Curry given 35-year term

By GARY SHANKS
and PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writers

Justin Forrest Curry, 16, of Big Spring pleaded guilty to the murder of his 65-year-old grandfather, Bill Kuykendall, and was sentenced to 35 years in prison Monday.

District Judge Bob Moore found that Curry had used a deadly weapon, firing four shots into Kuykendall's head. This affirmative finding of the use of a firearm in the murder means Curry cannot be paroled before one-fourth of his sentence is served.

There were other injuries to the body, indicating other violence, according to police reports.

"He will be 25 or older when he gets out," said District Attorney Rick Hamby. Curry had been scheduled for trial on April 12.

Curry's family requested the sentence, hoping Curry will take advantage of educational opportunities while incarcerated, according to defense attorney Don Richard.

Richard.

"This is an unusual position in which the decedent is part of the family and the defendant is part of the family... I think the prosecutor really needs to pay attention to their wishes," Hamby said.

Curry could have received life in prison or death for the Oct. 16, 1992, slaying.

There were special considerations in the case, due to the nature of Curry's age and relation to his victim. "This was a family tragedy, so we got what everybody could live with — and this was it," Richard said.

Curry will receive credit for 170 days spent in jail. He was unable to post $75,000 bail imposed after he surrendered himself to police following the murder.

Howard County Sheriff's Deputies will move Curry to a state prison facility within the next 48 hours, according to Sheriff A.N. Standard.

Curry was certified to stand trial as an adult on Dec. 10, 1992.

Arrests allow authorities to clear four more cases

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Four more in a string of burglaries that occurred this year have been cleared by the Big Spring Police Department, bringing the total of cleared cases to 25 as a result of four arrests last week.

More stolen property has been recovered, and about $2,500 worth, much of it appliances and jewelry, has been returned to its owners, said Detective Scott Griffin.

Property is still being sought and more arrests could follow, Griffin said, adding that police have an idea of where to look for the stolen goods.

"If they do not choose to voluntarily bring it back, then we will go seek it out with a warrant," Griffin said.

Felony crimes in Big Spring, not including violent crimes, doubled the first quarter this year over the same period in 1992, according to Griffin. Burglaries climbed from 112 to 223. The national clearance rate for burglaries is about 25 percent.

Arrested last week and free on bond:

• Victor Dean Crenshaw, 33, 447 Armstrong, charged so far with two counts of burglary of a habitation, punishable with prison time up to 99 years or life.

• Martha Ann Mathews, 20, wife of Crenshaw and same address, charged so far with three counts of burglary of a habitation and hindering apprehension.

• Domingo Castillo, 22, 1209 Madison, felony theft by appropriation.

BSHS students getting law enforcement skills

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Big Spring High School students are getting hands-on experience with law enforcement procedures, which has allowed a local senior to win a state contest and advance to national competition.

Shayne Kotara wrapped up a first-place state win over the weekend in Vocational Industrial Clubs of America (VICA) Law Enforcement Skill Olympics contest in Corpus Christi.

Kotara, who received a one-year scholarship, will be the only participant from Texas attending the June contest, to be conducted in Louisville, Ky., with more than 35 states participating.

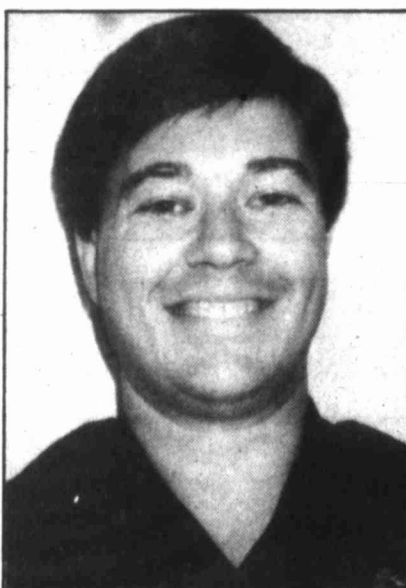

"I'm planning on going into the law enforcement field. This helps me in training," Kotara said. "It allows me to establish a name for myself in the field."

Kotara won district and state competitions by exhibiting "exemplary scenarios in law enforcement practice," said Stan Parker, the youth's law enforcement course teacher and a sergeant with the Big Spring Police Department.

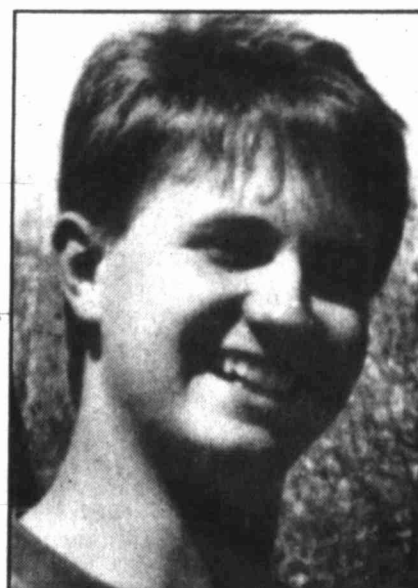

"There are people who for years have wanted to (compete in law enforcement). It's a relatively new competition compared to the others (like auto mechanics or cosmetology)," Parker said. "As an instructor, it's like (state competition) is the divisional championship football game, and (national competition) is the Super Bowl."

Along with Kotara, fellow competitor and senior Tony Taylor won third place in Law Enforcement Technical Information at the state level.

"It was a good educational experience. If I decided to go into law enforcement, I can know what to expect," Taylor said. "Through our instructor's own experience, he was able to give us hands on experience."

PARKER

Parker, an eight-year BSPD veteran, has instructed students in law enforcement practice, including "build and search" schooling, for the last two years.

Parker said local students (about 24 take the high school course) had an advantage in preparing for competition because the department volunteered time and expertise to help the seniors.

Other officers donating their time to instruct students were: Sgt. Scott Griffin, search and seizure; patrol officer Gilbert Barraza, defense tactics; and patrol officer Mark Couch, report writing.

"It's a team effort. We spend a lot of time after hours, practicing different procedures," Parker said. Instruction includes evidence collection, fingerprinting, arresting and photographing.

Parker added, "(Students) would never usually see this until they got into the police academy."

A member of student council, Key Club and Drug Free Youth in Texas (D-FY-IT), Kotara is the son of David and Debbie Bagnall, a local machinist and homemaker, respectively.

He has two sisters Amber, 13, and Brandy, 7. Taylor is the son of Don Taylor, a county employee, and Betty Taylor, a bank employee.

Subcommittee endorses bill relaxing school regulations

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — A House subcommittee has endorsed legislation that would shorten the school year, abolish a merit pay system for teachers and allow larger classes in elementary grades.

"I hope this accomplishes much-needed regulatory relief to our school districts," said Rep. Paul Sadler, D-Henderson, chairman of the House Public Education subcommittee.

Sadler said the bill is designed "to give greater flexibility" to districts.

"We love it," said Margaret LaMontagne, lobbyist for the Texas Association of School Boards. She said the measure would give school districts more flexibility "to live within their means." Organizations representing school administrators also support the bill.

But some groups fear the legislation is a retreat from significant state-ordered educational reforms of recent years.

The Texas Classroom Teachers Association and the Texas Federation of Teachers oppose the bill, primarily because it would weaken the 1984 state law prohibiting more than 22 students in any kindergarten through fourth-grade class.

Big districts will support finance bill

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — Texas' largest school districts said Monday they support the three May 1 ballot proposals to redistribute some local school tax money, restrict unfunded education mandates and use state bonds to help build classrooms.

"We believe that they will help to bring some stability to Texas school finance," said Hal Guthrie, superintendent of Houston's Spring Branch Independent School District. He is president of the Texas School Alliance.

"Our school districts and employees need to be focused on teaching and learning, rather than on an uncertain future that's clouded by possible public school closings," Guthrie said.

The alliance includes the school districts of Abilene, Amarillo, Arlington, Austin, Corpus Christi, Cypress-Fairbanks, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston, Garland, Irving, Lubbock, North East in San Antonio, San Antonio, Waco, Wichita Falls and Ysleta. More than 1 million students are enrolled in the districts, out of about 3.4 million in Texas.

Voting begins April 12 for the May 1 ballot, which includes the three school proposals along with the U.S. Senate race. The school proposals are:

— Proposition 1, which would allow some school property tax money to be shifted from wealthier to poorer school districts. It's meant to help meet a Texas Supreme Court order for lawmakers to make similar revenue available to school districts that tax at similar rates.

— Proposition 2, which would keep school districts from having to comply with state educational mandates that are not funded by the state and are enacted after Dec. 31. There would be exceptions for mandates imposed to comply with the state constitution or federal law, or enacted by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature.

— Proposition 3, which would provide for up to $750 million in state general obligation or revenue bonds to help school districts build and renovate facilities.

Most attention has focused on Proposition 1, which has been endorsed by a number of other school groups. The only major state teachers' group against the measure is the Association of Texas Professional Educators, which prefers a state income tax.

Republican leaders also oppose Proposition 1. A number say it would cause property-tax increases and not guarantee an end to the court battle over school funding.

Dallas council taking aim on Texas-OU weekend fun

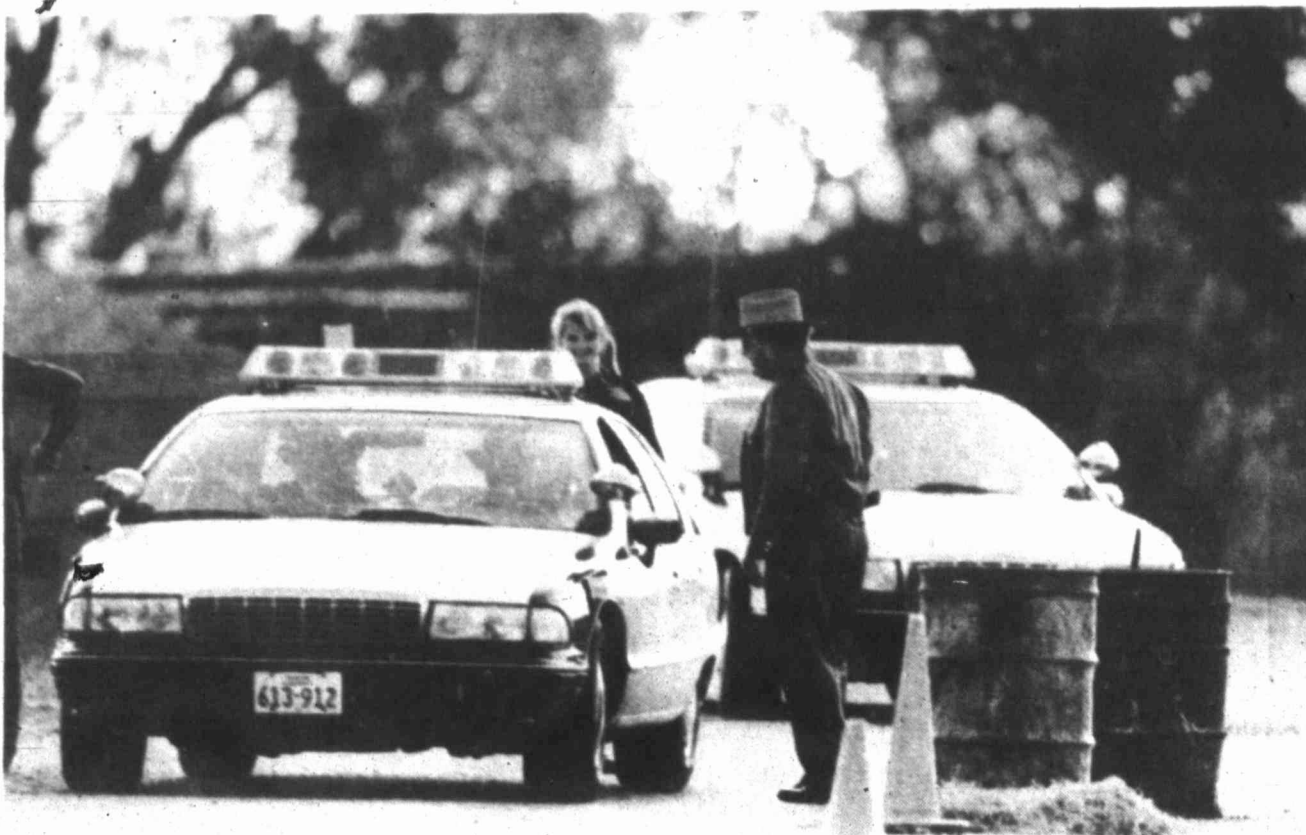

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — The burnt orange and maroon masses that swarm downtown Dallas streets for the annual Texas-Oklahoma football game may have to find a new place for their pre-game festivities.

The Dallas City Council's public safety committee on Monday received a proposal that could completely change the way the weekend has been celebrated for several decades.

The proposal is a response to violence during last year's Texas-OU weekend and to an ill-fated Super Bowl victory parade in the same downtown area.

The plan, which includes keeping several traffic lights green,

FBI says heaviest fire lasted for two minutes

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — The firefight that led to a 38-day standoff between federal agents and a religious cult lasted for two furious minutes, authorities now say, a departure from previous portrayals of a steady 45-minute barrage.

"We estimate that all of the injuries suffered to our agents and the four fatalities all occurred within approximately the first two minutes of the firefight," David Troy, intelligence chief of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said Monday.

"That's an estimation. That's not an absolute. But we estimate in the first two minutes all of our injuries and the four fatalities actually occurred."

From that point on, it was a standoff situation where our people were pinned down. Original accounts of the Feb. 28 clash between Branch Davidian cult members and federal agents indicated 45 minutes of steady gunfire. Four ATF agents and at least two cult members died in the battle as ATF agents attempted to serve search and arrest warrants at the compound.

Authorities on Monday again discounted claims by attorneys Dick DeGuerni and Jack Zimmermann, who are representing cult leader David Koresh and second-in-command Steve Schneider, that ATF agents were captured during the raid.

"That's totally false," said ATF agent David Troy.

Federal negotiators and the two attorneys had expressed optimism that Koresh's followers would end the standoff after Passover.

The Jewish observance of Passover began Monday night, although federal negotiators were uncertain about when the cult actually begins its celebration of its highest holy day and how long it lasts.

"After Passover can be an indefinite period of time," said FBI agent Dick Swensen. "I don't have any faith whatsoever in any specific time frame that David has laid out to anybody."

Federal agents said Monday they will likely try to negotiate with Koresh through Passover. Zimmermann on Sunday suggested that the cult be left alone during the holiday.

Cult members were on the verge of surrendering last Thursday, when the attorneys spent eight hours with the group.

But Zimmermann said Monday, "They needed to discuss among themselves and ensure that this logical decision that was in compliance with the secular law was also in compliance with their spiritual law."

Separately, a religious fanatic, identified as Jesse Amen of California, who scammed past law officers and entered the compound on March 26 was being held in the McLennan County Jail without bail Monday on a charge of interfering with the duty of a police officer.

Swensen said the man provided "zero" information about his 10 days with cultists. "Mr. Amen made no sense about anything we discussed," the agent said.

Amen was the 36th person, including 21 children, to leave the cult since the standoff began. By Koresh's count, that leaves 96 people inside, including 17 children.

Mother, daughter among five held in murder-for-hire

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH — Five people, including a mother and daughter, have been arrested in a murder-for-hire plot that ended with the slaying of a man last month on a secluded Tarrant County road, police say.

The mother-and daughter team hired a one-time Bible student for $1,250 to kill Michael Royster, 28. He was found shot to death March 24.

Sheila Royster, 23, and her mother, Emma Harmon, 49, hired David Prater, 21, his roommate, and another man who has been arrested in Oklahoma to kill Royster so they could collect on Michael Royster's life insurance worth $56,000, according to police records.

About one month before his death, Sheila Royster had been made beneficiary to the policy.

"The paperwork was done to change the beneficiary to her," Detective Danny LaRue said. "We're checking into the validity of Michael Royster's signature."

The two women are being held in the Tarrant County Jail in lieu of bond of $500,000 each.

Prater, who once said he wanted to be a minister, is jailed in lieu of $500,000 on a capital murder charge. Prater's roommate, Bobby Joe Humphrey, has been charged with conspiracy to commit capital murder and is being held in lieu of $100,000 bond.

A 19-year-old man, identified in arrest affidavits as the "go-between" in the plan, was arrested Monday in Oklahoma. Officials plan to charge him with capital murder.

No other arrests are expected, LaRue said.

James Royster said that his son's wife maintained a tight rein on Michael, including sharing a cramped three-bedroom, two-bath duplex in suburban Kennedale with her parents and brother.

James Royster said he asked his son several times to leave his wife. "When police told me (about the arrests), I wasn't surprised," said Royster, who is now providing a home for his grandsons, ages 2 and 4, the children of Sheila and Michael Royster.

Sheila Royster's father, Dan Harmon, said that he allowed the family to live with him for the last four years because, because although Michael Royster had a good job, his son-in-law felt he couldn't afford his own home.

Prater has given police a statement about the killing, according to information on an arrest warrant.

But Prater told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that the information in the warrant is false.

"I knew nothing about this until the police picked me and had a confession all made up," Prater said. "As far as I know, they got somebody to think that they know who did it."

Police say that Prater was introduced to Michael Royster's wife by the man in the Oklahoma jail who was also promised $1,250 for his part. The man is reportedly a friend of the Sheila Royster's family.

According to arrest affidavits, Sheila Royster, Emma Harmon, Prater and Humphrey met three times in the week before the shooting and mapped out a plan.

American shippers may receive a large chunk of Russia's aid money

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Russia may get less corn, wheat and other food aid from the United States because of requirements that U.S. merchant vessels ship the goods.

The $700 million in Food for Progress aid that President Clinton promised Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Sunday includes shipping costs. The law governing the kind of aid proposed requires that three-quarters of the goods be shipped on U.S.-flag vessels.

But using U.S.-flag vessels instead of foreign carriers can more than double the shipping costs because of higher wages, more stringent regulations and a less efficient fleet. The requirement is intended to keep a U.S. merchant fleet ready for national defense.

An Agriculture Department official estimated that shipping will account for close to 30 percent of the aid — $210 million — based on a shipping rate of $70 per ton. But the official, who spoke Monday on condition of anonymity, said the cost could rise.

A grain export official said he has seen rates of $85 per ton.

"The worst-case scenario would indicate roughly 40 percent of the total spent on shipping, which I think would raise some eyebrows, including the president's," said Steve McCoy, president of the North American Export Grain Association.

The most recent rates quoted by the Transportation Department's Maritime Administration put costs at $25 to $28 per metric ton for foreign vessels and $57 to $70 for those with U.S. flags.

Supporters of the preference maintain that the spending creates jobs and tax revenues in the United States. They argue that other countries subsidize their fleets as well.

The administration gave few details Monday of its plans to sell Russia farm goods under Food for Progress, which allows rock-bottom interest rates, extended repayment periods and a six- or seven-year grace period for payments.

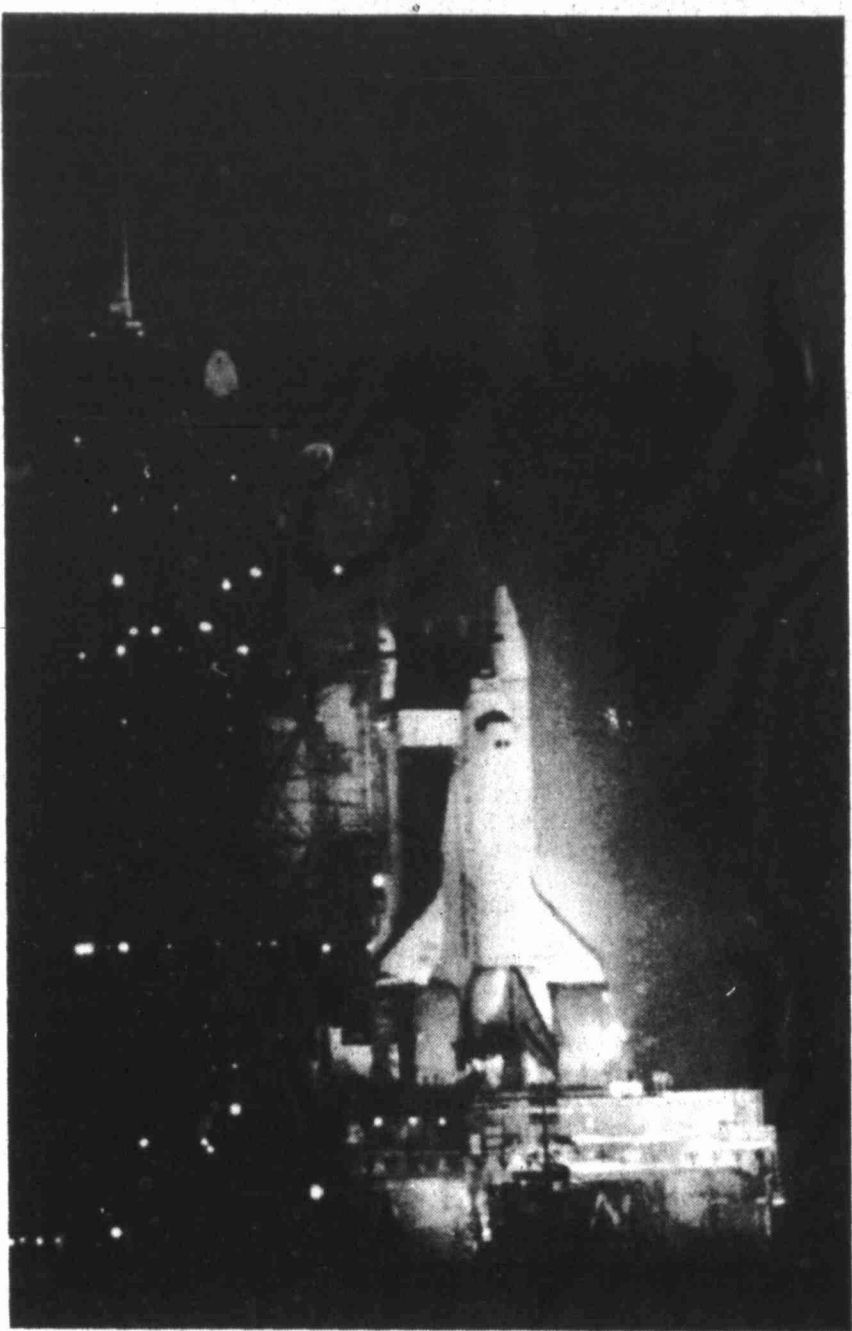

The administration also called for sending Russia an additional $194 million in direct food grants, mostly through private charities.

Under Food for Progress, U.S. goods are bought and sold in the private sector, where the proceeds can be used, for example, to build a farm and food-processing economy, such as constructing a bakery.

Because the Agriculture Department can borrow to buy the farm goods, Congress doesn't have to appropriate the full $700 million.

Congress will, however, have to lift the $30 million cap on freight costs the Agriculture Department can pay this year.

How much food the Russians can buy depends on the market.

The Space Shuttle Discovery is surrounded by water vapor on Launch Pad 39-B after NASA computers halted the countdown with 11 seconds to go before launch. It was the second time in two weeks that a shuttle countdown ended abruptly in the final few seconds before liftoff.

Discovery launch countdown halts with 11 seconds

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Discovery was loaded up and ready to go today on a mission to study the Earth's protective ozone layer, but with only seconds left before liftoff the computers said no.

Computer data indicated a valve had not closed. NASA engineer Stuart McClung said if the shuttle had blasted off with the valve open, hydrogen fuel could have spilled out of the orbiter and ignited, causing an explosion.

He added, however, that engineers think the valve did close properly, "despite the computer readings, and that a bad circuit might be to blame."

This is the second time in two weeks that a shuttle countdown has ended abruptly in the final few seconds before launch. Columbia's main engines shut down three seconds before liftoff on March 22.

Discovery's three main engines were less than five seconds away from igniting this morning when on-board computers detected a problem with the valve in the main propulsion system. The countdown had stopped automatically with 11 seconds to go.

"The system worked just like it was supposed to — again," McClung said.

The four men and one woman aboard Discovery appeared frustrated and forced smiles as they emerged from the shuttle about 45 minutes after the countdown stopped.

"It was a noble attempt," launch controller James Toohey told the astronauts. "We'll see you another day."

Deputy shuttle director Brewster Shaw another launch attempt could come as early as Thursday should the problem simply require a change in computer programming.

But if technicians have to enter the engine compartment for repairs, liftoff could be delayed until next week, Shaw said.

"We've had a couple of relatively minor hardware problems, which is to be expected in a program of this complexity," a testy Shaw told reporters. "We'll deal with those and then we'll go fly."

Immediately after the countdown was halted, NASA sprayed water up at Discovery's three main engines to keep them cool and began draining the more than 500,000 gallons of fuel from the external tank.

Just hours before Discovery's countdown ended in failure, shuttle director Thomas Utsumi acknowledged that NASA has "hit a surge of problems" in recent weeks.

"What's behind it?" he asked, throwing up his hands. "Human factor?"

Discovery was supposed to lift off at 1:32 a.m. EDT, but NASA held the clock at the nine-minute mark for an hour because of high crosswinds and a problem with a temperature sensor for an engine valve.

Despite Air Force reports that the crosswinds still exceeded safety limits, launch officials resumed the countdown after resolving the sensor problem and were stunned when the countdown clocks automatically stopped 11 seconds before liftoff.

Only one shuttle has gone into orbit so far in 1993, a year in which NASA had planned to fly eight missions. Columbia's science mission was pushed into late April after last month's aborted takeoff.

Discovery's eight-day flight was to be the second in a series of atmospheric research projects by NASA.

Scientists fear the stratospheric ozone layer, a shield against dangerous ultraviolet rays, is being consumed by human-made pollutants and possibly volcanic gases.

It was unclear how the delay would affect the experiments; scientists wanted to launch as early as possible in April for optimal ozone measurements.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Sarajevo marked its first anniversary of war today with peace for Bosnia seeming as remote as ever and a U.N. aid convoy snaking slowly toward a desperate Muslim enclave.

Bosnia's military commander said he was pulling out of talks with Serb and Croat military leaders because of a Serb offensive around the government-held eastern enclave, Srebrenica.

After a delay on the Serb-Bosnian border, supposedly because of a local holiday, a U.N. relief convoy headed across the Drina River into war-ravaged territory, said Peter Kessler, a U.N. official in Zagreb, Croatia.

He said he expected the 18 trucks to reach Srebrenica today. The trucks are carrying food, detergent and blankets and it was hoped that they would evacuate sick and wounded on the return trip.

The convoy is the first of what U.N. officials hope will be daily convoys to Srebrenica, where the population has swelled from 6,000 to 30,000 as Muslim refugees have fled Serb attacks in surrounding communities.

U.N. officials say disease and hunger are rife in Srebrenica.

Today is considered the first anniversary of the war. Last April 6, the United Nations recognized the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and Serbs who oppose the state's independence drive opened fire on peace demonstrators.

On Monday, the Sarajevo government raised its death toll, saying more than 200,000 people have been killed or are missing. It had been reporting 134,000 dead or missing, and did not explain the large increase.

Sarajevo was sunny and mainly quiet today, but sniper fire killed one soldier and wounded a civilian.

Bosnian chief of staff Gen. Sefer Halilovic had planned to meet on neutral ground at Sarajevo's U.N.-controlled airport with his Serb and Croat counterparts to discuss opening besieged cities and other measures.

But the Bosnian military command said in a letter to the U.N. peacekeeping command that Halilovic would not attend for moral reasons.

The letter spoke of "the unbelievable continuation of the aggression on ... Srebrenica," said Bosnian radio in a report monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp.

BH Press, Bosnia's news agency, said Monday that Serbs were attacking a few miles from Srebrenica with artillery, rocket launchers and helicopters. There was no independent confirmation but a U.N. official said there was a danger Srebrenica could fall to the Serbs.

In Washington, Secretary of State Warren Christopher said Monday that the United States will soon press for allowing arms shipments to Bosnian Muslims if Serbs continue to reject U.N. peace efforts.

But Lord Owen, the European Community's special envoy on Yugoslavia, criticized the idea, calling instead at a meeting of EC foreign ministers in Luxembourg for "relentless pressure" on the Serbs.

Sarajevo's ordeal can be partially understood in numbers: 8,250 killed, including 2,500 children; 35,000 apartments damaged or destroyed; 75 percent of the city's old architecture in ruins; 54,000 tons of humanitarian aid brought in to keep the city alive.

But row upon row of wooden grave markers filling Ljubic Cemetery and the field of the nearby soccer stadium are a more poignant reminder.

For a year now, residents of Sarajevo have been dodging sniper bullets, burying loved ones and struggling to find food, water and shelter.

They live day to day, fighting for survival in the ruins of their city, existing on U.N. handouts and an unshaken belief that Serb attackers will never take the capital.

People try to carry on in many ways

Loose cannons giving Germany's military leaders rough headache

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — Lothar Luft got life for killing his wife, girlfriend and mother-in-law. Seven years later, he got out of prison, riding through its broken gates in a stolen armored personnel carrier.

Hours later and 190 miles away, thieves broke into three rail cars laden with thousands of guns. They selected 50 automatic weapons and fled.

The hapless victim of these two Sunday crimes was the German army, which is being forced to explain why it seems to be leaking military equipment.

Defense Ministry spokesman Hans-Dieter Wichter told reporters in Bonn on Monday that thefts do happen occasionally.

"One cannot prevent such things from going astray from time to time," he said. The thefts were the latest in a nation bristling with leftover armaments from the departing Soviet army and the defunct East German military.

Last month, authorities raided an east German apartment and found Soviet aircraft rockets.

On Dec. 20, armed robbers overpowered three guards at a German army base near Potsdam and stole a small arsenal of machine guns, rifles and bazookas.

In September, Berlin police found anti-tank weapons, hand grenades and guns stockpiled by rightist extremists.

The black market is flooded with such weapons, and there are suspicions some are being funneled to former Yugoslavia.

The 20-ton armored personnel carrier that freed Luft was taken from a west German garrison near Marburg, north of Frankfurt. The thief used bolt cutters to break a security lock.

Its unknown driver then blasted through four heavy, metal gates at Schwalmstadt prison. The 52-year-old Luft, who staged his killing spree in 1986, quickly hopped inside the tank-like vehicle.

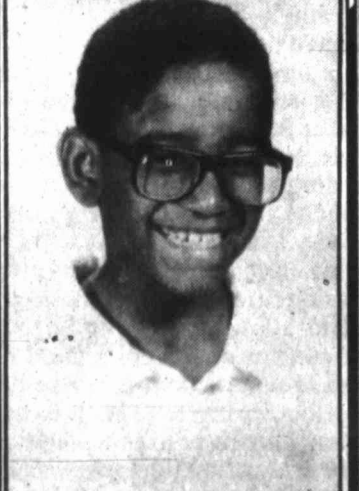

The APC was found abandoned along a highway nearby, with no sign of Luft or driver.

Justice Minister Christine Hohmann-Dennhardt defended the prison's security.

"No prison is (defensible) against a military attack," she said.

Officials in Hesse state, where the prison break occurred, and the German Bundeswehrverband, an association of service people, demanded that military officials toughen security at army bases.

The spectacular prison break overshadowed the weapons theft that took place later Sunday evening at a German army base just south of Berlin.

Name calling has no place in open debate

"Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me."

The sad truth about that little saying we all used as children was words did hurt. Words can cut to the bone quicker than any knife, bruise worse than any stone.

That's why we need to be careful about the words used to lash back at someone who doesn't hold the same opinion as we do.

Name calling and harassing phone calls don't have a place in free speech. In fact, they both serve to undermine the true spirit of the amendment. Name calling also only serves to create tensions and hard feelings that are not soon forgotten. And, it could inhibit someone speaking out in the future.

That is not something we want here in Big Spring or in the United States. The free flow of ideas and thoughts can only help us find a solution that may be eluding us at the moment.

No matter the issue, everyone should be guaranteed the right to speak their minds, as they see the issue. Whether you agree with the opinion is your right, as it is your right to speak against it.

And, we need to feel secure in their homes about having spoken our minds.

But, sometimes we lose sight of the arguments and see only the personality speaking. But, we need to learn to get beyond the personalities and look at what is being said.

We need to agree to disagree.

History's impact felt

In reading an Associated Press story about the New London school explosion, I was struck with the notion that any of us can be directly affected by events that take place long before we were ever born.

In my case, there's absolutely no doubt my life was irreversibly changed at 3:15 p.m. March 18, 1937.

The explosion that literally disintegrated the new school building in New London that day killed 293 children, teachers and visitors. Two of those children were my mother's older sisters, Iva Jo and Naomi Smith.

As a result, I would never know an aunt or uncle. I have no first cousins.

Neither of my parents remember their siblings. They know only the solitude of having grown up as "only" children. My father's twin brother, Bobby, died of pneumonia when they were six months old.

Consequently, my mother and father were anguished whenever my two younger brothers and I would fight. They'd grown up lonely, and after having married, had sworn they wouldn't subject a child to the same loneliness they'd endured.

But it is not so much in the relationship with my parents that the New London explosion had a telling effect on my life, but that with my maternal grandparents, John and Inez Smith... we (Mark, Keith and I) have always called them Granny and Dad.

I know little of the explosion, myself. In fact, I learned more from that AP article than in the almost 29 years I had with my grandfather or the near 40 I've known my grandmother.

Come to think of it, I don't believe I ever heard Dad say anything about their having lived through the loss of two daughters in the worst public school disaster in our nation's history. Granny only mentioned it once at any length. A couple of years ago, the subject was broached. Even after more than 50 years, it was obviously a painful subject for her to discuss, and Mark, Keith and I got a glimpse of why she and Dad had always spent virtually all their time doing their best to spoil us.

Tears appeared almost imme-

diately when she noted that for years nobody had an official explanation for what happened. She remembered searching in vain for her two little girls, who were nine and seven years old.

My mother, then three, was left with an elderly neighbor as Granny and other women throughout the small East Texas town streamed to the school's ruins.

It was less than an hour before Dad and the other men working in the nearby oil fields arrived to help their wives. Granny said they found Naomi pretty quickly. She apparently had died almost instantly and her body taken to a nearby building that had been set up as a temporary morgue.

What followed, and was clearly more painful for my grandparents, was a frustrating search of area hospitals for Iva Jo. It wasn't until three days after the blast that officials contacted Granny and Dad.

Iva Jo had survived the blast and been rushed to the Kilgore hospital, and was later transferred to a Longview facility. She had lived for more than a day after the blast.

But perhaps the true measure of just how haunted my wonderful grandmother has always been by the explosion came a little more than a year ago when she sold her home in Whitesboro and moved into a smaller place near my parents in Paris.

As we were going through several boxes packed away in the attic, I came across a beautiful framed picture of two little girls. The frame itself was almost a work of art and featured rounded glass.

My mother said she'd never seen it, but guessed correctly that it was her two sisters. When she asked Granny about it, she said, "You can have it if you want it. I can't have it around me... it's their eyes... they keep following me around the room."

There's this old joke. A guy is walking on a very dark street. As he hears the glow of a street light, he sees a drunken friend bent over and peering at the sidewalk.

"What are you doing?" he asks.

"I dropped my money and I'm looking for it," the drunken friend says.

"I'll help you look," the guy says. And the two of them wander in circles, looking for the money.

Finally, the guy says: "You're sure you dropped it here?"

"No," the drunk friend says, pointing down the dark street. "I dropped it back there."

"Then why were you looking for it here?" says the guy.

"Because," the drunk says, "there's a streetlight here and it's too dark to see back there."

This story came to mind when the Clinton administration came out with its latest plan to make us a happier, healthier society.

Recognizing that large numbers of preschool children don't get immunized against diseases, the White House came up with a new program.

It wants the federal government to provide free vaccines for every child in America -- rich, middle-class or poor.

Regardless of your income level, your child would receive the vaccines free. If you have money or medical coverage, the doctor could still charge a fee for wielding the needle. If you are poor, everything would be free.

Of course, the word "free" is used loosely in this case -- sort of the way it is tossed around by advertising people, con men and politicians.

In fact, they might not even

Mike Royko

It won't be free. The government will buy the vaccines with tax dollars. More than $1 billion a year. But to the high rollers in Washington, tax dollars and "free" often mean the same thing.

The logic behind this plan is that large numbers of children don't get vaccinated because the vaccine costs too much.

So President Clinton's solution is to make the federal government the only buyer of vaccine, so it could negotiate a better price. Then it would make the vaccine available to all children.

That's very warmhearted, and it's what we would expect from a lot of former '60s activists who still have their big government game plans and wish lists.

The only flaw in this solution is that it isn't addressing the real problem.

Yes, many children don't get needed immunization, primarily the vaccines that doctors recommend before the children enter school.

It's estimated that in some big cities, as few as 10 percent of inner-city preschool children get the necessary protection.

But the cost of the vaccine isn't the reason. In Chicago, for example, low-income children can get the shots free at city clinics.

In fact, they might not even have to go to clinics because medical vans go into low-income areas and offer curbside immunization service.

So what is the problem? I know it is politically incorrect and insensitive of me to say this, but I'll do it anyway.

The source of the immunization problem is the same as in the pathetic achievements of the inner-city schools.

The problem is the same as it is with the brutal rate of murder and other violence among young people in the cities.

The problem is the same as it is with the growing rate of child abuse and neglect.

As a bumper sticker might put it: "It's the stupid parents, stupid."

Those curbside medical vans I mentioned a moment ago? The Chicago Tribune recently had a report on what they deal with. As the story said of one of the health workers: "(She) has been cursed at, shot at and has had countless doors slammed in her face."

Later, it said: "The vans are staffed with a public health nurse, an investigator who screens the child's records and determines what shots are needed, and (a worker) whose job it is to persuade parents in public housing to bring their children downstairs for vaccinations."

... an investigator who travels with the vans said that although the free services are literally brought to people's doorsteps, it is tough to get them to cooperate."

That's not unique to Chicago. The same kind of ignorance, stupidity and neglect can be found in many parts of this country where free vaccines are offered.

Ask a pediatrician. The problem isn't in communities where people can afford to pay and do. It's where vaccines are already being offered free.

What is the Clinton solution? Let the federal government take over and give everybody in America "free" vaccines. Even those who don't need a handout and are already taking good care of their children. And even many of those who can already get it free but are rejecting it.

Good luck. But unless the government includes a plan to somehow persuade the indifferent, hostile or ignorant parents into rare acts of responsibility, it won't work.

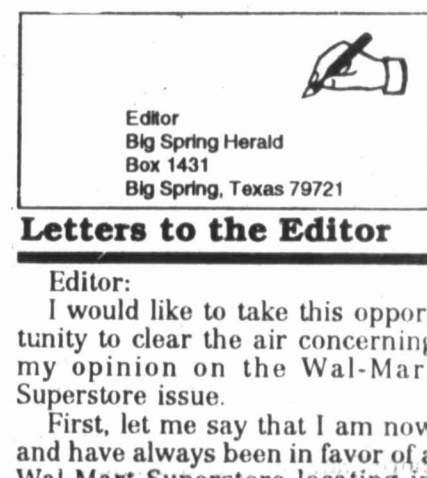

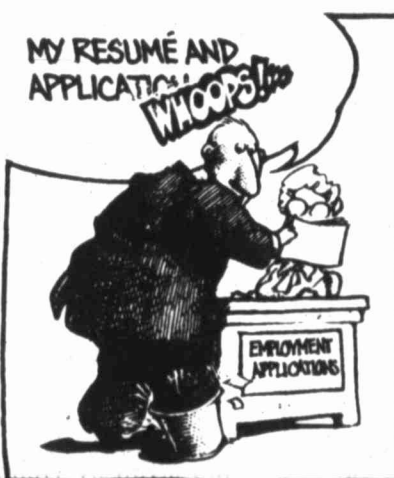

If that requires intimidation, so be it. Maybe these parents should be told that if they are receiving welfare or living in public housing, they either get their kids immunized by a given date or see their welfare checks and housing benefits cut off.

I'd even favor making it a criminal offense for a parent to ignore the opportunity to give a child needed immunization. If that isn't child neglect, what's your definition?

Is that harsh? Maybe, but so what? It's not nearly as harsh as needlessly exposing a child to disease.

But if you think anything will change because the government becomes a purchasing agent, while local government still has to grapple with the real problem, I have a suggestion.

Go help that drunk look for his money under the streetlight. (C) 1993 BY THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

We just don't 'gasp' anymore

Something seems a little wrong here.

If you flip through a week's worth of television listings, you will see numerous entertainment shows that deal with murder. Mysteries, true-crime dramas, cop shows -- murder is a staple of prime-time entertainment, and always has been. Check out the advertisements for the week's highly promoted shows. Count the number of guns that are pictured.

Stop into a bookstore and browse. Notice the proliferation of books that use murder as a theme. Fiction and nonfiction, hardback and paperback -- murder, as always, is a chief amusement.

Go to the movies. Watch the characters on the screen being murdered. Murdered to advance the plotlines, murdered to give the good guys someone to hunt down -- murder is as much a part of the moviegoing experience as popcorn or Dots.

So you're saying: What's new? You're saying: Entertainment has always been like this. Murder on TV, murder in books, murder on movie screens -- nothing has changed. Right?

Well, what has changed -- or so it would seem -- is the real world. Murder may always have been utilized to titillate the American public in search of entertainment, but murder was never so much a terrible part of everyday American life as it is now. The merchants of murder as entertainment aren't doing anything different from what they have done for decades -- they're serving up murder as something for people to gaze at as escapism fun.

The puzzling thing is that people still want to do the gazing. The numbers would argue otherwise.

Not entertainment-business numbers. Real numbers. At the Department of Justice in Washington, a crime index going back more than 30 years is maintained. In 1961, according to this index, there were 8,740 murders committed in the United States. In 1991, that number was 24,700. The number of violent crimes in 1961 was 289,390. In 1991 the number of violent crimes was 1,911,770.

City by city, you can see what has happened to our nation. The National Criminal Justice Reference Service in Rockville, Md., tracks murders in specific municipalities. When you look at the numbers, the pattern is distressingly clear: Murder, in real life, is a growth industry.

Which brings us back to the question: Why do we choose to amuse ourselves with murder in our entertainment media? A case could be made that once upon a time murder seemed foreign and exotic to most Americans, and a murder mystery, or a movie with murder as its main theme, provided vicarious thrills.

But now? With the sickening details of gruesome, everyday murders screaming at us from newspapers, taunting us from television newscasts? If entertainment is escape, why would we possibly choose stories of murder as a means for that escape? Murder is what we should be trying to get away from. During the Great Depression, Americans did not entertain themselves with tales of poverty -- they had quite enough poverty in their daily lives. So why should we, in murderous 1993 America, willingly choose murder as one of our prime amusements?

"Murder is a matter of course now," said Studs Terkel, the radio host, best-selling author and longtime observer of society. "It's accepted. It's a day-to-day activity."

Terkel is 80 years old now, which is one of the reasons I sought out his opinions on this matter. He has watched our culture for decades; he started going to the movies before the movies talked. Is there some reason he can think that Americans still would want to be entertained by murder?

"I think that in many ways we have become a necrophilic society," he said. "Murder has always been used to entertain, but in years past murder was a more unusual thing in society. It was distant from people's lives. It was part of the human condition, but an aberrant part of the human condition. Even the gangsters -- when it was Al Capone vs. Bugs Moran, the killing did not concern the average citizen. These were professional killers killing other professional killers. It was a distraction to be viewed from afar."

In the past, we heard about murder and we gasped. We don't gasp anymore. You don't gasp at something that's so familiar. So why do we still entertain ourselves with stories of murder? Maybe we're just like Pavlov's dogs. We hear the bell ring, and we're conditioned to react a certain way."

One thing you can be sure of: The bell will keep on ringing.

Letters to the Editor

Editor:
I would like to take this opportunity to clear the air concerning my opinion on the Wal-Mart Superstore issue.

First, let me say that I am now and have always been in favor of a Wal-Mart Superstore locating in Big Spring. Over the past week great concern has been expressed over the putting on hold of Wal-Mart's plans, the blame for this delay has been laid at the feet of the families that live close to the proposed area.

These people are guilty of nothing more than expressing their constitutional right of free speech. Please let me assure you that 30 people cannot change the mind of a major corporation like Wal-Mart, that's just not the way things are done in corporate America.

Over the past week, I have been contacted by many of you that want the Wal-Mart Superstore in Big Spring, please let me say that yes, I agree with you and yes the rest of the city council and the city staff agree with you. I have been working with our mayor and city manager on possible ways to safely route traffic in the proposed area, myself and many of the council members have met with Wal-Mart officials and I assure you that at no time did I hear a council member or city staff member say that we don't want or need the Wal-Mart Superstore.

I welcome any and all comments regarding this issue. I feel that everyone should try not to heat this issue up to the point that it tears the town apart. It has been brought to my attention that harassing phone calls are being placed to some of our citizens that possibly do not agree with the majority of the folks who live in Big Spring. This is no way for one Big Springer to treat the other, you both have the right to express your opinion and it is the city council's obligation to listen to these opinions and act accordingly.

I have seen nothing to indicate at this time that Wal-Mart will not build a superstore here. A superstore in Big Spring will be a great benefit to Big Spring and the surrounding area. As it will cost a lot of money to build I think you can see why Wal-Mart might want to go slow and make sure they are spending 40 million dollars on the right location here in Big Spring.

In conclusion I feel I should respond to a statement made in Friday's Big Spring Herald. It is true that my employer lives in the Coronado area, at no time past or present has he ever tried to influence me in my duties as a member of the Big Spring City Council. It is a pleasure serving you as a member of the city council. I welcome your input on this or any other issue. My home phone number is 263-6143. Thank you for your time.

Kidder leaves Howard to become Nevada aide

By MIKE BUTTS
Sports Editor

Howard College basketball coach Jeff Kidder says every move he's made in his nine years of coaching has been the right one. His latest may be the rightest one yet.

JEFF KIDDER

Houston head coach Pat Foster. The move comes just over a month after the 30-year-old Kidder finished his second season at Howard College.

"I love being a head basketball coach but my ultimate goal is to be a Division I head coach, and I thought that this way I could do it quicker," Kidder said Tuesday. "I'm struggling with leaving Howard because Howard College has been so good to me and we've had some success. I wouldn't be in this position if it hadn't been for Howard College taking a chance on me."

Both Foster, 53, and Kidder worked under Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton, Kidder as a student assistant from 86-89 when Sutton coached at Kentucky and Foster in the mid-'70s at Arkansas. The Howard coach visited the Nevada campus a week and a half ago. Kidder said he was the first one contacted about the position.

"I've known him for quite a long time," Foster said in a telephone interview from Houston. "It's not just something that came up all of a sudden. I've watched him go from one level to the next and I think he's proven what he can do as far as coaching and recruiting and organizing his own program. I think he has a great future in the game."

Nevada moved into the Big West conference with Nevada-Las Vegas this season. It finished the 1992-93 year at 9-17 and 4-14 in conference. Nevada has played Division I ball since 1969 and made the NCAA tournament in '84 and '85 by virtue of winning the Big Sky Conference.

Nevada's commitment to build a solid program was a major factor in Kidder's decision to go to Reno. He cites the school's move from the Big Sky to the Big West and their 11,140-seat basketball coliseum as evidence of its desire to upgrade the program.

"Everything that those (things) point to is they want to go big time and that's what kind of drew me out there," Kidder said. "They want to make that commitment."

Howard Athletic Director Royce Chadwick said Kidder had not turned in a written resignation as of Tuesday evening. But he has posted the opening and is taking applications for the job.

"We wish him the very best in his new Division I endeavor," Chadwick said.

Chadwick says Howard assistant Ronnie Dean will be considered for the position. Kidder preferred not to disclose his salary at Nevada.

Nevada averaged 4,427 fans per game last year. Part of Foster's contract is a $1 a head bonus — up to $4,500 per game — for every fan in attendance above 4,500.

Foster is planning on Kidder's ability and personality to help him earn the bonus.

"You can't replace character and you can't underestimate character, and I think that's what he's got," Foster said. "I'm really looking forward to working with him and trying to build this program. I think he can really give me a lot of help."

Howard sophomores Mark Davis and Marcus Albert have visited Nevada in the last week, Kidder said, adding that it would be "their decision" whether or not they wanted to attend the school.

Kidder followed Steve Green as Howard's head basketball coach in 1991. His two Howard teams went 47-13. The Hawks earned a berth in the Region V tournament this season with a second-place finish in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. They were ranked as high as fourth in the national junior college basketball poll. The Howard coach recruited Davis, a forward who was named WJAC player of the year this season.

Kidder began his college career with a three-year stint on Sutton's staff at Kentucky. He spent one year as a high school coach in Louisville, Ky., and one as assistant coach with West Texas State before coming to Big Spring.

"I'm 30 years old and I've been in college coaching for six years, and every decision I've made has been the right one," Kidder said.

Webber blunder hands Heels crown

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — A classic Final Four ended with an epic blunder.

North Carolina's national championship will forever be marked by one bonehead timeout call by Chris Webber with 11 seconds left, when Michigan had no timeouts remaining.

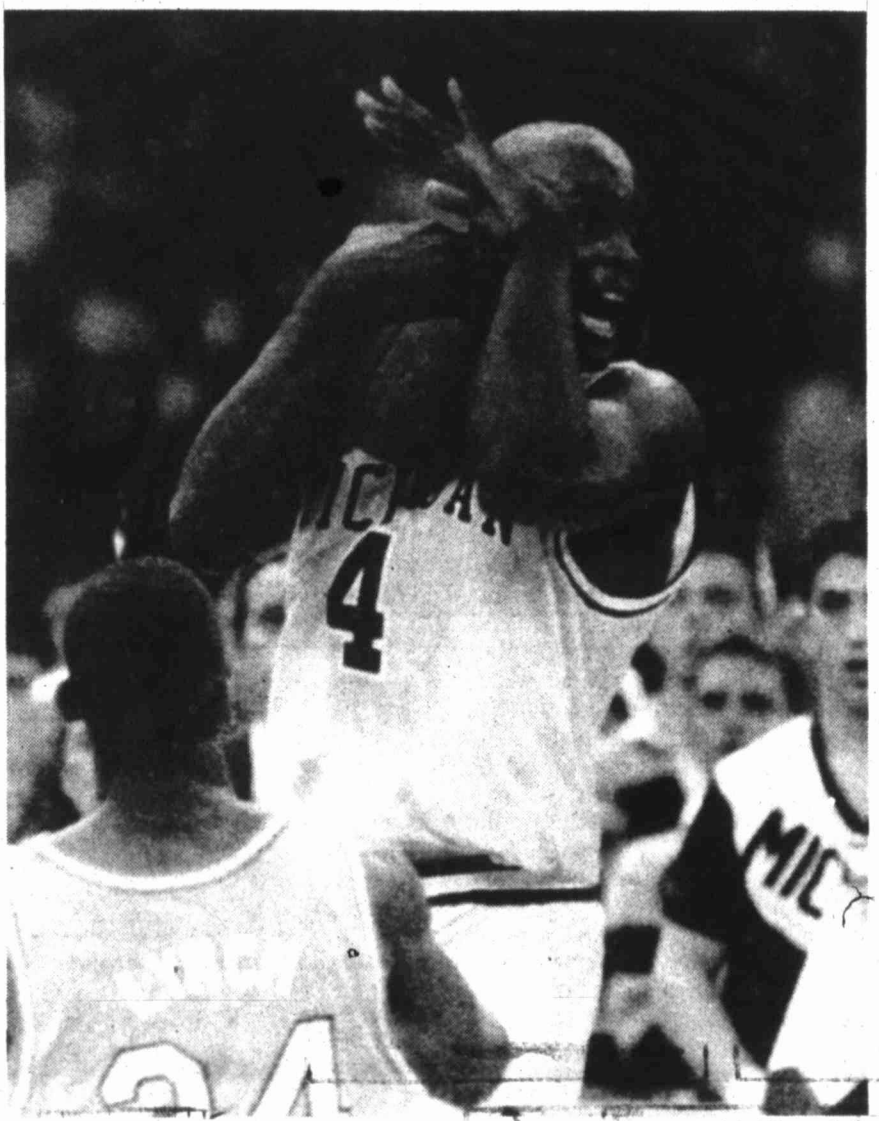

That call guaranteed North Carolina's victory, 77-71 Monday night, and overshadowed Dean Smith's ascendancy into the elite of coaching history. His second national title turned out oddly reminiscent of his first in 1982, a gift on the same Superdome court after a botched play at the end by Georgetown's Fred Brown.

The call, fairly or unfairly, reinforced Michigan's reputation as an undisciplined collection of stars, despite all the poise and resilience the Wolverines showed against Kentucky and North Carolina. And as wrong as it may be for Webber to shoulder that burden, he will always have to carry it even if no Michigan player showed more heart or gave greater effort than he did.

"I cost our team the game," Webber said, making no excuses for his mistake.

His call will be remembered more than his 23 points and 11 rebounds, more than the 25 points scored in brilliant outside shooting by North Carolina's Donald Williams or the 16 points scored inside by Eric Montross.

"It's so much a mental game," said Montross, who watched Webber's blunder from the sideline while waiting to get back in the game after a brief rest. "It's a terrible mistake, but at the same time I don't think that's an excuse."

Michigan's Chris Webber tries to call a time out during the final seconds of their NCAA championship game against North Carolina Monday in New Orleans. Michigan was out of time outs and was assessed a technical foul for Webber's error.

"I started doing flips on the side. I was sitting there at the scorer's table and I felt like I was break-dancing. For me, that's quite a feat." For nearly 40 minutes, they looked like mature NBA stars, pounding each other, playing rugged defense and superb offense, in a game that ended one of the few Final Fours to feature terrific games in both semis and the championship.

"You've got a lot of guys who are going to wind up in the NBA," said the 7-foot Montross, who surely will be one of them. "Webber's plenty ready for it right now. He just proved that tonight."

Unlike Duke's blowout of Michigan in the title game last year, this one was close all the way and had great runs by both teams. If not for Webber's mistake, the game very well could have gone into overtime.

Smith displayed his impeccable talent for sliding players on and off the court in a nonstop pressure attack, getting not only 12 points and 10 rebounds out of George Lynch but excellent defense by lesser-known Tar Heels like Kevin Salvadori and Henrik Rodl.

Michigan coach Steve Fisher never let his team drift, leading them back from a 48-40 deficit early in the second half to a 67-63 advantage with four minutes left.

Williams' 3-pointer and Montross' monster dunk opened and closed a 9-point run that gave North Carolina a 72-67 lead with 1:03 left. But a jumper by Ray Jackson and an offensive rebound and layup by Webber closed it to 72-71 with 36 seconds to go.

Pat Sullivan made it 73-71 when he hit one of two free throws with 20 seconds to go. Webber pulled down the rebound of the missed second shot and took off downcourt as if determined to leap the length of the floor for a game-tying dunk. North Carolina players and coaches screamed that he traveled, but no whistle blew.

Texas bashes Baltimore; Phils edge Astros

BALTIMORE — It was a season opener unlike any other.

For the first time Monday, a Democrat president opened the season in Baltimore by throwing out the first ball.

Then 36-year-old Rick Sutcliffe became the oldest pitcher in Orioles' history to start an opener, and he subsequently became the first Oriole to lose on opening day at Camden Yards.

Getting two homers apiece from Juan Gonzalez and Dean Palmer, the Texas Rangers beat Baltimore 7-4.

Before the game, the Rev. Jesse Jackson headed an unprecedented demonstration outside the ballpark to protest minority hiring practices in major league baseball.

"I'm not trying to get the ball-players to boycott or anything like that," Jackson said. "(But) once their playing days are over, their money is counterfeit. We want options for them beyond the playing field."

The game itself was a demonstration of the Rangers' power.

"You cannot pitch around our lineup," said Kevin Kennedy, now 1-0 as a major league manager. "Anybody in our lineup can hurt you; we believe we have the people."

"I got the ball up in the strike zone the whole game," said Sutcliffe, who gave up three homers. "I was constantly up. There are some clubs that you get away with high fastballs, but this wasn't one of them. Give them credit, they throw a pretty good lineup at you."

President Clinton, the first Democrat from the White House since Jimmy Carter to throw out a first ball, borrowed the glove of Baltimore's Brady Anderson — also a left-hander. Clinton took the safe approach and positioned himself in front of the mound before letting loose a high floater that brought Orioles catcher Chris Hoiles to his feet.

Carter watched Baltimore lose the seventh game of the 1979 World Series, and Clinton didn't fare any better — although he did make a few new friends.

"I got my picture taken with him, shook his hand ... He even used my bathroom," Baltimore manager Johnny Oates said. "He walked through my door and said, 'Where's the john?' and I said, 'I'm right here.'"

Clinton wore an Orioles jacket for his ceremonial pitch, causing Kennedy to suggest a change in the president's wardrobe.

"I told him he needed a Texas Rangers jacket," Kennedy said. "Somebody is going to send him one."

PHILLIES 3, ASTROS 1
HOUSTON — Doug Drabek wore a different uniform but he still got the same respect from the Philadelphia Phillies.

The Phillies could afford to be gracious since their own Terry Mulholland pitched a complete game four-hitter to beat the Astros 3-1 Monday night, snapping Drabek's domination over the Phillies.

Drabek, who signed a four-year $19.5 million contract in December to leave Pittsburgh to become the Astros' ace, gave up four hits over eight innings but allowed two runs in the fourth inning that cost him the game.

"The guy pitched a helluva game, no different than he always did," Phillies catcher Darren Daulton said of Drabek. "Against that guy, you have to scratch and claw to get runs. I like that guy. I wish I could catch him."

Drabek still has a 13-6 career record against the Phillies but his Astros teammates weren't able to get him enough runs to continue the streak.

Drabek started the game with a 9-1 record in his last 12 starts, including a three-game winning streak. But his 1990 Cy Young Award didn't count for much on Monday night.

"You can't ask anyone to pitch any better than that," Daulton said of Mulholland. "That's one of the best games he's ever thrown. He's been our workhorse in the past. He gets over all the adversity that we throw at him."

Houston took the lead in the first inning when Craig Biggio got an infield hit, went to second on a walk and took third on Eric Anthony's fly to center field. He scored on shortstop Juan Bell's error.

That was all the support Drabek's teammates could give him. Philadelphia provided a little extra to get the victory.

BSHS hosts track meet

The Big Spring Relays, sponsored by the American Business Club, will be held Thursday at Blankenship Field.

More than 30 boys' and girls' track teams in three divisions will participate in the meet, which begins with preliminaries at 2:30 p.m.; finals are slated to begin at 8 p.m.

Aside from Big Spring, area and District 3-4A teams scheduled to compete include Coahoma, Stanton, Garden City, Monahans, Pecos, San Angelo Lake View, Fort Stockton, Snyder, Lamesa and Greenwood.

Steers travel to Sweetwater

The Big Spring Steers take their 25-inning shutout streak to Sweetwater today to battle the Mustangs in a District 3-4A game at 5 p.m. The Steers are in first place in district at 4-0. Sweetwater is fifth at 1-3, 8-10 overall. The game will be broadcast on KBST (1490 AM).

Hale to teach safety course

A course in hunter education will be offered from 6-10 p.m. April 14-17 in Big Spring, said Boyce Hale, chief hunter education instructor for this area.

Texas Parks and Wildlife Department regulations require persons born during the period of Sept. 2, 1971 to Aug. 31, 1973 must have successfully completed the course in order to hunt in Texas. By Sept. 1, all persons born on or after Sept. 2, 1971 must have completed the course.

The course is open to all and includes instruction in rifle, shotgun and bowhunting handling and safety; outdoor responsibility and ethics; laws and regulations; conservation; hunting traditions; wildlife identification; field care of game; wilderness first aid and survival; and live-fire exercises, Hale said.

For more information, contact Hale at 267-6957 or Dibrells Gun Shop at 267-7891.

Girls softball extends signups

The Big Spring United Girls Softball Association has extended its registration (at H&R Block or Neal's Sporting Goods) to April 10th. Call Albert Alvarez (267-5639) or Linda Marino (263-0614).

Tourney slated for April 16-18

The sixth annual Pop-up Softball Tournament is April 16-18 in Stanton. Entry fee is $100. Call Tommy Ramos 756-3470 or Orlando Esparza at 683-4224 (daytime) or 756-3825 (night).

Step aerobics classes offered

Step aerobic classes are now open for enrollment at the First Baptist Church Family Center. Morning classes meet on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 9 a.m. and the two evening classes meet on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at 5 and 6 p.m. Child care is provided for all three courses.

Correction

A sentence was omitted in Brenda Brooks' editorial column in the Big Spring Herald's Monday edition. The following is the complete paragraph:

But that kind of thinking is fundamentally flawed. It's based on power and position rather than on principle. Win/win is based on the paradigm that there is plenty for everyone, that one person's success is not achieved at the expense or exclusion of the success of others.

Peru's judicial system tough on all

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIMA, Peru — University professor Alvaro Villavicencio was boarding a Miami-bound flight at Lima's international airport to visit his ailing mother when he felt a tap on his shoulder.

He was arrested for terrorism. The evidence: he taught 30 years ago at the same university as Shining Path guerrilla leader Abimael Gutierrez, then a philosophy professor.

Four months later, Villavicencio is still in jail awaiting trial. The 58-year-old professor could get up to 20 years in prison.

"Alvaro has aged 10 years during this ordeal. He's emotionally broken," his wife Mercedes said. "It's been a nightmare for all of us."

Like dozens of other Peruvians in the wrong place at the wrong time, Villavicencio has been swept up by a judicial system that has been widely criticized for condemning innocent and guilty alike.

"The present definition of terrorism is so broad now that anyone could be found guilty," said Pablo Rojas, head of the independent Human Rights Commission.

President Alberto Fujimori drafted a tough legal framework shortly after dissolving congress and shutting down the country's corrupt and inefficient judiciary one year ago. He said at the time that frightened judges had released more than 200 rebels from prison since he took office in July 1990.

In the months that followed, Fujimori decreed life sentences for guerrillas and established secret courts to try them so judges could work without intimidation.

Since then, secret military and civilian courts have sentenced some 270 Peruvians to prison sentences ranging from 10 years to life. Their trials have taken only a few days and just four defendants have been found innocent.

Daniel Espichan, government prosecutor for terrorism cases, said there was enough evidence against those detained to have them tried.

"It's possible that a few mistakes are being made along the way," Espichan said. "But the system is not an inquisition as it's been made out to be. Both the president and I are concerned about these cases."

The most widely-publicized summary trial was that of Guzman, whose 13-year insurgency has claimed more than 25,000 lives on both sides. Guzman was sentenced in early October to life in prison after a 10-day trial.

Not all cases are so clear-cut. Like Villavicencio, some 60 others have been arrested on circumstantial evidence, according to human rights groups.

In January, police arrested 31-year-old photographer Gisela Gutierrez. The evidence against her? Having worked two weeks as a journalism student at the pro-rebel newspaper El Diario in 1988. Most journalism students in Peru accept short contracts in the news media to gain experience.

Gutierrez now faces 20 years in prison.

"Gisela always condemned the Shining Path's violent methods. It's obvious she's innocent," her sister Lourdes said. "But the way the judiciary works now, I doubt Gisela will get a fair trial."

Ironically, both the Gutierrez and Villavicencio families have been victims of terrorism. The Shining Path killed Gutierrez's uncle and cousin and burned down buildings on Villavicencio's farm.

In another abuse of the new system, there are reports that corrupt police in shantytowns are extorting money from innocent people and sexual favors from women in return for not arresting them for terrorism.

Fujimori himself has admitted that the judicial system has made mistakes.

"The anti-terrorism law can be perfected, and every effort should be made to improve it," Fujimori said in a mid-March visit to journalist Danilo Quijano, imprisoned nearly a year awaiting trial on terrorism charges.

Fujimori says he believes Quijano is innocent, but the journalist remains in prison.

Part of the delay is due to the lack of courts to try guerrilla suspects. There are only two maximum-security prisons available for trials in Lima.

Another problem is that lawyers are scared to defend clients on terrorism charges.

They care

No-alcohol party planned

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Alcohol Awareness Month in April is focusing on underage drinking, and local community members are preparing for after-prom activities to protect area youths from the perils of drinking and celebrating.

"Parents Who Care," conducting an after-prom casino party, is a group challenging the statistic that the most likely cause of death for 16-year-olds is alcohol-related.

"I know kids will be drinking (after the prom), but at least they should be safe," said Roxy Belew, public relations chairperson. "They can stay out all night (if they attend the After Prom Party) and not be out driving on the streets."

The group, started in 1987, was organized by Debbie and Guy Burrow, parents with high school-aged children who modeled the program after one in Colorado.

The event requires about 100 adults to conduct the casino, offer refreshments and monitor the door.

"It gives (youth) something to do," said Ray Alexander, co-chairperson of the group. "A lot of kids think they need to go to the lake afterward, but there's nothing we can do about that, so we just try to keep those busy that are interested in a full night's program."

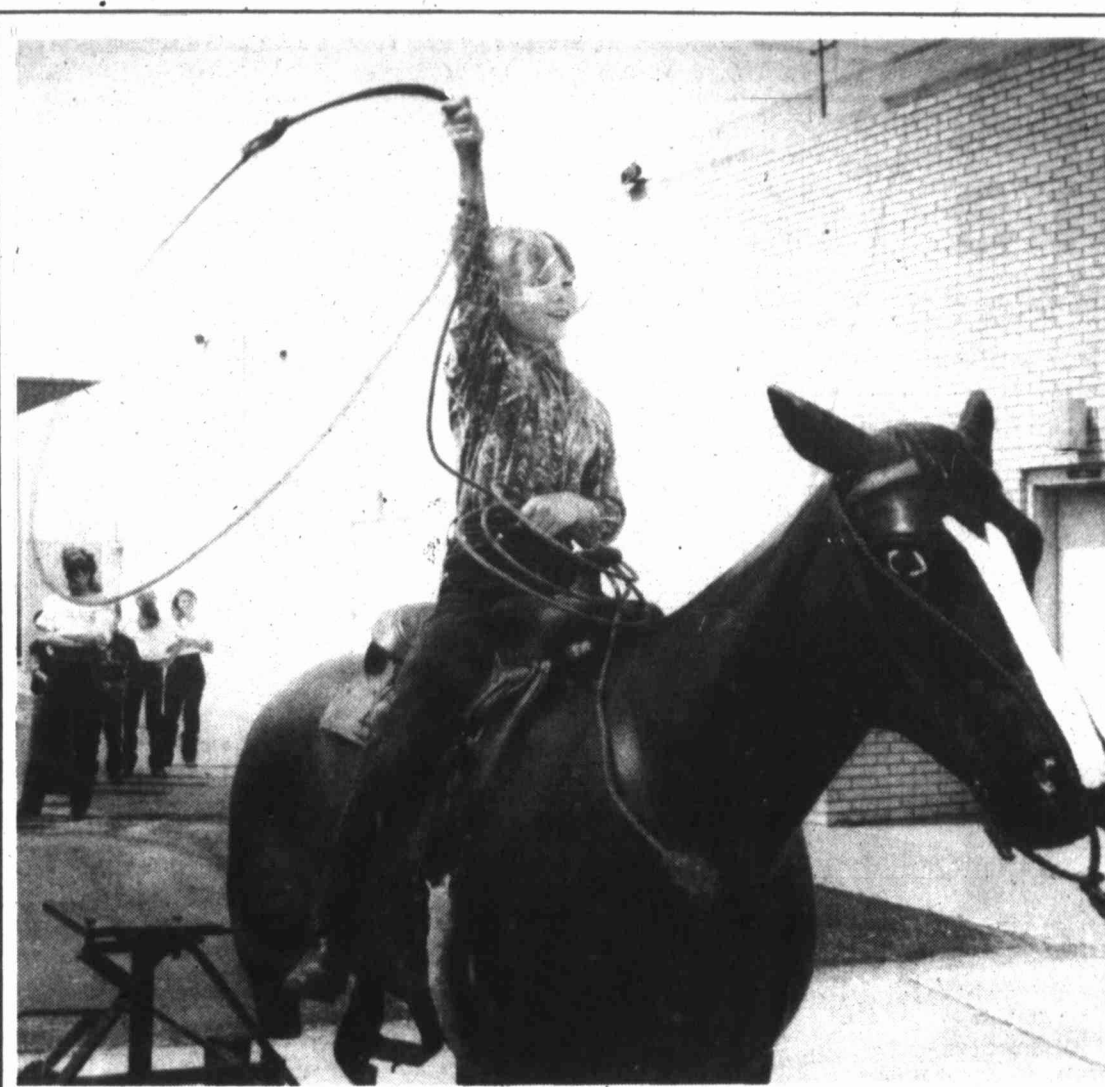

Students will meet after the prom on May 15 at the Big Spring High School cafeteria to participate in activities like "wheel of fortune," card games, bingo and craps.

Students are also supplied with free pizza and sodas. The party starts at 12:30 a.m., ending at 6:30 a.m.

With their winnings, participants bid for items such as microwaves, televisions, answering machines, video cassette recorders, sunglasses and pens.

Area businesses and individuals donate money to buy the items. The group is looking for volunteers to help run the casino, and will start meeting today at 7 p.m. in the high school library.

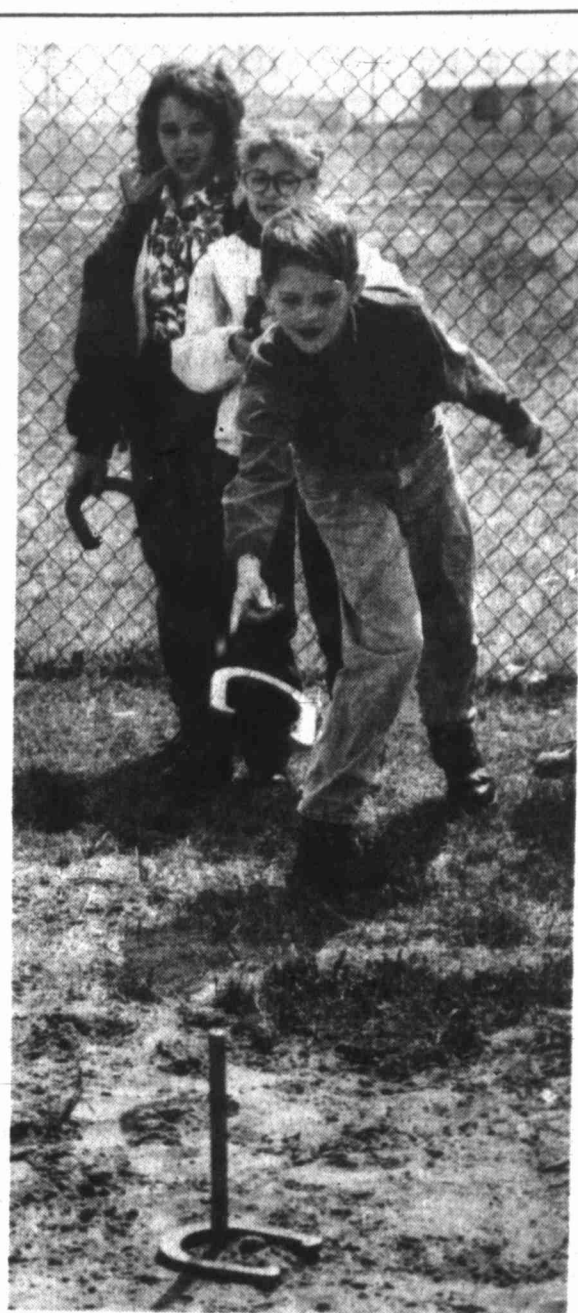

For more information on providing donations or volunteering, contact Belew at 264-4148 and 263-3737 or Alexander at 267-5277.

Teacher gets grant

Stanton Elementary teacher Lynn Smith recently received a Lifetouch Enrichment Grant for $250 from Lifetouch National School Studios. She was awarded the grant for her ideas that creatively addressed the idea of promoting self-esteem in the classroom.

Fryars join AHA

Clayton and Dee Fryar have been named as junior members of the American Hereford Association (AHA). The young people will join in all activities of the organization, encouraging participating in various development programs.

McKay gets award

Malissa Kelly McKay, a senior at Forsan High School, has been awarded the Gramley Leadership and Service Scholarship from Salem College. She is the daughter of G. Arthur McKay and Ruth Ann McKay of Big Spring.

Tandy nominees

Several local and area residents were among nominees for Tandy Technology Scholars, a program that recognizes academic and teaching excellence.

Nominees include Lana Piercefield, nominated as an outstanding teacher in the math/science/computer science area. Outstanding student nominees are Jeremy Sean Peacock of Big Spring, Clinton Todd Riney of Stanton and Elizabeth I. Rivas of Lenorah.

Academic nominees, required to be in the top 2 percent of their class, included Big Spring residents Robert Duane Edmonds, Corey G. Laughner, True L. Rogers and William Collin Woodall; along with Forsan resident Alton Clark Fields.

Apartments start Just Say No program

HERALD STAFF REPORT

The Permian Basin Regional Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse on Saturday kicked off a "Just Say No" Club, currently conducted in area elementary schools, at Park Village Apartments, 1905 Wasson Rd.

Organizers, who search for neighborhood leaders, intend to start clubs in other local complexes to carry the message to neighborhoods that drugs are destructive.

The club encourages community members to circulate information and conduct meetings about drug abuse with members of complexes and surrounding neighborhoods.

Saturday's event drew a crowd of about 150 children and community members, who played games, listened to anti-drug messages and prepared to keep their clubs active.

Participants in the event were coordinator Kim Coyle, speaker Stephanie Horton, McGruff the Crime Dog, the Turning Point Band, clowns, volunteer Connie Nunez, club leader Rosanely Carmona and leader's helper Mary Ann Herrera (Park Village manager).

Donations for the event were made by Wal-Mart, Coca-Cola Co., Dominos Pizza, Winn Dixie, Dr. Pepper Inc., Pizza Hut, H-E-B Food Store, Furr's Supermarket, Pizza Inn, Westex Welders, Ronnie Moser and Miracle Revival Center.

Young model works hard, but says he's having fun

By FRANK JULIANO
Thomson News Service

ANSONIA, Conn. — Carl John Matusovich is just like any other 6-year-old boy. He is active in Cub Scouts and is learning to play ice hockey.

But "C.J.," as his parents call him, is also an up-and-coming child model who is summoned to auditions and photo shoots in New York City twice a month or more by his agent.

One of his modeling jobs was for the McMillan Publishing Co.'s workbook, "Meet Ezra Jack Keats." The book has been purchased by the Ansonia public school system, where C.J. is a first-grader.

The prospect of having his own face staring back at him while he's doing school work doesn't faze the little boy with glasses and a quick smile.

"I had to say 'Oh my puppy,' while they took my picture," he said, demonstrating the pose with his mother, Denise, in the family's kitchen.

"We saw the women from A-Plus Models on the 'Regis and Kathy Lee Gifford Show,' and she said to send in a picture if you think your child has what it takes," Denise Matusovich said.

The family sent in a Polaroid of C.J. sitting in a recliner wearing a University of New Haven T-shirt, and got a call to bring him to the modeling agency's New York office as soon as possible.

That was almost four years ago, and C.J. nearly got his face onto boxes of Huggies Pull-Ups disposable diapers.

He was called back several times but in the end lost the job when he wouldn't take his pants down for the photographers.

"They were strangers and we had taught him not to do that," Denise Matusovich said.

"Whenever he has an assignment we're with him, but the parents are expected not to interfere," said Ronald Matusovich. "They are used to working with children, but they also expect them to follow instructions."

C.J. has done both print and television work, and prefers the video, the boy and his mother agreed.

"I think it's because with print, he hears the click of the shutter and sees the flash, and he's always aware they're taking his picture," Denise Matusovich said.

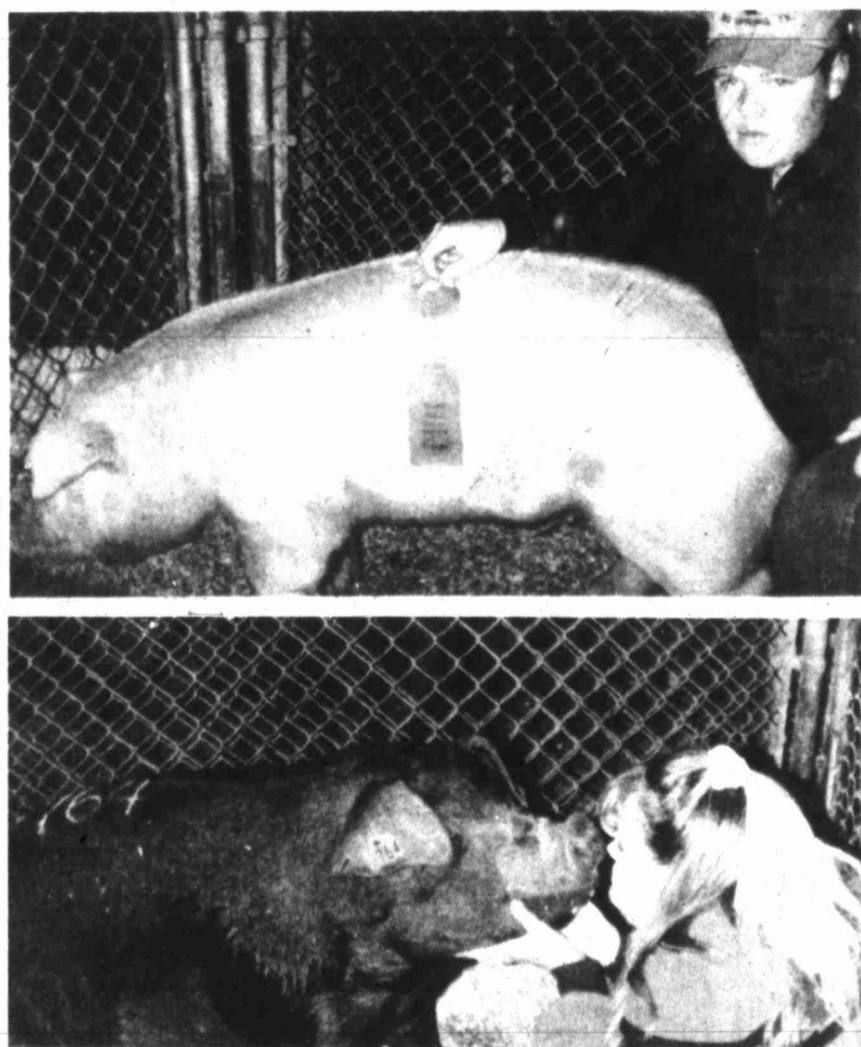

"It's more fun," C.J. said. His friends treat him no differently, he said, but that's partly because his parents keep him firmly rooted.

"We don't make a big deal out of it and no one treats him like a star, but on the way home from New York we'll say, 'You're going to be in a book,'" Denise Matusovich said.

"When this workbook came out, he walked around with it for a week saying, 'Wow, I'm in a book.'"

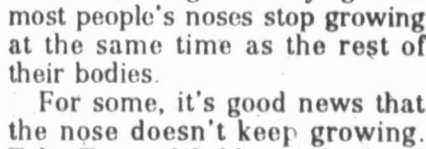

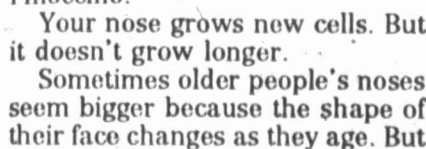

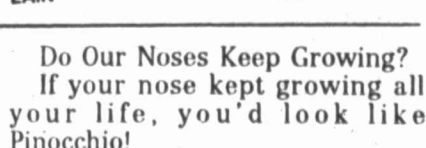

For the most part, though, C.J. is interested in toys and trucks, his sister, Kirsten, 3, and the family cat, Snuggles.

The Matusovichs have begun to involve Kirsten in modeling, too, after a photographer suggested she would also be successful.

A 6-mile-wide comet is streaking toward Earth at 37 miles a second! Should you duck?

Not unless you want to duck for 133 years. That's how long it's going to take for the big blob of dirt and ice to hit Earth — if it hits at all.

The comet has only a one-in-10,000 chance of smashing into our planet. That's a very small chance and is unlikely to happen. But what would happen if the comet did hit? The explosion would be terrible; worse than the one that supposedly wiped out the dinosaurs 65 million years ago.

So how would you wipe out a comet? Blast it with nuclear missiles, answers Dr. John Dale Solem. He's one of the scientists working on the problem. Solem thinks it would take 100 million tons of explosives to nudge the comet off orbit so it would just miss Earth. Hopefully, the problem will be solved by the year 2126.

Do Our Noses Keep Growing? If your nose kept growing all your life, you'd look like Pinocchio!

Your nose grows new cells. But it doesn't grow longer.

Sometimes older people's noses seem bigger because the shape of their face changes as they age. But most people's noses stop growing at the same time as the rest of their bodies.

For some, it's good news that the nose doesn't keep growing. Take Tomas Wedders, who lived in England in the 1700s. He holds the record for the longest nose: 7 1/2 inches from bridge to tip.

Reduce Those Garbage Pounds!

Go On a Trash Diet

Kids can reduce their own trash flow!

Put a check in the circles if you are reducing your waste this way.

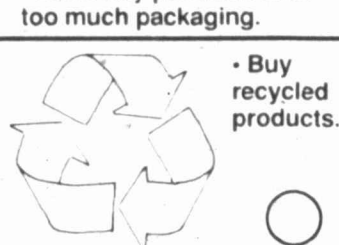

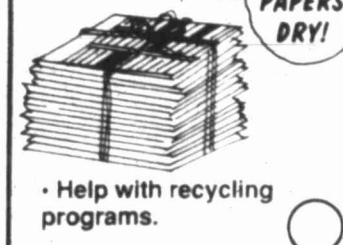

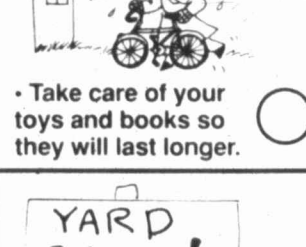

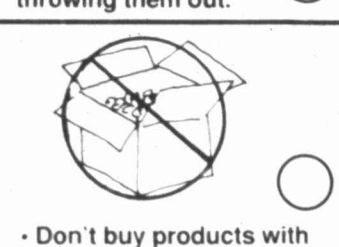

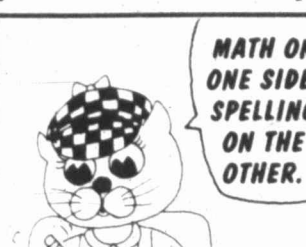

Appliances, furniture, paper, clothing, glass, cans, bottles, and on and on and on!

We Americans throw away 4.3 pounds of trash per person per day! We can help by cutting back.

Reducing what we throw away saves:

- pollution that the poor handling of trash causes.
- natural resources that are used to make new things.
- money to handle trash and make new things.
- fuel for energy in producing new things and getting rid of old ones.
- space in landfills, which are filling up.
- LESS IS BEST.

Litter: Trash in the Wrong Place

What damage can litter do?

Signs like this along Texas highways encourage people not to litter. They give some attention to the group that has agreed to pick up the litter. Such groups also save the state money.

Adopt-a-Highway

The state of Texas has cut the amount of litter on its roadsides by 72 percent since 1985.

One reason is the state's Adopt-a-Highway program. The Texas Department of Transportation came up with the idea in 1985. Today it has spread to 47 states.

Here's how it works:

- A group or business decides to adopt a stretch of highway. It gets an application blank from an organization called Keep Texas Beautiful Inc.
- The group must agree to abide by certain safety rules. (Kids under 15 have to have an adult with them.)
- The group must pick up litter at least four times a year for two years. (In Texas, you can't hire someone else to do it. In other states, you can.)

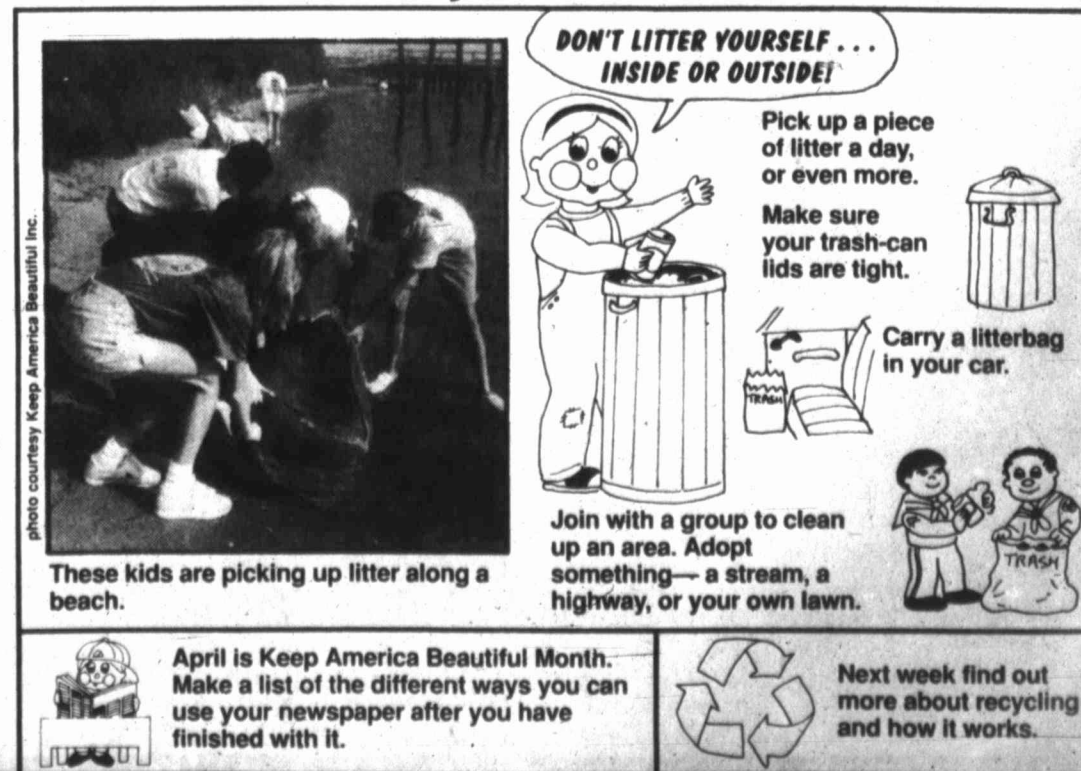

The state furnishes the signs, bags and vests that volunteers must wear. It also hauls away the trash.

Jacqueline Bigar - Horoscope

FOR WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1993

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be more open with an important partner and discuss your long-term desires. Be more direct about a money matter. Be careful with a domestic matter; you could be playing with dynamite. Tonight: Have a long-overdue talk.

TALUS (April 20-May 20): Be more upbeat about a change at work. Do not worry and do not push another too far. Be more serious-minded about a partnership. Discuss a potentially volatile situation. Your popularity is high. Tonight: Go along with another's plans.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your playful mood when you encounter an acquaintance in the morning is appreciated. Financial hassles could upset you. Concentrate on the job at hand. Tonight: Burn the midnight oil.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be careful about an important matter that is of special concern to a loved one. Your creativity is virtually endless. Maintain your sense of humor. Tonight: Try to please.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get communications going early in the day. Be lighter with a neighbor. Talk with a loved one who may be in a bad mood. Realize that your temper might be short today. Pace yourself accordingly and realize that stress is quite high right now. Tonight: Chill out in a hot tub.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be more direct when dealing with money matters. Maintain a sense of humor to keep a perspective on a situation. Be more creative in your thinking. Tonight: Talk through the day's events.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Express your feelings and get to the bottom of a problem. You might need to talk about a family problem to clear the air. Be more in tune with your needs. Don't sell yourself short. Tonight: Don't overstep to make yourself feel better.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be careful with communications today. There is a volatile quality in the air. Be more upbeat and playful. Allow another to express feelings, and don't take it personally. Tonight: Get together with the gang.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be more direct responding to friend's inquiry in the morning. You get what you want if you stay focused. Understand more of what is happening with a financial dealing. Tonight: Take a night off.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accept responsibility for what is going on at work. You might be unduly pressured by a personal matter, but don't take it out on another. Look to the long term. Tonight: Be jovial with friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Don't kid yourself about what is going on today. You might need to gain a better understanding of what is going on. Draw on your intellect. Tonight: Make a must appearance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You might be disappointed by the outcome of a situation. Remain more in tune with your needs and desires. Understand where another is coming from with respect to a money matter. Let others know how much you value them. Tonight: Escape to the movies.

IF APRIL 7 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You will have ample opportunities to explore new ideas, partnerships and possibilities this year. Many surprises are in store. Let your creativity flow. Get a handle on what it is you want. Your career will demand tremendous attention, as will your personal life. You will be able to handle things as long as you take time off to work through stress. SCORPIO helps you make money.

THE ASTERISKS (*) SHOW THE KIND OF DAY YOU'LL HAVE: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult.

Dear Abby - Letters...

Why all the odd questions?

DEAR ABBY: I lost my job of 14 years more than 1 1/2 years ago, and I have not been able to find anything but temporary work since. I know I'm not the only one with this problem, but I just don't know what I am going to do if I don't find something permanent pretty soon. I have no health insurance (my biggest concern), and I haven't been to my gynecologist in a few years, which is not good.

I have been asked some strange and irrelevant questions on job applications and during interviews. For instance:

"Have you got kids?" (many times)

"Are you living with someone?"

"Sign here to give us permission to investigate your political background and other outside activities."

"How old are you? We are looking for a married woman in her 50s," etc.

I would like to know why, in this day and age, these questions are being asked. Perhaps some prospective employers who ask these questions would write to you and explain why.

If something I don't like is on an application, then I don't fill it in. Does this mean they won't hire me because I didn't fill it in? When I am asked the question in person, I'm not sure I should object because that will probably mean I won't get hired for sure.

I am intelligent, well-read, somewhat educated and have a bunch of skills. So why can't I find a job? I'd like to take more night school classes, but I can't afford it. I'd like to run my own business if I can think of something that will pay me a living wage.

I sure hope this new administration does something about jobs in this country. Even if I do eventually find a job, what about the rest of the unemployed? I know someone who is very intelligent and educated and bright -- and she was told at the age of 45 that she's too old to hire! I know of a few men in their 50s who have been told the same thing. What is going on? How are we supposed to make a living? I'd like an answer from corporate America. All they seem to want are kids right out of college who can work for pennies because they are still living with Mom and Dad. -- NANCY A., DETROIT

P.S. Today I was given an application that asked for my height and weight.

DEAR NANCY: Many of the questions you were asked are illegal, and should be reported to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. If you feel that the questions reflect age discrimination, some cities or counties have older worker leagues. Check with the Chamber of Commerce and/or your local library.

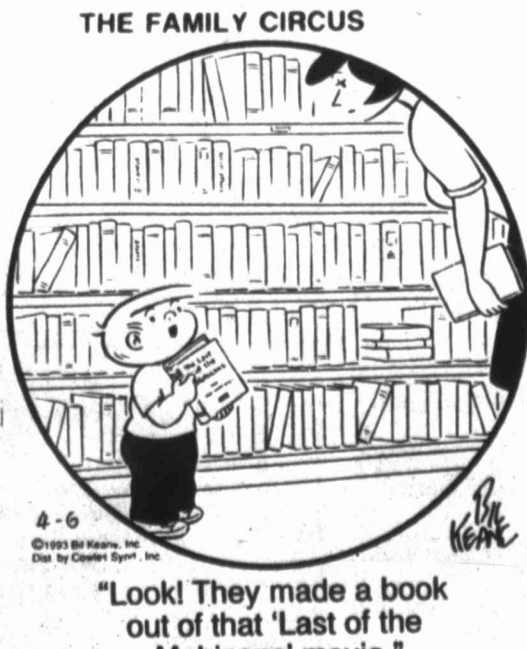

As for an answer from "corporate America," perhaps some personnel directors will be kind enough to write and explain the hiring policies of their companies. I would welcome their input.

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)
