Iraqi warplanes strike cities, ships

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq said today its warplanes raided two industrial cities deep inside Iran and attacked three vessels in the Persian Gulf. Shipping sources said at least one Iranian-flagged vessel was on fire.

Iran said it downed three Iraqi jets and warned Iraqi civilians to stay away from economic and industrial sites across Iraq to elude retaliatory attacks.

Meanwhile, two reflagged Kuwaiti tankers escorted by American warships were cruising northward in the gulf a day after Iranian commandos in a speedboat raked a Kuwaiti vessel with machine gun fire and rocket-propelled grenades. That attack followed three days of Iraqi raids on Iranian oil installations.

In Washington, the White House on Monday termed the timing of Iraq's attacks "deplorable," but called on Iran to comply with a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

The Iraqi announcement brought to eight the number of raids it has claimed on Iranian oil targets since breaking an informal cease-fire in the gulf.

Gulf shipping executives said an Iranian-flagged vessel was on fire near Iran's Larak island oil terminal in the Strait of Hormuz.

The executives, who requested anonymity, said they have been unable to identify the burning vessel or establish if it had been struck in one of the raids reported by Baghdad's military communiques.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, reported that three Iraqi jets were downed by interceptors and ground-fire in today's raids, although Iraq said all its planes returned safely. IRNA said two of the planes were shot down over the gulf and the third was downed by ground fire over Khuzistan province. Ahvaz, one of the cities Iraq said it attack today, is the capital of Khuzistan.

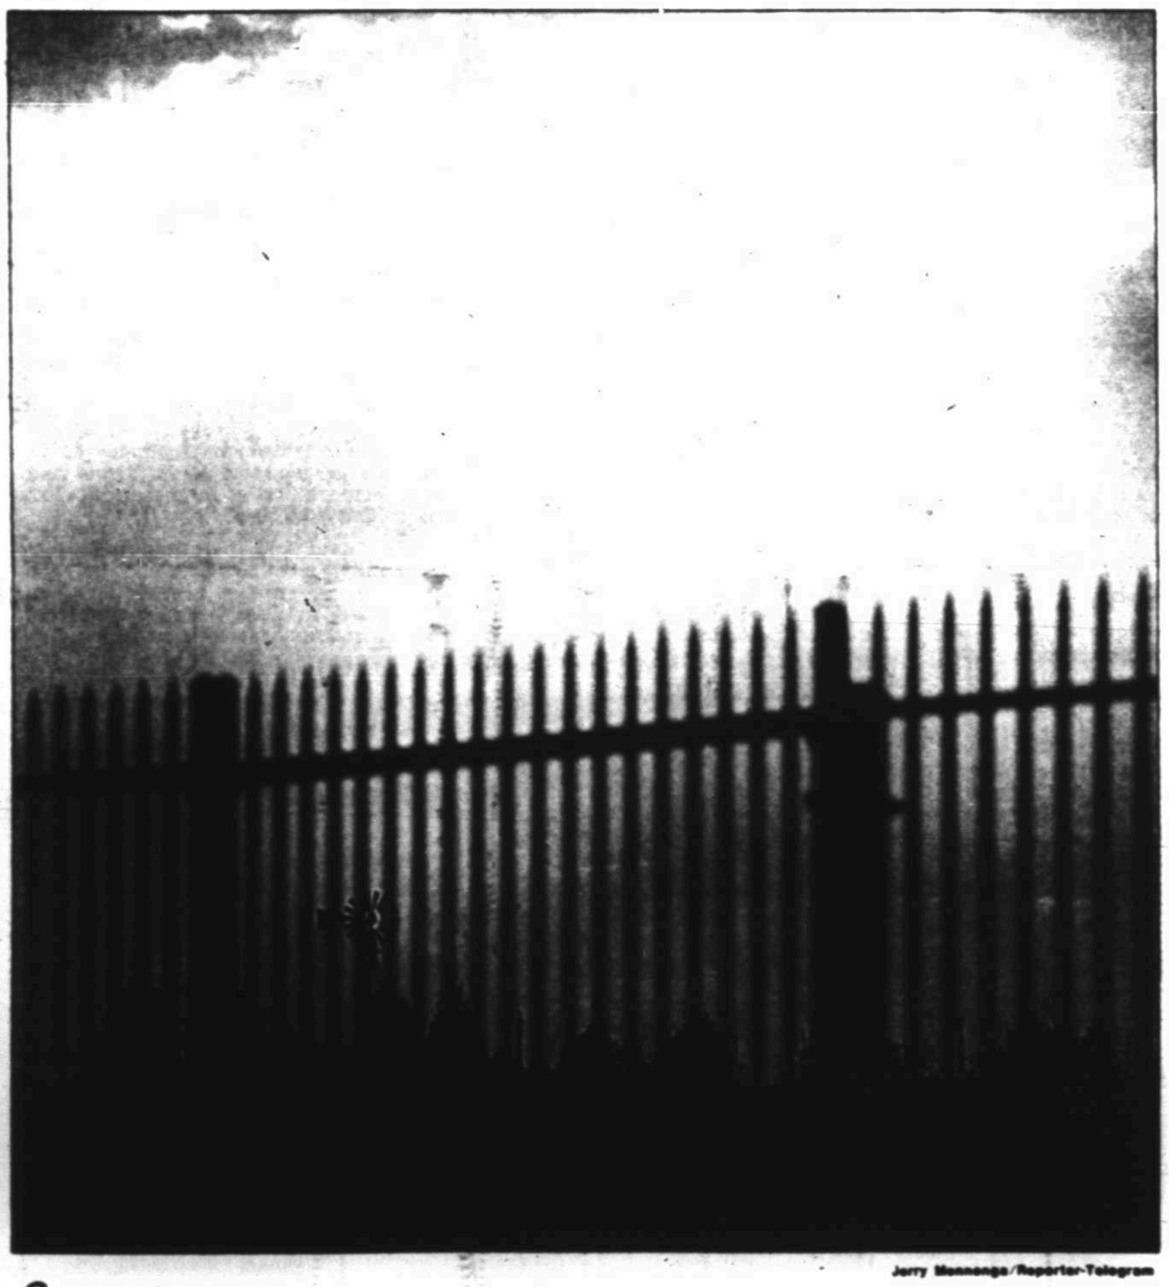

Tehran Radio quoted a spokesman for the War Information Headquarters as saying Iran will "shell and bomb military, industrial and economic centers in Iraq."

The radio quoted the unidentified spokesman as calling on "The Iraqi people who live near these centers or work at industrial and economic centers to evacuate immediately to evade Iran's retaliatory fire."

Iran has vowed to hit shipping in the gulf in retaliation for the attacks, and said it would not hesitate to fire on the U.S.-escorted ships. On Monday, Iranian commandos in a speedboat raked a Kuwaiti vessel with machine gun fire and rocket-propelled grenades. Iran accuses Kuwait of aiding Iraq.

The Iraqi News Agency said Iraqi warplanes attacked vessels in the gulf in three separate raids today, one at midnight, a second two hours later and a third at midday.

'Sympathy tour' places tax blame on Democrats

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Texas Republican Party Chairman George Strake placed the majority blame for the state's largest tax package — $5.7 billion — on House Democrats today.

Midland-Odessa was the first stop of a 12-city "taxpayer sympathy tour" for Strake, who was accompanied by Rep. Gerald Geistweidt of Mason.

Today and Wednesday the two also will travel to Big Spring, Sweetwater, San Angelo, Brownwood, Gatesville, Cleburne, Fort Worth, Wichita Falls, Sherman, Waxahachie and Tyler.

"Today is the first day of the first pinch of the Democratic taxes," Strake said.

"When you visit the drugstore or hardware store or gas station and pay more taxes today...remind yourself that the Democrats have now raised sales taxes to the choking point and even some of their own leaders are admitting an income tax is the next step."

Locally, Strake said Odessa Rep. Gary Watkins and Big Spring Rep. Larry Don Shaw "flunked the test."

"Given the opportunity to stand for responsible budget cuts and against record tax increases, Watkins and Shaw instead played follow the leader, voting with the Democrats in power instead of voting in the best interests of the working men and women of Texas," Strake, formerly Secretary of the State of Texas, continued.

However, Strake was the first to admit he was "vocal against Gov. Bill Clements" signature on the $5.7 billion tax package.

"But I think the governor saw no hope given the minority number of Republicans in the House and just thought to himself 'I'll sign it and then get out there and hit the road' to recruit more Republicans into the State Legislature," Strake said.

"We should give Clements credit for saving $1.8 billion in additional taxes which Speaker of the House Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby advocated," the party chairman continued.

Strake urged voters to "vote in their own best interests by sending reinforcements to the determined, but outnumbered, Republicans in the Texas House of Representatives who fought for responsible budget cuts instead of higher taxes.

"Republicans are the last bastion of curbing spending and government size in Texas," Strake said.

Divers find recorder, pull bodies from submerged jet

PHUKET, Thailand (AP) — Frogmen today located the black box and recovered several bodies from the wreckage of a Thai airliner that plunged into the sea off the resort island of Phuket, apparently killing all 83 people aboard.

Eighteen bodies have been found since the Thai Airways Boeing 737 crashed Monday about 540 miles southwest of Bangkok, Lt. Plodtai Pirathan, deputy commander of the provincial marine police, said today.

The cause of the crash remained unclear today.

Thai Airway's Phuket manager, Narong Yantaragorn, said, "We have established the location of the black box, but believe it to be lodged in some crevice." The black box records cockpit conversations and could contain important clues about why the jet crashed.

The 37 foreign passengers on domestic Flight TH365 included two Americans, two Japanese, three Europeans and 30 Malaysians, said the managing director of the state-run airline, Air Marshal Narong Dithipeng.

A partial passenger list from the airline identified the Americans as William N. Ward and his Thai-born wife Jantree Ward. No further information about them was available.

No survivors have been found despite an intensive search by 280 workers, a half dozen marine and navy frogmen, 25 fishing vessels and two marine patrol boats, authorities said.

INS will give notice before business inspections

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Employers will be given a three-day notice before being inspected by Immigration and Naturalization officials under a new law which begins citing businesses today, but officials said if they discover people "playing games" no search notice will be given.

"If we find the employer is purposefully hiding the employee or concealing and playing games we won't give them a notice," said Tim Pastor today. Pastor is the assistant director with INS Investigations in El Paso.

Because officials are usually tipped off by disgruntled employees within businesses being inspected, the INS will find out if undocumented workers are hidden during an investigation, Pastor explained.

Along with INS, Border Patrol officials begin today "aggressively" checking employers to make sure they are obeying the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986.

"We're going to be a little bit more aggressive at this point," Pastor said.

Up to 18 inspectors with the El Paso Investigations office will begin checking West Texas employers for I-9 forms that must be filled out by every employee. The forms state employees may legally work in the United States.

Beginning today employers face fines and civil penalities after the first offense for hiring undocumented aliens after Nov.6, 1986.

The office will respond to complaints and check businesses, "notorious for hiring illegal aliens," he said.

David Pfeifer, deputy chief with Border Patrol in Marfa, said his office also will be checking repeat violators in the Midland-Odessa area.

But Pfeifer would not say how many employers in the area have been notified by his agency for breaking the new law or how many would be checked to see if they are obeying the law.

"Until we go back and make these checks, we will not know whether people are actually in compliance," Pfeifer said.

However, Pfeifer said many employers are obeying the law.

"There is a very, very large percentage of people who did employ illegal aliens, who are voluntarily complying with the new law.

"But there are always a few people who simply do not intend to comply...until forced to comply," Pfeifer said.

Others intend to work their illegal labor up until the very last day possible, he said.

Employer sanctions from immigration reform taking effect

By HOLDEN LEWIS

EL PASO (AP) — Starting today, employers can be fined or even jailed for not verifying their employees' legal entitlement to work.

Employer sanctions are part of last year's Immigration Reform and Control Act, designed to discourage illegal immigration. Companies must verify that employees hired after Nov. 1, 1986, are U.S. citizens or have permission to work.

The new requirement means more paperwork, but some El Paso businesses say it has not been a hardship.

"Even before the law, we used to check for aliens," Tony Lama boot company spokesman Wes Schotten said Monday. "So we have to fill out their (the government's) forms and not ours. That's about the only difference."

He said the 800-employee company has filed all the necessary forms in anticipation of today's deadline.

The El Paso branch of Kelly Services Inc., the temporary employment company, has filed all the forms, too, branch manager Rosa Navarro said Monday. But Kelly had to hire two of its own temporaries to take care of the paperwork, and the project took two months, Ms. Navarro said.

Kelly has hired about 600 people since last November, and most had to be contacted later to verify they could work legally in the United States, Ms. Navarro said. The company is now checking documents as employees are hired.

Anywhere from six to a dozen other companies hired Kelly workers to deal with the paperwork, she said.

"The documentation that is required now — there is no doubt that person ys a U.S. citizen or has permission to work in the United States," she said. "I think it will reduce the influx of illegal workers into this country."

Companies with high turnover, such as Kelly, or with a wide geographical spread, such as El Paso Natural Gas Co., have had at least minor problems complying.

The gas company had to round up its independent contractors, who work in such places as Bloomfield, N.M., and Casa Grande, Ariz., said John McFall, director of public relations.

The employees have to take time off at company expense to go to a district office and verify their work eligibility.

But McFall said getting documentation for independent contractors has been a minor problem, and the only one.

"By and large, it's going very smoothly," he said, adding that the 3,300-employee company has hired few people in the last 10 months.

The sanctions have been particularly controversial in El Paso, which is 60 percent Hispanic and depends heavily on trade with Mexico.

Schotten said he doubted whether the forms and employee sanctions will curb illegal immigration.

"I'm not sure anything will help until the Mexican economy strengthens," he said.

Communion vessels most 'significant'

KERRVILLE (AP) — The designers of the communion vessels for Pope John Paul II's upcoming Mass say nothing else they've worked on compares to the significance of this endeavor.

"No project is of this importance or prestige," said Norman Taylor, a designer of vessels the pope will use at his Mass in San Antonio Sept. 13.

"I think he (the pope) is a very down-to-earth individual who will appreciate the simplicity of these vessels," James Avery said of the chalice and other communion implements created by his company.

The vessels "are very simple, but strong," Avery said, adding those qualities are the same ones conveyed by the pontiff.

The chalice; the ciborium, which holds the communion wafers; the flagon, which holds the wine; and the paten, a plate from which bread is offered during Mass, were commissioned by the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of San Antonio.

Crafted from silver and gold, the vessels also include Hill Country limestone from the Guadalupe River near Kerrville.

U.S. could propose Iranian arms embargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Iraqi attacks on Iranian oil shipments make the Persian Gulf more dangerous, the United States is moving to propose an arms embargo against Iran in the U.N. Security Council.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said Monday that renewed Iraqi attacks last weekend after a 45-day self-imposed cease-fire have increased danger in the gulf. The United States has urged Iraq to stop the attacks.

"Clearly, this is a time for restraint on all sides," she said, reading from a prepared statement.

Mrs. Oakley said Iraq's renewed atacks were "not helpful" and that Iran should accept the U.N. cease-fire resolution "as quickly as possible."

She said the Security Council should be asked "very soon" to consider the embargo but declined to say when the United States would propose such a resolution.

She acknowledged, however, that getting an embargo resolution through the council will be more difficult than the cease-fire passed July 20 with the support of permanent council members China and the Soviet Union.

China, which sold Silkworm antiship missiles to Iran, or the Soviet Union, whose allies in Eastern Europe provided other arms, can block a sanctions resolution with the veto available to the five permament members of the Security Council. The three others are the United States, Britain and France.

Twice earlier, U.S. diplomats managed to persuade Iraq to hold its fire. But on Saturday, a U.S. official said, Iraqi Ambassador Nizar Hamdoon turned down an appeal for further delay.

Apprehensive that the Iraqis were ready to strike, Assistant Secretary of States Richard V. Murphy called Hamdoon to his office at the State Department. But the official, who gave this account on condition he not be identified, said the ambassador reiterated his public statements that the Iraqi moratorium worked to Iran's advantage and could not be extended any longer.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., President Reagan's chief spokesman decried Iraq's bombing of Iranian oil facilities and insisted that the administration is pursuing an even-handed policy toward the warring Persian Gulf nations.

Briefing reporters while the vacationing Reagan did ranch chores and went horseback riding, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "our policy in the gulf is one of neutrality. We don't ask one side to do one thing and not another."

U.S. warships are protecting oil shipments from Kuwait, an ally of Iraq, from Iranian attack. An Iranian mine in the Gulf damaged the Bridgeton, a U.S.-registered Kuwaiti tanker, but otherwise Tehran has held its fire while Iraq maintained a moratorium.

However, Iran has vowed that if its facilities or tankers came under Iraqi attack, Kuwaiti ships and the U.S. warships escorting them would be in danger of Iranian attack.

Vernon Walters, the U.S. ambassador to the U.N., said late Monday he thought the danger to U.S. ships "has been exaggerated."

"But since we are dealing with people who are irrational, which the Iranians are, I cannot exclude that," Walters said on the MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour.

Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Jawad Larijani met twice last week in New York with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar without giving a reply from Tehran to the cease-fire order. Iraq accepted it immediately after passage, but attacked Iranian oil installations and other targets on land.

SHIP

The Iraqi report did not identify the vessels, calling each one a "large naval target," a phrase the Iraqis generally use to refer to oil tankers.

Iraq also announced a series of morning air strikes on industrial targets in Ahvaz in southern Iran and Isfahan, in the central part of the country.

Baghdad Radio, monitored in Cyprus, quoted an unidentified military spokesman today as saying: "Iraq will cut off Iranian oil exports so the revenues can no longer be used for aggressive purposes against Iraq."

He said Iraq "will keep pounding Iranian oil resources until the Iranian regime bows to the international community's calls for a cease-fire." That was a reference to the U.S.-backed U.N. Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire.

A communique issued by Iraq's air force command and carried by the Iraqi News Agency said several formations bombed Isfahan and Ahvaz at 11 a.m. It said the jets accurately hit their targets and returned safely to base.

On Monday, Iraq threatened to escalate attacks following two days of Iranian raids on Iraqi land targets. Iran shelled Basra in southern Iraq and other border towns Monday. Iraq's Baghdad Radio, monitored in Nicosia, said several civilians were killed or wounded.

Witnesses said two U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti vessels and their warship escorts were sailing toward Kuwait's Al-Ahmadi oil terminal after anchoring off Bahrain Monday. Bahrain is halfway along the 550-mile voyage.

The helicopter carrier Guadalcanal was believed to have sailed ahead so its eight RH-53D Sea Stallion mine-hunting helicopters could clear a path through suspected danger areas.

The United States agreed to protect half of Kuwait's 22 tankers from attack from Iran, which claims the emirate aids Iraq.

Immigration law reviewed

Associated Press

The new immigration law affects not only illegal aliens but every employer in America and every employee hired after Nov. 6.

Here's the basic facts:

— THE FORM: It's a one-page form, called the I-9, available at district offices of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, which also mailed it to many employers along with an explanatory handbook.

— THE EMPLOYEES: All new employees must fill out the I-9, which asks for their name, address, date of birth and Social Security number. Employees also must check whether they are U.S. citizens or are authorized to work in the United States. Then the employees must provide documents that prove identity and eligibility to work in this country. A variety of documents are acceptable, including a U.S. passport or a combination of driver's license and Social Security card.

— THE EMPLOYERS: All U.S. employers are required to check the legal status of all employees hired after Nov. 6, the day President Reagan signed the law. Employers are not liable for employees hired before that. Employers must certify that they have seen the employee's documents and must also keep a copy of each worker's I-9 on file.

— THE ENFORCERS: INS inspectors can demand to see I-9 forms at any time, without a subpoena or a search warrant. The immigration agency said it would begin enforcing the law Sept. 1, but would not fine employers making good-faith efforts to comply.

— THE SANCTIONS: Fines range from $250 to $10,000 per illegal alien, and jail terms could reach six months.

Law makes 'police' of employers

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

A sweeping law designed to curb illegal immigration turned the nation's 7 million employers into government police today by requiring them to document the status of employees with a special form, and many businesses griped about the new responsibility.

Under a Sept. 1 deadline in the implementation of the Immigration Reform and Control Act, which makes it a crime to knowingly employ illegal aliens, employers generally must have the new I-9 forms completed for workers who were hired since the measure was signed into law last Nov. 6.

The forms must be signed by employers after they review supporting documents that attest to the employee's eligibility to work, such as birth certificates, passports and permanent-residence cards.

A random nationwide check of businesses by The Associated Press indicated a high degree of compliance with the deadline, with no evidence of mass confusion or widespread dismissals that some critics predicted several months ago.

But many employers expressed irritation with the Immigration and Naturalization Service because of the additional paperwork now required, while others said they have been forced to fire some workers who couldn't provide supporting documents with their I-9s.

"We're having to let people go because they can't comply with the letter of the law," said David Staton, owner of the Staton Hills winery outside Yakima, Wash. "You're continually having to turn over people who cannot up with documentation and who for every reasonable appearance are Americans."

In California, where half the nation's estimated 6 million illegal aliens are believed to reside, farmers criticized the INS for subjecting them to today's deadline. Growers of perishable crops, who historically have relied on illegal Mexican immigrants for harvesting, contend they are exempted by another provision of the law that defers sanctions against them until December 1988.

Michael Henry, spokesman for the California Farm Bureau in Sacramento, said his group had encouraged members to meet the deadline, but added that if the INS attempted to fine growers who did not comply, the group was prepared to take legal action.

At the Los Angeles-based Merchants & Manufacturers Association, which represents 3,300 California companies, spokesman Louis Custrini said many employers fear they won't be able to find replacments for undocumented workers who must be let go.

"We have received calls from a number of employers, especially in labor-intensive industries, who say the immigration law is creating a vacuum that is hard to fill," he said.

Many employers who were queried said their main objection to the new law was the additional bureaucratic burden of completing the I-9, a one-page form that must be made available to INS inspectors.

"It is a lot of extra paperwork we're not too pleased with, but it's something we're able to handle," said John Pennington, spokesman for Genesco Inc., a Nashville, Tenn.-based maker and market of footwear and men's apparel with 7,000 employees.

"It will be a burden," said Laura Barbara, spokeswoman for Floating Point Systems Inc., a computer software maker based in Beaverton, Ore., that employs 890 people. "It has complicated administrative procedures and caused an inconvenience to the applicant and us."

Maine blueberry processor Jasper Wyman & Son Co. was forced to copy 1,300 I-9s at its own expense because the INS provided only a few copies. In Connecticut, Meridien Dress Co. President Mike Michael said he had not received any I-9 forms from the INS and was meeting with his accountant for a primer on how the law works.

Others complained about the difficulty in getting employees to complete the form, partly because of misconceptions that only Hispanics and other ethnic minorities are subject to the new law.

At the Kelly Services Inc. temporary employment agency office in El Paso, Texas, branch manager Rosa Navarro said it took two months to document the 600 people hired after the law was signed.

"We've had people who've gotten very upset," she said. "We had one lady who looks Anglo and she was pretty upset we had to ask for documentation."

At Michael's Restaurant in Des Moines, Iowa, owner John Huss said he had just finished the documentation process, which he described as painful and frustrating.

"I have some of my own children working here and they say 'Dad, you know I was born here. Why do I have to do this?,'" he said. "And then I don't have to fill one out. So if I was an illegal, I guess they wouldn't know."

Fines for failure to have I-9s on file after Tuesday can range from $100 to $1,000. But in Washington, INS spokesman Verne Jervis said it was unlikely that inspectors would cite errant employers for paperwork violations, unless it was clear they were hiring illegal aliens.

"We've soft-pedaled this law," he said. "We've conducted an extensive information campaign. We're not threatening people and waving a big stick in their face, and we've gotten cooperation. We see good-faith efforts to comply with the law, and that's really what we're after."

Nevertheless, civil-rights groups have sharply rebuked the INS for what they call the agency's failure to adequately explain how the law works, particularly its amnesty provisions for illegal aliens who have worked in the country since 1980.

"The government has failed miserably to publicize anything except in vague terms the sanctions against employers," said Lucas Guttentag, national litigation coordinator of the Immigration and Aliens' Rights Task Force, a part of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"As a result, there's enormous confusion among employers," he said. "The government is really doing an enormous disservice to the business community as well as to the workers to provide the information."

Satellite TV Update Sept., Oct., 1987

Today's modern system is a receiver, dish mover, and descrambler all built into one attractive box. It's smaller than an average VCR. Touch the power button on the remote, and the TV screen comes to life. The first thing you notice is how clean and sharp the picture is; it's better than any cable system. These new systems put words and information on your TV screen. With the touch of a button you can get the time of day, the title of a movie, what it's rated (G,PG,R,X,Etc.), how many minutes are left in the movie, and the satellite and channel you are on.

Touch another button and it tells you what comes on next, what it's rated, and when it starts. All that information is in big, easy-to-read letters on your TV screen. If there are certain channels you don't want the kids to watch, you can black them out quickly and easily.

Many of the programs are in stereo for those who have a stereo TV, or even better still, a separate component stereo system. The stereo sound is clean, rich and crisp, just like sitting in a movie theater. Speaking of movie theaters, there is a new type of programming available through your descrambler called Pay-Per-View. These movies are either still showing at the theater or just left and won't be available on VCR tape or cable for months. You can watch these movies for about $4 each and be billed at the end of the month for what you watch. The hand-held remote will control the system from any room in the house. These systems have every luxury feature imaginable. You get some scrambled channels free and others are very inexpensive. For example, KTVT Dallas is $9 per year. Four HBO and Cinemax movie channels are $72 for six months, that's $12 per month for all four. You can buy a system just like this one for $2,495, including installation. You can buy this system for $64 per month with no money down. Come to Satellite City and get a free demonstration while they are on sale.

Sharper, cleaner pictures and stereo sound are only a small part of the modern system. The advanced features are amazing. Satellite City is located at 2717 E. Highway 80 in Odessa.

"We wanted to use native craftsmen and native elements to create these special pieces," the Rev. Greg Nevuld said in July when announcing the project. "Each place he (the pope) visits in America will give him a different flavor of our country. We wanted the things he used here to reflect Texas and the Southwest."

Avery, known for Christian-oriented jewelry designs, was approached by Nevuld on behalf of the archdiocese. Two of Avery's senior designers, Dennis Barecky and Taylor, shepherded the project.

Barecky, who did the major design work, said use of four interwoven cords carved into the limestone represents the four corners of the Earth and Christianity being carried to them.

The limestone rings the upper part of the stem of the chalice and is repeated in other parts of the ciborium and flagon.

"It's continuous. There is no beginning, no end. It is a symbol of God's oneness," Avery said of the pattern. "We wanted them to be significant in scale, but not to the point they're cumbersome."

The chalice stands 9⅛ inches tall; the flagon, 9¾ inches; and the ciborium, 6⅛ inches.

The paten is 8 inches in diameter to hold the 5-inch diameter host the pope will use during the Mass, which is expected to draw at least 500,000 people.

Edia Hernandez — director of the Midland Residency Center run by the Permian Basin League of United Latin American Citizens — said during the last week many applicants for temporary residency have told her they were fired by employers anxious to comply with the new guidelines.

Employees can indicate on I-9 forms that they are applying for legalization and if they have applied they should have a card to show employers, Pastor said.

However, for some applicants it takes time to gather the documents needed for the temporary residency. Most applicants are given a letter by their attorneys or residency centers indicating the worker is preparing the papers necessary for application, Ms. Hernandez said.

Because some of these letters have been sold, employers doubting the authenticity should call the author of the letter for verification, she said.

But Ms. Hernandez said some employers — possibly fearing fines — have gone ahead and fired workers who have shown their employers these letters.

"The majority have honored it. But some of them have said it won't be accepted," she said.

Under the law after today, employers are fully within their rights for firing workers who have not gotten cards from legalization centers, Pastor said.

"They must present something by Sept. 1, 1987. The employers are following regulations. If they have not gotten a card from the Legalization Center the employer is well within their rights to fire," he said.

However, the employee is free to come back to the employer for rehiring after they receive their card from a Legalization Center, Pastor added.

Joe Hatcher, office manager with the Texas Employment Commission in Midland, said his office has received a "tremendous amount of calls" from employers about today's deadline for filling out I-9 forms.

If employers hire their workers through the TEC, the agency will screen prospective employees to meet the INS requirement, Hatcher said.

"We will refer only I-9 certifiable people," Hatcher said.

Even though the checks begin today, employers will not be fined on a first violation until June 1, 1988, Pastor said.

The first offense will result in fines from $200 to $2,000 per unauthorized alien. Fines jump to $2,000 to $5,000 on the second offense and $3,000 to $10,000 on the third.

Flagrant violators can expect a fine of $3,000, a 6-month prison term, or both.

PLANE

Narong Dithipeng, Thai Airway's managing director, said the jet plunged into the Andaman Sea eight miles short of Phuket International Airport after nearly colliding with a Boeing 737 owned by Hong Kong-based Dragonair that also was descending on the airport.

But Dragon Airlines Ltd. denied the claim in a statement issued in Hong Kong today, saying the Thai jet was "at a considerable distance" from the Dragonair jetliner "and at a different flight path at a different altitude."

"Dragonair is satisfied that no 'near miss' occurred," the statement said, adding that the flight recorder of its plane was being processed so the incident could be clarified.

The manager of Phuket airport, Prayoon Thavisang, also said he doubted a near-collision was responsible for the crash, which took place when skies were clear.

He said transportation, air force and aviation officials were to arrive in Phuket later today to try to determine the cause of the crash.

Prayoon said that in a routine landing procedure, both 737s contacted the control tower when approaching the airport at an altitude of 4,500-5,000 feet.

The Dragonair jet landed on schedule at 3:36 p.m. and the Thai airliner was to have touched down four minutes later, he said.

Prayoon speculated that the Thai pilot may have decided not to land immediately and had started to circle when the plane plunged into the sea.

He quoted the Dragonair co-pilot as saying the Thai aircraft nose-dived into the water. Other officials reached in Phuket quoted witnesses as saying there was a burst of fire on impact.

The doomed Flight TH365 had departed the city of Hat Yai, 155 miles east of Phuket, and was to continue to Bangkok.

Reporters on a marine police boat today saw a body in the rough waters near the crash site but few signs of wreckage. A ship equipped with a crane steamed into the area to haul debris from the 45-feet-deep water.

Hundreds of the victims' weeping relatives watched on shore as search teams brought life vests, torn flotation cushions and other debris from the crash site. There were no signs of burns on the wreckage.

Workers planned to retrieve the black box after senior police officials from Bangkok arrived later today.

The airline said navy and marine authorities would search for another day, then the airline would hire fishermen to search for remains.

Larb Hemlarb, who said he watched the crash from his fishing boat a mile away, said: "I saw the plane nose-dive after an explosion in the front of the plane. It then entered the water and exploded again.

"The water sprayed up to 200 meters (yards) and flames quickly engulfed the body (of the jet). It went straight down after the second explosion."

The disaster was the worst crash of a Thai Airways jet since April 27, 1980, when 41 people died after a jet was struck by lightning and plunged to earth north of Bangkok airport.

Labor Day traffic toll could reach 42

AUSTIN (AP) — The traffic death toll in Texas could hit 42 this Labor Day weekend, the Department of Public Safety says.

The DPS is predicting a slightly lower fatality toll during the 78-hour holiday period this year than in 1986, when 48 deaths were reported during the holiday and three more victims died later as a result of injuries.

"We are seeing a decline of approximately 13 percent in traffic fatalities reported in Texas so far this year compared to the same period last year. I'm hopeful that we'll be able to add 1987 to the downward trend in Texas traffic deaths which began in 1982," Leo Gossett, DPS director, said Monday.

Last year, 38 of the 51 Labor Day traffic deaths were the result of accidents in which drunken driving was a factor, he said.

Gossett said he hoped the state's new open-container law, which as of Monday prohibited drinking while driving, would help reduce this year's fatalities.

"The new state law which prohibits consumption of alcoholic beverages while driving went into effect today. Violators of this statute are now subject to receiving citations from our troopers and may face a maximum fine of $200," he said.

To beef up traffic-law enforcement, Gossett said the DPS will assign additional state troopers to the highways during the Labor Day weekend.

Also at the conference today at the Rich Air South terminal were National Republican Committeeman Ernest Angelo, Midland Rep. Tom Craddick and Midland County Republican Chairman Dean Rucker.

On a unrelated issue, Strake said he believed a Republican would replace Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hill, but acknowledged that "there are no front-runners."

Coup attempt only encouraged rebels, Filipino chief says

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The nation's military chief said today his troops prevented civil war by quelling last week's attempt to topple President Corazon Aquino.

The rebellion's six ringleaders remained at large, but officials scoffed at reports that the rebels had set up a "provisional government."

Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel Ramos said Friday's coup attempt, the gravest challenge to Mrs. Aquino's 18-month administration, had only encouraged the communist rebels and weakened the government's anti-insurgency program.

In Baguio City, 130 miles north of Manila, some cadets at the Philippine Military Academy boycotted meals and classes for a second day in support of the coup leaders.

Most of the academy's 600 or so cadets had abandoned the strike, though sympathy with the mutineers ran deep among students at the country's only service academy.

The protest began Sunday night when students issued a manifesto of support that decried the government's use of artillery, helicopter gunships and bombers to put down the uprising and criticized Mrs. Aquino for not authorizing the use of similar firepower against communist rebels.

Commodore Rogelio Dayan, the academy's superintendent, said two junior officers who led the protesting cadets had been arrested. He gave no other details.

Ramos told reporters coup leader Col. Gregorio Honasan had planned to overthrow the government, citing a Saturday-dated statement circulated in Manila declaring a provisional junta government pending new presidential elections.

Some right-wing sources said it was to have been issued had the mutineers managed to hold positions in Manila. It was impossible to determine if Honasan was sticking by the declaration.

Presidential press secretary Teodoro Benigno dismissed the reported rebel provisional government as an impotent "phantom junta" that does "not even control one square meter of territory."

Military officials speculated Honasan and the other ringleaders might be in Cagayan province, the northern Luzon political stronghold of Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile.

Ramos told reporters "The AFP (Armed Forces of the Philippines) averted civil war by crushing the coup attempt."

He said the rebellion had damaged the nation's "capability to confront the armed threat groups against our people, of which the (communists) are the most potent today."

The rebels cited the government's alleged inability to crush the communists as well as the presence of what they said were "marxists" in the administration as among the reasons for the coup attempt.

At least 37 people were killed and about 300 others wounded before troops loyal to Mrs. Aquino crushed the revolt early Saturday. The military announced 1,100 rebel troops had either surrendered or were captured after they attacked the presidential palace and military camps in the capital. Officers refused to estimate how many rebels are at large.

Ramos urged the government to take immediate steps to rectify numerous national problems and said better pay and benefits for soldiers "merits the highest priority."

The rebels gained support of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of soldiers and police in Manila, Cebu City, central Luzon and in the Bicol region of southeastern Luzon.

Monday, the armed forces' deputy chief, Maj. Gen. Eduardo Ermita, rushed to the military academy to try to talk the cadets out of the protest. He said in an interview on the government's television station today that the students were victims of the coup leaders' "disinformation" campaign, but had ended their protest after being given "the right information."

Meeting with Ortega called 'media circus'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega and Senate Republican leader Bob Dole repeatedly clashed during an unusual public debate over U.S. and Soviet involvement in Nicaragua.

The Kansas senator and five other congressmen on a fact-finding trip to the region later criticized the meeting as "a staged media circus."

During the nearly hour-long debate Monday, Dole asked Ortega to agree to three-way negotiations among the Sandinista government, the Reagan administration and the Nicaraguan Contra rebels to bring about a cease-fire.

The rebels, backed by the United States, are fighting to oust Ortega's leftist government. The U.S. Congress last year approved $100 million in military and non-lethal aid to the Contras.

Ortega rejected the three-way talks and repeated his call for negotiations between the United States and Nicaragua.

"The boss of the Contras is the government of the United States," he said.

Dole replied, "Then maybe we should negotiate with Cuba, since they are your bosses."

At another point, the two debated about freedom in the Central American nation.

"When are you going to give the people of Nicaragua some freedom?" Dole asked Ortega.

"We hope that the U.S. government gives the Nicaraguan people freedom to do what they want," Ortega replied.

"What about the Communists in Nicaragua? The Soviets, the Bulgarians and the Cubans? Are they going to leave?" the senator asked, referring to advisers and teachers from the Soviet bloc.

Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kansas, speaks with children of Nicaraguan refugees who are living in Jacaleapa, Honduras, Monday. Dole led a U.S. delegation to Honduras.

"There are only Nicaraguans here and the Bulgarians and Cubans who are here are aiding the Nicaraguans," Ortega replied.

"You're getting more than $300 million a year from the Soviets," Dole said.

Answered Ortega: "Then send us $300 million because we need more than a billion. We receive aid from the Soviet Union, from Spain, from Latin American countries, but we only receive shots from the United States and you want to dictate to us the policy that we should follow."

At one point Dole asked Ortega if he was interested in talking about the Aug. 7 peace plan signed by the five Central American presidents "or do you just want to have this pep rally here?"

Dole later said, "It's a propaganda rally."

Ortega usually meets with visiting American congressmen in private. But the Dole meeting was held in a convention center before reporters and broadcast on the government-run Voice of Nicaragua.

After arriving in San Jose, Costa Rica, the congressmen released a statement saying, "We have met with the presidents of three of the Central American countries."

"Our meeting with two of those presidents — President (Jose) Azcona of Honduras and, here, President (Oscar) Arias — were very useful, open, candid, serious discussions among people seriously interested in exploring all possible avenues to peace," said the statement, although it was released before the Arias meeting.

"Sadly our encounter with President Ortega in Nicaragua was different entirely," the statement continued.

"It was not a serious discussion; it was a staged media circus."

Dole told reporters that he continued to have reservations about the peace agreement.

"The basic reservation is that we are asked to cut off aid to the Contras, but there is no similar provision that applies to the Soviet Union and its aid to the Sandinista government," Dole said.

In the peace accord, the Central American countries agree to bar military or logistical support and the use of their territory to rebels.

The plan also calls for cease-fires, democratic reforms and amnesties.

Accompanying Dole were Republican Sens. Thad Cochran of Mississippi, Steven Symms of Idaho, John McCain of Arizona and David Karnes of Nebraska. Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., also attended.

The delegation arrived Sunday in Honduras and was scheduled to return today to the United States.

U.S. courting black South African trade unions

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. policymakers are trying to find ways to win friends among the black South African trade unionists who are playing a crucial role in the struggle against apartheid.

The peaceful outcome of the recent miners' strike is viewed by many administration, congressional and independent experts as a boost for black trade unionists and their struggle to dismantle apartheid through non-violent means.

And Congress is trying to strengthen U.S. influence by setting new conditions on the way an AFL-CIO group distributes $1.5 million yearly in government money to black trade unionists in South Africa.

The new guidelines are designed to channel more money to members of the Congress of South African Trade Unions, the biggest labor federation there with an estimated 700,000 members and the umbrella organization for the miners' union.

Although the miners' strike ended Sunday without the wage hikes demanded by the workers, it also ended without the violence that the government has used in the past to crush labor unrest.

"It was a draw," said Pauline Baker, a South Africa expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Washington. The workers accepted an offer from the mine owners that fell short of the demand for a 30 percent wage hike.

"But the union showed for the first time that it could organize a lengthy strike in a major industry, and carry it off over several weeks," Baker said, expressing a widely held view among administration and congressional experts.

"In the larger picture, it is really a success for negotiation rather than for confrontation. It enhances the prestige of labor unions across the board," Baker said.

Publicly, the State Department described the strike as "an internal wage dispute, without international ramifications," but privately, administration and congressional officials viewed the peaceful end of the strike as a boost for a negotiated end to apartheid.

President Reagan says he opposes apartheid, but argues that sanctions imposed by Congress over his veto weaken U.S. influence in South Africa. The administration has dropped its "constructive engagement" approach of nudging the South African government into ending apartheid.

One Capitol Hill aide who closely watches South Africa said, "The overall struggle (against apartheid) is going to have to include a strong labor role to help cripple the system. So it was extremely important to keep 250,000 people out of work in a critical sector."

State Department analysts, also speaking on condition they not be named, said violent suppression of the strike might have broken the union but probably would have driven the miners into the ranks of those who believe apartheid can be ended only by force.

WORLD IN BRIEF

50 miners believed dead after underground blast

WELKOM, South Africa (AP) — A mining company said today that a total of 50 miners were believed dead following an underground explosion that sent tons of rubble and an elevator full of men plunging down a gold mine shaft.

Gary Maude, manager of the St. Helena mine 140 miles southwest of Johannesburg, said "most if not all" of the 42 missing miners were believed trapped in the elevator.

He said the metal cage had probably fallen to the bottom of the 4,500-foot shaft, beneath 130 feet of debris and "I can't imagine anybody surviving that type of fall."

Five injured miners and eight bodies were found late Monday on a platform 2,300 feet down the shaft. Rescuers placed the injured one by one in a wooden chair and hauled them by rope 100 feet up to a rescue elevator. Recovery of the bodies was scheduled for today.

Maude told a dawn news conference at the mine that there was a chance that the elevator containing the missing men had stopped at about 3,000 feet down the shaft.

Maude said it would take hours to determine the location of the elevator by lowering a television camera another 650 feet past obstructions in the damaged shaft.

Italian inmates surrender

ROME (AP) — Rebel inmates who held 28 hostages for a week in a prison on Elba Island surrendered today, Italian news media reported.

The Italian news agency ANSA said the six rebel inmates released their hostages and gave up to authorities at 11:35 a.m. local time (4:35 a.m. CDT).

The state-run RAI TV, in a report from Elba, said the hostages were all in good condition.

The reported release came after lawyers for the rebels met with them in the presence of a representative of the human rights group Amnesty International, officials reported.

Italian news reports said the inmates were demanding various guarantees but that the government had insisted that the first priority was the release of the hostages.

The reports said the rebels were seeking transfers to other prisons, better treatment and a review of their trials.

Networks nix Soviet offer

NEW YORK (NYT) — The three major American television networks have turned down the Soviet offer to sell excerpts of the Moscow trial of Matthias Rust.

"You might say it's a bad precedent for any country, even the Soviet Union, to turn its justice system into a commercial venture," said Don DeCesare, the executive in charge of foreign coverage at CBS News.

The Orbita Technologies Corp. is trying to sell the rights to the trial on behalf of Soviet state television. According to the American networks, Orbita is asking an "entrance fee" of $100,000 for American broadcast rights and $10,000 for every minute of footage used.

Executives at all three major networks held talks with Orbita, but none of them have acquired the pictures. A spokesman for Ted Turner said his organization was aware of the offer but had held no negotiations. The Fox network does not have a news division.

Afghan talks to resume

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Afghan and Pakistani negotiators will resume talks next week that a Soviet official has said will set a deadline for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan, a U.N. official announced Monday.

Diego Cordovez, a U.N. undersecretary-general, said the indirect talks, which he mediates, will be held at Afghanistan's request Sept. 7-10 in Geneva.

Cordovez declined comment when asked what he expected the Afghans to offer.

He said, however, that he was hopeful the Afghan negotiators would be able to report progress on a debate within their country about what political system would be set up after an end to the 7-year-old war between the Soviet-backed Afghan government troops and guerrillas backed by the United States and Pakistan.

The key obstacle to an agreement, Cordovez said, is a timetable for the withdrawal of the estimated 115,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

Korean students battle riot police as government backs workers' rights

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Waves of students hurling firebombs and rocks battled riot police on the first day of the new semester today while the government said it would try to defuse nationwide labor unrest by protecting workers' rights.

On the political front, officials said leaders of the governing and opposition parties will meet Wednesday to discuss the nation's transition to full democracy.

About 4,000 students from three Seoul colleges battled police for almost three hours at Seoul National University on the outskirts of the capital after holding a rally to denounce the government and demand the release of political prisoners.

"Down with the military dictatorship!" students chanted as they clashed with police on the sprawling campus. "Down with the murder regime!" was another rallying cry.

Hundreds of riot police in padded green combat fatigues and black visored helmets and shields fired volley after volley of tear gas to drive students back at Seoul National University after they tried to march into the street.

Yonhap, the Korean news agency, said 9,100 students took part in protests at 20 schools nationwide, but did not say how many of the demonstrations were violent.

Several injured police officers were seen being taken away after they were hit by rocks and other missiles at Seoul National University. Police declined to give any figures on injuries of officers or students.

The government said about 600 labor disputes remained unresolved today. New actions included a strike by thousands of Seoul taxi drivers seeking a guaranteed salary, and a slowdown threat by workers at the nation's No. 1 shipyard.

Strikes began in early July after President Chun Doo-hwan agreed to democratic reforms, including more labor freedom. Workers are seeking higher pay, shorter hours and better benefits. The labor problems resulted in a nearly fourfold drop in the nation's monthly trade surplus for August, the government announced today.

Prime Minister Kim Chung-yul told the opening session of the 11th Conference of Asian and Pacific Labor Ministers today that South Korean workers' wages and benefits had not kept pace with the enormous economic growth in which they have played a key role.

"In contrast to the astounding economic growth and industrialization, it is true that the treatment of workers has fallen short of their expectations," he told the gathering of labor ministers and officials from 28 nations.

Kim said the hundreds of strikes that have hit South Korea since July have strained the economy but should be regarded as part of the normal development of an industrial economy.

The prime minister said the government was working to end the labor unrest by ensuring the benefits of economic growth were shared by all segments of society.

Opposition and labor groups contend the government has ignored workers' rights for the sake of rapid industrial expansion.

Any chance is better than no chance at all, even at the cost of an undertrick or two. The odds of declarer making his spade game were long indeed, but he deserves highest praise for finding the only line that offered some chance.

With eight sure tricks in hand, South's jump to four spades gets the nod of approval from this department. West correctly refrained from doubling, because nothing in his hand suggested the opponents were out of their depth.

West led a low club and declarer was dismayed with his dummy—clubs was the last suit in which he had hoped to find values. However, declarer worked out a combination that would permit him to establish two tricks in the suit—West had to be leading from specifically 10-third.

For South's plan to succeed, he would need two entries to dummy, and the trump spots were just good enough to offer that possibility. At trick one declarer played the eight of clubs from the table, and his chances brightened when that fetched the king from East. Declarer ruffed, led a low trump and boldly finessed the eight. The finesse's success provided the needed extra entry. The jack of clubs was covered by the ace and ruffed high, and a trump to the ten was doubly successful—it provided the necessary entry while drawing both outstanding trumps.

One little problem still remained. Declarer cashed the queen of clubs for a heart discard and, when the ten dropped, all was well. The nine of clubs was established as the game-going trick. (Since this line might have converted eight tricks to seven, we wonder whether declarer would have been quite so brave had he been doubled!)

John Huston remembered in private service

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Movie great John Huston has been laid to rest in the cemetery containing the graves of Hollywood legends Cecil B. DeMille, Rudolph Valentino, Peter Lorre and Douglas Fairbanks Sr.

Huston's daughter, actress Anjelica Huston, and her friend Jack Nicholson were among the 20 mourners who attended Monday's private 45-minute service at Chapel of the Psalms at Hollywood Memorial Park.

About 40 reporters, photographers and television camera crews as well as a curious onlookers were kept away from the chapel.

Nicholson and Miss Huston stood quietly outside the chapel after the ceremony for several minutes, embracing mourners.

Details about the service were not disclosed.

"The family was absolutely adamant that we give out no details, and I wouldn't do anything to hurt that family for the world. They've been just wonderful," said cemetery spokeswoman Jeannie Kidd.

A public memorial service for the Academy Award-winning director, under the auspices of the Directors Guild of America, is planned within two weeks.

Huston's body was returned to California shortly after his death on Friday in Rhode Island at age 81.

The director of such classics as "The Maltese Falcon" and "The African Queen" was remembered by fellow actors and friends as a giant in the motion picture industry, and a romantic whose own life matched that of his diverse and colorful films.

Huston's 40 films also included Tennessee Williams' play "Night of the Iguana," the musical "Annie," and "Prizzi's Honor."

He won Academy Awards as writer-director of "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," in which his father, Walter, won an Oscar for best supporting actor. He also directed daughter, Anjelica, in her Oscar-winning role in "Prizzi's Honor."

NEW YORK (AP) — "Bad" was good for record stores as Michael Jackson's first album in 4½ years hit the racks only to be scooped up by eager fans.

"It's been constant. It's been nuts," Foster Grimm, floor manager of a Sam Goody store in Manhattan, said Monday as 1,500 copies of the album went on sale there.

Grimm predicted he would sell out in a day or two.

The 16-minute title video, directed by Martin Scorsese, was unveiled Monday night when CBS broadcast a half-hour special on Jackson.

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Blind yachtsman Jim Dickson, who was forced to detour to Bermuda during his bid to sail alone across the Atlantic, had company when he left port for the trip home.

Dickson set sail in his sloop, Eye Opener, for Portsmouth, R.I., on Monday night, said Joe Pagnam, duty radio officer for Bermuda's search and rescue center.

He is being accompanied by veteran solo sailor Francis Stokes.

"I'm looking forward to doing some sailing again and I'm looking forward to going home," Dickson, 41, of Washington, D.C., said before he departed.

Jefferson notes 'speedy' service between U.S., France

1787 Constitution Daybook

Saturday, Sept. 1, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Library Company of Philadelphia had the lantern on the stairway up to the second floor of Carpenters' Hall repaired for 7 shillings and 6 pence.

Pennsylvania's Supreme Executive Council ordered the treasurer to pay the wardens of the Port of Philadelphia 920 pounds "to be applied toward the further improvement of the navigation in the bay and river Delaware, payable out of the duties arising from tonnage."

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Writing from Paris, Ambassador Thomas Jefferson informed the Count de Moustier about improved communication with America:

"Passages from France to America are almost always under 7 weeks, those from America to France under 5 weeks. Not above one passage in a year, of the eight performed by the packets, will exceed these terms. If a letter is sent by the packet which sails from Havre Mar. 25 it will arrive at New York before May 15. It must then wait 25 days, to wit to June 10, before a packet will be sailing to bring the answer."

CONVENTION TODAY

Today's session was a brief one. As James Madison noted it:

"Mr. Brearley from the Comme. of eleven to which were referred yesterday, the postponed part of the Constitution & parts of Reports not acted upon, made the following partial report.

"That in lieu of the 9th. sect: of art: 6. the words following be inserted viz. The members of each House shall be ineligible to any civil office under the authority of the U.S. during the time for which they shall respectively be elected, and no person holding an office under the U.S. shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.'

"Mr. Rutlidge from the Committee to whom were referred sundry propositions, together with art: XVI, reported that the following additions be made to the Report — viz. 'After the word "States" in the last line on the Margin of the 3d. page (see the printed Report) — add "to establish uniform laws on the subject of Bankruptcies" and insert the following as Art: XVI — viz, "Full faith and credit ought to be given in each State to the public acts, records, and Judicial proceedings of every other State, and the Legislature shall by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, Records, & proceedings shall be proved and the effect which Judgments obtained in one State, shall have in another."

"After receiving these reports The House adjourned to 10 o'clock on Monday next."

DELEGATES TODAY

Benjamin Franklin presided at the meeting of the state's Supreme Executive Council.

An alarmed and depressed Elbridge Gerry wrote his wife:

"I am distressed my dearest Girl exceedingly, at the information in yours of the 29th & 30th of your indisposition, & shall prepare myself to leave this city on the arrival of the next post unless you are better. Indeed I would not remain here two hours was I not undr a necessity of staying to prevent my colleagues from saying that I broke up the representation (Caleb Strong had left, leaving Massachusetts with only the three delegates needed to cast its vote), & that they were averse to an arbitrary system of Government, for such it is at present."

LOOKING BACK
The French Connection

By 1787, Franco-American cultural exchange and trade had grown from a trickle to a tidal wave. France began her love affair with Americans when introduced to the first ambassador, Benjamin Franklin, in 1776. Franklin always drew an admiring crowd in his public appearances.

By 1783 there was established a regular packet boat service between France and the United States. Robert Morris and William Blount were exporting substantial shipments of American tobacco to France.

Americans started visiting and living in France. Charles Bulfinch, the architect, John Trumbull, the artist, John Paul Jones, naval hero, and Thomas Paine, author and bridge builder, all visited Paris in the 1780s.

Philadelphia's American Philosophical Society enjoyed high repute in Paris. Between 1784 and 1793, 31 Frenchmen were elected to the APS. Boston's American Academy of Arts and Sciences, likewise, boasted a significant French membership. The Society of Cincinnati, the organization of Revolutionary War officers, included a Paris chapter of French veterans.

The ambassador in Paris in 1787, Thomas Jefferson, faced the accusation of being too pro-French both in his term as Washington's secretary of state and as the third president.

Closing a meeting seldom good idea

The recent closed session held by members of the Midland County Commissioners Court for the purpose of talking to Sheriff Gary Painter is an example of public officials acting too hastily to close the doors to a segment of the public's business.

The commissioners and county judge wanted to know more about the sheriff's role in the recent Iranian arms sale "sting" operation conducted with the help of undercover officers from outside this area. Confronted with provisions contained in the Texas Open Meetings Act, they determined that the meeting with Painter could be closed to the public under an exception clause in the law which states "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to require governmental bodies to hold meetings open to the public in cases involving the appointment, employment, EVALUATION (our capital letters), reassignment, duties, discipline, or dismissal of a public officer or employee, unless such officer or employee requests a public hearing."

At first, different members of the court gave different reasons for justifying a closed meeting. One suggested they would need to look into the financial aspect of the sting; another mentioned "litigation" as being the reason why a closed session would be in order. But it was the word "evaluation" in the above exception which commissioners finally decided would provide the best reason for a secret session.

That probably would be true if they were indeed reviewing or evaluating Painter's actions with the possibility of taking disciplinary action as a result of it. But the court only has purse-string authority over the sheriff's department in the sense of determining what funds it will receive. More likely, it appeared to us, commissioners merely wanted to know more about the operation and the role of the sheriff's department personnel and preferred to question Painter in private.

It was our opinion that the public would be interested in knowing as much about the project as the commissioners would come to know and had every right to be informed. Retired District Judge Perry Pickett agreed and ruled "In the court's opinion, the tapes do not disclose anything to the court's satisfaction that would come within purview of Subsection G (of the Texas Open Meetings Act)." He ordered contents of tapes made during the closed session to be released.

There are occasions when government officials have a right, perhaps even an obligation, to meet in private. And the law takes that into consideration, providing for closed sessions of governmental bodies when land or other property acquisition is to be discussed in addition to a limited number of other specific exceptions.

But those elected to serve the public interest should take the position that the fewer private sessions they have, the better. They should go out of their way to hold their meetings in public, including those information-getting sessions that from time to time may be necessary.

And if they see an opportunity to conduct a closed-door session but realize the legitimacy of holding the meeting in private is borderline, we hope they would opt to err on the side of the public's right to know — not on their right to meet in secret.

Stopping a steamroller

The fire stations will stay and a heartfelt "thank you" is due the three council members who turned the steam roller around.

Our city council has had a monumental task in fashioning a budget for extremely trying times. Unfortunately, along the way, our fire stations became involved in the cost-cutting process and, to those making the desisions, seemed to be a viable way of saving $460,000. In focusing on this, somehow the fact was overlooked that the city has an "emergency fund" of over $11 million from which funds could be drawn and the city was, indeed, in a time of emergency.

Whether you are a city, a family, or an individual there is a hesitation to dig into your "nest egg" because, if properly invested, it is generating additional revenue and is growing. If prudence dictates that it is time to draw on this account, in this case in the interest of safety for all the citizens of the city, then that became the responsible thing to do.

To the credit of the city council, the hearing of the proposition to close the stations was moved to the Midland Convention Center where every person who wanted to address the issue was allowed to have his or her say. With 200 to 300 citizens in attendance, the council listened and took a few shots to the solar plexus by citizens concerned by different aspects of the issue. A couple of speakers voiced their opinions that they felt it was useless for them to "blow off steam" because they thought that the council had already made up its collective mind and would close the stations regardless of their feelings.

Not so, Midland! The vote is history and we have retained our stations.

Credit for this must be given to the many citizens who chose to become involved, especially those who did the work in accumulating over 3,000 signatures on a petition, and those who took the time to be in attendance at the hearing. Your city council did listen and for that, a heartfelt "thank you" goes to Councilmen Marcum and Rendell and to Mayor Thomas who changed their positions on the issue and defeated the closing of the stations.

As a follow-up, a motion to fund the stations by withdrawal from the emergency fund, rather than by raising taxes, was passed by Councilwoman Heck joining Marcum, Rendell and Thomas. It was a tough decision, but we thank all of you for showing the strength to turn aside the steamroller.

The system works!

Privatization helps

The staff of the City of Midland Community Services Department wishes to express their appreciation to Midland Pool Management Inc., 3003 North A, for an outstanding job of managing the four city pools this 1987 summer season. This is the second year the City of Midland and Midland Pool Management Inc. have entered into a management contract. This arrangement has proven to be beneficial for all parties concerned by providing recreational swimming, swimming lessons and training time for the members of the City Of Midland Swim Team.

The City of Midland Community Services Department received numerous compliments throughout the summer from people who were pleased with the swim lessons, the professional manner of the pools' staffs and general maintenance of the pool area.

The concept of privatizing recreation has reached many cities, but Midland is one of the few that has actually implemented programs using private organizations. The relationship between Midland Pool Management Inc. and the City of Midland utilizes the expertise of a private group specializing in all aspects of swimming, while saving the citizens of Midland dollars that would be spent to staff and manage the four city-owned pools.

Again, we at the City of Midland thank the Board of Midland Pool Management Inc., Brad Swendig and his staff, and all of the dedicated summer employees for a job well done.

FBI's movie critics panned 'Cowboys'

WASHINGTON — Siskel and Ebert? Rex Reed? Pauline Kael? Forget 'em. For real movie critics, we suggest the FBI.

Jack Anderson

Consider this thoughtful review of the film "Lonesome Cowboys" by two FBI agents: "There was no plot to the film and no character development throughout. ... (The) film also skips from scene to scene without continuity. ... Many of the cast portrayed their parts as if in a stupor from marijuana, drugs or alcohol."

The movie under FBI scrutiny was one of the lesser cinematic endeavors of the late pop artist Andy Warhol. The FBI was checking it for possible violation of a federal law against interstate transportation of obscene material.

In furtherance of this investigation, two G-men were assigned to preview "Lonesome Cowboys" at a midnight showing during the 1968 San Francisco International Film Festival. Exactly how the two upright, uptight FBI film critics were able to infiltrate what must have been a fairly eccentric audience in the San Francisco of that bizarre era and take notes in the dark is not revealed in the report to their late, straight-laced boss, J. Edgar Hoover.

But critique the movie they did, and our associate Stewart Harris has obtained their report from the FBI's file on Warhol, thanks to the Freedom of Information Act.

The FBI investigation was launched after the bureau's Phoenix office got a tip that Warhol and his unholy crew were making a dirty movie at the Rancho Dinda Guest Ranch in Oracle, Ariz.

Waiting until the film was completed to pounce, the FBI assigned two agents to attend the San Francisco premiere. They were obviously upset.

"All the males in the cast displayed homosexual tendencies and conducted themselves toward one another in an effeminate manner," the FBI critics reported.

Despite this critical breakthrough, the G-men insisted on judging the movie as a serious cinematic production. They also complained about the poor quality of the sound track.

They described how the cowboys in the cast exposed themselves on the screen, and recounted how the female star sat up after one particularly lewd encounter, looked at the camera and said, "Now look — you have embarrassed those children." The baffled FBI critics added: "There were no children in the movie."

The G-men meticulously described the suggestive poses of the actors, but noted that the cast did not appear to have consummated their wanton behavior on screen.

The FBI critics wrote that the film was "a remotely connected series of scenes which depicted situations of sexual relationships of homosexual and heterosexual nature."

The G-men were also not impressed with Taylor Meade, one of the movie's actors who introduced "Lonesome Cowboys" to the San Francisco film buffs.

"Meade spoke to the audience for a few minutes in a senseless monologue," they reported, "and said something about not knowing whether to put the beginning of the movie at the end or vice versa."

Unlike most film critics, the FBI actually pursued the moviemaker physically. The bureau established that Warhol had transported the movie from the Arizona dude ranch to New York City — with a stop at Atlanta.

But the U.S. attorney in Phoenix had the final review. He concluded: "While in my opinion the movie had no redeeming value whatsoever, neither was it obscene within the definition of that word ... by the Supreme Court of the United States. ... Prosecution is hereby declined."

INSIDE JOB — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has its own version of the old saw, "Physician, heal thyself." Faced with the possibility that Commissioner Thomas Roberts or someone in his office had leaked a sensitive internal document to a Louisiana utility in 1983, the commission gave Roberts the job of investigating the leak, instead of assigning the task to the agency's office of investigation.

According to investigators for Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, Roberts dropped his probe of himself after personnel in his office denied leaking the internal memorandum. The Louisiana power plant official who obtained the document was never asked under oath where he got it. Roberts eventually pinned the blame on cleaning personnel or interns, but he never identified an actual suspect.

Glenn has turned the matter over to a federal prosecutor for a proper investigation. The senator has already called for Roberts' resignation.

Kemp must assure voters he's 'presidential'

SUNAPEE, N.H. — Rep. Jack Kemp is close to becoming the clear conservative option in New Hampshire but certainly is not there yet, as reflected by two party activists who saw him address a Sullivan County Republican reception here.

"Bush is a wimp," Gertrude Rowe told us. Katharine Cooeshall said, "I just don't care for Dole personally." Fervent admirers of Ronald Reagan, Henry Hyde and Ollie North, they came here seeking a right-wing messiah. They nodded heads when Kemp assailed high taxes and communism and plumped for SDI and the contras. Yet, they left as they arrived: uncommitted and wanting to hear more. "We're still looking," Gertrude concluded.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Kemp's strategists in the state call the two women typical of many conservative Republicans — including Sen. Gordon Humphrey. Kemp fills the Manchester Union-Leader's ideological bill, but that pugnacious right-wing newspaper has not yet and may never endorse him.

The problem is Jack Kemp's own. Although his positions fit New Hampshire Republicanism, he has not fully mastered the mechanics of running for president. He has made strides but still has not disciplined himself to the rigidly-formatted stump speech. Nor has he been as tough on Vice President George Bush and Sen. Robert J. Dole as his managers want. He has to be disciplined and combative in a state that is dangerous for Bush and Dole but indispensable for Kemp.

Early polls show only that New Hampshire Republicans are not sure. For all of Bush's name identification, organization and muscular support from Gov. John Sununu, he has no better than 25 percent support. Kemp and Dole are about even, far behind the vice president.

What cheers the Kemp camp is that Dole, characteristically, has dropped out of an ideological battle for the Right and has resumed his image as pragmatist for all philosophies. His key supporters include such stalwarts of the New Hampshire party's Rockefeller wing as ex-governor Walter Peterson and ex-representative Perkins Bass.

They were inherited by Dole from Howard Baker's aborted campaign as was Sen. Warren Rudman (whose prospective endorsement is certain). But Rudman's performance in the Iran-contra hearings has anathematized him on the Right.

The Dole-Rudman emphasis on deficit reduction hardly can compete with Kemp's self-portrayal as a "heavily-armed dove" who takes "the pledge against any tax increase." "New Hampshire Republicans only care about communism and taxes," Kemp's state chairman, former State Supreme Court chief justice Chuck Douglas, told us.

Where Kemp falls short for Douglas is unwillingness to mix it. Under staff prodding, Kemp opened a three-day swing through New Hampshire by sniping at Dole's conditional support of an oil import tax. After one day, Douglas and national campaign consultant Roger Stone were unhappy.

Why, they asked Kemp over dinner, not hit Bush and Dole on the issues? When he calls himself "the only candidate who does not believe in cutting back Social Security," why not name the vice president and Senate minority leader as those who do? Because it's too early, the congressman replied. The next day he mentioned Bush not at all and Dole only fleetingly (in connection with the oil import tax).

Actually, conservatives such as Union Leader Publisher Nackey Loeb are well aware of the Bush-Dole record. Each has failed in courting the newspaper's support. In a chat with us, Mrs. Loeb said no announced candidate "can fill the shoes of President Reagan." She regarded ex-senator Paul Laxalt, an old friend, out of contention even before he quit. She is intrigued by Pierre du Pont's new domestic conservatism but worries about him on foreign policy, and would be interested in Jeane Kirkpatrick if she ran.

Why not Kemp? He has not entranced Mrs. Loeb, who says voters see him trying to "cram his views down their throats." By widespread testimony, however, Kemp has improved. Supporters are grateful he has virtually discarded gold standard talk, focusing on defense, taxes and the family.

He still has not managed the presidential candidate's ultimate self-discipline: mind-numbing repetition of an unvarying campaign speech. Content and quality of Kemp's speeches vary. He wowed a Laconia "recruitment" luncheon but that night at a Tuftonboro reception diappointed supporters by digressing into old football stories. Established as the clearest advocate of the Right, Kemp must still convince conservative voters that he is presidential.

CHARLEY REESE

Women's liberation a cruel joke on females

There is an old male folk saying which illustrates the folly of feminism. It says, "If the milk is free, why buy the cow?"

Charley Reese

The rock of reality on which modern feminism founders is that nature programmed the two sexes differently. For the male, sex can be an entirely casual affair. Aside from the risk of disease, coupling has no physical or emotional consequences for the male. They can easily snuff out their cigarette, ride off into the sunset, and take what companionship they need from their horse and other males.

The woman, alas, can get pregnant. The woman, alas, at some point in her life will want to get pregnant. The woman will be bonded to the child in a way that will mean either a lifetime commitment to the child she berths or a lifetime of agonizing regret for the child she aborts.

It may not be fair, but then you have to be ignorant to an astounding degree to think nature is concerned about fairness. Nature's only concerns are life and death.

What feminists have accomplished is to undo 2,000 years of work by wiser women to compensate for this natural difference between male and female by weaving an elaborate web of romanticism, duty, love and obligation which enticed the natural wanderer into sharing responsibility for the children.

Wiser women knew that a stable family and a provider while she was incapacitated during pregnancy and tied to dependent offspring were far more important than any games. Let the dummy think he is king as long as he can keep the cookpot full and fight off predators.

Women struggling alone to survive and raise children today are learning the bitter lesson that new ideologies, no matter how loudly broadcast, are no substitute for ancient wisdom.

Women's lib is a cruel joke — on non-lesbian women. It coincides with the male nature and conflicts with the female nature. It is in the interest of males and not in the interest of women. Casual sex with no commitment was a male fantasy in the pre-lib days. Now, thanks to the feminist movement, it is not only a reality, which to some extent it was anyway, but of more critical importance, it is now a socially approved reality.

All of this has nothing to do with equity issues such as equal pay for equal work or opportunity based on merit rather than sex. The mistake many women made was to allow women with wider agendas to graft onto these legitimate equity matters their own perverted ideology.

It is a great fallacy to believe that civilization is repression and therefore, once it is shed, then natural man and natural woman will create paradise.

It is natural to kill someone who frustrates you. It is civilized not to act on the impulse. Shedding civilization's restraints produces about what you see today: brutality, crudeness, rudeness, selfishness, crime, and disease.

People today are immunizing their children against civilization by exposing them to heavy doses of violence, sex, murder and brutality before they even develop zits and breasts. That ought to produce an interesting life style. It's odd that people who think it's okay to regulate what strangers might stuff into their child's body readily allow strangers to stuff whatever they wish into their child's mind.

To avoid being entirely negative, I suggest you join the National Rifle Association and lobby hard against gun control laws because the kind of interesting life style non-civilization is going to produce will make proficiency in firearms a lot more useful than the ability to conduct polite conversation.

In the natural state, cunning and force — not reason and persuasion — are the requirements of survival.

Feminism is just one salient in a general attack against civilization. God's great joke on human beings is to always give us what we think we want.

Pope may be invited to Moscow

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst European Correspondent

PARIS — Speculation is strong in Western European diplomatic and religious circles that the winds of glasnost are about to blow toward the Vatican, bearing an invitation to Pope John Paul II to visit Moscow next year.

An accumulation of recent signs points toward a dramatic change in the Soviet approach to its relations with the Catholic Church, its most unbending and rigorous adversary during most of the 70 year existence of the Soviet state.

The Gorbachev leadership has initiated a series of conciliatory gestures. At least superficially, they seem to represent in the religious sphere some of the same readiness to break molds that has been ostentatiously on display over political and economic matters.

These range from a self-consciously warm welcome accorded to Mother Theresa on a visit to Moscow to statements by the Soviet press pointedly absolving Catholics from blame for the recent anti-Soviet, nationalist demonstrations in Lithuania.

Church sources say that the most significant development may be the sudden emergence from clandestinity of two bishops and nearly 200 priests belonging to the Ukrainian Uniate Church, whose allegiance is to Rome.

The clergymen announced in early August that, in view of an "improved atmosphere," they were encouraged to seek "legalization" and "recognition" by the Soviet authorities.

Church informants believe it's clear they acted with Moscow's prior approval.

Vatican officials have maintained a prudent public silence. Permitting the re-establishment of the Uniate Church, which was forcibly "integrated" into the Russian Orthodox Church at Stalin's orders 40 years ago, would unquestionably be a positive step.

The Uniates — who celebrate the Orthodox rite but accept the pope as their spiritual chief — were suppressed as part of a ruthless postwar campaign to obliterate Ukrainian separatism.

The revival of nationalist sentiment among the 40 million Ukrainians still haunts the Kremlin. As a symptom of the persistence of anti-Russian, national feeling throughout the U.S.S.R., the recent protests in Lithuania and the other Baltic states can have done nothing to allay its fears.

For that reason alone, Vatican officials reportedly are wary. A sudden willingness on the part of the Soviet government to re-establish the Uniates looks too good to be true.

Skeptics suspect the Soviets may be ready to legalize the Ukrainian Catholics because it would make them easier to control than they've been as an underground organization, a "church of the catacombs."

Some Western European churchmen say the Uniate clergy who issued the declaration may be manipulated by the KGB, which maintains a keen interest in religious affairs.

Nevertheless, Gorbachev appears to recognize that a new footing in relations with the Vatican is a vital component of his policy of change.

Not only do those relations affect key areas of the Soviet Union itself, like the Baltic states and the Ukraine, but longterm "normalization" in Catholic Eastern Europe is clearly impossible without it.

Some observers suspect Gorbachev may be looking even further afield. A Soviet government that could claim it accorded religious freedom to Catholics would experience fewer obstacles in trying to expand its influence in Latin America.

The nationalist protests in overwhelmingly Catholic Lithuania are believed to have particularly rattled the Kremlin. Despite disclaimers by the Tass news agency and other organs of the official media, informants say Catholic groups played a big part in the demonstrations.

Religious resistance in Lithuania has long been intense. It took on fresh strength from the role played by Polish Catholics during the Solidarity movement in 1980-82.

For the past two years, there have been signs of a more "liberal" Soviet policy toward Lithuanian Catholics. A hint that Moscow might be ready to meet some of the Vatican's demands for greater religious freedom there occurred only a few weeks ago.

Cardinal Sin of the Philippines, on a visit to the Soviet Union, became the first foreign prelate since the Soviet annexation to be allowed to meet with Catholic churchmen in Lithuania.

But the nationalist demonstrations threaten to derail the Soviet timetable for inviting Pope John Paul.

The Vatican has said firmly that satisfactory assurances concerning Catholic rights in Lithuania were an essential condition for a papal visit.

Western diplomats believe Gorbachev is toying with the idea of inviting the pope to a projected international conference on human rights in Moscow.

American church expressing its discontent

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — In America, a land of nearly 53 million Catholics, Pope John Paul II will encounter a church caught in the throes of discontent, with many members in rebellion against Vatican authority on critical moral and social issues.

As the charismatic pontiff prepares for his second papal visit to the United States, his confidantes report that he is "deeply troubled" by growing dissidence among many American Catholics who conduct their private lives independent of church doctrine on a number of sexual issues.

In a nine-day tour, stretching from Florida across the Sun Belt to Texas and California and then to Detroit, the pontiff is expected to encounter complaints from American Catholics and others over Rome's positions on such matters as birth control, abortion, homosexuality, divorce, premarital sex, the role of women in the church and celibacy in an all-male priesthood.

In some cities, groups opposing the Vatican on these issues have promised vigorous demonstrations.

In addition, the pope may face lingering anger from some American Jewish leaders who resented his June 25 audience with Austrian President Kurt Waldheim, an officer in a Nazi army unit implicated in the deportation of Jews from Greece during World War II.

THE POPE, HOWEVER, has written an emotional letter decrying the suffering of Jews during the Holocaust, and Catholic leaders hope that it will allay remaining tensions.

Within the nation's Catholic community, turmoil bred of dissent from Vatican dogma has grown since the pope last visited America in 1979, and the friction has proved costly in terms of church membership, attendance at mass, financial contributions and recruitment of priests and nuns.

The pope's distress over the controversies is reflected in his comments that church members who stray from Vatican doctrine on such matters possess "deficiencies" that must be corrected.

Vatican officials report that the pope will address most of the contentious issues in homilies, speeches, and at meetings during his Sept. 10-19 pilgrimage. One aide, however, predicted that the pope's message will be "affirmative and encouraging" rather than confrontational.

"The Holy Father won't come and preach that this or that is wrong with the church in your country and this is what you must do to set them right," the aide said. "It doesn't work that way."

According to Archbishop John L. May of St. Louis, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, the pontiff will not stray from traditional teachings. "As the chief teacher of Catholic truth," May says, "(the pope) doesn't change his message as he goes from place to place."

SUMMING UP THE problems facing the pontiff, the Rev. Richard McBrien, director of theology at the University of Notre Dame, explains that the church, as an institution "is less sure of itself" and "speaks in more nuanced tones." Members no longer "defer automatically to the directives of the hierarchy or the clergy," he notes.

But John Cardinal Krol of Philadelphia, a close friend of John Paul II, maintains that differences between the Vatican and American Catholics have been exaggerated.

He predicts the pope will "preach the doctrine of the church as he does on all of his visits. He will stress that love for each other is the way he feels the church should deal with dissident Catholics."

Archbishop Daniel Pilarczyk of Cincinnati echoes that sentiment. "We're not talking about a church that is coming apart at the seams," he insists. Nevertheless, Pilarczyk concedes that "there are differences of opinion about certain teachings" and about disciplinary action that has been taken against U.S. clergymen who have strayed from church doctrine.

The most celebrated recent examples are Vatican-ordered actions against Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen of Seattle and the Rev. Charles Curran, a former theologian at Catholic University in Washington, D.C.

Hunthausen — accused of tolerating a Mass by a homosexual group, taking liberties with sacraments and dispensing marriage annulments too liberally — was stripped in January 1986 of his authority in those and other matters.

BUT LAST MAY, the Vatican bowed to pressure from American bishops and essentially restored his authority.

Curran has been less fortunate. Because he deviated from church doctrine on matters of sexuality, he has been forbidden to teach at Catholic University and is seeking reinstatement through the courts. He will begin a one-year teaching assignment at Cornell University this fall.

Other conflicts include the expulsion from a parish school of a 12-year-old girl, Sarabeth Eason of Toledo, Ohio, for supporting a woman's right to abortion, and the excommunication of Mary Anne Sorrentino, executive director of Planned Parenthood of Rhode Island for her pro-choice activism.

The Rev. Terrence Sweeney of Los Angeles was also expelled from the Jesuit order because he refused to squelch a survey he had conducted showing that one of every four U.S. bishops polled approved of optional celibacy for priests. The priesthood, according to church teaching backed by the Polish-born pontiff, must remain male and celibate.

At the same time, in opposing abortion, artificial birth control and premarital sex, while decrying leniency in annulments and castigating homosexual activity, John Paul II will encounter an American Catholic community with decidedly different views.

A 1985 New York Times-CBS poll found 73 percent of American Catholics favor allowing Catholics to divorce and remarry; 68 percent favor birth control; 63 percent favor permission for priests to marry; and 52 percent favor ordination into the clergy for women.

Within the American church itself, opposition to Catholic teachings also is evident. The 2,000-member National Coalition of American Nuns, for instance, has declared itself pro-choice on abortion.

AND SUCH LAY GROUPS as Dignity Inc., an organization of gay activists, are urging the church to cease viewing homosexuality as sinful.

Despite its troubles here, the Catholic church still appears to be in better shape in the United States than in many other nations. Only Brazil and Italy contain more Catholics. And the U.S. church's real estate holdings and securities, estimated at $50 billion, make it the wealthiest on Earth.

What has not grown in America, however, are the ranks of the church's formal leadership — priests, nuns and religious brothers. Most alarming, perhaps, is the fact that enrollment in Catholic seminaries in the United States is one quarter what it was in 1965.

Paralleling the decline in vocations has been a dramatic decline in the number of U.S. Catholic schools and students. At their peak in 1964, Catholic parochial schools had more than 5.6 million students enrolled. Now, the number is less than half that.

On the loss of religious vocations, conservatives blame a lack of church discipline and the reforms of the Second Vatican Council. Catholic liberals insist that the church's "unbending views" are at fault.

The Vatican II council, summoned by Pope John XXIII and held in Rome from 1962 to 1965, tried to make Catholicism more contemporary by replacing the use Latin in the liturgy with national languages, granting greater freedom to religious orders, offering wider lay participation in church life and urging greater dialogue with Protestants and Jews.

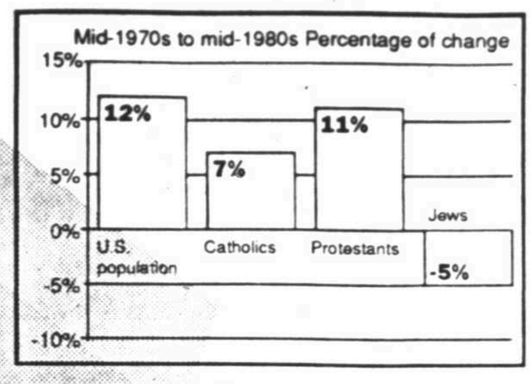

Historian David O'Brien of Holy Cross College says the Council "replaced a united, disciplined church that had a clear statement of belief with a pluralistic church open to greater dialogue and reflection."

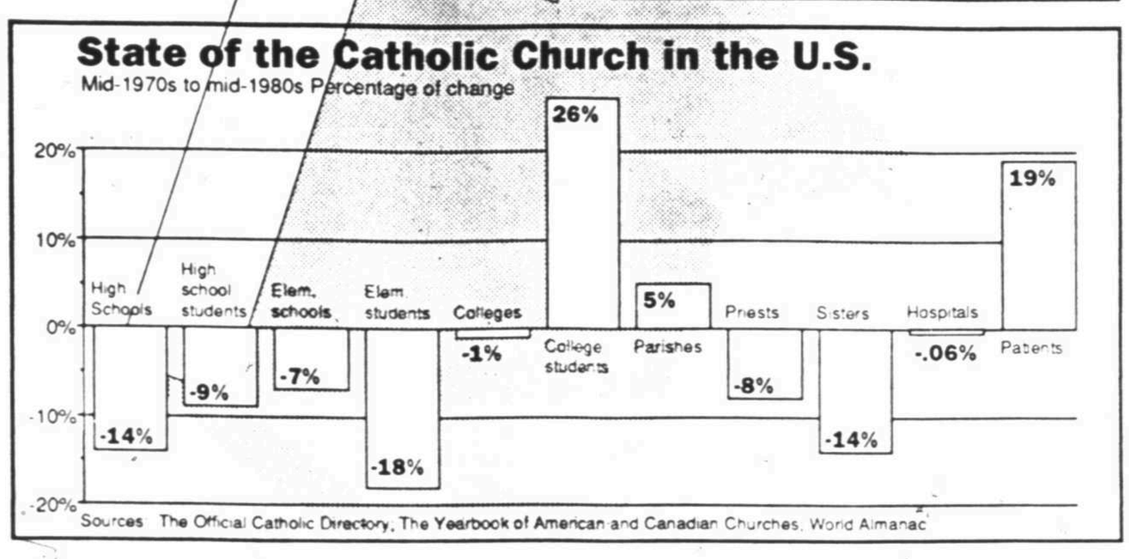

ACCORDING TO A study conducted by the University of Notre Dame in 1985, the stereotypical picture of a Catholic parish where the priest "took care of God, Sister Cerita ran the school and the people met their mass obligations and said 'Hail Mary's' " would be a "woefully inadequate" image of U.S. Catholic churches in the 1980s.

The study determined that fewer Catholics are baptizing their children or sending them to parochial schools. It also found that only 44 percent attend weekly mass, while 27 percent attend mass only once a year.

Another major controversy emanates from the demand of women for enlarged roles in church life. Although the Vatican has decreed that women cannot become priests, members of the National Conference of Women Religious, representing 600 leaders of female orders, insist that the priesthood should be partially dismantled with some sacramental functions parceled out to the laity.

Jewish leaders visit papal castle

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP) — Jewish leaders began talks today with John Paul II to mend relations following a papal audience with Kurt Waldheim that threatened to disrupt the pontiff's visit to the United States next week.

The closed door talks began at noon local time (6 a.m. EDT) at the pope's summer residence in this town in the Alban Hills 15 miles south of Rome.

Delegation members said they planned to discuss the audience with Waldheim, the Vatican's lack of diplomatic relations with Israel, anti-Semitism and Roman Catholic Church statements on the Holocaust and Jews.

"It's a watershed in our relationships, a historic and unique event," another delegate, Rabbi Gilbert Klaperman, president of the Synagogue Council of America, said last week.

The delegates, who prepared for today's meeting by holding day-long talks Monday with Vatican officials, dismissed the suggestion they were seeking an apology from the pontiff for the audience with Waldheim.

"One does not ask for an apology from someone of the stature of the pope," delegation spokesman Gunther Lawrence of the Synagogue Council of America told reporters.

Waldheim, the president of Austria and a former U.N. secretary-general, has been accused of aiding in the deportation of Jews and Yugoslav and Greek partisans to Nazi concentration camps while he was serving as a lieutenant in the German army in the Balkans in World War II. He has denied the allegations.

The meeting with John Paul was requested by American Jewish groups to "clear the air" following the June 25 audience with Waldheim.

Jewish groups had threatened to boycott a papal ceremony in Miami on Sept. 11 at the start of the pope's 10-day U.S. tour as a protest against the Waldheim meeting. Rabbi Mordecai Waxman, head of the delegation, said most Jewish leaders are now expected to attend the ceremony.

"I think it will be a very good meeting," Waxman said before today's talks.

He described as "very rewarding" Monday's talks with Dutch Cardinal Johannes Willebrands, president of the Vatican's Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews.

"All positions have been stated," said Waxman, chairman of the International Jewish Committee on Interreligious Consultations. "Now we'll see how they're resolved."

No details of Monday's talks were disclosed.

The Jewish delegates said relations with the Vatican had improved following the pope's statement in August praising the Jewish people and saying others cannot be indifferent to the "terrifying experience of the extermination suffered by the Jews" in the Holocaust.

Rabbi Marc H. Tanenbaum, a member of the delegation, said he hoped the talks would "ensure no more surprises like Waldheim, at least without not having some advance awareness."

World's religious leanings divided

WASHINGTON — Almost 80 percent of the world's population holds religious beliefs, ranging from Christianity in the west to Islam, Buddhism and Hinduism found in areas from Morocco to Indonesia.

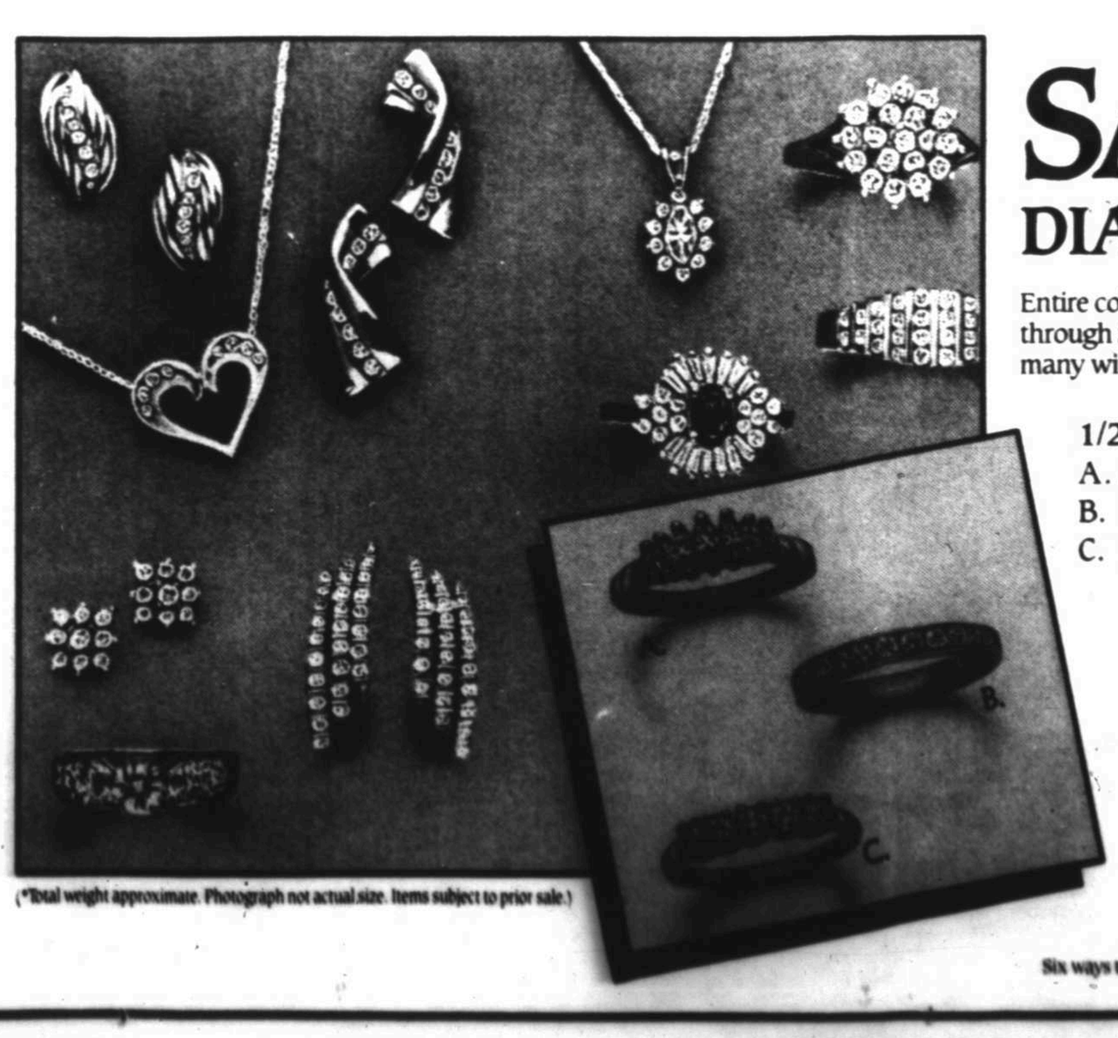

People — more than 1 billion of them — with no religion represent 20.9 percent of the world's population, almost as many as those who profess Christianity.

Here are the latest figures reflecting worldwide religious belief:

Religions	Membership	Percentage of world population
Christian	1.6 bil.	32.9%
Roman Catholic	867 mil.*	18.3%
Protestant & Anglican	396.2 mil.	8.0%
Eastern Orthodox	158.4 mil.	3.2%
Other Christian	164.2 mil.	3.3%
Judaism	17.1 mil.	0.4%
Islam	840.2 mil.	17.1%
Hinduism	647.9 mil.	13.2%
Buddhism	307.4 mil.	6.2%
Chinese religions (including Confucianism)	208.4 mil.	4.2%

Notes: Percentages do not total 100% because religions with few adherents are not listed; nor are the nonreligious.
* The Britannica reports there were 900.5 million Catholics in 1986. The Roman Catholic Church claims 867 million followers.
 Islamic Center in Washington, D.C., claims 1.1 billion Moslems worldwide.

Odessan on trial for kidnapping his wife

Defendant testifies war experiences led to alcoholism

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 37-year-old Odessa maintenace worker accused of kidnapping his wife at gunpoint told a state district court jury this morning his experiences as a paratrooper during the Vietnam War led to his alcoholism.

Gustavo Tijerina took the stand in his own defense on the second day of his trial for aggravated kidnapping. He is accused of the June 3 abduction of his wife, Cruz, from the parking lot of the Texas Instruments complex near Midland Regional Airport. He was indicted for the offense June 25.

Tijerina, who was discharged from the U.S. Army in August 1972 after he was awarded the Purple Heart, said he drank to forget the "experiences of war."

Mrs. Tijerina, whose divorce against her husband is pending in Ector County, took the stand for nearly two hours Monday, and told the five-man, seven-woman jury the kidnapping was the result of a 13-year-old marriage she termed "bad."

Before talking about the details of the couple's marriage, she told prosecutor Ralph Petty she had no reservations about testifying against her husband.

She told the jury Tijerina was a frequent heavy drinker of beer and whiskey, and was "very bad, mean," when he was drunk, which she testified became a nightly occurrence.

"He would find some reason to pick a fight with me," when drinking heavily, she told the jury in Judge Vann Culp's 238th District Court.

On June 3, after she had told Tijerina their marriage was over, filed for divorce and obtained temporary custody of the couple's three children, she drove to the Texas Instruments complex, where she had worked for nine years, she testified.

When she arrived, she saw her husband in his car, and he quickly drove next to her and got out, she said.

"He had a gun in his left hand," she said. "He immediately put a gun to my waist...he told me to scoot over (on the car seat) or he'd kill me right then and there."

Tijerina then started the car, and drove north on FM 1788, she testified. "He told me he was going to kill me, then kill himself," she said. "He told me to scoot over so that he could get a better aim at me."

At one point, she said Tijerina put his thumb on the hammer of the revolver.

"He said, 'I'm going to kill you,'" she said.

After she pleaded with him, he agreed to put away the gun, then drove her back to the TI parking lot after she agreed to try to reconcile the marriage and not press charges against him, she testified.

Defense attorney Tom Morgan asked Ms. Tijerina several times to tell the jury the incident was simply the result of Tijerina's "heartbreak."

Petty, however, objected to the questioning, and told the judge the woman could not possibly know why her husband had allegedly kidnapped her. Culp overruled the prosecutor's objections.

Bond sale would boost Texas' SSC prospects

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN — Texas' bids to lure the big-money "super collider" are now in Washington, and officials say the sale of $500 million in bonds would help boost the state's prospects.

Also, two independent proposals, including one from Garden City, have been submitted.

The state-supported proposals are from the Amarillo and Dallas-Fort Worth areas. They were sent to the capital Monday, marking the end of the first phase of the state's bid to win for the atom-smasher, said Peter Flawn, chairman of the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission.

"The next phase, and a most important phase, is to organize to pass Proposition 19 on the Nov. 3 election ballot, so that Texas will have the bonding capacity to support these proposals," Flawn said.

Proposition 19, one of 25 constitutional amendments on the November ballot, would authorize issuance of up to $500 million in bonds to pay for super collider activities.

"It is critical that all Texans unite together to add to (the bids) the strongest economic and citizen support," said William Banowsky, president of the Dallas-Fort Worth Superconducting Super Collider Authority.

Approval of the amendment would show "that (the super collider) is not simply something that a narrow group of scientists is interested in, but that the state of Texas and the voters are supporting it," he said.

Meanwhile, business leaders from Midland and El Paso submitted their own maverick bids for the super collider. Their proposals emerged from among 12 regions that lost to Dallas and Amarillo in May in a state competition to pick the sites that Texas would enter in national competition.

"We wanted to come a little bit closer in the competition," said Joe Kloesel, executive vice president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, which has joined Big Spring leaders in a proposal for a site near Garden City, southeast of Midland.

The other independent Texas bid, which was submitted by the West Texas Council of Governments, is for a site 40 miles east of El Paso in Hudspeth County.

The super collider will include a 52-mile-long underground tunnel. Researchers will work to simulate conditions that existed when the universe began to study the four basic forces of nature — gravity, electromagnetism, radiation and the force that binds atomic nuclei.

Some 10,000 superconducting magnets will guide proton beams in opposite directions around the tunnel. They will collide at almost the speed of light, creating new sub-atomic particles. Scientists say the experiments could yield significant discoveries about the fundamental nature of energy and matter.

The project "will impact every university in our state, so we all have a big stake in this," said Amarillo Mayor Glen Parkey. "We're standing on the edge of probably the greatest scientific project ever done."

If a Texas site is chosen for the atom-smasher, which is to be the largest and most advanced particle accelerator ever built, the state will benefit economically and assume national scientific leadership, officials said.

"I think it not only has great scientific promise, but it has great promise for our engineering, technological and also our economic activity within the state," said Herbert Woodson, laboratory commission vice chairman.

The project's cost is estimated at more than $5 billion, and the annual operating budget will be about $300 million, Flawn said. Up to 5,000 jobs will be created during construction, and up to 6,000 jobs in related activities.

It is estimated that 24 states will submit bids for the project to the U.S. Department of Energy by Wednesday's deadline. Texas officials said New York and California are expected to join Texas in submitting multiple bids.

After a review by the Department of Energy and evaluation by a select committee of scientists and engineers, the site is expected to be chosen by January 1989.

Ex-Midlander fighting to save land

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Kathryn Ross is deeply involved in a cause across the way — protecting a lush wilderness area, Port Meadow, from commercial encroachment.

Port Meadow is in England. And England is the "new home" of Ms. Ross, a 43-year-old native Midlander and financial consultant who has been living in England since 1986.

Like the migratory arctic tern sea bird, she faithfully travels long distances over the sea in returning to her homeland.

And in a recent visit to Midland, Ms. Ross sounded her latest cause: the fight to preserve Port Meadow, a 338½-acre pristine common area where rare fauna and flora flourish. "It's a major botanical interest," she said.

And there are commercial interests which threaten the beauty of the rolling Meadow of high and low lands or, as Ms. Ross said, of "high bits" and "low bits."

"It is marvelous," she said. "In the winter, the Thames floods. And it (Port Meadow's low lands) floods and freezes over." It's a scene for ice-skating.

Port Meadow is along the Thames near Oxford about 50 miles northwest of London between London and Birmingham. Oxford is about the size of Midland.

"There has been very little encroachment, except the railroad lines and the Oxford-Birmingham canal," through which boats were drawn in the 19th Century, Ms. Ross noted.

Ms. Ross has joined the Port Meadow Protection Group to save the land from encroachment — from a possible marina at an established boat station.

"I THINK IT'S wrong that someone could take it upon himself and usurp land and use it for private enterprise."

Kathryn Ross

Since the 1890s, a boat station has been on Medley Weir Stream next to the Meadow, Ms. Ross noted.

However, the city of Oxford granted to Somerton Marine Ltd., owner of the boat station, planning permission for limited vehicular access across the Meadow and parking on the Meadow, according to a pro-Port Meadow flyer prepared by American lawyer-novelist Shelby Tucker of Oxford. Oxford city officials wanted to preserve the boat station but were "anxious to ensure that its operations did not impinge on the tranquility of the Meadow."

However, Ms. Ross and the Port Meadow Protection Group are fearful that a settlement which resulted from litigation between Somerton and Oxford would "confer on Somerton for 125 years the rights to park boats and vehicles, provide for rubbish and sewage disposal and store liquified petroleum gas and 1,200 gallons of diesel on nearly a third of an acre of the Meadow and a right of way across the Meadow for Somerton's and its customers' cars" for a rent of five pounds a year.

"He (the boat-station operator) could just stretch farther and farther up the river," she said.

Ms. Ross' intent is to save the wilderness area from ruination.

"I think it's the idea of something entrusted," she said of her outrage toward the threat. "It's a treasure, really, a treasure entrusted to guardians (Oxford city council members) who are only slowly becoming aware of their duty to preserve."

HER EFFORTS to preserve Park Meadow are mindful of her work in 1984 when she involved herself in the philosophical battle to "Save the Lancaster House" in Midland from destruction.

The house crumbled behind forces that sent a bulldozer headlong into the stone walls of the house, which Midland cultural leader Naomi Lancaster built in 1938. Ms. Lancaster gave the house, which was on grounds of the Museum of the Southwest, to the museum in 1970; she died four years later. The force — the museum's board of trustees — behind the razing of the quaint old house needed more space for museum expansion and felt that the Lancaster House must go. The opposing force, including museum supporters, wanted the house preserved as a historic-cultural landmark and as a tribute to Ms. Lancaster's contributions to the Midland cultural scene.

Ms. Ross, who knew Ms. Lancaster as a "very refined and sophisticated lady," said she was "heart-broken" when the house reluctantly came tumbling down in November 1984. Since then, expansion of the museum has moved ahead.

To preserve Park Meadow, "You've got to have someone who is tenacious enough to seek a way of stopping this encroachment." And much of that impetus came from the American lawyer and aspiring writer, Shelby Tucker. As a result of his efforts, the Port Meadow Protection Group was formed in January 1987 "to urge the city (of Oxford) to resist this latest attempts" of encroachment of the Meadow. Ms. Ross' father, former Midlander George Berkeley Ross of Houston, has visited the Meadow and has lent his support in preserving the delicate balance there.

PARK MEADOW is "a land of horses, cows, ducks, swans and geese that flow down the Thames like a flotilla at midnight. There's a lady in gray who walks in the Meadow. She's a ghost of a nun from the Godstow Nunnery at the other end of the Meadow. It's in ruins now. It's very eerie."

Ms. Ross, a 1962 graduate of Midland High School, studied international law, economics and political science at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts and then studied economics at Oxford University, which is the oldest university in England. Though she lives and works in England, she maintains her American citizenship.

History of Park Meadow dates at least back to the Bronze Age; people from that era are buried there. In the Iron Age, the Meadow was a hut settlement.

"There was no plowing up of the meadows," Ms. Ross said. "It was pastoral. It's never been plowed."

Park Meadow has been designated by the Nature Conservancy Council as site of special scientific interest and is the "sole remaining" habitat of the creeping marshwort, a plant in low-land rivers and valleys, according to Oxford botanist Dr. Alison McDonald.

And apparently only in the Meadow grow combinations of plants whose root system interact.

Barrera not interested in seat on high court

By ANNE MARIE KILDAY
Hear t News Service

AUSTIN — San Antonio attorney Roy Barrera Jr. said Monday he has asked not to be considered for appointment as chief justice of the state Supreme Court.

Barrera, who was appointed to a San Antonio district judgeship by Clements in 1980, said he had told aides to the governor that he is not interested in filling the vacancy created by the resignation of Chief Justice John Hill.

Hill announced last week that he was quitting effective Jan. 1 to work for reform of judicial selection in Texas.

Barrera made a surprisingly strong showing last year in his campaign against Attorney General Jim Mattox. He had been considered one of the leading contenders for appointment to the court by Clements. Since the appointee will stand for re-election next year to serve through Hill's term, which expires in 1990, Clements is expected to name a Republican.

Another Republican reportedly under consideration for the appointment is Houston state Rep. Mike Toomey, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

But Barrera's decision not to seek the appointment prompted rumors that Clements was considering offering the chief justice position to Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, a Democrat. He was appointed to an appellate court by Clements in 1979. Sources said the appointment would depend upon Gonzalez switching from the Democratic to the Republican Party.

George Shipley, an Austin political consultant for Gonzalez, said the judge never would consider such a move.

"I can tell you on the record as a spokesperson for the judge that he would immediately decline. He is a lifelong Democrat. He would under no circumstances seek or accept that position," Shipley said.

"When John Hill made his announcement, a number of individuals called the judge and urged him to consider a campaign for chief, and he immediately at that time declined," Shipley said. "Judge Gonzalez played an active role in the united Democratic effort of 1986 and would not seriously entertain such an offer, if, in fact, it were made."

Justice Ted Robertson last week announced he will campaign for the Democratic Party's nomination for chief justice, to run against Clements' appointee.

Barrera said he told Clements' chief of staff, Hilary Doran, last week that he is not interested in the Supreme Court position.

"I wanted to inform them firsthand, as honored as I would be and am to be considered for the Supreme Court, that I think I will keep my powder dry and see how things develop politically in the next year or two. And look to 1990, hopefully, to do something for the party," Barrera said.

Barrera, who is practicing law in San Antonio with his father in the firm of Nicholas and Barrera, said he has just signed on as vice chairman for Vice President George Bush's presidential campaign.

Barrera declined to say which statewide office he might seek in 1990.

Store robbery suspect held on $2 million bond

From Staff Reports

A 18-year-old Midland man is being held in Midland County Jail in lieu of $2 million bond after he was charged with last week's robbery of a convenience store.

During the incident, he allegedly pointed a pistol at a police officer and was shot after he refused to drop the weapon, which turned out to be a toy gun, police said.

Jesse A. Lopez, 1107 E. Pecan Ave., was charged Monday with three counts of aggravated robbery and one count of aggravated assault of a peace officer. Bond was set at $500,000 on each count by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

According to police reports, Lopez allegedly produced the toy gun and demanded cash from the clerk and at least one store customer at the Kent Kwik store, 2910 N. Big Spring. Officer Paul Stroope, who was checking local businesses at the time, pulled into the parking lot of the store and saw the disturbance.

After he entered the store, Stroope saw the gun, repeatedly ordered Lopez to drop it, and then fired once when he did not drop the gun, police said. Lopez was wounded in the forearm and treated at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Stroope was placed on administrative leave with pay after the shooting, pending an investigation. Results of the investigation have not been released, according to Cpl. Jim White, police spokesman.

Stroope returned to duty at 11 p.m. Monday, White said, and was involved in the apprehension of a burglary suspect early this morning.

Police Roundup

According to reports, police were called to Morris Caffey TV and Appliance, 3306 W. Illinois, by an automatic alarm. When they arrived, they found a smashed plate glass window and were told two videocassette recorders were missing.

A few minutes after the burglary, Stroope was on patrol and stopped a 1987 Pontiac for speeding in the 3700 block of West Louisiana Avenue. The driver, 34, was arrested after an investigation linked him to the burglary, White said.

The VCRs were recovered, according to reports.

"At this point, I want to stay in a position where I am flexible and can make a move in any direction I might want to, without having problems with the commitments I made in 1987," he said.

"He has helped me immeasurably since, as a friend and in politics," Barrera said.

Berte Hurst took over the "big little store" in Melrose 15 years ago. He and his wife, Mattie, have been fixtures in the community for nearly 40 years.

Couple enjoy meeting people as they tend to their country store

MELROSE (AP) — The tiny grocery store has been near the same location for many years, and although Berte and Mattie V. Hurst took over the business only 15 years ago, visitors get the feeling they have been there forever.

The Hursts have spent 39 of their 47 years of marriage in this East Texas town of 150 people, and took over the family store after Hurst retired from a hardware store in Nacogdoches, about 10 miles away.

Hurst's father ran the country grocery store when it was in its original location just a few hundred feet up the road.

"We moved the walls up the highway and put the top back on," the 72-year-old Hurst says.

"We needed him close by," says Mrs. Hurst, explaining that the store was moved closer to their home after he father-in-law's health began to fail.

"He didn't sell much, he just played dominoes," Mrs. Hurst said, recalling her father-in-law's tenure in the store.

The country store was a favorite gathering place for domino players, but many are gone now.

"Most are gone for good, if you know what I mean," Hurst said, seated comfortably in an old chair and clinking a few coins against a small table. He still plays a few games a week, if not in Melrose then occasionally at the Holly Springs country store.

In between working in Nacogdoches and running the store, the couple raised broiler chickens, "for a while, then we got too old for it," Hurst says.

A baseball and basketball fan, Hurst once volunteered his time coaching rural teams around the county.

"We survived pretty well out here," he says of the store. "People have been good to us. We'll stay here 'til we die, then we'll close it up," he says with a smile.

The Hursts say they've enjoyed running the "big little store."

"It keeps you occupied," says Mrs. Hurst, who sometimes does some sewing while working in the store.

"Oh, we do just what we want. Our friends come by and talk; we serve coffee. We enjoy seeing people."

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Northside fire station will reopen Sept. 16

From Staff Reports

A north Midland fire station that was forced to close Aug. 1 because of city budget cuts will reopen Sept. 16, said Fire Chief James Roberts Monday.

The station at 405 E. Solomon Lane was saved along with another fire house at 6005 N. Midland Drive by a City Council 3-3 tie vote last Tuesday that overturned a decision to close the two stations and save the city $460,000.

The money to continue running the stations will be siphoned from the city's $12 million surplus fund.

However, before the Solomon Lane station can be reopened, the telephone and alarm systems have to be started up again, Roberts said.

Also, all five rookies laid off from the department's workforce — including two that were transferred to the police department — have agreed to come back, Roberts said.

"They were very pleased and tickled," Roberts said of the rookies when they were told they had a job fighting fires again.

Originally the council had decided to close the stations because they were running on half the calls of the city's other seven stations.

Corps assigns doctors to Harlingen

By RUTH SoRELLE
Hearst News Service

HARLINGEN — Texas doesn't lack doctors. But not all parts of Texas have doctors.

Of 254 counties in the state, 207 are rural. Fourteen of those counties lack a single physician.

But state and federal plans aimed at spreading health care around are now dying. The State Rural Medical Education Board that once gave scholarships to would-be country doctors has given no scholarships in two years. The federally funded National Health Service Corps that put doctors where medical care is sparse fights a yearly battle to stay alive.

Texas physicians cluster in cities, near the larger medical centers with sophisticated facilities and hordes of other doctors. In Harris County, 6,431 physicians squeeze into 1,723 square miles. Only 51 populate the 979 square miles of Hale County in the state's Panhandle.

In 1985, there were 598 people per physician in Texas: The urban rate was 529 people per physician; in the rural areas, it jumped to 1,249 per doctor.

The inequity is obvious in Harlingen. So, too, is the positive impact of federal intervention.

Richard Campman, associate director for planning, evaluation and research at Harlingen's Su Clinica Familiar, dreads the day the National Health Service Corps stops sending doctors to his low-cost clinic. At present, it boasts 13 doctors, most of whom came through the corps.

"IF WE lose our National Health Service physicians, then we have to compete with the private sector for doctors," Campman said. "Not that many physicians go into basic primary medicine."

Su Clinica Familiar, or Your Family Clinic, cares for those who can't pay. Eighty-five percent of the clinic's $6 million annual budget comes from the federal government. Most patients pay no more than $5 per visit.

The clinic occupies a special place in this agricultural community, taking up where private medicine leaves off. Two years ago, the midwives who staff the clinic's birth center lost their malpractice insurance coverage. The clinic shut down for a month.

Nearby hospitals were hurt financially because low-income mothers had to go there to deliver their babies, said maternity clinic manager Gloria Casas. Local physicians were called out in the middle of the night to deliver patients they didn't know. And patients, who could barely pay the minimal fees at Su Clinica, were hit with bills much higher than they had anticipated, money they were pressured to pay.

When the nurse midwives got their insurance back and resumed practice, the community sighed with relief, Casas said.

The clinic's midwives deliver about 500 babies each year. The cost, depending on income, ranges from $290 to $1,440.

Not only the young benefit. The clinic gave 60-year-old Maria Salinas the opportunity to deal with her diabetes. Because she followed Dr. Julie Sorenson's diet, Salinas was able to drop her medication.

The young, the pregnant and the elderly make up the bulk of the clinic's patients. Dr. Daniel Herdeman, the clinic's medical director, concedes the clinic presented a dramatic change from what he was accustomed to in Milwaukee. But he stayed beyond his three year commitment because he likes the clinic, the people and the area.

HE UNDERSTANDS the frustrations of doctors who find themselves unwillingly assigned to the clinic. "Many of those people, made their commitment seven years ago. They didn't understand what they were getting into," he said.

"We made a mistake taking people who didn't appreciate the opportunity," Herdeman said.

Sorenson has a year to go on her obligation at Su Clinica. The work often is demanding, but the young internal medicine specialist said the experience gained is invaluable to her career.

Dr. Michael Persyn, a dentist, might remain in Harlingen and continue to care for those who seek dental care at Su Clinica, combining that with a private practice in the area.

The demands are great from a group of people who often lack information about tooth decay or dental hygiene.

Patients often need special dentures or crowns, a difficult task for the dentists whose patients are scheduled at close intervals.

The National Health Service Corps currently has more than 3,300 doctors serving 2 million people in 1,800 communities nationwide.

But most of those signed up more than seven years ago, before they finished medical school and postgraduate training, a spokeswoman for the program said.

AS THE federal government cut back funds for the program, fewer students received the medical school scholarships that obligated them to serve in areas where medical care was lacking. The pipeline is slowing to a trickle, she said.

Next year, Doug Mahy of the program's regional office in Dallas will have 50 physicians to distribute in the region that covers Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas and Louisiana.

That's a decrease from the 150 of the previous two years.

Twenty of those will go to Texas towns such as Matador, Pharr, Eagle Pass and Port Arthur.

The Harlingen clinic will not get any of the new physicians, Mahy said. "We felt there were other communities that had more of a need," he said.

The corps of the future will not offer scholarships, Mahy said. There may be a program in which doctors borrow money and their loans are paid or forgiven if they agree to serve in needy areas.

Beaumont police growing beards for celebration

BEAUMONT (AP) — Beaumont's finest are going fuzzy.

Above the snappy police uniforms, the faces are shaggy because the police have joined a campaign to help promote the city's Sesquicentennial celebration by growing beards.

The campaign that has facial hair in style all over Beaumont is called "Brothers of the Brush."

George Vance, chairman of the men's participation division, says the general idea behind the Sesquicentennial campaign is to get people to look the way Beaumonters looked in 1837. Participants pay an entry fee and agree to grow beards or mutton chops (big shaggy sideburns), and wear string ties and top hats or derbies.

"From all the historical information we've collected, that's how they dressed back then," Vance says. "Ideally, we'd like people who come to town to think they're 150 years back."

The campaign caught on fast among police officers after Chief George Schuldt, president of the department's "Brothers of the Brush" chapter, lifted regulations requiring all non-undercover officers to be clean-shaven.

"I feel like the police department is a part of the community, and this is an opportunity for us to get together," Schuldt said.

The nearly 60 percent of the city's officers who formed the chapter are thinking of naming it "The Blues Brothers."

Lt. Ed Woodsmall said many of the officers who don't even like beards are growing them to take advantage of an opportunity that will probably never surface again.

AIDS victim's family files suit

HOUSTON (AP) — The family of a woman who died of AIDS in May filed a lawsuit charging the Gulf Coast Regional Blood Center with negligence for giving her blood that allegedly was infected with the virus.

The husband, son and two daughters of Catherine V. Gibson, 63, are asking for unspecified damages for the loss of her earning power and companionship.

The lawsuit, filed Friday in state district court, claims Mrs. Gibson contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome after a blood transfusion at Methodist Hospital on March 4, 1983, following surgery Feb. 28, 1983.

Her husband, John G. Gibson, stated he also may be susceptible to contamination by the virus and is suing for his and his late wife's suffering.

Bill Teague, vice president and chief executive officer of the blood center, declined comment.

Michael Y. Saunders, attorney for the Gibson family, said the woman's death certificate lists AIDS as the cause of death.

Petite fashions are gaining notoriety

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

So you're tired of being called cute? And you just know that you didn't get that raise because your boss doesn't take you seriously?

And while you're complaining, you're sick and tired of those juvenile, short-on-style dresses they call petite fashions?

It's a short but true story that the average American woman is 5 foot 4 (39 percent of them are 5 foot 3 and under and weigh between 120 and 150 pounds).

And yet surveys keep showing that tall women are the winners in life — whether it's beauty pageants or job interviews.

It's also true that one's attitude can overcome obstacles.

By thinking tall and creating a larger-than-life presence in clothes and personality, celebrities such as Cheryl Ladd, Melissa Manchester, Susan Lucci, Lisa Hartman (all 5 foot 4) and Pia Zadora and Dr. Ruth Westheimer (both under 5 feet) have gained tremendous stature in their careers.

ANOTHER PETITE who thinks and talks (and dresses) tall is Phyllis Teller, the current Mrs. Palos Verdes Peninsula and the owner of Personal Pride, an image and consulting company. Teller, who gained the title Mrs. Elegant at the state preliminary pageant for the Mrs. America program, is a mere 5 foot 1, but she's a powerhouse of energy and information.

After a career as a petite model in the Los Angeles area, Teller began the public speaking circuit, talking about personal grooming, corporate grooming and petite fashions.

She has presented programs for numerous banks, airlines, hospitals, schools, clubs, cruise ships and department stores, including Saks Fifth Avenue, Neiman Marcus, Bullock's, Robinson's and The Broadway.

Unless you're an actress playing a child on television, nobody wants to look short, says Teller.

The petite woman is no different from taller women, she wants to look smart, chic and sophisticated. But she doesn't want to be overwhelmed with an abundance of fabric or jewelry, she explains.

IN OTHER words, says Teller, the petite wants the same clothes that every fashion-conscious woman wants, but she wants — and needs — them to be scaled down to fit her proportions.

Jackets need to have breast pockets at the breast, not the midriff, and the jacket should be cut to fit at the waist or the hips.

CNS Photo

The feminine design and sumptuous fabric make this two-piece wool jersey dress perfect for day or night, even for petite women.

Unfortunately, until five years ago, designers designed only for women 5 foot 6 and over, so the short population had to wear children's clothes or spend a fortune in alterations.

Now it's pretty easy, says Teller, but petites should pay a little extra attention to their wardrobes, particularly if they're dressing for height — and success.

Here are some of Teller's tall thinking ideas for petites:

Assess your body. Learn your proportions, and, if not ideal, learn how to compensate through clothing.

Identify your fashion image and your best colors. To look your tallest (and slimmest) dress from head to toe in one color or no more than two colors.

LOOK FOR fabrics to enhance your size. Soft, fluid fabrics such as lawn cotton, silk, flat knits, jerseys and challis will make you appear taller.

Satin, linen, velvet, corduroy and tweed will make you look shorter.

If you love prints, look for small-scale styles, and wear them on the upper part of your body. Ditto on plaid, polka dots, stripes and velvets.

When selecting trousers, remember that the wider the pant leg, the softer the fabric should be.

For instance, leather trousers should be lean, and silk pants can be full like pajamas. Also, absolutely avoid trousers with cuffs.

The V-neck style of top will always make you look taller and thinner, and turtle necks and double-breasted anything will always make you look shorter.

Also shortening are short sleeves, rolled up sleeves and big, shiny buttons.

Avoid an abundance of jewelry, and keep necklaces and pins above the bustline.

When shopping for a coat, look for a soft fabric, such as cashmere. If considering a fur coat, look for a short or medium-haired fur such as mink that has been sewn in vertical lines.

A short, fluffy fox jacket will make you look short and fluffy.

Skirts can be any length you prefer, but mid-calf may be the most unflattering.

Best styles are ankle length or two inches below the knee. Keep in mind that your skirt should be longer than it is wide.

To look your tallest, make your hose and shoes the same color or darker than your hemline.

If you like wearing belts, choose one with a decorative buckle. It will help you avoid the cut-in-half look and also will make your waist appear smaller.

SHOES SHOULD be scaled to your height and shoe size. The ideal shoe is a 2-inch heeled pump.

However, boots can add inches, especially when teamed with a long skirt.

When selecting sporty flats, cheat a little and opt for one with a little wedge to give you a boost.

Hair should be either short, pulled up or pushed back to reveal the neck. Hair hanging below the shoulders will make you look short — and cute.

For more hints on dressing tall, check your library or bookstore.

Short, sexy fashions joined by long, lean look for fall

Associated Press

The fall fashion statement from New York is short and sexy.

New York designers have taken a streamlined approach for fall, according to an article in Harper's Bazaar, with a look that is tailor-made for the woman of the '80s.

New York skirts are short, as they were in Paris, whether they come from Calvin Klein, Donna Karan or new glamor designer David Cameron, who describes it as "space-age sleek."

One of the few notable exceptions is Ralph Lauren, who favors the long look.

The majority approach is away from the frilly poufs and crinolines that were flaunted at the collections a year ago.

Instead of frothy fantasies, this year offers curvaceous silhouettes with skillful cuts and sometimes even a little padding at the hips. Strong shoulders are less in evidence as a rounded look takes over.

The waistline is the focus of attention as the fashion emphasis is on shape.

Louis Dell'Olio likes perky peplums in his designs for Anne Klein.

Karan and Klein opt for high waists and big bold belts for added contour.

Lauren's shorter jackets bring the waistline into focus as they narrowly skim the body.

Carolyn Roehm pads the hips in order to define the midriff.

Stretch is another buzzword of the season, as New York designers embrace flexible fibers and rubberized fabrics to give their clothes greater flexibility, taking their cue from Jean-Paul Gaultier, who used stretch fabrics last year in Paris.

Geoffrey Beene is the "stretch master" with his gray wool-and-Lycra stretch dress. Cameron uses it in his smart, sleek sportswear.

Klein, who uses stretchlace and rubberized silk taffeta for evening, has some of the sexiest styles to be seen, while Karan uses the stretch look in inventive sports-inspired high-waist pants.

Even when the fabric doesn't actually snap, clothes have a body-molding appearance. Michael Kors likes second-skin black leather skirts paired with a stretch wool melton Tyrolean jacket.

AP LaserPhoto

Gianni Versace includes short, tight mini skirts worn with fitted jackets in his fall and winter collection.

In sportswear, knitwear is the key. Klein plays up merino wool as an antidote for such high-priced fabrics as cashmere, and Karan's jackets have an almost sweater-like ease.

DEAR ABBY

Past stops couple from tying knot

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Re the letter signed "Brokenhearted in N.J." who called her wedding off then expected her fiance ("Joe") to reimburse her parents for the thousands of dollars they had spent on wedding plans: "Brokenhearted" wrote: "When Joe proposed to me, he revealed that he had lived with a girl before I knew him. She became pregnant, he didn't want to marry her, she didn't want an abortion, so she had the baby. Joe convinced me and my parents that he had no obligation whatsoever to this woman or the child — that his attorney had settled it with her and her attorney. Two weeks before our wedding date, Joe told me that he had been suddenly served with papers for child support, had decided to support the child and was asking for visitation rights. Because our lives would be drastically changed, and because I think Joe lied to me about his obligation to the child, I called the wedding off."

Abby, I am very disappointed that you encouraged this woman's pompous, spoiled-brat actions. Joe has a parental obligation to the child he helped to bring into this world, whether intentional or not, and he should help support it and be an active father presence in this child's life.

I work in a law office, and see people change their minds, deals fall apart and agreements unravel daily.

Actually, this woman has done her fiance a valuable favor by showing him what she is really made of. If she had really loved him, she would have accepted and loved his child as well. I hope you print this because others in this woman's circumstances might be led to believe by your response, that her feelings and actions were justifiable.

You have permission to use my name. — NANCY ENGLAND, PALM BAY, FLA.

DEAR NANCY ENGLAND: When "Brokenhearted" said yes to Joe's proposal, she was assured that his financial obligations to his child were fulfilled and he would have no further contact with either mother or child.

I agree, this was not the manly course to take, but his financial and emotional obligations to this woman were not the issue. Joe had presented himself as a man free from all past entanglements; then after she agreed to marry him, she learned that she would not be getting the kind of marriage she expected. (Some women prefer a husband who comes with no "baggage" — just as some men prefer a wife without an ex-husband and children.)

You say "Brokenhearted" behaved like a pompous, spoiled brat to declare that since Joe changed the rules, she didn't want to marry him. I disagree.

I think she is entitled to change her mind since he changed the rules. And let us not overlook the fact that she thinks Joe lied to her from the beginning. Solid marriages are not built on foundations of misrepresentation, anger and mistrust.

I stick with my original answer: "Rejoice; you could have married this man. I think you and your parents got off cheap."

DEAR ABBY: Your advice to "Motormouth in Denver" (the woman who talked incessantly) didn't address the root cause of her problem, namely being self-centered. She must learn to view conversation as an opportunity to learn about others, not just a chance to talk.

A technique I use to help my students learn this is called "Talking Chips." Each child in a discussion group is given a chip. When he wants to talk, he puts his chip in the center of the table. Once it's used, he can't speak again until everyone else has "spent" his or her chip. Then another round begins. Children learn quickly to conserve their chips and really make it count when they do speak. If you interrupt, it costs you your chip — so few make that mistake twice! But most important, it turns talkers into listeners.

If "Motormouth" would tell herself that before she talks again, everyone in the group will have spoken or had the opportunity to speak without having to fight for it, she will no longer dominate conversations.

I hope this is helpful, Abby. So few people seem to realize that the real joy in conversation is listening, not talking. — VALERIE STEVENSON, SAN DIEGO.

DEAR VALERIE: What a clever teacher you are! If more adults applied your listening technique, there would be less noise pollution, and more meaningful conversations.

AT WIT'S END

Monday is good day to start diet

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

It is Tuesday. There is one large piece of pepperoni pizza (with extra cheese) staring at you from the box. Everyone else at the table pats his stomach like the Fuller family on an Alka-Seltzer commercial and gasps, "One more bite and I'll burst."

I went on a diet on Monday. I promised myself one piece and I've stuck to it. Everyone looks to me to kill it off.

I hear myself saying, "I'm not really hungry. Besides, I read where one should always eat slowly because it takes 20 minutes for food to get to the point of making you feel satisfied." They look at me with a reverence usually reserved for Mother Teresa when she enters a room.

Privately, I wonder who came up with that stupid theory. If "satisfied" doesn't kick in soon, I am going to lick the box.

The hostess gives a sigh and says, "Well, since no one is going to eat it, I guess I'll have to throw it away."

My mind races. I'm old. Do I need this? What have I got left in life to look forward to, really? I get up in the morning, shower, eat two sunflower seeds, write all day, someone throws me a fish without salt, I needlepoint and fall into bed. So much for hats and horns. Is that the kind of life I want for myself?

Just think of all those women on the Titanic who said, "No, thank you," to dessert that night. And for what? Besides, assuming I took that last piece of pizza, I could step up my exercise program and burn it off. Or I could borrow calories from tomorrow's intake.

What's such a big deal about a lousy piece of pizza? Are they going to put on my tombstone, "WIFE, MOTHER, WRITER, GARBAGE BARGE"? Besides, I can set an example on waste. Do I want to go through life seeing Sally Struthers' eyes? I can help. I can make a social statement here by not allowing that piece of pizza to be thrownaway.

I grab the pizza out of the box and snap it between my jaws, chewing vigorously until it is gone.

Immediately, I realize what I have done. I am worthless slime. I have lost my self-esteem and the respect of those around me. I had a chance to stand up to gravity and temptation and I failed.

I deserve to wear elastic waistbands the rest of my life. I have sealed my own fate as one of those people that everyone says, "What a shame. She has such a nice face."

I'll never run off the extra calories. Who am I kidding? I'd have to run down to the Baja and back before I'd burn off all that crust. As for borrowing calories from tomorrow, I've already borrowed calories through Christmas week.

Oh well, next Monday I'm REALLY going on a diet.

NOW president calls all-male clubs 'archaic'

DALLAS (AP) — Although the Supreme Court ruled this summer that women must be allowed in the traditionally all-male Rotary Club, some irate female executives are finding the doors of similar clubs still shut.

Among them are the Petroleum Club and the Salesmanship Club, some of Dallas' most prestigious organizations where although women can now enter the main dining rooms, no women are members.

Sally Schreiber, a partner with Johnson & Swanson law firm and a Standford University graduate, began practicing law in Dallas in 1976. Three years later, she was invited to lunch at the Petroleum Club to close a deal but found the main dining room closed to her.

"Another woman who is a secretary and myself had to go to a private dining room" while the clients and the other lawyers went to the main dining room, Ms. Schreiber said.

"Usually when it happens, whoever you're with is most embarrassed," she said. "There are jokes. Such as, 'Maybe you could get in, Sally, if you wear this little white apron and hat."

But many women do not take the situation lightly.

Janie Bush, president of the Dallas County chapter of the National Organization for Women, believes that Dallas clubs and men need to change the rules to the all-male game.

"I think it's absolutely archaic that we still play that game," she said. "I think Dallas is pretty backward. I trust with Annette Strauss in the mayor's office, we'll see more acceptance of women. We talk a good game in this city, but we don't really practice a good game."

Al Hill, a member of the Petroleum Club for over 20 years, said the reason no women belong to the club is because none have applied.

Even Hill's mother and aunt — Margaret Hunt Hill and Caroline Hunt Schoellkopf, considered two of the wealthiest women in the state — are not members and do not plan on applying.

"She doesn't involve herself in anything that smacks of women's rights," Donna King, Mrs. Schoellkopf's secretary, said.

But some Dallas women executives find the all-male clubs more unsettling.

Barbara Lynn, a litigator with the law firm of Carrington, Coleman, Sloman & Blumenthal, said she does not believe women are untroubled by all-male clubs.

"There can't be any women who have been in business in Dallas in the last five years that haven't been affected at one time or another by it," she said.

Hill accepts position at Houston law firm

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — John Hill will join his daughter in the re-named law firm of Liddell, Sapp, Zively & Hill when he steps down as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Texas Jan. 1.

Charles Sapp, a senior partner at the Houston-based firm, called Hill "one of the finest lawyers in Texas."

"As an experienced litigator, he will provide invaluable counsel to our clients," Sapp said of the only Texan to serve as chief justice, attorney general and secretary of state.

Hill, who announced Wednesday that he would leave the high court to concentrate on making judicial selection in Texas an appointed process, said the 71-year-old firm "offers the best of all worlds." He said he is particularly enthused about working with his daughter Martha Hill, an associate at the firm.

"It has the history and tradition of an old, well-established law firm," Hill said. "At the same time, the firm is experiencing an exciting new period of growth and affords me an opportunity to work on a rich and varied litigation docket."

Liddell, Sapp & Zively, which includes more than 100 lawyers in Houston, Dallas, Austin and New York City, has "a diversified business practice." Its clients include Pan American World Airways, Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., The Permian Corp. and the Houston Chronicle Publishing Co.

Republican Gov. Bill Clements has not said whom he will appoint to head the high court through the 1988 elections. Justice Ted Robertson has already announced he will seek the Democratic nomination for the post next year.

Hill, 64, and his wife, Bitsy, will move in January from Austin to Houston, where their three children and seven grandchildren live.

Former rising star still shining

By CLAY ROBISON
Hearst News Service

An Analysis

Hance

AUSTIN — Never mind that Kent Hance, while still a young man, was elected to the state Senate and then to Congress. His accomplishments quickly fell victim to ambition when, barely on the downhill side of 40, he lost successive statewide races for the U.S. Senate and the governor's office.

And, angered that he switched parties and became a Republican between the two expensive failures, Texas Democrats promptly added insult to injury by applying — with considerable relish — "a two-time loser" label to their former rising star.

Texas GOP leaders, however, see some gold shining through Hance's tarnish. That glimmer apparently was what attracted Gov. Bill Clements' eye when he reached out to Lubbock to tap Hance for the Texas Railroad Commission seat soon to be vacated in midterm by Democrat Mack Wallace.

To fill out the remainder of Wallace's term, which expires in 1990, Hance will be on the ballot next year, and Republicans believe he still has enough statewide name identification and appeal to retain the commission seat for the GOP.

They also hope he will help attract conservative Democrats and independent voters to GOP candidates for legislative seats and Texas Supreme Court posts.

"Most of our legislative challenge races are in rural, conservative districts, where Hance would do well," one party official said.

Hance won't be shouldering the future of the Texas Republican Party alone by any stretch of the imagination, but his re-entry into public life comes at an opportune time for the GOP.

Republican leaders had only two days to feel good about his appointment last week when veteran Democrat John Hill prompted even more somersaults at state GOP headquarters. His surprise decision to vacate his office as chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court at midterm on Jan. 1 will give Clements another appointee and Republicans a second incumbent to run for statewide office in 1988.

Hill doesn't believe partisanship should be a factor in the governor's decision, but there's no reason to expect that it won't be. The governorship is the only statewide, elected office that the GOP holds in state government, and Republicansal ready have served notice they will be actively trying to change that in 1988 and 1990.

Clements can be expected to try to find an electable Republican for Hill's seat. San Antonio lawyer Roy Barrera Jr., who almost beat Democratic Attorney General Jim Mattox last November, was one of the first names to surface.

They may have lost a tax fight in the Legislature and watched Clements take more flak over the Southern Methodist University football scandal, but, overall, it has been a good summer for Texas Republicans. Not only do they hope to score political points over the tax issue against selected Democrats in 1988 legislative races, they also have been handed some golden opportunities by four key Democratic officeholders.

Not only are Hill and Wallace stepping down, but Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros have taken themselves out of the running for governor or any other statewide race in 1990. They are all associated with the conservative or moderate wing of the Democratic Party, and their absence from ballots, some political analysts believe, may create a large void for conservative Democratic voters that Republicans will be more than happy to fill.

Much of the Republican success in Texas in 1988 will depend on the presidential nominees of both parties and the strength and length of their respective coattails. Democratic U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, however, is all but assured of re-election over any Texas Republican on the horizon. In fact, the GOP better hope a kamikaze Republican doesn't surface to challenge Bentsen and prompt the senator to launch a vigorous re-election campaign with long coattails of its own.

Clements reportedly first offered the Railroad Commission seat to former congressman Tom Loeffler, who, like Hance, lost to Clements in the party's 1986 gubernatorial primary. But Loeffler already had a job as President Reagan's chief lobbyist for aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Some individual Republicans with gubernatorial ambitions, such as Loeffler and Secretary of State Jack Rains, may not be very comfortable with the fact that Hance has been given a new lease on political life.

Serviceman could receive death penalty

AUSTIN (AP) — An Air Force sergeant was convicted of murder and attempted rape in the death of a Bergstrom Air Force Base civilian employee who was strangled with a seat belt from her car.

Gerald I. Mobley, a 15-year Air Force veteran, could receive the death penalty after being convicted Monday of killing Cynthia Torres, 25, a cashier at Bergstrom's Non-Commissioned Officer Club, prosecutors said.

Ms. Torres was found barely alive in a pool of blood after she left work at the club Feb. 7. She died two days later in the first killing on record in Bergstrom's 45-year history.

Mobley, 34, was found guilty of premeditated and felonious murder and attempted rape. If he is not given the death penalty, as prosecutors said they will request, military law stipulates he must receive life in prison.

The punishment phase in the trial that began Aug. 19 was scheduled to begin today.

The prosecution called 23 witnesses during the trial, including Edward Torres, the husband of the dead woman who found her body in the club's parking lot.

Evidence showed Ms. Torres, a mother of two children, was attacked shortly after she left the noncommissioned officers club at the base about 10:15 p.m. Feb. 7.

Ms. Torres was attacked by someone who struck her in the side of the head and stunned her, evidence indicated. She was then dragged to her car where she was strangled during the attempted sexual assault. Her nose also was broken.

She was found about 11 p.m. by her husband, who drove to the club when she did not come home. He testified he found his wife "lying in her own blood with her neck crushed."

Inside the car, police officers found a bloody footprint, hair samples and evidence of an attempted sexual assault. They also found skin under some of her fingernails, as well as a receipt from a bill that had Mobley's signature on it.

When authorities found the partial receipt, they began tracing Mobley's movements at Bergstrom, where he was stationed on temporary assignment while receiving additional training. He was stationed at George Air Force Base near Victorville, Calif.

During their investigation, authorities found that Mobley visited the club on several occasions while he was at Bergstrom and had cashed a check there the night of Feb. 7.

Authorities discovered in Mobley's home the other part of the receipt that had been found in the victim's car, according to court testimony.

They also found a bloody jacket at his residence and deck shoes similar to the ones that left the footprint in Ms. Torres' car. The blood was the same type as that of Ms. Torres, a rare kind that authorities said only one in 350 people possess. Hairs taken from Mobley were similar to ones found in her car.

If Mobley is sentenced to death, he will become only the second U.S. serviceman awaiting execution. Air Force officials said he probably will be taken to the Military Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to await execution.

Woman charged with murder in daughter's death

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Murder charges have been filed against the mother of a 5-year-old girl whose bruised and scarred body was found on a sofa in a San Antonio motel, police say.

Griceida Moreno, 28, was ordered held in the Bexar County Jail Monday in lieu of $50,000 bond set by Magistrate Sharyll Teneyuca.

Moreno is accused in the beating death of her daughter, Yvette R. Moreno, authorities said.

The girl's stepfather was jailed on four previous charges, including driving while intoxicated and resisting arrest, police said.

Relatives told police they found the girl dead on a sofa at the Matador Motel Saturday.

An autopsy by the Bexar County Medical Examiner's office on Sunday found the girl died of a severe blow to the head.

Police spokeswoman Roman Lopez said the mother was arrested at the police department Monday.

Police reports indicated the girl appeared to be under-nourished and had bruises on her body and cuts on the right cheek. She also had a bruised wrist and a bump on the forehead. Old scars were discovered on the girl's back and buttocks, records show.

"The mother claimed the child was prone to erratic behavior and she said she had difficulty handling that behaviour," Lopez said.

The girl's stepfather, Antonio Ramirez Gonzalez, told officers the cuts and bruises had been caused by a fall while the girl and her sister were showering.

The couple's four other children are being cared for by relatives.

Dolores Colmenero, director of the protective services program for the Human Resources and Services Department, said the family was known to the agency.

"However, there were no allegations against the mother for abusing the children or the 5-year-old girl," Colmenero said.

Forest Service to resume burning damaged trees

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — After a slow first day and a rain-shortened second, forestry teams today planned to resume burning hundreds of acres of insect-ravaged national forest.

"If the sun is shining by 8:30 (a.m. today), they'll probably get out there and be ready by lunch," said Hal Glassman, spokesman for the U.S. Forest Service.

The burning operation is being conducted in the Four Notches area of Sam Houston National Forest, where southern pine beetles caused heavy damage earlier this decade. In all, about 2,500 acres are to be burned.

On Sunday, the first day of the operation, about 100 acres were burned. On Monday, crews burned about 300 acres before heavy rains cut the operation short pending better weather, expected Tuesday.

The first step in the reforestation effort, chopping damaged trees, began in April 1986 amid protests by environmentalists.

The burn is intended to rid the area of underbrush and dead and dying vegetation. The third step is planting healthy new trees, which is expected to occur early next year, Glassman said.

Texan to be sentenced

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A Texas fugitive who was captured in a shoot-out with police is scheduled to be sentenced Sept. 29 on four counts of assault with a firearm on a peace officer.

Moises Arispe, 28, pleaded guilty on Monday before Alameda County Superior Court Judge Alfred Delucchi. An attempted murder charge was dismissed.

Arispe, who is wanted for murder in Texas, exchanged gunfire with four Fremont officers Nov. 28 following a car chase.

The chase ended when Arispe jumped out of the car and opened fire. Officers fired back and Arispe was shot in the neck, stomach, wrist and arm. In the exchange, Officer Bob Illes suffered a flesh wound when a ricocheting bullet grazed his right thigh.

Arispe had dodged Texas police since February 1986 when he jumped $10,000 bail and failed to appear in court on a murder charge. He and his brother allegedly shot a man in a dispute over the victim's wife.

TDC closes doors again

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The 27-unit Texas prison system won't be accepting new inmates today due to swelling population.

At a midnight count, the population of the prison system stood at 39,009, or 96.32 percent of capacity, 535 over the 95 percent cap, said Charles Brown, spokesman for the Texas Department of Corrections.

After the count was taken, 324 prisoners were admitted, while 102 were released, Brown said. Under state law, the prison system is required to keep its population below 95 percent of capacity.

When a closure occurs, the prison system does not admit new inmates until releases bring the total population to at or below the 95 percent limit.

Earlier this year, the prison system operated under an open-and-closed cycle under which it opened two days a week and stayed closed for five days.

Gonzalez's case dismissed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An assault case against U.S. Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez was dismissed nearly nine months after the veteran congressman slugged a man who called him a communist.

Bexar County Judge Anthony Ferro on Monday dismissed the misdemeanor assault case after Bill Allen, the man who was punched, said he just wanted the case "over with" and would not pursue it further.

"I've got better things to do than to be bothered with this," Allen said.

The Bexar County district attorney's office, in requesting the dismissal, said Gonzalez had apologized.

The incident occurred last Dec. 4 when Gonzalez struck Allen in the face at a restaurant. The 26-year congressman said it appeared Allen was reaching for a weapon.

Local racing elections OK'd

AUSTIN (AP) — Local option elections on pari-mutuel horse and dog racing can be held Nov. 3, the same date as the statewide referendum on the gambling issue, Secretary of State Jack Rains said Monday.

Rains said his ruling was issued in response to inquiries from numerous local officials.

The Legislature in 1986 approved pari-mutuel elections on a statewide and local option basis. Some counties want to present the issue to voters at the same time the statewide question is decided.

Local option elections must be authorized by the county commissioners' courts in each county.

If pari-mutuel wagering is authorized, the sites of horse and greyhound racing tracks ultimately will be decided by the state racing commission.

Diamond Drinking Water now available at Albertson stores

Now you can purchase high quality, reverse osmosis drinking water at your neighborhood Albertson's Store. Diamond Water Systems, Int'l., has recently installed self-service drinking water systems at each Albertson stores in Midland and Odessa.

Bring your own bottles and get locally produced, crystal clear, drinking water for only 30¢ a gallon. Diamond Drinking Water is so convenient. Get the exact amount of water you want and pay at the checkout counter with the rest of your groceries. Albertsons is open daily from 6:30 a.m. to midnight.

Headquartered in Midland, Diamond Drinking Water is the concept of Midland natives Kathy and Clifton Jacks. "We saw a need for economical drinking water," Clifton said, "that would give consumers the convenience of a self-service water dispenser inside their grocery store."

Diamond personnel do a Total Dissolved Solids (TDS) and taste test twice a week at each location, to ensure quality control. "We take the quality of our water very personally," said Kathy. "Just as if our own children were drinking it - because they are."

Originally designed to remove salt from sea water, the process of reverse osmosis removes almost 95 percent of all dissolved mineral and chemical contaminants from tap water. "Diamond water is sodium and chlorine free," Clinton added. "It is tasted monthly and is approved by the Texas Department of Health.

Diamond has also opened the Diamond Water Store, located at the corner of Main St. and Florida in Midland. Bring your bottle or purchase one at the store. The Water Store also sells reverse osmosis ice. Coolers and pumps are also available for purchase. Store hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Lisa Jacks of Diamond Water Systems, Int'l., demonstrates how easy it is to draw water from the dispenser, conveniently located in each of the Albertson stores in Midland and Odessa.

Graf begins U.S Open quest as world's top-ranked woman

U.S. Open

NEW YORK (AP) — As the world's top-ranked women's tennis player at only 18 years old, Steffi Graf says she doesn't worry about retaining her title, nor does she see herself burning out at a young age.

While some players who reach dizzying heights in their teens see their careers plummet equally rapidly, Graf said: "Burnout is not what I see in the future. I like tennis too much." And, she insists that she doesn't worry about whether she will win a tournament.

Graf signed autographs for about 200 fans Monday afternoon at Macy's department store and endorsed her line of sports apparel. People asked her to sign posters, one young man wanted his racket case autographed and many youthful admirers posed for pictures next to her.

One fan gave Steffi his autograph, reading, "From the future president of the United States," with his name scribbled underneath.

GRAF SAID burnout is mental more than physical. Her father, who calls himself her trainer, agent and lawyer all in one, agreed that Steffi is not the kind to wear herself out prematurely.

"It's not her style to burn out," said Peter Graf, who makes sure his daughter doesn't push herself too hard.

"It's the way you grow up," the younger Graf said, adding that burnout is more prevalent "if there's any pressure that you have to keep winning."

But she says she doesn't feel such enormous stress: "I'm on the court enjoying it ... trying to do my best."

Peter Graf, who first put a tennis racket in Steffi's hand when she was four, said he makes sure his daughter doesn't practice more than three to five hours a day.

"I have to tell her when to stop. She wants to play, play, play," he said. "She was that way when she was younger."

Graf became the top women's player only two weeks ago, when she beat Chris Evert in the final of the Virginia Slims of Los Angeles. She has won 51 of 52 matches this year.

SHE SAID she expects to hold her ranking "for at least another two weeks" because she is up against Evert and Martina Navratilova, among others, in the U.S. Open in New York, which began today.

Peter Graf makes sure that his daughter has some privacy, considering all the public appearances she makes.

"At a tournament, nobody knows where we stay. Nobody knows the phone," he said.

In their home town of Bruehl, West Germany, he said 80-100 cars may pass in front of their house in an hour. He said people call on the phone and ring the doorbell at all hours of the day and night.

He says that while Steffi is well known in the United States, she is one of the best-known people in West Germany today. The difference, he explained, is that there are many stars in the United States, but in West Germany, Steffi and Boris Becker, a top men's tennis player, are the best-known athletes.

While Peter Graf seems to have guaranteed that Steffi isn't exploited by a manager or coach, she shyly acknowledged that there is no shortage of young men who take an interest in her. But, how will she know when the right young man comes along that it's Steffi he likes and not her fame and money?

"I'm going to give him a hard time," she said. When asked what she will do, she replied, "We'll talk about that later."

STEFFI GRAF
No.1 tennis player

Steffi Graf, the 18-year-old West German tennis sensation, is in the No. 1 spot in women's tennis. After finishing 1985 ranked No. 6, and 1986 at No. 3, she has had a tremendous year in 1987. She has won an impressive eight singles titles and had 45 straight match wins before losing the Wimbledon final to Martina Navratilova. The U.S. Open is played on Har Tru – a hard substance similar to cement – which Graf considers her favorite surface. A victory at the Open could make her No. 1 ranking secure for 1987.

What's new? Cards able to nip Bears

CHICAGO (AP) — Somehow, someway, the Cardinals always get those Bears.

St. Louis, benefiting from three turnovers and a "Hail Mary" pass that landed in the hands of Don Holmes, defeated the Chicago Bears 20-16 Monday night in an exhibition game.

"We've got a lot of work to do before we meet the world champions," said Bears Coach Mike Ditka, whose team won Super Bowl XX and will open the regular season Sept. 14 against the New York Giants, winners of Super Bowl XXI.

"We kept our record intact; we can't beat the Cardinals," said Ditka, who has never coached a victory against St. Louis in his six years with Chicago.

His record stands at 0-6 in exhibition play and 0-2 in regular season competition against the Cardinals.

A couple of fumbles by Matt Suhey kept the Bears from scoring nothing more than a safety in the first half.

Neil Lomax' 13-yard touchdown pass to Troy Johnson in the first quarter gave the Cardinals a 6-0 lead. Late in the first half, quarterback Mike Tomczak drove the Bears to a first down on the Cardinal one-yard line.

But Suhey fumbled on the next play and the Cardinals, unable to move, gave up a safety in order to get a free kick.

The Bears came right back and attempted a 36-yard field goal, but it was blocked by Lenny Smith and recovered by Niko Noga on the Chicago 38 with three seconds left in the half.

Instead of going for a field goal, the Cardinals tried a "Hail Mary" pass by Lomax. The ball bounded off Bear defenders Reggie Phillips and Otis Wilson and into the hands of Holmes for a touchdown.

"The defensive back bobbled the ball right into my hands," said Holmes, who also caught a 31-yard touchdown pass from Cliff Stoudt on St. Louis' first series of the second half.

Benirschke becomes a Cowboy

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys acquired kicker Rolf Benirschke from the San Diego Chargers Monday for an undisclosed draft choice, team officials said.

Benirschke, 32, is a 10-year veteran ranked as the National Football League's third most accurate kicker of all time with a .702 percentage. He has connected on 146 of 208 tries in the pros.

Benirschke is San Diego's all-time leading scorer at 766 points. He also is the Chargers' all-time scoring leader at 766 points and holds 15 club kicking records. His replacement in San Diego is expected to be Vince Abbott, a former USFL kicker from Fullerton State.

Benirschke was picked up by San Diego in 1977 after being waived by the then Oakland Raiders.

He is expected to become the replacement for Rafael Septien, released during the off-season after nine years as the Dallas kicker.

The University of California-Davis product had 16 of 25 field goal attempts in 1986. In 1985, he was placed on injury reserve following the season opener at Buffalo and missed the remainder of the season due to a groin injury.

In three Charger preseason games, Benirschke had not attempted an extra point and was 6-of-7 in field goal attempts.

Benirschke will join the team as soon as possible, Cowboy spokesman Doug Todd said. With the roster addition, the Cowboys have to cut 18 players today to get down to the 60-player limit, he said.

Still in the Cowboys camp are three former USFL kickers Roger Ruzek, David Trout and Luis Zendejas. One or more is expected to be released with today's cuts.

Ruzek is 2-for-3 in field goal attempts in the exhibition season. Trout is 1-for-1 and Zendejas is 0-for-2.

NFL owners, players agree to return to negotiation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The NFL Players Association and the league's owners have agreed to finally resume negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement, spurred on by the NFLPA announcement of a confidential strike deadline.

Hours before the current five-year contract expired at midnight, the union's nine-man executive committee on Monday set a deadline for a walkout but would not reveal the date.

"I wish I could say that we have made a lot of progress," NFLPA executive director Gene Upshaw said. "Over four years ago I started down this road hoping to reach an agreement short of a work stoppage. Today I'm not so optimistic that will occur because of a lack of progress in negotiations."

Upshaw said the committee would recommend the strike deadline date to the full board of player representatives Sept. 8 in Washington, adding that he wanted the players to consider the date before revealing it to the public.

"I think the board has to know first," he said.

Hours after the news conference, Jack Donlan, the chief negotiator for the owners, said the parties have agreed to meet later this week. He would not reveal the date or site of the first meeting between the two sides since Aug. 14-15.

THE EARLIEST the players could strike is Sept. 15, because the union on July 15 gave its mandatory 60 days' notice of a possible strike to the National Labor Relations Board and the league's 28 teams. Donlan, however, said he figures the union would likely not call a strike until shortly after the third game of the season, at which point they would have accumulated the minimum amount of time required to qualify for a year's pension.

"I'm hoping that's the date they have in mind," Donlan said. "We've got a lot of issues to get through. I don't think we could get through them in a week or two."

The NFLPA, discouraged over the lack of progress in negotiations, saw the setting of a strike deadline as its only weapon to get the owners to listen to their demands.

"We really feel the way you get people to talk and to communicate at the table is to threaten them with something like a work stoppage," said Brian Holloway, a tackle on the New England Patriots and a member of the executive committee. "We decided that the action we must take is dramatic, urgent and immediate. Something must be done and done quickly."

THE UNION is seeking improvements in several areas, including guaranteed contracts, increased pension benefits and, most importantly, a free-agent system that does not involve compensation.

Donlan has said free agency is the main obstacle to an agreement. The owners are also seeking a salary scale for rookies and mandatory drug testing.

Upshaw, responding to reports that owners have talked about using free agents in the event of a strike, said: "We predicted things that management would do, and they're doing that."

Donlan confirmed that the signing of cut free agents was part of a memo sent to the teams four months ago and again as a reminder last week.

DONLAN SAID using free agents is "just one of the options we have. We wouldn't try that without a full meeting of all the owners."

In 1982, a 57-day player walkout eliminated seven games from the schedule. Commissioner Pete Rozelle has said that strike cost owners around $150 million.

From Staff Reports

Local volleyball fans can look forward to a tripleheader's worth of action tonight, including the first match-up between Midland High and Midland Lee of the 1987 season.

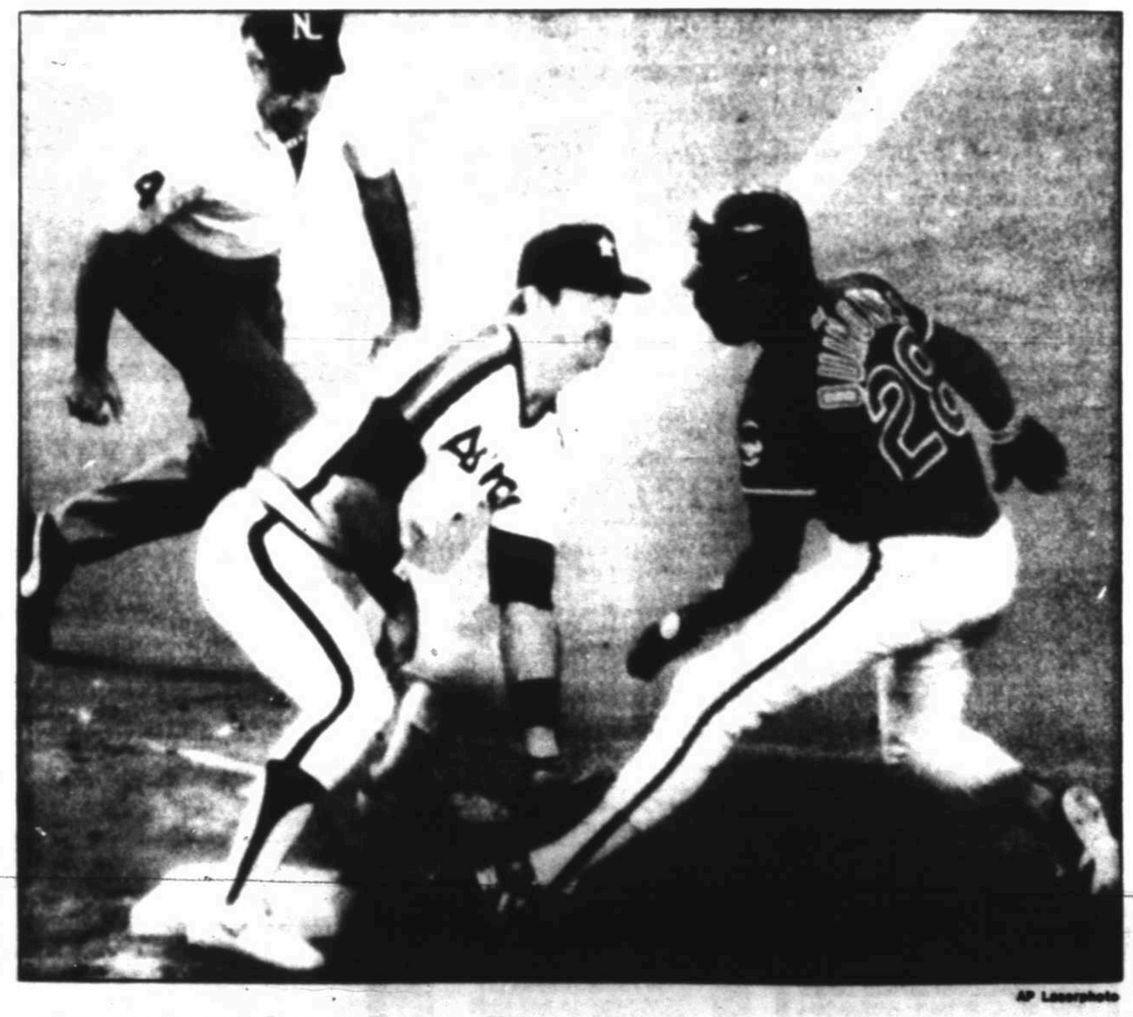

It all gets underway when the Lady Rebels and Lady Bulldogs hit the floor at 5 p.m. in a pre-District 4-5A meeting at Lee Gym. After that clash, MHS will take on Seminole with a Lee-Seminole meeting taking place immediately following.

The Lady Rebs are a young team and have come along slowly, according to coach Janice Baulch. But Lee is itching to improve on that 1-9 mark in tonight's action before traveling to the Seminole tournament this weekend.

"We're real inexperienced and real young," Baulch said. "We're doing a lot of rebuilding and it's a slow process."

MHS has experienced some ups and downs so far this year under coach Sonja Pittman. A third place finish in last weekend's Pecos Tournament with a four wins against one loss shows the Lady Dogs have made some great strides. MHS upped its record to 7-5 season with the win and will also travel to Seminole for the field goal or tournament this weekend.

Lee and MHS will meet again Sept. 15 to begin the District 4-5A season, also at Lee Gym.

Cub homers do little for Astros title hopes

NL Roundup

HOUSTON — The Chicago Cubs are talking about home run records and the Houston Astros are talking about survival in the National League West race.

Ryne Sandberg slugged his 15th homer of the year to lead the Cubs to a 4-3 victory over the slumping Astros Monday night.

It was the 183rd homer of the year for Chicago and keeps them on a pace to break the National League team record of 207 in 162 games set by the 1966 Atlanta Braves.

It was the sixth straight loss for the Astros, who now find themselves 4½ games behind the San Francisco Giants in the West race. It is the longest slump of the season for the Astros.

Astros manager Hal Lanier has a simple explanation for the slump that some fear may take Houston out of contention.

"The bottom line is that we are not hitting with people on base," said Lanier. "I have tried sitting people down and changing the lineup. Nothing has worked."

But Astros second baseman Bill Doran says it's too early to count the Astros out of the race.

Chicago scored single runs in each of the first three innings and added an insurance run in the sixth inning.

The first run came on Sandberg's first inning homer. Jody Davis scored on a groundout by Sandberg in the second and Keith Moreland drove in a run in the third on a sacrifice fly after Jerry Mumphrey tripled.

Singles by Moreland, Luis Quinones and pitcher Les Lancaster allowed the Cubs to add the insurance run in the sixth inning.

Lancaster, 5-1, allowed only six hits, including three in the fourth inning when the Astros managed to score 2 runs. Lee Smith relieved Lancaster in the eighth inning to pick up his 32nd save of the season.

Astros starting and losing pitcher Danny Darwin, 8-9, had to leave the game in the second inning with a muscle pull, possibly in the rib cage area. The injury leaves Darwin on a day-to-day basis and aggravates Houston's pitching problems.

Cardinals 4, Reds 0

John Tudor pitched eight shutout innings as St. Louis beat Cincinnati for the Cardinals' sixth straight victory. The Reds, third in the National League West, have dropped nine of their last 10 games and trail San Francisco by six games.

Tudor, 5-2, allowed five hits, walked one and struck out four in his seventh start since coming off the disabled list. Todd Worrell got the final three outs for the first-place Cardinals, allowing one hit.

Vince Coleman led off the St. Louis first against Ted Power, 10-9, with a single and stole second, his league-leading 90th steal. Ozzie Smith singled, scoring Coleman, and Tommy Herr followed with a single, sending Smith to third.

After Jack Clark walked to load the bases, Smith came home on McGee's fielder's choice groundout and Lance Johnson made it 3-0 with a single. The Cards made it 4-0 in the third inning as Herr opened with a double and, one out later, McGee hit an RBI single.

Mets 6, Padres 5

Howard Johnson led off the top of the 10th inning with his 33rd home run to lift New York over San Diego. Johnson homered on a 1-1 pitch from reliever Keith Comstock, 2-1.

Jesse Orosco, 3-7, worked 2⅔ of hitless relief for the victory and Roger McDowell got the last out for his 22nd save, equaling his total of last season.

The Mets trailed 5-1 after seven innings, but rallied for four unearned runs in the eighth on consecutive triples by Rafael Santana and Mookie Wilson and a pair of errors.

Falcons' Andrews calls it quits; several vets waived

Associated Press

William Andrews, the Atlanta Falcons' all-time leading rusher, has fallen short in his attempt to come back from a devastating training camp injury.

"I fulfilled everything I wanted to do in the game, except longevity, which was just not a part of it," Andrews said Monday after announcing his retirement from the NFL.

Three years ago, Andrews suffered a knee injury in the 1984 training camp and missed all of two seasons. He returned to action last year, but never completely regained the physical skills which helped him become a four-time Pro Bowl selection.

He saw only limited duty, gaining 214 yards on 52 carries.

The former Auburn star, who entered the NFL in 1979, finished his six-year career with 5,986 yards rushing and 2,645 yards on pass receptions. He scored 41 touchdowns.

Team owner Rankin M. Smith Sr. said Andrews' impact on the Falcons ranked with that of such former greats as linebacker Tommy Nobis, defensive end Claude Humphrey and center Jeff Van Note. Van Note retired after last season.

NFL Camps

"His leadership was, indeed, a pivotal factor in the success the team enjoyed in winning the (1980) Western Division title, as well as in the three playoff seasons," Smith said.

Head Coach Marion Campbell said Andrews "epitomizes what a man should be in any sport. He was a special person."

Roster Cuts

Looking at a Tuesday deadline for meeting the NFL's 60-player limit, the Falcons also waived six players Monday, including linebacker Ralph Van Dyke, a heralded fourth-round pick.

They were among a number to go as NFL teams began their first mandatory cuts of the season to get down to the roster limit of 60 by 3 p.m. today.

Among those cut included veteran quarterback David Woodley, a one-time Super Bowl starter attempting a comeback with Green Bay after a year in retirement; wide receiver Anthony Hancock, Kansas City's first-round draft choice in 1982, wide receiver Steve Kreider, an eight-year veteran with Cincinnati, and veteran tight end Joe Rose of Miami.

Pittsburgh cut linebacker Dennis "Dirt" Winston, an 11-year veteran who began his career with the Steelers, spent five years in New Orleans, then returned to the Steelers. The Steelers also waived Eric Williams, a five-year veteran who started at free safety the past three seasons.

Woodley, who started for the Miami Dolphins when they went to the Super Bowl in 1982, quit last year after losing a battle for Pittsburgh's starting quarterback job. He re-signed this year with the Packers.

Kreider had spent all eight of his NFL season with the Bengals and played with them in the 1981 Super Bowl. Last year, he caught five passes for 98 yards and had career totals of 150 catches, 2,119 yards and nine touchdowns.

Hancock missed most of last season with a knee injuries and had been bothered by nagging injuries ever since being drafted by the Chiefs from Tennessee. His best season was 1983, when he caught 37 passes for 584 yards with one touchdown.

Rose, who started only one game in his six seasons with the Dolphins, was a third-down receiver who caught 130 passes for 1,753 yards in his career. Coach Don Shula said Rose, who missed all of last season with a thigh injury, came into his office Monday morning and asked to be cut if the team didn't have any plans for him this year.

Defensive back Willie Teal, who has been fighting a losing battle against knee ailments, was among seven players released Monday by the Minnesota Vikings.

Teal, 29, who had been with the Vikings for six seasons, injured his left knee during the 1986 training camp and it kept him out of the first five games last season. Teal, who also missed five games with a knee injury in 1984, has lost a step, Vikings Coach Jerry Burns said.

Teal led the Vikings in interceptions in 1981 and 1982, picking off 15 passes in his career.

In other training camp news, the Buffalo Bills acquired wide receiver Trumaine Johnson from the San Diego Chargers in exchange for rookie linebacker David Brandon, a third-round pick this year. Johnson, a former USFL star, caught 30 passes for 390 yards and a touchdown for the Chargers last season.

The New Orleans Saints, meanwhile, signed their first-round draft pick, defensive tackle Shawn Knight of Brigham Young, for $1.675 million plus about $150,000 in incentives over four years.

Jays' Henke gives one away

Associated Press

TORONTO — Tom Henke, known north of the border as "The Terminator", showed Monday night that he can't be perfect all the time.

The Toronto reliever, asked to pitch four innings instead of his usual one or two, uncorked a pitch that cost the Toronto Blue Jays a game Monday night.

Jack Howell, who got aboard with a broken-bat single for his third hit of the game, spoiled the Blue Jays' seven-run comeback by scoring the winning run in the 11th inning for an 8-7 California Angels' victory.

The loss kept Toronto one game behind the AL East-leading Detroit Tigers, who also lost, and brought the Angels to within three games of Minnesota in the American League West.

Howell moved to second on a sacrifice bunt and third on Bill Buckner's fly to right, barely beat the throw from Jesse Barfield.

With former Midland Angel Devon White batting, Henke, 0-5, threw a high fastball that bounced off catcher Ernie Whitt's glove for a passed ball.

Winner Willie Fraser, 9-8, struck out two in one inning and Gary Lucas pitched a clean 11th for his third save, bringing the wild game to an end.

Angels starter John Candelaria brought a 6-0 lead into the seventh but Toronto scored seven times in the inning. However, the Angels came back with a run in the ninth to tie the game.

Second baseman Johnny Ray, acquired from the Pittsburgh Pirates last Saturday, hit three singles, scored twice and drove in a run for the Angels.

AL Roundup

Yankees 4, A's 1

Ron Guidry overcame a rare balk that handed Oakland an early run and went on to pitch New York over the Athletics.

Guidry, 4-8, allowed four hits in 7⅓ innings and got offensive support from Ron Kittle and Don Mattingly, who each hit two-run homers.

Athletics Manager Tony LaRussa requested that the umpires confiscate Kittle's bat after the Yankees' designated hitter homered off Curt Young, 11-7, in the fourth inning. Kittle's homer, his 12th, followed a throwing error by shortstop Alfredo Griffin that enabled Gary Ward to reach first base with one out.

Orioles 4, Mariners 3

Mike Hart's home run touched off Baltimore's three-run rally in the fifth inning as the Orioles defeated Seattle. Hart's homer, which snapped a 1-1 tie, came off Mike Morgan, 10-15, who was trying to equal his career-high victory total.

Jim Dwyer and Bill Ripken followed with singles, and both scored on a throwing error by catcher Dave Valle after Dwyer was trapped in a rundown on Cal Ripken Jr.'s grounder to second baseman Harold Reynolds.

Indians 7, Tigers 2

Tommy Hinzo had four hits, drove in two runs and scored twice as Cleveland beat Detroit.

John Farrell, 3-0, making his third start and fourth major league appearance since being called up Aug. 18, pitched six-hit ball before needing relief help in the ninth from Ed Vande Berg.

Farrell gave up Matt Nokes' 25th home run in the sixth inning and was also charged with a Tiger run in the ninth on Bill Madlock's sacrifice fly.

The Indians battered Frank Tanana, 13-9, for 10 hits and four runs in the six innings he worked. Only three of the runs were earned as the Tigers committed three errors — one by Tanana.

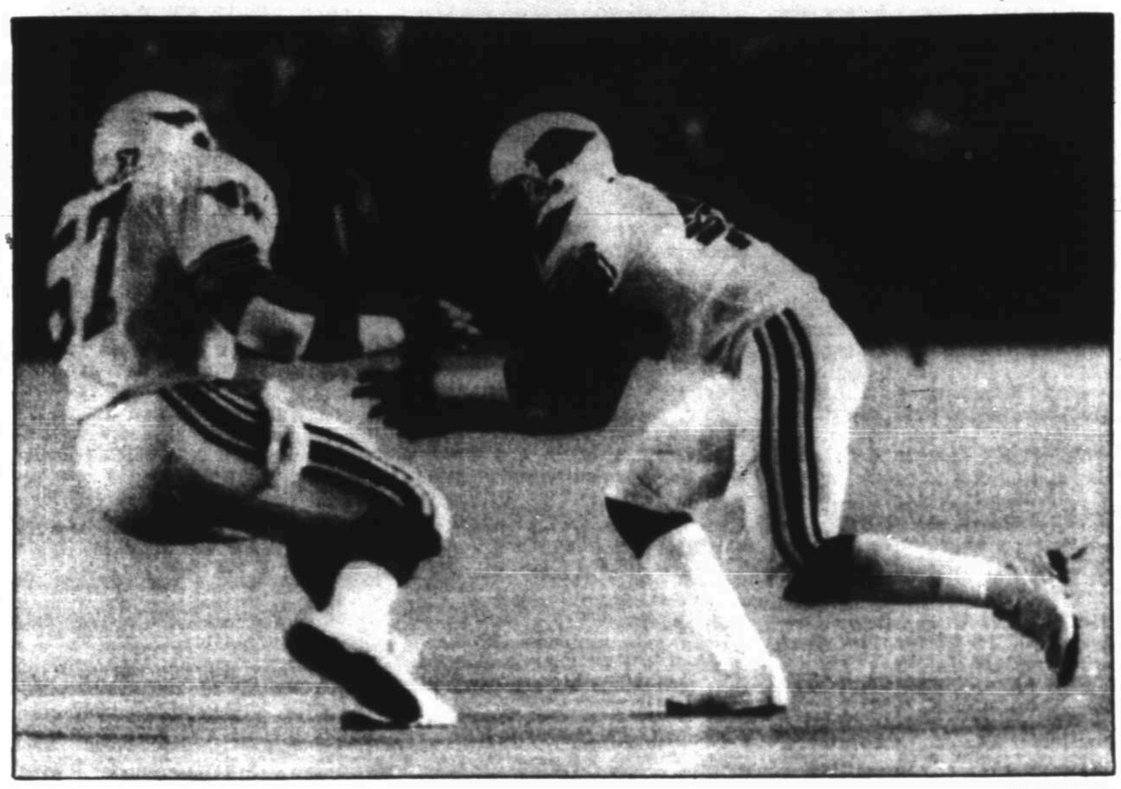

White Sox 5, Royals 3

Carlton Fisk went 3-for-3, including a three-run homer, and knocked in all five runs as Chicago beat Kansas City.

Jose DeLeon, 8-11, gained his third consecutive victory with 11 strikeouts in seven-plus innings. DeLeon needed relief help in the eighth from Bobby Thigpen, who recorded his seventh save.

Danny Jackson, 7-16, took the loss.

Alysheba, Van Berg above suspicion

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

Thoroughbred racing at Saratoga in August is an annual celebration of the sport, but this year it was a sour experience for Jack Van Berg, the Hall of Fame trainer of Kentucky Derby winner Alysheba.

It was not the rain or sloppy track on Travers Day or Alysheba's loss in that race that upset Van Berg. It was the shadow of doubt cast upon him and his colt — for no reason.

About 24 hours after Alysheba finished sixth in the Travers, it was announced through the New York Racing Association that there had been a tip that a few hours before the race a pain killer would be administered to the colt, who won the Kentucky Derby and Preakness while legally racing on Lasix.

The New York State Racing and Wagering Board rightfully acted on the tip, but the action should not have been made public unless Alysheba tested positive, which he did not after two pre-race blood tests and post-race blood and urine tests.

Jack Van Berg is not some fly-by-night trainer desperate for a big score. The Clarence Scharbauer, Jr., family of Midland, which owns Alysheba, views racing as a sport. They refused to replace jockey Chris McCarron after his admitted bad ride in the Belmont Stakes, which, if it didn't cost Alysheba the Triple Crown, did prevent him from finishing second and earning a $1 million bonus.

"My reputation suffered," said the 51-year-old Van Berg, who has trained more than 5,000 winners.

It also was suggested before Alysheba's post-race test results were available that it could be the greatest scandal in racing. Still another story revived the Dancer's Image case in which that colt was disqualified from first in the Kentucky Derby after a post-race urine test revealed Butazolidin in his system. Bute was was illegal in Kentucky in 1968.

Some members of the racing media seem to begrudge Alysheba his victories in the Kentucky Derby and Preakness because of Lasix, a diruretic used to treat respiratory bleeding.

Was it really Lasix that enabled Alysheba to win the Derby after being checked twice in the stretch and also almost falling when he clipped Bet Twice's heels? Or was it athletic ability and heart?

Alysheba has not won in three starts since the Preakness, all of them without Lasix. But missing along with Lasix has been good racing luck.

Jack Van Berg has accepted the losses as being part of a tough game. Being needlessly put under suspicion is not be part of the game.

Noonan tries on Cowboy garb

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys' No. 1 draft pick is finally in uniform after missing all of training camp in Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Danny Noonan, who held out longer than any other Cowboys rookie, arrived Monday in Dallas after ending his 41-day delay.

"I'm glad it's over and I'm ready to go," Noonan said. "The Cowboys are tough to deal with when it comes to money. Other guys, Mike Sherrard and Randy White, have held out for 30 days or so and they eventually got what they wanted. It worked for me, too."

Noonan, an All-America noseguard at Nebraska last season, got what he wanted when he agreed to a contract that will pay him approximately $1.6 million total for four one-year contracts.

"I don't feel like a millionaire. But I think I might go out and buy my first car now," said Noonan. "My wife (Penny) and I have a place picked out in Dallas, just a half a block away from the Cowboys' offices. She's as ready to get to Dallas as I am."

Noonan's agent, Tom Condon of Kansas City, reached the agreement with Joe Bailey, Cowboys vice president of administration, after the two sides traded barbs throughout the negotiations.

The former Lincoln Northeast all-stater probably won't be a starter when the season begins Sept. 13, but he will probably play in the Cowboys' final exhibition game Saturday with Houston, Coach Tom Landry said.

The holdout was centered around the amount of money Noonan would be paid, plus arguments about a fifth-year option and other payments, the former Cornhusker said.

Landry said that he was pleased to finally get Noonan with the team.

"He's missed a lot and he's way behind, but we will be able to use him in pass-rush situations early in the season until he learns our defense," he said.

Noonan said that should not be a problem.

"I understand the basics of their defenses, but learning the schemes for certain situations will take some time," Noonan said.

Dollar mostly higher

LONDON (AP) — The dollar opened little changed today as European markets awaited the release of new U.S. economic indicators. Gold began lower but recovered in London.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell 0.75 yen to a closing 141.60. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.85 yen.

Rumors that the U.S. Federal Reserve may be tightening U.S. credit conditions also kept the dollar from sinking, traders said.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—1.8125 West German marks, up from 1.8110

—1.4945 Swiss francs, up from 1.4925

—6.0585 French francs, up from 6.0535

—2.0428 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0395

—1,313.75 Italian lire, up from 1,311.25

—1.3203 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3189

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.6355, compared with $1.6340 Monday.

GOLD

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $452.00 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $452.75. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $453.10.

In Zurich, the bid price was $452.80, down from $456.00 late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $3.82 to close at a bid $453.09.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.43 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $7.45.

Monday was a bank holiday in Britain.

Flare-up pushes oil price near $20

NEW YORK (AP) — While oil traders remain cautious in the face of a potential supply glut, the latest flare-up in the Persian Gulf has pushed prices higher.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, closed at $19.73 Monday, up 34 cents from Friday.

Contracts for September delivery of refined products also moved higher, with wholesale unleaded gasoline settling at 50.65 cents per gallon, up 0.25 cent, and wholesale heating oil closing at 52.11 cents per gallon, up 0.82 cent.

The market on Monday again appeared torn between its concern over hostilities in the gulf and reports that members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are producing more oil than world markets need.

"It seems a lot of the hype we're seeing — the new raids, the flashing sabers — is overshadowing the overproduction scene," said Richard Kane, a trader at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "But any time the market approaches $20 (a barrel), it backs right down."

Over the weekend, Iraq said it launched a series of attacks on Iranian oil facilities and tankers carrying Iranian oil. The attacks, which continued Monday, broke an informal month-long cease-fire that the warring countries had observed.

Also Monday, an Iranian speedboat attacked a Kuwaiti-flag freighter, gulf-based marine salvage executives said. Iran accuses Kuwait of aiding the Iraqi war effort.

Oil analysts said trading in New York opened predictably higher, drawing some additional support from short-covering.

In a short sale, a trader sells borrowed contracts, hoping to replace them later at a lower price. When the contracts expire, or if prices rise — or threaten to rise — the trader may cover that contract by buying new ones.

"Uncertainty makes people feel they don't want to be short," said Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc.

Stephen J. McKiernan, of the McKiernan & Co. commodities trading firm, said traders appeared more cautious Monday than earlier in the summer, when similar fears about restricted supplies drove prices to a high of $22.39 per barrel for the near-month contract.

After peaking on July 17, prices went into a sharp decline, losing about $4 a barrel in response to reports that OPEC was exceeding its production quotas.

With production outpacing demand by anywhere up to 3 million barrels a day — according to various estimates — traders still fear prices will head lower.

"If the tension dies down," McKiernan said, "the supply thing will come right back."

Pickens' group offers $5.7 billion for remainder of Newmont Mining

By THOMAS C. HAYES
New York Times News Service

DALLAS (NYT) — The investor group headed by T. Boone Pickens, the Texas oilman, showed its hand on Monday by offering to buy the 90 percent of the Newmont Mining Corp. it does not already own for $5.7 billion.

Pickens

Analysts said the $95-a-share offer was likely to touch off a takeover battle with Newmont's largest shareholder, Consolidated Gold Fields PLC, of London. Newmont, the nation's largest gold producer, did not immediately respond to the overture.

The offer by the Pickens group, Ivanhoe Partners, includes $427 million spent earlier to buy 9.95 percent, or 6.65 million shares of Newmont, giving it a total value of $6.12 billion.

The deal would rank as the third-largest takeover outside the oil industry and the largest of any kind this year. The largest acquisition was a management-led buyout of the Beatrice Cos. for $6.25 billion in 1986, followed by the General Electric Co.'s purchase of the RCA Corp. for $6.14 billion.

In a letter to Gordon R. Parker, Newmont's chairman, Pickens indicated that Ivanhoe wanted to acquire the stock in a presumably friendly, "negotiated transaction."

In a hostile takeover, offers are typically made directly to stockholders, and Pickens left open the door to such a direct offer, too. Ivanhoe said it was "prepared to proceed promptly" to present its offer to Newmont's stockholders.

In response to the Ivanhoe letter, which was disclosed before the start of trading, Newmont's shares jumped $9.50, to $92 a share on the New York Stock Exchange. More than 3.2 million shares were traded.

A spokesman for Newmont Mining, with headquarters in New York, did not return telephone calls. Graham Williams, a spokesman for Consolidated Gold Fields said: "It's too soon to comment on the bid."

Consolidated Gold Fields, which owns 26.2 percent of Newmont's stock, said two weeks ago that it wanted Newmont to remain independent and that it would not meet with Pickens to discuss his interests in acquiring Newmont.

The company also said it would "take such action as we deem appropriate" to defend its investment in Newmont.

Institutions own 43 percent of Newmont's stock. The company has 66.7 million shares outstanding.

Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. agreed to provide financing for the takeover, but so far it has not issued a statement about its ability secure the necessary financing.

The Ivanhoe bid marks a comeback not just for Pickens, who made little profit in a failed effort to acquire the Diamond Shamrock Corp. in February, but also for Drexel. The firm once did a brisk business in helping finance some of the market's most feared raiders, including Pickens, with its ability to raise capital by issuing "junk bonds." But that was before Ivan F. Boesky, a Drexel customer, settled the largest insider trading case ever filed last November.

Leading index, home sales edge up

Associated Press

Continued moderate growth for the economy was signaled by the government's main economic forecasting gauge, which posted a 0.5 percent increase in July, its sixth consecutive gain, the Commerce Department said today.

The advance in its Index of Leading Indicators matched the May performance and followed a revised 1 percent gain in June, it said.

The six straight increases made the best showing since a similar run in late 1985 and early 1986. The gains have been cited as supporting evidence by economists who are predicting that the current recovery from the 1981-82 recession should last through the 1988 election year.

June's increase of 1 percent, which had originally been reported as a 0.8 percent hike, was the strongest rise since a 2.1 percent gain in December.

The index is a composite of 11 forward-looking business statistics.

In other reports Monday, the government said American businesses did well in the second quarter, while farmers are getting less money for their crops.

The Labor Department said that companies' productivity — their efficiency in turning out goods and services — increased at a revised annual rate of 1.3 percent from April through June.

The overall productivity improvement for non-farm businesses, led by a 4.9 percent jump in manufacturing productivity, was slightly below the 1.4 percent increase reported in preliminary figures last month but more than triple the gains of the first quarter.

The news wasn't as bright for farmers. The Agriculture Department reported that prices for raw products dropped 2.3 percent in August, matching a drop in July that had followed six months of increases.

Lower prices for cotton, apples, potatoes, corn and soybeans contributed most to the decline.

In another report, the Commerce Department said sales of new homes edged up 0.5 percent in July after an annualized increase of 1.1 percent the previous month and a more than 12 percent plunge in May.

In its productivity report, the government said labor costs associated with producing each unit of goods or services rose at an annual rate of only 1.7 percent in the second quarter compared with an inflation rate of 5 percent so far this year as employers kept nominal wage increases to 3 percent.

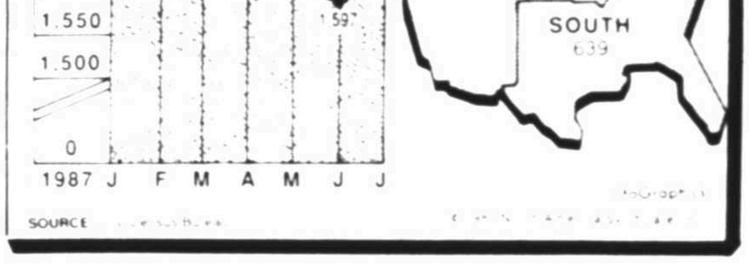

In the housing report, the Commerce department reported prices of new homes at a median $107,000, a 0.9 percent decrease from June but still 13.7 percent above the median price in July 1986.

An index measuring the ability of the typical family to afford to buy a home edged down slightly in July because of small increases in prices and mortgage interest rates, the National Association of Realtors said.

Chili's to take concept of Taco Cabanas nationwide

DALLAS (AP) — The San Antonio restauranteur who first served fajitas 16 years ago plans to introduce his Mexican patio cafe concept in other regions of the country, and the founder of the Steak and Ale chain is going to help him do it.

Felix L. Stehling, head of Taco Cabana International of San Antonio, and Norman E. Brinker, Dallas-based Chili's Inc.'s chief, said Monday they have formed a joint venture to expand the Taco Cabana concept outside of Texas.

Stehling began the Mexican patio cafe concept nine years ago; his privately-held Taco Cabana now has eight units in San Antonio, Austin and Dallas.

His restaurants first served fajitas, a flour tortilla filled with strips of skirt steak, tomato, lettuce, cheese, avacado and sour cream. The dish is now served in many Mexican restaurants.

Chili's, which Brinker founded after he sold his Steak and Ale restaurants to Pillsbury Restaurant Group 11 years ago, also has acquired the Border Stop restaurant in Dallas and will convert it to the first Taco Cabana operation under the joint venture, officials said.

Chili's Inc., with 121 restaurants, reported before-tax profits of $11.2 million on revenues of $177.2 million in the fiscal year ending June 30. In the previous year, Chili's had $6.9 million in before-tax profits on $123.7 million revenues.

UAW selects Ford for auto strike

By JOHN HOLUSHA
New York Times News Service

DEARBORN, Mich. (NYT) — The United Automobile Workers Monday chose the Ford Motor Co. rather than the General Motors Corp. as its strike target in the negotiations for a new labor contract to replace the agreement that expires on Sept. 14.

If past practice is followed, the union's leaders will focus their efforts on the No. 2 automobile maker until a settlement is reached, either with or without a strike. Once a contract is negotiated with Ford and approved by Ford workers, the union would then attempt to impose a similar settlement at GM.

However, GM officials have said they may not accept a contract designed at Ford because of the different circumstances at the two companies. In a statement issued after the union announced its choice, GM said, "There are sufficient differences between GM and its domestic competitors that demand a separate agreement specifically tailored to GM."

This raises the possibility of a struggle between the union and GM even if a settlement is reached and approved at Ford before the strike deadline. About 110,000 workers are involved at Ford and more than 350,000 at GM. The union's contract with the Chrysler Corp. extends for another year.

Owen F. Bieber, the president of the UAW, indicated that Ford was chosen because the union felt the company would be more flexible on its principal bargaining goal: improved job security.

"Ford is supposed to be a hotbed of good ideas," Bieber said after meeting with both the union's GM and Ford councils to explain the choice. "So we are going to give them the opportunity to demonstrate that the same is true in the labor relations arena."

Oil PAC money benefits Texas' lawmakers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oil industry campaign contributions have gushed to more than $1.2 million so far this year, and Texans are at the head of the pipeline, records indicate.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, has received more money — $159,525, or about 13 percent of the total — from oil industry political action committees than anyone else in Congress, Federal Election Commission records indicate.

Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, with $23,500, and Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, with $22,500, rank first and second on the House list of oil-PAC money recipients, San Antonio-based Harte-Hanks Newspapers' Washington bureau found in its study.

Vice President George Bush has received $33,800 in oil money, more than the $30,725 garnered by all his presidential rivals combined, the study shows. Sen. Bob Dole received $19,175; Rep. Jack Kemp, $5,550 and Rep. Richard Gephardt, $5,000, the report says.

The money apparently is paying off on legislation that would help revitalize the oil industry, which is reeling from the 1986 price slide, the Harte-Hanks bureau found.

Sixteen of the top 20 oil-PAC money recipients — and nine of the top 10 — in the Senate voted for a repeal of the Windfall Profits Tax this year, records show. The repeal, which oil producers have sought for years, passed 58-40 and now is in a House-Senate conference committee.

The oil lobby was less successful on Bentsen's proposal for a 50 percent cap on oil imports, which was defeated 55-41. But 11 of the top 20 Senate oil-PAC recipients voted for it, while nine opposed it.

Meanwhile, the top 10 recipients of the House have sponsored or co-sponsored more than 50 bills that would benefit oil producers.

"What the oil industry is doing is buying access and votes," said Craig McDonald, director of Congress Watch, an organization that monitors PAC money contributions and their influence. "That ($1.2 million) is a pretty good share of money."

Texans are not the only recipients of oil contributions. The 112 oil PACs representing organizations which have a full or partial interest in oil and gas operations have contributed to 381 different members of Congress and four presidential candidates, according to the study which covers campaign reports up to Aug. 1.

Continental balks at air fare hikes

NEW YORK (NYT) — Continental Airlines said Monday that it would not match all of the increases and the tighter restrictions on discount fares that have been announced by four major airlines.

The stand by Continental, a unit of the Texas Air Corp., is expected to force the other carriers — United, Delta, American and Northwest — to cancel the increases in markets where they compete with Continental.

Continental, which in the last year has often acted as the price leader in the industry, has generally supported a series of fare increases that are expected to result in much higher profits for the industry in the third quarter. In this case, however, Continental has decided to be cautious.

Rick Scott, a Continental spokesman, said, "While these types of fares may well make sense a little later in the fall, we believe it may be premature at the outset of the off-peak period we are about to enter."

Mobil has record well in Salt Creek

From Staff Reports

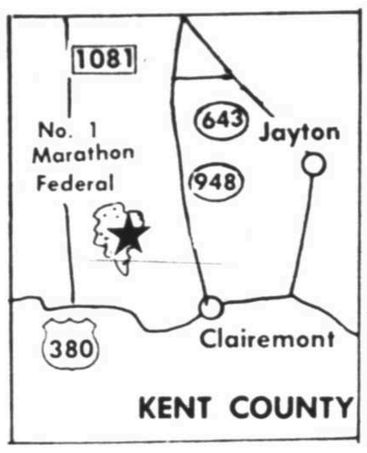

MOBIL EXPLORATION & PRODUCING U.S. of Dallas has announced a prolific completion in the No. 416 'E' Salt Creek Field Unit well in Kent County. At 1,206 barrels of crude oil per day, the well's production rate is the highest of any well in the company's 151-well infill drilling and waterflood program.

The 416 'E', which produces from the Canyon Reef Formation at about 6,600 feet using a submersible pump, is part of a major waterflood optimization program that was begun at Salt Creek in 1985. Thirty-two producing wells are scheduled for 1987, bringing to 71 the number of wells drilled in the field since the program was initiated. Infill development is expected to continue through 1992.

The Salt Creek Field, located about 130 miles northeast of Midland, has produced 233 million barrels of oil since coming on-stream in 1950. Faced with a steadily declining production from the mature field, Mobil initiated a program to convert certain key producing well to water injectors and drill additional infill wells on closer 20-acre spacing.

As a result of the program, production has increased from approximately 18,500 barrels a day in 1985, to more than 25,000 barrels a day currently.

"Salt Creek is an example of how detailed field data analysis and advanced reservoir management techniques combine to bring new life to mature fields," explained A.G. Peperone, Midland production manager. "We haven't seen a well with this kind of potential since early production commenced in the 1950s and the E-416 is certainly the best infill well we've drilled in our waterflood program."

Mobil plans to drill about 80 more wells between 1988 and 1992 as part of the Salt Creek Program. At the end of June, there were 153 oil and 84 injection wells in the field.

Mobil operates the Salt Creek field and had a forty-percent interest. The remaining sixty-percent is divided among 25 working interest owners.

Enron sells Cortez interests

HOUSTON (SWN) — Enron Corp. today announced that it has sold its HNG Cortez Pipeline Co. stock to Cortez Vickers Inc., of Denver for about $21 million.

Through the HNG subsidiary, Enron had held a 13 percent interest in the Cortez Pipeline Co., a general partnership that owns a 500-mile carbon dioxide pipeline. The line transports carbon dioxide from production fields near Cortez, Colo., to Denver City, for use in enhanced oil recovery.

Other partners of the Cortez Pipeline Co.include a subsidiary of Shell Oil Co. which owns 50 percent, and a subsidairy of Mobil Oil Corp. which owns 37 percent. Shell operates the pipeline system.

The Cortez Pipeline became operational in 1984. It has a free-flow capacity of 715 million cubic feet per day and can be expanded to one billion cubic feet per day.

Enron will use the proceeds from the sale for general corporate purposes, including debt reduction. Enron said it remains committed to the carbon dioxide pipeline business through its continuing operation of the Central Basin Pipeline, which is connected to and runs south from the Cortez line through the Permian Basin area.

HOUSTON (AP) — Officials of Shell Oil Co. have named the president of Shell Chemical Co. to the same position at Shell Development Co., the company's research division.

Saxon Oil changes mind on reincorporation

DALLAS (SWN) — Saxon Oil Co. announced that its board of directors has determined not to reincorporate from Texas to Delaware nor reduce the number of outstanding shares previously approved at its annual meeting.

The company indicated that is had determined not to complete the reincorporation primarily because recent amendments in Texas corporation law have largely eliminated any advantages to the company of becoming incorporated in Delaware. Without the Delaware reincorporation, the company further determined not to complete the share reduction because the two actions were approved by the shareholders as part of a single, combined proposal.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Government securities move opposite interest rates

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. In a recent column, you wrote, "The values of interest-paying securities — including U.S. Treasury bonds — fluctuate in the marketplace. They rise when interest rates fall and drop when interest rates go up."

I fail to see why. Can you give the reason ... rational, logic or economic explanation ... why your statement should be true?

A. This is best explained with an example.

Let's say you bought a $10,000 face value, 30-year U.S. Treasury bond at the Treasury Department's most recent long-term bond auction on August 13. That bond pays 8.875 percent interest. So you know you will receive $887.50 interest annually until the bond matures in the year 2017, or until you sell that bond.

Now, let's say interest rates decline between now and November, when the Treasury is scheduled to make its next sale of long-term bonds. Let's say the 30-year Treasury bonds issued in November pay 8.75 percent interest — $875 annually per $10,000 face value.

Since your bond pays $12.50 more interest per year than the hypothetical $10,000 Treasury bonds issued in November, your bond will then be worth more in the marketplace.

Let's use a different scenario, with interest rates rising by November, forcing the Treasury to issue 30-year bonds paying 9.125 percent interest — $912.50 annually per $10,000 face amount.

No investor whose financial elevator goes all the way to the top will shell out $10,000 for your bond, when the same amount of money will buy a new Treasury 30-year bond paying $25 more interest every year. As a result, the market value of your bond will fall below $10,000.

Q. I am a 75-year-old widow, with total income of $12,000 a year. I own my home and have about $150,000 in a 5.25 percent savings account.

I need more income and know I should put the money now in my savings account into something paying higher dividends or interest, but still be safe. I know nothing about stocks and bonds and do not want to tie up my money for any long period — or take any risk.

What do you recommend?

A. The key parts of your letter are the statements that your money must be "safe" and that you refuse to take any "risk." Those are appropriate thoughts for you and many other people in your situation. You shouldn't stray from safety, for the obvious reason that you can't afford the financial and/or psychological risks of losing even part of your money.

You certainly should move most of the money you have in that low-interest savings account elsewhere. To obtain somewhat higher interest with absolute safety, that leaves you with two basic choices — short-term U.S. Treasury securities or certificates of deposit.

Organized by the Human Resouces Committee of the Permian Basin Chapter of the IADC, the all-day seminar will convene at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Sept.15.

Speakers will include Ann Estrada of the Immigration & Naturalization Service; Texas Employment CommissionCommissioner Mary Scott Nabers and Walter Christy, an attorney from New Orleans noted as an authority on AIDS.

"Topics to be discussed will be greatly beneficial to personnel managers, operations managers, safety personnel and any persons having responsibility for hiring, firing or managing personnel," said Rich Eicher, chairman of the human resources committee.

Registration fee, which includes a luncheon, is $25. For information call Eicher at 563-1927, or contact Tana Dixon, 214 W. Texas, Suite 1200, Midland, TX, 79701.

Detroit Diocese rolls out ads to 'collar' recruits

DETROIT (AP) — The pitch is slick, sophisticated and subtly familiar.

"We're looking to collar a few good men," reads the caption on a handsome, full-page advertisement featuring three clean-cut young men — one white, one black and one Hispanic.

It isn't the U.S. Army, Navy or Marines doing the recruiting, but the Archdiocese of Detroit, which has adopted a few Madison Avenue techniques to lure new recruits into the priesthood.

"We basically approached it as we would any campaign," said Annette Cummings, a senior account executive for the Detroit office of N.W. Ayer Inc., a New York-based ad firm.

Cummings, who is in charge of the $300,000 archdiocese account, said the archdiocese ads are aimed at the same age group as the military services aim for.

"But because we were dealing with a religion, encouraging people to make life choices, we had to be sensitive to how we handled it. We had to walk a very fine line," she said.

One print ad features proud parents and a young priest with the caption: "Our son, the father." Another ad features the slogan: "The work is hard but the rewards are infinite."

The campaign is using decidedly secular mediums, however. A radio spot featuring an introspective monologue by a priest is being aired on rock music stations, and print ads are appearing in regional editions of such magazines as People and Sports Illustrated.

NEWMONT

Since then, Drexel and a number of senior officials, including Michael Milken, the head of its junk bond department, have been subpoenaed and became the subject of a government inquiry.

No charges have been filed by the government and Drexel has denied that it was involved in any wrongdoing. But Drexel practically ceased its involvement in hostile deals, the only exception being the $4.6 million bid for Kenner Parker Toys Inc. by New World Entertainment Ltd. that was initiated in July.

John Sorte, a Drexel managing director who heads its energy financing group, said that Drexel had not made a conscious decision to get involved in these deals again. "They were just the first clients that have asked to do one of these in some time," he said.

William G. Siedenburg, an analyst with Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., said he believed Pickens's goal was to secure Newmont Mining's valuable North American gold properties, principally located in Nevada, for Mesa Limited Partnership, which Pickens heads.

The remainder of Newmont's assets would likely be split among other Ivanhoe Partners or sold to repay the debt needed to finance the takeover.

"This is a hard call," said one analyst familiar with Pickens, who asked not to be named. "Newmont's stock already is reflecting a significant premium compared with expectations for future gold prices. If he acquires Newmont, clearly his objective would be to break it up.

STRIKE

The union's objective, he said, "is to establish a settlement pattern that is good for the worker and good for the industry by making stable domestic employment a part of how these companies do business."

Despite its smaller size, Ford is currently a more prosperous company than GM. Last year, Ford had profits of $3.3 billion, as against $2.95 billion for GM, and is expected to be more profitable this year as well. Bieber said, however, that the company's wealth was not an overriding factor in choosing it as a target.

Both GM and Ford have made initial proposals to the union, neither of which contained detailed job security provision or substantial wage increases. This is typical of early bargaining and, predictably, the union has rejected them. A typical autoworker is now paid about $13.70 an hour.

GM, with its much larger work force and more extensive parts manufacturing operations, is trying to eliminate operations that it considers noncompetitive. This drive to trim employment rolls runs counter to the union's job security aspirations.

Both union and Ford officials said they felt it would be possible to reach an agreement by the deadline without a strike. "We are not looking for a strike," Surma said.

U.S. leary of allowing Soviets on-site nuclear inspections

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surprised U.S. officials are reacting cautiously to an apparent Soviet move that would allow the unprecedented detonation of a U.S. bomb on Soviet soil as one means of implementing a verifiable nuclear test-ban treaty.

Col. Gen. Nikolai Chervov, an official of the Soviet defense ministry, said Monday in Washington that if an American weapon were exploded in the Soviet Union in order to fine tune U.S. monitoring devices, the Kremlin would expect to be permitted to explode a Soviet nuclear device at the U.S. test site in Nevada.

Chervov, in a luncheon speech on Capitol Hill, said Soviet willingness to accommodate U.S. efforts to verify a test-ban treaty also might include adoption of the U.S. proposal to implant the Cortex monitoring system at Soviet nuclear test ranges.

The Cortex system includes a monitoring device placed in a hole bored near the site of an atomic explosion to gauge the size and nature of the blast.

The Soviets traditionally have resisted on-site inspection of nuclear weapons facilities and have made no official response to the Cortex proposal.

And he added: "If you want to calibrate the instruments, feel free to come to our test ranges with a nuclear device of your own, and explode it there to make sure that everything is all right."

Max Kampelman, the chief U.S. negotiator to arms reduction talks in Geneva, heard Chervov's remarks, took notes and told reporters the idea is worth pursuing.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., aides to vacationing President Reagan reacted with caution.

"As we have seen so many times in the past, they (the Soviets) say something and then subsequently attach conditions, and that may well be the case this time," said one U.S. official, speaking only on condition he not be identified.

ACLU announces opposition to Bork

By DAN FREEDMAN

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Breaking with its tradition of non-partisanship in judicial nominations, the American Civil Liberties Union Monday announced opposition to President Reagan's Supreme Court nominee, Judge Robert Bork.

Characterizing Bork's conservative legal views as posing a "grave threat" to constitutional law, ACLU spokesmen said the nation's major civil liberties organization would lobby senators and offer testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, which starts hearings on the Bork nomination in two weeks.

"We're here to say (Bork) is unqualified, not because of his position on affirmative action or abortion, but because his writings make it crystal clear he does not believe in the main function of the Supreme Court," said Ira Glasser, ACLU executive director, speaking at a news conference.

ACLU spokesmen said they based their opposition on what they viewed as Bork's hostility to the rights of all minorities. "We're against him because Bork believes the Constitution was drafted to protect majoritarian rights," said ACLU Washington office director Morton Halperin.

The ACLU's announcement did not surprise pro-Bork activists, one of whom said the organization acted out of concern that a Supreme Court in which Bork sat as a conservative fifth vote would rule against ACLU positions.

"They're liberals, what can I say?" said Patrick McGuigan, whose Coalitions for America organization is in the forefront of support for Bork. "What you've got here is that (the ACLU) has done their political calculus, and they figured out that this is a nomination that counts."

McGuigan said his group's calculations showed a Senate divided on the Bork issue, with slightly more votes in favor than against and about 25 Senators undecided.

With its announcement, the ACLU joined a list of anti-Bork organizations that have criticized the nominee's advocacy of "judicial restraint" — legal jargon for the view that Supreme Court justices should interpret law and rights within the wording of the Constitution, rather than "create" new rights not specifically mentioned.

In opposing Bork, the ACLU amended rules by which it had previously excluded itself from rendering judgments on judicial candidates. Spokesmen said the last time the ACLU opposed a Supreme Court nomination was in 1971 when the board of directors made a one-time exception and came out against President Nixon's nominee, William Rehnquist. Rehnquist was confirmed by the Senate then and became Chief Justice last year.

At a special ACLU board of directors meeting this past weekend, members amended internal rules which had prohibited the organization from taking positions on judicial nominees. Under new rules, the ACLU board may urge Senate rejection of a nominee "whose record demonstrates a judicial philosophy that would fundamentally jeopardize the Supreme Court's critical and unique role in protecting civil liberties in America."

A proposal to specifically oppose the Bork nomination passed 61-3, ACLU President Norman Dorsen said. The ACLU has prided itself in what it characterizes as a non-ideological approach to civil liberties, defending unpopular minorities including Communists, Nazis and members of he Ku Klux Klan.

Spokesmen said Bork was not a conservative in the tradition of Justices Felix Frankfurter or John Marshall Harlan, both of whom they characterized as staunch defenders of individual rights and free speech.

"He thinks the highest right in society is the right of local majorities to impose laws," Glasser said.

ACLU representatives specifically criticized Bork's written views on landmark Supreme Court decisions. In articles in scholarly journals and popular publications, as well as in speeches, Bork has condemned Supreme Court rulings on privacy, racially restrictive covenants, abortion, and church-state separations.

Sanctions urged against Japan over whale hunts

By DAVID GOELLER

WASHINGTON (AP) — An animal protection organization is urging U.S sanctions against Japan because it allegedly has reneged on a pledge to join the rest of the world in halting large-scale whale hunts.

The World Wildlife Fund denounced plans by Japanese whalers to kill 875 Minke whales a year in what the Japan Whaling Association says is a scientific project to gather data on the population and habits of the Antarctic mammal.

"Because of the very large number of whales involved, the dubious scientific merits of killing any of them and the intent to sell the whale meat, Japan's proposal can only be viewed as a transparent attempt to continue commercial whaling in the guise of science," the WWF said in a statement Monday.

In its own statement, the Japan Whaling Association denied the accusation and charged the WWF was waging "a campaign to sabotage research that is likely to prove that whale populations are thriving."

World Wildlife Fund officials were scheduled to detail their complaints at a news conference today.

The WWF statement said the plan to harvest the Minke whales violates assurances that Japan gave the United States and other former whaling nations in 1985 that it would halt commercial whaling this year.

The WWF said the Reagan administration should impose the sancations it threatened in 1985: cutting in half the amount of fish Japan can catch in U.S. waters and reducing or eliminating Japanese seafood exports to the United States.

The whaling association said Japan will end commercial whaling this season, joining the rest of the world in honoring the International Whaling Commission's 1986-1990 moratorium on all whale kills except for scientific purposes.

The WWF said that last June the commission rejected Japan's plan for Minke whale hunting along with proposals by Iceland and South Korea for what was billed as scientific harvesting.

"These actions, strongly supported by the United States, removed the last legal obstacles to imposing economic sanctions on Japan and other nations that pursue whaling in defiance of IWC rulings," the statement said.

"Last spring, the Soviet Union announced its intent to stop whaling," the WWF said. "Japan is now the only nation with plans to continue whaling on a large scale."

The Japan Whaling Association said the 875 Minke whales would be harvested randomly, not according to size, from a population estimated at more than 430,000 animals.

It said the annual hunts would provide data to fill in gaps in information collected since 1972 in an effort to learn more about the Minke's population and reproduction rates.

"Japan's whale research will be conducted by a government agency, and all returns from the sale of whale meat and other whal productions will be used to offset research costs," the association said. "Not one penny of profits from the sales will go to commercial companies and investors.

"All of the whale populations depleted by over-fishing in the 1960s and early 1970s are recovering nicely, and there is absolutely no danger that the world's 3 million or more whales will become extinct," the association said.

"The threat of extinction or depletion is simply a scare tactic used by the WWF and other fund-raising groups," the association said.

Fatalities doubled with higher speeds

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Traffic deaths on New Mexico's interstate highways have more than doubled since it became the first state to increase the speed limit to 65 mph, but officials say there are no plans to rescind the law.

Figures released Monday by the state Public Safety Department showed that 56 people were killed on interstates in rural areas from April 2 to Aug. 15. Twenty-five such deaths were recorded during the period in 1986.

"The figures are alarming," said Robert Kemble, the department's secretary.

Gov. Garrey Carruthers on April 2 signed the law increasing the allowable speed on interstates in rural areas to 65 mph. At the time, New Mexico became the first state to increase the speed limit. Since then, at least 25 states have adopted the law.

East coast seafood lovers 'think twice'

WOODBURY, N.J. (AP) — Many people are chomping on pork chops these days rather than taking a risk on seafood from the New Jersey shore, struck recently by a wave of beach closings, garbage slicks and dead dolphins.

But state officials said Monday there's nothing wrong with New Jersey's shellfish and salt-water fish harvest.

"There are no problems. It really does not affect them. That's something that's got to get out to the public," said Bruce Halgren, acting chief of the Bureau of Marine Fisheries.

And Gale Critchlow, chief of the Bureau of Shellfisheries, said the clams and crabs being scooped out of the New Jersey bays are perfectly safe to eat despite this summer's beach problems.

"The pollution has been a terrible thing, but it's not done anything that we're concerned about," Ms. Chitchlow said. "But it's made people think twice about what they're eating or breathing or sitting in."

But some seafood restaurants and retailers say their business is in a slump because of last month's problems.

"We're doing half the business. Everybody's spooked. Nobody's buying fish because they see everything washing up," said John DelloBuono, owner of the Fisherman's Hook fish store in West Deptford, five miles from this South Jersey town.

DelloBuono said his sales dropped off sharply about three weeks ago, when hospital wastes such as used syringes, and tampon applicators and used condoms floated ashore.

A week later, high fecal coliform bacteria counts closed Atlantic City beaches for about three days.

And since June, hundreds of bottlenose dolphins have washed up dead from Virginia to New Jersey suffering from a bacterial infection thought to be aggravated by pollution.

"I would eat (the seafood) because I don't think there's anything wrong with it," DelloBuono said. "But many people are afraid."

That's why customers at the Fish Palace in Ventnor City have been shying away from crabs and clams, said owner Jill Martella.

"They don't want to buy it with all that (stuff) that's washing up. I've never seen it this bad."

Ms. Martella said her customers know she gets her flounder and other fish from Philadelphia and New York, but that the shellfish comes from New Jersey waters.

"People ask if they're local. I'm not going to lie to them, I tell them yes," she said. "They walk away."

Joseph Gordon, owner of Randall's Seafood in Pleasantville, said consumer fear of shellfish is unfounded.

New Jersey clams and crabs are harvested from bay waters, not the ocean, he said.

"The bays have been very healthy. The crabs and the clams have been good. We have no problems," he said. Clams, of which Gordon's company handles about a million a month, also are subject to strict health codes enforced by state health inspectors, Gordon said.

Halgren gave two reasons why the pollution wouldn't contaminate fish. First, the pollution might get into the animal's gut but not into the flesh or the meat in such a short period of time.

Second, most people cook their fish to further destroy any unhealthy organisms.

That may explain why Mark Ryan, general manager of the Cold Spring Fish & Supply Co. in Cape May, said swordfish and flounder from local waters are his best-sellers this season despite the pollution.

Ryan said like many New Jersey residents he won't go in the water but will eat the fish.

His comment: "It doesn't make sense, does it?"

Meat eaters are 'enjoying it less'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are eating meat just as much as ever, but they seem to be enjoying it less, according to a private study that says consumers wish they could kick the habit.

"In some ways, red meat behaves like a consumable indulgence such as snack foods," said the report by Burke Marketing Research of Cincinnati. "Consumers continue to eat it, but wish they didn't, and have trouble admitting that they do."

The meat industry, which paid for the study, was advised to help consumers feel better about dining high on the hog, steer or lamb, as the case may be.

The 1987 study was the fourth since 1981 paid for by the American Meat Institute and the National Live Stock and Meat Board, which represent the industry.

More than 1,500 telephone interviews nationwide were conducted for the study between May 7 and May 21, the Cincinnati company said.

In its analysis, the research company said two major trends have occurred in the last few years that might have influenced consumer demand for fresh and processed red meat, which includes beef, pork, lamb and veal.

On one hand, the report said, the U.S. economy has been favorable to the consumer in terms of employment and inflation. Further, meat prices have been relatively stable, while the prices of some other foods have gone up.

But on the other hand, consumers "continue to receive anti-meat messages through the popular and scientific media."

The report added: "However, consumption behavior regarding red meat has hardly changed at all since 1981. It may be that the two above factors are countervailing forces, each holding the other at bay."

One of the major tasks facing the meat industry is "to make American consumers feel comfortable doing what they are already doing — eating red meat."

The survey also found that consumers want more time-saving products and continue to be concerned about calories and weight control.

"Some viable paths toward this end seem to already be in place, such as offering leaner meat cuts, using a closer trim, offering low-fat and low-sodium processed meats, and making consumers aware of such offerings," the report said. "Relaying reminders about the positive taste benefits of meat is also a viable tactic."

Spy says 'truth is an anchor' in world of lies

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the shadowy realm of the spy, a world where the lie can offer the protection of a cloak and the sting of a dagger, how important is truth and trust?

That question was asked earlier this month by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., as he questioned an official of the Central Intelligence Agency testifying in private before the congressional Iran-Contra investigating committees.

For a moment, a window appeared to open on the attitudes of those who inhabit a mostly secret world.

Nunn had been asking the witness, identified independently as Alan Fiers, head of the CIA's Latin America task force, about the truthfulness of the Iran-Contra affair's star witness, Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

And the witness, in a censored transcript made available by the committees, had something to say about that.

There was "a lot of truth" in what North had to say about the secret sale of U.S. weapons to Iran and the diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, he said.

But there were other things as well.

"I never knew Colonel North to be an absolute liar," he said. "But I never took anything he had to say at face value because I knew he was bombastic and embellished the record and threw curves, speed balls and spit balls to get what he wanted, and I knew it and knew it well."

"I have seen Colonel North play fast and loose with the facts and I think the record will substantiate that," Fiers said. "But, on the other hand, I believe that from where I sit, from the glimpse I saw of this thing as the train windows went by, there was a lot of fact in what he said, too."

Nunn then broadened the question: How important is truth in covert operations among the people who manage them?

"You can't lie," the spy replied.

"You have got to believe each other. Believe me, in the world in which I live and work, you have to have a moral compass, a moral anchor.

"If you don't, you will virtually go and crash," he said.

"We live in a schizophrenic world, a world where we deal with the lie as the tool of the trade," he continued. "We deal with deceit, deception and manipulation in a positive and negative sense."

If one loses sight of that moral compass, he said, you end up a rogue agent like Edmund Wilson, the former CIA operative sentenced to prison for his conviction on charges of selling munitions to Libya.

If, Nunn then asked, covert activity is "a lie in itself," does it follow that any lie told to further a covert operation is therefore excusable?

"I don't think covert activity is a lie," the spy replied. "I think covert activity is a range; it is an operation undertaken to influence an event.

Frustrated 'stand-ups' can stand out with 'Laugh Tracks' video

CHICAGO (AP) — Did you hear the one about the two guys who created a set of video tapes they claim can make amateur stand-up comedians stand out?

The tapes, called "Laugh Tracks" and "Laugh Tracks Blue," are the 1980s answer for frustrated comedians and entertainers everywhere, says lawyer Will Hornsby, who created the tapes along with his former college buddy, computer systems designer Jim Kaufman.

The two are partners in Humor Us Enterprises of Chicago, which sells the tapes for $24.95 each.

"There are a lot of people out there who are envious of comedians — who would like to take the stage and get the admiration for themselves," Hornsby said Monday night. "This is the way to do it."

The video works by providing not only the jokes, printed across the bottom of the television screen, but the audience to laugh at them as well.

"Jim and I have always liked to tell jokes, and we saved up our best, plus others we compiled from magazines and things," Hornsby said.

It isn't just any old group of people chuckling and occasionally clapping, either. These audience members sit at nightclub tables, grinning, giggling and sipping drinks. They guffaw when the jokes are good, writhe and moan in mock pain when they're corny.

They respond like a comedian's dream. Read a line like, "He's so rich...," and the audience answers in chorus, "How rich was he?"

"He's so rich, he gets TV Guide in hard-cover," the viewer replies, and they go wild.

The jokes in "Laugh Tracks Blue" are off-color, while "Laugh Tracks" uses straight humor, Hornsby said.

Both tapes have themes and categories like the "smart dog" category:

"My dog is a great watchdog," the viewer reads, for example. "So far, he's watched my home get burglarized three times."

Then there are the airplane jokes, dozens of them.

One goes like this:

"I was on a plane. The weather was rough, and the plane starts going up and down and sideways.

"The lady next to me gets nervous and shouts, 'Everybody on the plane, pray!'

"I say, 'I don't know any prayers.'

"She says, 'Well, do something religious!'

"So I started a bingo game."

The idea for the videotapes, which became available two weeks ago, was hatched about a year ago when the 35-year-old Hornsby and Kaufman, 37, were trading jokes.

"We got the idea and sat down and wrote the comedy routines, then got a professional production company to do the filming," Hornsby said.

The audience, consisting of about 50 "pretty sympathetic" friends, was invited to a Chicago nightclub rented for the evening and treated to both routines, he said.

NATION IN BRIEF

NASA apologizes for 'inappropriate' action

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA is apologizing for taking "inappropriate" action in asking private contractors to help lobby Congress against cuts in the space agency's budget.

NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher sent a letter to several members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, apologizing for an Aug. 17 memo in which the agency asked NASA contractors to help fight budget reductions.

"This action was ill-advised and inappropriate, and we are requesting the return of all copies outside the agency," Fletcher wrote. "Please accept my apology to you and the members of the subcommittee for this lapse in judgment on NASA's part."

The lobbying effort was disclosed by Space Commerce Bulletin, an industry newsletter, and Aviation Week magazine. Federal law bans lobbying with appropriated money.

Buckley on list of slain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA says former hostage William Buckley's name will be added to a list at the entrance to agency headquarters of 50 employees who have died in the line of service.

CIA spokeswoman Sharon Foster said some employees are marked on the list only by stars because the agency operatives were under cover when they died. Buckley's name will be engraved because he has been publicly identified as the former CIA station chief in Beirut, she said.

Buckley died in captivity as a hostage in Lebanon more than two years ago. The CIA held a memorial service for him Monday, "mainly for family and friends and agency people who knew him," Foster said.

Buckley, a native of Medford, Mass., was 55 when he was seized by kidnappers in Beirut on March 16, 1984. Former hostages have said they think Buckley died in the summer of 1985, but his body has not been recovered.

Chryslers to be probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal transportation officials are being asked to open an investigation and to recall more than 7 million 1979-87 front-wheel drive Chrysler cars and vans that allegedly can stall unexpectedly.

The private Center for Auto Safety, which made the request Monday, said more than 5,000 complaints have been filed by motorists who have had experiences with the vehicles stalling.

The highway safety agency ended an informal investigation last December into stalling complaints involving 1978-84 Chrysler front-wheel drive vehicles after concluding that no trend of a safety defect could be found.

The request for a new investigation and recall to correct any mechanical problems covers all of Chrysler's front-wheel drive models, the private group said in its petition.

Baron Bates, a Chrysler spokesman, said the manufacturer looked into stalling complaints as part of NHTSA's previous investigation and could find no trend or defect-related problem.

Male club favors women

NEW YORK (AP) — Most members of one of Manhattan's oldest and most exclusive all-male clubs favor allowing women to join should an ordinance forbidding discrimination in public places be upheld, it was reported today.

An unofficial poll of members of the Century Association was taken in anticipation of a ruling on the constitutionality of the law this fall by the U.S. Supreme Court, The New York Times reported.

The Times said it obtained a copy of the results of the poll, which showed 71 percent in favor of admitting women and 28 percent opposed. There was a 70 percent response to the poll, conducted by mail, from the club's 1,900 members.

Phone stamp sales eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some Americans tired of waiting in line will be able to order postage stamps by telephone, under a test program announced by the U.S. Postal Service.

The sales, to be phased in over the next two to three months, will be tested in nine cities.

Sacramento, Calif., will be the first test city, to be followed by Norfolk, Va., Miami, Dallas, New York, Boston, Baltimore, San Diego and Minneapolis, according to Postmaster General Preston R. Tisch.

OLDSMOBILE'S 90TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION SALE.

AN OPPORTUNITY LIKE THIS ONLY COMES ALONG ONCE IN A LIFETIME.

YOU'RE GONNA LOVE IT!

"I should know," says George Burns. "I've been here ninety-one years, myself." Why did Oldsmobile select me to be their spokesperson? Well, since it's such an important event, they needed someone debonair, someone romantic. Case closed. I'm their man. It's probably only coincidental that I'm also one of a select few who've been around as long as Oldsmobile. That's an accomplishment and cause for celebration.

"The celebration? It's big. Oldsmobile and Olds dealers across the country are out to set an all-time August sales record. Guess what? They've got terrific Oldsmobile values. Maybe I'll trade in my cigar."

Buy now and you can own a beautiful 90th Anniversary Oldsmobile. The selection is outstanding. So you can step up to and enjoy the Oldsmobile style and value of your choice even at this year-end season. Which is just one good reason that long after this summer's over you'll be glad you bought a new Oldsmobile.

The time machine

Are viewers using the Time Machine to zap your advertising?

Not if it's in newspapers. Newspaper readers regard ads as news about the marketplace —what's for sale, where, and for how much. 60% of readers "look forward" to the advertising in their newspapers—more than say that about advertising in TV, magazines, radio and mail combined.*

Newspaper readers look forward to ads ... they don't fast forward past them.

SO YOU WANT A GOOD DEAL!

Get real and get serious about what this will and will not buy...in size, age, condition, and areas of town. Then ask any Realtor how much it takes to move into a $62,700.00 house on a new loan. Or ask how many assumable loans there are at this price with an equity under $2,000. So when I tell you that you can get a $62,700.00 house with 100% financing at 10% for 30 years and all it will cost you to move in is $1,000.00 THAT'S a good deal! I know you want to drive by. But don't judge this book by its cover. It's not like all the rest. And if you don't take the time to check it out inside and see it's bigger and prettier than you thought! then you lose and somebody else will get this good deal! Call for appointment. You'll be surprised. I was.
