Chicano art spans culture, history

Editor's Note: In recognition of Hispanic Heritage Month, the Big Spring Herald will publish daily articles on Hispanics and Hispanic culture.

By MARTHA E. FLORES
Staff Writer

The art born of the Chicano political movement in the 1960s continues today in its third generation. Changes seen in the works include mediums used and also the emphasis on certain issues, but continuity is seen in the strong social sense to community.

"Chicano art was a counterpart and addition to the political movement," said Shifra M. Goldman, art historian and critic, during a telephone interview. "It blossomed into theater, dance, music, literature and visual arts."

In the October 1992 issue of New Art Examiner Goldman's article "Updating Chicano Art" states "Chicano artists came primarily from the working class, were sympathetic with its culture, knew the details of family and neighborhood life (rural and urban), the anecdotes, celebrations, problems and struggles, etc."

Hispanic Heritage Month

The first generation of Chicano art was expository and public, she said. Murals and posters were the mediums used to convey a message in mass communication. The artists were publicly affirming their identity — "we are Spanish-speaking, working-class and Indian descendants," Goldman said.

As the movement continued in the late 1970s, women Chicano artists began to emerge as part of the second generation. Their topics were concentrated on identifying themselves; their relationship to men, other women and children; and employment, Goldman said. The mediums used included weaving, painting and photography.

As the earlier generations of Chicano art were obvious in portraying the social problems of the Mexican-American community, the present generation is seeking for recognition of the problems not only in the Mexican-American community, but also society as a whole. It is also presenting the artwork in

Vice presidential debate turns combative, angry

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Dan Quayle and Al Gore echoed their bosses' themes but added anger and acid in a freewheeling vice presidential debate whose combative tone would linger until Thursday night's rematch between President Bush and Democrat Bill Clinton.

Overshadowed for much of Tuesday night's feisty, 90-minute matchup was Ross Perot's running mate, James Stockdale, who at times played the witty outsider, but also faltered in a debut that could lengthen Perot's already long odds.

Unlike Sunday night's opening debate among Bush, Clinton and Perot, the vice presidential forum never lacked drama. Quayle was aggressive, repeatedly interrupting Gore to say Clinton can't be trusted.

"The three words he fears most in the English language: tell the truth," Quayle said.

Gore didn't have a direct retort, but said a string of broken Republican promises proved it was time for a new team.

"Isn't it time for a new approach, a new generation of ideas and leadership, to put our people first and to get our economy moving again?" he said.

Stockdale carried Perot's theme that such endless partisan bickering was responsible for Washington gridlock. But much of the night he appeared more a referee than a participant, often passing up a chance to join the exchanges.

"I feel like I'm an observer at a pingpong game," Stockdale said after one flurry of finger-pointing between Gore and Quayle. "I'm out of ammunition on this," Stockdale said later when urged by moderator Hal Bruno of ABC to expound on health care policy.

The instant polls asking who won generally reflected the state of the campaign: One by NBC-TV showed 50 percent viewed Gore the winner to 32 percent for Quayle and 7 percent for Stockdale. An ABC poll also had Gore winning, but by a much narrower margin.

Commissioners pay tire bill

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Howard County Commissioners decided to pay a bill of more than $480 for the replacement of two tires on a county fire truck in Tuesday's meeting.

The county had originally refused to pay the bill, as all volunteer firefighting equipment is cared for by county maintenance personnel. The event occurred on a weekend, however, and no county personnel were available, said Richard Willadsen, the Jonesboro Volunteer Fire Department member who received the bill.

While fighting a grass fire, the Jonesboro truck received two flats on the same side of one axle, leaving it stranded in a pasture. A Tubbs Addition truck also received flats at the fire, but was able to be driven out and later fixed by county crews.

Jonesboro personnel called an independent company to change the

- Temporary help was authorized for the County Clerk's Office to assist with the election.
- Low bids for county tires and tubes were accepted from local Goodyear and Firestone dealers.

- Commissioners approved a request from Heritage Museum Coordinator Angie Way to confer with Fresco-mural experts on moving and restoring the mural from the current Howard County Library building. Museum trustees offered to raise funds to pay for the restoration.

City crews will do water pipe improvements

By PATRICK DRISCOLL

Big Spring City Manager Lanny Lambert, on the job less than two weeks, is already eyeing as much as $93,000 in savings this year and next.

The savings may be ongoing. Lambert got the go-ahead Tuesday from the Big Spring City Council to forgo two bids on water pipe improvements in the Capehart Addition and to create a city construction crew to do the improvements instead.

If feasible, the crew would remain intact for ongoing water pipe improvements in other areas, Lambert said. Savings could translate to more improvements.

Survivors recall Killeen massacre a year later

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

KILLEEN — John Marr can still see the bodies.

Now associate manager of Luby's in Killeen, Marr points to the front interior of the newly remodeled store.

"There was a woman at a table up there, still sitting, dead," says Marr.

His meter changes little while retelling the story of the nation's worst mass shooting, matching the calm rhythm adopted by other survivors. It is quick and even, with few stopping places.

Their lives changed one year ago on Oct. 16, 1991, when George Hennard smashed his pickup through the cafeteria's front and emptied a Glock 9mm into the lives of 162 people.

"There are a couple of faces you don't see anymore and you miss them," continues Marr, 29, speaking of both the 23 dead and a few former regular customers of the popular lunchtime retreat.

But in Killeen, where half of the town's residents are military personnel, Marr knows there will always be newcomers and for Killeen's residents, there is always hope.

There are no new answers to the puzzle behind the ex-merchant seaman who veered his truck from the Texas 190 access road and charged through glass and brick.

Hennard's reasons are buried with him. His house in Belton has been sold and his parents are unreachable.

This Friday, church bells will ring at noon and Luby's will close down in the afternoon. An evening candlelight ceremony organized by a core group of survivors will be held to mark what many refer to as only "the incident."

Some, like 71-year-old Hazel Holley sneer at such a euphemism.

"An incident is what happens everyday," says Mrs. Holley, who broke her arm escaping from Luby's through a broken window that day. "This was a massacre."

Despite her strong feelings about the shooting, Mrs. Holley, who refuses to say Hennard's name, says she feel no ire against Hennard.

"I have never felt any anger toward that man, only pity. My sympathy goes to his family," she says.

Marr is not as charitable.

"I'm glad he's dead," Marr said calmly. "I tend to think people get what they deserve and he got what he deserved."

The replays of the day have decreased in the mind of chiropractor Suzanna Gratia, whose father Al was gunned down as he tried to stop Hennard. Ms. Gratia's mother Ursula, whom she thought was with her as she escaped through the back door, was found later next to her father.

"I had a real hard time right at first," Ms. Gratia said, "because I wondered had I spent five more seconds could I have gotten my Mom out. Well as it turned out, and what the cops told me later, I guess she didn't want to get out."

When Hennard closed in, Ursula Gratia, who crawled to her husband, raised her head, looked at the gunman, bowed it again and was shot pointblank in the skull.

But Ms. Gratia, whose gun was in her car parked at Luby's that day, says today she is busy and coming to terms with what occurred that day.

"It's very easy for me to get very angry at myself for not having a gun with me," said Ms. Gratia. "But I also know that you can drive yourself nuts with that."

The remaining witnesses are surprisingly patient with friends and strangers, after a year of being asked to recite their tales.

DEA nabs ton of cocaine

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROWNSVILLE — South Texas DEA agents have recorded one of their largest seizures after confiscating about a ton of cocaine and arresting four "significant traffickers," an agency spokesman says.

Drug Enforcement Administration agents wrapping up a two-day surveillance operation seized the shipment Tuesday as it was being transported out of a Harlingen warehouse, said Fred C. Ball, special agent in charge of the DEA in McAllen.

"It's a hell of a seizure," said Ball. "Any time you've seized a ton of cocaine you've impacted a drug organization significantly."

The three crates of Colombian cocaine, taken from a panel truck leaving the warehouse, were probably bound for Houston and then the East Coast, said Ball.

The shipment was valued at about $15 million wholesale and would probably be worth some $100 million once it was cut and sold on the street, he said.

Ball said it was one of the largest seizures for the DEA in the region. Texas' largest drug seizure came in 1989 when the Department of Public Safety discovered about 9 tons of cocaine in a home near Harlingen.

Ball said three men were arrested Tuesday outside the warehouse. Another man was found inside along with about 150 pounds of cocaine, he said.

The four were identified as: Jose Manuel Hernandez Benavides, Victor Manuel Loreda, Benito Gonzalez III, and Carlos Guillermo Avila-Vasquez. It was not immediately known where they had been living.

"I don't believe they are the leaders of the organization," said Ball. "They are significant traffickers."

The men were being held Tuesday night in the Cameron County jail. They were scheduled to go before a federal magistrate today.

Ball said other arrests were expected in the case.

Authorities had been watching the warehouse periodically during the past few months, said Ball.

The DEA began staking out the facility after an agent noticed activity going on there.

The surveillance led authorities to enough information to obtain a search warrant and mount the operation. DEA agents were assisted in the arrests by several agencies, including the Cameron County Sheriff's Department and the Harlingen and Brownsville police departments.

Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez said the operation sent a message to traffickers that "we're going to get them sooner or later."

What's best for the child

'Race' factor blocks adoption

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — State welfare officials say they know what's best for a 3½-year-old child. Lana and Philip Jenkins say racism is at work.

The dispute between the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services and the Abilene couple has renewed debate about a controversial guideline that considers race as a factor for placement.

At the center is Christopher, a black toddler, who was born to a crack-addicted mother. He has lived with the Jenkinses, who are white and want to adopt him, for most of his life.

Three weeks ago a state judge ordered Christopher placed with a black foster family that plans to adopt him and two of his half-brothers.

Jenkins vows to continue seeking custody and has filed a federal discrimination lawsuit against the state, claiming the placement was based solely on race.

"A year ago we adopted a foster child and we met all the criteria and we would with Christopher except for the racial criteria," she said. "If they drop this racial part, then we would in every way meet all the needs of perfect parents for this child."

Child Protective Services uses a list of 10 guidelines when considering the best adoptive family.

Camille Miller, the PRS interim executive director, said the guideline for the "preservation of (the child's) racial or ethnic heritage" takes no precedence over others.

"There is nothing in there that says one is a priority over another," Miller said. "They are all 10 to be taken into consideration."

Jenkins said she and her husband meet nine of the 10 criteria.

Although Miller admitted that Child Protective Services left the child in the foster home too long, she added that the Jenkinses knew the rules of foster care from the start.

"The very important role of a foster family is to love and let go," she said. "The bottom line is what is best for the child."

"I think everyone would agree that if you've got a situation where a black child can be placed with his black siblings in a black family, that looks like the best situation," she said.

"That may not be, depending on the family and the siblings and the individual child. In this case, that is what appears to be in the best interest."

She added that there are no plans to reverse the agency's decision in the Jenkins case.

Jenkins said she has requested a new custody hearing in addition to the discrimination lawsuit.

Morales urges TWC to stop sludge spreading

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — State Attorney General Dan Morales has urged the Texas Water Commission to immediately halt a company from spreading sludge in West Texas.

Morales told the commission Tuesday to revoke permission granted to MERCO Joint Venture to spread New York City sludge on a ranch near Sierra Blanca, about 70 miles southeast of El Paso.

Morales says the MERCO project does not meet state regulations.

"We have conducted an independent review of the MERCO project and determined that the revocation of its permit is clearly warranted," Morales said in a prepared release.

The demand comes a week after the water commission imposed a 75-day halt on all new and pending applications of sludge, a byproduct from wastewater treatment plants.

Ed Clark, water commission spokesman, said the agency will consider Morales' request.

"The Texas Water Commission is absolutely determined to ensure this project is not a problem for the environment and never threatens the public," Clark said.

Morales said state regulations prohibit the spreading of out-of-state sewage sludge in Texas if the sludge does not meet the more stringent requirements of the two states. Sludge being spread by MERCO does not meet all New York standards.

MERCO began spreading sludge in July on the 130,000-acre Sierra Blanca ranch. The company has said the sludge will restore native grasses to the ranch and tests are being conducted to ensure it poses no danger to the environment.

"Mr. Morales has called the project hazardous and toxic and it is neither," MERCO spokeswoman Marc Sybert said.

Morales also has sued MERCO and the Environmental Protection Agency. That lawsuit goes to trial Nov. 2 in Pecos. A judge already has denied a state request for a temporary halt of the sludge spreading.

Morales said he has amended his lawsuit, which accuses the EPA of not following its own permitting rules when it gave MERCO permission to spread sludge without a permit.

"If the attorney general thought he had a chance of winning the lawsuit, he wouldn't be having so many press conferences," said Buck Wynne, EPA regional administrator.

400 killed in Cairo earthquake

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — The capital rippled with aftershocks today and President Hosni Mubarak was back from a shortened China trip to deal with the damage wrought by a deadly earthquake and provide for its victims.

Friendly countries immediately pledged more than $110 million in aid.

More than 400 people were killed and 10 times that number injured in Monday's quake, which was reported to have destroyed or damaged 536 buildings.

A security official told Cairo Television that rescue workers stopped searching for survivors Tuesday everywhere but at a 14-story apartment building in the affluent suburb of Heliopolis. Dozens of people were believed to be buried under rubble there.

The search resumed today just after a dawn aftershock. Ezzeddin M. Ibrahim, a government earthquake expert, said seismographs south of Cairo registered the aftershock at 3.7 on the Richter scale. Ibrahim said another one, shortly before noon, measured 3.6.

"Aftershocks can go on for up to four weeks, gradually decreasing in intensity," he said.

On Tuesday, Mubarak told reporters the cost of repairs could run higher than $121 million and initial compensation payments for victims or families $3 million.

Arab and other countries pledged more than $110 million in aid — $50 million from Saudi Arabia, $40 million from the United Arab Emirates, $20 million from Kuwait and $195,000 from the European Community.

In Washington, the U.S. State Department said the ambassador to Cairo, Robert Pelletreau, offered humanitarian help and was awaiting Egypt's request.

Mubarak, who was forced to cut short an important state visit to China, convened a Cabinet meeting to discuss the disaster. Government officials said 409 bodies have been found and 3,369 people were injured in the quake.

Gore wins debate; Stockdale a charmer

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — View the exercise as a debating contest and the verdict by a panel of debate coaches goes to spit-and-polish Al Gore.

The judges say Dan Quayle was out-debated Tuesday by Gore but both Gore and Quayle were out-charmed by James Stockdale, Ross Perot's running mate.

The retired admiral, inexperienced in both debating and politicking, came across as a fellow "you'd want to share your living room with but not the Oval Office," said judge James Unger. Stockdale just didn't have answers to some questions, he said, but "on a words-per-minute basis, he emerged as the most trustworthy."

On technical grounds — reasoning, evidence, organization, refutation, cross-examination and presentation — four of the academic judges called it a Gore win and the fifth a Gore-Quayle tie.

They gave Gore 118 points to 106 for Quayle and 88 for Stockdale. A perfect score would be 150.

But a few were uncertain that would be the political verdict. "I gave higher numbers to Gore, but I think Quayle won," said Dallas Perkins, director of forensics at Harvard University. "Gore just seemed too smooth and too tanned."

"Quayle clearly carried out what the Republicans wanted him to do," he said. "They told him to attack and he did that."

And James Copeland, executive secretary of the National Forensics League in Ripon, Wis., who also picked Gore as the winner, said Quayle probably did more for President Bush than Gore did for Bill Clinton.

He called Gore stiff — "a sincere high school valedictorian in a $1,000 suit."

The one thing people may remember is Quayle's aggressive, insistent assertion that Clinton can not be trusted to tell the truth, said William Southworth of the University of Redlands in California, who called it a Gore-Quayle tie.

"At some stage, Gore needed to take that issue and respond to it, and he didn't do it," Southworth said.

On one point, the judges were unanimous: Dan Quayle 1992 is a better debater than Dan Quayle 1988.

Study finds U.S. workers are more productive than Japan

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — The image of the lazy, inefficient American worker isn't true, according to a study that found U.S. employees are more productive than those in Japan, Germany, France and Britain.

If the United States is considered at the top of a scale of 100, French worker productivity was five points below at 95, West Germany was third at 89, Japan fourth at 77, and Britain fifth at 75, said William Lewis, director of the McKinsey Global Institute, which sponsored the study released Tuesday.

The United States has higher productivity than the other big industrial nations largely because of its highly competitive and open trade environment, the study said. "There's more competition for U.S. companies," said Martin Bailey, a University of Maryland economics professor and coauthor of the study. "Managers are forced to raise productivity in order to survive and be profitable."

Productivity is the ratio of goods and services produced to the resources used to produce them. Worker productivity measures goods and services produced by employees in an hour, week or year. In 1990, each full-time U.S. worker produced $49,600 in goods and services, compared with $44,200 for West German workers, $38,200 for Japanese workers, and $37,100 for British workers, the institute said.

East Germany was not included in the figures because data in the study was collected before the October 1990 reunification. The study also excluded statistics about workers in government, education, health, and real estate.

Japan led the United States in productivity in automobile production and consumer electronics, but the rest of its economy lagged behind, Lewis said.

Japanese productivity in general merchandise retailing, for example, was only 44 percent of that of U.S. workers, and Japanese factory workers overall produced only 80 percent as much as Americans on an hourly basis, the study said.

"What they've done is create a powerhouse in automobiles, semiconductors, and consumer electronics, and they've exported those products around the world," Bailey said. "But they don't encourage competition in the rest of their economy, so the rest has really languished."

Researchers had expected to find the five countries about equal because of the increasingly global marketplace and were surprised by the results, Lewis said.

Dr. Wassily Leontief of the Institute for Economic Analysis at New York University said the results also surprised him.

"The wages of American workers are not the highest, they are lower than some other countries, and usually wages are supposed to reflect productivity," Leontief said. "Supposedly, the more productive labor is, the higher wages usually are."

However, Faye Duchin, director of the Institute for Economic Analysis at New York University, said worker productivity figures should not be the only numbers considered by policy makers.

"That kind of reductionist approach is popular because it's generally relatively easy to interpret. It's useful for public debate and things like that, but I'm not sure how much it advances us in understanding a basis for action."

The McKinsey Global Institute, a Washington-based division of the McKinsey consulting firm, combined data from a Dutch study on manufacturing with figures it compiled on the service sector for an overall estimate of productivity.

Moving ahead in community

New Big Spring City Manager Lanny Lambert has been in our community for nearly two weeks now, and while he's got his hands full trying to learn the ins and outs and keep faces and names together, he's doing all the right things.

Obviously a "people person," Mr. Lambert has been pounding the pavement and pumping hands in and around Big Spring as he attempts to get a handle on things.

The proof of the pudding will be in what he can accomplish as city manager. If Mr. Lambert's accomplishments are based on his attitude and intensity level... his commitment to the community he now calls home... then he will have one of the more successful runs ever as city manager of our community.

We encourage you to take the time to meet Mr. Lambert. We also encourage you to support his efforts to help make our community a better place to live, work and raise a family.

Guerrero support sends bad message

To the editor:

In my opinion, those who now support Lena Guerrero are sending a message loud and clear to our young people of this country. The message is this. It is OK to misrepresent your school records and to claim degrees and honors never received, if it will get you a top job, high pay, and glory.

However the OK message doesn't stop here. If it is OK to falsify your records after graduation, then it must be just as OK to cheat in getting your grades. Could you explain it any differently to your children? And why just pick out schooling?

Let's ask our parents this question. Would you want your children on a school bus driven by someone who had never had any driving lessons or who had failed his driving tests, but faked a license?

Let's ask travelers if they would be happy flying in a plane piloted by someone who had never received a license, but used a falsified certificate?

To make matters even worse, when first confronted with the facts, Guerrero responded saying she, "thought she had graduated." No one "thinks" he or she has graduated from a College or University. You either have or you haven't. And with five (5) failed courses?

It gets still worse. When the Governor of our State of Texas first learned of the facts, did she come out and denounce the action as not tolerable for a public figure? No, she supported Guerrero!

Does this not say all there is to say about our Governor?

Some of my Spanish friends feel that Guerrero shamed the Hispanic race. I don't agree. I feel race has nothing to do with the price of beans. Our whole system has been shamed. Certainly someone at UT knew the facts and undoubtedly know about others.

What kind of leaders appoint people to positions with no concern for their background? What about our students at our colleges and universities who are right now putting in sweat and tears to attain their degrees? How do they feel? What about those graduates who in the past slaved hard getting their grades? I know one mother who said her fairly recently graduated son is mad as, shall we say "heck." Mad, because of the toil and effort he put in to attain his degrees.

Is our country ready for a new code of standards, — WHY FRET IT, IF YOU CAN FAKE IT?

Lastly, where are the clergy across this country? Are not they supposed to be most concerned about our morals and ethics? I don't just refer to the above example, but to others that are frequently brought to our attention.

Remember, in almost all companies of any size, if misrepresentation of your background on your application or resume, is discovered, it is considered just cause, and legally upheld, for immediate dismissal, period.

Perot gas-tax plan primes the pump

Try to imagine Bill Clinton or George Bush saying: "And if I'm elected, you'll pay 10 cents more for a gallon of gas. That's an extra $2 for a fillup. And I'll add 10 cents every year for the next four years."

Sure, that's about as likely as either of them telling dirty traveling-salesman jokes during the next debate.

No mainstream politician would even consider telling Americans that in five years they will be paying an extra $10 for a full tank. It would be political suicide.

And that's one of the advantages Ross Perot has. Since he's such a long shot anyway, he can be fearless and toss out a sensible idea.

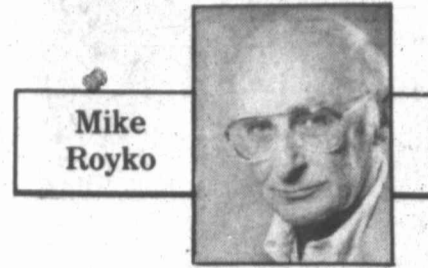

It was fun watching the reaction of Clinton and Bush after Perot said, yes, he would push for a 50-cents-a-gallon tax over five years. The billions it would bring in would pay for so much of the rebuilding that this country needs.

Both acted as if someone had put a dead snake on their dinner plates. They couldn't get away from it fast enough.

And my guess is that millions of Americans who weren't already familiar with Perot's proposal said: "Is that guy nuts? He wants to jack up the price of gas?"

But why not? Why should fuel for our cars be so much cheaper than other things we buy?

Yes, it is cheaper. In fact, very few consumer objects or services have fought off inflation as well as gas.

For those who like numbers: In 1932, you could buy a new Ford for less than $500. The lowest-priced model, a roadster, was about $410.

That year, a gallon of gas was 18 cents.

Today, the cheapest stripped-down Ford, that company says, is the Festiva L hatchback at $6,941.

And today the average cost of a gallon of gas is about $1.12.

After 60 years, you are paying about 17 times as much for the cheapest Ford. But you're paying only about six times as much for a gallon of gas.

In 1932, the average price of a three-bedroom house was a little more than $3,000. Today, almost $100,000. So the house is 33 times more expensive.

The average income in 1932 was about $1,300. Today, it's more than $30,000.

So why do Americans believe that they are already being clipped when they pay more than $1 for a gallon of gas and that it would be an outrage to tack on an extra dime for the next five years? We believe that because for so many years gas was cheap. As recently as 1972, you could buy a gallon for only 32 cents. It hadn't even doubled in price in 40 years.

That $3,000 home was up to $40,000. The cheapest car was about $2,000.

We took cheap gas as our birthright.

Then the Arabs wised up, hoisted the price, created a crisis, and gas started to catch up with everything else.

But it is still cheaper than most other things we buy. During the '50s and '60s, when we were paying about 30 cents a gallon, we were driving gas hogs. Those big V-8 engines drank it almost as fast as you put it in. Even the so-called economy models didn't get more than 15 miles to the gallon on the highway.

Now, thanks to the Arabs and their oil crisis, even Detroit's biggest models provide better mileage than the old economy jobs.

Nobody expects a stein of beer to cost a dime. But we still believe that we should be paying 30 cents a gallon for gas.

Europeans don't think that way. Nor do Canadians or hardly anyone else in the world. As Perot says, they're accustomed to $3- and $4-a-gallon fuel. That's why they've always been ahead of us in developing efficient cars, and why they don't believe that God ordained that man should use a car for any trip over one block.

Clinton knows that the idea makes sense. So does Bush. And so do most economists. If not a dime, then a nickel. If not spread over five years, then over 10.

The only flaw in the idea isn't economic, it's political. It's a tax that everybody would have to pay — rich, poor, young or old.

"Shared sacrifice," as Perot says. That's the political flaw. Everybody in this country believes in sacrifice. It's the sharing that's troublesome.

Which is why Clinton is smart enough to talk about raising the income taxes only on those making more than $200,000. Since about 99 percent of Americans don't make over $200,000, they think it's a great idea to sock it to those who do.

And if he said that he wants to spread the tax hike to those making $150,000 and up, he would still be safe because the vast majority of Americans make less than that, and they'd cheer.

So if Perot is really serious about getting elected, he'll change his gas-tax proposal before the next debate.

If he says that it would apply only to owners of cars costing $75,000 or more, especially those who snub the self-serve pumps, he might get Clinton's support.

I'm not sure about Bush, though. He might say it would be a hardship on rich old widows.

Can we rise to challenge?

So, did you watch the presidential debate Sunday night?

I did... at least part of it, any way, as I was ironing shirts and flipping back and forth between the National League Championship Series and the Saints-Rams football game.

Who won, in addition to the Pirates and Saints, that is?

Watching the various reactions, I got the feeling that H. Ross Perot (I still refuse to drop the H) scored the most points.

The reaction broadcasts ranged from a locally produced effort in Midland that included Democrats on one side of the room and Republicans on the other as well as some unidentified persons sitting in their respective living rooms to network broadcasts that sought input from focus groups across the country.

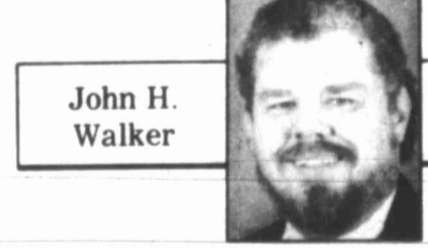

Of four or five national surveys, only one said Bill Clinton won the debate. The others gave the win to Perot and George Bush stayed in the cellar in most.

One thing the polls did tell us was that there was some losses for both Bush and Clinton while Perot gained overall in the "If the election were held today" category.

Although the Thomas Dewey-Harry Truman election tells us that other things can happen, it seems as if we could save a lot of time on the first Tuesday in November and let Bill and Hillary start moving to Washington.

There are a number of concerns about the election, and I'm not certain any of the candidates address all of them fully.

Perot's 50-cents-per-gallon gas tax would certainly raise money, especially if you could couple it with a balanced budget amendment and line-item veto — but unless we pass legislation that limits spending, all of the increased revenue in the world won't help.

Clinton wants to increase the taxes on the wealthy as well as increase taxes on some luxury-type items.

I remember the last time the Democrats did that... increasing the taxes on things like boats and wonder how many of the former employees of boat manufacturing plants that closed as a result of the drastic drop in sales are still in the unemployment lines that Clinton is so concerned about?

Bush wants to maintain a strong presence in the former Eastern Bloc nations, as well as a strong military.

I believe in the need to maintain a strong military, but can't we start committing some of our money to our own cause?

It may be possible that because of the commitment overseas we can begin to improve our own economy, but it's more than that...

Perot points out the need to rebuild our infrastructure, to take the education of our youth and our work force to levels well beyond those that currently exist... and I don't know if we can get there from here.

Can a society so lazy that it needs remote controls to change channels on its foreign-made televisions rise to the occasion? Pride... jingoism, if you will... is a strange creature. You want your country to be able to coexist with all others and, at the same time, be able to hold the upper hand.

As a child, I remember looking at toys at the variety store. I would pick one up and want it. My Mom or Dad would take it from me, turn it over and look at the bottom. If it said "Made in Japan" it was put back... it was considered to be of lesser quality than products made in the United States.

No more.

Surveys tell us that the American consumer equates the phrase "Made in Japan" with quality and places much less esteem on products made in the USA.

That's where a jingoistic attitude can be both good and bad. It's good to have that fierce pride of "I am an American" and "Buy American" but you have to be careful and not cross over the line to the bashing of the people of another nation.

Our challenge, as Americans. Our challenge, as citizens of the greatest country in the world, is to make certain that the next president of the United States of America has the opportunity to succeed.

It is our challenge to hold our elected officials accountable. It is our challenge to make them let the system work. It is our challenge to produce the best quality products for the best value in the world. It is our challenge to make certain our educational system is second-to-none and that our infrastructure is sound.

Then, and only then, can we leave behind a better opportunity for our children than we were given by our parents.

The challenge is ours. Can we rise to the challenge?

Wakefield, Bucs don't knuckle under pressure

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
ATLANTA — Tim Wakefield and the Pittsburgh Pirates didn't fold under the Atlanta Braves and the win-or-go home pressure.
 The rookie baffled the Braves again with his dipping, dancing knuckleball Tuesday night in a 13-4 victory that forced another seventh game in the National League playoffs.
 The Pirates tied the record for most runs in a playoff game. Barry Bonds homered to start the second inning and by the time the Pirates stopped eight runs later, the series was tied at three games apiece.
 Pittsburgh, which seemed destined for a third straight playoff failure, will try for another record in Game 7: the first NL team to rally from a 3-1 deficit and win the playoffs. They'll also try to do what the Braves did to them last year, rallying from 3-2 down by winning the final two games on the road.

 On Wednesday night, John Smoltz, who's already beaten Pittsburgh twice, will oppose Doug Drabek, who's lost his last three starts but hasn't had a four-game losing streak since 1989.
 Here's another number to ponder: in 12 of the last 13 playoff series, the team that won the penultimate game also won the series.

Only one team in major-league playoff history has rallied from a 3-1 deficit by winning the final two games on the road: Kansas City in 1985 against Toronto. The Blue Jays' manager? Bobby Cox.
 "But we haven't done anything yet, all we've done is force a Game 7," said Lloyd McClendon, who had three of the Pirates' 13 hits.
 Atlanta has a statue of a knuckleballer outside its stadium, and the way he's pitching, Wakefield may find one waiting for him back in Pittsburgh.
 Wakefield, who allowed nine hits, is 10-1 since being called up July 31 and 2-0 in the series, and 3-0 overall against Atlanta.

Atlanta's Tom Glavine allowed seven straight hits in that one, and what prevented that from occurring again was Atlanta's spring training-like defense. In all, the Pirates had a record-tying eight hits, Atlanta had an on-field error and a mental one, and Glavine had a nightmare.
 Wakefield's five-hitter saved the Pirates, beating Glavine 3-2 in Game 3. What really got Pittsburgh going, though, was Bonds finally breaking out of his playoff funk in the Pirates' 7-1 romp in Game 5.
 Bonds isn't done, and neither are the Pirates.
 Bonds had only one hit in the series until Game 5, but he had two in the second inning, as did McClendon, tying a playoff record. McClendon was 3 for 3 with a homer and tied the playoff record with five straight hits over two games. He's 8 for 11 so far in the playoffs.

 Bonds' homer, a jolt into the right-center seats on a 1-2 pitch, was nearly the only run the Pirates needed. They got seven more.
 Jeff King followed with a single. McClendon singled. Don Slaught's double scored them.
 Slaught scored when shortstop Jeff Blauser threw wildly trying to get him at third on Jose Lind's grounder, and Glavine was already falling apart. So was his defense.

 Wakefield put down a sacrifice bunt, but catcher Damon Berryhill mysteriously yelled at Glavine to throw to third — and Lind was safe by two feet. Gary Redus doubled, and it still wasn't over.
 Bell finished the Braves off with a three-run homer over the left-field wall, it was 8-0 — and Glavine was gone. So were Atlanta's 2-0 and 3-1 series leads.
 The Pirates still had a four-run inning left in them, working over reliever Marvin Freeman in the fifth for Lind's two-run double and RBI singles by Redus and Andy Van Slyke. McClendon homered in the sixth.

Lady Steers all alone in second

By STEVE BELVIN
Sports Editor
 After Tuesday's Big Spring-Lake View volleyball game Lady Steer coach Lois Ann McKenzie was in a joking mood.

"I figured if (the crowd) had to stay three games, they might as well get their money's worth," McKenzie said.

The Big Spring coach was right about the crowd getting its money's worth as the Lady Steers took a 15-9, 10-15, 15-13 victory over the San Angelo Maidens in 3-4A volleyball play.

Coupled with Fort Stockton's win over Monahans, Big Spring (6-2) is now in sole possession of second place, one game behind Pecos (7-1). Monahans (5-3) drops into a third place tie with Fort Stockton. Big Spring goes to 12-11 for the season while Lake View falls to 4-9.

The two teams did indeed give the crowd a good show, as the hard luck Lake View squad saw another match slip away. The Maidens have taken every team in the district to three games, but their only win has come over Sweetwater.

In game three Tuesday night at Steer Gym, it appeared the Maidens might get district win No. 2. Lake View's Pam Shockey served three points, giving the visitors a 13-10 advantage. Lady Steers' sophomore Kathy Smith, who played extremely well down the stretch, ended the rally with a kill.

After a couple of sideouts, Smith serve three points to tie the game at 13-13. The first point came on a missed dink by Lake View's Stephanie Moorehead. Anne Rodriguez got a kill for the second point and Lake View's Jenny Ellison's kill attempt sailed out for the third point.

Tuesday's Results
 Big Spring def. San Angelo Lake View 15-9, 10-15, 15-13; Fort Stockton def. Monahans 16-14, 4-15, 15-6; Pecos def. Andrews 15-5, 15-12.
Saturday's Schedule
 Big Spring at Pecos; Fort Stockton at Sweetwater; Lake View at Andrews.

Lake View's Tonya Allen missed her serve, bringing Rodriguez to the line for Big Spring. Rodriguez got her first point on a kill by Sarah Bristow. Rodriguez got the final point when the Maidens were whistled for a hitting violation.

McKenzie said her bench played a major role in the win. "If I could get everybody to where they were out of substitutions, I'd be OK. My subs are better than any of the others. When I run out of subs, I've still got players," she said. That factor came into play in the third game when Lake View was out of substitutions and coach Sandy Brown couldn't get leading spiker Rhonda Wallace back into the game.

"I was real pleased with the way Lana Henderson played on the back line. We were having trouble at that spot. Cassie (Underwood) has been sick, she's had three shots in the last two days. She was dragging in the second game. I was glad they called a timeout," said McKenzie.

Underwood played her usual consistent game: setting, good defense and a season-high nine kills. Smith followed with eight kills and Tee Marion led everyone with 13 kills.

Big Spring Lady Steers sophomore spiker Sarah Bristow hits a spike attempt in recent 3-4A volleyball action at Steer Gym. Tuesday night at Steer Gym the Lady Steers took over sole possession of second place by defeating the San Angelo Lake View Maidens 15-10, 9-15, 15-13. Bristow had four kills in eight attempts in the match.

Rangers interview Royster

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
PHOENIX — Jerry Royster, a manager in the Los Angeles Dodgers farm system, was interviewed for the Texas Rangers' managerial post.

Rangers general manager Tom Grieve flew into Phoenix Tuesday and met with Royster, who is currently managing the Sun Cities Solar Sox of the new Arizona Fall League.

Royster, 39, has managed in the Dodgers' minor-league system for four years. This past season, Royster led the Class AA San Antonio Missions of the Texas League to a 62-74 mark.

Royster has also managed single seasons with rookie-level Kissimmee of the Florida State League, Class A Yakima of the Northwest League and Class A Vero Beach of the Florida State League.

Royster said he was one of three finalists for the Rangers job. Grieve interviewed Montreal bench coach Kevin Kennedy on Thursday.

Can Steers pull off magic again at Mustang Bowl?

With all Crossroads Country teams now in district play the races for playoff spots are starting to take shape.

On the home front, the Big Spring Steers find themselves in a must win situation after tying Monahans and losing to Andrews last week. Things don't get any easier with the Sweetwater Mustangs this week.

Sweetwater is picked to win the district. Big Spring can't lose any more games. A consolation for Big Spring is that neither Sweetwater, Monahans or Andrews has played each other. Another consolation is that Big Spring owns the distinction of being one of the few teams in modern times to beat the Mustangs at the Mustang Bowl. Big Spring has won the last two times the teams played there.

In 1989 the Steers beat Sweetwater 36-15 and in 1990 the Steers beat the Mustangs 16-7 in the Bowl. Maybe history will repeat itself.

Steve Belvin

In District 6-2A, home of the Coahoma Bulldogs and Stanton Buffalos, it appears the playoff race could go down to the wire. The district is so balanced that six of the league's seven teams could beat each other on any given night.
 Coahoma, 0-2 in district play, and Stanton, 1-2 district play, meet this Friday in Coahoma. The winner keeps its hopes alive, the loser can start thinking about next year.
 Ozona's play is a good indication of the district's balance. Not picked to be a factor in the playoff race,

Sands RB leads Honor Roll list

By STEVE BELVIN
Sports Editor

Sands went into its first District 5 game last week against the Dawson Dragons with only one win under its belt. The favored Dragons brought a 4-1 mark into the contest.

But the Mustangs, who've been beset by injuries this season, proved capable of making a run at a return trip to the state playoffs with a 28-22 win. Leading the way in the upset victory was junior running back Heath Gillespie.

Gillespie carried the ball 18 times for 100 yards, including a seven-yard touchdown. Gillespie also caught six passes for 75 yards, including touchdown receptions of 10 and 14 yards. For his efforts, Gillespie is the Crossroads Country Honor Roll Offensive Player of the Week.

The Sands junior is joined by Borden County senior linebacker John Paul Harris, who helped the Coyotes to a 56-6 win over Hermleigh. In only two quarters of play, Harris made 10 tackles, recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass. For his play, he is the Crossroads Country Defensive Player of the Week.

Other top defensive performers were:

- In Coahoma's 41-12 loss to Wall, tackle Mario Martinez made seven tackles.
- In Stanton's 22-21 loss to Ozona, tackles Phillip Hinojosa made 11 tackles, got one quarterback sack and recovered a fumble.
- Greenwood middle linebacker Damon Cumba made 13 tackles and intercepted a pass in a 10-7 loss to Crane.
- In Forsan's 32-13 loss to Roscoe, outside linebacker Oscar Barraza made 19 tackles and recovered a fumble.

- In Sands' victory, middle linebacker Cory Maxwell made 19 tackles.
- Big Spring middle linebacker Clint Kemper made 12 tackles in a 17-7 loss to Andrews.
- Top offensive performances were:
- In Coahoma's loss, backup quarterback Juan Ruiz filled in for injured starter Bryan Sledge and completed four of 10 passes for 89 yards and one TD; tailback Greg Atkinson carried 19 times for 105 yards.
- Wide receiver Doug Conner caught eight passes for 100 yards in Colorado City's loss.

- In Borden County's win, Clint Willis carried 11 times for 115 yards and a TD, completed three passes for 23 yards and a TD and returned a kickoff 47 yards for a score. Kirk Jones carried three times for 38 yards and a TD and returned a kickoff 55 yards for a score.
- In Grady's loss to Klondike, quarterback Timmy Garza passed for three scores, completing 8 of 19 passes for 192 yards.
- In Sands' win, Cory Maxwell completed 9 of 12 passes for 148 yards and two scores.
- In Big Spring's loss to Andrews, tight end Oscar Cervantes caught three passes for 63 yards.

Sports briefs

Mariners fire Bill Plummer

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Mariners fired manager Bill Plummer and his six-man staff after the club finished last overall in the American League with a 64-98 record.

General manager Woody Woodward made the announcement less than a year after hiring Plummer to replace Jim Lefebvre, who was let go after the Mariners' only winning season in franchise history.

Plummer was fired with a year left on his two-year contract that paid him $250,000 annually. Pitching coach Dan Warthen, hitting coach Gene Clines, third-base coach Marty Martinez, first-base coach Rusty Kuntz, bench coach Russ Nixon and bullpen coach Roger Hansen were also fired.

UNLV official gets death threats

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A former UNLV interim athletic director told university regents during a closed personnel session that he feared for his life if he continued to investigate the school's basketball program, according to a report in The Las Vegas Sun.

Dennis Finckle told regents last year that he received a threat from someone who suggested he "make peace" with restaurateur and booster Freddie Glusman or he would be killed. The Sun reported.

For now, mutiny over at South Carolina

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A day after threatening what one player said was mutiny, South Carolina's winless football team returned to practice Tuesday after an ultimatum by coach Sparky Woods.

Every player — except for a few excused absences — showed up for morning meetings with position coaches, Woods said. He told the players Monday night that those who didn't would no longer be on the team.

After the meetings, Woods met for about two minutes with the players to welcome them back.

No players quit or were kicked off the team, Woods said, adding he didn't plan to try to find out who the revolt's leaders were or discipline them.

"I'm really not interested in going on a witch hunt because of the fear of locating the wrong person," he said. "What I'm happy about is ... that the team is back."

The players met without the coaches Monday afternoon and voted 62-24 to ask Woods to quit, WOLO-TV in Columbia reported.

The vote came amid a season of discontent for the Gamecocks, who are 0-5 in their inaugural year in the Southeastern Conference. South Carolina has lost nine straight, which is the school's longest losing streak ever and the longest current losing streak in Division I-A.

South Carolina is the only winless SEC team and the Gamecocks have been outscored 154-47 heading into Saturday's game with No. 15 Mississippi State at Williams-Brice Stadium.

Minnesota coach more worried about wins than fans

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Minnesota ranks last in Big Ten football attendance. Again.

Through three games this season, the Gophers have averaged 34,248 fans. And Saturday's Homecoming game against Michigan State isn't expected to match that figure.

Crowds have been even smaller than last season, when the 36,369 average — a 15-year low — hastened the departure of coach John Gutekunst.

But Gutekunst's replacement, Jim Wacker, said Tuesday that he has more to worry about than getting fans into the Metrodome.

Like winning.

"I don't even ever worry about attendance," said Wacker, who has attendance clauses in his contract. "I know our budget's depending upon that down the road, but I don't have any way to control it."

"All I've gotta do is win football games. If we win, attendance'll take care of itself. Until we start winning, we're gonna have an attendance problem. So does everybody else in America.

The Gophers, 1-4, who went 2-9 last season and are 1-4 this year, haven't attracted many new fans in a highly competitive sports market that includes the Vikings, Twins, Timberwolves and North Stars.

"The good news is, I think we've had some exciting games. I think it's a fun team to watch," Wacker said. "Once the fans start coming, they'll come back. And once we start winning, we'll pack that place. They'll go crazy and we won't have any more problems to worry about."

"But we've gotta win. That's all I'm gonna concern myself with. Boy, would it be nutty for me to lay awake nights worrying about attendance. I'm worried about linebackers and big tackles and fast backs, that's what I'm worried about. I don't know when we're gonna stop them."

At his weekly news conference Tuesday, Wacker was asked to rate his performance to date.

"I'm 1-4," he said. "The kids are doing great, but the head coach is kinda crummy, 'cause he's responsible for the wins and losses. I'll never grade Wacker high. The minute you do that, you're in a world of hurt."

The Lions beat Eldorado, a top contender, 19-14. The next week Ozona blows a three touchdown lead in the second half and loses to another top contender, Wall, 30-23. Last week Stanton, chosen by one magazine to finish last in 6-2A, has a 21-7 lead against Ozona, only to have Ozona rally for a 22-21 win.

Another evenly matched district appears to be six-man District 5. It's no doubt that Wellman is the best team in the league, but the battle for second will be close, with Grady, Klondike, Sands and Dawson all having legitimate chances.

Last Friday's opening night of district play already produced a couple of surprises. Klondike upset Grady, a team that had previously lost one game, 26-24. The same thing happened in the Sands-Dawson game. Dawson had only one loss going into the game while Sands had only one win. Sands came away with a 28-22 victory.

Things really heat up this week with Sands and Klondike playing each other.

Another district that could have a close race is six-man District 6. At first it looked like Borden County and Ira would battle for the championship. But now it seems Loraine has something to say about it.

Loraine opened some eyes when beaten 35-30 by defending Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools six-man state champion Midland Christian. Loraine opened more eyes when it beat Southland 90-45 the following week. The word on Loraine is that the Bulldogs can score points. The question remains: whether their defense can stop a good team from racking up as many points.

Incidentally, top contenders Ira and Borden County meet in Gail this week.

In District 8-A, home of the Garden City Bearkats, it appears the Bearkats will be in a fight for second place behind Rankin, the class of the district.

Guess who Garden City is going to get pushed by? The Wink Wildcats, coached by former Garden City head man Sam Scott. There will be a lot of interest when the Bearkats and Wildcats hook up Oct. 30 in Garden City.

I wonder what kind of reception coach Scott will get?

As a team, Big Spring downed 39 of 88 kills for 44 percent.

McKenzie said the play of Rodriguez and Laura Elrod in game three made a big difference. Down the stretch of the match, Rodriguez came through with several key kills and Elrod had two big blocks.

"Finally at the end of the third game Anne came through for us. She had been having trouble and I just told her she was going to have to start hitting the ball," said McKenzie.

Lake View downed 22 of 62 kill attempts for 35 percent. Wallace led the way with nine kills, followed by Moorehead with six.

In junior varsity action Lake View won 15-6, 6-15, 16-14, dropping

Big Spring to 14-9 for the season. JV coach Angela Simpson said Leslie Elrod, Kristy Birrell, Amy Jones, Natalie Newsom, Molly Smith and Karl Blausner all played well.

The Lady Steers could regain a share of first place with a win over Pecos Saturday in Pecos. Freshmen play starts at 12:30 p.m., followed by JV and varsity play.

D-FY-IT members disagree on center's rules

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

A potential alcohol and drug-free "Teen Center" for D-FY-IT students could turn out to be not so drug- and alcohol-free, according to a meeting of the local Drug-Free Youths in Texas group on Tuesday.

About 30 students attended a meeting after school in the high school cafeteria to hash out some of the details about operating a youth-oriented club in the Highland Mall.

Membership into the club would have depended on students being card-carrying members of D-FY-IT, as originally intended by Jimmy Cox, D-FY-IT president, and Bettye Gossett, Highland Mall manager.

But, some members felt differently.

"If we're allowed to bring a guest (not a member of D-FY-IT) then we could encourage them to become a member of the group," said Guy Talamantez, a sophomore D-FY-IT member.

Shelli Webb, a senior D-FY-IT member, said the rules for admittance would shut out people. "We should be able to bring at least one person who's not a member," she said. "I have a boyfriend who's a junior in college, and I won't do anything on the weekends unless it's with him... It (D-FY-IT members only) limits us."

The president of the group said he felt the original plan should be the basis for admittance into the club.

"I think (the club) should be strictly for D-FY-IT members because it's the only way that we can say it would be truly drug-free," said Cox, a junior.

In the next couple of weeks, leasing agreements will be finalized, said Stan Parker, the group's sponsor. "It's going to be up to the entire group to decide."

Gossett, the Highland Mall manager, said bank officials signed a lease (for liability insurance purposes) on Tuesday to give students the go ahead for the club.

According to John Laboe, senior asset manager for the Dallas-based Bluebonnet, bank officials had drafted a lease two weeks ago for the students to accept, but another legal step remains in finalizing the lease.

the creation of construction crews," Lambert told the council. Lambert estimates the city can do the job in Capehart for $217,200. The council, meeting in chambers Tuesday, reviewed bids to do the same job for $310,576 from Rhoades Construction Co. of Lubbock and $347,902 from Keystone Construction Co.

The city's cost would include rented equipment and the "best" materials, Lambert said. The crew would be headed by a foreman and backhoe operator, employees the city already has, he said. Two part-time employees, paid $5 to $6 an hour, would be hired.

"It'll take six months," he said of the job. He added, "We'll know what we got out there."

The council in September sold $665,000 in certificates of obligation to do the Capehart water pipe improvements and other water pipe improvements in other areas. The certificates will be paid back in 10 years with interest on the unpaid balance accruing at 6 percent a year.

Funds to pay back the certificates will come from a 17-cent hike in the water rate, to $1.80 per 1,000 gallons, that went into effect this month and a $2.50 hike last year in the water base rate, to

An extra $100,000 a year to be generated from the hike this month is earmarked for ongoing water pipe improvements.

Gore the winner, with the dissenter calling it a Gore-Quayle tie. Still, one echoed Republican assertions that viewers couldn't help but leave the debate with Quayle's questions about Clinton's candor in their heads.

Republican strategists promised Bush would continue such attacks when the presidential contenders meet again Thursday in Richmond, Va., and then for a debate finale Monday in East Lansing, Mich.

"I'm looking forward to my next debate," Bush said in a congratulatory phone call to Quayle. "It was a home run," he said of his vice president's performance.

Democrats described Quayle as ranting and shrill. In contrast, they argued Gore was substantive, calm — and presidential.

"Al Gore made it clear that he has the character, judgment and vision to step into the Oval Office should, heaven forbid, something happen to me," Clinton said from Middleburg, Va.

Perot supporters said Stockdale proved himself no politician — and for them that was a plus.

"He showed the American people a contrast between a real person and a political pro," said Ross Perot Jr., the billionaire's son.

a more subjective manner, she said.

In her article, Goldman also stated, "... Many Chicanos no longer feel the necessity to restrict their vision to the barrio where they were raised (though some argue this is a betrayal); while others have expanded the barrio so that it connects with regional, national and international panoramas and issues, political, social..."

"With easel paintings, photography, film and video, holograms, installations and performances, Chicanos examine not only their own space and place, but that of the mainstream."

The generation's style is a hybrid of Mexican, Latin American and United States art influences, she said.

Before the Chicano art movement began in the late 1960s, Mexican-American art in the United States followed the mainstream, including adapting some of its stereotypes about the Mexican-American community, Goldman said.

'Women's star projects West Texas wit

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Features Editor

Judith Ivey, newest star of CBS' Designing Women, said a West Texas upbringing gave her the dry sense of humor she projects as B.J. Poteet, a rich Texas widow, on the popular comedy.

Born in El Paso, Ivey also lived in Odessa and briefly — as a child — in Big Spring.

"All of us on the show are from the South, different states," Ivey said recently in a telephone interview. "We've talked about that, no matter where you're from — Georgia, Oklahoma, Texas — you understand the inflection, the wit, in the language.

"I found that, up North, they take it very seriously sometimes."

Ivey said show creators were shooting for a melting pot of Texas women when they created her character. For the rich Texan's bombast, Ivey draws heavily from the public personas of Gov. Ann Richards and columnist Molly Ivins.

A veteran performer of stage as well as film, Ivey has two Tony Awards to her credit and a host of other honors for her performances. She has worked with such high-caliber names as Jason Robards, Steve Martin, Joanne Woodward and Paul Newman.

But, despite growing fame and fan recognition, Ivey says her life is not that much different from the folks back home.

"It isn't exactly the same as anyone else's, I'm sure," she said. "I'm doing interviews and photo sessions. But life is pretty much the same — you're still getting your child up and ready to go every day, normal things like that."

But — unlike most of us — on the job, Ivey spends more than an hour in the makeup chair before each filming.

"Because I play such a glamorous woman, it can take a long time," she explained. Poteet also wears heavy jewelry and very expensive clothes — habits Ivey said are complete opposites to herself.

Married to independent producer Tim Braine, Ivey is mother to 3-year-old Maggie.

"She's very theatrical," Ivey

Judith Ivey, newest star of CBS' Designing Women, was born in El Paso and spent her childhood in parts of West Texas, including Big Spring. Ivey plays a rich Texas widow, on the popular comedy.

said of her daughter. But will the little one follow her mother into an acting career?

"Who knows, but she really does have a flair for the dramatic."

Ivey herself never seemed destined to become an actress. Growing up, her sister Sara was the one everyone considered theatrical, Ivey said.

Sara was born in Big Spring, where Ivey's family lived for a short time while she was a toddler. Her father, Nathan Ivey, worked with community colleges in several Texas cities — including Odessa, where they moved after Big Spring.

All members of her very supportive family — including brother, Jim, a college theater professor in Abilene — are faithful Women watchers, Ivey said.

The Texas transplant came back to visit Odessa briefly quite a few several years ago, but Ivey said she wants to return to Texas again.

"I've thought of coming back for a kind of sentimental journey," she said.

But she's very busy. So, for now, Ivey said, "I'll hold down the fort out here."

Crafts festival this weekend

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

More than 250 exhibitors from across the Southwest will be in the Dorothy Garrett Coliseum Saturday and Sunday.

This is the 16th Annual Big Spring Arts and Crafts Festival, featuring original art, limited edition prints and handcrafted items, said Mel Prather, founder and chairman of the annual event.

This weekend's event will differ from earlier festivals in a number of ways, Prather said. "For one, we'll be featuring a number of interesting exhibits that have not appeared in previous shows.

And for another, we will be hosting a drawing to benefit the Permian Basin Food Bank."

"They had already gone through as much food by the end of September as they had in all of last year and the big months are still ahead.

To participate in the drawing is fairly simple. We will have a number of handmade items available in a drawing. Patrons will be able to enter their name in the drawing with each can of food or 50 cents donated to the food bank.

And since the food bank serves the Big Spring area, we would hope local residents would make a special effort to assist this worthwhile endeavor."

Hours for the festival are

Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m., Prather said.

Of the new exhibitors in the show, Prather said there will be booths featuring carved, wood fish, dried wildflowers from Colorado and California, wood portraits of dogs, Old-World Santas in both ceramic and cloth, seasonal decorations and free-form jewelry.

Furniture will be available in both finished and unfinished form, both Southwestern and contemporary styles, he said.

Some of the more unusual items at the show will again include tree spirits, hardwood replicas of antique cats, Christmas ornaments from gourds and original sweaters.

Lot of living in Buffett's book

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Jimmy Buffett has the image of a guy so laid-back he can scarcely bend his elbow at the beach.

That's occasionally true, says the singer-songwriter-guitarist, barefoot and casually dressed in a purple shirt and knockabout pants during an interview to promote his first novel, the breezy "Where Is Joe Merchant?"

But he says: "I also love to work."

He loves performing, too, and fans flock to his performances.

In the summer of 1991, grosses for his concerts put him third, behind the Grateful Dead and Guns N' Roses, according to PollStar, the concert promoters' trade journal. This summer, he thinks he came in third again.

"I'm more popular now in terms of concert attendance than when 'Margaritaville' was a hit," he says.

So, although he hasn't had a huge hit since "Margaritaville" 15 years ago, Buffett didn't have to write a book to feed his family or fill empty days.

"I think I was driven to write because I wound up living in Key West, which was a literary town when I went there. I wrote travel pieces for The Miami Herald and I was always writing short stories," says Buffett, who published 12 of them in 1989 as "Tales from Margaritaville."

The short-story book was successful. I couldn't leave it there. I didn't try to write 'War and Peace.' I tried to write something you could take to the beach. I wanted it to read easy."

In "Where Is Joe Merchant?" — No. 4 on the Publishers Weekly best-selling fiction list Oct. 2 — Buffett wrote about what he knows: the rock scene, the milieu for his title character, and piloting boats and flying planes around Caribbean islands, which is protagonist Frank Bama's forte.

"Frank Bama isn't me but we Hopeful actors line the sidewalk outside Planet Hollywood in New York waiting their turn to audition for the title role of a remake of the "B" movie classic, "I was a Teenage Werewolf." The "cattle call" audition this summer drew dozens of actors and actresses.

St. Lawrence stirs memories

On Sunday, October 4, we attended the annual St. Lawrence Festival. Our first, and I must admit a delightful experience. The food was marvelous, especially the homemade German sausage for which it is so famous. The efficiency and dedication with which it was run was very impressive. To the volunteers who worked so long and hard, I would like to say thank you for a great day!

The St. Lawrence sausage we brought home prompted me to dig out the dusty Pennsylvania Dutch recipe file box. The event brought back memories of Lewisburg, Pa. where we had the pleasure of living in the early 1900s.

Lewisburg was settled by the Germans. It is a small, quaint town of about 4,000 people. Bucknell University is located there. The town is nestled in the green, rolling hills of Central Pennsylvania next to the Susquehanna River.

The pristine countryside is sprinkled with predominately German and Amish dairy and gardening farms. It was not uncommon to drive down the road and see the Amish traveling in their horse and buggy vehicles.

Every Wednesday the Amish would bring their homemade goodies to the local farmer's market. Their bakery items usually consisted of Shoofly pie, apple strudel, funnel cakes and cakes of all kinds, as well as cookies and breads. They also offered canned foods, jellies and wonderful homemade noodles. The entire family took part in the food preparation and sales.

The men and boys would be wearing black trousers and vests with blue, green or purple shirts and black wide-brimmed hats, while the women and girls wore black pinafores or ankle-length dresses. The women and girls wore their hair tightly braided, piled on their heads and covered with little white or black caps.

Their religious convictions do not permit worldly trappings. Their homes have no running water, electricity or modern day conveniences. The fields are plowed by a horse pulling a plow with the farmer guiding while walking behind. Their children are schooled in homes and to the 8th grade level. Picture-taking is not permitted.

The Amish are hard working, self-sustaining, contented people and display tranquility and peace of mind.

I found the following recipes the hometown people shared with me, and picked out a couple you might want to serve with German sausage.

HOT GERMAN POTATO SALAD
6 slices thick bacon, cut into 1" pieces
6 medium potatoes, unpeeled
1 medium onion, chopped fine
1 tsp. dry mustard
1 tsp. celery seed
1/4 cup sugar
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. black pepper
1/4 cup water

1/4 cup vinegar
1 egg, slightly beaten
Boil potatoes until fork tender (about 35 minutes). Drain in colander. Remove skins while hot and cut into one-half cubes. Fry bacon in skillet until crisp. Remove from drippings and drain on paper towel. Reserve 1/4 cup drippings in skillet.

Mix bacon, potatoes and onions in large bowl. Mix together dry mustard, celery seed, sugar, salt, pepper, water, vinegar and egg and add to bacon drippings in skillet. Cook, stirring constantly, over medium heat until mixture thickens (about 3 minutes). Pour hot liquid mixture over potato mixture and stir gently until liquid is absorbed. Serve warm. This reheats well in microwave. Serves 6-8.

RED CABBAGE (ROTE KRAUT)
1 medium head red cabbage, quartered, cored and shredded coarsely
1 apple, cored and diced
1 small onion, chopped
1 cup water
1/2 cup apple cider vinegar
2 tsp. sugar
1/2 tsp. caraway seed
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. black pepper
Combine red cabbage, apple and onion in dutch oven. Add water, vinegar, sugar, caraway seed, salt and pepper. Bring to boil. Cover, reduce heat to medium and cook approximately 45 minutes. Stir occasionally. Mixture should cook down to about one-half of original volume. Serves 10-12.

Potpourri: You can make it at home

By GALE WILLIAMS
Thomson News Service

Potpourri, almost by definition, is a little of this, a little of that. Take one bowl of dried leaves. Add a tantalizing fragrance. Stir in aesthetic appeal. Sit back and wait while your friends ooh and ah over the results.

Ready-made potpourri mixtures can cost as much as $8 or more for a coffee-bean-sized bag. But Sharon Richards, craft specialist at Wilson's Garden Center near Newark, Ohio, says people can make it themselves at home for far less money.

A few additions to home-grown ingredients make a fragrant potpourri to use as a centerpiece on an autumn table or to give as gifts to friends.

Orris root and scented oils are the only two things most people will need to buy, if they already have access to a flower garden and shrubbery, Richards says. Scented oils are available at pharmacies or at herb specialty shops, says Richards.

Scents can also be added to the mix with common kitchen cupboard ingredients such as vanilla beans, whole cloves, whole allspice and cardamom, cinnamon sticks and bay leaves.

With dried flowers, keep some heads whole, and pluck others apart. Richards says picked-apart mums and marigolds make a good color addition for fall potpourri, but dried whole strawflower heads or rosebuds will make the mixture prettier.

- Toss about four handfuls of a bulk dried material into a large pottery bowl, such as dried evergreen needles.
- Add dried petals, flowers and buds.
- Mixing with your hands after each ingredient, add leaves, herbs, fixative or drying agent (orris root), then spices. If the drying agent is omitted, you are likely to get mold.
- Use hands to stir, and not a spoon. Hands help keep the oils well-distributed and are less likely to crush fragile, dried leaves.
- Add scented oils last, a drop at a time, stirring after each drop until it smells right to you.
- Put all of it into a covered container for at least a week — an old tin might work well, or a glass apothecary jar. Store it up to a month, stirring every other day.

Autumn potpourri ideas — dried lemon and orange peel, petals from button chrysanthemums (mums), bittersweet berries, tiny hemlock pine cones, wheat heads, yellow statice, and cinnamon sticks.

Celebrate Halloween with the family — a few ideas

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

Halloween can be a howl for parents and children alike — especially when everyone gets together for a family Halloween dinner.

There are two tacks to take before the children go trick or treating: Serve them a junk food dinner of choice, just to set the tone. Or serve them the healthiest raw vegetables and fruits you can find, to counterbalance the bags full of candy that are sure to follow.

Cookbook writer Elizabeth Berg, who alternates between the two, suggests a Halloween dinner menu consisting of hearty pumpkin or split pea soup, crusty Italian or French bread, a crisp green salad and a nippy cheese spread. For dessert: orange sherbet and thin chocolate wafers.

As for those bags full of candy the kids bring home ... Berg suggests a visit from the "Sugar Witch," who will take away the extra candy, leaving behind a "coupon" for other sugarless treats.

Note of gratitude gives family solace

DEAR ABBY: This letter is long overdue. Thanks to a suggestion we read in your column, all seven of us children wrote a letter of gratitude to our parents for their 40th wedding anniversary in 1988.

In 1990, our brother Dan died suddenly. He was 34. As family members gathered to plan the funeral liturgy, the letter Dan had written to our parents in 1988 came to mind. Dan had always been a quiet person and not one to express his feelings, but he poured out his heart in that letter, expressing his love and gratitude to Mom and Dad for having given him life even though there were some difficult times.

Dan's letter was read during the Mass, and we want you to know that it comforted our grieving family at a very sad time.

DENNIS THE MENACE

Dear Abby

Please forgive the lateness of this letter. We just wanted you to know how much we appreciated your suggestion that did so much for this family. God bless you, Abby. --THE SEVICK CHILDREN, CHICAGO

DEAR CHILDREN: Thank you for writing. No need to apologize for the lateness of your letter. At least you wrote.

For years I have prodded my young readers who are fortunate enough to have their parents (or even one parent) to give a gift that money can't buy: a letter expressing love and gratitude for the countless things that a parent must do to raise a child.

My belated condolences on the loss of your beloved brother Dan.

DEAR ABBY: I work as a cashier in a major grocery store in Garland, N.C. Recently a woman with a newborn baby came through my checkout lane. After I told her the amount of her purchase, she reached into her bra, pulled out a wad of food stamps, handed them to me and said, "Here -- they're wet because I am breast-feeding."

Abby, what do you think about this? -- WANDA

DEAR WANDA: I've heard of the milk of human kindness, but I think your customer overdid it.

DEAR ABBY: I read a letter a while ago in your column concerning the physician who complained because some veterinarian made more money than he makes.

I have a story I'd like to add: A few years ago, a woman brought a very sick cat to our small animal hospital. She complained that the cat had been urinating all over her house and furniture.

We kept her cat and worked on him for three days. When the woman returned to pick up her cat, she was given her bill, which totaled $78.

She hit the roof, screaming that it didn't cost that much to see her own physician!

I then told her that if she had gone to her doctor because she had been urinating all over the house and furniture, and he cured her in three days, she would have gladly paid the $78 on the spot. She gave me no argument, and has been a loyal and satisfied client ever since. --SUSAN MC CURDY, PALM DESERT, CALIF.

FOR THURSDAY, OCT. 15, 1992

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make the most of your high energy today. A situation that is confusing or not exactly to your liking might feel quite strange, but you are more than able to reverse it. What goes on today is somewhat related to what happened in May. Tonight: Catch up on a friend's news.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Now is the time to act on the career move or job-related proposal you have been contemplating. Use the afternoon to straighten out your desk and your mind. Tonight: Have a long overdue talk.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What occurs in the morning, if taken as a constructive warning, can help you in an important venture. Be more creative at work, do a better job of listening and look to new ideas and solutions. Radiate your happier side. Tonight: Relax in the tub.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A money matter can be straightened out, although you might have your doubts. Make a point of having a one-to-one talk with those who have an impact on your work and finances. Tonight: Chill out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A partner takes a stand that does not make you happy. Don't make a fuss. Allow yourself a new opening. Creativity flows, and your ideas prove to be winners. Understand another's confusion. Tonight: Check in with an old friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You might feel as if you got up on the wrong side of the bed today. Changes at work could be difficult and cumbersome. Others are watching your performance. You can gain new stature because of how you handle yourself. Tonight: Go for the brass ring.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A loved one does a flip-flop that surprises you. Be light with a loved one who really may be unstable at present. Check out different opportunities that could have a major impact, and let the ideas roll. Tonight: You land what you want.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Swing with change and be willing to take a leap of faith. A problem at home might have you rather "freaked." Listen to your instincts regarding a partner and a money matter. You are able to make significant progress. Tonight: Wave the white flag.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A misunderstanding works in your favor. Be less uptight about a loved one who really cares, and figure out what is workable. You gain an in-depth understanding of a complicated situation. Tonight: Go along with another's whims.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Worry less about work and money, and simply put your nose to the grindstone. A money situation lightens up for the first time since May. Tonight: Soak in a hot tub.

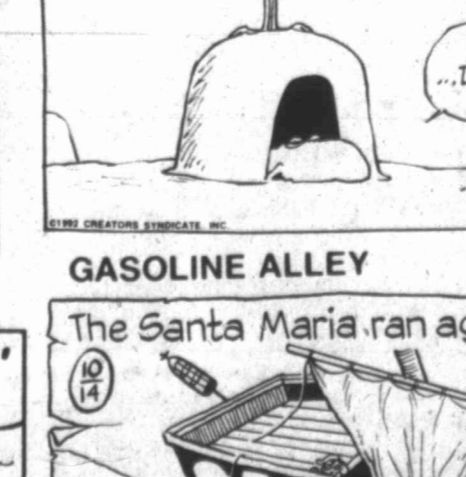

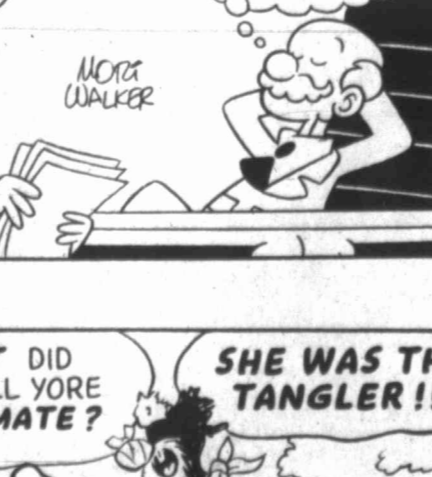

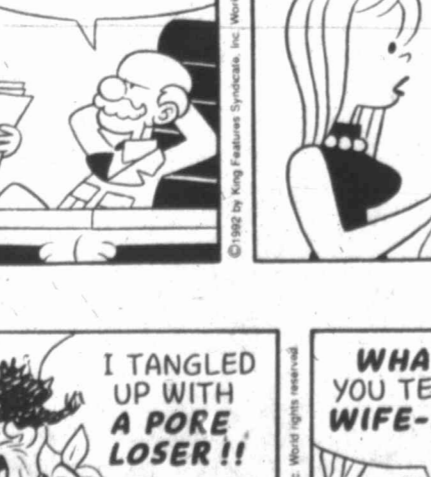

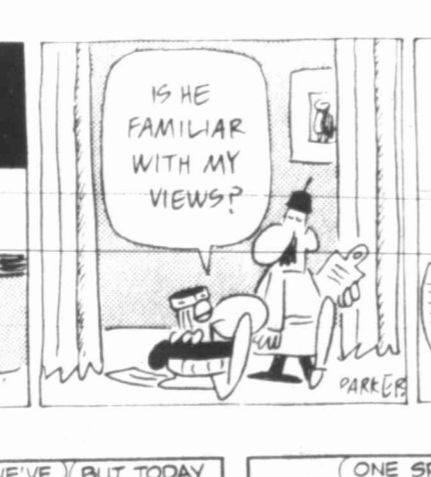

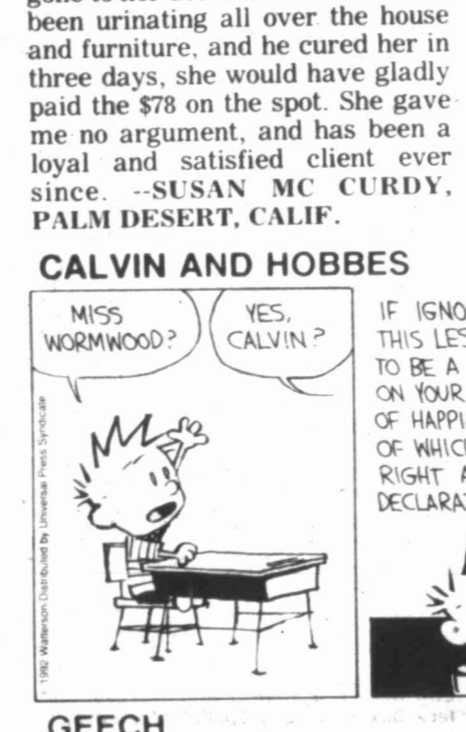

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You might be initially upset by a loved one, but later you see matters in a different light. Touch base with a friend who gives you valuable feedback. Be willing to let another know how much you care. Get to the bottom of a situation. Tonight: Be happy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Consider alternatives that involve a situation close to your heart. You might be confused about which way you are heading. Question what is going on with a family member. Consider adjustment in your living circumstances. Tonight: Indulge yourself.

IF OCT. 15 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Expect an interesting year and you won't be disappointed. Relationships, children and creative interests are highlighted all year long. Add more lightness and humor to your life. Creativity is high, and you feel much better than you have in years. Be careful of extremes, take few risks and eat well. Finances could finally stabilize. GEMINI teaches you another way to view life.
