Discussions planned on Central American issues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz and two cabinet colleagues set out for Mexico Sunday for a two-day visit that officials hope will narrow the broad differences of the two countries over Central America, Mexican immigration and other issues.

The unusually senior-level delegation, which also includes Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, reflects the high importance the administration attaches to maintaining stable relations with Mexico, officials said.

The most divisive issue has been Central America, where Mexico's opposition to Reagan administration policy has generated considerable cross-border acrimony.

Shultz told a gathering Friday in Dallas that Mexican authorities dispute the U.S. view of Central America's problems "by a fair distance."

"But I think that's a good subject for us to discuss," he said. "This is a new (Mexican) government and we'll see if we can find a way to work cooperatively on this problem. It certainly is a problem that we share and we'll both be beneficiaries if it can be resolved peacefully."

Mexico has been on friendly terms with Nicaragua and has implicitly accused the United States of attempting to sabotage the Sandinista revolution through covert operations.

Mexico also opposes U.S. military aid to El Salvador and, in contrast to the American position, advocates negotiations between the government and the guerrillas.

Another source of conflict with the United States is the repeated American assertions that the upheaval in Central America could spill over into Mexico.

Refuting such suggestions, Mexican Foreign Secretary Bernardo Sepulveda observes that Mexico is "an awfully big domino."

Shultz resurrected the domino theory on Friday, asserting that what is happening in Central America "could endanger our own security and that of our friends throughout the Caribbean Basin — from Mexico to the Panama Canal."

Under questioning later, however, Shultz said he does not foresee social upheaval occurring in Mexico in the foreseeable future.

"I don't say that as though I don't realize there are problems there as there are here," he said. "But they have a long track record of being able to handle their problems."

The highlight of Shultz's visit will be a meeting Tuesday with President Miguel de la Madrid. The two governments also have set aside several hours of discussions on a broad range of bilateral issues, including emigration from Mexico, and disputes over fishing rights and border problems.

Of these, the most controversial is a proposal in the U.S. Congress for curbing the flow of illegal aliens from Mexico. In December, the Mexican Senate took the highly unusual step of expressing "alarm and concern" over the proposed legislation, which contains a mixture of worker identity cards and stiff penalties for employers who hire illegal aliens.

U.S. officials, who requested anonymity, say the bill has a good chance of passage this year.

The continuing flow of Mexicans across the border is symptomatic of a country with a zero growth rate and 850,000 entrants into the job market this year.

Experts believe it will take at least five years for Mexico to recover from the ruinous effects of the collapse of the oil market last year, an event that has touched off a dramatic increase in the flow of undocumented workers to the United States.

In his remarks Friday, Shultz conceded he doesn't have the answer over the short-term for dealing with the immigration problem.

Ultimately, however, he said, "the fundamental answer is for us to be working with them (the Mexicans) and helping them create conditions such that people will want to stay home."

Jurors return death sentence in Lackey case

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"Your punishment shall be death by execution," Lubbock Judge Robert Wright told an expressionless Clarence Allen Lackey shortly after a Midland jury Saturday spent almost four hours deliberating his sentence for the 1977 rape and murder of 23-year-old Toni Diane Kumpf.

Several jurors were crying as they filed past Lackey on their way out of the courtroom shortly after 6 p.m. Wiping tears from his own eyes, Lubbock County District Attorney Jim Bob Darnell said:

"I can't say I'm happy, but I feel justice has been served."

The only emotion the 28-year-old high school dropout and former Lubbock construction worker showed throughout his five-day retrial on capital murder charges came when he turned to a deputy and asked if he could see his mother, who was sitting a few feet away.

"No sir, not now," replied the deputy. "We'll set something up later."

Lackey's eyes then welled with tears as he looked at his mother and said softly, "I love you."

Ms. Kumpf, a 23-year-old Texas Tech secretary who told friends shortly before her death that she thought a man had been following her on occasion, was abducted from her apartment about dawn on July 31, 1977.

Her partially clad body was found three hours later in a field two miles from Lackey's apartment, her throat cut from ear to ear.

Lackey, according to overwhelming circumstantial evidence in the case, kicked Ms. Kumpf's apartment door in and forced her into his pickup. He then drove to his apartment, where she was raped and murdered in his bedroom.

Lackey was convicted and sentenced to die by a San Angelo jury in 1978. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals overturned the conviction on a technicality, however, and he was retried here on a change of venue.

The six-man, six-woman jury convicted him after four hours of deliberations Friday and sentenced him in the punishment phase of the trial Saturday.

According to testimony, Lackey has an IQ of about 80 and came from a home where he was abused by a drinking father, who is now serving a 10-year sentence for attempted murder.

Lackey's criminal record shows several misdemeanor and felony arrests dating back to when he was a teen-ager — including two arrests for burglary with intent to commit rape.

On Jan. 9, 1975, he was placed on probation for one of the burglary charges. Six months to the day later, his probation was revoked and he began serving a 2-to-5-year sentence.

He was paroled on Feb. 17, 1977 — less than six months before Ms. Kumpf's murder.

Wright told the jury they had to unanimously answer yes to two questions in sentencing Lackey to death: Did he act deliberately, and is there a probability he would commit another criminal act of violence that would constitute a threat to society?

If the answers were no to either question, then the sentence — by law — had to be life in prison. (It was not disclosed to jurors that a person serving a life sentence is eligible for parole in 20 years.)

In a voice cracking with emotion, Darnell told jurors in final summation: "I ask you to remember Toni Diane Kumpf — and every other woman in the world like her. Do you want Clarence Allen Lackey to do that to anyone else?"

The decision to execute Lackey — which by law is automatically subject to appeal — marks the first time in 30 years that a Midland jury has sentenced someone to death.

In the 1950s, according to court records, a semi-retarded man by the name of Eusebes Martinez died in the electric chair for the rape and murder of an infant girl who had been left in a parked car.

Midland County's Depression-era courthouse, left, built in 1929-30, still serves the citizenry but has been radically modified inside and out to be more functional than just notable. It was preceded by a red sandstone building, above, which served Midland from 1905 until 1929.

County Bond Issue

Midland's "Greek Temple" won't be the same and neither will taxes if Midland County voters are persuaded that county government, which began in a rented store building almost 100 years ago, needs expansive housing.

The frame store "courthouse" rented by the month for $15, which turns out to be a pittance.

On Saturday, Midland voters will be deciding on a sole issue as they flip a single lever on the voting machine: To authorize the issuance of $11.69 million in bonds to finance further expansion of the courthouse, build a new jail and raise taxes by 25 percent.

This will be the first time since 1970 that the county has called a bond issue and created an indebtedness, which will be paid off in three years. It was in December 1970 when the electorate voted 4,409 to 3,272 to expand the 1929-30-vintage courthouse via a $1.95 million bond issue.

That election came when Midland was in the throes of another boom-to-bust recession. The jail was declared in "deplorable" condition.

Like the current bond issue, the 1970 proposition primarily was to build a new jail and to expand and modernize the then 40-year-old courthouse. It effectively doubled useable courthouse space. The 1983 proposal would do the same.

Quests for courthouses in Midland have been cyclic and as certain as the levying of taxes.

In August, 1885, the Midland County Commissioners' Court authorized paying F.M. Wardlow $15 a month to rent his store as a temporary courthouse. Then, under prodding of County Judge E.B. Lancaster, the court voted to build an adobe courthouse on the present county square with $3,000 in funds given by Midland Town Company, which also had donated the courthouse square and a 10-acre burial site to the county.

As governing bodies sometimes are prone to do, the Commissioners' Court changed its mind, dumped the adobe plans and opted for a wooden building at a cost of $2,934.65, a jail for $1,500 and a "weatherboard privy" for $39.

Back in '85, the countywide population was about 1,000 and the populous was centered in Midland, which was a cattle-town along the new Texas & Pacific Railroad Co. tracks. The town wasn't incorporated until 1906.

BY THEN, a new set of commissioners was seated in a $26,000 red sandstone courthouse, which was financed under a $30,000 bond issue. Interest was 4 percent over a 20-year period.

The classic courthouse with a bell tower and a Gothic-like stone jail east of the edifice sufficed until late in the 1920s, when yet another set of commissioners and a new judge decided that the old sandstone building was inadequate and was ready to be scuttled.

The $150,000 courthouse bond issue passed 418-258 in September 1929, as voters in the precinct taking in the city carried the proposal 407 to 202. Voters in rural areas around Stokes School, Hutt Ranch and Warfield School voted against razing the old courthouse and building a new one by votes of 7 to 29, 4 to 44 and 0 to 5.

The commissioners disposed of the old sandstone courthouse by selling it for $1 to Ernest Wood in December 1929. "That was more than the two-story stone building was worth," Wood quipped, "but it's close to Christmas, and I'm feeling kinda charitable." The 1905 courthouse was built from sandstone quarried in Ward County, and, according to a newspaper account, "nobody apparently wanted it except the local citizens, who voted against the bond issue for a new building..., but the women liked it because the lack of bedrooms for jurors keeps all women free from jury service."

"Rain leaked through the roof and poured onto the beds of the last jury that slept in the courthouse," noted the news account. "One of these leaks came opportunely just before the election, and the jury voted solidly for the bond election...Cramped living quarters in the Midland courthouse speeded up the proverbial slow wheels of justice."

County Judge M.R. Hill in 1929 allowed that "Midland County's courthouse is anachronistic and has been out of date for months and does not conform with general construction here."

With $150,000 in bond money, $145,000 in warrants and additional funds, the four-story stone courthouse was built and furnished for $319,000. Interest was 5½ percent over a 40-year period.

The stone courthouse with eagle motif, marble wainscotting, wide halls and curved stairs sufficed county government for some 40 years. It was dedicated in December 1930, when the county population was about 8,000; some 4,500 attended the ceremony.

MMH seeks above-standard rating

Sale of revenue bonds to finance expansion

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although a crystal ball would help, Midland Memorial Hospital officials hope that laying their cards on the table will be enough to convince New York bond agencies to give a "good rating" for the hospital's $15 million expansion.

When borrowing money, an applicant — whether it be the city, county or Midland County Hospital District — sells bonds and makes a contract with financial investors. Financial rating companies, such as Standard & Poor's and Moody's provide ratings for all municipal bonds. The higher bond rating MMH receives, the lower the interest the hospital will pay on money borrowed.

In March, the MMH directors opted to bypass voter approval by financing the $15 million expansion through revenue bonds. If the directors chose to finance the project with general obligation bonds, an election would have been required.

According to MMH's financial advisor, Joe Smith of First Southwest Corp. of Abilene, "We're hoping for the best rating possible."

MMH's general obligation bonds for its 1977 $10 million expansion were given an "AA" rating by Moody. Smith and MMH officials contend that a high rating for the revenue bonds used for the $15 million expansion would not only give investors peace of mind, but also lessen interest payments required of MMH.

SMITH SAID revenue bonds issued for the 77-bed expansion could total $19 million, including interest and a $2.5 million "cushion" to pay the principal and interest for the first year of the debt.

According to Dr. Walter Parks Jr., MMH director, the hospital has presented a "sound and secure bond issue possible. Eventually we will get it (expansion) done. The low (hospital) taxing rate and good economy in Midland helps. The hospital is running in the black. I don't know how much more secure it could be under the circumstances."

Four MMH officials, including two First Southwest representatives will meet with Moody's and Standard & Poors bond rating companies in New York Tuesday to obtain a rating for the hospital's $15 million revenue bond expansion.

Although there is possible litigation in the air from American Medical Centers, the Tennesee-based owner of Parkview Hospital, MMH officials are confident the expansion will be completed.

As required by law, Parkview and MMH both submitted certificate of need applications to the state health agency for additional beds. Because the hospitals' applications were similar, they were joined in hearings at the Texas Health Facilities Commission in Austin. After a two-week long battle, the THFC approved MMH's project, but denied Parkview's $17 million 110-bed proposal.

NOW, PARKVIEW officials are requesting a rehearing from the THFC and have hinted that if they don't get it, AMC may appeal in Travis County court.

Dr. Henrie Mast, pastpresident of the MMH directors said: "Any litigation, as I understand, turns off the bond rating agency to some degree. If we were strictly a private hospital without any tax and relied strictly on revenue, then litigation would be more harmful."

According to Smith, time is a greater concern than possible litigation. Smith said because a new law which will be enacted July 1 requires all municipal bonds to be registered, it is imperative MMH get the bonds rated and sold to avoid tax penalties provided under the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act 1982.

MMH seeking good bond rating

Besides Mast, other MMH officials who will make the trip to New York include: Ray Branson, MMH president; Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance; Tom Bruner, MMH trustee; and two representatives of First Southwest Corp., Joe Smith and Peter Tart.

While the MMH directors say they're confident about completing the 77-bed expansion, they are concerned about what kind of bond rating the $15 million bond proposal will receive.

"THE INFORMATION I received from the bond people is that the method we're attempting to do should not damage the sale of the bonds or the interest rate," Frank Cahoon, MMH director, said, explaining the hospital intends to issue enough bonds to have a $2.5 million reserve fund.

"The $2 million cushion will help give the bonds a good rating," he added. "It's an ingredient to make the bonds more fundamentally sound."

Although MMH Director Pat Estes said she is concerned that the hospital may be involved in possible litigation, "I'm hopeful our ratings will remain good."

Additionally, Mrs. Estes said: "If our bond rating — which seems to be a mystery at this point — is an exboritant change from what they are now, we'll have to re-evaluate this whole situation."

Tevis Herd, MMH director, said he's not "concerned we won't get a good one (rating); I'm just hoping we will (get one)."

On the other hand, Dr. Walter Parks Jr., MMH director, said: "I'm concerned that the delaying tactics of Parkview might have some effect on ratings."

Mast added: "My only concern is that we may not receive the highest rating."

According to MMH director Wanda Mohr, there's not any way to predict the bond rating and the revenue bonds "may not be rated as we want, but we'll get the funding."

ALL FIVE directors said they are disappointed with the possibility of litigation prompted by Parkview.

"I'm somewhat offended that they (Parkview) insist on pursuing this the way they have," Ms. Mohr said. "If they are truly concerned with the medical needs of the community, they wouldn't go about it this way. To me, it's a sour grapes attitude. The THFC approved our application. We've fought long and hard to make our presentation the best possible."

According to Cahoon, "My concern is that we have adequate medical facilities in Midland. I hope Parkview's action does not slow up the needs of the community.

"I don't know what Parkview's thrust really is," he added. "But whatever, I think that MMH should move along quickly because the occupancy rate is up and a number of people are seeking medical care outside the community."

Herd said there's no justification for Parkview to pursue a reversal of THFC's decision.

"They're poor losers, he said. "We went down there (Austin) and the commission, based on all the facts decided we should build our expansion. There's no justification for them doing this."

Courthouse expansion considered

"There's not a better courthouse in the whole state when it comes to answering the need of its county," said Judge Hill.

Commented a newspaper writer at the dedication: "All (speakers) praised the spirit of the county in erecting such a monument to justice and such an addition to the beauty of the town."

The commissioners said that they hoped the building would be "another link in the advancement of Midland from a town to a city."

Another set of commissioners and another county judge called the December 1970 bond election to issue the $1.95 million in courthouse expansion bonds. The election was close, as Midland then was experiencing a recession — an economic slump similar to the present after-the-boom blahs.

Proponents hailed the improvements, which essentially would double useable space in the courtroom, as "the most economical, suitable and sound approach to correcting problems of the 40-year-old courthouse and jail."

"FURTHER, WE place our faith in the ability and dedication of the Midland County Commissioners' Court to make intelligent, economically and fair decisions on this most important matter." Supporters included Gil Tompson, Pat Baskin, Dr. Viola Coleman, Bill Malone, L. Decker Dawson Jr., Red Little and Carroll Thomas. The issue was endorsed by the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland County Bar Association, Midland Jaycees, Objectives for Midland, the Citizens Committee for Courthouse Expansion, and presidents of Midland's three banks.

Commissioners then were Durward Wright, Charlie Welch, Clark Moreland and Louis Osborne; county judge was Barbara Culver. Of the five, only Wright today remains on the Commissioners' Court.

The opposition, represented by Tom Dollahite and Don Kyser, was billed as Rational Progress for Midland (RPM) and Overburdened Taxpayers' Committee. The anti-bond-issue group coined the "Greek Temple" allusion to the proposed courthouse renovation; columns would be raised to give support to the fifth-floor jail.

"We call it a Greek Temple," Dollahite and Kyser said in a joint statement on eve of the Dec. 8, 1970, election, "because the courthouse expansion plan will make our courthouse look like a Greek Temple, and the whole program is about as far-fetched to the voters as something from Greece."

THE OPPOSITION noted that:

—The courthouse improvement actually would cost the voters at least $3 million in principal and interest, though the bond issue was for $1.95 million.

—Ad valorem (property) taxes would increase.

—The courthouse issue was not discussed prior to the countywide elections.

—The jail expansion calls for a 151-inmate capacity, "while the average daily inmate count is only 36 with a one-day high of 85."

The Overburdened Taxpayers Committee proposed that a "separate single-story jail and sheriff's office" in the then-abandoned Safeway Supermarket store just northeast of the courthouse would "solve most of the existing problems at a much lower cost."

"We realize that the courthouse needs improvements," said Kyser and Dollahite, co-chairmen of the committee, "but do we really need a 'Greek Temple' in Midland County?"

In 1970, the "overburdened taxpayers" suggested that the county "get the jail away" from the courthouse and thereby give more space to the courts and other official functions of county government.

"The only thing they (the commissioners) are doing is what we asked them to do," Kyser said. "I wanted to leave the courthouse alone, build the annex" and relocate the jail.

"You see, land was real cheap then."

By the time the courthouse was renovated, expanded and reoccupied in 1974, costs had well exceeded the $1.95 million due to inflation. The courthouse had lost much of its aesthetics — despite the "Greek Temple" look — and its charm but it was "functional" and had more "useable" space. The courthouse staff in the early 1970s ranged between 90 and 95. Today, the staff is between 170 and 175, though the county employees there and in two annexes total about 225.

Latter-day commissioners say the courthouse space is taxing and inadequate and, once again, the courthouse expansion and renovation or alternatives — are direly needed.

Monday: What the bond issue would provide.

Police investigating thefts from area parks

Police Roundup

Midland police are investigating two thefts that caused thousands of dollars in damage and stolen equipment at several parks and recreation facilities during the past week.

Wayne Kohout, parks and recreation director, said Saturday that about 130 automatic sprinkler heads were discovered missing Friday from Sparks, Ratliff and Jacotte Parks. Kohout said the equipment, valued at $6,000-$8,000, probably was stolen Thursday night.

Kohout said 17 bronze plaques were stolen from the exercise stations at Petro Parcourse on Wadley Avenue. The plaques are valued at $1,800 and were probably taken April 7, according to Kohout.

He said a parks and recreation employee recovered one plaque, which was laying on the ground Friday, and discovered the others missing.

Kohout said vandals also recently did about $1,000 worth of damage to a swimming pool and shade remada at Kiwanis Park.

Midland police are also investigating a rash of thefts reported Friday, including the burglary of a cassette tape player, speakers and a television valued at $2,079 from a residence at 2715 Kessler Ave.

Jules Boone told police the items were taken from his home sometime between 4:30 p.m. Wednesday and 11 a.m. Friday. Entry to the house was gained through the front door, according to police reports.

A baritone and case valued at $2,000 was stolen from a locked car parked in an open garage at 716 W. Spruce Ave. Police reports indicate that Marcella Dunn, the musical instrument's owner, heard dogs barking about 3 a.m. Friday and went to her car later that day to find the horn missing. The car exhibited no signs of forced entry, according to police reports.

In another auto burglary, money orders, car and house payments, a credit card and an unspecified number of personal checks were reported stolen from a car parked at 1715 E. Pecan Ave. Debra Walker, 1805 E. Magnolia Ave, reported that her car was burglarized about 10:30 p.m. Friday. Total value of the items taken is $1,254.85.

A security officer for Sears Roebuck, 4511 N. Midkiff Road, reported the theft of three 12-gauge shotguns valued at $579.97. Steve Moczary told police the guns were discovered missing during a recent store inventory. According to the police report, the guns were stolen sometime between Feb. 11 and April 5, but were not reported immediately because Sears employees were searching their store for the guns.

Early this morning, James Torres, 1709 E. Maple Ave., reported a purse containing $600 was stolen from his residence. Entry was reportedly gained by breaking a window on a bedroom containing the purse.

Midland firefighters were also kept busy, responding to two major fires Friday.

According to fire department reports, a faulty water heater probably triggered a blaze which heavily damaged a mobile home south of Interstate 20 on Lamesa Road. Firefighters received the alarm at 1:55 p.m. and used 1,500 gallons of water to douse the trailer, owned by Arthur Guerrero.

A vacant house at 508 S. Mineola St. was destroyed by fire about midnight Friday. Firefighters used 2,700 gallons of water to extinguish the blaze, the cause of which is undetermined.

Mudslides unleashed in East Coast

By The Associated Press

Storms spread rain and snow from Wisconsin to the Northeast on Saturday, glutting rivers and unleashing mudslides in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Rain fell from New Jersey and northeastern Pennsylvania into western New England and from Wisconsin to southern Illinois. A spring snow fell over eastern and northern New York and over southern Wisconsin.

Cloudy skies prevailed over parts of northwest Texas, southwestern Oklahoma, western North Dakota, eastern Montana and the Great Lakes.

Rain was expected to continue today across northeastern Maine.

School art departments asked to join logo contest

This week the Midland Reporter-Telegram's Promotions Committee launched an effort to involve the art departments of local and area schools in the newspaper's logo contest.

The committee sent promotional material to schools throughout the Midland Independent School District and others stressing that the newspaper is seeking "one great idea" that can be finalized into a symbol to represent the Reporter-Telegram. First prize winner will receive $600, the committee indicated.

Also contacted by the newspaper were the art departments of Midland College, Odessa College and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The contest opened April 3 and will continue until May 16. Judging will end on June 15 when finalists will be named for the contest's three categories. The categories include students in grades one through six, students in grades seven through 12 and the category for college students and adults.

Winner of each category will receive $100 and become eligible for the $500 grand prize. Thus, the grand prize winner will receive a total prize of $600.

The committee urged that all interested in entering the contest — student or otherwise — do so. Quality of the artwork submitted is not the final consideration and should not discourage potential participants. The Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to refine the winning idea.

Most importantly, said the committee, logos submitted should be simple, clean and crisp in design.

For other details of the contest, see Page 16B of today's edition.

Congressman says Marines know their mission is keeping peace

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A Texas congressman who interviewed U.S. Marines on patrol in Lebanon says "They are fully aware that their mission is to keep peace and they appeared to me to be in complete control of the situation."

Rep. Abraham Kazen, D., Laredo, was there with other members of the House Armed Services committee recently.

They talked with the commander of Marines who recently forbade an Israeli detachment from going through their lines.

"That man was a strong character who knows what he is doing," said Kazen. "The Marines now have a communication system that permits them to get information from both sides so that no more misunderstandings can occur. At the same time, our boys are not going to let any one run over them. They know exactly what they are doing. And their mission is to keep the peace.

"They get along well with the Italians and the French who are assigned to the same mission," he said.

Cattlemen want temporary work program for foreigners

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Texas cattlemen told their congressmen here Friday that they want the Immigration bill now pending in Congress to be stopped and instead they want the present program for temporarily bringing in foreign workers to be broadened.

The Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association headed by Frates Seligson of San Antonio and the Texas Cattle Feeders Association were represented by a sizeable delegation at the convention of the National Cattlemen's Association which concluded Friday night. W.J. (Dub) Waldrip of Lubbock is president of the national association.

While here, the two Texas organizations held a luncheon at the House of Representatives for Texas congressmen. Also invited were the members of cattlemen's associations in New Mexico and Oklahoma.

The Texas cattlemen told Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D., Texas that they want him to continue his efforts to get Japan to make concessions so that the U.S. can sell beef to Japan. Bentson pointed out that since negotiations with Japan on this question broke off last fall there has been little progress. However, he told them he has learned that presently Japan has an unofficial representative in Washington at this time seeking to arrive at some compromise on trade with the U.S.

The cattlemen told the Texas congressmen that they are bitterly opposed to amnesty with full citizenship rights and privileges going to aliens who entered this country illegally.

The bill pending in Congress gives citizenship to all who came to this country prior to 1981. It has been approved by a House sub-committee. The Senate is expected to pass a similar bill easily according to the office of Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R., Wyoming, chairman of the Immigration sub-committee. The number of aliens who thus could become citizens would total many millions. Six million has been projected but others point out that for decades the U.S. has not known exactly how many illegal aliens it has in this country.

The cattelmen also object to the provision making it illegal for an employer to hire illegal aliens.

Governor's task force recommends tax hike to help unemployment

AUSTIN (AP) — A governor's task force recommended Saturday that Texas employers be forced to come up with $1 billion in taxes by the end of 1985 to pump up the state's unemployment benefit fund.

Gov. Mark White's task force on jobs backed a plan that would jump the average state tax from the current $31.20 per employee to $215.96 per employee next year.

The plan was recommended by consultants who studied the state's out-of-money unemployment fund. Unemployment benefits have continued to flow only because of loans from the federal government.

The task force also asked officials to take a close look at a consultants' report citing problems in the Texas Employment Commission. After a closed-door session, chairman Elvis Mason of Dallas said "no action" was taken on the report, but the task force wanted to "urge" that the problems not be ignored.

Arthur Anderson Co. said in its report that TEC is top-heavy with assistants, unmanaged and slow to help the unemployed.

Youth still locked up

HOUSTON (AP) — A teen-ager jailed for 30 days for failing to say "Yes, sir," to a judge remained behind bars Saturday, two days after a state appeals court ordered him freed.

Michael Anthony Washington, 18, was ordered temporarily freed Thursday by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. But officials of the Harris County Jail said they would not release Washington until receiving written notice from the court in Austin.

The court ordered Washington released on a $100 personal recognizance bond Thursday until the dispute is settled. But jail officials and State District Judge Michael McSpadden said Friday they had received no notice of that action.

An 83-year-old grandmother heals by faith

AP Laserphoto

Eighty-three year-old Jewel Babb is known widely throughout West Texas for her faith-healing abilities. Now living in Valentine, she tends goats and has thickly muscled hands that don't seem to belong to an octogenarian. She practices the fading art of faith-healing, which involves deep massages to certain body zones and occasional use of medicinal plants.

VALENTINE (AP) — Taut, sinewy hands seem out of place on an 83-year-old grandmother.

But Jewel Babb's hands figure prominently in her profession because she practices the art of faith-healing.

Mrs. Babb said she discovered her ability "to see" an affected area of the body about 30 years ago when she owned a spa at Indian Hot Springs, a West Texas outpost where mineral hot pools near the Rio Grande supposedly cure visitors of some ills.

But Mrs. Babb was unable to keep the lodge, and moved to Valentine, a high plains town of 300 straddling the Southern and Pacific railroad tracks.

"She has developed quite a following. Most in the town think of her as their personal doctor," Valentine Mayor Jesus Calderon said.

She shudders at the popular cosmetic practice of ear-piercing. That part of the earlobe corresponds to the tonsils, Mrs. Babb said. "Why do people do it? Would you pierce your tonsils?"

Mrs. Babb, who has a sixth-grade education, openly dislikes modern conveniences. Television and radio are nagging distractions that cause too much nervous tension, she said.

Her only concession to the 20th Century appears to be an electric furnace beside the bed that constantly blasts heat at her feet.

Mrs. Babb says she cannot accept payment for her services — only trades. An El Paso woman recently visited Mrs. Babb, and paid her for her help with a shawl. After the treatment, however, she said Mrs. Babb accepted $20.

Usually, it's the locals who ask for healing help.

Here are some of Mrs. Babb's hints on staying healthy:

— Soaking your feet will stop a headache.

— Going barefoot helps enliven the body's circulation.

— Undue tenderness in the feet indicates trouble spots elsewhere in the body.

— Cutting up, boiling and then drinking the juice of a star cactus helps sufferers of rheumatism.

Judge criticized for defendent's sentence

HOUSTON (AP) — A state appeals court chastised a judge who allowed a defendant to spend 16 months in jail for a six-month sentence.

The First Court of Civil Appeals blasted the action by County Court-at-Law Judge Jimmy Duncan as "shocking to our sense of justice." One member of the three-justice panel wrote, "This injustice was done intentionally."

Cleveland Hicks Jr., 25, was convicted of criminal trespass and sentenced June 23, 1982, to 180 days in the Harris County Jail.

Hicks already had served 200 days in jail before his sentencing and Duncan ordered that he be credited with that time. But Hicks said he wanted to appeal the conviction and Duncan ordered, "Execution of the sentence is deferred to await the judgment" of the appeals court.

Hicks was returned to jail, where he remained until this week. Duncan said he thought the defendant's court-appointed lawyers had paid the $2,500 appeal bond.

'Insanity' may free defendent

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Jurors must weigh a tape recording that prosecutors describe as "23 minutes of murder" against Paul Wolf's claim that he was insane when he killed a Rio Grande Valley couple last summer.

The 21-year-old La Feria farmer has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity to the murders of Leticia Castro and Billy Staton, both 26. He testified that he killed Staton — the former husband of Wolf's wife — because he was upset about a child visitation fight.

If jurors decide that Wolf was insane at the time of the murders, he will be set free under Texas law, said Cameron County District Attorney Rey Cantu.

Youth sentenced to life

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 16-year-old has been sentenced to life in prison for the slaying of an elderly man.

State District Judge Gordon Gray said he was surprised by the sentence returned by jurors Friday after a weeklong trial.

Lonnie Slaughter was certified to stand trial as an adult for the Sept. 30 stabbing death of Alexander Ewing, 87. Ewing's 79-year-old wife Velma also was everely beaten.

Slaughter admitted to police that he and two other members of a teen-age gang burglarized Ewing's home. He told investigators one of the other youths stabbed Ewing in the chest when the man surprised the three, and prosecutors relied on the "law of parties" in seeking to convict Slaughter of murder.

Texas law provides that an individual is responsible for a murder if he aids others in committing it.

Slaughter never took the witness stand, but court-appointed attorney BillLeonard dwelled on his client's age, saying, "Perhaps there is something that can be salvaged of the life of a 16-year-old boy."

Prosecutor Pamela Moore, however, accused Slaughter of "hiding behind the cloak of youthfulness" and asked the jury to return a life sentence.

Bob Bullock wants to be governor

AUSTIN (AP) — Political algebra: Bob Bullock is to Mark White as Mark White was to Bill Clements.

While Clements was governor, White, then attorney general, prepared his successful run for Clements' job. Now Comptroller Bullock wants White's job.

"My Lord, I'd take a test with him any day of the week about government. He's had no legislative experience and that's being reflected at this time," said Bullock, who, like White, is a Democrat.

As attorney general, White was in the enviable position of being Clements' lawyer. Bullock is in the perhaps more enviable position of being White's banker.

Under the Texas Constitution, the comptroller tells lawmakers how much they have to spend. To spend more than the Bullock estimate, legislators would have to raise taxes — and Bullock has thrice dropped the revenue estimate this year.

To get those taxes enacted, White would have to sign the bill.

"Bullock wants a tax bill," said Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Pollok. "Not that he wants a tax bill, but I think he would like to see Gov. White back a tax bill."

At a recent freshman legislator breakfast, Bullock, at his salty best, scolded the lawmakers for slow action on appropriations.

After the woodshed session, Rep. Steve Carriker, D-Roby, said, "He was basically running for governor."

Bullock's not worried about the complaints.

"Ever since I started the (tax) raids back in August 1975, there's been speculation that I was going to run for governor. I've been going through this for eight solid years, which is fine. It suits me," he said.

But Bullock takes umbrage at charges that he's playing with the estimate, which he said he may lower again in May. He said the continual downward revisions are necessary because of poor economic conditions — plunging sales tax receipts and sagging oil prices.

Not all freshmen lawmakers are charging politics. Rep. Kenneth Armbrister, D-Victoria, said Bullock's record of "honesty and integrity" makes such charges unwarranted. But Armbrister said Bullock's early announcement of his 1986 gubernatorial candidacy leaves the comptroller vulnerable.

Bullock told reporters last November that he wants to be governor in 1986. He said he made the decision before White's win over Clements, a Republican.

When Clements lost, Bullock hired several former Clements' workers. Bullock rehired Tony Proffitt, who left the comptroller's office last year to work for Buddy Temple's aborted run for the Democratic nomination for governor.

When Temple quit the race, giving White the nomination, Proffitt emigrated from the Democrats to Clements' camp and helped put together the tabloid that resurrected an old DWI conviction against White.

Bullock doesn't think the Proffitt record upsets Democratic Party regulars.

Bomb may be extortion plot

GRAND PRAIRIE Texas (AP) — Area Exxon dealers were asked to inspect their stations Saturday after a bombing at a service station that authorities said could be linked to an extortion plot.

"We have asked our dealers to make a normal safety inspection based on all the media coverage" of the bombing, Exxon spokesman Karl Fink of Dallas said Saturday. None of the dealers found anything amiss, he added.

No one was injured Friday when a small bomb damaged an Exxon station, a telephone booth and a police car Friday in this city between Dallas and Fort Worth.

The bomb exploded in a garbage can about 25 yards from where a police officer awaited instructions from a caller who earlier in the day demanded $114,000 in gold coins from the oil company.

Girl sicker after transplant

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 3-month-old Texas girl sufffering a rare disorder that leaves her body unable to fight infection has grown steadily weaker with pneumonia since an experimental transplant to try to save her life, a doctor says.

Stephanie Garcia of Raymondville, Texas, was transferred from John Sealy to the University of Minnesota Hospital in Minneapolis, one of two U.S. centers performing the experimental procedure.

Stephanie, who underwent a bone marrow transplant April 8, has been placed on a respirator, said Dr. Randall Goldblum, the infant's physician at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, Texas. She has been in critical condition since the operation.

"Her lung function is continuing to decrease," said Goldblum, who said he had talked to Minnesota doctors Friday afternoon. "They're trying everything known to man to get her through this period. If she could carry on for another week, we would expect her to start getting some help from the bone marrow transplant."

Man sells house for liver

HOUSTON (AP) — An oil company technician says he's putting his house on the selling block to raise money for a liver transplant.

Bill Brazier, 38, said doctors told him he is suffering from cirrhosis of the liver, probably caused by hepatitis transmitted through a blood transfusion he received 25 years ago.

Brazier, an instrument technician for Phillips Petroleum, said he wants to sell the house for $79,500. He said he must pay for his transportation to the University of Pittsburgh hospital along with 20 percent of the cost of the $60,000 operation.

LifeFlight, an air ambulance service that operates out of Hermann Hospital in Houston, has offered to let Brazier use a Lear jet for $7,500. Some commercial airlines have direct flights to Pittsburgh, but Brazier said he cannot rely on them getting him to the operating room within four hours after a liver is available.

Congress to define 'sodomy'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers are talking taxes and DWI, but they're reading sodomy.

Rep. Bill Ceverha's House Bill 2138 — "relating to defining deviate sexual intercourse" — has been copied and passed out almost 300 times, according to Helen Kinsey, supervisor of bill distribution for the Legislature.

That's close to two copies for each of the 181 legislators.

Ceverha, R-Richardson, is trying to replace the state sodomy statute that was ruled unconstitutional last August by Dallas U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer. The judge said, "Every individual has the right to be free from undue interference by the state in important and intimate personal matters."

Attorney General Jim Mattox decided last month not to appeal the Buchmeyer decision. Ceverha was unsuccessful in an effort to get the Texas Supreme Court to force Mattox to appeal.

"Texas has had some form of sodomy law since 1860. It's not fair for one person (Mattox) to unilaterally make a legislative decision and judge what is best for the state of Texas," he said.

Elna Christoper, a Mattox spokeswoman, said the attorney general did not appeal because state lawyers were "unable to present evidence showing any purpose for the statute."

The bill sponsored by Ceverha and repeatedly reproduced by the bill distribution staff is explicit and, according to one opponent, "disgusting."

It defines "sexual contact" as the "touching by one person of any part of the body of another person" with the intent to arouse or gratify.

Ceverha promises some "revelations" about homosexual life at Tuesday's House Criminal Jurisprudence Committee hearing on his bill

Houston Rep. Debra Danburg, whose district probably includes more homosexuals than any other district, called the bill "disgusting and unconstitutional."

Ceverha concedes the bill needs some rewriting, but he is intent on getting a sodomy law reinstated. The former television newsman said his intent is not to go after consenting adults behind closed doors. Ceverha sees homosexuality as a public health threat.

The moving force behind the Ceverha bill is a group called Dallas Doctors Against AIDS, an organization concerned with homosexual-related medical problems. AIDS — Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — is a sometimes fatal disease.

Inmates issue list of demands

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two inmates who grabbed hostages and holed up in a prison basement room after an escape attempt went awry issued a four-page list of "points for discussion" on Saturday, the third day of the standoff.

The hand-written list was passed through the door of the room by one of the hostages, Kostas "Gus" Mastros, said Ken Robinson, spokesman for the state Department of Corrections.

In return, prison officials handed over four sandwiches — the first food sent in since the stalemate began Thursday morning.

"It's a beginning point for us to go forward. At least it's a starting point for negotiations now," Robinson said.

He refused to disclose the contents of the message but said negotiators were "optimistic."

"It was not out of fear" of harm to the hostages that the food was provided, Robinson said.

"We were not going to give them something until we got something from them telling what they wanted to end it. We got that," he said.

Robinson said negotiators could not see into the room, but Mastros, a civilian prison data supervisor, had called out for food just before the list was issued and appeared to be fine. Four cigarettes were passed through a keyhole for one of the hostages early Friday.

Earlier, Robinson had said that the inmates' "main concern is that they want things to have in their current situation to help them where they are. We're telling them we don't want to prolong thys by making you more comfortable. We want to end this."

"The general opinion is that the longer it goes, the better it is," said Thomas Seiverling, administrative assistant to State Correctional Institution Warden George Petsock.

Telephone negotiations between the inmates and officials outside the room have been sporadic since 8:30 a.m. Thursday, when convicted murderer Louis Coviello, 26, and convicted bank robber and murder suspect Richard Henkel, 45, seized Mastros and guard Daniel Kohut at gunpoint.

The rest of the 1,300 prison inmates have been locked in their cells since Thursday morning. Sixty inmates in one section shouted and banged on cell doors briefly Friday in protest over denied commissary items such as cigarettes, Robinson said.

This cross-section of the Western Diagnostic and Classification Section of the Western Penitentiary in Pittsburgh shows where two inmates have been holed up with their hostages since Thursday morning.

Henkel and Coviello seized the hostages in the Western Diagnostic and Classification Center, a section of the prison, as the inmates were being prepared for appearances in court.

They barricaded themselves in an identification room used for processing inmate transfers.

Gladys Russell of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Coviello's mother, and her daughter, Gigi Coviello, 21, arrived at the prison Saturday morning hoping to talk to Coviello, but were turned away. Prison officials have not permitted family members to become involved in the negotiations.

"The waiting and waiting, the longer I waited the more tension I felt," said Mrs. Russell.

Coviello's father, Joseph, and sister, Lois Johnson, went three times Friday to the prison on Pittsburgh's north side, but they were not allowed to speak with him, Robinson said.

Henkel, Coviello and a third inmate were being strip-searched Thursday morning in preparation for transportation to a pre-trial hearing when the incident began.

Reagan declares disaster in Mississippi

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today declared a major disaster in Mississippi after tornadoes and flooding swept the area earlier this month.

The disaster declaration allows federal money to be used in relief and recovery efforts in designated areas.

Paul E. Hall of the Federal Emergency Management Agency was named coordinator to work with the state in providing federal disaster aid.

Federal aid available from the Disaster Relief Fund may include temporary housing assistance, and individual and family grants.

FDIC sues oilman

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — An Oklahoma City oilman and his wife have been sued by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. in an effort to collect more than $7.8 million in overdue loans from the defunct Penn Square Bank.

The federal suit was filed Friday against Harold H. Clifford III and Cherry K. Clifford by the FDIC, which took over the bank after it folded last July 5.

The suit also asks a federal judge to order repayment of more than $423,000 in overdrafts on the Cliffords' personal Penn Square checking account.

Stuntman becomes painter

NORTH ROYALTON, Ohio (AP) — A bear of a man sits in the doorway of a modest motel room, the diamonds on his motorcycle-shaped pinkie ring doing wheelies in the afternoon sunlight.

He is Ohio's best kept secret. And that suits Evel Knievel just fine.

The privacy and solitude of this unpretentious Cleveland suburb are perfect for the former motorcycle daredevil's new task in life — art. Knievel no longer wants to waltz with death. He now wants to choreograph life with a paint brush.

"Painting, and being withdrawn from life as I am, makes me happy," says the man who once planned to jump 40,000 feet from an airplane onto a haystack — without a parachute.

"You have to pay a price for success. The public thinks Evel Knievel should be able to jump over an ocean. How can a man live up to that?"

He grabs a helping hand and rises from the doorstep. Both his arms have steel rods running through them. The rest of him is a patchwork of the 30 or so broken and splintered bones that somehow managed to heal. It shows when he walks — gingerly, slowly.

"I CAN'T heal up any longer," he says, pulling up his sweater sleeve to show a line of scars from surgical stitches. "If I were to continue to perform, I might lose my life."

His fingers are twisted. His knuckles are bulbous. But only a hairline scar at the corner of his lower lip mars his tanned face. At 44, Knievel is still powerfully muscled. He plays golf and does push-ups every day.

AP Laserphoto

Forty-four-year-old motorcycle stuntman Evel Knievel gets a big hug from his four-year-old daughter Alicia during a recent interview in Cleveland.

Knievel has been in and out of Ohio for the past two years working for the Legends Corp., a commercial art company. Few people in the Cleveland area recognize the man who once boasted that he wrote 50 autographs a day. They know him at the motel off Route 77. He's a regular at The Wine Merchant restaurant.

Two years ago, he decided to end his career as a motorcycle stuntman. He said it was the hardest thing he'd ever done.

"I couldn't decide whether to destroy my life as a performer," he says in a quiet voice. "I couldn't admit that I wasn't the great daredevil I once was. If it wasn't for the great friends I had in Chicago, who put their arms around me and fed me and helped me to stop drinking, I wouldn't have made it."

Knievel is paying off a tax debt to the federal government. "I paid them $2.5 million," he says. "I'm trying my very best to pay them. I'm giving up stock, toy royalties." He declines to says just how much he owes.

HE HAS YET to pay a dime toward a $12.7 million damage award to Sheldon Saltman, a former television executive Knievel beat with a baseball bat in 1977 because he objected to what Saltman had written about him in the book, "Evel on Tour."

Knievel spends part of each year in Florida and at his son's home in Butte, Mont. For the several months a year he spends here, Knievel paints wildlife and outdoors scenes from photographs. His paneled office is choked with his works of Indians, grizzlies, deer and birds.

"I'm now in the art business full-time," he says, sipping from a bottle of beer in his office. "I may not be the best painter in the world, but in the next five years, Evel Knievel will be the best known...painter in the world."

Legends has 40 paintings by Knievel and is putting together a brochure to send to art galleries throughout the United States.

Tower backs 'cat amendment'

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Sen. John G. Tower, R., Texas, a cat lover himself, joined with Sen. William Proxmire, D., Wis., in sponsoring an amendment to the authorization bill for the Department of Housing and Urban Development which would let old people living in public housing keep their pets.

At present, in HUD public housing, pets are forbidden.

Tower spoke up commending Proxmire for the amendment. (It is about the only time the two ever agreed on anything as they are poles apart on Defense spending which Tower authorizes as chairman of the Senate Armed Services committee.)

Tower also took advantage of the occasion to announce "not only am I a cat lover myself, but my pussy cat has just had five tabby kittens and in about three weeks they will be available for adoption."

The room full of interested citizens at this final draft work session of the full Banking, Housing and Urban Development committee smiled as the Senators adopted what is now called "The Cat Amendment." Senator Tower is hopeful that with this advertising that he will have some takers for the kittens.

Deadly chicks located

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — About 400 stuffed Easter chicks containing arsenic have been sold through floral shops in the Phoenix area, a spokesman for the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission said Saturday.

Bill Biggs said there have been no reported incidents of arsenic poisoning due to contact with the decorative chicks, which were stuffed in China and shipped to the United States for use in floral arrangements.

The chicks have been recalled by the importers.

Authorities in Ohio, where the alert began earlier this month, have said the chicks turned up in Indiana, Georgia, California and Washington as well as Ohio. The chicks also have been reported in the Dallas area.

Society meditates with dying, helps families accept death

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Patricia Shelton wants to change the way people die. She wants to ease their pain and fear and loneliness. So she meditates with the dying, and teaches their families to provide the same comfort.

Meditation can help dying people to "let go, eases their pain and brings some measure of peace," Ms. Shelton said.

"They already have dropped most everyday concerns. But they still have the ultimate fear: the fear of death." The sick person can learn to relinquish that, too, a little at a time, she said.

About seven years ago, Ms. Shelton founded a small meditation group called the Clear Light Society, a non-profit, non-denominational group that serves people in New England. On invitation, members of the group will visit dying people at home, in hospitals or nursing homes. Clear Light charges no set fee.

The first visit gives the dying person and the family a chance to look the group over and "see that we're perfectly sane people," Ms. Shelton said. "Then, if they want us back, they have to invite us back. They always do."

In 45-minute sessions four or five times a week, the sick person lies down, relaxes and concentrates on his or her breathing while the society member repeats a prayer or mantra. At the very least, the dying person has someone paying attention to him or her, not to the illness.

"IF THE SOCIETY can change the way people are dying, then I find the work not depressing at all," Ms. Shelton said. "On the contrary, what's depressing is that when the word death is mentioned, people run."

Families and friends often avoid talking about death with the dying because they are afraid to broach the subject. And dying people sometimes compound the problem, desperately searching for any distraction and heightening their fear by not facing it, said Peggy Franczak of Brentwood, who became involved with Clear Light about five years ago.

"They'll talk about their pain, they'll talk about their relatives, they'll talk about anything," said Mrs. Franczak. "They'll watch television right up to the last minute rather than face this great yawning question: Who am I and where am I going?"

The sessions conducted by Clear Light do not answer those questions, or even explicitly ask them. But the meditation can soothe, said Ms. Shelton, 51, who started working with the dying on her own about 12 years ago, after the death of a close friend.

"Those who want to work with us must study for years," she said. "Many people want to take a weekend seminar in death and dying. Would you want someone who'd taken a weekend course visiting your dying mother? I wouldn't."

HER STUDENTS meditate together every morning at 6:45 and three nights a week. Once a month they meet for weekend retreats. Of the dozen or so people studying with her, only three are yet allowed to meditate with dying people.

Ms. Shelton is a student of the five major religions: Christianity, Buddhism, Islam, Hinduism and Judaism.

"Our practitioners have a full repertoire, all the world religions. If you're Jewish, we'll be there for you in English or in Hebrew. If you're agnostic, we're agnostic," Ms. Shelton said.

If the person is Christian, the Clear Light practitioner or family member might repeat the Prayer of the Heart: "Lord Jesus Christ, have mercy on me." The prayer is spoken as the sick person exhales.

"There's not one breath you ever took that you've been able to keep," Ms. Shelton said. "So being aware of breathing is a great lesson. It's a wonderful teacher; it's always saying 'Let go.'"

Mrs. Franczak recalled one man she met through her work, a man she said was too angry to die.

"He was emaciated with cancer, just a living yellow skeleton in agony on a bed. He just curled up and lay in anger with his face to the wall, trying to die — and this went on for months," she said.

"But at the very end, there was an opening. I asked him if I could say a prayer and he nodded. As I said the Jesus prayer, his eyes burned into mine, just burned. He died a few hours later."

MRS. FRANCZAK SAID it was the memory of her mother's death — alone in the confusion of the hospital — that prompted her to join the group.

"She died there, amidst her bottles and tubes and things," she said. "Even in the midst of crowds, people are dying alone."

"You can get the best medical help, the best doctors — it's not enough," said Ms. Shelton. "It still can leave you with a sense of helplessness and frustration."

Man sues armored car firm for losing money

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Joey Coyle, acquitted of theft charges after finding sacks containing $1.2 million on a street, has sued the armored car company whose truck lost the money, his attorney said.

Attorney Harold Kane, who filed the suit Friday against Purolator Armored Services Inc., said Coyle's life has not been the same since he saw the two sacks of money lying at a city intersection on Feb. 26, 1981.

Coyle, unemployed at the time, scooped up the money and gave away much of it in what his psychiatrists called a "manic phase" in which he did not know right from wrong.

The FBI apprehended Coyle and charged him with theft as he was trying to flee to Mexico with $105,000 tucked in his boots.

Gonzalez: Law will aid housing

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Congress will pass a housing law this year to give the nation more homes for people in San Antonio and the nation, predicted Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D., San Antonio, chairman of the housing sub-committee of the House of Representatives.

Gonzalez spoke at a breakfast he hosted for British members of the House of Commons committee who are surveying environmental matters. The Texas congressman brought together other congressmen from states with a variety of solutions, from putting prefabricated houses on vacant lots to building homes fom vacated old factory buildings.

The British chairman of the environmental committee, Labour Member of Parliment Reginald Freeson, the former minister of the environment in Britain, suggested there ought to be a British-U.S. committee on housing to meet regularly to exchange ideas. Gonzalez had thought of that, too.

Gonzalez deplored the fact that 30-year, low interest mortgages which he and other congressmen said was one of the best things that ever happened to this country are now rare. Gonzalez said "some will claim to provide them but if you look closely in the fine print, the contracts call for adjusting interest rates every three years," he said.

Puppets aid in acceptance of handicaps

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Renaldo Rodriguez, almost blind, walks with a cane. Brenda Dubrowski has a weight problem. Ellen Jane Peterson has Down's syndrome. Jennifer Hauser has a learning disability. Mark Reilly has cerebral palsy.

If they were real people, some children would make fun of them or avoid them. But they are 3-foot puppets who try to teach children how to accept other youngsters with handicaps.

Their message gets through.

"I have a friend that is like you, and a friend that is blind and both are so sweet and try their best to make friends," one child wrote to puppet Ellen Jane after a performance at Franklin Academy here.

Since the show "Kids on the Block" began performing last September at schools throughout Alabama, more than 7,500 children and adults have seen it.

The hand puppets "talk" about living with handicaps, answer questions from other puppet characters who are not handicapped and then take questions from the children.

Puppet Mark tells the children he has "double trouble" because he cannot walk and has a speech impediment, too.

"Aren't you sad because you can't do anything?" he is asked.

"But I can," he responds. "I can swim the length of the pool. I can do 'wheelies' in my wheelchair. I can do so many things."

In addition to teaching children about problems, the program also is designed to help teachers learn how to deal with placing students with handicaps and learning disabilities in regular classrooms.

Dr. Gayle Gear of the University of Alabama in Birmingham school of education coordinates the program under two federal grants totaling $400,000.

The project has reached virtually every teacher in the state, and many parents, through publications, seminars and other methods. But it is the puppet show that captivates teachers and students.

"Our teachers are getting valuable feedback from our children," Principal Joe Tortorici said after a performance at Green Acres Elementary School.

"We are not sermonizing or lecturing," said Ms. Gear. "We are just giving a message. It allows kids to ask those questions they always have wanted to ask.

"The puppets allow them to react in a non-threatening situation. The puppets answer questions so sensitively, so warmly, it allows the children to learn some very valuable lessons of life."

Although the show is designed to teach non-disabled children about handicaps, she said, children without disabilities "also have suffered from name-calling, from non-understanding of other children in school."

"You don't have to be labeled handicapped to get the message and appreciate the performance," she said. "Adults respond, too. They choke up because they have had years and years of repressing their feelings toward the handicapped."

The puppets have received hundreds of letters from children.

"I have been like you for 11 years and I go to a special class," one child wrote to puppet Jennifer, "but I also go to a privet tutor and I have a learning disabilities. They call me penguin feet, and I hate it but I really hate it when they call me frog eyes. I wish thay stop."

Another letter: "Do you like people make in fun of you? I am your friend because people make in fun me too because I talk different. And it does hurt my feeling too..."

The letters reveal that children "are so willing to share their feelings," Ms. Gear said.

Texans help defeat nuclear freeze

By PAT MULHOLLAND

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The House on Wednesday defeated by a 229-190 vote an amendment to a non-binding nuclear freeze resolution which would provide a "mutual guaranteed buildown" of Soviet and American nuclear arms by discarding two old nuclear weapons for every new one built.

On a similar note, the House adopted by a 219-195 margin a substitute amendment that put aside a proposal requiring negotiations to reduce nuclear stockpiles to occur before the number of weapons can be limited.

Opponents say the proposals would have allowed the United States and Soviet Union to continue building new destabilizing weapons systems rather than freeze weapons systems followed by additional reductions.

Supporters of the proposals say the development of new nuclear weapons, to replace the old weapons systems, is beneficial to maintaining national security if a freeze on the number of weapons is imposed.

The House did not complete action on the resolution. A final vote is expected April 20.

SENATE APPROVES ADELMAN FOR ARMS AGENCY

The Senate confirmed President Reagan's controversial selection for director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, Kenneth L. Adelman, on a 57-42 vote Thursday.

The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is charged with developing arms control policy for the administration.

Opponents of Adelman have criticized him for lack of experience in the arms control field and for his relative youth. He is 36.

Supporters of the former assistant to United Nations Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick said he was qualified for the job and has the necessary "leverage" inside the administration to pursue an effective arms control policy.

FOR: John Tower (R).

AGAINST: Lloyd Bentsen (D).

Minor earthquakes shake San Fernando Valley area

SAN FERNANDO, Calif. (AP) — Two minor earthquakes shook the San Fernando Valley briefly on Saturday, shaking some residents awake, but causing no injuries or damage.

The quakes measured 3.8 on the Richter scale, said Dennis Meredith of the California Institute of Technology Seismology Laboratory in Pasadena. The intensity was measured at 3.6 by the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colorado.

The first tremor hit at 4:25, and was followed by the second jolt 80 seconds later, Meredith said.

Both were centered five miles west of San Fernando, which is 25 miles northwest of Los Angeles, and were felt at least 10 miles away in Valencia.

Detroit buys 10 $1,290 chairs

DETROIT (AP) — The city of Detroit, which Mayor Coleman Young declared in a state of emergency from hunger because of high unemployment, has bought 10 new chairs — priced at $1,290 each — for the City Council.

"No chair is worth that much — not even golden ones," Councilman David Eberhard said, adding he had expected them to cost $200 and "certainly not more than $600."

The light brown leather chairs were delivered to the council chambers last weekend.

Mel Ravitz, a councilman who has been using a wooden chair since he took office 15 months ago, added that the new luxury models "aren't even as comfortable as the one I was sitting on."

County clears way for suits

MARIPOSA, Calif. (AP) — In a formal step to clear the way for lawsuits, Mariposa County supervisors have denied $14.5 million in initial claims filed by relatives of three Secret Service agents killed in an auto collision ahead of Queen Elizabeth II's motorcade.

The California Highway Patrol concluded that Mariposa County Sheriff's Sgt. Roderick Sinclair was at fault in the March 5 head-on collision before the queen's visit to Yosemite National Park.

Sinclair was driving 75 mph on a 35-mph curve when his patrol car crossed the center line and struck the rented Secret Service car, the highway patrol found.

Moonshiners make comeback

MUNSON, Fla. (AP) — Spurred by unemployment and a possible hike in liquor taxes, moonshiners are making a comeback in the Florida Panhandle, a state beverage agent says.

Beverage agents and deputies from two local sheriff's departments staked out a still Tuesday in thick woods about 30 miles north of here near the Alabama border.

Wearing camouflage overalls, Lt. Bob Baxley, a beverage control agent, waited and watched a man carrying two 50-pound bags of grain on his shoulders.

But the man saw the officers and raced through the tangled woods. He got away, Baxley said.

At the still, officers found nine 55-gallon drums of sour mash. Each drum could produce 5 gallons of clear whiskey. The officers also found about a 400-gallon cooking pot.

Developer acquires Irvine Co.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A 50-year-old land developer has acquired control of Irvine Co., the county's biggest landowner with 75,000 acres.

Donald L. Bren, who already owned 35 percent of the land company, bought out five other investors Friday, apparently ending a six-year feud over long-range plans to develop Orange County.

Although details of the private transaction were not released, its value has been estimated at between $350 million and $500 million.

Laid-off steelworker abandons home

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — Benny Mannifield, unemployed for a year, watched his wife, Nida, give the neighbors one last, tearful hug.

"There's just nothing around here any more," he said. "My unemployment compensation ran out the first of the month, so me and the wife and the dog are leaving."

Like their counterparts in the Great Depression of the 1930s, the Mannifields on Friday abandoned their home in search of jobs and a future.

"We're just leaving the house for the bank to take over," Mannifield said before departing for Roanoke, Va.

A day earlier the U.S. Labor Department had announced that for the fifth straight month, West Virginia had the nation's highest unemployment rate. Gov. Jay Rockefeller's administration says the state's jobless rate is about 14 percent; the federal figure places it at 21 percent.

Mannifield, a tall, friendly man in his late 30s, isn't interested in that debate. All he knows is that there are no jobs, and no prospects of jobs, in West Virginia.

"I tried everything," he said.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, West Virginia, which recorded a population increase during the coal boom of the early '70s, has been losing residents for the past two years.

THAT COMES AS no surprise to Allen Cremeans, who runs a truck and trailer rental business in Huntington.

"We see people coming in here all the time who are leaving the state," he said. "A lot of them say that they're out of work. They say they're tired of fooling with it."

Like the Mannifields, most of the migrants are headed south.

"A year ago everybody was going to Texas," Cremeans said. "These days, they're going to the Southeast, to Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas. Hardly anybody ever goes up North."

He said many of his customers are too broke to afford trucks and have to settle for small trailers or sometimes just trailer hitches.

"This is probably the hardest-hit city in the state," Cremeans said. "For a while there, somebody was coming in every day, looking for a job, but not any more. I think everybody's just given up."

Talk of economic recovery rings hollow to many of the jobless in West Virginia, which economists say is likely to lag behind the rest of the country due to its dependence on coal and heavy industry.

Although the national unemployment rate has been dropping in the past few months; West Virginia's has continued to rise — jumping more than four percentage points since November.

SLUMPING AUTO SALES began affecting the state's steel mills nearly two years ago. Coal mine layoffs soon followed, and now the effects have trickled down into all sectors of the state's economy.

Statewide, about 160,000 people are out of work, according to federal statistics. Many of the jobs they once held no longer exist.

Figures released this month by the state Employment Security Department indicate that 52,500 jobs have simply disappeared in West Virginia in the last three years, with the biggest losses coming in manufacturing and construction.

Union officials vow to stop firm's purchase of British steel.

HOMESTEAD, Pa. (AP) — Upset by U.S. Steel Corp.'s proposal to buy British steel, about 100 United Steelworkers union officials from mills around the country met to pledge support for workers at the company's Fairless Works plant.

"We've got to stop British steel from coming into this country. And we've got to stick together," said USW Local 1397 President Ron Weisen, a union dissident who conducted the Friday meeting at the union hall in Homestead, just south of Pittsburgh.

"If they get Fairless, they're going to get us. They're going to get everybody," said Local 2227 President Mike Bonn of nearby West Mifflin.

The USW local presidents vowed to try to reopen their latest contract agreement and strike if any foreign steel is delivered to the plant near Philadelphia.

They also agreed to draft a letter to USW President Lloyd McBride, asking that part of the union's strike fund be used to send members to Philadelphia to rally in protest of U.S. Steel's proposal. A date for the rally has not been set.

Weisen said he invited McBride to Friday's meeting, but received no reply. The day-long session was not sanctioned by the international union, so the local presidents could not take formal action.

China says its gunners shelled Vietnam border

PEKING (AP) — China said its gunners shelled Vietnam's northern border barricades Saturday in retaliation for what the government called Vietnamese bombardment that killed or wounded at least 15 soldiers and peasants planting spring crops.

Chinese and Vietnamese frontier forces have fired at each other sporadically since they fought a one-month border war in February, 1979, but Saturday was the first time China reported retaliating with artillery.

"The Chinese frontier guards were forced to fire back at the Vietnamese provocations and are closely watching the development of the situation," the official news agency Xinhua said.

It said a Chinese observation post reported that artillery fire from the southwest Guangxi autonomous region destroyed earthen defense barricades of the Vietnamese troops.It did not say whether any Vietnamese were killed or wounded.

Vietnam had no immediate response to the Chinese reports. Its official news agency earlier accused Chinese troops of five serious incursions and mortar and artillery attacks on Vietnamese territory between Tuesday and Thursday. It said a Chinese platoon intruded into Vietnam on Wednesday, firing at hamlets and burning houses.

On April 7, Xinhua said earlier, Chinese troops returned fire to rescue 34 Chinese peasants after Vietnamese troops started shooting at them as they worked in a field. It said a 13-year-old Chinese boy was seriously wounded.

Last Sunday, China lodged a "strong protest" with the Vietnamese Embassy, accusing Vietnamese troops of killing or wounding 14 Chinese border-area residents in March.

Police seize Solidarity supporters

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police seized at least 26 Solidarity supporters, along with radio transmitters and printing presses, in a crackdown against the underground in Warsaw and eight other cities, state television reported Saturday. It said one of those seized was plotting May Day protests.

The announcement came after Solidarity chief Lech Walesa's driver was released from 25 hours' interrogation in Gdansk and a summons was issued for Walesa's spokesman, Adam Kinszewski, to appear for questioning Monday.

The driver, Mieczyslaw Wachowski, said he told police nothing about Walesa's weekend meeting with fugitive union leaders. Walesa was questioned for five hours Wednesday and his wife Danuta for three hours Thursday, but they also said they told police nothing.

Solidarity's underground Temporary Coordinating Commission issued a communique Thursday calling for nationwide protest marches on May Day. Walesa declined to endorse the protest call publicly, but said he and the underground had agreed to coordinate policies.

The TV report Saturday did not name any of the five members of the Temporary Coordinating Commission as being among those seized.

The most important figure reported detained in the crackdown, which apparently took place Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, was Zbigniew Belz, a member of Solidarity's elected 107-member National Commission. He is from Gorzow Wielkopolski, a city of 110,000 in western Poland.

The report said Belz had "been in hiding since (the martial law declaration of) Dec. 13, 1981," and was apprehended in possession of "Western radio equipment." He was helping to organize May 1 demonstrations in his region, it said, and was among 12 people taken into custody in Gorzow Wielkopolski.

Ten members of the disbanded nationalist Confederation of Independent Poland, a group with Solidarity links, were arrestd in Plock, 54 miles west of Warsaw.

"The authorities proved they had been carrying out anti-state activities and distributing illegal publications containing false information about the situation in the country," the report said. It did not identify any of them by name.

The report said four people were arrested in Warsaw in connection with the seizure Wednesday night of a Radio Solidarity transmitter that authorities claimed was powerful enough to broadcast to the entire country.

The report indentified them as Janina Jaszczuk, Miroslaw Jaszczuk, Czeslaw Dygant, and Jerzy Jastrzebowski, a member of Solidarity's National Commission, elected in September 1980.

"Jastrzebowski was a coordinator of the so-called Radio Solidarity," the television report said. The union's underground radio network made its most recent broadcast in Warsaw on Friday night.

The TV report said "illegal printing houses in Krakow, Wroclaw, Katowice, Lublin, Rzeszow and Olsztyn have been seized."

It also said that "security forces in Warsaw detained members and seized equipment of the so-called Student Workers' Cooperative Committee of Solidarity."

Three printing machines were impounded, the report said, but it did not indicate how many people were detained or give their identities. The "Cooperative Committee" was unknown to to Western reporters.

Solidarity, the only independent union in the Soviet bloc, was suspended with the imposition of martial law and was outlawed last October.

Walesa was freed from 11 months' martial law internment in November and has taken an increasingly bold position against the Communist regime in recent weeks.

Pope John Paul II is expected to return to his Polish homeland in June, but the government has said peace must prevail if the visit is to take place as scheduled.

Poland experiences baby boomlet

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Little Marysia marked her first birthday the other day, easily the center of attention at her parents' small, modestly furnished home on the 11th floor of one of Warsaw's anonymous, grey apartment buildings.

She was wearing a new woolen dress adorned with red ribbon for the family, friends and a foreign visitor who stopped by to share in the quiet celebration of one tottering example of what Poland's soldier-leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, calls the "manifestation of our nation's vitality."

Marysia, who matched the Polish height and weight averages for new born children (20 inches; 7.7 pounds), was one of 702,400 Poles born in 1982 which, together with the year before, represented the most turbulent, uncertain and disillusioning period in Poland's troubled recent past.

During those divisive months, the clamorous independent labor movement Solidarity — with which so many Poles associated their aspirations — grew increasingly bold in its challenge to the Communist government, which ultimately ordered a sweeping military crackdown to dampen the threat.

A LATE-NIGHT to early-morning curfew lasted 4½ months; its removal coincided with the first spasm of sometimes-violent street demonstrations, which authorities met with intimidating force.

The period seemed scarcely propitious for having children.

Marysia's mother, Krystyna, 29, a mathematics teacher, said the times and the prospects for her daughter's future "bother me so much I don't like to think about them."

Despite the tumult — and even though the government allows abortions and provides artificial birth control — Poland in 1982 experienced a baby boomlet. The 702,400 Polish offspring — 10.2 births per 1,000 people — represented a two-decade national peak, and one of the highest birth rates in Europe.

Demographics were surely at work. More than half of the country's 36.4 million people are 30 or younger, and last year's upsurge "echoes the baby boom of the 1950s," the newspaper Zycie Warszawy (Warsaw Life) reported in March.

There were, to be sure, a variety of other compelling factors — historic, nationalistic and pragmatic. Students of the nation's history point to the cohesive tendency of Polish families in disquieting times; the hearth has been a traditional haven.

"PEOPLE FIND joy having families in a depressing period," said Krzysztof, a 30-year-old recent father, who like others interviewed on the subject asked not to be fully identified.

The boomlet, said a veteran Western analyst in Warsaw, may have been a delayed consequence of the curfew which virtually halted Polish night life in the first months of martial law.

"It would make sense when you have a curfew," the analyst said. "When people can't go anywhere, they go to bed."

It's also likely that Poland's suddenly enhanced fertility rate — it was sufficiently depressed a few years ago to prompt official concern — constituted a quiet protest.

"Adversity produces a backlash in this country and this (surge in the birth rate) is a backlash," said another recent father, who named his son Sebastian, after the Roman soldier canonized by the Roman Catholic Church because he accepted death rather than renounce his faith.

New parents, he added, "are looking to the future. If it's a lousy situation, one must do his utmost to minimize the effects on his family. We want this country to live."

"AND ONE DAY, there might be a break in the clouds."

Other, more mundane motivations also contributed to the boomlet.

The parents of Marysia, an energetic, brown-eyed girl with a round, pleasant countenance, said they waited for a measure of independence — until they could move from the husband's parents' place to an apartment of their own — before starting a family.

"There was no way we could have had a child before," Marysia's mother said. She added that financial burdens most likely will keep their family to two children, and that she is considering giving up teaching and accepting the state's standing offer to new mothers of up to three years of partly paid maternity leave.

Monet able to capture 'instantaneous' beauty

PARIS (AP) — Claude Monet loved Giverny, his home along the Seine where he painted the sun-drenched water lilies that made him legend. Now, 100 years after he moved to the Normandy village, critics are in love with an exhibit of his works inspired by his pastoral home.

A retrospective at the Marais Cultural Center celebrates the birth of the most brilliant and productive period of the father of Impressionism.

"The show is dazzling...An event of this magnitude is not likely to happen again," wrote Veronique Prat, art critic for Figaro Magazine.

Large crowds have come to the exhibit of 51 paintings, done at Giverny between 1883 and his death in 1926.

Among the most talked about pieces are 20 paintings from American collections, many of them never shown before in Europe.

"The paintings from America and Japan have come home to Paris for the first time," wrote Miss Prat. She singled out Monet's "Poppy Field," on loan from the Smith College Museum in Northampton, Mass., as a high point.

Monet once said he could not do anything besides paint and garden. He loved to return to his rambling house and 2½-acre garden at Giverny where he did both.

"I am filled with delight. Giverny is a splendid spot for me," wrote the painter scarcely one month after settling permanently there in 1883 when in his early 40s.

He was a stout man with a fine taste for food and wine. But his passion was the outdoors. He painted even in the rain.

Monet worked furiously to catch the last rays of a setting sun or the gentle rippling of a lily pond — the beauty of the "instantaneous," he called it.

It was at Giverny that the master of hazy, dreamlike atmospheres began painting the haystacks and the misty-colored water lilies for which he is famous. His renowned series of the Rouen Cathedral was also done at Giverny.

His use of color and perspective and subtle interplay of light and water changed the course of modern art.

Artists including Cezanne, Renoir, Rodin, Sisley, Pissarro, Matisse and Americans John Singer Sargent and Theodore Robinson visited Monet's paradise.

Nicaraguan patrol seizes U.S. fishermen

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The crew of an unmarked Nicaraguan patrol boat fired shots and captured three American fishermen and their guides, apparently in Costa Rican waters, the U.S. Embassy and witnesses said Saturday.

Nicaragua issued a statement almost immediately after the incident Friday saying the boats had been in Nicaraguan waters when they were captured. A U.S. Embassy spokesman and fishermen on the expedition who were not captured denied it. Costa Rica filed a protest note with Nicaragua.

The Nicaraguans towed the Americans in two boats to the Nicaraguan port of Bluefields, the informants said.

A Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry source in Managua said the three Americans, two Costa Rican guides and the boats would be returned to Costa Rican authorities Saturday.

Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista regime has accused the Reagan administration of backing anti-Sandinista guerrillas infiltrating from Honduras, Nicaragua's northern neighbor, but there was no indication the Sandinistas were linking the latest incident to the guerrilla war.

One of the three captured Americans was identified as Harry Kime, of Orange County, Calif., and a frequent visitor to a fishing lodge near Barra del Colorado, a few miles south of the Nicaraguan border on Costa Rica's Caribbean coast.

The other two Americans were not immediately identified.

Joseph Bovino, a retired Bayside, N.Y., businessman, and his son Jarald, a Toledo, Ohio, physician, were in one of five 16-foot "johnboats" that set out early Friday on a fishing trip.

They told The Associated Press Friday night that they saw a rusty but armed 50-foot trawler approach from the direction of Nicaragua and pull up next to their boat and one occupied by Edwin and Mitchell Ow, of Oakland, Calif.

The trawler had .50-caliber machine guns on it, they said, and most of the crew was armed and uniformed. They said it flew no flag and had no markings.

Jarald Bovino said their guide conversed briefly with the trawler crew then began to back his boat away.

"He gave it the gas and headed for the Colorado River mouth," he said.

The Bovinos said the boat with the Ows in it did likewise but that the trawler was between two other boats and the shore so those vessels could not escape.

"We heard several bursts of automatic weapons fire," said the younger Bovino. He said they did not see the bullets hit because they were face down on the floor of their boat.

They said the trawler chased them briefly and then turned its attention to the two boats that had been trapped.

The guide of the fifth boat had spotted the trawler earlier and headed for safety before it neared, the Bovinos said. They said the fifth boat had no radio and could not warn the others.

The Bovinos said their boats were about two miles north of the Colorado River mouth which would put them at least 10 miles inside Costa Rican waters.

They and an embassy official said the landmarks setting the border are clear and known to all who ply those waters.

Nicaragua and Costa Rica have had disagreements over border issues in the past, but most centered on interpretation of an 1858 border treaty and the free use of the San Juan River, which forms a natural boundary between the two countries.

Salvadoran guerrillas isolate city of Usulutan

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The eastern city of Usulutan was isolated Saturday following guerrilla attacks on highways to the provincial capital, witnesses and military sources said.

"It is terrible here. Traffic is stopped and we are without electrical power," said Miguel Lobos, a gasoline station manager in Usulutan, 68 miles southeast of San Salvador.

Lobos said the leftist guerrillas destroyed six vehicles on the road between Usulutan and San Miguel, 15 miles to the east, on Friday.

"They set fire to a bus and killed a woman, burning her inside the bus," he said. "Almost everyone is afraid to go out in vehicles because they are burning them indiscriminately."

The rebels took the town of Estanzuelas, in northern Usulutan province, killing eight soldiers and capturing three, and burned or bombed 14 vehicles in the area on Friday, local military sources said.

Early Saturday, guerrillas burned five vehicles near the Cuscatlan bridge, 55 miles east of San Salvador.

On the coast highway, 10 miles west of Usulutan near the city of Jiquilisco, guerrillas burned a gas station and several vehicles on Friday, the military sources said.

Electricity to Usulutan has been cut off since late Thursday when guerrilla sabotage blacked out the eastern provinces for the 14th time this year.

Guerrilla attacks also interrupted telephone communication to many eastern towns.

Interrupting transportation and cutting electrical power are tactics frequently used by the guerrillas.

Saint asked for protection from lava

NICOLOSI, Sicily (AP) — Townspeople marched in a religious procession Saturday to ask their patron saint for protection against rivers of lava from Mount Etna's latest eruption.

The town is six miles from the most advanced point of the lava, which began flowing three weeks ago.

The marchers prayed to St. Agatha to halt the destructive flow and carried a veil believed to have belonged to her.

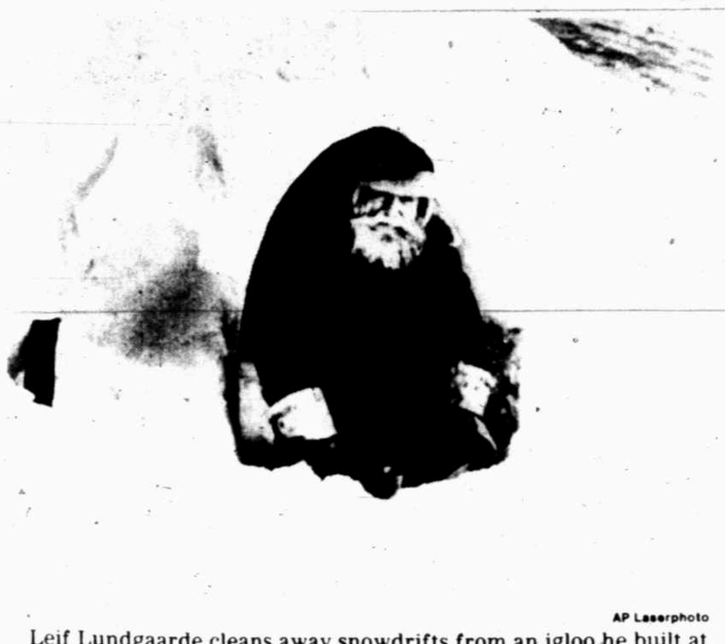
Canadians' project put on ice



AP Laserphoto

Leif Lundgaarde cleans away snowdrifts from an igloo he built at Ice Station Cesar on an Arctic ice floe where scientists are studying underwater mountain ridges. Leif, a Norweigian with 20 years of Arctic experience, built the igloo to serve as an outdoor toilet when the first party of the expedition arrived two weeks ago to set up the camp.

ICE STATION CESAR, Arctic Ocean (AP) — Scientists at this desolate outpost less than 250 miles from the North Pole are probing one of the earth's least-known features and building evidence to support Canada's claim to a large chunk of the Arctic ice.

The government is spending more than $1.4 million on the project — both for scientific research and as part of a 5-year-old effort to exert sovereignty over the region. The Canadians hope to control the land in advance of any efforts by U.S. firms to exploit its unproven mineral resources, and as a hedge against Soviet activity in the area.

It still is not Canadian territory. But the red-and-white maple leaf flag, planted among the camp's 20 tents and prefabricated buildings, waves over a vista of ice — some flat, some buckled into pressure ridges — and snow that forms new designs with every wind.

The immediate goal of the scientific effort is to find out more about what lies below the base for the Canadian Expedition to Study the Alpha Ridge — known by its acronym, CESAR.

The Alpha Ridge is a jumble of undersea peaks and valleys stretching about 800 miles from Canada's Ellesmere Island toward the East Siberian Sea.

Hans Weber, a veteran Arctic explorer who is chief scientist on the expedition, says the research will determine whether Canada may lay claim to the range and any resources it may hold.

The Soviet Union has a permanent ice station about 180 miles farther west, but Weber says his primary interest is learning about the Alpha Ridge, which he calls an "enigma," rather than worrying about whose territory it might be.

"To tell you the truth, I don't give a damn," he said. "That's up to the lawyers to decide."

James Tanner, project manager for the Canadian Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, said in an interview in Ottawa that a claim would require strong evidence that the ridge is "a natural prolongation" of the continental shelf, not a free-standing mountain range.

Under the international Law of the Sea treaty — which was rejected by Washington but signed by Ottawa — Canada would have 10 years to apply to extend its offshore economic zone, currently 200 miles, out over the ridge.

About three weeks ago, Canadian Forces soldiers began work on the camp by chopping and blasting a 1,600-yard runway out of the drifting pack ice.

Equipment, food and fuel was carried to the site by aircraft. Working with numbed hands in the 24-hour sunlight, scientists and support staff assembled their tents and unloaded more than 1,000 barrels of fuel.

Fourteen journalists spent three days at the ice station, observing science in slow motion. Bundled against 40-below temperatures, scientists struggle to keep sensitive equipment operating inside drafty tents heated by diesel stoves.

A team headed by Ruth Jackson, a geophysicist with the Bedford Institute of Oceanography in Nova Scotia, is hauling core samples through holes in the ice from the ocean floor more than 6,000 feet below.

They are exploding dynamite and firing air guns underwater, learning the characteristics and type of rock in the ridge by the way sound travels through it.

The findings will help determine if the ridge was formed by volcanic action, or in a buckling of the ocean floor, or — if Canada is fortunate — as an extension of the continental shelf. An answer is expected by fall.

Although the polar ice cap sits in isolation at the top of the world, scientists have found evidence that waters of the Arctic Ocean include a mixture of currents from the Atlantic, Pacific and other oceans.

Two groups of scientists have found low-level radioactive contaminants from other parts of the world and are using them to trace the currents.

Valery Lee, a chemical oceanographer from the University of Miami, is tracing samples of tritium, which entered the oceans in atmospheric testing of atomic bombs.

Robert Moore of Dalhousie University in Nova Scotia is searching for further samples of Caesium, which he found in water near the Pole four years ago.

He believes the source is discharge from Britain's Windscale reprocessing plant where uranium is extracted from the spent fuel rods of nuclear reactors.

French printing office finds it has telephone books to burn

PARIS, France (AP) — An extremely smoky arson-caused fire burned overnight in the basement of the National Printing Office, feeding on more than 1,000 tons of paper, fire officials said Saturday.

The heat was so intense that Paris Fire Chief Jacques Coupez had the 200 firefighters battle the blaze in 15-minute shifts. Several people suffered from smoke inhalation, but there were no serious injuries, officials said.

Fire and police investigators said the blaze erupted in three separate areas of the 18,000 square-foot basement, indicating it was deliberately set.

The basement contained tens of thousands of reams of blank paper, mostly used in the printing of telephone books.

Clergy ask people to boycott play

BATH, England (AP) — Local church leaders have asked theatergoers to boycott the Bath Theater Royal production of D.H. Lawrence's novel "Lady Chatterley's Lover" because the play contains obscene language and nudity.

"Sexual relations are a wonderful God-given thing but do not translate onto the stage," said the Rev. Paul Etterley, adviser for social concern in the Bath Archdeaconery of the Church of England.

Lynn Farleigh, who plays Lady Chatterley, said, "It would be impossible to do this play without taking your clothes off. It is tastefully done."

"Although there is nudity and four-letter words, I think that very few people would take offense. We have already sold several thousand pounds worth of tickets," said a theater spokesman.

Judge: Teenage mother mentally ill

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A teenager accused of murdering her newborn twins and four other infants in a maternity ward was acquitted by a judge who ruled the woman was mentally ill, the South African Press Association reported.

Rand Supreme Court Judge L. Esselen on Friday declared Joyce Sithebe, 19, of Soweto, a state mental patient and said she could be released after treatment, the agency said.

The twins were 3 days old when they were murdered in August in Baragwanath Hospital, which serves the black suburb of Soweto. They and the other victims were in a ward for premature babies.

Dr. Martin Kramers, a psychiatrist, had testified that Mrs. Sithebe was not responsible because she was mentally ill at the time. He said the twins had slight jaundice and Mrs. Sithebe probably thought they were abnormal.

Thieves ransack Islamic museum

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Thieves broke into west Jerusalem's Islamic Museum and stole rare watches, clocks and books worth $4 million, Israel Radio said Saturday.

Indian activist urges boycott of screenings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A banned Indian activist on Saturday urged Sir Richard Attenborough to boycott South African screenings of his movie "Gandhi" and accused the director of sacrificing Mohandas K. Gandhi's memory "at the altar of international capitalism."

The activist said Attenborough, whose movie won eight Oscars last week, should have protested South African racial segregation by refusing to attend what he called "token" multi-racial premieres of the movie here.

Mawalal Ramgobin, former president of the Natal Indian Congress founded by Gandhi in 1894, said Attenborough ignored pleas from himself and other anti-apartheid activists by agreeing to come to South Africa next week for the local debut of "Gandhi."

"If he disregards the views of such a wide spectrum of opposition, we must deduce that his contractual and financial involvement in the film supersedes the considerations of the oppressed peoples of the country," Ramgobin said in a telephone interview.

The banning order against Ramgobin restricts his political activities and prohibits him from being quoted in the press in South Africa, where blacks, Indians, Asians and those of mixed race are barred from white establishments.

"His (Attenborough's) disregard for me and my colleagues here is not only an insult to the memory of Gandhi but an affront to the aspirations of all democracy-loving people of South Africa," Ramgobin said.

"The memory of Gandhi is now being flouted and mutilated at the altar of international capitalism. Consciously or unconsciously, Sir Richard is tainted by this and will remain tainted."

Attenborough said Friday night that he had decided not to attend a whites-only premiere in Johannesburg next Thursday, but would come to South Africa for other premieres "in the hope of fostering some inclination toward non-violent social change."

He said any financial benefit would go to charities supporting Gandhian principles.

Ramgobin said he had tried to reach Attenborough for four weeks to urge him not to come to South Africa, and finally got through to him Wednesday night, but could not dissuade him.

"We humbly ask Sir Richard, on the basis of Gandhian principles, to engage himself constructively to help build a just social order in South Africa by direct action from London," Ramgobin added. "That direct action is his not coming. Integral to Gandhi's political philosophy was non-cooperation with the system, and to not cooperate Gandhi used the boycott as a tactic."

Theaters battle 'blind bidding'

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"All's fair in love and war" — and the movies.

Monday the Texas Senate Economic Development Committee may be able to attest to that statement's validity when it holds its public hearing, if it isn't postponed again, on Senate Bill 502.

This showdown between the Motion Picture Association of America, Inc., and the National Association of Theatre Owners of Texas will certainly not be an officer-and-a-gentleman session when the two once again face off over an issue dear to the pocketbooks of both.

The practice at issue is called "blind bidding" by NATO of Texas and "advance bidding" or "advance licensing" by MPAA.

This practice allows film distributors to request that theaters bid for the right to exhibit a movie prior to its completion. In this form of bidding, theater owners must pay distributors up front for movies they haven't seen.

"The bottom line to the whole issue is we want to see what we're going to buy," says Len Schmidt, manager of Midland's UA Cine. "It protects us and the public."

If Texas passes the bill under consideration in Austin, the motion picture industry will be required to provide an exhibitor — a person engaged in operating one or more motion picture houses — the opportunity to view a movie prior to the bidding.

NATO is for passage; MPAA is opposed.

IT'S NOT A new battle. Legislation banning "blind bidding" has been passed in 23 states in the past six years.

It's a crucial one.

And it will take more than friendly persuasion for Texas theater owners to succeed. They've already tried four times. These adversaries have turned each other every which way but loose in their Texas battle because this state is a major market. To date, no major market state has banned "blind bidding."

"If it wasn't that good a deal, they wouldn't fight so hard for it. It gives them a license to rob us," says T.A. Collins of Odessa. Collins, NATO of Texas treasurer, owns two movie houses in Odessa — Ector Theatre and Grandview Cinema.

"MPAA controls 93 percent of the product and that's a cartel," says John Treadwell, chairman of the board and past president of NATO of Texas and vice president of United Artists Communications Inc. (Not to be confused with United Artists Pictures Corporation, a division of Transamerica. UA Cine here is part of UA Communications Inc.)

"We are asking the legislature for some support," Treadwell says. "It's an unfair marketing advantage they have."

Don Adams disagrees.

"THEY'RE ASKING the government to settle a contractual dispute between two parties of equal size," says Adams, who represents MPAA as an attorney and lobbyist in Austin.

MPAA "is a trade association which is made up of larger properties who distribute motion pictures: AVCO Embassy, Buena Vista, Columbia, Film Ways, Paramount, Fox, United Artists (Pictures Corporation), Universal and Warner Brothers," he said, adding, "We also help finance the production of motion pictures. We rarely make pictures on our own."

Then Adams listed some of the members of NATO: "American Multi-Cinema based in Missouri owns 669 theaters; General Cinema Corporation based in Massachusetts owns 994 theaters; United Artists Communications based in New York owns 930 theaters; Loews Theatre Inc., 160 theaters — these are some of the people who are trying to get this passed.

"It's not a giant against a midget; it's a giant against a giant," Adams says.

When asked about Adams' statement, Treadwell says, "He's right. Yes, UA, General Cinema and Loews are against the program, but so is T.A. Collins and Skeet Noret in Lamesa. If anything, the practice of blind bidding preys on smaller independents much more than it does on big circuits. If we have 15 dates of a bad picture we can absorb it somewhere else."

Collins agrees.

"YOU'RE IN MUCH worse shape if you're an individual. Circuits can absorb the loss; little theater owners can't," says Collins, who has been in the business for 45 years. "If I lose money in my two theaters, I'm in trouble."

Schmidt says, "We have the corporation as a home, but each individual theater operates as a home theater. If we lose money, this theater loses money. It has the potential of going bankrupt; however, we do have the corporation backing. That's the reason we're still in existence."

Then he queries, "How many locally owned Midland theaters are in existence today as opposed to three years ago?"

None.

Theater owners actually make their money off concessions. As Weldon Givens, manager at Midland Park Mall Cinema (owned by General Cinema Corporation), says, "Most people think that what you take into the box office is going to the theater, but its going to the film companies (the beginning split is generally 90-10). If it wasn't for the concession stand, you could close every theater in the United States."

Adams feels that smaller theater owners are "misled about what it (banning advance bidding) does," saying that screening all movies gives the "larger theater owned corporations great economic advantage over smaller theater owners. They go look at 'Star Wars' (which was not screened) and I guarantee you they will have the product."

"Mr. Collins has consistently outbid UA for the big pictures in Odessa," Treadwell says. "He has theaters that can get a lot more people in the auditoriums."

"AN INDEPENDENT'S much better off knowing what he's bidding on. If I see a picture and make a bad judgment, that's my problem. If I'm going to put out my money, it should be my prerogative to see how it's spent, not the judgment of somebody in Los Angeles or New York."

Too often with blind bidding, Collins says the theater owner "pays a big price and he's buying a can of junk and there's a lot of that going on, I'll guarantee you."

Collins is speaking from experience.

"They'll lie to you. They've all got the best picture that's ever been made. I got hung on a picture. I paid $25,000; it grossed $10,000," Collins says of his experience with a blind-bid film, "The Swarm."

The 23 states which have passed laws similiar to the one NATO of Texas is supporting were smaller markets and abolishing "advance bidding" has sometimes meant "releasing motion pictures in those states after other states," Adams says.

Children find fun in learning

Six-year-old Lisa Pendleton plays "dress up" at Dennis the Menace Park Saturday during the second annual Children's Fair sponsored by the West Texas Association for the Education of Young Children during the "Week of the Young Child."

Though it hardly resembles a library, a study hall or some other educational edifice, a playground teeming with squealing children is alive with the learning process.

Whether one youngster sharpens her dexterity by crafting a sand castle, or another colors his imagination with a fistful of finger paint, recreation can be both fun and educational — without books or boredom.

A group which firmly believes kids deserve their day in the sun, the West Texas Association for the Education of Young Children, sponsored its second-annual Children's Fair Saturday at Midland's Dennis the Menace Park.

The fair culminated Midland's celebration of the "Week of the Young Child," April 9-16, a salute to youngsters marked each April by the National Association for the Education of Young Children.

As she stood amid a kaleidoscope of finger-painting, castle-building, bubble-blowing kids, Kristie Lee Brame, WTAEYC's president-elect, said the fair "demonstrates the kind of activities that help young children learn and grow."

As she chatted, Ms. Brame gazed on hundreds of children, running and laughing, learning and playing — some with parents in tow, nearly all with smiles aglow.

Off to her right, in an area where trees supported clotheslines and mirrors, children played "dress up" with enough outsized shoes, funny hats and fancy suits to suit the discriminating tastes of any tyke.

Over to the left, under sunny skies borne by a crisp breeze, plastic "dogfish" seemed to be running in the fish pond.

Nearby, kids lobbed beanbags into laundry baskets. Some parents, perhaps seeing a chance to apply the skill at home, paid especially "clothes" attention to ensure their youngsters got it right.

Elsewhere, artisans used straws, string and spoons to splash paint on paper. A wading pool and sand box kept others busy, while inside the gymnasium — along with puppet shows and dancing — celery, carrot and apple slices were served.

Parked in the eye of this toddler tornado was a yellow fire truck, which served as patient playmate to a dozen or more rambunctious future firefighters.

"The idea is to demonstrate that even with very young children, as young as 2, activities can help them to learn," said Ms. Brame, citing as examples the concepts of volume and texture to be discovered in a sandbox or the muscle control developed through painting.

Ms. Brame said Midland's observance of the "Week of the Child" also included seminars for parents on buying toys and choosing child care facilities.

She said kids ranging in age from 1 to 9 years — give or take some months on either end — flocked to the fair, which was co-sponsored by Midland's Parks and Recreation department.

"The idea is to sort of spend time saying, 'Hey, kids are really important,'" she said. "For me, the kind of thing the Children's Fair always means is that it's a lot of fun and sort of a celebration of children."

Some depend on life's pleasing displeasures

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Mr. Curmudgeon surveys the kingdom that is not his and is delighted. It is fraught with imperfections. He is made happy, though that is not readily apparent.

He is quite pleased in the displeasures of his own homelife, though that, too, is hardly noticeably.

"The air has a foulness to it, the water is brackish, the neighbors aren't friendly, television is lousy, the newspaper is wet, my car hasn't run right since my wife drove it into a pothole, all the church-goers are hypocrites and kids are an eternal nuisance."

When rumors abound that Midland's No. 1 corporate citizen, The First National Bank, is about to fail and collapse like an imploded building, he is gleeful. With zeal, he does his part in giving a semblance of credibility to the "town talk" by withdrawing his money from the maligned bank.

He smirks and is made glad.

"Besides not being a Helen of Troy, my wife makes whoopee about as well as George Burns swims the English Channel, cooks like a turkey and frets like a scratched phonograph record."

For Mr. Curmudgeon, life is a miserable pleasure.

Politics annoy him, though he curses "The Spectator" while he quotes from the periodical as if he were a proselyte and a sage.

"They ought to de-elect all the congressmen, fire the bureaucrats, exile the President, send the secretary of the interior on an extended cruise to Iceland, drown all the cats and dogs, make me king and declare famine and war."

On the anniversary of ex-President Richard Nixon's Watergate Shame, he celebrates. And every time he recalls the gunfire which felled President Ronald Reagan, he is angered because the President survived.

He fantasizes, is somewhat of a schizold, occasionally endorses the ghost of John Wayne for President and Billy Graham for Pope and thinks pink is a wholly anti-American color.

Every Friday night, he writes his congressman to complain about domestic and foreign policies and, with unmitigated haughtiness, proposes solutions. "They won't listen to me," he laments and is greatly satisfied.

Eagerly, he awaits for more volcanoes to erupt and just knows that California is overdue for an earthquake that will dump that state into the ocean.

He's disturbed that a worldwide pestilence hasn't emerged.

Mr. Curmudgeon wonders why the moon hasn't fallen.

He beholds the West Texas sunset and complains that if it weren't for his compass, he couldn't tell it from the sunrise.

In his front yard, he plants and nurtures mesquite bushes and tumbleweeds for their intrinsic beauty, which he abhors. Out back, he cringes to the sound of his oilwell pump jack and is greatly pleased. Then, he climbs aboard his jet aircraft to escape his misery and cheerfully moans that things will be just as miserable anywhere else in the world.

He goes to Verdun and imagines that the battlefield scene is a glorious experience. He thinks genocide is debatable.

In Paris, Rome, Athens and Berlin, he struts the streets and imagines how much more effectively he could have ruled. In London, he despises the Queen for doing what should be a man's work and role. And from his reflection in the river Thames, he sees the image of Medusa, cringes and smilingly dies.

Scattering of logo designed to combat scattering of trash

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A new logo soon will be scattered about the Tall City and, it is hoped, more widely than the crushed beer cans and cellophane wrappers that litter the streets and alleys of Midland.

Certified only six weeks ago by Keep America Beautiful, Inc. (KAB), Clean Midland tosses out its first of many planned projects this week during Keep America Beautiful Week, locally proclaimed by Mayor Thane Akins as Keep Midland Beautiful Week.

Bright red, white and blue plastic car trash bags, donated by 16 Midland businesses, will be placed at various companies and stores throughout Midland beginning Monday.

Those bags, however, are only the first step in canning trash.

According to Coordinator of Clean Midland Nancy Sharp, various long range projects are being planned — not to fight litter itself, but to trash the causes of litter: people's attitudes.

Research conducted by KAB and the Clean Community System indicated people are more apt to litter where there is no feeling of ownership or pride in the property, where they know someone else will pick it up and where litter already has accumulated.

KAB was organized in 1953 when a need for litter control was recognized, Ms. Sharp said. To increase public awareness, public service announcements, such as the more memorable one that featured the crying Indian surveying his once beautiful land, were conducted throughout the country.

By 1972, organizers of KAB realized awareness of litter wasn't going to stop people from littering.

"They realized they were attacking a symptom rather than the problem," Ms. Sharp said. "Instead of continually picking up trash after people, they researched why people litter."

Surprisingly, less than half of the trash comes from motorists, she added.

According to literature distributed by KAB, waste is generated from six other major sources: household refuse, commercial refuse, construction sites, loading docks, uncovered vehicles and pedestrians.

In 1978, KAB launched the Clean Community System (CCS), now a network of some 250 cities across the nation.

As a member of CCS, communities must prove a broad-based organization has been developed, which includes business and industry, communications, civil organizations, municipal government and school committees.

Using a photometric index, trash levels in undisclosed areas are recorded twice a year by trained personnel to measure effectiveness of the program.

Chairman of Clean Midland Jim Everett said a goal of 30 percent reduction of litter in a year has been set in Midland.

Speaking engagements and public announcements are being conducted "to make people aware of what they can do" to reduce litter, according to Ms. Sharp.

A "Waste in Place" curriculum, developed by KAB, has been offered to the Midland Independent School District at no cost, Everett said. The curriculum was designed for students in kindergarten through fifth grade.

Also in the planning is a Clean Campus Award which would be presented on a monthly basis to the school with the cleanest building and grounds. By educating students and staff in litter reduction, cost of maintenance could be lowered, he said.

A similar contest may be held in shopping centers, business and residential areas, Ms. Sharp added.

The 24-member board of directors of Clean Midland also are discussing the possibility of adding more permanent trash receptacles downtown.

"If we could provide more handy receptacles, people probably wouldn't litter as much," she said.

"A lot of people eat between areas," Everett agreed. "If they've got a cup and there isn't a trash can nearby, well, they're not going to carry it very far."

Civic organizations may be invited to participate in Adopt a Park programs where organizations and neighborhood groups are responsible for keeping a certain area clean. The possibility of establishing citizen patrols to ask people to clean up after they leave public parks could be another way to fight litter.

The municipal committee is reviewing city codes and ordinances and the communications committee will be increasing public awareness concerning local laws.

"We feel that the people who don't comply with the ordinances really don't know them — especially because of the growth and turnover in population here," Ms. Sharp said.

City ordinances calling for simple procedures such as closing the lids of Dumpsters and cutting tree branches to 3 or 4 foot sticks before placing them in the receptacles are easy to follow. However, many residents don't realize the city won't pick up trash that is left next to a Dumpster or that large objects, such as furniture, may be picked up if residents contact the sanitation supervisor.

Community residents also should be aware they are responsible for the maintenance of alleys adjacent to their property.

While Clean Midland volunteers said action will be taken if necessary, they hope Midlanders will take enough pride in the community to join in voluntarily.

With a clean community comes an increase in tourism and economy, supporters reason.

"The community pride that is built up with this type of program really affects other aspects of the community," Ms. Sharp said.

For more information on the project, persons may call 68-CLEAN.

Theater owners, MPAA debate 'advance bidding'

Treadwell disagrees. He refers to the scheduled May 25 release of "Return of the Jedi," which was "advance bid" in Texas in early December. Louisiana and Tennessee have banned "advance bidding" and the movie has not been screened yet. Treadwell says, "The picture is going to get played on May 25 in Memphis, Dallas and New Orleans."

Adams says the MPAA "needs to be able to blind bid some motion pictures in Texas" because of "nationwide media programs committed months in advance of release date. There are many things in the making of a motion picture which my clients have no control over which can delay pictures, such as technical aspects and temperamental artists.

"When you put those things together with a picture that must be trade screened before it's licensed, you can very easily delay release of that picture for as much as six months," Adams says.

"They're going to the well too often: 67 pictures were blind bid in Texas in 1982," Treadwell says. "Nobody else can blind bid but MPAA; nobody else has the nerve. And they (MPAA members) blind bid any picture they think they've got a chance of blind bidding."

A SLIGHT DISCREPANCY exists in the count of pictures that were blind bid in Texas as compiled by the UA Communications film buying office in Dallas and the lobbyist for MPAA in Austin.

In 1982, Adams says, MPAA released 126 pictures, 59 were blind bid, 60 were trade screened and seven were reissues.

Adams says when the theatre owners blind bid they have "more information than we had when we committed to an average of $13 million to make the picture." He does not believe eliminating blind bidding will "help the public one iota." And he doesn't feel that it will "reduce the cost of theater tickets."

Treadwell says, "The theater owners have never minded paying a fair share of money to film guys, but when we have to underwrite these attempts that are so poorly executed, it has become so one-sided it has to be considered innately wrong."

Treadwell agrees that it is an issue "that may or may not affect ticket prices. Ticket prices are going to go up as inflation does. It may relieve the pressure and it could result in better movies."

Collins, Treadwill and Adams did agree on the reason why this issue is so important in Texas. As Collins says, "They (MPAA) fight so hard in Texas, New York and California because these are the three key states."

In all of the previous attempts to get "blind bidding" banned in Texas, Treadwell says, "It has bottled up in the legislature in some committee somewhere. They (MPAA) are not novices." He paused before adding, "It's not going to be a quiet little issue this year that they can sweep under the rug."

Williams: The ultimate Aggie

EDITOR'S NOTE: What drives maroon-colored vans, owns maroon airplanes, flies maroon flags and swims in a pool shaped like a Texas A&M boot? An Aggie zillionaire, that's what.

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

MIDLAND, Texas — So the story goes, a firebrand oilman named Clayton Williams Jr. once hoisted an Aggie flag atop a downtown Midland building as a universally obscene gesture to his adversaries.

"You damn right I did," Williams laughingly says now.

"I flew that Aggie flag to kinda tell them all to go to hell. That was my war cry. A big bank was picking on me...and that was my way of giving 'em the finger."

He liked the idea so well it became something of a trademark.

Williams

The ultimate son of Texas A&M, Williams, 51, adopted the fluttering maroon and white flags as a battle symbol and they fly daily above his offices here and elsewhere and atop his oil rigs around the country.

"I've flown them at the drilling sites but they don't prevent dry holes," said he. "Still, I like to see the flags and so do other Aggies."

He jogs, punches cattle, hunts big game and oversees a vast business empire that includes oil and gas production and transportation, real estate, cattle, banking and oil field services and supply.

As cunning as a coyote and often as wily, Willims rose from a $10,000-a-year insurance peddler to oil multimillionaire in a rollercoaster quarter century punctuated with good luck, bad luck, hard work, cold beer and the competitive, indominatable spirit of a pit bulldog.

By his own count, the 15 entities that form the Williams Companies produced $1.15 billion in gross revenues last year.

Also by his own count, he owes a nationwide consortium of banks roughly $220 million.

"I'm a debtor," he shrugs. "I borrow a lot of money."

He met his beautiful wife Modesta while guzzling beer and belting out Mexican ballads from a table top in one of his favorite honky tonks.

"I love to drink beer and sing mariachi songs...and she picked me up the first night we met," he joked.

Says the dark-haired Ms. Williams: "We've been going round and round in circles but I never get bored."

Downtown Midland awoke some seven years go to discover a pink diaper flapping from the flagpole above Williams' 16-story Gulf Building. It signaled the birth of a daughter, the fifth addition to the Williams brood.

"That was good bull...," he recalled with a chuckle.

Beneath all this prattle beats the maroon heart of an ingenious and individualistic oilman-rancher-entrepreneur with an uncommon knack for making money, friends, enemies, headlines and whoopee.

Clayton Williams stories abound in this oil rich, high-rise, white collar energy Mecca of 85,000 and across the stark, windswept, semi-arid reaches of West Texas from which he sprung half a century ago.

Some may even be true.

Many center around his "hell-raising" days as a youngster growing up in Fort Stockton, the son of an engineer-author father who set the tone for Clayton Jr.'s individuality.

"They'd be out drinking beer and they'd say, 'Let's go hear that dumb guy from Fort Stockton sing them Mexican songs,'" Williams recalled. "I never had so much fun. I think in Spanish, farm and ranch Spanish."

Always quick to share his good fortune with his employes, Williams once said his goal was to make more of his (800) employees wealthier than any oilman ever has before.

"I may have already achieved that," he said with a smile.

Despite a certain love-hate relationship with Texas A&M, he graduated in 1954, entered the Army and was sent to Ft. Wolters in Mineral Wells, Texas.

He moonlighted as a waiter at the Brazos Club in the historic old Baker Hotel, and it was there that he launched his insurance sales career.

While serving drinks and hustling tips at an insurance gathering, he was told: "Son, I think you'd make a good insurance salesman."

He took the advice to heart and did well, he said, until his clientle of friends and relatives dried up.

"Then I had to look for another job."

Scurrying about in a 1952 Chevy, Williams brokered oil leases at night, sold insurance by day and dabbled in a variety of energy-related adventures that enabled him to double his income annually for several years.

"I saved my money because I was working too hard to have time to spend it," he said.

Asked once by Texas Business magazine what it was that separated him from others and elevated him to success, he replid:

"Well, for one thing, my Aggie background and education was a big help, and I developed a feel for the land, for formations.

"And I've always had the ability to totally immerse myself in something I get involved in. I have this obsessive desire to absorb, absorb, absorb. And I concentrate."

Looking back now, Williams ironically attributes his success to his failures, not a few of which were a succession of dry holes.

"I think it's how you handle yor failures that determines your eventual success," he said. "It's the ability to retrench and regroup."

It was his "executive sidekick" Bob Smith who said once that you have to know Williams to understand what makes him different.

"He's always up, always gung ho. He's a driven man who refuses to get down just because he hits a few dry holes.

"Other oilmen will suddenly get real conservative when they're on a losing streak. Not Claytie. He pushes all the harder. But more than that, he's a visionary. He has a business foresight that's very rare."

Williams concedes to an overblown ego but maintains that its under control.

"Like Will Rogers said, it's OK to take the world seriously, but never yourself. You can't take yourself too seriously, expecially if you're a wildcatter."

During one particularly lean period, after a series of dry holes and virtually broke, he drilled a well east of Jackson Hole, Wyo., which he cleverly called "The Last Hope."

"In a John Wayne movie, that would have hit," he said with a wry grin. "For an Aggie, it was a dry hole again."

But on New Year's Eve 1975 he "hit it big" with a natural gas well near Mentone in Loving County.

Although the Gataga 2 well blew out, forcing evacuation of tiny Mentone, it was eventually brought under control and produced 200 million cubic feet of gas a day.

Williams told the evacuees who took refuge in neighboring towns to send him their hotel bills. Few did.

He got a note from one fellow who said, "That's the first time I've had a woman in a motel room on New Year's Eve in a long time. I ought to pay you!"

Another was a $150 million commercial real estate development launched during the "euphoria" of the 1981 energy and economic boom. Called ClayDesta Plaza, the 175-acre business community, similar in concept to the Los Colinas development outside Dallas, appears to have survived the recession and could be completed by the mid-'80s.

"ClayDesta," said Williams, "is a major project and we'll be involved with it for sometime."

But perhaps his biggest gamble was an energy exploration venture into the Austin Chalk trend in the Giddings area in 1976. He risked millions and reaped tens of millions.

"Giddings was my biggest individual undertaking," he says. "It took an intensive concentration of money, people and effort. It was a helluva lot of work for not so much profit."

For instance, he said, he spent up to $800,000 per well and drilled more than 300 wells. An $800,000 investment for a $1.5 million well is not the stuff of which oil and gas fortunes are made.

"If we can weather the current storm, we're now poised for the next Gataga or the next Giddings. It's got to be out there."

He says American ingenuity has discovered all the shallow wells, those thousand-footers that could be drilled for $10,000 and produced 50,000 or more barrels of oil.

That explains in part why oil that once sold for $3 is now selling for nearly $30, he added.

Though distraught over natural gas prices and controls, Williams finds no serious fault with the current price of oil and says if it holds he's ready to plunge back into action.

"I consider myself kinda like a quail dog. I know something's out there. I just got to keep huntin' and lookin'.

"The real lure and excitement of this business is exploring. It's such a dynamic thing. It's like going to the moon. Like exploring new frontiers.... And the risk is enormous."

As he's said on more than one occasion:

"I don't have a damn thing to apologize about for being an oilman or a cattleman. And I'm proud to be an Aggie."

Eagles hosting chili cookoff, hootenanny

A pre-Terlingua Chili Cookoff and Hootenanny will be sponsored Saturday for the 14th year by Midland's Fraternal Order of the Eagles Aerie 2982 in the 4200 block of U.S. Highway 80 West.

"We'll have some bands there, because that's how a hootenanny works," said Ronnie Maddox, an Eagle who is promoting the 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. chili cookoff. Maddox said that between 60 to 70 chili-cooking teams from the southwest will be cooking and competing for the best pot of Texas' No. 1 outdoor party dish. The "chili-heads" will be vying for points to earn the right to compete in the annual Terlingua Chili Cookoff on the first Saturday in November, Maddox said.

Beer will be served at the chili bash, he said. "That's sort of like apple pie and ice cream. Chili is the 'national' dish of Texas."

Six-foot trophies will be awarded to the champion chili cook and to the winner of the showmanship contest, he said.

Among bands at the hootenanny will be the Bill Smallwood Band of Fredericksburg and the western-swing Ambush Band from Midland College.

Maddox said proceeds from the sale of $2 chili-taster's buttons and T-shirts will go to the Shriners Burns Institute.

The cook-off, which is "open to anyone who wants to cook," is sanctioned by the Chili Appreciation Society International (CASI).

Williams to sponsor awards

Clayton W. Williams Jr., a Midland rancher and oil producer, will sponsor the Texas statewide 4-H beef awards for the fifth consecutive year.

The 4-H beef awards program recognizes 4-H members who have excelled in beef projects, noted H.T. Davison, 4-H specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and executive director of the Texas 4-H Foundation.

Through Williams' continued support, the four top 4-H beef producers in each county are recognized with special awards. The state winner receives an expense-paid trip to the National 4-H Congress held in Chicago each fall.

Williams' support of the 4-H program provides special incentive for each 4-H boy and girl to excel.

TAEX workshop to begin

Dr. Uel R. Stockard, Texas state leader for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service's extension programs, will be keynote speaker at the opening session of the TAEX-conducted workshop for Midland County officials and employees at 8 a.m. Monday in the Midland Center.

The workshop will be geared to make county government more efficient.

Hance to address growers

LUBBOCK — U.S. Congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock will be principal speaker at the 26th annual meeting of the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers at 1 p.m. Friday in Lubbock's Memorial Civic Center.

Theme of the meeting is "Research, Promotion and Politics that Determine Cotton's Destiny."

Hance, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, will be joined at the podium by Texas Sen. John Montford; Ed Breihan, immediate past president of the National Cotton Council and general manager of Plains Cooperative Oil Mill at Lubbock, and Nick Hahn, executive vice president of Cotton Inc.

Elm-leaf beetle described

STANTON — The elm-leaf beetle, an annual pest on foliage of Siberian elm trees in West Texas, skeletonizes the leaves and causes premature defoliation of trees, according to David Foster, Texas Agricultural Extension Service entomologist for Martin, Howard and Midland counties.

By feeding on the leaves, the beetle causes the trees to weaken and become more susceptible to tree borers and disease organisms.

The beetles become active in the warmth of spring.

The adult beetle is about one-fourth of an inch long, yellowish to olive green and has a black stripe along each wing cover. Female beetles lay yellowish orange bottle-shaped eggs on the back side of leaves in groups of 10 to 30.

Eggs hatch in a few days into black worms, which feed on the leaves. The larvae, which grow to about one-half of an inch long and which turn yellow and bear two black stripes, feed for about two weeks and seek out crevices on the tree in which to pupate. They change to adults in about seven to 10 days.

To control the elm tree pest, Foster recommends spraying carbaryl (Sevin) on infested trees when the eggs start to hatch.

Lower onion harvest seen

AUSTIN — Onion growers across South Texas expect to harvest 3.1 million hundred-weight this spring. The projected harvest would be 11 percent below last year's crop.

Harvest is making good progress in the Lower Valley, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. Good volumes of early varieties are being shipped.

Some fields received minor hail damage during late March but most should recover with little crop loss. Spring rains have eased irrigation needs in the San Antonio-Winter Garden area, but at Laredo, wet fields have slowed crop development.

"Some disease problems have occurred in fields around Laredo, but most of the damage has been light," according to State Statistician Doug Murfield.

Beef Parade approaching

PLAINVIEW — The Panhandle Beef Parade contest here June 23-25 will feature a parade, cattle grooming and meat cutting.

The contest will feature calves — steers and heifers — raised by 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America members from across Texas.

Judging, which will be in Hale County Agricultural Center, will be by Joe Lewis and Gene Raymond, both of Kansas.

Horse show planned for July

MONAHANS — The Monahans Quarter Horse Show, which in three years has developed into one of the top horse shows in the Southwest, will hold its 44-class show July 23 and 24 in the Ward County Coliseum here.

Judges will be Harold Myerscough of Illinois and Don Douglas of Indiana, according to Linda Sue O'Dell, show secretary.

Ward County Agent Mark Guelker will be show manager, and handling the announcing chores will be Monahans Mayor Dick Hoyer.

The show's classes will include halter, English and Western pleasure, youth, amateur and professional. Foremost horse trainers and exhibitors in the Southwest are to attend the show.

Some tomatoes disease resistant

The tomato is probably the most popular plant in the home garden. Each year many home gardeners are disappointed when their tomato plants do not produce as well as expected. In many cases the reason for the poor growth and low production is plant disease. Fortunately many of the foliage diseases that devastate tomatoes in more humid parts of the state are usually not much of a problem in arid West Texas. The disease organisms that cause the most damage on West Texas tomatoes are those found in the soil. The most common of these is the root knot nematode. Nematodes are small, microscopic worms that invade the plant root system, from the soil, and cause large galls, or knots, to form on the roots. These galls interfere with normal uptake of nutrients and water, resulting in poor growth, low production, and, in some cases, early death of the plant.

Two soil fungi that cause diseases in tomatoes are Verticillium and Fusarium. Both fungi infect the water system of the roots and stem, causing the leaves to wilt, turn yellow, die and drop. Fusarium is favored by high temperatures, whereas Verticillium is favored by cooler temperatures.

Losses to root knot nematodes and the wilt fungi can be avoided by planting resistant tomato varieties.

Gardeners who can not find disease resistant tomato transplants, or want to try varieties that are not available locally, can order seed of resistant varieties from mail-order seed companies. Remember, that all the nematode resistant tomato varieties are hybrids and the seed will be more expensive than non-hybrid seed. The extra cost of seed will be returned many times in increased tomato production.

Earnest C. Kiker is Midland County Extension Agent for Agriculture.

Park, area officials examine predation problem

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

CULBERSON COUNTY — In the shadow of Guadalupe Mountains and Carlsbad Caverns national parks, ranchers, county officials and Texas Parks and Wildlife Department personnel are looking at the growing predation problem posed by mountain lions.

They've been here for ages — felis concolors to the scientists, cougars to early settlers who mistook them for female lions, and catamounts, pumas and panthers to assorted individuals.

To the Sierra Club and Defenders of Wildlife who seek to preserve the animal, they are stately, proud.

To the rancher who says they are preying on the deer population — and occasionally on their stock — they are despised, hated.

"Between the mountain lions eating up the grown deer and the coyotes eating up the baby fawns, we're going out of the deer business fast," said A.L. Parker, who ranches on 10,000 leased acres on either side of the McKittrick Canyon Highway east of Guadalupe Mountains National Park. "What they've got up there is a national park where those lions lay up in the mountains and then come down on my property and hunt."

At one time, claimed Parker, his ranch had as many blacktailed deer as any ranch in Texas and catered to hunters each fall. "Now then, we're going to have to cut down on hunters because the mountain lions are eating the deer," he said. "But you can't blame it all on the mountain lion; you've got to blame it on the coyotes too."

THE BIGGEST factor in the alarming increase in predation, said Parker, is not necessarily the creation of Guadalupe Mountains National Park a decade-plus ago, but rather the banning of the poison known as 1080 in 1972.

"1080 worked this way: (state officials) would kill a horse and inject it into the hot meat," explained Parker. "It was tasteless and odorless, and we would cut it up in chunks, tie it with wire to a tree or rock and put it out usually in late December when it was cold and the meat would be preserved. In the spring, (the officials) would come pick up the remains and burn it. In my opinion it was a good thing.

"As long as we had this good 1080 we could kind of hold our own, break even. But now they've taken the only good weapon we had to hunt with.... If we don't get it back we're going to run plum out of deer. They're always talking about how a mountain lion and coyote have a right to live — well, it looks to me like baby deer have a right to live too."

The decrease in deer population on his ranch, said Parker, resulted in the state's refusal last fall for any bow hunting permits to be issued there.

Parker noted that the two adjacent national parks are "pretty good protection" for predators.

Several Culberson County ranchers attempted to go into the sheep business several years ago, but predation proved too much of a handicap, said Culberson County Agent C. E. Harlow of Van Horn.

"There's no problem there at all — we don't have any sheep; (predators) ran us out of business about 9 years ago," he noted. He attributed the predation primarily to "mountain lions up there in the mountains."

"This was a big sheep county at one time," noted Gorman Welch of Culberson County predator animal control. "Each rancher out here has slowly but surely gone out of the business because of the predator situation. The coyote would be the main (predator), the mountain lion next, and the bobcat does some killing of baby goats."

MOUNTAIN LIONS, claim Welch, also prey on young calves — and even grown horses.

"We had an incident up here about a month ago (in which) a mare came in tore up," he noted. "We feel sure it was a lion. A big chunk of meat (was) torn out of her right shoulder and there were big scratches down her right side where he hung his claws and drug it out. We don't have anything else big enough in these woods to do that. If we were in bear country, it could've been a bear, but we don't have any bears around here."

MOUNTAIN LIONS, said Jack Kilpatric of the Marfa TP&WD office, serve to hold deer populations at low levels — and as to whether that's an attribute or a detriment depends on one's point of view.

"It depends on what you want to do with the deer population," he explained. "If you just want to have a few there for people to see (it's good)...but if you want to have hunting recreation and have some income off of it, it creates a deficit."

Kilpatric noted that the last decade has seen "a heck of an increase" in mountain lion population — a development he does not believe necessarily stems from the creation of Guadalupe Mountains National Park but rather to "fewer ranchers having predator control programs....

"In respect to the country in New Mexico and in the vicinity of the park, (the mountains) serve not as a haven but as a source of cats moving out into the ranches. It's just a dispersal-type thing. You get so many lions in an area and they do move out. They may cover a circuit that may consist of 50 miles. Sometimes they'll cover it in a week or 10 days, sometimes two weeks, depending on the type of terrain and food that's available."

Mountain lions need that large an area to range in, said Kilpatric, "because otherwise they'll deplete the food available. They're looking for something to eat all the time. In cold weather they'll kill one or two deer a week, in hot weather, more than that."

Story in movie 'Flashdance' told with body of erotic dancer

A Review

Just when you think you have seen everything in dance, every way a person can move to and without music, another form comes along. This time it is "Flashdance" with a style of movement that is straight from the streets and resembles the robot, breakdown, acrobatics and aerobics rolled into one.

If some of those names are still unfamiliar, go to see "Flashdance" and marvel at the tremendous talent of the movie's young star, Jennifer Beals.

Ms. Beals, as hopeful dancer Alexandra Owens, sweats and strains at the bar in her living room before heading for her nightly stint at Wamby's Bar. By day a welder and by night a scantily clad runway hoofer, "Alex" pumps out highly stylized routines that are erotic and futuristic. Her goal is to become a professional dancer and her jumping off place, the Pittsburgh Dance and Repertory Company.

Around her whirls the sub-plots of her best friend, an aspiring ice-skater who doesn't make it, her boss during the day who does, the cook at Wamby's who tries to make it as a comic in Los Angeles and her dance instructor who remembers it.

The "it" is the dream each one has and "Flashdance" is heavy with dreams. It seems everybody has one, good or bad, and it is ladled down with sage but cliched advice like, "When you give up your dream, you die!"

"Flashdance" also throws in its share of admonitions to the young (interesting in view of the audience it is likely to reach with an R rating) like, smoking is bad, gratuitous nudity is bad, not trying is bad and not being your best is bad. No argument there.

But with all the "message," there is precious little dialogue. "Flashdance" is told with the body of a dancer. And just when you start wishing someone would say something meaningful, someone dances and you forget (for a moment) about the words.

The music, supervised by rock producer extraordinaire Phil Ramone, has some driving new wave and soft-wave (the slow dance version) sounds with contributions from the keyboard by the electrifying Giorgio Moroder.

Direction by Adrian Lyne ("Foxes," 1980) is at times unnervingly like watching the so-called exercise channel where knock-out, wet-lipped nymphets rotate, gyrate and undulate through five minutes of the same exercise. Mostly in close-ups of the extreme kind, little can be distinguished about the exercise but body parts. So, too with "Flashdance."

Lyne does manage to make some black and white poetry of Pittsburgh steel streets, and occasionally focuses on Harvey Edwards-poster style ballet toe shoes and paraphenalia. The acting, which is uniformly good and refreshingly natural, makes "Flashdance" entertaining, if predictable.

"Flashdance" may leave you wanting more, especially in terms of plot, since it chooses to avoid the questions of how Alex came to where she is and why she is alone, but "Flashdance" needs only to show her in motion to justify its existence.

"LONE WOLF MCQUADE," starring martial arts expert Chuck Norris, was made for Texas audiences. As Jim McQuade, Norris is a former Marine and recipient of the Silver star and now a Texas Ranger. But McQuade is not the ordinary Ranger; he is a loner who speaks few words, avoids, but inevitably gets into mischief and lives in unspeakable disarray.

Contrary to the shining star image of a Texas Ranger, McQuade dumps his trash in front of his El Paso home, and wolfs down beer, dropping the empties where he stands. But for all his unkempt lifestyle, he has a heart of gold and can whip any 20 men, armed or otherwise.

And that is exactly what he does, trying to skirt department politics along the way until he crosses paths with Rawley Wilkes (David Carradine). Wilkes runs guns, grenades, rocket launchers and whatever else he can sell to "South American guerrilas" and for anyone who gets in the way, death is assured.

Of course there is a love interest in "Lone Wolf McQuade" because what woman can resist (presumably) brains, brawn and a messy house? Stunning Barbara Carrera fills the bill.

"Lone Wolf McQuade" does have a plot, as unbelievable as it is, but most fans go for the action, and there is plenty of that as McQuade thumps adversaries, plugs scarecrow dummies full of buckshot and sweats his way through colored assortments of cavalry shirts.

The showdown is less than fulfilling from the standpoint of martial arts, with both Norris and Carradine moving slower than in previous years and with decidedly less grace. Carradine, who is pale against the El Paso sky, seems to have put on weight in a way that goes against his movement and the photography of the martial arts scenes is particularly disappointing.

Rated R, "Lone Wolf McQuade" has plenty of violence, which is to be expected, since the premise of these movies is based upon hand-to-hand (not to overlook other styles) combat, and the print of this movie is out of focus at times — a problem attributable to the print itself, according to UA Cine manager, Len Schmidt.

Benefit held for ex-baseball star

BOSTON (AP) — Singers Dionne Warwick and Frank Sinatra and composer Marvin Hamlisch performed at a benefit concert to help defray the medical costs of Tony Conigliaro, a Red Sox star in the 1960s who suffered a near-fatal heart attack 15 months ago.

Before the show, a dozen sports figures lent their support to 38-year-old Conigliaro's cause. They included a "dream outfield" of Willie Mays, Joe DiMaggio and Ted Williams.

Congiliaro's younger brother, Billy, said the organizers hoped to raise $200,000, which would pay for about a year of therapy.

Davis' home runs not enough for Bulldogs

Cooper downs Midland High, 7-6

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The glorious return of Tim Davis' bat to the Midland High lineup drew rave reviews, but it was the Abilene Cooper Cougars who held on for a 7-6 District 4-5A baseball victory Saturday at Memorial Stadium diamond.

Davis crashed two mammoth homers to left field to drive in five runs, but Cooper scored five first inning runs and never trailed in the contest. Davis is back, but it's just too late. The loss by MHS left the Bulldogs with no hopes of winning the 4-5A crown in 1983.

The Pack fell to 3-7 in the district race while league leading San Angelo defeated Odessa Permian to go 8-2 in district play.

"Boy it's good to see the big kid (Davis) back in the lineup, but I could count about seven things we did wrong in the game," said dejected MHS coach Tim Whalen. "We get runners picked off base and we messed up on a double steal that let Cooper score a run. We work on those type of plays all the time.

"OUR TEAM is in a low frame of mind and they are doubting their ability to play. I feel sorry for the kids, but I don't think we can stand prosperity. Cooper gave us plenty of chances to win and we couldn't do it."

Cooper got to MHS pitcher Mike Timlin for five first inning runs and the Bulldogs just couldn't catch up. Timlin gave up only two hits in the inning, but he walked four batters in the frame, committed an error and gave up a bases loaded double to Kent Strain, playing in his first game after a two-game suspension by Cooper coach Andy Malone for fighting on a team bus. Strain also scored a run on the double steal with runners at first and third.

Timlin settled down after the horrendous first. He allowed only two runs the rest of the way. One came in the fourth when Strain knocked in his fourth run with a two-out single. The other came in the fifth when Greg Badgett singled, stole second and third and scored on a sacrifice fly by Donnie Allen. That proved to be the winning run.

HOWEVER, AFTER talking with Malone, one wondered who really won the game. "That Davis is something else," Malone said. "I'm just glad he didn't have another bat. We walked him in the sixth on purpose and that would happen again if he came up again. That's the first time I've seen him, but I learned a lesson."

Cooper got Davis on a double play grounder in the first, but he chased starter Greg Galbraith in the third with a 340-foot shot to left for three of Midland's four runs in that inning. Jose Carrasco, who had three hits on the day, had already driven in one run before Davis connected.

Davis, who has not played since March 16 due to a separated shoulder, got a 365-foot blast to left in the fifth for the other two MHS runs.

"I felt good at the plate, but I was anxious to swing the bat the first time up and got on top of the ball," Davis said. "The doctor gave me the OK to play Wednesday, so I had a couple of days to swing the bat."

Give Davis a week of practice and he will be illegal. He may not get another pitch to hit this year. A walk is better than four bases any day.

MHS RUINED a chance at tying the game in the bottom of the seventh when they had a runner on second base with only one out. Pinch runner Doug Daehling was picked off second by pitcher Joby Hill and Hill then KOed pinch hitter Steve Wooten on strikes to end the game.

Cooper is now 4-6 in the 4-5A race, but its hopes for a second place finish was minimized when Midland Lee ripped Abilene High 19-2 Saturday.

"We really need Lee to lose again today and if they do, this race is going to get crazy," Malone said before knowing that Lee had won.

MHS will host Odessa High Tuesday in a rebound effort after two straight district losses.

Rebels end losing streak

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Rebels ended a District 4-5A three-game losing streak here Saturday and it was the Abilene High Eagles who paid the 19-2 price.

Lee ended its losing frustrations with a vengeance by producing a 24-hit attack that saw the Rebels send 17 batters to the plate in a 12-run first inning. Lee assaulted three AHS pitchers in the first as Barry Blackwell led the charge with three RBI in the first inning in two plate appearances.

Blackwell ended the day with four hits in six trips to the plate and knocked in five runs with two triples. His league-leading batting average vaulted to .594.

But that was just part of the potent Lee attack. Sergio Ochoa had four hits in five trips for two RBI while Ted Leps, Steve Woodlee and Jimmy Arthur each had three hits. Woodlee drove in three runs while Leps and Darren Webb both drove in a pair of runs.

Craig Ray went the distance to pick up the victory. He gave up only seven hits and one of the two runs he gave up was unearned.

Lee is now 7-3 in the 4-5A race, but still in second place as San Angelo romped to its eighth straight victory with a 7-3 win over last place Odessa Permian. Jeff Schkade pitched the Bobcats to the victory and added a big two-run triple in the third for what proved to be the winning hit.

In the only other 4-5A game Saturday, Big Spring won for the second straight time with an 11-6 win over Odessa High. Alan Trevino and Tom Cudd both homered for the Steers.

Lee will travel to Odessa Permian Tuesday for a 4 p.m. contest, hoping San Angelo falls in a game with Abilene High. But the Eagles may not recover from the Lee humiliation by that time.

"This was something that we deserved. I have faith in the American court system. I'm always happy to win ... April 17

1951 — In his first major league game, Mickey Mantle went 1-for-4 as the New York Yankees defeated the Boston Red Sox 5-0.

M-Cubs win in 9th, 8-7

Just when it seemed as though Midland might let yet a fifth straight game slip away, the Cubs scrambled for a run in the last of the ninth to beat Beaumont, 8-7, at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

A three-run homer by Mark Gillaspie, who has three of them in this series and five for the Texas League season, in the top of the ninth wiped a 7-4 lead Midland had taken in the top of the eighth. It seemed as though the evil fate that has stalked Midland through this series was about to strike again.

BUT LEFT fielder Bill Hatcher beat out an infield hit to short, took second on Rick Baker's sacrifice and moved to third after an intentional walk to Tom Lombarski and an error on Mike Anicich's grounder to short. When Walsh grounded to short, Ozzie Guillen's desperation throw was high and late and the drought was over.

Jim Gerlach, who faced just one batter in the ninth, got the win.

THE CUBS and Golden Gators meet again at 7 p.m. tonight in the last game of the series with Steve Schefsky (1-0) will oppose Midland's Doug Welenc (0-1).

Before the game, Midland Manager Tom Harmon was remarking that "You are going to give up hits and homers and runs in this park. That means you can't afford to walk people. If you do, you'll get your tail whipped. And that's what we've been doing."

With a 7-4 lead, it as though the ghostly walk was back to haunt Midland when lefty Neill Bryant walked two batters and then, with two out, watched Gillaspie ride a three-run homer over the scoreboard in left.

It was quite a night for Gillaspie, who had five rbi, knocking in the other two runs with a double in the third.

It was also a big night for the Cubs' Bill Walsh and Trey Brooks. Brooks became the first Midland player to homer at Cubs Stadium, spoiling southpaw Bob Patterson's shutout bid with a solo shot to open the fifth. The TCU ex from Baytown then delivered a rally-climaxing two-run double as Midland erupted for four runs to take a temporary 7-4 lead.

WALSH gave Midland a brief 3-2 lead in the sixth with a two-out, two-run double to chase home Bill Hatcher and Baker, who had opened the inning with singles.

For six innings, it was a dandy pitching duel between lefthander Patterson and Midland's Stan Kyles. Kyles loaded the bases in the second and got out of it, fanned the side in the fourth and survived potential big trouble in the sixth when shortstop Bruce Chaney made a diving catch of Pat Casey's liner and first baseman Tommy Johnson saved third baseman Lombarski a bad throw with a fine pick up.

In the sixth, after Hatcher and Baker led off with singles, Patterson circled the mound like Al Hrabosky psyching himself up to fan Lombarski and Anicich. He had two strikes on Walsh when Bill delivered his double. Baker's single and Lombarski's double to open the eighth finally chased the lefty and a walk and hit batsman set the stage for Brooks' two-run double off reliever Mark Williamson.

What happened to Cubs' Arizona pitching staff?

Someone called up and wanted to know where I was when the Cubs were spring training in Mesa, Ariz. "It's obvious, from all those glowing reports you sent back on Midland's strong pitching, you must have been at Vero Beach, and thought it was Mesa."

It's early, yet, but the Midland pitching staff isn't the same one that Manager Tom Harmon and pitching coach Glen Gregson were working with out in Arizona. Some of the pitchers are gone to Class A ball, other organizations or recuperating from arm problems in Florida.

On paper, however, the present Midland staff should be even better than the one in spring training, that is, when the wind stops blowing and the temperatures become more suitable for baseballs than hockey pucks. After all, Doug Welenc, Ken Pryce and Jim Gerlach have been successful in AA ball before.

BEFORE LEAVING to catch the Quad City Midwest League opener, Farm Director Gordon Goldsberry explained that when Chicago began shuffling pitchers, "we wound up with people like Paul Moskau at Iowa. We fully expected him to start the season in Chicago." And there were others.

"As a result, Doug Welenc was sent to Midland," Goldsberry went on. "Doug is a slow starter. In fact, last year, he got off to such a slow start in Midland, we weren't even sure he'd make it. But this year he threw well in spring training and while there was no place for him at Iowa as a starter, it was planned to use him in a long relief situation."

So Doug has been sent to Midland to keep busy until things are straightened out up above. Probably Harmon would just as soon keep the 13-game winner of a year ago as long as possible.

ROB SCHILLING, a relief pitcher who looked good in Mesa, was traded to the Mets' organization. "We had a chance to get a solid backup infielder in Tom Veryzer who can spell Larry Bowa and play several other positions. We hated to give up Rob, but..."

Joe Housey was sent back to Class A for more seasoning and Joe Pantaleo is in Sarasota, trying to work out arm problems in the hot Florida sun.

While the pitching hasn't come around yet, Midland did bolster its power potential with the addition of Tom Lombarski and Mike Anicich. Lombarski was picked up from the Phillies organization when he balked at the possibility of being sent back to AA from Oklahoma City. He's also a left-handed batter, a favored species these days in the Chicago organization.

"He knew he'd be playing in AA ball for us," said Gordon, "but he looked at the organization and felt there were possibilities for him. We feel he has the capability of playing several positions and he's left-handed." In other words, Tom has more of an immediate future with Chicago than he did with the Phils.

"Mike Anicich's position is similar to Lombarski's. He has possibilities at several situations...and those 22 homers at Jackson means he has some power."

MEANWHILE, the Chicago Cubs are also off to a faltering start and it seems like every time I flip on the TV, Warren Brusstar is turning a lost cause into a hopeless cause. It makes you wonder what Jon Perlman is doing in Iowa.

Brusstar is a relief pitcher who has been plagued through his career by arm trouble, but looked like he might help Chicago in spring training.

"He threw well in spring training," Goldsberry said, "And we were counting on him in a Dick Tidrow (long relief) role. He's a sinker ball pitcher and he's not getting the ball down. When he gets it up, he's in trouble and that's what is happening to him."...

So far, it hasn't worked out, but Brusstar is getting every opportunity to make it and baseball, after all, is a game of streaks, slumps, sometimes requiring infinite patience born of confidence that your judgement will be vindicated, eventually.

Zoeller has Heritage lead at 204

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller came from six shots off the pace with a 65 and moved into a one-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $350,000 Sea Pines Heritage Classic.

While other leaders faltered, Zoeller beat the swirling winds with a seven-birdie effort, matched the best round of the tournament and completed 54 holes in 204, nine under par.

A single shot back at 205 was Bob Eastwood, a journeyman pro still seeking his first victory in 12 years of tour activity. He managed to salvage a round of par-71 with a 30-foot birdie putt from off the green on the 18th.

Canadian Jim Nelford and Mac O'Grady, who held the second-round lead, were next at 206, two shots back. Nelford had a 70 and O'Grady, who made 17 tries at the qualifying school before gaining his tour playing rights last fall, rallied for a 73. He played the front in 40, but birdied three of the last five holes, a stretch that winds down to the red and white lighthouse behind the 18th.

Hale Irwin, twice a winner of this title and a two-time U.S. Open champion, South African Mark McNulty and Mark McCumber were next at 207. McCumber closed up with a 68, Irwin shot par-71 and McNulty 72.

Craig Stadler with 67, David Graham with a 69 and Fred Couples with a 68 were grouped at 208.

Lee Trevino, who once crept to within two strokes of the lead, made bogey on three of the last four and finished with a 72 that left him six strokes off the pace at 210.

"The key to it was that I ws able to hit the ball solid and the wind didn't bother it so much," Zoeller said.

Of equal importance, however, was the return of his putting touch, Zoeller said.

"I've been flirting with it for some time. Today, it was there. The hole just seemed to jump in front of the ball.

"I'm a streak putter. I just hope I can keep it going tomorrow."

Zoeller, who has won only once since taking the 1979 Masters title, scoffed at any hint of pressure in Sunday's final round of the chase for a $63,000 first prize.

"Pressure? What's pressure? What the hell, I'll just go play golf and try to enjoy it. You just have to wait for it to happen. If it's my turn, fine. If not, there's always another tournament."

"It's fun to beat such a great golf course," Zoeller said of the 6,650-yard Harbour Town Golf Links. "I used all 14 clubs in the bag. Used 'em all. And beating a course like this is more fun than shooting 65. Really it is."

He started poorly, however, missing the green and making bogey on the first hole.

Zoeller birdied the 10th and 13 from 10-12 feet and then took the lead alone with an eight-footer on the 18th.

Blake scores 10th-round TKO victory over Munoz

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Robin Blake, ranked No.9 by the World Boxing Association, ran his record to 18-0 Saturday with a 10th-round technical knockout of fourth-ranked Ruben Munoz in a nationally televised lightweight bout.

Referee Jim Quiocho stopped the fight between the two Texans at the 1:31 mark of the final round, moments after Blake had unleashed a six-punch barrage at Munoz, 16-3.

Blake, from nearby Levelland, scored a knockdown in the third round of the fight, when he connected with a hard right uppercut to Munoz' jaw. Although lefthanded, Blake continually scored with his right jab.

Munoz rallied in the fourth round, when he uncorked a hard left hook to Blake's chin. The punch staggered Blake against the ropes, and Munoz followed with four more shots to Blake's head.

Blake landed a solid right to Munoz' jaw at the end of the ninth round, and the Odessa, Texas, fighter fell to the canvas, but the knockdown was ruled a slip.

Blake began the final round with a left jab to Munoz' face, and followed with the flurry of punches that ended the fight.

Bryant's runs lift Stars to win

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Kelvin Bryant broke off runs of 45 and 37 yards late in the first half as Philadelphia built a 10-0 lead, and the Stars went on to a 17-7 United States Football League victory over the Oakland Invaders Saturday.

Bryant, the rookie from North Carolina, finished with 118 yards rushing and increased his league-leading total to 713 yards. He set up David Trout's 39-yard field goal with the 45-yard run, his longest as a pro, and scored on the 37-yard dash.

Bryant had just three yards in the opening quarter, but he added 99 in the second. On the 45-yard run, he was stopped behind the line of scrimmage near the left sideline, broke a tackle as he reversed his field, and was finally brought down on the right sideline at Oakland's 25-yard line.

The Stars, whose 6-1 record is the best in the USFL, allowed a touchdown for the first time in three weeks when Fred Besana passed to Wyatt Henderson on an 18-yard scoring play late in the third period.

Philadelphia's Chuck Fusina hit Tom Donovan on an 18-yard touchdown pass in the final period.

Oakland's offense had 215 wasted yards in the first half, when it drove within inches of a touchdown once only to have Jairo Penaranda fumble into the end zone where the Stars' Antonio Gibson recovered.

CHLORDANE: CONSUMER INFORMATION

.BACKGROUND

. Chlordane has been used to control termites for more than three decades. It is approved for this use by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and by regulatory agencies in many countries around the world. EPA is currently giving additional study to chlordane.

Recently, an issue has been raised that suggests a potential link between chlordane and alleged public health problems, even though the scientific basis on which to draw conclusions is lacking.

As the world's only producer of chlordane, Velsicol Chemical Corporation takes such charges very seriously. Velsicol is most sensitive and sympathetic to those individuals who believe that they have been inconvenienced or discomforted as a result of having their homes treated for termites.

However, the weight of scientific and medical research to date on this much-needed product supports the position that chlordane does not pose a threat to health when it has been used properly. Velsicol has prepared this fact sheet as a public summary of the significant information available on the subject.

CHLORDANE IS NOT HAZARDOUS WHEN USED PROPERLY.

. Here is why Velsicol makes this statement:

When scientists evaluate the safety of a substance, they have only two major sources of data to rely on. One is data from laboratory experiments on animals. The other data base (a far more persuasive body of evidence, when available) is human experience with the substance.

Unfortunately, laboratory toxicological research has a basic weakness: it is still very difficult to interpret what significane the results of tests on animals have for humans. Furthermore, laboratory studies in which evaluation of cancer is the end point are typically performed on strains of mice which are genetically prone to contract cancer. When chlordane was evaluated in cancer-prone strains of mice at high feeding levels over the lifetime of the animals, tumors and other changes in the liver were interpreted by some pathologists to suggest a carcinogenic response. However, when rats were tested, similarly at high doses, evidence of carcinogenicity was not found.

Scientists generally agree that the most persuasive body of information is human epidemiologic data from the study of humans potentially exposed to high concentrations of a substance.

Epidemiological studies of people potentially exposed to chlordane over a relatively long period-and at exposures which are probably higher than those homeowners would experience-provide the best available data base for assessing any potential health risks associated with chlordane.

This is consistent with the viewpoint of the majority of scientists expert in this area. For example, Dr. Robert A. Squire, Associate Professor of Comparative medicine at Johns Hopkins University, a consultant in environmental pathology and formerly acting director of the Carcinogenic Testing program at the National Cencer institute, has written that "well-conducted human epidemiological studies are the most persuasive" studies that can be employed to assess the carcinogenic potential of various compounds.

Here are brief summaries of recent research on human experience with chlordane:

b In October, 1982, Dr. Brian MacMahon, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Epidemiology, Harvard University School of Public, Health, presented final results of updated data of his 1979 study of 16,000 pest control operators.

Dr. MacMahon's findings confirmed his preliminary conclusion that: "No pattern has been revealed that would be suggestive of a relationship between employment as a pest control operator and increased risk of any particular health hazard. Neither do applicators whose intensity of exposure was believed to be the highest, or those employed as termite control operators, with their higher likelihood of exposure to chlordane, show any such pattern"

b A recent study of production workers at the Velsicol chlordane manufacturing facility, conducted by independent expert Dr. Sidney Shindell, concluded: "There is no evidence of any long-term latent effect on health, related in any way to employment at the Velsicol plant, for the 34-year period in which it has been engaged in the production of chlorinated hydrocarbon insecticides."

.CHLORDANE: CONSUMER INFORMATION

. Velsicol conducts ongoing exposure-monitoring programs and physical examinations for the employees at its chlordane production facility. Dr. Carl Zenz, occupational medical consultant, has concluded that these workers have experienced no illness that would correspond to the health problems of individuals whose homes have been treated with the product.

Velsicol's emphasis on human experience does not mean that laboratory experiments have been neglected. Velsicol has conducted and participated in numerous laboratory studies over a period of more than 30 years.

Chlordane has also been tested by independent scientists in the laboratory. For example, a two-year study of the cardiovascular response of baboons fed a diet which included chlordane was completed recently. The study, conducted by Henry C. McGill of the University of Texas Health Science Center and Southwest Foundation for Research and Education (under a grant from EPA), fed the animals chlordane at rates 100 and 1,000 times the acceptable daily intake ("acceptable daily intake" is the amount considered safe over a lifetime of daily exposure). No adverse effects due to chlordane were observed during the two-year study.

.CHLORDANE IS NEEDED.

. Shelter is the largest component (29 percent) of the American cost of living. The value of housing in this country is estimated at four trillion dollars. About 80 percent of our homes are wooden or partially wooden.

Few Americans are willing, or can afford, to allow termites to jeopardize their investment. Termites are active throughout many regions of the country, attacking not only homes, but commercial and institutional structures, as well. (Lossesdue to termite damage in single-family dwellings reached an estimated $700 million in 1980. If it were not for the use of termiticides such as chlordane, thesedollar losses would be significantly greater than $700 million.)

Effective termite control, saving billions of dollars in repair costs annually, is vital.

Chlordane, alone or in combination with other approved termiticides, is the product preferred and used by the majority of certified professional pest control operators. It has a long track record of not only controlling termites, but preventing re-infestation for periods of up to 20 years.

THE FUTURE: CONTINUED PRODUCT STEWARDSHIP.

. Because no chemical can, on the basis of science, be said to be absolutely safe, there is a need for continuing product stewardship and scientific investigation.

No matter how great the need for chlordane, Velsicol will continue to make and market the product only as long as we are convinced that proper use is not hazardous to humans or the environment.

Therefore, Velsicol has undertaken a voluntary, multi-faceted program of research, training and communication.

In ongoing research we are continuing to evaluate the health risks of chlordane. One study, being conducted by a private research facility, is concerned with obtaining information on the sub-chronic inhalation toxicity of chlordane. In addition, Velsicol is funding metabolism studies at two U.S. universities, decontamination studies in cooperation with the military, and new cancer investigations by scientists at a world-renowned cancer research institute.

In a related area, Velsicol recently underwrote a special meeting of more than 60 leading experts in research, building protection and the safe use of termiticides. Participants, including representatives of the government, pest control operators and the National Academy of Sciences, made recommendations for optimum protection of wooden structures.

Training of pest control operators is expected to further insure safe use of chlordane. Velsicol has launched a series of educational seminars on safe handling and application of chlordane for an estimated 4,000 pest control operators. Velsicol assumed responsibility for this training function after state and federal budget cuts reduced the availability of publicly-funded programs which have been conducted by the cooperative extension services and other organizations.

Warning statements and use directions on labels can also help reduced misuse. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has acknowledged Velsicol's continuing contribution in responsible termiticide labeling. The Velsicol label serves as a model for other termiticides.

JIM MURRAY

He got a save for himself

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

He looks at the world through bold, insolent eyes as if to say, "Mess with he, turkey, I dare you!" Or, "You think I'm afraid of anything, Mister? Guess again!"

With a little luck, he could have been a Dead End Kid. A Bowery Boy. Leo (Spit) Gorcey in cleats wearing uniform No. 57. On the Dodgers, not Folsom, you don't know whether he came to steal hubcaps or beat the Yankees. You imagine Billy the Kid looked a little like this between stagecoach holdups.

He pitches like he lives, daringly, recklessly, contemptuously. A "Gimme the damn ball, I don't care who's up there!" attitude. He'd challenge Babe Ruth, throw a slider on 3 and 2 to Ty Cobb.

He doesn't finesse a hitter. He just busts the fast one in on him with a curl on his lips. The guy who struck out Casey probably looked like this, too. "Here! Hit this, sucker!" he seems to say.

They usually can't.

Steve Howe would probably have to get considerably more humble to be considered merely "brash." Calling him brash is like calling Genghis Khan brash. He'll cut loose whether it's the sixth game of the World Series and the hitter is Reggie Jackson or whether it's mopup in a spring-training intrasquad skirmish. Home plate belongs to him.

You usually say of this kind of pitcher, he "has ice water in his veins." But the milk of human contempt runs through Steve Howe's. He manages to act as if the hitter is a little beneath him, fixes him with a glower like a dowager looking at a tramp through a lorgnette. He's almost scornful. Almost insulted they think they could hit him.

So, what was a kid like this doing in a treatment center for alcohol and drug abuse? Those are places for the insecure, the guys looking for someplace to hide, to get away from the heavy hitters of life, right? No place for a cocky, brash, self-assertive, aggressive, successful major leaguer, right?

Fearlessness is a great quality in a guy standing out in the middle of the diamond with the ball and three men on and none out and 50,000 people going loudly crazy. It's a great quality when you're going to take out a machine-gun nest during a dawn barrage.

It's not so useful in a social situation when someone says, "Here! Try this!"

Or, "Are you chicken?" Or at a party where they say, "What're you going home for? Afraid of the old lady?"

Says Howe: "I got that way (into drug dependency) precisely because I wasn't afraid of anything or anybody. I found out it was something I couldn't beat."

It was one lineup which laughed at his fastball, a real Murderers' Row on a lifelong win streak.

Steve Roy Howe was 23 years old when he won the National League's Rookie of the Year award in 1981. He had a 94 m.p.h. fastball which he was able to throw by Hall of Fame batters and he had 17 saves, an earned-run average of 2.60 and allowed only one home run all year. He never even looked worried. Once, he struck out Willie Stargell on three pitches with the bases loaded. "Did you know who that was?" a flabbergasted coach asked him. "A guy who can't handle the fastball up and in," shrugged Steve Howe. That's the way he was.

Steve Howe was the kind of kid who had been a starting pitcher all his life.

In college (University of Michigan) and in the minor leagues at San Antonio he was a good one. He pitched a one-hitter in the College World Series and was 6-2 with San Antonio in the Texas League, where he spent only half a season. Yet when the Dodgers asked him to be a relief pitcher, Steve shrugged, "Why not?" You had a feeling if they'd asked him if he wanted to become a shark rider, he'd agree, too.

"His control was uncanny. For a youngster who not only throws hard but throws left-handed, it was almost exttaterrestrial. In the World Series in 1981, that pressure chamber that is supposed to reduce young fireballers into quivering masses of chicken liver on the mound, Steve Howe won one game, saved one, and struck out four in seven innings. He helped put the pennant in the barn that year, too, pitching the final outs in two Los Angeles victories. In 1982 he allowed only six unintentional walks and only three home runs.

When an athlete falls victim to the drug and booze scene, it usually take the efforts of 20 strong golden-tongued orators to get him to seek help. Steve Howe needed only one: Steve Howe. If he seemed an unlikely candidate to need the crutch of chemicals to help him through life, he seemed an even unlikelier candidate to want to hide his predicament under a table.

"I brought myself in," he boasts. He finally found something to be afraid of. It was the one time in his career Steve Howe needed relief himself. He went through the six-week rehab program at The Meadows in Wickenburg, Ariz. After that, all he needed to take to the bullpen with him was the fastball and the slider.

Nor did he see any need to hide his cure. Steve Howe isn't afraid of public opinion. "I found out it was just like on the mound. When you have a tough situation, you have to go out and deal with it. It was just another guy I had to get out."

All baseball was relieved. If there was one guy who would seem to have all the pitches he would need, the fastball, slider, all the chemistry he would need, cockiness, confidence, contempt to be a great relief pitcher, it would be Steve. And Howe! And it would be a shame to have that splendid arrogant "Who do you think you are!?" look in the eyes spoiled by their being bloodshot.

Lea hurls one-hit shutout at Astros

By The Associated Press

National League

HOUSTON — Montreal's Charlie Lea pitched 7⅔ hitless innings and finished with baseball's second one-hitter in two days and Andre Dawson hit his third home run in three game as the Expos beat the Houston Astros 2-0 Saturday.

Lea, bidding for his second career no-hitter, lost it in the eighth when Terry Puhl, batting for rookie catcher John Mizerock, pulled a clean single to right field.

Lea finished with six strikeouts and three walks. It was his second one-hitter against Houaton,. Last May 26, also in the Astrodome, he faced one batter over the minimum but was tied 0-0 with Houston's Don Sutton before the Expos scored four runs for Lea in the 10th inning.

Lea, 2-0, who pitched 5⅔ perfect innings in winning his first game of the season against Los Angeles on April 9, pitched his no-hitter against San Francisco on May 10, 1981.

Cubs 6, Pirates 5

PITTSBURGH — Jerry Morales' two-run pinch-double capped a three-run Chicago rally in the eighth inning that lifted the Cubs to a 6-5 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The victory was the second in nine games for Chicago. The Pirates lost their third consecutive home game after winning their first five games on the road.

Willie Hernandez, 1-0, worked two scoreless innings for the victory. Lee Smith picked his first save.

Reds 8, Giants 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Johnny Bench belted a three-run homer, Dan Driessen drove in three runs and Mario Soto pitched seven innings of two-hit ball to lead the Cincinnati Reds to an 8-3 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The Reds blasted 19 hits, including four singles by second baseman Ron Oester, who raised his average to .417.

Cincinnati erupted for four runs in the sixth inning to take a 6-1 lead. The outburst included Bench's 378th career homer, placing him 23rd on the all-time list.

Phillies 8, Braves 4

PHILADELPHIA — Tony Perez's two-run single in the seventh inning snapped a 4-4 tie, and Steve Carlton struck out 12 Braves to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to their fifth straight victory, an 8-4 decision over Atlanta. The loss, Atlanta's first since opening day, ended a seven-game winning streak.

Carlton moved past Gaylord Perry into third place on the all-time strikeout list with 3,466, trailing Walter Johnson's 3,508 and Nolan Ryan's 3,494. Perry has 3,462. It was the 71st game in which Carlton has struck out 10 or more batters. The 38-year-old left-hander scattered 12 hits and walked four in eight innings' work.

Pete Rose led off the bottom of the seventh with a single off loser Phil Niekro, 0-1. After Gary Matthews struck out, Joe Morgan doubled Rose to third, and Mike Schmidt was intentionally walked. Perez singled into left field scoring Rose and Morgan.

Cardinals 6, Mets 2

ST. LOUIS — Mike Ramsey rapped a tiebreaking triple to highlight a five-run uprising in the seventh inning, carrying the St. Louis Cardinals to a 6-2 triumph over the New York Mets.

The victory was St. Louis' sixth in a row, handing New York its fifth straight setback. Until erupting in the seventh, the Cards had been restricted to two hits and one run by Mets' right-hander Ed Lynch, 0-1.

New York second baseman Brian Giles opened the gates for St. Louis by booting George Hendrick's grounder to start the big seventh.

After Hendrick advanced on Ken Oberkfell's sacrifice bunt, David Green singled to produce a 2-2 tie. Ramsey then tripled over the head of Mets center fielder Mookie Wilson, scoring Green, and Dane Iorg, pinch-hitting for Dave LaPoint, 1-0, delivered a three-base hit to the same locale, scoring Ramsey.

Lonnie Smith kept the rally going with a single which scored pinch-runner Gene Rool, and Ozzie Smith hit a run-scoring single after Lonnie stole second.

Red Sox sneak by Rangers, 2-1

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Jim Rice and Wade Boggs drove in runs with sixth-inning doubles Saturday as the Boston Red Sox edged the Texas Rangers 2-1 on the pitching of Bruce Hurst and Mark Clear.

Boston, blanked on two hits for five innings by right-hander Danny Darwin, broke a scoreless tie after Dwight Evans led off the sixth with a checked-swing single to the left of the mound.

Rice, 6-for-11 with six runs batted in in his last three games, followed with a double off the wall in left-center, scoring Evans. With two out, Boggs lined a double to left, scoring Rice.

Hurst, 1-1, blanked the Rangers on five hits for seven innings. He needed help from Clear after Texas pushed across a run on a single by Billy Sample, a bunt single by Mike Richardt and a two-out double by Dave Hostetler. Clear pitched out of the jam and went on to earn his first save.

Angels 9, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Reggie Jackson's three-run homer capped a seven-run explosion in the fifth inning that boosted the California Angels to a 9-5 victory over the Minnesota Twins.

Bruce Kison, 2-1, was the winner, yielding seven hits and striking out 10. Rookie Bryan Oelkers, 0-2, fell victim to the Angels' bats in the fifth.

White Sox 3, Tigers 1

CHICAGO — Rookie Greg Walker's pinch-home run triggered a three-run eighth-inning rally, leading Floyd Bannister and the Chicago White Sox to a 3-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

American League

Walker slugged his first homer of the season with one out off starter Dan Petry and pinch-hitter Lorenzo Gray greeted reliever Howard Bailey, 1-1, with a single. Tony Bernazard doubled and when left fielder Larry Herndon misplayed the ball for an error Gray scored the go-ahead run.Harold Baines then doubled to score Bernazard.

Bannister, 1-1, gave up three hits in eight innings but had trouble with his control. Dick Tidrow picked up his first save.

Orioles 2-4, Indians 0-7

BALTIMORE — Julio Franco, a replacement for the injured Toby Harrah, rapped a three-run double to snap a fourth-inning tie, and the Cleveland Indians defeated the Baltimore Orioles 7-4 in the second game to earn a split of their doubleheader.

The Orioles won the opener 2-0 on a combined nine-hitter by Jim Palmer, Storm Davis, and Tippy Martinez.

Franco entered the nightcap after Harrah was struck on the left hand by a pitch from Dennis Martinez, 1-2, in the first inning. Franco singled and scored on a single by Andre Thornton in the third, and then cleared the bases to key a four-run rally in the fourth.

The three-run hit came after Cleveland forged a 2-2 tie on singles by Manny Trillo, Chris Bando, and Mike Fischlin. Miguel Dilone walked to load the bases for Franco.

Neal Heaton, 1-0, allowed five hits in seven innings of the nightcap, and Dan Spillner earned his fourth save.

Adams' 66 good for Orlando lead

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Lynn Adams, who started the day four strokes back, fired a 6-under-par 66 to ease past the leaders Saturday and assume a one-shot margin over JoAnne Carner after two rounds of the $150,000 LPGA Combanks Orlando Classic.

The round, negotiated over the windy, 6,274-yard Cypress Creek Country Club course, equaled Adams' best in six years as a professional and gave her a 36-hole total of 7-under-par 137.

Carner, chasing her 38th LPGA tour victory, but the first in 1983, shot a 68 Saturday for a two-round total of 138. She lost a share of the lead when she bogeyed the par-4, 354-yard 17th hole.

Three golfers — former Orlando titleholders Jane Blalock, Donna White and Patti Rizzo — were three shots off Adams' pace at 140. Marty Dickerson and Debbie Massey were four strokes back at 141.

First-round leader Ayako Okamoto started the day with a two-shot advantage over four others and looked like she might pull away from the field when she went 7-under for the tournament with birdies on No. 6 and No. 7.

But the Japanese golfer, looking for her second tour win in the United States, bogeyed three straight holes beginning with nine to fall out of the lead.

Perkins will not pass senior year of play

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina basketball star Sam Perkins says he will not pass up his senior year to enter the National Basketball Association draft.

Perkins said Friday that he intends to stay in school to help the Tar Heels make a run at the national title next year.

"We have almost everybody coming back next year," he said. "I think we should have a good shot at having a good season. There's no chance I'll try to turn professional. I'm enjoying college life at Carolina too much right now."

Trooper stops innocent driver to show him tragedy

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

"One blue-and-gold afternoon in early fall," writes Edward Vadnais in Sports Afield, "I was driving down a slope of the Alleghenies in western Virginia when I noticed a police car following me. Just before a turn in the highway, the patrolman pulled ahead and motioned for me to follow him. Soon he indicated that we were to stop. I had no idea what I'd done wrong.

"By the side of the road, looking down into a mountain hollow, lay a pool of still water, dappled by leaves. In the light and shadow I discerned several deer, partly reflected in the pool, motionless, the sun glinting on sleek coats and stately antlers.

"Not a word was spoken for several minutes, then the trooper turned, touched his hat in salute and said, "Thank you, sir. I HAD to show it to somebody else.""...

BIOLOGISTS at Matagorda are trying to crack the case of the vanishing bucks. The disappearing bucks are not greenbacks, but white tails. Instead of fingerprints and magnifying glasses, radio transmitters are used for the detective work.

Studies show whitetail females usually stay at home. Yearling bucks tend to wander after reaching maturity.

In a four-year study, involving observations of freeze-branded bucks, researchers were unable to account for more than 90 per cent of the bucks by the time the deer reached 3½ years of age. "Home ranges of young bucks are relatively stable until the month prior to their first breeding season at 1½ years of age. In some instances, bucks did not disappear until their second breeding season, but by the third breeding season, only five percent of the branded bucks remained in the herd," said Bob Carroll, LaGrange biologist.

Carroll said the study will consist of fitting 20 bucks and 10 does with radio transmitters. Each deer will be freeze branded and ear-tagged for positive identification.

Carroll said, "The fate of these young bucks needs to be determined so this phenomenon can be fitted into our deer management programs."

THE REMARKABLE black bass run at Lake Spence continued last weekend, although striper catches dropped and what catches there were fell in the smaller range.

White bass and crappie showed signs of biting in increasing numbers and one fisherman had 200 channel catfish on his string.

Bonnie Husband, Midland, took a six-pound striper and David Saultz, Midland, reported three, three and nine pound black bass. Both were fishing out of Paint Creek Marina.

Bill Burns, Robert Lee, checked in with 25 white bass, out of Cracker Barrel Grocery and Robert Hampton, Sweetwater, had an 11 pound striper out of Triangle Grocery and Bait.

Some king sized crappie were reported at Lake Thomas with Lynn Andrews, Midland, reeling in one 3 1/2 pounder taken in shallow water. Tom Crouch, Odessa, took a three-pound crappie and 3 1/2 pound black with a crappie rig in 3-4 feet of water. The crappie spawn is underway with the best results in shallow water.

WEST COLUMBIA, Texas (AP) — Brandel Chamblee shot a 3-under-par 69 to lead a late Texas surge as the Longhorns sliced Houston's lead to seven strokes Saturday after two rounds of the Southwest Conference Golf Championship.

The Cougars, behind Billy Tuten who is tied for the individual lead with Chamblee at 143, built a 15-shot lead before the Texas surge on the back nine holes.

Chamblee, who opened with a 74 Friday, started Saturday's action with a pair of bogies before putting together four birdies and an eagle. Tuten fired a 4-under-par 32 on the front nine Saturday but fell to 38 on the back nine for a 2-under-par 70 on the day.

Sideways step

Two bills now before the Legislature propose granting four-year status to the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in Odessa. The goal is incorrectly approached. It's not to grant four-year status to UTPB, but to make four years of quality college education available in the Permian Basin.

Since it opened in 1969, UTPB has attempted to attract additional students to its Odessa campus to no avail. A number of reasons are given for that failure, but the one that isn't mentioned is that there simply are too many quality colleges and universities in the West Texas area. In fact, when you consider that there is a major university in Lubbock, three in Abilene, one in San Angelo, the University of Texas at El Paso, Sul Ross State in Alpine and Eastern New Mexico University in Portales N.M., you can begin to appreciate what UTPB faces in attempting to attract students, particularly since it only offers upper-level courses of study.

So the bills propose making UTPB four-year, supposedly giving it additional leverage in attracting the college-bound from this area and elsewhere. That reasoning is faulty because it assumes all those students now attending junior colleges in the area — Midland College, Odessa College, Howard College at Big Spring and the like — would instead elect to attend UTPB if it were a four-year school. That likely would not happen, though, because a college still can only offer one thing — an education — while other colleges in other parts of the state more blessed with physical features can offer a different range of recreational pursuits. Prospective students do consider those factors, too, when selecting a college.

What likely would happen if UTPB went four-year is what Midland College's Dr. Jess Parrish and others fear: A deterioration of the existing value of local junior colleges as academic institutions with UTPB eventually gaining those academic students, but still failing to attract others. It would merely constitute a tradeoff of students and likely would not give UTPB additional bargaining power for students from other areas.

There's little question that such a change would hurt Midland College and the other junior colleges in the area. That's substantiated by the revelation that 61 percent of students enrolled at Midland College this semester are classified as pursuing academic subjects while 39 percent are classed as vocational students. College officials, furthermore, note that students in some fields classed as vocational actually are seeking a full four-year degree. The subjects those students are studying are merely classed as vocational.

Ironically, this week officials of Midland College and the other colleges that would be affected by the UTPB change will participate in activities marking the start of the Permian Area Cooperative Academic Program. That program calls for officials of Midland College, Odessa College, Howard College and UTPB to cooperate on curriculum, faculty and programs in order to provide four years of college study in the Permian Basin.

Dr. Parrish now says the PACAP probably will be put on hold, pending resolution of the debate over making UTPB a four-year institution. That's a shame. The program offers a realistic approach to providing four years of quality college education in the basin. Making UTPB a four-year institution would merely be swapping students. The choice is between continuing to move forward on education in the Permian Basin or just stepping sideways.

Another View: Fighting the system

A group of college sports-information directors has become exercised about the proliferation of tout sheets and other devices for publishing the point spreads in upcoming college sporting events. They fear the easy availability of professional tipsters' forecasts may increase the danger of athletes being corrupted by gamblers trying to fix games. They propose that college athletic departments refuse to cooperate with newspapers and broadcasting networks or stations that continue to report point spreads.

It's a bad idea for at least several important reasons. First, there's not the slightest chance that the media would agree to such self-censorship, not even if colleges adopted a uniform policy (which they wouldn't) of "boycotting" those who refuse to cooperate. Second, the threat of game-fixing has been so well-contained over the years that the information directors' fears are exaggerated. And, most important, it ignores altogether the most corrupting factor in college sports.

The greater problem lies right at the doorstep of those who worry so much about professional gamblers. It is the entire big-time college sports industry — and that is what it is — that recruits (often by overstepping its own ground rules) young men, many of whom have no business on a college campus, supplies them with every inducement to stay with the game (one reason why the best among them don't need to accept bribes) and enriches the coffers of universities with fat television contracts. This industry rewards those with outstanding talents, but does little or nothing to prepare them for the shock of re-entering the real world when, for whatever reason, they are forced to drop out or, later, fail to make the grade as professionals.

Sadly, the university sports establishment often plays more than a passive role in the corruption of young athletes. Recent revelations at the University of Florida indicate that assistant coaches helped members of the football team make hundreds of dollars each by selling tickets to football games to team "boosters" — often alumni — for several times their face value and allowing players to pocket the difference. This kind of corruption, not to mention the granting of phony grades and credits, is endemic in the system, while point-shaving scandals caused by gamblers have been kept to a minimum over the years.

The motives of the sports-information directors seem sincere, but they are fighting the wrong battle. Unfortunately, to fight the right one — to reform the high-pressure system in which the university administrations themselves are willing participants — could cost them their jobs. Gambling is merely a camp-follower in this drama. It should be discouraged, and its illegal practice should be punished when brought to light. That will not, unfortunately, make major college sports any less the commercial enterprise it has become.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan looking for 'leaking' liars

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has gone bananas over his inability to stop news leaks. He intends to use lie detectors to uncover who's passing out classified information. Any government worker who refuses to be strapped to a polygraph machine can kiss his career goodbye.

Jack Anderson

There's no question that the underbelly of the Reagan administration has become a sieve. But I can tell the president who the worst leakers are. Just let me give lie detector tests to the people who stand at his side. For the culprits are his closest White House associates and members of his Cabinet.

Most of the time, the president doesn't need a polygraph machine to learn a leaker's identity. For the greatest number of leaks are approved right in the Oval Office. Reagan doesn't hesitate to put out classified information that makes his policies look good. Some examples:

— When the president decided to rally public support for his defense budget increases, a senior Pentagon official gave a study of Soviet military strength to The New York Times.

— When the president wanted to bring pressure on a reluctant Senate to approve the sale of AWACS radar planes to Saudi Arabia, the Pentagon was assigned to make selective leaks. Defense officials showed reporters a secret study, complete with maps and charts, which purported to show that the AWACS would not threaten Israel.

— When the president decided to shake a big stick at Libyan dictator Muammar Khadafy, he wanted to prevent retaliation against Americans living in Libya. Intelligence officials leaked a story that Khadafy had sent a "hit squad" to this country to assassinate the president. The Americans in Libya got the message. Most of them packed up and left.

The worst security violator is probably the president himself. He doesn't worry about national security when he wants to make a point with the public. That was the case with his so-called "Star Wars" speech calling for development of a laser system to shoot down Soviet missiles in space. He arbitrarily declassified documents so he could show them on television.

The president saw political advantage in this use of classified information. Either he committed a damaging leak of national secrets or the documents shouldn't have been classified in the first place.

Security experts acknowledged to my reporter Don Corrigan that the practice is to classify just about everything that might become an embarrassment including, at one time, the White House menu. Reagan has locked many official embarrassments in all the secrecy that the necessities of security and the taboos of patriotism can impose.

As evidence that the Reagan administration is more concerned about censoring the news than protecting security, I asked my associate Dale Van Atta last year to find out how well the administration protects the real secrets that affect the nation's safety.

He walked in off the street and picked up engineering blueprints of the White House, no questions asked. Yet this is the nerve center of the federal government.

Next to the White House, perhaps the most sensitive complex in America is the National Military Command Center. This is the Pentagon's crisis center. Yet Van Atta also picked up a draft report titled, "Preliminary Estimate Emergency Power Generator for the National Military Command Center." It contains highly sensitive national security information.

Van Atta also found lying around loose a desk-sized "Composite Utilities Plan" for "CIA Headquarters Utility Plan, Route 123, McLean, Va. 22101." Few outsiders are ever allowed into the wooded CIA grounds in suburban Virginia. Yet here was every building, road and power fixture clearly drawn, including the specifications of all the major utility lines.

Clearly, the Reagan administration was careless with some of the nation's most sensitive security documents. Yet let something tawdry occur, and our elected leaders will pull up the covers. They'll invoke national security and reach for the secrecy stamp to cover up the embarrassment. What President Reagan really wants to do is to control the flow of information to the American people. He keeps demanding to know "Whoooo did it?" as a way of intimidating government employees from revealing anything but the official version of events.

But does the president really want to know, for example, who orchestrated the downfall of Anne Burford at the Environmental Protection Agency? For weeks the president was insisting publicly that Burford's job was secure, while his closest White House advisers were leaking a flood of rumors, speculation and damaging facts that undermined her position. Does the president really want to know precisely whoooo did it?

The next time he decides he has had it up to his "keister" with leaks, I'll arrange for polygraph tests of the Cabinet secretaries and the top White House aides. For dramatic effect, I can even arrange to test them on the television show, "Lie Detector."

If Reagan insists on compelling government officials to take lie detector tests, he could wind up kicking himself in the keister.

GEORGE F. WILL

And now, a 'San Raphael' toilet!

WASHINGTON — Beneath the photograph, the advertisement's text begins: "You never thought you'd see a toilet quite like this." Actually, it looks like an orthodox toilet. Except it is sitting on the yellow line in the middle of a deserted Western highway. And behind it a woman shimmering in a silver gown, and hitchhiking. This toilet, the Kohler Company's pride and joy, is the San Raphael model, shown in "Swiss Chocolate" — that's the color, not the material. Welcome to the world of advertising, America's least understood big business.

George F. Will

In 1982, $67.3 billion was spent on advertising. The biggest spender, Procter and Gamble, spent upwards of $700 million. The biggest agency, Young & Rubicam, had U.S. billings of $1.6 billion. Critics of advertising often ascribe to its vast and unproven powers of manipulation. Such powers are an article of faith among critics of capitalism, who argue that big business can manage, even dictate, demand and hence is not disciplined by market forces. But now Daniel Pope, a University of Oregon historian, has published a clarifying book, "The Making of Modern Advertising."

Selling, he says, once was the storekeeper's responsibility. But modern manufacturers must sell as well as make products. The technology that made mass production possible made advertising necessary. It was necessary to generate strong demand for goods produced by capital-intensive industries with high fixed costs.

Railroads that could distribute goods nationally called forth advertising to stimulate wants. Advertising of national brands helped give rise to national magazines. A benefit to consumers was an economy increasingly based on high-volume production with low profit per unit.

Advertising promises a flowering of individuality as persons define themselves in choices. Yet advertising presupposes mass tastes. (Pope notes that at 9:15 p.m. EST, Feb. 5, 1982, Coca-Cola engaged in "road-blocking," buying time on all three networks to introduce its "Coke Is It!" commercials. That night four out of ten Americans saw the commercials.)

Advertising promises a democratic distribution of pleasure, but sells many goods by stressing exclusivity — the idea that the purhaser will elevate himself above the herd. Advertising celebrates choice — "consumer sovereignty" — yet stirs anxieties about whether human volition is sovereign over manufactured persuasion.

Advertising performs an — often minimal — informing function necessary for rational choice. But as Pope says, advertising assures that consumers often are impulsive and suggestible. He says the average supermarket stocks about 10,000 different brands and products. If each customer bought only what he came to the store intending to buy, supermarkets would be very different. They depend on impulse buying. Some impulses are triggered by previous exposures to advertising.

One hundred years ago, Americans read advertisements just to ascertain the availability of goods to satisfy elemental needs — food, clothes, tools. Now they read advertisements to ascertain what they might decide they desire. Certain necessities (soap, toothpaste) are heavily advertised, but it sometimes seems that half the GNP is generated by personal anxieties — about bad breath, damp underarms.

McDonald's advertisements talk as much about convenience as about hamburgers: "You deserve a break today" or "We do it all for you." Those gorgeous "Miller time" commercials make no claim. They create a mood, and are weapons in a market-share battle. They do not aim to get you to buy a Miller beer rather than a Buick, or to make you thirsty, or to get you to buy Miller rather than Dr. Pepper when you are thirsty. They aim to get beer drinkers to drink Miller rather than some other beer.

Advertising is less a "science of persuasion" than an art of arresting attention briefly so that perhaps some commercially useful response will occur, sometime. Arresting attention is increasingly difficult as Americans become inured to sensory blitzkriegs. Print advertisements must be especially ingenious to seize the attention of persons saturated with sound and motion. So: Put a toilet on a highway.

Bob Sievers is with the Campbell-Mithun agency in Minneapolis, Kohler's agency. Plumbing fixtures are, he says with some understatement, "a low-interest subject." If you just show a pretty bathroom, few eyes will pause. The toilet on the highway is an eye-catcher, all right, but to what end?

The aim is not to get Aunt Min to say to Uncle Ralph, "Hey, let's get a new toilet rather than a new Buick." Rather, the aim is to get people who must think about plumbing fixtures to think that Kohler is a company with snap, crackle and pop. Well, that is the least you can say for folks who name toilets "San Raphael" and "Rialto."

ART BUCHWALD

A defense plan media can accept

Larry Speakes, President Reagan's press secretary, has blamed the media for the administration's disastrous defeat on military spending in the Senate Budget Committee. Speakes said Congress was responding to a public informed by a press that was not giving the administration's defense program a "fair shake."

Art Buchwald

Larry, for once, knows what he's talking about.

As soon as the president announced he wouldn't budge from a 10 percent increase in military spending, a group of opinion makers met at The Class Reunion restaurant to discuss what action to take. Sam Donaldson, of ABC, said, "I think the president has gone overboard on defense, and I am not prepared to give him a dime until he tells me how he's going to spend it."

Leslie Stahl, of CBS, agreed with Sam. "I oppose sticking a lot of MX missiles in the ground until the Joint Chiefs of Staff assure me that they are not vulnerable to Soviet attack."

"Is this your personal opinion?" I asked.

"It is not only mine, but Dan Rather's. Dan feels 'Dense Pack' basing is unfeasible and a waste of money."

"So do Tom Brokaw and Roger Mudd," Chris Wallace, of NBC, told us. "They're for cutting the president's military request in half."

Helen Thomas, of United Press, said, "I've read the defense budget from cover to cover and there is a lot of waste and fraud there. Why should I support Weinberger if the Pentagon won't clean up its act?"

Rowland Evans and Bob Novak, media hardliners, who speak with one voice, said together, "If we don't give the president what he's asking for, we will be sending a message to the Soviets that they can get anything they want in the Geneva disarmament talks. We say Reagan isn't asking enough. You ultra-liberals are tying the president's hands, just at the time when the Soviets are starting to realize we mean business."

We all ignored Evans and Novak, as we usually do, when the question of national security comes up.

I said, "No one wants a stronger defense than my readers do. But I must know what our defense policy is. If the military will just tell me what they plan to do with the money, I would be the first to say, 'Go get 'em boys.' But as long as the president has his feet in concrete, I have to be a nay-sayer."

Tom Wicker, of the New York Times, said, "I couldn't agree with you more. I want to know if we are preparing to fight a limited nuclear war, a prolonged nuclear war, a two-ocean war, a one-ocean war, or a police action in space."

David Brinkley said, "What gets me is that the military will come to the media and tell us they only need $10 billion for a new weapon, and once they develop it, they're going to return next year and say it will cost us four times as much as they originally thought. I got badly burned on the F-18 fighter plane, and I'm not going to get sucked in again."

Columnist James Kilpatrick said, "I think you're all talking a bunch of claptrap."

We waited for him to continue, but apparently that's all he wanted to say.

Sarah McClendon said, "I can't justify a $2 trillion military expenditure over five years when there isn't enough money to take care of the sick and the poor. I say cut."

"Then the consensus is," I said, "that the Reagan-Weinberger military budget is totally unacceptable, and they're going to have to go back to the drawing boards and come up with something the media can live with."

"What's our next step?" Mary McGrory asked.

"We start a steady drumbeat of negative thought about defense expenditures, and let Congress take it from there."

Chicago's mayoral election suggests basic truths

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

EDITOR'S REPORT

NEW YORK — Congressman Harold Washington is appealing repeatedly for unity as the first elected black mayor in the history of Chicago and he needs all the help he can get. The 60-year-old Democrat won a close race against a virtually unknown white Republican candidate Bernard Epton and the campaign became downright mean even by Chicago standards which don't bring out the best in politicians.

Hearst

This election was scrutinized internationally and at home for future significance. It clearly suggested a couple of basic home truths to me. Blacks and Hispanics, making up around 40-odd percent of Chicago's population solidly endorsed Mayor-elect Washington practically to the last voter in the city's biggest-ever turnout.

Lots of whites, fearful that blacks would move into their jobs and run them out of City Hall, defected this one time from traditional Democratic support, to a Republican, the first to make the grade in more than 50 years.

BUT THE principal reason that Congressman Washington squeaked through to become mayor of America's second largest city was the white vote he obtained. Around 19 percent of the registered white voters refused to be stampeded by entrenched Democratic aldermen — I call them ward heelers — and voted to give Washington a chance. The percentages tell the close story: Washington, 51.4 percent, Epton, 48.3 percent. A socialist garnered the residue.

So, Harold Washington becomes the 224th black mayor elected in the U.S. and potentially the most powerful in a broadening base of political muscle of 27 million people, approximately 14 percent of the U.S. population. Add to that figure 15 million Hispanics whose compatriots sided in Chicago with the blacks and you have a formidable bloc if they are registered to support a party.

The Voting Rights Act in 1965 enabled assorted black organizations to rally behind particular candidates of their choice in the last decade. Mayor-elect Washington takes his place among governing mayors like Tom Bradley of Los Angeles and Coleman Young of Detroit, to mention a couple of prominent personalities across the country. As a Congressman, he was among 21 elected black members of the House of Representatives. They've all come a long way since the tension-filled days of segregation.

Interestingly, many black candidates for public office succeed to high posts in many white areas. One of the most notable is Alan Wheat who won a seat in Congress in Missouri that is 80 percent white. Conversely, Gov. George Wallace, once the fiery arch-segregationist of Alabama, won a fourth term by appealing to the black vote and saying that he grasped their problems now.

THE UGLY CRIES of "race" and racism traded during the Chicago campaign were eagerly seized and taken out of all context by Soviet and communist propaganda journals. I found it ironic, indeed, that the Russians in particular and their satellites in general haven't uttered a peep yet about Mayor-elect Washington's triumph. The Soviets, always self-appointed protectors of what they regard as the underdog, do nothing whatever inside the U.S.S.R. to protect minorities. I'm not even mentioning Jews, practicing Christians or political dissidents. Take the Soviet Asian population, which in 10 years will be equivalent to that of the so-called Great Russian.

Soviet Asians are overwhelmingly Moslem in faith and have come in for their share of rough KGB treatment because they try and insist on following ritual. Russian efforts to intrude pockets of pro-Moscow people inside Soviet Asia have been fruitless. When they invaded Afghanistan, U.S.S.R. masterminds used Asian troops to help occupy the country. But they quickly noticed that the Soviet Asians wouldn't fight fellow Moslems. They're being kept as area supply troops, usually under guard so they won't bolt.

And what about Asians inside the geographical boundaries of the Soviet Union? While they presently comprise nearly half of the total Russian population, their average status is way down the Soviet ladder of officialdom, jobs, education and housing.

AND THE SOVIET journals never hesitate to lambaste Soviet Asians for being "lazy" or "ridden with religion." In humor magazines they are made the butts of jokes, right down to the colors of their skins and contours of their features. There's Soviet-style "equality" for you.

While on the subject of minorities, the House of Representatives in Washington has been pussy-footing around a nuclear freeze amendment because many freshmen Democrats campaigned in its favor. Anyone with common sense doesn't want a nuclear war and the amendment under debate sounds to me like a chance for Congressmen to get in their two cents worth for people to read back home.

Basically, as I understand this issue, it calls for a consensus between the House and the Senate and this is a first step which is not binding. Speaker Tip O'Neill observed archly that freeze backers had the vote and warned that they'd push the amendment through whenever the vote was called. His presentation was straight-forward hardball politics.

Chief sponor of the resolution, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., sought to appeal to reason. He declared the terms negotiated under the resolution and would be — "must be — mutual and verifiable."

PRESIDENT REAGAN, who has all the inside data of negotiations with the Soviet Union at his fingertips, urged the House to adopt an amendment to the freeze resolution under present consideration. He advocated in a letter freezing nuclear forces at equal levels for the Soviets and us. Advocates of the Democratic amendment for a freeze asserted that the "equal levels" would cripple their bill.

I don't believe for a moment that any responsible legislator would freeze now and try to flee later once the chips were down. They're having a fine time with two-minute speeches, none of which can help our negotiators when serious talks resume in Geneva. We need a bi-partisanship on such a serious issue but this free-wheeling jag seems to me a strictly one-way street. It isn't statesmanship, it's a demagogic appeal to a noisy minority.

SPEAKING OUT

Volunteerism has cumulative effect

By DR. JESS PARRISH

Dr. Jess Parrish is president of Midland College, a position he has held since 1981.

The late world-renowned musician Louis Armstrong reportedly was once asked by an admirer, what is jazz? His response was, "Man, if you have to ask, you will never know."

That's sort of the way I feel about volunteerism in our city and nation as we mark the observance of National Volunteer Week in Midland — if we must ask ourselves about the role of volunteerism in our city, we will probably never know.

Volunteerism has a cumulative effect on our society, and I believe that you can gauge the success of a city by the volunteer hours given by its citizens. When you find a pessimistic city, you find a low amount of volunteerism going on in that city.

It's just a good way to take the pulse of a city — by noticing how much volunteer activity is going on there.

I think it is also hard to separate volunteerism from free enterprise, and perhaps that is best exemplified in West Texas. Maybe it's the influence of the pioneer spirit of those determined settlers who created the Midlands, Lubbocks, Amarillos, Wichita Falls and other West Texas cities, but there is a do-it-ourselves spirit here, particularly in Midland, that is one of our great strengths. We help ourselves and others here because we are Americans and that is a part of our heritage — taking care of our own!

I don't think a lot of people relate their own volunteerism to the state and nation, but probably tend to think only of the volunteer efforts in their own community, but in reality as volunteers in Midland we are part of the millions across the nation who are helping out others in some way.

There is no way you can put a price tag on volunteerism, but we all know, with any reflection at all, that it would amount to billions in paid services.

How can you price the time a $300-a-day executive puts in on some volunteer project or the time of a minimum wage worker who helps voluntarily? You can't price that time. It comes because of love and concern for fellow man.

If the truth were known, perhaps nearly all of us are involved in some way or the other with volunteer work. Sure, you see names of prominent people who do volunteer work, and that's fine, but for every such person named there are millions in the trenches, giving time for their fellow man. Consider the hospital volunteers who help out, the people who donate a couple of hours weekly to their church, or favorite charity, and it goes on and on.

Some of us donate time to a number of causes, others prefer to concentrate their time and talents, and money, to a favorite cause. We have to look within ourselves to see what's important to us, to determine our personal values, and then we give our time so that we can serve most effectively. No one can determine for someone else what is important and where his/her volunteer time should be spent.

The United Way of Midland is a good example. Hundreds of volunteers serve the agencies involved with the United Way. These agency members represent a cross-section of the community, men, women, all ages, all ethnic groups. They are both salaried and hourly employees on these agency boards, each with a particular expertise to give to the various organizations to make them better.

The United Way is important because it gives a person who doesn't have a specific interest a way to spend some volunteer time with an agency of his/her choice. The United Way is an exemplary model for the role of volunteerism in America. Thousands and thousands of people with some time to give are afforded an excellent opportunity through this worthwhile organization.

There are, of course, many, many fine organizations which depend so heavily on volunteers, such as the health agencies — American Cancer Society, Muscular Dystrophy, hospital volunteer groups — the list goes on and on.

I know personally that many of the faculty and staff of our own institution, Midland College, participate in United Way organizations and other groups around the city as volunteers and it is always a pleasure to learn that someone at MC is helping out where they can.

This is a country run on the volunteer system. From our Armed Forces to our youth groups, the volunteer spirit has made the United States the humanitarian force it has been on the world scene, almost from the inception of the colonies.

There seems little doubt that, were all of those who volunteer their services to some worthwhile cause to withdraw, we simply could not function as the great democracy we are, dedicated to helping one another and being deeply concerned with the welfare of our fellow human beings.

The person who has the most to gain from volunteerism is the volunteer himself. The self-satisfaction of helping someone, of doing for others, how can you beat the feeling it gives you?

With the spirit of volunteerism, this country will always be great.

Missing facts

To The Editor:

Since Dr. Humphreys is such a great believer in facts, there are a few facts which I would like to point out as a taxpayer about our hospital district.

First, in 1977 the trustees of this non-profit hospital facility gave the hospital to the taxpayers of the hospital district and a set (five) of directors was designated and subsequently elected to operate same and to be responsible to the taxpayers. In return, the taxpayers agreed to provide a tax rate to cover bad debts, indigent care and retire the $10 million bond issue covering that one expansion project. That is the only thing ever submitted to the taxpayers for their approval. Question: How much is still owing on this $10 million and when will it be paid off?

Second, a cancer treatment center was constructed and placed in operation; after an extensive and expensive battle with Odessa. This facility is to ostensibly serve the entire Permian Basin. Question: Who picks up the tab for the indigent care and bad debts on this facility?

Third and fourth, this concerns the two expansions now underway, for the chemical dependance unit, and the 77 bed addition at the existing site. I hear that these are planned to be financed by revenue bonds to be retired by surplus revenue. My question is: are we to suddenly have a lot of surplus cash from some unknown source? This from an institution which has always operated in the red, by newspaper reports, since the day the hospital district was formed? Since Medicare and Medicaid payments are to be cut, this is not feasible; even if the administration can refrain from fighting with the private companies desiring to build here or with our neighbors in Odessa.

I think it is time to level with the taxpayers of the Midland Hospital District. These facilities can only be paid for with a greatly increased chunk of your tax money somewhere down the line. Don't you think you should have the right to vote on this proposal? If you agree, why not call or write the elected directors of the hospital board (your representatives?) and express your opinion on this matter? I am a firm believer in taxation only by representation.

Hammer missed

To The Editor:

Regarding your editorial on April 7, 1983, entitled "Winds of change," the hammer did not hit the nail on the head.

Litter is not accumulated by any other source than a population of carry-out food and drink-addicted men, women and teen-aged "don't give a damns" who would rather just toss it out the car window or drop it where they stood when they took the last sip or bite than look for a disposal can or have a trash bag in the auto. (It may be in the way.)

One other item: The sanitation department dumpster pickup is lax in handling the situation. We here at this residence have our backyard littered with paper scrap, cardboard, etc., when the wind is from the south, southwest or west. The waste paper just does not all drop into the trash truck. There must be a baffle or screen of some sort used to prevent this problem. Yes, every time the wind dies down for an hour or so, I grab a large grocery bag and go to it. But thanks to the fast-food nuts, I'll be back at it in a short time. I was born in Midland in 1921, but I lived in one of America's most beautiful states for 37 years. That state, Washington, is clean anywhere you look. Why? The people have a profound respect for each other and their environment. Enough said.

Letters Policy

■ Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Keep asking

To The Editor:

I'm so glad that organized Texas Republicans plan to "ask questions" about the disastrous fire in the apartment of Lt. Gov. Hobby, his personal apartment in the Capitol building.

The facts about the fire itself, the fact that the apartment was routinely used by Hobby "to house friends who needed a place to stay in Austin" — these, and other facts, have brought not a breath of criticism from the Legislature and others with a legitimate right to know.

Please do ask questions. Ask publicly so all of us can know more about that apartment. The apartment in the Capitol building had, I understand, at least three bedrooms, a dining room with a very costly chandelier, etc.

Naturally Texas provides whatever is necessary for all its officials. But how was the apartment used by Mr. Hobby?

Article incorrect

To The Editor:

The article you printed about the Camptosaurus prints doesn't seem to have been investigated well enough by the anthropologists.

The Camptosaurus had a fourth toe on the back of 'his' foot. The prints were made most probably by the Hadrosaurus that went into shallow areas, marshes and small pools for food. Hadrosaurus had only three toes and the size of the foot goes with 'his' size and weight.

Fine students

To The Editor:

On Friday and Saturday, March 25 and 26, we at Western Texas College were privileged to be hosts for the high school district meet for literary events of University Interscholastic League. Our student guests and sponsors were from Andrews, Fort Stockton, Lake View, Lamesa, Lee (Freshman), Midland (Freshman), Monahans, Pecos, Sweetwater and Snyder High Schools.

I want to let you know how impressed all of us at WTC were with the outstanding group of students representing your school at these events. They were well-groomed, courteous and truly excited about being involved in this fine competition.

It pleases us, too, to note outstanding sponsors and teachers like yours who work long and hard with these young people, and who are willing to give up a good chunk of their weekends to take them to UIL meets.

Students, faculty and administrators from your fine school will always be welcome and valued guests at Western Texas College.

Leash dogs

To The Editor:

On a recent weekend, my husband and I saw that one of the Muscovy ducks in Wadley-Barron Park had been seriously injured. It had a large flesh wound on one flank.

Now that the weather will be warm and more people will be using the park, I hope that they will be more aware of leashing dogs for the safety of both small children and the ducks. The lake is a pleasant place for all to enjoy.

White keeps his promise to 'remember the ladies'

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — Some 200-plus years ago, Abigail Adams advised John Adams to "remember the ladies" in his legislative efforts.

It is advice that Gov. Mark White seems to have taken to heart.

"The ladies" indeed are getting a larger role in Texas politics these days, in both elective and appointive positions.

During his campaign, White said he wanted to create a commission on women and promised to appoint qualified women to key positions.

In fact, few of White's comments drew more attention than his vow to put a "housewife" on the Public Utility Commission, and a "homemaker" on the State Board of Insurance.

White followed through quickly on those promises, naming Peggy Rosson of El Paso to the PUC, and Carole Keeton McClellan to the Board of Insurance.

Those appointees had qualifications in addition to being a housewife and a homemaker, of course, but White can say that he's certainly kept his promises regarding appointments of those two agencies.

Both appointments are the first for women to those boards — the PUC is so new in terms of its existence that it really doesn't count, but the Board of Insurance has been around, in various guises, for over 100 years.

At last count, White had made 75 appointments which are subject to Senate approval, of which there were 13 women (eight Anglo, one Hispanic and four black), not including his various special panels and task forces, which don't require Senate confirmation.

Nor does that count the women on his staff — including press secretary Ann Arnold, whose appointment also was a first, and who says that the governor "isn't satisfied" with the number of women he's been able to appoint.

Appointments are one of the prime means for a governor to see that his policies are carried out — and to reward supporters.

There's been some mild grumbling from a few folks that White might be trying too hard to bring in women, and that he might do better to hand out some more appointments to other supporters.

White's advisers don't seem to agree on that — and argue that White isn't appointing women just to be appointing women, but that the selections are being made on qualifications, and that there are lots of qualified women who are willing to serve Texas.

White's efforts have won the approval of many women who are active in political matters, although some indicate they want to make sure White's actions aren't just a passing fancy.

But generally White is getting a good reaction and high marks from women on his work to date.

McClellan says she worked for White in his campaign partly because of what he said about getting more women involved with state government, "and I think he's carried through."

Her appointment, she agrees is proof of that, but she says she doesn't feel she was picked "just because I'm a woman."

While White is conducting the business of the governor's office, up the street Ann Richards is busy dealing with the affairs of the State Treasury.

Ms. Richards is the first woman elected to statewide office in Texas in half a century, but her approach has been that she is the state treasurer, and that that's what's important.

She has insisted on a few changes in rules and regulations of the State Banking Board, for example, noting that the rules referred to the "treasurer or his representative," and commenting that "I'm not a 'he.'"

Ms. Richards appears to be dealing quite successfully with the Legislature, aggressively seeking money to improve what she calls the treasury's "1949, or maybe 1950" vintage operation. (First Assistant Treasurer Mary Beth Rogers calculates the date as 1943).

One reason Ms. Richards has been well received is that she argues, convincingly, that the treasury could be earning more money for the state through updated money handling procedures — saying the agency currently loses an estimated $13,000 a day in interest because it must hand-process checks, rather than using a proofing machine.

BMW AND MERCEDES OWNERS: COME IN AND TRADE UP TO A VOLVO.

Last year, 30% of all Volvo sales were to people who were also tempted to buy one of these prestige German cars. And didn't.

This year, with the introduction of the Volvo 760 GLE, we expect even more people to be led into Volvos and not temptation.

That's because the 760 GLE is, simply, the finest Volvo sedan ever built. Ten years of design and development went into it. And two million test miles are behind it. This is what a driver will get out of it:

Even more predictable handling. A unique, patent pending rear suspension system keeps the drive wheels in constant alignment, reducing the chance of losing your rear end on sharp curves. (Especially if the road surface is wet and slippery.)

Faster take-off. The turbo-diesel engine and gearing system produce 40% more torque (turning power at the wheels) than last year's conventional 6-cylinder diesel/drive train. The results (with manual transmission): 0-55 mph in 9.54 seconds; 0-60 mph in 11.7 seconds. In an on-ramp 30-50 mph acceleration test, the 760 GLE turbo-diesel made it in 4.71 seconds...a fearless figure for entering any freeway or autobahn. (Also available: a V6 gas engine with automatic that's no slouch either.)

See for yourself how the 760 GLE performs compared to a Mercedes or BMW. Come in for a test drive soon and, while you're at it, check out the price tag. We all know that prestige has a price. But with this all-new Volvo, it isn't as steep.

THE VOLVO 760 GLE.
WE NEVER SOLD A VOLVO THAT WAS WORTH SO MUCH.

THE SWITCH IS ON

Thousands of bottled water users have already changed to Reverse Osmosis (RO) Drinking Water Systems. At present there are over 5,000 Reverse Osmosis (RO) Systems in use in homes and offices in the Permian Basin. Why are so many turning to RO? The process of Reverse Osmosis has the remarkable ability to remove almost all pollutants from water, and produce for you and excellent tasting drinking water at an affordable price. Water pollution is an age old problem. Today there are thousands of new toxic chemicals introduced into the environment and many have or will contaminate our drinking water sources. Some of these chemicals can cause cancer, genetic mutations and birth defects. Recently scientists from The World Health Organization and The National Cancer Institute estimated that up to 90% of all cancer is caused by chemicals in our air and drinking water. "Safe Drinking water in this country can no longer be taken for granted". (L.A. Times January 2, 1980). Today after several decades of research and development costing many million of dollars reverse osmosis is regarded as the most effective, efficient and economical of method of water purification. Little wonder thousands of people in West Texas are turning to these marvelous systems to provide for themselves and their families pure great tasting drinking water. At Pure Water Reverse Osmosis we are bringing to the Permian Basin the very best reverse osmosis systems at the best price. Best product, Best price. Our guarantee: Quality Product at the Best Price in the Permian Basin. To find out just how inexpensive a Pure Water Reverse Osmosis System is call 699-7378. Or when a pure water representative knocks on your door invite him in. You will appreciate the information he has to share with you.

Introducing...

Mission Square Plaza

Retail and Office Condominiums

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

* You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
* You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
* You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
* You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
* You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
* All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
* Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.

Benefit parade features five-house tour for PDAP

An office in the John Pine residence will be featured on the tour as shown by Norma Pine.

Five Midland homes are on this year's Parade of Homes tour, sponsored by the Junior Woman's Club, Inc., to benefit the Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

The club expects to raise $8,000 from the 14th annual event, according to program chairman Cheri Hill.

"Is is a lot of fun, it provides a fun Sunday afternoon and enables Midlanders to take some ideas home," Mrs. Hill added.

The primary purpose of the Parade, she emphasized, is to benefit PDAP.

The club selects a beneficiary each year, she said, and for the past several years, PDAP was chosen.

"It is a very important cause and they use the funds carefully to fund their projects.

Mrs. Hill added that, with an increasing drug problem in Midland, PDAP has treated children as young as elementary school ages who have drug abuse problems- most of such cases involvemarijuana and cocaine.

Homeowners whose houses are on tour are Mr. and Mrs. John Vance, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wright, Mr. and Mrs. David Pine, Mr and Mrs. Stuart Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Glasscock.

The security-guarded homes will be on tour from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., according to Mrs. Hill. Tickets are $7.50 per person and are available through club members. Tickets will not be sold at the door and children younger than 12 years will not be admitted. For ticket information, call 697-1814 or 694-2095.

Country Squires Picnic affair originates from the heart

Approximately $45,000 was raised at the biennial Country Squires Picnic auction Thursday night at Midland Center, to benefit the mentally retarded in Midland, according to Peggy Rogers, treasurer of the Opportunity Center Auxiliary.

Don Evans, president of Tom Brown, Inc. and emcee of the program, used the words from the Wizard of Oz, "I used to have a heart and no brains; now I have brains...I'd rather have the heart..." he commented in his opening speech to capture the spirit of the Picnic.

The auxiliary sponsors the event for an enjoyable evening for its benefactors but emphasize the motive is for a worthy cause.

The Picnic benefits the Opportunity Center Complex which, upon completion, will offer programs and services from birth to adulthood for retarded citizens in Midland.

Phase I of the five-acre complex has begun and includes renovating the existing Opportunity Center, adding perimeter fencing, a pine thicket, extensive landscaping, anenlarged playground area and new equipment. Two other phases will complete the project, planned for 1985.

Approximately 40 women were involved in presenting the Picnic, according to the auxiliary's president Francis Stapp.

The auxiliary has approximately 65 members including honorary members.

Chairman is Vernita Baxter and co-chairman is Janice Kubica.

Auctioned items included a seven-day trip to The Golden Door in Escondido, Calif., a catered dinner for eight, a pair of gold earrings with diamonds, a graduation party, a membership to The Midlander, a full page of newspaper advertising, a sapphire ring, a Baroque punch bowl, a trip to The Phoenix Spa, a Ben Konis pastel, 1,000 gallons of gasoline, a Bee Tree Cattle Company steer, a shopping spree to Salado, a Cybis, and a ladies pouf bag.

Summer bulbs need replanting in spring

Hearst Feature Service

The annual migration of the tuberous begonia is about to begin. Next month, begonias and their fellow travellers — caladium, oxalys, achimenes, dahlias, calla lillies and gladiola — will begin the trek from the protection of gardeners' homes, out the back door and into the warm, spring sunlight for another season of lush blooms and foliage in the garden or on the p·tio.

It happens every spring for these special plants that are known as summer bulbs. They are special because they have to be handled twice a year — every year. Gardeners have to put them outdoors when it's warm enough and take them indoors when it's too cool.

Phyllis Rosenblum, a master gardener for the Albany (N.Y.) County Cooperative Extension for seven years, says summer bulbs are worth the effort. "They provide a taste of the tropics. For lushness and variety of color, they can't be matched by perennials." They also fill a need, especially for gardeners who have tall buildings and trees casting shadows across their gardens. Rosenblum says tuberous begonias are one of the few flowering plants that prosper in shade. They're particularily suited for city gardeners whose gardens are shaded by neighboring buildings.

RIGHT ABOUT NOW, there are two things gardeners should be doing about summer-flowering bulbs: Make sure you have placed orders for bulbs like dahlias, calla lilies and gladiola you hope to plant in May. If you want something special, you might have to order it. When you buy bulbs, or when you are checking those you stored over the winter, select those that are firm and don't have soft spots.

There are four bulbs that should be started indoors now, so they can bloom in summer. They are tuberous begonias, caladium, oxalys and achimenes. If you wait much longer to start these plants, you might be disappointed with the summer blooms.

These four plants can be started indoors in a greenhouse, on a south-facing window sill or under flourescent lights. They have to be grown in a warm environment, either in a warm room or over a heating cable if they are started in the basement. Begonias, caladium, oxalys and achimenes can be started in either flats or pots. Place the bulbs in an artificial soil mix, like vermiculite or pearlite, mixed with peat moss. Keep the mixture moist but not soggy; once growth starts, fertilize the bulbs regularily. These plants can be put outdoors in their pots or directly into the ground after May, when there is no chance of frost. Achimenes does best in a hanging basket.

THE PLANTS should be left outdoors until after the first killing frost. Then gardeners should carefully dig them up, brush off the dirt and let the air dry the bulbs. Then store the bulbs indoors in clean sand.

"This can be tricky," Rosenblum cautions. "They have to be cool, so they stay dormant through the winter, but they can't be too dry or too wet. Probably the best place is a cool room in the basement."

Rosenblum calls tuberous begonias "the queen of summer bulbs," suitable for planting in pots or hanging baskets on the patio or directly into the garden. But begonias need a lot of attention. They have fragile stems and heavy growth.

They bloom from midsummer on. How early they bloom depends on when gardeners start them indoors. Tuberous begonias don't do well in full sun. Rosenblum says if you plant begonias in the garden, place them where they will be shaded from the hot afternoon sun.

Come mid-May, gardeners can plant other summer-blooming bulbs like dahalias, calla lilies and gladiola. Dahlias are suitable for pots, but calla lilies should be in tubs or the garden. Gladiola should also be put into the garden, planted about six inches deep.

Rosenblum recommends that gladiola not be used in flower beds. "They're more satisfactory as a cut flower than as a garden flower. Also, their period of bloom is so short that after they bloom and are cut, gardeners are going to have an empty spot in their gardens. So put them in vegetable gardens in rows or in a special cutting garden."

ROSENBLUM SAYS gardeners can make several plantings of gladiola bulbs every two weeks between mid-May and mid-June. Gladiola bulbs can stay in the ground until fall. Let the frost eliminate the foliage, then dig them up and store then over winter in a cool place. Calla lillies have to be stored at a higher temperature.

Gardeners can count on dahlias for color in their gardens all summer long. They send up several shoots and they'll continue growing until the first frost.

Rosenblum says dahlias are "heavy feeders." Gardeners should fertilize the soil before planting dahlia bulbs and then fertilize it regularly to encourage bloom and growth. Tall varieties of dahlias should be staked. Put the stake in the ground before you plant the dahlia tuber, so you don't spear it.

Install ceiling tiles carefully

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I recently put up walls in our attic. The studding already was there, so all I had to do was to install 4-by-8 sheets of gypsum board. The framework had been erected somewhat differently than is usually done in an attic, so that the ceiling portion of it is straight across rather than at a slant. Now I intend to put up a ceiling material and would like it also to be gypsum board, but I am afraid it would be too tough to handle the large sheets by myself. What is your suggestion?

A. — You can, of course, install ceiling tiles, a project which must be done carefully but requires no large muscles. Or you can place an order for 4-by-4 sheets of gypsum board, which are somewhat easier to handle. But if you want to use the 4-by-8 sheets, it can be done by making a couple of wooden supports. A support is made with a 2-by-4 or some other similar-sized piece of wood. To the top of it, attach another piece of wood, about 30 inches or so. This second piece should be at right angles to the first except that it will form a T when completed. This T should be long enough so that it can be used as a wedge. Even then, it will require some maneuvering to get the panel in place while you are on the ladder and then push the T into position. You will also have to get a second T into place so the entire panel is held by the two Ts while you make the attachment to the framework. If it sounds like quite a project, it is. Therefore, you should get a helper or consider the use of ceiling tiles.

Q. — Some years ago I bleached a piece of old furniture before refinishing it. Everything seemed all right after the bleaching but a few days after I refinished the piece with varnish, it began crinkling in places. I now have another piece of furniture — a coffee table — I want to bleach and refinish. How can I avoid what happened the last time?

A. — From your description, it appears some of the bleaching agent was left on the wood. When you put on the varnish, the bleach still in the pores of the wood reacted to the new finish and, in effect, loosened it a bit. You probably did not use a neutralizer on the wood after you had completed the bleaching.

Q. — I plan to reupholster a couple of chairs. How do I get the webbing on the frame to become taut? This was my biggest problem when I did a similar job some years ago.

A. — There are inexpensive webbing stretchers to make the job of getting webbing tight and smooth fairly easy. They can be purchased wherever they sell materials for reupholstering.

Q. — We are replacing our dark roof shingles with white asphalt shingles. The siding on our house is white, the trim gray. What color should the shutters and doors be to blend well with the white shingles?

A. — Charcoal would be an appropriate color.

To celebrate the marriage of their son, Gary, and the former Pam Casey, Janet and Deane Stoltz, entertained with an elegant party last Sunday evening in the Paragon Building's Atrium. Some 300 guests enjoyed a cocktail buffet and dancing to the music of the Bernie Rose Quartet.

Guests oohed and aahed over the party decor. The brilliancy of colors, the subtleness of candlelight and the spectacular blends of exotic flowers contributed to the breathtaking effect. Strikingly unusual floral arrangements adorned the five serving tables. Guests were seated at individual tables, which were covered with floor length cloths in royal blue, bright orange, bright red, bright green, and mustard yellow and centered with baskets of geraniums and ivy and terra cotta colored tapers. Seven pdestrals arranged with more of the exotic flowers and plants, set aglow with soft lighting, decorated the atrium's plant area.

After a wedding trip to Hawaii, Pam, the daughter of Faye and S. V. Casey, and Gary are at home in Midland. They were married March 26 in the First Christian Church.

SEVERAL MIDLANDERS have returned from a memorable eight-day trip to Peru, which was sponsored by the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. Led over spring break by Dr. Frank Sampanaro, associate professor of history at UTPB, and his wife, Marsha, the tour group was composed of Margaret and Bob Berger, Eva Dennis, Tilly Carter, Paula and Frank Cahoon and their son, Joseph, as well as residents from Odessa and Big Spring.

The tour began in Lima, where the group visited the major sights in and around the capital city. From there, they went high up in the Andes to the charming city of Cuzco, the former capital of the Inca empire which later became a beautiful Spanish colonial town. But the highlight of the trip, according to Dr. Sampanaro, was the world's most famous ruins, the ancient Inca city of Machu Picchu, which is also located high in the Andes and noted for its breathtaking scenery. Dr. Sampanaro tells us that the Incas retreated there during the Spanish conquest in the 16th century, but subsequently abandoned the location. Rediscovered in 1911, the site is remarkably well preserved.

The Cahoon family left the tour for a couple of days to take a canoe trip down the Amazon River, with a visit to an Indian village near Iquitos.

WHEN BOB YOUNG turned to the Reporter Telegram's classified ads on his birthday, April 6, he was surprised to find a picture of himself as a boy of ten and the accompanying caption, which read: "Would you believe Bobby Pat Young is 50 today?" The merriment and gives continued on Friday evening, April 8, when his wife, Mary Jane, invited a group of close friends to their home for a dinner party to mark the milestone occasion. Guests brought assorted gag gifts and cards, and a belly dancer made a surprise appearance. Bob and Mary Jane sported matching his and hers t-shirts, one with the legend "Ice Age" and the other "Nice Age."

TAKING ADVANTAGE of spring break, a group of Midlanders enjoyed a delightful six-day visit to New York City. The travelers included Norma Jean (Mrs. Bud) Boles and daughter, Kathy; Sharon (Mrs. J. E.) Floyd and daughter, Shannon; Caroline (Mrs. Perry) Bolger and daughters, Catherine and Caroline; Mary Alice (Mrs. Gordon) Knox and daughter, Kay; Shannon Burnett, Beth Ann Williams, Donnie (Mrs. Stanley) Weiner, Jeanne (Mrs. Bill) Beach and her sister-in-law, Carrie Lou (Mrs. W. D.) Beach of Clinton, Okla.; Jean (Mrs. Thurston) Dean and son, Chris, Jean (Mrs. T. W.) Huffman of Odessa.

Staying at the Parker-Meridien Hotel on West 57th Street, the group enjoyed a myriad of activities, ranging from sporting events to museum tours, as well as the latest on Broadway, and of course, sightseeing, lunching and dining fat the city's famed restaurants. They were thrilled by the Vatican treasures at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and were delighted to attend both the Virginia Slims tennis finals and New York Knicks basketball game at Madison Square Garden. Their theatre going included "Cats," "Merlin," "Joseph, and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," and "42nd Street."

A highlight of the trip for Kathy Boles was the celebration of her 17th birthday at the renowned French restaurant, La Grenouille, where a special cake had been prepared for her and was served by French waiters at the close of the meal.

"IN THE YEAR 1934, three noteworthy events occurred on the same day - Easter Sunday, April Fool's Day and Monty Joe Gist's birthday. So come have a drink with us a day early to celebrate." So read in part the clever invitations to a party on March 31 given by Monty's wife, Shirley. Guests were invited to the Gist home between the hours of 5:30 and 7 p.m. for Happy Hour, where they were served popcorn and a variety of other snack foods.

The last guests to arrive were Monty's two grandsons, two-year-old Cutler and one-month-old Kelson, along with their parents, Janice and Rhett Gist of Bedford. The Gists' other son, Marc, was unable to be in town for the party, but arrived from Austin the next day for a visit.

The Petroleum Club was the setting for the Coterie Club's spring dance on April 9. Members and their guests danced to the music of Jade and partook of a late night breakfast.

The club's new officers, who were introduced during the evening, are Bud Boles, president; Don Ewan, vice president; Susie (Mrs. Gary) Burnett, secretary, and Bonnie (Mrs. Orman) Hubbard, treasurer.

WHILE VISITING RECENTLY with Odessans, La Dell and Leon Nolan, we were interested to hear of the wedding plans of their only child, Larry. He and the former Sherry Turner were married Saturday night in Odessa's Crescent Park Baptist Church. They sail today on a honeymoon cruise to the Virgin Islands and then will stop off in Key Biscayne, Florida, before returning home to Odessa later this month.

Sherry, a native Midlander, is the daughter of Alva Turner and Larry Turner, both of Odessa. Her grandparents, Gene and Al Boyd, are long-time Midland residents.

Former Midlander slated to receive honor award

A Midland native, Paul Stevenson Oles, AIA, will receive a 1983 Institute Honor award from The American Institute of Architects for his architectural drawing.

Oles will be presented with the award for distinguished achievements during the 1983 AIA National Convention in New Orleans next month.

His drawings are noted for using tone, rather than line, to predict with almost photographic detail how a proposed building will look when completed.

He has written a textbook, "Architectural Illustration," presenting a detailed description of his system for showing a designed building's future appearance.

Since receiving architecture degrees from Texas Tech and Yale Universities, Oles has been an architect, artist, author and teacher and has worked with such famed architects as Walter Gropius and I.M. Pei.

I.M. Pei has called Oles "a valued collaborator in the search for truth in architecture."

Currently, Oles is a lecturer at Harvard University and the principal architect of Interface Architects in Newton, Massachusetts, which he founded in 1971.

Study: Some birth control pills may raise cholesterol

BOSTON (AP) — Researchers suggested recently that doctors "use caution" in prescribing some kinds of birth control pills because they appear to lift levels of a cholesterol related to heart disease.

Long-term use of the pills "may be undesirable" because they could increase the risk of heart attacks or strokes, according to a study published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

The research suggests that the heart disease risk may not be the same for all oral contraceptives. Instead, it may depend upon the proportions of two sex hormones — estrogen and progestin — that are the main ingredients of birth control pills.

Pills high in progestin and low in estrogen raised the levels of the hazardous form of cholesterol, called low density lipoprotein cholesterol, or LDL. High levels of this cholesterol have been linked with hardening of the arteries and heart disease.

Pills low in progestin and high in estrogen generally caused little change.

The effects of the balance between the two hormones "may underlie the increased incidence of stroke and myocardial infarction (heart attack) in women of childbearing age who take oral contraceptives," the researchers wrote.

Directed by Dr. Patricia Wahl of the University of Washington, the research was based on information gathered during the 1970s. Since then, "mini-pills" have been introduced that contain progestin but little or no estrogen.

Also contributing to the study were doctors from the National Institutes of Health and the universities of Iowa and North Carolina.

They recommended that doctors "use caution" in prescribing pills dominated by progestin for women who already have a higher than normal risk of heart disease. Among these are smokers and women who are overweight or older than 35.

"Prolonged use of progestin-dominant oral contraceptives may be undesirable," they wrote.

Although pill use has fallen in the United States since the mid-1970s, more than 50 million women around the world now take them.

Other studies have shown that the heart attack risk is three or four times higher than normal among women who take the pill, and the chance of stroke also is greater.

The researchers studied the cholesterol levels of 374 pill users, 284 women who took estrogen after menopause and 1,086 women who were not taking the sex hormones.

The pill takers used seven different brands of oral contraceptives.

Three kinds — Norlestrin, Ovral and Demulen — were relatively high in progestin and low in estrogen.

Ex-addicts help rehabilitate young drug, alcohol abusers

Hearst Feature Service

SAN ANTONIO — Augie Beltran welcomed in his teen years with heroin, cocaine and alcohol. While other kids his age were in a classroom, Beltran matured in the company of gangs, mastering the art of "manipulating people out of their money to survive on the streets."

The next 15 years were an ongoing nightmare as an addict, a prison inmate and a repeat patient in drug rehabilitation programs. "I didn't want to grow up," Beltran said. "It was a combination of self-pity and fear of the unknown. Once you phase into the drug culture, it becomes more and more difficult to get out."

Beltan, 35, did get out. And rather than shut out his painful past, he has returned to a drug rehabilitation program — not as a patient, but as a counselor of teen-age drug abusers at the Patrician Movement, a former convent converted to a drug rehabilitation center.

Beltran is a "wounded healer," a term whose roots reach back to Hippocrates. The Greek medical pioneer said that "to be a healer, one needs to have suffered in some way."

"We encourage people who have traveled demanding and difficult roads to study the field of counseling," said Dr. Ronald Mellen, head of counseling and Human Services at St. Mary's University here. "It is critical to have empathy. If the counselor is too cold, too disjointed, 50 percent of the patients won't return."

Wounded healers, Mellen said, are more sensitive to other people's pain. "The counselor is not so clinical. He or she tends to be more patient. The road to mental wholeness is an up-and-down road which includes failure. These counselors understand that failure."

Beltran's empathetic understanding of drug abusers comes from "eight years of physical addiction and seven years of psychological addiction" to alcohol and drugs.

At 17, he was incarcerated for the first of three times for possession of heroin. Six months later he was sent to the Patrician Movement. The center houses approximately 126 residents, 100 of them male. Most of them are there, he said, "because they have to be."

Beltran gradually pulled himself though. Since he had never gone to high school, he earned a Graduate Equivalency Diploma in 1976, completed a liberal studies program in 1978 and will earn his master's degree next fall from St. Mary's Guidance and Counseling program. He has been steadily promoted at the Patrician Movement, from custodian in 1974, to paraprofessional counselor in 1975, to professional counselor in 1977, to his current status as residential program supervisor.

Cobblestone streets and the bells of St. Wilfred's Church welcome visitors to Grappenhall Village, on the west coast of England.

England offers history, nostalgia

By JANET BARKER
Copley News Service

GRAPPENHALL VILLAGE, England — After spending nearly half a lifetime dreaming of a second visit here, it was a thrill to be on my way.

I fought to contain my delight every time the stewardess asked in her impeccable English manner, "Would you like some tea luv? White or dark?"

My youth was typical of most middle-class families, with the exception that my parents were post-World War II immigrants from England.

Mum and Dad struggled through the early years. A family vacation further than, say, Sequoia National Forest, was simply out of the question. Hard work and a heavy emphasis on our English "roots" was instilled in my brother, sister and me right from the start.

My parents had scrimped and saved to provide the opportunity for me to experience England. The intention was to introduce me to my heritage.

Descending through patches of fog and sunlight, the varied shades of green terrestrial latticework were a welcome sight.

Looking out the tiny window of the Boeing 747 with my dad and children, Ryan, 4, and not quite 2-year-old Jenny, I was both glad and grateful to touch land.

My long-awaited dream was about to unfold.

TIME AND MONEY had finally merged to make the trip possible this year. The knowledge that air fares might never be lower and that I could take my daughter for $90 provided added incentive to go ahead with the trip.

Alex Haley would have been proud. My roots beckoned to be discovered and I was able to answer that nagging call with a key root-maker, my dad, accompanying us.

In three weeks I was going to try to become British — to live as my mum and dad did — as I might have if I had been born in England.

For the children, our trip meant playing in the fields with their aunties and uncles and adapting to a completely different way of life.

Our destination was Cheshire, on the west coast of England. We would be staying in the home my dad lived in when he was a boy, in the small village of Grappenhall.

We were to walk down the same cobblestone lanes where he and his three brothers and two sisters had played "Run Lads, The Coppers Are Coming" years before. We would eat steak and kidney pie, Cornish pasties, Cadbury Milk Flakes and Crunchies until we were blue in the face.

Self-proclaimed diplomats representing the American Barker clan, we boarded a connecting flight from Heathrow to Manchester Airport. In a matter of minutes we would meet this mysterious group of people with whom we shared a genetic connection.

THE FOUR OF US trooped off the plane looking a little the worse for wear after our 11-hour flight. Strange signs and sounds were captivating.

I asked for some 7-Up for my son and they gave us some "fizzy" barley water. If we wanted a quick lunch we had to call it dinner. If we wanted dinner we had to make sure we called it tea. A typical tea featured culinary tasties such as cucumber and salmon sandwiches, mushy peas and digestives.

We were surrounded by Britishisms. These were words I had longed to hear.

Our aunties and uncles were all on hand at the airport. I spotted them long before they recognized us.

A surge of unexpected doubt went through me. We were exhausted and they were all strangers. For a few terrible moments I wondered how in the world I had developed the incredible nerve to drag my children and Dad thousands of miles from home. What was the mystique about England?

In a fairly frantic attempt to reconcile myself and avert an embarrassing mistake, I stared at my relatives, trying to piece together letters and snapshots.

The pictures and impressions I had conjured up over the years had actually hid their warmth and depth. Their faces were older now, but their smiles were just as genuine as I remembered.

WE EMBRACED one another and I realized it wasn't England that I longed for, but its charming people. This giant fairy tale of family folklore I had memorized as a youngster now stood beside me.

Driving to my dad's home in Grappenhall Village was like a piece of fiction coming to life.

With a private school next door and the Rams Head pub nearby, the village was a replica of a Dickens scenario.

The bells of St. Wilfred's Church, a source of pride to the villagers, rang their welcoming melody as we entered the narrow lane. The church, complete with crooked tombstones and eerie monuments, brought back ghost stories my father told me when I was a little girl.

Uncle Jim, who resides in a brick home on Church Lane, had a coal fire burning in the bare white kitchen.

The first settlers to the village had been Romans in 1000 A.D. Our vacation home wasn't quite that old, but by American standards it would be considered quite rustic.

The kitchen floor was brick, and cooking was done on an old gas range (considered a modern convenience which my Gran refused to use). Cooking utensils were at a minimum, but those available seemed to serve our needs just fine.

IN OUR SHORT STAY we learned to conserve everything. The British utilize waste so efficiently. Leftovers are scraped off the plates and given to birds. Paper is burned and all biodegradable products are returned to the garden.

Gardens and birds. The English are infatuated with nature. I noticed most conversations involved the weather, more about the weather, the garden and tea — would you like a cup?

There is something wonderfully appealing about the British. I found their caring and sincerity touching. Folks shared what they had with all their heart.

The children were spoiled with time and attention rather than toys.

For three weeks we spent our days and nights surrounded by history and folklore. Every moment, including the chilly ones spent in the wind, was special.

Visiting old castles and historic sites with a few of England's natives gave me an insight into just how much history the country is endowed with.

It was hard to imagine when we visited Conway Castle in Wales that the walls surrounding us had been standing there since 1284. We stood in the very spot where Richard II agreed to abdicate the throne. Every brick we walked on seemed to have its own historical significance.

OUR ALMOST DAILY excursions exploring surrounding cities helped us appreciate the unique qualities of England. Chester, for instance, is a good example of medieval quaintness effectively retained.

Outside the magic triangle of London, Stratford and Oxford, there is probably no place more visited by Americans than Chester. Part of the city is still surrounded by ancient walls leading to the Roman fortress. The busy streets reflect the Tudor influence and the gardens provided moments of solitude for the visitor.

Now we've logged our memories into a new photo album and the children can match the names with the faces found there.

Every few days my 4-year-old son gets a dreamy look in his eyes and mentions an incident or recalls a story about our visit. We share a laugh and then he says rather sadly, "I wish I could go back to England. I really love those guys."

Little Ryan has a pretty good way with words. That's just what I was about to say.

Senior's bargain tours new wrinkle in travel

By JERRY HULSE
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Is growing old really a bum trip?

Well, not if one travels with Serba Ilich, Frederick Jaffe, Max Mermelstein or Raymond Tanenbaum as well as a host of other tour operators who specialize in travel for senior citizens.

Consider these options:

- Twenty-six weeks on Spain's Costa del Sol for a mere $1,350.
- Sixteen days in Switzerland for less than $700.
- A 14-day coach tour from Los Angeles for $769.

These same tour operators list other trips, including a 15-day tour of Yugoslavia that's offered by Serba Ilich (Love Holidays) that takes in such exotic locales as Portoroz, Opatija, Rijeka, Plitvice Lakes National Park, Zadar, Trogir, Split and Dubrovnik, an unhurried journey designed for seniors 60 years or older as well as retired travelers regardless of age.

Traveling with Love means not having to say you're sorry. Not when one considers the prices. The tour of Yugoslavia, for example, figures out to less than $100 a day during springtime and barely a few dollars more during summer, including the round-trip jet hop from Los Angeles, hotels, sightseeing and two meals a day. Prices range from $1,095 to $1,455, depending upon the season. It's less, of course, for East Coast departures.

TRAVELING WITH Love also means avoiding that exhausting business of checking into another hotel each night. Or being up at 5 a.m. to hurry through breakfast and board a bus.

Instead, seniors spend several nights at the Hotel Metropol in Portoroz and the Dubrovnik Palace in Dubrovnik. And, if someone gets anxious, there are optional tours to Trieste ($8), Venice ($22), the Baroque city of Ljubljana ($20) and Sveti Stefan ($21).

Love lists other inexpensive holidays combining Greece and Yugoslavia as well as Yugoslavia, Greece and the Greek Islands.

Other senior-citizen tours of Yugoslavia are provided by Yugo Tours. Priced from $699, they include the flight from New York, hotels and meals. Besides sightseeing, groups are offered the option of cooking and painting classes, the latter taught by graduates of the Yugoslav Academies of Fine Arts.

A Yugo Tours' representative reminds seniors that "Grandma Moses didn't start painting until she was in her '60s."

Similar low-cost tours are booked by Max Mermelstein of AJS Travel Consultants in New York. Getting a good deal of attention this year is his 16-day Swiss holiday package selling for $659 and including hotel, meals and sightseeing at St. Moritz in the Swiss Alps and Vitznau on the shores of Lake Geneva near Lucerne.

MERMELSTEIN IS scheduling 14 departures of his Swiss tour between June 18 and Sept. 17.

His other tours take in Spain, Portugal and Israel. And Mermelstein makes this promise: No one will return home from one of his tours feeling like a soggy bagel. Instead, Mermelstein guarantees relaxing journeys at pre-inflation prices.

For example, there is a 15-day tour of Spain and Portugal, with visits to Lisbon, the Algarve, Madrid, Toledo, Cordova, Granada, the Costa del Sol and other points that total out to $499, including hotels, meals and sightseeing.

Mermelstein sends others packing to Israel on four-week tours costing $1,099 and featuring a week in Jerusalem, another in Tel Aviv and two weeks in Netanya on the Mediterranean. Vacationers sip coffee with Bedouins in Beersheba, search for Roman coins at Caesarea and ride a cable car to the heights of Masada.

Meanwhile, other seniors are being courted by Grand Circle Travels' Raymond Tanenbaum with promises of relaxing holidays that take in the Orient as well as the South Pacific. Rather than rampaging across Europe, Grand Circle guarantees laid-back journeys to avoid the one-night stands that topple so many travelers.

ITS TOURS ARE labeled Gold, Silver and Moneysaver. Gold gets the travelers superior or deluxe hotels, Silver promises standard first-class accommodations and Moneysaver refers to Europe's humble, tourist-class shelters.

Grand Circle is expecting plenty of action this summer with its extended vacations along Spain's Costa del Sol. These are 26-week stints featuring private apartments renting for $1,365. Included are air fare from New York, transfers from the airport and entertainment in addition to the accommodations. Grand Circle offers other apartments in such far-flung corners as London, Paris, Florence, Budapest, Gstaad, Amsterdam, Dubrovnik, Lima, Hawaii, Jamaica, Vancouver and Miami.

The company's cheapest tour is a two-week swing through Europe priced at $750, including air fare from New York. Others take in the South Pacific and the Orient, with costs ranging from a few hundred dollars to $3,000.

In Boston, Frederick Jaffe of Saga International Holidays (the world's biggest operator of senior citizen tours) is pitching a 23-day holiday in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland for $1,719, including the flight from Los Angeles, hotels, meals and sightseeing. Jaffe is even tossing in trip insurance.

Saga's hottest buy this spring is a two-week holiday along Spain's Costa del Sol that features the flight from Los Angeles, accommodations, meals, taxes and trip insurance — the works — for $1,369. What's more, seniors can extend their holidays for an extra two weeks for a mere $350 extra.

ANOTHER OF SAGA'S big sellers is a seven-day Caribbean cruise out of San Juan for $1,299 that includes the flight from Los Angeles. Saga also deals in Mediterranean and Aegean cruises as well as trips along the Rhine and the Nile.

Currently the company is featuring a 17-day journey for seniors to London and Athens, with seven nights spent aboard a cruise ship in the Aegean. Including the round-trip flight from Los Angeles, the package figures out to $2,129.

Saga promotes other trips inside the United States and Canada. On the books is a 15-day tour from San Francisco to Eureka, Coos Bay, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, Banff and Calgary for $919. Other Saga Tours take in Hawaii, Florida, Alaska and Bermuda.

National Secretaries Week observed April 24-30

Since 1952 when celebration of National Secretaries Week began, the Permian Chapter of Professional Secretaries International has sponsored its observance locally. In preparing for the events of the week, Shirley Jones, Permian Chapter president, cited the words of President Ronald Reagan: "Secretaries Week provides us with a welcome opportunity to honor our secretaries and to recognize their critically important role in our great nation.

"Secretaries bring to their jobs in the public and private sectors invaluable training and skills, providing a sense of organization and cohesiveness to their offices. Their resourcefulness is legend, and they facilitate the work of our fast-paced, technological society.

"Always in demand, secretaries today are faced with the mounting technical changes and challenges of our complex society, and likewise, exciting opportunities for career growth as their traditional duties expand."

On April 24 a special Secretaries Day luncheon will be held at the Midland Civic Center at 12 noon. The luncheon is open to all area secretaries and their bosses. Reservations may be made by calling Janice Klein at 684-5826. Deadline for reservations is April 19.

Text by Diane Booth

It happened 10 years ago, but she will never forget it.

Lee (a fictitious name) was raped at gunpoint in a Ft. Worth suburb motel room one evening after eating dinner.

"People think if you are minding your own business and doing what you are supposed to be doing, it does not happen," said the Midland resident.

"I thought those things happened to other people," she said. "It really makes no difference how you are dressed and what you are doing. One of the biggest myths is it does not happen to nice girls."

Lee, a wife and mother, who was in her early 30s at the time, was away from her Midland home attending classes.

After finishing dinner one evening shortly before dusk, she returned to her motel room to brush her teeth.

She exited the bathroom to find a man standing in the doorway pointing a gun at her.

At first she thought he only intended to rob her. She handed her wallet to him. He shut the door and told her to take off her clothes.

The man cut the phone line and held a gun to Lee's head for the 30 minutes he stayed in Lee's room.

Before he left, she said, he tied her hands and feet with her hose. He threatened to kill her if she attempted to summon help.

"He did not wear a mask," she recalled. "I was absolutely sure he would kill me."

She got up, locked the door and went to the bathroom to get a razor to cut the nylons from her hands and feet. She dressed but did not attempt to clean up.

Lee cracked the motel door open and stopped a young man who walked by her room. He escorted her to the motel office.

Lee went to the police department to report the rape and later went to the hospital for an exam. Because the rapist never covered his face, she provided police with a detailed description of her assailant.

Before the rapist was apprehended, based on Lee's description, he raped two teenage girls, who were guests in the same motel where Lee was raped.

Lee picked the man out of a police line-up. Three months later the case went to trial. Following a three-day trial, Lee said, the man was sentenced to life for raping her and was given two additional 20-year terms for robbing her and for raping the 15-year-old girl.

As far as she knows, the man who raped her is still behind bars.

While the rapist's conviction did not erase the incident from her memory, Lee said, it helped her deal with the trauma she experienced.

"I knew I had done something about it," she said. "I had gotten him off the street and he was not going to rape anybody else."

While the rape victim may deal with the event by shoving it in the back of her mind, Lee said, the only w[illegible] to come to terms with it is to talk about it.

The woman eased her burden by confiding in her friends, parents and husband. "The worst thing you can do is not to talk about it. You have got to cope with it at the time."

Although time has passed and friends and family have been supportive, Lee said, "There is a lot of fear and there always will be. Ten years later I can walk down the street and see a strange man and I am afraid."

Parent-child registration bill up for state adoption

Proposal requests parties consent before opening records

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

When a couple adopts a child they volunteer the worries, sacrifices, heartaches and joys that come with parenthood.

Later in life, some adopted children want to know about their background and biological families. Some biological mothers want to know what happened to the child they gave for adoption. Sometimes only one of the parties in an adoption wants to find the other and one doesn't want to be found.

A voluntary registry bill which includes exceptional situations has been introduced to the state legislature by Rep. Stan Schleuter (HB 1174).

RUBY PIESTER, former executive director and current advisor for long-range planning of the Edna Gladney Home and Adoption Agency in Fort Worth, was in Midland recently to explain the proposal to members of the local Edna Gladney Auxiliary.

The Edna Gladney Home, established in 1897, is one of the oldest and largest homes and adoption agencies in Texas.

Mrs. Piester said the voluntary registry being proposed gives the adoptee, at age 25, the right to contact the agency where he was adopted and register if he wishes to contact with his biological mother. The biological parents have the right to register when the child is 25 if they want to make contact.

By registering, both parties express their desire to find the other and both must register before contact will be attempted. If both parties register, contact is made through the agency.

The state will handle registration if the adoption was processed privately by a doctor or lawyer, or if the agency has closed.

"The registry that Texas has written is a passive one because you don't go out and search for someone, you go back to the agency," Mrs. Piester said.

THE PROPOSED REGISTRY bill came about because "about four years ago a bill was introduced by what was then the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to help expedite finding homes for older children and children with special needs," said Mrs. Piester. "Then it moved into opening (adoption) records, destroying a lot of confidentiality and making it harder to place infants."

> "In every issue there are some people who are hurting in it. We must try to understand and help those people, but at the same time we must not hurt the masses because a few are hurting."

Alhough the bill proposed by HEW was restored to its original intent, Mrs. Piester said, it raised questions throughout the country, from adoptive parents, biological parents and adoptees, concerning records, access to information and rights of privacy. Several search groups were formed across the country to help adoptees and biological mothers make contact with each other.

Mrs. Piester stressed that while some people have a desire to make contact with the biological mother or child given for adoption, many involved in adoption situations do not have the desire, and may not want to be found by the other person.

"The few people who want to make contact should not make problems for the hundreds of others who don't," she said. "The issues across the country for the past two years have been extremely controversial."

She said each child adopted from the Gladney home is provided with a folder of general information about his background (but not the mother's identity), and medical records.

"ADOPTESS MIGHT WANT information about themselves, but not necessarily a reunion (with the biological mother."

Mrs. Piester pointed out that of the six states which have the registry system, it has been in operation the longest in Minnesota. Only 2 percent of persons involved have made use of the registry — "which shows not as many are searching as might have been expected," she said.

One of the major concerns about the possibility of opening adoption records, said Mrs. Piester, is that the rights of the persons involved might be voilated.

"We don't want the adoption situation to be like foster care," Mrs. Piester said.

"We feed dedicated to protect the girl who decided to have her baby instead of an abortion."

"I've always felt the mother needs to know the kind of people the adoptive parents are, but not their name," she said. "There needs to be a separation between the (adoptive) parents and the biological mother.

"They don't need to know each other's indentity — I feel it would put both the girl and the parents in a real bind if they knew who each other were. (And it's) easier on a child if her or she only has one set of parents.

"SOME AGENCIES HAVE different opinions, especially those that place older children," she said. "(With this proposal) we tried to make provisions for sibling groups. We are a little bit more protective because that is the basis of our program — protecting the mother, the adoptive parents and the child."

"We should be flexible for those who hurt so bad and need it (contact), but protect people who don't want it," Mrs. Piester said.

> The proposed registry bill will be beneficial to all concerned, both those who want to contact and those who don't."

The proposed bill specifies registration when the adopted child is 25, because "basically by the time a child is 25 he or she is settled in, not threatened, and knows who he or she is," she said.

"We are finding it is not a threat to most people who have older children (25 or older). We'll find some who feel like they have to know."

Mrs. Piester said the biological mother can't register until the child is 25 because "people may change their minds and not want to be found — and you can take your name off the registry if you want to."

Mrs. Piester said she wants the proposal instituted "because...we feel that the records should be opened only for a good cause, and (the persons involved) should go back to the agency where the adoption occured.

"THE BIOLOGICAL MOTHER has the right to be protected, and the child ought to have the right to grow without disturbance. The adoptive parents and the biological mother need to make their lives with disturbance," she said.

"Search groups want open records — they are opposed to registry. (A registry) is a common sense, realistic thing that gives most people protection," Mrs. Piester added.

Part of the proposed registration process includes an hour of counseling for each party before registration can take place.

"In my 22 years at Gladney I have seen hundreds of young women give up their babies. Most want to put the experience behind them and go on with their lives. Generally speaking, the majority of young women do not want to find the babies they have given up.

"Gladney has an association of about 400 adult adoptees, age 18 to 35 or so, who said maybe they'd like medical information, but not contact.

"The person in this who needs protection is in a different situation than those who are a search group," she said. "These (are the ones) who fill the real need to open records."

Mrs. Piester said open communication between all parties concerned would help alleviate part of the problem.

"The ones who go to the agency for answers are sometimes the ones who are uncomfortable asking their parents. If parents can't answer questions, it often makes a child think it must be bad. If you can have a positive experience for a child, you have a more comfortable climate.

"IF THIS BILL PASSES, people will know the system is there if they want it, and they may not choose to take advantage of it," she said. "A lot of people don't want open records."

Mrs. Piester said the proposed registry bill will be beneficial to all concerned, both those who want contact and those who don't.

"In every issue there are some people who are hurting in it. We must try to understand and help those people, but at the same time we must not hurt the masses because a few are hurting."

Providing protection for the biological mother is a major part of the Edna Gladney program, according to Mrs. Piester.

"Of the girls who give up their babies for adoption, 95 percent really care what happens to the baby. That's why I think our adoptions have been so successful — because we impress on the parents that the girl really cares, and that comes across to the children. I think things were wrong when people didn't talk about it (adoption) and children built up curiosity and didn't understand. It's a great freedom when you understand. I think people are more open now (about adoption).

The non-profit agency uses private donations to provide low-income patients with services at less than cost.

The clinics' medical services gynecologial tests, anemia testing, blood pressure checks, a full range of birth control methods, veneral diease tests, pregnancy tests, diagnosis and treatment of minor gynecological problems, and counseling.

Educational services include presenting programs to groups, mother/daughter and father/son classes, teacher training, a film library and resource center.

Flu deaths reported

ATLANTA (AP) — A federal health researcher says the influenza season is winding down although flu and pneumonia have claimed an unexpected number of lives for the longest period since the 1969-70 flu season.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday that of 12,511 deaths reported last week from the nation's 121 largest cities, 647, or 5.2 percent, were attributed to flu and pneumonia. Researchers would have expected such deaths to make up only 4.1 percent of the total this time of year.

One telltale sign of amateur sewing is a facing that keeps popping into view. Every step in cutting and applying facing to a garment must be done carefully to preventing it. The facing should be cut slightly smaller than the edge to be faced. This way, it will fit inside the garment. It will allow the neckline or armhole to lie better against the body. It also makes it possible to roll the seam that joins the facing to the garment to the underside and out of sight. The simplest way to shorten facings is to take a larger seam allowance at the shoulders for a neck facing and at the underarm for an armhole facing.

Rape

Lee said she is uncomfortable in many situations and is much more conscious of her surroundings and the people around her.

Midland needs to be aware that rapes occur here, she said. "We are not immune to it.

Lee encourages all rape victims to report the incident and to prosecute the rapist.

A lot of myths exist about how women are treated when they report a rape to law enforcement officials, she said. Lee praised the police officers and hospital personnel who worked with her.

The only way to help fight rape, she said, is for victims to report the rape, prosecute the rapist and have juries to impose stiff prison sentences for rapists.

Lee said she wishes she could have consulted a Rape Crisis Center to deal with her emotions, but none existed a decade ago.

"After I was raped all I saw were men at the police station, hospital and in the courtroom," she said.

"I would have been very thankful if there had been a rape crisis center here, so I could have someone to hold my hand."

The Midland Rape Crisis Center reaches out to rape victims, but wants to help women who are afraid to come forward, according to Nan Gordon, director of the Center.

In the past six months, the center has counseled 44 rape victims, Gordonsaid.

In 1982, 72 rapes were reported to the center. Since the center was founded three and a half years ago, Gordon said the center has confidentially assisted 200 rape victims and counseled another 400 women over the phone.

Although the center is hearing from more rape victims, Gordon said, that does not mean rape is on the rise Midland.

"The number of rapes may not be up," she said, "more people are reporting them." The center credits its education program aimed at encouraging women to contact the center and law enforcement officials.

Only 51 percent of the women who contact the center call law enforcement officials, Gordon said. "That is what we are trying to change.

Rape victims should report the crime when it happens, she said. "Even if they do not want to prosecute, she said, "they should not be afraid to go to the police."

Rape has a high rate of recidivism. Over 70 percent of rapists have raped before, and will rape again, said Gordon.

The center's statistics differ from the Midland police department's, she said, because of the number of women who call to report a rape which may have occurred more than a year before.

"The ones who were raped awhile ago report the rape because they still have problems dealing with it," said Assistant Director Vicki Webb.

In January and February, six rapes were reported to Midland Police Department, according to Lt. Earl Luckey. In March, five rapes were reported to Midland police.

In 1982, 30 rape victims contacted Midland police and in 1981 there were 27 rapes reported here.

Luckey said women who are raped are "too embarassed" to tell police.

"They do not want their husbands and friends to know about it. They would rather let it go."

Midland police department encourages women to report a rape. "It can not change what has happened to them," he said, "but it could keep something like what happened to them from happening to somebody else."

If a man rapes a woman, the lieutenant stressed, and it goes unreported, "we do not know about it and we can not catch them."

The department works with the Rape Crisis Center to obtain rape case figures and to study descriptions of rapists and locations where rapes occur.

"The Rape Crisis Center does a very good job," he said.

About half the rape victims counseled at the center know their assailant, Gordon said. "A relative, acquaintance or friend is involved 50 percent of the time.

Rape cases frequently involve a man a woman has recently met and dated, a friend of a friend, an occupant of the same apartment building or office building or a neighbor.

"The other 50 percent are at the wrong place at the wrong time."

Nan Gordon

In the past six months, Gordon said, rape victims have ranged in age from a one-year-old child to a woman in her late 60s. It is not uncommon for a pregnant woman to be raped.

The first step is to accept the fact rapes do occur in Midland, Webb said. But they do not happen in any particular location. "People do not avoid potentially dangerous situations."

Approximately half of the rape victims in Midland are attacked in their homes, Gordon said.

A number of myths about rape endure, Webb said. "It does not just happen in dark alleys or at night and women are not asking for it."

Rape is not something that happens just to the attractive, young girl, she said.

But the biggest myth of all, Gordon said, is that rape is a sexual crime. "It is a crime of violence."

The main motive for rape is aggression, she said. Sex is used as a weapon to inflict violence, humiliation and or control over the victim.

The woman is often blamed for the incident, she said. "The rapist is the one who should be blamed. It is a criminal act."

No woman wants to be raped, Gordon said.

A woman can reduce the chances of becoming a rape victim by being aware of who she is with at all times and what defense capabilities she has.

If she must be out at night, she is advised to walk only on lighted streets and not take shortcuts. She is advised to be sure to keep windows and doors locked in vehicles and at home. Other advice includes checking out bathrooms in public places to make sure no one is lurking.

Should a woman want to arm herself with a gun or a can of mace that is up to her, Gordon said. "We do not advocate mace, guns or karate. A gun could be used against them."

Because it is so windy in Midland, Webb said, it is difficult to get downwind from the spray. Mace only lasts for a limited time, she said.

If a woman is raped, the Rape Crisis Center urges her to contact its 24-hour hotline at 682-RAPE.

The caller is informed not to destroy any possible evidence by showering or using the restroom, washing hands, changing clothes or cleaning up the scene.

Any evidence of the rape should be preserved in case the woman decides to prosecute later.

The victim will be encouraged to contact the police and to go to a hospital emergency room for an exam.

One of Midland's two dozen volunteers will meet her at the hospital and will also go with her to the police department is she chooses to report the crime.

The exam is conducted to ensure she is physically and mentally sound.

If the woman should take the case to court, a Rape Crisis volunteer will accompany her for support, Gordon said.

Of the 50 percent of rapes reported to law enforcement officials, Gordon said, a fairly low percentage of rapes are prosecuted.

The center exists to help the victim as well as friends and family of the victim, Gordon said.

Support is what the victims need, she said. "They should not judge her. They should let her talk if she wants to and to listen when she does.

As a result of a rape, women often experience nightmares, phobias, guilt, depression and anger towards the rapist, Gordon said. "They find it hard to be around people.

"They move or change jobs. Sometimes they pick up and leave town."

According to Webb, many women feel they have "lost control of their lives."

Funded by the United Way through a US Criminal Justice division grant, the center has provided its outreach program to an estimated 10,000 Midlanders, Gordon said.

The public awareness program is presented to clubs, businesses and groups and has been expanded to reach youngsters from 5 to 16 years.

The center is targeting that age group to teach children how to avoid sexual abuse from people they know, Webb said.

"We are more aware of children who have been abused," Gordon said.

More than half of the 72 rape victims the center worked with last year, she said, were under 16 years of age.

The center can only furnish alternatives to discourage rape, Gordon said. The person must decide how to handle the situation.

"If we knew of a foolproof plan," Gordon said, "We would tell everybody. It just does not work that way."

DEAR ABBY

Words hurt more than helped

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My 14-year-old son was killed in a tragic accident seven months ago, and I am just now beginning to come out of my numbness and shock. Throughout the ordeal, friends, family and acquaintances tried to comfort me. Some succeeded, while others failed miserably.

The following comments are words that did not help at all. I realize that everyone was trying to be kind, but there are certain words bereaved parents do not want to hear:

1. "I know just how you feel. I lost my mother, father, husband, brother, sister, etc." These words are so hollow to a parent who has lost a child. Unless they have suffered the loss of a child, there is no way on earth they can know how you feel.
2. "It was God's will." I am no more (or less) religious than the average person, but if it was "God's will" to take my son at 14 and end his young life, then I want no part of a God who could be so cruel.
3. "God needed him more than you did." How inadequate that made me feel, as though something was lacking within myself. If I had needed him more, would he still be alive?
4. "These things happen for a reason." What reason? There is no reason good enough to explain why I had to suffer the loss of my child.
5. "You can have another child," or "At least you have your other children." This is really cold and cruel. Children are individuals and no child can replace the child who has died.

Now for some words that comforted me: a simple and heartfelt, "I'm so sorry." Many people hugged me, held my hand or cried with me. No words were spoken, but they were there for me when I needed them. - LINDA LANCASTER

DEAR ABBY: A spurned lover, "Dear John," sued his exfiancee for the cost of the diamond engagement ring she refused to return. Although he won a default judgment of about $1,000, he did not try to enforce it. Instead he took a $1,000 bad-debt tax deduction.

The IRS disallowed the deduction, asserting that because John hadn't really tried to collect, the debt was not worthless at the end of the year.

On appeal, the Tax Court sided with the IRS: Dear John had failed to prove that the debt became worthless during the year in question.

No fiancee, no ring, no deduction.

Do you think this was fair? - JERRY

DEAR JERRY: Absolutely. Why should John expect the government to pay for his education?

DEAR ABBY: My mother, who has found fault with almost everything I have ever done, is now ruining my wedding plans.

I left my hometown four years ago to work in a city 200 miles away, and this is where I want to get married. My fiance is from this city, and so are my friends and his. We're planning to get married in his church here, but my mother says if I don't get married in my hometown in the church she attends, she won't come to my wedding. She accuses me of wanting to get married here to hurt her, and says if I loved her, I'd get married in her church. I do love her, but she makes me feel so guilty.

I can't talk to my father about this because he always agrees with Mother to avoid an argument. I've talked to my priest, who agrees that the problem is my mother, but he has offered no solution.

My fiance's parents have tried to get Mother to change her mind, but it's no use. Who's wrong? My mother or me? - THE SOMETHING BLUE IS ME

DEAR BLUE: I can understand why your mother would rather have your wedding in her church, but I think she is wrong to refuse to attend unless you do.

I hope she sees the light and changes her mind because it's your right to be married where you choose.

Feminine suits have fresh styling for spring

Hearst Feature Service

The suit — which for some time now has taken second place to outfits put together with separates — is again a star in the spring 1983 collections. The wealth of fresh and decidedly feminine new suits bears no resemblance to the man-tailored styles of recent seasons.

Givenchy of Paris and Oscar de la Renta of New York are among the prestigious trend-setters who this season have lavished attention on fashions appropriate to daylight occasions. De la Renta, speaking of the fitted jackets and slim skirts that are featured in many other spring collections as well as his own, explains how the new silhouette is femine without being flashy: "People sometimes misunderstand the difference between 'fit' and 'tight,' " he says. His suits "are designed to lie close to the body, but in no way conflict with, or impede, the free movement that all modern clothes must have."

That says it — whether the suit has a jacket cropped to the waist, with big lapels, as Calvin Klein has made them, or with elongated jackets curved in at the waistline, a la Bill Blass. In each case, they have a modified hour-glass shape, by means of shoulder emphasis that is rounded rather than squared off, and a natural waistline achieved either with a belted skirt or a jacket indentation. The effect is smooth and sophisticated — but if the garments are properly made and put together, they're just about as comfortable as the loosely cut styles of other seasons.

Beside fitted silhouettes and far softer tailoring, what makes the suits of spring 1983 different from their predecessors? For one thing, the trendiest combine two colors — a red jacket and black skirt, a beige bolero and brown or even blue skirt. Yves St. Laurent, who some say is the world's most influential designer, mixes his suit colors with almost as much abandon as he does his Caribbean-look party clothes:

Symposium debates influence of video games on players

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A University of North Carolina sociologist says video games may be depriving dedicated players of time they could use for something more important — like daydreaming.

However, participants at a symposium on electronic leisure say that while video games and home computers may fragment society at first, they could lead to a new kind of play and social interaction as the technology grows.

"What we're heading for is an information-based society," said Stephen F. Weiss of the Department of Computer Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "The computer has become central to this notion."

Robert N. Wilson, a UNC sociologist, said people could put their time to better use.

"Daydreaming, contemplation, meditation, reflection, self-analysis, fantasy, and perhaps more important, reading, are all significant activities that require a quiet space to be properly encountered and achieved," Wilson said. He said these activities, which appear to be non-productive, were essential for creativity and healthy personality development.

Wilson said video games were trivial, frivolous and passive, and primarily helped pass the time.

"The video games so far as I know them are essentially contentless. They represent a form of what I would call empty leisure. They replace more valuable forms of the leisure experience. Self-knowledge is going to be one of the main losses to video-game overplaying."

Participants said there were other negative factors to video games — they didn't require physical activity, they were often violent in nature, they were stressful, they're expensive, games located in arcades were often associated with drug use, and they might contribute to "sensory overload."

On the positive side, participants said video games decreased the fear of machines, gave new recreational outlets to the handicapped or hospital-bound and built peer acceptance that did not depend on physical abilities.

Rockhound finds stories in stones

MONTOURSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Fifteen years ago, Thomas O'Neil came down off a mountain and discovered a hobby that has proved fascinating to him. The Lycoming County man collects minerals.

O'Neil's chance discovery occurred when he was on vacation hiking through New Hampshire's Presidential mountain range. The weather turned miserable, causing him to cancel a scheduled climb.

On his way back down the mountain, O'Neil ran into the president of a local mineral club out collecting specimens despite the inclement weather. The introduction to this stranger was also O'Neil's introduction to his favorite hobby.

He has devoted most of his time to minerals since his retirement as a tool grinder eight years ago, and cannot understand why mineral collecting does not have a more glamorous image.

"There's a story in rocks," he said. "After all, they didn't go to the moon to pick apples."

Computer guru offers advice for consumers

Hearst Feature Service

The Computer Era is upon us. The kids are busy playing Pac-Man, the grocery check-out is an electronic whirr, and Ronald Reagan is going to fight off the Russians by pushing buttons. Ten million of your neighbors are busy at the keyboards of their Apples and Ataris, zooming on past Buck Rogers into the 21st century. And you feel lost.

Until recently, the last remnants of the linear culture haven't been much help in illuminating this brave new world of computers. The choice between "gee whiz" futurism or manuals full of technological jargon and diagrams sent many people scurrying back to their Smith-Coronas, grumbling curses at the newfangled gadgets — that is, until several hundred thousand of us read "The Word Processing Book: A Short Course in Computer Literacy" by Peter A. McWilliams (Prelude Press/Ballantine, $9.95).

McWilliams is the 33-year-old whiz kid of the computer world. With zany illustrations, witty asides and clearly stated evaluations, he elucidates the theory and practice of personal computers. Then he takes you by the hand and goes from machine to machine, pointing out the features and failures in a detailed "Brand Name Buying Guide." And if you are interested in more than just word processing, he recently published "The Personal Computer Book" — same publisher and price — which provides the same delightful guidance in considering computers for general purposes in the home.

Does every decent civilized human being on the planet needs one of these machines immediately?

"Certainly not," McWilliams replied with amusement. "If you want to balance your checkbook, I strongly recommend that you buy a pencil and a piece of paper; if you want to keep your appointments in order, buy a datebook. Computers are a waste for that sort of thing, but they're useful in lots of other areas. If you use a typewriter regularly, you probably will benefit from a word processing computer."

After admitting that three years ago he knew nothing about computers, McWilliams said, "I was writing poetry and hate the messy re-writing, the crossing out, the copying over. I am also a terrible typist and a bad speller. One day, I met Durk Pearson (author of the "Life Extension" book), and he gave me a 45-minute lecture on why a computer would make me a happier writer. I spent eight months researching the computer market and ended up buying the exact computer components that Durk had recommended to me in the first place. Then I started to write a short article telling other writers how wonderful computers are, and when I realized that I had written 16,224 words — well, it was going to be a book."

Actually, two books emerged, along with a $100-a-year computer newsletter, a weekly column for the Universal Press Syndicate and a publishing house agreement on a forthcoming list of several more publications on computers. The "Word Processing Book" has been the No. 1 best-selling computer book for several months; both of his tomes have sold over 100,000 copies.

In addition to lucid explanation and wit, McWilliams has earned his reputation as a computer guru by expressing strong opinions about the capabilities and values among the hundreds of hardware and software manufacturers in the computer marketplace.

"Each season brings a new generation of machines," he said. "This fall we will see an explosion of computers that will be very inexpensive, very portable, and truly 'user-friendly' machines. That phrase, 'user-friendly,' means you will be able to use these machines with virtually no study of the instruction manual and no laborious training. You also will be able to buy computers with more power and memory for less money."

If you wonder how the price of computers can keep coming down, listen to McWilliams' cogent analysis as he pulled out a pocket calculator: "Today, you can buy one of these calculators for $5 or $10. In 1939, it took the combined efforts of IBM, MIT, and the Defense Department to develop the prototype. A Commodore 64 computer, which you can buy today for $500, would have cost you over a million dollars in 1953 because the first computer had 46,000 vacuum tubes. One burned out ever six minutes. It took eight tubes for just one byte of computer information. Now it is all done with microchips and magnetic tape. If the aeronautics industry had improved and economized at the same rate as the computer industry — starting from the Wright brothers to now — airplanes would cost something like $24 and you would be able to fly around the world five times on a gallon of fuel."

As for specific recommendations, McWilliams explained in the fifth edition of "The Word Processing Book" (revised and updated in January 1983) that the KayPro II computer, priced at $1,795, had edged out the older Osborne 1 as his selection for the best computer buy on the market. Has anything changed in the last three months?

"Yes," he said with a burst of real enthusiasm. "The Epson QX-10. Anyone buying a computer today would have to consider that machine. The KayPro II is still the Volkswagen of computers; it will do the job well at a good price. But if you can afford an additional $1,200, the Epson QX-10 gives you much, much more. It has more disc capacity, a larger screen, a better keyboard."

McWilliams waxes rhapsodically for eight single-spaced pages over the Epson QX-10 in the first issue of his newsletter, ending with the statement: "Not only is it one of the most advanced computers around, with lots of good software — soon to be great software — but the whole package costs $2,995. This represents a remarkably good value, the best to be currently found in personal computers."

The Epson QX-10 may be the best available in McWilliams' opinion, but there are lots of other options. "If you just want to get your feet wet at the lowest price possible, I think the Victor VIC-20 is the best machine in that category. Priced at $300, it is $100 to $150 more than the Timex/Sinclair, but it is a much better inexpensive computer. Some of the new portable computers are vast improvements over the Sony Typecorder. The Teleram T-3000 is a great lap-sized computer that weighs only nine pounds, is battery operated and takes standard software. IBM is coming out with some new small computers that sound interesting, 'The Peanut' and 'Popcorn.' Apparently, they are going after the home market now monopolized by Apple."

McWilliams has nothing but disdain for the quality and cost of the Big Three computers — Apple, Atari, and Radio Shack.

"Of course, if you want to wait around for a few more years," added McWilliams, "computers will be available with mass-storage laser disc. The type of laser discs that are available right now, programmed with movies for $25, have a capacity of over a billion bytes — that's called a 'gigabyte' — and can store the entire contents of the Encyclopedia Britannica. That technology is with us now. IBM is already using Plasma screens — large, fast-moving liquid crystals — that will eventually replace the television sets now used, and those will eliminate the radiation hazard, too. At the MIT Computer Research Center they are working with voice-activated machines that will eventually eliminate the need for a keyboard."

Cutbacks in cancer research 'suicidal'

Hearst Feature Service

The new winner of a coveted $50,000 award for cancer research says cutbacks in basic research support are tantamount to "committing scientific suicide."

Dr. Leo Sachs, head of the department of genetics at Israel's Weizmann Institute of Science, received the cash prize - sponsored by the Bristol-Myers Company - on April 6 in New York. He was cited for landmark discoveries in what makes cells either cancerous or normal and specifically for first demonstrating how leukemia cells grown in the laboratory could be changed back into normal cells.

The sixth annual award for "distinguished achievement in cancer research" has previously gone to scientists in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Alabama and England.

In an interview Monday, Sachs voiced concern for "any country" threatened by even partial cuts in research and training budgets. Under the Reagan administration, cuts are an annual fact of life, and in Israel, Sachs noted, where political and economic woes drain financial resources, research dollars are threatened as well.

"When tight economic times create a need to cut spending, it is always tempting to looking at basic research," Sachs said. "It is understandable, too, since people want immediate value for their dollar, and science does not advance that way.

The cuts made now may stop programs that will take 20 years to make up in the future. Any country that cuts science and technology is putting itself at a tremendous disadvantage."

Sachs said he can "only hope" that Israel will continue to support basic scientific research, despite the economic crunch there. "In terms of percentage of the overall national budget, whether in the U.S. or Israel, the amount spent on research is rather small. But it is a major investment in a country's future."

Sachs first identified a protein called MGI (macrophage granulocyte inducer) that controls the process by differentiation in normal white blood cells.

Vintners' dilemma: Labels make or break a winery

Copley News Service

Image-making is a job for Madison Avenue, not wine makers. Yet many wine makers have tried their hand at it, only to be persuaded years later that their efforts have not been perceived the way they originally thought.

Design of the wine label is probably the single most important bit of image-building a winery must worry about, and yet the California wine industry has just a handful of professional label designers.

Three of the most widely recognized for excellence are Colonna, Caldeway, and Farrell of St. Helena, artist Sebastian Titus, and David Coleman.

Artists and illustrators Ralph Colonna, Jeff Caldeway and John Farrell have done labels such as Jordan, Robert Pecota, Raymond, Beringer and Silverado. Titus has designed labels for Firestone, Caymus and many others. Coleman, part owner of Adler Fels winery, has done labels for Chateau St. Jean, St. Francis and Adler Fels, among others.

However, some wineries don't work with professional label designers, and go about testing their market image haphazardly. For every label, there's probably a story and one of the most interesting is how the Rutherford Hill Winery settled on a label design.

Back in 1975, the winery was being formed by the partners who also own Freemark Abbey Winery — Chuck Carpy and Bill Jaeger. Some of the new Rutherford Hill partners wanted a distinctive label; others desired a label that reflected the high quality of the Freemark Abbey name — though they wanted the wineries to maintain separate identities.

So the partners, through a series of friendships, made their way to the Los Angeles offices of National Football League Properties, the publishing arm of the NFL, which was headed by David Boss, an editor and talented photographer.

Boss commissioned artist Merv Corning to do a watercolor painting of the winery building. Then Boss turned the project over to Amy Yutani, who was then the NFLP's graphic artist.

Yutani placed the technical data at the top of the label (usually it's at the bottom), created a script type for the middle of the label, placed the vintage date, appellation and varietal designation off to the right of center (usually it's centered), and put Corning's drawing, in full color, at the bottom.

The partners weren't convinced. Some wanted a design more in keeping with the simple, unadorned Freemark Abbey label — simple buff paper, block lettering.

So a second design was created by Colonna, Caldeway and Farrell and both designs were offered to selected shops — side by side — to see if there was any difference in sales.

The Corning-Yutani label "was a total flop," said a winery spokesman. The simpler design won out — and has been the design used since then.

New England's sturdy stone walls endure as monuments to settlers

WASHINGTON POST
NEWS SERVICE

(Hartford, Conn.) — Some are simply piles of stones: gray, gap-toothed lines that snake through ancient fields now overgrown with trees and choking vines.

Others are more painstakingly made: straight and even monuments to sore backs and swollen hands that have survived more than 250 New England winters.

New England's stone walls, linked end to end, would surely encircle the globe, making the Great Wall of China look like a mere few links of chain.

No one knows exactly how many miles of stone walls are in New England, or how many miles were destroyed by encroaching development of farmland. But there are still areas of New England in which they appear like veins in the earth, stretching as far as the eye can see.

In Sutton, N.H., there are more than 500 miles of them. From a hilltop in Hardwick, Mass., the 2-foot-thick walls interlace the surrounding acres of farmland like a giant jigsaw puzzle. In the center of Hardwick, there is a wall so thick that a team of oxen can be turned around on top of it.

In Salisbury, Conn., there is a retaining wall 20-feet-high, 9-feet-thick and as long as a football field built in 1851 by a hundred laborers and horses. In Cornwall, Conn., all that remains of Dudleytown, a deserted village atop Mohawk Mountain, are its massive stone walls.

The unmortared walls, which appear in every rural area throughout New England, and even its outer islands, were built not so much to "wall something in or wall something out," as to rid the land of stones.

"Maine's No. 2 crop is potatoes. Its No. 1 crop is stones," said Francis Fitzpatrick, a farmer from Houlton, Maine.

Homer Babbidge, president of the Hartford Graduate Center and a lover of stone walls, remembers an old New England agrarian apologia:

"When you buy meat, you buy bones; When you buy land, you buy stones."

Wesleyan University geology professor Jelle de Boer understands why some New England farmers believe that the rocks grow in the soil.

"It looks like that," he said. "Actually, the ground water freezes and then thaws, pushing the rocks to the top."

The stones, de Boer said, were deposited by glaciers that cut a massive path from Maine to Connecticut, the last coming to a stop on Long Island Sound about 7,000 years ago. One of the glaciers was a half-mile high.

Although New England's stone walls are among the oldest and most enduring relics of its colonial past, they inspire the least amount of interest from historic preservationists. Maybe it is because there are so many of them that they are simply taken for granted. Or maybe poet Robert Frost was referring to the preservationists when he wrote, "something there is that doesn't love a wall."

After all, no one has ever attempted to get a 250-year-old New England stone wall declared a National Historic Landmark, or apply for a federal grant to restore one. They are the sole structure of any aesthetic or real estate value that is not taxed.

And the walls do have historic value, if only for the stories attached to them.

In Westminster, Mass., for example, there is an 11-foot-high "spite wall" built by a farmer to prevent a neighbor from spying on him.

Historical documents say that the wall was built by Edmund Proctor, a farmer whose eccentricities extended to naming his eight children so they would each have the initials A.H. Proctor.

Writers praise book reading

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — "I used to cheer for the killing of Japanese soldiers until I read this book," wrote George Manis about "A Glorious Way to Die", by Russell Spurr.

"Suddenly the gore and horror of war came to me ... our men in the armed forces are no different than the enemy," Manis said.

Manis is the winning essay writer out of 15,000 entries in the "Books Make a Difference" contest sponsored by the national school publication "Read Magazine."

"Now I understand that war is something that is terrible and that it should never happen again," wrote Manis. He is an eighth-grade student at Barrington Middle School in Barrington, R.I. He was awarded a trip to Washington, D.C., during National Library Week in April.

Amy Barker, a seventh-grader at Nipher Middle School in Kirkwood, Mo., wrote about "Anne Frank: Diary of a Young Girl."

"Her diary isn't a cry from life but a song to it, no matter what the conditions or threats," she wrote. "When I am unhappy, I compare Anne's situation with mine."

As prices climb, houses are smaller but include assortment of luxuries

Copley News Service

Like it or not, new houses offered by builders this year will almost certainly be smaller than in previous years.

With new home prices escalating out of sight, and with fewer prospects able to qualify for mortgages, the dream of owning a large house on a large lot has largely faded into obscurity. And, say those responsible for our housing, home buyers for at least the rest of the decade will have to be content with less living area, a smaller lot and a more dense residential environment than their counterparts of only a few years ago.

"The average size of a home totaled around 1,600 square feet in the 1970s," says Lawrence Salkin, president of Salkin Group, Philadelphia architects who specialize in multifamily housing. "In the decade of the '80s, that average could be reduced to as low as 1,000 square feet."

What's more, Salkin predicts, instead of four bedrooms — for years, the ultimate home buyer goal — these dwellings will have two or three. Suburban homes will get much closer to city homes in average size — two floors of about 600 square feet each. Room sizes will be reduced, and there will be fewer rooms as compared with the traditional detached house.

But that doesn't mean that new home seekers must be faced with a succession of cramped, little boxes that will have to suffice for housing, Salkin believes.

"In return for giving up space," he says, "home buyers will get trade-offs in the form of frills. You'll see luxurious touches and special illusions — imaginative techniques of all kinds to make houses look and feel bigger than they are."

For perceptive house-hunters looking for elements that separate the first-rate from the ordinary home, here are some things Salkin says to keep in mind:

Big formal dining rooms, wide hallways, specialty rooms and spacious foyers are "out," "in" are all kinds of private outdoor areas, multiple-use rooms, "pop-out" and "pop-up" design elements and lots and lots of glass.

Instead of the space-wasting standard foyers, for example, well-landscaped outdoor courtyard enclosures will define the entry. Similar outdoor entertainment areas in the form of decks, patios and balconies will be treated as part of the home's living space. And big glass windows and sliders will strengthen the outdoor-indoor relationship, while visually opening up interiors to views and light.

Inside, rooms will have numerous uses — bedroom-dens, study-libraries, kitchen-dining rooms, etc. — because there are fewer of them.

Handling a heartbreak, right to grief and pain

Copley News Service

As a rabbi, Harold Kushner was used to nursing those in his congregation afflicted by tragedy. He stood at their hospital bedsides, eulogized their passing, comforted the survivors.

Kushner always found the proper sympathy, but he never fully understood the agony, the cry of "Why me?" that accompanies the sudden loss of a loved one or the news of a grim medical report — until such tragedy touched his own life.

On Nov. 19, 1966, the day his wife, Suzette, gave birth to a healthy daughter, the Kushners were told that their other child, 3-year-old Aaron, had progeria, a rare — and fatal — disease also known as the "early aging disease."

Kushner remembers well he and his wife's cry of anguish, "Why us?"

"At first we felt guilt, that we must have done something wrong and must have caused this," Kushner said, echoing words that have been imprinted in the minds of nearly all of us at one time or another.

"And then we couldn't figure out what we might possibly be guilty of that was so horrendous," he said. "When it was inconceivable that we were more deserving of tragedy than the people down the block or across the street, our reaction was anger, anger at God; a sense of being cheated, used unfairly."

In the following months, Kushner grappled hard to find an answer. Did his family "deserve" such a tragedy? Did God will it?

After his initial anger had passed and acceptance set in, Kushner came to believe that what had happened to his son was not God's doing, nor a punishment, nor fate.

It just HAPPENED.

That thought is difficult to swallow. It offers no explanations for tragedy. But Kushner believes the search for such explanations only leads to more pain and self-punishment. The more important issue, he believes, is how to survive; how to go on with life.

It was an issue he and his family had to face when Aaron died in 1977, a day after his 14th birthday.

And it is the thesis of Kushner's short but powerful book, "When Bad Things Happen to Good People," which has steadfastly remained on the best-seller lists for more than a year.

Kushner, who clearly seems like he'd be more comfortable in front of his own pulpit than in front of interviewers, believes the book has been a success because "conventional" answers to the "Why me?" question — "It's God's will," "You'll be a better person because of it" — don't offer much in the way of comfort.

Those types of statements "tend to rob the victim of his right to feel hurt and angry," and often add to the guilt or self-hatred a person might already be feeling, Kushner said.

For example, he said, "Around the time Aaron was dying, people said to me, 'God wanted this to happen to you because he knows your religious faith is strong enough to handle it.' My reaction was to wish I was less religious. I didn't want to be strong enough to handle it; I wanted a healthy son."

As Kushner says in his book: "I cannot believe that God 'sends' illness to a specific person for a specific reason. I don't believe in a God who has a weekly quota of malignant tumors to distribute, and consults his computer to find out who deserves one most or could handle it best. ... Being sick or healthy is not a matter of what God decides that we deserve. The better question is, 'If this has happened to me, what do I do now and who is there to help me do it?'"

Kushner, rabbi of the 600-member Temple Israel in Natick, Mass., near Boston, has stirred disagreement among some theological circles because of the treatise that God is not responsible for the bad that befalls us.

"Some ivory tower academicians are uncomfortable with this because what I'm really offering is not theology, but religion," Kushner said. "Martin Buber (the 20th century Jewish philosopher) said religion is experiencing God, and theology is explaining God. I didn't write my book to explain God. I wrote my book to make people feel better. People who have been hurt are not interested in explanations. They're interested in being reassured and consoled."

To Kushner's surprise, many of those seeking consolation in their letters to him have been women, who themselves or whose children suddenly became seriously ill, and found themselves abandoned by their husbands.

"I think that says something about how our society doesn't teach men to feel, and the idea that to be manly is to be strong, and not have any emotions, to never cry," Kushner said. "Gary Cooper at the end of the movie 'For Whom the Bell Tolls' says, 'Just grit your teeth and take it.' If a man can't take it, if remaining in the [illegible] going cause him grief, and it is unmanly to feel grief, then he runs away."

Kushner responds to such letters by offering his condolences and advising the women to find friends — "good, patient friends who will sit and listen to them without minimizing their grief and pain. And if it's possible, it's helpful to find friends who have gone through similar circumstances, something which holds true for any kind of misfortune you suffer."

For bereaved friends and relatives, Kushner said, "the best thing to do is say, 'I'm sorry, I feel bad for you, I care about you," rather than to try to minimize or explain a tragedy or loss.

"Just sit there and hold somebody's hand; be available. Don't rush them, don't judge them. Don't say to them, 'It's been four months already, you ought to be getting over it, you ought to put it behind you.' Give them every right to feel hurt and angry," he said.

And don't feel compelled to try and cheer up a bereaved person by talking about everything — the stock market, the weather, the latest gossip — but the tragedy, Kushner advises.

"Doing that is part of the John Wayne complex we have," Kushner said. "We're not supposed to feel. People feeling anything strongly — grief, joy, fear — make us uncomfortable. Our way of comforting is to take away the other person's feelings. We say, 'Don't cry; don't feel bad; be strong.' All of these excuses are ways of giving the hurt person a message: Don't hurt."

Kushner and his wife were planning to write a biography of their son, but discontinued the project after they completed the first four chapters.

"We decided we wanted the memories of Aaron to belong to our family and not to a million strangers," he said softly. "And second, for my wife, my daughter and myself, it's time we outgrew the identity of being Aaron Kushner's family. In the same way Jackie Onassis had to stop being the widow of the slain president and just be herself, we have to become ourselves.

Russians live longer with 'Odessa Diet'

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK – Every 26 minutes in America, a new diet book is published. Because I know as little about nutrition as the authors of most of these books, I have been moved to write what is undoubtedly the most important diet book of all, "The Odessa Diet," which will now enable people to live to 135 and beyond through the simple uses of undernutrition, exercise, and debauchery – though not necessarily in that order.

I am closing the gerontology gap by revealing in "The Odessa Diet" the reasons why certain southern Russians live into their 120's – unless they are lying about their ages, of course.

The Scarsdale, Southampton, Beverly Hills, Youngstown, Cambridge, and New York diets all have one major fault: they are meant for people under 90, both in age and IQ. Therefore, we must turn to the wisdom of the Odessa diet because thousands of its followers have managed to achieve the same number for their weight and their age.

At 110 or more, they dance, they drink, they spit in their yogurt; they exuberantly milk their goats and their women; and their memories are so good that they can remember their real birth dates as well as the ones they told Sixty Minutes. Every one of these splendid people knows that it's not the quality of life that counts, it's the number of years, especially when applying for insurance.

"Is the Odessa Diet for everyone?" many people have asked me.

No. Just for people who like to swallow what they eat; and in America today, there are definitely too many of these.

"There is never a good reason to gain weight, not even in pregnancy," an ancient Odessan once said, and his descendants speak eloquently to us today. The modern Odessans get a wonderful jump on longevity: they start to look 120 when they are 35.

What are some of the remarkable secrets that I reveal in "The Odessa Diet?" One is the secret of how the body gains weight. Since the time of early man, scientists and gym teachers have wondered, How? Socrates was often heard to say, "Why am I so fat when I hate Greek food?"

If you have been able to follow the medical subtlety of this explanation, then let us move on to why you gain weight. Because your body is like an engine, one made by Chrysler before the loan.

GIANT STEP 3

If you are an adult who did not finish high school, here's your chance to receive a High School Equivalency Certificate by preparing for the GED test right in your own home by completing the twelve lessons which are appearing in The Midland Reporter-Telegram Sundays and Wednesdays for six weeks. Take a GIANT STEP!

MATHEMATICS

MULTIPLICATION OF FRACTIONS

When multiplying fractions, multiply the numerators, then multiply denominators

Example: $\frac{2}{3} \times \frac{1}{5} = \frac{2 \times 1}{3 \times 5} = \frac{2}{15}$

PROBLEM 1. $\frac{1}{3} \times \frac{1}{2} =$ PROBLEM 2. $\frac{3}{5} \times \frac{1}{4} =$

CANCELLATION

There is a short cut in multiplication called cancellation. Cancellation allows for easier multiplication of large numbers. When you cancel, divide the numerator of one fraction and denominator of the other fraction by the same number. Then multiply.

Example: $\frac{3}{4} \times \frac{1}{6} = \frac{3(-3)}{4} \times \frac{1}{6(-3)} = \frac{1}{8}$

1. Divide 3 and 6 by 3
2. Multiply as usual

PROBLEM 1. $\frac{2}{3} \times \frac{6}{7} =$ PROBLEM 2. $\frac{3}{10} \times \frac{5}{6} =$

MULTIPLYING WHOLE AND MIXED NUMBERS

When multiplying a fraction by a whole number, put the whole number over one, and multiply. Reduce the final answer if necessary.

Example: $\frac{1}{2} \times 5 = \frac{1}{2} \times \frac{5}{1} = \frac{5}{2} = 2\frac{1}{2}$

PROBLEM 1. $\frac{4}{5} \times \frac{3}{4} =$ PROBLEM 2. $\frac{1}{2} \times 9 =$

When multiplying a mixed number by a fraction or another mixed number, change the mixed number to an improper fraction. In this problem: $3\frac{2}{5} \times \frac{1}{4} =$ first change the $3\frac{2}{5}$ to the improper fraction 17/5 by following these steps.

1. Multiply the denominator (5) by the whole number (3). $5 \times 3 = 15$
2. Add the numerator (2) to 15. $2 + 15 = 17$
3. Put the 17 over the denominator (5). $\frac{17}{5}$

You can check to see that $3\frac{2}{5}$ does equal 17/5 by dividing $5\overline{)17}$

$$3\frac{2}{5} \times \frac{1}{4} = \frac{17}{5} \times \frac{1}{4} =$$

PROBLEM 3. $1\frac{1}{5} \times \frac{2}{3} =$ PROBLEM 4. $\frac{1}{2} \times 3\frac{3}{4} =$

DIVISION OF FRACTIONS

When dividing fractions, turn the right hand fraction upside down (invert) and multiply as usual. Example: $\frac{1}{4} \div \frac{1}{3} = \frac{1}{4} \times \frac{3}{1} = \frac{3}{4}$

PROBLEM 1. $\frac{1}{3} \div \frac{3}{8} = \frac{1}{3} \times \frac{8}{3} =$

PROBLEM 2. $\frac{3}{5} \div \frac{7}{11} =$

DIVIDING WHOLE AND MIXED NUMBERS:

When dividing whole or mixed numbers, be sure to change them to improper fractions before dividing. Reduce answer if necessary.

PROBLEM 1. $1\frac{1}{2} \div 2\frac{3}{4} =$ PROBLEM 2. $4 \div \frac{2}{3} =$

WORD PROBLEMS

Word problems are not difficult if you learn to identify key words. Most word problems contain lots of information that is not needed. Look for the key words that will tell you what mathematical process is necessary to arrive at the correct answer. Here is a list of the more common key words and the mathematical processes they imply.

Words that imply addition: total, sum, add, together, and

Words that imply subtraction: deduct, off, take away, left, from, minus, subtract, less

Words that imply multiplication: multiply, times, of Words that imply division: divide, divided by, by, into

STEPS IN SOLVING WORD PROBLEMS

1. Read the whole problem for the general meaning.
2. Determine what it is you are asked to find.
3. Look for the key words to show what mathematical process or processes should be employed.
4. If necessary, make sure that all measurements are expressed in the same unit of measurement.
5. Do the mathematics.
6. Make certain that your answer is the solution you were asked to find.

Example 1: Martha bought a ham weighing $12\frac{7}{8}$ pounds. She had the butcher cut off one slice. The slice weighed $\frac{1}{2}$ pound. How many pounds of ham were left?

1. General meaning: $12\frac{7}{8}$ pounds has $\frac{1}{2}$ pound taken away.
2. Problem asks for the pounds left.
3. Key words: off, left
4. Measurements are all in pounds.
5. Do the mathematics.

$$12\frac{7}{8} - \frac{1}{2} = 12\frac{3}{8}$$

6. $12\frac{3}{8}$ pounds of ham are left after $\frac{1}{2}$ pound was taken away. $12\frac{3}{8}$ pounds is the answer.

Example 2: For a gardening project, a 4 acre lot was divided into 1 acre plots. How many garden plots were there?

1. 4 acres were divided into $\frac{1}{4}$ acre plots.
2. How many fourths are there in 4?
3. Key words: divided
4. Measurements are all the same.
5. Do the mathematics.

$$4 \div \frac{1}{4} = \frac{4}{1} \times \frac{4}{1} = \frac{16}{1} = 16 \text{ plots}$$

6. There are sixteen fourths in 4. 16 plots is the answer.

WORD PROBLEM PRACTICE

PROBLEM 1.

Florentino has a $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre garden. He planted $\frac{1}{3}$ of it in carrots. How many acres are planted in carrots?

PROBLEM 2.

Esmond bought a 12 pound case of formula for his baby. The formula was in $\frac{1}{2}$ pound cans. How many cans were there in the case?

PROBLEM 3.

A highway crew completed resurfacing $\frac{1}{9}$ of the highway one week, $\frac{3}{9}$ the second week, and $\frac{2}{9}$ the third week. How much highway was completed?

PROBLEM 4.

Theresa has $\frac{3}{4}$ gallon of milk. She used one half gal. of the milk to make pies for the bazaar. How much milk does she have left?

WRITING SKILLS

NOUNS

A sentence consists of different types of words. A noun is a word that names a person, place, thing, idea, or quality. Almost everything you can see, touch, or think about is a noun. Nouns which are capitalized are called proper nouns. Ex: Jack, Washington, etc. Nouns which are not capitalized are called common nouns. Ex: table, circle, honesty, etc.

PROBLEMS

Underline all nouns in these sentences and tell whether they are proper or common nouns. There will be a lot of them!

1. Mr. Allen, the editor of our newspaper, is one of the nicest people I know.
2. The sunflower always turns its face toward the sun.
3. To the children of ancient Greece, the sky was a storybook filled with wonderful pictures.
4. The orange tree is an evergreen which bears beautiful blossoms and delicious fruit.
5. Rockefeller Center is the largest privately owned business and entertainment center in the world.

FORMING PLURAL NOUNS

When forming plural nouns, remember that the vowels are a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes y, and that all other letters are consonants.

Rule	Singular (one)	Plural (more than one)
Most nouns, add s	top	tops
Nouns ending in ch, sh, s, x, add es	church	churches
Nouns ending in a consonant and y, change the y to i and add es	city	cities
Nouns ending in a vowel and y, add s	boy	boys
Nouns ending in a consonant and o, add es	potato	potatoes
Nouns ending in a vowel and o, add s	radio	radios
Nouns ending in f or fe, change the f or fe to v and add es	wife	wives
A few nouns have no rules for forming their plurals	foot child	feet children
A few nouns have the same form in singular and plural	sheep	sheep

PROBLEMS

Form the plural of these nouns.

1. tax
2. bush
3. hero
4. thief
5. fish

FORMING POSSESSIVE NOUNS

Possession can be indicated in two ways as illustrated in the examples below.

Example: The windshield of the car is shattered.
The car's windshield is shattered.

In the second example a possessive noun is used to show possession. Use the following rules to form possessive nouns.

1. Add an apostrophe (') and an "s" to singular nouns to show possession. (boy-boy's, Mr. Thomas-Mr. Thomas's)
2. When a plural noun already ends in "s", add only an apostrophe to the word to show possession. (dolls-dolls', chairs-chairs')
3. When a plural word does not end in "s", add an apostrophe and an "s" to the word to show possession. (children-children's, men-men's)

The only trick to possession is to read the word before the apostrophe was added to be sure that you have not changed the word. The possessive form of "baby" is "baby's". Reading the word before the apostrophe shows us that the word "baby" has not been changed.

PROBLEMS

Write the possessive form of these nouns.

1. child
2. women
3. boys
4. class
5. deer

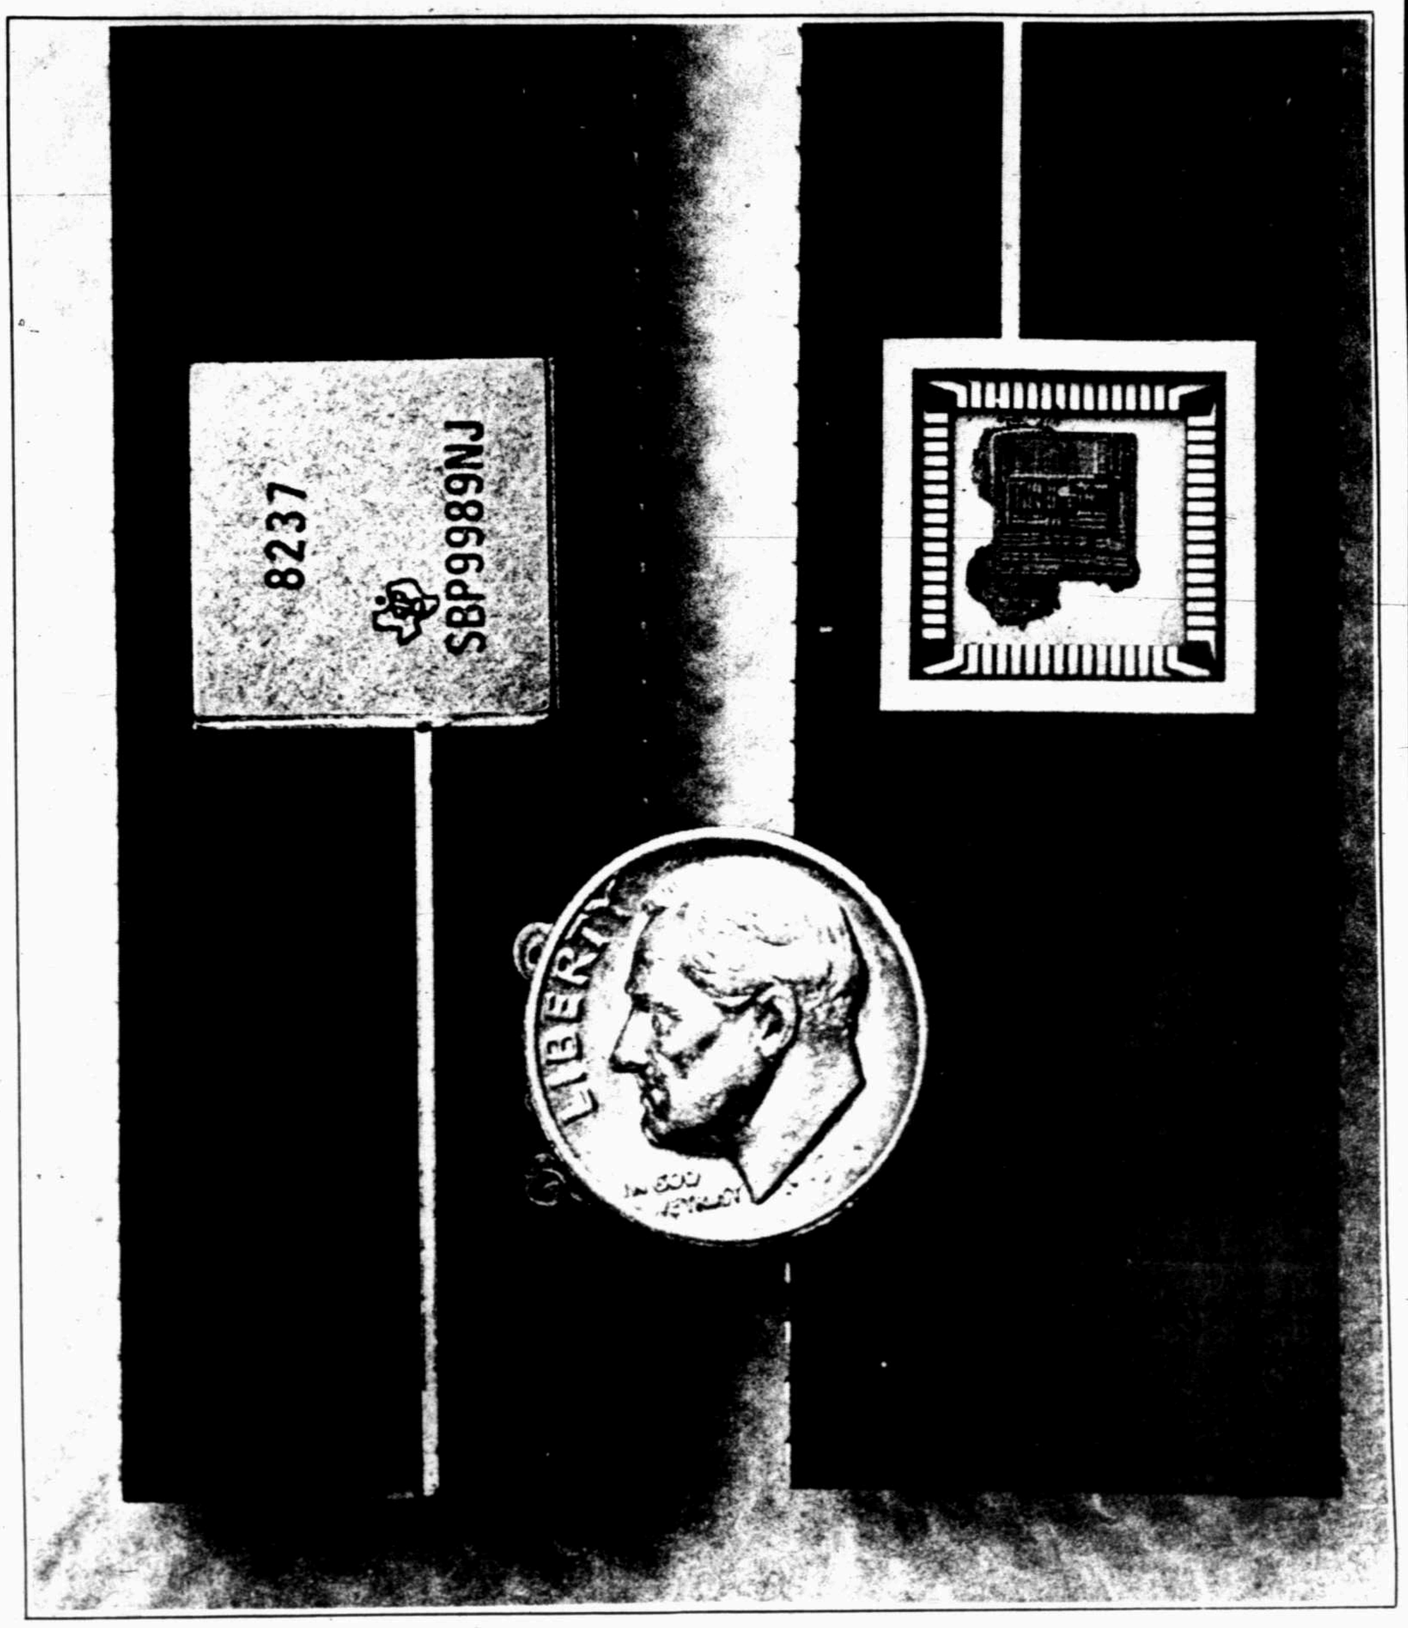
Chips:

TI makes them ready for war



Texas Instruments' plant on I-20, south of the Air Terminal, is becoming profitable. New product lines — and new people to produce them — are settled in now.

From 1980 to 1982 the process of making an orderly and controlled transition to new products has been going on at the TI facility.

It no longer makes familiar consumer products like the "Speak-n-Spell" machine that taught E.T. to talk. It no longer produces digital watches, and no hand-held calculators or computers are made there. In fact, the plant doesn't makes any of the consumer electronics normally associated with TI.

New products, assembled and tested here, have names like TTL Schottky Gates, TTL Low Power Flip-Flops, and MIL-STD-883 tested Digital TTL 54s in dual-in-line packaging. These have replaced the consumer items TI once made here.

These kinds of micro-chips are used for a wide variety of applications and in different packaging. The chips are the "brains" behind a lot of the U.S. Armed Forces' latest lines of electronic or electronic-assisted fighting machinery.

"We assemble and test custom-made chips (integrated circuits) for use in Trident Missiles, Peacekeeper Missiles, and Paveway III Missiles. This involves wire bonding, encapsulating into a hermetic package, providing thermal protection (heat sink), and making gold-plated wire connectors for the IC's," TI's site manager said last week.

Jim Watson moved from Houston to be Midland-Odessa site manager in March, 1982. He said "TI is one of the largest manufacturing businesses in this area. We just made a new promotional film (a high-quality videotape) to promote TI and to give this area a boost."

At Watson's TI Military Circuits division, the business cycle is not made of dramatic surges followed by extreme drops in demand. A steady and increasing flow of defense-contractor orders for TI products keep the plant working at capacity. There is a time-lag involved in getting Department of Defense orders to prime contractors and then to the TI semiconductor people.

Specific financial information on the plant operation is unavailable, but a recent company newsletter said the Midland-Odessa facility "turned the profitability corner" during 1982.

Texas Instruments as a whole has been quite profitable recently. On $4.3 billion of net sales in 1982, TI had net income of $144 million. Common stock shares earned $6.10 each and a $2 dividend last year. A share of TI would have sold for around $163.50 last week.

TI's corporate working capital is $568 million, its highest level ever.

The assembly and testing of high-quality, classified military circuits is performed here at Midland-Odessa. Basic parts come from various TI manufacturing plants. Some customized work is performed for vendors at this plant, located south of Midland Regional Air Terminal.

On-site inspectors from many government contractors maintain permanent offices in the plant to look over TI's shoulder.

Integrated circuits headed for the military, or the space exploration program, demand more extreme quality requirements, especially for space use, where nothing can be easily repaired or replaced.

Watson said, "When TI decided to switch this plant to military electronics, they moved employees and machinery over 1 1/2 years.

"A typical TI equipment move would take place over the weekend," Watson said. "We never stopped production. That's a key: Customers (defense contractors) have needs, and TI must deliver on time."

TI made sure that employees were aware of the changes as they took place, and even in the planning stages. The company assisted many new people in getting oriented here. Many of these came from Dallas.

In-house training is accomplished in a learning center within the plant, where TI employees can learn more about their jobs and also obtain a college degree in cooperation with Permian Basin colleges.

TI quality control is a company obsession. "Quality is a way of life at TI," Carson Smith, personnel manager, said.

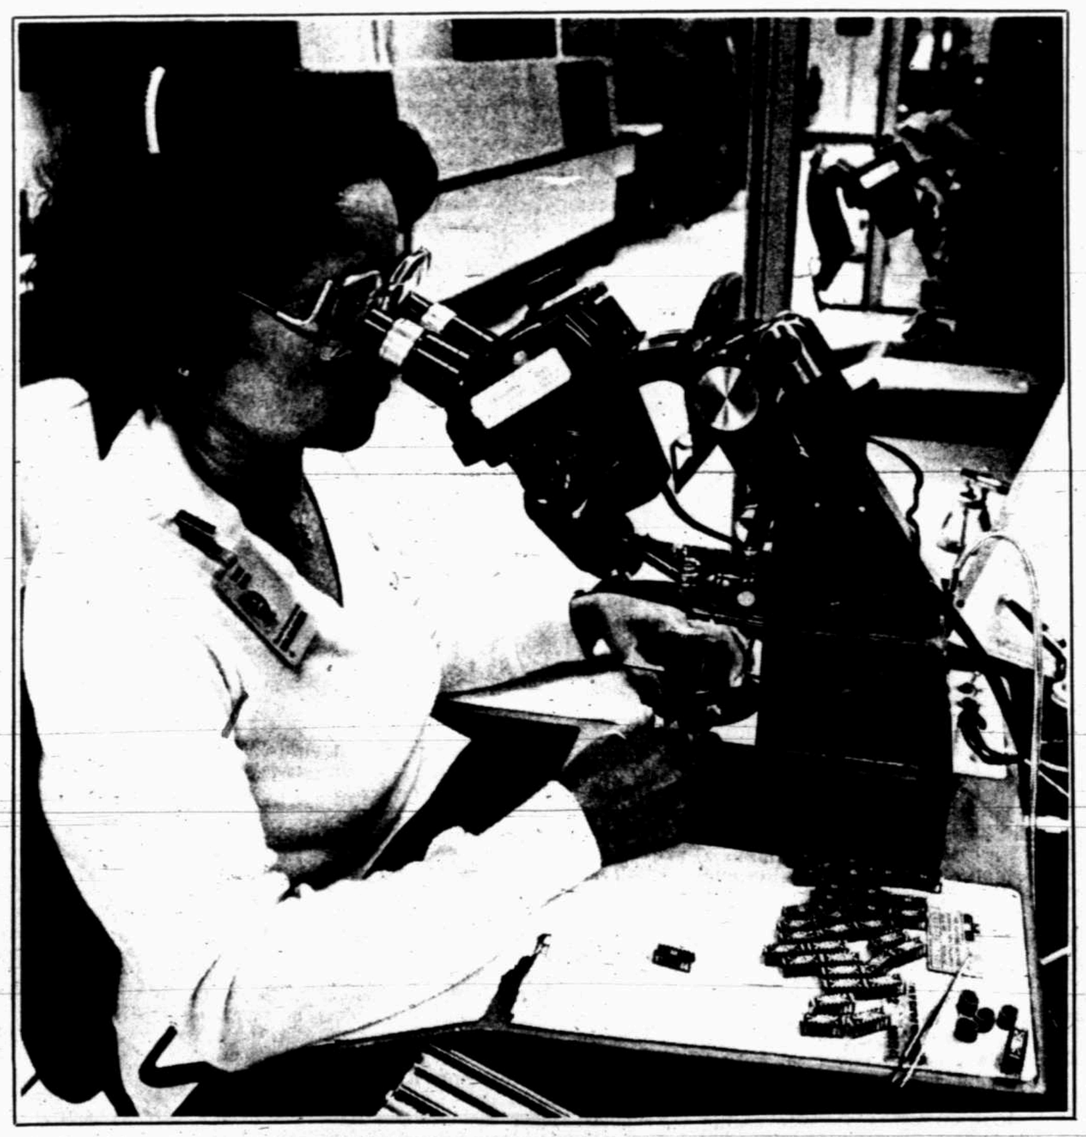
Watson said the major objectives in moving this TI operation to Midland-Odessa were:

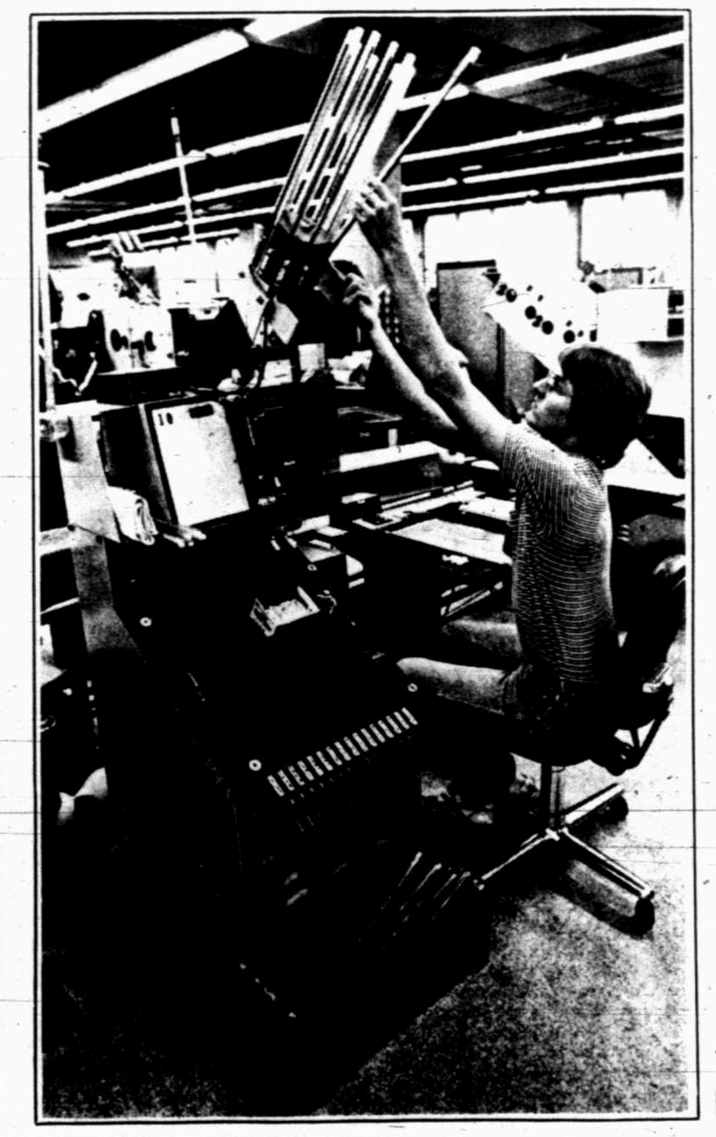
"TI uses this area's 'excellent, work-ethic oriented' work force. TI strengthens its No. 1 position in Military Semiconductors. TI offers client services at the plant."

The TI facility is built on a "central spine" — modular construction of substantial-sized work areas along it, and the module is built on so that it opens into the spine. "It's designed for rapid expansion, and the facility is expected to bring in more products," Watson said.

Developments helped by the Midland-Odessa technical team include new "rad-hard" standards for some equipment, so that it withstands certain levels of radiation, and chip carriers that are dual in-line, without the conventional prongs sticking out. These new carriers take up one-sixth the area and one-fifth the weight of conventional carriers, Watson noted.

"Much of the military equipment we package circuits for is changing to miniature sizes," he said. The circuit chips themselves are tiny, and the packaging for these chips gets smaller when defense contractors go to miniature machinery.





In the top photo, one thin dime shows the relative size of the assembled TI microchips. In the left photo, David Bell operates an automated IC testing machine. At far left, Carol Hagen bonds chips into lead frame, using a microscope.

Small Business
Hard work, common sense lead to success

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

With hard work and common sense, anybody can succeed in business, said Albert "Beto" Valles, manager of Bernard's Tortilla and Tamale Factory. He knows what he's talking about. Hard work and common sense have made Bernard's a success.

Bernard's, located at 511 N. Tyler, has been producing tortillas and tamales for the local wholesale and retail market for nearly three decades. Its products are a common sight on Midland grocer's shelves. Bernard's tortillas and taco shells are served in Tall City restaurants and schools.

The company was founded by Mrs. Rutila Bernard, who began making tortillas at home, by hand, as a way to supplement her family's income. The business was expanded and moved to the present site in 1955, she said.

Mrs. Bernard began the enterprise with a small, hand-operated tortilla machine and a lot of ambition. She estimates she could process 25 pounds of corn daily. She cranked masa, or corn meal dough, through the machine, caught the tortillas in her hand as they rolled from the mold and put them on a hot griddle to cook. She remembers making between 20 and 30 dozen tortillas by hand in a day.

Valles said today the factory's machines can make as many tortillas in a minute as Mrs. Bernard once made in a day.

RUNNING THE BUSINESS was literally a full-time project in those early days. "When we started, I opened at four in the morning and worked until 10 at night," Mrs. Bernard said.

She worked those long hours for about three years, with the help of her husband, before hiring her first of many employees. Old habits die hard. Mrs. Bernard said she still works 12 to 15 hours daily, even though she has more help now.

"I enjoy it," she said. "I'm feeling happy for my business, my employees too."

Although hard work and common sense have made Bernard's successful, they haven't made the company immune to the economic ups and downs that plague all business.

"Like any other business here in Midland," Valles said, "since last year we have come down — not very much — but our business has let go like anybody else's. I don't know when it's going to start picking up, but I hope pretty soon.

"OUR BUSINESS slacks off a little in the summer time because of hot weather. But as soon as school starts, our business practically every year doubles. But we expect that. But this year, since school started, our business has slacked off. So we are hurting like anybody else," Valles said.

"We were doing (a year ago) up to five tons of corn a day. It was not enough either, we sometimes had to work Saturdays to catch up. Now it's 2 1/2 to three tons, so that's practically half the business from last year.

"Now that business has slacked off we've been getting through at 1 or 2 p.m. Last year we were getting through at 7-8 o'clock at night. Last year it was beautiful, I hope it gets back that way again.

"My employees feel it too, especially my older employees," he said. "I givethem only 40 hours, that's all I can give right now. They want to put in 50 or 60 hours a week. They're feeling it."

"We might slack off a little bit but we're going to come back. I know. Because I've been with them since '66-67 myself, and I've seen these things happen — but not as bad as this year. It's the worst time that I've ever seen."

VALLES SAID IT IS his opinion, based on his years of experience, that Mexican food is less expensive than other items served in Midland's restaurants. That, coupled with the fact demand for his products are down, has him wondering.

"I don't know how to account for that. Why? Where is it at?"

In addition to hard work, common sense has played a major role in the growth of Bernard's. Mrs. Bernard, who felt uncomfortable trying to explain her ideas about business in English, let Valles translate them from Spanish.

Translating, Valles said:

"Her secret of success here in Midland, is the quality and the know-how for cooking the corn. She knows how to do it. Knows how to cook it. Knows how much lime to put in there. How many minutes or how many hours to cook corn. How to grind it. Everybody has a talent for something. Her's is making corn tortillas."

VALLES ELABORATED on her remarks. "It's quality, number one," he said. "The service. And, of course, the customers, which are the best here in Midland. All West Texas knows Bernard's. They ask for Bernard's. If they can't get it they call here personally."

Valles had nothing but praise for his boss.

"Her business mind is the best," he said. "She knows how to save. She's one hell of a business woman."

Valles has come far on his own. "Myself, I just went to the sixth grade — I don't say I'm a genius — I know my business too, it comes natural. Anybody can go into the tortilla business, but if they don't know what they're doing, they'll go broke.

One of Bernard's principle products is tamales. As meat is a key ingredient in tamales, Bernard's is closely watched by health inspectors.

"WE'RE UNDER STATE inspection. The state inspector comes here every day and stays here about an hour — especially when we are making tamales, to check the tamale to see that we comply with the state regulations as far as meat in the tamale."

"The state requires 25 percent meat and 75 percent masa. But Bernard's tamales are way, way over — around 45 percent meat."

Valles said a state inspector once told him Bernard's could cut back on the meat content of its tamales. The idea was rejected.

"Bernards has been making tamales that way for many, many years," Valles said. "People expect meat in tamales, so that's what she does, put more meat on tamales."

"Most of our competitors do big quantities of tamales and they steam cook them, but there goes all the flavor of the tamale," he said.

"We don't steam cook it (on racks as some makers do), we cook it (in a large pot) with an open flame. That way tamale flavor will stay with the tamale."

IT TAKES TWO hours to cook a pot of tamales.

In a way, it was government inspectors and regulations that made Valles manager of Bernard's.

"When we started under state inspection about nine to 10 years ago, we did have a lot of problems with the state. Mrs. Bernard wanted to quit the tamale business, because sometimes they'd say one thing, next morning they'd say another. And finally, she got so disgusted, she told me, 'I'm just going to quit making tamales.'"

Valles was selling Bernard's products at the time. He diagnosed the problem as one of communication. "I told Mrs. Bernard, 'There's no reason to quit making Tamales, we can handle the State of Texas.'"

Mrs. Bernard liked what she heard and she made Valles manager. "We got together and we got to complaining to the right people," Valles said. "They sent us a Spanish lady from El Paso, we got everything straightened out with the state.

"The state comes here daily, we work beautifully with the state, we comply with the state regulations, with the City of Midland's health department."

MORE THAN HALF the company's employees have been at the factory over 15 years, Valles said.

It wasn't long ago, back during the boom, that many Tall City businesses were troubled with high rates of staff turnover and related problems. Bernard's managed to escape them.

The company now employs 15 people. They've had as many as 25.

"We take care of our employees, without them we wouldn't be doing anything," Valles said. "Our employees are real important. We let them know they are important. We treat them as one of the family. That's why they're loyal to Bernard's Tortilla Factory.

'Very significant event' occurs at Seminole

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

SEMINOLE — The Permjan Basin's future had its "grand opening" in Seminole Friday when Amerada Hess Corp. officially celebrated the startup of the Seminole San Andres Unit enhanced oil recovery project.

When completed, the project will be largest of its kind in the region — but, more than likely, only briefly. It is the first of many such projects to come. These projects will keep the Permian Basin, as a producing province, "on the map" well into the 21st century.

Enhanced oil recovery, or EOR, is, in legal terms, "the increased recovery from a pool achieved by artificial means or by the application of energy extrinsic to the pool."

Generally the term is applied to three techniques used to get oil out of the ground that cannot be lifted by conventional means.

These techniques are: injection into the oil bearing resrvoir of carbon dioxide or other light gases that do not mix with oil; the use of heat, either by injecting steam or actually burning some oil underground; and the use of special detergents or chemicals — in particular polymers — which "thicken" water, allowing it to "wash" oil from the reservoir rock.

Carbon dioxide will be used to boost oil production at Amerada's Seminole Unit.

(A "unit" is an oil producing property having more than one owner, but operated by a single firm, under a partnership agreement. It is a way to produce oil with greater efficiency. Amerada operates the San Andres Unit for more than 80 partners. ARCO and Exxon are major interest holders. Seminole Unit was established in 1969.)

Addressing those assembled to mark the opeing of the project, Phillip Kramer, president of Amerada Hess, said the beginning of enhanced recovery operations at the Seminole Unit is a "very significant event in the petroleum industry."

It is the first field-wide EOR project for a major field in the Permian Basin, Kramer said. "It is the first major oil recovery project to use carbon dioxide from fields developed solely for the production of carbon dioxide.

"A lot of money, a lot of capital, a lot of effort, a lot of agony has gone into this project," he said.

Carbon dioxide injection in the field required 200 news wells be drilled. About 100 have been completed. It also required the building of a carbon dioxide distribution system and the building of a processing plant.

"The plant currently employs about 150 people and in the next three or four months will move up to 900 people during the construction phase. Upon completion ... the project will require about 50 permanent employees."

Kramer predicted the project, when completed, will annually pump about $2 million in additional payroll into the Seminole-area economy.

The first CO2 injection well within the 17,000-acre Seminole Unit was opened March 24. A total of 11 CO2 injection wells are now on-line. When the project is completed, 122 additional CO2 injection wells will be in operation.

The Unit's 420 producing oil wells now yield 41,000 barrels of oil daily. When peak production is achieved with CO2 injection, yield is expected to be 68,000 barrels daily. It is expected that CO2 injection will result in the recovery of 175 million additional barrels of oil from the San Andres formation within the unit, experts say.

According to one source, it has been estimated 1.15 billion barrels of oil were in place in 1936 when oil production frist began at the unit and approximately 470 million barrels will be produced using conventional methods. Total production so far is reported to be 365 million barrels.

The heart of the project will be a gas processing plant spread over 60 acres. The plant will process oil produced by CO2 injection, separate the CO2 for reuse, separate usable natural gas for sale and convert poisonous hydrogen sulfide gas into solid sulphur that can be sold.

Construction of the gas processing plant is just starting. Although CO2 injection has begun, the plant itself will not be needed for some time as the effects of CO2 injection are not immediate. The plant is to be completed in April 1984.

Midland's Ortloff Corp. is building the $125 million gas processing plant. The firm is responsible for process engineering, detailed engineering and design, procurement and related services.

Carbon dioxide for the project is piped from the Sheep Mountain field 30 miles west of Walsenburg, Colorado. The line passes through theBravo Dome field in northeastern New Mexico where additional CO2 supplies are produced. The final meter station at the Seminole Unit is 408 miles from Sheep Mountain field.

The pipeline consists of 184 miles of 20-inch line from Sheep Mountain to the Bravo Dome area, and 224 miles of 24-inch line to the final meter station.

At present 22 million standard cubic feet of C02 pass through the line daily. Maximum capacity is 500 million scf daily. At peak production, 320 million scf of C02 will pass through the line each day; a total of 1.2 trillion scf over the life of the project.

The C02 enters the final metering station at 2,150 psi. Flow through the line is regulated by remote control from Amerada facilites at Independence, Kansas.

The Department of Energy estimates more than 200 existing oil fields in the Permian Basin can be made to yield greater quantities of oil through the use of CO2 injection. DOE estimates 5 billion additional barrels of oil can be produced in this way. At present, only a handful of CO2 injection projects are actually in operation. Many are planned.

Shifting economic tides rearrange investment picture

By DAVID DIETZ
Hearst Feature Service

A year ago, investors were pouring cash into money market mutual funds at the torrid rate of $300 million a day. With Wall Street in a deep slump and gold and silver prices on the skids, the funds were the only investment game in town, offering average yields close to 14 percent.

But shifting economic tides have rearranged the investment picture. The implications of renewed strength in the economy and of lower inflation and cooler interest rates touch savers, borrowers and shoppers — not just investors.

To understand the fundamental change that has occurred, the rise and fall of the money market funds is illustrative. Founded in the early 1970s, they thrived when the economy spun out of control. High energy prices, bloated government spending, overheated money growth — all contributed to record inflation and soaring interest rates.

At their peak in the summer of 1981, yields on money funds averaged 17.2 percent. Yields then plunged but remained at double-digit levels, and cash continued surging into the market. Fears over deteriorating business conditions also influenced investors, with money funds investing solely in government securities growing the fastest.

Last December, when the economy is believed to have made its turn for the better, the funds began losing business at a steady pace. By last week, assets had fallen from the Dec. 1 high of $232 billion to $180 billion, a 22 percent drop. It's true that the introduction of competitive accounts at banks and savings and loans has contributed to the funds' decline, but it doesn't tell the whole story. Other investments, spotlighted by an improving economy, have grabbed most of the business from money funds.

Here are some of those opportunities, with a look at strategies that may now apply:

STOCKS: Propelled by lower interest rates and an improved outlook for inflation and the economy, Wall Street has enjoyed an unprecedented surge. The Dow Jones industrial average has risen more than 40 percent since August. Can it continue? Many advisers think so, but warn that a lot depends on the vigor of the recovery.

Leon Cooperman, Wall Street strategist for Goldman Sachs & Co., worries that the rebound could be shorter than the 30-month post-World War II average. He cites high "real" (adjusted for inflation) interest rates, worldwide debt woes, swollen federal budget deficits and the trouble they could cause for the bond market. Still, Goldman Sachs predicts that returns on stocks in the Standard & Poor's 500 index should reach 20 percent this year alone. That would be more than six times the inflation rate, at current levels.

The market's explosive gains in recent months suggest to some advisers that Wall Street may take a nasty fall before long. While optimism over the long term remains high, they suggest a cautious approach to stocks for the time being.

"It's a good time to be pretty selective," said Bill Rothrum, a broker in the San Francisco office of Shearson/American Express. "If you decide you want to invest a certain number of dollars, only commit half of it now." Stocks that Rothrum's firm likes include IBM, Tandy Corp. and Golden West Financial.

Gail Singer, head of financial planning for Dean Witter Reynolds in San Francisco, says that while stocks seem vulnerable to a slip, her firm expects a "strong bull market over the next couple of years." She recommends mutual funds for small investors, particularly those belonging to fund "families" that enable investments ranging from blue-chip stocks to gold to municipal and corporate bonds.

BORROWING: Despite easing, loan rates remain relatively high. Figure on paying your banker 14-15 percent for a new-car loan. Home equity loans are running 12-15 percent, depending on how much your borrow and whether the loan is at a fixed or variable rate. A credit union, if you belong, will invarabily give you a better deal.

Some auto dealers are offering cut-rate loans as low as 9.9 percent, but they may apply only to certain cars and require high down payments.

Pay off your credit-card balances. Current returns on your savings aren't keeping pace with credit card interest charges, currently around 18 percent.

If you have a high-interest home mortgage, consider paying it off to take advantage of lower rates. Once as high as 18 percent, rates have dropped to the 11-12 percent range.

"Unless there's a 2 percent spread or greater between what you paid and where rates are now, it's probably not worth it," says Dean Witter Reynolds' Singer. Homeowners also must take into account the impact of "points" or fees on the new loan, pre-payment penalties involved in paying up the old mortgage, title search and related costs.

Kit Cole, president of Cole Financial Group of Kentfield, Calif., says homeowners considering refinancing at 30 years take a close look at a new mortgage with a 15-year amortization. She figures that the difference in cost, excluding points and other fees, is relatively negligible.

Using the example of a $100,000 mortgage amortized over 30 and 15 years at a fixed rate of 12.5 percent, Cole says the monthly payments on the 15-year mortgage would be $165 more than on the 30-year loan — $1,232 against $1,067. "At the end of 15 years on the 30-year mortgage, you will have made $192,000 worth of payments and still have a balance outstanding of $87,000," Cole says. "At the end of 15 years on the other mortgage, your balance would be zero."

If you hold stocks or bonds and you need a loan, try your stockbroker.

Get interest-free loan from IRS

By WILLIAM B. INCE

This is the first of a two articles discussing business operations under the LIFO Inventory Method. LIFO is an acronym which stands for "last-in, first-out." LIFO is an elective method of inventory accounting. Originally LIFO was developed to parallel the flow of specific goods. This becomes inconvenient quickly as the number of items in inventory grows.

LIFO became a viable management tool in 1961, when the IRS issued regulations that allowed computations in terms of a "pool" of inventory dollars. That is, it was no longer necessary to calculate, for example, LIFO for fifty different pipe sizes, rather the investment in $1,000,000 of pipe became the measure. This generally reduced the paper work burden of LIFO and made it manageable.

The strongest logical argument for LIFO (other than the cash savings of cutting taxes) is that it is a more accurate method of reporting the operations of a business since it matches current costs with current revenues. FIFO reporting (first-in, first-out) or averaging may match 1983 revenues with 1981 or 1982 expenses reporting a mixture of operating profits and product holding or investment profits.

Therefore, today — 1983, LIFO may still be beneficial. The matching of 1983 costs (presumably reduced from 1981 and 1982 levels) with lower revenues may actually cause profits to exceed what would be reported on a FIFO basis. Nonetheless, LIFO is generally most beneficial when two conditions exist:

1. Increasing inventory costs — inflations, and
2. High, although not necessarily increasing tax rates.

For example, at a mere seven percent (7%) inflation rate inventory values will double in just ten years. At a ten percent (10%) inflation rate, inventory will double in seven years. Obviously, the best answer is that LIFO may not be wise for your company today. Close scrutiny is appropriate prior to a 1982 or 1983 conversion to LIFO.

The popularity of LIFO skyrocketed in the early 1970's. The primary reason was high inflation rates which created what many have termed "phantom profits." Phantom profits cause significant increases in income taxes. For example, if a company normally sells inventory which costs $100 for $200, it would earn $100 and pay income taxes of approximately $46. Net profit is $54. In periods of high inflation, the inventory may have to be sold for $250 in order to realize the same profit ($100) while still replacing the inventory at its inflated cost of $150. This generates income taxes of $69. In this situation, the company would not be able to replace the inventory at the inflated price of $150, pay income taxes of $69 and earn its normal $54. LIFO negates the effect of inflation by matching current selling prices with current costs of replacing inventory. The company in the example after replacing the inventory for $150 and adopting LIFO would have paid income tax based on the pre-inflation profits of $100 — i.e. $46.

It is not uncommon to read the financial statements of publically held companies and learn that with inventories having a market value of $100 million dollars only $80 million dollars is recorded in the financial statements. The $20 million difference constitutes a LIFO-based reduction of profits and taxable income. This $20 million dollars also results in an interest free loan from the government reducing income taxes by more than $9 million dollars.

One reason that many companies have resisted utilizing the LIFO method of inventory accounting is that there is a significant reduction in reported earnings and profits. In the example previously sited, earnings and profits would be cumulatively reduced by $11 million dollars. As bankers, investors and stock analysts have become increasingly sophisticated, their ability to understand LIFO and its effects on a business has likewise grown. The footnotes to financial statements generally contain sufficient disclosure of the cumulative differential between the cost or market value of inventories and their stated value of LIFO to determine FIFO profits. Statement readers may calculate the amount of unreported profits and tax benefit thereon.

There are a number of bureaucratic limitations and restrictions placed on taxpayers who elect to utilize LIFO. The most significant of these restriction is that the inventory method must be the same for book and tax purposes. That is, earnings on a FIFO basis cannot be reported to bankers or investors when the tax return is to be filed using a LIFO basis.

Bentsen wants to limit imported tubular steel

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Senator Lloyd Bentsen, saying an agreement limiting European exports of tubular steel to the U. S is not enforceable, has introduced legislation to insure compliance with it.

Unfair European competition helped force the shut-down last summer of a tubular steel plant in Lone Star, Texas, Bentsen said, costing more than 4,000 Texans their jobs.

He said though the plant resumed production on the first of the year, over 2,800 workers remained off the job as of the first Monday in April.

"We negotiated an agreement with the Europeans last year on the export of basic steel products," the senator said.

"The problem was that, as they were negotiating, the Europeans were diverting their subsidies and other unfair trade practices to tubular steel. This really hurt."

Bentsen last year wrote Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldridge to warn of the diversions. Baldridge said he would "carefully consider the effect of any proposed settlement on all parts of the domestic industry, including the Texas oil country tubular goods industry."

In October 1982, the U. S. and the European Common Market did sign a letter agreement limiting European tubular steel exports to their 1979-81 average share of annual U. S. consumption.

But, Bentsen said Tuesday that while another agreement signed last year — limiting exports of basic steel products — is enforceable, the letter agreement on tubular steel is not.

The Bentsen bill requires the Secretary of Commerce to monitor the level of European tubular steel exports to this country and, if the agreed level is exceeded, to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the agreement through quotas.

"The Texas pipe and tube industry is among the most efficient in the world. It is doing what we constantly complain American business does not do enough of," Bentsen said.

"One Texas company, Lone Star Steel, has invested over a half billion dollars sice 1975 to build new advanced electric arc furnaces, a continuous caster and extrusion presses. The world's largest draw bench for producing large diameter mechanical tubing is now in operation in Texas.

"In 1982, Lone Star completed a modern liquid iron desulfurization facility and the most modern hot blast cupola in the nation. In the crrent vernacular, these modern Texas steel companies are 'winners'.

"I do not contend that Europe is violating the October 1982 arrangement. I assume they will abide by it. But now that an arrangement has been put in place, I do not believe it ought to be just an agreement to talk," Bentsen said.

"Huge investments and lifetime decisions depend on the reliability of this international arrangement. Unless this agreement is rendered enforceable as a matter of law, the promise it offers is open to quesion," Senator Bentsen said.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

ROUND THE CLOCK CHECKING

It goes without saying that the location of a home is a prime factor in any buying decision. If you've got your eye on a certain one, you've probably seen it many times. This procedure is as it should be. With an investment of that size, there are many things that should be checked and re-checked.

But at what time of day or night did you visit your prospective home? Was it always at about the same hour..at, say, four-thirty in the afternoon? If that's the case, we suggest that you make a point of going there at other times such as early evening, late at night, and even very early in the morning! The reason is simple...things might go on around there at other times that may effect you when you're living there. There may be noises, for example, late at night that could interfere with your family's sleeping.

The point we're trying to make is that when you buy a home you'll be there around the clock. Therefore you should see what the place is like around the clock before buying. Doing this could save you much regret and grief later on, when it'll be too late to do anything.

Airline Child Care Center is convenient to parents of both Midland and Odessa to leave their children. The staff of sixteen plus a full time nutritionist make sure that Airline Child Care Center is "A Truly Caring Environment." For more information, callDirector Sherry Clifton at 694-1686.

A caring environment

When Carl and Bonnie Stewart, owners of Airline Mobile Home Park, expanded the Park to 648 spaces in the Spring of 1982, they felt a quality child care facility was needed to service the working parents living in the Park. A child care center located in the park would also be convenient to those parents living in Midland and working in Odessa, and vice versa.

With this thought in mind, they built a 6000 sq. ft. facility designed especially for children, ages infant to 5 year, plus an afterschool group. All the latest equipment for learning, playing, and teahing was purchased. The motto chosen was "A Truly Caring Environment." The Airline Child Care Center was licensed by the state and opened June 1,1982. The caring attitude is emphasized by director Sherry Clifton and her staff of sixteen, plus a full time nutritionist.

An invaluable asset to the Airline Child Care Center is their Consultant, Jo Miller, who plans and coordinates the weekly themes covering a wide range of subjects. For instance, if the weekly theme is farming and ranching, all activities for that week revolve around that theme; the younger children studying farm animals, etc., while the older ones study the aspects of farming on a much more detailed basis. Exhibits, science projects, art work, music, and games are all coordinated around the weekly theme. The Center tries to plan activities that will enable the children to develop a positive self-concept and a sense of independence while at the same time developing skills that will enrich learning. Many activities are designed to develop the skills needed for reding, language arts, mathematics, and science. A sense of curiosity and awareness of things around them is stressed since children are so impressionable. There are no television sets at the Center-instead children are encouraged to interact through imaginative play. They also love to gather around the piano to sing, play the rhythm instruments, and to participate in creative movement. An added feature the children enjoy is their instruction in both French and Spanish.

Airline Child Care Center's nutritionist plans and serves only healthy, nutritious meals and snacks-- such as the use of whole grain products, natural unsweetened juices, fresh fruits and vegetables, and a minimum of salt and sugar. Lunch is erved by their teacher in each individual room. The teacher eats with the children in order to teach table etiquette and to observe each child's eating habits. She can then communicate to the parents any change in eating habitas or any food problems.

The Child Care Center has two seperate outside playground areas. One side of the building has appropriate equipment for toddlers to two years old. A larger playground on the other side of the building is suitably equipped for older children.

Much of the success of the Airline Child Care Center is due to the dedication and enthusiasm of the staff. They are constantly attending workshops and seminars to improve their knowledge and abilities to better care for and stimulate the children. As previously mentioned, the Center provides the latest in equipment and creative toys with which to work. One of the prime objectives of the Center is to develop the "total child" while giving emphasis to individual needs and talents.

Airline Child Care Center strives for a close liason between the parents and teachers. Reports are sent home and parent conferences are encouraged as well as parnet visits to the classroom. It is not uncommon to see a child crying because "I don't wnat to go home"- he's had such a good time and feels so secure. Parents tell the staff they feel totally comfortable leaving their child, knowing that he will be loved, stimulated, and well cared for during his hours away from home. This is the greatest compliment Airline Child Care Center can receive as it proves that it is really "A Truly Caring Environment."

The Airline Child Care Center is open Monday through Friday, 6:30am to 6:30pm. Director Sherry Clifton would be more than happy to show anyone through the Center whether or not they have children. She may be reached at 694-1686.

Satisfy your hunger at Cattleman's Steak

When you are especially hungry, sometimes it is hard to decide what to do to satisfy your hunger. You usually don't have time to cook if you are very hungry, and yet many places simply cannot satisfy your hunger at a reasonable price. Some of those that do will spoil your appetite by leaving you waiting to be seated for what seems to be forever. But many Midlanders have figured out by now that the lace to go when you are especially hungry is Cattleman's Steak House.

Owners Bill and Pat Henkle have taken every necessary step to insure your satisfaction when you visit Cattleman's Steak House. The pleasant atmosphere and friendly but efficient staff will make you see what a pleasure dining really can be! And the prices are more than reasonable. But for as good as the service is, and as friendly as the staff is, nothing quite compares with the food.

The first step in satisfying your appetite at Cattleman's includes your choice of fried zucchini, fried mushrooms, shrimp cocktail, three sizes of onion ring plates, or even a hot bowl of homemade soup. Several salads are available to start off your meal, and a trip to the salad bar could be a meal in itself.

The steak at Cattleman's comes cooked to perfection, just the way you like it. Dinner steak, club steak, or ribeye are a good way to fill even the hungriest diner. Sirloins are available in almost any size, whether you are just feeding yourself or even up to eight people. T-Bone steak is still ever-popular, and comes in three different sizes. Prime Rib is the selection of many of our diners who prefer the best. To complement your dinner, there is a fine selection of wines and bar drinks.

Cattleman's is still a wonderful place to go even if you are not quite so hungry. Sandwiches include hamburgers and cheeseburgers in two different sizes, jalapeno burgers, grilled cheese, ham and cheese, and barbecue on a bun. Other items available are fried breast of chicken and chicken strips, chicken fried steak, calf fries, hamburger steak (in two sizes), Virginia ham steak, steak fingers, and a special hamburger diet plate. With so many choices to choose from, you may have a hard time deciding!

Seafood at Cattleman's consists of your choice of crab legs, fried shrimp, fried oysters, catfish, frog legs, scallops, flounder, and lobster. Desert simply can't afford to be missed. You love the cheese cake, pecan pie, or apple pie & ice cream. There is a special Kiddie Corner on the menu for your children under 12, with free coke or tea to your kids with their meal.

Hours at Cattleman's Steak House are from 10:00 to 2:00 and 5:00 to 9:30, Monday through Friday, and 5:00 to 10:00 on Saturday. Cattleman's Steak House is closed on Sunday. Air board preparing response to EPA's proposed sanctions in Texas

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Air Control Board staff members are preparing Texas' response to the Environmental Protection Agency over EPA claims a number of areas in the state are in violation of deadlines for complying with Federal Clean Air Act requirements — with hints a legal battle also is being prepared.

ACB is in the process of completing hearings in six cities to receive comments on EPA's proposed sanctions against Texas, which could include loss of highway funds, money for pollution control operations and restrictions in Harris County on new construction.

Basically, ACB's position is that Texas has followed EPA instructions on how to comply and has submitted a plan which was approved by the Federal agency — although the state agency has argued that the actions sought by EPA wouldn't produce some of the results which EPA contended would occur.

The draft response by ACB takes the position that Texas has attempted to comply, and that EPA is attempting to exceed its authority with some of the requirements it is seeking.

Some board members have indicated they're prepared to take the matter to court if EPA attempts to impose sanctions, and an ACB official confirms that "we could be heading that way."

ACB's response is to be filed with EPA by May 5, under an extension of the original comment deadline.

Quick subcommittee action as promised by Financial Institutions Committee Chairman Rep. Bill Coody, D-Weatherford, on legislation by Rep. Bill Messer, D-Belton, providing for continuation of the Texas Credit Union Commission and Texas Credit Union Department under the "sunset" review process.

Messer told the committee the bill doesn't follow the Sunset Advisory Commission draft but incorporates SAC recommendations and "the spirit of sunset."

Major difference in his proposal and that of the SAC, Messer reported, is that his wouldn't require the agency's funds to be placed in the State Treasury, but would leave them under the direct control of the agency.

Financial Insitutions Committee also has under consideration measures for continuation of the State Banking Board and State Finance

House Insurance Committee held a lengthy hearing on proposed legislation (HB 1614 by Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas) relating to commissions on credit insurance.

That legislation as prompted in part by an on-going battle between the State Board of Insurance and automobile dealers over credit insurance commissions, which resulted in a lawsuit against the board — and new legislation in 1981.

Gene Fondren, Texas Automobile Dealers Association, supported the measure, and argued that studies indicate the public believes credit insurance is "a good thing" — with most borrowers desiring to purchase it and believing it's priced fairly.

The measure drew opposition from groups including the Professional Insurance Agents of Texas and the Texas Consumer Association, with all three members of the State Board of Insurance speaking against the measure.

Chairman Lyndon Olson argued the measure was being sought by automobile dealers in an attempt to use credit insurance commissions — which would be set at 35 percent under the bill — to help make up for sagging auto sales.

Olson said the board has attempted to be "equitable" in setting credit insurance commissions and rates — arguing that the board took action to limit commissions from concern that high commissioners were endangering the solvency of some companies.

The bill was sent to subcommittee for additional study.

Rep. Mary Polk, D-El Paso, has introduced two measures dealing with "open-end investment companies," which the measures note are "commonly known as money market funds."

HB 2242 provides for a gross receipts tax of 2.275 percent on the business done in Texas by such funds, while HB 2243 amends provisions of the securities act to assure the money market fund securities aren't exempted from fees charged on new securities issues.

An aide to Polk says figures supplied by money market funds indicate that the funds did $27 billion worth of business in Texas in 1982, so that the proposed tax would result in about $600 million in revenue to the State on that volume of business.

Some limited efforts have been made in past sessions to deal with money market funds, but those attempts have drawn strong opposition from the industry.

However, supporters of the legislation note that with the Legislature facing increased demands for funds, there may be more interested this year than in past session.

Women make dream come true

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal study suggests a young man can still realize the American dream of buying his own castle — if he has a woman to help pay for it and is not interested in having many children.

"The housing industry will lead the nation out of its recession only through the efforts of working wives," says the study.
