Nurses face challenge

School nurses do more than dispense Band-Aids, handling many emotional and physical problems.

By ANDREA LAMB
Staff Writer

With AIDS and drug abuse rearing its ugly head in the school systems, school nurses have been thrust to the war front, not only battling these infestations, but informing students about them as well.

In the middle of Texas School Nurses Week this week, the school nurse's role in the fight for students' health has surfaced, illustrating that their jobs are not merely "to pass out Band-Aids," as Phyllis Cornelius, school nurse for Aikman and Bluebonnet elementary schools, said.

"Keeping kids healthy and keeping them in school is our job," said Cornelius. "That includes immunizations and information on proper nutrition and health. If they're healthy, they learn better and they feel better. It's preventive medicine."

Cornelius, Mary Jane Burrus (Tierra Blanca and Shirley elementary schools), Pat Simnacher (Northwest and West Central elementary schools), and June Rudd (Hereford junior high and high schools), have served the Hereford school district for more than 10 years each and are preparing to administer tuberculosis shots to all first and seventh graders plus any new students with no record of the shot.

Immunizations also are given for polio, measles, mumps, Rubella, and DPT. Rudd, nurse for the secondary schools, must check records for required booster shots given 10 years after the last childhood immunizations.

A large part of the school nurse's job, however, exceeds poking a needle in an arm. The nurses often counsel with physically and emotionally abused children, children abusing drugs or pregnant teen-age girls.

"With child abuse, it's not too hard to spot the abused child," said Cornelius. "Usually they're withdrawn, frightened, jumpy and keep their heads down. We visit with the child and by law we're required to notify the Department of Human Resources, but I usually don't like to dig too deeply because that's not my job to get so involved."

Rudd said that she doesn't see much child abuse in the secondary school. "Often, the child and parents have already worked through the problem by the time they reach this age," said Rudd. She does, however, deal with pregnant teen-agers.

"My role with them is to help them find out what's available to them," said Rudd. "I try to get

TV, movie deals

'Street Woman' finds success

NEW YORK (AP) — Three months ago, Joyce Brown was living by a vent on a Manhattan sidewalk. Today "the most famous homeless woman in the nation," as talk show host Phil Donahue called her, is weighing job offers and movie deals.

There have been the eight book and movie offers at last count, her lawyers said. To prepare for public appearances, Miss Brown shopped for clothes and had her hair done on the Upper East Side, the neighborhood of chic stores and astronomical rents where she was a street person.

"I went from Bellevue to Bloomingdale's," Miss Brown said with a smile Thursday night as she waited to address nearly 200 lawyers, law professors and students at a symposium on the city program to involuntarily commit the severely mentally ill homeless to Bellevue Hospital Center.

"I've received a lot of job offers. So I know I'm going to make it," she said.

When a city van picked up Miss Brown on Oct. 28 she was the first target of Mayor Edward I. Koch's campaign to get homeless people who might be a danger to themselves off the streets.

Freed from Bellevue by a judge 10 days ago, the 40-year-old former secretary was given shelter at a temporary residence for homeless women trying to re-enter society.

"It's much better than Bellevue," she said. "I have my freedom, I can come and go as I please, and I'm not being hassled. I was in and out of the hospital, I was in and out of society."

Her lawyers from the New York Civil Liberties Union celebrated her release by taking her to dinner at Windows on the World, the ritzy restaurant in the World Trade Center a thousand feet above the streets she called home.

"She had a seafood dinner, cheesecake, tea. She ordered the wine," said Norman Siegel, the civil liberties group's executive director.

Besides being interviewed on "60 Minutes" and "Donahue," Miss Brown has addressed symposiums at two law schools, including the one Thursday night at New York University, and has a third next month at Harvard.

"My case is drawing a lot of attention to the homeless problem," she said.

Miss Brown has received half a dozen offers to apply for jobs, mostly secretarial work, Siegel said.

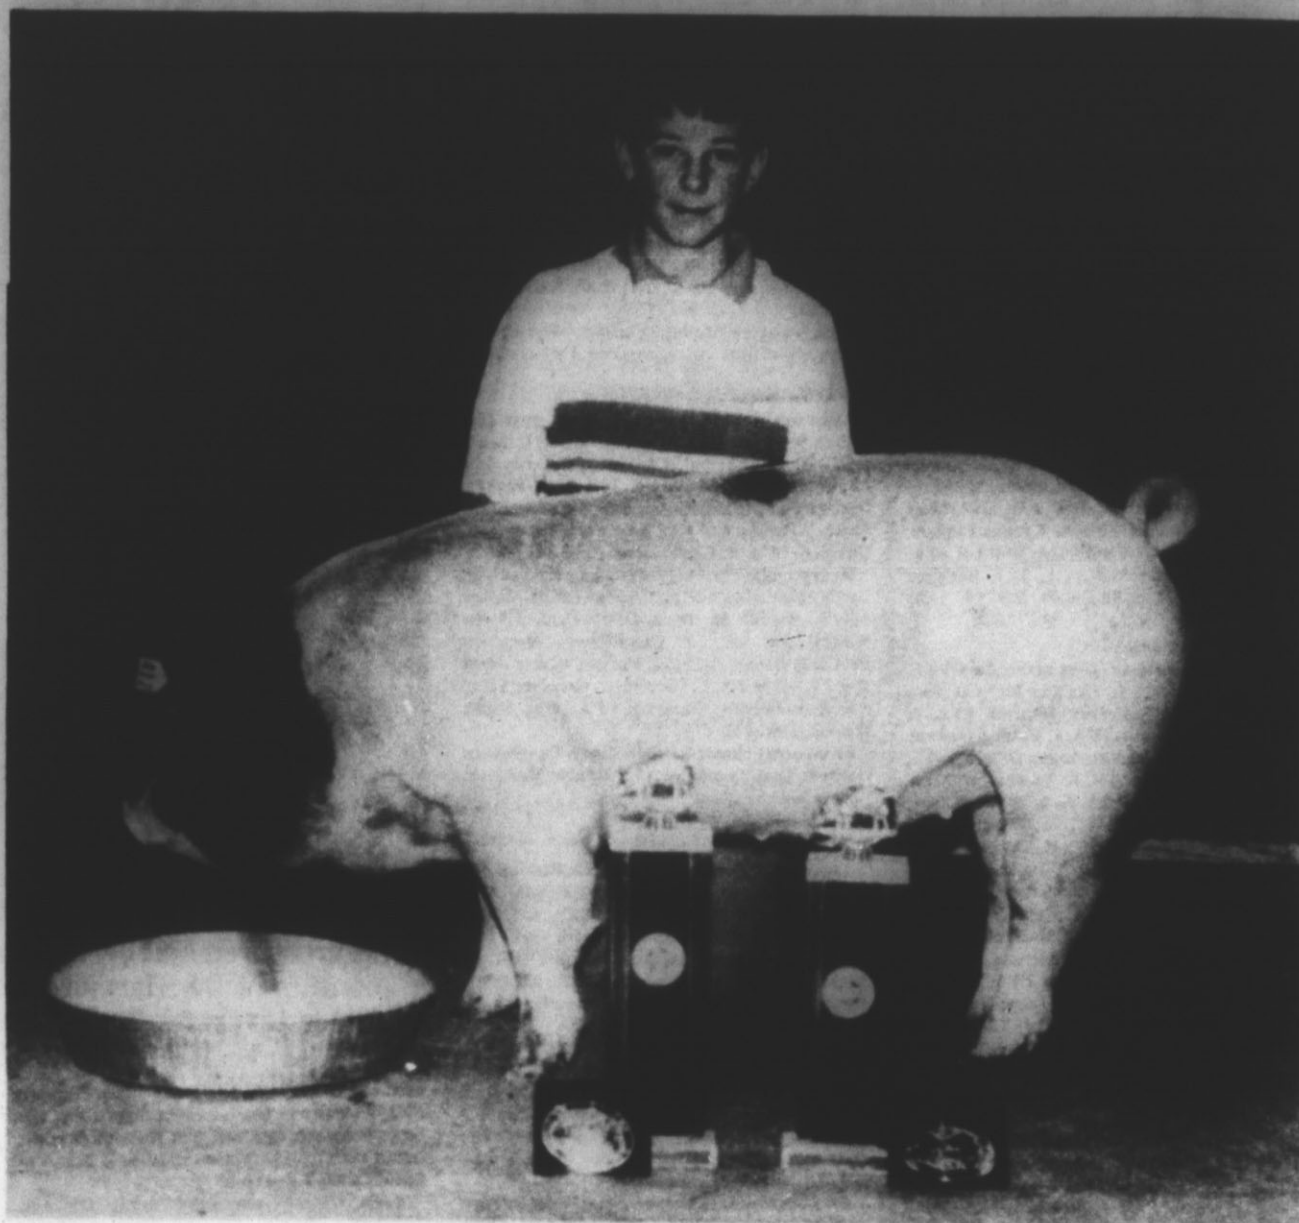

"I'm going to sit down and go over all the possibilities that I have and take the best job," said Miss Brown, who worked for 10 years as a secretary in New Jersey.

In 1985, Miss Brown was hospitalized for a personality disorder. She was released 15 days later as neither psychotic nor dangerous. She soon moved to New York and started a life as a "professional" street person, as she put it.

City officials described a woman who called herself Billie Boggs, who defecated on the street, tore up money given her, chased people and used offensive language.

City psychiatrists called her paranoid, delusional, schizophrenic, suicidal. Other psychiatrists, retained by the civil liberties union, said she was lucid and harmless.

Justice Robert Lippmann of Manhattan state Supreme Court, a trial judge who heard Miss Brown's case, called her "rational, logical, coherent" and ordered her release. An appellate panel overturned his decision. She was finally released when the city lost a court battle to administer drugs to her against her wishes.

Gore, Jackson stump state

AUSTIN (AP) — Jesse Jackson told Texas labor leaders they owe him their vote while Sen. Albert Gore Jr. told them to ignore the Iowa caucuses.

The two Democratic presidential contenders spoke Thursday at the convention of the Texas AFL-CIO's political arm. The group will make endorsements in state races, but will not endorse a presidential candidate in the March 8 primary.

"I have stood with you. I want you to stand with me," Jackson said after listing the cities in which he had supported striking workers. "Be consistent."

Gore aimed his remarks at the Republicans and the state of Iowa.

"Don't listen to the commentators about Iowa either," the Tennessee senator said. "You know that 97 percent of the people in Iowa do not participate in those caucuses and they don't have a secret ballot."

"Do you think that the great state of Texas has to wait until ... 3 percent of the small state of Iowa tells you how to vote? Is that the way Texas makes up its mind?" Gore asked, drawing shouts of "no, no" from the labor delegates.

Gore is counting on a Southern strategy, ignoring the early Iowa caucus, to lead him to the nomination.

"People all over the country are realizing that the Iowa caucuses really distort the process, and they are not going to let them play the role they once did," he said after the speech.

A third Democratic contender, Illinois Sen. Paul Simon, canceled his scheduled AFL-CIO speech to stay in Washington for a Senate vote.

At a Capitol news conference, Jackson said running for president must be a coast-to-coast effort.

"I'm not running a one-state, 30-yard dash. I'm running a 50-state decathlon event. I believe we should all run 50-state campaigns," he said.

Jackson said he was pleased with his progress in Iowa and New Hampshire, although polls show him running behind several other Democrats in those states.

"I dare not run away from any state or run from any region, because I'm not running to be a regional coordinator. I'm running to be the president. To do so, you must run as best you can in all 50 states," he said.

Jackson also spoke to a packed house in a University of Texas auditorium.

Also Thursday, Republican U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp's presidential campaign announced the selection of Robert Holland III, a Dallas lawyer, as its new Texas chairman. He replaces U.S. Rep. Beau Boulter, who is mounting his own campaign for the U.S. Senate.

Officers hope for help

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — After burying one of their own, a sometimes teary, sometimes bitter force of Dallas police officers returned to Texas saying they hoped a new spirit of cooperation and respect with the public would be the legacy of the brutal murder of Officer John Chase.

The 145 officers were joined by more than 500 other law enforcement officials from across the Midwest at Thursday's funeral for Chase, shot to death with his own gun by a homeless mentally ill man in downtown Dallas while two or three onlookers urged him to shoot.

"I hope that everyone has awakened a little bit in terms of the need to support police officers," said Dallas Police Chief Billy Prince, who blamed the City Council's frequent criticism of his department for fostering a disrespect of officers.

"I would expect that would be the aftermath of this — that we could find a way to work together and go forward," Prince said. "We have to make sure he (Chase) didn't die for nothing."

"I hope his death represents a turnaround in public support for law enforcement — not just in Dallas but all over."

Chase, born in Cedar Falls and a graduate of the University of Northern Iowa there, was laid to rest Thursday in a snow-crusted cemetery and eulogized as a galvanizing force for police support across the nation.

Nearly 1,000 people came to bury the 25-year-old officer whose death touched off a wave of vigils and demonstrations of support for the Dallas police.

At the First Assembly of God church, where the funeral was moved because of its size, Chase's gold-framed portrait stood by the casket, surrounded by 75 floral arrangements.

At the cemetery adjacent to a corn field, bells quietly touched the crisp air as 11 rows of officers stood at attention. Dallas officers fired a 21-gun salute.

Senate passes rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A four-year battle to win Senate passage of a sweeping civil rights bill culminated in a decisive bipartisan victory tempered for some supporters by an amendment putting new limits on abortion rights.

"This is a big day for civil rights in the United States of America," Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., said Thursday after the Senate voted 75-14 to pass the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

"While the Danforth (abortion) amendment was a disappointing setback, there was an overwhelming bipartisan rejection of the Reagan administration's attempts to weaken the four major civil rights bills," said Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

The restoration act is intended to overturn a 1984 Supreme Court ruling that scaled back the scope of federal civil rights laws barring discrimination by recipients of federal funds.

The civil rights conference of 200 member groups was the major force behind the act, which says that if any part of an institution receives federal money, the entire institution is prohibited from discriminating against women, minorities, the aged and the disabled.

The act had been buried in the Senate by filibusters and other obstructionist tactics since it was first introduced in 1984.

That was the year the Supreme Court ruled in the case of Grove City (Pa.) College that federal anti-discrimination rules applied only to specific programs or activities receiving federal aid and not to entire institutions.

The decision shocked the civil rights community and galvanized lawmakers who said congressional intent had always been to provide broad rather than piecemeal protection against discrimination.

Conservatives argued to the end that the restoration act would be an instrument of government intrusion going far beyond previous application of civil rights laws.

Just before the vote, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, read a veto threat from President Reagan saying that the restoration act, even with the abortion amendment, was unacceptable.

But Kennedy dismissed the threat, pointing to the coming elections and the 27 Republicans who joined 48 Democrats in supporting the bill.

"There's not the slightest doubt in my mind that he would sign it," Kennedy said.

Almost overshadowing the civil rights bill was the 56-39 victory of the amendment introduced by Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., to override 1975 regulations aimed at preventing discrimination against women who have abortions or want them.

The U.S. Catholic Conference and the National Right to Life Committee, among others, hailed the amendment's passage.

Monsignor Daniel F. Hoye, general secretary of the U.S. Catholic Conference, said the provision ensures that institutions opposed to abortion "will not be coerced under the guise of civil rights into paying for something which they believe to be morally wrong."

Abortion rights supporters said they would try to defeat the amendment when the civil rights bill is considered by the House later this year. Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, condemned Danforth for waging a "campaign of disinformation."

Eleanor Smeal, feminist leader and former National Organization for Women president, noted Democratic defections on the amendment and said, "The Democrats pay so much lip service to us that we've got whisker burn."

The Danforth amendment states that nothing in Title IX, the law barring sex discrimination in education, "shall be construed to require or prohibit any person, or public or private entity, to provide or pay for any benefit or service ... related to abortion."

The amendment would supersede Title IX regulations that say schools receiving federal funds cannot discriminate against women who have abortions and must, if they have comprehensive health plans, cover pregnancy, childbirth and abortion.

Michigan Republicans pick delegates

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

Gary Hart set the stage for tonight's Democratic debate with a stinging attack on his rivals, and Michigan Republicans were playing out the final act in their fractious delegate-selection drama.

Republican Pat Robertson, meanwhile, spoke out against government-subsidized housing, calling it a "burden we don't need on the taxpayers."

"It's not that I lack compassion," the former television evangelist said following a $1,000-a-head reception in Brunswick, Ga. Robertson then attended a $100-a-plate dinner at Sea Island, a posh resort.

And more than half of those surveyed for a Gallup poll said they thought Vice President George Bush should disclose more information about his role in the Iran-Contra affair. About a third said they believed he had answered questions adequately.

All the Democrats except Jesse Jackson were expected at the debate in Sioux Falls, S.D., tonight. Jackson's campaign said Thursday night he was suffering from exhaustion and was canceling campaign appearances today and Saturday.

Democrat Bruce Babbitt resumed campaigning Thursday after spending three days at home in Arizona following the death of his 89-year-old father.

Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, meanwhile, inundated Iowa with congressional colleagues stumping on his behalf. More than 30 fellow Democratic House members were preaching the Gephardt gospel in the state, which holds precinct caucuses Feb. 8.

The polls point to a tight race in Iowa among Gephardt, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois. The three were the principal targets of a tirade Thursday by rival Hart, who has been lagging in the polls.

In a speech at the University of Northern Iowa, Hart blasted

Gephardt for "misguided trade policies" and said Dukakis "chants phrases like 'Massachusetts miracle' and 'presidential leadership' like a mantra." Of Simon, he said, "You can't spend your way out of difficulty simply with more programs."

Later, in Spearfish, S.D., Hart said the press reacted with "anger and resentment and outrage" when he rejoined the race last month, after dropping out in May amid reports of his relationship with a Miami model. Since then, he said, he has been the victim of "subtle attacks."

In Michigan, months of sound and fury were culminating in the two-day state convention, where 77 GOP national convention delegates — the first in the nation — were being picked.

Bush was expected to get about 35 of the delegates, with Rep. Jack Kemp of New York garnering about 30. Robertson was expected to snare about a dozen.

Kemp and Robertson backers in port by officers from as far as Chicago created a funeral procession of some 120 squad cars, four buses and dozens of other cars.

"We wanted to show our respect and stay as united as we can," said Chicago police Officer John Ciszewski.

Chase had stopped a driver in downtown Dallas on a traffic violation. While writing a ticket, he was approached by Carl Williams, a homeless man with a history of mental illness. The two ended up in a fight, Williams grabbed Chase's gun and held it over him. Some witnesses told police Chase begged for his life while a few bystanders at a bus stop urged the vagrant to fire. He did, and was later killed in a shootout with other officers.

Wednesday night, Prince said, three officers writing tickets found citizens stopping behind them to make sure they were safe. Yet because of the dangers, Prince has ordered all Dallas officers to patrol in pairs.

Police officials, their badges masked with a black band of tape and a few carrying a single red rose, stood at attention, heads bowed, as "Taps" was played. Some wept quietly as Chase's parents, brother, widow and other family members huddled by his flag-draped coffin in prayer.

"John Chase did not live long enough," said the Rev. Duane Gibthem to tell their parents about the pregnancy because, for one thing, if she wanted to apply for Medicaid or other programs, she would have to base it on her parents' incomes and work with them on it."

To prevent these teen-age pregnancies, Cornelius and the other elementary school nurses teach the children about their bodies.

"Sex education needs to be taught here because it's not taught at home," said Cornelius. "It shouldn't be pushed on a child if there are religious or personal reasons, but it's the only way to teach kids."

Cornelius shows all fifth and sixth graders films explaining their bodies. "We don't go into 'do or don't,' but just how to control their feelings," she said.

One of the more alarming health problems is AIDS. The nurses are currently gathering materials and programs to properly educate students on the subject.

"At this point, I haven't finalized any feelings toward the disease because it hasn't come to our school yet," said Rudd. "Who knows when it will come? Every child has a right to an education whether he has AIDS or not, but I still worry about it."

"I can handle AIDS," Cornelius said. "We just have to treat everyone as if they had AIDS equally. I'm just worried about those who will contract AIDS and we won't know about it."

While AIDS is a far-off threat, drug abuse is not. Cornelius said she doesn't see much drug abuse in the elementary schools until a child enters sixth grade.

"If a child is abusing drugs, it's up to the classroom instruction to curtail it," said Cornelius. "We just get the material to the teachers and possibly get the police force to come in a talk to the kids."

Some of the other duties of the school nurse include checking the height and weight of the student; checking a student's vision, hearing and teeth; and testing fifth and eighth graders for scoliosis—curvature of the spine.

Ann Landers

DEAR READERS: I know that kids hate to hear their parents or, worse yet, their grandparents say, "When I was your age..." (They don't believe you ever were). But here is a letter that is worth risking their wrath:

DEAR ANN LANDERS: This letter is for young people who think life is hard because they can't have a car when they are in high school:

In 1947 when I was 12 I had a paper route in Terre Haute, Ind. It was one of the heaviest routes in town. I had 265 customers.

Since it was a morning route, my dad went to the station at 2 a.m. seven days a week and picked up the papers. He and my mother folded the papers and packed them in two bags. One bag I put on the fender of my bicycle. The other one was strapped to the handlebars. At 4 a.m. I was on my way.

I had to return for more papers twice (three times on Sundays) and was usually finished by 7 a.m. I then went home, had breakfast and rode my bicycle to school. Classes started at 8 a.m.

The paper route netted me $20 a week. My parents let me keep 50 cents. The rest went toward clothes, school books, food for the family and payments toward our farm. I kept that route all through high school. It was a terrific experience and shaped my entire life.

I've had an interesting career and retired in 1975. I am not a millionaire, but I have a lovely home and a comfortable income. By the way, my dad sold the farm six years ago for $100,000.

I hope all the teenagers who are reading this will come to understand that parents don't do their children any favors when they buy them everything they want. As I look back I see how much I learned from that paper route. It taught me how to be a businessman. It also gave me a sense of responsibility and a feeling of accomplishment. I didn't realize it at the time, but it all comes clear to me now. —F.L. from Speedway, Ind.

DEAR SPEEDY: Thanks for some down-home wisdom. Actually your letter should be read by the parents rather than the children. They are the ones who need to know the importance of giving young people a challenge. Nothing can compare with achievement when it comes to building self-esteem.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Please tell your readers to inform a member of their family when they leave town. Too often no one knows how to get in touch with them.

My son's father passed away recently and we were unable to find Joe for the funeral. When he returns home, he will be heartbroken. He is also the administrator of his father's estate and nothing can be done until he returns.

I feel sad because I know that Joe will be tormented for the rest of his life because he was not here when he was needed.—A Sad Mother in Central Florida

DEAR MOTHER: You have made an excellent point.

That one time in thousand when you go off and think it's nobody's business, that's the time something unexpected happens and your absence creates a serious problem.

It's always a good idea to tell one person where you can be reached just in case of an emergency.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My fiancé told me that his parents have been married for 35 years and never have exchanged a harsh word. Is this possible?—Louisville

DEAR LOUISVILLE: Yes, it's possible, but as William Graham Cole said, such marriages are not anything to brag about. They are not really marriages in the true sense of the word. They are more like nonaggression pacts.

Feeling pressured to go "all the way" because everyone else is doing it? You're not alone. For answers to your questions about sex, and to learn how your peers really feel about it, write for Ann Landers' newly revised booklet, "Sex and the Teenager." Send $2.50 plus a self-addressed, stamped, No. 10 envelope (39 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11562, Chicago, Ill. 60611-0562.

Not interested in head coaching position

Broncos' defensive coordinator likes job

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer
LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — As recently as a year ago, Denver Broncos defensive coordinator Joe Collier said he would listen to offers of head coaching jobs in the NFL.
Now, on the eve of Sunday's Super Bowl, he's not so sure.
"At this stage of my career, I'd have to say I'm not really interested in a head coaching job," Collier said Thursday.

"Nowadays, a head coach has to be part labor negotiator, P.R. guy and drug counselor. About 25 percent of a head coach's job is something I don't particularly care for. I like what I'm doing."
What the gifted scientist is creating in his laboratory is, he hopes, a brilliant scheme to thwart the Washington Redskins' offense. He tinkers with X's and O's the way a composer arranges notes, finding the most pleasing combination for a Sunday concert. It's the sort of thing he's done with considerable fanfare for the last 19 years in Denver.

"He's invaluable," Broncos Coach Dan Reeves said. "I let him take care of the defense. I leave it in his hands."
Collier, 55, has survived four head coaching changes in Denver.
"I knew I wanted to keep him when I came here," said Reeves, a former Dallas Cowboys assistant who came to Denver in 1981. "Having played against Denver in the Super Bowl and in a game the previous season, I had a tremendous amount of respect for their defense."

For Collier, football can be all-consuming. His colleagues like to tell the story of a 1986 game on a cold day in Kansas City when Collier, standing too close to a heater, intently studied his notes while his pants went up in flames. Collier kept studying while player personnel director Reed Johnson put out the fire.

Collier leaves for work at 4:30 every morning. On especially long work days, he simply drives to a nearby hotel and stays overnight.
Even when he comes home in the evening, his wife, Shirley, says he often moves right to a special work table, where he spreads out his charts and notepads.
He is notoriously thorough, once preparing 90 different defensive fronts for one game. On road games, he holes up in his hotel room, going over film of the opponent and reviewing what defense he wants to use in particular situations.

That thoroughness stems from an incident in the early 1970s, when Denver lost a game because of a defensive breakdown. During the off-season, Collier was looking through some extra film when he noticed that the team had used the same play in an earlier game.
"We had that film available to look at, but I didn't look at it," Collier recalls. "I vowed never to let that happen again."

Collier, who was head coach of the Buffalo Bills for two-plus seasons in the late 1960s, has adapted to the times.
When the four-man line was still the overwhelming choice among NFL teams, Collier went to the 3-4 after Lyle Alzado was injured and Denver found itself with more linebackers than linemen. The Broncos have stayed with that formation, although they do many variations off of it and even use the four-man line on occasion.

"He's exciting to play for because he always has something different for us each week," linebacker Karl Mecklenburg said.

St. Anthony's School Basketball Teams

The St. Anthony's basketball teams recently finished their 1987-88 seasons by hosting Walcott and Wildorado in tournaments last weekend. Members of the boys'

Wagner, Todd Reinart, Chris Williams, Mark Kuper, Jenny Davis, Crystal Garza, Connie Castaneda, and Diane Wilhelm. The St. Anthony's boys won the Walcott tournament, and the St. Anthony's Green team won the Wildorado tournament. Other placings this season included: St. Anthony's White, second in the Wildorado boys' tournament; St. Anthony's Green second and St. Anthony's White third in the St. Anthony's boys' tournament; and St. Anthony's White second and St. Anthony's Green third in the St. Anthony's girls' tournament.

Redskins' QB tired of same questions

By DAVID GINSBURG
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — By now, anybody remotely interested knows that Doug Williams is the black quarterback in this year's Super Bowl.

A few days from now, he would like to be referred to simply as the quarterback who helped the Redskins become world champions.

Williams' place in history will be assured when he takes the first snap from center against the Denver Broncos. No other black quarterback has played, much less started, in a Super Bowl, and over and over again this week Williams has been asked his feelings on the subject.

He's quite tired of it. "There are times I'd like to take a camera or microphone and stick it down their mouths," he admitted. "But that wouldn't be nice."

Denver players, naturally, don't use the word "black" when describing Williams' strengths. They use "strong arm" or "cool in the pocket" or "a guy who gets the job done."

"His strength is his arm," Denver safety Tony Lilly said. "He's the kind of guy who can throw the ball while backpedaling and still get it 50 yards downfield."

When Williams played at Tampa Bay from 1978-82, critics said his arm was too strong, that he threw a 5-yard pass as hard as a 60-yard bomb. The joke went: "Doug Williams is the only guy who can overthrow the Ayatollah."

Indeed, in six previous NFL seasons, he completed just 47.4 percent of his passes and threw as many interceptions — 73 — as touchdowns. This season, he hit 56.6 percent — 81 of 143 — for 1,156 yards and 11 touchdowns with five interceptions.

Kickers prepare themselves mentally for Super Bowl

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The temptation is to say that if Sunday's Super Bowl comes down to a field goal, as the 3½-point betting line suggests it may, neither team will win.

After all, it could be said that Rich Karlis, the barefoot Bronco, still has to make up for missing two chip shots in last year's Super Bowl, and that Ali Haji-Sheikh, Washington's waiver-wire refugee, has to make up for the last four seasons.

But that's all history, and history doesn't matter to kickers.

"Misses used to bother me," Karlis said. "But it's over. It's in the past. You've got to move on."

Suppose Sunday's game comes down to the final seconds and Haji-Sheikh, an unsteady 13 for 19 on field goals this season, trots out to decide the issue. Would he like that circumstance?

"Sure," he said. "It would be a great highlight film."

Now just a minute. This is the tensest moment in the biggest game of the season, and the Sheikh is thinking highlight film? What about the pressure? What if you miss?

Haji-Sheikh laughed at that. "A kicker has to be able to forget," he said. "You need a short memory. It's black or white. You make it or you don't. If you're afraid to miss, you guide the ball."

And then?

"And then you miss."

Karlis would certainly understand that after his adventures in last year's game. He opened by tying the Super Bowl record with a 48-yard kick. Then he was wide from 23 — the shortest miss in Super Bowl history — and again from 34.

How does that happen? How do you kick the longest field goal in Super Bowl history and then follow it with the shortest miss?

"On the misses, my heart was racing for some reason," he said. "I hurried the kicks. I pushed them. I didn't get my hips into them. For whatever reason, I didn't relax."

Sure, relax. Just because the success of the whole drive rests on your foot, hey, that's no reason to get up-tight.

"The pressure you feel is on the sidelines, waiting around," Karlis said. "You work on your breathing and try not to get anxious. It's the anticipation, like the week before your wedding, thinking about the things that could go wrong. Once you're on the field, you're fine. You just go out and kick."

That's easy for him to say. He's got the fifth-highest field goal percentage in NFL history, 72.6. He had

While Denver quarterback John Elway is best throwing on the run, Williams and his bullet passes are especially dangerous near the goal line.

In the NFC title game against the Minnesota Vikings, Williams drilled the winning 7-yard touchdown pass to Gary Clark. The throw would have been batted away had it been tossed with any less velocity, but the ball hit Clark's chest just as two converging defenders took a swipe at it.

While Elway prefers to scramble out of the pocket, Williams likes to stay in it, waiting until just the right moment.

"He's so big (6-foot-4), he can just stand there surveying the situation," Broncos defensive end Rulon Jones said. "Even when you get a hold of him, he can still complete the ball. He holds it a long time, but he has such a quick release he can get away with it."

Denver tackle Greg Kragen most admires a Williams trait that cannot be measured in statistics.

"They get things done when he's in there. He's just capable of leading the team, even if he's not having a great day," Kragen said. "The guy's a winner."

Williams prefers to understate his role, saying he is only one of 45 Redskins who are vying to win one more football game this season.

Williams said Tampa Bay was too dependent on him. With Washington, he knows the Redskins can win even if he completes only nine of 26 passes, as he did against the Vikings two weeks ago.

"At Tampa, if Doug Williams didn't do it, it didn't get done," he said. "I don't have to play well for us to win here."

three straight 100-point years and just missed at 91 in this strike season. They don't make fun of him the way they do Haji-Sheikh.

In 1983, as a rookie with the New York Giants, the Sheikh set an NFL record with 35 field goals. Then they changed holders on him, switching from Scott Brunner to Jeff Rutledge, and the Sheikh became the Shank.

Karlis understood that.

"You've got to have confidence in your holder," he said. "He's got to have soft hands. You start worrying about him doing his job, handling the ball smoothly and setting it down and you can't be a successful kicker."

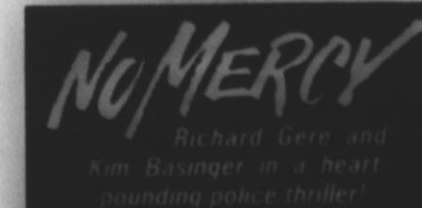

"It's a sensitive relationship. It's like being married. You try not to bicker too much the day of the game."

The whole sequence — snap, place, hold — is delicately balanced, sort of like the kickers themselves. Karlis, for example, sees nothing peculiar in kicking barefoot.

"If you do it right, it doesn't hurt," he said. "If you do it wrong, you're punished by the pain."

Someone asked Karlis if he does things differently than the rest of us to protect his valuable foot off the field.

"Yeah," he said. "I walk with my head down a lot. I always look where I walk. I find more nails and screws than most people."

Redskins hope to stop Elway by staying on offense

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer
SAN DIEGO (AP) — Stop John Elway? The Washington Redskins hope to do it by never stopping themselves.

Stopping Elway in Sunday's Super Bowl will not take lots of defense, but lots of offense.

"We have to control the ball," running back George Rogers said. "We have to bring it to them with our running game."

While everyone is trying to figure out how the Redskins defense will deal with Elway, the Denver Broncos' passer-scrambler-magician, the Washington players who move the ball — and the blockers who move defenders out of the way — have things figured out.

"We have to take charge when we have the ball," tackle Joe Jacoby said. "We need long drives and points at the end of the drives."

The Redskins have the rushing game to dominate Denver. The Hogs outweigh the Broncos' straight down the line, by an average of 20 pounds per man. Power fullback Rogers, shifty halfback Kelvin Bryant and inside-outside runner Timmy Smith, a rookie, are capable of establishing the ground control Washington needs.

"We were seventh in rushing," tackle Mark May said of Washington's NFL ranking. "We've got versatility in those three guys and we can beat you with the pass, too, which makes the running game better."

Denver, meanwhile, was 20th against the run. Cleveland rushed effectively in the AFC title game even though it was behind throughout the game.

"Of course we don't want them to drive down the field," Denver linebacker Jim Ryan said. "But they've done it to everybody. They have one of the biggest offensive lines I've ever seen. Rogers is a powerful back, Bryant and Smith can run outside, and those big guys get out in front of them. It presents a major problem."

"And we're way too small," he added with a grin and tongue firmly in cheek. "They'll just run right over us."

Ryan insists success on the ground won't be a matter of size on Sunday. It hasn't been on most other Sundays this season.

"People think because we're not the bigger team, we are weaker," he said. "But we are as physical as anybody."

"Actually, we are outsize in every game. But it's a moot point — we're still a very physical and successful defense."

May agrees that the Broncos do well with what they have. But what they don't have — bulk — could be decisive in the final moments of a tight game.

"If we run effectively 35 or 40 times, in the fourth quarter it takes its course," May said. "You've got a 280-pounder on a 250-pounder, blocking him for three hours, and it's going to have a wear-down effect."

The key to stopping Rogers-Bryant-Smith ultimately rests with Denver's linebackers. The Hogs won't settle for a standoff against offensive linemen Rulon Jones, Andre Townsend, Greg Kragen and Freddie Gilbert. They'll want to overpower them and, at the same time, neutralize Ryan, Karl Mecklenburg, Ricky Hunley and Simon Fletcher. If the linebackers don't find the lanes of pursuit, the Redskins will run all day. And probably win.

"The first thing we want to do is establish the run and we've done it right most games," Rogers said. "If we do that, everything falls into place."

"Not many teams have stopped all of us."

Not many teams know how to stop three so diverse running backs.

"I like having the complement for a big runner," Coach Joe Gibbs said.

"We had John Riggins and Joe Washington. Then we had George and now the perfect partner in Kelvin.

"You need runners who can display their talent best. With George going inside, Kelvin outside, Timmy doing both ... we put one guy behind the quarterback and use him to his strengths."

And against the opposition's weaknesses. In Denver's case, that just might be a lack of size.

"That bugs me," Ryan said. "It bothers me to hear we're a finesse defense, that we trick you into going down instead of hitting hard."

"In the NFL, if you don't hit hard, don't tackle right, you won't win."

During his career, Pistol Pete Maravich of Louisiana State scored 50 or more points in 28 games — an NCAA major college record.

Jay Handlan of Washington and Lee attempted a record 71 shots from the field against Furman in 1956 and made 30 of them.
