Reagan prepared for budget paring

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he's willing to give Congress "running room" to pare the record deficits in his 1983 budget plan, but not by reducing defense spending or increasing taxes.

Top congressional Republicans told the president face-to-face Thursday that his $757.6 billion budget plan for fiscal 1983 won't get far on Capitol Hill as long as it projects a deficit approaching $100 billion.

House Republican leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois emerged from the White House meeting saying many conservatives — who had hoped Reagan would produced on his earlier promises to balance the budget — feel "pole-axed" by forecasts of a record flow of red ink for years to come.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee and Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., joined Michel in telling Reagan and key administration officials that, as Laxalt put it, "the name of the game is getting that interest rate down, and the way to get it down very frankly...is to reduce the size of the deficits."

Laxalt, Reagan's closest friend in the Senate and former chairman of his presidential campaign, said he asked Reagan for the "running room...to come up with some better results."

The president responded later in the day.

"I've sent a budget up that I believe in very much," he told reporters. "On the other hand there's been a suggestion now that even further cuts could be made, and I feel the Congress should have the running room to be able to talk about those and see what they're talking about."

However, Reagan ruled out compromise on his proposed 18 percent hike in military spending or trimming the administration-backed tax cuts Congress enacted last year.

White House spokesman David Gergen said it was too early to talk about compromise on details of the administration's program. "There is no plan here to compromise. We're not sending those kind of signals. That was not the spirit of the meeting here today."

Reagan, meanwhile, said he was not worried by the early adverse reaction to his budget "because I know they're (members of Congress) going home in a few days, and when they get home they're going to find out how much the people want what we have proposed."

Congress is in recess for the Washington-Lincoln holiday until Feb. 22.

The reaction to the budget recommendations Reagan made Monday has been in sharp contrast to last year when Congress gave him virtually everything he wanted in the way of tax and spending cuts.

"No budget is sacrosanct," Baker said Thursday.

But Baker, Laxalt and Michel all emphasized that they foresee no chance of Congress taking the budget away from Reagan and completing work on a spending plan by itself.

However, Michel added that the trio "made the point" to the president that he probably will have to fight hard to win support for his military spending plans even among "some of his own people."

"There's an awful lot of money involved there," said Michel.

Reagan's budget anticipates deficits of $98.6 billion this year, $91.5 billion in 1983 and $82 billion in 1984. Democrats and Republicans alike say the actual figures likely will be higher.

Michel said he intends to meet next week with Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, to talk about bipartisan changes in the president's spending plan.

'If he could live my life....'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Monika Mitchell, laid off by the Ford Motor Co., says she's so broke her 9-year-old daughter offered to turn over a piggy bank before Christmas.

"I'd like to tell the president, I wish he could live my life for a few days," Mrs. Mitchell of Ypsilanti, Mich., told a forum on unemployment arranged Thursday by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

After nine years with Ford, Mrs. Mitchell said she now has no income and no medical insurance.

Thomas Aldridge of Moore, Okla., told of moving his wife and six children from Indiana in the search for a job. His work at a General Motors plant in Oklahoma lasted six months before he was laid off in November 1981, he said.

Now he is in a quandary. He has a house in Indiana, but can't decide whether to make the expensive move back there with no job waiting at the other end or keep trying his luck in Oklahoma.

"It's not only a financial burden — it's a mental burden," he said. "I used all my savings to move the family out there."

Aldridge said there were 197,000 auto workers out of work a year ago and now there are over 247,000.

"Everybody in my industry is losing everything they've got," he said. "There's no hope — after going there (to Oklahoma), you get kicked in the face again."

Vicki Williams of Andrews, Ind., told the panel that there are working people in her area who think President Reagan's economic program should be given more time to see if it will work.

But, she added: "Those of us out of work don't feel we have more time to give. At one time, everyone wanted to buy a house. Now they are satisfied if they can just eat."

Mrs. Williams said she no longer believes — as she previously did — that "if you want a job bad enough, you'll find one."

Aldridge and Mrs. Williams were among seven unemployed persons brought to Washington with union funds to describe their plight before the Kennedy forum.

Soviet Union evacuates dependents from Syria

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union, fearful that the harsh fighting in the central Syrian city of Hama will spark a nationwide civil war, has begun a mass evacuation of all wives, children and other dependents of the more than 10,000 Soviet military advisers stationed in Syria.

State Department officials who disclosed the Soviet pullout said the Russians were being withdrawn because "the Syrian leadership of President Hafez Assad apparently cannot guarantee that they will not be harmed." More than 1,400 Syrians already have been killed in the week-long fighting.

The disclosure was further evidence that Syria, Moscow's closest ally in the Middle East, is on the brink of a major civil war.

According to U.S. intelligence reports, a stormy session was held last week between Gen. Yuri Yashkin, the Soviet commander-in-chief, and Syrian President Assad and his security chief, Ali Dubba. "Yashkin made it clear that if the Syrians cannot protect them, the Russians will evacuate," an official said.

The main reason Moscow appears so worried, the policymaker explained, is that in mid-1981 several Soviet advisers were killed in terrorist attacks against them. "The numbers were very low but they are afraid this thing could become worse, much worse," he said.

Two well-armed guerrilla groups have for almost a year been battling the Assad government, which is dominated by Syria's Alawite minority. Neither of the two groups considers the Alawites, who represent less than 10 percent of Syria's population, to be proper Moslems.

The first of the groups is the fundamentalist Moslem Brotherhood, fanatics in the mold of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini and Libya's ruler Muammar Kaddafi. "These are crazy people," one intelligence source said. The Moslem Brotherhood has its core of sympathizers in Hamah, heavily populated by the Sunnis.

The Sunnis make up most of Syria's Moslem majority. Hamah, a city of more than 300,000 people, is located 120 miles north of Damascus, Syria's capital. The city reportedly has been surrounded by 16,000 regular Syrian army troops who have fired rockets in a heavy aerial barrage of Hamah since Feb. 5.

The Moslem Brotherhood is said to receive support from both Jordan and Saudi Arabia, which are opposed to Syria's support of Iran in the Iran-Iraqi war and are angry over Syria's refusal to support the nine-point Saudi peace plan proposed by Crown Prince Fahd.

The second of the guerrilla groups, previously unknown in the West, is the National Front for the Liberation of Syria. "This is a secular Sunni Moslem organization whose main theme is 'get rid of the Alawites,'" a State Department analyst explained.

The leaders of this group reportedly are Hakmoud al-Shufi, who was Syria's ambassador to the United Nations before he defected a little over a year ago, and Akram Khourani, a expert in Saudi affairs who was the first to establish the Communist Party in Syria.

Polish pilot, family escape in hijacking

BERLIN (AP) — A Polish airline pilot and six members of his family escaped from Poland today aboard the small airliner he was piloting on a flight from Warsaw to southwest Poland.

It was the first time that a Polish pilot diverted his regular domestic flight to the West.

The airliner, a 38-seat Antonov 26 owned by the Polish state airline LOT, landed at the Air Force's Tempelhof Airport at 8:55 a.m., an hour and 37 minutes after it took off from Warsaw for Wroclaw.

Aboard were four crew members and 19 passengers, including the pilot's wife and two children, his cousin and the cousin's wife and child, a U.S. Air Force spokesman said.

An hour after the landing, the passengers and crew were allowed off the plane and taken to the terminal, a base spokeswoman said.

"Two Polish security guards were left behind inside the plane," she said.

This appeared to indicate the Polish military regime has put security guards on domestic flights to prevent hijackings.

Hans-Wolfgang Treppe, the Berlin prosecutor handling the incident, said his initial investigation appeared to indicate that the landing at Tempelhof was not a hijack in the usual sense of the word.

County may need more funds for highway work

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners let loose with a woeful bellow this morning when they recognized that the county may have to dig up an additional $1 million in rounding out the right-of-way and utility adjustments on Texas Highway 191 and Loop 250.

"We might have to declare bankruptcy," lamented Commissioner Durward Wright.

"Or a mid-year tax increase," said Commissioner Win Brown. Both seemed to be in jest.

However, the county already has expended all but about $80,000 of $3.5 million the Texas State Department of Highways and Public Transportation allowed for the county's purchase of right-of-way and utility adjustments along the 13.5-mile Texas 191 from Midland westward toward Odessa and the 15.2-mile North Loop 250 from Midland's far eastside to the city's far westside. The two roadways join in making a seemingly unencumbered pathway to Odessa via Midland Regional Airport.

But since the county virtually has exhausted the $3.5 million allowed by the state, it will have to search out revenue from its own coffers to finish out its lawful part in developing the roadways.

The commissioners today approved paying the Navajo pipeline company about $39,000 in making a utility adjustment on Texas 191. Other adjustments are in the offering and those, combined with some more right-of-way parcels to be purchased outright or by

Three hurt, three killed in fiery head-on collision

ODESSA — Three Odessa men remained in Medical Center Hospital here this morning where they were being treated for injuries suffered in a fiery Thursday afternoon crash that killed three others.

Listed in stable condition in the hospital's intensive care unit were Curtis Polk, 26, and Michael Wilson. Todd Hudson is in critical condition in the intensive care unit.

The three men were injured just before 3 p.m. Thursday when the vehicles in which they were riding were involved in a head-on collision 1.6 miles north of Odessa on west Loop 338.

Killed in that crash were Jerrol Godwin, 59; John McCann, 23; and Kinnard Jackson Jr., 22, all of Odessa.

Godwin was the driver of the northbound pickup. The driver of the other pickup has not been determined, according to Department of Public Safety officials, because bodies of some of the wreck's victims had been moved when officers arrived and others had been taken to the hospital.

Godwin's vehicle burst into flames and he was trapped inside following the collision, DPS spokesmen noted.

McCann and Jackson were in the southbound pickup, investigators said. It could not immediately be determined in which vehicle Polk was riding, but officers speculated that Hudson and Wilson also were riding in the second vehicle.

Officers said the crash occurred while Godwin's pickup was passing another vehicle.

Clements wants better way to invest

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says Texas should be earning more than the 11 percent interest it gets on the $2 billion it has deposited in about 1,400 banks.

Some state officials in charge of depositing the state funds say there's nothing they can do to increase the return unless state laws are changed.

At his Thursday news conference, Clements said the state money is not drawing "the maximum rate of return that's available in the commercial market." The governor has a task force looking at investment of state funds.

Don Houseman of Dallas, task force chairman, said only preliminary work has been done and no conclusions have been reached.

Nevertheless, Clements was adamant that there's a better way to invest state money.

I have consistently held the posiion that we have not received and gotten the maximum yield, he said.

Clements said, if necessary, he would use his office's audit power to "dig into (the state treasurer's) records to establish a proper perspective as to what we've done in the past, what we are doing today and what we should be doing."

"This comes under the head of the state treasurer's office. This is his responsibility," said Clements.

But Weldon Horton, a division director in the treasurer's office, said the money is invested as well as it can be, considering the state law that requires the money be placed in banks.

"We're doing everything we possibly can do. Unless the statutes are changed, we can't change," said Horton.

At any time, the treasurer's office has 96 to 98 percent of the roughly $2 billion on hand invested in interest-bearing accounts, he addded.

The governor, although dissatisifed with the return, said the state is earning a "significantly higher return" now than it did five years ago.

State Treasurer Warren Harding is cooperating with the task force by supplying records and data, said Clements.

The interest drawn on state money is set by the three-member State Depository Board. State Banking Commissioner Robert Stewart, a member of the board, said any bank interested in being a depository, and willing to pay the set rate, is guaranteed by state law of getting at least $5,000.

Clements called the system "a silly way to run your cash management. It's just not good business practice."

The current rate demanded by the state is 11 percent. Stewart said the board set that rate on Nov. 23. Prior to that meeting, the rate was 14.5 percent, he said. Horton said the interest rate is determined by averaging several interest rates paid on other types of investments.

The board meets to review the rate whenever fluctuations in the economy demand a review, Stewart said. State Treasurer Warren Harding is chairman of the board. The third member is Dallas lawyer William Elliott, a Clements' appointee.

Elliott, in a telephone interview from his Dallas office, said Clements is "dead right." He said the rate set on Nov. 23 is already out of date.

"At the present time we are probably two points too low because interest rates went up since Nov. 23," he said.

Elliott has proposed the use of a formula that automatically would revise the interest rate each month. He said major changes also are needed in the 1923 state law the board is under.

"I don't believe in these times of exceedingly volatile and floating interest rates that the system the Legislature set forth in 1923 is correct for today," he said.

Clements said there is an obvious problem in the system.

"All you have to do is look at the yields and look at the commercial markets and there is a differential in there and I think the differential is too large. We in Texas should be entitled to a higher yield on our investment. It's just that simple," he said.

Stewart said the law prohibits placing the money in anything but bank accounts.

Gov. Bill Clements, as he told reporters Thursday the state should be earning more interest on its money than it currently gets, adding the state's money is not being invested at the maximum rate of return that is available.

Spring-like weather will continue

Beautiful weather, reminiscent of spring and interrupted only by today's early morning cloudiness, will continue through Saturday for the Midland area.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, it will remain fair and warm through Saturday. The mercury is expected to drop only into the middle 30s tonight, climbing near 70 on Saturday.

Winds will be light and variable tonight, turning southerly at 10-15 mph on Saturday.

Thursday's pleasant high temperature of 65 was 20 degrees cooler than the record high of 85, set for that date in 1962. The overnight low of 36 was 22 degrees warmer than the record low of 14, set for the date in 1963.

No injuries reported in mobile home fire

Fire destroyed a mobile home in Midland County late Thursday evening, but no one was injured, according to fire department reports.

Firemen responded to the fire shortly before 11 p.m. on County Road 1788 and battled the blaze into the night before it was extinguished with 4,000 gallons of water. The mobile home was a total loss, however, fire reports indicated.

Owner of the mobile home could not be immediately determined since no one was home at the time of the fire.

Inmate says his life will be threatened if he testifies

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The wife of a prisoner slated to testify in the capital murder trial of an inmate accused of killing a warden says her husband's life has been threatened if he testifies for the defense.

"He told me that he had been threatened about his testimony and that he's on the fence, he doesn't know which way to go," Mary K. Lacy said Thursday of her husband Ben, one of 39 inmates scheduled to testify for Eroy Brown.

Brown, 31, is charged with murder in the drowning of Wallace Pack, warden of the maximum-security Ellis Unit, in a prison farm drainage ditch April 4, 1981.

Brown has testified that he killed Pack and prison farm manager Billy Max Moore in self defense after they handcuffed him and Pack pointed a gun at his head. His attorneys have contended he feared he would be tortured in an area of the farm known as "the bottoms."

On Thursday, attorney Bruce Fort was appointed by the court to represent Lacy, who is serving a nine-year term for aggravated robbery in the TDC's Ramsey Unit.

Fort also was appointed to represent 13 other inmates who are prospective witnesses and who allegedly have been threatened.

"I believe there is very real danger to these men," Fort told state District Judge Henry Dalehite.

Second suspect named in assassination

Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates holds up picture of Armenian Krikor Saliba, 21, the second man named in the assassination of Kemal Arikan, the Turkish consul.

By BRIAN R. BLAND
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 21-year-old Armenian who fled his Pasadena home has been identified as the second suspect in the assassination of Turkish Consul General Kemal Arikan, who died when two men riddled his automobile with gunfire, police say.

Police Chief Daryl Gates identified the man on Thursday as Krikor "KoKo" Saliba, but gave few details of his background. Already charged with last month's killing is Harry M. Sassounian, 19, of Pasadena.

Arikan was killed Jan. 28 while stopped at a red light near UCLA when two young men walked up to the car and fired several rounds into the 54-year-old diplomat.

GATES TOLD a news conference that Saliba was seen at his home and other locations after the murder. Saliba was described as a male Armenian, 5-feet-7, 165 pounds, with black hair and eyes. An all-points bulletin was issued for him Thursday.

No warrant was issued and no charges were filed against Saliba, but police Cmdr. William Booth said none was necessary to arrest him because the investigation had estbalished "probable cause."

"We had information from the beginning that he was a likely suspect," Gates said. "There are indications that he was with Sassounian that day."

Sassounian, who pleaded innocent to one count of murder, has been in county jail without bail since his arrest the day of the slaying.

Gates did say Saliba had been a bank employee, but quit the job before Arikan's assassination.

"I CAN'T go into whether he's a member of a terrorist group," Gates replied to a question. "That's not entirely relevant — we're dealing with outright murder."

The Justice Commandos of the Armenian Genocide, a terrorist group, claimed responsibility for Arikan's assassination.

Armenians claim that the Turks slaughtered more than one million Armenians during World War I. The Turkish government denies a systematic slaughter, but says several hundred thousand Armenians — and many more Turks — died during the period because of war and famine.

Gates ignored repeated questions about where Saliba was born.

SASSOUNIAN, who was born in Lebanon, was arrested at his Pasadena home after witnesses provided police with the license number of a car that sped away from the shooting.

County may need more funds

condemnation, may drive up the county's cost to near $1 million.

"I don't think we have much choice but to adopt this," County Judge Bill Ahders said just prior to the 5-0 vote.

Law requires unencased oil, chemical or gas pipe lines to be least five feet beneath the base of the roadbed. Concrete-encased lines may be nearer the surface.

"We're going to pay the absolute minimum allowed by law (for utility adjustments)," pledged Wright, "and we're going to put the pipeline companies on notice that Midland County is going to get tough."

The county, according to highway department Right-of-Way Agent Charles Muery, will be paying for pipeline adjustments if the pipeline right-of-way preceded the county's right-of-way. If the inverse occurs, then the pipeline company may be absorbing the cost of relocating, burying deeper or encasing lines.

Commissioners noted that the cost of utility adjustments along the Texas 191 route were estimated at $151,000 but that cost now is about four times higher. In addition, land along the right-of-way in recent years has been rising in value from about $50 an acre to $3,000 and now $6,000 "or better" an acre.

"We try to keep the costs at a minimum," Bill Lancaster, the highway department's district engineer, told the commissioners. He said the department tries to get pipeline companies to bill at-cost when adjusting lines.

Commissioners Charlie Welch and C. DeWayne Davis noted the escalating land and adjustment costs.

"If you acquire all the land you need to acquire," Muery told the commissioners, "you're going to have to dip in your pockets."

While the Commissioners' Court is pondering the means of digging up that $1 million to finish up its obligation on the loop and highway, the highway department will be cutting into its budget to pay for the 28.7 miles of roadway construction.

Costs now are about $1.5 million a mile. Ten years ago, the cost was about half a million dollars per mile, Lancaster said.

Court rules FBI proper in offering bribes in Abscam

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was proper for the FBI to offer bribes from phony Arab sheiks to politicians to see if they would take the money, a federal appeals court has ruled in reinstating two Abscam convictions.

Philadelphia City Council President George X. Schwartz and former Council Majority Leader Harry Jannotti convinced U.S. District Judge John Fullam that they should be freed from their bribery convictions because they were "entrapped." But the convictions were reinstated Thursday by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The legal question was whether the men were "overwhelmed" by the criminal opportunity presented to them by the FBI or were "predisposed" to commit the crime before the bribe was offered.

"The very acceptance of a bribe by a public official may be evidence of a predisposition to do so when the opportunity is presented," Judge Dolores Sloviter wrote in the majority opinion.

Ms. Sloviter said in offering Schwartz $30,000 and Jannotti $10,000 the FBI "did not violate their due process rights."

Jannotti's lawyer, J. Clayton Undercofler 3rd., said his client could appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court or go back to the district court and raise other issues connected with the trial.

Asked if he planned an appeal, Schwartz's attorney, Richard Sprague, said: "The answer is absolutely yes."

Schwartz resigned his City Council post after he was indicted in May 1980, while Jannotti took a leave of absence and returned to his council seat when Fullam threw out the convictions Nov. 26, 1980.

"We just take things as they come," said Jannotti, when asked about the appeals court decision.

Schwartz could not be reached for comment. Calls to his Florida home went unanswered.

"The very acceptance of a bribe by a public official may be evidence of a predisposition to do so when the opportunity is presented."

The decision is "a vindication of the effort of federal law enforcement officials to aggressively seek out and prosecute public corruption," said First Assistant U.S. Attorney William Lytton.

A jury on Sept. 15, 1980, found Schwartz guilty of two conspiracy counts involving racketeering and extortion and Jannotti guilty of one count of conspiracy.

In the Abscam sting operation, FBI agents posed as business representatives of a fictitious Arab Sheik, looking for help in various projects. The government charged that Schwartz and Jannotti took money from agents who said they were trying to build a hotel in Philadelphia.

The Abscam operation eventually resulted in the convictions of 10 other people, including a U.S. senator, six congressmen and the former mayor of Camden, N.J. Until the appeals court ruling Thursday, Schwartz and Jannotti were the only two to gain any legal victory.

Philadelphia lawyer Howard Criden and former City Councilman Louis Johanson were indicted in the Schwartz-Jannotti case, but the charges here were dropped because of similar indictments against them in New York. They were subsequently convicted in New York of bribery.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Light affects sleeping quality

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have written many articles about the quantity of sleep one should have, but you have never mentioned the quality of sleep. What can you tell me about this? — Miss W.W.

Dear Miss W.: "The quality of sleep is related to where and how it takes place." According to The Better Sleep Council, Inc., "such things as noise, light, temperature, bedding, humidity and surroundings can influence getting to sleep, how long and how well you sleep and how you feel getting up.

— Noise. The effects of sounds can be both helpful and harmful. Certain sounds, such as lullabies for babies, the quiet sunds of te woods and waves lapping against the shore, have a soothing, restful effect. At the same time, a rousing military march is more conducive to getting up.

Environmental noise can change sleep, even though it may not cause awakening. Studies have shown that sleepers who were exposed to various sounds while not fully awakened moved from a deep stage of sleep to a lighter one.

Older people tend to be more susceptible to being disturbed than younger people. Sleep, however, is highly adaptive. The sleeper learns to ignore changes in the environment that are limited, routine or irrelevant. Sleep has a built-in tendency to continue.

Sleepers tend to disregard irrelevant sounds but continue to respond to relevant ones. A doctor and wife with a newborn illustrate this selectivity. When the baby cried, the wife awoke and the husband didn't; he awakened to the telephone and she didn't.

Sleepers should take measures to protect their environment from loud noises such as truck exhausts, harmonizing cats or jet noise. In extreme cases, ear plugs or special neutralizing machines can help to counteract the noise.

— Light. Light in any form is stimulating. An estimated 80 percent of all sensory information reaches us through light. With the widespread use of electricity, natural sleep rhythms can be ignored through access to artificial light, electronics, such as late-night television and even the ability to travel across town easily at night.

Since sleep in humans is most valued in the dark and unnatural in the light, anything that stimulates the eyes will make it more difficult to get to sleep. Lightproof window shades, wall and floor colors of deep hues and heavy draperies can help lessen light in a bedroom. When the light is uncontrollable, sleep shades can be an effective aid.

— Temperature. An ideal comfort range for sound sleep seems to be between 64 and 68 degrees F. Studies indicate that people tend to sleep more when the bedroom tmperature is lower than 60 degrees F. and may not sleep long enough to be rested when the bedroom temperature is above 70 degrees F.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor of mine says her daughter has toxic shock syndrome, and she doesn't even menstruate yet. I thought only menstruating women get this. — Mrs. D.L., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Mrs. L.: Many people believe toxic shock syndrome occurs only in women who menstruate because it has been associted with the use of tampons. However, the disease is not confined to menstruating women.

Study says re-examine medical steroid use

By STEVE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The widespread use of steroid compounds in combating swelling of the brain needs to be re-examined following a study showing the treatment can do more harm than good for malaria victims, doctors say.

A widely used steroid called dexamethasone should no longer be used in cerebral malaria cases because it was "deleterious" in treating victims of the tropical disease in Thailand, the researchers say.

The substance prolonged comas and caused serious side effects among survivors, and failed to prevent death among the worst cases, according to the results published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"The failure of dexamethasone to benefit the patients in this study re-emphasizes the need to find other means of lowering the unacceptably high mortality of cerebral malaria," the study said.

High-potency steroids, such as dexamethasone, have been used since the early 1960s in treating brain swelling, or edema, as well as malaria.

"The almost automatic use of steroids in various forms of brain edema has become a widespread practice that requires critical appraisal," a California neurologist wrote in a lead editorial accompanying the study results.

Steroids are chemical compounds that can influence body metabolism and sex characteristics. Some steroids are used in treatment of disease — digitalis is often given to combat heart failure.

James H. Burns Jr., right, is shown with his teacher, Jack Wilson, at Peabody High School in Peabody, Mass. Burns is one of many students who, as a result of a law change, will lose Social Security benefits. Burns tried enrolling in college ahead of time in order to qualify for benefits but wasn't eligible since his father died after Congress changed the law.

Benefits loss upsets students

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

Nineteen-year-old Joseph Carey decided last spring to take a year off from Williams College to work as a surveyor in Colorado. The absence cost Carey, whose father died two years ago, nearly $500 a month in Social Security student benefits.

After his father's funeral last month, James H. Burns Jr. withdrew from Peabody, Mass., High School, where he was senior class vice president, and enrolled in a community college — only to discover it would do him no good. He will still lose student benefits this summer because his father died since September, a month after Congress changed the law.

THE CASES of Joe Carey and Jim Burns are unusual, but they are not alone.

Across the country, thousands of high school seniors have scrambled into college in recent weeks to beat the May 1 cutoff of new awards of Social Security student benefits.

For many, the experience has been wrenching.

A survey by The Associated Press indicates that many students, parents and educators are bitter about the Social Security Administration's failure to notify all students about the impending phaseout of the $2.3 billion program for students 18 through 21.

"I think it's awful that the president is going to deprive me of my last year of school," said Cindy Arndt, 17, of Topton, Pa., who was the captain of the Brandywine Heights High School softball team and batted over .400 last year. Cindy, whose father died two years ago, is now a freshman at Kutztown State College.

"It's hard to comprehend how the government can get away with something this underhanded..." complained Janet Evans, a Baltimore high school senior who enrolled in college only three days after learning of the changes last month.

Last month Theresa White, 16, whose father died in 1980, was a junior at John Dewey High School in Brooklyn, N.Y. Now she is a freshman at Wagner College on Staten Island.

BILL REED, 17, of Plymouth, Mich., son of a Marine killed in Vietnam in 1967, already has started classes at Oakland. He was a senior at Plymouth-Canton High School in Canton, Mich., a Detroit suburb.

Reed's mother, Therese Gall, said bitterly, "The government is doing a marvelous job of reneging on its promises."

'Black box' missing link in Legionnaires' disease

ATLANTA (AP) — It's been five years since the cause was discovered but a missing link remains: What other factor combines with bacteria to produce the deadly Legionnaires' disease?

"Legionella plus some 'black box' is...responsible for causing the disease. Now what is in the black box, another organism, temperature...other bacteria? I mean, the list goes on and on," Marguerite Neill, medical epidemiologist at the national Centers for Disease Control said in an interview.

The CDC earlier this week marked the fifth anniversary of the discovery of Legionella. Director William Foege accepted a plaque on behalf of the CDC from the Infactious Disease Society.

And, meanwhile, researchers "are certainly continuing to work on therapies, the development of a skin test, better laboratory methods for diagnosis," Ms. Neill said.

The disease jolted the nation when it struck at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia in 1976, killing 36 people, most of them members of the American Legion and their wives. The deaths also included hotel workers.

The disease quickly was dubbed for the veterans' group, but the cause was not found and announced for five months.

The bacteria was called Legionella and seven strains have been discovered since. An estimated 25,000 people have contracted it each year since 1978 with about 15 percent of the cases fatal, said a CDC epidemilogist, Arthur Reingold.

The pneumonia-like illness is contracted from environmental sources, rather than from people, and can be cured with a common antibiotic, erythromycin, Reingold said.

The bacterium is widely distributed in the environment but does not always cause the disease, Ms. Neill said, leaving researchers without an answer to fill in the "black box."

Ms. Neill said the CDC is not seeking a vaccine because the disease occurs "only in outbreaks or sporadic cases. Overall incidence of it is reasonably low. A vaccine is usually developed for a very, very common disease, such as the childhood diseases — measles, mumps."

Researchers at a symposium said outbreaks have been identified in Europe, Israel, New Zealand, Japan and elsewhere.

System indicates needed X-rays

By STEVE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors can weed out "superfluous" bone X-rays by following a simple checklist that indicates which injuries are most likely to involve fractures, Yale researchers have concluded.

Doctors say the system could save between $79 million and $139 million a year without sacrificing proper medical care. About $990 million is spent annually on 22 million arm and leg X-rays. The average cost of one exam is $45.

The screening process, tested at the Yale-New Haven Hospital, showed that X-ray use could be cut by 12 percent for patients with arm injuries and 19 percent for leg injuries.

"These results should serve as a stimulus to eliminate superfluous radiography, but also as a warning to avoid overzealous cost-containment strategies that would reduce the use of X-ray examination below a safe threshold," the doctors reported in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Patients with acute bone injuries were studied at the Yale-New Haven Hospital emergency room over a four-year period beginning in October 1977. During the first two years, 864 patients were examined and treated for injuries to upper and lower body extremities.

Doctors said the symptoms most likely to signify presence of a fracture were bone deformity, instability, crackling, bone-point tenderness, ruptured blood vessels, severe swelling in an upper extremity, moderate to severe pain when weight is exerted on a hip or thigh and knee problems.

The system was then tested for two years on another 848 emergency room patients. A physician assistant would take X-rays when the screening process recommended it, but wouldn't, in most cases, when the system advised against it. Of those patients, 287 had fractures or dislocations.

The results were compared to a study of 600 patients treated without screening.

The comparison showed that strict adherence to the screening system would result in a 12 percent reduction in X-rays for upper body injuries, and 19 percent for lower.

One fracture in 287 was missed — a 37-year-old man who was injured when a heavy metal object fell on his foot. But the study said he was properly treated since the bones were in good alignment and showed signs of normal healing.

"The project led to a significant decline in the use of X-ray films, but a still greater reduction is possible," the doctors wrote. "X-ray films taken because the patient demands them, for example, expose the patient to excessive radiation and contribute to higher health-care costs. In some community hospital emergency departments, virtually all patients with injured extremities are referred for radiography."

The doctors said there's little danger of fractures being overlooked.

"Evidence from this study indicates that the only fractures that might be missed...are those for which the proper treatment does not depend on knowledge of the radiographic diagnosis," they said.

Price hike in store for cigarette smokers

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The price of cigarettes bought from vending machines is expected to go up 5 cents a pack as the tobacco industry increased prices of major brands for the third time in 10 months.

Higher production costs are to blame for the price hike, says David Fishel, a spokesman for industry leader R.J. Reynolds Co.

Cigarette manufacturers are increasing costs to distributors by $1 per 1,000 cigarettes, meaning those bought by the carton will cost an extra 2 cents a pack, or 20 cents a carton.

Vending machines don't take pennies and distributors are reluctant to absorb cost increases, so the cost at the machines is likely to rise 5 cents. Retail prices vary due to individual state taxes.

Philip Morris Inc., the industry's No. 2 company, told its buyers last week they would pay $21.20 per 1,000 regular-sized cigarettes and $21.70 for longer brands. Major brands of the Richmond, Va.-based company include Marlboro and Merit.

Other major companies, including Reynolds, P. Lorillard, American Tobacco Co. and Brown and Williamson, raised their prices within 48 hours of the announcement by Philip Morris.

"They usually go within a week of each other," said Jerry Pappas of Tobacco USA Inc., a Greensboro distributor. "This time, four of them went the second day."

Fishel, at the Reynolds offices in Winston-Salem, said increased production costs are the culprit.

"We are just costing ourself money if we don't (follow Philip Morris' price increase)," he said. "As soon as the first company goes up, wholesale and retail prices go up across the board. The way they buy is dictated by demand, not price, so we don't sell that many more if we stay lower."

Monte Recoulley, president of Greensboro Vending Machine Co., said demand for machine-bought cigarettes typically drops after increases because more smokers buy cigarettes by the carton.

He said he used to tape notices to his machines explaining increases. He doesn't bother any more.

"People have sort of gotten numb to it. They expect it to go up," he said.

Fire survivor tells story of fall

By DAVID LAMMERS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Malcolm Kravits was in room 905 of the Hotel New Japan early Monday when smoke waked him. Within minutes he was clinging to a projection outside his room, a four-story drop beneath him.

"I knew I had to fall," said the 33-year-old San Francisco man, a former parachutist. He recalls that he let go but does not remember the actual fall or landing on the roof at the fifth floor level.

Police said he managed to clutch at partitions on the outside of the hotel and "slidingly fall" to safety as the fast-moving fire destroyed the two top floors. His blue jeans were covered with concrete dust from the slide.

Among the 32 people who died in Tokyo's worst fire since World War II was Kravits' business partner, Mutsuyo Furiya, 56, of Half Moon Bay, Calif. An American of Japanese ancestry who recently retired from the San Francisco Post Office, he had come to Japan with Kravits and two other Americans with plans to set up an import-export company.

Kravits, one of 29 seriously injured, suffered severe smoke inhalation, bruises and lacerations on his chest and arms.

Another American who survived a plunge from the ninth floor to the fifth floor roof was Sharon Poff, 37, of Machias, Maine, but she broke her pelvis, left ankle and left forearm and suffered possible internal injuries.

Mrs. Poff, the wife of an Air Force officer stationed in Okinawa, was reported in stable condition at a Tokyo hospital. She was to be transferred on Friday to the U.S. Naval Hospital at the Yokosuka Naval Base, south of Tokyo.

On Thursday, still in an oxygen tent and barely able to talk, Kravits tried to describe his escape by gesturing and scribbling answers on a notepad for The Associated Press.

"Hit by flames. Ow — head. Lost balance," he wrote.

He said after the smoke waked him, he opened his door, found the hallway in flames, retreated to the window, broke the glass and climbed out on a narrow ledge.

There was an explosion in room 1005, directly above him, and he lost his balance. A nearby vertical concrete partition gave him a hold and he hung from it, calling for help.

Kravits told police Furiya saw him on the ledge and told him: "Stop there." What Furiya did next is unclear, but a Tokyo newspaper said one witness reported he led several women to safety before dying in the fire.

CHARLEY REESE

Individual responsibility could turn nation around

EDITOR'S NOTE: One of the most controversial columns published in The Reporter-Telegram is written by Charley Reese. Reader response, both pro and con, is stronger for Reese columns than any others published. The following article, which appeared earlier on the editorial page, is being reprinted here due to reader requests.

If I had to choose just seven words which offered the best hope for turning this nation around, I'd choose these: "I am responsible for my own life."

The physical growth of the welfare state has caused a concurrent growth of a deadly intellectual disease — endemic buck-passing, the pernicious notion that we can survive in a sort of no-fault state and that responsibility for our welfare rests with someone else.

Charley Reese

Let's suppose I am an auto worker and I'm laid off. That's bad news. I don't want to be unemployed. I don't want to have to change my occupation. I don't want to have to move to another part of the country. But, who is responsible for feeding my family? I am. Not the auto industry. Not the world economy. Not the federal government.

So I should do what I have to do to find productive work. In an earlier time, this was so ingrained in people that nobody thought twice of doing it. If the soil went bad, you moved on; when the trees were cut, you moved on. When cars replaced horses, you gave up harness-making and black-smithing and became something else.

IF OUR FOREFATHERS had adopted the modern attitude that their welfare was someone else's responsibility, they would still be in Great Britain and Europe and wherever else they left to come to this new land.

I hear complaints about the elderly having a hard time making ends meet and I'm sympathetic to that, but whose responsibility is it to make provisions for our old age? Ours. It's not the responsibility of the government. It's ours. Every elderly person today was once young and had decades in which to prepare for an event they knew with certainty would come.

Take the young man on the street with no education and job skills. Whose fault is that? It's his. Every human being has a choice. Every human being in this country is presented with opportunities — opportunities for education and opportunities for learning marketable skills. And it is his responsibility to take advantage of those opportunities. We can't force people to be responsible, but we could and we ought to allow them to suffer the consequences of their own decisions.

Now, of course, there are those among us who are stricken by disease or accident or just bad luck, and I doubt if there is a single American in this nation who would not willingly share with those people to cushion their misfortune.

BUT SHARING and charity are quite different from obligations and demands. No one has the right to demand that another person assume responsibility for his life. No one has the obligation to assume that responsibility yet this is the very idea that has been fostered on the American people and which too many of us are beginning to accept.

Too many Americans are becoming envious cry-babies. They covet other people's possessions, resent other people's good fortune. These are the human worms necessary for a socialist state.

Your standard of living has nothing to do with my standard of living. Whether you have a yacht or a dingy has no effect on whether I am earning what I think I should be earning. Yet, you hear people complain about parties in the White House as if there was some relationship between the social affairs at the White House and the standard of living in Opp, Alabama. If government spending needs to be cut, it needs to be cut whether the Reagans drink California wine or tap water. My economic welfare depends on my decisions; not on the dining habit or recreational past-times of David Rockefeller.

If American Telephone and Telegraph records huge profits measured in billions, am I supposed to complain about my $12 a month telephone bill? Not if I have any sense, because I should recognize that profitability of AT&T is one of the reasons I have a telephone which is exceptionally reliable and reasonably priced.

I am responsible for my own life. We ought to paste those words all over america and put them in every schoolroom. Accepting responsibility for our own lives is a prerequisite for liberty. No one is free who is dependent on another.

Business gains ground, but analysts believe inventories remain too high

By The Associated Press

Businesses gained ground in their struggle to reduce stocks of unsold goods in December, the Commerce Department reports. But private economists said inventories were still too high for the depressed level of sales.

The department said inventories fell 0.4 percent from the previous month, the first such decline since the recession year of 1975. But sales also fell, by 0.6 percent.

That left the ratio of inventories to sales at 1.49, meaning it would take about 1½ months to sell the current inventory backlog at December's sales rate.

The inventory decline "was good in that it means the correction was under way," said Otto Eckstein, president of Data Resources Inc., an economic research firm in Lexington, Mass. "But the decline wasn't anywhere near enough to straighten out the situation. It's got quite a way to go."

The recession, in addition to squeezing businesses, is complicating the Reagan administration's efforts to reduce the size of the budget deficit.

Republican leaders told President Reagan on Thursday of lagging support in Congress for his budget proposal that includes huge deficits through 1984.

Republican leaders, including Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, told Reagan his $757 billion spending plan for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1 simply won't fly so long as it includes deficits approaching $100 billion.

Reagan's budget anticipates deficits of $98.6 billion this year, $91.5 billion next year and $82.9 billion in 1984. Those estimates assume Congress will accept major spending cuts and some tax increases this session.

Criticism of the deficits has come from many corners. On Thursday, Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board that implements the nation's monetary policy, pressed Congress to reduce Reagan's proposed deficits by billions or face the prospect of an aborted economic recovery.

Volcker, in a second straight day of testimony before Congress, stressed his fear that Congress will sanction far larger deficits than the economy can absorb without driving up interest rates and deepening the recession.

And on Wall Street much the same sentiment could be heard. Salomon Brothers, an investment firm, said in a report Thursday that the administration's estimate of a $91.5 billion deficit for 1983 "will be significantly surpassed."

Despite the criticism, Reagan has vowed to stick with the budget he formally submitted to Congress this week.

Food stamp benefits to be cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 2 million people, many of them elderly and disabled, will be forced out of the federal food stamp program under President Reagan's new round of budget cuts, according to congressional estimates.

'Charges that the Reagan administration is turning its back on elderly and poor Americans, and most especially elderly poor Americans, are anything but wild," Sen. Patrict Leahy, D-Vt., said.

"Such charges are, in my opinion, indisputable," said Leahy, ranking Democrat on the Senate Agriculture subcommittee that will review the Reagan's budget reductions.

But he added, "I have no reason to believe he's not going to get some cuts unless there is a strong bipartisan response."

Leahy, in issuing the preliminary Congressional Budget Office estimates on the impact of the cuts, suggested Thursday that what Reagan is really doing is denying benefits to those he has already classified as "truly needy."

He said that last year Congress, by agreeing to slash food stamp spending by $2.3 billion in 1982, removed a million recipients from the program.

Those cuts were to have limited the program to "persons who meet the president's definition of truly needy," he said.

"It should come as no surprise that the additional $2.8 billion the president seeks to cut this year cannot be achieved without harsh effects on millions of poor people," Leahy charged.

The president, in his fiscal 1983 budget, said the new round of reductions would continue the effort started last year to "refocus food stamps as a nutrition assistance program for the dependent poor."

But Leahy argued that in the case of the elderly poor, participation is already limited to only those who need it most. He said the number of elderly recipients has always been low because of the red tape involved in qualifying, and the "stigma of utilizing the stamps in public view."

The CBO estimates on the impact of the proposals showed that 920,000 American households now eligible for assistance — the equivalent of 2 million to 3 million people — would knocked out of the program.

That estimate includes about 150,000 households that would drop out of the program because their benefits would fall to $5 a month or less.

Benefits for an additional 16 million to 17 million people would be reduced, the budget office estimated.

Of those numbers, 560,000 elderly or disabled households — probably just less than 1 million persons because the household units are usually smaller — will become ineligible for benefits and an additionalr 1.4 million households will have their benefits shrink.

The average loss in monthly benefits under the new round of cuts, according to the CBO estimates, would be $22 overall and $16 for elderly and disabled recipients.

Defense cutbacks proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., today suggested a $3.4 billion cutback in Pentagon spending by canceling a Navy fighter plane project, deactivating an undermanned Army division and slowing production of an attack helicopter.

Durenberger made the recommendations in a 195-page treatise on defense that appeared to steer a middle course between those calling for a rapid buildup in defense spending and those seeking deep cuts to help reduce a projected record $91.5 billion deficit in the 1983 fiscal year.

"We must set about a purposeful program of rebuilding.... Anything else risks severe economic dislocations which would threaten our current consensus in favor of higher defense spending. It also risks sending precisely the wrong message — a message of hysteria — to our allies and our adversaries alike."

The biggest one-year savings, $2.23 billion, would come from cancellation of the Navy-Marine Corps FA-18 fighter-attack was supposed to be a low-cost aircraft but whose projected cost has ballooned to $25 million or more.

Pilot may have slowed too soon

TOKYO (AP) — The pilot of a Japan Air Lines DC-8 that crashed near Tokyo's Haneda Airport may have reduced power too rapidly during his landing approach, a major Tokyo newspaper said today.

Twenty-four people died in the Tuesday morning crash, and about 80 others — including pilot Seiji Katagiri, 35 — were seriously injured.

The newspaper Asahi Shimbun, quoting government officials investigating the crash, said an excessive reduction in power might have caused the plane to dive into a series of approach light stanchions about 1,000 feet short of the runway. The plane crashed into waist-deep water in Tokyo Bay.

Transport Ministry officials would not confirm or deny the paper's report and said their investigation is continuing.

Asahi quoted the officials as saying engine pressure gauges showed that pressure in three engines was below normal for landing, while the gauge on the fourth engine showed nearly full power.

The experts said the full-throttle reading on the fourth engine may indicate the pilot tried to avert the crash by boosting power, but only one engine responded.

Air condition forces building closed

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Rutgers University has closed Smith Hall, the largest classroom building on its Newark campus, because federal investigators found the air contained high levels of a hormone linked to cancer.

The estrogen-type hormone may have come from experiments at the Institute of Animal Behavior on the fourth floor, according to investigators from the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health.

The Star-Ledger reported today that NIOSH investigators discussed the findings Thursday with Newark Provost James E. Young. By 4 p.m., the building was locked. Notices outside tell students where to go to class while NIOSH continues the probe.

Indefinite auto layoffs rise slightly

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Open-ended layoffs in the U.S. auto industry rose slightly this week to 246,442, according to figures supplied by manufacturers.

The five major domestic automakers said Thursday the number of indefinite layoffs was up about 500 from the 245,900 reported last week. Temporary layoffs fell to 45,300 from last week's 60,025.

General Motors Corp. reported it had 140,000 hourly employees on layoff without a recall date, up 1,000 from a week ago. Temporary layoffs at the No. 1 automaker rose to 28,200 from 24,500 reported last week, the company said.

GM said its plants at Framingham, Mass., and Wilmington, Del., would be closed next week to reduce inventories, while its Tarrytown, N.Y., plant would be down for two weeks starting next week.

Too much protection

The Justice Department's Witness Protection Program offers witnesses a fresh start under a fictitious identity in return for testimony that can send organized crime figures to prison. While some of the witnesses have complained in the past that the protection isn't reliable enough, a recent newspaper story has disclosed the other side of the coin.

Cases are coming to light where the program has shielded witnesses from prosecution for crimes they have committed under their new identity. That's carrying the promise of protection too far.

A Chicago mobster who was relocated in San Diego under a new name carried on a successful swindling operation for several years. A protected witness living in Colorado got off with a light sentence in a murder case because of his "clean" record. The judge and prosecutors weren't told that he had been convicted of three felonies under his old identity.

There appear to be hundreds of cases where the public becomes the victim of the protection program, even if the government can claim that 85 percent of the protected witnesses are staying out of trouble in their new life.

The problem appears to lie in lack of communication and cooperation between the U.S. Marshal's office, which is responsible for protecting the witnesses, and state and local officials responsible for law enforcement in communities where the witnesses are relocated.

The marshal has an obligation to protect a turncoat witness from the risk of gangland retribution if his identity leaks out. But must the marshal be so tight-lipped that local authorities are denied information that would link a protected witness with a crime in their community?

Since the Witness Protection Program was started in 1971, some 5,000 indictments and more than 3,000 convictions can be traced to the cooperation of witnesses who took advantage of the program. Society has an obligation to the protected witnesses for that kind of help in the fight against crime. But it should be made clear to the witnesses that they have an obligation to abide by the law in their new life or face the possibility that their cover will be blown. That's only fair.

Remembering Whitney

Trying to describe the life of John Hay "Jock" Whitney is like trying to put into words the stuff of which good citizenship is made. His was a spirit, a dedication to society and country, that does not lend itself to precise appraisals.

Jock Whitney, who died at the age of 77, did many things for many people, and did them modestly.

As a citizen with a lifelong involvement in politics, he kept his head high in often-raucous political arenas. As a non-career diplomat, he taught careerists a lesson or two about the dignity, the dispatch, with which one should conduct affairs of state. Ambassador Whitney demonstrated this admirably during his tenure at the Court of St. James's.

Jock Whitney was an educator. He would have been embarrassed had he heard this said, but it is true. Although his devotion to his alma mater, Yale University, both as a trustee and a contributor, was the most widely publicized part of his educational activities, this was but a manifestation of his broader interests in learning. He helped to cultivate all of America's groves of academe.

Mr. Whitney was a newspaperman, one of the best. As editor-in-chief of the New York Herald Tribune for several years, it is said he injected a tone of true professionalism into his editors. He was not a lifelong publisher, any more than he was a lifelong politician, diplomat or educator, but whatever he did, he did well. He published his newspaper in the tradition of the Tribune's founder, Horace Greeley. That meant attention to the underdog, the underprivileged, anyone in need of help of any kind, and emphasis on good writing and clear thinking. His leadership as a newspaper editor improved the quality and conscience of American journalism.

In all of these capacities, as well as those of soldier, philanthropist, polo player, family man, and private citizen of great good humor and character, Jock Whitney left a mark on the American scene. His good works will live on, in the hearts and souls of all who believe in doing more good, for more people. Such is the essence of exemplary citizenship.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Operation at South Pole not a boondoggle

WASHINGTON — To save a few dollars, the United States may lose its leading role in developing the uncalculated wealth of the world's "last frontier": Antarctica. This would please the Kremlin, which is able, willing and eager to dominate the frozen continent.

Jack Anderson

A 14-agency advisory group on Antarctica has urged the National Security Council to maintain a "basic balanced program" at the South Pole — lest we lose our influence over the ultimate fate of this uninhabited but potentially rich continent. The price tag the advisory group puts on this "basic balanced program" is from $80 million to $90 million. That's less than half the estimated cost of a single B-1 bomber.

I sent my associate Dale Van Atta to Antarctica to find out what was going on in this farthermost corner of the earth. I asked him to look for any sign that the project was a gigantic boondoggle — a multimillion-dollar popsicle for the enjoyment of scientists at the taxpayers' expense. He found no evidence of significant waste; quite the contrary. By and large, he found a group of dedicated scientists, working under harsh conditions and performing valuable research on a tight budget.

The nearest thing to waste that my associate found involved a tracked vehicle that quit at the South Pole and was left sitting for a couple of years. Then, almost on a whim, a worker jumped into the vehicle's cab and got the engine to turn over. It has been doing its job ever since — as have two C-130 transport planes that crashed into the ice and were pieced back together.

Some Americans at McMurdo, the main supply base, still live in cramped "temporary" quarters put up in 1957-58. There has been no money for new water plants, and the full-time residents can take showers only about once a week. My associate was there 10 days without a shower; why waste precious water on a visitor who would soon be back in civilization?

One budgetary problem is unique to the hostile environment of Antarctica: The wind-whipped ice and snow have a way of swallowing up man's puny "improvements." The U.S. station at the South Pole, for example, is being inexorably reclaimed by the Antarctic weather, and it will cost $20 million to replace.

Perhaps the basic financial problem of our Antarctic program is that its current $70 million budget is about one-tenth of the National Science Foundation's. This led to internal criticism that the Antarctica budget "may be an unnecessarily large commitment of Science and Technology funds ..."

They had no complaint about the science itself. In fact, a confidential State Department document describes the United States as "the preeminent nation in the scientific investigation of Antarctica."

But one of the policy groups' reports noted that the U.S. effort has suffered "a real decline since 1979" because of escalating fuel costs, military salaries, and "special expenses associated with maintaining a self-contained infrastructure on an otherwise barren continent at the end of an 8,500-mile supply line."

The advisory group warned: "U.S. credibility and leadership among (Antarctica) Treaty nations derives from U.S. emphasis upon scientific research ..."

Without the U.S. commitment, the international treaty preserving Antarctica for peaceful scientific research will die, the advisers predicted, leading to "conflict over disputed territory among claimants and non-claimants, and almost certain Soviet hegemony."

JUNK POWER: Whenever the Defense Intelligence Agency assesses the strength of the Red Chinese Navy, a factor that may strike most Americans as a bit bizarre is always included: the number of Chinese junks.

One secret DIA study, for example, estimates the number of junks available to Beijing at 400,000, and notes that "probably a quarter" of them are motorized. "It is estimated that the individual junk will be loaded with an average of an infantry platoon (40 men) each, thereby maintaining the self-sustaining combat effectiveness of the platoon" in an amphibious operation.

This means that 400,000 junks could, under favorable conditions, transport a total of 1,600,000 lightly armed troops for, say, an invasion of Taiwan. The secret official estimate, however, is that an armed invasion of Taiwan from the mainland is unlikely.

Declares a "Top-Secret plus Sensitive" report: "To attack Taiwan, Beijing would have to draw on its strategic reserve in central China as well as on air forces now generally committed to protection of its northern border, thus adversely affecting its strategic posture vis-a-vis Moscow."

HOLIDAY PLEA: Choosing a time when most of the media were concentrating on highway fatalities and the first babies of 1982, a Defense Department contractor on New Year's Eve pleaded guilty to 20 counts of submitting false information to the government, accepting a $200,000 fine, $100,000 in additional civil liability and an agreement to repay $750,000 in money fraudulently obtained from the taxpayers.

The company, Bradford National, admitted that it used time billed to the Navy on a Trident submarine contract to do work for the New Jersey Department of Motor Vehicles and to redesign its own computer system. Bradford National also admitted it billed the Navy for time spent on a contract for the New York State Medicaid program.

The company altered its time sheets by a simple expedient: using "white-out" correction fluid.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Feb. 12, the 43rd day of 1982. There are 322 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln was born in what was then Hardin County, Kentucky.

On this date:

In 1689, the Declaration of Rights was signed in England, proclaiming William and Mary King and Queen for life.

In 1912, the Manchu Dynasty abdicated in China, making way for the establishment of a provincial republic.

In 1974, Soviet Nobel Prize-winning writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn was arrested at his Moscow apartment.

And in 1975, Britain's Queen Elizabeth asked for a $1 million increase in her living allowance because of rising expenses.

Ten years ago: It was disclosed that a national commission on drug abuse would recommend that all criminal penalties for the private use of marijuana be eliminated.

Five years ago: President Makarios of Cyprus and local Turkish leaders announced that negotiations on the future of the divided island would resume in March.

One year ago: Poland's new prime minister, General Wojcieck Jaruzelski, appealed for a 90-day moratorium on strikes to give his government time to deal with the nation's worsening economic crisis.

CHARLEY REESE

Major issue for Americans is survival

One of the truly great difficulties Americans have today is focusing their attention, in the mist of unprecedented distractions, on those issues which are truly important.

Charley Reese

Let's define "important" as an issue which directly affects your life in a significant way.

Now let's set the context of our times. We live in the twilight of the bloodiest century in human history. Of the 150 or so so-called nations on this planet, less than 25 can be described as free, with even a loose definition of democracy. Nations which cannot even supply their people with clean drinking water are armed to the turban with sophisticated weaponry.

Two nations, the United States and the Soviet Union, are armed with nuclear weapons which could in a matter of hours destroy hundreds of millions of people. These nations are divided by Communist ideology which proclaims as axiomatic that one system cannot survive without destroying the other. This is in addition to the normal suspicions and lack of communication which divides nations.

The economy of the West, led by the United States, is on the verge of bankruptcy having pursued the old and discredited scheme of creating wealth with a printing press. The economy of the East is also on the verge of bankruptcy, having pursued the equally old and discredited scheme of collectivism.

Ernest Hemingway wrote a long time ago that politicians always do two things to hide their mismanagement. One is inflate the currency and the other is start a war.

With that context in mind, let me tell you some things which, despite the public attention they are getting, are not important.

The feminist movement. Preoccupation with the feminist movement by essentially upper-middle-class American women is tantamount to Marie Antoinette worrying about her hair-do on the eve of the French revolution.

The Wayne Williams murder trial and all the other Police Gazette stories.

Gay Rights. Soddomites should be content with the Bill of Rights like the rest of us and return their sex lives, if not to the closet, at least to their own bedrooms.

The entertainment industry. It was nice that there was a band on the Titanic but whether it was a good one or a bad one and what kind of love affairs the band members were having proved to be entirely irrelevant to the safety of the passengers.

The personal lives and habits of public officials and their families from the president and first lady right on down to the local legislator. What matters about a public servant is how he performs his public duty. We have no right and no need to pry into his private life.

Public opinion polls. Assuming the poll is taken correctly, and that is a dangerous assumption, it is useless to measure and quantify the casual, uninformed opinions of people not especially interested in the subjects they are being questioned about.

The Arab-Israeli, Greek-Turkish, Armenian-Turkish, Chinese-Vietnamese, Irish-English, and Black South African feuds. None of these regional and, in most cases, old conflicts can affect our lives unless we stupidly inject ourselves into them. The notion that the Arabs and Israelis can draw the superpowers into a war tracks back to the schoolboy mythology that a Serbian assassin was the cause of World War I. He wasn't and they can't.

There is only one overriding issue Americans should be concerned about at this point in time and that is survival — economic and physical. We should clear our mental decks and concentrate on doing what has to be done to repair our economy, repair our defenses, and deal with our enemies at home and abroad.

INSIDE REPORT:

Suicidal impulse of Republicans endangering 'revolution'

WASHINGTON — The attack on President Reagan's White House political aide by loyalist Reaganite Sen. Roger Jepsen looks like a political lynching that failed, but it reflects the unfraternal mood of Republicans in Washington.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Jepsen's demand for the scalp of Edward J. Rollins Jr., recent successor to Lyn Nofziger as Reagan's in-house political aide, has an unusually sharp cutting edge. Prodded by Herman Pirchner, Jepsen's legislative aide who felt betrayed when his boss gave Reagan badly-needed support on the Oct. 28 AWACS vote, the senator's office has conducted what White House aides privately call a "witch-hunt." The target was the president's personal political staff.

A familiar syndrome in Ronald Reagan's Washington emerges. Reagan has no more faithful follower than Roger Jepsen, the conservative ideologue with roots deep into Christian fundamentalism. But not even that strong alliance could withstand the atmosphere of distorted loyalties and unworthy demands for revenge that are undermining the vigor and common purpose of the Reagan administration.

Rollins was not the first target in the witchhunt for the source of a quote in the Oct. 29 Des Moines Register explaining how Reagan persuaded Jepsen to change his mind and vote "aye" on AWACS.

"We stood him up in front of an open grave," the unattributed quotation in the story by Register reporter John Hyde said, "and said he could jump in if he wanted to."

The first suspect was 24-year-old Douglas Elmets, a conservative Iowan assigned to minor political chores in Nofziger's office. When Nofziger informed Elmets in November that Jepsen's office suspected him as the source of the quote, he broke down and sobbed. "I'm from Iowa," Elmets told us on Feb. 8. "I think the world of Sen. Jepsen. I could never think of doing such a thing to him."

Sleuths in Jepsen's office accepted Nofziger's word that Elmets was innocent. They carried their confidential probe farther afield until it came to rest on a weekly Georgetown University seminar on public affairs. On Oct. 27, the day before the AWACS vote, Rollins (then Nogziger's deputy) was the guest lecturer. The reporter who wrote the article with the offending quote was present.

Armed with this piece of information, Jepsen's staff demanded from Georgetown University the names of the 13 or 14 students who heard Rollins' lecture. The university was frightened that the demand came from a senator. Confidential files were opened and the names handed over. Armed with tape recorders, Jepsen's staff then went after the students, warning them they might be subpoenaed in future court proceedings. They left the details vague.

Chris Till, the instructor who conducts the weekly seminar, was telephoned by Pirchner at home. "Was your seminar on or off the record?" he asked her. She told us he was rude. "I refused to answer," she said. "I told him he was conducting a McCarthyite investigation. I told him he was intimidating my students. I told him the people of Iowa would be outraged if they knew that Jepsen's office was using taxpayers' money to conduct a personal vendetta."

But Professor Till's students were frightened. All but one submitted to interrogation while the recording machine spun. The consensus: No recollection of the quotation or anything close to it about perching Jepsen "in front of an open grave." But there were some who recalled that in a brief, rhetorical aside, Rollins may have said that considering the full weight of Reagan's pressure to get Jepsen's AWACS vote, "we just beat his brains out."

The phrase was indelicate but accurate. It fit Rollins' background as a Golden Gloves boxing champion more than his tour as a dean of students at Washington University in St. Louis. It gave Pirchner what he wanted.

A memorandum went to the White House over Jepsen's signature demanding action against Rollins. Last week, after several vain efforts to see White House chief of staff James Baker III, Jepsen got his interview. He wanted Rollins there. Reagan's top political adviser was summoned. One White House insider told us: "Jepsen and two of his aides beat him on the head for half an hour. They demanded his scalp."

Reagan insiders are convinced that Jepsen will not get Rollins' scalp, certainly not for using a pugilistic idiom as common on Capitol Hill as in the ring. But damage has been done in a trivial dispute that should have been resolved weeks ago in a quiet Oval Office chat. The suicidal impulse of Republicans in Ronald Reagan's Washington is once again in the headlines, a syndrome that is eating at the core of the Reagan revolution.

Catherine Elizabeth Parrett, 33, of Seattle, stares out the window from the Morrison Hotel after she had spent 46 days in jail on the suspicion of shoplifting. She somehow missed being scheduled for an arraignment after her arrest on Dec. 27 and got lost in the system until she told a jail employee she hadn't been to court.

Woman arrested on charge of shoplifting 'lost' in system

By PATRICK CONNOLLY
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — A woman arrested on a shoplifting charge, then accidentally held 46 days before anyone realized she had not seen a judge, says she "kind of got to like it" in the King County Jail.

"Some people might have been harsh about it, but I expected to be in jail for three months for shoplifting the makeup..." Catherine Elizabeth Parrett said in an interview Thursday. "I don't know why I took (the items). It must have been a sudden reflex."

Meanwhile, Municipal Court Judge Stephen R. Schaefer called the incident "the worst case I've seen in five years on the bench." When Mrs. Parrett, 33, finally appeared before him Wednesday, the judge said he would "definitely" dismiss the charge.

State law provides that anyone arrested be brought before a judge for arraignment on the next day that court is held.

Schaefer released Mrs. Parrett to Rick Gilbert, a probation officer who arranged for her to live in the Morrison Hotel, a downtown facility for indigents. However, she was later reported to have checked out of the hotel. Another court appearance is scheduled for next Wednesday.

"She was content in jail," said Gilbert, who described Mrs. Parrett as mentally disturbed. "She was reading books and wasn't worried."

Mrs. Parrett was arrested Dec. 27 at a Capitol Hill Safeway store. Police said she had placed about $50 worth of cosmetics in her purse. She was then jailed.

Mrs. Parrett, who is divorced, said she is not bitter.

"Jail was kind of quiet and I kind of got to like it," she added. "People were friendly and participated in activities, like going to the library and arts and crafts. We'd go to church and I made some friends."

She said she has undergone treatment for mental illness and "I would still like to go to more mental therapy."

After Mrs. Parrett's arrest, her case got lost, said Tom Johnson, commander of jail operations. He blamed the municipal court.

"We forwarded a copy of the booking arrest sheet to the court when she was brought in. Normally they give us a receipt and assign a calendar date for a court appearance," Johnson said Thursday. "We have discovered they received (the arrest sheet) but failed to set this person for court appearance.

"We're developing a tracking system to prevent this in the future," he said.

Gilbert said the woman's predicament came to light Wednesday when she mentioned to a jail employee who was moving her to another cell that she had not been to court yet.

She lived on Capitol Hill with a Seattle school teacher and probably will go back there, said Gilbert.

Three former McAllen officers acquitted of violating civil rights

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

MCALLEN, Texas (AP) — Pedro Dennett leaned against a car at his auto body and paint shop, shaking his head about the acquittal of three former policemen accused of violating his civil rights.

"I know that the system didn't work this time," the 28-year-old said Thursday. "They're (the officers) laughing at me. Those three guys are just relaxing back and saying, 'We got away with it.'"

He said a $17,000 settlement in a civil suit over the same incident does not change his feelings.

A Brownsville federal jury acquitted the three men Wednesday after a three-day trial.

The case involved Dennett's Oct. 23, 1978, arrest and booking on drunken driving charges.

A station monitoring camera recorded his handling at the station booking desk. The tape was seen by a federal jury and revealed the officers only were trying to control the situation, the foreman said.

After being brought into the booking area, the handcuffed Dennett kicked at an officer in the groin. Former Patrolman Jaime Contreras threw him to the eround, where former Officer Alfredo Saldana came over to assist. Dennett's handcuffs were removed and he swung at the policemen.

The prisoner tried to throw Saldana over his back but the men grabbed the prisoner's arms. Investigator Tom Carter walked over from the adjacent fingerprinting room and threw two punches to Dennett's midsection.

Dennett was hoisted by his belt and slammed against the booking desk twice. Officers twisted one of his arms behind his back and Dennett wailed a loud scream. He was put in a holding cell.

Radio stations report body not priest

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A decomposed body found this month on a Mexican farm with a bullet in its skull has been established to be not that of a missing Corpus Christi priest, two broadcast stations report.

Dental records showed the body was not that of the Rev. Simon Thomas Flores, 44, of Christ the King Roman Catholic Church, sources who asked not to be identified told both KGNS-TV and KVOZ radio station.

Laredo police declined to comment on the broadcast reports.

The body was discovered Feb. 6 beneath some brush in the Mexican border town of Nuevo Laredo.

Flores, a native of Victorias had arrived in Laredo Jan. 7 for conferences at San Francisco Xavier Church, where he left his car and personal belongings.

He was reported missing after going for a walk Jan. 8. Laredo police conducted a door-to-door earch and dragged the Rio Grande to no avail.

Flores' disappearance was the second case of a missing Roman Catholic priest ind he had been beaten to death. No arrests have been made.

Drug may bring legend to life

By ALLAN PARACHINI
The Washington Post-Los Angeles Times News Service

IRVINE, Calif. — Some funny-looking rats in cages here may represent the latest step toward the 20th-century realization of a dream rooted in a medical legend more than 1,700 years old.

The animals in question, at University of California Irvine Medical School, are ordinary enough — pure white laboratory specimens of a breed called the Lewis rat, except for one thing.

Each white rat has one leg covered by dark brown fur. The dark legs are not original equipment. Instead, they were grafted onto the white rodents from rats of a completely different strain. The most long-lasting of the legs has survived, in a clinical sense, for more than nine months and its tissue is still healthy.

To overcome what would ordinarily be the overwhelming inclination of the white rat's body to reject the transplanted animal's leg, a research team has used a new drug called cyclosporin A.

WHAT HAS BEEN accomplished is a small — though potentially enormously important — step toward a breakthrough in transplantation. This could eventually permit human feet, hands, legs and arms, or their component parts, to be transplanted just as kidneys, corneas and hearts are now.

But experts caution that while the rejection problem appears to be yielding, technical and mechanical difficulties — such as finding compatible donor limbs and the intricacy of attendant surgery — make actual human limb transplants a feat isolated well in the future.

Reporting on their research in the current New England Journal of Medicine, the Irvine doctors speculate that the Lewis rats with grafted brown legs represent "at least a short step" toward fulfillment of a legend that dates to the 3rd century.

The legend is that of Saints Cosmas and Damian, Romans who are reputed to have amputated the gangrenous leg of a church official and then sewn on a substitute leg taken from the body of a just-deceased Ethiopian Moor.

The legend has hung over transplantation science of this century as something of an aspiration — to the unimpaired ability to substitute replacement parts for any organ of the body.

Though it seems unlikely that Cosmas and Damian actually accomplished what their legend credits to them, the Irvine rats are arguments in support of the claim that there are now effective drugs to thwart the body's natural inclination to reject alien tissue.

THE REJECTION phenomenon — which puzzled the doctors who first grafted kidneys and hearts, organs now commonly transplanted — is what makes the Cosmas and Damian feat unlikely.

Does what has happened with 15 rats in Irvine mean that substitutions of whole legs in human beings is likely to start occurring soon? Probably not, argue the researchers.

But what the new Irvine work may mean is that within a few years, transplant science will have available to it a whole new stockpile of prospective body spare parts, even if the supply does not immediately include entire legs, arms, hands and feet.

Dr. Bruce M. Achauer, a plastic surgeon on the seven-member Irvine team, said that while technical difficulties will make it hard to transplant legs as a whole, it is likely that whole leg bones may soon be substituted for badly shattered ones that now often lead to amputation or permanent disability.

The same techniques, contended Achauer and Kirby S. Black, the technician who did much of the work in the ongoing Irvine study, could also lead to nerve transplants and greatly improved skin grafts for the treatment of burn victims.

Crude bone transplants are already being done, but the bones involved are used as frameworks onto which new bone tissue grows over time. The bone transplants envisioned by the Irvine team would permit the donor bone to be installed and its blood supply reconnected so it would behave just as original equipment.

The Irvine study began in earnest last year as one of several tests under way around the country of the potential uses for cyclosporin A, a drug that is still awaiting U.S. Food and Drug Administration approval for widespread use. But cyclosporin A already is being used selectively on patients who must have vital-organ transplants to save their lives.

In those life-and-death applications, cyclosporin A has proven itself a drug of significant promise. However, studies of the drug's long-term side effects and effectiveness have not been completed.

IN IRVINE, THE research team grafted the dark-colored Norway rat legs onto the white Lewis rats and gave each animal doses of cyclosporin A for 20 days to ward off rejection. The rats do not have normal use of their transplanted legs, said Achauer and Black, because the object of the experiment was simply to establish whether tissue rejection could be prevented in a transplant from such a dissimilar animal.

In a human transplant, the drug therapy probably would be continued for far longer than it was for the rats, the researcher said. But even though the cyclosporin was cut off after 20 days, many of the rat legs survived for several weeks. One animal's transplanted limb is still healthy today — more than nine months after the transplant and more than eight months after the drug was cut off, Achauer and Black said.

"This is a very showy subject in that it has inklings of Frankenstein," Black said.

But transplanting entire legs in human beings, said both researchers and other cyclosporin experts, is likely to remain in the realm of the impractical for some time to come.

For one thing, said Achauer, the mere dissimilarities of arms and legs make them unlikely targets for transplantation. Different lengths and sizes of such extremities are likely to pose almost insurmountable technical problems for the transplant surgeon — even when rejection can be completely controlled.

Though the Irvine team's report in the New England Journal of Medicine was only a letter to the editor, Achauer and Black said a more complete description of the research is in preparation now.

THE ALLUSION TO THE legend of Cosmas and Damian strikes the company that is developing cyclosporin A as something of a literary device. "It is and it isn't appropriate," to speculate about making the Roman legend a reality, commented Dr. David Winter, who heads cyclosporin development for its maker, Sandoz Pharmaceuticals.

"I think there's a little poetic license going on," said Winter of the Irvine research and the way it was presented. But Winter agreed that the implication of what the team has reported is not inappropriate.

"The basic concept (of grafting totally dissimilar body parts) could go a long way if it turns out to work (as well) in humans," he said.

Winter said 100 researchers are working with cyclosporin nationwide and that much of the research has as its goal the elimination of many of the traditional impediments to more widespread transplantation. "If what has been done (in Irvine) stands up, you will be able to get across boundaries that you never have before," he said.

If the Irvine team was cautious in its description of what it has done, however, the conclusions were still seen as enticing by a Houston authority who first speculated — in an earlier edition of the same medical journal that published the Irvine report — that cyclosporin A may be opening the way to fulfillment of the Cosmas and Damian legend.

Dr. Barry Kahan, a transplant expert at the University of Texas Medical School, agreed that the Irvine rats represent "a very interesting application." In a telephone interview, Kahan also urged caution in speculation about exotic applications of new transplant techniques.

WORKING WITH ARMS and legs, Kahan said, would involve serious questions just of the odds. "How likely is it that on the same day, you could have an amputation with a very clean cut and at the same time find a cadaver leg of exactly the same size?" Kahan asked. "Nevertheless, (doing it) would probably be worth the risks if you were able to prevent rejection."

Kahan and the Irvine team emphasized that there is not likely to be any widespread application of new transplant techniques until at least 1983 because it will take at least until then for safety studies to clear cyclosporin for marketing.

Nevertheless, last July, Kahan, writing in the medical journal's editorial pages, reached this conclusion:

"Will 3rd-Century legend become 20th-Century fact? The means may well be in our hands."

Schweiker denies medicare cuts will harm kidney dialysis patients

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health Secretary Richard S. Schweiker has characterized as "totally false" charges that the lives of kidney dialysis patients may be jeopardized by proposed restrictions on Medicare payments.

But more than 100 kidney patients who depend on dialysis to keep them alive say they fear they may suffer if the changes sought by Congress and the Reagan administration force some dialysis centers to close and shift more patients to home care.

The Department of Health and Human Services, headed by Schweiker, planned to publish in today's Federal Register the proposed new limits on Medicare payments for dialysis treatments.

The government has recommended paying hospitals $132 for each dialysis treatment and clinics $128 per treatment. Some variations would be made, depending on local labor costs.

That compares with the current average treatment payment of $174 to hospitals and $138 to clinics.

The move would save Medicare $130 million in fiscal 1983. Medicare now spends $1.8 billion on dialysis for 59,200 patients, transplants for 5,000 and follow-up treatment for 8,000 other transplant recipients.

Most patients whose kidneys have failed need dialysis to purify their blood in four-hour sessions, three times a week.

Kidney patients are the only ones other than the elderly and disabled workers whose bills are paid by Medicare. Although they comprise less than 0.2 percent of all Medicare beneficiaries, kidney patients account for 3.8 percent of Medicare's costs.

Rolling through tight places

By AL CARRRELL

Because of the angle of the handle in relation to the roller, it is sometimes next to impossible to paint in a narrow space — such as behind the refrigerator or behind radiators. You can usually get to part of the area, but not all. You can make yourself a special applicator for such areas. Get one of the replacement rollers that are very small and used for window trim and molding. Next select a nail that will be long enough to go through the center of the roller and still stick out about an inch. Tap the nail through the roller and into the end of a broom handle. Leave a little space between the roller and the end of the broom handle so there won't be any binding. Now you'll be able to get into most narrow spaces with good control and get the job done.

Dear Al: I wanted to pass along something I learned from a plumber. He suggested that anytime you replace an "O" ring, you coat it with either white grease or petroleum jelly. Not only does this make the ring slip in place easier, it also helps it last longer and even work better. — D.K.J.

Dear Al: I took advantage of your offer for the free mildew fighting sheet, and it really got rid of the stuff. I also wanted to tell you about a trick passed on to me by a neighbor. She uses about the same methods you suggest for ridding the bathroom tile walls of mildew. Then with the tiles and grout clean and white, she covers over the entire wall with her regular furniture polish. This protects the grout from the mildew getting started again very soon.— T.L.

If you missed the FREE sheet on fighting mildew, I've still got one with your name on it. Please include a self-addressed, stamped envelope along with your request here at the paper.

A SUPER HINT — My wife Jean has never liked when I use the kitchen sink for such things as cleaning paint brushes and rollers or washing hard things like metal parts, rocks or tiles. Those things could chip the porcelain on the sink. Well, I use a foolproof method against chipping. I line the bottom of the sink with an old towel before filling the sink with water. Not only does this protect the sink's surface, it also makes it easy to pick up the parts by just lifting the four corners of the towel. It also prevents small parts from accidentally going down the drain. I still haven't found an acceptable way to clean rollers or brushes in the sink.

Dear Al: When you have talked about concrete work in the past, you have always suggested having an alternate project in mind just in case you mixed too much concrete. I ended up with way too much recently and didn't have any projects in mind. I quickly created one that I really like. I used the left-over mix to form a curved surface where the garage walls meet the floors. It was easy to do as I used a soft drink bottle to make a uniform curve. My idea was that since this is a collection place for sawdust and other garage workshop messes, it would be much easier to sweep than with the normal corners. It is. — P.B.

SHOP TALK — Although I possibly need the bending over exercise connected with a lot of yard work, I like the idea of a new gadget called a Leaf Bagger. It's a metal frame that securely holds a plastic trash bag in the open position. You just rake the leaves or clippings into the bag which is open and flat on the ground. Then when it's full, you drag the bag and frame to wherever the refuse goes. It's a product of the Overholt Products Co., 220 Winding Way, Morrisville, Pa. 19067.

Your wardrobe is a business tool, according to local fashion consultant

By NANCY LORD
Lifestyle Writer

Changing your appearance can change your life, according to B. Jeniece Giles a wardrobe consultant and founder of Investment Dressing in Odessa.

Ms. Giles will be conducting a class entitled "Look Like You Mean Business" from 1:30-4:30 p.m. Thursday at the Permian Basin Graduate Center. Created for the career conscious woman, the class will teach participants how to use their wardrobe as a tool to succeed in the business world.

Class topics will include matching clothes to your occupation, image development, maintaining a sense of style, building a budget-minded wardrobe, eliminating purchasing mistakes, "do's and don'ts" of professional dressing and workmanship of quality garment construction.

Ms. Giles moved to the Permian Basin from Houston in September 1981 and founded Investment Dressing in November 1981. She received a bachelor of science degree in home economics, clothing and textiles from Texas Tech University. She is an instructor in the field of basic wardrobe planning and consulting, and also conducts seminars for institutions, professional groups and clothing merchants. She attended Robert Spence School of Modeling and was an instructor at John Robert Powers Finishing and Modeling School in Houston.

Services offered by Ms. Giles include individual consultation with a client in her home, shopping with a client, professional dressing seminars for institutions, professional groups and clothing stores and shopping for a client.

In her work as a wardrobe consultant, Ms. Giles says she always stresses quality over quantity to her customers. "Pay twice as much and buy half as much," she advises, noting that better quality clothing will last longer.

"It usually takes (the average person) about two years to completely change your style," Ms. Giles says. She advises buying a few good items at a time until you have the wardrobe you want rather than buying everthing at once.

She says that most of her clients want to look upper middle class. "Dress any way that suits your style, but know what messages you're sending when you dress a certain way. The way we dress tells people what kind of people we are."

Ms. Giles notes that many of her clients are men. "Men are just as interested and just as excited about the way they look as women are," she says. In addition, "I find that men are very interested in what is fashionable for women."

B. Jeniece Giles

One of the things Ms. Giles does is help her clients unclutter their closets. "People usually wear only about 30 percent of the clothing hanging in their closets," she notes.

Beer good in cooking

By JAY BEAUSEIGNEUR
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — People who give press luncheons normally have a goal in mind: to get members of the news media hyped up enough about their product so they'll write about it.

That was the idea that stirred the American importers of St. Pauli Girl beer to give a luncheon recently at the venerable-looking Luchow's restaurant. But the importers — the Carlton Importing Company — didn't exactly come to grips with the reason that people buy beer: they drink it.

The message delivered at this lunch was that this beer is a sweetheart of a beer to cook with. The expert I talked to on the subject seems to think it's a pretty obscure issue.

"There's no significant difference in beers when it comes to cooking," said Donna Lee, food editor of the Boston Herald American. "The only rule is that you shouldn't use any beer you wouldn't drink."

Lee combines beer and cuisine quite frequently, but perhaps not in the way the beer flackers had in mind. "I like a glass of beer while I'm cooking dinner," she says.

Undaunted by such ennui, a public relations agency arranged for Luchow's to cook an entire meal with — you guessed it — its client's beer.

The menu consisted of:

St. Pauli Girl leek soup, a lukewarm concoction with more noodles than leeks, and which arrived with the type of skim on it normally associated with over-boiled milk.

Beer-batter fried shrimp, cold and leaden.

Sauerkraut braised with knockwurst and bauerwurst, which proved to be the best part of the luncheon; everyone loaded up on the sauerkraut out of necessity.

Sliced sirloin with bleu cheese and beer sauce, best digested while suffering from a severe cold. And:

German pork roast in spicy beer sauce, the winner by default in the meat selection category.

Before turning off the tap right here, the dessert — cheese and fruit — was not cooked in beer. They may be working on it.

A woman next to me at table, a food editor, described the meal as the type that "would give airline food a good name."

So why knock a free meal? There certainly were enough media people in attendance to eat a horse — which in itself might make an interesting food column. But a luncheon like this does bring up some questions on what the client and public relations agency hope to accomplish — any client and agency.

The product is beer. The fact that you can cook with beer is like saying you like the Botticelli "Venus" because she has great elbows.

Experiments made to reduce high blood pressure

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Diet's relationship to high blood pressure has been examined lately as a safe alternative or complement to drug therapy. No drug therapy for hypertension is without some risk or side effect, although traditionally the risk of heart disease or stroke far outweighed the risk posed by drugs, so medication was appropriate.

Further, many doctors appear reluctant to dispense medicine for what looks to be a chronic illness. Many patients diagnosed as hypertense face an entire lifetime of pill popping if they find no alternative.

Supporters of diet therapy — an approach that lost popularity with the discovery of diuretic drugs in the 1950s — are becoming more numerous. Study after study, as quoted in the January issue of the Journal of the American Dietetic Association, reports diet therapy successful in reducing blood pressure.

Approaches are twofold. First, some studies showed weight loss to be more effective in reducing blood pressure than lower salt intake. Any weight loss, even if the person doesn't achieve normal weight, seems to lower blood pressure.

But sodium restriction worked, too. Says one experimenter, "Sodium restriction is able to reduce blood pressure.

The research shows that calorie control and exercise, in addition to sodium restriction, might improve the condition of those with hypertension.

In addition, patients on medication often are advised to increase their potassium intake. With some medicine, the more sodium the patient ingests, the more potassium is lost. So doctors will tell their patients to eat bananas, potatoes and oranges.

Dried peas, limas and dried beans are all low in sodium and high in potaseium. Although more caloric than fresh fruits and vegetables, they are nutritious and filling and can be included in a weight-loss diet. More fattening sources of concentrated potassium are unsalted nuts: peanuts, brazil nuts, almonds and so on.

Otherwise, fresh, unprocessed foods are generally low in sodium, except for dairy foods. Three and a half ounces of apple have 110 mg. of potassium, 1 mg. of sodium; mung bean sprouts have 612 mg. of potassium, 2 mg. of sodium; 3 1-2 ounces of banana contain 10,948 mg. of potassium, 6 mg. of sodium.

For those interested in lowering the sodium in their diets, the Food and Drug Administration has a booklet called "The Case for Moderating Sodium Consumption," available from FDA by writing Consumer Communications, HFE-88, Food and Drug Administration, 5600 Fishers Lane, Rockville, Md. 20857.

The Department of Agriculture publishes a 42-page booklet entitled "The Sodium Content of Your Food," which lists common foods and their sodium content. It currently sells for $2.25 and is available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

The following minestrone soup is especially appropriate for people who need to consume large amounts of potassium.

MINESTRONE SOUP
(4 servings)

1 cup dried beans (kidney or navy)
4 1-2 cups water
1-2 green pepper, diced
1-4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 clove garlic, minced
1 medium onion, chopped
2 tablespoons parsley, minced
1-4 teaspoon dried mustard
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1-4 teaspoon sugar
3 whole cloves
1-2 teaspoon savory
1 teaspoon basil
2 cups diced tomatoes (peeled fresh or low-sodium canned)
1 small zucchini, chopped
1 medium potato, cubed

Combine beans, water and green pepper and bring to a boil. Lower heat, cover pan and simmer about an hour or until beans are almost tender. Add garlic, onion and parsley and simmer 15 minutes. Add mustard, vinegar, lemon juice, sugar, cloves, savory, basil, tomatoes, zucchini and potato (unpeeled, if desired). Simmer soup, uncovered, until vegetables are tender — about 20 minutes.

LOW SODIUM EGGPLANT DIP
(8 servings)

Even the most ill-stocked general supermarkets usually have seasoned salt substitute. However, salt substitute should not be used with abandon. Salt substitutes usually replace the sodium in salt (salt is 40 percent sodium) with potassium. Like sodium, potassium is an electrolyte necessary in fairly constant levels in the blood. Low serum potassium (possible when diuretic drugs are being taken) could cause weakness, muscle cramps, cardiac arrhythmia and, on occasion, heart failure; high serum potassium can cause cardiac arrythmia, nausea and an irregular electrocardiogram. The use of salt substitute should, therefore, be cleared with the physician.

2 large eggplants
4 tablespoons olive oil
1 large red onion, chopped
8 cloves garlic, minced
1 large green pepper, seeded and chopped
3 tablespoons freshly squeezed lemon juice
2 teaspoons seasoned salt substitute
1-8 teaspoon ground red pepper
1-2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

Prick each eggplant with a fork in about 6 places. Place in a 450-degree oven for about 45 minutes, or until very tender. Combine oil, onion and garlic in skillet and cook over medium heat until onion is translucent. Add the pepper and stir well, cooking until the onion is very tender and pale golden. Remove from flame. Scrape the eggplant pulp from the skin into the container of a food processor or blender. Add onion mixture and puree until smooth. Add lemon juice, seasoned salt, red pepper and black pepper and blend well. Allow to stand overnight. For hors d'oeuvres, serve the dip in a large bowl surrounded by low-sodium wheat crackers or pita bread. For individual servings, spoon into crystal sherbet bowls and surround with pita bread.

LOW SODIUM PITA BREAD
(Makes 20 pitas)

Do not be discouraged by the inclusion of garlic powder and onion powder in the following recipe. This bread does not taste artificial or overwhelmingly spicy. Substitute black pepper for white if you need to.

2 packages active dry yeast
2 1-2 cups warm water
2 teaspoons honey
1 to 1 1-2 teaspoons dry mustard
1 teaspoon freshly ground white pepper
1 teaspoon seasoned salt substitute
1 tablespoon garlic powder
1 1-2 tablespoons onion powder
6 to 7 cups unsifted unbleached flour

Place yeast in a large mixing bowl with water and honey. Let the mixture stand to proof about 5 to 8 minutes. With a whisk, beat the mustard, pepper, seasoned salt substitute, garlic powder and onion powder into the yeast mixture. Using a wooden spoon, beat in the the flour, 1 cup at a time, until a soft dough is formed. Spread the remaining flour on a board and place soft dough on top. Gradually knead in the flour, kneading 12 to 18 minutes, or until a clean, firm dough is formed. Shape into a ball. Place the dough into a lightly oiled bowl and roll the ball so that all sides are oiled. Cover the bowl with a towel and let the dough rise in a warm place for 40 minutes or until double in bulk. Punch the dough down and turn it onto a board. Knead 5 to 7 minutes and return it to the bowl. Cover and allow to rise another 30 minutes. Roll the dough out to a length of about 20 inches and slice it into 20 pieces. Butter 2 or 3 cookie sheets. Dust a board and a rolling pin lightly with flour and roll all the dough pieces into circles about 1-4-inch thick. Place 3 inches apart on cookie sheets and bake in 500-degree oven 10 to 12 minutes, or until puffed and golden. Remove to wire racks. Place in plastic bags to soften. Slice into triangles and serve with eggplant dip.

Carnival man plans warmer weather

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — While Maine's sprawling fairgrounds lie silent under hip-deep snow, Billy Burr plans ahead for the warmer months when the midways bustle with excitement.

Burr, who claims to operate the biggest traveling carnival in New England, spends winters in Miami, but he says he seldom finds time to loll on the beach.

Not long ago, he was in Portland, setting up a hospitality suite at the convention of the Maine Association of Agricultural Fairs, arranging bookings for the coming season.

From there he was off to an equipment trade show in Tampa, Fla., where he was prepared to plunk down at least $250,000 for a new aerial thrillride for "Billy Burr's Fun-O-Rama."

Meanwhile, two-dozen of Burr's employees remain at work throughout the winter at his maintenance shops in Haverhill, Mass., handling the upkeep on rides and other carnival equipment, some of it a quarter-century old.

Despite the slumping economy, Burr says his Playtime Amusement Corp. of Mansfield, Mass. had an good year in 1981, doing $2 million in business at more than 50 fairs and carnivals in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

"Usually, when money starts tightening up we feel it first, because people are still making the payments on the car or the refrigerator," he explains.

"Then, after it gets a little toug car or the refrigerator," he explains.

"Then, after it gets a little tougher and they've had a chance to adjust, they don't have the money to go out and buy the big ticket items. But they still have a couple of dollars in their pocket — and we get them," he says with a grin.

Despite soaring costs for such items as insurance and diesel fuel to power electric generators, Burr says he has held the line on prices for the past three years. Tickets are still 30 cents each, 10 for $2.50, with no change in the number of tickets required for each ride.

The nice thing about a carnival, he says, is that people "can spend as little or as much as they want to." Visitors can stroll around the midway and spend nothing, or easily part with $40 or more for an evening's entertainment, he says.

Burr, 52, oversees a traveling retinue of 300 carnival employees and concessionaires who operate the Ferris wheels, hawk the cotton candy, run the games of chance and participate in the girlie shows and other live entertainment.

Starting April 1, at a show sponsored by the American Legion in Dover, N.H., he travels with a smaller crew to night and weekend-only carnivals run as benefits for charitable organizations or as promotions for shopping centers. By late July, when the fair circuit heats up, he's into his busy season.

"From July 21 to Oct. 10, we have only two days that we're not operating," he says. "We close one fair on Saturday night, then open the next one at noontime on Sunday."

Like a traveling circus, the "Fun-O-Rama" crew rolls across the region in a fleet of 80 trailers, hauled by tractors that Burr obtains on a lease basis.

His show pays the sponsoring fair or organization a fixed percentage of the receipts — "a large percentage," says Burr, who won't reveal specific figures.

In recent years, there has been a trend for the nation's carnivals, now numbering about 500, to get bigger, Burr says. He says his father started the business with a merry-go-round he acquired when someone he loaned money to during the Depression was unable to repay the debt.

The elder Burr gradually added more equipment, expanding the carnival show that began as a summer sideline to his heating oil business. Eventually, he went into the carnival business full time.

His son, who has spent all his life working carnivals, says there's nothing comparable to the excitement and sense of participation that fairgoers enjoy during a visit to the midway.

"This is something you actually do. You get the sights and the smells and the sounds," says Burr, dismissing television and movies as passive entertainment.

Professor says wedding vows should change to reflect times

BINGHAMTON, N.Y. (AP) — Traditional marriage vows pledging love and devotion "until death us do part" should undergo some changes that better reflect the realities of love, says Martin C. Dillon, who teaches a course in "Love, Death and Creation" at the State University of New York at Binghamton.

Dillon, associate professor of philosophy at the university, says although most Americans marry for love, the link between "romantic" marriage and spiraling divorce rates could be people's unreal concept of love.

"Most traditional families are in serious trouble because of their expectations about love," he says. "By fostering a romantic notion of ideal love, one that is largely unobtainable, our marriages are being driven apart.

"We have been misled with overly inflated expectations," he adds. "If we marry for romance, we're going to be disappointed because people tend to be in love with idealization rather than reality."

Intimacy erodes that illusion, but "the illusion of romance dies hard," says Dillon, who is preparing two books on love and sexuality.

In American traditional society, Dillon says, couples make marriage vows in absolute terms: "...in sickness and in health, as long as we both shall live."

Those vows, he says, are based on the unreal expectation of a relationship staying the same throughout time. The language of love, he observes, "is full of always and forever and never, but you can't say you'll love someone forever because it's just not a promise you can realistically make. What we should be saying is 'I love you now and I hope I'll love you a year from now; I'll work at it.' We have to take into consideration the fact that everyone grows and changes as years go by."

Dillon suggests that a mature marriage contract should be conditional, bound by specific time periods and circumstances and that the economic realities of family responsibilities be included.

"A better marriage vow may be one designed to protect the offspring of that marriage," he says, and refutes those who say a prenuptial agreement, spelling out financial obligations in case of divorce, is a negative and unromantic preparation for marriage.

"If such a practical step dispels illusions, then those are illusions that needed dispelling," he says. He likens a prenuptial agreement to wearing a parachute in a small plane. "You have no intention of using it, but it's foolish to go up without it, and nice to know it's there in case of emergency."

Dillon says he would like to see marriages made more difficult to achieve than divorces. "The soul-searching should come before marriage, not after," he says.

'Dateless' meets others on show

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — If you're dateless and desperate, and you don't mind talking about it, give Brandy Alexander a call. She might fix you up with a dream date or a perfect mate.

You might have to share your frustrations with thousands of listeners, but that might be a small price to pay for companionship, love, marriage or whatever.

Brandy Alexander, a nom de microphone, is a talk-show hostess on radio station WLOF-AM in Orlando. She runs the weekly three-hour show "Dateless and Desperate," specializing in getting lonely people together.

Single people of all ages call in to tell listeners about themselves and their interests. In return, they might get the phone number of someone who seems compatible: the nice voice, the self-styled "good looker," the one with the similar hobby, likes and dislikes.

One recent caller said she had beautiful eyes and was looking for a "healthy, financially stable man... I don't expect handsome." A 69-year-old widow wanted a man who wasn't sex-hungry.

They were typical callers, trading phone numbers so they could set up a meeting or a date.

Ms. Alexander, a young woman with a master's degree in counseling, runs the radio-dating service with a playful enthusiasm. She chats easily with all callers, dispenses phone numbes and encourages them to talk about themselves.

She figures she's had a fairly successful matchmaking career, judging from the testimony of satisfied clientele. At least two couples who met through D&D have married. One of the ceremonies was performed on the air.

And Ms. Alexander gets many calls from people thanking her for helping them find good friends, if not lovers, through the program.

But there are many matches that end in failure. And she gets those calls, too, with a full recounting of experiences and requests for more phone numbers.

"I see myself as a psychiatrist as well as a matchmaker," Ms. Alexander says. "And I really believe this is a viable alternative to the bar scene. It's a service to the community."

Every Thursday night, from 7 to 10 p.m., the calls flow in, seeking the elusive Mr. or Miss Right.

On a recent Thursday, a 6-foot, 225-pound man who builds billboards asked for a woman who would go riding with him in a four-wheel-drive vehicle. Minutes later, a woman called seeking an adventurous man who "likes the beach at night." Ms. Alexander made the match.

Health care in Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A program designed to bring medical services to the poor has helped more than 1 million people here since it began in 1975, health authorities report.

Some 300 health centers set up in primarily rural areas have provided basic programs of dental care, nutrition and sanitation, and prenatal and child-care information. A major effort has also been made to vaccinate children below age 12 against polio and diphtheria.

DEAR ABBY

Grandpa builds bridge over generation gap

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My son at age 21 got a young girl pregnant and wanted no part of marriage. A baby boy was born (I'll call him Andy). Because I myself had been an abandoned child, I didn't want Andy going through life looking for a father as I had done, so since I was a widower I took the young unmarried girl and Andy into my home to live with me.

Although the girl was only 18 and I was 42, our love grew, and we have lived together as a family ever since. She has been a wonderful mother to my grandchild, who is 9 now and thinks I am his father. The girl has been as faithful as a wife to me although we never married.

My son is very irresponsible and has no interest in Andy, who thinks his father is his "brother." Abby, should I tell Andy the truth about who is is? His mother doesn't want him to know because she's afraid it might upset him. I'm thinking about marrying Andy's mother and adopting the boy so he will be my legitimate son, even though a marriage now would be awkward because everybody (friends and neighbors) thinks we're married. Thank you for any advice you can give me. — WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR WITHHOLD: If you and Andy's mother love each other, a quiet wedding would seem appropriate. Adopt Andy, and at a later date, when he can handle the story of "who he is," tell him.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been divorced for a year. When we started having problems, we went to a marriage counselor in an effort to save our marriage for the sake of our children.

During this time I told my parents what was going on, and I told my husband to tell his parents. He refused to tell them, so they heard it from strangers and now they are blaming me.

His parents say that had they known we were considering divorce and needed counseling, they could have talked some sense into our heads and saved our marriage. I don't happen to agree with them, do you?

I still think it was my husband's place to tell his parents, and under no circumstances should we have turned to them for counseling. I would appreciate your views. — IRRECONCILABLE DIFFERENCES

DEAR DIFFERENCES: I agree. It was your husband's place to tell his parents. And regardless of how well-meaning parents are, they lack the objectivity required to mediate the domestic differences of their children.

DEAR ABBY: Most people, upon being introduced to someone, will say, "I am very pleased to meet you," or words to that effect. When parting, these same individuals will probably say, "I hope we meet again."

I realize these statements are merely a part of our social ritual and make us feel more comfortable than enduring total silence.

However, these statements are usually phony, hypocritical and even downright lies.

Do you have some recommended replacements? — A MEETER OF PEOPLE

DEAR MEETER: If your commitment to total integrity does not permit you to utter anything that is not absolutely sincere, upon being introduced to someone whom you are not particularly pleased to meet, simply say "Hello."

And when you depart, with no desire to see that person again, say "Goodbye."

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's new booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif.,90038.)

Suggestions for removing wallpaper with steam

By AL CARRELL

One of the most miserable, dirty, rotten jobs that a do-it-yourselfer is ever faced with is that of removing wallpaper. That's why the new strippable wallpaper is so popular and so necessary.

In theory, just get some steam or hot water to penetrate the wallcovering. This softens up the old wallpaper paste, and the paper just peels off. It doesn't always work quite that easily ... if ever.

Many people do swear by the steamer method. You can rent these units at either a tool rental place or often from a wallpaper dealer. I have found that a bucket of very hot water to which some detergent has been added works just about as well. Incidentally, the detergent acts as a wetting agent and helps to hold the moisture on the surface — which aids in penetration. A paint roller is a good way to apply the hot water. It puts it on fast and will reach up to the ceiling without your having to climb a ladder.

With either way, the moisture must penetrate the surface. This means that some waterproof surfaces have to be scored to allow for this. A utility knife will do. However, one reader suggested the use of a handsaw raked across. This does well because each tooth cuts into the surface. Another suggestion was to use a tracing wheel from the sewing room.

Other folks have come up with soaking solutions and other paper stripping tricks that I'd like to pass along to you.

+ + +

Dear Al: Just before applying the very hot water to wallpaper to allow for stripping, I pour in a cup of vinegar and mix. This seems to help the hot water penetrate better, and also seems to soften the paste better. — W.K.

+ + +

Dear Al: I may have discovered the greatest thing since sliced bread. I find that by adding two tablespoons of powdered alum per gallon of hot water, you have a super wallpaper removing solution. I guess that after it soaks into the paste, it causes both paper and paste to shrink. This causes the paper to crack, and it's very easy to scrape off. I discovered this by accident when I dropped a styptic pencil in the water. It has alum in it, so I tried, and it has really been a boon to me. — G.W.

I have tried this twice and got semi-good results one time, and so-so the next.

+ + +

Dear Al: Add laundry starch to the hot water used for removing the wallpaper, and it will come off much more quickly. — P.A.

Dear Al: Because we had painted over the old wallpaper, I reasoned that the steam would not be able to go through the paint when it came time to strip off the wallcovering. I used a paint and varnish remover to get rid of the paint so I could then steam. Much to my surprise, the paint remover had penetrated all the way through the paint, and the paper and into the paste. The wallcovering came off almost by itself. — Mrs. J. O'B.

Always, at least try to find out if the covering is of the strippable variety. If you didn't put it up, or if you don't remember, start picking at any corner. Once you have a corner loose, if it's strippable, the entire panel will come off all in one piece. If it isn't strippable, I won't have to encourage you to make sure that the new wallcovering will be.

Sleepy Florida town once a tourist mecca

By WALTER PUTNAM
Associated Press Writer

GREEN COVE SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Before the railroad came, when the riverboat reigned and Florida was populated mainly by alligators and mosquitoes, this sleepy little town was a booming resort that drew tourists from thousands of miles to its treasured natural spring.

Regular steamboat service from Jacksonville brought elite 19th century visitors on the 25-mile trip down the St. Johns River to Green Cove, which boasted a half-dozen or more major hotels, and was known as "The Parlor City of the South."

It is said President Grover Cleveland once stayed at the Magnolia Hotel, which had rooms for 100 guests, and none other than P.T. Barnum helped enhance the town's image as "a watering hole for the rich."

The mineral spring, which even today bubbles clear, sulfurous water at a constant temperature of 78 degrees, was said to have remarkable curative powers. It fed several pools that were surrounded by wooden platforms and fences.

"This spring was supposed to cure just about anything that was wrong with you. People came from all over the country and from Europe for the baths," said Myrtice Truett, incoming chairman of the local history museum.

The Clarendon Hotel, another facility with accomodations for 100, had an exclusive contract to have spring water piped into its rooms, while the Alcazar in St. Augustine had bottled water shipped in and featured on its wine list, said Randy Rowell, another local history buff.

"Then the railroad came and the tourists went further south," Rowell said. "The hotels fell into decline. Some of them burned."

The railroad was the brainchild of Henry M. Flagler, a former Rockefeller partner who is credited with opening the rest of Florida's east coast to development.

In 1890, Flagler opened a steel bridge across the St. Johns at Jacksonville that enabled contemporary rail traffic to extend to St. Augustine and beyond.

With it waned an era of romance in Green Cove Springs.

The Clarendon burned around the turn of the century. It was replaced seven years later by the Qui-Si-Sana, whose developers constructed a spa beside the spring with a glass roof which a brochure at the time said was "100 feet square and covering 10 bathing pools ... "

"My first job in my life was playing (piano) in that hotel," said Belle Lazette, who at 86 is one of the few who remember Green Cove in its glory.

As a young girl, Mrs. Lazette took the riverboat to Jacksonville for music lessons.

"I used to get up at 6:30 every Saturday and take the first boat. I would return at 6:30 that evening. It took four hours to go to Jacksonville," she said. "The trip was just very relaxing. The boat would go back and forth across the river to deliver the mail. And they would stop at some points to take on wood for the boat."

It was an age of romance and sweethearts in a town of charming inns and houses, boardwalks, gardens, grassy parks and beautiful trees, she said.

"My name was carved on so many of those trees," she sighed.

The Depression marked the end of the resort trade for good. The building housing the Qui-Si-Sana still stands as an inn and antique store. But the spa was demolished when the Works Progress Administration built a new town hall on the edge of Spring Park.

Today, a municipal pool sits in the basin of the park, with moss-draped live oaks adorning the grassy banks. The pool is fed from the spring, which gushes 3,000 gallons a minute and has a visible depth of 28 feet.

A nearby sign reads, "No swimming, diving or wading allowed in the spring. Violators will be prosecuted."

City Manager William Vermilling said it's just too dangerous because of the underwater caverns below.

The only visitor to the depths of the spring is a police diver, who occasionally plunges in to clean it of beer cans and other debris cast by an unappreciative age.

Banana bread has great flavor

COFFEE BREAK

KEY LARGO BANANA BREAD

Use over-ripe bananas, if on hand, for great flavor

2 cups fork-stirred all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¾ teaspoon baking soda
½ cup (4-ounce stick) butter
1 cup sugar
2 large eggs
1 cup mashed ripe banana (two 6- to 7-inch-long bananas)
1 tablespoon water
1 cup coarsely broken walnuts

Stir together the flour, baking powder and baking soda. (No salt is called for.) Cream the butter and sugar, beat in the eggs, one at a time, until blended after each addition. Add the banana and water, beat until smooth. Add the flour mixture, beat gently only until smooth. Fold in the walnuts. Bake in a buttered 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 1 hour. (Loaf will crack.) Turn out on a wire rack and cool completely. May be sliced fairly thin if stored in a tightly closed plastic bag overnight. If kept for more than a few days, store in the refrigerator.

Brown refusal to appear increases Senate anger

By OTTO KREISHER
Copley News Service

SACRAMENTO — Gov. Brown set the stage for a possible legal confrontation with the Legislature Wednesday by refusing to appear before a Senate committee in response to a subpoena he said defies the constitutional separation of powers and "demeans and trivializes the legislative process."

Brown had been subpoenaed by Sen. Paul Carpenter, a rival for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate, to explain why he has refused to fire his controversial transportation director, Adriana Gianturco, as demanded by Carpenter's Select Committee on Transportation.

BUT BROWN refused to appear and had Attorney General George Deukmejian file a legal motion in Sacramento Superior Court to strike down the subpoena.

Senate President Pro Tempore David Roberti, D-Los Angeles, who has responded with anger at past perceived affronts to the Senate by Brown, said he was "going to be working to defuse the issue."

The members of Carpenter's select committee showed no anger when Carpenter informed them of Brown's refusal. Even Sen. Alfred Alquist, D-San Jose, a frequent Brown critic, said he did not think the governor could be forced to appear.

Although Carpenter insisted that he would continue his effort to force Brown's appearance before his committee, he appeared to have little support among other senators for a confrontation with the governor.

Carpenter, D-Cypress, said Brown's act was "really just another attempt to shield himself from unpleasant" situations and to offer "confusion and delay as a substitution for openness and honesty."

IN A LETTER sent to Carpenter and released to reporters, Brown said "neither the attorney general nor my legal staff can find a single judicial decision in the history of the United States in which a governor or president has ever been compelled to appear before a legislative or congressional committee."

Brown cited constitutional separation of power among the three branches of government which is based, he said, on "the principle that liberty is best ensured when power is shared."

"Your subpoena undermines both comity and historical precedent," Brown said. "Comity" is a favorite Brown word that means courteous behavior and cooperative agreements. Brown said the subpoena "demeans and trivializes the legislative process."

The attorney general's motion to quash Carpenter's subpoena said the effort to force Brown's appearance "is void, unlawful and of no force or effect in that there exists no constitutional or statutory provision authorizing the issuance of said subpoena on the governor."

The confrontation with Carpenter was the latest in a long series of battles between the Legislature and the Brown administration over Gianturco. The feisty CalTrans director has been blamed for a sharp reduction in highway construction spending and accused of losing federal highway grants and misusing state funds in keeping with an effort to bring a shift in emphasis from the private auto to mass transit.

ALTHOUGH Carpenter's select committee is charged with examining problems of transportation in Southern California, he ordered Gianturco to appear to explain why she overruled her engineers' decisions on the width of a bridge to be built in Mendocino County.

The Newspaper BIBLE

ALL CREATION AWAITS THE GREAT EVENT

So, dear brothers, you have no obligations whatever to your old sinful nature to do what it begs you to do. For if you keep on following it you are lost and will perish, but if through the power of the Holy Spirit you crush it and its evil deeds, you shall live. For all who are led by the Spirit of God are sons of God.

And so we should not be like cringing, fearful slaves, but we should behave like God's very own children, adopted into the bosom of His family, and calling to Him, "Father, Father." For His Holy Spirit speaks to us deep in our hearts, and tells us that we really are God's children. And since we are His children, we will share His treasures--for all God gives to His Son Jesus is now ours too. But if we are to share His glory, we must also share His suffering.

Yet what we suffer now is nothing compared to the glory He will give us later. For all creation is waiting patiently and hopefully for that future day when God will resurrect His children. For on that day thorns and thistles, sin, death, and decay--the things that overcame the world against its will at God's command--will all disappear, and the world around us will share in the glorious freedom from sin which God's children enjoy.

For we know that even the things of nature, like animals and plants, suffer in sickness and death as they await this great event. And even we Christians, although we have the Holy Spirit within us as a foretaste of future glory, also groan to be released from pain and suffering. We, too, wait anxiously for the day when God will give us our full rights as His children, including the new bodies He has promised us--bodies that will never be sick again and will never die.

Hotels, motels doing fine, association president says

By RAY STASZEWSKI
Copley News Service

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher admits that she is a Freddie Laker fan, but she offered no government bail-out aid to the collapsed no-frills airline.

But neither Laker Airways' bankruptcy nor its anticipated demise will matter much to U.S. innkeepers looking for foreign tourists coming to the United States from Europe this year, one U.S. hotel industry expert said.

"Had it occured three years ago, it would have had a dramatic impact" on travel to the United States, because Laker was the only low-price show in town, said Douglass L. Fontaine, president of the American Hotel & Motel Association, in an interview.

But because Laker's competition, "especially the Americans and the Germans," adjusted to the low-price, no-frills approach, "I don't see that it will have any negative impact" upon tourism, Fontaine added.

"I expect his business to be picked up by other airlines and so does the stock market because airline issues responded favorably to the news," he noted.

Laker's two lucrative holiday tour packaging divisions were sold by accountants Ernst & Whinney, who took over the airline after it went broke with debts of more than $376 million. The sale assures that the 120,000 to 130,000 people who had booked holidays with the two firms could regard their travel plans as safe.

The recent developments, which brought considerable stir in the worldwide travel industry, have not caused Fontaine to change his outlook for the nation's innkeepers this year.

The $30 billion domestic industry should see "slightly lower occupancy rates, but higher revenues in 1982," though the "biggest bugaboo is how people perceive the economy" this summer, he said.

That will depend on how the depth of the recession and high unemployment rates affect the individual, he said. But the major sunbelt areas will be "less vulnerable to the downturn," he added, noting that "we only have two or three months to go before the normal springtime urge to travel" will begin to be felt.

Fontaine owns and operates the 200-room $5 million La Font Inn in Pascagoula, Miss.

The amount of pleasure travel next summer also depends on what the individual is going to do with that extra discretionary income he will be getting as a result of the tax reduction next July, he added.

Inmate holds guards at bay with shotgun

By PAUL ALEXANDER
Associated Press Writer

MARION, Ohio (AP) — A prisoner who held county jail guards at bay with a smuggled shotgun for more than five hours after a thwarted escape attempt surrendered early today, authorities said.

Dennis Pounds, 32, handed over the gun and ended a siege in a cellblock where he was holed up with nine other prisoners, said Marion County Sheriff John Butterworth. Negotiators agreed to give him an unspecified medication and said his wife, Dixie, would be allowed to visit him.

Pounds was arrested in December in connection with a hostage incident at a Marion drug store. He has been undergoing mental evaluation prior to the setting of a trial date.

"This was an obvious attempt to get out of the jail," Butterworth said of the incident, which began at 9:30 p.m. Thursday.

He said Pounds somehow managed to receive a sawed-off shotgun in the jail and summoned Deputy Jeffery Holiday to the cellblock under the pretext there was a medical emergency.

However, Holiday sensed something was wrong and did not open the cellblock, leaving Pounds holed up inside with nine other prisoners.

At that point, Pounds fired the shotgun, missing Holiday but giving him minor powder burns. Holiday was treated at a hospital and released.

"From the outset, the other nine inmates did not take an active part" in the incident, the sheriff said, adding that no charges will be filed against them.

The medication Pounds had requested, which Butterworth would identify only as a "prescription drug," was administered by the Marion County jail physician after Pounds' surrender, the sheriff said.

Pounds had four shotgun shells when he surrendered, he said.

Butterworth said he plans to bring charges of attempted murder and possession of a firearm under disability against Pounds.

Pounds was to remain in the cellblock until after his wife visited him later this morning, then was to be placed in isolation, Butterworth said.

Although police and sheriff's department negotiators agreed to Pounds' demand that his wife be allowed to visit him, Butterworth said he has had visitation rights all along.

The sheriff said a breach of security enabled the shotgun to be smuggled into the jail. He said someone apparently crossed a fence on the north side of the jail and gave Pounds the gun through a window.

Pounds was arrested Dec. 31 after a 20-hour ordeal in which a 22-year-old woman was held hostage in a drugstore. A cocked pistol was held at her head and her captor threatened suicide during the incident, police said.

Pounds' mother, Kathy, and wife entered the drug store to talk with him. In the end, his mother unloaded the pistol and handed it to police.

A police chaplain, the Rev. Ed Hess, said Pounds used drugs in the pharmacy. The drug store incident began when police broke up an attempted robbery and arrested another man after an exchange of gunfire.

Pounds, who has been in and out of prisons since 1968, was charged with aggravated robbery, attempted aggravated murder, abduction, assault and possessing a weapon while under disability. He was jailed in lieu of $250,000 bond.

Prison records show he served 10 years on an Akron murder conviction. He was charged with first-degree murder in a stabbing death, but pleaded guilty to second-degree murder. He was sentenced in 1968 to life and paroled from the Marion Correctional Institute in 1978.

Defense repeatedly attacks insulin evidence

By JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Prosecution evidence that heiress Martha "Sunny" von Bulow had an abnormally high level of insulin in her blood when she collapsed into a lasting coma is weathering repeated attacks by her husband's defense team.

Laboratory technician Mary Brucker on Thursday corroborated earlier testimony that the test revealing the insulin was taken from blood drawn shortly after Mrs. von Bulow was rushed unconscious to Newport Hospital on Dec. 21, 1980.

Danish-born financial consultant Claus von Bulow is on trial in Superior Court on charges he injected his wife with insulin in efforts to kill her during Christmas visits to their Millionaires' Row mansion in 1979 and 1980.

Prosecutor Stephen Famiglietti said he would call more hospital technicians and clerks today to further refute defense lawyer Herald Fahringer's claim that a laboratory mix-up was responsible for the incriminating high insulin level.

Fahringer was unable to support his argument that the insulin test was done on blood taken after Mrs. von Bulow was treated with large amounts of glucose. He said that would raise the insulin level, invalidating evidence she might have been injected with the hormone that controls sugar in the blood. Mrs. von Bulow suffers low blood sugar.

Miss Brucker said Thursday she saw fellow laboratory technician Debra Azevedo prepare a vial of serum from the first batch of blood drawn from Mrs. von Bulow and marked it for shipment to a Boston laboratory for insulin tests.

"I saw her go over to the rack, take the serum, and put it in one of the small tubes we use to send samples out," Miss Brucker said.

She said when hospital technician Cheryl Edwards delivered the doctor's message calling for the insulin test on the original batch of blood, she did not have any other blood samples with her which could have been confused with the original blood.

The trial was stopped for a while Thursday while Judge Thomas Needham read from a satiric article in the Feb. 7 Boston Herald American that poked fun at the jurors.

The article, which clearly was labeled satire, said the mostly middle-class jury made off with "a small Rolls-Royce," polo ponies and other items during a tour of the von Bulow mansion. Von Bulow and the jury laughed, but Needham said he was angered and told the jurors they should consider libel charges.

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Azevedo said she was intimidated and confused by Fahringer when she told him before the trial she might not have separated all the original blood into serum with a centrifuge.

Under cross-examination, she denied Fahringer's contention that blood taken after the glucose treatment could have been confused with any of the original blood which might not have been separated into serum.

The defense says Mrs. von Bulow caused both comas herself by consuming large amounts of barbiturates and aspirin.

Judge not humored by satire

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — When Judge Thomas Needham stopped Claus von Bulow's attempted-murder trial to read a satire of the proceedings, the well-to-do defendant and the jury thought the humor quite rich. The judge did not.

A spoof in the Boston Herald American said "jurors collected more than evidence" during a visit to von Bulow's Millionaires' Row mansion here, making off with with "a chandelier, two Matisse prints, a small Rolls-Royce and two polo ponies."

Needham frowned over his half-rim eyeglasses as he held up the trial Thursday and read aloud from the newspaper. The fanciful account drew laughter from von Bulow, the jurors and spectators, but not from the judge.

Von Bulow, 55, is charged with twice trying to murder his heiress wife by injecting her with insulin during stays at the mansion, Clarendon Court. Martha "Sunny" von Bulow has been comatose for more than 13 months, allegedly as a result of the injections.

The jury, described as mostly middle class and not accustomed to seeing the trappings of a millionaire's mansion, toured Clarendon Court on Feb. 1.

The story was prominently labeled satire and "make believe" and appeared Feb. 7 on a page set aside each week for satire.

But Needham blasted it, saying the "article is somebody's idea of satire. Personally, ladies and gentlemen, I don't like it...I don't think sitting jurors should be the target of this kind of humor."

He added, "Whether it constitutes a libel to you members of the jury, I commend that to your collective thinking."

The story appeared under the headline, "A Satiric Look at the Week That Was," and included the disclaimer: "Everything on this page is make believe. The real world is not anything like this, except a little."

New tube defects found at plant

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — New and "very dramatic" defects showed up at the Ginna nuclear power plant shortly after federal regulators rejected a bid to reopen the plant, which had been closed since a radiation release, a utility official says.

A camera inspection revealed defects in water tubes inside the same steam generator that failed last month, leading to the brief release of radioactive steam and the shutdown of the plant, the official said Thursday night.

Although the tubes with defects had been out of use because they previously showed signs of weakness, one of them was severed and a piece was missing. Rochester Gas & Electric Corp. spokesman John Maier said it was possible the missing piece was loose in the steam generator, posing a damage threat to one or more of the generator's 3,259 other water tubes.

"The pictures are very dramatic," Maier said. "It looks like somebody went in with a hacksaw. Some of the tubes show severe denting and external degradation."

He said he didn't know what caused the damage, but indicated he mentioned a hacksaw only to provide a graphic description of the state of the tubes, not to imply that a hacksaw had done the damage.

The defects were found by cameras Wednesday night and Thursday, officials said. It was unclear from the pictures how many tubes were defective, officials said.

In a three-hour meeting Wednesday, utility officials had repeatedly assured Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff members the plant was safe to reopen. The NRC rejected the bid to reopen the plant.

Even if the NRC had approved reopening the plant, Maier said, the tests would have pointed out the new defects before it was restarted.

Maier, the company's vice president for electric and steam generation, had told the NRC staff Wednesday, "We're 99.99 percent sure — nothing is for absolutely sure — that we can run safely" until mid-May, when the plant was scheduled to be shut down for reloading of fuel.

All the damage discovered with cable-like fiber-optic cameras was in tubes that had been plugged because they showed signs of weakness. RG&E officials had previously considered all the plugged tubes to be "healthy" and incapable of causing problems.

The severed tube was found in the same area as the one that ruptured Jan. 25, Maier said.

The tube was one of many that carried hot radioactive water from the reactor through the generator, where it acted as a heat source and created steam. The rupture caused a brief release of radioactive steam into the atmosphere. In addition, the reactor was flooded with water as a safety measure and some of the water overflowed into a reactor sump.

The Ginna plant is 16 miles northeast of Rochester. The utility is spending $288,000 a day to buy replacement power because Ginna's two steam turbine generators provided half its power.

RG&E engineers have not been able to determine what caused the tube to rupture Jan. 25. They have theorized the nickel-alloy tube was weakened by the vibration from the flow of water in and around it.

However, the new damage was discovered in plugged tubes that did not carry water.

RG&E may have to remove sections of some tubes to test the metal and may search the steam generator to see if the severed tube's missing section can be found, Maier said.

A team of steam-generator specialists from Westinghouse Electric Corp., which designed the Ginna reactor, were to arrive today to study the new defects, he said.

Doctors say Kissinger doing well

BOSTON (AP) — Former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's recuperation from open-heart surgery was progressing normally today, with the diplomat talking to his wife Nancy and keeping up with world events, hospital officials said.

"He is fully awake, alert and resting comfortably," hospital spokesman Martin S. Bander said Thursday. "Dr. Kissinger is beginning to take some nourishment by mouth. His spirits are good."

The 58-year-old Nobel Peace Prize winner also "has been listening to the radio and keeping up with the news," Bander said.

Surgeons performed a 4½-hour triple bypass operation on Kissinger Wednesday to relieve clogged arteries around his heart.

Kissinger was listed in stable condition in the hospital's intensive care unit, Bander said. It was too early to tell when Kissinger could be moved to the hospital's general treatment section or when he can go home, Bander added.

Before the operation, doctors predicted Kissinger could go home by Feb. 24. But Kissinger said he was pushing for a Feb. 20 release.

The ex-diplomat was able to begin speaking Thursday after doctors removed a tube from his throat. The tube had been hooked to a respirator, which controlled Kissinger's breathing during the open heart surgery.

Members of Kissinger's medical team expressed satisfaction with the results of the operation and predicted a full recovery.

Kissinger's personal physician, Dr. W. Gerald Austen, said the patient will be watched carefully for complications such as infection or abnormal bleeding. But he said the risk of such problems was very small.

After a week of recuperation, Kissinger is expected to be able to move around his room for several minutes at a time.

Once the pain subsides, most patients begin long-term exercise programs, usually on a cycling machine or jogging.

Colorado District deliveries increase

BIG SPRING — January deliveries by the Colorado River Municipal Water District were up by nearly one-fifth over last year.

The total was 1.252 billion gallons of water, 202 million gallons more, or up by 19.21 percent.

The municipalities served by the district took 1,040,172,000 gallons, a gain of 17.35 percent over January 1981. This also was the first time in the district's three decades of operation that municipal deliveries passed the one billion gallon mark in January.

Although there was a disposition on the part of oil companies to reduce the volume of water used for secondary recovery, there was a substantial gain of 29.23 percent in reaching 211,969,328 gallons of water for this purpose. The reason was the availability of surface water by two operators, who took 50 million gallons more from this source.

During January, Big Spring used 238,509,000 gallons, up 28.66 percent; Midland, 255,520,000 gallons, down 7.72 percent (only part of Midland's supply comes from the district); San Angelo, 13,521,400 (San Angelo used no water from the district the previous January); Snyder, 69,364,000 gallons, up 12.03 percent; Stanton, 10,220,000 gallons, up 35.05 percent; and Odessa, 453,036,000 gallons, up 27.76 percent.

Environmentalists continue acid rain protests

By The Associated Press

Although five Greenpeace members in three states who climbed smokestacks to protest acid rain returned to the ground, the fight against the air pollution continued with the unveiling in Canada of a 18-foot-high billboard showing acid rain drenching the globe.

The Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain undraped the billboard Thursday night in Toronto.

The board was a replica of 10,000 posters that will be distributed across North America in a campaign to alert the public to the dangers of acid rain, which harms fish and plants. Environmentalists say rain can be turned acidic by sulfur dioxide emissions from power plants and factories.

"This is a message from 1 million Canadians to 200 million Americans," coalition president Jeff Shearer said as the curtain was drawn from the billboard Thursday night.

The poster shows acid rain pouring down the face of North America and seeping through a pair of hands holding the globe.

Protests in Madison, Ind., Conesville, Ohio, and San Miguel, Ariz., ended Thursday when the Greenpeace demonstrators climbed off their perches and were promptly arrested.

Davis Stewart and Claire O'Brien, both 31, were arrested on charges of criminal trespass when they stepped off a ladder attached to a 500-foot smokestack at the Magma Copper Co. smelter in San Miguel, 30 miles northeast of Tucson.

Stewart, a Denver tree surgeon, and Mrs. O'Brien, a Los Alamos, N.M., bookkeeper, had spent two nights on a narrow catwalk. Spokesman Wally Rosa said they came down because they were tired and had used up their respirator cartridges, which filtered out substances released by the smokestacks.

"It was kind of a horror show to be surrounded by all that bad air" for 60 hours, Stewart said.

In Conesville, Ohio, Bob Jacksy, 26, of Toledo, and James Greager, 25, of Ann Arbor, Mich., were arrested and taken to jail when they climbed down from near the top of an 805-foot smokestack on a Columbus & Southern Ohio Electric Co. plant.

"We could have stayed up there a week," said Greager, a full-time employee of Greenpeace, an environmental group.

They came down because they had made their point, Jacksy said. The pair had sneaked into the facility Monday.

The two men faced criminal trespass charges, which carry maximum penalties of $250 fines and 30-day jail sentences.

Plant manager Tom McClimans said the plant's operations were not interrupted by the presence of the two men dressed in orange survival suits sleeping in a tent and cooking on a camp stove.

"I'm relieved that it's over," McClimans said. "It's a sad state of affairs when people can choose the illegal means of making their point."

In Madison, Ind., a 27-year-old roofer from Seattle came down Thursday from a 650-foot smokestack at the Clifty Creek coal-fired power plant.

Jeff Pettersen had spent three nights in sub-freezing temperatures but was in good spirits, a Greenpeace spokesman said.

Pettersen was accompanied by James Stiles, 28, of Medford, Mass., when he scaled the smokestack on Monday, but Stiles came down after only a few hours.

Both were charged with criminal trespass. Pettersen was released on $1,000 bond Thursday.

Greenpeace did not stage the protests to close the plants, spokesman Jon Hinck said.

"We're trying to educate," Hinck said. "We're really not interested in disrupting."

He said the group wants to make sure the Clean Air Act, which is being reviewed by Congress, isn't weakened.

Greenpeace leaders say industrial emissions standards are inadequate.

Claimed abuse of juveniles upsets senators

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional testimony alleging sexual abuse, torture and drugs in Oklahoma's juvenile care institutions is giving the state an unfair "black eye," say Oklahoma's two senators.

Sens. David L. Boren, a Democrat, and Don Nickles, a Republican, said a hearing Thursday before the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on juvenile justice was arranged in haste without a chance for state officials to respond.

But Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., defended public airing of the charges on grounds such serious allegations demand prompt attention. He said he plans to give state officials and workers at the institutions the opportunity to respond.

Specter said he had not assumed Oklahoma officials would refuse to cooperate in exposing abuses in the state's institutions.

Lloyd E. Rader, 75, head of the Oklahoma Department of Human Services since 1951, was invited to testify but declined because he was only given 24 hours notice, a subcommittee aide said. The panel hopes to arrange a later appearance by Rader.

HE HAS DENIED any cover-up, saying his department, which took over direction of the juvenile centers in 1961, has dealt promptly with abuses and has eliminated them.

Gov. George Nigh of Oklahoma has instructed the state bureau of investigation to investigate all charges involving the institutions.

The key witness Thursday was William Treanor, consultant to the subcommittee, who provided lurid testimony based on interviews with four young people who said they were mistreated as recent inmates in the institutions.

He said the four had been institutionalized as runaways or abandoned children. None had been accused of any crimes.

Nickles said the hearing was "giving a black eye to the state of Oklahoma. I'm troubled that your hearing is premature. We're hearing only one side."

"It does seem to me rather strange that we're having an open session on this without knowing" if it's the full story, said Boren.

The hearing followed published reports by the Gannett News Service which charged widespread mistreatment, prostitution and drug trafficking in the Oklahoma juvenile centers.

Treanor said his own investigation pursued leads from the news articles and other sources.

One former inmate, Cynthia Halbert, 19, said she was held down and beaten at the Whitaker juvenile center and was "shackled to the bed hand and foot for 14 days and had to beg to go to the bathroom," Treanor said.

Karen White, 20, another former runaway, was quoted by Treanor as saying her hands had been tied behind her back and her feet bound for 24 hours as punishment for getting into a fight with another girl. The young woman said many drugs, particularly LSD, were generally available at Whitaker.

HE ALSO TESTIFIED that Mike Estelle, 13, told him that a guard had broken his arm because he stayed up watching television, refusing to go to bed on time.

Company hires former astronauts

HOUSTON (AP) — Three former high-ranking space agency officials, including astronaut Donald K. "Deke" Slayton, have been hired by a private company trying to launch satellites for a profit.

The Houston-based company, Space Services Inc., tried unsuccessfully last August to launch a test rocket. It blew up on the launch pad, but company officials said they would try again later.

Space Services spokesman Walt Penning said Thursday the company has hired Slayton, Maxine Faget and Lee Scherer. Faget was formerly NASA's chief engineer, and Scherer is a former director of the Kennedy Space Center.

Slayton, 57, who announced his retirement from the space agency earlier this month, was one of seven military pilots selected as original astronauts in 1959. He later became director of flight crew operations for Gemini, Apollo and Skylab missions, selecting and training flight crews.

In 1975, he piloted the first international manned mission, Apollo-Soyuz, spending 10 days in orbit.

Video system makes claim verifications easier

By BURR SNIDER
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — "Nobody should have to go through what we went through," says Juanita King of the adversity that struck her family.

The expensive home of Juanita and Kenneth King, a San Francisco detective, burnt to the ground three years ago in a fire almost surely set by an arsonist.

"After the fire, we had a horrible time with the insurance companies in trying to substantiate claims on our lost household goods and possessions," says Juanita King. "You just can't comprehend the horrendous task of trying to construct an inventory after a disaster. Three years later, we're still in litigation over it. We were under-insured by $130,000.

"It's not a question of an insurance company not accepting your word," she said. "It's just that they want substantiation for your claims. How many people can provide that?"

The Kings estimate that most people usually lose recompensation on at least a third of their possessions after a disaster. But in fighting their way out of their own troubles, they started a business called "Advanced Photo-Verification Systems," which provides families with a complete video, photographic and written record of their premises and their valuables.

These records provide police and insurance companies with an accurate report of the extent of losses in the event of disasters such as fire, burglary or property damage.

The King's video-verification idea is a simple, effective procedure. When a client contracts for the service the fee is set on an hourly basis and usually runs from $150 to $350. Ken King, who gained his video expertise working on the stolen property "sting" detail for the San Francisco Police Department, brings his video system to the property and walks through the premises, inside and out, filming everything of value as the homeowner narrates a description of each item.

For valuable items, such as jewelry and silverware, additional still photography is used as a backup. The Kings advise that anything that can be marked be engraved with the owner's driver's license number.

Patches assure certifications

AUSTIN — A new shoulder patch system now used by the Railroad Commission will help the public make sure they are dealing with qualified, certified operators in the liquefied petroleum gas industry.

The blue and yellow patches are presented to licensed operators in the industry when they complete exams given by the Liquefied Petroleum Gas Division of the Commission. The exams are required by the Commission to ensure that operators have a knowledge of safety procedures when handling lp-gas.

"It is our hope to get the public to go to qualified, licensed operators for their work and to ensure good, quality work and safety, which is our primary interest," LPG Division Director Hugh Keepers said.

The patches are worn on the left shoulder. Bars under the patch indicate the specific jobs an individual is certified to perform. Job-related bars are given to those who perform motor fuel carburetion, cylinder filling, and service and installation. Bars are also given to certified delivery truck drivers and transport drivers.

"As a state agency charged with safeguarding the ultimate consumers of lp-gas, we hope to point out to the public that those performing work in this industry must first study and take a written exam and that the companies themselves must be licensed by the Railroad Commission," Keepers said.

The LPG Division of the Railroad Commission regulates the safe handling of liquefied petroleum gas.

Penicillin-like drug available to doctors

DENVER (AP) — A new antibiotic which is related to penicillin but doesn't have the serious side effects of some antibiotics could be a breakthrough for seriously ill patients, a researcher says.

Dr. Steven R. Mostow, chief of infectious disease at Denver General Hospital, announced the availability of the drug, piperacillin sodium, at a news conference earlier this week.

The news conference was telecast in nine cities by the manufacturer, Lederle Laboratories, which received final approval to market the drug just over a month ago.

Mostow said 26 seriously ill people — "these were patients who were in real deep trouble" — received the drug at Denver General and survived.

For the seriously ill, he said, piperacillin — which is chemically related to penicillin — is a vast improvement over previously available antibiotics. Many antibiotics used in large doses over a long period of time can cause deafness and kidney damage, he said. Piperacillin, which goes by the trade name Pipracil, doesn't, Mostow said.

The drug was developed by the Toyama Chemical Co. of Tokyo and tested in 23 countries by Lederle before receiving Food and Drug Administration approval for use in the United States.

Physicians are being encouraged to reserve the antibiotic for hard-to-treat, seriously ill hospital patients. Wide-scale use of any antibiotic can create drug-resistant strains, Mostow said.

The drug already has proven particularly effective in treating pneumonia, urinary tract infections and septicemia, an often-lethal type of blood poisoning, Mostow said.

It also appears to be somewhat effective in treating penicillin-resistant gonorrhea, he said, and likely future uses include administering it to organ transplant patients, who are very susceptible to infections, and to patients who have impaired disease-fighting immune systems.

MC races by Howard, 100-87

Wilson rouses slumbering Chaps

BY TED BATTLES
R-T Sports Editor

All-WJCC last year, Puntus Wilson was All-World Thursday night as he turned what began as a lethargic Midland College performance into a rousing 100-87 win over Howard College at Chaparral Center Thursday night.

The Chaparrals maintained a two-game Western Junior College Conference lead over Amarillo College, a 77-62 winner over Frank Phillips College, and widened the breach over third place Howard to four games.

Wilson was the catalyst for the Chaparrals second half revival, scoring 29 points, but that was almost incidental to the rest of his game.

MC lagged 49-46 at half and had trailed by as many as six, 42-36, in the opening 20 minutes. It looked like the natural letdown after Monday's emotional wringer against Amarillo.

HOWARD still held a 56-52 lead five minutes into the second half when Wilson took charge.

His jumper cut it to two and then two successive steals led to a five point spurt in less than 30 seconds time as MC jumped in front 59-56 and never looked back, widening the lead to 86-76 with 3:43 left.

Wilson, who hit six of 11 in the first half and blocked three shots, was 7 of 10 from the field in the second half. His spurt early in the second half seemed to bring the Chaps to life.

"It was as though he looked around at what was happening in the game and decided, 'Hey, I've got to do it.' And he did it all, steals, blocked shots, rebounds and scoring," Coach Jerry Stone said.

If Wilson, who played his high school ball at Dallas' South Oak Cliff, wants to go home next year after he graduates from MC, he couldn't have picked a better night to display his multiple talents. SMU Coach Dave Bliss, who utilized his off night to fly into Midland for the game, was in the stands watching Wilson's peformance.

FIVE-SIX Spud Webb supplied a 21 point offensive kick, sinking nine of 16 as the Chaps hit a smoking 64 per cent of their shots from the field. Six-six Chester Smith ripped 19 points worth of cords and Lance McCain had 14.

Howard outshot Midland 59 to 58 percent in the first half, but when the Chaps made things difficult for 6-6 Nathan Givens in the second half, 4-of-10, the Hawks made only 16 of 32.

In the first half, HC led by as many as six, and Midland held a 23-18 lead before falling behind. The score was tied 14 times in the opening 20 minutes. Howard did suffer a loss in the first half when starter Reggie Childress limped off the court for the night after having scored nine points.

In storming from behind in the last half, Midland raised its record to 22-5 for the season with its 13th straight win and boosted their WJCC record to 13-1.

Howard, meanwhile, slipped to 19-7 and 9-5 in WJCC. The Hawks had been idle since beating NMMI 81-70 Saturday night.

In a preliminary game, the MC Booster Club outgunned Howard, 99-83 as MC AD Delnor Poss scored 29 points and Quincy Wallace had 28. Jerry Alanez had 39 for the Hawks.

MC returns to action Monday in Borger against Frank Phillips and plays only one of its final four games at home.

Odessa shatters Midland's hopes

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE

The Midland High Lady Bulldogs received a shattering setback that severely injured their title hopes Thursday night when Odessa High came into the MHS gym and left with a 40-39 upset victory in District 5-5A basketball action.

That loss, combined with an Abilene High 52-39 victory over San Angelo, dropped MHS to two games behind the unbeaten Eagles with a 4-2 record, and with only two games left in the second half race, the Bulldogs can now only hope to tie for the crown. One more MHS loss or an AHS victory next week, and the Bulldogs' season is over.

ODESSA HIGH'S Bronchos caught Midland High on an off night. The Bulldogs had several opportunities to win , but failed to capitalize. Fouls to three key players plus a lack of shooting from both the line and the field proved to be too much to handle as OHS posted s first victory in the second half race.

The slow-scoring tempo of the game became the mode of play from the very beginning. The Bulldogs got the first bucket of the night, a five-footer by Sheila Christian with 7:22 left in the first quarter. OHS tied the score for the first of seven times a minute later when Karen Wallace scored from under the bucket.

THEN CAME a dry spell of nearly four minutes before Odessa broke the ice with 2:52 left on a five-footer by Karen George. In the final 1:37 of the first quarter, MHS got points from Christian, Sharon Mendenhall and Rebecca Caton to take a 7-4 lead.

In the second quarter the Bulldogs increased their lead to 11-4 before the Bronchos came back to take a 12-11 lead. MHS ended the half with a 17-15.

Behind 30-23, OHS rallied to pull within three at the end of the frame, 32-29.

The Bronchos went up by a 35-32 early in the fourth quarter and it wasn't until the 2:20 mark that the Bulldogs were able to knot the game for the final time at 37-37 on a 15-foot shot by Janice Littlefield. OHS countered with a free throw by George five seconds later to go up 38-37.

Cindy Besek put MHS back on top a minute later with a pair of free throws for a 39-38 lead. Odessa got its final points from Wallace when she got the ball under the basket and put it up for the 40-39 final score with 58 seconds left to play.

THE BULLDOGS missed one opportunity regain the lead, but regained possession with 14 seconds left on a charging call. Midland was setting up a shot when Mellonee Rheams tied up Griffen forcing a jump. Griffen tipped the ball to Missy Larremore with six seconds left and Larremore put up a shot and missed. Mendenhall pulled down the rebound for the Bulldogs and put up a desperate shot through double coverage that failed to go through when the buzzer went off giving OHS the victory.

"We weren't any good at the free throw line and we didn't play well," said MHS coach Jane Young, "but we didn't give up either. We played as hard as we could. I thought Odessa did a good job.

Wallace and George led the Bronchos in scoring with 12 points each while MHS had Littlefield with seven and Christian and Parker with six each.

Time running out on Rebels, Bulldogs in 5-5A

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Time is running out for the Midland Lee Rebels and the Midland High Bulldogs.

Even though three games are left on the District 5-5A basketball schedule for each team, the odds that either one could claim at least part of the second half title alternate from slim to dim depending on which team you look at.

The Rebels are 2-2 in the second half and can still share part of the crown by winning their final three games. But even that won't guarantee anything because San Angelo is pretty at 4-0 while Abilene High and Odessa Permian are 3-1.

THE BULLDOGS (1-3) hold little hope of sharing the crown even by winning their final three.Too many teams above would have to lose everything in sight for MHS to catch up.

Even though things look dark for Lee and MHS now, it doesn't mean that their seasons will end with the final regular season game. They could continue into a 5-5A playoff, if San Angelo can continue to win. If the Bobcats win outright or share it with Odessa Permian, it would cause a four- or possibly five-team playoff. If Abilene High should end up on top of the second half standings, then it's over because the Eagles shared the first half crown with Lee and MHS and would advance to the bi-district playoffs by virtue of a better performance in the two halves.

TONIGHT, THE Rebels have a tough task as host to the Odessa Permian Panthers, one of two teams to defeat Lee in the first half race. Tipoff is scheduled for 8 p.m. at Chaparral Center.

Permian needs a win even more than Lee if Mojo hopes to stay alive in the second half. The Panthers finished out of the running in the first half and could force a playoff by winning the second half title outright or sharing it with San Angelo.

"We have a terrific rivalry built up between Lee and Permian," said Rebel head coach Paul Stueckler, "it's almost like our rivalry with Midland High. Emotions in the game get really high and that kind of game can get real exciting. I don't know why the rivalry is that high, but it is. We've had some great games down through the years."

In the first meeting this season, Permian overcame a Lee first half lead to post a 64-56 victory. Mojo got a strong effort from 6-foot-8 center Mike Woolley with 21 points and Stueckler feels his Rebels will have to stop him, Terry Anderson and Billy Brown in this second matchup.

"They've been their top players all year," said Stueckler.

It will be Lee's big man, 6-foot-6 postman Kenneth Brown, who will have the job of stopping Permian's inside game to Woolley.

Andre Van Buren and Alvin Dunson could be strong scoring factors for Lee as they lead the team with 16.5 and 16.1 averages respectively. Randy Pepper (8.7), Barry Blackwell (7.6) and Brown (7.7) are also capable of connecting for big points.

The Rebels should be at full strength for Permian. "Everybody is healthy," said Stueckler. "At least they were fine when I saw them yesterday (Wednesday). I haven't seen them today but I expect them to be ok."

MIDLAND HIGH has been hit with a rash of troubles since the start of the second half, losing three-of-four games.

"There's no way we're going to have any impact on the second half race whatsoever," said MHS coach Jack Stephenson. "We'll try to get a little better over the next three games and hope we get lucky and get into the playoffs."

And with his team's chances of the playoffs resting with San Angelo, is Stephenson rooting for a San Angelo win?

"I'd be a fool not to," he said. "It's the only chance we've got. San Angelo is a good team and I think there are four teams that are pretty good. All we can do now is play our best and try and be ready if the chance comes.

Tonight the Bulldogs will take on Odessa High and according to Stephenson, his Bulldogs will have to stop the Bronchos' big men, Jimmy Gilliland and Tommy Stahl.

"We've got to control those two guys," he said.

MHS will be throwing the scoring talents of Preston Robertson, Don Sharnowski, Raymond Parker, and Jim Gunnels at the Bronchos. Robertson is leading the team in scoring with a 19.2 average while Sharnowski is scoring at a 13.6 rate; Parker at 12.5 and Gunnels at 9.5, the highest average he's had all season.

Elsewhere around the 5-5A tonight, San Angelo will take on Abilene High and Abilene Cooper will play Big Spring.

Baylor upsets No. 8 Arkansas

Spooks strike again

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

WACO, Texas (AP) - That good ole Baylor haunted basketball house — the Heart 'O Texas Coliseum — brought down another Top 10 team Thursday night.

With senior Terry Teagle dazzling three pro scouts, a crowd of 9,600 fans, and Eddie Sutton himself, the Bears bounced the No. 8 ranked Razorbacks 56-55 in overtime.

Arkansas shouldn't feel bad. It happened to Texas when the Longhorns were No. 5-ranked. They lost the game and forward Mike Wacker for the year with an injury.

Texas A&M, leading the Southwest Conference at the time, had to sit through a two-hour power-failure delay and tumbled.

Teagle, hitting 17 of 23 points including 8 in a row at one stretch, scored 36 points against the Razorbacks.

It was the most points allowed by a Sutton-coached Razorback team since Texas Tech's Rick Bullock hit 44 against the 'Hogs in the 1976 SWC postseason tournament.

The loss dropped the SWC-leading Razorbacks to 17-4 for the year and 8-3 in the league, a game ahead of Texas A&M.

Baylor jumped to 14-8 and 7-5 for the season, good for a third place tie with Texas Christian.

Lee opened up a lead in the third quarter by outscoring Permian 19-11 for a 52-44 advantage and won the fourth quarter battle 20-15 to gain the final margin of victory.

The win moves Lee into a tie for second place with San Angelo and Midland High at 4-2 in the second half race. Abilene High is on top of the standings at 6-0.

The Lady Rebels got power-scoring from Shun Harris and Maudie Akins with 22 points each while Suzanne McGaha added another 10. Permian's Jana Davis led Mojo with 14 while LuAnn Smith added 13.

Because of what's in basement, Holland is cage genius

By THOMAS BOSWELL
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Most coaches have something up their sleeve. Not Terry Holland of the University of Virginia. As they say here in the shadow of the Blue Ridge Mountains, "Terry's got somethin' down his basement."

The something is really a someone — Ralph Sampson.

Before Sampson decided to matriculate 61 miles down the road from Harrisonburg, Va. in Charlottesville, Holland was a pretty smart coach. Now, he's a fona fide genius.

A basketball experiment is being conducted here in University Hall. The question is: what happens when a tweedy, think-tank coach and his gritty team suddenly possess The Next Great Player on Earth?

The answer? The Cavaliers, despite losing stars Jeff Lamp and Lee Raker to graduation, are 22-1, and were ranked No. 1 in both wire service polls for the first time in the school's history.

VIRGINIA IS almost equal parts Sampson and Holland. Now, since Sampson has made the Holland family basement his junior year residence, they're living in the same house. Sampson, of course, is the indispensable half; after all, Holland lost 103 games in 10 seasons before Sampson came along. However, it's Holland's presence, his style, that gives the current Virginia mixture its pleasant piquancy.

At 39, Holland is a man at one with his place. When the chilly winter fog rolls into the Charlottesville hills, hanging so low that you don't have to be 7 feet 4 to have your head in the clouds, Holland thinks that's a perfect day to go running with his childhood sweetheart, his wife Ann.

"A small-town kid," Holland says of himself, adding that, to him, Charlottesville seems as large a place as he would ever feel comfortable.

Slim as a rim and nearly as fit as when he grew up in Clinton, N.C., he captained Davidson College, (N.C.), to a 22-4 record and led the nation in shooting accuracy (63 percent) in 1964. The 6-foot-7 Holland is a study in Southern gentlemanly dignity.

HIS SENTENCES, spoken languidly with a drawl, roll off complete with subordinate clauses, subjunctive moods and enough commas for a Russian novel. In everything, his penchant is for analytical thinking.

He daydreams about creating a total game-situation environment — complete with wide-screen TV, earphones, the smell of popcorn and canned crowd roars — in which a player could sit alone watching films of himself and "actually practice physically while he's mentally rehearsing as well...

"If you can visualize yourself in living color, then your body actually sends out nerve impulses to the muscles ... the muscles react, they respond, they jump ... nerve impulses follow those pathways, and the more you visualize yourself doing something correctly, the more you're reinforcing those pathways."

Holland's styled hair is heading toward Johnny Carson pepper-and-salt — a scalp a politician might kill for. Yet Holland is as without charisma as he is without vanity. He almost never inspires fear; even in the midst of the constant referee-nagging funks that are an ugly trademark, it's hard to imagine that Holland could stay mad — if he's really mad at all — for long.

During games, even his strongest emotions are, like as not, part of the game plan.

OF A coach's ingrained panic as his team blows a lead, he says, "I'm convinced no matter how you hide it, in some cases it has to come through. So the first thing you have to do is to prepare yourself for the different eventualities ... and how you're going to cover 'em up and convince yourself that they're not disasters (so the team doesn't sense panic)."

Of a chewing out of his team last week against North Carolina, he says, "standard techniques ... I just hollered at 'em. I asked them very simply, 'Is anybody here tired? Dammit, you're playin' like you're tired. Get your pants back out there and play basketball.' That makes them think about me and not the score ... "

It charms Holland that this year's team senses his knack for psychological manipulation and works with it, like a suggestible hypnotic subject. "It's almost like they know the games that I have to play as a coach and are able to play the game, too."

Holland's trump may be his ability to balance a coach's critical talent for tearing a game down into its component parts with a psychologist's gift for constructive prodding. Holland forced himself to stop watching game films at home with Sampson because, he says, after one rec room session, his wife told him, "I can't believe how many negative comments you make to a guy who's just played a great game."

LIKE HIPPOCRATES, Holland's motto is, "First, do no harm." Before Carolina, Holland and his coaches had begun assembling a film composite of the team's sins in blowing a nine-point lead in an earlier game. Holland recalls suddenly saying, "Wait a minute ... for this team at this time, we don't need that."

San Diego looms as Montreal again

Dick Williams must have left Midland happy. Ozzie Smith, his recalcitrant shortstop, had agreed to a trade.

Williams, in the Tall City as one of the speakers at the Sports Banquet, had received word that Smith was on the verge of capitulating, which meant Williams soon would be confronted with the headache of exchange shortstop Garry Templeton. Only, Williams didn't regard it in that way.

The San Diego Padres' newest manager figured Templeton just might speed along the Padres' development program and the last thing he expects is trouble from Garry, despite the obscene gestures and disappearances that caused Garry grief in St. Louis.

"ACTUALLY, Garry is elated about the prospect of playing in San Diego," says Williams. "He doesn't like Astroturf and he doesn't like St. Louis and he lives in California. So everything is in our favor. We don't have Astroturf and California is home for him."

Williams said that Templeton had been put through the ringer by Padres' medics and come through all mental and physical tests with flying colors.

CAN WILLIAMS do in San Diego what he did previously in Boston, Oakland and Montreal?

"I'd say the situation is similar to all three previous places when I took over," he said.

"When I took over at Oakland, the A's had finished second the year before, but it was nine games behind the Twins. At Montreal, the team had never been over .500."

Then along came Dawson, Valentine and Cromartie to give Montreal one of the best young outfields in the National League and Gary Carter has emerged as the league's top catcher.

"At San Diego we have similar promising young players and in Terry Kennedy, we have something I didn't have at Montreal, a catcher with a full season under his belt. Carter had been platooned before I got there and never had a full season."

Williams also is high on third baseman Luis Salazar, whom he regards as a .300 hitting third baseman, and Juan Benitez, a second baseman. At first he will have Broderick Perkins and, of course, Templeton completes his infield.

Williams is so optimistic that he believes Chicago, also in the process of an overhaul under the hand of Dallas Green, a proven winner, just may be meeting San Diego for the National League championship not too many years in the future.

THAT'S ALL fine, but can San Diego compete for super stars, like

Dave Winfield who was lured to New York by big money? "It's not the money," says Williams, "It's the New York market that is hard to compete against. I think my owner (Ray Kroc) has 10 times the money George Steinbrenner has if it comes to a bidding war."

After his dismissal at Montreal late last summer, Williams talked with the Braves, Mets and Steinbrenner, but eventually picked San Diego because "it was the best offer. They have a good farm system and it is not a must win situation. I'll have time there."

The one place Williams failed to produce was with the Angels, where he learned the importance of having time. "That was before Gene Autry began spending money for free agents." He lasted only a year.

His greatest success came at Oakland where the A's were the dynasty of the 1970s and what was it like working with Charles O. Finley? Williams admits Finley was one who "bordered on that fine line that separates geniuses from idiots", but Dick didn't feel he was all that tough.

"I managed three full years for Charley, longer than any one else." It was negotiations with Steinbrenner that ruptured relations, just as it did at Montreal.

"My job at Oakland was made easier by Charley in that the players hated the owner and not the manager.

"BUT CHARLEY made contributions that have revolutionized baseball...like those multicolored uniforms that everybody, including myself, used to laugh at. Now everybody has them. He also suggested holding the All-Star game at night and weekday World Series games at night and after some opposition, they all came to pass and have been wonderful for the exposure of baseball. He pushed for the DH, which kept hitters like Hank Aaron, Rico Carty and Al Kaline around for fans to enjoy years after they would have been forced to hang up their spikes. That was good for the fans."

Okay, so Finley was an imaginative pussey cat...so what about that other Oakland aggravation, Reggie Jackson? Everybody knows he's nothing but trouble.

"Reggie is as good a clutch performer as there is in baseball. I never had a problem with him in three years. Reggie always busted his tail for me."

Despite friction it functioned

They're breaking up that old LA gang

BY MELVIN DURSLAG
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES – It was a secret ill-concealed that affection was less than heart-rending among the celebrated Dodger infield that played together a record nine years.

One group embraced Davey Lopes, Ron Cey and Billy Russell. The other comprised Steve Garvey.

Along the way, management suspected that the problem, in part, could be traced to the wives, who formed two factions, too. But, whatever the history, love didn't abound.

Preparing his departure from Los Angeles to Oakland, where he has been taken to the bosom of Billy Martin, Lopes acknowledges readily that a factional split existed, but it strengthens his theory that fondness for one another is beside the point in the commission of one's job in baseball.

"WE DIDN'T hit if off personality-wise," he says, referring to his relationship with Garvey, "but all of us had something that was more important. And that was respect for each other. We weren't the first group to have personality differences. But we never would have made it as long as we did without mutual respect."

Tinkers, Evers and Chance were renowned for their personality differences. But they comprised the most distinguished double-play combination in baseball.

It was a source of great concern to Tom Lasorda that three-fourths of his infield didn't take to its heart the other fourth. Tom brooded over it, feeling at times that Lopes, Cey and Russell detached themselves from Garvey for cause not entirely just.

But the point Lopes makes in the afterglow dismisses the problem as moot. Committed to the job in baseball, even for nine years, one needn't concern himself with personalities.

With a twinge of nostalgia, Lopes leaves the Dodgers, the only organization for which he has worked. It was 14 years ago that he left the campus at Washburn College in Topeka, yielding to more treasure than he thought was buried in the tombs of Egypt.

THE DODGERS gave him a $10,000 bonus, and $500 a month, to join their farm at Daytona Beach. Idly, Dave dreamed of the day he would have his mother out of the factories and out of the housecleaning jobs she had undertaken to support 10 children in South Providence. R.I.

His late father, he recalls, had taken off early, leaving the responsibility for sustenance to the mother and to Dave's three older sisters.

Lopes doesn't see his case as unique. When the sideline camera at a football game shifts to a black player, who calls out "Hi, Momma," there is a reason for it.

Davey Lopes, the first to go...

"In most cases," says Dave, "the old man has taken off, leaving the burden to the mother. When this happens in your house, you develop strong ties that never leave you."

It always was the hope of Lopes that he would go to the finish with the Dodgers, especially since he will turn 36 in May and held a contract for three more years.

But he is bright enough to recognize that sentimentality in baseball isn't suffocating. Nor is kindness overwhelming among those who follow the sport or those who write about it.

THE SLIGHTEST slippage – and cries of vagrant are heard. The theft of 77 bases in one year and the smshing of 28 homers in another are memories lost amid demands to rid the scene of this aging baggage.

Since the Dodgers don't run a public philanthropy, and since they are on the hook for upward of a million dollars in an inviolable contract, they understandably are delighted to shift the responsibility of Lopes' pay to Levi-Strauss, which operates the A's and doesn't worry about losing its pants.

By the terms of his agreement, Lopes could have insisted upon staying with the Dodgers and getting paid. But he is a sensitive soul and reacted negatively to the prospect of sitting on the bench while his place was taken by a 22-year-old, Steve Sax.

"NO ONE likes to be rejected," says Dave, "but it is a fact of life in this business. You have to be mature enough to udnerstand the ground rules. Going to the A's, I figure, not only will keep me on the field, but will widen my education. Since I want to manage some day, I feel there is a lot I am able to learn from Billy Martin."

"How effective are you as a player right now?" Dave was asked.

"I can still run," he responded, "and Billy likes a running team. I feel he's going to get some mileage out of me."

Since Billy obviously feels so, too, it will be interesting to see whether the Dodgers have guessed right on Sax. For Garvey, at least, it will be someone in the infield to talk to.

Busceme may withdraw

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Manager Hugh Benbow said he will withdraw challenger Bubba Busceme from Saturday's title fight against World Boxing Council lightweight champion Alexis Arguello if the fight is locally televised.

"A lot of people borrowed money to come see Bubba fight the best fighter in the world pound-for-pound, because they were told that was the only way they would get to see the fight," Benbow said. "Where I come from a man's word is his bond and I'm not going to doublecross these people who have been so nice to Bubba."

The fight is scheduled to be nationally televised by CBS, but blacked out within a 150-mile radius of the Beaumont Civic Center. Benbow was angered by a clause in the television contract that could lift the blackout.

Larry Beaulieu, executive news director of KFDM-TV, CBS's Beaumont affiliate, said he also believed the fight could be televised locally if it is sold out.

"It is our understanding with CBS that their contract...includes a provision for the blackout to be lifted if there is a sellout 24 hours before the fight," Beaulieu said.

Banks quits at UTEP

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Ted Banks, who built a track dynasty at the University of Texas at El Paso, is leaving the school Feb. 21 to take a job with Converse Shoe Co.

Banks announced his departure Thursday, saying that cuts in the school's athletic budget had triggered the decision to leave coaching.

UTEP's athletic budget is troubled, mostly because the school has had trouble selling tickets to its football games — normally the biggest moneymaker. UTEP's football program has been ranked as one of the worst in the country with a 1-10 record last season.

Banks said he was told that as much as $56,000 could be cut from the track team's $250,000 budget.

"The travel budget would be hurt," Banks said. "You can't get all the people around for that.

"I had a meeting with the administration and I told them that if they couldn't guarantee me more money than that, then we couldn't win and the program would suffer," he said. "I didn't want to be here when that happens."

UTEP athletic director Ed Swartz said Banks' assistant, John Wedel, would take over the coaching duties until summer, when a new coach will be named.

Eagles clinch 5-5A tie

In District 5-5A play Tuesday night, unbeaten Abilene High clinched at least a tie for the second half crown by disposing of San Angelo 52-39 on the Eagle' home court while Big Spring knocked off Abilene Cooper 58-35.

Abilene High got 17 points from Trach Hubbard and Sonya Roberts enroute to the win while Jeanne Bryant paced San Angelo with 15 followed by Elsa Ornelas with 11.

The Eagles had a lead as big as 15 points in the first half and went on to post the easy victory.

A fourth quarter that saw Cooper trailing Big Spring 38-30 at the start, also saw a 0-for-16 shooting disaster from the field as the Lady Steers outpointed the Cougars by a 20-5 margin in the final frame for the win.

Elise Wheat led Big Spring with 17 points while Shell Rutledge added 15 and Sheryl Dixon 14. Carla Seldon was the only Cooper player to score more than four points as she posted a game-high 20.

Smith didn't feel wanted with Padres

(Compiled from R-T wire services)

San Diego shortstop Ozzie Smith changed his mind about coming to St. Louis because he felt the Cardinals wanted him and the Padres didn't. Smith, 27, signed a final agreement Thursday in a trade that sent shortstop Garry Templeton to San Diego concluding two months of negotiations. Smith hit .222 last year, stole 22 bases, and won his second straight Gold Glove award in his four years in the Major Leagues.

Joe McDonald, Cards executive assistant, said he felt the trade was in the best interest of the club and of the controversial Templeton. "Garry Templeton could be the best baseball player in the world, but he just didn't want to play. Whitey Herzog is trying to get together a team that wants to play."

Smith said the troublesome issue of his salary with the Cardinals has still not been resolved. An arbitrator is scheduled to decide on a figure by March 30. Smith's agent, Ed Gottlieb, had stuck by a demand that Smith be paid $750,000 by the Cardinals, who had offered $450,000....

Pete Rose sees a dip in George Foster's run production with the Mets, predicting it will be tougher to drive in runs without Dave Collins, Ken Griffey and Dave Concepcion getting on base ahead of him. "I don't think George would be worth the money he wanted to Cincinnati because they got rid of the guys who hit in front of him. He's going to get his money, but I don't think George realizes how important his teammates were. It's going to be harder for him to knock in 120 runs in New York.

"He's not going to have Griffey, Concepcion and Collins on base. It's going to be a lot different knocking in Mookie Wilson, Lee Mazzilli and Dave Kingman.

"I may be wrong, but I'll be very surprised if George leads the league in RBIs next year.... George is in a class of his own — he and (Phillies third baseman) Mike Schmidt — as far as hitting home runs. But you have to do other things. You have to knock a wall down occasionally. You have to get your uniform dirty. I used to use three uniforms a day. George uses three a month."...

Cowboys chat with Nolan

Dick Nolan may be rejoining the Dallas Cowboys. Coach Tom Landry discussed the possibility with the Houston Oilers defensive coordinator. The Cowboys are looking for special team and receiver coaches and a replacement for Ermal Allen in quality control. Allen suffered a massive heart attack in November and will have to carry a lighter load...

Georgia back Herschel Walker plans explore a challenge of the NFL eligibility rules. "I've pretty well decided that I want to see what this involves. It's been in the back of my mind for a while, and now it's in the front of my mind. I just want to find out more about it, but I want to do it without violating any rules...This doesn't mean I'm going to leave Georgia or quit playing college football. I just have to do what I think is best for me, and I want to find out all I can about going to the NFL."...

Jim Oshse, 27, overtook 1981 champion Pete Squires at the observation deck to win the 86-floor Empire State Building "run-up" Thursday in New York, sprinting upstairs from the lobby to the observation deck in 11 minutes, 41.1 seconds, taking the lead for good after Squires, 31, of Yonkers, N.Y., tripped and injured his leg on the top floor of the race. Mary Beth Evans, 22, a secretary and student, led the women in 13:34, passing 42-year-old Nina Kuscik, the women's winner for the past three years...

Busby joins Harmon with Rangers

Former KC Royals pitcher Steve Busby will join Merle Harmon on the Texas Rangers TV team for 1982. Bobby Etheredge, Austin Westlake High for four seasons, will become football coach at Houston Spring Branch... The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department announced it probably will not change limits on redfish caught off the Gulf Coast. Fishermen are allowed to keep 10 redfish per day, with none under 16 inches and none larger than 30 inches...

Beth Daniel edged JoAnne Carner for the Seagram's Seven Crown of Sports women's golf title with an efficiency of 78.43, .09 ahead of Carner... Cincinnati's Bengals have asked the city for more than $5.7 million as part of a 3-year-old legal battle over the team's lease agreement at Riverfront Stadium. The Bengals have filed a lawsuit asking the city to pay the damages and release the team from its stadium lease or make specified improvements at Riverfront and the team's Spinney Field training complex...Masahiko Furuta won the Kyoto marathon Thursday, more than a minute ahead of Ryzard Marczak of Poland...

Terry emphasizes the positive

Instead, the coaches went against their own grain, making a highlight film of great plays to show how the team should thump the Tar Heels. They did.

On a team that basically uses seven players, two of whom — 6-foot-8 Jim Miller and 6-foot-5 Tim Mullen — are freshmen, Holland admits, "I'm not even sure of the right lineup to have in all the different situations we're gonna see ... It's scary as hell ... " However, the compensation is that the other team "doesn't know where it's coming from, either."

For a student of minutiae such as Holland, who was class salutatorian in high school and an economics major in college, such uncertainty is anathema. It bothers him that players such as Miller, Mullen, 6-foot-8 Craig Robinson and senior Jeff Jones may "score 16 one night and the next only two.... It's amazing how quickly basic confidence does erode ... Robinson's an extreme case, really."

In many ways, Holland and Sampson are one another's counterweight. Holland is a creature of attention to detail and pre-planning. Sampson is spontaneous, creative and wonderful at postponing decisions until the last minute, then trusting intuition.

Holland, for his part, has, with the departure of his half-court-style seniors Lamp and Raker, loosened the reins on what is now an up-tempo, sometimes slightly harum-scarum young team.

"YOU HAVE to be wise enough to take your hands off ... let 'em fly," he says. Even with Sampson's game, Holland has forced himself to let some wildness express itself in those 22-foot jumpers. Holland accepts the shots that seem "irrational" and has "learned to live with it," because "as soon as we say to him, 'Hey, get your fanny back down where it belongs,' he'll be there."

On the other hand, Sampson has improved breathtakingly under Holland's hand. From a freshman whose lack of offense had Holland "extremely concerned," Sampson has developed into the stuff of dreams. "Last year, he studied the game, worked on moves not only with the ball but without it," Holland says. "He was conscious of where the defense was, particularly as it related to him.

"This year, I think he's taken it the next step (by) being conscious not only of where the defense is in relation to him but in relation to teammates, as well. Which I think all ... really good guards do, but very few big guys do."

Nevertheless, all of Holland hasn't rubbed off on Sampson. "I've often said to him, 'Basketball for you should be like another class, 'cause it's your future,' " Holland says." 'You should make an hour every day that you come over here and talk to the coaches.' He's never been willing to go to that extreme."

Last summer, Holland says, he kept teasing the procrastinating Sampson, saying, "You know you're going to end up living in my basement. Just tell me ahead of time so we can have carpeting put in, or else you're going to live on a cement floor." "

Two days before classes began, Sampson decided to become Virginia's underground man. Holland never thought he'd stay until Christmas — wouldn't want the coach knowing when he came and went.

Sampson's still around, and loving it. Probably, it's Holland's sense of order, balance and routine that attracts Sampson, as it does many others. That passion for keeping his bearings is perhaps best reflected in an anecdote about his many superstitions.

AFTER VIRGINIA lost to Carolina last month, Holland called his wife and told her, jokingly, that the defeat must be her fault for violating one of the family's superstitions. She denied it, claiming the special game shirt had been ironed, the lucky jacket had been laid out and so forth. As Holland says, "In a job where there's so much you can't control, you find that you want to control everything that can be controlled."

Holland, always the analyst, kept gently interrogating his spouse. Had she run to the top of Observatory Hill, the highest point in Charlottesville, just as they always do together before home games and as she does alone when they're on the road? Oh, yes, she said. She couldn't have, he insisted. She hadn't gone all the way to the top and he knew it.

Ann Holland finally admitted that it had snowed and she couldn't get the last few yards.

Holland gave a sigh of vindication and relief.

DRILLING REPORT

EDITOR'S NOTE: We promised our drilling report scouts, Thula Cox and Sharon Spiwak, the first time they got 200 or more wells on the report we would set it in our regular sized type, instead of the small type we normally use. They have finally done it, and here it is, a drilling report printed full size.

Watt describing himself as pawn in a dispute

By the Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt, describing himself as a pawn in a dispute between President Reagan and Congress, said Wednesday that he was ready to go to jail if necessary rather than hand over seven documents to a House Energy subcommittee.

The subcommittee voted Tuesday to cite Watt for contempt of Congress and triggered what constitutional experts called a "classic confrontation" between a Congress trying to get hold of executive-branch documents and an administration refusing to surrender them under the aegis of "executive privilege."

Watt said that at the heart of the matter is "a constitutional issue that has been looking for birth for many decades." He said Department of Justice attorneys had decided not to back down in their encounter with the House subcommittee because they believed they were on firm legal ground.

Asked what he would do in the unlikely event that Congress and the courts ruled against him and he was ordered to jail, Watt told reporters: "I would like to think that I would be as brave as you in the press corps. Yes, I would go to jail."

During winter months when motorists face the frustration of driving on hazardous icy roads, Exxon builds roads made of ice over the sea to assist its search for petroleum offshore in the Beaufort Sea on Alaska's North Slope. Huge trucks as the one pictured above, carry 45-ton loads of gravel across these icy roads to build islands for exploratory well sites. The ice road technology is considered feasible for constructing islands in the water depths out to approximately 40 feet. Ice road construction begins in the fall, after the sea ice has frozen to a thickness of two feet. Holes are drilled in the ice sheet and auger pumps lift the water to the surface. The water spreads out and freezes, and the process is repeated daily, building several inches of ice per day, until the roads which reach a desired thickness of up to 8 feet. Exxon crews construct some 70 miles of ice roads in the area each fall.

China to take bids on oil exploration

PEKING (AP) — China may invite foreign bids for offshore oil exploration soon, Chinese press reports indicated Thursday.

But the reports said development of commercial offshore oil fields is more than seven years away.

Bids are to be invited as soon as the China National Offshore Oil Corp. is set up. The official English-language newspaper China Daily said this could come within a day or two.

Regulations governing offshore exploration were issued Wednesday. They specify that all costs of exploration are to be born by the foreign companies, but that if commercially productive fields are found, the companies can recover their costs and make a profit.

The next step after formal founding of the CNOOC is expected to be an invitation for foreign companies to formally express an interest in bidding.

The China Daily said Ji Zhunwei, an official of China's Import-Export Commission, has estimated that the equivalent of $20 billion will be needed for development of offshore oil projects in the 1980s.

Some foreign oil specialists have predicted development of offshore oil could double China's current annual production of 100 million tons in about 20 years. It takes about seven to eight years to bring an oil field into production.

An offshore exploratory well costs about $10 million, while production platforms can cost from $300 million to $2 billion, depending upon the depth of water and the oil reservoir, according to industry specialists.

In 1979, 48 foreign companies joined in offshore seismic surveys seeking geological formations likely to hold oil.

Industry sources said the new regulations contained several welcome points.

Haig, Weinberger at odds over Soviet gas pipeline

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger are at odds again, this time over how the United States should deal with its European allies who propose to help finance a natural gas pipeline for the Soviet Union.

Formerly NATO's top general, Haig has come across as the moderate diplomat, while Weinberger, a San Francisco lawyer and public servant, is pegged as the hardliner who warns, in effect, "You can't do business with Brezhnev."

Thus it was Weinberger, backed by Jeanne Kirkpatrick, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and William J. Casey, director of Central Intelligence, who argued within the top levels of the Reagan administration that the United States should take a really tough stand against the Soviet Union for its part in the crushing of the Polish workers' Solidarity movement.

On the other hand, Haig, while he wants the virus of dissent in Poland kept alive, argued for a softer approach lest the NATO allies decline to follow our lead. The president eventually went the Haig route.

As Pentagon boss, Weinberger has been engineering a strategy shift away from what he regarded as one too heavily focused on Central Europe to the detriment of our ability to fight in other parts of the world.

The over-concentration on NATO, which led to Carter administration efforts to reduce the Navy's role and "heavy-up" Marine Corps divisions, placed large emphasis on ground forces. As a one-time Supreme Allied Commander, Haig had no trouble with this strategy. The global approach favored by Weinberger would mean increased missions for the Navy and Air Force.

As for the decision by several NATO countries to help the USSR build a pipeline from natural gas fields in Western Siberia to Western Europe, neither Haig nor Weinberger approves.

But after the Polish army crackdown on Solidarity, top Pentagon officials sought to pressure the West Europeans to drop out of the pipeline project. They have asserted that the United States could bar American companies and their European affiliates from selling equipment for its construction.

Gasoline company plans to drop plastic money

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Atlantic Richfield Co. is considering whether to abolish its credit card service to hold down costs as a worldwide petroleum glut and declining gasoline demand chip away at once-record profits, the company says.

A spokesman for Los Angeles-based Arco, Albert Greenstein, said Thursday the credit card cut is only "at one end of a very long spectrum" of options.

"It wouldn't surprise me to see companies making an effort to ease themselves out of their credit card business," said Sanford Margoshes, a New York-based analyst with Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc.

The average Arco customer's monthly charge bill was $65 last year, nearly double the 1977 average, Greenstein said. The increase reflects higher interest rates on consumer debt as well as rising gas prices.

John Shaughnessy, who tracks the oil industry for Oppenheimer & Co. in New York, said credit sales themselves add 3 cents to the cost of a gallon of gas.

Greenstein said Arco also was considering whether to charge customers or dealers fees for using a company card — a move Texaco Inc. initiated last September amid protests by gas station operators.

Texaco said the 3 percent surcharge was the only alternative to ending its credit service, which cost $100 million in 1981 and accounted for 37 percent of its sales.

Research institutes announce joint U.S.-Norway program

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Non-profit research institutes in the United States and Norway have agreed to conduct joint research and development in the areas of energy and marine science.

Dr. H. Norman Abramson, vice president of Southwest Research Institute, announced Thursday his organization has signed the agreement with the Foundation for Scientific and Industrial Research of the Norwegian Institute for Technology (SINTEF), located at Trondheim, Norway.

"This partnership will strengthen each of us in our institutional programs in the energy and ocean engineering fields as well as in other areas," Abramson said.

In addition to conducting joint projects, the two non-profit research organizations agreed for both institutions to exchange background information and experience and to exchange technical personnel, Abramson said.

Johannes Moe, administrator of the Norwegian institute, said, "This agreement will enable us to broaden our industrial and governmental service areas. Such unique facilities as our ocean environmental basin will bring added strngth to present U.S. research and development efforts."

Some to get rare chance for Oscar

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is holding out second, third and even fifth chances this year to performers who have never won an Oscar, though they've come close.

Warren Beatty produced, directed, co-authored and starred in "Reds," the movie that headed the list of 1981 Academy Award hopefuls with a dozen nominations Thursday.

Beatty, whose latest role is an American journalist in revolutionary Russia, was nominated in the same four categories for the 1979 film "Heaven Can Wait." He won nothing that year.

Henry Fonda, the 76-year-old star of another best-picture nominee, "On Golden Pond," fell short of triumph in 1940 when he was nominated as best actor in "The Grapes of Wrath." The academy gave Fonda a special award last year for his 45-year Hollywood tenure.

Paul Newman's best-actor nomination for "Absence of Malice," in which he portrays a businessman victimized by the media, gives him his fifth chance for an acting Oscar. A best-picture award eluded him in 1968, when he produced "Rachel, Rachel.'

Some nominees could be bolstering a collection of Oscars during the March 29 presentations at Los Angeles' Music Center — most notably Katharine Hepburn. She was recommended for best-actress honors as Fonda's wife in "On Golden Pond," which tallied 10 nominations.

The veteran actress, 74, won for acting with "Morning Glory" (1933); "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner?" (1967) and "The Lion in Winter" (1968). None of the other best-actress nominees was alive when Miss Hepburn won her first Academy Award.

Also in the best actress category are Diane Keaton for "Reds," Marsha Mason for "Only When I Laugh," Susan Sarandon for "Atlantic City" and Meryl Streep for "The French Lieutenant's Woman."

Ms. Keaton won in 1977 for "Annie Hall," while Ms. Streep took supporting actress honors for 1980's "Kramer vs. Kramer." Ms. Mason, meanwhile, is hoping her fourth nomination will be the winning one.

The other best picture nominees were "Atlantic City," in which Burt Lancaster is up for his second acting award as an aging small-time gangster, "Chariots of Fire" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

Another veteran, Sir John Gielgud, was nominated as best supporting actor for "Arthur," in which he played the fatherly butler to Dudley Moore's likeable if spoiled rich kid. Moore rounded out the best actor nominations.

Besides Gielgud, the supporting actor nominees are Jack Nicholson for "Reds"; James Coco, "Only When I Laugh"; Ian Holm, "Chariots of Fire"; and Howard Rollins, "Ragtime."

The supporting-actress nominees: Melinda Dillon, "Absence of Malice"; Jane Fonda, "On Golden Pond"; Joan Hackett, "Only When I Laugh"; Elizabeth McGovern, "Ragtime"; Maureen Stapleton, "Reds."

Bess Truman soon will celebrate 97th birthday

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — Bess Truman has broken a hip, contracted pneumonia and suffered a mild stroke in the past year, but her doctor says the oldest living former first lady is doing "beautifully" as she approaches her 97th birthday and "may outlive us all."

"Her mind is very alert," said Dr. Wallace Graham, the Truman family doctor since 1945. "She likes to sit in the window and watch the children play. And she likes a good joke."

President Harry S. Truman, who died in 1972 at age 88, referred to his wife as "The Boss," and she does not like to be pampered.

"If I start to annoy her," Graham said, "she'll clench her fist and say, 'I'm in good health and that's all there is to it.' "

Graham said a small party probably would be held to mark Mrs. Truman's birthday Saturday.

"The nurses will cut a little cake, and I imagine Margaret (Mrs. Truman's daughter) will come in from New York," Graham said. "She might enjoy it, and then again, she might not say a word."

If she doesn't, it may not be because she wouldn't like to. Mrs. Truman's speech has been impaired since she suffered a mild stroke in September, Graham said.

"The words just can't get out as easily as they used to," he said. "She'll have the thought, but she just can't get it out. And she'll still have a little trouble swallowing, that has a lot to do with it."

But overall, Graham said, she is in good condition.

"Her hip is stronger than mine," Graham said. "And her arms ... boy she still has a pretty good grip."

Mrs. Truman was quite a tennis and softball player in her day and developed strength pulling people through those endless reception lines during the White House days, Graham said.

"Maybe that's why she still is as strong as she is," Graham said.

Sophia Loren wants 'another kind of life'

Loren

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Sophia Loren, saying she wants "another kind of life," is turning away from the security of a marriage that left her feeling deprived, according to a copyright interview in McCall's magazine.

Miss Loren, 47, is rumored to be on the verge of a split with her husband, director Carlo Ponti, McCall's said in its March issue.

"My attitude now is to go with my feelings and not look for security," she said. "I'm going to get what I need as a woman.... Now I want another kind of life. My needs are different. I want to experiment."

Miss Loren said her life with Ponti was orderly and stable, but also left her feeling deprived. In her youth, she said, she felt alone and old, "but now I am enjoying my youth."

"I do not feel secure and I never will. But who is secure in life? ...In the end, I am my security," she said.

Miss Loren is rumored to be romantically linked to a French doctor, the magazine reported. She did not discuss the rumors in detail.

"My husband and I never discuss these things. He wouldn't understand. He wouldn't be interested," she said.

Mandrell

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — "Barbara Mandrell and the Mandrell Sisters" won't be back on TV next season because its star, saying the show put a strain on her voice, is quitting.

MCA Records spokesman Jerry Bailey confirmed Thursday that Ms. Mandrell would not continue the TV program, which also featured her sisters Louise and Irlene.

The Saturday night show on NBC, in its second season, has fallen in the Nielsen ratings this year.

Ms. Mandrell who recently returned to Tennessee from taping the final shows in California.

"NBC's bosses were very nice about my decision not to return next season," Miss Mandrell said. "They understood that my throat was weary from wear. A weekly show is no easy assignment."

Ms. Mandrell said she probably would do at least one or two specials for the network in 1982-83. She plans work on a gospel album and a country album.

She said her sisters would resume their own careers.

"...The doctor says the only thing my throat needs is rest. I believe him. I am still a little bit hoarse," she said.

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana, curious to see how a TV news organization works, has taken a guided tour of the London studios of Independent Television News, run by Britain's commercial TV network.

The 20-year-old Princess of Wales, who is expecting a baby in June, spent one hour and 40 minutes at ITN Thursday. She was shown around by newscaster Selina Scott.

The princess watched the staff put together and transmit the 15-minute early evening newscast. She then chatted with the staff members about their jobs.

"The request came from Buckingham Palace for a private and informal visit and no special preparations were made," ITN spokesman Frank Duesbury said.

He said the princess was accompanied by an aide, a detective and the queen's press secretary. Prince Charles didn't go along.

Opening lead: Seven of ♠.

Should you lead an ace against a slam? That question has been debated for years. If the choice were only between always and never, we would probably choose the former.

Because of his void in partner's suit, North devalued his hand. He opted for a two club response to provide himself with the option of showing hearts cheaply should opener have a secondary diamond suit. When South rebid two hearts, North jumped to game and South contracted for slam on the strength of his double fit and wealth of controls.

Since West was looking at a possible trump trick, we can make a good case for an opening lead of the ace of diamonds. But West feared that that might tip declarer off to his trump holding, so he settled for a club lead—and lived to regret it.

Declarer played low from dummy and captured East's jack with the ace. Then came a key play—he ruffed a spade in dummy! The king and ace of trumps brought the bad news that there was a trump loser, but declarer was a move ahead in the game—he had developed an extra chance for himself.

Declarer ruffed another spade in dummy, and now had to find a quick entry to his hand. He led a club to his nine and hoped for the best. Matters looked up when West followed suit. On the ace and king of spades declarer discarded two of dummy's diamonds, and when both opponents followed to these two tricks, the slam was home.

Since the fifth spade was now established, declarer used it as a parking place for dummy's remaining diamond. Whether West ruffed this trick or not was immaterial—the queen of trumps was the only trick for the defense.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. participates in a tennis match after his Thursday arrival in Marrakech, Morocco. Haig announced a military agreement with Morocco's government and discussions of emergency U.S. access to Morocco's military bases.

Haig announces military agreement

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

MARRAKECH, Morocco (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. announced today the United States and Morocco have established a joint military commission and are discussing emergency U.S. access to Moroccan bases.

He also said the Reagan administration will ask Congress for an unspecified increase in military aid to Morocco next year.

The joint commission would concern itself with "security matters of mutual interest," Haig told a news conference before flying to Bucharest, the capital of Communist Romania.

The commission, to hold its first meeting this spring in Rabat, is similar to that the Reagan administration recently established with Saudi Arabia. Haig told reporters the agreements are part of a broad strategy for defense of the Middle East region from outside aggression.

Moroccan Foreign Minister Mohamed Boucetta told reporters earlier that Morocco was receptive to allowing American access to bases for emergency situations, such as refueling for aircraft carrying U.S. Rapid Deployment Forces to Middle East points.

Haig said a final decision hasn't been made, but added consideration will be given to two former air fields here that were closed down years ago.

"I want to emphazize that no decision has been made with respect to this question, but positive and affirmative communication was established with the objective of leading to the availability of such facilities," he said.

The secretary said the administration will seek increased military aid to Morocco in the 1983 fiscal year, but would not say how much.

"This decision to create the joint military commission reflects the traditional and long-standing close friendship between Morocco and the United States," Haig said.

Boucetta indicated a favorable response to the U.S. proposal, but he said final Moroccan approval might take some time. "After study, it could be the object of cooperation with the United States," he told reporters.

He said "we fully agree" with Haig that security cooperation between the two countries is important for security in Southwest Asia.

In Romania, Haig is scheduled to meet with President Nicolae Ceauscecu, who pursues a foreign policy independent of Moscow.

Polish authorities ban sale of paper in Warsaw

By The Associated Press

More intellectuals have been arrested in Poland in the past few days and martial law authorities have banned the sale of paper in Warsaw to try and stop the spread of underground publications, according to reports reaching the West today.

In Warsaw, the military regime mounted one of the largest shows of force since the military crackdown Dec. 13. Observers said a massive procession of police trucks through the streets of the capital Thursday appeared aimed at heading off rumored protests this weekend, the end of the second month of martial law.

The Communist Party daily Trybuna Luda said today that a 20-year-old student was arrested for allegedly firebombing a statue outside city hall. The paper said the blast caused a fire but gave no other details.

In the Ursus tractor factory in Warsaw, a stronghold for the now-suspended independent labor union Solidarity, authorities were said to have discovered preparations for a strike.

Reports reaching the West said 16 mathematicians from four cities — Warsaw, Wroclaw, Gdansk and Tonin — have been arrested in the past week. Jalina Jankowska, a radio reporter who won a prize for her coverage of Solidarity's founding in August 1980, also was arrested, the reports said.

The government acknowledges that about 4,100 rounded up during the past two months are still under detention.

Quoting sources linked with the suspended Solidarity union, the reports said another man died Jan. 29 of injuries sustained during the Dec. 16 riot at Wujek mine at Silesia. Martial law authorities have admitted seven miners were killed when troops clashed with strikers at the mine. Reports reaching the West earlier, however, put the number at 11.

The reports also painted a dismal picture of Poland's economic crisis, saying the Fiat factory in Warsaw is working at only 10 percent of its capacity because of a shortage of spare parts.

Meanwhile, church leaders, carrying blessings from Pope John Paul II, prepared for a weekend meeting with detained Solidarity union leader Lech Walesa.

Archbishop Jozef Glemp, the Polish primate, Krakow Cardinal Franciszek Macharski and Wroclaw Archbishop Henryk Gulbinowicz returned Thursday from a week at the Vatican, where they met with the Polish-born pope.

"I didn't bring anything from the pope because the pope knows that we have to overcome our problems ourselves," Glemp said. "I am just bringing his blessings."

Church officials said church leaders would meet Walesa on Saturday to discuss the christening of his seventh child, a girl born Jan. 27.

The churchmen also planned to meet with Jan Kulaj, leader of the independent farm union Rural Solidarity, the officials said.

The military regime suspended Solidarity and Rural Solidarity under martial law and detained Walesa and Kulaj along with hundreds of other union activists.

Asked if he would meet with Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, Poland's martial law chief and premier, Glemp said, "If there is a need, but I am not planning such a meeting now."

Glemp has met with Jaruzelski officially only once since martial law was imposed.

The church, a powerful force in this overwhelmingly Roman Catholic country, has criticized the suspension of civil rights under the military rule.

In a show of force not seen since the early days of the military crackdown, more than 150 police trucks, some carrying machine guns or water cannon, rolled slowly through the streets of the capital. Witnesses said the convoy took from 30 to 45 minutes to pass a single point.

Thais show reporters captured Vietnamese military personnel

WATTANA NAKORN, Thailand (AP) — Thailand today showed off 10 Vietnamese captured when their military transport was forced down in Thai territory Thursday.

Reporters also visited two other Vietnamese injured in the crash landing. They were chained to their hospital beds in the town of Sa Kaew, 18 miles from this military base.

Maj. Gen. Somkit Chongpayuha, who commands a Thai regiment guarding the nearby Thai-Cambodian border, said the Vietnamese claimed they were on the way from Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon) in southern Vietnam to the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh when their compass failed.

A spokesman at the Vietnamese Embassy in Bangkok, Dang Phong Hoan, said that the plane crossed into Thailand accidentally because of poor visibility due to bad weather.

One of the 13 Vietnamese on board died of chest injuries received in the crash.

Neither side seems sure who's behind deaths

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Each side in El Salvador's civil war blames the other for the soaring civilian death toll, and everybody's claims are suspect. But one thing is certain — a lot of civilians are dying.

The national guard says those it kills are leftist guerrillas or their collaborators, and the rest are murdered by the rebels.

The guerrillas say most of the civilian dead are innocent bystanders murdered indiscriminately by the government's security forces or right-wing death squads.

ONE APPARENTLY NEUTRAL source, a relief agency worker who travels to refugee camps throughout the country, said the guerrillas are more selective in their killing.

"They know who their enemies are," he said. The army often isn't sure."

Last month, President Reagan certified to the U.S. Congress that President Jose Napoleon Duarte's junta was improving the government's human rights record. The certification was required by law to clear the way for $65 million in military and economic aid to the junta.

Critics disputed the State Department's claim that violence in El Salvador is on a downward trend. Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., said the administration was trying to "shrug away" reports of murders and other atrocities by the junta's troops. The U.S. branch of Amnesty International said "the pattern of abduction, torture and murder" in El Salvador is unchanged.

On Wednesday, as members of Congress debated the administration's plans to increase support for the junta, it for the first time officially charged a group of its soldiers with some of the estimated 32,000 civilian deaths since the October 1979 coup launched the current warfare. But the dead were Americans, not Salvadorans.

A SARGEANT, A corporal and four privates were brought in handcuffs before a judge in the small town of Zacatecoluca and charged with the murder 14 months ago of four American women, Roman Catholic missionaries. President Duarte gave a detailed account of the killing in a televised speech, but the judge said it could be three months before he decided whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant a trial.

The death toll figures in the brutal conflict, where bodies are left on the roadside or in clandestine cemeteries, are as much in dispute as who is responsible for the killing.

The State Department said the U.S. Embassy reported 6,116 violent deaths in El Salvador last year. The report noted, however, that some church sources suggest the death toll might be twice as high.

Monsignor Arturo Rivera y Damas, the leader of the church hierarchy, said earlier that 11,723 civilians were killed in the first 11 months of 1981, and most of them were non-combatant peasants.

The El Salvador Human Rights Commission, which relies on guerrilla accounts as well as the local press and personal testimony, recorded 16,276 violent civilian deaths last year. The U.S. Embassy says its count was based on newspaper reports only.

The government issues no civilian casualty figures. The national guard has said it had 2,100 casualties last year, including 350 killed in the first six months. It gave no total for its dead in the last half of the year.

Recent reports of two alleged massacres demonstrate the information war accompanying the killing.

Last month, the guerrillas took American correspondents to visit the northern hamlet of El Mozote. They filed reports that the army had killed at least 733 civilians there in an anti-guerrilla sweep in December.

The U.S. Embassy disputed the reports, saying its own investigation had found no evidence of systematic killing and that no more than 300 people ad lived in El Mozote. President Duarte complained he was losing "a propaganda war" in the American press.

LAST WEEK, THE Defense Ministry said guerrillas murdered at least 150 civilians in another northern town, Nueva Trinidad. One local press report placed the death toll as high as 400. A military spokesman said the U.N. Commission on Human Rights was invited to confirm the massacre. The U.S. Embassy said guerrillas threw grenades into the homes of people who refused to come out to hear propaganda speeches, and 40 civilians were killed.

The rebels' Radio Venceremos blamed the deaths on "cowardly troops who massively bombarded" Nueva Trinidad after 25 of their "henchmen" were killed in a rebel attack.

U.S. officials acknowledge privately that army violence is undermining the support of the peasants which the junta has tried to win with a land reform program and other social reforms.

"They know they cannot win the war if the people turn against them," said one diplomat, who asked anonymity for policy reasons. "They are trying to control the troops but things go wrong inexplicably."
