Bomb recipe poll

On April 19, a bomb exploded in Oklahoma City, killing more than 100 people. On April 24, a package bomb killed a man in California and the incident is believed to be linked to a series of 22 other such bombings. Both cases involved homemade devices fashioned to kill. Should books detailing how to make homemade bombs be outlawed? Or would prohibiting such books be a violation of Americans' first amendment rights? Fire evacuations

A fire that forced the evacuation of an apartment complex Sunday was contained after about an hour, according to fire officials.

Brian Adamcik
Officer Mark Hinshaw

The fire began about 5 p.m. in a vacant lot to the west of Sagewood Condominums, 3330 Caldera Blvd.

Officer Patrick Mayers said the wind began moving the fire toward the complex, so he began evacuting residents in the north and central parts of the complex. Everyone was evacuted after the wind changed direction and seemed to threaten the southern part of the complex, Mayers said.

The fire skirted the complex parking lot and was under control about an hour later, officials said.

■ Life starts over for 11-year-old boy orphaned by blast

By Christopher Sullivan
Associated Press

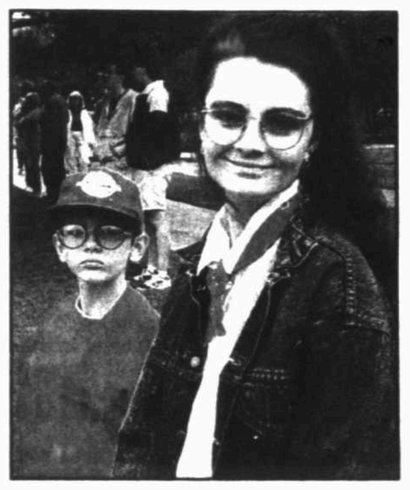

BROKEN ARROW, Okla. — The headlights that seemed to turn the highways into endless funeral processions are fewer now. The fliers announcing memorials are coming down. The bouquets heaped on fresh graves, like Trudy Rigney's grave here, are beginning to wilt.

Life moves on for those left behind by the Oklahoma City bombing — those healing from injuries and those in mourning whose wounds are deep inside.

Among the latter is Jonmichael Rigney, the shiny-eyed son Trudy raised alone. At 11, his life is beginning anew: a new home 100 miles from his old one, new school, new friends and a new family doing their best to make life possible now that his "best buddy" is gone.

The boy does not express his sorrow yet. Asked how he's doing, he says only, "Fine." Distractedly, he moves from one activity to the next: watching a few minutes of television, playing with a cousin's "G.I. Joe," strumming an uncle's guitar.

County puts light on museum, McKinley's efforts

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Nancy Rankin McKinley's celebrated perseverance was rewarded on Sunday in the formal opening of the Midland County Historical Museum. She had campaigned for decades to bring the museum into daylight from the subdued lighting of its basement homes.

"I am glad to see the museum is out of the dungeon," Midland County Commissioner Henry Goulet said in the ceremony.

"We are, too," Mrs. McKinley assured the commissioner.

From its founding in 1932 in the basement of the Midland County Courthouse and since its move in 1958 to the basement of the Midland County Public Library, the museum had been in dungeon-like settings ... until this year.

The new museum building, financed with funding approved by the five-member Midland County Commissioners' Court, now is in its above-ground building just south of the downtown Midland County Public Library.

Clinton calls for end to all ties with Iran

■ President tries to isolate Tehran as an 'inspiration, paymaster to terrorists.' Action could cost jobs, cause slight increase in fuel prices, deprive U.S. companies of Iranian oil.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — President Clinton said Sunday he will end U.S. trade and investment with Iran, denouncing Tehran "as inspiration and paymaster to terrorists" and urging Russia to scuttle an Iranian nuclear deal.

"I am convinced that instituting a trade embargo with Iran is the most effective way our nation can help curb Iran's drive to acquire devastating weapons and support terrorist activities," Clinton said in a speech prepared for delivery Sunday night.

The action, which White House officials concede could cost thousands of American jobs and cause a slight short-term increase in fuel prices, deprives U.S. companies and their subsidiaries of the lucrative Iranian oil market. It also will eliminate U.S. exports, which totaled $326 million in 1994.

Clinton's plan was outlined in a speech prepared for the World Jewish Congress, an audience sensitive to Middle East terrorism. Aides said Clinton will sign an executive order later this week, acting under the Emergency Powers Act.

They said Clinton will declare Iran's nuclear ambitions and support of terrorism a threat on the United States and Middle East peace.

"To do nothing more as Iran continues its pursuit of nuclear weapons would be disastrous," Clinton said. "And to stand pat in the face of overwhelming evidence of Tehran's support for terrorists would threaten to darken the dawn of peace between Israel and her neighbors."

He also singled out Iraq and Libya as nation's that "hunger for nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction. Our policy toward these rogue states is simple: They must be contained."

As part of a gradual heightening of Iranian sanctions, Clinton in March killed a $1 billion oil contract between Conoco and Iran that would have produced Conoco-developed oil fields in the Persian Gulf. Under current restrictions, no Iranian oil is sold in the United States but American companies and their subsidiaries can buy Iranian oil and sell it on the world market.

Clinton said his latest order would close that $3.5 billion loophole, as well as prohibit trade and U.S. investment with Iran — closing off Iran to U.S. private sector

NRA defends anti-federal agent rhetoric

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Rifle Association's top official defended the inflammatory language his organization has used about federal agents, saying Sunday that references to "jack-booted government thugs" were accurate.

"Those words are not far, in fact they are a pretty close description of what's happening in the real world," NRA Executive Vice President Wayne LaPierre said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

The NRA's attack on federal agents in a fund-raising letter has been cited as an example of the kind of rhetoric that creates a climate for violent acts such as the Oklahoma City terrorist attack. LaPierre insisted that's not the case.

"That's like saying the weather report in Florida on the hurricane caused the damage, rather than the hurricane," he said.

But Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., appearing on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley," said the NRA "needs to get a little image repair job." Dole criticized an NRA computer bulletin

Pool call? Sunny skies, 80

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high near 80 and north winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight shoudl be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly cloudy with a high near 80.

After an overnight low of 57, Sunday's high reached 95, compared to the record high for that date of 96 set in 1948. The record low was 41 set in 1960.

STATE

Texas again will see a hodgepodge of weather today.

In North Texas, today will be partly cloudy and cooler in the west and central areas while the east will be mostly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms. It will be windy throughout the region.

Highs will range from the mid-70s in the west to low 80s in the southeast. Lows will dip into the upper 40s and mid-50s.

West Texas will be partly cloudy through tonight, becoming mostly cloudy Tuesday. Highs today will be in the 60s in the Panhandle to the mid-90s in the Big Bend valleys. Lows will range from the 40s in the north to the low 60s in the Presidio Valley.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled east across the country Sunday.

A storm in Colorado spawned gusts up to 51 mph in Grand Junction, while showers moved across northern Utah and snow fell in Montana, northeastern Wyoming and western South Dakota.

Snow was expected to taper off across central and southern Montana, northeastern Wyoming and southwestern South Dakota as that storm drifted across the Rockies.

Moderate to heavy rain moved through the Midwest, and was expected in Nebraska, Kansas and south into Oklahoma, northern Texas and Arkansas.

A warm front extended from western North Carolina to southwestern Virginia, a cold front extended from southwestern Virginia to central Tennessee and across Mississippi, where golfball-sized hail was reported.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Floating market-based savings-bond rate takes effect

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

For decades, the federal government has touted savings bonds as a way not only to help the country, but as an ultra-safe investment. And citizens responded. The bonds have been purchased to help fund college or retirement, given as gifts to children or grandchildren and even as rewards for employees.

Those savings bonds carried a guaranteed interest rate until last year, when Congress repealed a statute guaranteeing a minimum 4 percent rate.

This cleared the way for a new floating market-based rate that goes into effect today, according to a spokeswoman at the Federal Reserve Bank in Kansas City, Mo.

Savings bonds issued after today will carry a floating rate tied to Treasury securities, she said.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, in announcing the change earlier this year, said the move was made so bonds are more attractive to small investors.

The spokeswoman emphasized that the change does not affect Series EE savings bonds or Series HH bonds that have already been issued.

At present, savings bonds held less than five years carry a guaranteed rate of 4 percent, which changes to a market-based rate that can go no lower than 4 percent after five years.

Not only has the Treasury Department converted the interest rate to a market-based rate, it has essentially established two rates: short-term and long-term.

During the first five years, the variable rate will be calculated at 85 percent of the average yield of six-month Treasury securities for the previous three months, the spokeswoman said.

From year six until the bond reaches maturity in year 17, the interest rate is caculated at 85 percent of five-year Treasury securities yields for the preceding six months.

The rates will be updated every May and November. Should market rates fall low enough that the savings bond will not reach maturity in 17 years, a one-time adjustment will be made to bring the bond up to face value, she said.

Another change made by the Treasury is in how interest accrues on savings bonds. Interest on Series EE bonds issued after March 1993 is compounded semi-annually and accrued monthly. Under the new regulation, interest will be compounded semi-annually.

Savings bonds will still be purchased at half the face value, and the bonds retain their 30-year lifespan.

Series EE bonds come in denominations of $50, $75, $100, $200, $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000, while Series HH bonds come in denominations of $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000.

Both series must be held at least six months before they can be redeemed.

business.

Administration officials said the U.S. companies impacted most by the order probably would be Exxon and Texaco, along with Dresser Industries and The Coastal Corp., both Texas-based exploration companies.

The administration has been talking about tightening trade restrictions on Iran for nearly a month. Secretary of State Warren Christopher went public on April 3 with his backing for the moves outlined Sunday by Clinton.

Edgar M. Bronfman, honored Sunday by the World Jewish Congress, is a board member at DuPont, which owns Conoco. His family pressed Conoco to scuttle the Iranian deal — even before Clinton killed it.

Clinton unveiled the plan hours after attending a ceremony for 6,000 Holocaust survivors where he reminded Americans that hatred still lurks and urging them to "stand against new forms of organized evil," as witnessed in the Oklahoma City bombing.

A week before leaving for his Moscow summit, Clinton hopes the action will pressure Russian President Boris Yeltsin to cancel a "profoundly disturbing" contract to help Iran in the construction of a nuclear reactor complex near the Persian Gulf.

"If we are to succeed in getting other countries to make sacrifices in order to change Iran's behavior, we, too, must be willing to sacrifice," Clinton said.

The president said he will urge Yeltsin and other allies to take similar steps against Iran. He will make the pitch in Moscow, and again in June when leaders of the world's leading industrial nations gather in Canada. China, too, is considering a nuclear deal with Iran.

An administration official, briefing reporters on condition of anonymity, said "a few thousand" jobs will be lost as a result of the order."

The official said short-term oil prices will be affected by the order. Conceding that companies from other nations will jump in to fill the oil-market void, the official said prices won't be affected long-term because the fuel "will find its way to market in some form."

The order, which will take affect 30 days after Clinton signs it, will apply to U.S. companies and subsidiaries controlled or coordinated from the United States.

Midland County Historical Society.

Goulet, who is the Commissioners' Court's liaison to the museum, said that museum patrons are indebted to Max Perry and his committee for their fund-raising efforts to help Midland County finance the library's expansion. That expansion and Mrs. McKinley's enduring campaign for a free-standing museum influenced the building of the museum.

"It (the museum) is really an accomplishment for the whole community and the whole county, and is very attractive, said Perry, who is chairman of the library's Advisory Board and former president of the Friends of the Library. "We would have never had this type of museum had it not been for the expansion of the library."

Bill Collyns, retired newspaper editor and an original member of the 1954-founded Midland County Historical Society, cited Mrs. McKinley's legendary "persistence" in promoting the historical society and the museum.

"If she didn't succeed the first time, she would come back," Collyns said. "There has never been anybody any more persistent than Nancy McKinley. As far as the people of Midland County are concerned, this (museum) is one of the greatest assets" of the community. "It came out from underground" to the light of day.

The people of Midland County owe Mrs. McKinley "a debt of gratitude" for her work in developing the museum.

"The Commissioners' Court is very aware of her persistence — that's past and present Commissioners' Courts," Collyns said. "She has been successful (in her determination) in the long run. She was always nice about it."

board that provides bomb-making instructions, saying there are already "enough people out there who know how to make bombs."

Attorney General Janet Reno, also on NBC, demanded that critics of law enforcement officials be specific in their charges. "I think the most damaging thing that we can do in the country is to talk in generalities or in picturesque terms."

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, said he guessed that two people would resign from the NRA for every one who joins as the result of the anti-government rhetoric.

But LaPierre denied there was any dissension in the 3.5-million-member group over the stridency of its positions. The Washington Post reported Saturday that there is a division between the old guard interested in conservation and firearms education and hardliners who are concentrating on defeating gun control legislation.

He said there is no dispute in the leadership on the need to investigate alleged abuses by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and to protect gun ownership.

The six-page NRA letter signed by LaPierre and sent earlier this month singles out lawmakers who are pressing for gun control legislation and says: "It doesn't matter to them that the semi-auto ban gives jack-booted government thugs more power to take away our constitutional rights, break in our doors, seize our guns, destroy our property, and even injure or kill us."

It goes on: "Not too long ago, it was unthinkable for federal agents wearing Nazi bucket helmets and black storm trooper uniforms to attack law-abiding citizens."

The NRA is demanding congressional hearings into what LaPierre said was "a major trend toward abuses" by federal agents of constitutional guarantees against unreasonable searches and seizures.

"Let's put it all on the table. It's not only the NRA, it's the American Civil Liberties Union, it's other groups, and let's see who's right or wrong. If you want to end the climate of fear and suspicion in the country, get it all out in front of the public, and that's what we're asking."

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said the Senate Judiciary Committee he heads has no plans to open hearings on the 1993 siege of the Branch Davidian religious cult near Waco, Texas, an event that galvanized antagonism in some groups against federal law enforcement officers.

MOVING: Jonmichael may lack 'language of pain'

(From 1A)

His aunt, Paula Rigney, who moved the pictures from the wall of his old bedroom to his new one in his grandmother's house here, stays close by this Thursday afternoon, one day past the funeral. She lights up when Jonmichael smiles at something on TV.

They talk about it for a moment, then she gently prods, "Did your mom like that show?"

"Yeah," he says.

"Are you thinking about her?"

"Yeah."

"Want to talk about it?"

"No."

"We miss her, too," she says. "But there's going to be lots of people to take care of you."

"I just don't want to talk about it," the boy replies.

Jonmichael may "lack the language of pain," as an expert in child grieving explains, but not the feelings.

"This is his survival instinct," said Elaine Weiche, a friend of Trudy's. She noted that, while collecting donations for the family the other day, it crossed her mind that her vivacious pal might just walk up, smiling. Perhaps her son visualizes that, too, she said.

"I don't think he believes she's gone from him."

"No leaf of sedge nor cattail blade shall push
Up from the dark mud toward the open sky
But I shall be there, in the tender tip ..."

These lines by an Oklahoma poet, George Sutton, were read at a memorial where friends tossed handfuls of dirt around a tree planted for Trudy Rigney. The poem about love and loss echoes in the words of those forming a circle now around her son.

The two were inseparable.

"Jonmichael was right at her heels. They were mother and son, but it was best buddies, too," said Rick Rigney, Trudy's brother. The boy's father left before he was born, Rigney explained.

As a toddler, Jonmichael rode on the back of the bike that was her only transportation. She took him to meetings, to work, on trips. They "were silly together," someone remembers. A photo shows her sticking out her tongue, mimicking him.

Together, they struggled to make a better life, fell back, and started again. After a traffic injury cost her her job, they lived in a homeless shelter. They had been on welfare.

Still, when she died Trudy Rigney was closing in on a degree from the University of Oklahoma. And she dreamed of buying the little white bungalow they rented, where azaleas she planted are flowering now in the front yard.

She had parlayed a student internship at the Oklahoma Water Resources Board, across the street from the Alfred P. Murrah federal building, into a 30-hour-a-week job and the prospect of full-time employment. She was at work when the bomb exploded.

The honors she won, in spite of all, at the university and at Tulsa Junior College made her son proud and helped form his own determined spirit, friends say.

"Living in a homeless shelter — how many people would have the courage to say, 'I'm not going to stop here. I'm going to go on,'" said Barbara Slagle, the college's director of student activities who presented Trudy a top academic award.

Jonmichael's father may be "out East somewhere," said Rick Rigney, adding that the family is concerned he could resurface as Jonmichael's grandmother, Haroldene, seeks custody.

Haroldene Rigney, who declined to be interviewed, drove to her daughter's home in the Oklahoma City suburb of Midwest City as soon as she learned about the explosion, to care for Jonmichael. When Trudy's death was confirmed April 23, the family returned to Broken Arrow, outside Tulsa.

"We had all decided before we came back, we just decided we'd raise him just like he was one of our kids," said Rick Rigney, whose two children from a first marriage visit him and Paula on weekends.

"Right now we just want to try to show him as much love as possible, hug him as much as we can," he said.

Looking at his nephew, he saw his sister. He noted Jonmichael's sense of humor and playfulness, traits they had in common.

"He has a lot of Trudy in him. She was tough and so is he," he said. "He knows what it's like to come out of hardship."

"No bird of passage shall fly north or south
Breasting the stiff wind or pushing through the fog,
But I shall be there, feeling the deep urge
That drives it otherwhere at summer's ending ..."

Jonmichael's books are still stacked on his school desk back in Midwest City. His teacher, Paula Farber, can't bring herself to put them away.

At the funeral, the one time his family says he really cried, she thought she could read his thoughts on his tortured face: "That was Mom. We can't have an open casket. I'm in Broken Arrow now, not Midwest City. I don't have a mom. I don't have a home that's my home' — but he DOES!" she said, tears running down her cheeks.

She showed a wall of heart-shaped notes classmates had written. "We all care, Jonmichael," said one.

Soon he'll travel with his old class on an all-day mountain-climbing trip, said Scott Roper, a learning disabilities teacher who taught Jonmichael.

Just a few weeks ago Trudy had written to ask that he be allowed to go along, even though the family could not pay the price: $7.50.

Of course, the school said, allowing him to pay his way by selling candy bars, so that it wouldn't be "a handout. She didn't accept things from people."

Now the trip he earned means more than ever, Roper said.

His mother would like that. She was a geography major at Oklahoma, became president of the geography club and always took Jonmichael on trips. One freezing weekend it was to the tall-grass prairie of Osage County, Okla., another time to the bleak beauty of Palo Duro Canyon's mesas.

"He was always asking me about all the animals we saw out there, and the trees," said Bob Rundstrom, a geography professor who led the group and who has now helped organize a trust fund for Jonmichael.

A more private memorial for Trudy is something else he has in mind, when he goes back to the mesas. "I'll make a small monument somewhere. Maybe just a pile of stones. Something like that needs to be done.

"She was trying to make a different kind of life for herself than she had had," Rundstrom said. "Through Trudy, he was exposed to a lot of things. Now, I wonder if he'll have the same opportunities."

The club hasn't planned another trip yet, but he added, "When we do, I think I'll make a phone call up to Broken Arrow. ... We could swing by and pick him up."

Editor's note: The address of the Jonmichael Rigney Trust Fund at the University of Oklahoma Geography Department is: 100 E. Boyd, Suite 684, Norman, Okla. 73019.

were fighting for our country. We must always remember those who have served our country."

Reyes, whose brother Antonio died in Vietnam, said Sunday's ceremony showed that POWs and MIAs have not been forgotten.

Two new flags, sponsored by Sue Burdett and Dan Brown, were raised.

"It is gratifying to see all the support of the counties for this memorial," said Philbeck, whose cousin Donald Philbeck died in the Vietnam War. "It is wonderful how people have helped and done what needed to be done."

Philbeck said the memorial prompts different emotions in different people, but tends to be a place for dealing with those feelings.

"It's hard to put into words what you feel when you come here," he said. "Sometimes I come out here feeling calm and then I'll become angry. And, sometimes, it's just the opposite."

Philbeck said the Vietnam War was a signal that people need to have more of a say in government policy.

"This is a government for the people, by the people," he said. "The cause of this war was never the question. It was the policy. More people need a say in that policy."

Sunday marked the 20th anniversary of the end of the war and the fall of the city of Saigon, which Philbeck said underscored the ceremony.

"This was a dark time in our history and we must never forget there are still soldiers who never made it home," he said.

Vietamese celebrate end of war, renewal of friendship

By Kathy Wilhelm
Associated Press

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam — Twenty years ago, Communist tanks rolled down a broad avenue and smashed through the gates of the South Vietnamese presidential palace to seize power and reunite the country.

On Sunday, more than 10,000 soldiers, students and children paraded down the same broad, leafy boulevard carrying flowers and balloons and posing for pictures with their former enemies — Americans — to celebrate the anniversary of the war's end.

No recriminations were heard against the United States, which Vietnam now wants diplomatic and trade ties with. Mayor Truong Tan Sang opened the ceremonies by praising the patriotism that led so many to their death, but never even mentioned the United States.

North Vietnam seized power from the last remaining officials of the U.S.-allied government on April 30, 1975, ending a war that cost more than 3 million lives. Most Americans had fled the city only hours earlier in a desperate helicopter evacuation.

On Sunday, Vietnamese scrambled to have their pictures taken with American journalists and tourists, and once past the reviewing stand soldiers flashed peace signs and thumbs-up at an American veteran with a camera.

"It was like they were happy just to see me," said Jeff Fredrick of Tallahassee, Fla., who had part of his right leg blown away in 1968 by a mine. "I look at it detached, as a celebration of their independence. How could I hold a grudge?"

The friendliness is more than just official policy. To many Vietnamese, Americans coming back represent the return of commerce and tourism and revival of normal ties with the West after years of relative isolation.

Behind the smiles, however, Vietnamese emotions run deep about a war that set brother against brother.

No recriminations were heard against the United States, which Vietnam now wants diplomatic and trade ties with.

"This celebration is for the winners," said a former southern army officer surnamed Tran, one of many still angry over the punishment meted out to them by the victorious North after 1975.

Even some Communists question whether their leaders threw away lives needlessly in open attacks against the mighty U.S. military machine such as the 1968 Tet offensive. A teacher burst into tears when asked about her memories of the war, explaining that many relatives fought in the war and not all came back.

Unlike in the United States, where the war has been openly and hotly debated, the Vietnamese have never been allowed such catharsis.

But across the spectrum of political views, Vietnamese young and old were emphatic in agreement that they never want another war.

"Never — never," said Tran, 54. "No one dares to say that terrible word."

Nguyen Van Xich, 60, used to set booby traps for American soldiers as a Communist guerrilla. "My sole wish is to keep the peace in this land," he said Sunday. "I'm so afraid that one day my son and daughter will have to fight a war again. I would do anything to prevent that."

Mayor Sang's speech emphasized the achievements of peace, especially the new burst of economic development in Ho Chi Minh City, called Saigon before 1975. Vietnam's economy stagnated for the first decade after reunification, but free-market reforms since the late 1980s have brought marked new prosperity.

Peacekeepers should protect refugees, U.N. envoy says

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — The last of Rwanda's refugee camps was emptied Sunday as thousands of people were trucked back to their villages. But 14 people were reported beaten and stoned to death when they returned home, and a U.N. envoy suggested it may be time to give peacekeepers the power to protect civilians.

In a driving rain, a column of trucks filled with shivering people left the Ndera camp outside Kigali and headed for villages. Fernando Del Mundo of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said 3,400 people left Ndera on Sunday, clearing the last official refugee center in the central African country.

While the camps are cleared, however, the problem of resettling people in villages where many are accused of war crimes is far from solved. Most of those in the camps were Hutus, the ethnic majority blamed for last year's wartime genocide that killed an estimated 500,000 people. The genocide targeted the Tutsi ethnic minority, and when a Tutsi-led government came to power in 1994 the Hutus fled to camps for protection.

The government ordered camps to begin closing two weeks ago, saying they had become strongholds for Hutu militiamen. Since the forced resettlement began, hundreds of former refugees have been thrown into village prisons on suspicion of participation in the genocide, and scores have died either in dangerously overcrowded cells or in revenge attacks.

Since the forced resettlement began, hundreds of former refugees have been thrown into village prisons on suspicion of participation in the genocide.

In the latest reported incident, 14 people were stoned and beaten to death Thursday in Huye, outside the southwestern city of Butare, Del Mundo said.

Few details were available, but Del Mundo said village residents, U.N. military observers and aid workers reported the killings. There was no explanation for why it took four days for the UNHCR to learn of the deaths.

Del Mundo said the United Nations would post a human rights monitor in Huye to reassure the 8,000 refugees there, but he said the world body simply did not have enough people to keep a close watch everywhere.

In addition, 2 million more refugees remain in camps outside Rwanda, and some guarantee of protection must be given if they are to return home and Rwanda's postwar reconciliation is to have a chance at success.

The killings of thousands of refugees at the Kibeho camp April 22 and 23 has put pressure on Rwanda's government to improve protection for refugees, and U.N. special envoy Aldo Aiello indicated a stronger U.N. role might help.

U.N. soldiers could only watch as Rwandan troops — mostly Tutsis — fired on Kibeho's mainly Hutu residents because their mandate did not let them intervene, Aiello told a news conference.

"I think we have a good opportunity now ... to review this mandate and to make sure that what we are supposed to do, we can do," said Aiello, who was sent to Rwanda after the Kibeho killings. The mandate is up for review June 9 by the Security Council, which could toughen it to let U.N. troops fire in situations other than just self-defense.

The Kibeho killings occurred as Rwandan troops trying to close the camp fired on the crowd, setting off a stampede.

S. Koreans bury dead from explosion, voice anger over lax safety enforcement

TAEGU, South Korea (AP) — Sweet incense filled the hot air as hundreds of students in navy blue blazers stood silently in their dusty schoolyard Sunday, bidding farewell to classmates killed by a gas explosion.

Forty-two students from the Yon Nam Middle School were among 100 people killed in Friday's blast, the latest in a string of disastrous accidents in South Korea.

Throughout the country, growing anger over lax enforcement of safety standards was directed at the government.

Police announced Sunday that seven people responsible for drilling a hole in a gas line against safety regulations would be arrested and charged with negligence.

The gas had poured out from the broken line and into the water main, collecting at a nearby subway construction site until a welding spark ignited it 20 minutes later.

About half the people killed were children on their way to school. At least 125 people were hospitalized in this city of 2.2 million, 140 miles south of Seoul.

The all-boys Yong Nam school lost 42 students, and their families and friends filled the schoolyard Sunday for a memorial service. Hearses circled the yard slowly.

"My poor son, my poor son," murmured Chung Mook-hee, hugging the white draped casket of her 13-year-old son, unwilling to let go.

At tables laden with fruit, boys came forward one by one to pour rice wine and say goodbye. Food and wine are symbolically offered in the Confucian funeral ritual in the belief that they will keep spirits happy.

"Jae-duk liked math. He was a good kid," said his father, his hands shaking as he lighted yet another cigarette. Tears streamed down his face, but he made no effort to wipe them away.

Light reading

The idea of reading a corporate annual report may put many people to sleep. A lot of numbers, maybe a few pictures of products like snack foods, or workers in hard hats. But some annual reports may prompt readers to do a little wistful daydreaming. Like Daimler Benz's report, complete with pictures of sleek luxury cars. Or Tiffany's 1994 report — the inside front and back covers feature pictures of glittering diamonds, gleaming silver and lustrous pearls. Neither report lists prices, but the Tiffany report does tell shareholders how they can get the jeweler's catalogs.

Endangered crackers

Barnum's Animal Crackers, familiar to consumers because of their red and yellow boxes with circus motifs, are undergoing a temporary transformation. Nabisco Biscuit Co., which makes the cookies, says its turning the generic monkeys, lions and tigers into representations of endangered species through mid-August. The new crackers, in shapes such as the black rhinoceros, blue whale and Chinese alligator, will come in boxes with jungle scenes. The company said it's trying to build awareness about endangered species.

Swiping in

Time clocks, a symbol of the Industrial Age that require employees to punch in and punch out, may be headed for extinction. Entrepreneur magazine says computers can keep track of workers' comings and goings using cards similar to credit cards that can be "swiped" through electronic terminals. The computers, including some run by independent payroll processing companies, can adjust employees' pay according to the hours they work.

Hike

Americans bought fewer pairs of athletic shoes in 1994, and paid less for them, according to the Athletic Footwear Association. The trade group said sneaker sales — including running, tennis and basketball shoes — were down 3.2 percent last year, with the average price of a pair dropping to $31.19 from $31.82. Steeper competition among manufacturers and retailers was behind the price slide. But the AFA found that hiking, hunting and fishing boots grew in popularity, with sales rising more than 50 percent.

Slow muni bond business awaits changes

By John Connor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The municipal bond market is enduring challenging times. Volume is off, new rules are on tap, and more Securities and Exchange Commission enforcement cases are waiting in the wings.

The volume of long-term bonds coming to market is down — about $28 billion issued in the first quarter of this year, compared with $48.8 billion a year earlier, according to Andy Nybo, an analyst at the Public Securities Association.

State and local governments issued so few new bonds in the first three months of 1995 that Nybo expects to cut his estimate for $158 million of new, long-term, tax-exempt bonds this year. The good news, if there is any, is that Nybo doesn't expect this year's volume be as low as the $125 billion to $130 billion range predicted by some. Long-term muni bond volume totaled nearly $163 billion last year, the worst since the tax reform hangover of 1987.

Part of the reason is low interest rates two years ago spurred many municipalities to take advantage of cheap borrowing costs by selling new bonds at the low rates. Then last year's interest rate hikes by the Federal Reserve clamped the brakes on new borrowing through bond sales.

The Orange County, Calif., bankruptcy filing late last year put the market on edge and has been a factor reducing the volume of California issues coming to market. According to PSA's Nybo, new California volume was down to $2.5 billion in the first quarter of this year from $6.5 billion a year ago.

Meanwhile, the market is on the cusp of important regulatory changes. New SEC rules are scheduled for July that will require muni bond issuers to pledge to disclose certain key information before the bonds can be sold. The particulars of the SEC's impending disclosure program remain a mystery to many bond-issuers, and the transition may not be smooth.

Another change would shorten the time bond dealers

Indoor pollution is an ill wind

Surprisingly, tobacco but a small part of dirty air in the workplace

By Lisa Genasci
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Betty Clark, a reservations agent for Delta Air Lines, worked for years above a maintenance hangar at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, atop a paint shop and storage area for airplane tires and batteries.

The windows were bolted shut, and the intake for the building's ventilation system was located above the paint shop exhaust, sucking in those fumes along with discharge from jet engines.

Among the 300 people working above the hangar, Clark said, there were respiratory illnesses, anxiety attacks, miscarriages and cancers, all of which can be caused by exposure to chemicals.

Increasingly, employees like Clark say bad air at work is making them sick — and the Labor Department agrees, estimating that more than 20 million employees face unnecessary health threats from building pollution.

"We believe a significant risk to workers' health exists from indoor air," Assistant Labor Secretary Joseph Dear said.

Dear heads the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, or OSHA, which has proposed rules regulating indoor air quality, including the presence of tobacco smoke.

The proposals about public smoking have received the most attention, partly because tobacco smoke is more obvious than other pollutants. Often, people who inhale tobacco smoke feel its effects immediately.

But tobacco smoke causes only a small part of indoor pollution, Dear and others say.

Virginia Polytechnic Institute professor James Woods, who has studied indoor air quality for 30 years, said between 20 and 30 percent of office buildings in the United States may be unhealthy.

Indoor pollution problems can be caused by inadequate maintenance or operation of ventilation systems, overaggressive energy management strategies or building design problems, Woods said.

That means employees have prolonged exposure to chemicals, molds, dust mites, bacteria and other pollutants.

Symptoms that workers commonly complain of include coughs, rhinitis, nasal congestion, sore throats, wheezing, asthma, eye irritation, nausea, headaches, lethargy or fatigue, rashes, fever and even cognitive impairment or personality changes, according to a booklet prepared by the American Lung Association, the American Medical Association and government agencies.

These illnesses may be costing the economy as much as $50 billion a year in lost work time, diminished productivity and increased health care costs, Woods said.

However, some doctors, employers and building managers say workplace air is better than most outside and there's little scientific evidence linking indoor air to the ailments described by disgruntled employees.

The real issue, they say, is usually dissatisfaction with the boss or a work situation. In other words, it's easier to get mad at the building than the job.

"When there is a perception something is the matter, if the air smells or is stuffy, and you combine that with other factors such as not feeling loved or looked after at work, the issue takes on a life of its own," said Dr. Jan Stolwijk, chairman of the Department of Epidemiology and public health at the Yale University School of Medicine. "Air quality becomes the focus."

Indeed, Delta Air Lines, which is being sued by Clark and eight others for personal injury because of the bad indoor air, would say only that from its perspective, the lawsuit has nothing to do with the air.

Dr. Richard Lockey of the University of South Florida said it's unusual for employees to become ill because of poor indoor air quality.

"People have a tendency to blame their building for symptoms when in reality the buildings they work in are much cleaner than their homes," Lockey said. "They are theories of illness, complaints with little measurable scientific fact to make them valid as significant medical problems."

Still, no one denies that during the energy-conscious 1970s, many buildings were sealed tightly for greater energy efficiency; windows were no longer made to open and ventilation systems were changed to allow less intake of fresh air.

If ventilation systems are not carefully maintained, chemicals and other pollutants circulate. And if a building owner cuts down on fresh air brought inside to save energy, carbon monoxide levels can rise.

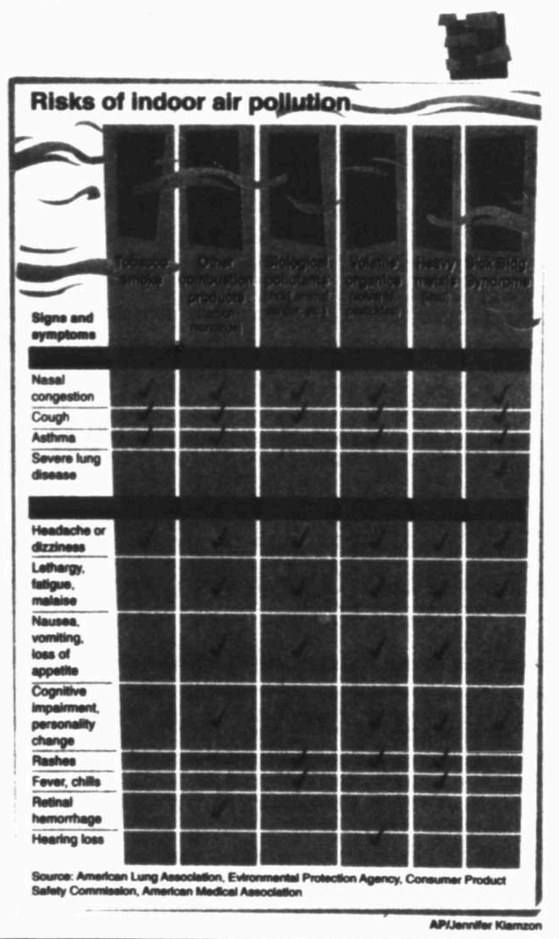

"That has a significant effect on productivity," said Cathy Sarri, assistant director of health and safety for the Service Employees International Union. "People feel tired and headachey. They feel like going out for coffee and chocolate in the afternoon."

"Indoor air quality can be a serious problem over time," said Sherri Watson, legislative representative for the Americal Lung Association. "Clearly, we can improve public health and cut health care costs. If people are in a cleaner environment they work more productively."

Even groups representing employers agree there are some significant problems.

"No one questions that there are buildings with indoor air quality problems," said Dennis Bradshaw, executive director

This may make health care look like a walk in the park

By John Cunniff
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Feeling that something better may be in it for them, millions of Americans, it seems safe to say, are anticipating a change in the federal income tax laws.

Edmund G. Woods, Jr. is not among them. His front doorstep had, so to speak, a "Go Away" mat on display last week, hardly in the spirit of American Home Week, which he and coworkers were celebrating.

Woods is president of the National Association of Realtors, which fears tax-code changes could mean elimination of the interest deductibility of home mortgages, "the cornerstone of the American Dream."

Woods and the Realtors may be in the minority. After years of threats and promises, Congress seems ready to do something big about the income tax, and millions of Americans seem convinced it can only mean better things.

Millions also anticipated great things when the Clinton administration set out to reform that other bag of riddles, the health care system, then gradually cooled as they learned the details.

As with health care reform proposals, implications of tax reform aren't fully appreciated early on, but months of debate through 1996 might change that. Ideas are emerging from almost every economic think tank, and some have made their way to Congress.

One major thrust seems to be to toward the taxation of spending rather than earning. Incentives to raise the savings rate are a top priority.

The so-called Flat Tax advocated by House Majority Leader Richard Armey would eliminate special deductions and exceptions, impose a 17 percent tax on all earnings, and reduce tax returns to a simple postcard.

Income under the flat-tax plan would include wages, salary and pensions but exclude interest, dividends, capital gains and Social Security benefits. It would eliminate deductions for interest, contributions, state and local taxes.

According to the Tax Foundation, an independent research group, it would mean $1,000 less in federal taxes for the average taxpayer. And, said Arthur Hall, an economist, it would end the current bias against saving and investing.

The USA Tax, introduced last week by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M. and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., would leave Americans with a more complicated return than the Flat Tax, allow deductions for saving and impose taxes on spending.

Income would include wages, dividends, interest, asset sales, pensions and part of Social Security benefits, while deductions

Mutual fund critics still have their say

NEW YORK — As big and strong as the mutual fund industry has become, it hasn't outgrown its doubters.

Although its latest "growth spurt" has lasted for a good 20 years, many observers still regard the funds as an upstart whose very success is suspicious.

The skepticism found expression last year, among many other places, in a book entitled "Surviving The Coming Mutual Fund Crisis," by Donald Christensen. It continues in 1995, even though funds of many types are enjoying a renewed popularity and prosperity as the stock and bond markets have rallied from a shaky 1994.

With a boost from both rising security prices and revived inflows of new money, fund industry assets are climbing again, having surpassed the $2.25 trillion mark. But in the eyes of the skeptics, that hasn't forestalled the prospect of a day of reckoning.

"Mutual funds are like the investment trusts of the late 1920s — potential investment death traps," proclaims Harry Schultz, publisher of an investment newsletter. "Mutual funds will be one of the great investment scandals of the late 1990s."

Financial analyst James Grant compares the spiraling numbers of mutual funds today with the count of oil drilling rigs in operation 15 years ago, just before the whole energy business fell into a prolonged slump. "Now the roughnecks work at Fidelity," Grant remarks.

In one provocative vision raised by many of these critics, a fund crisis hits when falling markets prompt a rush of investors trying to get out.

The debate between fund advocates and doubters has been going on long enough by now to prompt a few additional questions: What do the funds have to achieve to prove the naysayers conclusively wrong? Or, alternatively, if the skeptics are right, how and when might their doomsday visions come true?

Definitive answers to these questions aren't easily found. But some points can be made by way of partial reply.

First of all, wariness toward the funds is founded on long experience in financial matters that periods of prosperity don't last forever. Or, as Wall Street aphorists are fond of saying, "No tree grows to the sky."

But it also must be said that funds have established their credentials as more than just a fad. Rather than being hitched to a single shooting star, they operate on a broad base of diversification.

In most cases, they put their shareholders' money in diversified portfolios of securities. The fund industry itself is also extremely well diversified, with some $909 billion in stock funds, $711 billion in bond and income funds, and $639 billion in money-market funds at last tally by the Investment Company Institute.

"The arguments in favor of mutual funds over many other types of investments are powerful," says Consumer Reports magazine in its current issue.

That certainly doesn't absolve any fund from continuing scrutiny. Funds can be risky, even when they are managed well. Their fees, their performance, and their communication with the investors who own them are all fair game for second-guessing.

"We have to pay a lot more attention to an understanding of the client," acknowledges James McCall, president and chief investment officer at the Keystone Funds in Boston.

But at this stage of the game, it seems pretty extreme to demand more proof of funds' staying power before trusting them with a portion of your savings, once you have satsified yourself that you understand what you are buying.

As Consumer Reports observes, "though caution is in order when investing, too much caution is dangerous in its own right."

The voices of the funds' doubters will continue to be raised, and should never be completely ignored. A real sign of trouble might come when they were stilled by complacency.

POLLUTE: Renovations en vogue

(From 4A)

of the Sheet Metal and Air Conditioning Contractors National Association in Chantilly, Va. "Much of the problem occurred when as a nation we were shortsighted during the energy crisis in the 1970s."

Furthermore, he said, companies are renovating buildings rather than tearing them down to make way for new construction — and that doesn't always mean ventilation and air conditioning systems are updated.

It does mean, however, that paint, new carpets and furniture — also sources of chemical fumes — are brought inside. Cleaning fluids and pesticides can also cause symptoms.

And then there's the problem reported by Clark, the Delta employee — air intakes may be built near loading docks or exhaust systems, drawing carbon monoxide or other fumes into the building.

But there are signs of change.

"In the 1970s, '80s and '90s we made significant inroads cleaning up outdoor air, and now we are at the birth of the indoor air movement," said Mary Ellen Fise, general counsel for the Consumer Federation of America, which has been actively involved in pushing for controls.

Jim Dinegar of the New York-based Building Owners and Managers Association said three factors are critical to improving air quality: adequate introduction of outside air, unimpeded circulation of air and removing the source of contamination.

But for some workers, in particular building maintenance crews, the problem is that after business hours, the ventilation system is turned off altogether. They often use harsh chemicals for cleaning in enclosed spaces with no ventilation.

Margaret Jackson, a janitor who testified at OSHA hearings on the proposed regulations, worked until last year on a crew cleaning an office building. Ventilation systems were turned off five hours before she arrived and on again an hour after she left.

The chemicals Jackson used irritated her eyes and throat, made her and co-workers feel dizzy and faint, and caused daily headaches as well as breathing problems, she testified.

TAX: Straight sales proposal possible would include spending for charity, tuition and mortgage interest but not home-equity loans.

Analyses so far indicate the USA Tax might be revenue neutral, while the Flat Tax would require that at least $150 billion be cut from the Federal budget. However, if greater economic growth resulted, it could generate more revenue.

Other proposals are afloat, a straight sales tax and one by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., that would eliminate interest deductions on home mortgages exceeding $250,000, a sharp comedown from the current $1 million.

Relatively few Americans have mortgages at the larger figure, but that matters little to Woods, who calls any cap on the deduction "one step further down the slippery slope of eliminating the deduction altogether."

Wood suggested Congress can't be trusted, and indeed, some Realtors regret having acceded to the $1 million cap. Congress, he said, "just can't help themselves when it comes to raiding the wallets of middle-class America."

Theirs seems to be the strongest, most outspoken stand on the tax proposals, but there is little question that issues involved are at least as complex and controversial as those that accompanied health care proposals.

Income tax issues can draw in myriad other considerations, and you may be sure some will involve more than just politics and fairness, perhaps even questions of constitutionality.

Maybe even of the existing income tax.

FUND: Too much caution dangerous

stock and bond markets have rallied from a shaky 1994.

With a boost from both rising security prices and revived inflows of new money, fund industry assets are climbing again, having surpassed the $2.25 trillion mark. But in the eyes of the skeptics, that hasn't forestalled the prospect of a day of reckoning.

"Mutual funds are like the investment trusts of the late 1920s — potential investment death traps," proclaims Harry Schultz, publisher of an investment newsletter. "Mutual funds will be one of the great investment scandals of the late 1990s."

Financial analyst James Grant compares the spiraling numbers of mutual funds today with the count of oil drilling rigs in operation 15 years ago, just before the whole energy business fell into a prolonged slump. "Now the roughnecks work at Fidelity," Grant remarks.

In one provocative vision raised by many of these critics, a fund crisis hits when falling markets prompt a rush of investors trying to get out.

The debate between fund advocates and doubters has been going on long enough by now to prompt a few additional questions: What do the funds have to achieve to prove the naysayers conclusively wrong? Or, alternatively, if the skeptics are right, how and when might their doomsday visions come true?

Definitive answers to these questions aren't easily found. But some points can be made by way of partial reply.

First of all, wariness toward the funds is founded on long experience in financial matters that periods of prosperity don't last forever. Or, as Wall Street aphorists are fond of saying, "No tree grows to the sky."

But it also must be said that funds have established their credentials as more than just a fad. Rather than being hitched to a single shooting star, they operate on a broad base of diversification.

In most cases, they put their shareholders' money in diversified portfolios of securities. The fund industry itself is also extremely well diversified, with some $909 billion in stock funds, $711 billion in bond and income funds, and $639 billion in money-market funds at last tally by the Investment Company Institute.

"The arguments in favor of mutual funds over many other types of investments are powerful," says Consumer Reports magazine in its current issue.

That certainly doesn't absolve any fund from continuing scrutiny. Funds can be risky, even when they are managed well. Their fees, their performance, and their communication with the investors who own them are all fair game for second-guessing.

"We have to pay a lot more attention to an understanding of the client," acknowledges James McCall, president and chief investment officer at the Keystone Funds in Boston.

But at this stage of the game, it seems pretty extreme to demand more proof of funds' staying power before trusting them with a portion of your savings, once you have satsified yourself that you understand what you are buying.

As Consumer Reports observes, "though caution is in order when investing, too much caution is dangerous in its own right."

The voices of the funds' doubters will continue to be raised, and should never be completely ignored. A real sign of trouble might come when they were stilled by complacency.

"The industry has come through both good and bad times over the last couple of years," says McCall. "This wall of worry has been going on for much longer than that. It keeps everybody on their toes."

BONDS: SEC looking at mismanagement can take to formally complete trades. It used to be five days. In June, the muni market is scheduled to convert to a shorter, three-day settlement period. Some regulators are concerned the market isn't prepared for such a change.

(From 4A)

"It's not where we'd like it to be at this stage of the game," said Christopher Taylor, executive director of the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board.

In addition, the SEC last April approved a rule intended to stop what regulators had said was a widespread "pay-to-play" practice of dealers making campaign contributions to state and local officials to win bond business. Even before the rule took effect, however, the SEC made clear its view that such contributions should be disclosed in bond offering documents.

The SEC, which in recent months has brought two high-profile muni enforcement cases, continues to plug away on a number of investigations into suspected wrong-doing, and more market participants appear destined to be on the receiving end of what likely will be much-balleyhooed enforcement actions.

Chinese remind us who pays bill

Notice the Associated Press story the other day, the one datelined Beijing? It reported that bank tellers in one Chinese city, Jinan, in the coastal province of Shandong, are going to have to bite their tongues.

The reason, according to the dispatch, is that city's bank officials have banned 90 so-called "uncivilized sentences" and phrases in an attempt to bring friendly service into customer relations.

The forbidden responses include these: "I don't know," "That's not my responsibility," "What's the rush?" "Can't you see I'm busy?" "Wait over there," "If you don't like it, talk to the management," and "Go complain if you want to complain" plus 83 others.

The Chinese seemingly are beginning to get the point that service in China just might be as good for business there as it is in capitalistic countries. That hasn't always been the case. According to the story store clerks are often too busy chatting with colleagues to help customers, people who make phone inquiries often are hung up on, sales staffers frequently refuse to look up when customers try to get instructions or help and, in general, the concept that "the customer is king" is an alien one.

All of this points up not how far ahead of the Chinese U.S. merchants are in the area of customer public relations but how important it is that we not become lax.

Virtually every one of the above minor acts of contempt toward that man or woman with a checkbook has been witnessed at one time or another in American businesses.

It has happened often enough to remind us that correct treatment of customers isn't a trait all people are born with, not even all sales personnel. It is something owners, managers and supervisors — in all businesses and, yes, that includes us, — need to stress in training procedures and then periodically reinforce.

Thanks, China, for reminding us.

Today In History

Today is Monday, May 1, the 121st day of 1995. There are 244 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Fifty years ago, on May 1, 1945, a day after Adolf Hitler committed suicide, it was announced that Admiral Karl Doenitz had succeeded Hitler as leader of the Third Reich.

On this date:

In 1786, the opera "The Marriage of Figaro," by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, premiered in Vienna.

In 1893, the World's Columbian Exposition was officially opened in Chicago by President Cleveland.

In 1898, Commodore George Dewey gave the command, "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley," as an American naval force destroyed a Spanish fleet in Manila Bay.

In 1931, New York's 102-story Empire State Building was dedicated. And singer Kate Smith began her long-running radio program on CBS.

In 1941, the Orson Welles motion picture "Citizen Kane" premiered in New York.

In 1948, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea (North Korea) was proclaimed.

In 1960, the Soviet Union shot down an American U2 reconnaissance plane near Sverdlovsk and captured its pilot, Francis Gary Powers.

In 1963, James W. Whittaker of Redmond, Wash., became the first American to conquer Mount Everest as he and a Sherpa guide reached the summit.

In 1967, Anastasio Somoza Debayle became president of Nicaragua.

In 1967, Elvis Presley married Priscilla Beaulieu in Las Vegas. (They divorced in 1973.)

In 1971, Amtrak went into service.

In 1978, Ernest Morial was inaugurated as the first black mayor of New Orleans.

Foster believes Dole won't follow through

WASHINGTON — Surgeon General-designate Henry Foster charges it would be "un-American" for Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole to prevent a vote on his nomination from reaching the Senate floor.

In the only interview he's granted in the 10 days before this week's confirmation hearings, Foster broke his silence on Dole's threat to deny him the basic fairness of a straight up-or-down vote before the full Senate.

Anderson

"I don't think Senator Dole would do that ... because that would be so un-American," Foster told our associate Ed Henry in an interview at the White House. "I just don't think the senator would do that. I think he has too much integrity to do that."

Under Dole's Alice in Wonderland-style justice, Foster is facing sentencing before a trial. Dole has threatened to keep the vote off the Senate's schedule — effectively killing it — even if the nomination is given a favorable recommendation by the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

Foster feels, however, that Dole will back down. "I don't think he's going to go through with it is what I'm telling you," said Foster. "I think he's a man who believes in the American way ... I'm not taking it lightly, but people say things in the heat of battle (like) 'Read my lips!'"

Dole appears less concerned about sinking Foster than shoring up his support with the far-right wing of the GOP. He's not so much battling Foster as he is bowing to the true-believers who decide Republican primaries. Dole's accusation that Foster has a "credibility problem" rings hollow in the context of the Kansan's recent kow-towing on issues ranging from taxes to affirmative action.

To be sure, the Clinton administration has supplied enough ammunition to anti-choice conservatives. Early on, officials kept revising the number of abortions Foster performed, prompting Dole to claim that Foster "didn't tell the truth." But since when was lying a disqualifying factor for winning Dole's vote?

Just seven months ago, Dole was posing with a perjurer named Oliver North, endorsing his Senate candidacy and writing out a $5,000 campaign check. North was convicted of lying to Congress and of two other criminal charges for his role in the Iran-contra scandal. (The three convictions were later overturned on a technicality.)

"I'm very proud of Oliver North and very proud to be here," Dole said at a campaign stop for North in Virginia. "I don't make any bones about that." Dole not only rode to North's rescue from Democratic broadsides, but proclaimed that wounded veterans like he and North "have to swallow hard" to accept President Clinton as their commander-in-chief.

"It's a wild stretch to suggest that support for the North Senate campaign requires support for the Foster nomination," Dole told us in a written statement. "The bottom line is that Dr. Foster has a here-and-now credibility problem, and it has nothing to do with the Republican Leader campaigning for a Republican nominee in a political race."

Like Foster, Dole is guilty of flip-flopping. Back in 1988, Dole called North "a loose cannon" who "overstepped his bounds" in the Iran-contra affair, and "is not a hero." But last year, Dole was almost apologizing for North.

"My view is, he made a mistake," Dole said in November. "He's made mistakes. He said so. So, what do you do?"

By that same standard, Dole should be able to judge Foster on his entire 38-year medical career. While Foster is the physician of record on 39 abortions since 1973, he has delivered over 10,000 babies. And his program to fight teen pregnancy was honored as one of President George Bush's Thousand Points of Light.

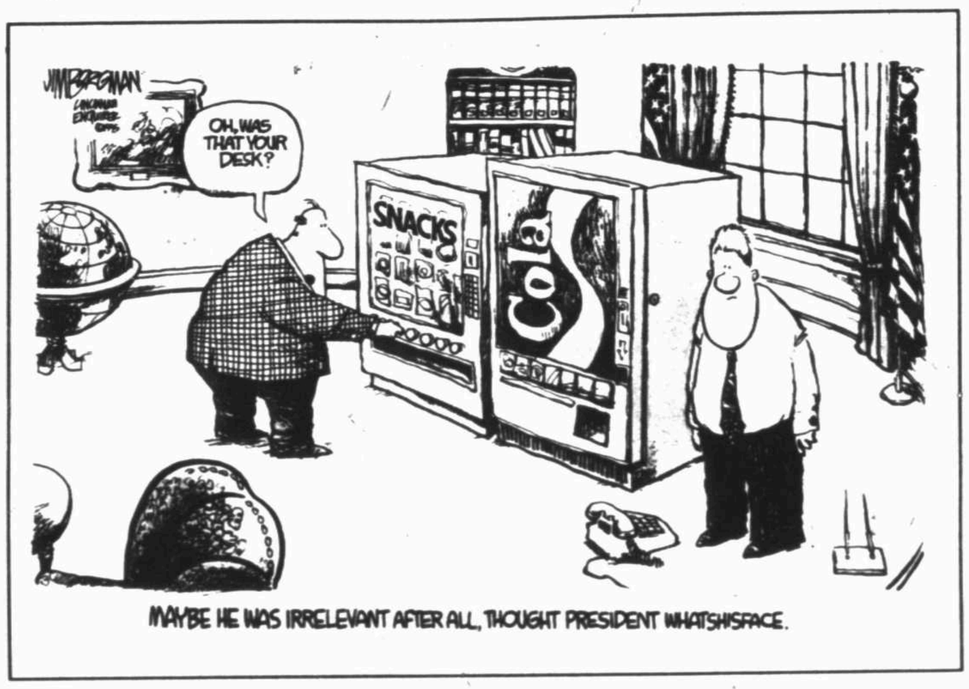

Win or lose, Foster will not heal overnight from charges by Dole and others that he says depict him as a "sleazy sort of person."

"I know what my credibility is," Foster said. "People can find reasons to justify what they want to do. If you really want to know about my credibility, why don't you go to the Nashville Academy of Medicine? Ask them why I am now serving my 10th consecutive year as a member of the ethics board there."

Dole unwittingly made the case for Foster last September, when he was campaigning for North. Besieged with questions by reporters about North's role in the Iran-contra affair, Dole retorted: "Well, I know there are a lot of allegations. But there are probably no perfect senators."

There are probably no perfect surgeon generals either.

Mobil employees make lifelong difference

Mobil and Crockett Elementary have been involved in the Partners in Education (P.I.E.) program for the last seven years. This year we are jointly involved in over 30 unique and highly successful projects involving over 125 employees, who have given more than 1,500 hours to support our children and teachers.

This is the fourth year that Mobil employees have taken part in our "Reader/Listener" program involving over 25 first graders each year. The volunteers come to our campus every week to read to and listen to their "little buddy." For children who have little home support in their academics, Mobil employees have made a significant impact.

The areas of involvement are extensive and we can assure you that the Midland employees of Mobil have touched many individuals and have made a lifelong difference in the lives of Crockett children and their families. And in doing so, Mobil employees have also lifted the spirits of the teachers on our campus.

We should like to take this opportunity to extend our thanks and appreciation to an outstanding group of individuals at Mobil. They are making a difference in Midland.

Government doesn't have right to impose labor tax

Regarding the 16th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, discussed by Elinore Chase, (Letters, April 16), oh yes indeed, Elinore, some of us have caught on — to the real meaning of the 16th Amendment, as repeatedly adjudged by the Supreme Court.

Citizens of the United States of America are the victims of a vast misconception, that the 16th Amendment authorized a direct, (1040) individual income tax on the compensation for their labor.

The U.S. Supreme Court disagrees, first of all, in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad, 240 U.S. 1; having decreed that the 16th Amendment did not change the Constitution because it failed to repeal or alter the apportionment clauses (Art 1, Sec 8, Clause 1).

"The confusion (by Brushaber)...arises from his conclusion that the 16th Amendment provided for a hitherto unknown power of taxation...to levy an income tax, which although direct, should not be subject to the regulation of apportionment...The far-reaching effect...if acceded to, would cause one provision of the Constitution to destroy another...bringing the provisions of the Amendment...into irreconcilable conflict with the general requirement that all direct taxes must be apportioned."

Also:

"The 16th Amendment conferred no new power of taxation but simply prohibited the income tax from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged..."

Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 US 103

"The 16th Amendment does not extend the power of taxation to new or excepted subjects...Neither can the tax be sustained on the person, measured by income. Such a tax would be, by nature, a capitation, rather than an excise."

Peck v. Lowe, 247 US 165

Each such American's right to maintain his existence by laboring in a common and lawful occupation is a constitutional right, and not a privilege upon which an indirect tax can be imposed.

In summary, the United States government (Art. 1, Sec. 8, Clause 17) did not have the power to impose a graduated income tax on the compensation earned by American citizens in the 50 states or upon their fundamental right to labor, before the 16th Amendment, and that it does not have the right to do so after the 16th Amendment!

Readers' views on: Dale Brown for City Councilman

Brown shows desire to serve people

We commend to you Dale Brown for the position of City Councilman At-Large in the May 6 election. The relationship which we share with Dale and his family is a very personal one. For more than 20 years, our relationship has grown through business interaction; through the activities surrounding church life; in shared experiences of friendship; and finally, in the joining of our families by the marriage of our children. Based on these areas, we feel qualified to attest to the deeply rooted Christian principles and family values which characterize this man.

We know Dale Brown to be a man of integrity and fairness, as well as a man of humility and unselfishness. He lays no claim to being a politician — but simply a man with a dedicated desire to serve the people of Midland. Please join us in voting for Dale Brown as City Councilman At-Large on May 6.

Brown has visions, goals for Midland

As a personal friend of Dale Brown for the past 17 years I can say a vote for Dale Brown is a vote for confidence for the City of Midland. Dale Brown has always displayed deep commitment to his family, his church and his community. I have been involved with Dale on numerous committees and find him always to be very discerning, unselfish and energetic. I believe Dale Brown has visions and goals for the City of Midland that would impact each citizen in a positive manner. Therefore, without hesitation I endorse Dale Brown for City Council Member at Large.

Brown shows necessary councilman characteristics

I would like to encourage all Midlanders to vote for Dale Brown for the City Council At-Large position on May 6th.

I have worked with Dale for 12 years and feel that he will make an outstanding city councilman. He exhibits those characteristics that are necessary to be a good councilman. He is fair and honest and always considers all decisions carefully. Having proven himself as a successful businessman, Dale will handle the affairs of the city in an ethical and prudent manner. He will be supportive of future growth for Midland while being responsive to the needs and desires of each citizen.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

■ Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.

■ They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.

■ Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

■ Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.

■ We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

Gramm, others deny duck-hunting incident despite officers' reports

HONGA RIVER, Md. (AP) — The story has been told for years among law enforcement officials on Maryland's Eastern Shore, where game wardens fight not only illegal hunting but also political intrusions from nearby Washington.

They tell it this way:

In a brown pickup truck, Sen. Phil Gramm and two companions eased down a dead-end gravel lane, just a hundred yards or so from Gramm's Chesapeake Bay vacation house. The land was under surveillance by game wardens who had spotted grain there and suspected it was illegal bait to lure ducks.

The Texas senator and his friends, one of them hunting companion Harold L. "Sonny" Whiteley, chanced upon Bob Alexander, a law enforcement official with the state Department of Natural Resources who noted they were wearing hunting garb and had shotguns. Whiteley introduced himself and his passengers, then turned his truck around and left.

Alexander describes the January 1988 encounter clearly. "When someone introduces you to a senator, you tend to remember it," he said. Six other law enforcement officials confirmed hearing about the incident at the time, when local wardens met to coordinate enforcement activities. Three spoke on the record; three others confirmed the encounter only on condition of anonymity, fearing job retribution.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas

Through spokesman Larry Neal, Gramm denied the incident ever happened. "There was no trooper, no truck, no shotguns, no hunting garb, no nothing. That is a pure, total fabrication," Neal said. He questioned the motives of those who recounted the incident. Whiteley, too, says there was no such encounter.

Two former federal officials say Gramm — now a Republican presidential candidate — knew at the time his property was being watched. Just a few weeks earlier the senator had been tipped that his land was under surveillance by Frank H. Dunkle, director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Gramm had summoned Dunkle to his Capitol Hill office for a chat about wildlife law enforcement on the Eastern Shore. Also at the meeting was tax lobbyist J.D. Williams, a Gramm contributor and hunting partner, who had been feuding with game wardens since his arrest two years earlier for illegally hunting over a baited field.

Gramm became a part of the Eastern Shore circle of lobbyists, businessmen and hunters in late 1986. He built a two-story, 2,800-square-foot house on 35 acres overlooking the spot where the Honga River flows into the bay, in the heart of the East Coast flyway for migrating waterfowl.

Hunting ducks over an area baited with grain is illegal, and a constant headache for wildlife officials trying to preserve dwindling duck populations. In the early 1980s there were a half-dozen federal agents working the Eastern Shore. Only one remains.

In Gramm's case, most of the feed was found on the property of his neighbor, Whiteley, and a pond there was littered with hundreds of shotgun shells. Some feed also was found on Gramm's land, and because the surveillance involved a senator, word was sent up the chain of command, ultimately reaching Dunkle.

Dunkle later confided to an acquaintance that he had alerted Gramm that wardens were watching his property, and advised him to be careful.

"He said, 'I want to be assistant secretary of interior, and Phil Gramm can help me, and that's the way it is,'" recalled the associate, Nathaniel Reed, who was an assistant Interior secretary in the Nixon administration.

Bill Ashe, a retired assistant regional director for the Fish and Wildlife Service, said he heard a similar account from higher-ups within the service.

Building collapse threatens rescuers in Oklahoma City

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Rescuers crept gingerly through the federal building Sunday as engineers tried to reinforce weakened columns that threatened to collapse around them. The possibility grew that the search for victims may have to be halted before all the bodies are found.

"What's very important now is to make sure the workers aren't imperiled as they attempt to remove the dead," Gov. Frank Keating said late Saturday.

"I think that building will be a tomb for the victims who will never be found," he said.

But even as officials wrestled with the possibility of ending the search, the rescuers still hoped to find survivors inside the building.

"One of them reminded me of Mexico City, the earthquake there," Keating said. "There was a survivor found after 14 days. Our 14 days are up Wednesday."

The death toll rose to 134. Sixty-two people were missing, including eight children.

That included six names the state medical examiner's office added to the list of missing over the weekend after being contacted by a Tulsa woman whose address was found in a fanny pack recovered from the scene.

The Tulsa woman said the pack belonged to a group that included her sister, her sister's boyfriend and her sister's four children, ages 1 through 5, said Ray Blakeney, a spokesman for the medical examiner's office. The woman said she realized the group had been in Oklahoma City to apply for federal assistance, he said.

Later Sunday, Blakeney said the six may have been located in another state, although he wouldn't say where. He didn't give their names or hometowns. He said the matter was under investigation but that the Tulsa woman had "seemed sincere."

People at Sunday's services tried to offer support.

Grief counselor Tom Madden was sent by the Bay Presbyterian church in Cleveland to help.

"What has happened here has not only touched the people of Oklahoma City, but it touched the people of the world," Madden told worshipers at the First Baptist Church, where plywood covers the stained-glass windows knocked out by the blast.

"The process of healing begins shortly after the tragedy, and it continues for the rest of our lives," he said.

Children are lost in bureaucracy of child welfare system

Editor's note: Tens of thousands of children in foster care live in a bureaucratic purgatory that keeps them languishing for years. The second installment of the five-part series "Nobody's Children" looks at kids who spend most of their young, neglected lives drifting through a chaotic system that can't decide what to do with them.

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — At 16, James Randall's life is unraveling.

He has skipped hundreds of days of school, and failed almost every class. He has legal problems, too.

Ironically, James was presumed a success in Cook County's foster care system. His case was on inactive status, a category one lawyer mocking calls "never-never-land." The courts that were supposed to monitor him regularly did so only twice in seven years.

Finally, after a lawsuit was settled over thousands of these in-limbo cases, an attorney in the public guardian's office checked on James.

What he found was a kid in deep trouble.

James' academic ranking at his South Side high school was dead last in a class of 514. He passed just two classes in three years. He could barely see; he lost a contact lens in a fire five months earlier. His foster mother hadn't bought him enough warm clothes, nor did she cook meals or have enough heat in their home.

And now James faced two criminal charges: marijuana possession and trespassing.

"It's obvious he's an out-of-control train heading to the state penitentiary," says Bob Siegel, the frustrated attorney from the guardian's office, who resigned soon after. "Is anybody doing anything about this?"

Sadly, it's all too easy to overlook James in the overwhelmed, understaffed child welfare system. He is just one face in the crowd: More than 46,000 kids are in substitute care in Illinois, a population that has nearly doubled in just four years.

And while his plight is grim, it won't put editorial writers in a lather, stir lawmakers to act or cause the ax to fall on a social worker.

Chicago has witnessed plenty of those cases in recent years — Joseph Wallace, the 3-year-old hanged after being returned to his mentally ill mother; Clifford Triplett, the bruised, burned 5-year-old left at home even after caseworkers saw the emaciated 18-pound boy; the 19 kids found huddled in feces-littered, roach-infested squalor, fighting a dog for a bone.

James Randall — his last name has been changed to protect his identity — has lived in one foster home nearly all his life. He has no broken bones. No bruises. No outward signs of how desperately he needs help.

James belongs to a larger group of forgotten kids, first abused or neglected by parents, then victimized by an overloaded bureaucracy that allows them to drift for years.

Nationwide, more than a half-million children are wards of the state. Some are lucky; they find stable, loving homes with relatives or foster parents. Others are not; they languish in shelters or institutions, are ignored or abused again in foster homes or end up bouncing from one place to another.

It is that second group that is growing out of control. There is even a term for their predicament: foster care drift.

Kids enter the system younger and don't get out, because families are more troubled, drugs more common and resources limited, said Marcia Lowry, director of the American Civil Liberties Union's Children's Rights Project in New York.

"We're going to have more and more children spending their entire childhood staying in government custody," she said. "We are producing more and more very damaged young people at the end of the line."

"It's necessary, but not sufficient to remove the child from abuse or neglect," said Michael Mielke, a consultant helping reduce foster care drift in Marion County, Ind. "The job is not over until we have a family for the child."

As the system sputters along searching for families, kids grow up in institutions, stunted and shut off from the everyday possibilities of childhood.

Consider Jeris, a 10-year-old who has lived and attended school in a temporary shelter in a hospital wing for 10 months.

His home is a bleak hospital room with a few pieces of banged-up furniture and a washed-out picture of flowers. Of 17 kids living in a locked unit, he has been there longest.

Chest pain centers save lives at lower cost than hospitals

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — Aidalina Soto woke up at 5 a.m. with a pain in her chest.

She tried to ignore it, told herself it was probably nothing, then waited more than three hours to go to the hospital. Doctors say that delay could have killed her if she had been having a heart attack.

Soto, 49, was lucky. Doctors diagnosed her problem as muscle strain within her chest wall — not a heart attack.

She was treated at Bridgeport Hospital's Chest Pain Center, the first hospital unit in the state dedicated to the diagnosis and treatment of all kinds of chest pain — from heartburn to heart attacks.

Since its opening in January 1994, the center has treated about 3,700 people. Some were sent home with a simple case of indigestion. Others were given clot-dissolving drugs that saved their lives.

"We say time is muscle. You can start doing damage to the heart muscle within 20 minutes," said Dr. Mitchell Driesman, the hospital's senior attending cardiologist. "We have to make sure the patient gets here in a short period of time and is treated quickly."

More than 500 chest pain centers are now operated by hospitals across the country. Most have opened in the last three or four years amid the drive to cut health care costs. Offering streamlined treatment, they are designed to make chest pain sufferers less hesitant about being checked out.

Biological parents win custody of child after 4-year battle

By Mike Robinson
Associated Press

SCHAUMBURG, Ill. — A boy at the center of a four-year custody battle was taken sobbing and whimpering from his adoptive parents Sunday by the mother who had given him up and the father he had never met.

Biological parents Otakar and Daniela Kirchner picked up the 4-year-old boy, identified in court records only as Baby Richard, from the adoptive parents' house in suburban Chicago.

The child cried, whimpered and reached out to his adoptive mother repeatedly as she turned him over to the Kirchners in front of the house where the boy had lived since he was 4 days old. The boy's adoptive father looked on with tears in his eyes.

Many in a crowd of about 200 neighbors cried as the boy was driven away in a van and driven to his new home, also in suburban Chicago, with a stop first at McDonald's.

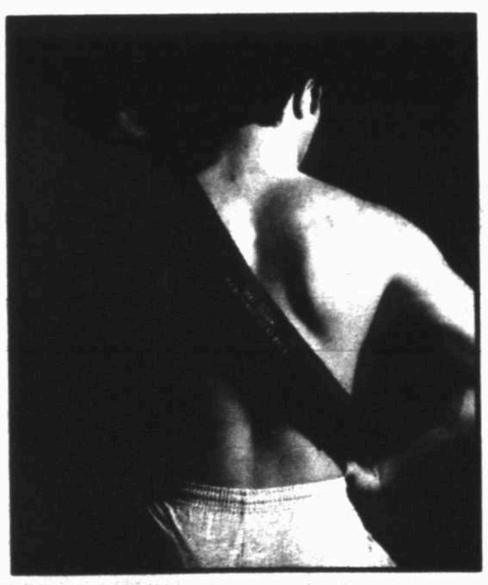

Some called out "monster" at the Kirchners, who met with the boy and his adoptive parents for about an hour before taking him away. About a dozen police officers stood by.

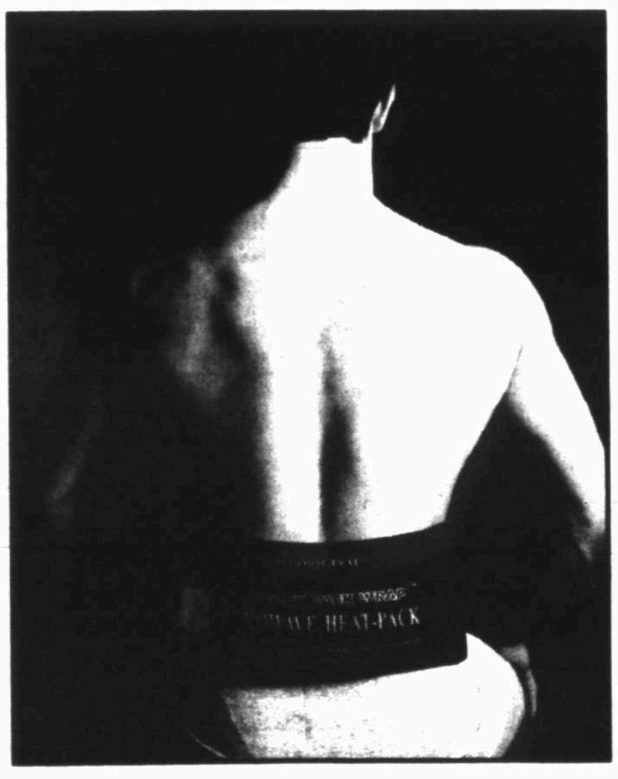

Kirchner said Sunday that he would allow the adoptive parents to see the boy. He did not elaborate.

The transfer capped a legal fight that has involved the governor, the General Assembly and judges all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The state Supreme Court granted Kirchner custody in January, ruling that the adoption was illegal because Kirchner had been told by the boy's mother that the child was born dead.

Man donates year's salary to OKC children's fund

By David Armstrong
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The Oklahoma City bombing tragedy got a Bay Area twist when a young Silicon Valley financial analyst donated his entire year's salary to fund college scholarships for children orphaned by the disaster — and asked local corporations to match his gift.

Chris Gross, 26, an employee of Applied Materials, Inc. of Santa Clara, Calif., said Wednesday he will give all of his $53,874.08 annual salary to the new, nonprofit Children of Oklahoma City Scholarship Fund, which he is starting himself with a matching grant from Applied Materials.

"All weekend long, I thought about the pictures I'd seen of the bombing," Gross says, "and they kept going through my head. I was driving back from Santa Cruz with some friends. ... I kept thinking: What could I do? I've got to do something.

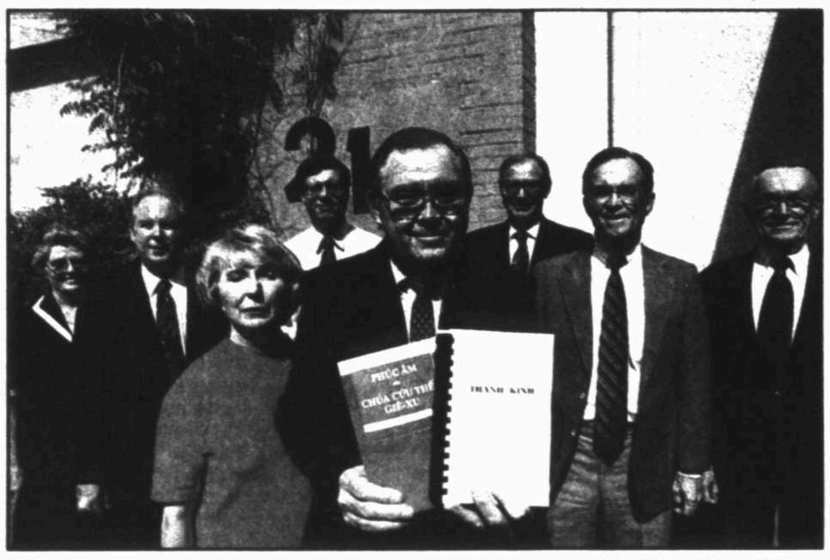

"What was important to me was not so much the people who perished in this as the people who survived. I figured I could raise money, and get companies to help," Gross says.

Gross went to his bosses at Applied Materials, where he has worked for seven months. And, he says, "without delay, they pledged a donation."

A spokesman for Applied Materials, which describes itself as the world's largest supplier of wafer fabrication systems for the semiconductor industry, praised Gross' "extraordinary

Dedication, determination and the desire to reach those in want of the Bible's scriptural nourishment inspired Midlanders Leon and Evaughn Taylor to undertake a project in the mid-1980s which they knew wouldn't be completed until near the 21st Century.

They weren't alone. Their enthusiasm spread to others, many of whom were Midlanders, and the Vietnamese Bible Inc. was born in 1986. When the project concludes in 1999, these volunteers will have been responsible for providing the organizational structure as well as raising the money and resources for an accepted translation of the Bible into Vietnamese. In July of 1994, the New Testament was completed. Now, 35 percent of the 1,037-page Old Testament has been translated.

"We're really very thrilled," Taylor said. "We feel that it's a significant milestone. The project started in Vietnam three times and failed. It's come to us, and it hasn't failed, so that's

Thank You Notes ...

The Midland County Sherriff's Association Local 1105 would like to thank the citizens of Midland for the support they gave us in our annual fund raiser, which ended with the Houston Oilers basketball game. We had a great time at the game and a lot of the kids got autographs from the football players.

As we have been able to do in the past, the money has gone to such programs as Dress a Live Doll, D.A.R.E. in the Greenwood schools, youth activities in sponsoring baseball and soccer teams, educational material for the Midland County Fire Marshall's office to give out to kids, and the further education of association members. This year we are happy to be able to designate the Invest in a Vest program as our major investment. Although our fund raiser did not raise all the money for the vest, it has given us a good start.

We are always striving to have a better working relationship between law enforcement and the community. By our ability to work together we are making a better community for our kids and all of us.

I am writing in regard to National Organ Donor Month as this has become a subject about which we have some first-hand knowledge. A year ago this month, our 35-year-old son was admitted to Medical City Hospital in Dallas with conjestive heart failure caused by an unknown virus which was destroying his heart. On June 2, 1994, he received a new heart from an unknown donor in East Texas. His family will never know how grateful we are for his unselfish act of giving a new life to our son. He has now returned to work and is living a normal, healthy and happy life.

We would urge everyone to consider signing the donor section on the back of their driver's license, or to sign a donor card, as there are many people across the U.S. awaiting a life-saving transplant. The gift of life is the most precious thing a person can give.

Finding errant items can be a lost cause

Patterson

All I really wanted that particular night was a pen. There were some insurance forms to be completed, as I recall. The job could've been handled with great ease. Had I, that is, been able to find a pen. I searched everywhere. I looked in every drawer in the house. Some drawers were searched three, four times, as if somehow the pen might have decided to magically jump into a particular drawer while I had turned my back.

Point is, when you're married and have kids, things disappear. A lot. It has to be one of the most maddening aspects of sharing your stuff with other family members. But it says right there on the marriage license: "I will share my stuff with my beloved and our children — regardless of how often they are prone to misplace things!"

Fathers and husbands, needless to say, never lose stuff. We always put things in their proper places. Of course the wife will never buy that, but it makes us feel better to blame someone else. Besides, most of the stuff that women and children lose belong to guys.

Typically, the married couple with 2.3 children will, during a given week, lose at least one of the following items ...

■ Hairbrushes, combs, and other personal hygiene items. Children will first lose their own hairbrush. Then they will lose yours. It will most likely be sucked into that great black hole known only as "underthebed."

■ Socks. If you're lucky, a crisp, new pair of children's socks is good for one wearing before one of the socks drifts off to live a life of his own. From the moment that sock is first gone, it is stereotyped, however unfairly, as a no-good loner; a non-comformist, destined for failure. Years later, the renegade sock will turn up in the corner of a dark drawer somewhere, crumpled up, cold, shaking and withdrawn from the real world, hoping desparately for another chance. Unfortunately for that troubled misfit of a stocking, the feet they once snuggled up to will be all grown up with children and little socks of their own.

■ Scissors. There exists in every household in America, a Scissor Thief. A family member who has decided to make life miserable for anyone who ever wants to cut something from a newspaper or a magazine. Scissor thieves are sheer outlaws and must be stopped!

■ Tape. Tape also has a way of disappearing from time to time. This, I think, is due mainly to personality conflicts that exist between different types of tape stuck in the same small drawer together (not to mention the fact that a lot of tapes just flat out refuse to accept their roll). There is duct, masking, Scotch, electrical, and the depraved two-sided tape — the most hated of all tapes. With this virtual tape melting pot, it's no wonder why many rolls refuse to stick together, choosing instead to find their own private hideaway. You can normally find one of these delinquent rolls wrapped around a lost pencil somewhere; the two of them hoping to escape their responsibilities.

DAVE BARRY

Avoid those middle stalls and move that toothbrush

If you were to ask me how I came to set my toilet on fire, I would answer you in two simple words: Reader's Digest.

Barry

I am referring specifically to the February 1995 issue of Reader's Digest, which was sent to me by alert reader Jeff Jerrell, who had spotted a startling article originally written for Health magazine by Mary Roach.

The article is about germs, which are extremely tiny organisms — many of them smaller than the artist formerly known as Prince — that can be found in huge quantities virtually everywhere. To get an idea of what I mean, conduct the following:

SCIENTIFIC GERM EXPERIMENT

Get a microscope and some spit. Put the spit on a glass slide and put it under the microscope lens. Now look through the eyepiece. You'll notice, if you look closely, that you can't see anything, because you have no idea how to operate a microscope. But while you're looking, billions of germs, left on the eyepiece by the previous microscope user, will swarm onto your eyeball — which to them is a regular Club Med — and start reproducing like crazy via wild bacterial sex. You'll probably need surgery.

Getting back to Reader's Digest: The February article concerns leading University of Arizona germ scientist Chuck Gerba, Ph.D., who is a serious student of bacteria found in bathrooms. Consider the following absolutely true facts:

1. He routinely goes into public restrooms, unarmed, and takes bacteria samples from the toilets.

2. His son's middle name is "Escherichia," after Escherichia coli, also known as E. coli, which is a common type of fecal bacteria.

Needless to say I had to call this man.

"You named your son after bacteria?" was my opening question.

"He finds that it's a good conversation starter," Gerba replied. "If we'd had a girl, we were going to name her 'Sally Salmonella.'"

Gerba told me that there are definite hazards associated with his line of study.

"When you spend a lot of time taking samples on your knees in the stalls of public restrooms," he said, "people tend to call the cops on you. I've had to do some fast talking. I tell the cops, 'It's OK! I'm a scientist!' And they say, 'Yeah, right, we arrested a couple of scientists in this stall just last night.'"

Gerba told me that, in the course of his studies, he's learned some Amazing Toilet Facts:

TOILET FACT NO. 1 — Based on scientific measurements of the holes in public-toilet seats, "Americans have the biggest fannies in the world."

TOILET FACT NO. 2 — In any group of public toilets, the first stall is likely to have the least bacteria, and the middle ones are likely to have the most, because more people use them. (In determining the rate of usage, Gerba went into public toilets and NUMBERED THE TOILET PAPER SQUARES.)

TOILET FACT NO. 3 — The cleanest public toilets are found in national-chain restaurants; the worst are found in gas stations.

"I'm surprised," Gerba said, "that no new life form has ever evolved from a gas-station toilet."

TOILET FACT NO. 4 — Every toilet user leaves a unique bacterial pattern; we know this thanks to a breakthrough technique Gerba developed called (I am not making any of this up) the Commode-A-Graph.

"If there's ever a crime committed on a toilet," Gerba said, "I can tell you who did it."

(Asked if this technique could be a factor in the O.J. Simpson trial, Gerba replied, "Not unless he washed his hands in the toilet.")

TOILET FACT NO. 5 — When you flush, a process called "aerosolization" takes place, in which the toilet shoots out an invisible cloud of tiny, germ-infested water droplets that get all over everything. In Reader's Digest, author Roach quotes Gerba as saying that if you keep your toothbrush within six feet of a commode, "you're basically brushing your teeth with toilet water."

So we see that a toilet is really nothing more than — to use scientific parlance — a Yuck Bomb. The question is, what can you do about it? Is there any way to get a toilet REALLY clean? This brings us to the truly fascinating part of Roach's article, wherein Gerba and his family, demonstrating the only way to kill all the bacteria, put laboratory alcohol on their commode bowl and — this is right on page 64 of Reader's Digest, if you don't believe me — set it on fire.

Let me stress right here that Gerba is a recognized toilet expert, and he had a fire extinguisher ready, and toilet-torching is VERY dangerous. You, the layperson, would be an irresponsible idiot to try it.

Fortunately, I am not a layperson; I am a trained humor columnist, and if there's one thing I enjoy, it's a clean toilet. So I tried Gerba's technique, and I have to say that, in a darkened room, a flaming toilet has a strange kind of beauty that can only be described as "a strange kind of beauty."

I'm tempted to speculate here on whether it might be possible to use this same technique to kill bacteria on other surfaces, such as the bodies of Tobacco Institute scientists, but I think I'm already in enough trouble as it is. So let me leave you with these important Toilet Health Reminders: (1) Avoid those middle stalls; (2) Move that toothbrush; and above all (3) Don't sit down until the bowl has completely cooled.

Being Miss Texas more work than fun

By Loretta Fulton
Associated Press

Even while fishing, Arian Archer says she's on the job.

HAWLEY — Even when Miss Texas goes fishing, she's working.

So, if you've been thinking that being Miss Texas is all fun and no work, well, think again.

When she left Hawley after speaking to high school students Tuesday, Miss Texas Arian Archer headed back home to Dallas and then to Toledo Bend for a fishing expedition that will be filmed. The taping is for a national program called, "Get Hooked on Fishing, Not Drugs."

Miss Texas says she loves fishing, even if she's working while doing it.

"I'm not good at it, but I'm learning," she said.

Fishing may be the only thing Miss Texas isn't good at. She's very good at getting a message across to teen-agers, a message brought to them via a gifted singing voice and a youthfulness they can relate to.

Just 21 herself, Archer speaks the language of the younger generation and before they know it, students are as involved in her talk as she is.

Archer spoke to Hawley junior high students Monday and to the high school students Tuesday. The two-day appearance in this Jones County town of 600 came because of her association with high school Principal Bob Keyes.

Keyes was the athletic director and head football coach at Borger High School while Archer was a student there.

Archer's three-point talk — never give up, say no, and believe in yourself — no doubt was one the students were familiar with. But Archer wowed 'em with her renditions of "Jesus Loves Me" that reflected her stages of development.

It began with her precocious 4-year-old version, then progressed to Karen Carpenter, Barbra Streisand, an unnamed opera singer, and finally to Archer herself.

The students responded as Archer had hoped — although they laughed at the imitations, they loved the real Arian Archer "being herself."

Archer also related to the students her own version of "never giving up." She placed last in the first three pageants she entered but didn't give up and eventually won the big prize.

"Nobody is going to hand you your dreams," she said.

On a somber note, Archer told the kids of her two-year bout with clinical depression before entering the Miss Texas pageant. She urged the students to talk to someone if they are experiencing any symptoms of depression.

At the end of the program, English teacher Greg Gee got a big red kiss planted on his cheek from Miss Texas as winner of a fund-raiser for the student council.

BIBLES: Project's cost placed at $1.5 million

extremely significant. We feel it was God's will for us."

The cost to date is around $600,000, of which at least a third has come from Midland. The projected cost to completion is $1.5 million.

"Each page of the Bible is going to cost anywhere from $750 to $1,000 to produce," Taylor said, explaining that the expense is due to the care required to be exact in every word and nuance in the translation. "The churches out there know what kind of quality the Bible is supposed to have, and if the churches reject it, it is a lost cause."

Translating a page is a lengthy, grueling and time-consuming process.

"There's 1,140 pages in the Bible, and it takes a minimum of 24 hours to translate, using the Greek and the Hebrew text, into the Vietnamese language," Taylor said. "Then that page goes through the process of editing, which takes about 15 hours, then second editing which takes about 10 hours, then two people reviewing, one for language and the other for theological, about 10 hours each, then a proof reader who spends around five hours, then the United Bible Societies goes through it and works on it some more."

The New Testament, although much shorter, required more concentrated work than translating the Old Testament.

"The doctrine of the church comes out of the New Testament," said Taylor. "Sometimes there's no word to express what the Greek is saying, so the translators would have to go to a Chinese word or footnote it and invent a word. The Old Testament deals with poetry and history and the law. It gives relevancy to the New Testament,but there's no doctrinal implications. It's easier to translate."

The Vietnamese Bible Inc. traces its inception to the early 1980s. At the time, Taylor was an instructor in the manufacturing machine shop at Midland College.

"The oil boom really played a part in it," Taylor said. "The need for unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled workers was very great. During the boom, a number of Vietnamese came to Midland, some of whom were sponsored by local churches."

Taylor began hearing of the need for a Vietnamese translation of the Bible. He talked with the Rev. Daniel Vestal, then pastor of Midland's First Baptist Church. They researched the information and discovered no adequate translation existed. Taylor, who was the teaching director of Community Bible Study (CBS), a men's multi-denominational, citywide group, spoke with CBS members. Many decided to become involved. Today, original Midland members remaining on the board include C. Neill Moore, William L. Holmes, Edwin H. Magruder Jr., Robert C. Bledsoe, Walter F. Pate, and Carol Reinert and Odessan Mrs. L.L. Parsons.

Magruder finds VBI "one of the most worthwhile projects" with which he's "ever become involved.

"If we can combat the Vietnamese communist government's attempts to abolish religion and particularly Christianity, I think we will have done the Vietnamese people a great service," Magruder said. "Like some other things that I've been involved with that really have caught my attention, the VBI has really captured my fancy."

For Moore, VBI was "the last thing in the world" he would have dreamed of happening here.

"Midland is the last place I would have thought of coming up with something like the Vietnamese Bible Inc., and it has thrilled me to be a part of it, to think that I might in some way be helping the 80 million Vietnamese learn more about Christianity and our Lord Jesus Christ," said Moore. "It has been a pleasure working with the Vietnamese pastors, and it's been a thrill to see God's hand at work in opening up the areas of the world in time to experience the translation into Vietnamese."

Moore recalled what the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 meant for this project. At the time, around a million North Vietnamese were living in Eastern Europe, where they were paying off their country's war debt.

"When we had completed the translation of John, we were allowed to get it into Eastern Europe where there were many Vietnamese that were returning to their homeland. Many of those people carried the translation back home with them at a time when we would not have been allowed to send it into Vietnam."

Midland attorney, Mark K. Leaverton, who chartered the nonprofit organization and continues to watch over its progress, believes VBI proves the power of the individual to make positive changes in the world, especially when God is working in the situation.

"It has provided me with a lot of encouragement to see that one couple like Evaughn and Leon can do something so huge that without God being involved in it, it would be doomed to failure," said Leaverton. "It gives me a lot of excitement to think God could use me to do something so big, even though in my own strength it would be something that I couldn't accomplish. It's an encouragement to anyone who thinks that one person can't make a difference."

When Taylor first approached him with the idea, Leaverton wasn't encouraging. "The first thing I said to him was, 'Leon, how in the world do you think that you can do something that these other large groups, like the United Bible Societies, have never done before, and in Midland, Texas?' I really was more discouraging to him about it. Yet, he knew God had called him to do it.

"What it's taught me to do is, when Leon comes in and says it's something that ought to be done, I say I'm for it. I'm behind you. When Leon is ready to do something, I want to be on his team doing it."

Leaverton again pointed out that this large an undertaking is not something most people would expect to be headquartered in Midland or headed by a retired educator. "You'd expect somebody in New York with a doctorate or masters in theology. Yet, it's regular folks like me or like you. That's what's so phenomenal about it. I think that's consistent with the way God is. He picks people on the basis of their hearts, and that's what sets Leon and Evaughn apart."

Around two years into the project, the board added Dr. Spencer Sutherland of California, a Christian and Missionary Alliance missionary. Currently the board is comprised of the original members previously named, as well as Luke S. Martin, a Mennonite missionary who was assigned to Vietnam until 1975, and Midlander Dolores McCall. In addition to the board of directors, four churches — Midland Bible Church, First Baptist Church, First Presbyterian Church and St. Paul United Methodist Church — have throughout the years offered their ministers as pastoral advisers.

Technical advisors include, among others, United Bible Societies and Wycliffe Bible Translators, Inc.

All members of the translation team are Vietnamese. They are ordained ministers who are Greek and Hebrew scholars. None lives here.

"It's a very long project with its own set of unique problems, such as communicating with translators scattered around the country, most of them pastoring churches. Keeping schedules is very difficult. Finding funds is very difficult because everybody is looking for money to do worthwhile projects. We've never run out of money because we operate with cash only. It has been a difficult task, but it's worked out real well. It's amazing what's been done with the limited resources we've had."

VBI's ability to come this far with the project has been due, in part, Taylor believes, to the generosity of Midlanders.

act of generosity. You don't get them every day. We're a company that wants to make a difference."

Gross says his goal is to endow the fund with $1 million or more. The companies he hopes will donate money comprise a Who's Who of Silicon Valley corporate players, and are, Gross says, firms "that all seem to be hiring people, and are known to be generous."

Among them: Adobe, Apple, Hewlett-Packard, IBM, Oracle, PG&E, Sega America, Silicon Graphics and Sun Microsystems.

"I'm writing letters to their CEOs," says Gross, who adds that the letters were to go out Thursday. "I am highly optimistic" they'll pitch in, he says.

There was no immediate response from companies on the list.

Gross, who grew up in Chicago and graduated from the University of Arizona, describes himself as the son of "working-class, middle-class people who always saved up to make it possible for me to go to college. My parents have been so instrumental in my life."

Gross says that direct deposit of his pay will go to the scholarship fund, overseen by the Community Foundation of Santa Clara County, which works with a similar foundation in Oklahoma City. Administrative details such as how many scholarships will be awarded, and to whom, "are still being worked out," Gross says.

"It will be kind of difficult over the next year," says the suddenly salary-less analyst. "But I am single and I share a house with several roommates. I've been saving up to buy a house; I'll put that plan on hold for a while."

Gross is one of 7,500 employees of Applied Materials, a Fortune 500 company that had revenues of $1.66 billion in fiscal year 1994.

PATTERSON: Barbies meet nasty fate

(From 1B)

So, those are the common household items that most frequently disappear. Conversely, there are certain other items that just emerge for no reason at all. These items include:

■ Legs from Barbie dolls. I can't help but be concerned that somewhere in a dusty, old toy box way up in a corner of the attic, lays Prom Night Barbie, forced to stay home from the dance because her leg had been viciously gnawed off by the family dog, or ripped from its socket by a spiteful neighbor kid.

■ Single pieces of dog food. These errant pieces of canine feasts turn up in the most unlikely places: Under your child's bed; in your child's bed; in your child's pillow case; floating in your child's aquarium; in your child's shoe; in his sock, or on her breakfast plate. How they get there will forever remain one of life's great mysteries.

■ Shoulder pads from your wife's blouses. These things are normally affixed to the inside of a female shirt. Like socks, they demand their individuality; most often they appear without warning in between that tiny space between the washer and dryer.

■ Old pairs of panty hose. Do women ever throw away panty hose? They do turn up in odd places and with great regularity. One warning: If you ever open your underwear drawer and find a pair of panty hose, either your wife has misfiled them, or you've been having way too good of a time after the children are in bed.

Texas militia group calls itself the 'last line of defense for constitutional rights'

By Terri Langford
Associated Press

LA PORTE — Gerald Hollier, like most members of the Texas Constitutional Militia, is rarely at a loss of words for joining the group.

"It's very simple," Hollier says, after a militia meeting in La Porte breaks up for the evening. "We're at a standoff somewhere. We are not about terrorism. All we're doing here is continuing to stay organized and a very last line of defense for our constitutional rights."

He talks at length about Waco, the Brady Law, GATT, NAFTA, the Crime Bill. Those are reasons, he says, citizens need to take a stand against the federal government, which has become much too large and overpowering.

"People are just fed up," said Hollier, a 55-year-old machinist from South Houston.

The difference between militias and other dissatisfied citizenry is that some militia members believe the time for talk and voting may be soon over.

They say they are merely a group of individuals showing the government that they will continue to exercise their rights: The freedom of speech, the freedom to vote and the freedom to bear arms.

"Some of that feeling is borne out of the idea of 'meet force with force,'" explains Will Blumentritt, commander of the Texas Constitutional Militia's Bravo Unit in Harris County. "People had seen the government using excessive force against people and you don't have to look very far to see it."

Or very far back, members say. In the past three years, several events have demonstrated to some that constitutional rights are being chipped away.

There was the federal raid on separatist Randy Weaver's Idaho compound in 1992 and the burning of the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas, in 1993.

"The supposed crime committed by David Koresh, that of possibly having weapons that didn't comply with ATF guidelines or not having the right permits filed to have those weapons, if he had them, does not warrant 75 people coming in and blasting their way into the facility," said Blumentritt. "I think it's pretty clear to all of the American public that they could have served a warrant against David Koresh by simply detaining him when he went into town for shopping or something like that."

Then there was the passage of the Brady gun registration bill in 1993 and of an assault weapons ban last year.

"People feel like this could happen to them," Blumentritt says. "And they feel like the government gets more and more forceful and the people need to show that they have a little force as well and I guess that's the spirit it's founded on."

Like many things Texan, the Texas Constitutional Militia traces its beginnings to the Alamo.

There, in April 1994, about 1,000 people gathered to a "militia muster" at the San Antonio mission. They discussed how to take a stand and become an effective voice for those who feel there is too much intrusion on constitutional freedoms.

Some militias had already formed by the time of the muster, but it really got rolling afterwards, says Johnny Johnson, a lieutenant colonel for the North Gulf Region — one of four state divisions. Membership numbers are not known. Some say 1,000. Some say 10,000 in Texas alone.

Members cling tightly to the 10th Amendment, which establishes state rights and the 2nd Amendment, which guarantees the right to bear arms.

"The 2nd Amendment wasn't put there so that people could go hunting or that people could go target shooting. It was put there because if you don't have it, there's nothing to keep a government in check," said Blumentritt.

Richard Evans, social psychology professor at the University of Houston says it's wrong to lump together militia groups.

"There's a lot of different patterns in these militia groups," says Evans. "It sometimes attracts very paranoid individuals who see threats from government or agencies."

AP Laserphoto

Texas Constitutional Militia Executive Officer Will Blumentritt reads from an official press release to members gathered for their regular meeting in La Porte Thursday.

But Evans says extremists usually don't get involved with mainstream organizations. Instead, they join more underground groups, he says.

"Other people who join, some are reacting to crime on the streets. There's an extreme nationalism involved with these groups, who feel an encroachment on democracy," Evans said. "There's a big danger in stereotyping these groups," Evans said. "If people do have a right to bear arms and join a group, simply getting involved with them without due process is a problem."

Two basic currents run the heart of the militia movement in Texas, political change and defense.

Members want political change, for the states to exert more control over what the federal government does and call it on the carpet when it appears dictatorial.

"Over the last 200 years, we now have a huge federal government that is now telling the states what they can and cannot do," said Militia Lt. Col. Johnson. "As evidenced by the 10th Amendment, we can still tell the federal government what they can and cannot do."

But none are in the militia to write letters to Congress, or want to create a political lobby that makes campaign contributions or establish a third party.

Instead, many concentrate on things that would be helpful in case the United States is taken over by another power.

"We have a militia because George Washington said we should have one. We want a return of our constitutional rights," said Coolidge Gerdes, the 69-year-old commander of a Victoria County unit.

"George Washington says government is not reason, it is not eloquence, it is force," Gerdes said.

James Kirby Martin, professor of history at the University of Houston, says there is an important distinction to be made between the militia of 1775 and those groups forming now that use the same name.

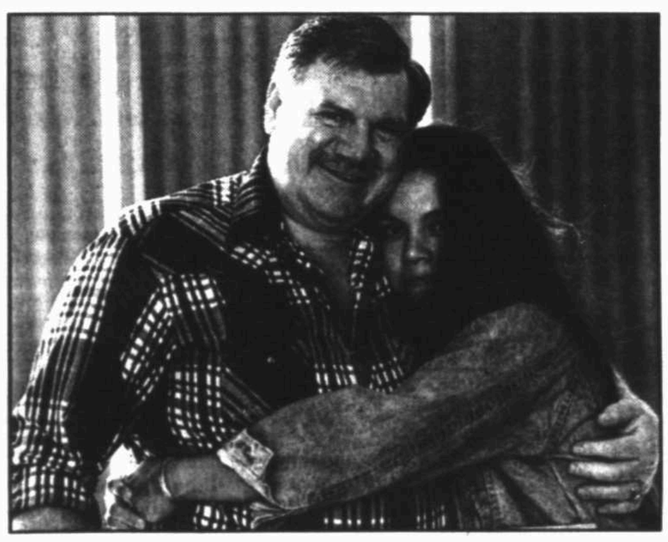

"It wasn't just a group that said 'let's go out and arm ourselves because we don't like something at the moment'," Martin said.

Militias were a group of armed citizenry which were trained and approved by the individual colonial governments.

"The militia is the very reason we have a country," said Blumentritt, an engineer who works for a NASA contractor. "And without the militia units of the 1990s the America that we know and love could cease to exist in the future."

The militia movement's belief that President George Washington was a great supporter of militias, is skewed, says Professor Martin.

Militias, made up mostly of farmers, didn't have the fortitude for the longer term fight, he said. They would consume rations, but often were unruly and hard to discipline. When the going got tough, militia members were often, nowhere to be found, he said.

Harry Manges hugs his daughter, Thu-Trang Thi Nguyen, 22, after meeting her for the first time Friday in Houston.

Vietnam veteran finally meets daughter, 22, born during war

HOUSTON (AP) — On the 20th anniversary of the Vietnam War's end, the conflict is a step closer to ending for Harry Manges.

The Air Force veteran lost contact with his Vietnamese girlfriend shortly after she gave birth to their daughter in November 1972. Last week, Manges met his 22-year-old daughter after two decades of wondering and searching.

Manges and Thu-Trang Thi Nguyen were united last week at Houston's Intercontinental Airport, largely with the help of YMCA International Services, a group that helps resettle Amerasian children.

"She's pretty. She looks like my mother," Manges said while holding his daughter's hand at the YMCA International offices in Houston.

Nguyen said her father was everything she expected, and she was overjoyed to finally meet him.

"I never thought I would find him," she said through a translator.

Manges' story starts in 1971, when he was sent to Vietnam after enlisting in the Air Force. He was stationed at a large air base in Bien Hoa as a vehicle mechanic.

Manges struck up a romance with Hon Thi Nguyen, a young widow working on the base. But six months into his tour, with this girlfriend pregnant, Manges was sent to Thailand to complete his duty.

He managed to visit Hon Thi Nguyen shortly before their daughter was born but the two lost contact. Letters Manges sent to his girlfriend were returned unopened, and he feared she had been killed.

He eventually retired from the Air Force and settled in New Mexico, where he now lives with his wife, Carolyn.

Through the years, Hon Thi Nguyen moved around Vietnam attempting to raise her family and make ends meet. She settled back in Bien Hoa, not far from where Thu-Trang Thi Nguyen was born.

Investigator helps unmask those claiming false war records

By Don Driver
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — It just didn't sound right to B.G. "Jug" Burkett when he read that a former Green Beret and a Navy Seal, both claiming to be Vietnam veterans, were launching a Vietnam War museum on Alamo Plaza five years ago.

He did a little checking and discovered the "Seal" had been in the Coast Guard, the reputed Green Beret was too young to have served at the time he claimed, and the closest either ever came to the Vietnam War was watching it on television.

The duo became the latest in a string of phony Vietnam veterans that Burkett, a platoon leader in Vietnam in 1968, has helped unmask.

"You don't get a 20-year jail sentence for claiming you're a Vietnam veteran," Burkett, a financial adviser in Dallas who is writing a book on society's image of the Vietnam veteran, once pointed out in an interview.

In fact, phony veterans have come out of the woodwork after every war America has fought, he said.

"It's a universal thing that is the aftermath of a war," he said recently in a telephone interview from his Dallas office. "A World War I veteran in an Eastern state who had been grand marshal of a parade died. They went to write a life story and found out the guy was completely bogus. That is very typical."

And when phonies search for an identity, they tend to veer toward elite units such as Special Forces, the Navy Seals, paratroopers and long-range reconnaissance patrol teams.

"It's hard, with what's in the public domain, to say, "I was a cook in Vietnam and I am proud of it,' " Burkett said.

So the postwar ranks of the elite units swell with bogus service claims sometimes by veterans seeking to impress the folks back home and other times by outright phonies.

"Nobody claims to have been in the 5th Transportation Group," he said. "When you add up all the Seals and Green Berets (who served in Vietnam) on a percentage basis, you're probably talking about maybe one out of 300.

"So, if I get a group of 1,000 Vietnam veterans, my expectation is for no more than three Green Berets," he said. "Look at pictures of Vietnam veteran events and you'll have hundreds of Green Berets. You have a statistical problem there."

But why would anyone want to falsely claim to be a Vietnam veteran especially since there once was a stigma placed on involvement in the unpopular war?

"The real Vietnam veteran didn't join any organization, he was ostracized and shunned by society and we felt like to hell with it we have things to do," Burkett said.

That left a vacuum that was filled, to some degree, by phonies, he said.

While Vietnam veterans, like veterans of any war, have their scars and legitimate programs have been launched to help deal with those war-related issues, Burkett claims the phonies have exaggerated their extent and wrongly cashed in on programs for which they didn't qualify.

They come for a wide range of reasons, like the feeling of belonging to a group and the attention that comes with it to blame situations such as chronic unemployment, drug addiction and alcoholism. Others exaggerate in order to benefit monetarily from some veterans programs.

"The federal government has created a golden pot at the end of the rainbow. You make certain claims today and you get lifetime money," Burkett said.

"A whole group of fraudulent veterans are forging signatures and papers. There are also political gains and civil service gains through military service and girlfriends to impress."

He said a Dallas policewoman once told him that nearly every transient arrested claimed to be a Vietnam veteran.

"I asked her why," Burkett said. "Homelessness, drug addiction, unemployment, divorce, criminal records, guess what, society has described all those as attributes of the Vietnam veteran. Suddenly, I'm not a bum, I'm a Vietnam veteran and the moment I say it, everybody believes me."

Burkett became intrigued by the issue more than 10 years ago when he volunteered to raise funds for a Vietnam memorial in Dallas.

"I started catching a lot of flak from supposed Vietnam veterans, typically they were the guys in beards and bandanas" and had their own pet agendas to push, he recalled. "I remember one of my peers said, 'Who in the hell are these people? Did you know anybody like this in Vietnam?'"

Animal activists demonstrate against UT research program

AUSTIN (AP) — Unusual university research, including a study on lizards' sexual habits, prompted a demonstration Sunday by more than 100 animal activists who contend tax money is wasted in such work.

Activists from at least seven Texas cities marched in front of the Animal Resource Center on the University of Texas-Austin campus. The demonstration was peaceful and there were no arrests, although police from Austin and UT departments blocked the center's front doors during the demonstration.

"It was a success. We basically focused on the fact that UT uses tax money for animal research," said Lauren Sullivan, regional coordinator for the California-based In Defense of Animals.

"There was ridiculous research, including a study on the sexual habits of whip-tail lizards," she said. "That's taxpayer money going to that."

UT-Austin spent $290,330 on animal research in fiscal year 1994, according to the 1994-95 UT budget.

Dr. Jerry Fineg, the center's director, said research at UT's centralized facility for animal tests is performed humanely.

"The research is important to science," said Fineg, a veterinarian who supervises animal research. "We feel that the use of animals is necessary.

Litigation graphics, artists are newest money makers on courtroom scene

By Chuck McCollough
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — Roland Benson is neither a lawyer nor a magician, but his legal legerdemain has convinced juries to award millions in damages.

The 35-year-old entrepreneur is a litigation graphics specialist, the newest player in American judiciary process.

Benson owns Benson Design Associates, a 10-year-old company specializing in legal visual aids or "demonstrative evidence" as it has come to be known.

Only about 100 firms in the nation, many just one or two years old, create litigation art to help jurors understand complicated cases, the Wall Street Journal has reported.

Demonstrative evidence helped convince juries to award Pennzoil $7.53 billion in its suit against Texaco and MCI $1.8 billion in its suit against AT&T, according to published reports. Both cases were later settled for lesser amounts.

Benson's firm handles both advertising and legal work but has specialized in litigation graphics the past few years.

"Right now my business is about 60 percent advertising and 40 percent legal work, but that will probably flip-flop by the end of the year."

Benson said his legal work ranges from blowing up black-and-white evidence posters for $75 each to producing video animations costing thousands of dollars.

He estimates his company revenues in 1995 will be $325,000 compared to $15,000 his first year.

Benson is the company's only full-time employee. "My wife Tami helps out on big cases and I hire part-time help as needed," he said.

Litigation graphics are essential in a court case, he says.

"The average juror can go numb listening to hours of testimony. I have seen jurors perk up when a TV is brought into the court room to show video evidence," Benson said.

"It's just like high school science where everyone wakes up when the teacher tells the class they are going to watch a film," Benson explained.

To a visually-attuned and video-oriented American public, litigation graphics can be the difference between understanding and confusion, experts say.

'Right now my business is about 60 percent advertising and 40 percent legal work, but that will probably flip-flop by the end of the year.'

— Roland Benson, litigation graphics specialist

Just look at O.J. Simpson trial.

The real jurors (and millions of arm-chair jurors) in that double-murder case are watching the highest-tech, real-life drama ever played out in a courtroom.

And the public's insatiable appetite for information about the case is being fed by optical wizardry and animated evidence provided by companies equally hungry to profit from the "Trial of the Century."

The money available in the trial (Simpson's defense is reported to be costing $10 million) and the caliber of donated state-of-the art equipment makes the proceedings seem more showbiz than legal.

While litigation graphics have been a growing trend since the mid- to late-1980s, the Simpson trial is showcasing the technology as never before.

When Benson started his company his tools were drawing pencils and a impromptu drafting table made from plywood and other recycled material.

Today Benson uses a $10,000 computer and incredible free-hand software to generate impressive legal and advertising graphics.

In 1984 Benson was transferred to San Antonio as a salesman for a medical supply company. Later he operated a fund-raising company and had a franchise vitamin supplement business.

"I have always liked to draw. I did some logos for a few companies and found I could make some money at it," he said.

Eager to have his own business and do something different, Benson formed his company in the family apartment the same day his first child was born.

DEAR ABBY

Friends are best presents for widow on birthday

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My 70th birthday is approaching, and I would like to give myself a party. I am a widow with no children, but I have many friends and a large family, and I would like to spend my birthday with them.

Van Buren

I am planning a dinner party in the private dining room of a restaurant. At my age, I have everything I want. Some of my guests will be younger people who need their money for other things, and I don't want anyone buying gifts for me.

Is it proper to give oneself a birthday party? How do I tell my guests not to bring gifts? Please answer soon. I want to start on my invitations. — PARTY GIVER

DEAR PARTY: Of course you can give yourself a birthday party — it's a wonderful idea. I'm sure it will be memorable, not only for you, but also for those with whom you choose to share it. On your invitation, add, "Your presence will be a cherished gift, and I respectfully request no other." Have a happy birthday.

DEAR ABBY: I have lived in this neighborhood for 12 years. Recently I received a wedding invitation from a neighbor's daughter, hand-delivered on a Thursday evening for a church wedding two days later — yes, on Saturday!

The wedding invitations, according to the mother of the bride, had been sent a month earlier. She told us she had meant to deliver our invitation at that time, but it slipped her mind.

Abby, I had seen the bride-to-be and her mother several times in the last month, and neither of them mentioned a word about the wedding.

Of course, my husband and I did not go to the wedding; neither did we send a gift. We felt that we were invited at the last minute because they wanted another gift. Do you think we were wrong? — NEIGHBORS

DEAR NEIGHBORS: Probably not. Your neighbors could have had several last-minute "regrets" (refusals) and needed to fill the vacancies.

I presume the wedding dinner was a catered affair, and unless the cancellations were received a week in advance, they had to pay for the dinners.

DEAR ABBY: "Fed Up in California" wrote to complain about guests who turned down dinner invitations to her home when invited. I'm surprised that you totally missed the obvious — there must be a reason why people are reluctant to go to her house for a meal. C'mon, Abby!

We have some good friends who are wonderful people. They are great guests and can keep you entertained for hours. But eat at their house? Never!

The place is a pigsty. They have three dogs and a cat who are covered with fleas. They scratch constantly, and lie around all over the furniture. These people kill flies with a rolled-up newspaper and leave the little corpses lying wherever they fall — on countertops, tables, furniture, etc.

The bathroom has no door, and before you sit down to eat you have to clean the peanut butter and jelly smears off the chair seats.

They keep inviting us over for dinner, and we keep dodging them because just the thought of eating there makes us queasy.

So, maybe "Fed Up" should step back and take a good look at herself and her home. She may be in for a rude awakening. — BEEN THERE, DONE THAT

DEAR BEEN THERE: You say that these friends are "wonderful people." I believe you, but if you truly value their friendship, don't keep them in the dark about why you consistently decline their dinner invitations.

Tell them the truth, with love and candor. It would be one of the best gifts they ever received.

Anthropologist searches for clues to Coronado's path across Texas

By Kevin O'Hanlon
Associated Press

To some guy sitting on a bar stool, Don Blakeslee's quest might seem about as appealing as stale peanuts and flat beer.

But to anthropologists, archaeologists and historians worldwide, Blakeslee could be close to solving a riddle that has confounded them for centuries: Where exactly did Spanish explorer Francisco Vasquez de Coronado travel through the American Southwest more than 450 years ago?

Blakeslee, an anthropology professor at Wichita State University, is raising money for an expedition this summer to unearth what he thinks is one of two Coronado campsites in the Texas Panhandle.

"Here is the beginning of recorded history for that area of the world," Blakeslee said. "The event that established the Spanish and American Southwest was the Coronado expedition. This is America."

Blakeslee won't say exactly where the site is because of possible looting by souvenir hunters. He will, however, say it's in a canyon between Amarillo and Lubbock on the eastern edge of the Panhandle's Cap Rock region.

In 1540, Coronado left Mexico with 300 soldiers and 1,500 Indian guides and followers to search for the legendary gold-rich Seven Cities of Cibola. They never found them, but their two-year journey took them into what now is New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas.

'His route is not known in Texas. It's been an absolute mystery, with lots and lots of ideas offered as to where he crossed the border from Mexico.'

— Don Blakeslee, anthropology professor Wichita State University

"His route is not known in Texas," he said. "It's been an absolute mystery, with lots and lots of ideas offered as to where he crossed the border from Mexico. We know where he left New Mexico and we know where he ended up in Kansas ... and there is sort of a slack in the rope that connects the two points."

Coronado and his men had no idea where they had gone or where they were going, but they discovered the Grand Canyon and opened the region to colonization.

"They were marching off the end of the known world," Blakeslee said.

More than 30 routes for Coronado have been espoused by the scientific community.

"But if we can pin down one place, all the rest will resolve itself,' Blakeslee said.

He has studied documents, including letters Coronado wrote the king of Spain, to determine where to look.

Blakeslee is convinced he has found one of the campsites because of the discovery of several artifacts in the area: a steel mesh glove like those worn by Conquistadors, two metal crossbow arrowheads (Coronado's was the only Spanish expedition to use the weapons) and what is thought to be the blade from an Aztec obsidian sword.

The glove was found in the 1960s by a farmer in a field. The discovery went unheralded for years, though, because he placed it on his bookshelf as a conversation piece.

It wasn't until about three years ago that a woman listening to Blakeslee speak to a historical group in Floydada, Texas, remembered the farmer's story, found him in a nursing home and told Blakeslee about it.

Blakeslee also has enlisted the help of Jimmy Owen, a Floydada man who often combs the Panhandle looking for artifacts.

Owen found the crossbow arrowheads and about a year ago discovered what Blakeslee thinks was a piece of an obsidian sword.

Problem is, Owen didn't keep it.

"After walking around with it for two or three hours, he took it out of his pocket and threw it away," Blakeslee said. "I told him 'You will go back out. You will search for it.'"

Next year at this time, Blakeslee hopes to be lecturing about finding the Coronado campsite.

Ozaki wins bundle

TOGO, Japan — Masashi "Jumbo" Ozaki broke a Japanese PGA record for 72 holes on a par-70 course, firing a closing 67 Sunday to win the $1.4 million Chunichi Crowns tournament by five strokes.

His 20-under 260 came on rounds of 66, 64, 63 and 67, giving Ozaki his 70th JPGA career victory and a check for $254,000. It was his first win this season.

Second on the 6,473-yard Wago course at the Nagoya Golf Club was Nobuo Serizawa, who closed with a 68. He was three shots ahead of Katsuyoshi Tomori, who carded a 69.

American Larry Mize, the 1987 Masters champion, shot a 66 to finish fourth at 269.

Relaxed duo wins

ST. CLOUD, France — Relaxed and joking, Severiano Ballesteros and Jose-Maria Olazabal outclassed the field Sunday to win the $510,000 Paris Pairs golf tournament by three shots.

After a rain-plagued first three days, the sun finally broke through heavy clouds for the final fourball round as the Spaniards shot an 8-under-par 62 over the 6,539-yard course in this Paris suburb. They finished 24-under at 256.

The Spaniards had eight birdies Sunday in a bogey-free round.

Australians Mike Clayton and Peter O'Malley finished with a 10-under-par 60 to claim second.

Promoter killed

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — A boxing promoter being investigated by the FBI for allegedly fixing fights has been shot to death, and a former opponent of George Foreman has been charged with the slaying.

The promoter, Rick Parker, 39, was found dead in his hotel room by emergency workers responding to a 911 call late Friday.

The former boxer, Tim "Doc" Anderson, who was outside the hotel room, handed a .38-caliber handgun to authorities and admitted to the shooting, according to police reports.

He was being held Sunday at Orange County Jail without bond on a charge of first-degree murder.

Friends recalled Anderson saying he thought he was dying and Parker had poisoned him.

"He told me something big was going to happen and to keep my ears up and watch the news," said Denis Jones, a former chauffeur for Parker, who got a telephone call from Anderson hours before the shooting. "I didn't question it."

Friends said friction developed between Anderson and Parker in December 1992, when Parker arranged a fight between Anderson and Mark Gastineau, a former New York Jets defensive end who became a fighter.

Anderson won 27 of his 44 professional fights.

Boston rebounds from worst loss

■ The Celtics move on to the Garden after avenging a 47-point loss to the Orlando Magic and Shaquille O'Neal.

The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Anybody who didn't give Boston a chance against Orlando was dead wrong.

The Celtics rebounded from the worst defeat in the franchise's storied 49-year history with a stunning 99-92 victory Sunday that not only evened the first-round playoff series 1-1 but wrested the home-court advantage from the heavily favored Magic.

Games 3 and 4 of the best-of-five matchup will be played at Boston Garden on Wednesday and Friday meaning at least two more games are left at the storied arena, which is being closed after the season. Orlando had the best record in the Eastern Conference during the regular season, but lost its last seven road games.

Dominique Wilkins, Dee Brown and Sherman Douglas paced the turnaround less than 48 hours after the Magic destroyed the Celtics 124-77 on Friday night. The 47-point loss was worst ever for Boston, the only team in the playoffs with a sub .500 record.

The loss was only the third at home this season for the Magic, who are 29-0 at Orlando Arena against Eastern Conference opponents before Sunday. But that didn't mean anything to the Celtics, who have a proud tradition that includes a record 16 NBA championships.

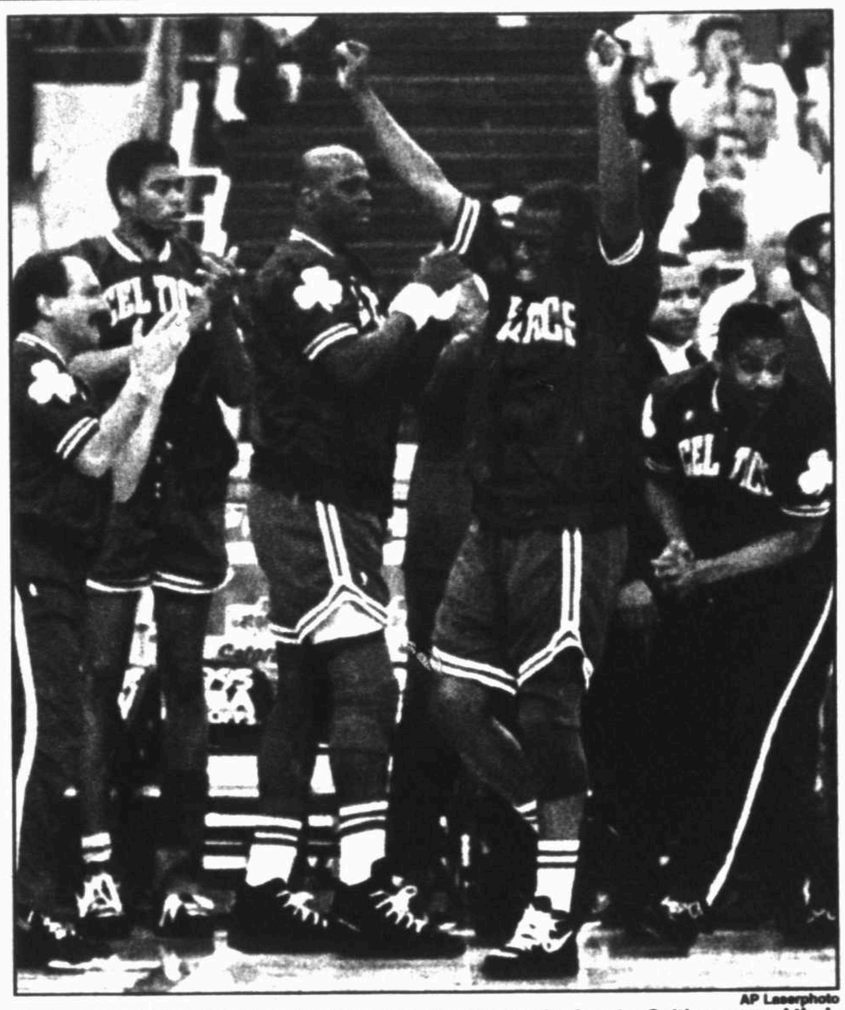

Wilkins scored 24 points on 10-for-17 shooting, Brown added 21 and Douglas finished with 20 points and 15 assists. The Celtics held the Magic to one field goal in the last five minutes, Dennis Scott's 3-pointer with five seconds to go.

Anfernee Hardaway led Orlando with 26 points. Shaquille O'Neal had 22 but the Magic never got the league scoring champion into the flow of the offense. Boston's Hack-a-Shaq strategy backfired in Game 1 when the All-Star center made 11 of 14 free throws, but was more effective Sunday although O'Neal did make 8 of 14.

Boston shot 52 percent after making only 35 percent of shots in the first game. While Orlando struggled down the stretch, Brown and Douglas both made 3-pointers and Douglas added an off-balance 17-footer that resembled more of a desperation heave than a fluid jumper to keep the Celtics ahead.

Boston clearly did the better job on day between games of forgetting about what happened in the opener.

WINSTON SELECT 500

Martin makes mad wire dash

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

TALLADEGA, Ala. — Mark Martin won the biggest race of his career, passing Dale Earnhardt with two laps to go Sunday and holding off Jeff Gordon to win the Winston Select 500 at Talldega Superspeedway.

Earnhardt, who took the lead when Rusty Wallace had to pit for gas with just four laps left in the 188-lap, 500-mile race, tried gallantly to keep Martin behind him as the Ford Thunderbird challenged his Chevrolet Monte Carlo coming off the fourth turn.

Martin, with Gordon's Monte Carlo right on his rear bumper, tried to get past Earnhardt on the low side of the banking, then moved back up as the two entered the tri-oval portion of the big track on lap 187.

Earnhardt darted down and then up, blocking for all he was worth. But Martin, with plenty of momentum and drafting help from Gordon, finally pulled alongside the leader on the main straight and zoomed past, bringing Gordon with him.

"I was real lucky," Martin said. "Jeff Gordon gave me a shove there at the end. He couldn't go anywhere but line up behind me.

"We just had a big old head of steam. I've seen (Earnhardt) do it a hundred times."

Morgan Shepherd found himself right on Earnhardt's tail as they raced into the second turn on the last lap. The two appeared to bump and Earnhardt, the defending race winner, went spinning down the back straight before slapping the outside wall.

The seven-time Winston Cup champion was able to drive his battered car slowly back to the finish line. Asked what happened, the fuming Earnhardt, who threw his helmet and glared at Shepherd's No. 21 when he climbed from his car, said, "I wrecked."

He wound up 21st, the last car on the lead lap, and fell into a first-place tie in the Winston Cup standings with Gordon.

AP Laserphoto
Derrick Cope spins after smacking the wall in the tri-oval of the Talladega Superspeedway Sunday in the Winston Select 500.

Despite the tie Gordon will get a $100,000 bonus that goes to the series leader after the first nine races on the basis of more victories.

Gordon, who got help catching up to the two leaders from Sterling Marlin after a late pit stop, said, "I have to take my hat off to Sterling Marlin. He didn't have to do that."

The 23-year-old Gordon took a run at Martin in the last two turns of the last lap, but said, "I was ready to go by Mark, but he just shut me off. There was nowhere to go."

Martin beat Gordon to the finish by 0.18-seconds, about two car lengths. Martin collected $98,565 for the win.

The victory was the 15th for Martin, but his first in one of NASCAR's Big Four — the Daytona 500, the Winston Select 500, the Coca-Cola 600 and the Southern 500.

"I don't know if I've ever had a car this fast at Talladega," Martin said.

Baseball feels only slim drop in attendance

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Despite some exceptionally small crowds, baseball attendance during the first week of the season was down only 3 percent from last April — partly due to heavy discounting by some teams.

"Given the situation of not having a lot of time to promote, it's much too early to make any judgment," acting commissioner Bud Selig said Sunday. "When there's warmer weather and races heat up, attendance will improve."

■ Baseball Roundups/6C

Not counting Sunday night's game at Seattle, there were 64 games in the first week of the season. Teams sold 1,817,694 tickets, an average of 28,501.

Last April, teams sold 9,290,363 tickets for 317 games, an average of 29,307. The season average was 31,611.

"I don't think we'll be able to tell to June or July what the strike did to us as far as attendance," said Philadelphia Phillies owner Bill Giles, whose team averaged 37,309 for its first two home games.

Pittsburgh averaged 20,944 for two home games and Kansas City averaged 22,515 for four games. The Royals' figure doesn't include 5,000 free tickets that were distributed for each game.

Los Angeles, despite reducing ticket prices to just $3.50 — the Dodgers' top price when they moved to California in 1958 — averaged 29,773 for three home games. The New York Mets sold all tickets for $1 for a pair of weekend games against St. Louis and averaged 48,039.

"It's pretty obvious the game has paid a heck of a price," Colorado Rockies chairman Jerry McMorris said.

His team, which averaged 58,598 for home games last year, averaged 41,671 for its first two games in Coors Field. He has the best advance sale in baseball.

Serena's Song becomes Kentucky Derby entrant

AP Racing Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The filly Serena's Song is in the Kentucky Derby, and D. Wayne Lukas is not the only trainer pleased about that.

"It makes it true and fair," Nick Zito, Suave Prospect's trainer, said Sunday about Lukas' decision to run the speedy Serena's Song in the Derby on Saturday instead of in the Kentucky Oaks the day before at Churchill Downs.

"A woman makes everything stable," added Zito, who will have Julie Krone on his own horse in a bid for a third Derby win in five years. He won with Strike the Gold in 1991 and Go for Gin last year.

Serena's Song likes to run on the lead. Sunday morning, she worked three-quarters of a mile in a quick 1:12, with a sizzling final quarter of 23 2-5 seconds.

"I think she gives us an honest pace," said Roger Attfield, trainer of Talkin Man, the wire-to-wire winner of the Wood Memorial on April 15 at Aqueduct.

"He doesn't have to be on the lead," Attfield said of his Canadian-bred colt. "In fact, he doesn't like to be on the lead."

It appears now that Talkin Man won't have to set the pace.

The colt demonstrated his speed on Sunday by working three-quarters of a mile in 1:12 4-5.

The decision to start Serena's Song in the Derby, Lukas said, "gives me a really strong hand in a race that is the ultimate for a trainer in the world."

Lukas also will start the colts Timber Country and Thunder Gulch in the Derby. Serena's Song and Timber Country will run as an entry because Robert and Beverly Lewis, the filly's owners, also co-own Timber Country. Thunder Gulch is expected to run as a separate betting interest.

"She does nothing to compromise my other two horses," Lukas said. "She enhances both of their chances."

Spurs 122, Nuggets 96

SAN ANTONIO — Dennis Rodman, in one of the best playoff games of his career, had 19 points and 16 rebounds as the San Antonio Spurs trounced the Denver Nuggets for a 2-0 lead in their Western Conference series.

The best-of-5 series continues Tuesday in Denver, where the Nuggets must win to avoid playoff elimination. Last year, Denver was down 0-2 to Seattle and rallied to win the series.

Rodman, who sported blonde hair inscribed with the red symbol of an AIDS awareness ribbon, was anything but benevolent on the court.

The aggressive forward led all players at halftime with 15 points and late in the first period had a run-in with the Nuggets' Dikembe Mutombo, appearing to elbow Mutombo in the stomach as he fell to the floor.

Rodman was called for a loose ball foul and a technical, and Denver coach Bernie Bickerstaff also got a technical during the exchange.

San Antonio outscored Denver 34-16 in the second quarter to take a 60-39 advantage at halftime. The Spurs hit seven of their first eight shots in the third period and led 91-67 on 57 percent shooting.

Chuck Person ignited the Spurs' scoring barrage early in the second period with a field goal followed by a 3-pointer, and Rodman finished it before intermission with three consecutive baskets.

With less than six minutes left in the game, the Spurs' Avery Johnson was shoved from behind by the Nuggets' Greg Grant as Johnson went in for a layup. Johnson retaliated by throwing the basketball at Grant and got ejected.

The Spurs' Jack Haley was ejected with 8.1 seconds left after a confrontation with Grant.

Like Friday's Game 1, when the Spurs blew out the Nuggets 104-88, the Spurs were helped by an even scoring attack. Sean Elliott had 18 points Sunday night, Johnson 14 and Doc Rivers 11.

Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf led Nuggets with 21 points. Bryant Stith and Dale Ellis added 16 points apiece. Mutombo had nine rebounds and only five points.

The Spurs set a franchise playoff record Sunday with eight 3-pointers. That surpassed the six San Antonio had against Phoenix in 1993.

Sunday's margin of victory was one of the biggest in Spurs playoff history, the biggest being 40 in a 145-105 against Denver in 1983.

Suns 103, Trail Blazers 94

PHOENIX — Charles Barkley and A.C. Green punished Portland on the backboards, and Kevin Johnson led the way down the stretch as the Phoenix Suns beat the Trail Blazers, pushing them to within one game of elimination from the playoffs.

The Suns lead the first-round series, which moves to Portland for Game 3 on Tuesday night, 2-0.

Barkley had 25 points and 13 rebounds, and Green had 20 and 15. Each had six on the offensive boards as the Suns, outrebounded in each meeting with the Blazers during the season, had a 47-35 edge in this game.

Johnson, who scored 28 points, had seven rebounds of his own to help Phoenix, which swept the regular series, win its seventh straight against the Blazers.

Rod Strickland had 26 points and 12 assists for Portland, and Harvey Grant scored 21.

The Blazers came from nine points down in the second period to lead 57-53 at halftime and went up 63-53 in the first 1:10 of the third.

But Johnson, who had 11 points in the quarter, scored seven during a 19-6 surge.

Wayman Tisdale got the lead back for Phoenix, 70-69, with a jumper in the lane with 4:06 to play. In the final minutes, Barkley had three baskets and Johnson hit four free throws to send the Suns to an 80-74 lead entering the fourth quarter.

After the teams matched baskets over the first part of the period, Green hit a basket and four free throws for a 95-85 lead with 4:18 left.

In a 44-second span, Johnson made the Suns' only basket of the final five minutes, then four free throws for a 103-89 lead with 1:09 to go.

Strickland gave the Blazers a 5-0 lead with a 3-pointer in the first minute of play, and no more than five points separated the teams until Dan Majerle got the first basket of the second quarter, a 3-pointer which lifted the Suns to a 33-27 lead.

Johnson scored seven points in the next two minutes, giving the Suns a 42-33 lead with a left-handed layup with 7:45 left.

But Terry Porter hit a 20-foot jumper 22 seconds later, starting a 24-11 run by the end of the quarter. Jerome Kersey, scoreless until then, made three jumpers in the final 1:33 to give Portland its four-point lead at the half.

Hornets 106, Bulls 89

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Former Odessa College star Larry Johnson scored 25 points and Alonzo Mourning had 23 and 20 rebounds to lead Charlotte past Chicago to even their first-round playoff series.

Both players overcame slow starts to key a big second half by Charlotte as the best-of-5 series moves to Chicago for Game 3 on Tuesday night. Mourning had 11 rebounds in the fourth quarter, and the Hornets' big front line gave Charlotte a 45-34 advantage on the boards.

A Chicago team that seemed to be hitting everything in the first half lost its shooting touch in the second. In the second half, the Bulls missed 30 of 42 field goal attempts, and even 32 points from Michael Jordan couldn't help them.

With a 79-74 lead entering the fourth quarter, Charlotte scored 12 straight points to go up 91-76 with 7:18 to play. Dell Curry capped the run with a 3-pointer and an 18-footer.

Meanwhile, the Bulls missed six straight shots during a stretch in which Jordan shot an air ball from behind the 3-point line with nobody near him.

He came back with three straight 3-pointers to cut the lead to seven with 3:31 remaining, but Chicago couldn't get any closer. As the clock wound down, Mourning and Johnson were hugging and slapping hands.

Johnson had only nine points at halftime and Mourning eight.

Scottie Pippen, who scored only eight points in the Bulls' 108-100 overtime win on Friday, finished with 18. B.J. Armstrong added 13 for Chicago.

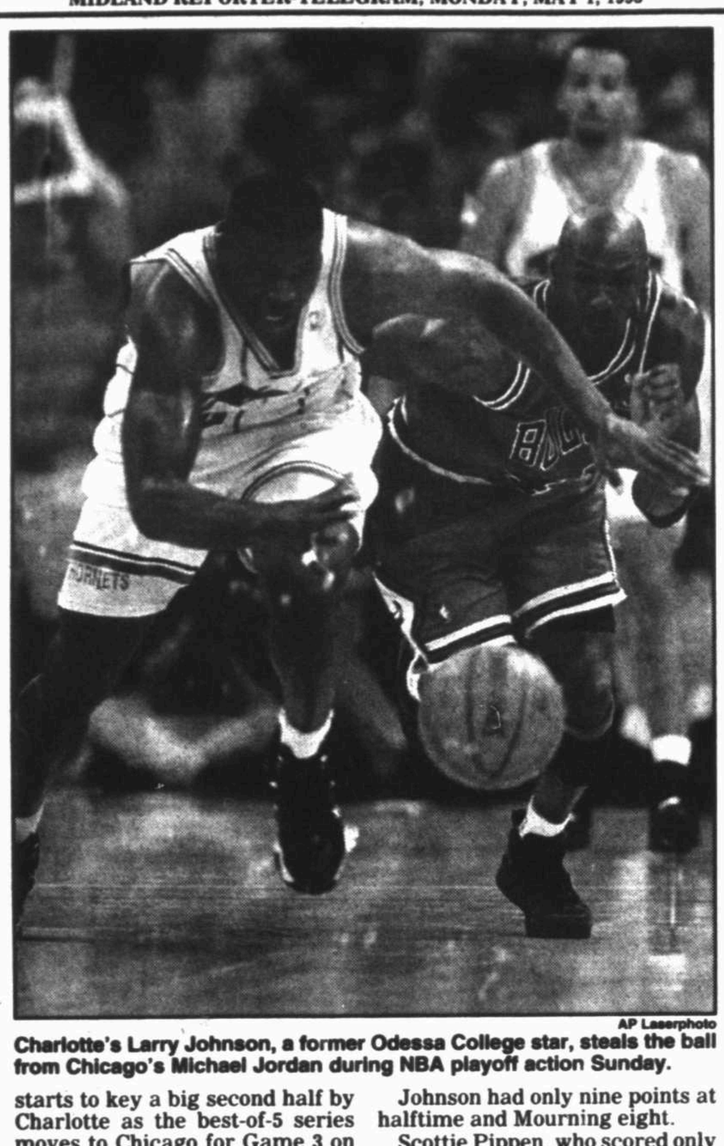

Johnson and Mourning took control of the game in the third period, leading a 14-3 spurt that gave the Hornets a 73-67 lead with 2:37 left in the quarter. Charlotte went to its big lineup, adding Robert Parish on the front line, and the Bulls didn't make a field goal for 5 1/2 minutes.

Chicago shot 61 percent in the first half but missed 15 of 21 field goal attempts in the third quarter.

Charlotte started the second quarter with a 12-2 run capped by Curry's 3-pointer for a 37-30 lead with 9:01 left before halftime. Jordan and Pippen quickly brought the Bulls back.

Jordan scored 11 points before the half was over, and Pippen hit back-to-back 3-pointers to put the Bulls back on top. Steve Kerr's 3 gave Chicago, which made 11 of 16 field goal attempts in the second quarter, a 54-52 halftime lead.

Jordan made eight of his 12 shots in the half but was 5-of-13 after that.

Hoch falters late only to find Payne

The Associated Press

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — Payne Stewart made a three-foot par putt on the first playoff hole Sunday to win the Houston Open over Scott Hoch, who blew a six-shot lead with seven holes to go.

Stewart birdied the 18th hole to give him a 4-under-par 68. He took the tournament lead at 12-under 276 while in the clubhouse when Hoch double-bogeyed 17. Hoch then made a 35-foot birdie putt on 18 to salvage a 3-over 75 and force the playoff at the Tournament Players Course at The Woodlands.

■ Golf Roundup

The victory was Stewart's ninth but the first since the 1991 U.S. Open.

Hoch had a six-shot lead at the turn and collapsed on the back nine with three bogeys and the double-bogey that came started with a tee shot in the water.

Tour rookie Charlie Rymer, who shot 71 Sunday, finished third at 11-under 277, his best-ever finish.

In the playoff, at the par-4 18th, Stewart's drive was in great shape on the fairway but Hoch pulled his tee shot to the left among some trees and he had no clear shot to the green.

Hoch's second shot wound up in the back of a bunker at the back of the green while Stewart was safely on the putting surface.

Hoch had a terrible position on his sand shot and even fell while trying to establish a stance. He was forced to make his swing with one foot in the trap and his other leg bent at an awkward angle on the grass. His shot, however, nearly struck the flagstick but skipped past, leaving him a 20-foot putt from the fringe. His putt for par missed by less than a foot.

Stewart's birdie attempt missed by about four feet but he calmly rolled it in for par and the championship.

Stewart, who began the day at eight under, seven strokes off the lead, had seven birdies and three bogeys. A missed putt for par at 14 hurt his move toward the front but he rebounded with birdies at 16 and 18 to finish his 68.

Hoch had command of the tournament with a second-round 64 and was ahead by five shots after Saturday's third round.

He built it to as much as seven strokes Sunday and led by six at the turn before sputtering.

Rymer, however, couldn't mount a charge until the back nine and ran out of holes. Still, his third-place finish was by far the best of his career and paid him $95,200. Before coming to Houston, he had made the cut in just two of the nine tour events this year.

Paul Stankowski and Tray Tyner finished tied for fourth at 278, two strokes back.

Vegas Seniors

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Jim Colbert became the first two-time winner this year on the PGA Senior Tour, holding off defending champion Raymond Floyd and Rocky Thompson with a 3-under-par 69 Sunday to capture the Las Vegas Senior Classic by two shots.

Colbert made a pair of back-nine birdies, then survived a bogey on the par-3 17th hole to finish three rounds at 11-under and win for the first time in his adopted hometown.

Floyd, trying to win back-to-back senior tournaments, was only a stroke back after 15 holes, but hit his second shot into the water on the par-5 16th hole to fall from contention.

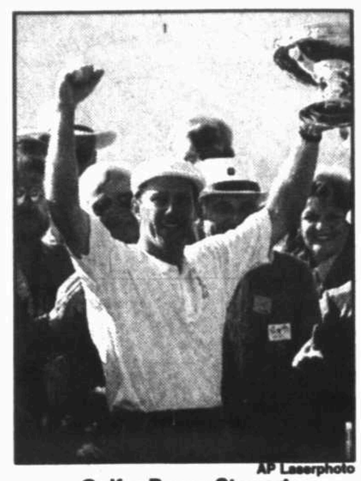

Thompson also had his chance, but three-putted the 17th hole to give Colbert a two-shot margin going into the final hole.

Colbert, who led after the first round but was one shot behind going into Sunday's final round, regained the lead with a birdie on the fifth hole on a warm, breezy day at the Tournament Players Course at Summerlin.

Floyd birdied the 12th and 13th holes to briefly pull into a tie with his playing partner, but Colbert hit his tee shot three feet from the hole on the par-3 14th and birdied to take a lead he never relinquished.

Colbert made a routine two-putt par on the final hole for the victory over Floyd (71) and Thompson (72). Jim Dent shot a 70 to finish tied for second with Floyd and Thompson at 9-under.

The win was worth $150,000 for Colbert, who has lived in Las Vegas the last 14 years and owns a golf course complex in the city.

Golfer Payne Stewart ...an overtime win in Texas

It pushed his earnings so far this year to $488,298, second only to Floyd, whose $74,267 paycheck increased his tour-leading mark to $527,167.

Robert Landers, the rancher-turned-pro golfer who has struggled since qualifying for the tour this year, finished in last place after shooting consecutive 79s to follow a first-round 73.

LPGA Sprint

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Val Skinner salvaged the 18th hole with a great iron shot after a botched drive to beat Kris Tschetter by two strokes Sunday and win the $1.2 million Sprint Championship.

Skinner shot a 5-under-par 67 to finish at 15-under 273 for her sixth victory in 13 years on tour. The $180,000 first prize was her biggest payday.

She arrived at the 18th tee with a three-stroke lead over Tschetter, the third-round leader. But instead of playing safely, Skinner drove into water along the left side of the fairway.

After her drop and penalty stroke, Skinner's third shot to the 452-yard par-5 shot still left her in the right rough, 136 yards from the pin.

Tschetter, meanwhile, was eyeing a 30-foot putt for eagle and imagining a three-stroke swing that would force a playoff.

"I was thinking if I could make that, it would really put some pressure on her," Tschetter said.

Skinner, however, powered a 9-iron out of the rough to 4 feet of the cup, allowing her to save par. Tschetter's eagle attempt just missed, but Skinner assured her victory with the pressure shot at the pin.

"When Tschetter hit her shot in there, it really woke me up," Skinner said. "I thought to myself, 'I deserve this. I've played too well.' I really concentrated on that shot. I was just so mad. I wasn't upset about hitting it in the water. I'm just really disappointed by my decision. So it wasn't a sterling finish, but that's OK."

The victory was earned on the strength of a seven-birdie, two-bogey final round that was jump started with three straight birdies beginning on the second hole.

Tschetter, who began the final round one stroke in front of Skinner, closed with a 70 to finish at 13-under. Michelle McGann bogeyed the 18th hole on the way to a 69 to finish third at 12-under, while Dottie Mochrie and Meg Mallon tied for fourth at 11-under.

"I fought hard," Tschetter said. "I hit some really good putts that I thought were in. If I'd just made one of them, I could have put some pressure on Val. But she putted so good."

In the Sprint Senior Challenge, Sandra Palmer continued her domination of the event for LPGA players 45 years and older, shooting 72-66—138 to win the 36-hole competition for the fifth straight year.

The event began in 1991 and no player other than Palmer, 54, has ever won. Kathy Whitworth shot 73-72—145 to finish second and Mickey Wright, 60, shot 73-74—147 for third in the 12-player field.

"I play more often than some of the other seniors and that's a big difference," Palmer said. "You have to trust your fundamentals and play the game. You don't know how hard it is to come out and play without practicing with people watching you. There is a different attitude when you step on the first tee of a tournament."

Linebacker climbing back into the saddle

By Art Chapman
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

OLNEY — When Kolton Ross Roberts bends over his cluttered workbench to sculpt custom boots, he pretty much covers it up.

He is no tiny craftsman, working away in some assembly line. Roberts is maybe 6-foot-1 and 240 to 250 pounds. At 35, he still has the look of a linebacker: a thick neck, broad shoulders, and a chest the size of a rain barrel.

He was a linebacker once. In the late 1970s he played for Baylor University, but a cracked vertebra in his neck ended his college career. He finished his education at Angelo State University.

"It wasn't what you would call an illustrious career," Roberts said, "and to tell you the truth, I'd rather not talk much about it. It detracts from my boots, and that is where my career is now."

Roberts' memories of football are not pleasant ones, altogether. He said he didn't feel comfortable at Baylor. In fact, he really never liked football all that much.

He had an artistic bent, but no one encouraged him, he said. "I was the big guy. I was supposed to play football."

So he did. It was the competition that drove him, he said, not the game.

At Angelo State, Roberts ran into Houston Oilers coach Bum Phillips, who had followed his career since his high school days in Sonora.

Phillips knew that Roberts had been out of football for a while, but persuaded him to try out for the Oilers. He did, and he made the team, Roberts said.

A few months later, he said he made a tackle and suddenly felt his fingers go numb. That was it: game over, career ended.

After a year of rehabilitation, Roberts gave in to his artistic side. He began crafting saddles, mostly reproductions of 1880s models, and then moved into boots. He sold the first pair he made, and then quickly collected another dozen orders. Kolton Boot Co. was created.

He still makes both boots and saddles, but the boots, he said, provide a better living. "It's a more difficult living by far," he said, "but I like them and I enjoy doing them."

It was slow in the beginning, he said, because he was self-taught. He simply took a couple of pairs of boots apart, just to see how they were made, and learned to put them back together. "It was always funny," he remembered, "when I would call a jobber for a part. I could describe it to them, but I didn't know what it was called."

With the help of a semi-retired boot maker, Joe McNelly, Roberts learned the finer details of his craft and began pouring out orders. If he has a particular niche, it is probably the expensive, highly decorative boots he sells to Nashville, Tenn., clients.

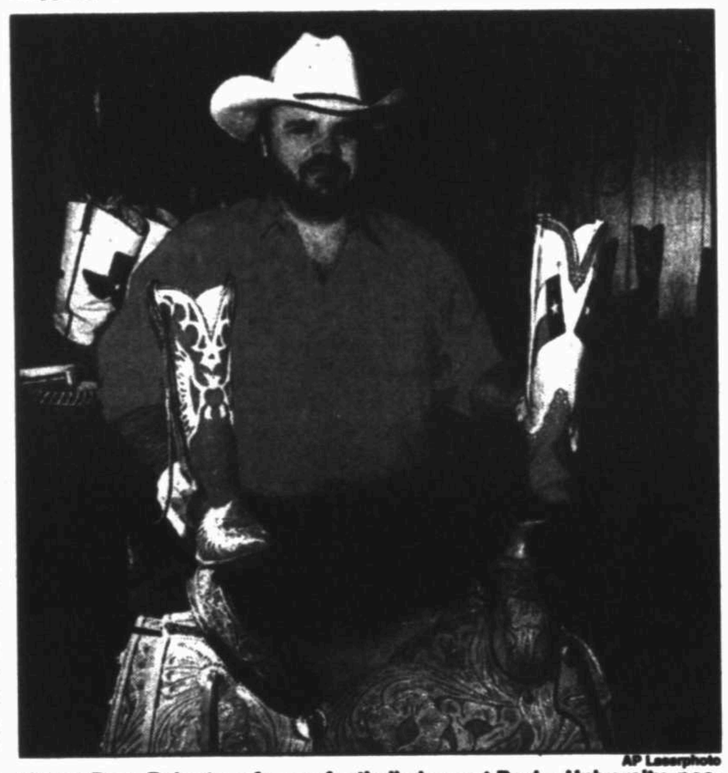

Country singer Alan Jackson is perhaps his best customer. He has sold boots to country music stars Clint Black, Travis Tritt, Ricky Van Shelton and Faith Hill, and actors Cybill Shepherd and Gene Autry.

But his most significant clientele is still the Texas rancher, he said. "That's the guy who will come in to pick up his boots and place another order while he's here."

He knows what it takes to make them happy.

"If I do my job like I should, you ought to be able wear them 12 hours the first day and never know the difference. It should just be like you've been in them always."

DERBY: Lukas to have 26 Derby runs

(From 1C)

"I think it helps a guy like me," said Bruce Jackson, trainer of stretch-running In Character. "It puts a lot more speed in the race."

Lukas' decision, however, puts Jackson in a spot.

Jackson said he has the call on Corey Nakatani to ride In Character. Nakatani's agent Bob Meldahl, however, said by phone from California on Sunday that he told Jackson that Nakatani would ride his colt only if the filly didn't run the Derby.

Jackson also said that after hearing from Nakatani that he released Chris McCarron and Craig Perret from riding In Character. McCarron will ride Knockadoon in the Derby, while Perret will be on Jambalaya Jazz.

As for the rider situation, Lukas said, "There's a lot of good jockeys around."

Lukas had been saying he was leaning toward entering Serena's Song in the Oaks, but decided on Friday night to put her in the Derby after talking with the Lewises.

"I think it was a tough decision for them," Lukas said. "They went back and forth, but ultimately they got real comfortable with her running in the Derby. She's got a legitimate chance to win."

The 35th and last filly to run in the Derby was Winning Colors, who gave Lukas his only victory in 14 Derbies. The only other winning fillies were Regret in 1915 and Genuine Risk in 1980.

Serena's Song has five straight stakes wins, and in her last start took the Jim Beam at Turfway Park on April 1 against seven colts, including Derby candidate Tejano Run.

It appears the filly will face 18 colts on Saturday.

As for public opinion about Serena's Song starting in the Derby, Lukas said, "If we wanted to get the public opinion, we could have gone on ESPN and had a 1-900 SERENA and you answer yes and no."

Lukas' three starters would give him a Derby record 26, breaking the mark of 24 set by H.J. "Dick" Thompson in 1920-37.

Other fillies started by Lukas were Life's Magic, eighth, and Althea, 19th, in 1984. The best finishes by any of his 20 colts were thirds by Partez, 1981, and Dance Floor, 1992.

Clark joins Dolphins' air attack

MIAMI (AP) — Wide receiver Gary Clark, eighth on the NFL's all-time reception list, signed a two-year contract with the Miami Dolphins on Sunday as the Dolphins continued to beef up Dan Marino's supporting cast.

Further terms of the contract weren't disclosed.

"I think the Miami Dolphins have a very good chance of not just going to the Super Bowl, but winning the Super Bowl," Clark told reporters Sunday."

Clark, who turns 33 Monday, said he originally wanted to play with Dallas because he wanted to remain in the NFC East. But a visit to the Dolphins' training facility changed his mind.

Clark will join Randal Hill, Irving Fryar, O.J. McDuffie and Scott Miller.

Angels roll over Diablos

Staff Report

In a game best described as a nightmare for official scorers and Diablos' pitchers, the Midland Angels used the long ball to defeat the El Paso Diablos 19-5 Sunday.

The scoring started early as Todd Greene hit a two-out single to drive in Jovino Carvajal, who tripled to open the inning. Pedro Guerrero followed Greene, continuing the two-out hitting, with his third homer in as many nights. Guerrero took El Paso pitcher Jim Cole, 1-3, to deep left, driving in two, making the score 3-0.

The offensive productivity continued the very next inning as Orlando Munoz doubled to left and came in to score on Ty Boykin's triple to right field. Bo Ortiz drove in Boykin to make the score 5-0.

Midland added another run in the third on when Leon Glenn hit a two-out triple to drive in Guerrero and to make the score 6-0.

From there Midland Angel pitcher Korey Keling, a 10-game winner one year ago, took over, holding the Diablos scoreless for five innings. Keling didn't allow a run until the sixth when Diablo Bo Dodson scored on a inside-the-park home run. Keling went 7 2/3 innings, allowing five runs on nine hits. Mike Schooler came into to pitch 1 1/3 perfect innings.

The Angels, however, would not be denied as they evened the series at two, continuing the long ball effort. George Arias also got into the long ball act, taking an 0-2 pitch over the left field fence in the top of the seventh for his fifth homer of the season to make the score 9-1. The two-run homer preceded an RBI single in the sixth. Arias would go out of the yard again in ninth with a two-run homer.

Leon Glenn, not to be left out, hit a bomb to right center in the eighth inning. In all, the Angels scored their 19 runs on 19 hits.

The win draws Midland to within three games of the Texas League West leading San Antonio Missions, who lost to Wichita 5-2 Sunday.

Damon Hill spoils day for Ferraris with win

IMOLA, Italy (AP) — Damon Hill spoiled the day for the Ferraris by winning the San Marino Grand Prix, then dedicated the victory to his late teammate Ayrton Senna.

"What happened last year was a sad thing, and I think Ayrton would have liked the fact that we had a good day today," Hill said after driving his Williams-Renault to victory Sunday in the race where Senna was killed last May 1. "We had a dreadful time last year, but it's good to have come back.

"I think we've shown that Grand Prix racing is healthy."

Hill's victory at the "home" track of the idolized Ferrari team broke the hearts of thousands of Italian fans, who withstood three hours of battering morning rain hoping for the first Ferrari victory at Imola since 1983.

The 34-year-old British driver beat Ferrari's Jean Alesi and Gerhard Berger by 18.5 and 43.1 seconds respectively to win the 11th race of his Formula One career.

Thousands flocked into the track while drivers were still completing the parade lap. They waved flags with the red Ferrari colors and wildly cheered Alesi and Berger.

It was Hill's second victory in three races this season and second in a row.

With 20 points, Hill took a commanding lead in the drivers standings. He overtook Michael Schumacher, who led the standings with 14 points prior to getting none Sunday.

Schumacher, the defending Formula One champion, started on the pole and led the race for nine laps in his Benetton-Renault before spinning off on the 10th.

Schumacher, who had a minor cervical muscle strain, said it was not clear why he went off, although it happened soon after he switched from rain to slick tires while the track still was slippery.

"We will have to investigate the reason," he said. "I was going quick and I feel lucky because I really thought I was going to be hurt."

Hill, who started from second row, initially trailed Schumacher and then moved in behind Berger in the first 21 laps. But when he took command in the 22nd lap, it was for good.

Hill gradually pulled away and stayed in front despite two pit stops to change tires and refuel.

The British driver completed the 63-lap (191.62-mile) race at an average speed of 113.701 mph.

"It was a difficult race because we had to compromise tires, fuel and pit stops strategy," Hill said. "It's a great thrill to win here in Imola."

Alesi was second to Hill in a virtual replay of the Argentine GP finish following a furious battle with David Coulthard, the other Williams-Renault driver.

Coulthard, trying to defend his second place behind the teammate, even clashed wheels with Alesi at one turn and fell to fourth place when the jury gave him a 10-second penalty pit stop for speeding out of the pit lane.

"I was not really happy with what Coulthard did. He is one of the most incorrect drivers I have ever seen," Alesi said. "He started to zig-zag and push me out of the track. He touched my front wheel. I was lucky to stay on track and finish the race."

The French driver said he could not do any better because of a difficult start and Coulthard's tough opposition.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your excellent memory will help you prosper in business. Research projects bring favorable results and additional income. Your keen powers of perception allow you to head off trouble before it occurs. December will be a very special month for romance. Show your sentimental side. Travel and new employment opportunities beckon early in 1996.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Judy Collins, jockey Steve Cauthen, singer Rita Coolidge, writer Bobbie Ann Mason.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Go along with a plan that will bring you closer to a cherished goal. Listen when old friends offer words of wisdom. Keep daily expenditures down. Earmark a certain sum for a special purpose.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Conventional methods are favored today. Work done at home will go quickly. Eliminate the unnecessary from your busy schedule. Friends will be glad to help shoulder a burden if you let them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Financial gains will result from your taking the initiative. Get in touch with distant contacts to firm up an agreement. Pursue legal matters. Commitments made now will prove long-lasting.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An old score may at last be settled to your satisfaction. Try not to act too pleased with yourself. The financial picture remains somewhat confusing. You may need to pursue romance with more zeal.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get in touch with someone who occupies a position of power and influence. A bit of good luck is headed your way. Secret support comes from old friends. Manage your funds more effectively.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Influential people like the way you think and work. Your business acumen helps you meet an important deadline. New fame and fortune will follow. Keep your own counsel about emotional or financial concerns.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Carefully weigh both sides of a serious issue before coming to a decision about what to do next. Stay on top of your personal life. Unforeseen difficulties can be easily hurdled if you stay alert.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have a special glow about you now. Others respond favorably to your aura of success. Avoid sounding vague in business talks. Have important facts and figures at your fingertips.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 21): Others may come to you with a complex problem. Your optimism helps to revive everyone's spirits. Take care of your health. You may be asked to take part in an interesting experiment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your physical and emotional resilience win you widespread admiration. Avoid pushing yourself too hard. An attractive member of the opposite sex enters your life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone may try to tempt you against your better judgment. Keep your wits about you! A "wild" idea just may work. Prominent people will be impressed. Enroll in night classes or a weekend seminar on computers.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sudden success is possible. Be discreet when dealing with the media. Use your influence with friends to help them get on with their lives. An old alliance could be resurrected now. Romance is favored.

WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ ANSWERS

Q. 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠K 7 ♡9 5 4 ◇Q 9 8 4 ♣K 7 4 2

The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1◇	Dbl	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A - You have some useful values, and game is not out of the question. Since nine tricks at no trump are more likely than 11 at clubs, we would scratch a two-club response in favor of the more aggressive takeout to one no trump.

Q. 2 - East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠10 9 2 ♡K J 8 7 ◇6 4 ♣K J 7 5

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1◇	1♡	?

What action do you take?

A - Your trumps are not good enough for a double, and it might seem that your hand is a little light for one no trump. However, your honors behind the opponent's suit are worth more than their actual count, so we would bid one no trump without any qualms.

Q. 3 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Void ♡K J 9 7 4 ◇Q J 8 6 3 ♣K Q 9

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♣	Pass	1♡	1♠
2♡	2♠	3♣	Pass
4♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A - You have made your slam try by cue-bidding three spades, and partner had many ways to cooperate. Instead, North chose to sign off by simply rebidding four hearts. Respect partner's decision and pass.

Q. 4 - Both vulnerable as South you hold:

♠6 ♡K Q 10 9 4 ◇A Q 6 3 ♣A K 9

The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	1♠	2♣	2♠

What do you bid now?

A - A powerful hand has gotten even better with each bid in the auction. No club raise now would do the hand justice. Our suggestion is that you first bid three diamonds, then follow with a club raise, preferably jumping if it does not take you beyond game.

Q. 5 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠K 10 7 6 ♡Q 7 ◇10 8 6 3 ♣8 7 6

The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1◇	1♠	Pass	Pass
Dbl	2♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A - In spite of West's announced strength, your vulnerable partner has introduced a new suit at the two-level. You were on the verge of a voluntary raise at your first turn. Now, a correction to two spades might sound like a simple preference. With an honor in each of partner's suits and four-card support for the first, jump to three spades. Partner cannot possibly play you for more.

Q. 6 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A K 10 6 3 ♡9 5 ◇10 9 7 6 ♣5 2

The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1◇	Pass	1♠	Pass
2NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

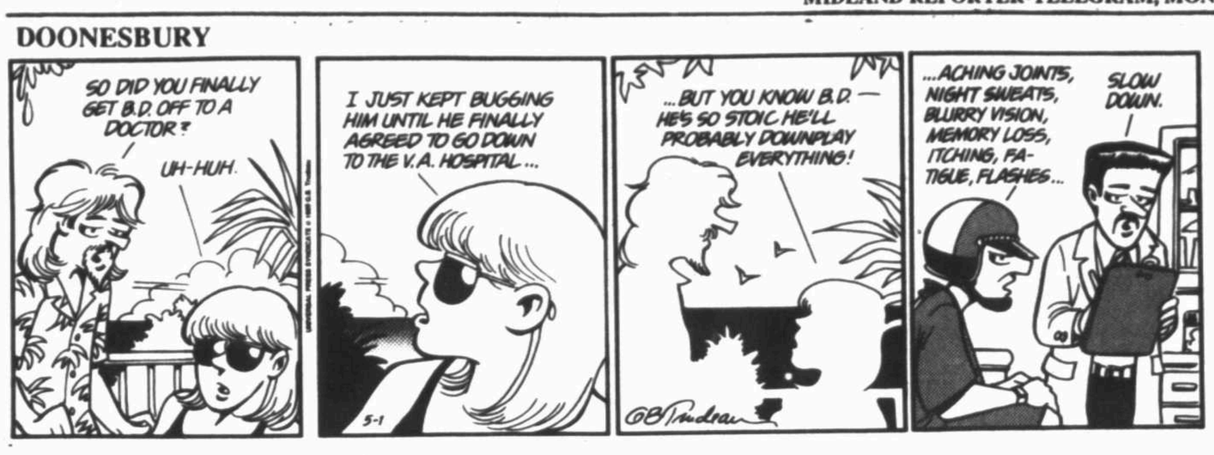

A - You are certainly going to game, but the combined holding could play better in a suit. Bid three diamonds now. That gives partner the opportunity to show three-card spade support, bid three no trump or proceed to a high-level diamond contract.

Newt Gingrich's best NOW recruiter ever, president Patricia Ireland says

EAST MONTPELIER, Vt. — What's Newt Gingrich to Patricia Ireland? "The best membership recruiter NOW ever had," she says.

Patricia Ireland

The National Organization for Women president lambasted the conservative Republican with humor in a speech Saturday.

On the controversy over the House speaker's mother, Kathleen Gingrich, calling Hillary Rodham Clinton a nasty name, Ireland said that word was an acronym for "being in total control, Honey."

Speaker of the House

Jokes aside, Ireland said women face serious attacks from Republicans, including a plan to convert some welfare programs for poor women and children into block grants to states.

"We have got to take them very seriously," she said. "We've got to organize as if our lives depend on it, because they do."

JACKSON, Mich. — Ted Nugent thinks the government should leave his fellow gun enthusiasts alone.

"Law-abiding gun owners have done nothing wrong," said the rocker, who lives outside this southern Michigan city.

The 46-year-old Nugent, best known for the hits "Journey to the Center of the Mind," "Baby Please Don't Go" and "Cat Scratch Fever," said he supports the Michigan Militia, which was scrutinized after reports that suspects in the Oklahoma bombing attended meetings.

He called the Oklahoma blast "a demonic, cowardly, murderous crime."

But he said people in the militia are not like that.

"I shoot with these people, I have been to target practice with them. I find them professional, hard-working people," said Nugent, a longtime gun advocate.

LOS ANGELES — Jack Palance would rather be a funny man than a tough guy.

"I'd always done the light roles, the comedic roles," the actor says of his early days. "A friend said to me, 'Jack, you gotta expect people in New York are gonna laugh at you, so you better get used to it.'"

Jack Palance would rather be a funny man than tough guy.

Palance, 76, then made a career out of acting tough.

He won a best supporting actor Oscar as the dry, faintly absurd Curly in the 1991 film "City Slickers." Then he spoofed his tough-as-nails image in a shaving lotion commercial.

He's back to being serious in his latest role as a beaver trapper in the CBS miniseries "Buffalo Girls," which concludes Monday night.

RADNOR, Pa. — The last telephone conversation he had with his suicidal son recurs like a nightmare for Carroll O'Connor.

Just before Hugh O'Connor killed himself on March 28, his father urged him to seek professional help again for his drug addiction. "And he said, 'No, I think I'm going to cap myself today,'" O'Connor says in Saturday's TV Guide.

"I said, 'Hugh why do you say those things? Why don't you let me come and get you?' And he said, 'No Pops, gotta go. So long.'"

O'Connor, best known for his role as Archie Bunker on the 1970s show "All in the Family," called police, who arrived at Hugh's Los Angeles home just in time to hear the gunshot that ended his life.

"I keep thinking that maybe if I had done the right thing, refused that last phone call, he wouldn't have shot himself," O'Connor said. "I ask myself if telling me added to his compulsion to do it."

PORTLAND, Ore. — Jay Leno took his show on the road and ended up on the local morning news.

"The Tonight Show" host popped into the KGW-TV studio Saturday, chatted with the anchor and delivered a cup of coffee to the weatherman.

Astros finally end Rockies' hot start

The Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Pinch hitter Luis Gonzalez singled in the go-ahead run in a three-run seventh inning that rallied the Houston Astros to a 3-1 victory Sunday over Colorado, handing the Rockies their first loss in five games.

Juan Acevedo allowed one hit over five innings in his major league debut for the Rockies and left the game with a 1-0 lead. But he was deprived of the victory when the Astros rallied off reliver Curtis Leskanic.

Leskanic walked Dave Magadan and Milt Thompson with one out in the seventh before Tony Eusebio had an RBI single. After Orlando Miller popped out to second base, Gonzalez singled home Thompson before James Mouton's RBI double.

Doug Brocail worked the seventh for the victory after Greg Swindell was impressive in his first start of the season. John Hudek got the last four outs for his first save.

Swindell pitched six innings, allowing four hits and striking out seven. He threw 71 pitches — 53 for strikes. Acevedo pitched three perfect innings before his control faltered in the fourth.

Expos 4, Cubs 2

CHICAGO — The Montreal Expos denied the Cubs their best start in more than 60 years, sending Chicago to its first loss of the season behind Wil Cordero's two-run homer.

The Cubs began the year with four straight wins. They have not been 5-0 since 1934, when they won their first seven games.

Paid attendance on a 46-degree day with a chilly 16 mph wind was 23,854. There were thousands of empty seats, although tickets remained at half-price and The Famous Chicken was providing between-inning entertainment.

Gil Heredia (1-0) allowed four hits and a run in five innings. He walked none and struck out five.

Mel Rojas, the fourth Expos reliever, pitched two innings for his second save.

Cordero, 2-for-13 in the first four games, homered to left after Tony Tarasco led off the day with a single against Frank Castillo (0-1). Cordero and Tarasco each had three hits.

Tarasco singled and Cordero doubled in the third. Roberto Kelly bounced back to Castillo, who ran at Tarasco and trapped him halfway between third and the plate.

Castillo flipped the ball late to catcher Rick Wilkins, who missed the tag as, TV replays showed, Tarasco went wide out of the baseline.

After a moment of indecision, replacement plate umpire Terry Bovey ruled Tarasco safe, bringing Cubs manager Jim Riggleman out of the dugout for an argument.

Cardinals 3, Mets 0

NEW YORK — In a game St. Louis played under protest after manager Joe Torre was ejected for arguing a controversial call, the Cardinals beat the New York Mets on a three-run homer by Danny Sheaffer.

The crowd was announced as 51,715, with all tickets being sold for $1. The actual attendance was about half that amount.

Torre was tossed in the second inning after Jose Oquendo was called out for inteference following a bunt with two runners on base.

Plate umpire Frank Ballina, who formerly worked Triple-A games, said Oquendo ran inside the first base line. The ruling negated a wild throw by catcher Kelly Stinnett that resulted in a run.

Torre ran out of the dugout to protest and argued vehemently before walking away. While doing so, Ballina ejected him.

Torre, caught by surprise, returned to argue and then protested the game, but Ballina told the manager he couldn't protest because the ruling was a judgment call.

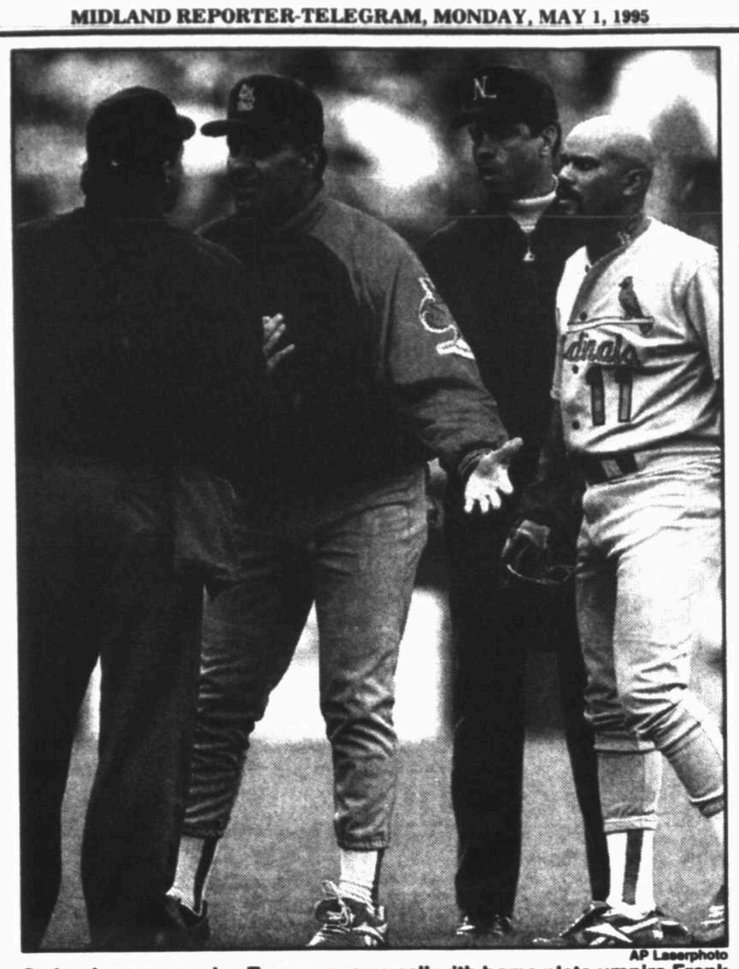

After Torre reached the St. Louis locker room, it was announced the game was officially being played under protest by the Cardinals.

Padres 7, Reds 6

SAN DIEGO — Steve Finley hit a bases-loaded sacrifice fly with one out in the bottom of the ninth and San Diego swept winless Cincinnati.

The loss means the Reds are off to their worst start in 40 years.

After Barry Larkin's two-out two-run homer tied the game in the top of the ninth, the Padres loaded the bases in the bottom of the inning against Hector Carrasco.

St. Louis manager Joe Torre argues a call with home plate umpire Frank Ballina Sunday. Torre was ejected from the game by Ballina.

Andujar Cedeno drew a leadoff walk and Roberto Petagine tried to sacrifice him to second. Carrasco fielded the ball, but his throw to second pulled Bret Boone off the bag and Cedeno was safe. Brian Johnson's sacrifice advanced the runners, Bip Roberts was intentionally walked and Finley hit a fly to medium left to score Cedeno.

The crowd of 18,964 was the Padres' second-largest since drawing 41,961 on opening night. The Padres drew 12,850 for their fifth game of 1994.

Braves 6, Dodgers 3

LOS ANGELES — John Smoltz, coming back from off-season elbow surgery, pitched five strong innings in his season debut and Atlanta beat Los Angeles.

Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda was ejected in the seventh inning by replacement umpire Wade Ford.

Lasorda argued that Atlanta's Mike Kelly should have been called out for running outside the first-base line — as TV replays showed he did — after hitting a dribbler in front of the plate. Catcher Carlos Hernandez's throw hit Kelly, and led to two runs.

Javier Lopez homered for the second day in a row, and Jose Oliva also connected for the Braves. Chipper Jones drove in two runs before leaving with an apparent injury in the seventh inning.

Marlins 10, Giants 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Jeff Conine homered twice and Florida broke out of a hitting slump with a club-record four home runs in a rout over San Francisco.

Gary Sheffield and Mario Diaz also homered for the Marlins, who began the game winless in four games this season and with a 23-inning scoreless streak. Diaz added an RBI double and an RBI single.

John Burkett (1-1), who pitched for the Giants for five seasons, allowed three hits and three walks in six scoreless innings for the Marlins. He struck out five.

Matt Williams, who led the majors with 43 homers last year, hit his first home run of the season for the Giants, a two-run shot in the eighth.

Barry Bonds, who homered 37 times last season, went 0-for-2.

Low Last Round: Joel Mays and Bill Wilson, 60.

Jazz hope Rockets cool

HOUSTON (AP) — The Utah Jazz can only hope that the Houston Rockets sharpshooters cool off before Wednesday night.

After appearing ripe for a first round elimination, the Rockets proved once again they are most dangerous when threatened. They blindsided the Utah Jazz with a playoff record 19 three-point baskets on Saturday for a 140-126 victory.

Now, the Rockets return to The Summit for Game 3 on Wednesday and Game 4 on Friday with the home court advantage and an obvious upswing in momentum after a sluggish Game 1 loss.

"Humbly, I don't put anything past this team when they are backed into a corner," Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "I'm so proud, I couldn't tell you.

"What a character win, one of the best character wins. It ranks right up there with some of the Phoenix stuff."

Last season, the Rockets came from 0-2 down in the Western Conference semifinals to beat the Suns and then took out the Jazz in the conference finals before winning the NBA title against the New York Knicks.

"This reverses the tables," Tomjanovich said. "We have the home court advantage, and believe it or not, the pressure's on us. Every game is going to be a battle, this Utah team is a great team."

In Game 1, Hakeem Olajuwon scored 45 points but the Jazz eked out a 102-100 victory. In Game 2, the Jazz cut Olajuwon back to 27 points but they had no answer for Kenny Smith, who hit seven of eight 3-point baskets.

"The tradeoff is, we run the risk of having their guards wake up," center James Donaldson said. "Clyde Drexler and Sam Cassell and Smith really didn't do much to hurt us the other night.

"But they're capable of doing it. So we have to make sure we help out a little bit more doubling on Hakeem, but get back on those 3-point threats that they have."

The Rockets also set NBA playoff records for most 3-point attempts in a game (28), most 3-pointers in a half (11), most 3-pointers in a quarter (7) and joined with the Jazz for most combined 3-pointers (28).

"In the last week, we've spent a hell of a lot of time shooting," Tomjanovich said. "For a whole team to shoot 60 percent from the floor on somebody else's floor in the playoffs is wild."

Aggies roll over Longhorns, 25-6

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas A&M's Chad Alexander went 5-for-6 with five runs scored, seven RBI, two doubles and two home runs to lead the Aggies to a 25-6 victory over Texas on Sunday.

Aggie righthander Ryan Rupe (5-2) earned the win after throwing the first seven innings.

Texas A&M (35-17-1) scored in every inning except the fifth and eighth and topped all scoring with nine runs in the fourth. The nine-run rally, led by a Jason Stephens' grand slam home run, took A&M's lead to 16-5.

Stephens went 3-for-5 with three runs scored, six RBI, a double and the homer.

Danny Peoples led the Texas (41-14) offense, going 2-for-5 with two runs scored, one RBI and a solo home run. Jake O'Dell (10-3) was the losing pitcher for the Longhorns.

Indians' Belle, Murray sink Texas Rangers in 12th inning with key hits

The Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

ARLINGTON — Albert Belle and Eddie Murray each singled and scored in the 12th inning Sunday, ending Cleveland's eight-inning span of wasting runners and giving the Indians a 7-6 victory over Texas.

Belle began the 12th with an infield single off Matt Whiteside (1-1) and moved to third on a single by Murray.

Jim Thome drove in the first run with a ground ball that hit Whiteside's glove and rolled to second baseman Jeff Frye. Had Whiteside fielded it cleanly, he may have been able to hold Belle.

Alvaro Espinoza followed with a clean single to center that drove in Murray.

Jose Mesa (1-0) got the victory in his first appearance of the year, despite giving up a leadoff home run to Dean Palmer in the 12th. It was Palmer's second of the year.

Cleveland kept Texas (2-3) from going over .500 for the first time since last June. Attendance remained down as only 26,026 showed up, well below the 40,374 averaged last year at The Ballpark in Arlington.

Early in the game, the lead changed practically every half-inning until Mickey Tettleton's solo home run tied the game at 5 in the Texas fifth. It was his third of the year.

The Indians took a 2-0 lead in the first and were ahead 5-4 in the fourth, before missing several go-ahead chances by stranding their next nine runners.

Cleveland left nine players in scoring position between its fifth and sixth runs.

Angels 5, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO (AP) — Former Midland Angel Gary DiSarcina homered, tripled and drove in three runs, leading California over Toronto.

With the score tied at 3, Spike Owen drew a leadoff walk from Paul Menhart (0-1) in the seventh and Andy Allanson was hit by a pitch. DiSarcina followed with a triple to the wall in left-center field.

DiSarcina hit a solo home run off Danny Darwin in the third, tying it at 1. Darwin made his debut for Toronto.

Royals 9, Yankees 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kevin Appier, pitching on three days of rest, struck out eight in six innings, leading Kansas City past New York and preventing a three-game sweep by the Yankees.

Gary Gaetti drove in four runs. The Yankees lost for the first time this season after three wins.

The game drew 14,028 despite free tickets in the outfield stands.

Appier (2-0), lifted on opening day with a no-hitter in progress through 6 2-3 innings, allowed three hits. He gave up three runs, only one earned.

The Royals struck for four runs in the third off Scott Kamieniecki (0-1). Rookie outfielders Jon Nunnally and Tom Goodwin hit one-out singles and Wally Joyner followed with a RBI single.

Brewers 4, Athletics 3

MILWAUKEE — Pat Listch's seventh-inning single broke a 2-2 tie and rookie Mark Kiefer pitched three perfect innings in relief to lead Milwaukee over Oakland.

Kiefer (2-0) retired all nine batters he faced in the fifth through seventh innings, striking out two.

Oakland's Don Wengert (0-1), who retired the Brewers in order in the sixth, but gave up a one-out double to Matt Mieske in the seventh. Mieske scored on Listach's two-out single down the left-field line.

B.J. Surhoff added an RBI single off Mark Acre in the eighth.

Ruben Sierra led off the ninth with a double off Jose Mercedes and scored on Mark McGwire's single but Graham Lloyd came on and got Terry Steinbach to hit his first pitch into a double play. Steinbach's hard ground ball bounced off the mound to shortstop Jose Valentin who stepped on second and threw to first to complete the double play.

Lloyd then retired Scott Brosius for his first save.

Oakland, which snapped a 12-game losing streak at County Stadium Saturday, took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Rickey Henderson scored from second on Mark McGwire's single off Angel Miranda.

White Sox 17, Red Sox 11

BOSTON — Ron Karkovice hit his fifth career grand slam, tying a team record and leading Chicago to its first win of the season.

Jose Canseco and Mo Vaughn each hit their first home run for Boston. Mike Devereaux had a two-run shot for Chicago, which won despite making six errors.

Karkovice connected in the eighth inning. He joined Robin Ventura and Harold Baines as the only White Sox players with five career slams in the team's 95-year history.

Tim Raines and Devereaux each had three of Chicago's 17 hits. The White Sox lost their first four games and were outscored 39-11. Boston had 14 hits.

Orioles 6, Twins 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Jeffrey Hammonds hit a three-run homer, and Arthur Rhodes struck out a career-high nine as Baltimore powered its way over Minnesota.

Hammonds' homer in the second inning gave the Orioles a 4-0 lead. Chris Hoiles and Brady Anderson added solo shots off Scott Erickson (0-2). Baltimore has nine home runs in five games.

Rhodes (1-0), who shut out Milwaukee and Minnesota in his final two games of 1994, gave up three hits and three runs in 5 2-3 innings in his first appearance this season. He had struck out eight five times in his career.

Tigers 10, Mariners 1

SEATTLE — Mike Moore pitched six strong innings to get his second victory of the season and Detroit broke open a tight game with a six-run fifth inning for a win over Seattle.

Outscored 23-3 in losing the first three games of the series, the Tigers went ahead 1-0 on Chris Gomez's RBI single off Bob Wells (0-1) in the third.

They made it 3-0 in the fourth on Franklin Stubbs' run-scoring double and a sacrifice fly by Gomez, who also homered in the ninth. Wells made his first major-league start, giving up three runs on five hits in four innings.
