150 Soviet-designed Scud missiles a year and has sold 370 to Arab countries.

The Pentagon, in a report last year, said North Korea had significantly advanced its nuclear, chemical and ballistic missile programs during the previous 10 years and maintains chemical warfare and ballistic missile capabilities.

Three days of talks on North Korea's spread of nuclear technology were to open Wednesday morning at the U.S. mission to the United Nations in New York. "We don't believe this will have any effect on the missile talks," Rubin said, nor on preliminary peace talks planned next month.

"Nor do we see this as connected to some collapsing of the leadership, or anything of that nature," in Pyongyang, Rubin said. There, a highly secretive regime was induced by the United States in 1994 to freeze its nuclear weapons program in exchange for energy shipments and new reactors, provided mostly by South Korea.

The United States and South Korea are trying to wear down communist insularity, using trade and diplomatic openings as bait.

Still, there is deep U.S. suspicion of Pyongyang. When the Clinton administration declared its support last week for Canadian-led efforts to ban the production and use of land mines, the State Department said it would seek an exception for land mines on the peninsula.

Firm to provide airport retail area

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A San Diego company has won the bids for operating food, beverage and gifts facilities in the new Midland International Airport terminal building — with capital investments above the amount specified in the bids.

The company's bid to operate in the new terminal was approved after a unanimous vote of the Midland City Council Tuesday.

In the bids, the Midland City Council required that about $1.2 million be spent in completing the food court, lounge and retail areas of the new terminal.

Creative Host Services and the Paradise Shops, however, presented a plan to spend $1.4 million on those areas, or about $250 per square foot to make the facilities aesthetically pleasing and match the architectural styles of the terminal building as a whole.

"This is a benchmark day for the airport terminal," said Ken Day, director of airports for the city.

The Creative Host Services proposal will fill out the food court portion of the terminal building with Little Caesar's, Creative Croissants, The Grill, Haute Dogma, Panache, Southwest Treasures, I Can't Believe It's Yogurt, and The Grove Wine & Spirits.

Food choices will include healthy choices, travelers' favorites and local southwestern menu items, according to Creative Host officials.

The Sports Bar would consist of a brew pub, video wall and television monitors. The Business Lounge will include a fax and copy area with a small library area with computer stations and Internet access.

This will be the 47th airport in the nation to be serviced by this company, said Creative Host official Dick Dickson.

The company has been voted No. 1 in customer satisfaction in their airport terminal operations, according to Dickson.

Company officials plan to survey the city to ensure they provide "street-level" (competitive) pricing in their stores and restaurants. The terminal and all facilities are slated to be open in January 1999.

In other business, council members:

- authorized the Oct. 4 and 5 air show at the Midland International Airport;
- accepted the proposed budget on first reading for the 1997-98 fiscal year;
- approved on second and final reading the establishment of a public improvement district that will provide city water access, assessing half of the cost against property owners in a rural section of northwest Midland;
- approved a zone change for a shopping center complex east of Loop 250 West and north of Anetta Drive; and
- approved a 135-foot wireless communications tower for Poka Lambro Telephone Co-op Inc., to be constructed at the southwest corner of the intersection of Caldera Drive and Billingsley Boulevard.

AUSTIN — Another rental car company has agreed to make refunds to Texans who purchased liability insurance coverage from it, bringing to $13 million the total of refunds due just over 1 million consumers. The latest action involves the five Enterprise Rent-A-Car companies operating in Texas. The company agreed to refund $1.7 million to about 150,000 customers who bought supplemental auto and truck liability insurance from them in Texas between Jan. 1, 1995 and July 10, 1997, Bomer said.

Police have few leads in local teen's stabbing

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

Authorities with the Midland County Sheriff's Office said Tuesday that deputies have few leads in the stabbing of a local teen-ager on Sunday.

Midland County officials received a call at 3:17 a.m. Sunday from residents of John's Mobile Home Park, 3415 Cottonflat Road, reporting a stabbing. Deputies arrived at the scene and found a 15-year-old boy bleeding on the steps of his mobile home, Lt. Ed Krevit said.

The victim, whose name was not disclosed Tuesday, sustained at least five stab wounds to his abdomen and a stab wound to his chest, Krevit said. He was taken to a local hospital, where officials said he was in critical condition Monday.

Meanwhile, officials investigating the case said few leads have been established and that the case was under investigation as an aggravated assault.

"No one is willing to come forward with what occurred in the crime," Krevit said. "That includes witnesses, or people who we've been told are witnesses.

"It makes the case really difficult. If the officers did not witness the crime, then the only thing they have to go by is physical evidence."

Krevit added that a knife that was allegedly used in the stabbing has not been recovered.

"It would be really difficult to make the case," Krevit said. "We could if the people at the scene would reveal who committed the crime."

He added that the stabbing might be the result of gang rivalry. Witnesses of gang-related offenses sometimes do not want to be drawn into law enforcement investigations, he said.

"It's very common," Krevit said. "They don't want the law involved."

According to the 1996 Texas Crime Report, one aggravated assault occurs in the state every 6½ minutes. A total of 80,572 aggravated assaults were reported that year, which is a 0.2 percent increase from the previous year. A knife or cutting instrument was used in 21 percent of the reported crimes.

In addition, more aggravated assaults were reported to Texas law officers in May than any other month, while the fewest were reported in November.

Odessa teen in critical condition after accident

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

ODESSA — One of six Odessa high school students involved in a one-vehicle accident Tuesday morning remained in critical condition at an Odessa hospital.

John Cisneros, 15, was admitted to Medical Center Hospital's intensive care unit for massive head injuries he sustained in the accident, police officials said.

Valerie Molinar, 15, and John Orandy, 16, were also taken to Medical Center for "less severe injuries."

Three other occupants of the vehicle, Ralph Sanchez, 16, Miguel Jaquez, 15, and Dianna Lopez, 15, were also taken to the hospital, and were treated and released, police officials said.

The accident occurred at approximately 8 a.m. Tuesday at the 1000 block of North Dixie Avenue.

Preliminary investigation revealed that Sanchez was driving on the southbound lane of Dixie Avenue at a high rate of speed, according to a release from the Odessa Police Department. He allegedly lost control of the vehicle and struck a fence before crashing into a residence at 1019 N. Dixie Ave.

The vehicle came to rest in the front yard of the residence.

No charges were filed in connection with the accident, officials said. An additional investigation is pending with the Odessa Police Department Accident Investigation Bureau.

$555 million insurance rollback considered

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans were overcharged $1 billion in 1996 by insurers who failed to pass on savings from reforms in the civil justice system, according to a consumer advocacy group.

D.J. Powers of the Center for Economic Justice made the accusation against the insurance industry at a public hearing Tuesday by Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer.

Bomer, who is considering a proposed $555 million insurance rollback that would go into effect for 1998, rejected Powers' claims.

The rollbacks are meant to reflect cost savings from laws passed in 1995 that capped civil damages and were intended to limit frivolous lawsuits in Texas.

"So-called tort reform isn't providing savings for Texans, it's providing a $1 billion windfall profit for insurers," said Powers, a former general counsel of the Department of Insurance who says his non-profit group represents the interests of low-income consumers.

"If the rates were reduced as they should have been, consumers would have paid $1 billion less than they did. That averages out to $100 per car overcharge in 1996 alone. That overcharge will be even bigger in 1997.

"Citizens have lost their rights without receiving anything in return," he said.

Powers said the next rollback should be $1.5 billion for automobile liability insurance coverage alone, and the total rollback for all types of coverage more than $2 billion.

Bomer took the testimony under advisement and will announce later whether he will adopt the Insurance Department's recommendation of $555 million in rollbacks or set his own amount.

He disagreed with Powers' figures.

"That's not true," Bomer said. "We've looked at the filings. We know from those filings that they put the tort reform savings down there. It's in black and white. We look at it, and if it's not there, we call their hand on it."

Powers said some insurance companies simply ignored rate rollbacks meant to reflect roughly $800 million in tort reform savings over the past two years. He said others reduced rates in automobile liability insurance — the most commonly written policy — but then increased rates for automobile property damage coverage.

Insurance industry spokesman Rick Gentry, of the Texas Insurance Organization, said the market is too competitive for insurers to try to shift costs by raising other premiums.

"There's more than 300 insurance companies in Texas, and they are all fighting it out to offer the best deal," he said.

4-vehicle accident

At least two people were injured in a four-vehicle collision that occurred at about 5 p.m. Tuesday at the intersection of Big Spring Street and Golf Course Road. Police said the collision occurred when a pickup slammed into the other vehicles waiting at a stop sign on the northbound lane of Big Spring Street. Series of collisions provokes federal investigation of Union Pacific

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A federal agency is shadowing Union Pacific's every move in an unprecedented companywide safety check prompted by a series of train collisions that killed 12 people in eight months.

More than 60 inspectors will talk to crew members and watch the railroad's 900-plus dispatchers in 10 cities for 10 days, the Federal Railroad Administration said Tuesday.

"We are not only looking at the dispatchers but also riding the trains to see the operating practices going on with the train crews," said agency spokesman Dave Bolger. "Are they working an inordinate amount of time because of the merger with Southern Pacific? Are eight people doing the job that 30 people used to do three years ago?"

Bolger was particularly concerned that a weeklong inspection in June found 80 percent of dispatcher orders contained at least one error.

"These were basic communication errors, such as giving and confirming directions clearly," said Bolger. "They were not only violating federal rules, but their own Union Pacific rules, which often go above and beyond."

A Union Pacific spokesman said the railroad knows it has some problems and has been trying to ease the stress on dispatchers, but he said the problems were unrelated to last year's merger with Southern Pacific Railroad.

The safety check got under way Saturday and involves around-the-clock inspections of the Omaha-based railroad. About 14 percent of the agency's 425 inspectors nationwide are involved.

Union Pacific officials welcomed the extra set of eyes, but said it was stress-

INSURE: Tort reform savings intended to reach consumers

ance Department, the savings in private passenger automobile rates for 1998 would be $213 million.

Rod Bordelon of the Office of Public Insurance Counsel said that wasn't enough and recommended rolling back those rates by more than $350 million, bringing the total rollback to more than $700 million.

"There's no question there has been a sharp decrease in losses from bodily injury claims as a result of tort reform," Bordelon said.

Powers said, "If the rollbacks for automobile liability insurance are any less than $1.5 billion, insurers are pocketing excess profits and failing to pass savings on to the consumers."

Several insurers said the department's recommendation of $555 million was too much, contending it was speculative and based on faulty data.

> 'If the rollbacks for automobile liability insurance are any less than $1.5 billion, insurers are pocketing excess profits.'
> — D.J. Powers of the Center for Economic Justice

Richard Geiger of the Texas Insurance Organization said personal injury lawsuits stemming from auto accidents are continuing to go up in Texas, eating up cost savings from so-called tort reform.

"We are fearful we may be going too far too fast and we urge the commissioner to consider leaving the factors at their current levels," Geiger said.

TRAIN: Series of collisions provokes Union Pacific investigation

ful on employees.

"They've been under the gun all summer," said Union Pacific spokesman John Bromley.

Dispatchers regularly work 12-hour shifts and are constantly on call. Their job is similar to that of an air traffic controller, coordinating trains along multiple tracks and telling crews when to enter a section of single-line track.

Employees say the problem is not just with dispatchers.

"I've worked 20-hour days where I've been so tired I don't know where I am," said conductor Jimmy Tullis, 42, who has worked for Union Pacific since 1981. "I used to have a front brakeman, a rear brakeman, an engineer and a fireman with me. Now it's just me and the engineer and I'm responsible for the whole train."

Seven people have died in three Union Pacific crashes in the past three months and five other employees of the railroad were killed in other accidents since January, the rail agency said. In June, four people died in a head-on collision in Devine, Texas. Days later, one crew member was killed and hazardous material spilled in accident near Topeka, Kan. Two engineers were killed Aug. 20 in a collision near Fort Worth, Texas.

The National Transportation Safety Board was reviewing records connected with the three fatal accidents in a separate investigation.

In June, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers union threatened to strike and sent a letter to the Federal Railroad Administration asking the agency to improve safety procedures. In particular, the union wanted railroads to eliminate "dark territory" — sections of track without electronic signals where engineers must rely solely on dispatchers.

The union applauded the safety investigation.

"We think it's wonderful they are doing this for the interest of the public and their employees," said Ed Dubroski, first vice president of the 33,000-member union.

Dispatcher training is one particular area of concern, said Bolger. While dispatchers watch videos and use simulated circumstances, they do not ride the train routes that they will be directing.

Bromley defended Union Pacific's training.

"You don't have to know the tree on the left and the hill on the right to be able to dispatch trains," Bromley said.

He also said most of the dispatch errors cited by the railroad agency in the June audit were minor.

Bromley said the company has tried to give dispatchers regular shifts so they are more familiar with train routes and have consistent days off. Union Pacific has also tried to work with consultants on circadian rhythms to help night-shift workers to improve their performance.

34 cars derail, destroying bridge

HARWOOD, Texas (AP) — Union Pacific, already under federal scrutiny for a series of serious collisions, suffered another blow Tuesday when 34 cars derailed and destroyed a bridge.

The 125-car train was on its way to Colton, Calif., from Pine Bluff, Ark., when it derailed about four miles east of Harwood around 12:30 p.m. Harwood is 63 miles east of San Antonio.

The cars that derailed were stocked with frozen food, lumber, paper, wood pulp, malt, automobiles, shingles and waste, said Union Pacific spokesman Mark Davis.

None of the material was hazardous and no one was injured, he said, adding that the cause of the derailment was being investigated.

Enterprise to refund people who bought liability insurance

■ Company will mail refunds to eligible customers automatically.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Another rental car company has agreed to make refunds to Texans who purchased liability insurance coverage from it, bringing to $13 million the total of refunds due just over 1 million consumers.

"This order and the previous orders settle the dispute over sales of liability insurance by car rental companies," Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer said Tuesday.

The latest action involves the five Enterprise Rent-A-Car companies operating in Texas.

In reaching agreement with the Texas Department of Insurance, Enterprise denied the department's allegations and said it had done nothing wrong.

The company agreed to refund $1.7 million to about 150,000 customers who bought supplemental auto and truck liability insurance from them in Texas between Jan. 1, 1995 and July 10, 1997, Bomer said.

In recent weeks, the state has announced similar consent orders with the Hertz, Avis, Alamo, Thrifty, Dollar, National and Budget car rental companies.

According to the latest order, the dispute with Enterprise centered on the sale of supplemental liability protection, a product that provides third-party liability insurance to the renter.

Under current state law, auto rental companies may sell collision and medical coverage to cover customers while they drive rented cars.

However, Jim Davis, a spokesman for the insurance department, has said companies for years improperly sold liability insurance to their Texas customers.

A recent change in state law will make it legal for the companies to sell liability coverage, but such sales before the Sept. 1 law change are illegal, Davis said.

Tuesday's agreement involves Enterprise Leasing of Houston; Enterprise Leasing Co.-of DFW, based in Irving; Enterprise Rent-A-Car of Texas, based in San Antonio; Enterprise Leasing Co., based in Edmond, Okla.; and Enterprise Leasing Co.-West, based in Mesa, Ariz.

Refunds will vary, depending on the price of the insurance purchased.

The prices the Enterprise firms charged ranged from $5.99 to $9.99 per day. Refunds will range from $1.09 to $5.09 for each day of auto coverage purchased, and less for truck insurance.

Eligible customers need do nothing to obtain refunds, the insurance department said.

The companies automatically will mail payments to the last known address of all eligible customers shown in their records and will establish a procedure for dealing with changed addresses.

7 children found living in squalor

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A mother and grandmother have been charged with endangering seven children between ages 5 and 12 who were found alone and living in squalor.

All seven children, as well as a 38-year-old man with Down's syndrome, were taken into protective custody late Sunday after being discovered by police officers.

The children's mother, Jeraldine Martinez, 34, and grandmother, Carmen Huerta, 59, were charged with endangerment of a child and were being held Tuesday at Bexar County Jail in lieu of a $10,000 bond each.

Witnesses said the mother left the house Saturday evening and left the children with the grandmother. The grandmother reportedly left the home Sunday morning and never returned.

"The mother supposedly was going to do some baby-sitting job. The grandmother said she went shopping and her car had broken down," said police Lt. Greg Young.

Police officers showed up at the home in southeast San Antonio after someone there called 911 then hung up the phone, Young said. When a 911 operator called the number back, a child told the emergency operator they were home alone.

Police arrived at the house about 9:30 p.m. Sunday and found some of the children playing in the front yard. Inside the house, raw sewage was standing on the floor, electrical wires were exposed and the refrigerator was padlocked, Young said.

Police say they suspect the family had been living in unsanitary conditions for a while.

"It's not something that happened overnight," Young said.

The children were placed in emergency shelters.

Medical schools announce spinal cord regeneration research

HOUSTON (AP) — Three medical schools joined hands Tuesday in an effort to develop better spinal cord regeneration techniques.

The three — University of Texas-Houston Health Science Center, the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston and Baylor College of Medicine — unveiled their joint research venture, to be headquartered at The Institute for Rehabilitation & Research.

"We're at an early stage of work in spinal cord regeneration. This is going to get us in the gate in a big way," said Dr. Guy Clifton, neurosurgery chairman at UT's Health Science Center.

The TIRR consortium plans to establish a $1 million fund to help pay for research, through an eventual $25 million endowment, and an international symposium Nov. 7, said Howard Wolf, the TIRR Foundation's chairman.

So far, $400,000 in donations have been raised.

Wolf says spinal cord injury treatments will be to the Texas Medical Center in the first half of the next century what open heart surgery was in the second half of this century.

While many tissues of the body, such as bone, skin and liver can repair and heal when injured, the spinal cord and brain cannot.

The consortium's mission would be to look at better ways to improve the outcome of a spinal injury, for instance treating spinal injuries more quickly with drugs, or injecting DNA to improve response of the injured area of the body.

The consortium hopes to raise enough money for a $25 million to be named for Emily Conner, 20, a St. Thomas University student who was paralyzed in a diving accident a year ago.

Clifton could not say whether the research would mean that Ms. Conner and others like her someday could walk again.

"I think we've got to be real careful here. My own concern is that we create more hope than we ought to," he said. "Everybody wants to get out of the wheelchair, and I understand that, but this is going to take some time."

He estimated that researchers would need about 10 years to take the techniques through the laboratory and conduct a clinical trial.

"The first leap to where you get any sort of functional improvement is going to be the big one," Clifton said. "Regaining one muscle which you didn't have can have a huge impact on daily life for someone with spinal cord injury."

Possible link seen in border events

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Police are exploring the possibility that four doctors were slain because they treated a gunman involved in the shooting of a local attorney, the El Paso Times reported.

Authorities have expanded their investigation into the shooting of attorney Ricardo Prado Reyna, hoping it will lead to answers in the deaths of the physicians, whose bodies were found near the border, and a massacre at a restaurant.

The links between the three events are tenuous at this point, but incidental information and documents gathered in the probe indicate they may be related to drug trafficking, the Times reported Tuesday, quoting an unidentified source close to the investigation.

State police have not been able to question Prado. He was shot five times, including once in the face, during a running gun battle Friday with a squad of gunmen who attacked him on one of Ciudad Juarez's main streets.

Police records show Prado is the attorney for the Max Fim restaurant, where six people were killed Aug. 3 by men armed with automatic weapons.

Opening lead: Jack of ♡ Light opening bids had mixed results at the recent European Bridge Championships, held in Montecatini, Italy. This example is from the Italy-Spain match.

In the room where the Italians were East-West, East opened the bidding with one club, but that did not stop North-South from reaching three no trump. With all the high cards known to be on the right, there was nothing to the play. Declarer was able to collect three spades, one heart, three diamonds and two clubs with ease.

In the other room the bidding went as shown in the diagram above. West led the jack of hearts, East rose with the ace and returned the six to declarer's king. A low spade was led to the queen, and East ducked smoothly. Now declarer played three rounds of clubs, West parting with two diamonds, and East, after winning the queen, shifted to the eight of diamonds.

With nine tricks apparently there for the taking by repeating the spade finesse, declarer saw no reason to endanger the contract by finessing in diamonds. After rising with the ace and cashing the winning clubs, the jack of spades was run. Declarer was startled to see East produce the king, cash the king of diamonds, and then lead a heart for West to score two heart tricks. Down two!

Eastwood wins invasion of privacy lawsuit against National Enquirer

SAN FRANCISCO — Get this straight: Dirty Harry does not give exclusive interviews to supermarket tabloids.

Clint Eastwood sued the National Enquirer for invasion of privacy and won a $150,000 damage award plus another $653,000 in attorneys' fees.

Clint Eastwood sues National Enquirer and wins $150,000 plus attorneys' fees.

"The editors falsely suggested to the ordinary reader of their publication ... that Eastwood had willingly chatted with someone from the Enquirer," said Judge Alex Kozinski of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Raymond C. Fisher, a lawyer for Eastwood, said Monday that a few of the quotes in the December 1993 article were taken from old clips but most of them were made up entirely.

NEW YORK — A $50,000 libel lawsuit is not about to get Don Imus to apologize again for calling a state judge a "senile old dirt bag."

"Let's get it on, let's go to court," Imus said on his morning radio show Tuesday. "The judge is a public figure and I believe what I said about him at the time."

Harold J. Rothwax, 66, sued the radio and TV personality Monday, claiming Imus embarrassed, ridiculed and disgraced him with insults after he ordered Imus's wife to serve on a jury.

Rothwax had refused last September to let Deirdre Coleman off a jury. Imus lit into the judge on the air and continued the public pounding even after Rothwax agreed to dismiss Coleman.

He also called Rothwax "Judge Scuzwax" and "an embittered old fool enjoying the fruits of a failed and not-all-too-distinguished judicial career."

Imus finally apologized in May. He responded to the lawsuit on Tuesday's show: "I already apologized to the judge ... which I don't expect to do again."

NEWARK, N.J. — Jon Bon Jovi's second cousin says the singer gives family love a bad name. The rock star says the same thing about his cousin.

Bon Jovi and Anthony Bongiovi have filed lawsuits against each other in federal court in New York. Each claims to own material that Bon Jovi, whose given name is John Bongiovi, released this summer on his own Power Station Records label on the album "John Bongiovi: the Power Station Years."

Bongiovi said in Tuesday's editions of The Star-Ledger of Newark that some of the songs were the product of free studio time he gave his cousin from 1980 to 1983, when Bon Jovi left to sign a record deal with Mercury/PolyGram.

The New Jersey-born rocker, whose hits include "You Give Love a Bad Name" and "Wanted Dead or Alive," refused the newspaper's request for an interview.

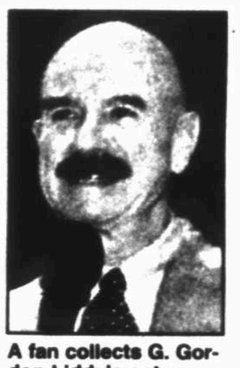
NORFOLK, Va. — Heidi Washburn came to hear G. Gordon Liddy get a few things off his chest. Then she asked him to put something on hers.

Mrs. Washburn was one of several hundred fans who turned out Monday for an appearance by the Watergate figure and conservative radio talk show host. She forgot to bring her copy of "Will," Liddy's best-selling autobiography, so she asked him to autograph her brassiere instead.



A fan collects G. Gordon Liddy's autograph on her chest.

When Liddy offered to sign "what's inside of it," she exposed a portion of her left breast and collected his autograph. Liddy then broadcast the exchange — which was photographed by Mrs. Washburn's husband, Patrick — on his radio show.

What would move a woman to ask a complete stranger to autograph her chest?

"He's not a complete stranger!" Mrs. Washburn said. "He's G. Gordon Liddy! He's my hero."

Her husband apparently had no problem with what Liddy did, either. "Like she said, he's G. Gordon Liddy," he said.

ROME — Bob Dylan will sing for a very special audience next month: Pope John Paul II.

The concert, announced by the Vatican Tuesday, will be in Bologna at the World Eucharistic Congress on September 27.

"This will not simply be a concert, but an occasion for the pope to meet young people," said Monsignor Ernesto Vecchi, head of the organizational committee.

Dylan, 56, was hospitalized this summer for an infection that caused swelling in the sac around his heart.

Elvis doted on junk foods, burgers

N.Y. Times News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — It was a rare day when The King consumed a meal fit for a king.

As a child, Elvis Presley was a junk food addict. And he continued to be so through his final days.

His choice of foods, not to mention his insatiable appetite, are legendary. They would, without a doubt, drive a nutritionist to therapy.

While some of Elvis' culinary habits are well documented, particularly his passion for fried peanut-butter-and-banana sandwiches, his fondness for starch and carbohydrates began early in life.

"As soon as he could walk, he could eat his weight in peanut butter and crackers," notes David Adler, author of the comprehensive cookbook "The Life and Cuisine of Elvis Presley" (Crown, $15).

Yet during his later years, when Presley was wealthy beyond imagination, his diet did not improve since a childhood of relative poverty. In fact, the fried squirrel and grits that the Presleys dined on during Elvis' earlier years was healthier fare than the cheeseburgers, fries and banana pudding he wolfed down at dawn following late-night performances.

There were, of course, non-meat treats in Presley's life. He enjoyed Eskimo Pies, Hostess Cupcakes, Fudgsicles, Dreamsicles, Girl Scout Cookies, Krispy Kreme doughnuts and hot-dog rolls without the hot dogs.

"Given his country origins, where virtually all foods were homemade," Adler observes, "packaged foods in shiny wrappers represented the city, excitement and a larger world. Just as some people chain-smoke, Elvis chain-snacked."

While it's easy to make light of what Elvis ate, it is worth remembering that this larger-than-life entertainer rose from humble Dixie roots that he never tried to shed.

"He had some traditional eating habits of the South in general and his social class in particular high-fat foods, not healthy eating at all," observes Charles Wilson, a professor at the University of Mississippi's Center for Study of Southern Culture. "He loved peanut butter and banana sandwiches, but I remember my older family members loving those. They weren't uncommon in the smaller towns in the old South."

"Elvis liked to go out for fast food, and was known for fast-food binge eating. I see that as the modern South, and how Presley represents a transition figure between the old South and new South," he explains. "I saw a survey one time that said Southerners eat a higher percentage of their meals at fast foods compared to other Americans, especially working-class Southerners."

Elvis' food choices could fall under the domain of "white trash" cooking, or kitsch kitchen fare. But kitsch sells, and this summer in the town the King called home, a theme restaurant opened: Elvis Presley's Memphis. If it catches on, the eatery may evolve into a chain, according to the Los Angeles public relations firm fielding questions on its behalf.

The restaurant's emphasis is more fun than adulation, but it offers some staples from Presley's preferred cuisine as well as nouveau Thai chicken salad. Menu items known to be Elvis favorites skillet-fried round steak with gravy, Southern-style meat loaf and a BLT on white are also featured.

The following recipe is culled from Brenda Arlene Butler's 1992 book, "Are You Hungry Tonight? Elvis' Favorite Recipes" (Gramercy Books):

FRIED PEANUT BUTTER AND BANANA SANDWICH
(Makes one sandwich)

1 small ripe banana
2 slices white bread
3 tablespoons peanut butter
2 tablespoons butter

In a small bowl, mash the banana with the back of a spoon. Toast the bread lightly. Spread the peanut butter on one piece of toast and the mashed banana on the other. Fry the sandwich in melted butter until each side is golden brown. Cut diagonally and serve hot.

CHOCOLATE: Low-fat, delicious

(From 8B)

In small bowl, sprinkle gelatin over water; let stand 3 minutes to soften. In medium microwave-safe bowl, place chocolate chips and milk. Microwave on high (100 percent) for 60 to 90 seconds.

Add gelatin mixture; stir until gelatin is dissolved and mixture is smooth.

Pour chocolate chip mixture into cheese mixture; process until smooth, about 2 minutes. Add whipped topping; process until blended, about 1 minute.

Pour into individual dessert dishes. Cover and refrigerate about 2 hours or until set. Garnish with fruit, if desired.

Makes 9 servings, about 1/3 cup each.

REDUCED FAT BOSTON CREAM PIE

1 package (about 8 ounces) yellow cake mix
1 package (4-serving size) fat-free vanilla instant pudding and pie filling mix
2 cups (12 ounces each) reduced fat semi-sweet chocolate baking chips, divided
4 tablespoons skim milk, divided

Prepare 8-inch round baking pan as directed on package. Prepare cake batter as directed, using 2 egg whites to replace 1 egg. Replace 2 tablespoons vegetable oil with 1 tablespoon oil and 1 tablespoon water; bake and cool as directed.

Meanwhile, mix pudding as directed on package, using 1-1/2 cups skim milk. Refrigerate in bowl.

Cut cake layer in half to form 2 layers; place bottom layer on serving plate.

In small microwave-safe bowl, place 1 cup reduced fat chocolate chips and 2 tablespoons skim milk. Microwave on high (100 percent) 1 minute or until chips are melted and mixture is smooth when stirred.

Spread on cake layer on serving plate; layer with pudding and top with last cake layer, rounded side up.

In small microwave-safe bowl, place remaining 1 cup chocolate chips and 2 tablespoons skim milk. Microwave on high 1 minute or until chips are melted and mixture is smooth when stirred. If necessary, cool until thickens slightly; spread on top of cake. Cover; refrigerate until ready to serve.

Cookie 'stix' cry out for dunking

By Linda Anderson

The thing about taste-testing cookies is that I never have a shortage of helpers. So when I found packages of Keebler's new Cookie Stix, I knew all I had to do would be take a package to the office and I'd have lots of opinions.

Anderson

Cookie Stix live up to their name. They are cookies shaped in straight "sticks," each about 3 inches long and a little more than 1/2-inch wide. Available in three flavors — chocolate chip, peanut butter and butter — the cookies are not too big for guilt-less enjoyment and just the right shape for dunking in milk.

A 10-ounce package of Cookie Stix contains about 40 cookies and costs $2.19.

One serving of four cookies is listed as containing 130 calories with 45 of them from fat. That means one cookie has about 32 calories or something like that. Just enough to make you feel less guilty for eating "just one," and really guilty when you discover that you've absentmindedly eaten about eight.

Aside from the claim that the cookies are "New!," label advertising goes like this: "We Keebler elves have been busy baking up new cookies for you to enjoy. Try our delicious Cookie Stix. You can dunk 'em, play with 'em, and even make shapes with 'em! Try all three varieties...chocolate chip, peanut butter and butter. We hope you'll enjoy eating them as much as we enjoyed baking them for you. Have an uncommonly good day." And of course, it's signed "Ernie Keebler."

OK, I sense some problems here. First of all, playing with your food isn't particularly cool, even if the food is "made by elves." Second, I have no idea what that "make shapes with 'em" means. These are cookies, not play-dough. And third — I don't know about you, but for me those elves are getting tiresome.

But we're talking cookies here, and the taste-testers were ready, just like I knew they would be. We, of course, tried a package of the chocolate chip kind. For many of us, there is no other kind of cookie.

One taste-tester said she thought they were "too well done" and "crunchy;" one said they were "like a poor man's biscotti. They need a good cup of coffee to truly be evaluated;" and one just hated them all together.

I thought they were kind of crunchy, but that there's nothing wrong with them that a big bowl of homemade vanilla or chocolate chip cookie dough ice cream couldn't fix. Or maybe some fudge ripple. How about fudge brownie with chocolate chunks? Oooooo, pralines and cream, or chocolate chocolate chip or ...

DEAR ABBY

Teen parents can consider adoption

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you out of sheer frustration. I have just read another account of a young woman, apparently unable to deal with the prospect of parenthood, doing away with her newborn child.

Van Buren

As an adoption attorney, I work with many couples who are desperate to adopt. If the young parents had any idea how easy it would be for them to arrange an adoption, and how many people would thank God for a chance to parent a child, perhaps they would not take the drastic step of abandoning, or killing and disposing of a newborn.

I know in many cases they are ashamed and frightened, and want no one to know of their pregnancy. Please tell them that the consequences of murdering their newborn child are far more frightening and shameful than acknowledging their pregnancy and placing the child for adoption could ever be.

They can call any adoption agency or adoption attorney, and they will be treated with respect and sensitivity. There is no obligation and no cost. (Look under Adoption Services in the Yellow Pages.) If young women would do this, they would answer a family's prayers and assure themselves and their babies a better future. Abandonment is not the answer. Neither is murder. Adoption is.

Thank you for the opportunity to say this. You may use my name. — LINDA E.F. LACH, ATTORNEY AT LAW, LIHUE, HAWAII

DEAR LINDA: It is hard to imagine that in the 1990s, a young woman could find herself pregnant, and be so uninformed and fearful of her parents that she would choose not to confide in the people who are supposed to protect and guide her. However, in some families the girls feel they cannot let their parents down by admitting they were sexually active. In other families, the relationship between parents and child is so dysfunctional the girl's fears are real.

I am printing your excellent letter in the hope that every young woman will read it. Although they may never need the information, perhaps they'll have a friend who will, and it will help to save innocent lives.

DEAR ABBY: You printed a letter from a woman who carried an unruly 3-year-old child (kicking and screaming) out of a store, and no one tried to stop her to find out if the child was her own, or if perhaps someone was trying to abduct the child.

Abby, parents should keep a family picture (mom, dad and children) in their purse or wallet as proof of parentage. — MYRNA FELDMANN, DELANSON, N.Y.

DEAR MYRNA: Thank you for an excellent suggestion. Readers, make a note of this. It's good insurance.

DEAR ABBY: I laughed out loud at your response to "Wondering," whose husband had an affair three years before, but following surgery that left him impotent, he was very attentive to her. You were right on the money when you answered her question about why he had turned over a new leaf with, "Probably because there's not much left under the old one."

"Wondering" needs to wake up to the fact that her husband would still be cheating if he hadn't had the surgery. Now that his fun is over, he's staying closer to home.

My dog stopped jumping the fence after I got him neutered, but I sure wouldn't want to be married to him. — STILL LAUGHING IN SAN DIEGO

Some dine, others merely 'feeding'

By Cathy Barber
Associated Press

DALLAS — Some people eat their food; others are eaten up by it.

Americans find food stressful, for many reasons. We are no longer close to our food, and as in any relationship, distance breeds detachment.

We eat precooked rice from boxes and tomatoes that are so lacking in flavor that they can't even be called bad. We trade real fat for fakes that come with warning labels.

Reports of contaminated food and magic-bullet ingredients frighten us into dodging one food while devouring another.

The middle ground, home of moderation and sensible eating, is alien territory to many people.

Dr. Lionel Tiger, food anthropologist at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J., says Americans have fallen for the "extermination model"of food — food as something that kills us, not something that sustains us.

"We're really frightened about food," Dr. Tiger told a group of food professionals earlier this year.

The reasons would fill a restaurant menu. Some of the main ones:

■ We don't know how to cook; it's easier to open a can or a box and call that dinner.

■ We don't have time to cook; it's quicker to pick up or eat out.

■ We fear fat — on our plates, on our thighs.

All of these things move us further from the joy of real, fresh food.

Rick Bayless, award-winning chef of Frontera Grill and Topolobampo in Chicago, tells of a man in one of his cooking classes who was delighted to find that real whipped cream tastes so much better than Cool Whip. Think about it: A person who grew up eating only a man-made copy of the real thing. How can you miss what you've never had?

This points out something else we miss when we lose touch with our food: the pleasures of the table, of a ripe, juicy peach, of a relaxed meal shared with friends and family.

We've fallen into what Tiger calls "endless summer syndrome." We want a red, ripe tomato in January. "If it tastes good, it's fine. But some taste not-good," he says.

Ms. Waters sets the standard for fresh at Chez Panisse. Foragers scout out the day's freshest foods, and the kitchen creates menus based on what they find.

From her vantage point, she sees what many people miss.

"We just haven't gotten out there in the field and picked it ourself, and know what it tastes like when it's ripe and in season, know the care with which something is grown," she says.

"I think the only way to get back, really back to our roots, is by getting back to the garden and getting to the farmers market and experiencing food as a sensual experience . . . smelling it, tasting it, touching it."

And cooking it.

"Really, what gives the pleasure is in the preparing of it," she says. "It's the shelling of those peas — you know their value when you shell a couple of cups of peas.

"You want people to appreciate those peas."

Julia Child, who will forever be linked with boeuf bourguignonne, tarte Tatin and other French classics she brought to the American kitchen, has taken up the banner of good food, simply prepared.

Mrs. Child, who turned 85 recently, told an audience at The Mansion on Turtle Creek last fall that eating should be "joy and happiness, but if you're eating diet food ..." Her voice trailed off briefly before she recounted being served a "diet"salad: "It tasted like nuts and bolts and things.

"That's no way to have a happy life."

She also has a grasp on the social aspects of eating.

"You can't generalize, because some people are eating very well," Mrs. Child says. "Other people are not dining, they're feeding." The last word comes out with the same distaste she might reserve for instant pudding.

Food, Ms. Waters says, should offer "not just physical but also spiritual nourishment." Yet the family dinner hour has given way to meals on the run. "It's up to the parents to encourage children to enjoy food," Mrs. Child says.

Elvis doted on junk foods, burgers

N.Y. Times News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — It was a rare day when The King consumed a meal fit for a king.

As a child, Elvis Presley was a junk food addict. And he continued to be so through his final days.

His choice of foods, not to mention his insatiable appetite, are legendary. They would, without a doubt, drive a nutritionist to therapy.

While some of Elvis' culinary habits are well documented, particularly his passion for fried peanut-butter-and-banana sandwiches, his fondness for starch and carbohydrates began early in life.

"As soon as he could walk, he could eat his weight in peanut butter and crackers," notes David Adler, author of the comprehensive cookbook "The Life and Cuisine of Elvis Presley" (Crown, $15).

Yet during his later years, when Presley was wealthy beyond imagination, his diet did not improve since a childhood of relative poverty. In fact, the fried squirrel and grits that the Presleys dined on during Elvis' earlier years was healthier fare than the cheeseburgers, fries and banana pudding he wolfed down at dawn following late-night performances.

There were, of course, non-meat treats in Presley's life. He enjoyed Eskimo Pies, Hostess Cupcakes, Fudgsicles, Dreamsicles, Girl Scout Cookies, Krispy Kreme doughnuts and hot-dog rolls without the hot dogs.

"Given his country origins, where virtually all foods were homemade," Adler observes, "packaged foods in shiny wrappers represented the city, excitement and a larger world. Just as some people chain-smoke, Elvis chain-snacked."

While it's easy to make light of what Elvis ate, it is worth remembering that this larger-than-life entertainer rose from humble Dixie roots that he never tried to shed.

"He had some traditional eating habits of the South in general and his social class in particular high-fat foods, not healthy eating at all," observes Charles Wilson, a professor at the University of Mississippi's Center for Study of Southern Culture. "He loved peanut butter and banana sandwiches, but I remember my older family members loving those. They weren't uncommon in the smaller towns in the old South."

"Elvis liked to go out for fast food, and was known for fast-food binge eating. I see that as the modern South, and how Presley represents a transition figure between the old South and new South," he explains. "I saw a survey one time that said Southerners eat a higher percentage of their meals at fast foods compared to other Americans, especially working-class Southerners."

Elvis' food choices could fall under the domain of "white trash" cooking, or kitsch kitchen fare. But kitsch sells, and this summer in the town the King called home, a theme restaurant opened: Elvis Presley's Memphis. If it catches on, the eatery may evolve into a chain, according to the Los Angeles public relations firm fielding questions on its behalf.

The restaurant's emphasis is more fun than adulation, but it offers some staples from Presley's preferred cuisine as well as nouveau Thai chicken salad. Menu items known to be Elvis favorites skillet-fried round steak with gravy, Southern-style meat loaf and a BLT on white are also featured.

The following recipe is culled from Brenda Arlene Butler's 1992 book, "Are You Hungry Tonight? Elvis' Favorite Recipes" (Gramercy Books):

FRIED PEANUT BUTTER AND BANANA SANDWICH
(Makes one sandwich)

1 small ripe banana
2 slices white bread
3 tablespoons peanut butter
2 tablespoons butter

In a small bowl, mash the banana with the back of a spoon. Toast the bread lightly. Spread the peanut butter on one piece of toast and the mashed banana on the other. Fry the sandwich in melted butter until each side is golden brown. Cut diagonally and serve hot.

CHOCOLATE: Low-fat, delicious

(From 8B)

In small bowl, sprinkle gelatin over water; let stand 3 minutes to soften. In medium microwave-safe bowl, place chocolate chips and milk. Microwave on high (100 percent) for 60 to 90 seconds.

Add gelatin mixture; stir until gelatin is dissolved and mixture is smooth.

Pour chocolate chip mixture into cheese mixture; process until smooth, about 2 minutes. Add whipped topping; process until blended, about 1 minute.

Pour into individual dessert dishes. Cover and refrigerate about 2 hours or until set. Garnish with fruit, if desired.

Makes 9 servings, about 1/3 cup each.

REDUCED FAT BOSTON CREAM PIE

1 package (about 8 ounces) yellow cake mix
1 package (4-serving size) fat-free vanilla instant pudding and pie filling mix
2 cups (12 ounces each) reduced fat semi-sweet chocolate baking chips, divided
4 tablespoons skim milk, divided

Prepare 8-inch round baking pan as directed on package. Prepare cake batter as directed, using 2 egg whites to replace 1 egg. Replace 2 tablespoons vegetable oil with 1 tablespoon oil and 1 tablespoon water; bake and cool as directed.

Meanwhile, mix pudding as directed on package, using 1-1/2 cups skim milk. Refrigerate in bowl.

Cut cake layer in half to form 2 layers; place bottom layer on serving plate.

In small microwave-safe bowl, place 1 cup reduced fat chocolate chips and 2 tablespoons skim milk. Microwave on high (100 percent) 1 minute or until chips are melted and mixture is smooth when stirred.

Spread on cake layer on serving plate; layer with pudding and top with last cake layer, rounded side up.

In small microwave-safe bowl, place remaining 1 cup chocolate chips and 2 tablespoons skim milk. Microwave on high 1 minute or until chips are melted and mixture is smooth when stirred. If necessary, cool until thickens slightly; spread on top of cake. Cover; refrigerate until ready to serve.

Cookie 'stix' cry out for dunking

By Linda Anderson

The thing about taste-testing cookies is that I never have a shortage of helpers. So when I found packages of Keebler's new Cookie Stix, I knew all I had to do would be take a package to the office and I'd have lots of opinions.

Anderson

Cookie Stix live up to their name. They are cookies shaped in straight "sticks," each about 3 inches long and a little more than 1/2-inch wide. Available in three flavors — chocolate chip, peanut butter and butter — the cookies are not too big for guilt-less enjoyment and just the right shape for dunking in milk.

A 10-ounce package of Cookie Stix contains about 40 cookies and costs $2.19.

One serving of four cookies is listed as containing 130 calories with 45 of them from fat. That means one cookie has about 32 calories or something like that. Just enough to make you feel less guilty for eating "just one," and really guilty when you discover that you've absentmindedly eaten about eight.

Aside from the claim that the cookies are "New!," label advertising goes like this: "We Keebler elves have been busy baking up new cookies for you to enjoy. Try our delicious Cookie Stix. You can dunk 'em, play with 'em, and even make shapes with 'em! Try all three varieties...chocolate chip, peanut butter and butter. We hope you'll enjoy eating them as much as we enjoyed baking them for you. Have an uncommonly good day." And of course, it's signed "Ernie Keebler."

OK, I sense some problems here. First of all, playing with your food isn't particularly cool, even if the food is "made by elves." Second, I have no idea what that "make shapes with 'em" means. These are cookies, not play-dough. And third — I don't know about you, but for me those elves are getting tiresome.

But we're talking cookies here, and the taste-testers were ready, just like I knew they would be. We, of course, tried a package of the chocolate chip kind. For many of us, there is no other kind of cookie.

One taste-tester said she thought they were "too well done" and "crunchy;" one said they were "like a poor man's biscotti. They need a good cup of coffee to truly be evaluated;" and one just hated them all together.

I thought they were kind of crunchy, but that there's nothing wrong with them that a big bowl of homemade vanilla or chocolate chip cookie dough ice cream couldn't fix. Or maybe some fudge ripple. How about fudge brownie with chocolate chunks? Oooooo, pralines and cream, or chocolate chocolate chip or ...

DEAR ABBY

Teen parents can consider adoption

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am writing to you out of sheer frustration. I have just read another account of a young woman, apparently unable to deal with the prospect of parenthood, doing away with her newborn child.

Van Buren

As an adoption attorney, I work with many couples who are desperate to adopt. If the young parents had any idea how easy it would be for them to arrange an adoption, and how many people would thank God for a chance to parent a child, perhaps they would not take the drastic step of abandoning, or killing and disposing of a newborn.

I know in many cases they are ashamed and frightened, and want no one to know of their pregnancy. Please tell them that the consequences of murdering their newborn child are far more frightening and shameful than acknowledging their pregnancy and placing the child for adoption could ever be.

They can call any adoption agency or adoption attorney, and they will be treated with respect and sensitivity. There is no obligation and no cost. (Look under Adoption Services in the Yellow Pages.) If young women would do this, they would answer a family's prayers and assure themselves and their babies a better future. Abandonment is not the answer. Neither is murder. Adoption is.

Thank you for the opportunity to say this. You may use my name. — LINDA E.F. LACH, ATTORNEY AT LAW, LIHUE, HAWAII

DEAR LINDA: It is hard to imagine that in the 1990s, a young woman could find herself pregnant, and be so uninformed and fearful of her parents that she would choose not to confide in the people who are supposed to protect and guide her. However, in some families the girls feel they cannot let their parents down by admitting they were sexually active. In other families, the relationship between parents and child is so dysfunctional the girl's fears are real.

I am printing your excellent letter in the hope that every young woman will read it. Although they may never need the information, perhaps they'll have a friend who will, and it will help to save innocent lives.

DEAR ABBY: You printed a letter from a woman who carried an unruly 3-year-old child (kicking and screaming) out of a store, and no one tried to stop her to find out if the child was her own, or if perhaps someone was trying to abduct the child.

Abby, parents should keep a family picture (mom, dad and children) in their purse or wallet as proof of parentage. — MYRNA FELDMANN, DELANSON, N.Y.

DEAR MYRNA: Thank you for an excellent suggestion. Readers, make a note of this. It's good insurance.

DEAR ABBY: I laughed out loud at your response to "Wondering," whose husband had an affair three years before, but following surgery that left him impotent, he was very attentive to her. You were right on the money when you answered her question about why he had turned over a new leaf with, "Probably because there's not much left under the old one."

"Wondering" needs to wake up to the fact that her husband would still be cheating if he hadn't had the surgery. Now that his fun is over, he's staying closer to home.

My dog stopped jumping the fence after I got him neutered, but I sure wouldn't want to be married to him. — STILL LAUGHING IN SAN DIEGO

Some dine, others merely 'feeding'

By Cathy Barber
Associated Press

DALLAS — Some people eat their food; others are eaten up by it.

Americans find food stressful, for many reasons. We are no longer close to our food, and as in any relationship, distance breeds detachment.

We eat precooked rice from boxes and tomatoes that are so lacking in flavor that they can't even be called bad. We trade real fat for fakes that come with warning labels.

Reports of contaminated food and magic-bullet ingredients frighten us into dodging one food while devouring another.

The middle ground, home of moderation and sensible eating, is alien territory to many people.

Dr. Lionel Tiger, food anthropologist at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J., says Americans have fallen for the "extermination model" of food — food as something that kills us, not something that sustains us.

"We're really frightened about food," Dr. Tiger told a group of food professionals earlier this year.

The reasons would fill a restaurant menu. Some of the main ones:

■ We don't know how to cook; it's easier to open a can or a box and call that dinner.

■ We don't have time to cook; it's quicker to pick up or eat out.

■ We fear fat — on our plates, on our thighs.

All of these things move us further from the joy of real, fresh food.

Rick Bayless, award-winning chef of Frontera Grill and Topolobampo in Chicago, tells of a man in one of his cooking classes who was delighted to find that real whipped cream tastes so much better than Cool Whip. Think about it: A person who grew up eating only a man-made copy of the real thing. How can you miss what you've never had?

This points out something else we miss when we lose touch with our food: the pleasures of the table, of a ripe, juicy peach, of a relaxed meal shared with friends and family.

We've fallen into what Tiger calls "endless summer syndrome." We want a red, ripe tomato in January. "If it tastes good, it's fine. But some taste not-good," he says.

Ms. Waters sets the standard for fresh at Chez Panisse. Foragers scout out the day's freshest foods, and the kitchen creates menus based on what they find.

From her vantage point, she sees what many people miss.

"We just haven't gotten out there in the field and picked it ourself, and know what it tastes like when it's ripe and in season, know the care with which something is grown," she says.

"I think the only way to get back, really back to our roots, is by getting back to the garden and getting to the farmers market and experiencing food as a sensual experience... smelling it, tasting it, touching it."

And cooking it.

"Really, what gives the pleasure is in the preparing of it," she says. "It's the shelling of those peas — you know their value when you shell a couple of cups of peas.

"You want people to appreciate those peas."

Julia Child, who will forever be linked with boeuf bourguignonne, tarte Tatin and other French classics she brought to the American kitchen, has taken up the banner of good food, simply prepared.

Mrs. Child, who turned 85 recently, told an audience at The Mansion on Turtle Creek last fall that eating should be "joy and happiness, but if you're eating diet food ..." Her voice trailed off briefly before she recounted being served a "diet" salad: "It tasted like nuts and bolts and things.

"That's no way to have a happy life."

She also has a grasp on the social aspects of eating.

"You can't generalize, because some people are eating very well," Mrs. Child says. "Other people are not dining, they're feeding." The last word comes out with the same distaste she might reserve for instant pudding.

Food, Ms. Waters says, should offer "not just physical but also spiritual nourishment." Yet the family dinner hour has given way to meals on the run. "It's up to the parents to encourage children to enjoy food," Mrs. Child says.

1 teaspoon minced garlic
Two 10-inch flour tortillas or mountain bread (available in the deli or health food section of the supermarket)
1/2 pound fresh spinach or arugula, trimmed and stemmed
1 plum tomato, diced
1/2 cup (2 ounces) shredded part-skim mozzarella cheese

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a large skillet over medium-high heat, heat oil. Add mushrooms and garlic; cook and stir until the mushroom liquid has evaporated, about 5 minutes.

On each tortilla, arrange layers of spinach, tomato, mozzarella and cooked mushrooms.

Roll up and place seam-side down in lightly oiled baking dish. Bake uncovered until hot and cheese is melted, about 10 minutes.

Cut each tortilla crosswise into quarters. Serve hot or at room temperature with a mixed green salad, if desired. Makes 2 servings.

Staff Reports

With the chaos of school and sports activities heating up, it's the perfect time to simplify dinner preparations. To offer a hearty meal in a convenient package, cooks across the country are turning to wraps. Convenient and versatile, wraps are fast becoming the most popular hand-held food of the '90s. With only three basic ingredients — wrapper, filling and garnish — they make great menu selections for hectic evenings.

Wraps can be simple or exotic. The wrappers themselves are made from soft corn, flour or whole-wheat tortillas or crispy taco shells. They often include fillings inspired

Cooking school doesn't skimp on mouthwatering desserts

Staff Reports

You want elegant desserts, but you don't want to spend all day in the kitchen. And you want rich chocolatey flavor, but not at the expense of your waistline. If that's the case, then you can set a fabulous dessert table with reduced fat Chocolatey Amaretto Mousse or Boston Cream Pie. These are the kind of recipes being showcased at the upcoming Homemaker Cooking School Sept. 10 and 11 at the Midland Chaparral Center.

Doors will open at 5:30 for participants to browse booths exhibiting the latest in cooking trends from local merchants. Margaret McCutcheon, territory manager of Homemaking Cooking Schools, will demonstrate recipes from 7:30-9:30 p.m. both nights.

"I will prepare about 15 recipes that are quick and easy for working moms and dads to make," Ms. McCutcheon said, noting all participants will get a cookbook with color photos of recipes.

Door prizes at the event will include 20 bags of groceries provided by H-E-B. Cooking school sponsors are H-E-B and the Reporter-Telegram. Proceeds will benefit the United Way of Midland.

Tickets are $5 per person, or $3 each for groups of five or more. Admission is $3 for senior citizens and students. Tickets are available from H-E-B, the United Way offices at 1209 W. Wall, or at the Reporter-Telegram, 201 E. Illinois.

Recipes for two rich chocolatey — but low-fat — desserts follow:

LOW-FAT CHOCOLATEY AMARETTO MOUSSE

1 package (8 ounces) Neufchatel cheese (reduced fat cream cheese), softened
1/3 cup powdered sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon almond extract
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1/4 cup cold water
1 cup reduced fat semi-sweet chocolate baking chips
1/2 cup skim milk
2 cups frozen, light non-dairy whipped topping, thawed
Sliced fresh peaches or strawberries, optional

In food processor bowl, combine Neufchatel cheese, powdered sugar, vanilla and almond extract; process until smooth.

Reduced fat Chocolatey Amaretto Mousse almost steals the show from Reduced Fat Boston Cream Pie. Both recipes are long on flavor and short on fat. Each recipe has half the fat of typical cream pies and mousses. The secret ingredient in the mousse is reduced fat cream cheese. The cream pie is easy to make by using instant pudding and pie filling and cake mix. Both desserts are made with semi-sweet baking chips.

WHAT'S COOKING?

Cook known for Key-lime pie

By Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

Good cooks run in Mary Ann Majors' family. "I learned to cook from my mother. She's a great cook and she ad libs (in the kitchen) so it's hard for me to follow her recipes," Mrs. Majors laughed.

"I have a love (of cooking) from growing up with my mother. I enjoy cooking ..."

Her specialty is probably desserts, she said, and "my family says Key Lime Pie is their favorite thing I do."

Because she enjoys cooking so much, and because she is secretary for the Museum of the Southwest's board of directors, it was only natural that she would serve on the committee for the museum's new cookbook, "Collections: Great Food from the Museum of the Southwest."

And it was just as natural for her to contribute some of her favorite recipes to the cookbook, which will be sold as a fund-raiser for the museum. Melissa Newman Naylor created the art for the cookbook's cover.

The cookbook will go on sale at Septemberfest, the annual community-wide, weekend fund-raising event for the museum, which will be Sept. 5-7 this year.

Mrs. Majors and other committee members have high praise and gratitude for Kay Sutton Realtors for underwriting the printing of the cookbook, which allows most of the funds raised to be donated directly to the museum. These funds will be used for general operating expenses, Mrs. Majors said. "They will be divided between the main museum, the children's museum and the planetarium."

The cookbook committee "would like to see it raise $15,000, hopefully," she added. "We would like to be able to go into reprint."

Mary Ann Majors said she inherited her love of cooking from her mother. Some of her recipes are included in the cookbook "Collections: Great Food From Museum of the Southwest."

Because so many contributors to the cookbook are "gourmet cooks" who "submitted their favorite recipes," Mrs. Majors said, "they wouldn't have submitted them if they weren't delicious." That means that the cookbook will be a source of wonderful family recipes for Midlanders, but will be "great for gifts" too.

The following are some of Mrs. Majors' favorite recipes that were not published in the cookbook:

PEPPERCORN-CRUSTED PORK LOIN ROAST

1 lean boneless pork loin roast (4 pounds), trimmed
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon buttermilk
2 cups soft whole wheat bread crumbs)
2 tablespoons cracked black pepper
2 teaspoons whole assorted peppercorns, crushed
2 teaspoons chopped fresh thyme
Fresh thyme sprigs for garnish

Sprinkle roast with salt. Combine mustard and buttermilk; spread over roast. Combine bread crumbs and next 3 ingredients; press evenly over roast. Place roast on lightly greased rack in roasting pan. Bake at 325

Akers back?

HOUSTON — Former University of Texas football coach Fred Akers may soon be back on the sidelines, this time as a professional coach.

Akers told Houston's KRIV-TV that the Regional Football League contacted him about being a head coach. Akers said the league's Shreveport franchise has expressed interest in him.

"I have not been formally offered the job and I have not decided if I'd take it if it is offered," Akers said. "It could be very interesting. It would be a lot of fun to be part of a new league."

The new league plans to begin next spring.

Akers said a decision may be announced this weekend. Akers was head coach at Wyoming for two years, Texas for 10 years and Purdue for four years.

Laub takes lead

JACKSON, Mich. — Larry Laub, a two-time winner this year, had high games of 237 and 236 Tuesday to take over the lead after three rounds of qualifying in the PBA Senior National Championship at Airport Lanes.

Laub, who is averaging 218.71, had a pinfall total of 5,249, 43 more than Roy Buckley, who finished second in this event last year.

Don Helling was third with 5,172 pins and was followed by Roger Workman, 5,131, and Mike Durbin, 5,125.

The fourth and final round of qualifying will be Wednesday when the field is cut to the top 24 for Thursday's two rounds of match play. The stepladder finals are Friday night with the winner earning $16,000 and an invitation to the 1998 Brunswick World Tournament of Champions.

Agassi looks tough against weak foe

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

NEW YORK — For two crisp sets, a faster and less flabby Andre Agassi finally played as if he wanted to be on a tennis court Tuesday night as he brandished flashes of his 1994 championship run at the U.S. Open.

Then they played the third set.

Agassi looked slow, sloppy, impatient, and when he thunked an overhead against the back fence on set point, even his bride, Brooke Shields, cursed in disgust at courtside.

In the end, Agassi walked away with a 6-1, 6-1, 4-6, 6-3 victory over No. 130-ranked wild card Steve Campbell, and convinced no one that he's ready to launch another drive toward the title from an unseeded spot.

Agassi, who has plummeted in the rankings to No. 63, was playing his first Grand Slam match since losing in the semifinals here a year ago. He showed he can still drum groundstrokes into the corners, deliver deft drop shots, and return serve with power and accuracy — but is sorely lacking in stamina and sustained intensity.

Campbell, who won only eight matches all year, was a rather accommodating opponent the first two sets, serving meatballs to Agassi and letting him do pretty much what he wanted. Campbell's only advantage over Agassi was the size of his gold hoop earring, which Agassi touched at the end in admiration.

Agassi yielded only six points in one six-game stretch, and led 4-0 in the second set before Campbell held serve for the first time in the match.

A private investigator when he's not playing tennis, Campbell searched for a way to crack Agassi in the third set and found it. Picking up the pace of his serve, keeping the ball in play, and making Agassi run more, Campbell broke for a 4-3 lead, then held serve the rest of the set.

Agassi rushed between points, seemed tired and uncomfortable, but managed to settle down enough to pull out the match in the fourth set.

"I was still up two sets to one and he looked much worse than me and had a much longer way to go," Agassi said.

After losing the first match of a tournament seven times this year in compiling a miserable 9-10 record coming into the Open, Agassi was pleased with his performance.

"For all those who can't make the distinction between when I'm playing and when I'm not, I'm playing," Agassi said. "The fundamentals of everything that I

Niners land pass rushing star Greene

By Dennis Georgatos
AP Sports Writer

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Pass-rush specialist Kevin Greene, cut by Carolina after a bitter contract holdout, is joining the San Francisco 49ers, the Panthers' chief NFC West rival.

Greene, whose 14 1/2 sacks led the NFL last season, agreed Tuesday to a six-year deal worth $13 million, although only $350,000 of it will count against the 49ers' salary cap this season.

He had also been sought by the Cincinnati Bengals and Miami Dolphins after being released Sunday in the final cutdown by the Panthers. Greene had missed all of training camp and the preseason while holding out for a renegotiation of his contract.

As a member of the 49ers, Greene will play his former team twice this season, the first time in a Monday night game Sept. 29, at Carolina.

Carolina coach Dom Capers did little more than acknowledge Greene's signing and then had a terse thank you for his play with Carolina during his only season there.

"We are appreciative of Kevin's efforts with us last year. It was a good year for both Kevin and the Carolina Panthers," he said.

For the 49ers, the addition of Greene gives them a dominating pass rusher, an element that had been lacking in their defense.

"I think this now gives you that spark, that added weapon to take on these other offenses that have been very productive and getting better and better," 49ers president Carmen Policy said. "I think we had to do a little something

Mustangs ready to take next step in 4A playoffs

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

ANDREWS — The last two seasons for the Andrews High football team have ended in the kind of frustration which lingers into the offseason; tantalizingly close to an area round playoff victory which only leads to coaches, players and fans tearing out their hair.

■ More on Andrews/5C

In 1995 and '96, the Mustangs lost second round playoff games to District 1-4A teams Pampa and Dumas respectively by a combined five points. Andrews has certainly been a good team for two seasons, but not quite good enough to each the Region I semifinals.

That's the motivational tool for the Mustangs in 1997.

"Our first goal is to get into the state playoffs and after that go farther than we have the last two years," said Andrews coach Mike Lebby. "Last year it bothered the coaching staff and the kids the way we lost to Dumas in area."

That was a 10-9 loss which was a defensive struggle where neither team distinguished itself offensively. It was indicative of how the Mustangs' defense came alive in the second half of the season to carry the team to the third and final spot from District 4-4A with a 5-5 record (Andrews finished 6-6). The best news of all is that nine play-

Defensive lineman Leonard Renfro was the victim of a last-minute cut by Dallas Tuesday. Renfro is a former first round pick of Philadelphia.

Cowboys cut Renfro at last minute to save roster room for yet-to-be named linebacker

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

ADDISON — The biggest surprise at the annual Dallas Cowboys kickoff luncheon was that defensive lineman Leonard Renfro wasn't introduced. He was cut Tuesday morning so a yet-to-be-named linebacker could be signed.

Renfro, a former first-round draft pick of the Philadelphia Eagles, was cut because "we might do something at linebacker," said Dallas coach Barry Switzer.

"It was a tough decision because the young man did everything we asked," Switzer said. "He improved himself as a player, and I think he may be picked up by another team."

Owner Jerry Jones admitted Renfro "raised a lot of eyebrows in camp."

"He impressed us," Jones said. "But we needed an extra roster spot so we can evaluate a sixth linebacker."

The Cowboys are nervous because they are starting a rookie at weakside linebacker in Dexter Coakley out of Appalachian State.

The Cowboys, who have yet to sell out their home opener in three weeks, held their 14th annual luncheon to drum up enthusiasm for the coming season. They drew a big crowd despite some recent black eyes that included Switzer carrying a loaded gun into an airport and a rape accusation against lineman Nate Newton.

The Cowboys showed a film of last season, which ended with a playoff loss to Carolina. It was entitled "America's Team Forever."

Switzer told the crowd: "I'm more excited about this season than any since I've been head coach. An atmosphere of confidence exists at Valley Ranch. It's a swagger, a confidence that you believe in yourself."

Switzer promised the crowd "you will be proud of what you see this Sunday."

Dallas travels to Pittsburgh for Sunday's season-opener.

"Last year we started out 1-3 in September and lost all chance of being at home in the playoffs," Switzer said. "It's tough when you have to travel abroad. We want to turn that 1-3 record around and be playing at home in the playoffs."

Jones, who once said the Cowboys' season would be a failure if they didn't win the Super Bowl, wouldn't venture that far out on a limb again.

"If we have a healthy Troy Aikman all year, we can compete for a Super Bowl, particularly if we can get to the playoffs with all our fire power," he said. "We got caught a little short at Carolina, and Michael Irvin got hurt."

Jones said there was a possibility Deion Sanders might visit Valley

Lewis says goodbye to competitive track with victory in 400-meter relay

By Nesha Starcevic
Associated Press Writer

BERLIN — Carl Lewis finished his track-and-field career Tuesday night in typical fashion — with a victory and a smile.

Running his final competitive race in the same stadium where his idol Jesse Owens won Olympic glory 61 years ago, Lewis anchored a star-studded team to victory in the 400-meter relay to cap the ISTAF Grand Prix meet.

"It was a fantastic farewell," Lewis said, the winner of nine Olympic gold medals himself and — some say — the greatest track athlete ever.

The crowd of nearly 60,000 fans gave Lewis a standing ovation, and a group of fans lifted a big sign that read: "Thank you for all the great moments, Carl."

With teammates that included Olympic 100-meter champion Donovan Bailey, former world record-holder Leroy Burrell and Namibian sprint champion Frankie Fredericks, the outcome of Lewis' last race was never in doubt.

But the crowd still got quite a show. Bailey, who set the world 100 record in Atlanta last summer, ran the first leg, handing off to Burrell, who passed the baton to Fredericks. And on the final handoff, Fredericks gave Lewis a slight push in the back to send him along to victory in 38.24 seconds.

"We are all going to be gone from the track some day. I'll miss you all," Lewis told the crowd. "I just want to say I love you and I'll never forget you. ... The thrill of competing never goes away, but the need to be first across the finish line is gone.

"How do you say goodbye? This huge crowd and running a relay with four of the fastest guys in history, that was just perfect."

Lewis will run one more race, an exhibition with Burrell and other Santa Monica Track Club teammates at halftime of a college football game in Texas next month.

Earlier, Fredericks, Hicham El Guerrouj of Morocco and Gabriella Szabo of Romania shared the richest single prize in track, a 44-pound jackpot of gold, when they won their races.

Fredericks surged in the final meters and powered past Bailey to win the 100 in 9.99 seconds. El Guerrouj pulled away in the last lap to leave Kenyan ace Daniel Komen behind and win the mile in 3:45.64. And Szabo won the women's 5,000 in

Braves' Lopez homers off Wagner in 11th

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

ATLANTA — Javy Lopez homered off Billy Wagner with two outs in the 11th inning as the Atlanta Braves beat the Houston Astros 7-6 Tuesday night after wasting a six-run lead.

Wagner (7-6), who relieved to start the 10th, struck out Danny Bautista and Andruw Jones before allowing Lopez's team-leading 20th homer.

Brad Clontz (5-1), recalled earlier in the day from Triple-A Richmond, escaped a bases-loaded jam in the 10th by striking out Billy Spiers with the bases loaded.

In the opener of the three-game series between division leaders, Craig Biggio had tied the score against Chad Fox in the eighth with his 19th homer, a two-run shot.

Atlanta, which remained 4 1/2 games ahead of second-place Florida in the NL East, won for the fifth time in six games. Houston, the NL Central leader, is three games ahead of second-place Pittsburgh despite losing seven of 11.

Thomas Howard opened the 10th with a double and advanced on a bunt single by Biggio. Derek Bell grounded out and Jeff Bagwell was walked intentionally — his fourth walk of the night — to load the bases.

Dodgers 6, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — Eric Karros singled home the go-ahead run in the ninth inning Tuesday night as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-4 for their fifth win in six games.

Raul Mondesi's two-run double keyed a four-run first against rookie Jose Silva and his single finished off the two-run ninth. Los Angeles retained its one-half game lead over San Francisco in the NL West and sent the Pirates to just their third loss in 10 games.

Giants 6, Mets 2

NEW YORK — J.T. Snow hit a three-run homer and Wilson Alvarez (3-1) gave up six hits in six innings, sending the fading Mets to their 12th loss in 17 games. San Francisco is 8-2 against New York this season.

Marlins 11, Cubs 0

CHICAGO — Livan Hernandez (8-0) combined with two relievers on a four-hitter, and Jeff Conine homered.

Conine drove in five runs and Gary Sheffield and Moises Alou also homered for the Marlins, who had 17 hits and improved to 8-1 against the Cubs in their most lopsided victory of the year. Florida remained four games ahead of San Francisco in the NL wild-card race.

Expos 7, Cardinals 5

ST. LOUIS — Rondell White hit a go-ahead, three-run homer off Dennis Eckersley (0-4) with two outs in the eighth as Montreal rallied from a 5-0 deficit.

Donovan Osborne didn't allow a hit until Vladimir Guerrero's leadoff single in the seventh, then was chased in the eighth.

Phillies 4, Padres 2

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Grace (1-0) won in his first major league appearance since May 1996, allowing two runs and six hits in seven innings. He missed the second half of the 1996 season with shoulder trouble, then strained right triceps during spring training.

Tony Barron drove in two runs for the Phillies, 24-19 since the All-Star break. Ken Caminiti went 3-for-4 for San Diego, which has lost eight of 10.

Rockies 9, Reds 5

DENVER — Jeff Reed hit a three-run homer in the eighth and Vinny Castilla hit a pair of home runs as the Colorado Rockies ended a three-game losing streak with a victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Pedro A. Martinez (1-1) allowed a single to Dante Bichette and walked Ellis Burks before giving way to Scott Sullivan, who gave up Reed's 11th home run with one out in the eighth. Walt Weiss followed with an RBI double.

Washburn sets record

Staff Report

WICHITA — Despite a shaky Angels' bullpen, Jarrod Washburn got his franchise record 15th win of the season and the Angels opened their five game series with the Wranglers in style Tuesday at Lawrence-Dumont Stadium with a 9-7 win.

Washburn, who has won four straight games, pitched five innings, allowing one run and four hits. Washburn (15-12) also increased his Texas League leading and franchise-record strikeout total to 146..

The Webster, Wis. native passes the late Donnie Moore and Marty Reed, who held the previous record. On Saturday, he will have a chance to add to the record for wins and strikeouts in the Angels last game of the season.

Midland improved to 30-38 for the second half. and Wichita falls to 32-36. Both have no chance to catching El Paso for the second half title with just four games left.

But after leaving the game in the sixth with a 7-1 lead, Washburn had to sit and watch the bullpen try to hold the inherited lead.

Angels reliever Chris Hook allowed three runs in the sixth to make the score 8-4.

After Bill Bene held the Wrangler scoreless for two innings inning, Nick Skuse kept things interesting for the Angels faithful — maybe too interesting.

Skuse, who has been perfect in 15 save situations this season for Midland, was anything but perfect in this go around. After a Keith Luuloa error, Skuse walked two Wranglers to load the bases. He followed by hitting Lino Diaz, to bring in one run, and Jeremy Giambi hit a sacrifice fly to make the score 9-6.

With two out, Wrangler pinch hitter Mark Merchant hit a double off Skuse to bring Wichita closer, 9-7. The, Skuse fielded a ground ball by Al Shirley, but on the throw to first, Skuse hurled the ball three feet short of Danny Buxbaum, bouncing off the first baseman's glove. Buxbaum has to step off base to retrieve the ball and then barely beat Shirley to the base for the last out.

Chris Norton, who came into the game with two hits in his last 16 at-bats, had two-run homer in the first while Keith Luuloa had a bomb of his own in the second.

Brewers edge Rangers in extra innings

■ AL Roundup

MILWAUKEE — Fernando Vina singled home the winning run in the 12th inning Tuesday night to give the Milwaukee Brewers a wild 11-10 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Milwaukee (66-65) won for the ninth time in 12 games to climb above .500 (66-65) for the first time since Aug. 4.

Bryan Eversgerd (0-1), recalled from Oklahoma City of the American Association, gave up a leadoff triple to Mike Matheny and Vina followed with a single to right.

Doug Jones (5-5) got six outs, sending Texas to its third straight loss and eighth in 11 games.

Trailing 10-8, Milwaukee tied the score in the eighth on an RBI groundout by Jesse Levis and Vina's run-scoring single off Matt Whiteside.

Brewers starter Cal Eldred gave up eight hits and six runs in 4 2-3 innings. Texas starter Julio Santana allowed eight hits and four runs in four innings.

Milwaukee took a 3-0 lead in the first on a sacrifice fly by Julio Franco and RBI singles by Jeff Cirillo and Mark Loretta.

Juan Gonzalez hit a two-run homer in the fourth, his 32nd, and the Rangers went ahead 6-3 in the fifth when Eldred walked Jim Leyritz and Domingo Cedeno with the bases loaded and Fernando Tatis blooped a two-run single off Al Reyes.

Franco's two-run single and Cirillo's RBI single tied the score 6-all in the fifth.

Yankees 18, Athletics 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tino Martinez hit his 41st homer as the New York Yankees got 22 hits — their highest total in 11 years — to rout the Oakland Athletics.

Joe Girardi and Rey Sanchez had four hits each, and Martinez, Bernie Williams and Tim Raines had three apiece. Martinez raised his major league-leading RBI total to 124.

Royals 5, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — Pinch-runner Johnny Damon stole two bases in the ninth inning and scored the go-ahead run on a groundout as Kansas City ended a five-game losing streak.

Brady Anderson hit a grand slam and Cal Ripken had three hits for the Orioles, who had won five straight and nine of 10.

Twins 8, Tigers 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Rich Robertson won for the first time in 10 starts since June 14, as Minnesota won for just the second time in 16 games.

Robertson (8-12), set a career best for victories, allowing one run and four hits in 7 2-3 innings, striking out a season-high nine, one short of his career high.

White Sox 8, Blue Jays 5

TORONTO — Frank Thomas had three hits and reached the 30-home run plateau for the sixth time in seven seasons for Chicago.

Thomas followed Dave Martinez's bunt single with a line-shot to left-center off Marty Janzen in the sixth for his 30th home run of the season and 500th career extra-base hit.

New coach installs new plan at Prairie View

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

PRAIRIE VIEW — Prairie View A&M football players don't talk about the one subject that everybody else brings up.

The Panthers haven't won a game since Oct. 31, 1989 when they beat Mississippi Valley St. 21-12. The next game started a string of 68 straight losses — the longest losing streak in college football.

But don't expect that to come up in casual chats with the players or new coach Greg Johnson, who rebuilt a tattered Langston University program and now expects to do the same with the Panthers.

"I have no need to talk about what it takes to lose," Johnson said. "All I want to talk about is what it takes to win. When I met with the team the first time, I told them it would be the first and last time I'd mention 0-68.

"I told them it means nothing to me. I had nothing to do with that. I'm concentrating on the present. The past is dead and everything that's dead should be buried."

Previous coaches couldn't stop the losing. Johnson, armed with 15 scholarships, a new coaching staff and a woefully inexperienced group of players, says he can.

Members of the Prairie View A&M football team work out Aug. 11. Prairie View A&M holds a national collegiate record 68-game losing streak, but they hope to break the streak under new coach Greg Johnson.

The question he most often gets is, why try?

"I guess you could say I'm very competitive," Johnson said. "We're always looking for the ultimate adrenalin rush. I'd done all I could do at Langston so it was time to seek a new adventure, a new thrill."

Johnson will try to get his adrenalin rush with a squad that includes only five seniors and several incoming freshmen who will have to contribute immediately.

Johnson took the job in February, too late to do much in recruiting. And because the previous coaching staff was still under contract, Johnson couldn't hire his staff until recently.

For spring drills Johnson said he "invited some guys to help me out for a couple of weeks."

Johnson has sophomore quarterback Josh Barnes will quickly grasp the new multiple offense. He'll have returning receivers in Chris Allen, Jarrel Moore and Roy Moses, but Johnson isn't sure what to expect.

"I don't know if we'll be good running or throwing," Johnson said. "We have some talent but it's inexperienced. Freshmen will do what freshmen do and we have sophomore who should be a little better this year."

The defense is headed by junior defensive back Michael Patterson, a preseason All-Southwestern Athletic Conference pick.

"The first year I played a lot and were went 0-11," Patterson said. "Then we got coach (Henley) Sapenter and everyone thought it would turn around and then it was 0-22.

"So this year we have a new coach and so I'm expecting to win. I believe we're going to win every game until the final gun shoots off."

Johnson left Langston with a 35-30 record as head coach. When he took over at Langston, the school hadn't had a winning record in 20 seasons.

He'll face an even tougher job at Prairie View. The Panthers have only been losing since 1991 but nobody has done it more consistently. Prairie View opponents have had several close calls over the years but the losing has continued.

Even the elements conspired against the Panthers. In 1992, they were leading Southern 7-0 until rain and tornadoes delayed the game one hour. When play resumed, the Panthers lost 12-7.

In 1995, Prairie View out-rushed Alcorn 143-109 and held them scoreless in the second half but lost 13-2.

Johnson hopes his scholarship allotment will eventually expand into a full complement.

"Right now, we're fighting a bear with a short stick," Johnson said. "It's not apples to apples. They've (administration) told us to make do with what he have for now and if we improve, they'll improve along with us."

The Panthers open the season Saturday in the Astrodome against Texas Southern, then play their first home game Sept. 13 against Langston, Johnson's old school.

"That game isn't business anymore," Johnson said. "It's personal."

ANDREWS: Mustangs want more

(From 1C)

ers return from that unit for this season.

The biggest attention-getter for Andrews, though, will be when the Mustangs have the ball. More specifically, when Shaud Williams has the ball.

Williams is easily the top returning runner in the district, probably the best back in West Texas and maybe as good as any ball carrier in the state. As a sophomore, he ran for 2,203 yards and 16 touchdowns and ran for over 200 yards four times.

Andrews also benefits from having quarterback Daniel Kessler for two more seasons. If Kessler keeps steadily improving, that will make the Mustangs that much more dangerous.

"We have a quarterback who started 12 games last year and he's matured," said Lebby of his junior signal caller. "We tried to be very basic with him because he was a sophomore but he can do a few more things now."

Kessler should have other options besides handing the ball to Williams. Five senior wide receivers return including Cody Chesshire, Hector Garcia, Doug Stricklin, Stormy Jackson and Wayland Mayfield. Seniors Oscar Bueno and Jovito Nunez will handle duties at fullback along with sophomore Geremy Woods.

"We do have experience at a lot of places like our skill positions," Lebby said.

How well the skill positions produce could be determined by the development of the line, which Lebby considers undersized. Senior guards Beau Moore and Rickey Edwards both return, but the rest of the line is unproven. Tackles Nick Blackmon and Jose Gonzales both step up from junior varsity, while center Kyle Lebby is being converted from linebacker, where he was an all-district pick as a sophomore. Meanwhile, senior Mike Hudson, the tight end, has been moved from offensive tackle.

Should the line gel, the Mustangs figure to have little trouble scoring points. They'll probably have to score plenty of points in district since most of the 4-4A teams have at least one marquee offensive player.

"A lot of the teams in the district have great skill players and we talk about that all the time," said Lebby, whose team went 3-2 in district last year.

The Mustangs seem as well equipped as any team to deal with a 4-4A potential offensive onslaught. Most of the returning corps of last year's defense figures to be in place.

Two all-district picks return to the unit in defensive end Jay Scudder and weakside linebacker Temo Guevera. Scudder has been moved to end this season although he excelled at tackle last year, but he has no problem with the shift.

"I like end a lot better," said the 205-pound Scudder. "I'm really not the biggest guy and I was going up against guys who were 40-50 pounds heavier. Most of us were new players last year and now that we have experience I think we're going to be awesome."

Seniors Gustavo Levario and Jorge Ramos and sophomore Sergio Martinez will compete at the other end position. Sophomore Marco Zapata and junior Joe Davila will see time at defensive tackles along with Moore.

Returning along with Guevera at linebacker is Brandon Long, who will play in the middle. Bueno is likely to start on the strong side while Kyle Lebby is likely to see some time there as well.

Jackson and Mayfield, both of whom emerged late last season at safeties, will anchor the secondary. Chessire returns at one corner while juniors Jessie Armendariz and Jeremy Pitkin will play the other corner.

Chris Timmons figures to be the placekicker while Chesshire or Mayfield will punt.

In preparation for district, the Mustangs again play a challenging preseason schedule. They open by hosting 2-4A power Snyder and host another 2-4A contender, Levelland. In between, they'll travel to Memorial Stadium for a game with 5A Midland High.

"We've got to get into district with some wins to get some confidence going," Lebby said. "We've gone into district the last couple of years with a bad record but that has really helped us against good teams."

They can only hope it helps them get one step further this year.

Akron hopes for miracle vs. 'Huskers

LINCOLN (AP) — One team has a reputation for beating up on unranked opponents on opening day. The other has consistently lost its big games.

The matchup between No. 6 Nebraska and Mid-American Conference featherweight Akron has bookmakers' odds soaring, with Nebraska favored by as much as 56 points. History shows that the underdog Zips have reason to worry about coming to Lincoln.

Rich Baccellieri, a sports book manager at Caesar's Casino in Las Vegas, said that over the past 10 years, the Huskers have been favored by 50 points or more five times.

"I'm looking at the scores, and they're always right around the spread," Baccellieri said.

Nebraska was favored by 50 points over Pacific in 1994 and the Cornhuskers won 70-21. In 1988, Kansas was a 50-point underdog to the Huskers and lost 63-10.

"It's not a comfortable game in many ways for me to play or for the players," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said at his first Tuesday news conference. "A lot is expected. There is very little upside potential and a huge downside."

In seven of the last eight years, Nebraska played an unranked opponent in its season opener. It beat all of them, usually by 30 points or more.

The Zips went 4-7 last year. Since becoming a Division I-A team in 1987, they have played Auburn, Florida, Tennessee, Kansas State, Oregon State and Illinois. They also have played Virginia Tech four times. Their record in those big games: 0-10.

GREENE: New Niner could play Sunday

(From 1C)

extra to deal with the competition, not only in our division but within the NFC."

Greene, 35, is expected to join the team Wednesday. To make room for him on the roster, the team released safety Mike Salmon.

Defensive coordinator John Marshall said Greene could see some action in Sunday's season opener at Tampa Bay.

"We're going to play him as much as we can. He's been wrestling, so he's got to be in good shape," Marshall said, referring to Greene's foray into another professional career. "When I talked to him, I told him get him, 'Get your ticket and get in here and get ready to play as much as you can take.'"

Marshall said Greene's acquisition may result in a shakeup of the defensive line, with the possibility that end Roy Barker could be pushed to the bench.

"We'll probably have to restructure a few things, and obviously a few people," said Marshall, who said the 49ers' plan to use Greene in the so-called elephant pass rusher position. "But I think it's warranted and we've obviously got to use the guy's talent. He brings a lot to us. We think he's going to be a fine fit."

Coach Steve Mariucci said the acquisition of Greene gave the team a lift heading into the regular season after a discouraging 1-3 preseason.

"What he brings obviously is great experience and great success," Mariucci said. "But his energy level is way up there, way up there, practice, games. He just brings that to the table. And this is a high-energy team. Whether we've shown that or not in the preseason, that's besides the point. We're talking about the real thing now and he's going to add to what's already a good group."

TRACK: Lewis wins last race

(From 1C)

The gold, worth $200,000, goes to athletes who win their events at all four of the Golden Four meets, in Oslo, Zurich, Brussels and Berlin.

Fredericks trailed Bailey after about 80 meters but used terrific acceleration into a head wind to pass the Olympic champion.

"It was a great big race and a fantastic audience," said Fredericks, who was cheered on by 56,000 fans in Berlin's Olympic stadium.

Tim Montgomery of the United States caught up with Bailey at the finish and the two tied for second place with an identical time of 10.05 seconds.

Haile Gebrselassie of Ethiopia won the men's 5,000 but failed in his attempt to reclaim the world record, which was set by Komen in Brussels Friday with a time of 12:39.74. Gebrselassie held off a strong challenge by Paul Koech of Kenya and pulled away with 200 meters left to win in 12:55.14.

"At the beginning, the race was optimal but at the end I felt I couldn't break the record. It's a pity," Gebrselassie said.

Marion Jones of the United States, the new world champion, won the women's 100 in 10.81. Merlene Ottey was second in 10.85, ahead of two-time Olympic champion Gail Devers.

"I thought I'd won, but I wasn't sure because Merlene was also rejoicing," Jones said.

Jon Drummond of the United Sttes won the men's 200 meters in 20.07, while Marc Creary took the 110-meter hurdles in 13.11 after American teammate and Olympic champion Allen Johnson pulled out with an injury.

The Cowboys still aren't sure when they will see Sanders this weekend.

"I assume we'll see him on Sunday," Switzer said. "We'd like for him to return punts, but he hasn't done it in awhile. If anyone can do it (with limited practice time) he can do it."

Andrews Mustangs

Coach's district favorite pick: Sweetwater.

Key quote: Coach Mike Lebby on opening district by playing Sweetwater: "I'd probably want to play them a little bit later in district. It's not a must-win game but it sure would get us off on the right foot. If you're not ready to play every Friday in this district, you're in trouble."

Returning starters: 5 on offense, 9 on defense.

Offensive standouts: Tailback Shaud Williams, quarterback Daniel Kessler, guard Beau Moore.

Defensive standouts: End Jay Scudder, outside linebacker Temo Guevera, inside linebacker Brandon Long, strong safety Stormy Jackson.

Last season's record and district finish: 6-6 overall, 3-2 district, third.

Last playoff appearance: 1996 lost in second round of 4A playoffs to Dumas 10-9.

Offensive/defensive schemes: I formation, 4-3.

Preseason trend: Games against 2-4A schools Snyder and Levelland at home.

Defensive eyes, Andrews' playoff hopes rest on junior running back

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

ANDREWS — When the Andrews High offense takes the field at any time this season, all eyes of the defense, opposing coaches and fans in the stands will be on number 21.

Junior tailback Shaud Williams has put up the kinds of numbers his first two years which defy convention. Since making the varsity midway through his freshman year two seasons ago, Williams has rolled up more than 3,000 yards on the ground, including a landmark game against Fort Stockton last season when he ran for 448 yards and five touchdowns.

It's hard to say whether or not Williams is the best back in the state, but the list of those above him is not too long. Putting up such auspicious numbers is self-perpetuating for Williams.

"It gives me motivation to come out and work a lot harder in practice," Williams said. "I believe that you play like you practice."

As much as Williams prepares for a game, opponents prepare for him. Late last season, some coaches suggested — maybe only half-jokingly — that they were going to stick 15 defenders on the field to stop Williams. Quips aside, defenses are going to do whatever they have to do to stop Williams, perhaps even run 10-man lines.

"He had that situation last year so it won't be anything new to him," said Andrews coach Mike Lebby.

Despite defenses keying on him, Williams still ran for 2,203 yards and scored 16 touchdowns. There's little doubt that even at five-feet-nine-inches and 175 pounds that Williams stands the tallest of a group of fine skill players in District 4-4A.

Williams has naturally attracted the attention of several colleges and is already getting letters from recruiters, making him perhaps the most talked about prep athlete in the Permian Basin. Yet, he's determined not to let any of the attention he receives from colleges, opponents or the media change him.

"It's just something that comes along with the territory and it's expected that you deal with it," Williams said. "I pretty much take things as they come."

If he wanted to, Williams could thump his chest over his accomplishments in his still-young high school career. After all, he has numbers which are respectable for someone who's already played three years. However, he's kept his attitude on the field.

There could be plenty of time for Williams to celebrate a championship. Both he and quarterback Daniel Kessler have two more seasons and Williams thinks Kessler's added experience could take some heat off him. Williams has also learned a few of his own lessons since starting on the varsity.

"I've learned you've got to look up and see how the defense is playing," said Williams, who has been clocked at 4.4 seconds in the 40-yard dash. "I wasn't very smart about that my freshman year, when I thought I could outrun everyone to the sideline. Speed isn't everything."

But "everything" is what Williams could mean to Andrews.

Salt Lake Olympic group picks replacement CEO

By Kristen Moulton
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Salt Lake Organizing Committee short-circuited its own search Tuesday, picking Chairman Frank Joklik to replace former president and chief executive Tom Welch, who resigned last month after being charged with domestic violence.

The committee also voted 17-6 to hire Welch as a $10,000-a-month consultant and give him $602,900 in deferred compensation if the 2002 Winter Games are financially successful, a package worth more than $1.1 million.

Before public outcry, the board had informally agreed to a $2 million package for Welch, who stepped down before pleading no contest to a misdemeanor battery charge resulting from a July scuffle with his wife.

The committee's move to hire Joklik — just eight days after it named a search committee — came at the urging of International Olympic Committee member Anita DeFrantz and U.S. Olympic Committee President William Hybl.

The full IOC meets in Lausanne, Switzerland, next week.

"If we don't do this now, it wouldn't be until 1999 that the session (IOC general membership) could have a focus on Salt Lake City," said DeFrantz, who serves on Salt Lake's organizing committee.

Salt Lake organizers are to brief the IOC on preparations for 2002 next week, and the suggestion was that it wouldn't look good to show up leaderless.

Hybl said the athlete federations endorsed Joklik, 69, the retired chairman of the Kennecott Corp. who has been involved in Salt Lake's quest for the Games since the late 1980s.

Jewell reaches monetary settlement with ex-employer

ATLANTA (AP) — Piedmont College has agreed to pay former Olympic bombing suspect Richard Jewell to drop his lawsuit against the school where he once worked.

Jewell had charged that college officials slandered him in statements to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution. Under the agreement, Piedmont will be dropped from Jewell's libel suit against the newspaper, his attorney, Lin Wood, said Tuesday.

Wood declined to say what led to the settlement or how much money Jewell will get.

"Fortunately, I think, we were able to reach a settlement at what we would consider the early stages of the litigation," he said. "Obviously we're very pleased. We can now focus on the real culprit."

Piedmont president Ray Cleere had no comment. The school's attorney, Wray Eckl of Atlanta, was out of town and could not be reached.

Jewell, 34, worked as a security officer at the college in Demorest, Ga., before taking a job last summer as a guard at Centennial Olympic Park in Atlanta.

NATURAL GAS PRICES
Tuesday $2.514

Prices mixed

NEW YORK — Oil prices remained little changed and gasoline prices continued their fall Tuesday as investors remained concerned that new supplies could limit profits.

Crude oil for delivery in October settled up 2 cents at $19.28 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange as unleaded gasoline fell 0.69 cent to 63.81 cents a gallon.

The decline followed a sharp drop Monday amid anticipation the country will be flooded with new supplies just as the summer driving season begins winding down.

Gasoline futures have recently come under pressure by Tosco Corp.'s restart of its large Bayway, N.J., refinery, which is easing the severe tightness of reformulated gasoline mandated by most Northeast states.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $2.514 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.5 cents.

The American Petroleum Institute reported after the market closed Tuesday that crude oil stocks fell by 6.9 million barrels to 309.3 million barrels last week. Gasoline supplies rose 1.7 million barrels to 189.5 million barrels, while stocks of distillates, including heating oil, fell 2.8 barrels to 126.0 million barrels.

Dollar retreats

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against the mark Tuesday as Germany's central bank left interest rates untouched, but traders speculated growing inflation concerns would soon force the Bundesbank to raise rates.

In a quiet session, the dollar also was lower against the yen as traders watched for signs of a spark in the U.S.-Japan trade conflict.

The dollar was quoted in late New York trading at 1.7953 marks, down from 1.8205 late Monday. It was the lowest level since July 21 and left the dollar down 5 percent from a nearly 8-year high of 1.8832 on Aug. 5.

The dollar settled at 118.18 yen in New York, down from 118.79. The British pound was quoted at $1.6147, up from $1.6093.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Monday: 1.4840 Swiss francs, down from 1.4989; 6.0505 French francs, down from 6.1310; 1,753.70 Italian lire, down from 1,774.30; and 1.3983 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3914.

Mortgage program

The Principal Residential Mortgage office in Midland is participating in Principal Residential's down payment assistance program that gives as much as $1,250 toward the purchase of a home to low-to-moderate income home buyers nationwide.

The program was introduced nationally three years ago and the company expects to eventually assist more than 400 homeowners across the country.

To qualify for the program, a borrower must be at 80 percent or less of the median income level determined by the Department of Housing and Urban Development in the city where the home is being purchased. The house must also be in either a low- to moderate-income census tract or a minority census tract as designated by HUD.

Borrowers must provide 3 percent of the down payment from their own funds and Principal will grant the remaining 2 percent or $1,250, whichever is less.

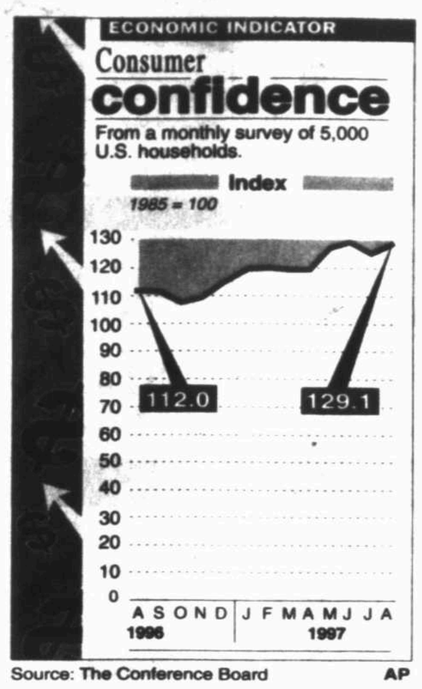
ECONOMIC INDICATORS

Economic reports indicate new growth



Source: The Conference Board AP

Associated Press

NEW YORK — New readings on consumer confidence and manufacturing suggest the economy is headed for more strength in the second half of the year, again raising concerns about inflation.

Tuesday's reports come at a time of uncertainty in the marketplace as economists scour new data for any signs showing the economy is moving too fast.

While the Federal Reserve hasn't raised interest rates to slow the economy since March, investors fear another rate increase will come in the final months of this year if the economy continues to grow.

"The economy is doing well and we don't have inflation," said Gary Thayer, a senior economist at A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc. in St. Louis. "But there are concerns that the strong economy will create some economic pressures."

The Conference Board, a private business group, reported Tuesday that its index of consumer confidence showed an unexpected rise in August.

Separately, the Commerce Department reported that orders for big-ticket durable goods fell 0.6 percent in July, But excluding aircraft and defense purchases, which can skew month-to-month numbers, the figures showed the economy continuing to expand.

"There are two main factors at work: a strong labor market and stock market," said Kathleen Stephansen, senior economist at Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. in New York. "With those things working, there is no reason for consumer confidence or consumption to go down."

The consumer confidence index, calculated from a 1985 base of 100, is derived from responses to survey questions sent to 5,000 households nationwide. The index climbed to 129.1 from 126.3 in July.

Consumers in August were more confident about current business conditions than they were in July and also said jobs were more plentiful in August, the report said. About 17 percent said jobs were hard to find.

The index measuring consumers' expectations for the future rose in August, after a decline in July.

Consumers in the Mountain region of the country remained most confident in the economy, while those living in the Middle Atlantic states were least confident.

Investors shift away from blue chips

■ Dow posts fourth consecutive drop while broader markets do OK.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Investors shifted more money away from a pricey blue-chip sector Tuesday, weighing down the stock market as they hunted for better values among smaller-company shares.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 77.35 to 7,782.22 after faltering in a late morning rebound. It was the fourth straight drop in the Dow, a losing streak that has sliced about 240 points, or 3 percent, from the blue-chip index.

"Once again, it's the Dow vs. the market. The blue chips are weak but the broad market is OK," said Larry Wachtel, market analyst at Prudential Securities. "The biggest success in the market has been in the 'nifty-fifty' blue chips, and that's where the correction is taking place."

Noting that volume was fairly light again on Tuesday, Wachtel and other analysts cautioned against deriving too much meaning from the market's late summer moves.

"You're looking at a 'last-days-of-August' market where no one's around and slight changes in sentiment seem to have a major impact on prices," said Ronald J. Hill, investment strategist at Brown Brothers Harriman & Co.

The blue-chip sector struggled despite an afternoon turnaround in the bond market, where interest rates edged lower after initially rising toward their highest level since early July.

Bonds slipped in the morning after the latest in a series of reports suggesting a renewed economic vigor that could aggravate inflationary pressures.

Reports from two private research groups showed gains in retail sales and consumer confidence. The government, meanwhile, reported that manufacturing activity continued at a healthy pace, and a realty group reported that sales of existing homes rose in July.

The data helped fuel more worries that the economy may be reaccelerating too quickly for the Federal Reserve's taste.

Since nudging a key interest rate higher in March to protect against inflation, the Fed has withstood the temptation to slow the economy further, easing worries about slower growth in corporate profits.

With the recent pick up in business activity, however, investors are growing fearful the central bank will intervene again in the coming months.

"There are some overtones here of an improving economy," said Wachtel, adding that economists will be anxiously awaiting data on August and September retail activity to see whether there was any inflationary spurt in consumer demand during the back-to-school selling period.

For the most part, though, analysts have remained fairly confident about the outlook for tame inflation and steady economic growth.

The recent data "may be creating some near-term jitters, but these jitters will be alleviated to some extent as we continue to get good looking inflation numbers," said James Solloway, director of research at Argus Research.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by an 8-to-7 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 449.08 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list fell 7.14 to 913.02, the NYSE composite index fell 2.67 to 475.36, and the Nasdaq composite index fell 10.27 to 1,591.30.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies rose 0.22 to 418.31, and the American Stock Exchange composite indexrose 0.45 to 647.30.

Home sales rise modestly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of previously owned homes rose 2.2 percent in July as buyers took advantage of low mortgage rates, a trade group said Tuesday.

Existing homes sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.24 million, the National Association of Realtors said. Last month's nearly erased a 2.4 percent sales drop in June.

"Many people took advantage of low interest rates and a robust economy to make large purchases such as a home," said Russell K. Booth, the trade group's president.

Interest rates on 30-year fixed-rate mortgages averaged 7.50 percent in July, down from 7.69 percent in June.

The median price of an existing home, meaning half sold for more and half for less, was $126,500 in July, up 4.1 percent from a year ago.

By region, sales rose 8 percent in the West to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 940,000 units and 5 percent in the Northeast to a rate of 630,000 units. Sales were unchanged in the South at a rate of 1.58 million units and fell 1.8 percent in the Midwest to a rate of 1.08 million units.

Nationally, sales hit a record high of 4.09 million units last year.

Through July this year, existing homes are selling at a 4.14 million rate.

U.S. refinery utilization reaches record high

■ American Petroleum Institute says utilization reached 99.4 percent as refiners worked to meet high gasoline demand.

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — U.S. refinery utilization, the percentage of refining capacity in operation, rose last week to the highest rate ever recorded by the American Petroleum Institute.

Utilization rose to 99.4 percent, the 78-year-old API said Tuesday in a weekly bulletin released after oil futures markets closed, showing that refiners were still busy churning out gasoline to meet high demand toward the end of the summer driving season.

The restart of Tosco Corp.'s Bayway refinery in New Jersey, the largest on the U.S. East Coast, along with refinery restarts in Texas, boosted overall refinery utilization. Bayway was running at reduced output for about three weeks.

"There was a big jump" in refinery operations, said Tom Bentz, energy services director at High Yield Energy Analytics in New York. "Bayway came back up last week and that's in part why runs are up in these lofty levels."

Refiners processed 15.502 million barrels a day of crude and other petroleum feedstocks last week. That's close to 15.601 million bbl/day, which is the API's estimate of the maximum amount that U.S. refineries can process.

That maximum rate incorporates the likelihood that refineries usually undergo maintenance at some point in the year, so utilization rates could theoretically exceed 100 percent for a limited period, said an API statistician in Washington.

The API divides the U.S. into five regions and last week three of those, the West Coast, Midwest and northern Plains, operated at 100 percent capacity.

The preceding week's utilization rate was revised to 98.4 percent from 97.5.

The API was founded in 1919.

The maximum rate incorporates the likelihood that refineries usually undergo maintenance at some point in the year, so utilization rates could theoretically exceed 100 percent for a limited period.

At the same time, Mowbray is overseeing an extensive remodeling of his first store at 218 N. Midkiff Road. The remodeling includes new walls, furniture, equipment, a roof, parking lot and paint. He said he anticipates holding a grand reopening of the remodeled location and grand opening of the new store at the same time.

He added that plans include building an Odessa location in the next year.

Opening Friday on Loop 250 between Wendy's and Hollywood Video will be PAYLESS SHOE SOURCE.

Payless is moving its Midland Park Mall to the new location, which is approximately the same size and will feature shoes for the entire family as well as accessories such as socks, shoelaces, polish and purses.

PAPA JOHN'S PIZZA expects to open its second Midland store in the same building in September.

A new service at Midland International Airport will begin offering 24-hour secured covered parking beginning Thursday.

The service will be through credit card or prepaid debit card only, offering ATM-type transactions so the customer won't have to worry about having the right amount of cash.

The parking lot will open 90 minutes before the first flight and remain open until the last flight of the day. It includes 150 spaces and rates are $7 daily, dropping to $6 daily when one month is prepaid, and to $5 a day when three months is prepaid.

A shuttle bus will drive the customer to the terminal and a direct phone line is located in the airport lobby for returning customers.

Midland Park Mall will host an arts and crafts show Thursday through Sunday throughout the mall.

There will also be a blood drive held by Permian Basin Blood Institute Friday and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. near the Food Court.

Blood donors can receive either a T-shirt or tickets to Hollywood Theaters.

The Westside Lions Club will operate the train this weekend.

PREMIER TRAVEL of Lubbock, which recently acquired Midland Travel, has purchased Cleburne Travel Services Inc. of Cleburne, which has served Johnson County since 1975.

Richard A. Cooper, president and owner of Premier Travel, stated that "The single location travel agencies are finding it moire and more difficult to keep their operations going. Consolidating the smaller agencies is the only way to survive with all the changes taking place in this industry."

Premier Travel has a network of more than 14 locations in three states.

Ruxandra Dragomir watches her ball as she serves in her match with Lisa Raymond at the U.S. Open in New York. Raymond won her match to advance to next round.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Sweden's Thomas Enqvist, seeded 11th in the U.S. Open, pulled out of the tournament Tuesday with an "unspecified illness."

Enqvist had been scheduled to play Michael Joyce of Los Angeles in a night match, but his place was taken by "lucky loser" Nicolas Escude of France, the highest-ranked player to lose in the final round of qualifying.

■ Open Notes

In her last U.S. Open appearance, in 1994, Tu defeated Martina Hingis in the final of the junior girls. On Tuesday, Tu, a right-hander from Porter Ranch, Calif., downed Jolene Watanabe of Arcadia, Calif., 6-3, 7-5.

The last time she appeared in the main draw, Tu lost a first-round match in 1994 as an amateur.

Since losing to Tu, Hingis has become the No. 1 player in the world.

TENNIS, ANYONE?: Richard Story, a 39-year-old from Vancouver, British Columbia, has challenged three of the biggest servers in men's tennis to a speed-gun battle.

Story set the IBM ThinkPad SpeedZone world record at last year's U.S. Open when he served a tennis ball 139 mph.

On Tuesday, he issued a challenge to the three players on the ATP Tour who have served faster than 140 mph this year — Mark Philippoussis, Greg Rusedski and Julian Alonso — to a best-of-3 fast-serve competition during the tournament.

LEGENDS OF TIME: The fourth annual Northwest Airlines Legends of Time, a tennis event showcasing some of the game's top male and female stars, will compete on the grass at the International Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, R.I., on Sunday, Sept. 14.

Hall of Famers Tracy Austin, Rod Laver, Ilie Nastase, Fred Stolle and Virginia Wade are among the field scheduled for the special tennis exhibition.

ACES COUNT FOR MONEY: Chase Manhattan Bank will donate $10 for every ace served during women's singles matches at this year's U.S. Open. The money will fund the first free tennis instructional camps for girls in New York City.

The most outstanding player from the camps will get the chance to play against a Corel WTA Tour player at Madison Square Garden during the season-ending Chase Championships in New York Nov. 17-23.

OPEN: Hingis doesn't labor

(From 1C)

need to improve on are there. Now it's becomes a matter of fine-tuning. ... It's nice to be there. It's been a long time.

The top women also had an easy day.

Cruel or not, Martina Hingis couldn't resist flicking drop shots against her pregnant foe.

Or smiling about it.

Hingis didn't get to be No. 1 by extending sympathy toward other players, so it was not too surprising Tuesday at the U.S. Open to see her pull out all her tricks against a 15-week pregnant Tami Jones in a 6-0, 6-1 rout.

"When I read she was pregnant, I said, 'Well, OK, I'm going to face two opponents at one time,'" Hingis said with a laugh. "It was weird playing someone who is pregnant. It's different.
