Mission Milestones

Well, those winds finally died down and both squadrons were able to make lost ground from previous weeks. Overall the wing gained 141 sorties during the last week. This puts T-37s at 5.7 days ahead and T-38s at 5.5 days ahead of the timeline

Prime BEEF deploys to Eglin AFB

By 2nd Lt. Kathy Saunders
64th Civil Engineering Squadron

While most of us were still asleep the morning of Nov. 5, 107 members of Reese's Prime BEEF team were packing cargo in preparation for their one-week deployment to Eglin AFB, Fl., Detachment 2. Det. 2 is a training area used for practicing Air Force contingency engineering. Its unique wilderness setting allows for very realistic and stressful training.

Once at the camp, Reese's Prime BEEF team joined with people from 20 other bases, eight different MAJCOMS and the Army to form a team of 234 people. The 64th Civil Engineering Squadron commander, Maj. Pete Kloeber, served as the deployment camp commander over civil engineering, services, explosive ordinance disposal (EOD) and disaster preparedness personnel. He also served as air base group commander for the three-day exercise.

The first few days, classes were conducted covering everything from camouflage, concealment and deception (CCD) to buddy care and explosive ordnance reconnaissance. During this time, people prepared for the upcoming "war" scenario to unfold. The last half of the week was a realistic test of the team's wartime capabilities. For two days, the team wore chemical gear. They processed in and out and lived in the underground

APR system to undergo revision

A new enlisted evaluation system featuring five major changes goes into effect in May. The new system replaces the noncommissioned officer and airman performance reports.

The changes include: implementation of a formal feedback system; deletion of reports for most airmen basic and airmen and some airmen first class; capped endorsements for technical sergeants and below; limited endorsements for master sergeants through chief master sergeants; and development of a new regulation and forms.

The new rating form will be called the enlisted performance report, rather than airman performance report.

In response to a desire for more feedback and the lack of uniformity among supervisors, feedback will be formalized.

Feedback sessions will be mandatory for technical sergeants and below and optional, but highly encouraged, for senior noncommissioned officers.

Feedback sessions are to be held within 30 days of a permanent change of station or change of reporting official, every 180 days thereafter for airmen, and at the mid-point of the performance report supervision period for NCOs.

Sessions will be recorded on a new form that will be seen only by the supervisor and ratee. It will not be part of a permanent record.

Evaluation reports will not be prepared for most airmen basic, airmen and some airmen first class.

The performance report's main purpose is to evaluate an airman's performance and to recommend promotion.

Since promotion to these grades is noncompetitive, the requirement to complete a report on airmen who have less than 20 months' total active federal military service, and not at a formal training school, has been deleted.

The single exception involves those selected for a permanent change of station or

OPD puts officers on course

Air Force's top military leader says the best path to career success is for officers to recognize that growth comes from success in meeting the challenges they face every day; that maximum growth comes from doing the best possible job in the job they have right now.

Air Force Chief of Staff, Gen. Larry Welch said "Officer Professional Development is putting officers back on course."

That course calls for increased professional competence at current levels of responsibility, preparation for the next level and greater command involvement.

"We found in recent years that we have a lot of captains who are trying to maneuver their way onto a staff because the career path that they had plotted calls for going to a staff in a certain time," General Welch said.

"That approach is counter-productive," he said. "There is no best path for any officer, and it's certainly not possible for a junior officer to identify any best path to professional growth and success."

The general emphasized that there are "endless numbers of paths to professional growth and success."

The issue is not what's the right path. The issue is what the officer does to prepare himself, how he performs in the current job and how he prepares himself for the next job.

"Then they will find that they are almost always on the right path," General Welch said.

"The captain who thinks he knows the best path to professional success is dead wrong," General Welch said. He added that officers who spend a lot of time trying to find this "mythical, preconceived path" only "irritate their bosses."

The Air Force is taking a number of steps to revitalize Officer Professional Development, but the cornerstone is a revised evaluation system.

"Certainly the most convincing proof that we are truly moving in

Self-inspection procedures change

By Maj. Dennis Austin
Wing IG

Congratulations on a fantastic effort during the September self-inspection month. The deputates' outbriefs on the inspection were extremely beneficial to the wing commander (and to the deputates). More importantly, the outbriefs identified weak areas and developed viable, long-term solutions to our problems.

Colonel Lillard was so satisfied with the September inspection effort that he has directed the self-inspection regulation be rewritten to follow the format used in September. Wing regulation 123-1 (self-inspections) will be rewritten to have all self-inspections performed during two, 60-day periods. (This means units will no longer schedule their self-inspections).

The wing will consequently direct the self-inspection period. Our next self-inspection period will be February. Therefore, all self-inspections should be accomplished during January and February. The deputates have already received written guidance on the February self-inspection effort and a meeting has been scheduled for Dec. 15 at 8 a.m. in the Wing Conference Room, to discuss the new changes with all the unit self-inspection monitors. In addition, letters will be sent to the deputates announcing the meeting.

Just a reminder, each unit has a self-inspection continuity book. These books contain a variety of materials such as previous IG reports, IG Newsletters, SSIs and the ATC Common Deficiency Report. These materials are essential to our success as a wing, therefore, if you have not seen these ask your unit self-inspection monitor.

I have already spoken with Colonel Sams, and he is an ardent supporter of our self-inspection plan of attack and he is anxious to begin preparing for the upcoming UEI.

If you have any questions, please call me at 3409. Happy Holidays!

Taxpayer Bill of Rights offers advice

By Capt. Mark Garrard
Base Legal Office

The Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (TAMRA), which includes some 412 pages of technical corrections in the tax law, is most often cited in the news because of one provision entitled the "Taxpayer's Bill of Rights."

Notice

TAMRA will require the IRS to notify taxpayers in writing of their rights and the obligations of the government during any proceeding involving the taxpayer. Specifically, the IRS must conduct examinations at the Tax Office nearest the taxpayer's home. The taxpayer may be represented during an interview by any attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or actuary, or any other person authorized to do so under Circular 230.

Absent an administrative summons, a taxpayer cannot be required to attend the interview with his representative. If a taxpayer's case should be referred to the IRS Criminal Investigation Division, the IRS must so advise the taxpayer at the outset of the interview, if not before. Interviews may be audiotaped by the IRS or by the taxpayer, but only with prior notice.

The new law also requires the IRS to take action to ensure taxpayers are not sent multiple statements as a result of a single action. The IRS must make every effort to improve the clarity of all notices and explanations that are sent to taxpayers.

IRS errors

The law provides that the IRS may be bound by any written advice it gives to taxpayers. If the taxpayer reasonably relies upon written advice he has requested from the service and such advice later proves erroneous, the IRS must abate any resulting penalties.

Oral advice from the service does not operate in the same manner. So if you call 1-800-424-1040 for IRS advice over the phone, understand that advice comes without a guarantee. The IRS is not required to provide written advice to the requestor.

Litigation

For the first time taxpayers will be granted the right to sue the Federal Government for damages should an IRS employee, in connection with collecting a tax, recklessly or intentionally disregard any provision of the Internal Revenue Code or its regulations. This extends to reckless or intentional acts in collecting a tax; it does not include employees who determine the amount of tax owed.

The taxpayer has two years to bring suit and his recovery will be limited to a maximum of $100,000.

Should the taxpayer prevail in his dispute with the IRS, he may be able to recover attorney fees, litigation expenses, and administrative costs to include reasonable fees of the taxpayer's expert witnesses.

To avoid such reimbursement to the taxpayer, the burden is placed in the IRS to prove its position in the dispute was "substantially justified." One purpose of these provisions is to encourage the IRS to admit any mistakes it has made at the earliest possible point in the process.

Levies

Should the taxpayer lose in his dispute with the IRS, collection action will begin. The Act provides some additional protection here as well. If voluntary payment is not properly made, the service may collect tax owed by levy (seizure of assets). The old law required 10 days notice of a levy action. TAMRA extends this to 30 days prior notice and requires the IRS to tell the taxpayer, in plain English, his options to avoid levy and right to appeal the proposed seizure.

Certain property of the taxpayer, the family residence and business equipment, and a greater percentage of his wages will generally be exempt from levy. Prior notice of levy and the waiting period may be avoided by the IRS in special cases where collection of the tax would be jeopardized.

Disclosure of tax data

TAMRA states that tax return preparers, paid or not, have an obligation to not reveal or disclose any information furnished by the taxpayer in connection with the preparation of tax returns.

Violations can result in civil fines and criminal penalties up to $1,000 and one year in prison. Generally taxpayers have the right to expect that personal and financial information provided will be kept confidential. In certain cases, however, under strict guidelines the IRS may share tax information with state agencies, the Justice Department and other federal agencies.

If you have further questions about your rights as a taxpayer, ask the IRS to send you Publication No. 1, by calling 1-800-424-3676.

Wisconsin approves settlement

Like federal income tax law, Wisconsin law does not tax a gain on the sale of a principal residence if a replacement home is purchased and used as a principal residence within a two year period. However, Wisconsin law prior to 1982 limited this exclusion to certain circumstances where the replacement residence was in Wisconsin. As a result of private litigation, the Wisconsin courts have recently approved settlement of a class action on behalf of all tax payers who sold a principle residence in Wisconsin in 1980 and paid Wisconsin income taxes on the gain even though an out of state replacement residence was purchased within the replacement period provided by Section 1034 of the Internal Revenue Code. The settlement provides for a refund of taxes, interest and penalties less court-approved attorney's fees.

Claims for refunds must be filed within four years with the Wisconsin Department of Revenue, P.O. Box 8906, Madison, Wisconsin 53708. Copies of the form for claiming the refund may be obtained from the Wisconsin Dept. of Rev., or by contacting Ms. Jackson at HQ USAF/JACA, AUTOVON 227-0413.

Individuals who believe themselves to be affected are advised to consult their legal assistance officer.

Prime BEEF team deployment to Eglin AFB

Survivable Collective Protection System (SCPS-II) facility.

They dove off runways during attacks and even deployed the encampment to another location.

Teamwork was the key throughout the entire base attack and recovery scenario.

The Building Damage Assessment Team (BDAT) and the Water and Waste Crews were both singled out for exceptional performances.

Also, the Rapid Runway Repair (RRR) crews were noted for their timely repairs of the "bombed out" runways both during and after attacks, repairing over ten craters during their time out on the runway.

The team that really got a run for their money during the deployment was the fire department as they were tasked with both exercise and real world problems. The emergency medical technicians and other fire department members answered both exercise emergencies as well as real world camp emergencies.

The last day ended with a redeployment of all troops back to the main Det 2 encampment.

All during the deployment, the team impressed the cadre with their sense of urgency, super motivation and great "can do" attitude.

However, at the end of the week most were physically and mentally exhausted and ready to go home.

APR to undergo 5 major changes in May change of assignment locally. Airmen basic, airmen and airmen first class with less than 20 months service will receive a mandatory report prior to a move and a letter of evaluation prior to a local change of assignment.

The change will allow the first 20 months of an airman's career for learning and adjusting to the military service while also providing the gaining commander of airmen with less than 20 months service with a written performance report.

Endorsements will be capped for reports on technical sergeants and below. Since promotion under the weighted promotion system up to master sergeant does not consider the level of endorsements, the new evaluation system has limited the number of evaluators for airmen through technical sergeants to two.

The new report will allow evaluation by only the rater and the rater's rater.

The final rater must be at least a master sergeant.

Endorsements for master sergeants and above also will be limited. To reduce escalating endorsement levels, the number of evaluators has been reduced to three: the rater, the rater's rater, and an additional endorser not to exceed the wing commander or equivalent commander.

The limit is intended to keep the endorsing level to the individual who is in the best position to accurately judge the person's performance.

The minimum endorsing requirement is no lower than a field grade officer.

A new regulation and enlisted evaluation forms are being developed, including the enlisted performance report, a senior enlisted performance report, an airman performance feedback worksheet and an NCO performance feedback worksheet.

Many of the changes will occur on May 1, with other changes phased in later.

The performance report system in its present form has been virtually unchanged since it was developed in 1968. Air Force determined a thorough review and revision of the entire airman system was necessary to ensure it was an effective performance evaluation system. (AFNS)

OPD puts officers back on course to career success

the right direction will come from the Officer Evaluation System," General Welch said.

"It should become quickly apparent to officers that there is no advantage whatsoever to move out of the core career area and broaden too early," he said.

"On the other hand," General Welch explained, "it will become apparent to more senior officers that there is an advantage to broadening."

"The Officer Evaluation System will very quickly demonstrate for captains and junior majors the best place for them to be is their core areas," General Welch said.

Within the last year, the Air Force has reduced the number of captains serving in staff positions.

"Captains do not need to serve on staff above wing," General Welch said.

Today there are only 288 captain pilots serving on staff above wing, "A drastic reduction from just one year ago," General Welch said.

By-name assignments are also being reduced.

"Any officer who gets a by-name request from a senior officer is very likely to be of the quality that's going to make it without a by-name request," the general said.

By-name assignments have grown to about seven percent of all officer assignments, a rate that General Welch said will be reduced to an "absolute minimum throughout the Air Force."

The Air Force became aware of the drift toward long-range career planning about two years ago.

"It became apparent all at once that we had drifted to the point where we had inadvertently communicated to Air Force officers that they needed to do a lot of long range career planning," General Welch said.

A retention survey conducted about two years ago brought the problem to the surface. General Welch said many officers who enjoyed working in their primary career areas "felt great pressure to move into career-broadening assignments very early in their careers."

"As we look more deeply into it," the general continued,"it was very evident that we had given a lot of unintentional but not too subtle indicators that we really intended for officers to try to map out a long-range path."

To turn the system around, General Welch said a team effort is essential. The team consists of the Air Force's senior leaders, commanders at all levels, the personnel system and individual officers.

"The whole system is focused on providing maximum growth and providing these opportunities so that the path does not matter," he said.

General Welch cautioned, however, that professional development is not an assembly line process.

"We do not want officers to just focus on the current problem. We want officers to be concerned about their professional growth. We want officers to have ambitions to proceed beyond their present levels of responsibility," he said.

"What we do not want them to do is waste time and effort trying to plot out the next assignment," he said.

Company grade officers do not need to worry about broadening experiences; that will come.

Field grade officers do need to start thinking about broadening experiences; that's part of the longer-term qualifications.

"We want the most competent, well developed professional officer we can grow.

Providing officers with maximum opportunities not only serves Air Force needs, it clearly serves the individual officer's best interest," General Welch concluded. (AFNS)

Pen Pals!

Jeffrey Simpson expands his world through an old tradition — writing letters to someone he's never met. Reese Elementary School students recently sent letters of local interest to second graders in Great Britian. Letters contained information about Texas, the '88 election, Thanksgiving and personal interests and hobbies. In return, the British students will explain about life in Great Britian and their interests. The letters will be hand carried from Lubbock by Danni Saenz (a dependent wife and Reese Elementary PTO member) and the reply letters will be distributed to the students after the Thanksgiving holiday. BAQ to increase in January

Basic quarters allowances will increase an average of 7 percent in January with larger average increases going to the enlisted ranks.

The increases, effective Jan. 1, will range from 4.1 percent to 23 percent. The increases are based on a DOD-wide housing cost survey conducted last year.

Enlisted BAQ increases will average 6.6 percent for those with dependents and 10.2 percent for those without dependents. Officer BAQ increases will average 6.8 percent with dependents and 7.1 percent for all others.

Lieutenants and captains with at least four years' enlisted service will receive the largest BAQ increase, 23 percent. Previously, they were paid the same as other officers without enlisted service. The higher rate recognizes that junior officers with prior enlisted service are often older and have larger families than their peers.

Past BAQ rates have normally increased annually at the same rate as the overall military pay raise. That rate will be 4.1 percent in 1989. However, this time Congress allowed DOD to vary the BAQ increase by pay grade based on reported housing costs.

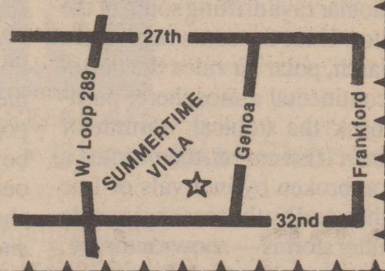

BAQ is designed to cover 65 percent of the median housing costs nationally. during the past few years BAQ rates have not kept pace with rising housing costs.

The January increase will leave the BAQ rate at 61 percent of median housing costs nationally, the highest it has been in recent years. (AFNS)

Winter storms: are you prepared?

By TSgt. James Norton
Disaster Preparedness Training NCO

In September, the sun leaves the Northern Hemisphere with its perpendicular rays drifting south of the equator. Until the sun's rays return in March, polar air rules the northern continental atmosphere, pushing back the tropical warmth of summer. It is autumn, then winter, a season broken by intervals of fine weather, and by the seasonal parade of winter storms — snow-dumping, ice-covering, blood-chilling paralyzers of cities, which trap travelers, take lives, and destroy property.

Winter storms can kill without breaking climatological records. Their danger is persistent year to year. From 1936 through 1969, snowstorms, directly and indirectly, caused more than 3,000 deaths.

To keep you from becoming a statistic, we have included some "Winter Storm Safety Rules:"

• Check battery powered equipment before the storm arrives. A portable radio or television set may be your only contact with the world outside the winter storm. Also check emergency cooking facilities and flashlights.

• Check your supply of heating fuel. Fuel carriers may not be able to move if a winter storm buries your area in snow.

• Check your food supply and stock extra. Your supplies should include food that requires no cooking or refrigeration in case of power failure.

• Prevent fire hazards due to overheated coal or oil burning stoves, fireplaces, heaters, or furnaces.

• Stay indoors during storms and cold snaps unless in peak physical condition. If you must go out, avoid overexertion.

• Don't injure yourself shoveling snow. It is extremely hard work for anyone in less than prime physical condition, and can bring on a heart attack — a major cause of death during and after winter storms.

• Rural residents: Make necessary trips for supplies before the storm develops or not at all; arrange for an emergency heat supply in case of power failure; be sure camp stoves and lanterns are filled.

• Dress to fit the season. If you spend much time outdoors, wear loose fitting, lightweight, warm clothing in several layers; layers can be removed to prevent perspiration and subsequent chill. Outer garments should be tightly woven, water repellent, and hooded. The hood should protect much of your face and cover your mouth to ensure warm breathing and protect your lungs from the extremely cold air. Remember: entrapped, insulating air, warmed by body heat, is the best protection against cold. Layers of protective clothing are more effective and efficient than single layers of thick clothing; and mittens, snug to the wrists, are better protection than fingered gloves.

The terms WATCH and WARNING are used for winter storms, as well as for other natural hazards: WATCH: alerts the public that a storm has formed and is approaching the area. People in the alerted area should keep listening for the latest advisories over radio and television, and begin to take precautionary measures.

WARNING: a storm is imminent and immediate action should be taken to protect life and property.

(This information was derived from the U.S. Department of Commerce for your information. Read it, keep it and follow its recommendations next time the storms of winter stalk your corner of the land.)

She worked this project in addition to her normal duties, and was able to complete Supply's portion of the conversion eight days prior to the established deadline. (USAF photo by SrA. Rattlers attend ATC football championship

By SrA. Greg Spraggins
Editor, Roundup

The Reese Rattlers Varsity Flag Football Team traveled to Lackland AFB, Texas last week to compete in the 1988 ATC Flag Football Championship.

Reese kicked off the tournament with a 40-13 win over Goodfellow AFB, Texas in their first game. Later that afternoon, Reese defeated Laughlin 40-21 to take the lead in their five-team division.

Wednesday morning, Reese took their first loss as a team to Lackland 25-13, but defeated Lowry AFB, Colo. 18-6 later that afternoon to win the division, and advance to the playoffs. Reese had a bye in the first single-elimination playoff games, due to the high point total of their previous games.

After the first games, only Reese, Chanute, Laughlin and Randolph teams were in the running for the title.

Thursday afternoon, Reese suffered a loss to Chanute, 20-13, to finish their chances for a first place victory in the tournament.

After defeating Randolph, Laughlin set their sights on Chanute. But Friday afternoon, Chanute defeated Laughlin 12-6 in overtime to claim the title.

Members of the team are: Derrick Walker, coach, Greg Spraggins and Joel Salonga assigned to the 3500th Mission Support Squadron; Leslie A. Wallace, Irving Moore, Jr, II, William Shedd and Michael Toliver assigned to the 64th Student Squadron;

Leo Jones, Andre Harley and Wayne Woolcock assigned to the 1958th Communications Squadron; and Dave Simmons, David Fraser and Vernon McGrier assigned to the 64th Field Maintenance Squadron.

Contain your holiday cheer

By TSgt. Bud Simpkins
Assistant Judge Advocate

At this time of year, so much of our thoughts are directed toward the holiday season, and having fun, that we sometimes get careless. Maybe I'm a bit too optimistic, but I don't believe anyone would intentionally get drunk, drive, then have an accident.

Preventive measures should be included along with your holiday cheer. The following is provided for consideration:

* If you drink too much and need to sober up, drink a lot of hot, black coffee. Wrong. All you'll be is a wide awake drunk. Coffee can't dilute the alcohol in your blood stream. Caffeine doesn't counteract alcohol either.

* If you drink too much and need to sober up to drive, take a hot/cold shower (either one, it doesn't matter). Wrong again. All you'll be is a clean smelling drunk. You can't "shock" yourself out of intoxication.

Ensure you eat something while drinking. This is a something you should do anyhow. (If your stomach is full of food you won't feel like drinking much, right?) Doctors say that food in the stomach delays the process of alcohol reacing your blood stream. Nevertheless, if one imbibes to excess, the results are potentially dangerous.

For those hosting parties... be a friend, don't let someone drink and drive.

Recruiting service needs people

More than 200 openings are available in 1,400 Air Force recruiter's offices nationwide. Qualified sergeants through master sergeants with more than four, but less than 16 years active duty are eligible to apply.

After an intense screening process, selectees attend a six-week recruiting school at Lackland AFB, Texas. There, they learn salesmanship techniques which prepare them for recruiting duty. Then, the new recruiters are off to the assignments of their choice for at least four years.

In addition to the choice of assignment, recruiters receive several monetary incentives, including special duty assignment pay of up to $275 monthly, reimbursement of certain out-of-pocket expenses and increased subsistence allowance.

Since assignments are filled on a first-come, first-served basis, interested applicants should contact the Consolidated Base Personnel Office's customer service center soon. For more information, call CMSgt. George Pouliot or MSgt. Chip Calcari at AUTOVON 487-2812, or write HQ ATC/DPRAP, Randolph AFB, Texas 78150-5000. (ATCNS)

Crime Line

Reese's guardians of peace

By Sgt. Kevin Dye
Base Crime Prevention Manager

Air Force security police members constantly face challenges on their way to becoming the most comprehensively trained police force in the world.

The initial training is received at the Security Police Academy at Lackland AFB, Texas. Training is extensive in weapons, tactics, military law and jurisdiction, community relations and patrol procedures. Upon graduating from the academy, there comes a greater challenge, combat training by the Army at Ft. Dix, N.J.

Infantry training by the Army's elite, fine tunes leadership into every graduate. This difficult course challenges airmen as well as NCOs in the most difficult field conditions imaginable.

The bond that binds each security police member is their dedication to community service.

Today's USAF security police force are considered by some as the best, and the knowledge of this is the cornerstone of each member's pride. It is a difficult and sometimes thankless job, but one that truly challenges Reese's "guardians of peace."

'Messiah' to be presented Dec. 10 at Texas Tech University

George Frederick Handel's "Messiah" will be presented Saturday, Dec. 10, at 8:15 p.m. in the University Center Allen Theater on the Texas Tech University campus.

The 120-voice University-Civic Chorale and members of the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra, Donald Bailey, conductor, will be featured in the presentation.

A holiday reception will follow in the University Center Courtyard.

Handel's MESSIAH has been called the greatest oratorio ever written. It was composed in the short period of only 25 days, during which time Handel worked as if he were under a spell. He did not leave his house or accept any visitors; he ate and slept very little. When his domestics begged him to rest or eat, he answered them incoherently, with eyes blazing, so that they thought he was losing his mind. Again and again they found him in tears as he wrote an awesome phrase or a devout passage.

Never a religious man in the same sense as Bach, Handel nevertheless experienced deep religious feeling during the composition of MESSIAH. At the completion of the "Hallelujah" chorus, he exclaimed to his servant, "I did think I did see all Heaven before me, and the great God himself." At the completion of the monumental oratorio, he confided to a physician, "I think God has visited me."

Under conductor Donald Bailey, the University-Civic Chorale with members of the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra will perform music form Handel's MESSIAH. Soloists for the performance are soprano Jill Blalock, mezzo-soprano Sue Arnold, tenor Paul Olson and baritone Kyung Wook Shin.

Tickets are on sale at the University Center Ticket Booth. Tickets may be purchased in person, by phone, or by mail. MasterCard and Visa as well as personal checks are accepted.

Tickets are $7 for the public and $5 for Texas Tech students. All seats are reserved. Tickets may be ordered from UC Ticket Booth, P.O. Box 4310 - TTU, Lubbock, TX 79409. When ordering by mail, add $.50 for mailing.

Firefighters savor 'heavy' victory over police

Lubbock's firefighters are savoring a heavy victory over police officers in the recent Weight Watchers Battle of the Badges weight loss challenge.

Firefighters posted a 527 1/4 pound total weight loss to the police department's 262 3/4 pounds.

While the firemen were declared official winners of the 13-week competition, each department claimed a share of the $1,500 grand prize donated by Weight Watchers for charity.

The fire department will donate its winnings to the Muscular Dystrophy Association while the Police Department selected the Lubbock Police Officers Benefit Association.

"I'm especially proud of the men and women who participated in this program," said Fire Chief Don Stevens. "And, I know they are proud to have helped the Muscular Dystrophy Association in its efforts."

Assistant Police Chief Ray Huffman echoed those sentiments. "The individuals in the departments who responded to this challenge are to be congratulated. I know we had several participants who lost more than 40 pounds each."

Weight Watchers Regional Supervisor Dorothy McDaniel agreed. "The 37 firefighters and 23 police officers who lost a total of 790 pounds are the real winners. Anyone who's overweight knows how good it feels to take those extra pounds off," she said.

During the contest, firemen and police officers attended Weight Watchers meetings free of charge.

"Beyond raising money for two worthy causes, our goal was to teach these folks that proper eating habits can make them healthier and give them more energy to deal with the stressful activities they frequently encounter on the job. The Battle of the Badges has been a success on both fronts," added McDaniel.

Weight Watchers is dedicated to helping people learn to control their weight through good eating habits, group support and optional exercise.

Instructors needed to teach various classes

The Lubbock Parks and Recreation Department will be offering a variety of community center classes aimed toward pre-school, elementary, teenage, and adult participants for the winter/spring session.

Instructors will be paid by either an hourly wage or on a contract basis.

If you are interested in becoming a class instructor at one of the City's community centers, please contact Bob Goodwin at 762-6411 ext. 2678.

Fine Arts Center to host 38 Texas artists

The Lubbock Fine Arts Center will host its 4th Annual December Competition. The exhibit is featuring 38 premier Texas artists including Denny Fraze, Barry Phillips, and Future Akins, all of whom were picked from more that 300 entries. Exhibitors were chosen by Mr. Eugene Binder, former curator of Laguna Gloria Museum in Austin, and now the owner of the Binder Gallery in Dallas.

This year's display will debut on Monday, Nov. 28, and run through Jan. 6, at the Lubbock Fine Arts Center, 2600 Ave. P.

The awards reception will be held on Dec. 5, at 7 p.m., and the public is invited to join in the festivities and interact with the artists.

Fitness and health

By A1C Todd Hamilton
Physical Fitness Specialist

What is a good method to build strength and improve cardiovascular endurance?

No longer must the aerobic athlete develop strength in an inefficient manner, or the weight training athlete suffer from weak lungs and lack of stamina. Aerobic weight training can give your body the endurance it needs to keep going.

Circuit weight training is the method designed around a circuit (a series of weight training exercises).

To do this, you perform repetitions on a particular exercise for 30 - 60 seconds, rest a minute, and then go on to the next exercise, which is also done for approximately 30 - 60 seconds, followed by a minute's rest, and so on. To do a circuit aerobically, it must be done continuously for more than 20 minutes, and your heart rate must be kept within the 70 - 85 % range. By alternating exercises speed and rest intervals, you can adjust your heart rate.

Whenever you engage in aerobic weight training, it's important to monitor your pulse rate periodically when between sets.

If you're within 70 - 85 percent of your maximum heart rate, then you are still within the aerobic range. To learn more about circuit weight training contact A1C Todd Hamilton at 6021.

Questions about exercise, fitness or sports, may be written down and sent t o the Reese Physical Fitness Center, 64 ABG/SSRS, or called in to 6020. An answer will be given in writing and some of the select one will be published in the Roundup.
