Coming Sunday...

How does the traditional, structured classroom compare with the "new" concept of the open classroom? Are the two completely incompatible, to be kept separate, or can the advantages of both be used for the benefit of the student?

Administrators, teachers and parents express their views in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram as reporter Kay Hord compares the open classroom being used in several of Midland's elementary schools with the traditional classroom.

Carter energy plan gets new opposition

By MIKE SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's tax-and-rebate plan for reducing both oil imports and gasoline consumption ran up against fresh opposition today in the Senate.

The proposal, the conservation centerpiece of the President's energy plan, is opposed by both Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia and Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Long told Carter's energy secretary, James R. Schlesinger, on Thurday that the committee will not approve the taxes unless the rebate plan is junked.

Under the scheme already approved by the House, the price of U.S. oil would be raised to the much higher price charged by other oil-producing nations. But much of the resulting profits would be taxed away from the oil companies and returned to consumers in the form of a $28 per-personrebate.

Today, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, opened Senate Energy Committee hearings designed to encourage further opposition to the plan. While the Finance Committee retains jurisdiction over the so-called crude oil equalization tax, Metzenbaum and other committee members are urging a resolution calling for its defeat by the full Senate.

Metzenbaum said there is no evidence that higher gasoline prices envisioned under the plan will discourage Americans from unnecessary driving.

Instead, he said, "these high prices would cause great economic hardship for the less affluent members of our society."

In testimony before the energy committee, Alice Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, disagreed. She estimated that by 1980 the tax would cut consumption of gasoline and other refined petroleum products by 170,000 barrels daily.

Meanwhile, a new Library of Congress study showed that the crude oil tax will produce between $19 billion and $30 billion in new revenues by 1985 instead of the $12 billion estimated by the Carter administration.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said he is worried that the higher figures will mean excess profits for the oil companies.

In his appearance before the Finance Committee, Schlesinger said Thursday said he didn't know whether Carter would agree to demands that the rebate be scrapped.

While opposed to the rebate, Long would support the crude oil tax if the resulting higher profits were used to encourage greater production.

Carter's proposal to tax Americans on the one hand to save energy while giving the revenues back with the other has troubled some congressmen ever since Carter sent his energy plan to Capitol Hill

Byrd wants to invest the taxes in projects dealing with coal-gasification, solar energy and other alternative fuels, plus improving mass transit and upgrading the way coal is transported from the mines.

Lance claims conduct meets ethical standards

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Insisting that "I have done more than stay narrowly within the law," Bert Lance testified today that his conduct both as a banker and as budget director meets the high ethical standards set by President Carter for members of his administration.

Pressed by a Republican senator about his overdrawn checking accounts in Calhoun, Ga., Lance replied — as he has insisted earlier — that the issue wasn't a matter of ethics.

"In a place like Calhoun, where you have a practice of overdrafts ...overdrafts as such is not an ugly word," Lance told Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del.

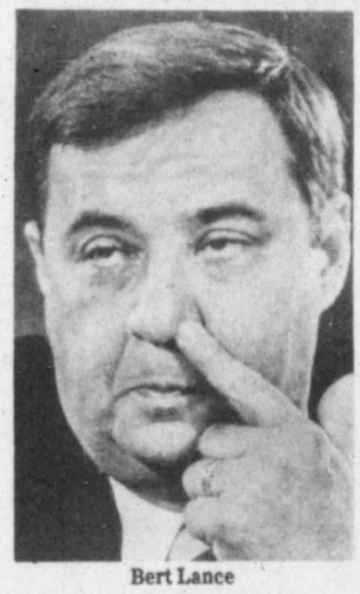

"...To simply say overdrafts constitute an unethical situation, that is not the case."

"There was no attempt to hide, no attempt to cover-up, no attempt not to disclose anything," Lance said of the controversy over his Calhoun checking account.

Roth began his questioning by quoting Carter's statement that staying narrowly within the law would not be enough to satisfy the ethical standards of his administration.

Lance responded that he had met that test and "certainly, I have done more than stay narrowly within the law."

During his appearance Thursday, Lance said the question of whether he had withheld information from the committee, when his nomination as budget director was before the panel last January, was the most serious of the issues raised against him.

Bert Lance

Lance insisted he had told the committee staff about his financial dealings, including the overdrafts, during his banking career.

Lance's assertion prompted Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., to say he thought members of the committee should testify about their interviews last January with Lance.

In a packed hearing room, Lance began his testimony Thursday, calmly reading from a prepared statement for close to two hours. He said he did nothing wrong in building up a personal financial empire, now seriously troubled, and that no depositor "ever lost a cent" in the two banks he ran in Georgia.

Although Lance invited the people of America to be his jury during the day, the President says in the end he and Lance will sit down friend to friend to decide whether the budget director will survive in the job he is fighting to hold.

"I am sure that the decision that I make along with Bert Lance ... will be satisfactory to the American people," Carter said Thursday in a question-and-answer session with members of the Radio and Television News Directors Association.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said he had no idea when the decision on Lance's future will be made except that it will be after the former Georgia banker's testimony to a Senafe committee. Asked how much public opinion will enter into the decision, Powell said:

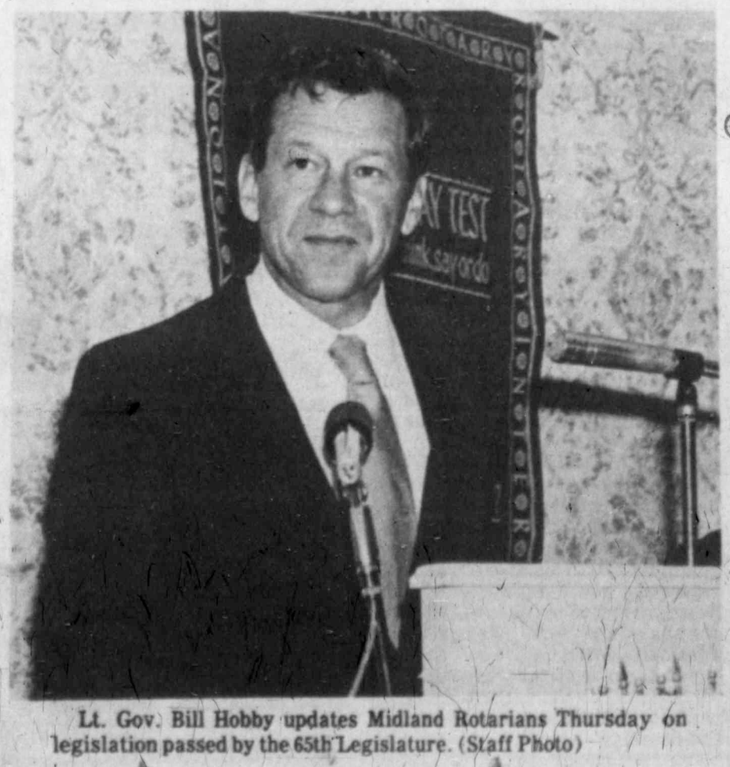

"If we have shown anything at all in this, it is that we are willing to take a considerable amount of heat and shed some blood ....If we had ever intended to base what we were going to do on a public opinion poll, we wouldn't have gotten into it this far."

Carter spoke by telephone to the association's annual convention in San Francisco. Hours before, in Washington, Lance had told the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee investigating his finances that he wants the American people to be "the jury in this proceeding."

Lance, who got best wishes from Carter at 6:30 a.m. in the President's study, denied to the committee that there were irregularities in his financial dealings when he headed two Georgia banks.

He conceded that he and his family and the committee that handled his unsuccessful 1974 campaign for governor of Georgia had overdrawn their bank accounts by thousands of dollars.

An Editorial

The decision is ours

On January 1 of this year, The Reporter-Telegram editorialized that Midland's number one priority in 1977 should be the expansion and renovation of Midland Memorial Hospital.

Now, nine months later, our opinion has even been strengthened, as the needs of the hospital have been brought out in the campaign for the hospital district and $10 million in bonds.

Governors and trustees of Midland Memorial Hospital and temporary directors of the proposed hospital district have studied all alternatives for expansion of medical facilities. They looked into private financing by contributions or revenue bonds. They explored giving the hospital to a religious institution or to the County of Midland. They sought federal or state financing help. They looked into commercial hospital companies operating the hospital.

On each study, the governors, trustees and directors-elect learned that the alternative was not feasible. Contributors expressed the view that $10 million was an unattainable goal. Bonding companies said that revenue bonds could not be sold because of the non-profit, operating requirement of Midland Memorial. Church groups explained that if they took over medical operations, the capital funds would still need to be raised locally. No federal or state funds are available for hospital building programs, and commercial hospital corporations will not assume the bills of those patients who cannot pay.

As a result, Midland Memorial officials decided that a hospital district, owned and controlled by the taxpayers, is the only feasible way to provide high quality medical care facilities and to attract the doctors and nurses necessary to staff an expanded hospital. And they decided to expand, renovate and enlarge the present hospital so as not to double the cost to taxpayers by moving to a new site.

Saturday, then, is a day of decision for Midland County voters. Do we want improved medical facilities, the ability to attract more doctors and nurses, the authority to run our own hospital with local officials we elect, and the satisfaction of knowing that our families can receive top-flight treatment?

Or do we want to have a facility which has served Midland well, but which cannot provide adequate care for our families in the future, thereby forcing us to go to other Texas communities for medical care?

The decision is ours — and The Reporter-Telegram urges you to vote YES Saturday — For the hospital district and For the $10 million bond issue.

Health care vote Saturday

By GEORGE H. JOHNSTON

Midland County voters will go to the polls Saturday to decide on two issues affecting health care in the county.

At issue Saturday is whether to create a hospital district and whether to authorize up to $10 million in bonds to finance expansion and improvement of Midland Memorial Hospital.

The first proposal on the ballot, the hospital district, would provide for broad-based tax support of indigent care and bad debts at the hospital. The county currently provides $100,000 a year on a limited basis for indigent care. However, the hospital loses $600,000 to $700,000 annually to indigent care and bad debts.

The second proposal of the bond issue would finance an extensive renovation of and addition to the hospital.

The proposed renovation consists of, among other things, adding and renovating patient rooms, adding private bathrooms, renovating the heating and air conditioning system, renovating the plumbing system, placing handrails in bathrooms and corridors and creating separate corridors and elevators for patients and public.

The renovation will also include increasing the number of operating rooms from six to eight.

The proposed addition would house an enlarged critical care unit, a post-coronary care unit and an enlarged obstetrics-gynecology unit.

The additional operating rooms would be located in the current obstetrics-gynecology unit.

Eight voting places have been established for Saturday's election. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Where one votes is determined by the voting precinct number found on the voter registration card. All registered voters in the county may vote.

The polling places and the precincts are:

Hobby applauds legislature's allocation of funds to schools

By JIM STEINBERG

Eight hundred of the 1,100 school districts in the State of Texas have been able to reduce taxes because of the nearly $1 billion added to the state's education budget by the 65th Legislature, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby told members of the Midland Rotary Club Wednesday.

The money was "appropriated in a rational fashion... unlike the way done in the past," Hobby said, adding that the state will continue moving to make a larger contribution to local government.

Instead of allocating teacher raises across-the-board as in past years, the 65th Legislature distributed most of the money so that the career teachers with experience would benefit, Hobby said.

Because of state population growth and increased demands for services, methods of automatic finance that proved so satisfactory 10 and 20 years ago are simply no longer adequate, Hobby said.

Second to education is transportation in the eyes of the legislature, Hobby said.

During the session, Henry Pearson, district manager for the state highway department, displayed a map to show Rotary Club members the more than 700 miles of roads in West Texas that would be either reconstructed or resurfaced under a massive highway improvement program. Approximately $7 million in state funds would be allocated to the state highways in Region Six of West Texas, Pearson said.

State Senator W. E. "Pete" Snelson and Representative Tom Craddick were presented citations from the Texas Good Roads and Transportation Association for their leadership in the passage of legislation to prevent the further deterioration of the state highway system.

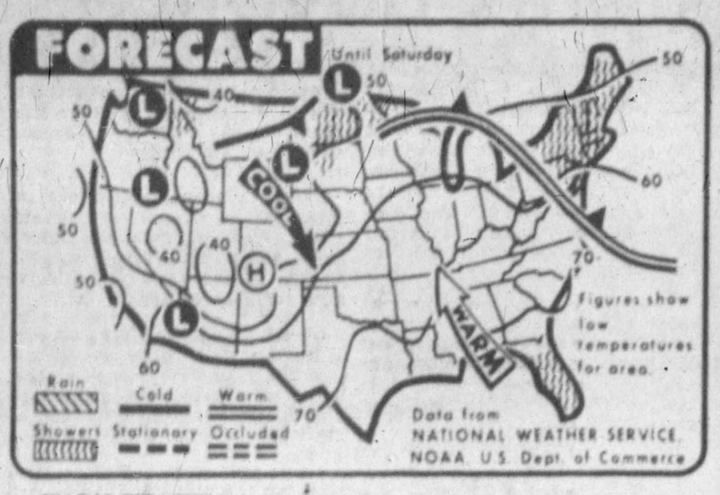

That legislation authorized the first increase in highway funds in over 22 years.

Although education and transportation are the top spending areas in the legislature, significant actions were taken in the area of criminal justice, Hobby said.

A record number of new district courts were created by the legislature and money was allocated to expand the state's overcrowded correctional facilities. Improvements in the Board of Pardons and Paroles will almost double the effectiveness of the parole system, he said.

Hobby came to Midland on a tour sponsored by the Texas Good Roads and Transportation Association.

House action could raise wage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives is sending the Senate legislation to raise the minimum wage paid millions of American workers by 75 cents an hour over the next three years.

About 3.1 million persons work for the current $2.30 hourly minimum wage, which will go to $2.65 in January if the Senate agrees with the House's action Thursday. This would mean a $14 weekly raise for people working a 40-hour week.

The raise to $3.05 by 1980 would be the most sizable since Congress passed the first minimum wage legislation decades ago. A similar bill has already been approved by a Senate committee.

An amendment to guarantee youths only 85 per cent of the minimum wage for their first six months on the job lost 211 to 210, with Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. breaking the tie. The amendment would have lost on a tie anyway, but O'Neill's vote was symbolically important to labor.

The House turned down a proposal sought by the restaurant workers union to amend employers' right to pay workers who get tips only half the minimum wage.

Another amendment the House approved eliminates 3.8 million workers from minimum wage protection by raising the exemption for companies making $250,000 in sales a year to $500,000.

Business groups won a victory in the House's 223-193 defeat of a provision to automatically raise the minimum wage annually after 1980, based on a percentage of the average factory worker's pay.

"Adopting this index means we will be abandoning the fight against inflation," said Rep. John Erlenborn, R-Ill., whose amendment successfully knocked out the provision.

Reps. Paul Simon, D-Ill., and Robert Cornell, D-Wis., sponsored the subminimum amendment, which also drew support from Republicans.

They said similar two-tiered scales have had no ill effects in Europe and should be tried here.

Sentencing of banker set by federal judge

Sentencing of former Odessa banking official Warren Boydston Moore has been set for 9 a.m. Sept. 22 before Federal District Judge D. W. Suttle.

Shortly before 5 p.m. Thursday Suttle handed down a guilty verdict on all five counts of an indictment charging Moore with misapplying nearly $2.2 million during his employment at First Savings and Loan Association of Odessa.

The non-jury trial began Wednesday.

Moore, 39, is former vice president of the savings and loan association. He was accused of siphoning off money, through use of the savings and loan computer, into accounts set up under fictitious names in Midland, Odessa and Atlanta, Ga.

In testimony Wednesday, Emil Beck, manager of First Savings and Loan Association of Odessa, said Moore was hired as a consultant to help establish the association's computer system. He was promoted to vice president in January, 1976.

Testifying Thursday was FBI special agent Fronz W. Nenzel. The FBI was summoned after Beck learned of "irregularities" in his firm's sub-account with State National Bank of Odessa, according to Beck.

Defense cross-examination of prosecution witnesses dealt largely with whether information leading to Moore's indictment was obtained before he was warned of his rights.

All but $24,000 of the missing money has been recovered through Moore's cooperation, Beck said.

Moore faces a maximum sentence of 25 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

Rain, cool temperatures may dampen festivities

Persons planning to attend Mexican Independence Day festivities might want to take an umbrella along because the weatherman predicts a 20 per cent chance of rain tonight and Saturday.

Weather should be partly cloudy through Saturday. The low temperature tonight will fall in the upper 60s, and the high Saturday will reach the mid-90s.

Thursday's high temperature was 94 degrees and the overnight low was 70 degrees, the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal, said.

Andrews had about "16 drops of rain" last night. Skies are clear there now and the temperature was 68 degrees this morning. In Lamesa, skies were partly cloudy with a "pretty good wind" blowing around town. Big Lake also reported partly cloudy skies, but not much wind.

Stanton, Rankin, Big Spring and Odessa had clear skies this morning while Crane reported a few clouds in its area. It was also windy in the towns of Stanton and Big Spring.

Thunderstorm activity in West Texas ended early today, leaving most of the state under clear to partly cloudy skies, but forecasters warned of more thunderstorm activity later today in West Texas.

DEA reveals drug seizure

Federal agents in Presidio this summer seized just under $6 million worth of heroin from specially made panels concealed in the frame of a car, it was learned Thursday.

The seizure was a record for the West Texas border town, said a Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) agent in Midland Thursday.

The thirty-four pounds of heroin, which analysis showed to be 6 to 9 per cent pure, were seized from a late model car searched after it crossed the toll bridge from Ojinaga, Mex., to Presidio on June 19, the DEA spokesman said.

As a result of the search, two men, Erasmo Corral, 48, and his brother Jose Corral, 29, both of Chicago, Ill., were arrested and charged with heroin possession before a U.S. Magistrate in Marfa, according to the DEA spokesman.

Both men were in the Midland city jail today in lieu of $1 million bond each.

They will be tried later this month in the U.S. District Court at Pecos, said the DEA spokesman.

The two men were brought to Midland Sept. 9 for pre-trial motions. Prior to that they had been in the Reeves County jail.

Senate committee asking staff what Lance interviews revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate committee investigating Bert Lance is calling its own staff employes to testify following Lance's assertion that he told them in January about the financial dealings now under scrutiny.

Members of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee planned to begin cross-examination of Lance today, but Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said Thursday night that committee staff members would be called to testify about their interviews with Lance in January.

In a packed hearing room, Lance began his testimony Thursday, calmly reading from a prepared statement for close to two hours. He said he did nothing wrong in building up a personal financial empire that now seems close to insolvency and that no depositor "ever lost a cent" in the two banks he ran in Georgia.

Some members of the Senate panel had indicated they would concentrate their cross-examination on the question of whether Lance misled the committee about his financial affairs, before the panel recommended that he be confirmed to head the Office of Management and Budget for President Carter.

But Lance declared Thursday that "I disclosed ... the various financial matters which now are the focus of this hearing."

Lance noted that allegations of a cover-up were "perhaps the most fundamental charge to be discussed at this hearing."

Lance said he told committee investigators, looking into his qualifications for the federal post that he had written overdrafts on his account at the bank he ran to help finance his 1974 campaign for governor. And he said he told the investigators about the Justice Department inquiry into the overdrafts, and about his Calhoun (Ga.) First National Bank's trouble with federal banking examiners who said the bank was poorly managed.

But the statements conflicted with those of staff employes and committee members who have said they did not have complete knowledge of Lance's tangled financial problems.

Administration drafts compromise peace idea

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration intends to propose to Israel that it admit Palestinians who are not known members of the Palestine Liberation Organization to a Middle East peace conference, U.S. officials say.

The proposal will be made next week to Israeli foreign minister Moshe Dayan when he is in Washington for talks with President Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance.

The Palestinians would be mayors or other Arab officials from the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and others "not prominently identified with the PLO," one knowledgeable U.S. official said.

In the past Israel has flatly ruled out any negotiation with the PLO, which is committed by its charter to the destruction of the Jewish state.

However, key Carter advisers within the White House are said to believe Israel might consider the proposal as part of a compromise package. The inducement would be concessions by the Arab countries toward the kind of peace treaty Israel has insisted on.

The State Department, it is understood, is not yet convinced the proposal has a good chance of getting Israel's approval. But top department officials have agreed it is one idea that should be put to Dayan.

The foreign minister left Israel Thursday with a draft peace treaty which he said the Arab foreign ministers probably would reject. "I don't really think they know the plan, but I think they will not accept it anyway," he told a news conference outside Tel Aviv.

Dayan flew to Brussels for meetings with European Jewish leaders and Israeli ambassadors. He is due to see Carter and Vance on Monday.

Dayan will negotiate indirectly through Vance with the Arab foreign ministers, attending the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

The Israeli proposals are said to differ little from previous ones, although a cover letter sent to Vance with a copy of the treaty 11 days ago reportedly offers substantial withdrawals from the Sinai Peninsula.

The Carter administration earlier this week declared through the State Department that the Palestinians should be represented in Arab-Israeli negotiations.

Soviet missile systems advance

By GEORGE C. WILSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Thursday that U.S. intelligence has discovered four new intercontinental ballistic missile systems under development in the Soviet Union.

Pentagon officials later said Brown was referring to a completely new generation of ICBMs, not the present-day strategic missiles in underground Soviet silos.

They said they could reveal no further details about the missiles — not the size of their warheads nor how many were under development.

Brown's reference to the new missiles was the first official mention of them. The Carter administration is trying with little apparent success to negotiate a new arms control agreement with the Soviet Union.

The administration's disclosure about the existence of a fifth generation of Soviet ICBMs — beyond the present-day SS-16, SS-17, SS-18 and SS-19 — is expected to harden domestic opposition to President Carter's pending proposals to the Soviet Union for slowing the arms race.

"All of us must recognize," Brown told the 34th annual dinner of the National Security Industrial Association, made up of representatives of defense firms, "that the Soviets have underway a number of large, impressive and costly strategic programs to strengthen their offensive capabilities, their active defenses and their passive defense system.

"To give you just one indication of the effort, and of the momentum behind it, the Soviets are now deploying a fourth generation of ICBMs at a rate of between 100 and 150 a year. These missiles are almost uniformly first class in terms of their accuracy and payload."

Then in this off-handed manner he made his disclosure: "At the same time that the Soviets have four new ICBMs under development, they are continuing work on the SS-16, their mobile ICBM and they are modifying four other missiles.

Thomas B. Ross, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, confirmed when queried that Brown was referring to the development of four hitherto undisclosed models of Soviet ICBMs.

"What is certain," Brown said, in what was billed as a major policy speech, "is that we cannot ignore their efforts or assume that the Soviets are motivated by considerations of defense or even altruism."

To deter the Soviet Union from ever using its nuclear might, Brown said that the American strategic arsenal would continue to be powerful enough "to inflict unacceptable damage on the USSR after an all-out Soviet first strike."

Americans to work on MIGs

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration will allow American contractors to repair Egypt's fleet of Soviet MIG fighter planes, the State Department said Thursday.

Alfred L. Atherton Jr., assistant secretary of state for the Near East, told a House international relations subcommittee that the repairs would arrest the deterioration of Egypt's fighters and would not affect significantly the Arab-Israeli military balance.

Rep. Stephen J. Solarz (D-N.Y.) countered that "you are taking a significant step forward" by helping Egypt put lethal, offensive weapons in fighting condition. He said the State Department should giver "serious consideration" to making such maintenance arrangements subject to congressional approval.

General Electric engine technicians and Lockheed airframe specialists would fix up Egypt's fleet of about 200 MIG 21 fighters under the arrangement the firms are negotiating with Cairo.

Castillo challenges amnesty plan effects

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The nation's immigration chief Thursday challenged reports that President Carter's amnesty proposal for illegal aliens has sharply increased the number of Mexicans attempting to enter the United States unlawfully.

Lionel J. Castillo, commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, acknowledged to reporters that 47 per cent more illegal aliens had been apprehended last month than in August, 1976.

But he attributed a substantial portion of the increase to the assignment of 100 additional border patrolmen in the Chula Vista, Calif., area, an 18-mile stretch of the border that accounts for more than one-third of the attempted illegal crossings.

The added agents boosted the border patrol force there to 400, Castillo said. Apprehensions all along the U.S.-Mexico border totaled 76,000 last month — up 24,400 over the same month in 1976. This increase included 14,000 more apprehensions in the Chula Vista area.

Citing a few reports from the field, Castillo said that of the aliens who had been asked why they had attempted to enter the country illegally, "nobody mentioned amnesty. Even if they knew (of the proposal), the prime factor was jobs," Castillo said.

'My two cents worth'

Celia C. Harris, R.N., 511 W. Cuthbert St., in a letter to the editor, says she feels compelled to state her views regarding the hospital district-bond issue election Saturday, and in so doing she brings out some pertinent facts which are worthy of emphasis.

Her letter is being published in this space, as follows, in the hope that it will be helpful to some persons who yet may be undecided as to how they will vote:

"As a Midland County taxpayer and former Midland Memorial Hospital employe (with amicable separation), I feel compelled to 'put in my two cents worth' regarding the hospital bond issue.

"For all these years the Midland Memorial Foundation has been supported by private donations from a few generous citizens, even to the completion of Phase I which provided sorely needed space for then-totally inadequate service areas in the hospital: dietary, pharmacy, central (sterile) supply, emergency, and radiology facilities, among others. At this point in time there are other needs just as critical, for in the 27 years since Midland Memorial Hospital was opened, technology has outstripped our facilities.

"It is not the purpose of this letter to debate the pros and cons of the need. From the numerous articles in your newspaper it should be evident that considerable study by experts has been given the matter. Further, the bond issue effort has been spearheaded by responsible citizens giving unselfishly of their time. My belief, however, is not based on blind faith but on having worked in Midland Memorial Hospital for eleven years.

"One other principle underlying the entire issue bothers me greatly, and it has received little publicity:

"What priority do the citizens of Midland assign to adequate health care facilities? Is having a fine Civic Center or saving a few tax dollars a year more important than the availability of up-to-date health care?

"It is my opinion that we don't really have other viable alternatives. Too long have we depended on the generosity of others; IT IS NOW TIME WE ALL SHARE THE LOAD BY VOTING FOR THE HOSPITAL BOND ISSUE.

"Either we leave our heads buried in the sand because we are too tight-fisted to accept our share of the burden or face up to our individual obligations to provide our community with an adequate health care facility."

The letter writer knows whereof she speaks, from actual experience, and she lays it on the line for one and all to consider before going to the polls Saturday.

Thank you, Ms. Harris for sharing your views on this most important subject — one of the most important ever faced by Midland County Voters.

Let's all remember, please, to vote Saturday.

Right to life

It is essential to peace in the Middle East that there be negotiations toward a settlement between the Israelis and the Arabs, notably the Palestinian Arabs.

Israel has refused to negotiate with the Palestinian Liberation Organization, officially designated by the Arab nations to represent the Palestinians, until the PLO recognizes Israel's right to exist as a nation.

The PLO charter refuses to recognize Israel. So it was significant as an indicator of possible flexibility that President Carter said recently the PLO is "sending us messages" that they might adopt Resolution 242 of the United Nations Security Council, which recognizes Israel's right to exist permanently in peace with secure borders.

Some PLO officials have subsequently denied any such intention but unless the PLO recognizes Israel's right to life, there can be no negotiations, there can be no settlement, there can be no peace.

So progress on this point would be most welcome and a hopeful sign on the part of the Arabs.

ART BUCHWALD

Lies, all lies, why of course they are!

WASHINGTON — While the miniseries "Behind Closed Doors" was very entertaining, I'm afraid it's going to give people a wrong impression of Washington. Since it was meant purely for entertainment, the producers took liberties with the way things work at the White House and in the rest of the town. This could damage the cause of clean honest government which the people in the country expect of Washington and fortunately get.

The idea of the film is as farfetched as anything ever seen on the TV screen. It is unthinkable that a President of the United States (in this case Jason Robards) would use his power and that of the CIA and the FBI as well as unsavory people in the White House to do harm to his political enemies. While this makes good theater, it obviously could never happen. If anyone suggested such a thing, the President would fire him immediately.

In "Behind Closed Doors," the characters, supposedly based on such real people as Bob Haldeman, John Ehrlichman, John Dean, John Mitchell, Howard Hunt and many others, were portrayed as schemers and sinister hatchet men, ready to protect the President at any cost, even if it meant violating the law of the land.

This, of course, makes a good story, but it could never have happened. The men who have worked in the White House always came from the best families, were educated in the best schools and raised in the American tradition of fair play and patriotism. They never would have resorted to any illegal act to further the reelection of the President. It just wasn't in them, and even if a President had suggested it, which no President would, they would have immediately resigned rather than carry out his orders.

The television drama also gave another very unreal picture of Washington. It showed a businessman trying to buy an ambassadorship for his wife with a large political campaign contribution. Now this is where the writers have gone too far.

In the history of American diplomacy, no ambassadorship has ever been given in exchange for a political campaign contribution. If this were true, we would have ambassadors all over the world who didn't know what they were doing, and we would have some of the most unqualified people in the country reporting back to Washington on the affairs of state.

For those of us who live in Washington, the most unfair incidents in "Behind Closed Doors" concerned the women of this town. The TV series showed them going to bed with men in power to whom they weren't married. The CIA director in the plot even left his wife for a widow, and a young college girl had an affair with a White House aide in hopes of getting a job.

The implication was that the morals in Washington are "loose," and that people go to bed with each other whether they're married to them or not. This is a terribly unfair picture to show because it gives the wrong impression of what Washington is all about. As long as I've lived here, I've never known sex to play any part in government.

Washington women think too much of their reputations to bed down with a man just because he is in power. And a man in power would never take advantage of his position to seduce a woman he was not married to. For one thing, it would compromise the high ideals the constituents expect of their politicians and high government officials. For another, it would be a sin.

When it comes to politics, power and sex, Washington is above reproach. Even the newspapermen who cover this town would never do anything to sully their reputations, such as lie, cheat or go to bed with someone just to get a story.

The reason this city has never been touched by scandal is that everyone from the President down to the most humble South Korean businessman has a sense of morality and ethics which, unfortunately, cannot be found in the rest of the country.

"Behind Closed Doors" has done a great disservice to the political system by presenting Washington and the people who work here in a terrible light. It is a fairy tale and should be seen as such. If there was even a smattering of truth to it, G. Gordon Liddy would not be our President today.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Curbing the 'Koreagate' probe

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — There are signs that the Democratic leadership may be tampering with the "Koreagate" investigation.

Sources close to the investigation cite the curious timing, for instance, of the indictment against Korean payoff man, Tongsun Park. The indictment was sprung on Park just as he was about to return from Seoul to London.

He abruptly changed his plans and stayed in South Korea, which has no extradition treaty with the United States. This means Park, the central figure in the investigation, is safely out of reach of U.S. investigators.

It looks as if the Justice Dept. wanted credit for indicting Park without the necessity of putting him on the witness stand, our sources suggest. They say he could have been extradited from Britain if he had been allowed to return.

Other sources contend that Democratic congressional leaders have sought to confine the House investigation to a few expendable former members, thus hopefully satisfying public opinion without damaging Congress.

The Democrats are also searching quietly but intently for Republicans who may have accepted gifts of cash, trips and women from South Korean agents. The purpose is to prevent the Koreagate scandal from becoming a partisan political issue.

Democratic insiders acknowledge that they would like to cap the Korea volcano and halt the daily eruptions. But they stress that their intent is not to cover up any crimes but to prevent unfair charges from spewing forth. Here are the particulars:

Tongsun Park skipped to London last fall just as the Justice Dept. began to focus on him. Yet the department took no precautions to prevent his flight and made no move to extradite him.

This troubled several conscientious congressmen, led by Reps. Jerome Ambro and Liz Holtzman, both New York Democrats, who are eager to clean up the House. They pressed Attorney General Griffin Bell to take whatever legal steps are necessary to bring Park back to Washington to testify.

On August 5, Ambro and Holtznan called upon the attorney general and again urged him to indict Park. This would give the United States legal grounds to ask Britain to extradite him, they argued. But Bell replied it would be unethical to indict Park without sufficient evidence to convict him.

Our Justice Dept. sources confirm that the case against Park is weak. As a businessman, he could hand out campaign contributions, quite legally, on Capitol Hill. The prosecutors must prove that he was acting as a foreign agent to bribe congressmen. Most of the evidence, unfortunately, is contained in intercepted messages, which may not be admissible in court.

Yet the political pressure kept building up, our sources say, until the Justice Dept. went ahead with the indictment that Bell had said would be unethical. But significanlty, the 36-count indictment wasn't prepared until a week after Park was safely out of Britain.

Park's Washington attorney, William Hundley, kept the department informed about his client's whereabouts, insiders tell us. On August 25, Hundley notified the department that Park had telephoned him from Hong Kong to report he was on his way to Korea to visit his ailing mother. Not long afterward, Park called again from Seoul to say that the Korean authorities wanted him to hold a short press conference and that he would leave for London in ten days.

The day after Hundley reported this to the Justice Dept., Park was abruptly indicted, and the news was leaked to the press. This had the predictable effect of keeping Park in South Korea, where he is safe from extradition.

Our sources insist that the Justice Dept. could have brought Park back to America by indicting him before he left Britain or later by holding up the indictment until he returned to Britain.

We made repeated requests to speak to the attorney general, but he would not discuss the story with us. Sources close to him believe Griffin Bell is a man of integrity, who would not tamper with the Koreagate investigation. The official in charge of the probe, Paul Mitchell, also has a reputation as a straight-laced prosecutor.

On Capitol Hill, Speaker Tip O'Neill and Democratic leader Jim Wright persuaded Leon Jaworski, the former Watergate special prosecutor, to run the House investigation into the Korean scandal. Sources close to the House leadership say O'Neill, Wright and Jaworski agreed they couldn't "burn" too many members of Congress but should merely "sacrifice a few lambs."

We spoke to the speaker who absolutely denied any agreement to limit the investigation. Then we hurried to catch Wright but the speaker got to him first. We caught Wright going out the door. He had been summoned, he said, to the speaker's office. When he returned, he reiterated the speaker's denial. We were unable to reach Jaworski until some time later. The alleged conversation about sacrificing lambs, he said, was "absolutely ludicrous."

NICK THIMMESCH

Appearances blemish the seemingly unblemished

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — What makes this Lance affair so messy and so debilitating to the Carter Administration is that the appearances of wrongdoing are so persuasive that the President's image as an authentic moral leader is badly tainted. Whatever the facts of Bert Lance's sloppy financial dealings, or of his relationships with the top Georgians here, the appearances have already caused considerable damage to Mr. James Earl Carter Jr., our President.

Let us begin by observing that the freshly elected President enunciated ethics and standards so lofty that angels might suffer altitude sickness if they were to soar upwards for them. Moreover, the story of how Jimmy Carter, as he likes to call himself, was pulled out of the despair of losing an election in 1966 by a remarkable rebirth as a Christian had been widely advertised by his most ardent backers in 1976.

By affecting a down-home, simple country manner, that of a humble peanut farmer, Jimmy Carter brought a welcome freshness to a tired American Presidency. His most important men in the White House would not ride in limousines. He would himself wear a sweater for his folksy fireside chat. He would sleep in the home of an ordinary American when he went to the people. He would, in soft, almost burning voice, proclaim, "I love you," to masses of strangers. He was a really different President. He also went way up in the polls.

Carter surrounded himself with trusted Georgia friends, among them another down-home fellow, Bert Lance, who talked common sense to the man sitting in the still-most-powerful job in the world. But we learned that the closeness was not just personal or political, it had also been financial — for Jimmy Carter, a big businessman really, had borrowed nearly $5 million from the National Bank of Georgia when Bert Lance was president, and that money ostensibly was used to expand his peanut business.

We also learned that another dear friend of Carter's, Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, was also close to Lance, indeed, still owns 2,100 shares in the National Bank of Georgia. Now that Lance is in trouble, and with information about his activities forwarded to the Justice Department for review, Bell has removed himself from dealing with the Lance case.

That chore is being handled by Benjamin R. Civiletti, criminal division chief, a man endowed with political as well as prosecutorial skills. Civiletti was warmly recommended for the job by Charles Kirbo of Atlanta, Carter's fatherly friend and mentor.

Last week, a story circulated that one Bill L. Campbell, in prison for embezzling $1 million from a bank then headed by Lance, was ready to charge that Lance was involved in his crime. At this point, there isn't much credence in Campbell's allegations, but given the investigatory climate of our time, it seemed logical for the nearest U.S. Attorney, William L. Harper of Atlanta, to look in on Campbell, even cross-examine him, if you will.

But Harper, who had served as executive counsel to Carter when he was governor, was appointed by the President only two months ago, and is not about to jump into the act. So Harper declared that there was no need to interview Campbell, and observed that the statute of limitations won't run out on this case until 1980.

Back in the Watergate era, Campbell would have been ensnared in a big-game net, and dragged up Pennsylvania Avenue to Capitol Hill where Sam Ervin or Howard Baker or some grim-jawed fellow would have worked him over. Perhaps this is why Sens. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) and Charles Percy (R-Ill.) feel that it is too much for the Carter men to investigate Lance and that a special prosecutor should be appointed.

Besides all these events which gave pause, there is the emerging testimony that the government investigators assigned to check out Lance before he was appointed director of the Office of Management and Budget overlooked certain discrepancies in Lance's dealings, and might have even altered the record. In Watergate days this was called a "cover-up."

Indeed, now there is reason to believe that Lance might have broken the law in his shifting money around as though he were playing with sandpiles, and in the way he made his corporate aircraft readily available for seemingly political purposes, (a possible felony).

We all make mistakes, and in Christian terms, we all commit sins. But to pose as almost a member of the Elect, as James Earl Carter Jr., has, is to make people look up; and to defend Bert Lance, as James Earl Carter Jr., has, is to make people go cross-eyed. If people come to think that Jimmy Carter isn't so saintly, that he is just a former one-term governor who got elected President, well, Carter will eventually appear to be something other than what people have seen him as up to now.

In the presidential campaign, Carter got in hot water from an interview he gave Playboy magazine. His quotes about how he wouldn't want to judge others who "shack up" with women because he, too, had lusted in his own heart, caused an unnecessary fuss.

Actually, he was giving a good Christian discourse on the Pharisees, who went around telling the Lord how grateful they were that He hadn't made them lowly sinners.

But a few paragraphs later, Carter, on another subject, remarked how he wouldn't allow himself to do the kinds of things Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon did. In other words, he was thanking the Lord he wasn't made a lowly sinner like the others.

In moments of reflection and piety, Carter could be humble and high-minded. In the real world, he is like all of us. Maybe it is this identification of James Earl Carter Jr., which will be the beneficial side effect of the Bert Lance affair.

MINOLTA'S NEW CONSOLE

AMERICAN BUSINESS EQUIPMENT, INC. INTRODUCES LOWEST-COST REDUCING COPIER ON MARKET

Minolta Corporation's new Electrographic 201 -- the most exciting office copier on the market today -- is now available at American Business Equipment, Inc., at 3415 Brentwood Street in Odessa and 2101 South IH 35, in Austin.

According to Mr. Pat Sorrells of American Business, the new Electrographic 201 is the lowest-cost reducing copier on the market today that provides a copy with plain paper quality. "The 201 is one of the most remarkable and versatile machines on the market today. And, because it's made by Minolta, I know it's reliable," said Mr. Sorrells.

"This new streamline console model features Minolta's exclusive Electrographic process in addition to offering an almost 50 percent reduction capability. It's the perfect copier for a small office, yet rugged enough to handle the demands of a larger office, "said Mr. Popaditch of American Business Equipment in Austin.

Other Electrographic 201 features include: a digital computerized control panel; a "memory" which elminates the frustrating experience of having to interrupt the machine while it's in a multiple-copy mode in order to produce a single copy; and a requirement for standard line current (115 volts A.C., 15 amps), thus allowing the machine to be used almost anywhere in the office.

"With all these features, we're sure we have a big seller on our hands. And, of course, we're excited about the marketing support program Minolta offers all its dealers," Messrs. Sorrells and Popaditch added.

Minolta is the only company in the United States which markets office copy machines using the unique "Electrographic" process. This process, which is patented by Minolta, combines the quality of plain paper copies with the economy of coated paper copies.

Many of the school books read by students today are duller than those used 40 years ago, despite well-meaning and expensive attempts to make them more attractive, colorful and "relevant." In fact, the very effort to make the books more relevant has made some of them more boring — through rewrites that transform the war training of boys in ancient Sparta, for example, into a sort of early version of ROTC.

That is the conclusion of a nationally recolnized researcher, Jeanne S. Chall, a Harvard University professor who studied 55 books and manuals used over the years for a report to a College Entrance Examination Board panel seeking the causes of a nationwide decline in Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores.

She also reports that 11th-grade textbooks are consistently written at a ninth- or tenth-grade level nowadays. On a more cheerful note, however, she says that grade school readers are more challenging now than they were 20 years ago, when they bore the leaden prose of Dick and Jane.

To illustrate her point about dull writing, Chall offers two examples, describing Spartan war taining, from sixth-grade history books used by different generations.

From a 1935 version:

At seven years of age a boy was taken away from his home and was put in a camp. There he lived an out-of-door life. He was taught all kinds of exercises, such as running and jumping. Many times he had to go hungry. Often he was whipped severely, but he must never cry out, no matter how great the pain.

From a 1970 version:

At the age of seven years, boys left their families to live at a school. In school, they played games, developed athletic skills and had other military training. They had very little training in science or art. The only purpose of education was to prepare boys for a military way of life.

"The later textbooks seem to lose the sharpness of focus and clarity of style," Chall says. "Could it be that in a sincere attempt to make the past relevant to the modern child, some of the authors may have underplayed the differences between past and present, making the textbook perhaps more difficult and less interesting to read and understand and learn from?"

Chall also says that the new books tend to require less writing on the part of students, and to allow more underlining, circling and filling in of blanks. She adds, however, that first- and sixth-grade readers have begun using more difficult vocabularies during the last decade and have put more stress on phonics, a method of teaching children to read by sounding out letters.

Questions about schoolbooks are made even more pertinent by their rising prices. New York State expects to spend about $56 million in school textbook aid this year, compared to $40 million last year. Today's books make greater use of expensive, full-color printing and sophisticated graphics. And there are more of them in use. Many schools that once provided only one reading book for each first-grader now like to provide four or five, to allow more flexibility and, perhaps to disguise the fact that some children are reading at a lower level than others. In addition, there is the cost of film strips and other devices that accompany the books.

"You can spend a small fortune on these things," says Dorothy Hallborg, director of Hofstra University's Curriculum Materials Center.

And Chall, herself, wonders whether students might not find all the material distracting: "Is it possible that a more compact, less generously illustrated history textbook can contribute more to their knowledge and understanding? Could it be that with these textbooks — less is more?"

Chall does not contend that rewritten books alone are to blame for falling student test scores. Indeed, the panel that sponsored her most recent study concluded two weeks ago that declining scores were due to a variety of problems, ranging from television to truancy. Nevertheless, Chall does think that textbooks share the blame, and her conclusions are bound to stir debate among the school officials who buy books, and the publishers' who sell them.

"Publishers do the best they can to go out and talk to the schools and print the books that the market can use," says Keith Foiles, a department head at the major Manhattan publishing house of Harcourt Brace Jovonovich. "If the schools wanted workbooks filled with blank pages that students could write on, I'm sure publishers would be happy to provide them."

Here are details of Chall's findings, some of which are based partly on earlier research:

—First-grade readers became steadily easier from the 1920s to the 1960s. For example, one book widely used around 1923 comprised a vocabulary of 425 new words. Forty years later, a comparable book contained 153 new words. That fact may have been partly to blame for the nationwide drop of 49 points in verbal SAT scores from 1964 to the current year. (A direct connection is difficult to draw, because SAT scores were stable in the 1950s and early '60's)

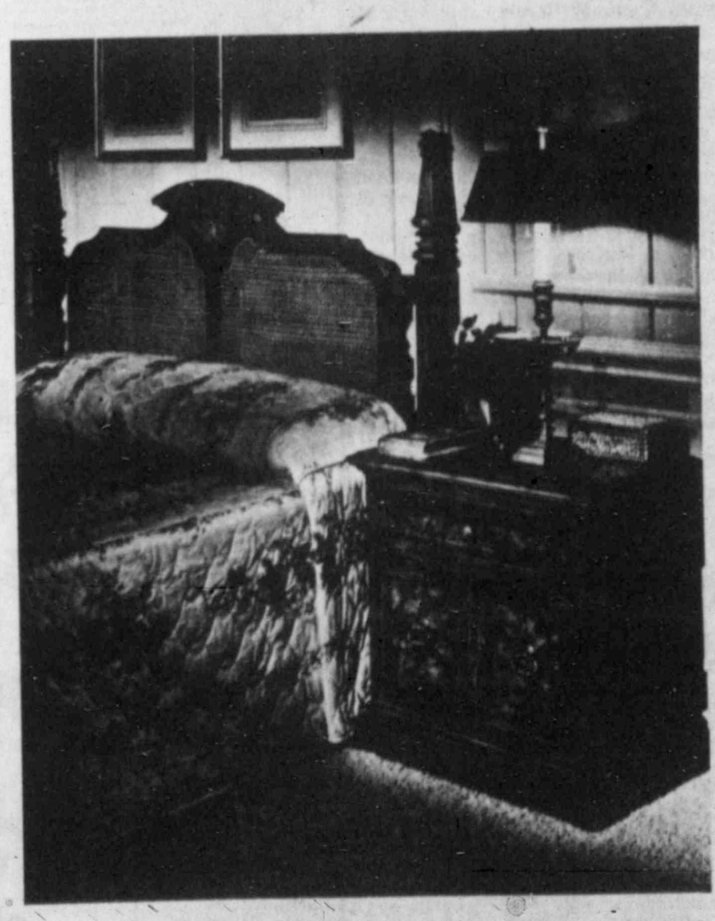

Meanwhile, textbooks' written instructions to teachers grew longer and longer. In 1920, it took 561 words to explain how a story was to be taught. In 1956, 2,300 words. With a hint of irony, Chall speculates that earlier generations of students "probably read more...because the teachers talked less." But in the mid 1960s, the trend was reversed. Vocabularies became more difficult, and greater stress was placed on phonics. Chall says, "If the difficulty levels of the textbooks for the upper elementary grades and high school increase as well, SAT scores may begin to increase in the early 1980s."

"I think (the renewed emphasis on phonics) is far superior," says Carole O'Reilly, who has been teaching first-graders in the Islip school district for the past 15 years. "It seems to me et the needs of the great majority of children...maybe 20 or 21 in a typical class of 25.

"None of us like to pay any more taxes than are absolutely necessary. However, medical facilities are a vital part of our community and I am convinced that the hospital district is our best solution. Please join me in voting YES on September 17."

Robinson says he did not want son-in-law dead

HOUSTON (AP) — Millionaire oilman Ash Robinson says he felt "as vindictive as a human being ever did" after the death of his only daughter in 1969 but he did not want his son-in-law dead.

Taking the stand Thursday in a $7.6 million wrongful death suit filed against him, Robinson, 79, testified he felt "fiendishly vindictive" after his daughter's death but had nothing to do with the 1972 murder of Dr. John Hill.

Hill, a prominent plastic surgeon, was shot to death as he and his third wife were entering their River Oaks home Sept. 24, 1972.

Hill's son, widow and mother have filed the civil lawsuit against Robinson. Robert Hill, 17, Connie Hill, 37, and Myra Hill, 75, allege Robinson arranged the death of Hill in revenge for the death of Robinson's daughter.

At the time of his death, Hill was awaiting trial on charges of killing his first wife, Joan Robinson Hill, through medical neglect.

"Right after Joan died I was fiendishly mad," Robinson testified. "I mean I felt as vindictive as a human being ever did. I was frantic. I thought he, unquestionably, that he had killed her.

"I found out about the 36 hours of agonized suffering she had before she died and I was fiendishly vindictive for a year and a half. I quit business and everything.

"I went around and talked to everybody I could think that he knew. My investigators were talking to strangers...

"For the first year there was a bitter antagonism on my part. Then I began to feel sorry for him (Dr. Hill) because I found out everywhere he would go in a cool room he would be breaking out in a sweat and I felt sorry for the man, I really did.

"I had gotten over the intense feeling I had and it's gone down to just a matter of not wanting him killed. God knows I didn't want that.

"I did want him prosecuted and if he was guilty—convicted and punished for it. If he had been exonerated I would have said Godspeed to you and gone along. There was no intention any which way in the world of killing him or having him killed."

Robinson said he never paid Lilla Paulus "one red penny" to hire a hit man to kill Hill. He admitted only a casual relationship with her and said he approached her in July 1972 about the possibility of finding out information about his former son-in-law.

Mrs. Paulus is serving a 35-year prison term in connection with the Hill slaying. She and Marcia McKittrick, who is serving a 10-year term, have refused to testfy in the civil case.

Bobby Wayne Vandiver, charged as the triggerman in the Hill slaying, was shot to death by a policeman before going on trial.

Ray Ball, representing the Hill family, brought up earlier testimony by a police witness who said Vandiver tape-recorded a phone call to Robinson in April 1973.

Robinson said in his testimomy he did not remember the call and added, "I never heard Bobby Vandiver's name in any way, shape or fashion" until after Hill's death.

"Never did I hear Marcia McKittrick's until long after that," Robinson said.

Robinson coughed, twiddled his walking cane and occasionally leaned back in his witness chair as Bass questioned him.

Only 15 spectators were in the small courtroom of State District Judge Arthur Lesher Jr. as Robinson testified.

Officer testifies on death of Houston prisoner

HUNTSVILLE Tex. (AP) — Rookie Houston policeman C. E. Elliott has testified he heard a splash and saw Joe Campos Torres "treading water" in Buffalo Bayou shortly after an officer said, "Let's see if this wetback can swim."

Elliott testified Thursday in the murder trial of two former Houston policemen accused in the May drowning death of Torres, a 23-year old karate expert. Torres' body was recovered from the Houston bayou May 8.

Terry Denson, 27, and Stephen Orlando, 21, are accused of killing Torres by pushing him into the bayou after beating him. The trial was moved here from Houston on a change of venue.

Elliott testified earlier that five fellow officers had beaten the handcuffed Torres at a secluded Buffalo Bayou site the night of May 5 after arresting him in a bar disburbance.

"The whipping lasted about five minutes," Elliott said, referring to his earlier testimony.

He said he and Orlando then took Torres to the city jail. At the jail, Elliott said, Torres complained his leg hurt and the jail sergeant ordered them to take the prisoner to Ben Taub Hospital.

Elliott said they put Torres back into the car and Orlando radioed one of the units to meet them again at the bayou site.

Back at the deserted parking lot, Elliott said, Orlando told him to remove Torres' handcuffs and take him out of the car. As Torres leaned over the car trunk two other patrol cars appeared.

Elliott quoted Denson as saying, "Let's see if this wetback can swim," and they all started down toward the bayou.

Elliott said he returned to the car to answer a call and handed Torres' wallet to Orlando.

While back at the car, Elliott said, "I heard a splash and thought, Oh, my God, they've really thrown him in."

He said he looked down and saw Torres "treading water." He said the officers were scanning the stream with flashlights and directing Torres to his billfold floating four or five yards away.

Afterward, he said, Orlando told him to destroy his notes and Torres' medical card which he had accidentally kept.

"I cut them up with a pocket knife and tossed then out the window," he said.

Two days later, Elliott testified, Denson suggested a meeting to "get our stories straight."

"You are told in the academy that for six months you should be just a warm body," Elliott testified Denson told him.

"Create no fuss. Do what you are told. Denson and Orlando told me to shut up and stick to the story that we dropped him at St. Joseph's Hospital no matter how hard they push."

Elliott said he was "scared and embarrassed."

"I got off work that morning and tried to go to bed," he said. "I couldn't sleep."

Mexican official to open fair

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Mexican Secretary of Commerce Fernando Solana will preside this evening at ceremonies opening MexFair '77, the largest exposition of Mexican products in the United States.

The fair officially opens Saturday morning and more than 5,000 buyers from throughout North America are expected to browse among nearly 400 exhibits set up in the San Antonio Convention Center. The fair continues through Tuesday.

The first MexFair was held as an experiment in 1972. Sales then were $1.7 million. Last year, with 750 exhibitors, sales reached $132 million.

Officials expect a record sales figure again this year, although the number of exhibitors has been limited to 400.

Emphasis this year is on quality, officials said, and only the best Mexican goods will be displayed in the 210,000-square-foot exhibit hall.

Former justice arraigned in district court

By ROBERT HEARD

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Former Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough waited impassively while other defendants were arraigned before a state district judge on theft, burglary and other charges.

He was just another defendant now, except for the larger than usual crowd and the reporters filling the jury box.

Judge Mace Thurman then called Yarbrough's case, and Yarbrough listened as his lawyers urged Thurman to throw out his perjury and forgery indictment Thursday on the ground that a former Yarbrough business associate was used by Harris County law enforcement officers to entrap him.

But after recessing the pretrial hearing for half an hour, Thurman denied that motion and also one to prevent the use of testimony before a Travis County grand jury as evidence against Yarbrough. The defense had argued that a prosecutor, not the jury foreman, administered the oath to witnesses.

Yarbrough's trial is set for Oct. 10.

Charles Hineman, one of Yarbrough's lawyers, told the judge Bill Rothkopf, who secretly taped a conversation with Yarbrough, acted "as an agent of the Houston Police Department."

The police provided the recording devise and arranged the time and the place of the meeting, Hineman said.

"We allege that was entrapment," he concluded.

Thurman granted a motion to allow Yarbrough's lawyers to hear the original tape in order to compare it with the copy they obtained during a legislative proceeding on a resolution directing the governor to remove Yarbrough from the high court.

An hour after that proceeding began, Yarbrough announced through Waggoner Carr, another of his attorneys, that he would resign.

The main reason for the resignation, Carr said, was his inability to confront Rothkopf, the main witness against him. Rothkopf then, as now, could not be subpoenaed because his whereabouts were known only to Harris County prosecutors.

But the tape could be played before the Legislature anyway, because technically it was not a criminal proceeding, and Yarbrough did not have the constitutional right to confront his accuser in such a proceeding.

Yarbrough also surrendered his law license three days before his disbarment trial was to begin in Houston. The supreme court accepted the resignation, and the disbarment suit, which alleged 100 acts of unprofessional conduct, was dismissed.

Yarbrough declined comment on Thursday's hearing.

A swarm of television reporters and photographers and radio reporters engulfed him as he left the courtroom.

"Please excuse me. Please excuse me," Yarbrough said as he made his way through the bodies, microphones, bright lights and cables. But several of them trailed him down the stairway and out of the courthouse, shouting at him and jostling each other.

Trial in Amarillo resumes Monday

AMARILLO Tex. (AP) — The capital murder trial of Fort Worth millionaire Cullen Davis — interrupted when a juror had to have an impacted wisdom tooth removed — will resume Monday, says State District Judge George Dowlen.

The trial was halted Tuesday when juror L. B. Pendleton complained of a toothache and was sent to the dentist to have the tooth removed.

Davis is charged with killing his stepdaugher Andrea Wilborn, 12, during a shooting spree at the Davis mansion Aug. 2, 1976.

He is also charged with wounding his estranged wife Priscilla, 36, and a family friend and the slaying of Mrs. Davis' boyfriend Stan Farr, 30, during the shootings.

Exchange prisoners to gather

By The Associated Press

Americans imprisoned in northeastern Mexico, who qualify for a return to the United States under a new prisoner exchange treaty, will apparently be gathered in Matamoros, says a U.S. consul in Nuevo Laredo.

Charles Brown said Thursday that Mexican officials told him nine of the 24 prisoners in La Loma Prison at Nuevo Laredo will be transferred next week to Matamoros, across the border from Brownsville, to meet with representatives from the U.S. Department of Justice.

American prisoners in Reynosa, across from Hidalgo, and in Victoria would go to Matamoros also, he said.

The Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously passed legislation Thursday creating a commission to handle the prisoner exchange. Last July, the U.S. Senate approved the exchange treaty suggested by former Mexican President Luis Echeverria.

Under the terms of the treaty, U.S. citizens in Mexican jails can opt to serve the remainder of their sentences in the United States. Mexican citizens jailed in the United States have the same choice.

More than 600 U.S. citizens, most convicted of drug-related crimes, are currently imprisoned in Mexican jails. They and their families have frequently complained of mistreatment and extortion at the hands of Mexican penal and legal officials.

The prisoners who opt to return to the United States would get two advantages. They would be held by a government whose language and laws they understand. And, many of them would be eligible for parole, which Mexico does not allow for drug offenders.

Congress finishes budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress completed action today on a 1978 federal budget that contemplates a deficit of $61.3 billion.

The budget was approved in the House, 215 to 187, over Republican objections that it foreshadows future tax increases. It won Senate approval by voice vote. No action by the President is necessary.

Under the law, Congress had until midnight to enact the budget, which is binding on any spending and taxing legislation.

The budget calls for spending $458.3 billion in the year beginning Oct. 1.

Congress splits on warnings in saccharin ads

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diet sodas and other products containing saccharin are likely to remain on store shelves for at least another 18 months, but they probably will have to carry a cancer warning similar to that printed on cigarette packages.

While there is agreement on the need for a cancer warning, a fierce congressional fight is developing over whether manufacturers should also be required to include a similar warning when they advertise products containing saccharin.

The Senate voted 87 to 7 Thursday to block a government ban on saccharin, which had been scheduled to take effect Oct. 1. The vote also approved the requirement that cancer warnings be placed on all products containing the artificial sweetener.

Vending machines selling such products would also have to post the warning, as would displays in supermarkets.

During the 18-month moratorium on the saccharin ban, the government will study health risks and benefits of the artificial sweetener, which has been linked to bladder cancer in laboratory animals.

The Senate-passed bill probably will win approval by the House, which gets to act on it next. House members have gone on record as favoring the delay on the saccharin ban. They voted for such a postponement earlier this year as part of another piece of legislation — a tactic the Senate didn't go along with at the time.

While there is widespread congressional support for delaying the ban and requiring a warning on saccharin products, the real controversy is over advertising.

The Senate stripped from the bill a provision that would have required cancer warnings in printed advertising or in radio or television commercials for products containing saccharin.

That action prompted the bill's sponsor, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to repudiate the legislation. Kennedy said allowing saccharin products to be advertised without appropriate warnings "goes against the recommendation of every health expert in this country."

Kennedy and others who want the advertising warnings — including the Carter administration — are now looking to the House to revive the proposal. A House health subcommittee has approved the saccharin legislation — but without such a provision — in a bill that goes before the full House Commerce Committee for a vote next week.

The Senate bill would require saccharin products to carry this label:

"WARNING: THIS PRODUCT CONTAINS SACCHARIN WHICH CAUSES CANCER IN ANIMALS. USE OF THIS PRODUCT MAY INCREASE YOUR RISK OF DEVELOPING CANCER."

The Food and Drug Administration announced the proposed ban last spring, citing a Canadian study, which showed that saccharin, when fed in high doses to laboratory rats, caused cancer.

A subsequent Canadian study concluded that human male saccharin users have an increased risk of developing bladder cancer.

The ban, which would not affect over-the-counter sales of saccharin as a non-prescription drug, has been delayed several times but is now scheduled to take effect on Oct. 1.

Carter, French official begin talks on issues

By MURREY MARDER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter and French Prime Minister Raymond Barre Thursday opened talks on world issues and acute French concern over American flying rights for the supersonic Concorde jetliner.

In welcoming Barre with full military honors of the south lawn of the White House, Carter lauded the increasing consultations between the two nations on subjects ranging from arms control to economic development.

But the immediate subject of greatest sensitivity for France is the future of the Anglo-French Concorde in the United States, a subject Barre raised in a 30-minute private talk with Carter.

On Sept. 24 the Concorde will complete a 16-month trial period of flights between Dulles Airport and Paris and London. At about the same time, the United States will publish basic noise standards for supersonic aircraft.

France is hopeful that the decision will bring continued permission for Concorde flights in and out of Washington, and encouragement for extending the jet service to other American cities.

The issue has political and psychological symbolisms for the conservative-centrist government of French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. In March France faces elections for the National Assembly; a Socialist-Communist coalition is now favored to win.

Anything short of a clearly favorable U.S. decision on the Concorde, French sources say, would be a heavy blow to the French government's efforts to convince voters that France's best hopes rest on close ties with the West.

National Security Council spokesman Jerrold Schecter acknowledged to reporters that "It (Concorde) obviously has far-reaching consequences that are economic and political."

According to French sources, Barre told Carter that the issue was well summed-up over permitting the jetliner to land at Kennedy Airport, when he termed the New York "discriminatory and unfair."

After the private Carter-Barre discussion, the two were joined for 75 minutes of talks by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud and other officials.

The subjects included the Middle East, the black-white conflicts in southern Africa, nuclear non-proliferation, and the new Panama Canal treaties. Spokesmen said there was a general discussion of the French decision, made over U.S. objection, to supply a nuclear fuel reprocessing plant to Pakistan.

France has said it was obliged to fill the contract with Pakistan, when Pakistan insisted. France is now participating in an American-initiated International Fuel Cycle Evaluation Program involving about 30 nations, that will shift to Washington on Oct. 21.

Barre is the first French prime minister to visit the United States since the years of strained relations when President Charles de Gaulle ruled France. Guy Mollet was the last French prime minister to visit Washington, in 1957, which Carter alluded to in greeting Barre, who is both prime minister and minister for economy and finance.

Carter said "This is not an artificial partnership," and that his administration plans to "communicate constantly" with France. Barre said he expects to find "profound concurrence" on "basic objectives," and it is "only natural" that "the different situations and the different interests are sometimes reflected in a different approach to the problems."

Convict wounds self

WICHITA FALLS, (AP) — A Wichita Falls man, who police say apparently shot himself after he was convicted of a drug charge, was listed in fair condition late Thursday night.

Officers said Wesley Leon Kirby, 26, apparently shot himself in the stomach with a rifle at his parents' home early Thursday morning.

He had been released from jail on personal recognizance after he was convicted Wednesday afternoon of delivering controlled drugs to narcotics officers at a local nightclub.

The jury was to consider Kirby's punishment, but State District Judge Temple Driver declared a mistrial after he learned it would take four to five weeks for Kirby to recover.

He said it would be unreasonable to sequester the jury and he feared jurors might hear something that would influence their decision on punishment.

Assistant District Attorney Don Maxfield said Kirby faces a new trial when he recovers from the gunshot wound.

Stricter confirmation ways may be difficult

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that it's too late to spare the Senate or the White House the embarrassment of tardy disclosures about Bert Lance, there is a move on to create a strict new system for the confirmation of nominees to top government jobs.

If that really happens, it likely will be the most lasting impact of the controversy over Lance and his private financial practices. It also will be a minor political miracle.

The Senate is supposed to advise and consent on appointments to the Cabinet and other major administration positions. It almost invariably consents, often without much advice.

Never has a newly elected president like Jimmy Carter been denied Senate approval of his nominees to the first Cabinet of a new administration. There have been midterm Cabinet rejections, but only eight of those.

And they more often stemmed from political or personality conflicts than from any real Senate inquiry into the credentials — or the closets — of the president's nominees. The skeletons, if there were any, usually turned up later.

The attitude generally has been that the president is entitled to have the people he wants in administration jobs, barring some compelling reason to tell him no.

That makes sense, but it also can make trouble. An early warning of the banking practices that brought Lance under criticism might have avoided the controversy that has become a Washington preoccupation in recent weeks.

Lance was confirmed to be director of the Office of Management and Budget after two days of hearings, without a real Senate investigation, and with only token dissent.

Yet Lance had been the object of government investigation. The FBI and the comptroller of the currency both had data that might have derailed the nomination — or saved his job. Published at the time of the confirmation proceedings, the story of Lance's loans and overdrawn checks would have had nothing approaching the impact created by their belated disclosure.

Given the mood of a Democratic Senate welcoming a new Democratic president, it may well be that Lance would have been confirmed anyhow, and the issue would have been settled at the outset.

But the information didn't go to the people responsible for judging Lance's qualifications to serve as budget director. There was only a cursory Senate inquiry in which the executive agencies that had looked into Lance's affairs reported no serious problems.

The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee did not see, and apparently did not ask to see, the FBI report on the Lance nomination, or the findings of federal banking examiners.

"The present process of confirmation all too often involves very little process," says Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., the committee chairman, and a wily politician who got burned in the Lance case. It was Ribicoff who said Lance had been smeared, then had to eat his words, and wound up telling Carter the budget chief should go.

Ribicoff and Republican Sens. Charles H. Percy of Illinois and Jacob K. Javits of New York are sponsoring legislation that would set up an independent Senate department to deal with major nominations.

They want a new Office of Nominations, with a director who supposedly would be above politics, to look into the background and integrity of the people presidents choose for administration and judicial appointment.

Under their resolution, the new overseer would have access to any investigative reports available to the President, including summaries of FBI investigations.

Opera singer Maria Callas, 53, dies of natural causes

PARIS (AP) — Opera singer Maria Callas, 53, died today at her home of natural causes, the Pathe Marconi recording company said.

A Pathe Marconi spokesman said the company had been notified of the death by friends of the singer.

Born in America and Greek by blood, La Callas was among the most famous sopranos of the 20th century.

But much of her fame stemmed also from her stormy relationship with the late Greek shipping magnate Aristotle Onassis, a nine-year romance that ended when he married Jacqueline Kennedy in October 1968.

The dark-eyed diva was also famed as "opera's bad girl" because she walked out on so many performances in her career.

Miss Callas had been living quietly in Paris in recent years, and there had been no hint that she was ill.

Born Sophie C. Kalos in Brooklyn, she renounced her American citizenship in 1966, apparently to ease financial complications connected with her divorce from Giovanni Battista Menexhini, an Italian industrialist she left for Onassis.

Miss Callas began to study music when she was eight and by 14 had won a number of amateur radio contests. Trapped abroad at the beginning of World War II, she studied at the Royal Conservatory.

She made her debut in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana at the Royal Opera House in Athens at 14. But her career realy began when the great La Scala Opera House in Milan offered her a role in "Aida" and then signed her on as a member of the company in 1951.

She made her American debut in 1954, performing the title role of Bellini's Norma at Chicago's Lyric Theater and in subsequent years she was widely acclaimed for her roles in Puritani, Tosca, Lucia and many other operas.

She also made numerous recordings, including 19 complete operas and 10 albums of operatic selections for Angel Records.

Time magazine once wrote: "As actress, Callas is more exciting than any singer has a right to be." Of her voice, the magazine wrote: "The special quality of the Callas voice is not tone. It is the extraordinarty ability to carry, as can no other, the inflections and nuances of emotion, from mordant intensity to hushed delicary."

In 1965, Miss Callas retired from concert singing because of ill health. But she returned after nine years in February 1974.

She was greeted with enthusiasm by sellout audiences, but some critics were disappointed.

After the first comeback concert in Philadelphia, Daniel Webster, critic for the Inquirer, wrote: "... The impression remained that for all her presence, her appeal and charm, her voice is probably something to be recalled from recordings of the '50s."

In a television interview in 1974, Miss Callas said that Onassis had been the big love of her life but that she was not sorry she hadn't married him because "I think love is so much better when you're not married."

Lance, Carter: friends from start, to the end?

By JACK NELSON
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The way Bert Lance tells the story, he met Jimmy Carter for the first time on the courthouse lawn in Calhoun, Ga., in 1966, took an immediate liking to him and decided on the spot to support him in the Georgia governor's race that year.

But there was more to it than that. Carter's cousin, Hugh Carter Sr. of Plains, Ga., recalls that he was helping direct the Carter campaign from Plains in 1966 when a Lance representative called and said Lance wanted to know Carter's position on legislation that would permit banks to establish branches anywhere in their home counties.

Lance was then a successful 35-year old president of a small bank, an ambitious, energetic man looking for new fields to conquer, and he carefully checked out Carter's position on branch banks before deciding to support him.

Carter favored the legislation, for which Lance later lobbied in the legislature, and the two men formed a political alliance. it evolved into a close personal and even financial relationship and eventually helped propel both men to the state capitol — and then to the White House.

Now that what the budget director's friends in the White House call "the tragedy of Bert Lance" is being played out in a Senate hearing room, there are those who know both men who say that a Lance problem was almost inevitable. Lance could be expected to find himself in hot water and Carter could be expected to try to bail him out, their thinking goes.

"Given Bert's lifestyle, his wheeling and dealing and cutting corners, and given Jimmy's blind loyalty to friends he has faith in, we should have known something like this might happen," one administration official from Georgia said.

Attorneys presenting supply trial evidence

By CAROLE SHIFRIN
The Washingon Post

RICHMOND, Va. — Attorneys for 10 major utilities engaged in battle with Westinghouse Electric Co. over its abandonment of long-term uranium supply contracts Thursday began presenting evidence in their case in U.S. District Court here.

The first utility to offer evidence in the complicated trial was Florida Electric Power Co., which signed the first contract in which Westinghouse agreed to provide a utility with uranium in connection with the sale of its nuclear reactors.

Uranium is the raw material that fuels the nuclear power plants utilities operate. Florida Power and Light contends it is owed 3.5 million pounds of uranium under the contract it signed in 1966.

Thursday, attorneys for Virginia Electric and Power (Vepco) are expected to present their case. They are seeking to force Westinghouse to deliver almost 11.7 million pounds of uranium or pay more than $500 million in damages, about the price Vepco says it would take to buy the uranium at current market prices.

The utilities are asking that Westinghouse be forced to deliver uranium at th eprices contracted, between $8 to $12 a pound. Two years ago, Westinghouse told the utility companies that if could not fulfill the contracts.

Westinghouse contends it is excused from fulfilling the contracts under a section of the Uniform Commercial Code because unforeseeable events had occurred making fulfillment "commpercially impracticable."

Westinghouse cites the Arab oil embargo, the existence of a worldwide uranium cartel, and various governmental actions as the unforeseen events that have pushed the price of uranium to more than $40 a pound.

Westinghouse counsel William R. Jentes told the courts that forcing Westinghouse to deliver the uranium at world prices would cost the company $2.2 to $2.6 billion. "We cant's stand $2.2 billion and we can't stand $2.6 billion, and everyone in this courtroom knows it."

Lewis T. Booker, liaison attorney for the various utilities, contended that Westinghouse has exaggerated the amount of loss it would suffer if forced to make good on the uranium portions of its contract.

Booker said Westinghouse's total loss, if it performs its contracts through 1993, would be $790 million, using the market rate of $26 a pound. That was the price of uranium at the time Westinghouse announced it would not fulfill the contracts.

THOMAS E. NOEL, assistant administrator for management and administration of the Federal Energy Administration said in a news conference Thursday in Austin that underground salt caverns near Freeport will receive their first crude in October as part of plan to have a quick supply of crude on hand in case of an emergency. Noel said the stored oil could be withdrawn on a moments notice and delivered to refineries in the event of interruptions of oil imports. (AP Laserphoto)

Governors critizing Carter's energy plan

By JOHN LENGEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of southern and midwestern governors are criticizing President Carter's energy plan, now shorn of a proposal to reform the way utilities charge for electricity.

Oklahoma Gov. David Boren told the Senate Finance Committee that Carter's energy plan is a dead-end street because it focuses entirely on conservation and makes no provision for meeting long-term needs.

Boren said Carter's plan "provides for the most part only the rationing of a shortage, not for any long-range victory for the consumer through more adequate supplies."

He spoke on behalf of the southern and midwestern governors' conferences.

Carter wants to raise gasoline taxes to make the fuel more dear to consumers. The governors say profits, not taxes, should rise to give the industry an incentive to develop new supplies.

Meanwhile, the Senate Energy Committee Wednesday threw out most of Carter's plan to reform electricity pricing.

Only shreds of the President's utility plan survived. Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., the panel chairman, called the utility rate proposal an unwarranted intrusion into state regulation.

The committee dropped provisions that would have ended discounts for large industries and mandated lower prices for household electricity use during off-peak hours.

In another energy development, Federal Energy Administrator John F. O'Leary told a Senate Commerce subcommittee that "one or perhaps two" pipelines may be needed to carry surplus Alaska oil from the West Coast to the interior.

The panel is considering legislation to expedite federal approval of a pipeline plan to the distribute the oil once it reaches western terminals.

West Coast refineries can process only half of the 1.2 million barrels a day that will begin arriving in March by ship from the Alaskan North Slope fields.

Until the new pipelines are built, tankers will carry the surplus to Gulf Coast refineries.

Continental Oil Co. intends to reenter and plug back to 8,706 feet at No. 3 V. S. Bartlett, fermer Cisco producer, for recompletion try as a second Dean sand well and 2⅝-mile north extension to that pay in the Ackerly, North pool of Dawson County.

It is 467 feet from south and 1,595 feet from west lines of section 11, block 34, T-4-N, T&P survey, 11 miles southeast of Lamesa.

Dean production was reopened in the field in August 1974.

Sun Oil Co. No. 6-A Mattie Powell is slated as a west stepout to the three-well Wichita-Albany sector of the Ownby pool of Yoakum.

It spots 550 feet from south and 660 feet from east lines of section 4, block D, J. H. Gibson survey, 12 miles east of Plains.

Extension potentials

Sohio Petroleum Co. has completed No. 4-D R. S. Davenport as a 1⅝-mile north and slightly east extension to the Calvin (Dean) field in Midland County, 25 miles southeast of Midland.

The 24-hour potential test gauged 138 barrels of oil and 28 barrels of water, through Dean perforations at 8,435-8,646 feet. Gravity was 40.1 degrees and the gas-oil ratio measured 862-1.

A former Spraberry producer in the Trend Area, it was drilled to 8,693 feet, and plugged back to 8,691 feet.

Location is 1,980 feet from south and west lines of section 46, block 37, T-4-S, T&P survey, one mile northwest and southwest of Dean production in the Glasscock part of the Calvin field.

Midlander sets test

I. W. Lovelady of Midland has scheduled No. 1-58 Williams as a ¾-mile northeast outpost to the recent reopener of the Pescador (Ellenburger) field of Fisher County.

Location for the 7,050-foot test is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from west lines of section 58, block 2, H&TC survey, seven miles west of Rotan.

The discovery, Lovelady No. 1-61 Williams, finaled Sept. 6, for 134 barrels of 44.7-gravity oil daily, through a 16-64-inch choke and from open hole at 6,937-6,945 feet.

AO&GS film producer has special

"The Making of Star Wars," a 7 p.m. special today on ABC television, was produced by Guenette-Asselin Productions, the same company that is co-producing "The American Oil and Gas Story."

"The Making of Star Wars" was produced for 20th Century Fox for television distribution, with Bob Guenette in charge of production.

Guenette and Paul Asselin will be in Midland later this month to discuss material collected during the last several weeks that will be used in the oil and gas story production, the Midland headquarters office of the project announced.

"The American Oil and Gas Story" also is being produced for television distribution and tells the true story of the independent oil and gas operator. It is being sponsored and financed by the American Oil and Gas Story Committee headquartered in Midland.

Energy adviser sounds warning as he resigns

The Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO — One-time Democratic power Bob Moretti has held his "last press conference," and resigned from the state Energy Commission. Moretti warned that California under the Brown Administration is drifting toward "an almost catastrophic situation" on electricity.

Moretti said Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. had surrounded himself with advisers who espoused a "no-growth," "stop-nuclear-power" philosophy and "the roof is going to cave in on whoever the next governor is.

"If the governor allows the present situation to continue, what's going to happen in five to eight years is that California is going to undergo an almost catastrophic situation with regard to its ability to deliver electricity to its citizens," Moretti said Thursday.

"Blackouts is precisely the kind of thing I'm talking about. This society simply cannot function properly without electricity. And if you play a dice game with the amount of electricity that's available, you are playing a very, very dangerous game. And I think the philosophy of most people in this Administration who deal with energy is to take that Gamble."

Moretti said he was quitting because of "major and probably irreconcilable differences in philosophy" with the other four commissioners and, "I could not stomach the bureaucratic approach to problem solving."

"It is more than my patience can endure," Moretti said of the $24 million, 570-employe commission bureaucracy. "I kind of define that approach as one which tends to take the longest possible time producing the most possible paper, using the largest possible number of people to produce the least offensive non-answer." "I hope the Energy Commission is not indicative of the other bureaucracies in this state government," Moretti continued. "If in fact it is, God help all of us. I mean it is unbelievably wasteful of time and energy and talent."

Moretti's dominant complaint about the commission centered around what he characterized as inaction on approving nuclear power plant sites in California.

"Everything is delay, delay, delay, don't make any decisions, stop nuclear power," he said.

"There's only one alternative (to nuclear power) and that's coal. And anybody who sites coal power plants in this state needs to have his head examined because of what it does to the quality of air."

He said "solar energy is simply not an alternative."

While he was Assembly Speaker in 1974, Moretti ran unsuccessfully against Brown for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. This forced him to surrender his legislative seat and he was out of a job when Brown appointed him to the new Energy Commission in February, 1975.

"The appointment came at a very critical time in my life. I didn't know where I was going to go, what I was going to do," Moretti said in publicly thanking the governor. "I only wish my experience (on the commission) had been more fruitful one."

East took the ace of clubs and returned the queen of clubs. "That deuce of clubs must have been a singleton," South grumbled. "And I'm willing to pitch in for a few gallons of boiling oil for people who make such leads.

South thereupon played the king of clubs.

West ruffed and switched to a low spade. South had to try the finesse, but East produced the king of spades and a high club. South was down one after only four tricks had ben played.

South forgot that it's quite gentlemanly to make the contract when it happens to be unbeatable.

EVIL MOMENT

When East leads the queen of clubs at the second trick, South must play low instead of putting up the king. Oddly enough, this does more than merely postpone the evil moment.

East continues with the jack of clubs, and West ruffs. When West then shifts to a spade, South doesn't need the finess. He puts up the ace of spades and ruffs a club with a high trump.

South can then draw trumps and get to dummy with a diamond to discard a spade on dummy's last club.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold: SKp2 H73 DJ762 CAqJ10. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs. The hand is not quite good enough for a jump response of 2 NT. Show your suit and plan to bid 2 NT at your next turn, when the bid will be merely an invitation rather than a force to game.

New waterway toll bill would reduce drastically Arkansas pork barrel port

By T.R. REID
The Washington Post

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — They laughed in 1946 when Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) talked about building a port in this landlocked city 400 miles from the sea. Today, the only ones laughing are the stevedores who earn $7.88 an hour unloading Japanese steel at the foreign trade zone maintained by the Little Rock Port Authority.

Thirty years and $1.2 billion in federal money have transformed the Arkansas River from a serpentine gulch of sandbars and mud banks to a shimmering blue freight way connecting Little Rock (and Tulsa, 300 miles upstream) with the sea.

The development of the river has been a factor — but not the only one — in a major economic reversal in the Arkansas basin that has turned the dusty agricultural states of Arkansas and Oklahoma into bustling center of industry.

Now Congress is threatening to take away at least part of the bounty the river project has brought.

For this is where the waterway toll bill, S.790, would pinch.

S.790, which passed the Senate in June and should emerge in some form from the House this month, would force commercial barge lines to pay a toll for using federally maintained inland waterways such as the Arkansas.

That could seriously limit the Arkansas River's economic utility. Without the free right of way, bargemen here could not set their rates low enough to compete with truck and rail shippers.

A study by the Congressional Budget Office predicted that the Senate-passed bill would eliminate 96 per cent of the Arkansas' freight traffic. The bill's sponsor, Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.), says the impact would be far less.

For waterway boosters here, S.790 looms as a death warrant.

"It would kill the goose that laid the golden egg, as far as we're concerned," said Wallace Gieringer, director of the Port Authority at Pine Bluff, miles downstream from Little Rock.

"We're getting more and more development along the river, but we haven't even been open for navigation for 10 years yet. This system is too young to survive a blow like that Domenici bill."

If the river were to dry up economically, because of the legislation, it is not clear how seriously the region's overall economy would be affected. Some local planners suggest the impact would not be fatal.

"The river is a tool, I say, one tool, in our kit for attracting industry here," said Windell Adams of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission.

"We'd hate to lose it. But we have some excellent rail lines here, we have interstates. Most of the economic revival here began before they built the river."

Congress authorized the Army Corps of Engineers to "build the river" in 1946, but construction did not begin until 1957.

The Army spent 15 years on the job, which it proudly labeled "the largest civil works proudly labled "the largest civil works project in history."

To provide a navigable channel all the way to Tulsa, the Army put in 17 dams, each requiring a lock to permit boat passage. Where a river's oxbow turns were too sharp for barge traffic, the Army simply tunneled through the earth to build a new, straight river.

On completion in 1971, the Arkansas project was hailed as a triumph of man's reshaping of nature. It became the model for a host of other huge projects, including the TennesseeTombigbee waterway under construction in Mississippi.

To celebrate completion of the project, Army engineers prepared an official history of the river.

"For more centuries than man can count," the history notes disapprovingly, "the Arkansas River was left to its own devices ... Now the Arkansas works for mankind."

Barge traffic moving downstream carries coal, ore and agricultural products to ports along the Mississippi.

Coming up to Little Rock and Tulsa are steel and other industrial materials and various forms of fuel, including diesel fuel for the Missouri Pacific Railroad, the waterway's arch competitor.

In a classic instance of carrying coals to Newcastle, the barges also are bringinb bauxite to Bauxite, Ark.

Bauxite was the site of America's only significant depoits of the powdery red ore, the principal source of aluminum. The local mines are almost depleted, and so the Alcoa and Reynolds Aluminum Co. plants here are bringing in bauxite from Jamaica and Venezuela.

In addition to the commercial traffic, the river project has been a boon to recreational boaters, creating a chain of placid lakes and eliminating the seasonal changes that used to turn the best fishing holes into sandbars during the dry months.

The recreational craft move through the 17 locks just as the barge boats do, without paying any transit fee.

Defections depleting Britain's Labor Party

The Washington Post

LONDON — Britain's ruling Labor Party is beset with a nagging crisis, the slow, relentless departure of writers and thinkers who have given the party its intellectual tone.

The latest defector is Paul Johnson, former editor of New Statesman, the nation's most influential socialist journal. Unlike others who slipped away sadly and quietly, Johnson left with a scorching 4,500-word blast that accused Prime Minister James Callaghan of taking the country toward "Auschwitz and Gulag."

Labor, wrote Johnson in the magazine this week, has become "a collectivist party" dominated by "union bosses, few of whom have ever believed in liberty and democracy."

Under their aegis, Johnson said, Labor aims "to crowd everyone into the giant firm," crushing individuals and the self-employed. This strikes at "scientists and inventors, writers and musicians ...the essential creators who keep civilization going," he said.

Johnson's tone has struck some here as caricature of reality, but his parting shot has echoed and re-echoed in the daily press and on the air. The Conservative Sunday Telegraph reprinted it almost in full. An editorial in the Evening News called it a "significant" landmark.

Johnson, 48, is an Oxford-educated Roman Catholic and a self-proclaimed moral absolutist.

The attention given Johnson does not simply reflect press bias. His exit is symptomatic of a growing disenchantment of Labor's right wing.

The death last winter of Anthony Crosland, the foreign minister, deprived those who regard themselves as non-Marxist Social Democrats of their most powerful intellectual voice. Crosland's book a generation ago, "The Future of Socialism," brought many like Johnson to the Labor Party.

The leader of Labor's right wing has been Roy Jenkins, a distinguished biographer and holder of key ministries in several Labor cabinets. He has now virtually abandoned British politics, having taken a high-paid post as president of the European Common Market commission.

Another of the same stripe is Lord Chalfont. He has now quit the party to write stern warnings against communism at home and abroad, largely for his former paper, The Times of London.

Recently, Brian Walden, a political scientist who has taught at Yale and Princeton as well as Oxford, gave up his back-bench seat for the old job of Peter Jay, now the British ambassador in Washington, as commentator on a Sunday television show.

Even Jay, if he were not ambassador and Callaghan's son-in-law, might have been expected to follow the others. He often provided them with ammunition, repeatedly insisting that trade unions, democracy and economic stability were incompatible.

Vietnamese delegation leaves for U.N. assembly

Agence France Presse

HANOI — A Vietnamese delegation led by Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh left Hanoi Thursday for New York to attend the 32nd United Nations General Assembly.

During the assembly session Vietnam is to become a full U.N. member after having been kept out in the past by U.S. vetoes.

The United States first vetoed Vietnam's entrance in November, 1948. This was followed by further vetoes in March, 1949, and December, 1951.

In the summer of 1975, after the fall of Saigon but when the country still had two separate governments, one in the south and one in the north, the United States vetoed a new application in the U.N. Security Council.

A further attempt in September last year, made this time by a reunited Vietnam, again failed.

Last November 11 countries submitted a new resolution for Vietnam's admission.

This resolution was adopted by the General Assembly with 124 votes for, 1 against (the United States) and 3 abstentions (Britain, Israel and West Germany).

In the meantime, though still not a member of the U.N., Vietnam built up contacts with some of the specialized U.N. organizations, such as the High Commission for Refugees and the Childrens' Fund, which have offices in Hanoi.

The new U.S. administration under President Carter let it be known it would not oppose Vietnam's admission.

The Vietnamese delegation will travel via Peking, Moscow and Paris. It includes Vice Foreign Minister Nguyen Cho Tach and Foreign Ministry special adviser Ngo Dien.

DISTINGUISHED MILITARY Science Student Award was presented recently to Gary Wortham, left, of Midland by Lt. Col. Ernest Isbell, head of the Northwestern Oklahoma State University ROTC program in Alva, Okla., during special ceremonies at the university. Wortham was among six seniors in the military science program who received the award. It entitles him to apply for commissions in the regular army rather than the army reserve upon completion of the ROTC program.

Mao's body displayed in sumptuous setting

By FRANCIS DERON
Agence France-Presse

PEKING — Chairman Mao Tse-tung, his face natural but emaciated, lies in a sumptuously decorated hall of the mausoleum built in Peking to keep his memory alive in future generations.

Foreign residents in Peking, including newsmen and diplomats, visited the memorial this week and moved slowly in line past the late chairman's crystal coffin.

Together with groups of Chinese soldiers and civilians and visiting foreign delegations, the visitors filed into the mausoleum's enclosure where wreaths of paper flowers from Communist party and government groups were displayed.

Once through the main door at the north entrance to the memorial, the visitor sees a huge, white-marble statue of Mao. His expression serene, he sits facing Tien An Men, the Gate of Heavenly Peace, and the monument to the "heroes of the people," its platform covered in flowers.

On either side of the statue were other wreaths from the central organs of the party and state.

At the statue's feet stood out a wreath laid by the North Korean ambassador to Peking, with verses in Mao's honor on wide black ribbons.

The visitors then entered the main hall, where Mao lies in a coffin of clear crystal, his head towards the south.

He is dressed in his usual blue-grey suit with the familiar high collar. A red Chinese Communist party flag with the yellow hammer and sickle covers the body to the chest.

At the head of the coffin four 6-foot-tall soldiers of the 8341 Co., Mao's personal bodyguard, stood at attention, dressed in the army's green uniform with white gloves, with bayonets fixed to their rifles.

The crystal coffin was surrounded by a carpet of flowers. All around the hall were small pine trees, the symbol of eternity, in plant pots.

On the white-marble wall at the coffin's head were inscribed in gold characters the words, "Eternal glory to the great leader and teacher Chairman Mao Tse-tung."

The visitors walked slowly down the hall, inlaid with precious woods and marble, on either side of the coffin.

They left the mausoleum by the south entrance, facing Chienmen Gate at the south of Tien An Men Square.

On the square were parked dozens of buses that had brought the hundreds of representatives of the Chinese people to pay their respects to Mao.

Israeli government facing first scandal

By YUVAL ELIZUR
Special to The Washington Post

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Menahem Begin's personal intervention on behalf of a former banker sentenced more than two years ago for misappropriating $47 million is rapidly snowballing into the first domestic scandal of Israel's new government.

The 12-year jail sentence of the banker, Yehoshua Benzion, 52, was commuted last week by Israel's president, Ephraim Katzir, on Begin's recommendation in his capacity as acting minister of justice.

He based his plea to the president on the finding of two of Benzion's personal physicians, who argued that their client is a very sick man and that jail conditions might endanger his life.

The prime minister's initiative immediately drew fire from the Labor party opposition, which charged that he was motivated by Benzion's political leanings and contributions to Rightist causes.

The Labor party announced it will seek a special session of the Knesset, Israel's Parliament, to discuss the Benzion case. Labor speakers say Benzion won his release because he contributed heavily to Gush Emunim, the nationalist religious group advocating Jewish settlement in the occupied territories.

Begin's action was also criticized by jurists, reportedly including Supreme Court justices, as political intervention in the due process of law.

The former justice minister, Haim Zadok, who had repeatedly turned down requests to recommend Benzion's release, said Friday night in a television interview that Begin's move constitutes infringement of the principle of equality before the law.

Former Minister of Police Shlomo Hillel revealed in a radio interview that Begin, while still leader of the opposition, had intervened on Benzion's behalf on several occasions. "In view of his personal interest in the case in the past, Begin should have disqualified himself from making any recommendation to the president on the prisoner's release," Hillel said.

Most persons enjoy retirement, survey shows

By LOIS TIMNICK
The Los Angeles Times

After 44 years as a newspaper pressman, Herb Louis retired four years ago at the age of 65.

He is still waiting for the let down others predicted.

"I haven't been bored for a minute," Louis said. "I laugh at people who try to talk you into being discouraged: they make themselves believe they're gonna be unhappy. What it boils down to is they're just plain scared of the unknown — whether they'll have enough to do and enough money to get by."

Louis, who lives in Kentucky, says the days pass all too quickly what with sleeping late, poring over the papers, maintaining house, yard and car, shopping, television visits with friends, children and grandchildren, quiet dinners at a favorite neighborhood steakhouse and unrushed travel to spots long saved for and dreamt of.

"I have no desire to find work," he says. "I figure 44 years is enough, and I'd have retired sooner if I could have afforded it."

Sociologists, psychologists and psychiatrists across the United States who have studied the retirement process — and other retirees who have experienced it — say Louis is not an exception.

Sixty-one per cent of retired persons in a massive study conducted for the National Council on the Aging said they chose to retire; 65 per cent said they had no desire to work. Seventy per cent agreed with the statement, "The things I do are as interesting to me as they ever were."

The so-called trauma of retirement is "a myth without a shred of evidence to support it," says George Maddox, director of the Center for the Study of Aging and Human Development at Duke University, one of the first institutions to focus attention on the elderly.

"Retirement is not a trauma for large numbers of people; most are happy and adjusted," says sociologist Gordon Streib of the University of Florida, a pioneer in this field.

"In 12 years of research involving 5,000 people I have not been able to document any serious psychological difficulties produced by retirement per se," says Robert Athchley of the Scripps Foundation Gerontology Center at Miami University in Ohio. "There's no concrete evidence that retirement has any deleterious effect on health or psychological well-being...a lot of people are anxious in anticipating retirement, but most (of their fears) are not founded in fact. The transition is milder than most... Obviously there are situations in which people freak out because they have to retire, but they are few."

But, they all concede, the pressman who is relaxing and reveling in his old age has several essential things going for him: reasonably good health, a loving spouse to share his newfound leisure, and adequate income from his pension and social Security combined.

Without these, the "Golden Years" might look a bit tarnished.

Anecdotes abound, of course, about "the way poor old Joe Smith went downhill from the monute he retired." But problems blamed on retirement often have other causes. The death of a spouse can lay waste to years of retirement planning. Illness and death, natural consequences of the aging process, may cut short the average 13 years still ahead for a 65-year-old man today (17 for a woman).

That is not to say that retirement — at 65 or ever — is good for everybody. It may be "a wonderful benefit or literally the end of psychological life or cause of an early death," says Frances M. Carp, social psychologist and research project director of the Wright Institute in Berkeley, Calif.

But the majority of people who retire, whether by choice or arbitrary rule, simply do not die sooner, get sick oftener, commit suicide more frequently, suffer more depression or other mental illness, or become senile sooner than their employed counterparts, studies suggest.

Retirees did score slightly lower in overall life satisfaction in the Council on the Aging's study (25.8 on a 36-point scale, compared with 28.6 among the employed), but they were also older as a group than the still-employed sample.

Psychiatrist Ewald Busse, dean of the Duke medical school and founder of its aging center, says he has seen no difference in rates of depression when retired persons over 65 are compared with employed persons over 65. Depression, which is twice as common in women as in men, peaks in both sexes in the 40s and 50s, then falls off, says Washington University psychiatrist Paula Clayton.

"I see more women who complain about their husband's retirement — which changes their routine — than men saying, 'I don't know what to do,'" says Dr. Clayton.

Suicide expert Dr. Georg E. Murphy, also of Washington University in St. Louis, conceded that the suicide rate in white males 65-69 years old is high: 36.5 per 100,000 population compared with a rate of 16 for all-white males. And he concedes it continues to rise with age. But he notes that suicides among the elderly have been declining over the past 20 years ("We have no idea why") and that most suicides are alcohol- or depression-related, both of which start long before age 65.

There are several schools of thought about the stages most people pass through in the process of coping with retirement.

Sociologist Atchley has suggested that after an initial honeymoon period following retirement day, disenchantment may set in. "Some people have unrealistic fantasies about retirement," he explained. "When those collapse, they tend to get depressed. My best guess is that this is true of fwer than 25 per cent, however, and they do get out of it eventually." How? Primarily by "'Reviewing the Situation' as the song from 'Oliver' says: they pull themsleves together and take stock of where they are."

A study of retired rubber workers conducted by epidemiologist Suzanne Haynes while at the University of North Carolina found lower than expected death rates during the first two years after retirement, elevated deaths in the third or fourth year. In one company, deaths rose 30 per cent above a comparison group in the third year after retirement; in the second company the rise — 18 per cent — came in the fourth year. Haynes speculates that this peak in illness and death represents Atchley's "disenchantment" phase; yet, there was little difference between the rubber workers and standard actuarial mortality rates when averaged out five or ten-years period, and Haynes did not compare them against a similar group of employed persons.

Studies in England have shown no health differences — as measured by such things as number of doctor visits, drug prescriptions, etc. — between retired and employed groups, according to Dr. Clayton. Indeed, says Florida's Streib, blue collar worker are likely to report an improvement in health after retirement, because it often signals a release from strenuous work.

Streib found that after an initial adjustment period, which might last six months to a year, most retirees say they would not want to return to work.

"Immediately following retirement, you get something that looks like the grieving process," says Duke's Maddox, who is following 500 elderly persons through this transitional period. "But it is not sustained over a year, much less two or three. We are confirming evidence that's been accumulating for almost a decade.... We have conned ourselves into underestimating the resilience and capacity of people to adapt."

Maddox notes that white-collar workers often feel forced out and adapt poorly at first as contrasted with blue-collar workers who welcome retirement with a "This is great" attitude. "Two and one-half years later, however, they cross paths," he says.

The blue-collar types do not seem to have developed as many hobbies and interests to sustain them; the white collared are more capable of developing alternative interests, friendships and community involvements.

An Iowa sociologist who has been tracing nearly 2,000 men over 50 years old since 1964, however, says he was surpised to find no relationship between job satisfaction and attitude toward retirement among them. That is, a person with a meaningful job might look forward to retirement, while a person in a tedious and boring job may nevertheless dread its coming to an end.

But once removed from the rat race, the degree to which a person adjusts to reduced income and increased time seems to hinge on his ability to become active and involved in other things.

"The ones who remain active, say in volunteer work, certainly appear to do better than those who fold up and vegetate," says physiologist Nathan Shock, scientist emeritus of Baltimore's Gerontology Research Center. Some occupational and social skills, of course, are more readily transferable to retirement than others: the former reporter might get out a Golden Age newsletter while the factory worker's ability to assemble TV sets may be less useful to him outside the plant.

Education may increase a retired person's range of leisure-time options, but as Atchley notes, "Most Americans already lead rich lives off the work place."

Not having enough time is a good indication of psychological well-being, according to Carp. "People who say there aren't enough hours in the day are psychologically in better shape," she said. In a study of 400 men and women for the National Institutes of Health a few years ago, she found that those who had some regular commitment of time — whether paid or volunteer — fared best.

"To the extent that an individual can't find meaningful activities — whether internally generated or forced (as in work) — some deterioration and depression is likely to set in," says Majda Thurnher, an anthropologist at San Francisco's Langley Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute.

Senility itself may be staved off by mental activity, some researchers now believe.

Dr. Charles P. Hughes, a neurologist at the Washington University medical school in St. Louis, has found that people with identical pathological changes in their brains function quite differently.

"One might be a dotard, the other fairly normal," he says. "It's as if there's something else besides just their pathology. We have found a good correlation between those who've led an active mental life in early years and those who are able to do so to the bitter end."

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE HOSPITAL DISTRICT?

HERE ARE THE ANSWERS!

The Taxpayers Association of Midland had lots of questions in Wednesday's Reporter-Telegram ad. Since their board refused the Citizens for Health's August offer to attend their meeting and answer questions, we wonder whether the Taxpayers Association really wants answers or whether they simply want to defeat a very important bond issue.

Please let us take this opportunity to respond to some of the questions we wanted to answer a month ago.

Question: "Why another taxing authority?"

Answer: Because a hospital district is the only suitable means of financing the renovation; and expansion which our hospital desparately needs.

(We have explored countless financing alternatives--private funds , revenue bonds, state and federal aid, commercial hospitals, Church-related organizations--but none suffice).

Question: "Why only four years after a building program, do we need another tax burden?"

Answer: Because the 1973 addition--none of which was financed with tax dollars--was only the first phase of a three-phase construction plan. Phases 2 and 3 were never begun because funds were not available. We needed them four years ago when Midland had a population of 60,000. We need them even more today now that our city has 75,000 people.

Question: "Why not get the taxing control back in the hands of the people?"

Answer: A hospital district will do just that. The people of Midland County will elect the five hospital district directors, who will be responsible to the people for levying the taxes.

Question: "If the issues are passed on September 17, we may be paying seven times more for indigent care than what is being paid at this time."

Answer: This is not true. The indigent care burden will not be seven times the present cost. Last year's indigent care cost around $600,000. Inflation will increase next year's indigent care $70,000-- a minor 11% increase.

(Midland Memorial Hospital does not turn the sick away; however, it works hard to collect from all people who use its services. In fact, its 93% collection rate is way above the national average).

Question: "Who will be the owners of the hospital if the hospital district is created?"

Answer: You will be. If the hospital district is created, the ownership of Midland Memorial Hospital will be transferred to the people of Midland County.

Question: "Why have some citizens been told that if they vote and the issue passes, they will have to pay nothing at the hospital?"

Answer: To our knowledge, absolutely no one has been told this.

Question: "All meetings of all tax groups should be public and publicized so all can attend."

Answer: They will be. If a hospital district is created, its meetings will be public just like the City, County, School, and College meetings.

New book published

LONDON (AP) — J.R.R. Tolkien's posthumous epic "The Silmarillion" was published today, and the critics agreed that it's not up to "The Lord of the Rings." But the publishers are sure it will be a best seller.

"We have a first edition print of 800,000 in Britain and the United States," said a spokesman for Allen and Unwin, the British publishers.

Tolkien, a professor of English at Oxford University for 34 years, started "The Silmarillion" in 1916 but left it a jumbled mass of much-rewritten manuscript when he died in 1973 at the age of 81. It was assembled and edited by his son Christopher, a lecturer in English at Oxford and his father's literary executor.

Stricter confirmation ways may be difficult

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that it's too late to spare the Senate or the White House the embarrassment of tardy disclosures about Bert Lance, there is a move on to create a strict new system for the confirmation of nominees to top government jobs.

If that really happens, it likely will be the most lasting impact of the controversy over Lance and his private financial practices. It also will be a minor political miracle.

The Senate is supposed to advise and consent on appointments to the Cabinet and other major administration positions. It almost invariably consents, often without much advice.

Never has a newly elected president like Jimmy Carter been denied Senate approval of his nominees to the first Cabinet of a new administration. There have been midterm Cabinet rejections, but only eight of those.

And they more often stemmed from political or personality conflicts than from any real Senate inquiry into the credentials — or the closets — of the president's nominees. The skeletons, if there were any, usually turned up later.

The attitude generally has been that the president is entitled to have the people he wants in administration jobs, barring some compelling reason to tell him no.

That makes sense, but it also can make trouble. An early warning of the banking practices that brought Lance under criticism might have avoided the controversy that has become a Washington preoccupation in recent weeks.

Lance was confirmed to be director of the Office of Management and Budget after two days of hearings, without a real Senate investigation, and with only token dissent.

Yet Lance had been the object of government investigation. The FBI and the comptroller of the currency both had data that might have derailed the nomination — or saved his job. Published at the time of the confirmation proceedings, the story of Lance's loans and overdrawn checks would have had nothing approaching the impact created by their belated disclosure.

Given the mood of a Democratic Senate welcoming a new Democratic president, it may well be that Lance would have been confirmed anyhow, and the issue would have been settled at the outset.

But the information didn't go to the people responsible for judging Lance's qualifications to serve as budget director. There was only a cursory Senate inquiry in which the executive agencies that had looked into Lance's affairs reported no serious problems.

The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee did not see, and apparently did not ask to see, the FBI report on the Lance nomination, or the findings of federal banking examiners.

"The present process of confirmation all too often involves very little process," says Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., the committee chairman, and a wily politician who got burned in the Lance case. It was Ribicoff who said Lance had been smeared, then had to eat his words, and wound up telling Carter the budget chief should go.

Ribicoff and Republican Sens. Charles H. Percy of Illinois and Jacob K. Javits of New York are sponsoring legislation that would set up an independent Senate department to deal with major nominations.

They want a new Office of Nominations, with a director who supposedly would be above politics, to look into the background and integrity of the people presidents choose for administration and judicial appointment.

Under their resolution, the new overseer would have access to any investigative reports available to the President, including summaries of FBI investigations.

Lance, Carter: friends from start, to the end

By JACK NELSON

WASHINGTON — The way Bert Lance tells the story, he met Jimmy Carter for the first time on the courthouse lawn in Calhoun, Ga., in 1966, took an immediate liking to him and decided on the spot to support him in the Georgia governor's race that year.

But there was more to it than that. Carter's cousin, Hugh Carter Sr. of Plains, Ga., recalls that he was helping direct the Carter campaign from Plains in 1966 when a Lance representative called and said Lance wanted to know Carter's position on legislation that would permit banks to establish branches anywhere in their home counties.

Lance was then a successful 35-year old president of a small bank, an ambitious, energetic man looking for new fields to conquer, and he carefully checked out Carter's position on branch banks before deciding to support him.

Carter favored the legislation, for which Lance later lobbied in the legislature, and the two men formed a political alliance. it evolved into a close personal and even financial relationship and eventually helped propel both men to the state capitol — and then to the White House.

Now that what the budget director's friends in the White House call "the tragedy of Bert Lance" is being played out in a Senate hearing room, there are those who know both men who say that a Lance problem was almost inevitable. Lance could be expected to find himself in hot water and Carter could be expected to try to bail him out, their thinking goes.

"Given Bert's lifestyle, his wheeling and dealing and cutting corners, and given Jimmy's blind loyalty to friends he has faith in, we should have known something like this might happen," one administration official from Georgia said.

Another said, "Bert was the only person I know of that suggested cutting corners in the campaign. It wasn't that he was being malicious. He was just used to cutting corners and didn't see anything wrong with it. He agreed it shouldn't be done when it was pointed out it would not be the right thing to do."

But until the current investigations began eating away at Lance's reputation, the Carter-Lance relationship had been widely recognized as one of the most successful in American politics.

Similarities in the backgrounds and personalities of the two men made them compatible from the outset: Both were successful smalltown businessmen known for their strong family and religious ties. Both thrived on work and put a high premium on winning at whatever they did.

There were contrasts, however, and colleagues have frequently pointed out that the two men tended to complement each other with differing personality traits. Carter has an all-business manner with little time for small talk. So over the years Lance, a garrulous back-slapper, has been his up-front man at cocktail parties and fund-raisers and has been a key lobbyist on major issues.

Carter has disdained the nitty-gritty of politicking, of horse-trading for votes in the legislature or Congress; he has left much of it to Lance, who thrives on it.

Carter never stopped running for governor after he lost his first bid in the 1966 race and Lance remained in his corner, aiding him in his successful race for the office in 1970.

As a reward, Carter named Lance to head the traditionally corrupt Highway Department and put him in charge of pushing through the legislature a sweeping reorganization of state government. Lance managed to ram the program through and in the process became Carter's undisputed strong man. Part of the program transformed the highway department and several other agencies into the transportation Department, a superagency headed by Lance.

Although there was never any hint of scandal involving Lance, some Georgians in the Carter Administration say that in retrospect there were warning signs that Lance was mixing politics with banking, a potentially dangerous combination in view of campaign funding laws and questions of conflicts of interest.

Lance continued to serve as chairman of the board of the Calhoun bank after Carter named him to head the Highway Department. He prided himself on commuting by car the 150-mile round trip between Calhoun and Atlanta.

No one could accuse him of not devoting enough time to state business. He would generally leave home about 5:45 a.m., reach his office between 7 and 7:30 a.m., and start the return trip anytime from 5:30 p.m. to midnight, depending on the workload. Carter shouldered a similar workload and the two gained reputations as workaholics.

But there those who thought Lance should divorce himself from the banking interest because the Calhoun bank held state deposits. Attorney Charles Kirbo, then Carter's chief of staff, met with Georgia Atty. Gen. Arthur Bolton, who issued an opinion that there was no conflict of interest.

But questions about the appearance of conflict of interest were raised anew by the Atlanta Constitution after deposits of state funds in the Calhoun bank increased from $150,000 to $452,000 under a new formula for deposits devised by Gov. Carter's Administration.

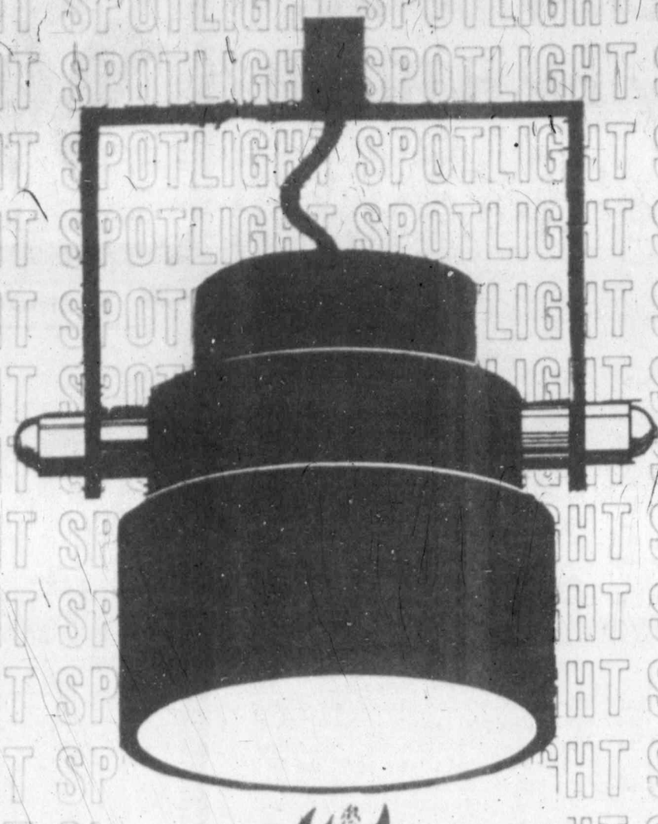

But Lance shrugged off the questions and Carter seemed unconcerned.

Although Carter and Lance were generally credited with cleaning up the highway department, they were not above the politics of paving, as reflected in a 1972 "personal and confidential memo" from Carter to Lance that is now being circulated by the Mississippi Republican Party. The memo, which refers to a Carter cousin who was running for the legislature, said:

"Hugh Carter has contacted me regarding a highway project in his district. Hugh would like to see the Lee County end of the AmericusLee Street road resurfaced as soon as possible.

"Hugh would like to be involved in the announcement when a definite decision has been made as to when a contract will be sent to the County. The portion of the road in Lee County is what Hugh is particularly interested in as that is where Hugh's opponent is living."

Parents believe chemical caused child's death

MUSKEGON, Mich. (AP) — Raymond Booms was alarmed because his pregnant wife had eaten meat and drunk the milk of cows that gave birth to deformed calves. But he had no proof his unborn child would be affected.

Two-year-old Christina Booms died last week after open-heart surgery. Boom and his wife, Marjean, are demanding to know if the fire-retardant chemical PBB had anything to do with it.

"When she was born," Mrs. Booms recalled, "my husband said, 'You know, you've been eating that meat and milk.' It started us thinking, but we didn't have any proof."

Christina died during surgery to correct an arrhythmia, a variation of normal heart rhythm. The disorder was discovered shortly after she was born.

Tests conducted last year showed Christina had 200 parts per billion of PBB in her body tissues.

The state does not now have a minimum acceptance level of PBB contamination for humans, but as of Oct. 1, a new state law prohibits the sale of any food that has a PBB level of more than 20 parts per billion.

Christina's body tissues had a higher PBB level than anyone else in her family even though she never ate the farm's food products and was fed a milk substitute. The Booms say they are convinced the contamination occurred during pregnancy.

Christina was to have been one of about 30 children tested here as doctors from Michigan's three medical schools attempt to determine if PBB causes birth defects.

Earlier tests on adults who lived on PBB contaminated farms have indicated that the chemical may be linked to neurological problems and a weakening of the body's resistance to disease.

The Booms' Moorestown dairy farm, in north central Michigan, was one of hundreds statewide tainted by PBB — polybrominated biphenyl — after the fire retardant accidentally was mixed with animal feed in in 1973.

Many of the farms were quarantined. More than 30,000 animals were destroyed and buried in a pit near Kalkaska, Mich. Another 34,000 will be killed after the new PBB-level law takes effect Oct. 1, and a fight has developed over where those carcasses will be buried.

Oscoda County residents opposing plans to put a burial pit for carcasses in their area won a court restraining order Thursday barring the state from beginning work on the pit.

Millions of dollars in damage suits have been brought.

New show receives little reaction in Texas

By The Associated Press

Texas television stations with ABC affiliations manned the switchboards after Tuesday night's first airing of the network controversial comedy "Soap," but for the most part reaction from the public was limited.

Initial audience surveys indicate that the show is a nationwide hit, but the legitimacy of the sampling appears to be open to question.

Belo Broadcasting president Mike Shapiro, who heads WFAA-TV in Dallas-Fort Worth, said pre-publicity, including an outbreak of protests prior to the show's airing, might have inspired a bigger audience than can be counted on the rest of the season.

"Maybe 50 per cent of the audience (Tuesday) was triggered by pre-publicity," Shapiro said. "Audience levels will probably fall off next week."

The Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist General Convention hopes the series fizzles.

Commission director James Dunn said "Soap" has "left us with a grimy residue." He said sponsors of the show "have given us a new low in television morality and mentality, not to mention bland and sloppy production. We are being asked to absorb a program which represents a damaging direction for television. I say, No 'Soap.'"

Tuesday's initial sequence dealt with adultery, homosexuality, lying and ethnic characterizations with the lives of two families.

Shapiro, former chairman of the ABC affiliate board of governors, said the initial segment was edited from the original version. As an example, an original scene showing the wife of a businessman in bed with her tennis pro was changed to show the wife, clothed, in a scene in which she obviously had just left the bed of the tennis pro.

Protests aside, the majority of reaction to the show appeared to be positive, although complete surveys were unavailable.

Shapiro commissioned American Research Bureau (ARB) to make a telephone sampling of the Dallas-Fort Worth market during "Soap's" time slot Tuesday. Incomplete results from that survey showed that 49 per cent of the homes in the area watching television during the series' time slot were tuned to "Soap." Of the 49 per cent, positive responses outdistanced negative by about three-to-one.

Overnight samplings from supermarkets were in line, with 45 per cent of New York viewers watching the show, 49 per cent in Chicago and 50 per cent in Los Angeles.

ongress finishes budget

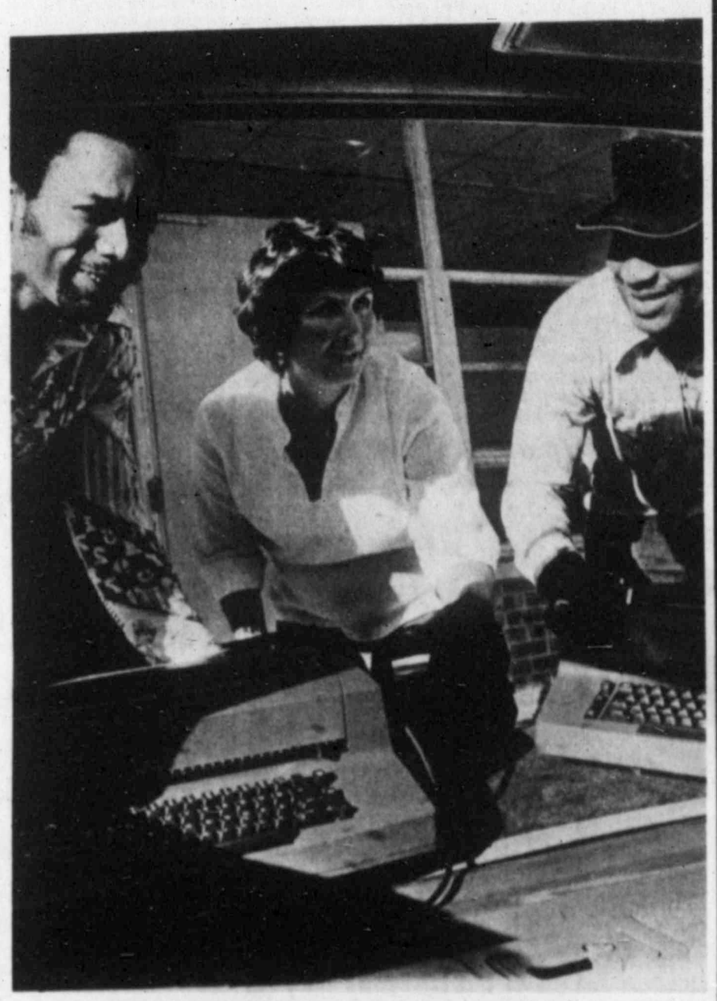

ASHINGTON (AP) — gress completed action today on a 1978 federal budget that contemplates a deficit of $61.3 billion.

The budget was approved in the House, 215 to 187, over Republican objections that it foreshadows future tax increases. It won Senate approval by voice vote. No action by the President is necessary.

Under the law, Congress had until midnight to enact the budget, which is binding on any spending and taxing legislation.

The budget calls for spending $458.3 billion in the year beginning Oct. 1.

Congress splits on warnings in saccharin ads

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diet sodas and other products containing saccharin are likely to remain on store shelves for at least another 18 months, but they probably will have to carry a cancer warning similar to that printed on cigarette packages.

While there is agreement on the need for a cancer warning, a fierce congressional fight is developing over whether manufacturers should also be required to include a similar warning when they advertise products containing saccharin.

The Senate voted 87 to 7 Thursday to block a government ban on saccharin, which had been scheduled to take effect Oct. 1. The vote also approved the requirement that cancer warnings be placed on all products containing the artificial sweetener.

Vending machines selling such products would also have to post the warning, as would displays in supermarkets.

During the 18-month moratorium on the saccharin ban, the government will study health risks and benefits of the artificial sweetener, which has been linked to bladder cancer in laboratory animals.

The Senate-passed bill probably will win approval by the House, which gets to act on it next. House members have gone on record as favoring the delay on the saccharin ban. They voted for such a postponement earlier this year as part of another piece of legislation — a tactic the Senate didn't go along with at the time.

While there is widespread congressional support for delaying the ban and requiring a warning on saccharin products, the real controversy is over advertising.

The Senate stripped from the bill a provision that would have required cancer warnings in printed advertising or in radio or television commercials for products containing saccharin.

That action prompted the bill's sponsor, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to repudiate the legislation. Kennedy said allowing saccharin products to be advertised without appropriate warnings "goes against the recommendation of every health expert in this country."

Kennedy and others who want the advertising warnings — including the Carter administration — are now looking to the House to revive the proposal. A House health subcommittee has approved the saccharin legislation — but without such a provision — in a bill that goes before the full House Commerce Committee for a vote next week.

The Senate bill would require saccharin products to carry this label:

"WARNING: THIS PRODUCT CONTAINS SACCHARIN WHICH CAUSES CANCER IN ANIMALS. USE OF THIS PRODUCT MAY INCREASE YOUR RISK OF DEVELOPING CANCER."

The Food and Drug Administration announced the proposed ban last spring, citing a Canadian study, which showed that saccharin, when fed in high doses to laboratory rats, caused cancer.

A subsequent Canadian study concluded that human male saccharin users have an increased risk of developing bladder cancer.

The ban, which would not affect over-the-counter sales of saccharin as a non-prescription drug, has been delayed several times but is now scheduled to take effect on Oct. 1.

Carter, French official begin talks on issues

By MURREY MARDER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter and French Prime Minister Raymond Barre Thursday opened talks on world issues and acute French concern over American flying rights for the supersonic Concorde jetliner.

In welcoming Barre with full military honors of the south lawn of the White House, Carter lauded the increasing consultations between the two nations on subjects ranging from arms control to economic development.

But the immediate subject of greatest sensitivity for France is the future of the Anglo-French Concorde in the United States, a subject Barre raised in a 30-minute private talk with Carter.

On Sept. 24 the Concorde will complete a 16-month trial period of flights between Dulles Airport and Paris and London. At about the same time, the United States will publish basic noise standards for supersonic aircraft.

France is hopeful that the decision will bring continued permission for Concorde flights in and out of Washington, and encouragement for extending the jet service to other American cities.

The issue has political and psychological symbolisms for the conservative-centrist government of French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. In March France faces elections for the National Assembly; a Socialist-Communist coalition is now favored to win.

Anything short of a clearly favorable U.S. decision on the Concorde, French sources say, would be a heavy blow to the French government's efforts to convince voters that France's best hopes rest on close ties with the West.

National Security Council spokesman Jerrold Schecter acknowledged to reporters that "It (Concorde) obviously has far-reaching consequences that are economic and political."

According to French sources, Barre told Carter that the issue was well summed-up over permitting the jetliner to land at Kennedy Airport, when he termed the New York "discriminatory and unfair."

After the private Carter-Barre discussion, the two were joined for 75 minutes of talks by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud and other officials.

The subjects included the Middle East, the black-white conflicts in southern Africa, nuclear non-proliferation, and the new Panama Canal treaties. Spokesmen said there was a general discussion of the French decision, made over U.S. objection, to supply a nuclear fuel reprocessing plant to Pakistan.

France has said it was obliged to fill the contract with Pakistan, when Pakistan insisted. France is now participating in an American-initiated International Fuel Cycle Evaluation Program involving about 30 nations, that will shift to Washington on Oct. 21.

Barre is the first French prime minister to visit the United States since the years of strained relations when President Charles de Gaulle ruled France. Guy Mollet was the last French prime minister to visit Washington, in 1957, which Carter alluded to in greeting Barre, who is both prime minister and minister for economy and finance.

Carter said "This is not an artificial partnership," and that his administration plans to "communicate constantly" with France. Barre said he expects to find "profound concurrence" on "basic objectives," and it is "only natural" that "the different situations and the different interests are sometimes reflected in a different approach to the problems."

Convict wounds self

WICHITA FALLS, (AP) — A Wichita Falls man, who police say apparently shot himself after he was convicted of a drug charge, was listed in fair condition late Thursday night.

Officers said Wesley Leon Kirby, 26, apparently shot himself in the stomach with a rifle at his parents' home early Thursday morning.

He had been released from jail on personal recognizance after he was convicted Wednesday afternoon of delivering controlled drugs to narcotics officers at a local nightclub.

The jury was to consider Kirby's punishment, but State District Judge Temple Driver declared a mistrial after he learned it would take four to five weeks for Kirby to recover.

He said it would be unreasonable to sequester the jury and he feared jurors might hear something that would influence their decision on punishment.

Assistant District Attorney Don Maxfield said Kirby faces a new trial when he recovers from the gunshot wound.

How does the traditional, structured classroom compare with the "new" concept of the open classroom? Are the two completely incompatible, to be kept separate, or can the advantages of both be used for the benefit of the student?

Administrators, teachers and parents express their views in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram as reporter Kay Hord compares the open classroom being used in several of Midland's elementary schools with the traditional classroom.

Senators: energy plan must change

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two influential senators are warning President Carter that he will have to drastically alter his tax-and-rebate proposal or run the risk of seeing the entire energy plan go down the drain.

Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd and Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said Thursday that any taxes collected under the banner of energy conservation must go toward searching for more energy, and not on rebates.

Long told Carter's energy secretary, James R. Schlesinger, that the finance committee will not approve the taxes unless the rebate plan is junked.

Schlesinger told the committee he didn't know whether Carter would agree to their demands.

"We don't want to subsidize everything," he said. Schlesinger offered to help the committee in delineating how an energy-development agency could work.

Carter's proposal to tax Americans on the one hand to save energy while giving the revenues back with the other has troubled some congressmen ever since Carter unveiled his energy plan April 20.

Byrd, of West Virginia, charged before Long's panel that the rebate plan "fails to adequately reflect the nature of the energy crisis facing the nation."

Byrd wants to invest the taxes in projects dealing with coal-gasification, solar energy and other alternative fuels, plus improving mass transit and upgrading the way coal is transported from the mines.

Long, whose home state is one of the nation's major energy producers, would like a major share of such tax revenues earmarked for bigger incentives for oil and gas producers to develop energy.

Carter's rebate plan barely survived in the House and has never faced rosy prospects in the Senate.

The finance committee will begin writing its own energy-tax bill next week with hardly a chance the rebates will be included.

As Schlesinger testified Thursday, Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., was the only committee member to show any support for the rebates.

Most seemed to agree with Sen. Harry F. Byrd, the Virginia independent, that the proposal would be like throwing money out an airplane window.

Carter says he, Lance, not public, will decide

By RICHARD E. MEYER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bert Lance invited the people to be his jury, but President Carter says in the end he and Lance will sit down friend to friend to decide whether the budget director will survive in the job he is fighting to hold.

"I am sure that the decision that I make along with Bert Lance ... will be satisfactory to the American people," Carter said Thursday in a question-and-answer session with members of the Radio and Television News Directors Association.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said he had no idea when the decision on Lance's future will be made except that it will be after the former Georgia banker's testimony to a Senate committee. Asked how much public opinion will enter into the decision, Powell said:

"If we have shown anything at all in this, it is that we are willing to take a considerable amount of heat and shed some blood ....If we had ever intended to base what we were going to do on a public opinion poll, we wouldn't have gotten into it this far."

Carter spoke by telephone to the association's annual convention in San Francisco. Hours before, in Washington, Lance had told the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee investigating his finances that he wants the American people to be "the jury in this proceeding."

Lance, who got best wishes from Carter at 6:30 a.m. in the President's study, denied to the committee that there were irregularities in his financial dealings when he headed two Georgia banks.

He conceded that he and his family and the committee that handled his unsuccessful 1974 campaign for governor of Georgia had overdrawn their bank accounts by thousands of dollars.

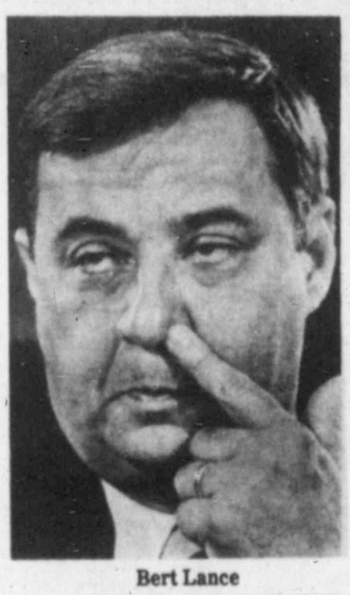

"Of course, there is no way for me to excuse my own or anyone else's overdrafts," Carter told the news directors. "This is something that was obviously a mistake. (But) I believe that, rather than my trying to judge at this point the accuracy of the charges that have been made against Bert Lance, it would be better to wait for his completion of testimony under cross-examination."

The committee hearings may extend into next week. Carter said he will read Lance's testimony.

"If I believed all of the charges or allegations against Bert Lance that I have read or heard through the news media, I would have discharged him immediately," the President said. "Some of those allegations I know to be incorrect, and the ones that prove to be correct, of course, I will have to make a judgment on them.

"But I have no reason to feel that Bert Lance is dishonest or incompetent, nor that he is acting unethically. The propriety of Bert's loans, overdrafts and so forth, obviously, will be assessed by me."

The President said he still has not read the FBI file on its investigation into Lance's background before he was confirmed by the Senate. But he said his staff has, and everyone interviewed by the FBI "gave Bert Lance an overwhelming endorsement."

An Editorial

The decision is ours

On January 1 of this year, The Reporter-Telegram editorialized that Midland's number one priority in 1977 should be the expansion and renovation of Midland Memorial Hospital.

Now, nine months later, our opinion has even been strengthened, as the needs of the hospital have been brought out in the campaign for the hospital district and $10 million in bonds.

Governors and trustees of Midland Memorial Hospital and temporary directors of the proposed hospital district have studied all alternatives for expansion of medical facilities. They looked into private financing by contributions or revenue bonds. They explored giving the hospital to a religious institution or to the County of Midland. They sought federal or state financing help. They looked into commercial hospital companies operating the hospital.

On each study, the governors, trustees and directors-elect learned that the alternative was not feasible. Contributors expressed the view that $10 million was an unattainable goal. Bonding companies said that revenue bonds could not be sold because of the non-profit, operating requirement of Midland Memorial. Church groups explained that if they took over medical operations, the capital funds would still need to be raised locally. No federal or state funds are available for hospital building programs, and commercial hospital corporations will not assume the bills of those patients who cannot pay.

As a result, Midland Memorial officials decided that a hospital district, owned and controlled by the taxpayers, is the only feasible way to provide high quality medical care facilities and to attract the doctors and nurses necessary to staff an expanded hospital. And they decided to expand, renovate and enlarge the present hospital so as not to double the cost to taxpayers by moving to a new site.

Saturday, then, is a day of decision for Midland County voters. Do we want improved medical facilities, the ability to attract more doctors and nurses, the authority to run our own hospital with local officials we elect, and the satisfaction of knowing that our families can receive top-flight treatment?

Or do we want to have a facility which has served Midland well, but which cannot provide adequate care for our families in the future, thereby forcing us to go to other Texas communities for medical care?

The decision is ours — and The Reporter-Telegram urges you to vote YES Saturday — For the hospital district and For the $10 million bond issue.

Committee scene like McCarthy vs. Army

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The scene was outwardly reminiscent of the Senate Watergate investigation or the confrontation between Sen. Joseph McCarthy and the U.S. Army, another of the periodic circuses that come to Washington as regularly as inflation

Crowds jammed the long hallway of the Dirksen Senate Office Building, shuffling behind ornamental ropes, slowly edging their way into the packed hearing room that had the look of a battleground long before the principal characters even began to arrive.

It was the long-awaited day in court for Bert Lance, President Carter's old buddy.

Health care decision Saturday

Midland County voters will go to the polls Saturday to decide on two issues affecting health care in the county.

At issue Saturday is whether to create a hospital district and whether to issue up to $10 million in bonds to finance expansion and improvement of Midland Memorial Hospital.

The first proposal on the ballot, the hospital district, would provide for broad-based tax support of indigent care and bad debts at the hospital. The county currently provides $100,000 a year on a limited basis for indigent care. However, the hospital loses $600,000 to $700,000 annually to indigent care and bad debts.

The second proposal of the bond issue would finance an extensive renovation of and addition to the hospital.

The proposed renovation consists of, among other things, adding and renovating patient rooms, adding private bathrooms, renovating the heating and air conditioning system, renovating the plumbing system, placing handrails in bathrooms and corridors and creating separate corridors and elevators for patient and staff.

The renovation will also include increasing the number of operating rooms from six to eight.

The proposed addition would house an enlarged critical care unit, a post-coronary care unit and an enlarged obstetrics-gynecology unit.

The additional operating rooms would be located in the current obstetrics-gynecology unit.

Eight voting places have been established for Saturday's election. Polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Where one votes is determined by the voting precinct number found on the voter registration card. All registered vote rs may vote.

The polling places and the precincts are:

Hobby applauds legislature's allocation of funds to schools

By JIM STEINBERG

Eight hundred of the 1,100 school districts in the State of Texas have been able to reduce taxes because of the nearly $1 billion added to the state's education budget by the 65th Legislature, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby told members of the Midland Rotary Club Wednesday.

The money was "appropriated in a rational fashion... unlike the way done in the past," Hobby said, adding that the state will continue moving to make a larger contribution to local government.

Instead of allocating teacher raises across-the-board as in past years, the 65th Legislature distributed most of the money so that the career teachers with experience would benefit, Hobby said.

Because of state population growth and increased demands for services, methods of automatic finance that proved so satisfactory 10 and 20 years ago are simply no longer adequate, Hobby said.

Second to education is transportation in the eyes of the legislature, Hobby said.

During the session, Henry Pearson, district manager for the state highway department, displayed a map to show Rotary Club members the more than 700 miles of roads in West Texas that would be either reconstructed or resurfaced under a massive highway improvement program. Approximately $7 million in state funds would be allocated to the state highways in Region Six of West Texas, Pearson said.

State Senator W. E. "Pete" Snelson and Representative Tom Craddick were presented citations from the Texas Good Roads and Transportation Association for their leadership in the passage of legislation to prevent the further deterioration of the state highway system.

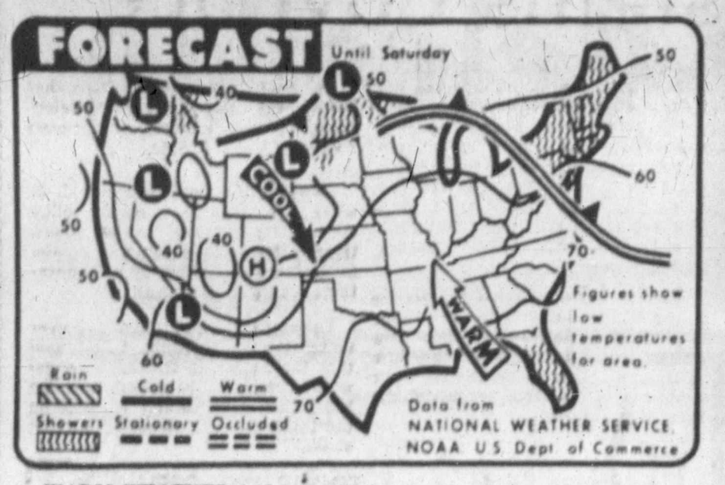

That legislation authorized the first increase in highway funds in over 22 years.

Although education and transportation are the top spending areas in the legislature, significant actions were taken in the area of criminal justice, Hobby said.

A record number of new district courts were created by the legislature and money was allocated to expand the state's overcrowded correctional facilities. Improvements in the Board of Pardons and Paroles will almost double the effectiveness of the parole system, he said.

Hobby came to Midland on a tour sponsored by the Texas Good Roads and Transportation Association.

House action could raise wage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House of Representatives is sending the Senate legislation to raise the minimum wage paid millions of American workers by 75 cents an hour over the next three years.

About 3.1 million persons work for the current $2.30 hourly minimum wage, which will go to $2.65 in January if the Senate agrees with the House's action Thursday. This would mean a $14 weekly raise for people working a 40-hour week.

The raise to $3.05 by 1980 would be the most sizable since Congress passed the first minimum wage legislation decades ago. A similar bill has already been approved by a Senate committee.

An amendment to guarantee youths only 85 per cent of the minimum wage for their first six months on the job lost 211 to 210, with Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. breaking the tie. The amendment would have lost on a tie anyway, but O'Neill's vote was symbolically important to labor.

The House turned down a proposal sought by the restaurant workers union to amend employers' right to pay workers who get tips only half the minimum wage.

Another amendment the House approved eliminates 3.8 million workers from minimum wage protection by raising the exemption for companies making $250,000 in sales a year to $500,000.

Business groups won a victory in the House's 223-193 defeat of a provision to automatically raise the minimum wage annually after 1980, based on a percentage of the average factory worker's pay.

"Adopting this index means we will be abandoning the fight against inflation," said Rep. John Erlenborn, R-Ill., whose amendment successfully knocked out the provision.

Reps. Paul Simon, D-Ill., and Robert Cornell, D-Wis., sponsored the subminimum amendment, which also drew support from Republicans.

They said similar two-tiered scales have had no ill effects in Europe and should be tried here.

Cornell said that, while he had "no pretences that this will solve youth unemployment," it is "time to try another approach."

But a special wage category for teenagers would make no more sense than a category for blacks or women whose jobless rates are also high, said Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif.

Sentencing of banker set by federal judge

Sentencing of former Odessa banking official Warren Boydston Moore has been set for 9 a.m. Sept. 22 before Federal District Judge D. W. Suttle.

Shortly before 5 p.m. Thursday Suttle handed down a guilty verdict on all five counts of an indictment charging Moore with misapplying nearly $2.2 million during his employment at First Savings and Loan Association of Odessa.

The non-jury trial began Wednesday.

Moore, 39, is former vice-president of the savings and loan association. He was accused of siphoning off money, through use of the savings and loan computer, into accounts set up under fictitious names in Midland, Odessa and Atlanta, Ga.

In testimony Wednesday, Emil Beck, manager of First Savings and Loan Association of Odessa, said Moore was hired as a consultant to help establish the association's computer system. He was promoted to vice president in January, 1976.

Testifying Thursday was FBI special agent Fronz W. Nenzel. The FBI was summoned after Beck learned of "irregularities" in his firm's sub-account with State National Bank of Odessa, according to Beck.

Defense cross-examination of prosecution witnesses dealt largely with whether information leading to Moore's indictment was obtained before he was warned of his rights.

All but $24,000 of the missing money has been recovered through Moore's cooperation, Beck said.

Moore faces a maximum sentence of 25 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

Rain, cool temperatures may dampen festivities

Persons planning to attend Mexican Independence Day festivities might want to take an umbrella along because the weatherman predicts a 20 per cent chance of rain tonight and Saturday.

Weather should be partly cloudy through Saturday. The low temperature tonight will fall in the upper 60s, and the high Saturday will reach the mid-90s.

Thursday's high temperature was 94 degrees and the overnight low was 70 degrees, the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal said.

Andrews had about "16 drops of rain" last night. Skies are clear there now and the temperature was 68 degrees this morning. In Lamesa, skies were partly cloudy with a "pretty good wind" blowing around town. Big Lake also reported partly cloudy skies, but not much wind.

Stanton, Rankin, Big Spring and Odessa had clear skies this morning while Crane reported a few clouds in its area. It was also windy in the towns of Stanton and Big Spring.

Thunderstorm activity in West Texas ended early today, leaving most of the state under clear to partly cloudy skies, but forecasters warned of more thunderstorm activity later today in West Texas.

Senate committee asking staff what Lance interviews revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate committee investigating Bert Lance is calling its own staff employes to testify following Lance's assertion that he told them in January about the financial dealings now under scrutiny.

Members of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee planned to begin cross-examination of Lance today, but Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said Thursday night that committee staff members would be called to testify about their interviews with Lance in January.

In a packed hearing room, Lance began his testimony Thursday, calmly reading from a prepared statement for close to two hours. He said he did nothing wrong in building up a personal financial empire that now seems close to insolvency and that no depositor "ever lost a cent" in the two banks he ran in Georgia.

Some members of the Senate panel had indicated they would concentrate their cross-examination on the question of whether Lance misled the committee about his financial affairs, before the panel recommended that he be confirmed to head the Office of Management and Budget for President Carter.

But Lance declared Thursday that "I disclosed ... the various financial matters which now are the focus of this hearing."

Lance noted that allegations of a cover-up were "perhaps the most fundamental charge to be discussed at this hearing."

Lance said he told committee investigators looking into his qualifications for the federal post that he had written overdrafts on his account at the bank he ran to help finance his 1974 campaign for governor. And he said he told the investigators about the Justice Department inquiry into the overdrafts, and about his Calhoun (Ga.) First National Bank's trouble with federal banking examiners who said the bank was poorly managed.

But the statements conflicted with those of staff employes and committee members who have said they did not have complete knowledge of Lance's tangled financial problems.

During Thursday's hearing, Javits first suggested calling the committee staff members. And Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., one of Lance's most vocal critics, said, "I think it's rather critical to determine what we were told. The question is, what was the staff actually told and what did the staff tell Ribicoff and Percy?" Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., is chairman of the Senate committee.

President Carter, who at first strongly defended Lance, said Thursday he would await the end of the hearings before deciding on Lance's future.

DEAR ABBY

Therapist compares himself with clients

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: For five years now, I have been a therapist in a rehabilitation clinic. In my work I see drug addicts, alcoholics and all kinds of men who can't work due to problems they've brought on themselves, and I'm amazed to find that most of them have loyal wives and girlfriends to back them up.

I am a hardworking man of good character with no bad habits, and I'm still alone and single.

Abby, why would a woman ignore a man with my qualifications to stick by a drug addict or alcoholic? Sometimes I wonder if I am on the wrong side of the fence.

Isn't there a place in the social marketplace for a good, hardworking man with no bad habits?—DILEMMA

DEAR DILEMMA: Most women who stick by the kind of men you treat do not see an alcoholic or drug addict; they see a man they love with a drug or alcohol problem. Obviously, those men must have done something to earn such loyalty and devotion.

And yes, there is a place in the social marketplace for a good working man with no bad habits. Keep looking, but don't compete with your patients.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 19, work in a large office and people tell me that I'm pretty and have a nice personality. I never had any trouble getting dates, but here's my problem. All the guys think I'm "hot stuff." Maybe the fact that I measure 39-26-36 has something to do with it, but I can't help it.

I am definitely NOT hot stuff, Abby. I am very picky when it comes to guys, and nobody gets a thing off me, but they all try it on the very first date.

What's wrong with me? I want guys to respect me, but this "hot stuff" label defeats me before I have a chance to prove it's not true.—HOT STUFF ON THE HILL

DEAR HOT: Check your packaging. Do you wear "come hither" clothes? Check your language. (Do you "tease" without realizing it?) And finally, check the look in your eye. Nobody has ever made a pass at a statue.

DEAR ABBY: I've been told that when I eat at a restaurant—and the owner serves me, I shouldn't leave a tip because the owner would feel insulted.

The way I see it, the owner has served me, so why isn't she (or he) entitled to a tip as an employee? A tip is a way of thanking someone for the good service.

Some say that only waiters and waitresses should be tipped because their living depends on it, which is not the case with the owner.

I would appreciate hearing from you, or from some restaurant owners on this matter so I'll know what to do in the future.—UNSURE TIPPER

DEAR UNSURE: When in doubt, tip. If the owner is "insulted," he or she will let you know.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "VERY MUCH IN LOVE" IN TOLEDO: I think you're making a big mistake. The only married man worth waiting for is your own husband.

Bed gives offbeat sleeping

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. We have moved into a condominium which we'll use for a vacation house in warm weather and keep a small city apartment for when we're in town.

I'd like something casual and contemporary in our bedroom and yet very practical so I need not have too much upkeep. I was thinking about something dramatic like a bed platform.

What would you suggest? — T.P.L.

A. You might like an architectural design by Ari Bahat which features a carpeted sleeping platform.

Wall-to-wall carpet of ribbed texture in a mahogany hue sweeps dramatically across the floor, steps and wall of a two-level bedroom.

Space is maximized with a mirrored wall visually expanding the view.

White beams and vertical shakes framing a dark-brown painted ceiling call attention to the drama of the room.

Below, a built-in chest of drawers provides easy access to a wardrobe without wasting an inch of space. Tufted Anso-X nylon carpeting designed for commercial use by Hollytex imparts comfort underfoot while acting as an acoustical insulator on the bedroom wall.

Egyptian-inspired sheets and pillowcases in rusty orange and blue add color to the room.

Q. I have an older home and am redoing the master bedroom. I have a king-size bed and a chaise. I need to buy a bedspread and recover the chaise as well as curtain the windows.

I'd like a bold decorating scheme but I am a little timid about where to start. The floor is medium-toned wood and the walls need painting. What should I use at the windows?

I would like an unusual color scheme. — S.P.

A. I recently saw a marvelous sheet, comforter and fabric combination in red, green and blue modified stripes in bold hues on a white background. It was superdramatic. Why not try something like this for your sheets and buy a comforter rather than a bedspread for a change. Buy extra fabric and concoct a fabric canopy if you like. Use the fabric, too, for curtains.

I'd consider painting three walls white and one red (probably the bed wall).

For the floor, why not straw rugs that look lacey on a wood floor?

Use sheeting or comforters to upholster the chaise in the matching fabric pattern. A section of sheet or yardage, if available, can skirt a table, too.

Project HOPE outlined to Altrusans

Altrusa Club of Midland, Inc. held its first meeting of the fall season in the Midland Hilton.

New members welcomed included Mrs. Berry Dyer, Mrs. Larry Grimm, Mrs. Janice Whatley, Mrs. Kayla Cass, Mrs. Troy Seago and Mrs. Marion Fisher.

Mrs. H. E. Cunningham, chairman of Altrusa Information, announced an orientation meeting for new members to be held at her home at 2314 Haynes Blvd. She said it is imperative that all new members be present and urged a full membership attendance at this meeting.

Dorothy Campbell, a member of Phi Mu, national collegiate sorority, presented slides and spoke on the sorority's project, Project HOPE.

She noted that the project began in 1958, with the S.S. Hope, the world's first peacetime hospital ship, sailing on its first voyage in 1960. This trip was to Indonesia and South Vietnam, with missions following to a dozen more countries.

Teams of up to 20 physicians, dentists, nurses and allied health personnel follow up on a teaching program that has been instituted during the ship's original visit. These programs are continued in most of the countries the ship has visited.

Because the project has outgrown the ship (operating from a ship limited the project to those countries which possessed adequate harbors,) and it was essential, also, to respond to the needs of landlocked nations as well, the S.S. HOPE was retired in April of 1974.

Departing from its ship-oriented program in 1969, the project operated in Laredo and in Ganado, Ariz. on the Navajo Indian Reservation. In 1974, a new domestic program was begun in El Paso.

Project HOPE believes that people are a country's greatest resource and protecting and improving their health will help them realize their potential and ultimately raise their standard of living, said Mrs. Campbell. It is dedicated to the improvement of medical care through the development of existing health care systems and the training of professional and auxiliary personnel necessary for the proper function of those systems within the framework of the area's culture and facilities.

"In brief," said Mrs. Campbell, "our aim is to teach and help people help themselves."

The local chapter of Phi Mu, in the past, has raised its funds for the HOPE project through a Christmas tree lighting in Dellwood Plaza Mall.

The club's next meeting will be at noon Sept. 22 in the Midland Hilton. Reservations are automatic, and should be cancelled by Wednesday noon by dialing 683-5154, otherwise there will be a charge. The program will be presented by the classification membership committees.

Volunteers' hours reported at meeting

Mrs. W. L. Peyton, volunteer chairman for Midland Memorial Hospital, announced 142 members of the Women's Auxiliary, Inc., of the hospital worked 1,771 hours at the hospital during August.

The announcement was made during a meeting of the auxiliary in the hospital cafeteria.

Mrs. Richard Crames, membership chairman, reported the auxiliary has 158 active, 119 contributing and seven honorary members.

The Junior Auxiliary chairman, Mrs. Verne Dwyer, announced 21 girls work 204½ hours during August. The Candy Striper award was won by Stelle Allen, 26 hours. The runner-up was Diane Ham, 25½ hours.

Mrs. Ralph Geisler, memorials chairman, reported 22 gifts were received in August.

Jimmy Allison Jr., member of the MMH board of trustees, spoke on the upcoming hospital district bond election.

Col. Theunis Dey group buys film

The Col. Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, met in the home of Mrs. Ben Black of 1608 Stanolind St.

New officers of the chapter were introduced. They are Mrs. Walter C. Hubbard, regent; Mrs. George Glass, first vice regent; Mrs. Lynn Durham, second vice regent; Mrs. M.W. Armistead, chaplain; Mrs. Charles Martin, treasurer. Mrs. John Redfern, III, recording secretary; Mrs. Norman Raman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Robert Hudson, registrar; Mrs. James "Doc" Dodson, historian and librarian, and Mrs. Solon P. Crain, parliamentarian.

It was announced a patriotic film entitled "Town and Country" has been purchased by the chapter and is available to any interested group for showing. The film tells the story of the DAR.

Mrs. Hudson welcomed to membership the following: Mrs. Garland Lang, Mrs. Gerald Stengl and Mrs. Scott Hickman.

The chapter will sponsor a bake sale Nov. 17 in the home of Mrs. Courtney Cowden of No. 7 Churchill Way. Mrs. Edwin Watts is chairman of the sale which will be held from 10 a.m. to noon.

The next meeting will be a joint Guest Day luncheon with the Lt. William Brewer Chapter, DAR, in observance of "Constitution Week" slated Sept. 17-22. Dr. Ron Paul of Lake Jackson, a former congressman, will be guest speaker.

Don't scold enemy if fault is yours

A hundred years ago the opening lead of a singleton was called a "sneak," and it was considered ungentlemanly to make such a lead. Today, since even the nicest people lead singletons, complainst will get you nowhere.

East took the ace of clubs and returned the queen of clubs. "That deuce of clubs must have been a singleton," South grumbled. "And I'm willing to pitch in for a few gallons of boiling oil for people who make such leads.

South thereupon played the king of clubs.

West ruffed and switched to a low spade. South had to try the finesse, but East produced the king of spades and a high club. South was down one after only four tricks had ben played.

South forgot that it's quite gentlemanly to make the contract when it happens to be unbeatable.

EVIL MOMENT

When East leads the queen of clubs at the second trick, South must play low instead of putting up the king. Oddly enough, this does more than merely postpone the evil moment.

East continues with the jack of clubs, and West ruffs. When West then shifts to a spade, South doesn't need the finess. He puts up the ace of spades and ruffs a club with a high trump.

South can then draw trumps and get to dummy with a diamond to discard a spade on dummy's last club.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold: SKp2 H73 DJ762 CAqJ10. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs. The hand is not quite good enough for a jump response of 2 NT. Show your suit and plan to bid 2 NT at your next turn, when the bid will be merely an invitation rather than a force to game.

New waterway toll bill would reduce drastically Arkansas pork barrel port

By T.R. REID
The Washington Post

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — They laughed in 1946 when Sen. John L. MCClellan (D-Ark.) talked about building a port in this landlocked city 400 miles from the sea. Today, the only ones laughing are the stevedores who earn $7.88 an hour unloading Japanese steel at the foreign trade zone maintained by the Little Rock Port Authority.

Thirty years and $1.2 billion in federal money have transformed the Arkansas River from a serpentine gulch of sandbars and mud banks to a shimmering blue freight way connecting Little Rock (and Tulsa, 300 miles upstream) with the sea.

The development of the river has been a factor — but not the only one — in a major economic reversal in the Arkansas basin that has turned the dusty agricultural states of Arkansas and Oklahoma into bustling center of industry.

Now Congress is threatening to take away at least part of the bounty the river project has brought.

For this is where the waterway toll bill, S.790, would pinch.

S.790, which passed the Senate in June and should emerge in some form from the House this month, would force commercial barge lines to pay a toll for using federally maintained inland waterways such as the Arkansas.

That could seriously limit the Arkansas River's economic utility. Without the free right of way, bargemen here could not set their rates low enough to compete with truck and rail shippers.

A study by the Congressional Budget Office predicted that the Senate-passed bill would eliminate 96 per cent of the Arkansas' freight traffic. The bill's sponsor, Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.), says the impact would be far less.

For waterway boosters here, S.790 looms as a death warrant.

"It would kill the goose that laid the golden egg, as far as we're concerned," said Wallace Gieringer, director of the Port Authority at Pine Bluff, miles downstream from Little Rock.

"We're getting more and more development along the river, but we haven't even been open for navigation for 10 years yet. This system is too young to survive a blow like that Domenici bill."

If the river were to dry up economically, because of the legislation, it is not clear how seriously the region's overall economy would be affected. Some local planners suggest the impact would not be fatal.

"The river is a tool, I say, one tool, in our kit for attracting industry here," said Windell Adams of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission.

"We'd hate to lose it. But we have some excellent rail lines here, we have interstates. Most of the economic revival here began before they built the river."

Congress authorized the Army Corps of Engineers to "build the river" in 1946, but construction did not begin until 1957.

The Army spent 15 years on the job, which it proudly labeled "the largest civil works proudly labled "the largest civil works project in history."

To provide a navigable channel all the way to Tulsa, the Army put in 17 dams, each requiring a lock to permit boat passage. Where a river's oxbow turns were too sharp for barge traffic, the Army simply tunneled through the earth to build a new, straight river.

On completion in 1971, the Arkansas project was hailed as a triumph of man's reshaping of nature. It became the model for a host of other huge projects, including the Tennessee Tombigbee waterway under construction in Mississippi.

To celebrate completion of the project, Army engineers prepared an official history of the river.

"For more centuries than man can count," the history notes disapprovingly, "the Arkansas River was left to its own devices ... Now the Arkansas works for mankind."

Barge traffic moving downstream carries coal, ore and agricultural products to ports along the Mississippi.

Coming up to Little Rock and Tulsa are steel and other industrial materials and various forms of fuel, including diesel fuel for the Missouri Pacific Railroad, the waterway's arch competitor.

In a classic instance of carrying coals to Newcastle, the barges also are bringinb bauxite to Bauxite, Ark.

Bauxite was the site of America's only significant depoits of the powdery red ore, the principal source of aluminum. The local mines are almost depleted, and so the Alcoa and Reynolds Aluminum Co. plants here are bringing in bauxite from Jamaica and Venezuela.

In addition to the commercial traffic, the river project has been a boon to recreational boaters, creating a chain of placid lakes and eliminating the seasonal changes that used to turn the best fishing holes into sandbars during the dry months.

The recreational craft move through the 17 locks just as the barge boats do, without paying any transit fee.

Defections depleting Britain's Labor Party

The Washington Post

LONDON — Britain's ruling Labor Party is beset with a nagging crisis, the slow, relentless departure of writers and thinkers who have given the party its intellectual tone.

The latest defector is Paul Johnson, former editor of New Statesman, the nation's most influential socialist journal. Unlike others who slipped away sadly and quietly, Johnson left with a scorching 4,500-word blast that accused Prime Minister James Callaghan of taking the country toward "Auschwitz and Gulag."

Labor, wrote Johnson in the magazine this week, has become "a collectivist party" dominated by "union bosses, few of whom have ever believed in liberty and democracy."

Under their aegis, Johnson said, Labor aims "to crowd everyone into the giant firm," crushing individuals and the self-employed. This strikes at "scientists and inventors, writers and musicians ...the essential creators who keep civilization going," he said.

Johnson's tone has struck some here as caricature of reality, but his parting shot has echoed and re-echoed in the daily press and on the air. The Conservative Sunday Telegraph reprinted it almost in full. An editorial in the Evening News called it a "significant" landmark.

Johnson, 48, is an Oxford-educated Roman Catholic and a self-proclaimed moral absolutist.

The attention given Johnson does not simply reflect press bias. His exit is symptomatic of a growing disenchantment of Labor's right wing.

The death last winter of Anthony Crosland, the foreign minister, deprived those who regard themselves as non-Marxist Social Democrats of their most powerful intellectual voice. Crosland's book a generation ago, "The Future of Socialism," brought many like Johnson to the Labor Party.

The leader of Labor's right wing has been Roy Jenkins, a distinguished biographer and holder of key ministries in several Labor cabinets. He has now virtually abandoned British politics, having taken a high-paid post as president of the European Common Market commission.

Another of the same stripe is Lord Chalfont. He has now quit the party to write stern warnings against communism at home and abroad, largely for his former paper, The Times of London.

Recently, Brian Walden, a political scientist who has taught at Yale and Princeton as well as Oxford, gave up his back-bench seat for the old job of Peter Jay, now the British ambassador in Washington, as commentator on a Sunday television show.

Even Jay, if he were not ambassador and Callaghan's son-in-law, might have been expected to follow the others. He often provided them with ammunition, repeatedly insisting that trade unions, democracy and economic stability were incompatible.

Vietnamese delegation leaves for U.N. assembly

Agence France Presse

HANOI — A Vietnamese delegation led by Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh left Hanoi Thursday for New York to attend the 32nd United Nations General Assembly.

During the assembly session Vietnam is to become a full U.N. member after having been kept out in the past by U.S. vetoes.

The United States first vetoed Vietnam's entrance in November, 1948. This was followed by further vetoes in March, 1949, and December, 1951.

In the summer of 1975, after the fall of Saigon but when the country still had two separate governments, one in the south and one in the north, the United States vetoed a new application in the U.N. Security Council.

A further attempt in September last year, made this time by a reunited Vietnam, again failed.

Last November 11 countries submitted a new resolution for Vietnam's admission.

This resolution was adopted by the General Assembly with 124 votes for, 1 against (the United States) and 3 abstentions (Britain, Israel and West Germany).

In the meantime, though still not a member of the U.N., Vietnam built up contacts with some of the specialized U.N. organizations, such as the High Commission for Refugees and the Childrens' Fund, which have offices in Hanoi.

The new U.S. administration under President Carter let it be known it would not oppose Vietnam's admission.

DISTINGUISHED MILITARY Science Student Award was presented recently to Gary Wortham, left, of Midland by Lt. Col. Ernest Isbell, head of the Northwestern Oklahoma State University ROTC program in Alva, Okla., during special ceremonies at the university. Wortham was among six seniors in the military science program who received the award. It entitles him to apply for commissions in the regular army rather than the army reserve upon completion of the ROTC program.

Mao's body displayed in sumptuous setting

By FRANCIS DERON
Agence France-Presse

PEKING — Chairman Mao Tse-tung, his face natural but emaciated, lies in a sumptuously decorated hall of the mausoleum built in Peking to keep his memory alive in future generations.

Foreign residents in Peking, including newsmen and diplomats, visited the memorial this week and moved slowly in line past the late chairman's crystal coffin.

Together with groups of Chinese soldiers and civilians and visiting foreign delegations, the visitors filed into the mausoleum's enclosure where wreaths of paper flowers from Communist party and government groups were displayed.

Once through the main door at the north entrance to the memorial, the visitor sees a huge, white-marble statue of Mao. His expression serene, he sits facing Tien An Men, the Gate of Heavenly Peace, and the monument to the "heroes of the people," its platform covered in flowers.

On either side of the statue were other wreaths from the central organs of the party and state.

At the statue's feet stood out a wreath laid by the North Korean ambassador to Peking, with verses in Mao's honor on wide black ribbons.

The visitors then entered the main hall, where Mao lies in a coffin of clear crystal, his head towards the south.

He is dressed in his usual blue-grey suit with the familiar high collar. A red Chinese Communist party flag with the yellow hammer and sickle covers the body to the chest.

At the head of the coffin four 6-foot-tall soldiers of the 8341 Co., Mao's personal bodyguard, stood at attention, dressed in the army's green uniform with white gloves, with bayonets fixed to their rifles.

The crystal coffin was surrounded by a carpet of flowers. All around the hall were small pine trees, the symbol of eternity, in plant pots.

On the white-marble wall at the coffin's head were inscribed in gold characters the words, "Eternal glory to the great leader and teacher Chairman Mao Tse-tung."

The visitors walked slowly down the hall, inlaid with precious woods and marble, on either side of the coffin.

They left the mausoleum by the south entrance, facing Chienmen Gate at the south of Tien An Men Square.

On the square were parked dozens of buses that had brought the hundreds of representatives of the Chinese people to pay their respects to Mao.

Israeli government facing first scandal

By YUVAL ELIZUR
Special to The Washington Post

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Menahem Begin's personal intervention on behalf of a former banker sentenced more than two years ago for misappropriating $47 million is rapidly snowballing into the first domestic scandal of Israel's new government.

The 12-year jail sentence of the banker, Yehoshua Benzion, 52, was commuted last week by Israel's president, Ephraim Katzir, on Begin's recommendation in his capacity as acting minister of justice.

He based his plea to the president on the finding of two of Benzion's personal physicians, who argued that their client is a very sick man and that jail conditions might endanger his life.

The prime minister's initiative immediately drew fire from the Labor party opposition, which charged that he was motivated by Benzion's political leanings and contributions to Rightist causes.

The Labor party announced it will seek a special session of the Knesset, Israel's Parliament, to discuss the Benzion case. Labor speakers say Benzion won his release because he contributed heavily to Gush Emunim, the nationalist religious group advocating Jewish settlement in the occupied territories.

Begin's action was also criticized by jurists, reportedly including Supreme Court justices, as political intervention in the due process of law.

The former justice minister, Haim Zadok, who had repeatedly turned down requests to recommend Benzion's release, said Friday night in a television interview that Begin's move constitutes infringement of the principle of equality before the law.

Former Minister of Police Shlomo Hillel revealed in a radio interview that Begin, while still leader of the opposition, had intervened on Benzion's behalf on several occasions. "In view of his personal interest in the case in the past, Begin should have disqualified himself from making any recommendation to the president on the prisoner's release," Hillel said.

Most persons enjoy retirement, survey shows

By LOIS TIMNICK
The Los Angeles Times

After 44 years as a newspaper pressman, Herb Louis retired four years ago at the age of 65.

He is still waiting for the let down others predicted..

"I haven't been bored for a minute," Louis said. "I laugh at people who try to talk you into being discouraged: they make themselves believe they're gonna be unhappy. What it boils down to is they're just plain scared of the unknown — whether they'll have enough to do and enough money to get by."

Louis, who lives in Kentucky, says the days pass all too quickly what with sleeping late, poring over the papers, maintaining house, yard and car, shopping, television visits with friends, children and grandchildren, quiet dinners at a favorite neighborhood steakhouse and unrushed travel to spots long saved for and dreamt of.

"I have no desire to find work," he says. "I figure 44 years is enough, and I'd have retired sooner if I could have afforded it."

Sociologists, psychologists and psychiatrists across the United States who have studied the retirement process — and other retirees who have experienced it — say Louis is not an exception.

Sixty-one per cent of retired persons in a massive study conducted for the National Council on the Aging said they chose to retire; 65 per cent said they had no desire to work. Seventy per cent agreed with the statement, "The things I do are as interesting to me as they ever were."

The so-called trauma of retirement is "a myth without a shred of evidence to support it," says George Maddox, director of the Center for the Study of Aging and Human Development at Duke University, one of the first institutions to focus attention on the elderly.

"Retirement is not a trauma for large numbers of people; most are happy and adjusted," says sociologist Gordon Streib of the University of Florida, a pioneer in this field.

"In 12 years of research involving 5,000 people I have not been able to document any serious psychological difficulties produced by retirement per se," says Robert Athchley of the Scripps Foundation Gerontology Center at Miami University in Ohio. "There's no concrete evidence that retirement has any deleterious effect on health or psychological well-being...a lot of people are anxious in anticipating retirement, but most (of their fears) are not founded in fact. The transition is milder than most... Obviously there are situations in which people freak out because they have to retire, but they are few."

But, they all concede, the pressman who is relaxing and reveling in his old age has several essential things going for him: reasonably good health, a loving spouse to share his newfound leisure, and adequate income from his pension and social Security combined.

Without these, the "Golden Years" might look a bit tarnished.

Anecdotes abound, of course, about "the way poor old Joe Smith went downhill from the monute he retired." But problems blamed on retirement often have other causes. The death of a spouse can lay waste to years of retirement planning. Illness and death, natural consequences of the aging process, may cut short the average 13 years still ahead for a 65-year-old man today (17 for a woman).

That is not to say that retirement — at 65 or ever — is good for everybody. It may be "a wonderful benefit or literally the end of psychological life or cause of an early death," says Frances M. Carp, social psychologist and research project director of the Wright Institute in Berkeley, Calif.

But the majority of people who retire, whether by choice or arbitrary rule, simply do not die sooner, get sick oftener, commit suicide more frequently, suffer more depression or other mental illness, or become senile sooner than their employed counterparts, studies suggest.

Retirees did score slightly lower in overall life satisfaction in the Council on the Aging's study (25.8 on a 36-point scale, compared with 28.6 among the employed), but they were also older as a group than the still-employed sample.

Psychiatrist Ewald Busse, dean of the Duke medical school and founder of its aging center, says he has seen no difference in rates of depression when retired persons over 65 are compared with employed persons over 65. Depression, which is twice as common in women as in men, peaks in both sexes in the 40s and 50s, then falls off, says Washington University psychiatrist Paula Clayton.

"I see more women who complain about their husband's retirement — which changes their routine — than men saying, 'I don't know what to do,'" says Dr. Clayton.

Suicide expert Dr. Georg E. Murphy, also of Washington University in St. Louis, conceded that the suicide rate in white males 65-69 years old is high: 36.5 per 100,000 population compared with a rate of 16 for all-white males. And he concedes it continues to rise with age. But he notes that suicides among the elderly have been declining over the past 20 years ("We have no idea why") and that most suicides are alcohol- or depression-related, both of which start long before age 65.

There are several schools of thought about the stages most people pass through in the process of coping with retirement.

Sociologist Atchley has suggested that after an initial honeymoon period following retirement day, disenchantment may set in. "Some people have unrealistic fantasies about retirement," he explained. "When those collapse, they tend to get depressed. My best guess is that this is true of fwer than 25 per cent, however, and they do get out of it eventually." How? Primarily by "'Reviewing the Situation' as the song from 'Oliver' says: they pull themsleves together and take stock of where they are."

A study of retired rubber workers conducted by epidemiologist Suzanne Haynes while at the University of North Carolina found lower than expected death rates during the first two years after retirement, elevated deaths in the third or fourth year. In one company, deaths rose 30 per cent above a comparison group in the third year after retirement; in the second company the rise — 18 per cent — came in the fourth year. Haynes speculates that this peak in illness and death represents Atchley's "disenchantment" phase; yet, there was little difference between the rubber workers and standard actuarial mortality rates when averaged out five or ten-years period, and Haynes did not compare them against a similar group of employed persons.

Studies in England have shown no health differences — as measured by such things as number of doctor visits, drug prescriptions, etc. — between retired and employed groups, according to Dr. Clayton. Indeed, says Florida's Streib, blue collar worker are likely to report an improvement in health after retirement, because it often signals a release from strenuous work.

Streib found that after an initial adjustment period, which might last six months to a year, most retirees say they would not want to return to work.

"Immediately following retirement, you get something that looks like the grieving process," says Duke's Maddox, who is following 500 elderly persons through this transitional period. "But it is not sustained over a year, much less two or three. We are confirming evidence that's been accumulating for almost a decade... . We have conned ourselves into underestimating the resilience and capacity of people to adapt."

Maddox notes that white-collar workers often feel forced out and adapt poorly at first as contrasted with blue-collar workers who welcome retirement with a "This is great" attitude. "Two and one-half years later, however, they cross paths," he says.

The blue-collar types do not seem to have developed as many hobbies and interests to sustain them; the white collared are more capable of developing alternative interests, friendships and community involvements.

An Iowa sociologist who has been tracing nearly 2,000 men over 50 years old since 1964, however, says he was surpised to find no relationship between job satisfaction and attitude toward retirement among them. That is, a person with a meaningful job might look forward to retirement, while a person in a tedious and boring job may nevertheless dread its coming to an end.

But once removed from the rat race, the degree to which a person adjusts to reduced income and increased time seems to hinge on his ability to become active and involved in other things.

"The ones who remain active, say in volunteer work, certainly appear to do better than those who fold up and vegetate," says physiologist Nathan Shock, scientist emeritus of Baltimore's Gerontology Research Center. Some occupational and social skills, of course, are more readily transferable to retirement than others: the former reporter might get out a Golden Age newsletter while the factory worker's ability to assemble TV sets may be less useful to him outside the plant.

Education may increase a retired person's range of leisure-time options, but as Atchley notes. "Most Americans already lead rich lives off the work place."

Not having enough time is a good indication of psychological well-being, according to Carp. "People who say there aren't enough hours in the day are psychologically in better shape," she said. In a study of 400 men and women for the National Institutes of Health a few years ago, she found that those who had some regular commitment of time — whether paid or volunteer — fared best.

"To the extent that an individual can't find meaningful activities — whether internally generated or forced (as in work) — some deterioration and depression is likely to set in," says Majda Thurnher, an anthropologist at San Francisco's Langley Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute.

Senility itself may be staved off by mental activity, some researchers now believe.

Dr. Charles P. Hughes, a neurologist at the Washington University medical school in St. Louis, has found that people with identical pathological changes in their brains function quite differently.

"One might be a dotard, the other fairly normal," he says. "It's as if there's something else besides just their pathology. We have found a good correlation between those who've led an active mental life in early years and those who are able to do so to the bitter end."

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE HOSPITAL DISTRICT?

HERE ARE THE ANSWERS!

The Taxpayers Association of Midland had lots of questions in Wednesday's Reporter-Telegram ad. Since their board refused the Citizens for Health's August offer to attend their meeting and answer questions, we wonder whether the Taxpayers Association really wants answers or whether they simply want to defeat a very important bond issue.

Please let us take this opportunity to respond to some of the questions we wanted to answer a month ago.

Question: "Why another taxing authority?"

Answer: Because a hospital district is the only suitable means of financing the renovation; and expansion which our hospital desparately needs.

(We have explored countless financing alternatives--private funds , revenue bonds, state and federal aid, commercial hospitals, Church-related organizations--but none suffice).

Question: "Why only four years after a building program, do we need another tax burden?"

Answer: Because the 1973 addition--none of which was financed with tax dollars--was only the first phase of a three-phase construction plan. Phases 2 and 3 were never begun because funds were not available. We needed them four years ago when Midland had a population of 60,000. We need them even more today now that our city has 75,000 people.

Question: "Why not get the taxing control back in the hands of the people?"

Answer: A hospital district will do just that. The people of Midland County will elect the five hospital district directors, who will be responsible to the people for levying the taxes.

Question: "If the issues are passed on September 17, we may be paying seven times more for indigent care than what is being paid at this time."

Answer: This is not true. The indigent care burden will not be seven times the present cost. Last year's indigent care cost around $600,000. Inflation will increase next year's indigent care $70,000-- a minor 11% increase.

(Midland Memorial Hospital does not turn the sick away; however, it works hard to collect from all people who use its services. In fact, its 93% collection rate is way above the national average).

Question: "Who will be the owners of the hospital if the hospital district is created?"

Answer: You will be. If the hospital district is created, the ownership of Midland Memorial Hospital will be transferred to the people of Midland County.

Question: "Why have some citizens been told that if they vote and the issue passes, they will have to pay nothing at the hospital?"

Answer: To our knowledge, absolutely no one has been told this.

Question: "All meetings of all tax groups should be public and publicized so all can attend."

Answer: They will be. If a hospital district is created, its meetings will be public just like the City, County, School, and College meetings.

New book published

LONDON (AP) — J.R.R. Tolkien's posthumous epic "The Silmarillion" was published today, and the critics agreed that it's not up to "The Lord of the Rings." But the publishers are sure it will be a best seller.

"We have a first edition print of 800,000 in Britain and the United States," said a spokesman for Allen and Unwin, the British publishers.

Tolkien, a professor of English at Oxford University for 34 years, started "The Silmarillion" in 1916 but left it a jumbled mass of much-rewritten manuscript when he died in 1973 at the age of 81. It was assembled and edited by his son Christopher, a lecturer in English at Oxford and his father's literary executor.

Some bombs 'tagged'

By JOHN H. AVERILL
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Technology to combat terrorist bombings by mixing explosives with microscopic but readily identifiable chemical additives is making rapid progress, a Senate subcommittee was told.

A Treasury Department official said that seven million pounds of commercial explosives containing identifying chemical "tags" had been produced for a pilot test program and that the program should be ready for nationwide use by next April.

"The major objective is to reduce and suppress crimes with (involving) explosives," said A. Atley Peterson, special assistant to the director for research and development of Treasury's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. "Identification will enable us to apprehend more criminal bombers, faster and at less cost."

Peterson appeared before the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on criminal law and procedures in support of legislation that would require explosives to contain identification and detection tags.

Subcommittee sources said the bill, sponsored by Sens. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) and others, is expected to pass the Senate next year.

Another witness, Robert Moler, director of explosives control programs for the Aerospace Corp., described the technical aspects of the tagging program.

House plan has workers taking second look

By MIKE CAUSEY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The tentative House plan to merge the civil service retirement system with Social Security has jolted many federal government workers and caused them to take a new look at their pension system, which is one of the best in the world.

Recently a House Ways and Means subcommittee voted to phase out the staff retirement system that covers 2.6 million federal employes. It would put them — plus the 14 million state and local government workers — under Social Security. Government workers don't like the idea. For good reason.

The average person retiring under Social Security must work longer, and eventually get smaller benefits than the average federal worker. This is because the civil service pension program is a staff retirement system, while Social Security is considered only a base income designed to supplement investments, private pension plans and other sources of retirement money.

Federal employes can retire as early as age 55 (if they have 30 years of service) and get full pensions. Those pensions are based on their average high three year salary. Employes pay 7 per cent of their total income into the pension fund and their agency matches it. An employe with 20 years in government (or with combined military service) can retire at age 60. And a government worker with only five years of service can retire at age 62. Obviously the longer people work the bigger their annuity.

The average federal retiree now gets $633 per month before taxes. The average survivor of a federal retiree gets $254. Of course those are averages. Some get much more, some much less.

The typical federal employe who retires today could expect to get an average pension of $670. If that employe retired now and died, his or her survivor would get $280 a month.

By contrast the average Social Security benefit today is $234, or $400 for a couple. A mother with two children would get $547, and a disabled person with a spouse and two children now gets an average of $517 a month from Social Security.

Whereas government workers pay 7 per cent of their total salary into their staff retirement plan (with the government matching that contribution), presons under Social Security now pay 5.85 per cent on earnings up to $16,500. That will go up next year to 6.05 per cent on $17,700.

Government figures show that the average federal retiree recovers all the money he or she paid into the fund in about 18 months. For persons under Social Security the payback to them takes a little more than two years.

$670,000 PROPERTY OWNERS!!! $7,370,000

The lefthand figure is the amount we are told is the 1977 bill for indigent care and bad debts. Six cents of the fifteen cents proposed tax is to pay this. The righthand amount is what property owners will be paying for indigent care and bad debts if we have a hospital district in Midland County and the taxing board raises the taxes to 75 cents per $100 which they will have the power to do.

THE TAXPAYERS ASSOCIATION OF MIDLAND IS HEARTILY IN FAVOR OF A GOOD HOSPITAL. LET'S LET A PRIVATE CONCERN BUILD AND OPERATE A HOSPITAL FOR US WHICH WILL NOT BE A TAXING DISTRICT BUT MAY BE A TAXPAYING UNIT. THE VOTERS OF MIDLAND COUNTY COULD THEN HAVE THE AUTHORITY TO VOTE FOR WHAT TAX THEY ARE WILLING TO PAY FOR THE INDIGENT AND BAD DEBTS.

Vote NO on the hospital district and the bonds. We have been told there are NO OTHER OPTIONS. We know this to be totally incorrect.

NOTE: We have been asked what the Taxpayers Association of Midland stands for. Here is the answer:

1. We feel we should get the taxing control back into the hands of the voters.
2. To get the dispensers of tax money more aware of the wishes of the people of Midland that would like to live here for the rest of their lives. This includes all the people from the East to the West, North to to the South.
3. We are for an economical and efficient school system that will teach boys and girls subjects that will help them to be able to support themselves later in life.
4. We also believe they should be taught the moral values as set forth in God's word and be taught the true facts of American history and how this country became great, namely, free enterprise and pride in good work.

Gardner-Young affair blossoms into scandal

By RUDY MAXA
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "I can stand up to them as long as I know you haven't talked," a worried Rep. John Young (D-Tex.) told former staffer Colleen Gardner over the telephone last year.

Alas, unbeknownst to Young, Gardner was even then tape-recording their conversations because she was already talking to "them" — two New York Times reporters.

And Colleen Gardner soon followed Elizabeth Ray into print last summer to charge her congressional salary was meant primarily to guarantee her boss a bed partner.

Now, 15 months after the first news story, the Gardner-Young affair is a scandal that will not go away. Three little-noticed lawsuits have kept the issue alive in Young's home-district newspapers. Should those cases come to trial, more embarrassing details may spill from Washington's District Court.

First Gardner's attorney, Sol Rosen, filed suit against Young, charging the congressman libeled him by denouncing him in print. "We're going to ask for everything and do what the Justice Department should have done," says Rosen, who is requesting Young's motel and restaurant receipts, among other things.

Rosen also wants to question Young in person, which is something federal investigators did not do before the Justice Department decided it had insufficient evidence to prosecute the congressman, who was reelected last fall.

For his part, Young filed a Freedom of Information Act request and was handed the evidence Gardner had voluntarily given the Justice Department, including the tapes she had made of their intimate phone conversations.

In June Young sued Gardner, Rosen and The New York Times, charging libel, "conspiracy" to invade his privacy, and "unlawful" phone recordings.

To complete the legal triangle, Gardner last month filed suit against her ex-boss, joining Rosen in claiming the congressman's printed statements about her constituted libel.

Taken together, the three suits promise a winter of discontent for Young — whose wife committed suicide two months ago — and Gardner, who now shuns publicity and is considering changing her name as a step toward beginning a new life.

Footnote: In a remarkable demonstration of restraint (by Washington standards, anyway), Gardner never wrote about the episode.

But the master of quick and sensational paperbacks, Robin ("The French Connection") Moore, is due out with a book called "The Washington Connection" that will devote many pages to the Gardner-Young affair.

In Washington's big-ticket real estate world, political and social connections count. So when Mrs. Barry Goldwater Jr. became Washington office manager of gilt-edged Previews Inc. last spring, the company had hopes high enough to pay her an annual salary of $25,000 plus a percentage of sales.

A year later, with only two property sales to her credit, Susan Goldwater and her bosses parted ways. She interviewed for a Nieman-Marcus PR job here and has been traveling to New York for lessons from a television coach.

Her media career, she says, is "in the prenatal stage." Her marriage is in the "separated but still friendly" stage, a change from May, 1976, when she gave her previous occupation on her employment form as "professional political wife."

All hell broke loose when Georgetown last welcomed author William Peter Blatty — the on-location filming of his novel "The Exorcist" inspired havoc on Prospect Street and made Blatty a rich man.

His most recent homecoming (he's a Georgetown U., '50) was a more private affair. For nine months he has been in town writing a novel called "Dimiter," a theological thriller Blatty hastens to stress has nothing to do with the occult.

Blatty keeps a low profile, sometimes taking dinner at a Georgetown restaurant, living quietly with his wife, formerly a top-seeded tennis player who met Blatty after appearing in a background scene of "The Exorcist." ("Which demonstrates," Blatty says, "that even out of evil there always comes some good.")

For the Blattys, things go better with Pepsi. A couple of weeks ago a division of that soft-drink company bankrolled a movie based on a novel Blatty wrote over a decade ago called "Twinkle, Twinkle, Killer Kane."

Filming begins next spring in Budapest with Blatty occupying the director's chair.

To the luck of the Irish add a heavy dose of Kennedy connections and, voila, a new generation of Kennedys is launched. While Joseph Kennedy III runs for the state treasurer's job in Massachusetts, Robert Kennedy Jr. is writing his way to prominence with a little help from his family's friends.

Hours before the White House announced the appointment of Judge Frank M. Johnson to head the FBI, young Robert was contacted by editors close to the Kennedys from the Boston Globe, Nashville Tennessean, and the Philadelphia Inquirer. Each newspaper wanted him to write an editorial-page piece on Johnson.

The reason: by happy coincidence, Kennedy had chosen Johnson, an old family acquaintance, as the subject of his senior thesis at Harvard.

Kennedy lived with Johnson while researching how the civil rights movement was affected by the judiciary, especially Johnson's battles with his law school classmate, George Wallace.

An editor at Putnam heard about the thesis last spring, read it and paid Kennedy a book advance in the low four figures. When Johnson became the man of the hour, Putnam suddenly found itself with what could be a hot property.

Since Johnson's appointment, Kennedy has been in Palm Beach polishing the manuscript, which Putnam hopes to have between hard covers by spring.

Footnote: In 1940 another Harvard senior wrote a thesis that became a book. The title was "Why England Slept," and the author was John F. Kennedy.

When he was personal photographer to President Ford, David Hume Kennerly was a media darling — and also, it was rumored, Susan Ford's. What's happened to him now? Who's his counterpart in the Carter family?

Kennerly is now free-lancing and most recently photographed heads of state in the Middle East for Time magazine. Standard rate: $200 a day plus expenses. Susan had eyes for Kennerly, but it was a one-way street. Carter did not hire a personal photographer and at first merely tolerated the presence of his three staff cameramen. While he has grown more comfortable with clicking cameras, Carter does not encourage photographers to linger and pix are not routinely snapped in the First Family's living quarters as they were in Kennerly's time.

In a photograph last month in Ladies Home Journal, Elizabeth Taylor Warner was behind the wheel of a tractor. Is she really a farmer's wife now?

The headline said "Down On the Farm" but folks around the farm near Middleburg, Va., say riding tractors is not Elizabeth's style. She dresses as if every day is Easter, and John Warner is one of those few farmers who wear jeans, work shirt and Carteir tank watch.

When it comes to Fat City expense accounts in Washington, Motion Picture Association President Jack Valenti supposedly tops the list with a $50,000 annual allowance. True?

Valenti says he's heard that report, too, but swears he only spends about $500 monthly on business entertainment, though the movie screenings he hosts at his association headquarters near the White House do give him an advantage in entertaining.

Julie Nixon Eisenhower gave a radio interview in Cleveland last month in which she encouraged young people to get involved in politics. Is she campaigning for something?

She was promoting her book, "Special People," which sidesteps political scandal.

Ward strike highlights Permian Basin activity

A discovery has been completed in Ward County. Andrews drew site for a wildcat and an extender finaled in a field. A Sterling test has been amended as an outpost to a discovery, while field activity is reported for Loving, Martin and Pecos.

Sidwell Oil & Gas, Inc., Pampa, completed No. 1 J. H. Healey, a Wolfcamp oil strike in Ward County, 15 miles northwest of Pyote.

The 24-hour flowing potential test gauged 14 barrels of 40.4-gravity oil and 11 barrels of water, with gas-oil ratio of 714-1, through a 24-64-inch choke and perforations at 11,055-11,182 feet. The pay section had been acidized with 8,000 gallons and fractured with 32,000 gallons and 30,000 pounds.

A reentry operation, it originally was drilled by American Quasar Petroleum Co., and plugged and abandoned in November, 1974 at 16,650 feet. The plugged-back depth is 11,283 feet, and 5½-inch casing was set at 10,679 feet. Deeper tubing was not reported.

It is 660 feet north of the southwest corner of section 39, block 18, ULS, thence 660 feet west to location in D. T. Johnson survey 45, four miles west of Wolfcamp oil production in the War-Wink, South field.

ANDREWS PROSPECTOR

Governors critizing Carter's energy plan

By JOHN LENGEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of southern and midwestern governors are criticizing President Carter's energy plan, now shorn of a proposal to reform the way utilities charge for electricity.

Oklahoma Gov. David Boren told the Senate Finance Committee that Carter's energy plan is a dead-end street because it focuses entirely on conservation and makes no provision for meeting long-term needs.

Boren said Carter's plan "provides for the most part only the rationing of a shortage, not for any long-range victory for the consumer through more adequate supplies."

He spoke on behalf of the southern and midwestern governors' conferences.

Carter wants to raise gasoline taxes to make the fuel more dear to consumers. The governors say profits, not taxes, should rise to give the industry an incentive to develop new supplies.

Meanwhile, the Senate Energy Committee Wednesday threw out most of Carter's plan to reform electricity pricing.

Only shreds of the President's utility plan survived. Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., the panel chairman, called the utility rate proposal an unwarranted intrusion into state regulation.

The committee dropped provisions that would have ended discounts for large industries and mandated lower prices for household electricity use during off-peak hours.

In another energy development, Federal Energy Administrator John F. O'Leary told a Senate Commerce subcommittee that "one or perhaps two" pipelines may be needed to carry surplus Alaska oil from the West Coast to the interior.

The panel is considering legislation to expedite federal approval of a pipeline plan to the distribute the oil once it reaches western terminals.

West Coast refineries can process only half of the 1.2 million barrels a day that will begin arriving in March by ship from the Alaskan North Slope fields.

Until the new pipelines are built, tankers will carry the surplus to Gulf Coast refineries.

Reentry try announced

Continental Oil Co. intends to reenter and plug back to 8,700 feet at No. 3 V. S. Bartlett, fermer Cisco producer, for recompletion try as a second Dean sand well and 2⅝-mile north extension to that pay in the Ackerly, North pool of Dawson County.

It is 467 feet from south and 1,595 feet from west lines of section 11, block 34, T-4-N, T&P survey, 11 miles southeast of Lamesa.

Dean production was reopened in the field in August 1974.

Sun Oil Co. No. 6-A Mattie Powell is slated as a west stepout to the three-well Wichita-Albany sector of the Ownby pool of Yoakum.

It spots 550 feet from south and 660 feet from east lines of section 4, block D, J. H. Gibson survey, 12 miles east of Plains.

Extension potentials

Sohio Petroleum Co. has completed No. 4-D R. S. Davenport as a 1⅝-mile north and slightly east extension to the Calvin (Dean) field in Midland County, 25 miles southeast of Midland.

The 24-hour potential test gauged 138 barrels of oil and 28 barrels of water, through Dean perforations at 8,435-8,646 feet. Gravity was 40.1 degrees and the gas-oil ratio measured 862-1.

A former Spraberry producer in the Trend Area, it was drilled to 8,693 feet, and plugged back to 8,691 feet.

Location is 1,980 feet from south and west lines of section 46, block 37, T-4-S, T&P survey, one mile northwest and southwest of Dean production in the Glasscock part of the Calvin field.

Nolan pool reopened

Production in the Adrian (Ellenburger) pool of Nolan County has been reestablished with completion by Roy J. Keene Jr. of Dallas, of his No. 1-55 L. E. Adrian, one location south of the depleted original opener.

The 24-hour pumping potential gauge was 83.5 barrels of 43.8-gravity oil and three barrels of water. It finaled through perforations at 6,214-6,246 feet, after treating with 6,600 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 6,260 feet, it has 4½-inch casing set at 6,259 feet, and top of the Ellenburger was picked at 6,205 feet, under ground elevation of 2,344 feet.

Location is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from east lines of section 55, block 20, T&P survey, nine miles southeast of Sweetwater.

Ratemaking limit set

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — The railroad commission adopted a rule Monday setting ratemaking limits on "lost and unaccounted for" natural gas.

The rule, effective Oct. 4, provides that all expenses for lost gas in excess of 5 per cent of the amount metered in by distribution systems and 3 per cent of the amount metered in by transmission systems shall be disallowed for ratemaking purposes.

The commission in the past has allowed 10 per cent on distribution systems and 5 per cent on transmission systems.

Commission examiner John Hays Jr. said the rule "provides an economic incentive to reduce the volumes of gas which escape from transmission and distribution systems and to encourage a stricter accounting for other unaccounted for gas."

Energy adviser sounds warning as he resigns

The Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO — One-time Democratic power Bob Moretti has held his "last press conference," and resigned from the state Energy Commission. Moretti warned that California under the Brown Administration is drifting toward "an almost catastrophic situation" on electricity.

Moretti said Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. had surrounded himself with advisers who espoused a "no-growth," "stop-nuclear-power" philosophy and "the roof is going to cave in on whoever the next governor is.

"If the governor allows the present situation to continue, what's going to happen in five to eight years is that California is going to undergo an almost catastrophic situation with regard to its ability to deliver electricity to its citizens," Moretti said Thursday.

"Blackouts is precisely the kind of thing I'm talking about. This society simply cannot function properly without electricity. And if you play a dice game with the amount of electricity that's available, you are playing a very, very dangerous game. And I think the philosophy of most people in this Administration who deal with energy is to take that Gamble."

Moretti said he was quitting because of "major and probably irreconcilable differences in philosophy" with the other four commissioners and, "I could not stomach the bureaucratic approach to problem solving."

"It is more than my patience can endure," Moretti said of the $24 million, 570-employe commission bureaucracy. "I kind of define that approach as one which tends to take the longest possible time producing the most possible paper, using the largest possible number of people to produce the least offensive non-answer." "I hope the Energy Commission is not indicative of the other bureaucracies in this state government," Moretti continued. "If in fact it is, God help all of us. I mean it is unbelievably wasteful of time and energy and talent."

Moretti's dominant complaint about the commission centered around what he characterized as inaction on approving nuclear power plant sites in California.

"Everything is delay, delay, delay, don't make any decisions, stop nuclear power," he said.

Cowboys draw nod over Vikings

By BRUCE LOWITT

It will be no surprise to anybody to find that the Oakland Raiders and Minnesota Vikings will be picking up right where they left off last January.

The Raiders will win with ease. The Vikings won't.

The San Diego Chargers, chock full of hope, will be shot full of holes by the Oakland juggernaut. The Vikings, the last team to feel the Raiders' swords, will get cut to the quick again, this time in a mild upset by the Dallas Cowboys.

Raiders 34, Chargers 16

San Diego's got a few good horses with newcomers James Harris at quarterback, Bob Klein at tight end, Johnny Rodgers at wide receiver and more. The defense, though, is still suspect.

Oakland's the same old gang on both sides of the line—but what a gang. Ken Stabler will chew up San Diego's secondary and the 3-4 defense will hit the Chargers with the old 1-2.

Cowboys 24, Vikings 20

Minnesota's got a habit of blowing the big ones, namely four Super Bowls. This one may not be as big but it's still a pretty good indication of just how the greying Vikes will do this year. We think they'll do only so-so.

Buccaneers 21, Eagles 17

Call it intuition. Call it lunacy. The feeling is that Tampa Bay, charged up over its victory against Baltimore a week ago, will sustain the mood. And with a pair of running backs like Ricky Bell and Anthony Davis, the Bucs have the right to some exultation.

Steelers 28, 49ers 10

Pittsburgh is hurting—but not so much that it can't stifle San Francisco on Monday night. The defense is almost as good as last year, which is to say close to sensational.

Colts 31, Seahawks 23

Seattle's got the offense to scare a lot of teams—and a defense that terrifies the Seahawks' fans. Put Bert Jones, Lydell Mitchell & Co. in front of that defense and watch the points pile up.

Cardinals 31, Broncos 28

Technically, this is an upset pick since the odds-makers like Denver by a point or two. But we don't see it that way. Until the Broncos show they've got a quarterback and that they can stop one like St. Louis' Jim Hart, we'll stick with the Cardiac Cards.

Bengals 38, Browns 10

Cleveland collapsed on the final weekend of 1976, after its chances of sneaking to a division title went out the window. In 1977 the collapse comes 13 weeks earlier.

Bears 24, Lions 13

The team most likely to beat Minnesota to a division title is Chicago, full of promise and questions. Detroit just seems to go along reaching mediocrity each season. This one's no different.

Rams 24, Falcons 7

Having Joe Namath's signals called from the bench is like putting a Picasso in a parking lot. Nevertheless, Freeway Joe will overcome the handicap.

Patriots 28, Chiefs 14

Will Steve Grogan be the sensation he was in 1976? Yes, if he can avoid getting hurt. Kansas City may not lay a hand on him all day.

Dolhins 24, Bills 14

Once again it's O.J. Simpson against the world. Miami is a shot-full-of-holes team, but at least it's a team, not a one-man show.

Saints 21, Packers 16

Hank Stram thinks a good preseason record can lead to a good regular-season record. For one game, it can.

Redskins 27, Giants 10

Washington's the Over-TheHill Gang. Call the Giants the hill.

Oilers 20, Jets 14

With Joe Namath or without him, the Jets are grounded.

Yankees acquire slugger Kingman

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees acquired slugger Dave Kingman on waivers from California Thursday, just nine days after the Angels had obtained him via the same route from the San Diego Padres.

Kingman had played in just 10 games for the Angels, batting .194 with two home runs and four runs batted in. Both of his homers came Tuesday night in a game against Texas.

The Yankees will be the fourth team this season for the right-handed outfielder-first baseman who started the year with the New York Mets.

Kingman, the Mets' leading home run hitter in each of the previous two years, was involved in a contract dispute throughout spring training with the New York club. When he refused to sign, the Mets traded him to San Diego June 15, receiving journeyman infielder-outfielder Bobby Valentine and pitcher Paul Siebert in exchange.

SWC boasts perfect slate

By The Associated Press

The Southwest Conference will take a perfect 5-0 slate into this weekend's intersectional football warfare but nowhere will there be a more bitter battle than the North Texas State-Southern Methodist neighborhood rivalry at Texas Stadium.

Hayden Fry, who coached at SMU 11 years before he was fired, still hasn't beaten the Mustangs since he became head coach at NTSU. The Mean Green have lost 7-6 and 38-31 games to SMU under Fry.

"I think it will be the most exciting game of the year," said Friy, who dodges talk that he has revenge on his mind.

"I want SMU to be very successful, except when we play them of course," said Fry. "I'm one of their biggest fans. I came in after a 0-10 year and took SMU to three bowls and I think they have a super coach now in Ron Meyer."

Fry said "SMU definitely has a better team than it did last yer."

Meyer, whose team manhandled Texas Christian 45-21 Saturday, uaid, "Hayden has all his people back and they played the boots off Mississippi State before losing (17-15). It should be an explosive, wild game."

In other games, Houston plays its second foe this week at Penn State Saturday while Texas A&M is at Virginia Tech, Kentucky is at Baylor, Virginia is at Texas, Oregon is at TCU, Oklahoma State is at Arkansas, Florida is at Rice and New Mexico is at Texas Tech.

The SWC has a lot at stake. Texas A&M is ranked seventh, Texas Tech is eighth and Houston is ninth. Texas is ranked 18th.

The Aggies are 10-point favorites over VPI but Coach Emory Bellard points out, "We didn't exactly blow them out last year. They have most of their people back, and we're playing in their territory. We're playing them blind since this game will be their opener. I'm sure we'll run into a very emotional effort."

Texas Tech is a 20-point pick over New Mexico but the Lobos always give the Red Raiders trouble.

"New Mexico always plays us tought and we'd best be ready," said Tech Coach Steve Sloan.

Penn State, which was idle last week, is a four-point nod over Houston which opened with a victory over UCLA Monday.

Texas was a 31-point selection over Virginia and Dick Bestwick, coach of the underdog Cavaliers, said "We have two Cubans on our squad and they mentioned that it might not be a bad idea if they couldn't setup something like being sky-jacked on the way to Austin Friday and go into Cuba. That might be a good idea."

Finley endures long operation

CHICAGO (AP) — Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley was reported in satisfactory condition late Thursday after a four-hour operation to replace a main branch of the artery supplying blood to his heart.

A team of six surgeons led by Dr. John Sanders performed the bypass operation at Northwestern Memorial Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Finley was resting in the hospital's coronary intensive care unit, she said.

Seaver reaches milestone

By The Associated Press

The first 200 victories were the hardest, said Tom Seaver.

"It wasn't easy—I made it tough on myself because I was wild and high most of the night," the Cincinnati righthander said Thursday night after reaching the milestone with a 3-2 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Perhaps Seaver's 200th major league victory wasn't his most artistic, but it did provide him with a new stature. Only four other active major leaguers have reached that cherished level—Ferguson Jenkins, Gaylord Perry, Jim Kaat and Catfish Hunter.

And Seaver doesn't plan to stop there.

"If I stay healthy the next five years, I can win 300 with this club," Seaver insists. "My health is important to me. My legs and arm have to stay strong.

"I haven't been getting as many strikeouts this year. I've been getting two strikes on a lot of guys, but I haven't been popping the ball."

The triumph was the 18th in 24 decisions for Seaver this season and his 11th since joining Cincinnati from the New York Mets on June 15. He had hoped to reach the 200-victory mark before the season ended, but didn't especially dwell on it before the game.

"I didn't really think about 200 until the ninth inning, after I got past Rick Monday. Then it dawned on me," Seaver noted.

The decision not only enhanced Seaver's record, but prevented the Dodgers from moving closer to the National League West pennant. Their "magic number" for clinching the West title remained at four games after the Reds won their fourth straight from the Dodgers and took the season series, 10-8.

"At least we did that," said George Foster, who scored the winning run in the seventh inning. "We just hope it continues into next year."

Seaver scattered six Los Angeles hits, one of which was a two-run homer by Monday in the fourth inning. That gave the Dodgers a 2-0 lead, but the Reds tied the game in the fifth on Bob Bailey's RBI grounder and Dan Driessen's RBI single.

The Reds broke the tie in the seventh when Foster and Johnny Bench led off with singles, chasing Doug Rau, 13-8. Concepcion greeted reliever Mike Garman with a run-scoring single.

Phillies 8, Mets 2

Mike Schmidt slammed his 35th home run of the season with two men on in the fourth inning, carrying Philadelphia over New York. Schmidt's homer, his first at home since July 31, made a winner of rookie Randy Lerch, 9-5. Craig Swan fell to 8-9.

Schmidt's home run, his 17th at Veterans Stadium this season, came off reliever Bob Myrick and followed two-out singles by Bake McBride and Larry Bowa.

"I'd heard rumors that I hadn't hit one out of here in a while," Schmidt said. "The guys were on me pretty good before the game and I told them tonight was the night.

"The first two pitches I swung at just before I hit the home run were the worst swings you'd ever want to see. I guess Myrick figured getting me on another outside fastball would be easy...only I adjusted."

Pirates 4-7, Cardinals 3-10

John Candelaria and Rich Gossage combined on a sevenhitter and Candelaria contributed a two-run double to a three-run rally in the seventh inning, leading Pittsburgh over St. Louis in the first game of their doubleheader.

Hector Cruz slammed a three-run homer and Roger Freed added a two-run triple in a seven-run sixth inning that carried St. Louis over Pittsburgh in the second game.

"Any game you lose now is tough," said Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner, whose club is on the edge of extinction in the National League East race. "We battled; that's all we could do."

Expos 5, Cubs 4

Rookie Stan Papi's run-scoring single with two out in the ninth boosted Montreal over Chicago. Jerry White led off the Montreal ninth with an infield single and remained at first as Will McEnaney and Dave Cash struck out.

But White then stole second and scored easily on Papi's game-winning hit off loser Bruce Sutter, 7-3.

Astros 6, Giants 3

Bob Watson's two-run homer in the seventh snapped a 3-3 tie and led Houston over San Francisco. Watson's 18th homer of the season came off San Francisco starter Ed Halicki, 14-11, who also surrendered a two-run blast to reserve catcher Ed Herrmann in the sixth inning.

Herrmann's homer was his first of the season and wiped out a 3-1 Giants lead. Watson had preceded the shot with a double.

Braves 8, Padres 7

Rookie catcher Dale Murphy hit his second home run of the game and his major league career in the top of the 10th inning to give Atlanta its victory over San Diego.

Murphy, who had homered in the seventh, drilled his second homer off Rollie Fingers, 8-7, after the Braves had rallied to wipe out a 7-1 deficit with five runs in the eighth and a run in the ninth on Willie Montanez' two-out, run-scoring single.

Weaver forfeits contest

By The Associated Press

The Baltimore Orioles took a walk and ended up in a tie with the Boston Red Sox for second place in the American League East.

"I couldn't afford to leave my players out there," Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver said after the Orioles walked off the field and forfeited their game to the Toronto Blue Jays Thursday night. "I might have saved someone's career."

Weaver refused to let his team take the field in the bottom of the fifth inning when umpire Marty Springstead refused to grant Weaver's request to remove a tarpaulin, anchored by bricks, covering the mound in the Toronto bullpen down the left-field line.

The game had been played in a steady drizzle and Toronto led, 4-0.

"There's only four feet of space between the foul line and the mound," Weaver said. "I had a guy (left fielder Andres Mora) slip out there last night and wasn't about to let it happen again. If you can't go four feet and catch a ball, there's something wrong."

While Baltimore took a 9-0 loss by sitting in the dressing room, the Red Sox walloped the AL East-leading New York Yankees, 7-3. The Boston victory pulled the Red Sox into a tie for second with Baltimore, 2½ games behind the Yankees.

Boston, whose home run power has been negated by Yankee Stadium's huge dimensions, went the ground route in downing New York.

"We were joking around on the bench before the game that we would clink them to death," said Boston's Denny Doyle.

Doyle showed the way by cracking a bases-loaded triple to key a six-run Boston explosion and bury the Yankees.

The victory salvaged the final game of the three-game series with New York.

"If we had lost this one, I think we would have been out of it," said Red Sox Manager Don Zimmer.

In other AL games Thursday, Kansas City swept a doubleheader from Oakland, 7-6 in 11 innings and 5-4 in 10 innings; Minnesota crushed Chicago 7-2 and Texas defeated California 6-4.

Luis Tiant, 11-8, earned the Boston victory with late-inning relief help from Bill Campbell. Yankee reliever Sparky Lyle, 12-5, took the loss.

Bernie Carbo had three hits, including one to start Boston's big sixth inning, and George Scott added a two-run single.

"Our backs are still against the wall," said Red Sox captain Carl Yastrzemski. "We have to win six or seven in a row. If there's a club that can do it, this clud can."

Reggie Jackson blasted a solo home run and Thurman Munson added a two-run shot for New York.

Royals 7-5, A's 6-4

Kansas City swept a doubleheader from Oakland, needing extra innings in both games. Al Cowens led off the 10th inning of the nightcap with a home run into the left-field bleachers to lift the Royals to victory after Pete LaCock's single scored Willie Wilson with the winning tally in the 11th inning of the opener.

The double victory stetched Kansas City's winning streak to 16 games, the longest in the major leagues since the New York Yankees won 18 straight in 1953. The Royals also reduced to seven their "magic number" for clinching the American League West. Any number of Kansas City victories or Chicago losses totalling seven will give the Royals the title.

Cowens' homer off loser Doug Bair, 3-4, was his 23rd of the season. Bair also was the losing pitcher in the first game.

Twins 7, White Sox 2

Butch Wynegar drove in two runs with a pair of singles and Rod Carew drove in one run and scored two to back Geoff Zahn's six-hit pitching as Minnesota downed Chicago.

Carew's 16th triple of the season extended his latest hitting streak to 12 games. Wynegar had his first RBI single in the third inning and singled home another run in the fifth.

Rangers 6, Angels 4

Mike Hargrove's 16th home run of the season and Willie Horton's two-run single sparked Texas over California. Rangers starter Nelson Briles, 6-4, who needed help from reliever Andrian Devine, gave up six hits in six innings, including Don Baylor's 22nd homer.

John Caneira, 1-1, took the loss.

Devine came on in the seventh inning to earn his 12th save of the year.

SWC trainers fear heat in day games

DALLAS (AP) — A mid-week cold front has broken the withering heat that dogged Southwest Conference games last week, but some SWC trainers still fear a player might die during a controversial early season afternoon game.

Texas A&M, Baylor, Texas and Texas Christian have moved their September night games to 4 p.m. this year. Officials say the move was made to save energy, accomodate out-of-town fans or please the press. But some weather experts say that is the hottest time of a September day.

Unusual weather conditions last Saturday brought temperatures exceeding 110 degrees on the field, limited wind and high humidity — and howls of warning and protest from some trainers and team doctors.

"Some of the other schools say they are starting at 4 o'clock to conserve energy. I think this is putting a price on the lives of our athletes," said Southern Methodist Athletic Director Dick Davis, who vows he'll call for a review of the 4 p.m. starting times.

"It's stupid to play at that time of the day," said Virginia Coach Dick Bestwick, whose team plays Texas in a 4 p.m. game Saturday in Austin. "I think it's ridiculous to subject the players to those temperatures."

"We have had no problems. I haven't heard any complaints," responded TCU Athletic Director Frank Windegger, who said TCU students and fans favored the shift.

"I think we got caught in a very unique weather situation," said Texas A&M trainer Billy Pickard. "The hazard was certainly there, but one day like that is no reason to stop the 4 p.m. games."

"Every trainer lives in fear of conditions like that," said SMU trainer Cash Birdwell, whose Mustangs played a 4 p.m. game at TCU last week.

This weekend's forecasts calls for temperatures in the low 90s, but none of the sticky humidity that doctors say contributes heavily to hazardous game conditions.

"We'll certainly welcome that weather," observed Texas Tech team physician Dr. Wallace Hess, who said he felt "fortunate" that no players collapsed last week.

Two SWC players collapsed and later died during workouts on Sept. 1, 1962. SMU's Mike Kelsey died in a hospital 20 hours later and Texas guard Reggie Grob died several days later.

With temperatures at 112 degrees on the field in Fort Worth last Saturday, two SMU players lost more than 20 pounds each in the first half their game with TCU. "One was so bad, we had to carry him off the field. He couldn't walk because he had such serious cramps" Birdwell said.

"At halftime, we had all of our starters strip down and packed them in ice towels," added Birdwell. The Mustangs went through 60 gallons of liquids, 12 cases of soft drinks and 600 pounds of ice during the game.

At halftime of the Baylor-Texas Tech game, trainers had to pack Red Raider star quarterback Rodney Allison in ice like a frozen shrimp. "It was the hottest day I've ever been on a football field," said Allison. "I felt light-headed all the time."

Texas Tech Coach Steve Sloan sweltered in the 113-degree heat and humidity at 54 per cent and said he was barely able to climb the dressing room steps at halftime. "The only thing that kept me going was thinking how bad it would look if the head coach collapsed," he said.

The temperature was 96 at Texas, but a slight breeze made things more bearable. It was 90 degrees with a high level of humidity in College Station.

Eight fans sought aid at Baylor Stadium for heat exhaustion and three were affected by the heat at TCU. None were serious.

"I can't remember any game hotter that this. It was like a blast furnace," said Texas A&M Coach Emory Bellard, who began the 4 p.m. early season games in 1974.

Applin paces Bullpup win

MONAHANS — Billy Applin ran wild Thursday night in pacing the Midland High Bullpups to an easy 42-8 victory over the Monahans junior varsity in football action.

All Applin did was to score four touchdowns as the Pups were chalking up their second victory of the season in two starts.

Applin scored Midland's first TD by taking a 45-yard pass from quarterback Tommy Sommers. John Schwartz booted the first of six consecutive extra points for a 7-0 lead.

Sommers hit Applin again in the second period with a 50-yard scoring bomb and Applin returned a punt 50 yards for another score.

Applin skipped 40 yards for another TD late in the second period as Midland led at intermission, 28-0.

Charles Barron got into the act for Coach Stan Moore's outfit in the third and fourth periods with TD runs of 20 and and 10 yards.

Applin now has scored seven touchdowns in the first two games and rushed for more than 400 yards.

Midland's next game is Thursday when it faces the Robert E. Lee Stonewall Brigade in Memorial Stadium at 7 p.m. for the second time this season.

Three cagers quit

HOUSTON (AP) — Two basketball players have quit the University of Houston team and another has left the Rice University club.

Allen Winder, a 6-10 junior from Arlington, has quit the UH team and enrolled at Texas-Arlington. Jeff Kelley, a 6-6 sophomore from Houston Waltrip, has left the UH team and transfered to Southwest Texas State.

Sophomore Frank Thomas, Rice's second best scorer, has been forced to withdraw from Rice and transfer to Butler University because of his father's illness.

Thomas' home is Fort Wayne, Ind., only a short distance from Butler.

Bulldogs, Plainsmen seek end to hunger pains

By BOB DILLON
R-T Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — Midland High and Lubbock Monterey are hungry football teams.

The Bulldogs and Plainsmen tangle at 7:30 p.m. today in a non-district battle at Lowrey Field.

Coach Jerry Hopkins' Purple Pack takes a 0-1-1 record into tonight's game while Monterey is 1-0-1 after both started slowly in the first two games.

Midland opened the 1977 campaign with a 14-7 loss to Amarillo Tascosa and then tied El Paso Eastwood, 7-7 last week. Monterey, meanwhile beat Class AAA Canyon, 7-0, and battled Wichita Falls Rider to a 13-13 deadlock last week on this same Lowrey Field turf.

"WE HAVE got to play better, especially with Odessa Permian our first District 5-4A opponent in two weeks," said Hopkins. Hopkins feels like his outfit can play with Monterey. "We should have beaten them (Monterey) last year and lost at home, 17-13."

Monterey has even more size than Midland, but both have had trouble getting on the scoreboard to date. The Plainsmen went all the way to the Class AAAA semifinals last year before bowing to state runnerup, Temple.

Midland will start Doug Atnipp at quarterback with Walter Bryson and Alvin Price at the halfback slots. Brently Jackson moves back to the fullback slot that was filled last week by Robert Montgomery.

David Isby and Brian Booker will be at the ends with Billy Walker and Paul Boruff manning the offensive tackle spots. Ricky Goode, who suffered a leg injury in El Paso, will be over the ball at center and at nose guard on defense. The 230-pound senior will be welcomed, especially with the overall size the Plainsmen own.

ON DEFENSE, Bryson will move into a halfback position in the place of Jimmy Zachry while Frank Driskill, a 215-pound senior, will take over Boruff's spot on the defensive unit.

Greg Coldeway and Bryon Hixon will be at defensive ends with Walker and Driskill at the tackles. Linebackers are Collins and Booker with Isby at the safety spot.

Monterey is led by quarterback Ron Reeves, a 210-pound senior who does it all out of the Slot I formation. Reeves has rushed for 175 yards in 35 carries in the first two games while fullback Robby McDaniels, a 185-pounder, has gained just 33 yards in seven carries.

Eric Voyles is the top Plainsmen pass catcher with four receptions for 88 yards and one TD.

Bryson sparks Midland's Wing-T attack with 126 yards in 23 carries followed by Price who has 78 yards in 18 cracks into the line.

MONTEREY'S LINE is led by Scott Alford and Bo Taylor who weigh 240 and 230, repsectively. George Morris is another 240-pounder for Monterey while Ivan Jones (210) and Mike Caffey (205) give Monterey that much more size.

Midland needs a win badly in order to have some sort of momentum going into the Permian game in Midland's Memorial Stadium in two weeks.

Americans grab Ryder Cup lead

BLACKPOOL, England (AP) — "You've got to putt like crazy. Playing well just isn't enough."

That comment came from Neil Coles, veteran of eight British Ryder Cup squads since 1961, after he had lost to Dave Stockton on the opening day of the 1977 Ryder Cup clash over Lytham St. Anne's 6,822-yard, par-71 course.

The Americans finished Thursday's five foursomes with a 3½-1½ lead, and Dow Finsterwald, the U.S. nonplaying captain, explained, "The difference was a putt here, a putt there."

Stockton's magic putter sank five shots from outside 20 feet during the match in which he partnered Jerry McGee against Coles and Peter Dawson. The crunch came on the 16th and 17th holes, when Stockton sank first from 30 feet and then from 40.

The British pair had turned in a four-under-par 31 and were two up on the 15th when Stockton struck. Demoralized, the British pair got into trouble on the 18th and dropped the match one down.

Stockton wasn't the only American with a strong putting performance. Both Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson—"Those two men from outer space," as British Captain Brian Huggett called them—sank 35-footers in beating Tommy Horton and Mark James, 5 and 4.

The only British victory was by Peter Oosterhuis and Nick Faldo. They came from three down to beat Ray Floyd and Lou Graham, 2 and 1.

But American putting that brought success in the other matches.

Lanny Wadkins and Hale Irwin were one down with five to go against Bernard Gallacher and Brian Barnes, but won four holes in a row for a 3 and 1 victory; Stockton and McGee won the last three holes against Coles and Dawson, rallying from two down and winning 1up, while in the halved match between Tony Jacklin and Eamonn Darcy and Ed Sneed and Don January, the Americans were two down on the 14th but managed to win a couple of holes, squaring the match.

"So many matches could have gone either way," said Finsterwald. "I can't tell you how excited I was watching matches closer than the score indicated."

Huggett said, "I feel we should have been only one point behind, not three. The one everyone expected us to lose, of course, was the one against Nicklaus and Watson. But the others could have gone our way and would have if we'd had the luck."

Finsterwald has split the Nicklaus-Watson partnership for matches Friday and paired Watson with Hubert Green, who didn't have a foursome match Thursday.

Watson and Green play Barnes and Horton. The other pairings are: Sneed and Wadkins against Coles and Dawson, Nicklaus and Floyd against Oosterhuis and Faldo, Dave Hill and Stockton against Jacklin and Darcy, and Irwi and Graham against James and Ken Brown.

Young Plainview challenges Lee Rebels tonight

By PAUL DOMOWITCH

Plainview football coach George Kirk emphatically denied the report that he spent the entire first week of pre-season practice potty-training his players and teaching them how to say "dada."

"Of course I didn't," he answered. "We got that stuff out of the way in the spring. I taught them how to walk in the first week of pre-season."

Kirk is kidding of course, but his Bulldog team is young. Very young. They may not be part of the Pamper set any longer, but most of them can stay away from the razor for a little while at least.

THERE ARE just 14 seniors on the team's varsity roster, which includes 11 sophomores. The Bulldog offense alone is a walking ad for youth movements. Quarterback Jamie MacCallister is the only starting senior, and he will be surrounded by seven juniors and three sophomores in the huddle tonight when they take on Lee at Memorial Stadium.

Plainview opened the season three weeks ago with a 15-6 win over Lubbock Estacado, but were manhandled last Friday by Amarillo Tascosa, 34-6.

"We played like a typically young team plays," admitted Kirk. "We're right in the middle of a tremendous rebuilding program, and you've gotta expect to get blown out once in a while."

PLAINVIEW'S OFFENSE has only netted 308 yards in their first two games, and even though Kirk is not expecting miracles, he expected better than that.

"We have not been able to throw the ball as well as I thought we would," he said disappointedly. "I was hoping we would have a pretty balanced attack, but our passing game has been almost non-existent."

He admitted that his quarterback is not completely to blame. "It's kind of tough to hit receivers when you don't have hardly any time to throw the ball."

KIRK ISN'T fooling himself. Ask him about his team's strengths, and he'll answer frankly: "What strengths?" He does have several fine individuals, including fleet-footed 157-pound halfback Billy Williams who can break the big one at any time, but he's smart enough to realize that Rome — or a good football team — wasn't built in a day.

He is also smart enough to realize that there is nothing to be gained from boastful talk, so Kirk uses reverse psychology. If the Bulldog boss had his way, Lee would be applying for admission into the National Football League instead of playing his "babies" tonight.

"I saw Lee play last week against El Paso Austin and they're just big, strong and quick. It could be murder out there against them tonight," he said.

"Our only game plan will be to run wide on them and get up very slow, and eat up as much of the clock as possible."

Lee's inexperienced offensive line has been one of the major concerns of Coach Jim Acree in the early going, but Kirk was awed by them as well.

"The line was impressive against Austin," he added. "They came off the ball quick, and they showed plenty of aggressiveness."

REBEL RAMBLINGS: Fullback Jeff McCowan led Lee in rushing Friday, with 74 yards in 12 carries. Halfback Marvin Iglehart had 62 in 12 totes. . . Lee has won the last five games against Plainview. . . Plainview's Irvin Davis, a talented sophomore who was expected to be a starter this year, had an emergency apendectomy nearly three weeks ago, and has missed the Bulldogs' first two games.

Nebraska pride on line Saturday

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Unranked in national collegiate football for the first time in years, Nebraska pits pride against the Tide in what some fans view as a grudge match between the Cornhuskers and No. 4 Alabama.

Coach Bear Bryant invades Lincoln with his Southeastern Conference Crimson Tide Saturday, trying to beat Nebraska in a nationally-televised non-conference game.

Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne called Bryant a "son of a buck" when the Huskers' coach felt the Alabama mentor was ducking a match by tabbing Penn State instead of Nebraska for the Sugar Bowl a couple of years ago.

"Actually, I didn't pay any more attention to what Tom said then I would have if he had said I was a sweet old man," Bryant said.

BRYANT SAID Nebraska and Oklahoma were in the running for an Orange Bowl bid at the time and could have recommended Alabama. He recommended Penn State for the Sugar Bowl. "It was a great game, and actually I think Penn State was as good as either of them," Bryant said..

Grudge match or not, Bryant would rather face a ranked team than a rankled Nebraska team that is coming off a loss.

"I'd lots rather that they had won," he said, talking of the Huskers' shocking 19-10 defeat by Washington State which knocked Nebraska from its preseason No. 15 rating.

"I've got to feel that their players were looking ahead to playing us on TV," he said. "We have a lot of respect for the Nebraska team, the coaching staff and particularly Tom Osborne."

OSBORNE, PERHAPS, would trade in some of that respect for a healthy and experienced quarterback. Randy Garcia and Tom Sorley, his top two, are working to recover from injuries in time for Alabama.

If they can't, Osborne is eyeing a sophomore without college varsity game experience.

"If they can't play, we'll probably go with Jeff Quinn," Osborne said. "Quinn's a good runner and a good leader. He doesn't always look that good out there, but he tends to do a better job than it might appear."

Bryant also has an injured quarterback, Jack O'Rear, but Jeff Rutledge is experienced and showed it in the Tide's 34-13 victory over Mississippi.

Both squads have bruising runners in Nebraska's Rick Berns, 153 yards against Washington State, and Alabama's Johnny Davis, 90 yards against Ole Miss.

ELSEWHERE IN the Top Ten Saturday, No. 1 Michigan entertains Duke, second-ranked Southern California is at Oregon State, No. 3 Notre Dame visits Mississippi, fifth-rated Oklahoma hosts Utah, No. 6 Ohio State is at home against Minnesota, No. 7 Texas A&M will be at Virginia Tech, eighthranked Texas Tech will be at home for New Mexico in a night game and No. 9 Houston plays at No. 10 Penn State.

In games involving other Top Twenty teams, No. 11 Maryland is at West Virginia, 12th-ranked Colorado entertains Kent State, No. 14 UCLA hosts Kansas, 15th-ranked Oklahoma State journeys to Little Rock for a night contest with Arkansas, No. 16 Pittsburgh has William and Mary at home, Clemson visits No. 17 Georgia, 18th-rated Texas opposes Virginia in Austin and No. 19 Florida plays at Rice.

No. 13 Mississippi State and No. 20 Brigham Young have the week off.

Michigan, which took over the top spot with a 37-9 victory over Illinois last week, will face a Duke team that bowed to East Carolina 17-16 in its opener. Blue Devils' quarterback Mike Dunn worries Wolverines' Coach Bo Schembechler.

"THE GUY is an exceptional athlete," Schembechler said. "He hurts you running and passing. He's the key to their offense."

Michigan is favored in the game by nearly six touchdowns.

Former Southern California quarterback Craig Fertig, now the head coach at Oregon State, hopes to upset his alma mater. The Beavers opened their season with a 24-12 victory over Syracuse last week while Southern Cal defeated Missouri.

Notre Dame tries to get its offense untracked against Mississippi after a less-than-spectacular opening-game triumph over Pittsburgh. Oklahoma, which was rated No. 1 in The Associated Press' preseason poll, had a tough time with unheralded Vanderbilt last week and must right itself against Utah before an encounter with Ohio State next week.

EPA to no longer fund, approve testing of carcinogens on humans

Newsday

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency will no longer fund or approve tests of known cancer-causing agents on humans.

A new EPA policy order containing this provision is about to be published, according to Gary Dietrich, director of management operations in EPA's office of water and hazardous materials.

Although still in draft form, Dietrich said, the new policy already is firm on one point: "If we know that it is a carcinogen or has an irreversible effect, we are not going to test it on humans."

However, the agency may still approve tests on humans if the substance's link to cancer is suspected by unprove. In such cases approval must first be obtained from the EPA administrator.

EPA's action marks the first time any federal agency has made a flat policy statement against testing carcinogens on humans.

"I think it's about time," said Anita Johnson, a staff member of the Public Citizens Health Research Group here. "Maybe this is a case where the worst sinners are the first to repent."

The agency's new policy is the result of Newsday disclosures on May 11 showing that senior EPA officials almost succeeded two years ago in funding a plan to feed massive doses of a known cancer-causing fungicide to Mexican citizens to test its effect on the human thyroid.

With the new standards, that test could not be proposed. EPA officials also said that a controversial pesticide research project involving human fetuses would not have been undertaken.

After the disclosures in Newsday Sens. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) and Adlai E. Stevenson (D-Ill.) asked the agency for a full report on the Mexican proposal, and for an official statement on what the agency intended to do to prevent such incidents in the future.

The new EPA order provides the following safeguards:

—All regulations for the protection of human subjects issued by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare will be strictly followed by the EPA. Those regulations require the informed consent of those involved in the tests, as well as independent monitoring of the tests.

—All proposed human testing studies must first be reviewed and approved by EPA's deputy assistant administrator for health and ecological effects. In the past certain divisions of EPA were able to ignore this office and fund projects on their own.

Newsday reported recently, for example, that a division within EPA disregarded advice from the office that guages health and ecological effects and funded a controversial pesticide research project on human fetuses. The official in charge of health and ecological effects said he would not have approved the project if he had been permitted to review it.

—No known carcinogen will be tested on humans, and any proposed test that would involve a suspected carcinogen would have to be personally approved by the top official at EPA, Douglas M. Costle.

Dietrich, who drafted the new EPA policy, said, "It's difficult to put these things in writing, because the question arises, 'At what point in time is our knowledge firm enough to say a chemical is definitely a carcinogen?' That's why (in questionable cases) we want the more stringent rule that it has to go all the way up to the administrator for approval."

Michael Yosley, staff director for the National Commission for the Protection of Human Subjects in Medical Research, said that no other federal agency besides EPA has committed itself to ban testing carcinogens on humans.

Famous Washington pipe shop to end era with closing of doors

By MICHAEL KERNAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Bertram's Pipe Shope in downtown Washington is closing at the end of this week, and you could say an era will go with it.

Bertram's made Franklin Roosevelt's celebrated cigarette holders for him out of goose quills.

Bertram's sold Winston Churchill his huge Havana Romeo y Julieta cigars during his visits to this country.

Bertram's supplied Josef Stalin with pipe tobacco — their Capitol blend — via the Soviet embassy.

The last pipes and cans of tobacco are going at half-price this week. The pipe-making machines upstairs already have been sold to a New England firm. The big walk-in humidor stands empty.

Mae Goldman, who has owned the store since her husband, Sidney Bertram Goldman, died in 1960, said the pipemaking energy just ran out. Her son, who lives in California, isn't interested in keeping up a business which started with his great-grandfather in Germany. She has sold the building.

There has been a Bertram's in Washington since the turn of the century, and before that in Baltimore. It was Sidney who built the present shop for $100,000 in 1946, moving his father's business up the street a few doors. A $4,500 carved glass frieze of a hunting scene adorns the front, though it is barely visible now.

Sidney attracted attention with his policy of hiring 49 disabled veterans from the day the shop opened in 1947. He served in the Marines in World War II and loaned his yacht to the government for the duration.

At any one time there would be 10,000 pipes on hand. People ordered them from all over the world, and the wall behind the counter is plastered with old letters from the famous and the delighted. General MacArthur bought his corncob pipes there. General Patton was a customer, and Edward G. Robinson, and bandleaders Shep Fields and Wayne King. Red Skelton was a regular, even though he didn't smoke a pipe but simply collected them.

There was something about a Bertram pipe. Made from blond Algerian Briar, it was never stained or varnished, so that it had a flat, understated look. Over the years, it would darken to a rich mahogany color.

They tell of the man who was accosted by a stranger in Hong Kong and asked, "Is that by chance a Bertram's pipe you're smoking?" It was. The same thing has been happening to Washingtonians in airports for decades.

Pan Am draws ire of official

By WILLIAM H. JONES
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "I'm inclined to tell Pan Am (Pan American World Airways) to go to hell," said Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman Alfred E. Kahn.

What attracted the chairman's ire about the large international airline was Pan Am's action in selling about 1,600 discount tickets for flights across the Atlantic, which started Thursday, without government approval.

Pan Am had proposed to the CAB a new budget fare of $256 roundtrip, to take effect Thursday. It began advertising the fares a few weeks ago, with a footnote telling consumers that the prices were subject to government approval.

Last Friday, that approval was denied and Pan Am, somewhat anxious about passengers expected to show up for flights starting this week (and unable to pay the normal $626 fare) appealed to the CAB for a special wavier. That waiver was denied Tuesday.

But about 60 persons have been told to show up in London Thursday for flights from London to New York at the budget rate. Another 230 people have such tickets for flights across the Atlantic on Friday. Nearly all the tickets sold were to residents of the New York area. The airline will have difficulty contacting the customers before their arrival at airports, a Pan Am spokesman said.

The CAB met in "emergency" session Wednesday to consider yet another appeal for a waiver from Pan Am, but failed to reach a solution. A further meeting is planned Thursday morning.

Complicating the issue, according to a CAB spokesman, is the fact that the agency notified both Pan Am and Trans World Airlines several weeks ago that since approval for budget fares had not been given, the earliest date at which reservations should be made was Sept. 26. That's the first date Britain has said it would allow cut-rate North Atlantic fares.

TWA complied with the CAB suggestion and did not make any reservations until after Sept. 25, but, according to the CAB spokesman, "Pan Am refused."

At Wednesday's meeting, the CAB staff recommended that the request for waiver be denied on the grounds that it would set a bad precedent. Kahn saw Pan Am's appeal as an attempt at an "end run" around the CAB regulation and said the airline should solve a problem it had created.

But board member Elizabeth Bailey, while sympathetic to Kahn's suggestion, said that since a new era of expanded budget service across the North Atlantic is about to begin, no action should be approved that would inconvenience consumers.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cautious X-raying usually worth it

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been having a lot of trouble with my lower back this past week, and my doctor says he may have to X-ray it. But he isn't going to do it until right after I've had my period, because he wants to be absolutely sure I'm not pregnant. I told him there is no way I could be, because I've been on the Pill for ages. But he says I may have forgotten to take it one day and that anyway this is his rule. He is adamant. Isn't he being just a bit cranky?—Allison E.

Dear Allison: No, he really isn't, and in my opinion, it would be good if all doctors follow his rule. Unless there is an actual emergency, experts caution against X-rays of the abdominal area of a woman in her childbearing years if there is the slightest chance that she might be pregnant. The reason for this is that the fetus is very vulnerable to radiation during the first three months of pregnancy, especially during the first six weeks. An X-ray could affect the development of the brain and other parts of the central nervous system—and also cause mutations that could be passed on to future generation.

One radiation expert, Dr. Mary Esther Gaulden of the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School, warned recently that too many were receiving X-rays that could—and should—be postponed. Dr. Gaulden said that five per cent of 2,000 women whose X-rays were delayed at Parkland Hospital in Dallas turned out to be pregnant. That means that 100 unborn babies were spared possibly serious damage, thanks to Parkland's very careful screening program.

Dr. Gaulden points out that, while gross abnormalities are not likely to be caused in the child by diagnostic X-rays, there may be serious but less obvious effects. For instance, a condition known as genetic mosaicism may be brought about. This means that a certain percentage of the cells are abnormal—they might perhaps have the extra chromosome of mongolism—while the rest of the cells are normal. In practically all of the first group, there is a decreased mental capacity, according to Dr. Gaulden.

I am happy that you have a doctor who is so extremely careful about this matter, and I hope you now are, too.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I enjoy your column and the scientific and compassionate approach you have to the medical problems of your readers.

Recently, you said that men are more overweight than women. The Journal of the A.M.A. of September 27, 1976 says that obesity is probably twice as common in women as in men.—Philip Liebman

Dear Mr. Liebman: I reported a recent medical study which said that in the United States, there are more men who were obese than women but that more women were treated for obesity than men. Come to think of it, my own observation is that there are probably more women who are obese than men. Thanks for your comments.

Society may induce mental illness

By CLIFF SMITH
Copley News Service

The American culture can be greatly improved if its members find a way to get dramatized violence out of television programming.

This is one of the central convictions of Dr. Roderic Gorney, a UCLA psychiatrist who has spent 17 years developing what he believes are potential solutions to what ails the United States most.

Gorney, who detailed his conclusions in a book entitled "The Human Agenda," reiterated his views in an interview.

Gorney's analysis of our culture and his proposed solutions are not simple, but thoughtful people will find many of his ideas at least provocative.

In 1960, Gorney recalled, he became concerned about "the cascade of pathology," that he and his colleagues seemingly were unable to keep up with and, thinking about the problem, was seized by an idea.

His concept was that different cultures shape humans in different ways and that by modifying our culture it might be possible to improve the lives of its individuals.

"In some societies, such as our own," he explained, "we find intense assertiveness, striving anbition and competitive aggressiveness and with that a lot of achievement, aggression and mental illness.

"In other cultures, we find a lack of striving, a quiet acceptance of the facts of life without a feeling that one has to work very hard to change them. And, in those cultures you find a low level of achievement, low aggression and low mental illness.

"So, I began to wonder what factors control the levels of achievement, aggression and mental illness and made some hypotheses."

One important factor, Gorney decided, was that "interpersonal intensity" increases in close association with high competitiveness, high cultural achievement and high aggressiveness and mental illness.

In contrast, low tension and low achievement cultures, such as those of some parts of the South Pacific, actively suppressed interpersonal intensity.

The traditionally reared Tahitian child, for instance, is taught to avoid making exclusive attachments to persons or things, is encouraged to be casual and is warned not to become too involved or passionate about anyone or anything. Feelings of loneliness or deprivation are regarded as illness.

Gorney also observed that high cultural levels of aggression and mental illness seemed to go along with low levels of "social synergy," a term coined by anthropologist Ruth Benedict.

"Social synergy means the kinds of social arrangements in which an individual can satisfy both his own needs and those of the group simultaneously by the same act," Gorney explained.

Gorney eventually wound up with a sort of master hypothesis that said:

"The level of interpersonal intensity, competition and social synergy determine the level of achievement, aggression and mental illness. With high social synergy, you will have high achievement and low mental illness and aggression."

Enlisting the aid of several social scientists, Gorney tested this idea against 58 cultures, and found the hypothesis substantiated except for two errors:

"We found, first, that it is not necessarily so that interpersonal intensity and competition are closely related to achievement level. Apparently one can keep high achievement while reducing interpersonal intensity and competition.

"The other place I was wrong, we found, is that in the presence of low social synergy and high competition, high intensity (interpersonal intensity) is associated with less aggression than low intensity."

From that point, Gorney said, he began to wonder if it would be possible to make interventions to cause cultural changes. Would it be possible, for example, to reduce aggression and mental illness by increasing social synergy?

"Maybe," he said. "And, I think it's worth trying."

One way, he suggested, would be to try to reduce competition.

"We say to our children when they get hit in school, 'Johnny, hit him back,'" Gorney noted. "In some other cultures, however, they say, instead: 'That child must not hit anybody.'

"I'll see to it that he doesn't. Don't you hit." The child who hits is exiled or ridiculed. Competitiveness is reduced."

Gorney also noted that competitiveness is so keen in American society that it seriously affects the world of child-play to the extent that if one loses at play it spoils his day.

"It is no accident, I think, that our recent national administration spoke in terms of football, having 'game plans' and everything was talked about in terms of winning and losing.

"Rarely was there talk about the possibility of organizing things so that everybody wins and nobody loses. But there are cultures that do it that way."

Booklet offers advice on Mongolism

By SHERYL FITZGERALD
Newsday

The chances of bearing a child with Down's syndrdome, or mongolism, increase greatly with the age of the mother. From one case in every 1,500 births involving women under 30, the odds of having a mongoloid child rise to one in every 65 for mothers over 45.

A booklet called "Facts About Mongolism for Women Over 35," by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, urges older women who are facing motherhood — particularly for the first time — to become familiar with the problem.

Mongolism is one of the most common forms of mental retardation. It is characterized by specific physical abnormalities — slanting eyes, slightly protruding lips and short hands, feet and trunk.

Those defects are caused by the presence in the victim's genetic makeup of an "extra" chromosome. The event that results in the extra chromosome usually occurs during fertilization. Through a process called karyotyping, however, it is possible to analyze the chromosomes of prospective parents ahead of fertilization for signs of the abnormalities that can produce the defect. During pregnancy, doctors can perform another procedure — amniocentesis — in which fluid is drawn from the amniotic sac, the matter that nourishes the unborn child, for analysis.

It is believed by some scientists that the reason for increased risk as the mother grows older arises from the fact that when a woman is born, her body already contains all the eggs for a lifetime of child-bearing. As the woman grows older, so do the eggs.

The scientists believe that just as people pass their prime, so may egg cells. Also, the longer the egg is in the ovary, some scientists feel, the more likely it is to have been exposed to chemicals, radiation and other environmental factors that can cause genetic damage.

Doctors add, however, that parents of mongoloid children should be reassured that nothing which they themselves have done during conception and pregnancy has caused the disorder to occur. They say that the best rules for avoiding Down's syndrome are:

—Take care of your own health.

—Use family planning — that is, use birth control methods so that you will have only those children that you want, when you want them. Spacing children increases the chances that they will be healthy.

—Consult your physician, a gynecologist or a center for genetic counseling if you are over 35, if you already have one child with mongolism, if children with genetic defects have been born in either parent's family, if there has been difficulty in becoming pregnant, or if the woman has suffered several miscarriages.

A genetic counselor will give you the information you need to evaluate the risk that you may be taking in having a child. But the presence of risk, the booklet adds, should in no way be interpreted as advice not to reproduce. Many parents of children with Down's syndrome have found parenthood rewarding despite its difficulties.

The most serious problem faced by children with Down's syndrome is mental retardation. Such children are slow in learning to turn over, sit up, crawl, walk and speak. They almost never have even near-normal intelligence. Their IQs range from 30 to 50, but occasionally may reach as high as 70. (The normal IQ range is from 90 to 110.)

Studies by some scientists have shown that children with Down's syndrome who are institutionalized have lower IQs than those who remain under family care. It is believed that at home, a child may get more stimulation and attention. But the booklet adds that there are times, nevertheless, when institutionalization is better for the interests of both child and family.

Another problem faced by such children is a tendency toward heart defects and lower resistance to colds and other respiratory ailments. With antibiotics and advances in heart surgery, however, the life expectancy of Down's syndrome children has greatly increased.

Economists still nervous over economy's strength

By ART PINE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Growing uncertainty over the strength of the current recovery is beginning to make some economists edgy about the outlook for 1978.

While no one is predicting an outright recession, some analysts, both within and outside the Carter administration, see greater-than expected sluggishness ahead during the latter part of next year.

Increasingly, economists are beginning to harbor doubts about whether the administration will be able to meet its goal of keeping output growing at a 5 per cent rate — the pace needed to make any serious inroads against unemployment.

"We shaved our '78 forecast the last time we revised it, and we'll probably do it again this time," said Otto Eckstein. Eckstein, a former Johnson administration economic adviser, now heads Data Resources, Inc., a forecasting firm.

Eckstein's most recent forecast called for a likely growth rate of 4.9 per cent for 1978, down several tenths of a percentage-point from his previous prediction. This time, he estimates, that could drop to just over 4.5 per cent. Some other forecasters' figures are lower.

The gloomier mood is worrying the Carter administration. If the economy does slow to below a 5 per cent pace in the second half of next year, analysts say it coule mean the unemployment rate would stop declining, and could even edge up again.

The administration's present position is that the pessimism is unwarranted, and is merely worrying businessmen and consumers unnecessarily. Charles L. Schultze, President Carter's chief economist, stressed in a speech Tuesday that the recovery still is strong.

However, Schultze added quickly that if the economy does begin to lag, further measures may be needed. And some lower-level administration economists already have begun to urge that the White House make contingency plans in case of a prolonged lull.

Walter W. Heller, economic adviser to the late President Kennedy, says flatly a $15 billion tax cut will be needed to keep the recovery on its course. He also urged in an interview that the Federal Reserve Board ease its money and credit policy to aid the recovery.

The increasing nervousness represents a visible shift from the mood only a few weeks ago, when economists generally were more confident about the outlook in late 1978.

The short-term forecast then was for a brief "mini-pause" this quarter, as the economy made its transition from the frenetic — and unsustainable — pace of the first part of the year. Then, the growth rate was supposed to bounce back and remain strong in 1978.

The consensus now, however, calls for even more sluggishness during the current quarter, with the growth rate most likely slowing to a 3 per cent to 4 per cent pace, rebounding to between 4 per cent and 5.5 per cent in the final three months of the year.

But economists seem divided over what will happen in 1978. While most forecasts show the first quarter hewing to a 5 per cent rate, some point to a visible tapering-off in the quarters that follow.

"The forecasts now are all over the lot," said a government analyst who has been keeping track of the predictions. Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, agreed. "It's a very mixed picture," she said.

At least part of the new edginess stems from the latest Commerce Department survey on business investment intentions — the most recent indication of likely performance in this key sector of the economy.

The report, which showed investment likely to grow by a moderate 8.1 per cent (after adjustment for inflaiton), had been looked to as a benchmark for 1978 forecasts.

The problem is, it wound up neither eliminating nor confirming the doubts. While the growth rate and pattern of the expected investment was enough to rule out much serious deterioration of the economic situation, analysts saw little to suggest any further pickup.

Moreover, other recent economic statistics have been decidedly discouraging. The August unemployment figures showed an unexpected jump back to 7.1 per cent of the work force; inventories accumulation has been falling off, and consumer spending has been ebbing somewhat.

"The fact is that the past couple of months have shown some very soggy economic statistics," said Arthur M. Okun, former Johnson administration economic adviser. "After that kind of performance, any reasonable man has to feel somewhat less confident about the 5 per cent growth target."

Schultze conceded in his speech that the pace of the economy has been "a disappointment." But he and other forecasters assert that the underlying position of the recovery still is solid. The only question is on that small — and crucial — difference for 1978.

Officials say the question of more stimulus could be addressed, indirectly, as early as this week, when a mid-level administration task force is expected to conduct another routine review of the economy.

Schultze and others still insist that no additional stimulus is needed. Administration economists point out that the economy will receive a sizable spur soon from the President's jobs and public works program, parts of which are scheduled to take effect in October.

Separate vacations can be stimulating

By CHARLIE SHEDD

Do you believe in separate vacation?

Here comes a letter from a New York mother. She's entering her husband in our ONE NEAT DAD contest. Reason? He suggested separate vacations this year.

Her story:

"Dear Dr. Shedd: One of your recent columns was about a woman who said vacations were gross, because her husband drove like mad, complained constantly about other drivers, about the waitresses, and about the stupid people who run resorts.

Well, this is another idea about vacations. My husband and our son love to fish. They also go for backpacking, canoeing and things like that. The girls and I tried it for the last three years, but most of the time we were miserable.

So this year at Easter my husband proposed the possibility that the girls and I go to New York City for sightseeing, plays, museums, shopping, and the things we like. He and David would go to a lake up in Canada for two weeks.

At first I was appalled that he would even bring it up. So I figured that out. And do you know what I came up with? My mother wouldn't have trusted my father in a thing like that for two weeks. But my husband has never given me any reason to question him. Why should I think like my mother?

To make a long story short, in the first two weeks of July, we went our separate ways, and it was absolutely great. I will tell you something else. I think all five of us have appreciated each other more now that we are back together.

Do you suppose that among your readers there is some family stuck on doing things the same old way? If so, I thought they should know that for one family a new vacation idea which seemed strange at first turned out really great.

More mental health care reported needed

By JURATE KAZICKAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Between 20 million and 32 million Americans need mental health care, a new report to the government says, but help is often unavailable because of inadequate community services, costs that are too high or the stigma of mental illness.

"The time has come for mental health care to become part of a broader effort to deal with human needs," concludes the preliminary report of the President's Commission on Mental Health, released today.

The report notes that 15 per cent of the population need some form of help, ranging from counseling to long-term care, not counting the six million who are mentally retarded.

At any one time, the report adds, about 25 per cent of the country is under enough emotional stress that a doctor might diagnose such people as suffering from depression or anxiety.

About 15 per cent of the school-age population needs help at a time, the commission found, while noting that people aged 65 and over have the highest incidence of mental health problems.

The report says minorities and the country's rural population have special problems. Social and economic conditions make these people vulnerable to psychological and emotional distress, the report said.

The commission said individuals who need attention include those who "suffer the effects of a variety of societal ills ... the alienation and fear, the depression and anger associated with unrelenting poverty and the institutionalized discrimination that occurs on the basis of race, sex, class, age and mental and physical handicaps."

First Lady Rosalynn Carter is the honorary chairman of the 20-member commission which is making 14 specific recommendations to President Carter.

The recommendations, according to a commission spokesman, would require no new legislation, virtually no additional funds and could be implemented by executive action.

The commission requested more aid for group care facilities through programs in the Department of Housing and Urban Development plus sizable increases in budgets.
