Air force airman charged with espionage

AIDING THE ENEMY: Translator at Guantanamo Bay faces 32 charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Air Force translator at the U.S. prison camp for suspected terrorists has been charged with espionage and aiding the enemy, a military spokesman said Tuesday.

Senior Airman Ahmad I. al-Halabi is being held at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California, facing 32 criminal charges, spokesman Maj. Michael Shavers said.

Al-Halabi worked as an Arabic language translator at the prison camp for al-Qaida and Taliban suspects at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, Shavers said. The Air Force enlisted man knew the Muslim chaplain at the prison arrested earlier this month, but it is unclear if the two arrests are linked, Shavers said.

The translator was arrested more than six weeks before the chaplain, Shavers said.

Al-Halabi is charged with nine counts related to espionage, three counts of aiding the enemy, 11 counts of disobeying a lawful order, and nine counts of making a false official statement.

Al-Halabi was based at Travis Air Force Base in California and assigned to a logistics unit there, Shavers said. Pentagon officials said an investigation into possible security breaches at Guantanamo Bay continues.

About 660 suspected al-Qaida or Taliban members are imprisoned at the U.S. Navy base. American officials are interrogating them for information on the terrorist network.

The military has classified many details about the prison camp and the detainees and has not identified any of the men being held there. Military officials have said the fight against terrorism could be hampered if terrorist groups got such information.

The Muslim military chaplain who ministered to the inmates at the camp, Army Capt. Yousef Yee, was arrested Sept. 10 in Jacksonville, Fla., after getting off a flight from Guantanamo Bay.

A senior law enforcement official said authorities confiscated classified documents Yee was carrying.

Yee, 35, is being held at a Navy brig in Charleston, S.C. A military magistrate ruled on Sept. 15 there was enough evidence to hold Yee for up to two months while the Army Criminal Investigative Division investigates.

Al-Halabi was arrested July 23 at the Naval Air Station in Jacksonville, also after getting off a flight from the base in Cuba. The next day, military authorities flew al-Halabi to Travis Air Force Base. At some point later, he was transferred to Vandenberg, Shavers said.

Tech student dies in two-car accident

TOUGH LOSSES: Freshman pronounced dead at scene; Family of four also dies in crash

By Sally Gunter/Staff Reporter

One Texas Tech student died and another was injured in a two-car accident early Sunday morning on U.S. 83, nine miles south of Menard.

Taylor Marsh Cummings, a freshman Spanish major from San Antonio, was pronounced dead at the scene of the accident. A family of four from Rio Grande City also was killed during the accident.

Cummings was driving his 2003 four-door Ford Explorer northbound on U.S. 83 when his vehicle veered into southbound traffic. Cummings struck a 1991 four-door Dodge driven by Cornelio Villarreal Hernandez head-on.

Cornelio Hernandez, 28, and Dalia Hernandez, 26, were wearing seat belts. Cornelio Hernandez III, 8, and Daniel Hernandez, 6, were in the back seat of the Dodge and were not wearing seat belts.

The accident occurred at 12:14 a.m. Sunday. The justice of the peace pronounced the five victims dead at the scene of the crime at 1:15 a.m.

Nathan Benjamin Manning, a freshman journalism major from Abbottstown, Pa., was in the vehicle with Cummings during the accident. He suffered back injuries and is in stable condition in Shannon Medical Center in San Angelo.

An investigation as to why the accident occurred is under way. Menard Department of Public Safety Trooper Buck Miller is in charge of the investigation, but he could not be reached for comment.

Road conditions were clear at the time of the accident, according to the accident report.

Corp. John Gonzalez of the Lubbock DPS education and public relations unit said because of the time of the accident there could be a few different possible causes of the accident, but it was probable that Cummings fell asleep while driving and veered into the southbound traffic.

Graduate Adviser of classical and modern languages, Liz Hildebrand, said she remembered Cummings well.

"He was very interested in languages," she said. "He was planning on taking additional ones down the road."

Cummings was gifted in Spanish and French, which was his minor, she said. Hildebrand said Cummings fit in easily and made friends in his classes.

Several students from Cummings' classes have expressed their condolences to his father, she said.

"It is a tragedy when five people die," Hildebrand said.

The Center for Campus Life plans to lower the flags around memorial circle on October 6. A plaque in the memory of Cummings will be added to the circle.

Funeral services for Cummings are Wednesday at 9 a.m. at Sunset Memorial Park Funeral Home in San Antonio.

Rugeley's role changes

By Adam Boedeker/Staff Reporter

Cindy Rugeley, former vice chancellor for News and Publications, has been reassigned within the Chancellor's Office. She will now serve as special assistant to the chancellor for communications and will focus on a number of projects with the purpose of putting Tech into the national spotlight, while News and Publications takes a new direction.

Vice Chancellor for Institutional Advancement Mark Lindemood said he will take over News and Publications and engage with them when he needs to.

However, he said he will not be the primary contact, Sally Post, associate director of News of Publications, will be the interim spokesperson and eventually a long-term replacement will be named.

Rugeley said she felt since News and Publications was changing its direction and focusing more on fundraising, she felt it was time for a change.

"I'll be doing special work for the chancellor to identify academic work under way at Tech and the Health Sciences Center and get national attention to them," she said. "I'll be focusing a lot of time on profiling things that faculty members are doing that are pretty awesome and that deserve national attention."

Rugeley said she has a strong desire to finish her doctorate degree in May and possibly get a faculty position at a university. "When I came to Tech, (Chancellor Emeritus) John Montford wanted all vice chancellors to get a J.D. or a Ph.D.," she said. "I started working on it because it sounded like something he wanted us to try, and I ended up loving the classroom more than anything, plus with my new position I'll have a lot more time to dedicate to my Ph.D."

Tech Senior Vice Chancellor Ben Lock said there previously has not been an overall plan for marketing the university. He said there are a lot of different audiences who need to hear about Tech ranging from students to donors.

He said Tech needs to focus on addressing the large variety of audiences in the best way possible and making all messages consistent.

Abortion issues arise after 18-year-old girl dies

By Beth Aaron/Staff Reporter

Holly Marie Patterson, an 18-year-old girl in San Francisco, died last week after undergoing a medication-induced abortion. According to CNN, doctors believe her death is related to the abortion, because the fetus was not completely removed from her uterus, causing an infection and ultimately sending Patterson into septic shock.

Patterson attained the pills from a Planned Parenthood clinic in San Francisco.

Carla Holeva, vice president of community affairs for Planned Parenthood of West Texas, located in Midland, said an autopsy has not been performed so relating the girl's death to RU-486, the morning-after pill, is just speculation.

"We really don't know what she died from," she said. "We still don't know a whole lot."

Dr. Gary Sutkin, a gynecologist at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center, said there is not a high mortality rate associated with medical abortions.

"The mortality rate is extremely small," he said. "Before this incident 200,000 women used this type of procedure and did not die from it."

Holeva said studies have shown that medical abortions are safer than surgical abortions. However, Sutkin said the two are equally safe, just different.

Holeva said the age range for the average patient looking to terminate a pregnancy is 22 to 24 years of age. Though Patterson was only 18, she was not more at risk for complications with the procedure.

"It's hard to know if the pill itself caused her death, because I don't know the details of her medical care," Sutkin said. "I think the medical authorities in San Francisco have to figure out what happened and why this woman died."

Sutkin said RU-486 is a 96 to 99 percent effective procedure, and it is rare for a woman to have to go in and have surgery after she has used the pill.

Sutkin said he does not personally prescribe RU-486, but doctors who do should not be deterred from doing so.

"I don't think physicians should change their prescription patterns until more information comes from the case," he said.

More than one million abortions are performed in the United States annually. Sutkin estimated 5 percent of these were done medically.

Holeva said Planned Parenthood Association of Lubbock does not offer RU-486.

The procedure itself is a series of three pills taken at once. Mifepristone is prescribed first, and is taken under physician supervision. After 48 hours, misoprostil is taken, resulting in cramps, bleeding and nausea.

"Taking mifepristone is like having a miscarriage," Sutkin said.

Long-term effects, such as the inability to conceive after having either a medical or surgical abortion, are unlikely. Though abortion is hard on a woman's body, Sutkin said it is harder on patients emotionally.

Lucie Riggs, a senior advertising major from Weatherford, said she is neutral about the subject of abortion.

"That's a scary pill; that's what I'm thinking," she said. "I don't think I could really state my position on abortion unless I was put in that situation."

Holeva said patients who opt to have an abortion must have counseling and be aware of other options for an unwanted pregnancy, such as adoption.

"It's a lot of paperwork and heavy, heavy counseling," she said. "They are given information and referrals for each of the other options."

Sutkin said Tech students do not often request the pill, but when abortion does come up, he talks with his patients to decide what is best for them.

"Our goal at Texas Tech is to help patients make good choices," he said. "Abortion is a safe and legal procedure in this country. We try not to let our personal biases play into how we counsel our patients."

Annie Bradley, a freshman theater major from Houston, said she didn't even know about RU-486. "There's a pill now?" she said. "I didn't know there was one. I thought you still had to go to a surgeon."

At Planned Parenthood, Holeva said, they do what they can to prevent

NASA safety panel members all resign

WASHINGTON (AP)—Nine experts on a NASA space safety advisory panel have resigned in the wake of sharp criticism from the Columbia accident investigation board and by Congress, the space agency said Tuesday.

The members of the Aerospace Safety Advisory Panel and two staff members of the panel sent letters of resignation to NASA administrator Sean O'Keefe.

Glenn Mahone, a NASA spokesman, said that the ASAP chairman, Shirley McCarty, said in a cover letter to O'Keefe that the resignations "will give you and the Congress the freedom to revitalize the panel and reshape its charter and mission."

O'Keefe, in accepting the resignations, said that the Columbia accident investigation showed that "a wide range of oversight functions should be strengthened within the agency."

"We need to take this opportunity to explore how the original concept for an Aerospace Safety Advisory Panel needs to evolve to best meet the future needs of the agency," he said.

The ASAP was established after the 1967 Apollo 1 fire which took the lives of three astronauts. That was the first major accident in the American space program. Members include space engineers, scientists, former aerospace industry executives and military officers.

In the wake of the Columbia accident, which killed seven astronauts on Feb. 1, the safety panel was criticized by members of Congress as being ineffective.

Four men charged with manslaughter

CHICAGO (AP) — A nightclub owner and three other men were charged with manslaughter in a stampede that killed 21 people last winter — a tragedy prosecutors said was caused in part by the owners packing the place to five times its capacity.

E2 nightclub owner Dwain Kyles, his alleged partner Calvin Hollins Jr., party promoter Marco Flores and Hollins' son, Calvin Hollins III, a club manager, pleaded innocent Tuesday. A grand jury handed up the sealed indictments last week.

"They put individuals into a precarious situation where any incident could — and unfortunately in this situation did — lead to tragedy," said Cook County State's Attorney Dick Devine.

Involuntary manslaughter involving multiple deaths carries up to 10 years in prison.

None of the defendants spoke at the hearing. A judge set bail ranging from $15,000 to $35,000, and lawyers for the four said they would post bond later Tuesday.

The Feb. 17 stampede at the E2 nightclub started after someone used pepper spray to break up a dance-floor fight. Patrons fled for the doors, crushing each other on a narrow staircase.

After the hearing, Kyles expressed his sympathy to the families of the victims and said he was upset by the charges.

"I simply look forward to my day in court," he said.

Prosecutor Robert Egan, reading from the indictment, said the owners willfully packed the club with about 1,200 people on the night of the stampede, roughly five times its capacity of 240.

The complaint also alleges the owners violated a July 2002 court order demanding that the building's second floor be closed. The owners' lawyer had argued the order referred only to balconies above the second floor.

Soldiers detain AP photographer, driver

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.S. soldiers detained an Associated Press photographer and driver on Tuesday, handcuffing them, forcing them to stand in the sun for three hours and denying them water or use of a telephone.

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 70th Armored Regiment, 1st Armored Division detained photographer Karim Kadim and driver Mohammed Abbas, both Iraqis, near Abu Ghraib, west of Baghdad, and kept their guns trained on them, despite repeated attempts to explain they were journalists.

The troops were looking for explosives planted in the area.

"We identified ourselves from the very beginning as press, even before we approached the troops. I was asked not to take any pictures and I didn't. We were told to leave and we walked away, and then one of them shouted at us to come back," said Kadim.

An armored personnel carrier arrived moments later. Three soldiers disembarked and aimed their guns at the two men.

"A sergeant ordered us to raise our hands and face an APC. We were searched, and they took away all my camera gear. Then our hands were tied behind our backs, first with rope, and then with plastic handcuffs," said Kadim, extending his wrists to show marks left by the cuffs.

The two were made to stand for three hours in temperatures of 110 degrees.

Abbas said the soldiers accused them of being part of the insurgency attacking U.S. troops.

"You know about the explosives here, you are part of the people who put them here," Abbas quoted one soldier as saying.

The two were later taken to a U.S. base, where Maj. Eric Wick apologized. Wick also called the AP office in Baghdad, saying it "was a misunderstanding on our part."

Tech community discusses Iraq situation

By Adam Boedeker/Staff Reporter

Though Texas Tech professors and students are half a world away from the conflict in the Middle East, they still hold strong opinions about the presence of U.S. troops in Iraq.

"I don't think the United States has a choice to be over there," said David Snead, assistant professor of history. "They made a commitment to rebuild the country, whether the war was right or wrong, and it must happen."

Snead said while there is some controversy involved in the country's involvement in Iraq, President Bush's supporters should continue supporting him.

"I think Americans who supported the war to begin with need to give the president and his administration time to do what they wanted to do," he said.

Snead said he believes the news media is not giving the full story of what is happening in Iraq, perhaps giving people opinions they have.

"As a society, we expect things to be instantaneous—if the war's over, the troops should come home," he said. "Bush said the troops would be there as long as necessary."

The U.S. government may have not initially realized what it would take to continue the presence in Iraq, Snead said.

"I think we underestimated the amount of troops necessary and overestimated the support from the Iraqi people," he said. "I don't think the news reports good stuff like reconstruction. I think Bush made a mistake when he said the war is over without explaining what would happen in the months following the war."

Since the beginning of the war in March, 305 U.S. soldiers have been killed. Snead said the casualties are unfortunate but are less than he had figured.

"Casualties are always unfortunate, and I wish they weren't happening," he said. "But I think they've really been light considering what the U.S. has tried to do there. They've taken out Hussein, are working on reconstruction and are holding down resistance groups."

Snead said for such a large mass of land being occupied, the amount of casualties is surprisingly small.

"This is a country the size of California," he said. "I think it's actually been a light number. It's always unfortunate but it's relatively small."

Tech students stand divided on their opinions, as does the general U.S. population.

"I think the war should be over and they should all be back," Lindsay Ashworth, a sophomore communication studies major from Arlington, said.

"Bush shouldn't ask for the ($87 billion); he's getting in way too deep. He just needs to stop it right now and focus on our own country."

Ashworth said she supported Bush after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, and leading up to the conflict in Iraq, but it needs to stop.

"I think (Bush) did a good job while everything was going on, but now he's trying to do too much," she said. "He just needs to back off."

Kari Favia, a sophomore marketing major from Arlington, said she supports the troops, but wonders about what is really going on in Iraq.

"Sometimes I wonder just what's going on because we don't know everything," she said. "Maybe there's stuff Bush knows that we don't know. I agree with what he's doing if he knows something we don't know, but from what information we've been given I think it needs to be over."

Joe Perez, a freshman psychology major from Meadow, said he believes the troops have no reason to be in Iraq.

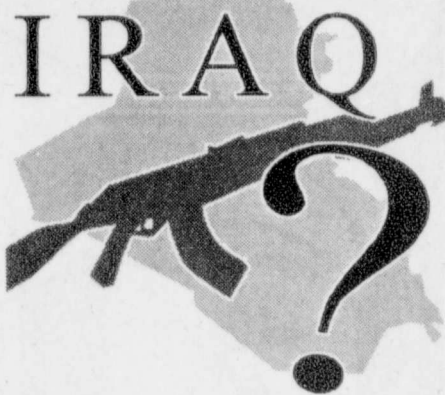

"I don't think they need to be there at all," he said. "We don't need to be the world police; they need to step up for themselves. If they wanted our help they would've asked for it. We've basically forced ourselves on them, and from the numbers of troops we're losing it's about like we're sending the troops and saying 'we're here for no reason, except death.'"

One student said she wishes the troops could come home but they are serving an important purpose in Iraq.

"I think having our troops over there is almost required," Leslie Martinez, a junior marketing major from Albuquerque, N.M., said. "If they were to leave I think Iraq would go back to the same position they were in."

She said she has not seen any changes taking place in Iraq, despite the U.S. presence.

"I don't see any change over there," she said. "I think it's stayed the same if it hasn't gotten worse, but I can't think of another option that would help."

audiences is donors and potential donors," Lock said. "One thing we'll be looking to do is to make sure that communications and messages with other audiences are consistent with what we're telling our donors."

Lock said Rugeley was moved since she may not be at Tech for the long term. He said it felt best to have her in a position where she could contribute great things while she is still at Tech.

He said some of the projects she will be working on will include an inventory of prominent faculty work in the area of academics and research. Another will be focusing on getting feature stories about Tech in high-profile media outlets.

He said Rugeley also will be asked to make recommendations to improve internal communications within the system among students, faculty and staff.

"These jobs alone could almost be separate full-time jobs themselves," Lock said. "Cindy has good experiences and good capabilities to take all of those projects on and make Tech a nationally-known university."

Lock said the assumption that News and Publications only deals with the news media is far off-base.

"There's a lot more with News and Pubs besides the news side," he said. "The publications part is significant activity. The whole area of marketing and messaging is something we intend to put more focus on."

Lock said the restructuring has a lot to do with the need to heighten Tech's national reputation.

"There's a lot of good things happening at Tech," Lock said. "If we're not telling the story who is? It has to do with reputation, the ability to recruit students and faculty and the ability to secure state and federal funding."

Lock said Lindemood has great previous experience in managing coordinated communications efforts.

Lindemood came from Kent State University a year ago and ran a project there that is similar to the one

Tech is trying to accomplish.

"I was at Kent State and was vice president for university relations and development," Lindemood said. "Kent State won a Grand Gold Award for integrated marketing, which was a national honor from the Council for Advancement and Support of Education."

He said the criteria for the award include the number of people involved in the marketing strategy for the university, the design and package of the marketing initiative, the effectiveness of the message and finally the measurement of audience engagement in response to the marketing campaign.

"Marketing is important for solidifying an institutional reputation," he said. "I'll work with a transition team on a specific plan and this is where I say 'stay tuned,' because we're making an initiative that, when it's complete, will excite everyone involved in any way with Texas Tech."

Rugeley said she enjoyed her time at News and Publications but felt it was getting stale and she needed a change.

patients from having to make decisions concerning unwanted pregnancy.

"We stress what to do before having to make that decision, then we look at ways to prevent the progression of the pregnancy," she said.

Emergency contraception is highly recommended by Planned Parenthood, Holeva said.

Birth control pills are not the same thing as an abortion, but instead is a form of contraception that alters the lining of the uterus, preventing ovulation.

If a woman is already pregnant before she takes emergency contraception, the pill will not harm the baby.

Sutkin does not recommend the morning-after pill as a form of contraception.

He said condoms and birth control are more effective. He prescribes emergency contracep-tion in addition to traditional forms of birth control to be used as a last resort.

"When a condom breaks, it normally doesn't happen during office hours," he said. "This way, if something happens, they can go to Walgreens at 3 a.m. and get the prescription filled."

Holeva said students who choose to be sexually active should be responsible for themselves.

"Don't take these situations lightly," she said. "He'll bring a condom—that's so yesterday. Don't rely on someone else to take care of protection."

College of Architecture presents guest speaker

By Brent Young/Staff Reporter

The 2003-2004 College of Architecture lecture series entitled "Blur" will begin at 4 p.m. today in the Courtyard Gallery of the Architecture building.

Darwin Harrison, chairman of the lecture series, said the purpose of the lecture series is to expose Texas Tech architecture students to what is current in the field.

"The title and theme of the lecture series, 'Blur,' introduces the notion that design often involves the blurring of different things," Harrison said. "Each speaker will display evidence of this."

Harrison said some architects blend sculpture and building, some blend materials and research, and some blur other things. Each architect has his own style, but the common thread is the blurring of different things to reach the desired end result.

The lecture series is also intended to give students exposure to prominent figures in the field of architecture they would not ordinarily have the opportunity to meet, he said.

Tech graduate Stephen O'Dell will begin the series with a speech about some of the projects he has completed, as well as some work he will be doing in the near future, Harrison said.

Other speakers throughout the year will include various architects from all over the country.

O'Dell is an associate with Steven Holl Architects, where he has been involved in several noteworthy projects, including Simmons Hall, an MIT campus dormitory, the Bellevue Art Museum, and the College of Architecture and Landscape Architecture at the University of Minnesota.

His current projects include a new residence for the Swiss Embassy in Washington, D.C. and many private residences in New York.

"Steven Holl Architects is one of the best architecture offices in the world and we are proud to have some-one from our institution in that practice," said Andrew Vernoooy, dean of the College of Architecture. "We are glad that he has decided to lecture here and in the future we hope to have him in the classroom as a guest critic."

The Texas Tech University Alumni Association, who is sponsoring the kick-off lecture, was interested in bringing an alumni back to speak at the series to let students know that there are notable architects from the architecture school they are attending, and that there is life beyond the walls of the architecture building, O'Dell said.

Everyone involved in this lecture series wants the students to know that it is possible to succeed.

"We have the largest selection of loose diamonds in West Texas."

Raider football still searches for respect

Rodney Dangerfield made a comedy career fortune by always being the one who had to say, "I don't get no respect."

Ditto for the Texas Tech Red Raider football team — except they ain't made no fortunes.

But they do continue to get "no respect." The Raiders' latest football debacle, a 49-21 humiliation at North Carolina State, keeps alive a long string of wasted opportunities in the seemingly eternal quest to get national respect for this university's football program.

In yet another blown chance to move to a higher level of recognition, the Raiders committed the holy trinity of athletic sins — losing on the road, losing on television and losing to a major non-conference opponent — again.

And this trinity doesn't include the problem of generating almost 700 yards of total offense and scoring only 21 points — surely some kind of record for futility, if such records are kept.

As The Dallas Morning News headline said, "Raiders pile up yards, but what's the point?"

How do other teams manage to win on the road and on TV against highly ranking teams? Do they just have much better players?

Possibly. But some of the answer, perhaps a great deal of it, must be connected to a team's mental approach and its ability to get ready to play well in important games.

By this measure, the Raiders are going backwards.

In last week's game the Raiders' offense — by overt errors and dropped passes — generated more points for NCSU than they did for TTU.

But other teams manage. They go on the road, play television games against highly ranked teams and win at least most of the time.

And that accomplishment is why they are respected and feared.

Whatever obstacles there are to getting prepared to play well on the road against good teams, they find a way to overcome them and win.

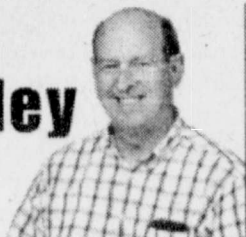

So why can't we?

It will take at least a year to win enough games to make the voters forget what they saw last week — another year of "no respect."

I admire coach Mike Leach and his staff, and I love Texas Tech — academically, athletically and in every other way.

That love is probably why the football team's continual failure to play well (here

Tim Hadley

In yet another blown chance to move to a higher level of recognition, the Raiders committed the holy trinity of athletic sins — losing on the road, losing on television, and losing to a major non-conference opponent — again.

we go again) (1) on TV, (2) on the road, and (3) against major competition is so upsetting.

Nothing ever changes. Brian Davis, sports writer for The Dallas Morning News, wrote correctly: "Fans have watched the Red Raiders botch nonconference road games for decades."

Yes — decades. Not just once or twice, not just this year or last year — decades.

It's not just this team or these coaches. It has been this way at Texas Tech for as long as anyone can remember.

I'm not a player, especially at my age, and I've never been a coach, so I can only judge in the sense that every fan judges — by the results.

I don't know what needs to change, but until it does, there will be no respect for Red Raider football.

It reminds me of the old "Happy Days" TV episode, when the Fonz is telling Ritchie how he (Ritchie) can stay out of a fight by just threatening to hit his adversary.

However, when the bully doesn't back down, Fonz says, "Oh yeah, you actually have to hit someone once for them to be afraid of you."

Right now the Raiders want to be Fonzie, but all they can manage to be is Ritchie Cunningham.

Until they actually hit someone — that is, beat a major opponent, on the road, on TV — they will never get, or deserve, the national respect they seek.

Tech needs to stand by commitment to fees

Come on, let's keep stacking them on

Fees, fees, fees. These heinous, yet devastatingly effective things have plagued Texas Tech students for years, but today's students battle a new breed of beast.

Much like it would be decidedly more difficult to invade and conquer the Americas today than it would have been in 1492, so are fees currently becoming St. George's dragon.

We pay an exorbitant library fee, a rec center fee, a cultural (after all, a way of life doesn't come without sacrifice) fee, an ID card maintenance fee (although one still has to fork over money to get a new ID card), an athletics fee, a medical services fee, etc.

What other fees could the gods of school finance impose on us in exchange for valuable goods given and vital services rendered by the university?

Here are a few possibilities.

A Charmin fee.

After the debacle that was the toilet paper famine in Gordon, the university clearly needs to address the issue head on and levy a Charmin fee.

For $15 every semester, all students should have guaranteed access to sanitary tissue.

A protest fee.

This one was devised by a buddy at the sport's desk.

Since the need to express oneself through mass demonstration has become part and parcel of the college life, why not have the university fund it?

With a paltry $35 per semester, you too can feel like you're upholding the

Jason Lenz

What other fees could the gods of school finance impose on us in exchange for valuable goods given and vital services rendered by the university? Here are a few possibilities.

First Amendment.

A hideous book man statue fee.

Have you seen this thing?

If you haven't been by the Student Union building in a while, go and be both entertained and repulsed.

This product of someone's less than aesthetic imagination greets students, faculty, staff and visitors alike before they enter the hallowed halls of the Student Union.

It is a 6-foot tall statue of a person made of books, with book arms, book legs, a book hat, book butt cheeks (the lack of book breasts inspired me to call it book man), and, as if a viewer still didn't get the point, he's reading a book.

For a meager $7.50 every semester, we could have hideous book man statues grace the entrances of all campus buildings.

A fountain fee.

Here's one that I would be legitimately willing to pay, provided it actually went towards the fountains.

For instance, I have seen a polar bear riding a tricycle in the circus more times than I have seen the fountain outside the main entrance functional.

Pfluger Fountain in memorial circle is as operational as a Sudanese fighter jet. It's generally problematic.

Then there's the fountain in the English/Philosophy and Education Complex.

In the painting of what the complex was supposed to look like, there is a grandiose, well-designed, beautiful fountain.

Instead we got a pair of disembodied, granite hands holding the contents of a can of Alphabet Soup.

And the pretty little thing isn't even functional most of the time.

In the end, I could part with $20 per semester to keep the fountains flowing.

A $10 condom fee.

It's already been commonly accepted that people on the Tech campus are sexually active.

The age-old adage is that if a virgin graduates from Texas Tech, Will Rogers will dismount Soapsuds and stroll off into the sunset.

The way I look at it, if I already pay for things I'll never have the chance to use, then I can deal with one more.

Don't ask, don't tell.

The point to this column is that the university would better itself by simply not telling us where the money is going.

In the end, I don't want to feel like I'm responsible for the hideous book man statue, the impressive Olympic torch runner outside the library or the random Russian Orthodox church meets Islamic mosque gate-looking Bonfire Pit near the United Spirit Arena.

They can waste my money as they see fit, and I'll just go to class.

Rapper Chuck D to speak about music on the Web

By Erica Gonzales/Staff Reporter

Rapper Chuck D, co-founder of Public Enemy, will be singing a different tune at 7 p.m. today when he speaks at Texas Tech about music on the Internet.

The Center for Campus Life will present: Hip Hop and the Digital Divide with Chuck D at the Student Union Allen Theatre.

Following the lecture will be a reception in the Student Union courtyard with free food and drinks. Doors open at 6:30 p.m.

Tickets are free to Tech students with a valid Tech ID.

The event is $5 for non-Tech students and $10 for Tech faculty and staff. Tickets are sold at the ticket office in the Student Union or at any Select-A-Seat location.

Radio station 104.9 FM The Beat will be giving away free passes to see Chuck D from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in front of the north side of the Student Union.

Chuck D is an outspoken advocate of music on the Web, said Jenn Henley, coordinator for campus events and programs for the Center for Campus life.

He gives lectures across the country about the music industry. Chuck D is part of the new lecture series presented by the Center for Campus life.

He was chosen to speak because he is an educated man and sends a positive message to students, she said.

His lecture also ties into what is going on with the music culture right now, she said.

Most of the lectures start at 8 p.m., but Chuck D's lecture begins at 7 p.m. because he wants to interact with the students.

"We're trying to give students as much time with him as possible," she said.

Perker Meeks, a senior psychology major from San Francisco, Calif., said he is impressed that Chuck D is coming to Tech.

"I think Chuck D is a revolutionary part of the music industry," he said.

He said he believes it is a positive thing that he is trying to reach out to young adults throughout the country.

Meeks said he is unsure if the lecture will fit in his schedule but he said he would like to hear what he has to say to the students.

"I want to hear him speak and his perspective on music downloading," he said. "Especially because it's coming from an artist."

He said he believes it will be good for people to hear a music artist's point of view because music artists give so many different views on downloading but they never go into detail, he said.

Colton Batchelor, external vice-president will introduce Chuck D and it looking forward to having him speak to students.

"He is so influential in the music industry as a whole; it's an honor for anybody to introduce him," he said.

Not only has he had an influence on the music industry, Batchelor said Chuck D has helped in making hip-hop known across the country.

Henley said she encourages students to get their tickets early because all students are not guaranteed a seat.

Study: Profanity increasing on TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Television is cussing up an increasingly blue streak, according to a study of the major broadcast networks.

"During the 2002-2003 season, the broadcast networks attempted to rewrite the book on language standards for television," the Parents Television Council, a watchdog group, said in a report released Monday.

The council said it studied all primetime entertainment series from a two-week period in 1998, 2000 and 2002 and found a jump in profanity on "virtually every network" and in every time slot.

The group called on the TV industry to "get serious about reducing the flood of vulgarity. ... Barring that, the FCC needs to get serious about enforcing broadcast decency laws," the group said of the Federal Communications Commission.

The study examined ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox, WB and UPN.

During the so-called "family hour," from 8-9 p.m., foul language increased by 94.8 percent between 1998 and 2002, the study found. It rose by 109 percent during the 9 p.m. hour in the same period.

The smallest increase, 38.7 percent, occurred during the last hour of primetime, 10-11 p.m., when young children are least likely to be in the audience, the council said.

The group noted what it called "minor" improvements.

Foul language in the 8 p.m. hour on Fox fell 25 percent in the study period. But the study found profanity rose 75 percent during the 9 p.m. hour on Fox.

On ABC, offensive language decreased by 17 percent in the study period, mostly because of improvements during the latter two primetime hours. But profanity was up by 61.7 percent during the family hour, the study found.

An ABC spokesman Monday said the network had not seen the report and declined comment. A Fox spokesman declined comment.

In a similar, earlier study, the PTC found that sexual content on TV was less frequent but more explicit.

Soccer feels relief after snapping streak

By Joey Kirk/Staff Reporter

After feeling a sense of pressure that only a pair of giant Vise-Grips can equal, the Texas Tech soccer team has released the handle and alleviated the problems they have been facing in the past.

Going the first four games of this season without any goals, the Red Raiders finally rose above their troubles and came away from this past weekend with not only one, but four goals. To top it all off, Tech won for the first time in 22 tries.

Head coach Felix Oskam said the 1-1 tie with Stephen F. Austin on Friday and the 3-0 win against Texas State Sunday boosted the confidence of the team.

"These games were huge for us," he said. "Coming off this long bus trip to Nacogdoches and San Marcos, we are feeling good about how we played."

After getting a tie against Stephen F. Austin, Tech managed to end a 21-game losing streak that has spread over two seasons.

Oskam said he was not impressed with the performance Friday, but he was glad the game ended without another loss.

"We got ahead of SFA and we made a mistake that caused them to get one on the board," he said. "When we went into overtime, we knew that we have been here before against TCU and we didn't want the same results to happen."

Freshman forward Jennifer Vasquez was the player that picked up the first goal of the season for Tech against SFA Friday.

She said all the hard work that the team has put forth had finally paid off during Friday's game.

"It felt really good," Vasquez said. "The team has been building up since the beginning, and I thought we should have won against SFA, because we played our hearts out."

Catie Arsenault, senior forward, said the goal against SFA and the win against Texas State were the most difficult tasks of the season to complete.

"The first one's always the hardest," she said. "We just came to a peace when we finally got it. It was priceless, and everyone was speechless because we were so happy."

After leaving Nacogdoches with a tie, Vasquez said Sunday's victory was Tech's reward for their work.

"We gained a new feeling after this past weekend," she said. "We got the reward we have been patiently waiting and playing for."

Going into the games, Arsenault said Tech put everything it had done in the past games together to get the win.

"We learned a lot from other games and we put it together to come away with a win," she said. "Our morale is five steps higher than before."

Even with most of the field underwater, Oskam said Tech still should have come away with a bigger victory at Texas State.

"We had other chances to score and to do the game a little bit of justice," he said. "But to be up by two in 15 minutes, and we scored again later, it was good to see us making a run at the goal instead of waiting around to catch it."

One aspect that many fans do not realize, Oskam said, is that the team's real prize was missing from the game.

"About 99.9 percent of the people out there probably don't realize that Kerri Campbell, one of our captains, had surgery she went through here in Lubbock this weekend," he said. "We missed having her there, but when we did a couple of position and personnel changes to accommodate, we ended up getting the job done."

Tech will face undefeated Oklahoma State at 7 p.m. Friday in Stillwater, Okla. to begin Big 12 conference play. Tech will play the Kansas Jayhawks Sunday in Lawrence, Kan.

Volleyball focusing on intensity against Tigers

By Jason Lenz/Staff Reporter

After a brief stint in the comforts of the United Spirit Arena, the Red Raider volleyball team travels to Missouri Wednesday to take on the Tigers.

Texas Tech (8-3 overall, 0-2 Big 12 Conference) is coming off a home loss to the No. 10 ranked Wildcats of Kansas State. Things are not getting any easier for Tech, which now has to take on a tough Missouri squad, said junior libero Jessy Herrera.

"They're returning a setter from last year who was a freshman," she said. "Their senior outside hitter Mary Lauren (Smith) is a hard hitter. He's their captain. She leads their team. They're a really good team, and Missouri is a really good place to play."

The loss to Kansas State, although in three games, was disheartening and something the Raider players said they look to improve. Sophomore outside hitter Bre Pursley said Tech needs to raise it one more notch.

"We're just going to have to keep our consistency and get it done on our side of the court," she said. "In our game against Kansas State, we did everything solid. We didn't lack in blocking or serving or anything. Everything was pretty good. If we could just pick up our level and play better and harder."

The Raiders, Pursley said, just let Kansas State get away with too much.

"We could've won that game if we wouldn't have let Kansas State get away with so many runs," she said. "We'd look up, and we'd be down by five. We need to stop it, flat out, right away, and keep our serve."

As to playing at home and then immediately going back on the road, Pursley said the team at least gets to leave on the same day this time.

"It was fun to play at home," she said. "At the beginning of the game the freshmen were a little shaken up, just nervous playing in the Arena, but we're excited to go on the road and play Missouri. They're a good team, and we get to (fly) charter that day."

The Raiders, however, are going into Missouri shorthanded; senior outside hitter Angela Mooney will not be traveling because of an injury. Junior outside hitter Kelly Johnson said she has faith that those who step in for Mooney will fill the void.

"I think we have some really good underclassmen that can come in and play," she said. "I think they'll be able to step up and be just fine. They're getting really confident; you can tell every time they come out. So I don't think it will be too hard of a transition right now."

Herrera said the team needs to focus on its strengths if they want to emerge victoriously in its future conference games.

"As long as we focus on the things we're known for, which are defense and passing, and having fun out there and having a don't-quit attitude, then we should continue getting better with every game, which should happen throughout conference (play) anyway," she said.

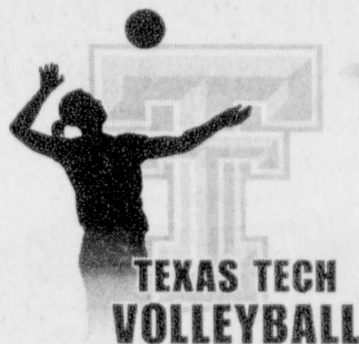

To stop the streaks, such as the ones Kansas State had, Todd said the team needs to think in smaller increments.

"Strategically in your mind, if you were one of the players, look at it as the first one to five, the first one to 10, the first one to 15, and so on," she said. "That might control some of the runs the other team gets, if you're the first one to 10 or the first one to 15 or something like that."

Herrera said heart is going to win matches in the end.

"Any night somebody can win the Big 12," she said. "Records shouldn't matter, it's who wants it the most."
