Citgo Petroleum cuts price it will pay for crude oil

NEW YORK (AP) — A Midwest refiner cut the price it is willing to pay for U.S. crude oil by $1.50 a barrel Friday, citing recent drops in gasoline and other oil product prices.

Some analysts said, however, they doubted the $28.50-a-barrel offering price set by Citgo Petroleum Corp. of Tulsa, Okla., would soon become the prevailing price in the industry. Most refiners have been paying $30 a barrel since last February.

"I'd have to give slight odds to this Citgo price not catching on industry-wide," said Stephen A. Smith, director of U.S. energy services at Data Resources Inc.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter in Los Angeles, also said he did not expect other refiners to lower their offering prices. He called Citgo Petroleum's move "a premature response" to signs of weakening in open market oil prices.

One oil company executive, however, said market signals are pointing to a broad decline in oil prices, perhaps as early as this winter. The executive, who commented on condition that he not be identified, said his company also was considering lowering its offering, or "posted," price for crude oil.

In another sign of the oil price uncertainty, Mexico announced it would keep the export price of its top-grade crude oil at $29 a barrel, at least through January.

Earlier this week, Britain's state-owned British National Oil Corp. proposed to keep North Sea oil prices unchanged at $30 a barrel, at least through March.

The Soviet Union, however, reportedly has offered to lower its oil export price by 50 cents a barrel, to $29, for December.

Last week, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed to retain its basic oil price at $29 a barrel, and vowed to do whatever necessary to support it.

The national average price of gasoline at the pump slipped to $1.21 a gallon as of Dec. 2, from $1.22 in November, $1.23 in October and $1.24 in September, according to Lundberg, whose publication regularly surveys retail outlets.

Heating oil prices, which usually increase during the cold season, have also been falling. Earlier this week, Standard Oil Co. of California reduced its wholesale heating-oil prices in certain locations by as much as 1.5 cents a gallon.

Platt's Oilgram Price Report, an industry newsletter in New York, published a survey Friday that said December retail prices of heating oil in many cities where it is heavily used — including Boston, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis — are down a penney or more a gallon from November.

Traders on the New York Mercantile Exchange seem to believe prices will drop even further in the months ahead. Prices of heating oil Friday for January delivery fell about 1 cent, to about 76 cents a gallon, after falling 1½ cents Thursday.

Go Lee!

It's a "total Lee awesome" day for Santa Claus as he waits for news of the Midland Lee-Converse Judson showdown for the state football championship. Santa, with Rebel flag and hat, has marked the one important day on his calendar — Dec. 17.

Bank gives workers merry Christmas

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) — It's not often that a bank president can trade his pin-striped image for that of a Santa. But that's what Forrest R. Cook did when his bank came up with more than $15,000 for 70 workers left without Christmas paychecks after their factory closed.

The Durfee-Attleboro Bank of Fall River handed out checks averaging $170 apiece to the workers at the Fall River Fireplace Inc. on Thursday, nine days after the fireplace accessory manufacturer unexpectedly shut down.

Cook said the bank, which holds a loan of "several hundred thousand dollars" on the company, was handed the keys to the factory and became "debtor in possession," when a dispute between owners in Fall River and New York led to the factory closing.

The owners' decision surprised the employees and bank officials, who thought the company was having a good year.

Workers responded with an angry demonstration at the factory earlier this week, protesting that they were owed one last paycheck. Their anger turned to smiles when the bank announced it would honor the final payroll.

"It's wonderful," said Bertha Martel, who worked at the plant for 13 years. "It certainly makes things better at my house for Christmas."

"I got a fair share of thank yous," said Angelo Paolini, an assistant vice president at the bank, who haned out the checks on Thursday. "The people were gratified the bank came up with the money. They knew it was not the bank's fault that they lost their jobs."

While Cook says the bank was not responsible for the factory's outstanding debts, including payroll, he said paying the 7½ days of back pay was the right thing to do.

"We did not have a legal obligation to pay the employees and it may be we may not recover the money," he said Friday. "On the other hand we had a strong feeling that the employees should be paid."

The bank hopes to recover the funds by selling the large inventory of fireplace screens, tools and other accessories on the factory shelves.

But Cook admits that some Christmas spirit entered the decision of the bank, which has offices in two Massachusetts cities.

"The fact that it was close to the holiday, the fact that we are a local bank did add to our decision. We are glad to do it. It was a happy experience."

Children tell Reagan what's on their minds

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — America is playing "children's games" with the Soviet Union, said one of 4,000 letters the Public Broadcasting Service received when it invited elementary school students to tell President Reagan what's on their minds.

"Dear Mr. President," began the letters, which touched on scores of topics including poverty, unemployment, nuclear war and Reagan's highly publicized affection for jellybeans.

Some asked the president not to interrupt their favorite television shows with speeches or press conferences.

The letters are being forwarded to the White House.

"On every topic, you get a mix of opinion," said Geraldine O'Connor of the PBS show, "What's In the News," which is produced at WPSX-TV here.

The 15-minute kids' show, broadcast in 22 states, asked its viewers to write anything they wanted to the president.

Poverty and unemployment came up most commonly, with many children writing about the possibility of war and the downing of the Korean Air Lines jetliner by the Soviet Union, according to Ms. O'Connor. "A lot of them mentioned nuclear war specifically," she said.

A panel of elementary school teachers helped the station pick nine of the most interesting letters to be read on the show. The segment was taped Dec. 9, and will be shown on various dates around the country.

One of the finalists said nuclear missiles were "a waste of time, money and life."

"Dear Mr. President, I know that you're trying to do the best you can at being our president, but I disagree with some of things you're doing, for instance nuclear missiles," said Maura Jane Farrelly, a Lock Haven, Pa., sixth-grader.

"I agree that we do have to have a strong military, but ours is so strong that it's partly the reason that so many Americans are out of work.

Full autopsy report released on pilot

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

An autopsy report of the pilot of an airplane that crashed Nov. 26 and killed its seven passengers doesn't determine if the pilot died of a heart attack or from injuries suffered from the plane's impact.

The autopsy indicates Keith Elkin of Midland suffered cardiac changes before death, then injuries from the impact and finally third-degree burns after death.

The autopsy report on the 29-year-old pilot by Dr. David Shneidman, a Midland pathologist, arrived in Justice of the Peace Bob Pine's office Friday morning and was released to the public.

Dr. Joseph Rhode, a certified Federal Aviation Administration medical examiner, assisted Shneidman in the autopsy, and explained the report. The autopsy hasn't determined if the pilot died of the heart attack or from the impact of the crash. The fire, he said, didn't kill the pilot or passengers. They were all dead upon impact, and that is why the autopsy reflects the burns as postmortem.

According to Rhode, Shneidman noticed the irregular patterns in the heart muscle and sought a second opinion. The autopsy report says sections of the heart were sent to Dr. Colin Bloor, a cardiac pathologist at the University of California at San Diego.

"THERE IS EVIDENCE of 'small vessel disease,'" notes the report. "The second change is several large zones in which contraction band necrosis is present throughout the many myocardial fibers. Nearby, there is a suggestion of early margination of leukocytes in small capillaries."

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Almost 89 percent of Midlanders and Odessans surveyed by Marketing Research Consultants, Inc. for the Permian Basin Media Coalition believe the two cities likely can work together to become a united community for industrial growth and prosperity.

Results of the survey were announced Friday at a press conference at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

The survey, noted Coalition marketing committee chairman Bob Russell, indicated the "public is more hopeful and of a more cooperative spirit than we thought might exist."

The Coalition, which was formed in October, is pledging $1 million in time, space, material and services "in a common effort to escape the problems of the past and get on with the future in a positive and productive way," Russell added. "This is a total effort by all of us."

The survey of 207 area residents was designed by MRC president Peggy Petton and shed light on several areas. Midland was perceived as wealthy by 56 percent of those interviewed and as a city of opportunity by more than 20 percent.

Odessa, meanwhile, was perceived as a blue collar town by 40 percent of individuals, as hard-working by 20.3 percent, and as competitive by 13.6 percent. No one perceived Odessa as wealthy and only 8.7 percent as a city of opportuniy.

Basic differences in the two cities — white versus blue collar, lifestyles-education, income levels — was perceived as the greatest problem area by 19.8 percent, while 16.9 percent believed the cities are haunted by past problems, such as unwillingness to forget.

Community leaders were perceived as problems by 11.6 percent; single-mindedness by 11.1 percent.

Judge denies patient starvation wish

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — A judge on Friday denied a cerebral palsy victim's request to starve herself to death in a county hospital, saying that to grant her death-wish "would have a devastating effect on other patients and other handicapped people in the nation."

Superior Court Judge John H. Hews said that since Elizabeth Bouvia, 26, was not terminally ill, society's interest in preserving life and the medical profession's obligation to do so outweighed her right to self-determination.

"Our society values life," he said. "The plaintiff is not terminal and her life will be preserved by this decision.

"The court has determined the issue is whether or not a severely handicapped, mentally healthy person who is not terminally ill has the right to end her life with the assistance of society," Hews said.

"The court concludes she does not...," he said. "The plaintiff in this instance does have a fundamental right to terminate her own life, but this right has been overcome by the strong state interests in this case."

Ms. Bouvia, a wheelchair-bound quadriplegic with almost no motor control, testified during a seven-day hearing that she suffered from painful arthritis and did not want to live "trapped in a useless body" and dependent on others.

Opponents of Ms. Bouvia's starvation wish, including handicapped groups such as Advocacy for the Developmentally Disabled, argued that permitting her death would send a message to other handicapped people that their lives were not worth living.

Hospital officials, caught in a moral and ethical dilemma, characterized Ms. Bouvia's desires as a plea for help in committing suicide.

Hews said Riverside General Hospital ultimately could force-feed Ms. Bouvia, who had sought an injunction preventing staffers from giving her anything but painkillers. She checked into the facility in September and has been taking liquid protein while awaiting a ruling.

"Force-feeding, however invasive, would be administered for the purpose of saving the life of a non-terminal patient, and should be permitted," Hews said. "There is no other option. Saving her life is paramount."

Ms. Bouvia was not in court Friday, but one of her attorneys from the American Civil Liberties Union, Richard Scott, telephoned her afterward.

Elizabeth Bouvia

"She was crying. She was disappointed," Scott told reporters. "She would have liked to have it go her way rather than the county's way."

However, Scott said Ms. Bouvia was aware that going to court might be the beginning of a lengthy battle. They planned to appeal.

"She knew we had no guarantee of winning this lawsuit, and that we had the likelihood of going to the California Supreme Court before it is decided."

Scott said Hews ordered immediately after the hearing that the hospital maintain Ms. Bouvia until Jan. 3, giving her lawyers time to appeal to California's 2nd District Court of Appeal and seek a stay of further action such as force-feeding until that court rules.

Scott also said he was disappointed, but that he found his client "a resilient, hopeful, determined spirit," and felt she would stick with her vow.

Hews acknowledged that Ms. Bouvia "is physically unable to take her own life."

However, the judge said he believed she was rational and disagreed with arguments by Deputy County Counsel Barbara Milliken that Ms. Bouvia decided to end her life only after personal disappointments. She recently separated from her husband, Richard, who opposed her starvation wish.

Outside court, a pleased Bouvia said, "I want her to come home now and reconcile our marriage. I think she may change her mind now."

Retarded man to spend third Christmas in jail

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A mildly retarded young man, accused of killing a shoeshine customer who was his "best friend," is facing his third Christmas in jail without ever having gone to trial.

"I'm kind of confused on what's going on. It isn't right what they're doing. It's going to be my third Christmas in here," Ralph Stevenson said Friday in a telephone interview from the Hampden County House of Correction.

"It seems the court forgot about me," said Stevenson, 22, who denies he killed the man and describes himself as a "slow learner."

"They put Ralph in the books and then forgot about him," he said of himself.

Trial can't go on until the state's highest court decides whether an alleged confession can be admitted as evidence. Stevenson's court-appointed lawyer says his client didn't understand his rights when he was questioned.

And the $50,000 bail is out of sight for his family.

"You're not guilty anywhere until you're found guilty. Ain't that the way it's supposed to be?" asked his mother, Jessie.

She said "Peewee" — so named because he was smaller than his six brothers and sisters — has been held for two years because he's poor and black.

"That man was his best friend. Why would you kill your best friend?" she said.

His lawyer, Aaron Wilson, pleaded for his release during a bail reduction hearing Thursday. But prosecutor Jack St. Clair argued that Stevenson should be behind bars because of the "potential harm to the public."

Superior Court Judge Eileen Griffin took the question under advisement. She did not return telephone calls Friday.

"I've explained the situation to him at least 50 times," said Wilson, who added that Stevenson calls him at least five times a day at the office and sometimes at home.

"Ralph is confused, extremely depressed and just doesn't understand it's out of my hands," Wilson said.

"I've lost my lady because I was in here," Stevenson said, "and sometimes I wonder what's left to live for. But my lawyer says don't do something stupid."

Stevenson lived with his family in a Holyoke tenement. He shined shoes and washed cars "to help me out and pay my mother for some room and board."

He was arrested Nov. 22, 1981, and charged in the death of retired chemist Francis Driscoll, 58, who had been found stabbed to death in his Holyoke apartment the previous day.

Stevenson first told police three Hispanic men killed Driscoll, but later said he killed Driscoll during an argument, St. Clair said.

Driscoll "was a real good customer of mine for about five or six years," Stevenson said Friday. "I didn't kill him."

Last December Wilson filed a motion asking that Stevenson's statement to the police not be admitted as evidence. Court psychiatrists, describing Stevenson as mildly retarded, gave conflicting testimony on whether he knew what he was doing when he gave police a statement.

The judge threw out the alleged confession and said police had made "perfunctory" efforts to make Stevenson understand his rights.

St. Clair appealed to the state Supreme Judicial Court, which hasn't made a decision. A court clerk who refused to identify herself said Friday she doesn't know when a decision will be announced.

"If they're going to send him away they ought to do it," Mrs. Stevenson said. "If they're going to let him go, then they should do that. But I'm praying to God that if he did it, he ought to pay for the consequence like anyone else. But if he didn't, God will let him go."

Full autopsy report finally released on pilot

Shneidman noted in the autopsy report that Bloor's responding letter stated the "changes suggest very early acute ischemic injury to the myocardium which he considered unrelated to the high velocity impact trauma."

To explain contraction band necrosis, Rhode said to imagine a field of perfectly plowed rows. That would show a healthy heart muscle. But, if there are some "broad areas of disturbances" in those rows, that would indicate a heart attack occurred a few hours before death.

If a person has a heart attack and drops dead immediately, said Rhode, no changes can be seen in the heart muscle. And if someone survives a heart attack, then scar tissue develops over a long period of time. Those "irregular rows" fall between the scarring and the sudden death.

This also explains the appearance of the leukocytes, or white blood cells, in the margins of the blood vessels. "Anytime you have a damaged tissue for whatever reason, you'll see a migration of leukocytes to the site of injury," said Rhodes.

IN TALKING WITH witnesses who were with Elkin the day of the crash, the pilot indicated no health problem, according to Rhode. From that evidence, Rhode said Elkin probably experienced what is known as a silent heart attack several hours before the plane crash. And he speculated Elkin began to feel the symptoms of another attack as he attempted to land the plane at Midland Regional Airport.

"We know it's possible for someone to have a heart attack and not have any symptoms," he said. An electrocardiogram would be the only method of indicating a heart attack had occurred. And often a patient who has gone to a doctor for a routine physical will be told to his surprise that he has experienced a heart attack.

If Elkin had suffered a severe heart attack, he wouldn't have gotten on the plane, said Rhode. "We know people who had supper with this man, who were with him until plane time. The man never offered any complaints to anyone. You don't have to be a doctor to see if someone is feeling really crummy."

But the heart attack hasn't been determined as the cause of the crash that killed six KOSA-TV newsmen and one of their relatives.

Rhode said the National Transportation Safety Board still is investigating the crash. "There is still the avenue of possibility that something was wrong with the plane."

IN SPECULATING about the crash — Rhode stressed it was only his opinion and not connected to the investigation — the doctor theorizes Elkin had another heart attack "at the worst possible moment, or he was having symptoms of another one. He was overcome with the feeling of 'I feel awful; I'd better not land the plane right now.' That would be why he had the landing gear back up and was aborting the landing.

"In someone this young, you don't expect to find this kind of problem. Nor would Elkin had ever thought of it as being a heart attack. I'm trying to justify in my own mind something that would have caused him to go around again," Rhode said.

Witnesses at the airport said the Beechcraft King Air B-100 was approaching the main north-south runway and its landing gear was down, the landing lights beaming. Then, the plane nosed upward and to the east in what appeared to be the pilot taking it for another "go-around" before land.

Elkin's rating of Airline Transport Pilot from the FAA meant he had to undergo a physical examination every six months. But, an EKG isn't required on pilots under the age of 35, said Rhode.

Killed in the crash were KOSA news director Gary Hopper, 32, of Midland; sports director Jeff Shull, 25, Odessa; chief engineer Bob Stephens, 47, Odessa; assistant engineer Ed Monette, 26, Odessa; production assistants Bruce Dyer, 26, Midland and Brent Roach, 24, Odessa; and Hopper's brother-in-law, Jay Alvin Price, 37, Midland.

Winter creeps into state with blanket of snow

Scott Braymer of Abilene takes advantage of the snow in a local park. Even if the snow didn't last long, Braymer managed to get a few good jumps in. The Abilene area had up to 4 inches.

By The Associated Press

Winter crept into Texas by night and left most of the northern half of the state blanketed with between two and seven inches of snow Friday, icing roads, causing hundreds of traffic accidents and downing power lines in East Texas, authorities said.

The storm moved from Northwest Texas in an east-southeast direction and closed schools in many areas, giving some students an early release for the holiday vacation.

Travelers advisories were in effect for much of the northern half of the state because of the snow, which began falling Thursday afternoon in the Panhandle. A gale wind warning was posted off the Texas Coast, the National Weather Service said.

Few serious injuries and no deaths were reported to officials, beleagered with numerous calls for assistance in many communities.

"We're being swamped. We've had a lot of fires and power lines down. There have been several major accidents, with some injuries," said Longview Police spokesman Gene Noble. The downed power lines had left many neighborhoods without electricity and set trees on fire.

"It's coming down like crazy," he said Friday morning. "Our switchboards have been clogged since early this morning. The number of snow-related calls is astronomical."

Officials said about seven inches of snow fell on the Longview-Marshall area. In Wichita Falls, six inches had fallen in six hours by 3 a.m. Interstate Highway 35 in Denton was impassable as a result of six inches of snow and a few area schools were forced to close for the day or to open late, authorities said.

The snow resulted from a low pressure system, driven by strong winds at upper levels, that pushed across the state overnight, the National Weather Service said.

Schools in Wichita Falls opened about 1½ hours late. Dozens of accidents were caused by the snow, but no serious injuries were reported, police spokeswoman Niki Houwers said.

"We came out of this pretty well. I was a little worried early this morning," she said.

Four inches of snow fell at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, and two inches accumulated at Dallas Love Field near downtown.

Children write letters to Reagan

"Furthermore, it's playing children's games with the Russians: 'We have more bombs than you do,' " she said.

A Wisconsin girl, who was not a finalist, wrote that she could envision a nuclear war erupting on Halloween.

She might be trick-or-treating, she wrote, "and then this fireball lands right in front of us and blows up and next thing you know you're floating on a cloud."

Several children complimented Reagan for "keeping his cool" following the downing of the Korean Air Lines jetliner that killed 269 people.

And Andy Christopher, a fourth-grader from Kansas City, Mo., confided to the president his life goal. "I would like to be a veterinarian because I like animals as much as you like jelly beans," he said.

Survey indicates cooperative spirit

Those interviewed pointed to joint efforts as the single best method of bridging the gap between the cities, with 41.5 percent suggesting such things as joint city committees, communication between city officials, civic-social-cultural projects and industrial expansion.

Some 14.5 percent believe the land between the cities eventually could bridge the gap through future investments.

Past investments such as transportation were pointed to by 10.6 as possible solutions, while 11.1 percent indicated economic growth.

Survey results will help the media determine which avenues to pursue in their $1 million campaign.

Bringing about better relations between the cities "will allow us to...attract more industry, make us less a one industry-oriented system," said Russell. He added that "we don't believe each city has to change to meet the other," instead comparing a union between the cities as a marriage of different individuals, each with something to give to the relationship.

Author to be on hand to autograph his book

Gus Clemens will be on hand to autograph copies of "Legacy," a story of the Permian Basin and southeast New Mexico, today beginning at 1 p.m. at the Oak Leaf bookstore, 13 Oak Ridge Square.

The book, originally commissioned by The First National Bank of Midland in 1980, is being published by the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library. Divided into two distinct parts, "Legacy" includes a main text of the history of the region and a Permian Basin almanac. The final chapters of the main text trace the history of Midland.

The main text region begins with the early arrival of Ice Age hunters, moves through Spanish explorers, Apache and Comanche Indians, American gold rushers, soldiers, railroad builders, cowboys and pioneering townspeople and concludes with Midland's history.

The Permian Basin Almanac, which follows the main text, presents a comprehensive look at the region through maps, photographs, statistics and histories of each of the 62 counties. The Almanac includes such diverse information as the origin of the name of virtually every town in the region, climatic and census data, comparative oil production figures and historical anecdotes.

Explosions rip through oil storage facility

state

ARANSAS PASS (AP) — Five oil storage tanks erupted into a giant fireball Friday during a series of explosions that injured three workers — one critically — and spewed black smoke and flames into the air for several hours, authorities said.

The initial explosion of three tanks rocked the Redfish Bay Terminal, just south of Aransas Pass, at about 9:30 a.m. and burned out of control for more than three hours.

While firefighters from several towns battled the flames, two more tanks at the eight-tank facility became caught in the inferno, said Aransas Pass police dispatcher Donna Stephens.

Two of the injured men were taken to Coastal Bend Hospital in Aransas Pass and were reported in fair condition with burns to their faces and extremities.

The third man, rushed about 20 miles to Memorial Medical Center in Corpus Christi, was listed in critical condition with extensive burns to the upper part of his body, officials said.

Officials with Redfish Bay Terminal Inc. declined comment on any possible cause behind the explosions. The terminal manager said, "I want to wait until I can get my employees accounted for before I make a statement."

The tanks contained crude oil and naphtha, an industrial solvent and thinner, officials said. The fifth tank exploded at about 10:45 a.m., 75 minutes after the first explosion.

"It looked like a small atomic shell going off," said Don Owen, a gatekeeper at the shipyard division of Lloyd Richardson Construction. Owen was about a mile from the fire.

"Everything out there is just black, with flames shooting everywhere," Owen said.

Robert Mitchell, who works at a marina across Redfish Bay from the storage facility, said he "saw a big ball of fire go up...It's a pretty good-sized fire.

Texas Department of Public Safety Sgt. Frank Hall said some crude oil spilled into Redfish Bay following the explosion. Hall said a backhoe was called in to construct a small dam in order to contain the small spill.

Dr. Del Edwardson of the Coastal Bend Hospital in Aransas Pass identified two of the injured men as Thomas Martinez, 22, and Walter Meza, age unknown. Both men are Aransas Pass residents, he said.

The pair suffered first- and second-degree burns and were listed in fair condition.

The third man, who arrived at Memorial Medical Center at about 11:20 a.m., had not yet been identified by authorities.

Homicides down in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston police aren't certain why, but they are pleased with statistics that show the city's homicide rate is far behind the pace of a year ago and likely to be the lowest in five years.

As of Thursday, police reported 529 homicides, down 124 — or 19 percent — from a year ago.

"No theories, no conjecture, because that's all it is," Lt. B.J. Beck of the police homicide division said.

In addition, 32 people were homicide victims in November, the fewest in any month since 30 were recorded in March 1979.

Amarillo attorney acquitted of murder conspiracy charge

AMARILLO (AP) — An Amarillo attorney was acquitted Friday of a capital murder conspiracy charge after eight hours of jury deliberation in the six-year-old case.

James Durham Jr. had been charged with paying a couple $5,000 to kill a local businessman. Durham was acquitted despite testimony from the couple, and a conspirator, that he had plotted the slaying.

Frank Potts, a downtown Amarillo clothing store owner, was stabbed numerous times in the heart and cut in the throat on Oct. 8, 1977. George Hicks Jr. and his wife, Bedale Hicks, pleaded guilty to murder charges and were sentenced to 99 years in prison for the slaying.

Those sentences were reduced to 25 years in exchange for testimony against Durham.

Durham, 42, was accused of conspiring with Kevin Francis, a business partner of Potts, to hire the Hicks couple to kill Potts. Francis was convicted in 1980 of solicitation of capital murder and sentenced to 40 years in prison. Francis collected on a $175,000 life insurance policy after the murder.

He also testified against Durham.

The jury deliberated five hours Thursday and three hours Friday morning before acquitting Durham.

During final arguments, special prosecutor Doug Mulder said Durham's polite appearance should not fool jurors.

FBI hunting modern-day Bonnie, Clyde

FORT WORTH (AP) — The FBI is asking the public to help catch a "modern-day Bonnie and Clyde" who have robbed small-town North Texas banks of $1 million since 1970, pulling off about one heist a year.

"We're dealing with suspects who are very professional," said FBI Agent Darrell W. Shaver. "They're a thorn in our side; they have been for 13 years."

Shaver said the two usually wear ski masks, cowboy hats, gloves and bulletproof vests for their jobs. They carry portable radio scanners to monitor police activity during the robbery.

The man — described as "good-looking" and possessing a "forceful voice" — is armed with an automatic rifle and the woman totes a shotgun, Shaver said.

He said the couple appear to be more sophisticated with each robbery, most recently protecting their escape with a metal bullet-proof shield.

"These are different from your run-of-the-mill bank robbers," Shaver said. He likened them to the notorious bank-robbing couple, Clyde Barrow and Bonnie Parker, of the 1930s.

The couple is believed to be responsible for 14 bank robberies over 13 years, the last on Nov. 4 at the Fannin Bank in Windom. All of the robberies occur in towns of less than 1,000 population with no local police force, officials said.

Shaver said witnesses saw the man before he put on a ski mask in the Windom robbery, and described him as 40 to 45 years old, 5-foot-10 to 6-feet tall and 195 pounds.

"They described him as well-groomed and said he was good-looking," Shaver said. "They were very insistent about that."

The woman has been described by witnesses as 30 to 40 years old, 5-foot-3 to 5-foot-5 and 170 pounds.

The man is believed to have robbed four banks by himself from 1970 to 1973. Then, police believe, he was joined by the woman in 10 more robberies since 1975.

The five-year federal statute of limitations has elapsed for the first seven robberies. But the North Central Texas Bankers Security Committee is offering a $50,000 reward for information leading to indictments in the seven most recent heists.

The FBI has had at least 15 suspects in the case, Shaver said.

Judge orders return of mules, 'Santa sleigh'

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County grand jury is ordering Wayne Hooks to return two mules and a wagon to a disabled 49-year-old Houston man who wants to use them for a Santa Claus sleigh.

Buddy Thompson, a freight hauler who has had three back operations in three years, says he gave the mules — named Red and Rock — and wagon to Hooks, a commissioner in Walker County, for use in a parade but hasn't received them back.

The grand jury ordered Hooks to return the animals by noon Sunday or face possible mule rustling charges.

Hooks said he just hopes the whole matter can be worked out.

Assistant District Attorney Mel Pechacek, who presented the case to the grand jury Thursday, said Hooks decided to keep the animals and wagon until Thompson paid him $3,000 for a trailer he offered to buy.

Thompson said he had been hired by some businesses to cart Santa Claus around beginning this week but had to cancel the deals because he did not have his mules.

A small, 64-year old woman, Princess Ashraf Pahlavi was once one of the powers behind the Peacock Throne.

Accused of diverting a fortune in illegal profits to overseas bank accounts, she receives little sympathy from most of the rest of the Iranian exile community.

"Naturally, I feel alone," she said."Many people closed their doors to us after the (1979) revolution.

"At night, when I go into my room, that's when all the thoughts come flooding in. I stay up until 5 or 6 in the morning. I read, I watch a cassette, I try not to think. But the memories won't leave you."

The memories are laced with ing his Islamic Revolution around the Persian Gulf.

Her hatred for the ruling clergy in Tehran is shared by the thousands of royalists, republicans and Marxists who have made Paris their exile base. But most of them also share a dislike for her.

Former Iranian prime ministers Shapour Bakhtiar and Ali Amini, who have joined in calling on the Iranian people to rally around the Shah's son, Reza II, want no part of her, well informed Iranian sources report.

Reza II, himself, publicly declared in March that he had "renounced my family and relatives and dedicated my worldly possessions to the service of Iran and Iranians."

In 1977, hooded gunmen fired on her Rolls Royce, killing her lady-in-waiting and wounding her chauffeur as the party returned from a casino in the French Riveria resort town of Cannes. The princess was unhurt.

Two years later, a lone gunman assassinated one of her two sons, Shahriar Mustapha Chafik, on a Paris street.

Nevertheless, Princess Ashraf said she tries "to lead a normal life" despite the threats against her life which force her to to have bodyguards.

The princess' surviving son was active in international business, but "he isn't doing anything now," she said. "How can he work? He can't work in his own country."

Her daughter is active in conservative royalist circles in Paris and helps publish an exile newspaper.

The princess says estimates of the Pahlavi family fortune are wildly exaggerated.

"After the death of my brother, if we had had the $65 billion some people said we had we would have retaken Iran just like that," she said.

Lights brighten holiday

HALES CORNERS, Wis. (AP) — Even though the gift came three Christmases late, it's brightening this holiday season for a family, in more ways than one.

The gift was a package of six decorative spotlights that Paul and Janet Smyczek found, alog with a note, when they returned home one evening this week.

Shades of Christmas past: The lights were like the ones stolen from their front yard display in January 1980.

"Dear Sir or Ma'am," began the note that reflected a guilty conscience as much as holiday spirit.

"A few years ago my buddies and I ripped these off from you, just when you moved into your new home.

"We did it as an act of vandalism I guess, and we wish to make amends to God and to you. We want to say we are very sorry. Having a big house all lit up at Christmas time brought a lot of love and life to our neighborhood. We sure do miss it."

"We hope these will settle our debt to you. We left the receipts in with the lights in case something didn't work or the colors were wrong. Again, let us say we are sorry."

The note was signed, "Some reformed teen-age vandals," and added, "Merry Christmas!"

Policemen face dismissal for firing blanks at people

ADDISON, Ill. (AP) — Five policemen accused of firing blanks at people or in the air and three others who failed to report the incidents face possible dismissal, village officials said Friday.

"The community has been outraged," said Mayor Angelo Chrysogelos. "The calls that I've received, they can't believe this took place. It's just unreal, for people in a professional position with responsibility. This is something you never believe would come from a policeman."

The five-member village fire and police commission has been holding public hearings on the charges against the policemen. Departmental trials will be held Jan. 17-28.

If found guilty, the officers could be suspended for up to 30 days or fired, said village attorney Bud Loftus.

ALL REMAIN on active duty, said Village Manager Anthony LaRocca.

The policemen have filed suit seeking to have the charges dismissed on grounds that the village board exceeded its authority.

Chrysogelos said the incidents surfaced after a newspaper reporter suffered powder burns on his hands when he was shot at by a police sergeant in the police station.

nation

"I know most of the officers and I joke around with them from time to time," Bryers said Friday. "This one day, a couple of detectives were giving me a hard time about not having brought down an issue of the newspaper in which an arrest they had made had been featured.

"SO ONE sergeant said, 'We want our paper delivered,' pointed his service revolver from two or three feet away and fired it.

"I thought to myself, 'This had to be a joke.' I saw the inside barrel of the gun explode and metal shavings and gunpowder went into my hand and it was bleeding."

He said he "was just trying to do my job and wound up getting injured. This was not a very well-thought-out prank."

Shortly before that incident, a patrolman fired a blank at a custodian in the police station because "they didn't like the way he was cleaning the place," said Chrysogelos. The custodian was not hurt.

In a third episode, an off-duty patrolman fired a blank in the presence of relatives in his home.

TWO OTHER incidents involved policemen firing blanks at the fire station and in front of a cable television studio in the presence of other people, said the mayor.

Police Chief Alexander Gorr and two other superior officers knew of the incidents but did not report them, according to village attorney Bud Loftus.

Some of the village's 48 officers apparently did not turn in their blanks after appearing in a police training film in late summer and were firing them as "pranks" up until the Oct. 10 incident, said Loftus.

"If someone fired at me, I'd be scared, I'd try to find out where the hell is the (bullet) hole," the mayor said. "We want to find out why it happened, how to stop it. We spend money to properly train (police) individuals because in this day and age everybody is out to sue everyone else."

Government conducts weapons test

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A major underground nuclear weapons test was conducted in a shaft 1,690 feet below the Nevada Test Site on Friday following several delays caused by erratic winds.

The test, code-named Romano, had an explosive yield of 20,000 to 150,000 tons of TNT.

Department of Energy spokesman Chris West said the test went off without incident at 10:30 a.m. PST at Yucca Flat, 85 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

The test brought the total number of announced tests at the Nevada site to 616 since testing began at the remote desert area in January of 1951. The United States has conducted a total of 729 announced tests.

For security reasons, not all tests are announced.

The test was delayed several times this week as winds continued to blow from the northwest, toward Las Vegas. Although all nuclear tests are now underground, the DOE does not conduct a shot when winds blow toward a populated area to guard against radioactive gases escaping above ground.

Romano was the 15th announced test at the Nevada Site this year, compared to 19 last year.

The last annouced test was Techado Sept. 22.

All tests are listed as having an explosive yield of less than 20,000 tons of TNT, or 20,000 to 150,000 tons.

White House has more china

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has accepted a gift of 215 place settings of gold-rimmed china, worth at least $23,650, for use in the White House mess, on Air Force One and at Camp David.

"Whether we needed any, I just don't know," said deputy White House press secretary Pete Roussel. "But it was offered as a gift. It's in use now."

Fitz and Floyd, a Dallas-based company that designs and manufactures fine china, deliverd the new dishes to the White House in October, according to a company spokeswoman, Jalaane Levi-Garza.

She said the china was made in Japan, and she described it as "very regal and traditional looking."

The shipment included 215 place settings, as well as a complete set of serving pieces. It is white porcelain, rimmed in 22 carat gold, with a cobalt blue band and a 22 carat gold presidential seal.

While she refused to say how much the set cost, she did say it was nearly identical to Fitz and Floyd's "Starburst" pattern that normally sells for $110 a place setting.

Ms. Levi-Garza said the company's president, Robert Floyd, offered to make the donation after hearing from friends two years ago that the White House needed new china.

Using donated money, Nancy Reagan purchased a 4,732-piece set of red, ivory and gold state china at a cost of $209,508 two years ago. But that service is saved for state dinners.

Government watched students, report shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Grenadian government ousted last fall maintained a careful lookout for potential counter-revolutionaries, and suspects ranged from American medical students there to a "very dangerous" attendant at a local gas station.

This picture emerges from a new series of captured documents released Friday by the State Department as well as a 43-page official study summarizing events leading up to and following the U.S.-led invasion of the island last Oct. 25.

An unsigned "People's Revolutionary Army" document indicated military authorities considered the 706 Americans studying at the University School of Medicine in St. George's as "internal counter-revolutionaries," along with some 400 Grenadians from elsewhere on the island.

Concern about the safety of the American students was described by Presiden Reagan as a key factor behind his decision to send American military forces to the island.

After the murder of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop, Reagan has said he was worried that the military council which assumed power might take the students hostage and use them for political purposes.

Another document, stamped "SECRET," indicates Grenadian authorities made a neighborhood-by-neighborhood assessment of the island, with a view toward determining the level of government support in each one and identifying potential counter-revolutionaries.

A lisitng of "enemy forces" in the community of Springs identifies as "very dangerous" the "vendor at Charlie David Gas Station," and "dangerous" Roy Charles, Joseph ("Big Joe") Neckles, Karen Pascal and several others. All are characterized as "petty bourg" (bourgeois).

The analysis of the small community of Paddock laments that the population there is "very difficult to organize into groups and mass organizations." It adds, however, that the revolution nonetheless appears to have majority support.

The State Department study, entitled "Grenada, A Preliminary Report," repeats much information disclosed previously, emphasizing the close ties Bishop had with the Soviet Union and other countries friendly to Moscow, including Cuba, North Korea, Libya, East Germany and Bulgaria.

Ships to evacuate Arafat, his fighters

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Two Greek passenger ships left Athens' port of Piraeus on Friday for Tripoli, Lebanon, to evacuate PLO leader Yasser Arafat and his fighters, port authorities said.

In Tripoli, PLO and Red Cross officials said an Italian ship would evacuate some 100 wounded Palestinians today in the first stage of the Arafat loyalists' pullout. The wounded are to be taken to Larnaca, Cyprus.

Piraeus port authorities said two vessels, flying Greek and United Nations flags, set sail for Lebanon to pick up the PLO fighters who have been under siege by rebels for more than a month.

Authorities said the departure of two other boats was being held up by crew members' objections to the mission.

"The crews say they are worried about traveling into a dangerous zone and they are working things out with the ships' owners," a port spokesman said.

A fifth evacuation ship, was refueling in the western port of Patras before setting sail, the spokesman said.

Government spokesman Dimitris Maroudas said the ships would make a first call at Larnaca, Cyprus, where they would be joined by an escort of five French warships.

Suspect in embassy bombing hospitalized under guard

KUWAIT (AP) — One of two bombers of the U.S. Embassy survived and is hospitalized under heavy guard, but has told interrogators "nothing," knowledgeable sources said Friday.

The sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said the accomplice's pancreas was removed by surgeons and he will require eight weeks to recover from his injuries and the surgery.

The accomplice was questioned by security officials after he regained consciousness, the sources said.

"He told them nothing," one source said.

After the bombings of the U.S. and French embassies and four other sites Monday, eyewitnesses said there were two terrorists in the truck that exploded inside the U.S. Embassy compound, and that one man was hurled from the cab and survived.

Kuwaiti officials first refused to confirm the reports. Then on Wednesday, Sheik Salem Al-Nasser, the governor of Kuwait, said reports of a second terrorist were "devoid of any truth."

On Friday, Interior Ministry officials said no statements will be issued about the bombings until after Sunday's Cabinet meeting.

Planes can't fly over Jerusalem

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — El Al, Israel's national airline, has been banned from flying over the old walled city of Jerusalem because it could cross the sacred site of the ancient Jewish Temple where Jews are forbidden to walk.

Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren ruled this week that the injunction against Jews stepping on the Temple Mount includes the air space above it.

El Al spokesman Nahman Kleiman said there is no regular flight path over Jerusalem, but some pilots veer off the regular route slightly to give passengers a better view of the city. El Al has agreed to observe the religious ruling, Kleiman said.

UMW delegates urged to vote against Reagan

PITTSBURGH (AP) — United Mine Workers delegates adjourned their convention Friday after 4½ days of hearing union leaders and politicians urge them to vote against President Reagan and for Walter Mondale.

United Autoworkers President Owen Bieber urged them Friday to defeat "that cowboy from California sitting in the White House."

Bieber was the sixth major labor leader to exhort the more than 1,400 delegates on the same theme, the defeat of Reagan through the election of former vice president Mondale.

"We simply have got to get rid of Reagan in 1984," Bieber said to miners' cheers.

"The labor movement, with all its diversity, is as united as never before in the determination to elect a pro-labor, pro-people president in 1984," Bieber said.

Snow began falling and the delegates representing about 240,000 miners in the United States and Canada adjourned their 49th Constitutional Convention six hours ahead of schedule.

In addition to routine resolutions, the only union business conducted Friday was the adoption without debate of committee reports on legislative goals and contract negotiation proposals for improved health and retirement benefits.

The health care package, which will be negotiated next year, calls for greater hospitalization benefits for laid-off miners and for miners whose employers go out of business in the depressed coal industry.

The convention also proposed that full pension benefits be offered to miners who are forced to retire on disability before age 50.

All week, the delegates heard and cheered pro-Mondale, anti-Reagan speeches from labor leaders including Bieber; AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland; Mary H. Futrell, president of the National Education Association; Gerald W. McEntee, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; UAW vice president Robert White, and United Steelworkers acting President Lynn R. Williams.

The delegates endorsed Mondale by acclamation in a party-like atmosphere Wednesday after the former vice president promised, "I will fight on your side."

UMW President Richard L. Trumka later promised the union's endorsement was not "lip service."

The UMW endorsement could mean as many as 300,000 votes for Mondale in coal mining states, according to Matt Miller, administrator of the UMW's Coal Miners Political Action Committee.

"You don't have to motivate these miners, especially if they're out of a job," Miller said. "About 60,000 of them who had jobs when Reagan took office are out of jobs today and another 40,000 are working short weeks.

"It's the biggest incentive in the world," Miller said, "and it's going to do a world of good for Mondale."

Miller noted that the delegates approved an increase in political action assessments from $7 to $10 per year for each working miner. The increase should provide more than $1 million next year for rallies, mailings, telephone banks, election day activities and voter registration programs, he said.

Court: Relations not felony if minor not virgin

MIAMI (AP) — A state appeal court has ruled that it was not a felony for an adult to have sexual relations with a consenting 12-year-old because the girl was not a virgin.

"We discern that the Legislature did not intend to punish equally consensual intercourse with chaste and unchaste children," a three-judge panel of the 3rd District Court of Appeal said Thursday.

Assistant Attorney General Diane Leeds, who represented the state, said the 2-1 ruling means minors foresake the state's protection when they lose their virginity.

"Once you become unchaste — for whatever reason — you could be raped by your adoptive father, I suppose — you lose the court's protection," Ms. Leeds said.

In the decision, the court ruled that Dade Circuit Judge Murray Goldman erred when he refused to dismiss indecent assault charges against Jerome Lanier.

Indecent assault is a second-degree felony punishable by up to 15 years in prison. Alternative charges are misdemeanors punishable by no more than a year in prison.

Lanier, 38, admitted repeated sexual encounters with a 12-year-old, identified in court papers as "S."

"S" said she agreed to the trysts, but Dade State Attorney Janet Reno brought indecent assault charges against Lanier, citing the girl's status as a minor.

But the appeal court ruled that those charges were precluded by the girl's history, which included at least one previous sexual relationship.

Judge Daniel Pearson, who wrote the decision, applied the same standard outlined in a statute prohibiting intercourse with those under 18, commonly known as the statutory rape law.

That statute specifies that sexual intercourse with a consenting minor is a punishable felony only when the minor is "of previous chaste character."

Judge James Jorgensen dissented, arguing that "issues of consent and chastity...are not relevant" in Lanier's case.

The majority noted that Lanier could have been charged under other statutes, such as those that prohibit lewd cohabitation or contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

"The defendant makes clear that he does not attempt to defend his conduct; indeed, he freely acknowledges that it is reprehensible," Pearson wrote. "What he does defend is his right to be charged under a statute which embraces such conduct."

Assistant Dade State Attorney Richard Shiffrin said his office will consider filing new charges against Lanier, who pleaded no contest in the original case.

Crimes against children leave Israelis agonized

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — An Arab shepherd found the mutilated body of 15-year-old Danny Katz outside a remote cave this week — the ninth juvenile to be murdered or disappear in Israel this year. And his death has Israelis agonizing anew over what has become of the Jewish state.

Police will say little about Katz's killing, and will not speculate about whether the nine juvenile cases might be connected. But police do say that Katz was tortured before he died, and one officer called it the most horrifying case he had ever encountered.

The killing has provoked a national outpouring of rage and anguish; debate in Parliament; the prime minister is being kept informed. And it has prompted a new vigilance by Israeli parents.

Children in this country, who in the past have tended to independence and plenty of outdoor activity, suddenly are being ordered by parents to stay close to home. Kindergarten teachers are lecturing 5-year-olds on the hazards of talking to strangers.

Crime against children is relatively new in this nation of 4.2 million founded in 1948. Not until 1980 was there a kidnapping for ransom. And although sociologists say violent crime is as inevitable as the six-lane highway, the killing of Danny Katz has shocked Israelis.

"We always said that here in Israel it was good, that here it was quiet, that here it's not America. But what is happening today is worse than America," said Ruth Shani, whose nephew vanished last year at age 14.

There is a refusal here to believe that Jews can do such things to Jews, and thus, suspicion falls on Arabs. The day after Danny Katz's body was found, and despite police denials, a mass-circulation newspaper headlined that police suspected Katz was killed by Arabs to prove their worth as terrorists.

A similar theory was advanced last year by Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan, the former chief of staff, about a young girl who disappeared near Tel Aviv. Pieces of her body were later washed ashore.

Eytan had "a theory that had no basis in reality or intelligence leads, and it's a pity it was brought up," said Commander Yehezkel Karti, head of police investigations, in a television interview.

Katz lived in a well-to-do suburb of Haifa with no public transportation, and like many Israelis, he often hitchhiked.

A ban on hitchhiking for those under 18 was among motions related to his murder that were debated Tuesday in Parliament. Interior Minister Yosef Burg cautioned against making any hasty conclusions in the death, saying they could harm Jewish-Arab coexistence.

Burg said every effort was being made to catch Katz's killer, and that Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir was being kept informed on the inquiry.

"Is there no deterrent to crime in this country?" stormed Yehuda Perah of the ruling Likud bloc. "Do the criminals have nothing to fear? Why, they are walking among us as free men."

The daily Yedioth Ahronoth says there have been 200 unsolved murders and disappearances in recent years. Police say they are overburdened and short of funds, with much of their resources going to fight Arab terrorism. Police earn low salaries, meaning the best detectives often work elsewhere.

Danger seen as allies

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir is portraying the new U.S.-Israel strategic cooperation agreement as a major success that has improved relations between the two allies. But a heated debate has arisen over what it means.

Some critics say the spirit of cooperation could tie Israel's hands in Lebanon or turn its soldiers into American mercenaries while the economic benefits are too long-range to alleviate Israel's immediate money troubles.

Other critics suggest President Reagan had one eye on the Jewish vote in 1984 U.S. elections when he agreed to broad new economic and military assistance programs. They also say that Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, viewed here as taking a pro-Arab line, will make sure nothing concrete emerges from the agreements.

Shamir returned Dec. 2 from talks with Reagan in Washington proclaiming the visit "one of the finest hours in our relationship with the United States."

The United States agreed to significantly increase the grant portion of its $1.7 billion aid to Israel, gave approval in principle to joint military exercises and laid the groundwork for a free trade agreement to help Israel's economy, which is headed toward a recession with a foreign trade deficit of $21.5 billion.

More significantly, perhaps, Israel and the United States finally saw eye to eye on Lebanon, Shamir said. This was described as a turning point in ending the sour period that followed Israel's siege of Beirut, the massacre of Palestinians by Israeli-allied Christians and friction between U.S. Marines and Israelis in Beirut.

But no sooner was Shamir back home than the criticism began.

Television comedian Shlomo Nitzan ridiculed the new understanding. Noting that Shamir had boasted of "an unwritten alliance," Nitzan produced what he called the text of the agreement — a parchment scroll adorned with official seals but otherwise blank.

Simcha Dinitz, a former Israeli ambassador to Washington, observed that while Shamir had done much to shore up the alliance, he had brought back little that had not been promised as far back as 1975, such as joint maneuvers and U.S. aid to the Israeli arms industry.

Israeli analysts contend that too often, presidential promises get buried by the Pentagon and State Department bureaucracies, which have to safeguard good relations with the Arab states.

The man in the street tends to wonder how much strategic cooperation is possible in view of the quarrelsome state of relations that existed between Israeli troops and U.S. Marines in Beirut.

Ex-Rebel greats watch anxiously

Lee goes for 5A state title against Converse Judson today

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

As Midland Lee gears for its biggest game in the 23-year history of the school today in Irving's Texas Stadium, there are two former Lee champions who will be watching for the results.

Junior Miller and Brad Wright, two former Lee stars on Lee's last playoff bound club in 1976, have both been keeping up with Lee's advancement. Now only hours before Lee meets San Antonio's Converse Judson for the 1983 state Class 5A football championship at 2:30 p.m., Miller and Wright are wishing the Rebels luck.

Of course, Miller is the tight end for the Atlanta Falcons now and won't be able to see the state championship game today since the Falcons end the NFL regular season schedule Sunday in Atlanta against the Buffalo Bills.

WRIGHT, ON the other hand, will be in Texas Stadium this afternoon as a fan of the Lee Rebels. Wright has already seen two Lee playoff games against Trimble Tech and Plano.

Wright is working in Dallas, but the record setting quarterback for the University of New Mexico will soon be heading to the camp of the San Antonio Gunslingers, one of the new entries in the United States Football League.

"I haven't been able to see any games, but I'm really excited about Lee being in the state finals," said Miller. "I've been keeping up with the playoffs. In fact, one of the Falcon trainers is Jerry Ray and he used to be in Odessa. We've got a lot of interest in West Texas these days and I got to tell him that Lee beat Permian twice this year.

"I remember when I played at Lee the big thing was beating Permian, but to do it twice in one year is really something. I can't be there Saturday, but I'm pulling for them and will be anxious to hear the score."

Wright will be seeing the Rebels play for the second week in a row and he likes what he sees.

"Lee really looks great to me. I don't know what Judson has to offer, but it looks like Lee can win the whole thing. They impress me," said Wright. "Lee has so much depth and they have talent across the board. In 1976, we had five or six players who formed the nucleus of the team. I think we may have had some better individuals in places, but Lee's two platoon situation this year probably makes them a much better team overall."

MILLER SAID that he didn't remember much about the playoffs in 1976, but he will never forget beating Permian.

"That really seems like a long time ago," said Miller, the former Nebraska All-American. "I remember we didn't do too well in the regionals. The thing I remember is beating Permian. I also remember that basketball season when we made the Final Four and lost to Houston Kashmere in three overtimes. I think that was the most exciting thing that ever happened to me at Lee. That triple overtime game was really something.

"All those things are golden moments to me. I loved playing for Lee and I loved the high school experience. They are moments you would never want to lose."

Wright, who was the Lee quarterback during the 10-2 season of 1976, said, "I remember that it was exciting to be in the playoffs. That game we lost to Arlington Sam Houston still sticks in my craw. That was a disappointing experience."

Miller has been with the Falcons since 1981 after being Atlanta's No. 1 draft pick. He has been in the Pro-Bowl, but a minor shoulder injury has slowed him somewhat this season.

"Things are going fair for me. I haven't had a great season. The team is not playing very well this year. We are 6-9 going into the game with Buffalo. But I really can't complain," said Miller.

Wright is looking for a new future in the USFL with the Gunslingers and is ready to get started. Wright was a fourth round choice of the Miami Dolphins in 1981. He was released and picked up by the Dallas Cowboys in 1982 and tried out again with the Cowboys in 1983.

THE GUNSLINGERS have had problems getting the franchise off the ground, mainly with having a place to play. San Antonio's Alamo Stadium is still not locked up by the USFL team.

"I'm supposed to report January 15. I called down there this week and they told me that everything was go," said Wright. "I've got some business deals that are expected to come to fruition around that time and I didn't want to drop things here if the Gunslingers don't have things ready for the season. I'm hoping everything will be resolved and we have a place to play."

Wright wants to play football. The Gunslingers have offered him that opportunity.

"This is a great chance for me to be a starting quarterback and that's what I want. I kind of released myself from Dallas this year. I asked Coach (Tom) Landry why I wasn't getting any playing time in the exhibition season and he told me that he had three other quarterbacks and couldn't work me in. He said the Cowboys would give me my release if that was what I wanted and that's the route I chose."

Midland High gains semis

SAN ANTONIO—Midland High's boys basketball team survived an overtime game against San Antonio Jefferson behind the hot shooting of Chris Rooker, who had 28 points in the 67-64 win to put the Bulldogs into the semifinals of the Optimist Classic in San Antonio.

MHS faces Clear Lake at 1:30 today for one berth in the finals. Two San Antonio schools, Fox Tech and Highlands, meet to decide the other half of the championship competitors.

MHS, 14-2, advanced to the quarterfinals Friday morning with a 59-56 win over San Antonio Madison. Rooker had 15 points, but sophomore Darrell Davis keyed the Bulldog victory with 19 points. Madison's Wilton White had 22 points in the losing cause, and Kevin Hays added a dozen.

Against Jefferson, Rooker was supported by Fred Franklin and Davis, who both chipped in 13 points. The production helped offset a big night from Jefferson's James Robinson, who scored 27 points.

Knox City wins A title, 27-20

WEATHERFORD (AP) — Otis Lockhart scored two touchdowns to propel Knox City to a 27-20 come-from-behind upset over state-ranked Bremond to capture the Class A high school football championship Friday night.

The Greyhounds, 14-1, trailed 20-0 in the first period, but a fumble-plagued Tiger offense and an injury to starting quarterback Brad Vann aided in the win.

Greyhound quarterback Wayne Hutchinson made a pitchback to Lockhart following a four-play drive. Lockhart ran it in 18 yards for the TD with 9:28 remaining in the game.

The Greyhounds had tied it 20-all on a Hutchinson hand-off to Lockhart, who ran it in one yard to score with 3:37 left in the third quarter.

The Greyhounds had entered the second half with renewed spirit, as Hutchinson engineered a 16-yard scoring pass to fullback Jerry Gutierrez. Hutchinson's kick was good to bring Knox City closer at 20-12.

Vann, who was felled twice on the field, was taken out of the game early in the second half, but returned with less than nine minutes remaining in the game.

The first drive, an 11-play, 83-yard effort, culminated in a 36-yard TD pass from Vann to split end Andy Taylor with 8:11 remaining in the first quarter.

Sophomore Mickey Greensage kicked the extra point.

Less than seven minutes later, Vann led a six-play, 73-yard drive as the Tigers scored again.

Vann made an inside roll to Van Taylor, a college prospect. He dashed six yards to score with 1:17 left in the quarter.

The TD was preceded by a 39-yard keeper by Vann from the Greyhound 47.

Vann then pitched to Van Taylor for two, before making a quarterback sneak for six yards to put the Tigers at first and goal.

In the second quarter, tailback William Edwards made a four-yard run with 6:48 remaining in the period. The kick failed.

The Greyhounds first got on the scoreboard with a 68-yard run by Hutchinson with 5:54 left in the first half, following a five-play drive.

TED BATTLES

The Moment has finally arrived

The big day, the one for which Midland has been waiting ever since someone declared, "It's halfway between Fort Worth and El Paso, let's build a town and call it Midland."

Midland, which has so often looked west to Odessa or east to Abilene with envy, can bring home a state 5A championship of its very own.

Right now, whether they do or not, doesn't really seem that important. When you've waited this long and at last advance to the finals, that's a memorable achievement in itself.

STILL, THE way the Rebels have played the last two weeks, you won't find many Midlanders who aren't convinced that Lee will bring home this district's 10th state championship.

In beating Odessa Permian, 20-0, and Plano, 35-14, with that searing last half comeback, the Rebels were state title material.

Of course, the rub is that maintaining that kind of intensity for three weeks takes rare concentration and dedication.

Permian and Plano represent the traditional class of west and north central Texas. However, Converse Judson is somewhat of a mystery team to West Texans.

The Rockets operate in a different sphere. True, they were ranked No. 1 in state much of the early part of the season and they beat the best Houston had to offer, but now do they rank with the Highland Parks, Trinitys, Bells, Planos, San Angelos, Permians, and, most important, Lees of the Texas football world?

FOR THE first time in this year's playoffs, weather could become a factor today at Irving's Texas Stadium.

The possibility of snow is predicted for the Dallas area...and, if not snow, freezing rain, if there is moisture.

Converse Judson throws the ball.

Midland Lee's doesn't throw the ball. When the Rebs want to open things up, they send Walter Jones or Tyrone Thurman wide. Bread and butter is Isaac Garnett up the middle and over people.

Somehow it has always seemed easier to run a pass pattern on a wet, artificial surface than it is to run wide. The receiver knows the precise pattern he will run and can execute a route more surely than a swift halfback can cut on a dime on wet or icy artificial turf.

So the fear here is that the rug, which Coach Spike Dykes has considered the advantage that has enabled his Rebels to capitalize on superior speed, may no longer be a friend.

Now that precautions have been taken not to paint myself into a corner, the pick here still remains, Midland Lee 21, Judson 14. After all, neither rain, nor snow, nor sleet...

Martin's out, Yogi's in

Steinbrenner fires Billy for third time

Ohio State's Tony Campbell battles Maryland's Adrian Branch for a rebound.

NEW YORK (AP) — George Steinbrenner, who vowed things would be different when he hired Billy Martin for the third time last January, fired him Friday and named first base coach Yogi Berra as the new manager of the New York Yankees.

The owner said Martin, who has four years left on a five-year, $2 million contract, would remain as an adviser, acting as his chief aide in making trades and working with minor league personel.

The dismissal marked the sixth time Martin has been fired as a major league coach. He resigned from the Yankees under pressure in 1978. Martin was fired in October 1979 and this time was let go after being suspended twice by the league, destroying a clubhouse toilet with a bat and getting involved in a locker room dispute with a New York Times researcher.

"I don't like to talk about this as a firing," Steinbrenner said. "I'm shifting people. Nobody is leaving. I'm making some personnel changes for the good of the team.

"I DO THINK if Billy had his way, he would have liked to have managed one more year," Steinbrenner said. "But he accepted it beautifully."

Steinbrenner was reported to have made the decision to fire Martin as long as two weeks ago, but he said the "final and ultimate decision," was not made until Thursday night.

When he hired Martin last Jan. 11, Steinbrenner said: "We're entering a new era for the third time," and that the two had opened up "a new line of communication."

Martin, 55, was in a Minneapolis-St. Paul hospital undergoing hemorrhoidal surgery. He was represented at the news conference by his agent, Judge Eddie Sapir of New Orleans.

"He's disappointed certainly because he wanted to come back and win it all," Sapir said of Martin. "But I can tell you honestly that I do not think George Steinbrenner would have made this move if Billy didn't understand and if Billy hadn't told him to go ahead and do whatever is best for the Yankees."

BERRA, 58, who was given a two-year contract, becomes the eighth manager the Yankees' owner has hired since 1973 when he headed a group of investors who purchased the team.

Martin held the job three times and two others — Bob Lemon and Gene Michael — managed the team twice. All three remain on the Yankee payroll, Lemon as a scout in California, Michael as third base coach under Berra, and now Martin as an adviser to the owner.

Steinbrenner's other managers have been Ralph Houk, Bill Virdon, Dick Howser, and Clyde King. Houk, Virdon and Howser are now managing other major league teams.

Berra, who managed the Yankees to a pennant in 1964 and later managed the New York Mets to the National League crown in 1973, said he did not fear the ax even in view of Steinbrenner's track record with managers.

"He'll do whatever he's going to do," Berra said. "I don't get too mad too easily. I listen but that doesn't mean I always have to do what he says. I've always said four heads are better than one."

Berra is one of only three men to manage pennant winners in each league, the other two being Alvin Dark and Joe McCarthy. But he said that the possibility of winning a World Series was one of the factors that caused him to accept the job this time after having turned it down several times in the past.

"I feel like I've achieved most everything in baseball," Berra said. I've won an MVP, I'm in the Hall of Fame and I've won a pennant in each league. The one thing I haven't done is win a world championship (as a manager).

"I'D LIKE TO win the pennant this season and the World Series. Both times before, it went down to seven games and both times I lost."

Steinbrenner said he would honor the four years left on Martin's contract — at a reported $400,000 a year — but he would not stand in the way if Martin wanted to accept another managerial job.

He added that his "friendship has never been stronger," with Martin.

"I talked with him yesterday and he told me he thought Yogi was an excellent choice," Steinbrenner said. "In Yogi, I think we have no Yankee who is more popular. I've never been concerned about his ability to handle this team."

Asked if it was possible that he would bring Martin back to manage for a fourth time, Steinbrenner said, "Nothing is sure but death and taxes, but right now I'm just speaking to the future of 1984."

Sapir said that while Martin was disappointed, he viewed his new Yankee assignment as a "tremendous opoportunity."

"This was a tough decision, Billy's a tough guy, and Billy respects it," Sapir said.

Berra, who attained MVP status and earned his spot in the Hall of Fame as the Yankee catcher friom 1947 through 1963, was optimistic the Yankees had enough talent to better their third-place finish in the American League East Division this past season.

Roy White, who rejoined the Yankees as a coach last season, will take over for Berra as first base coach. In addition, Steinbrenner announced that Jeff Torborg would remain as pitching-bullpen coach. Several other coaching positions like batting instructor and a second pitching coach may be filled later, Berra said.

MARTIN HAD a stormy 1983 season.

He was suspended twice by then-American League President Lee MacPhail, first for three days in April for kicking dirt on umpire Drew Coble and then for two games in August after calling umpire Dale Ford, "a stone liar."

He used a bat to destroy a toilet commode in a fury after the Yankees lost a game in Cleveland and became embroiled in a dispute with a researcher from the New York Times in the team's clubhouse.

Steinbrenner came close to firing him after the researcher charged that Martin had used abusive language to her but then changed his mind after a number of witnesses defended the manager's behavior.

The team won 91 games, 12 more than they had in a dismal fifth place finish the year before, and attendance improved by more than 200,000 fans.

But a number of key players bridled under Martin's abrasive style. Late in the season, outfielder Steve Kemp, first baseman Ken Griffey and Gossage all said they did not want to play for him again.

Martin resigned the Yankee job in 1978, under fire at the time from Steinbrenner, after saying the owner and slugger Reggie Jackson were made for each other.

"One's a born liar; The other's convicted," Martin said, referring to Steinbrenner's $15,000 fine for Watergate-related political activities.

MARTIN'S STORMY managerial career began at Minnesota in 1969. He was fired after one year, despite winning the American League West title. From 1971-1973, he managed at Detroit. Fired by the Tigers on Sept. 1, 1973, he was hired one week later by the Texas Rangers. He lasted in Texas until July 20, 1975 and after being fired there, was hired for the first time by Steinbrenner on Aug. 1.

Mavericks fall to Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Marques Johnson scored all of Milwaukee's points during an 8-1 spurt midway through the fourth quarter, helping the Bucks to a 110-105 NBA victory over the Dallas Mavericks.

With the score tied 88-88, Johnson hit two free throws and scored from under the basket to give the Bucks a 92-88 lead with 5:44 to go. After Dallas' Bill Garnett made a free throw, Johnson came back with a 12-footer and two free throws for a 96-89 advantage with 3:57 to play.

The closest Dallas could come in the remaining minutes was 106-104 on Rolando Blackman's 3-point goal with 12 seconds left. The victory improved the Bucks to 15-9 and snapped their three-game losing streak. Dallas lost its second consecutive game to fall to 15-9.

Milwaukee hit a sizzling 58.5 percent from the field in the first half to take a 59-46 lead. Bob Lanier, who finished with a season-high 25 points, led the Bucks with 12 in the first two periods.

Johnson finished with 21 points, 13 coming in the final two periods. Junior Bridgeman added 14, Sidney Moncrief 13 and Kevin Grevey 11.

Mark Aguirre led the Mavericks with 30 points, followed by Vincent with 23, and Brad Davis and Blackman with 15 each.

Wildcats meet Cougars next

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Melvin Turpin and Sam Bowie combined for 27 points and choked off Wyoming's inside game as No. 2 Kentucky crushed the Cowboys 66-40 Friday in Kentucky's invitational basketball tournament.

Kentucky, 5-0, advanced to Saturday's title game against Brigham Young, 3-2.

The Cougars got 12 second-half points from Mike Smith, including four free throws in the last 29 seconds, to stun previously unbeaten Virginia Commonwealth 81-77 in Friday's first game.

The 7-foot-1 Bowie and 6-11 Turpin proved too big to handle for Wyoming, which had no starter taller than 6-6.

Turpin led Kentucky with 14 points and Bowie had 13. Kenny Walker finished with 10.

Hoosiers gig Aggies, 73-48

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Center Uwe Blab and guard Chuck Franz scored 12 points apiece Friday night as the host Hoosiers, taking control with a string of 15 straight points early in the second half, beat Texas A&M 73-48 in the first round of the annual Indiana Classic basketball tournament.

The Hoosiers, 3-3 for the season, took their biggest lead at 62-36 on a basket by freshman Marty Simmons, who added 10 points to the balanced Indiana offense. The Aggies, also 3-3, were led by Kenny Brown with 12 points, including 10 in the final second half.

West Texas tops Pan American

AMARILLO (AP) — James Jackson scored a career-high 27 points to lead the West Texas State Buffaloes to a 91-86 overtime victory over Pan American Friday night in Amarillo Civic Center.

The Buffaloes led, 70-65, with 1:18 to play, but Pan American stormed back on two baskets by Duane Thornton and Leo McGainey's 18-foot jumper at the buzzer to tie the game, 71-71, at the end of regulation.

WTSU outscored Pan American 20-15 in overtime, with Jackson's two free throws with 13 seconds remaining wrapping up the victory.

Thornton scored 18 points and Terry Jones 17

Mike Christian, 26, a top contender for Mr. America, once was a teenage gang member who got in trouble for stealing and fighting, but bodybuilding has changed his life.

Golden Age of Bodybuilding has arrived

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Marvin Eder is a dinosaur. He roamed the earth 30 years ago, in a previous epoch of human physical development.

Bizarre as this may sound, Marvin Eder and others of his extinct species worked toward physical perfection with absolutely no knowledge of Jane Fonda, Nautilus, zen, computer dieting, vitamins, videotapes or drugs. Especially not drugs.

In that epoch, drugs were best known for — get this — preventing polio.

Thirty years ago, Marvin Eder (who still roams the earth, quietly, in New York) was one of the world's strongest and best-built humans. As a teen-ager, he finished third in the Mr. America physique contest and might have gone on to Olympic weight lifting fame had he not given up his amateur standing.

I RAN ACROSS Eder while I was working on a magazine story about old Muscle Beach in Venice, Calif. Marvin Eder was one of the legends there.

He talked about the old days of weightlifting, and the new days, and it reminded me that sports then and now are a lot like the old Charles Atlas comic book ads, with the "before" 98-pound weakling and the "after" muscleman. Only in sports, in a lot of ways, the 'before' was better, even after you strip aside the corny nostalgia.

As a kid, Eder hung around Sheriff's Park on Manhattan's Lower East Side and marveled at the feats of strength performed by local heroes.

"These were children of the Depression," Eder says. "Guys with fabulous physiques who didn't know what protein was. If they ate an egg, they threw a party. I'm not kidding you when I tell you the diet, for many of them, was surplus potatoes."

At 14, Eder joined the workouts and the legends.

"There was Big Red, he had 19-inch arms and could clean-and-jerk 380 pounds, in the sand. Louie Yakish, a longshoreman, would chin himself using only his pinkies. He could do 10, 15 one-hand chins.

" ONE GUY, I only knew him as Johnny Musclebound, would do 30 wide-arm chins at an amazingly slow pace, like slow motion. Rocky Soccundro, he was a short, little guy. His dad was the janitor of a building, and Rocky carried bags of cement all day. At night he would work out in the coal boiler room, doing deep knee bends with 550 pounds.

"That's the kind of guys. The joy of it all was enough to sustain you. It was your food and drink."

And warmth. Only rain, which would slick the chinning and dipping bars, would halt workouts. They would always work out shirtless, even in subfreezing temperatures.

"You would only feel the cold the first few minutes," Eder says. "After a while, you'd feel like your body was on fire, and it's a wonderful, wonderful feeling.

"We didn't have weights, so I'd pay kids a penny or a nickel to sit on my legs, to give me resistance. I'd have four or five of them sitting on my legs.

"There was an enormous joy in working out. I was impelled by an inner force. I didn't particularly like contests. I wouldn't enter a lot of them because my development was so advanced, I didn't think it was fair.

"ONE TIME, IN '49 or '50, I was a guest lifter at a YMCA contest. A fella named Jim Bradford, who weighed 270, pressed 330 pounds. I weighed 189, and I pressed 330 also."

At 19, Eder came to Los Angeles to compete in the Mr. America contest at the Greek Theatre, finishing third. He stayed around for a month, living and training at Muscle Beach.

In the tiny community of the world's greatest weight lifters, body builders, circus aerialists, vaudeville hand-balancers and other strong men, Eder was perhaps the strongest.

"He was way ahead of his time," says another vintage Muscle Beacher, Artie Zeller. "He was a strength phenomenon." A couple years later, in fact, Eder became the first lifter to break the 400-pound bench-press barrier (on the same night as another, much larger, lifter).

But Marvin returned home, turned pro in bodybuilding in hopes of making some money from his physique, but didn't and quit. He had sacrificed his amateur standing and Olympic eligibility, and decided it was time to grow up and go to work. Now he's got a successful business, a wife and a son.

"Some people refer to that as the golden age of bodybuilding and weight lifting," Eder says. "It was a relatively innocent time, without the mass infusion of drugs and mindlessness that pervades the sport now.

"We always thought that the bigger you got, the healthier you got. We believed that, almost like a religion. There was no conflict, no dichotomy, between health and muscles. Now the health aspect is gone. They will do almost anything to bloat themselves and pump themselves up.

"There was a joy in it, a feeling of triumph of the human spirit against the odds. There was an inner electricity, a spontaneous joy to lifting and watching yourself grow.

Miami smears NY Jets, 34-14

MIAMI (AP) — Miami safety Mike Kozlowski returned two Richard Todd interceptions for touchdowns within a 61-second span of the fourth quarter Friday as the AFC East champion Dolphins rolled to a 34-14 National Football League victory over the New York Jets.

The triumph, before an Orange Bowl crowd of 59,975, was the ninth in 10 games for the 12-4 Dolphins, who clinched the home field advantage in their first playoff game.

The Jets, who lost to Miami in the American Conference championship game a year ago, closed out a disappointing campaign with a 7-9 ledger and their fifth straight loss to Miami.

Kozlowski became the 14th player in NFL history to return two interceptions, returning the thefts 35 and 38 yards to set off a wild Dolphins celebration in the end zone with 8:38 to go. The two interceptions brought to 12 the number of Todd passes picked off by Miami in their last three meetings, including last year's AFC title game.

The touchdowns broke open a tight game that the Dolphins led 20-14 on the strength of two Uwe von Schamann field goals.

Von Schamann's 49-yard field goal with 1:12 left in the third quarter snapped a 14-14 tie, and his 20-yarder made it 20-14 with 10:44 remaining in the game.

Less than a minute later, Kozlowski picked off a Todd pass intended for Jerome Barkum and sprinted 35 yards down the right sideline for a 27-14 lead.

Two plays and 1:01 later, the fourth-year pro picked off another Todd aerial, this time coming across the middle of the field, and used the same right-sideline route to go 38 yards.

Stenerud by chance became football star

By MICHAEL YAWITZ

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — Jan Stenerud says he thinks from time to time about what he would have done if he hadn't played football.

It all began one fall day back in 1964 when a basketball coach at Montana State University here saw Stenerud booting a football out of sight.

The wiry Norwegian who last week broke the National Football League's field goal record, came to Montana State as a ski jumper and played soccer to stay in condition.

As Roger Craft, then Montana State's basketball coach, recalls:

"I was going over to basketball practice and I was cutting across the field and Jan was out there with a couple of the footballers," said Craft. "Jan was kicking the thing and putting it in the end zone all the time.

"I asked him, 'Can you do that with just one step?' And he said, 'I imagine so.'"

Stenerud imagined right. He kicked four in a row through the uprights from 40 yards away.

Craft approached the football staff about his find, but they seemed uninterested. "They acted like basketball coaches don't know what they're talking about when it comes to football," said Craft.

"But about week later I was cutting across the field again — it was Friday afternoon and the footballers were limbering up — and I looked up and Jan and some of his soccer buddies were waiting to get on field. So I yelled at him, 'Jan, come down here.' Then I told Jim (MSU head football coach Jim Sweeney), 'You gotta watch this guy kick the football.'"

Stenerud slipped off one of the his loafers, donned one of Sweeney's shoes, and kicked a series of successful field goals from 35 yards out.

"After about four or five field goals, Jim patted Jan on the rear and said, 'Son, pregame breakfast is at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.'"

That was the beginning.

What might have been otherwise?

"That's one thing I have throught about briefly from time to time," Stenerud said in a telephone interview this week after kicking his record-breaking 338th NFL field goal. "But once I got involved in football it became my only goal and to make it last for a few years."

NBA sets slam sunk contest

NEW YORK (AP) — Nine National Basketball Association players, led by Julius Erving of the Philadelphia 76ers, will participate in a slam-dunk contest Jan. 28 at Denver as a prelude to the NBA All-Star Game.

The winner will be determined by a panel of five judges, who will score the players on creativity, athletic skill and fan reaction. The winner will receive $10,000, the runner-up $3,000 and the third-place finisher $2,000.

Participants were selected by a 14-member panel of sportswriters, broadcasters and general managers

Oilers won't confirm coach rumor

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers refused Friday to confirm a published report that the coach of the Los Angeles Express of the United States Football League, Hugh Campbell, was the top choice to replace Chuck Studley as coach of the National Football League team.

"That situation, as we indicated at the time Chuck was named interim coach, will be reviewed at the end of the season," General Manager Ladd Herzeg said. "My position since Day One has been that we won't discuss the situation until the season is over. Our position hasn't changed."

Studley succeeded Ed Biles on an interim basis midway through this season. Studley has said he would like the job on a permanent basis, but has said that the decision was up to the Oilers' management.

The Houston Chronicle said that Campbell, who coached the Edmonton Eskimos of the Canadian Football League to five straight Grey Cup victories before joining the Express last year, would be able to get out of his contract with the USFL team because the club has been sold.

The newspaper said Studley's fate was sealed after Houston lost to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers three weeks ago. At that time, Tampa and Houston had the NFL's fewest victories this season — 1. The Oilers later beat Cleveland to pull even with the Bucs at 2-13.

Houston closes out its season Sunday at Baltimore.

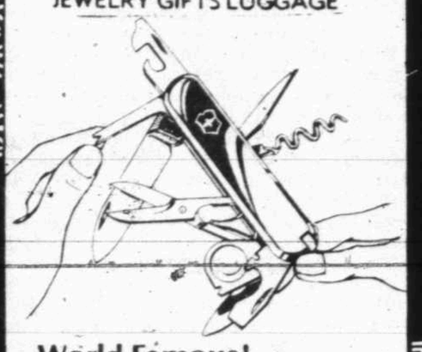

Besides Campbell, the Chronicle said seven other coaches would be contacted by the Oilers as possible replacements for Studley. They include Tom Osborne of top-ranked University of Nebraska; Woody Widenhofer, assistant coach of the Pittsburgh Steelers,

Mauriello relives glory hour

By GEORGE DEWAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — For 2 minutes and 9 seconds on a September evening at Yankee Stadium 37 years ago, Tami Mauriello and Joe Louis were as close to each other as a padded fist is to a chin.

"I wish I would have won it, and been the heavyweight champion of the world," the 60-year-old Mauriello said the other day of his 1946 title fight, his gruff, raspy voice barely hiding the wistful note of might-have-been. "I figured I was going to knock him out, and I almost did. He was bigger than me, big and strong."

Because of a bum left knee — a flare-up of a work-related injury he said he suffered years ago — Mauriello is on medical leave from his maintenance worker's job at Grumman Aerospace Corp.. He is recovering at his brother's house in the Bronx, not far from where he grew up. So he has plenty of time to sit and talk about the old days.

Born on May 24, 1923 — not Sept. 18, as the record books have it — he grew up Stephen Mauriello in the Fordham Road area of the Bronx, a big kid with a lot of brothers and sisters. He started high school but never finished, and spent a lot of time on the streets. "My brother, Sonny, got me into boxing. I was always a tough kid. When other kids got into a fight, I would always help them. My brother said, 'See, you help everybody fight, we'll make you a fighter.'"

WHEN HE was 15, Mauriello won the 147-pound Golden Gloves welterweight title. On July 25, 1939, Mauriello fought his first professional fight, against Gilberto Vasquez. He made $25. At 16, he was underage. "You had to be 18, and my brother Thomas was 18, so I used his name." He also used his nickname, Tami. "I started as a welterweight, 140 pounds. Then I got heavier. Italian kids eat a lot of pasta."

Compared with today's fighters, who have long layoffs between fights, Mauriello's record is startling. In his first two years of boxing, he won 24 fights without a loss. In 1941, as an 18-year-old, he fought two brutal 15-round losing battles for the light-heavyweight championship against Gus Lesnevich. Mauriello's final record was to be 82 wins (60 by knockout), 13 losses and one draw.

"Tami was one of the top fighters of the day," matchmaker Teddy Brenner recalled recently. "He fought with reckless abandon, walking in and throwing punches. He wasn't what you would call a safety-first fighter. The fans loved him. He wasn't a good fighter, he was a great fighter. Today he would probably be the cruiserweight champion of the world."

Mauriello and Louis collided on the evening of Sept. 18, 1946, with 38,494 boxing fans in the stands. Louis was making his 23rd title defense since knocking out James J. Braddock in 1937. "Majority opinion holds it will be a short battle," wrote New York Times boxing writer James P. Dawson the day before the fight. "Expert belief holds, also, that it will be an exciting battle, with a spectacular finish, regardless of the victor .... Always present is the chance of one punch lifting the challenger to the exalted estate of champion, and the Bronx heavyweight is a capable puncher with both left and right."

MAURIELLO'S moment came quickly. Here is Dawson writing the next day about the opening seconds of the first round: "They were sizing up each other, Louis scowling, shuffling forward, alert arms poised to strike at the first opening. Mauriello backing flat-footedly, cautious, watching, pecking with a long, straight left jab which reached Louis' face.

"Then, suddenly, bang! The punch was loosed and landed in the wink of an eye. It hit the target high on the jaw, on the left side of Louis' face, with all the power of Mauriello's topheavy, broadshouldered body behind it.

"Under the impact of the blow Louis was spun sideways, sent staggering, blinking and startled, clear across the ring, his arms pawing awkwardly for balance. Just when it seemed the champion must go head-first through the ropes near a neutral corner of the opposite side of the ring, Louis checked his flight and regained his balance."

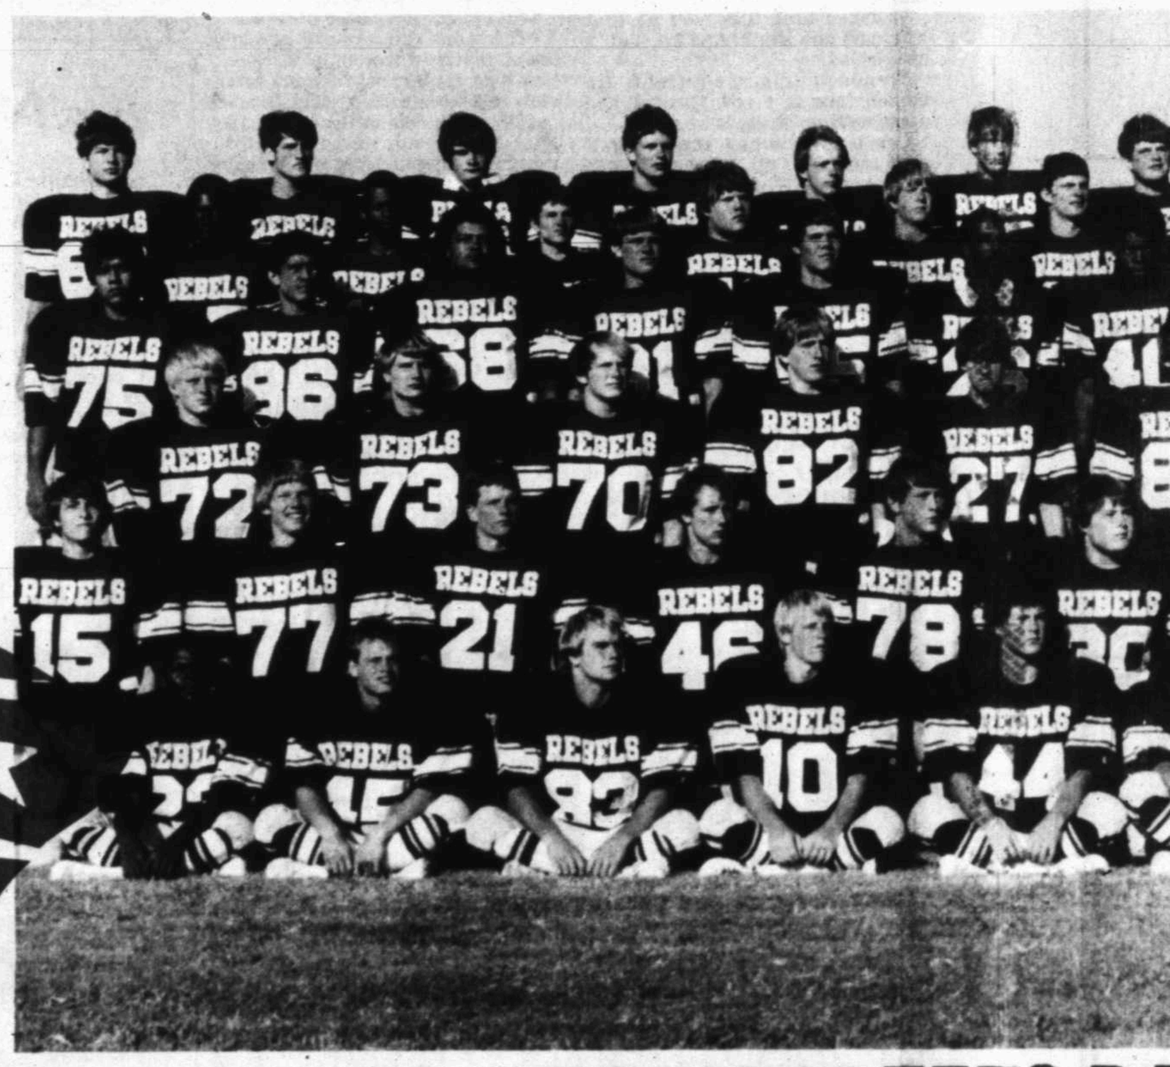

THE REST of the story is familiar. Louis regained his poise and went on to knock out Mauriello before the first round was over. A radio announcer caught Mauriello as he was leaving the ring and asked him what happened. His response, though mild by today's standards, raised a few eyebrows then and became part of sports history. "I thought I had him, and got too God-damned careless," Mauriello said.

"I would have knocked him out, I thought, but the referee held me back when I went after him," Mauriello said. "About 10 years later I met the referee, and he apologized. He said, 'I'm sorry.'" Mauriello had 18 more fights, being knocked out by Cesar Brion in his last fight on Oct. 5, 1949. He was only 26, but his boxing career was over.

"Jake Swirbul was a very dear friend of mine," Mauriello said of the former Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp. president, who was a sports buff. "He said, 'Come on, Tami, you've had enough. Come work with me.' So I went to Grumman Aircraft." He bought a house on Long Island, and he and his wife, Lucille, raised two sons; one is a policeman and the other works as a truck driver.

Vikes host Cincinnati

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — No running back has rushed for more than 100 yards in one game against the Cincinnati Bengals this season.

The list of those who have accomplished that feat against the Minnesota Vikings, however, reads like an NFL honor roll: Walter Payton, Tony Dorsett, Earl Campbell, Billy Sims, James Wilder, Wendell Tyler, Ottis Anderson and Matt Suhey.

The Bengals and Vikings, both 7-8 and out of the playoff picture, play the season finale Saturday at 3 p.m. in Minneapolis.

The game will feature the Bengals' No. 1 defense in the National Football League against a Minnesota defense which is the second worst against the rush, ahead of only Houston.

"It makes it tough going against a defense like that," Minnesota Coach Bud Grant said.

IN FACT, THE Bengals have shut out Minnesota twice in the three games the teams have played. That includes a 14-0 blanking in 1980, which is the last time the two teams met and the last time the Vikings have been shut out.

The Bengals have allowed opponents to chalk up an average of only 89.5 yards on the ground this season. Minnesota has yielded 162.9 yards a game rushing.

While Grant's concerned about the stingy Bengal defense, he's also worried about how his porous defense will stop Cincinnati's bruising fullback Pete Johnson.

Johnson, who missed the first four games of the season because of a drug suspension, racked up 118 yards last week in Cincinnati's 17-9 victory over Detroit. That was his fourth 100-yard game in seven starts this season.

Grant said it was only a joke when Minnesota's 305-pound offensive guard Curtis "Boo Boo" Rouse donned a No. 46 jersey this week in practice to impersonate Johnson.

"I don't know whose idea it was, but they went to so much work to get the jersey, we let him run a fews play," Grant said.

ASKED HOW the massive second-year lineman looked as a Johson stand-in, Grant said, "Not like Pete Johnson. That guy gained a ton (115 yards, one TD) last time we played. They give him the ball 20 times and we have to try to stop him."

Although both teams have identical records, that's deceiving. Minnesota finished the first half of the season at 6-2, only to lose six of its next seven games. The Bengals, on the other hand, have gone 6-2 in their last eight games.

"I'd like to remember the second half of this season," Bengal Coach Forrest Gregg said. "I'd like to erase forever, forever, the first half and the last off-season."

Saturday's game will mark the end of Cincinnati cornerback Ken Riley's 15-year career. Riley, nicknamed "The Rattler" for his hissing defense, has 63 career interceptions — fourth in NFL history.

No. Illinois Cal Bowl pick

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — Northern Illinois has a better record and better statistics, so naturally the Huskies are favored to win today's California Bowl football game with Fullerton State.

None of that bothers Fullerton Coach Gene Murphy. He and his Titans are just happy to be in the third annual Cal Bowl with a team that was picked to finish last in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

"If you had told me in August that we would be 7-4 and playing in a bowl game, I'd have suspected extensive hail damage in the attic," Murphy said.

"We were the underdog in most of our games," Murphy said, facing the same situation Saturday.

"We've been called the Rodney Dangerfields, and that's OK ... We are used to being called Cal State Disneyland and Titan Tech."

DISNEYLAND IS ONLY A few miles from the Fullerton campus in Southern California.

Northern Illinois may have an extra edge in experience — not among the players, but in Coach Bill Mallory. He's coached three bowl teams in the past — Miami of Ohio in the 1973 Tangerine Bowl and Colorado in the 1975 Blue Bonnet Bowl and the 1976 Orange Bowl.

"Any time you have experience at something, it has to be a great help," Mallory conceded. "I've been there a few times, and I know the happenings that go on at a bowl game."

His Huskies compiled a 9-2 record, including 8-1 in the Mid-American Conference. They outscored opponents 294-190 and produced an average of 336 yards on offense while giving up 291.

By contrast, the Titans were outscored 186-241, averaged 238 yards per game on offense and gave up 328.

Fullerton lost its final three games after several key defensive stars were injured, including Joe Aguilar, the PCAA's defensive player of the year. However, Aguilar will play Saturday.

Quarterback Damon Allen, younger brother of Los Angeles Raiders' running back Marcus Allen, sparks the Titans' offense and threw for 1,297 yards.

THE HUSKIES' quarterback, Tim Tyrrell, passed for 1,260 yards, ran for 539 and was named the MAC player of the year. Northern Illinois also boasts all-league tailback Darryl Richardson, who ran for 1,204 yards.

If history holds up, the game won't be decided until the closing seconds. Toledo won the 1981 inaugural from San Jose State 25-24 on a 41-yard field goal with 19 seconds left, and Fresno State scored with 11 seconds to go to beat Bowling Green 29-28 last year.

CITRUS BOWL

Maryland faces Tennessee tonight

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The name may be different than in the previous 37 contests, but the Florida Citrus Bowl will be anything but a new game when Maryland meets Tennessee tonight.

The Tangerine Bowl officially changed its name last March 25 after the Florida Citrus Commission, to promote the state's No. 1 industry, approved a five-year, $1.25 million sponsorship of the postseason football game.

WHATEVER THE name, a fourth consecutive sellout is expected. The money has changed, as well, jumping from a combined payoff of $504,597 in 1980 (Florida-Maryland) to $610,000 in 1981 (Missouri-Southern Mississippi) to $700,000 in 1982 (Auburn-Boston College) to an estimated $1 million this year.

That would make it the seventh of the 16 bowl games to hit the million-dollar level and expectations are for a payoff in the range of $1.3-1.4 million next year when NBC-TV carries the Citrus Bowl (Saturday night's game will be televised by Mizlou, 7 p.m.). It's a far cry from 1979 when the Tangerine Bowl was told to pay its teams at least $125,000 apiece or risk losing its NCAA certification.

A good portion of the game's proceeds — $50,000 last year — will go to the Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children. Maryland Coach Bobby Ross disclosed Friday that his sister spent two years in a Shriners' hospital. "If not for the fine job they did there, I don't know if she'd be walking today," he said.

College Football

TENNESSEE COACH Johnny Majors said that winning the game "is of the utmost importance, but when you see whst the Shriners do for the crippled children, football's not the most imprtant thing in the world — except between 8 and 10:30 Saturday night."

Maryland, No. 14 nationally in total offense with 414.5 yards per game, is a 4½-point favorite, although both teams have 8-3 records and Tennessee is ninth in total defense with a 279.0-yard average.

On the surface, the game looms as a duel between Maryland quarterback Boomer Esiason, who holds 17 school offense records and finished 13th nationally in total offense, against Tennessee tailback Johnnie Jones, the country's eighth-leading rusher with 111.6 yards per game, tops in the Southeastern Conference.

"It's time to put off talking and start doing the playing," Ross said Friday.

Asked if he expected Maryland's wide tackle six defense to give Tennessee as much trouble as Kentucky's did — although the Vols won 10-0 — Ross replied:

"Football is a game of people, not structured offenses and defenses. True, Kentucky plays a similarly structured defense, but we've modified ours somewhat from Kentucky's. I hope we play as well as Kentucky did. They did a good job. It's not easy to hold Tennessee to 10 points with the speed they have.

"THE WIDE TACKLE six is an outdated defense, but it's not that different from any other defense — you still have to tackle. We have six players on the line instead of five; it's all based on how you use your ends and outside linebackers, and we try to disguise that."

"I wish it was an outdated defense," Majors said, "but that's not true. The wide tackle six is so hard to run and throw against consistently. Kentucky gave us a lot of problems and they're not as talented a defensive team as Maryland."

Tennessee has a 12-13 bowl record to 4-8-1 for Maryland, which has dropped its last three pstseason games. But one of the Terrapins' victories was a 28-13 upset of Tennessee's 1951 national champions in the Sugar Bowl (when The Associated Press selected the national champion at the end of the regular season).

Tennessee has won the other four meetings with Maryland, including a 7-3 victory in the 1974 Peach Bowl.

Southern Illinois coach Rey Dempsey prepares his team for today's NCAA Division II title game with Western Carolina at Charleston, S.C.

Division II finals

W. Carolina vs. So. Illinois

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Top-seeded Southern Illinois meets Western Carolina Saturday before a nationwide television audience for the NCAA Division I-AA football championship.

The coaches of the teams, which represent the survivors of a 12-team playoff field, like the idea of deciding the championship on the field instead of in polls.

But both also agree it might be easier if the teams had to prepare for only one postseason game.

Coach Bob Waters, whose Western Carolina Catamounts are 11-2-1 after an 0-2 start, said his team is the first to play a 15-game season in National Collegiate Athletic Conference history. Saturday's contest will be the team's fourth playoff game of the year.

The Salukis, of the Missouri Valley Conference, are 12-1 going into the game at The Citadel's Johnson Hagood Stadium.

Southern Illinois' forte is a big-play defense led by cornerbacks Donnell Daniel and Terry Taylor. The unit has forced 30 interceptions, and blocked three field goals and seven punts.

Western Carolina, of the Southern Conference, will test that secondary with the passing of quarterback Jeff Gilbert. He has thrown for 2,839 yards and 20 touchdowns. Western Carolina has two small but speedy receivers in Eric Rasheed and Kristy Kiser.

Ticket sales, slow at first, have been brisk in recent days.

Some 14,000 had been sold by Friday, not counting the 3,000 set aside for the visiting schools. The field seats 22,500.

Southern Illinois is officially the home team, but Western Carolina will enjoy more fan support. An estimated 5,000 fans are expected to make the trip from North Carolina.

But that doesn't mean the Salukis will be without their fans. An estimated 1,000 students and others from Carbondale, Ill., are expected to journey here by charter bus and plane.

Kuhn reaction positive

NEW YORK (AP) — Reaction to baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's suspension of four players involved with drugs continued Friday to be generally positive, both from players and executives.

But there was no early word from the Players Association, which still was considering its formal reaction. Don Fehr, the union's acting head, said Thursday that the union expected to sign a grievance but would consult first with all the players and their lawyers.

Thursday, Kuhn suspended Willie Wilson, Willie Aikens and Jerry Martin of the Kansas City Royals, all of whom were sentenced to three months in jail after pleading guilty to attempting to possess cocaine. He said their suspensions would be reviewed May 15, leaving the way open for a possible early return to baseball.

However, the fourth player suspended, relief pitcher Steve Howe of the Los Angeles Dodgers, will not have his suspension reviewed until Dec. 15, 1984, at which time it could be extended if his cocaine dependency is not cured. Howe twice entered rehabilitation facilities this year and was suspended by the Dodgers three times during the year.

Tom Burgmeier, player representative for the Oakland Athletics, said his initial reaction to the suspensions was, "it could have been worse."

"I think the ruling will have an effect on any player who has been, or is thinking about getting involved (with drugs)," Burgmeier said. "Any player who understands the personal embarrassment, possibly doing hard time, would be foolish not to take a step back and look at what it has done to the lives of several ballplayers."

Houston Astros first baseman Ray Knight said, "This drug stuff can't continue to fester. I don't know all the particulars on the three Royals. From what I read, they were just attempting to buy it. Maybe for them it was harsh. But in the case of Steve Howe, it was justifiable. Steve was given every opportunity to straighten up."

Avron Fogelman, new co-owner of the Royals, was a dissenter from the general run of favorable comments.

"I have grown up with the thought that the foundation of this country is based on tempering justice with mercy," said Fogelman. "I don't think the commissioner showed mercy, nor did he show compassion. Once the country is without compassion and mercy, we've lost a lot. Justice may have been expressed, but I don't think mercy or compassion have been expressed."

But other executives stood solidly behind Kuhn.

"Drugs and alcohol have no place in baseball," said Houston General Manager Al Rosen. "I hope this is a deterrent, although that's like asking whether capital punishment will stop crimes like murder. Someone had to make the clarion call and I'm glad he did it."

"Obviously, something had to be done," said Tom Haller, general manager of the San Francisco Giants. "He could have been much more firm, but it's not exactly a slap on the wrist, either."

"Although the drug problem isn't completely out of hand, it's a very serious problem and something we have to deal with," said Giants' President Bob Lurie. "I hope this action will have beneficial results. It's important for the players to know what happens when they get caught."

Mahaffey-Thompson in front

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — The team of John Mahaffey and Leonard Thompson finished 10 holes Friday to lead the field by two strokes before heavy rains forced postponement of second-round play in the $450,000 PGA Chrysler Team Invitational tournament.

Play is scheduled to resume at noon Saturday for the 56-team field, all of whom were left on the course when the round was postponed.

The rains dumped three inches of water on the par-72, 7,180-yard No. 1 course and par-72, 6,875-yard No. 2 course at the Boca West Club.

Thompson and Mahaffey produced seven birdies, five on the strength of Thompson's putting on the wet greens.

Doug Plank walks to Chicago Blitz

CHICAGO (AP) — With the last medical hurdle behind him, former Chicago Bears' safety Doug Plank signed a three-year contract Friday with the Chicago Blitz of the United States Football League.

Financial terms of the contract were not disclosed, but Blitz General Manager Ron Potocnik said reports of $1 million were "too high."

"It's less than the national debt," Plank quipped.

"Christmas came early for me," said Plank. "I'm very impressed with the people in the organization, especially (new Coach) Marv Levy."

Plank, 30, for eight seasons a hard-hitting defensive player with the Bears, was released by the National Football League club after team doctors became dissatisfied with his recovery from a spinal contusion suffered early in the 1982 season.

But he passed extensive orthopedic and neurological examinations administered by Dr. Michael Schafer, the Blitz' team physician, and two other doctors, the USFL club said.

"I don't feel any more at risk than I did before," said Plank.

Asked whether he might be bothered by the potential for serious injury, he replied, "I'll clear that up in five minutes. And I will continue my aggressiveness."

Because of his aggressive style, Plank gained a reputation around the NFL as a headhunter. In 1980, Commissioner Pete Rozelle fined him for an alleged late hit on Tampa Bay tight end Jimmie Giles.

"I make no excuse for the way I play," Plank has said. "I'm not embarrassed by it or ashamed by it."

The Blitz also has scheduled a Tuesday news conference to announce the signings of two current NFL starters, club spokesman Kay Schulz said.

Spurs defeat Pacers

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Reserve forward Gene Banks scored 22 points to lead the San Antonio Spurs to a 120-92 National Basketball Association victory over the Indiana Pacers Friday night.

Banks, a starter until last week, voluntarily became the Spurs' sixth man to beef up the bench.

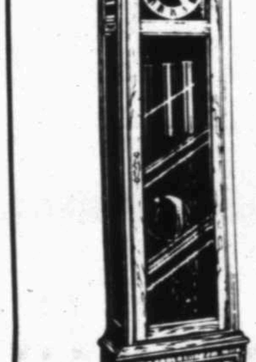

The game turned into a runaway midway in the first period when the Spurs' 20-4 run turned a 9-3 deficit into a 23-13 lead. San Antonio held a 13-point lead, 55-42, at the half despite shooting only 38 percent from the field.

Dogs in two-hour drill

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Coach Vince Dooley sent seventh-ranked Georgia through a two-hour workout that included a scrimmage Friday and then gave the Cotton Bowl-bound Bulldogs two days off before resuming preparations for the second-ranked Texas Longhorns on Monday.

Dooley called the scrimmage "pretty good" as the team worked mainly on long yardage and goal line situations.

Offensive tackle Guy McIntyre returned to practice after missing Thursday's workout, but two other players left the drills early with what was thought to be minor ankle injuries — cornerback Andre Holmes and defensive guard Mike Weaver.

Campbell against Dickey Sunday

When Oilers and Colts clash in NFL

BALTIMORE (AP) — Two of the American Football Conference's top ground gainers will be showcased when Earl Campbell and the Houston Oilers take on Curtis Dickey and the Baltimore Colts Sunday.

But it may be the final time the two 1,000-yard rushers play for their respective teams as the 1983 National Football League season closes for both teams.

The taciturn Dickey, who has rushed for 1,012 yards and scored seven touchdowns this year, is considering a jump to the United States Football League. He and backfield mate Randy McMillan have combined to give the Colts the NFL's No. 1 ground game this year.

But the odds of Dickey's heading out of Baltimore increased when Colts owner Bob Irsay stated flatly this week, "I won't pay him (Dickey) $4 million." Dickey is reportedly seeking a $3 million contract.

Campbell, the 1977 Heisman Trophy winner, has carried for 1,208 yards rushing and 12 TDs in 1983. But the six-year yeteran requested a trade from the Oilers after a mid-season argument with Head Coach Chuck Studley over the way he was being used.

Campbell accused Studley of treating him like "a dog" and said he wanted out of Houston.

The Oilers, who will be assured of the NFL's top draft choice should they lose Sunday, could replace Campbell with this year's Heisman Trophy winner, Nebraska's Mike Rozier.

But it's unclear if either Rozier or Campbell will be playing for Studley, whose job may be hanging in the balance this weekend for the 2-13 Oilers.

"I want to win, certainly, but not for my future," Studley said. "I've stopped keeping a tally on that a long time ago."

The Colts, who jumped out to a 6-4 start, have lost their last five straight since knocking off the New York Jets 17-14. Baltimore Coach Frank Kush, whose club blew a 19-0 lead in a 21-19 loss to Denver last week, has a simple explanation for the slump.

"When you're the kind of team we are, bad things happen to you," Kush said, referring to the turnovers and mental errors which have plagued his team during the streak.

Two Colts who have managed to avoid slumps this season are kickers Raul Allegre and Rohn Stark. Allegre ranks second in scoring in the AFC, while Stark leads the NFL in punting.

AP Laserphoto

Rangers' Tom Laidlaw, right, and Chicago Black Hawks' Peter Marsh conduct a board meeting over a loose puck during NHL action at Madison Square Garden.

An AP Sports Analysis
By BARRY WILNER

Phil Verchota is a measuring stick. If you want a comparison of the gold-medalist 1980 United States Olympic Team and the current version, which travels under the guise of Team USA, you go to someone who has been there both times.

That someone is Verchota.

"I can't recall or document our progress in 1980 as compared to now," said Verchota, the only member of the '80 team who is participating in the current exhibition series between Team USA and the touring Soviet Selects. John Harrington, who also played for Herb Brooks' champions at Lake Placid, currently is sidelined with a wrist injury that could keep him from playing in the '84 Games in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

"Things certainly are a lot easier to grasp for me. I've been exposed to the concepts more because both Herb and Lou (Team USA Coach Lou Vairo) use similar tactics. Experience evens out the peaks and valleys. You find yourself in situations where you know what you can and can't do and what you should try and not try. You understand your limitations better."

And what are the limitations of this Olympic squad?

"We'll be able to tell that better after this series," said Verchota, who rekindled memories of 1980 when he scored on a breakaway with 1:18 left to play to lift the Americans over the Selects 5-4 last Friday night in Lake Placid in the opener of the six-game series. "Until now, there has been a lot of travel, a lot of preparation for games and we've been too busy to think of the possibilities.

"After Christmas, when we have the final realization that it's around the corner and can see the so-called light at the end of the tunnel, we'll be better able to evaluate the team."

For Verchota, it helps that both Brooks and Vairo stress the Euro-hockey style, which places emphasis on speed, positioning and puck possession.

"They seem to have similar approaches," he said. "Herb was withdrawn, aloof from the players. He never let you know where you stood, he kept you guessing.

"Lou is more accessible and open. You know exactly how you stand."

Team USA stands in a delicate spot. Since the '80 team worked miracles, many people — especially the casual fans — expect a repeat.

Rather than focus on whether the gold is in reach at Sarajevo, Verchota prefers to look at what the '80 team's achievements meant for hockey in the United States.

"People are interested in what we are doing now, no matter what city we go to," he explained. "It's good for hockey in general. It filters to the youth and that's where it all starts."

Verchota's exploits in the first game against the Soviets — he also scored the Americans' first goal — punctuated his role with the team. At 26, he is the oldest member of Team USA and its most experienced. He's the team captain. He is expected to lead.

"Everyone on this team has been a leader at one time or another, at one level or another," he said. "To say one or two guys come to mind, no. In certain games, a couple of guys might come to the forefront. But we don't have a constant one or two people carrying the team.

"It's got to be 20 guys every game pulling their load. That's how we did it in 1980. It's the only way."

Ex-Giants' back Doug Kotar dies of cancer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Doug Kotar, the former New York Giants' running back who fought against brain cancer for nearly 18 months, died in his sleep Friday at Montefiore Hospital. He was 32.

"We were hoping to get him home for Christmas," said Dr. Robert Selker, hospital chief of neurosurgery. "It was kind of a sudden thing. Throughout the night he had been pretty good."

Kotar, who retired from the Giants of the National Football League in July 1982, had been an intermittent patient at the hospital since October 1982, alternating periods of chemotherapy with visits to his home in his native Canonsburg, about 20 miles southwest of Pittsburgh.

Kotar was visited at home in August by 40 Giants' players on their way to play an exhibition game against the Pittsburgh Steelers. Many players were teary eyed when they left the home.

Doug Kotar
...loses long battle

"He was a tremendous athlete and a real gutty player — a good person," said Giants inside linebacker Harry Carson, a family friend who helped organize the team visit. "He was constant. You could always count on him to give a total effort."

Kotar last checked into the hospital Oct. 12, according to spokeswoman Jan Kinzler.

A MONTH AFTER Kotar retired from the Giants, he sought treatment for headaches after being kicked in the head in a swimming pool accident. Team physicians then discovered a golf ball-sized tumor in Kotar's brain.

He underwent lengthy surgery at the University Hospital of Medicine and Dentistry in Newark, N.J. Doctors decided an attempt to remove the tumor, located in the center of the brain, would endanger Kotar's life.

After several weeks of chemotherapy, Kotar, his left side partially paralyzed, was moved to Montefiore to be closer to his family.

Rose Ann Kotar, Kotar's sister-in-law, said none of his relatives were with him when he died at 7:25 a.m.

His wife, Donna Kotar, 30, said she received the telephone call reporting his death about an hour before she would have left home for her daily visit to the hospital.

Selker said Kotar was not in pain when he died and had been in good spirits throughout the treatment.

"He withstood all the adversities that are required for someone to go through a long treatment program," he said. "He's a first-class guy."

"DOUG KOTAR WAS a valued member of the New York Giants and a valued friend of those of us with the Giants," said George Young, the team's general manager.

"His courage in fighting the disease that took his life was in every way consistent with the toughness that made him the player and the person he was," Young said.

Earlier this year, Mrs. Kotar said her husband struggled to live so he could see his children, Doug Jr., 10, and Christie, 7, grow up.

"He wants to fight to watch his kids grow up," Mrs. Kotar said then. "His father died when Doug was 14. He didn't get to see Doug growing up or being big in sports."

Ray Campanelli, Kotar's former coach at Canon-McMillan High School, called him "the finest athlete in the school's history" and said he strived to become better than people thought he could.

Kotar had a steady but unspectacular career as a running back at the University of Kentucky, where he gained 1,167 yards in four seasons. He signed as a free agent with the Steelers in 1974.

At 5-foot-10½, 205 pounds, Kotar was given little chance to make the team and was traded to the Giants four days later.

He became a starter for the Giants and often carried the ball in key situations. Kotar ran for 3,380 yards in eight seasons, becoming the fourth-leading rusher in the team's history.

Kotar retired in July 1982 because of injuries, planning to become a salesman for a beer distributorship. He missed the 1980 season with torn ligaments and the last nine games of the 1981 season with a separated shoulder.

MRS. KOTAR, WHO began dating him when she was a high school sophomore, said Kotar's sports career hadn't changed his personality.

"It didn't affect him as a family person. He was into football, but he was into family, too," she said this year.

In early January, retiring Giants Coach Ray Perkins asked that money donated to Perkins at a farewell dinner in New Jersey be used to establish a college trust fund for Kotar's children.

"He (Doug) was real excited when I told him about it," Mrs. Kotar said after the dinner.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete Friday.

Chandler defends title today

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Jeff Chandler defends his World Boxing Association bantamweight title Saturday against Oscar Muniz, the only fighter to beat him as a pro.

Until Muniz scored a surprising 10-round split decision in a non-title bout July 23, Chandler said he "always thought I could be one of the all-time great champions."

"Oscar got in the way of that," said Chandler, who faces Muniz in a scheduled 15-rounder at the Sands Hotel & Casino. "But I will be ready this time. I will be more serious for this fight."

The July fight had been scheduled on short notice because ABC-TV needed to fill a programming void.

"I took the fight because I had never fought on national television before," Muniz said. "I'd never gotten that kind of exposure.

"This is the fight of my life and I'll be ready. I'm in great shape. It will be a great fight," added Muniz, who has a 37-3-3 record with 21 knockouts.

Muniz also said that he would fight Chandler differently than his other opponents.

Dub Huntley, Muniz' trainer, said, "Movement is the key to the fight."

It will be Chandler's ninth title defense since he won the crown by knocking out Julian Solis in November 1980. Chandler has defended his title against five top-ranked contenders and has a record of 32-1-2 with 17 knockouts.

England to fight drug use in sports

LONDON (AP) — Britain's sports minister Neil Macfarlane promised Friday to investigate ways of stamping out drug abuse in sport.

He told the House of Commons he would consider limiting financial aid to sports which do not agree to random drug testing.

The British government allocated $42.3 million this year to develop sports, mainly for young amateurs.

Inmate crews good for men, taxpayers

LITCHFIELD, N.H. — Intermittently swatting flies and wiping sweat from their brows, the six inmates from the State Prison in Concord, N.H., drove their shovels and post-hole diggers deep into the shoulder of Route 3-A near here.

"Should have been up to the other job," New Hampshire Highway Department supervisor Dick Brown said. "The black flies were so thick, we couldn't even see each other hardly."

Turning to his six young charges, known as New Hampshire's "chainless chain gang," Brown had nothing but praise for their work.

"They're good boys, all of them. Working here gives them time to adjust before they get out (of prison). It's a lot better than just dumping them back on the street."

Brown's crew of inmates, who each earn between $1.50 and $2 a day, is one of several that have been put to work outside the walls of Concord's 19th-century prison since last summer, cutting brush, picking up trash and putting in guard rails along the Granite State's highways.

NEW HAMPSHIRE was one of the first New England states to put convicted criminals to work on road gangs, in a program that prison officials say has been good for the men and the taxpayers. Vermont and Rhode Island also use inmates on road crews.

"You've heard of criminals making the streets unsafe for society? Well, we're making the roads a little safer for people," Matthew Gangi, a 28-year-old convicted burglar and forger, now serving a term for escape, said.

Gangi, who in his size 13 shoes tips the scale a bit over 304 pounds, said that the road work was hard, but was preferable to being cooped up in a cell day after day with nothing to do.

"It's the mind that doesn't do anything that gets you in trouble," he said. "Besides, you sleep real good at night."

Gangi said that he had already dropped 30 pounds from his 6-foot-plus frame. He hopes to get down to 275 before he is paroled early next year.

INMATE STEVE Meany, also doing a term for burglary, said that it was a good workout, "but I hate it in the winter. It's damn cold."

Meany's major complaint, though, is that he finds it hard to sleep at night in the prison when he has to get up early to work.

"The younger guys (he is only in his early 30s) like to crank up their stereos."

Sergeant Ronald Beaupre accompanies the inmate road crew from the prison to the job, but he hardly fits the image of those shotgun-wielding, sadistic guards depictd in the movie "Cool hand Luke." Beaupre is not only unarmed, "I don't even have a two-way radio," he says.

Beaupre says that he tries to treat the inmates like he would want to be treated in a similar circumstance.

"I'm not hard on them — as long as they do their work," he said.

AT A LUNCH break recently, Beaupre's inmate crew daydreamed about finding a satchel with a million dollars in it lying on the roadside.

"We'd just gently knock you on the head and take off," said one inmate, leaning against the state prison van whittling a piece of wood, smiling all the while at Beaupre.

"You wouldn't have to do that. I'd go with you," Beaupre joked back.

Warden Everett L. Perrin Jr., a former military prison official, said that about a fifth of the institution's 443 inmates now work in some capacity outside the walls.

"Idleness is the big bugaboo in prisons. I want them (inmates) working. I'm always looking for employment for them," he said.

Under New Hampshire state laws, any inmate with less than two years to complete on a sentence involving a non-violent crime can be put in outside work programs. Inmates serving time for a violent crime must have fewer than six months to go on their sentences to qualify for outside work details. All work programs at the prison, inside or out, are joined on a voluntary basis.

ANY STATE agency can request inmate laborers. The agency pays for the guard, the inmate's meager earnings and transportation.

Gangi, who started on the road gang only a month ago, said that he has a feeling of satisfaction when his work is done for the day and he returns to the Concord prison.

"This is really the best thing for the inmate and society. In a small way, we're paying society back for some of the things we've done," he said.

Perrin said that only two inmates had escaped from outside work details since the program began last summer.

McDonald makes hamburger history

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

MANCHESTER, N.H. — His name girdles the earth on 7,200 McDonald's restaurants doing an annual gross of $7.1 billion in about 30 countries. But almost nobody knows him, especially the folks in the McDonald's chain, where he has always been one of big boss Ray Kroc's least favorite people.

But Richard J. McDonald, 74, takes it all the way he takes his French fries — with a couple of grains of salt. He isn't hurt when kids make a long face because he's not Ronald McDonald. And he doesn't get excited when Kroc, senior board chairman, calls him and his late brother, Maurice, "obtuse" and guilty of "deviousness or dumbness," as Kroc did in a 1979 book called "Grinding It Out."

A big, affable man, with mischievous blue eyes and a W.C. Fields-like demeanor, McDonald prefers to think of positive things — like the $2.7 million Kroc paid the McDonalds to buy them out lock, stock and burgers in 1961. He cherishes the memory so much he keeps a photocopy of the check enshrined in Plexiglas on his desk in Bedford, N.H.

On the other hand, McDonald winces at the way Kroc has tried to make mincemeat out of the McDonald brothers and their role as founders of McDonald's. "Grinding It Out" implies that Kroc, now 80, was the Thomas Edison of fast food, and the dust jacket asserts baldly that Kroc "founded the McDonald's hamburger chain and built it from a single restaurant in Des Plaines, Illinois."

"HOOEY," SAYS Richard McDonald.

Direct, unpretentious and friendly, he could be just one more myth born in the mind of a corporate publicist. Richard McDonald is merry. He's grandfatherly. And he's — well — beefy. He'd make a wonderful Santa Claus or old-time political boss. A patterned handkerchief pokes jauntily out of the breat pocket of his cashmere jacket, and a golden tie clip bearing an "M" monogram hints at his last name. He comes off as Mr. Main Street America — the nice guy down the block who just happened to strike it rich. He wants to have a nice time and wants everyone else to enjoy himself, too. But he worked too hard to build the name McDonald to forget how it was done.

POOR RAY, whose fortune is estimated at more than $600 million, owns the San Diego Padres baseball team, a 210-acre ranch outside San Diego, a plush home in La Jolla and a helicopter to get him around. For all tht, he's living modestly compared to a few years ago, when he had four helicopters as well as a 6,000-square-foot apartment on Chicago's posh Lake Shore Drive and a luxurious Fort Lauderdale beach home whose doorbell was rigged to chime: "You deserve a break today."

A spokesman for the chain calls the-birth-of-McDonald's-according-to-Kroc "an accurate representation of Ray Kroc's recollections of the creation of the company."

But Richard McDonald says that by the time Kroc came along in 1954, McDonald's Hamburgers was a 6-year-old chain that included units in San Bernardino, Calif., (the site of the original McDonald's) and six other California cities, plus one in Arizona. At the time, the McDonald's success formula was firmly in place (instant service, cleanliness, family orientation and the golden-arches trademark). As early as 1952, in fact, a national restaurant magazine featured the San Bernardino stand on its cover, and the McDonald brothers were emerging as the Knowing that Richard and Maurice's invention would fly, supersalesman Kroc lost no time in making a deal. The brothers had been looking for a franchise representative anyway, and, in 1954, Kroc convinced them to give him exclusive rights to franchise McDonald's worldwide in return for which they were to receive 0.5 percent of the gross profits. Operating as McDonald's Systems Inc., Kroc then opened his first McDonald's in Des Plaines, Ill, on April 15, 1955.

KROC WAS A master at cloning what the McDonalds had wrought, and, by 1960, there were 228 McDonald's. The following year, Kroc was ready to buy out the brothers, and they agreed, selling him the contract — along with the name, all trademarks, copyrights and the formulas — for $1 million each, plus an additional $700,000 to pay taxes and other expenses.

Hamburger man or not, McDonald isn't knocking McDonald's hamburgers. He thinks they're just as good as they were when he was making them, even though today's McDonald's delicacies are frozen. He says that "Whenever anyone came to us and tried to sell us something frozen, we'd say. 'No way!' " But he believes that the process has improved so much since then that it doesn't make much difference.

It was quite a wreck and no one thought it would ever run again. But now it's back on the track and on its way.

We all know how important it is for people, as well as for trains, to stay on the right track. We know that one of the biggest influences in keeping people there is the Church.

We also know that even when people have gotten a little bit off the track, it is never too late to get on again. The Church isn't just a passing station. Instead, no matter where you are, it is always near and ready and waiting.

Get back on track and attend Church this week.

Pittsburgh clinging to tradition of 'Printer's Mass'

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — At 2:30 a.m. every Sunday, people whose lives border on the other side of midnight — bus drivers, cabbies, newspaper truck drivers, college students, police officers — gather at Epiphany Roman Catholic Church.

It is time for the Printer's Mass.

They come for the convenience of the hour, but they also come out of tradition. The 2:30 a.m. Mass was begun 80 years ago to accommodate Pittsburgh's newspaper printers, who would go to the big brick church after putting out their Sunday editions.

"It's convenient. That's no lie. If I didn't come to church, I'd sleep in," said Keith Duerring, 33, a bus driver who has served as an altar boy for eight years.

"It's quick and it's quiet. There's no one to bother you," said Jeff Studeny, 20, a department store printer.

"It's a tradition and we just keep coming," said Henry Johns, 69, a retired traffic supervisor for a cab company who began attending the Mass 20 years ago.

Pope Leo XIII granted special permission to schedule the Mass at the request of printers at the old Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph who wanted to attend church after finishing work at 2 a.m.

RELIGION

"The thing that our Mass answered was for the convenience of the people," said Auxiliary Bishop John B. McDowell, who first attended the Mass as a seminary student in the early 1950s.

For 50 years, more than 1,000 people regularly jammed into the church for the Printers' Mass.

"It used to be so packed, you could hardly get in," McDowell said. "It was very popular, a wonderful experience. It was good to see all the people. You'd see people coming in evening clothes, bums coming in, people from all walks of life."

The crowds began to dwindle in the early 1960s, however, when vigil Masses on Saturday evenings were introduced.

Now, only about 100 people sit in the long wooden pews for the 25-minute service, a no-nonsense affair with neither music nor homily. About half of the worshipers are college students, dressed in ski jackets and jeans.

"During the last 10 years, we've met three or four times to discuss seriously about that (dwindling attendance)," the bishop said. "The collection doesn't mean anything. And physically, it's a burden on the guys. We have to heat the church. All those things are involved."

Four priests take turns celebrating the weekly Mass. One is the Rev. Joel Baylon, 29, who arrived from the Philippines last summer.

The first time he celebrated the Printers' Mass, Baylon said he stayed up and watched television. The second time, he tried sleeping after dinner and woke up at 1 a.m. The third time, when he tried to sleep he couldn't; he ended up watching television.

He still hasn't found a solution.

"I manage to do it," Baylon said. "It's very difficult on my part to prepare for a 2:30 a.m. Mass. (But) the mere fact that it's there and people come, I'm sort of inspired."

It's the people who keep the Mass alive, according to McDowell.

"The program is cared for by laymen. One man comes every Sunday, opens the door with a key, gets the church lit and wakes the priest if the priest happens to sleep in. That happens enough to be a consideration," McDowell said, laughing.

Because of the people who still attend, particularly the young people, church officials say they plan to continue the Mass.

Choir to present 'Gloria'

The Sanctuary Choir of Trinity Presbyterian Church, 2800 Louisiana Ave., will present Vivaldi's "Gloria" during the 11 a.m. service Sunday.

"Gloria in excelsis" is the second section of the Roman mass and is known as the Greater Doxology (Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei), as distinguished from the Lesser (Gloria Patris) used at the end of Psalms.

The hymn referred to in the Bible as the one sung by the angels to announce Christ's birth (Luke 2:14) is the basis of the text. And even out of the context of the mass it expresses a devotion of towering strength, especially in the festive setting of Vivaldi.

With oboes and trumpets, organ and strings, Vivaldi uses only women soloists and a mixed choir. The total effect is one of bright sunlight, of pomp and glitter — the epitome of Baroque splendor.

The choir is directed by Lloyd Cole. Soloists are Julia Boyce, Louise Crocker, Margie Cole, Denise Krieger and Lynne Swan.

A nursery will be provided.

The Unitarian Universalist Church will hold a Christmas Eve Candlelight Service Dec. 24 at 7 p.m.

The service is loosely based upon the medieval form of lessons and carols, consisting of ancient and contemporary readings and stories, several Christmas carols and closing with a candlelight ceremony.

A gathering around the Wassail bowl and sharing Christmas "goodies" will follow the service. The public is invited to attend.

The Church will not have services Christmas Day. "Having celebrated the holiday/Holy Day with our extended family, that is, our church, on Christmas Eve," said UUC's minister, the Rev. Daniel Budd, "we wish Christmas Day to be a time for our personal family celebrations."

The next Sunday, Jan. 1, will also find a special schedule at UUC. The morning will begin with a New Year's Brunch at 10:30 a.m., followed by an informal sharing circle. The theme for the circle will be "Hopes."

The church will return to its regular schedule Jan. 8.

Christmas communion planned

St. Luke's United Methodist Church will celebrate Holy Communion in a service of carols and candlelight Christmas Eve at 11 p.m. in the church's sanctuary.

"Ave Maria" and "O Holy Night" will be sung by Bert Bostic, minister of program and music. Organist for the service will be Mona Ruth Dickson. The sermon topic by Dr. Jarrell Sharp, pastor, will be "How Far to Bethlehem?"

The Christmas Day worship service will be at 10:30 a.m. and the sermon topic will be "Born For This." The anthem planned for the Christmas Day service is "Away in a Manger." The Chancel Choir and the Chapel Choir will perform.

On Dec. 31, the church will observe a Watch Night Service beginning at 11 p.m.

'Service of Carols' Sunday

First United Methodist Church, Main Street at Ohio Avenue, will hold its annual "Service of Carols and Candles" at 5:30 p.m. Sunday in the sanctuary.

Assisting Dr. Charles Lutrick, senior minister, in leading the service will be several youth of the church as well as the Chancel Choir, Celebration Singers, Junior Choir, Carol Choir, Cherub Choir, Joyful Singers and Golden Bells.

Light detectors trace particles

By STEWART TAGGART
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU — From the surface of the ocean off the island of Hawaii, only the gentle waves of the warm Pacific will be visible. But far beneath the surface, scientists hope to find clues to some of the most baffling mysteries in the universe.

Sensitive, mushroom-shaped light detectors will placed in 12,000 feet of water, looking for traces of subatomic particles called neutrinos.

"They will be like strings of beads hanging up from the (ocean) bottom," University of Hawaii physicist Victor Stenger said of the detectors.

Stenger is one of several scientists involved in the Deep Underwater Muon and Neutrino Detection project, also known as DUMAND.

With the device, the scientists hope to track elusive particles known as neutrinos, which have negligible mass and no electric charge. Even though trillions of them pass through the Earth every second, the DUMAND project aims to catch just one every hour.

"Neutrino astronomy," as it is being called, is based on the idea that only those ghostly particles are able to escape from such super-energetic sources as pulsars and black holes at the center of galaxies.

Pulsars and black holes are generally believed to be the dense remnants of stars which have collapsed.

"Gravitational collapse can give rise to superenergetic nuclear reactions," said Vincent Peterson, director of DUMAND. "It is these processes we believe give rise to neutrinos."

"Determining the direction of travel and the energy intensity of the particle would help to discern what mechanisms are driving some of the most energetic sources in the universe," said John Learned, a physics professor at the University of Hawaii and technical director of the project.

If the neutrinos can escape, scientists hope they may hold clues about what makes these high energy sources tick.

"How does it happen that out in the cosmos there are these fantastically high energies, many orders of magnitude higher than that emitted by our sun?" said Stenger. "There is still no answer to that question."

Stenger said that conventional astronomy has relied upon the observation of light emitted from far-off galaxies. But light is often distorted by the time it reaches telescopes on Earth, Stenger said.

Since neutrinos are so small, it is believed possible some of them may traverse the entire universe without colliding with another particle.

"The less it interacts with other matter, the more intact the information it carries," said Stenger, who is deputy director of the project.

"No one knows exactly what to expect," he said. "No one has ever had a detector capable of seeing neutrinos from outside our galaxy. In fact, no extraterrestrial neutrinos have ever been observed, with the exception of low-energy fusion neutrinos from the sun."

By PAMELA BROWNSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. — It was a daily routine that eventually poisoned and killed many of them. Seated in a factory in Orange, the women methodically painted the dials and hands of luminous watches with camel hair brushes they pointed with their lips or tongue.

Later, many of the workers experienced decay of the jaw bones and suffered from anemia. Others contracted bone cancers and bone ailments.

In a now-historic investigation, the Essex County medical examiner 58 years ago, traced the roughly 43 mysterious deaths among the workers to the radium paint at the U.S. Radium Corp. plant.

But the saga of radium in New Jersey continues.

New Jersey officials recently announced they have found higher than normal levels of radon, a gas emitted by radium during the decaying process, in 17 suburban homes in Montclair and 10 in Glen Ridge, about 1½ miles from the plant in Orange, which closed in 1926.

Any evidence linking the radon gas to the former factory, which refined ore into radium and used the luminescent substance on watch faces, is merely circumstantial so far, state officials say.

But the findings have dredged up the story of the women and are forcing the state to confront the issue of radiation contamination anew.

It was estimated that about 1,000 women painted watch dials at the plant between 1917 and 1926. One group of five women, the last of whom died in 1946, sued the company and won an out-of-court settlement of $10,000 each in cash, $400 a year for life and free medical care.

Studies conducted in 1925 by Essex County Examiner Harrison S. Martland led to an awareness of the dangers of handling radioactive materials.

But the state is being cautious about connecting the latest discoveries and U.S. Radium Corp., the assets of which were acquired in 1980 by a newly formed holding company, USR Industries Inc. of Woodlands, Texas.

Since then, USR Industries, with 110 employees, has been divesting the assets of U.S. Radium, a manufacturer of luminescent chemicals and related products, according to Standard & Poor's Corp.

The company now emphasizes natural resources, real estate and financial services, Standard & Poor's said. USR Industries has two divisions, USR Lighting Inc. in Parsippany and USR Metals Inc. in Bloomsbury, Penn.

Through its subsidiaries, USR Industries manufactures lighted and unlighted instrument panels and dials for aerospace and electronic puroposes as well as metal, unlighted and luminous dials for watches, clocks and timers for consumer and automotive applications.

The new firm's chairman and chief executive officer, Ralph T. McElvenny Jr., was away on a business trip to Mexico last week and could not be reached, a secretary in his office said.

But Clement Wyle, a USR spokesman in New York, said the publicly owned company no longer uses radium. "It is a misnomer," he said. The firm had revenues of $3.69 million and net earnings of $262,823 in 1982, Wyle said. In 1981, its revenues were $3.61 million, with a net loss in earnings of $321,716, he added.

Wyle said it is unclear whether records were kept from the days when the Orange plant was in operation.

"I don't believe there's anybody on the face of the earth with the company who knows what went on," he added.

"This thing is a bit shocking," he said of the findings in Montclair and Glen Ridge, adding he did not know details of the operation of the plant.

The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection has known for several years about "hot spots" of radium at the plant, said DEP spokesman James Staples.

In 1981, helicopters and sensitive instruments were used to see whether the radium had migrated. It was during that investigation that environmental officials located the spots in Montclair and Glen Ridge.

The DEP did not act more quickly on the case because, "We had no idea how bad it might be," said Staples.

He added that the department had other radiation priorities at the time and has a small staff with which it tries to get "the most mileage out of a few experts."

Geiger counters used in September gradually defined the two areas in which above-normal radon levels were found. As it turned out, the intensity of the gas was scattered in a freckled pattern.

Charcoal air filters were placed in homes to measure the levels of radon gas, which can rise through concrete floors, and the findings were announced last week.

The department has not reached the point of deciding whether to advise the residents to stay or leave, Staples said. But when the findings were disclosed, Gov. Thomas H. Kean announced, "We believe we have identified the areas that represent the extent of the problem."

"We cannot prove this came from U.S. Radium other than circumstantially to the age and proximity of the deposit," Staples said.

The state is looking at two possibilities involving the homes, the first of which were built in the 1930s. Either radium was dumped there or dirt trucked in before the construction of the homes was tainted by radium, Staples said. The problem in identifying the radium's source is difficult. "One radon atom is just like another," he said.

Although exposure to radon has been linked to lung cancer, officials with the state Department of Health say there is no evidence of cancer clusters in the two neighborhoods.

James Chandler, a resident in the affected area of Montclair, said Saturday that DEP officials promised they would return early this week to start dealing with the problem.

"We don't know what they're going to do or when they're going to do it," said Chandler, who has been warned not to spend more than two hours a day in his basement because of the radiation problem.

State and local officials promised residents will be surveyed to determine the risks each resident may face and if any might have suffered a chronic illness as a result of the contamination.

As for the liability for the contamination, the state is taking one step at a time.

Chinese leader launches purge of Maoist holdouts

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

PEKING (AP) — China's 79-year-old leader, Deng Xiaoping, is purging the Communist Party of Maoist holdouts and those who resist his reformist policies.

The rectification campaign — China does not call it a purge — is considered Deng's last battle to safeguard his policies and protect his proteges by leaving them an obedient party.

Deng, who was purged twice during Chairman Mao Tse-tung's Cultural Revolution in 1966-1976, is the most powerful man in China now.

Yet he put off this purge for three years after the trial in January 1981 of the "Gang of Four," the group made up of Mao's widow, Jiang Qing, and her three cohorts. At that time the leftist reverence for Mao, who died in 1976, was still too potent and the army too strong. The wounds opened by the trial were still too raw.

Death sentences given Madame Jiang and former Vice Premier Zhang Chunqiao were commuted to life imprisonment earlier this year. The two others and their associates were sentenced to 18 years to life in prison.

Foreign analysts in Peking say they are skeptical that Deng's exercise, while launched with energy, can eradicate covert obstructionists and make a significant difference in the party's image and workstyle.

LAST YEAR the party's disciplinary commission succeeded only in dislodging and expelling 5,500 miscreant members. The target for this purge is said to be 3 million of the party's estimated 40 million members.

"They may get the obvious bad guys who rose during the Cultural Revolution and the obvious criminals," said one Western diplomat, requesting anonymity. "But a lot of people are lying low until Deng dies, like the faceless footdraggers who are gumming up the works."

Many middle-level party cadres in the provinces are protected by networks in which everyone has something on everyone else and all protect each other, according to foreign diplomats who ask to remain anonymous because of the sensitivity of their assignments here.

Factionalism remains a serious problem, they add, and it will take years to overcome the bitterness left over from the Cultural Revolution. Cases from that period are still being set to rights.

Deng has shifted army regional commanders and reorganized top provincial and party committees, but the problems of leftism are said to lie in the middle levels of the party and government bureaucracy, in enterprises and factories.

The targets of the ideological remolding are those who resist Deng's economic and political reforms, obstruct policies, commit economic and other crimes, and seek privileges for themselves, their families and friends.

ANOTHER WARNING of the formidable task of reshaping the party came in 1979 after a meeting in December 1978 when Deng led the party in a break with Maoism.

Deng said that from then on China must "seek truth from facts" — an implication that Chinese should not worship the "Little Red Book" of quotations from Chairman Mao.

He also said China must consider "practice as the sole criterion for the truth" — implying that it does not lie solely in the dead words of Mao.

At the time, army cadres weaned on Mao were asked if they supported Deng's idea of "seeking truth from facts." One-third said yes, one third said no, and one-third refused to say.

Some foreign political analysts say Deng has made great progress in achieving his reforms, but they add that many opponents are keeping a low profile and waiting for Deng to pass from the scene.

"Given the twists and turns in Chinese politics over the last years, I wouldn't stick my head out now or cheer too loudly, I'd be very cautious as a Chinese cadre," said one Western political analyst.

In preparation for the full-scale rectification, the army has ordered 92 percent of its estimated 700,000 party members to undergo ideological training. Some leaders already have made public confessions and admitted abuse of power and special privilege.

ARMY LEADERS have been saying in recent months that leftism in the People's Liberaton Army makes unity with the party "very difficult" and have called for a "shake-up."

The army also has sent about 100,000 cadres, or leaders, in work teams out into army barracks nationwide, especially in strategically important border areas, to handle unspecified problems. Foreign analysts say it could be further ideological preparation for the house-cleaning.

Mini purges with mixed results already have been under way. The official press reported some success in party "consolidations" in eight party units in Shanghai, the strongold of the "Gang of Four."

Further signs of the depth of resistance were revealed during the Gang's trial. The prosecutor declared that the "Gang of Four" deployed 33,500 militiamen in Shanghai and planned an armed rebellion there.

Most of the radicals have been arrested. Other trials have taken place, but party leader Hu Yaobang recently said that "ugly" problems left over from the Cultural Revolution could take a decade to resolve.

Singaporeans ponder question of leader's successor

SINGAPORE (AP) — Lee Kuan Yew has been Singapore's leader — some say an authoritarian one — since 1959 and now that he is 60 years old, many in this island-nation are asking who might follow him as prime minister.

Nobody asks the question more often than Lee himself. Since the early 1970s he has repeatedly stressed the need for a smooth transition to a new generation of able leaders for this prosperous republic.

The problem could become acute because Lee is perceived by many Singaporeans and foreign investors as virtually indispensable. This was demonstrated in July when rumors that he was ill caused prices to plummet on the local stock exchange for three days and set the foreign business community abuzz.

Singapore sometimes seems to overly depend on the man who led the conversion of a shabby, British colonial outpost with a doubtful future into the banking and industrial center of Southeast Asia.

Lee runs a government with a reputation for honesty, efficiency and a high sense of direction. Obedience, hard work, cleanliness, thrift and the profit motive all feature in the "Rugged Society" he fashioned.

The 228-square-mile nation (in area, the size of the city of Chicago) has no natural resources except a strategic location and the skills of its 2.4 million people, 76 percent of whom are ethnic Chinese. The style here has been to run scared because, in one of Lee's favorite phrases, "Nobody owes us a living."

—He champions hard work, so it bustles.

—He hates hippies, so men cut their hair in Singapore.

Civil libertarians condemn the detention of political prisoners without trial.

Although Singapore has a free press, Lee has closed down newspapers, including the Singapore Herald in 1971.

Feminists rejected his appeal three months ago for more women with college degrees to marry and have childen as their uneducated sisters do.

The Rugged Society is an extension of Lee's straitlaced personality. It sets high standards and a strict moral code.

Tipping, jaywalking, littering and discourtesy are officially denounced in massive publicity drives. Those suspected of more serious transgressions such as drug abuse — 14 convicted traffickers have been hanged — and subversion can expect no mercy.

A Cambridge-educated lawyer, Lee became prime minister in 1959 on a wave of anti-colonialism and with the help of Communists whom he later purged. His People's Action Party has easily won every election ever since.

SINGAPORE HAS a parliamentary form of government; the leader of the party winning the majority of seats in Parliament becomes prime minister for a four-year term.

The next election is required by the constitution to be held no later than 1985, but can be called earlier.

Singapore's impressive economic growth has generally endeared Lee to a population that now enjoys the second highest standard of living in Asia, after Japan.

Much credit for the economic boom went to Hon Sui Sen, 67, who died Oct. 14 after 13 years as finance minister. He was one of Lee's old guard.

Another of Lee's faithful lieutenants, Sinnathamby Rajaratnam, 68, suffered a heart attack at the recent United Nations General Assembly session in New York and likely will be less active in government after his recovery from heart surgery.

Rajaratnam was a longtime foreign minister and now serves as second deputy prime minister with responsibility for foreign affairs.

Other key members of the "independence generation," as Lee's group is called, include Deputy Prime Minister Goh Keng Swee, 65; E. W. Barker, 62, the minister for law, science and technology, and Health Minister Howe Yoon Chong, 60.

THERE IS no sign that Lee plans to step down soon. Despite the rumors in July, he appears in good health. Lee acknowledges that political stability and economic prosperity contribute to the succession problem which he hopes to have solved by 1990.

The prime minister and his senior colleagues in the People's Action Party functioned so successfully for so long that bright young Singaporeans tended to avoid the rough and tumble of politics in favor of less arduous careers.

The lack of credible opposition parties also limits the opportunities for aspirant People's Action leaders to gain political experience. In the 13 years before 1981, the party occupied all seats in Parliament. The upset loss of just one seat in a by-election did not help sharpen their political skills.

Lee has attracted civil servants, professionals and trade union leaders to the his party's ranks. In state-of-the-nation speeches on National Day and at political rallies he seems almost obsessed with who will follow in his footsteps.

"We cannot designate our successors. Nobody can, not even kings can," he said on National Day 13 years ago.

Lee may or may not name his successor, but he is grooming younger men for a crack at the top and discarding those who don't measure up.

From Wire Reports

PARIS — From the beginning, many French feared that the greatest hero of the World War II resistance to Nazi occupation would be sullied during the legal proceedings against Klaus Barbie, the Gestapo officer reviled throughout France as "the Butcher of Lyon."

The trial is a long way off, but the fears already seem justified.

Barbie's lawyer, a mysterious iconoclast, has mounted a defense in public that consists mainly of denigrating Jean Moulin, the martyred leader of the resistance. The accusations have set off a furious reaction here.

Moulin is a legendary figure in France. He parachuted from a British plane into a moonlit field near Avignon in 1942 with instructions from Gen. Charles de Gaulle to unite the French factions fighting the German occupation and the collaborating Vichy government. Known by his code name Max, Moulin succeeded in creating a single resistance movement.

IN 1943, however, Barbie led a raid on a secret meeting of resistance leaders in a doctor's house in a suburb of Lyon. Moulin was among those captured.

Barbie has been accused of torturing his prize prisoner, the wounds leading to the 44-year-old Moulin's death a few weeks later.

It has long been assumed that some member of the resistance, either willfully or under torture, betrayed Moulin to the Gestapo. In fact, one associate, Rene Hardy, has twice been tried on charges that he was the traitor.

However, Barbie's lawyer, both in a book and on French television, has painted the arrest as far from the work of a single traitor. Instead, attorney Jacques Verges contends that Moulin's fellow officers of the resistance turned him in to Barbie "for personal and political reasons."

VERGES refuses to give a more specific motive, but the obvious implication is that the other leaders of the resistance found Moulin harmful to the cause. According to Verges, the betrayed Moulin committed suicide by beating his head against a prison wall.

The accusations have provoked denunciations both of Verges and of French television for giving him a platform. Former Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas, once a resistance leader, called the accusations "a monstrosity." Said Henri Frenay, who founded the resistance newspaper Combat: "There are not words severe enough to judge the declarations of Verges. By accusing everyone and naming no one, he has shown himself in my eyes as a man of great baseness."

EVEN if the lawyer was concocting a story to help a client, the fury has been intensified because he is salting old and real wounds. Historians agree that the resistance was rife with bickering and animosity.

Ironically, the 70-year-old Barbie is not facing any charges over the death of Moulin. Under French law, the statute of limitations has run out for such a war crime.

Instead, Barbie is charged with what are known as "crimes against humanity," covering mostly the deportation of Jews from Lyon to extermination camps elsewhere. French officials now say that preliminary investigations and various defense ploys will delay the trial for these crimes until 1985.

ALTHOUGH Barbie is not charged with it, defense lawyer Verges knows that it is Moulin's death that makes Barbie the object of contempt throughout France.

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — In the fall of 1972, with U.S. troops in Vietnam and Richard Nixon in the White House, 71 percent of entering college freshmen named "developing a philosophy of life" among their most important long-range goals.

Today, there's a different percentage. Among last fall's freshmen, the "philosophy of life" goal had dropped to 47 percent. With Ronald Reagan in the White House and Reaganomics in full swing, 69 percent of college freshmen called "being very well-off financially" essential or very important. Just 41 percent had felt that way in the fall of 1972.

These are among thousands of comparisons drawn by University of California-Los Angeles education Professor Alexander Astin and the American Council on Education, who have been surveying freshmen in two- and four-year public and private colleges and universities since 1967.

What emerges from the data — contained in a series of books titled, "The American Freshman: National Norms" — is a picture of dramatic, one-way movement in students' attitudes and goals. Shifting away from liberalism, the age group once associated with mass demonstrations and rallies declines today to call itself more conservative, but clearly has turned away from the concrete activism of the past and toward more personal, often materialistic, views and goals. For example:

— Forty-one percent of freshmen in 1972 believed in preferential treatment for disadvantaged people; in 1982, the figure had fallen to 35.5 percent.

— Only half of 1972 freshmen believed criminals had too many rights; 69.8 percent thought so last year.

— Nearly half the '72 freshmen thought marijuana should be legalized, while only 29.5 percent feel that way now. On the other hand, just half of '72 freshmen said they had drunk beer in the previous year; of last year's freshmen, 75 percent had.

— AMONG 1972'S college freshmen — nearly all of whom were born during the 1950s "baby boom" — 67 percent thought large families should be discouraged. Just 37 percent thought so in '82.

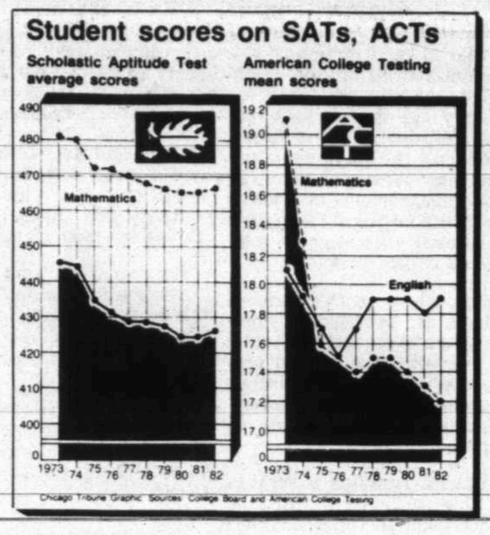

— Seventy-one percent of 1972 freshmen said they'd gone to church the previous year, compared to 48.6 percent 10 years later.

— Percentages favoring more government action to protect consumers and the environment fell — from 88 to 79 percent on pollution, and from 76 to 69 percent on consumer protection.

— But a more dramatic change occurred in attitudes toward personally helping clean up the environment. Forty-five percent of freshmen in 1972 considered "being involved in environmental cleanup" essential or very important objectives for their lives. Just 23 percent felt that way last fall.

— In a rare liberal showing, the percentage of freshmen believing women's activities were most useful in the home fell, from 37 percent in 1972 to 26 percent in 1982.

— Not surprisingly, students' view of their political orientation changed, too, over the 10-year time span. The percentage of freshmen calling themselves "liberal" or "far left" dropped from 52 percent in 1972 to 21 percent last year. The shift wasn't blatantly to the right, however. The category of "conservative" swelled by just 2 percentage points, from 16 to 18 percent during the same period. It was the "middle-of-the-road" category which grew substantially, from 48 percent in 1972 to 60 percent last year.

Astin's studies, which recently have been funded by the U.S. Department of Education, survey more than 265,000 freshmen at some 15 percent of the nation's schools. Results are included from a given school only if at least 75 percent of freshmen complete the forms.

SOME OF THE most revealing information comes from queries about life objectives:

— The top-ranked lifetime objectives in 1972 were, in descending order: Developing a philosophy of life, helping others in difficulty, raising a family and becoming an authority in one's field of work. In 1982, the top four in order were being an authority in one's field, being very well-off financially, raising a family, and helping others in difficulty. Developing a philosophy was ranked eighth.

Astin, who began taking the survey in 1967, is often invited to tell college administrators and other groups around the country about his findings. This year, his speech notices the rise in materialism and wonders aloud whether "the goal of making a lot of money obviates the need for some students to develop a meaningful philosophy of life. Indeed," Astin says, "it may be that some students view the making of money as a kind of philosophy of life in itself."

On the academic front, Astin's figures confirm the much reviled 15-year decline in standardized test scores, and the professor adds that incoming freshmen are aware of their deficit. Since 1972, the figures show, the number of freshmen who expect to need tutoring in some courses has nearly doubled, from 5 to 9 percent. Also, two out of every five freshmen students last fall gave "improving reading and study skills" as a "very important" reason for deciding to go to college.

Fewer and fewer freshmen are expecting to obtain Ph.D.s now, while more and more are hoping for medical, dental and law degrees, Astin found. But trends differ for men and women. In the 15-year period from 1967 to 1982, the percentage of women planning to pursue doctorates and high-level professional degrees more than doubled, from 7 to 16 percent. At the same time, the percentage of male freshmen with such plans dropped from 22 to 20 percent.

SIMILARLY, WHILE the percentage of men planning law degrees doubled from 2.2 to 4.5 percent, the percent of women with that goal increased more than 10 times, from .3 to 3.5 percent.

Parents forgive son's killer

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The parents of a 23-year-old man killed by a drunken driver have persuaded a judge to spare the guilty motorist a jail term and instead require him to perform community service.

Joseph and Doris Parker made their plea for mercy in a "victim impact statement" read by the county prosecutor during the sentencing earlier this week of Stephen J. Uhland, 30, of Severna Park.

The Parkers said they believed "meaningful community service" would serve as a better punishment than jail for Uhland, who was responsible for the death of their son, William P. Parker, one of eight children.

"Hopefully, we, Bill's parents have instilled in his brothers and sisters the Christian ethics of forgiveness," they said in their statement. "We all hope that Stephen Uhland understands and has true contrition in his heart and in the end will be a better person."

Circuit Judge Raymond G. Thieme Jr. ordered Uhland to work 1,500 hours as a nursing assistant at the University of Maryland Shock Trauma Center in Baltimore. The center takes care of the state's worst accident cases.

The judge said that if it hadn't been for the parents' request, he would not have accepted the plea bargain agreement.

State's Attorney Warren Duckett Jr., the Anne Arundel County prosecutor, also said that he would have sought a jail term if the parents hadn't pleaded for mercy.

"Hopefully, we, Bill's parents have instilled in his brothers and sisters the Christian ethics of forgiveness. We all hope that Stephen Uhland understands and has true contrition in his heart and in the end will be a better person."

— Joseph and Doris Parker, Parents of drunken driving victim

"In cases like this, there is pressure for incarceration, because the public demands it," Duckett said.

Uhland pleaded guilty to auto manslaughter, a charge punishable by up to five years in prison. He received a suspended three-year sentence and five years of unsupervised probation. Eight other charges, including driving while intoxicated, were dropped in return for the guilty plea.

Uhland, a district manager with a car dealership, was described by his attorney, T. Joseph Touhey, as a "clean-cut Jack Armstrong type" who had no previous criminal or driving record.

Israel threatens PLO chairman's planned evacuation from Lebanon

By ARTHUR MAX

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel is creating an uncertain and threatening atmosphere around plans for PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's evacuation from Lebanon in an effort to strip him of international protection and force him to flee in humiliation.

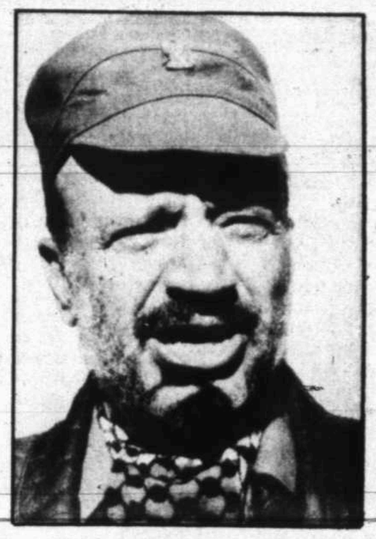

Israeli officials said earlier this week that Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government has refused to reply to a U.S. request to allow Arafat to leave his besieged stronghold of Tripoli in northern Lebanon. It has said publicly it will not guarantee Arafat's safety.

"We do not want Arafat to leave like a hero. If he leaves, it should be like a dog with his tail between his legs," said one official who requested anonymity.

Israel has appealed to the United Nations to withdraw its promise to evacuate Arafat on ships flying the U.N. flag, but Cabinet ministers have issued contradictory statements on what Israel might do if the U.N. plan went forward.

Energy Minister Yitzhak Modai and former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon both have said Israel "should not let Arafat leave Tripoli alive," but other ministers have said Israel would not interfere once Arafat was safely aboard a U.N.-protected ship.

These statements, coupled with military pressure on Arafat's trapped forces, were intended to evacuation scheme and prevent Arafat from scoring a propaganda victory, Israeli officials said.

Israeli naval vessels in the Mediterranean Sea have shelled Arafat's positions around Tripoli three times this week, blocking Arafat's only avenue of escape. He is surrounded on land by Syrian-backed rebels who challenge his leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The U.N. plan called for Arafat

camouflage Israel's plans, derail the and his 4,000 fighters to leave aboard Greek ships, but Greece insisted on guarantees of safe passage from the four countries contributing troops to the Beirut-based multinational peacekeeping force.

Israel's refusal to go along with such guarantees has apparently stalled the evacuation, though no departure date was officially announced.

Some Israeli officials suggested that Israel was bargaining before giving its tacit approval of Arafat's departure.

"It's a matter of certain arrangements," said Ehud Olmert, a member of Parliament close to the Shamir government. "Israel has made it clear that it doesn't want Arafat to leave under U.N. protection or with his heavy weapons."

Olmert said Israel also was taking the opportunity to strike back at the PLO, which claimed responsibility for bombing a Jerusalem bus, killing five people and wounding 45.

"We wanted to kill some terrorists and intimidate them," he said. "The best thing that could happen is that they (Arafat loyalists and rebels) continue fighting and killing each other."

Britain's fiesty unions labor to retain their political clout

LONDON (AP) — Britain's once mighty labor unions — after decades of power, of being feared, wooed, cajoled and consulted by successive governments — have been reduced to relative impotence.

Battered by five years of tough Conservative Party government and near-record unemployment, the unions face a grim reality: falling membership, failed strikes, more laws to curb their powers, and another five years of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"There's no doubt that the trade unions have been severely weakened by developments of the past five years. We've paid a hell of a price," Len Murray, general secretary of the 10.5-million member Trades Union Congress (TUC), Britain's AFL-CIO, said in an interview. The TUC is the financial backbone of the Labor Party, the Conservatives' chief opposition.

"We assumed the growth of unemployment would lead to a reaction, perhaps even a revolt, against the policies which produced and accentuated it," Murray added. "We were surprised."

Sober pragmatism was the keynote when TUC leaders gathered in September for their annual conference.

Angry left-wingers urging political strikes and continuation of an 18-month boycott of talks with the Conservative administration were soundly defeated.

Moderates took two-thirds control of the TUC's governing council and spelled out a painful message.

"Some of our colleagues wish to live in a dream world where with a couple of quick strikes the Tory (Conservative) government falls and is replaced by a Labor Party government," declared Terry Duffy, leader of the one million engineering workers.

"We have to think of the real world, however. We have to talk to them."

The Labor Party, which the unions founded at the turn of the century, was trounced in last June's elections with the assistance of union members themselves, 60 percent of whom voted Tory or for the centrist Social Democratic-Liberal Party alliance.

It's a long way from the heady days of the 1970s, when striking coal miners, aided by the oil crisis, reduced Britain to a three-day week in 1974 and the Conservative prime minister, Edward Heath, called an election asking, "Who governs?" — and lost.

Heath's Labor Party successors, Harold Wilson and James Callaghan, consulted the unions at every step and bolstered their power in return for wage deals. It wound up with the dead unburied and garbage piled in the streets through a 1978-79 "winter of discontent."

Strikes then were dubbed "the British disease." But since Mrs. Thatcher's election and with unemployment running at more than 3 million or around 13 percent, strikes have dropped more than half.

An average of 7.2 million working days have been lost annually because of strikes since 1980, compared with 16.3 million in the previous three years.

Along with fear of more job losses, union militancy has also been eroded by better pay for those who have jobs, with average earnings generally rising faster than inflation.

In August, the most recent month calculated by the Employment Department, earnings were 7.5 percent higher than a year earlier, while inflation was 4.6 percent on an annual basis.

Vietnamese crack down on Cambodians

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnamese occupation forces are taking strong measures against civilians in Cambodia apparently to counter a spreading resistance movement, Western and Thai officials say.

These sources say one symptom that harsh steps are being taken is an increased flow of refugees from the interior of Cambodia to camps of resistance groups near the Thai border.

"We've heard of entire villages packing up and leaving," one said.

Harsh treatment of civilians would be a turnabout for the Vietnamese, who invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and ousted the bloody Khmer Rouge regime that took over in 1975 after the communist victory in the Indochina war.

The Vietnamese presented themselves as liberators who put a stop to the mass killings that were being carried out by the government of communist leader Pol Pot. The occupation troops were generally considered well-behaved and careful not to arouse animosity among Cambodian villagers.

One of the three major Cambodian resistance groups, the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, claims that since last May 25 more than 11,000 Cambodians have fled what it describes as Vietnamese repression in the northwestern provinces of Siem Reap, Battambang and Oddar Meanchey. It said the Cambodians sought refuge in its camp at Ampil, Cambodia, close to the Thai border.

International aid officials in Thailand also have reported an increased flow of refugees from the Cambodian interior.

The National Liberation Front and forces loyal to Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the Cambodian leader before the 1975 communist victory, claim that Vietnam's crackdown reflects the guerrillas' increased penetration into Cambodia, where more and more villagers sympathize with or aid the resistance.

The Khmer group claims that its own increased activity has turned northwest Cambodia into a "zone of instability" for the Vietnamese.

Diplomats here and Thai military officers at the border, who asked not to be named because of the sensitivity of their positions, agree the resistance has made much headway in the Northwest during the wet season.

They say that earlier this year the Vietnamese launched a systematic sweep of villages in the Northwest in an effort to root out resistance sympathizers.

The Vietnamese launched the crackdown "first of all to find out how much the resistance has penetrated and secondly to stop it," a source in Thailand said.

One Western analyst offered another explanation: "The Cambodian administration is just getting organized now (after the anarchic Khmer Rouge years) and they have found a repressive system is needed."

Another source quoted foreign residents in the Cambodian capital, Phnom Penh, as saying that "the pressure on Cambodians has been getting tighter" since early this year.

The analysts say that whatever the extent and severity of Vietnam's crackdown, it may prove to be self-defeating, since it is apparently driving thousands of villagers into the arms of the resistance.

Reporter awakens interviewees

NEW YORK (AP) — When Judy Muller of CBS News calls people for a story, they can't hide in a "meeting." They can't hide behind a public relations apologist or bureaucratic barrier. And they can't even hide under the covers.

Ms. Muller finds them in bed and wakes them up.

As reporter-anchor for "First Line Report," the CBS Radio Network's early morning dose of news and commentary, Ms. Muller tracks down newsmakers before they can shower and shave their responses.

"I'm the only one who starts phone calls with an apology," said Ms. Muller, whose introduction goes like this: "Hello, this is CBS News in New York. I know how early this is. Did we wake you? I'm sorry."

MS. MULLER said the advantage of the wake-up interview is that subjects are less guarded. "They often aren't weighing each word so carefully," she said.

Last summer, when she spoke to the late Sen. Henry Jackson about the presidential commission on Central America, he disclosed that Henry Kissinger would head the panel. Until the official announcement came later in the day, CBS was crediting "First Line Report" for breaking the Kissinger appointment.

The pre-reveille call also has a unique disadvantage. Although the newsmaker's public-relations entourage is sleeping, his wife is not — at least not any longer.

ONE TIME, the wife of Gary Hart, the Democrat Colorado senator running for president, intercepted Ms. Muller's call. Click. No interview.

Ms. Muller, the 36-year-old divorced mother of two grade-school-age daughters, arrives at work at 4 a.m. "For my kids, there's no such thing as mother in the morning," she said. "Often, I'm quite amazed what they're wearing when I see them at the end of the day."

She'll make her calls around 5 a.m, which is early in New York, but even earlier in other places. "Ideally, the best interview is in Tokyo, the worst is on the West Coast," she said.

If she can't find an appropriate news subject, she'll often chat with the CBS correspondents covering what she's analyzing. At first, the reporters were reluctant to leave their objective mode, but now many seem to enjoy the chance to interpret the news.

After the interviews, she edits the tapes and writes her copy, all of which must be turned into a 2½-minute report (four minutes with commercials) before 6:30. "I have the worst deadlines in radio," she said.

"FIRST Line Report" previously was anchored by CBS' Washington correspondents, who would prepare the piece the day before. A year ago, the radio-news fixture was moved to New York, and Ms. Muller keeps it attuned to breaking stories.

Already this week, Ms. Muller has discussed the bombings in Kuwait, drunken driving, capital punishment and death squads in El Salvador — all in conjunction with news stories of the day.

Last summer, she handled one of her most difficult reports: how CBS News covered itself. That was after CBS was ordered by a judge to turn over the Benjamin Report, CBS News' internal examination of a controversial documentary it did on the Vietnam War. The judicial edict was in conjunction with Gen. William C. Westmoreland's $120 million-libel suit.

It was a sensitive issue, and nobody in television or radio at CBS News had reported on the internal report's release. Ms. Muller gulped hard and waited until 5:30 to call Van Gordon Sauter, president of CBS News. He told her, on the air, that CBS should be covering the story.

"It turned out, thank goodness, that he was awake," she said.

Some subjects, however, aren't as lively.

"I once interviewed an astronomer in California about a special telescope," Ms. Muller said. "It was 1:30 a.m. (his time) when I woke him up. Somewhere in the middle of the interview he fell asleep. All we heard was snoring."

Celebrity status undiminished for Eugenia Charles

MIAMI (AP) — Reporters line up outside her suite, watched by U.S. Secret Service agents. Her schedule is packed with 15-minute meetings, and strangers wave and say hello as she rushes across the hotel lobby or into a restaurant.

Nearly two months after the invasion of Grenada, the celebrity status of Eugenia Charles, prime minister of tiny Dominica, is undiminished.

"I'm recognized a lot more. You go into a restaurant, and people all know you," Miss Charles said earlier this month during the seventh annual Conference on the Caribbean. "I don't think it will last. Soon enough, people will have forgotten me."

The 64-year-old leader of a 289-square-mile Caribbean island of 74,000 gained international recognition Oct. 25, when she appeared on television with President Reagan to announce the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada.

She recalled she had flown to Washington to argue further for U.S. intervention in Grenada, being ruled by an army junta after the execution of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop.

On the plane, she was informed by a State Department official that the invasion was under way. She met Reagan at the White House and agreed to appear with him.

She spent two "very busy days" before the media and speaking to the Organization of American States and the United Nations.

More than 10,000 people gave her a "quite moving" greeting at home.

Miss Charles, who came to Miami from the Commonwealth leaders' meeting in India, said many earlier opponents of the invasion now at least "understand why we did it."

She said leaders of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, a 2-year-old group of seven islands she chairs, had long felt fellow member Grenada was a communist staging point.

"We've seen the arms arsenal there. They had boats with the engines that run silently," she said. "It wouldn't have taken five men to come in and take over Dominica with that kind of equipment."

Eugenia Charles

In the first two years after her election in 1980, there were two attempted coups — one by white mercenaries whose New Orleans-based plot was stopped by the FBI, another by eight Dominican soldiers.

"We've always been aware we had some very close calls. A lot of our top soldiers were communist-oriented. I knew it was touch-and-go, and with the existence of what was there in Grenada, I knew there was no problem in having us all killed to take over the island," she said.

She opposed Bishop, but "it seemed to me Grenadians weren't that opposed to him, so why should I interfere? Even though I still had to be in fear of the situation at home, and we had to be on our note (alert)."

She said the Caribbean leaders called for action after Bishop's death because it was obvious Grenadians — and the region — faced a reign of terror.

There was no sentiment for Bishop.

"I'm not going to pretend about that. I thought he got what he deserved," Miss Charles said. "I was upset, not that Bishop was dead, but that the men who did it had worshipped him for 4½ years, then killed him in such a brutal manner. It showed there was a complete breakdown."

Cuba's setback has "given the region stability, hope for the future." She scoffed at suggestions of U.S. rewards for her support of the invasion. American aid programs this year had already begun $15 million in projects.

"I've been gone for two weeks, and I'd like to think when I get back there I'll find a letter saying we're going to receive another $15 million. But I very much doubt it."

Miss Charles, a graduate of University College in Toronto and the London School of Economics, says she won't capitalize on her post-invasion popularity by calling elections before 1985 as scheduled.

"I think people like decision. They like to know where you're going, not wavering," she said. "They appreciate that sort of thing."

Miss Charles has continued to live in her family home, alone since the death of her father, veteran politician and civil servant John Baptist Charles, earlier this year at age 107.

Genetic engineering could produce 'super' animals

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A new technique that uses modified human genes to convice cells to grow could lead to the birth of rabbits, sheep and dogs that are more than double their normal size, researchers say.

The University of Pennsylvania has applied for a patent on the possible commercial applications of the "enhanced-growth" technology developed in a genetic research project.

Last year, researchers at Penn and in Seattle teamed up to develop a so-called "Mighty Mouse" that is twice the size of a normal mouse. The researchers now are working on larger species, including rabbits, sheep and dogs, officials said.

Ralph L. Brinster, a professor of reproductive physiology at the university's School of Veterinary Medicine who is carrying out the research project, said there have been no births yet of altered-gene animals larger than a mouse. However, the technique has promise for such commercially valuable animals as cows, pigs and other farm animals, he noted.

"Farm animals produced by this technique are likely to be at least twice as big" as normal animals, Brinster said, but it is still unknown whether such an animal might be more profitable for a farmer than normal-sized livestock.

The scientists use modified human genes that tell cells to produce more growth hormone and thus grow to a larger-than-normal size, he said. The initial, successful mice tests used a rat gene.

The technique involves injecting a specially modified human gene into a single fertilized egg of an animal, then placing the egg back into the reproductive tract of the mother animal.

When the injection and growth of the embryo are successful, the newborn animal contains copies of the human gene in all its cells.

"We now expect to see enhanced growth" — in both size and time needed for maturity — "in every animal into whose egg we induce a gene for human growth hormone," Brinster said.

"We know that the technique doubles the size of a mouse.... It's difficult to know what the technique would do in other animals, but it could range widely," Brinster's colleague, Dr. Richard D. Palmiter of the Howard Hughes Medical Institute at the University of Washington in Seattle, said in a telephone interview.

Palmiter said animals could conceivably grow 10 times larger than normal. However, Brinster said he believes the animals will grow more than twice as large, but not much larger than that.

"Based on our work on Dr. Brinster's mice at the University of Pennsylvania, the most obvious application is to stimulate the growth of farm animals," Palmiter said. "But it is also basic research that needs to be done.

Missing cartoon sparks protests

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — The cartoon feature, "The Far Side," was pulled from the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel after the newspaper's managing editor complained it showed "the humor of violence."

But after readers complained, the editor started a contest Thursday asking "Far Side" fans to participate in a contest to see if the strip should be reinstated.

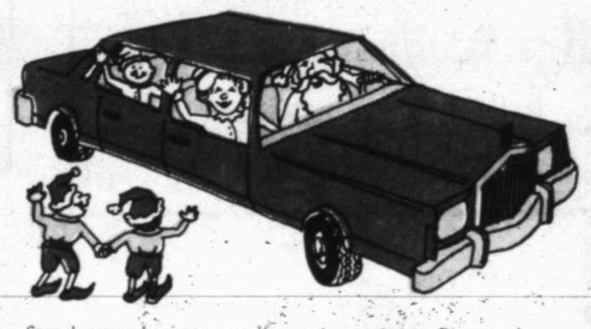

The strip was pulled from its slot on the front page on Dec. 5. Managing Editor Joe Weiler said he felt the cartoon "too frequently played to the humor of violence."

AP Laserphoto

LUFKIN (AP) — Teen-agers who are in trouble with the law or who have family problems seem to drift toward Gerry Simoneaux.

It's not unusual for the East Texas woman to wake up and find several teen-agers — not her own — sleeping in her living room.

"My heart goes out to these kids who have no place to go, no place to sleep and no money," Mrs. Simoneaux said. "I can't do much for them on my salary except give them a few hot meals, a place to sleep and a friend to talk to.

"I really care what happens to them. I love kids, especially teen-agers. They seem to be seeking adult friendship — someone they can trust."

When her 18-year-old son, David, was arrested for shoplifting, Mrs. Simoneaux decided to organize interested parents and teen-agers for the purpose of helping troubled youngstets. Thus, Teens-N-Trouble was born.

"I asked the kids why, why, why do they do things to get in trouble?" Mrs. Simoneaux questioned her son and his friends. "Their responses varied from boredom to bad home environment to poor peer influence. Most of them can't get jobs, so they don't have money, so they end up stealing what they want."

"The name of the organization is a play on words — teens 'and' trouble and teens 'in' trouble," she explained. "Some of our kids haven't been in trouble with the law; they just want to help other teens and to make Lufkin better for everybody."

During the meeting, which is basically run by the teen-agers, they discuss things they want to have, do or change in the community, said Richard Dowthitt, an active member of TNT.

"We need a place to hang out," Dowthitt said. "We don't care all that much about cruising up and down (the street), but there is nothing else to do.

"We want a place where we can play pool, dance, exercise, play video games, talk, watch TV, listen to music or study."

"My dream is a halfway house for teens who need a temporary home," Mrs. Simoneaux added. "Many of these kids have been kicked out of their house by their parents, or the parents moved away and left them to wander the streets alone with no money. Hopefully, then we could find someone to provide much needed counseling."

Recent projects include a newsletter that a couple of churches have volunteered to help print, a teen-age fashion show and a street dance.

TNT teens ask, "Do you want a change?" and, "Do you want a chance?"

The teen-agers run the show, Mrs. Simoneaux said.

"Russell DaMetz, another adult, and I are there only to assist and direct, but the kids do all the work and planning," she said.

Vincent Coda of Sparrowbush, N.Y., gets a kiss from his wife, Amy, as they celebrate his winning of $7.1 million in the New York State Lotto game.

New Yorker wins $7.1 million in lottery

PORT JERVIS, N.Y. (AP) — A sheet metal worker who won the largest jackpot ever awarded to one person in New York state's lottery says he hasn't thought about what he'll do with the $7.1 million.

However, "It should certainly take care of our needs," said Vincent Coda, 60. He and his wife Amy have two sons.

When he saw the winning numbers, Coda said Thursday, he thought he would have to share the jackpot with "40 or 50" people. "It's hard to imagine I'm the only winner. It hasn't penetrated yet," he said.

Coda said lottery officials askedsure if he wants to repeat the pearrangements for payment, but he declined because he can't stand the "public fuss."

And besides, he had furnaces to clean.

"A lady called me today. She really had one full of soot," he said.

WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — This wealthy community 40 miles north of New York is getting crowded with celebrities. Paul Newman, Rodney Dangerfield and Neil Sadaka have been joined by Patricia Hearst Shaw, who was kidnapped by revolutionaries in 1974.

Patricia Shaw

Mrs. Shaw, daughter of publishing magnate Randolph Hearst, and her husband Bernard bought a two-story home in the town's Greens Farms section, and have been living there with their 2-year-old daughter.

Shaw, in an interview with The Telegram of Bridgeport on Thursday, asked that the home's address not be publicized. They have built a reinforced fence around the house and a dog patrols the grounds.

"I think she enjoys her privacy," said a neighbor.

Police Chief William Stefan said the Shaws informed the department when they moved into town.

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Rock singer Sly Stone pleaded no contest Friday to charges of possession of cocaine and drug paraphenalia and was allowed to remain free on bond until sentencing Jan. 9.

Judge Thomas Reese said the 39-year-old musician need not remain in Florida while awaiting sentencing. Both charges, stemming from Stone's June arrest at a Fort Myers motel, carry maximum penalties of five years in prison.

But Allan Parvey, Stone's attorney, said his client would be sentenced under Florida's new guidelines, which call for one year in jail, probation, a fine, or some combination of all three. Reese said sentences on both charges would run concurrently.

Stone, lead singer of Sly & The Family Stone, a rock group popular in the 1970s, was jailed for several hours Thursday after he was late for his scheduled trial before Reese.

Parvey said his client had been delayed on the way from Miami because rain backed up traffic.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Choreographer Katherine Dunham has been honored at the Haitian National Institute of Culture and Arts.

Ms. Dunham played a major role in arranging dance routines for "Cabin in the Sky," an American musical featuring an all-black cast. She also has maintained a home here for years.

Among the invited guests Thursday were Haiti's President-for-Life, Jean Claude Duvalier, and actor Richard Burton, who recently purchased a home in Petitionville near Port-au-Prince.

BALTIMORE (AP) — His testimony helped convict a man accused of pulling a false fire alarm, but Mayor William Donald Schaefer isn't sure if he wants to repeat the pearrangements for payment, but he declined because he can't stand the "public fuss."

tand Thursday. "It seems to me at some times the witness can almost become the defendant."

The four-term mayor testified that he saw a young defendant pull a fire alarm near City Hall on Sept. 24.

"I looked up into his face as he touched the fire alarm," he said. "I saw his face. I saw him touch the box."

Schaefer and defense attorney Bert Mazaroff had a brief agitated exchange after the mayor's testimony was interrupted several times by the lawyer's objections.

"Mr. Mazaroff," Schaefer said in an exasperated voice, "I am positive I saw him pull the alarm."

Weirdo has hair fettish

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A long-haired blonde thought a "lunatic" who brushed up against her at a shopping mall was trying to get into her purse — but instead he lopped off 10 inches of her tresses, the such second incident in two weeks.

"I was looking at some blouses, and he brushed up against me and said, 'Excuse me,'" said Lynn Quay, 20, whose blond hair grew to below her waist. "The first thing I thought about was he might be trying to get in my purse. When I turned around, he was ...holding a chunk of my hair."

Cal Potter, head of security for the Westland Mall, said the haircutting was similar to one that occurred last week, when a woman lost about a foot of her hip-length hair.

"We've got some weirdo that's been in here a couple of times," Potter said. "The first girl didn't even know her hair had been cut until she got home and her husband noticed it. Whoever did it has a hair fetish. He likes long hair," he said.

Potter described the man as about 5 feet 7 inches tall, 250 pounds with dark hair and a beard.

Ms. Quay said that when she realized the man was holding a 10-inch length of her hair, she chased him.

"No one even tried to help," Ms. Quay said. "I yelled at him, but everyone just watched. He started running and I chased him through the mall until he ran out in the parking lot. I don't know what I would have done if I'd caught him."

Ms. Quay, of suburban Dublin, had let her hair grow for 14 years.

"It's scary because he really didn't have to stop cutting at my hair. I haven't had a haircut since I was 6, and this nut comes along and starts chopping it off with a razor blade," she said.

"At least I'll have a story for people when they see it," she said.

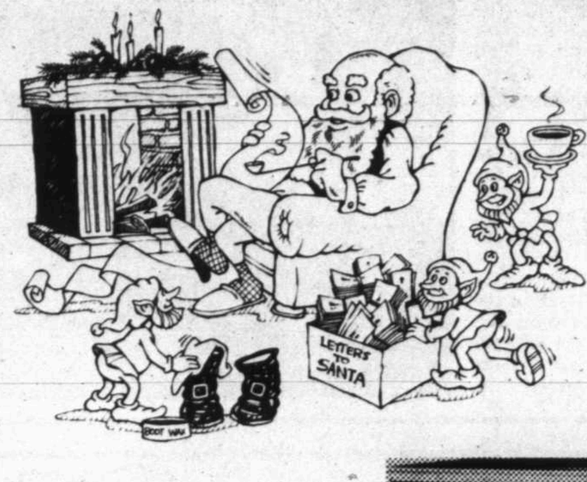

Olivier OK after surgery

A hospital spokesman said doctors were "very pleased" with the recovery of Olivier, who is 76.

One of his most recent public appearances was Nov. 17 when he spoke at the memorial service for fellow actor Sir Ralph Richardson at Westminster Abbey.

Bop Hope will entertain troops in Beirut

WASHINGTON (AP) — At age 80, comedian Bob Hope is raising his USO banner once more, heading with Brooke Shields and a full troupe of other performers to the shores of Lebanon to entertain U.S. marines over the Christmas holidays.

Hope's USO-sponsored tour will include performances on ships of the U.S. Sixth fleet, steaming off Lebanon in support of the 1,400 U.S. Marines in Beirut as part of the multi-national peacekeeping force, the Pentagon announced Friday.

Hope, who has been doing USO holiday shows for 42 years, said in a telephone interview he's excited about going. "It's beautiful. It's very inspiring. You don't really get tired until you get back. It's so exciting."

The ski-nosed master of the one-liner will perform several shows with an entourage which includes, in addition to Ms. Shields, actress Ann Jillian, singer Vic Damone, television personality Kathy Lee Crosby and the reigning Miss USA, Julie Hayek.

Hope will leave Tuesday from McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey.

The Marines ashore will be ferried out to the ships. Hope will not land in Beirut, where American troops have come under increasing fire in recent weeks. He says he's not worried about safety, noting, "we were in Vietnam nine times...and they took care of us pretty good."

The tour continues a tradition that began in 1941, when Hope gave his first show for the United Service Organizations at March Air Force Base near Los Angeles.

His first overseas visit to the troops was in 1943 and the last was a 1972 trip to Vietnam, where Hope entertained thousands of servicemen shortly before U.S. participation in that war ended. Since then, Hope has made Christmas visits to veterans' hospitals in the United States.

Hope has been doing the holiday shows so long that when he turned 75, House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, joked that "his first USO Christmas shows were at Lexington and Concord."

In 1980, Hope said he'd like to entertain the American hostages that were being held in Iran. "If it is possible for me to go, I'd go in a second," he said.

Hope wanted to entertain the Marines in Beirut last year, but the trip was canceled after he had eye surgery.

In an interview last May shortly before his birthday, Hope said "I wanted to go to Beirut at Christmas to entertain the Marines, but (his wife) Dolores hit the ceiling. She called the doctors and four of them had a conference with me. They had a blowup of a photograph of the right eye. It looked like the beach at Dunkirk. They convinced me."

"All during this year," Hope said Friday, "I received requests from soldiers about it. Then the Navy got into it and invited me again. So, I thought it would be about time for me to do it again."

During that May interview, Hope called the entertainment of thousands of servicemen in three wars "the most emotional part of my life."

Two years ago, Hope was honored by the USO at a show where President Reagan called him an "ambassador of goodwill to the entire world." The show and dinner were the start of a drive to raise $10 million for a Bob Hope USO center in Washington.

During an 80th birthday party last May, 72-year-old President Reagan, a friend from Hollywood days, joked, "Can I call you 'Pops'? I just love it when he calls me 'kid.'"

Iran issues stamp of embassy takeover

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran has issued a stamp depicting the 1979 takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Teheran, the U.S. Postal Service said Friday.

Postmaster General William F. Bolger called the stamp "repulsive, a vicious distortion of a criminal act by Iran, and an insult to all Americans."

He said that international agreements do not allow any nation to refuse the mail of another because of an offensive stamp. However, any recipient could mark such a letter "refused," and it would be returned to the sender.

He said the stamp commemorates the fourth anniversary of the Nov. 4, 1979, taking of American hostages and depicts a blindfolded American with a burning U.S. flag in the background. It bears the legend, in English and in Farsi, "The Takeover of the U.S. Spy Den."

Bolger also said the Postal Service, in consultation with the State Department, protested the stamp through the Universal Postal Union to the postal administrations of Iran and all other 166 member nations.

The protest said the U.S. noted with abhorrence the issuance of the stamp.

"It is inconceivable that the postage stamp, a time-honored messenger of mutual understanding between peoples and bridge of international friendship, has been corrupted by a theme of willful destruction, violence and total disregard for human rights, dignity and values," it said.

"The United States strongly protests the issuance by Iran of this stamp, which celebrates an act of terrorism and which was resoundingly condemned within the United Nations, by rulings of the International Court of Justice, and by world opinion," it said.

It also said that Americans could express their outrage by refusing to accept mail bearing the stamp.

"It's good to have a place where you really like to live."

"There's a lot of activity around here. Like this aerobics class.
"I can swim, play tennis, aerobics, jog. I can stay in good physical shape just living at my own house.
"I've lived here 8 months and I've been an apartment dweller for several years. I looked at several other complexes, but they were all the same...just four walls, a bathroom and a kitchen. This one is quite different. It has all the other luxuries."
No other Midland apartment community combines a multitude of activities with truly luxurious living. Featuring your choice of decorator wall coverings, side-by-side icemaker refrigerators, built-in micro-waves, ceiling fans, dishwashers, washers and dryers, trash compactors, mini-blinds and French doors to patios/balconies.
Come and visit and you'll see why Debbie Allen says, "I would really hate to move from here...I love it."

"I'VE SEEN EVERY APARTMENT COMMUNITY IN MIDLAND."

"My feet hurt and my patience was wearing thin. I'd seen every apartment community in Midland, and none met my standards... until I discovered Oakridge Apartments. Just a little off the beaten trail, Oakridge has the quiet, private location I'd been looking for. Plus all the other extras I'd just about given up on. Like new construction, nice, friendly neighborhood appeal and superior amenities—indoor spa and sauna, clubhouse and pool, to name just a few—Oakridge is the greatest. I should know, I've seen them all."

1- and 2-bedroom and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.
