'Lost world' find

WASHINGTON — A "lost world" teeming with possible new species of birds, fish and an unknown dagger-horned mammal has survived a half-century of war and expanding civilization in remote Vietnam, wildlife experts say. If it proves to be a new species, the U.S. and British scientists said the creature locally referred to as a "forest goat" would be one of only a handful of large mammals newly recorded in the last hundred years./3A

Melee erupts in Odessa; police arrest 7

Crowd assaults security officers

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Two officers working security at an Odessa fast-food restaurant early Monday morning were stormed by a mob of about 200 people, Odessa Police Chief Jim Jenkins said. They were pelted with food and beaten after one officer tried to arrest an angry girl, Jenkins said.

An hour later, with the aid of 28 other officers, police dispersed the crowd. Five officers were injured in the melee.

Three were treated and released from Medical Center Hospital; two didn't require treatment.

Seven people were arrested for various offenses. No one in the crowd sought medical attention, hospital officials said.

The crowd gathered shortly after midnight at the Whataburger restaurant at 1900 E. 8th St. following "teen night" at West LA, a nightclub located one block away.

According to witnesses, two men began arguing inside the restaurant and an officer took one of them outside to break up the fight.

"The two males became embroiled in a heated argument that we understand there are at least two possible scenarios for," Jenkins said. "First, they were arguing over a girlfriend, and second, a (male) subject had his trousers pulled down by someone else."

Once outside, a female began swearing at the officer. When the officer tried to arrest the girl, she struck him in the face, according to Jenkins.

A hostile crowd immediately surrounded the officer and the girl escaped, Jenkins said.

Bush pours military heat on Baghdad

■ U.S., Iraq trade new rhetorical punches.

KUWAIT CITY — Iraq declared Monday that it had achieved a "brilliant victory" in winning a compromise over weapons inspections, but the Bush administration poured on new pressure with more military moves in the region and demands that Baghdad stop resisting United Nations mandates.

Besides dispatching a third U.S. aircraft carrier to the area, the Pentagon also was reported ready to send a battery of Patriot antiaircraft missiles to Kuwait.

In a cheeky new commentary monitored here Monday, Iraq said it forced the United Nations to accept its terms to search for a suspected trove of Iraqi nuclear and missile secrets in the Baghdad ministry.

The boast came as the chief of the U.N. inspection commission, Rolf Ekeus, was acknowledging that his new team of "neutral" inspectors are unlikely to hit pay dirt when they enter the Iraqi Agriculture Ministry today.

"We are quite pessimistic now about making any major catch at the facility," Ekeus said. After agreeing to replace the former chief inspector, American Mark Silver, Ekeus is due in Baghdad Tuesday with a German-led team consisting of Several experts rate U.N.'s deal a Saddam 'win'

PARIS — Despite President Bush's claim that Saddam Hussein "caved in" over the latest arms inspection row, several Western experts here say the Iraqi leader has won a cunning political victory.

■ Analysis

They note that Saddam deliberately provoked the short-lived crisis and then resolved it mainly on his own terms.

Far from caving in to American and United Nations pressure, "Saddam figures he's outsmarted his enemies," according to Jacques Duroselle, a former senior diplomat at the French embassy in Baghdad.

The outcome means the Iraqi leader "will find it hard to resist the temptation to try to embarrass Bush as often as he can right up to U.S. election day," the French expert predicted.

County covers jail food-fund shortfall

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

County commissioners on Monday computed that it costs taxpayers an average of 70 cents a meal, or well over $300,000 a year, to feed Midland County jail inmates.

Sheriff Gary Painter ran out of money to buy food to feed the 400 prisoners, 40 percent of whom are bound for the overcrowded Texas Department of Corrections (TDC).

The Midland County commissioners, following a haggling session with the sheriff and his detention captain, Richard Sexton, gave the sheriff an additional $50,000 on Monday to buy food for the two months remaining in the 1991-'92 fiscal year — August and September.

Sexton said food costs average about $25,000 a month.

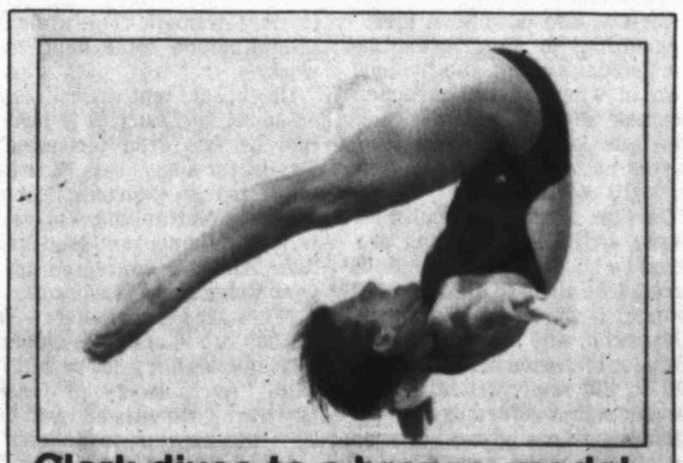

Commissioners dole out $50,000 to feed inmates for remainder of fiscal year.

The shortfall came in the $225,000 budgeted for a year's supply of food for a jail population that has increased largely due to the TDC's inability to absorb its own felons.

Originally, the sheriff had asked for $250,000 to feed the inmates for a year, but the commissioners cut the request by $25,000.

Since May, the Commissioners' Court has transferred $95,000 in increments of $20,000, $25,000 and $50,000 to the sheriff's food budget from cash re-

BAGHDAD: U.S., Iraq trade rhetorical punches

two Germans and one each from Russia, Switzerland, Finland and Sweden.

Interviewed in London as he flew to lead the fresh team into Baghdad, Ekeus said he had been confident that the ministry contained revealing archives on Iraqi missile and nuclear weapons. But the outnumbered U.N. team was forced by officially inspired Iraqi crowds to abandon its 17-day vigil, leaving Ekeus to press for the abstract principle of the U.N.'s right to inspect.

The U.S. military actions, including dispatching the USS Kennedy from shore leave in the Caribbean to duty in the Mediterranean Sea, are a warning that Iraq must back off its resistance and not renew aggression against Kuwait.

The Patriots were a primary defense against Iraq's SCUD missiles during the Persian Gulf War last year, and may be en route to Kuwait because new Iraqi rhetoric again proclaims Kuwait to be "our southern land" and "part of our country." When Iraq invaded Kuwait two years ago it said it was reclaiming what used to be its 19th province.

While Iraqi officials were disparaging the United Nations and its resolutions restricting Iraq's economic and military freedom, President Bush insisted at a campaign visit in Grand Rapids that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein ultimately will abide by U.N. dictates.

"He's going to do it. He may not know it, but he is going to live up to those resolutions," the president said.

Administration officials accepted the compromise on weapons inspections, in which Iraq finally agreed to let a team enter its Agriculture Ministry as long as no inspectors from the allied nations were included. Iraq had barred entry since July 5.

But U.S. officials repeated again Monday that they remain unhappy with Iraq's behavior in a range of other areas, and Bush was to meet with his national security advisors Monday night to discuss the situation.

As Iraq and the United States traded new rhetorical punches, most of the rest of the world chose to remain on the sidelines Monday.

France, one of the key U.S. allies in the Gulf War, declared that the crisis is over "according to the wishes of the Security Council." Meanwhile, nothing was heard from pro-American leaders in Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

It was shortly after Ekeus boarded a jetliner for the Middle East that Iraq's prime minister proclaimed that the outside world had buckled to the "wisdom and courage" of Saddam Hussein.

"The United Nations acceptance of Iraq's proposals about the naming of people who will visit it for inspection is a brilliant victory," said Iraqi Prime Minister Mohammad Hamza al-Zubeidi.

DEAL: Experts see a cunning win for Saddam

(From 1A)

Duroselle and some other Middle East specialists here said the so-called compromise agreement reached Sunday by Iraqi and U.N. officials in New York to resume the hunt for weapons of mass destruction would raise Saddam's political prestige both within Iraq and elsewhere in the Middle East.

"Saddam comes from a culture in which cheating successfully is considered to a leader's credit, (and) that's precisely what he's done on this occasion," said Tariq Temorian, a specialist on Middle East politics and history at London University.

Even many U.N. and U.S. officials have conceded that, by now, incriminating documents kept in the Agriculture Ministry building in Baghdad have been removed or destroyed.

Iraq's refusal to let U.N. inspectors enter the building and make the search, as called for under the Persian Gulf War cease-fire terms, set off the dispute that, until Sunday, threatened to lead to a U.S. military response.

Under the "compromise" agreement, inspectors will be allowed to search the ministry premises. But the new inspection team, scheduled to arrive in Baghdad today, won't include citizens of the United States and other nations that formed part of the wartime coalition against Iraq.

Two Americans and a Russian will be allowed to stand outside the Agriculture Ministry and check documents and other material, if any is found, brought out by the inspection team.

The Iraqis last week turned back American and British inspectors alleging that they were really spies. Their presence in the building would be "humiliating" for Iraq, Saddam's spokesmen insisted.

Temorian said the agreement was a victory for Saddam because "it permits him to determine the conditions under which he is prepared to accept U.N. surveillance. It's a precedent. In effect, he is now unilaterally redefining the cease-fire terms."

Temorian predicted Saddam would now get bolder and more provocative in his defiance. "This isn't the end of the story," he said.

Some experts here expressed skepticism at statements by White House officials suggesting Saddam would now be forced to comply with other U.N. requirements that he has been sidestepping. These include demands that he stop the continued intimidation of Iraq's Kurdish and Shiite Moslem communities and accept a U.N.-decreed boundary accord with Kuwait.

"Saddam Hussein will be in even less of a mood to comply than he was before the arms inspection dispute arose," according to Jean-Francois Deniau, a former French deputy foreign minister and currently a ranking member of the French parliament's foreign relations committee.

Deniau argued that the political fallout from the latest U.S.-Iraq confrontation had been mostly to the Iraqis' advantage.

He said that Turkey, a steadfast U.S. supporter in the gulf conflict 18 months ago, had quickly announced it would not allow its air bases to be used this time to strike at Iraq, as it had during the war.

Arab states such as the Persian Gulf emirates that formed part of the wartime coalition expressed coolness to the idea of a fresh military assault on Iraq.

"The countries in the region no longer believe decisive military action can or will be taken against Hussein," Deniau said.

"They think they are going to have to live with him as their neighbor for a long time and have adjusted their political attitude accordingly."

SHORTFALL: Commissioners provide $50,000

serves in the county's diminishing General Fund.

"We do the best we can for the price we get for food, regardless," Sexton told the Commissioners' Court.

For the 1992-'93 budget year, the sheriff had asked that $235,000 from his projected $5.5 million budget be for inmates' food.

Sexton, who manages the jails, said he had requested $350,000 for food. Painter said he trimmed the request to $235,000 in order to keep costs down and to ensure sufficient funding for the Operations Division, which encompasses patrol, investigation, civil warrants and special services.

Commissioner Guy McCrary told the sheriff to put a "realistic" number to the food budget — something in line with the 1992-'93 food budget of $320,000.

The Commissioners' Court encouraged the sheriff to apply for federal government commodities — staple foods — to help lower the per-meal cost further.

"His (the sheriff's) people have demonstrated they are trying to economize and are applying for food stock and commodities," said County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer following the meeting.

While McCrary was trying to focus on how the sheriff manages food costs, Sexton said he didn't know that at times during the year, 450 prisoners were going to be housed at county jails.

"We're running 400 (prisoners) right now — all the time," Sexton said.

"I know you are trying to buy the cheapest food you can," McCrary said.

Commissioner Louisa Valencia suggested that Sexton and Chief Cook Dorothy Warren serve the prisoners dried-milk products instead of whole milk in half-pint cartons, buy whole chicken instead of the more expensive chicken breasts, and asked why they bought beer-battered onion rings.

Ms. Warren said she always buys whole chickens, and milk in cartons because it is less wasteful than dried milk. She said she has not ordered beer-battered onion rings and would have sent them back had they been shipped to the jail.

"I've never bought chicken breasts in 17 years" of working in the jail, Ms. Warren said. "I've cut up a lot of chicken."

Later, Ms. Valencia said that beer-battered onion rings were on the Midland County Restitution Center's food invoice and not the sheriff's.

"I'm not saying we are depriving the prisoners of balanced meals," Ms. Valencia said.

BENTSEN: Senator cites need

(From 1A)

Customs in the 1993 fiscal year.

The Customs Service needs more inspectors if the agency is to properly enforce the nation's trade, customs and drug laws, Bentsen said.

"I know that you share my concern about the increasing congestion at our southwest border ports of entry," Bentsen wrote DeConcini.

"We need to take remedial steps now to dissolve the border bottlenecks if our economy is to realize the full benefits from increased trade, particularly with Mexico," Bentsen said.

"These backlogs in commercial traffic are costly. Not only do they increase costs for our businesses, they place added strains on the local communities and generally undermine the benefits of increased trade," Bentsen wrote.

Taking into account current trade volumes and the timetable for expansion and new construction, there is an estimated shortage of 108 inspectors along the Mexican border alone, Bentsen said.

Analysts estimate that 99 more inspectors will be needed to staff Canadian ports of entry in the 1993 fiscal year, Bentsen added.

food and retreated a half block. He was pursued, hit, struck and pushed to the ground. He was kicked continually and assaulted. At this time, he pulled his service weapon and warned them to stay back. He fired one round into the air and the crowd began to withdraw," Jenkins said.

During the assault, the other officer reported he was surrounded by about 50 people who also were hitting him, police said.

When reinforcements arrived, the crowd turned on them, Jenkins said. At one point, the crowd pinned six officers with their backs against a wall outside the restaurant and yelled references to Rodney King, the chief said.

"Some people in the crowd attempted to help our officers but were also struck," Jenkins said. "We want them to know that we appreciate their efforts."

Some parents were called in during the disturbance and were instrumental in restoring order, Jenkins said.

After the incident, several people, apparently seeking the release of the seven people, followed the police and filled the police lobby. They were quickly dispersed.

Some bystanders believe the police acted irrationally.

"The girl was asking (the officer) politely if he would let go of her arm and he slung her to the ground. Then he kicked the girl in the face. The kids chased the policeman down the street after that," said Doris Porter, 29, who was at the restaurant with her daughters when the disturbance began.

"When he did that, he put his life in danger. That was stupid," she said.

Mrs. Porter and several other witnesses returned to the Police Department Monday afternoon.

"We're trying to see if they will let the other two guys still in jail out. And we think they need to fire the officer who started this and pay the girl's doctor's bills. She was cut around her eye and it was all swollen," Mrs. Porter said.

One 16-year-old male who said he tried to help the officers, expressed disbelief at the riot mentality displayed by the crowd.

"It was just five or six guys getting on the cops at first but then everyone seemed to just jump into it. It was just a bunch of people who knew they could get away with hitting a cop, so they did it," Anthony Busher said. "I guess they figured, what are they going to do, arrest a couple hundred people — I don't think so."

According to Jenkins, the incident is still under investigation.

"We are still not at liberty to divulge certain aspects of what happened until everything is checked out and investigated," he said. "A lot of interviews remain and evidence to collect."

A routine internal investigation was ordered because an officer fired his weapon.

Names of the officers involved were not released by the department.

Of the seven people arrested in the incident, two were charged with felony offenses. Hurbert Ray Anderson, 19, was charged with aggravated assault on a police officer and posted a $5,000 bond. Malcom Xavier Hamilton, 19, was charged with aggravated assault on a police officer and inciting a riot. He posted a $1,500 bond on each charge.

All seven people posted bond and were released from the Odessa City Jail by Monday night, jail officials said.

MOVIE: Hollywood image makers turn Plainview into fictional Kansas town cruise city streets. And a Texaco gas station and an apartment building have popped up on Seventh Street almost overnight.

For 13 days this summer, the image makers of the silver screen have created a town within a town. Plainview is Rustwater with its Quick Lunch Cafe, Bob Hooper Motor Co., and downtown area.

According to screenwriter Janus Cercone's script, the fictional town in which revival preacher-/con-man Jonas Nightengale finds faith is a lot like the real town playing host to the cast and crew of "Leap of Faith."

The film, which is scheduled for release on Dec. 18, is being produced by Michael Manheim and is directed by Richard Pearce. Matt Leonetti is the cinematographer.

Manheim, who has done several made-for-television movies, is married to the screenwriter. This is Cercone's first screenplay.

Paramount has brought in some top guns to make sure "Leap of Faith" is a quality film and meets a demanding production schedule. And at the top of the list is Steve Martin in his 20th film since 1978.

Martin was most recently seen in "Housesitter" in which he costars with Goldie Hawn.

Martin, 46, became known in the 1970s as a "wild and crazy guy" on NBC's "Saturday Night Live." He moved to the big screen in the late '70s, but all of his early roles were similar to his comic roles on SNL. In recent years, Martin has moved to more dramatic roles while continuing to do some light comic work.

Martin said tent revival preacher Jonas Nightengale is just the role he has been interested in playing for many years. "I've been interested in evangelists since I was 20," Martin said. He recalls watching flamboyant faith healer A.A. Allen, a contemporary of Oral Roberts, on television.

"They are big characters — larger than life — and it's a challenge to play one, but a lot of fun," he said. "As in every profession, there are good ones and bad ones. This one happens to be bad."

Debra Winger plays Jane Larson, Jonas Nightengale's manager. Known for her work in "Terms of Endearment," Winger recently played in "Sheltering Sky" and has done a host of other films.

"Leap of Faith" also features Lolita Davidovitch as Marva, a love interest who works at the Quick Lunch Cafe. Viewers will remember Davidovitch's roles in "JFK" and "Blaze."

Liam Neeson plays the part of Sheriff Will Braverman. Neeson's credits include "Suspect" and "The Good Mother."

Also appearing in "Leap of Faith" are Lukas Haas, who played the little Amish boy in "Witness," and singer/songwriter Meat Loaf.

On the production side, Paramount has called on some of the best in the business — Oscar-winning set designer Patrizia von Brandenstein and Emmy-winning costume designer Theodora Van Runkle.

Von Brandenstein won the Oscar for her work on "Amadeus" and was nominated for another Oscar for "Ragtime."

Van Runkle has received five Oscar nomination for her costume designs and she won the Emmy for "Wizzards and Warriors." Her first Oscar nomination was for "Bonnie and Clyde." This is the second time she has worked with Martin, having designed the costumes for "The Jerk."

According to production manager Burt Bluestein, Plainview was selected for "Leap of Faith" because it has all the right elements for Rustwater.

"In large measure, we are here because Plainview looks like the place they wrote about," he said.

Bluestein, who worked on "Godfather II" as well as other films, describes "Leap of Faith" as "a nice story" that is opportune for Christmas because it has to do with faith and trust.

"With a name like 'Leap of Faith,'" it has to deal with giving it up," he said. "There won't be a dry eye in the house."

A Paramount spokesman calls "Leap of Faith" an uplifting movie.

"I think it will have a good impact. It's a contemporary story," he said.

Location manager Bill Bowling says he found the Rustwater in the script on Seventh Street in Plainview. He remembers the day he first laid eyes on the Quick Lunch Cafe.

"It was a cold rainy day," he says. "We turned the corner and there was this great old diner."

Bowling says the diner has the "feeling of interest" for which he was looking.

"The cafe has that special quality. It has architectural integrity of the period," he said.

Bowling most recently worked on "The Fisher King" and also on "Beverly Hills Cop." He worked for Steven Spielberg for two years.

Bluestein, the production manager, says Plainview offers a practical location for this production.

"When a script comes out, it has certain elements in it," he said. "When you try to work out a budget, you try to find as many of those things in one place as you can so that you are focusing the money on the screen and not traveling from place to place.

"Part of what brings us here is just the relationship on the street between the Quick Lunch and Bob Hooper Motor Co. You can put in a camera and watch people walk from one place to the other."

In the movie, rain comes to drought-plagued Rustwater. Oddly enough, the whole region had received so much rain before filming began that special efforts had to be made to make the area look drought-stricken.

In real life, "Leap of Faith" is economic rain for Plainview with Paramount spending more than $1 million here.

World in brief

■ Army: Escobar had Jacuzzi, 60-inch TV

BOGOTA, Colombia — The army said in a report Monday that fugitive drug boss Pablo Escobar's prison cell was furnished with a Jacuzzi, a 60-inch television, guns, money and jewels.

Escobar escaped last Wednesday after army troops arrive at his prison near Medellin, 200 miles northwest of the capital, to transfer him to a military jail. The government said Escobar had continued to run his multimillion-dollar cocaine empire from prison.

The Medellin cocaine cartel chief is one of the world's richest and most notorious drug dealers. He surrendered last year on condition that he be held at a ranch in his home state — previously owned by drug dealers — converted into a prison.

Escobar's two-room prison suite had long been described as luxurious. But prison and government officials insisted that Escobar got nothing more than prisoners in other jails. Reporters were never allowed inside the Medellin prison.

■ Greenpeace tails Norwegian whaling vessel

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Greenpeace activists said Monday that Norwegian coast guard helicopters, boats and planes have followed them as they tailed a Norwegian whaling vessel in arctic waters near Russia.

"We're going to do our best to ensure that whatever happens (the Norwegian vessel) isn't able to kill whales," Norwegian Greenpeace campaigner Kieran Mulvaney said in a satellite telephone interview from his ship, M/V Solo.

"We will put our boats in the water straight away in front of the harpoon so they can't get a clear aim and wouldn't be able to shoot without hitting us," Mulvaney said.

Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland announced last month that commercial hunting would resume next year in defiance of an international ban. The Greenpeace ship is following one of six Norwegian vessels that have set out to kill a total of 110 minke whales this summer on a research hunt.

■ Four gunmen assassinate police inspector

CATANIA, Sicily — Four motorcycle assassins killed a senior police Mafia investigator as he drove home from work Monday night, police said, in what looked like an act of defiance of a big crackdown on the Mafia.

Inspector Giovanni Lizzio, 46, was shot in the chest and head and was pronounced dead at Cannizzaro Hospital, said a police officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

RAI state television said Lizzio led Catania's investigation into Mafia extortion of eastern Sicilian merchants and businessmen.

It said two motorcycles, each with a driver and passenger, pulled up to Lizzio's car and the killers began firing.

The killing took place two days after the Italian Cabinet voted to send 7,000 troops to Sicily in response to the July 19 bombing murder of top Mafia investigator Judge Paolo Borsellino.

■ Ex-chess champ Fischer seeks changes

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Bobby Fischer, the long-dormant American chess giant, has given promoters an undisclosed list of demands for adjustments to the hall where he is scheduled to play a $5 million exhibition match in September against his old rival, Boris Spassky, local news reports said Monday.

Fischer, who appears to be ready to emerge from 20 years of self-imposed obscurity, presented the demands Sunday after examining the hall, which is in the Hotel Maestral at Sveti Stefan, a resort island and casino on Yugoslavia's Adriatic coast, the reports said.

The 49-year-old American's demands are a reminder of the on-again-off-again turmoil that preceded the celebrated 1972 match in Iceland at which he won the world championship from Spassky.

■ Government survives no-confidence votes

JERUSALEM — Israel's young government on Monday easily survived no-confidence motions submitted by rightist lawmakers to protest moves to advance peace talks and curbs on Jewish settlement in the occupied lands.

The Parliament rejected the five motions 59-48, after 4½ hours of debate.

"We had thought about waiting 100 days, maybe even more, to allow the government to formulate its policy," said legislator Moshe Katzav of the right-wing Likud faction. "But this government didn't hold one serious debate on these issues . . . and instead it hurried to make political concessions, and this gave us a good reason to express no confidence."

■ Yemenis abduct, release four Americans

SAN'A, Yemen — Upset over the jailing of their brother, two Yemenis abducted four Americans, including the general manager of the Yemen Hunt Oil Co., and two Yemenis on Monday but released them unharmed seven hours later.

A statement from the Dallas-based company said the two brothers hijacked a small bus that was taking the group from a helicopter landing site near San'a, the capital.

It quoted Yemeni officials as giving assurances the incident was "a domestic matter" and saying the hijackers apparently did not have knowledge of who the bus passengers were.

The release occurred at 3:45 p.m. local time on Sunday, it said.

U.N. considers air drop of aid to Gorazde

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — U.N. relief officials said Monday they will try to air-drop food and medicine to thousands of Muslim refugees in Gorazde, since efforts to reach the besieged city by land have failed.

The Bosnian government's last major southeastern stronghold, Gorazde has been under Serb siege for nearly 90 days. Sporadic dispatches by ham radio operators speak of heavy casualties and drastic shortages of food and medical supplies.

Meanwhile, leaders of the warring factions gathered in London for another effort to negotiate an end to the violence.

And Yugoslav Premier Milan Panic, touring Western capitals in hopes of easing U.N. sanctions on his country for fomenting violence in Bosnia, blamed the violence on 1,200 Muslim, Croat and Serb "hoodlums."

The fighting has killed at least 7,500 people — some estimates say more than 40,000 — and has uprooted nearly one-third of Bosnia's 4.3 million people. The war began after Bosnia's Muslims and Croats voted on Feb. 29 for independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Gorazde, once populated by Muslims and Serbs and now home to thousands of Muslim refugees from surrounding towns, has been shelled regularly by Serbs on its outskirts. About 70,000 people are trapped in the city near the Serbian border, 30 miles southeast of Sarajevo.

A small U.N. convoy tried to reach Gorazde last week from Sarajevo but turned back after hitting mines.

"We are even more convinced that the situation in Gorazde must be solved," said Una Sekerez at the offices of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Sarajevo.

She said relief officials were working to have aid dropped into Gorazde from the air, but gave no details.

Serb forces, whose have anti-aircraft artillery, warned relief planes supplying Sarajevo over the weekend to avoid flying over their positions or risk attack. It was not known what they would do if relief planes flew over Gorazde.

Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, was relatively quiet during the weekend and again Monday.

Croatian radio, citing Bosnian government statistics, said 1,500 people have died in fighting for Sarajevo since early April.

In an effort parallel to the London talks, the U.N. commander of peacekeeping forces in Yugoslavia, Gen. Satish Nambiar, arrived in Sarajevo for talks with warring factions.

More than a dozen truces have failed to take hold there. The latest had been set to begin July 19, and the Bosnian Serb command said Monday that 98 Serb soldiers have died since then.

Previous peace talks in London also have yielded little success, and this time participants planned to work on a political solution — creating a new Bosnian constitution — rather than hammering out another cease-fire.

A cloud was cast over the meeting by the Bosnian government's decision to attend but not negotiate. Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic told Lord Carrington, the European Community's special envoy to the talks, that new negotiations made no sense unless previous agreements were honored.

Scientists find 'lost world,' possible mammal species

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "lost world" teeming with possible new species of birds, fish and an unknown dagger-horned mammal has survived a half-century of war and expanding civilization in remote Vietnam, wildlife experts say.

If it proves to be a new species, the U.S. and British scientists said the creature locally referred to as a "forest goat" would be one of only a handful of large mammals newly recorded in the last hundred years.

A recent survey of the relatively untouched Vu Quang Nature Reserve by a team from the Vietnamese government and the World Wildlife Fund documented preliminary evidence of two previously unknown bird species, at least one new fish, an unknown tortoise with a striking yellow shell and the goat-like mammal.

"The horns are quite unlike those of other goats previously recorded," said British scientist John MacKinnon, who led the World Wildlife Fund expedition in May. He said it could be another kind of bovid, or hooved animal.

"It's in a lost world that modern science had never before looked at," he said in a telephone interview late last week from London.

With most of Indochina heavily populated and so ravaged by wartime herbicides and bombing, stepping into Vu Quang is "like opening a door into a lost and neglected place," MacKinnon said. "Biologically, it's not like the rest of Indochina."

Officials of the Washington-based World Wildlife Fund said the relatively untouched Vu Quang area spreads over 65 square miles along a steep stretch of land near the Laotian border, a 10-hour overland trip from Hanoi.

The team found three sets of upper skulls and horns of the previously unknown mammal, MacKinnon said. While none was spotted alive, one of the skulls still had maggots crawling in it, indicating it had died recently, he said.

Skin samples from the hooved beast, which is a target of hunters in the area, will be compared with those from cows, buffaloes, antelopes and goats to see where it falls scientifically, MacKinnon said. Skulls are also being examined by scientists in Vietnam, he said.

The Vietnamese are trying to find a better specimen, he said, "but we don't want to encourage actively shooting one because it might be a very rare animal.'"

MacKinnon said he plans to return to the area soon and will set up cameras in the forest. Elephants, tigers and leopards are among animals known to be in the area, he said.

Officials: Nearly twice as many died at border as once thought

BONN, Germany (AP) — Investigators sifting through Communist files say at least 350 people died trying to flee East Germany — nearly twice the previously documented number, a top official said Monday.

The final figure could reach 400, said Manfred Kittlaus, head of a special Berlin police unit investigating crimes by East Germany leaders.

Some drowned in previously unknown attempts to swim to freedom across the Baltic Sea, Kittlaus said.

The revelation comes amid dashed hopes that Erich Honecker, the deposed East German leader, would soon be returned from Moscow to face manslaughter charges related to 47 border killings. Honecker has been holed up at the Chilean Embassy in Moscow since last December.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government said last week that Honecker's expulsion from Moscow could be imminent. But the German press reported that negotiations broke down at the last minute over who would take responsibility for having Honecker returned.

Authorities have long thought that more than 200 people died trying to escape over the Berlin Wall or at other border points, though the number of documented cases was put at 187.

■ Farewell to arms: Priest says goodbye

LOS ANGELES — The Rev. Gregory J. Boyle has buried 26 gang members from his impoverished parish and dodged bullets in a six-year crusade to love warring gangs into submission.

Now the priest gang members call "G-Dog" is packing his bags and the kids he's loved say that could spell trouble for their embattled neighborhoods.

"I feel scared because he keeps everybody busy, you know. By doing that, everybody don't think about shooting or nothing," said a 21-year-old member of The Mob Crew who identified himself by his gang moniker, Scrappy.

Little Sniper, 19, another member of TMC, also feared greater bloodshed after Boyle leaves on Friday for a yearlong retreat required of all Jesuit priests eight years after their ordination.

"We don't got nobody to help us out," he said. "He give us jobs, tell us, 'Don't gang bang' and we don't. We listen to him."

■ Clinton raps Bush during campaign swing

SAN FRANCISCO — Bill Clinton wooed hundreds of exuberant spectators in San Francisco's Mission District after attacking George Bush at the Urban League in San Diego and again at Tandem Computers in Cupertino.

"Are you ready to take your country back?" Clinton shouted to the crowd that jammed the intersection of 24th and Mission streets.

Clinton played hardball in his earlier appearances, poking fun at Bush as part of a harsh attack on the president's performance and the Republican strategy of blaming the country's problems on "tax-and-spend liberals."

"People in this election try to put on yesterday's broken record, that sticks at the same old place in the song . . . 'tax-and-spend, tax-and-spend, tax-and-spend,' " Clinton said in San Diego. "Then the negative handlers push the arm a little farther and it goes, 'Liberal, liberal, liberal.' "

As he campaigned on a two-day swing through the state that is crucial to his presidential bid, Clinton played both populist and policy wonk, pressing the flesh with voters, but also spending considerable time detailing his plans for America's future.

■ Striking drivers block newspaper trucks

PITTSBURGH — Striking drivers on Monday linked arms and blocked trucks trying to deliver the first editions of the city's two daily newspapers published since May. Police arrested 39 protesters.

Delivery trucks were unable to leave The Pittsburgh Press Co. building, but an undisclosed number of copies of the morning Pittsburgh Post-Gazette and the afternoon Pittsburgh Press were delivered from other sites, a spokesman for the company said.

Some demonstrators hurled chunks of asphalt and bricks at a truck as it tried to leave the Press Co. parking lot early in the day. Others spat on a man who entered the parking lot, and many pickets shouted at workers in the newspaper building.

At midday, about 500 demonstrators linked arms in front of the parking lot, chanting "Scabs go home" and "Unions, yes!"

The Pittsburgh Press Co. on Monday asked an Allegheny County Common Pleas Court judge to set a limit on the pickets outside the building. The union was to present its case today.

Critics: Bush wages 'drugs war' on wrong front

By Joseph B. Treaster
N.Y. Times News Service

ST. LOUIS — No American president has come to office with more experience in trying to hold back the tide of drugs than George Bush.

As director of central intelligence under President Gerald R. Ford, Bush monitored the drug threat worldwide. As Ronald Reagan's vice president, he led the administration's anti-drug campaign, often climbing aboard powerful chase boats and helicopters as agents patrolled the Florida coast in the first concerted federal effort to halt the surging tide of cocaine.

Yet when he designed his own anti-drug strategy, his critics say, Bush seems to have ignored much of what he learned. Since taking office, Bush has poured more and more money into tactics that over the last 20 years have repeatedly failed to change the course of the campaign against drugs: trying to stop drugs at the borders, cajoling and threatening drug-producing nations and jailing thousands of Americans for ever longer terms.

Bush has often spoken of the value of education, treatment and prevention programs to staunch the desire for drugs. But disregarding the near-unanimous advice of independent experts as well as some on the White House staff who say these are the most effective weapons, Bush has consistently subordinated health and education to law enforcement.

These tactics have sometimes produced quick, visible and politically useful results — most spectacularly, the seizure of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega in the 1989 invasion of Panama and bringing him to the United States to stand trial on drug charges — but the benefits have usually been ephemeral at best.

"Reducing the demand for drugs through treatment and education is the most efficient and effective way to address the drug problem," argues Eric E. Sterling, a drug expert who heads the Criminal Justice Policy Foundation in Washington, offering the common wisdom in the field. "This is where the most progress has been made so far. Enforcement has had little effect on the supply or the use of drugs."

Since Bush took office with a pledge, as he put it in his Inaugural Address, to end "this scourge," the federal anti-drug budget, including the money spent on education and treatment, has doubled, to almost $12 billion this fiscal year. Still, more than two-thirds of that has been dedicated to enforcement — a ratio little changed from the Reagan years, when most experts argued that America was losing the battle.

"We're recommending dollars for each area of activity in which we will be able to achieve a net gain," Bob Martinez, the director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy and Bush's top aide on drugs, said in a recent interview. The federal government, he added, is in the best position to combat drugs overseas and at the borders, while much of the cost for treatment and education should be borne by cities and states.

Martinez said the decline in drug use among young people and the middle class proves that the administration's approach is working.

In fact, during Bush's first two years in office, the casual use of cocaine, marijuana and other drugs did continue a decline among teen-agers and the middle class, a trend that began in the late 1980s. But in the last half of his term the downturn in middle-class use appears to have stalled.

At the same time, drug use appears to be rising in the gritty inner-city neighborhoods where addiction problems are most severe and where much of the drug-driven crime originates.

Classic Club offers luxurious rail service

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's touted as the last daytime luxury rail service in America, a U.S. version of Switzerland's Glacier Express. The Keystone Classic Club, a special car on Amtrak's New York-Pittsburgh run, is for people who like to be pampered and pig-out on haute cuisine. On the Classic Club, getting there is most of the fun.

By Tara Bradley-Steck
Associated Press writer

ABOARD THE KEYSTONE CLASSIC CLUB — As a kid who tended to get motion sickness within a three-block drive, a five-minute boat ride or a two-second plane trip, trains were the only promise of travel without pain.

But in those days — the old days — of the '60s and '70s, trains were erratic, unpredictable, unimaginative and, well, just plain boring. A bus on rails.

Now comes the Keystone Classic Club, a luxury train car that serves up gourmet food, hot showers, slick shoeshines and big easy chairs.

Where was it when I really needed it?

I pondered all these things real and metaphysical as I nibbled filet of sole with salmon mousse and Japanese noodle salad before downing fresh strawberries with cream and apple cinnamon torte.

THE VIEW accompanying lunch was of picture-postcard farms, forested, rhododendron-covered hills, and towns and villages as old as the Revolution.

That's part of the package promised to travelers aboard the Classic Club, a specially outfitted Pullman railroad car pulled behind Amtrak's New York-to-Pittsburgh-bound Pennsylvanian four days a week.

The one-way fare is $320 and round trip is $522, compared to Amtrak's regular round-trip fare of $132.

Classic-style travel is finding a niche among train buffs, the well-heeled, those who scorn planes, and small groups who want a captive audience for business meetings. One such group, American Express, booked the entire car and spent the time discussing, of all things, better air service into Pittsburgh.

The Classic Club is touted as the last daytime luxury rail service in America — a U.S. version of Switzerland's Glacier Express.

Instead of the Alps, the train crosses the Alleghenies. Instead of oompah, there is soft jazz or classical music.

And while the famed horseshoe curve in central Pennsylvania may not be the Matterhorn, it's a sight that makes traveling by any kind of train worth the trip.

BUT WHAT puts the Classic Club in a class by itself is the service — service that began from the moment I entered New York's frenetic Penn Station with thousands of other travelers and harried commuters.

Upon asking where I could find the Classic Club, an Amtrak porter pleasantly replied, "Ms. Bradley-Steck? We've been waiting for you."

Who? Me?

With those words I tasted luxury for the next nine hours and 444 miles — as did the other three passengers bound for Pittsburgh.

"I realized, once I got on, that this is a rolling cruise, because a cruise is just floating and eating, and this is rolling and eating," said Ken Zeiger, an attorney-musician from New York, as he munched brioche and croissants.

I sank into the mauve-colored easy chair, dug my toes into the seafoam green carpet and held out my teacup as porter John Long poured.

For four guests, and even for the maximum 10, there was plenty of room. The main sitting area boasts 10 easy chairs and Chippendale-style furniture, including two dining tables with vases of fresh flowers and a hutch filled with china and linens.

THE CAR also has a small kitchen, a reading room, an extra, smaller dining room and two bathrooms, both with showers.

While the train rolled away from the noise and clutter of New York and farther into New Jersey, Long gave a brief history of the Classic Club, passed around assorted newspapers and magazines and offered — no kidding — to "draw the water" if anyone wanted to take a shower.

I secretly wished I hadn't been so clean. The white-tiled shower with chintz curtain looked inviting. And the idea of showering on a train seemed intriguing. Next time I come dirty, I decided.

Somewhere near Philadelphia I sat down to a breakfast of made-to-order omelets, cereal, fruit, croissants and juice. It was briefly interrupted, much to Long's chagrin, by the conductor strolling through for tickets.

"I'm sorry for that," Long said after the conductor departed. "I've told them to take their hats off and wait 'til you're done eating."

Across from me Gayl and Beverly Doster were the picture of contentment with their noses buried in books and newspapers. The couple, from East Greenwich, R.I., was headed to western Pennsylvania for business and a little pleasure and had managed to find enough time to go by train rather than fly.

"THE TELEPHONE can't find you. The doorbell can't ring. You can get a lot of reading done and a lot of letter writing. And you feel very pampered," Mrs. Doster said as Long, his shoeshine kit out, polished her shoes.

"I love to fly, but I just find this so relaxing," said Zeiger, despite missing out on the full treatment because of his sneakers. "My wife thinks I'm nuts with these trains because she travels so much she just wants to get there. But I'm a New Yorker, and I do this just to slow down.

"You know you can't be anywhere for 10 hours. You know you're going to have to chill out. It's a therapeutic thing."

With each passing mile the farms slowly gave way to woods and forests, hills and mountains. Long offered tidbits of information about a stone arch bridge near Harrisburg, the horseshoe curve near Altoona and the Johnstown flood of 1889 as the train chugged down the same narrow valley taken by the raging waters.

Amid the mountainous backdrop Long served a luncheon that would have satisfied the most gluttonous appetite: two entrees, two salads, grilled vegetables and three different desserts.

No sooner were the dishes cleared than Long brought out several varieties of warm and cold hors d'oeuvres. No deviled eggs here. This was brie cheese and artichokes over toast, Belgian endive with shrimp relish, grilled chicken kabobs, Peking duck wrapped in crepe and caviar Bellini.

The jury's still out on the future of the Classic Club. Amtrak rented the all-stainless steel car from a North Carolina collector last summer with the idea of operating it from August to December 1991.

Budding interest in the service prompted Amtrak to continue the experiment until the end of June.

As we pulled into the remodeled Amtrak station in Pittsburgh, a few pounds heavier in body but lighter in spirit, I recalled what one passenger had written in the guest book: "As good as a Rolling Stones concert."

Japanese solve U.S.-food puzzle

By Lynda Richardson
N.Y. Times News Service

LARCHMONT, N.Y.— Life in America is puzzling enough if you come from a country like Japan that is a world away in taste and customs. And just when you think it can't get any more disconcerting, your child comes home demanding a PBJ on white bread.

For a group of Japanese women in Westchester County, N.Y., one way to figure out the puzzle has been to learn to cook and shop the American way.

"I want to understand America," said Keiko Senda, a 35-year-old mother of one, who used to think American cuisine was burgers, meatballs and frozen foods, the things she saw in movies back home.

Lauren Groveman, a Larchmont homemaker and cook, provides some of the answers, teaching Japanese women how to schmooze with the butcher and feel at home in American supermarkets, but most importantly how to make meals like pot roast and concoct a PBJ — peanut butter and jelly sandwich — for children immersed in American culture.

"They have to get hip because their children are plunged into the mainstream of American society," Mrs. Groveman said. "It's hard, and they're fed up."

HER STUDENTS reflect a growing Japanese presence that has transformed many of the New York region's most affluent suburbs. Westchester County alone has as many as 15,000 Japanese residents, many of them transplanted here for several years because of job assignments with Japanese corporations.

'American food is just as good as Japanese food, I think.'
— Keiko Senda

While newcomers may shy away from social connections with Americans, partly because of culture and language barriers, that was not the case for the five Japanese women who paid $350 apiece to learn what was truly American in the five-class course in Mrs. Groveman's sunny kitchen.

For Mrs. Senda, meals like honey-baked chicken, pot roast and hot biscuits with sweet cream butter changed her perception that Americans give short shrift to meal preparation. She now has a particular taste for veal. Her husband likes rib-eye steaks. Her 10-year-old daughter likes "everything."

"American food is just as good as Japanese food, I think," said Mrs. Senda, whose family eats American-style meals about three times a week.

Mrs. Groveman, who teaches everything from bistro cooking to baking in her Larchmont Manor home, said she decided to organize the course exclusively for Japanese women after she was asked to contribute recipes for banana bread and mixed-berry shortcakes for a Japanese cookbook titled "American Country Cakes."

"I thought if they are turned on by that, wait till they see my roast chicken," said Mrs. Groveman, a 34-year-old mother of three who is married to the president of a Wall Street brokerage firm.

SHE SENT brochures to Japanese grocery stores in Westchester and placed advertisements in a Japanese newspaper that is circulated throughout the United States. She got the names of some prospective students from the mother of her 9-year-old son's best friend, who is Japanese.

One woman who responded was Yoko Emori, whose family moved here from Tokyo two years ago because of her husband's transfer to a Manhattan bank.

"In Japan, there are many cake shops, so we don't bake at home," she said. "We go to shops, but I like to make dessert." Through Mrs. Groveman's course, she was able to satisfy her family's taste for American desserts and she also developed a hearty appetite for meatloaf.

Mrs. Groveman's class includes a course on American supermarkets and a sort of show-and-tell on where to find items like mayonnaise and chutney. "A lot of the Japanese will travel miles to a Japanese grocery store just to buy a can of Campbell's soup that is written in Japanese letters," she said. Her course gives students the confidence to navigate the aisles of American stores, she said.

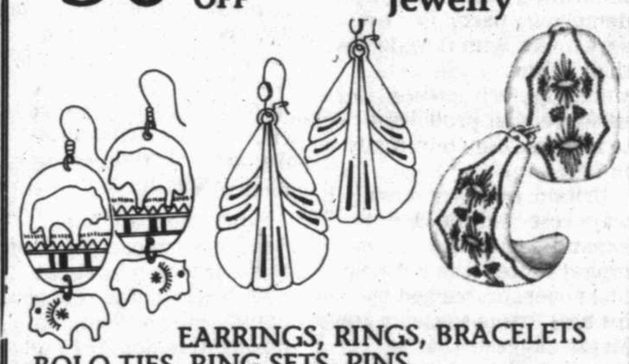

As the course progressed, Mrs. Groveman said she found that the Japanese women had complaints similar to those of their American counterparts, including husbands who worked late and the lack of conversation at the family dinner table.

But she also noticed large and small differences between the Japanese and Americans. While American students lapse into conversation about a classmate's hair color or the weather, she said, the Japanese students focus studiously on the meals.

And while her American students called out for doggie bags for leftovers, she said, her Japanese students ate until they cleaned heaping plates of meatloaf, whipped potato casserole, buttermilk biscuits, cole slaw and strawberry sauce over vanilla ice cream.

"I DIDN'T want them to blow up in front of me," said Mrs. Groveman, who later assured the students that it was perfectly proper if they did not finish their meals.

By the next session, the Japanese women showed they had learned one lesson. One by one, they removed their forks from hefty rib-eye steaks and asked for doggie bags.

Hong Kong needs to prepare for change

Five years is a long time in international politics, long enough for Great Britain to reinforce democracy in Hong Kong before turning over the territory to China in 1997. London at last seems ready to take up the challenge.

Democracy is still a tender shoot in Hong Kong. The colony chose its first popularly elected legislators only last year. Virtually all winning candidates belong to, or are allied with, the United Democrats, a pro-democracy party. But by agreement with Beijing, less than a third of the seats were popularly chosen. China wants that proportion to increase only minimally in 1995.

Britain, however, has always reserved the right to expand democracy. Christopher Patten, the last colonial governor, backed by his boss Prime Minister John Major, suggests that he may be prepared to press for more elected seats. Even if China digs in, the governor has considerable power to appoint legislators, and full power to appoint representatives of the United Democrats to his cabinet.

After the 1997 transfer, China says, it will treat Hong Kong as a Special Autonomous Region, with authority to manage most of its own affairs. Greater self-government during the next five years would help prepare Hong Kong citizens and politicians to give this autonomy content.

Meanwhile, the U.S. Senate has passed Sen. Mitch McConnell's proposed U.S.-Hong Kong Policy Act, recognizing the terms of the British-Chinese agreement in American law. The House will vote on the bill later this summer; administration support seems assured. This bill would make it easier for the U.S. to monitor developments in Hong Kong and, if necessary, defend Britain's legal rights should Beijing resort to bullying.

Since the Tiananmen Square massacre, the Bush administration has bent over backward to accommodate Beijing and maintain normal ties. Some of that diplomatic capital is well worth spending to protect Hong Kong's future. It would simply be unconscionable for the democratic world to let the territory's 5.5 million people slip under communist control without taking all practical steps to strengthen their political rights.

State Board of Education decides on harder classes

At long last the State Board of Education is taking action to eliminate an annoying and unnecessary disparity — the difference between what some high school students learn and what makes up the exit-level test they must pass to get a diploma.

Fundamental classes in math, language arts and other courses will be phased out over the next few years, primarily so the students will take classes in these subjects that do more than skim over the basics.

Although this change could prove challenging for some borderline students, it's the best interests of all who value quality education.

Sometimes, students will do just enough to get by, never putting any more time or effort into a subject than they have to. If they can coast through a fundamentals class instead of taking on a full-fledged course in the same subject, they just might do that.

That may be easier for them in the short run, but it's a loser in the long run.

For starters, they just might fail the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test they take as seniors because it is geared toward traditional courses. And without passing TAAS, they can't get a high school diploma....

Experience has shown that students generally meet the expectations their teachers and parents hold out for them, so it just makes sense to keep those standards high.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, July 28, the 210th day of 1992. There are 156 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Sixty years ago, on July 28, 1932, Federal troops forcibly dispersed the so-called "Bonus Army" of World War I veterans who had gathered in Washington, D.C., since May, demanding money they were scheduled to receive in 1925.

On this date:

In 1540, King Henry VIII's chief minister, Thomas Cromwell, was executed.

In 1750, composer Johann Sebastian Bach died in Leipzig, Germany.

In 1821, Peru declared its independence from Spain.

In 1868, the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, guaranteeing due process of law, was declared in effect.

In 1914, Austria-Hungary declared war on Serbia.

In 1945, the U.S. Senate ratified the United Nations Charter by a vote of 89-2.

In 1945, a U.S. Army bomber crashed into the 79th floor of New York's Empire State Building, killing 14 people.

In 1959, Hawaiians participated in their first election since statehood, voting to send their first U.S. representative and senator to Congress.

In 1976, an earthquake devastated northern China, killing at least 242,000 people, according to an official estimate.

In 1977, Roy Wilkins turned over leadership of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to Benjamin L. Hooks.

In 1986, NASA released a transcript of a recording from the doomed space shuttle Challenger in which pilot Michael J. Smith could be heard saying, "Uh-oh!" as the spacecraft exploded.

Ten years ago: President Ronald Reagan held the 12th news conference of his presidency, in which he expressed guarded optimism about a peaceful resolution to the crisis in Lebanon, and warned that America's recovery from an economic recession would be slow.

Media needs to get off Quayle's back

Nothing would please the national media more than Bill Clinton's triumphant entry into the White House. Our media lions and, maybe especially, lionesses — the Bill/Hillary ticket is ardently pro-choice — would purr with feline delight.

The media can be counted on meanwhile todo all in their power to put the best light on Clintonism and the worst on Bushism. It should be acknowledged that Clintonism isn't all bad and Bushism isn't all good, but could we have a little balance, please? A little perspective?

Murchison

The Quayle thing prompts these present ruminations. We hear this week of a crisis over the vice presidency. There are rumors, thick as thunderclouds, of Dan Quayle's impending dismissal from the Republican ticket. How come?

I'll tell you how come — because four years ago the national media undertook to trash then-Sen. Quayle's reputation — draft-dodger, vacant-eyed party boy, etc., etc. — as part of an unspoken agenda aimed at the repudiation of Reaganism. Soon enough the media soured on Michael Dukakis, but in Quayle they discovered an enduring figure of fun. What else accounts for the instantly high disapproval ratings racked up by a politician thitherto unknown outside Indiana? The media made him known in the way they wanted him known. Nor has the blood lust abated. The vice president remains a cheap laugh in Doonesbury, a stock gag for Jay Leno.

I would not say all this was in consequence of some deep dark plot hatched at the National Press Club bar, but rather of the groupthink in which our media specialize and revel. There are notable exceptions — such as the Washington Post's (the Post's!) recent series depicting Quayle as hard-working and intelligent — but the rule remains the sneer, the raspberry. When Quayle misspelled "potato" under conspicuous circumstances, the jeers redoubled. Clinton, in St. Louis the other day, used "I" as a direct object ("give Al Gore and I a chance...") My ear didn't pick up any reverberations among the media's grammatical Emily Posts.

Hardly surprising, under such circumstances, are recent stories hinting that George Bush will ax his vice president and pick someone else. Quayle went on Larry King Live to deny that any such thing was in the wind, though he volunteered that, rather than harm the ticket, he would drop off it.

The pollsters have been out in force, underscoring the doubts that have been voiced concerning Quayle's fitness for the ticket. Should he go or stay? An Associated Press poll found 57 percent of Republicans hoped he would stay, whereas 47 percent of the population at large thought he should go.

My own view is, hang in there, Dan. A lot of us still don't believe in lynching innocent men. But it goes beyond this. The vice president is doing a good job in at least two notable respects.

First, as chairman of the president's competitiveness council he has spoken out against, and tried with some success to weaken, economically crippling regulations. The conservative Heritage Foundation calls Bush "the regulation president," for his meek acquiescence in the re-regulation of the economy via the Clean Air Act and the Americans With Disabilities Act. Quayle, in these matters, has been the voice of common sense, urging the government not to use its rule-making power in such a way as to cripple economic growth. Is this not the essence of populism?

On Murphy Brown and family values, Quayle has spoken with a clarity and power rarely found amid Bush-administration boilerplate. From the intellectually enlightened, he has taken the expected shafts of ridicule. It's reported that Murphy's producers are laying for him in the new season.

This calls attention to another praiseworthy trait: the vice president's dignity and steadiness under fire. How would my brothers and sisters of the media enjoy taking the medicine they daily spoon out to others? Even Ross Perot confesses he didn't like it. Dan Quayle, by contrast, hangs in there without whining and sobbing. My fellow Americans, let's get off the man's sore back. Let's give him — for once — a fair chance.

CHARLEY REESE

Whoever wins, it won't be a good term

Whoever wins the presidency this year is going to have a rough four years in office. They may well wish, before their term is over, that they hadn't won.

The economy has not recovered nor will it anytime soon. There's still too much debt, too much unemployment, too many jobs either being permanently eliminated by down-sizing or shipped across the borders to a cheap labor source.

Reese

Moreover, the economies in Canada, Europe and Japan are likewise in difficulty. Therefore, no president, despite the rhetoric you hear now, can grow us out of the deficit. Flat economies reduce government revenues and increase government expenses.

But here the new president will run into a second major problem. In the past, a common political device to stimulate the economy was deficit spending. Unfortunately for the president-to-be, the accumulated debt from past deficit spending sprees has reached such gigantic proportions that deficit spending is now something they do because they can't stop it, not because they really want to do it.

Whatever good deficit spending does in terms of stimulating the economy is more than offset by the enormous drain of capital from that same private economy.

For the first time since the Great Depression, Americans are confronting a shortage of government services caused by an empty till. California had to pay its employees with I.O.U.'s until some kind of budget could be patched together. Students already enrolled in higher education are having trouble getting their classes; those not enrolled, trouble getting in; those graduating, trouble finding jobs.

Politicians love to hold up the magic charm of retraining. But we have to ask the question: retraining for what? To say that retraining is an answer is to assume that as old jobs are eliminated new ones are created. That is not the case. If well-trained college graduates cannot find jobs, what jobs do you suppose you can retrain a 55-year-old assembly worker for?

The situation is not hopeless if we collectively come to our senses. Not only must politicians, regardless of party, cut out the bull and tell us the hard truth, we the people must signal to them that we won't cut their throats for doing it. If our signal to the politicians is that we want pie in the sky, then the situation is hopeless.

At the same time, we have to weed out the incompetents and the crooks. We have no margin for their errors. We can no longer afford to pay for their bribes. Business as usual will be the death of America as we know it. Continued economic decline will aggravate the social and racial problems already aggravated by ethnic diversity and racial and ethnic demagoguery. Like a reactor out of control, there will be a meltdown.

I'm not endorsing any presidential candidate. Jerry Brown was my choice. But I do urge you to listen carefully to all the candidates with an open mind but with your brain in gear. It will make a difference which one is elected.

In 1857, the English statesman and essayist Thomas Babington Maccaulay predicted in a letter to an American friend that we would fail as a country. He reasoned that as soon as people realized they could enrich themselves at public expense through the political process, then they would reject reason and listen to demagogues until at last the republic was plundered and laid waste.

Maccaulay's ghost has surely in recent years been smiling broadly, punching the ghost of his American friend in the ribs, and saying, "Did I not tell you, Henry? Did I not correctly predict this?" This election may be our last chance to disappoint the old rascal.

Oysters on the half shell make life good

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. - What a wonderful job God and man and woman did when they came up with the Greenbriar Resort. It is cool here in the mountains, the humidity is low, people smile and nobody seems to care what the New York Post called H. Ross Perot in a front page headline: "What a Wimp."

Grizzard

But this is not about politics, which is getting on my very last nerve in the first place. It is about having dinner here with Deidre.

Let me begin by saying I didn't eat an oyster until I was in my mid-'20s. I had seen others eat oysters, but I had always refrained.

Finally, however, I gave in and did allow a raw oyster to slide down my gullet and danged if that little sucker wasn't good. After that, I became an oyster addict.

To me, there is nothing as tasty as a dozen on the half shell, nice and cold. You salt them, squeeze on lemon juice, add a little Tabasco and put them on a soda cracker and down they go.

Follow them up with a long swallow of cold beer and life is good.

So we're dining and I order an appetizer of baked oysters. I prefer raw oysters, but they didn't have any raw oysters, so I was willing to take them any way they came.

I ate the first of the six baked oysters and Deidre said, ""There's no 'r' in July, you know."

"What on earth are you talking about?" I asked her.

"You should never eat oysters in a month that has no 'r' in it."

"'I never heard of such a thing," I said.

"Well," Deidre went on, "everybody knows it's true. Oysters can make you sick if you eat them in a month with no 'r.' You should wait until September."

I'm sitting in front of five more baked delicious oysters and I'm not about to wait until September to eat them.

I slid another down.

So Deidre asked, "Did I tell you about my friend's father?"

"No," I said, "What about him?"

"He died."

"From what?"

"From eating oysters."

"How can anybody die from eating oysters?"

"He ate one in a month with no 'r' in it and he came down with bibiliocalatosis."

"With what?"

"Bibiliocalatosis."

"I don't think that's a word."

"It doesn't matter," Deidre went on. "He got it from eating an oyster and it attacked his central nervous system and he died a slow, horrible death."

"Look," I said, "I know drinking, smoking, eating fatty foods, and riding in a car without airbags are dangerous, but for God's sakes, can't you let me enjoy a few stupid oysters."

"My friend said they had to give her father massive doses of morphine before he died, because the pain was so horrible."

I called the waiter over and had him take away what remained of my oysters.

"Is there something wrong with them, sir?" he asked.

"I don't want to catch bibiliocalatosis and die in utter agony," I said.

Now, I'm not certain I can eat another one. So, yet one more of life's pleasures gone.

I ordered a nonalcoholic beer and watched Deidre finish her fruit plate, wimp that I am.

Museum to display artifacts from Civil War-era steamboat

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Workers at the Corpus Christi Museum of Science and History will spend the next two years cleaning iron ship parts taken from a submerged paddle-wheel steamboat believed to date to the Civil War.

The ship has sat since its sinking in about 10 feet of water in the Navidad River, near the town of Lolita in Jackson County, said Barto Arnold, state marine archaeologist for the Texas Historical Commission.

Arnold carried two parts of the ship in the bed of a pickup truck and recently delivered them to the Corpus Christi museum. Both iron artifacts are about 5 feet long and 1 foot in diameter, Arnold said.

One piece is from the ship's steam engine. The other is a support from the ship's paddle wheel, he said. Both pieces are encrusted with barnacles and are fairly well preserved, Arnold said.

"It's in an out-of-the-way place, and the Navidad River is a fairly gentle river," he said, adding that the water's low salt content helped to preserve the ship parts.

Officials don't yet know the name of the paddle boat, or why it has sat for about 125 years in the middle of a 250-foot-wide section of the Navidad River, said Henry Neason, chairman of the Jackson County Historical Commission.

But the ship never was lost. At low tide, the upper edge of the ship's hull is visible above the water's surface, Neason said. At high tide, the ship sits just under the surface. And though its location is marked by a buoy, several passing boats have been damaged by hitting the submerged hull at night or when their captains weren't watching, Neason said.

Local legend provides two explanations for the ship's sinking, Neason said. One is that the ship belonged to Confederate troops, who purposely sank it to prevent Union troops from traveling up the Navidad River to attack the Confederate military base at Texana.

The other legend is that the ship sank in a storm, Neason said.

The ship has long been a favorite diving board for Jackson County residents swimming in the Navidad River, Neason said.

Marine archaeologists working with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in the fall of 1991 studied the ship and mapped its location, Arnold said. Two weeks ago, archaeologists found the engine and paddle-wheel pieces, and hastened to remove them before looters got to them first, Arnold said.

"This is really neat," Arnold said. "Underwater archaeology is very attractive to the public and this is a pretty interesting wreck."

The Corpus Christi Museum of Science and History is the official repository for all marine artifacts found in Texas waters, said Don Zuris, the museum's head curator.

Museum workers will remove the encrusted barnacles and other marine life with brushes, Zuris said. But removing the barnacles will expose the iron to air and start the rusting process, he said. So workers will drop the pieces in water through which they'll run a low electrical current. The current will stop the rusting process. Then workers will apply a wax coat to the metal to prevent the rusting process from continuing.

Book's translation disappointing

By Bechetta Jackson
Associated Press

WACO — Julie Peal leaned forward and listened intently as a translator revealed some of what she had been waiting months to hear.

For five years she kept stored away in a safe deposit box what she thought was the diary of a Japanese soldier killed in combat during World War II.

Showing proof of its age, the edges of the small pages are torn and some of the writing is faded. A thin strand of thread is all that holds the 80 delicate pages together.

Ms. Peal's father, Billie B. Byers, a World War II foot soldier, took the notes from the body of Japanese soldier. Byers safeguarded the booklet in a drawer in his bedroom for 37 years before he died in 1983, Peal said.

"Julie requested the diary when her daddy died," said Ms. Peal's mother, Neva Byers. "She said she wanted to keep it, so I let her have it."

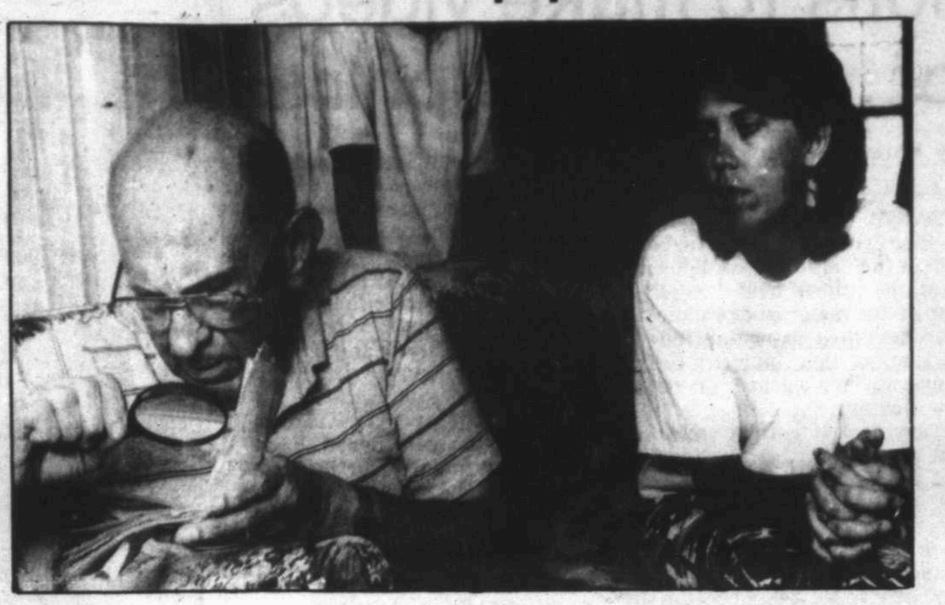

Ms. Peal's hope has been to have the wording translated so she could learn about the soldier. "I just want to find his relatives because I know there's somebody out there that's kin to this man who would cherish these things," the Elm Mott resident said.

Byers never talked much about his eight years in the U.S. Army, his wife said. The family knows that he fought at Iwo Jima and Guadalcanal during the war, but no one knows for sure where Byers was when he picked up the diary.

"We never pushed him on the issue because we knew he didn't like to talk about it," Mrs. Byers said. "He just told me he had gotten it off of one dead Japanese soldier. I don't know if he killed the man or what, he didn't really say."

Baylor University professor John Shepard and his wife, Jean, who took a look at the notes last week, concluded that it was not a diary, but a collection of popular Japanese songs.

Looking at some of the characters through a magnifying glass, the couple was amazed at how neatly and nicely the stanzas were written.

AP Laserphoto

Julie Peal listens as Baylor University Prof. John Shepard translates the book that her father, Billie Byers, took from the body of a Japanese soldier during World War II.

"They're beautifully written, just perfect," Mrs. Shepard said.

Her husband added, "There are all sorts of war songs, but I don't see any here. These appear to be popular songs that could be heard over the radio. They have to do with love and family."

Interestingly enough, the dates in the collection range from 1936 to 1938, three years before the start of World War II.

Because of finely detailed sketches of passenger ships and islands drawn in the booklet, Shepard believes the man was a sailor.

"There's one place in here where he mentions Colombia," Shepard said. "They all sound kind of sentimental. I'd say they were a personal collection of the songs he liked."

Unfortunately, Shepard said nowhere in the booklet does the soldier reveal anything about himself. "There is no identification of him. There's a lot here, but I don't think there's any information that will be useful in finding out anything."

Unless the soldier's name, address, unit name or where he fought is revealed in the tablet, a spokesman for the Japanese Embassy in Washington, D.C., said it will be literally impossible to track down a relative.

"We have several requests to find people, but we seldom do," said Lt. Mikio Shibata, with the Embassy's Defense Department. "The thing is, the war was over about 50 years ago, so most of the people involved are deceased. The families are usually divided and hard to find," he said.

Ms. Peal said she would have preferred another ending to this long-awaited revelation.

"I'm a little disappointed because I was hoping it would be a real diary," she said. "But at least now I know."

Man single-handedly builds Victorian-style house

By James Coburn
Associated Press

EDMOND, Okla. — Kevin Robison is a builder of dreams — literally.

Relentless as the sweeping wind at his back, he is erecting a grand three-story, Victorian-style house, alone.

"Initially, I drew (the floor plan) out, but I can honestly say I haven't looked at the drawings since. What's funny is that I've built this house step by step 100 times dreaming in my sleep," said Robison.

He started the construction two years ago. He feels fortunate that his fiance, Shelly Lamke, shares his flair for blending old with new.

Victorian granite sinks, oak toilet tanks, 50-year-old tongue-and-groove wooden floors, fish-scale design shingles, antique dressers, brass light fixtures, and a pot bellied stove all project an ambiance of turn-of-the-century charm. Robison designed eight stained glass windows set into refinished interior doors and exterior windows.

"I've always liked things from the past. Sometimes I wish we could live more in the past. It was a simpler time and it seems like values were better," he said.

Today, Robison, 32, works 48 hours a week as a service technician for Cain's Coffee Co., and often labors 50 hours weekly on the tall house.

When floodlights illuminate the solitude of a night's work, his shadows pass quietly to not awaken neighbors. A fresh smell of wood is in the breeze.

But lingering storms have him behind schedule. Racing to beat the soon-taunting glare of summer, Robison has completed the roof and framing. The white exterior siding should be on before winter. Having been pelted by sleet, Robison's freezing hands have hammered back in defiance of a frosty blast.

Each tapping nail and sore muscle awakens a personal triumph against time.

Laughing, he said, "My mom (Earlene Robison) started a quilt for my niece before she was born (in 1990) and she's not quite finished with it yet. I tease her that I'll build a whole house by the time it takes her to make the quilt."

The idea of the house came to him as a teen-ager. For 10 years he bought materials, to save more than half the cost of a $160,000 projected value. As years passed, the house grew in his mind to more than 3,000 square feet.

Self-taught after graduating from Edmond Memorial High School, Robison learned design from books and by touring building sites. He said building to earn a living would ruin the fun.

"I would travel to little known towns and take pictures of different details of homes," said Robison. "I went to Guthrie, ... occasionally I would make a sketch. There is probably a blend of houses from all over the state going into this one."

Like Noah and his Ark, he heard some negative remarks when he first started. Today he is thought of with amazement and fortitude, but there are always the cynics.

"I feel like they're not willing to accept the fact that I'm doing something that maybe they don't have the discipline for," he said. Skeptics only provoke Robison to succeed.

When he first completed and moved into the garage and workshop, a Rock Hollow neighbor feared it to be the home. Later she laughed, saying she was so relieved seeing the house expand. Another passerby thought it to be a church.

Robison signed affidavits stating he would meet strict city building codes. The city has worked with him, answering questions about what is required.

"Several builders have come by and I've asked them if there is anything needed to be changed and generally the response is, 'No, actually looks like it's built and framed better than most houses that are being built now," he said.

A jar has been placed in a spot built into the wall. In it is a picture of himself, a dollar bill, the estimated cost of the house, the date, and a list of others who in some way have helped him.

Scientists train sea lions to make videos of whales, dolphins

By Natalie Angier
N.Y. Times News Service

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — When Jenifer Zeligs strolls past the pools where the California sea lions are kept, the animals haul themselves out of the water and waddle toward her, their snouts snuffling in excitement, their blubbery bellies quivering like buckets of chocolate pudding.

They bark to get her attention, but they are not barking for fish; the sea lions have already been fed. No, they want her, their blond trainer, their camp counselor, their bipedal and terrestrial best friend.

They love Ms. Zeligs because she plays games with them. She shows them new tricks. She scratches their fur, grooms them, cleans their teeth and takes them for walks around their enclosures.

"I make them feel good about themselves," she said. "They get training sessions every day. If you didn't have a training session, you'd be depriving the animal of what makes it most happy in life."

In return, the four sea lions that live at the Long Marine Lab at the University of California at Santa Cruz will do almost anything Ms. Zeligs asks of them.

Soon she will be asking quite a bit, perhaps more than a scientist has ever requested of a pinniped. She will ask the sea lions to help perform basic research, both on themselves and on some of the other creatures they encounter in the wild.

Ms. Zeligs, along with Dr. Daniel P. Costa, her thesis adviser and an associate professor of biology at the university, and Dr. James T. Harvey of the Moss Marine Landing Laboratories in California, have devised a novel and potentially revolutionary scheme for studying the physiology and behavior of marine mammals.

They are training sea lions to do lengthy dives in the open ocean on command, and to take movies while underwater of whales, dolphins and other species that are exceptionally difficult to study by conventional means.

The scientists are teaching the sea lions to carry sophisticated equipment on their backs and to obey diving and swimming instructions so precisely that the sea lions should be able to aim video cameras at whales and gather footage of the secretive giants at play, work, love or battle.

The project is at its earliest stages, but the sea lions are swiftly learning to follow many intricate hand and audio signals. They may be ready to begin doing test filming in their tanks by the end of the summer and to start filming gray whales along the Santa Cruz coast by the middle of next year.

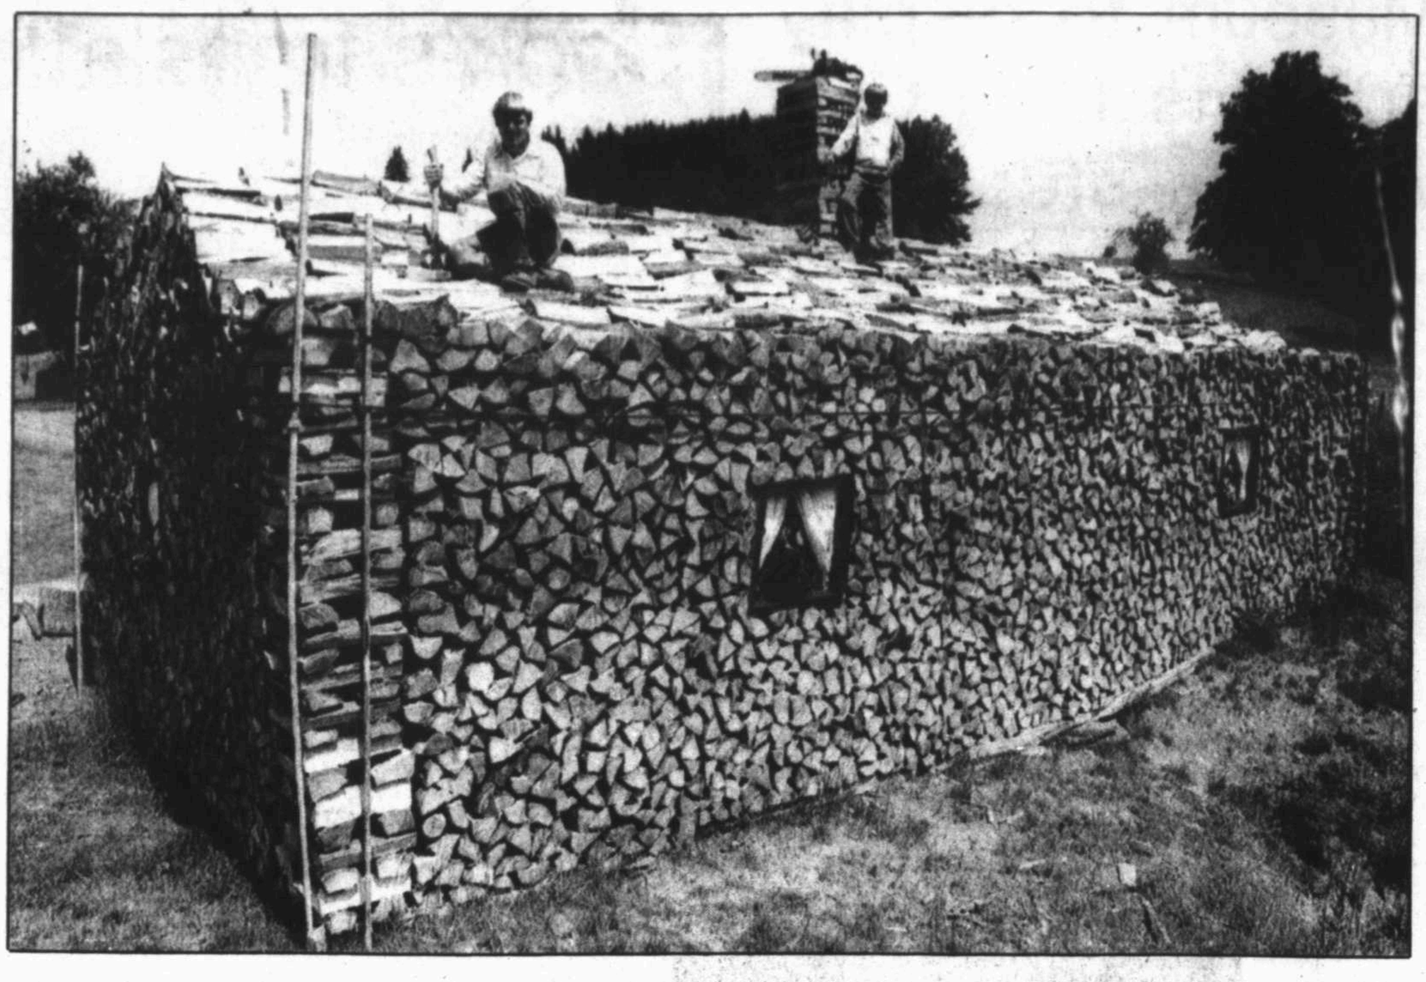

The use of sea lions as spies in the ocean wilderness has several advantages over either human divers or submersible vehicles, like the famed research vessel Alvin.

Whales often react negatively to foreign objects like submarines or people in wet suits, but they are quite accustomed to sea lions, which frequently skate along in their wake to save energy or swim around them in the search for food.

Sea lions can also descend comfortably to depths that are forbidding and expensive for people to plumb; and while Alvin is notoriously slow and clumsy to maneuver underwater, a sea lion can smoothly zig and zag to trail an active whale wherever it may dip or tumble.

Sea lions are easily trained, which is why they are staples of ocean aquariums, where they are often seen balancing balls on the ends of their noses.

"The idea behind this is that usually, when you study whales by introducing artificial things into their environment, you change their behavior," said Harvey. "But whales are used to seeing sea lions, so by getting sea lions to be our filmmakers, we should be able to record what the whales are doing without inadvertently influencing what they are doing."

Dairy farmers hire woman to milk their cows

ALMONT, N.D. (AP) — The three-word ad was tucked in a corner of the weekly New Salem Journal, and it knocked dairy farmers off their stools all over Morton County. "Will do milking."

Some say the dairy industry loses more farmers to the twice-daily, year-round grind of milking the herd than to fluctuating prices. Geraldine Dittus knows that as well as anyone — without helpers when her children grew up and left, she and her husband, Vernon, gave up dairying 10 years ago.

Mrs. Dittus ran the ad only twice in May.

Pat Erhardt, who farms near Almont, 30 miles west of Bismarck, hired Mrs. Dittus so he and his wife could get away for the weekend. "We can go to a wedding and enjoy ourselves a little," he said.

Mrs. Dittus is already booked every weekend next month. She has jobs lined up on Labor Day weekend, too, and in October.

"The first night I got two calls right off the bat," she said. "A lot wanted me more in August, when the fairs are on or they have weddings."

Her jobs are mostly near to home in southwestern Morton County, though one call came in from the Minot area — a 2½-hour drive north.

North Dakota has about 1,500 dairy farms left, about 100 fewer than 1½ years ago and 500 fewer than in 1987, said state Dairy Commissioner Gary Hoffman. Nationwide, about 13,000 dairy farms have gone out of business since 1987, said economist Jim Miller of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"There certainly used to be a great number of dairy farmers that took an almost perverse pride in never doing anything very far from the farm," Miller said.

Mrs. Dittus, 51, who raises beef cattle, pigs, sheep and grain on the 600-acre family farm west of Almont, charges 50 cents to hook up each cow to the machines for milking. "I'd say I make about $200 extra a month," she said.

Commissioners adopt anti-nepotism policy

■ Court urges other elected officials to subscribe to agreement, which goes beyond Texas' law on issue.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

The anti-nepotism policy adopted Monday by the Midland County Commissioners' Court will "not only boost morale and efficiency" but will "cut down on lawsuits" based on alleged discrimination and favoritism, Commissioner Win Brown said.

In its policy, the five commissioners declared that nepotism is "contrary to sound management practices" and is "contrary to good morale in the work place" and harbors "unnecessary conflicts, disruptions, and jealousies in county government."

"It is a good policy," Brown said. "It is well-thought through."

As it stands, the policy is automatically "binding upon" the Commissioners' Court and "all appointed department heads, officials, and employees who are employed directly by and who answer to the Commissioners' Court."

The policy not does not extend to the county's other elected officials.

However, commissioners are encouraging elected officials to "adopt, ratify and enforce" the policy, which goes beyond Texas' law on nepotism.

Texas' law already prohibits any elected official from appointing, voting for, or confirming any of his or her relatives by marriage or blood "to any office, position, clerkship, employment, or duty."

However, the Commissioners' Court's nepotism policy goes beyond that to "include any situation in which relatives are employed in a supervisor-employee or employee-supervisor capacity within the same department or office of Midland County."

Midland County Attorney Mark H. Dettman's office policy already forbids the hiring of relatives.

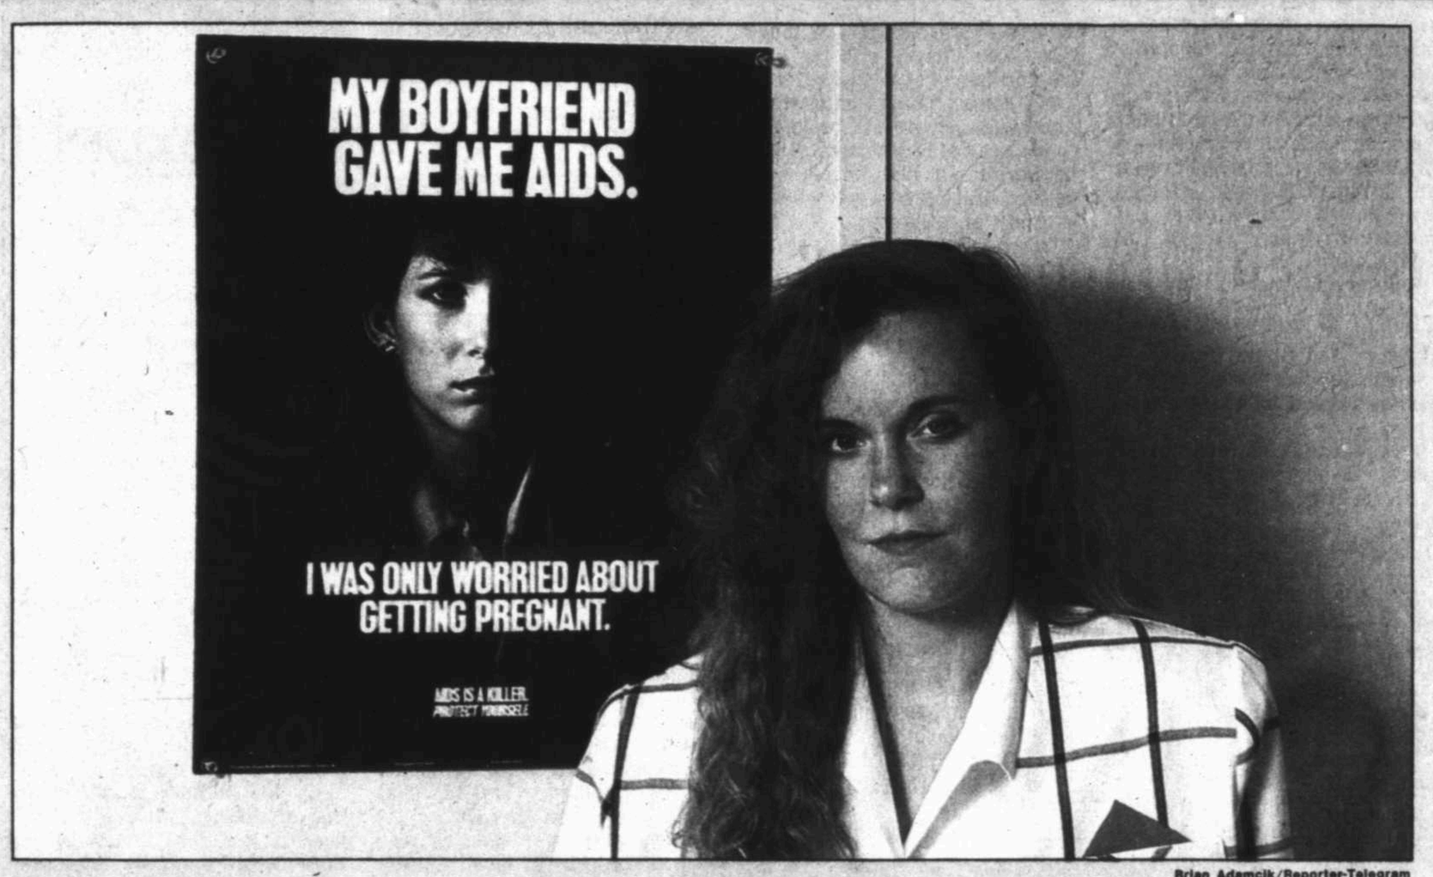

"I just don't think it is good business to have people that are married or related to each other working in the same office," Dettman said on Monday. "If a husband and wife get into a fight, and they happen to work in the same office, you've just doubled your problems."

Midland County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry earlier said that to ensure harmony within her office, she would not hire a relative — by blood or marriage — of anyone already working for her.

Further, she said that for discretion's sake, she would not hire anybody who had a relative working within the Basin AIDS coalition builds 'nest of angels'

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

Cathryn Jackson believes the next battle in the war against AIDS should be fought with heterosexuals.

"The homosexual population is pretty much educated. They know how lethal it is," she said. "We just can't seem to get the message to the heterosexual community."

Today, Mrs. Jackson starts her third week as the executive director of the Permian Basin Aids Coalition (PBAC), serving 17 West Texas counties.

The coalition offers emotional, medical and financial counseling to HIV patients. Mrs. Jackson wants the PBAC to be like a second home to them.

'The way I see it is no one gave me the right to judge anyone else. I wish everyone would see it that way.'

— Cathryn Jackson

"The worst part of the suffering for them is the emotional. A lot of these people lose their homes, their jobs ... some of their families will turn on them or their kids are ridiculed. They're treated like lepers," she said.

"I want them to feel like they have an extended family here."

According to the Center for Disease Control, by the year 2000, everyone will be affected in some way by AIDS. By the end of the year 1.5 million people will be infected with HIV in the United States.

Mrs. Jackson knows the problem needs to be tackled now.

"If we start to address the problem, we can slow it. Education and knowledge are the keys," she said. "And I believe that the education should start from the parents at home. The sooner you get them wise to the fact that the danger is there, the temptation is less.

"Abstinence is a wonderful, beautiful theory — but unfortunately it's not realistic," she Area faces need for foster parents

■ Only 65 certified foster families are available for 21 counties.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

When a youngster moves into a foster home, his luggage contains more than clothes.

"He comes with his suitcase full of pain ... but being a member of a family can help a lot," said Frances Hays, who with her husband, Bob, are foster parents.

"Sure, it's difficult any time you work with a child that's been abused," said Ms. Hays, who has taken in 10 children over the last two years.

"It's a scary thing to go into (being a foster parent), but there are a lot of kids out there that need to be loved, that want routine and a family," she said.

"They're scared and you're scared, but pretty soon it's like they are one of your own and they're part of the family," Ms. Hays said.

"Coming with us is a resting period for them, to keep them safe and warm and happy," she said.

"The number one goal is to get them back to their (biological) parents. When they are with us, the DHS (Department of Human Services) works with their parents," Ms. Hays said.

"We have had them as little as three days and as much as eight months," she said.

Currently, the Hayses have one foster child, a 5-month-old girl.

"We got her when she was born — 4 days old. It's going to be a real tough one to send her back home, but we'll work through it," she said.

But — like all foster children — the baby girl needs someone now.

Dianne Reed, foster home recruiter for DHS, said a limited number of foster parents in the area may hinder fulfillment of that need.

"We are in a crisis situation now ... because we have only 65 (certified foster) families in a 21 county area," Ms. Reed said.

"The figures are going up, and they (children) have to be somewhere. If they are not put in foster homes, they are put in shelters," she said.

A child removed from a dangerous home may feel more insecure and blame himself for his situation when placed in a shelter rather than in a foster home, Ms. Reed said.

Living with a foster family provides more one-on-one contact and a stable home environment, she said.

"The best situation for a kid is not being removed from home, but that's not the way life is," Ms. Reed said.

Youngsters placed in foster homes have been "abused and neglected and would not be safe staying at home," Ms. Reed said.

A judge decides whether a child should be removed from his natural parents and placed in a foster home.

While in foster care, DHS works with the child's biological parents to remedy the situation.

"We try real hard to work with the biological parents ... because those kids want to be home," Ms. Reed said.

"Until they are removed, that is what they think life is suppose to be," she said.

"What we would like to see happen is see that child return home with his parents or parent who have gotten the necessary help they need ... (otherwise) the best thing for the child is a permanent situation (adoption)," Ms. Reed said.

Odessa hospital wins national praise

By Michael Kashgarian

ODESSA — In three years, Medical Center Hospital went from being millions of dollars in the red to being a financially stable health care facility.

In light of the recovery, MCH was recognized by a national health group in a contest as having the best financial turnaround among facilities in the 100-299 bed category, officials announced Monday.

The American Hospital Association and the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand recognized MCH in the July 20 issue of Hospitals magazine.

"Through expense cuts, emergency funding, and revitalization of equipment, the hospital began to reverse its financial problems," the hospital association announced.

"In fiscal year 1988 we were $6.5 million in the hole and we went into the fiscal year 1989 with a negative cash balance of $3.4 million. In 1991, we had a revenue of $8.4 million," said Amy Hendrick, assistant administrator for Medical Center Hospital.

"It's an impressive turnaround in a short period of time," she said.

The success has been attributed to community support.

In 1989, the community backed the formation of the Ector County Hospital District and in 1990 voters passed — by 78.6 percent — a one-cent sales tax, the first in about 20 years, Ms. Hendrick said.

"We've increased patient days and emergency room visits. It shows the increased support by people using the hospital," she said.

In addition, the hospital saved funds through salary freezes and elimination of various positions.

Since the turnaround, the hospital board has planned on a 25-year project of improvements and renovations.

Plans include development of new emergency room projects, expansion of the radiation/oncology unit, addition of two bed-floors, building of an outpatient radiology center and expansion of the critical care unit.

Phase 1, which includes new construction, remodeling and renovations has been scheduled to start by September.

INS aims to update resident alien cards

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The U.S Immigration and Naturalization Service is issuing resident aliens a new style of "green card" that officials say will be harder to counterfeit and easier to identify.

The cards, which are not actually green but salmon-colored, will undergo their 18th incarnation starting next month. Immigrants who acquired alien cards before or during June 1979 are asked to get the new ones.

The new cards are part of an INS effort to reduce the number of fraudulent claims by undocumented workers and to provide better identification of resident aliens, said Ray Dudley, an immigration service spokesman in San Antonio.

Aliens working, living or attending school in the United States who use the cards risk border-crossing delays if their old cards are not replaced by Aug. 1, 1993, authorities said.

"We're trying to rid ourselves of the old cards because they are so susceptible to being counterfeited," Dudley said. "Many people who enter the country illegally now come with counterfeit green cards, knowing they must have something to show employers."

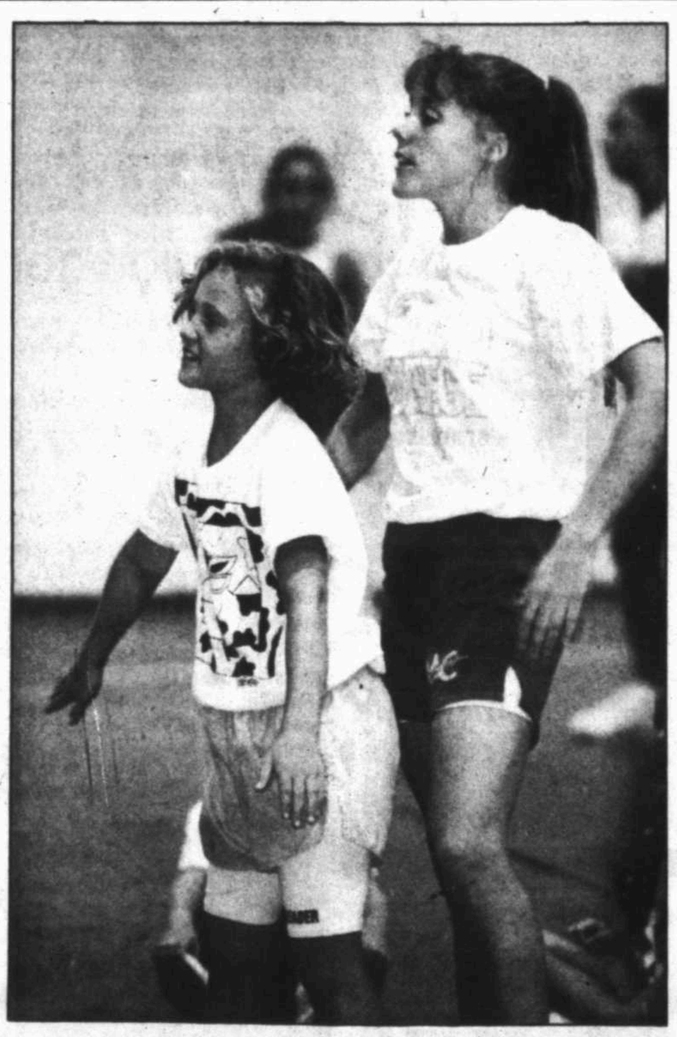

Others have used counterfeit cards to defraud government agencies in applying for Aid for Families with Dependent Children, food stamps, subsidized housing, medical treatment and other social services, Dudley said.

Earlier versions of the alien cards lacked the person's photograph, fingerprints or signature, Dudley said. The new card will incorporate all three.

Card holders who have been permanent residents for more than five years can apply for U.S. citizenship rather than replace their cards. Resident aliens older than 55 who have lived in the United States more than 20 years also can apply for citizenship.

The new cards will cost $70, plus the price of two color photos. Waivers are available for indigent people.

The agency hopes to renew an estimated 1.8 million green cards still in use nationwide.

Workers begin transformation of Astrodome

HOUSTON (AP) — What does it take to transform the Astrodome from a sports arena into the Republican Party's convention hall? For starters, an acre of plywood, nearly five miles of 2-by-4s, 100,000 square feet of carpet and 150,000 bolts and screws to hold it all together.

The Houston Astros left their home Sunday on a 28-day road trip that will cover 9,186 miles in eight National League cities, and the GOP immediately got busy preparing for the Aug. 17-20 convention.

Workers on Sunday pulled up the Astroturf, rearranged the Astrodome's seats and began dropping cables from 200-foot-high rafters.

On Monday, crews primarily toiled on a lighting grid that ultimately will suspend 2,000 lights 64 feet above the Dome floor. They also lowered an overhead gondola inside the stadium and continued working on the sound system.

Outside the giant stadium, laborers hung long red, white and blue banners spangled with elephants and stars.

Convention spokesman Joe Fleming said work was proceeding a bit ahead of schedule.

"We're confident everything will be complete in time," he said Monday. "No worries whatsoever, but we will be working around the clock, 24 hours a day between now and the convention."

Convention planners had sought six weeks to dress the Dome, but compromised with baseball offi-courthouse.

Besides Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer and commissioners Durward Wright, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and Brown, no other elected official has to abide by the policy, Seltzer said.

"However, if they choose not to do so, they are in violation of our policy, and we will not pay for their legal defense" coming out of any discrimination lawsuit "because they are violating the policy," Seltzer said.

However, whether or not that stance will hold up in court "kind of depends on the plaintiff's attorney's approach to it," Dettman said.

"In this day and age, regardless of what you write down (as policy), people are going to sue anybody and everybody," Dettman said.

By their policy, members of the Commissioners' Court are trying to "limit the taxpayers' exposure" to liability, Dettman said. "That's exactly what they should be doing."

"It will be interesting to see how many departments actually adopt this (policy)," Brown said. "We hope the other departments will ratify it."

Seltzer earlier said he and the commissioners hope other elected officials will agree to the policy and subscribe to it. "We certainly are going to encourage them to do so. If nothing else, it is good management," he said.

The policy applies to appointed officials and supervisors, including administrators of the county's Road and Bridge Department, library, welfare office, housing, facility management, Fairview Cemetery and veterans' affairs office.

Throughout the 500-member county work force, there apparently is no violation of the state nepotism law, which applies to members of the Texas Legislature as well as to judges, and to district, county, city, precinct and school district officials.

10 percent who come into foster care are available for adoption and then there is an average 18 months, two years before that even occurs."

"Most judges are strong about working children into their own home," she added. "And we will try all we can to re-unite those children with their families."

For those interested in taking care of youngsters until they can return home, requirements may not be as strict as some people might think, Ms. Reed said.

"A lot of people may assume that we expect a married couple, and the wife stays home and the husband makes a lot of money . . .," she said.

But that's not the case.

Foster parents need not be married or be rich or meet any age requirement except being over 21 years old, Ms. Reed said.

Foster parents must be certified, which includes attending a Model Approach to Partnership in Parenting class. The class meets once a week for 10 weeks.

"It helps them become aware of what it's going to take to become a foster parent," Ms. Reed said.

Other requirements include passing a criminal background check and having sufficient space for a child to live.

In light of the need for more foster parents, Ms. Reed said she would like to see more minorities apply. Fifty-eight percent of foster parents are white while about 52 percent of the children are minority, she said.

So far this summer — typically a slow period — the need for foster parents has increased.

"If this summer is any indication of this fall, we are going to need a lot more homes to put those children in," Ms. Reed said.

Anyone interested in becoming a foster parent can call 1-800-233-3405, or in Midland, 686-2273.

BEGIN: Republicans tackle Astrodome transformation

cials on three weeks, Fleming said — the shortest time the Republicans ever have had for such an undertaking.

"Rather quickly, it'll begin to take shape and be recognizable as a convention floor," he said.

A thousand workers will perform the metamorphosis using, in part: 4.7 miles of 2-by-4s; 45,000 square feet of plywood; 100,000 square feet of carpet; 150,000 nuts, bolts and screws; 576 speakers; and 8,000 telephones.

When the makeover is finished, the Dome will feature a massive podium flanked by rows of press stands and a 50-foot arch backdrop. Two 15-by-20-foot television screens will be built into either side.

Workers have been assembling the podium in a warehouse in west Houston and will transport it to the Astrodome in sections, probably today, Fleming said. They also will begin work on rigging and power generators for the 7,000-pound curtain measuring 100 feet high by 570 feet wide to be hung behind the podium.

Harris County, which owns the Astrodome, has been conducting tests on the roof to make sure it can handle the 100 tons of equipment to be hung from the rafters.

Near week's end, construction of four network anchor booths estimated to cost some $500,000 each will begin.

Fleming said GOP staffers are excited that work on the convention, which has been going on for more than a year, finally is taking shape at the Dome.

"You work for so long to put something together that when it finally happens, there's a great feeling of satisfaction," he said.

In other convention activity Sunday, some 270 Houston-area abortion-rights activists rehearsed strategies for combatting anti-abortion protests. The national group Operation Rescue plans to erect blockades at local women's clinics beginning Aug. 11.

said. "I have a 10-month-old boy, and I would like to believe he will be a virgin the rest of his life; but I know that isn't realistic."

She urges anyone who has put themselves at risk for the disease to get tested.

"It's a frightening prospect. But if you find out you are positive, we can help you; and the sooner the diagnosis the better. We are extending lifespans every year," she said. "Magic Johnson is living proof that you can live with the disease.

"And whatever the results, the treatment begins. Because the person who finds out they are negative will always be more safe," she said.

Since September 1987 until June 30, 1992, 45 males and 21 females tested HIV positive in Midland County. During the same period in Ector County, 46 males and eight females tested HIV positive.

"Those numbers are shocking, and you could safely double them. People are afraid to get tested — especially in smaller communities like here. . . . There is a great deal of prejudice," she said.

"The way I see it is no one gave me the right to judge anyone else. I wish everyone would see it that way."

At 24, Mrs. Jackson has already undergone chemotherapy for cancer of the bladder. She believes the strength of HIV patients under her counsel helped her overcome the illness.

"When I was diagnosed, I had so much support — from everyone and everywhere," she said. "These people don't have anyone. They are often shunned. One individual last week referred to us as the 'nest of angels.'"

The PBAC assists patients with purchasing drugs not covered by the Texas Department of Health, utilities and rent — when warranted, and unpaid medical bills not covered by insurance.

They now are assisting 81 Permian Basin residents — and two to four are signing up a week, according to Mrs. Jackson. Volunteers are needed to help answer phones, prepare mailers and help with fund-raising benefits.

Mrs. Jackson, originally from Hobbs, N.M., previously worked for the Oklahoma State Department of Health in HIV surveillance. She credits her parents, Midland residents Bonnie and Mark Caldwell, as her inspirations for her work.

"I knew there was a need in this area. It's a frightening need. There's a tremendous lack of knowledge, and no one wants to face the problem," she said. "Fear breeds ignorance. If you try to address the fear, you can cut down on the ignorance."

Mrs. Jackson attended New Mexico State University and Oklahoma City University. She has a bachelor's degree in Health Administration and plans to obtain a master's degree in Epidemiology. She and her husband, Rudy, are the parents of 10-month-old Zachary.

Anyone seeking information from the PBAC can call 550-2437 in Midland and Odessa or 1-800-695-5611.

Environmentalists want stricter pollution controls on dairies

AUSTIN (AP) — Statewide and area environmentalists have joined forces demanding that dairies in northcentral Texas adhere to stricter pollution laws or face lawsuits.

The Lone Star chapter of the Sierra Club and Cross Timbers Concerned Citizens alleged Monday that 34 dairies in Erath, Comanche and Bosque counties have not obtained required discharge permits from the Environmental Protection Agency.

"What we are saying is that these operations have discharged in the past and will likely continue to discharge. Thus, they need an EPA permit," said Stuart Henry, an attorney for the two environmental groups.

"If these dairies fail to obtain EPA permits, continue to discharge, or fail to comply with EPA permit standards, then we intend to file suit and seek penalties against the dairies," he said.

Almost all of the targeted dairies are feedlot operations with an average size of 600 head and three milkings per day, the groups said.

Pollution from the dairies has increased dramatically, said Travis Brown, president of Cross Timbers Concerned Citizens.

He criticized the Texas Water Commission, saying the agency has failed to conduct routine inspections, and adopt tougher regulations governing confined animal feeding operations.

Ann McGinley, of the Water Commission, said the agency has conducted its annual inspections of permitted dairies.

She said the agency recently postponed changing animal feedlot rules in favor of trying to beef up enforcement of existing rules.

She said the commission is hoping to cross-train state milk inspectors to also check for water pollution at the dairies.

Farm workers strike contractor recruiting for New Mexico chili crop

EL PASO (AP) — Farm workers recruited in El Paso went on strike Monday to protest their 85 cents-a-bucket wage for harvesting New Mexico jalapenos.

The workers say their ultimate goal is to eliminate contractors from the agricultural industry. But they are trying to get the contractor in this instance, Jesus Olmos, to raise his rate to $1.25 a bucket, which would be the minimum wage.

Carlos Marentes, Border Agricultural Workers Union, said the strike's outcome will make a difference how workers are treated during the entire New Mexico chili season, which gets under way in mid-August.

"The person who begins work in the chili fields establishes the salary for the rest of the season," he said.

The strike began before dawn Monday at the foot of the Paso del Norte Bridge. Workers gather there every growing season to be recruited for work in New Mexico fields. About 50 workers left the bus taking them to the field and joined the strike, Olmos said.

"I think there is a general discontent among workers," Marentes said Monday.

The field where workers had been picking jalapenos belongs to New Mexico rancher Loyad Anderson. Anderson last year had voluntarily contracted directly with workers, Marentes said. The contract guaranteed minimum wage, water and bathrooms at the fields and better working conditions.

But Marentes said the contract expired in February and with it went the guarantees.

Anderson was not at home when called for comment. Jesus Olmos was not reachable by The Associated Press.

The New Mexico chili industry was worth about $59.2 million last year, up from about $54 million in 1990, a Department of Agriculture report said. The record output came despite heavy rains that ruined some crops.

Under federal labor laws workers must be paid minimum wage, but some workers can earn more than minimum when paid by the bucket because they are faster pickers. Workers say that at 85 cents a bucket even the best pickers wouldn't earn minimum wage.

"Eighty-five cents an hour! That's a wage they were paying 10 years ago," said a worker who would not give his name but is supporting the strike. Many workers say contractors blacklist them when their names appear in print or they appear on television criticizing the industry.

"How is it that the price of household goods is rising, but salaries are going down?" the worker said in Spanish. He said he and his wife earned a total of $3,800 to support their three children last year.

The worker said he would support the strike, survive on food from neighbors and family and donations from the union while he is without work.

Sale of seized property barely covers costs, paper reports

HOUSTON (AP) — The federal government actually loses money on up to half of all real estate and hundreds of vehicles it seizes each year in Houston and South Texas under the federal forfeiture law, a newspaper reported Monday.

In a copyright story, the Houston Chronicle reported that money received from the sale of vehicles and real estate seized in the region is barely enough to pay the cost of storing and managing the property.

The newspaper based its conclusions on a study of a computer analysis of vehicle and real estate seizures and costs.

Records obtained from the U.S. Marshals Service under the Freedom of Information Act show that even though forfeited property brings in millions of dollars for the government, only seizures of cash and jewelry, which cost very little to store, are consistently profitable.

"The government's seizures, for the most part, are not well-founded and not well thought out," said Houston defense attorney Jim Lavine, who is active in a national organization of defense attorneys trying to reform the federal forfeiture system.

"They're just being indiscriminate about it, and it is not cost-effective for them."

The government received $247,465 for vehicles sold in Houston in 1990, but kept only $31,139 after paying its yearly storage bill, according to the records. For 1991, the government kept $53,513 on sales of $297,292.

Also, the reports indicate that the government lost money on about half of the 103 parcels of real estate seized in Harris County between 1986 and 1991 after being forced to return the parcels to owners and lienholders. Reimbursement for management costs on real estate is rare, officials said, although scattered rental income offsets some expenses.

However, federal officials say the forfeiture program is not designed to make a profit but to take the spoils of crime away from drug dealers and other criminals.

"It's not a program whose main goal is revenue," said U.S. Department of Justice spokesman Matt Jeanneret. "The primary goal of the program is law enforcement."

The newspaper's investigation indicates the government is falling short of both goals in many cases, since about half of the vehicles and real estate seized are ultimately returned to their owners after accumulating storage and management costs.

The federal forfeiture law was designed to take the spoils of crime out of the hands of criminals and give them to law enforcement.

Teen saves father in Blanco River accident

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Thirteen-year-old John David Ruiz doesn't know where he found the strength to clutch his father until rescuers could pull him from the deadly grip of the raging Blanco River.

But the 103-pound eighth-grader has a good idea.

He says an unseen hand helped him hold his 43-year-old father, Rudy Ruiz, who begged his son to let go, lest the youth fall into the river.

Rudy Ruiz became trapped during a weekend fishing trip after a river current pulled down a 12-foot raft that got attached to his leg by a rope.

"My father told me to let go. He told me he didn't want to take me with him," John David said Sunday, a day after their 25-minute ordeal. "I said, 'No way.' So we prayed together and asked the Lord for the strength to get him up."

'You are just able to do some things you don't think are possible under different circumstances.'

— Rudy Ruiz

His father's explanation, as reported by the San Antonio Express-News, simply was: "You are just able to do some things you don't think are possible under different circumstances."

The Ruizes of San Antonio and John Prodajko of El Paso, Rudy Ruiz's best friend, were fishing about 60 miles north of San Antonio when the teen-ager hooked the first catch of the day.

As he reeled in the catfish, their raft hit a whirlpool and overturned in six feet of water.

Prodajko, caught in the whirlpool, battled for his safety, while John David, who was swept onto a low bridge, held on to his father.

Rudy Ruiz's leg was getting dragged under by a rope attached to the raft, which was weighted down with a trolling motor and batter.

Prodajko, once he freed himself, rushed to join John David, who had been holding his 185-pound father above the current.

"I hooked my arms under his arms and pulled him up where he could put his arms up over the bridge," John David said.

Another person who saw the struggle was able to cut the raft loose, ending the ordeal.

The youngster said his biggest fear was his father would suffer his third heart attack. "I was afraid of him limping out on me and letting go," the teen-ager said.

On Sunday, Ruiz and his wife, Diana, celebrated their 23rd wedding anniversary.

"I wouldn't be here if not for my son. He didn't let me give up," said Ruiz, a sales representative for a pharmaceutical company.

Ruiz said his only injuries were a sore leg and arm muscles that "feel like I've just run five or 10 miles."

Father and son recalled the joke they shared once they both were safe. Ruiz often teases his son when he doesn't to do his household chores by saying, "Son, I love you, but I don't need you."

But after the brush with death, he looked at John David and said, "Son, I love you, and I need you, too."

Fight resumes over lucrative pari-mutuel license

AUSTIN (AP) — Two groups that failed to win a coveted pari-mutuel license for a dog racing track in Galveston County accused the Texas Racing Commission in court Monday of breaking the law.

Meanwhile, the winners described their opponents as "extremely poor losers."

State District Court Judge Scott McCown said he probably will decide the case Friday.

"If the plaintiffs are right, most of the Racing Commission should be in the penitentiary. If the Racing Commission is right they ought to be given medals by the governor," McCown said.

The dispute is over the license granted in 1990 by the Racing Commission to Gulf Greyhound Partners Inc. to build a track in La Marque.

The facility is expected to be one of the most lucrative dog tracks in the nation. It is about 70 percent complete.

Lone Star Greyhound Park Inc. and Galveston Bay Greyhound Racing Association are challenging the Racing Commission's selection of Gulf Greyhound, a group led by Paul Bryant Jr., the son of late football coach Paul "Bear" Bryant.

The two losing groups allege that the commission violated numerous laws in the process of awarding the license.

"In numerous instances, those standards were violated, the parties were not accorded fairness," said Lone Star's attorney Tim Herman of Austin.

Lone Star's major complaint is that the Racing Commission voted to award it a license in November 1989, and then six months later, without hearing further evidence, emerged from a closed-door meeting and decided to reopen the contest for a license.

Under questioning from Herman, Racing Commission general counsel Paula Carter said a taped recording of that closed session could never be found. She said she threw away a tape marked with the date of the hearing, but that the tape was blank.

When asked why she threw out the tape, she said it was to avoid confusion.

Ms. Carter also said she found nothing improper when she applied for a job as an assistant to Robert Johnson, who was a member of the law firm that represented Gulf Greyhound, and had just been appointed parliamentarian to the state Senate.

Supreme Water Treatment offers $200 savings on systems

Supreme Water Treatment is proud to announce that they have recently become Midland/Odessa's exclusive dealers for EcoWater (formerly called Lindsay). In 1925, Lindsay patented the first on-site regenerating water softener. They have been in the forefront of the industry ever since.

The EcoWater water softening system has up 60 fewer parts than other systems — which means it's easier to service and requires less maintenance. No metal parts come in contact with water, eliminating the possibility of rust or corrosion.

Other EcoWater patented processes include:

■ EcoGizer Regeneration Process

A unique mixture of co-current and counter-current cycles that cleans the resin bed more effectively while using less salt and water.

■ Stratified resin bed

Only EcoWater uses a mixture of fine mesh and standard mesh FDA approved resin for optimal performance level. It combines the superior filtration characteristics of a fine mesh resin with the excellent flow rates of standard mesh resin.

■ Bypass Valve

Allows for manual bypass of system for yard watering and other such uses.

■ Regeneration Algorithm

A proprietary equation used to predict future water needs (based on actual water used). It helps conserve salt and water.

Supreme Water Treatment also introduces the EcoWater state-of-the-arts reverse osmosis system. They remind you that an investment in a quality reverse-osmosis drinking water system contributes not only only to good taste, but good health and on-tap convenience. Supreme Water Treatment has been serving Midland since 1981 with conditioned water systems, certified equipment and professional service. The company is well known for its dependability and quality service.

With the EcoWater reverse-osmosis system, Supreme Water removes up to 95 percent of dissolved mineral salts, dead bacteria, chlorine and other foreign material that give water a bad taste.

We live in an area where pure water is of great concern.

Area water contains 1,800 to 3,000 parts per million of total dissolved solids. Supreme Water's system drops the solids to 200 parts per million. Some other systems' water, after treatment, contains 1,200 parts per million. This doesn't meet Texas law's requirement for bottled water, which is under 500 parts per million. But Supreme Water's system drops it significantly under state requirements.

The EcoWater system also protects health by providing water appropriate for low-sodium diets. And, it saves money by replacing expensive bottled water, by operating more efficiently and saving 1,000 gallons or more as compared to other reverse-osmosis systems.

And from now to June 30, 1992, Supreme Water Treatment offers $100 savings on EcoWater softener system, and $100 off an EcoWater reverse osmosis system. All you have to do is bring them this story and the discount is yours.

Telegraphy becoming lost art

MADILL, Okla. (AP) — Before computers, teletypes, fiber optics and facsimile machines revolutionized communication, the most pressing news of the times was conveyed to the world through a series of dots and dashes by people like Eugene Wood.

For 41 years, until he retired in 1983, the longtime Madill resident followed in his father's footsteps as a telegraph operator and freight agent for the Frisco and Burlington Northern railroads.

He worked at the old depot in Madill, and at depots in Amber, Foyil and Fairland in Oklahoma, and at Seneca and Ritchey in Missouri.

His most memorable career experience he said was relaying the flood of congratulatory messages when Madill's favorite son, Raymond Gary, was elected governor of Oklahoma in 1954.

Today, at 68, Wood is still preserving the traditions of his archaic vocation and promoting fellowship among its former practitioners as president of an Oklahoma and Texas regional chapter of the Morse Telegraph Club.

Its 60 members convene on the last Saturday of April each year at a restored railroad depot at Garland, Texas, to reminisce and commemorate the birthday of Samuel F.B. Morris, who invented the first telegraph in 1837.

Up until two years ago, Western Union made an open telegraph line available to the club for its annual meeting. Since that was discontinued, members have come up with an electronic adaptor for their telephones that allows them to converse in Morse Code using their old telegraph keys.

Morse is a message system that assigns a pulse code of dots and dashes to each number and letter of the alphabet. It was once the mainstay of a communications network used by everything from railroads to the military, pipeline companies, newspapers, commercial message companies like Western Union and Postal Telegraph, and even telephone companies.

Operators were able to recognize each other by the individual cadence they used to send their messages.

"Everybody used the same code, but each person had a different touch," Wood said. The Morse Telegraph Club was founded in Chicago, Ill., in 1942 and today has 49 chapters in the United States and Canada.

Since commercial telegraph communications systems have been out of use since the mid-1970s, the ranks of old-time practitioners of telegraphy are thinning.

Wood was one of only eight members who attended a reunion last month of the 106-year-old Order of Railroad Telegraphers at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The trade union once boasted membership in excess of 150,000 telegraphers.

"There's still operators out there, but we're becoming pretty scarce," he said.

Wood says the Morse Telegraph Club has managed to keep its membership from declining by including amateur radio operators who practice a variation of the standard Morse Code.

Besides keeping his telegraphy skills sharp by regularly exchanging Morse coded messages with other club members, Wood has acquired an assortment of antique telegraph paraphernalia, some of which was handed down to him by his father.

The centerpiece of his collection is a nearly 130-year-old telegraph key from the Civil War era.

Comparing the simplicity of the old equipment with the high-tech complexity of modern communications systems, Wood can't help but be struck by the same thoughts expressed by in four words by Samuel Morse when he transmitted the first telegraph message 155 years ago: "What hath God wrought?"

The words also appear on the masthead of "Dots and Dashes," the quarterly newsletter sent out to the more than 2,500 members of the Morse Telegraph Club who associate wire-tapping with something other than electronic eavesdropping.

Diet Center says consult a weight-control expert — yourself

Diet Center is proud to be associated with Joel Robertson, nationally known health professional and author.

Tina Blake has owns and manages Midland's Diet Center. She is a highly respected professional in our community.

Diet Center knows the causes of weight gain are as personal as the solutions. That's why they're offering Personality Profile Plus (PPP), a self-discovery program that is both revealing and encouraging. PPP was developed by the prestigious Robertson Institute exclusively for Diet Center clients.

PPP is a totally private, at-home, self-discovery program. It's designed to help you view your unique personality characteristics that lead to certain eating patterns and to encourage you to form healthy new ones. By understanding your past, you can redirect your future.

With PPP, the first step is listening. The program is customized for you. The answers you provide on your Confidential Questionnaire allow the Robertson Institute to tailor a program specifically for your personality. This isn't "one-size-fits-all" advice. They listen first, then provide personalized Self-Discovery and Encouragement programs to suit your needs.

Within 10 days of sending in your questionnaire, the Robertson Institute analyzes your responses and, based on them, selects a series of six audiotapes that you'll receive from your Diet Center counselor — one each week. Each tape comes with a set of confidential worksheets for you to record your own private thoughts, feelings and comments relevant to that tape's topic.

You'll also receive a reference binder and durable tape caddy. We know PPP will be something you'll refer to frequently. Its benefits multiply each time you use it.

Indulging in some "quality time" for yourself is rewarding in itself. But the real reward is the power that true understanding gives. The power to identify the negative issues that may undermine your efforts in maintaining a healthy weight. Things like stress, boredom or loneliness — even excitement. You will understand that thoughts are related to brain chemistry. And that certain moods can trigger thoughts about food. You'll discover the power to change. And realize some surprising things along the way. It's a journey that's both fulfilling and powerful.

PPP isn't for the "I want it now" dieter. At Diet Center our mission is to provide a safe and effective weight loss program that teaches skills for lifelong weight management. PPP is right for you if:

- You feel that understanding your eating habits would be beneficial to you.
- You eat in stressful situations.
- You eat to reward yourself.
- You're willing to invest about a half-hour a week in self-discovery to enhance your life.

The Diet Center program teaches that sound nutrition, with an emphasis on real food, is more important than counting calories, that the focus should be on long-term weight maintenance, not just weight loss.

There are no contracts to sign or hidden costs at Diet Center. A one-time registration fee is $75. The weekly fee covers private daily counseling and weigh-in sessions as well as the daily supplement.

Call Tina Blake at 684-5081 to arrange for a free consultation. Or come by Diet Center at 2034 W. Cuthbert, across from Memorial Stadium. Hours are 7 a.m. to noon and 4:30 to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. Visa and MasterCard are now accepted. New clients get 50 percent off their registration with the EXTRA! card.

Crew to hunt for gold in New Mexico peak

By Suzanne Gamboa
Associated Press writer

There's one thing Terry Delonas is sure of as he embarks on an adventure to uncover the mystery of Victorio Peak.

"I believe we will go in and make a discovery and I can't tell you what we'll discover," said the grandson of the man who claimed to have found a cache of gold in the peak half a century ago. "We may discover nothing at all, we may discover some of the treasure and we may discover none."

Stories passed on by traveling foot doctor Milton "Doc" Noss were about glittering gold bars stacked liked firewood, precious artifacts and Wells Fargo chests deep within the bowels of the peak on New Mexico rangeland.

The peak became part of the restricted White Sands Missile Range in the 1940s.

Delonas and a crew of technicians were given a license last year for a 20-day search that was supposed to begin in April. A dispute over the missile range's request for a $200,000 deposit to cover expenses delayed the dig.

The project was revived last month with an agreement allowing the expedition to continue through May 1993 in exchange for a $175,000 deposit. Prospecting began Thursday.

"I'm kind of awash in this wave of exhilaration and anticipation and exhaustion all at once," said Delonas, who has been overseeing preparations from a Las Cruces office. "I'm looking forward to looking back on all of this."

NOSS CLAIMED he had found gold in the peak in 1937 and began carrying it out one bar at a time. He had to travel through a narrow passage from a cavern that held the gold, so he tried to enlarge the passage with dynamite. Instead it caved in.

Since then, debate has raged over whether Noss was truly a prospector whose luck ran sour or a con man who fooled investors with tales of gold.

Delonas believes Noss' stories already have been proved true.

"There is already incontrovertible evidence that Doc removed gold bars from Victorio Peak — eyewitness accounts, assays, people who have handled gold bars they say they got from Noss. Several people watched him pull them from the peak," Delonas said.

He said Noss even photographed some of the gold, but that copies that used to be in the New Mexico State Land Office have disappeared and copies family members had have been lost.

Searching for the answer to the Noss riddle will be painstaking and slow and may never be completed.

The expedition will begin with technicians using high-powered metal detectors similar to those used to find coins. The detectors and crews armed with picks and shovels will search for some of the 110 gold bars Noss and a partner, Tony Jolly, are said to have pulled from the peak and reburied on the range.

DELONAS SAID those would have been the bars Noss was killed for in 1949.

"The buyer who flew in to buy them did not bring the money to buy them and tried to force Doc to turn them over without compensation," Delonas said. "So Doc moved them. ... The next morning, (the buyer) got to him and put a gun to his head."

Other accounts say Noss was killed in a gunbattle with Charley Ryan of Alice, Texas, over Noss' failure to turn over a share of the bars.

White Sands Missile Range spokesman Jim Eckles wrote in an article for the range newspaper that Ryan fired two shots at Noss after Noss tried to flee when Ryan called sheriff's deputies to arrest Noss for fraud. Testimony from Ryan's Las Cruces murder trial said one shot hit Noss in the head.

A jury found Ryan innocent, believing he fired in self defense.

"Personally, I don't think there is (gold in the peak) and never was," Eckles said.

The expedition is being funded by the Ova Noss Family Partnership of Irvine, Calif. The partnership is named for Noss' former wife, who died in 1979.

DELONAS SAID $800,000 already has been spent and the project could easily spend $200,000 more. The money comes from members of the partnership and the family.

Victorio Peak, named after the Apache chief Victorio, is a small hill, about 400 feet high, in the Hembrillo Basin in the San Andres Mountains about 60 miles north of Las Cruces.

Radar used for a 1977 gold search showed a cavern existed beneath Victorio Peak, but improved ground penetrating radar used in 1990 showed the caverns are much more extensive than originally thought, said project geophysicist Lambert Dolphin.

Other excavations at the peak have turned up nothing.

In 1958, an Air Force captain said he stumbled on gold while deer hunting at Victorio Peak. After he passed a lie detector test, the Army and U.S. Treasury agents made a search of the peak in 1961. The government didn't acknowledge the search until a year later.

A search was made by the New Mexico Museum and the Gaddis Mining Co., which bored holes into the peak and drove a tunnel into the mountain.

In the 1970s, after the treasure came to national attention because of its mention during the Watergate hearings, the Army recognized six claimant groups and agreed to let them search for the treasure.

THOSE WHO believe the legend say the previous excavations weren't long enough or that the gold hunters didn't go to the areas Noss excavated.

This year's prospectors still face some of the barriers faced by other gold seekers, said Dolphin.

"Entering the mountain is very difficult," he said. "The entrances that do exist now are narrow and torturous and may have been filled in and we don't know which ones go in or if they just go over surface."

If an entrance that burrows through the peak can't be found, tunnels will have to be dug at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, he said.

To help find the way through the peak, video producer Alex Alonso has fashioned a high-tech camera.

The camera is computer controlled, has an ultrasonic rangefinder and is equipped with a digital compass of the sort used on missiles.

The 6-foot-long camera can rotate 360 degrees. It uses the ultrasound to find objects and a laser to determine the distance of the object the ultrasound is picking up. It feeds back video and still photos and can operate at zero light if necessary, Alonso said.

"YOU CAN go to a dark area and know that's where the cavern continues," he said. "You can drill a hole in that area and keep doing it and by doing that you can map out the whole cavern without ever opening it up."

"The inevitable jackpot is to be able to see something within the caverns with this camera," Alonso said. "I'm not even that concerned with what I see, as with having the ability to drop in and look inside King Tut's tomb before it's open. ... Of course, we're all hoping for a hole-in-one."

If the crew hits that hole-in-one, the legend will be put to rest, Delonas said.

But what if no treasure or evidence of one is found?

"I'll always believe that Doc Noss discovered gold bullion at Victorio Peak," Delonas said. "But if we don't find it I'll never be able to prove how much he found or what happened to it."

Horseman creates light, unconventional saddle

By Bob Lewis
Associated Press writer

SALEM, Ky. — Ben Cartwright might burn the Ponderosa before he'd ride the range on a neon green Bob Marshall Sports Saddle. They'd run Marshal Dillon right out of Dodge if he galloped up on a baby blue one.

But it wasn't the rugged cowpokes and lawmen of Wild West lore Marshall had in mind when he began making saddles out of flexible, lightweight synthetic materials.

"These are for the horses, and for folks who just like to ride them and don't want to spend $1,000 or more on a saddle to do it," said Marshall, who began making the saddles in his two-room western Kentucky tack shop two years ago.

Marshall is a lifelong horseman whose heroes have always been cowboys.

At age 13, he ran away from his home near Salem for several months and went to work on a Wyoming ranch. He came back and finished Crittenden County High School, but again went west — first to Utah, then to Oklahoma and to Texas — to work with horses.

When he moved back home in the early 1980s, he began tinkering with an idea for a saddle that eliminates the rigid wooden frame — equestrians call it a "tree" — over which traditional saddles are built.

He devised a saddle that retains the pommel in front of the rider and the cantle rising behind a rider's bottom. Unlike conventional saddles, the pommel and cantle on his Sports Saddle are not connected by wooden bars resting on either side of the horse's spine.

"It flexes to work with the horse when he's trotting and turning where those other ones won't," said Marshall, who holds a patent on the independent two-piece tree design and has applied for a second patent on an upgraded model. "And it's just that much easier on the rider, too."

Conventional saddles put five or six inches of wood, rawhide and leather between horse and rider, making balance tougher for the rider because of a high center of gravity.

"I've wanted a way to get the horse and the rider closer together and get the horse as close as possible to the movement he would have without a rider," Marshall said.

That has earned the saddle a strong following among people who compete in rodeo events where coordination between horse and rider and equine agility are crucial.

"I started using it the first of the year," said Jody Galyean, 37, of Ardmore, Okla., who won the National Cutting Horse Futurity in Fort Worth. "It's freed up my horse a little more."

Galyean's sport is a throwback to the days of cowboys and cattle drives, where a rider maneuvers his horse to "cut" a steer away from the herd. Old traditions die hard in such a macho sport.

"I was the first one in my event to use it, and when you're first, yeah, people laugh at you a little," Galyean said. "But after they saw me work on it, I've started having guys come up to me and ask where you buy one of those saddles. It's just the deal that he (Marshall) had the guts to change."

To top it all off, Marshall's saddle is lighter, too.

"Out West on some of these ranches, they decide how good a saddle is by how much it weighs. Some of these old ranchers, they'll buy these 50-, 60-pound leather saddles that are hard and hard to break in," Marshall said.

"I've wanted a way to get the horse and the rider closer together . . .'
— Saddle maker Bob Marshall

"This one here, it weighs just 15 pounds," Marshall said as he lifted a kelly green spandex and neoprene model easily with one arm.

Sports Saddle Inc. gets orders faster than Marshall and his staff of eight can fill them. The shop turns out about 800 saddles a year — about two-thirds of them Sports Saddles and the rest conventional leather ones.

The company also produces finished saddle trees Marshall ships to other saddle makers, mostly out West.

In January, Marshall licensed the Circle Y Saddlery of Yoakum, Texas, to produce Sports Saddles and pay him royalties to help meet the demand. Nearly all of the orders come from Texas and Oklahoma westward.

Sports Saddles range from a base of $385 for the all-synthetic model to about $1,000 for a model covered in soft glove leather. Marshall said prices for his custom-made conventional leather saddles begin at about $1,200.

"It's only natural that people would turn to new, lightweight materials in these saddles," he said. "Look what happened to tennis shoes. Nobody jogs in leather any more. You put on a pair of Nikes and you're gone.

"I know there are some folks who won't ever have one of these, and for things like calf roping, it won't work. But people who just want to ride are buying them. Young people are the ones that accept new ideas."

Moon walks

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers quarterback Warren Moon walked out of training camp and may not make the team's trip to Tokyo for Saturday's exhibition game, ESPN reported Monday night.

Moon's agent, Leigh Steinberg, told the network Moon left camp because of a contract dispute that has lingered for more than a year.

General Manager Mike Holovak declined comment and Moon was unavailable late Tuesday night. Oilers owner Bud Adams told KRIV-TV said he was unaware of any walkout.

"That's news to me," Adams said. "I really don't want to comment on it. When you're negotiating, you expect anything. I expect to see Warren making the trip.

"All indications in San Antonio were that he would go. However, I don't think he really wanted to go, to tell you the truth, since he's been there before."

Two-sport Harris

IRVING — Former Texas Tech safety Donald Harris, the latest two-sport hopeful, agreed to terms Monday night with the Dallas Cowboys but told the team he still may want to play baseball in the future.

Harris' two-year deal, scheduled to be signed Tuesday, will pave the way for him to go with the Cowboys to Tokyo. Dallas plays the Houston Oilers on Saturday in Japan.

Angels win in 9th again, 4-3

■ For the second time in three games, the Midland Angels pull out a win in the bottom of the ninth inning.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

After Shreveport's 4-3 loss to Midland Monday night at Angels Stadium, it's no wonder the Captains may be developing a "Why us, Lord?" attitude.

The Captains were cruising along nicely, holding a 3-1 lead over the Angels when the light bank in left field suddenly popped off. A minute or so passed, and the bank of lights behind the third base stands went dark.

Twenty minutes elapsed before play and light were restored, but by then, Shreveport manager Bill Robinson had made the decision to lift starting pitcher Kevin McGehee in favor of reliever Mark Yockey. Yockey proceeded to surrender a two-run double to Midland's J.R. Phillips, which allowed Midland to tie the game, 3-3.

Then in the bottom of the ninth, Edgar Alfonzo singled to drive in Eduardo Perez for the Angel win, the second time in three games Midland has pulled a victory from its hat in the bottom of the ninth. Alfonzo's game winner was his second hit of the night.

Last Friday night during the Captain's five game stay in El Paso, a similar set of circumstances existed. Let Shreveport manager Bill Robinson explain.

"We had a game in El Paso last week, we were killing the ball," he recalled. "We had the bases loaded with one out, and we were leading 6-4. Our big RBI man (Adell Davenport) came up to the plate and it was raining so hard he couldn't even see the ball. So he popped out. Then they called the game. When the game started again, I sent in my stopper, and El Paso ended up winning.

"I guess it's just the elements of the good Lord."

McGehee had a simpler explanation of the Captain's luck of late.

"It stinks," he said.

Nicole Haislett of the U.S. celebrates her gold medal in the women's 200-meter freestyle swim Monday at Barcelona.

U.S., China in medal tie

Associated Press

BARCELONA, Spain — Call it even at the Summer Olympics. Two for the oldtimers, two for the tots, and two in a row for Charles Barkley. The Barcelona Blowhard is on a run — a run of the mouth, that is.

And, while you're at it, cross off one for U.S. volleyball. It just goes to show, you can't win for losing.

Pablo Morales, 27, came out of retirement in his athletic dotage and won the 100-meter butterfly Monday at the Olympics as American swimmers mixed bad luck with gold luck.

Luck played no part for the U.S. basketball players, most of whom are older than Morales. They beat Croatia 103-70 for their second straight victory, and Barkley got his second straight technical, this time for cussing at somebody in the stands.

Back at the pools, 13-year-old Fu Mingxia of China, who was born the year Magic Johnson and Larry Bird played their final college seasons, easily won the women's 10-meter platform diving. And 14-year-old Japanese Kyoko Iwasaki upset American Anita Nall in the women's 200-meter breaststroke.

But keep those medals locked away, girls.

The U.S. volleyball team, winner of the last two Olympic tournaments, proved that a win is not always a win at the Games. The International Volleyball Federation stripped it of a victory over Japan the day before in an opening-round game.

U.S. volleyball victory against Japan reversed

Associated Press

BARCELONA, Spain — Because rules are rules, victory became defeat for the U.S. Olympic volleyball team Monday.

The International Volleyball Federation, meeting in a cool hotel conference room, took away the inspired comeback achieved the day before in a steamy arena.

The reversal means that instead of surviving a five-set match against Japan, the two-time Olympic champion Americans lost in four sets, 8-15, 15-11, 15-10, 15-13.

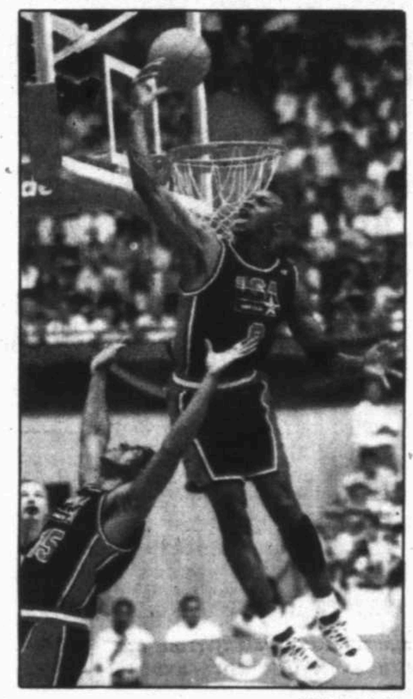

They were victims of the untamed temper of one of their players and the misguided leniency of a referee.

"I feel like someone has come into my home, stolen my property and violated me," U.S. captain Scott Fortune of Laguna Beach, Calif., said.

"To battle for three hours and come out victorious, only to see the people off the court decide the outcome on the court is disheartening."

At issue was whether American firebrand Bob Samuelson of Playa del Rey, Calif., should have been ejected from the game at match point for Japan in the fourth set after getting a second yellow card for yelling at officials. The rules clearly call for a red card to be issued at that point and the awarding of a technical point to Japan.

Dream Team dumps Croatia; Magic injured

Associated Press

BARCELONA, Spain — So much for the competition. Injuries are what's worrying the Dream Team now.

No Magic Johnson for a game or so. Sprained right knee.

No John Stockton for at least a little while longer. Broken leg.

No true point guard without them.

But no problems, either, not even from the team that was supposed to be their toughest test — and was.

"We wanted to gauge our team with this game," Johnson said after Team USA routed Croatia 103-70. "I'd say we still have a passing grade."

By Dream Team standards, the 33-point spread was a squeaker, the closest in nine pre-Olympic and Olympic games.

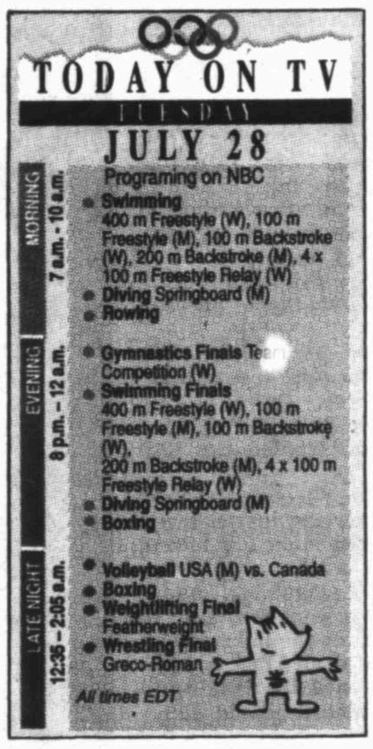

And Johnson, the only player to start every game for the Americans, was unconcerned that his injury would stop the parade of blowouts.

An MRI test of the knee was negative and Johnson's status is day-to-day.

"If I have to miss, I will," he said. "This team could play without a lot of people."

How long it will be without him is uncertain. He went down in the first half and sat on the bench the rest of the game with an ice pack on his right knee. He was able to walk afterward.

Sheehan wins U.S. Women's Open playoff

■ Patty Sheehan beats Juli Inkster by two strokes.

Associated Press

OAKMONT, Pa. — Just as she did two years ago, Patty Sheehan broke into tears at the completion of the U.S. Women's Open.

"Two years ago, they were tears of sadness," the emotionally drained Sheehan sobbed. "Today they are tears of joy."

Sheehan, who blew a nine-shot lead over the last two rounds of the 1990 Open, shoved aside that haunting memory with a scrambling playoff victory over her closest friend, Juli Inkster, on Oakmont's treacherous greens Monday.

"A day hasn't gone by that I haven't thought about that," Sheehan said of her collapse.

"Now, I can put it out of my mind and think of this. I can think of winning the Open, and I can rejoice."

She won it by a two-stroke margin, 72-74. But it really wasn't that close.

Sheehan, who forced the playoff when she caught Inkster with birdies on the last two holes of regulation play Sunday, made it three in a row with a 10-footer on the first playoff hole.

And she led the rest of the way, by two at the turn and by five with two holes to play.

"After 16, I started to relax, play safe. It got kind of sloppy. I bogeyed the last two, but I didn't care at that point," she said.

At that point it didn't matter. She had it won, the 29th victory of her LPGA career and just one short of the total she needs for membership in the LPGA Hall of Fame.

Just as the scores, one over par for Sheehan and three over for Inkster, do not reflect the lop-sided nature of Sheehan's triumph, neither do they indicate the level of play.

Sheehan scrambled. Inkster was down the fairway and on the greens. But it was there, on Oakmont's sloping, slick greens, still tricky and deceptive despite the storms that disrupted play all week long, that the issue was settled.

"It all came down to putting," Inkster said. "I putted well but today my putter let me down."

Sheehan very nearly didn't have her putter at all.

She left her clubs at the private home where she was staying for the week and

Houston opens road trip with win

National

ATLANTA — Eric Anthony hit a grand slam in the 11th inning Monday night and the Houston Astros began their 26-game road trip with a 5-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Anthony homered twice Sunday in the Astros' final home game until Aug. 25. The Astros are taking a 28-day trip, the longest in team history, so the Astrodome can hold the Republican convention.

Anthony connected for his first career grand slam and 12th homer of the season off Alejandro Pena (1-5) after Craig Biggio and Steve Finley singled and Jeff Bagwell drew a walk.

It was only Houston's third victory in 21 games against the Braves. The Astros are 2-8 this season against Atlanta.

The loss was the second straight for Atlanta. The Braves had their 13-game winning streak, tying the longest in franchise history, stopped Sunday by Pittsburgh.

Doug Jones (8-7) earned up the victory with three scoreless innings. Xavier Hernandez pitched one inning for his fifth save.

Atlanta starter John Smoltz extended his scoreless streak to 29 innings before Houston scored in the third on singles by Finley, Bagwell and Anthony and a sacrifice fly by Ken Caminiti's sacrifice fly got the run in.

Smoltz pitched eight innings, allowing eight hits, striking out five and walking two.

The Braves took a 1-0 lead in the first when Otis Nixon led off with a double and scored on Terry Pendleton's single. Houston starter Brian Williams went seven innings, allowing six hits and striking out two. He didn't walk a batter.

Cubs 3, Pirates 2

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa celebrated his return from the disabled list by homering on Doug Drabek's first pitch, then scored the go-ahead run in the eighth inning on Kal Daniels' sacrifice fly as the Chicago Cubs beat Pittsburgh Pirates.

Greg Maddux (13-8) outdueled Drabek (8-8) as the Cubs pulled within 5½ games of Pittsburgh in the NL East. The Pirates have lost six of eight.

Sosa, who singled home the tying run in the fifth inning, singled with one out in the eighth. Sosa took third on Ryne Sandberg's hit-and-run single and Mark Grace walked to load the bases, bringing up Daniels.

The Pirates loaded the bases in the eighth with one out, but Maddux fanned out Mike Lavalliere for his 10th strikeout and got Jose Lind on a popup.

Maddux won for the eighth time in 10 starts. He gave up six hits and walked six in eight innings. Jeff Robinson pitched the ninth for his first save.

Drabek allowed nine hits in his fifth complete game.

Andy Van Slyke hit his third home run of the season with two outs in the first, only the fifth homer off Maddux in his last 34 starts. Sosa, out since June 14 after breaking the middle finger of his right hand, hit his sixth home run in the Cubs' half.

Pittsburgh took a 2-1 lead in the fourth on Mike LaValliere's RBI single. The Cubs tied it in the fifth on a one-out walk to Rick Wilkins, a single by Maddux and Sosa's two-out single.

Phillies 5, Mets 0

PHILADELPHIA — Curt Schilling pitched his second straight shutout as the Philadelphia Phillies sent the Mets to their third consecutive blanking.

Schilling (9-6) stretched his scoreless streak to 24 innings and the Mets' streak to 29, 10 short of the club record. He pitched a six-hitter, struck out five and walked none in his fourth shutout this season.

It was the third consecutive complete game for Schilling and his fifth this year. It was the 14th time New York has been shut out, matching the Mets most since 1980, when they also were blanked 14 times. And it marked the first time they've been shut out in three straight games since June 1975.

Expos 6, Cardinals 4

ST. LOUIS — Darren Reed hit a three-run homer and Delino DeShields homered and tripled as the Montreal Expos beat the St. Louis Cardinals and closed within one game of NL East-leading Pittsburgh.

Montreal has not been so near first place after the All-Star break since Aug. 7, 1989. The Expos were also a game back on that date, but finished 12 games behind Chicago.

Ken Hill (12-4), traded by St. Louis last November for Andres Galarraga, won his seventh straight decision and set a career high for victories. Marquis Grissom added a late home run as Montreal won its fourth in a row and moved up on Pittsburgh, which lost 3-2 at Chicago.

Giants 5, Dodgers 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Cory Snyder hit a three-run homer in the first inning and Bud Black made it stand up, pitching a three-hitter that led the San Francisco Giants past the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Dodgers lost their sixth straight game and fell to 2-9 on a road trip that has two games remaining.

Black (9-3) struck out three and walked three in his second complete game. He won for the fifth time in six decisions.

Padres 2, Reds 1

SAN DIEGO — Reliever Randy Myers got pinch hitter Chris Sabo to ground into a game-ending double play with runners on first and third, as the San Diego Padres held off the Cincinnati Reds.

The Padres broke a 1-all tie in the eighth when Darrin Jackson led off with a triple and scored on Tim Teufel's two-out single. The Padres moved within five games of first-place Atlanta.

Lubbock, Borger teams advance

Teams representing Lubbock Martin Luther King and Borger advanced Monday night in loser's bracket action at the Section I Seniors tournament at Simons Field.

In the early game, MLK, on the strength of a five-run first inning, defeated Iowa Park, 10-7.

Mike Gutierrez had two doubles and Tyrone Scott a pair of triples for MLK. Gutierrez was also the winning pitcher.

In the late game, Borger eliminated Abilene, 12-5. Borger exploded for nine runs in the first inning to set the tone for the remainder of the contest.

Each team cranked out 10 hits. Tory Lopez tripled and Russell Washer tripled for the winners.

Borger and MLK will meet in loser's bracket action today at 8 p.m.

Preceding that game will be the Midland-Pecos matchup in the winner's bracket, scheduled for a 5:30 p.m. start.

Iowa Park and Abilene were eliminated from the tournament with their losses Monday.

Play continues through Thursday.

Laura Waits shot a 72 to take medalist honors in Monday's qualifying round for the Women's City Golf Championship, played at Hogan Park Golf Course.

Defending champion Marna Raburn will seek her third straight city title as today's first round begins at Midland Country Club. As last year's champ, Raburn did not have to play in Monday's qualifying.

Monday's top eight finishers earned the right to play in the championship flight of the match-play tournament, which will see Wednesday's semifinals played at Green Tree Country Club and Thursday's finals played at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Raburn will play Kristen Arnold today, while Waits will play April King. Other championship flight matches today include former champion Jo Dickson against Penny Suthcliffe and Paula King, a finalist in 1991, taking on Jere Barnes.

Welch pitches Oakland past Twins

Associated Press

American

MINNEAPOLIS — Bob Welch pitched no-hit ball for 6 2-3 innings as the Oakland Athletics beat the Minnesota Twins 9-1 Monday night and closed within two games of the AL West leaders.

Terry Steinbach hit a three-run homer off John Smiley (10-5) in the first inning and added two doubles and another RBI. Randy Ready added his first career grand slam in the ninth off Bob Kipper, his third home run this season.

Brian Harper ended Welch's no-hit bid with a dribbler just past diving shortstop Walt Weiss. Gene Larkin followed with a ground single off the glove of second baseman Mike Bordick, scoring Kent Hrbek, who had walked.

Welch (8-5) allowed just the two hits in seven-plus innings, walked five and struck out two. Dennis Eckersley pitched the eighth and Jim Corsi finished as Oakland won its fourth straight. The A's moved 17 games over .500 for the first time this season.

Smiley, who had won seven of his previous eight decisions, gave up five runs and seven hits in six innings, struck out a season-high nine and walked two. Minnesota lost for just the 10th time in 30 games.

Carney Lansford's single, a walk to Mark McGwire and Steinbach's ninth home put Oakland in front. Eric Fox singled home a run in the second, and Steinbach doubled in a run in the sixth, missing a home run by about four feet.

Steinbach is hitting .361 with three home runs and 11 RBIs in his last 10 games in the Metrodome. The New Ulm, Minn., native and former University of Minnesota standout had been hitting only .167 in his home state before his streak.

Red Sox 7, Rangers 5

BOSTON — Tom Brunansky hit a first-inning grand slam, Herm Winningham added a two-run homer off Kevin Brown, the American League's winningest pitcher, and the Boston Red Sox held on to beat the Texas Rangers.

Frank Viola (9-6) survived a shaky second inning, when the Rangers rallied for three unearned runs, including Brian Downing's two-run double. Brown (14-7), the winning pitcher in the All-Star game, has lost three straight starts since the break.

Brunansky's grand slam, his second of the season, gave the Red Sox the major league lead with six. Boston, however, began the game with just 46 home runs this year, fewest in the majors.

Brunansky has hit six of his eight home runs in July, when he has also doubled his RBI total to 46. Winningham hit his first home run after Billy Hatcher led off the second with a single. It was Winningham's first home run since June 25, 1991, while he was with Cincinnati against San Diego.

Brown entered the game with the best home run ratio in the league, having allowed four in 160 2-3 innings, including one homer in his first 16 starts.

Brown went 6 2-3 innings and was replaced by Kenny Rogers with runners on first and second. But Jack Clark, pinch hitting for Mo Vaughn, flied out.

John Valentin, called up by Boston from Triple-A Pawtucket on Sunday, singled home a run in the eighth for his first major league hit.

Viola allowed at least one runner on base in all but one of the six innings he worked, surrendering four runs and 10 hits. Greg Harris relieved to start the seventh, giving up an unearned run with two outs when third baseman Scott Cooper bobbled Jeff Frye's grounder and Ivan Rodriguez scored, making it 6-5.

Harris then walked Brian Downing to load the bases before Dean Palmer popped out.

Jeff Reardon pitched the ninth for his 20th save in 25 chances.

The Rangers scored their lone earned run in the fourth on Ruben Sierra's two-out, bases-loaded single. And they threatened again in the sixth with men on first and third with one out before Viola retired Rafael Palmeiro and Sierra.

Brewers 4, Indians 0

CLEVELAND — Jaime Navarro extended his streak of hitless innings to 10 and finished with a three-hitter as the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Cleveland Indians.

The win was the Brewers' fourth straight and ninth in 11 games.

Navarro (11-6) turned in his third straight dominant performance and got his first shutout of the year, retiring the first 12 batters before Paul Sorrento singled leading off the fifth.

ANGELS: Bennett K's eight

(From 1C)

If it weren't for higher powers such as thunderstorms in the Sun City and electric surges that lead to power outages in the Tall City, Shreveport would own a 4-2 record through the first six games of their Western swing. Instead, they are 2-4.

McGehee was on his way to one of his more impressive outings of the season, Robinson said, when everything went afoul. The Louisiana native — who caught a wicked carom on his chin in the sixth off an Edgar Alfonzo ground out — ended up with a no decision, although he allowed just four Angel hits and seven strike outs in 8⅔ innings.

The Angels had runners at the corners with two outs when darkness came in the eighth. Robinson said he was ready to leave McGehee in the game despite the trouble he backed into before the lights flickered.

"I didn't want to try to make him a hero," Robinson said. "I don't second guess myself. When (Alfonzo) got that hit (in the eighth), I had gone out and told him, 'You can get this next guy.' Then the damn lights went out.

"The way the kid was pitching, that's just buzzard's luck what he ran into."

McGehee wasn't the only starter who was working well before play was interrupted. Midland's Erik Bennett, in his first Angel appearance after being called up from Class A Palm Springs, struck out eight and allowed eight hits in eight innings. He also allowed all three Shreveport runs.

Still, Midland manager Don Long was pleased with what he saw.

"I thought he threw very well," Long said. "He has better stuff than two years ago when I saw him in Quad City. His breaking ball is much better and he's pitching ahead in the zone. I was real pleased with the way he did everything."

Long's decision to pull Bennett was also a direct result of the power outage.

"I didn't want him to sit any longer than 10 minutes," Long said.

Provided the lights cooperate, Phil Leftwich (5-6, 6.28 earned run average) is the scheduled starter tonight for Midland, while Dan Carlson (10-8, 3.45 ERA) is expected to start for Shreveport.

GOLF: Putts elude Inkster

did not realize they were missing until she arrived at the golf course.

The house, Sheehan said, "is about 25 minutes away. It took me maybe 20 minutes to drive back and get the clubs, 17 minutes to get back to the course.

"Thank goodness there were no cops around."

The statistics tell the story: Inkster hit 15 greens in regulation, Sheehan nine, and only one on the back. Inkster had 36 putts, including a pair of three-putts, and Sheehan had 29 — including six one-putts on the back.

"I make a few putts and it's a whole different ball game," Inkster said.

But she didn't. And it wasn't.

The tone was set early. Sheehan made the 10-footer for birdie on the first hole and Inkster missed from 5 feet on the second, and from about twice that length on the fifth.

With two strokes in hand at the turn, Sheehan added to the margin when both missed the green on the 10th. Sheehan holed a 18-footer for par and Inkster missed from 12.

After a bogey on the 11th, Sheehan began a decisive string of five one-putt greens — one for birdie and four to save par.

And over the same stretch of holes, the 12th through the 16th, Inkster had 11 putts.

"It was like a slow leak for her, a little here, a little there," Sheehan said.

Both saved par on the 12th, Sheehan from eight feet and Inkster from three.

Juli missed from 6 feet after Sheehan had birdied the 13th from about 10.

On the 14th, Sheehan saved par from a bunker and Inkster three-putted, missing a two-foot second putt.

That put Sheehan's lead to four strokes and it went to five when she saved par on the 15th and 16th with putts of about 6 feet, and Inkster three-putted the 16th, again missing a two-foot second putt.

OLYMPICS: Morales wins 100 butterfly

(From 1C)

The U.S. baseball team won its second game, 10-9 over Taiwan, and the U.S. soccer team evened its record at 1-1 with a 3-1 victory over Kuwait. Raul Marquez scored a narrow decision over David Defiagbon of Nigeria in the 156-pound class, keeping the U.S. boxing team undefeated, and Dennis Koslowski took a big step toward America's first Greco-Roman wrestling gold since 1984.

With all the day's medal events over, China and the United States were tied for the lead, each with 10 total and three gold. The Unified Team was third with seven total medals, all but one gold.

The day started poorly for U.S. swimmers when Jenny Thompson finished 12th in the preliminaries and failed to qualify for the final in the 200-meter freestyle. Holder of the world record at 100 meters, she had to settle for silver only one day earlier in that event.

"I've taken a couple of punches here now, and I'm just going to come back twice as strong, hopefully," said Thompson, who still is entered in the 50 freestyle and two relays.

Then, Morales gave the U.S. men their second gold medal in two days, and Nicole Haislett gave notice that America's women weren't done yet either by winning the 200-meter freestyle.

Morales, who set a world record of 52.84 seconds in 1986 in the 100 butterfly that still stands, was timed in 53.32, .02 better than Rafal Szukala of Poland. Anthony Nesty of Suriname won the bronze.

Morales, of Santa Clara, Calif., won a gold and two silvers in the 1984 Los Angeles Games but failed to make the 1988 team. He retired and went back to law school at Cornell before deciding to try it one more time last year.

"I think any athlete at this level really yearns for competition such as this," Morales said.

Nelson Diebel won the 100 breaststroke for America Sunday.

Haislett, of St. Petersburg, Fla., was timed in 1:57.90, .10 better than second-place Franziska Van Almsick of Germany. Kerstin Keilgass of Germany won the bronze.

Eric Namesnik of Butler, Pa., won silver in the men's 400 individual medley, and Nall, of Towson, Md., got bronze in the women's 200-meter breaststroke. Nall, 16, faded to finish behind the young Iwasaki and Lin Li of China.

In the final event of the day, the Unified Team won the 800-meter freestyle relay in a world record 7:11.95, handing the bronze medal-winning Americans their first Olympic loss in the event since 1956.

Fu so dominated the diving that she wouldn't have had to make her eighth and last dive — or she could just have cannonballed it — to win. She made the final dive, though, cutting into the water like a dart dropping into a teacup.

"Of course I'm happy to have the gold medal, but I haven't given any thought to where I'll keep it," she said shyly.

Elena Mirochina of the Unified Team and Mary Ellen Clark of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., moved into second and third after diving well in the late rounds.

The U.S. baseball team blew a three-run lead before rallying to beat Taiwan. It was a must-win since Taiwan and the United States are two of several teams given an outside chance of challenging Cuba.

Phil Nevin hit a two-run double in the fifth and a homer to start a three-run seventh.

Cuba beat Italy 18-1 in the other afternoon game.

Koslowski, of St. Louis Park, Minn., a bronze medalist four years ago, won his third straight 220-pound match with a 2-0 decision over Ion Ieremciuc of Romania. That put him in tonight's final against an opponent yet to be determined.

"Reaching the finals is a dream come true," said Koslowski, who could become the first American ever to win two Greco-Roman medals.

Koslowski used a maneuver called a gut wrench 1:05 into the match to beat Ieremciuc.

"I felt it was then or never," Koslowski said.

DREAM TEAM: Sir Charles draws 'T'

(From 1C)

"I stepped away and felt it pull," Johnson said. "We'll see how it feels tomorrow."

Coach Chuck Daly said Johnson "could miss the next game or maybe some other games. Hopefully, it's nothing other than some kind of a pull."

Stockton said he is extremely doubtful of returning from a cracked bone in his right leg in time for Wednesday night's game against Germany. "I'm shooting for Friday" against Brazil, he said.

Scottie Pippen filled in admirably Monday, scoring all his 13 points and getting six of his nine assists in the first half. He also had five of 32 U.S. steals and blanketed Croat superstar Toni Kukoc, helping hold him to four points.

Michael Jordan scored 21 points and had eight steals and Charles Barkley, hit with a technical foul for cursing the crowd, added 20.

But the Americans, who routed Angola by 68 points in their Olympic debut, at least had to work a little.

Croatia, a 93-76 winner over Brazil in its basketball debut as an independent state Sunday night, has two NBA players of its own, two others drafted by NBA teams, six members of the Yugoslavian team that won the 1988 Olympic silver medal and four from Yugoslavia's 1990 world champions.

The Croats led 6-5 but then went 8:25 without a basket during a 27-7 U.S. run. They trailed 54-37 at halftime and closed within 13 with 16:37 left before a final 24-5 American spurt ended any chances of an upset.

Drazen Petrovic of the New Jersey Nets scored 17 points in the first half for Croatia, including three 3-pointers in a one-minute span, but he had foul trouble and didn't score in the second half.

Kukoc missed four of his first five shots and was scoreless until his reverse layup just before halftime.

VOLLEYBALL: Rules 'clearly broken'

(From 1C)

Leading 2-1 in games and 14-13 on its serve when the Samuelson incident occurred, Japan would have won the match if the rules had been applied, but referee Ramis Samedov of Azerbaijan didn't want to end it that way and allowed play to continue.

Japan lodged a protest after the game and, in an unprecedented move, the FIVB ruled after a 5½-hour meeting that Japan was right, the referee wrong, and unanimously awarded Japan the fourth set.

While unique in volleyball, there have been other disputed endings in Olympic history. The U.S. basketball team was beaten by the Soviet Union in the 1972 Munich Olympics when officials added three seconds to the clock. And Carl Lewis was awarded the 100-meter gold medal when Ben Johnson tested positive for drugs at the 1988 Games in Seoul.

Ruben Acosta, the Mexican president of the FIVB, said the rules were broken "clearly and indisputably. It is our duty to observe the rules. It is our intention to have the games decided on the court and to give referees authorities, but we have to respect the rules."

"This is a very disappointing situation, but I am prepared to come back versus Canada on Tuesday and play as hard as I have ever played," Samuelson said. "I think the decision will be used to fire our team for the rest of the Olympics.

"I did not realize that they assessed me a second yellow card, but it is something that I will have to deal with. There is nothing that we can do about the decision except play hard the remainder of the Olympics."

Samuelson, who admits that he gets carried away by his emotions during games, only came into the match to replace Bryan Ivie of Manhattan Beach, Calif., who went out with a knee injury and who was doubtful for Canada.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JULY 28, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Encouraging words work magic for you. Your enthusiasm wins you a prestigious new job or important assignment in the fall. In November, drum up widespread support before putting a special plan into effect. Financial opportunities beckon in December. Be careful not to neglect your personal relationships as 1993 gets under way. If you spend too much time at work, a romantic attachment could slowly dissolve.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, singer Rudy Vallee, actresses Georgia Engel and Sally Struthers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A confidential tip could result in big savings. Alter your plans to satisfy a loved one's emotional needs. Postpone acting on a business matter until more information becomes available.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your reluctance to get down to work may be linked to a previous disappointment. There is no use trying to force things when trends are contrary. Be candid with a loved one.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance could arise at place of employment. Be very discreet. A raise or promotion is under consideration. Postpone buying anything that will dent your savings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Competitors and higher-ups are unlikely to concede an inch. You may be able to find a roundabout way to push a pet project ahead. Curb a tendency to magnify minor faults.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Being the leader of the pack usually means amassing more cash. Success imposes many responsibilities and obligations. A devoted life partner could make things much easier for you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Devote the lion's share of your time to necessary preparations. You may be able to cut through some official red tape. A scientific breakthrough will enhance your financial status.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An emotionally enriching experience will lift your spirits and bring your goals into sharper focus. How you feel about yourself is more important than anything a critic might say.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You finally get a chance to move up at work! Redouble your efforts. Those of you seeking romance are much closer than you think. A heartfelt compliment will make your day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A great day for getting organized at home and the office. Steer a steady course in love and money matters. Your obsession with self-improvement activities will pay off handsomely.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Try to be more understanding. Losing your temper could cause a career setback. Welcoming unexpected responsibilities could bring you unanticipated rewards. Do your best!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your high-voltage energy helps you "light up the sky" professionally. Favorable trends should continue for the rest of the week. Now is an ideal time to travel for business.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful. Trivial irritations could lead to a major explosion. Keeping your cool will help you win Round 1. A charming newcomer may shower you with attention and invitations. Go slow.

TODAY'S CHILDREN want everything to be open and aboveboard. Unafraid to say what they think, these Leos are quick to offer constructive criticism. Wise parents will advise their young lions to temper honesty with tact. Born executives, they dream of establishing a family enterprise that can be handed down to future generations.

Chess players are acutely aware of the importance of timing, more so than most bridge enthusiasts. Transpose moves in an opening and you might open the way for a foray by your opponent. This hand demonstrates that playing suits in the right order can be equally critical at bridge.

When South showed a good, distributional hand by bidding a new suit at the three-level in a competitive auction, North threw away the book on point count and bid a game because of the double fit. Sadly, the operation was successful, but the patient died.

West led a low diamond to declarer's ace. A heart to the queen lost to the ace, and declarer ruffed the diamond return. After drawing the outstanding trumps, declarer cashed the ace of clubs and snared the king.

Eager to take as many tricks as possible, declarer continued with a club to the jack and queen. East forced out declarer's last trump by persisting with a diamond, and West took the last two tricks with the ace of spades and a high diamond—down one. The fulfilling trick, the king of spades, withered on the vine.

See the difference if, after dropping the king of clubs, South were to lead a spade instead of setting up the clubs. West can take the ace, but has no good return. A spade will leave South with a trump after dislodging the queen of clubs. A diamond establishes dummy's queen to thwart any further assault on declarer's trump holding.

Oddly, even if the queen of diamonds were a low spot, the contract would still come home. East would be unable to return a diamond after winning the queen of clubs, so heads you win, tails they lose.

Tour's promoter: Rapper Ice-T won't perform 'Cop Killer' song

SYDNEY, July 27 — American rap singer Ice-T won't perform his controversial song "Cop Killer" on his concert tour next month in Australia and New Zealand, the tour's Australian promoter said Monday.

But it's not because police and politicians down under object. It's because Ice-T won't be bringing along Body Count, the group that recorded the song, said a spokeswoman for Michael Coppell Presents.

The song, which is on the album also called "Body Count," provoked uproar in the United States and elsewhere. Critics contend the song advocates the killing of police officers. Ice-T says its reflects the anger of young blacks persecuted by police.

Police and some politicians in Australia have denounced the impending tour. Police in New Zealand want both tour and album banned.

LOS ANGELES — Actor Sylvester Stallone returned to the "Cliffhanger" movie set in Italy on Monday, a week after he was sidelined with a slashed hand.

"He's back in action," Peter Silbermann, the movie's unit publicist, said by telephone from Rome, where the star of the "Rambo" and "Rocky" movies was shooting the new action thriller.

Stallone

Stallone was hurt July 20 on a studio stage while climbing atop a helicopter supposedly dangling upside down over a cliff. It took nine stitches to close the wound, and then an infection forced him to rest for a week.

"We just picked up where we had left off in terms of Sly and we didn't miss a beat," Silbermann said.

Stallone was "in great shape," the spokesman said. "He told me, 'I'm ready to go bowling.' "

"Cliffhanger," also starring John Lithgow and directed by Renny Harlin, will be released next spring.

FARMINGTON, Pa. — American lumber baron and British Lord Joseph Hardy threw a royal bash on the second anniversary of his purchase of the English title. Guests included celebrity kingfisher Robin Leach and a princess.

"It's all tongue-in-cheek," said Hardy, founder of 84 Lumber Co., at his party Sunday. "I'm not the emperor without any clothes."

Hardy, 68, invited more than 800 people to the celebration, among them Leach, host of the syndicated TV show "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," and Princess Katarina, a niece of Britain's Queen Elizabeth II.

Guests sipped champagne and nibbled smoked meats, truffles, and chocolate mousse served with chocolate spoons at Hardy's 500-acre resort in the mountains of southwestern Pennsylvania.

Since opening his first lumber yard in Eighty-four, Pa., in 1957, Hardy's enterprise has grown to 366 stores in 31 states generating $850 million a year. In 1990, Hardy and his wife, Dottie, bought the titles Lord and Lady of the Manor of Henley-in-Arden in Warwickshire, England, for about $168,000 at an auction.

GREENWICH, Conn. — Humorist Victor Borge said he'll match an $8,500 reward a Danish museum is offering for information on the theft of manuscripts by Hans Christian Andersen.

"When I heard the museum offered a reward, I didn't think it was enough," said Borge, who was born in Denmark. "I thought (Andersen's work) was . . . precious."

"The Little Mermaid," "The Emperor's New Clothes" and two other original manuscripts were discovered missing Wednesday from the Andersen museum in Odense, Denmark, where the writer was born. The stolen items were worth about $702,000, museum officials said.

Borge, who owns some original Andersen works, has hosted a program on American television depicting Andersen's life and was involved in the placement of a Hans Christian Andersen statue in Central Park in Manhattan and the creation of a storytelling center there.

Borge, a Greenwich resident, compared the theft to the robbery of a grave.

"This is not a world-shaking event. It is just a sad thing, and I don't know how to express it. It hurts, because it is not necessary," he said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Singer-songwriter Mike Reid wants to find out if people remember him as a top defensive lineman for the Cincinnati Bengals.

Reid is granting free admission to his concerts to the first 10 people who turn in the 1971 football trading card showing him as a National Football League rookie.

"I'm just taking advantage of this opportunity to see if I can reacquire a card of my own. . . . I'm curious to see if they're still out there," he said Friday.

Reid, whose country hits include the 1991 album "Walk on Faith," quit professional football in 1975 to pursue a music career.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

WHAT IS STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE?

Stockquote Hotline gives you the latest stock prices direct from the wires of the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx, and OTC sources; all available 24 hours a day. You can receive up to 10 quotes with one easy phone call.

HOT TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE:

1) Call the Stockquote Hotline at 560-2400; enter the category number which is 9988.
2) You will be asked to enter your stock ticker symbol. These are based on industry-standard symbols, which can be found in a Standard & Poor's Ticker guide, or by calling your local stock broker.
3) Once you've entered the numerical code for the ticker symbol, press the Star Key (*) and you will hear the current price and net change from the last Associated Press update; which is a few minutes behind market activity.
4) After the stock is quoted, you will be asked to enter another ticker symbol. You now have 2 options:
   * You may request a quote for another stock by repeating steps 2 & 3.
   * You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more pressing the Star Key (*).

Now the volume, high and low will be given, and then you will be asked to enter another ticker code.
   * You may enter up to 10 ticker symbols per call.

5) To exit Stockquote Hotline, simply hang up the phone.

Prices rise

NEW YORK — Energy prices moved higher Monday after news that the U.S. plans to send missiles and another aircraft carrier to the Middle East.

The price of West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September rose 6 cents a barrel from Friday to close at $22.04 in moderate trading.

Natural gas for September delivery settled at $1.856 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 6.2 cents.

Lower-grade sour crude for September delivery settled at $20.04 a barrel, up 6 cents.

Oil prices were lifted late in the day after reports that the USS John F. Kennedy, an aircraft carrier, was steaming toward the Mediterranean Sea. The Bush Administration also said it was sending a battery of Patriot missiles from Germany to Kuwait.

Halliburton moves

DALLAS — Halliburton Co. said Monday it would try to sell its Highlands Insurance Co. subsidiary because the unit does not fit the company's growth plans.

Halliburton Chairman Thomas Cruikshank said the Dallas-based company wants to concentrate on its core engineering and construction and energy service businesses.

"Our strategy is to more sharply focus our resources in these two areas," Cruikshank said in a statement.

Houston-based Highlands, which writes commercial property and casualty and workers compensation insurance, had revenue of $480 million last year. Cruikshank said the subsidiary has been profitable.

But he said, "The sale of Highlands to an organization more fully committed to financial services will enable Highlands to better capitalize on its capabilities."

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar settled lower on world currency markets Monday in typically light summer dealings.

In New York, the dollar settled at 127.50 yen, down from 128.10 yen Friday.

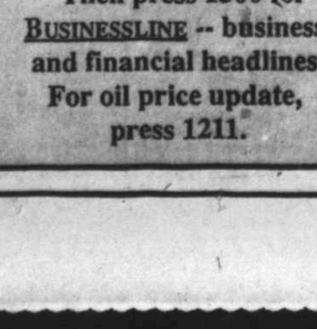

The British pound rose to $1.9190 in New York from Friday's $1.8945.

Market slips

NEW YORK — Blue-chip stocks finished with spotty losses in a mixed session Monday after the market made as short-lived early attempt at a rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up about 10 points in the early going, closed with a 3.51-point loss at 3,282.20.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 8 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Founding family seeks control of Zale

■ Announcement raises intensity of mounting battle for nation's largest jewelry retailer.

Associated Press

DALLAS — The founding family of Zale Corp., led by former chief executive Donald Zale and former president Bruce Lipshy, said Monday it will try to regain control of the company, which is in Chapter 11 reorganization.

"I want to run my company again," Lipshy said.

The announcement raises the intensity of a mounting battle for the nation's largest jewelry retailer.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Steven Felsenthal, who is overseeing Zale's reorganization, will hear motions Tuesday to terminate Zale's exclusive right to file a reorganization plan.

"We welcome anybody that wants to come in and help straighten it out," said David Glatstein of the Dallas investment firm Barre & Co., which represents a creditor group that wants exclusivity terminated and has announced a reorganization plan for the company.

"It's the best thing for the creditors. Let the creditors have a competition," Glatstein said.

Barre & Co. threw Zale into involuntary bankruptcy in January when the company announced it would miss a debt payment. The company later converted to a voluntary Chapter 11 filing.

Its debt had grown to $1.5 billion after the lingering recession hurt jewelry sales and millions remained to be paid from a 1986 hostile takeover by the company's Canadian and Swiss owners.

Zale filed its own plan of reorganization last week, proposing consolidation of its subsidiaries. It then replaced chief executive Irving Gerstein, whose family leads the Canadian investors, with Dean Groussman, who led several Zale divisions from 1979 to 1985.

Lipshy said the company's present owners have destroyed value his family spent generations building. He and Zale have been developing their own reorganization plan since the company entered Chapter 11.

"It was such a great company. We've seen in the last 5½ years how it's deteriorated," Lipshy said.

A representative of the company did not immediately return a phone call Monday.

In a letter to creditors, Zale and Lipshy said they would lead the reorganized Zale and pump in some new capital. They said they were withholding further details until after Felsenthal makes a decision on the exclusivity motions.

But they criticized the company's reorganization plan and said it was clear the current owners "had no commitment to this company's long-term success."

They also touted their own background with the company, started by Zale's father Morris in Wichita Falls, Texas, in 1924. Lipshy is the son of Ben Lipshy, Zale Corp.'s second president.

"We are first and foremost jewelry merchants, not Austrian rhinestone and crystal makers or Canadian tire retailers," Zale and Lipshy said in the letter.

Groussman was most recently president and chief executive of Canadian Tire Corp., a hardware and automotive company.

"We also know this market, both locally and nationally, and we can provide the fulltime, on-site, hands-on management needed to get Zale back on its feet again," Zale and Lipshy said.

Investors seek value in muddled market

Money managers move center stage

By Chet Currier
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — In a year when neither the bulls nor the bears have held a clear-cut advantage, the search for "value" in the stock market takes on extra intensity.

It's the sort of atmosphere that naturally focuses attention on money managers like Eileen Rominger, who specialize in trying to find stocks that are overlooked, misunderstood or underappreciated by the crowd at large.

"The market is relatively efficient. You've got to find ways that it's inefficient," says Ms. Rominger, portfolio manager of Oppenheimer Capital's $122 million Quest For Value Fund.

In a sense, of course, everybody who participates in the stock market is a value investor. "Nobody wants to buy overvalued stocks," Ms. Rominger acknowledges with a laugh.

But while some look for good buys through projections of interest rates or technical patterns in the charts of the market's ups and downs, Ms. Rominger concentrates on in-depth corporate research.

"We look for great businesses, and we want to buy them cheaply," she says. "We aren't interested in just cheapness for its own sake.

"Our approach is to get to know a certain list of companies very, very well and to understand the dynamics of their businesses very, very well. I am convinced that that is how you make great returns over long periods of time."

One place to hunt for undervalued stocks, she says, is among companies that have run into short-term problems that temporarily depress their earnings and obscure their long-term promise.

"We really couldn't care less about quarterly earnings," she says. "We don't even look at that."

A wide range of stocks have been hurt in recent months because of earnings disappointments. "The market has been brutal that way," Ms. Rominger said. "It takes no prisoners."

Partly because of that unforgiving atmosphere, she says, "we're finding a lot of names to buy — and it's good quality, it's not junk."

Ms. Rominger says this generous supply of bargains helps to offset any concerns she might feel about recent overall levels of price-earnings ratios, price-to-book-value comparisons or other statistical gauges that have climbed this year to their highest levels since the summer of 1987.

She sees other differences as well that argue that stocks aren't as vulnerable to a drastic decline as they were five years ago, heading toward the crash of '87.

"Then you were sort of at the peak of leverage, and companies were still taking on debt," she said.

Sales decline on previously owned homes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of previously owned homes fell in June for the third straight month, a real estate trade group reported Monday, but analysts said the market had revived in July as mortgage rates declined.

"Ever since the Federal Reserve brought down rates on July 2, there's been a lot of activity in the housing market," said David Lereah, an economist with the Mortgage Bankers Association.

Sales fell in June in both the West and Midwest and were unchanged in the South, according to the National Association of Realtors. The Northeast posted the only increase.

Nationally, sales dropped 2.9 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.36 million, the Realtors said. The decline followed decreases of 0.9 percent in May and 0.6 percent in April.

According to surveys by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 8.51 percent in June. They had dropped to 8.08 percent by last Friday.

More fliers pay full fare in June

N.Y. Times News Service

When American Airlines reduced its unrestricted fares and simplified its fare structure in early April — and most other airlines followed suit in most domestic markets — one goal was to increase the number of fliers paying full fare.

That goal appears to have been realized.

Statistics released last week by the Air Transport Association show that since April, the number of passengers paying full fare has jumped sharply, more than doubling in May and June compared with those months in 1991.

David Swierenga, who analyzes data for the Air Transport Association, noted that the new statistics were murky and that some of the jump might point to a shift to the lowered full coach fare from business travelers who previously sought out discounts.

But the figures also strongly suggest that business travelers are flying more frequently.

FDIC covers CD accounts over $100,000

By Bill Doyle

Q: In 1989, I took an $86,000 lump-sum retirement payment and rolled it over into a 9.54 percent, five-year individual retirement account certificate of deposit. In two years, the amount in the CD passed the $100,000 Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage limit. I then drew off all the interest and placed it in a 7.5 percent IRA CD at a different bank.

Doyle

In not too many months, the 9.54 percent CD will once again reach the $100,000 figure. What to do?

A: Unless you are worried the bank might go belly up, leave your money where it is. The 9.54 percent interest that CD is accumulating is mighty attractive and much higher than you can get on a new CD now that interest rates have come way down.

If the bank fails, $100,000 of your CD money will be rock-solid safe. You might lose the excess above FDIC coverage, but chances are you would not. More likely, the busted bank would be taken over by another bank or savings and loan association, and your account would be transferred there. In that case, the new bank would have the option of lowering the interest on your CD. However, it would have to give you two weeks' notice before doing so. During that time, you would be allowed to withdraw your money without any penalty.

Q: My CD will soon go over the $100,000 FDIC coverage limit. I am willing to take a chance and leave it all there, because the CD's interest is about twice as much as is available today.

Is there any law requiring me to take the excess amount out? The bank contends the "OTS" says I have to withdraw it.

A: The Office of Thrift Supervision is the federal agency created by the thrift bailout law to replace the Federal Home Loan Bank Board as regulator of the nation's thrift institutions — savings and loan associations and some savings banks, but not commercial banks.

An OTS spokesman passes on the word that there is nothing in the law or in OTS regulations forcing you to withdraw deposits in excess of FDIC coverage, which stops at $100,000 per depositor per institution.

A spokeswoman for the Resolution Trust Corp., which handles failed thrifts and banks, says the same thing applies. There is no such requirement.

The thrift institution at which you have the CD might be suggesting you withdraw the amount over $100,000 in order to avoid paying high interest on that money. But if you were told the OTS or any other federal agency requires such a withdrawal, somebody fibbed.

Q: So far, my husband and I have gotten along well on his $16,000 annual pension and our Social Security benefits. We have $35,000 in a bank account and $5,000 in government bonds. I have more than $100,000 in IRA CDs. Our home is paid for.

If my husband passes away first, I will receive 56 percent of his pension. If I die first, he will receive my IRA.

In our circumstances, what would you do with our assets?

A: Virtually the same things you have done. The one exception might be keeping $35,000 in what you call a "bank account." If you are talking about a CD paying reasonably high interest, fine. But if you mean a low-interest savings account, it's a mistake to keep so much money there. Most should be moved to such things as CDs, U.S. Treasury securities and U.S. savings bonds.

If you die first, your husband's finances will not be hurt badly. If your husband joins the choir silent first, you'll lose $7,040 annual pension income and a chunk of Social Security benefits. You should be able to offset a big part of that by beginning to spend bond interest and the interest you now allow to accumulate on CDs.

If necessary, you or he can always spend some of your accumulated wealth. As an IRA participant, you will be required to start making withdrawals from your account after you pass age 701/2.

DEAR ABBY

Woman is in losing battle with man who can't trust

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating this guy for about four months. I am in my middle 20s and he is in his early 30s. He is a man who believes in actions, not words. The situation is scaring me. I am made to feel that I have to prove that I am faithful.

Van Buren

"Stuart" thinks that all women are sneaks and liars. I have given him no reason to think that I am unfaithful or sneaking behind his back. He doesn't trust anyone until that trust is "earned." I can't feel comfortable until I have "earned" his trust.

Abby, I have been doing everything I can to show him that I can be trusted. I am always home when he calls; I'm always at work when he calls. When we are together, I feel I show him by my actions that he is the only one I'm dating or paying attention to. We see each other five days out of seven. When we are not together, we talk on the telephone. When would I even have time for someone else?

I know it's only been a short time and time helps, but I need some advice on what else I can do. I feel I'm fighting a losing battle and I want to win! — UNTRUSTED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR UNTRUSTED: You have been dating this man for only four months, but you are fighting a losing battle because if you win (him), you will constantly be trying to prove your faithfulness. Even marriage (should that be in the cards) would not make him more trusting. (It could even make him more suspicious and possessive.)

Dump this suspicious character. And consider this: No man will look under the bed unless he has once hidden there himself.

DEAR ABBY: Your column has been an enjoyable part of my daily reading for many years, but I've never seen a question re the subject I have in mind.

A number of years ago, I had a radical mastectomy, and fortunately I have been 100 percent healthy ever since.

A few years ago, my husband passed away and I am now ready to date and, I hope, remarry one day. My problem is that I find myself reluctant to get involved, knowing that if I meet a man and we come to care for each other, I have no idea how he might feel about my disfigured body. I'm in my 50s, affectionate and outgoing.

I'm slim, attractive and look terrific with my clothes on. There was no problem with my husband — we had a loving marriage, and he was thrilled just to have me alive and well.

Perhaps your male readers in my age group will write their honest thoughts about getting involved with a woman whose body is disfigured this way. Also, there may be women in my situation who would share their experiences as single women having had a mastectomy. Sign me ... INHIBITED AND EMBARRASSED

DEAR INHIBITED: I'm sure many have shared this problem and will be willing to share their valuable experiences with you. Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I enjoyed your column on words. I noticed how frequently the word "up" is used in addition to "slowing up," as opposed to "slowing down."

To mention a few: there's dream up, foul up, cough up, measure up, wrap up, 'fess up, screw up, cover up, trade up, make up, size up, dress up and stuck up. Can you think of any more? — LAURA IN BIRMINGHAM

DEAR LAURA: How about: "put up or shut up," "mark up," and the somewhat crude "shack up"?

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! Paper pulls Popeye comic dealing with abortion

NEW YORK (AP) — If Popeye's girlfriend Olive Oyl wants to watch the Home Shopping Network, that's one thing. But if she wants to think about having an abortion, she'd better do it in another comic strip.

Popeye's distributor, King Features, has yanked three weeks worth of panels dealing with abortion, saying the subject was unsuitable for a family strip.

Bobby London, who drew the strips, told newspapers King also fired him. King spokeswoman Amanda Hass refused to discuss London's employment status. King officials also refused to say how many papers carry "Popeye."

But at least one newspaper, Chicago's daily Southtown Economist, ran all three weeks' worth of the disputed strips on Monday, along with a story about the controversy.

"I would describe it as bizarre," Southtown Economist Editor Michael Kelley said of the story line. "But I don't think it's hugely offensive."

Only one reader commented on the strip, said the newspaper's feature editor, George Haas.

"She just found it interesting; that's all she would say," Haas said.

The story in a nutshell:

Olive Oyl, who in recent years has become a Home Shopping Network addict, receives a baby Bluto doll she didn't order. Popeye insists the toy "go back to his maker."

Two priests, one named "Father Nosebest," overhear this and jump to the conclusion that Olive, "the shameless hussy," is considering an abortion.

They follow her to the home of the Sea Hag, who reaches the same conclusion. She tells Olive abortion is illegal, but she dons a pair of rubber gloves anyway.

Back home, Popeye decides to keep "the li'l swab." Olive counters that "no male-dominated old-boy network" can ruin her life.

"Regardless of which side of the issue a cartoonist favors, abortion is not a suitable subject for 'Popeye.'

— Daily News

London, who lives in New York, has an unlisted phone number and couldn't be reached for comment Wednesday. But he has said he is trying to modernize the strip's venerable characters.

He told the Daily News he thought the abortion strips fell "within the limits of fair play."

King didn't think so.

"Regardless of which side of the issue a cartoonist favors, abortion is not a suitable subject for 'Popeye,'" the syndicate said in a memo notifying editors on Monday that the strips were being pulled. Replacements were provided.

Although King comic strips seldom stir controversy, readers of "Rex Morgan" recently were introduced to an HIV-positive doctor. And fans of "Luanne" learned that the teen-ager had her first period.

The Southtown Economist's Kelley also said he has noticed that Popeye "has gotten a little more topical" since London started drawing the daily strip six years ago. Bud Sagendorf does the Sunday strip.

AT WIT'S END

If men did housework, we'd have to live outside

By Erma Bombeck

I watched a very funny episode of "Home Improvement" the other night where Tim Allen, the sitcom's answer to Bob Vila, observed that men would change a few things if they did housework.

Bombeck

The hero proceeded to rewire his wife's vacuum sweeper to give it a power boost and nearly sucked up one of the kids.

There's more truth to this theory than you can imagine. Men are impatient with housework. They don't want to deal with 32 sweeper attachments to clean the tracks of sliding doors. They don't want to spend time removing the chopping blade from the food processor and replacing it with the shredder.

They're used to tearing around in riding mowers with juiced-up engines and wielding chain saws that can level a yard faster than you can say, "You have just cut down our utility pole."

I have a fantasy where I imagine men and women change roles. It is not a pretty sight. If men did laundry, they would eliminate clothes hampers. Instead, they would suck up their underwear and socks from the floor with a heavy-duty minesweeper that would not only turn the apparel right side out, but would send clothes sailing into the washer.

Their bedrooms and baths would be done over in black towels and brown sheets and pillowcases. They would say it is masculine. They would be lying. It means they would have to launder them only twice a year.

Because men are basically frugal, they would never start a dishwasher until every dish in the house was dirty. Sofa cushions would be removed only if there was a promise of money under them.

Men don't seem to care about the orderliness of a home. Basically, they're warlike people who are happy only when they sharpen knives and meat cleavers that can cut paper. (When was the last time you cooked paper?)

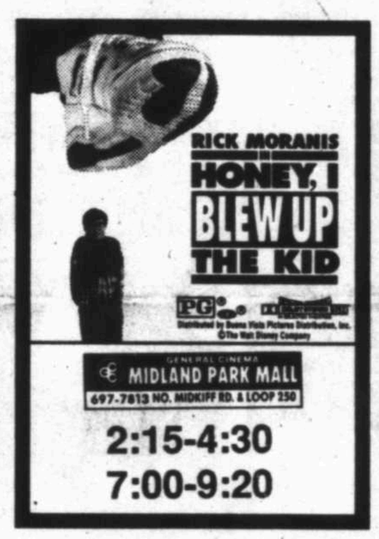

They're restless. The refrigerator is never cold enough, the water heater never hot enough, the lights never bright enough, the drains never large enough and the coffee maker never fast enough. I had a brother-in-law who made one of those ducks for his back yard where the wings spun around when the wind blew. He was always tinkering with it. It never flew fast enough.

I never want to get as crazy as my husband got one day when he was painting houses. He was going through a rag bag when he discovered one of my discarded bras. He wore it around his waist and filled the cups with putty.

Some things you can't improve.

Bush attacks rival on foreign policy

■ President stresses his own experience in field.

By Andrew Rosenthal
N.Y. Times News Service

NEENAH, Wis.— President Bush and his advisers confronted Gov. Bill Clinton head on for the first time on foreign policy Monday, opening the new front by calling his ideas on Yugoslavia "reckless" and painting Bush as the candidate who can be trusted with the nation's security.

Campaigning in Wisconsin and Michigan, Bush hurled threats at Saddam Hussein and talked in hushed tones of receiving late-night phone calls from the White House crisis center to underscore his own foreign policy credentials, which his strategists view as his best card in the 1992 elections.

"The American people need to know that the man who answers that phone has the experience, the seasoning, the guts to do the right thing," Bush said, speaking to workers and Republican supporters in a cookie factory in Wyoming, Mich., from a platform festooned with boxes of sugar wafers, low-fat granola and Rice Krispie bars.

Behind the scenes, Bush aides quickly pounced on a little-noticed policy statement on Yugoslavia, issued by Clinton's office in Little Rock, Ark., to make a direct assault on the Democratic presidential nominee. The statement called on Bush to seek U.N. authorization of selective bombing of Serbian targets.

Calling Clinton's ideas "reckless," Marlin Fitzwater, Bush's spokesman, said they showed that Clinton and his running mate, Sen. Al Gore, are "a long way from being qualified to lead the country."

Raising doubts about Clinton's ability to manage foreign policy, a tactic that Bush used successfully against Gov. Michael S. Dukakis of Massachusetts in 1988, has been a latent theme of the Bush campaign for some time. It was an expected part of the more overt attack on Clinton that began to unfold when Ross Perot dropped out of the race.

But it was not until Monday that it emerged so strongly into the fore, propelled in part by the opening given to Bush's staff by Clinton's statement on Yugoslavia.

In the statement that Clinton issued on Sunday, he called on Bush to show "real leadership" in the Balkans.

"We should make clear that the economic blockade against Serbia will be tightened, not only on weapons but also on oil and other supplies that sustain the renegade regime of Slobodan Milosevic," he said. "European and U.S. naval forces in the Adriatic should be given authority by the U.N. to stop and search ships that might be carrying contraband headed for Serbia and her ally, Montenegro."

Clinton called for international action to charge President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia and others "with crimes against humanity under international law — as we should have done long ago in the case of Iraq."

"The continuing attacks by Serbian elements in Bosnia threaten the delivery of urgently needed humanitarian aid, jeopardize the safety of U.N. personnel and put at risk the lives of thousands of citizens," the Democratic nominee said.

"The United States should take the lead in seeking U.N. Security Council authorization for air strikes against those who are attacking the relief effort. The United States should be prepared to lend appropriate military support to that operation. Air and naval forces adequate to carry out these operations should be visibly in position."

Commenting on the statement, Fitzwater said: "It sounds like the kind of reckless approach that indicates he better do some more homework on foreign policy. It's clear he's unaware of the political complications in Yugoslavia."

In response to a reporter's question in San Francisco, Clinton said he was confused about the administration's response. "I just don't know what to make of that. I mean, I talked to Senator Gore about it; we are perplexed by it."

Clinton said he "didn't feel upset about it." In all of his statements about Yugoslavia, he said, "I tried to be aggressive and forthright."

"Maybe they are on the defensive, but certainly it was not an irresponsible statement. It was a very responsible statement, very well thought out, carefully put together after I talked to Gore on the phone about it."

The Clinton statement on Bosnia and Herzegovina was sent to the offices of news organizations on Sunday from the nominee's headquarters in Little Rock, Ark., but it was not circulated to the reporters who travel with Clinton because of a series of miscues, campaign aides said.

Efforts to curb surrogacy gain momentum, strength

By Lisa Belkin
N.Y. Times News Service

In the five years since Mary Beth Whitehead-Gould attracted national attention by refusing to relinquish custody of the child she had borne as a surrogate mother, efforts to curb the baby-bearing industry have been gaining momentum across the nation.

Last month, New York became the 18th state to sharply restrict the practice, as legislators who call it baby selling outvoted those who see it as a legitimate last hope.

In many ways, the debate in New York was even more emotional than most because the surrogacy business has been more active here than in any other place in the country.

Similarly, the reaction in New York has been fiercer. Brokers, infertile couples and potential surrogates here are vowing to find loopholes in the new law, sign their contracts in other states, or, if necessary, go underground to have their babies.

Those in the middle of the surrogacy process say they feel stranded, among them, Mara and Adrian Alexandru of Brooklyn, N.Y., who after five years of infertility had reluctantly decided that their only hope of having a child was through surrogacy. The woman they want to pay to carry a child is scheduled to fly in from New Hampshire within days for artificial insemination.

"I'm going through with it anyway," said Mrs. Alexandru.

It can take months of insemination attempts for a pregnancy to occur, she said, meaning that her surrogate could give birth more than a year from now, after the law takes effect.

If that occurs, she said, she will "find a way" around the law. "We want a child," she said. "We want a family."

Studies have estimated that 40 percent of all surrogate births in the United States have been in New York.

And a report released in the spring by the state's Department of Health estimated that 4,000 infants have been born in the United States through surrogacy arrangements, at a cost of $33 million to contracting couples.

Surrogacy as it currently exists in the United States is made possible by brokers whose business it is to match infertile couples with women willing to be surrogates. The couple pays a fee of about $16,000 to the broker in advance, an additional fee of between $10,000 and $20,000 to the surrogate after the birth of the baby, and all expenses not covered by the surrogate's medical insurance, everything from maternity clothes to plane fare.

The couple and the surrogate sign a complicated contract, which can include such things as the pro-rated fee the surrogate will receive if she miscarries and the requirement that the surrogate undergo an abortion if prenatal tests reveal a fetal abnormality.

After the documents are signed, the surrogate undergoes artificial insemination. After the baby is born, the surrogate relinquishes her maternal rights and allows the baby's biological father to have custody. The father's wife legally adopts the child.

Under New York's law, which Gov. Mario M. Cuomo signed Wednesday, it would still be legal for a woman to carry a baby for another couple, but the payment to the broker and to the woman would be illegal and the contract would not have legal standing in court. Only the payment of medical expenses would be allowed. A broker who accepts a fee faces a fine of $10,000 for a first offense. The couple who pays the fee and a surrogate who accepts it face $500 fines.

"The purpose was to eliminate the practice of commercial surrogacy," said Anna Maria Cugliari, a spokesman for the Governor's Task Force on Life and the Law, which drafted the legislation.

"Under the new law it will be treated like adoption. The unanimous decision of the task force was that you shouldn't treat these arrangements as you would a consumer transaction."
