Keeping the commands

St. Ann's Catholic School decided that 10 Commandments weren't enough to deal with the modern world's daily problems, so the staff added an 11th: Thou Shalt Not Park. The sign was posted alongside the school to politely warn the public to stay out of the parking spaces reserved for church-owned vehicles.

Officials pressing pipeline sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials, insisting they want no trade war with Europe, are pressing ahead anyway with sanctions against a fourth European company for helping in construction of the Soviet Union's Siberian gas pipeline.

Despite complaints from Europe, the sanctions will continue as long as the Reagan administration sees "Soviet complicity" in the martial law clamped down on Poland, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Thursday.

He spoke with reporters shortly after announcing the Commerce Department would bar U.S. exports of oil and gas equipment to the British firm John Brown Engineering Ltd.

John Brown, which shipped six huge turbines to the Soviet Union earlier in the day, became the fourth European company to feel the embargo sting since President Reagan announced a ban on all exports of oil and gas equipment to the Soviet Union by U.S. firms, their subsidiaries and licensees.

The British firm was affected because the turbines rely on rotors made by General Electric.

In London, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government ordered two more British manufacturers to defy the U.S. ban, the Walter Kidde Co. and Andrews Antennas. Both are subsidiaries of U.S. firms; Kidde has a $16.3 million contract to provide fire-fighting equipment for the pipeline and Andrews has a $1.7 million contract for communications equipment.

The order from the British Department of Trade, issued under the Protection of Trading Interests Act, makes the companies liable to fines if they comply with the embargo.

The department said through a spokesman that it "very much regrets the action by the U.S. government," which the spokesman said was "damaging trans-Atlantic relations and should be settled as quickly as possible."

Baldrige said he knew many European officials were not happy about the sanctions, but he also said U.S. officials were "trying to do what's fair and right in a difficult situation."

Asked about possible European retaliation, he said he had heard no official word of any such plans.

"Neither our allies nor the United States wants to see a trade war," he said.

Thursday's action "fully maintains the goals laid out by the president...without unduly harming our allies and friends," Baldrige said.

He acknowledged the government has seen no easing in the Polish situation. However, he added, "the effect of the sanctions has not been felt yet."

Meanwhile, there was an indication Thursday the issue could spread to Japan, scene of previous trade disputes over steel and cars.

Officials at the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo said the U.S. government is investigating whether American technology was involved in an August shipment of valves for the pipeline by Japan Steel Works.

Company officials said they do have a licensing agreement with Grove Valve and Regulator Co. of Oakland, Calif. But they also said the valves sent to the Soviet Union were produced completely from Japan Steel Works' own original technology.

John Brown spokesman Jeremy Wyatt indicated in London that the export ban would not affect the rest of his company's $179 million order from the Soviets for 21 of the turbines.

"We've got to fulfill the rest of our contract," he said. "We're under (British) government orders to do so."

In the past two weeks, the U.S. government has imposed similar sanctions against two French companies and an Italian firm.

Cable TV bound up in microwave controversy

the microwave connection

EDITOR'S NOTE: The effects of a tariff increase and restructuring program by the microwave company that offers Dallas-Fort Worth television programming to West Texas are now being felt throughout the area. This is the first of a four-part series examining the issue.

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

In early April 1982, the future transmission of Dallas-Fort Worth area TV programming to West Texas via microwave wobbled on a precarious high wire.

Before the Common Carrier Bureau of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) was a tariff increase and restructuring request by West Texas Microwave (WTM), an Austin-based microwave transmission company.

At the time, WTM supplied Dallas-Fort Worth programming to at least 27 Central and West Texas cable systems. Company officials said approval of their request would help ensure a reasonable profit, continued service and a more equitable distribution of the tariff among participating cable TV systems.

But about 20 cable TV systems, arguing through their lawyer, said the new tariff arrangement would be exorbitantly expensive and discriminatory against smaller cable systems.

ON APRIL 14, the bureau approved WTM's request. For WTM, the decision represented a steadying influence. For some West Texas cable systems, the April 14 blow was enough to send them toppling from the WTM broadcast system.

In the wake of the decision, some smaller cable systems have been scrambling to find alternatives to programming provided by WTM.

Other larger systems are waiting and watching, wondering if heavier tariff charges are to come. Operators of many cable systems, large and small, are claiming that the tariff increase was a deliberate attempt by WTM to clear its microwave system of video transmission in favor of more profitable voice and data information.

The president of a Dallas Public Broadcasting System (PBS) affiliate is concerned that the decline of the WTM system may lead to a disruption in service of his station's programming to West Texas. Meanwhile, the PBS station in Lubbock may realize an increased viewership as an indirect result of the decision.

WTM officials argue that the tariff decision was necessary to continue serving West Texas with PBS and a variety of additional programming.

INTERTWINED throughout the controversy is the belief by many in the cable television industry that satellite transmission of TV signals may soon assume much of the work being done by terrestrial, or land-based, microwave transmission systems such as that operated by WTM.

WTM's system involves a series of receiving and transmitting towers which relay television signals from the system's "head end" at Aledo, near Fort Worth, along a necklace of local cable systems stretching west to Pecos and north to Dumas.

At the Aledo base, WTM receives signals from Channel 8, WFAA-TV, a Dallas ABC affiliate; Channel 11, KTVT-TV, a Fort Worth independent; Channel 13, KERA-TV, a Dallas Public Broadcasting System affiliate; and Channel 39, KXTX-TV, a Dallas station which provides religious and entertainment programming. The microwave system also carries a variety of radio signals.

Local cable systems along the way receive any or all of the signals provided and in turn pay a monthly service fee to WTM. The microwave company calculates its cost of service, determines the amount of revenues it will require to realize a "reasonable rate of return," decides on an appropriate tariff charge and submits its request to the FCC.

WTM ARGUED in its tariff request and attached supporting statements that "it has been obvious for some time

Israel continues air raids as Marines pull out

By The Associated Press

Marching beneath a banner declaring "mission accomplished," the U.S. Marines left war-torn Beirut today after helping police the PLO withdrawal from the Lebanese capital. But in eastern Lebanon, Syrian-Israeli tensions heightened after two straight days of Israeli air raids on Syrian missile batteries.

The last of the 800 Marines who had guarded the port of Beirut as part of an tri-national peacekeeping force left on the troopship USS Manitowoc, which pulled from the dock at 8 a.m. (2 a.m. EDT), exactly on schedule.

Troops from France and Italy, the other two nations involved in the peacekeeping opertion, took over the port. The 800 French and 530 Italian soldiers were expected to leave by Sept. 16, but Lebanon's state radio announced today that the government has asked France to keep its forces in Beirut for a week beyond that date.

Both U.S. Ambassador Robert Dillon and Col. James M. Mead, the Marine commander, said they were "very proud" of the job the Marines had done.

The pullout came nine days after the completion of the U.S.-sponsored evacuation of Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas from their west Beirut stronghold. The guerrillas withdrew and scattered to eight Arab countries in the face of a threatened Israeli invasion of their enclave.

In a related development, Arab leaders meeting in Fez, Morocco Thursday issued the first collective Arab proposal for peace with Israel since creation of the Jewish state in 1948. The plan was promptly denounced by Israel.

In a statement issued today, the Israeli Foreign Ministry said the plan was "useless" and could not be taken seriously. It said the plan threatens Israel's existence and suggested a better idea would be for the Arab nations to negotiate peace treaties individually with Israel.

The Arab plan called for creation of an independent, PLO-governed Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, incorporating the Arab-populated sector of Jerusalem, which Israel considers a part of its capital. Until 1967, Arab East Jerusalem was controlled by Jordan.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government has offered limited autonomy to the 1.3 million Palestinians in the occupied territories. Begin refuses to deal with the PLO and says all of Jerusalem must remain in Israeli hands.

The Marines, stationed at the port of Beirut since Aug. 25 to oversee the evacution of the PLO guerrillas, spent Thursday loading trucks, forklifts and trailers in landing crafts. No U.S. casualties or injuries were reported during the Beirut operation.

The last Marine presence on foreign soil was in May 1975 with the expedition to rescue the crew of the cargo ship Mayaguez and regain control of the ship from Cambodian pirates.

U.S. to stick with Mideast peace plan, Shultz testifies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is sticking to his Mideast peace plan over proposals advanced at an Arab summit conference in Morocco that differ on key points, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said today.

Testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Shultz commented on the eight-point Arab League proposal, adopted Thursday night, which provides for implicit Arab recognition of Israel and recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization as the "sole legitimate representative" of the Palestine people.

Reagan's plan contains an "ironclad" U.S. commitment to the security of Israel and calls for Palestinian self-government on the West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan.

"While not directly addressing the president's proposals, the Arab League summit has put forward its own proposals, key elements of which are variance with our proposals," Shultz said.

"The president stands fimrly behind his proposals. The reactions of the Israeli government (which has rejected the U.S. plan) and of the Arab League are clear and graphic evidence that the position of both sides must be negotiated if we are to bring genuine peace and security to this troubled region," he said.

"The opening positions have been announced. Now is the time for quiet diplomacy to pursue the president's initiative and bring it to fruition."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, interviewed on television today, said Reagan's plan was "infinitely better" than the Arab proposals.

In testimony Thursday before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Shultz said there is a "reasonable chance for peace" in the Middle East and called for a synchronized withdrawal of Israeli and Syrian forces from Lebanon.

Both the Israelis and the Syrians are suspicious, and "the Syrians understandably feel they don't want to withdraw if the Israelis don't," Shultz said. "So there needs to be a synchronized withdrawal."

Israel sent its jets against Syrian missiles in Lebanon for the second straight day Thursday and reported four more batteries demolished. Lebanese radio said Israeli jets also struck Syrian armored positions in Lebanon, where thousands of Israeli and Syrian troops remain.

Shultz told the House panel, "The peace treaty that is signed at the end of a gun is not, at the end, a long-lasting peace treaty."

The foreign ministers of Syria and Israel have give Shultz personal assurances that their nations' troops eventually will be withdrawn from Lebanon, the secretary of state said.

But he said the withdrawal must be accompanied by measures in southern Lebanon, such as a buffer zone, to preserve Israeli security.

Decision threatens some cable TV firms

The company said the tariff's inadequacy was compounded because local cable systems were opting to drop WTM service in favor of satellite transmission and earth receiving stations to capture programming such as that offered by Ted Turner's Atlanta-based "superstation," WTBS-TV.

In a statement of operations attached to its request, WTM indicated that the company would incur a net loss of $69,763 in 1982 with operating revenues of $592,237. But with the proposed tariff change, WTM projected 1982 operating revenues of $1,120,091 and a net income of $250,045.

The statement indicated that the tariff increase could turn a $115,963 projected net loss for 1983 into a net income of $205,945. In 1984, an estimated net loss of $186,783 would instead become a net income of $180,535. WTM said the rate increase would represent a 12.5 percent rate of return on its investment.

WTM ALSO proposed a change in the formula it uses to distribute its tariff charges among participating cable systems. The company said the revised tariff would be charged on a "per channel-mile" basis, requiring each cable system, regardless of size, to bear the cost of providing service from the previous point on the microwave system. WTM arrived at a flat, $32.87 rate per channel mile as appropriate to generate the desired tariff.

Finally, the company requested that a provision allowing cable systems to terminate WTM service within 10 days instead of the previously agreed upon six months be included in the tariff changes.

In a Dec. 29 letter announcing the planned change to cable system operators, WTM said the rate alterations were "in accordance with the generally favored concept of having each customer share the actual cost of the provision of service."

In a joint petition asking the Bureau to either reject or suspend the proposed tariff changes, a lawyer representing about 20 cable systems argued that the tariff increase was not only excessive, but discriminatory against smaller cable systems.

Another petition filed by TCI Growth, Inc., the parent company of cable systems in Mineral Wells, Cisco and Eastland, also requested that the FCC either deny or suspend the tariff increase.

THE JOINT petition stated that "it appears that WTM, for its own business reasons, is seeking to use exorbitant rates to force at least certain of its smaller cable customers to terminate service."

The petition also criticized WTM for failing to provide sufficient and required financial information to illustrate the need for its request.

The cable systems repeatedly charged that WTM was deliberately trying to clear its microwave system of cable companies in order to create room for a more lucrative form of business, voice/data transmission.

WTM has contracts with companies such as MCI, Southern Pacific Communications Co. and U.S. Telephone Co. to transmit voice and data information via its microwave system.

"Based on the limited information available," the petition stated, "there is every indication that WTM intends to illegally cross-subsidize its new competitive voice/data services by overcharging cable customers for its monopoly television relay service."

In a reply to the cable system assertions, WTM countered that it was not attempting to eliminate television transmission and offered further financial information to support its request.

"It is not unreasonable or unjust to ask WTM's customers to bear the full cost of providing the service which they receive. It is unreasonable and unjust to require WTM to continue to provide this service at rates far below what it costs to provide this service," the reply stated.

A RULING ON the tariff request was due April 1, but the Bureau postponed the matter. On April 14, the Bureau sided with WTM.

An FCC official explained that in regulating a carrier like WTM, the FCC must act as a surrogate for free market competition while still allowing the company the opportunity to earn a reasonable profit.

The two basic guidelines for judging the acceptability of a tariff proposal, he explained, are to decide whether or not the proposed charges are either unduly great and/or unjustly discriminatory. In this instance, the Bureau found neither to be the case.

The Bureau ruled that WTM had provided sufficient financial data on which to base its claim and that the 12.5 percent rate of return was not excessive. It also agreed with WTM that the increase was necessary at least in part because the company was losing business to satellite transmission.

West Texas Microwave Co. connects area cable TV systems with Dallas-Fort Worth programming via a series of microwave towers and dishes. Times-Mirror Cable TV of Midland receives three channels through this tower.

By April 15, WTM had telegrams on the way, notifying cable systems of the tariff increase.

Through their lawyer, the cable systems immediately appealed the decision to the full commission of the FCC, a process which could take as long as three years to resolve.

Meanwhile, the new tariff charges were instituted. Some smaller cable systems quickly informed WTM that they would be unable to afford the tariff changes and, like tomatoes hit by an early frost, dropped from the microwave vine.

Rainfall 'no-hitter' may end Saturday

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low should be in the upper 60s with brisk southerly winds at 10-15 mph.

It should be partly cloudy Saturday with isolated late afternoon thunderstorms, although the chance of rain is less than 20 percent. Midland last received a smidgen of rain, .01 of an inch, on Aug. 27. Saturday's high should peak in the mid-90s with southwesterly winds gusty at 15-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 93 degrees fell five short of the record 98 set in 1977. The overnight low of 64 was seven degrees warmer than the record 51 set in 1935.

Sunset tonight is at 8:02 p.m.; sunrise Saturday is at 7:30 a.m.

Andrews residents arrested for robbery

ODESSA — Four Andrews residents are in custody after their arrest Thursday on armed robbery charges stemming from an incident here Aug. 30.

They were arrested there Thursday and returned to Odessa on charges they took $140 in cash from an Odessa woman, who was visiting a friend in the 3200 block of Walnut Aug. 30.

The victim told police the suspects entered the house and one of them fled to their car after grabbing the money. When the victim tried to take the car keys of out of the ignition, the man put a gun to her abdomen and threatened to kill her. She also said she was struck in the face during the incident.

Investigators are trying to determine the cause of a fire that did heavy damage to a vacant apartment at the El Paisano apartment complex, 2400 Whitmire Blvd.

The blaze broke out in the bedroom of apartment 20 about 11:15 p.m. Thursday, causing extensive damage to the bedroom and smoke damage throughout the rest of the apartment. Six fire department units responded to the call and spent an hour bringing the blaze under control.

An electrical short is blamed for a fire that destroyed a mobile home near County Road 118 West and 1208 South Thursday morning.

The blaze broke out about 10:35 a.m. in a trailer occupied by John O'Day. The trailer and its contents were a total loss.

Odessa woman's car runs into house

ODESSA — An Odessa woman was ticketed for failure to control speed and causing an accident after her car ran into a house here Thursday, causing $30,000 damage to the house.

Police said 26-year-old Karen Keller was northbound on Dixie Boulevard when her 1968 Chevrolet left the road and hit a house at 4503 N. Dixie. A car parked in the carport and one parked in the driveway were also damaged.

West Texas systems ask FCC to deny rate changes

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

After West Texas Microwave Co. (WTM) requested approval of an increased and restructured tariff from the Common Carrier Bureau of the Federal Communications Commission in December 1981, about 20 West Texas cable systems petitioned the Bureau to either reject or suspend the rate changes.

The cable companies argued that the new tariff would not only be exceedingly expensive, but discriminatory against smaller cable companies on the microwave system.

From its earliest days in 1964, large cable systems have borne the brunt of WTM's tariff. As smaller cable systems joined the microwave, they paid tariff charges roughly commensurate with their size.

In a reply to the petition, WTM stated that the new tariff would be equitable since each customer would be required to bear the cost of providing its desired television signals from the previous system which took the same signal.

In its reply, WTM explained how the new tariff would work in the cases of Canyon and Hereford, two of the smaller cable systems, and Amarillo, one of the largest. All three systems receive their signals from the same previous point on the system, Jennings Farm.

Since all three receive Channels 11 and 13, they divide the cost of delivering those channels. Because Snyder was the last WTM customer to receive Channel 11, the three systems divide equally the 169 channel miles between Snyder and Jennings Farm. Similarly, Lubbock was the last system to receive Channel 13, so the three divide the 92.4 channel-miles from Lubbock to Jennings Farm.

The total channel-mile allocations for Amarillo (133.2 channel miles) and Hereford (133.5 channel miles) are nearly identical, since they receive identical service and are nearly equidistant from Jennings Farm.

Canyon's channel-mile figure was greater (303.2 channel miles), because it receives Channel 39 in addition to 11 and 13, and must therefore bear the cost of delivering the extra station 200 channel miles from the previous Channel 39 recipient, Colorado City.

Monthly tariff charges for each cable system were then calculated using the system's channel-mile allocation and a fixed rate of $32.87 per channel-mile.

With the tariff increase and restructuring, Amarillo's monthly charges increased from about $4,280 to $4,378, a 2 percent rise. Hereford's monthly payment jumped from approximately $600 to $4,388, a 631 percent increase.

At the time, Hereford's cable system consisted of about 3,800 subscribers while Amarillo's was near 31,000.

Canyon, another of the smaller systems on the microwave service, saw its monthly tariff payment climb from about $1,370 to $9,966, an increase of 627 percent.

The following are the monthly tariff charges before and after the tariff increase for other cable systems receiving WTM service. In parentheses are the number of channels each system received or planned to receive before and after the rate change:

Abilene South, $3,890 (4), $3,103 (4); Albany, $750 (4), $9,427 (4); Andrews, $1,020 (2), $2,971 (2); Anson, $848 (3), $1,805 (3); Big Spring, $1,855 (4), $2,347 (2); Clyde, $540 (2), $3,261 (2); Colorado City, $1,292 (3), $3,221 (4); Crane, $1,740 (3), $2,439 (2); Dumas, $1,735 (2), $3,294 (2); Eastland, $1,200 (4), $6,429 (3); Estes Ranch-Abilene, $1,440 (3), $2,465 (4); Hamlin, $806 (3), $1,568 (3); Haskell, $500 (2), $980 (2); Kermit, $1,020 (2), $2,110 (2); Lubbock, $1,500 (2), $5,082 (2); Merkel, $720 (3), $1,390 (3); Midland, $2,815 (3), $6,557 (3); Monahans, $1,020 (2), $1,729 (2); Odessa, $3,535 (3), $1,716 (3); Pecos, $1,140 (2), $2,373 (2); Rotan, $783 (3), $2,544 (3); Snyder, $1,409 (3), $2,209 (3); Stamford, $500 (2), $999 (2); Sweetwater, $2,898 (4), $4,589 (4).

By ED TODD

A Midland man who fired at a fleeing pickup truck which had crashed into his house on the night of Aug. 27 has been indicted by a Midland County Grand Jury for "injury to a child by criminal negligence" after a shot from his .38-caliber pistol struck a 12-year-old girl, who was about five blocks away.

Indicted Wednesday and freed under a $2,000 bond set Thursday by 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin was Rudelio Rodriguez, about 47, of 1200 W. Dakota Ave.

Injured by the gunshot was Kristina Lynn Guentert, who was struck in the mouth by the slug, which lodged near her spinal cord. The girl, daughter of Joseph J. and Sandra Guentert Jr. of 4809 Teakwood Trace in northwest Midland, was listed in stable condition today in Midland Memorial Hospital's intensive care unit. The bullet was removed in surgery on the night of the shooting.

The Guentert girl had just gotten out of her mother's car on the parking lot of Taco Plaza restaurant at South Big Spring Street and Dakota Avenue about 10:45 p.m. when she was felled by the bullet. She was on an outing with her mother, father, younger brothers, and visiting relatives from South Bend, Ind., when the mishap occurred.

Moments earlier — about five blocks to the west — a pickup truck had crashed into Rodriguez's brick house, backed up and was heading east, when an enraged Rodriguez fired at the truck's tires in a vain effort to stop the vehicle and to confront the driver.

One of the bullets which missed the pickup apparently hit an oxygen tank about five blocks down the avenue, then ricocheted, took about a 90-degree angle and traveled to the south about a half block before striking the girl, or so theorized Rodriguez's attorney, Al Schorre.

"He was in the process of protecting his property," Schorre said of Rodriguez firing the rounds from the handgun.

Schorre, who said a possible bullet mark is on the steel tank, opted for the ricochet theory, since some houses are between the Rodriguez house and the restaurant. He reasoned that it would have been virtually impossible for a bullet to have angled across five blocks without hitting something before it could have reached the restaurant's parking lot.

"She was not in his line of fire. The shot was directly down the street," said Schorre. "It was one in a million."

Schorre said Rodriguez, who works for a lumber company, has "never been in trouble before."

"He is upset about the little girl as much as anybody. He's really concerned."

On any theory about the bullet's trajectory, District Attorney Vern Martin said "I don't think anybody knows" just how the bullet wound up in the Guentert girl.

"The peculiarity of the case is that the girl was so far away when this thing occurred," Martin said.

An earlier theory was that Rodriguez was stalking the driver of the pickup truck when the girl was shot.

The indictment against Rodriguez is a Class A misdemeanor and is to be handled in Midland County Court. If found guilty, he could be confined to the Midland County Jail for one year and fined $2,000 or he could be placed on probation and ordered to make restitution.

The grand jurors were "fair" in their deliberations, Schorre said. He said that the grand jury "properly" did not deem the offense a felony, which is punishable by a penitentiary term, but was attributed to negligence. The negligence aspect of the incident dropped the "injury to a child" offense from a felony to a misdemeanor. Intentional injury to a child would be a felony offense, Schorre said.

The girl, who would have been a seventh-grader at Goddard Junior High School this fall, moved with her family to Midland last year from South Bend, Ind. Her father is a sales engineer for the General Electric Co.

Lawmakers say witness protection program helps criminals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several lawmakers, claiming the government's witness protection program allows known criminals to return to the streets, are demanding stricter control over handing out new identities.

Associate Attorney General Rudolph W. Giuliani was scheduled to testify today before a House Judiciary subcommittee investigating the federal witness protection program.

The subcommittee heard testimony Thursday that some convicted criminals, assigned a new identity after cooperating with the government, have gone on crime sprees that have resulted in the death of innocent citizens.

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., the subcommittee chairman, said the Justice Department has reported that in the last 2½ years the government has admitted 1,174 persons to the witness protection program. Subsequently, 93 have been arrested for 140 crimes, many of them violent and serious, he said.

Since the program began in 1970, more than 3,500 people have been assigned new identities.

"It would seem to me we have an obligation" to do a better job protecting innocent victims, Kastenmeier said.

He is sponsoring a bill that would require the approval of the four top officials of the Justice Department to place a witness in the protection program.

But some critics of the program said the proposal isn't tough enough

"Known criminals are being put back on the streets, murdering, victimizing people, selling drugs to our children, committing any number of crimes and all at taxpayer expense," said Rep. Virginia Smith, R-Neb.

She has proposed "strict and precise criteria" for admitting any witness. In addition, she said there should be a requirement that local police be notified of the whereabouts of a witness who might be dangerous.

Decline in mortgage ceiling seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr. says he foresees further declines in the interest rate ceiling for federally backed home mortgages, possibly to 13 percent.

"In the very near future I would see a further decline, a point or a half-point," he said. The FHA currently insures about 12 percent of all home mortgages, up to a limit of $92,000 in some areas.

Pierce also told reporters Wednesday that during his four-week overseas tour last month, a plan was developed with Japanese businessmen to strengthen the depressed U.S. housing industry.

He refused to disclose any details of the proposal until after discussing it with President Reagan, probably later this week.

"But if it works," Pierce said, "it will be very, very helpful to builders and to housing in this country."

Provision included in defense bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A chief sponsor of a measure to make it easier for divorced spouses of military personnel to obtain a share of pension benefits says she hopes to further liberalize the program.

The pension provision is part of the fiscal 1983 defense authorization bill passed by Congress three weeks ago.

The main effect of the measure is to negate a 1981 Supreme Court ruling that state courts could not consider military pensions as community property subject to division in divorce settlements.

Hereafter, military retirement pay will have the same status as other pensions in divorce cases.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., said Wednesday she would like to see the new law eventually changed to reflect the same protection that Congress afforded former spouses of State Department Foreign Service personnel in 1980.

That law entitles a divorced spouse, married 10 years or more, to a pro rata share of both retirement and survivors' benefits unless a court modifies or rejects such an arrangement.

GOP accused of abusing mail

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee is accusing its Republican counterpart of abusing special low mailing rates on behalf of individual candidates.

In a complaint filed with the Postal Service, the Democratic unit said Wednesday that the practice could amount to an indirect taxpayer subsidy of millions of dollars to GOP candidates.

The Democrats charged that the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee had allowed GOP Senate candidates Jim Collins in Texas, Cleve Benedict in West Virginia, Pete Wilson in California and Paul Tribble in Virginia "to unlawfully use this permit."

A spokesman for the Postal Service said the Democratic complaint is being studied, but there is no federal prohibition on party organizations using special-rate mailing permits for individual candidates.

Court upholds mail privilege

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal court has upheld a congressional privilege as old as the nation — using tax dollars to pay for mail sent by senators and representatives.

In a ruling issued this week, a three-judge panel said the so-called franking privilege is legal, although the judges added that they found indications that the free mailings are used to help congressmen win elections.

Stricken scientist wins cancer prize

SEATTLE (AP) — The first winner of a new $100,000 prize for outstanding contributions to the war against cancer is a University of Southern California scientist who has been stricken with the disease.

Dr. Charles Heidelberger, 61, of Pasadena, Calif., couldn't come to the 13th International Cancer Congress to receive the prize Thursday night because "he is receiving treatment for cancer," said Dr. Gerald Murphy, secretary-general of the International Union Against Cancer.

The award, administered by the Geneva-based organization, was established by Brazilian millionaire Mucio Athayde. It honors 40 years of pioneering research by Heidelberger, who spent 27 years at the University of Wisconsin Medical School before joining the USC Cancer Center in 1976.

Athayde, who presented the check and gold medal to Heidelberger's wife, Patricia, used the occasion to propose a 1 percent tax on weapons sales throughout the world to "form a fund...exclusively for the prevention of, and research concerning, cancer."

By taxing weapons of war, he said, "We shall take a decisive step toward endowing the struggle against cancer with its own arms in its own war — that is, the arms of peace in the war for life."

Athayde, 45, a Rio de Janeiro attorney and developer, said the International Cancer Prize will become an annual award to recognize those who lead the fight against "this disease which kills more people than hunger, more than war."

Recipients are chosen by a committee of the International Union Against Cancer.

Murphy, director of the Roswell Park Memorial Institute in Buffalo, N.Y., cited Heidelberger's pioneering research in one area that increased the understanding of cancer and another that improved its treatment.

Heidelberger is best known for developing 5-fluorouracil, a potent anti-cancer drug that is widely used against several types of cancer, especially breast cancer.

He also devised an effective technique for growing human cells in the laboratory — a process that remains a valuable tool for researchers trying to unravel the process that turns normal cells into malignancies.

Some cancer researchers still smoke

SEATTLE (AP) — A handful of cancer researchers have been puffing on cigarettes during the 13th International Cancer Congress, even though they acknowledge the habit contributes to lung disease.

"I borrowed this one," Dr. Nils Wilking explained Thursday as he puffed a cigarette. "Tell everybody to quit smoking."

Wilking, a surgeon from Stockholm, Sweden, said he only smokes "four or five packs a year" and only when he's traveling.

"It is a very difficult problem," huffed Dr. Arsen P. Fiks when a reporter caught him with a cigarette in hand. "It is not a problem for a newspaper."

Fiks, a 52-year-old Soviet pathologist living in Chicago, said he smokes a half-pack a day despite knowing that smoking may be a secondary factor in cancer.

Only a few of the 8,000 scientists at the congress appeared to be indulging in the habit that researchers say is the most preventable cancer risk. But the ones who do are easy to spot as they puff during the breaks.

All nine smoking doctors and cancer technologists interviewed said they were completely convinced the habit is a contributing factor to lung cancer. But each had a reason for continuing.

"I am from Lebanon. That is why I'm smoking," said cancer surgeon Dr. Jaber S. Abbas, referring to the tension of living in war-torn Beirut. "I started again three months ago."

Stress was the usual explanation given by the doctors.

"I went without them for 4½ years," said Dr. Augustin Pachon, a surgeon from Bogota, Colombia. "But after that, I have many problems with stress and I begin once again."

A German technologist and sales representative for a cancer therapy drug was candid.

"I smoke for 30 years and therefore I can't stop it," said Hans Meuthen, who puffs up to two packs a day. "That's a bad explanation."

While the smoking doctors dragged on their cigarettes Thursday, a leading lung cancer researcher said there was no question that non-smokers who are regularly exposed to cigarette smoke have a higher than normal risk of developing cancer.

Dr. Takeshi Hirayama, chief epidemiologist for the National Cancer Center Research Institute in Tokyo, said several studies support that contention.

Part of the evidence was cited in his study of about 100,000 Japanese couples over 14 years, Hirayama said. He found that non-smoking wives of smokers had twice the risk of cancer as those married to non-smokers.

The research results "appear to explain the long-standing riddle of why many women develop lung cancer although they themselves are not smokers," said Hirayama.

Fisherman fire may have been arson

KETCHIKAN, Alaska (AP) — A fire aboard a fishing vessel earlier this week might have been started by arson, and two of the four people found dead on board may have been slain before the blaze began, state police say.

The 58-foot Invester was engulfed in flames Tuesday night as it was anchored near the small fishing community of Craig on Prince Wales Island, about 60 miles west of here in southeastern Alaska.

In a statement, Alaska state troopers said autopsies had been performed on two of the bodies. The victims were identified as Mark Coulthurst, owner of the boat, and his wife, Irene, of Bellingham, Wash.

"Preliminary indications are that Mark and Irene Coulthurst were victims of homicide and possibly may have died prior to the fire," a trooper spokeswoman said Thursday.

The investigation also indicates "possibly an act of arson" caused the fire, she said.

After the four bodies were recovered Wednesday, flames broke out again, delaying the search for more victims. Authorities believed more people had been aboard the vesssel.

Troopers had said earlier the recovered bodies were burned beyond recognition. The bodies were sent to Anchorage for autopsies and identification through dental charts.

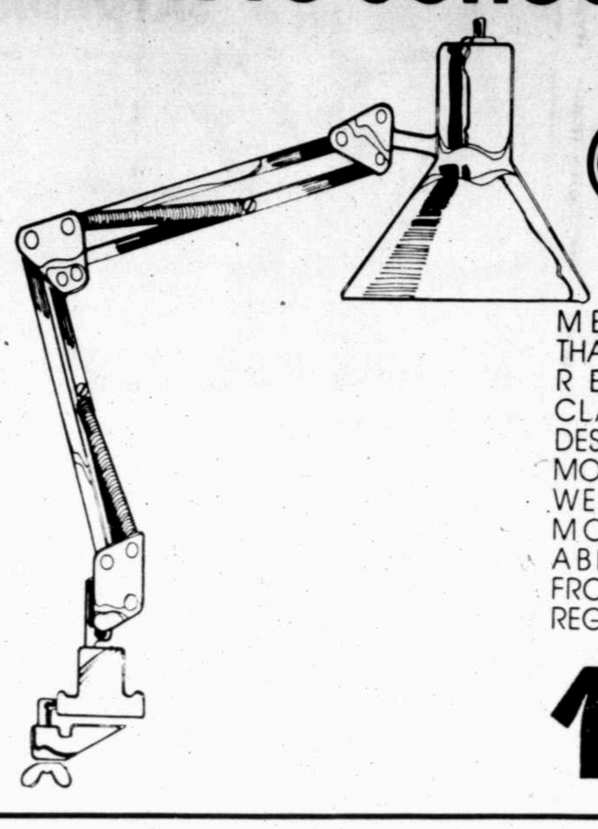

There was no word on whether any more bodies were recovered from the smoldering hull Thursday.

John Coulthurst, Mark's father, said Wednesday night that as many as nine people, including two of his grandchildren, may have been aboard. But troopers said they believed only eight were on the commercial boat.

Troopers said the others believed aboard included the Coulthursts' children, John, 4, and Kimberly, 5; Michael Stewart, 19, of Bellingham; Dean Moon and Jerome Keown, both 19-year-olds from Blaine, Wash.; and Chris Heyman, 18, of San Rafael, Calif.

Sgt. John Glass, first sergeant of the Alaska State Troopers here, said arson and homicide investigators from Anchorage were in Craig and the district attorney's office here had joined the investigation.

U.N. examines fate of Laotians

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BANGKOK, Thailand — United Nations refugee officials are looking into the fate of more than 300 Laotians who were forced by Thai authorities to return to their country three months ago after fleeing the Communist government there.

A team of officials representing the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) is scheduled to visit the native villages of the Laotians this week to check whether they returned safely. Concerns have been expressed here that some of the refugees might have faced reprisals by the Vietnamese-backed Pathet Lao government in Vientiane.

The UNHCR office here formally protested to Thai authorities what it called the "push-back" of 335 Laotians in four incidents in early June and "expressed its objections on a number of subsequent occasions," a UNHCR spokesman said. "This is a matter of continuing discussions with the royal Thai government," he added.

THE FORCIBLE REPATRIATION came amid indications that Thailand is taking a tougher line against Indochinese refugees, who have continued to trickle into the country across two borders and by sea more than seven years after the Communist takeovers of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

The stricter attitude appears to stem from Thai concerns that although the rate of refugee arrivals has declined, Western countries are accepting fewer of those here for resettlement than last year. Thai authorities fear that as the Western nations tighten their refugee policies, Thailand will be burdened by an increasing number of refugees nobody wants.

The fear lies behind the Thai policy of "humane deterrence" to discourage would-be refugees from leaving their homelands in the first place by putting them in Spartan camps when they arrive and denying them eligibility for resettlement.

SO FAR THE POLICY seems to be working. Some 200 to 300 refugees a month arrive in Thai camps from Laos now compared to 2,000 to 3,000 a month at the peak of the exodus in 1979-80, refugee officials estimate.

The arrivals of Vietnamese "boat people" and Cambodian refugees who manage to sneak across the officially closed border are also down sharply, the sources said.

Across the region, "humane deterrence" has combined with a tighter U.S. policy, a reported Vietnamese government crackdown and a shortage of boats to halve the number of boat people arriving on Southeast Asian shores in recent months compared to last year. According to UNHCR figures, about 15,000 Vietnamese boat people arrived in May, June and July this year.

However, according to Squadron Leader Prasong Soonsiri, secretary general of the Thai National Security Council, third countries took 19,500 refugees from Thailand for resettlement during the first six months of the year compared to 48,000 in the same period last year.

"THIS TENDENCY CONFIRMS the...anxiety that eventually Thailand will be burdened alone," Prasong told a recent refugee conference. "Thailand is determined not to allow even one displaced person left on her soil," he said in a tough speech.

He warned that "if all countries and international organizations fail to honor their commitments and Thailand has to bear these grave burdens alone, I deem it necessary for Thailand to take a new step in order that our interests and security can properly be preserved."

Hotel shakedown not isolated event

Washington Post News Service

PEKING — With gumshoes posted on a nearby rooftop and decoys sent to stake out the scene, officials of the pricey Jianguo Hotel figured they had uncovered a dangerous case of bourgeois corruption on their fourth floor shortly after midnight last Sunday.

They were poised to catch red-handed what they thought was a local woman visiting a Westerner in his off-limits hotel suite.

But when the intrepid hotel night manager and six retainers sprung their trap, they found instead resident ABC News correspondent Jim Laurie, 35, drinking a glass of mineral water with a Canadian-Chinese friend, Colleen Leung, 27.

Not easily scared off the scent, the house dicks rejected Leung's Canadian passport as "invalid" and, sniffing in disgust, accused the American newsman of harboring a Chinese local in his cushy, split-level quarters.

AT 3 A.M., THEY returned with a posse of 10, including several plainclothesmen who reviewed identification papers again and renewed the dark suspicions. After they were joined an hour later by three uniformed investigators, Peking's finest turned a case of mistaken identity into a Charlie Chan inquest.

For the next three hours, the lawmen interrogated Laurie and Leung separately, scolded Laurie for being arrogant when he asked to call the U.S. Embassy, directed him to write a confession and finally seized his press credentials and Leung's disputed passport.

At noon Tuesday, the case — known among foreigners here as the "Jianguo shakedown" — ended in downtown police headquarters with Laurie fined $21 for violating an obscure 1964 "aliens" regulation requiring foreigners residing in Chinese hotels to register their guests.

THE INCIDENT IS the latest example of the great lengths to which Chinese authorities go to separate their subjects — or suspected ones — from foreigners living in this capital city of 10 million people.

"If you're overseas Chinese, you always have to prove you're not guilty of being local," said Leung, a Vancouver resident who has worked in Peking for two years as an English translator.

Peking has isolated its foreign community ever since traders and missionaries penetrated the Middle Kingdom in the 17th century and were forced to live outside the city gates. Three hundred years later, the quarantine policy has become more complicated — some say more pressing — as China admits a diverse group of students, businessmen, scholars, diplomats and journalists.

WITH THEIR SHINY CARS and open lifestyles, foreigners present an attractive contrast to the gray Chinese existence. This causes difficulties for a communist regime trying to balance rising popular expectations with a tottering economy, and it stimulates the traditional impulse to keep foreigners behind high walls.

Officials enforce a strict isolation policy today by restricting foreigners to certain housing complexes and hotels — like the modernistic Jianguo — that are out-of-bounds to local Chinese.

For Pekingites, a foreign friendship is almost certain to attract the attention of the dreaded public security police. Common workers are warned in political study sessions to beware of foreigners who are out to steal state secrets and corrupt them with loose morals.

Chinese authorities have dramatized their commitment to the isolation policy by cracking down on a number of relationships they deemed to be illicit.

LAST YEAR, THE 25-year-old fiancee of a French diplomat who had been living with him in a foreign compound was arrested and sentenced to two years in a "re-education through labor" camp.

In June, an American teacher was detained for nearly a week in a Peking jail and finally expelled from China after she was accused of obtaining secret documents from Chinese friends — several of whom also were arrested.

Officials kidnapped an Inner Mongolian dancer who had been engaged to a Canadian before eventually approving the marriage last year and allegedly drove a young African and his Chinese lover to suicide by refusing to grant their marriage request in late 1980.

Often, the policy falls hardest on overseas Chinese from North America, Europe and Southeast Asia who live in foreign compounds and shop in foreigner-only stores under a constant cloud of surveillance.

Stargell set to begin new career as musical narrator of King writings

Stargell

NEW YORK (AP) — Willie Stargell, the slugging first baseman for baseball's Pittsburgh Pirates who is retiring at the end of this season, will begin a new career next year as musical narrator.

Stargell will narrate some of the writings of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. as part of a new composition titled "New Morning for the World ('...Daybreak of Freedom...')," written by Joseph Schwantner.

The piece, to be performed by the Eastman Philharmonia under the direction of David Effron, will have 26 premiere Jan. 15 — King's birthday — at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington. It will be shown later in Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh and Rochester, N.Y.

Stargell, 41, the elder statesman of the National League team, is known as "Pops" to his teammates. At the end of this season, his 20th with the Pirates, his uniform, No. 8, will be retired.

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — A woman's gift to young Prince William of Wales may not be accepted by the Royal Family because it is a gift from a business.

As a result, Carol Antico said she'll go off to England to retrieve Benjamin Being, a 12-inch, bean-shaped doll that resembles Benjamin Franklin. Mrs. Antico sells the doll at her store in Boston.

Mrs. Antico, a mother of eight, said the first-edition doll was sent to the son of Prince Charles and Princess Diana "as a token of friendship from the Colonies."

But Diana's lady-in-waiting wrote to Mrs. Antico saying the royal couple may not accept gifts from commercial enterprises. If Mrs. Antico does not pick up the doll, Prince William's parents would assume she is "content to have him forwarded to charity," the letter said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Johnny Paycheck has prevented the Internal Revenue Service from auctioning his belongings to satisfy past debts by filing a bankruptcy petition.

Paycheck, best known for the song "Take This Job and Shove It," filed the petition in U.S. Bankruptcy Court on Thursday, minutes before the auction was to begin, IRS spokeswoman Eve Miller said. She said the IRS has a $103,000 lien on his property for past debts.

"The judge will decide whether we can dispose of those assets," Ms. Miller said. "Specifically, the bankruptcy code prevents all creditors from taking action once a petition is filed. It is now under their jurisdiction."

Paycheck's total debt was not cited in the petition, Ms. Miller said, but a list of 19 creditors, including the Department of Employment Security, was included in the petition.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Former first lady Bess Truman, hospitalized for more than a week because of an ulcer, was in serious but stable condition today after more internal bleeding, authorities said.

Mrs. Truman, 97, entered Research Medical Center in serious condition Sept. 2 with a bleeding ulcer.

She improved to fair condition after the bleeding stopped the day after her hospitalization, but slipped back into serious condition Thursday when the bleeding resumed.

A hospital spokeswoman said today that Mrs. Truman's condition had not changed overnight.

"At the moment, Mrs. Truman is stable," Dr. Wallace Graham, the Truman family physician, said in a statement Thursday. "That means presently her blood pressure is normal, her pulse is not fluctuating and her respiration is not labored."

Friends said Thursday that Stadlman was found dead at his home on Wednesday. A Lockheed spokesman said it appeared he had been dead "a couple days." The cause of death was not immediately determined.

Kloesel honored as developer of year

Joe A. Kloesel, vice president of Canyon Consolidated in Midland, has been named Volunteer Industrial Developer of the Year for 1982 by members of the Texas Industrial Development Council at the group's annual meeting Thursday in San Antonio. Kloesel won the award in Category II for cities with populations in excess of 50,000 persons.

Joe Kloesel

The award was presented during a luncheon meeting of the TIDC in San Antonio. The only other Midlander to win the award was Charles H. Priddy, who was named recipient in 1978.

The Volunteer Industrial Developer of the Year Award is presented each year to two persons, one representing communities with populations below 50,000 and one for cities with populations in excess of 50,000. The award recognizes individuals who have given extraordinary time and effort to the promotion of economic and industrial development projects. Winner in Category I was H.D. Davis of Saginaw.

Candidates for the award may not be full-time professional industrial developers, commercial realtors or chamber of commerce staff members and who, as a volunteer, played a significant role in the economic growth of his or her community during the period of July 1, 1981 through June 30, 1982.

The Awards Committee of the 400-member state industrial development council selected Kloesel for his longtime volunteer service in Midland, West Texas and the state in the promotion of job-generating activities and general economic and industrial development. Having served for many years as a Midland community leader, Kloesel was recognized for his service as a newly-appointed commissioner of the Texas Industrial Commission and for serving as president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. Kloesel is the current general campaign chairman of the United Way of Midland and is a past president of the Midland Chamber.

Kloesel is vice president of the Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc., and was an organizer, past director and past president of the Midland Industrial Development Corporation. He has served two terms as chairman of the Midland Area Sales Team of the Midland Chamber, has been past chairman and president of Junior Achievement and a past vice president of the Texas State Chamber of Commerce.

The Texas Industrial Development Council is the state professional organization for full and part-time industrial and economic developers. Headquarters is in College Station.

Pageant contestants overcome afflictions

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Christina Shone, Miss New Jersey, and Deanna Katherine Pitman, Miss Florida, are competing to become Miss America 1983, but both already are winners in a more important sense.

Miss Shone decided not to let cancer stop her, and Miss Pitman overcame a form of paralyzing arthritis.

In May 1980, doctors told Miss Shone, a resident of Pequannock, N.J., that she had a malignant tumor in her leg.

"I was shocked," said the 22-year-old, who graduated in 1982 with a degree in music from William Paterson College. "The last thing on my mind was the pageant. Sometimes there was physical pain; sometimes it was more mental pain. It's in remission now."

She said she underwent surgery and laser therapy, then turned her attention to the pageant and began her comeback in earnest.

Miss Shone, who is seeking a master's degree in music and wants to sing at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, prefers not to discuss her battle with cancer at length. She said she included it in her resume only "to use it as an inspiration to other people."

As for Miss Pitman, 22, a lyrical dancer, she said she was "mad, angry," when her doctors told her last October that Rieters syndrome, a form of arthritis, would prevent her from dancing again.

Miss Pitman, a sophomore majoring in business administration at Rollins College, said the arthritis went into remission last February after medication.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Exercise program beneficial for most heart patients

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is your opinion of an exercise program for someone who has had a heart attack? I know that these things are done, but it seems to be risky to me. Is there any proof that an exercise program can do more good than harm? — Andy, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Dear Andy: Dr. Eric H. Conn, of the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, North Carolina, says that exercise programs are not good for everyone, but they may be beneficial for some heart patients. He bases his conclusions on tests with 10 patients; six showed improvement on treadmill testing after participating in a physical conditioning program. There were no adverse heart-related effects among any of the people taking part in the program.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When my sister went on the pill about a year ago, her gynecologist told her that it would not keep her from having children once she decided to discontinue them. What about an IUD? Would the same thing be true of women who use IUD's? — Patricia, Niagara Falls, N.Y.

Dear Patricia: There is some evidence that long-term use of an intrauterine device (IUD) may increase the risk of spontaneous abortion in some women. This conclusion is based on a study by Ann Levin, of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

She compared a group of women who had spontaneous abortions with another group of women who had normal deliveries at about the same time. Those who said they had been using IUD's for more than a year showed an increased risk of spontaneous abortion, and the risk remained for more than a year after the IUD's had been removed.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that you don't provide marital counseling or try to settle family disputes, but my question does not concern either one. My husband and I are getting a divorce and we are parting on friendly terms even though we can't live together. What we both would like to know from a medical standpoint is what would be best for our child. My husband and I are not angry with each other; we would just like to do what's right. May we have your opinion? — Mrs. G.I., Chicago

Dear Mrs. I.: It is regrettable that two people like yourself and your husband, who seem so intelligent and caring in so many ways, should find it necessary to break up a marriage. As you note, marital counseling is not within my area of expertise.

In regard to your question, you will be interested to learn that a California study indicates that joint custody of a child in divorce cases is preferable to exclusive custody by one parent. This conclusion is based on a review of more than 400 child custody cases over a two-year period.

The researchers found that parents who had been granted exclusive custody were back in court twice as often as parents who were given joint custody. This suggests that joint custody reduces the possibility of parental conflict and, as a consequence, causes less distress in the child.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is recovering from a stroke and will soon be starting on a physical therapy program. My mother says that the doctor told her that they will be using electricity to strengthen his muscles. Would you explain what this means? — Amy, Hanover, Pa.

Dear Amy: When electrical stimulation is being used, the patient has electrodes attached to the skin at the point where the nerve is closest to the surface. An electric charge is then used to get the muscle to move the way the therapist wants it to function.

Mike Thomas, a physical therapist at the North Carolina Memorial Hospital, says that explaining to a patient how a muscle should move generally is not as effective as actually making the muscle perform through electrical stimulation. With some stroke patients who may be finding it difficult to walk because of weakened ankle muscles, electrical stimulation can take the place of a brace. Once the technique has been learned, it can be used by a patient without the need for direct supervision by the therapist.

Mountain becomes monument

GRANITE, Okla. (AP) — A red rock mountain at the edge of this southwestern Oklahoma town may seem to be an unlikely spot for a world-famous tourist attraction, but Bill Willis is working on a dream.

He envisions a monument of granite 116 feet tall and 126 feet wide with the likenesses of Indian leader Sequoyah, humorist Will Rogers and athlete Jim Thorpe looking right down Main Street. It will be called the Giants of the Plains.

"Each figure will be 108 feet tall," the lifelong granite worker said. "The presidents on Mount Rushmore are only 60 feet tall. Stone Mountain in Georgia is 90 feet tall, and that includes the horses.

"When it is finished, it will be the largest granite mosaic in the world."

And that's what makes Willis' project different from the faces of Washington, Jefferson, Theodore Roosevelt and Lincoln that stare from the granite cliff in the Black Hills of South Dakota and the horseback figures of Confederate leaders Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson on Stone Mountain.

While the Mount Rushmore and Stone Mountain memorials were carved from the rock, Willis is engraving the likenesses of the three famous Oklahomans on two-foot-square blocks of granite. Each block then will be fitted together for the finished monument.

"We have a letter from the Guinness Book of Records people saying that it will be the largest mosaic in the world," Willis said.

He has the bust of Rogers finished and said he hoped to begin work on the bottom part of the monument "when it gets a little cooler." The project is being held up right now by a lack of funds, Willis said.

"We've received $20,000 in tax-free donations and my dad and I have put in $25,000," he said. "Contributors can get their name engraved on a panel outside the figures for $25 each, or a family can take a whole panel for $1,000.

"We need at least $1 million more to finish it. We envisioned it as a $1 million project when we began, but with inflation, it's gone up."

Willis said plans called for a small park at the base of the mountain and a zigzag road to the top. "We hope to build a walkway across Main Street, with a little patio, where people can pose."

Demon-ridding services banned

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Services to deliver people from demons were banished from a center for the elderly here Wednesday when the center's operator learned the meetings' purpose.

The demon deliverance services were held Monday and Tuesday at the privately owned Cotner Center, whose managers donated the meeting space thinking it was for Bible study.

"It's not our program and we were deceived," said Terry Cain, center administrator. "We were told at the outset it would be a Bible study group. Instead they were doing a service. We were misled."

An Indiana minister, Rev. Win Worley, sponsored by some Lincoln residents, held the services Monday and Tuesday at the center, a former elementary school.

The group moved to Lincoln's Northeast Holiday Inn Wednesday night after the Cotner Center management refused to allow the last scheduled meeting to be held there.

Worley, a Southern Baptist minister for more than two dozen years before he began an exorcism ministry a decade ago, said it was the first time he has been booted out of a building.

"I've done about 40 meetings a year for the past three years and we've never had anyone get that upset about it," Worley said.

Worley said he doesn't make arrangements for the meetings. Local groups invite him, pay his expenses and make local arrangements.

Tuesday night's service was "really quiet" Worley said, adding that some deliverances are "really noisy as the demons start talking or screaming."

Cain first learned that the group was using the facility's gymnasium for healing services that included casting out evil spirits when the a local newspaper reporter contacted him Tuesday.

"This lends the image that we're a religious organization and do those kinds of things. We can't afford to be identified with that," said Cain. "We want an honest image."

One of Holland's most prestigious pair championships was recently won by 17-year-old Taco Wirschell, partnered by his father, Wim. They outclassed a field that included many of their country's finest players.

On this hand from the event, the senior Wirschell displayed impressive technique. However, don't ask us to explain the auction, because we don't know what North's two-club opening was. Obviously, four no trump was Blackwood, a highly doubtful maneuver with a void and, as might be expected, East's unusual no trump helped declarer in the play.

Against seven spades West led his top club. Declarer won the ace, ruffed a diamond and re-entered dummy with the jack of spades for another diamond ruff. Now declarer started to run trumps, coming down to this position:

On his penultimate trump declarer discarded the four of hearts from the table, and East could not withstand the pressure. He had to hold all his diamonds and the king of clubs to guard against dummy's minor-suit holdings, so he too sluffed a heart. Now a heart to the ace felled the king. Two hearts were pitched on dummy's high diamonds, and declarer took the last two tricks with his trump and the queen of hearts.

It might seem that such fine play should have been worth a top score, but no. A number of pairs reached seven no trump from the North seat. Twelve tricks quickly became thirteen because East was end played at trick one — no matter what he led, he had to present declarer with an extra trick.

Moderation in Iran

Can it be that Iran's infamous Ayatollah Khomeini is moderating? Not likely, most Americans would say. But the evidence indicates that could be the case.

When Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh was arrested last April for plotting a coup against Khomeini, Iran watchers speculated he would get the death sentence for his leading role in the plot. That's been the case for some 70 other Iranians who have been executed since that time for their part in the plot.

But now Newsweek magazine reports that Ghotbzadeh could be spared. In a recent issue the magazine quoted an unnamed Iranian dissident as saying Khomeini is "doing everything in his power to save Sadegh's neck."

It's true that Ghotbzadeh was once a favorite of Khomeini's and that his trial was delayed several times and his sentencing postponed recently. But the ayatollah is not noted for his compassion.

If Ghotbzadeh's life is spared, it could well be a sign that Khomeini is moderating. Still, Americans should not anticipate any moderation in their regard from the Iranian government. Since the revolution, the two nations have remained at odds despite recognition from some segments in the United States of the value of a reconciliation.

Iran has taken a step to speed the work of the Iran-United States tribunal at The Hague that is empowered to resolve financial disputes resulting from the hostage crisis. And Khomeini has embarked on a public relations campaign intended to clean up Iran's public image.

But from the standpoint of soothing the wounds inflicted during the 444-day hostage crisis, more is expected from Iran than mere "window dressing." That will take time because it's evident Khomeini and other revolutionary forces in Iran are not yet convinced that the United States is not the "great Satan."

In captivity, those cute and cuddly pandas have shown an historical reluctance to produce their own kind. In fact, they even have exhibited a high disdain for the mating maneuvers which nature ordains as a prerequisite to the delivery of progeny.

So an event which took place in Spain the other day fairly throbs with significance. Shao-Shao, the mamma panda dwelling in the Madrid Zoo, stunned her keepers — and all pandologists — by presenting the world with not just one baby, but two. It was the first time that panda twins had been born in captivity in the Western Hemisphere.

Unfortunately, one of the babies survived only a few days. But this sad fact in no way diminishes Shao-Shao's accomplishment. Nor does it silence the questions that rise.

Can it be that pandas have reached a turning point in their natural history? Does Shao-Shao's feat presage a wave of multiple births among captive pandas as well as those still chewing succulent green things in their Asian habitat? Could pandas eventually take over the world?

The world could do worse. Affectionate, sweet-tempered and playful as they are, it is hard to conceive of pandas starting wars or attempting to impose their will on anybody. And maybe they will fulfill the New Testament prophecy of the meek inheriting the earth.

Another View:

Whose interests prevail?

It was not enough for Menachem Begin to express his immediate and complete disagreement with President Reagan's call for a freeze on settlements in the West Bank. His Cabinet promptly went on to fund three new ones and approve plans for seven more. But no one should be surprised by this sequence. Everyone in the Mideast had expected the Israeli government to test Mr. Reagan's seriousness, and this is one important way it is being done.

We liked the administration's response. It was done not by arm waving or personal attacks but by underlining the principles of the president's policy and by touching the questions that Israelis are now starting to review. Does Israel by its settlements mean to frustrate the "broader participation in the peace process" that it is precisely the American purpose — and Israel's Camp David obligation — to encourage? Is Israel backing off its commitment to United Nations Resolution 242, whose promise is that in the West Bank, as on Israel's other fronts, territory acquired in 1967 will be exchanged for peace?

No one should imagine, however, that the Begin constituency or the Israeli people as a whole will be swayed strictly by reasoned argument. How, then, will it happen? Not so far in the back of the minds of many people is the thought — a fear or a hope, as the case may be — that sooner or later Mr. Reagan must get tough with Israel and threaten either to cut off aid or even to abandon the country altogether. Nothing the United States can now say or do will totally banish that specter, but it is good to see the secretary of state trying all the same.

Mr. Shultz maintains that it will be Israel's emerging sense of the benefits of the Reagan proposals, rather than any direct sanctions, that will bring Israel around. This is, tactically and morally, the right point of view. It is bound to disappoint those who have come to feel that only by a kind of political Armageddon, an ultimate showdown, can the American view prevail. But it is the only way a country like the United States can go.

The very idea of abandoning Israel is offensive and harmful. If the notion got a foothold, it would strengthen the tendency to rigidity already amply evident on the various sides. It suggests a basic incompatibility between American and Israeli interests. It suggests that Israelis are more devoted to expansion than peace, and that Americans are casual in their regard for Israel's well-being. None of this is true.

Salesmen, doctors boost pacemaker cost

WASHINGTON — The half million Americans who wear pacemakers may be paying too much for their lifesaving devices, thanks to a team effort by friendly salesmen and complaint doctors.

Jack Anderson

Investigators for the Senate Select Committee on Aging, chaired by John Heinz, R-Pa., have concluded that the marketing system for the tiny battery-operated heart regulators is riddled with abuse. The reason Uncle Sam is involved is that 90 percent of the $2 billion annual bill for pacemakers is paid by the government through Medicare.

Selling pacemakers is a lucrative business. Consider this finding contained in an upcoming report from the Senate committee, reviewed by my associate Tony Capaccio.

"There are about 400 pacemaker salesmen in the country. Their minimum salary is $50,000 plus a hefty commission. Average salesmen earn several hundred thousand dollars a year. At least a dozen earn more than $1 million a year.

"For these salesmen, the manufacturers and many pacemaker physicians, pacemakers are literally pumping gold."

The staff report notes that most pacemakers are basically alike in quality and cost, so inducements are needed. And they are apparently forthcoming. "Evidence of kickbacks, potential bribery and other inducements to do business were flagrant and inescapable," the report states.

But it's not only the salesmen who are raking in big bucks from the tiny implants.

The most common inducement offered to doctors by pacemaker salesmen is the free use of equipment that is used to implant and monitor the devices. For example, doctors are given $3,000 programmers, $2,000 analyzers and $3,000 telephonic transmission receivers as a sales inducement. As the Senate staff report notes, "The pacemaker industry is notorious for its generosity to physicians."

That's putting it mildly. Pacemaker manufacturers have hired the Queen Mary, entire Las Vegas shows, comedian George Burns, trumpeter Doc Severinsen and even the Dallas Cheerleaders to perform at medical conventions.

The entertainment really isn't necessary, though. Pacemakers make big money for everyone involved.

"Pacemakers tend to be immensely profitable enterprises," the Senate report observes. "At every level, our investigation indicates costs are excessive and profit is inordinate. The average pacemaker currently costs $600 to $900 to manufacture and is sold to the hospital for $3,000 to $5,000."

With that kind of markup, gross profits for pacemaker firms run up to more than 50 percent of sales.

And it's a tightly controlled field. Five companies have over 90 percent of the pacemaker trade. They are Medtronics, Intermedics, Pacesetter, Cordis and Cardiac Pacemakers Inc.

"Intermedics and Medtronics have an estimated gross profits of 68 and 63 percent," the Senate report notes.

The gouging continues at the hospital where the pacemakers are implanted. According to the Senate report, hospital markups range from 50 to 150 percent, even though in most cases the devices are only delivered to the hospital on the day of surgery.

"Most generally, in the words of one salesman, hospitals 'turnkey' the pacemaker cost," the report says. It then explains the phrase "turnkey" by explaining: "They'll double it (the cost). If we sell it to you for $3,500, they charge $7,000."

That $7,000, mind you, is for a device that costs $600 to $900 to make.

ECONOMIC EXOCET: Argentina was already in bad shape financially before its disastrous war over the Falkland Islands. In addition to a 500 percent inflation rate, it owed about $40 billion in foreign debts.

What's really embarrassing, though, is that $34 billion of that debt is owned to British firms. To complicate matters, some $80 million in Argentina's foreign reserves are frozen in British banks — and the Brits won't unfreeze the money until Argentina promises to give up its quest for the Falklands.

Unfortunately, relatively moderate Argentine leaders like President Reinaldo Bignone and Gen. Cristino Nicolaides, who want to get back in the good graces of the international bankers, are faced with opposition from hardliners who don't want any suggestion of accommodation with the British.

The hardliners want to use what they call "the last Exocet" by declaring a moratorium on the British loans — a reference to the French-made missiles that were Argentina's one success in the Falklands fiasco.

ORDNANCE ORDINANCE: The ordinance passed by the town fathers of Morton Grove, Ill., banning possession of handguns has been upheld by both a state court and a federal district court. But the verdicts have been appealed.

Sources say that no matter which side wins the appeal, the case will be taken to the Supreme Court. The National Rifle Association and the National Coalition to Ban Handguns will pick up most of the tab for legal fees. The outcome is seen as a definitive decision on the Second Amendment's fuzzy guarantee of a citizen's right to own firearms.

INSIDE REPORT:

Gold price sparks monetary reform talk

WASHINGTON — When the price of gold momentarily surpassed $500 an ounce in London on Tuesday morning, Sept. 7, as Reagan administration policymakers drifted back to Washington following the long Labor Day vacation, thoughtful middle-level officials perceived a warning signal in the night.

Rowland Evans

They are dissenters from the official euphoria that enveloped Santa Barbara following President Reagan's spectacular tax increase victory and the coincidental stock market rally. To them, the sudden buying that sent gold prices soaring $100 over one week is a symptom that the worldwide financial structure is unsound.

Robert Novak

Accordingly, that very Tuesday afternoon two separate meetings discussed the untouchable and consequently long-deferred subject of monetary policy. One of these meetings even broached the forbidden concept that international financial order cannot be achieved without a return to fixed currency exchange rates, dumped as one of the Nixon administration's enduring legacies.

Any such currency reform faces formidable barriers: dogmatic belief in floating exchange rates by the monetarists who dominate Treasury policy; White House determination not to admit any defect in Reaganomics two months before the election and — perhaps most important — an invincible ignorance in the upper reaches of the administration when it comes to monetary policy.

Nevertheless, the fact that some administration officials are tracking the movement of gold is in sharp contrast to the late 1970s, when the Carter administration was oblivious to gold skyrocketing over $800. This time, there are privately-voiced concerns that a new gold boom in the '80s could carry the same inflationary bacillus it did in the '70s.

Caught by surprise by gold's rise after dropping below $300 in July, administration economists now fear it will not stop at $500. Iconoclastic economist Eliot Janeway, who had forecast $500 gold, predicts it will climb irregularly to "new highs" — perhaps $1,000.

Janeway sees this flight to gold, led by U.S. speculators, as a sure indicator of a poisoned economy. Indeed, stock market-watchers in the administration believe the extravagant growth of gold stocks gives a sickly cast to the stock market rally. But the Federal Reserve Board may interpret soaring gold prices as a reaction to its recent loosening of the money screws and, therefore, tighten up. Any sign of an inflationary comeback also would encourage plans now on the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) drawing board for post-election tax increases in 1983.

The notion of the 12 governors of the Fed fine-tuning the economy is not attractive to significant figures in the administration. One such official believes the only viable alternative is basic reform: a new international conference to re-establish the fixed exchange-rate system built at Bretton Woods, N.H., in 1944 and finally demolished by the Smithsonian agreement in 1971. He believes that might be followed by a gold-backed dollar.

Fixed exchange rates and gold-convertible dollars are anathema to the Treasury's monetarists. When Rep. Jack Kemp at a White House meeting several months ago raised the need for fixed rates, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan promptly shut him down by calling that a closed subject. But at a meeting of the president's outside economic advisers the day after gold pierced the $500 level, Kemp again pressed the need for monetary reform.

With nobody expecting a robust economic recovery in the foreseeable future amid the tottering international financial structure, the rise of gold has recruited potential allies for Kemp inside the administration. But they face a steep climb to convince a White House which, basing decisions on the president's high popularity ratings rather than the stricken economy, wants to stand pat.

CHARLEY REESE

Respect for time is a tough lesson

It was a hot spring day. I had been asked to deliver a commencement address to a class of graduating seniors. Boy, were they prepared to be bored. They sat there squirming and thinking of nothing but getting out of that gymnasium.

Charley Reese

Well, I managed to get their attention. I walked up to the podium, paused, and said, "Class, in about 50 or so summers, most of you will be dead."

That woke them up. It wasn't that I wanted to depress them. What I wanted to do was teach the hardest lesson there is to teach a teenager — that you don't have much time and whatever it is you want to be, you have to start being that today.

When you're 17 or 18, the road ahead stretches into infinity, but you don't have to travel very far down it before you can begin to see the end of it, before you start losing some of your companions. It's awful to wake up halfway down it. It's one way with no U-turns.

One of the things we ought to teach at an early age is respect for time. Time equals life which is why time also equals love. Try to convince a child you never spend time with that you love him or her. You can't do it. A child thinks logically.

The human being is sentenced for life to the present moment. The human mind can remember the past and imagine the future, but both are created by what a person does in the present. The way to become is to be; the way to arrive is to start.

Brother Dave Gardner tells a story of two workers. One of them is standing there, his foot propped on his shovel, talking. "One day I'm going to own this here company," he says. The other man is busy shovelling like he loved shovelling. A few years went by and the man who loved to shovel had acquired the company. The other man was still standing there, one foot on the shovel, saying, "One of these days I'm going to own this here company."

I don't collect regrets but the few I have packed away concern mostly things I didn't do and words I didn't say. It strikes me there's more hazard in procrastination and repression than in action and expression.

These thoughts are for the occasion of the new school year, which was always one of my favorite times of the year. If I write critically about education often, it's only because it's so important.

A good teacher is a priceless asset whose influence will be felt for generations. Too much attention is paid to gadgets and systems and fads when the key is the quality of that individual standing in front of the class and interacting with the other individuals.

I had some great teachers. We can all remember the ones who really got to us. In retrospect, I know now even the ones I didn't think were so good were better than I thought and had more to offer than I had sense enough to receive.

Of course the bright child will educate himself despite the school system if necessary. What we need the great teachers for are the less bright, the less confident who need a little guidance to find their abilities.

And what teachers need from parents are children who have been taught to respect time and to recognize the opportunity the public school system provides in even the poorest districts.

What the system needs is recognition on the part of the administrators that their only reason for existence is to support those teachers in the classrooms. Education occurs there in the classrooms, not in the administrative offices or in the state and federal bureaucracies.

I don't know if I reached any of those seniors on that graduation day, but like the teacher, I figure if just one learned to respect time, the effort was worth it.

Reagan not at first Labor Day parade

The president interrupted his recent 17-day stay at his ranch to make two live radio broadcasts to the nation, reviving a series of Saturday addresses that was inaugurated last fall.

In last week's talk, the president showed that, at 71, he's not afraid to kid about his age.

"By the way," Reagan said, "this year marks the 100th anniversary of the first Labor Day parade. It isn't true that I was in that first parade. I just read about it."

In that same address, Reagan took note of the fact that employment figures are adjusted to compensate for seasonal factors.

"Today there are nearly 100 million (people) at work — more than 100 million, according to the unadjusted figures, and 99.8 million in the seasonally adjusted figures," Reagan said.

"Now if that confuses you," Reagan told Americans, "well I'm confused too."

At a reception for George Deukmejian, Republican candidate for governor of California, Reagan was asked to reveal the most difficult and surprising aspects of his job. His answer:

"You know, it's kind of hard to answer because I have to tell you, I'm enjoying myself...You know, you go to work in an elevator and you go home in an elevator, and sometimes you get a little claustrophobia.

"The corridors are beautiful and it's a very fine living and all that. But every once in a while you do look out the window and you see people walking by and you say, 'You know something that they can do and I can't — I can't just walk down to the corner drugstore and pick out a birthday card or a magazine or something.' And so then you go to Camp David and get it out of your system."

•••

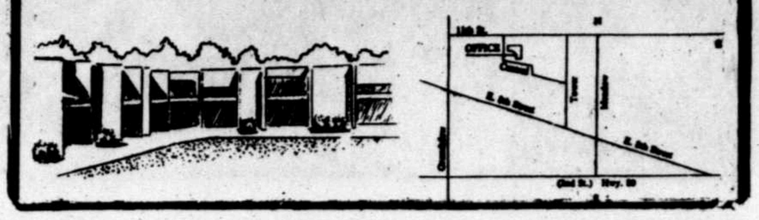

A night earlier, at a fund-raiser for Senate candidate Pete Wilson, the president gave a speech that longtime Reagan watchers and White House staffers rated one of his worst ever.

Reagan wandered from topic to topic, from the economy to the all-volunteer army, from fraud and waste in government to oil wells off the California coast, and rambled on far longer than scheduled.

With unemployment at a 41-year high and bankruptcies at a 50-year peak, Reagan — for unknown reasons — called attention to the jobless problem by repeating an old campaign line.

He recalled that during the campaign he used to chide then-President Carter by saying, "A recession was when your neighbor lost his job; a depression was when you lost yours, and relief would be when he lost his."

IMF has split personality as savior, tyrant

TORONTO (AP) — To the cold-eyed financiers assembled here, the International Monetary Fund is a savior of Third World nations considered financial basket cases, too deep in debt to get more help from private banks.

But the needy nations themselves often view the IMF as an economic tyrant intent on imposing its economic will on sovereign states.

That dichotomy is a bitter source of conflict among the 146 rich and poor nations attending the IMF's 37th annual conference here this week.

The IMF is controlled by the United States and a small group of other rich countries that provide most of the emergency lending funds. It is little-known to people of the industrialized nations, that rarely need its help these days.

But to people of the poor, financially troubled countries, the IMF is well known as a U.S.-dominated bank of last resort that can impose stringent terms on borrowers.

FORMED AFTER WORLD WAR II to help prevent the kind of depression the industrial countries endured in the 1930s, the IMF now is trying to stop Mexico's enormous debt problems from expanding into an international financial crisis.

When it makes loans, the Fund demands that countries make economic "adjustments" — a euphemism for severe belt-tightening measures that usually include cuts in food subsidies, other budget cuts and adherence to a strict schedule for climbing out of debt.

Countries in severe financial distress usually have no choice but to go along — even at the cost of protest riots and political upheaval in some cases — if they want the money badly enough.

In 1980, a fight between the IMF and former socialist Prime Minister Michael Manley of Jamaica became a major issue in that year's election, in which Manley was defeated by conservative Edward Seaga.

This week, 450,000 workers staged a general strike in Bolivia to protest price increases and other restrictive economic policies of the military government, which has a borrowing arrangement with the IMF.

PRESIDENT JULIUS NYERERE of Tanzania, an impoverished East African nation and an IMF borrower, has complained about the "irresponsible and arrogant way in which it (the IMF) is being wielded against the poor."

"The IMF is all-pervasive," Tanzanian Finance Minister Amir Jamal said Tuesday night at a conference sponsored by critics of the lending agency. "It's creating despair and despondency instead of hope."

Fund officials contend that many of the borrowing countries brought their financial woes on themselves by spending far more than they could afford.

"We shouldn't encourage any nation to be extravagent or a spendthrift and think it could get away with it by being bailed out by the IMF," says U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan.

Regan leads the forces who want to maintain the strictest conditions for help from the fund to prevent it from becoming an easy touch.

THAT IS ONE REASON WHY the United States, alone, opposes a substantial increase in member contributions to the fund to handle a growing list of Mexico-type crises.

Spokesmen for the developing nations here say their main complaint against the IMF is that its loan conditions are too harsh and do not recognize that the big industrial countries are at least partly responsible for the plight of the poor.

The rich nations' battle against inflation, they note, has produced a worldwide recession that has devastated the Third World's trade and sent their export prices plummeting.

Social security still touchy issue

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's a lot riding on the judgments of President Reagan's bipartisan commission on Social Security reform.

Maybe too much.

The 15-member panel is supposed to chart a way out of the financial crisis facing the system, and deliver it before the end of the year. Its eight Republicans and seven Democrats were commissioned to find, in Reagan's words, "a truly bipartisan solution to this great national problem."

An Analysis

That is a goal that has eluded administrations and Congresses for years. The panel has little more than three months left to do it. That deadline is on paper, but a real one looms next year, when Social Security is going to need money to pay benefits.

THE COMMISSION WILL be deliberating through the campaign, with recommendations due after the Nov. 2 elections. That has the effect of putting on hold the politically sensitive problem of changing a system that pays benefits to 36 million Americans, and taxes 115 million.

Reagan has had problems with the Social Security issue since his earliest days in national politics, since he began as a critic of the system itself. He disowned that position long ago, and said during his two presidential campaigns that he would safeguard the benefits of people dependent on Social Security.

He never said exactly how that would be done, but did say that as president he would put the problem in the hands of a panel of experts to find the right solution. Hence the reform commission.

While it is at work, the Republican National Committee has been advertising Reagan's dedication to Social Security, and repeating his assurances:

"THE OFFICIAL WORD from the White House: there will be no cuts in...retirement benefits for the 36 million retirees who are currently receiving them. That has been President Reagan's policy from the beginning."

That assurance doesn't include future benefit increases, or future beneficiaries.

In a campaign message to senior citizens, the Republicans said that Democrats have been trying to distort administration policy, and complained that the GOP had to spend about $1 million on advertising "to set the record straight."

Those advertisements credited Reagan with delivering a cost-of-living increase. The Democrats called it false advertising, since the increase was automatic under a law enacted before Reagan was president — and because he once had proposed that it be delayed for three months.

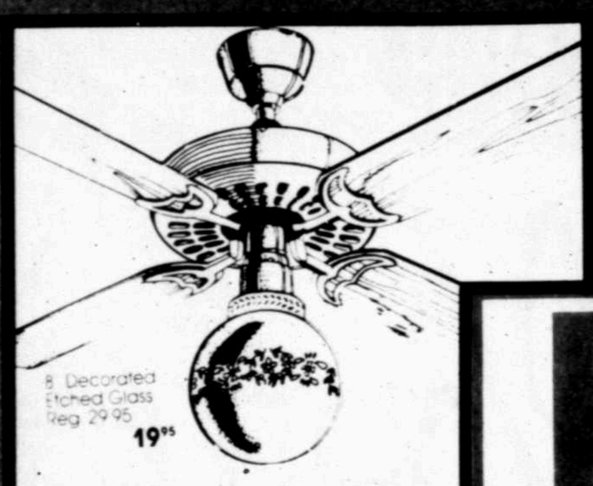

HE DROPPED THAT PROPOSAL, and others to curb disability and early retirement benefits, at the time he called for creation of the reform commission.

Disputes like that have been reflected within the commission itself, understandbly since it is composed of largely people who long ago took rival sides in the Social Security debate. Seven of them are members of the Congress that will have to pass judgment on whatever the commission recommends.

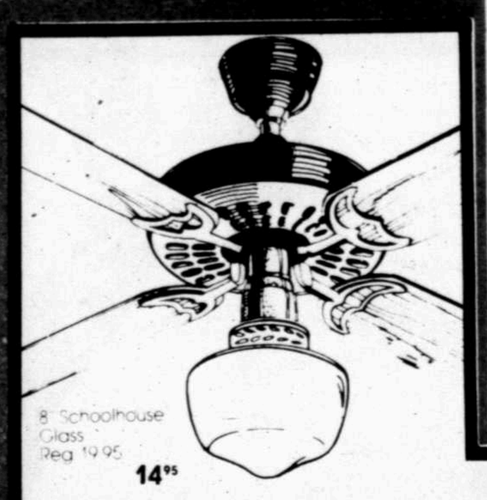

Nevertheless, the Republican National Committee envisions a settlement of the whole issue after the commission makes its proposals. "We can be sure that once President Reagan receives the report, he and Congress will reach a bipartisan solution...that will secure the system and end the debate on Social Security," the GOP statement said.

Partisan differences mar session

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Bitter political differences flared on the last day of the special legislative session, with Republican Gov. Bill Clements and a Democratic senator sparring over Texas' most sacred symbol — the Alamo.

The three-day session concluded Thursday with the passage of a proposal to borrow money from the federal government to keep Texas' Unemployment Trust Fund from going broke.

Democrats claim Clements brought on the "crisis" by failing to act on a Nov. 13, 1981, letter from Texas employment commissioners warning that the "reserve fund has become dangerously small" compared with benefits being paid to jobless workers.

"I do not view that as a form letter to be discarded and ignored," Sen. Lloyd Doggett told his colleagues Thursday.

Doggett, D-Austin, read the opening of Lt. Col. William Barrett Travis' famous Feb. 24, 1836, letter from the Alamo, which begins, "Fellow Citizens and Compatriots: I am besieged by a thousand or more Mexicans under Santa Anna...."

Doggett said if Clements had received that letter, his response would have been, "Aw, shucks. There are not that many Mexicans."

"Well, you know, if Mr. Doggett had been in the Alamo, he'd probably jumped over the back wall," Clements responded.

In approving the bill to borrow federal money, Doggett said, Texans were "for the first time asking for a federal bail-out" that "violates the whole concept of pay-as-you-go-financing."

The bill to replenish the fund that has been drained by heavy employee layoffs during the summer months cleared the Senate 22-6 after the House had approved it 106-30.

Passage completed the work of the special legislative session, and lawmakers adjourned. They are not scheduled to meet again until the regular session in January.

Clements, who called the special session, said legislative "actions have saved Texas employers about $1.4 billion for 1983. That'll be a big boon to our Texas economy."

Doggett offered an amendment that would have authorized the state to borrow the money from its own general revenue fund, with employer taxes repaying the loan. The proposal was rejected 21-7. The same amendment failed in the House 68-68, with two-thirds needed for approval.

Senators also defeated, 24-4, an amendment by Sen. John Leedom that would have transferred $265 million from general revenue — or the state's checking account — into the unemployment fund, with no increase in employer taxes.

"There's a very small record of anyone borrowing themselves out of a crisis," said Leedom, R-Dallas.

He said the state could afford the gift to employers, because State Comptroller Bob Bullock has predicted the state will have a $1.3 billion surplus on Aug. 31.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, responded to complaints about borrowing from the federal government by saying it was "false pride" on the part of Texans not to accept a loan from a fund that was specifically set up to help states in similar situations.

The measure that passed the Legislature had the support of Clements, Speaker Bill Clayton and business interests who feared even higher employment taxes.

Clements called the session after hearing predictions that employers would have to increase their payments to the fund by as much as 2,700 percent under current law designed to raise employer taxes when the fund dips below $225 million.

The Legislative Budget Board estimated the state would need to borrow $239.7 million from the federal government, and interest on that loan would total $31 million with a payoff date of May 1984.

A surtax of 0.3 to 0.55 percent would raise an additional $147.8 million in 1983, and a tax of 0.5 to 0.75 percent would raise $250 million more in 1984. Total income to the fund over the next two years has been estimated at nearly $1.3 billion. In addition, a special tax of 0.3 percent in the last quarter of this year and a 0.1 tax in the first quarter of 1983 would raise a total of $34.5 million to pay the interest on the federal loan.

The bill would raise from $6,000 to $7,000 the amount of an employee's wage on which the employer pays a tax, and it would hike the maximum tax rate from 4 percent to 6 percent.

Legislators said that under the bill, the minimum employer tax, which three-fourths of Texas employers pay, would rise from $6 to $28 per employee. The surcharge of $7 would drop off March 31. The current maximum tax of $240 would increase to $458.50 in 1983.

SSI looks toward satellite launch

MATAGORDA ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Space Services Inc. of America, the Houston company that made a giant leap for free enterprise with the first privately controlled rocket launch, plans to orbit a 500-pound satellite within two years, company officials say.

Thursday's flawless launch and suborbital flight of the Conestoga I should make it easier to raise the $15 million to $20 million needed to build a private satellite-launching service, said David Hannah, founder and board chairman of Space Services.

Conestoga I "showed that a group of private investors can get together and launch a rocket in a responsible way and well within commercially feasible limits," Hannah said.

The rocket roared away from a launch pad scratched out of private ranch land on this Texas coastal island and performed a series of complex maneuvers needed to put a satellite in orbit.

Spectators applauded as the white, 37-foot-tall rocket thundered away from the pad and climbed into a cloudless sky.

The craft soared to an altitude of 192 miles, separated its dummy payload and then released 400 pounds of water on schedule.

"Everything looked perfect," said mission director Donald K. "Deke" Slayton, a former astronaut. "It went right on down the pike."

One of the major accomplishments was to prove Space Services was capable of the complex organization and engineering required to assemble and launch a rocket, company officials said.

SSI officials said the launch's success would help them negotiate an agreement to establish a pad at South Point, Hawaii, which would allow engineers to launch satellites into polar or equatorial orbits.

"There was a lot of credibility hanging on this flight," said SSI's Jack Keppeler, who said he has applied to lease a five-acre launch site near South Point.

Hannah, a Houston businessman, said 12 oil companies have expressed interest in becoming SSI customers, but none has signed contracts. He declined to name them.

Oil companies want their own satellites to gather data from remote oil wells, he said. Such data is now collected by microwave networks.

The company's goal is to develop a three-stage rocket capable of sending a 500-pound satellite into a 500-mile polar orbit, Slayton said. That rocket would be much more complex than the single-stage Conestoga I.

The launch Thursday had a festive air as more than 230 guests, many of them SSI investors, arrived on the island. Women wearing high heels and designer clothes strolled around the manure-littered pasture. Guests munched on shrimp and finger sandwiches during the final stages of the countdown.

Minutes later the launch, Slayton, in blue jeans and cowboy boots, arrived from the control center at the wheel of a pickup truck and was mobbed by the spectators.

"We did it! We did it!" shouted one investor.

One SSI executive, Walter Davis, said the launch proved a group of determined entrepreneurs could cut through government red tape to get the permits necessary to launch a rocket.

"The government demonstrated a flexibility that some have not seen in the federal government for a long time," Davis said.

Alice's water supply safe for consumption

ALICE, Texas (AP) — Residents of this city have resumed drinking their tap water and utility crews planned today to mop up a black, oily pollutant flushed from the city's water lines onto downtown streets.

The Texas Department of Health, which on Tuesday had warned about 30,000 people in this South Texas city and nearby Rancho Allegra not to drink the public water, approved the water supply Thursday after a series of laboratory tests.

The Alice plant of Houston-based Milchem Inc. accidentally pumped five barrels of oil drilling mud into the city water lines, said Chuck Atteberry, the company's South Texas regional manager.

Milchem has agreed to pay for cleaning up the pollution, Atteberry said.

Assistant City Manager Bill McCumber said the city is inspecting water lines throughout the system to ensure that no other industrial lines are crossed with city water lines.

"We've already sent our utility crews out to all our industrial companies and have checked throughout out the city for any unauthorized cross connections," McCumber said.

Proposed regulation on teens using birth control stirring controversy

By RITA CIOLLI
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The New Right is approaching its first major victory on the moral front: dealing with teenage sex the conservative way.

The religious component of the conservative movement that helped President Reagan get elected is disgruntled over what it views as meager legislative support from the White House on such priorities as abortion, school prayer and busing.

But it is nearing some goals through administration action. Perhaps the most controversial is the proposed Health and Human Services Department regulation requiring federally financed clinics to notify parents when their daughters seek prescriptions for birth-control drugs and devices.

"We're never happy — it's in the blood of conservatives," said Cal Thomas, director of communications for the Moral Majority. But he is pleased that the regulation is on its way to implemention. "We believe it is profamily, and Lord knows the families are in trouble," he said.

PHYLLIS SCHLAFLY, head of the Eagle Forum, was more direct: "Anything that would stop inciting teenagers to fornicate is a good move."

Opponents of the rule, which some call "the Squeal Law," are afraid that it will scare sexually active girls away from clinics that use federal funds to keep their fees low. The teen-agers, 95 percent of whom use birth-control pills, prefer the anonymity and low cost of a clinic to a private doctor. One family-planning study, cited by the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association, said mandatory prental notification could result in 33,000 unwanted pregnancies annually.

"The proposed regulation is only a symptom of the resistance to a frank acceptance of the sexuality of adolescents," said Jane Gilgun of Syracuse University's Institute for Family Research and Education.

THE REGULATION PROVIDES a case study of how a president works to translate his campaign ideology into policy. It has been a difficult and stormy task, and the results still are not guaranteed. The obstacles include the permanent bureaucracy, with which political appointees must struggle, and well-financed and savvy opposition groups, which monitor every move. But the greatest enemy may be time: getting a law or regulation on the books before an administration's four-year term expires.

"We could have a change in administrations or in the personnel serving under Mr. Reagan by the time it goes into effect," said Faye Wattleton, president of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Her organization, with the American Civil Liberties Union, is preparing legal challenges to the regulation that could tie it up in the federal courts for years.

THE PROCESS is being slowed because government attorneys are revising the rule in an attempt to ensure its survival in court. The delays have set back the issuance of the regulation from August to the fall, according to a spokeswoman for the Health and Human Services Department.

But some opponents said the White House ordered enactment of the regulation postponed until after the fall elections.

One thing both sides agree on is the epidemic proportions of the problem. Last year, Gilgun said, there were 1,112,757 pregnancies among unwed 15 to 19 year olds. Almost half of those pregnancies were ended by abortion.

A Johns Hopkins University study in 1979 found that 82 percent of unwed pregnant teen-agers said they didn't want to have a child.

The administration argues that the rule will make teen-agers more responsible for their actions and will inform parents of potential health risks their children may face. New Right leaders like Schlafly hope it will return authority to parents.

FAMILY-PLANNING PROFESSIONALS say it is unrealistic to expect a government rule to foster genuine parental concern for children. Instead, they say, funds should be used to help parents teach their children about sex.

The parental notification requirement began with the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank. Within days of Reagan's 1980 election, it published a "Mandate for Leadership: Policy Management in a Conservative Administration," which, among other things, proposed changes in Title X, the federally financed family-planning program whose goal is to prevent unwanted pregnancies.

Reagan and conservatives in Congress wanted to eliminate the program by assigning money for family-planning assistance and many other federal activities to the states in block grants. The individual states then could decide which programs they wanted to keep financing.

THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION and its allies were unsuccessful in that attempt, but they did cut the budget by 23 percent, to $1.24 million.

Shortly after the legislative defeat in July 1981, Reagan wrote to conservative Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, consoling him about their failure: "Perhaps we can remedy some of the problems in the family-planning program administratively."

Meanwhile, appointed officials at the Health and Human Services Department, including Marjory Mecklenburg, a cofounder of a leading anti-abortion lobby who had made a reputation fighting abortion, were drafting the regulation. Congress gave her some help by amending the Title X bill to state that its purpose was to "encourage" parental involvement.

BUT THE ADMINISTRATION'S new strategy was leaked last fall by career staff members who were alarmed by what they considered to be politics entering into the delivery of health services.

"We were privy to what was being developed; we even had a copy of the working proposal in the department," said Planned Parenthood's Wattleton, who estimates that the rule would affect 166,000 teens who use her organization's clinics.

When the proposed regulation, which was even more restrictive than the drafts, was released in February, the medical and family-planning professionals were ready to do battle.

The rule would require that the 5,000 clinics nationwide that accept federal funds notify parents within 10 days of giving their daughter a prescription for birth-control pills or devices. There is an exception to notification only in cases where there is evidence of incest or child abuse or where there are "substantial grounds" to determine that the parents would physically harm the teen-ager.

THE INTENSE REACTION surprised both sides. "The Squeal Law" became a rallying point for liberals, who saw it as one of the first concrete changes that the New Right would be able to bring about.

In the 60-day public comment period, about 80,000 letters — one of the largest totals ever on a proposed regulation — were sent to Mecklenburg, who is deputy assistant secretary for population affairs. Bags and boxes of mail, much of it generated by opponents of the rule, lined a seventh-floor corridor at a Health and Human Services building. A temporary staff was hired to carry out the legal mandate that each letter be read.

THE DELAYS had started.

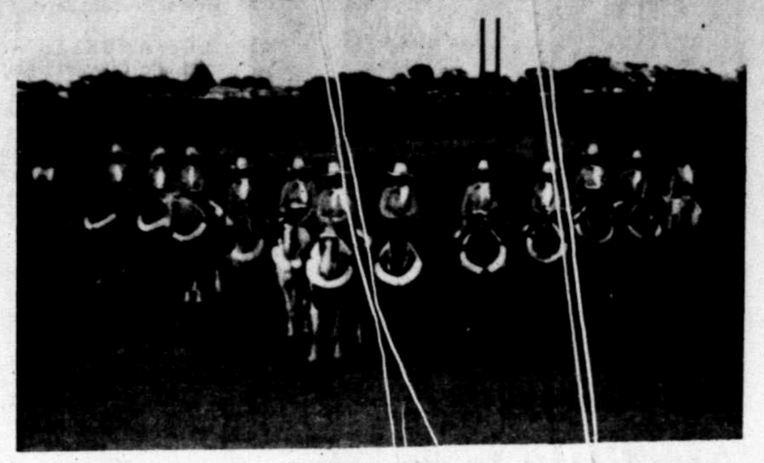

"There are problems with the bureaucracy," conservative lobbyist Greg Butler acknowledged in relation to Mecklenburg's goal of having government work to keep the family units strong. "Maybe she is not as successful as she hoped she would be at this point," said Butler, who works for the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress.

But Mecklenburg is not frustrated, according to her aide, Lucy Eddinger, who said: "She realizes the process is a long one."

Mecklenburg has said that as a result of the comments, her staff is re-evaluating parts of the regulation. It is seeking ways to streamline the process to avoid unduly burdening the clinics with the paperwork involved in sending the letters of notification. But the staff may start a newer and bigger fuss by going further and proposing a requirement that parents be notified when a teen-ager seeks treatment for venereal disease.

OPPONENTS PREDICT it will take a long time to get the rule into effect. "We are told now that the target date is next February," said Scott Swirling of the National Family Planning and Reproductive Health Association.

It maybe quite a bit longer than that before parents learn through a form letter from a birth-control clinic that their daughter is sexually active. Swirling said litigation to undo the regulation will begin "the day they try to put it into effect."

Drill team to participate in competition in Dallas

Leather and Lace, Midland's equestrian drill team for young adult women, will be leaving Sept. 17 at 7 a.m. to participate in the National Olympic Drill Team Competition in Dallas on Sept. 18.

The competition consists of two events: Parade competition, which is judged on precision and costume; and Drill competition, which is judged on precision, costume, horsemanship and intricate manuvers.

Fourteen young women will be competing for the award, with the privilege of going to the Rose Bowl Parade in Pasadena, Calif., on Jan. 1.

"The girls have been working weekly for over a year for this event in Dallas," said Cheryl Radthe, president of the group.

The drill team is practicing nightly at the 4-H Arena on E. Highway 80, near the Midland County Exhibits Building. A dress rehearsal will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. The public is welcome to attend.

According to Mrs. Radthe, the drill team is striving to improve horsemanship and training for the horses, as well as meeting new people and competing in local and state events.

"We recently won second place at the rodeo and parade at Pecos on July 1," she said. "We were awarded with a trophy plaque."

"The girls pay for their own horses, equipment and transportation for all the events they participate in," Mrs. Radthe said. "Some local sponsors have helped the club pay for these expenses. Donations are always appreciated!"

Raccoon repast may need more than wine

By GEORGE ZUCKER
AP Writer

There are different twists in states with liquor monopolies. They aren't always lemon or lime.

Blue laws designed to cut alcohol consumption sometimes force you to buy more booze than you want.

When I lived in Texas, you couldn't buy a drink at a bar. You had to go to a state store and buy a bottle. Bars and taverns would then sell you the ice and mixers — the setups — at inflated prices.

A bottle was a bit much for someone who only wanted a drink or two in the first plce. Or felt funny about carrying a pint of whiskey around in a brown paper bag.

IN IOWA, people bought booze by the number. You went to a state store and filled out a form, circling the number next to the item you wanted. A clerk got it for you.

California was the other extreme. You didn't even have to go to a liquor store, state or otherwise. You could buy all the booze and wine you wanted at the local supermarket — until 2 a.m. And you could lug out beer there by the six-pack or case around the clock.

I don't recall that anyone I knew drank more in California. It just wasn't a hassle to buy it.

THAT WAS NOT SO in Tennessee.

In 1973, after a long day, I drove into the small town of Union City, Tenn., and checked into a tiny motel. With the grim prospect of a lonely night in a strange town before me, I wanted at least a good dinner — maybe a a dry martini and a rare steak.

But I didn't see any "cocktail" signs on the restaurants.

"Where does someone go in this town if they want to have a drink with dinner?" I asked the desk clerk.

"Kentucky," he replied without looking up.

THEN HE EXPLAINED Kentucky was only about 20 miles up the road. Sure enough, as soon as I crossed the state line there were liquor and beer signs all over the place. It was a veritable alcoholic industrial park.

And most of the customers were from Tennessee.

Later, I would learn that as long as you were in Nashville, Memphis, Knoxville or Chattanooga, you could buy alcohol by the drink. Anywhere else in the state, you either had to buy it by the bottle or you couldn't buy it at all.

It always amused me that the most famous distillery in Tennessee, Jack Daniels, was located in the dry city of Lynchburg.

That famous brand of Tennessee whiskey would save the day for me at a country supper staged in my honor at Dyersburg, Tenn.

THE ENTREE at this special repast, hosted by the editor of the local newspaper, was raccoon. Now everyone there looked forward eagerly to treating the Yankee from New Jersey to this southern delicacy.

"We got two fat ones for you," the editor quipped. "We nailed one at the garbage dump and the other at the graveyard."

Woman starts own house-cleaning business

By MARCIA DUNN
AP Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dirty sinks, dirty floors, dirty laundry, you name it — the dirtier, the better, says Janis Waters, a real pro when it comes to cleaning bachelor pads.

"I love to clean. I just love dirty ovens, that's a real challenge," said the 36-year-old entrepreneur who specializes in cleaning and organizing business executives' homes.

For the past six years, Ms. Waters has operated Sophisticated Services from her Pittsburgh home, an agency promising to perform "The Odd, The Unusual and The Routine."

Most of her housekeeping clients are single men, although more and more career women seek her aid. In addition to businessmen, her customers include those who work shifts, such as waiters.

"Instead of calling me the 'other woman,' my customers call me the 'other wife' — with none of the aggravation," she said.

Ms. Waters founded Sophisticated Services in 1976, after two years of existing on welfare payments and food stamps. She was forced to accept government aid after losing a job at an insurance company.

To make ends meet, she began cleaning apartments and homes. She soon decided to turn the household chores into a full-time venture and, with a loan, opened her own business.

Since then, her agency has handled between 4,000 and 5,000 people.

For $25 a week, Ms. Waters offers what she calls a "Sweetheart Service." "It's almost like being a girlfriend — I'll change the linen and take out the trash," she said.

The price climbs, however, as the demands increase. For some bachelors, that means watering plants, paying bills, making bank deposits or even opening their Florida condominiums every spring.

Some clients' needs go beyond the call of housekeeping.

"For one business executive who travels abroad often, we remind him when his passport expires," she said. And she once got a call from a customer wanting to know what to do about his girlfriend.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The 5 millionth video disc, "The Jazz Singer" in stereo starring Neil Diamond, has been produced at the RCA plant here and presented as a plaque to the plant's 1,200 employes.

Video discs play pictures and sound through any TV set.

American consumers spent more than $90 million on videodisc players and discs in the product's first year. This figure exceeded the combined first year sales of black-and-white television, color TV and video cassette recorders.

Campers beat high cost of living

By TIMOTHY CARLSON
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Amidst the Jansport tents, Coleman stoves and Winnebagos that make up the normal flotsam of this Orange County campground, there are several campsites that look a little better equipped, a little more permanent.

Laundry is hanging out to dry; a couch sits under the tree. There's an electric generator pumping away, a huge water tank, a tank for propane fuel, tables, chairs, a typewriter, lights, stacks of food.

THE PEOPLE who own these amenities are a new wrinkle of the recession. They are economic survivalists who've taken to the parks to get out from under oppressive rents. But they're not on vacation — they're making it a way of life.

Back in the 1930s, there were Hoovervilles — camps where Dust Bowl refugees who'd arrived in California with no jobs or money rode out the Depression. In the 1980s, a small but growing number of Southern Californians made homeless by economic hard times are riding it out by living in county, state, federal and private campgrounds — Reaganvilles, if you will.

FORCED TO ROTATE from park to park by limited stay regulations, these vagabonds — many of them victims of a 10.2 percent state unemployment rate — are fighting skyrocketing rents with makeshift tents. They are forsaking matchbox city apartments for big skies, and are trading the problem of neighborhood burglars for the nuisance of foraging raccoons.

WHILE NUMBERS are hard to come by, estimates of regulars engaging in this rotating campground existence are that their ranks include 250 persons in Los Angeles, Orange, and San Diego counties. State and county park officials note that park usage has increased 12 percent in the last year, but park rangers in all three counties say that about 25 to 30 families reappear regularly.

Carroll and Sharon James are both working, but have been living in Orange County parks for six months to get out from under debt and to save up enough money to move to Oregon next summer. Having given up a $575-per-month apartment, Sharon James says that what began as economic adaptation is now a preferred lifestyle.

THE JAMESES have worked out a good method for dealing with the limited stay requirements of the different park systems. Featherly Park lets people stay 15 days at a time; then they must leave for 15 days. Two weeks at Featherly at $5 a night costs $70. Then the Jameses might stay at private camp facilities at Newport Dunes for one week at $10 a night — another $70. Then they might move on to San Clemente Beach, where campers can stay for a week and return after two days. At $5 a night, that's another $35. Total "rent" for the month: $175.

NOT EVERYONE in the parks has as many options as do the Jameses. Michael Elias of the Christian Temporary Housing Facility in the city of Orange, a private volunteer organization, said that a woman with four children living in Featherly was told she had been in another county park during the last 15 days and had to leave.

"The computer caught up with them," said Elias. "When the ranger told them they had to move on, her 15-year-old son took off. He said, 'I can't take it any more.'

"Our 16-bed facility had 80 people last weekend, so I put the woman up in my apartment. She is a teacher whose husband became sick; they couldn't make payments on their house and were thrown out."

ELIAS SAID his agency gets 100 calls a day from the homeless. "It's an outrage," he said. "Irvine has just constructed a $3.5 million dog shelter, but there's little for homeless people. One policeman told me that rich people in Irvine pressed for the shelter because stray dogs were relieving themselves on their lawns. If that's true, the poor homeless people should start using local lawns for bathrooms — maybe they'd get some help."

Russ Bailey had a black plastic makeshift tent set up at O'Neill Park next to a car stuffed with camping gear. He was laid off from his job as a design draftsman for an engineering firm in May 1981, and suffered a heart attack 12 days later. When he recovered, Bailey lived in a motel for about a year during a nine-month search for work.

"WHEN THEY raised my rent from $112 a week to $140, I started coming to the parks," said Bailey. "I'm happy here," he said. "The last job I had, I worked my butt off, but it's even harder looking for work. I keep in touch with employment agencies every day from the pay telephone here, but I'd really prefer to get a job as a groundskeeper at one of these parks."

Vito Santella feels he has the world by the tail at Leo Carillo State Beach park, where he's been living since mid-April. He stopped work as a carpenter at a medical center for two reasons: "I got laid off, and I fell off a ladder and got three broken ribs and a bruised vertebra."

THE RHYTHMS of Santella's existence coincide with his twice-monthly disability checks. "The first week, chicken's for dinner, the second week, feathers," he grins.

Publishers plan to offer horror books for teens

By CECELIA GOODNOW
Hearst Feature Service

Few things are as satisfying to the teen-age soul as a good spine-tingling, flesh-crawling, three-alarm horror story, judging by the popularity of such movies as "Carrie," "Jaws" and "Friday the 13th."

And now the book publishing world is jumping into the fray with heavily financed campaigns to lure teen readers to their new paperback lines of occult terror novels. Dell's Laurel Leaf subsidiary, which publishes young adult books, says it is staging the largest campaign in its history to promote its new Twilight series, which will debut this October with six titles. Bantam will introduce a rival line, Dark Forces, in March.

"KIDS LOVE THIS KIND of stuff," said Betsy Gould, Dell's marketing manager for juvenile books. "The biggest readers of adult occult books are kids."

The Twilight series, aimed at readers 10 to 14, will be less shocking than adult thrillers — what Gould calls "PG," as opposed to "R." "The kids won't go to bed afraid to turn off the lights," she said. "I don't want to do a lot of psychological damage."

Laurel Leaf editor Beverly Horowitz added, "We are orienting ourselves so the books do not have the kind of explicit sex, violence and religious references of some of the adult books popular with teen-agers."

BANTAM ALSO is coming on much stronger after scuttling its plans for a December release after deciding it had gone too far in labeling its series Demon. The new name, Dark Forces, was considered less inflammatory.

"Demon turned out to be much too strong and forceful," said Bantam's editorial director, Ron Buehl. "We don't want to offend a lot of people."

Still, Bantam's thrillers will tackle the religious implication of the supernatural more directly than Dell's, Buehl said. And although Dark Forces will avoid explicit sex and outright gore, Buehl expects the series to arouse opposition from some parents and religious groups.

Twilight, which will plot tales of extrasensory perception, reincarnation and unexplained happenings, also will pit teen-age characters against dangerously compelling forces.

THE OBJECT of both publishers is to offer suspenseful, formula entertainment. "In most cases they are not literary masterpieces," Gould said. "They are quick page-turners."

DEAR ABBY

Marriage counselors: Experience required?

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Totally Frustrated" complained because her husband didn't like to kiss, fondle, caress or express any kind of affection; it was just "wham, bam, thank you, ma'am." She said she had talked to her priest, but he was no help at all.

My point is this: Priests are not qualified to give advice on marriage. I think this is the most convincing argument in favor of permitting Roman Catholic priests to marry. I hope the pope reads your column! — W.T. HEYER, ST. LOUIS, MO.

DEAR MR. HEYER: Although my column is published in the Rome Daily American, I think it's safe to assume that His Holiness is more familiar with the ABBEY than the Dear Abby column.

And insofar as having to experience something in order to treat it, it's not necessarily so. Future clergymen (and women) are trained today to provide expert counsel for every kind of human problem.

DEAR ABBY: I am very serious about a man and I think our relationship will lead to marriage. He likes women to be "natural," and a few years before I met him I had silicone implants in my breasts. They look very natural, and no one could tell I had anything done.

Should I tell him about it? If someone who knew me when I was flat were to tell him, he might resent the fact that I held out on him. — SOMETHING ADDED

DEAR SOMETHING: If he asks, tell him the truth, but you aren't obligated to account for any additions, subtractions or revisions that took place before he met you.

DEAR ABBY: I own some rental property in a rather rundown part of town. I am always afraid that I'll be sued by some drunk who happens to fall on my property. Would I be protected against a lawsuit if I put up a sign saying, "Not Responsible for Injuries Received on My Property"? — PROPERTY OWNER

DEAR OWNER: Merely putting up a sign will not relieve you from liability. You may say one thing, and the law may say something else. Consult your lawyer and an insurance agent to be adequately protected.

DEAR ABBY: The mother of Bill, a teen-age boy, wrote that whenever a certain girl called asking for Bill, he would say, "Tell her I'm not home."

That certainly rang a bell with me. When I was a somewhat popular 16-year-old lad, a girl called, and my father answered the phone. It seems she very politely gave him her name and asked to talk to me.

I signaled my father to tell her I wasn't home, whereupon he covered the telephone so she couldn't hear and firmly said to me, "If you don't want to talk to her, cut the conversation short, but don't ever ask me to lie for you — it's not manly!" — NOVA SCOTIA

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's excellent booklet, send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Now's the time to spray oak trees and shrubs for aphids and red spiders. Spray yard for cut worms and grubs.

Muscovites seek help from phone service

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
AP Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Lines are busy around the clock at a newly opened telephone counseling center where Muscovites can seek help with intimate personal problems — including alienation, sex, and suicidal despondency, topics rarely discussed publicly in the Soviet Union.

The Confidential Telephone Service, highly publicized in Moscow newspapers, is billed by its organizers as a major step forward in Soviet psychiatric care.

"LONELINESS is the biggest problem in these cases, just as in any big city," said Dr. Aina Ambrumova, director of the all union Scientific-Medical Suicide Research Center.

"Family difficulties are the most common," she told The Associated Press in an interview. "A man loses his wife, a husband leaves his wife, a wife leaves her husband, children leave home.

"Often people can have serious crises with sexuality," she said. "They can come to us, and it's necessary that our staff include sexual pathologists."

THE TELEPHONE service is the keystone of a counseling program that Ms. Ambrumova says is aimed at "extreme cases." The phone link is designed not only to calm the desperate, but also to persuade them to visit one of the program's six regional centers, each staffed with trained specialists.

The service, and to a lesser extent newspaper articles explaining it, offers Soviets a chance for unusually frank discussion of personal unhappiness. Similar services have also been reported in other Soviet cities, but Ms. Ambrumova says hers is the first in Moscow.

SOVIET newspapers and television, studded with the photographs and testimonials of smiling milkmaids and overachieving factory hands, rarely treat individual tragedies. Likewise, cultural officials encourage artists to give happy endings to their movies, books and plays.

The counseling service, and increasingly candid media treatment of such problems as alcoholism, signal official acknowledgment that platitudes will not solve all social ills.

MS. AMBRUMOVA and her colleagues describe their service as "a new form of preventive psychology" which they say "meets a humanitarian need in our health services."

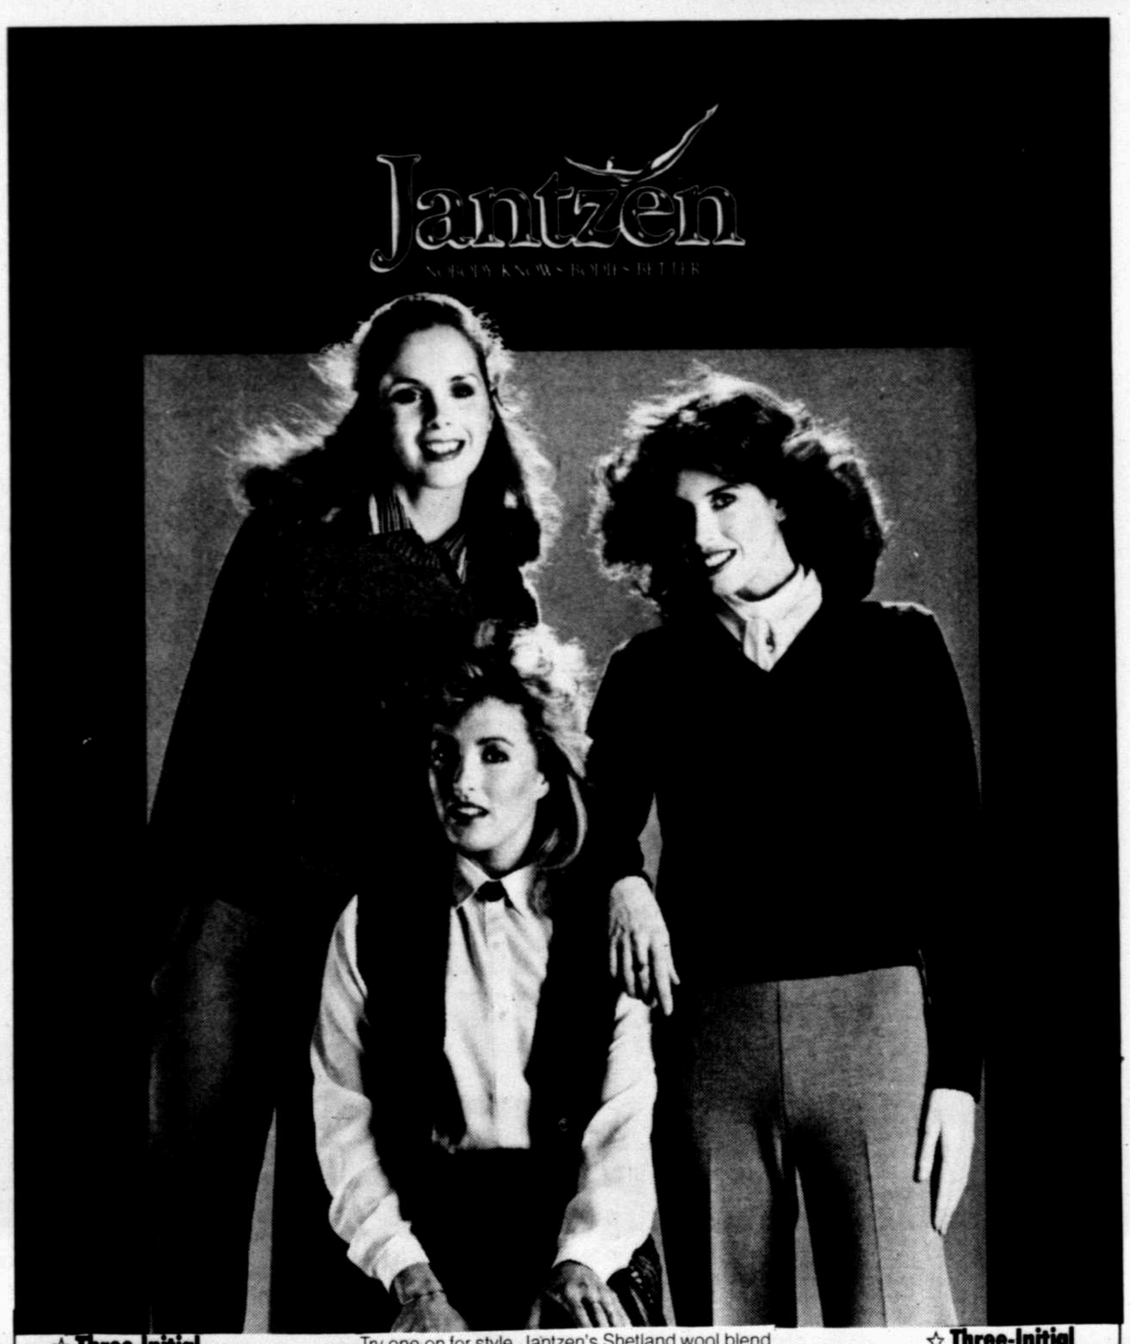

Counseling of this sort, she contends, is needed in any industrializing society, capitalist or communist, in which people have "little time for personal relationships."

Ms. Ambrumova's approach to personal problems clearly is not shared by all Soviet officials.

DINNER FARE

Spiced Crab Apples

SPICED CRAB APPLES

An old-fashioned relish.

1 pound (about 2 dozen) unblemished crab apples
2 cups sugar
1 cup distilled white vinegar
½ cup water
2 sticks cinnamon
4 whole cloves

Wash crab apples; leave whole with stems and blossom ends intact. In a large saucepan over medium heat stir together the sugar, vinegar, water, cinnamon and cloves until sugar dissolves. Bring to a boil; boil 5 minutes. Add crab apples and simmer until just tender — about 10 minutes. Skins will crack. Chill. Drain before serving.

Note: The standard method of pricking crab apples before cooking to prevent skins from cracking has never worked when we tried it. Has any reader another method for keeping the skins intact?

Vasectomy: Safe, effective procedure

By JOANN RODGERS
Science Writer
Hearst Feature Service

Medical specialists say that the number of American men getting vasectomies has dropped amid renewed — and unjustified — fears about the long-term safety of the operation.

"There's no question that there has been a decrease in the number we are doing here, although not as big a dip as there was the last time worrisome reports surfaced in 1978 and 1979," said Dr. Edward Campbell, associate professor of urology at the University of Maryland Medical School. Urologists in community vasectomy clinics and hospitals are reporting drops of up to 25 percent in their caseloads.

MORE THAN 500,000 vasectomies are performed each year as a permanent and effective method of birth control. The operation severs the cords that carry sperm, preventing them from reaching and penetrating the female egg. It does not affect sexual behavior or response.

"Our preliminary figures for 1982 show that we probably will not reach the 520,000 figure recorded last year, despite the fact that the pool of young men who are candidates for sterilization continues to rise," said Miriam Rubin of the Association for Voluntary Sterlization. "It seems the stories are having an effect once again," she added.

THE "STORIES" concern animal studies published by Dr. Nancy Alexander in 1978 which show that antibodies formed after vasectomy can aggravate heart and blood vessel disease. Alexander vasectomized six monkeys and then fed them diets high in cholesterol to clog their arteries. She reported that the vasectomized animals not only had high levels of anti-sperm antibodies, but much more severe hardening of the arteries than non-vasectomized animals on the same diet.

After her work was presented, scientists feared that men with high cholesterol levels (and therefore at risk for heart disease) might have their conditions worsened by the operation.

THE MONKEY STUDIES capped a round of antibody scares that began to surface as soon as vasectomy became popular in the early 1970s. Antibodies are white blood cells marshalled by the body's defense system to engage and destroy foreign invasions of bacteria, viruses and other threats. At times, however, antibodies mistakenly attack healthy tissues. This occurs in allergy and in so-called "auto-immune" disorders, including rheumatoid arthritis and multiple sclerosis.

"In the late 1970s, it was the disease-of-the-month club with vasectomy," notes Dr. Steven Cohen, chief of urology at Sinai Hospital in Baltimore.

"When Dr. Alexander first presented her studies, she nearly created a panic among urologists," recalls Dr. James Smolev, assistant professor of urology at Johns Hopkins University and head of a Planned Parenthood Vasectomy Clinic. "There were 400 urologists at a meeting she addressed and every one of them swore they'd never do another vasectomy."

LATER, IN 1980, Alexander published a study in the Journal of Andrology claiming to have found evidence of eye damage in vasectomized men consistent with blood vessel disease. Medical experts say, however, that Alexander's studies were seriously flawed or, at best, weak.

A review of the data in the Journal of Urology this summer by Dr. J.R. Sotolongo concludes that the jury is still out — way out — on the question of heart disease risk. The review says vasectomy is an effective way to prevent fertility and that whether antibodies that are formed interact with diet to effect atherogenesis remains uncertain.

"There is not a shred of evidence that vasectomy increases the risk of any disease," says Rubin of the AVS. She cites a study by Dr. Diana Petitti of the Kaiser-Permanente medical center in Oakland, Calif. Petitti studied 4,000 vasectomized men and compared each of them with three other men similar in every way who had not had vasectomies. There were no differences in the risk or incidence of atherosclerosis, Petitti reported.

DR. WALTER GERBER at the University of Iowa took a different approach to the same conclusion. He studied 55 men under the age of 50 with early evidence of heart disease and located 55 of their brothers or other close relatives of the same age with no heart disease. Fourteen in each set of 55 had had vasectomies. If vasectomy were a risk factor for heart disease, he should have found far more vasectomies in the group with heart disease.

At Sinai, Cohen performs an average of 100 vasectomies a year and says knowledgeable men still find vasectomy the most effective, safest form of permanent birth control.

Finally, ABC manages to steal CBS' Nielsen thunder

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC broke CBS' six-week run as the leading network in the weekly prime-time ratings competiton, while both managed to place five shows in the Top 10, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

But for the second week in a row, CBS' "M*A*S*H" was first and ABC's "Too Close for Comfort" came in second.

ABC finished on top with a rating of 14.0 for the week ended Sept. 5. The networks say that means in an average minute of prime time, 14 percent of the nation's homes with television were tuned to ABC.

CBS, which has finished in first place every week since mid-July, was second with 13.5, and NBC came in third with 10.0.

ABC and CBS divided the Top 10, although three of CBS' shows, "House Calls," "Lou Grant," and "WKRP in Cincinnati" have been canceled, and "M*A*S*H" is in its final year. "M*A*S*H" won with a rating of 23.2. Nielsen says that means in an average minute of the show, 22.5 percent of the television-equipped homes in the nation saw at least part of the program.

All three networks had shows in among the week's five lowest-rated programs: "Walt Disney's Beyond Witch Mountain," CBS; "Code Red," ABC; Movie-"Freedom Road," NBC; "Born to the Wind," NBC; and "CBS Reports," CBS.

This is the first week in which each ratings point equals 833,000 homes. Previously, it equaled 815,000 homes, but the Nielsen Co. said the number of American homes with televisions had increased to 83.3 million.

Two New Jersey police officers file lawsuit against Guardian Angels

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Two police officers cleared in the Dec. 30 shooting of a member of the Guardian Angels have filed a defamation suit against the volunteer anti-crime patrol and its founder.

Curtis Sliwa, founder of the Guardian Angels, had charged there was a coverup in the investigation of the shooting of Frank Melvin, 26.

Police said Melvin was shot by mistake from a rooftop by Officer Milton E. Medina, who believed Melvin posed a threat to another officer on the street.

Craddick votes 'yes' on tax plan bill

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, voted Thursday to approve final passage of HB1, the legislation overhauling Texas' unemployment compensation tax plan.

Craddick Wednesday voted against the measure as the Hose tentatively approved the bill 88-51.

Final passage Thursday was on a vote of 106-30.

The measure needed 100 votes (two-thirds of the House membership) to give it immediate effect.

Without the two-thirds vote, the measure would not take effect until 90 days after the end of the session.

Immediate effect for the legistlation was needed to allow the bill to become law before massive tax increases would be automatically triggered by existing law.

Eastman Theater near 60th year

Built by the late George Eastman "for the enrichment of community life," the 3,100-seat theater advertised at its opening in 1922 the presentation of silent movies with live musical accompaniment six days a week, as well as orchestra concerts, ballets, and recitals.

Although its use as a movie palace ended years ago, it continues as Rochester's principal concert hall. Part of the adjoining Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, the theater now is at the heart of Rochester's downtown renewal area, "Metro Center."

People, pooches shape up with recreation programs

The dog days of summer are almost over, and for the canines in Midland that means it's time to sit up and start cleaning up their act.

The same goes for people, too, and the city Parks and Recreation Department has the answer on how everyone and their dog can get in shape. The solution is to try one of the city's recreation programs.

To help the canine straighten out his act, Dalton Byerly is teaching a dog obedience class. Purpose of the course is to instruct the dog owner in methods that he can use to train his dog in basic obedience.

This is an eight-week course that meets for one hour starting at 7 p.m. on Wednesdays. Extra practice at home is required. Fee is $35. First session started Sept. 1 and will end Oct. 20. Remaining sessions are from Oct. 27 to Dec. 15, Jan. 5 to Feb. 23 and March 2 to April 20.

Women can swim all through the winter if they enroll in the city's swimming class that meets from 10 to 11 a.m. on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at the Alamo YMCA. The program includes land flexibility exercises, water exercises and swimming instructions. The first session runs from Sept. 13 to Dec. 21 and is $12. The second is scheduled for Jan. 10 through May 19 and is $15.

A women's keep-fit class that consists of walking and/or jogging and exercising has started and will continue through Dec. 22. It meets at 1:30 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and 9 a.m. Friday in the city gym, 300 Baldwin. Second session goes from Jan. 3 through April 29. Fee is $11 per session.

Jazzercise classes will continue to meet from 6:15 to 7 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday and from 9 to 9:45 a.m. Saturday in the gym. No pre-registration is necessary and fee is $2 per visit.

A baton class will start Monday and continue through Oct. 13. Meeting time is 5:20 to 6:15 p.m. in the city gym. Fee is $8.

The Midland Women's Tennis Association will begin play on Monday. Registration will continue as long as there are openings. It meets once a week for doubles play at Midland College. Membership is $7 per year. For further information call Dana Chandler at 694-0532 or Brookie Green, 694-2847.

For persons needing lessons, adult tennis classes are scheduled to meet at Midland College. The first session starts Monday and will meet Monday and Wednesday for 10 lessons. Class time for beginning and intermediate students is 1:30 p.m. Fee is $11.

Men's and women's volleyball meets from 7 to 10 p.m. on Tuesdays in the city gym. Men's and women's basketball teams play from 7 to 10 p.m. Thursdays in the gym.

Mad Dog Rugby for adults practices Tuesday night in Ulmer Park. For more information call Jeff Noel, 682-0625, or Kyle Large, 697-2266.

The Midland Adult Soccer league will be playing games on Sunday starting Sept. 19 at Hogan Park. There are 224 persons registered, making 14 teams. There are two divisions, one coed and the other men's.

The Midland Soccer Association is designed for youths and the first game will be played Sept. 18 at the Soccer Complex in Hogan Park. To date, 1,138 persons have registered.

Midland Softball Association will continue playing this fall with 78 teams (60 men, 18 women). Further information can be obtained from Tori Baca, 694-0882.

Men's flag football teams will start the season Monday with games to be played at Simon's Field in Hogan Park.

Other features from the Parks and Recreation Department include a fall run on Oct. 20 and a Christmas tree lighting ceremony on Dec. 3 in the Downtown Park.

Canoes for Wadley-Barron Park are available for rent to organized groups on a reservation basis. Fee is $2.50 per hour or $10 per day.

Further information on the recreation programs can be obtained by calling the city office at 683-4281, extension 281.

Precinct allowed to have its bingo

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Although Pasadena voted against legalizing bingo for charity, that "no" vote does not affect a justice of the peace precinct vote that legalized bingo in certain portions of the city, Secretary of State David Dean said Wednesday.

Justice of the Peace Precinct 2, Harris County, overlaps portions of Pasadena, with the majority of the precinct lying outside the city, Dean said.

Prisoners' payments real thing

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Prisoners released on probation must pay their debt to society in cash, two judges have said.

Probationers who were arrested in Jefferson County because of information gathered through two Crime Stoppers programs will have to repay the rewards that led to their indictments, said State District Judges Larry Gist and Leonard Giblin.

The two judges also are requiring people convicted of selling narcotics to undercover officers to repay money the officers spent to buy the drugs.

Conservatives lose in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ignoring personal appeals from President Reagan, the Senate has handed conservatives a defeat in their efforts to enact anti-abortion legislation this year.

The conservatives, led by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., fell 19 votes short Thursday of the 60 votes needed to cut short a legal filibuster, now in its eighth day. Forty-one senators voted to limit debate to 100 hours; 47 voted no.

The outcome had been predicted. But the size of the margin indicated that liberals will block upcoming votes on the anti-abortion legislation drafted by Helms.

Senate sources said Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., will probably schedule three more cloture, or debate-limiting, votes through next Wednesday and then move the Senate on to other issues.

The Helms abortion measure includes a non-binding congressional finding that the Supreme Court was mistaken in 1973 when it legalized most abortions.

It would also permanently ban direct or indirect federal payments for abortions and declare that human life begins at conception.

Another provision calls for expedited consideration by the Supreme Court of any new abortion cases.

Opponents say the Helms measure is an unconstitutional threat to the independence of the federal courts.

"This amendment is an attempt to reverse the Supreme Court by statute rather than constitutional amendment," said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

Additional attempts to close off the filibuster were scheduled for next week, along with a vote on a second anti-abortion measure proposed by Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

The constitutional amendment would split authority for regulating or prohibiting abortion between the Congress and the state legislatures. It is unlikely to attract the two-thirds vote needed to send a constitutional amendment to the states for ratification.

A few hours before the vote, Reagan telephoned half a dozen wavering senators, asking them to vote to limit debate. Nonetheless, such Republican stalwarts as John Tower of Texas, John Warner of Virginia and Assistant Senate Majority Leader Ted Stevens of Alaska voted with the liberals.

It was not known specifically who Reagan called, but his personal lobbying effort appeared to have little effect.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan, "wants it understood he is very serious about the abortion issue and he would like to get it to a vote in the Senate and have this matter go forward."

On Wednesday, Reagan sent letters to nine wavering senators urging them to vote to limit debate and to support the Helms bill.

Packwood said Reagan's newly-activated interest in the abortion debate and other social issues pushed by conservatives is damaging to the Republican Party because women, minorities and union members who otherwise support the president will no longer vote for GOP candidates.

"There is a gradual decline, and when you start to go downhill a little at a time...before you know it you are a permanent minority," he said.

Packwood said many of the conservative opponents of abortion are opposed to "equal rights for women and minorities."

"I don't think the president believes their conclusions, but he listens to them," Packwood said.

The abortion measure and a school prayer amendment are attached to "must pass" legislation extending the federal debt limit.

Reagan campaigns for Utah's Hatch

OGDEN, Utah AP) — President Reagan, testing his personal appeal in statewide political races, is trying to use his influence to help return a conservative Republican to the Senate.

The president is campaigning today for Sen. Orrin Hatch, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, on the final stop of a two-day tour to Kansas and Utah.

The trip marks the start of Reagan's stepped-up political travel schedule before the November elections.

The president is attending what is being billed as "an old-fashioned picnic," sponsored by the Utah Republican Party later today. Free tickets were distributed, and about 5,000 people were expected to gather in a town park near this city, about 30 miles north of Salt Lake City.

Before the picnic, Reagan was to visit a cannery run by the Mormon Church in an attempt to call attention to his support for church- and community-run self-help programs.

The cannery complex includes a milk processing plant, store house and an employment center that claims to have served 200,000 people in 1981. It is part of the church's vast welfare system run almost entirely by volunteers.

Although Reagan is in Utah on Hatch's behalf, the senator said Thursday evening he would miss the day's events because he would return to Washington for the anticipated vote in the Senate on the president's veto of a $14.2 billion supplemental appropriations bill.

The House voted to override the veto Thursday, and the vote is expected to be close in the Senate. Hatch said he was making the trip back to Washington at the president's request. Reagan, Hatch said, "felt it was crucial that I go back."

The White House is portraying Hatch's race against Democrat Ted Wilson, mayor of Salt Lake City, as a difficult contest. A paper prepared by White House political adviser Ed Rollins says Wilson is posing a "powerful challenge" to Hatch, 48, a Republican first elected in 1976.

But the Rollins document also states, without giving sources, that one poll showed Hatch with a 56 percent to 38 percent lead in August, and that the president has a 70 percent approval rating in Utah.

In addition, Hatch has, according to the White House, raised $1.5 million to Wilson's $500,000. But the White House anticipates that the Democrat could still get money from labor organizations, where his support is considered strong.

Bob Neuman, a spokesman for the Democratic National Committee, said, "Wilson's running as hard as he can, but it is uphill. Hatch has got a lot of dough, but he is running scared, which is what he ought to do." Neuman characterized the race as a "toughy."

Two killed as van hits bus

CASTAIC, Calif. (AP) — A van on the wrong side of the road collided with a Greyhound bus during a violent rainstorm Thursday, killing at least two people in the truck and injuring at least 20, officials said.

Kanyr said the van, moving southbound in heavy rain on a steep grade on Interstate 5, ended up on the northbound side of the center divider. The van was towing a boat.

Two people in the van, a 27-year-old man and a 23-year-old woman whose names were not immediately released, were ejected in the collision and were killed., Kanyr said. A third person in the van, also unidentified, was hospitalized.

The injured were taken to hospitals in Newhall and Mission Hills, said Los Angeles County Fire Department spokesman Charles Gibson.

The accident occurred at 3:07 p.m., about two hours after the storm began, Danyr said.

The bus, on a scheduled run from San Bernardino to San Francisco, carried "about 39" passengers, said Greyhound spokeswoman Dorothy Lorent.

Ms. Lorent said the bus, making local stops, left San Bernardino at 11:15 a.m and was due to arrive in San Francisco at 11:30 p.m.

Thirty-two people were taken to Holy Cross Hospital in Mission Hills, where two were reported in stable condition and the others were "walking around," said hospital spokeswoman Bobbi Pope.

Diana Pinto, a spokeswoman at Henry Mayo Hospital in Newhall, said that of four people brought in, one was listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit and the other three were described in "good-to-fair" condition.

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Congress fails to act, Interior Secretary James Watt could issue oil and gas leases in wilderness areas in 24 states in 1983, a conservation group contends.

The Wilderness Society said Congress needs to block the potential leasing before it adjourns next month. If no action is taken, there could be a mad scramble to get leases issued before a Dec. 31, 1983, deadline, it said.

After a furor raised from earlier leases, Watt agreed to a leasing moratorium until Congress adjourns to give lawmakers a chance to settle the issue. However, he has indicated he will resume wilderness leasing if Congress fails to act.

Under current law, wilderness areas can be leased for oil and gas drilling until Dec. 31, 1983. The House has passed a bill that would block any further leases immediately, but Senate passage before Congress adjourns in a month is less certain.

The society, in a survey of regional offices of the U.S. Forest Service, found that 171 wilderness areas and wilderness study areas could be opened for leasing, based on timetables established for processing the lease applications. The society said this would cover nearly half the wilderness areas in national forests.

The areas which could be leased stretch from Florida to Washington state and include such well-known locations as California's Big Sur and wilderness outside of Yellowstone National Park, Wyo., the society said.

"If the Senate fails to act or fatally cripples the House bill with amendments, Interior Secretary Watt will have a free hand to make good his threat to start leasing the nation's wilderness," Wilderness Society Chairman Gaylord Nelson said Thursday.

While recommendations on whether to lease in a particular wilderness are made by the Forest Service, an agency of the Agriculture Department, the actual leases are issued by Watt. As a rule, the Interior Department has followed Forest Service recommendations.

Interior Department spokesman Harman Kallman said the society's predictions were a "worst case scenario" based on the assumption that all pending lease applications will be approved.

"It is unfair for anybody to assume that a certain number of leases will be issued before the review is finished," Kallman said.

According to the survey, wilderness areas and study lands where leases could be issued are located in the states of Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 205 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (TM) of Holliston, MA 01746 increased $149 million to $223.8 billion for the week ending September 8, 1982.

The funds' 7-day average yield declined slightly, from 9.93 percent to 9.86 percent. The funds' 30-day average yield fell to 10.45 percent from 10.87 percent.

Publisher William E. Donoghue says, "The economy is not in good enough condition to sustain current low interest rates. If the average maturity figure continues to decline, it will mean that fund portfolio managers expect short-term interest rates to rise. Now is not the time to lock in today's low yields. Do not buy bank six-month money market certificates, rather, stay liquid in money funds."

Occidental's takeover of Cities Service begins Friday

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. today set in motion its $4.2 billion takeover of Cities Service Co., a merger that will place it in the top ranks of American oil power.

The Los Angeles-based oil company sent word to its bank in Newark, N.J., that Occidental formally accepted for payment 34.4 million Cities Service shares.

Occidental was free to begin buying the shares at midnight Thursday, but spokesman Phillip Wallach said today the company would hold off on actually mailing checks to the stockholders until it had an exact count on the shares tendered.

Once the checks are sent, Occidental will have clinched the biggest merger of oil companies in the history of U.S. industry.

Occidental also said today that it estimated 3.6 million Cities Service shares had been withdrawn since last Saturday, when the tally of shares tendered stood at 74.8 million. Thursday midnight was the deadline for shares to be withdrawn.

Because more shares were tendered than Occidental agreed to buy for cash, Cities Service shareholders will receive cash for only a portion of their holdings. The exact proration figure will not be known until Occidental gets a precise count on the number of shares guaranteed for delivery as of midnight Thursday.

Under terms of the merger agreement, Occidental would acquire the Cities Service shares not paid for in cash by exchanging a package of securities and notes. The value of that second step is estimated at $2.26 billion.

Occidental said earlier this week the Federal Trade Commission, which reviewed the proposal for possible antitrust implications, had told Occidental it would not challenge the merger.

The $4.2 billion price tag makes the Occidental-Cities Service marriage the biggest involving two oil companies, and it ranks third on the list of mergers of all types. The biggest was the $7.8 billion that chemical giant Du Pont paid for Conoco Inc., and the second largest was U.S. Steel Corp.'s $6.2 billion takeover of Marathon Oil Co.

In absorbing Cities Service, Occidental will become the country's 12th-largest industrial concern and the eighth-largest oil company. The two companies' 1981 combined revenues of $23.3 billion place it just behind General Electric Co. on the Fortune 500 list of industrial concerns.

Occidental and Cities Service will not actually be merged until shareholders of both companies vote to approve it. Special meetings of both shareholder groups will be announced soon, Occidental spokesman Phillip Wallach said.

The merger will end an unusual chronicle for Cities Service, which had furiously fought off an attempt earlier this year by Mesa Petroleum Corp. of Amarillo, Texas, to gain control of it. Cities Service's solution to that dilemma was to get Gulf Oil Corp.'s signature on a merger accord. But on Aug. 6, Gulf backed out of the deal, citing antitrust complications.

That set Cities Service management scrambling between the company's Tulsa, Okla., headquarters and the offices of its New York financial advisors in search of a new merger partner.

Occidental was the solution, but Cities Service at first turned down an Occidental offer that was worth about $3.8 billion in cash and securities. After some wrangling, the two companies agreed on the higher price at an emergency meeting of Cities Service directors on Aug. 25.

In addition to taking over Cities Service's interests in chemicals, copper and natural gas transmission, Occidental will make its first entry into the business of refining and selling petroleum products. Cities Service operates a network of about 6,000 gasoline outlets under the name Citgo.

Some industry analysts believe Occidental will sell some of those assets, and perhaps some of its own, to help reduce the debt associated with the merger.

Besides oil and gas, Occidental is involved in the coal, minerals, chemicals and agribusiness industries. Last year it bought Iowa Beefprocessors Inc. for $800 million in stock.

Businesses cut 1982 spending plans

By The Associated Press

With sales slowed by the recession, businesses have cut further into their 1982 spending plans and now expect to spend 4.4 percent less on expansion and modernization than they did last year, a government survey says.

The decline, adjusted for inflation, would be the first since the 1975 recession.

Just three months ago, executives estimated a 2.4 percent drop in real spending on plants and equipment this year. The new survey, released Thursday by the Commerce Department, seemed to indicate that businesses are being pinched even harder on sales and profits this summer.

The new decline included plans by manufacturers to cut real capital spending 6.6 percent below last year. Other businesses plan a 3.1 percent decline.

The figures won't be welcomed by the Reagan administration, whose campaign to cut taxes for business were aimed at stimulating business investment.

Putting the best face on the new spending figures, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the expected decline "is notably smaller" than the 11.5 percent actual decline during the 1975 recession.

Baldrige said last year's tax bill was a major factor in keeping the decline as low as now estimated, and he noted that the latest survey was taken before the recent decline in interest rates.

In other economic developments Thursday:

—The five major U.S. auto manufacturers reported that the number of workers on indefinite layoff rose slightly to 220,195 this week, reflecting increased furloughs at General Motors Corp. and Chrysler Corp.

—Ward's Automotive Reports, a trade journal, reported U.S. car production will be down 9.8 percent this week from last week's level because the work week was shortened by the Labor Day holiday. Ward's said output would fall to 86,546 cars from 97,091 last week.

—The price of gold swung widely, plunging from its opening of $515 an ounce in Hong Kong to a late bid of $445 an ounce at Republic National Bank in New York. Dealers said the volatility stemmed from rumors, later denied, of new financial crises in West Germany and Bolivia.

—Creditors of the asbestos-producing Manville Corp. of Denver, which faces more then 16,500 lawsuits from people with health problems blamed on asbestos, said the company's recent bankrupcy motion may spread to other asbestos companies unless the federal government moves to limit such lawsuits. Manville, the nation's largest asbestos manufacturer with $2 billion in sales last year, filed for reorganization, saying the legal settlements could force it out of business.

Mexico's poor reach breaking point

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — The elderly widow, shriveled and weary, can't remember her last meal with meat. A mother of three college-age sons works for a few sacks of groceries. A man carrying an old food sack worries that Mexico's crumbling economy will break the poor.

Reeling from Mexico's 100 percent inflation and three peso devaluations in five months, Tijuana's impoverished masses have reached a breaking point.

"People can take just so much," said 60-year-old Gordden Cordoba, his thread-bare food sack slung over his shoulder. "We are resilient, but there is a limit."

Tijuana, a magnet to poor Mexicans because it borders California, has a population of 1 million, many poor and living in shacks. The population is double what it was five years ago.

Hard times have become a way of life, and as Mexico struggles with its worst recession in 70 years, the effects here are devastating.

Located on a trash-strewn street close to downtown Tijuana, the tiny mission sustains 150 families a week and supplies 1,000 meals a day to the down and out.

"I can't tell you how much it hurt to see this," Sister Armida, administrator of Casa de las Pobres, said Thursday.

The charity institution has been hard pressed to meet the growing numbers of hungry.

"If we opened the doors, we wouldn't have enough to feed all those who want in," the nun said, in tones of resignation.

Donations are few and the budget is strained by the eroding peso, she said as the aroma of bean soup, rice and stew drifted from the mission kitchen.

"Food costs are up 50 percent. We try to serve balanced meals, but it is difficult. There is no milk to buy and meat prices are terribly high," she said.

The Mexican economy is bottoming out after a period of unparalleled prosperity. The oil boom has stopped; industry development projects have stalled. The government owes foreign banks billions of dollars and has issued currency control regulations in an attempt to control the flow of dollars in and out of the country.

To cut expenses the government withdrew subsidies, doubling the prices of gasoline, electricity and basic foods such as tortillas.

Thousands of workers have been laid off. Unemployment affects 40 percent of the working-age population.

Tijuana is marked by stark contrasts between rich and poor. Million-dollar homes overlook miles of multi-tiered shanties that line dusty roads. Many of the shanties lack insulation or running water.

"The injustices won't end," Manuel Medina, 72, leaning on his cane, said. "The rich will only get richer and the poor will get poorer."

Maria Nicanor, 63, trudges a mile each day through gullies and rocky, unpaved streets to work at the mission. For payment, the mother of three sons receives three sacks of groceries.

"She says it has helped her save pennies for her sons' education," Sister Armida said.

"Some days we eat, some days we don't," said Trinidad Angeles, a widow who picked up her weekly ration Thursday. It included 1½ pounds of beans, some bread, fruit and vegetables.

"Everything is so high I can't afford anything any more. Even the pri% of water has almost doubled," she said.

Asked if she hd rXceived any meat, she wearily shook her head. "Beans and chilies, that's a luxury," she said.

"We are all worried. But we accept whatever God brings. As long as he doesn't forget us," she added softly.

Sister Armida confessed she fears the future.

Braniff's proposal angers workers

DALLAS (AP) — Braniff Airways Corp.'s proposal to terminate its former employees' pension plans has angered workers, who say they feel abandoned by a company for which they made great sacrifices.

"A lot of us had enough years to retire but stayed on to help the company," said Lila Evans, a data processor. "We didn't get our overtime, we didn't get back pay, we took that 10 percent pay cut, we have no insurance, no sick leave, and now they're trying to get out of the pension.

"I'm 58. I'm willing to start over, but no one will hire me."

Braniff proposed on Aug. 20 that it be allowed to terminate its pension plans. The airline ceased operations on May 12 and sought protection from creditors under federal bankruptcy laws the next day. The company is trying to reorganize so it can resume operations.

If Braniff terminates its retirement fund, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. would take them over, and payments to retirees would be "substantially reduced," PBGC spokesman Pete Kirsch said.

The PBGC is a quasi-governmental agency that insures private pension funds. It held a public hearing Thursday, and about 150 people came to the often-emotional meeting.

Meanwhile, in Fort Worth on Thursday, Braniff won 35 more days to file its reorganization plan with U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers, who originally gave the airline until today to file the statement.

Braniff had asked for 60 days, but Flowers said the document must be in his hands by Oct. 15. After that, any creditor or other interested party can file a reorganization plan, which can include a recommendation that the airline be liquidated under Chapter 7 bankruptcy regulations.

At the pension hearing, Mrs. Evans said, "I've been through the deaths of my loved ones, divorce, and two wars as a Navy wife, but trying to get out of paying my pension is just about the last straw."

Matt Wells, a lawyer for the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, which represented most of Braniff's employees, drew prolonged applause when he attacked Braniff for pleading poverty in order to delay making payments into its pension plans in 1980 and 1981.

"Without letting the union know, Braniff sought waiver of certain payments into the pension fund, saying they were too poor to pay," Wells said.

"That same year they paid a $4 million dividend to stockholders and $800,000 to (former Braniff president) Harding Lawrence. And after he left, they made a contract with him that has a present value of $9 million. That was renegotiated so that he now gets $300,000 a year for life," Wells said.

Braniff President Howard Putnam told the hearing he understood why retired employees were upset, but said Lawrence's stipend also would be cut, although he didn't know how much.

Putnam said it was "sad" that the retirement funds were in trouble, and "we know how much it's hurting people ..."

Edwin M. Jones, executive director of the PBGC, told the audience the hearing was called to get community reaction to the proposal to terminate the plans.

Steelers come to aid of steelworkers

PITTSBURGH — Steel was such a symbol of strength and durability that a football team was named for it. Now steel's in trouble, and the Pittsburgh Steelers want to help.

The gridiron players say they'll sell a tire-sealant to benefit jobless steelworkers, under a program announced Thursday by Pittsburgh Steelers owner Art Rooney Sr. and the United Steelworkers union.

Steelers and laid-off workers will stand shoulder to shoulder for two days selling tire sealants to benefit union food banks.

Performance Automotive Supplies, a local company that sells the sealant, is donating 40 percent of the profits, about $8 per sale, to the food banks set up for steelworkers and their families, company president Raymond Deed said at the news conference.

"We are deeply appreciative for the kind of help that we're getting because our members certainly need it in the worst way," said Leon Lynch, USW vice president.

The union hopes to raise $25,000 from the sales Oct. 23 and Oct. 24, he said.

Rooney and USW President Lloyd McBride, in a joint statement, called the program "an unprecedented effort to help thousands of people in western Pennsylvania who have lost their jobs because of the virtual depression" in steel.

"It sounds kind of hokey, but as a gesture, we just wanted to help the steelworkers," said Deed, who usually markets the sealant to companies that own trucks. The sealant protects against punctures.

Proceeds will be presented to the USW during halftime of the Steelers-Cleveland Browns game Oct. 24. The funds will be distributed to the food banks based on the number of their participants, said USW spokesman Russ Gibbons.

Midlander Bob Birth examines an intricately fashioned letter "Y," filled with neon gas and glowing red, like all neon does unless treated with a few drops of mercury, which produces a blue hue. Other neon colors are achieved with tinted glass. The letter will soon be part of a sign at a Midland fast food outlet.

While fluorescent lamps illuminate an office building or shopping mall, neon lights pulse outside the windows of a gangster-infested flop house.

Painted signs convey data, label property, offer directions. Neon signs exude information, as electric current trickles through glass tubing elegantly contorted to form "The Dew Drop Inn," "Eat" or "Rooms."

Glittering Las Vegas and Reno "strips" aside, the glow of neon signs is waning. Just as pool halls bow to video game parlors, neon and glass yield to plastic and metal.

But in a dusty back shop on Midland's south side, Bob Birth still sculpts neon signs — heating and twisting, blowing, bending — perpetuating a flickering, but not yet extinguished, glass-working craft.

On a corner work table, as natural- gas flames hissed behind him, Birth spread snapshots of his more memorable neon creations from the 1950s. A cowboy astride a bucking bronc that once beckoned travelers to Big Spring's Westward Ho Motel with a wave of his hat. The Bellvue Motel-Cafe sign still perched on an oil derrick in Stanton. A dancing girl, sporting a lei and hiked skirt, that swayed atop Midland's Samoa Club.

WHEN HE'S NOT golfing or enjoying his monthly two-week sojourns to the mountains near Cloudcroft, N.M., Birth still gets 15 to 20 hours of neon work weekly from two Midland sign companies. But signs like the Conestoga wagon pulled by a team of four oxen he crafted for the Frontier Lodge in Big Spring seem no longer in demand.

Much of his work involves repairing existing neon signs, or fashioning neon tubes to illuminate the inside of plastic lettering.

"That's what most of the neon today does, is go behind plastic," said Birth. "There used to be a lot of neon around here, but they've all been taken down."

Saturday, Birth smoothly worked a few five-eighths inch glass pipes into a "C" shape for a local auto dealership, his blue eyes peering through half-moon spectacles as he heated and twirled the tubes.

While sign letters may never match the allure and mystique of a Westward Ho cowboy's six-shooter and saddle, the intricate and fragile beauty of neon sign glass blowing was evident in his efforts.

WORKING FROM A pattern drawn on asbestos paper and spread across the table, Birth first used a concentrated flame to graft glass-encased electrodes to the tube ends.

With a blow tube attached to one end of the glass pipe, he moved to a wider flame, heated larger portions of the tube, and began bending the glass with the asbestos pattern and his mind's eye as a guide. Birth created the letter in two sections, attaching a small tube to each section in order to remove the air from inside the pieces later. As the hot glass threatened to collapse, a puff on the blow tube returned the pipe to its original shape.

Glass bending accomplished, Birth used a vacuum pump to delete air from inside the tubes. With the vacuum complete, he gingerly attached clips to the electrodes on each arm of the letter and threw an electric switch. "Bombarding the tube," about five minutes worth of a 20,000-volt jolt, helped destroy moisture and dust inside the "C."

Once the pieces cooled, about 7mm of neon gas was injected and the small tubes were then sealed. With the clips attached and current flowing, a bright, crimson "C" flickered to life.

Birth, 59, explained that neon gas glows red unless treated with a few drops of mercury, which produces a blue hue. Other colors, like green and amber, are achieved with tinted glass tubes.

BIRTH, WHO claims an almost lifelong interest in sign making, is the second youngest of eight children. He developed a healthy respect, but little affection, for husbandry while watching and helping his father, Royal Birth, wrestle a living from the stubborn soil near Edmond in central Oklahoma.

"If you ever worked daylight to dark on one of them (a farm), you'd never want to go back," he said.

He served three years on a tactical transport ship as a Navy signalman during World War II, directing war's traffic. He was married to Leota while home on leave in 1944.

From 1946 to 1949, he labored in the potash mines near Carlsbad, N.M., and "hung around" sign shops in his spare time. After three tours of a picket line during a 1949 labor strike, "I was ready to make a change." A friend who owned a sign shop suggested Birth enroll at a school for neon sign makers in Denton.

Following six months of right-angle bends and singed fingers in 1950, "I knew enough to hold down a job, but that was about it." During the same period, Birth learned other sign-making skills doing sheet metal work for Consolidated Aircraft.

STOPS IN SNYDER and Big Spring preceded Birth's arrival in Midland in 1952. After working for another sign maker for about a year, Birth started his own company in 1953 in a plumber's dirt-floored workshop at 1400 Cottonflat Road.

Although he planned to retire after he sold his company about two years ago to Permian Sign Co., Birth thought better of early retirement and found his skills were still in demand.

"I wasn't going to work at all, but they couldn't get anybody else to do the work," he said. "There's nobody learning this trade anymore. I guess that's why they can't get anybody to do it. I probably never will completely retire or quit working, unless I go blind or something."

Although Permian Sign Co. quickly outgrew Birth's shop and recently moved into its new building next door, Birth still labors in the solitude of the old workshop.

"I like to work over here where it's quiet," he said. "There's always a bunch of clanging and banging going on" in the new building.

"I've got it just like I want it, work a little and play a little," said Birth. Chuckling, he quickly corrected himself. "Play a lot. Work a little and play a lot."

"PLAY" FROM April to October includes the monthly treks to Cloudcroft, where the Births drink rainwater and keep a wood stove working steadily amid the brisk mountain air.

"It's kind of rustic, I guess you could call it. But it's sure a good place to go to get out of the heat."

Birth regularly enjoys a round of golf with any of a dozen golfing buddies. "I'm pretty good for just a hacker," said Birth. "We just go out there to be together and get that good exercise."

He recalled a few people who showed some interest in learning his trade. But after he showed them some basic skills, "they always give up."

Birth's two sons — Jim, 26, and Robert, 23 — chose other careers, one in computers and the other in electronics.

"I never did care too much about the sign painting. I just did it because I had to.

"I'd still rather blow glass," he said. "I definitely think they're prettier than these plastic, don't you?"

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE

The 1982 football season is only one game old, but the Midland High Bulldogs are probably grateful to be returning to their home field against Andrews instead of facing the perils of the road so soon after their recent debacle on the Texas highways between Midland and Lubbock. The score on that trip was 2-0. That is, Texas Highways 2, Midland Independent School District buses 0.

The Bulldogs had barely gotten out of town Friday afternoon when the bus they were riding in broke down and left them stranded along the highway. Defensive coach Tim Smith went back to town to get a new bus but by the time he returned everybody had already left. Cheerleaders coming behind the bus, parents, other assorted fans and even non-fans had stopped to either give up their vehicle or run a taxi service to Lubbock's Lowery Field.

"When we started our pre-game warmups we had only 15 players on the field and Coach (Bernie) Hagins and myself," said MHS head coach Pat Culpepper. "Pete Ragus (the Lubbock athletic director) said that if I suited up he'd call the UIL."

ACCORDING TO Culpepper, "people that weren't even Midland High fans were giving a hand. They heard about it on their CB radios and stopped by. I don't know where they were going before they stopped, but they ended up in Lubbock and a lot of them stayed to watch the game."

Instead of arriving as a group well before the Monterey game as is the usual custom of football teams, the Midland High players came in by the car load until five minutes remained before the kickoff when the final two boys showed up on the field."

Smith finally arrived with a new bus, not much before the opening kickoff, so the players had transportation home, but that bus didn't work very well either. It chugged along at a 20-25 mph pace and eventually returned to the Tall City. It was 3 a.m., but it made it.

PUTTING THE mechanical problems behind them, along with the 17-2 defeat they suffered, Culpepper's Bulldogs have been preparing for Andrews, a 4A school that has plagued them the past couple of years, largely on the strength of Van Pearcy (two years ago) and Keith Brooks (last season). While Culpepper is confident that his "Junk Yard Dawgs" defense is ready for the Mustangs, he does have a few questions about his offense which was lack-luster, to say the most, against Monterey.

"On offense we need a drastic change and not just with our varsity," said Culpepper. "The only touchdown we scored, varsity, junior varsity or sophomore last week, was when Dennis Cano caught a pass (in the JV game), got knocked out of a pile of players by their (Pecos) defense and went in for a touchdown."

And that lack of offense from his varsity has him puzzled because seven of the players are playing two ways and from the defensive standpoint, their intensity is extremely high.

"I don't feel this is a one-sided game," said Culpepper. "We have the same kids on defense that are on the offense, but they don't play the same. The problem must be in the coaching, we must be doing something wrong. I don't believe when a team changes sides that it also changes personality."

WHILE CULPEPPER sees problems with his offense, Andrews coach Bill Shipman saw some things from the Midland-Monterey game films that really impressed him and as a result he thinks "it will be a very good game between two somewhat similar teams. They don't have the size that they've had in the past, but they have a lot of quickness.

"I was impressed with the way they ran their offense, with plays like the sprint-out pass (quarterback Mark Page to Chuck Dickenson seven times for 76 yards) and the way they run the sweep, their sprint-out game. They're a good bunch of kids and they deserved a better fate than what happened to them against Monterey."

He also liked the Junk Yard Dawgs, saying, "They played defense real well. It's a good sound defense and one that is adaptable from year to year. Other than what we're doing (5-2-3 with a floating monster), I like that defense better than anything."

Of course he's talking about the eight-man line which will be out to stop the Wing T that Andrews runs, which is an offense they know well since it is also the style of attack the Bulldogs use.

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — Learning how to accept defeat is as much a part of being a professional boxer as is winning. Thursday night here at the Civic Center, Midland bantamweight Richard Abila received that lesson as he suffered the first loss in his eight fight career.

Throughout the 10-round bout against Harold Petty, who improved his record to 12-2 with the unanimous decision victory, Abila was constantly receiving punches but not returning enough to effectively impress the judges as all three scorecards were fairly one-sided. Referee Dickie Cole and judge James "Pat" Paterson each scored it 100-89 and judge Ronnie Walter had it 99-94, using the 10-point must system.

PART OF the reason for the loss could be contributed to the southpaw style of Petty and part if it could be from a posible broken nose that Abila suffered in the second round. But the remaining parts must go to Petty who maintained control of the fight by consistently backing Abila into the ropes and keeping him there.

"I was pleased with my performance," said a relatively unmarked Petty after the fight. "I think I did evrything I wanted to do. I thought Richard fought a tough fight, but I was too strong for him and I think he was surprised that I was as quick as I was."

Abila echoed Petty's statement about Petty's being quick, saying, "Harold is a good fighter and I learned a lesson from him tonight. I can learn from losing too. I couldn't get off like I wanted too. I had a problem with him being left-handed and he was much quicker than I expected him to be."

PETTY'S EXPERIENCE in the ring proved to be one of the biggest factors in the fight. Every time Abila mounted a threat or seemed to be gaining control in a round, Petty would back off or cover-up until he weathered the storm and then go right back at Abila.

You could tell the difference by their appearance after the fight. Approximately 20 minutes after the decision was announced, Abila was still trying to stop the bleeding from his nose, holding ice wrapped in a towel and sitting over a bucket in his dressing room. His left eye was slightly swollen and the coloring looked like you see on athletes who dab on eye-black before a game to help stop sun glare. His left cheek was also bruised and swollen and there was a cut on the inside of his lower lip.

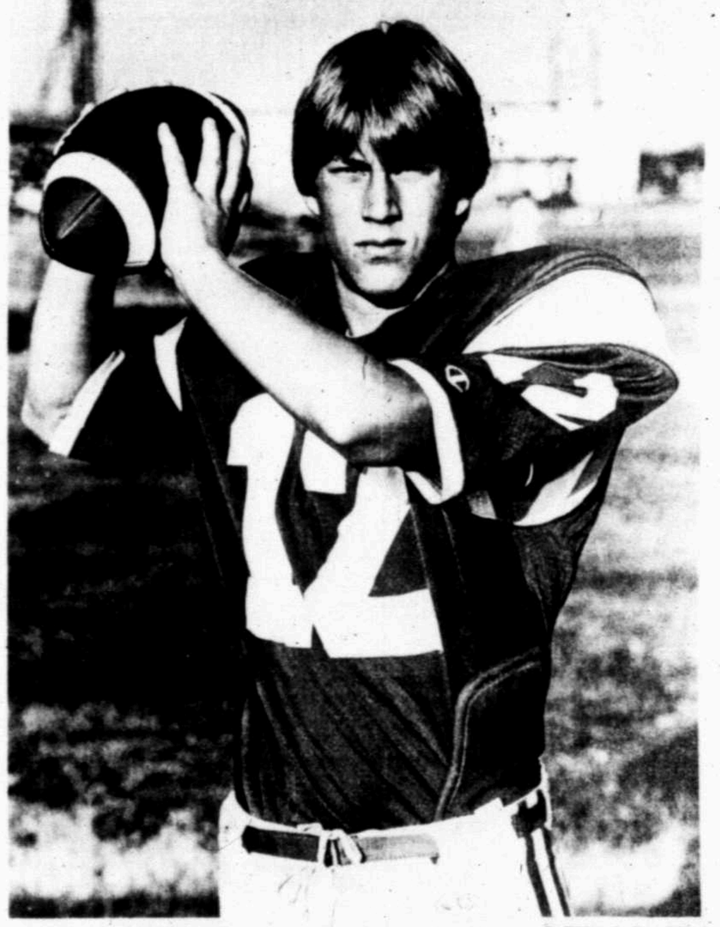

THOUGH HE was hit often Abila claimed "he never hit me so hard that I saw stars, there was nothing like that. I was standing in there trying to prove to people and myself that I can take a punch."

Indeed, he did prove he had the ability to take a punch, but in looking back at the fight, he and one of his trainers, Sammy Martinez, agreed that he wasn't quite ready for a fighter like Petty.

"He jumped from an eight-round to a 10-round fight with nothing in between," said Martinez, "He should have had some other fights with lesser opponents before facing Petty."

"I'm still young. I shouldn't rush myself like that," said Abila.

"Richard had nothing to be ashamed of," said Petty, "He did all that he could do. He shouldn't let one fight get him down. I had to pay my dues (referring to his two back-to-back losses to highly rated bantamweight Richard Sandoval) and Richard had to pay his too. He shouldn't get down. He's a good fighter."

One of the bright spots offensively for Midland High Friday night against Lubbock Monterey was quarterback Mark Page, who completed 8-of-15 passes with only one interception for 95 yards. His favorite receiver in the game was tight end Chuck Dickenson, who hauled in seven receptions for 75 yards.

NFL owners shun lockout, but strike seems closer

NEW YORK (AP) — Though the league's chief negotiator says "the handwriting is on the wall" for a players' strike, and two teams are threatening walkouts, National Football League club owners are standing by their pledge not to implement a lockout.

With the start of the NFL season just two days away and the Baltimore Colts and Seattle Seahawk players saying they are prepared to stage job actions over the release of their union representatives, the executive committee of the NFL Management Council Thursday reaffirmed its previous decision not to lock out the players.

Jack Donlan, the executive director of the Management Council, said that the owners were chagrined that union boss Ed Garvey and the NFL Players Association had rejected their latest offer on a new collective bargaining contract.

"They (the owners) were very disappointed at the arrogance of the union leadership," said Donlan of the six members of the executive committee. "The owners are very disappointed at the reaction of the players. They thought they had given a very significant and expensive proposal, over $600 million in new money and there was discussion that they might have made a mistake in maybe withdrawing their opportunity to have a lockout.

"Garvey said two years ago we would have a strike. He has not responded to any offer that we have made, he didn't show up even to take a look at the (new) proposal. He said he's going to have a strike and then he rejects mediation. I think the handwriting is on the wall."

Players Association leadership was not taking a hard line regarding the possibility of a strike this Sunday, when all NFL teams except Pittsburgh and Dallas — who play Monday Night — get started. In fact, they were not pushing for any strike action this weekend.

"Our executive committee last night (Wednesday), in a conference call, decided they were not going to call selective strikes, that there was not going to be any action taken during the first weekend," Frank Woschitz, press spokesman for the union, said from Washington. "We are trying to hold off the teams (Seattle and Baltimore). We've told them, 'When we strike, if we strike, we'll do it together.'"

The waiving of the teams' player representatives, Sam McCullum of the Seahawks and Herb Orvis of the Colts, triggered strike threats.

The union filed an unfair labor practice charge with the National Labor Relations Board over the cutting of Orvis and McCullum and was awaiting a decision, which was expected today.

McCullum was one of Seattle's final cuts when the Seahawks pared their roster to the mandatory 49-player limit on Monday. He was claimed by the Minnesota Vikings, but instead of joining them, McCullum declared himself a free agent.

Seahawks want McCullum reinstated

The team's 54 members have made that clear by affixing their names to a petition calling for the "immediate reinstatement" of McCullum.

The former player representative of the Seahawks was released Tuesday and he has claimed he was cut because of his NFL Players Association activities.

Second half rally saves No. 1 Panthers

PITTSBURGH (AP) — It appeared that Pitt's number was up — at least its number one college football ranking.

And while he didn't put together the kind of numbers he's accustomed to, senior quarterback Dan Marino directed a third-quarter touchdown drive that gave the top-rated Panthers a nationally televised 7-6 victory over the fifth-ranked Tar Heels Thursday night.

"We played on national TV and we won," said Marino, who threw an uncharacteristic four interceptions. "I didn't play well, but I'm not down at all. I'm happy we won."

MARINO'S 4-YARD touchdown pass to running back Bryan Thomas midway through the quarter ended a 69-yard drive — the Panthers' only sustained drive of the night. Included were Marino completions of 19 yards to Dwight Collins and 15 yards to Thomas.

But Marino, despite completing 15 of 28 attempts, threw for just 125 yards. It was the first time that Marino, who passed for nearly 2,900 yards last season, has thrown for less than 200 yards since the final game of his sophomore season.

"It wasn't very pretty, was it?" said rookie Pitt Coach Foge Fazio, who replaced Jackie Sherrill. "It was a game of field position, and I didn't want it to happen that way. We wanted to get the lead early."

It looked like Pitt might be the next victim of the jinx that has plagued No. 1 ranked teams since last season.

Six teams were beaten almost immediately after being top-ranked a season ago — including Pitt, which was unbeaten and top rated until being stomped by Penn State 48-14 in its final regular season game.

PITTSBURGH HELD North Carolina's own Heisman Trophy candidate, running back Kelvin Bryant to 58 yards on 16 carries. And he was on the sidelines with a twisted ankle late in the game when North Carolina drove to the Pitt 21-yard line before stalling and settling for a 48-yard field goal by Rob Rogers.

"I'm disappointed, but we're not down," Bryant said. "We'll just have to come back next week and do better."

North Carolina Coach Dick Crum said his Tar Heels "had a chance to win," but were consistently crippled by penalties.

North Carolina was whistled for 15 penalties for 133 yards and Pitt drew 13 penalties for 97 yards.

"You have to take advantage of all opportunities against a team the calibre of Pittsburgh," Crum said. "Their defense played well and our defense played as well. And when you can hold a team of Pitt's explosiveness to seven points, you've done a good night's job."

Three intriguing matchups on Saturday have No. 3 Nebraska playing host to Iowa, No. 4 Alabama at Georgia Tech and No. 12 Michigan entertaining Wisconsin. Those three ranked teams all lost their openers last season — to the same unranked squads they open with this year.

"We felt our camp was a little too easy last year, so this camp has been tougher," Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler said. "The practices have been very hard and very tough, but we're hanging in there."

Georgia, which opened with a 13-7 victory over 1981 national champion Clemson on Labor Day, has another tough challenge Saturday against Brigham Young. The high-powered Cougars blanked Nevada-Las Vegas 27-0 in their opener.

No. 2 Washington begins play against Texas-El Paso, a perennial tailender in the Western Athletic Conference. UTEP did win its opener last year, though, 20-17 over New Mexico State.

NO. 7 Penn State, fresh off a 31-14 whipping of Temple, is at home against Maryland, with its new head coach, Bobby Ross. Eighth-ranked Southern Methodist and its new head man, Bobby Collins, is at home against Tulane, which was beaten 30-21 by Mississippi State last Saturday. No. 9 Oklahoma entertains West Virginia and 10th-rated Southern California debuts at No. 11 Florida. The Gators come off an exciting 17-14 victory over archrival Miami, Fla.

Drillers capture TL crown

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Dan Murphy's double in the eighth inning drove home the winning run as the Tulsa Drillers won the Texas League championship with a 4-3 victory over the El Paso Diablos here Thursday night.

The victory gave the Drillers a 3-0 sweep of the best-of-five series with the Diablos.

Tommy Dunbar singled in the eighth, moved to second on a sacrifice fly and scored on Murphy's double to give the Drillers a 4-2 lead.

DUNBAR scored two runs for the Drillers. Dave Stockstill had three hits in four plate appearances for Tulsa and teammate Shake Moore had two hits in five trips to the plate.

Steve Michael drove in two runs for El Paso and Eric Payton had two hits in five trips to the plate for the Diablos.

Al Lachowicz, who was 12-8 in the regular season, was the winning pitcher. Jamie Cocanower, who was 4-1 in regular season action, was the loser.

Benedict's slam routs LA

By The Associated Press

But Thursday night made up for a lot of frustration.

Given the start against Los Angeles on a "hunch" by Manager Joe Torre, Benedict blasted a grand slam home run to help the first-place Braves take a big 10-3 decision and move 1½ games over the Dodgers in the National League West race.

"He gave us the offense tonight that got us over the hump," Torre said of Benedict. "(Starting him) was a gut feeling. Bruce has had pretty good success against Fernando (Valenzuela)."

Benedict's homer keyed an Atlanta power burst that also included homers by Bob Horner and Glenn Hubbard off Valenzuela, 17-12. Benedict's second grand slam of his career and his third homer this season came in the sixth, when Atlanta jumped ahead 8-2.

Horner's first-inning homer, his 30th, came with Claudell Washington on first via a single. Hubbard hit his ninth homer leading off the second.

"It's a great feeling when you can come in a game and make a contribution," Benedict said. "Sure, it's disappointing not to be playing all the time, but you've got to be ready when you get a chance.

Giants 5, Astros 1

Dave Bergman cracked four hits, including a solo homer in the seventh, and scored three times as San Francisco beat Houston.

Bergman singled in the fifth and eventually scored the Giants' first run on a single by winning pitcher Renie Martin, 6-8. Bergman led off the seventh with his second homer of the season, off loser Mike LaCoss, 4-6. He also had singles in the second and ninth innings.

"It's nice to get four hits against anyone, I suppose, but it's a little sweeter to do it against a team you once played for," said Bergman, who played for the Astros from 1978-1981.

Padres 4, Reds 1

Tim Lollar and Luis DeLeon combined on a five-hitter and Joe Lefebvre drove in two runs as San Diego handed Cincinnati its sixth straight defeat.

Lollar, 14-8, allowed five hits and walked none while striking out four in seven innings. DeLeon pitched two innings of perfect ball to notch his 13th save.

Indians 3, Orioles 0

Ron Hassey's seventh-inning, two-run double snapped a scoreless tie and John Denny and Bud Anderson teamed up on a two-hitter as the Cleveland Indians blanked the Baltimore Orioles 3-0.

Yankees 5, Brewers 4

Wright, Reeves are back

(AP) — Rookie quarterback Ron Reeves has been re-signed by the Houston Oilers and placed on the team's inactive roster while Brad Wright, another quarterback, is back with the Dallas Cowboys.

Wright, a former New Mexico and Midland Lee standout, now gives the Cowboys four quarterbacks. It is not known if the Cowboys plan to place one on the inactive roster or if a trade is in the works. Wright was cut from the Cowboys Monday when the team trimmed its roster to 49 players.

Linebacker Gregg Bingham and safety Vernon Perry also were placed on the inactive list prior to Sunday season opener against Cincinnati.

Bingham suffered a broken hip bone in a pre-season game against Tampa Bay and will miss his first regular season start in 10 years. Perry is recovering from a broken shoulder blade.

Stonewall Brigade keeps on rolling

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The Lee junior varsity bullied their way to a 31-0 win over Fort Stockton's JV while the Lee Sophomores crushed the Andrews JV, 35-6. Last week the Lee JV handled the San Angelo Lake View JV, 33-6.

Panther JV coach Noel Franco admitted his team looked terrible against Lee and he attributed some of the blame to their 21-6 victory over Presidio's varsity squad last week.

"Last week we beat Presidio and I think we had a case of the big heads," Franco said. "We needed this type of game to get prepared for district."

IT SEEMS that the "No Name" tag is being worn with pride at Lee and when asked if there were any standouts in the victory over the Panthers, Quimby said, "No, we just played together as a team tonight. We're all nothing but a bunch of no names."

Quimby had the luxury of using three quarterbacks and seven running backs in the game. And, according to Quimby's analysis, they all performed well.

The defense played up to the team's namesake, the Stonewall Brigade, as they limited Fort Stockton's offense to 162 yards in the game.

APPROPRIATELY ENOUGH it was the defense that put the first points on the scoreboard.

With a first-and-10 on the nine-yard line, Panther quarterback Van Watson was driven deep into the endzone on a quarterback keeper and fumbled as he was being tackled. Rob Walker got the touchdown honors as he pounced on the errant ball for Lee.

Following the kickoff, the Panthers had a new quarterback in Luis Sanchez. But Walker and teammate John Bick showed no mercy on the new field general as they sandwiched Sanchez on his first play from scrimmage, causing him to cough up the ball, which Lee recovered on the Panther 28 yard line.

ON FIRST down, Junior Nickelson took a handoff over left tackle, stepped to the outside and scampered down the sideline for another TD. In exactly two offensive plays, and 40 seconds, the score went from 0-0 to 14-0.

Nickleson scored Lee's next touchdown on a two-yard run with 2:51 left in the half. That short plunge capped an impressive drive that began on the Rebel three-yard line.

The highlight of the 97-yard march was a simple misdirection play that saw an up-the-middle hand off given to fullback Scott Hicks for 40 yards.

THE PANTHERS started the second half much like they played the first, they fumbled the kickoff. Lee recovered and five plays later Danny Smedley, the second quarterback, ran the option to perfection as he faked the pitchout and scored on a nine-yard run around right end.

The Lee sophomores got TD runs of 50 and 12 yards from Walter Jones in its victory over Andrews and led 28-0 at the half. Tyrone Thurman socred from 25 yards out and Willie Walker had a 15-yard TD run also. Randy Ellis scored from one yard out. Craig Kamradt kicked four extra points and John Wurster also had an extra point kick. Andrews scored in the fourth period on a 30-yard pass play after trailing 35-0.

Bucks are close to getting Cowens

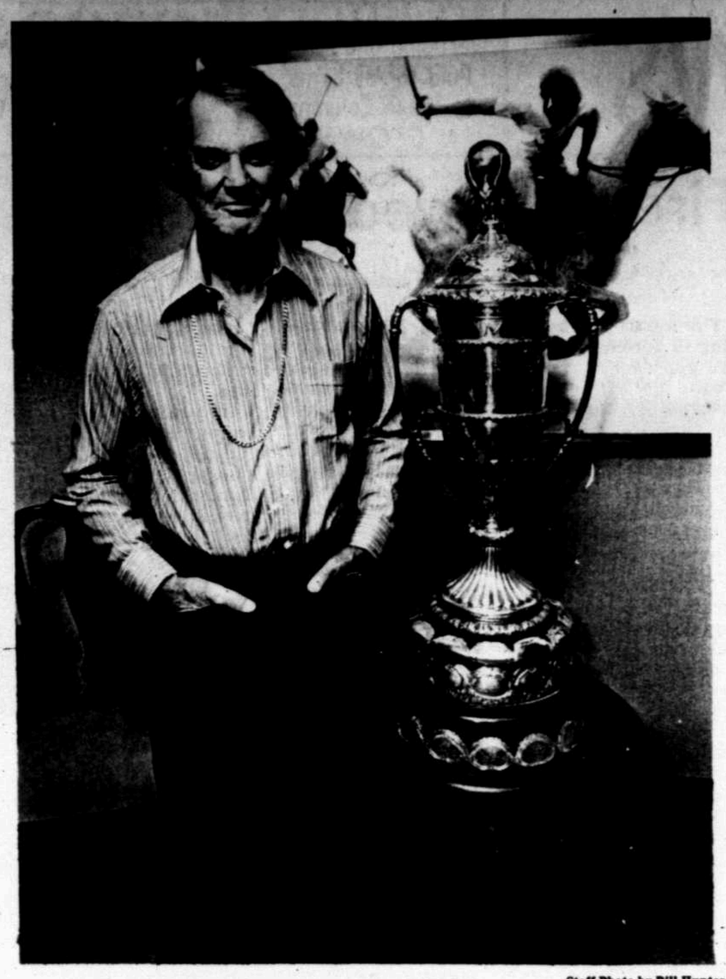

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The National Basketball Association league office may be all that stands in the way of the Milwaukee Bucks' acquisition center Dave Cowens from the Boston Celtics.

The Bucks, the NBA Eastern Conference rival of the Celtics, expect to wrap up a deal today for Cowens, who "retired" from basketball in 1980. In exchange for the 6-foot-8 center, Boston would get six-year veteran guard Quinn Buckner, 28. Milwaukee would also have to iron out a contract with Cowens, although Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson said that may not be a big problem.

"It is pretty much a take-it-or-leave-it situation," Nelson said Thursday of his talks with the Celtics. "Nothing can be official until Friday morning when we talk to the league office."

Midland's William B. Wilson displays the trophy his Wilson Ranch team recently won after taking the Pacific Open Polo Tournament in California. Wilson Ranch became the first team to win the West Coast series, which included the Pacific Open, Mayor's Cup and Copa de Argentina titles. The trophy is so large that it had to be sent to Midland in parts.

Sneed, Archer top Boston golf field

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Ed Sneed is beginning to like the Bank of Boston Golf Classic. That always wasn't the case though.

Despite the absense of most of the PGA glamor boys, and the year's top money winners, the touring pros took dead aim on Pleasant Valley Country Club's 7,119-yard, par 71 course Thursday with Sneed and George Archer sharing the opening-round lead Thursday in the 72-hole, $300,000 event.

BY THE time the 156 starters had finished, and began to think of the 36-hole cut to the low 70s and ties, the scoreboard looked like this:

Archer, one month shy of his 43rd birthday and winner of $1.25 million despite a tournament victory drought dating to 1976, and Sneed, 38, who snapped a five-year winless streak last May in Houston, were tied at 5-under par 66.

Sneed, who regained his tour exemption with the Houston victory, was "extremely happy shooting a 66 here," where he failed to make the 36-hole cut in 1977 and '78.

"I made the cut last year, though, shooting a 66 in the final round," he said. "That kind of left a good taste in my mouth. I had a better feeling coming back here, a more positive feeling."

One stroke back at 67 were 1981 USC All-American and U.S. Walker Cup player Ron Commans, veteran Bob Gilder, a two-time tournament champion and the eighth leading money winner this year, and John Fought, the 1977 U.S. Amateur champion and 1979 PGA Rookie of the Year.

Fifteen players, including defending champion Jack Renner, former U.S. Open champ David Graham and ex-Masters champion Fuzzy Zoeller, were bunched another stroke back at 69.

Wayne Levi, the 1980 Pleasant Valley champion, was among 15 tied at 70. Still another 16 players were deadlocked at regulation 71, including former Pleasant Valley winners Lou Graham, John Mahaffey, Dave Stockton and Victor Regalado.

"I KNOW there are many more good players than there were 10 or 12 years ago, but I think lower scores are more the result of better fairways," Sneed said. "As for myself, last year was the worst since 1973 for me. I finished something like 92nd and lost my exemption."

Archer, who saved par with a 50-foot chip shot after all kinds of trouble starting with a drive into woods on his next to last hole, said, "To shoot a good round you sometimes have to get lucky and save some pars."

"This has been a very unusual year for me," he said. "I've been off to a ton of good starts, then shot a ton of 79s on Sundays, exactly the opposite of last year. In a way I'm kind of glad I didn't shoot 65 today. I shot 65 in the first round here in 1965, and it was wiped out by heavy rain. I wouldn't want that to happen again."

Jimmy Connors feels game is peaking

NEW YORK (AP) — Jimmy Connors thinks his game is peaking at the U.S. Open Tennis Championships and it couldn't come at a better time for the three-time champion now that the tournament is heading into its final stages.

Connors advanced to the Open semifinals for the ninth consecutive year Thursday with an easy 6-1, 6-3, 6-4 victory over amateur Rodney Harmon and was joined there by Argentina's Guillermo Vilas, who eliminated Tom Gullikson, 6-2, 6-1, 6-3.

Those two will meet Saturday, while defending champion and top-seeded John McEnroe meets No.3 seed Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in the other semi.

The womens' semis were held today with No.7 Pam Shriver, conquerer of top-seeded Martina Navatilova, meeting No.5 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia and No.4 Andrea Jaeger going against five-time champion Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded second.

The first title of the two-week tournament was settled Thursday when Kevin Curren of South Africa and Steve Denton rallied to defeat Victor Amaya and Hank Pfister 6-2, 6-7 (4-7), 5-7, 6-2, 6-4 for the men's doubles crown.

Connors did a workmanlike job on Harmon, the Southern Methodist undergraduate who came into this tournament as a wild card entry, ranked 221 by the ATP computer. He dropped the first game of the match to Harmon's service but then raced through the next six, capturing the first set in 22 minutes.

"I think he started off nervous," said Connors, who won this tournament in 1974, 1976, and 1978. "He's big a—rong — serves and covers the net very well. It was tough to go to the top or around him, so I started hitting through him. I hit a few good ones and maybe that made him a little tentative to come in."

Harmon toughened in the final set when he fought off double match point oJnnors' serve to force a ninth game, and then avoided another point to win that one and keep the set going to a 10th game. But eventually, he ran out of shots and surrendered the set and the match.

Connors said he felt his level of play was progressing according to plan.

"It's bad for me to come into a tournament playing my best tennis because then I have no other level to go to," he said. "Here, I've been looking at it match by match to the point where now I'm playing better tennis than when I started.

"I start pumping up just a little bit more each round. I haven't gone berserk yet, but it's coming. It could come at any time."

This is a different Connors than the one who won this tournament for the first time eight years ago. At 30, he seems more mature and has a different outlook.

"When I was younger, I came in steamrolling and I went out steamrolling," he said. "Now I bide my time. A lot of things don't bother me now like they did six, eight, ten years ago."

Will we know when Connors reaches that old berserk level?

"Oh sure," he said. "It builds inside of me before it hits. You'll see it, though. If I'm back there banging my head on the fence, that's it."

By The Associated Press

The fate of the Detroit Lions, New York Giants and Buffalo Bills — three teams considered prime National Football League playoff contenders — may hinge on their star running backs. At least the Lions know where theirs is.

As the NFL regular season opens Sunday — barring a players' strike over the lack of a collective bargaining contract with the league — the Giants and Bills — both wild-card playoff teams last year — will be without the men their running attack are built around. New York's Rob Carpenter and Buffalo's Joe Cribbs are holding out for renegotiated contracts.

While the Giants will have to make do against Atlanta with rookies Butch Woolfolk and Joe Morris in place of Carpenter and the Bills search for a replacement for Cribbs against Kansas City, the Lions are all smiles now that Billy Sims is back in town.

Sims also was holding out but, after missing the entire preseason, he reported to the team earlier this week and is expected to start Sunday against the Chicago Bears.

"Sunday should be OK," said Sims. "I know the running game fairly well. I don't know all the pass plays yet."

Sims returned following a private meeting Tuesday with club owner William Clay Ford. Sims said Ford assured him the Lions would negotiate the fourth, or option, year of his contract as soon as possible.

"I think I achieved something (with the holdout)," Sims said. "I was well pleased with my conversation with Mr. Ford."

"It took a lot on Billy's part to come back," said Lions Coach Monte Clark. "I think it took a lot of loyalty. It shows what kind of man Billy is."

The Lions will be operating with a new set of kickers. After punter Tom Skladany and placekicker Eddie Murray walked out of camp, Detroit signed punter John James and placekicker Bob Thomas, then suspended Skladany and Murray.

Elsewhere Sunday, it will be Houston at Cincinnati; St.Louis at New Orleans; Tampa Bay at Minnesota; Washington at Philadelphia; the Los Angeles Rams vs. Green Bay at Milwaukee; New England at Baltimore; Miami at the New York Jets; Cleveland at Seattle; San Diego at Denver, and the Los Angeles Raiders at San Francisco.

On Monday, Pittsburgh is at Dallas.

Of course, the weekend schedule could be disrupted if the Colts and Seahawks go through with their walkouts to protest the release of their player representatives — Baltimore's Herb Orvis and Seattle's Sam McCullum.

One of the more interesting matchups Sunday involves the Raiders and 49ers. The defending Super Bowl champion 49ers have added even more pass-catching power to their already potent array with tight end Russ Francis and wide receiver Renaldo Nehemiah, the world-record high hurdler. Their opponents are their former Bay Area rivals, the Raiders, who moved to Los Angeles this season after a protracted court battle with the NFL.

The NFL's two worst teams last season, the Patriots and Colts, square off in Baltimore. The Colts only two victories last year came in the opening and closing games of the season — both against New England. Frank Kush will make his debut as Colts head coach and Ron Meyer does likewise for New England.

Display your true colors ..

George Leach, owner of Imperial Service Center, would like for everyone in the Permian Basin to show their true colors — by flying a flag. "I'd like to see people flying their company flag or school flag," he says, "but most of all, I think it would be wonderful to see the American flag waving outside of each home."

If you don't have a flag, don't worry. Imperial Service Company either has one just right for you, or can order it for you. According to Leach, flag sales have been on the increase in the Permian Basin this year. He attributes this to a revival of patriotism.

The most popular American flag models for home use are his standard kit, available for only $18.00 and his deluxe kit, which has embroidered stars and an eagle pole ornament for $35.90. Poles are available for displaying other flags along with the American flag, and with the eagle ornament cost $4.75.

Leach, the West Texas distributer for Annin & Co., flagmakers to the world since 1847, can custom order any flag a person may want and has a complete stock of flags and accessories to help you show your colors. Included are wood and metal flagpoles and accessories, floor stands, wall brackets, lawn sockets, parade spears, carrying belts and gloves, and automobile flag staffs.

Lease has several sizes of required marine flags, as well as personal bow pennants for your boat. Standard golf course flags in several colors and red "danger" flags are also stocked.

Imperial Service Center has miniature flag display sets which are of interest to collectors. Included are nations of the world, the fifty states, U.S. historical flag sets and many other combinations. Bunting by the yard is also available.

Steel halyards and steel-core rope is stocked. Leach says these are a deterent to vandalism to outdoors displays.

For the individual, religious or academic institutions, or a corporation desiring a custom flag, Imperial Service Center and Annin & Co. will work together to design something you will be proud to display.

Leach has a free brochure for any adult who visits his shop which explains flag etiquette. This brochure will answer your questions about proper display, care and handling of the American flag.

There are many uses for flags, and a long history behind them. Some of the ways flags are used today are custom-designed flags to fly on your building or on a rig, advertising banners, parade flags and banners. Club emblems or company trademarks can be accurately reproduced, often from a simple sketch. Special order flags are ideal for corporate gifts, banquet souvenirs, conventions and industrial shows.

Annin & Co. produce custom crafted banners and wallhangings from modest podium banners to enormous textile hangings for shopping malls and sports arenas. Their work is guaranteed to keep pace with the most imaginative designers.

Imperial Service Center, 1601 S. Main, is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. They are closed on Saturday.

In addition to the various flag items, Leach also has Stow engineered construction equipment for the contractor who wants to save money; Ascor metal buildings sold wholesale; western and Harlequin romance paper-back books at 30 cents each; all-occasion cards, 25 cents each; jumper cables, heavy duty industrial hand trucks and Thorogood Job-Fitted work shoes and boots.

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — A $1.5 million Islamic Cultural Center, a replica of the Dome of the Rock Mosque, is expected to be completed here next summer, its president, Rauf Diab, says.

"It's already put Arizona on a very high profile internationally," Diab said, adding that Middle East newspapers have reported on the project.

The 8,000-square-foot mosque in downtown Tempe will house apartments, classrooms and a retail area with shops, restaurants and a travel agency.

"It's like a compound," Diab said. "As we modernized, the mosque became just a place of prayer. We are going back to an old concept of being self-sustaining. That way, we won't have to keep going back to the congregation for donations."

The retail stores will pay for utility bills and maintenance costs, he said.

The idea came from Diab's father, Dr. Jamil Diab; Abdur-Rahim Shahsidden of the Phoenix mosque; and Saudi Arabian Air Force Maj. Suliman Ali Al-Shaye.

Hotel offers extra security — bomb shelter

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — The 245-room Kyoto Century Hotel, which opened last year to cater mainly to tourists, has an added service for its guests and several thousand others — a nuclear bomb shelter.

The only large-scale nuclear bomb shelter in Japan, it is a two-story underground chamber that could house 3,000 people for several weeks if Kyoto came under a nuclear attack.

The 56,000-square-foot shelter is used now for more peaceful purposes, primarily as an underground parking lot. What would be the "strategy room" in the event of a nuclear attack is a wedding chapel, and space that would become a hospital ward now serves as a kimono-changing room for wedding parties.

The shelter is the idea of Koichi Uemura, a Tokyo civil engineer and former Construction Ministry employee, who believes Japan should have more of them. He is planning an even bigger project, a sprawling locker room under a golf course near Tokyo that, in the event of nuclear war, will shelter 5,000 people for a month.

The hotel's guarantee of patron comfort, even in nuclear war, has gained widespread attention in Japan, which has no civil defense program despite being the only nation ever to suffer atomic attack.

"We don't believe war is about to break out," said Kazuo Kutami, planning manager at the hotel. "But a hotel is built to last at least 100 years, and who knows what will happen in the distant future."

Already in place are lead and asbestos doors, thick concrete walls designed to withstand radiation and poisonous gasses, and air conditioners that can cool air that gets as hot as 392 degrees Fahrenheit.

Kutami said it would take several months to make the shelter fully operable — sealing entrances, supplementing air filter systems and bringing in beds, food and medicine.

He said no decision has been made on who would use the shelter, but top priority might go to guests, hotel employees and their families, and local government leaders.

The Kyoto Century shelter and Japan's few other fallout shelters are part of a one-man crusade by Uemura, president of the Uemura Technical Research Laboratory whose main business is designing underground passageways.

He said it was a "message from God" which revealed to him the need to protect Japan from nuclear threat.

"If Buddha or Christ were alive today, I believe they would consider nuclear proliferation, and how to protect mankind from it, as the most urgent problem," he said.

Uemura, Japan's only fallout shelter designer, said about 20 shelters have been built or are now under construction, with 30 more in the planning stage. Almost all, he said, were bought by private individuals or companies.

Classroom boycott ends in Arkansas

SPARKMAN, Ark. (AP) — A 2½-week classroom boycott by black children after a stabbing death under the school football field bleachers has ended with an official agreeing to meet with angry parents.

About 200 black pupils had been kept from the public school since the Aug. 20 stabbing of a 12-year-old black child by a white classmate. Angry over a delay in contacting the victim's mother, parents had started sending their children to a "freedom school."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Four Americans bound for Southeast Asia say the "time is right" for Vietnamese and Laotian authorities to help account for 2,500 missing U.S. servicemen.

The contingent from the National League of POW-MIA Families left Wednesday for three days in Vientiane, Laos, and eight days in Hanoi.

'Rock of Israel' cracking under strain

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Israel has no official motto," notes historian David Vital. "But if it did, it would be, 'Never a dull moment.'" This article, the last of a three-part series, takes a look at internal debates and divisions troubling a tiny but never dull land.

By CHARLES J. HANLEY

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Rock of Israel has developed cracks — faults along religious, ethnic and economic lines that are changing the face and feel of this still-young nation.

In the emerging New Israel a deeply traditionalist religious establishment scrambles for more power, two ethnic strains of Jewry compete for pre-eminence, tens of thousands of Arabs labor as a new underclass, and tens of thousands of Israelis simply give up and head elsewhere.

The ordinary Israeli might dismiss this as intellectual "shlock" — he is too busy fighting the latest war against the Arabs outside and against inflation and his shrinking shekel at home.

But there is no doubt that social and economic forces are making over his 34-year-old homeland, transforming the Jewish state into something its pioneers might not recognize.

ETHNIC DIVISIONS

When Israel was founded in 1948, the Sephardic Jews — those from North African and Middle Eastern countries — made up only 15 percent of the Jewish population of 600,000. Now, after waves of immigration, they are 55 percent of the more than 3 million Jews.

But European-descended Jews, the Ashkenazim, remain economically, culturally and politically dominant. Although two-thirds of the primary school pupils are Sephardic, only 20 percent of the university students are. Social pressures and subtle discrimination have led some Sephardim to change their names to pass for Ashkenazic.

Their economic and educational prospects are gradually improving, but "the Sephardim do not have the access to power, the connections that will get them into top jobs in the army, the government, in industry, in commerce," said Shimon Shetreet, a Moroccan-born member of the central committee of Israel's opposition Labor Party.

The working-class Sephardim vote heavily for Prime Minister Menachem Begin's Likud bloc. Although Likud's right-of-center program is not geared to the disadvantaged and Begin himself is not Sephardic, his hard-line foreign policies appeal to the relatively hawkish Middle Eastern Jews.

RELIGIOUS DIVISIONS

Orthodox Jews, those who adhere strictly to their religion's often-demanding precepts, make up no more than one-quarter of Israel's Jewish population. But ever since 1948, when their support was crucial to the founding of Israel, the Orthodox rabbis have had disproportionate sway over Israeli political life.

Almost every government has needed the parliamentary support of the small religious parties in order to survive.

From the beginning, the rabbis imposed observance of the Saturday Jewish Sabbath, rejected the legitimacy of more liberal varieties of Judaism, and exercised considerable power over Israeli family life through the rabbinical courts.

"But until 10 or 15 years ago there was a 'live-and-let-live' sort of thing," a tacit understanding whereby non-religious Israelis could pursue their lives without interference, David Vital, a historian of Zionism at Tel Aviv University, explained.

SINCE BEGIN'S DEFEAT of the generally non-religious Labor Party in 1977, however, the Orthodox establishment has been making new demands.

It pushed through legislation restricting abortions and autopsies and proposed measures to bring Israeli life to a near-standstill on the Sabbath. In one celebrated case it forced the Israeli education minister to halt an archaeological dig by threatening him with religious ostracism. Orthodox Jews claimed the dig would disturb a medieval Jewish cemetery.

In the latest flare-up, the government acceded to demands by the Agudat Israel religious party to close down operations on the national airline El Al on Saturdays. The decision has set Jew against Jew. In one protest, airline workers, who say they may lose hundreds of jobs because of the Sabbath closure, prevented Orthodox Jews from boarding El Al flights.

"The popular acceptance of Israel's religious strictures is beginning to break down," Vital said, "Because the Orthodox are increasingly strident in their demands and the government has been making concessions."

ISRAEL'S ARABS

Israel's idealistic founders hoped to build a nation where the Jew would be self-sufficient. But Israelis are depending more and more on Arab labor to fill the bottom rung of their economy — both from among the 700,000 Arab residents of Israel and the estimated 70,000 Arabs from the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip who work in Israel. Additional Arab laborers may come across the newly pacified Lebanese border. Some Israelis worry that Begin's intention to somehow attach the West Bank and Gaza — and their 1.3 million Arabs — permanently to Israel will forever alter the Jewish landscape.

"If we annex the West Bank but don't give the Arabs rights, it's apartheid. But if we give them full citizenship, then we no longer have a Jewish state here," said Janet Aviad, a leader of the anti-Begin movement Peace Now.

The resulting Arab population, which has a birth rate of 43 per 1,000, almost twice the Jewish level, could quickly become a majority in Israel.

EMIGRATION

In this land that was to be a beacon for Jewish immigrants from around the world, the number of "olim" — newcomers — is now surpassed by the number of "yordim" — emigrants.

The number of immigrants this year is projected to be even lower than last year's 12,032, which was the lowest since 1953.

Officially, the number of emigrants from Israel stands at 15,000 a year. But unofficial estimates put it as high as 50,000. Those leaving have been discouraged by Israel's enduring economic problems, by the disruptions of mandatory military service and periodic wars, and by the claustrophobic feeling of a small nation shunned by its neighbors.

Demography ensures that Israel will be a different place in the future.

BECAUSE OF THEIR relatively low birth rate and high emigration rate, the Ashkenazic Jews who were Israel's pioneer stock, who turned the desert green, who revived the Hebrew language, who built the European-style institutions and cities, are giving way to Sephardic and ultra-religious Israelis — and to Arabs. The new Israel will be a more Middle Eastern Israel.

Inevitably, the gap will grow between Israelis and the Jews of the Diaspora — the worldwide Jewish dispersion since Babylonian times — especially the 6 million American Jews, says Arthur Hertzberg, an American rabbi and noted Jewish historian.

"Take 40 years of experience, five wars, a different region, a different language and culture, and counterpose that with 40 years of American suburbanization, and you know...there will be misunderstandings," Hertzberg said in an interview at his office at Hebrew University, where he is working this summer.

FUELED IN PART BY Begin's tough policies toward the Arabs and the occupied territories, a debate has intensified over the meaning of Zionism and Israel's role in the world.

Gershom Schocken, editor of the respected Israeli newspaper Haaretzan writes that Zionism has failed — its goal was to draw world Jewry into a single nation state, but only one in five Jews lives in Israel.

"The fact there are 3½ million Jews living in Israel today is something many Zionists would not have thought possible 40 or 30 years ago," said Shlomo Avineri, a political scientist at Hebrew University.

With all its blemishes, mistakes and frustrations, Hertzberg said, the existence of Israel means that "Jews no longer have the feeling of being protected only by the good will of others."

Horsemen regard company as world's finest bootmaker

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — When President Reagan needs a new pair of boots, he calls on Omaha's Dehner Co., regarded by many horsemen as one of the world's finest custom bootmakers.

Reagan, then living in Los Angeles, said he needed the boots for his part in the motion picture, "Black Stallion," in which he co-starred with Jane Wyman, his first wife.

Reagan's second order for dress riding boots was dated 18 years after the first order — in 1964 — when he was living in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

"Those are Dehner boots," said Ketzler, a third-generation member of the family that founded the company, studying one of the pictures. "I can tell they were made by us because of the toe construction."

They have been worn by generations of West Point graduates, a group that included Dwight Eisenhower and George Patton.

Senate votes today on budget veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, disappointed that the House overrode his veto of a $14.2 billion spending bill, is vowing to stand firm against any congressional "attempt to bust the budget."

"I promised to curb spending and maintain the national defense and I'm going to keep my promises," Reagan said Thursday after the House handed him his first major reversal on an economic measure.

The Senate was voting today on whether to override the veto. If two-thirds reject the veto, the money bill will become law. Otherwise, Reagan's veto will be sustained and a new bill will have to be written.

"I'm hopeful with regard to the Senate tomorrow," Reagan said Thursday night while traveling in Utah. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes predicted the Senate vote "will be very close."

IT WAS EXPECTED TO BE SO CLOSE that Sen. Orrin Hatch, on whose behalf Reagan was campaigning in Utah, was planning to return to Washington. Hatch described a conversation with Reagan in a hotel room Thursday night: "He said, 'Orrin, I'd really appreciate it if you'd go back,' and I said I'll be glad to," Hatch said.

Following the 301-117 House tally Thursday — 22 more than the necessary two-thirds — a surprised Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said the outcome in his chamber was "uncertain."

At least four Senate Republicans — including GOP Whip Ted Stevens of Alaska and Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon — have said they would support an override attempt if such a move passed the House.

However, it was unclear whether enough of the Senate's 54 Republicans would join with Democrats to form the two-thirds majority necessary for Congress to reject Reagan's veto. The Senate passed the bill on a voice vote Aug. 21.

In the House, 81 Republicans joined 220 Democrats in voting to override the veto, which House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., called a "dastardly political move by a man with a stone heart."

"I'M HOPEFUL WITH REGARD to the Senate tomorrow. However, I'm going to keep on doing what I said I would do, to veto anytime there is an attempt to bust the budget," Reagan said after the House vote.

"The big spenders won," he added.

"You just don't have 435 robots up here that are going to be in lock step," said Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., the top GOP member of the House Appropriations Committee and a leader of the override drive.

"Less than a month ago, I joined with the president in support of a tax bill," O'Neill told the House in a speech from the well of the chamber. "Today, I rise in opposition to the president because he has chosen to break that spirit of cooperation over the Congress' decision to fund jobs for the elderly, loans for students and education for the poor."

Arab leaders offer Israel peace in return for land

FEZ, Morocco (AP) — The Arab leaders have offered Israel the first peace settlement in its 34-year-history, provided the Jewish state withdraws from all occupied Arab territory and accepts a Palestinian state with its capital in East Jerusalem.

The offer, made Thursday at the end of a four-day Arab summit meeting, also demanded Israeli acceptance of the Palestine Liberation Organization as "sole legitimate representative" of the Palestinian people and the dismantlement of every Jewish settlement established in Arab territory since 1967.

A declaration published by the Arab leaders stopped short of making a specific commitment to any future mutual recognition between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

BUT IT CALLED ON the United Nations Security Council to guarantee "peace among all states of the region" — implicitly including Israel.

With the exception of Egypt, no Arab state has ever gone so far toward formally accepting the existence of the Jewish state, established in 1948. Egypt, the most populous Arab state, was expelled from the Arab League for signing a U.S.-sponsored peace treaty with Israel in 1979 and was not represented at the summit.

The only other absentee among the 22 Arab states was Libya, which boycotted the summit and denounced all talk of a peace settlement with Israel as a "betrayal of the Arab cause."

The Arab proposals were based largely on a peace plan put forward last year by Saudi Arabia's King Fahd, then crown prince. But the Arab leaders' secret debate on the issue was dominated by President Reagan's surprise peace initiative published a few days before the summit opened.

THE REAGAN PLAN WAS NOT officially on the summit agenda. Morocco's Minister of State Moulay Ahmed Alaoui said, however, that it showed an unprecedented new willingness on the part of the United States to consider a just solution of the Palestinian problem, and the Arab leaders decided to go as far as they could to respond to the American gesture.

Reagan urged the election of an "autonomous domestic authority" in the West Bank and Gaza Strip in association with Jordan. Israel seized the territories from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Alaoui pointed out that the summit did not reject the proposed links between the proposed Palestinian state and Jordan. PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, who received a hero's welcome when he arrived from his new headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia, also was reported willing to discuss the idea.

IMF says Argentina wants $36 billion from fund

TORONTO (AP) — Argentina's call for international help to meet its huge debt underscores the grave concern world economic leaders are voicing about a worsening international credit crisis.

The International Monetary Fund said Thursday that the South American country had asked for aid to ease an estimated $36 billion to $40 billion in foreign debts.

The announcement, by IMF Managing Director Jacques de Larosiere, came at the end of a week-long meetng of the World Bank and IMF that was attended by officials from 146 member nations. Mexico already is seeking up to $4.8 billion from the Fund to make payments on its $80 billion in debts to foreign governments and private banks, mainly in industrial countries.

The World Bank's chief concern during this week's talks was to arrange financing for its International Development Association, which makes long-term interest-free loans to the poorest countries.

The new arrangement will provide $7 billion over two years, but the U.S. share — $2 billon of the total — still has not been approved in Washington.

The most hotly debated issue at the conference was over how much in additional lending contributions the member nations should make to ensre that the IMF has enough money to lend through the remainder of the 1980s.

With the sole exception of the United States, the nations agreed there is an urgen need for a "substantial" increase in contributions to the Fund, which now has about $25 billion available for immediate lending.

U.S. officials argued instead for a smaller increase in lending along with the creation of a special emergency fund to handle economic crises that would upset the banking system.

Tom Jones entertains 4,300-plus fans at Chaparral Center in a concert which included singing, joking with the ladies and dancing his way across the stage and into the dreams of those who made it to the stage for a kiss. Jones sang songs recorded by others and those he recorded, including his newest single, "A Woman's Touch."

Comedian George Wallace warms up Tom Jones fans during Thursday's concert. Wallace, who has toured with Diana Ross and Earth, Wind and Fire, kept the audience laughing during his 40 minutes onstage, making fun of everything and everybody, including himself and some audience members who arrived late.

Tom Jones masterful singer, showman

A Review

A quick glance at the fans entering Chaparral Center Thursday night revealed they weren't the usual ones seen on most concert nights. Many of the ladies were dressed in their Sunday best, with their escorts wearing sports coats.

Possibly the gals dreamed of meeting the star. And some, the brave ones, the ones who were aggressive and fast enough to get past the uniformed officers at the front of the stage, made their dream come true. They got to not only talk with him, they also got a kiss...a long one.

But they weren't the only ones who enjoyed the show. Even those who weren't close enough to make a quick dash to the stage had a good time.

Some were his songs, which drew an immediate applause; some weren't. He delivered each in his well-known style, with his face and body in continuous action.

He made it look easy to sing while in constant motion; it isn't. And at 42, he still moves onstage as he always has — twisting, turning, jumping, rotating his hips (to the feminine applause), dancing across the stage and ending each number with a full bow, his fingers touching the stage. The man is in shape, and it showed.

In less than 10 minutes onstage, his shirt was drenched. He said, wiping his face, "My skin is leaking. Anybody have a hanky?"

Sandy didn't have a hanky, but she quickly scooted up to the stage waving her shirt (No it wasn't X-rated, she had one to spare.) Leaning down, Jones asked her, "Is your husband here?" Sandy was clearly not concerned with her husband at that point. Emphatically shaking her head no, she said, "He's not here." A long kiss followed.

The audience loved it. Perhaps it should be stated here, so that Sandy's reputation is not tarnished, that the women who made it to the stage had convenient memories when it came to husbands. He always asked them if they were married or not. When they seemed to not remember, he would look at their hands and ask them about the wedding ring they were wearing.

He bantered back and forth with the audience. When he heard a comment, he would stop and say, "What's that? You what?" Then he would repeat the comment to the audience. On a number of occasions, he would then ask, "Where are you?" And then add, "Come on up here."

He told her to come on up to the stage.

She had seen him in Las Vegas and still remembered the kiss. She also said, "I named my cat after you. Then the pet store called and said, 'Sorry, it's a female.' " To that, he replied, "I hope that doesn't happen to me."

He knew how to work the audience, which comments to pick up on and play with from the stage, and which ones to leave alone.

He also knew his audience. As he said in his opening comments following his first number, "Thank you. Thank you very much. Good evening ladies, thank you for coming, pause, "And thank you gentlemen, for bringing them here this evening."

But the men enjoyed the show too. Both shows — the one onstage and the one in the audience.

Also of note Thursday night was the opening act — comedian George Wallace. Wallace had the audience laughing the entire time he was onstage.

Those who arrived late drew special attention from Wallace. He had the light man put a spotlight on them so they could find their seats, chatting with them while they sat down. His jokes were fresh and it is to his credit that in a Republican stronghold, he got a lot of laughs on his Ronald Reagan jokes. But then, he picked on everyone, including himself and his family.

When the show drew to a close, Jones told the audience, "I have been singing ever since I was a little boy and the most important thing to me is to be onstage and sing my songs for you. I would like to thank each and every one of you for coming here this evening and making me feel good."

The comment was sincere. He's too relaxed onstage and has too much fun with the audience, to not be having a great time. And it shows.

Home mortgage rates start to drift downward

WASHINGTON (AP) — Record-high home mortgage interest rates are starting to drift downward, giving the financially strapped housing industry and frustrated potential homebuyers reason to expect better days ahead.

But industry officials, while heartened by a trend they hope spells the end to what they call an economic depression, caution against looking for any return to the relatively cheap housing of a decade ago.

"We're not even looking for a return to 12 percent or 10 percent money," said Hugh Graham, vice president for policy and forecasting of the National Association of Realtors.

IN FACT, Graham and other industry spokesmen said in recent interviews that both buyers and sellers are going to have to change their attitudes about how much a home mortgage should cost.

"We just have to get over thinking that a 14 percent interest rate is a very high rate," advised Mark Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association. "We used to think that about a 9 percent rate. People 10 years ago would have never thought that one day they'd be begging for a 14 percent interest rate."

Riedy also said homebuyers are going to have to discard the long-standing tenet that they commit only 25 percent of their income to housing.

"TODAY, 35 or 40 percent is not uncommon in terms of share of income going to housing," he said.

But with the average price of a new home about $73,600, even a mortgage at 14 percent still keeps tens of millions of American families priced out of the market. That means sellers have to offer to subsidize or buy down a percentage point or two of that interest rate if they want to sell their property.

"Sellers already know they have to provide that kicker," said Graham. "You just can't go out and put a house on the market and expect to sell it."

Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, said about 5 million existing homes, 250,000 new homes and 100,000 condominiums are up for sale nationwide today and with that kind of inventory sellers "are willing to make a lot of concessions."

SHORT-TERM interest rates, led by the prime rate banks charge their best corporate customers, have posted significant drops in recent months. Many economists attribute the decline to a combination of weak demand for money due to the ailing economy and the Federal Reserve Board's easier credit policy for its member banks.

Although long-term interest rates like those for mortgages don't respond directly to changes in short-term rates, the declines in the short-term market have begun filtering through, and mortgage rates have started falling from their record levels of a year ago.

The average rate private lenders were offering last month for new home purchases was still just over 17 percent, but that is down from the nearly 18.2 percent record level.

THE INTEREST RATE on federally backed loans for single-family homes stands at 14 percent, down from the record 17.5 percent of last fall. Those loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration account for about an eighth of the mortgage market.

Sumichrast said he believes the federally insured rate tends to set the pace for the conventional mortgage market and that its downward slide will pull private lenders' interest rates into the 14 percent range.

That kind of interest rate, augmented by seller subsidies, could put a long-term $60,000 mortgage in reach of families with incomes of $39,000 a year, Sumichrast said. At recent record rates, it took a $55,000 income to swing the same loan.

UNDER THAT situation, the number of American families financially able to afford a home would more than double to about 11 million, Sumichrast said.

"It isn't going to be a major improvement in sales, but at least we aren't going to go down further in the mudhole," he said.

To make home ownership possible for tens of millions of families as it has been in the past, interest rates will have to fall substantially below 14 percent. Industry officials said they don't see that happening any time soon.

"We could easily see mortgage interest rates down to the 14 percent range in the next year if short-term rates stay at the same level, but I don't think that's enough stimulus for a major recovery in the housing industry," said Bowers Espy of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

GENERAL UNCERTAINTY over the long-range outlook for the U.S. economy, heightened by the prospect for continued huge federal deficits, will blunt any more significant mortgage rate decline, he said.

In fact, most analysts see the decline in home loan interest rates ending in the next several months as the overall economy starts to recover somewhat. They even expect mortgage rates to edge upward again as demand for credit intensifies during that recovery.

Judges denies aliens asylum

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An immigration judge has denied political asylum to two Salvadoran refugees who fear they will be killed or politically persecuted if they are forced to return to El Salvador.

Judge Brian Simpson of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Court issued the decision Wednesday in the cases of Luis Escobar, 22, and Luis Sanchez, 30.

The decision will be appealed within 10 days to the Board of Immigration and Appeals in Washington D.C., according to Patty Blum, an attorney for the men.

August wholesale prices rose moderate 7.5 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices rose at a moderate annual rate of 7.5 percent in August, with food costs rising only slightly and energy price inflation slowing sharply, the government reported today.

In August alone, wholesale prices rose 0.6 percent, the same as in July.

Food prices "inched up" just 0.1 percent last month after falling 1.5 percent in July, the sharpest decline since 1976, the Labor Department said.

IF PRICES ROSE for 12 straight months at the August rate, the yearly gain would be 7.5 percent after seasonal adjustment, compared with the 7.1 percent recorded the previous month.

The variance in the annualized calculation results from Labor Department analysts basing such figures on more precise calculations of month-to-month changes than the monthly figures that are made public.

When even lower rates recorded earlier in the year are taken into account — including actual price declines in February, March and May — wholesale price inflation was running at an annual rate of just 3.7 percent for the first eight months of the year, far below the 7 percent for all of last year.

TODAY'S REPORT revised figures for two spring months, now estimating a 0.1 percent April rise rather than a similar drop, and a 0.1 percent May decline rather than a flat price record for that month.

Wholesale prices last rose at a 3.7 percent rate for an entire year in 1976 and have not approached that level since.

Detailing food prices changes, the department said prices rose after declining in July for fish, fresh fruits, pork and poultry. Price decreases were much smaller than a month earlier for beef and veal and for fresh and dried vegetables. Egg prices declined after rising in July and prices fell again in August for coffee, shortening and cooking oils.

WITHIN THE energy category, prices rose much less quickly for natural gas and actually fell slightly after rising rapidly in July for fuel oil.

Other details in today's report said wholesale prices for passenger cars jumped 2.4 percent after increasing just 0.3 percent in July.

Among other consumer goods, prices rose in August after falling the previous month for leather footwear, tires, sporting goods, household glassware and alcoholic beverages. Prices for both over-the-counter and prescription drugs rose faster than in July, and cosmetic prices continued to rise.

On the other hand, the report said, jewelry prices turned downward after rising in July, and prices for periodicals increased much less than they had a month earlier.

WHOLESALE PRICES for capital equipment — the machinery and transportation equipment used by business — rose slightly more than in July.

In all, the unadjusted Producer Price Index for finished goods — the formal name for the wholesale price measure — rose to 282.4 in August, meaning goods that cost $10 at wholesale in 1967 would have cost $28.24 last month.

Such wholesale prices — one merchandising step before the prices paid at retail — rose 7 percent for all of last year, well under the 11.8 percent of 1980. And economists say this year's rate will be even lower — perhaps about 5 percent.

REAGAN ADMINISTRATION officials often cite this year's encouraging figures as evidence of success for the president's economic policies.

Phony letter used to lure agent Wilson from Libya

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors concede that a bogus National Security Council letter was used in luring ex-CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson from Libya, but they contend the ruse does not undermine the legality of the arrest.

In a 114-page brief filed Thursday, federal prosecutors disputed claims by Wilson's attorneys that the phony letter made the arrest illegal and justified dropping charges that the former CIA agent aided Libyan terrorists.

The prosecutors said Wilson's arrest on June 15 was "entire%roper," although they conceded that Ernest Keiser, a private businessman who helped in the capture, had gone against their instructions and used the NSC's name in his meetings with Wilson.

The prosecutors said Keiser, "in his understandable zeal to assist us in recovering the fugitive Wilson, had made up on his own initiative and without our knowledge a letter purporting to be from the National Security Council and had shown it to Wilson" before the two left from Zurich, Switzerland, for the Dominican Republic.

In the Dominican Republic, Wilson was refused entry and put on a plane to New York, where he was arrested.

Wilson's attorneys have contended that the letter assured Wilson that he "would not be deported, arrested or extradited while in the Dominican Republic."

The prosecutors, who did not disclose the contents of the fake letter, said they were not even aware of its existence until after Wilson was in custody.

"While we would have preferred that Mr. Keiser follow the instructions we had given him with regard to eliminating discussions of the National Security Council, it was ... only because the ... Department of Justice was seeking to abide by a legally unnecessary, self-imposed code of conduct," the prosecutors said.

The prosecutors cited legal precedents in which courts had even approved the use of kidnapping to return fugitives to the United States.

The brief also detailed publicly for the first time the elaborate scheme that led to Wilson's arrest.

The prosecutors said that in late July 1981, they first met with Keiser and accepted his offer to help in apprehending Wilson, a former associate.

During the fall of 1981, Keiser contacted Wilson by telephone and claimed to have "certain connections with the National Security Council which might prove to be of some assistance to Mr. Wilson," the brief said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella Jr. and other prosecutors then told Keiser that they "did not wish him to utilize the aegis of the National Security Council in his dealings with Wilson," it said.

In a December 1981 meeting in London with two Wilson associates, Keiser said "he could provide sanctuary for Mr. Wilson in a Caribbean or South American country, probably the Dominican Republic," the prosecutors said.

In a January meeting in Tripoli, Libya, "Wilson indicated to Keiser that he wished to leave Libya because of increasing pressure in that country (and) would like to 'set up shop' in another country and possibly meet with representatives of the National Security Council," the brief said.

The prosecutors said that based on their continued objections to mentioning the NSC, Keiser advised Wilson on June 4 that "the National Security Council option was not viable."

Keiser then obtained airline tickets for Wilson to the Dominican Republic via Zurich, Switzerland, and Madrid, Spain, the brief said.

Wilson, traveling under a phony Irish passport, "voluntarily boarded a plane to Madrid in the company of Mr. Keiser and an official of the United States Marshal's Service acting in an undercover capacity, Philip Tucker."

The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 150 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value.
