Airplane crash kills 258 servicemen, crew

GANDER, Newfoundland (AP) — A DC-8 charter carrying 258 U.S. servicemen and crew from the Middle East home for Christmas crashed in flames today on takeoff at Gander International Airport, killing all aboard, officials and witnesses said.

Maj. Kenneth Miller of Canadian Search and Rescue reported in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from Halifax, Nova Scotia, that 250 passengers and eight crewmembers were killed in the crash.

The plane was carrying members of the 101st Airborne assigned to the Sinai peacekeeping force back to Fort Campbell, Ky., where the unit is headquartered, the Pentagon said.

The Pentagon said there were more than 250 military personnel aboard, but no dependents, from the division, which had been on peacekeeping duty since July.

Miller also told Canadian Press, "All we know is that there were no survivors." He said his information came from the Gander control center.

CBC radio said its radio correspondent at the scene, Ed Pike, quoted witnesses as saying the plane exploded, lighting up the sky.

"We were driving to work ... when we saw this big explosion ... and it died down very quickly. In a matter of seconds, it was gone," said Ann Hurley, a nearby resident.

A Pentagon source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he knew of no explosion. "We have no reason to suspect sabotage. We know only that this plane crashed and burned. The matter is being investigated by civilian authorites."

The airport was overcast with light snow and light winds at the time of the crash, according to the aviation weather report. There had been light, freezing drizzle a few hours earlier.

David Bridges, spokesman for the Rome-based Multinational Force and Observers, said the plane had flown from Cairo to Cologne, West Germany, where it refueled, to Gander for a second refueling.

Two hundred and fifty servicemen and eight crew members were killed when a DC-8 crashed on takeoff from Gander International Airport in Gander, Newfoundland.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Vedder Steed in Atlanta, Ga., said the plane belonged to Arrow Air, a Miami-based charter firm.

Defeat of tax bill greeted with enthusiasm in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

President Reagan, surprised and embarrassed by a shellacking administered by House Republicans who sent a proposed tax reform package back to the Rules Committee for debate Wednesday, has launched a last-minute search for votes that could prevent almost-certain defeat of his plan for overhauling the federal income tax.

In the Permian Basin, however, the news was greeted with enthusiasm.

"I did a little dance, when I heard the news last night," said Wilton J. Brown, a San Angelo geologist and area vice president for Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA).

"It was like an early Christmas present," said petroleum engineer Roy Williamson at a Christmas party Wednesday night.

"It was something we had all been hoping and working for," said Charles Perry, Odessa, who had been working on defeat of the bill for almost a year. "I don't think it will be back out of Rules this year."

A luncheon meeting in Washington where members of the Texas delegation were meeting with members of the Texas oil industry erupted into a joyous celebration, when Democratic Congressman Jim Wright announced to the gathering that they had won.

WE'RE DELIGHTED to hear that the bill may be dead," said Ed Thompson, staff member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA). "This is great news for the Permian Basin oil industry. Now maybe we can get on with the job of finding and producing oil without this thing hanging over our head. This is not as good as an out-and-out defeat of the bill, but it is the next best thing."

Thompson said he was almost certain tax reform was a dead issue for the remainder of the year and perhaps forever.

Rep. Bill Archer, a Republican member of the House Ways and Means Committee, also expressed cautious optimism that the Democratic version of tax reform was dead forever.

House Democratic leaders were deciding today whether to ask the House again to tackle the tax issue or to let it die, at least for the year. They made clear it would be up to Reagan to round up the necessary GOP votes.

"This is the president's bill to win or lose," said Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., Ways and Means Committee chairman and Reagan's chief ally on the issue.

Rostenkowski and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said the Reagan administration would have to deliver 40 to 50 Republican votes to keep the issue alive.

Administrator enthusiastic about Clearview's potential

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Like the parent of an unpredictable toddler, Phil Lundberg talked about Clearview's progress with a mixture of emotions.

Successful treatments and dismal failures, promising financial readings, disappointment, embarrassing ad campaigns and heroic efforts have marked the first few steps of the fledgling alcohol and drug treatment facility.

"We've had some heart-tugging success stories," he said. "They are people who have begun to get control of their life and are moving more aggressively toward a healthier lifestyle."

"And then there are those who have left early before the medical treatment is completed," he added. "That's expected, but when it happens, it still hurts. We know what the program can do for them and to see them give up hurts."

Lundberg, however, is generally enthusiastic about Clearview's potential.

"The family's involvement in the process is particularly exciting," he said. "I've been in centers where the patient's family did not want to get involved, but here they're very positive." The administrator stated that patients have a "graduation" ceremony upon completion of their treatment.

"To see the change that's occurred in both the patient and the family — well to call it a miracle is not stretching it. It's invigorating."

Congress OKs balanced-budget bill

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Senate and House Wednesday night approved dramatic landmark legislation that promises to balance the federal budget in 1991 by giving the president authority to made deep cuts in most federal spending.

In the Senate, the vote was 61 to 31 and in the House, 271 to 154.

President Reagan was expected to sign the budget measure immediately. It is tacked onto legislation raising the ceiling on the federal debt limit. Without the legislation, the government's borrowing authority was to expire at midnight.

Members voted on a conference committee's report that was approved Tuesday night by voice vote after weeks of tedious negotiations. Both chambers earlier approved separate but differing versions of the balanced-budget legislation.

Texas Republican Phil Gramm, in his first year as a senator, was guaranteed a place in the history books as the major architect of the plan, known as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, after the 43-year-old Texan and co-sponsors Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.

To arrive at a compromise that would pass both houses, sponsors backed down from their original plan to make across-the-board cuts in all programs, both domestic and military, and agreed to protect Social Security and some poverty programs.

Former councilman running for mayor

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Thomas

"Midland is at a turning point...and needs to revive its enthusiasm in itself" said Carroll Thomas this morning during a news conference to announce his candidacy for mayor in the 1986 city election.

Thomas, who served on the council from 1975 to 1983, cited his experience in municipal government, in business and in civic and professional activities as qualifying him for the job. His opposition to date is Councilman Steve Davidson. G. Thane Akins has announced he won't seek re-election to that post.

"We're looking at a leadership position," said Thomas, 47, who said he believes he has more experience to qualify him for the job. "I'm not running against anyone. I feel I have the most experience for the job."

The campaign won't be an ideological one between moderates and conservatives, he said, but "it will be a spirited race, a close one."

Thomas reportedly represents the conservative philosophy and Davidson the moderate.

In making his announcement, Thomas said his objectives include no increase in taxes, improvement of the streets through an overlay program, synchronization of traffic lights throughout the city and completion of the relocation of Midland Air Park.

He pointed out that during two of the years he served on the council, city property taxes dropped. "I'm very familiar with the tax and revenue situation. I instigated the $1 million reduction in the budget when we saw the shortfall in sales tax revenue. The city is in excellent finan-

Heavy snow unusual for this time of year

From Staff and Wire Reports

The two to four inches of snow predicted to blanket Midland by this afternoon is "unusually heavy" for this time of year, National Weather officials said.

Snow this early in the season is not unusual for the Permian Basin, but heavy snow accumulation is rare for this time of the year, said Ron Brown with the National Weather Service.

Traces of snow usually hit the area between mid November and early December, Brown said. Last season's first snow occurred on Dec. 4.

Today's predicted snow showers should end around 9 p.m., Brown said.

"It looks like it should taper off by this evening," he said.

Today's 60 percent chance of snow is predicted to decrease to a 30 percent chance by this evening. The low tonight will be near 18 degrees with north winds at 10 to 15 mph.

The cold weather is expected to continue through the weekend and into Monday, with below normal temperatures and scattered clouds. Snow showers may start up again on Monday, Brown said.

The chance for snow showers will decrease this weekend but, "It doesn't look like much of a break for this weekend as far as temperatures go," Brown said.

The snow expected in Midland is part of a cold front moving eastward across Texas. Snow could also spread to the eastern and central portions of the state today, Brown said.

Friday's high is expected to be in the mid-30s with winds northwest 5 to 15 m.p.h.

Wednesday's high was a chilly 29 degrees, while last night's low of 25 degrees was only a slight drop of four degrees below the day's warmest temperature.

The record high for today's date was 79 degrees set in 1939. The record low was 13 degrees set in 1966.

Grand jury indicts 44 people, McAllen bank in narcotics ring

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal grand jury indicted 44 people, a McAllen bank and two companies for their alleged roles in what authorities say is one of the country's largest narcotics and money laundering rings.

Two of the indicted are uncles of a man accused in the slaying of a federal drug agent last March, and authorities say the drug ring and the agent's killing may be related.

"This is probably one of the biggest narcotics-trafficking rings uncovered in this country," Henry Oncken, assistant U.S. attorney in Houston, said Wednesday. "If it's not the biggest one, it ain't far from it."

The indictments returned Monday in San Antonio and unsealed Wednesday resulted from a two-year probe spearheaded by the Houston-based federal Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force, created in 1983 to uncover major narcotics rings and break up drug money laundering schemes.

Twenty-six people were arrested in the case Wednesday, authorities said. The arrests included 21 people in South Texas, three from Houston, one in New Braunfels and one in Chicago.

The indictment was returned five days before U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese is scheduled to meet in San Antonio with Attorney General Sergio Garcia Ramirez of Mexico to discuss drug imports from Mexico and snags in the Mexican prosecution of the man charged with the murder of an American federal agent in Mexico.

Members of the alleged drug ring devised a scheme to make extensive use of about 40 banks in Texas, California, New York and the Cayman Islands, to launder millions of dollars in drug profits, according to the 109-page indictment.

The racketeering and drug trafficking conspiracy began in 1980 and involved the distribution of marijuana and methaqualone — a hypnotic sedative in Quaaludes — imported from Mexico.

Authorities say the ring imported more than a quarter-million pounds of marijuana into the United States, and the indictments cited one shipment that contained 100,000 methaqualone pills.

Profits from the ring were invested in real estate, airplanes, gold, houses, jewelry and a marijuana-processing plant, authorities said.

Federal officials already have seized more than $30 million in cash and other assets that allegedly were profits of the conspiracy, and Oncken said "the word we have is that there is some $60 million more than that still out there."

Drug Enforcement Administration Agent Enrique Camarena Salazar was tortured and murdered in March. Rafael Caro-Quintero has been indicted for the assassination and awaits prosecution in Mexico City.

The first two of 44 individuals named in the indictment, Juan Jose Quintero-Payan and Emilio Quintero-Payan, are uncles of the murder defendant, Oncken said.

Federal authorities say they believe the drug ring may somehow be connected with Salazar's slaying.

"We think there has been a relationship...It's something we're still looking at," said Marion Hambrick, special agent in charge of the DEA in Houston.

Juan Jose Quintero-Payan, 37, and Emilio Quintero-Payan, 32, both of Guadalajara, allegedly made large cash deposits in U.S. banks, according to the indictment.

The bank named as a defendant in the indictment is the Metropolitan National Bank of McAllen.

Two companies established in the Cayman Islands also were indicted. They were identified as European Commodities, Ltd. and Continental Resources, Ltd. Alleged conspirators in the narcotics ring bought huge amounts of real estate and formed the companies to launder drug profits, the indictment says.

Hired killer pleads guilty, to testify against woman

HOUSTON (AP) — A man allegedly hired by a Houston woman to kill her parents for $25,000 pleaded guilty in one death and agreed to testify against the couple's daughter, whose sisters hired a private eye to catch the killer by romancing him.

David Duval West, 29, entered his plea to a reduced charge of murder just minutes before he was scheduled to stand trial Wednesday on capital murder charges.

State District Judge A.D. Azios postponed sentencing.

Duval pleaded guilty in the June 19, 1982 death of Virginia Campbell, 50, who was found shot with her husband, attorney James Campbell, 55, in the couple's home.

West was charged in both killings after allegedly confessing about them to private detective Kim Paris, who dated West and secretly recorded her conversations with him.

West did not enter a plea in James Campbell's death, prosecutor Rusty Hardin said. He can still face a death sentence if he does not live up to his agreement to testify against Ms. Ray, 28.

Prosecutors contend Ms. Ray hired West to kill her parents and that he was to receive $25,000 from the Campbells' estate.

Ms. Ray was indicted Tuesday and was in the courtroom for a preliminary hearing in her own murder case after West entered his plea and agreed to testify against her.

She is charged with murder, solicitation of capital murder and conspiracy to commit murder, Hardin said. If convicted, she faces a maximum life term in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Man who posed as woman convicted in child's death

DALLAS (AP) — A man who got a succession of babysitting jobs by posing as a woman has been found guilty of intentionally injuring a 5-month-old boy who died after being immersed in scalding water.

After convicting Richard Arthur Gilbert, 29, on Wednesday, the jury was told to return at 9 a.m. today to consider his punishment. He could be sentenced up to life in prison.

The child, Arthur Clark Baker, died on Oct. 10 from injuries suffered Sept. 26. Gilbert was charged with injury to a child and with murder, but prosecutors tried him only on the lesser charge because they said it was easier to prove and carries an equal maximum penalty.

Gilbert insisted he accidentally spilled boiling water on the child while cooking pasta. But a doctor who treated the child said the burn patterns did not support such a thesis.

The trial's most riveting testimony came from the child's mother, Vera Clark Baker, who described Tuesday, on the first day of the trial, how she and her husband placed a newspaper advertisement seeking a qualified woman to care for their child while she, a bank employee, and her husband, a corporate lawyer, were at work.

The mother said she was struck by Gilbert's appearance. Referring to the man as "she" throughout her testimony, she said Gilbert appeared for an interview at her home wearing a large amount of makeup, a lace-collared shirt and polished fingernails.

Gilbert was the size of a man, but she never doubted Gilbert was a woman, she testified. Mrs. Baker said she breast-fed her baby in front of Gilbert, while they talked about topics such as menstruation and birth control.

"So the charade went from A to Z, right down to female anatomy details," assistant District Attorney Rider Scott said to the mother, who agreed.

Police said after Gilbert's arrest was publicized, they received calls from a number of other parents who said Gilbert — dressed as a woman — had also babysat for them.

In a separate case, Gilbert has been indicted on charges he sexually assaulted a 2-year-old boy he was babysitting.

Mrs. Baker broke down while testifying Tuesday after lawyers asked her to look at pictures of the child both before the burns were inflicted and afterward.

One photograph showed the child's lower body and legs with injuries later described by a doctor as "deep red, the color of blood."

Two doctors described the baby's injuries as "forced immersion burns" that covered the infant's body from slightly above his waist to his feet.

On the day the child was burned, Mrs. Baker said, she got a call at her office from Gilbert, who said there was a "small emergency" at home.

"Well, I've accidentally spilled some hot water on Arthur's feet. Some of the skin is starting to peel," the mother quoted Gilbert as saying.

CLEARVIEW

The financial outlook during the opening days of Clearview have been encouraging as well, indicated Lundberg.

"We've had to make a few adjustments, but we have high hopes," said the veteran administrator of several chemical dependency units. Clearview is ahead of schedule, financially, according to Lundberg.

"We budgeted for 11 admissions in October (the first month of business) and 14 for November," he said. "We've had 42 admissions so far."

"And for December we counted on an average census of 12 patients," he continued. "We've had 19."

Lundberg admitted, however, that the promising figures did not mean the center was in the black.

"We're budgeted to lose $500,000 during our first year of business," he said. "You might say that we're just 'losing less.'"

The director added that the $3.4 million facility hoped to start breaking even by the end of the second fiscal year (July 1987) and to have a positive net worth late in the third fiscal year.

Clearview's first days of operation have not been free of disappointments, said Lundberg.

"Our music therapy program just didn't do what we wanted it to," he said. Lundberg had contracted with Midland therapist Delaine Little to head the innovative program on a trial basis.

"It was a six-week trial contract," he said. "I've seen it do wonders at other facilities, but for some reason it just didn't click here. It wasn't Delaine's fault. The adult patients were just pretty ambivalent about it I guess."

Lundberg indicated that the program may be better suited for the adolescent program, scheduled to begin after the first of the year.

Still another disappointment was the opening advertising campaign announcing Clearview to the Permian Basin area.

"It was a blunder we didn't mean to do," he said. "We would do it differently if we could do it over."

Lundberg was referring to the series of television, radio and newspaper ads which portrayed patients who had been "cured at Clearview" — even before the facility opened.

"The treatment plan here at Clearview is the same as some of our other centers and so we decided to use the testimonial ads and just change the name of the facility," lamented Lundberg. "There were two strategic mistakes. First, we ran the 'I've been cured at Clearview' ads too early — before we opened — and second, we tried to use advertising that was inappropriate for a community like Midland."

Lundberg explained that in larger communities, health advertising is more accepted and that the ads that were run locally would have been subtle in comparison to what would have been used elsewhere.

"If we could do it over, we would invest the money in a different type of ad — maybe something stating that there's a 'new alternative' for substance abuse treatment."

Despite the disappointments, the outlook remains bright, considering that Clearview opened its doors during the start of a traditionally slow hospital season.

"People don't want to be in a hospital during the holidays," he said. "Most of our patients will be out by then. This is generally a slow time for medical facilities but we think things will really start picking up after the first of the year."

Part of the expected surge in business may be due to expanded services to begin after the Christmas season.

"Our adolescent program didn't take off the way we would have like it to have," said Lundberg. "Part of it was our fault. We didn't open the adolescent section at the same time as the adult area."

Lundberg added that Clearview was still looking for an adolescent counselor and additional nurses for the 18-bed unit and was working on closer ties with the Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

"We expect that we'll have about seven patients in that area by the end of January. My guess is that when we have a dedicated unit (Jan. 1) and closer ties with PDAP, it will develop quickly."

Lundberg also indicated that the newly created Community Intervention group would be a good source of referral patients for the adolescent wing, as well.

Also starting up Jan. 1 is the outpatient program, said Lundberg.

"We've found that many patients cannot leave their jobs for the month-long treatment as an inpatient," he said. "While we fully believe that inpatient treatment is most effective for the majority of patients, there are some who may benefit from the outpatient program."

The program, he said, involves a 60-hour intensive therapy schedule, meeting three evenings a week for several weeks.

It's not for everyone, he cautions.

"There are some pretty strict criteria for the outpatient," he said. "They must show a pretty good probability of completing the program which is determined through an interview process."

Lundberg said that some of the inpatients have had to quit their treatment due to pressure from their employers.

"It's really a mixed bag. Companies are like people. Some of them are extremely supportive of their employees receiving treatment, while others may fire them on the spot," he said.

Still another event occurring Jan. 1 will impact Clearview's success.

"Mandatory insurance coverage of alcohol and drug abuse will go into effect then," said Lundberg. "We would have been significantly busier if that had already been in place when we opened." Lundberg was referring to state-legislated insurance coverage, approved this year.

According to Lundberg, the Clearview Board of Directors is examining the possibility of including an indigent program for patients who cannot afford to pay for services.

"The board has asked me to look into establishing an indigent policy," he said. "Now, what percentage of our income we are willing to forego in order to treat indigents, I can't say yet."

"Our philosophy is if a person approaches us for treatment, we'll try to work out some way that they can receive treatment even if they can't afford it," he said. "That's one advantage of a non-profit organization — the bottom line isn't always the bottom line. Taking care of the patients and meeting our responsibility to the community are our first concerns."

Clearview is under the administration of Midland Camelback Samaritan Group Inc., an organization formed from the three health groups involved in the project: Midland Memorial Hospital, Camelback Hospitals of Scottsdale, Ariz., and Samaritan Health Service of Phoenix, Ariz.

TAX

But it was Republican leadership that is being credited with defeat of the bill. Only 14 of 182 Republicans in the House sided with the president on the vote.

"I THINK THE oil and gas industry swung it," said Harry Spannus, executive vice president PBPA. "Everywhere you went there were members of the oil and gas industry knocking on doors. Perry Bolger and I personally called on 19 represenatives, mostly of the New York delegation, that had not fully decided to support the bill. The industry had a good plan and they worked it."

Midland oilman Ernest Angelo commented: "You really can move mountains when you keep working at it."

PBPA President Perry Bolger said that much of the credit for the bill's temporary defeat must go to the entire Texas delegation who had the courage to vote their convictions, despite tremendous pressure from both sides. He said he did not see the setback of the bill so much as a slap in the face of the President as a setback for Democratic leadership that drafted the bill. "It was just a bad bill," he added.

"The clearest signal to come out of events this week is that the people are more concerned with deficits than tax reform," said Bolger, referring to passage of the Gramm-Rudman bill.

Within a few hours after the critical vote, Reagan sent Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan and Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III to the Capitol to deal with GOP leaders. And he arm-twisted a group of Republicans at the White House.

The president "expressed quite a bit of justifiable concern...and not anger, but he seemed perplexed and questioning," said Rep. Marge Roukema, R-N.J., one of the White House guests.

Although Reagan has problems with the Democratic bill, he asked the House to approve either it or the GOP version so the Republican-run Senate would have a bill to improve next year. If the bills die in the House, he said, "I think it will be years before we can bring (the issue) back."

IF REAGAN CAN guarantee more GOP votes, the House will consider the debate procedures again Friday and, if they are approved, choose between the rival tax bills.

Republican leaders, worried that the Democratic bill would hurt the economy by hampering investment, said it will take basic changes in the bill — not just on procedures — to win back GOP support.

The vote, said Rep. Jack Kemp, chairman of the Republican Conference, "was an expression by a majority of House members that the Ways and Means Committee bill is deeply flawed, and must be improved before it can be approved."

The Democratic bill and the GOP substitute are similar to the plan Reagan recommended last May as a replacement for a tax system that he called overly complex and unfair. Both bills would excuse most poor working families from taxes, give most Americans tax cuts, reduce or curtail several deductions and credits and boost taxes on corporations.

The Democratic plan would shift about $140 billion in taxes from individuals to corporations over five years while the GOP version would shift about $101 billion.

Rep. Robert Matsui, D-Calif., said Reagan's refusal to offer an outright endorsement of the Democratic tax plan — the only one with a realistic chance of passing the House — "gave Republicans cover; it allowed them to say that since the president was not really for the bill, they didn't have to vote for it."

"The White House is reacting on politics, not on the merits of tax reform," said Rep. Henson Moore, R-La. "They say we've got to pass a bill this year — no matter what's in it, just so the press won't be able to write that Reagan has done nothing domestically in 1985," he added.

Some who voted Wednesday against considering the bills were upset because the procedure would not have allowed the House to consider several major amendments. Some simply oppose tax overhaul. Others just don't like the Democratic bill.

BUDGET

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, was among the 22 Democrats voting for the measure; 20 Democrats opposed it. Thirty-nine Republicans voted yes, 10, no.

Impact of the legislation would be felt immediately because it requires up to $11.7 billion in spending cuts in the current budget by March 1.

Military retirees and civilian government retirees will be among the first to be hit by budget tightening. The bill calls for cost-of-living adjustments in their pensions to be deferred beginning Jan. 1.

President Reagan's advisors warned the measure could lead to cuts of more than $10 billion in defense budget authority this fiscal year alone. Some Pentagon officials have placed the figure as high as $18 billion.

Gramm raced from the Senate to the House, where he served as the representative from Texas 6th District from 1981 until this year, attempting to persuade undecided former colleagues to vote for his bill.

Gramm said he feels pleased and gratified at the victory. "It obviously was a lengthy and difficult battle against what appeared sometimes to be insurmountable odds."

Gramm says he views passage of the budget-balancing bill as "the final agreement in making the Reagan program permanent."

Expounding on that theory, Gramm said the Reagan administration and allies in Congress had promised to stop inflation, cut taxes, put people to work, rebuild defense, save Social Security and balance the budget.

"Balancing the budget was the one promise we have not been able to deliver on," he said.

Gramm, who attracted national attention in the first year of the Reagan administration as a leader of the Democratic "Boll Weevils, conceded that his newest legislation could result in tax hikes.

"It will force us to make difficult choices," he said. "But raising taxes is not what I will be working for."

Gramm noted that federal revenues are growing by $75 billion a year. "We can apply half of that to the deficit, and spend half," he said.

Senate Budget Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill "may be the last real chance to get the president and congressional leaders together next year to put together a budget that gets us to a $144 billion deficit and sets us on the path to controlling the deficit."

"I can't predict the natures of changes (in the federalbudget process)," said Domenici. "But I know they will be dramatic."

Domenici failed to win approval for a deficit-reducing budget resolution this year when the president balked at a one-year cost-of-living raise in Social Security benefits.

The presidential "meat ax" approach to spending reductions would not be necessary if Congress can agree to make incremental cuts designed to reduce the deficit to zero by 1990.

Cuts would be triggered if the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office jointly predict that the deficit for a given fiscal year would exceed the target set by the legislation.

In the budget the president will send to Congress in February, the deficit target would be $144 billion, or about $56 billion less than the estimated $200 billion deficit in the current fiscal year, which started Oct. 1.

Sen. William Roth, R-Del., an opponent, said unprotected domestic programs probably would take a 17.5 percent reduction by next March. Citizens probably won't like to see cuts in drug enforcement, law enforcement and similar popular programs, he said.

"Where they made their mistake was backing down on across-the-board cuts," Roth said.

Because some programs with powerful constituencies are protected, Roth said, there will be less pressure to make across-the-board cuts.

CRASH

"I do not have (more) information available," said Mark Sapp, director of reservations for the carrier, which employs about 650 people from its Miami base. "We are at the mercy at our flight control department, and they have released no information.

"All I can confirm is that it was an Arrow Air DC-8," Sapp said.

Gander airport manager John Pittman told the AP by telephone that the plane went down about a quarter-mile from the airport.

When asked if there was a fire aboard, he said "yes," but did not elaborate.

Roads to the airport were blocked as emergency vehicles made their way to the scene.

In Ottawa, a Transport Canada spokesman said a crash operations center was set up at about 6 a.m., about 45 minutes after first word of the crash was received.

Gander International Airport is located approximately 150 miles northwest of St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland on Canada's Atlantic seaboard. It is often used by planes traveling between North America and Europe.

The DC-8 is a four-engine jet manufactured by McDonnell Douglas.

1985 already was commercial aviation's worst year before today's crash. The first disaster occurred just a few hours into the new year when an Eastern Airlines jet crashed into a Bolivian mountainside. More than 1,400 people have been killed in air accidents worldwide this year.

The Multinational Force and Observers on Egypt's Sinai Peninsula has troops from the United States, Fiji, Colombia, Australia, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Italy, Uruguay, France and England. They are under the command of military officers from Norway.

It was created as a peacekeeping force to police the disengagement of Israeli and Egyptian troops under the two nations' 1979 peace treaty, the only such treaty between Israel and an Arab country.

cial condition. The city always maintains a reserve."

Synchronization of traffic lights has been on numerous City Council and mayoral candidates' objectives list for years. "I'm convinced we need a system and we can find a system," he said, citing the savings in fuel costs and time in getting across the city if the lights are synchronized.

Although he left the council 2½ years ago when he decided not to seek re-election, Thomas said he has continued to follow what it does. He had considered running for mayor when Ernest Angelo Jr. stepped down in 1980, he said, but "it wasn't the right time in my life. I have the additional experience now and, I have the time for it."

A resident of the Tall City for 38 years and a graduate of Midland High School, Thomas said new and expanded industry are vital for the city's future and he would work in this area.

He holds bachelor's and master's degrees in geology from Texas Tech University. He has worked for Mobil Oil, Ralph Lowe Estate, American Quasar Petroleum, Thomas, Harris & Anderson petroleum consultants and as an independent.

He was a member of the Planning and Zoning Commission from 1972-75 before winning a seat on the City Council. Thomas said he has served as president of five organizations and on the board of directors of eight other groups.

Campaign chairman is Van Howbert; Ernest Angelo Jr. is finance chairman; and Bob Kaufman is treasurer.

Ronco gadgets make way for 'message on world peace'

By SKIP WOLLENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — "Stay tuned for a message on world peace," the announcer says. Operators are standing by.

Can you sell a serious book by a world leader with the same commercial approach frequently used to sell vegetable shredders, record albums and exercise equipment?

A group of New Jersey-based marketers thinks it can, and hopes to sell as many as 1 million copies of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's new book, "A Time for Peace," with direct-response advertising.

The marketers have made radio and television ads that give the audience a chance to dial a toll-free telephone number to order. They say the ads began appearing this past weekend.

The 312-page book contains a biography, speeches and interviews Gorbachev has given since taking office earlier this year, color photographs from his family album and a special introduction. It was released during the recent summit between him and President Reagan.

"Stay tuned for a special message on world peace," one of the television commercials begins. The viewer sees a mushroom cloud, Soviet military hardware rolling in parade and shots of Gorbachev shaking hands with Reagan and others. "The devastation of nuclear warfare and your future are held in the hands of these men," the announcer says.

Gorbachev "shocks the world" with his "powerful new book," the announcer says. A ticking clock can be heard in the background.

The marketers say they know of no other instance in which direct-response commercials have been used to sell a single book title.

The New York-based publishers, Richardson & Steirman, hired the marketers to reach potential readers in smaller cities where the Gorbachev book may not be available in bookstores, said publishing company Chairman Hy Steirman.

The direct response unit of Independent Group of Companies Inc., of Union, N.J., developed the ads. Urban General Corp. of Fairfield, N.J., is buying radio and television time.

Frank Brady, chairman of Urban General, said the group plans to spend about $2 million a month for time on commercial stations and cable networks across the country in hopes of selling 1 million books within 90 days.

While direct-response ads have been used frequently to sell consumer products, the approach also has been used in recent years to sell book collections, insurance and financial services.

The Time-Life Books division of Time Inc., for instance, has used direct response commercials to sell book collections since 1977, including series on World II, cooking and home repairs.

However, Brady said, there is a fundamental difference between selling book collections and single books in television commercials.

A book collection is often purchased for someone else and "looks good on a book shelf," he said. Someone who buys a single book often buys for himself and can be motivated simply by getting him interested in the subject matter.

Frank Russell, president of the direct response networks division at Independent Group, said several publishers are interested in the campaign.

Media mogul's art on display in Rio de Janeiro

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Art aficionados are getting a rare glimpse at a media mogul's private collection of paintings by Brazilian and European masters at an unusual show put on at the government's request.

The exhibition is called "Six Decades of Modern Art From the Roberto Marinho Collection." It consists of 141 paintings belonging to the 82-year-old head of the Rio-based Globo TV, radio and publishing empire and owner of one of the largest private art collections in this South American country.

On display are works by Candido Portinari, Emiliano Di Cavalcanti, Jose Pancetti and Alberto Guignard, as well as European artists such as Chagall, Dufy and Utrillo. Many are being shown publicly for the first time.

"This is the best collection in the country in terms of the great masters," said Claudio Teixeira, an art critic and restorer who helped assemble the exhibit.

Last year, the Ministry of Education and Culture asked Marinho to put on public display his collection of 424 paintings, drawings and etchings kept at his estate in Rio.

Marinho invited a committee of art experts to catalog, clean and restore the works and decided to limit the showing to a maximum of 150 paintings.

Carlos Roan, an art historian and a member of the committee, said the hardest decision was what to leave out. Some excellent 19th-century paintings and abstract art were eliminated to make a more diverse show.

The exhibit focuses on the rise of modern art in Brazil, particularly in the 1930s and '40s. It is divided into eight separate displays of Portinari, Di Cavalcanti, Pancetti, Guignard, landscapes and interiors, abstractionism, the European presence and abstract artists Maria Helena Vieira da Silva and Antonio Bandeira.

The showpiece of the exhibit, organizers agree, is the Pancetti collection, a series of 27 oil paintings by the sailor-artist featuring a dozen of his majestic seascapes.

The exhibit is on display in downtown Rio at the former Imperial Palace, which was recently restored and turned into an arts center by the government.

Visitors have flocked to the exhibit in record-breaking numbers, organizers said. In its first four days, the show was seen by 20,000 people, compared with an average attendance at the arts center of 15,000 visitors a month.

NATION

Cuts in federal aid would 'pierce' cities

Cisneros

SEATTLE (AP) — The nation's cities will fight cuts in federal aid that would do "piercing damage" to social programs but they also want to show they are not just another lobbying group with a tin cup pointed toward Washington, their new spokesman says.

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, who became president of the National League of Cities on Wednesday, said passage of a congressional plan with automatic budget cuts to reduce the deficit begins rather than ends the fight over urban programs.

The league's message to Congress and President Reagan, he said, is that cities are a vital part of the "safety net" of protection for the poor and deserve support.

"Think twice before you do piercing damage to a system of government that has served this country well," said Cisneros. "Think twice before you call everything of the last 30 years a failure."

Cisneros, who is serving his third two-year term as mayor of the nation's 10th largest city, spoke at the conclusion of the league's annual Congress of Cities, attended by more than 3,500 local government officeholders from around the country.

The officials passed resolutions endorsing the House Ways and Means Committee's tax-reform package, although city representatives said they were concerned it stood to undercut their ability to raise money by removing the tax-exempt status of some municipal bonds.

The organization said any tax overhaul also should be used to raise more money to help eliminate the federal deficit — and thus take pressure off urban aid programs that are threatened by proposed budget cuts.

THE RESOLUTIONS repeat local governments' insistence that any tax reform continue the provision allowing taxpayers to deduct state and local taxes from their federal tax bill.

The cities remain concerned, however, about a feature still in the House version that would reduce and in some cases eliminate the ability of local governments to offer tax-exempt bonds. Those bonds are major sources of revenue for capital projects, attracting development and other uses.

The resolutions call for tax revision to raise new federal money, even though Reagan and many congressional supporters of tax reform want a plan that offsets tax increases in one area with decreases in another.

Also approved was a resolution calling on cities and states to begin selling investments in companies doing business in South Africa.

The move strengthened the group's opposition to South Africa's apartheid system; it previously had called on cities to recognize the Sullivan Principles, standards of conduct in that country that many corporations have adopted.

"It's a manifestation of our frustration that there's no give on the part of South Africa," said Cleveland Mayor George Voinovich, the outgoing president.

The league voted to reverse its policy and call for repeal of the Davis-Bacon Act, which officials of small cities said drove up the cost of public construction projects. The law, backed by unions, requires that a prevailing area wage — usually union scale — be paid to workers on construction projects involving more than $2,000 in federal funds.

OTHER RESOLUTIONS asked Congress to continue aid programs to cities such as general revenue sharing, community development block grants, urban development grants and mass transit subsidies.

Much of the revenue sharing and block grant money is used for cities to provide services to poor neighborhoods and the unemployed, Cisneros said.

"If indeed the administration believes in decentralized government and indeed they believe in decision-making at lower levels, this is not a time to be taking a meat-ax approach to this fundamentally important level of government," Cisneros said.

He said the cities would press Congress to put a priority on city aid when, under the deficit-reduction plan, it would be required to begin cutting $6 billion out of domestic programs early next year.

Station has French Quarter flair

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Shoppers combing the French Quarter for antiques might stroll into the new police station with an eye to buy. But nothing, not even the captain's Chippendale desk, is for sale.

And if a Bourbon Street wino tried to cash a check at the command desk, that wouldn't be altogether unusual either. The building served as a bank once, in 1826.

After that it survived three major fires to serve as a beer saloon, court house and "social hall," just to name a few.

Maybe it's the thick white columns and wrought iron fence that make the 159-year-old antebellum building look like anything but a police station. It could be the marble flooring and brass chandeliers.

Regardless, the 63 officers assigned to the Vieux Carre police station five months ago know it's far from usual.

"It's not Barney Miller," said Lawrence Robert, a 38-year-old desk officer.

The building used to be a tourist information center, and still serves as one.

One visitor thought a police force veteran of 43 years was a tour bus operator.

"I'm everything but Grayline," Joe Canatella Sr. said.

The new Vieux Carre district was created to make the Quarter safer for thousands of camera-toting tourists, a big source of income for the city.

Publicity about crime in the Quarter caused some concern among city officials.

Officers ride mopeds to maneuver around congested streets along stone-paved sidewalks and through narrow alleys.

"We can get around with those," one officer said. "There's virtually no place we can't get with them."

The Royal Street station is just a few doors up from Brennan's, one of New Orleans swankiest restaurants.

It's one block over from Bourbon Street, famous for booze, bars and jazz. So it's no surprise the Vieux Carre officers handle drunk and disorderly calls as much as any other.

"They're nothing," said Cannatella. "Just people having a good time."

New Orleans police are notoriously adept at handling crowds.

Customs Service suffering cash flow foul ups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Customs Service has learned that its air force is treated the same as the average American when gas company credit card bills go unpaid.

Customs air crews, while on missions against drug smugglers, have been forced to open their wallets and pay cash to have their planes refueled or repaired, according to the agency and Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla.

Customs spokesman Jim Mahan said the foul ups resulted from consolidation of the agency's financial operations earlier this year in a new center in Indianapolis.

"There have been some cases when credit cards have not been accepted," he said, but he contended the administrative problems have been resolved without harming the growing air war on drugs.

English, chairman of a House Government Operations subcommittee that reviews Customs' anti-drug operations, said his investigators have uncovered several embarrassing incidents for the Customs air force.

In one incident, an air crew operating out of Florida had to use its expense money to get a plane refueled in Puerto Rico. In two other cases, repair contractors demanded cash to fix a helicopter and a fixed-wing aircraft based in San Diego.

"This is not the first time such difficulties have occurred," English said. "About a year ago, Customs had boats that were not involved in the war on drugs because bills were not being paid or money was not available to repair the boats.

"The boats were at the docks for three or four months. This is an example of bureaucratic bumbling. It's outrageous and an embarrassment."

Mahan said one of the basic problems occurred "when we created the financial center." Mahan added that "some people in the field failed to send their bills in on a timely basis. Also, incomplete records were sent to the center."

He said no planes were grounded because of the billing problem, but acknowledged that crews refueling in Puerto Rico currently are using cash to pay for fuel.

The delinquent billing is only the latest problem in the Customs air force, which now includes some sophisticated planes to battle airborne drug smugglers.

The difficulties, spotlighted in congressional hearings and public documents, include shortages of crews and high performance airplanes. The Customs air force also has been hampered by the discovery that long-range radar won't fit in some aircraft and by gaps in radar coverage that allow smugglers to elude capture.

The air wing now includes 71 planes, but English has said only 16 are sophisticated aircraft, while another 10 have limited use and the rest are "the junk the flying club."

However, eight high performance planes are on order with the capability of tracking smugglers from long distances, and two P3 flying detection platforms are being modified for use in the drug war.

The air operations cost taxpayers $55.4 million in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.

Judge rules cross can't be lighted

CHICAGO (AP) — Lights forming a cross above a St. Charles fire station violate the separation of church and state and cannot be turned on, a federal judge has ruled.

The order was issued after two residents and the American Civil Liberties Union of Illinois filed a lawsuit against the city of St. Charles, charging that the cross violated the First Amendment of the Constitution.

The "city of St. Charles cannot be allowed to illuminate the cross-shaped tower...because such an action has the effect of conveying an association with, or tacit approval of, Christianity at the expense of any other religion, agnosticism or atheism," U.S. District Judge James F. Holderman said in his order.

"We're extremely pleased with the court's decision," said Jane Whicher, an ACLU lawyer who worked on the case. "This cross is on government property and structurally a part of the radio tower of the fire department.

"It's 35 feet tall and sends a message that Christianity is the official religion of the city of St. Charles."

Ms. Whicher noted the ruling prohibits the lighting of the cross. She said the ACLU plans to ask the court to order the lights taken down.

The city had argued that illumination of the cross was part of a larger Christmas display. The illuminated cross has gone unchallenged since 1969, according to St. Charles Fire Chief Larry Swanson.

Reagan's secret lie-detector order meets Congressional skepticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's secret order making as many as 180,000 government workers and contractors subject to lie detector tests is being viewed with skepticism in Congress, where key leaders say the administration should "not move precipitously."

Sketchy details of the order, signed Nov. 1 without any announcement, were revealed Wednesday by presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, who said, "We were seeking ways to clamp down on spying (on) government secrets."

While refusing to reveal how many people would be affected, Speakes said the test would be mandatory for people applying for access to highly sensitive information.

It also "will be applied to a selective number" of people who already have access to such information, he said.

Speakes said the order would cover people all the way up to Cabinet secretaries. Secretary of State George Shultz, for one, is known to oppose use of such tests, and his spokesman, Charles Redman, said he did not know if the secretary would submit to one.

A congressional source, who was able to quote from the order, said it would cover 150,000 federal employees, most of them at the Pentagon, and 33,000 private contractors.

However, only a fraction of them could be tested annually because of the limited number of polygraph machines and trained operators, said the source, who refused to be identified by name.

By virtue of the three categories of sensitive information covered in the order, the document affects federal employees at the departments of State, Treasury, Defense, Energy, and the Interior, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and other agencies, the source said.

Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., denounced Reagan's "sudden secret order" as "contrary to the cautious approach to polygraph tests that everybody else has taken in both houses of Congress and at the Department of Defense."

Insurance agencies told to require AIDS test

RENO, Nev. (AP) — The average $140,000-per-patient cost of treating AIDS victims makes it imperative for insurance companies to test for the disease before issuing policies, a health insurance attorney says.

Karen Clifford told the National Association of Insurance Commissioners on Wednesday that a significant number of people who think they may have AIDS have been purchasing health and life insurance without telling their insurance company about their suspicions.

"There is evidence that high-risk people are often informed that they had better be certain that they are adequately insured. It is only right and fair that an underwriter be able to acquire the same level of knowledge as the applicant possesses," said Ms. Clifford.

She represents the Health Insurance Association of America, which represents 335 companies that provide more than 85 percent of the commercial health insurance written in the United States.

Ms. Clifford quoted statistics from the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta that found that the first 9,000 AIDS patients ran up an average medical bills of $140,000 each.

She said the CDC's figures may be conservative, although she added that medical bills apparently are slightly lower in San Francisco.

HHS: Aspirin labels must warn of Reyes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government wants drug manufacturers to specifically warn parents that children might contract the deadly Reye Syndrome by taking aspirin for flu or the chicken pox.

Eleven months after most aspirin manufacturers agreed to a voluntary labeling program, Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler on Wednesday proposed a mandatory label to warn parents of the suspected link between aspirin and Reye Syndrome.

The proposed rule, which won't take effect for at least 120 days, would state, "WARNING: Children and teen-agers should not use this medicine for chicken pox or flu symptoms before consulting a doctor about Reye Syndrome, a rare but serious disease."

Reye Syndrome is known to cause death in 30 percent of the cases. Some survivors are left with permanent brain damage.

Mrs. Heckler said in a statement that the mandatory rule was being proposed because some manufacturers did not specifically mention Reye Syndrome in their warning labels and that some small companies did not put any warning at all on their products.

"These regulations will ensure that all aspirin manufacturers use the same clear language to tell consumers that a physician must be consulted before giving aspirin to children or teen-agers with flu symptoms or chicken pox," she said.

"This extra step builds on the voluntary efforts already taken by industry.

"My only concern is that the voluntary statements vary and concern has been expressed that some...companies may have failed in some instances to include any warning at all," she said.

The Aspirin Foundation of America agreed to the voluntary labeling program last January after the government released the preliminary results of a study showing "the overwhelming (number of) children in the study who had Reye Syndrome had taken aspirin," said Bill Grigg, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration.

Peggy Goldwater dies

Goldwater

(LAT) — Peggy Goldwater, who assiduously avoided the political clamor and controversy that clung to her husband throughout their lives, died Wednesday of complications of the circulatory ailments that had forced the partial amputation of her left leg last month. She was 76.

She died at Good Samaritan Medical Center in Phoenix, Ariz., said Earl Eisenhower, Sen. Barry Goldwater's press secretary. The 1964 Republican candidate for president was at her side when she was pronounced dead at 5:34 a.m.

Hospital spokesman James McVeigh said that Mrs. Goldwater died of heart, lung and kidney dysfunction.

Three die in cave-in

HEGINS, Pa. (AP) — A father, his son and a third man were suffocated by deadly methane gas in their family-owned mine when dynamite set off a cave-in that seriously injured a second son, authorities said.

Five men were working more than a half-mile inside the steeply sloping MS&W Coal Co. mine shaft when they detonated the dynamite in a new wall of coal Wednesday, officials said.

The blast released a pocket of methane that asphyxiated the three and triggered a secondary explosion that inflicted minor burns on the victims, officials said. The fifth miner escaped unhurt.

Teens lost on hiking trip

JOSHUA TREE NATIONAL MONUMENT, Calif. (AP) — Five teen-age girls vanished in the wilderness during a hiking trip, and about 30 people searched the rugged area where overnight temperatures dropped below freezing, authorities said.

National Park Service officials launched the search Wednesday for the girls, who were participating in a 15-day trip organized by Outward Bound, an organization that teaches self-reliance, camping and survival skills.

No local affair

There's a simple test one can use to determine whether a revolution in this hemisphere should be supported. That's asking whether the regime in question is supportive of this nation or a potential threat to this country and its allies.

That is, after all, the only legitimate reason this nation should ever be actively involved in regional disputes elsewhere in the world: Protection of U.S. interests.

In that light, Secretary of State George Shultz spoke well the other day defending Nicaragua's anti-Sandinista rebels who shot down a helicopter gunship. In doing so he again reminded fellow Americans that what is going on in that Central American country is not a "local affair," as some outlandish critics of the Reagan administration have charged. Rather it is an attempt by the Soviet Union and its Cuban puppets to establish another foothold on America's southern doorstep.

Shultz made that perfectly plain in his defense of the insurgents' shooting at the helicopter, whose pilot and co-pilot were Cubans. Said the secretary:

"If I were them I'd certainly want to. The Soviet and Cuban material is being used against the Nicaraguan people."

Those who have snickered at President Reagan's reference to the Nicaraguan rebels as "freedom fighters" would do well to take serious note of another remark made by our Shultz in connection with this nation's continuing support of the forces fighting the dictatorial Sandinista regime in Nicaragua.

"It is incumbent upon us," said Shultz, "as a moral matter as well as a strategic matter to support those in Nicaragua who are fighting for freedom in that country — and we will continue to do so."

That's good because such a policy ensures no aggressor will quietly place this hemisphere or this nation in jeopardy.

Who's the aggressor in Central America? Well, it hasn't been the United States throwing its weight around and stomping on the rights of Nicaraguans. This nation has a legitimate interest in what goes on in Central America and should aggressively support rebel forces battling the Sandinista regime.

Pancho rides again

Pancho Villa was considered a Mexican Robin Hood by some people and a robbing hood by others. But none can deny he was a major figure in Mexico's revolution.

Now, thanks to the American Film Institute, long-lost combat footage of some of Villa's revolutionary battles have been preserved and presented to Mexico.

The film was discovered last year in a San Francisco basement, where it had been stored for 40 years. It had been shot by an American free-lance photographer and contained scenes of Villa's raid on Ciudad Juarez, fighting Mexican government troops at Ojinaga and attacking the U.S. border town of Columbus in New Mexico.

The nitrate-based footage had deteriorated, and the film institute restored and copied it in a $30,000 National Archives project. Now a copy has been presented to Mexico.

Pancho Villa, were he alive today, would have loved the publicity. The bandit is remembered for taking American newspapermen and photographers along with him when he went into battle. He was even believed to have launched attacks to conform with their newspapers' needs and deadlines.

In years to come, historians on both sides of the border will be able to use the film for research. Without a doubt Pancho would have liked that.

Another View:

Marcos looks to win

It can be taken as a given that Ferdinand E. Marcos does not contemplate losing the snap presidential election that he has called for early next year. Through fair means or foul — and a bagful of dirty tricks is at hand to control or nullify the scheduled Feb. 7 vote — Marcos has always intended to perpetuate his 20-year grip on power. Now it appears that the inability of Marcos' foremost political opponents to agree among themselves could guarantee the achievement of that ambition by surprisingly licit means. There may be no need after all to resort to a rigged vote count or dubious decisions by pliant courts to assure the continuation of Marcos' misrule.

The last-minute collapse of an electoral agreement between Corazon Aquino and former Sen. Salvador Laurel points ominously to a severe splintering in the anti-Marcos vote that is likely to produce a plurality for the incumbent. Mrs. Aquino, who holds Marcos personally responsible for the 1983 assassination of her husband, Benigno S. Aquino Jr., is a politically inexperienced and reluctant candidate who nonetheless has attracted broad popular support. Laurel, a longtime politician and erstwhile ally of Marcos, controls a formidable political apparatus. After lengthy arguing over how they should combine their forces, agreement finally was reached to put Mrs. Aquino in the top spot. But this week, in a dispute concerning what party name or names this ticket would carry, Laurel decided to seek the presidency on his own.

The most dispiriting consequence of this split is that Marcos now has the opportunity to legitimize his continuation in power. An electoral victory tainted by fraud or legal manipulations would only intensify Marcos' political and economic problems at home while inviting even stronger condemnation of his rule from abroad. But a victory that can be passed off as having been fairly won would put Marcos in an entirely different position. For even though it was clear that he was a minority president, he could still claim the virtue of being a democratically elected one. Disarray among his opponents is one thing that Marcos is known to have been counting on when he called the snap election. This week's events have not left him disappointed.

JACK ANDERSON

Sandinistas strong-arm diplomats

WASHINGTON — The full story can now be told of the Sandinista government's attempt to intimidate employees of the U.S. Embassy in Managua.

Jack Anderson

Last month, the embassy's native Nicaraguan employees were hauled in, one at a time, for interrogation by the secret police. Women employees were stripped and asked humiliating questions about their sex lives; several of the embassy workers were threatened with death if they continued to work for the "gringos."

The State Department delivered a sharp protest to the Nicaraguan charge d'affaires in Washington, and the local embassy employees in Managua have not been similarly bothered since, sources told our associate Lucette Lagnado. At least one of the harassed employees has resigned.

According to classified cables from the Managua embassy, 15 Nicaraguan employees were summoned early in November to "Casa Cincuenta," headquarters of the Directorate General of State Security, Nicaragua's secret police. The embassy provided transportation for some of the employees to show its support.

The secret cables describe the nightmare that followed.

— After arrival at Casa Cincuenta, the embassy employees were usually taken to El Chipote prison. There they were placed in "small, dark rooms (about the size of a telephone booth)." After several hours in one of these cubicles, each employee was taken to another room for interrogation.

— Women were ordered to undress and were asked whom they were sleeping with. Some were accused of being sexually involved with American employees of the embassy.

— The interrogation techniques often seemed to have been lifted from "Casablanca" or some other old movie. "We have a number of ways to make people talk," one inquisitioner warned his victim. Another Sandinista goon told an embassy worker he was "always followed," and bragged that the secret police covered the country "inch by inch and has eyes and ears everywhere."

— No physical violence was reported, though one employee complained that he was "treated harshly by his interrogators."

— Several of the embassy employees were accused of being CIA spies, especially those who had been to Washington on embassy business.

— Most of the employees were "repeatedly threatened with long-term imprisonment" if they didn't cooperate with the authorities, and some were warned that they would end up "in the cemetery." One was told he must be "integrated into the revolution or leave the country." They were compelled to sign papers agreeing to provide information to the police on embassy matters.

— The interrogators wanted to know about the sexual inclinations of various American embassy employees. And they were especially curious about a bunker being built on the embassy grounds, warning the Nicaraguan employees that the embassy could not protect them in the event of an American invasion.

When word of the interrogations reached Washington, State Department officials summoned the Nicaraguan charge for a verbal dressing-down, and the blistering protest note was later delivered. The note suggested that the Sandinistas were violating the Vienna Convention on diplomatic relations, which the note pointed out "makes clear a state's obligation not to interfere unduly with the performance of a diplomatic mission."

The note charged that the Nicaraguan government "has engaged in a campaign of blatant intimidation and harassment," and protested "in the strongest terms" these unconscionable acts "intended to frighten and manipulate" the Nicaraguan employees of the embassy.

UNDER THE DOME: The words of praise uttered on June 26, 1984, when the House Public Works and Transportation Committee unveiled an official portrait of its chairman, Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., might seem eminently forgettable to most Americans (and probably to many who attended the ceremony). So to prevent the panegyrics from being lost to posterity, the Government Printing Office is publishing 2,000 copies of the proceedings, including 250 hard-bound editions. The cost was a mere $3,901.68. Soon to follow: the speeches made at the unveilings of portraits of Reps. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., and Jamie Whitten, D-Miss.

VOTING WITH THEIR FEET: The Philippines may or may not have a free election next February, but thousands of Filipinos have made it clear that they'd just as soon not hang around to find out. The number of applicants to emigrate to the United States will probably total well over 400,000 by the end of this month, according to estimates by the Manila embassy. The embassy immigration section's exceptionally heavy case load is expected to continue for years.

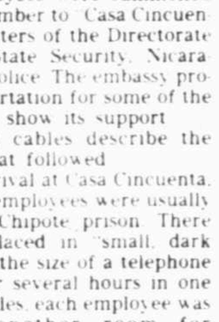
GEORGE F. WILL

In search of 'real conservatism'

WASHINGTON — Contemporary conservatism is haunted by the ghosts of sounds, an echo of Sen. Robert Taft's foreign policy. The Taft Doctrine has not had a large conservative following for nearly four decades, since the late 1940s when, prompted by the Berlin Blockade and the coup in Prague, conservatives joined Democrats in an activist, interventionist, "globalist" consensus.



George F. Will

During Vietnam, Democrats defected in droves, moving toward Taft's skepticism about U.S. capacities. Now Christopher Layne, writing in Foreign Policy, approvingly identifies Taft's doctrine as "real" conservatism, and Reaganism as a replay of 1950s' Cold War "globalism." Layne says, correctly, that under Reagan the idea of "global containment" is making a comeback. Actually, it is "postwar policy plus," and the plus is crucial.

Layne says the Reagan Doctrine "does not differentiate between what is vital and what is merely desirable." But Layne misunderstands the burdens involved in the undertakings he criticizes, and he has his own trouble differentiating.

He insists that Reagan's policy of global containment — by which he means primarily the policy of supporting anti-communist insurgencies — "can bankrupt America." But the cost of such support is trivial, especially when compared to the cost of strategic and conventional forces that comprise the essential deterrent that Layne supports.

Reagan's defense spending is below the postwar norm as a percentage of gross national product and of federal spending.

Hence it is peculiar of Layne to say "deficits and strategic overextension are really two sides of the same coin." You could not make a measurable dent in the deficit by eliminating the trickles of aid to insurgencies in Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Cambodia, Angola. Indeed, small U.S. investments in such insurgencies have magnificent multiplier effects, multiplying the Soviet costs of aggression.

Layne says "real conservatives" think geopolitically, not ideologically. But his geopolitical thinking is murky. He is at once laconic and eye-opening when he says: "America's strategic position obviously would be less comfortable if Mexico turned pro-Soviet." There is something mannered about the phrase "less comfortable." And his formulations contain many nullifying modifiers. For example, he says real conservatives "know that vital American interests are not engaged in Afghanistan, Angola, Cambodia and similar Third World hot spots," and "there is no Third World region or country whose loss would decisively tip the superpower balance against America," and "the loss of Central America would not decisively affect America's core security." Note the flinching, in the form of modifiers: "vital," "decisively," "core."

Obviously no single Third World problem, considered alone, is crucial. Equally obviously, such problems can not be considered alone.

The Reagan Doctrine, as Layne characterizes it, is that U.S. security requires an "ideologically congenial world." Hence the United States must attempt to build "American-style democracies" in Third World countries. Layne says that "real" conservatives believe, for example, that Nicaragua should not be allowed to become a Soviet satellite exporting revolution, but they do not believe U.S. interests are threatened by Sandinista domestic policies "in and of themselves."

Here is indeed the nub of the difference. The crux of the Reagan Doctrine is that a communist regime's domestic policies can not be considered "in and of themselves." They are part of a seamless web of aggressive behavior, a single dynamic of aggression against captive subjects and vulnerable nations.

The President believes "history has shown that democratic nations do not start wars." His assumption is that regimes respectful of fundamental personal rights will be shaped by the popular will, and hence will lack an aggressive disposition. His premise — that the popular will is generally pacific — is questionable in particular cases, such as 1914, but it is true enough.

Layne believes that adherents to the Reagan Doctrine have fallen into a "time warp that has transported them back to the early 1950s." He means they have not accommodated their thinking to the relative decline of U.S. power and the lessons of Vietnam. But Layne, who counts George Kennan among the "real" conservatives, seems stuck in the 1940s.

The Reagan Doctrine is "containment plus." It is the postwar policy of containment, plus two insights. The first insight is that the original exposition of containment — by Kennan nearly 40 years ago — was too sanguine in hoping that Russian culture would mellow the Soviet regime. The second insight is that mere containment is, therefore, too passive. It is too compatible with the Brezhnev Doctrine, which holds that all Soviet gains are irreversible.

Thus the Reagan Doctrine is tradition modified in the light of evidence. That is real conservatism.

ART BUCHWALD

Corporal Dynamics needs aid

Since it is Christmastime I am making a fervent plea to my readers for the "Hundred Neediest Defense Contractors."

Art Buchwald

Suspended by the Navy, shunned by the Air Force, and boycotted by the Army, the hundred neediest defense contractors will be wandering the streets for the holidays unless each one of us comes to their aid.

Let me give you a case history of just one of these unfortunate souls. His name is Corporal Dynamics. He was formerly a general and the most successful defense contractor in America — which is why he had a private jet, a chauffeured limousine, and a hot tub in Georgia.

Dynamics was a founder of the military industrial complex and a friend to five presidents. Fifty senators were beholden to him because he gave them PAC money. Then one day tragedy struck.

But let him tell it as he told it to me from his wooden bench in Lafayette Park. "I woke up one morning and discovered that without my knowledge a sales clerk had piled on extra costs for spare parts on our all-weather Army barracks night lights. It wasn't much money — a million here, 10 million there — an occasional 50 million when no one was looking. While each overcharge was chicken feed compared to what the night lights cost, there is always some wise guy in the Pentagon who tries to make a big deal of it.

"As soon as I heard what was going on, I became dumbfounded. I called in the sales clerk and asked him why he had been overcharging our best clients. He said they were getting the stuff too cheaply as it was. Besides since we were the only ones making night lights, how could they say what they cost. After some persuasion, he agreed to drop the light overcharge, provided we jacked up the research and development costs for a Caldron cup we were testing.

"This made perfect fiscal sense, so I told him it was OK with me. Everyone was happy until some malcontent in Army procurement blew the whistle on us.

"The next thing I knew, the FBI demanded to speak to me. Then I demanded to speak to my lawyers. They said they would talk to me in exchange for my house, my car and my unlisted telephone.

"To save my neck, my sales clerk started talking to the Justice Department. Everyone was getting surly so I decided to plead no contest to bilking millions of dollars from the Defense Department. I was tossed out of the company.

"You are now looking at a man who faces the grimmest holidays season of his life. I have no money. I have no job, and because of the scandal I can't play golf at the Army-Navy Country Club for three months. But I still have my pride, and I don't want charity."

I asked him what he did want.

"I'd like my title of general back. Who ever heard of the Defense Department giving a contract to a corporal?"

And so you have heard the story of just one of the neediest contractors in America. Can you enjoy your holidays knowing Corporal Dynamics will be huddled over a grate this festive season?"

His friends have deserted him, the military no longer talks to him, and his wife ran away with an inspector general.

Before you go to sleep this evening think of Corporal Dynamics and put yourself in his place. Try to imagine what it is to be hounded by a power-mad Justice Department.

And then multiply Dynamics by 99 more who are sharing the same grate — contractors who have been indicted, are waiting to be indicted, or have offered to testify against their closest friends. No matter what the status of his case right now, a defense contractor still deserves a decent Christmas.

While all the neediest contractors march to a different drummer, they have one thing in common. They all wanted the biggest buck for the bang.

STATE

A strong winter storm moved out of the southern Rockies and into Texas early today, dumping freezing rain and snow over a wide area of the state, closing schools and snarling rush-hour traffic for the second consecutive day.

More than 60,000 Fort Worth public school students were free of classes after schools were closed about 6 a.m. due to treacherous streets. Classes at the University of Texas at Arlington also were canceled, although other colleges and public schools in North Texas remained open.

Freezing rain, drizzle and some snow flurries — a repeat of Wednesday's nasty weather — were forecast across the state throughout the day. Even far South Texas saw temperatures drop into the low 40s and 30s.

Just 30 miles to the east in Dallas, motorists were spared some of the same problems as rain fell but did not freeze during the height of the rush hour.

Light snow was reported in Austin this morning, and the National Weather Service described a band of precipitation over North Texas from Sherman through Dallas-Fort Worth to Stephenville.

The worst could be yet to come.

The weather service said most portions of North and Central Texas wouldn't get the brunt of the storm until after midday.

Abilene, Amarillo, Fort Worth, Kerrville, Lubbock, Midland, Ozona, Tyler, Brownwood and other Texas cities reported ice on roads and bridges this morning.

Up to two inches of snow is expected in the Fort Worth area and at least four inches farther north when the storm ends around midnight, Harmon said. Temperatures today were expected to stay around the freezing point and in the 20s tonight.

NATION

Freezing temperatures threatened Southern California crops and a record-breaking cold front hit the Plains today as snow pushed across the West and northern New England and rain dotted the South.

Snow and slippery roads prompted travelers' advisories in Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota and Wyoming.

Winter storm warnings for heavy snow were posted for much of west Texas and southern New Mexico, and winter storm watches issued for southern Kansas, most of Missouri, northwest Arkansas, southeastern Iowa and central and southern Illinois.

Bitter cold prevailed from the upper Great Lakes across most of the northern and central Plains. Early morning temperatures ranged from 10 degrees below zero to 10 degrees.

AUSTIN (AP) — Dr. James Vick, of the Men's Athletics Council at Texas said a crowd should not be allowed to interfere with a game as it did at College Station when Texas played Texas A&M in football on Thanksgiving night.

Dr. Vick said he grew up watching Louisiana State football but had never seen a "situation where it was as bad as at A&M."

During one series of downs, Texas quarterback Bret Stafford stepped back from the line of scrimmage because he thought his teammates could not hear his shouted signals and the crowd got even louder.

Vick, referring to a published report that A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill had encouraged A&M fans to yell loudly so that Texas could not hear its signals, said, "I don't think that's an appropriate thing for the coach of a team to do."

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M offensive coordinator Lynn Amedee confirmed Wednesday that Memphis State and Rice have contacted him about their head football coaching jobs, but said it will take "a good position and situation" for him to leave A&M.

Under Amedee, the 1985 Texas A&M offense produced the eighth-largest yardage total in Southwest Conference history, gaining 4,612 yards. The Aggies won the SWC title and will play Auburn in the Cotton Bowl.

"I think it's plain that A&M has a chance to compete for the national championship next year, so this is going to be a great place to be, and that's a strong consideration," Amedee said.

SAN DIEGO — Denny Stolz, coach of the undefeated Bowling Green, was named football coach at San Diego replacing the fired Doug Scovil.

His current team is in Fresno, Calif., preparing for Saturday's California Bowl game against Fresno State. Bowling Green won the Mid-American Conference and Fresno State won the Pacific Coast Athletic Association this year.

ITHACA, N.Y. — The man who invented the one of the modern-type football helmets died Tuesday at the age of 86.

Frank J. Kavanagh of Ithaca was head Cornell University trainer from 1937 to 1966. In 1936, he was a trainer for the U.S. Olympic team during the Berlin games.

Mr. Kavanagh came to the United States in 1921 and studied athletic training at Union College in Schenectady. Before coming to Cornell University in 1937, he was an athletic trainer at St. Lawrence University.

During his years as trainer, he developed several safety devices for athletes, the most notable of which was the football helmet he invented in the 1950s. More recently, he and two colleagues invented a hockey shoulder pad.

FOUNTAIN VALLEY, Calif. — Former Oakland A's pitcher John Lee "Blue Moon" Odom was arrested today for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon after allegedly threatening his wife and holding police at bay for more than six hours.

Police were called to an apartment about Tuesday evening and found Odom holding his wife at gunpoint with a shotgun and threatening to kill her, said Fountain Valley police Sgt. Norm Satterfield.

Phils trade John Denny to Reds

By JOHN NELSON

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies traded Cy Young Award winner John Denny to Cincinnati, while the Kirk Gibson free-agent chase appeared to have hit a "stone wall" at baseball's annual winter meetings Wednesday.

Major league owners, meanwhile, held their first joint meeting of the convention. On the agenda were two potentially controversial issues — expansion and drugs. Commissioner Peter Ueberroth offered no guarantees on expansion but vowed baseball would do something about drugs.

The Phillies traded the 33-year-old Denny, who won the National League Cy Young award in 1983, and minor-league pitcher Jeff Gray to the Reds for pitcher Tom Hume and outfielder Gary Redus, who was unhappy in a reserve role at Cincinnati.

Other trades followed closely behind the Denny deal.

In the first, the San Francisco Giants sent veteran infielder Manny Trillo to the Cubs for infielder Dave Owen.

Winter Meetings

In the second trade, the Baltimore Orioles sent outfielder Gary Roenicke and a player to be named later to the New York Yankees for infielder Rex Hudler and pitcher Rich Bordi.

"Gary had some great years for the Orioles," Orioles General Manager Hank Peters said. "But now with the other outfielders we have ... it just appeared very doubtful that we were going to have much playing time for Gary in the future."

The Yankees also announced later that they had acquired infielder Mike Fischlin from the Cleveland Indians for a player to be named later in the eighth major league deal made at these meetings.

WHILE THE Reds were able to move a discontented player, Gibson's agent was becoming discontent himself by what he saw as a conspiracy among owners to "stonewall" free-agent negotiations.

"There is a very, very unified effort to close off negotiations, specifically with Kirk," said Gibson's agent, Doug Baldwin. Baldwin said he had been unable to arrange meetings with any team here other than the Gibson's old team, the Detroit Tigers.

"We're at an absolute dead end right now," Baldwin said, adding that he expected no negotiations before he left the meetings Thursday.

Gibson, the top name among this year's free agents, batted .287 with 29 homers, 97 RBI and 30 stolen bases in 1985.

The Tigers may not negotiate with Gibson after Jan. 8, and Baldwin said he hoped some other teams would show interest after that deadline.

Mojo running out of space

By BOB BRUNDAGE

Every year, more and more Odessa Permian football accomplishments are posted on the team's billboard in the school parking lot next to the practice field.

It won't be too much longer before something will have to be done about it. After all, one billboard can only hold so many honors.

The most crowded section of the billboard is district, an area the Panthers have dominated 17 times since their first crown in 1960, including six consecutive titles to date.

The Panthers have also won 13 Bi-District games, three areas (a new category) 10 regionals and 10 quarterfinals Saturday, Permian is looking for its eighth semifinal victory and, if that should come, a fifth state title the following week.

The Panthers won their 10th Quarterfinal this weekend against Irving MacArthur, 27-7, and have advanced into the Semifinals against Cypress Fairbanks. Mojo and Cy Fair will square off at 2 p.m. Saturday in Texas Stadium.

Of the final four teams in the Class 5A playoffs, two have been the most dominating. Permian and No. 1 ranked Houston Yates.

The Panthers own a 31-15 victory over Amarillo Palo Duro followed by one-sided shutouts over El Paso Austin, 33-0, and Denton, 41-0.

Permian's opponent this weekend has had a rougher time of things in the playoffs though the victories have been decisive. Cy-Fair opened with a 29-19 win over McCullough and followed with a 14-3 decision over Longview, a 35-7 thrashing ove Louisville and a 20-11 win over Conroe.

Houston Yates, No. 1 in the AP poll since Permian relinquished the honor after a 7-7 tie against Abilene High in the first week of district play, started off the playoffs in destructive style, romping to 51-0 and 43-0 victories over Houston Sam Houston and Springs Woods.

Yates has also downed West Orange Stark, 19-6 and Houston Jones last week, 21-15.

The last member of the Final Four is San Antonio Holmes, a survivor in four games. Holmes edged San Antonio Madison, and followed with close victories over Willowridge, 12-7, Alice, 35-29 and Converse Judson, 30-29.

Judson, as many in Midland still remember, is the team that defeated Midland Lee in the 1983 state championship game in Texas Stadium.

Permian share last year's state title with Beaumont French, coming from 14 down to tie the game at 21-21 in the second half. Because tie-breakers are used only to determine who advances in the playoffs, they aren't used in the season finale. It's a tie the Panthers would like to see people forget this year with a hoped for fifth state title.

Giants ready for 'Playoff' game against Cowboys

Cowboys' Tony Hill, questionable for Sunday.

By FRANK LITSKY
New York Times News Service

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The Giants don't hate the Dallas Cowboys. At the same time, they are not likely to share an evening at Carnegie Hall or exchange Christmas cards.

The Giants and the Cowboys, with identical records of 9-5, will meet Sunday in the Dallas suburb of Irving, Tex. If the Cowboys win, they will win the division title and the Giants will have to make the playoffs as a wild card. If the Giants win, they will make the playoffs and almost surely win the division title.

The Giants have additional reasons for wanting to win.

"It's not that I dislike the Cowboys," said Phil Simms, the Giants' quarterback. "I just like to beat them because of all that glamour attached to them, that bit about being America's Team. Anybody enjoys knocking off the team at the top, so playing the Cowboys this week is like a playoff game."

Coach Bill Parcells of the Giants keeps emphasizing that the Cowboys are only one of four division rivals. Each season, the Giants play two games each, or half their schedule, against those division rivals — the Cowboys, the Washington Redeskins, the Philadelphia Eagles and the St. Louis Cardinals.

"I enjoy all the rivalry games," said Simms. "The Cowboys used to be the big game, but now the Redskins and the Eagles have become high-spirited, too. So how high can this game be?"

Too high for Parcells's taste. He wants his players to approach this game like all others. He does not want them to say demeaning things that will land on the Cowboys' bulletin board.

"I caution the team about that all the time," said Parcells. "I think the media makes more of that than the players do. But those things are nice to read and everyone gets excited."

The Giants and the Cowboys met 10 weeks ago in Giants Stadium. In the week before the game, Dextor Clinkscale, a Cowboys' safety, derided the Giants as unworthy contenders for a division title. He said Simms was overrated and had done little to prove he ranked among the league's best quarterbacks.

Sunday Showdown

THE COWBOYS won, 30-29, but it was more of a case of the Giants' losing than the Cowboys' winning. The Giants led, 26-14, with 17 minutes remaining, only to turn over the ball in the fourth quarter on an interception, a fumble by Simms and a fumbled snap between Bart Oates and Simms. All led to Cowboys' field goals, the deciding one with 2 minutes 19 seconds left.

Karl Nelson, the Giants' offensive tackle, is not about to say nasty things about the Cowboys. He also is not saying anything nice about them.

"When we played them earlier this season," said Nelson, "there was a lot of talk back and forth about how we don't like each other. Basically, that's true. I don't have anything personal against them, but certain people talk a lot, like Dextor Clinkscale before that game.

"When you have two teams fighting for the same spot, like we have been the last two years, it's going to create animosity. Different people react in different ways. Some people get quiet. Some start shooting off their mouths. I'm a quiet person. Offensive linemen can't be hyping and yelling all that garbage and play the position I play."

AS USUAL, Nelson will line up against Ed (Too Tall) Jones, the Cowboys' defensive end.

"He's a quiet person," said Nelson. "I've played three games against him and I don't think he's said more than five words. I think the only thing he's ever said was after a game when he would say, 'That was a good game.'"

"I thought that game was a little chaotic on both sides," said Parcells of the first game this season. "I don't think either side felt it was ever in control."

Now the Giants have another chance. As Jim Burt, the Giants' nose tackle, pointed out, the Giants are not complaining.

"In July," said Burt, "if someone had said, 'Would you take this position at this point of the season?' I'd have said, 'Hell, yes.'"

In Dallas, the Cowboys said three players were questionable for Sunday. They are Tony Hill, the wide receiver, with a strained left hamstring; Jeff Rohrer, a starting outside linebacker, with a sprained right ankle, and Howard Richards, a backup offensive tackle, with a strained left hamstring. Danny White, the starting quarterback, is listed as probable despite a stiff neck and a bruised back.

Lee, MHS face El Paso opponents

Both Midland High and Midland Lee will tip off in the Tall City Girls basketball tournament Friday looking for that right combination of intensity, hard work and good luck that will put them on the right foot when they begin district play next week.

It's likely only one will find it, at least this weekend. To do it, they will have to climb through a strong, eight-team tournament field.

The two-day, tournament starts at 1:30 p.m Friday when Snyder and Denver City tip off. Del Rio and Big Spring play at 3:15, then Midland High gets in on the action at 5 p.m. against El Paso Riverside. The Rebels play in the finale of the opening day at 6:45 p.m. versus El Paso Bel Air. All games will be held at Midland College's Chaparral Center.

"I don't think there are any weak teams in there, just about anybody can win it," Rebel coach Shirley Stephenson said.

FOR THE Rebels, the tournament marks their first home appearance and gives them a chance to get thier feet on the ground before the all-important District 4-5A play begins Monday. On Monday, Lee will travel to Odessa High, while the Bulldogs host Odessa Permian, both at 8 p.m.

Girls Tall City

But first Lee, 4-3 after a tough loss at Andrews last Saturday, would like to turn things around this weekend.

"I have to wait and evaluate us after this weekend, we haven't played in town yet, and sometimes it's different on the road than at home," Stephenson said. "I'll have a lot better idea about us after this weekend. I'd better because we start district play next week.

"I thought we played really good at Andrews, lost by three but they're unbeaten and we were playing over there. I was pleased with the way we played, though it's bad to say you're pleased by a loss, but we could've won it. Some things didn't go our way at the end and we lost it at the free throw line."

As usual, Lee spreads the scoring around, with no player topping the double figure mark and 10 players regularly reaching the scoring column. Becky White leads the way at 7.6 a game, but Roz Eaden (7.4) and LaVette Wallace (7.3) aren't too far behind.

MHS IS going into the tournament on a psychological "right foot" as it is, after 54-43 victory over Hobbs, N.M., on Tuesday. The 'Dogs are 4-4 for the season after snapping a nagging three-game losing streak. Amy Cumings had her best night of the season with a 19-point performance, most for an MHS player this year.

"Psychologically, it's a good factor if you play well in the tournament on Saturday, and then we go right into district play on Monday," MHS coach Jane Young. "We won it last year, and we'd sure love to win it again, but there are some good teams in it."

Walton and Ditka share common background

By GERALD ESKENAZI
New York Times News Service

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Joe Walton was talking about Mike Ditka, and Walton was, in a sense, talking about himself.

They go back to western Pennsylvania, to a time and place when the steel mills were running and the coal was being mined.

Walton is from Beaver Falls and Ditka is from Carnegie. They went to rival high schools, but both wound up playing tight end at the University of Pittsburgh. Ditka was a freshman the year after Walton graduated.

Now, for the first time, they will glare at each other across the field as rival head coaches when the 10-4 Jets, Walton's team, face the Ditka-led, 13-1 Bears on Saturday at Giants Stadium.

With a 34-21 record, the 46-year-old Ditka is the only Bears' coach to have a winning career mark since George Halas stepped down after the 1967 season. Walton, with a 24-22 record, is the only coach in Jets' history with a winning career mark.

It could be a day the Jets guarantee themselves a playoff spot. If they win and the Denver Broncos lose later that day to the Kansas City Chiefs, then the Jets would be, at least, a wild-card team. If they lose, they will have to wait until the last week of the season, when they face the Browns.

"Knowing Mike doesn't help," said Walton. "The only thing that helps is what you've seen on game films."

WALTON, who will be 50 years old on Sunday, recalled he once coached Ditka. It was 1957, and Walton had just finished his first year with the Washington Redskins. Ditka was a freshman at Pitt. Walton's old Pitt coach, John Michelosen, asked if he would help with spring practice.

"Before I got to Pitt there wasn't such a thing as a tight end," said Walton. "It was just an end. We also played defensive end."

And what did he recall about Ditka? Did Walton know even then that Ditka would become a head coach?

"I don't recall," said Walton. "And anyway, are those things they write in the high school yearbooks ever accurate?"

But Walton does recall the life they led.

"People were always working very hard in the mills," he said. "The mills were all over. Those towns in that area are all the same. If you've been in one, you've been in all."

Even though he was several years ahead of Ditka, Walton remembered that "he was a great high school player." In fact, Walton admits, "I always thought he might have been the best tight end I saw."

Walton, who came to the Redskins in 1957, played in the era of Ron Kramer, Pete Retzlaff and John Mackey — the new breed of tight ends.

Walton was the Redskins' second-round draft choice in 1957. Ditka was the Bears' top pick in 1961. Walton had a distinguished seven-year pro career with the Redskins and the Giants, and Ditka played in five Pro Bowls in his 12-year career.

"It's a hard team to get ready for and it's a short week," said Walton. "The Bears have a lot of multiple fronts — and I would hope they're having trouble preparing for us."

LANCE MEHL, who cannot practice because of a badly sprained arch, hobbled out to work Tuesday with the aid of cane. He even did jumping-jack stretching exercises with the cane. ... Because of injuries to defensive backs, the Jets' kickoff teams will not be composed of the fastest players. "When you have a lot of injuries to the secondary, that usually hurts the special teams," said Larry Pasquale, the coach of those squads. One of his key injuries there is to Larry Flowers, usually the first player downfield, who has a sprained ankle. The team further has been further weakened by the loss for the season of Rusty Guilbeau, the linebacker, who underwent knee surgery. ... Bobby Jackson, the left cornerback, said after watching films of the Bears: "You can take two average corners, and put them on the Chicago Bears, and they go to the Pro Bowl.

No autographs until airlines give benefits

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Players for the Portland Trail Blazers have joined a labor dispute over rights to frequent-traveler benefits awarded by airlines.

Jim Paxson, the players' representative for the National Basketball Association team, says the Portland players will not autograph basketballs for the team until the players receive the benefits.

Players for the Phoenix Suns took the same stance, saying the benefits of such accounts, which are set up in the players' names, should go to the players, not to the front offices of NBA teams.

The benefits, based on the number of miles flown, often include free airline tickets.

Tuesday, Paxson took the issue to Harry Glickman, Blazers' executive vice president.

"My response was that I will not succumb to Larry Fleisher's blackmail," Glickman said of the head of the players' union. "They chose the wrong guy in the wrong organization. I have no dispute with the players. My dispute is with Larry Fleisher."

"We are taking the position that those are our miles," Paxson said. "They (Blazers management) say the miles are theirs."

Paxson said the players will not autograph the basketballs for the team — balls the team passes on to charities for fund-raising auctions. However, he said the players would sign basketballs for charities that approached them directly.

Michigan, Notre Dame crash Ivy

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS Jr.
New York Times News Service

In 1969, the centennial of college football, the list of schools that had won the most games over the years was topped by Yale, Princeton, Harvard and Penn. A decade and a half later, that Ivy League bloc has been pierced by Michigan and Notre Dame, and the ancient leaders that sprang from the sport's cradle are now facing additional threats.

Yale is still No. 1 on the list, but Michigan has surpassed Princeton and Penn, and the Wolverines are closing in on Harvard, the current runner-up. Notre Dame is fifth, having moved ahead of the Quakers, who might be passed by Texas as well before next season is over.

The new order in college football is as follows:

	Years	Victories
1. Yale	113	733.
2. Harvard	111	668.
3. Michigan	106	664.
4. Princeton	116	658.
5. Notre Dame	97	646.
6. Penn	109	645.
7. Texas	93	640.
8. Alabama	91	614.
9. Penn State	99	604.
10. Nebraska	96	602.

(Denotes bowl game remaining this season.)

THE IVIES' edge in years played has been offset in part by self-imposed restrictions that hamper their ability to defeat nonleague opponents, and in part by bowl-less seasons that are invariably shorter than those of their rivals on the list. Those other teams have generally been playing 12 games a season, including a bowl trip, and in 1983 Penn State and Nebraska each squeezed in a 13th by meeting in the Kickoff Classic. Then there is Michigan, which in the 1986 calendar year could play as many as 15 games: the Fiesta Bowl on New Year's Day; the Kickoff Classic, which might extend the Wolverines an invitation for next August; 12 games in the regular season (elongated by a schedule-capping journey to Hawaii), and perhaps another bowl trip before the year is out.

Still, the Ivies have no grounds to bemoan the longer seasons of the current powerhouses. Why? Because the former powerhouses included Yale, 16-0 in 1894; Penn, 15-0 in 1897, and Harvard, 12-0 in 1901.

A COUPLE of veterans named Dave were on the job yet again over the weekend, extending their respective pro leagues' longest current streaks in consecutive games played. These are the leaders among active players in the National Basketball Association:

Dave Corzine, Chicago	446
Bill Laimbeer, Detroit	422
James Donaldson, Dallas	371
Eddie Johnson, Sacramento	275
Michael Cooper, L.A. Lakers	274

And in the National Football League:

Dave Dalby, L.A. Raiders	203
Jan Stenerud, Minnesota	200
Charlie Joiner, San Diego	79
Dave Jennings, Jets	175
Mark Moseley, Washington	161

THAT SPORTS can — and should — be utilized to bring people of differing lands to a closer understanding of each other is an ethos that gets a lot of lip service, but Alberto Juantorena and Fred Newhouse are hoping that their own endeavor won't end there.

Juantorena, the great Cuban runner whose achievements included a sweep of the 400 and 800 meters at the 1976 Olympics in Montreal, and Newhouse, the American who finished right behind him in the 400, have been close friends ever since then. At The Athletics Congress's convention in Houston the other day, they announced that they were working on plans for an exchange program between the national track and field federations of the two countries, which together customaary field the best athletes in the Western Hemisphere.

"We have received a pledge from the Republic of Cuba to be a friend of T.A.C.," Newhouse said. "We hope to be holding friendly competitions with Cuba soon. The program might also entail coaching clinics, it might entail our coaches' going to Cuba to share with their coaches and athletes our knowledge in their weak events, or it might entail their coaches' coming here to share their knowledge with us in our weak events."

The chilly confines

Bears foes are likely to have as much trouble with the weather as the Bears defense during playoff games in Chicago this upcoming January. Here are averages of 1985 weather conditions for Jan. 4-12.

Some catching up after vacation

While rumbling through some post vacation notes...

Can you imagine where Odessa Permian would be in 1985 without one Greg Anderson? If there is one player in District 4-5A that you would want on your football team with a game on the line, it is Anderson. He is the difference in a current 13-0-1 Permian record. The Panthers might be 8-2-1 without him. There is not a better gamer in high school football today. Just ask Bryan Love, Irving Mac-Arthur's defensive player of the year in the Dallas area who was looked silly man-to-man against Anderson...

I went on a brief vacation with Midland High's basketball team undefeated and returned only to find out they had lost three games to H. Ross Perot's no pass, no play rule. I don't like the rule, but the situation at Midland High should have never happened. Midland seems intent on following the new rule to the letter and that is commendable, but if a player is ineligible, a situation should never arise where he is in a game.

Who is to blame? That's a tough question. When checked in the fifth week by MHS coach Jack Stephenson, the kid had an 82 average in the subject in question. It came on Thanksgiving weekend and grades were supposed to be finalized on Thursday — Thanksgiving Day.

That is a problem to be sure, but can you imagine what would have happened if Midland Lee or Odessa Permian had been disqualified that same weekend in the football playoffs by an oversight like that? Both those teams had grades confirmed by Thanksgiving. Heads would have rolled if it had happened in football. Steps have to be taken to insure that nothing like this ever — ever — happens again. Midland High's administration should address the situation in a serious manner. One egg on the face is enough...

Did Texas Tech really help themselves by firing Jerry Moore and hiring David McWilliams? Here's hoping that the move is a sound one, but it doesn't look promising on paper. First, Tech athletic director T. Jones hired his former next door neighbor and that's not a good idea as far as this corner is concerned. If McWilliams doesn't work out, how can you fire McWilliams and keep Jones? Second, McWilliams has only had head coaching experience at Abilene High where he wasn't a winner. Hook 'Em Raiders...

McWilliams is getting a head start on recruiting for Tech by staying with the Longhorns through UT's bowl game with Air Force, thanks to Fred Akers, who has problems of his own. Emory Bellard left Texas as an assistant for A&M's head job with Darrell Royal's blessings under similiar circumstances...

How often do you see a team get beat 50-24 on one weekend and play for a division championship on the next? That's the wonderful world of the Dallas Cowboys...Is there anyway to fire an NFL owner instead of the coach? Houston's Bud Adams would be a primary choice...

This year's free agent crop in the world of baseball is screaming collusion as the megabucks seem to be drying up. In previous years, Detroit's Kirk Gibson would have owned the bank, but is getting little attention this year. I'm just wondering why the owners didn't do this a long time ago. And as far as the dry well is concerned, that's baloney. Gibson has been offered $1.3 million dollars a year for three years, the richest contract in Tiger history. He responded, "I would vomit if I accepted what they're offering." Free agents have not been the answer to quick pennants. That's a problem players should look at first before crying foul...

Former Midland College "SuperSpud" Anthony Webb is playing for the Atlanta Hawks for the minimum NBA salary of $70,000. At last report, that is better wages than what MC coach Jerry Stone was paying...

Midland Lee's new all-weather track is currently being installed and new Rebel track coach Eddie Wolski just stands and looks at it like a new born baby...

Former Lee track coach Sam Volpe, who retired last spring, has returned from his first fall vacation to the New England area. Ask him if he learned to walk while on vacation...

And here's one for the books. KOSA-TV will not be able to show the Permian-Cypress-Fairbanks semifinal playoff game on tape delay due to objection of the Cy-Fair team. What objection could Cy-Fair have of a tape delay in West Texas? Cy-Fair may have just given the Panthers another reason to get pumped up Saturday...

Terry Williamson is the Assistant Sports Editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Cy-Fair nixes TV for Mojo

AUSTIN (AP) — Odessa football fans won't get to see Permian's Saturday schoolboy playoff game on television because the opposition doesn't want them to.

Television station KOSA of Odessa wanted to tape the Saturday night game and show it Sunday. Permian and Cypress-Fairbanks meet in Irving in the semifinals of the 5A football playoffs.

Under the University Interscholastic League's contract with an advertising firm that handles coverage of playoff games, a contest cannot be tape-delay telecast unless both schools approve, according to UIL Director Bailey Marshall.

Permian officials said OK. Cypress-Fairbanks, fearing the telecast could serve as a good scouting report for a future opponent, said no, according to Marshall.

The videotape could provide far more information than the two-week-old game films that are exchanged by opponents. Marshall said Cypress-Fairbanks said it would permit the telecast if it was delayed until Wednesday, but the Odessa station wanted to air it Sunday.

Cypress-Fairbanks officials also feared the tape delay could hurt attendance, according to district spokesman Larry Peil.

Marshall said some athletic directors might push next year for a ban on all tape-delay telecasts of high school football games.

Live telecasts are barred unless the game is sold out 48 hours before kick-off.

Yukica sues to keep Dartmouth coaching post

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — Athletes, teams, schools agents — anyone with a sports contract — is likely to have an eye on a court case in northern New Hampshire where a judge has been asked to decide if Dartmouth College can fire its football coach.

In 33 years of coaching, Joe Yukica doesn't recall any football coach who has responded to his firing by suing to keep his job, but he doesn't see it as a landmark case. He just wants to coach the final year of his contract.

However, others think the outcome could affect more than Yukica and Dartmouth.

"I think the whole athletic world will be watching," said Athletic Director Gene Corrigan of Notre Dame, which recently replaced football coach Gerry Faust but only after he had completed his five-year contract. "These things are always done for money, not for work."

Sports lawyer and agent Bob Wolff of Boston said the public is confused because contracts in sports don't seem to be honored.

"Everybody else knows that if you sign a contract, you're expected to live up to its obligations, even if it's distasteful," Wolff said. "Why nobody up to this point has brought this forward (in sports), I don't know. But I believe in the sanctity of a contract, so good luck, Joe Yukica."

Boston College Coach Jack Bicknell, who will testify on Yukica's behalf, said, "I know coaches who have been fired, and others who have walked out on contracts; it's not a good thing. Maybe I'm old fashioned, but it used to be a contract was a contract. Nowadays it's a contract until something else comes up, or you change your mind.

"Yukica is not the kind of guy who's flitting around. He obviously feels strongly that he's fulfilled his end, and expects them to fulfill theirs."

Yukica, who was fired Nov. 29 after eight seasons at Dartmouth, has sued Athletic Director Ted Leland to continue as coach for the 1½ years left on his contract.

"There is a purpose to a contract," Yukica said. "I think they owe me that year to coach. The contract says explicitly 'head football coach.'"

Leland has said the Ivy League school will honor the financial arrangements of the contract, but will find another coach for the 1986 season. He declined further comment, but his lawyer, Thomas Rath of Concord, called the case straightforward.

"We say you do not get specific performance in personal service contracts," he said. "The contract says head football coach, but the remedy if Dartmouth wants him to leave is we have to pay him. His contract is not a term of office."

Rath pointed out that from his research, no one has ever questioned such a firing before, and "that tells you something" about the merits of the suit.

Yukica has asked the Grafton County Superior Court to issue a temporary injunction preventing Dartmouth from hiring another coach. A hearing has been set for Friday in Haverhill.

Beside Bicknell, others scheduled to testify on Yukica's behalf are old friends Joe Paterno, coach of Penn State's top-ranked college football team, and former Dartmouth coach Bob Blackman, who later coached at Illinois and Cornell before retiring.

Yukica said he has gotten calls from other coaches throughout the country offering their support. He said he also sought the advice of Bo Schembechler of Michigan.

Aggies romp over Prairie View

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Winston Crite, a 6-7 junior, scored a season-high 26 points and pulled down a season-high 15 rebounds in leading Texas A&M to an 88-60 victory over winless Prairie View in a non-conference basketball game Wednesday night.

The Aggies improved to 4-3. Prairie View, which has yet to play a home game this season, fell to 0-6.

The Aggies rolled to a 46-25 halftime advantage and were never headed in the final home game of 1985.

Don Marbury scored 18 points, while Jimmie Gilbert had 17 and Paul Crawford 10 for A&M. Cecil Sams led Prairie View with 16, and David Morris added 12.

The Aggies shot an even 50 percent, hitting 33 of 66 field goal attempts, while Prairie View made only 23 of 56 attempts, for a 41.1 percentage.

The Aggies also controlled the boards, pulling down 50 rebounds to 28 for the Panthers. Gilbert was next to Crite with 14 rebounds.

Georgetown 76, New Mexico 51

LANDOVER, Md. — David Wingate scored 21 points and Reggie Williams 14 as fifth-ranked Georgetown knocked the Lobos from the ranks of college basketball's unbeaten teams.

The victory was Georgetown's fourth of the season without a loss and marked the Hoyas 34th in a row outside of the Big East Conference in a streak dating back to December 1983.

New Mexico, which had shot 58 percent from the floor in winning its first five games, never got on track against the Hoyas.

Scarborough, returning to the Washington area where he was raised, led the visitors with 12 points, and Brown had 10.

Texas 82, Oral Roberts 66

AUSTIN — Texas center John Brownlee poured in 23 points and pulled down 12 rebounds Wednesday night to help break the Longhorns' two-game losing streak.

The Longhorns stopped the taller Titans cold in the first half, holding ORU to nine of 24 first-half shots and one free throw for 19 points at the half to 36 for Texas.

In the second half, the Titans pulled to within 11 points on Maurice Smith's rebound tip-in with 5:23 left to play, but could pull no closer. Patrick Fairs added 19 points for the Longhorns. Woody Jones led ORU's scorers with 14 points, followed by Mark Wilson with 13 and Smith with 11.

Fairs' two free throws two minutes later gave the Longhorns their biggest lead of the game at 75-53.

Fairs, the Longhorns' leading scorer with 19 points per game, was held scoreless until the 3:27 mark in the first half.

PHILS

"We all know what's going on," Baldwin said. "The owners have obviously unilaterally changed the rules without going back to the negotiating table. We just have to be patient."

Ueberroth said both expansion and drugs were discussed at a day-long session of American and National league owners.

On drugs, he said, "We have learned that the players association is formulating its own drug program. We are encouraged by that."

The issue of drugs was of more immediate concern. Indicative of the importance that baseball attaches to this matter, Ueberroth devoted much of his "state of the sport" speech the day before to drug abuse.

At least 10 teams already have said they would begin including drug testing clauses in future long-term contracts.

BEGINNING in January, Ueberroth will meet with the 26 players who either testified or were implicated in the Pitsburgh drug trial of Curtis Strong last summer. He was asked what level of discipline he might impose on the players.

"I won't know until I meet with each individual," Ueberroth said. "It would be unfair to prejudge."

Owners also listened to a report from the Long Range Planning Committee on expansion. Some sources indicated that the 12 cities which applied for expansion last month in New York could be ranked by the committee, but Ueberroth said no such rankings were made.

"We hope we are sending them (the expansion candidates) a clear signal that we are addressing the problem," Ueberroth said. "There are no guarantees, but we are discussing it."

He said no timetable was set, and "we'll be in touch with them when we're ready for the next step. We'll probably have more meetings. We didn't come to any clear conclusion on the next step."

One item acted upon was the approval of the sale of the Pittsburgh Pirates by John Galbreath to Malcolm "Mac" Prine. "It'll probably take a few years of losses to get this thing rebuilt," Prine said. "This is a public service operation. We'd be very happy if we could stabilize this thing."

ON THE rest of the trading front, the Texas Rangers reportedly were close to a deal that would send outfielder Gary Ward to Kansas City for left-handed pitcher Bud Black, Boston was still interested in striking a deal with the Chicago White Sox for Tom Seaver, and the New York Yankees reportedly were working on a deal that would send designated hitter Don Baylor to the White Sox for pitcher Britt Burns.

Royals Manager Dick Howser said the right-handed hitting Ward, with 15 homers and 70 RBI last year, would precisely fill his needs.

"We need some punch," Howser said. "We want a power-hitting outfielder, preferably right-handed. Anybody we deal with is going to get a heck of a pitcher in return because that's where we are right now."

The White Sox also were negotiating to retain their free-agent catcher, Carlton Fisk. The White Sox reportedly want to sign Fisk, and then trade him to the Yankees.

The Associated Press, however, learned Wednesday that Fisk has thus far refused to give the White Sox any assurance he will waive his right to turn down a trade. If Fisk re-signs, he will be a 5-and-10 man — five years with the White Sox and 10 years in one league — and thus will have the right to veto any trade.

The Denny deal allowed the Phillies to cut his $1.1 million salary from their payroll while adding a player in Redus who is expected to take over in left field. That would move Von Hayes to first base and Mike Schmidt back to third.

Sebrenia Finch, the transfer from Stanton, still leads the team in scoring with an 11.9 per game average, while Cumings has snuck into double figures with a 10.6 average. Nadine Hill also contributes 9.5 a game.

"OUR GIRLS have really rose to the occasion every time we've needed them to play," Young said. "We don't just have one player that dominates the whole game, I've got five girls that can play pretty well together...three or four off our volleyball team, and they play well as unit.

"This tournament is something I know our girls are looking forward to since we just beat Hobbs."

The Tall City Tournament concludes with games beginning at 8:30 a.m. Saturday. The consolation finals will be at 5 p.m., the third place game at 6:45 and the finals to start at 8:30. All games will be at the Chaparral Center.

Call of the Yukon

It isn't necessary to go to Alaska

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If you yell "Hike", it doesn't necessarily mean you're the kind of quarterback who directs the Dallas Cowboys or Texas Aggies.

And if the big Malamute out front, responds to your "Hike," and surges forward in unison with the other 15 powerful Huskies in the team, it doesn't mean you are off to Fairbanks, Ketchikan or the Klondike.

"Hike" is the termed used today in place of "Mush," which apparently English-speaking drivers misunderstood when they heard French drivers order their dogs to "Marchez" in the Yukon of old.

And you don't have to go all the way to Alaska to drive a dog team.

ED BLECHNER, a 37-year-old Vermonter, offers Call of the Wild trips right in the Green Mountain State, which at this time of year is a gross misnomer

He calls his business Malamute Power of Vermont and he takes people into the wilderness on dogsled trips on most weekends from December through March.

A weekend trip might be to Craftsbury or Groton State Forest. Longer trips are offered in the Adirondacks, Maine and Canada.

It s all very educational. Blechner shows his clients, many rank tenderfoots, how to stake out the dogs on a picket line, set up a canine tailgate buffet, and how to harness the dogs for run.

Each animal gets a special mixture, and is called by name when its particular concoction is ready.

For the drivers, gear is checked, first aid and hypothermia discussed and after a pancake breakfast with real maple syrup, they hit the trail.

The dogs draw the "pulks", Scandinavian toboggans for toting people and gear. Riding the sleds is called "skijoring", another Scandinavian term.

BLECHNER'S business is a type of fantasy, something like the popular spring training camps started by Randy Hundley in which hero-worshiping doctors, lawyers, merchants, salesmen, stockbrokers and such pay to play with old time heroes. In Hundley's case, he offered an opportunity to play with the 1969 Chicago Cubs....Ernie Banks, Billie Williams, Bill Hands, Ron Santo, Don Kessinger...

Blechner was bitten as a reader of North Country adventure novels and fantasizing at what it might be like.

In college he won an Outward Bound scholarship and learned of the challenge of the outdoors. A National Outdoor Leadership School course in the Wyoming mountains honed his outdoor skills and after college he worked as an Outward Bound instructor.

But even then, he wasn't prepared on how to handle his first Malamute. Blechner discovered that as a house dog, Ari was mischievious. "But once I started working with Ari more, in harness, I realized that he became much more trainable and more responsive. I realized, as we increased the bond by working together, it just made it a lot easier to get along with each other."

According to Blechner, the cruelest thing an owner can do is coop his dog up in an apartment. "I treat them like dogs," he says, "that doesn't mean you mistreat them, but it means you understand their needs are different from your needs."

IF YOU want to see the dog sled races, which begin in the morning and last well into the afternoon, the schedule is Waitsfield, Jan. 4-5; Stowe, Jan. 18-19; Newport, Feb. 1-2; and Elmore, March 1-2.

If you are more adventurous, special overnight trips with sleds, dogs and winter camping range from $295 to $435 per person. Day trips cost from $65 to $75 per person.

Blechner even has training workshops for persons who own dogs.

For information, contact Blechner at RR 1, Box 442A, Williston, Vt. 05495 lor call 802 482 2548.

Nordics push Alpines

If you want to find out what the real outdoors is all about, try Nordic skiing, advocates of the fast growing alternative to Alpine skiing suggest.

And while most any ski resort area worth its salt has its own touring trail, some specialize in cross-country skiing trails through aspen and pine stands in a silent, secluded wonderland.

Colorado is one of the most popular Nordic ski areas with 26 destination resorts and 18 Nordic day centers.

The C Lazy U Ranch at Granby isn't exactly typical. It wears a five-star rating in which personalized service and treatment are stressed.

The area offers 25 miles of machine-maintained track for guests, most of whom fall in the beginner and intermediate categories. For advanced skiers, several tours are offered with the most challenging a climb to Park View Mountain, close to 13,000 feet.

Home Ranch, 19 miles of north of Steamboat Springs, offers a more rugged atmosphere, a log cabin, down comforters and cross-beam ceilings and, perhaps, best of all, family style meals in the main lodge.

Fifteen miles of cross country trails are offered.

Other special destination resorts are Redstone Inn, a restored historic hotel near Aspen; Inn of the Black Wolf, a rustic lodge with feather beds, shared bath and homey atmosphere; Waunita Hot Springs Ranch, tucked away on a mountain at 9,000 feet; Land Inn at Montezuma, where lodging choices are either a dormitory or the hayloft or barn.

Vermont also offers a wide variety of cross-country experiences, with more than 50 ski touring centers that provide machine-groomed and track-set trails in what is billed as some of the world's most scenic Nordic terrain.

Other areas include Green Mountain National Forest and state parks where skiers may make the most of unused roads and logging trails.

And, if you are really a glutton for punishment, there is the Catamount Trail. When completed, it will be the longest ski trail in the country, linking a series of touring centers and inns the length of Vermont.

The Catamount Trail, which can be traversed the length of the state even now, although sections are not supervised, is subject of a feature in this week's Sports Illustrated.

Pre-Christmas snow falls bring early Holiday joy

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Christmas came early for skiers who are contemplating vacations on the slopes during the holidays.

Early week snows assured a good base for the holidays and now if Santa Claus will just freshen things up with a little powder each night no one could ask for more.

Taos and Santa Fe offer the best prospects in New Mexico with 50 inches midway at Taos while 75 miles to the south, Santa Fe has 30 inches.

Wolf Creek, located on the Continental Divide in south central Colorado, as always, boasts the most snow of anybody with 119 inches after a six inch fall Tuesday night.

Purgatory, picking up 10 inches, has 62 midway while a seven-inch fall at Telluride where the slopes are so steep it takes a lot of snow to do the job, there is a 45 inch covering.

Samplings elsewhere: Steamboat Springs, 46 inches; Crested Butte, 46; Vail, 34 and Aspen, 38.

While the Alps are making a big pitch for the American skier this year with weeklong trips at bargain baseman prices, Colorado, and New Mexico, are expecting big years and have prepared accordingly.

New Mexico

Red River— 11,500 vertical feet) offers 40 trails, 37 per cent for beginners with weekend day lift rates $19 adults and $11 children.

Santa Fe— (1,700 vertical feet) boasts the seventh highest ski site elevation in the U.S. with Tesque Bowl offering a blend of intermediate and advanced trails. Also the north face will offer some new runs such as Azmataz, Big Rock Desperado, Double Eagle V and Pope's Snows.

The La Casa lodge complex has undergone a $600,000 expansion that has turned the ticket office area into a mini-mall. And for the skier who likes a challenge, the number of expert runs has been increased to 17.

Lift tickets are $20, $13 with a lift system that can handle 6,400 an hour.

Ski Apache— In case you hadn't heard, Sierra Blanca is no more. It's now Ski Apache, still owned and operated by the Mescalero Apaches. Located 16 miles out of Ruidoso, the vertical drop is 1,700 feet, if you survive the perilous access drive to the base area where some $1.6 in improvements have been made. The West Basin double chair lift has been replaced by a triple to accommodate 1,200 additional skiers an hour and a grand total of 12,600 overall. Still hardly enough on busy weekend.

Two advanced runs have been added and lift rates are $23, $16.

Taso Ski Valley— 2,600 vertical feet lies in a sheltered dead-end mountain area that is the secret to its abundance of dry snow. 330 inches averaged over the last two years. Ski packages are available in the Valley or in Taos 19 miles away. Valley packages include lessons, walking access to the slopes and gourmet dining. Two new runs have been added in the West Basin, bringing the total to 73 runs with 52 advanced and expert level. Lift tickets are $25, $13.

Colorado

Breckenridge— A 127 year old mining town noted for its historic architecture, Breckenridge boasts more expert trails than any other Colorado resort as well as 26 miles of intermediate skiing and the largest cross-country ski center in the state. Lift tickets are $26 for adults.

Vail— With 18 lifts, 75 new acres of skiing and four new quadruple chairlifts, there are now 18 lifts serving 60 miles of slopes and trails on one mountain. Degree of difficulty is listed as 33 per cent easiest, 36 more difficult and 31 expert.

Just 10 miles away, Beaver Creek emphasizes lack of lift lines and is designed for beginner and intermediate skiers. Lift tickets at both places are $27.

Steamboat— With 91 intermediate trails and a lift capacity of 27,130 per hour, Steamboat offers skiers in the remote northwest corner of Colorado, 157 miles from Denver, good snow. Lift tickets are $25 a day.

Purgatory— Embarking on its 21st season, Purgatory has spent more than $23 million in improvements this season alone and The Legends, 120 acres of intermediate and expert tree and glade skiing, is the something new on the slopes added this season. In all, there are 600 acres for skiers with 50 per cent intermediate and 30 per cent expert. Just 26 miles from Durango, slopeside and in town lodging is plentiful. Lift tickets are $22.

Copper Mountain— New trails and two new chairlifts have been added and 19 lifts now serve 1,156 skiable acres. Copper Mountain is part of the Breckenridge, Copper Mountain, Keystone and Arapahoe Basin area. It is convenient to Denver and Stapleton airport, just 75 miles east.

Wolf Creek— "More snow than anybody" is the boast of the top of the world area 26 harrowing winter miles east of Pagoasa Springs. Last year, snows lasted so long that the resort opened for weekend skiing as late as May. Some 465 inches fall annually and is a ideal place to become acquainted with powder skiing. An additional 25 acres have been cut this year, the parking lot enlarged and base facilities include a full service cafeteria. For lodgings, however, the skier must go down the mountain to Pagosa Springs or Oak Ridge.

Telluride— Four new chairlifts and 110 acres of new runs make this one of the fastest growing ski areas in the west. Telluride now has 43 trails over 600 acres with 15 per cent beginner, 50 percent intermediate and 35 pecent expert to suicide. Even if you can't get down once you get to the top, the scenery is as spectacular as you'll find anywhere. Lift tickets are $22. And the old mining town is now served by a new airport.

Your horoscope

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Stop worrying about things that may never happen and count your many blessings! A child plays an important role in your plans. Give romance a second — and even a third — chance. A financial turnaround provides the money for you to form a partnership or start a small business. Ask for loved ones' consent and cooperation. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Secretary of State George Shultz, author Ross MacDonald, singer-actor-TV host John Davidson, Dick Van Dyke, the New York Yankees' Dale Berra, actor Van Heflin, columnist Drew Pearson, First Lady Mary Todd Lincoln.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A legal matter will soon be settled in your favor. Follow a co-worker's valuable suggestion and you could reap new profits. Romance occupies your thoughts. An intelligent compromise is needed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Relinquish worn-out items and sell any ventures you are unable to manage efficiently. A stranger could try to pull the wool over your eyes. Do business only with people who have good reputations.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Check for shortages. Those low on cash should give serious thought to making their own Christmas gifts. You are more creative than you realize! Pay attention to what a special person is telling you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good day for handling joint finances. Go over investment schemes with mate or partner. Avoid acting on impulse. A generation gap disappears when you listen to a teenager.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Moonlighting will provide extra cash for the upcoming holiday. Cook and freeze special goodies in advance so that you may spend more time with the family over the holidays. Be very discreet in romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Deal directly with an influential person who was behind. Success's good billing is the key to business or financial success. A real estate transaction could prove highly profitable. Double-check all figures.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Devote as much time and attention as you can to home life. Family members will not oppose your plans. Your intellect may not be as sharp as usual today. Stick to routine matters.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Not a good day for speculation. Avoid entering into a secret liaison. Your intuition is right on target. There is no point in fretting over things you cannot control.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A "sure thing" may not be what it appears. Do not donate to a charity unless it is legitimate. A former flame re-enters the picture. Tackle home repairs only if qualified.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A give-and-take attitude endears you to an influential older individual. Go ahead and ask for a favor. Arguments should be kept to a minimum. A change in lifestyle soothes jangled nerves.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An out-of-town visitor could upset your plans in a delightful way. Reschedule your appointments! Delegating more responsibility to a small fry will teach self-reliance. A platonic relationship proves comforting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A great day to make romantic plans. Get an early start if going Christmas shopping. Contact someone influential as soon as the office opens. A decision made today will benefit you financially.

Overtricks do not mean all that much at rubber bridge. At duplicate, however, they are often of crucial importance. Failure to make an overtrick resulted in an absolute zero on this deal from the French Mixed Pair Championship, reported in Le Bridgeur. Would you have played differently?

North had a dead minimum opening bid and he showed it by passing at his second turn. South indicated his strength with a cue-bid, then contented himself with game when North simply supported his suit.

The spade game was reached at every table, and the lead was invariably the queen of diamonds — as it happens, the singleton club would have led to a ruff if East wins the first trump and returns a club. The declarers won and led a trump to the king and ace. They won the return, cashed the queen of trumps and, thanks to the jack-ten falling, they were able to draw the last trump and concede a heart for an overtrick.

That's how the play went at every table except one. When Herve Mouiel held the East cards, he allowed the king of spades to hold the second trick! This simple strategy led declarer to believe West held the ace of spades. Therefore, he continued with a low spade from dummy and ducked in hand. West scored the jack, and declarer had held himself to ten tricks.

Ducking the ace of trumps was a play that was unlikely to cost. How much it stood to gain is borne out by the actual result. However, we must confess that had we been declaring and received this defense, we too would have been held to one trick fewer than the rest of the field.

Springsteen, Johnson, Stallone on list of 'Most Beautiful Lips'

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Actor Don Johnson, rock star Bruce Springsteen and tennis champ Boris Becker are on a tongue-in-cheek list of the world's Most Beautiful Lips of 1985 that was released Wednesday.

Johnson, who plays an undercover agent on NBC-TV's "Miami Vice" has the "most arresting" lips, while Springsteen has the "boss-est" lips and surprise Wimbledon winner Becker's kisser is the "most upsetting," said lip balm maker Blistex Inc.

The winners were singled out for making news and not for their lips alone, said Blistex executive vice president Richard K. Green. The company began putting out the list for fun and publicity six years ago.

SEATTLE (AP) — Vietnam veteran Gino Casanova, who fasted 51 days to draw attention to soldiers missing in Southeast Asia, is eating solid food again, the Veterans Hospital said Wednesday.

The 34-year-old Tacoma man can now tolerate a regular diet, and is continuing to improve, the hospital said. Casanova is no longer in an intensive care unit.

Casanova ended his fast Friday at the request of President Reagan, who agreed to meet with him about the possibility that American soldiers may still be held in Vietnam. At the start, the veteran vowed to fast 61 days for each Washington state veteran still missing in Southeast Asia.

Casanova lost 45 pounds during his fast, which he spent in a bamboo cage he built in a field near Kent south of Seattle.

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Daniel J. Travanti and 11 other members of the cast of NBC-TV's "Hill Street Blues" on Wednesday joined a campaign to keep a 3M plant open that already has the support of native-son rocker Bruce Springsteen and country star Willie Nelson.

Travanti

The actors signed their names to an advertisement urging 3M to keep the plant in Springsteen's hometown of Freehold operating. The ad appeared in The Asbury Park Press and was to appear in Weekly Variety, a national actor's newspaper.

The Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union paid for the ad.

However, plant manager Kenneth R. Dishno said 3M's plan to close the tape factory in June, putting 360 people out of work, is "irreversible."

Last week, Springsteen and Nelson appealed to the company in an advertisement published in state and national newspapers. Springsteen also donated $20,000 to help fund the union's campaign to keep the plant open.

In addition to Travanti, Wednesday's ad was signed by Taurean Blaque, Dennis Franz, Charles Haid, Veronica Hamel, Ed Marinaro, Kiel Martin, Robert Prosky, James Sikking, Joe Spano, Michael Warren and Bruce Weitz.

YORBA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — U.S. Rep. William Dannemeyer says he plans to introduce a bill to declare the house where former President Richard Nixon was born as a national historic site.

The California Republican said Wednesday he was making the effort at the request of the Yorba Linda City Council.

The bill was made with the cooperation of the National Park Service, which would be responsible for establishing and maintaining the 7.2-acre site in Yorba Linda that includes the bungalow where Nixon was born Jan. 9, 1913.

Nixon's father, Frank, built the house 30 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles in 1912 on a farm where he raised citrus fruit. The family moved to nearby Whittier 10 years later.

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC Radio President Ben Hoberman on Wednesday announced he would leave after 36 years with the company when its pending merger with Capital Cities Communications Inc. is finalized.

Hoberman, head of the company's radio division since 1979, said in a news release from the company that he would return to his home in Los Angeles.

He began his broadcasting career in 1940 as an announcer-salesman at station WMFG in his hometown of Hibbing, Minn., and joined ABC in Detroit in 1950.

"ABC has been my second home for most of my working life, and my leave-taking is certainly tinged with mixed emotions," said Hoberman, 63. "But as ABC enters a new era with Capital Cities, I felt that the time was right to set my sights on other opportunities and look for new challenges in and outside of the broadcasting industry."

Oakland inherits 10-day suspension with Andujar

By Mark Kreidler
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — With one deal Tuesday, the Oakland A's got a 20-game winner complete with a 10-day suspension, a million-dollar contract and all the attention the franchise could want.

It came in the controversial person of Joaquin Andujar, dispatched by the St. Louis Cardinals to the A's for the price of seven-year veteran catcher Mike Heath and minor leaguer Tim Conroy, a left-handed starting pitcher.

The trade, announced late Tuesday afternoon, was the first of two major transactions after nearly two days of shop-talk between general managers at major league baseball's winter meetings, which continue today (Wednesday) here.

The second deal, announced Tuesday night, ended the bidding war for highly valued catcher Ozzie Virgil Jr. The Philadelphia Phillies traded Virgil and minor league pitcher Pete Smith to Atlanta, getting right-hander Steve Bedrosian and fleet center fielder Milt Thompson in return.

In a third transaction, Boston traded right-handed relief pitcher Mark Clear to Milwaukee for reserve infielder Ed Romero. That deal came about after the demise of a possible three-way trade involving Boston, Milwaukee and the Chicago White Sox that would have sent Tom Seaver to Boston.

The move that attracted the most interest — partly because it ended the stalemate among the 26 teams — involved Andujar, the sometimes brilliant, always unpredictable right-handed starter who was 21-12 last season, when the Cardinals won the National League pennant, and 20-14 in 1984.

"We are fully confident that he (Andujar) can be what he has been in St. Louis ... a great citizen and a fine ballplayer," said Sandy Alderson, Oakland's general manager. "We came here with the idea of adding to our starting rotation."

That the A's have done, although some wonder how much the team helped itself by signing up Andujar. The Dominican native, who turns 33 on Dec. 21, won only one game the last two months of the 1985 season, and was shellacked in the playoffs and World Series.

He is remembered for the brushback pitches he threw to Steve Sax in the playoffs against Los Angeles, and for charging and bumping American League umpire Don Denkinger during St. Louis' 11-0 loss to Kansas City in the final game of the World Series.

For that action, Andujar drew a 10-day suspension from Commissioner Peter Ueberroth. The suspension takes effect on the first day of the 1986 season.

In addition, the right-hander (110-101, 3.46 ERA lifetime) faces possible disciplinary action after he was identified as a cocaine user during the baseball drug trials in Pittsburgh.

"That's a risk we have assumed. That's the nature of the business — taking risks," Alderson said. "What our investigations tell us is that it is prudent to take that risk."

Andujar comes with a $1 million-per-year contract that has one year remaining. The A's will have an option to renew the contract in 1987.

The Cardinals, who released catcher Darrell Porter after the Series, filled their only obvious need by acquiring Heath, who batted .250 last season, with 13 homers and 55 RBI in 436 at-bats. In addition, they got Conroy, a former No. 1 draft selection by the A's.

Pitching with Tacoma last season in the Pacific Coast League, which is generally regarded as a hitter's league, Conroy posted an 11-3 record and a 3.27 ERA, and struck out 167 batters in 129 innings.

Dal Maxvill, the Cardinals' general manager, said he was not ordered by the St. Louis brass to get rid of Andujar, whose antics many considered to adversely affect his teammates. Manager Whitey Herzog expressed support for the pitcher.

"He's done a heck of a job for me. I was very, very happy. He worked hard, he didn't want to give up the ball, he gave us 200-plus innings (four straight seasons)," Herzog said. "I am going to miss him. When he was around, you always knew something might happen."

The deal with Oakland was made because every other team with a "front-line" catcher wanted one of the Cardinals' outfielders — Vince Coleman, Willie McGee or Andy Van Slyke — in trade, and Herzog said St. Louis would not agree.

In Milt Thompson, Philadelphia found the leadoff hitter and center fielder it was looking for. Thompson, who bats left-handed, hit .314 with 34 steals in 82 games at Richmond, and .302 with nine steals in 73 games with the Braves.

Bedrosian was 7-15 with a 3.83 ERA as a starter last season, but Phillies manager John Felske said he plans to use him as a closer out of the bullpen. Bobby Cox, the Braves' new GM, also said he saw Bedrosian as a reliever.

In 1984, Bedrosian was 9-6 with a 2.37 ERA and 11 saves.

Virgil was one of a handful of good catchers available for trade. He hit .246 in 131 games last year, with 19 homers and 55 RBI.

"We don't like to give up a catcher of Virgil's ability, but we felt we had an excess at that position," said Phillies GM Bill Giles, referring to backups John Russell and Darren Daulton. "We gave up an awful lot ... but we didn't think we could win with the team we had."

The Braves signed catcher Bruce Benedict in September to a three-year contract valued at $1.84 million, but Cox said they "had to fill a position that we felt needed fixing. We set our sights on Virgil and (the San Diego Padres' Terry) Kennedy."

Rick Cerone, Atlanta's other catcher, may become trade bait this week.

In other developments:

— Free agent Tom Paciorek, 39, signed a one-year contract with Texas for a reported $200,000. He'll also get an opportunity to coach in the Rangers' organization after he retires.

— Pittsburgh pitcher Rick Rhoden and utilityman Lee Mazzilli have asked to be traded.

— Hall of Famer Don Drysdale has agreed to serve as the White Sox' pitching consultant.

Syracuse Rhodes Scholar heads all-Academic team

NEW YORK (AP) — Defensive tackle Tim Green of Syracuse University and linebacker Larry Station of Iowa, both chosen earlier for The Associated Press All-America team, were named to the GTE Academic All-America squad selected by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Green, a Rhodes Scholar candidate, has a 3.8 grade point average in English literature, and Station has maintained a 3.2 in pre-business studies.

Joining Green on the academic team's defensive line are Matt Koart of Southern California (3.73, business finance), Dave Van Metre of Cornell (4.01, vetinary medicine), and Greg Dingens of Notre Dame (3.77, pre-professional studies).

Station's linebacking teammates are Matt Soderlund of Stanford (3.3, human biology), and Shawn O'Malley of Northeastern (3.65, mechanical engineering).

Chosen in the defensive backfield were Lance Hamilton of Penn State (3.83, pre-law), Dean Altobelli of Michigan State (3.95, mechanical engineering), Kip Corrington of Texas A&M (3.94, philosophy and pre-law), and Brad Hokin of Boston University (3.35, communications). The punter is Troy Faunce of Kansas State (3.58 marketing and management).

Four economics majors dominate the offensive unit. Sharing that course of study and berths on the squad were wide receiver Tom Steinglein of Colgate (3.26 GPA), offensive tackle Clay Miller of Michigan (3.24), offensive guard Mike Hartmeier of UCLA (3.3) and quarterback Kevin Anthony of North Carolina (3.73).

Also named on offense were tight end Ron Duncan of Ball State (4.0, biology and chemistry), wide receiver Michael Lanese of Ohio State (3.74, political science), tackle Kevin Reilly of Holy Cross (3.5, biology and pre-med), guard Mark Fatkin of Western Kentucky (3.7, computer science), center Ken Pietrowiak of Kentucky (3.29, business), running backs Jeff McKinney of Western Illinois (3.73, operations management) and Brian Jager of Furman (3.47, chemistry) and kicker Andy Weiler of New Mexico State (3.35, sports medicine).

No cigar yet for Raiders' Flores

MANHATTAN BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Four weeks ago, the Los Angeles Raiders were in trouble. Now, they're in better shape than any team in the American Football Conference.

"It's nice to be in the position we're in," Coach Tom Flores said Wednesday. "But it's not over yet."

Since losing two straight games last month, the Raiders have beaten Cincinnati, Denver, Atlanta and Denver, and taken over undisputed possession of first place in the AFC West with a 10-4 record.

The Raiders' 17-14 overtime victory at Denver last Sunday put them in a position to clinch the AFC West title by winning one of their final two regular-season games.

Should they win both games — against Seattle at home Sunday and against the Los Angeles Rams at Anaheim Stadium Dec. 23 — the Raiders would be guaranteed the home-field advantage throughout the AFC playoffs.

THREE OTHER AFC teams — Miami, New England and the New York Jets — have a chance to finish the season at 12-4.

The first tie-breaker in such instances is head-to-head competition. The Raiders have beaten the Patriots and Jets, and weren't scheduled to play Miami this season. The tie-breaker that applies between the Raiders and Dolphins is best record against common opponents — Los Angeles is 5-1 against Denver, Kansas City, the Jets and the Patriots, while the Dolphins are 3-2 against those teams entering their game against New England next Monday night.

Sunday's win (at Denver) was a big one for us," Flores said. "This (the game against Seattle) is another big step for us; it's the biggest step, if we can win it, we clinch the division. Then the next week we play the Rams for home-field advantage.

The Seahawks beat the Raiders 33-3 at Seattle Nov. 3, with the help of six quarterback sacks, five turnovers, including four interceptions, and a blocked field goal attempt which was returned for a touchdown.

SEATTLE is 8-6 and still alive in the AFC West race. The Seahawks, who have won their last two games, need three things to happen for them to win the division crown — they need to beat the Raiders, they need to beat Denver at Seattle Dec. 20, and they need the Rams to beat the Raiders Dec. 23.

The Seahawks would win the division should they tie for the title with the Raiders or both the Broncos and Raiders because they would have an advantage in the tie-breaking procedure that would apply.

Flores was asked about ailing Raiders quarterback Marc Wilson, who completed 13 of 28 passes for 93 yards with four interceptions against Denver. Wilson's quarterback rating of 60.3 is one of the lowest in the National Football League.

"It's hard to tell how much pain he's in," Flores said. "He's not 100 percent. His left shoulder (injured early in the season) still bothers him. He's not going to be well until after the season; I'm sure it hurts every time he gets hit.

"I defend him by the fact that we won. I know he made some mistakes in the game. He keeps coming back.

Irate contest winner says he's out a bundle

CHICAGO (AP) — Beatrice Cos. says an Atlanta man's claim that he won $20 million in a football contest the corporation sponsored won't be honored and the contest has been canceled.

Bill Blodgett, director of corporate relations for the Beatrice Grocery Group in Fullerton, Calif., said the contest was canceled after the corporation was contacted by an Atlanta salesman who claimed to have thousands of winning tickets.

He said the corporation is investigating how the tickets were obtained.

Frank Maggio, a salesman for Procter & Gamble, said he mailed thousands of winning entries in the "Monday Night Winning Lineup" contest, which was based on the number of touchdowns and field goals scored in eight Monday night National Football League games this season.

Maggio, 23, said he found a pattern to the game cards and the contest rules entitle him to $20 million or 20,000 tickets to the Super Bowl.

Officials of Chicago-based Beatrice said they called off the contest and announced the cancellation in a Nov. 29 newspaper advertisement.

"We are continuing an investigation into this matter," said Blodgett, "but we have no intention of honoring Mr. Maggio's cards."

Blodgett said Beatrice officials intended for the contest to be "a game of chance" but that "a quick analysis here led us to believe we had to cancel the contest because apparently it could be manipulated."

He would not say whether the company will give any prizes to anyone else.

Such contests come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, said Bill Pierce, a research analyst in its division of marketing practices.

Pierce said no specific rules govern such contests, although the events must comply with the Federal Trade Act, which prohibits unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

Pierce said he knows of no contest complaints reported to the agency.

The contest cards contained eight blocks, one for each of the eight Monday night NFL games. In each block were 16 numbers covered by silver dots — eight corresponding to touchdowns and eight to field goals.

Calendar fibs, NFL playoffs already started

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

The calendar may say there are two weeks left in the National Football League season, but the realities say the playoffs have already started.

There's the usual 14-game NFL schedule next weekend, with 11 of them involving one or more teams that can still make it to the postseason. And while 18 of the 28 NFL teams remain mathematically alive going into Monday night's game between the Los Angeles Rams and San Francisco 49ers, it's conceivable that most of the 10 playoff spots could be decided next week.

Two games are particularly important — the New York Giants and Dallas Cowboys Sunday at Irving, Texas, which could decide the NFC East title, and the New England Patriots at the Miami Dolphins Monday night that will untie the three-way knot at the top of the AFC East.

Those, combined with the results of three other games, could settle most of the playoff spots.

SATURDAY, the 13-1 Chicago Bears, the only team that has clinched a division title and playoff spot, will visit the New York Jets, tied at 10-4 at the top of the AFC East.

Sunday, Washington is host to Cincinnati, which clobbered Dallas 50-24 to move into a tie with Cleveland at 7-7 in the AFC Central. The Redskins, 8-6, are also still alive.

The other game involves Seattle, also alive at 8-6, visiting the Los Angeles Raiders, who took control of the AFC West with a 17-14 overtime win over Denver — the Raiders' second overtime decision over the Broncos in three weeks. Los Angeles could clinch the division title.

Here is a rundown of the division races:

AFC

The Jets, Dolphins and Patriots, all 10-4, should all qualify for a wild-card spot if each wins one of its last two games. All hold an edge in wild-card tiebreakers over Denver, which has already lost five games. Miami closes with Buffalo after New England, the Jets play at home to Cleveland after the Bears, and the Patriots finish at home with the Bengals.

If the Jets lose to Chicago, New England could clinch the division title by beating Miami. Otherwise, it goes to the final week.

Cincinnati could clinch the AFC Central next week if Cleveland losses to Houston. Cleveland could clinch if Cincinnati loses to Washington and Pittsburgh loses to Buffalo at home — an unlikely eventuality. If none of that happens, it goes to the final week — Cincinnati at New England, the Browns at the Jets and the Steelers at the Giants.

The Raiders, who have to win just one of two, have to finish up with Seattle at home and the Rams on the road. Denver's loss pushed it down to sixth in a division where just five teams will make the playoffs. The Broncos get the worst in all the tiebreakers.

NFC

If the Cowboys beat the Giants, they clinch the NFC East. If the Giants win, they would clinch a wild-card spot, but there would still be a chance of a three-way tie with Washington, in which case the Cowboys would take the division. To get a wild-card, the 8-6 Redskins would need two wins and two losses by either the Giants or Cowboys. Dallas is at San Francisco in the finale and New York at home to Pittsburgh.

In addition to Chicago, which has clinched the home field throughout the playoffs, Minnesota, Detroit and Green Bay remain mathematically alive going into Monday night's game, as does Philadelphia in the East. Realistically, they have little chance.

The winner of Monday night's San Francisco-Los Angeles game would take control in the West. If San Francisco won, the two teams would be tied, but the 49ers would have the tiebreaker edge by virtue of two wins over the Rams.

The Rams finish with two home games — St. Louis and the Raiders. The 49ers visit New Orleans next week, then play host to Dallas at Candlestick Park.

Nuggets holster guns

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The Denver Nuggets, who last season almost reversed their image of a trigger-happy team that never played defense, have reverted to their old form.

They have lost six of their last nine games after a sparkling 11-2 start. In those six losses, they allowed an average of 118 points and one of the victories was 123-121 over Philadelphia.

"I think we have the best perimeter defense in the league and I get asked a lot about our defense now," Coach Doug Moe said, "but the truth is we haven't guarded anybody lately. We're not an overpowering team so we've got to be aggressive and enthusiastic and we haven't done that."

Moe, however, is not upset with the Nuggets' play.

"The important thing is not to have a long losing streak," he said. "We never lost more than three in a row last season, and I guarantee we'll win seven or eight straight this season. It hasn't happened yet, but it will. As long as we keep the losing streaks to a minimum, we'll be OK."

Moe is heartened by the play of center Wayne Cooper, who after Tuesday night's games was leading the National Basketball Association in blocked shots, ahead of Utah's Mark Eaton, who set a single-season record in 1984-85.

"Last year, we worried if Wayne had the mental toughness," Moe said. "He's such a nice, easy going guy, but he's proved otherwise on the court."

"It's not one of my goals to be considered one of the greats," said Cooper, who is averaging 3.73 blocks per game. "I'd rather play up to my potential every game and win. I think I'm a winner, and I'd like to be thought of as a winner."

MATT Guokas, the Philadelphia 76ers' new coach, has been feeling the pressure of the team's struggling start, but a recent five-game winning streak improved his disposition.

"We're hovering around .500 and there have been a lot of games we could have won and should have won and have been right there for us to win, but we haven't been able to come up with the plays in the fourth quarter," he said. "But it's still early in the season and the kind of effort we've had the last few games will certainly boost our confidence."

Making up a seven-game deficit on the first-place Boston Celtics in the Atlantic Division is not among his priorities, Guokas said.

"Boston right now is a better team than we are. But I'm not concerned with the Celtics right now. I'm concerned with our team improving itself."

WHEN the 76ers played entertained the Washington Bullets and 7-foot-6 rookie Manute Bol last week, fans who were 6-4 or taller were given a free ticket.

MILWAUKEE Coach Don Nelson occasionally experiments with a small, quick lineup, and sometimes it pays off for the Bucks.

Last week, in a Bucks-Knicks game in New York, he put forward Terry Cummings and four guards — 6-6 Jeff Lamp, 6-1 Craig Hodges, 6-5 Ricky Pierce and 6-5 Sidney Moncrief — on the floor at the same time. The result was a flurry of steals and layups early in the fourth period that flustered the Knicks, who scored only 14 points in the quarter and lost 105-95.

"That small lineup is a very good team," Nelson said.

Analysts say pact needed to end Texaco uncertainty

HOUSTON (AP) — Financial analysts and lawyers, still skeptical that Pennzoil Co.'s $11.12 billion judgment against Texaco Inc. will stand, say both companies must negotiate a settlement and remove uncertainty about the future of the nation's third-largest oil company.

Pennzoil Chairman J. Hugh Liedtke said he's willing to discuss a settlement.

"We're always willing to talk," Liedtke said Wednesday, the day after a judge upheld the award, the largest civil judgment in U.S. history. "We've been willing to talk for two years, but they've never come up with anything serious, anything reasonable. If they ever do, we'll listen."

Texaco's lawyers failed to returns calls seeking comment on the possibility of a negotiated settlement.

But Texaco attorney David Boies earlier revealed that the two companies had informal discussions about a possible transfer of assets to resolve the matter. He said the companies might "ultimately" reach an agreement.

On Tuesday, visiting State District Judge Solomon Casseb Jr. agreed with a jury's ruling that Texaco should pay $10.53 billion, plus almost $591 million in back interest, for breaking up a Pennzoil-Getty merger in early 1984 so it could purchase Getty.

But the judge gave the 83-year-old company some temporary protection from being forced into bankruptcy court.

Since the jury's verdict was returned Nov. 19, Texaco's stock has steadily declined.

In composite New York Stock Exchange trading Wednesday, Texaco stock fell $2.50 a share to close at $28.25. The stock cost $39.25 at the time of the verdict.

Boies said Texaco would seek a new trial, and failing that, appeal the verdict. But to appeal, Texaco must post a $12 billion bond that could threaten the company's solvency.

Financial analysts and lawyers said that having to post a $12 billion appeal bond might force Texaco into reorganization under federal bankruptcy laws, and thus both sides would be wise to try to reach an out-of-court settlement.

"Pennzoil has done what it set out to do and Texaco has learned a lesson," said Alan Edgar, an oil analyst at investment firm Schneider, Bernet & Hickman in Dallas. "Pennzoil has made Texaco sweat, and if they push it too far, the case might be reversed and they would lose in the end."

Under an agreement approved by the judge, Pennzoil may not file any liens against Texaco property or make any attempt to collect the award without the court's permission during the next three months.

Texaco agreed not to sell any assets except those that would be sold during normal business and not to file a reorganization petition under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

Texaco has 30 days to ask for a new trial, and the judge has 30 days to rule on the request. If he rejects the request, Texaco has another 30 days to post the $12 billion appeal bond.

Warren Shimmerlik, an analyst with the Merrill Lynch investment firm in New York, said he doubted either side would violate the agreement and might view the judge's decision as incentive to settle the case.

"I don't think Hugh Liedtke wants to be responsible for putting a company into bankruptcy, and Texaco might want to negotiate rather than go through the pain of taking this to its logical conclusion," Shimmerlik said.

Liedtke said Pennzoil had no plans to try to acquire Texaco and would comply with its part of the agreement.

"I don't think Texaco employees are in any danger from Pennzoil," he said.

The previous largest damage award in U.S. history totaled $1.8 billion against American Telephone & Telegraph Co. That award to MCI Corp. was reduced on appeal to $113.4 million.

Texaco station owners fear effects of suit

From Staff and Wire Reports

Owners of Texaco service stations fear they ultimately will be the losers in a lawsuit that resulted in a $11.12 billion damage award against the oil company.

However, Midland dealers say they're not overly concerned about the effects of the award yet, because no one has told them very much.

"I haven't heard a thing other than what I read in the paper," said station owner Soren Anderson. "I just sit here hoping." He added that he's not particularly bothered, but he has made a large investment in his company, and would be hurt if he's put out of business.

Ray Lindsey, owner of three Texaco stations, said he plans to visit the district office to try to find out some information. He stated that Texaco's loss might help the dealers. "We were facing a possible brand pull-out, and this might put a stop to it." Lindsey said noone's more interested than him, since he just bought the Texaco station at 701 N. Big Spring.

"I've been a Texaco dealer here in Midland since February of 1957. I have a lot of confidence in what they do. I'm not too worried about it, I'm just playing it by ear," said Texaco dealer Tom Rice, who added that he plans to talk to Texaco soon.

Attorneys have told the Lone Star Service Station Association that its member station owners can do little to protect themselves if Texaco seeks bankruptcy court protection, Terry Williams, vice president of the association, said Wednesday.

Attorneys told the service station dealers group that because of restrictive lease contracts, station owners can do little to protect themselves in case of a bankruptcy by the franchiser, Williams said.

The association has about 550 members across the state who own and operate service stations representing all major gasoline brands.

The group is calling for Texaco dealers to demand assurances from suppliers that whatever the outcome of the lawsuit, their ability to compete in the business market will not be hindered, Williams said.

David Carroll, manager of Zales Jewelers in the Midland Park Mall, displays fashion earrings, necklaces and chains. The store is selling more of these items this year as the chain's new marketing strategy.

Zales redesigns classic 'four C's' marketing toward beauty, fashion

By MELLA McEWEN
Business, Oil Writer

Holiday shoppers visiting Zales Jewelers this year will find a store different from the one they visited a year ago.

In a radical marketing shift the 65 year-old jewelry chain has restocked and redesigned its stores nationwide to position itself in the market as fashion-orientated jewelry store.

"We used to think our role was to teach customers about the four C's - the color, cut, clarity and carat weight of a particular stone. But research tells us today's customer is more interested in subjective values like beauty and fashion, and that is the way we are going," said David Carroll, manager of Zales Jewelers in Midland Park Mall.

The current Christmas season, which is responsible for 30 percent of the Midland store's sales, and as much as 60 percent at other Zales stores, should be a test of the new marketing strategy, according to Carroll.

The Midland store, along with the more than 750 other stores across the country, has reduced display space for diamond bridal sets, increased fashion jewelry inventories 50 percent, cut space devoted to watches in half, doubled pearl jewelry displays and put in three times the assortment of gold earrings and chains.

"The bridal set customer is still important to us, but that's generally a one time sale," he continued. "We want a product that will keep the customer coming back."

One reason for the change is changing customer tastes. "Customers are more fashion-conscious, more style-conscious, and more bargain-conscious," Carroll commented.

He said the customer's penchant for bargains and intensive competition of shopping malls is another reason for Zales realignment. "The mall environment causes more comparative shopping. Customers are no longer impulse buyers. They'll wait for what they want."

Today's customers, he said, are looking for a jeweler with a good reputation, with credibility, with the broadest selection of style, and the best prices. "Most jewelry purchases are normally made after shopping most or all of the jewelry stores in a mall. When you include the jewelry counters in department stores, that could be as many as ten locations."

He noted that women are buying jewelry with their own money: "Their income is primary income, not the traditional second income. And I think it's great."

He said women are moving toward fashion-oriented jewelry, with the emphasis on gold and diamonds, the company has discovered that men have new ideas about jewelry as well. "Men like watches and chains. Men have three or four watches now, where they used to have one watch that they wore when they worked on the car and then wore with their tuxedo," Carroll commented. "Men won't buy for themselves, but they'll keep it if it's a gift. They're more susceptible to jewelry as a gift. They're not as particular as women."

Jewelry will always be a good investment because it maintains its value and durability.

Despite new marketing strategies and changing customer tastes and tighter competition, one thing will never change says Caroll: "Most jewelry sales are based on a strong emotion, and that's love."

GE agrees to buy RCA for $6.28 billion cash

NEW YORK (AP) — GE and RCA, two of America's best known companies, are planning one of the nation's biggest corporate marriages, a $6.28 billion cash deal that would be the most expensive non-oil acquisition in U.S. history.

The merger, announced Wednesday night by General Electric Co., would end months of speculation that RCA Corp., parent of the NBC television network, might be the target of a hostile takeover.

It also would bring together two companies known to millions of consumers for home appliances and create the nation's seventh-largest industrial company based on combined 1984 revenues of nearly $40 billion.

GE, which also produces industrial and aerospace products, agreed to pay $66.50 in cash for each of RCA's 94.4 million shares — $6.28 billion.

That would be the biggest acquisition in U.S. history outside the oil industry, topping the $5.6 billion purchase of General Foods Corp. last month by Philip Morris Inc.

The companies said in a statement that their directors had approved the merger.

The agreement is subject to approval by RCA's stockholders and regulatory agencies, but the companies said they expected to complete the merger in 1986.

A news conference was scheduled in New York today to provide further details of the agreement.

The announcement was made by GE Chairman John F. Welch Jr., RCA Chairman Thornton F. Bradshaw, and Robert R. Frederick, RCA's president and chief executive.

The proposed merger offers "an excellent strategic opportunity for both companies that will help America's competitiveness in world markets," the executives said.

Retail sales rise 1.1 percent in November

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail sales rose 1.1 percent last month, reversing part of the sharp October decline, as both auto and department store sales advanced, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said retail sales totaled $115.9 billion in November, an increase of $1.3 billion over the revised October sales figure.

Sales had fallen a record 4.2 percent in October as purchases of new autos dropped 17.2 percent following two big months of gains spurred by attractive cut-rate financing deals.

The new report said auto sales rose a slight 0.9 percent in November but the total sales figure of $24.8 billion was far below the $29.7 billion in cars sold during September.

Without autos, total retail sales rose 1.2 percent in November, the best gain since a 2 percent increase in April.

The non-auto category was led by a 1.3 percent rise in sales at department stores, a substantial improvement over the 0.3 percent gain in department store sales in October.

The November gain was likely to give encouragement to analysts who believe consumer spending will post at least a moderate rise during the Christmas season.

However, some analysts are still worried that consumers will cut back on spending this Christmas because of a record-high debt burden and a record low personal savings level.

The behavior of the consumer sector is crucial to the overall economy since consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of the overall economy.

The 1.1 percent November sales gain was the best since a 2.1 percent September increase.

The gain included a 0.9 percent increase in sales of durable goods, items expected to last three or more yers, and a 1.3 percent gain in sales of non-durable goods.

Smaller deficits could improve growth prospects

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The smaller federal budget deficits targeted by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction bill would improve the U.S. economy's growth prospects in the long term and perhaps in the short run as well, economic analysts said Wednesday.

The cuts in federal spending required to meet the bill's deficit targets would tend to slow down the economy at first, but that effect might be more than offset by the stimulus from sharply falling interest rates, the analysts said.

A growing expectation that the bill would become law and reduce future federal borrowing has been one driving force behind a recent strong rally in the bond markets.

Some long-term interest rates have dropped by nearly a full percentage point in the last two months to reach their lowest levels since 1979. For instance, in some parts of the country, rates on 30-year fixed-rate mortgages are nearing 11 percent. Long-term government bond yields are close to 9 1-2 percent.

The prospect of smaller future budget deficits and lower interest rates also has been a major factor in an equally strong rally in the stock market. A rising stock market adds to household wealth and helps encourage consumer spending, the analysts noted.

Lower long-term interest rates would encourage more business investment, adding to the economy's growth potential, they said. Housing construction would also get a boost.

If the Federal Reserve eased monetary policy to offset the restraining effect of the deficit reductions on the economy, as many financial market participants expect it would, then short-term rates also would drop. In that case, bank lending rates would drop and many business borrowers would find their operating costs falling and their profits rising.

Declining rates also would ease the big interest bill owed by developing nations on their foreign debt.

However, all of those positive factors must be weighed against the fact that either federal spending cuts or tax increases would directly reduce economic activity. If spending is cut, the government would be buying fewer goods and services than it otherwise would have and recipients of some types of federal benefits would have less to spend. If taxes are raised, those paying the higher taxes would have less to spend.

ANALYSIS

Allen Sinai, chief economist of Shearson Lehman Brothers, said the prospect of lower deficits has produced a "sea change" in the financial markets. "Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has extraordinary significance for financial markets and the potential longevity of our expansion," he declared.

"The simple mathematics are that we have, at present, both very large budget deficits and very high interest rates. Should paring of budget deficits prove to be a sharp negative for U.S. expansion, much lower rates are easy to come by to balance the outcome," he continued.

Some other analysts, such as Roger E. Brinner, chief economist of Data Resources, Inc., are less certain that the short-term impact of the spending cuts would not depress the economy even if the Fed eases. "The cuts will put enormous pressure on the Fed," he said.

Under the terms of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, if real GNP actually grows at less than a 1 percent rate in two consecutive quarters, in the following quarter the director of the Congressional Budget Office is supposed to notify Congress of that fact. The majority leaders of the House and Senate are then required to introduce identical joint resolutions suspending the deficit limitation for that fiscal year and for the following year.

If the DRI forecast turned out to be precisely correct, the deficit reduction target would remain in effect for fiscal 1986 and 1987.

Sun plans two gas processing refineries in central Michigan

Sun Exploration has announced plans to beginoperations at two new natural gas processing plants in central Michigan by mid-December. The facilities is Isabella and Midland counties have a combined maximum processing capacity of three million cubic feet per day (MMcf/D) of "wet" natural gas.

The larger of the two is the Mount Pleasant Gas Plant, which initially will process about 1.1 MMcf/D from 24 wells producing from the Richfield and Dundee formations in the Mount Pleasant Field. Approximately 3,500 gallons of ethane, propane, butane and natural gasoline will be extracted daily and marketed at the plant on Highway 20, about six miles east of Mount Pleasant. The remaining "dry" natural gas will be sold to Dow Chemical Company. Maximum capacity is two MMcf/D. Portions of this plant were relocated by Sun to Michigan from West Texas.

The Williams Gas Plant in Midland County will initially process about 800,000 cubic feet per day of "wet" gas from 14 wells in the Williams Field, a Berea formation. About 3,000 gallons of ethane, propane, butane and natural gasoline will be extracted and marketed at the plant northeast of the city of Midland, with the "dry" gas pipelined to Dow. Maximum capacity at the Williams Gas Plant is one MMcf/D.

Both plants are 100 percent Sun owned and operated, and feature complete gathering, compression and liquid recovery systems, delivery pipelines and on-site truck loading capabilities.

"The Mount Pleasant and Williams plants provide gas marketing capabilities for Sun's gas and for third parties in the Isabella and Midland county areas," says Don J. Van Orden, manager of Sun's Northern District in Midland. "The construction of these facilities reflects the ongoing oil and gas production activity we have under way in Michigan."

The Dallas-based Sun Exploration and Production Company, a unit of Sun Company, Inc., engages in domestic and international exploration, production and marketing of crude oil and natural gas. As the general partner for the recently announced Sun Energy Partners, L.P., Sun Exploration and Production Company will manage the domestic assets of the master limited partnership.

Oklahoma City, Tulsa bankers endorse cooperation proposals

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Proposals for greater cooperation between Oklahoma City and Tulsa in economic development activities were endorsed Wednesday by the chief executive officers of the state's two largest banking companies.

The Executive Committees of the Oklahoma City and Tulsa Chambers of Commmerce met jointly Wednesday, December 4, in Tulsa and agreed to explore ways to set aside the traditional rivalries of the two cities and combine their efforts to stimulate Oklahoma's economy.

J.W. McLean, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Banks of Mid-America, Inc., and Leonard J. Eaton, Jr., Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of BancOklahoma Corp., pledged their support of those efforts and said they also will seek greater cooperation between their two companies. Their joint statement followed McLean's address Tuesday to the Tulsa Economics Club on "The Oklahoma and Regional Economy–A Banker's Point of View."

"Our companies' respective banking operations encompass both ends of the Turnpike and we will remain intensely competitive for business in both cities," McLean said. "However, our companies recognize that business opportunities first must be created through the state's economic growth and we will work together toward that common objective."

Like the Tulsa and Oklahoma City Chambers of Commerce, Eaton and McLean said their two companies will schedule a joint meeting of their Boards of Directors early in the new year.

Three Texas cities in top 10 in construction

AUSTIN (AP) — Three Texas cities were among the top 10 nationally in total construction activity during the first half of 1985, according to the Dun & Bradstreet Corp.

Dallas ranked third, while Houston was sixth and Austin seventh, according to figures compiled by the firm.

During the period, Dun & Bradstreet said, permits were issued in Houston for $707.4 million in construction, an increase of 23.7 percent from the first half of 1984. For Austin, $628.2 million in permits were issued, an 11.9 percent increase.

But Dallas showed a sharp drop, down 24.6 percent to $1.15 billion. According to the figures, it was the only city in the top 10 where construction activity decreased.

Dallas had ranked second in the nation for the first half of 1984, while Houston had ranked fifth. Austin also ranked seventh last year.

New York-based Dun & Bradstreet issues quarterly reports on construction volume in the nation's 200 largest cities. Overall, those cities saw a 5.2 percent increase in construction volume for the first half of 1985.

The other top 10 cities and their rankings were Los Angeles, first; New York, second; San Diego, Calif., fourth; Phoenix, Ariz., fifth; Nashville, Tenn., eighth; Chicago, ninth, and Indianapolis, 10th.

The city showing the largest percentage change was Trenton, N.J., where construction volume during the first half of the year increased 786.5 percent.

But Reid Gearhart, editor of the Dun & Bradstreet Looks at Business newsletter, said Trenton and a number of other Northeastern cities saw big increases in construction volume because of little activity in 1984.

Austin has been among the top construction markets in the country for the past 10 years, Gearhart said.

"The pattern of growth or the level of building activity in Austin, as evidenced by our research, indicates a strong pattern that's been maintained for about 10 years," he told the Austin American-Statesman.

Since 1977, when Austin ranked 21st, it has gradually climbed in the ranking. In 1982, Austin cracked the top 10, ranking seventh. It slipped to 10th in 1983, then moved back to seventh in 1984. Austin was the nation's 72nd largest city in population in 1983.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Browning-Ferris okays $327 million budget

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Board of Directors of Browning-Ferris Industries, Inc. has approved a fiscal 1986 capital appropriations budget of $327 million, a 26 percent increase from last year's appropriations of $259 million.

Growth opportunities within existing operations, along with normal replacement of equipment and facilities, account for $151 million of the budget. Corporate development projects, which frequently include new operating locations, are budgeted at $176 million. Most of the funds for fiscal 1986 expenditures are expected to be provided from internally generated sources.

Of the $151 million appropriated for replacement and growth within existing operations, 59 percent is expected to be used for new collection trucks and equipment, 26 percent for new or improved waste disposal facilities and equipment, and 15 percent for support equipment, garage and office facilities.

In fiscal 1985, $121 million was appropriated for corporate development projects. The increased budget level of $176 million for these projects in fiscal 1986 reflects the continuing opportunities for such capital investments as new solid and chemical waste processing and disposal sites, new residential waste collection contracts, acquisition of solid waste collection companies, and investments in new waste-to-energy plants.

The budget provides for the company's normal replacement requirements for this fiscal year, and also for the new assets necessary to support currently planned expansion.

Stockholder files suit over Gypsum buyout

DALLAS (AP) — A National Gypsum Co. stockholder filed suit against the Dallas-based building supply and services company, charging that its proposed $1.3 billion leveraged buyout is "grossly inadequate."

The suit alleges that the buyout was made for the sole purpose of shielding the company from an unwanted takeover bid.

Filed in Delaware state court by stockholder Otto Lowenstein, the suit seeks an injunction to halt the buyout plan and an unspecified amount of damages for stockholders.

National Gypsum spokesman Allan Cecil declined comment.

On Nov. 25, a group of National Gypsum executives headed by Chairman John Hayes announced plans to take the company private. Under the proposal, stockholders would be paid $40.50 in cash and $17 face value in new debt security for each of their 22.8 million outstanding shares.

The buyout proposal is subject to approval by the board of directors and stockholders.

New York attorneys representing a group of company directors who are not company officers and are currently reviewing the proposal said a suit was not unexpected.

The leveraged buyout proposal, if completed, would be the fifth largest in history. National Gypsum generated $1.27 billion in revenues through the end of the third quarter this year, down from $1.28 billion for the same period in 1984.

Six more major airlines report holiday fares

NEW YORK (AP) — Six more major U.S. airlines have announced Christmas holiday discounts of up to 80 percent on most domestic routes, but the fares are more expensive than the industry's Thanksgiving bargains.

American Airlines, United Airlines and Western Airlines said Tuesday they will offer special fares from Christmas Day until midnight Dec. 27 for non-refundable, roundtrip tickets purchased by Dec. 23.

Trans World Airlines and Republic Airlines matched the offer and extended it by one day, until midnight Dec. 28.

Continental Airlines announced it would match the special fares on routes where its regular fare was higher than the special Christmas fares. Spokesman Michael Cinelli said Continental's regular fares already were lower or equal to the special fares offered by the others.

Delta, Eastern, People Express and Piedmont announced earlier that they would apply discounts to the Christmas period.

TWA spokeswoman Sally McElwreath said its sale also applies to the New Year period, Jan. 1-3, but passengers traveling then must buy tickets by Dec. 30. She also said Christmas and New Year flights cannot be combined.

One-way prices will be $49 for routes up to 500 miles in length, $69 for 501-to-1,500-mile routes and $99 for routes exceeding 1,500 miles, the airlines said.

American was first to offer the Thanksgiving sale, which featured discounts of up to 85 percent for 2½ days, or $29 each way for trips of 500 miles or less, $49 for 501-1,500 mile trips and $79 for trips exceeding 1,500 miles.

Asked why the discount was reduced for the Christmas holiday, Michael W. Gunn, senior vice president for passenger marketing, said in a telephone news conference: "With the three full days of travel, we feel it's logical to move the price up slightly."

The sales are designed to lure impulse travelers who otherwise would not fly over the holidays, when traffic usually is light. The airlines are hoping to fill hundreds of thousands of empty seats, making up in volume what they lose in cheaper tickets.

Several carriers reported last week that the Thanksgiving sale did not boost ridership as much as they had hoped, but still described the discounting as a success.

Semiconductor industry may be rebounding

NEW YORK — In the second indication in a month that the semiconductor industry may be rebounding, the Semiconductor Industry Association said this week that the book-to-bill ratio rose in November to 0.90, the highest level since September 1984.

The figure means that manufacturers received $90 worth of new orders for every $100 worth of products shipped in the month. The October figure was 0.82, and the September figure was 0.75.

Analysts, however, caution that they are still unsure whether the figure represents a true industry recovery, or whether computer makers are simply replenishing temporarily depleted inventories of memory and logic chips.

TG&Y announces net loss for third quarter

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — TG&Y Stores Co. is reporting a net loss of $8.9 million for third quarter of 1985 and $1.5 million for the nine months ending Sept. 30.

TG&Y's parent company, Household International Inc., said in a statement Monday that the losses were caused by soft consumer demand and sales that were less than projected.

TG&Y is a 720-store discount chain based in Oklahoma City. It is a wholly owned subsidiary of Household's merchandising division. Household is based in Chicago.

Sales at TG&Y were $423 million for the third quarter and $1.3 billion for the first nine months of 1985.

For 1984, sales were $496 million for the third quarter and $1.5 billion for the first nine months.

Motorola files patent infringement lawsuit

DALLAS (AP) — Motorola has filed a $30 million federal lawsuit claiming patent infringement by Mostek Corp. and asking that its sale by United Technologies to a French company be annulled.

Motorola claims in its suit in U.S. District Court that Mostek and United Technologies used Motorola's patented 68000 microchip technology to develop products but did not pay licensing fees.

The suit says the companies then fraudulently transferred Mostek assets to Thomson-CSF of France to prevent Motorola from recovering damages.

Motorola claims the company sought unsuccessfully between 1982 and 1985 to get license fees from Mostek

J.P. Rossomme, a spokesman for Thomson Component-Mostek Corp., said the lawsuit doesn't affect the new company because Thomson bought Mostek assets, not the company itself.

United Technologies sold most of Carrollton-based Mostek's assets to Thomson-CSF last month.

Post office's mobile unit cheers customers

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Ah, Christmas! The twinkle of the lights, the humming of carols, the burning of the yule log...and the long waits in line at the post office.

"During the peak Christmas season our volume just about doubles," lamented Stan Sartain of the U.S. Postal Service. "Our average daily volume is around 300,000 to 350,000 pieces of mail. During Christmas, that goes up to around 650,000."

Sartain insisted that the U.S. Postal Service doesn't take the holiday season lightly.

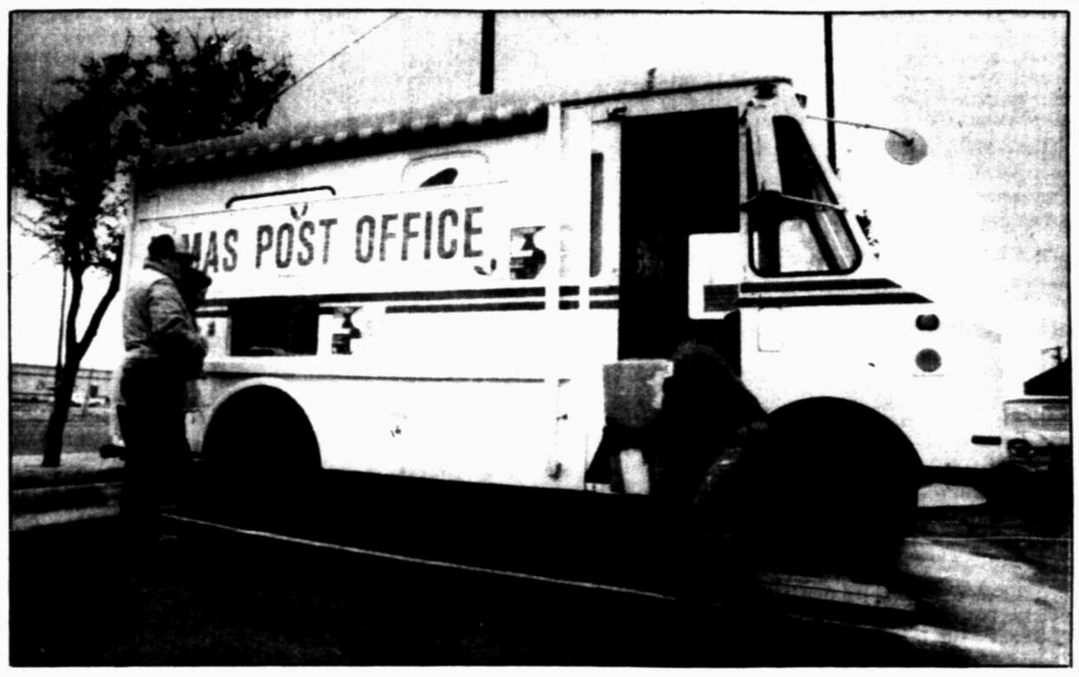
"We started planning about two months ago on how we would handle the rush this year," he said. "We got all of the station managers together around Oct. 1 to look at what we would need to do."

One result of the brainstorming is now doing a brisk business in the parking lot of The Courtyard shopping center, 4410 N. Midkiff, according to Sartain.

"We cut a window in the side of a two-ton postal delivery truck, put an awning on the side and came up with the 'Xmas Post Office.' We began talking with the mall managers about mid-November and Karen Dempsey at The Courtyard expressed an interest, letting us park it there for the cost of electricity."

Sartain stated that if the mobile post office is a success, it will become an annual service during the Christmas season.

"We've had growing lines out there and a growing response from businessmen at The Courtyard," he said. The mobile station is open from noon to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday and is staffed by Shirley MacPeak, who can offer "any service that the other stations have except food coupons."



Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

A postal employee picks up a package for delivery while customers wait to be helped. The Christmas Post Office, a mobile van parked at The Courtyard shopping center, is being used by the U.S. Postal Service during the holiday rush.

Sartain said the Post Office has come up with other methods to ease the annual holiday lines.

"About three years ago, we implemented the 'Dutch Door' service at the Graves station (Midkiff and Wadley) and that will be offered through Christmas Eve," he said. "For some reason, the people who live around the Graves area tend to get more packages than any other station and we, consequently, have quite a storage problem there."

The special window located in the general lobby area is open from 5 to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday and is for customers picking up packages only.

"A lot of the customers don't get off from work in time to pick up a package, so we started this service so that if they get a notice that day, they can pick it up that evening or the next evening at the window."

Sartain stated that the post office has tried to speed up delivery during Christmas by hiring additional employees and leasing more trucks.

"We hired three 'casuals' — part-time help — to get us through Christmas and also leased three vans," he said. "We also do not give vacation time during Christmas to any of our employees. It's just too busy to let them take off."

Sartain warns customers that the peak mailing periods for Christmas will probably be next week.

"For mail going out, the peak period will be next Monday or Tuesday," he said. "For mail coming in, it will be next Friday or Saturday."

He also urged procrastinating well-wishers to "mail their Christmas cards this week" if they want them to arrive in time.

Sartain stressed that "proper packaging technique" be used when mailing packages and that the sender's name and return address be put on both the inside and outside of the package.

He added that customers should update their mailing lists each year before mailing Christmas packages and cards.

"During December the amount of mail that we have to forward increases by 30 percent. We really need everyone's help," he said.

Sartain suggested that packages containing anything valuable (over $25) or replaceable should be insured.

"Anything homemade or worth less than $25 doesn't need to be insured," he said. If the package or contents are lost or destroyed, all that is needed after insuring is some proof of value for the contents and the insurance receipt.

Sartain also strongly urged that anything of monetary value or negotiables be certified.

"When it's certified, it gets more attention, being checked at several points along the way," he said.

Express mail may be handy for last-minute shoppers, he advised, "but only if they are really worried it won't make it in time. The service advertises "next day delivery."

Finally, Sartain asks that customers be a little more patient during the holiday season.

"With the volume of mail coming through at this time of year, you can add one day extra for delivery," he said.

Midland teacher appointed to new state panel on teacher paperwork

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Commissioner of Education Dr. W.N. Kirby has appointed Midland school teacher Sam Manning to a newly organized blue ribbon committee to study the problem of excessive paperwork now facing public school teachers in Texas.

Manning, president of the Midland Federation of Teachers, is the only local president of a teacher union to be appointed to the Paperwork Reduction Advisory Committee. He is a teacher at Lee High School.

The first meeting of the committee, set for Jan. 4 in Austin, will be aimed at organizing the scope of the committee's work and identifying major paperwork problems that face classroom teachers, Kirby said.

He urged committee members to bring to the meeting specific examples of what they consider "burden some paperwork."

Manning, a staunch supporter of paperwork reduction — passed by the Legislature in House Bill 72 — said many of the state's teachers are concerned about the amount of paperwork required by school districts.

The State Board of Education and the Texas Education Agency also are flooded by reports that teachers and administrators continue to be burdened with an excessive amount of paperwork despite reduction efforts.

Kirby attributed much of the burden to a lack of clarity from the TEA regarding lesson plans and what constitutes documentation that essential elements are being taught.

Sam Manning

Essential elements are the principles of a course that must be mastered by the student, such as vowels or consonants in an English class.

State law and SBOE rules now place greater emphasis on instruction and student achievement than in the past, Kirby said, and for the first time schools are required to follow a core curriculum containing essential elements.

During 1984-85, school districts were to move toward full implementation of the essential elements and, by this fall, curriculum guides were to be developed or revised to reflect those elements.

Some individuals, however, have interpreted that to mean teachers are required to develop detailed and lengthy lesson plans and that the coding of the essential elements is mandatory, Manning said.

But Kirby emphasized that the format and nature of lesson plans is a local matter.

He further stated that daily lesson plans should only reflect student objectives, teaching activities, materials and assessment procedures — not the mandatory coding of essential elements.

Manning conceded the need for lesson planning. "We have to have some reasonable approach to lesson planning, but we have make sure teachers don't have to give up teaching to write lesson plans."

He said he hopes school districts will halt the method of tying daily lesson plans to teacher evaluations.

"Right now, our evaluations are tied to lesson planning. Hopefully, we can deter the amount of paperwork (lesson plans, attendance reports, parental referrals) and not tie paperwork to the career ladder."

Fire knocks radio station off the air

From Staff Reports

A Midland country-music radio station was knocked off the air briefly Wednesday by a fire which damaged the station owner's house.

"Everything's back to normal at the station," said KJBC-AM employee Troy Smith this morning.

The fire, reported at 12:51 p.m., began in the water-heater closet at the home of Hugh M. McBeath, 1903 S. Lamesa, according to fire reports. It was extinguished with about 4,200 gallons of water after causing heavy damage to the attic, heater closet and hall, and heavy smoke damage throughout the house.

The cause of the fire was undetermined, according to fire reports. No injuries were reported.

The station was off the air for about 30 minutes, Smith said.

Midland Reporter-Telegram project designed to spread cheer to needy

From Staff Reports

Less than two weeks remain in this year's Midland Cheer Fund drive and every day more contributions are being received at the Midland Reporter-Telegram — contributions that will be used to purchase food to make the Christmas holiday brighter for 135 Midland families.

Initiated only last year by the Reporter-Telegram, the Cheer program is designed to provide food for needy Midland families who have nowhere else to turn for help.

In the first campaign last year, contributions from businesses and individuals totaled $7,846. Those funds were used by the Reporter-Telegram to buy holiday food for 108 Midland households. Program officials estimated last year's program helped feed 648 people.

The program also is strongly supported by employees of the newspaper. Last year, Reporter-Telegram employees got involved in making the food purchases, packaging the food into sacks for delivery to recipients, and then in the actual delivery of the food.

Food purchases for this year's program will be made next week at Midland grocery stores. The food will be packaged by newspaper employees on Dec. 20 and delivered to recipient families on Dec. 21.

"It's a great program," noted project chairman Bill Modisett. "All the contributions are used directly for food purchases from retailers who allow us to buy the food at slightly over their cost and all the labor is donated by Reporter-Telegram employees. The employees do a great job on this program and participate enthusiastically in spreading Midland's generosity to needy families."

If this year's goal of $10,000 is reached, newspaper officials estimate each recipient family will be given about $75 worth of food. Some of the families that received food last year included as many as six to 10 individuals.

Newspaper employees delivering the food last Christmas were touched by many of the prospective recipients' outlook in the spirit of Christmas. For example, one recipient who obviously deserved the holiday food declined the gift, telling employees of another family that needed it worse. In many other instances, the spirit of the season was obvious to those working on the project, whether it was from the remarks that "this is a worthwhile program" to the wishes for "good luck on the distribution and happy holidays to you!"

Odessa mayoral candidate touts 'vigorous' redevelopment campaign

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Formulating "a vigorous campaign for economic redevelopment" and helping the city reacquire a positive image are two of the goals of furniture store owner Dave Cox, who announced today he will be a candidate for mayor in 1986.

Dave Cox

Cox, president of National Furniture Exchange Inc. that operates the Freight Damage Store, 301 N. Grant Ave. and Big Tex Furniture, 615 E. 8th St., has been a resident of Odessa 23 years.

Saying steps must be taken immediately to change attitudes and actions to reflect a positive Odessa, Cox said at a news conference at the Odessa Petroleum Club this morning, "We must have a strong, no-nonsense leadership."

As mayor of Odessa, he said, he would be "Odessa's number one cheerleader and salesman."

Cox, who has served on the advisory board of the Texas Conservation Corps since being appointed by Gov. Mark White in May, was named in November to the State Job Training Coordinating Council by the governor. Cox is president of the Texas Association of Private Councils and chairman of the Permian Basin Private Industry Council, which provided funding for the newly created Permian Basin Alternative Education Center in downtown Odessa.

As a member of the recently announced Permian Basin Bid Resource Center board of directors, Cox said he believes the center will afford area businesses opportunities to diversify by taking advantage of federal contracts unrelated to the oil industry.

"Odessa has been an oil town and we hope it will always be strong in the oil business," Cox said, "but Odessa has got to be much, much more. If we are to economically survive the decade of the '80s and be able to face the '90s with a sound, viable growth plan, we must act now."

Cox believes Odessa must put together a foolproof economic development package that will attract both domestic and foreign business and industry to the city.

"But equally important," said Cox, "We must begin a vigorous campaign for economic redevelopment. We must stem the tide of businesses closing their doors in failure or relocating them to other cities."

Saying he would "work diligently to improve conditions and opportunities for existing business and industry," Cox added, "I am convinced there are other unexplored areas of economic development that desperately need the immediate attention and action of Odessa's leaders." He believes the bid resource center will open up some of these areas.

He says he is especially troubled by the negative attitude of many Odessans because of economic conditions and the negative image the city has acquired over the past few years.

"Economic, political and varied other circumstances have made it fashionable for us to expect everything negative," said Cox. "We must take steps immediately to change our attitudes and our actions to reflect a positive Odessa."

Cox lauded the efforts of those who initiated the campaign to help overcome differences that have existed between Odessa and Midland and bring the two cities together. As mayor of Odessa, he said, he would hope to establish a close working relationship with Midland's mayor because he believes an aggressive spirit of cooperation will be more successful in attracting new industry to the area.

Concerning the proposed Tax Increment Zone that would provide tax revenue to improve Odessa's downtown, Cox said he favors the proposal because he believes in the long term it will help rejuvenate the area.

On the issue of local taxes, Cox said he has no quarrel with the city administration, although he would strive to make sure taxpayers' monies are used effectively.

Cox said he plans to spend the next few months finding out "what our citizens think and how they feel. And it is these findings on which I will base my campaign for the office of mayor," he stated.

Craig to seek re-election as commissioner

From Staff Reports

County Commissioner C. Wallace Craig today said he has decided to seek a second term because the county faces a difficult budget crunch in the next few years, "And I want to be a part of any solution which might be available."

C.W. Craig

"I believe that the next few years are going to be among the most critical and difficult in Midland County's history, requiring the greatest amount of experience and understanding available," said the 62-year-old Realtor, who serves Precinct 2 in northeast Midland County.

Craig, a former Midland Independent School District Board member, was first elected to the Commissioners Court in 1982. If re-elected, he probably would not seek a third term in 1990, he said, but he doesn't feel now is the time to leave public life.

"Midland will be a good place to live for many, many years, but we've got some problems facing us," he said. "Obviously, the jail is an ongoing problem."

Craig is expected to draw some opposition in the Republican primary, and conceded the continuing controversy over the county jail's problems may become an issue.

"It shouldn't be," he said. "Anybody who thinks there is an easy answer or thinks his answer is the only answer has a lot of learning to do."

Craig attributed the county's budget crunch to a declining local economy, exacerbated by expenses mandated by the Legislature and its regulatory bodies, such as the Jail Standards Commission.

"We have no choice but to struggle through" and find ways to pay for necessary services, he said.

R.B. "Dick" Hamm will serve as his campaign treasurer.

Sunday sales draw mixed reviews

By ALAN SAYRE

DALLAS (AP) — More than three months have passed since the repeal of Texas' blue law became official, and with the Christmas shopping season in full swing the first legal Sunday sales in 25 years are drawing mixed reviews.

Mickey Moore, president of the Texas Retailers Association, said monthly sales reports filed before Dec. 1 from metropolitan areas did not indicate any increase in sales.

"Most of the people I have talked to say it really has just transferred Monday and Saturday business to Sunday," he said.

The Christmas shopping season will be a key factor in determining whether the blue law repeal has increased sales, Moore said.

"I think, really, the jury is still out," he said. "People are not used to shopping on Sunday. Frankly, I'll be surprised if there is any increase."

But Keith Nix, vice president for public relations at Neiman-Marcus, said his company had seen an increase in business at its six stores since Sept. 1, when Sunday sales became legal.

Since the repeal became effective, Neiman-Marcus has been open for business on Sundays at all its locations, except in downtown Dallas. That store was open for two weekends in October and has been open Sundays since Dec. 1 for the Christmas season, Nix said.

"Based on that definition, we definitely have an appreciable increase in business," Nix said. "It's not a case of taking the same figure and dividing by seven."

Citing company policy, he declined to divulge exact sales figures.

Juli Bump, marketing director for the Town & Country Center in Houston, predicted that heavy Sunday sales would taper off after the Christmas buying season ends.

"It'll all stop after Jan. 1," she said.

The mall began opening on Sundays in June, shortly after the blue law repeal was approved by the Legislature, with about half of the center's stores in operation. All stores opened on Sunday by the end of September, Ms. Bump said.

"At first we'd see some traffic, but not much," she said. "We didn't start seeing any traffic until late September."

In San Antonio, the North Star Mall, one of the city's largest, is experiencing a rise in traffic with each passing Sunday. However, a lot of shoppers aren't buying, judging from the number of packages people have been carrying, said Martha Minyard, the mall's marketing manager.

"It seemed like an after-church social deal for some people," she said.

Gloria Knight, manager of the smaller Central Park Mall in San Antonio, said the center's traffic also is increasing on Sundays.

"Generally, it would appear Sunday shopping in San Antonio started slowly, but this Christmas it will have a major impact on sales," Ms. Knight said.

In the economically depressed Rio Grande Valley, which has been hit by rapid decline in value of the Mexican peso, business continues to be slow on Sundays, officials said. Many businesses heavily dependent upon Mexican shoppers have been forced to lay off workers or close.

One store, C.R. Anthony's of Brownsville, was among several in the area that opened on Sundays during the earlier part of the year in defiance of the law.

"Business has dropped some because now everybody is open," said store manager Rene Ramirez. "Before (Sept. 1) there were only a few of us open."

Ramirez said the store, located in the downtown area near the international bridge, is dependent on Mexican shoppers and gets a little more business on Sundays, compared to a normal weekday.

"They're still coming, but not as many as before," he said.

Odessa judge sets bonds for men held in burglaries

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Bonds totaling $30,000 were set Wednesday by Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly for three men arrested late Tuesday night and early Wednesday in connection with two separate building burglaries.

Enrique Madrid Garcia, 36, 222 N. Dixie Blvd., and 45-year-old Porfilo Solis, who gave no local address, are accused of breaking into Luskey's Western Wear Store, 623 E. 42nd St., about 11:08 p.m. Tuesday and stealing nine pairs of boots valued at nearly $5,400.

Garcia and Solis, who were allegedly observed breaking out a portion of a front door glass at Luskey's to gain entry, were arrested as they left the building, according to police spokesman Rusty Baker.

Weatherly set bond at $15,000 for Garcia and $5,000 for Solis, Baker said.

Bond for 24-year-old Maurice Martinez, 415 N. Texas, was set at $10,000 by Weatherly in connection with the break-in at Permian Pawn Shop, 523 N. Grant Ave., shortly after midnight Wednesday.

Martinez is accused of taking an AM/FM stereo unit from the pawn shop.

Two other men, arrested early today in connection with the armed robbery of the Stop 'N Go store, 600 S. Grandview Ave., are expected to be arraigned in Municipal Court this morning on aggravated robbery charges.

According to Baker, the two men entered the store about 9:25 p.m. Wednesday, produced a handgun and demanded money from the two female clerks.

The men allegedly fled the store on foot after taking about $40 in cash from the store's cash register.

Special master named in no-pass, no-play suit

HOUSTON (AP) — A South Texas School of Law professor will be the special master determining the effects of the controversial no pass, no play law that bars failing students from participating in extracurricular activities.

Gerald Treece, 40, was named Wednesday by State District Judge Marsha Anthony, who is considering a lawsuit challenging no pass, no play.

"It might be like being named the fattest horse in the glue factory," Treece said. "It's nice that I'm well thought of, but it's going to be a lot of work."

Treece's appointment came despite the sentiment from the lead attorney for the plaintiffs in the suit that a special master was no longer necessary.

Anthony Sheppard said the state has provided information previously withheld from him and the special master was not really needed.

However, he said Treece's appointment would have positive impact on his case, which accuses the no pass, no play law of discriminating against minority and handicapped children because they have higher failure rates that white students.

"We will have more evidence before the court when he finishes," Sheppard said.

Treece said Wednesday his appointment was unexpected, but because the case deals with constitutional law, he was "deeply interested."

"And if I can serve, I will serve," he said.

Treece said he hoped to provide a report to the court as early as February.

Ms. Anthony ruled earlier this year that the no pass, no play provision of the state's tougher education code was unconstitutional, but the Texas Supreme Court overruled her.

The case resurfaced in Ms. Anthony's Houston court last month when attorneys challenged the law on the discrimination issue.

Del Rio council backs new bridge

DEL RIO (AP) — The City Council has endorsed a resolution committing finances for the construction of a controversial new international bridge.

The council voted 4-3 Tuesday in favor of a resolution stating the city's intent to finance two-thirds of the cost of building a new bridge to Mexico.

The Mexican government has indicated it will pick up the tab for the rest.

The bridge issue has angered many local citizens, who claim the city cannot afford the approximate $4.3 million it will cost to build the structure.

One resident, Lou Woodward, said late Tuesday she had gathered more than 1,000 signatures on petitions demanding a recall of Mayor Roger Cerny.

Miss Woodward said she would turn the petitions in to the city secretary this week.

A total of 887 signatures from registered voters must be obtained before the city can ask for Cerny's resignation.

If he does not resign within five days, the council must call a mayoral election.

Cerny has said he has no plans to resign.

At Tuesday's council meeting, attorney Arturo Gonzalez, a special negotiator for the city on the bridge issue, said the United States and Mexico would exchange diplomatic notes this week on the matter.

The notes, he said, are a formality before bids are let and revenue bonds are issued.

Cerny said the bridge, which will be paid for with revenue bonds, is a vital part of Del Rio's economy.

Historic cannon to be displayed

AUSTIN (AP) — The historic "Come and Take It" cannon that fired the opening shot of the Texas Revolution in 1835 will be on display at the University of Texas this month.

Officials said Wednesday the cannon, a small artillery piece only 20 inches long and weighing less than 70 pounds, will be displayed through Dec. 20 at UT's Barker Texas History Center.

The cannon had been lent to Texas settlers in Gonzales in 1831.

Pipe-threading machine stolen

From Staff Reports

A $3,000 pipe-threading machine was reported stolen to Midland police Wednesday.

The machine was taken from Superior Sprinkler Systems, 3001 N. Loop 250, sometime Tuesday, reports said.

In other reports, a $1,100 gold necklace was reported stolen by Algeretta E. Watson, 1707 Butternut.

The necklace and a $10 purse were stolen Saturday at the Playmate Club, 200 N. Lee, Ms. Algeretta told police.

Wayne Clay, 3000 W. Kansas, reported the burglary of a $350 car stereo from his 1979 Camaro. There was $250 in damage to the car, which had been parked at 2903 W. Wall, reports said. The burglary occurred sometime between Saturday and Monday.

A $150 radar detector, a $100 stereo and a $100 equalizer were reported taken from a vehicle belonging to Gary Miller, 4509 Anetta.

The vehicle was parked at 3500 Neely when the burglary occurred Tuesday. Also taken were a $20 gold chain and $20 in currency, and there was $400 in damage to the vehicle, reports said.

State high court lets $2.8 million judgment in highway fight stand

AUSTIN (AP) — A $2.8 million award to a San Antonio accountant who was left with severe brain damage when a highway fight ended with him being hit by a car has been upheld by the Texas Supreme Court.

"His mental capacity was reduced from that of a 27-year-old functioning accountant to that of a fifth-grader," the San Antonio Court of Appeals said Wednesday when it upheld the decision in March.

Robert Hatley suffered head injuries that required doctors to remove three ounces of brain tissue. He is partially paralyzed as a result of the injury.

The Aug. 6, 1981, incident involved Hatley and three friends who had been drinking, and two people in another car. Hatley and Robert Garza were in a Chevrolet Nova. Their friends Jim McFadden and Sam Guido were in a Datsun 280-Z.

Francois Illey and David Merrick were in a Chrysler Cordoba that had difficulty getting on to Interstate 410, causing traffic to back up. When they got on the highway, the Guido-McFadden car passed the Cordoba and Guido shouted obscenities and made an obscene gesture, according to court records.

Occupants of each of the cars said the other vehicle tried to force them off the road.

Court records showed both vehicles pulled over and McFadden hit Merrick, breaking his nose.

Hatley and Garza, in the Nova, then parked behind the other two cars.

The vehicles then continued, exiting the highway and pulling into a closed gas station. Illey testified he feared one of the other men had a weapon, so he accelerated the Cordoba and struck Hatley, who was thrown on to the windshield.

Illey's negligence caused the injuries, jurors said. They attributed no negligence to Hatley.

Illey contended in the appeal that jurors should have been asked if Hatley had provoked the incident. Associate Justice Shirley Butts, in her opinion for the San Antonio Court of Appeals, said, "The record indicated no provocative acts on the part of Hatley."

The Supreme Court, without writing an opinion, found no reversible error in the lower court decisions.

TCLU attorney hopes police brutality suit can be expanded

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Texas Civil Liberties Union attorney says he is not giving up efforts to turn a police brutality case into a class action suit.

Jim Harrington said Wednesday he presented evidence from 30 people who claimed they were victims of false arrest, brutality or excessive force to a judge.

But the judge, David Peeples, ruled the case could not be altered into a class action.

The decision came in a civil rights suit filed by 19-year-old Reyes Ruiz.

Ruiz sued San Antonio police officer Milton Barrera, claiming the officer sexually abused him from 1981 to 1983.

The TCLU joined the suit in September, seeking to alter the petition into a class action claiming widespread police brutality.

"I ruled it will not be expanded or broadened into a class action of all persons who allegedly have been or will be victims of police misconduct," Peeples said Wednesday.

Baldemar Jimenez, an attorney for the city, said the judge's ruling will expedite the case.

"It places a greater burden on the attempted representation that this is the tip of an iceberg," he said. "We're saying there is no iceberg."

Harrington, however, said the judge's decision would slow the case. He said his organization presented evidence of 30 cases of alleged police brutality.

Harrington said the TCLU plans to compile more information documenting more alleged cases of police misconduct and move again for class action in the suit.

"Thirty to me is pretty significant," said Harrington, adding that many of the cases were reported by individuals who came into his office after the TCLU joined the suit.

Barrera has been indicted for sexual abuse in the Ruiz case and faces trial in Victoria in February. He has denied Ruiz's charges and has filed a $1 million slander suit against the 19-year-old.

The police department's internal affairs division investigated Ruiz's charges and recommended Barrera's dismissal. Instead, Police Chief Charles Rodriguez suspended Barrera for 10 days but allowed him to stay on the police force.

The Ruiz case has drawn the attention of the U.S. Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, which has asked the FBI to investigate.

In a related development, Police Chief Charles Rodriguez said he plans to give the district attorney's office his department's files on police brutality complaints from citizens.

District Attorney Sam Millsap asked for the records after news reports that only two of 27 citizens complaints of excessive force by police had been forwarded to Millsap's office for possible criminal proceedings in the past three years.

In a news conference Tuesday, Rodriguez said he was not sure why the cases were not sent to the district attorney's office.

He said it is possible the complaints in question were found to be untrue by police internal investigators.

Anti-pornography group will continue protests

AUSTIN (AP) — Despite a grand jury decision against indicting three adult theater employees, protests of the business will continue, says the leader of an anti-pornography group.

Mark Weaver, director of Citizens Against Pornography, also said he believes Travis County Attorney Ken Oden is wrong to give lower priority to obscenity cases because of the grand jury's decision.

A five-month investigation by Oden's office ended last week when a Travis County grand jury decided against indicting the employees of the theater, which is near a residential neighborhood and several schools.

Oden said the decision exemplified a high tolerance for pornography in Austin. He said that means it would be useless for him to try prosecuting obscenity cases because the materials displayed and sold in Austin's "sex shops" apparently don't violate community standards.

State law says that for an object to be ruled obscene, it must lack "serious literary, artistic, political and scientific value." The law gives the decision of what is obscene to "the average person, applying contemporary community standards."

Weaver said the high tolerance level in Austin is bred by ignorance. He said the grand jury should have sought testimony from his group. "We have lots of material available to them that I think could have helped them to make a clear decision.

"We're living in a very liberal city where it's very unpopular to make controversial 'moral decisions.' Juries have been afraid to make a clear-cut 'yes' or 'no,'" Weaver said.

Supreme Court blocks execution set next week

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court has blocked the scheduled execution next week of a Texas Death Row inmate convicted in the 1975 abduction slaying of a San Antonio nurse.

Justice Byron White Wednesday ordered the stay for Donald Gene Franklin, 34, until the full court can hear the inmate's formal appeal.

Franklin was scheduled to die Monday for the July 25, 1975, abduction and slaying of nurse Mary Margaret Moran. Franklin was arrested hours after the abduction.

The scars of an abused child can stay with us all his life.

Many teenage drug addicts and teenage prostitutes report being abused children. Many juvenile delinquents also report being abused as children.

And because we pay to respond to those problems, we are all victims of child abuse.

Yet child abuse and the results of abuse can be prevented.

The National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse is a private, charitable organization that knows how to do it. But we need your help. We need money. We need volunteers. Send us your check today, or write for our booklet.

Because if we don't all start somewhere, we won't get anywhere.

Seoul subway line offers shops, snacks, art exhibits

AP Laserphoto

Subway riders in Seoul, South Korea, make their way from a subway car at one of the newly constructed stops which have enlarged the transport system by some new 72 miles of track, making it the seventh longest in the world.

By EDWIN Q. WHITE

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The city of Seoul recently completed two new sections on its subway line, extending it to 72.8 miles of track and making it the seventh longest in the world behind New York, London, Paris, Moscow, Tokyo and Chicago.

The problem now, however, is to get more of the city's 10 million people to ride it.

In addition to cutting commuting time in half for some people, it offers exhibitions of art and culture along with shopping arcades, snacks and reading materials.

City officials hope the subway will help unclog Seoul's surface traffic and keep things moving during next year's Asian Games and the 1988 Summer Olympics which are to be held here.

The recent dedication of lines No. 3 and 4 means the system can handle 5 million people a day, authorities say. But the Seoul Metropolitan Subway Corp. says the daily average so far has been only about 1.9 million people, well below the hoped-for 3.1 million. The corporation predicts, however, that the number of riders will increase sharply as more commuters and other travelers get accustomed to the expanded system.

The most popular form of public transport in Seoul has been the bus — about 8,500 of them. Statistics show that of more than 16 million rides a day on all forms of transportation, nearly two-thirds have been on buses.

Subway construction began in 1971 with the aim of relieving growing traffic congestion on city streets. The first subway line opened in 1974. Work on the other three lines went on simultaneously over a seven-year period, and the second was opened last year.

The cost of the entire subway project has been put at the equivalent of about $2.7 billion, and recent testimony before the National Assembly said about $540 million of that came from foreign loans.

The basic subway fare is 170 won, the equivalent of 19 cents, while the bus fare is 130 won, or 14 cents.

The recently opened subway lines feature trains that move smoothly and quietly, as well as automated ticket devices and other equipment, some patterned after other models in other parts of the world. Air conditioning and ventilation systems have been installed, and escalators serve deep-level stations.

Among the attractions along the newly constructed lines are some of the stations themselves.

Chung-ang-chong Station, near the old capitol building in the heart of Seoul, has more than 200 paintings and pieces of sculpture lining its walls. Other station sites were blasted from a gray-colored granite, where walls and ceilings were smoothed but left in a near-natural state with hidden lights creating a cave-like effect.

At the Tongdaemun Stadium Station, 26 tile mosaics depict sports and events that will be featured during the 1988 Olympics.

The Chungmu-ro Station, in an area known as Seoul's Hollywood because it served as a center for actors.

Closed session on apartheid begins

LONDON (AP) — A Commonwealth committee charged with trying to persuade South Africa to dismantle apartheid began its first meeting today, but the agenda for the three-day closed session remained a secret.

The seven-member panel was established by the Commonwealth, the 49-nation association of Britain and its former colonies, at its summit meeting in Nassau, Bahamas, in October.

Commonwealth spokeswoman Patsy Robertson said the opening session at Marlborough House, the organization's headquarters, began shortly after 10:30 a.m. (5:30 a.m. EST). No details were released of the topics to be discussed.

At its Nassau summit, the Commonwealth charged the committee with trying to persuade South Africa to end apartheid, under which the country's black majority is denied the vote; to free jailed black leaders and to start negotiations for establishing a non-racial government.

The group is to decide by next April whether South African President P.W. Botha has made fundamental changes. If not, the committee then will decide whether to recommend that Commonwealth nations impose economic sanctions against South Africa's white-led government — a move Britain vehemently opposed at the summit.

Botha has said the committee will be welcome to visit his country, a member of Commonwealth until it became a republic in 1961.

The panel is chaired by former Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser and General Olusegun Obasanjo, who headed Nigeria's military government from 1976 to 1979.

Other members are Archbishop Edward Scott, primate of the Anglican Church of Canada; Dame Nita Barrow of Barbados, a president of the World Council of Churches; John Malecela, a former foreign minister of Tanzania; Sardar Swaran Singh, a former Indian government minister; and Lord Anthony Barber, a former British Cabinet minister and chairman of Standard Chartered Bank, which has large interests in South Africa.

Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, whom Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher wanted to appoint to the seven-member group, said Wednesday he didn't foresee any change in Britain's opposition to stiff economic sanctions.

Appearing before the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Select Committee, Howe was asked what further action Britain would endorse if South Africa fails to respond to pressure for reforms.

"There is no commitment...to any further Commonwealth action and I see no reason to change our views of the counterproductive nature of sanctions," he said.

NATO ministers evaluate progress in Soviet relations, arms control

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — NATO foreign ministers open a year-end session today to assess East-West relations after the superpower summit and hear alliance reports on the evolution of Soviet policy under Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

During the two-day annual meeting, officials from the 16-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization will also review prospects for progress in the U.S.-Soviet arms control negotiations in Geneva.

Alliance officials say NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington will give the foreign ministers the results of his staff's studies of Soviet policies since Gorbachev became Communist Party general secretary in March, following the death of Konstantin U. Chernenko.

A senior NATO official said the general thrust of the studies is that while internally there has been movement toward a more disciplined economy, "no dramatic changes" can be foreseen in either Soviet domestic or foreign policies.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, also said that "broadly speaking, growth in Soviet military spending has somewhat slowed, but growth is still continuing." He gave no figures.

He said that even with the cutback, the Soviet central planning system provides that priority armaments programs will not be impeded.

The official said that on the subject of Afghanistan, where an estimated 115,000 Soviet troops are stationed, there have been "some very slight noises" that the Soviets might consider withdrawing, if guarantees were given to ensure the stability of the regime they would leave behind.

But, the NATO official said, Kremlin plans in Afghanistan "have never been spelled out in detail, and we are not sure the Soviets are willing to move."

During the Nov. 19-20 Geneva summit between Gorbachev and President Reagan, Soviet officials reportedly stressed that they were seeking a political solution in Afghanistan. But they reportedly insisted on guarantees that Afghan rebels, supported by the West, would not continue to threaten the Marxist regime in Kabul.

The NATO official also said the report to be given the alliance foreign ministers will show that the Soviet Union remains the greatest arms supplier to Third World nations, but he did not supply figures.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who arrived for the NATO meeting in Brussels on Wednesday, told journalists the United States will be "moving very aggressively" toward an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union when the two sides resume negotiations on Jan. 16.

At the same time, Shultz ruled out trade concessions to the Soviet Union until it improves what Western critics charge is a poor human rights record. Negotiators in Geneva are seeking agreements on strategic nuclear weapons, medium-range arms and space and defensive weapons.

NATO officials on Wednesday said nearly half of the 572 U.S. midrange nuclear missiles planned for deployment in Western Europe will be in place by the end of this year.

U.S.-built Tomahawk cruise and Pershing 2 missiles are being deployed under a 1979 NATO decision to offset what Western officials said was a buildup of Soviet SS-20 rockets aimed at Europe.

Soweto black gives up hope for better life

By MICHAEL PARKS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SOWETO, South Africa — Sibido Molekane cannot remember when life was not hard — a "struggle" as he says — but he can remember when he had hopes, ambitions, faith in the future.

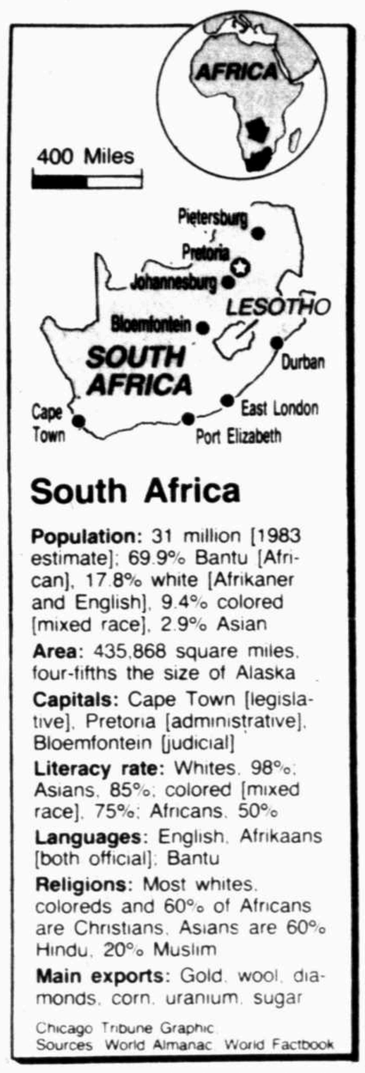
"When I was at school, 10 or 15 years ago, I used to put myself to sleep saying, 'I'll go to school, I'll get a good job, I'll make money and our family will have a better life,' " Molekane, now 30, recalls.

"Oh, I had big, big ambitions. My life was going to be better, so much better than my father's, and then I found out it wasn't going to be, and couldn't be, because of the system, because of apartheid."

His father, Stephen, 64, smiles, sighs, shakes his head and sighs again, for he, too, has battled "the system," as blacks call South Africa's minority white government and its apartheid policies of racial separation. He calculates that, over the years, he won a few victories, but in the end he found he could not beat the system.

"Seven children I've raised," he says. "Each has had his hopes — one was to be a nurse, two were to be teachers, now one wants to be a social worker — but each has found how hard a struggle life is under this system and how little you can do, whatever your efforts."

But Stephen Molekane, a milling machine operator in a Johannesburg furniture factory, is not a bitter man, though his sons say he has every right to be. Nor, as much as he wants to see apartheid ended and believes that blacks will have to fight to do so, is he a revolutionary. Even as he discusses a life of hardship and disappointment, his characteristic gentleness and good humor prevail.



South Africa

"I AM just a father who has tried to give these children more than I had," he said. "More than I had, but not as much as I wanted."

The Molekane family is an ordinary one in Soweto, the sprawling black satellite city of nearly 2 million people outside Johannesburg, and its struggle to survive is the story of the 14 million blacks who live in South Africa's urban areas.

"We have suffered a lot, but everyone suffers under apartheid," said Stephen Molekane's wife, Mary, 58. "We have had great pain in this family because of the system, but probably not more than most. And among my children there is much frustration and anger, but today all young people seem determined to change this system, to overthrow it if necessary."

With seven children and nine grandchildren, the Molekane family, an extended family in an African tradition that continues even as blacks move to urban areas, stretches across three generations now, and the experiences of its members sum up "the traps that all blacks find themselves in," as Sibido Molekane put it.

"Look at us," he said, "and you will see what our people want to be — and what happens to turn all those beautiful hopes and ambitions into the rage you see on the streets all around the country today."

The oldest of the Molekane children is Johannes, 36, a truck driver, who is married to a schoolteacher and is the father of four. He dropped out of school after the eighth grade to help feed the family and finance his brothers' and sisters' education. Today, he fixes cars at night and reconditions scrapped auto parts to also support his mother-in-law, an invalid, and to put his wife's two brothers through school.

ELLEN, 32, fled the country "in anger and despair," her mother says, after the 1976 uprising by black youths in Soweto and other urban ghettos to demand changes in the school system. She had finished high school, passing the difficult South African matriculation exam, and had become a medical clerk at Soweto's Baragwanath Hospital, where she hoped to study nursing. She has one child and is believed to be living in Zambia or Tanzania, her family has heard, but only rarely does word come from her by way of travelers.

Sibido, 30, who was christened Andries but prefers his African name, was in his final year of secondary school in 1976 but, because of the unrest, was not able to take the matriculation exam — the door to better-paying clerical and technical jobs as well as to university. He had wanted to be a teacher. Now an organizer for a small, new retail employees union, he has worked as a photographic assistant, as a warehouse clerk, as an apprentice lithographer and in a laboratory making artificial stones for the saws used in mining. He has two children.

Ivy, 26, now married with two children, was going into her final year of high school when more unrest erupted and she was unable to finish and take the matriculation exam. She sells records at a branch of a large chain of bookstores.

Sidney, 24, who is known as Rapu, is a final-year student at the Soweto College of Education, preparing to become a teacher, but he was detained without charge at the end of July under the state of emergency proclaimed to curb the continuing unrest and remains in detention. He is president of the Soweto Youth Congress and was detained a year ago, also without charge, for more than three months.

JOSEPH, 21, a warehouseman at Baragwanath Hospital, hopes to become a truck driver, one of the best-paying jobs that blacks can get. He dropped out of school after the ninth grade.

And Miriam, 18, a 10th-grade student, wants to go to college and become a social worker. But she sees the continuing unrest, particularly among students, as threatening her chances to complete high school, pass the matriculation exam and gain admission to university.

"A person wants to do things for himself, for his family, his children, the whole community," Sibido Molekane remarked, "but reality prevails over dreams. That's true for everyone, everywhere. But our reality is so harsh, man, so harsh that dreams turn into nightmares."

Neither Sibido nor Johannes, for example, has his own home. Sibido is separated from his wife, and he and his children live with the elder Molekanes. Johannes and his wife lodge with an elderly woman a mile and a half away, but their four children spend most of their time at the elder Molekanes' home, where Johannes parks his car at night because the other neighborhood is too rough.

At night, there are usually 12 or 13 persons squeezed into the four-room, "matchbox" home, giving each person about two and a half square yards of space.

"We have bodies everywhere," Mary Molekane said, laughing as she set about restoring order early one morning. "Some are on the floor, a few are curled up in the corners, a couple may even be in the kitchen. Real privilege in this house is sleeping in a proper bed."

THE LONG wait for government housing, and the cramped living conditions that result, is a major black grievance on which action is only starting. "A house of your own — it can take a lifetime," Johannes said.

"My firstborn is now 11," he went on, "and we applied for a house two months after she was born. Of course, if you have 80,000 rand (about $32,000) you can build your own house now, but where does a truck driver get that kind of money?"

By Soweto standards, Johannes is not badly paid, taking home about $76 a week, but that and his wife's small salary as a teacher must feed nine persons. Sibido makes about $35 a week, Joseph, $17 and their father, Stephen, who has worked for the same company for nearly 40 years, earns about $40 a week, including overtime.

U.S. depends on military bases located in remote Arab nation

By ROBERT H. REID

MUSCAT, Oman (AP) — U.S. surveillance planes keep watch on the entrance to the volatile Persian Gulf, flying in and out of bases here under an agreement that links the United States militarily to this remote Arab country.

Details of the agreement, signed June 4, 1980, are secret but it gives the United States access to Omani bases at Thumrait, Maseirah Island, Sieb and Khasab. In return the United States has spent, according to congressional testimony in Washington, at least $256 million to upgrade the facilities.

The Pentagon says the agreement "provides for limited peacetime and contingency use of designated Omani military facilities" when both governments deem it in their interests.

Public portions of the agreement stipulate the United States can use the bases only with the consent of Oman's absolute ruler, Sultan Qaboos bin Said.

But it is unclear to what extent the pact commits the United States to defend Oman against internal subversion or foreign aggression. Neighboring South Yemen is a pro-Soviet Arab nation; Iran is on the opposite shore of the Persian Gulf.

Nevertheless, the agreement gives the United States a military presence in this strategic area and a capability of countering any Soviet military adventure in the area.

One source with some knowledge of U.S. operations and speaking only on condition of anonymity said U.S. Navy P-3 reconnaissance planes are using Oman's bases almost daily to keep watch on Iranian naval activity as well as Soviet ships in the Gulf of Oman at the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

The United States is part of a multinational effort that keeps watch on the Strait of Hormuz, the 20 to 30-mile-wide entrance of the Persian Gulf through which 20 percent of the non-Communist world's oil flows.

During the five-year-old Iran-Iraq war, the Iranians have frequently threatened to close the strait if Iraq blocks their oil exports.

In addition, the U.S.-Omani agreement allows the United States to store military hardware in Oman for use by the U.S. Central Command, once known as the Rapid Deployment Force, in case of an emergency in the region.

Western sources say most of the supplies have already been deployed here, including fuel, ammunition and other unspecified equipments. U.S. cargo planes fly supplies regularly to Maseirah Island for transport by helicopter to American ships in the Indian Ocean to the south.

Although the agreement rules out a permanent U.S. military presence, the sources say, a small number of civilian contractors working for the United States are in Oman to watch over the military stocks. Most of the civilians are said to be non-Americans.

Under terms of the agreement, U.S. Navy surveillance planes cannot be stationed here and they can use the bases only for refueling. They must request permission from the Omanis each time they want to use the airfields, the sources added.

The agreement is part of an unusual pattern of military links binding the West to this little country of 1.5 million people on the southeastern rim of the Arabian Peninsula.

Sultan Qaboos is a graduate of Britain's Sandhurst Military Academy, and an estimated 1,000 British officers serve in Oman's 21,500-man armed forces, including some on contract to the sultan and others on loan from regular British units.

Commanders of both the Omani navy and air force are British.

Oman's political stability makes it a safe place for the U.S. operations. The country has had no major internal troubles since 1975, when Qaboos put down a 10-year Communist-backed insurgency.

Nearly 250,000 Pakistanis stranded in Bangladesh

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — For Kaneez Fatima, 43, living with her four-member family in a tin shed with only jute rags as a privacy screen, it has been 14 years of agonizing waiting.

"I want to go home to Pakistan. This is my only dream," she said, sitting next to a heap of rotting garbage and holding her youngest daughter, who suffers from malnutrition.

Fatima is one of nearly 250,000 Pakistanis stranded in Bangladesh since the breakaway state of East Pakistan achieved independence in December 1971 with the help of Indian military forces. Since then they have waited in vain for the Islamabad government to agree to take them.

Now, the Jeddah-based Rabita-e-Alame-Islam, or World Islamic League, has launched an appeal for $350 million for repatriation and rehabilitation of the stranded people.

Under a 1973 repatriation agreement between India and Pakistan and supervised by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, 174,000 people returned to Pakistan and nearly 100,000 Bengalis, including most of the soldiers and officers were sent home.

Americans care for Egyptian orphans

ASSYUT, Egypt (AP) — A Christian orphanage begun in 1911 by a 23-year-old woman from the American South thrives today in this Egyptian town off the Nile River.

The woman was Lillian Trasher and her mission began when a feverish mother under her care died, leaving behind an infant. The child, Miss Trasher wrote in her diary, became "the small nucleus of this great Godly work."

Nearly 75 years later, about 600 children, all Christians from poor backgrounds and with at least one dead parent, live in the Lillian Trasher Orphanage, a number greatly reduced from the 1,600 who were here when Miss Trasher died in 1961.

Dwight Dobson, the institution's Cairo representative, said 1,600 children Miss Trasher took in were too many to handle and the orphanage committee had to adopt new eligibility rules.

"When she was here, her heart was so big she accepted everyone," he said in an interview. "It became unmanageable."

Born in Jacksonville, Fla., Miss Trasher was working in a North Carolina orphanage when she heard a woman just back from India speak of her missionary work there. Miss Trasher later wrote that she decided that helping people would be her vocation.

She abandoned wedding plans and set sail from the United States in October, 1910.

She wound up in Assyut, a provincial capital 235 miles south of Cairo, and on Feb. 10, 1911, she had her first charge, the infant whose mother had died. She rented a small house to care for the baby on a meager allowance and a first donation of 35 cents from the local telegraph boy.

An orphan of the Lillian Trasher Orphanage, founded by an American, reads his lesson in the institution's primary school classroom in Assyut, Egypt.

Miss Trasher's accounts are contained in diaries, letters and other papers now in the archives of her church, the Assemblies of God, in Springfield, Mo. Some have been published and are available here.

The orphanage today has a primary school, dormitories, a chapel and sports facilities, all of which stand out in sharp contrast to the grey mud houses of nearby peasant families.

Children play in the yard. Teenagers sit around a duck pond.

"We feel this is our home," said Mona Bishai, the supervisor of the children's department who is known to her orphans as Mama Mona.

Illegitimate children are not accepted under orphanage rules, she said.

"This is not like in films where an unknown bundle is left at the door and taken in," Mama Mona said. "We are like one family, and we don't want outsiders to get the wrong impression."

Miss Trasher founded the orphanage on the Pentecostal faith of her church, and the emphasis on religion remains constant. Paintings and prints with Christian motifs hang on almost every wall.

In one of her diaries, Miss Trasher wrote of intense revival meetings at the orphanage in which "the revival struck...and they were saved."

"The most wonderful sight I ever saw in my life was...dozens and dozens of little girls shouting, crying, talking in tongues, rejoicing, preaching, singing — praising God!"

Dormitories are bright, carpeted and freshly painted, with clean curtains. The orphans do all the sewing and repair work, and run a bakery and a carpentry shop.

The costs for running the orphanage average 600 Egyptian pounds (about $475) a day, according to the Rev. George Assaad, the administrator who is himself a product of the orphanage. Egypt's Ministry of Social Affairs covers part of the costs and donations the rest.

Miss Trasher had to travel village to village to collect money and became known as "The Lady on a Donkey."

By 1916 she had 50 children in her care and moved to the current site.

Girls who decide against marriage remain at the orphanage and devote the rest of their lives serving new generations. Mama Mona is one: she was engaged twice, but "God didn't want me to get married," she said.

Other girls leave to become teachers or lawyers, Mama Mona said, but they are expected to be wives first.

Boys must fulfill their obligations to the Egyptian armed forces, then find jobs and apartments before becoming eligible to marry.

Israel wants $3.5 billion in military, economic aid

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — Israel submitted to the United States on Wednesday a record request for $3.5 billion in economic and military aid for the fiscal year beginning next October.

The request, delivered by Finance Minister Yitzhak Modai to U.S. Ambassador Thomas Pickering, coincided with the arrival here of American investigators to question Israeli officials thought to be involved with the American Jonathan J. Pollard, who has been accused of spying for Israel in Washington.

U.S. officials here emphasized that presentation of the aid request had been scheduled "for a long, long time," and that there was no connection between it and the arrival of the investigative team, which is headed by Abraham Sofaer, the State Department legal adviser. But at least some Israeli officials were clearly embarrassed by the timing.

Israel's request for aid is made every year in late November or early December. The figure in Wednesday's request is $500 million above the $3 billion in military and economic aid it sought for the current fiscal year. All the assistance is in the form of grants.

Late last summer, Congress voted special emergency aid of $1.5 billion to Israel, to be spread evenly between the 1985 and 1986 fiscal years. So the amount Israel will receive from the United States in this fiscal year will be $3.75 billion, or slightly more than the amounted requested for fiscal 1987.

U.S. military exercises set in West Germay

KAISERSLAUTERN, West Germany (AP) — Nearly 21,000 U.S. soldiers and more than 300,000 tons of equipment will be sent to Europe for the winter Reforger exercise this January and February, the U.S. Army announced.

Reforger, which stands for Return of Forces to Germany, is being staged for the second year in a row during winter. The 1986 exercise is the 18th annual set of Reforger maneuvers.

The purpose of the exercise is to assess the impact of winter weather on deployment of forces to West Germany, the U.S. Army said in a news release issued Wednesday.

The maneuvers involve deployment of troops to West Germany on Jan. 6-20, the war games themselves, on Jan. 20-Feb. 1, and the return of equipment to depots in Luxembourg, Belgium, the Netherlands and West Germany on Feb. 1-28.

UNESCO stops work

PARIS (NYT) — Large numbers of employees of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization held a work stoppage Wednesday to demand changes in the agency's policy on dismissing employees.

Dismissals are expected as part of cost-cutting measures after the withdrawal from UNESCO of the United States and, last week, Britain, employes said.

In additic , five staff members began a hunger strike at noon Tuesday in the lobby of UNESCO's headquarters building to press a demand that an association of employes be given a greater role in decisions about job dismissals.

The work stoppage was the first strike at UNESCO since 1974 and, according to some of its leaders, indicated dissatisfaction with the organization's director general, Amadou-Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal.

Millions strum in China

PEKING (AP) — China has an estimated 10 million guitar players, more than three times the number that were strumming away two years ago, the official Xinhua news agency said today.

Xinhua said the ranks of guitar enthusiasts have been growing since the end of the 1966-1976 Cultural Revolution, during which the guitar was rejected as a foreign instrument.

The news agency quoted Chen Zhi, a guitarist who gives lessons that are broadcast on national radio, as saying that few Chinese guitar players are well trained.

He said he is setting up an orchestra for the instrument and a center to train young musicians in classical guitar.

During the Cultural Revolution, young Red Guards inspired by then Chinese leader Mao Tse-tung rooted out what they perceived as foreign and counterrevolutionary elements in Chinese life.

Lebanese army deployed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (NYT) — A joint force of Lebanese army soldiers and policemen was deployed in West Beirut Wednesday in a new attempt to end the rule of the militia groups in the mainly Moslem area.

The force, numbering 850, moved out of barracks at dawn and began patrolling the streets, where rival militiamen of the Shiite movement Amal and the mostly Druse Progressive Socialist Party have been observing a cease-fire after heavy fighting last month.

More than 60 people were killed and 300 wounded in the fighting.

The security plan is being observed by 38 Syrian army officers, and has the full support of Amal and the Druse forces, the largest militias in the Moslem part of the capital.

Club Rambose — not your typical night spot, unless of course you live in a war zone. Tapping in on the country's recent surge in patriotism, Rambose's decor resembles a rebel encampment complete with machine guns, grenade launchers and an open parachute hanging from the ceiling. At top, from left are Tim Trostle, Dave Mitchell; at bottom, from left are Liz Hammond, Jill Merklin and David Bell.

Paramilitary-theme nightclub takes off with flying colors

HOUSTON (AP) — The buffet is laid out on a green military stretcher. The bartender is dressed in a black headband and camouflage duds. A jeep with a machine gun is parked outside.

It's Rambose, Houston's first paramilitary theme night spot and it's drawing more than 1,000 people a night.

"We never expected it to take off like this," says Larry Dubose, manager of the suburban club. "This just took off with flying colors."

The name, of course, is a takeoff on the popular Sylvester Stallone movie character. The spelling is changed for copyright reasons.

The place has been in business for about three weeks now.

"It's pro-USA," Dubose says. "If you notice, you've got a lot of people buying shirts that are camouflage. Up north, especially in the 60s, it was all get away from Vietnam stuff. Now it's all turned around, it's pro-American stuff."

Dubose, a Vietnam vet himself, says the club also is popular among military personnel home on leave, off-duty police officers and veterans. In addition, survivalist club members want to use the club as a meeting place.

The Vietnam veterans, they enjoy it," Dubose says. "They donate stuff to us, like grenade launchers, pictures, photographs. Kids relate to it pretty good, too."

> "The Vietnam veterans, they enjoy it."
>
> — Larry Dubose, Rambose manager

A grenade launcher dangles from a ceiling. Bunkers made of 50-pound sandbags are in the club and waitresses are adorned with bandoliers. The doorman wears green military fatigues. Restrooms are labelled latrines.

A light and sound system produced the sounds of jets flying by and smoke belches from the dance floor.

"Everybody's been proud of what President Reagan's been doing," says Carlos Lamborrel, a part owner of the club. "Everybody's proud. That's part of the gimmick."

Even if the Stallone movies lose popularity, Rambose should remain successful for years to come, as long as we keep the atmosphere up as being pro-USA, Dubose says. "We're Americans and we're not ashamed of it."

One of the club patrons this week was Rick Wantz, a 26-year-old Army veteran.

"This is nothing like an EM (enlisted man's) club," he said. "An EM club is the most depressing place you could ever be in."

Ads delayed — as were trains

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The authority running the city's mass transit and commuter rail systems decided that the timing wasn't right last week to launch its new ad campaign.

"We're getting there" is the campaign slogan, but last week's performance of the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority would have made "We're getting there — sooner or later, more appropriate, said Rick Wooten, the agency's manager of public affairs and a commuter.

Commuter service last week was "hardly acceptable," with trains running up to 90 minutes late, Wooten said. "Last week not once was my train on time," said Wooten, who lives in suburban Paoli.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Boys in grades one through four in Kenya will wear shorts instead of trousers as part of their school uniforms next year, Education Minister Jonathan Ngeno says.

It's not that the children are getting too big for their britches. The long and the short of it is that bermudas cost less than long pants, and the government wants to ease parents' financial burden.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The chemical that puts the fire in fireflies could be used to create glow-in-the-dark vines and self-illuminating pumpkins someday, say two researchers who isolated the light-producing enzyme.

The two University of California-San Diego professors, who paid children a penny apiece for millions of fireflies during their years of research, say the enzyme might also replace radioactivity in detecting liver and heart disorders.

According to their research, scientists could trace the chemicals inside living cells by seeing how much and where they shine, instead of having to kill and break open the cells.

New food trends

By MARIAN FARR

What used to be called "special foods for special needs" — less salt, less sugar, fewer calories and reduced fat foods — are now becoming mainstream products. These foods are growing in popularity because they meet some important needs. For example, according to FDA Consumer Magazine, four out of 10 adults are trying to cut down on salt or sodium. It's also been estimated by the National Institutes of Health that 34 million Americans weigh more than 20 percent over their ideal weight.

However, shopping for foods-with-less may require most of us to develop some new skills — especially when it comes to label-reading. For unless you know what terms like "low-calorie," "reduced-calorie" or "light" mean, you could wind up with more than you think.

The Food and Drug Administration regulates food labeling. A food may be labeled as low-calorie only if a serving of that food supplies no more than 40 calories and does not provide more than 0.4 calories per gram.

Foods labeled as reduced calorie must contain one-third fewer calories per serving than their regular counterparts. In addition, the food must have a statement on its label that describes the comparison upon which the dietary claim was made.

The word "light" or "lite" has a much fuzzier meaning and no strict guidelines on its use. Some light food products, for example, have fewer calories only because they are packaged in smaller portions than the regular product. A variety of groups are petitioning the FDA to set standards and definitions for these terms. In the meantime, reading product labels can help you know what you're getting in foods with less.

CURIOUS SHOPPER

Treated apples 'rotten to the core'

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Just curious, but why is it that apples in the supermarket are all just about the same size? When I was a youngster we had a small orchard, and at harvest time the apples were of every conceivable size.

A. This is an astute observation which, I'm sorry to say, brings forth a rather disturbing response. According to Albert J. Heier, a spokesman for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, certain apples, mainly McIntosh, Red Delicious, Golden Delicious and Stayman, are sprayed in the spring, at the beginning of summer and during the middle of summer with a chemical called daminozide.

This chemical controls the size of the apple, gives it a longer shelf life and intensifies the color of red apples. Washing the apple won't get rid of it because it actually goes right to the core.

Over one-third of the apples in the U.S. are subjected to this treatment. Traces of it even show up in apple juice concentrate. It's also used, but not as extensively, on other fruits and vegetables.

The government is considering banning daminozide. I couldn't care less whether my apples were of equal size, but I care a lot if they're chemically rotten to the core!

Q. Recently I bought three cans of canned fruit on sale — two cans of peaches and one can of pears. One can was black on the inside, and you could see where the acid had eaten through. The other two were the same. I threw everything away and would not eat the fruit. Who is responsible for something like this, and what should I do next time? Linda Turk, Ontario, Ore.

A. The cans you bought were probably unearthed from some storeroom where they had been sitting through all kinds of temperature variations for at least three years. These cans had high acidity or corrosive properties, and you were wise not to have consumed their contents.

Generally cans so affected will bulge eventually. The person responsible for putting them on sale either had no idea how long the cans had been stored or thought he would take a chance.

If this ever happens to you again, take the empty cans back to the store manager, demand an explanation, an apology and your money refunded.

Q. At a French restaurant I ordered asparagus as my vegetable and they were pure white. Why do they find it appetizing to bleach a vegetable with chemicals? I refused to eat them and would like to know now what chemical was used.

A. White asparagus are not bleached with chemicals. As normal asparagus grow, they turn green by simply being exposed to ordinary daylight. To prevent them from turning green and remaining white, the asparagus beds are covered with a mixture of straw and loose dirt. Cauliflower is another vegetable which goes through a similar process. If it were allowed to be exposed to the sun, it would turn brownish; therefore the longest leaves of the plant are pulled up over the white part and tied with twine.

Europeans prize white asparagus which is grown in France and is tender and delicate in flavor. The white asparagus grown in Mexico is tougher and has a slightly bitter after-taste.

Q. In reference to Vaseline Intensive Care Hand Lotion, on the bottle is written "Fresh Herbal." I can't find any herbs in the list of ingredients. Why do they say this?

A. Charles Torrey, a product safety coordinator at Chesebrough-Pond's, said, "There are no label or advertising claims for Fresh Herbal Intensive Care Lotion relative to the product containing herbs or spices. 'Fresh Herbal' refers to the fragrance, which is composed of ingredients that develop the odor of herbs."

This is a classic example of a company's use of a trendy catch word designed to sell the product. It should also illustrate that the name of a product need have nothing to do with its ingredients.

ADA releases list of possibly dangerous toy, equipment

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

The annual toy survey of the Americans for Democratic Action cites potentially dangerous baby equipment and questions safety aspects of a collar used on a popular doll.

Although most of the survey was devoted to assigning toys to the ADA's "Toy Box" and "Trash Box," some devices found their way onto a list of "Potentially Dangerous Toys."

The ADA alleged that "the design of the collar on SOME of the Koosas, the stuffed animal in the Cabbage Patch line of toys, makes this a potentially dangerous toy."

According to the ADA, children can remove collars on some of the dolls and put them tightly around their own necks, hooking them with clasps that are difficult to undo.

Newer collars have been redesigned, making them shorter and easier to unhook, the survey said.

Barbara Wruck, vice president of Coleco Industries Inc., which makes the toy, said, "The Koosas in their entirety, including both the original and updated collars, comply with all the Consumer Product Safety Commission and Canadian safety regulations. There have been no injuries as a result of the use or misuse of the product."

In considering baby seats that hook onto tables and counters, the ADA said that children can climb out of some the seats, some are likely to fall off the table, and at least one has a metal coating that flakes off.

The survey singled out two hook-on seats for particular criticism. The Sassy Seat Portable High Chair made by Sassy Inc., and My Chair made by Pansy Ellen Products.

Children can disengage Sassy Seat set locks, and metal pieces flake off My Chair, according to the survey. The ADA tested a third hook-on seat called Babydiner, made by Babydiner Ltd. of Scotland, and had nothing negative to say about it.

The survey cited no specific baby walkers, but noted that the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission reported 15,623 injuries due to the walkers.

"Not only is there no evidence that walkers are of any use in helping babies learn to walk, but there is mounting evidence that baby walkers are involved in enormous numbers of accidents," declared the survey.

A Canadian study showed that 40 percent of children using baby walkers are involved in some type of mishap, ranging from finger entrapment to tipovers to falls down stairs producing head injury.

When it came to baby gates, the ADA objected to those that attach to walls with suction cups that don't adjust for variations in width of a door or stairway opening. Such width variations often are caused by baseboards protruding from the walls at floor level.

The survey praised a bathtub safety aid that covers faucets, lessening the chance of injury to a child that bumps into the spigot, and protecting a child from burns.

Gift items can teach children safety

By LINDA ANDERSON

As horrifying and tragic as it is, every year millions of children are abducted, abused or injured in accidents.

Worried parents now have available to them a wide range of materials to use in teaching their children safety rules and caution. Some of these items are available in Midland and, as Christmas gifts, might give children enjoyment while giving their parents a measure of peace of mind.

• "Strangers and Dangers," a board game created by three former law enforcement professionals, is designed to teach children the rules of safety and to present information on prevention, but still be fun to play.

The game stresses dealing with strangers — players lose points if they "accept" candy from strangers or let a stranger touch them — as well as common safety sense, such as don't play on railroad tracks, play with matches or pet strange animals.

"Strangers and Dangers" is available at several major retailers or consumers may call (312) 527-5100.

• The "It's OK to say No" series of color and activity books, published by Playmore Inc., teach children to recognize potentially dangerous situations and to help protect themselves from abuse.

According to its publishers, the first two volumes, for children ages 3-10, "have been enormous best sellers with over 3.5 million copies in print in the first six months of publication. The books have been gratefully received by police departments, school boards and hundreds of child abuse prevention specialists across the nation."

The series, so far, contains books titled "It's OK to say No!," "Sometimes it's OK to Tell Secrets!," "My Body is My Own!," "Kids Have Rights Too!" and "What Should You Do When ...?"

The books are being marketed in retail chains, with a suggested price of $1.95 each. For more information contact Playmore Inc., Publishers, Kathy Harshberger Jon Horwich, (212) 924-7447.

• The National PTA and Peter Pan peanut butter have started the "I CAN Safety Plan," as a public service designed to teach children that being scared is not necessary to being safe.

The program includes a school education kit with a five-day lesson plan using "what if" situations children may encounter, and a take-home worksheet for children to complete at home with their parents.

This safety campaign also includes a free brochure of safety tips that families can order by sending name and address to National PTA Peter Pan Peanut Butter, P.O. Box 90506, St. Paul, Minn. 55190.

Collecting Christmas tree ornaments popular hobby

Copley News Service

The tradition of collecting ornaments — whether Snoopy figures, Strawberry Shortcake items or delicate glass icicles and sophisticated Faberge balls — is one of today's hottest holiday happenings.

Philanthropists recognize the passion: Celebrities donate their handmade ornaments to Roger's Gardens in Newport Beach, Calif., to raise money for child abuse. Dudley Moore, Steve Garvey, Charles Schulz, Paul McCartney and Liberace all have sent their greetings to the world through ornaments.

Perry Como has donated a gilded bell. Vincent Price has added twinkle with an oversize fly, reminiscent of his great horror film role. And Henry Winkler has contributed a tiny teddy bear, knowing that even the Fonz would want one on his '50s Christmas tree.

As these ornaments delight garden visitors, the same ritual of collecting and making ornaments is heating up in cottages and condominiums around America, from Muskegee to Manhattan.

Little do the 260 million Americans who buy Christmas ornaments — or unpack their family heirlooms — realize that ornaments are one of the most popular collectible items in the United States today. And Hallmark, manufacturer of Christmas ornaments since 1973, when they first introduced the Betsey Clark ball, hired America's foremost authority on Christmas ornaments to prepare a retrospective of their own collection.

Houston collector and one-time fashion model Clara Scroggins decorates four Christmas trees every year with her collection of 20,000 ornaments. Her den features a white porcelain tree; a dining room tree is trimmed in stained glass, crystal or gold; her guest bedroom is a winter wonderland for her granddaughter, complete with a child's fantasy tree and her living room crowns the Christmas spirit with china doll ornaments.

The former talk show hostess chronicles the traditions of collecting — and the Hallmark collection — in "Hallmark Keepsake Ornaments: A Collector's Guide" (Wallace Homestead; second edition; $8.95).

"Until 1973, the standard adornment had been solid color glass balls — sold in boxes of six — with the occasional tinsel or angel hair," says Scroggins. "People bought the dated (keepsake) ornaments by the thousands ... and the original Betsey Clark ball is now a rarity."

According to Rarities, a collector's magazine, ornaments increase in value because they stay in families for years, forcing collectors to pay higher prices. Hallmark ornaments dating pre-1978 have tripled their issue price. And the new collecting passion continues to spark spinoff traditions, as well. Celebrity ornaments. Ornaments that mark "Baby's First Christmas." Americana ornaments for the bicentennial. "Feliz Navidad" — international peace ornaments for our neighbors to the south. After Snoopy Santas and porcelain teddy bears, can Cabbage Patch ornaments be far behind?

Ornaments can increase in value

Copley News Service

If you've been caught up in the spirit of the season and have joined the ornament-collecting craze, the following tips will help you make the most of your efforts.

- To prevent breakage, keep the original packing for your store-bought ornaments. If you later decide to sell your collectibles, the boxes will increase their value.
- For maximum value, always get the first edition in a series of ornaments.
- Do not write or mark on the original packing, as it will lessen the value of the ornament.
- Quickly fill any gaps in your collection. The longer you wait, the more expensive the addition. Marathon Santa ornaments commemorating the 1984 Olympic Games that originally sold for $8 now sell for $22.
- Hold a collector's party in your home, and trade ornaments and ideas on where to find hard-to-find designs. Hallmark's Victorian Dollhouse, complete with wallpaper, furniture and a Christmas tree, has tripled in value and is hard to find. In 1982, a first-in-a-series tin locomotive sold for $13.50 — it now sells for $200 among collectors.

It pays to trade ornaments — and sources.

Binoculars bring spectators closer to 'the action'

Associated Press

Whether you want to read the quarterback's lips, identify a bird of a different color, or check out the diva's costume, binoculars will put you closer to the action. Make sure to pick a pair with quality and features to suit your needs, advises Changing Times magazine.

Binoculars are either prismatic or nonprismatic. In the more precisely engineered and expensive prismatic binoculars, entering light passes through prisms that make the image reaching your eye seem more realistic and sharp. The commonest type uses a "Porro prism." The costlier and more compact roof-prism type, with prisms positioned differently, is sleeker and lighter.

German-style prismatics have two-piece barrels with prisms easily misaligned if the binoculars are treated roughly. The American-style one-piece body is sturdier.

Nonprismatic binoculars are less expensive and more rugged, but they lack the magnification and 3-D effect you can get with a prismatic product. Opera and field glasses are usually nonprismatic. Be wary of glasses with bulging sides that imitate the shape of the more versatile prismatic glass.

BINOCULARS USUALLY bear two numbers on the body, appearing as 7 x 35 or 7 x 50 and so on. The first number gives the magnifying power. At 7 x the subject being viewed appear seven times closer. Most binoculars magnify between six and 10 times. If you go higher and lack a tripod, the slightest hand movement will cause an image to jump around.

The second number is the diameter in millimeters of the objective lens, the larger one in front that receives light. The bigger the lens, the more light it gathers and, to a degree, the brighter the image reaching your eye.

As a guide for using binoculars at night, some makers' product brochures report relative brightness; others report the more useful twilight factor. Either way, the higher the number, the better the night vision.

Models numbered 7 x 35 and 8 x 30 are the most versatile. Because they collect more light, a 7 x 50 or an 8 x 40 are good if you expect to use binoculars frequently at twilight or in dim light, although a 6 x 30 is a worthy compromise if less bulk and more portability are important.

ANOTHER MEASURE of binocular performance is the field of view, which is the width of the area you see from 1,000 yards or meters away. It may be expressed in feet, meters or as degrees of an angle. The manufacturer usually states the measure as an angle in degrees on the shell of the binoculars.

Binoculars come with fields of view defined as regular, semi-wide, wide field and extra-wide field. As the binoculars' magnification increases, the field of view narrows.

Binoculars fall into four price categories. Generally, the more you pay, the better the view.

Top-of-the-line equipment includes models from Bausch & Lomb, Leitz and Zeiss. Because of the superior materials, exacting construction, durability and lifetime guarantees that frequently come with these quality products, even standard-size, all-purpose binoculars are pricey.

A Zeiss 8 x 30 B Dialyt, for example, goes for $555. A Leitz Trinovid 7 x 35 B costs $459 and a Bausch & Lomb Classic 7 x 35 sells for $730, although discounts are common.

In the next-best category, which includes Bushnell, Swift, Tasco, Edmund Scientific, Fuji, Nikon, Canon, Minolta and Pentax, prices fall. By comparison, the Bushnell Explorer II 7 x 35 general-use model sells for $206. Quality is often good enough to make models from this group attractive choices.

SERVICEABLE BUT LESS costly models are available at another level, which often includes economy models by manufacturers in the second-best group. Bushnell's Sportsview 7 x 35, for example, sells for $75.

In the $25 to $50 range, you may get your money's worth if you're going to use the glasses only occasionally for less demanding tasks.

All binoculars are now made abroad, either in Japan, Germany or other foreign countries, which means that differing standards of inspection apply.

Bausch & Lomb and Bushnell, for example, test their binoculars, which are made in Japan, after they arrive in this country. Other brands from Japan are inspected by the Japan Telescope Inspection Institute and bear a JL mark if the product complies with the highest standard of manufacture. The term "passed" appears if less rigorous export requirements are applicable.

CHANGING TIMES magazine suggests that you read and compare provisions for protection and compare warranties, ranging from lifetime to one year. Arrange to field-test the binoculars at home under an agreement, if possible, to have your money returned if you aren't satisfied. Other ways to test for a suitable pair:

- To compare brands, take a printed page and back up until you can barely read the print through the binoculars. Switch to another model. See how it compares in bringing the same size type into view from the same distance.
- Sharply focus the binoculars on a distant, somewhat detailed object, then swing them to each edge of the field of view to see whether the image sharpness changes much. Loss of clarity should be minimal.
- Go over the general appearance of the binoculars. Avoid those that are scratched, dented, or that have internal rattling.
- Point the eyepieces toward a bright light and look through the objective lenses. From 5-10 inches away, check the inside for chipped lenses and prisms, dirt or lens cement separations.

Check to see that internal glass surfaces are fully coated with magnesium fluoride to ensure brighter and better defined images; coated lenses will reflect a magenta hue. "Fully coated" ensures that all lenses and prisms have been treated. A less thoroughly treated pair is simply labeled "coated."

- Check the alignment by observing a distant object with both lenses. Cover one lens with your hand, then quickly remove it. If you see two images before your eyes adapt to the change, the barrels are out of alignment.

DEAR ABBY

Don't ignore child molestation

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My older brother recently married a divorced woman with a 10-year-old daughter. My brother has always been attracted to little girls. His stepdaughter (I'll call her Mary) is well-developed for her age. Lately she's been asking for a lock for her bedroom door. This is all she requested from her grandmother (my mother) for Christmas.

I don't like to think bad things about my brother, but I have bad feelings about the whole thing. You hear so much these days about adults molesting kids. Should I ask Mary any questions? She doesn't seem to like to be alone with my brother. I once saw Mary in such a depression (no one noticed it but me), and when I asked her what was wrong, she nearly burst into tears.

I feel helpless, but I want to help her if there is something wrong with the family situation.

To give you a little background about my brother: He has lived with many women before (all with little girls). He spent a lot of time with an uncle who was caught molesting his young nieces.

Please tell me how to deal with this, or should I mind my own business? If my brother is guilty and I bring it out in the open, I'm afraid my whole family will hate me.

I don't want to give my name, so please answer in the paper. I will be reading you faithfully every day looking for an answer. — HEARTSICK IN MAINE

DEAR HEARTSICK: If a child is being molested, it's everybody's business. And if your whole family hates you for exposing a crime and rescuing a child, don't let it bother you. Try to get closer to Mary. Win her confidence, and let her know that you care about her and want to be her friend.

If your suspicions are correct, confront your brother and tell him that if he does not get into specialized counseling for child molesters immediately, you will turn him in to the police and the proper authorities.

Do not let this go another minute. If you feel incapable of handling this situation yourself, please write again and give me your brother's name and address, and I will handle it.

DEAR ABBY: When a person checks into a hospital, there are forms to fill out and questions to answer. One question I prefer not to answer is about religious preference. I won't go into detail, but I consider that an invasion of privacy.

Why is that question asked routinely? — JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: Many patients enjoy being visited by a clergyperson of their own faith, and this is the way the visiting clergyperson knows who of his/her faith is in the hospital.

If you prefer not to disclose your religious preference — or if you have none — simply ignore that question. It's your right. No apologies are necessary.

DEAR ABBY: It's that time of year again, and as a salesperson of many years, I hear the same lament every year from young people: "What can I get Mom, Pops, Aunt Martha or Uncle Joe? They have everything they want already."

Wrong! They don't have what they really want. Most would prefer a short visit, or an invitation to lunch or dinner, the chance to share a movie, a shopping trip, or just the pleasure of an auto ride. A little personal attention is what most people want and need.

Think about it. — SANTA'S HELPER IN OHIO

DEAR HELPER: I just did — and you're absolutely right.

"Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Give to charity, but give wisely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charity appeals seem to be everywhere, and most charitable appeals are legitimate, according to the National Council of Better Business Bureaus, but there are a few bad apples in any barrel.

Don't be misled by the name of the group. Some shady operators have adopted names that closely resemble well-known charities. If you are in doubt, check with your local Better Business Bureau.

Always make contributions by check, made out to the charity itself, not to the individual collecting. Keep records of your donations, the BBB urges.

The four major approaches for charity are by mail, telephone, door-to-door and on the street. Mail appeals obviously offer plenty of time to think it over.

In the other cases, ask the full name and address of the charity, and check the solicitor's identification.

Most states require charities to register, so ask if they have a license to solicit.

Ask also if the contribution is tax deductible. The fact that a charity is tax exempt, doesn't mean that gifts to it are automatically deductible, the BBB reports.

The Better Business Bureau says not to feel pressured to make a gift immediately. If the solicitor uses high pressure tactics, intimidation, threats or harassing calls, call the police.

Also, ask how much of the gift will go to actual charitable uses. Many groups simply say "all proceeds" go to charity. That is meaningless, since the proceeds are what is left after the cost of raising money.

Finally, it is illegal to demand payment for unordered merchandise. Some charities send out items such as key rings, pens or address labels in hopes of receiving a donation in return.

Capture spontaneity of situation on film

NEW YORK (AP) — Amateur photographers can take professional-looking photos by simply approaching each shot with a story concept in mind, says Elizabeth Dory, a New York photo editor. She suggests not posing subjects so that they look contrived.

'No' to newsletters

By ERMA BOMBECK

Twenty years ago I publicly passed sentence on Christmas newsletters.

It was a terrible way to enter the joyous season of Christmas to learn that other people's children were "sleeping dry" at age 3 months and that Ed and Margaret got 18 miles to the gallon out of their camper on the way to Raw Sewage Lake.

I found these Xeroxed diaries impersonal and boring, and if their poodle was depressed following her hysterectomy I really didn't care.

Most letter-writers would begin with January and stop off at every month to share some accomplishment, or discuss in great detail how 4-year-old Robbie was selected to conduct the Cleveland Symphony. Some of them would include pictures of the family so dark and blotched, they looked like Rorschach tests.

Some of them set down their achievements in poetry form. You'd be amazed to discover how they could find a rhyme for "affluent" and "prodigy."

Every year I get hundreds of newsletters from people who want to convert me or prove to me that people enjoy hearing what their family has done in the past year. Every year I save one to run on the following year in observance of this joyous holiday.

The following newsletter, in its original form, ran for two and a half pages. It is trimmed (and the names changed) in the name of mercy and mental health.

"WISHING YOU GOD'S RICHEST BLESSINGS THIS CHRISTMAS

"Dear Friends and Relatives:

"On June 15, Madge went home to be with the Lord. As we were eating supper, she began to shake and I put my arms around her. She stiffened out and I believe she died in my arms, but the hospital said no it was a few hours later.

"In July, Aunt Ceil somewhat reluctantly left her home on Grimes Avenue to live in an apartment with my folks. However it was short lived as Mom passed away two weeks later.

"The week Dad moved out she had a bad spell and a stroke. She has bursitis in her shoulder and her eyesight was not very good. I might mention that Margaret had a heart attack just prior to Aunt Ceil's stroke.

"Stuart and Sarah were married in September and Dad decided he'd move into Stuart's room. Here I go again. I'm just beginning to see daylight.

"We have lost several relatives and friends this year. During the summer it seemed like every week someone close passed away. Martin said he spent his whole vacation going to funerals and was glad to go back to work.

"Wishing you all a blessed Christmas and a glorious New Year."

That is the winner of last year's competition for "Joy to the World."

It tops the one the year before where there was a picture of an elderly family member with breathing tubes in his nose.

I beg all of you newsletter writers. Don't try to cheer me up this year. I can't stand it.

Changes cause for counseling

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Short of having hallucinations, hearing voices, being extremely violent or experiencing such severe depression that suicide is a real possibility, experts say there are few absolute indications for consulting a psychotherapist. But there are some general guidelines for judging whether it might be time to get some help. Among them:

— Frequent feelings of depression, hopelessness, despair.
— Severe anxiety, panic or fear.
— Sharp mood swings.
— Lack of interest in family, friends, work, hobbies or other activities you used to enjoy.
— Changes in appetite and sleep patterns.
— Extreme weight gains or losses.
— Recurring sexual difficulties.
— Excessive worrying.
— Periods of confusion or forgetfulness.
— Abuse of drugs or alcohol.
— Feelings of worthlessness, emptiness or apathy.
— Cruelty or hostility to others.
— Unexplained appearance of physical symptoms — such as headaches or stomach pain — or preoccupation with physical illness.
— Personal or professional crisis.

Furskins bears selling despite $60 price tag

NEW YORK (AP) — Furskins teddy bears, with their freckled snouts, shiny noses, cute belly buttons, thick soled boots and $60 price tags, are among the Christmas season's hottest toys, the creation of Xavier Roberts, whose Cabbage Patch Kids became a "cultural phenomenon."

Coleco Industries Inc. sold a staggering 3.2 million Cabbage Patch Kids for about $65 million when it introduced the dolls in 1983. Since then, the company has sold close to 40 million dolls.

Roberts doesn't have such grandiose expectations for the Furskins. He expects to sell a million of the bears by year-end at a wholesale price of $27.50.

Unlike the Cabbage Patch Kids, Roberts' newest progeny aren't adopted by their owners. These bears, according to their legend, run a general store in Moody Hollow, Ga., and are a limited edition with registration number and Roberts' signature embroidered on their paws.

Also unlike the original Cabbage Patch dolls, which were handmade in Georgia, these are sewn in China.

This year, the Furskins have limited distribution, primarily to gift and department stores. Next year, when Coleco introduces its licensed version selling for under $30, they will hit the mass merchandisers and toy chains.

Paul Valentine, a Standard and Poor's analyst, expects the Furskins will be a big success, but can't be compared to the Cabbage Patch Kids craze.

"It was a cultural phenomenon. The concept of adopting these ugly lovable dolls was totally revolutionary for the doll industry," Valentine said.

"Furskins are a well-executed good concept, but they're not breaking new ground," he said. "It's going to be a while before another toy makes the cover of Newsweek magazine."

Yet, he said, there is still excitement among retailers over a toy that has Roberts' name on it. "I haven't met a retailer who is disappointed in the product," he added.

Furskins will be found under many a Christmas tree this year, but industry watchers say they won't be the season's runaway sensation.

"They're not the Cabbage Patch Kids of 1985," said Rick Anguilla, editor of Toy & Hobby World, a trade publication. "There's tremendous competition.

"Two years ago, when Cabbage Patch dolls jumped out of the pack, there wasn't a close number two toy, but now every company that makes stuffed animals has a major new introduction this season," he added.

Among the Furskins' competition this year are the Pound Puppies, adoptable stuffed mutts that sell for about $20, and Teddy Ruxpin, an $80 high-tech bear whose face moves as it sings songs and tells stories.

It will be very hard to repeat the mega-success of the Cabbage Patch Kids, Anguilla said. "I don't know if they can turn that notoriety into a guaranteed hit this time."

Nancy Atkins, co-owner of Bear Necessities, a Boston store specializing in teddy bears, said she was disappointed by the quality of the plush and fabrics used in the Furskins.

"You're paying for a name, not for quality," she said. "For what it is, it's very expensive. I sell high quality European bears for that price."

Still, she said, the bears have been selling at the rate of one a day.

Other stores like Toy and Sports Warehouse in Yorktown Heights, N.Y., where sales are brisk, are happier with the product.

"I've had three shipments of 20 Furskins in three weeks and I'm down to three on the shelves," said Dave Henning, store manager. "I've asked my buyer for more — whatever he can get me."

Atomic scientists mark anniversary of 'Bulletin'

CHICAGO (AP) — Its "Doomsday Clock" at three minutes to the midnight of nuclear holocaust, the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists today marks its 40th year as a forum created by fearful scientists who helped devise the ultimate weapon.

"There was a moment in time when one could attack the nuclear problem separate from other political, military and strategic issues. That was the impetus (for the Bulletin)," recalled John Simpson, an astrophysicist who worked on the Manhattan Project in World War II and a journal contributor.

Like Dr. Frankenstein, the scientists of the Manhattan Project — the top-secret U.S. program to develop the atomic bomb — watched with horror as their creation made its way into the world.

"We felt as the only knowledgeable group, we had an obligation to educate the public," Simpson said. "But that moment was lost very quickly. Today, there's a much greater diversity in the magazine, reflecting the changes both in the problems of arms control and outside of it."

The scientists began the Chicago-based Bulletin as a newsletter to advise each other of developments in their fields because of government efforts to isolate them.

"There was no arms race then, and our vision turned out to be far from the truths of today," said Harrison Brown, a Manhattan Project chemist who serves as the Bulletin's editor-in-chief.

"But the goal has remained the same — to keep the scientists and the citizens of this world informed about the nuclear debate in terms that can be understood," he said.

The Bulletin's most enduring symbol, the Doomsday Clock, first appeared in 1947 at the suggestion of physicist Edward Teller, who later resigned from the magazine.

The Bulletin's most enduring symbol, the Doomsday Clock, first appeared in 1947 at the suggestion of physicist Edward Teller, who later resigned from the magazine.

The clock was set then at 11:53, reflecting an estimate by the journal's editors and an international board of scientists — including 17 Nobel Prize winners — of the world's proximity to the final midnight of nuclear destruction.

After the United States and the Soviet Union signed the Partial Test Ban Treaty in 1963, the clock was pushed back to 11:48.

It's been moved as far forward as 11:57 — the first time in 1949, after the first Soviet bomb blast, and again in 1983, after U.S.-Soviet arms-control talks were suspended. It remains at 11:57 today.

That last move drew a protest from President Reagan.

"Maybe the scientists know more about science," he said. "... But they're not involved in the diplomatic and political end of this as we are."

Today's magazine, running about 50 pages, is published 10 times a year. It has a relatively small circulation — 25,000 in 73 countries — but considerable influence.

There are subscribers in both Houses of England's Parliament and in similar law-making bodies, and in the Soviet Academy of Sciences, said Simpson, now a professor at the University of Chicago.
