New rules for pool use at formerly all-adult apartment complexes will be going up in coming days to reflect changing lifestyles under new anti-discrimination laws designed to protect families with children. Maintenance worker Dagoberto Lopez pulls down the rules at a northwest Midland facility Friday morning.

Apartments prepare for family life

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

All-adult apartment complexes in Midland and across the country are "getting in the family way" this weekend in preparation for new federal housing regulations which make them illegal beginning Monday.

The Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 adds families and handicapped individuals to the list of "protected classes" under the Civil Rights Act.

As a result "it will no longer be legal to have buildings — or even sections or floors of buildings — designated as all-adult," according to Colleen Fisher, vice president of government affairs for the National Apartment Association.

Although the effective date of the legislation passed last August is upon them, local property owners and managers say the far-reaching implications of the new law are uncertain.

One impact is clear though, managers say.

"Higher rents are inevitable," Margie Pecore, manager of Trinity Place Apartments said Thursday. Increased costs for maintenance, insurance, wear and tear and other items will be passed through to tenants in the form of higher initial deposits and monthly rents, she said.

Whether guidelines by landlords based on their historic rules for dealing with the total number of occupants — regardless of age — per apartment and per bedroom will be allowed under the new law is not clearly addressed by the regulations, legal experts in the field say.

Local ordinances are little help in clarifying the issue.

The Midland Minimum Housing Standards Code dictates only the barest of minimal dwelling space requirements, according to city building official David Wayland. Excluding hall and closet space, a minimum of 150 square feet of floor space must be provided for the first occupant of a dwelling, with an additional 100 sq. ft. required for each additional resident.

Children under age 12 count as a half-resident each for space computation purposes.

In addition, dwellings of two or more rooms must provide a room of at least 70 sq. ft. as sleeping space for the first resident with an added 50 sq. ft. for each added sleeper per room, Wayland said.

"They (apartment managers) know as much as I do about the new rules," said Jerri Westmoreland, coordinator of rental assistance programs for the Midland County Housing Authority.

Ms. Westmoreland, who is scheduled to address the Midland Apartment Association's monthly meeting Wednesday, said she will look to the Department of Housing & Urban Development for help in answering local property managers' concerns.

Late Friday, she said she was yet to receive questions from the local group to be addressed on Wednesday.

HUD has guidelines for dwellings to qualify for Section 8 — a federal voucher program of rent assistance for low-income families — in terms of separate bedrooms required for families with siblings of opposite sexes above a specified age, and so forth.

Cause of apartment fire still undetermined

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Investigators Saturday had not determined what sparked a patio fire at Trinity Place Apartments which spread quickly, destroyed much of a two-story building and left eight families homeless.

Meanwhile, Fire Chief James Roberts warned that his department's resources had been stretched to the limit. His comments came after reviewing the Trinity Place fire and an earlier fire on Cotton Flat Road south of the city, which investigators said was started by a careless resident.

Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said the apartment fire started about 4 p.m. Friday on the patio of an upstairs unit leased by Midland firefighter Tom Albrecht, 26, and his wife Kathy.

"That (patio) is where the major burned area was, and witnesses initially saw it in that area," Petree said. "It then spread into the attic, and on from there."

The fire was ignited at floor-level, but Petree declined to speculate about the cause.

"The cause is still under investigation, and we are officially listing it as undetermined right now," he said. "It started against the wall; we know that, or we think we know that. The patios are wood-enclosed ... right now I hesitate to give an opinion because we are not sure."

The fire marshal did say the patio had nothing on it that could have ignited.

Arson has been ruled out, Petree said.

Damage to the building was heavy, the fire marshal said.

Trouble seen for California, Midland line

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A Pacific Texas Pipeline Co. (PacTex) proposal to build a 1,030-mile pipeline from Los Angeles Harbor to Midland appears to be in trouble and may be doomed.

Local events in recent weeks indicate the company may be under financial distress:

- When PacTex offices in Midland and Los Angeles were called this week a "disconnected" message recording was heard.
- A notice of eviction has been posted on the residence of Cecil Owens at No. 11 Hawthorne, a house the chief executive officer and founder of the pipeline company leased in October of 1988, after moving to Midland from Los Angeles.
- Last week it was learned from a reliable source that Pacific Texas' lease at ClayDesta Plaza was recently terminated for non-payment.

The latest problems are apparently a continuation of toubles that began to surface in 1987. At that time the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission filed suit against PacTex and Owens charging numerous violations of federal securities laws, according to the San Diego Union. The SEC case was settled without an admission of guilt and Owens consented to forego $413,000 in back pay, the newspaper reported.

Since then the company has been troubled by negative publicity, unhappy investors and financial problems.

In August of 1988, a spokesman for U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen told the Washington Post that Bentsen's efforts to win a $187 million special tax break was unfortunate and tried to disassociate the Texas Senator from the pipeline project, according to an article in the Washington Post.

Then in October, about the time Owens moved to Midland, the company quietly gave up efforts to win public bond financing for the project, saying PacTex would seek private financing for the pipeline.

A crushing blow came in January of this year when the Bureau of Land Management withdrew permits crucial to the pipeline project.

According to news reports in the San Pedro, Calif. News Pilot, the BLM revoked permits that were needed to build sections of the pipeline on 277 miles of federal land, because PacTex had not paid almost $100,000 in rentals for the right-of-way.

In a letter sent to Pacific Texas Pipeline President Cecil Owens, BLM State Director Ed Hastey told Owens that the company had 30 days to remove any personal property from the land and warned that any use of the land after that date would be considered willful trespass, the newspaper stated.

According to a BLM spokesman the withdrawal of the permit effectively kills the pipeline project, since there is no way to build the pipeline except across BLM land, the News Pilot article said.

Campers evacuated as Big Bend fire spreads

By ED TODD

BIG BEND — A fire raging late Saturday night high into the scenic Chisos Mountains of Big Bend National Park likely was 90 percent "man caused," said Robert Rothe, public information officer for the Park.

"We haven't had any lightning strikes in the area," he said.

The fire, which was burning into the "more scenic part of the park" about 12 to 15 miles "as the crow flies" from park headquarters, was getting its fuel from the desert shrubs, pinon, juniper, and oak woodlands, Rothe told the Reporter-Telegram.

Approximately 100 campers and backpackers had been evacuated from the mountains.

"We evacuated approximately 100 hikers, campers, backpackers from the high country," he said, "and have closed the high Chisos to camping and hiking until further notice."

By late Saturday night, the fire, which started about 1 p.m. Saturday at the 5,000-to 5,500-foot level at the the Blue Creek Trail high into Chisos, had burned about 500 acres of Park land.

"Now, it has spread to the 7,200-foot elevation," Rothe said, "and it's banked up against the rim-rock of the southwest rim of the High Chisos."

Should the fire climb higher to the 7,825-foot high Chisos Mountains, it could burn into the Douglas Fir, and Arizona cypress and Arizona pine, he said.

Saturday night, a 10-man crew from the park was fighting the fire with tools and backpack-borne fire-fighting water pumps.

"There's no water up there, of course," Rothe said. "There's no way of getting" four-wheel-drive fire trucks up to the fire. "It's steep country, rugged country," he said, "and the only way to get up there is on foot or by horse."

Black entrepreneurs reminded of role

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Richard Knight, city manager of Dallas, tells the parable of an old man considered very wise by the people of his village. One day, two young boys decided to test him, and brought him a bird they had found.

"Old man," one of them asked, "is the bird in my hand dead or alive?"

After some thought, the man replied, "My son, the answer is in your hands."

Knight told that parable at Saturday's banquet honoring the third anniversary of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs to remind members that the future is in their hands.

He pointed out that black Americans have come a long way in their pursuit of social and economic equality. "There are black congressmen and senators, black lieutenant governors and mayors, even black city managers," he said.

He told the audience that the recent economic woes Texas has experienced offer a unique opportunity for minorities, because "the economic table has been cleared by the turmoil. There's room for new players, and we have to make sure we have a fair chance to become players. What's good for the minority community is good for the whole community. The destiny of black Midland is the destiny of all Midland."

However, he warned, sacrifices are required to achieve that destiny.

"If you do nothing, nothing will change," he pointed out, stressing that members must become involved in the community, stay in touch with elected officials, and replace the sense of powerlessness that has sometimes prevailed in the minority community with a sense of empowerment.

"I challenge you to insist we quit standing behind a liberal agenda of charity and fiscal assistance and direct our goals at empowerment."

He said education is a key to empowerment, and that young black professionals should also play a role. "What are we young professionals doing? If we're not involved in the community, we're not living up to our responsibilities."

Earlier in the day, Dolores Connor, manager of small business programs for Texas Instruments' defense systems and electronics group, held a seminar on how small minority and women-owned businesses can do business with corporations.

She told those attending that, in 1986, Public Law 99661 mandated the Department of Defense to require that its prime contractors establish a goal of purchasing 5 percent of its supplies from minority businesses for each contract in excess of $500,000.

Housing measure spurs debate, bodes wide-ranging effects

By SANDRA WALEWSKI

MIAMI (AP) — Housing discrimination against families with children is illegal now, but no-kids communities are fighting to protect their lifestyles even as experts laud the new law for addressing a national crisis.

"There will be resistance (and) claims of reverse discrimination, but the fact of the matter is Congress has decided families with children have a great need for housing and this law is designed to help them," said Jim Morales, staff attorney for the San Francisco-based National Center for Youth Law.

A 1980 Department of Housing and Urban Development study found that 75 percent of rental units nationwide banned or restricted children. Other surveys found 90 percent of apartment complexes in some communities closed to children.

"We just found an epidemic of discrimination against families with children all over the United States. It was really tragic," said U.S. Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., a co-sponsor of the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988 signed into law by President Reagan in September.

The act bans discrimination against families with children, with some exemptions, and adds the handicapped to housing law prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex, religion, national origin, color and race.

"Blatant and legal cases of discrimination against families with children ... (are) happening all over the country and in all types of communities," said Lisa Mihaly of the Washington-based Children's Defense Fund.

■ In Zephyrhills, Fla., Beverly and Thomas Elmer were forced in January to evict their 14-year-old daughter Staci rather than go to jail for contempt of court in a dispute over deed restrictions. She can visit their mobile home in a subdivision of 17 families north of Tampa, but must live with a married brother until she turns 15 next month. Pets are allowed, but not children under 15.

"I'm not surprised. The Constitution isn't made for kids," Staci said.

■ In Margate, Fla., Jamie Swartz, 9, was threatened with eviction when she moved in with her father and stepmother after her mother died. After months of uncertainty, Jamie got a reprieve in January when the condominium board decided not to take action while the new federal housing act was researched.

■ A Portland, Ore., couple were forced to send their 3-year-old son to live with friends because of a dispute with neighbors at apartments that had been converted into condominiums with a no-children rule.

"Of course we couldn't just banish him into a black hole" and he returned for clothes and toys, said his mother, Linda Benyahich. After neighbors saw him she got a call from the board's lawyer, who said if he came again "for any reason they were going to send the sheriff out to remove him."

■ In Monroe, N.J., a judge mediated an agreement allowing 46-year-old Ann Romer to be a guest for 60 days in the condo she and her husband Theodore, 60, bought at the Rossmoor Condominiums. The condo association had not allowed the couple, who live in New York City, to buy property because Mrs. Romer wasn't 48. The judge's Sept. 15 agreement allowed them to buy the weekend home.

The new housing rules allow age restrictions in retirement communities if all residents are over 62, or if at least 80 percent of the households have at least one member over 55 and special services are offered for older people, or in housing sponsored by state and federal programs for the elderly.

Under a transition provision, those who are under the minimum age and were living in an elderly development as of Sept. 13, 1988, will not have to give up their residence nor will the community jeapordize its exemption.

Leon Rubin defends the child-free lifestyle he enjoys at a Margate condominium that is changing its documents to remain exempt. His sentiments are widely shared, especially among mostly elderly developments.

Rubin, president of the Oriole Gardens Condominium Association, said many of his neighbors are infirm and under nurses' care, and besides, "No one would like to have a squirrely kid next door crying in the middle of the night.

"This is our lifestyle. I'm satisfied with what we have now."

While retirement communities are essentially exempted, adults-only developments around the country will be affected by the act.

Attorney Gary Poliakoff of Fort Lauderdale contends the act encourages discrimination against the 18- to 55-year-olds who live in adult communities, and probably won't open much existing housing to children.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Hot temperatures could continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Saturday's hot pre-spring temperatures set a record high of 91 degrees for a March 11.

The previous high temperature for the date was 89 degrees in 1967, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

The overnight low was 38 degrees, which posed no threat to the record low of 15 degrees for a March 12.

For today, the weatherman is calling for sunny-and-hot weather. The temperature is to peak into the lower 90s. Winds are to be southwesterly at 10 to 20 mph.

Temperatures for tonight and Monday are to be above-normal. The low tonight is to be in the lower 50s. The high Monday is to be near 90 degrees.

STATE

A high pressure continued over the state and kept Texas' skies sunny and temperatures into the 80s and 90s Saturday, one week after a bitter cold snap paralyzed much of the state with ice and snow.

A low pressure system centered over northwest Oklahoma and a high pressure system hovering the northwest Gulf of Mexico resulted in increasing southerly winds of between 10 and 25 miles per hour across far South Texas and the low rolling plains.

Winds were southwesterly in West Texas, where the extreme western sections had gusts throughout the day.

Temperatures by 3 p.m. were mostly in the 80s and 90s across the state, with cooler conditions along with coast, which saw highs in the 70s.

Galveston in the upper coast had the lowest high temperature at 68 degrees, while Childress in northwest Texas reached 97 degrees.

The National Weather Service said fog and low clouds were expected along the coast Sunday morning. Forecasters also predicted mostly sunny skies across Texas Sunday with lows in the upper 30s in the Big Bend region to near 60 in the far south.

Highs were expected to reach the 80s and 90s across most of the state.

NATION

Snow fell Saturday on the high country of the Nevada-California border, while warm weather elsewhere melted snow and caused local flooding.

Wind gusted to 70 mph south of Reno, Nev., during the morning as a result of a strong cold front which left 6 inches of snow overnight at higher elevations of the Tahoe Valley along the Nevada-California border, and about 2 inches of snow at lower levels near Lake Tahoe.

Unseasonably warm temperatures elsewhere melted snow cover and there was flooding on the Big Muddy River at Murphysboro, Ill., the National Weather Service said.

Melting snow also added to problems at Hooper, Neb., where an ice jam caused local flooding.

Other streams for which warnings were posted include the Pecatonica River in southwestern Wisconsin; the Weiser River near Weiser, Idaho; the John Day River at Service Creek, Ore.; and the Umitilla River at Pendleton, Ore.

Elsewhere, light rain was scattered over North Dakota at noon, and showers were widely scattered over the northern coast of California. Rain and freezing rain extended over northern and western Montana.

Midland trucker killed in mishap

From Staff Reports

ST. LAWRENCE — A 33-year-old Midland truck driver hauling a full load of crude oil was killed Saturday when the Permian Corp. tractor-trailer he was driving jack-knived on an "S" curve when the driver apparently tried to avoid holes and overturned.

Killed was Agapito Araujo, who apparently died when the truck overturned. However, a resultant fire consumed the rig and burned his body, according to a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The Araujo's truck was carrying 170 barrels of oil, the DPS spokesman said.

"He was wearing a seatbelt," said the spokesman.

The truck was eastbound on Glasscock County Road 106, but Araujo steered the truck into the westbound lane on an "S" curve to avoid the potholes.

"The truck jack-knived and rolled over on its top. The whole rig burned." Araujo apparently was dead before the fire broke out.

HOUSING

Those guidelines' applicability to all apartment complexes is yet to be tested.

"We hope to be able to use the same standards for total occupancy of our apartments as we always have, without regard to age," said Norma Morrison, manager of the Wildflower complex in northwest Midland. That community has limited residents to two per one-bedroom and three per two-bedroom, she said of the community owned by Lincoln Property Co., one of the nation's largest apartment management firms.

Officials at Lincoln's Dallas headquarters were unavailable for comment Friday.

Other changes in apartment living are expected to come regarding use of pools and other communal facilities. Stringent time limits on children's use are likely to be perceived as discriminatory under the law, observers say.

The only exemptions from the new law are those providing "housing for older persons" defined as complexes occupied solely by those age 62 and over, or 80 percent occupied by persons over age 55 with facilities and services to meet the needs of older citizens provided.

Companies deemed to be discriminating against families will be liable for up to a $10,000 fine which could be levied by a HUD administrative law judge for a first offense. A second violation within five years could draw up to a $25,000 fine and a landlord with three or more violations within a seven-year period could be slapped with a $50,000 fine.

The handicap provisions of the bill extend to all physical and mental handicaps, with few exclusions. "Current drug addicts, persons who have been convicted of a drug-related felony and transvestites will not be considered handicapped," according to Ms. Fisher of the NAA.

In addition to forbidding discrimination against the handicapped, the law provides that builders make future multi-unit buildings accessible to the physically challenged.

In "garden style" buildings, without elevators to second and/or third floors, only the first floor apartments must have doors wide enough to accommodate wheelchairs, reinforced walls for installation of grab bars and fully accessible and useable kitchens and baths.

In new buildings with elevators, apartments on all floors must be constructed to the new standard, she said.

Owners of existing multi-unit properties covered by the law (four or more units) must allow handicapped residents to "reasonably modify" at their own expense their apartment to afford full enjoyment of the unit.

The resident is also required to remove the modifications upon vacancy unless it is unreasonable to do so, Ms. Fisher said.

Mrs. Pecore of Trinity Place said she was criticized for opposing the bill when it was in Congress. They said I just didn't like children, she recalled.

"Well, I love my kids and grandkids just as much as anybody can," she said. Interestingly, all four of Mrs. Pecore's children have followed their mother's footsteps in the property management business.

"It's not kids, it's government interference in private property ownership rights that I don't like."

FIRE

"It destroyed the attic area and the roof area of at least four of the upstairs apartments. They have heavy fire damage, and there is heavy water damage to the four below. The others may have smoke damage."

Roberts said the fire spread quickly after charcoal starter fluid on the patio was ignited. Nearby aerosol cans then burned, and likely were the "explosions" that witnesses reported hearing.

Margie Pecore, manager of Trinity Place, said Saturday no damage estimate was available. She said "she had no idea" where a $1 million figure on at least one Friday night television newscast came from.

Donations for the families who lost items in the fire were being accepted at the apartment office, 3600 N. Midland Drive, at the central fire station, 1500 W. Wall St., and Albrecht's duty station at the corner of Haynes Drive and Midkiff Road.

The eight families left homeless by the fire were staying with friends or in apartments or motel rooms located by Trinity Place management, Ms. Pecore said.

Roberts, who spent his Friday shuttling between fire calls and checking on the availability of fire equipment, said neighbors reported the large grass fire on Cottonflat Road was started by a resident burning dried weeds.

The incident left the chief — who has warned city and county residents continually for months not to burn outside — exasperated on Saturday.

"I don't guess I was surprised at it, no," Roberts said. "I think it is very dumb, because of the conditions we have right now, given the growth we have of weeds and grass and the dry conditions.

"Yesterday (Friday), during both of the fires, our resources were about gone. We had six or eight incidents going on during the apartment complex fire, including ambulance runs, grass fires and other things that needed our attention."

Roberts said he now feels uncomfortable relying on the common sense of county residents not to burn weeds or trash. But he said no law or ordinance can be enacted that will outlaw burning outside of the city limits.

The fire along Cottonflat Road, several miles south of the city — which destroyed one structure and heavily damaged three others before it was controlled — was typical of those which ignite in the county. It started small, with only a yard-size patch of grass and brush burning. But within minutes, the wind was blowing and the blaze spread to higher brush, fence posts and finally structures. And with no hydrants in the county, little water was available.

"The potential out there was extremely bad," Roberts said. "There is only so much you can do with the amount of resources you are given."

To make matters worse, the department's lone tanker truck, which holds 2,000 gallons of water compared to 500 for the pumper trucks assigned to every station, was in an Odessa garage all day Friday.

"Unfortunately, you have to maintain the things," Roberts said. "We always let it (tanker maintenance) go to the very last minute because it is so essential to us."

If county residents are going to be careless when there is a high fire danger, accidental fires like those at Trinity Place will be harder to fight, and some hard choices will have to made quickly, the chief cautioned.

"We don't really have a point where we say 'no more' (fire units can go outside of the city limits), but common sense tells us we have certain things we have to cover," Roberts said. "Yesterday at the apartment complex we did not commit all of our resources. We cannot do that. We have to have crash crews at the airport, we have to have ambulance crews."

During the Trinity Place fire, at least 14 off-duty firefighters were called back to work to man equipment at stations that were left by crews responding to the major fire.

"That is normal procedure," Roberts said. "But there is a point where your resources are taxed. That is why people should be careful with fires outside the city limits.

"Yesterday we were getting to the area where we don't have anyone else to send. When we have "x" number of calls, and "x" number, or pieces of equipment available, if you have more calls than equipment, something's got to give."

Crews from the Greenwood Volunteer Fire Department and Northeast Volunteer Fire Department assisted Midland firefighters at the Cottonflat Road fire, and in fact the volunteer crews helped put out the fire. But the funds-starved volunteers can also only do so much, Roberts said.

"It's all a matter of resources," he said. "I don't care if you are in Midland or New York City."

CHAMBER

That law was expanded in November 1988 to include all federal procurements, not just those by the Department of Defense.

She said this presented a challenge to minority and women-owned businesses. "I'd like to challenge you to work toward generating more minority businesses. These must be established to take advantage of government contracts. Your tax dollars are being spent, so you're entitled to take your fair share of business," she said.

She stated that "the minority entrepreneur must determine his own economic security. He must accept the responsibility of hiring and training minority youth, who are the entrepreneurs of tomorrow. I challenge you to open summer internships in your business. You must deliver a quality product in a timely manner at a reasonable price."

In addition, she told those in attendance, the minority community must be active politically on a local, state and national level, involving the youth as well as the rest of the community. "Take an active role, not a reactive role."

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs must encourage development of minority suppliers to local corporations, especially those in product-oriented businesses such as manufacturing, said Ms. Conner.

She also encouraged the MBCE to establish an incubator program and training program for the youth.

Also as part of the chamber's celebration, a number of Midlanders were recognized for community service and recognized Texas Instruments as its corporation of the year.

The chamber also inducted several members into its newly-established Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Hall of Fame. They are Samuel L. Taylor, Freddie Nelms, Doris Richardson, Dr. Viola Coleman, Rev. Fillmore Johnson, Rene Titus, Bertha Starks and Mamie Williams.

PIPELINE

In the same story by reporters Daniel Carson and Russ Britt, it was noted that Pothos Corp., a real estate division of Evergreen International shipping lines, was seeking $48,560 in back rent from PacTex in a Los Angeles Superior Court.

It was also reported that the spacious offices were subleased by PacTex from a separate company owned by Steve Podesta, a member of PacTex's board of directors, and that Podesta is a member of the board of directors of the Bank of San Pedro which had loaned $500,000 to the pipeline development company.

The latest problems for PacTex come amid persistent rumors in Midland concerning the fate of the pipeline project. Many in Midland have long suspected that the project might be in trouble because of numerous delays in actual construction.

Owens, a Dallas businessman, first announced in 1980, the formation of Pacific Texas Pipeline Co., that he would attempt to take over where Sohio Oil Co. (Now British Petroleum) had failed and would build a 42-inch, pipeline to bring Alaskan crude oil from Los Angeles Harbor to Midland Tank Farm.

Since then there has been much publicity surrounding the project as several dates were set for the start of construction on the pipeline. However, none of the dates became a reality.

Nor did the promise of thousands of jobs and millions of dollars in contracts for Texas companies that were supposed to accompany construction of the $1.7 billion California to Midland project.

One of the most heralded announcements came in March of 1987, shortly after PacTex problems with the SEC emerged in California. At that time, Owens assembled approximately 150 Midland dignitaries for a dedication ceremony of a 100-acre site at Fairgrounds and Cloverdale roads, on which Owens said he would construct eight super storage tanks with a storage capacity of 4 million. They would store Alaskan crude oil that would be distributed to refineries on the Gulf Coast and East Coast by 14 pipelines connecting to the Midland Tank Farm, he said at the time.

"We stand here today with all permits in hand ready to go to work to construct our project," Owens spoke at the ceremony. "Today is the day we win over the naysayers who said this project could not be done."

Today, a chain link fence and two trailer houses are the only improvements on the property.

The latest announcement of a construction kick-off came in November of 1988, when PacTex, with much press fanfare, rolled two railroad flat cars loaded with 30 joints of under-the-road conduit pipe into Midland and announced they were for the first leg of the pipeline construction from Midland to Jal, N.M. The pipe is still stacked at PacTex's yard on Fairgrounds road.

Neither Cecil Owens nor Michael Owens, his son and a vice president of Pacific Texas, were available for comment Saturday despite repeated attempts by the Reporter-Telegram.

However, in previous interviews with the Reporter-Telegram Owens attributed delays in the pipeline to lack of a "through-put agreement" from major oil producers in the Prudhoe Bay field of Alaska. "Two have said they will ship oil through our pipeline, if we can get one more to agree it will trigger the whole project," said Owens.

BEND

But by 4 a.m. today, efforts of the park's firefighters were to be augmented by a 40-man crew of Mescalero Apache Indians, who were dispatched through a federal interagency fire dispatcher operating out of Lincoln National Forest near Alamogordo in New Mexico.

With the Indians was to be a helicopter carrying fire-fighting equipment, supplies and food.

Fire-fighting units had not been sought out of Alpine or Fort Davis, Rothe said. "We haven't asked for help at this time."

"We've got extreme-fire danger here at the park," particularly so in the daylight hours.

"The fire will not be as hot at night as it is during the day," he said, since the humidity rises and the temperature drops at night.

As of Saturday night, no property outside of the park's woodland had been destroyed or damaged, and no injuries were reported.

Though Rothe said likely the fire was "man-caused," he said, in considering other possibilities, that there was a "remote possibility" that the fire could have been ignited by the sun's rays striking glass and then focusing intense heat on the dry vegetation and starting a fire.

Students bring money, violence to Island

STATE

GALVESTON (AP) — Thousands of pale-skinned university students began arriving for the surf and sun of the Texas coast this weekend, boosting the economy of this island city but creating headaches for law enforcement agencies.

"We are expecting between 35,000 to 50,000 students (each weekend) this year for spring break," said Don Schatell, executive director of the Galveston Park board of trustees.

"If the weather stays as nice as it is today, we should do even better than last year, and last year was good," he said.

Meanwhile in the Corpus Christi area, officials were expecting about 100,000 students and family members to decend on the beach though Easter weekend, dropping an estimated $20 million for food, lodging and fun.

In addition, law enforcement officials eager to prevent accidents like one that marred last year's Spring Break festivities staked 3,000 wooden posts four feet high along a two-mile stretch of the beach to separate the beach driving lanes and keep cruising students from stopping to chat and creating traffic jams.

Other plans in the Coastal Bend call for a five-hour beach concert March 19 by Joan Jett and the Blackhearts, along with Joe "King" Carrasco, who also will make a Spring Break appearance at South Padre Island.

At South Padre Island, book-weary students began jockeying for space in the predawn hours Saturday to avoid a crush of some 50,000 beachgoers this weekend.

"We've got to get there before the sun comes up so that we can get a spot on the beach and get some premium tanning time," University of Texas freshman Jay Allen told the Austin American-Statesman. "I've heard a lot about South Padre Island from my friends. I've heard it's a lot of fun — a real party."

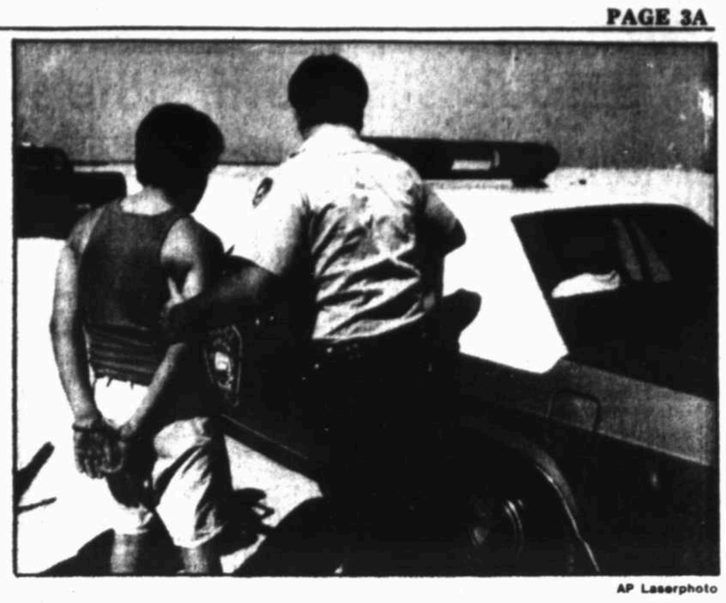

Allen said he and seven friends made reservations three months ago to stay in a South Padre condominium. The group is going prepared — they spent $200 buying liquor in Austin to avoid the higher costs on the island, he said.

"We purchased most of the stuff we need up here except for food, so that we do not miss a whole day of sun, shopping," Allen said. "We are taking two cars down and for safety we have two designated drivers who will not drink. We have also taken precautions regarding sexual safety."

Galveston lifeguards and police were pressed into service a little earlier than expected Friday afternoon when Houston students from rival high schools sparked a melee that sent five people to hospitals and resulted in eight arrests.

Police ordered about 1,000 people off the beach at Apffel Park after the fracas broke out around 1:30 p.m. among the high school students, who were in Galveston for an unauthorized "senior skip day," authorities said.

Three people were stabbed and two more suffered other injuries, though none was hurt critically, officials said. Some witnesses said they saw students being beaten with baseball bats.

Bentsen tries to save domestic projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Administration officials should consider slashing funds for military construction at U.S. bases overseas and spare domestic projects as they look for ways of trimming the Pentagon's budget by $16 billion over the next two years, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Saturday.

Bentsen said construction projects at overseas bases account for nearly 40 percent, or $4 billion, of the proposed military construction budget for fiscal years 1990 and 1991.

"Since they are needed for the defense of our allies, I believe that the administration should make more vigorous efforts to get our allies to pay for a major share of these construction costs," Bentsen told Richard Darman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, in a letter released Saturday.

Bentsen, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and a Texas Democrat, said the United States is spending about 6.5 percent of its gross national product on the defense of its allies, while they are spending about half that.

"They ought to carry their part of the load," Bentsen said.

As adminstration officials seek to find ways of cutting $16.2 billion from the defense budget, Bentsen said they will undoubtedly come under pressure to make so-called "easy-cuts" in small programs with limited visibility and narrow support, such as military construction.

"I want to urge you in the strongest possible terms to avoid such short-sighted decisions," Bentsen told Darman.

Under former President Reagan's proposed military budget for the next two years, $237 million would be spent on military construction projects in Texas in fiscal 1990 and $291 million in fiscal 1991.

Bentsen told Darman those funds are targeted for such projects as the replacement Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, completion of the Navy's homeport near Corpus Christi, continued construction of the Red River Army Depot in Texarkana, and new facilities at Fort Hood.

Judge rules against prison on tax issue

PALESTINE (AP) — State District Judge Sam Bill Bournias has ruled against the Texas Department of Corrections on its appeal to determine the tax status of the Mark W. Michael prison here.

At stake is more than $925,000 in delinquent property taxes on the 2,250-bed prison for 1987 and 1988 and sought by the Cayuga school district.

Elna Christopher, spokeswoman for the Texas Attorney General's office, said further legal appeals were being considered.

Bournias ruled on an appeal to a 1987 ruling by appraisal district authorities that the prison was neither state property nor did it enjoy tax exempt status.

The judge ruled Tuesday that an article of the Texas Revised Civil Statutes granting the jailhouse exemption from taxation violated the Texas Constitution and was therefore void.

Under the constitution, state property cannot be taxed. But provisions in the arrangements to finance the Michael unit have brought state ownership of the prison building into question.

Faced with the decline of Texas' oil-based economy and a Sept. 1, 1987, federal court deadline on reducing inmate population at overcrowded prisons, state officials set up a non-profit corporation — the Coffield Prison Farm Project — which issued certificates of participation to finance construction.

Attorney Daniel Dean, who represented the Anderson County Appraisal District, said in December that none of the $52 million used to build the unit came from the state. The prison was financed by investors with Mbank of Dallas serving as trustee.

The state pays rent under a lease agreement, Dean said. The lease specifically states that the state would be responsible for any ad valorem taxes on the prison.

Bill Kimbrough of the Texas Attorney General's office told the court that the prison is owned by the state regardless of how it is financed.

Surgeons perform state's first 'domino' transplant

DALLAS (AP) — Surgeons at Baylor University Medical Center performed the state's first "domino" organs transplants during a 13-hour dual operation in which a 43-year-old Garland man became a living heart donor.

Forty doctors worked on the procedures during which chronic emphysema patient Thomas Lee of Garland received the heart and lungs of a shooting victim. His own healthy heart was then used to save the life of Burl C. Hamilton, a 64-year-old Waxahachie man who suffered from end-stage heart disease, hospital officials said.

The operations on March 9 and 10 marked Dallas' first heart/lung transplant and Texas' initial "domino" transplant, which was pioneered by doctors at Baltimore's John Hopkins Hospital in May 1987, a month after the world's first successful one was performed by Dr. Magdi Yacoub at London's Harefield Hospital.

Lee was listed in serious condition at Baylor's intensive care unit late Friday, while Hamilton was listed as critical.

"We are very pleased to report that at this point, the heart-lung recipient is doing extremely well," said Dr. Peter Alivizatos, director of cardiac transplantation at Baylor, told reporters of Lee, who was listed in serious condition late Friday. "He is conversing. We are pleased as we could be."

But Hamilton remained in critical condition in the hospital's intensive care unit. "He was a very borderline, very marginal patient," Alivizatos told reporters at a news conference. "He had been waiting nine months for an organ. He was gradually losing ground."

Surgeons first replaced Lee's heart and lungs with those of a shooting victim. The entire heart and lungs were removed as a unit because lungs-only transplants still are in the experimental stages, hospital officials said.

Lee suffered from chronic emphysema which didn't damage his heart, doctors said. So Hamilton, who suffered from heart disease, recieved Lee's healthy heart in a subsequent operation, completing the "domino" procedure.

"The heart/lung transplant is less risky to the patient whose own heart is in good condition, but whose lungs are not functioning," Alivizatos said. "With the shortage of available organs, the domino procedure allows us to save two lives with one donor."

Lee, who has had to use oxygen tanks 24 hours a day for the last six years, had been awaiting a heart/lung transplant since December 1988. Hamilton, a victim of coronary artery disease who had previously undergone bypass surgery, had been on a waiting list for a donor heart since May 1988.

The two shared an unspecified rare blood type which allowed for the dual transplants, doctors said.

The donor was a gunshot victim brought to Baylor's emergency center a few days before the operations.

"This is one rare operation that will become more common as the need for donated organs increases," Julieta Gonzalez, a spokeswoman for the University Heart Center in Tucson, Ariz., told the Dallas Morning News. The University Heart Center has done four such operations.

Houston cop charged with theft

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston police officer suspected of stealing money from intoxicated prisoners was arrested and charged with theft after he allegedly stole marked money from an undercover officer pretending to be drunk, authorities said.

Still in uniform, patrolman Dana N. Mattiza, 28, was arrested Friday morning by fellow officers as he prepared to end his shift at a substation in the southeast Houston patrol district.

Mattiza was charged Friday afternoon with theft under $200, a Class A misdemeanor punishable by a maximum year in jail and $2,000 fine. Bail was set at $1,000.

The investigation of Mattiza began in late November after internal affairs officers received complaints that Mattiza had stolen money from four of his prisoners, investigators said.

"For the most part they were usually illegal aliens or undocumented workers — people who were not knowledgeable of how our system is supposed to work," said department spokesman Sgt. J.C. Mosier.

Only hours before his arrest, Mattiza — a five-year veteran of the department — took a marked $100 bill from a man he thought had been stopped for drunken behavior, Mosier said. Mattiza's prisoner was actually a fellow officer staging an inebriated act and carrying marked money, he said.

In a written statement, Houston Police Chief Lee Brown emphasized "the vast majority of our police officers are professionals of high integrity" and that the alleged crimes by Mattiza were an "isolated incident."

BEWARE

Before you invest in a treadmill, ask these questions.

1. Can you walk on it first and try it out?
2. Will they deliver it?
3. Will they assemble it?
4. Do you have to pay extra money for a year warranty? If so, why?
5. Do they have a LOCAL serviceman?
6. Will it start at ZERO m.p.h. (Like you do) or does it force you to start at 1.5 m.p.h.
7. Does it have a full year warranty or a disappointing 90 day warranty?
8. Does it have at least a full one horsepower motor, or an underpowered ½ H.P.?
9. Is it noisy? (it won't get any better)
10. Can they put you on a personalized program to meet your fitness needs?

If the answer to any of these questions is no, BEWARE – A Bargain treadmill today could be an expensive mistake tomorrow.

STATE IN BRIEF

GTE files for rate reduction rehearing

AUSTIN (AP) — GTE Southwest Inc. has filed for a rehearing with the Public Utility Commisson, saying the panel's order requiring the company to refund about $128 million in overcharges was unfair.

GTE officials said the PUC's ruling last month that the refunds be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1987 would hurt the company and its customers.

"The financial health of the company would be substantially impaired if the order is allowed to remain without further revision — particularly in the area of retroactive refunds," said GTE Southwest president E.L. "Buddy" Langley.

In addition to the refund for overcharges, the PUC voted to lower GTE's rates by about $59 million. GTE had requested an $81.4 million rate increase.

Langley said that during the two years of disputed charges, GTE was earning less than its approved rate of return.

Because of this, Langley said the commission's order on refunds on revenues collected two years ago "is simply unfair."

Unemployment drops

DALLAS (AP) — The state unemployment rate in February fell to 6.7 percent from 7.1 percent in the previous two months, the first decrease since November, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said Friday.

Bryan Richey, regional commissioner for the bureau's southwest region, said 39,000 more Texans were working in February than in January and December.

Gov. Bill Clements said the announcement "should come as wonderful news to all Texans who have worked so hard to bring our economy around."

"Certainly, it's the hard-working people of our great state who deserve all the credit for the strength in our economy," Clements said. "Because of their dedication and their commitment to our future, the Texas economy is barreling back."

But Richey downplayed the change, saying the numbers are "not statistically significant" but are "in the right direction."

Texas employment is more directly tied to swings in the local economy than other areas, Richey said. The oil and gas industry dictates the direction of the labor force, he said.

Louisiana 'mudbug' winner

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Louisiana returned fire and declared immediate victory in the four-day war of words with Texas over who has the best crawfish.

"Texas is a Third World country when it comes to crawfish," said Karl Turner, executive director of the Louisiana Seafood Promotion and Marketing Board.

"The weight of world opinion is on our side. The war is over."

The battle began Tuesday when Texas' commissioner of agriculture, Jim Hightower, derided Louisiana crawfish as "smelly, mud-coated, itty bitty and slow-witted."

Replied Turner on Friday: "Louisiana crawfish are better, tastier, fresher and firmer, and everybody knows it."

As for Hightower, Turner said, "I wonder if he knows the difference between a crawfish and an armadillo."

Divorced couple re-marries

DUMAS (AP) — Two nursing home residents who divorced each other more than 25 years ago remarried Saturday.

Pauline Hobgood and Raymond Smith married each other a second time in a ceremony before dozens of relatives and friends in the Dumas Nursing Center.

"They're making my brother and I very happy by remarrying," said Norma Jean Stewart of Dumas, the couple's daughter. "The family has always hoped they would get back together."

Houston seeks alternative to corporal punishment

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston school board took a step toward eliminating corporal punishment for the next school year, directing Superintendent Joan Raymond to find an alternative way to teachers and principals to discipline students.

Ms. Raymond, who said she is opposed to spanking in schools, had suggested the board approve a "no-swats" policy for the 1989-90 school year.

"It is time to bring corporal punishment to an end in HISD," Ms. Raymond said, vowing to replace corporal punishment with a more effective program. "Our teachers are not police or security guards."

With few exceptions, board members agreed that corporal punishment should not be used by educators; however, the plan is not supported by the Congress of Houston Teachers.

"It is time to bring corporal punishment to an end in HISD. Our teachers are not police or security guards."
— Joan Raymond, directing superintendent

"The Congress believes that corporal punishment is an option that educators need to retain. If parents approve, why should we disapprove?" President Dick Miller said during the Friday meeting. "We believe it would be a mistake to get more permissive."

Current policy requires that parents indicate at the beginning of the year whether their child may be spanked.

But board member Brad Raffle said he believes spanking is an ineffective punishment, and that abuse is "inevitable."

An elementary school teacher and principal have been charged recently in separate cases where excessive use of force was alleged.

"I don't believe it's effective in any way," Raffle said. "It shows kids that using physical force is a way of getting what you want. And that's not right."

Board member Elizabeth Spates, who opposed the change, said she is concerned about the teachers.

"I agree that some people use it and some abuse it, but until I see a plan that can convince me, I will not support taking away the privilege," Spates said.

Corporal punishment opponent Jimmy Dunne of Houston praised the school board's decision as a step toward more peaceful classrooms and better learning conditions.

"We're delighted, of course," said Dunne, a former teacher who organized People Opposed to Paddling Students (POPS) to fight corporal punishment. The group has supported a statewide ban on school spankings.

"It will be a big step forward," he said. "There will be more peaceful schools, less vandalism and higher test scores. Teachers will get more respect because they will give more respect."

Texas paddles more than twice as many students as any other state, a U.S. Department of Education survey of 1985-86 figures showed.

Labor rallies boost Eastern strikers

MIAMI (AP) — Labor rallies boosted the spirits of striking Eastern Airlines workers Saturday while the struggling carrier attracted travelers "like gangbusters" to its bargain Northeast shuttle and worked to restore routes.

Aircraft were again reported flying near capacity on the second day of $12 fares on the Northeast shuttle linking New York with Washington and Boston, once Eastern's most profitable service. The pre-strike fare was $99.

"The shuttle's going like gangbusters," said Eastern spokesman Robin Matell. "This ($12 fare) has just created a tremendous groundswell of interest in traveling between the cities."

Joe Scott, an Eastern spokesman in New York, said the shuttle remained popular Saturday, but ticket lines at LaGuardia Airport were not as long as they were Friday.

Many flights were crowded with college students heading home for spring break. Because the hourly shuttle works on a first-come, first-serve basis, many passengers waited for hours before getting on a flight.

Matell suggested the solidarity of pilots honoring Machinists union picket lines might be cracking. "We have more than 200 pilots now, and yesterday we had inquiries from about 300 pilots inquiring about procedures for returning to work," he said.

But Air Line Pilots Association spokesman Jim Bost, an Eastern pilot for four years, discounted that report, saying: "So far they are still hanging tight with us. As far as we can tell the line is still holding solid."

Machinists leader Frank Ortis said the pickets' resolve was unwavering, despite urgings from Eastern to return to work.

"Management is calling people to go to work, saying it's all over," Ortis said. "This is company rhetoric, and we're telling members disregard that — we're still on strike."

Meanwhile, corporate shuffling by Eastern parent Texas Air Corp. continued as Eastern Express, a non-union commuter carrier that fed Eastern flights, was renamed Continental Express. Non-union Continental Airlines, another Texas Air company, has picked up some Eastern routes since the strike began March 4.

At Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, civil rights leader Jesse Jackson joined machinists, pilots and flight attendants on picket lines for about 10 minutes, donning pilots' caps, shaking hands and kissing babies. About 1,000 people attended a related rally.

Bombing investigated as possible terrorist act

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Federal agents with brooms and metal detectors focused Saturday on the burned-out wreckage of a van driven by the wife of the Navy captain who mistakenly ordered the destruction of an Iranian passenger jet.

Officials said the case was being investigated as a possible terrorist attack.

The home of Capt. Will Rogers III, commander of the USS Vincennes, was sealed off and he and his wife, Sharon, were in hiding. There were reports they had received threatening calls about the missile strike on the airliner.

The van remained in the cordoned-off intersection where it exploded and burned Friday, moments after Mrs. Rogers got out when she heard a noise.

There also was increased security at the several military facilities in San Diego, the nation's largest Navy complex.

The van was the center of intense scrutiny Saturday by investigators from the FBI and other federal agencies, who had a command post set up nearby.

"We are into an exhaustive, painstaking, lengthy investigation to determine what type of bomb it was, what was used in it, how it was detonated," said Thomas Hughes, the agent in charge of the San Diego FBI office. "...There are fragments...that would lead one to believe this was a pipe bomb."

However, he said at a briefing Saturday that it had still not been determined whether it was a pipe bomb.

Investigators set up barrels covered with sieves and sifted through debris collected from the area shortly after Friday's explosion. Other investigators swept beds of plants lining the avenue with metal detectors.

The debris will be taken to a lab in Washington. Bomb analysts from the Los Angeles FBI office and the Washington FBI explosives unit were at the scene.

The roofs of buildings in the area also were being searched for any kind of evidence, Hughes said.

"Teams of investigators are running out just hundreds and hundreds of leads," Hughes said.

He said the Rogerses were being kept in a secure location. Their son, who attends school in upstate New York, was notified and offered protection, the FBI said.

Hughes declined to comment when asked about a report that a red car was seen behind Mrs. Rogers' van and made a quick U-turn after the explosion.

Rogers, who joined his wife at a nearby police station after the bombing, had driven the van earlier Friday, The New York Times quoted a Bush administration official as saying.

The couple's home was kept behind a security seal, with authorities blocking the street so far away that the house was not visible to reporters.

Three official-looking vehicles with heavily tinted windows were allowed through the barricade Saturday.

A Justice Department source in Washington who spoke on condition of anonymity said investigators suspect the bombing was the work of terrorists. However, local FBI investigators would not confirm that theory.

"This could have been perpetrated for some other reason unknown at this time," Hughes cautioned.

Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini called for an all-out war against the United States after the Iran Air passenger plane was shot down.

Some members of the Iranian Reolutionary Guards have entered the United States as students, Oliver B. Revell, executive assistant director of the FBI, said earlier in the week. He said there was a "hard core" of 200 to 300 Iranians who were of concern to his agency.

Senate could drop charges against judge

WASHINGTON (AP) — On a crisp October morning, William Borders drove out of a suburban motel parking lot with a garment bag packed with cash and an FBI undercover agent beside him in the front seat.

Minutes later, the high-living and well connected Washington attorney was under arrest and headed down to the road to a five-year prison term. But that was far from the end of the tale.

After seven years, District Judge Alcee L. Hastings of Miami is still waging a stubborn fight to hang onto his black robe as the Senate prepares for his impeachment trial arising from events of that fateful day, Oct. 9, 1981.

If convicted, the 52-year-old Hastings, Florida's first black federal judge, would not face criminal penalties. He was acquitted of conspiracy by a jury in 1983 and he claims that verdict should have settled the matter.

The outspoken Hastings, however, does stand to lose his seat on the bench and his $89,500 salary if the Senate convicts him.

"This isn't some agriculture bill we're talking about," Hastings said in February following a Senate Rules Committee session. "This is my office."

The Senate this week takes up a Hastings move for dismissal of 16 of the 17 charges in the bill of impeachment approved Aug. 3 by the House, 413-3. They say he plotted with Borders to obtain a bribe and lied about it at the 1983 trial. Another count says he improperly divulged data produced by a wiretap and thus torpedoed a federal investigation.

The Senate plans to hear arguments on Wednesday and make its decision concerning dismissal of the charges on Thursday.

Presentation of evidence, if it comes to that, will take place later before a special Senate committee with videotapes of the proceedings available for senators unable to attend the sessions. When that will happen is unclear, but Hastings attorney Terence J. Anderson says it should not happen at all.

"The Senate should ask itself, can a trial that is fair be conducted?" Anderson says. "Is it feasible? Is it practical? is it possible? And if the answer is no, the Senate should just say, we're not going to do it, we're not going to take the time out from our schedule and subject the man to this ordeal."

But both sides are digging in for weeks of skirmishing.

Hastings has been going on Washington radio shows in recent weeks and urging sympathizers to attend the Senate session.

Hastings stands accused of conspiring with Borders to obtain a $150,000 payoff from brothers Frank and Tom Romano of Miami who had been convicted of skimming more than $1 million from a Teamsters pension fund loan..

In return, say authorities, Hastings planned to restore to the brothers more than $1 million they forfeited because of their conviction and guarantee them no prison time.

The Romanos, however, both of whom have since died, had no interest in paying a bribe.

They did send a go-between to a meeting in a Miami paint and body shop with Borders associate William Dredge, a North Miami antique dealer. But the two brothers wanted no part of the proposed fix.

That did not stop the FBI. Dredge, under indictment in a Baltimore narcotics case and eager to please, was persuaded to introduce retired agent H. Paul Rico to Borders under the name of Frank Romano.

Hastings did appear at the appointed hour but scoffs at the notion that he did so as a signal in a bribe plot.

Space Shuttle Commander Michael Coats relaxes in the cockpit of a modified Gulfstream jet, used for practice landing approaches similar to the space Shuttle orbiter, early Saturday morning.

Shuttle expected to launch on time

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Discovery's countdown was running smoothly Saturday and back on schedule for Monday's launch, after high wind stalled the countdown for seven hours during the night.

There were no reasons to believe the launch would not go as scheduled, said Robert Crippen, NASA's deputy director of shuttle operations.

"We don't have any significant issues that we are working," Crippen said after a Saturday afternoon mission management meeting. He added that the weather was expected to cooperate for Monday's liftoff.

Launch preparations were stalled for seven hours after wind gusting to 40 mph slowed some of the final maintenance and testing on Discovery late Friday. Loading of liquid oxygen and hydrogen fuel for the spacecraft's electricity generating fuel cells, scheduled to have started at midnight, was delayed until 7 a.m. Saturday.

Ronald L. Phelps, launch preparation test director, said the countdown schedule had a planned eight-hour hold. That hold was reduced to one hour, and workmen cleared the launch pad and began loading propellants.

By then the wind had calmed considerably.

"Losing those seven hours really didn't hurt us much," Phelps said. Despite the problems, he said, the countdown has "been one of the smoothest" ever.

Discovery's liftoff is set for 8:07 a.m. Monday. Forecasters predicted improving weather through the weekend with clear skies and calm winds by launch time.

Once in orbit, the crew of five will deploy a $100 million communications satellite and conduct scientific experiments during five days in orbit.

Monday's launch will be the third since NASA's shuttle flights resumed after the hiatus that followed the explosion of the shuttle Challenger in January 1986.

Discovery's commander, Navy Capt. Michael L. Coats, and his pilot, Air Force Col. John E. Blaha, practiced shuttle landings early Saturday in a training aircraft modified to handle like the shuttle. All of the crewmen later spent an hour flying T-38 jets.

Others on the crew are Marine Col. James F. Buchli, Marine Col. Robert C. Springer, and Dr. James P. Bagian, a physician.

The astronauts arrived at the Florida spaceport Friday and said that after a four-year wait they were ready for orbit.

The crew originally was named in 1985 to fly a mission the following year. But the Challenger explosion that killed seven astronauts delayed all shuttle flights.

Discovery's launch is the first of seven scheduled this year. NASA hopes for routine, monthly shuttle flights by 1992.

Man weathers 148 snake bites; Viper dies

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The first time William Haast brought home poisonous snakes, his horrified mother left home for three days. She came back only because she realized her son's interest wasn't about to slither away.

At 78, Haast remains a self-described "snake-aholic," who has kept his energy and enthusiasm though he just weathered his 148th snake bite. It is not surprising it was the viper, not Haast, who passed on.

Haast is founder and director of the Miami Serpentarium Laboratories, which he started in Miami in 1946. He relocated the lab to Salt Lake City five years ago to concentrate on venom research and production.

Haast claims to be the first to standardize snake venom and produce it for research use. His clients include Wyeth Laboratories, the only producer of antivenins in North America, and almost every university in the country.

U.S. plan for Third World debt calls for voluntary loan increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration has shifted gears and put forward a new plan to deal with Latin America's debt crisis — one that envisions major reductions in the billion-dollar debt burden.

The proposal, unveiled Friday by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady before an audience of international bankers, members of Congress and leaders of international lending institutions, is getting generally positive reviews.

Brady called for a "great cooperative effort" among all nations to solve the 7-year-old crisis.

"Our objective is to rekindle the hope of the people and leaders of debtor nations that their sacrifices will lead to greater prosperity in the present and the prospect of a future unclouded by the burden of debt," Brady said.

The plan marks a shift from Reagan administration policy under the so-called "Baker Plan," which opposed writing off the obligations of the debtor nations. The plan, devised in 1985 by then-Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, now secretary of State, suggested a voluntary increase in loans by the commercial banks in return for basic economic reforms by the debtor nations.

Instead, the new proposal endorses voluntary efforts on the part of commercial banks to forgive part of the $400 billion they are owed by the largest debtor countries, such as Mexico, Venezuela and Brazil.

And to encourage the banks to forgive portions of the debt, the administration is calling on the 151-nation World Bank and its sister organization, the International Monetary Fund, to help provide guarantees for the remaining debt owed by the poor countries.

A frequent critic of the Reagan policy, Sen. Bill Bradley, D.-N.J., termed the new proposal "a significant change of direction."

He warned, however, that it would have no chance of success unless the administration created a special post of "debt ambassador."

Michel Camdessus, managing director of the IMF, praised Brady's initiative as "timely and welcome."

Camdessus said he looked forward to working with Brady to implement the plan, and urged other countries to give it "a positive response."

"The secretary is correct to emphasize the importance of continued economic reforms in the debtor countries" and the need for further loans to the Third World and a reduction in their debt, Camdessus said.

He said banks should be more flexible in their treatment of the problem.

Foreign reaction was also generally favorable, with Japanese Finance Minister Tatsuo Murayama telling reporters in Japan that the his government welcomed the Bush initiative and pledged an unspecified amount of financial backing.

The United States is counting on Japan to recycle a portion of its huge trade surpluses into support for Third World countries.

President Bush had asked Brady to review the former administration's debt policy.

Last week's riots in Venezuela, one of the most politically stable democracies in Latin America, added some urgency to the review.

More than 300 people were killed in disturbances that erupted after the government announced new austerity measures aimed at satisfying international creditors.

The Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. estimates that the foreign debt of the 15 principal borrowers, including 10 Latin American countries, rose to $505 billion last year, with interest the countries had to pay totaling $42 billion.

The debt owed by all Third World countries totaled $1.32 trillion at the end of 1988, up from $800 billion in 1982, the year the debt crisis first erupted with the announcement by Mexico that it could not meet its obligations.

The largest debtor country is Brazil, with $110 billion owed, followed by Mexico with $107 billion owed. Other big debtors are Argentina, $50 billion, and Venezuela, $33 billion.

Solar flare possibly largest ever

HOLLOMAN AIR FORCE BASE, N.M. (AP) — The latest in a series of solar flares was 36 times the size of Earth — possibly the largest ever recorded — with the potential to disrupt radio and telephone transmissions, astronomers said.

The solar flare extended some 70,000 miles into space Thursday, said researchers at Sacramento Peak, just east of Holloman and Alamogordo.

"The report I got from Sacramento Peak...is it's the largest one they've seen — ever," said astronomer Tom Duvall at Kitt Peak National Observatory near Tucson, Ariz. "This is pretty exciting for us up here."

It was the fourth solar flare since Monday.

Air Force Maj. James B. Near Jr., commander of Holloman's solar observatory in the Sacramento Mountains, said Friday the flare was the size of 36 Earths. He said the Air Force captured it on videotape.

Astronomers at Kitt Peak said its size was difficult to measure since the blast emanated from a volatile area on the sun's surface that is now facing the Earth.

"It's a very disturbed area — probably two to three Earths in diameter," said Tom Folkers, a technical specialist and telescope operator at Kitt Peak.

The violent eruptions created the potential to disrupt long-range communications on Earth — such as short-wave transmissions and satellite links, researchers said.

Folkers said ultraviolet radiation and X-rays hit the Earth's upper atmosphere at noon Thursday, just eight minutes after the solar blast. Such radiation travels at the speed of light, he said.

Slower-moving particles, such as hydrogen molecules, are expected to pelt the outer atmosphere for days as a result of the phenomenon, he said.

"What happens when you have a solar flare is that the cosmic particles hit the ionosphere and shatter it," Folkers said.

The ionosphere, about 120 miles above the Earth's surface, normally reflects radio transmissions back to the surface, said Folkers, who said he studies solar flares as a hobby.

After it is broken, the ionosphere gradually reassembles and regains its reflective ability, he said. Meanwhile, people listening to short-wave broadcasts might notice that stations tend to fade out, Folkers said.

Elizabeth Diane Downs, the convicted child killer who escaped July 11, 1987, from the women's prison in Salem, Ore., is escorted out of state police headquarters in Salem following her capture July 21, 1987.

Convicted child killer looks forward to upcoming book, plans to marry

By HENRY STERN

CLINTON, N.J. (AP) — Convicted child killer Elizabeth Diane Downs, who describes herself as the most hated woman in America, giggles nervously as she talks of her plans to marry a former police officer from Oregon.

The 33-year-old former mail carrier, one of Oregon's most notorious criminals of modern times, also smiles a lot when she talks about a new book about her trial which is due out this spring.

Ms. Downs was sentenced to life in prison plus 50 years for killing her 7-year-old daughter and wounding her two other children on a rural road outside Springfield, Ore., on May 19, 1983. An appeal of the conviction was set aside without comment on Jan. 4.

She was transferred to the Correctional Institution for Women in New Jersey after she escaped in July 1987 by scaling a fence at the Oregon Women's Correctional Center in Salem. She remained at large for 10 days until she was found with a group of men less than a mile from the prison.

Prison authorities believe she has less chance of escaping in New Jersey because she doesn't know anybody here and she would have no place to run.

Prison guards at Clinton say Ms. Downs keeps to herself, but associates say she thrives on publicity. As one guard put it, "The last thing her ego needs is another interview."

"She sees a camera and her whole world brightens," says Ann Rule, a Seattle-based author whose book, "Small Sacrifices" about the Downs case rode the best-seller list of The New York Times for 25 weeks this year.

"I don't believe she has any emotion for her children beyond the fact that they're her possession and somebody took them away from her."

Prosecutors charged that the children were shot because Ms. Downs believed they interfered in her relationship with a boyfriend who did not want to be a father.

Ms. Downs contends that a stranger flagged down her car shot her and the children. She was wounded by a single bullet in the left arm.

"What happened the night of the shooting was so horrendous, so unexpected, so unbelievable," Ms. Downs said in a recent jailhouse interview. "I'm very self-disciplined and I need to have control of my own existence. I just reached a point of not knowing what was real and what wasn't."

Cheryl Lynn Downs, 7, was killed. Fourteen year-old Christie Ann was left handicapped in her speech, 9-year-old Danny is paralyzed from the waist down. The lead prosecutor in the case, Lane County Assistant District Attorney Fred Hugi, adopted the children.

Ms. Downs says she spends her time exchanging letters with her new fiance, whom she described as a former police officer who saw her on "The Oprah Winfrey show" and wrote her because he felt sorry for her.

"Anybody who would want to be involved with the most hated woman in America must be a nut," Ms. Downs says. "But he's not a wacko. He's genuine."

She declines to indentify the man except that he's a former Oregon police officer who has since moved to New Jersey.

"I'm lucid. I've been married before and I said I never would do it again. But I'm in love," said Ms. Downs, who was married for eight years to Steve Downs, an electrician and farm laborer.

Kim White, a state Corrections Department spokeswoman, confirmed that Ms. Downs has asked the department for permission to marry the man. Ms. White also would not identify him.

Urban poverty seen worsening; Escape growing less likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poverty in America's cities has grown more persistent and concentrated over the last two decades and its victims have less chance of escape, according to a report by the National League of Cities.

The study describes a changing face of poverty since 1970, with the nation's poor more likely now to live in metropolitan areas and concentrate in low-income neighborhoods.

It said the proportion of children living in poverty has increased and the likelihood of people climbing above the poverty level has declined.

"Poverty in cities is changing in quality and intensity," the report said. "It is more persistent among particular households, more concentrated within particular neighborhoods, and more isolated from traditional avenues of escape."

> "Poverty is more persistent among particular households, more concentrated within particular neighborhoods, and more isolated from traditional avenues of escape."
>
> — National study

The league released its report, "Poverty in Cities," as nearly 3,000 municipal leaders gathered in Washington for the organization's annual winter meeting, which runs through Tuesday.

"Both the figures and the trends are alarming," Alan Beals, executive director of the National League of Cities, said in releasing the report. "Such conditions are devastating for those caught up in it, especially children."

The report, an analysis and compilation of previous research, said poverty in America declined through much of the 1970s, to a rate of under 12 percent at the end of the decade. But a resurgence brought the rate to more than 15 percent by 1985, and the average rate for the years 1980 through 1987 was over 14 percent, the league said.

The portion of the nation's poor living in metropolitan areas grew from 62 percent in 1979 to 70 percent in 1985 — an increase of 7.6 million people, with the majority living in central cities, it said.

The report said the persistence of poverty — that is, the length of time a person remains poor — has grown. It cited previous studies of the proportion of urban poor in a given year who escaped poverty the following year and said in the late 1960s, that figure was 32 out of 100.

Called the "escape probability," the figure rose to 37 out of 100 in the mid-1970s, meaning that poverty became less persistent, but began declining and was 23 out of 100 by the early 1980s.

"There has been a substantial decrease in the chances that a poor person will escape poverty within the following year," it said.

An increase was also recorded in the proportion of poor residents of big cities who live in neighborhoods that are classified as extremely poor — where at least 40 percent of residents live below the poverty line. Among the 50 largest cities, the concentration-of-poverty rate increased from 16 percent in 1970 to 24 percent in 1980 — meaning nearly one-quarter of the large-city poor lived in extremely poor neighborhoods.

The report said poor neighborhoods of large central cities have become increasingly isolated from the rest of the metropolitan areas, with more clear differences in socioeconomic and physical conditions.

As more ghetto dwellers live in more isolated deprivation, their opportunities for jobs, training and other means of climbing out of poverty are reduced, it said.

The study said blacks and Hispanics were more likely than whites to live in extremely poor neighborhoods, and poverty among blacks was more persistent than for other groups. More than 21 percent of blacks living in big cities were persistently poor throughout the 10 years between 1974 and 1983, it said, compared to a rate of less than 3 percent for non-blacks.

The poverty rate among children, it said, grew from 16 percent in 1979 to over 20 percent in 1985, which it called "a startling increase."

The report was written by Mark Alan Hughes, assistant professor at Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School.

Democrats, Republicans signal quick confirmation likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, burned by the bitter partisan struggle over the nomination of John Tower as defense secretary, is moving with lightning speed on the selection of Dick Cheney with both Democrats and Republicans predicting quick confirmation.

Cheney

Almost as soon as President Bush announced his choice Friday, Sen. John Warner, ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, consulted with Sen. Sam Nunn, the chairman, and told reporters hearings on the nomination would begin this week.

"They will probably be related to policy issues and thereafter the issues of background and financial data will follow and as soon as that material is completed, the committee will complete its actions and send the nomination to the floor," said the Virginia senator.

The quick schedule, which Warner summed up in seconds, bears no resemblance to the Tower confirmation proceedings that dragged on for nearly seven weeks and ended with a rancorous debate that divided the Senate.

Tower, whose 24-year stint in the Senate included chairmanship of the Armed Services Committee, was dogged by allegations of excessive drinking, womanizing and conflict of interest for his lucrative defense consulting work.

Senate debate on the nomination was unprecedented because of its detailed discussion of Tower's alcohol consumption, questions about the use of material from a confidential FBI report and various angry accusations and insinuations flying back and forth among the debaters.

A bit of anger lingered Friday when Vice President Dan Quayle prepared a speech accusing Democrats of engaging in "a McCarthyite mudslinging campaign" against Tower and waging an "assault on the powers of the presidency."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole, commenting on the Cheney nomination, got in a dig. "This time it will be a confirmation, not an execution," he said.

Whatever the undercurrents of resentment, Bush and Senate Republicans were talking quick confirmation of the 48-year-old Cheney, a six-term conservative congressman from Wyoming who served as White House chief of staff during the Ford administration.

As minority whip, Cheney is No. 2 in the House Republican leadership structure.

"I believe this will go very fast," Bush said in announcing the nomination. "I believe we will have smooth sailing."

The president said Friday he would order the FBI to speed up its background checks to get the nomination moving. "Too much time has been wasted here," he said.

GOP members of the Armed Services panel said they did not foresee any roadblocks to confirmation and there was nothing from Democrats to challenge that assessment.

"I do not know what possible skeletons could exist in that closest," said Republican Sen. Malcolm Wallop, a fellow Wyoming politician.

Warner called Cheney "a wonderful, perfect nomination" while Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, No. 2 Republican on the Armed Services panel, said the nominee is "a man of integrity and dedication."

"He's widely respected in Congress and a first-rate choice for quick confirmation," said Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va.

"He's a very able and impressive person," said Sen. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee. "He's one of the smartest people in Congress."

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine said he was "pleased that President Bush has moved quickly" and added that Cheney "has served with distinction in the U.S. House of Representatives since 1978."

The true gauge of Cheney's prospects will be Nunn, the powerful committee chair who led the fight to defeat the Tower nomination. The Georgia Democrat was reserved in his reaction, issuing a joint statement with Warner that called Cheney "well known and highly respected by the members of the Senate."

Later Nunn told reporters, "I know of no impediment to his nomination."

Unlike the twice-divorced Tower, Cheney has been married for 28 years — to Lynne Vincent of Caspar, Wyo. She is a well known Washington figure herself, currently as head of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Democrats to set aside debate over Tower

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Democratic leaders of Congress endorsed Saturday their party's search for a new agenda and signaled President Bush that they are willing to set aside the bitterness of the debate over John Tower.

In a joint appearance at the annual meeting of the Democratic Leadership Council, House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell made pointed references to the need for a bipartisan foreign policy.

For his part, Bush also appeared eager to put the Tower debate behind him. Within 24 hours of the rejection of his first choice for secretary of defense, the president selected Rep. Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., for the post and Democrats greeted the choice warmly.

"Notwithstanding the Tower nomination debate, I believe our first objective must still be to re-establish a bipartisan foreign policy," Mitchell told the DLC.

"We shall seek avenues of agreement with this new president," said Wright. "We'll support a bipartisan foreign policy and many of Mr. Bush's domestic goals. But we'll not be subservient."

"It is a Democratic tradition to take the risk of proposing new ideas and defending them," said Mitchell. "It is a Democratic tradition to have an agenda."

Sen. Jim Sasser of Tennessee sounded a more partisan note when he said, "The fresh breeze that we heard in January has rapidly turned into the doldrums of March."

He described the new Republican administration as "a government adrift" and said, "It appears there is a policy vacuum at least for the time being."

While there was widespread agreement on the need for a bipartisan foreign policy, the Democrats were engaged in a sometimes heated debate on the direction the party should take on domestic issues.

The DLC was formed four years ago by officeholders determined to stem what they saw as the national party's leftward drift.

Wright warned that the idea that Democrats must choose between representing the poor and minorities on the one hand or middle class whites on the other was "quite possibly the most foolish suggestion I have ever heard."

"To make a choice between the interests of the median income Americans and those of the less fortunate who want only to scale the ladder to join the median income ranks would be an act of self-defeating folly," said the House speaker.

Democratic Party Chairman Ronald H. Brown told the DLC the party must define what it stands for and that Democrats "must not lose our sense of direction or our sense of confidence."

Brown praised the DLC for developing a public service proposal now endorsed, in part, by Bush.

"Republicans think community service is something you are sentenced to after you are caught," quipped the chairman.

Jury awards parents $600,000 in donor trial

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — A couple was awarded $600,000 by a jury that ruled doctors at a university hospital acted recklessly in removing organs from the couple's brain-dead son without permission.

The Monongalia County Circuit Court jury deliberated for just over two hours Friday before awarding Ronald and Carolyn Crawford of New Freeport, Pa., $500,000 in compensatory damages and $100,000 in punitive damages.

The Crawfords had asked for $400,000 in their lawsuit against the state Board of Regents, which ran the hospital — then called West Virginia University Medical Center, now WVU Hospitals Inc. — at the time of Adam Crawford's death on July 27, 1984.

Adam Crawford, 17, became ill July 19, 1984, while playing basketball at a camp near Waynesburg, Pa. He was taken to the WVU Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead eight days later after suffering a brain aneurysm.

HOW THEY VOTED

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending March 10, 1989.

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate kills Tower nomination. In a stinging rebuke of President Bush, the Senate March 9 voted 47-53 to reject the nomination of former Senator John Tower to be secretary of defense. The vote capped a partisan — and sometimes bitter — debate on the troubled nomination.

The vote marked the first-ever rejection for a president of his initial nominee to a cabinet post. Throughout U.S. history, only nine prior cabinet nominees have been rejected, the last almost 30 years ago.

Supporters of the embattled nominee maintained that Tower's service as chairman of the Armed Services Committee gave him unparalleled qualifications for the job. They dismissed allegations of personal impropriety as rumor and innuendo, and cited Tower's pledge of temperance as evidence that alcohol would not impair his ability to perform as secretary.

"We are living in critical times and we ought to get the best possible man we can get for the position, and I know of no one better qualified than John Tower," said Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. "We should not go on gossip and innuendo. We should go on facts."

Opponents of the nomination cited concerns about Tower's drinking habits, alleged womanizing and recent ties to military contractors as reasons not to confirm the nominee.

"[In three areas — the use of alcohol; the provision of consulting services to defense contractors...[and] instances of indiscreet behavior towards women — John Tower falls short of the high standards which must be demanded of those who would bear the awesome responsibilities of secretary of defense," said Sam Nunn D-Ga., the powerful chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Voting to confirm John Tower to be secretary of defense: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).

Voting against: None.

Weeks of tension explode into violent Tibetan clashes

WORLD

CHENGDU, China (AP) — Weeks of small-scale Tibetan protests, arrests, tightened security and wild anti-Chinese rumors built up to last week's violent clashes in Lhasa, according to Western and Tibetan sources.

They painted a picture of steadily mounting tension in Tibet's capital and persistent acts of defiance by Buddhist monks and nuns who have initiated most protests since Chinese troops entered Tibet in 1950. The sources' identity and whereabouts cannot be revealed for fear of reprisals.

Tensions burst last week, they said, when Tibetans tried to commemorate two anniversaries: a March 5, 1988, clash with police that left 24 people dead, and a March 10, 1959, uprising against Chinese rule in which hundreds died and Tibet's spiritual and temporal ruler, the Dalai Lama, fled to India.

The commemorations brought more bloodshed: 16 dead and more than 100 wounded by official count, many more by Tibetan count.

Pressure began building shortly after a Dec. 10 clash, when police fired on marchers, killing at least one monk and a Tibetan child. Twenty days later, students from Tibet University held a brief peaceful march to protest the police action.

On Jan. 3, city education officials said students who even stood on the sidelines of future protests would be expelled, according to a copy of their order shown to The Associated Press.

Buddhist monks at Lhasa's leading monasteries, meanwhile, decided to boycott a major prayer festival because Chinese authorities broke a promise to increase the quota of people allowed to become monks.

The official media did not report the boycott. They said the festival was canceled out of respect for the Panchen Lama, Tibetan Buddhism's second-ranking religious leader who died of a heart attack Jan. 28.

The Panchen Lama's death led to new tensions. A rumor began circulating that the overweight, 50-year-old monk was assassinated, because days before he died he criticized Beijing's policies in Tibet. No evidence was produced, but the rumor triggered a small protest, Tibetans told an American traveler.

Another rumor said Chinese plans to renovate the Potala in Lhasa were an excuse to destroy part of the revered 17th century building. The huge stone palace on a hill, Lhasa's most prominent feature, was seat of Tibet's theocratic government. In recent years it has been turned into a tourist site.

On Feb. 3, monks at Lhasa's Sera Monastery hoisted the banned snow lion flag over their buildings, where it flew all morning without police action.

Three days later, on Tibetan New Year, Lhasa residents woke to see the nationalist flag flying over the Jokhang Temple, Tibetan Buddhism's most sacred site. Pilgrims tossed white ceremonial scarves to the roof.

"There must have been hundreds of scarves piled up by midday," said Steve Marshall, of New Orleans, who witnessed the silent protest. The flag was taken down in the middle of the night.

Four times in late February and early March, small groups of monks and nuns walked around the Jokhang carrying a picture of the Dalai Lama or chanting independence slogans.

Tibetan witnesses and one participant said bystanders intervened several times to hustle marchers away before they could be arrested.

But the police also seemed anxious to avoid confrontation. Instead, said one Tibetan, they photographed the marchers in order to arrest them later. He reported seven arrests.

Advance word about the March 5 protest, circulated among Tibetans, indicated it also was planned as a small-scale event.

The pattern broke when police opened fire.

From then on, the Tibetans' anger turned on anything Chinese. They vandalized their stores and stoned Chinese cyclists.

Still unclear is why police shifted tactics.

Martial law imposed midnight Tuesday remained in force Saturday, with heavily armed soldiers manning checkpoints throughout the city.

More anniversaries are coming. March 17 is the day the Dalai Lama left Lhasa for India in 1959. On March 19 and 20, 1959, the Chinese army used heavy artillery to suppress the uprising.

Most protests have been the work of individual monasteries. There is no evidence of a central resistance organization.

Disarming Contras to be considered

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Honduran officials and rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government will meet in Washington this week to discuss a peace plan that includes disarming the rebels, a Honduran official said Saturday.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Eugenio Castro said in a telephone interview the meeting will be held Monday and Tuesday. He refused to give further details.

Officials in Washington could not be reached immediately for comment.

In February, the presidents of Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica agreed to the peace proposal, which includes freeing hundreds of former Nicaraguan national guardsmen and free and open elections in that country.

As part of the agreement, the leaders said they would draft a plan by May 15 to disband the 11,000-member rebel force fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

Remains of the Air Ontario flight lie at the end of a path of broken and burnt pine trees in Dryden, Ontario, on Saturday. The crash killed 24 and 22 bodies are still missing.

Search continues for missing bodies in crash

DRYDEN, Ontario (AP) — Rescue workers using snowmobiles and plows searched the snowy woods near Dryden on Saturday for bodies and clues to the cause of an Air Ontario jet crash that killed 24 people.

Provincial police said two of the 47 survivors brought out of the forest after Friday's crash died later in hospitals. Twenty-two bodies still were missing.

At least eight of the injured were in serious condition, said provincial police Constable Bill Brayshaw.

At midafternoon police issued a statement saying no bodies were found. It asked private helicopter pilots carrying journalists to stop flying over the crash site because they were disrupting communications. Access to the area remained restricted.

The Dutch-built Fokker-28 was headed for Winnipeg, Manitoba, with 69 people aboard when it clipped treetops, plowed into the woods and burst into flames just after taking off in a snowstorm.

Some survivors walked out of the woods on their own, many without coats or shoes in the deep snow.

"All we saw was snow and fire and pieces of metal flying," passenger Danny Godin told the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. He said the plane broke apart and, "Most people were yelling, screaming and just scrambling."

Godin said the plane "was loaded very heavy...We were delayed in Thunder Bay an hour and we had to take fuel off the airplane because we were above the legal load limit."

"It was like struggling — you could hear the (plane) shuddering," said passenger Paul Tagger, 43, of Appleton, Wis., who escaped with bruises.

A stewardess, he said, shouted: "Oh my God, we're going to crash. Get down! Keep your heads down!"

Airline vice president Paul McKnight denied the plane was overloaded.

Flight 363 originated in Thunder Bay, an Ontario city on the north shore of Lake Superior. It made a brief, scheduled stop in Dryden, a paper-mill town of 6,500 people about 200 miles northwest of Duluth, Minn., to pick up passengers, and took off about 1 p.m.

UN expected to sign ozone policing pact

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Leaders from 24 nations were expected to sign a pact asking the United Nations to police efforts to curtail ozone-destroying chemicals and other air pollutants, a Dutch government official said today.

The accord is expected to be adopted later today at the Peace Palace, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. Scheduled to sign are Jordan's King Hussein, as well as presidents Francois Mitterrand of France, Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, Daniel arap Moi of Kenya and Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe.

The meeting arranged by the Dutch government follows an ozone conference of 123 nations earlier this week in London. At that session, 20 countries promised to join 33 nations that have already agreed to halve emissions of ozone-destroying chemicals by the end of the century.

The United States and the 12-nation European Community have gone further. They have pledged to try to ban the chemicals, called chlorofluorocarbons, by 1999 if safe alternatives can be developed.

The compounds have widespread use in aerosol spray cans and refrigerators, as well as in the electronics and plastics industries.

The new pact, billed as the "Hague Declaration," says the United Nations should be given authority to set and monitor air pollution rules, according to a Western diplomat familiar with the document's contents. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

However, the proposal would be an agreement in principle without legal force on the nations that sign it, the diplomat said.

He said the document does not specify whether there should be a new U.N. body to fight air pollution or whether the new responsibilities should fall to a strengthened U.N. Environment Program, which is based in Nairobi, Kenya.

Either way, he said, the United Nations would get authority to "define standards to enhance or guarantee the protection of the atmosphere and monitor compliance," the diplomat quoted the Hague document as saying.

The participants at the conference discussed the gradual depletion of the delicate ozone shield that protects Earth from cancer-causing solar radiation and the rise in global temperatures known as the greenhouse effect.

Government leaders at the Dutch gathering included West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, and premiers Felipe Gonzalez of Spain, Ingvar Carlsson of Sweden and Gro Harlem Brundtland of Norway.

The Hague document says the World Court should back up U.N. efforts to control the chemicals, the diplomat said.

He said details of the proposal will be worked out in the next few months and a broader international accord on atmospheric pollution is expected to be signed by October. Any changes in U.N. authority would also need approval of the body's General Assembly in New York.

Red noses raise millions for charity

LONDON (AP) — Britain's love affair with plastic red noses raised millions of dollars for charity for the second straight year, organizers said Saturday.

Millions of Britons donned the clown-like protuberances Friday and put them on cars, planes, mountaintops, statues and pigtails in 50,000 fund-raising events capped by a seven-hour Red Nose Day television spectacular.

One jogger, Sam Freemantle, streaked two miles through a Bristol shopping center wearing only a red nose.

Comic Relief, the coalition of comedians and aid groups that organized the event, said Saturday it expected to raise far more than the $27 million collected from the first Red Nose Day last year.

Television viewers had pledged $17.9 million by Saturday morning, far above the $4.3 million pledged at the same time last year.

In addition, 6 million shiny red noses were sold at pubs, stores and charity shops for 86 cents each. Another 2 million larger models for trucks, taxis and cars went for a $1.72 apiece.

"It is unbelievable," said a Comic Relief spokesman, commenting on condition of anonymity. "People have been offering us cars and percentages from the sale of their houses."

Two-thirds of the money raised will go to Third World projects and the Save the Children Fund, and the rest to programs in Britain to help young people and the elderly.

Benny Watts, 20, from Taunton in Somerset, will remember his contribution forever: he raised $515 by having two red noses tattooed on his buttocks, and he dropped his trousers in his local pub to prove it.

In Bournemouth, an armed gang wearing red noses burst into a Post Office and pistol-whipped the postmaster but fled empty-handed.

Ailing South African president trying to fight effort to oust him

By DAVID CRARY

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Since a recent stroke, President P.W. Botha has lost his stature as the domineering master of South African politics. Suddenly, he is depicted as a tragic figure, clinging to power against the wishes of former loyalists.

Those who have done Botha's bidding for a decade now are engaged in a concerted campaign to push him into retirement. Botha signaled his intention to fight back, but there has been a dramatic lack of public support for the man whose tough tactics earned him the nickname "The Great Crocodile."

The result, for the moment, is a power struggle between Botha and his heir apparent, Education Minister F.W. de Klerk.

De Klerk took over as leader of the governing National Party when Botha resigned that post Feb. 2, two weeks after his stroke.

Since then, de Klerk has consolidated his support among Nationalist members of Parliament and has made no move to disavow reports he wants Botha to quit the presidency.

Botha, 73, struck back last week by announcing he planned to return to work March 15, two weeks earlier than expected. He gave no indication he was considering early retirement or a power-sharing arrangement with de Klerk.

De Klerk and three senior party leaders emerged tight-lipped from talks with Botha on Thursday. The talks were "incisive" and will resume at a later date, de Klerk said.

"The Crisis Continues," said the front-page headline the next day in Beeld, a pro-government daily.

De Klerk briefed members of the National Party caucus about the talks with Botha. Although sworn to secrecy, several legislators were quoted anonymously in the press as saying there was almost unanimous support in the caucus for de Klerk and widespread anger at Botha's perceived intransigence.

South African political correspondents reported many caucus members blamed Botha's attitude on misleading information provided by his inner circle of advisers during his recuperation. Because of this misinformation, several reports said, Botha underestimated the depth of caucus support for de Klerk and overestimated its loyalty to the president.

In the aftermath of the de Klerk-Botha meeting, there was sympathy for the president among party officials, wrote Business Day political reporter Mike Robertson, "because, having been sheltered by his personal staff, it was probably the first time he had been confronted with the reality that virtually the entire caucus wanted his reign to end."

But there is no evidence any such sympathy translates into active backing. There have been appeals for Botha to be allowed to step down with dignity, but there have been virtually no calls for de Klerk to pull back and leave Botha in total command.

There also are doubts about the president's health. Botha indicated in his statement Thursday doctors feel he is ready to resume work. But his left arm was trembling markedly during his only post-stroke public appearance last month, and his daughter, Rozanne, was quoted Friday as saying she was "extremely worried" about her father's condition.

De Klerk, 52, is widely viewed as more pragmatic and open-minded than Botha, although he is not expected to push through radical political changes. Many South Africans are seeking the transfer of power in hopes it will change the mood in the country, with de Klerk's relatively conciliatory approach replacing the sometimes bullying demeanor of Botha.

De Klerk's brother, Willem de Klerk, a former newspaper editor who broke with the government because of his opposition to South Africa's system of racial segregation, recently wrote a magazine article assessing a possible de Klerk presidency.

"As a good negotiator, he is certain, within the system, to defuse some of the tension that has accumulated under the Botha regime," he wrote of his brother. "He is by nature a democrat...He is fair, friendly and humble."

Negotiations continue to cut arms in Europe

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Analysts say prospects are good for cutting conventional arms in Europe because of the similarities in the initial proposals of NATO and Warsaw Pact nations.

"The starting positions are quite reasonable (and) give plenty of room for compromise," said Richard Fieldhouse, a research fellow at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute in Sweden.

The 16 nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the seven of the Warsaw Pact began negotiations Thursday in Vienna on reducing conventional arms in the region.

"We are not really that far apart," chief U.S. negotiator Stephen Ledogar said after the opening session. Soviet negotiator Oleg Grinevsky said the gaps were not insurmountable.

"It looks like there's political will (and) interest to do the things required for an agreement," Fieldhouse said Friday. "The question is: Can those things be maintained — are they real and are they permanent?"

Negotiators will be under enormous pressure to succeed. A 15-year effort to cut those weapons in Central Europe failed.

In their starting proposal, NATO negotiators called on the Warsaw Pact to cut tanks, artillery and armored troop carriers. NATO would make smaller cuts of 5 percent to 10 percent in those categories.

In its initial offer, the Warsaw Pact proposed a first-phase reduction ranging between 10 percent and 15 percent of the lowest level of arms held by either side.

The percentage cuts proposed by each side are not far apart, although the East wants the trims to include aircraft, which Western officials oppose.

NATO contends the Soviets and their allies have built up a huge superiority in conventional weapons in Europe. The alliance wants the East bloc to make much greater cuts in their forces to bring the two sides to equal strength.

Analysts said the Soviets appear ready to follow the West's call for greater East bloc reductions to reach parity in the weapons systems.

They noted Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's recent promises of reductions in his nation's troops and defense spending.

"You don't make unilateral cuts unless you recognize you have a lot and too many," said Fieldhouse. "That's a big point in favor of progress."

Iran-Iraq's peace talks make progress, U.N. envoy reports

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — A U.N. official says Iran and Iraq are making progress toward breaking their stalemate and agreeing on a permanent peace in their Persian Gulf war.

"We may be on the right track," said Swedish U.N. Ambassador Jan K. Eliasson, the special U.N. envoy to the gulf talks. He would not discuss specific proposals that have been considered by the two sides.

Eliasson met for two days last week with Iranian diplomats led by a deputy foreign minister, and held meetings Wednesday and Thursday with the Iraqis, led by U.N. ambassador Ismat Kittani.

The talks are aimed at arranging a meeting between Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati and his Iraqi counterpart, Tariq Aziz.

"We discussed with the parties, at length, both matters of procedure and matters of substance, and how we are now to best proceed to make progress," Eliasson told reporters.

"I would say we are making some progress when it comes to defining the framework, the shape of the talks, and we hope this progress will continue and will be evident on the ministerial level, the political level," he said.

Former Somoza guards to be freed next week

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The government will free nearly 1,900 former members of ousted President Anastasio Somoza's national guard on March 19, the chief of state security said.

Ortega

Commander Lenin Cerna said the jailed guardsmen will be freed after the National Assembly formally approves a pardon request from President Daniel Ortega.

The pardons are the result of agreements signed by Ortega and the presidents of El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica at a Feb. 13-14 summit in El Salvador.

Cerna, who presides over a commission overseeing the releases, said no restrictions will be placed on the former guardsmen. They will be free to leave the country, he said Friday.

Ortega said earlier this week that 41 ex-guardsmen would remain in jail.

The president defended the plan to pardon the former guardsmen, who were jailed after the leftist Sandinistas ousted Somoza in a 1979 revolution.

Ortega called on Nicaraguans to give guardsmen who are released "the opportunity to reintegrate themselves into society."

"The guardsman who wants to rejoin society has nothing to fear," Ortega said. But he warned that those who "return to their criminal activities" would face "popular anger in its full force."

The 1,894 prisoners will be released during a ceremony at the Modelo Prison in Tipitapa, 14 miles west of Managua, Cerna said.

Uprising cost Israel $666 million in 1988

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Palestinian uprising cost Israel $666 million in 1988 and nearly wiped out its economic growth, and it may exact a similar toll this year, a Cabinet minister was quoted Saturday as saying.

Gad Yaacobi blamed the losses on higher military spending, reduced production, and lost tourism and foreign investment. Yaacbi, of the left-leaning Labor Party, was economics minister until November, when he became communications minister.

Arab reports said four Palestinians were wounded in clashes with troops Saturday. The army confirmed two injuries.

Israel radio quoted Yaacobi as saying Israel's $35 billion economy grew 1 percent last year, instead of a forecasted 2.5 percent. In 1987, it grew 5 percent.

At the same time, the value of goods and services in the occupied lands shrunk from $1.5 billion in 1987 to $1.2 billion, according to Palestinian economist Samir Abdullah.

A spokesman for Yaacobi, Naama Henig, said Saturday that Yaacobi believes the revolt against Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip may have the same drastic economic effects this year.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, meanwhile, said Palestinian leaders have expressed support for his proposal to hold elections in the occupied territories to choose a delegation for direct peace talks with Israel.

"I have received hints that the approach I proposed appeals to not just a small number of the leading figures among the residents of the (occupied) territories," Rabin said in an interview Israel radio broadcast Saturday.

His remarks came after leading Palestinians rejected the plan, saying the Palestine Liberation Organization is their sole representative and elections only can be held after Israel withdraws.

"The people here will not elect a leadership to be in competition with the PLO," Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, a political moderate, said Saturday. "It will only drive a wedge between us and our brothers on the outside."

Four Palestinians, including a 12-year-old boy, were shot and wounded in Saturday clashes with Israeli troops in the Gaza Strip, Arab hospital officials said. The army confirmed two wounded.

Since the uprising began Dec. 8, 1987, 394 Palestinians have been killed. Seventeen Israelis have died.

Rabin outlined a troop redeployment plan to "reduce the burden" of reserve soldiers by cutting their duties from a maximum of 62 days a year to 44 days.

"In Gaza and the West Bank, regular forces and fewer reserve troops will serve in areas known as trouble spots," Rabin said. In addition, specially trained border police units will take over some areas.

The radio interview was broadcast a day after the army shifted some troops out of Gaza Strip refugee camps. It marks a shift in government policy from emphasizing a widespread army presence to using fewer, but better-trained anti-riot units.

The redeployment also came as Foreign Minister Moshe Arens left for a 10-day visit to the United States, where he is expected to encounter pressure to reduce friction in the occupied lands.

Casualty number 'very high' around key Pakistan city

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A week of fierce fighting between Moslem insurgents and Afghan government forces holding a strategic city has killed scores of Afghans and injured hundreds, a guerrilla spokesman said Saturday.

Thousands of guerrillas blasted Jalalabad in a relentless attack with long-range rockets and heavy artillery, said Mohammad Shoaib of the Jamiat-e-Islami insurgent group.

The city, Afghanistan's fifth-largest, is seen by the guerrillas as a stepping stone to the capital of Kabul, 75 miles to the west.

"Fighting is close to and around the city," said Shoaib. "There are rumors that some mujahedeen (guerrillas) have entered the city from the north, but there is no confirmation."

Several guerrilla sources said the insurgents now control a key government garrison on the outskirts of Jalalabad, which lies about 45 miles west of the border with Pakistan, where many guerrilla groups are based.

The guerrillas captured as many as 500 government troops in the battle for the post, said Naeem Majrooh of the Afghan Information Center, which opposes the government.

Majrooh said casualty figures "are very high. Most of the deaths are from mines and bombardments."

The government of Afghan President Najib said 1,500 guerrillas had been killed in the weeklong fighting around Jalalabad. It did not give figures for government forces.

Shoaib said the latest death toll he received was about 100 with many more insurgents injured.

Western journalists returning from the Afghan-Pakistani border said a convoy of ambulances was headed for Pakistan, where most of the guerrillas have their bases.

The International Committee of the Red Cross runs a hospital in Peshawar, Pakistan, about 30 miles from the border, and the staff reportedly was working around the clock treating war wounded.

Soviet psychiatric abuse investigated

MOSCOW (AP) — U.S. officials said Saturday following an unprecedented inspection of Soviet mental hospitals that they could not determine whether patients still are held because of their political beliefs.

A team of psychiatrists, lawyers and interpreters interviewed 27 patients and former mental patients in a review spurred by Western charges of widespread psychiatric abuses.

The Soviet Union withdrew from the World Psychiatry Association in 1983 under pressure from the West. It has pledged to end abuses and hopes to be readmitted this year to the association.

At a news conference Saturday, the Americans refused to discuss individual cases or their conclusions about the Soviet mental health system.

"We will not deny that this has been a very sensitive and difficult undertaking to carry out to our full satisfaction," said delegation leader Robert W. Farrand of the State Department's Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs.

Asked if he could say if there were any political prisoners still in Soviet mental hospitals, Farrand responded that "no one can prove the negative."

He said, however, that the human rights situation in the Soviet Union had improved substantially. The number of people the U.S. government lists as political prisoners is "well down" from 750 two years ago, Farrand said.

"We would not have agreed as a government to come to Moscow in 1991 for a human rights conference if we had not been convinced that the question of political prisoners had, in the main, been resolved," he said.

The team's lead psychiatrist, Dr. Loren H. Roth of the University of Pittsburgh's Law and Psychiatry Program, said Soviet officials were late in providing some medical records and that some patients had been discouraged from consenting to interviews.

However, he said the group eventually was able to interview those people.

Delegation sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said they had no indication of retribution against patients who gave interviews.

Yuri A. Reshetov, head of the Soviet Foreign Ministry's Office of International Cooperation and Humanitarian Affairs, said there are no political prisoners in mental hospitals.

But he said some people named on Western human rights lists may be "undergoing treatment due to specific concrete actions against the law."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Two Sikhs given life terms for killing guru

LONDON (AP) — Two Sikh men angered by the teachings of a religious leader were sentenced to life in prison for killing the guru as he spoke to hundreds of his followers.

Rajinder Singh Batth, 39, and Mangit Singh Sunder, 26, wearing orange turbans, chanted, "God is great, victory to the God," as they were led to their cells at the Old Bailey Central Criminal Court.

Judge James Miskin said the two took part in a "disgraceful preplanned slaughter" on Nov. 11, 1987, that left three people dead and one wounded.

Miskin sentenced both to life in prison and recommended Batth serve a minimum of 30 years and Sunder at least 20 years.

Prosecutor Jean Southworth said the gunmen were fundamentalists whose target was Mahraj Dharshan Das, 34, who arrived in Britain in 1980 and led the breakaway Sikh sect called Shahkand Nanak Dhan, which has 7,000 followers.

The plotters decided to kill him for criticizing Sikh separatists who want an independent state in India, she said. They also objected to him being called a guru.

"What stuck in the gullet of some Sikhs was that Das was not born a Sikh," Miss Southworth said.

The prosecutor said Das traveled from his home in Birmingham to Southall in west London, 100 miles away, to address hundreds of supporters in a school.

Civil guards slain at bank

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA, Spain (AP) — Two women and a man armed with pistols entered a branch of the Bank of Spain in this northwestern city and killed two Civil Guards, police reported.

They said the killers fled without taking any money.

Friday's attack was blamed by police on terrorists of the left-wing GRAPO organization, but no individual or group asserted responsibility.

GRAPO is a Spanish acronym for the 1st of October Revolutionary Anti-Fascist Group.

The organization became inactive in the early 1980s after scores of terrorist assaults but on Oct. 4 two women and a man shot to death a policeman stationed at a government office in Madrid and GRAPO claimed responsibility.

8 Americans killed in crash

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A small twin-engine plane slammed into a two-story building in a Lima suburb, killing the eight American tourists and two Peruvians aboard, the U.S. Embassy said today.

The plane, owned by the privately owned Aerocondor airline, crashed into a partially constructed building in heavy fog Friday evening. Witnesses said the engines were sputtering before the plane slammed into the building, which belongs to the University of San Martin de Porras.

The embassy identified the Americans as, John Howe, 81, and his wife Barbara, 72, of Hagerstown, Md; Robert Fisher, 66, and his wife Ruth, 62, of Moorestown, N.J.; Dorothy Menzies, 77, and her daughter, Virginia Fennel, 48, of Hickory, N.C.; Virginia Hall, 78, and her granddaughter, Mary Shuford, 28, also of Hickory, N.C.

Investigators have not said what caused the accident.

Oil refinery fire spurs panic

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — An oil-refinery tank caught fire during a thunderstorm and hundreds of residents fled in panic as smoke and fumes enveloped the area, police reported.

They said there were no casualties from Friday's blaze at the state-owned refinery in Sapugaskande, 10 miles north of Colombo, and the fire apparently was caused by lightning.

"People began running from their homes near the refinery fearing the fire would spread to the other 24 tanks" in the refinery, a police official said.

Stacy family seeking help

From Staff Reports

Three years ago, an active three-year-old Becky Stacy fell victim to a most bizzare accident involving a toy bow and arrow set.

For Becky to survive a bow piercing her brain and severing the cerebral artery in a freak accident in August 1985 was a miracle.

That first night, the Stacys were warned that Becky probably wouldn't survive. And if she did, doctors said she wouldn't be the same Becky.

The doctors were wrong about the first prognosis and partly right about the latter.

Now, three years later, Becky is walking with only a limp. Her right leg still drags and the right foot still turns upward. But she isn't letting that stop her.

"Becky has made a remarkable comeback in spite of losing a portion of her brain," said her mother, Joy Stacy. "Today she is an inquisitive and happy six-year-old."

Becky fell from her "Big Wheel" tricycle on to the plastic bow, which imbedded itself in her brain, leaving her in an unconscious state for more than a week.

One doctor described it as the "freakest accident" he'd ever seen.

Emerging from a coma knowing little more than a newborn baby, Becky has spent the past three years painstakingly fighting her way back with intensive physical therapy.

Becky's mental capabilities presently lag about a year behind other children the same age and she has frequent memory lapses, her mother said.

According to Mrs. Stacy, the family needs money to continue Becky's special education at the Developmental Disabilities Center, a non-profit organization which provides treatment to children in need of special care.

Because tuition costs $4,200 per year, the Stacys are calling on Midlanders to bring about another miracle. They're asking for donations to help pay for her tuition so she can make up for the three years she lost and lead as normal life as possible.

Two funds have been established in Becky's name to help pay for the cost of her special education.

Donations or gifts should be sent to Rebecca Stacy c/o The Developmental Disabilities Center, P.O. Box 5732, Midland, Texas, 79704; or The Becky Stacy Fund c/o Living Way Foursquare Church, 415 Alta, Midland, Texas, 79705.

Curt Wilcott Reporter-Telegram

Becky Stacy, who three years ago suffered a near-fatal freak accident, is in need of funds to continue her special education program at the Developmental Disabilities Center.

Abell-Hanger Club event encourages student involvement

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Jody Nix and the Texas Cowboys are coming to Chaparral Center Friday night for an evening of music, food and dancing.

The popular Big Spring-based country music ensemble is playing under the sponsorship of the college's Abell-Hanger Club, composed of students attending MC with help from the Abell-Hanger Foundation.

Students formed the club three years ago as an expression of appreciation for the foundation's financial support.

At present, hundreds of local high school graduates are attending Midland College on scholarships provided by Abell-Hanger. About 110 of those students belong to the Abell-Hanger Club, the largest on campus.

MC student Ralph Nall, who also is the club's public relations officer, said the group's ultimate aim is to solicit more involvement by students in the various civic-oriented activities in the community.

"We want to get more involvement on campus and in the community because we have a big membership and there's so many people going to school out here on the scholarship," he said.

Dr. Stan Jacobs, an art history instructor and chairman of the Fine Arts Division at Midland College, is the club's first faculty sponsor.

"We've really done more this year than we did the past two years," he said, referring to the two benefits the club sponsored last fall.

Among those was an enchilada supper held in conjunction with Midland College's Christmas tree lighting ceremony. The money raised went to Salvation Army's Dress-a-Live Doll program.

In the coming months, the group plans other fund raisers and activities to benefit needy Midlanders.

Said Jacobs: "We want to let the Abell-Hanger Foundation know that we are doing something; that students are not just taking this money and going to school."

In it's first large-scale fund raiser, the club is planning a Texas-sized celebration to welcome Nix and his band to Chap Center.

Activities get under way at 7 p.m. with food, followed by the concert and dance from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets are priced at $7 each and may be purchased at the Chap Center box office.

Nix, who was invited to play in Washington, D.C., as part of President Bush's inaugural events, plays the same type of music made popular by his father for many years ... with some of the contemporary country music mixed in.

A portion of the proceeds from the event will be contributed to the High Sky Children's Ranch.

Other officers of the club include David Monroe, president; Lance Gibson, vice president; Kathy Chilcoate, secretary-treasurer; and Tom Reneau, parliamentarian.

Career ladder may get new rungs

MISD considering changes in its bonus plan

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

When competing for the top levels of riches on the state-mandated career ladder, the more modest needs of the many override the greater demands of the few, Midland school administrators have decided.

After weighing the pros and cons of three options, the administration Tuesday will recommend that Midland school board members approve lowering bonuses so the ladder can hold more teachers, said Tom Holland, executive director of human resources.

If approved by trustees, stipends would go from the maximum allowed by the state to the minimum.

With about $1.28 million budgeted for career ladder payments, the 304 Level II teachers will receive $2,000 this year, while the 105 on Level III will receive $4,000.

Using the same budgeted amount next year would leave only $250,000 to split between next year's ladder newcomers. MISD has 1,014 teachers.

Under the administrative proposal, Level II would pay $1,500 and Level III, $3,000, leaving $507,515 for those selected this year to receive their first ladder payments in the 1989-90 school year.

Another considered option was $1,750 for Level II and $3,500 for Level III, leaving $389,000 for prospective ladder climbers.

Each year the state awards $70 per student based on average daily attendance to MISD to fund the career ladder, with about 35 percent of the funding from local revenues, Holland said, adding that the district will spend about $447,000 on the 1988-89 stipends.

Unless average daily attendance grows drastically, Holland said it will become increasing difficult to pay all teachers who qualify for the ladder each year.

Placement is based on appraisal scores, hours of outside training and experience. One of a number of appraisers — principals, assistant principals, subject coordinators and four hired scorers — pays two visits a year to a ladder teacher and four to one not on the ladder. A teacher must spend two years at Level II before qualifying for Level III.

A career ladder committee of teachers and administrators began studying options earlier this month. Holland, committee chairman, said the group felt that lowering the supplements and including more teachers was fairer.

"It's not a clear-cut issue," Holland said. "The important thing is that the Midland teachers have done an excellent job of complying with the requirements and improving their appraisal scores. They tend to cluster more at the top of the scale than at the bottom."

Because payments start at the top of the scoring ladder and run down until the money disappears, 35 teachers met minimum state Level II requirements but did not make the local supplement cutoff, Holland said. The margin of appraisal scores between those who almost made and those who did was very narrow, he added.

"It's almost like they're penalized for their own excellent appraisal scores," Holland said. "It's not a local problem, it's a state problem the Legislature is going to have to work out."

Undecided on the issue, trustee Kenneth Morrison said he doesn't look forward to voting on the local ladder's fate.

"This is one of those situations where I wish we could crawl under the desk and hide," Morrison said. "Whichever way we vote, it's going to make somebody mad. I can see both sides.

Board President James Fuller, however, said he disagrees with the proposed recommendation.

"Although it would be good to include more people, in the final analysis I feel we need to be consistent with the career ladder policy we have now," Fuller said.

Stanton group unites to save convent

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — Heritage is taking priority in Stanton, otherwise known as Marienfeld, where some history-conscious folks hope to restore an old adobe convent and to heighten West Texans' awareness of the past.

"West Texans don't appreciate what they have," speculated Jim McGilvray, who has a penchant for restoring old houses and preserving more than just vestiges of the past.

McGilvray, the Martin County attorney who formerly practiced law in Houston, said he is loathe "to stand by and see an old historic structure rotting down."

"It's a beautiful structure," McGilvray said of the adove convent, which is dressed with clapboard and plaster, decked with a second-floor balcony, and crowned with roof-top dormers. "It is unique to the area," he said.

"I've restored houses in Houston, and enjoy doing that," said McGilvray, who is converting the old motion-picture theater here into a townhouse.

Throughout West Texas, many old ranch and farm houses, weathered over the years, have suffered from disuse and neglect. Some older downtown houses and buildings, both homely and stately, and some quaint old rock-and-stone courthouses in Texas have "bit the dust" in the name of progress, development, shucking the past, and ushering in the "New Age."

Stanton historian June Reid, who helped establish the Martin County Historical Museum, reflected on heritage: "We have got to know where we have been before we know where we are going."

Some Stanton leaders, who almost revere the foundations of the past, formed the Martin County Convent Foundation in an effort to restore the two-story Convent of Our Lady of Mercy, which was founded here in the 1890s.

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Jim McGilvray is among a core of Stanton citizens who are working to restore the town's old convent, which dates back to late last century.

The convent was established in the former Catholic Monastery, which was constructed by an Order of Carmelite priests in the early 1880s about the time Texas & Pacific Railway lines and steam locomotives moved westward through West Texas.

The priests, who set up a mission which developed into St. Joseph Catholic Church, elected to call the town-site Marienfeld — the "Field of Mary" — in honor of the Virgin Mary. The T&P Railway withdrew the name Grelton, which had been the name of the T&P station, telegraph office and pump station at the town-site.

The monastery was turned into a theological center, a parochial school was built, and the Sisters of Divine Providence of San Antonio were placed in charge of the school.

In 1894, the Sisters of Mercy took over the school. And the old Carmelite Monastery became the Convent of Our Lady of Mercy. The sisters built additional buildings, including dormitories for boys and girls, and classrooms, and named the complex The Convent and Academy of Our Lady of Mercy.

Earlier, the community called Marienfeld had prospered in the abundant seasons of 1884 and 1885 but was beset by drought and blizzards in ensuing years. Families were forced to abandon their homes.

Nancy Bednar, surrounded by her students at Bonham Elementary School, is the latest Teacher of the Month recipient honored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Educator at Bonham honored

From Staff Reports

One of the things Nancy Bednar likes most about teaching is the expression on her children's faces when they understand what she's explaining to them.

Sensitivity like that earned the Bonham Elementary educator the Midland Chamber of Commerce's February "Teacher of the Month" award.

Ms. Bednar, a native of Liberty, has lived in Midland the past 11 years with her husband, Roger, and her 13-year-old son, Paul.

A 22-year veteran of the classroom, she received her degree in elementary education from Abilene Christian University in 1966.

Because her mother was a teacher, Ms. Bednar says that's all she ever wanted to do. She feels her position is "very important and essential in the community."

Texas trucker sent to prison

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Texas trucker described by his family as a gentle man driven to desperation by personal problems has been sentenced to four years in prison for a car-ramming rampage that terrorized motorists for 40 miles.

Although a county probation report recommended that Charley Tom Lee be placed on supervised probation, Superior Court Judge Judith Chirlin sentenced him to state prison, saying his actions had instilled fear and terror in drivers.

Lee, 26, of Haltom City, Texas, pleaded guilty Nov. 18 to five counts of assault with a deadly weapon. He has been jailed since the May 18 incident in which about 30 cars were rammed but no one was injured.

He drove at speeds of up to 80 mph from Temple City to Los Angeles before California Highway Patrol officers stopped him at gunpoint on the Hollywood Freeway.

In a letter to the judge, Lee apologized and said he still could not explain the outburst.

His mother, grandmother and wife testified that Lee was a nonviolent, responsible family man.

Lee's wife, Tammy, said he had been disturbed about being unable to support his family adequately.

CONVENT

"After the drought, this German colony began to lose its identity as a predominantly Catholic community," wrote the late Franchelle Moore, a former private owner of the old convent, which was abandoned following a 1938 tornado which destroyed the academy, and damaged the church and convent.

"In many respects, the ... town had pursued the course of an average West Texas community," Miss Moore noted in a 1963 review of old Marienfeld. "Yet it had remained, with the exception of a short interval, a Catholic center for the activities of the Sisters of Mercy who operated since 1894" and until the 1938 tornado.

The community was renamed Stanton in 1890 due to Protestant influence.

School children, the story goes, had suggested that the town be renamed Stanton in honor of a respected school teacher. Some Stanton history buffs discredit the notion that the old Marienfeld was named after Edwin Stanton, who was President Abraham Lincoln's Secretary of War. The Civil War had only been over for 25 years in 1890, and spirited conflicts still were extant between northerners and southerners.

The Martin County Convent Foundation had taken over the convent project from the now-disbanded Martin County Jaycees, who had raised funds to purchase the old Convent for $25,000 from Carlsbad, N.M., investor J.J. "Pete" Pelletier. Pelletier had vain hopes of converting the convent into a restaurant but lost money in the venture.

Miles Tollison, who is foundation president, noted that many older West Texans attended the academy in their childhood and that many others are linked to the school and convent.

"In the Midland, Odessa and Big Spring areas and, especially in Stanton, we have a tremendous amount of people who had gone to school there," Tollison said. "There are so many families tied into this — the convent and the old academy."

Restoring the old convent is two-year project, he said.

"When we finally get it restored, we have to have somebody (curator-manager) there full-time."

Tollison estimated that cost of restoring the convent would be at least $250,000 and funds likely would come by way of grants and individual and corporate donations.

"That's probably the minimum we are going to get away with," Tollison said.

Kathryn Burch, who, like McGilvray, is a member of the foundation's board of directors, noted that the old convent has been fitted with a $10,000 cedar roof to protect the interior from the elements.

Next month, an architect with the Texas Historical Commission is to advise the foundation board on the building's structural soundness, said Mrs. Burch, a Texas Agricultural Extension Service agent.

Tentative plans call for converting the convent's first floor to a community center for weddings and social affairs, the second floor to offices and the attic into a museum. "Obviously, we're going to have to hire an architect," she said.

Uses will be considered for the basement.

"We think that some things (relics) will come back to the convent once it's put back together," Mrs. Burch said.

"I think about the children that have gone to school there, and it's just a link to our past," she said. "And it just feels real comfortable."

With support of the community, the foundation is "just going to do this project," she said. "I don't think there is anyway the convent will ever be restored unless every person and every club and every organization works together, and I think we will. We are just so small."

About 5,000 people live in Martin County, and about half of those live in Stanton — an agricultural community.

Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport speculated that the "key thing" now is to develop a multi-phased plan for restoration and proceed in an orderly manner."

Deavenport is a foundation board member.

"Of course," he said, "we jumped in and got the roof on it because, obviously, it had to be done."

Ruby Fern Gilmore Payne, curator of the Martin County Historical Museum, noted that the old Convent is "one of the oldest buildings in this part of the country."

"And it was the only Catholic school between El Paso and Fort Worth for many, many years, and it is our heritage," she said.

"They (young people) need to know their heritage, and they need to know their family heritage as well as their local, state, national heritage," Mrs. Payne said.

"That's part of education." Mrs. Payne said, "and that's part of growing up. It's part of having a really rounded education."

Peggy Rose Cross Creech who, like Mrs. Payne, attended the rural Courtney school in the 1940s and 1950s, supports restoration of the convent.

"I do appreciate old things," Mrs. Cross said, "and I do think it ought to be preserved."

Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders, also a member of the foundation, said the board has "proceeded as diligently as we're fixing to.

"We just haven't pursued it. Your civic work in a small town goes in a small circle."

"And the only ones that will help you are busy people," the sheriff said. "People that don't have anything to do won't help you. That's the reason they don't have anything to do. You don't want anybody that doesn't have anything to do. You want somebody that's busy."

Restoring the old convent would help honor Martin County's heritage, the sheriff added.

"We should be obligated, should be committed, to passing the heritage on to them (young people)," Saunders said. "It would be a shame to lose it now."

LADDER

"I can understand the reasons for trying to include more people on the career ladder. But it seems to me it would be changing the game in the middle of the stream."

Lee High School government teacher James Bradford, a career ladder committee member, said he sees a more inclusive system as the lesser evil.

"We should award as many people as possible," Bradford said. "I'm not for giving anybody a cut, but you have to deal with what you have."

Sam Manning, a philosophy and psychology teacher at Lee and Midland Federation of Teachers president, said he would like to see fat cut out at the administrative level, leaving more money for teachers.

"Midland has enough resources to pay teachers top dollar," Manning said. "If we can afford to pay our superintendent of schools $96,000 a year, we can afford to fund the full amount of career ladder. It (the ladder) is an extension of the salary schedule for people who meet state criteria and establish themselves as good teachers."

Kay Walling, regional representative for the Texas State Teachers Association also called both options unfair.

"Those are the choices that Midland would like us to believe they have," said Ms. Walling, adding that MISD could fully fund the program by cutting into a "top heavy" administration. "They're obviously showing their priorities.

"I think they ought to put as many on as qualified and pay them the maximum amount."

The TSTA opposed the career ladder at its creation by the Legislature in 1984, Ms. Walling said. The ladder not only has caused statewide school district budget problems but has lowered teacher morale, she said.

"We said that it would turn into a circus and there would not be enough money to fund it," Ms. Walling said. "It seems that teachers have had to jump through hoops and now won't receive their just rewards.

"People in Texas need to realize that they're going to get what they pay for."

Meanwhile, Ector County Independent School District probably will maintain its $1,800 for Level II placement and $3,000 for Level II, said Gordon Madison, personnel director.

"I don't anticipate any change, but we really haven't put the pinch on it," said Madison, whose district this year has 930 of its 1,450 teachers making Level II or III placement. "You never know what your funding is going to be from one year to the next."

Career ladder, boundary changes on MISD trustees' agenda

From Staff Reports

Decisions on two hot topics — the career ladder and boundary changes — are expected from Midland school trustees at their regular monthly meeting Tuesday.

Midland Independent School District administrators are slated to recommend lowering career ladder Level II and III supplements from the state maximum to the minimum. If approved, Level II payments would drop from $2,000 to $1,500, while Level III would see a decrease from $4,000 to $3,000.

A career ladder advisory committee of teachers and administrators favored lowering the payments so more teachers could get on the ladder.

Results of a survey asking teachers about the proposed changes also are scheduled to be presented at the meeting.

Trustees are expected to give final reading to create boundaries for George Bush Elementary School. This item was tabled at the Feb. 28 meeting because trustee Bill Sewell was absent.

The proposed boundaries would include 30 Parker Elementary School pupils and 270 Rusk Elementary School pupils in Grades K-3.

Bush would become part of the Lamar-Rusk-Crockett cluster, with fourth-graders attending Lamar, fifth-graders attending Rusk and sixth-graders going to Crockett.

In other action trustees will:

- Review requests from Bethel United Methodist Church, Faith Temple and Youth Spiritual Enlightenment to rent school facilities.
- Review an administrative request to purchase a used car for visiting teachers and night security.
- Consider revising board policy regarding grouping pupils, pupil evaluation and grading, pupil evaluation and grading and competitive extracurricular activities.

The meeting will begin at 4 p.m. in the MISD Administration Building, 702 N. "N" St. Trustees will take a dinner break between 6:30 p.m. and 7:15 p.m.

County Commissioners

Midland County Commissioners are meeting at 9 a.m. Monday in the Commissioners' Courtroom, located on the second floor of the courthouse.

At the meeting, commissioners are expected to:

- Open bids on a car for the Constable's Office.
- Open bids on a lease car for the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.
- Discuss County Road 115.
- Consider a request to vacate a plat of the Bobby Howard Acres subdivision.
- Execute a lease agreement with the Midland County Judicial District Adult Probation Department.
- Execute an indemnity agreement with the city of Midland concerning the use of the city gymnasium by law enforcement personnel.
- Discuss the trust account depository.

Mayor Carroll Thomas has proclaimed March 12-19 as Camp Fire Birthday Week in the city of Midland.

The national youth organization will celebrate its 79th birthday on March 17. The Petro-Plains Council of Camp Fire Inc. is celebrating 24 years service in the Permian Basin.

Special activities have been planned for Birthday Week, including a picnic and birthday party at UTPB Park in Odessa today at 1 p.m.

Camp Fire is open to youths between the ages of 5 to 18. Programs include club activities, camping, mini-ventures and self-reliance programs.

In his official proclamation, Thomas commended the group's "contemporary programs and speaking out on issues that affect youth and their families ... helping kids cope with their changing world."

Drug threat calls for use of aid

The drug threat facing America poses an awesome challenge that will doubtless require this nation to devise new ways to combat the "enemy." That can be difficult when the "enemy" isn't always easy to define.

Law enforcement officers and federal agencies are doing what they can now on the streets and in the alleys of communities across the land to stem the availability of drugs.

But the heart of the problem — the countries producing the drugs — still lies away from this nation and until that situation is addressed, the drug dilemma will continue.

Stemming the flow of narcotics from these foreign countries is an essential first step in winning the war, yet, incredibly, Washington often looks the other way for political reasons.

As a result, global production of coca, marijuana, opium poppies and hashish has risen sharply in the past year, according to data compiled by the State Department. Much of it will be shipped to the United States — illegally — to feed the habits of drug users.

Fortunately, that situation can be changed. Under a 1986 law, Washington has the power, in theory at least, to impose sanctions on foreign governments that condone or ignore drug trafficking. In practice, those sanctions have been imposed against nations with which the United States has strained relations, or none at all — Panama, Afghanistan, Iran, Syria, Laos and Burma. But friendlier nations rarely feel the full brunt of sanctions. Lebanon, a nation that the United States has clashed with for years, is a prime example. It has been regularly faulted for doing too little to combat the drug trade but has not been penalized because of "national interests."

Those interests, of course, typically involve delicate diplomatic moves intended to improve the country's relations with the United States. That's the hope, but more often than not, what really happens is that the United States is placed in a Catch 22 position. For example, harsh economic penalties against Colombia or Peru might lead to civil and political unrest. The same result might occur in Pakistan or Afghanistan, both politically volatile.

Those concerns are legitimate, of course, but they shouldn't obscure the long-range goal of eradicating drug supplies. The more drug-producing nations realize they will escape penalties because of Washington's other interests, the less incentive those governments have to act decisively.

America cannot impose her society's morals or values on another country, but neither should she condone another country's social mores that are injurious to our society by continuing to treat those countries with "kid gloves." There's no room for playing favorites in the drug war. It's too serious a conflict, and too dangerous an enemy of America's younger generation, to be subordinated to a political agenda. At the least, curbing drugs should be as much a concern as keeping a friendly government in power, or sparing an ally from bankruptcy.

The Bush administration should send a clear message to foreign capitals that cracking down on drugs is one sure way to continue the flow of American aid — and that negligence is one certain way to lose it. That's what the 1986 law was intended to show. It's time to apply it unswervingly.

Another View:

Wholesale slaughter

No one knows how many Soviet citizens were slaughtered during Josef Stalin's reign of terror. Estimates are that as many as 20 million were summarily liquidated on orders of that ruthless dictator. From time to time, new evidence of Stalin massacres comes to light, increasing the astronomical toll.

That toll should be updated in the wake of recent allegations that Stalin's secret police — not Adolf Hitler's storm troopers — killed tens of thousands of persons whose bodies were dumped into a mass grave near the Ukrainian village of Bykovnya during the late 1930s. The shocking disclosure, yet to be acknowledged by Soviet authorities, was made by Mykola Lysenko, a retired Ukranian economist, who has made this atrocity his personal crusade.

Undaunted by reports from four U.S.S.R. commissions since 1944 accusing Hitler of these mass murders, Mr. Lysenko was determined to discover who was really responsible for the corpses stacked in pits like cordwood.

He visited the forest gravesite and interviewed elderly villagers. They told of seeing scores of convoys of tarpaulin-covered Soviet trucks that turned into the woods night after night. Although none of the villagers saw bodies being offloaded, several witnesses testified they had seen blood on the ground where the trucks were parked before proceeding into the pine forest. The same witnesses said the convoys ceased once Nazi troops occupied the Ukraine from 1941-1943.

When the mass grave came to light toward the war's end, the corpses therein were blamed on the Nazis, who had operated two concentration camps in the region. The government even erected a stone monument at Bykovnya last May with the inscription: "Here are buried 6,329 Soviet soldiers, partisans, members of the underground, and peaceful citizens killed by the Fascist occupying forces from 1941-1943."

The official explanation was generally accepted because the Nazi occupation of the Ukraine was particularly brutal. But it began to crumble as dozens of villagers came forward after years of silence to challenge the government's version. The most damning testimony came from a 74-year-old man, who said that four days after the Germans arrived in 1941, he and several friends were led into the forest to unearth the newly decaying bodies of men and women. The Germans took pictures of the bodies, which were subsequently covered over again.

The Bykovnya atrocity is still another reminder that, despite Hitler's hideous crimes, Stalin and his communist system were in a class by themselves when it came to the wholesale slaughter of innocent human beings.

Seidman can rebuild competitiveness

WASHINGTON — Half a century ago, America was helping to rebuild war-torn Japan. In a cruel trading of places, the United States now finds its economy in disrepair. We are slipping behind Japan in the race for technological preeminence in the 21st century. What the country needs is fewer people telling us how to mimic Japan and more people telling us how to recapture some of our unique magic.

Jack Anderson

We have just the person in mind — William Seidman, who recently showed he had the confidence of the Bush administration when the president handed him the sickest savings and loans in the country and told him to take care of them. Seidman is chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures commercial bank deposits. His bailiwick is not savings and loan, but the president recognized the right touch in Seidman.

His no-nonsense philosophy is summed up in a book he co-authored with Steven Skancke, "Competitiveness: The Executive's Guide to Success" (M.E. Sharpe). It reads like a Marshall Plan for rebuilding the American economy from the ground up.

Seidman avoids the popular genre of advising Americans to take up Zen and eat more raw fish. Instead, he believes in a blueprint for how American business can succeed without excuses or hocus-pocus formulas. Seidman is easy to recognize in the halls of Congress. He is the financial regulator who isn't being excoriated in the savings and loan fiasco.

The essence of his book is how, on a national scale, the United States can build a better mousetrap.

Seidman writes that most managers find productivity boring. What they don't understand is that productivity may be their salvation: "Productivity is the cornerstone of our American entrepreneurial system and the foundation for our competitive position in the world. Our productivity as a nation determines how well we live, for rising productivity remains the only 'free lunch' in economics."

Instant gratification is one of the weakest links in the American economy. Seidman thinks we may have forgotten a lesson learned by early humans: "Don't eat your seed corn or use your fence posts for firewood."

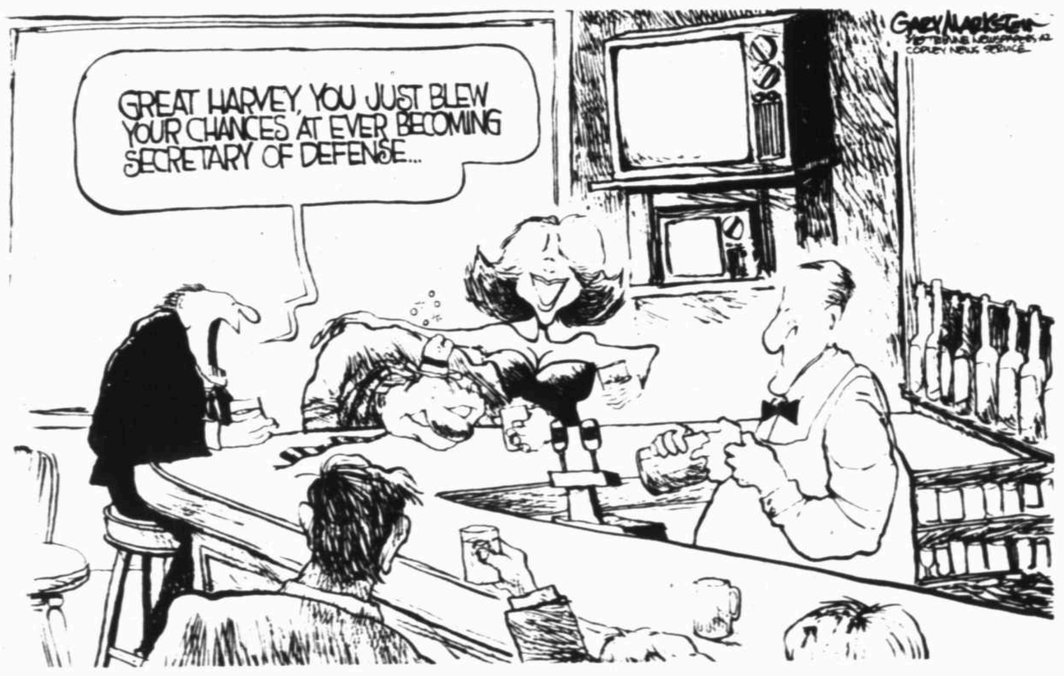

Capital investment for tools, education and research has always meant "less now for more later," Seidman says. "But today, as the speed of change accelerates, investment requirements are increasing exponentially ... But even the most sophisticated computer system is useless without trained operators; it is people that make technology work. A computerized accounting operation can be worse than a pen-and-ledger if it is operated improperly."

Investment in research and technology was once an American hallmark. It was the engine that propelled American industry, that made America a superpower. Seidman points out that as our ability and inclination to remain the leaders has declined, so has our competitive standing — challenging the old notion that the United States can outinvent the rest of the world combined.

The VCR is an American invention, but once we had it, we didn't run with it. "When American companies decided not to pursue the market opportunity, the Japanese developed it," Seidman says. "The challenge to many American businesses now, therefore, is to regain control of their great American inventiveness and technology to create the right products."

It isn't sushi, but Seidman's meat-and-potatoes approach is more suited to America's tastes.

Tattletale phone gadget has your number!

Douglas Brown writes all the way from England to protest the latest telephone gizmo, a device that lets its owner know the number from which an incoming call is being placed.

Russell Baker

The curious justification for this machine is that it will warn you if the caller is somebody you don't want to hear from. What you do with the warning I don't know, because you can't just let the thing ring itself to death, can you? Not answering a ringing telephone is impossible for a real American.

What I do when I suspect it's a nuisance calling is answer in a deep, rumbling, menacing voice. It is the voice you might hear if your call accidentally interrupted a gathering of professional hit men talking shop.

Friends who have heard this voice say it is so unnerving that they hesitate to phone anybody at all for the next day or two.

Suppose I had the new telephone gadget. Well, you say, I wouldn't have to scare friends out of their wits. And you'd be wrong. Because, look what happens: Phone rings, you look at your new phone attachment with its digital display showing the number the call is coming from, and you say, "Do I know anybody at that number?"

You can't remember, can you? If you're like me, you can't remember your own home number half the time. Once at an airport I wanted to call home but couldn't remember my number. Information wouldn't tell me because it was unlisted.

Fortunately my employer's number was listed, so I called a friend in the office, and he looked up my home number in the company records and told me. After that I made strenuous efforts to commit my home number eternally to memory.

I was so successful that when I picked up a telephone to make a call I had to make an intense effort of concentration to avoid automatically punching my own home number, even when I was at home. I got many a busy signal in those days before it dawned on me that the phone that was busy was the phone I was holding at my ear.

I am describing a brain so packed with numbers that for years there hasn't been room in the attic to put a new one. First came the flood of ZIP codes and area codes. Then the phone company killed all the old exchange names and substituted three more digits for each. Finally the custodian of my mental attic sent down the word:

"You want to put one more number up here, pal, I'm going to have to throw out some of the old ones."

So we abandoned the brain and went to little books. Now when I need the number of say, my friend Nolan, I open a little book to the N's, and there it is.

But, suppose Nolan is phoning me, and I have bought this new telephone detector: Phone rings. I look at the box. There's a number there. I'm baffled.

Could be my automobile license plate number, which I can't remember either. Could be my World War II military service number, which must have accidentally got tossed out of the brain several years ago, probably to make room for the new TV channel numbers I had to remember to get results from the cable system.

I miss that old number. Call it sentiment, but I was proud of remembering it so long after the war was over. I'd like to think it remembered me, too, and might ring me up on the phone to remind me of the good old days.

All right, a mind is apt to drift into such absurdities when confronted by a number displayed on a tattletale telephone gizmo. Daydreaming, after all, is preferable to leafing through the number book, page by page, to discover if it contains this very number being displayed as your phone rings.

This latest phone gadget must lead inevitably and depressingly to yet another: a computerized dingbat to determine with electronic certitude which calls are desirable. Means more money. More machinery. More breakdown. More obsolescence. Then, mischievous hackers loading up your computer with encyclopedia salesmen. Hysteria!

But, back to Douglas Brown's equally alarming objection: the blow to cinematic art. "In every film I have seen in the last 58 years it is never possible to 'trace that call,'" writes Brown.

"There stand the blackmailee, the spouse of the kidnapped, the bank manager whose wife is held, along with two FBI men with their headphones. The script we know and love. 'Keep 'em talking.' 'They've hung up.' 'Did you get the number?' 'No.'"

The new phone gadgetry, instantly betraying the caller's number, destroys this beloved old piece of cinematic Americana.

O Progress, thou art the father and mother of ruin.

Bush taxes pledge keeps deficit in control

WASHINGTON — President Bush, who needs handlers as much as he disdains them, deepens suspicions he sought to allay when he bounded, yet again, into the press room and quickly found himself denying that his administration is in disarray. It does him no good to give the country more exposure to himself than he can fill with interesting or merely plausible things to say, so he should go to earth for awhile.

George F. Will

The substantive thinness of his presidency was guaranteed by his way of winning it — "no new taxes" — and the thinness was proclaimed as policy in his inaugural address: "We have more will than wallet." Today's $5 trillion economy is 75 percent larger (40 percent bigger per capita) in real terms than in 1967 when Bush became a congressman. The nation's wallet is remarkably thick. The government's wallet is thin by political choice and will be kept so by Bush's policy.

Hence the imaginative energies of the political class here are increasingly squandered on intellectual dishonesties to justify evasions of the deficit problem. And the centrality of that problem guarantees a Bush presidency hollow at its moral center.

In "The Public Interest," Joseph Wright and Aaron Wildavsky denounce, with passionate disgust, the stultification of political debate by the deficit, which, like anti-communism in the 1950s and civil rights in the 1960s, has been the issue shaping debate on all other issues, from aid to friendly governments to help for the homeless. The Bush administration looks bewildered because its goals number 2,3,4,5 through the full list all are nullified by goal No. 1: keeping the government's wallet thin — "no new taxes."

This guarantees more governmental monomania. Washington usually has at most a one-track mind and Bush's taxophobia guarantees that the deficit will stifle rational debate about choices for the public household. And such debate as there is, about meeting Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction requirements, is surreal. Bush's economic forecasts incorporate GNP growth assumptions wildly incompatible with Federal Reserve policies that are necessary to achieve Bush's projected inflation rate (1.7 percent by 1994).

Interest rates are ever-larger levers on events in a nation addicted to debt. Total debt — government, business, household — has risen 200 percent in a decade, and much of the debt is pegged to the prime rate. In this decade interest, not defense, has been the fastest growing portion of the federal budget. Rising rates make that portion grow faster while the consequence of rising rates — slower GNP growth — causes revenues to grow slower than Bush's budget presupposes.

Compounded intellectual incompatibilities — administration assumptions incompatible with one another, and with predictable Federal Reserve policy — are by now a Republican ritual. This is an odd ritual for a party that advertises its realism as an alternative to Democratic wishful thinking.

The Reagan administration's first forecasts, made in March 1981, assumed that between 1980 and 1986 there would be a rate of GNP growth (25 percent) and a decline in unemployment (from 7.2 to 5.6 percent) and a balanced budget (by 1984, no less). These forecasts were utterly incompatible with the monetary policies that would be necessary to achieve serious progress toward the Reagan administration's most serious goal, reduction of inflation from 13.5 to 1.9 percent.

As things turned out, by 1986 real GNP growth had been just 16.5 percent, unemployment was not much below the 1980 level (6.9 percent) and the 1984 budget had been $185 billion dollars out of balance. The problem was that the Fed had practiced what Reagan preached, emphasizing the primary goal of suppressing inflation.

And today? There they go again, those Republicans.

The administration projects declining interest rates. They are rising. Even if they remain where they were when the administration made its projections, the deficit-reduction projection would be $9 billion off because rates did not decline. The administration projects 3.5 percent real growth in GNP for five years. Fed chairman Alan Greenspan says such growth "presupposes an increase in productivity which could conceivably happen but is quite unlikely."

Bush wants America to think beyond quarterly reports and annual budgets, to the long term. Good idea. Let's start.

The deficit, which today is larger as a percentage of GNP than ever before in peacetime when unemployment was this low, is sopping up in government borrowing a debilitating share of domestic savings. America's savings rate has fallen substantially, from an already alarmingly low base, in the 1980s. Hence investment has been inadequate. Hence productivity growth has been too slow: The growth of output per hour has been at half the 1960s rate.

Because of investment neglected and growth forgone, Herbert Stein says: "For every $100 billion of deficit we run, we reduce national income by $15 billion a year forever. Forever. That is the long term.

Tower's defeat shows changing moral climate of government

When John Tower was elected to the United States Senate in 1961, the moral behavior of public officials wasn't a focal point in the selection of politicians — or Cabinet secretaries.

Modisett

That isn't to imply that those nominated for such positions were not scrutinized in regard to their moral fiber, as well as their ability to perform the tasks the job would require. They were, no doubt, but to a far lesser degree than those in the political arena today. Particularly in terms of a politician's personal behavior.

There has been too much "water under the bridge" in the past 28 years for the American public — or the Congress, particularly — to sit idly by while an individual is confirmed for such a government position under a "cloud" (some would say a dark, rumbling cloud) of uncertainty.

Rumors of drinking and "womanizing" had followed Tower around for decades, starting even before the day in 1961 when he beat out more than 70 candidates vying for Lyndon Johnson's old seat in the U.S. Senate. Johnson was moving over in a successful Southern vote strategy to be John F. Kennedy's second-in-command. In the meantime, Tower was becoming the first Republican elected as senator from Texas since Reconstruction.

Over the next two decades Tower was becoming something of a "legend" in the Senate — at least in terms of a Republican elected by an overwhelmingly Democratic state, and threading his way successfully through the power strata of the Senate. Always strong on national defense, the diminutive Texan became recognized as an expert in that field and had been, throughout the past several administrations, regularly mentioned as a contender for the Defense Department post.

During those same 20-odd years, however, a change was taking place in the public's perception of how an elected official serving in Washington should conduct himself and, as that occurred, the perception of the morality of public servants was taking place inside the Congress as well.

Where Texas voters might not have objected to sending to the Congress two decades ago someone who might "let his hair down" on occasion, now both Congress and the public at large found Tower's confessions of past heavy drinking and marital infidelity a little too much to bear.

Both the public and the Congress had become sensitized to the possibility of scandal because of the number of politicians caught in scandalous situations in recent years and now there was much more emphasis on uncovering dark incidents in a politician's past.

The vote on Tower's nomination, which came Thursday, was indicative of a number of concerns. His nomination was turned down by a vote of 53 to 47:

■ It said clearly that politicians — whether elected or appointed — will now be held to a higher standard of conduct and morality than in the past. The Congress does not want a repeat of the shame it endured in the cases of Wilbur Mills, Wayne Hays, Gary Hart and others. It will take no chances on someone whose reputation may be questionable.

■ It showed that the members of Congress are aware their actions are being watched and that they will be held accountable by the voters for what they do.

■ While partisan politics was obviously heavily involved in the John Tower vote, the concerns of senators went beyond partisanship — to the moral issues involved — and, in another vein, the vote showed that George Bush's legislative proposals can be controlled by Congress. On matters where the Congress opposes him, the Democrats can prevail.

It's tragic but true that John Tower's past caught up with him at this juncture. He obviously was well-qualified for the Defense Department post. Tower was merely carrying too much baggage for a lot of the scandal-sensitive senators to look the other way and take a chance on him this time.

Tower was elected to a politically significant position at a time when the public was changing course, in a sense. He ushered in something of a "revolution" in Texas politics. But now, even the political landscape that he helped bring in has changed and with it, Tower may be relegated to the political past.

The past, perhaps, but Tower's contributions — to the political mix of the state and the political richness of the nation — will not be forgotten.

3 families destroyed by drunken driving

It is incredibly devastating to watch three families crumble over something that could have been avoided. If the young man who caused the death of five people Saturday evening, July 23rd, had been forced to wait and watch in the hospital, he would have seen family members injured, grieving, in shock and facing death of their loved ones. Hospitals can be a cold and lonely place at 2:00 or 3:00 in the morning.

Throughout these families' lives, each time they are faced with the reality that their loved ones are not around to share in the good times or the bad times, where will this drunken driver be then? I want to emphasize the responsibilities of those who drink and drive, and especially of those who drink and drive and then kill. Does that responsibility end after a few short months of probation? Does it end when his short time or small fine has been served or paid and he can walk away from it all?

These families' suffering is now lifelong. The sun will never shine as brightly, the holidays will never be as joyful, their lives will never be the same. Every 27 minutes a dream ends — someone's future goes blank. Every day 92 people are killed and 2,150 are injured. Yearly 26,000 are killed by drunk driving.

We must not allow this to continue. When are we going to make the punishment in all cases balance with the lack of responsible behavior that endangers the welfare and lives of responsible citizens? When will the ones who have been convicted of drunk driving three or more times spend time in prison as the laws are written? When is drunk driving to be found as large an offense as a robbery or possession of a controlled substance? After all, these offenses do not usually end in a death.

It is not right to allow someone else's mistake of drinking and driving to kill to many innocent lives. Unless people are willing to get involved and help to see that our laws are obeyed and enforced, none of us will be safe out on our streets and highways.

Does city want image as animal torturer?

Does the City of Midland want the reputation of the torturing of innocent animals?

Dead pigeons lying in the streets are posing health hazards to other animals as well.

What about persons driving a vehicle and trying to miss dying pigeons? Does Midland want the responsibility of an accident?

Does Bob Boydstun want the reputation of being the foremost advocate of torturing these animals? He should think about this.

Baker should discuss MX, Midgetman limits in Moscow

Secretary of State Baker has agreed to go to Moscow in May to discuss the resumption of strategic arms limitation talks. He will get the most promising response then and in the later negotiations if he states a U.S. position that includes:

Tom Wicker

■ A final decision by the Bush administration to deploy no more MX missiles in any basing mode — specifically not the additional 50 of these 10-warhead monsters the Air Force wants to deploy on railroad flatcars.

■ A delay, pending the outcome of Start, on whether or not to produce and deploy the 500 single-warhead, mobile "Midgetman" missiles now regarded as the alternative to the MX.

That would be the most powerfully convincing statement the new administration could make that it intends to deploy a strictly retaliatory strategic nuclear force, for deterrent purposes only.

It would be an equally positive and convincing answer to the question U.S. sources said was uppermost in the mind of Eduard Shevardnadze in his meeting with Baker at Vienna — whether the new administration was serious about continuing the "improvement" of Soviet-American relations.

But would renunciation of the MX and a willingness possibly to do without the Midgetman signal weakness to the Soviets? Would forsaking both missiles leave the U.S. inadequately protected? No, because the U.S. has enough nuclear weapons already to provide an invulnerable retaliatory force capable of devastating the Soviet Union in response to a nuclear attack.

As long as such a U.S. force exists, Moscow would not venture such a strike — unless it were in the hands of madmen, who would be undeterrable by any means.

That invulnerable U.S. retaliatory force, moreover, is not now capable of a pre-emptive first strike against the Soviets; to renounce deployment of new, more accurate missiles would underline that fact.

Having pledged such an indisputably defensive policy and certified it with a stake through the heart of the MX, the U.S. — holding the possibility of Midgetman in reserve — would be in a sound position in the ensuing Start talks to push the Soviet Union to a similar policy.

That would mean the destruction of the heavy, accurate Soviet missiles most threatening to the U.S.

The Bush administration, in effect, would be taking the lead in moving both superpowers to the deployment of invulnerable retaliatory forces without first-strike or "hard-target kill" capacity.

Neither side then could threaten the other with nuclear attack; and both sides would know, as they do now, that such an attack would be suicidal anyway. Greater nuclear stability than that probably never will be attained.

In addition, and for a change, the U.S. instead of Mikhail Gorbachev would impress the world with a useful and imaginative proposal; and the budgetary crunch in this country would be relieved by the $13.8 billion estimated for 50 more MX missiles, and possibly by the $35 billion that 500 Midgetmen would cost.

The MX with its 10 warheads not only invites attack (a MX could be eliminated by only two warheads); it threatens a first strike.

In a crisis, moreover, those 10 warheads would tempt a president to launch these behemoths before the other side could destroy them. That would bring on the Holocaust. What good are missiles that if launched mean suicide for the launcher?

The Midgetman would be less vulnerable and — since two warheads would be required to eliminate its one — less an invitation to attack. With its "hard-target kill capacity," however, it still could be seen by Moscow as a first-strike weapon, hence destabilizing; and its deployment would make sure that the Soviets would field a similar missile.

If any new missile has to be built, Midgetman — despite its high cost — would be the lesser of two evils. But why build it if the U.S. is moving, as the logic of nuclear weapons inexorably suggests, to a strictly retaliatory strategy?

Added to the land-based missiles already deployed, Midgetman would be superfluous; substituted for those missiles, it would cost more in dollars than it would yield in security.

As for the hybrid new deployment — some MX's, some Midgetmen — that the Bush administration is reported to be considering, as Bush himself suggested in his campaign, that not only would embrace the worst of both choices.

It would be devastating evidence that this Administration is unable to make even the most fundamental security decisions.

MISD ahead of its time with abstinence

In response to Jane Marler Dees' article regarding Scot Northern, the new president of Planned Parenthood, I feel it is imperative that certain facts be pointed out.

First, our community dealt with the issue of sex education in the Midland Independent School District approximately a year and a half ago, and the overwhelming response from the public was for an "abstinence based" curriculum. Currently there is a bill before our state Legislature requiring school districts in Texas that teach sex education to include information stating that abstinence is the "only 100 percent, sure-fire way" of preventing sexually-transmitted diseases or unwanted pregnancies.

Therefore, rather than being derelict and irresponsible, as Northern stated, I would say MISD was ahead of its time when it voted to implement the abstinence based curriculum we are currently using. Abstinence may not be the "real world" for Northern, but I believe youth today are striving toward a higher moral standard for themselves, having seen the destruction that the "sexual revolution" of Northern's generation has left behind.

Second, our community has refused Planned Parenthood's intervention in the public schools in the past and I have the utmost faith we will continue to do so. Midlanders are very well-informed concerning the truth about Planned Parenthood's origin and philosophy, as evidenced by the fact that it was dropped from United Way funding several years ago due to numerous protests from local citizens. Planned Parenthood certainly has a right to exist and those who desire its services have a right to use them, but the choice must remain with the individual and not be forced upon our children through the public schools.

Finally, Northern's inflated "self-confidence" to "get the job done" may sway some, but he will never convince me that abortion isn't murder. Abortion is murder, and I believe one day even Mr. Northern will understand that because I have confidence in a much greater power than myself to persuade him of the truth.

Director just victim of unreal society

We cannot hold the new president of Planned Parenthood responsible for his position on morals, reality and abortion. (Reporter-Telegram, March 5) Taking into consideration that he was most likely born near 1958 and graduated from high school somewhere around 1975, he spent all of his most impressionable years in a very unreal time in America.

He was probably a sophomore prep when Roe v. Wade began to legalize the ultimate in child abuse. Society is to blame for his error. He is a product of a very embarrassing time in the U.S.A. I remember because I was there.

By the way, reality proves that in every age and in every civilization, the solution to a sex sick society has been and continues to be abstinence. By promoting the Planned Parenthood theme of abortion on demand, the new president says he feels good for giving a damn. He's right in one regard, there's no better way to give out damnation than to participate in the killing of our children.

Readers' views on: Charley Reese

Why do we have to read Reese's ravings?

I'll grant that Neanderthals are entitled to a point of view and if my arm is twisted I'll even allow they may be a significant voting bloc, but must we be subjected to their spokesman on a daily basis? I refer, of course, to the inimitable Charley Reese and his syndicated ravings, complete with his picture that looks like Robert Louis Stevenson's Mr. Hyde after a three-week drunk.

The column that finally broke the burro's back was "Self-delusion keeping America in danger." So America has been going to hell in a handbasket since 1960? The Neanderthals of my father's generation used to speak of the New Deal era as the beginning of the handbasket ride. Did we begin a new descent in 1960 or is this just historical revisionism for a new generation of Neanderthals?

What lessons are we supposed to draw from his caterwauling about America's decline? I'm confused. I've been listening to the Reaganites talking about the end of the Cold War and how America won. Now here's a guy who's a Reagan sympathizer (I can't say he's pro-Reagan because I don't think he's pro-anything) putting down most of the military successes of the Reagan administration. He calls the Libyan bombing of 1986 a "public-relations style raid." What does he want, an MX missile strike on Tripoli?

What is all this dark babbling about foreigners in ITALICS? What does he mean we are dependent on "FOREIGN" sources for critical defense parts? Are these "FOREIGN" sources British, Israeli, Iranian, Albanian? He doesn't say. They are just "FOREIGN." I detect a strong, not to say psychotic, xenophobia in his screed.

If Americans are "ill-informed" and "addicted" and our influence in the world is "zilch," then what are we supposed to do, Charley? Push the button and clutch the flag? Why do we have to read this schizoid Chicken Little in our hometown newspaper? Please drop him and double up on the Russell Baker and Lewis Grizzard. Reese isn't even unintentionally funny, much less informative.

Reese scores bullseye with pro-gun stance

Hooray for Charley Reese! (Reporter-Telegram, March 3, page 6A) He's the first journalist I've read who actually faced the rational truth regarding proposed gun legislation again. Every time someone gets killed with a firearm, politicos and liberal journalists jump on the bandwagon and develop what Charley calls a "case of the stupids."

We've had several federal laws passed since the late 1960s. They are all adequate if only our criminal justice system would enforce what we already have. We need to force more stringent sentences on convicted felons who use guns, and we need to keep them in jail where they belong. Releasing some 34,000 felons on early outs in Texas alone sure isn't the answer.

Charley made one statement it's about time someone said in defense of the so-called assault rifles. He said "the fact that the nut was firing a civilian version of the Russian military rifle was irrelevant. Thank God he used an assault rifle rather than a sporting weapon, like a pump shotgun. He would surely have killed far more children." Hunters and sport shooters have long recognized the 12 gauge pump shotgun to be the most deadly weapon available when used at short range.

I for one am glad the Reporter-Telegram printed Charley's column; our local paper is so one-sided they would never have published it.

Two new books explore failure of communism in the world

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Two new books about the failure of communism in the Soviet Union and throughout the rest of the world are particularly gratifying to me, and should be appreciated by all who believe in individual liberty and the free enterprise system.

Hearst

The first is entitled "The Grand Failure, The Birth and Death of Communism in the 20th Century" (Scribners). It is written by Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, the Polish-born assistant to President Carter for national security affairs and his director of the National Security Council. Widely renowned as one of the world's top analysts on the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Brzezinski is presently Herbert Lehman Professor of Government at New York's Columbia University.

Writing that Soviet communism is in its "terminal stage" and that world communism is in "a state of general crisis," Brzezinski wrote that communism has been a colossal economic political and social failure.

Noting that, under the reformist leadership of Deng Xiaoping, China has moved away from centralized communist doctrinaire control of the country and especially the collectivist agricultural system, Brzezinski said the overwhelming majority of the Chinese people have "ceased to live within a communist framework shaped by ideological impulses."

"Modern China," Brzezinski continued, "may enter the twenty-first century still ruled by communism, but it will not be a communized China. Around the world, people now equate Soviet-style communism with arrested development ... the notion that communism, once in power, means stagnation and waste."

Brzezinski believes the Soviet leader Gorbachev has unintentionally set the stage for dismantling the Soviet communist system as it has existed since Lenin established the totalitarian regime after the end of World War I. He foresees the process as likely to be "turbulent."

He also estimates that government organized terrorism in communist-ruled countries cost the lives of at least 50 million people.

The other book, "The Coming Soviet Crash" by Judy Shelton, a research fellow at the Hoover Institute, estimates that since 1970 the annual Soviet budget deficits have averaged around the equivalent of $180 billion. Shelton warns against saving communism in Russia with Western loans that will allow the Soviet Union to maintain its military and nuclear might while reviving its economy.

This evidence of the failure of communism, and finally world-wide disillusionment with it, gives me great satisfaction because it is vindication of my Pop's strong opposition to communism for which he was pilloried in the 1930s by liberals, especially in the academic world. He was later credited by W. A. Swanberg, author of "Citizen Hearst" (Scribners) with being "the first influential citizen to recognize the danger" of communism.

It has taken the liberal fanatics, the naive and the misled in the western world a long time to recognize the incompetence and evilness of communism. We should be grateful to Brzezinski and Shelton for their enlightening books.

Now a footnote about John Tower. Thank goodness the bitter debate in the Senate on his qualifications for defense secretary is over and Congress and the administration can start concentrating attention on the budget deficit and other major problems confronting the country.

The failure of Tower to receive Senate confirmation is a political setback for President Bush, but it is to the latter's credit that having selected the former Texas senator, he stood by him to the last.

There were, in my opinion, two main reasons more Democrats and one Republican, Nancy L. Kassenbaum of Kansas, did not provide the support Tower needed to be confirmed.

One was his highly questionable judgment in going to work for defense contractors almost immediately after he left his government position as a U.S. arms negotiator in Geneva and sold his special knowledge over a period of two years for more than $1,000,000.

The other was the serious concern about whether he could be relied on to keep his pledge to stop drinking. He increased that concern when he flatly refused to be examined from time to time by an impartial doctor.

When it became apparent he faced rejection in the Senate, he would have served President Bush better and more loyally if he had withdrawn. To let the issue go to a vote in the Senate made the outcome a more serious defeat for the president.

The Youth and Government Clubs of both Midland and Lee High Schools competed in the State competition at the Capitol in Austin on Feb. 24 and 25. A group of over fifty left on Thursday for the four day Mock Government session, held at various locations in Austin.

Thursday evening the General Assembly was held in the House Chambers, where the Youth and Government Gubernatorial candidates gave their opening remarks. There was a special Key-note address given by State Rep. Lena Guerrero. A welcoming speech was given by the 1989 Governor, Art Hall (Lubbock), to close the night.

During the following two days the students competed in their respective roles. John Lance and Diana Prieto of Lee won the award for most outstanding Federal Relations Forum Proposal. Spencer Wheat, after being selected to the Governor's Cabinet, provided great assistance to the Governor. Kofi Bruce, Joseph Cahoon and Brenda Lenahan led a successful attempt in the Executive Government Planners section, having their proposal passed unanimously. Jane Kauffman, a government teacher at Lee High, led this EGP group of 21 throughout the year and they all performed well, with quality proposals.

The Legislative section was advised by Manuel Reyes of Midland High. He helped the students with parliamentary procedure and preparation of their bills. Meredith Rentz and Katherine Krehbiel received high marks as one of the Hearing Committee Teams. A group of nine students worked for the News Media section and they did well by getting many stories in the paper. Another group of 11 students led the judicial branch as witnesses, attorney teams and judges. The Youth Commission section was well represented by Midland Youth.

Three foreign exchange students participated in the Youth and Government Program. Valentina Pirani of Italy and Thorsten Beckman of Germany both wrote articles for the paper. They had a very insightful outlook on the events at the conference. The third student, Dolores Gamon, presented a proposal in the EGP.

The YMCA was the recipient of a great amount of volunteer effort from Mr. Reyes and Ms. Kauffman and the attorneys that helped our students. The Midland YMCA and the students would like to thank all of the people in the community who supported the program with their contributions and support.

Tuck

Activities get underway at 7 p.m. with food, followed by the concert and dance from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets are priced at $7 each and may be purchased at the Chap Center box office.

Nix, who was invited to play in Washington, D.C., as part of President Bush's inaugural events, plays the same type of music made popular by his father for many years ... with some of the contemporary country music mixed in.

A portion of the proceeds from the event will be contributed to the High Sky Children's Ranch.

College Classics courses are conducted on campus for one or two hours one afternoon a week. A third session is slated for April 10 through May 5. Cost for enrollment is $25 per person to attend as many courses as desired for both Session II and Session III.

This is the first time for such classes at Midland College. "Response to the initital session of College Classics was higher than we had anticipated, but we still have openings in nearly all of our classes," said Jan Reed, coordinator for the program.

Reed explained that the cost is low because all the instructors are volunteers. They were recruited from Midland College faculty and from the community.

Courses being offered during Session II include aerobics, art appreciation (Western Europe), caregivers, computers, crochet, defensive driving, drawing, emergency care, finding talents, golf, guitar, image clinic, managing the cost of health care, New York Times best sellers, piano, self-hypnosis for insomnia and anxiety, shared adventures, silk wreaths, tennis, experience theatre; Texas history, and word processing.

Course offerings for Session III are basket weaving, be your own travel agent, communication skills, computerized dietary analysis, CPR and standard first aid, comprehensive financial planning, golf, novice ham radio, life and transitions, memorable characters in history, nutrition, piano, tennis, experience theatre, tole painting, walking for fun, and Western classics.

Enrollments are accepted at the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. Information is available by calling 685-4518.

As the Supreme Court prepares to hear a controversial case that could limit legal abortions, it is being lobbied by relentless opponents and supporters of abortion rights.

Can the public sway abortion decision?

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

In theory, the Supreme Court is insulated from politics. But that isn't stopping the opposing sides on the abortion issue from mounting intense lobbying campaigns as the justices prepare to hear a controversial Missouri case that could end the country's current era of legal abortions.

The Supreme Court is expected to hear the appeal, Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services, in late April.

Meanwhile, both the self-anointed "pro-life" and "pro-choice" movements have prepared dozens of "friends of the court" legal briefs.

Beyond that, both sides also have begun to launch a series of calculated moves — marches, sit-ins and newspaper and magazine ads as well as letter-writing blitzes aimed at the Supreme Court, the Attorney General and the White House — that will build in intensity over the next six weeks.

The underlying design is to put pressure on the Supreme Court: the activists are convinced the court's decision can be swayed by public opinion.

"As far as we're concerned there's no tomorrow. Everybody knows the question is about to be called," said Sheri O'Dell, vice president of the National Organization for Women, which favors abortion on demand.

"Our people want the Supreme Court and President Bush, who's pushing the court on this issue, to know just how they feel," she said. "We are co-sponsoring what promises to be a massive march in Washington on April 9th and I won't be surprised if a quarter of a million demonstrators show up; our people are furious."

O'Dell, who is coordinating NOW's role in the march, said she thinks a big turnout won't go unnoticed at the court.

"Whatever the decision is," she said, "it will be couched in legal terms but, in fact, it is a political question that, like Prohibition, ultimately will be decided by public opinion."

Judie Brown, president of the American Life League which opposes legalized abortions, said she, too, thinks political considerations will weigh heavily in the Supreme Court's decision.

"Public opinion means everything to the court," said Brown, who says her organization includes 200,000 families around the country. "We feel all forms of expression will impact on the court."

The American Life League's most expensive form of expression will be a series of full-page advertisements in USA Today, The Washington Post and The Washington Times. The ads will run during the week before the opposition's April march and will cost $150,000.

"They will include just-released information we've taken from the file of the late Justice William O. Douglas during the debate on Roe vs. Wade," she said. "It's clear from these files that a small but very vocal minority was able to influence the decision which made abortion legal in this country."

In Roe vs. Wade, the court held that while a woman's right to privacy gives her the right to have an abortion, the state may regulate or prohibit abortions once the fetus is viable.

Since the 1973 decision, there have been relatively few third-trimester abortions even though that same court, in Doe vs. Bolton, said the mother's life or health should be an overriding factor in the decision of whether to permit an abortion even after the fetus is viable.

In case to be in April, the Missouri Legislature passed a 1986 statute banning abortions at public hospitals or any other public facilities unless the woman's life is in danger. The act, whose preamble states that viability begins at conception, also forbids public funds from being used for abortions or for abortion counseling except when the mother's life is threatened.

The statute was challenged immediately by two abortion clinics, Reproductive Health Services of St. Louis and Planned Parenthood in Kansas City.

In March 1987, a federal district judge in Kansas City declared the major sections of the statute to be unconstitutional infringements of Roe vs. Wade. In July 1987, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the bulk of the lower court's decision.

Last year, William Webster, Missouri's attorney general, asked the Supreme Court to review the case. He also asked the court, if it should side with the appeals courts, to then consider whether Roe vs. Wade itself is constitutional.

The Supreme Court announced in January it would consider the case, setting off a flurry of planning and activity on both sides of the issue.

"We've already raised most of the $150,000 for our upcoming newspaper ads," Brown said, adding that $150,000 is an exceptionally large expenditure for the American Life League.

The National Abortion Rights Action League already has spent more than $500,000 on newspaper advertising. The full-page ads, which feature a coat hanger, a reminder of the days of back-alley abortions, first ran on Jan. 22.

"We're running them in some of the major newspapers across the country," said Kate Michelman, NARAL's executive director. "We're also doing radio and TV ads and making ourselves available to the media for interviews and talk shows and the like."

'Verses' becomes key foreign policy factor

RELIGION

LONDON (AP) — The dispute resulting from Salman Rushdie's new novel goes far beyond an argument over ethics and theology. It has disrupted diplomacy and global trade, pitted Western notions of free speech against Islamic fervor, and added a frightening element to the issue of foreign hostages in Lebanon.

Unlike previous episodes in the West's rocky 10-year relationship with Iran, the crisis over "The Satanic Verses" seems to offer no room for compromise.

"Is this a religious conflict, a political conflict or a little of both?" mused Foreign Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg of Norway, one of 15 Western countries that recalled their ambassadors from Iran in protest of the death order.

"How can we meet the Iranian problem without compromising our basic principles, while avoiding escalation and the danger of dramatic conflicts?" he said.

Stoltenberg's question sums up a dilemma facing Western governments four weeks after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini called on Moslems to kill Rushdie.

Whatever the economic stakes, no Western politician can afford to be seen condoning a murderous threat to artistic freedom. And no Moslem leader can be seen to condone a book that allegedly blasphemes Allah and Mohammed, his prophet.

"We're being confronted with an extreme demand. There's no middle ground. It's not a thing on which there can be any compromise," says Bernard Adamczewski, an analyst at the London-based Institute for the Study of Terrorism.

The crux of the problem, he says, is that Islam does not recognize the concept of separation of religion and state and cannot accept the Western argument that governments are powerless to suppress books on religious grounds.

Iranian religious leaders have offered a $5.2 million bounty for the death of Rushdie, a British citizen who was born into a Moslem family 41 years ago. The writer is in hiding under police guard.

Moslem countries share a united sense of outrage over the book, and most have banned it, but only Libya has supported the death sentence unequivocally.

Most Moslem governments balk at the death sentence, saying Rushdie should at least be tried by an Islamic court.

Britain has solid backing from its 11 European Economic Community partners but fears this solidarity may waver. "We have a beady eye on the weaker brethren," Foreign Office Minister William Waldegrave said Thursday.

Countries as mutually hostile as India and South Africa have banned the book. Israel's chief rabbi has urged his country to ban it "so as not to strain Moslem-Jewish relations any further."

The Soviet Union must perform a delicate balancing act: it has been asked by the United States and Britain to intercede with Iran, but it is mindful of its own burgeoning Moslem population.

In India and Pakistan, with their large Moslem populations, "The Satanic Verses" is fraught with political danger, and anti-Rushdie riots have killed at least 19 people.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Proclamation on evolution adopted

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education on Saturday adopted a proclamation for biology textbooks that opposing groups on evolution both said was a partial — if not nearly complete — victory.

On Friday, a board committee had endorsed guidelines that said biology textbooks should include "scientific evidence of evolution and reliable scientific theories to the contrary."

Critics described the last part of the phrase as "anti-evolution" — designed to placate creationists who have been bombarding the board with letters.

Creation science is a theory of the origin of the universe that states the literal biblical account of creation can be scientifically verified.

On Saturday, however, by a 12-3 vote the board said biology tests should include "scientific evidence of evolution and other reliable scientific theories, if any."

Michael Hudson of People for the American Way said, "I think this is a real setback for the national creationists movement...the changes that were made closed the door on the loophole that invited creationism into the curriculum."

"Some of the scientists might not be 100 percent happy," said Hudson, of Austin. "But I think we're 99.9 percent of the way there."

Iran's position urged

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian envoy has been dispatched to encourage other Moslem nations to support Iran's position on the novel "The Satanic Verses" at a conference this week, according to news reports Saturday.

In England, home of the novel's author, Salman Rushdie, Moslems staged demonstrations in two cities.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported that Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani said during an audience with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini the controversy over the book was helping export the Islamic revolution.

Khomeini did not speak during the meeting at a mosque in a Tehran suburb, said IRNA, monitored in Nicosia.

IRNA said Ayatollah Ahmed Jannati, a special envoy, was touring Moslem states in the region to try to forge a united front on the issue at the Organization of Islamic Conference meeting scheduled to begin Monday in Saudi Arabia.

Pakistani Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan said in a meeting with his Iranian counterpart, Ali Akbar Velavati, that he hoped the OIC "will take a decisive stand to condemn the book," IRNA reported.

Observers expect a showdown between the majority Sunni and the minority Shiite Moslems over the issue.

Students sponsor reading

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Arab students who helped sponsor a public reading of "The Satanic Verses" say they may not like author Salman Rushdie, but they want to show that not all Moslems support Ayatollah Khomeini's death decree against him.

About 300 people attended Friday night's reading and panel discussion on the University of Iowa campus. Twenty-five people read two-minute selections from the book that many Moslems claim blasphemes their faith.

Wan Hasni, a member of the Iowa City Islamic Society and a statistics student, said he and other Muslims attended the session at the Iowa Memorial Union "to hear the views, the feelings of others in the American community have about this book."

"A demonstration is appropriate if we need one. But it would have served no purpose to disrupt the reading," he said.

Apartheid declared sin

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The main church of ruling Afrikaners has declared apartheid a sin and asked forgiveness for its long support of the racially discriminatory system.

"We confess with humility and sorrow the participation of our church in the introduction and legitimation of the ideology of apartheid and the subsequent suffering of people," said the white Dutch Reformed Church.

The black and mixed-race Dutch Reformed Churches welcomed the most explicit condemnation of apartheid made by their white mother church but said it also must work to destroy the system it helped create.

President P.W. Botha and virtually his entire Cabinet are among congregants of the repenting church, which probably is Afrikanerdom's strongest single unifying factor.

Bobcats make it 3 straight titles

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — The San Angelo Bobcats joined Odessa Permian and Midland Lee as the only teams to ever win three consecutive Class 5A West Texas Relays' titles at Ratliff Stadium Saturday by posting 98 points in a tight race.

The Bobcats took their third consecutive title by beating Permian's 75 points while El Paso Bel Air was a distant third with 47. Midland Lee followed with 39 in what was a day of glory and disaster all rolled into one for the Rebel thinclads.

Amarillo High ended the two-year reign of Permian in the girls division with a 127-97 margin while San Angelo was third with 81 points and Lee fourth with 35.

In the 4A Division, Andrews' 42 first day points in the field events couldn't quite stand up the the Lubbock Dunbar runners, who posted 109 points while the Mustangs ended at 99. Lubbock Estacado, the defending champion, finished third with 71.

In the 3A Division, Wylie cruised to victory with 104 points while Vernon (73), Kermit (65) and Canyon (63) battled in a close race for second place. Wylie's team victory ended the Permian junior varsity reign.

While seven assorted records fell during Friday's opening day of action, only three marks fell Saturday, and only one was a meet record.

Bel Air's Daniel Fredericks, who also won the 200 meters, set a meet record in the 400 with a 47.61. Big Spring's Ben Gonzales, who also won the mile, set a 4A record of 1:55.53 in the 800 and Seminole's Jerold Hill got the other division mark with a 23-2¼ in the 3A long jump.

Three of Midland's four squads found gold waiting at the finish line. The Lee girls didn't win an event, but did place fourth overall.

The Rebel boys, however, found gold quickly, winning an exciting sprint relay early in the day with a 42.10 as David Whiteside broke open a three-way log-jam on the anchor leg. Lee ran with Bobby McGruder instead of James Brown, who is still suffering from a leg problem.

"We just gave it all we had," said Whiteside. "We knew, if we could get the stick around and be in the crowd at the end, that good things could happen. And that's what we did."

But Lee's early glory quickly turned to disaster as Whiteside came up lame in the 100 and failed to finish. Then Bill Swearingin, a sure-fire point getter in the 400, was disqualified. Then Marcus Strambler, who was a state qualifier in the 300 hurdles last year as a junior, finished fourth in his feature event. He has now been beaten by three District 4-5A hurdlers this year and doesn't have a victory to show for it. Then Lee was fourth in the 1600 relay, nearly five seconds off its qualifying time.

The Midland High girls struck gold twice with Tracy Parker, a state qualifier last year, winning the shot put with a fabulous 40-4, and junior Annette Glover, who hasn't run track since the seventh grade, winning the 100 in 12.31.

"I'm way ahead of last year," said Parker. "It was the week before district before I broke 40-feet last year. I'm hoping to be between 45 and 48 feet before the state meet. My coaches have helped me a lot this year. I didn't have any technique last year."

Glover ran track in the seventh grade in Marshall, but is beginning to open eyes across West Texas in high school. She set a record 12.1 in the Tiger Relays two weeks ago.

"I didn't run track when I moved here because I was scared and didn't know anyone," said Glover. "I would just like to beat all the record held by Ethel Edwards before I'm through."

Midland High's John Braun won the discus with a 147-5 in an event that was said to be the weakest event in the 5A field. But Braun was happy with the victory, the first of his high school career.

"It feels good," said Braun. "The wind was strong, but it helped keep the discus up longer and didn't hurt the distance much."

4-5a Baseball

Wild race shapes up

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Get ready for a wild ride.

The District 4-5A baseball season gets into full swing Tuesday and, boy-oh-boy are we talking about a year that is chock-full of potential winners.

First and foremost there's Abilene Cooper, two time defending state champions with a large group of returning starters.

Secondly there's Midland High, which defeated the Cougars twice last year and are thus far ranked No. 7 in the state.

Then there's Abilene High. The Eagles have a nest full of returners that automatically puts them in the running.

San Angelo cannot be counted out with an equally large group of returners (seven).

And if all the coaches in the district are right, one can never count out Midland Lee, simply because they are coached by Ernie Johnson, a 28-year 4-5A veteran who may last longer than the district itself.

ODESSA PERMIAN appears to have a new attitude after a 1-11 season and coaches say if Odessa High can get some pitching, they may be a contender.

"This may be one of the years when the district will be more equal than ever," MHS head coach Tim Whalen said.

"Our kids have great attitudes," Lee head coach Johnson said. "Our kids are mostly inexperienced and everybody's kind of slow getting their baseball going."

Regardless of how much or how little talent each team has, everyone agrees that the teams to beat are Abilene Cooper and Midland High. Abilene High ranks up top also and San Angelo is picked to muddle the picture some, too.

Below are each coach's picks, followed by outlines of each team:

COACHES' OUTLOOKS

Midland's Tim Whalen: "Abilene Cooper and Abilene High have to be 1-2 right now. San Angelo is pretty good. They can be up there, and Lee can be good. Cooper and Abilene High are by themselves ... us and Lee and San Angelo are in the pack, and possibly Permian if they can come up with some pitching.

Midland Lee's Ernie Johnson: "Cooper and Midland High are way ahead of most everybody. Us and all the rest ... we're in the middle."

CONSENSUS

1. Abilene Cooper
2. Midland High
3. Abilene High
4. San Angelo
5. Midland Lee
6. Odessa Permian
7. Odessa High

Bulldogs take over first place in district soccer

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

After a season-long battle, the Midland High soccer team earned first place in the District 3-5A standings with a 3-2 win over Abilene High Saturday at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex.

To hear forward David Allen tell it, the Bulldogs' sojourn into the district lead is far from temporary.

"We're going to stay that way," Allen said. The Bulldog left wing helped get them to the top with two first-half goals against a stunned Abilene High front that was too busy marking right wing Shaun Savas, who spent most of the evening as a decoy.

A win over San Angelo Central in next Saturday's regular season finale will almost certainly get the Bulldogs into the playoffs, especially if Abilene High knocks off San Angelo this coming Tuesday.

San Angelo is tied for second with Abilene High at 4-2 after nipping Abilene Cooper 1-0 in overtime Saturday.

Abilene High's attention to the speedy Savas opened up a lane for a shifty Allen on the opposite wing. AHS coach Randy Allen admitted his mistake after the game.

"Number 16 (David Allen) was faster than I thought," Coach Allen said. "We concentrated on Number 10 (Savas) too much."

Allen had been hampered by an ankle injury earlier this season, but that'a all behind him, MHS coach Tom Esikhati said.

"His ankle's better now, and that helps his speed and ball-handling," Esikhati said.

Shane Barden got the Bulldogs going with a direct free kick that bounced off the left goal post into the goal in the 10th minute of the first half.

AHS countered with Mike Roach's goal off an assist by Joe Barrientos in the 14th minute, but Midland took the lead for good when Allen outran his defender down the left side of the field, moved inside, and pushed a shot about 15 yards on the ground past the outstretched hands of Abilene goalkeeper Thomas Cotton in the 17th minute.

Allen added another goal in the 22nd minute when he blocked an AHS defender's attempt to clear from in front of his own goal — and then rammed the ball past Cotton.

Barrientos wrapped up the scoring with his breakaway goal in the fourth minute of the second half, but the Eagles had plenty of chances to tie, most notably when Ryker Hall tried a penalty kick in the 33rd minute from about 10 yards in front of MHS keeper Bryant Mueller.

But Hall's point-blank kick was wide right — something akin to missing an unmolested layup in a basketball game and something that took Esikhati by surprise.

"I was going out of my mind. I thought we would have an overtime," Esikhati said. "I guess our goalkepper psyched him out."

Mueller thought he did, anyway. Maybe the bullseye tie-dyed onto his keeper shirt?

"I pointed at the bullseye to try and psych the guy out. I was trying to get him scared of me."

OU's only 3-pointer nips Iowa State at buzzer

From Wire Reports

If winning close games late in the season is good preparation for the NCAA Tournament, Oklahoma may be the team to beat.

Tyrone Jones' 3-point shot with one second left Saturday gave the second-ranked Sooners a 76-74 victory over Iowa State in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament at Kansas City, Mo. On Friday, the Sooners beat Colorado in double overtime.

Jones said he didn't hesitate to put up the game-winning shot.

"I knew it was going in," he said. "I felt I had to step up and knock it down."

Victor Alexander, whose basket with 35 seconds left put the Cyclones ahead 74-73, had a chance to extend the lead after being fouled with eight seconds remaining. But he missed the front end of the 1-and-1, Oklahoma rebounded and Mookie Blaylock got the ball to Jones for the winning shot from the left corner.

"Like a lot of basketball games, it came down to who makes the last play when the game is on the line," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said.

"We're feeling pretty happy right now. But if that shot hadn't gone in, we'd all be feeling pretty sad."

Oklahoma, 28-4, will play Missouri for the Big Eight tournament championship on Sunday. The 10th-ranked Tigers advanced to the title game with an 88-83 victory over Kansas State.

In the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, ninth-ranked North Carolina routed Maryland 88-58 and No. 7 Duke beat Virginia 69-58 to reach the finals.

In other semifinals, third-ranked Georgetown clobbered Pittsburgh 85-62 and No. 5 Syracuse beat No. 11 Seton Hall 81-78 in the Big East; Florida downed Tennessee 76-71 and Alabama beat Vanderbilt 83-79 in the Southeastern; No. 16 Louisville edged Memphis State 71-70 and No. 14 Florida State defeated South Carolina 80-63 in the Metro, and top-ranked Arizona beat Oregon State 98-87 in the Pacific 10.

Siena 68, Boston U. 67

HARTFORD, Conn. — Steve McCoy plucked Tom Huerter's desperation shot from the air and put it back in with one second left to give Siena its first NCAA berth ever.

The Saints won despite a series of late turnovers that cost it a seven-point lead in the final seven minutes.

It was the ninth straight game played by Siena, 24-4, under a spectator quarantine because of an outbreak of measles at its upstate New York campus.

Boston University, hoping for an NIT berth with a 21-8 record, took advantage of five turnovers by Siena in the final seven minutes to take its first lead of the second half at 62-61 with 3:24 remaining on two foul shots by Steven Key, who had two steals in the run.

Abilene Cooper's Andy Malone: "I think the top four teams are Midland High, Abilene High, Angelo and us. And I don't know how you can leave Ernie out. I'd hate to pick a favorite. Anyone of those four can win it. And I'm not taking anything away from the other three (Lee, Odessa High, Permian)."

Abilene High's Brian Burton: "I think until you beat 'em, you've got to pick Cooper. Midland High is playing good ball, too."

Odessa High's Milton Thompson: "It's real tight, anybody in the district can beat anybody else. Midland High, Cooper are strong. Those are the two teams to beat."

Odessa Permian's Bob Highly: "It's tough from top to bottom. Everybody's giving Cooper the benefit of the doubt right now. Midland High's playing very well again. I'd think on team strength, Abilene High would have to come up third. It'd have to be a tie with San Angelo."

San Angelo's Rex Scofield: "I think Cooper has to be one of the favorites, and Midland High seems to have Cooper's number lately. Midland High and Cooper are the top two, in that order. Abilene High is extremely good. I'm not going to rate us, but I think we'd have to be in the middle of the pack, then Midland Lee, Odessa High and Permian.

Hall also had four corner kicks in the second half, none of which led to an AHS goal.

The teams spent much of the second half fouling one another, combining for 53 fouls and five yellow cards. Barrientos capped the carnage by kicking Mueller in the face while trying to score in the final two minutes — an act which earned him a red card and a seat on the bench for Tuesday's game with San Angelo, as per University Interscholastic League rules.

Besides Allen and Mueller, MHS got strong play from midfielders Kofi Bruce and Jeff Lanning.

LANDRY NOT THAT BIG— Irving city officials say they shrugged off pressure to change the name of Texas Stadium to Landry Stadium, for the recently fired Dallas Cowboys coach. At least two council members suggested that maybe Dallas residents spearheading the move should instead push to rename the Dallas-Fort Worth International Aiport after Landry. Council member John Danish said noted that "he flew in and out of there every other weekend."

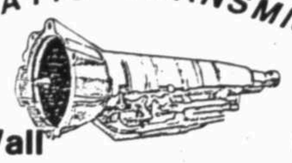

SWEDE IN THE CHIPS— Two magnificent chip shots on the last two holes Saturday enabled Ove Sellberg of Sweden to take a one-stroke lead (69—208) after three rounds of the $400,000 Baleares Open.

KENTUCKY AND SUTTON— Kentucky, having completed its worst basketball season in six decades, now must deal with an NCAA investigation and the uncertain status of coach Eddie Sutton, who says "I plan on being at Kentucky.," He has repeatedly stated that he would not resign under any circumstances.

Sutton's job has been threatened by the NCAA probe into 18 allegations against the basketball program, although none charge the coach with any violations.

NIT— Hours after the much-awaited NCAA selections are announced Sunday, 32 teams will be awarded berths in the field for the 52nd National Invitation Tournament. The first three rounds will be played at campus sites and the final four teams will play at Madison Square Garden on March 27 and 29 for the championship of the nation's oldest collegiate postseason tournament.

ETC...Jose Martinez of New Milford, Conn., established a meet record of 15 minutes and 15 seconds in winning the New York Road Runners Club Horoscope 5-kilometer run Saturday in bettering the former record of 15:39 set by Tony Colon of Dallas last year. ETC...Maryland coach Bob Wade was confined to a hospital Saturday as his team was crushed by North Carolina in the second round of the ACC tournament. Wade was hospitalized with chest pains following his Terrapins' victory over top-seeded NC State Friday. ETC....The Denver City Attorney's office dropped an assault charge against Denver Broncos WR Mark Jackson. Jackson, accused of slapping a former girlfriend, requested the case be dropped.

Davis Love fires 66 for lead in PGA

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Davis Love III started with an eagle and a birdie and went on to shoot a 66 on Saturday, taking a two-shot lead after the third round of the $800,000 Nestle Invitational golf tournament.

Love hit a 3-wood second shot to within 10 feet of the flag on the first hole and made the putt for eagle.

Love, seeking the second victory of a four-year PGA Tour career, completed three rounds at 205, eight under par for Arnold Palmer's Bay Hill Club course.

Tom Kite, who won this tournament when it was known as the Bay Hill Classic, shot a bogey-free 67 and was second at 207.

Nichols paces Arizona Classic

PHOENIX — Bobby Nichols' 5-under-par 67 Saturday wasn't much when compared to his 62 on Friday. Still, his two-round total of 129 gave him the lead in the $300,000 Arizona Classic.

Bruce Crampton, who started the day five stokes back, shot a 8-under-par 64 to move within two strokes of Nichols at 131.

Bob Boldt shot a 10-under-par 62 to tie Nichols' course and tournament record of 10-under par and was three strokes back at 132, tied with Gene Littler, who shot a 65.

"I didn't hit the ball quite as close to the hole today," said Nichols, who is looking for his first Senior Tour victory since 1986, when he won his only tournament. "The main thing is to keep it on the fairways."

Nichols said he's looking forward to the final round.

"I don't think there's any game plan," he said. "If I hit the ball well I'll win. If I don't, I won't. When you think you've got it made, you've had it."

Crampton had eight birdies, an eagle and bogeys on the 12th and 13th holes. He shot into the bunker on both holes.

Lendl, Edberg reach finals

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Top-seeded Ivan Lendl and No. 2 seed Stefan Edberg struggled to semifinal victories Saturday and will meet in Sunday's final of the $415,000 Eagle Classic of Scottsdale tennis tournament.

Lendl, the top-ranked men's player in the world, eliminated fifth-seeded Emilio Sanchez 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 in a 2-hour, 21-minute match that ended in twilight.

In an earlier match on the outdoor hardcourts, Edberg struggled to beat unseeded Amos Mansdorf 6-7 (6-8), 6-4, 6-1.

"It took a while before I finally came through," said Edberg after playing just his fifth match since suffering a back injury at the Australian Open in late January. "The back was no problem. I was serving well all day. Mansdorf played well the first two sets. I broke him twice in the last set and when I broke him to go up 3-2, I knew I had him. He mentally got tired after that."

Mansdorf, a 23-year-old Israeli ranked 26th, seemed in control until Edberg broke him for the first time in the final game of the second set.

Bomb threat cancels Capitals ice workout

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The Washington Capitals cancelled their Saturday afternoon practice when an employee of the Capital Centre mistook road flares for dynamite in a box labeled explosives and fire officials evacuated the building.

Julie Hensley, a spokesperson for the Capitals, said the team was in the middle of practice when the arena was evacuated at 11:30 a.m. She said "the players waited around to see what was going on" and once the building was cleared, they all piled into their cars and went home.

No one was injured during the evacuation.

The Caps were preparing for Saturday night's game against the New York Rangers.

Conway tops jump mark

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Hollis Conway, the 1988 Olympic silver medalist, smashed the American record in the men's high jump Saturday night, sailing 7 feet, 9¼ inches, in the NCAA Indoor Championships.

Conway's first attempt broke the record of 7-8¾ set by Jimmy Howard three years ago. The height was the best ever by an American, indoors or outdoors.

Conway then missed three times at 7-10½.

Earlier, Wisconsin's Suzy Favor upset Villanova's Vicki Huber in the women's mile and Missouri's Natasha Kaiser set a collegiate record in the women's 400 meters.

Meanwhile, Kaiser, a senior, blitzed the collegiate record of 52.39 she had set last month by racing to victory in the women's 400 in 51.92.

It was the second-fastest performance ever by an American, behind only the 51.77 clocking by Diane Dixon in last weekend's world indoor championships at Budapest, Hungary.

Nebraska's Linetta Wilson, the NCAA 500-meter champion in 1987, finished second in 52.74 in the two-section final, contested on a time basis.

The men's 400 also was a swift race, as Florida freshman Tyrone Kemp sped to victory in 46.03, breaking the meet record of 46.23 set by Bruce Phillip of Manhattan in Friday's preliminaries.

Phillip wound up second in the final, also going under his previous record, in 46.22.

Arkansas' Joe Falcon won the men's mile for the second straight year, unleashing a furious kick and overtaking 1988 Olympic 1,500-meter champion Peter Rono of Mount St. Mary's and Kenya with one lap remaining.

Falcon, the winner by about three meters, was timed in 3:58.06, just off the meet record of 3:57.89 he set in 1988.

Rono, who had been running subpar all season, produced his best race of the year, finished second in 3:58.63.

Indian School wins state

Associated Press

SFIS 55, T or C 52

ALBUQUERQUE — Donald Cata scored 17 points and Santa Fe Indian School went to a full-court press in the fourth quarter to beat Truth or Consequences 55-52 Saturday and win the Class AA state title.

The Runnin' Braves, who finished with a 25-1 record, became the first all-Indian team to win a New Mexico basketball championship since Albuquerque Indian School, which later became SFIS, beat Menaul 27-26 in 1928.

T or C, making its first appearance ever in a State Tournament title game, ended the year at 21-10.

Academy 78, Lovington 76

— Sophomore guard Greg Brown scored 22 points and Albuquerque Academy survived a trio of Lovington shots in the final seconds Saturday to take a 78-76 overtime win and the championship of Class AAA high school basketball.

The title was the third for the Chargers this decade, the school's fourth overall and first for head coach Mike Brown.

Academy, which like Lovington had been forced to battle its way through the pre-playoff round earlier in the week just to make the eight-team field, finished the season at 20-7.

Cloudcroft 58, Tatum 49

Cloudcroft got 27 points from senior Brent Derrick and the Bears became the only defending champion to repeat as they downed Tatum, 58-49, Saturday for the Class A state title.

Cloudcroft, the overwhelming favorite going into the tournament, ended the season with a 27-2 record. The two losses were against AAAA member Alamogordo and El Paso Austin.

Tatum, which stuck with the taller Bears until the final two minutes, finished the year at 23-6.

The Coyotes were led by Jeremy Thompson and Bobby Steans with 13 points each. Royce Brown and Randy Hilliard each added 11.

Ashley Moser was the only other Cloudcroft player in double figures with 17 points.

Cloudcroft reached the State Tournament each of the last three years, finishing second in 1987. The starting unit that won the title the last two years were sophomores on that runner-up team.

Cloudcroft got to the finals this time with earlier wins over Texico and Wagon Mound. Tatum beat Carrizozo in the first round and Des Moines in the semifinals Thursday.

Alamogordo 80, Santa Fe 73

Gary Goldsmith scored 26 points in the first half to give Alamogordo a 20-point lead, and the Tigers held on to beat Santa Fe, 80-73, in the Class AAAA consolation game.

Alamogordo, which lost 95-82 to Albuquerque La Cueva in the semifinals, finished the season 18-9. It was the fourth time the Tigers have finished third in the tournament.

The Demons, who lost 71-68 in double overtime to Albuquerque High, ended the year at 19-10.

In addition to Gonzales, Big Spring got a third in the 400 from Chris Minton. Andrews' John Davila had the Mustangs' best running performance with a second in the 3200.

The Lee and MHS girls go to the Canyon Reef Relays in Snyder next Saturday while the MHS boys hit Levelland for a Friday meet and the Lee boys travel to Brownwood for a Saturday run.

Hogs, Longhorns in finals

DALLAS (AP) — Lenzie Howell scored a career-high 31 points and Keith Wilson had 19 points in the second half Saturday night to lift Arkansas into the finals of the Southwest Conference post-season tournament for the first time since 1985 with a 94-84 victory over Texas A&M.

Arkansas, 23-6, meets the winner of the Texas, 24-7, winner in overtime over TCU Saturday night, at 3 p.m. today for the automatic NCAA playoff bid.

Wilson, who scored 26 points in a 108-72 quarterfinal victory over Rice, had 25 points. Howell's previous career high was 26 points scored earlier in the year against Houston.

The Aggies, 17-14, were led by Donald Thompson who scored 23 points and Tony Milton who added 19.

Arkansas hit 11 of 12 free throws down the stretch against the Aggies, who committed their seventh foul with 15:34 to play. Three Aggies, Doug Dennis, Fred Ricks, and Tony Milton fouled out.

Lance Blanks scored five of his 25 points in overtime in Texas' 93-89 win.

TCU finishes 18-13.

Texas led only twice in regulation — both one-point leads early in the second half. But Blanks scored the first five points of overtime and the Horned Frogs never caught up.

Texas made 10 of 13 free throws in the overtime period, including four in the final 18 seconds.

Down by two, TCU had a chance to tie with 25 seconds left in overtime when Jay Lomas threw the ball away in the Horned Frogs' front court.

It was the Longhorns' second consecutive overtime game in the tournament. Texas defeated Southern Methodist 93-91 in Friday's quarterfinals.

Craig Sibley led TCU with 25 points and 15 rebounds before fouling out with 5:57 left in regulation and the Horned Frogs leading 66-64. Four other TCU players fouled out.

Freshman Everick Sullivan made the first of a one-and-one free throw situation for the winner as the Cardinals, defending tournament champions, advanced to the finals for the fourth straight year.

Oklahoma 76, Iowa St. 74

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tyrone Jones' 3-point shot with one second left — Oklahoma's only 3-pointer of the day — gave the second-ranked Sooners, 28-4, victory over Iowa State, 17-11, in the Big Eight semifinals.

Victor Alexander, who scored 26 points for Iowa State, had given the Cyclones a 74-73 lead with 35 seconds left on a shot from inside. The Sooners then missed three shots and Alexander was fouled on the rebound with eight seconds remaining.

Alexander missed the front end of the one-and-one, Oklahoma rebounded and Mookie Blaylock found Jones on the left wing. Jones spun and, while tightly covered, rattled in the game-winner.

Jones, who scored 11 points, made only one of four shots from 3-point range. As a team, the Sooners were 1-of-11.

Forward William Davis scored 20 points and had nine rebounds for the Sooners. Blaylock, who sat out Friday's game for disciplinary reasons, had 14 points, six assists and four steals.

Stanford 95, UCLA 86

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Todd Lichti scored 23 points and freshman reserve Adam Keefe had 22 on as 12th-ranked Stanford, 26-5, took command early and went on to beat UCLA, 20-9, in a Pacific-10 semifinal.

The win was the 11th straight and 21st in the last 23 games for Stanford.

Reserve Bryan McSweeney had 14 points and Howard Wright and Eric Reveno 10 apiece for Stanford.

Pooh Richardson led UCLA with 24 points, 14 in the first half.

Texas 101, Arkansas 99

Lady Horns win, 101-99

DALLAS — Freshman Vicki Hall's 18-foot field goal with 23 seconds left lifted Texas over Arkansas, giving the fourth-ranked Lady Longhorns to their seventh consecutive SWC post-season tournament championship.

Texas, 25-4, has won 22 consecutive games, but perhaps even more remarkable is its streak against SWC competition.

The Lady Longhorns have won 170 consecutive games against SWC opponents and have not lost a conference game since the women's teams began playing for the championship in 1983. That streak stands at 119 games.

Arkansas, 22-7, remains hopeful of securing an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

FSU 80, South Carolina 63

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Derrick Mitchell scored 20 points and Tony Dawson added 17 Saturday, leading 14th-ranked Florida State, 22-6, past South Carolina in the Metro Conference semifinals.

UNLV 68, New Mexico St. 62

LONG BEACH, Calif. — David Butler scored 17 points as 18th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas, 26-7, beat New Mexico State, 21-10, to win the Big West Conference tournament and an automatic NCAA berth.

SEC

Florida 76, Tennessee 71— Livingston Chatman, who scored 25 points, broke a 61-all tie with a free throw and added a field goal 18 seconds later. The Gators then stretched the lead with free throws in the final minutes. Clifford Lett had 17 points for Florida, while Doug Roth led Tennessee with 14 points and 11 rebounds.

Alabama 83, Vanderbilt 79— Alvin Lee scored 24 points, including three straight 3-pointers during one stretch, as Alabama moved into the championship game.

Vanderbilt hit 11 of 19 from 3-point range, including a tournament-record six by Barry Booker. But Alabama also hit its 3-pointers (seven for 10), outrebounded the Commodores 34-25 and shot 55 percent from the field.

MHS claims another title

From Staff Reports

CARLSBAD, N.M. — The red-hot Midland High baseball team hung on to win the championship of the Carlsbad Invitational baseball tournament. The Bulldogs held off a late El Paso Eastwood rally to win 13-10 and finish their non-district season with a 9-1 mark.

Midland Lee won third place with a 9-4 count over Plainview, Midland High's bi-district playoff opponent last season.

MHS got to the championship game on the strength of outstanding pitching Friday by Kevin Rychel and Gabe Salazar. Rychel, the tourney Most Valuble Player, tossed a no-hitter and struck out 12 in an 11-1 romp over Plainview. Salazar then threw a three-hitter to vanquish Carlsbad 2-0.

Midland Lee opened with a 14-9 win over Fort Stockton, but dropped a 1-0 thriller to El Paso Eastwood in semifinal play.

Rychel was joined on the all-tournament team by Salazar, MHS infielder Dorey Thompson, Lee infielder Ty Chambers, and Rebel outfielder Mike Pearson, who had homered against Fort Stockton.

Evander Holyfield's thudding hooks end Dokes' comeback

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Evander Holyfield beat and bloodied a determined Michael Dokes Saturday night before finally stopping the former heavyweight champion with two huge left hooks in the 10th round of a bruising heavyweight battle.

It was only the third fight for Holyfield as heavyweight, and Dokes was his toughest test yet. Holyfield was a 9-2 favorite.

Holyfield shook off several low blows early in the fight, punches that seemed to anger him, and cut Dokes over both eyes.

State playoffs

PA Lincoln beats Travis

Class 4A Championship

AUSTIN — Brandon Tyler's defensive performance and his 21 points propelled Port Arthur Lincoln to an 86-72 win over Austin Travis and in its fifth state championship in five tries at the 69th Boys' State Basketball Tournament Saturday.

In the Class 5A game, League City of Clear Lake beat San Antonio Jay, 86-69.

The Bumblebees, 31-7, add this year's 4A crown to trophies in 1981, 1984, 1986 and 1988. They have never lost at the state tournament, posting a perfect 10-0 mark.

Only Snook in Class A with 10 and Buna in Class 3A with seven have won more championships than Lincoln.

"It's great to be a part of history," said Tyler, who has signed a letter-of-intent with DePaul. "We may all go away and die someday, but this will always be here."

The upstart Rebels, 25-13, who came in with the worst record of any team in the tournament, surprised Lincoln in the first half and actually led through most of the first quarter in front of a crowd of 12,900.

2A Championship

AUSTIN — Clint McPherson's shot at the buzzer gave Edgewood, 30-8, a 48-46 victory over Tidehaven, 30-7, and its first-ever Class 2A title.

Tidehaven's Larry Sanford had tied the game with 12 seconds to play. After a timeout, Edgewood's Todd Hale missed a shot from the left side with five seconds left but McPherson, who had nine points, put it back in from the right side as time expired.

Class 3A Championship

AUSTIN — With 7-0 postman Shaquille O'Neal limited to 19 points and in foul trouble, San Antonio Cole relied on a team effort to get past Clarksville 66-60 and capture the Class 3A championship at the 69th Boys' State Basketball Tournament.

The win capped a perfect season for Cole at 36-0, while Clarksville, which had won 19 straight, finished 29-3. The crowd of 13,042 was the largest ever to witness a Class 3A game.

O'Neal, who was averaging 32 points and 22 rebounds, was not effective offensively and was limited defensively after he picked up his fourth foul with 6:39 left. His team was leading 53-47 at the time.

If it looks good enough to eat, you had better not

Battles

Q- Recently you mentioned being on a starvation cholesterol diet. What is that and why are you on it?

Some people have so much gall, it's more like bile. This person is one of them.

The question is an affront, an invasion of privacy and no one's business.

This is something about which I have no inclination to discuss, especially with strangers. Some topics are of such a personal and intimate nature that they are too delicate to share with complete strangers.

....But since you asked.

It was just after the seven week period of self indulgence, that time when the most difficult exercise is to put one's hands on the edge of a table and push.

Cholesterol tests seemed to be the in-thing to do and with all the running and biking I do, there was no danger, only confirmation that the test wasn't necessary, Thanksgiving/Christmas gluttony notwithstanding. If I thought I'd flunk, I'd never have taken it.

The test result: "You've been eating. Stop it, immediately."

DEVASTATION was total. No cheese, my favorite food; no Mexican food; no eggs, only low fat milk and yogurt; beware of spaghetti sauce; don't even look at a photo of a pizza.

Palm oil, cocoa oil, butter, any saturated fat....never more.

A reduction of beef already had been prompted by a stand against athletes' use of steroids.

Fish and fruits and vegetables, chicken, unlimited quantities. Still, after garbage washing ashore closed many of the nation's beaches, how safe could fish be?

And chicken, it can't be fried and its other problems have been thoroughly chronicled. But if you want to take a chance....

DO YOU realize what it's like to go through a cafeteria line with two entrees from which to choose, the baked fish or the beef stew? And if they run out or just didn't change the menu from noon, a glass of water, stewed broccoli is the piece de resistance, with maybe a bowl of watercress..

What's even worse, going through the cafeteria line and having to pass on the fried okra.

But there are always fruits and vegetables. All you want, they said. I use everything....cucumbers, tomatoes, pepper, mango squash, carrots, broccoli, raisins, watermelon or any other fruit in season....pineapple is great, where's the kale?

Now even this citadel of safety is suspect with the apple and alar.

As a result, when it comes to fruit or berries or vegetables, if it looks good enough to eat, don't. They've probably sprayed it with something life threatening.

The new criteria is that if it doesn't have a worm hole, it's not fit to eat.

APPARENTLY, I'm not alone. Judging by others reading labels market labels for fat, cholesterol, sodium, oils...

You just wonder what we should know about and will find out about just when a product has been judged safe.

Cereals? Oat brans are in vogue, healthy and even hostile to cholesterol. Sugar, who needs sugar on cereal? Shredded wheat, you can eat all you want.

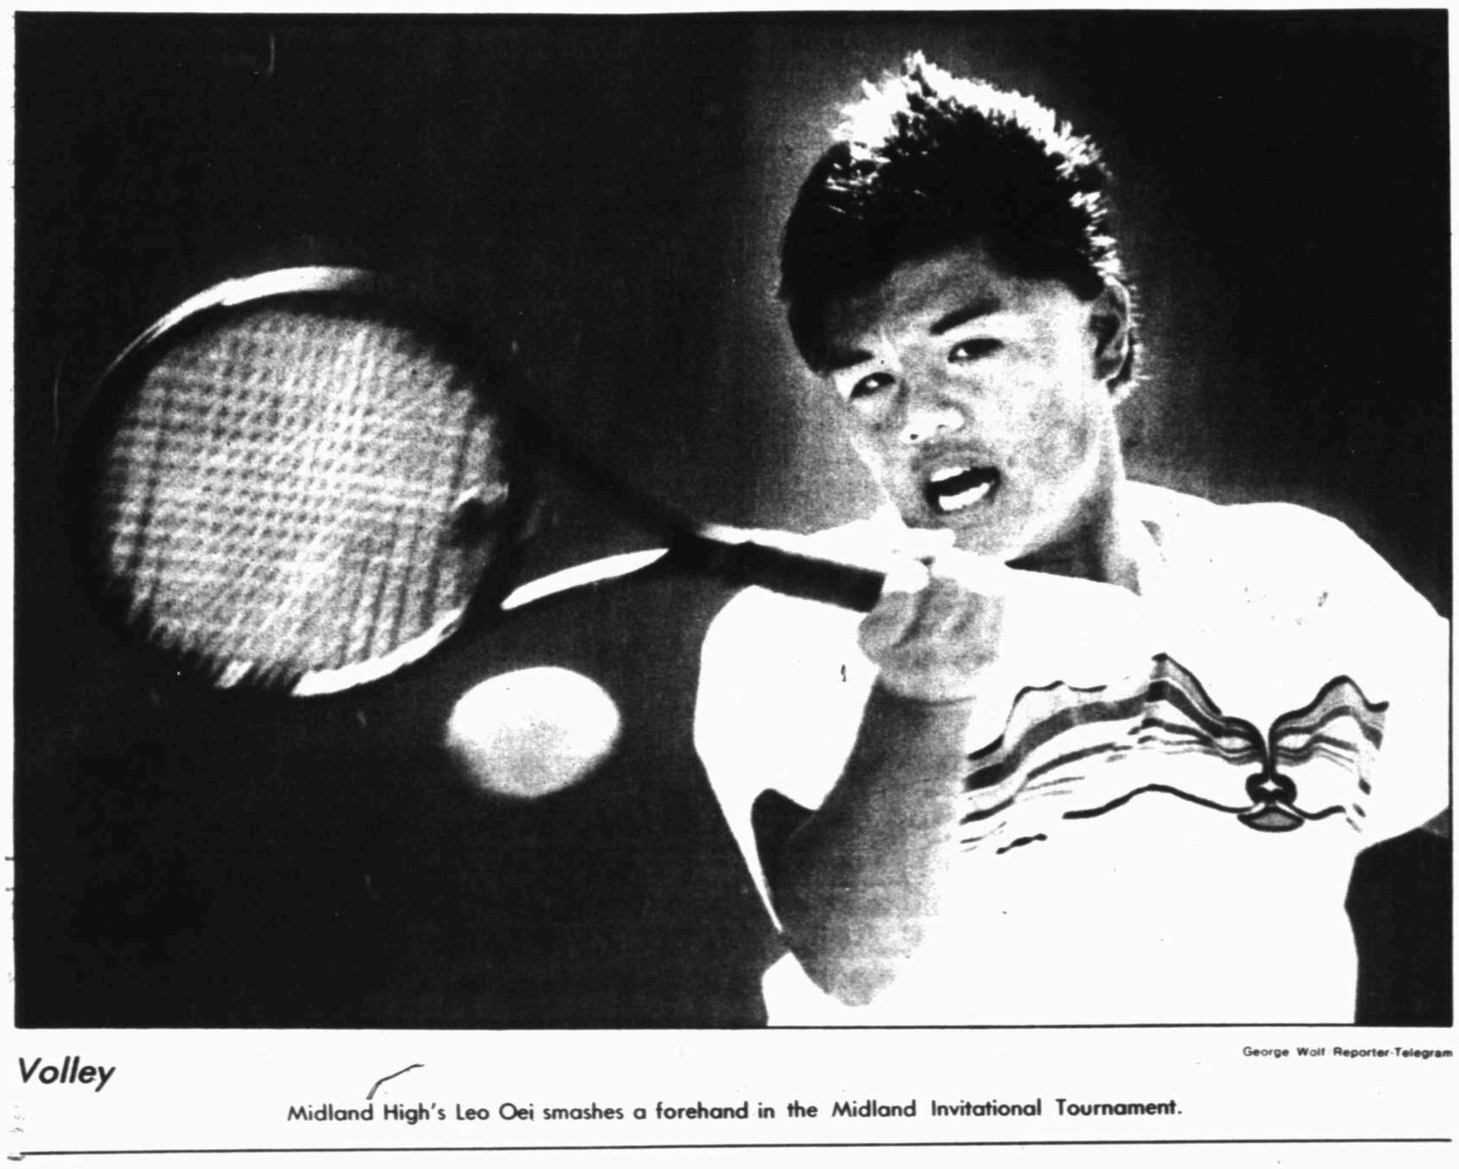

But cereals are for breakfast.

The diet restrictions are a challenge, but it's a challenge that is being faced with determination and resolution.

How does one survive this spartan diet?

Cheating helps.

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Willie Anderson scored 20 points and Frank Brickowski added 18 Saturday night as the San Antonio Spurs defeated the Dallas Mavericks 97-90.

San Antonio had lost nine consecutive games to Dallas going into the game.

Rolando Blackman led the Mavs with 24 points, one more than Adrian Dantley.

Dantley passed the 22,000-point mark in career scoring in the first half. He started the game with 21,989 points, fourth among active players.

Rockets 124, Nets 94

HOUSTON — Otis Thorpe scored 21 points and Akeem Olajuwon had 19 points and 11 rebounds as the Houston Rockets took charge in the second quarter and went on to defeat New Jersey.

Sleepy Floyd added 13 points and Pervis Short 12 for the Rockets.

Dennis Hopson led the Nets with 18 points and Chris Morris had 17

Bulls 105, SuperSonics 88

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan handed out 15 assists and John Paxson scored six points during a 14-7 fourth-quarter spurt as the Chicago Bulls snapped a three-game losing streak.

Jordan, returning to the lineup after missing his first game in more than three years on Wednesday, scored only 18 points, but eight came in the final quarter.

The loss was the third in a row for Seattle and their 24th loss in their last 25 road games to a Central Division opponent.

Knicks 114, Pacers 95

NEW YORK — Johnny Newman scored 26 points and Rod Strickland matched his season high with 20 as the New York Knicks won their 25th consecutive home victory and a season sweep of the Pacers.

The Knicks, now 28-1 at home, won all five games against Indiana this season, the first time since 1981-82 that they swept an Eastern Conference foe. New York defeated Cleveland in six straight that season.

Newman scored six points as the Knicks started the second half with a 15-6 spurt for a 72-59 lead, but the Pacers fought back to trail only 84-80 when Chuck Person hit a jumper in the first minute of the fourth quarter.

The Knicks scored the next seven points, including consecutive baskets by Strickland, and outscored Indiana 30-15 the rest of the way, turning the game into a rout.

Person scored 21 points and Detlef Schrempf had 19 for the Pacers, who had won three of their previous four road games after a 1-26 start. Patrick Ewing added 19 points and 13 rebounds for New York.

The two teams exchanged dominating quarters in the first half as the Knicks rolled to a 38-19 lead in the opening period, only to see the margin cut to 57-53 at halftime.

Newman and Ewing scored 12 points each in the first quarter. Person, held scoreless in the first 12 minutes, had nine in the second period as the Pacers outscored New York 34-19

Phillies finally win one; Rangers' Ryan tightens up

Associated Press

The Philadelphia Phillies, a combined 0-11-1 in "A" and "B" games this spring, got their first victory Saturday as Von Hayes tripled home a run and Tommy Barrett scored him on a squeeze play in a 2-1 victory over St. Louis.

It marked the first victory for Nick Leyva, the Phillies' new manager, who attributed his "success" to coaching under the Cardinals' Whitey Herzog, a master of the squeeze.

"I've been around aggressive people," Leyva said. Asked why he squeezed, he replied: "It's the first time we've had a runner on third."

The Phillies, who have been outscored 50-18 in "A" games and are 0-5 in "B" games, had been held without a hit for five innings by Cris Carpenter and Ken Daley. Carpenter retired the nine batters he faced and Daley allowed only a walk during his 2-3 of an inning.

But Steve Jeltz singled to lead off the sixth against Don Heinkel, a non-roster right-hander. Then Hayes tripled to right and Barrett laid down his bunt.

The Cardinals only run came off Ken Howell in the first on Milt Thompson's sacrifice fly.

In another notable development Saturday, Nolan Ryan left his first game with Texas after an inning because of tightness in his hamstring. The Pirates went on to beat the Rangers 7-1.

Pirates 7, Rangers 1

Ryan struck out Pittsburgh's first batter, Barry Bonds, but left after an inning of his debut with the Rangers, saying he felt tightness in his left hamstring. The 42-year-old right-hander, who signed as a free agent with Texas this winter, deaprted after giving up a two-run home run to Glenn Wilson.

Manager Bobby Valentine said he noticed Ryan was not using his normal high leg kick, and made the decision to take Ryan out.

"He thought he was going to pitch the second inning, but I didn't see any reason to push it," Valentine said.

Athletics 6, Giants 2

Mark McGwire had two homers, his third and fourth of the spring, to account for three of Oakland's runs. McGwire is 10-for-20 and has hit safely in all seven games he has played. Glenn Hubbard had a solo homer for the Athletics, and Bob Welch pitched five innings, giving up one run and four hits while walking two.

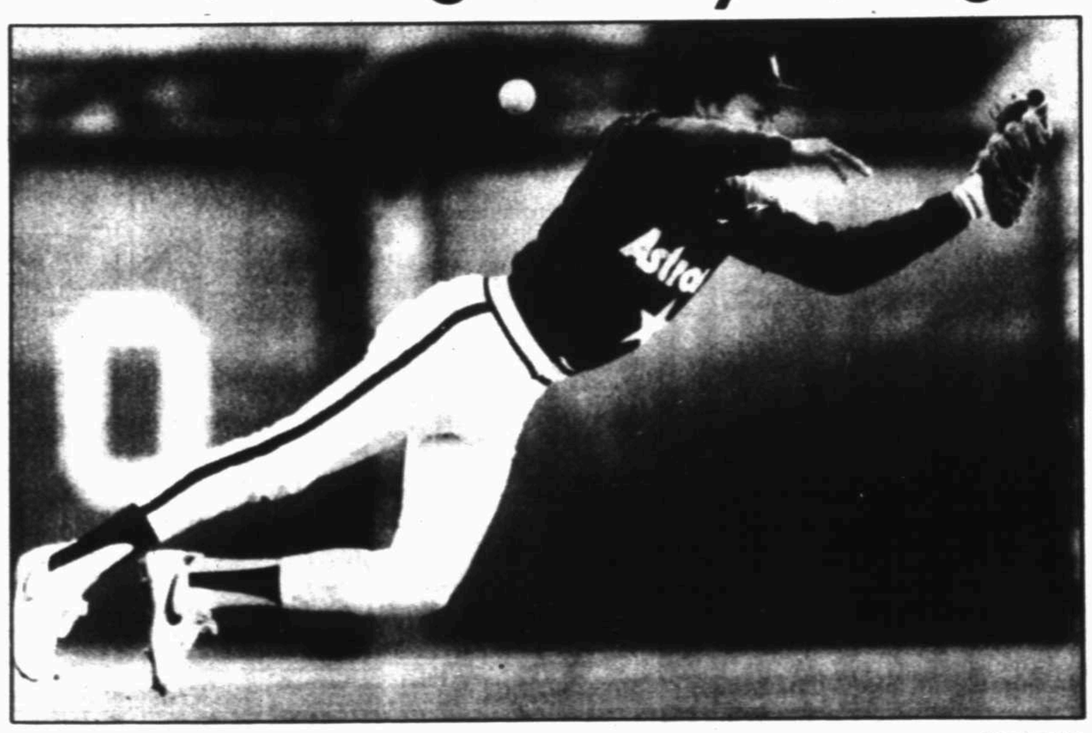

Expos 3, Mets 2

Rex Hudler's scored the winning run with a second-inning sacrifice fly as the Expos ended their losing streak at four and extended the Mets' to five.

Neal Heaton, Sergio Valdez and Andy McGaffigan combined to scatter 10 singles for the Expos. Bob Ojeda, in his second outing since microsurgery on his left middle finger, nearly severed in a gardening accident last September, went four innings, York, allowing seven hits and all three runs.

Royals 6, Twins 4
Twins 2, Reds 1
Royals 4, Tigers 3

Ed Hearn's infield single in the eighth broke a 4-4 tie and helped the Royals beat the Twins. Jim Eisenreich had a two-run triple for Kansas City in the seventh, and Bo Jackson, who had driven in a run with a third-inning single, began the winning two-run rally off Jeff Reardon with his second hit.

AP Laserphoto

Astros' third baseman Ron Washington goes one way and the ball goes the other as Houston displays midseason form at Kissimmee, Fla.

Larry Casian, a rookie left-hander for Minnesota, retired nine straight, three on strikeouts, in three innings.

Minnesota's victory over Cincinnati came on Dan Gladden's two-run, ninth-inning homer off Rob Dibble. Paul O'Neill singled home Barry Larkin with the Reds' only run in the first.

Non-roster outfielder Jeff Schulz singled home Kevin Seitzer with the winning run in the seventh inning in Kansas City's other game, against the Tigers. Oft-injured third baseman Chris Brown of Detroit left that game after one inning with what was described as a knee injury.

Yankees 9, Braves 7

Wayne Tolleson broke a 6-6 tie with a single in a 3-run eighth for the Yankees and Hal Morris doubled home two more. Bob Brower had three hits, walked three times, scored three times and drove in two runs for the Yankees.

Padres 9, Mariners 4

Rob Nelson hit a two-run double in a four-run fourth inning as Seattle lost its fourth straight.

Blue Jays 6, White Sox 3

Dave Stieb won his second straight for Toronto, allowing only Mark Salas' homer in four innings. Ernie Whitt drove in a pair of runs and Lloyd Moseby homered for the Blue Jays and is now 10 for 20 for the spring with four RBI.

The White Sox committed four errors for the second straioght game.

Astros 13, Dodgers 3

Gerald Young had three hits and drove in three runs as Houston scored 12 times in the fifth and sixth innings. With the scored tied 1-1, Young doubled to start a three-run rally in the fifth that ws capped by Cesar Cedeno's two-run triple.

The Astros sent 14 batters to the plate in the sixth, scoring nine runs on seven hits, three walks and an error. Dan Scarpetta started the inning and faced six batters, but got nobody out.

Angels 9, Brewers 5

Lance Parrish and Devon White drove in three runs each and Johnny Ray had three singles and two RBI for the Angels. Olympic hero Jim Abbott pitched three innings in relief, retiring the first six batters he faced before allowing two hits and two runs.

That World Series still haunts Oakland Athletics

By DAVE ANDERSON
N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX, Arizona — By their nature, the best relief pitchers respond to pressure. They also respond to pressure questions. And now, at his locker in the Oakland Athletics' clubhouse, Dennis Eckersley, who threw the pitch that Kirk Gibson of the Los Angeles Dodgers hit for the home run that turned last year's World Series, was asked what he had learned from the salt that still sears his wounds.

"I'd like to say, 'Don't take people lightly,'" but I didn't take him lightly," the 34-year-old right-hander said. "What I learned was that you're not supposed to give a cripple a breaking ball."

With the Athletics leading, 4-3, two out and one on at Dodger Stadium in the ninth inning of the opener, Gibson hobbled out of the Dodger dugout to pinch-hit despite a damaged knee and a damaged hamstring.

"He wasn't even trying to hit the ball hard; he was taking easy swings," Eckersley said. "But after he hit the home run, some Dodger scouts tried to take credit for telling their hitters to look for the backdoor slider from me on 3 and 2. How did they ever scout that? I never got to 3 and 2 that much."

If he had it to do over, what would Eckersley throw?

"Something hard, away. But at the time I just went with the pitch that was called. I wasn't going to make a big deal out of shaking him off," he said of Ron Hassey, his catcher.

"That home run was great for baseball, but not for me. It bothered me, but it can't destroy what happened last year. If it did, I wouldn't be very grateful, would I?"

Dennis Eckersley saved 45 of the Athletics' 104 victories last season. He saved all four victories in their sweep of the Boston Red Sox in the American League championship series, allowing only one hit in a total of six innings while striking out five.

And as Gibson kept fouling off pitches, it appeared that Eck would save the World Series opener.

But then Gibson pulled that hanging slider into the right-field stands for a theatrical 5-4 victory and the Athletics have been haunted by it ever since.

No matter what the sport, sometimes even the most talented teams need to learn from their losses before they know how to win.

And just as Eckersley learned not to throw a breaking ball to a cripple, his teammates learned what so many other baseball teams learned in the past: in the World Series the better team doesn't always win; the burden is greater on hitters who have only four or five times at-bat than it is on pitchers who have time to find their groove, and it's always harder to win when you're expected to win.

"You feel you're the better team, that you're going to win," said Dave Stewart, a 20-game winner in each of the last two seasons. "But you got to do it."

And the Athletics didn't do it, while Orel Hershiser and the Dodgers did. That's what Tony LaRussa, the Athletics' manager, hoped his team learned from that Series.

"When the other club plays hard and plays good, they can beat you," LaRussa said. "We got out of our style. We'd done a good job of staying within ourself until then. But give proper credit to the Dodgers, they played the game right. I'm more disappointed we didn't make it closer."

Eckersley's home-run ball lost the opener. Stewart lost the fourth game. Storm Davis lost the second and the fifth games.

Jose Canseco batted .053, with no hits after his grand-slam homer in the opener. Mark McGwire batted .059 with one hit, his ninth-inning homer that won the third game.

"I was trying to overachieve, I was trying to hit two or three more homers, I got caught up in the game," Canseco said. "But after you sit down and think about it, you realize it was mostly a lack of experience."

"It wasn't any specific thing," McGwire said. "We just didn't do the things we're capable of doing. The big thing we learned was just being there, especially the players who had never dealt with the aura of the World Series."

One of those players was Walter Weiss, the sure-handed shortstop who later was voted the American League rookie of the year. Despite his quick glove, the now 25-year-old Weiss also had only one hit, a single, for an .063 average.

"You don't think experience means anything until you have it," Weiss said.

Dave Henderson, the center fielder, who batted .300 in the Series, had been helped by a bitter experience: he was on the 1986 Red Sox, who were within one strike of winning that year's World Series from the Mets in six games.

"I thought about '86 once more; we had that one won," Henderson said. "Last year we just got beat. I can live with that. But that one in '86, that one stays with you."

But what stays with some of the Athletics is that Canseco's second-inning grand slam in the opener may have lulled them into thinking that the Series would be as easy as the season and the Red Sox series had been.

"I think there's a lot to that one," La Russa said.

140 CARD OF THANKS

THE FAMILY OF ROBERT DOYLE PHIFFER
Wishes to extend our heartfelt gratitude to all of the many loving and generous people who have shown us so much kindness and love during our time of so much sorrow and pain in losing our beloved youngest son and brother.

First, we wish to thank the PARAMEDIC TEAM for their quick response to our frantic call for help and for working so hard to save our child's life.

Also, the EMERGENCY ROOM STAFF & DOCTORS for all of their efforts and for their extra special understanding and compassion with us (the family) and with the many young teenagers who quickly filled the E.R. area and hallways as the word of our tragedy quickly spread throughout our city. We fully realize that by allowing so many people to remain with us and with our son and brother - right to the tragic end - was a very unusual, but much appreciated action by the staff, which is not normally seen or done in our local hospitals.

We also extend our gratitude to ALL OF YOU who brought food and flowers and other special contributions and who came to us in our time of greatest need to surround us with your love, tender compassion & prayers. We hope we have not overlooked anyone in our thanksgiving, but if we have, please forgive us and know that it has not been intentional.

Our love and gratitude to all of you.

The sunken formal living area in this home is an L-shaped design. At one end of the room a cozy sitting area is situated in front of a fireplace and the formal dining room is located at the other end.

WELCOME HOME

Have you ever walked into a house and felt immediately at home? Grown children who might live hundreds of miles away will be "welcomed home" as soon as they experience the charm and comforting atmosphere of this week's featured home.

There are many unique appointments about this four-bedroom and four-bath home and the first is visible as soon as a person steps into the front courtyard. The home has a red brick exterior — from the old Scharbauer Hotel in downtown Midland — which just adds to the originality of this home.

THE FLOOR plan of this house is very unusual, with lots of space — approximately 4,100 square feet. A Mexican tile entry views an L-shaped formal living and dining room. This sunken living area is not only great when children and their families visit but the flow of this room is great when entertaining. A marble fireplace with a carved mantle is located to the right of the front door. A large sitting area, with a couch and chairs, focuses on the fireplace that has built-in cabinets and bookcases on both sides.

Situated behind this sitting area and in the right corner of the room, a game table is found in front of a wall of shuttered windows which view the backyard.

The game table area is separated from the formal dining room by a cozy sitting area that consists of two chairs and a table.

The front entry steps down into the elegant dining room. The dining room table is place beside the left wall of the L-shaped room. An antique brass chandelier hangs above the table. When dining, guests have a wonderful view through many windows of the lovely backyard.

THE HOME was professionally decorated by Charlottes of El Paso and this room features a petite sea shells pattern wallcovering above a stained wainscoting. The wallpaper is even found on the beamed ceiling. Motorized skylights not only provides rays of sunshine but they can be opened to allow fresh air to flow in.

Cinnamon carpeting, recessed lighting and a ceiling fan are the other elegant appointments of this marvelous room.

To the left of the entry, a hall leads to the kitchen, study, guest room and master bedroom. Stairs at the end of the hall ascend into a bedroom upstairs.

The kitchen has a Frigidaire cooktop on a central work island with a shelf that can be folded down when not in use. The other appliances include a Frigidaire microwave and self-cleaning oven, and a Kitchen Aid trash compactor and dishwasher. A spacious pantry provides easy access for a busy cook when trying to feed a house full of guests. An oversized sink is separated from the breakfast room by a bar which can easily accommodate four stools. A definite plus in the kitchen is a door in the kitchen that opens into the formal dining room.

THE BREAKFAST room features a built-in server and an atrium door allows access into the back patio. The Mexican tile patio views the beautiful landscaped flower beds that are shaded by large trees.

The utility room and two car garage with automatic door openers are adjacent to the breakfast room. The utility room has a sink, a built-in ironing board and space for a freezer. This room is brightened by a skylight.

Across from the kitchen, a door leads into a private study where shuttered windows view the front courtyard. The study has a neutral grass-cloth wallcovering and a wall of built-in cabinets. This room also has a concealed projector screen, skylights and a ceiling fan. Inside the study, there is also a smaller office which the current homeowner is using as a computer room.

NEXT TO the study a guest bedroom is decorated in a cinnamon and white wallcovering with a blue accent along the border. This room also has shuttered windows which view the front yard and a walk-in closet.

A guest bath is situated across from the guest room. Shades of blue and taupe adorn the walls of the bath which has a marble vanity. A separate bathing area include a bathtub with glass doors.

Access into the master bedroom can be made two ways — from the hall off the front entry and through a hall next to the utility room. This room has a marvelous sitting area at one end and windows in this room provide a great view of an enclosed atrium. A neutral flame stitch wallpaper also adds to the charm of this room.

The master bath has a marble vanity with two shell-shaped sinks and a bathtub with glass doors. A dual skylight brightens both the bath and large walk-in closet. The closet has built-in drawers and shelves.

A DOOR between the master bedroom and the utility room leads by the atrium which has many different varieties of plants basking in the sun into a multi-purpose room. This room could be used as an addition guest room. exercise room or hobby room. A half-bath is situated off the room, as well as a smaller room which could be used as a dark room or sewing area. A door provides a private entrance into the room for guests and has two walk-in closets.

The hall which is situated to the right of the entrance has a staircase at the far end which ascends, past a wall of family photos, into a large upstairs bedroom. Grandchildren would definitely enjoy their stay in this room which has a large sitting area and a private bath, as well as room for two beds at the far end.

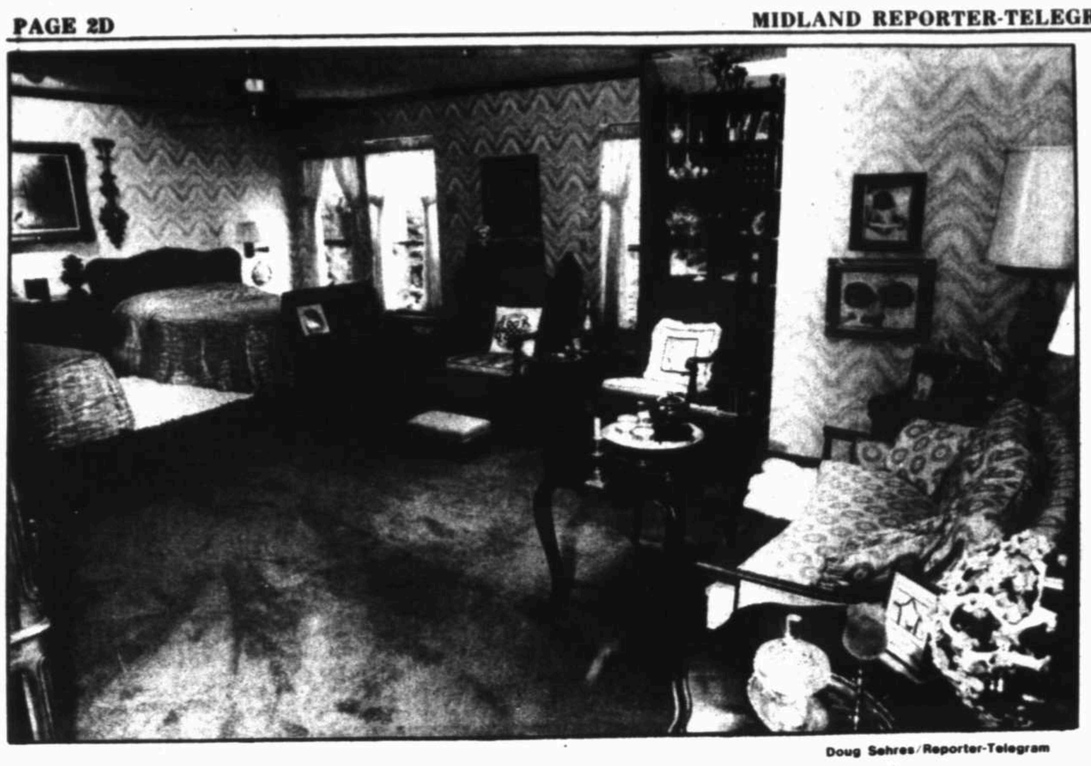

In the back of the home there is paved parking which could accommodate a RV and a small yard which could be used for a small garden. There is also a rain barrel with a faucet for watering house plants. The other amenities of this charming home are a satellite dish, a security system and a bubbler system in the flower beds.

The Carriage Company, Realtors is offering this home which is located in a nice, older neighborhood for $275,000.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Buying your first home

Q. My wife and I feel we are financially ready to purchase our first home but do not even know where to begin! What advice can you give us? R.K.L.

Langston

May I offer my congratulations — you are about to attain the "American Dream"! Purchasing your first home can be, and should be, an exciting, fun, educational and financially rewarding experience. Unfortunately, it can also be frustrating, horrendously time consuming and a disastrous mistake. To insure the best of results, my first advice would be to put yourself in the hands of an empathetic, knowledgeable and patient Realtor. He/she can guide you through the entire process of home selection and purchase. I've many associates in my office who especially enjoy working with the first time buyers, among them Roberta Aldridge, Jerry Holt, Karen Mason, Kaye Horchler, Beau McGrath, Lou Matson and Nonnie Buller. And of course there are many others. I would encourage you to choose one agent — either through interviewing several, asking friends for recommendations, visiting with Realtors at open houses, or asking the Broker in the office of your preference to recommend an especially qualified associate.

Next, determine the price range of homes you should be considering through consultation with your Realtor and/or through a pre-qualifying session with a local mortgage officer. This keeps you from assuming unrealistic expectations and wasting time and effort by looking at homes that are above (or even below) your financial qualifying abilities.

Now, ask yourself what amenities and size you want in a home; which neighborhoods are most appealing to you; whether you prefer the shiny, newer properties or the charm and established landscaping of older homes. Discuss these preferences with your Realtor but be receptive to other areas and other styles; don't limit your selection. Looking at properties, either with your Realtor or through open houses, is the best process of self education available. You should quickly begin to feel comfortable with your own assessment of value, to prioritize your likes and dislikes, and to judge quality of construction and maintenance. When you feel comfortable with your own knowledge, you are ready to purchase your first home!

When you have selected a property, or several properties, do not hesitate to ask the Realtor for information on closing costs and payments, on comparable sales in the neighborhood, and on mortgages. He/she will also assist you in analyzing and comparing the physical and economic features of different properties, and in making an offer to purchase.

Remember, however, that the Realtor is the seller's agent if he is paid by the owner; however he is obligated by law and by the Realtors' Code of Ethics to treat you honestly and fairly. If you choose to have a real estate broker represent you as your agent, you should enter into a written contract establishing that relationship.

One last bit of advice: be loyal to the Realtor you have chosen to help you find a home. Call him/her for information on all properties, whether a sign, an advertisement or a friend's comment has prompted your interest. Do tour open houses but be fair to the showing agent by informing him/her on arrival at the property that you are working with another sales associate. The Realtor you have chosen wants you to buy wisely, to experience a smooth transaction, and to be happy with your purchase; he/she will diligently work toward these goals.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in thais column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701, (915) 682-9495.

Realtor discusses six relocation needs

Fifty-three million people will change residences in 1989. Some will move across town, others across the country; many will be transferred by their companies; all will be facing challenges that relocation presents. When this happens there are six relocation needs that are of significant importance according to Karen Foster, associate of Don Harvey, Realtors.

These six critical needs were revealed in research conducted by PHH Homequity, the nation's largest relocation management company in a survey of 1000 recent corporate transfers and were related the most important by the people who were relocating.

The first is to have a market appraisal of the home being sold. "It only makes good sense," Ms. Foster says, "to know what your home is worth so that you can set a realistic selling price."

Karen Foster

The second is to know the cost of living differentials in the area where you are moving. "How else will you know if you can afford it?" Foster asks.

The third is to take community orientation tour with a broker and/or relocation counselor. "Common sense dictates that you really should know the area under construction before the decision to purchase a home is made," Foster says.

The fourth is get home finding assistance. The help of a professional in the search for a new home being purchased is the only way to make sure you are getting your money's worth," said Mrs. Foster.

The sixth is mortgage financing for purchase of the home you select. It is very important before you leave your present home, to determine what the availability of money is for getting a mortgage at the destination.

The key to a successful transfer begins with making sure you've got the best available people to assist you.

Proper care of hardwood floors enables them to last longer than other types of flooring

By JOHN WARDE
New York Times News Service

With care, wood floors can be kept looking like new far longer than can other kinds of floors. This is because wood surfaces do not fade and can be successfully protected and refinished.

One key to their maintenance is frequent dusting. At least once a week, vacuum floors or go over them with a dry dust mop to pick up dirt before it becomes embedded by foot traffic.

Vacuuming is especially recommended because it lifts dirt from seams between floorboards.

If the floor has been finished with penetrating sealer, polyurethane or a resin-based finish (sometimes called a Swedish finish) and is in good condition, a damp mop can be used.

However, it is best not to let water in any amount come in contact with wood floors.

No wood floor, whatever its finish, should be wet-mopped or washed with a cleaning solution containing water, and spills should be taken care of promptly. Forgo even damp-mopping a floor that is poorly finished or unsealed.

Waxing is important, too, though some floor specialists say polyurethane and resin-finish floors can go unwaxed.

Wax forms a barrier that prevents spills from penetrating the finish, and also enhances the wood's appearance.

Floors need to be waxed only once or twice a year, except in heavily traveled areas where the wax wears thin sooner. If a waxed floor shows signs of wear, buffing either by hand or by machine will usually restore it.

To buff by hand, rub the area briskly with a soft, clean cloth. A folded cloth diaper is excellent for this. To buff using a machine, rent a floor polisher with a pad that is 12 or 16 inches in diameter.

Paste wax is the most durable variety, but it requires a good deal of effort to apply.

Liquid wax is easier to use. The brands that contain a cleaner remove much of the previous coat and slow discoloration of the floor due to the accumulation of old wax. A cleaner also enhances the bonding ability of the new wax.

Be sure to select a liquid wax and cleaner combination that has a solvent base; water should not be listed among the ingredients, nor should mixing or rinsing with water be suggested.

To apply paste or liquid wax either by hand or by machine, follow the manufacturer's instructions. With the wax and cleaner combination, change the applicator pads frequently to avoid reapplying dirty wax removed by the cleaner.

With any type of wax, a thin coat is best. Not only does it dry to a harder film than a thick coat, providing more protection against grit, but it is also less slippery and can be buffed to a higher sheen.

Eventually, all waxed floors require stripping to remove built-up wax. When floors seem dull despite buffing, it is usually a sign that stripping is due.

To strip a waxed floor, wipe it with a solvent-based liquid de-waxer or de-glosser, available at paint stores and home centers. If you are certain that the floor finish is not varnish or polyurethane, mineral spirits may be used instead.

Apply the fluid using cloths and No. 2-grade steel wool, squeezed out or changed frequently, and be sure to follow the safety precautions printed on the label.

All of these liquids are flammable and dangerous to health, and require wearing rubber gloves and an adequate respirator mask. The Consumer Product Safety Commission recommends that these products be used only where ventilation is excellent.

After stripping, apply two thin coats of paste wax, machine-buffed, or apply a single coat of liquid wax-cleaner, also buffed by machine.

As for stains, there are a few cures.

To remove light-colored stains caused by water (i.e. wet boots, clothing or umbrellas left dripping in hallways), rub the spots with No. 2 steel wool. Rewax.

To remove black heel marks, rub with a finer grade of steel wool — No. 1 or No. 00 — dipped in mineral spirits and squeezed nearly dry. Rewax.

Buying 'fix-up houses' is good investment

A "fix-up house" or "handyman's special" is a basically sound, well located, single family house that is in need of improvements. Percentage wise, once these budget houses are fixed-up, they often have a better appreciation value than expensive houses.

Cooper

Because improvements are needed on the house, the investor is able to buy it below market price and immediately upgrade it for a quick resale, or for a long-term rental investment.

Here are a few guidelines to consider about such an investment plan:

- Whether you do most of the fix up work yourself or hire someone to do it, this kind of investment requires your daily attention.
- Avoid houses that need major or costly work that does not add much market value. This includes a new roof, new foundation, plumbing, wiring, and termite or dry-rot repairs. If you are unable to evaluate such items, hire a professional.
- When initially considering the house, there should be an opportunity to substantially increase market value with basic, inexpensive improvements, such as painting, carpeting, floor sanding (where needed), tiling, landscaping and making minor structural repairs.
- Only make major improvements that are known to increase buyer interest, such as modernizing the kitchen and bathroom, and adding needed or new utilities. Adding a fireplace, for example, will increase the market value of most houses.
- Follow this general rule-of-thumb: for every one dollar spent on an improvement, be sure it adds at least two dollars of market value to the house.

Transforming a house from an ugly duckling into a beautiful swan can be profitable!

MBR president gives update

January Multiple Listings figures showed 81 home sales closed with an average sales price of $63,815. The number of homes actively on the market has continued to decrease, as January ended with 1123 residential listings. The average list price of $89,597 is over $7,000 higher than last January. The lower average sales price at this time is reflective of the large number of young couples and first time home buyers who are taking advantage of the low interest rates and special financing offered.

The Midland Board of Realtors will be joining Keep Midland Beautiful and the City of Midland in sponsoring the Citywide Spring Clean-up Campaign. During April the Midland Board of Realtors will be involved in several other civic endeavors, such as a Tele-Party for the American Heart Association, the Victim-Witness Assistance program and Christmas in April.

This information was supplied by Kay Sutton who is currently serving as president for the Midland Board of Realtors

Check contact tab, wiring, plug to repair lamp

Q: We have a lamp that only works about half the time. I would replace it, but it is part of a set. Can you tell me what to look for and maybe a few things I could try?

A: The first thing to do is to unplug the lamp and remove the shade, the harp, which is the holder for the shade, and the bulb. There is a contact tab just inside the socket where the bulb fits into the base. Clean off any dirt or corrosion from this. You might try gently raising it slightly off the base in order to make better contact with the bulb. With the bulb in place again and the lamp plugged in, try the lamp.

If it still doesn't work, unplug it, remove the bulb and try a couple of other things. The socket has a sleeve around it which can be removed by sliding upward. Check the wiring on the socket. If these all look OK, check underneath the socket. The wires should come up through the base of the lamp and into the cap of the socket. At this point, you should see a knot (an Underwriters' knot) that acts as a sort-of strain relief for the connections. Check all along the wire for any sharp bends, breaks or exposed areas. If you find any problems like these, it would be wise to replace the wiring. Most home centers and hardware stores will sell replacement wiring and other parts.

Another problem area is the plug itself. If you can wiggle the wire when the lamp is plugged in and find the lamp blinking on and off, replace the plug with a simple quick-connect type. These are easy to snap on and require no special tools.

TOWNHOUSE WITH SOUTHWEST FLAIR

Picture yourself relaxing on an oversized comfortable couch in the huge living room of a mountain lodge, surrounded by beautiful southwestern art and paintings. As you gaze into the large warm golden fire before you, the air is filled with the sweet smell of cedar and pinon. Overhead, large beams stretch across the cathedral ceiling as if forever. You glance to your left through the archways into the beautiful mexican tiled foyer as the emerald plants of the atrium reach forward the skylights above. Thinking of peaceful moments in the past and knowing that behind you lies a slightly heated pool and the gentle messaging bubbles of a hot tub, the stress of the day no longer exsists.

This can be yours for less than you think! If you are looking for a 2500 sq ft. home in the Lee High School district with 3 4 bedrooms, 2 living areas, large closets & storage, Dupont Steammaster carpet, 2 patios, a new 30 year cedar shake roof, laundry room, ceiling fans, circular drive, rear entrance, 2 car garage and little or no entrance yard, then this is for you. Spend your evenings & weekends doing what you want! This beautiful home is for sale or rent by owner-by appointment.

Raising Their Children's Children

A growing segment of our population is grandparents raising their grandchildren, children whose only fault was to be born to parents who can not or will not assume the responsibility of providing for the emotional and physical well being of the child.

As couples begin to reach their "golden years," a time when they have raised their children and sent them out on their own, they begin to entertain thoughts of retirement, leisure time and travel.

But a growing segment of our population in this age bracket is finding themselves in the parenting process all over again, only this time they have taken on the responsibility of raising their grandchildren.

In fact, it is estimated that two percent of American families may consist of grandparents raising grandchildren.

To help these grandparents handle this responsibility, support groups have been formed in which the main focus is to let these persons know that they are not alone. The support systems also offer emotional and political support for parents raising their children's children.

Midlander J.R. Hunt is the founder of one such group. When she found herself with the responsibility of caring for her grandson, Mrs. Hunt became aware of a need for some type of support system for others in her situation.

"I would go to the grocery store with my grandson, who looked much too young to be my child, and people would come up and talk to me," she said. "We would discover we were in the same situation." Each were grandparents raising their grandchildren.

So, about two years ago, she founded Grandparents Anonymous, a telephone support network for grandparents who are raising their grandchildren on a daily basis.

In the two years she has been answering calls for the support system, she has received about 100 calls, but said there are only about 20 regular callers. She is a one-woman show for the support group, handling all the calls on an individual, totally anonymous basis. Although some callers have shared their identity, Mrs. Hunt stresses that the group is anonymous and that she never reveals the identity of callers without their prior permission.

AT THIS point, some may begin to wonder, "Why all the secrecy?" Basically, the secrecy is because most of these grandparents prefer to keep their privacy: unfortunately, not all of the unions of grandparents and grandchildren happen under the best of circumstances.

"There are infinite variations of how a grandparents ends up with daily care of their grandchild. ... As many variations as there are situations," Mrs. Hunt said.

Some reasons are as soul-touching as grandparents who take in their grandchildren after the death of the child's parents or during the severe illness of the parents.

However, some circumstances are as heart-wrenching as parents who neglect or abuse their children, or are not physically capable of taking care of the children, often due to drug or alcohol addiction. Others incidents proved that the parents were simply too immature to handle the responsibility of having children, or that the parents simply had no desire for their children to be with them.

"Some parents just take the kid to a relative to be babysat and never come back," Mrs. Hunt said.

The circumstances vary with each case, but the results are the same. For whatever reason, these grandchildren are dependent on their grandparents.

In many of these circumstances, grandparents are forced to endure a great deal of embarrassment, emotional and physical strife, and unexpected financial responsibility. In addition, some are suffering from their own physical ailments.

THROUGH THE telephone network manned by Mrs. Hunt, she has encountered a variety of problems experienced by grandparents caring for their grandchildren.

"One of the main problems that I come across is that they (the grandparents) don't fit in with their (age) group. They don't fit in with the group of parents whose children are the age of their grandchild either," Mrs. Hunt said, explaining that this leaves the grandparents without any social outlets, without a peer group. "A lot of them also feel embarrassed."

Mrs. Hunt said she has always been an active type of person. Around 1980, Mrs. Hunt moved from Houston to Midland and became active in the community here. "I've never been very low profile. A lot of people have been impacted by our actions," Mrs. Hunt said. "When I see something that needs to be done, I do something about it."

Some of the "impact" Mrs. Hunt referred to is because her grandson is biracial, a fact that made Mrs. Hunt realize another need in Midland; a support group for biracial families. To help meet that need, she founded the Hunt Heritage Group of Biracial Families, an association for biracial children and parents. This support group also is a telephone networking group.

She compared her experiences with people's reactions about her biracial family with the nation's initial shock about John Lennon's open relationship with Yoko Ono.

"When I first started (rasing her grandchild), I looked for approval," Mrs. Hunt said, "and when I realized the different reactions people had ... I was surprised.

"I learned a lot about the stereotypes in our society. ... I learned a lot about humility and surprise. We've been very active in church and at school. I'm in a position to understand. There are many kinds of prejudice."

MRS. HUNT said she did not feel approval from her own race because her grandson was biracial, yet she did not have approval from the other race involved either because she is white.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The Canopy recently sponsored the third annual "Just Say Yes to the Midland-Lee Youth Centers" mother-daughter style show and luncheon at Midland Country Club. Approximately 200 guests attended.

This year, a silent auction was held in conjunction with the luncheon, and a number of local merchants donated gift items perfect for any teenage girl or her mom.

The Canopy provided a stunning array of spring outfits for its Teen Board, composed of junior and senior girls from both high schools, to model. Representing MHS were Helana Beal, Teya Rowland, Alexis Beck, Emily Kleine, Marisa Gibson, Jennifer Jones, Sheri Sport, and Heather Fergeson, and from LHS, Hilary Johnson, Shawna Hill, Lauren Chapman, Libby Gilmore, Sherie Chadwick, Angela Bishop and Anne Embrey.

The girls were escorted to the runway by LHS students Spencer Wheat, Chad Haney, James Holdridge, Arthur Donnelly and Mike Barb and MHS students Russell Page, Brad Ellis and Roman Duran.

Chairpersons were Nancy (Mrs. Woody) Woodman and Dee (Mrs. Paul) Morris, along with Ann (Mrs. Bill) Kleine, honorary chairperson.

The money raised will be spent for operations of the Midland-Lee Youth Centers, which have served approximately 8,000 teenagers this year.

MACK THOMAS, longtime Midland interior designer, was the guest speaker for the Green Tree Country Club Ladies' Association's recent luncheon meeting, but instead of decorating, his topic was "High Tea."

A frequent visitor to Great Britain, Mack gave an entertaining talk filled with little known facts about the beverage, which is the English nectar of life. He discussed how to make a perfect cup of tea, the etiquette of serving and the differences between high tea and afternoon tea (the first is a heavy meal, traditionally served to the workingmen, and the other includes lighter refreshments).

Mack told that iced tea was invented in 1904 at the Chicago World's Fair in an ingenious move when warm weather caused the sale of hot tea to lag, and that the tea bag didn't make its appearance until 1912.

The members and their guests lunched on London Broil and Trouffle Puddling prior to the program.

Among those attending were Lydia Power, Anelle (Mrs. Jim) Mack, Jane (Mrs. Frank) Vitrano, Marcy (Mrs. Doug) Tull, Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Frank) Ittner, Maribelle (Mrs. J.B.) Waid, Doris (Mrs. John) Braun and Lucille (Mrs. John) Nobles.

DESIGNER FASHONS from Latin America set a festive mood for the style show and luncheon held recently at the Midland Woman's Club.

Beverly Reagan, owner of El Buzon in Ingram, Texas, and her associate and designer, Jean Clark, brought to town a variety of imported items, as well as their own studio designs, to show the assemblage. This marked their second appearance at the club.

The collection, perhaps best described as "Texas casual and fiesta wear," was modeled by Ms. Clark, Madge (Mrs. Porter) Wallis, Dorothy Perkins, Fay (Mrs. J.R.) Smith, Hazel Snodgrass, Gladys (Mrs. E.V.) Mitchell, Mary Kay (Mrs. Albert E.) Rattan, Carole (Mrs. Robert) Hobbs, Geraldine Simmons and Gail James.

A luncheon featuring Hawaiian chicken salad, tomato bisque and cheesecake topped with apricot sauce was served before the show at tables decorated with colorful Mexican paper flowers.

Mrs. Wallis, club president, welcomed the members and guests, and Marg. (Mrs. Jack) Samples introduced the program.

Among the 175 women attending the event were Jackie (Mrs. Wes) Perry, Rita (Mrs. Don) Elmore, Gladys (Mrs. T. June) Melton, Lou (Mrs. Decker) Dawson, Sarah (Mrs. Lowell) Branum, Allis (Mrs. W. Earl) Chapman and Christine (Mrs. Robert M.) Turner.

THE RANCHLAND HILLS Country Club Ladies' Association set the mood for spring at its March meeting with a style show by J.E. Borron for Ladies.

The store's ladies' buyer, Hilda Freeman, was narrator for the show. The models were Florence (Mrs. Harold) Clark, June (Mrs. J.L.) McGill, Alice (Mrs. George) Coombes, Dorci (Mrs. Keith) Weiser, Emily (Mrs. Kevin) Osborne, Stephanie (Mrs. Barron) Wilson, Pam (Mrs. Gary) Feist and Julie (Mrs. Gregg) Singhaus.

A salad luncheon was served in keeping with the spring theme. The clever table decorations, ceramic "howling" wolves announcing that "Spring is here," were later awarded as door prizes.

A social hour was enjoyed prior to the meeting.

GLENDA POLLARD and Michael Rozek, who were married here Saturday, are honeymooning in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico.

A number of parties preceded their 6:45 p.m. wedding in the chapel of First United Methodist Church.

The wedding week got off to a festive start on Thursday with a welcoming party and Texas-style barbecue hosted by Glenda and Mike for the groom's mother, Liz Rozek, and his sister, Sue Rozek, both of Chicago, who are visiting the Lone Star State for the first time.

The rehearsal dinner was given Friday in La Bodega Restaurant's Garden Room. A "Pamper the Bride" party was hosted Saturday morning at Back Stage by Mona Gale Gibson and Carole (Mrs. David) Wayland. The wedding reception was held at Karen's.

Pre-nuptial festivities began in January with an engagement announcement party hosted by Michelle and John Phillips and Cindy and Tom Gentry in the Phillips home.

Glenda was honored with a personal shower in the home of Patti (Mrs. David) DeFrance. Co-hostesses with Patti were Brenda (Mrs. Ronny) Patton, Kay Griffice, Paula Hanson and Sharon (Mrs. Alan) Schroeder. A miscellaneous shower was given by Cathy (Mrs. Larry) Sherman, Joann (Mrs. Van) Cambron, Nance Boyd, Dawn Burwick and Paula Hanson in the Sherman home.

In addition to the groom's mother and sister, out-of-town wedding guests included the bride's parents, Wanda and Glenn Fore of Brookeland; her grandfather, Albert Fore of Lubbock; her daughter and maid of honor, Lori Pollard, a student at Texas Tech University; the best man, Steve Wells, and his wife, Anita of Seattle, Wash., and Pat Smith of Chicago, a friend of the groom's family.

GRANDPARENTS

"I realized there was this mask people wear ..." she said. "I also realized I didn't have to have the approval of everyone," to raise her grandson happily.

In the Hunt's case, legal custody of their grandson was not a problem; however, many grandparents are not so lucky.

Grandparents who are providing care of their grandchildren without having legal custody of the children often encounter many problems. As a result, the children often become tools for the parents to use against their own parents.

"The grandparents and the grandchildren become attached to one another, then parent steps in and says that the grandparents must do what they ask or they will take the children away," Mrs. Hunt said, which creates a very unstable life for all concerned.

"There also are problems with visitation. If the grandparent has legal custody, then visitation (for the parent) is spelled out. But if the arrangement is informal, then there are problems with the parent just dropping in at any time which usually ends up upsetting the children," Mrs. Hunt said, adding, "It's also confusing to the children. They don't know who to be loyal to. Some grandparents have even had to go to counseling with their grandchildren because of informal visitation."

These are just a few of the reasons why many parents are forced to take their children to court in a battle for legal custody of their grandchildren.

Another support group called Grandparents Raising Grandchildren (GRG) was founded to fight for the rights of the group of individuals its name describes. GRG is based in Colleyville, but also has formed groups in Tarrant, Dallas, Johnson, Travis, Harris, Bexar and Jefferson counties. Until recently, Mrs. Hunt was unaware of the existance of GRG, but after reading their goals and explainations believes the group could be very important.

"All the things they (GRG) are talking about could happen to anyone raising their grandchildren," Mrs. Hunt said.

GRG'S PURPOSES and goals cover two type-written pages. The group's first purpose states that it's members want:

"To make the world a safer place for grandchildren whose only fault was to be born to parents who can not or will not assume the responsibility of providing for the emotional and physical well being of the child."

In addition to offering emotional support for grandparents, GRG is trying to gain political muscle and make the public aware of this growing segment of our society.

According to GRG information, there is seldom a legal or formal custody agreement regarding the situation. The grandparents simply continue to love and care for the children, providing them with an education, health care, emotional support and a stable environment.

But these grandparents face many obstacles.

They must live with the constant knowledge that without legal custody, they must give up their grandchildren to their children at any time without any assurance that the child will be happy or well cared for.

OTHER HARDSHIPS grandparents without legal custody must must deal with include:

- Many insurance companies will not allow a grandparent to carry a grandchild as a dependent.
- Many schools will not admit a child unless one parent is living with the grandparent.
- Physicians can refuse to treat a child except in a life threatening situation without legal custody.
- Social Security benefits are not payable to a surviving primary care giver grandparent without adoption of the grandchild.

For these reasons and many more, many grandparents believe they have no choice but to fight their own children for custody of their grandchildren. Yet as necessary as it is, GRG states that the attempt to get custody can devastate relationships within the family and even result in the grandparents losing the grandchildren.

Deciding to fight for custody of the grandchildren is a very difficult step for grandparents to take. Going public in a court to try to prove your own child is unfit to raise his or her child is a very difficult task. But because the child's welfare is often at stake, grandparents believe they have no other choice.

IN ALMOST every case, the entire burden of proof is the responsibility of the grandparents, as well as the financial expense.

According to GRG, higher courts have ruled that it is the fundamental right of a parent to raise the children, and current laws are less than kind to grandparents seeking custody of a grandchild even in the most serious conditions.

Because this is such a difficult situation for grandparents, Mrs. Hunt advises grandparents to, "Get involved with a support group. It is great. These grandparents need to know they have a peer group. They need to know there are others in their situation, that they are not alone. People like to know, and need to know other's legal problems, that their problems are not unique.

"They need to know that even if they get custody of their grandchildren that it may not be 'happily ever after.' It may entail counseling."

She also advised grandparents to, "Get involved in a church that is very supportive. If one church isn't, then find one that is."

Mrs. Hunt agreed to give up her anonymity so that she might help others in the area who find themselves in a similar situation. Grandparents who are raising their grandchildren on a daily basis are welcome to call her through Grandparents Anonymous at 683-3764.

Pamphlet offers tips

Copley News Service

Do the Moms and Dads who visit you for parents-teacher conferences enter your classroom with knees knocking or do you sense some anxiety. Maybe if they had read the suggestions included in "Making Parent-Teacher Conferences WORK For Your Child," parents would visit with less trepidation.

Send for your own copy and see if you can pass along the solid advice this six-page pamphlet provides. Prepared by the National PTA and the National Education Association, the fold-out flyer is available in English and Spanish.

The pamphlet's authors help Moms and Dads prepare for conferences by recommending that parents ask appropriate questions of their children, and then note their own specific concerns. In addition, the publication lists questions parents might ask each child's teacher, and suggests ways they can implement any action plans that they work out together.

The flyer may help you empathize with your kid's parents and make your conferences with them seem less like summit talks and more like team meetings. After all, who enjoys seeing grown-ups quaking the halls?

For your free flyer, send a long self-addressed, stamped envelope to: The National PTA, 700 N. Rush St., Dept. CN, Chicago, Ill., 60611-2571. Ask for Making Parent-Teacher Conferences WORK.

Armin Katz finds his life's calling in handwriting at 86

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Some people find their calling very early in life. Some never find it. Then there's Armin Katz.

A department-store window-dresser most of his life, the 94-year-old San Franciscan always dreamed of working with his hands. He knew his best talent was beautiful handwriting. But he didn't tap his labor of love until he was 86.

In the eight years since, the self-taught calligrapher has made more than 1,000 signs and scrolls, mostly placards used in protests by the local council for Soviet Jewry.

Like many who fall into the perfect job, Katz's handwriting career began accidentally. When his local rabbi noticed Katz' stylish writing, he asked Katz to make a sign for a bar mitzvah. Katz agreed, and, "By golly, they liked it," he recalls.

Word of his talent spread. At a neighborhood safety meeting, a police officer suggested someone make a list of residents and their phone numbers. Someone shouted out, "Mr. Katz has beautiful handwriting!"

"You're elected," said the police officer, Katz recalls with a smile.

Never charging a dime, Katz spends hours each week stroking his trademark curly letters on poster boards or tiny name cards. For every letter he writes, he must raise his brush or pen several times, knowing that the tiniest mistake will ruin the entire sign.

To obtain Katz's free services, customers only need to supply the boards — and be unable to pay for the task. Katz figures he has donated thousands of hours, as well as $2,000 worth of pens, to various nonprofit causes.

Katz, a Hungarian Jew who came to America in 1920, says he could never accept money for his work. "I just can't do it," he says, explaining that he already owns four suits and doesn't need any more money.

Katz, a 5-foot-3-inch wiry bundle of energy, has been hailed by neighbors, fellow temple members and philanthropists alike. His home is full of plaques and appreciative letters. But they're not hung on the walls, which are reserved for pictures and memorabilia of loved ones lost in Hitler's concentration camps.

His avocation has been a good distraction for Katz, who was devastated in the early 1980s by the death of Stella, his wife and companion of 52 years.

Through it all, he considers himself a lucky man, fortunate to have his craft. "I'd go crazy if it weren't for these signs," he says. "I'd have nothing to do."

Child molestation shakes family to core

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Lynn Scott, a certified family therapist and social worker, thought she'd seen and heard it all. But nothing had prepared her for the night her son tried to molest his 8-year-old niece.

It was midnight, the eve of her daughter's wedding, when her 32-year-old son, Malcolm, crept into the bed of his niece and tried to molest her. Malcolm Scott is now serving a one-year sentence in a Massachusetts jail for child molestation.

"I don't think there's anything in all my life's many traumas that has shaken me to my core as much as this business with my son," said Scott, a 59-year-old grandmother and mother of four. "The irony is I was a feminist-therapist for 15 years and I worked with women, a lot of whom had been molested."

In 1986 — the most recent year national statistics were compiled — an estimated 132,000 children (from birth through age 17) were sexually abused, according to the American Humane Association.

Scott said there was no question about the truth when it came to her niece's experience with Malcolm.

"He didn't actually get to molest her because this was a sharp little girl," said Scott. "He got into her bed and I guess he started massaging her. She felt funny and got right up and went downstairs and told her uncle, my son-in-law to be, and my daughter. They just called down the house. They got us all out of bed."

They called a family meeting and confronted Malcolm. While the family wept and raged, he sat like a stone, never batting an eye. Later that night, a therapist was called in. The next day, Malcolm told the police what he had done and turned himself in.

Afterward, Scott tried to find a support group for parents of child molesters, but had no luck. Although she found support groups for families who had suffered incest, there were no specific groups for older parents of pedophiles. That's her goal now.

"I want to find these parents," said Scott. "The issue isn't simply to punish the perpetrator but also to get to the bottom of what makes this happen."

Her son, who is in a sex offender's therapy group in prison, has finally begun to come to grips with the horror of his actions, said Scott.

Scott doesn't believe her son was sexually abused as a child, but he did suffer other kinds of pain, including some physiological problems because of his induced birth. Later, afflicted with learning disabilities, he was bullied by other children and teachers.

"I don't think he ever made it emotionally, and certainly not sexually, past the age of 5," she said.

The scene at home was also unhappy. "We had addiction of another kind," she said. "My husband was sleeping around and I was focused on that."

They were divorced when Malcolm was 14 and he moved in with his father and his new wife. When they had a child three years later, Malcolm began molesting her, Scott said. And there were many children he molested when he started babysitting as a teen-ager.

"He is now calling me (from prison). It used to be, when we'd talk on the phone, I would talk. I listen now and I'm really impressed. He knows what he's done to children, thank God. Finally, he's aware that this is damaging."

Malcolm realizes that he can never be on his own but must live in a supportive environment for the rest of his life, she said. Nevertheless, he is determined to break the pattern of addiction.

As for the rest of the family, Scott said all of them are left with a tremendous sense of loss. Right now, there's a "classic silence" among Malcolm's siblings about what happened.

"It makes me mad, makes me sad," Scott said. "There's anger and rage and hurt and abandonment and everything you can imagine. But I'm full of energy. I'm ready to work on the problem. Now I have grandchildren. But my son will never be in the same room with his nieces and nephews."

AIDS victim writes book for his children

New York Times News Service

LITCHFIELD, Me. — When Bill Vincent realized he would probably die before his children were grown, he started searching for a way to remain a part of their lives.

He decided to write a book. It chronicles his struggle with hemophilia and his subsequent fight with AIDS.

To Vincent, 36, the book will be his most important legacy to Chad, who is 11, and Dawn, 7.

It is a simple guide for the important and not-so-important times of their lives: when they go to high school or to their first dance, when they graduate or marry, when they fight between themselves or with others.

"It wasn't until we went to a friend's graduation that I had my first cry because I knew that I probably wouldn't be there to see my kids graduate," said Vincent, who designs the piping inside ships for Bath Iron Works in Bath, Me.

Vincent and his wife, Laura, started the book project in October, seven months after doctors said Vincent had acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Vincent said he was exposed to the virus that causes AIDS in 1980 or 1981 through a blood clotting agent he had been taking twice a month since he was 16 to control internal bleeding. Since 1984, the clotting product has been treated to remove the virus.

He spends up to an hour each day writing, then recording what he has written into a portable tape recorder. Mrs. Vincent transcribes his work on a personal computer bought especially for the project.

So far, he has written 32 pages. They are full of hope and despair as he tries to cram a life's lessons for his children in the time he has left.

"I realize there is no cure," he writes, "but let's at least have some hope. This is a good lesson for you to learn. No matter how hopeless things seem, don't ever give up."

He encourages Dawn to remain as optimistic and outgoing as she is now, and he wonders about her first date: "I've always pictured myself sitting in an armchair and meeting this young man and telling him to come in, fill out an application and come back in two weeks and I'll check him out."

Vincent wants to share his past and the people he knows and loves. He recounts for the children their parents' first meeting: "I got together with a friend of mine and went to a beer blast. I was beer brave and went over and asked her to dance. We had a really nice evening talking and dancing. Her friend gave me her phone number. I went home that night and told my friend that I was going to marry the girl I was with tonight."

He has written about his fears: "With the winter coming on, my anxieties get a little bit higher when Laura and the kids are sick. I wonder more and more when I'll get that next infection."

And the fears of his children: "Chad was crying, and I said 'why?' and he said, 'I'm not going to have a Dad anymore.'"

"I'll always love you," he recalls telling his boy, "and no one can take that away. If I die, that love is still going to go on."

DEAR ABBY

Twins' mother worries over revealing natural father

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have twin daughters who will soon be 5 years old. Their natural father broke up with me when I was 3 months pregnant with them.

Since then, I have been married to a wonderful man who has been with me since the girls were 4 months old. The twins' natural father gave all legal rights to my husband. As far as I am concerned, my husband is their natural father.

The problem is that both our families and a few close friends know about this and think we should tell the twins about their natural father.

My husband says if we don't tell them the truth, they might resent it if they ever find out.

I don't want to tell them. Do you think I should? And if so, should I show them the letters and pictures that I have kept? If I do tell them, when should I tell them? — MOMMY OF TWINS

DEAR MOMMY: If both families and "a few close friends" know, you can be sure someone will tell your daughters. Save the letters and pictures until they start asking questions about their "real" father. (They surely will.)

Genetics play a very important part in our lives, and every person has the right to know the medical histories of both parents.

Tell them as soon as they are old enough to understand.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is driving me crazy. After a year of marriage, his disorganized, slovenly habits are starting to affect me. There is a pile of his clothes a foot high on our bedroom floor. It's been there for two months, and he hasn't decided what to do with it yet. Every closet and cupboard is crammed full of his stuff. Our dresser is covered with junk. He never puts anything away; he just keeps adding to it.

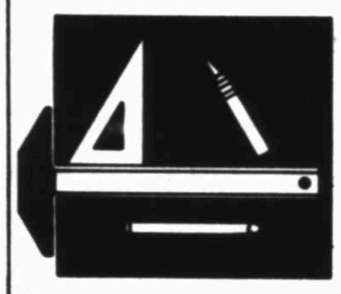

I've tried straightening up the place, but in two days it's a mess again. He "lost" a shoe once, and it turned up in the clothes hamper. I can't go on living like this. I am really at the end of my rope. What should I do? — WIFE OF A SLOB

DEAR WIFE: Since you are at the end of your rope — and possibly the end of your marriage — you are addressing your complaints to the wrong person. Give your husband a choice. He can either make an honest effort to correct his slovenly habits, or you are leaving.

Act of infidelity can seem harmless, yet isn't

Copley News Service

Is there a fine line between infidelity and adultery? About as fine a line as the Continental Divide.

According to Dr. Frank Pittman in the book, "Private Lies," adultery is defined as having sex outside marriage. But infidelity involves much more than sex. It can be as seemingly harmless as having lunch with an old girlfriend and not telling your wife about it.

Pittman says infidelity means not being honest with a spouse, which tears at the heart of marriage because it treats that spouse as the enemy. He says even something as simple as spending money without telling your spouse can be an act of infidelity.

Pittman says the perfect example of a double-whammy infidel is Jimmy Bakker who not only betrayed his wife but he betrayed his congregation by having an affair, then using church funds as hush money.

Singapore concerned about hypergamy

By SETH MYDANS
New York Times News Service

SINGAPORE — Daniel Lim is suffering from hypergamy, a widespread ailment that is causing Singapore's government serious concern about the future of its economy, social structure, and national defense.

Hypergamy is the tendency to marry "upward," used here to refer to the practice of women who choose a husband better educated, wealthier, even taller than they are — and to stay single if they cannot find such a person.

Fully 30 percent of college-educated women in Singapore, unable to find Prince Charming, remain unmarried today — even as nearly all their poorly educated sisters continue to marry and have babies.

Men like Lim, according to government officials, often end up marrying "downward" — hypogamy — after they fail to win a woman of their own educational level.

Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew expressed alarm at what he said this was doing to the gene pool a few years back, asserting: "Levels of competence will decline, our economy will falter, our administration will suffer, and society will decline."

Apart from quality, quantity is also worrying Singpapore's planners in light of the overwhelming success of the "two is enough" campaign for offspring in small families.

The planners are aiming for growth from the current population of 2.6 million to a goal of 3.4 million in the next few years. But the fertility rate — the number of children a woman is likely to bear — has dropped from 4.7 in 1965 to 1.44 last year, below the replacement rate of 2.1.

A year ago, the acting health minister, Yeo Cheow Tong, warned that the resulting decline in the young population would mean a drop in the tax base to support the elderly, as well as a lack of recruits for the armed forces.

In hopes that a new campaign will work as well as the old one, the government is now urging people to have bigger families. It is offering a package of incentives that replace previous inducements to "stop at two."

These include tax rebates, childcare subsidies, and priorities in school admissions and in obtaining government-subsidized housing.

And in an effort to assure quality in a hoped-for baby boom, the government has instituted a matchmaking service that seeks to marry off that 30 percent of educated women whose children, theory has it, will assure that society does not decline.

This service, the Social Development Unit, gets college-educated men and women together on moonlight "love cruises," tea dances, bowling clinics, and seminars on such subjects as personal investing or buying a used car.

The service says that it has 7,000 registered members, and that it has produced nearly 500 marriages since its founding in 1984.

"If you want to produce geniuses, you have to get the graduate man to marry a graduate girl," according to the unit's deputy director, Helen Wang.

She said well-educated single women may be highly productive in the work place, "but they are not fulfilling their function of having families."

A good part of the unit's efforts go into propaganda, Wang said.

"We try to tell our girls not to expect too much," she explained. "They want looks. They want money. They want security. They want a tall man. "We have to change those ideals. You cannot look for Mr. Right or Mr. Perfect. So we ask our women to play softer, to play a little dumb if possible."

In Singapore, she said, men tend to concentrate on their careers, to spend their time at their computer terminals, and to have little knowledge of social graces. "Some men come to us at the age of 30 and say they have never had a date," Wang said. "They are scorned as nerds. They do not know how to behave, what to do with girls. We have a lot of nerds around here."

So, she said, "we try to teach them — maybe not to be Prince Charmings, but we teach them to be halfway, and not be frogs."

Lim, a quality surveyor for the Defense Ministry, 29, and single, is a prime prospect.

On the day of the interview, he was in Wang's office, going through a book of snapshots of a recent five-day seminar he attended on "personal effectiveness."

"They were frank and direct," Lim said. "You are in this for one thing: you are in this to be paired off as early as possible."

Wang reminded him: "But we leave it to you whom to choose. We are not going to tell you whom to pair off with." Lim recalled: "The counselor was promoting me to the girls, and she was telling me, 'You better move fast. She's very popular.' "

"May the best man win," Wang said.

Newspapers, ever responsive to government campaigns, have joined the mating game with articles on the joys of dating and on overcoming shyness.

Groom's attire should be in sync

By LESLIE WATTS
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Clothes for the groom and other male members of the wedding party should be in sync with the formality of the bride's gown.

Here are a few guidelines:

■ Very Formal: The bride will wear a long, elegant dress with a train one-and-a-half to three feet long, and a full-length veil.

■ Formal: The bride's dress will be a less elaborate, floor length design, with or without a short train.

■ Semiformal: The bride may wear a street-length or simple floor-length dress and no train.

■ Informal: The look may be a street-length feminine suit or jacketed dress.

Now, here's what the guys wear:

■ Very Formal Daytime: The traditional look is an oxford gray cutaway coat, gray and black striped trousers, a pearl gray vest and a white, wing-collar shirt with pleated or stiff front. Gray striped ascot or four-in-hand tie, black shoes and socks, optional gray or white gloves also are suggested.

■ Very Formal Evening: Black or white tails, matching trousers with satin side strips, a white pique vest and white, wing-collared formal shirt with white pique front are recommended. A white pique bow tie, black smooth or patent leather shoes, black socks, white fabric or leather gloves and understated jewelry complement the attire.

Black is a traditional color for the groom, as is seen in this Kilgour, French & Stanbury tuxedo.

■ Formal Daytime: An oxford gray stroller coat (similar to a regular tuxedo) with black and gray striped trousers, a pearl gray vest, a white pleated front shirt with a regular spread collar and French cuffs, a striped gray four-in-hand tie with black shoes and socks make a good mix. Gray gloves are optional.

■ Formal Evening: These weddings require a tuxedo with a cummerbund or vest, a formal shirt in white or a pastel color with a tucked, pleated or ruffled front and French cuffs, matching or black trousers with side stripes, a hand-tied or band bow tie, matching cuff links and studs, black socks and black shoes in smooth or patent leather. Dinner jackets can also be used in place of a tux.

■ Semiformal Day or Evening: Solid dark suits, plain white shirts, four-in-hand ties, black shoes and long socks are best. Ties needn't match but should be coordinated. For warm weather, pastel linen jackets with dark trousers or dark jackets with light trousers may be used.

■ Informal Daytime or Evening: These require a simple business suit with a dress shirt and tie. Contrasting jackets and trousers also can be used as long as the combination is in sync with the bride's dress.

Most men's formal rental shops feature special wedding packages such as cash-off offers, free flowers or invitations. Check with several establishments to verify special features, range of styles and sizes, and alterations.

To avoid packing a tuxedo for out-of-town weddings, some chains offer a service to measure the groom or groomsmen anywhere. The measurements are sent to a shop near the wedding site, and the order is filled there.

People with disabilities become functional in simulated town

WALLINGFORD, Conn. (AP) — Easy Street isn't on the map, but it's one of the most popular places in Wallingford for some people.

Easy Street is the name of a 1-year-old, 5,000-square-foot "town" that has a grocery, bank, theater, restaurant, beauty shop, garage, telephone and newspaper vending machine.

Located in Gaylord Hospital, Easy Street is designed to train people who have suffered debilitating accidents how to deal with their new handicaps.

Gaylord, a 121-bed rehabilitation hospital that opened in 1903, treats patients for stabilization after spinal cord injuries, traumatic brain injuries and stroke, and for general rehabilitation, says Jerry Main, director of marketing.

"Look at these stupid plastic bags," Carolyn Morrone, director of occupational therapy, said pointing to bags that hang over fruit and vegetables in grocery stores. "Can you imagine getting these from a wheelchair?

"We teach them to go to the front of the store and ask for bags. It gives them a preview so they're not sitting in the wheelchair wondering what to do." Gaylord Hospital is one of 16 hospitals around the country that have Easy Streets, designed by Guynes Design Inc. of Phoenix, Ariz.

Visitors to Easy Street in Gaylord Hospital can order meals in a restaurant, practice getting in and out of a car and get their hair styled at a beauty salon.

At the grocery, when a patient reaches into the freezer to pick up a gallon of ice cream, the package is wooden, but it is the true weight.

"If you're sitting in a wheelchair, you'd be surprised how hard it is to reach into the bottom of a freezer," Morrone says.

The Easy Street's bank doubles as the post office because the counter is the same height.

"We suggest to patients that they make eye contact when they're further back from the counter, so it's not just a little hand coming over the counter," Morrone says. "We're trying to take the edge off the first experience."

David Guynes, president of the design company, says the Easy Street program has proven quite successful around the country.

"It increases the local awareness of the plight of the handicapped and the problems associated with becoming functional again," he says.

"It also produces a great amount of well-being for the staff and patients," he adds. "What it does is promote healing."

Guynes says 10 Easy Streets were produced this year and predicts that number will double next year. He says they range in cost from $165,000 to $250,000.

For William Williams, Easy Street at Gaylord Hospital is the last road he faces before he goes home to Ilion, N.Y.

Williams, 71, a gun dealer, was driving to Utica, N.Y., last October when he was hit head-on by a car he says was traveling about 90 miles per hour. The accident broke his pelvis, ribs and hip.

"They put a new hip in and I can walk a little, but I'm going to practice every day," he says.

"This is nice," Williams said of Easy Street, "but I'm going home in a week."

"I should stay longer, but I don't want to. I'm determined."

Author deals with fine 'art of aging'

By CHRISTINE K. VanDeVELDE
Copley News Service

For more than 50 years, M.F.K. Fisher has been writing about food — and love and hunger and family and people and places. W.H. Auden said of her, "I do not know anyone in the United States today who writes better prose." Her first book, "Serve It Forth," was published in 1937, and she has written 15 books since. She celebrated her 80th birthday this year, and is still writing every day.

Q. Has language always been important to you?

A. Well, we were a very articulate family always. And one indication of that is that we always kept a dictionary in the dining room, because that is where we all met the most. And Grandmother would say, "When in doubt, consult the dictionary." That was the first job that I ever did that made me feel important for the family. I was so young that I couldn't reach it. It was on a dictionary stand. So Father had a tiny little stool put there for me to climb. All my life it has been one of the best-read books. I have all sorts of books that are connected with words. I just love them.

Q. The 15 pieces in "Sister Age" deal with the art of aging. And you have written that you've already envisioned "the queer old lady authoress, found quietly dead between the stove and the icebox, with a glass of vermouth in one hand and an overripe pear in the other." When did the subject of aging become of interest to you?

A. Some people think that now that I am old I write about age. Well, those writings, most were written when I was 25, 35, 45. But I have always been preoccupied by aging. I don't know why people fear the subject. I was fascinated by aging. I thought it was wonderful to be old. I thought, "How marvelous!"

When I grew up, there was always a grandmother, or grandfather, two of them maybe if you were lucky, nearby or in the same house. And then there was always a batty old auntie who howled when the moon was full, you know, that sort of thing. We kept her in the attic — not we, but there was one around, always. And little children and old people loved each other. Now when you get older you are shoved away or put into a home and the children don't know you and it is terrible.

Q. Your books are about the people you have known, your family, places you have lived. Is all of it autobiographical?

A. Everything I have ever written is autobiographical. Because I am not very imaginative. And because I am the only person I know about. But I did write a novel once, "Not Now But Now." I wrote it on purpose, to please my husband (her third, publisher Donald Friede). I tried to choose a heroine who was the exact opposite of me in every single way. I modeled her after Miriam Hopkins, whom I knew rather well, and I pictured her as the antithesis of everything I am — short, lovely, quirky — because I was a tall, lanky woman.

It was about the supreme bitch in women, and I am not a very bitchy woman. I'm very feminine, but not bitchy feminine. Well, people said that the most autobiographical thing I ever did was that novel I wrote about myself. And I said, "What was that?" "Not Now But Now," they said. So you can't win, you just can't win.

I don't know why people fear the subject. I was fascinated by aging. I thought it was wonderful to be old. I thought, 'How marvelous!' "

Q. There are frequent moments of detective stories in your books. Are you a mystery fan?

A. Of course I am. Very, very fussy I am, too. I love Sherlock Holmes and I never did care for Peter Wimsey. I have tried to write mysteries, but I can't. I would rather have one little thing published for 50 bucks in Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine than in any magazine I can imagine.

Q. It is said that you never read reviews of your work or your own work once it is published. Is that true?

A. I never read a word of print about me or by me. I get sick to my stomach. Once it is in print, it's not you anymore. It's all theirs. And I just die. I knew I had to stop dying. There is no use in that.

Q. You had three marriages, raised two daughters, traveled, lived in France, and were constantly entertaining "strays and wayfarers," as you call them, but you still found time to write. How did you do it?

A. That was the problem. For example, our house in St. Helena was always full of people. We had nine bedrooms and they were always full. Of course, I had the captive, involuntary slave labor of my daughters. But when the kids left, there I was still with the nine beds full of hungry, thirsty people who came for lunch and stayed for three days.

I don't know when I found time to write, but I did. I have had to earn a living, you know, since I was about 30, younger maybe, for everybody. I still do. I'm still working. I do things more slowly now. But I hope I never stop. It is terrible to stop. You get hooked on it. I am 80 years old and every book I wrote is still in print, which is unusual. It's not dated, I guess, too much. And I am still producing, just the way I have always produced, and I like it very much.

Q. Can you possibly say there is one meal you have ever eaten that was the best?

A. On my 80th birthday, they had a birthday party for me at a restaurant in one of the obscure suburbs here. They sang and they were so darn nice and dinner was so good and I believe that was the only memorable dinner I ever ate. They served little round patty shells of beautiful pastry with a fresh plum conserve with the main course, game, grilled wild pigeon or something. It was so good, so intelligent, so well-cooked, so beautifully served — the perfect meal for me.

For instance, I will tell you the dessert. It was a childhood thing, an innocent thing, completely. It was a piece of good pound cake, sliced, and over it they had poured and poured and poured, until it was absolutely saturated, a juice made of fresh, just-pressed-through-a-sieve, red currants and red raspberries and blackberries. Sort of watery-looking, pinkish, awful-looking, actually. The kind of thing that kids would do. And it was served on a bed, a little puddle really of lemon-flavored glaze. God, it was good. I don't think I will ever forget it. Finally, I had a memorable meal.

Q. What is the "secret" project that it is said you are working on?

A. I always refer to the work in progress as the secret project, because if I talk about it, why write it?

'Young elder' keeping active in golden years

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Alice Faye

At 73, she is a self-proclaimed "young elder" who generations ago learned the first commandment of silver-screen glamour: A golden girl-next-door will rust beyond recognition without the proper care and feeding.

So Alice Faye, proud and petite down to her 25-inch waist, keeps moving. And talking. And playing a role she never assumed in the 43 musicals of the 1930s and '40s that enhanced Darryl F. Zanuck's fortunes and reinforced Irving Berlin's fame.

She's a model for young elders these days ("I like that a lot better than senior citizens. Don't you?"), touring the country in behalf of Pfizer Pharmaceuticals to preach the commandments of fitness. Her target audience: sufferers of arthritis and high blood pressure, two ailments she has struggled herself to overcome.

"I'm here to encourage you to take better care of yourselves so that you can enjoy life to the fullest," she said recently to about 250 seniors (young elders).

EARLIER IN THE day, she had addressed another group. Later, she would take her message to another group, adding to the 55 cities she has visited in the last four years. Besides the pharmaceutical firm, she has appeared on behalf of the American Heart Association and the Arthritis Foundation.

It is, to a degree, an ego trip. Her audience is old enough to remember the blond ingenue of "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "Easter Parade" fame, and who — in 1940 — was the No. 1 female box-office attraction of the year (Myrna Loy and Bette Davis included).

"She looked a lot bigger up there on the screen," observed one senior listener. "To see her now, she looks so ..." Yeah, petite — slinky petite on this day in a loose-fitting red gown highlighted with white.

During a brief question-and-answer session, one admirer praised her morality, her ability to stay "free from scandal." What, he wondered, was her personal code?

"I've been so darn busy chasing Phil (Harris, her husband for 47 years), I haven't had a chance to get in trouble."

FAYE AND HARRIS, the former bandleader, have shared their Southern California home for 30 years.

"He (Harris) walks, hunts and fishes," she said. "He's 84, and he's got a full head of hair and his original teeth. The two of us must be doing something right."

Faye, meanwhile, began a regular exercise program when she turned 40: walking ("I go as far as I feel like, then turn around and come back; I never worry about distance or time") swimming and stretching — along with mat and pool exercises she learned at an Elizabeth Arden health spa. Before that? "Nothing but dancing," she said.

She refuses to go into detail about her arthritis, other than saying it was diagnosed in her hands and lower back sometime after she turned 40.

She squeezes a rubber ball, does "lots of needlepoint" and paints pictures. "Great therapy," she said. And a boost for her ego.

One of her paintings, displayed in a Palm Springs gallery, was purchased by Frank Sinatra for one of his daughters.

But it's exercise — the most important of the five commandments she communicates — that keeps her most vital, she insists. "It helps me get through days that are pretty rugged."

Her other tips:

Stay involved. Make things happen. "Look at what Pablo Picasso and Ronald Reagan have done as seniors."

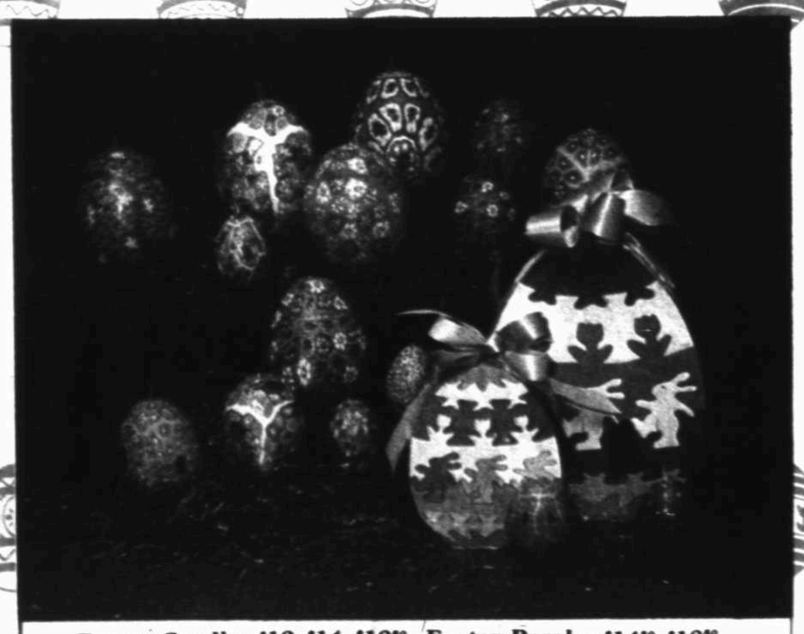

Don't smoke. "I quit one day (about 30 years ago) when I got sick to my stomach."

Eat a balanced diet. "I'm a pasta eater. That way you don't each so much bread." And when she gets the late-night munchies? "Popcorn, without the butter. It fills up the gaps."

Follow your doctor's orders and take your medicine as prescribed.

"Keep busy, stay active and you can do what you want — if you exercise and take care of yourself."

Abused women 'leave cracks in your heart'

CINCINNATI (AP) — Helen Magers and her co-workers see women battered by segments of a society gone violent.

Women who come into Women Helping Women, a Cincinnati agency where Magers is executive director, are invariably in crisis. Some are fleeing abusive husbands or boyfriends. Some are crossing the country, trying to start new lives.

Recently, a woman who said her husband beat her with a baseball bat arrived with her two children, Magers says. "Her left eye was swollen shut, her right arm — she couldn't move it," Magers says. "She went to the hospital, but the hospital had no place to keep her kids." The three were referred to a local shelter.

Last September, a 34-year-old woman who had been visiting the agency for 18 months was murdered. The woman had sought help in coping with an abusive husband. The husband, who had been in prison for wife beating, is charged with her murder, Magers says.

Magers began to cry as she recalled the case. "They leave cracks in your heart ..."

Workers from Magers' agency are following the case and attended the man's court arraignment.

"He thinks we're trying to railroad him," Magers says. "We went to his arraignment. He thought our being there put a lot of pressure on the judge."

Women Helping Women was founded in 1973 by graduate psychology students. It began as a general counseling and peer support group and has no national affiliation.

It now includes counseling for rape victims and talking with law enforcement officers and hospital personnel to encourage greater sensitivity in treating and questioning rape victims. Magers says her agency meets monthly at University of Cincinnati Hospital with police, prosecutors and hospital employees.

"The bottom line is, we're trying to make this as easy on the victims as possible," Magers says.

Magers, 44, was a Cincinnati television writer-producer when she says she decided to follow her social conscience. Her career at the agency includes being volunteer, interim executive director and, since 1984, executive director.

"The reason I finally came here is, it was time I put my energies where my big mouth was," she says. "If I was committed to this, it was time I did something about it.

"Coming to this, and learning about this, has been astounding. You can't feel sorry for yourself and work here very long."

Magers was reared as a Southern Baptist farm girl in tiny Pee Wee Valley, Ky. "I grew up like one of the Little Women," she says, "I didn't know there were things like incest or rape."

The agency is housed near the Hamilton County Courthouse, where volunteers often accompany women to court. It has eight full-time staffers, one part-timer and about 100 volunteers.

The agency serves about 10,000 people a year. There are no fees, Magers says.

Money from the United Way, city and state grants and a weekly bingo game help fund a $300,000 budget, Magers says.

Domestic abuse cases are by far the agency's biggest concern. During the first nine months of 1988, 25 women in the agency's service area of Hamilton and Butler counties were murdered, allegedly by husbands or boyfriends.

"They were axed. They were stabbed, they were run over by cars and dragged," Magers says, adding that in at least half of the cases drugs were involved.

Some success stories emerge from the program, Magers says. Some women are successful in starting new lives. Some return to Women Helping Women as counselors, others send letters telling of their progress. Some send donations of $5 or $10 as a thank-you.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Disability benefits covered by Social Security discussed

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

If you have worked and earned Social Security benefits, and become severely disabled, then you are eligible to receive a monthly benefit equal to your Primary Insurance Amount (PIA) at the time disability occurs. Your benefit will not be reduced because it starts before the Normal Retirement Age, currently 65. These monthly benefits are based on the PIA — the amount you receive if you retire at your normal retirement age.

Having a disability means that you are so severely impaired — mentally or physically — that you cannot perform any substantial gainful work. The impairment must be expected to last at least 12 months or result in an early death. This determination must be based on medical evidence and approved by Social Security.

To qualify for disability benefits, you must have earned a minimum number of quarters of Social Security coverage. In addition, you must have earned some of these quarters in recent years.

For example, if you were born before 1930, a total of 38 quarters of coverage is required to qualify for disability benefits in 1989, with 20 quarters earned in the last 10 years.

The number of required quarters is reduced by one for each year through 1946. If born in 1946, you would need 21 quarters to qualify for disability benefits in 1989, with 20 quarters earned in the last 10 years.

If you were born between 1947-58, you would be required to have earned 20 quarters in the last 10 years to qualify for disability benefits. Beginning in 1959, the required quarters are reduced and are to be earned after age 21.

Disability benefits can be paid after a waiting period of five full calendar months. To qualify for benefits, you must have been disabled throughout that time period. If you previously received disability benefits and the disability ended less than five years before the present disability began, there is not second waiting period.

If you become disabled, your family members can receive benefits under the same rules that would apply if you retired. The Maximum Family Benefit is lower for disability benefits than for retirement and survivor benefits. It is generally 150 percent of the PIA, but can be as low as 100 percent.

The Earnings Limitation applies individually to each family member receiving benefits on the workers earnings record. The disabled workers must report all earning to Social Security. The usual Earnings Limitation does not apply to the worker, but all earnings are considered by Social Security when making periodic decisions about the continuing nature of the disability.

The law provides for a possible reduction in disability benefits when you also are receiving Workers Compensation or most other disability benefits under a local, state or federal law.

The exception would be with Veterans Administration benefits based on financial need and benefits based on public employment covered by Social Security. The total of all disability benefits may not exceed 80 percent of your recent earnings before your disability began.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Some people losing sleep over their frantic lifestyles

New York Times News Service

A Rochester, N.Y., businesswoman recently offered this time-saver in an article on management tips. She usually gets up at 6:30 a.m. Then on really busy days she rises at 2 a.m.— when the Letterman show is just winding down — works until 5, then gets one more hour's sleep.

Another fellow quoted in the story gets out of bed at 5:30 a.m. so he has an hour to catch up on the latest managerial literature — before beginning his four-mile run.

Apparently this behavior is not new or unique to businesspeople.

"Even writers do it," alleged George McIsaac, a professor at the University of Rochester's William E. Simon School of Business Administration. "If they get an idea in the middle of the night, they start scribbling furiously. I knew people like that in the '50s and '60s."

Many corporate executives keep exotic hours, McIsaac said, but he hasn't figured out if they became executives because they're up before dawn, or if they have to do that because their work lives are so busy.

Is it absolutely healthy to start work so early in the morning? Donald Greenblatt, director of the Sleep Disorder Center at St. Mary's hospital, said it probably is. He hasn't seen many burnout cases with "chronic sleep deprivation."

"The norm in our society is to sleep between seven and nine hours a night...but there are people at both extremes," he said. "To say we all need eight hours of sleep a night is as ludicrous as saying we all should wear the same size shirt."

Both Greenblatt and McIsaac cited early risers in history, including Winston Churchill and Thomas Edison. But Greenblatt also offered that "Albert Einstein needed 10 or 11 hours of sleep a night."

AT WIT'S END

Peer pressure squeezes very life out of you

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

It is with great pride I tell you that I can still be shocked. It's not easy in today's world, where guns are shot and no one flinches, and children are fought over and no one cries.

I was shocked the other day by a survey that said by the age of 13, boys who had never had a sexual experience were in the minority, and sexually inexperienced girls were in the minority by age 15. By the time children entered high school, 55 percent of them had engaged in sex.

I'm not going to pull the old chestnut, "In my day, at that age, I still had a doll on my bed and was picking broccoli out of my braces." This is not "my day," and times have changed. But peer pressure hasn't changed in 200 years.

Peer pressure is a force to be dealt with. It's bigger than we are — stronger than we are. It supersedes the love of our mothers, the threats of our fathers, the wisdom of our grandparents, and even the strength of our own convictions.

It makes a knee hanging out of a rip in your jeans all right. It makes skipping school cool. It makes drinking, taking drugs and sleeping around acceptable. It's not important what you do ... just so long as everyone else is doing it with you.

What's unique about "peer pressure" is that every generation believes they invented it. It's brand-new, and they are the first ones to deal with it.

My parents fought peer pressure with dire predictions. If you had sex before you were married you went blind, your skin broke out and you glowed in the dark. If you broke the curfew or wrecked the car, you were a dead person. If you smoked a cigarette, you couldn't come out of your room until your wedding day.

My generation of parents spawned yet another approach: the Compromise Two-Step. All the other parents were dancing to it, so we too gave in to some peer pressure. We were relieved to know our kids were smoking ONLY cigarettes, not pot. Our son was living with someone ... thank God it was a girl. Our children were engaging in sex, but at least they were prepared.

We are in the throes of a new approach to peer pressure — "Just Say No!" Putting those three little words up against peer pressure is like Pee-wee Herman facing off with Ted Koppel. How can kids say no when parents can barely say it?

How about, "Be Prepared to Live With Yes!"? Drugs will personally screw up your present and your future genetically. Sex in high school is what fills out a graduation gown, if you're lucky enough to graduate or escape disease. If you begin to "prove" your masculinity/femininity, love, loyalty and independence, when does it stop?

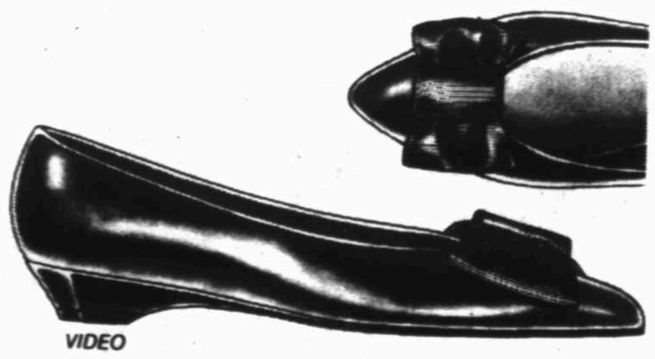

Peer pressure carries one of the highest price tags around. Parents and kids alike must ask themselves, "Can we afford it?"

Futuristic fantasy resort nestled amid Hawaiian relics

Copley News Service

In the dim moonlight, the man picked up a rock and began scratching away at the blackened lava. With childlike innocence, he chopped out a stick man with stick arms and stick legs. It was a self-portrait.

Hundreds of years later, a group of tourists taking a break from sun and surf, gaze down at the rough petroglyph scratched in the rock and wonder why it is there, who made it and what is its significance.

The rock carving lies in one of the largest petroglyph fields on the Big Island of Hawaii. And it's located, of all places, right in the middle of one of the most luxurious resorts in the world.

The resort, the Hyatt Regency Waikoloa, which opened in September, bills itself as a fantasy resort, and offers such Disneylandlike features as a futuristic tram circling between buildings, canal boats cruising in and out of hotel towers, and trained dolphins that love to swim and splash with guests.

But the marketing people at the resort have so far neglected what is perhaps one of the unique aspects of the site. The fantasy resort of the future is nestled amid some of the most ancient relics of early Hawaii.

One of the resort's golf courses encircles part of the petroglyph field. The emerald green fairways stand out in sharp contrast to the barren lava flow that holds the archaeological treasures. An occasional white golf ball rolls down the burned red and black rocks into an ancient shelter cave.

Rick Wilson, a guide at the Hyatt Regency Waikoloa, takes guests on guided tours of the fields on request.

"The petroglyphs talk to us as we see them," he says, as he points out the crude stick figures.

Wilson said it is difficult to tell much about the petroglyphs. Scientists aren't even sure of the age of them.

"The Hawaiians had no written language," he said. They had an oral tradition, depending on chanters to pass stories down from generation to generation.

The lava field spewed forth from Mauna Kea about A.D. 1100, so the carvings were made sometime after that. Some rough English letters were carved in the 1880s, probably by a student practicing his lessons taught by a missionary. But most of the carvings are probably hundreds of years older.

The petroglyph field lies along a foot trail that once circled the island. A deep groove in the lava can still be seen, marking the route used by thousands of Hawaiians over hundreds of years.

Some areas of the field were apparently very holy.

Some of the circles and holes were used in birth ceremonies, to ensure that children would grow to be strong and brave.

A guided trail through the petroglyph field begins just off the main road to the resort. Signs along the trail explain some of the most interesting features. But having a guide like Wilson gives visitors a more in-depth, personal experience.

Other natural caves or cavities in the lava were big enough to hold a whole family. In later years, a whole native village sprang up around the area where the resort now flourishes. Villagers fished and traded salt and other commodities with those following the trail.

The ancient Hawaiian traveler would think he had ascended to some other-worldly paradise if he saw the Hyatt Regency Waikoloa today. He would be housed in a luxurious room overlooking the sea, with color TV, double beds and flowers floating in the indoor plumbing.

The only caves on the property are man-made ones, sheltering bars and a whirlpool.

The Hyatt Regency lives up to its claim as the epitome of the new breed of fantasy resorts. Competing major hotel chains are trying to outdo each other at every turn on the islands. Hyatt has spent $360 million on the most expensive resort ever built, to make sure its fantasy is bigger and better than anyone else's.

The resort has almost everything vacationers may want. There are three championship golf courses outside the door and eight tennis courts. The 17,500-square-foot health spa is state-of-the-art, with weight training, sauna, Jacuzzis, herbal wraps and massages.

There are seven restaurants offering everything from Italian and Japanese to continental and Polynesian. And there are 12 bars and lounges, either near the pools or tucked in amid the restaurants and other facilities at the resort.

Ancient Hawaiians would not believe the Hyatt's pools. The biggest pool near the Lagoon Tower covers nearly half an acre. Waterfalls cascade into the pool from several lofty cliffs, concealing a hidden grotto inside. Swimmers must brave the torrent to find the whirlpool. Several more whirlpools are hidden in nooks and crannies of the artificial mountain. One even features a hot-water waterfall.

A water slide twists and turns through a rocky course in one area, and a rope suspension bridge sways over another part of the pool. Two restaurants and several bars surround the sparkling blue pond.

A second pool, called the river pool, actually is several artificial lagoons, fed by five cascading waterfalls that carry swimmers from one end of the water course to the other.

Captain Cook paved way to island paradise

Copley News Service

Hawaii is a study in contrasts, as Capt. James Cook discovered.

In 1777, the English adventurer became the first European to set foot in this tropical paradise. Cook also was, you might say, the first tourist. Mistaking him for their returning god Lono, the natives spared no effort to make his stay a memorable one.

Unfortunately, by the time he and his crew returned two years later, the Hawaiians had figured out he wasn't Lono after all. They slew him on the spot.

Happily, now relations between islander and tourist generally are smooth.

Diamond Head, a 760-foot crater guarding the east end of the island of Oahu, is visible first in the approach to Honolulu International Airport. Next is Waikiki beach, one of the world's most famous resorts.

Without question, Waikiki is touristy. Yet, with its fabulous water — big salty swells and soft sand underfoot — this is not a bad place.

Imagine: You are walking along the beach, passing one high-rise luxury hotel after another, only to discover, sandwiched in between two of them, an outrageously pink, Spanish-Moorish-style palace of arches, pillars and cupolas.

Built in 1927, this is one of the world's grand hotels. Visitors cooled their heels in this proud habitation in the days when a steamer was the only means of transport to Hawaii. They still do today.

Like the other islands making up the chain, Oahu appeared millions of years ago when volcanoes popped their heads out of the ocean for a look around.

The Bishop Museum in Honolulu is the ideal introduction to Hawaii's natural history and culture. W. Donald Duckworth, the museum director who came from the Smithsonian Institution, wishes everybody would begin their visit here.

Much also can be said for a bus tour that takes you around the island showing most points of interest.

Along the side of Ala Wai Canal near Waikiki, we observed a bearded man holding up a sign saying "Mahalo." Our guide identified him as Neil Abercrombie, an eccentric local politician who had just won a seat on the City Council. "Mahalo" means thank you in Hawaiian, and Abercrombie was expressing his appreciation for voter support.

A boat takes you out to the stark-white Arizona Memorial, built above the sunken ship's remains. Dedicated in 1962, the memorial was paid for largely through a generous donation from Elvis Presley.

Next is the Big Island is where "Pu'uhonua O Honaunau," the so-called Place of Refuge, is located. This quiet spot by the ocean was once a holy sanctuary where fugitives on death row received pardon if they were lucky enough to make it inside the gates before their pursuers cut them down.

Religion dominated life in old Hawaii, but it was the kind of religion in which you had to be very careful. Under a collection of sacred laws called "kapu," a commoner faced automatic death for violating any of a host of restrictions, including walking in a chief's footsteps or permitting his shadow to fall upon the palace grounds.

With all these capital offenses on the books, one might get the notion that the ancient Hawaiians were fond of rubbing each other out.

Big Island awash with Hawaiian history

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

A big part of the charm of the Big Island is its diversity.

You can go from the lush greenery of the Hilo coast to the desert climate of the Kona side in a few hours.

You can spend days in and around Hawaii Volcanoes National Park exploring lava tubes, marveling at the rampant forces of nature.

You can visit coffee plantations, macadamia nut farms and ride over thousands of acres of ranchland.

You can fish your heart out, stay in a hotel whose accommodations are copies of ancient Polynesian huts or kick back and relax in some of the most luxurious hotels imaginable.

But for this traveler, one of the best things you can do on the Big Island is find pockets of old Hawaii, where real Hawaiians live and work in wonderful sync with nature. Fortunately, there still are lots of these places, and they are pretty easy to find.

Such spots are the kind that make you wish you could start life all over again, right there.

I disembarked from the S.S. Monterey, on a cruise around the islands, in a typical Hilo downpour that had all but dried up by the time I picked up the car.

Hilo is a charming town — a sort of a headquarters for the surrounding farms and countryside, rather like a Western ranch town with a Hawaiian accent.

BUT I HAD SEEN Hilo, even the remarkable early morning Suisun Fish Market, and Hawaii is a big island, so I headed toward Volcanoes National Park. This is the coast where nurseries flourish, growing tropical plants and flowers for a trade that covers the globe.

Orchids, anthuriums, gingers and ferns flourish in the perfect harmony of rain and sun, and diligent Japanese-Hawaiian families have cultivated them for generations.

I stopped briefly at Hilo Tropical Gardens to admire the plants, to chat briefly with the owners and invest a small sum for a box of pure Hawaii to be shipped to surprised relatives in New York.

I continued south on Highway 11, enjoying the fragrance of the ginger that seemed to grow wild along the way. The turnoff to the visitors center of Volcanoes National Park is well-hedged with deep greenery, and a little farther the center and the accompanying hotel stand in the sunlight.

The visitors center offers dioramas, paintings and films as well as an excellent selection of books and prints — nearly all relating to the history and legends of Kilauea volcano and Hawaii, and all worth dedicating long hours to absorb.

The hotel is somewhat old and a little shabby, but it's one of the finest places in Hawaii to watch the sun go down (or come up) and the natural fireworks show begin.

But first you ought to walk or drive around the crater and through a lava tube to absorb some of the wonder and power of what has happened, and continues to occur, here.

Visitors have to check daily to see if the Chain of Craters Road is open. If they're lucky, it's a really spectacular drive with endless vistas of lava flows and miles of open sea.

Mamalahoa Highway 11 (the main road) rolls southward up and down the mountainsides to Puunalua Black Sands Beach. There's a fancy golf course and housing development there, but you can still stop for a picnic lunch on the beach before continuing on to the real Hawaiian town of Naalehu.

An ancient cemetery and some magnificent old trees, including the second generation of a monkey-pod tree Mark Twain planted more than 100 years ago, are major attractions here. So is the Shirakawa Motel, which claims to be "the southernmost motel in the United States."

I STOPPED for a visit and to look at a couple of the simple, but clean and comfortable, rooms that rent for $21 single and $27.50 double with kitchenette. This area is rapidly becoming a center for artists and writers, and driving along the beach road it was easy to understand why.

A cutoff from the main road goes to the southernmost point in the United States, if you like to collect such items, but I hurried past, preferring to spend my time farther along the road.

It was along this coast that Capt. James Cook first landed, was regaled with gifts, ceremonies and honors and on his return voyage, some months later, was killed.

You can drive down the steep hill from the highway to the memorial in his honor, then backtrack along the shore to the painted church of St. Benedict and Pu'uhonua O Honaunau, the City of Refuge where in ancient times criminals and anyone who had broken the taboos were given refuge.

Islanders still work there, building canoes, carving, weaving and generally re-creating Hawaiian life of old. Take some time to ponder the old ways and appreciate the tempo of daily life. Feel the enormous creative energy that seems to flow through this island in particular. Know that this is what Hawaii is really all about.

I skipped Kona village and its traffic and headed north, past the luxury resorts that line the Kohala coast, to the little village of Hawi. This is real Hawaii, too, with tidy houses trimmed with bright gardens. A humongous statue of Kamehameha stands in front of the courthouse at Kapaau, reputedly his hometown.

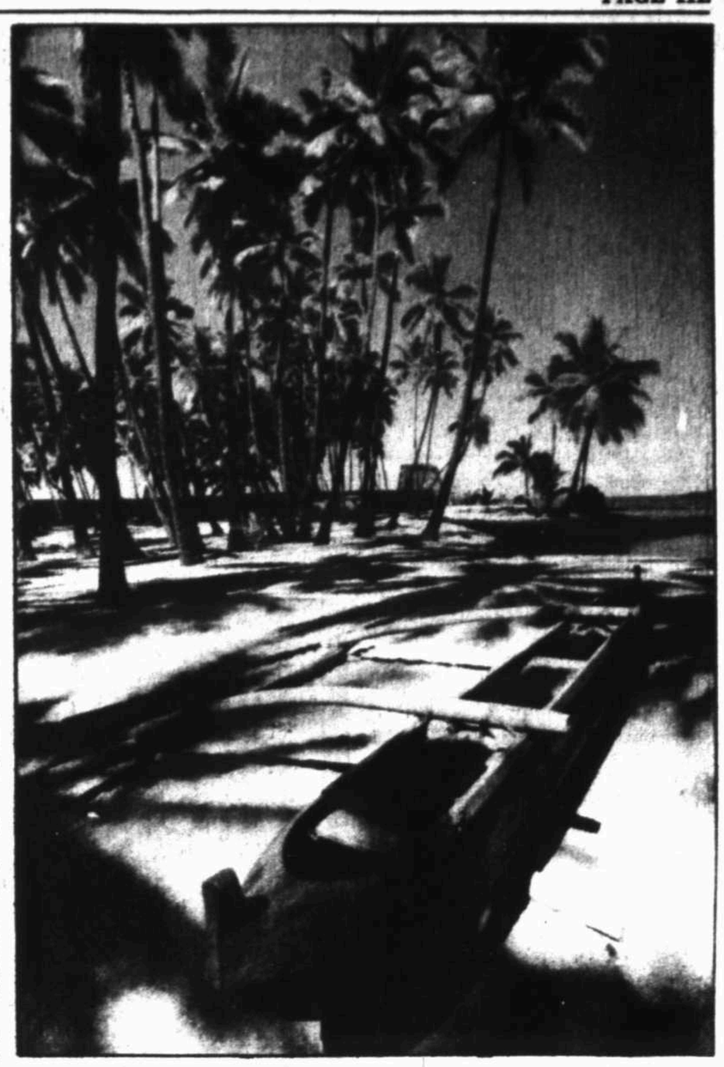

The road ends at an awesome lookout point, Pololu, at the edge of a great rain-forested gorge that ends in a wild beach (not for swimming).

Back at Hawi, a left puts you on the Kohala Mountain Road, which leads through some magnificent ranch country to Waimea and the Parker Ranch, one of the largest ranches in the United States.

Waimea is a cowboy kind of town (tours of the ranch are available) with an amazing assortment of art galleries — the area has grown in popularity with artists and crafts people from all over. Many of the great old ranches along the road are being subdivided to offer expensive housing, which turned me all shades of green with envy.

At Waimea, Highway 19 takes you back toward the Hilo coast through some truly Hawaiian villages, with painted churches, all-purpose village stores and lovely farms and ranches.

You could easily spend days, weeks or even months exploring the Big Island and not run out of new things to see and do. But even in the brief time allotted from the Monterey cruise, it's possible to capture a sense of the forces that direct life on this magnificent island.

Honolulu museum features native artwork, international exhibits

Copley News Service

Honolulu has opened a new Contemporary Art Museum, a 12,000-square-foot exhibit space in a renovated Honolulu home on a 3.4-acre estate.

The museum, with collections of more than 1,000 works by 500 artists, will feature the culture of Hawaii but also will represent the work of artists around the world.

The museum will be housed in a home built in the 1920s for Mrs. Charles Montague Cooke, founder of the Honolulu Academy of Art. The new location represents a permanent home for the collection, which has been growing since 1961 when the Contemporary Art Center was established.

A special pavilion in the museum's gardens has been built to display David Hockney's L'Enfant et les Sortileges, a three-dimensional work based on Hockney's sets and costumes for Ravel's 1925 opera.

The museum will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays through Saturdays and from noon to 4 p.m. Sundays.

Island legend tells of volcano goddess' fiery wrath

PAUL KRAWKI
Copley News Service

KAILUA-KONA, Hawaii — They call her Pele, the volcano goddess.

I first heard about her from a friend. While he was exploring Volcanoes National Park with his wife, the two came across a young woman perched on the edge of a crater, making an offering to the deity.

My friend snapped some pictures of the ritual. He sent in the film to be developed but it was reported lost.

Just a coincidence, you may say. Yet there are people on the Big Island, where volcanoes are still active, who swear that Pele exists.

Fiery, impulsive and unpredictable, this holdover from the ancient Hawaiian religion is said to appear as a hitchhiker, sometimes young, sometimes old, often smoking a cigarette or sipping coffee or gin.

Not to pick her up is bad luck, but when you do, she vanishes from the vehicle before the destination is reached.

Removing anything volcanic from the goddess's domain is considered a surefire way of incurring Pele's wrath.

Every year, tourists return souvenirs to Volcanoes National Park.

One letter on display at the park says: "I read with some amusement all the letters in your case from visitors who had taken lava rocks home with them. Unforunately I'm not finding it amusing anymore.

"After we returned with a small vial of black sand my husband has been hospitalized twice and has lost his job. Cars, TVs and various household appliances have broken down and we seem to be having a streak of bad luck as we never had before."

In the quiet of one hot afternoon, tiny Pahoehoe Beach Park on Alii Drive, south of Kailua-Kona on the Big Island, looked uninhabited. Partially shaded by the spreading braches of a banyan tree, the little beach is a salt-and-pepper affair of mixed white coral fragments and black volcanic stones.

I noticed a young woman in a great bathing suit, using a faucet on the beach to rinse the salt from her 2-year-old daughter.

"Is it all right," I asked her, "to take the coral but just as wise to leave the lava alone?"

Ellawyn Kumitomo, a soft-spoken hotel clerk who lives not far from the beach, nodded.

"I respect Pele," she told me.

Pressed a little, she admitted that she "believes" in Pele, despite the fact she is a practicing Mormon.

"I don't think the Mormon religion tells you you have to disregard the superstitions of your culture."

Ellawyn, who is part native Hawaiian, said her family has encountered the goddess.

Her father tells the story of his two "aunties" who picked the goddess up one night.

As the aunt who was driving pulled away, she peered into the back of the pickup through the rear-view mirror and observed the middle-aged woman dragging on a cigarette and sipping a cup of coffee. When the aunt looked back a few minutes later, Ellawyn said, the hitchhiker was gone.

After our visit Ellawyn and her daughter drove home. I caught a flight to Honolulu that afternoon, with not a grain of volcanic sand in my suitcase.

Blacks, Hispanics trail nation in family income

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blacks and Hispanics missed out on the rise in median family income to $30,850 in 1987, the highest real level since the string of recessions that began 14 years earlier, the Census Bureau says.

In a report released Wednesday, the bureau said the 1987 median family income figure was 1 percent higher than the previous year's and represented the fifth consecutive annual increase.

Since 1982, the figure has grown nearly 12 percent, the report said.

"These recent increases have brought real median family income comparable to that of 1973, a year when median family income reached an all-time high before a series of recessions resulted in substantial declines in family income," the report said.

Overall, white families increased their median income by 1.1 percent from 1986 to 1987, aecording to the report "Money Income of Households, Families and Persons in the United States: 1987."

The 1987 median income of white families was $32,274, up from $31,935 a year earlier, the report said.

By comparison, median income for black familes was $18,098, down from $18,247, while for Hispanics the median fell to $20,306 from $20,726, according to the study. The study is an expanded version of an analysis released in August that found nearly one-third of all black Americans living in poverty.

While the earlier report detailed the poverty status of various segments of society, the new edition contains extensive detail on income for differing groups.

Among family groups, the highest incomes were reported for white married couples at $35,295, up from $34,647. Black married couples saw their median income fall from $27,554 to $27,182, while for Hispanic couples there was a drop from $24,786 to $24,677.

White families maintained by a woman with no husband present had an income increase from $16,290 to $17,018.

Black female householders reported an increase from $9,640 to $9,710. Among Hispanics the median for this group edged up from $9,777 to $9,805.

The biggest income gain by education was for people with one to three years of college. Families headed by people in this category saw their incomes rise from $35,455 to $36,392.

Ranked by education, families headed by people with more than five years of college still had the highest income at $54,491, but that was down a bit, from $54,595. And for those with four years of college, income fell from $47,269 to $46,533.

High school grads saw a 0.6 percent increase from $29,765 to $29,937, while income for families headed by those with some high school education climbed from $20,854 to $21,265. Family income for those with no high school education fell from $14,616 to $14,547.

Regionally, Southerners led in income gains, with median family income rising from $27,684 to $28,250, up 2.0 percent.

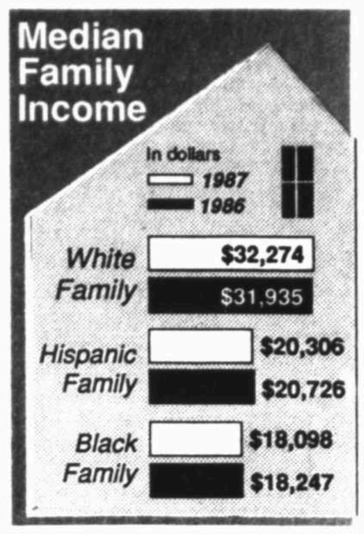

Despite having the largest gain, Southerners continue to have the nation's lowest median income.

In the Northeast, the rise was 1.8 percent, from $33,335 to $33,938, and in the Midwest, 1.1 percent, from $30,665 to $30,991. In the West, median income slipped 0.2 percent from $32,096 to $32,026.

By residence, the greatest gain was 3.6 percent for families living in the suburbs of cities with less than 1 million people. Their income rose from $32,034 to $33,192.

Rural residents were next, increasing their incomes 1.3 percent, from $24,078 to $24,397. Large-city suburbanites had income growth of 1.1 percent from $39,850 to $40,270.

Inner-city residents of large cities had an income drop from $27,654 to $27,458.

The Bruner No.2-23, a 24,388 Hunton test in Oklahoma was drilled on a turnkey contract. Turnkey drilling is proving itself an attractive option for operators, investors and contractors.

Turnkey drilling comes of age

Now viable option for deep drilling

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Once it was all footage and day work. Drilling contractors assumed little risk for a well and were paid only for making hole. But now with turnkey contracts, drilling contractors sell completed holes.

When the number of working rigs began to slide in 1982 and hit bottom four years later, it brought out the predatory nature of a shrinking and dying industry and operators found themselves in a competitive bidding frenzy that all but eliminated margins.

In an attempt to beat the frenzy and stay alive, contractors began to look about for an edge to keep the rigs running and their corporate heads above water. One edge, employed by some, was turnkey drilling, in which the contractor assumed more risk and guaranteed to produce a usable borehole for a specified price. No hole, no pay.

For the most part turnkey projects were used only on shallow development wells within well-defined fields by a limited number of contractors who were well-experienced in a particular producing province. Risks were well-known and negligible, and contractors relied primarily on cost-cutting to out bid competitors. Few dreamed that turnkey drilling would be a viable option for the riskier deep wells.

But now turnkey drilling for deep prospects below 15,000 feet has come of age. That was made evident last week with the completion of the Bruner No. 2-23 in Beckham County, Okla. The 24,388 ft. Hunton well was the world's deepest turnkey drilling project — a project drilled by Quarles Drilling Corp. of Houston and engineered by O'Brien-Goins Engineering of Midland.

Said Don Quarles, president of Quarles Drilling Corp.: "Deep turnkey drilling has come of age and is here to stay. Turnkey has been proven as a viable option for operators, and will probably remain an option long after the drilling business revives."

Quarles said hole insurance and utilization of high-quality, engineering consultants were the two elements that had brought turnkey drilling from strictly shallow, low-risk development wells to its present status as an option for deep high-risk drilling.

"With this combination of elements and the right people, we will go anywhere and drill a deep turnkey well," said Quarles.

In the past three years, Quarles Drilling, in addition to Oklahoma wells, has finaled turnkey wells in most deep drilling provinces of the domestic oilpatch. Six turnkey wells below 18,000 feet were drilled in Mississippi. The company drilled 22 wells from 15,000-19,500 feet in Louisiana. Seven below 15,000 feet were drilled in South Texas and five in West Texas.

Many of those wells were engineered by O'Brien-Goins Engineering of Midland.

"The percentage of wells drilled on turnkey is bound to increase," said T.B. O'Brien, petroleum engineer and a principal in the firm. "During the downturn, there was an exit of seasoned engineering talent with on-site experience in deep drilling. As a consequence, there is now a shortage of such experience in oil company ranks. But turnkey drilling, which provides engineering and on-site supervision, is one way to get that experience back."

He said the Midland engineering firm, which has consultants working on projects in Kuwait, Nigeria, Colombia, Japan and Southeast Asia, employs many of those seasoned engineers who were retired or laid off by major oil companies.

Savings fall accounts for trade deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — An alarming decline in the national savings rate is the biggest economic problem facing the United States and the chief cause of its huge trade deficits, according to a private report released today.

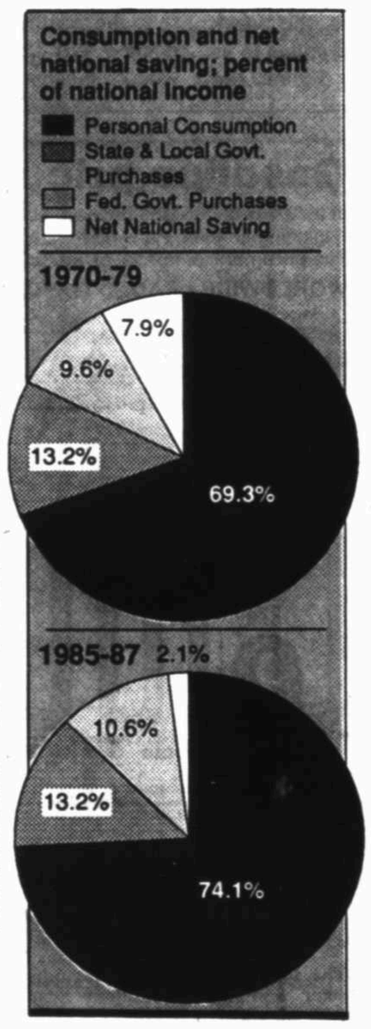

The report, by the private American Business Conference, said that while the government's huge budget deficits have contributed to the problem, the decline primarily has been caused by high consumption by individuals.

"This overconsumption is financed through large-scale sales of U.S. assets to foreigners at unfavorable terms, a process that postpones the day of reckoning but that increasingly mortgages the U.S. economic future," the report said.

It said the decline in national savings also heightens the risk of recession and ultimately leads to slower growth in the standard of living.

"The low rate of net investment during the mid-1980s is inconsistent with sustained economic growth and international competitiveness," the report said. "In fact, it has been argued that a rate of net investment far greater, not less, than that of the past is needed for our country to compete and prosper over the remainder of the century."

Midlanders pedal down path to success

New product garners interest from overseas

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A newly formed Midland company appears to be pedaling down the road to success, and putting Midland on the map in the process.

Midlanders Gerald Nobles, Mark Scott, Kevin Runkel and Mike Moore have formed Bikestream Inc. and begun marketing a new drinking dispenser for bicycle riders.

Invented by Runkel, it consists of a resilient, medical grade bladder that contains the liquid, a hand pump for loading it, and clear vinyl tubing run along the bicycle frame. The tubing, equipped with a pinch valve, sticks up from the handlebar, allowing the rider to merely bend over and get a drink.

According to Nobles, president of Bikestream, the new dispenser can hold over 40 ounches of liquid, is encased in a sponge rubber jacket for insulation that comes in six colors, and is available in seat-mounted or frame-mounted models.

While the components for the dispenser come from all over the country, Nobles asserts that the product is "100 percent American, and it's put together here in Midland." Bikestream assembles the product, packages it and ships it.

Mark Scott, vice president of sales for Bikestream, shows off the new beverage dispenser his company designed for bicycle riders. The new dispenser is available locally at Peyton's Bikes.

What has caught Nobles and his partners by surprise was the interest from overseas, which he attributes to the fact that bicycling is more prevalent overseas. "We've already made sales to three countries and have inquiries from nine others," Nobles says. "There's a strong possibility that 50 percent of our sales will be overseas."

He added that his company has been overwhelmed with inquiries for overseas distributorships. While U.S. reception from bike companies has been warm, Nobles characterized it as cautious. "Most dealers

How to ignore trade deficits in one hard lesson

Pitts

Saddled by a $3 trillion federal deficit, an estimated $136 billion annual trade imbalance and a concern that the America's pre-eninence in industry and technology is on the skids.

The U.S. government may be finally ready to do something about it. Or at least they are making an appearance of being ready to tackle the problem.

There are a number of measures on the drawing board to reduce trade deficits, which include:

- Radical cost cutting. Slash federal spending, not just by the $35 billion proposed by the outgoing President Reagan, but by $50 billion, to get its economic house in order?
- Start building televisions, stereos and other consumer electronics products that the U.S. virtually gave up on years ago?
- Create a Department of International Trade such as the Japan has.

Noticeably not among the options are plans to decrease the growing level of crude oil imports, despite the fact foreign oil and foreign automobiles now account for the lion's share of the trade defecit.

According to January statistics just released by the American Petroleum Institute , the U.S. imported approximately 8.2 million barrels of crude oil daily. The average price for OPEC oil last month was $14.89 per barrel.

Only about 47 percent of U.S. imports come from OPEC nations. But calculations tell us if the total of imports were purchased at or near the OPEC price, (And that would be a good guess) and if prices remain stable throughout the year, America's daily oil bill from foreign countries will be approximately $124 million daily.

Project that out to the end of the year and the total oil bill could be somewhere around $45 billion or about 30 percent of the total trade defecit.

However, this estimate does not include petroleum products. When products (gasoline, diesel, heating oil) are factored into the bill, the cost of imported oil in 1989 may be considerably over the one-third level.

For the first eight months of 1988, the Energy Information Agency reported a merchandise trade imbalance of $79 billion, with energy's share of that imbalance amounting to $22 billion, or approximately 36 percent.

But that was during a period when oil prices were lower and imports less. With higher, stable oil prices and increasing imports the bill could be much higher this year. For example, only 6.8 million barrels were imported into the U.S. in January of 1988, compared to 8.2 million this year.

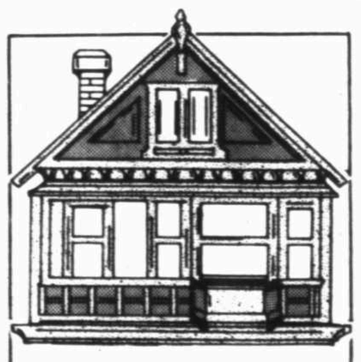

The statistics clearly indicate that America is on its way to becoming a third-rate economy as a result of trade imbalances caused primarily by crude oil imports, and automobiles.

It is also clearly indicated from news accounts and public policy that the administration and anyone else who should be looking at curbing auto and oil imports are deliberately looking the other way. It's sort of like saying: "Give me an answer — any answer except the right one. Tell me to do anything, except what I know I have to do."

Why is the administration looking the other way, when they know what they problem is? Why focus on TV's, computer chips, automobiles and a host of other products when America is neck deep in imported oil?

There is apparently a mind-set that feels cheap foreign energy is better for the nation than expensive American oil, that the more cheap foreign oil we can utilize the better off the nation is, and there is nothing that can be said or done to turn their head on this issue. That is true only if you think an American dollar in an Arab pocket is better than in a dollar in an American pocket.

Rig counts continue see-sawing

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count got a slight boost while the Permian Basin tally slipped this week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

According to Baker Hughes, the U.S. count, continuing its see-saw trend, gained four to stand at 761. It had fallen nine rigs last week.

The Basin tally, which had climbed 13 last week, fell two to 97 this week.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active county in the basin with 13 rigs this week. Andrews County was second with 10.

Schleicher and Dawson counties saw renewed action this week while Reagan and Kent counties were left with no activity.

Among major oil producing states, only three saw increases this week, including Texas, with 20 additional rigs; California, seven; and Michigan, two.

Oklahoma saw the biggest decline, with five fewer rigs, followed by Kansas and Ohio, two each; and Louisiana, New Mexico and Pennsylvania, one each. Wyoming, North Dakota and Colorado rig counts were unchanged for the week.

Falling production

The above graphic gives illustration to the Texas Railroad Commission's report earlier this week that the state's crude oil production hd fallen to its lowest level in 45 years. Preliminary figures put the state's 1988 production at 698,244,360 barrels, the smallest amount since 1943, when production was 587 million barrels. The 1988 output was 25 million barrels less than 1987 production.

Commission approves 12 new pipelines

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission approved 12 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas in January.

Eight of the new permits were for gathering pipelines; one was for a terminal line, one was for a distribution line, and two were for multipurpose and other lines.

Two permits were granted for the Midland area and one for the Lubbock area.l.

Feagan Gathering Co. of Midland was granted a gas gathering line for Pecos County and Union Oil Co. of California, Andrews, was granted one for Gaines County.

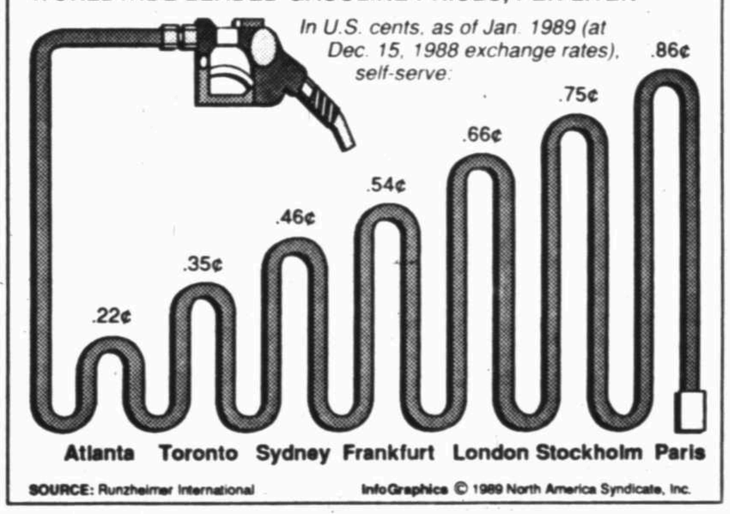

Gulf Gas Utilities Co., Houston, was granted a gas distribution line for Howard County.

Parker & Parsley purchase option told

From Staff Reports

Parker & Parsley Development Partners L.P., a publicly traded limited partnership of which Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. is the general partner, has announced that members of its executive management have entered into an agreement with Southmark Corp and two of its wholly-owned subsidiaries which grants the management group a back-up option to acquire Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co.

The management group includes Parker & Parsley President Scott Sheffield, and Executive Vice President Herbert C. Williamson III.

Southmark had previously announced that it had granted an option to Gene E. Phillips and William S. Friedman, formerly chairman of the board and president and vice chairman of the board and secretary, respectively, of Southmark Corp. to acquire Parker & Parsley.

The option granted to the management group would only be exercisable in the event Phillis and Friedman do not exercise their option. Under the terms of the agreement, the management group agreed to remain with Parker & Parsley until June 1, 1989, or an earlier exercise by Phillips and Friedman of their primary option.

Court revives Alaskan anti-drilling suit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court has cleared the way for native Alaskans to sue the government in their bid to stop the offshore oil drilling they contend is destroying traditional hunting grounds.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Thursday ruled that the "aboriginal" rights the natives held in the submerged land, part of the Bering Sea, were not destroyed by the 1971 Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, which provided money to resolve all natives' pre-statehood claims of rights in Alaska land.

The 3-0 ruling means several hundred natives from the villages of Gambell and Stebbins can try to prove that drilling in the federally approved Lease Sale 57, made up of 2.4 million acres off Norton Sound off Alaska's western coast, would hurt their ability to fish and hunt for survival needs.

However, the judges left open the question of whether a 1953 federal law that authorized offshore oil and gas leases had affected the natives' offshore claims. That issue was returned to a lower court.

The natives have sued the Interior Department, contending that its sale of leases violated their legal rights of subsistence hunting and fishing on undersea federal land, between Alaska's three-mile offshore boundary and the 200-mile federal limit.

Carol Daniel of Alaska Legal Services Corp. said the natives have hunted and fished on the ice "since time immemorial," building roads and making camps on the ice several miles offshore to catch fish, walrus and whales.

"The drilling is so dangerous to resources and my clients are so dependent on the resources," said Daniel, attorney for the villagers. "They don't have access to the same grocery stores (most people do). The sea is their market."

E. Edward Bruce, attorney for five oil companies that hold leases in the area, said no decision has been made on whether to appeal the ruling.

He said oil companies paid over $300 million for leases in March 1983 and completed exploratory drilling several years ago, but had not done any drilling for oil production.

want three or four units in the beginning, to see how it will sell before they make a commitment," he explained.

He went on to predict that first-year sales could reach $850,000. The dispenser wholesales for $17, and should retail for $28. Peyton's Bikes in Midland currently carries the new dispenser.

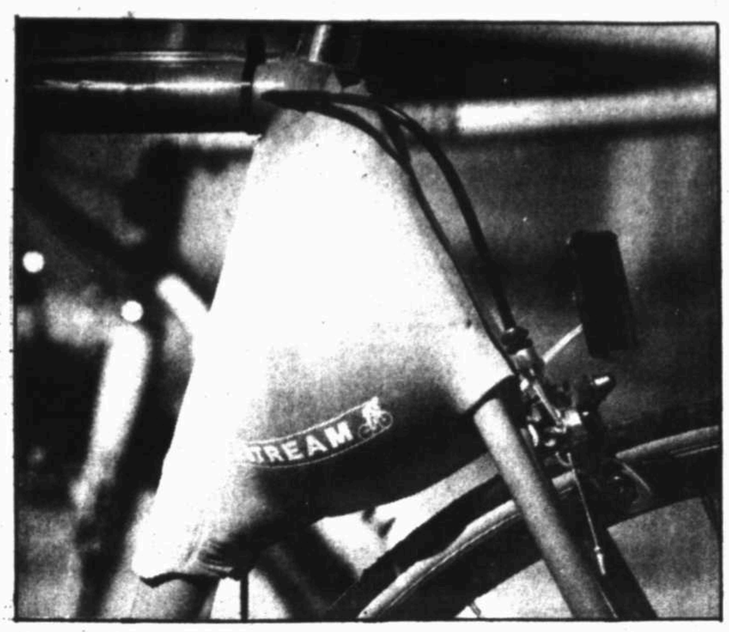

The product made its debut in January at the BDS Bike Show in Long Beach, Calif., and was first used in competition at the Desert Princess Biathalon in Palm Springs, Calif. last month. Nobles proudly points out that two riders equipped with Bikestream's dispenser — Frank Shorter and Killeen Gallagher — took first place in their divisions.

Critics have said that conventional bicycle water bottles have been difficult to reach and replace, have caused accidents when dropped, and the rider loses concentration while taking a drink.

While Bikestream's dispenser is currently designed for use by bicyclists, Nobles said Bikestream is working at adapting the dispenser for use by motocross and motorcycle riders.

The dispenser got its start when Runkel designed a low pressure hydraulic cylinder that has found its way into such varied applications as marine equipment, physical therapy equipment, and even children's rides and toys.

Originally a designer of oil and gas equipment, Runkel and some associates formed MGR Enterprises, which was bought by Bikestream.

TURNKEY

He sees turnkey drilling as part of an evolutionary process in the industry. "At first oil companies had their own rigs, roughnecks, drillers and engineers and drilled their own wells. Then they found that drilling contractors could drill the wells better and cheaper and they sold their rigs. Now, I think oil companies, major and independent, are finding that turnkey projects in which on-site engineering is included in the price is a better route," explained O'Brien.

He said turnkey drilling was also gaining appeal from investors who prefer to put money on a contractor's "fixed" turnkey rather than an operator's "flexible" Authorization for Expenditures (AFE).

O'Brien said there had been some conflicts when company engineers who thought the turnkey people were invading their domain, and there had been problems when day work was mixed with turnkey, but for the most part turnkey jobs went smoothly.

One key to a smooth turnkey project is financing. A division of Chicago Bridge & Iron Inc., a major construction company, Quarles Drilling is well-financed and capable of carrying the total cost of a well to TD and payday.

"The fact that internal money is used to drill a well and nothing comes back until completion is enough to keep many contractors out of turnkey drilling on deep prospects," said Quarles.

"Most of your major construction projects — bridges, dams and buildings — are built on turnkey, and there is no reason why wells should not be drilled on turnkey," he said.

Said Quarles: "We don't make money on each turnkey well, but we make money overall." He attributes his profitable position to turnkey drilling, which now accounts for most of his revenue.

He said deep turnkeys accounted for 60 percent of the company's contracts in 1988 and will account for 80 percent this year. As a result of the deep turnkeys, he says revenues have grown steadily from $15 million in 1987 to $20 million in 1988, and revenues in excess of $25 million have been projected for 1989.

"There's just no profit motive for footage drilling," said Quarles. "Most contractors working on footage are just wearing out their equipment." He said only about two to three contractors in the U.S. were into deep turnkey drilling, but he sees a growing demand for the service. "In today's climate, operators cannot keep going back to investors every time an unanticipated problem occurs downhole. With turnkey, an operator's exposure and liability is limited. We don't sell drilling. We sell holes, and a lot of people find that a better arrangement," he said.

SAVINGS

Overall, national savings — the difference between the nation's output in goods and services and what is consumed by government and individuals — fell from 7.9 percent in the 1970s to 2.1 percent during 1985-87, the study found.

Over the same period, individuals' consumption of goods and services rose from 69.3 percent of national income to 74.1 percent.

The increase in personal consumption was attributed largely to growth in disposable income, a rise in household wealth that exceeded the increase in national wealth, the maturing of the population to ages above 16 when spending is higher and the spending of equity that was converted to cash in corporate takeovers and buyouts.

Federal Reserve Bank of Boston Chairman George Hatsopoulos, lead author of the report, noted that even sophisticated managers will increase their spending after receiving a hefty bonus and then find themselves "in a cash-flow bind and have to borrow to make ends meet" if there is not a comparable bonus the next year.

The report said the tendency to spend what is on hand is highlighted when people receive unexpected lumps of cash from their stock investments when they are paid premiums in the course of corporate buyouts.

Rather than reinvesting the cash payments, a big portion gets spent, the authors found.

"People get very motivated when they get their hands on cash," Hatsopoulos said. "Money in the bank burns a hole in their pocket."

The study was written by Hatsopoulos, who is chairman of Thermo Electron Corp., and Massachusetts Institute of Technology economists James Poterba and Paul Krugman.

The authors said action on three fronts is necessary to boost the national savings rate from a low point that is unprecedented for a period of economic expansion, not only for the United States but for all industrialized countries:

—Reducing the federal deficit. Cutting government spending on goods and services is the most direct approach, although raising taxes and thus lowering private consumption would help to a lesser degree, the report said.

—Improved incentives for private saving. The report said a campaign "to promote savings and issuing 'Supersaver' bonds to encourage households to save for the long run could bolster the falling private saving rate."

—Eliminating incentives for corporate buyouts. The report said the federal tax structure should be revised to eliminate incentives for corporate debt and thus reduce the trend toward higher cash payouts to shareholders.

The authors cautioned that while the goal should be to return America to the 8 percent national savings rate of the 1970s, the shift "should not be done too rapidly," lest the decline in demand topple the country into recession.

IBM picking up speed in 'clone wars'

By JOHN MARKOFF
New York Times News Service

Personal computer users who have been thinking of upgrading to a more sophisticated machine should take note: The clone war between IBM and the rebel coalition of computer makers is far from over.

IBM's PS/2 line of personal computers and its controversial internal circuitry, known as the microchannel, have begun to pick up speed after languishing for nearly two years and suffering the ridicule of analysts.

And the rebels, sometimes known as the Gang of Nine or the Boys on the Bus or just the clone makers, are making only slow progress in chipping away at the industry giant.

The rebels banded together last September to come up with a rival to the microchannel and establish it as an industry standard for personal computer design.

But their Extended Industry Standard Architecture, or EISA, is not expected to be demonstrated in a personal computer until the end of the year.

Time may be on IBM's side, but no one is ready to declare the company a victor.

At stake is who will dominate the next generation of personal computers.

IBM set the industry standard with its PC early in this decade, and a number of rival companies soon brought their clones to market, leading to fierce competition and falling prices for personal computers through much of the 1980s.

IBM had hoped to set a new standard with microchannel and the PS/2.

But when the machine did not meet wide acceptance and sales of the PS/2 seemed smaller than the industry expected, the clone makers banded together to design their own personal computer and attempt to establish it as the industry standard.

The nine companies are the Compaq Computer Corp., Zenith Data Systems, the Hewlett-Packard Co., AST Research Inc., the Tandy Corp., NEC America Inc., Epson America Inc., Wyse Technology and Olivetti USA.

Personal computer historians may eventually write that they had a good idea but came too late.

Recently, IBM has begun an impressive campaign to make the case that its version of the computer of the future, the PS/2, is here now; that it has already sold more than 1.5 million of the machines and that it is ready to take the wraps off a new version of the microchannel — also known as a computer bus — that will have even more features and performance.

Analysts and industry executives now believe that IBM's new effort reflects important headway in getting the PS/2 accepted as the desktop computer vision of the future.

This could seriously undermine acceptance of the EISA-based machine when it appears in 1990.

"The microchannel has momentum," said Robert L. Carberry, vice president of systems for IBM's entry systems division.

"Right now you can't see EISA, you can't buy it and you can't buy any EISA cards," as the circuit boards the user adds to customize the machine are called.

Gordon Campbell, president of Chips & Technologies, a Silicon Valley chip maker, said:

"One of the standards is starting way behind and is in the position of playing catch-up. Microchannel has a two-year head-start."

EISA members counter that they are not yet out of the game.

"It's tough to say there is a lot of EISA momentum when there are no EISA machines," said Andrew Czernek, vice president of product marketing at Zenith Data Systems in Glenview, Ill. "But the design is on schedule. It's all in the back shop and the peripherals are moving along."

The battle between IBM and its former imitators is over one of the most arcane aspects of a computer's design — the internal wires that shuttle data back and forth among a processor, memory and storage disk. The wires are known as a data bus or, simply, a bus.

Each side says its design has superior technical features.

The EISA proponents say their key advantage is compatibility with the old standard IBM PC design — cards from an old PC can be used with the new bus.

IBM, on the other hand, maintains that its key advantage is that its microchannel bus will ease the task of configuring a computer to do many things simultaneously — much as a juggler keeps several balls in the air at the same time.

The company apparently has its own version of future compatability in the works.

Existing microchannel owners will apparently be able to upgrade to the new, improved microchannel when it is introduced, possibly this spring.

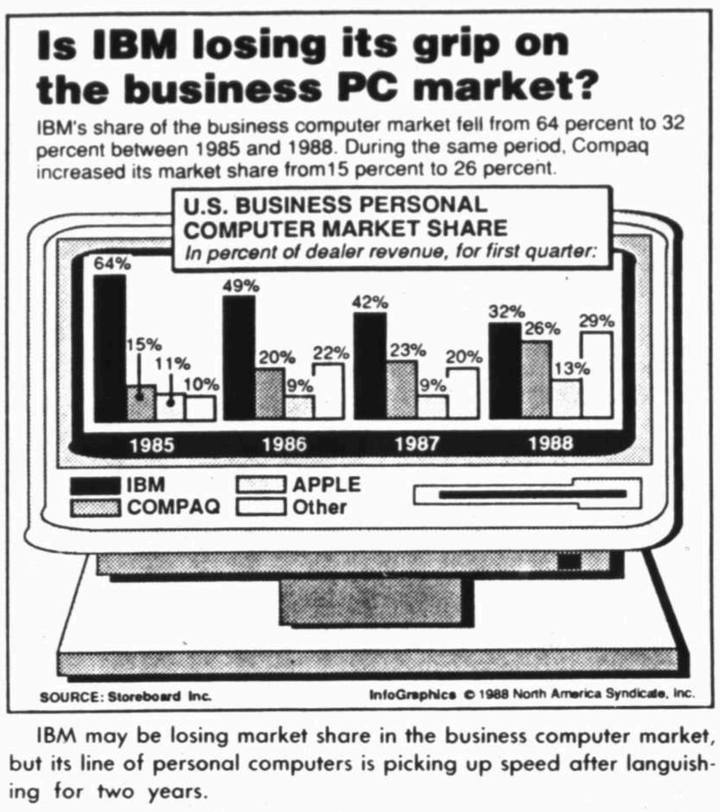

But while both camps squabble over the technical merits of their designs, they also acknowledge that the typical personal computer buyer is not likely to care very much what kind of a bus is in the computer.

"I don't think there is a real issue one way or the other," acknowledged John Roach, chairman of Tandy, which intends to supply both designs. "They're both 32-bit buses," he said, referring to the newer and faster 32-bit microprocessors that are the heart of the new machines.

But there are indications in recent months that IBM is having a good deal of success in making its case for microchannel.

Tuesday, Ing. C. Olivetti & Co., the second-largest European personal computer maker, announced that it would market two models that are compatible with IBM's microchannel. Analysts see this as an indication that IBM may be lowering its licensing barriers.

Last week Businessland, a nationwide computer dealer, said it also was throwing its weight behind the Micro Channel standard.

IBM may be losing market share in the business computer market, but its line of personal computers is picking up speed after languishing for two years.

Dallas firm developing hands-free cellular phone

DALLAS (AP) — A Fort Worth-based electronics marketer says it will introduce the first cellular telephone system in the nation allowing car callers to dial, speak and hang up without lifting a finger.

Uniden Corp. of America is buying technology from two Dallas companies for the system, which will recognize and respond to any human voice and provide hands-free operation, The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday.

Available this coming August, the device initially will cost $499 and will sell as an add-on to Uniden's existing line of cellular phones, said Graham Loving, product manager of Uniden's cellular division.

Uniden will call the cellular phone accessory its Voice Recognition system. It is based on advanced speech recognition techniques developed by Voice Control Systems Inc.

Dallas-based Voice Control Systems is a pioneer in voice-processing technologies capable of recognizing speech from a variety of different speakers.

At the heart of the 3-inch-square device will be two memory chips programmed to recognize a small vocabulary of digits and words. After the oral command, the phone will respond to the caller in English.

Lumina debut set for national TV

CHICAGO – The first Chevy of the 90's, a four-door sedan called Lumina is the biggest front-wheel drive car ever offered by GM's Chevrolet Motor Division, and will be debuted on nationwide TV March 29 during the Academy Awards program.

The Lumina is designed for motorists who want room for six passengers in a low-cost, high-milage, front-drive, wide-body package, according to General Motors.

Two inches wider than the Celebrity it replaces, it's interior space is only slightly less than the Caprice. The highly steamlined vehicle sports EPA ratings of 19-21 in the city and 27-30 for the highway.

GM will team with Walt Disney World to launch the Lumina, using Disney characters in its commercials and offering free trips to Disney World in its promotions.

Big three still restructuring

New York Times News Service

The big three domestic automobile companies have been restructuring for most of the 1980s, shedding white-collar employees, improving productivity, obtaining cars and parts from overseas and entering into alliances with foreign auto makers to make low volume, niche products.

But even though General Motors, Ford Motor and Chrysler reported record combined profits of $11.2 billion for 1988, the prices of their stocks remain stubbornly stuck at relatively low levels of about five or six times earnings.

Analysts say investor fears are legitimate that the Big Three's financial performance of the last few years would not be sustainable in an environment of rising interest rates and slowed economic growth.

"Historically, auto stocks have had low multiples because their earnings have a much greater cyclical risk than most industries," said Jean-Claude Gruet of Salomon Brothers Inc. "In addition it is a mature industry and a very competitive industry."

But some feel that investor psychology is involved as well. The auto companies are so visible, and their past travails so well documented, that many think the industry cannot survive a recession without plunging earnings and slashed dividends.

Indeed, some feel that Detroit will have to go through a recession and demonstrate reasonable financial performance before the auto stocks begin to approach the average market multiple of 12 to 15 times earnings.

"The auto stocks are valued in such a way that it says we really do not believe they can get through a recession without depressed earnings and reduced dividends," said Harvey Heinbach, an analyst with Merrill Lynch.

"Maybe on the other side of a recession — if they really can demonstrate better performance than in the past — investors will be willing to upgrade the multiples. There is definitely a 'show me' attitude out there."

Local woman sells pecans overseas

GARDENDALE, Texas (AP) — A penchant for pecans and knack with nuts helped Janet Rogers dream up a delicacy that eventually could tickle tastebuds from England to Japan.

The 35-year-old mother of two never thought her candy-coated pecans could crack selective foreign food markets when she began selling the product locally seven years ago.

After a friend with a fledgling exporting business urged her to peddle her product in Japan, Mrs. Rogers still wasn't convinced the nuts would net a tasteful reception.

But when the call came, the American Consulate in Japan said oriental buyers had delivered rave reviews.

Now busy preparing a new packaging process that will extend the pecans' shelf life in Japanese stores, the Gardendale gourmet is excited at the prospect of her pecans being picked by foreign palates.

The notoriety could expand what is now a one-woman business. "As I've done it more, I've learned how to manage what I do," Mrs. Rogers said. "But if I go international, I'll have to hire more people."

The gourmet pecans started as a family tradition.

"My mother had the original recipe for cinnamon spice pecans," Mrs. Rogers said. "She used to do them for parties and everyone loved them so much I decided to start making them."

When Mrs. Rogers' father, Tommy Dempsey of Gardendale, branched into the pecan tree business in 1972, the rest of the family found themselves faced with a never-ending supply of nuts.

Tired of tried-and-true pecan recipes for pie and pralines, Mrs. Rogers unleashed her creativity one November when she was trying to come up with a unique holiday gift.

The result — candied pecans christened with mouth-watering names like frothy spice (her mother's old recipe), creamy mint, orange blossom and pina colada —quickly became a local hit.

"I had another diamond earring and pendant business, so I actually had two businesses going at the same time," Mrs. Rogers said. "I was trying to sell pendants during the day and bake at night."

In time, pecans became the more pressing priority.

"It's really been a seasonal business," Mrs. Rogers said. "I start gearing up for it in October. It's real hectic — people buy a lot during the three weeks between Thanksgiving and Christmas."

Odessan Mary Lou Parsons would like to see the pecans become a year-round confection.

The owner of MIUSA Marketing and Exporting, Ms. Parsons said foreign markets are hungry for American products. "I've got several bids out right now, including the pecans," she said.

One of the contracts could be with Harrod's of London, an exclusive British department store, Ms. Parsons said.

While Mrs. Rogers sells mainly in Texas, where the pecan is the official state tree, her business also got a local boost last December when the glazed goodies officially went gourmet.

TG's Fine Foods in Odessa agreed to try out the product. Sold under the name "Wholesome Treats," the pecans were a hot holiday seller.

Specialties Manager Teresa Sumner said TG's is selective about which items hit the shelves. "First of all, we taste the item to make sure it's a good product, and the packaging also would help," she said.

Mrs. Rogers' pecans made the cut because they seemed unique, Ms. Sumner said. "We like to have products that are exclusive," she said.

Although Mrs. Rogers has high hopes for the growth of her business — she is in the process of changing its name from Wholesome Treats to Pecans International — her gourmet pecan-making remains a cottage industry.

She cooks the candy in a Health Department-licensed commercial kitchen located in a portable building on her parents' Gardendale farm. There, pre-shelled nuts are coated with one of four glazes, then baked in a large commercial oven.

Ingredients are a trade secret, but Mrs. Rogers admits she uses egg whites to keep the product light. "There's no cholesterol, and they're a lot less fattening because I don't use butter like everyone else," she said.

In addition to capturing the health-conscious American consumer, Mrs. Rogers said she also hopes to promote the pecans as a company Christmas gift and a nuptial nut.

More Americans work at home

By KATHLEEN MYLER
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Back in 1980, futurist Alvin Toffler predicted in his book "The Third Wave" that America would become an "electronic cottage," with workers toiling in their homes, hooked up to offices via computers and telephones.

Nine years later, an estimated 25 million Americans live the futurist's vision, working either full- or part-time at home with personal computers.

Toffler's dream of an economy without commuting remains unfulfilled. But the ranks of Americans who "telecommute" –where corporate employees work at home – is growing steadily.

Workers like the opportunity to set flexible hours and stay near their families, and some managements see cost savings by running so-called "back office" operations like cottage industries.

More executives soon will join the work-at-home trend, according to Mary Ann Von Glinow of the University of Southern California's business school.

Instead of a large corporate headquarters, a company's main administrative facility will consist of a computer center surrounded by showcase "executive suites," while "most of the firm's white-collar employees will be working at remote sites, generally in their own homes," she said.

A 1987 study by USC's Center for Effective Organizations found that tele-commuters rated themselves 50 percent more effective than their office-bound peers. The happy home executives also reported significant improvement in their concentration and said they had no trouble separating home and work lives.

Von Glinow's research, on the other hand, indicates some pitfalls of tele-commuting. Working "invisibly" at remote sites, employees may be out of mind when it comes to promotions. Since tele-commuting may be presented as a perk, it could also cost employees money.

New types of checks and controls are needed to assess the quality of work done outside daily supervision. They may alienate workers and sap morale more than continuous, low-level scrutiny.

As the tele-commuter's sense of independence grows, so does loneliness. Social isolation could drive many back into the office. And many stay-at-homes with clerical jobs have found they can't do their jobs and also tend their children.

Even sellers of home office gear admit that success in the electronic cottage is more a matter of managing time than buying fancy equipment. Thomas Friel, vice president of the EIA's Consumer Electronics Group, offers these tips:

–Create a work environment. Set aside a special room to be used only as the office. Decorate it like an office, with a door that can be closed during and at the end of the day.

–Keep your business in the office, not strewn throughout your home.

–Install a business telephone line to be used only for business calls.

Seven-Up joins in cola war

Cox News Service

ATLANTA — Maybe you saw it. Two glasses of cola are under fire from a barrage of rubber-tipped darts amid sounds of battle and gunfire.

"The diet colas," the voice-over suggests, are "taking potshots at each other. Well, in the interest of good taste, Diet Seven-Up will not condone this sort of violence on television. Lighten Up."

This week the Seven-Up Co. barged into the cola war with a handful of hastily produced commercials that parody Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola's public bickering of late.

Seven-Up's new campaign, which debuted Monday on network and cable prime-time programming, suggests that consumers don't care how many people have switched from one cola to another — the cornerstone of current Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola advertising. And some Seven-Up spots take specific potshots at Coca-Cola's new George Michael and 3-D commercials.

Seven-Up's effort comes as the marketing industry begins taking a hard look at the effectiveness of comparative advertising. Some marketing and advertising experts suggest that often advertising that takes potshots at the competition simply confuses the consumers.

The industry's own policing agency, the national advertising division of the Council of Better Business Bureaus, reviewed 103 advertising challenges last year, two-thirds of which dealt with comparative questions. The bureau persuaded many advertisers to alter, or pull, their ads.

The television networks are forcing advertisers, including Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola, to change the claims or dump their commercials. And the Federal Trade Commission, once a proponent of comparative advertising, is now taking a hard look at the potential anti-competitive nature of the technique.

"We see more advertisers taking this route and see more and more indication that it is not effective," observed Harold M. Spielman, chief executive officer of McCollum-Spielman International Inc. in Great Neck, N.Y., an advertising research testing company.

His firm has conducted studies that conclude comparison advertising often leads to mass confusion on the part of the consumer.

One big problem for advertisers, researchers say, is that it gives a free ride to the competitor you are attacking in the ad, and sometimes the consumer doesn't know which company actually bought the ad.

But, counters Anthony J. Tortorici, a spokesman for Coca-Cola USA, "I think people generally don't give consumers enough credit."

However, Kenneth L. Bernhardt, professor of marketing, Georgia State University College of Business, said, "Research has shown it can go too far and it can boomerang. Consumers don't like one competitor knocking down another unless it's in a fun context," said Bernhardt, who is also president of the International American Marketing Association.

Comparative advertising has been used quite effectively in some memorable campaigns, such as Avis's "We Try Harder" 1960s campaign against industry leader Hertz, and Pepsi Cola's Pepsi Challenge campaign in the 1970s.

But some market researchers, as well as the advertising trade press, have suggested that the current cola war campaign went too far, and privately officials at both companies concur that the public name-calling got out control.

Coca-Cola started the latest exchange with commercials on January's Super Bowl that took the unusual approach of going against regular Pepsi rather than Diet Pepsi.

"Last year nearly 2 million families stopped buying Pepsi and more of them moved to diet Coke than any other major soft drink," the ads said.

Winning artists

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Without followers among the youth of each generation, the arts become lost in history.

As British prime minister Benjamin Disraeli, one of his nation's most important political leaders of the 1800s, once said, "Youth is the trustee of posterity."

Thus, for 27 years, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., has supported an annual National Young Artists Competition.

"This type of competition is important to the careers of the young artists who participate, as it offers them an opportunity to perform with a symphony orchestra," says Connie Linsler, the organization's general manager.

"We have had participants from all over the United States and even some from Europe and beyond who have learned of our competition and of its quality. Its reputation has encouraged participation."

This year's 60 competitors represented 51 colleges and seven high schools. The foreign competitors were from Canada, Japan, Korea, Taiwan and the Peoples Republic of China.

The performing winners from this year's competition at Odessa College in January, return this week to perform with the symphony.

"One of the unique things about the Midland-Odessa competition is that it covers musical disciplines from voice to piano, strings and winds at both the secondary and college level, excluding voice in the high school level," Ms. Linsler says.

Performing with the symphony at 8 p.m. Tuesday at Lee High School and at 8 p.m. Thursday at Odessa's Bonham Junior High will be Alfred Lee, high school piano; Harry Kinross White, saxophone; Emily Pulley, voice; and Lin Lin, college piano.

Unable to return this week for the performances is a fifth winner, violinist Joan Kwuon who attends Indiana University.

A Prelude Party featuring a light dinner and the opportunity to meet the performing winners and Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, the symphony's conductor, will precede each performance. Reservations are required and may be made by calling the Symphony Concert Line, 563-5269 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Tickets, priced at $12 for reserved seating, $9 for general admission and $5 for students and senior citizens, may be charged by calling the Symphony Concert Line; or purchased at Texas American Bank in Midland; MBank in Odessa; or at the door.

Lee will perform Prokofiev's Concerto No. 1 in D flat, Opus 10. A junior at Bryan High School in Bryan, Texas, the 16-year-old studies under Dr. John Paul of Sam Houston State University.

As a result of winning Texas competitions, Lee has played concerti with the Houston Civic, the University of Houston and the Richardson Symphony orchestras.

White, who also plays the piano, will perform Ibert's Concertino de Camera.

The 21-year-old is from Gulfport, Miss., and attends the University of Southern Mississippi, where he studies under Lawrence Gwozdz. White has performed as a soloist with the Alabama Symphony and the Transylvania Symphony at Brevard, N.C.

Miss Pulley, who also plays the flute, guitar and bass guitar, will sing "Bel Raggio Lusinghier" from Rossini's opera "Semiramide" and "The Trees on the Mountain" from Carlisle Floyd's opera "Susannah."

The 21-year-old is a student at West Texas State University, where she studies under Elsa Porter. Miss Pulley was a 1988 first place winner of the District Metropolitan Opera Audition.

Miss Lin will perform Beethoven's Concerto No. 4.

The 19-year-old from Beijing, China, placed third in the 1986 National Piano Competition for Youth in China. Miss Lin lives in Cincinnati with her American sponsors and attends the University of Cincinnati, College Conservatory of Music, where she is a student of Eugene Prindonoff.

"Over $7,000 in prize money provided through the contributions of various local foundations and individuals is awarded to the performing winners," Ms. Linsler says.

"But, one of the main enticements of the competition is to play before distinguished judges. Many of the past winners of the competition are now pursuing very successful solo careers with one winner singing with the Metropolitan Opera. Also, one of our judges this year, Jeffrey Campbell, was a past winner of the competition in the 1970s."

Other judges for this year's competition were David Burge, chairman of the piano facuty, Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y.; Evan Whallon, president of the Conductors' Guild and former conductor of the San Francisco Opera and Columbus Orchestra; and George Goslee, principal bassoonist of the Cleveland Orchestra for 41 years.

The competition alternates annually between Midland and Odessa. When it is held in Odessa, the Odessa Symphony Guild acts as sponsor and when the event occurs in Midland the Midland Symphony Guild is the sponsor. This year's chairman was Karen Crutchfield.

The concerts also will feature the All-Region Orchestra's first chair winners from Midland and Odessa high schools performing Ron Nelson's "Jubilee."

Performing will be Jeannette Shackelford, a member of the symphony, violin I; Tracy Stevenson, violin II; Cindy Calloway, viola; Paul Sikes, cello; Geoff Qualls, bass; Tracy Vieth, flute; Kathy Morris, piccolo; Suzanna Cleveland, oboe; Jennifer Wagner, clarinet; Robert Alvarez, horn; Mary Adams, trumpet; Anthony Fang, trombone; Kenneth King, bass trombone; Tommy Richison, tuba; Rick Wooten, timpani; Robert McGuire, percussion I; and Bobby Gonzales, percussion II.

"We thought this an appropriate concert to feature our outstanding young performers," Ms. Linsler says. "So, it's an evening to experience youthful talent."

MCT productions to close

Midland Community Theatre's productions of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" and Shel Silverstein's "The Crate" are set to close Saturday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Also closing that same day will be an exhibition of works by Leslie D'Allesandro Hill, Mavis Murphy and Cynthia Wolfe.

The musical, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," is based on the Old Testament story of Joseph, favorite son of Jacob, who also has 11 other sons.

For reservations to either production call MCT's box office, 682-4111.

Uelsmann photos displayed

Gallery 1114 is featuring an exhibition of photographs by Jerry Uelsmann through April 6.

"Uelsmann combines incongrous forms that muraculously appear to belong together," says a release from the gallery.

This creates unreal situations and compelling images: the ceiling of a quiet library floats with clouds, a woman's body becomes part of a rock cliff.

The artist has stated, "Nature is a very subjective concept for me, and I am attracted to images that challenge our sense of reality."

Autographed copies of Uelsmann's book "Process and Perception" will be on sale during the showing.

Gallery 1114, at 1114 N. Big Spring, is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE

Billy Joe Royal perserveres for second chance at stardom

What does it take to make it in the music business? Billy Joe Royal says, "about 10 percent talent and about 90 percent luck."

Temple

He laughs, indicates the scales may not be that unbalanced and adds, "a lot of luck and a lot of perserverance. You've really got to hang in there. A lot of people don't want to give up their day time jobs. It takes sacrifices — all those things you read about."

He knows. He's made it twice. The first time, his 1965 release "Down in the Boondocks" started his rise as a popular music idol. Now in his 40s, he's turned country. Saturday he performs at Ector County Coliseum along with George Strait and Baillie and the Boys. Showtime is 7:30 p.m.

When we talked, I asked him what advice he'd give a young person who has talent. He was quiet for a minute.

"I'd tell them to get into it for the right reasons. When I was a kid, I was a music junkie — that was all I cared about. If you get into it because you want to be a big star or make money, then you're into it for the wrong reasons. You've got to get into it because you love it.

"Music's been my life. I can't change a tire. I can't drive a nail into the wall with a hammer. I never had a job as an adult other than music. If you can make a living at this, you're ahead of the game. I feel real lucky."

We both laughed when he talked about not releasing a single written by Joe South which went on to become a big hit for another artist.

"I cut it, but I didn't like it that much. It was written for me. I liked it, but I didn't like it enough for it to become a single, which shows you what a great ear I had. He wrote 'Hush' too, and I liked it a lot and it was a hit too."

He put it on an album. Lynn Anderson released it as a single. The song —"I Didn't Promise You a Rose Garden."

When he thinks of this lost opportunity, he's pragmatic. "You can't win them all."

Surprisingly, Billy Joe's favorite song isn't one of his own. The hit song, "Running Scared," was recorded by a man for whom he had great admiration and respect — Roy Orbison.

"To me, Roy was one of the best singers in the world, his range was unbelievable."

He knew him personally and recalls how kind Orbison was to him when he was starting out in the business. "Running Scared' was a No. 1 hit and Billy Joe and South were working at the Bamboo Ranch when Orbison performed there.

"He didn't have a band, and we backed him up. 'Crying' had not come out yet. He took a lot of time with me and gave me a lot of encouragement. He flew in so I'd pick him up at night and take him to work."

Six months later, "Crying" was a big hit, "the hottest thing in the world.

Billy Joe had the opportunity to perform on a big show in Jackson and "everybody who ever hummed on a record was down there.

"I'd just been working in a club. I never saw that many people together at one time. I went down there with my little band, and I was scared to death and Roy saw me — course he was a huge star — he came over and said, 'There's nothing to worry about.' It really made me feel at home. We went on and survived, and Roy went on with that little band of his and wiped everybody out."

Billy Joe saw him "from time to time after that." He remembers when Orbison took some time from "the Ella Fitzgerald show to spend some time with me. He was just a real nice man...it was a great loss to music when he died."

When I asked him if he had a special memory, a night which stood out of the rest, he had an immediate answer — performing on the Ed Sullivan Show.

"Back then Ed Sullivan was the biggest thing in life, at least he was to me. Everybody watched the Ed Sullivan show Sunday night. When I was asked to do it, I thought, 'I've arrived.' It was just a big, big deal back then. I'd been watching Ed since I was a little kid, and all of a sudden I was there. It was really a thrill.

"It was scary. That show was live, and right before I went on someone said, 'We have a heavy show tonight — 22 million people watching.' I thought, 'Holy moley.'

"I don't remember it. I was growing cotton between my teeth, when I hit the stage. When you're that scared, everything is kind of a blur, but I got through it. I guess everything was OK. Afterwards, I was walking on a cloud."

I've no doubt that performers can identify with Billy Joe's comments, particularly those facing opening night jitters.

Shel Silverstein's "The Crate," co-produced by Midland Community Theatre and Midland College, recently opened at Theatre Midland.

The opening night performance was uneven. Some segments clipped along; others moved too slow. Although the show began at the same time as "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," it ended long after the other production closed. I suspect about 20 minutes less would be closer to an ideal length.

Each cast member had his or her time in the spotlight with all doing an admirable job. The off-beat comedy, which utilizes dark humor, is designed primarily for mature audiences.

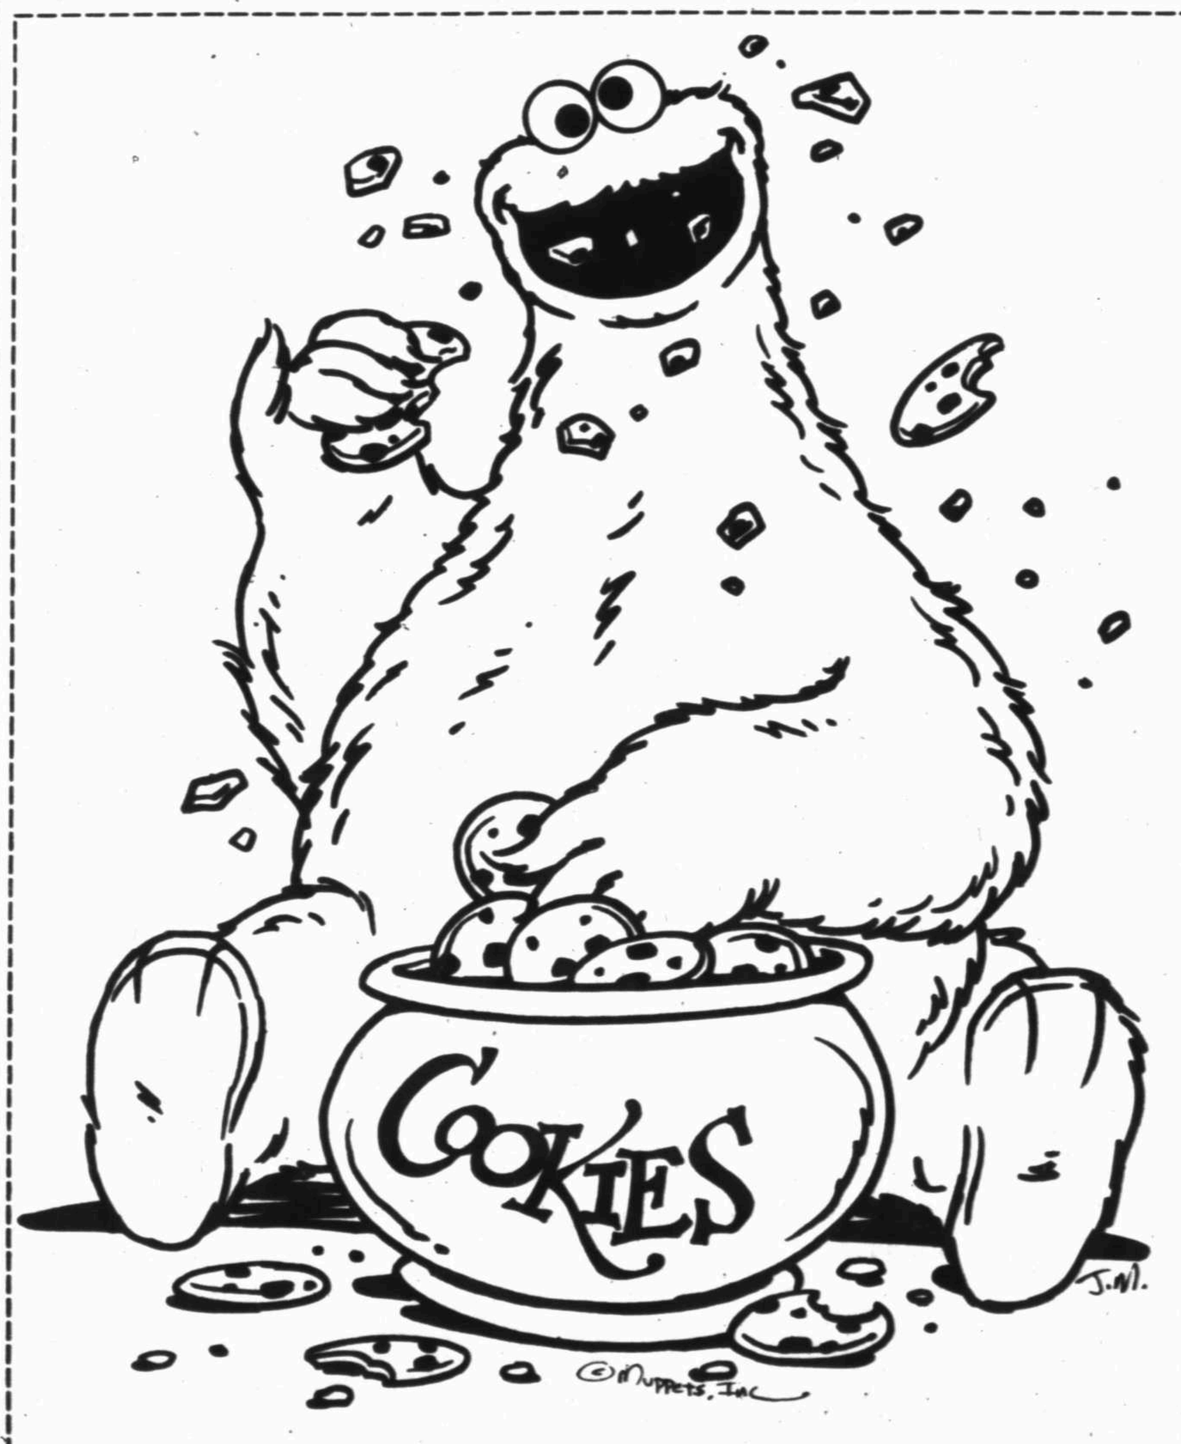

I'm still thinking about how I feel about it. And, it's a comedy which gives one pause and cause to think.

I liked the innovative way the set changes were handled, particularly the ad libbing.

Were I the director — and I'm not — I'd tighten the show. The segments which work, work. The others left me waiting for the next scene.

Of course, that's an advantage to this kind of comedy. I'd remind myself that this scene will soon pass, and I'd view the upcoming one as an adventure yet to be experienced. I'd recommend it for those who enjoy the bizzare and who don't mind separating the wheat from the chaff.

'Dream a Little Dream' confusing

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

Well, Tom Hanks can breathe easier, "The 'Burbs" is no longer the worst movie of 1989, "Dream a Little Dream" has just won that distinction, barely nudging out "The 'Burbs" by ½ rig.

"Dream a Little Dream" is nearly two excrutiating hours of an extended music television video starring Corey "The Lost Boys" Haim and Corey "The 'Burbs" Feldman. Although the two leads are meant to be teen-age box office draws, the two 12-year-old young ladies sitting next to me pronounced the stars' hairdos and clothes "totally gross." Feldman's choppy slate-colored hair looks like it was cut by someone from the "Texas Chainsaw Massacre School of Hair Design." Haim looks even worse. His bright rust-colored hair is frizzed and tortured into spikes.

Once you get past the shock value of the yucky hair, though, there are few surprises left in "Dream." The premise involves another Invasion of the Body Switchers plot. (Remember "Big," "Vice Versa," "Like Father, Like Son," and "18 Again?")

Feldman is Bobby, your "basic dude" who collides with the girl of his dreams (Meredith Salenger) in the yard of a middle-aged new age couple, (Piper Laurie and Jason Robards). The girl is on a bicycle when she crashes into Feldman, who is on foot. They are both knocked out, and the older couple, who are practicing tai chi transcedental techniques, are whisked out of "reality, as we know it."

The result of this is that Robard's brain is in Feldman's body, Miss Salenger assumes Ms. Laurie's character traits, but doesn't absorb her brain. Ms. Laurie is stuck in a dream state, her body has vanished, Robard is stuck in a dream state with his own brain, and Haim is basically braindead. Confused? Don't worry, I spent the entire first hour and ten minutes trying to figure out what was happening. This, and the booming soundtrack kept me awake.

The senseless script, intercut with LOUD rock and roll, makes "Dream" a mind-numbing bore. Director and co-screenplay writer Mike Rocco gets most of the blame. According to press notes, Rocco gathered the cast together for a week-long rehearsal period, yet none of the parts had been "exactly" assigned. Miss Salenger said, "I'd rehearse with Corey, Corey would rehearse with Jason, Corey and I would then rehearse with Jason — we had all these different combinations of who would rehearse with who. Sometimes we would trade roles and play each other's parts." No wonder the actors were confused. The undefined roles transfer to the screen, leaving the audience without a clue as to who's who. It probably didn't help having two actors named "Corey" on the set, either.

Haim also broke his leg on the set, so it was written into the script. "My mother ran over my leg with the Volvo," he explains in the opening of the film — a real "ha, ha."

Rocco also said he hoped the movie would be "challenging for audiences. I want people to work at watching it," he said. Mission accomplished. The question is: "Is it worth the work?" In all fairness, the two 12-year-olds thought so. But mom and dad, drop the kids off for this one.

"Dream a Little Dream" rates ½ rig.

"Dream a Little Dream" is rated PG-13 ("Special Parental Guidance for Those Younger Than 13"), owing to language.

Bronson mistreats criminals in 'Kinjite'

In the '50s there was a whole slew of films featuring mutated ants, giant spiders and bug-eyed monsters. Horror writer Stephen King referred to this genre as a metaphor for the communist threat. Although Americans aren't living in fear of communism today, they are afraid of Japanese control, according to "Kinjite: Forbiddin Subjects," Charles Bronson's latest film.

"Kinjite" opens with a young woman undressing before she is tied to a bed. The scene switches to Los Angeles, then Japan, then Los Angeles again. Director J. Lee Thompson has a real knack for chopping scenes into about 40 seconds a piece. The film also has several overlapping subplots, one about the molestation of Bronson's daughter by a womanizing Japanese executive (James Pax), and the other about this same executive's own daughter being kidnapped by a pimp named Duke (Juan Fernandez).

Bronson stars as an Los Angeles police detective who hates Duke, men who have "sex with little girls" and the Japanese threat.

"I have this feeling of revenge that's eating my guts," Bronson at one point confesses to a priest. Although the audience is supposed to assume that Bronson has reason to be ticked off at the Japanese because of the incident with his daughter, it's hard to understand why he is angry at the criminal's entire race, rather than being angry at the crime committed.

"Some sleazy Oriental groped my daughter, how am I supposed to feel?" Bronson asks. At one point he confronts a group of Japanese people, and yells, "You people act like you own this town. This is L.A., not Tokyo!"

When not mistreating the Japanese, Bronson mistreats criminals. He threatens to shoot off their kneecaps. He makes them eat their wristwatches, sets fire to their Cadillacs, and drops them over balconies. And all in the name of justice. What a guy.

If teen porn, strong-arm tactics, and racism appeals to you, then "Kinjite" fills the bill. But for me, Bronson, and his film left a bad taste in my mouth.

"Kinjite" rates 2 rigs.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

"Kinjite," rated R for implied kinky sex, nudity and sex scenes, is playing the UA Cine 4.

Shakespeare Festival at Globe Theatre

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Odessa Shakespeare Festival and Renaissance Fair contines today at the Globe Theatre.

Entertainment and demonstrations are being conducted throughout the day beginning at 1 p.m.

Among the activities is a Jacob's Ladder to climb, stocks for malcontents, face painting and Maypole dancers.

Included in the artisans and craftsmen displaying their wares and having demonstrations are potter Mary Broadman. English stocking making by Jamie Gieb, paintings by Anna Cavett, woodcarving by Theda Lane and glass etching by Nancy Johnson. Troy Moody will be demonstrating coiled pottery and Dottie Ramsey will be reading palms. Other artisians include quilters and weavers as well as archery and bowman demonstrations.

Cost is $1 for people in costume and $2 for those in modern dress.

For more information call the Globe office, 1-332-1586.

In addition, a unique photographic exhibition which celebrates the life and world of William Shakespeare is on display through March 18 in the Anne Hathaway Cottage gallery room at the Globe Theatre as part of the 1989 Odessa Shakespeare Festival and Renaissance Fair.

Developed by the Texas Humanities Resource Center under a grant from the National Endowment for Humanities, "Shakespeare: The Globe and the World" is based on the great Folger Library multi-media exhibition. Special help from the Folger Shakespeare Library helped create the exhibit at the Globe.

The 10 panels of photographs illustrate major aspects of the Renaissance world and Shakespeare's world of theater.

Of special interest is a panel of of photographs and lithographs showing how the balcony scene in Romeo and Juliet has been staged in productions dating from 1750 to 1970. Other panels highlight the religious turmoil of the age, including the publication of the King James Version of the Bible; the Elizabethan notion of America; and fashions and costumes of the day.

"This traveling exhibition gives us a Shakespeare who was an actual person living in a very real world," says Josephine Sewell, festival chairman.

"For most people Shakespeare unfortunately is the name of a man who wrote plays that are hard to read and harder to understand, even though teachers in school told us that they were great. We can now let the public see how people have responded to Shakespeare through the ages, thanks to the Texas Committee for the Humanities. We can introduce them to his plays again in a more favorable setting."

Tours are by reservation except during the Renaissance Fair, which closes today, when the Anne Hathaway Cottage will be open daily for tours and the exhibit.

Group tours and special visits may be arranged by calling the Globe Box Office at 332-1586. No admission is charged.

NBC extends ratings streak to 37 weeks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC extended its prime-time ratings victory streak to 37 weeks, and Fox Broadcasting Co.'s "Married...With Children" fell a few points after coming under attack for alleged lewdness.

NBC placed its four Thursday night comedies in the top 10, with "The Cosby Show" in first place and "A Different World" in second, "Cheers" in fourth and "Dear John" tied for 10th, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co.

Other shows in the top 10 were ABC's "Roseanne" third; NBC's "The Golden Girls," fifth; CBS' "60 Minutes," sixth; ABC's "Who's the Boss?" seventh; ABC's "The Wonder Years," just moved from Wednesday, eighth; and NBC's "Empty Nest," 10th.

NBC dominated the week with a 16.1 rating. ABC and CBS tied week with 12.6.

Each ratings point represents 904,000 homes with television.

"Married...With Children" had an 11.4 rating and fell to 54th place after a Michigan mother's allegations that the show was "lewd and anti-family" gained national attention last week. The previous week it finished in 46th place and had a 12.5 rating.

CBS was first among the evening news shows with a rating of 11.5. ABC had 11.2 and NBC 10.5.

Haley expanding art show, sale

The Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and J. Evetts Haley History Center is expanding its annual Southwestern art show and sale this year in response to a successful 1988.

"We had three art shows in '88, and they were all very successful," says Robin McWilliams of the Haley Library. "We have our March art show planned, and it's going to be a bigger show this year than last year."

The Haley Library and History Center's 11th annual show, set for March 18, will feature works by close to 50 artists, including Clark Hulings, Veryl Goodnight, Wayne Wolfe and Buck McCain, and will be held at Midland Center.

"The last two years it's been at the Library so this is definite growth," Ms. McWilliams says.

The $50 per-person cost of admission includes cocktails and hors d'oeuvres. To register call 682-5785.

Most of the artists will be present for the show.

The works which don't sell will be on display for a month at the Haley Library and History Center, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., where they may be viewed Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m.

A portion of the purchase price of each painting or sculpture sold is a tax deductible donation which goes to the Haley Library's rare book acquisition fund.

The library buys one painting from the March show to add to its permanent collection, which is on display during the year.

Unemployed Texan uses time to write hi-tech thriller

By T.W. KNOWLES II

DALLAS (AP) — Payne Harrison's hi-tech thriller of superpower confrontation and orbital piracy, "Storming Intrepid," hit the Publisher's Weekly bestseller list just a few days after its hardcover release and appear in the 14th spot on this week's New York Times best seller list.

Harrison

It's already number one in Dallas, the author's hometown. Harrison recently appeared on the Today Show, and Crown Publishers, Inc., is promoting the book on an unusually large scale for a first novel.

An essential element of the conflict in Harrison's novel is the controversial Strategic Defense Initiative.

"Most of the arguments I've read about SDI or 'Star Wars' have been on the technical feasibility of the systems," Harrison says. "My book says, 'OK, let's assume that SDI actually works.' Now, let's go one step further beyond that. Will 'Star Wars' be the ultimate weapon? Will there be conflict in space?"

In "Storming Intrepid," the answer is yes. The failure of glasnost and perestroika allow a conservative power shift to take place in the Soviet Union. The failure of the Soviet economy causes Gorbachev's successors to look outward for an answer to their problems.

Harrison's success is by no means typical for a first-time novelist. "I should point out here," he says, "that I was astronomically lucky in that I got in touch with the one best person within the publishing industry for my kind of book! We were kindred spirits, if you will. I could just as easily have gone through a hundred rejections before I found the right person."

Harrison, a second-generation Aggie (class of '71), credits the Corps of Cadets and his Texas A&M education as two important catalysts in his success.

"I was a rather undisciplined individual when I went in," Harrison says. "The Corps did two things for me: It taught me physical discipline, of course; but more importantly, it taught me mental discipline. I also forged some very close friendships during the course of the four years, friendships that have turned out to be life-long."

His understanding of the military is another result of his undergraduate years at Texas A&M. His Corps service along with two years of active duty total six years, and "that's a pretty big chunk out of anybody's life," he says. "I think I came away with a grasp of things military that I was able to translate into the book."

As a undergraduate journalism major, Harrison wrote "just a little bit" for A&M's student newspaper, The Battalion and worked for KAMU Channel 15 for a little over a year. In his senior year, he was a Cadet Captain and an executive officer of Company E-2, the outfit that takes care of A&M's mascot Reveille.

After two years of active duty as a public affairs officer in the Army Signal Corps, he returned to A&M for a master's degree in political science and worked as a teaching assistant for the journalism department.

> "Most of the arguments I've read about SDI or 'Star Wars' have been on the technical feasibility of the systems. My book ('Storming Intrepid' says, 'OK, let's assume that SDI actually works.' Now, let's go one step further beyond that. Will 'Star Wars' be the ultimate weapon? Will there be conflict in space?"

> — Payne Harrison

"My master's thesis was on the Arab-Israeli Six-Day War and the U.S. involvement in that conflict," Harrison says. "Graduate school was, in terms of using my mind, in terms of my career, a critical time for me. I really grew intellectually. It was a great, tremendous, stimulating experience for me. It has served me very well in the rest of my life."

After he received his master's degree, Harrison worked as a reporter for the Salt Lake Tribune in Salt Lake City, Utah, for three years.

Then he went back to school again, taking a master's in business administration at Southern Methodist University.

Eventually he joined a Dallas accounting firm as a special consultant. "My career was progressing just fine," Harrison says, "when the Tax Reform Act of 1986 was passed. My consulting practice, about 50 percent of it, was essentially legislated out of existence. It just went away. I then left the firm for a business venture that promptly failed."

Harrison found himself sharing a leaky economic boat with a lot of other Texans. "I was professionally beached, out of work in a flat Texas economy. I was sending out resumes nobody was reading. With a lot of time on my hands, I started writing the story of "Intrepid," just to occupy my time."

To write "Intrepid," Harrison turned his liabilities into assets. "My career pattern has no pattern," he says with a laugh.

"At first glance, it does seem like a hodgepodge of things thrown together, but the common thread that runs through it is been the function of researching and writing. I combined my educational background and my military experience with having been a reporter and a consultant...and when I was a consultant, I took a lot of highly technical issues dealing with patterns and software and translated that information into a readable report. The skills that I acquired in hodgepodge fashion served me well when I started to write this book."

After completing a substantial portion of the book, Harrison submitted it to small publishers, primarily university presses. Ultimately, they all rejected it. Eventually, he made a list of criteria that would typify the publisher he wanted, and Crown Publishing, Inc., was at the top of that list.

Harrison sent his manuscript directly to the publisher, a process known in the industry as an "over the transom" submission. "The usual protocol is to get an agent, and the agent in turn markets your work to the various publishers. Fortunately, I was dumb enough not to know any better. I just picked up the phone, called Crown in New York, and to this day I don't know who it was I talked to first. I just said, 'Who is the person who handles your fiction department?' "

He sent off a manuscript excerpt, and soon answered another request for more material. Within a week after he'd submitted the bulk of the manuscript, they called him to say, "We have an offer for you." He signed with a Dallas agent who negotiated the final deal for "Intrepid" and a subsequent contract for two more books.

Harrison and his publisher are waiting for the book to prove itself on the bestseller lists before negotiating the movie rights and a sale to a paperback publisher.

On the subject of his style, Harrison is thoughtful. "My strength is in the pacing and the plotting. I think that's where I have a particular skill, and I hope that came out in the book."

Tom Clancy, whose "Hunt for Red October" is considered to be the ultimate techno-thriller, was once questioned by the Defense Department over his use of material that turned out not to be classified, but that was readily available in the public library. Harrison uses similarly available sources of technical information.

"The key," he says, "is not so much the source of information, as what you do with it. There is a vast amount of data that is published on American military hardware. What I did was take the publicly available information to build a mosaic. It's like putting together a jigsaw puzzle.

"As we were going to press, we had to make changes in the manuscript as additional information was made available on both the stealth bomber and the Soviet space shuttle."

Harrison is in the research phase on his new novel, "In the Shadow of Mount Erebus," a naval techno-thriller. "A few weeks ago, I got a tour of the carrier U.S.S. America, and of an Aegis cruiser — the cruiser that is designed to protect the carrier from low-flying cruise-type missiles — and also of a Marine assault carrier up in Norfolk, Virginia."

The new book will differ somewhat in style. "It's going to have a little different twist to it. Once you see it, you'll understand what I mean, but you'll just have to wait and see it."

A Review

The trouble is, Roderick L. Haig-Brown wrote, "I am a writer first and a fisherman second." Those of us who like to read as well as fish can be thankful for that.

In this reissue of Haig-Brown's 1951 treatise on fishing the Campbell River on Vancouver Island, British Columbia, the writing will draw any reader into the intricacies of fooling a fish with an artificial fly.

Haig-Brown counsels fly fishers on his time-tested techniques and leads us along his home fishing grounds.

He believed, as do many conservationists, that trout fishing should be restricted to fly fishing technique because it causes less harm to released fish. Bait hooks are simply too damaging to small trout.

As for catching the limit of fish, Haig-Brown wrote: "No state or province has any business designing its laws to insure that every sportsman, no matter how unskillful, shall have a chance to fill out a limit every time he goes out..."

Fishing is a personal experience that cannot be fully expressed even by an expert storyteller. He wrote, "... all those are sensations so powerful that hand and arm and eye write them indelibly on the mind, and they remain there, on recall at any time."

'YOUNG READER' REVIEW

Betsy Byars' "Beans on the Roof" is not a skyline vegetable garden, but a story about a delightful family named Bean. Byars turns her poetic style to the subject of poetry — poetry written on the apartment roof by various members of the engaging Bean family.

When Anna Bean retreats to the roof to write a poem for a school publication, she is joined first by her brother, George, then by her sister, Jenny, then by her mother and finally by her father.

Each member of the family joins the spirit of things by writing their own poem, except for George, to whom creative inspiration will not come.

Two threads tie the story together — the Beans' conviction that Anna will the first one in the family to be "in a book" and George's frustration with writer's block. In the end, George does write a poem and Anna is devastated when her poem is not selected for the school's book.

The Bean parents' warm pride in their children and the family's love for each other combine with Byars' fine ear for sibling dialogue and believable characterizations to make a book that should be a first choice among children beginning to read chapter books as well as reluctant readers.

The bidding:

Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ◇

We wrote a book some years ago entitled "Go With the Odds." But to do so when that course is an exercise in futility is sheer stubbornness on your part.

The auction was quite simple. With the equivalent of an opening bid facing an opener, South bounced right into game as soon as a fit had been located.

West led the king of diamonds, and East signalled with the jack. There followed in quick order the ace of diamonds and ace of clubs to complete the defensive book, then a low diamond. Declarer ruffed in dummy with the seven, came to hand with the ace of hearts and then had to decide how to play the trump suit for no loser.

Anyone with only a rudimentary knowledge of the probabilities should be aware that the percentage play with 10 cards missing the king is to take the finesse. So declarer led the jack of spades and, when West produced the two, flew up with the ace to drop the king! Making four-odd.

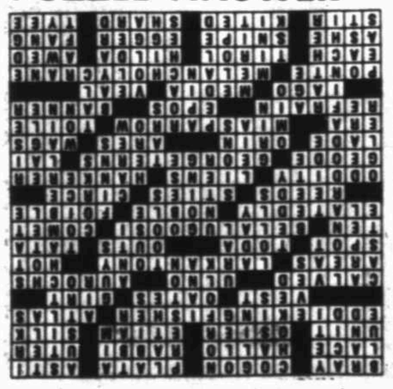

What made South abandon the probabilities? Had he seen the king of spades in the East hand?

To all intents and purposes, yes! West, who was a passed hand, had already shown up with 11 points in the minors. Had he held the king of spades as well, he would certainly have opened the bidding. Therefore, East was marked with the king.

Incidentally, if West doesn't cash the ace of clubs, declarer should play on clubs before he touches spades. When he discovers West has the ace of clubs, he can't go wrong in trumps.
