In the push-and-pull needs of the 40- to 60-year-old age group of the 1980s, many people are suffering from what psychologists and sociologists call the "sandwich" dilemma.

Iraqi warplanes assault oil terminal

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes attacked an Iranian oil terminal in the Strait of Hormuz today, damaging the world's largest supertanker and setting another ship afire, marine salvage executives said.

U.S. officials meanwhile said a U.S. Marine helicopter crashed Sunday near the U.S. Navy's command ship in the Persian Gulf and one of four crew members was missing.

Iraq did not announce the attacks in the strait, south of the gulf, but said waves of its jet fighter-bombers raided two Iranian-held islands in the northern gulf. Iran's paramilitary Revolutionary Guards reportedly intercepted several freighters in the southern part of the gulf.

Iran and Iraq reported heavy shelling across their border, resulting in the deaths of several civilians.

Both countries have attacked foreign ships in their seven-year war. The U.S. Navy began escorting 11 reflagged Kuwaiti tankers in July to protect them from Iran, which considers Kuwait an ally of Iraq.

Gulf-based salvage executives, speaking on condition of anonymity, said 15 tugboats were fighting flames aboard the 25,879-ton Shining Star. They said Iraqi warplanes hit the Cypriot-flagged petroleum products carrier as it loaded cargo at Iran's Larak island terminal, about 600 miles south of Iraq.

They said the 564,739-ton, Liberian-flagged Seawise Giant, the world's largest oil tanker, had numerous holes in its starboard tanks. There were no reported casualties aboard either ship after 2 p.m. attack.

The executives said a third tanker, the Liberian-registered, 237,311-ton World Admiral, was hit but did not appear badly damaged.

Associated Press Photographer Greg English, riding a helicopter off the coast of the United Arab Emirates, said he saw two Iraqi Mirage fighter-bombers streaking toward the strait, the gulf's only outlet, near the time of the raid.

Iraq's French-made Mirage fighter-bombers have made only a few such long-range forays against Iranian targets in the southern gulf since last summer.

No "hostile activity" was involved when the UH-1 helicopter crashed while conducting routine night operations late Sunday, the Tampa, Fla.-based Navy Central Command said in a statement released in Washington.

Three crew members were rescued from a life raft and were in good condition, and the Navy was using its mine-sweeping helicopters to search for the fourth Marine, a top Navy officer said. The Marines' names were not made public.

The helicopter went down about 30 miles northeast of Bahrain and within about 900 yards of the USS LaSalle, the command said. The helicopter crew was assigned from Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 263, based in Jacksonville, N.C.

U.S.-Canadian trade agreement looks like winner

WASHINGTON (AP) — A sweeping trade agreement to eliminate all tariffs between the United States and Canada should find little opposition in Congress or Canada's parliament, because it puts both countries in a "win-win situation," officials on both sides say.

"It's a carefully crafted package with a good chance of passage," Treasury Secretary James Baker III said at a joint news conference Sunday with Canadian Finance Minister Michael Wilson, who said he was confident both country's legislative branches would approve the pact.

President Reagan hailed the agreement as historic and said it would be beneficial to both nations' economies, create thousands of jobs on both sides of the border and provide a model for other nations seeking to improve trade relations.

Wilson called the proposed pact "a dramatic step toward implementing a new trade relationship" and said it "is a powerful signal against protectionism and for trade liberalization."

"I believe we've achieved a win-win situation," Wilson said. Baker later said he agreed it is a "win-win situation" and that the prospect of huge economic benefits for the United States would help it pass Congress.

But late Sunday, Canadian Press reported that a discrepancy between the Canadian and U.S. synopses of the deal would delay a scheduled Canadian cabinet briefing on the agreement.

Tim Ralfe, spokesman for Canadian Trade Minister Pat Carney, said there were differences of wording between the U.S. and Canadian synopses on how trade disputes would be resolved. It was not clear if the discrepancy would have any impact on the pact.

"The U.S. synopsis made it sound less than binding," Ralfe told Canadian Press, which reported that Canadian officials remained later than planned in Washington to try to settle the problem.

Reagan sent word to Congress just before a midnight Saturday deadline that he would submit the agreement, which was reached by negotiators working up to the 11th hour. U.S. and Canadian officials have been trying for 100 years to reach a broad trading agreement.

With $150 billion in goods and services passing between the two countries last year, the United States and Canada are the world's largest trading partners.

Reagan reiterating his support for Bork

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, rebuffing suggestions that he withdraw the Supreme Court nomination of Robert H. Bork, is embarking on a string of events designed to highlight support for the embattled jurist.

The president and his aides are looking beyond Tuesday's vote on the nomination in the Senate Judiciary Committee and are concentrating instead on winning the nomination on the Senate floor.

Reagan, returning to Washington on Sunday on the eve of today's new Supreme Court session, said "no" when reporters asked if he thought his nomination of the conservative appeals court judge was dead.

Asked whether he was considering withdrawing Bork's name from Senate consideration, Reagan said: "I'm going to continue with his nomination."

Washington attorney Leonard Garment, a friend of Bork, called The New York Times on Sunday to say he was "authorized by Judge Bork to say that he will not ask the president to withdraw his name prior to the full Senate vote on his nomination," the newspaper reported today.

Reporters at the White House also asked Reagan a question dealing with his policies involving the Nicaraguan civil war.

"I'm fighting another war," Reagan quipped, adding, "Bork."

Asked about the president's remarks, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the White House had scheduled a string of "activities" for Reagan to keep the nomination battle moving.

"Every day we'll be doing different things," Fitzwater said, but he refused to be specific.

The spokesman said Reagan had not called any senators over the weekend, but planned to make contact with some this week.

"We're going to fight all the way to the end," Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater pointed to comments by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, who said Reagan intends to press for a vote on Bork by the entire Senate even if the Judiciary Committee fails to recommend the nominee on Tuesday.

Hatch, interviewed on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," said the president will not withdraw Bork's name even if an overwhelming number of senators say they plan to vote against him.

"The president has authorized me to say on this program this morning that he's going to press through to conclusion, to a vote on the Senate floor," Hatch said.

The split among senators who have declared how they will vote on Bork's nomination narrowed Sunday to 32-29 as Sens. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., and Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., announced their opposition.

Moynihan declared his position in comments on television in New York.

Daschle, in remarks prepared for delivery on the Senate floor Tuesday, said Bork was philosophically unacceptable to serve on the court. The remarks were released Sunday by his office in Sioux Falls, S.D.

However, 39 senators have not yet declared either way, according to a poll by The Associated Press.

Hatch, a member of the Judiciary Committee, said he believed the full floor vote could come in two weeks and that Reagan ultimately will succeed in getting Bork on the high court.

"We have to follow through, win or lose, and I think we will win in the end," Hatch said. "I think the American people are going to find out how really important this is."

Forty senators still aren't saying how they'll vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-two senators say they'll vote to confirm Robert H. Bork as a Supreme Court justice, while 28 say they won't and 40 aren't saying either way, a survey by The Associated Press shows.

The anti-Bork forces gained another vote Sunday when Sen. Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., in remarks prepared for delivery on the Senate floor Tuesday, said Bork was philosophically unacceptable to serve on the court.

The remarks were released by his office in Sioux Falls, S.D.

The vote is generally split along party lines, with 30 Republicans and two Democrats favoring the nomination and 26 Democrats and two Republicans opposing it.

However, 40 senators have not yet declared either way.

The Senate has 54 Democrats and 46 Republicans, and a simple majority is needed to confirm a nominee.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on the nomination Tuesday, but a date has not been set for a possible vote in the full Senate.

The Associated Press polled all senators who had not previously taken a public stance.

Republicans who sided with the Democratic opposition were Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Bob Packwood of Oregon. Sens. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., and David Boren, D-Okla., are in the pro-Bork camp.

Sessions readies for FBI post

By VAUGHN HAGERTY
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Dressed for rest, Chief U.S. District Judge William Sessions arrived back here Sunday afternoon to nurse his bleeding ulcer and tie up loose ends before returning to Washington, D.C., to be sworn in Thursday as FBI director.

Sessions

Sessions, wearing a green-plaid flannel shirt and blue slacks, said he was feeling fine after a short stay in George Washington University Hospital where he was admitted after collapsing Wednesday on a plane en route from Dallas to Washington.

Sessions suffers an ulcer in his duodenum, the first part of the small intestine.

He felt the pain after taking aspirin on an empty stomach.

Sessions blamed his hectic schedule since he was picked for the top FBI post, in part, on his malady.

After transferring some records and cleaning out his San Antonio office, Sessions plans to relax before leaving Wednesday for Washington.

Sessions was chosen after a seven-month search and confirmation to replace William Webster, who left the FBI in May to become the head of the CIA, replacing the late William Casey.

Baby girl born 14 hours after weekend traffic accident

FORT WORTH (AP) — The impact from a traffic accident threw a woman through a car's rear window and onto the bed of a pickup but 14 hours later she gave birth to a 5-pound, 13-ounce baby girl.

Geneva Crow, 25, of Azle, and her daughter, Kayla, born three or four weeks premature, both were in good condition today at Harris Memorial Hospital, hospital spokesman Tom Peck said.

Ms. Crow, who suffered a back injury in the accident, had her baby delivered by Caeserean section Saturday morning, hospital spokeswoman Gimchoo Quah said. The mother was transferred from intensive care to the maternity ward Sunday, Peck said.

Authorities said the driver of a car involved in the three-vehicle accident Friday was charged with involuntary manslaughter and driving while intoxicated. A passenger in that car died, while Ms. Crow's mother, son, and two sisters were injured in the crash, police said.

Ms. Quah said doctors peformed the Caeserean to save the life of the baby.

"She had to have the baby because of the accident, because the baby would have gone into distress," she told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

James Clark, 19, of Fort Worth, was charged with involuntary manslaughter and DWI and held in Tarrant County Jail on bonds of $11,000, said Fort Worth police officer David Bowen. He said a passenger in Clark's car, Kenneth Steiner, 23, of Azle, was killed.

The accident happened when a car used the right shoulder of the northbound lanes to pass a pickup truck, said officer P. Hyder. The car tried to return to the roadway but clipped the truck, which veered into the path of a northbound Toyota carrying Ms. Crow and her family, he said.

Hyder said the car overturned in the northbound lanes. The pickup crossed the media and stopped in the southbound lanes, while the Toyota overturned twice and came to rest upright behind the pickup, he said.

The driver of the pickup was not injured.

Ms. Crow, who was riding in the back seat of the Toyota, was thrown through the rear window when it flipped over, said Hyder.

He said the glass popped out of the rear window in one piece as she went through it.

"It wouldn't have been so bad if they hadn't all been in the same car," said Jack McLain, Ms. Crow's father.

Early snowfall, late heat wave hit areas of nation

Associated Press

Temperatures dipped into the 30s as far south as Alabama today, while the Northeast dug out from nearly 20 inches of snow in a sudden storm that sent trees crashing into cars, homes and power lines, and killed at least six.

The Northeast's earliest snowfall in a century dropped wet snow on autumn leaves, causing limbs to crack in the path of travelers who thought they were going to view changing foliage and knocking out power to 900,000 customers. And, with temperatures forecast to rise again, officials worried about flooding from melting snow.

The weather wasn't any more fall-like in California, where record triple-digit heat sent a million people to the beach over the weekend. Many already suffered from a lack of air conditioning as power was temporarily knocked out Sunday in parts of the Los Angeles area by the most powerful aftershock to Thursday's severe earthquake.

The heat was blamed for the death of 2-year-old Karen Magee, who suffocated Saturday after she entered the family car and was trapped for almost an hour in stifling temperatures, El Monte Police Officer Anthony Alvarez said Sunday.

Six hikers near Tannersville, N.Y., were unaccounted for this morning, but authorities located seven Boy Scouts who were camping at nearby Shoe's Lake and had been feared missing, said Hamilton Topping, a Forest Ranger with the N.Y. State Dept. of Environmental Conservation in Tannersville.

"They found the Boy Scouts starting out, but they were having a lot of trouble and so with snowmobiles the rangers helped them out and they were taken out and were all safe probably by about eight o'clock last night," he said.

"We have two cars at one of the trailheads and six people who signed in from a New Jersey hiking club. They haven't come out of the woods yet so we have to start another search to locate them."

Two deaths attributed to the storm occurred in Connecticut, where a large tree limb crushed the roof of a car on Route 7 in Canaan, police said. Falling trees also killed a man leaving a campground in Copake, N.Y., and a man driving a pickup truck in Chatham, N.Y.

The storm was also blamed for two deaths in Massachusetts. North Adams police said a Boston man was electrocuted when he apparently grabbed a downed power line lying in the snow. In Becket, a 54-year-old woman was killed in a two-car crash attributed to snow-slickened roadways.

Hundreds of people spent the night in emergency shelters as more than 150,000 customers in New York's Albany area, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Vermont remained without power today, officials said. Temperatures were forecast to rise above freezing, a comfort to those without heat, but a danger to flood-prone valleys.

"The only thing I worry about is we might get a lot of rapid melting with that snow," said National Weather Service forecaster Joe Luisi in Montpelier, Vt. "It's going to be a mess."

A Canadian cold air mass, which brought the snow by clashing with a moist low-pressure system, lingered over the region today.

Freeze and frost warnings were in effect overnight for areas as far south as South Carolina.

A separate front brought 38-degree temperatures today to Birmingham, Ala., breaking the 19-year-old record of 40 degrees. The thermometer registered 39 degrees today in Meridian, Miss., tying the 13-year-old record low for the date.

In Albany, N.Y., many without heat jammed all-night restaurants.

"The restaurant has been packed most of the night," Tammi Keiser, who works at a Denny's restaurant, said early today. "Now it's slowed down, but all night, we've had like 70 people waiting at the door, just to get in out of the cold, because nobody had heat, nobody could cook any food, and there were very few restaurants open."

In California, temperatures topped the 100-degree mark before noon Sunday, with Los Angeles peaking at 108 for a second-consecutive day and surpassing the record of 100 degrees set in 1933.

An estimated 410,000 people showed up at beaches in Los Angeles County on Saturday, and lifeguards said Sunday's crowds swelled to more than 675,000. But there was little relief on the sizzling sand, as temperatures hit 105 in Long Beach, 103 in Santa Barbara, 93 in Santa Monica and 92 in Newport Beach.

The heat wave extended into the San Francisco Bay area, where a scorching 100 on Sunday broke the 1907 record of 90 degrees for the date.

Forecasters had not predicted what they said turned out to be New England's most severe snowstorm recorded this early in a century.

The snow began falling Saturday evening and intensified overnight. The heaviest snowfalls were almost 20 inches at East Jewett, N.Y., in the Catskill Mountains, 18 inches at the nearby Hunter Mountain ski resort and 15 inches at Slide Mountain. Bromley Mountain in southern Vermont was also hit with 18 inches.

From about 8 a.m. to 9 a.m. it was unsafe to go outside in Columbia County, east of Albany, said Martin Tuczinski, director of emergency management.

"It was just like rifles — the way the limbs were cracking like twigs. It's worse than any hurricane," said Tuczinski.

Virtually all roads in Columbia and neighboring Dutchess County were closed. Shelters were set up for stranded weekend travelers, and prison inmates were enlisted to help with the cleanup.

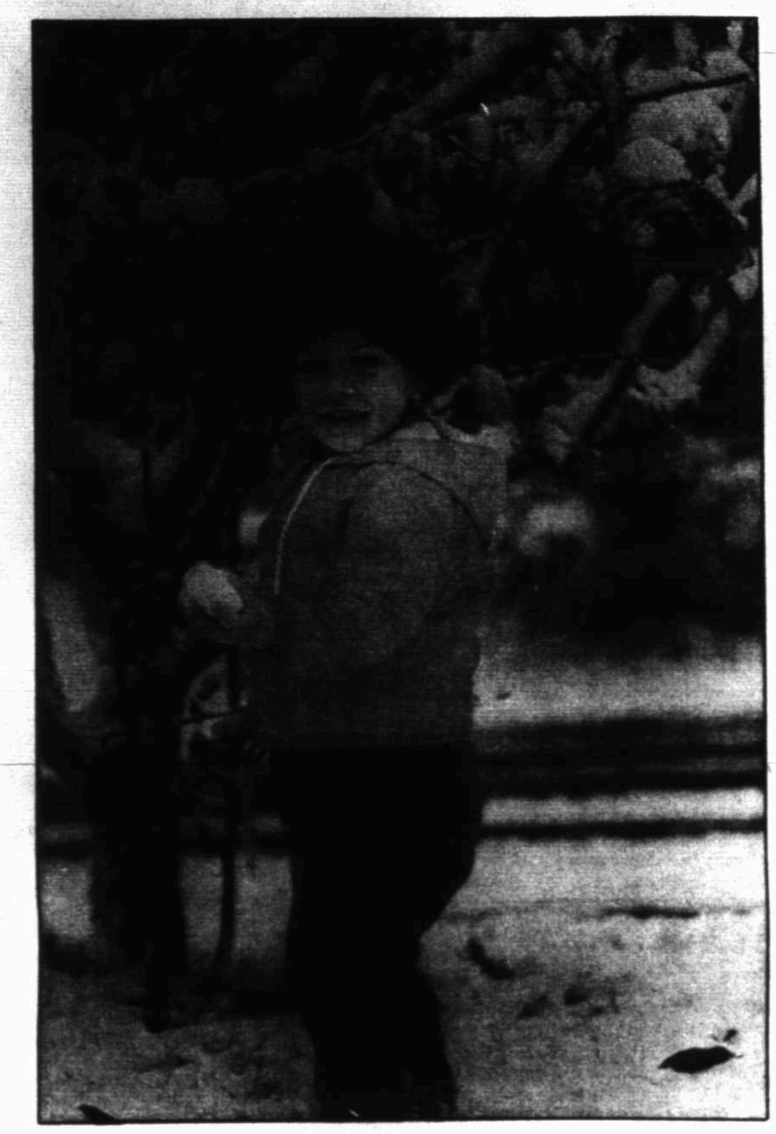

In Massachusetts, states of emergency were declared in several Berkshire County towns, including Pittsfield, North Adams and Williamstown, where the civil defense and all off-duty police and firefighters were called in.

Snow also fell in mountains as far south as the Carolinas.

TRADE

The agreement, which eliminates some tariffs immediately and others over five or 10 years, affects all imports and exports between the two nations. Motor vehicles or parts account for 36 percent of all U.S. imports from Canada and 40 percent of U.S. exports to Canada.

A summary released by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter's office said, "The primary objective of the FTA (free trade agreement) is the eventual elimination of tariff and non-tariff trade barriers."

It gave these details of the agreement:

— Existing laws dealing with subsidies and dumping of inexpensive foreign merchandise in either country will remain. But special binational panels will be set up to settle appeals of duty decisions.

— On automobiles, Canada immediately eliminates a tariff subsidy program linked to export performance or local production. A Canadian embargo on used cars also will be scrapped.

— All agricultural tariffs are to be eliminated within 10 years, with more access to Canadian markets for U. S. farm products and the conditional elimination of Canadian import licenses for U.S. wheat, barley, oats and grain products. The two countries would exempt each other from meat import laws.

— Virtually all existing import and export restrictions are eliminated, but with procedures set up to lessen the effects on specific industries.

— Free and open energy trade is established, with Canadian access to oil from Alaska's north slope, "subject to certain conditions."

— Discriminatory pricing of alcoholic beverages in Canada is phased out.

— Many restrictions that require government agencies to buy only products made within the respective country are eliminated on both sides.

— Citizens of each country providing services in the other would be treated equal to the country's own citizens in all new measures affecting services.

— Border crossings for business purposes are made easier.

Baker characterized the pact as "an agreement in principle. We still have to cross some t's and dot some i's. We are continuing to clean up loose ends."

Reagan telephoned Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney on Sunday afternoon after returning from his weekend at Camp David, Md., according to White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Reagan "congratulated him on the agreement and noted that the negotiations had gone down to the wire, but both teams had shown good faith in bargaining and produced a good agreement," Fitzwater said.

"I congratulate Prime Minister Mulroney for his courage and foresight in seeking this free trade area," Reagan's statement said. "It will strengthen the bonds between our nations and improve the economic performance and competitiveness of both countries."

Congress now has 90 days to try to influence the shape of a final agreement, which Reagan must present to lawmakers by Jan. 3.

Congress would have 60 working days to accept or reject the pact without amendment. Officials expect a final vote will not take place until late March or April.

The procedure in Canada for dealing with the pact remains unresolved. International trade is a federal responsibility, but the premiers of the various provinces have made it clear they want to see the final pact before committing themselves.

GULF

It was the second accident involving a U.S. helicopter flying off the LaSalle since the escort operation began.

On July 30, a Navy SH-3G courier helicopter hit the stern of the 13,600-ton command ship during a routine landing approach, killing four of the nine people aboard.

Rear Admiral Harold J. Bernsen, commander of the U.S. Navy's Middle East Force, said in an interview in Manama today that the pilots of the UH-1 lost control after the aircraft began "vibrating."

He said the Sea Stallion mine sweepers, based aboard the assault carrier Guadalcanal, would use their sonar gear to pinpoint the wreckage, which would then be salvaged.

Forty-three Americans have been confirmed killed since the start of the U.S. naval buildup in the gulf region earlier this year.

They include 37 killed May 17 when the missile frigate Stark was hit by missiles fired from an Iraqi fighter-bomber, in what Iraq and Washington later said was a mistaken attack. Two airmen died when a U.S. fighter plane crashed into the Arabian Sea in September.

Iraq's military command said large numbers of Iraqi warplanes staged "stormy strikes" on Iranian oil fields on the islands of Cyrus and Farsi and "violently demolished the targets."

Farsi, a tiny island about 120 miles south of Kuwait, has a small oil facility but is better known as a base for Iran's Revolutionary Guards' hit-and-run speedboat raids against shipping. Cyrus is a small island about 90 miles east of Kuwait.

Guards units, reportedly using powered inflatable dinghies, boarded the Danish freighter Chastine Maersk within territorial waters of the United Arab Emirates, gulf-based maritime salvage executives reported. The executives spoke on condition of anonymity.

There was no word on whether the 25,007-ton container ship was then allowed to proceed, as is usually the case.

Shipping sources said the Iranians also intercepted, but not boarded, some of nine Japan-flagged or Japanese-crewed vessels moving out of the gulf in an emergency convoy organized by the Japan Shipowners Association.

The convoy was designed to protect the Japanese ships following an earlier, five-day series of attacks that included assaults on two Japan-owned tankers.

IRNA said Iraqi shelling of the port cities of Abadan and Khorramshahr, near the Iraqi border, wounded a "number" of civilians over the weekend.

Iraq said today 12 civilians were killed in Iranian artillery shelling of border cities overnight, raising the death toll to 31 fatalities in bombardments in 24 hours.

Copter crew identified

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Marine helicopter returning to the USS LaSalle after a routine night operations flight crashed in the Persian Gulf and one of the four crew members was missing early today, the U.S. the Central Command reported.

The crash of the UH-1 helicopter occurred late Sunday, and did not involve any "hostile activity" in the war-torn gulf region, the Tampa, Fla.-based unified command said in a statement released in Washington.

The command identified the missing man as Marine Maj. Daniel S. Haworth, 34, of New Castle, Del. It was not immediately clear whether Haworth was the pilot or co-pilot of the aircraft.

The three survivors were identified as 1st Lt. Robert M. Melzer, 26, of Prince Georges County, Md., Cpl. Michael D. Gauthier, 21, of Hampton County, Mass., and Lance Cpl. Gregory M. Bentley, 20, of Douglas, Ga. All three were reported in good condition.

Teen who hired father's killer given 6-month term

RIVERHEAD, N.Y. (AP) — An 18-year-old who admitted hiring a classmate to kill her abusive father was sentenced today to six months in prison.

Cheryl Pierson's case became symbolic of a national problem of abused children following pre-sentencing hearings in which she described years of physical and sexual abuse.

Miss Pierson fainted as the judge announced that although she was eligible for youthful offender status, he was sentencing her to the jail term for manslaughter.

As Justice Harvey Sherman spoke, a sobbing Miss Pierson fell back and slumped into her chair. Family members and friends in the courtroom, who at first had sighed with relief as the judge sentenced her to five years' probation, broke into cries when he announced that she would be jailed for six months.

James Pierson, a 42-year-old electrician, was found dead Feb. 5, 1986, on the driveway of his home, where he was gunned down by Sean Pica, 19.

Miss Pierson testified she was physically and sexually abused by her father for more than four years, and hired Pica because she suspected her father was about to start an incestuous relationship with her then 8-year-old sister, JoAnn.

Pica was sentenced to eight to 24 years in prison after pleading guilty to manslaughter. Miss Pierson also pleaded guilty to manslaughter, heading off a trial that women's groups, defense lawyers and parents' organizations had expected to be an important test of what constitutes justifiable homicide.

Son says Bork victim of 'vicious slander'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The son of embattled Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork says his father has become the subject of "vicious slander" advanced by special interest groups out to make him look like a "crazed Neanderthal."

Robert H. Bork Jr., in a column in today's editions of The Washington Post, writes that his family "has endured a relentless and bitter campaign against my father, a campaign designed and executed for the purpose of instilling fear in the souls of all who would listen."

The younger Bork, who is on leave from his job as an associate editor at U.S. News & World Report, wrote that his father has been unfairly portrayed "as some villanous ideologue, a racist, and a sexist."

"For his opponents the more he is made to look like a crazed Neanderthal, the better for them," the son wrote. "Indeed, one particularly ugly rumor spread by his opponents to injure him is that my stepmother, Mary Ellen, doesn't believe that the Holocaust happened."

The younger Bork said that while everyone knows the charges are untrue, they nevertheless are dangerous because "in Washington, if a rumor is sustained long enough, it eventually spills into the press and becomes credible. And it becomes damning."

He said of the campaign against his father: "These characterizations, these rumors are vicous slander and they hurt."

The younger Bork said "special-interest groups, ranging from the American Civil Liberties Union to the National Organization for Women, would like you to know an evil caricature of Robert Bork Sr. I know a different picture."

Bork said his father "never has harbored any biases or prejudices," successful fought for the hiring of an attorney at his Chicago law firm who had been opposed by the senior partners because he was Jewish, and came to the aid of a black Justice Department lawyer who claimed she was being excluded from meetings by her white male colleagues.

The younger Bork added that his father's record as solicitor general and as a federal judge proves him to be an opponent of discrimination on the basis of sex or race.

"The special-interest groups are aware of many of these examples and many others where my father reached out personally and professionally to help people," he wrote. "But you don't hear them talking about these things. They know that the only way to kill his confirmation is to ignore the man, his sensivity — to obscure his record with lies and distortions and assassinate his character."

The younger Bork concluded by expressing the wish "that the process of judging my father will be characterized as having been fair. Right now, I do not believe that it is. I remain hopeful."

Major newspapers opposing Bork's confirmation

Associated Press

The New York Times and The Washington Post in editorials today both opposed Senate confirmation of Judge Robert H. Bork to fill a vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court.

Both newspapers argued that Bork's interpretation of the Constitution is too narrow.

Last week, the Los Angeles Times came out against Bork's confirmation.

Bork's Constitution "is smaller and more closed than the living document Americans celebrate in this its bicentennial year," The New York Times editorial said.

The Post's editorialists said they had been disposed to support Bork's confirmation "even though his political inclinations are far from our own." But after studying testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Post said, "a preponderance of powerful reasons to support Judge Bork was fatally undermined by a couple of even more powerful and critical reservations ...."

Salvadoran rebels, Duarte continue talks

Representatives of the FMLN and the FDR, two Salvadoran rebel groups, arrive from Panama at El Salvador International Airport for a round of peace talks which began Sunday. From left the representatives are Jorge "Jonas" Melendez, Shafick Handal, Guillermo Ungo, Rube Zamora and Hector Oqueli Coloindres.

WORLD

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — President Jose Napoleon Duarte and leftist Salvadoran rebels, holding their first peace talks in three years, agreed to extend their negotiations today.

The talks were "going well" and the atmosphere was one of "great frankness and great seriousness," said Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Church, which is mediating the talks.

Negotiations in 1984 on ending the 8-year-old war between the U.S.-backed government and the insurgents ended in deadlock.

Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador, said the two sides spent more than six hours Sunday discussing the first of four points on the agenda. They agreed to meet again today, he said.

The auxiliary bishop declined to elaborate on the agenda. Both delegations, however, made it clear going into the talks that they were far apart on major issues.

The rebels are insisting, as they have for years, on participating in a new, provisional government that would rule until new elections could be held. They also want their army incorporated into the Salvadoran armed forces.

But Duarte has said the rebels must lay down their arms before their demands can be discussed.

El Salvador's civil war has shattered the country's economy and cost about 65,000 lives.

The government and the rebels agreed to the talks after Duarte and the presidents of four other Central American nations signed a peace plan aimed at ending regional conflicts.

The negotiations started nearly five hours behind schedule Sunday because the insurgent delegation arrived late. The rebels accused the Salvadoran army of causing the delay by impeding travel of two of their representatives.

The talks were at the Vatican Embassy, a two-story building in an upper-class residential area on tne capital's east side.

The delegates ate lunch in the embassy, then moved to a small conference room and took their places at a long table — eight rebels on one side, Duarte and six other government representatives on the other.

Duarte opened the talks with a plea that both sides "forgive and forget" the inhumanities of the war. He said the conflict "had a historical justification that has now disappeared."

The president called on the rebels to take "a path of faith and hope on which we can advance on the long march to reconciliation — to justice, to liberty, to democracy and to peace."

But, as he has in the past, Duarte said negotiations would have to be conducted within the framework of El Salvador's constitution. The rebels say the constitution should be altered to permit them a share of power in the government.

Duarte aides distributed the president's statement to reporters shortly after the meeting began.

In announcing their agreement to keep talking, both sides said they would make no further declarations to the press as long as the negotiations were in progress.

Several thousand demonstrators began gathering in a large open field about a block from the Vatican mission hours before the talks began.

Nicaragua's interior minister says 400 rebels 'joined path to peace'

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Interior Minister Tomas Borge said Saturday 400 rebels agreed to abandon their fight against the Sandinista government and "joined the path to peace," the government's radio reported.

Borge said the 400-member, fully armed unit was commanded by a guerrilla chief named Uriel Vanegas but did not identify it further, the Voice of Nicaragua radio reported.

He made the announcement in the northeastern Atlantic coast town of Puerto Cabezas, a center of Indian resistance to the leftist Sandinista government.

Sandinista military sources told The Associated Press the unit consisted mostly of Indian resistance fighters who allied themselves two years ago with the Nicaraguan Democratic Force or FDN, the main, U.S.-backed Contra rebel army. It was not clear if the unit was still part of the Contras.

A long-time Indian resistance leader, Steadman Fagoth, confirmed the report in an interview in Honduras and said the Indians "had committed themselves along with the Sandinistas to achieving peace in Nicaragua.

Fagoth, during a brief stop in Tegucigalpa on his way to Miami, said Indian leaders "are going to talk with the Sandinistas starting now. They don't want the war any more."

Also Saturday, a government official said Contra rebels used explosives and M-79 rockets to topple a microwave repeating station in northern Nicaragua, interrupting telephone service in scattered parts of Managua, Panama, Central America and Mexico.

Lt Col Leopoldo Rivas Alfar, minister of telecommunications and postal service, said two government soldiers were killed in the attack late Friday.

Service was restored by Saturday morning via an international satellite system but the discovery of grenades in the wreckage was slowing down repairs to the tower, he said.

Borge said it was the first rebel group to decide as a unit to observe the peace process contained in a regional peace plan signed Aug. 7 by the five Central American presidents, according to a report from the official New Nicaragua news agency read over Voice of Nicaragua.

The peace plan in part calls for amnesty for insurgents who agree to end their battles. Last week the Interior Ministry said 335 rebels, most from the central part of Nicaragua, had asked for amnesty.

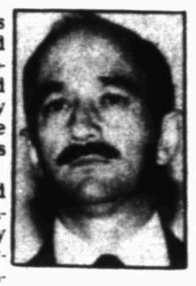

"We want to announce to the Nicaraguan people and to the world that a complete regional command of 400 men in arms has joined the path to peace and they are ready to fight in defense of the fatherland," Borge said.

The New Nicaragua agency identified the unit as the Bruno Gabriel Peralta Operational Command. It said the unit last week received the most recent air-drop of arms and supplies made to rebels fighting inside Nicaragua.

The northeastern Nueva Guinea region is one of three areas in northern Nicaragua where the Sandinistas plan to begin a one-month, unilateral cease-fire Tuesday.

President Daniel Ortega said Wednesday that Sandinista troops would withdraw the areas, which also include parts of Nueva Segovia and Jinotega provinces, because it was in the government's "interest to prevent further bloodshed."

Ruling Mexican party nominates technocrat to follow de la Madrid

Salinas de Gortari

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Carlos Salinas de Gortari, considered the architect of Mexico's economic policy, was nominated Sunday by the governing party as its presidential candidate, the assured winner in next July's election.

The announcement ended months of speculation throughout the country. It was made by the national chairman of the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), Jorge de la Vega, in a room filled with reporters and spectators.

Within minutes of the announcement, Salinas de Gortari left his home in a wealthy section of the city and boarded a waiting bus to go to PRI headquarters for his acceptance speech. Leaning outside a window, he smiled and waved at the throng of onlookers.

Arriving at the headquarters, he was guided by bodyguards through a cheering crowd of tens of thousands of people, making his way through a blizzard of flying confetti in the red, white and green national colors. Supporters held banners and signs representing all sectors of the party — peasants, labor and business.

The decision to nominate Salinas de Gortari, who holds a doctorate in economics from Harvard, was a closely held secret until the last minute. By tradition, he is the man President Miguel de la Madrid decided he wanted to succeed him when his term ends next year.

There is little doubt Salinas de Gortari will be elected to a six-year term starting Dec. 1, 1988. Since its inception in 1929, the PRI has not lost one presidential, senatorial or gubernatorial election in any of Mexico's 31 states.

Short, slim and balding, the 39-year-old Salinas de Gortari is the youngest of six Cabinet members named earlier by the PRI as leading possibilities for the party's presidential nomination.

Salinas de Gortari has been described as an efficient technocrat, who rose in the government and party ranks through knowledge, study and hard work. He never held an elected post — but neither did the three previous presidents.

He has been secretary of budget and programming during the present administration, which began its term in December 1982. He held the same job that de la Madrid had before becoming president.

Salinas de Gortari was credited with formulating most of Mexico's present economic policy, aimed at overcoming a huge crisis that has been buffeting the country since international oil prices first fell in 1982.

Tibetan Buddhist monks ask U.N. to back independence

LHASA, Tibet (AP) — Buddhist monks at Tibet's three leading monasteries issued a statement today asking the United Nations to support their call for independence, and the death toll from a pro-independence demonstration rose to 12.

"We Tibetans have asked the Chinese who have occupied our country to leave," said the statement issued by religious leaders at the Sera, Ganden and Drepung monasteries.

Madlen Huber, a Swiss tourist who arrived today in Chengdu, Sichuan province, which borders Tibet, said she saw two jets arrive at the Lhasa airport Sunday night and a third this morning. Each carried at least 100 Chinese security troops, she said.

Another tourist, Virginia Burkhead of Charlotte, N.C., also reported seeing a planeload of troops arrive in Lhasa today.

Plainclothes police patrolled Lhasa today and workmen began razing the ruins of the police station in the central Jokhang Temple square. Protesters on Thursday burned and looted the station and stoned police. A smaller independence demonstration took place Sept. 27.

The monks' statement read: "The Chinese have taken away our human rights for 30 years but the Tibetans will continue to forever recognize (the) Dalai Lama as leader.

"The U.N. should support our just cause and we hope the lovers of human rights will come to Tibet to see for themselves," said the statement, written in Tibetan. A copy of it was obtained by The Associated Press and translated by Tibetan sources.

The Dalai Lama was Tibet's civil and religious leader until China annexed the remote Himalayan region in 1950, enforcing a centuries-old territorial claim. The Dalai Lama fled in 1959 after a failed uprising by his supporters, and has since lived in India.

Posters sent by the exiled Tibetan community in India were posted in Lhasa early today and torn down shortly after by plainclothes police. The posters, written in Chinese, urged Tibetans to continue their struggle for independence.

The monks' statement said the Sept. 27 demonstration, in which 21 monks and five others shouted slogans and marched into a police cordon, had been planned by monks from the Sera monastery.

Sera monks made up the majority of those killed, wounded and arrested in Thursday's protest, which involved at least 2,000 people.

Chinese police said six police were killed in Thursday's protest.

But Western physicians visiting Lhasa as tourists said victims included an 8-year-old boy shot in the back, a 25-year-old man shot in the chest, a 16-year-old boy shot in the face and a monk shot by officers in the police station. They said two other monks were killed but did not give details.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Sputnik remembered

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, observing the 30th anniversary of the launch of Sputnik, praised the launch as proof of Soviet potential and a beacon for future peaceful cooperation in outer space.

A three-day conference of about 600 Soviet and foreign scientists focusing on the Oct. 4, 1957, launch of the first artificial satellite wrapped up Sunday in Moscow.

Scientists at the conference, called "Cooperation in Space in the Name of Peace on Earth," discussed cooperation in a dozen major space projects, many of them aimed at Mars.

Newspapers printed long accounts of the development and launch of Sputnik, and television showed a documentary film.

The launch of the 184-pound satellite into orbit 560 miles above Earth shocked Americans and started the race for space.

Sputnik circled the earth every 96.2 minutes, emitting a monotonous beep.

Shamir opposes meeting

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's right-wing Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir held a rare meeting Sunday with West Bank Palestinian leaders, who said he reiterated his opposition to a proposed international peace conference backed by the United States.

Shamir urged the Palestinians to "use your influence and connections" to draw Jordan into bilateral negotiations with Israel instead, participants said.

Shamir aides called the hourlong meeting at the prime minister's office a "routine informal encounter." But it was the only publicized meeting between the leader of the right-wing Likud bloc and a group of Palestinians since Shamir took office a year ago.

The encounter comes before a planned visit by U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz later this month. Shultz, who supports an international conference, is scheduled to visit Israel and possibly Egypt and Jordan in what his aides have described as an effort "to give the peace process a spark of momentum."

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, who has long championed the conference, has said he hopes the Shultz visit will clear the way for the plan. Israel television quoted aides to Peres as saying Sunday they were sure Shultz was coming "to convince Shamir."

Will Soviets release pilot?

LONDON (AP) — Mathias Rust, the 19-year-old West German pilot sentenced to four years in a labor camp for landing his plane at Red Square, will be released and sent home to Hamburg next month, the Sunday Express reported.

It quoted unidentified Soviet government sources as saying Rust would be freed on Nov. 7, the 70th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Quake-shaken Californians face more aftershocks

NATION

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Quake-jittered residents got another aftershock today, after the most powerful one that followed last week's severe earthquake killed at least one person, injured 200, and shattered buildings and nerves.

Hundreds of frightened residents fled their damaged homes and stayed outdoors, refusing to enter structures, as panic spread after Sunday's predawn aftershock, the 22nd measuring above 3 on the Richter scale since Thursday's magnitude 6.1 temblor.

Within 3½ hours of Sunday's big aftershock, three more above magnitude 3 on the Richter scale shook the area.

An aftershock measuring 3.4 was recorded at 12:05 a.m. today, said Robert Finn, spokesman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. There were no immediate reports of damage, and a police dispatcher said it triggered few calls.

"Psychologically, these people are in pieces. They were already upset and this has really done them in," said Frank Sapien, a Red Cross shelter director in Whittier. "I think a lot of the people are in some state of shock."

At least 1,100 people spent Sunday night in shelters, said Red Cross spokesman Ralph Wright.

One woman died of a heart attack suffered moments after Sunday's aftershock, bringing the earthquake death toll to seven, officials said. Damage since Thursday's quake has been estimated at $108 million.

The magnitude 5.5 aftershock, centered 10 miles northeast of downtown Rosemead, rumbled through Southern California at 3:59 a.m. It was felt in a wide area extending 100 miles from the epicenter.

The greatest damage was in San Gabriel, where a bell tower crashed into the 1,500-seat Civic Auditorium, causing at least $500,000 in damage, officials said.

In suburban Whittier, which sustained most of the damage Thursday, police cordoned off a large part of the city's badly damaged downtown business district. Thirty businesses and about 800 homes were damaged last week.

Many Southern Californians ran from their homes as the earth began to shake Sunday.

"All the lights went out. It felt like the sky was falling. I thought the whole house was coming down," said Marta Jimenez of suburban Montebello.

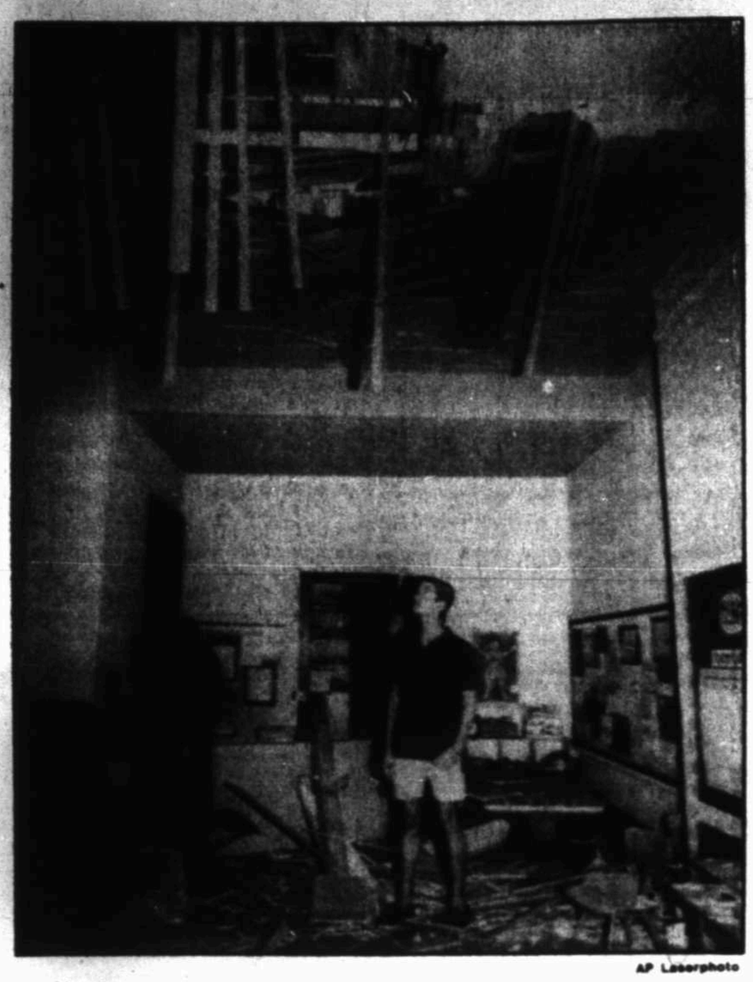

She and her husband moved a mattress and cushions onto their lawn and set up camp, listening to a portable radio. Many neighbors did the same.

"You never know when there will be another one," said Dora Nunes.

Craig Mathew of Thousand Oaks in Ventura County was roused from sleep when it hit.

"I felt one jolt at the beginning, then a steady rock-and-rolling, like last time," he recalled. "I said, 'Here we go again.'"

South Californians should expect even more aftershocks, possibly for weeks, said Don Kelly of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Ground movement above 3.0 on Richter scale

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. — A strong predawn aftershock that jolted Southern Californians awake was by far the largest since the region was rocked by a major earthquake four days ago.

Sunday morning's nerve-wracking temblor, which measured 5.5 on the Richter scale of ground movement according to the California Institute of Technology, was the 22nd to measure 3.0 or more since the first quake Thursday.

Three other aftershocks above magnitude 3 followed within 3½ hours of the 5.5 aftershock Sunday, bringing the total to 25.

The main earthquake measured 6.1 on the Richter scale.

An aftershock is an earthquake that occurs on the same fault as the initial temblor, either on the same section of the fault or extending the rupture within the earth, said Kate Hutton, a seismologist at the Cal Tech.

Hutton said aftershocks occur because "the earth is accomodating the original movement" from the main quake, shifting and sliding to readjust in response to changes in stress patterns underground.

The first 19 aftershocks with Richter readings of 3 or more occurred within six hours of Thursday's main quake. No aftershocks of that size occurred from mid-afternoon Thursday until late Saturday afternoon, and only two occurred later Saturday.

But the lull ended at 3:59 a.m Sunday when the biggest aftershock of the sequence jarred millions of Southern Californians from their sleep. The U.S. Geological Survey in Boulder, Colo., reported the quake at 5.3, a slightly lower Richter magnitude than Cal Tech's calculation.

"The unusual thing about this aftershock sequence is to have it slow down so quickly and then be punctuated by this large aftershock," Hutton said. "There's a lot of variety in aftershocks. But I don't think it tells us anything."

She saidthe region's residents could expect more tremors but there was no statistical basis for predicting how big they might be, although aftershocks are almost always smaller than the original quake.

"Although it is impossible to predict when aftershocks will occur, they tend to decrease in magnitude and frequency with time," said Don Kelly, public affairs officer at the U.S. Geological Survey in Washington.

Sunday's quake was centered in Rosemead, eight miles due east of downtown Los Angeles, and about two miles west of Thursday's temblor.

Like the original quake, Sunday's aftershock occurred along a strand of the Whittier Fault, which stretches roughly 30 miles.

NATION IN BRIEF

Americans don't favor pullout of U.S. business

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite South Africa's continued refusal to dismantle apartheid, most Americans still do not support a pullout of U.S. businesses to protest the racially discriminatory policies, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

Only 34 percent of the 1,223 respondents in the nationwide telephone poll said U.S. businesses should stop investing or doing business in South Africa, while 49 percent opposed such action. The rest, 17 percent, were unsure.

When the same question was asked in a Media General-AP poll two years ago, 28 percent supported a pullout, 50 percent opposed a withdrawal, and 22 percent were unsure.

Blacks were more likely than whites to support withdrawal from South Africa. Forty percent of blacks said U.S. businesses should get out of the country, compared with one-third of whites. Only 37 percent of blacks said businesses should stay, compared with 51 percent of whites.

Violent crime declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rate of violent crime dropped 6.3 percent last year compared with 1985, the government says in a new report, but some experts say a five-year decline in crime trends appears to be bottoming out.

Americans were victimized by 34.1 million crimes in 1986, a decline of three-quarters of a million in one year, the Bureau of Justice Statistics said in a report released Sunday.

The number of crimes has declined more than 7 million from 41.5 million in the peak year, 1981. However, in the first three years of the decline, the number of crimes fell by nearly 6 million.

The recent slowdown in the decline may signify that a turnaround is at hand, said Alfred Blumstein, dean of the school of urban and public affairs at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Criminologists say the five-year downward trend is due to the aging of the Baby Boom generation, the huge group of people born from 1946 to about 1960, out of the most crime-prone group from ages 15 to 24.

Cocaine trial begins

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Carlos Lehder Rivas, accused of being one of the top three importers of cocaine, goes on trial with prosecutors vowing to expose the exploits of a power-hungry, neo-Nazi billionaire.

Jury selection was scheduled to begin today, more than eight months after Lehder's dramatic capture and extradition from Colombia, with prosecutors and defense attorneys sorting through a pool of more than 300 people.

Defense attorneys said it may take more than than a week to seat a jury.

Lehder was arrested Feb. 4 following a shootout with Colombian troops at a jungle mansion. He was whisked to the United States to stand trial on an 11-count indictment filed in Jacksonville in 1981 charging him with conspiracy, cocaine importation, operating a continuing criminal enterprise and eight counts of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute.

The 38-year-old Lehder is accused of leading a group that shipped an estimated 3.3 tons of Colombian cocaine into Florida and Georgia in 1979 and 1980.

Teachers ending strike

CHICAGO (AP) — Teachers agreed to end their longest strike ever and return to work today in the nation's third largest school district, despite the threat of layoffs from the cost of the new contract.

Classes for Chicago's 430,000 public school students, idled for 19 school days since the teachers walked out Sept. 8, were to resume Tuesday.

The 28,000 teachers were due back today for a preparation day.

Elsewhere, Arkansas' first teacher strike also ended Sunday, and classes were scheduled to resume today for the 26,000 students in Little Rock who missed six school days. Classes also were to resume today for 15,500 students in Youngstown, Ohio, where a month-long teachers' strike has been settled.

Only about 18,000 students in Elizabeth, N.J., and two small Pennsylvania districts were still kept home by strikes that a few weeks ago had affected more than 710,000 students in seven states.

Eclipse will dim moon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Harvest moon will dim slightly, possibly blushing red, on Tuesday night when a penumbral eclipse occurs.

Astronomers at the U.S. Naval Observatory report that the moon will edge into the fainter part of the Earth's shadow Tuesday evening, with the dimming most likely to be noticed at the lower half of the moon's disc.

Unlike the occasions when it enters the dark center of the shadow, the moon will not be blocked from view.

And although penumbral eclipses such as this are often difficult to detect, this one should be both visible and interesting because of the brightness of the full Harvest moon, the astronomers say.

In addition, if there is significant dust in the Earth's atmosphere at the time — resulting from distant forest fires or volcanoes perhaps — the result could be a red blush on the face of the moon.

The Naval Observatory reports that the eclipse will be visible across the nation, barring cloudiness.

It will begin at 9:53 p.m. EDT, mid-eclipse will be at 12:02 a.m. Wednesday, and the event will be completed at 2:10 a.m.

Cuomo defends decision

NEW YORK (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo denies that his decision against running for president was based on fears that the glare of publicity would uncover past misdeeds, but said he'll never be president.

"I have run in New York state for governor twice," he said Sunday in an interview on the CBS News program "Face the Nation." "They throw everything at you in this place, especially if you're an Italian-American.... I don't believe there is (a skeleton) or you would have known about it."

He emphatically denied any wrongdoing in his or his family's past, but said: "I'll never be president."

"I have no great desire to prove that I could get to the top of the heap," he added. "I won't get a chance because the Democrats are going to be in place for eight years and by then I will be a vague whisper of a footnote in the book of New York state life."

Webster gives interview

NEW YORK (AP) — In his first interview since taking over the Central Intelligence Agency, William Webster says that in considering a housecleaning of the agency he will not be looking for scapegoats.

The test will be whether employees have "lost their effectiveness in a particular area," Webster is quoted as saying in the Oct. 12 issue of Newsweek.

"I don't believe that looking for scapegoats is the answer to a problem. I'm not going in there to take it apart brick by brick, but rather to strengthen it and support it and make it go well," he said.

Ambassador denies propaganda effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. ambassador to Venezuela denies allegations by a congressional agency that a State Department office he once headed was engaged in an illegal, covert propaganda effort for the Reagan administration's Central American policies.

A report released Sunday by the General Accounting Office alleges that the department's Office of Public Diplomacy for Latin America and the Caribbean has generated opinion articles opposing Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government for placement in major news outlets and arranged news media interviews for leaders of Nicaragua's Contra rebels while concealing its own role in the publicity effort.

The activities of the public diplomacy office "were misleading as to their origin and reasonably constituted 'propaganda' within the common understanding of that term," and violated a legal ban on use of federal money for propaganda not specifically authorized by Congress, the report concluded.

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, said the operation portrayed a "blatant disregard for the law" that "typifies the arrogance of those who took it upon themselves to operate a government within the government throughout the Iran-Contra affair."

Brooks and Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, requested the investigation by the GAO, Congress' investigative arm.

Meanwhile, Newsweek magazine reported Sunday that the late CIA director, William J. Casey, masterminded a domestic covert-propaganda campaign to rally support for the Contras and discredit Americans who opposed them.

The magazine's Oct. 12 issue says Casey was the prime mover behind the operation, part of which was run by fired National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North.

The magazine said much of the campaign was run by the public diplomacy office, and said Otto J. Reich, the former head of the office who is now the U.S. ambassador to Venezuela, reported not to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who had objected to the creation of the office, but to an NSC task force headed by Walter Raymond.

Reich, who was the chief of the public diplomacy office from its inception in June 1983 until January 1986, said the magazine report on Casey's involvement was "absolutely and patently false."

In a telephone interview from his residence in Venezuela, Reich denied that he had reported to Raymond: "I reported to Shultz and I reported periodically to the ... members of the National Security Council. I worked with the NSC staff very closely, but I worked more closely with the State Department staff."

Reich also denounced the GAO's allegations of a covert propaganda effort and contended that his office "was one of the most open operations the State Department had."

He also questioned the objectivity of the report, noting that no congressional investigator ever contacted him during the six-month inquiry.

The White House established the public diplomacy office to lobby Congress for increased economic and military aid in support of administration policies in Central America and to head off restrictions on such aid.

The office has come under criticism before for its awarding of contracts to International Business Communications, a public relations firm that worked with North on private efforts to help the Contras. IBC's president, Richard Miller, along with conservative fund-raiser Carl R. "Spitz" Channell, has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the government by illegally using a tax-exempt foundation to raise money

Toughened peace plan promoted

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will promote a toughened set of demands for peace in Nicaragua in a major address to the Organization of American States this week, administration officials say.

Reagan's speech, set for Wednesday, will take place a month prior to the Nov. 7 deadline for a cease-fire and democratic reforms established in a regionally sponsored peace plan.

Administration officials, speaking Sunday only on condition they not be identified, said Reagan's address will lay out a timetable for the resumption of U.S. aid to the rebels battling Nicaragua's leftist government.

It also will highlight the "guideposts" the administration will use to judge Nicaragua's compliance with the peace process, a senior administration official said.

The speech is geared to "have the effect of formalizing our current policy position on Central America," another official said.

Reagan gave only a lukewarm welcome to the regional plan when it was signed in August by five Central American nations, including Nicaragua.

Since that time, he has offered increasingly harsh assessments of the plan. At one point, Reagan criticized the pact as "fatally flawed" for failing to require the withdrawal of Soviet and Cuban military support from Nicaragua.

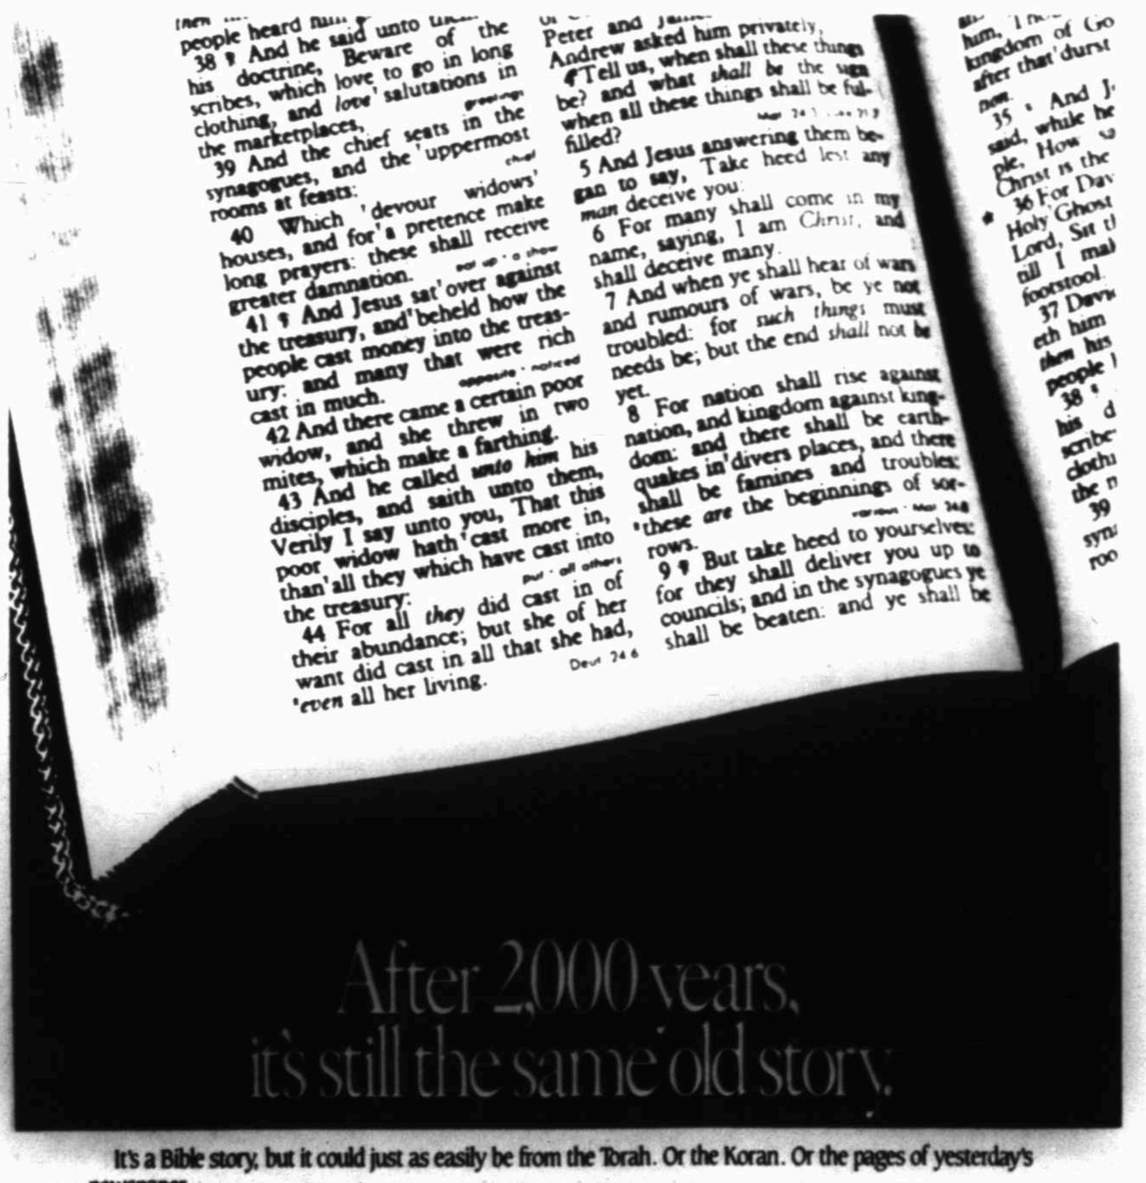

The senior administration official says the White House plans to hold off its request to Congress for $270 million in aid to the Nicaraguan rebels until "early November."

The official said the administration was "reluctant to set a specific date" at this time, but that the formal request "would come closer to the (Nov. 7) deadline for the cease-fire" as stipulated in the regional plan.

In the speech, Reagan "will lay out a timetable for funding the resistance" as a means of keeping pressure on the Sandinistas, the senior official said. "He'll cite guideposts for judging the situation."

The Organization of American States, founded in 1948 in Bogota, Colombia, is headquartered in Washington. It is composed of member states from North, South and Central America as well as the Caribbean.

Reagan, who offered his own version of a peace plan in August, has used several speeches in recent weeks to make demands on Nicaragua that go beyond those contained in the regional proposal.

After 2,000 years, it's still the same old story.

It's a Bible story, but it could just as easily be from the Torah. Or the Koran. Or the pages of yesterday's newspaper.

Because, unfortunately, it's also a parable for the 20th century.

Today the average family with an income under $5,000 contributes nearly 5% to charity. Between $50,000 and $100,000, giving drops to just over 1%. In other words, the people who can afford the least are still the ones who give the most.

So think about it.

If all of us gave that same 5%, our collective contribution would come to more than $175 billion a year.

And, with that, we could give our 20th-century story a far happier ending.

What you give is five. What you get back is immeasurable.

1787 Constitution Daybook

From The Associated Press

Friday, Oct. 5, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Today, Jacob Hiltzheimer, a member of the Pennsylvania Assembly, reported that Thomas Fitzsimons, George Clymer, and William Robinson came to his house in the afternoon for a meeting. Since these gentlemen were members of the Assembly and strong advocates for ratification, it can be assumed their conference had something to do with ratifying the Constitution in Pennsylvania.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

About two-and-a-half months earlier, Congress had passed the Northwest Ordinance, establishing procedures by which new areas would be added to the United States. Today Congress initiated the first phase of the process by appointing Arthur St. Clair as the first territorial governor and Winthrop Sergeant as the first secretary. Congress also gave St. Clair an assignment today — that he should try to establish treaties with Indian tribes within his jurisdiction.

In other business, Congress accepted the resignation of John Adams as minister to Great Britain, thanked him for "the patriotism, perseverance, integrity, and diligence with which he ably and faithfully served his country," and decided not to appoint a temporary minister.

RATIFICATION TODAY

Lewes, Del., is a pleasant town with neat houses, a small commercial area, and an active fishing industry. It is difficult to imagine that 200 years ago this community was wracked with violence during almost every election.

Today Davidson David informed his boss Mathew Carey (editor of the American Museum Magazine in Philadelphia) that he was disgusted with the situation in Lewes. "Instead of a regular peaceable election," he wrote, "we have been entertained with the sight of companies of armed men determined, at the hazard of their lives, to override the choice of representatives." Elections were scheduled for the next week and David was convinced that violence would accompany them. Many observers were fearful that armed ruffians would mar the election for delegates to the state ratifying convention about a month later.

Richard Henry Lee expressed his opinion of the Constitution to Samuel Adams. He was quite candid. He thought the document had many useful "regulations" and probably would work as a new form of government — if properly amended. He thought the various states could ratify the Constitution and specify amendments to be added later.

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington had been home at Mount Vernon for nearly two weeks and almost every day he covered most of the 8,000 acres of his plantations. Today he oversaw his crews sowing rye at Dogue Run and sent one of the plows to Muddy Hole. He also noted that the remainder of his hands and horses were "treading wheat" (separating wheat from chaff on a harvesting floor).

The general also mentioned, in passing, a visit by Alexander Donald. Donald later reported the episode to Thomas Jefferson. He wrote that Washington was in perfect health and looked "as well as he did twenty years ago. I never saw him so keen for any thing in my life," he observed, "as he is for the adoption of the new form of government."

Donald asked the general if he was aware that the nation would turn to him as the first president. Washington protested that he truly enjoyed retirement, was too old, and had no interest in returning to public life. Donald, however, believed that Washington could be "induced to appear once more on the Publick Stage of Life."

LOOKING BACK
The Northwest Territory

On July 13, 1787, Congress passed the Northwest Ordinance, establishing a system for governing the region north and west of the Ohio River and for admitting new states to the union. Congress' action today — appointing Arthur St. Clair as territorial governor — was important for two reasons: 1) the government was moving quickly to establish its procedures for admitting new areas into the United States; and 2) the appointment of Arthur St. Clair demonstrated that Congress wanted someone for the governorship with proven leadership experience.

In many ways, St. Clair was a logical choice for governor. He owned an estate of 4,000 acres in Westmoreland County, in western Pennsylvania, which gave him a familiarity with the terrain and some of the problems of the area; he had served as a military officer during the Revolutionary War, which, it was hoped, would give him the proper background to deal with Indian tribes in the region; and he was finishing a one year term as president of Congress, which gave him experience in administration.

St. Clair served as governor until 1802. His administration was mixed with successes and failures and historians generally are critical of his role as governor. Under his leadership, the Army suffered a disastrous defeat at the hands of the Miami, Little Turtle, and other Indian tribes in 1791. He also believed the area was not yet ready for statehood in 1801 and opposed the efforts of Ohioans seeking admission to the Union. Yet during his 14 years as governor, many new settlers moved into he region, and peace returned after subsequent military expeditions.

Congress isn't seeing enough AIDS 'leadership'

By JILL LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress speaks with one voice on at least one aspect of the AIDS crisis: The Reagan administration isn't showing enough leadership.

But lawmakers themselves are in sharp conflict over what, if anything, the federal government should do about the complicated civil rights and public health issues raised by the fatal disease.

In myriad Capitol Hill hearings, members have heard dry discussions of how AIDS drugs and treatment should be financed as well as impassioned testimony from gay health groups dealing firsthand with death.

They have heard recommendations by doctors that AIDS victims be sent to live in colonies like lepers, and pleas for understanding from star witnesses such as actress Elizabeth Taylor and the unfortunate Ray family of Arcadia, Fla.

As the hearings have proliferated, so have the bills. Twenty-five AIDS measures were introduced in the 99th Congress, according to the Library of Congress. So far, with the 100th Congress not even half over, the number is 42.

Among them are proposals to require universal testing, testing of prostitutes and convicted drug offenders, testing of marriage license applicants and testing of hospital patients.

Some lawmakers want to require reporting of AIDS cases and tracing of sexual contacts. Others, backed by public health professionals, are promoting a bill that expands voluntary testing and counseling, requires confidentiality for those tested and outlaws discrimination against AIDS victims and carriers.

The administration, in the eye of the storm, pleads states' rights and opposes all of the above.

"This is not the time for the federal government to cut off new ideas or approaches by rushing in with a single, imposed solution," Health and Human Services Secretary Otis Bowen said in a Sept. 23 statement.

But legislators from all points on the ideological spectrum reject that argument.

"The AIDS virus does not stop at state boundary lines. It is a national problem and we need a national strategy," says the only physician in Congress, Rep. Roy Rowland, D-Ga., a sponsor of the confidentiality bill.

Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., leader of the House drive for mandatory testing of many population groups for AIDS antibodies and explicit AIDS reporting requirements for all states, is equally impatient.

"I respect states' rights," he told Bowen in September. "But let's face it, nobody knows how many people have the virus. We have a major federal national problem on our hands."

The administration does agree with Congress in one policy area, that the federal government should pay for AIDS education and research.

"Just a few years ago we couldn't get cooperation into putting more money into research," says Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health. That has changed "primarily through pressures from Congress," he says.

"We have been guided by what the researchers have said...and kept pace with their needs," says Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee. "In terms of education and training, we've been ahead of the administration."

Federal AIDS spending in fiscal 1988 is expected to reach nearly $1 billion. The House has passed a bill appropriating $945.4 million for education, prevention, treatment and research. The Senate version of the bill contains $946.4 million. The administration has proposed $790 million — not as much as Congress wants, but a far cry from the $200,000 spent in 1981.

Congress also prodded the administration to resolve its ideological quandary over educational materials and to get on with an AIDS information campaign. Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., led the way last spring by mailing 200,000 copies of U.S. Surgeon General Everett Koop's detailed AIDS pamphlet to his constituents.

More than 30 other lawmakers pressed for and won permission to do the same, but are still waiting for their copies. The major U.S. education drive has been timed to concide with this month's AIDS Awareness and Prevention theme — long after other countries had mounted full-scale educational efforts.

Nor has there been much progress in setting what one congressman called "national ground rules" for the uncharted territory of apprehension in the medical and research communities, of AIDS carriers rejected by nursing homes and school districts, of fear both rational and irrational.

The lack-of-leadership complaints took on new intensity in September when the administration announced its opposition to the bill concerning testing, confidentiality and anti-discrimination — "the most important piece of legislation in the whole AIDS issue," Waxman maintains.

Many chided the White House for trying to bounce the issue to state legislatures.

New figures on AIDS dormancy not enough to force test changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal health officials say a new study suggesting the AIDS virus may lie dormant longer than previously believed is not conclusive enough to recommend new testing policies.

"My concern is more that there will be an overreaction to it" than with the study results themselves, Dr. Gary Noble, AIDS coordinator for the Public Health Service, said in a weekend interview. "In fact, we don't see this (study) as having a real major public health impact."

Specifically, Noble said he sees no basis for recommending that people who have tested negative under existing guidelines to be re-tested.

The significance of the small Finnish study made public last week is that it raises the possibility some people who have tested negative to the virus six months after their last potential exposure may actually be carrying the virus.

Health authorities previously had believed antibodies to the virus would show up within six months of exposure, more typically within three weeks to 12 weeks.

The tests, which have been used widely in the United States and elsewhere since they were developed in 1985, are based on detecting antibodies to the AIDS virus, rather than the virus itself.

The Finnish study, using more elaborate laboratory techniques to search for the virus in stored blood samples of nine people who subsequently developed antibodies, found evidence that the virus had been present in one of the nine for 14 months before showing up in antibody tests.

More heterosexual transmission reported

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK — A study of inner-city residents infected with the AIDS virus found that one-third of the men and almost half of the women apparently got the infection through heterosexual contact, a rate far higher than that found in other studies.

The study was based on a questionnaire given to 4,000 men and women visiting a clinic for treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, Dr. Thomas Quinn, one of the study's authors, said Sunday. The anonymous men and women came from an area of Baltimore where drug abuse is common, he said.

Three percent of the women surveyed and 6.3 percent of the men had been infected with the AIDS virus, Quinn said.

Approximately one-third of the infected men and nearly half of the infected women denied being intravenous drug abusers or homosexuals or engaging in other behavior that would put them at special risk of getting AIDS, said Quinn, who is affiliated with Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

The assumption is that those respondents became infected through heterosexual contact, said Quinn, who didn't want to give precise figures about the anonymous respondents' sexual orientation until the study is published in a scientific journal.

Quinn and his colleagues did not attempt to investigate the individuals to determine whether they were being truthful on the questionnaires about their sexual orientation and use of drugs.

Still, he was "absolutely confident" these individuals became infected through heterosexual contact, he said in an interview after presenting the findings at a meeting of the Interscience Conference on Antimicrobial Agents and Chemotherapy, which is largely devoted to research on infectious diseases.

Many other studies have suggested that the fraction of AIDS-infected people who get the disease through heterosexual contact amounts to no more than a few percent.

A study to be presented this week by the New York City health department and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control found that only one in 205 men coming to a sexually-transmitted-disease clinic in New York City was infected with AIDS in the absence of drug use, homosexuality or other high-risk behavior.

"Our preliminary results suggest that HIV infection was almost entirely limited to known risk group members and their sexual partners," said the study by Dr. Rand Stoneburner, Dr. Harold Jaffe and others.

Quinn said that his study used anonymous questionnaires specifically to encourage people to admit to drug abuse and other high-risk behavior.

Amnesty's sad role reminder of needs

Amnesty International's annual reports aren't the sort of reading one keeps on the nightstand. The material covered by the respected human-rights organization is the stuff of nightmares.

Much of which Amnesty covered in its survey of calendar year 1986 has been reported before: Governments of every political persuasion around the globe have made victims of men, women and children for reasons that are often incomprehensible to most Americans.

Tens of thousands of persons have been tortured or subjected to inhuman treatment that includes beatings and mutilations. Hundreds more have been put to death by being stoned, having their heads cut off, or by being hanged, shot, gassed or electrocuted.

The horror and misery that mankind is capable of inflicting on itself are truly astounding. Those who thought that institutional murder and mayhem disappeared with Hitler, Stalin or Mao are living in a dream world.

Amnesty reports, for example, that despite the sweeping social changes instituted under Mikhail Gorbachev, Soviet political prisoners still face harsh treatment and inhuman labor in a gulag of camps and jails.

"Prisoners were kept on monotonous, meager rations, with only rudimentary medical care, and had to meet excessively high work targets, often involving heavy physical labor," the report said. Arrests are often arbitrary, and Soviet authorities routinely dispose of inconvenient citizens with nebulous "anti-Soviet-behavior" laws that carry prison terms as long as 10 years.

Closer to home, Amnesty expressed concern over reports from Mexico of political killings, torture, arbitrary arrests of political opponents and the use in evidence of confessions obtained under duress.

Abuses in the southern Mexican states of Oaxaca and Chiapas were singled out by the rights group in a presentation to President Miguel de la Madrid.

In Nicaragua, the pattern of arbitrary arrests of supporters of opposition parties and trade unions continued, to no one's surprise. Amnesty called attention to the "condition of pretrial custody for security-related detainees, who are often subjected to long periods of incommunicado detention before being released or allowed access to their families or lawyers."

In the preface to its report, Amnesty said that a growing number of governments are more concerned with blocking the tide of refugees than tackling the abuses that cause the plight. The result is that persecuted men, women, and children have increasingly found doors to havens being slammed in their faces.

It is not a pretty picture. From the Cambodia-Thailand border to Africa and Central America, the instances of human-rights abuses never seem to abate. Casting the light of public attention on these heartbreaking statistics may do little to stem the tide of horror tomorrow. But if Amnesty's report rouses enough people from lethargy, the tide assuredly will be turned eventually.

Another View:

Punishing children

Paula Cooper, an 18-year-old murderer sentenced to death in Indiana, has become the rallying point for a movement in Europe to end capital punishment in America. In one respect she would make a poor martyr: No one disputes that she committed a horrible crime. But in another, her case is compelling: When she committed the crime, she was still a child.

On the pretext of seeking Bible lessons, Miss Cooper, then 15, and two friends talked their way into the Gary, Ind., home of 78-year-old Ruth Pelke in May 1985. Once inside, Miss Cooper senselessly murdered Mrs. Pelke, stabbing her 33 times with a butcher knife.

How the European crusaders came to make Paula Cooper the symbol of their cause is something of a mystery. Occasionally their representations of her become downright absurd. An Italian priest who visited her in prison described her afterward in almost saintly terms. But Pope John Paul II, who knows something about forgiving an assailant, recently weighed in on Miss Cooper's behalf, asking Indiana authorities to grant clemency.

The initial response was not hopeful. But a long appeals process stands between Paula Cooper and a lethal injection in the death chamber — long enough, perhaps, for Americans in Indiana and elsewhere to ponder the Pope's message.

Any parent of adolescents knows that 15-year-olds can't necessarily be held to grown-up standards of judgment, even when they are capable of grown-up acts. Most places in America, a 15-year-old is not considered an adult for any legal purpose, whether it be obtaining a driver's license, drinking alcohol or getting married.

The sole ghastly exception is punishment for crimes. Indiana formerly allowed the death penalty for people as young as 10; the threshold was raised to 16 earlier this year, but the change was not retroactive. Nine other states of the 36 that permit capital punishment set no minimum age for its application.

The Europeans may go too far when they petition for a pardon for Paula Cooper. But their focus on her death penalty ought to stir America's national conscience. Many Americans find capital punishment an abomination at any age; all ought to reject it for children.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Oct.5, the 278th day of 1987. There are 87 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Forty years ago, on Oct. 5, 1947, in the first address to be televised from the White House, President Harry S. Truman asked Americans to voluntarily refrain from eating meat on Tuesdays and poultry on Thursdays in order to help stockpile grain for starving people in Europe.

On this date:

In 1813, the Battle of the Thames was fought in what is now Ontario, Canada, during the War of 1812. The British troops were soundly defeated, and their Indian ally, Tecumseh, was killed.

In 1830, Chester Arthur, the 21st president of the United States, was born in Fairfield, Vt.

In 1892, the Dalton Gang, notorious for its train robberies, was practically wiped out while attempting to rob a pair of banks in Coffeyville, Kan.

In 1921, the World Series was broadcast on radio for the first time, with sports writer Grantland Rice describing the action between the New York Yankees and the New York Giants, who won the series.

In 1931, Clyde Pangborn and Hugh Herndon completed the first nonstop flight across the Pacific Ocean, arriving in Washington state some 41 hours after leaving Japan.

In 1937, saying "the epidemic of world lawlessness is spreading," President Franklin D. Roosevelt called for a "quarantine" of aggressor nations.

In 1953, Earl Warren was sworn in as the 14th chief justice of the United States.

In 1962, the Beatles' first hit, "Love Me Do," was released in the United Kingdom.

Opinion of CIA's Casey on target

WASHINGTON — During the late William Casey's six controversial years as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, no one who was at all knowledgeable about intelligence matters ever confused the institution with the man who was its titular boss. Casey and the CIA worked together only when they had the same goal in mind — and agreed on the best method to achieve it.

Jack Anderson

The Washington Post's Bob Woodward has come under fire for saying approximately the same thing in "Veil," his book on the CIA to be published this week. Casey's widow, Sophia, has contradicted quotations and events ascribed to her husband, which Woodward says were based on "more than four dozen interviews or substantive discussions" with the then-director of the CIA.

We don't wish to offend Mrs. Casey; she has acknowledged that her husband didn't tell her everything. We have reason to believe Woodward.

Why? For one thing, we came to the same conclusion that Woodward did. Furthermore, we also had private conversations with Casey in which he revealed himself to be generally the kind of man Woodward has described in his new book.

In September 1983, we wrote: "Casey doesn't run the CIA. He's a lone wolf who prefers to leave the detail work and public relations chores to his deputy director."

We also noted: "Casey loves the covert-action side of his job. The cowboys down in the ranks will send up a harebrained proposal, and the next thing you know they're in his office plotting with him,' complained one source. Other sources expressed concern that this sidesteps the checks and balances designed to prevent preposterous clandestine operations."

More recently — last February — while Casey was still alive, we charged that he hadn't told the Iran-/contra congressional investigators the whole truth about what he knew.

We quoted sources as saying that Lt. Col. Oliver North, the unbridled National Security Council aide, "conferred privately with Casey, whom he greatly respected." We added: "These secret meetings and telephone calls were unrecorded for the most part, so only North or Casey could say for sure what the CIA chief knew and when. Private, one-on-one meetings were typical of Casey." North confirmed this in his subsequent public testimony at the Iran/contra hearings.

Even more revealing of Casey the man was a secret meeting Dale Van Atta had with the CIA chief on Dec. 19, 1984. To explain how astonishing it was that Casey had agreed to an interview — as an anonymous source — we need to provide a little background:

Casey was furious over our critical 1983 profile of him. We were also on his blacklist for our frequent publication of CIA secrets. In fact, we had been told that when CIA personnel were to brief someone on "compartmented" or "codeword" information, Casey ordered them to give this explicit warning: None of the information must be leaked to "Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta" — or to our rival columnists, Rowland Evans and Robert Novak.

Yet Casey agreed to meet Van Atta, as long as the meeting was not at CIA headquarters in Langley, Va. He chose a hideaway office on F Street, N.W., in downtown Washington, complete with CIA security and a false front. Casey was waiting in the otherwise empty office, a few blocks from the White House. The office gave every indication of being unused except for Casey's clandestine meetings.

Casey was testy. "I can't always trust those boys at Langley," he said. He tried to pump Van Atta for information about the CIA, explaining that he didn't always know what his own agency was up to. Nor, he added with a smile, did they always know what he was up to.

Casey complained that "(you) and Jack Anderson get such sensitive stuff regularly" from the CIA. He said the reason he was meeting Van Atta at the secret location was that we had a "bad odor" at Langley.

Casey said that it scared him to realize that the CIA might be doing things without his knowledge, just as years earlier the agency had tried to assassinate Fidel Castro without informing then-director John McCone. So, Casey said, he hoped that reporters like us would give him "early warning" of any CIA rogue operations we learned about. In exchange, he hinted, he might confirm or deny other leads we got on CIA activities.

Casey told Van Atta he expected to serve as CIA chief as long as Ronald Reagan was in the White House. Even though there had been recurring controversies, he said he foresaw no possibility that Reagan would ever ask him to leave.

In sum, the Casey on display that day and in other private meetings was exactly the same as the man portrayed in Woodward's new book, despite well-meant revisionist views put forward by his widow and others.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Now that the strikebreaking professional football teams have shown their stuff, we'll be able to tell what American football fans are made of. Will they, after groaning and/or guffawing at this week's antics, insist on top quality and boycott the games until they get it? Or are they so hopelessly addicted to their Sunday regimen that they'll put up with anything the owners decide to throw their way? It seems fairly obvious that, if the fans will pay to see second-rate players, the owners will then try for third-rate and worse, to trim their payrolls even more. Tennis, anyone?

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Any old plagiarism will work in a pinch!

So what's the big deal about a little harmless plagiarism? They are taking out Sen. Joe Biden's appendix with a broken beer bottle since it was learned the former presidential candidate from Delaware occasionally borrowed a word here and a word there when making speeches.

Grizzard

Most everybody has stolen words. I steal jokes and tell them in public and never give credit to whomever it was who first told me the joke.

My boyhood friend and idol, Weyman C. Wannamaker, Jr., a great American, once went to the library and copied down Lee's farewell speech to his troops and turned it in to our teacher, Miss McDonald, for his history term paper.

When confronted with the charge of plagiarism by Miss McDonald, Weyman said, "I'm sorry, but I couldn't think of a better way to say all that."

The only time I've ever been accused of plagiarism since I turned columnist was when a reader out west sent me a page out of her local paper that had my picture with an Erma Bombeck column.

"You should be ashamed," wrote the lady.

How could I steal from Erma Bombeck? I've never had a husband who snored, nor changed a single baby's diaper.

Some plagiarists are quite cagey. I received a letter from a high-school student a few years back. Said the letter:

"I have chosen you as the subject for my English term paper. Would you please write down six pages about yourself and please be careful as the teacher counts off for misspelled words."

Other plagiarists are stupid. I once wrote a column about changing the rules of golf to make the game easier.

A golf writer for another paper ran the column word for word under his byline. On the facing page was my original column. I couldn't help wondering which of us the readers would blame for stealing.

Other plagiarists are at least honest. A fellow columnist called me once and said, "Listen, I want you to know I'm going to steal your idea for my column."

I thanked the man. As long as you tell me up front, then it's fine to pick my pocket.

The only problem in this instance turned out to be the column idea was about hating the New York Yankees baseball team. And the very day the columnist ran his version of the idea, Yankee catcher Thurman Munson was killed in an airplane crash.

A common rule of thumb writers use on the plagiarism issue is, "You steal from me, it's plagiarism. I steal from you, it's research."

For Joe Biden to run again in 1992, as he said he would when he announced his withdrawal from the '88 presidential race, he will need to choose his words carefully, and convince us his previous thievery and disinformation is nothing for us to worry about.

I think, "I'm not a crook," has a nice ring to it, don't you?

CHARLEY REESE

Cozy media-pol relationship forgets people

Sen. Joe Biden, miffed that lying and plagiarism popped his presidential bubble, has decided to spend full time slandering Judge Robert Bork, whose IQ is probably higher than Biden's S.A.T. score.

Charley Reese

At the current rate of expiration, the Democrats may not have any candidates left by the time the Iowa primary is held. At any rate, for those with the stomach to poke around in the political pus, the current low state of public affairs raises an interesting question.

How do phonies like Biden survive to the point where they can actually raise several millions of dollars for a presidential campaign? It has to be a cooperative venture. I think there is a subtle psychological linkage between certain politicians and certain elements of the press.

The linkage is they have severed their links with the people. Even though all they purport to represent is people, neither has much contact with the people. Instead, they spend most of their time with each other — the press, and the pols. In both cases, their income is well above the average American's. In both they are concerned primarily with their own success which, paradox though it seems, has little or nothing to do with the people.

It is more important to the journalist to have the approval of his peers and superiors in the business than the admiration of the readers. Readers don't pay salaries, decide on promotions, offer you new jobs, or hand out prizes. All of that occurs within the industry.

For the politician, it is more important to curry favor with the money people and with the media than with the people. With enough money and at least the passive help of the journalists, most pols feel they can dupe 50 percent of the turnout plus one vote.

Given these factors it doesn't take long for the them-and-us attitude to harden -- here we are and way out there are those people who don't appreciate our value and who are so dumb we have to tell them what is good for them. A natural sympathy develops between the pol and the journalist, a shared cynicism, a symbiotic relationship. The pol helps the journalist do his job by being accessible and supplying information and the journalist tacitly agrees not to go out of his way to embarrass the pol. There are limits, of course, and Biden exceeded them.

In the old days, when most news organizations were sweatshops and there wasn't all this velvet-glove style of management, a journalist had to be really stupid to forget that he was a member of the rabble, not the elite. His working conditions and paycheck were constant reminders. In those days, the pols had to just buy a reporter or editor for cash money or take their chances with journalists who defined us as the journalist and the people and them, as the politicians and the financial backers.

But today, some prominent journalists tend to identify more with the pols than with the people so that when a Biden or a Gary Hart so blatantly expose their phoniness that it can't be hidden, you'll see residues of sympathy crop up in the journalistic reports. In most stories, for example, it was reported that Biden exaggerated his academic record or that he made mis-statements, which implies a lack of intent. He didn't exaggerate it. He lied about it. And he didn't do it accidentally.

Some establishment journalists were openly outraged at the Miami Herald for nailing Gary Hart.

Tom Jefferson observed that left free all men in all ages naturally divide themselves into two parties — those who trust and cherish the people and those who distrust and fear them. This applies to journalists as well as to politicians.

Like the late Westbrook Pegler, I have always thought of myself as a member of the rabble in good standing. Perhaps that's because I don't have to lie about humble beginnings and because I was blessed with working at a young age for publishers and owners who did not bother to hide their contempt for employees. Anything that keeps you rooted to reality is a blessing.

STATE

Who is telling truth in Brandley hearing?

GALVESTON (AP) — State District Court Judge Perry Pickett asked a witness early in the evidentiary hearing of death row inmate Clarence Brandley a question on the minds of many.

"Do you know the meaning of an oath?" the judge inquired. "Is there anything you would like to add? Are you telling the truth?"

Pickett, a retired judge from Midland, has the unenviable task of deciding whether to recommend to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals if there's enough new evidence to merit Brandley a third trial on charges the Conroe High School janitor raped and strangled a 16-year-old girl in 1980.

Testimony resumes Tuesday in Galveston, where the hearing — moved to escape what the judge termed an atmosphere of fear in Montgomery County — enters a second week.

But is there any new evidence? Will Brandley get a new trial? Can he be tried yet a third time? Can any of the some two dozen witnesses to testify so far be believed?

Who is telling the truth? Is anyone telling the truth?

"Some of these witnesses are on their seventh story," a frustrated District Attorney Peter Speers said. "But let's put it this way. I don't think there's any legal basis to support why he should get a new trial. And I don't anticipate one."

As for all that's been accomplished so far, Speers replies, "Taxpayers are out a good deal of money."

Defense attorney Mike DeGeurin sees it differently.

"The big picture shows Clarence Brandley did not have a fair trial in 1981," DeGeurin says. "Credibility in the big picture is what we're looking for."

The hearing so far has proved racial tensions were a factor in Brandley's trial, that investigators unnecessarily hurried to make an arrest, that witnesses were intimidated and Brandley was isolated, DeGeurin says.

"There's no question in anybody's mind he did not get a fair shake," he says.

Some of the characters who have sat in the witness chair so far are straight out of a movie casting call.

There's Ickie Peace, the Conroe janitor who says he can neither read nor write. Peace, a diminutive man with a squeaky voice and a belt loaded with keys, was with Brandley when the two of them found the body of Cheryl Fergeson on Aug. 23, 1980.

There's John Sessum, another janitor, described by District Attorney Peter Speers as drunk during a videotaped interview with DeGeurin.

DeGeurin, who described Sessum as an alcoholic, said he was so moved by Sessum's comments it brought tears to his eyes. At one point, however, Sessum was so adamant about not speaking to DeGeurin his dog bit one of DeGeurin's investigators as Sessum tried to get the man to leave.

Two women, Mary Johnson and Janet Dial, who worked for the judge in Brandley's 1981 trial, told of a late-night meeting with defense attorneys to discuss Brandley trial evidence that was missing. They also said the judge and prosecutor met, presumably to discuss how to cover up the fact evidence was lost.

James Keeshan, the prosecutor who now is a judge, denied such meetings with Judge John Martin, who took himself off the Brandley case.

Ugliness in the mind of sports writer

By MIKE COCHRAN

"I've seen some real ugly schools, but Tech's not one of them...It's not the prettiest place in the world, but it's not ugly."

— Rick Hayes, KAMC-TV sports anchor

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech students and alumni were not terribly amused in 1984 when a Sports Illustrated writer named Douglas Looney branded their campus the United States' ugliest.

"Looks as if they should cancel classes and convert the school into a prison," hissed Looney, forked tongue in cheek.

Looney didn't appease Tech loyalists much when he went on to proclaim Austin as "best town" and the University of Texas Longhorn band as "best band."

The ugly-campus comment triggered a spate of nasty responses, among them a letter from Bill Dean, executive director of Texas Tech's Ex-Students Association.

Dean wondered in his letter to Looney if the writer had ever indeed set foot on campus and suggested that his accuracy, if not his ancestry, was certainly suspect.

Still, the issue soon died of natural causes.

But alas! Writing in a recent issue of Sports Illustrated, a magazine some say is the Bible of the sporting world, Looney struck again.

"Three years ago, we said in this space that Texas Tech has the ugliest campus," he purred. "An avalanche of mail disputed this assertion. So we have looked at the school again, rechecked the photos and consulted experts. We are not too proud to admit our mistakes.

"This, however, was not one of them."

Hardly was the ink dry before Lubbock cardiologist Joe Arrington Jr. fired off a letter to SI in which he took fierce exception to Looney's latest pronouncement. He concluded:

"Enclosed is the mailing slip from my subscription, cancel same and refund the above immediately."

Across town, Bill Dean, still the executive director of Tech exes, took pen in hand to again challenge Looney's accuracy and fairness and to decry repetition of what he called "this slur."

He also canceled a renewal of his son's subscription to SI and ended his letter thusly:

"Further...I intend to write a letter addressed to all 91,000 graduates of this university and strongly encourage them to cancel their subscriptions to SI if they have one."

The September-October issue of the Texas Techsan contains an open letter to Tech exes in which Dean carried out his threat.

Meanwhile, Joe Hornaday, sports information director at Tech, wrote "Campus Evaluator" Looney in New York and, in a "Dear Doug" letter, said:

"I can't believe you did this to me again. Just when they had forgotten. Now it will happen all over again...You gotta help me."

Hornaday invited Looney to come to a Tech football game, offering him "a tour of the campus. Maybe even a parade. Or a picnic under one of the ugly trees...Maybe a Sports Illustrated Ugly Man on Campus contest...I might be able to even get you an ugly date."

In the meantime, Hornaday cautioned, "you might stay away from guys with cowboy boots who talk Texan."

KAMC-TV in Lubbock located the "ugliest" spot it could find on campus and provided a live report on the controversy. Grumbled sports anchor Rick Hayes:

"I've seen some real ugly schools, but Tech's not one of them...It's not the prettiest place in the world, but it's not ugly."

Radio station KRLB, known around town as fiesty FM 99, conducted a contest to determine the "Ugliest Magazine Staff in America." SI was pretty much a unanimous choice, perhaps because those voting for SI were promised free Texas Tech "Big, Bad and Ugly" T-shirts.

FM 99 notified Looney of the contest results and sent him some "Ugly" T-shirts along with several photographs purportedly depicting the Tech campus. The pictures looked suspiciously similar to European river, mountain and garden settings.

In a recent letter to the folks at FM 99, Looney accepted the T-shirts "in good grace" and confessed that he somehow overlooked the river winding "majestically" through the campus.

In an on-air conversation, FM 99's Kelli D'Angelo and Dave Scott invited Looney to come tour the campus and maybe do a little snow-and water-skiing or perhaps some mountain-climbing, an unlikely feat in the board-flat landscape.

"You really are in the heart of mountain-climbing," quipped Looney, while inquiring if there was such a thing as a paved runway in Lubbock.

Last week, Texas Tech's newspaper, The University Daily, sought reaction from Tech's more than 23,000 students to the "ugliest campus" claim.

Most everyone disagreed with Looney's assessment, noting that the campus was "uncluttered" and "spread out" and that its "openness" was but one of its many charms.

LaRail Wilson, a freshman from Lubbock, put it this way:

"Tech is pretty compared to all the cotton fields. I've lived here all my life. Generally, I think West Texas is ugly. Texas Tech does a good job of making the campus look beautiful."

In a parting shot at the University of Texas, Ms. Wilson added: "Tech is prettier than UT."

It's possible that Tech ex Joel Brandenberger of Austin got in the best, if not last, word. In a letter printed the other day in SI, Brandenberger claimed that Looney's second shot demanded rebuttal.

He quoted an objective observer named Ron Reid who once wrote that "...neither Texas Tech with its elegant campus nor air as clear as Steuben glass has enabled Lubbock to shake its unsophisticated image..."

The article describing the campus as elegant was entitled "A Real Lulu in Lubbock" and appeared on newsstands in November 1976.

Woman suspect in abduction

HOUSTON (AP) — A homeless woman who was offered a place to stay by a couple is suspected of taking their 14-month-old child, police say.

Houston police continued their search this morning for Liliana Reyes, who was taken from her home early Saturday while her parents, Sergio and Marina Reyes, slept in another room, authorities said.

Also missing is a woman who was taken to the Reyes home by an area gameroom operator who said she wandered into his business Thursday saying she was hungry and had no money or a place to live.

The woman stayed at the Reyes' home Thursday night and all day Friday caring for the child who was suffered from a cold. About 4 a.m. Saturday, Marina Reyes awoke to find her baby and the woman gone.

Sun outages are part of satellite operations and occur in the Spring and Fall of every year when orbital position aligns the satellite and the sun (See diagram below). At this time the earth station receives signals from both. The more powerful sun subdues the desired satellite signal causing an outage lasting approximately 9 to 10 minutes. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause.

During outages your TV screen will look like this.

Sun outages will affect all satellite delivered channels:

Above, Bill and Vickie Ford sing along with the National Anthem prior to a recent high school game at Memorial Stadium.

Spirited ritual

It has become a Friday night ritual in Texas.

High school football.

And, nowhere is it bigger than in West Texas; especially in the Midland-Odessa area. It has become a hotbed of football talent. College recruiters swarm in each weekend to study the athletes, hoping to find future stars for big-time university programs.

But a Friday night football game is more than just the players. It is a happening.

The festivities include the entire student body.

The band marches. The cheerleaders create spirit. The mascots perform.

And, then there are the fans.

They come in all sizes and shapes. They are students. They are parents. They are friends. Or, they are just football lovers.

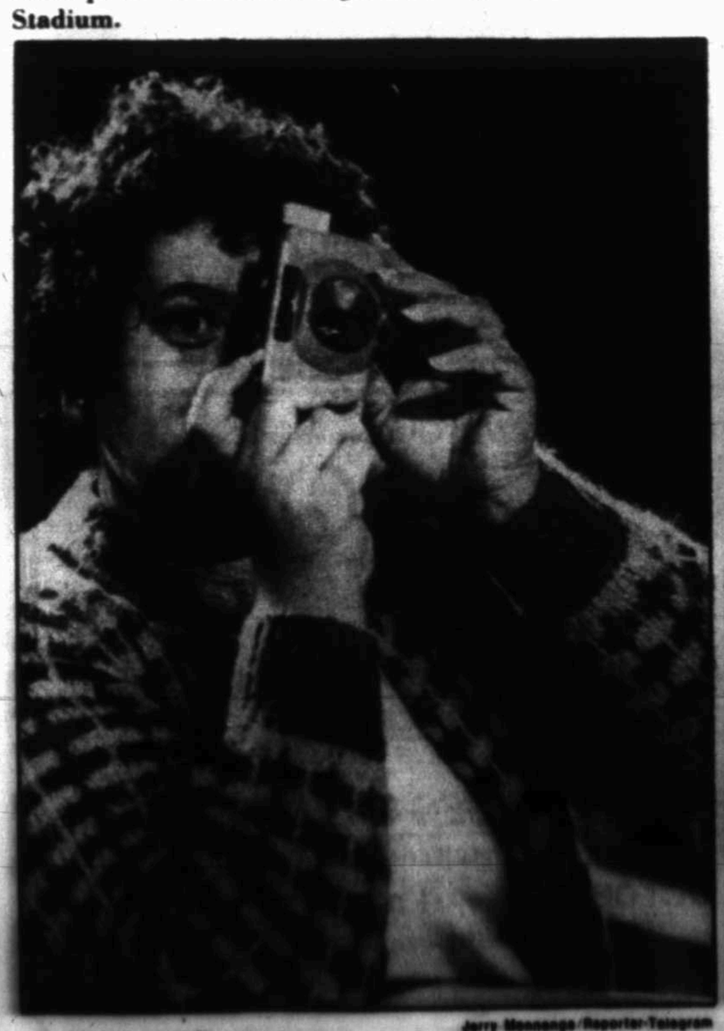

Whatever, they can be found at the stadium at game time.

It has been said that a successful high football team can do more good for community pride than even a booming economy.

That, of course, is a slight exaggeration.

But, then again, this is West Texas.

People do take their football very seriously. Especially the Friday night version.

Inmates tying the knot more frequently

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — When John and Pam Indo were married, he had a bachelor party in his cell within the Texas Department of Corrections while she was toasted at a fancy restaurant.

The Indos are just one of many couples who are being married by proxy involving prison inmates and brides on the outside. Many of the couples meet through personal ads or volunteer programs.

"It used to be rare," said Prison Chaplain Carroll Pickett. "But now, I'm handing out six to 10 forms a month at my prison unit alone."

The Walker County's clerk's office, in the heart of Texas' prison system, also has noticed the steady increase.

"It's picked up considerably in the last five to six years," Chief Clerk Jaime Clarke told the Houston Chronicle.

Many of the relationships started out when inmates became pen pals with their future brides.

The couples connect through personal ads in everything from biker magazines to religious publications. Sometimes they are introduced by outside friends or meet through volunteer programs.

Some even travel thousands of miles to talk to each other through glass screens in crowded visiting rooms. Some fall in love and marry each other, sight unseen.

The Indos were pen pals before she proposed. They married three years before his release.

Indo, a new parolee, estimates one of five prison relationships are sincere.

"A lot of inmates try to exploit women through the mail," he said. "There were so many, I resented it."

That's why he never took money from his wife. He sent her the transcript of his trial so she'd know about his past: He killed both his parents in 1969 during a Thanksgiving vacation.

He was released seven months ago and both say they've found marital bliss.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Baskin soon to announce for re-election to court

From Staff Reports

Baskin

District Judge Pat M. Baskin said today that he will soon formally announce for re-election to a third term on the 142nd Judicial District Court bench.

Baskin said he was responding to recent inquiries from friends and supporters in confirming his longheld intention to serve another term.

Said Baskin: "I have been honored to serve the citizens of Midland County for the past seven years and have accomplished what I promised: to strongly enforce our laws, to strictly and conservatively apply traditional legal principles and to conduct an efficient, low-cost court.

"I look forward to another term of service," he said.

Baskin indicated he will file during the official filing period in December.

Store's robbery probed

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

Lawmen are investigating the armed robbery of a grocery store in south Midland County which occurred late Saturday.

About 9:30 p.m. a man walked into Whit's Grocery, located on State Highway 349 south of County Road 135, and pulled a gun described as a .32- or .380-caliber automatic pistol on the 60-year-old clerk, reports said.

He then demanded money from the clerk and took $444 from the store cash register, reports said. He left in a car described as a sedan with one tail light burned out on each side, reports said.

The suspect was described as a white man, 5 feet 11 inches tall, weighing about 210 pounds. He had collar-length blonde hair, an earring in his left ear and was wearing a blue and white plaid long sleeve shirt over a white T-shirt. He also wore a black baseball cap, according to investigators.

The clerk was not injured in the robbery, reports said.

Midland police also are investigating residential burglaries in the 1400 block of East New York Ave., 600 block of South Tilden St., 1400 block of South Fort Worth, and 1600 block of English Dr.

Among items reported stolen were two microwave ovens valued at $115, a videocassette recorder valued at $315, a cable television converter box valued at $200, a double barrel shotgun valued at $200, a rifle valued at $300, and a 13-inch black and white television set valued at $134.

Man charged with DWI

From Staff Reports

STANTON — A Midland man has been charged with driving while intoxicated in connection with the death of a New Mexico man late Saturday in Martin County.

Nelson Andrew Geron Jr., was charged with DWI and released on bond from Martin County Jail, a jail employee said this morning.

About 8 p.m. Saturday, Geron was driving a 1976 Oldsmobile two-door sedan, which struck 48-year-old Ralph B. Garretson of Las Cruces, N.M., as Garretson walked across a service road of Interstate 20, three miles east of Stanton.

Moments earlier, DPS trooper Wade Turner had stopped Garretson, who was driving eastbound on I-20. The trooper was issuing him a traffic citation when the accident happened, according to DPS dispatcher Pat Holt.

Garretson was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital, and was pronounced dead at 2:33 a.m. by Dr. Thurston Dean. DPS reports said.

Violent incidents getting worse at Dallas schools

DALLAS (AP) — Student stabbings and fights are increasing in intensity in North Texas schools, prompting concern among parents and administrators who are searching for solutions to curb the violence.

Although the number of violent acts are not increasing, the intensity of the violence in schools is increasing for some unknown reason, Dallas Independent School District Superintendent Linus Wright said.

"They are more severe, more hostile, and I'm concerned," Wright said.

Students, parents, teachers and administrators across Dallas grappled with the ramifications of one of the worst football-related incidents in the district's history two weeks ago.

Five students were stabbed and one was treated for a head injury when a fight broke out after the game between football fans of opposing teams of Carter and Roosevelt high schools.

This past week, one Carter student was arrested for fighting with coaches after he was asked to leave a pep rally he was disrupting, police said.

And in a separate incident, a Roosevelt student was arrested for allegedly punching one of his school's football players and then hitting a coach attempting to break up the fight, police said.

Although police are uncertain whether these two incidents were related to the stabbings, officials are concerned about the violence within the two schools.

DISD spokesman Rodney Davis says students are arrested regularly throughout the district. But since the Roosevelt and Carter incident, the district has been watching those two schools closely.

Other area high schools are taking a closer look at their own students and have begun planning preventive measures to curb possible violence.

At Adamson High School, principal Edward Baca met with his coaches to outline a plan to keep emotions in line and PTA presidents from across the district discussed reviving "Dads Clubs" to patrol high school football games.

Other plans under consideration throughout the district include adding more security guards to some stadiums, changing two-way streets to one-way traffic during games to help manage crowds and locking the gates between rival teams' bleachers.

"We are optimistically cautious," said John Kincaide, DISD athletics administrator. "We are optimistic that we have a strong, wholesome athletic program.

Statistics show that in the first month of this school year, officials have confiscated 10 weapons in schools throughout the district, a decrease from the 17 confiscated during the same period last year.

Student assaults also are down from 29 to 22. But with at least six students hospitalized from two incidents in the past week, students, teachers and administrators are concerned about the level of violence in several isolated incidents.

"We do not want our general public, our fans, our athletes, our parents, to get off to a direction that suggests we need to cut back, curtail or cancel any athletics," Kincaide said. "We're not going to cancel a math class because there was a fight in the math class."

Illegal immigration hasn't slowed, some experts say

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite records showing new immigration laws halved the number of illegal aliens arrested while trying to cross the border, some immigration experts say illegal entry has not slowed.

"I think it's an illusion," said Pan American University's Gilbert Cardenas, who has researched the immigration issue for several years.

Jorge Bustamante of the University of Northern Frontier at Tijuana, Mexico, said a year-long study involving daily monitoring of border crossing areas revealed no observable changes in the numbers of people coming across.

Bustamante said the new immigration law is political and not economical because studies show the services provided by the illegals in the United States far outweigh any burden they may be to society.

He said Immigraton and Naturalization Service statistics showing employers are complying with the law are meaningless because the figures involve mostly big corporations.

"The overwhelming number of undocumented workers in the United States are hired by employers with no more than 15 employees," Bustamante said.

His research indicates many of these employers would not hesitate to hire illegal aliens in the future, despite the new law, he said.

Employer sanctions in the Simpson-Rodino immigration law are credited with a nearly 50 percent drop in the number of illegal immigrants arrested in Texas in September, compared to the record-setting number for the same period last year.

U.S. Border Patrol records show only about 36,220 illegal immigrant arrests this September, compared with 72,041 in September 1986.

Quarterly figures provided by the agency show there were 43,435 arrests in August, compared with 69,806 in August 1986 and 62,817 in August 1985.

The reports also show there were 43,816 arrests in July of this year, compared with 69,247 in July 1986 and 57,791 in July 1985.

Some spokesmen for the Border Patrol sectors in Texas said the start of employer sanctions in early September may have discouraged people from entering the country illegally because jobs were harder to find.

Sylvestre Reyes, chief of the Border Patrol sector at McAllen, said the new immigration law is even hurting the people who smuggle aliens for a fee.

"Nobody is willing to pay $500 to $1,000 to a smuggler if they are not sure they'll get a job," Reyes said.

But Mexican grocer Jorge Martinez Gomez said nothing could have stopped his eldest son from leaving Reynosa, Mexico, when he was 15 and slipping across the border.

BBB seeks to tighten rules on sexy calling cards

DALLAS (AP) — The Better Business Bureau could curb hundreds of cards being placed in residents' mailboxes, inviting them to call "Linda" or "Monique" for sexy phone messages, if new standards are put in place.

National Marketing, a telecommunications company based in Baltimore, started flooding mailboxes three months ago with its advertising cards.

Although the post office has received more than 600 complaints, and Southwestern Bell just as many calls, the envelopes have continued coming in.

Officials of the Better Business bureau in Dallas decided to force television and direct mail advertisers to include clear disclosures about charges and to shield children and teen-agers from a telephone number with the 976 prefix that provides the sexually oriented messages.

"We are not determining whether what they do is good or bad, that's something the market determines," Bill Beckhart, vice president of trade practices of the bureau, said.

"But we want to make sure it is clear to the customer what it is they are getting and how much it is going to cost them. If they want to dial the number, it is up to them. We just don't want people to be misled."

The cards inside envelopes say "call me anytime," and discreetly list a $9 charge in very small print.

A.L. Johnston of Dallas received such an envelope in his mailbox and at first thought it was an insurance policy, so he decided to call.

"It was disgusting," Johnston said. "I said to myself, 'Why is this filth in my mailbox?'"

His neighbors called the post office, the phone company and even their congressman. They were stunned to find that the practice of leaving the cards was legal.

"I don't know what this world is coming to," said Johnston.

Ads for 976 numbers must include the name of the company offering the service and amount charged. Ads directed to minors should state that parental consent should be obtained.

Additionally, if calls are suitable for adults only, direct-mail companies should print on the cards that the number should be restricted to persons 18 years or older.

High court to resolve water dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to resolve a water-use dispute in which Oklahoma and Texas are accusing New Mexico of violating a 1952 agreement.

The justices, in essence, allowed the two states to "sue" New Mexico in the Supreme Court without their case first being heard in a lower court.

The justices invoked the high court's "original jurisdiction," which allows it to exercise exclusive authority over certain disputes between states.

At issue is the apportionment of waters from the Canadian River, which flows from northeastern New Mexico through that state, Texas and Oklahoma, where it joins the Arkansas River.

The Canadian River Compact of 1952 limits the amount of the river's water New Mexico and Texas may keep in reservoirs for future use.

Under the compact, New Mexico may not save more than 200,000 acre-feet of water below the Conchas Dam in that state.

Lawyers for Oklahoma and Texas contend that New Mexico is violating the 1952 agreement by maintaining a reservoir capacity of 242,463 acre-feet.

But New Mexico's lawyers contend that maintaining a storage capacity in excess of 200,000 acre-feet does not violate the compact — and, in fact, New Mexico has never stored more than 200,000 acre-feet.

Today's brief order from the court told New Mexico's lawyers to file an answer to the complaint within 60 days.

The case is Oklahoma vs. New Mexico, 109 Original.

3-year-old shoots father

DALLAS (AP) — A 3-year-old boy pulled the trigger of a 12-gauge shotgun mounted beneath a car salesman's desk and shot his father, who was closing a deal on a used auto, police said.

Richard Benavides, 27, of Mesquite, was shot in the forearm and cheek Saturday and was in fair condition at a Dallas hospital Sunday. "It was really just an accident," Benavides said. "No one, including the salesman, knew the shotgun was loaded."

He said his son, Richard Benavides Jr., was shaken by the accident. "He was pretty scared when he saw me bleeding."

Adults stuck in middle of 'sandwich' dilemma

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Sarah, a computer operator, looks more than a little stressed these days.

At coffee, she confides that she feels besieged. Her mother, 75, is nearly blind with cataracts and needs daily attention. Doctors have said surgery will help, but cannot be done for several months.

Her college-age son, working a summer job in a university town, has been picked up for drunk driving and faces a court hearing and the loss of his driver's license.

Jim, an executive, knows his golf game is off. His daughter is pleading to go to a posh college even though a state university is much less expensive.

Since Jim has a good income, she won't qualify for financial aid at the more expensive school. At the same time, his father is hospitalized 150 miles away being evaluated for heart bypass surgery. His mother calls daily with medical reports and pleas for emotional support.

Jim is in the midst of the annual company audit and is working 12 hours a day, six days a week. He has to admit that even playing golf doesn't help him relax.

Mary Ann has always been a homemaker. She's looking forward to an empty nest and going back to work. But her parents, now nearly 80, need more and more help. She seems to be making the 50-mile trip to their home two or three times a week.

AT THE same time, her daughter is dating and Mary Ann knows she ought to be around the house. Her husband has just been transferred to the home office and is delighted over the prospect of no more traveling. Now, he tells Mary Ann, they can spend some time together. He looks forward to coming home to her.

All three families are struggling with what psychologists and sociologists call the "sandwich" dilemma. It's the push-pull of needs that besiege the 40- to 60-year-olds of the 1980s.

Psychotherapist John Lengle of Geneva, Ill., says this generation is experiencing pressures their parents never faced.

Lengle says "sandwich" pressures are family pressures. But they are felt most by those in the middle: the adults who have teenage or college-age children and whose own parents are still living. At the same time that the middle generation is trying to launch youngsters toward independence, the needs of aging parents create their own set of demands. The very parents who may have provided security for their adult children suddenly require more help, more advice, possibly even financial support.

The solution to the pressures isn't easy; it begins by developing a philosophy of life that places a value on oneself and includes time for personal pursuits.

LENGLE SAID the "sandwich" generation also is the "command" generation.

"These are the people who run the bulk of volunteer programs, make the majority of decisions in business, industry and the professions," he said. "These people in the 40- to 60-year-old age group are the people who find themselves caught between the conflicting and competing needs of the older and younger generations."

It's a brand new phenomenon, says Mich Barbezat, an instructor in human services at Elgin, Ill., Community College.

"We used to hear a lot about the empty nest syndrome," he said. "Now we're hearing about people in the middle years being pulled by the demands of four or even five generations."

That has occurred, said Phyllis Klein of Geneva, Ill., because people are living longer.

Klein is a certified hospital chaplain and director of senior citizen programs.

The problems faced by the sandwich generation are compounded because not much is known about adult development.

"In the first 50 years of the 20th century," Lengle said, "psychologists were trying to figure out how children developed. Since the 1950s, they've been trying to figure out how adolescents develop.

"We are just now seeing studies trying to figure out about where we are as adults. There is scanty research on the adult male, almost nothing on the adult female."

THE LACK of research means that even specialists in the field don't have data on which to base conclusions. Professional advice — from a physician, psychotherapist, social worker or others — may come as much from personal experience as scientific information.

The stresses experienced by these parents, Lengle believes, are more complex than any parents ever have experienced in the past.

Lengle cited the ever-increasing costs of a college education and the strain of parents and students to finance that education.

An additional pressure, he added, is that of a son or daughter who is gone from the home for nine months, living in a dorm with no curfew and few restrictions. Then that young adult returns home for three months of vacation. Parents expect him or her to live under house rules and eat at specified times.

"The issue for parents," Lengle said, "is needing to move from being the parent of an adolescent to being the parent of an adult, and establishing an adult-to-adult relationship, or recalibrating that relationship."

At the same time, many in the middle generation are recalibrating their relationships with aging parents.

KLEIN SAID retirement sometimes causes clinical depression in men, especially those who have defined their lives in terms of their job responsibilities.

"It comes down to the purpose of life and relationships with the family," she said. Men whose goal in life was to provide material benefits for their families may have neglected relationships and don't know what to do when they no longer go to work. Such stresses can convince couples in their 60s that they no longer have anything in common.

"Today, the rules have changed," Klein said. "Living into the fifth generation is not that unusual anymore."

Aging parents can place several demands on their adult children. The need for physical and emotional support and financial assistance may occur separately or all at once.

AGING PARENTS also force the sandwich generation to confront its own mortality.

"When we come to mid-life, we realize we've lived longer than we're going to live (in the future)," Lengle said. "We feel the need to make decisions about using the time that remains."

For the sandwich generation, decision is the name of the game.

Barbezat said it's easy for the sandwich generation to get "hooked" into certain patterns, especially when aging parents become dependent.

"People who become used to depending on you will not give you up easily," Barbezat said. "You can collapse, cry and scream, but the older person will attempt to hook you back into what you were doing in the past.

"Figure out what you want. That's not without cost. There are a lot of people who say they want to change, but they want to change without any cost. That doesn't compute. Change equals cost in emotions and relationships."

Klein warned that adult children should not expect their aging parents to change. If they've been optimistic and giving people, they probably will continue that way. If parents have been difficult, demanding, rigid or selfish, that, too, will continue.

AT THE same time that the middle generation is coping with these pressures, husbands and wives may be reviewing their own values. Wives who have sacrificed for their families may decide that it's time for a career.

At the same time, husbands who have been racing to achieve their goals may decide it's time to rest on their laurels. It's sometimes difficult for couples to re-evaluate their own relationships, even when they don't have the additional concerns of children and parents.

Beth Clark, a registered nurse, says, "Be patient and kind to yourself. Develop a personal philosophy of life. Take time for yourself and tell others that you need time for yourself.

"Set your emotional house in order. Choose a mentor and keep in touch. Identify where you get your cup filled and by whom. Validate your inner self with music, friends, poetry, keeping a journal, whatever is appropriate. Get in touch with your personal rhythms."

DEAR ABBY

Lupus drives despairing mother close to edge

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My doctor just told me that I have systemic lupus erythematosus. What do you know about this disease?

I am a 29-year-old school teacher, divorced, and have a 5-year-old daughter who stays with my mother most of the time.

I feel so tired I can hardly keep up with my job.

My problem developed shortly after my daughter was born. I developed a kidney infection and was never able to get my strength back.

I am taking some medicine that makes me retain fluid and have gained a lot of weight.

My face looks like a pumpkin, and the dizziness, diarrhea, headaches and the swelling of my hands and knees have driven me close to the edge.

My doctor says that lupus is a rare, mysterious disease with no cure in sight. What I need most is someone to talk to. Can you help me? — LADY WITH LUPUS

DEAR LADY: Contact the Lupus Foundation of America. Through its literature I have learned that there are about 500,000 known lupus victims in the United States, and probably twice that number who don't even know they have it. Most victims are women in their 20s and 30s.

Lupus has been misdiagnosed, misunderstood and ignored for years. It's especially frustrating because most lupus sufferers "look" so well between episodes that no one can believe that their energy level is so low they can hardly breathe or drag themselves out of bed.

It's enormously comforting to know that you are not alone. I urge you, and other interested parties — including doctors and others in the health care field — to write to the Lupus Foundation of America Inc., 1717 Massachusetts Ave. N.W., Suite 203, Washington, D.C. 20036.

You will be sent up-to-date information on the foundation's treatment and research findings, as well as a list of nearly 200 support groups throughout the United States and Puerto Rico, and 45 affiliated groups throughout the world. This is a nonprofit health organization, so please enclose a dollar for its material and a long, self-addressed, stamped (39 cents) envelope.

DEAR ABBY: "Zack" and I have been living together for over six years and are now planning a simple wedding by the local justice of the peace. Just the two of us and the attendants will be present.

The trouble is I would like to send out announcements of our marriage after we are married, but do not want it to look like I'm "hinting" for a wedding gift.

Is there a tactful way to accomplish this? Please help me out, Abby. My marriage awaits your response — I've already waited so long. — BEWILDERED BRIDE-TO-BE

DEAR BEWILDERED: Since you've waited this long, wait a few more months and send Christmas cards from "Mr. and Mrs. So-and-so."

You can add a personal note to family and special friends. That way you'll get your message across without giving the impression that you're hinting for a gift.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a long-standing debate between me and a co-worker: What is the proper way for a gentleman to wear an identification bracelet?

Should the name on the bracelet be readable by the wearer of the bracelet or the onlooker? — CONFUSED IN MILLBURN, N.J.

DEAR CONFUSED: I do not know whether there is a "wrong" or "right" way to wear an ID bracelet, but common sense tells me that it should be worn so that "onlookers" can read it. The wearer knows his name.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, "What Every Teen-Ager Ought to Know," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Some react positively to anxiety

Associated Press

Worry haunts everyone at some time or other. The churning stomach and sweaty palms; the restless nights and fitful dreams; the dread of obstacles just ahead.

But don't despair, some anxiety is normal and even healthy, according to Dr. John Feighner, director of the Feighner Research Institute, which tests antianxiety medications. "In an auto accident, anxiety produces immediate response," he says. "It heightens reaction time and allows rapid lifesaving actions."

Anxiety helps just as much in ordinary situations. For instance, worrying about money might spur the search for a better job.

Many people can't use anxiety constructively. For them, the feeling interferes with normal life. They have anxiety disorders. The Gallup Poll found that 30 to 40 percent of Americans suffer from anxiety. For 15 million people, anxiety is severe enough to require treatment.

Some symptoms, such as dizziness, can really signal physical illness. That's why accurate diagnosis is crucial. Experts disagree as to what triggers anxiety. Some pinpoint emotional causes while others focus on experience and biology.

Fear of revealing oneself may create intense anxiety, and persistent fear of rejection can immobilize a person and interfere with relationships. Support groups can provide a low-cost approach to getting help.

Some severe cases of anxiety may require drugs, says Dr. Marc Schuckit, professor of psychiatry at the University of California-San Diego. However, antianxiety drugs have numerous side effects ranging from drowsiness to dependence so doctors usually recommend them only after other therapies have failed.

Drugs alone won't solve the problem, but may make a patient more receptive to psychotherapy.

Leader of tax protests threatens rebellion

DALLAS (AP) — A protest leader says irate taxpayers could stage a tax rebellion in Texas despite a recent opinion by Attorney General Jim Mattox that tempered the power of rollback elections.

"The anger and frustration of taxpayers everywhere has reached a fever pitch," tax protester C.A. Stubbs of San Antonio said. "The pendulum is about ready to swing in the direction of a total tax rebellion in Texas."

He is president of the newly formed Texas Association of Concerned Taxpayers, which held its first convention in San Antonio two weeks ago. Almost 2,000 people attended.

Officials say irate taxpayers have become even more determined in their efforts in reaction to Mattox's ruling on the constitutionality of such elections. A growing number of taxpayer movements across the state are requesting rollback elections in protest of tax increases.

Mattox, in a legal opinion issued Sept. 25, ruled it was unconstitutional for voters to roll back a county's tax rate.

The opinion does not carry the weight of law and would have to pass a court challenge before it could be enforced. But it was a blow to tax protesters.

County administrators, who face a budget vacuum left by dwindling state and federal funds, were relieved.

But the ruling didn't address rollback attempts involving other taxing entities such as cities, school districts or hospital districts.

The opinion didn't discuss the other issues because the inquiry from DeWitt County officials involved the legality of county rollback elections and nothing else, Mattox spokeswoman Elna Christopher said.

"It would not surprise me to get some requests for opinions" on the other issues, said Ms. Christopher.

Experts said they were unsure what the full impact of the opinion will be.

"We're not sure what it does to any of the past rollback elections," Debbie Wheeler, special projects director in the office of general counsel at the State Property Tax Board in Austin, said.

"Since (previous rollback elections) are over and passed, it probably doesn't apply to them, but we're not sure at this point," said Ms. Wheeler. "We're still looking at the opinion."

Stubbs retired to San Antonio after being on the federal payroll for 31 years. He said he considers Mattox's ruling "a declaration of war on the taxpayers."

State officials stymied in dealing with DOE

AMARILLO (AP) — State officials and opponents of a proposed Panhandle site for a nuclear waste depository say they are frustrated in their dealings with the U.S. Department of Energy.

The latest example is the DOE's reply to one of many complaints on nuclear dump site work in Deaf Smith County, said Susan Zimmerman, geologist with Gov. Bill Clements' Nuclear Waste Programs Office in Austin.

DOE officials said they were not concerned that contractors preparing characterization studies could distort the Panhandle site's merits to get contracts for actual work on the multimillion-dollar repository project.

"This is typical of DOE," Ms. Zimmerman said. "Anytime we bring up a concern, 90 percent of the time they don't think it's a concern. They feel they know everything."

Along with locations in Nevada and Washington state, DOE chose a nine-square-mile Deaf Smith County site 35 miles west of Amarillo County in 1986 as finalists for the nation's first high-level radioactive waste dump.

Characterization studies of the Panhandle site began earlier this year and are expected to last until the mid-1990s. A final site is expected to be selected soon thereafter and opened in 2003.

The concern over contractor conflict of interest is the latest in a long line of dump opponents' concerns, including:

— Landowners of the proposed dump site near Vega for months asked for details on DOE's plan to buy or lease their land. DOE officials did not provide the information because it would "usurp our plans to be flexible," said Jeff Neff, DOE project manager in the Panhandle.

DOE officials have moved into the area to begin work and deal with local government concerns. Officials have said they would not place the dump in West Texas if it were dangerous.

— The DOE scheduled information meetings with the landowners to fulfill congressionally required consultation and cooperation sessions. In February, 20 landowners and their families walked out of one such DOE meeting because they said they had no information with which to ask intelligent questions.

Two weeks ago, DOE released a draft land acquisition plan, which opponents say is flawed and was issued to garner public support as criticism of the nuclear waste program mounts in Congress. DOE officials countered they were merely following procedure.

STATE IN BRIEF

Five men killed, two injured in truck mishap

GONZALEZ (AP) — Five men were killed and two were injured when their pickup truck struck a tree near Gonzalez, authorities say.

Three of the victims were employed as laborers at the Hawn Ranch, a 3,000-acre quarterhorse ranch, a spokesman for the ranch said.

The men were on their way to work early Sunday when the driver lost control of the truck on Farm Road 532 and slammed into the tree, the ranch spokesman said.

Officers said they were not able to determine how many men were in the cab of the truck and how many were in the bed of the truck.

The victims were identified as Carlos Monson, 19, Angel Gamez, 30, Isidro Mendoza, 20, his father, Pedro Mendosa, 50, and Ismael Gamez, 20, all of Gonzalez.

Jesus Monson, 20, suffered lower back injuries and Candelario Villanueva, 29, suffered a broken leg. Both Gonzalez men were in fair condition Sunday night at Gonzalez Memorial Hospital, authorities said.

Man killed during chase

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man driving a stolen pickup truck was killed by police during a high-speed chase that lasted about 30 minutes, police say.

The truck's owner held on in the bed of the truck until he was forced to jump, authorities said.

One police officer suffered minor injuries.

The driver of the stolen truck, who suffered gunshots wounds, was taken to Medical Center Hospital where he later died. He had no identification on him, police said.

The incident began with the theft of a late-model pickup truck about 6:30 p.m. Sunday at a service station, police spokesman Sgt. Paul Buske said.

The owner, Martin Dale Good, 33, had left his keys in the truck when a thief jumped in and took off, Buske said.

Firms unsure what to charge

EL PASO (AP) — American insurance company officials are uncertain what to charge Mexican nationals for auto liability coverage, but for now a Mexican must pay slightly less than a Texan with three traffic tickets.

The cost is still too high for most drivers in Juarez, across the border, who either are staying home or ignoring the month-old Texas law that requires all out-of-state drivers to carry liability coverage.

Grim crime statistics new feature of almanac

DALLAS (AP) — Grim and sometimes unsettling statistics are included in the pages of the 1988-89 Texas Almanac, the cover of which pictures a sunny, calm beach that belies the 640-page book.

A cover story on Texas beaches and problems with litter continues on page 56. But the truly unnerving facts appear on page 261, under the section entitled "Crime and Punshiment."

Bad news and disturbing statistics are in the 12-page section:

"In 1986, the crime rate took a leap of almost 14.9 percent...The state's six largest counties — Bexar, Dallas, El Paso, Harris, Tarrant and Travis — have a total crime rate of 9,894.2 index crimes per 100,000 population."

Index crimes are murder, rape, aggravated assault, armed robbery, burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft.

"Individually, Potter County (Amarillo) in the Panhandle had the highest crime rate in 1986, reaching 13,202.8, an increase of 27 percent over the previous year...Dallas County, with 12,352.19 crimes per 100,000, and Tarrant County, with 11,425.19, followed Potter.

"Texas' high crime rate has brought about another phenomenon: An average of one in every 43 of the state's citizens is under some sort of supervision by the criminal justice system. This includes the number of people on felony or misdemeanor probation, on parole, in prison or in local jails."

Among urban areas, Dallas has one of every 35 persons under supervision, the almanac states. In metropolitan counties, Bell has one in 25, Potter one in 27 and Cameron one in 29.

The section on crime, which is a new feature, is necessary because it is Texas' number one social problem, said editor Mike Kingston.

But he said the almanac didn't just report on the doom and gloom in the state. Kingston has packed the book with facts about such areas as political contests, scientific studies, population trends, business activities and cultural happenings.

It's finally over: Baseball heads for playoffs

Tigers pass pressure test

DETROIT (AP) — It was a lesson in pressure baseball and only the Detroit Tigers could pass the test.

And it was fitting that two players who have won battles to save their careers — the greatest pressure of all — should lead the way as the Tigers won their second American League East title in four years.

But it took the full 162 games.

The Tigers, on Larry Herndon's ninth home run and Frank Tanana's six-hitter, beat the backsliding Toronto Blue Jays 1-0 Sunday on only three hits.

THE TIGERS, who haven't had a day off in almost three weeks, planned to rest today, then fly to Minneapolis on Tuesday. They open the AL Playoffs against the Twins in the Metrodome on Wednesday-night.

Herndon, playing on aching knees that likely will require offseason surgery, took a pay cut to remain with the Tigers this season. Tanana became a real pitcher after repairing both his arm and his fast-lane lifestyle.

"If you look at this series here, nobody hit the ball," Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson said. "I don't think people understand the pressure.

"What did we get? We got one fly ball. So, we got lucky."

The fly ball was Herndon's second-inning shot that just barely got over the fence in left field.

"I didn't really think the ball was out," said Herndon, whose solo home run won Game 1 of the 1984 World Series in San Diego. "It was an inside pitch. I saw George Bell go back and heard the crowd's reaction. But I didn't see George throw it back in, so I figured it went out."

The Tigers and Blue Jays played seven times in the last 11 days of the season. The Blue Jays won the first three, in Toronto last weekend, to take a 3½-game lead over Detroit.

They were three outs from a sweep in the fourth game until Kirk Gibson's home run in the ninth gave Detroit new life. The Tigers won that game in the 13th and the Blue Jays didn't win another game the remander of the season.

But it would be wrong to simply say the Blue Jays collapsed.

The Blue Jays lost three games to the Milwaukee Brewers who are, perhaps, the best team in the AL East right now.

"You can't say they let seven games get away," Tigers designated hitter Bill Madlock said. "Milwaukee right now is awfully tough. It ain't no sin to lose to the Brewers.

"And we beat them. They didn't let us. Whatever it takes, we go out and do it. You can't pick when you'll go in a slump. We did a good job. We didn't score many runs, but our pitching and defense was the key."

Then came the showdown in Motown. Detroit won all three. But, all seven games between the contenders was settled by one run.

"There was a lot of intensity in this whole seven-game series," Toronto's Lloyd Moseby said. "They took advantage of the breaks they got.

"Remember, Detroit is a great ballclub with good players."

The pitching throughout the series was especially good.

Tanana, 15-10, allowed just six hits. Using a mixture of sliders, sinkers and the occassional well-placed fastball, Tanana struck out nine in turning in only his fifth complete game.

"I don't go nine innings often," Tanana said. "But, I was pitching well. It was just a matter of going after them. I was just taking them one at a time.

"This is great. It's a wonderful moment."

TORONTO'S JIMMY Key, 17-8, thwarted in his attempt to match the club record for victories, was every bit as tough as Tanana. Key, who is 0-2 against the Tigers this season and 0-3 in his career at Tiger Stadium, allowed three hits, walking one and striking out three.

"It's tough to put in perspective what has happened," Toronto's Rance Mulliniks said. "I mean, all those one-run games. The Tigers deserve all the credit. They showed a lot of character and class.

"They won the 13-inning game in Toronto. It was a key game. If we had won, it might have been the end of the Tigers. They were the better ballclub. I'll go home and watch and root for the Tigers on television."

"We've got a chance to find out if we're the best team in baseball," Detroit's Kirk Gibson said. "It's not been easy. From this point on, it won't be any easier.

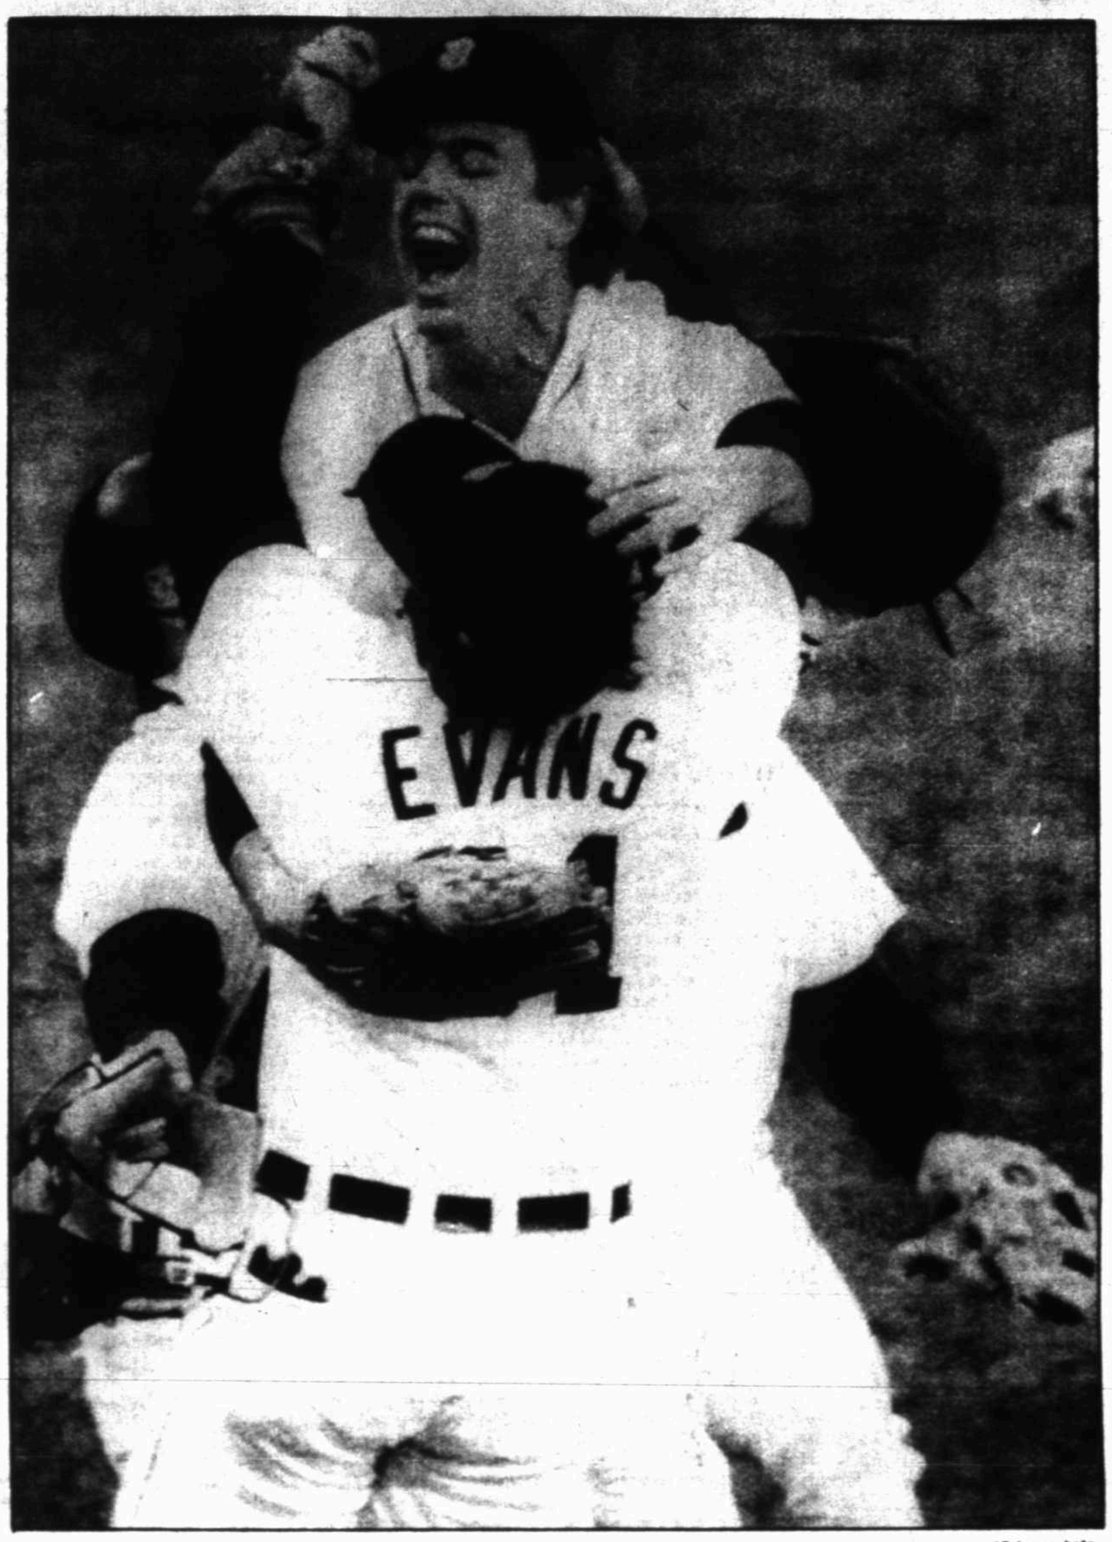

"We've had our backs against the wall all season. If that happens again, maybe this will help us."

It was the Tigers 11th first-place finish and third AL East championship, their second under Anderson who led them to the World Series title in 1984.

"This is so much sweeter," Herndon said in the champagne-splashed clubhouse. "We had to work from the beginning all the way to the end here."

"We've been consistent all year except for two bad stretches," Blue Jays Manager Jimy Williams said, "and this is one of them."

It's also the last for awhile.

Cards limp into NL series

ST. LOUIS (AP) — If Manager Whitey Herzog had his way, the St. Louis Cardinals would be gearing up for the National League playoffs with 25 players instead of 24.

"I just feel common sense dictates that if Jack Clark can't play the first five games, I ought to be able to submit 25 names," said Herzog, who is caught in a quandary created by his star player's injury. "If he can play in the sixth game, I ought to take one (name) off."

Instead, Clark will be on St. Louis' banged-up roster of 24 players whose names have been submitted by Herzog for the best-of-seven playoff series beginning Tuesday night at Busch Stadium against the San Francisco Giants.

Clark, the Cardinals' only bona fide slugger with 35 home runs and 106 RBI, isn't expected to start anytime before Game 6 because of an ankle injury that has sidelined him since Sept. 9.

He pinch-hit on Saturday and Sunday, popping out and striking out in losses to the New York Mets.

"There are certain pitches I'm not quite able to get to. I'm still not able to move around," said Clark, a former Giant who was traded to St. Louis on Feb. 1, 1985. "I was really looking forward to playing against my old team."

Because Herzog also needs to carry outfielders Willie McGee and Jim Lindeman, who both have minor injuries, he will go with only eight pitchers.

"Actually, it isn't going to make much difference the first two games," said Herzog, who plans to start right-hander Danny Cox in Game 1.

"Where you can get in trouble is if (Joe) Magrane doesn't throw his 5-6 innings that third (game) start. That's the big game," Herzog said.. "Then you could get in trouble (and) use the whole bullpen. I'd go with nine (pitchers) if everybody was healthy."

Cox, 11-9, will be matched up against Rick Reuschel, 13-9, in Game 1 and St. Louis left-hander John Tudor, 10-2, will be pitted against San Francisco left-hander Dave Dravecky in Game 2 Wednesday afternoon.

The playoffs shift to the West Coast for Game 3, with Herzog planning to start Magrane, a rookie left-hander, followed by Greg Mathews, another left-hander, in Game 4. Lefty Atlee Hammaker and either Mike Krukow or Mike LaCoss, both right-handed, are scheduled as their pitching opponents.

The Giants won the season series between the two clubs 7-5.

NFL fans take a hike on owners' 'Sham Sunday'

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times News Service

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — It will be remembered as Sham Sunday, but maybe it will be the only one. When the National Football League team player representatives meet Monday night at an airport hotel in Chicago, maybe they will realize that the strike is crumbling, that 38 players crossed the picket line last Friday, that dozens more will cross it this week, that it's time to realize that the club owners' resistance to free agency isn't worth the loss of salary.

Not that Sunday's games between the "replacement" teams endeared the club owners to the fans.

IN THEIR persistence in putting on games that actually will count in the standings toward the Super Bowl XXII playoffs, the club owners created the type of sad situation that Slappy White, the nightclub comedian, once described best.

"Things are so bad," White joked, "that even the folks who don't intend to pay ain't buyin.'"

Things are so bad in the NFL now that even the folks who come for the tailgate party ain't comin.'

In an unseasonable chill, only 12,370 people appeared at Giants Stadium Sunday to watch impostors in Dallas Cowboy uniforms ground the wingless Jets, 38-24. Tex Schramm, the Cowboys' president, had promised "competitive, exciting" football in what amounts to rookie scrimmages that count in the standings. But it was more compost than competitive. And only the dude ranch Cowboys found it exciting. You would, too, if you deposited counterfeit money in a bank, and the bank accepted it for your account.

It could get worse. Unless the strike ends soon, next Sunday's opponent for the wingless Jets will be the imitation Indianapolis Colts, suddenly a pretender to the playoffs after Sunday's 47-6 rout of the devalued Buffalo Bills.

BOTH THE Jet and Cowboy replacement teams displayed enthusiasm and energy Sunday, but not much style, certainly not NFL style. They knew how to slap an occasional high-five, but they didn't know how to slap down enough passes. Everybody seemed to be playing in slow motion. But at least the players earned their varsity letters, if not their paychecks. For the rest of their lives they can sit around and say, "Yeah, I played in the NFL, you can look it up." Those who do look it up will discover the terrible truth. But for trivia buffs, two moments might endure.

During the third quarter, John Chirico, a 220-pound running back from Columbia, chugged to a 3-yard touchdown that lifted the Jets to within 24-17.

"That," a noisy voice announced in the press box with a lion's tongue in cheek, "is the second touchdown Columbia has scored all season."

In the first quarter, seven dude-ranch Cowboys surrounded a Jet punt near the 2-yard line, but let it squirt into the end zone for a touchback.

Even before Sunday's games, an undercurrent of resentment existed among some NFL people over the quicker adaptation to the strike of the clubs represented by their owners or officials on the Management Council's executive committee — Tampa Bay, Dallas, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Miami and New England.

According to some NFL sources, those clubs seemed to be more prepared than others to assemble the so-called replacement players.

OF THOSE six clubs, Tampa Bay, Dallas, Pittsburgh and Miami won, and Cincinnati lost, 10-9, to San Diego.

Of the 22 starters on offense and defense for the dude ranch Cowboys, 19 had been in the Cowboys' training camp this year and another had been in the Cowboy training camp in previous years. In contrast, the two other starters had been in training camp this year with other NFL teams. And those 22 starters did not include the three best known Cowboys on offense who had crossed the picket line but who did not play Sunday — Danny White at quarterback, Tony Dorsett at running back and Mike Renfro at wide receiver.

"It just seems like an injustice to me," one prominent NFL personality said. "Those teams with people on the executive committee seemed to be ready to assemble a strike team."

Thus far, 12 NFL teams have maintained their union solidarity on the picket line. Two of those clubs, the Giants and the San Francisco 49ers, will be represented by replacement players at Giants Stadium Monday night in the first test of the prime-time television audience. Several prominent players on the 49ers, including Joe Montana, had considered crossing the line, but none did. No Giant has crossed the picket line, although Lawrence Taylor, the All-Pro linebacker, has talked of the possibility later this week.

"If the talent is comparable, the defense has an advantage," Bill Parcells, the Giants' coach, said. "It takes longer for the offense to get things together. The defense can run around and get it done."

DESPITE THE Giants' 0-2 record prior to the strike, nobody will confuse Monday night's Giant team with the defending Super Bowl champions. After talking the other day about expecting "another guy to come in," Parcells was asked if he meant a replacement player or a striking player.

"One of the new guys," he said quickly. "I don't mean one of my Giants players."

As with those players who represented the Jets Sunday, Monday night's Giants will be listed in the team's all-time roster. That still doesn't make them what Parcells described as "Giants players." But such is the shame and the sham of the National Football League strike.

No wonder A&M wants game shift

Battles

Texas A&M can't be blamed for trying to move the game with Texas Tech to Dallas on an annual basis, even if it means losing a home date every other year.

At least, they wouldn't have to come to Lubbock, where a far superior team can get its nose bloodied for no apparent reason.

I'm sure that Jackie Sherrill is responsible for the attempt to move the game to Dallas' Cotton Bowl and I can't say that I blame him.

"We can get a great deal from the State Fair people," I can almost see Jackie arguing for the move. "It would be on opening day of the State Fair and it would bring the game to a lot of deprived Tech fans who might not otherwise get a chance to see their team play."

"I know we lose a game in College Station," Sherrill can be envisioned going on. "But that's better than going to Lubbock."

"Two years ago we went out there and had to have a burned out light replaced in the dressing room and it took four of those Tech people to do it, one to hold the bulb and three to turn the chair he was standing on. Same thing when we ordered scramble eggs for breakfast, one guy held the skillet while four other guys ...."

"I tell you, get them in Jones Stadium, and these guys are unthinking, unreasonable, insane fanatics. It's, it's like playing a bunch of Aggies."

SATURDAY A&M came into Jones Stadium with a team that had won two straight SWC titles. Sure, they were breaking in a new quarterback, but you couldn't ask for a better opponent against whom to break in a freshman than against Tech, right?

The Raiders' 27-21 win was typical of what can happen to A&M on the South Plains. It dates back to the 1960s when Donny Anderson and Tom Wilson dreamed up a play in the final seconds to pull out a victory.

In 1979 two fourth quarter TDs gave Tech a 21-20 victory and Ricky Gann's 51-yard field goal gave Tech a 3-0 upset win two years later.

Of course, A&M wins as many as it loses, but it's always accompanied by a severe fright.

One year the Aggies came into Lubbock with four straight season-opening losses. On the last play of the game, the Ags scored to win, went on to win all the rest and beat Alabama in the Cotton Bowl for Gene Stallings.

It all adds to the lore of a colorful rivalry, but what's important is the significance this win has in relation to the current season for Tech.

This was more than just an upset victory. Tech struck early on two sensational plays, Tyrone Thurman's emotion-stirring 74-yard punt return the first time the Raiders touched the ball. Then Billy Joe Tolliver hit Wayne Walker on a 76-yard scoring pass, Tech career records for both the passer and receiver.

A total rout seemed in the offing when Tech drove to the Aggie 21 on its next possession. The worst that could happen, it seemed, would be a Scott Segrist field goal. This was like the first quarter against Baylor a week earlier, only Tech was doing it without the help of opposition mistakes.

Then came the two interceptions of Tolliver, followed by 66 and 19-yard A&M TD runs.

THE RUNS by Keith Woodside and Darren Lewis were the kind of tide turners that might break an opponent's back. However, this was Lubbock and the opponent was Texas Tech.

Instead of folding, Tech continued to dominate the Aggie offense. The Raiders didn't cave in. They came of age. They took A&M's best shot and came back. They made the same mistakes that they had in the 36-22 loss at Waco and the defense neutralized them, saving the game with interceptions by linebacker Michael Johnson and safety Brad Cowan in the game's waning moments.

"This is a lot like that victory up in Fayetteville last fall," said Johnson. "This is going to put us on the road."

"The reason I have to apologize is because we quit with a capital Q, Q-U-I-T. There is no other explanation for it, I defy anybody to come up with a better explanation. The mistake I made was not in overevaluating the talent. The talent is there. The mistake was overevaluating the heart and character of the players. What I misjudged was what they've got inside." — Dallas Green, president of the Chicago Cubs.

SWC Superlatives...

BEST DEFENSE — Texas Tech held A&M to only 13 first downs.

MOST SPECTACULAR PLAY — Tyrone Thurman's 74-yard touchdown on a punt return for Texas Tech in a 27-21 victory over the Texas Aggies.

BEST INDIVIDUAL DEFENSE — Baylor cornerback Robert Blackmon returned not one, but two interceptions for a touchdowns in the Bears' 30-18 victory over Houston.

STREAKS — TCU hasn't won an SWC opener since 1988. Arkansas has won 17 consecutive SWC season openers.

BEST QUOTE — Texas Tech's Spike Dykes after the victory over A&M: "It will do a lot for us, but we can't bask in the sunshine too long."

SECOND BEST QUOTE — After Texas' surprisingly tough game against Rice, Longhorns' Coach David McWilliams was asked about this Saturday's upcoming game with No. 1 ranked Oklahoma: "We'll probably be 50 point underdogs."

This view of Buffalo's Rich Stadium was a typical site around the NFL Sunday as fans avoided the non-union games. These games, however, will count in the NFL standings.

America's Team in first

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — It might be the only game they ever play in the NFL, a short but delicious taste of football's good life. For one day, at least, they were America's Team.

Kevin Sweeney, Kelvin Edwards, Alvin Blount, Mike Dwyer, Dale Jones and Tommy Haynes replaced more famous and accomplished Dallas Cowboys on Sunday and routed the New York Jets 38-24.

They had help from some of the strike-defying veterans, particularly Too Tall Jones, who led a defensive charge that totaled 11 sacks. But they were lead players, too, not just supporting actors.

"This game belonged to them," Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said. "This was a showcase for them."

So Danny White, Tony Dorsett and Mike Renfro, three offensive regulars who crossed picket lines, watched from the sidelines. Sweeney, who replaced White at quarterback, completed just six passes. But three were for touchdowns and, as White said, Sweeney "was flawless running the team."

Blount rushed for 72 yards and a TD in place of "TD," who admitted "I feel apart" from his new teammates.

Edwards, who was with New Orleans for six games last year, caught 33- and 35-yard touchdown passes and, he hoped, "showed some people I can do the job in the NFL."

Haynes, a safety from Southern Cal, led Dallas with eight tackles, including two sacks. Dale Jones, a linebacker who was drafted in the 10th round out of Tennessee, was cut by both Dallas and Houston last month. Against New York, he had six tackles and recovered a fumble.

So did Dwyer, a demonstrative DT from Massachusetts who celebrated every outstanding defensive play with his arms raised and pumping in the air.

"You have to play like it's your last game," Dwyer said. "That's our situation. The guys who can make the most of this might have their dreams realized."

Sweeney's NFL dreams didn't seem far-fetched when he set the NCAA all-time passing yardage record of 10,623 yards at Fresno State. But he wasn't selected until the seventh round of April's draft, then was cut in preseason.

"Danny came in off a bad wrist and he had to sort of learn how to throw all over again," Sweeney said. "I'm not saying I was treated unfairly because I wasn't, but he got a lot more turns and I was unable to get them.

"Hopefully, this will help me here or somewhere."

About 25 of those strikers joined 20 members of the New York Giants in picketing outside the stadium gates. They also signed autographs for fans in a peaceful demonstration. Several Jets said they would picket tonight's Giants-49ers game.

The league says Sunday's results will count, which means both Dallas and the Jets are 2-1. The Cowboys are tied with Washington atop the NFC East, while the Jets lead the AFC East.

Oilers' Pease cuts up Denver, 40-10

DENVER (AP) — Brent Pease, making his first NFL start, faced the usual perils of a young quarterback trying to stay composed and properly reading the defense.

There was one other problem: "Trying to remember everybody's name."

Ten days of practice apparently were all Pease and his Houston Oiler teammates needed as they buried the Denver Broncos 40-10 in an NFL strike game Sunday.

Pease, a late cut of the Minnesota Vikings, completed 15 of 25 passes for 260 yards and a touchdown. He also ran for another score.

The Oilers generated 414 total yards compared to Denver's 220, and linebacker Eugene Seale ensured the victory with a 73-yard return of an interception for a third-quarter score.

It was the most one-sided victory on the road for the Oilers since 1975, and it raised their record to 2-1. Denver fell to 1-1-1.

Prior to the game, oddsmakers had installed Houston's replacement team as the heaviest underdog in the NFL. No one, it seemed, knew what to expect of these free agent squads.

"I've never felt more of an 'unknown' than I did today," Oiler Coach Jerry Glanville said. "I was throwing up from 4 o'clock this morning until game time.

"Our quarterback played excellent. Every time he called an audible, it worked."

Broncos Coach Dan Reeves took the blame for the rout.

"We obviously were not prepared as well as Houston was," he said.

"The unknown is always exciting. It can also be awfully painful. This time it was painful. I don't like to get beat at anything, and I especially don't like to get embarrassed.

"We wanted to do a good job today and put on a good show for our fans, and we didn't do it."

Reeves said Pease "was outstanding. He showed a lot of poise, and he knew where to go with the football when we blitzed him."

Larry Linne scores in loss

Hogeboom throws five TD passes

Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — Former Midland Lee and UTEP star Larry Linne caught a 6-yard touchdown pass from Bob Bleier, but it wasn't enough in New England's 20-10 loss to the Cleveland Browns.

Larry Mason scored twice in the fourth quarter to lead the Browns. Mason, released on Cleveland's final cut in training camp, had a pair of 1-yard touchdown runs to bring the Browns back from a 10-6 deficit. He finished with 133 yards on 32 attempts.

Colts 47, Bills 6

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Gary Hogeboom threw five touchdowns passes and Walter Murray had 161 yards receiving as the Indianapolis Colts defeated Buffalo. Hogeboom, one of the first veterans to defy the NFL strike, completed 17 of 25 passes for 259 yards. Murray's yardage included touchdown catches of 37 and 11 yards.

Hogeboom threw for touchdowns on the first five Indianapolis scoring drives, the longest to Murray for 37 yards in the first quarter.

Hogeboom's five-touchdown performance tied a club record set in 1965 by Gary Cuozzo.

The Colts had 19 players with previous NFL experience, compared with just seven of the replacement Bills.

Saints 37, Rams 10

NEW ORLEANS — New Orleans quarterback John Fourcade threw three touchdown passes, including an 82-yarder to tight end Mike Waters, as the New Orleans Saints beat the Los Angeles Rams. The touchdown to Waters was the longest pass play in Saints history.

Fourcade completed 16 of 21 passing attempts for 222 yards and ran six times for 39 yards.

Steelers 28, Falcons 12

ATLANTA — Steve Bono threw for one touchdown and ran for another as the Pittsburgh Steelers defeated the Atlanta Falcons. Bono, a former UCLA quarterback, passed for 164 yards, completing 12 of 22 attempts.

Backup Reggie Collier connected on an 11-yard score to Joey Clinkscales while Earnest Jackson had a 1-yard touchdown to finish the Pittsburgh scoring. Clinkscales had six catches for 150 yards while Jackson rushed for 104 yards on 29 carries.

Chargers 10, Bengals 9

CINCINNATI — Jeff Gaffney kicked a 24-yard field goal with 2:44 left to play as the San Diego Chargers beat the Cincinnati Bengals. The Chargers were down 9-0 before a 1-yard touchdown run by Frank Middleton and Gaffney's kick gave them the victory.

Bengals quarterbacks Adrian Breen and David Walter combined for minus-13 yards passing.

The game featured four fumbles, a missed field goal and a blocked field goal in the first half. Three of the first eight plays of the game ended in fumbles.

Bears 35, Eagles 3

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Hohensee passed for three first-half touchdowns and the Chicago defense recorded 11 sacks as the Bears routed Philadelphia. Hohensee, a bartender two weeks ago, had scoring passes of 9, 20 and 3 yards while completing 12 of 22 passes.

Pirates look to next year

Associated Press

When the San Francisco Giants and St. Louis Cardinals meet in the opener of the National League Championship Series Tuesday night, the Pittsburgh Pirates will be looking ahead to spring training with anticipation.

"We gained some respect this year, but there's still a way to go," Pirates catcher Mike LaValliere said. "Nobody's satisfied with fourth place because we're looking for bigger and better things. But at least we don't have to go into next season with that last-place tag."

The Pirates completed the season with a 4-2 victory over Philadelphia Sunday and three-game sweep of the Phillies that left the teams tied for fourth in the NL East. After a 46-59 start, the Pirates won 34 of their last 57 games to finish out of last place for the first time since 1983.

A crowd of 26,734 at Three Rivers Stadium for the finale treated its young team like a pennant winner. After the game, the fans stood and applauded as the players came out the dugout, many of them throwing their caps to the fans.

Reds 2, Astros 1

Cincinnati put a frustrating cap on Nolan Ryan's frustrating season for Houston.

Ryan, 8-16, led the majors in strikeouts with 270 and the NL in earned run average at 2.76. He struck out 10 and walked one in seven innings, allowing two runs in the fifth on an RBI single by Terry Francona and a run-scoring double by Terry McGriff.

Tom Browning, 10-13, pitched an eight-hitter for eight innings for the Reds for his fifth victory in seven decisions. John Franco pitched the ninth for his 32nd save.

Giants 5, Braves 4

West Division champion San Francisco hit four homers, including Bob Brenly's game-winner in the 10th inning, to establish a club record for a season.

Will Clark hit two homers to give the Giants a 3-0 lead and Chili Davis added his 34th in the sixth inning, tying the score 4-4.

Baseball

Brenly's leadoff homer off reliever Jim Acker, 4-9, gave the Giants 205 for the season, one more than they had in 1962, when the club won its only NL pennant in San Francisco.

Right-hander Randy Bockus, 1-0, worked a scoreless 10th for his first major-league victory.

Mets 11, Cardinals 6

New York finished second in the East with a five-run ninth inning against St. Louis, highlighted by Lee Mazzilli's two-run single and Tim Teufel's two-run double.

Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez homered for the Mets, and Darryl Strawberry added a run-scoring single in the ninth to help the Mets wind up their season series against the first-place Cardinals at 9-9.

The Cardinals used seven pitchers in their tune-up for the NL playoffs, which begin Tuesday night at Busch Stadium against the Giants.

Cubs 7, Expos 5

Last-place Chicago knocked Montreal out of a second-place tie in the East as Dave Martinez hit a two-run triple and Rafael Palmeiro and Keith Moreland added solo homers.

Andre Dawson managed only a single in four at-bats as he fell one short of becoming the first major-leaguer since George Foster in 1977 to hit 50 homers.

Lee Smith worked the final two innings for his 36th save.

Dodgers 5, Padres 3

Steve Sax went 3-for-3 and drove in two runs with a homer and a single, leading Los Angeles over San Diego.

Rookie right-hander Shawn Hillegas, 4-3, went six innings, allowing two runs and five hits, for the victory. Alejandro Pena pitched the ninth for his 11th save.

Sax's homer, his sixth of the season, led off the game against Ed Whitson, 10-13.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

White Sox 5, Athletics 2

Reggie Jackson had two hits in the final game of his 21-year career, but Ron Hassey hit a two-run homer to help Chicago beat Oakland.

Jackson, who ended his career with 563 home runs, doubled in the first inning to drive in a run for his 1,702nd RBI. Jackson also walked, flied out, and singled in his last at-bat in the eighth.

"I want to be remembered as somebody who always played hard and as a guy who won," said Jackson, who was a member a five World Series champion teams.

Mariners 7, Rangers 4

Seattle's Mark Langston struck out 10 in six innings to win the AL strikeout title for the second straight season as the Mariners beat Texas. The Rangers finished in a tie for last place in the AL West with California.

Langston, 19-13, finished the season with 262 strikeouts while Boston's Roger Clemens totaled 256.

Indians 10, Angels 6

Cleveland hit four homers to set a single-season home run record with 187 and left California in a last-place tie with Texas.

Joe Carter singled for a third-inning run and hit a three-run homer in the seventh to finish the year with 32 homers and 106 runs batted in.

Royals 10, Twins 1

The AL West champion Twins head into the playoffs with a five-game losing streak. Since ending a six-game winning streak, the Twins closed the regular season losing seven of nine to finish 85-77, two games ahead of the Royals.

In their personal duel for the AL hit title, Kansas City rookie Kevin Seitzer and the Twins' Kirby Puckett each had two hits to finish with 207.

Red Sox 4, Brewers 0

Roger Clemens became the first AL pitcher to win 20 games two straight years since Tommy John in 1979-80, throwing a two-hitter as Boston beat Milwaukee. Clemens finished with a 20-9 record after starting 4-6.

Orioles 4, Yankees 2

Cal Ripken hit a two-run homer to help Baltimore beat the New York Yankees, ending one of the worst seasons in the Orioles' history. The Orioles closed the season at 67-95.

Corpus Christi's Terry Labonte ...winner of Holly Farms 400

Labonte gains first '87 NASCAR victory

Associated Press

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. — Terry Labonte raced away from the field to win the Holly Farms 400 NASCAR stock car race at North Wilkesboro Speedway, his first victory of the season and first since the spring of 1986. The 400-lap race ended under a caution flag, with Labonte running well ahead of second-place Dale Earnhardt, the only other driver on the lead lap. Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr., starting in 27th position, rallied for eighth place.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Local favorite Bobby Rahal overcame teammate Jochen Mass with 11 laps remaining to win the 300-kilometer Columbus 500 race for GTP cars Sunday. Rahal, a resident of nearby Dublin, pulled past Mass, who was also driving a Bayside Disposal Porsche 962, on the hairpin turn of the 70th lap of the 81-lap race through the streets of downtown Columbus.

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. — Doug Heveron took advantage of a crash with seven laps remaining to regain the lead and go on to win the Lowe's 150 modified race Saturday at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

GOLF

ST ANDREW'S, Scotland — Curtis Strange shot a course-record 62 Sunday in the consolation match, while England silenced a vast gallery of Scots to beat the home nation and win the $1 million Dunhill Cup team golf tournament.

The American captain's 10-under-par 62 came against Australian Greg Norman as the United States won third place 2-1. England, which had scraped into the final after a dramatic semifinal collapse by Australia, then upset the favored Scots by the same score.

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Great Britain's Ken Brown shot a methodical 2-under-par 68 Sunday to win the $400,000 Southern Open, capturing his first PGA Tour triumph by seven strokes. Brown's victory margin equalled the largest on the tour this year. Robert Wrenn won the Buick Open and Tom Kite the Kemper Open by seven shots.

Brown, 30, a member of the victorious European Ryder Cup squad that defeated the United States last week, held a five-shot lead entering the last round and never faltered in gaining the first-place prize of $72,000.

CLEMMONS, N.C. — Al Geiberger shot a 3-under-par 67 for a two-stroke victory over fellow-Senior rookie Dave Hill in the inaugural Vantage Championship Sunday. Geiberger came from two shots off the pace with a 31 on the front nine and led by a minimum of two strokes the rest of the way.

TENNIS

NEW ORLEANS — Top-seeded Chris Evert scored a 6-3, 7-5 victory over Lori McNeil to win the singles title in the $150,000 Virginia Slims of New Orleans tennis tournament. McNeil, 23, seeded third, had beaten defeated Evert in the quarter finals of the U.S. Open last month, but Evert broke her twice in the first set.

SYDNEY, Australia — Ramesh Krishnan overcame 1-4 deficits in each of the first two sets to defeat Wally Masur 8-6, 6-4, 6-4 and give India a 3-2 victory over defending champion Australia in the Davis Cup semifinals — spoiling the Australians' hopes for a 27th Cup.

India will meet the winner of the Sweden-Spain tie, which concludes today.

SAN FRANCISCO — Peter Lundgren, who would rather have been in Spain playing Davis Cup for Sweden when the Transamerica Open began, instead captured his third title Sunday night with a 6-1, 7-5 victory over Jim Pugh.

PRO FOOTBALL

WASHINGTON — The NFL Players Association called a meeting today of its 28 representatives amid reports that more players were ready to cross picket lines and their leaders were ready to abandon the key issue of free agency.

Attendance was down by three-quarters at Sunday's games with replacement players. At Philadelphia, 4,074 showed up instead of the usual 66,000.

MC netters bag 1st, 2nd

From Staff Reports

MONTERREY, Mex. — Midland College opened its fall tennis season over the weekend by taking a first place and a runner-up finish at the Second International Tournament.

The MC women's team breezed through three matches at the tournament despite having only five players and forfeiting at No. 6 singles and No. 3 doubles in each team match.

The Lady Chaparrals defeated the Mexican national champion team from Guadalajara in the finals 6-3, but have filed a protest in the only loss incurred on the playing court.

The men's squad breezed through their opening two matches but then fell, 5-4, to host Monterrey Tech in the final.

Both MC teams opened the season with wins over UT-San Antonio on the way down to Monterry early last week.

Midland College will continue the fall schedule by going to the Rolex Tournament this weekend in Abilene, an individual qualifier for the national small college tournament in Flordia.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q6 ♡KQ832 ◇94 ♣AQ63
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	2 ◇

What action do you take?
A.—It's time to tell partner that you have a minimum opening bid with no particular fit for his suit. The correct way to do that is to pass. Don't bid either two hearts or three clubs. The former would show a better suit, the latter a far stronger hand.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♡AKJ52 ◇953 ♣KQ9
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Resist the temptation to show a good five-card heart suit by rebidding it. For the moment, the most important feature of your hand is the excellent support for partner's suit. Tell partner of the good news by raising to three clubs. If partner has heart support, he can still reveal it.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A94 ♡AQ985 ◇Q103 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	1 ♠	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Since partner's bid is forcing, you must do something. You don't really want to bid no trump when your only stopper in the enemy suit is the ace. Therefore, you are reluctantly compelled to rebid your heart suit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ4 ♡AQ953 ◇1085 ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What action do you take?
A.—The same logic applies here as in the first example. While you have good stoppers in the enemy suit, your first task is to tell partner that you have a minimum. Pass. Partner's next move will give you a clue as to how to proceed.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡KQ73 ◇AQJ652 ♣J5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Even though you have a partial misfit, your playing strength is such that two diamonds would be an underbid, while three diamonds risks losing the heart suit. Your hand fully merits a reverse bid of two hearts.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ854 ♡J42 ◇87 ♣K106
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—After partner's reverse, your order of priorities should be to raise his major with four-card support or take a preference to his first-bid suit with three-card support. If you can do neither of these, rebid a five-card major, if you have one. That leaves you with clear-cut action here—bid two spades.

Michael Jackson says sensational news about his life makes him cry

Jackson

NEW YORK (AP) — Reclusive singer Michael Jackson said in a rambling, anguished letter that he has been "bleeding a long time," because of sensational coverage of his life and career, according to a published report.

The handwritten letter, which contained several spelling and grammatical errors, was published in the Oct. 12 issue of People magazine. It said many press reports about the pop singer are inaccurate.

"Most people don't know me, that is why they write such things in wich (sic) most is not true," Jackson wrote. "I cry very often because it hurts and I wory (sic) about my children all over the world, I live for them."

The 29-year-old singer, who has undergone cosmetic surgery at least twice, denies accusations that he uses chemicals to make his skin lighter and takes female hormones to keep his voice high.

"Like the old Indian proverb says do not judge a man until you've walked 2 moons in his Moccosins (sic)," Jackson wrote. He ended the letter with a plea for understanding.

"But have mercy, for I've been bleeding a long time now," he said.

Jackson's fans have paid up to $700 for tickets to sold-out concerts on his recent Japanese tour. His latest album, "Bad," has been on best-seller lists since its August release.

Hunthausen

SEATTLE (AP) — Roman Catholic Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen celebrated his 25th year as a bishop with a service that drew Christians, Jews, Moslems, Hindus and Buddhists to hear the activist priest's plea for peace.

"We are here to pray for peace," Hunthausen told more than 2,000 people who attended the service Sunday at the University of Washington.

"God is in all things, and therefore God is in the nuclear arms race, the greatest threat to the human race," said the 66-year-old Hunthausen.

Jewish, Buddhist, Islamic Hindu and American Indian religious leaders attended the service, the last in a month-long series of anniversary celebrations. Hunthausen was ordained in 1946 and was appointed bishop of Helena, Mont., in 1962.

The Vatican in 1986 ordered Hunthausen to turn over some of his authority to an auxiliary bishop, but his powers were restored this year following an investigation by three American bishops.

The Vatican had accused Hunthausen of being lax in such church matters as granting annulments, general absolution of sins, allowing intercommunion with Protestants and letting gay Catholics meet in Catholic churches.

CHICAGO (AP) — First Lady Nancy Reagan says she has had difficulty coping with public criticism, but has learned during life in the White House to "roll with it a little more."

She said criticism of the White House during the Iran-Contra affair was particularly hard to take.

"Everybody likes to be liked," Mrs. Reagan said in an interview published in Sunday's Chicago Tribune. "It was a difficult period, certainly. It's never easy to endure public criticism. Never."

Mrs. Reagan will travel Wednesday to Chicago, her childhood home, to receive a $100,000 award from Ronald McDonald Children's Charities for her campaign against drug abuse. The money will be used to fight drug abuse.

Carter

ATLANTA (AP) — Billy Carter, brother of former President Jimmy Carter, was released from Emory University Hospital, three weeks after being diagnosed as having inoperable cancer of the pancreas.

Hospital spokeswoman Mildred Stroud confirmed Sunday that Carter, 50, had left the hospital. She declined further comment on his condition.

A welcome was prepared in Plains, where both Carters live. Yellow ribbons were tied on trees, and several telephone poles sported hand-lettered signs saying "We Love You Billy" and "Welcome Home."

Billy Carter was hospitalized last month suffering from jaundice, and surgeons discovered the cancer.

Carter's beer drinking, good ol' boy reputation made him one of the best known members of the president's family during the years his older brother was in the White House. He said he had kicked his drinking habit in recent years.

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Former Gov. Alf Landon, the GOP presidential nominee in 1936, will not leave a hospital today as scheduled, his wife said.

The 100-year-old Landon has been hospitalized at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center since Sept. 28 with mild bronchitis and other ailments. Hospital officials said Sunday his condition remained satisfactory.

Lanson's wife, Theo, said Sunday she expected him to remain in the hospital at least a few more days.

With the assistance of two physical therapists, Landon took a short walk around his hospital suite Sunday afternoon and talked politics and football with a visitor.

President Reagan visited Landon last month to honor his 100th birthday.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Two twins born joined at the back of their heads could remain hospitalized for up to six months as doctors deal with post-operative care as complicated as the surgery that separated them, doctors said.

The twins also suffered some brain damage during the surgery, they added.

Since the 22-hour operation that parted the twins, 8-month-old Patrick and Benjamin Binder have been besieged with complications, said Dr. Bejamin Carson, a pediatric neurosurgeon.

"Some days it looks like you can see the clearing, but some days it looks like you're deep in the woods," said Carson, who performed the delicate separation of their scalps, skulls and veins Sept. 6 at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Since then, the boys from Ulm, West Germany, have made repeated trips to surgery — at least nine times between them — for skin grafts, cleaning of their wounds, insertion of new intravenous feeding tubes and draining of excess spinal fluid that their separate bodies now have difficulty absorbing naturally.

"Doctors say it will not be unexpected for one or both of the twins to return to the operating room for repeated cleansings of their scalp wounds," the hospital said in its most recent statement last week.

Business leaders see benefits in trade pact

By KURT EICHENWALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — Many American business leaders expressed strong support on Sunday for the sweeping free trade agreement reached by negotiators for the United States and Canada.

While uncertain about the agreement's essential elements, most business leaders said that the accord was a significant step toward expanding trade between the two countries and stemming the rising support in Congress for trade measures they view as protectionist.

"Perhaps the most important thing about it is that it shows that, for all the pressures for more protection, countries can move toward more open trading arrangements," said Thomas O. Enders, managing director of Salomon Brothers.

The benefit for both countries comes from the greatly expanded marketplace for industries as well as increased investment in industry and research by American companies in Canada.

American and Canadian negotiators settled on the framework for the pact linking the world's two largest trading partners just before a midnight Saturday deadline.

The package negotiated over the last 16 months includes the phasing out of tariffs, an easing of non-tariff trade barriers and a new method of resolving trade disputes, according to a summary of the agreement released Sunday night by American negotiators.

The agreement will have to be approved in both countries before being ratified. Many business leaders urged both the Canadian Parliament and Congress not to waste the opportunities created by the pact.

"This agreement is of historic importance," E.L. Artzt, the president of Procter & Gamble International, said in a statement. "Several previous opportunities have been lost; this time we need to succeed."

Some business leaders said they might begin a lobbying effort in Congress in support of the pact once they review its specific elements.

"We look forward to seeing the agreement and hope to provide a cross-section of support from a large cross-section of American business," said James D. Robinson, chairman and chief exectuive of the American Express Co. and chairman of the administration's Advisory Committee on Trade Negotiations.

"There may be specific companies in both countries that have trouble with it, as is the case with any change of this magnitude," said David Rockefeller, former chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank. "But, over all, for the country and for consumers, it is a good thing."

Representatives of the lumber industry said their support was contingent on the status of a memorandum of understanding reached last year that increased tariffs on softwood lumber imports.

"If all of our rights under the memorandum of understanding are intact, we have nothing to object to," said Stanley S. Dennison, chairman of the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, an industry group.

The settlement of the softwood lumber dispute, reached in December 1986, voided a 15 percent penalty on Canadian lumber imports to the United States valued at nearly $3 billion a year. Instead, Canada agreed to impose a 15 percent export tax on shipments of pine, spruce, Douglas fir, and other woods used in home construction.

Deal may be benchmark for expanding free trade

By SUSAN P. RASKY
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The sweeping free-trade agreement between the United States and Canada approved here late Saturday night will not only set the terms of commerce between the world's two largest trading partners but will establish a benchmark for the reforms America is seeking in the international trading system.

With no more than a summary of the agreement available, it is difficult to gauge the precise economic impact for the United States, but proponents of the treaty have estimated that it would increase the nation's annual output of goods and services by $12 billion to $17 billion and create up to 750,000 jobs.

Although American interest in the free-trade agreement pales in comparison with the storm the negotiations have created in Canada, failure to achieve an agreement would have been a major blow to the Reagan administration and other free trade proponents in this country.

Because Canada has some of the highest tariffs in the industrialized world, government economists had estimated that simply reducing those tariffs to the average level of other industrialized nations could increase American exports by up to $500 million a year.

The United States and 93 other nations, including Canada, subscribe to the free trade principles of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Geologists face rocky, diverse future

By KEDRIC ALLAN LEACH
Business/Oil Writer

The future for geologists is likely to be less directly tied to the fortunes of the petroleum industry and more concerned with associated fields such as groundwater protection and hazardous waste management, say officials of a leading professional organization.

"We have become a very broad-based organization with a continually increasing number of sub-fields," said Charles J. Mankin, national director for American Institute of Professional Geologists.

In Midland for a regional conference of AIPG members, Mankin said "still, I'm aware that the primary concern of geologists in the Permian Basin region are concerned with oil issues."

The AIPG is a national organizations concerned with the certification of competence and ethical conduct of geologists from all specialties. Currently the organization comprises more than 4,300 members nationally, about 935 in Texas alone.

"No doubt the majority of geologist in Texas are concerned with petroleum activities," relates Donald L. Hook, Texas state president of the organization, "But that, too, is changing. In the past 30 years there a fewer geologists employed in petroleum related interests. It isn't that there isn't future in petroleum geology, but the focus is changing."

"We're seeing an extremely strong emphasis placed on the control of hazardous waste," says Mankin. "Part of our organization's function is to monitor activities in Washington, D.C. regarding legislative action to define hazardous waste. This is not easy. The Environmental Protection Agency's guidelines say basically that if a chemical could possibly pose any threat to humans within the next 10,000 years, then it is a 'hazardous chemical.' A 10,000-year study is an extremely long proposed study."

Congress is currently considering reclassifying drilling fluids as hazardous waste. Such an action could effectively kill the oil and gas industry, Hook said. Increased costs resulting from new waste disposal regulations could make it prohibitively expensive to drill for oil and gas in this country, he said.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America has estimated the cost of complying with proposed EPA hazardous waste disposal rules if they are applied to drilling mud to be $44 billion initially and another $4 billion per year.

Just what are the chances of such a development taking place?

Said Mankin: "This is a difficult question, and probably one that can't be answered directly. Environmental issues are an extremely touchy subject invoking strong emotions. Unfortunately, people simply can't live without chemcials.

Economists predict growth through '88

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, enjoying the longest peacetime economic expansion on record, will have continued growth this year and through the 1988 presidential election, the nation's business economists predicted today.

The National Association of Business Economists said its latest survey of member sentiment found growing optimism that the country will be able to avoid a recession through 1988, a view that is certain to cheer Republicans hoping to hold onto the White House.

But the next president, whatever party he represents, is likely to have to deal with a downturn soon after taking office, these economists believe.

A solid majority, 56 percent, picked 1989 as the most likely year for the next recession to begin.

The economists, who advise some of the country's largest corporations, cited rising inflation and higher interest rates as likely causes of the next recession.

"While economists continue to push back the expected date of the next recession, they still believe that a downturn will occur before the end of 1990," said Jerry Jordan, president of the association and chief economist of First Interstate Bancorp of Los Angeles.

The current recovery from the 1981-82 recession entered its 59th month in October, making this recovery the longest peacetime expansion on record.

For this year and 1988, economists remain optimistic about economic prospects, although they have been steadily raising their forecasts for inflation.

They now are predicting consumer prices will rise by 4.5 percent this year, up substantially from the 1.3 percent inflation performance of 1986. A year ago, the economists had predicted inflation would increase 3.7 percent this year.

By contrast, their views on economic performance have changed little over the past 12 months. The economists are predicting the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, will expand 3 percent this year, compared with a 2.9 percent growth they forecast a year ago.

The economic prediction is close to the administration's forecast of 3.2 percent growth this year, when measured from the final quarter of 1986. This is a substantial improvement from GNP growth of 2.2 percent in 1986.

For 1988, the economists are predicting growth of 2.7 percent, while the Reagan administration is forecasting a higher growth rate of 3.5 percent.

The business economists cited growing demand for their companies' products as one of the reasons for their belief that the recovery is not running out of steam. Nearly 70 percent of the economists surveyed said orders at their companies were on the increase, the biggest percentage since the spring of 1984.

The survey of economists' sentiments was made for the association's annual convention in New Orleans. Copies of the report were also made available in Washington.

The business economists made these additional predictions:

—Unemployment, which edged down to an eight-year low of 5.9 percent in August, will show little further improvement next year, still hovering around the 6 percent level at the end of 1988.

—The U.S. foreign trade deficit, which last year hit a record $156.2 billion, will decline only slightly to $155 billion in 1987. For 1988, the economists see more of an improvement, with the trade deficit shrinking to $140 billion.

—The dollar, which has already declined in value by almost 50 percent in the past two years, is still headed lower, in part because of the stubbornly high trade deficits. The majority of the economists predicted another 10 percent to 30 percent decline in the dollar's value, with a minority forecasting an even bigger drop of as much as 50 percent.

—The federal budget deficit, which last year hit a record $221 billion, improved to $165 billion for the budget year just ended, the economists predicted.

Pickens extends bid deadline to mid-month

NEW YORK (AP) — The investor group led by oilman T. Boone Pickens extended until Oct. 15 its tender offer for Newmont Mining Corp., due to pending litigation over the hostile bid.

The offer extended Friday, which originally was set to expire Oct. 5, would give Pickens' group, Ivanhoe Partners, a 51 percent stake in the mining and energy company.

A federal appeals court in San Francisco issued an injunction sought by Newmont on Wednesday to prevent Ivanhoe from pursuing the tender offer or other efforts to gain control of Newmont, pending an Oct. 9 hearing.

Buyers' economic index at three-year peak

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's economy continued to expand in September, with strong gains in production, new orders and employment boding well for the fourth quarter, a trade group reported.

The National Association of Purchasing Managers said Sunday its monthly indicator of future economic growth hit a three-year high of 60.7 percent last month, up from 59.9 percent in August.

'White knight' GECC rescues Gelco Corp.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Transportation-leasing giant Gelco Corp., which plunged into debt to thwart a hostile takeover by an investment partnership earlier this year, has agreed to be acquired by General Electric Co. in a friendly deal valued at $400 million, the companies said Friday.

GE Credit Corp., General Electric's financial services unit, will pay $35 cash for each of the 7.1 million outstanding shares of Gelco common stock, a total of $250 million, the companies said.

Gelco's Series A preferred stock will be redeemed upon completion of the merger adding another $150 million, said Gelco Vice President Kevin Mitchell.

Written code of conduct can breed resentment

NEW YORK (AP) — Many major companies have created written conduct codes for their staffs, but employees often resent the documents and perceive them as accusatory, a business research group said in a study released today.

The Conference Board's survey of 300 major companies showed that more than three-quarters of them have created conduct codes, but they are more prevalent in the United States and Canada than elsewhere.

Most codes are broad statements of the company's obligations to employees, customers and suppliers. Few dictate the proper behavior for specific situations, but more than half proclaim specific penalties for violations, the most common of which is dismissal.

Allegis sells Hertz to management group, Ford

CHICAGO (AP) — Travel conglomerate Allegis Corp. agreed to sell Hertz Corp., the nation's biggest auto rental company, for $1.3 billion to an investor group formed by Ford Motor Co. and Hertz senior management.

The agreement in principle announced Friday was the second major step in Allegis' plan to shed its non-airline businesses.

PACT

In the steel industry, American union leaders voiced concern about the impact of the accord.

Business leaders were particularly concerned about protection of intellectual property in Canada.

The intellectual property dispute has had significant impact on the American pharmaceutical industry's business in Canada, because of the freedom Canadian companies have to develop their own versions of pharmaceutical products in the United States.

While the trade pact includes provisions to "make progress" in the protection of pharmaceuticals in Canada by liberalizing compulsory licensing provisions, American pharmaceutical industry officials had hoped that more could be accomplished.

Among the industries that are expected to benefit most quickly from the pact are banking and other financial services, as well as manufacturing and retail sales.

CONGRESS

That international framework has become increasingly strained in recent years as member countries have erected nontariff barriers to protect their domestic industries.

In particular, countries have found it difficult to settle disputes under the procedures provided by the GATT and have resorted instead to bilateral pacts that often fly in the face of free trade principles by setting import quotas on disputed goods.

The U.S.-Canada agreement is a sharp departure from this pattern. It represents, for example, the first international understanding on trade in service industries. It also establishes policies for liberalizing rules on investment, protection of intellectual property, and settlement of trade disputes.

The administration's main task now will be to convince Congress that these economic benefits and the precedents established for settling bilateral disputes with Canada are desirable.

But winning congressional approval is all the more difficult because many lawmakers resent what they see as Canadian manipulation of the negotiating process.

Members of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee, whose support will be crucial in getting the agreement ratified, have argued that Canada's insistence on having top government officials rather than trade technicians do the final bargaining put the United States in a weak position.

One measure of the congressional skepticism is that none of the members of the House Ways and Means Committee or the Senate Finance Committee were willing to comment publicly Sunday on the agreement, insisting that they wanted time to to study its particulars.

Congress is unlikely to reject the agreement out of hand. But several senior staff members stressed that lawmakers might well extract a price from the administration for their support.

Congressional aides said the free trade agreement could become a bargaining chip to win White House support for tax increases or for provisions that lawmakers want to keep in the huge trade bill now pending before a House-Senate conference committee.

Although Congress will be considering the free trade pact under special "fast-track" legislative procedures that set a strict timetable for action and prohibit any amendments, members of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees are likely to demand some say in how provisions of the agreement are worded.

"The committees can't pull major sections out, but they certainly can tinker with the manner in which the agreement will be implemented," another aide said.

Agreement topples century of failure

TORONTO (AP) — Attempts to open the Canadian-American border to freer trade have been scuttled for over a century by Canadian fears of annexation or economic domination by its powerful neighbor.

The agreement reached in Washington late Saturday could start a new era in what is already the world's largest trading partnership. Trade in 1986 amounted to $173 billion (then $130 billion U.S.) in goods ranging from Canadian Christmas trees to Florida oranges.

Here is a chronology of trade relations between the two countries:

1854 — President Franklin Pierce prsides over the signing of a 10-year Treaty of Reciprocity with the colonies of British North America, consisting of the United Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada and the maritimes.

1866 — The United States ends the treaty. Led by Abraham Lincoln before his assassination in 1865, America becomes protectionist in the wake of the Civil War, suspecting the British of backing southern rebels.

1867 — The North's victory in the Civil War raises Canadian fears of annexation. The colonies decide to unite in a confederation known as the Dominion of Canada, the founding of the Canadian nation.

1869-1898 — Four attempts to reintroduce a reciprocity agreement, lowering customs duties on both sides of the border, end in failure.

1911 — Sir Wilfrid Laurier from Quebec, the first Francophone prime minister of Canada, reaches agreement with President William Howard Taft on free trade concerning Canadian resources and farm products and lowered duties for U.S. manufactured products.

The deal falls apart after Americans talk openly of annexing Canada. In an election campaign, English-Canadians accuse Laurier of abandoning ties to Britain and his Liberal government is defeated by Conservatives under the slogan, "No truck nor trade with the Yankees."

1935 — The two countries grant each other most-favored-nation status, but there is no political desire for anything more comprehensive.

1948 — Both countries enter the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

1965 — A bilateral agreement on the automotive trade is signed. It removes duties on condition U.S. automakers make one vehicle in Canada for every one they sell.

March 1985 — At their so-called Shamrock Summit, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and President Reagan call for talks on increased trade.

Sept. 26, 1985 — Mulroney proposes a comprehensive free-trade treaty to lower tariff and non-tariff barriers.

April 23, 1986 — The U.S. Senate Finance Committee approves a "fast track" for the talks with an effective deadline of Oct. 4, 1987.

May 21, 1986 — Meetings start between chief negotiators Simon Reisman of Canada and Peter Murphy of the U.S. Trade Representative's office.

Sept. 16, 1986 — After disputes over Canadian lumber, Mulroney says prospects for a free-trade deal are dim because "the Americans don't want a deal." Second thoughts grow in Canada.

Sept. 23, 1987 — Reisman walks out of the talks, and his strategy raises the issue to a higher political level. Marathon meetings between U.S. and Canadian Cabinet members follow.

Oct. 3, 1987 — Just before a midnight deadline, Reagan informs Congress he intends to enter into a free-trade treaty with Canada.

GEOLOGISTS

The man who changes the oil on his car then pours it down the drain or over the ground is just as guilty of an 'environmental violation' as a large company, it's just that we don't happen to look at it that way.

"However, I'm afraid we're going to see the day when a great many chemicals will be classified 'hazardous.' It's less of a question of if than when."

"This is where the groundwater field will come into strong play," added Hook. "Seepage is a factor of gravity. In Texas there are 86 hazardous waste disposal wells; nationally about 450. In only six instances have they been found to pose any threat to the environment. An increased knowledge of how groundwater functions will be the key to the success to keeping the disposal wells in operation. If drilling muds are eventually classified as hazardous materials, they will be crucial to continued drilling for oil and gas.

"Part of our ongoing function at AIPG is to inform not only Congress but the public relative to geology, the effect of chemicals on the environment and how to best cope with them, and still maintain an effective profitable industry," says Mankin. "There is a good future in geology, but it takes careful examination and time."

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Register your broker complaints

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Early one morning, before the stock exchanges opened for business, I gave my broker an order to sell 500 shares of an oil company stock at 52 3/8 — $52.375 a share. The next day's newspaper tables listed the stock's high for that day as 52 3/4 —$52.75 a share. I assumed I had sold. When I phoned the broker, she said I hadn't, but she couldn't tell me why.

She called back several hours later and said the newspaper's New York Stock Exchange tables report "composite" prices, not necessarily NYSE prices. She said a block of my stock had traded on some other exchange at 52 3/4 and the high on the NYSE was 52 1/4.

I am very disappointed, as the stock has since slipped below 50. Is the broker correct? Do I have any recourse?

Doyle

A. The broker could be correct about that stock not trading at 52 3/4 on the NYSE but trading at that price elsewhere. And she is right in saying that NYSE stock tables are composite or "consolidated" reports of trades in NYSE-listed stocks on that exchange, five regional exchanges located in other cities and in the over-the-counter market. Many stocks are "dually listed" on the NYSE and regional exchanges.

But that doesn't change the fact that your order to sell at 53 3/8 could have been executed. Brokerage firms can use the Intermarket Trading System electronic communications network to fill customers' orders at the best prices available in any of the ITS-linked markets.

By placing an order to sell at 52 3/8, you placed a "limit order" — meaning you would accept no less than that price. When the stock traded at and then above that price, that information appeared on the up-to-the-minute Composite Quotation System.

Your order should have been filled.

You can seek recourse through that brokerage firm and the stock exchange to which the firm belongs — the National Association of Securities Dealers, if the firm is not an exchange member. If you get no results, write to Office of Consumer Affairs, Securities and Exchange Commission, 450 Fifth Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20549.

Q. A broker I know says the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that customers who have complaints against brokers no longer can sue the brokers and, instead, must have their grievances heard by arbitration panels. As he explained it, the arbitrators are picked by the stock exchanges.

My broker friend seems absolutely gleeful about this. Can it be true?

A. Not in all cases. In a landmark decision on June 8, the Supreme Court did rule that securities fraud claims must be resolved by arbitration, if there is a clause to that effect in the contract between the customer and the brokerage firm.

While some brokerage customers are not bound by that court decision, most probably are — whether they realize it or not. When opening brokerage accounts, customers often sign papers without reading them. The papers usually contain the arbitration agreement clause.

Q. How can arbitration panels in customer-broker disputes be considered unbiased, when they often are composed of brokers, retired brokers, lawyers who represent brokers in other cases and even brokers' wives?

A. You have answered your own rhetorical question. But take heart. The Securities and Exchange Commission finally has come up with a comprehensive proposal to improve the entire arbitration process.

One part of the SEC plan would drastically alter the composition of each three-member arbitration panel, so that only one member would have any ties to the securities industry. The other two would be truly "public" members.

Under the proposal, anyone connected with the securities business — attorneys, employees, retirees and spouses — would be removed from the list of public arbitration board members within three years.

Iowa caucus system requires explanation

By RICHARD L. VERNACI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The political stakes in Iowa's Democratic caucuses are so high and the process is so twisted that the state party has managed to cross an invisible threshold.

It can charge admission to explain how things work.

For $25 a head, some four dozen reporters in Washington spent an afternoon pretending they were at a Democratic precinct caucus in Adair County, Iowa, which lies amid farmland about 100 miles southwest of Des Moines.

The group included the usual gaggle from Washington and New York, but there were also a couple of them from London. There was even one from Iowa.

Iowa's importance draws not from its size — with 58 delegates, it ranks 25th among the states and territories — but from timing. Next Feb. 8 it will be the leadoff event toward choosing a Democratic presidential nominee at the national convention in Atlanta in July.

The caucus tradition in Iowa goes back to the last century. The state toyed with the idea of a primary but gave it up after holding one in 1916.

The process has endured over the years, and the paper to explain it has piled up, especially since the Democratic Party reforms of the 1960s and 1970s. The rules for the Iowa caucuses are 35 pages long; by contrast, the national party's rules for picking delegates take 16 pages.

The operation of an individual caucus is rather simple: It's like watching a cell divide. On a given signal, people sitting in a classroom or some other kind of meeting hall scatter to regroup in corners, doorways or near other landmarks to show how many of them support one presidential candidate or another and to pick a proportional number of delegates to the next highest level.

The ersatz Iowans meeting in Washington last week chose among a field of five presidential candidates, two from the East, one from the Midwest and two from the South. Rumors circulated about the womanizing habits of at least three of them.

Busts give 'Cocaine Lane' notoriety

By LAURIE SULLIVAN

RICHFIELD, Utah (AP) — Interstate 70 from Baltimore ends as a rural roadway strewn with turkey feathers and debris from passing hay trucks. Welcome to "Cocaine Lane."

Since September 1986, 84 people have been arrested and $190 million in cocaine, marijuana and heroin confiscated on I-70 in Sevier County. It's brisk business for a highway interdiction program in the heart of the West.

By comparison, New Jersey's "Cocaine Alley" interdiction program in 1984 yielded 286 drug-related arrests, 445 pounds of cocaine, 2,500 pounds of marijuana, $447,300 in cash and various weapons.

The arrests here are the work of a few Utah Highway Patrol troopers who take pride in their success and vehemently deny allegations that they use racial "profiles" to stop and search cars.

Troopers say each case is different, but their suspects have some things in common: Nearly all are couriers, or "mules;" most are traveling east; half are of Hispanic descent and a majority consent to vehicle searches.

Most are carrying cocaine and have a story to tell, officials say.

"They'll say, 'I met a guy in a bar and he said he was tired of driving, and would I take his car across the country for him and he'd pay me $2,000,'" said county attorney Don Brown, who hasn't lost a case since the crackdown began two years ago.

"They'll say, 'I met a guy in a bar and he said he was tired of driving, and would I take his car across the country for him and he'd pay me $2,000.'"
— Sevier County Attorney Don Brown

Brown, Sheriff John Meacham and the troopers who patrol the winding 92 miles of I-70 between I-15 and Salina Canyon deny that the freeway, whose speed limit slows to 40 mph on some stretches, merely drops drug runners in their laps.

"If I or a couple more troops happened to be up on I-80, I think you'd see cocaine taken down all the time," said a 44-year-old trooper whose 15 busts make him the godfather of the drug patrolmen.

The arrests, which mostly involve two people per car, occur at no particular time of day. They result either from stops for seemingly routine traffic violations or roadblocks to check licenses and registration, the patrol says.

Some claim troopers concentrate on drivers who look Hispanic and vehicles with out-of-state plates. About 80 percent of those charged with possession of cocaine are Hispanic. A majority of the marijuana busts have involved whites.

"I really think there is discrimination going on," said David Blackwell, a public defender who has handled 90 percent of the drug cases since January. "I think they're treating Hispanics driving out-of-state cars differently than anyone else, and that's racial discrimination," he said. "But proving it is another matter."

The troopers, who consented to interviews on condition of anonymity, say they've never used profiles because they don't need to.

"There's an old theory," Meacham said recently. "If you walk into a corral full of horses and one horse is bound to kick, which horse do you watch? Same thing. If one of these officers has made 10 drug arrests and they've all been Hispanics, I'm sure it's just his nature that he looks at Hispanics closer."

Notwithstanding their successes, the troopers believe they're nailing only about 1 percent of the drug traffic cruising past the county's gypsum hills, turkey farms and poultry processing plants.

The patrol has no figures on how many have been stopped and subjected to searches that turned up nothing, but, says one sergeant, "We don't search an awful lot of vehicles where we don't come up with something."

Blackwell acknowledges most of his clients are drug couriers, many of them illegal aliens who jump bail and flee to their homelands.

"The convictions are usually a plea to reduced charges, or bail is reduced and we never see them again," Blackwell said. "I think they're running drugs, obviously, but there's a misconception that these are big-time drug dealers."

Court records show many with hometowns in Colombia, California and Mexico. In only two cases have the couriers led authorities to a dealer.

"Most of them we've been catching have been coming up from Southern California," said one trooper. "A good share are going to New York, but a lot of them are making drops along the way. We find maps or a note or something that says stop in Burlington, Iowa, or Kansas City or Indianapolis or any city along the way."

Lately, some notes have instructed the driver to bypass Sevier County.

And while that doesn't hurt the patrol's self-esteem, the troopers believe their work merely inconveniences dealers.
