British may seek surrender of Falklands

By The Associated Press

British marines and paratroopers today were reported fighting Argentine troops for control of a strategic mountain 12 miles west of Stanley in action that could pave the way for the decisive battle of the Falkland Islands.

But government sources in London were quoted as saying the commander of the British task force, Rear Adm. John Woodward, has been given full authority to decide whether to give the Argentines an opportunity to surrender before launching a full-scale assault on Stanley, the Falklands capital.

The sources, quoted by Britain's domestic news agency, Press Association, and Independent Television News, said the British did not want to subject Argentina to a humiliating defeat because of concerns of worsening political instability in Latin America.

The British Defense Ministry reported Monday night that British and Argentine troops were battling for control of 1,500-foot Mount Kent 12 miles west of Stanley.

Press Association reported fighting three miles closer to Stanley on a ridge called Two Sisters, indicating the British marines and paratroopers may have pushed back the Argentine perimeter. But there was no official confirmation of this.

Argentina in a communique issued early today said its forces had "detected" British troops about 15 miles from Stanley. It said Argentine troops were using helicopters to reinforce their defense positions around the town.

Reports from London and Buenos Aires said the Argentine commander, Brig. Gen. Mario Menendez, had heavily fortified Mount Kent and the nearby ridges. If the British captured them, they would provide a vantage point for shelling the inner Argentine defenses.

Press Association also reported without attribution that the British had landed their backup force of 3,500 Scots and Welsh Guardsmen and Nepalese Gurkhas north of Stanley, bringing their total land forces on the island to at least 7,500 and outnumbering the estimated 7,000 Argentines concentrated around Stanley.

The Defense Ministry refused to confirm the landing report.

Two British forces had been advancing on Stanley, Royal Marines and paratroopers moving westward by helicopter from the San Carlo beachhead, and another paratroop force coming around from the south after capturing the Goose Green airstrip and 1,400 Argentine prisoners.

British press reports said the two forces had linked up for the assault on Stanley.

The ministry said British Harrier fighter-bombers continued to pound the Stanley airstrip 2½ miles east of the town, and "a number" of Argentine light planes were believed damaged.

Press Association reported that British warships moved to within two miles of the Stanley harbor to shell Argentine fortifications.

As the British forces move steadily forward, the tenor of statements from Argentina's ruling junta and from its newspapers changed in an apparent effort to prepare the Argentine public to accept a defeat and convince it at the same time that this constituted a victory in disguise.

President Leopoldo Galtieri set the new tone Saturday when he said, in an Army Day speech, "May God grant that, beyond the fortunes of the unequal battle against the extra-continental aggressor and those who support her, that the torch we have lighted to illuminate the awakening of our America not be extinguished."

START's starting date revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says nuclear arms reduction talks with the Soviets, beginning late this month in Geneva, could diminish the arsenals that threaten "war even more terrible" than those that already have claimed American lives.

In a Memorial Day speech at Arlington National Cemetery, the president also confirmed that the United States will continue to abide by the constraints of the signed, but unratified, SALT II treaty as long as the Soviets do the same.

Reagan's schedule today includes two briefings in advance of his departure Wednesday for meetings with allies in Europe, where he is likely to encounter anti-nuclear demonstrations.

Formal announcement of the June 29 date of the new round of strategic arms reduction talks, which Reagan refers to as START, was made in a joint U.S.-Soviet statement issued at the White House just prior to the president's speech.

"Both sides attach great importance to these negotiations," the statement said.

Standing near rows of graves with white markers, Reagan reiterated his call for reducing nuclear weapons "by negotiating a stable balance at far lower levels of strategic forces."

Addressing about 4,000 people in the cemetery's amphitheater, Reagan said of potential adversaries:

"We must strive to speak of them not belligerently, but firmly and frankly. And that's why we must never fail to note, as frequently as necessary, the wide gulf between our codes of morality.

"And that's why we must never hesitate to acknowledge the irrefutable difference between our view of man as master of the state and their view of man as servant of the state.

"Nor must we ever underestimate the seriousness of their aspirations to global expansion. The risk is the very freedom that has been so dearly won."

He said such "honesty of mind" could "build a foundation upon which treaties between our nations can stand at last, treaties that can someday bring about a reduction in the terrible arms of destruction, arms that threaten us with war even more terrible than those that have taken the lives of the Americans we honor today."

He added: "As for existing strategic arms agreements, we will refrain from actions which undercut them so long as the Soviet Union shows equal restraint. With good will and dedication on both sides I pray that we will achieve a safer world."

That declaration was viewed as a way to allay concern among European allies that the administration was abandoning the restraints imposed by SALT II. Reagan has denounced the treaty as "fatally flawed," saying it permitted the Soviets to add at least 3,000 nuclear warheads to their inventory while the United States tried to catch up.

The SALT II treaty was signed by President Carter in 1979 after seven years of negotiations by three U.S. presidents. It never was ratified by the Senate.

Reagan appeared to have tears in his eyes just after he placed a wreath of carnations and chrysanthemums before the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

"As we honor their memory today, let us pledge that their lives, their sacrifices, their valor shall be justified and remembered for as long as God gives life to this nation," the president said.

"And let us also pledge to do our utmost to carry out what must have been their wish, that no other generation of young men will ever have to share their experiences and repeat their sacrifice."

Reagan outlined his administration's START proposals in a speech May 9 at Eureka College, his alma mater in Illinois.

Solidarity leaders plan general strike

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leaders say they're planning a general strike in Warsaw, Wroclaw and the Silesian coal mines because lesser protests have failed to force the martial-law government to "back off from repression."

Fugitive leaders of the suspended union gave no indication of when they might call the strike.

They said in a leaflet that workers in several large Warsaw factories had asked them to organize a general strike. They said they were also planning to extend the strike to Wroclaw, a major industrial center in southwest Poland, and the Silesian coalmines, which produce the country's chief export.

"The forms of protest action which have been used until now have proven insufficient to force the authorities to back off from repression and pursue the concept of national accord," the leaflet said.

Street marches by Solidarity supporters in early May were broken up by the police.

The union leaders said they are demanding freedom for 2,000 Solidarity activists, including union chief Lech Walesa, held since imposition of martial law Dec. 13.

In another gesture of defiance Monday, union members managed to place a plaque undetected in Warsaw's Victory Square commemorating the nine coal miners killed on Dec. 16 by police who broke a sit-in strike protesting martial law.

Pontiff meets with Protestant leaders

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Pope John Paul II made an impassioned plea to Scottish Protestant leaders today for reconciliation of the Christian faiths, a day after he faced the noisiest, most hostile demonstration against his British tour.

Later, on the next to last day of the first papal visit to Britain, he was to travel to Glasgow, Scotland's largest city 38 miles west of Edinburgh, where many of the 815,000 Scottish Catholics were expected to attend an open-air Mass in Bellahouston Park.

Glasgow's police were set for hostile Protestant demonstrations and retaliatory Catholic attacks. Police said they were investigating an overnight fire at a rail station less than a mile from the park. Anti-papal slogans were found painted on the station walls. There were no injuries.

In a separate incident, four children returning from a youth rally for the pope in nearby Murrayfield received minor injuries from broken glass Monday when their bus was stoned in Glasgow, police said.

In Edinburgh, the pope rose early to meet with the Rt. Rev. John McIntyre, the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and other Protestant leaders at the residence of Cardinal Gordon Gray, the Catholic archbishop of Edinburgh.

John Paul lauded recent Scottish efforts to resolve interfaith differences, adding, "In following this road, we have still to overcome many obstacles occasioned by the sad history of past enmities. We have to resolve important doctrinal issues.

"Yet already, mutual love, our will for unity, can be a sign of hope to a divided world — not least in these days in which peace is so sorely imperiled."

After the morning meeting, McIntyre said John Paul must be given personal credit for the ecumenical progress being made.

"Without him, I don't think the new openness in the ecumenical movement would have occurred," he said.

Protestant extremists have failed to mar the papal tour, but the Rev. Ian Paisley, the bitterly anti-Catholic leader of Northern Ireland's militant Protestants, continued to turn out demonstrators at the pope's stops.

Paisley and some 200 supporters threw eggs, coins and crumpled bits of papal posters and shouted abusive slogans when John Paul arrived Monday evening for a meeting in Edinburgh with the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. None of the missiles hit the pope or his car.

The demonstrators, who included several clergymen, scuffled with police and Catholics who turned out to cheer the pope, sang the Irish Protestant marching song "The Sash My Father Wore" and strained at the police lines but could not break through.

The 62-year-old pontiff appeared unconcerned and gave his blessing to the group, as he did when about 50 Protestants demonstrated against him in Liverpool Sunday.

Police said 10 people were arrested, but Paisley was not among them.

The historic meeting with McIntyre Monday evening was held on the steps of the General Assembly hall.

King Ranch heir takes family members to court

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The great-grandson of King Ranch founder Richard King has taken his family to federal court here, claiming he was short-changed millions of dollars when he sold his 12 percent share of the sprawling spread six years ago.

Belton K. Johnson filed suit three years ago against King Ranch Inc. for what he contends is an underpayment of up to $35 million when it bought his interest in the ranch for $70 million.

In opening statements Monday, Johnson's attorneys told U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions that King Ranch Inc. agreed to buy Johnson's share after learning of a potential $500 million claim against Exxon for alleged underpayment of gas royalties.

King Ranch executives contend that no valid claim against Exxon for underpayment of royalties existed when Johnson sold his stock in 1976.

Lawyers for King Ranch Inc. described Johnson as "an aggressive seller" who threatened litigation or a sellout to foreign investors unless ranch executives redeemed his stock quickly.

Infighting among King Ranch family members has been common since the death of Mrs. Richard "Henrietta" King in 1925 when the South Texas ranching empire was divided among King's heirs for the first time.

But Johnson's suit may mark the first time the private interplay of the South Texas ranch will be made public.

Johnson seeks an unspecified amount of damages under the Securities Exchange Act and contends that King Ranch Inc. was required under the law to disclose the royalties information prior to the stock purchase.

The suit concerns what Johnson called the "Exxon claim," where Exxon Co. U.S.A., then Humble Oil and Refining Co., was to pay royalties on market value at the wellhead for gas produced on the King Ranch.

According to Johnson's suit, royalty payments were not calculated on that value from Jan. 1, 1973, until Johnson sold his stock on Dec. 13, 1976.

Mattox concentrates on experience

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Referring to himself as "the toughest, the most confident and the most experienced" candidate seeking the Democratic nomination for Texas Attorney General, Congressman Jim Mattox stormed into Midland during a tour of West Texas, beginning the final week of campaigning before the Democratic runoff election Saturday.

"From the beginning of this campaign I have said that the real issue is the experience and qualifications of the candidates," Mattox said during a press conference at Chaparral Aviation Monday morning. "My opponent (John Hannah) is a relatively inexperienced attorney; he's had a lackluster political career and he's failed to talk about any issues with which the attorney general's office actually deals."

Sitting behind the "people's lawyer shingle," the logo of his campaign, Mattox said he was pleased with his recent endorsement from the Texas Agricultural Political Action Committee.

"That shows that I'm not just a metropolitan type of candidate," Mattox said. "I appeal to farmers and ranchers."

MATTOX SAYS he has vowed to represent the people in fighting utility rate hike increases, nursing home abuse and for farm and ranch issues. Because of his outspokenness on these issues, Mattox says, he has lost some support.

"For instance, the attorney general currently has the power to intervene on behalf of the state in rate hike hearings. I intend to carry this out, and I will reorganize the office to represent consumers in rate hearings before the Public Utilities Commission. We can fight the rate gouging of the giant utility monopolies," Mattox said. "My opponent is being supported by the utilities' lobbyists and law firms.

Jim Mattox

"There are some excellent nursing homes in the state," Mattox continued, "but we also have some nursing home operators who are greedy vultures preying on Texas' senior citizens. Those operators know that I won't allow them to abuse and neglect their residents. I'm going to form a unit to investigate nursing home complaints while my opponent has accepted the endorsement of the nursing home lobby. He's willing to sell out our senior citizens."

Mattox said he also thinks the attorney general is in the best position to coordinate enforcement of laws against oil field theft.

"THE 50,000 OIL wells of this nation are sitting ducks," he said, referring to their isolated locations. "We're losing $100 million in equipment and oil and gas a year from oil field theft."

Mattox, handing out copies of brochures from Hannah's campaign, told reporters that his people had found several inconsistencies in the brochures.

One sentence in Hannah's brochure reads, "Before obtaining his law degree, John taught elementary school and worked as a college instructor."

"That would lead me to believe that he has a law degree, wouldn't it you?" Mattox asked reporters. According to Mattox, Hannah does not have a law degree.

"My opponent never graduated from law school. I think it's unreasonable for a person to ask to be the top attorney in the state without having earned a law degree," he said.

Mattox said his supporters did not catch "that deception" until after the May 1 primary. When he was approached about it, Mattox said Hannah told them that he and his supporters had quit distributing the brochures as soon as they became aware of the error.

"MY PEOPLE GOT this brochure on May 15," Mattox said. "I think that is pretty significant."

Mattox also pointed out the sentence, "Elected District Attorney in East Texas in 1972, he (Hannah) doubled the trials and conviction rate in his jurisdiction."

According to statistics Mattox supporters dug up, Mattox said it was true that Hannah had doubled the number, adding, "but only from two to four. I think that is very insignificant.

"My opponent has tried less than 20 jury cases in his entire legal career. As a prosecutor and private attorney, I've handled thousands of legal matters and argued more than 200 trials before Texas juries," Mattox said. "My opponent has virually no civil trial experience and the Attorney General's office is primarily a civil law firm. I've established and managed my own law firm, which has handled both civil and criminal law."

When asked about criticisms regarding Mattox's personality, such as instances where Mattox called different opponents a "born-again liar," and a "Nazi," Mattox replied, "Sometimes you've got to make a few enemies as attorney general.

"Harry Truman once said 'You judge a man by the enemies he has.' I think we need someone who is willing to step up and fight the hard battles. I've never walked away from a fight and I think there are some fights that need to be conducted for the people. I don't lose battles, I win them for the people."

Questioned about looking for fights when it is not necessary, Mattox replied, "I don't believe in the go-along, get-along philosophy."

Budget solution not in sight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The deadlock in the House over a 1983 budget blueprint is holding up work on legislation necessary to curb the flow of government red ink — action the Reagan administration and congressional leaders agree is vital to the nation's economic health.

But as Congress returned from its Memorial Day recess, the prospects were not good for a quick solution to the political and philosophical divisions which led the House to reject more than half a dozen budget plans last week and send the issue back to the House Budget Committee.

The House resumes work Wednesday. But budget writers were trying to regroup earlier, with the House Budget Committee meeting possibly as early as this afternoon for preliminary work on drafting a new budget plan.

After a post-mortem session of the Budget Committee on Friday, its chairman, James R. Jones, D-Okla., conceded "it really is very difficult to get a broad consensus in the House under the conditions that exist."

His suggestion that Republicans and Democrats "split the difference" between their two main budget proposals has met with a cool reception in both parties. Instead, the full House may find itself voting on separate Democratic and Republican resolutions.

The resolution that the House has been unable to agree on sets revenue and spending targets for the fiscal year which begins Oct. 1.

The Republican-controlled Senate already has adopted a budget outline which has President Reagan's blessing.

Rep. David R. Obey, D-Wis., a member of the Budget Committee, says the budget resolution "has become the pied piper of Congress. Its schedule dictates when Congress convenes and when it recesses, what happens on the floor and what is stalled on the (legislative) calendar."

Appropriations and tax-writing committees in the House need the resolution to give them targets for legislative action. Without a budget blueprint, there would be no binding instructions to the committees for the tax increases and spending cuts that are necessary to trim deficits.

The budget resolution Congress adopted last year at Reagan's urging pointed the way to the record tax and spending cuts that followed.

But the faltering economy has shaken confidence in the direction charted in last year's budget resolution, including its forecast of a $37.6 billion shortfall this year.

A small portion of crude oil spilled onto the roadway from the tanker-trailer, according to the Department of Public Safety. Hanson was listed in satisfactory condition in Midland Memorial Hospital this morning with injured ribs and a fractured knee.

Summer may not be here yet, but weather still summer-like

Summer officially won't be here until June 21, though the heat wave certainly seems to be moving in degree by degree.

Today was to be sunny and warmer, as the temperature was to peak in the upper 80s; the nighttime low is to be in the mid-60s. And on Wednesday, the sun is to warm up the Midland area to a "very warm" high in the low 90s.

Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 15 mph tonight, and are to be westerly to southwesterly at 15-20 mph Wednesday.

The peak temperature on Monday was 80 degrees, which lagged behind the record high of 102 for the date in 1959. The overnight low of 52 degrees was close to the record low of 50 degrees for the date in 1947.

Rainfall for the first five months of 1982 is 4.83 inches, which is .08 of an inch more than the normal rainfall of 4.75 inches through May.

Sunset tonight is to be at 8:50 p.m. Sunrise Wednesday is to be at 6:43 a.m.

Midlander in critical condition after gunshot wound to chin

A 20-year-old Midland welder was in critical condition in Midland Memorial Hospital this morning after sustaining a single gunshot wound to his chin in a parking lot at 3301 Andrews Highway at 11:35 p.m. Monday.

The victim, Mark Garrett of 1421 Ventura, was discovered by Midland police officers lying face down in the parking lot. He was in surgery more than three hours this morning.

Details were sketchy this morning, but police detectives indicated no suspect had been apprehended.

A car-pedestrian accident at 4503 Parkdale at 1:10 p.m. Monday sent a 4-year-old boy to MMH.

Casey D. Neidecken of that address was listed in satisfactory condition this morning with head injuries.

He was injured as he ran out into the street before an oncoming car driven by Gene Ralph Moore, 33, of Rt. 6, Box 703, aceording to a police report.

In other Memorial Day Weekend-related violence, Fausto Betancourt, 27, of 807½ N. Weatherford remained in serious condition in MMH this morning following a shooting incident at 5 p.m. Sunday.

Midlander killed in accident

A Midland woman was killed and another Midlander hospitalized Friday morning after a one-car accident in Flagstaff, Ariz.

Elaine Fromme, 25, died about 3:30 p.m. Friday in a Flagstaff hospital from head injuries.

Steve McGlynn, 22, of Route 6 Box 400 No. 60, was listed in stable condition this morning in a Flagstaff hospital.

The two apparently were traveling to Las Vegas, Nev., according to hospital reports.

According to the Arizona Department of Public Safety, the accident occurred at approximately 6:45 a.m. outside of Flagstaff.

The couple's car swerved off the road and overturned, throwing Ms. Fromme from the vehicle, the DPS said.

McGlynn, driver of the car, suffered a fractured pelvis and ribs, cuts and bruises, according to the hospital reports.

Ms. Fromme had been employed at Midland Memorial Hospital as a registered nurse since October 1981.

Midland man charged with murder

Murder charges were filed this morning against Pablo Brito Molina, 40, of Midland, in the Sunday night shooting death of John Postert, according to Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

According to Midland Police Department reports, Molina turned himself in following the shooting death of Postert, 35, of Midland.

Bond was set at $25,000, Pine said.

Postert was shot several times with a .45-caliber gun in front of De Zavala Elementary School, 1101 South St., according to police.

Odessa woman reportedly raped

ODESSA — A 32-year-old woman was raped in her northeast Odessa home at approximately 1 a.m. today, according to an Odessa Police Department spokesman.

The assailant, who wore a nylon stocking over his head, entered the woman's home by unknown means and trapped the woman in her bedroom, where he held a hand over her mouth and forced her to have sexual relations.

The woman was later treated at Odessa Medical Center.

The assailant was described as a white male, five feet nine or ten inches in height, weighing 170 pounds, and wearing a blue shirt and bluejeans.

Rehearsal for the Community Band will be held at 7 p.m. June 8, not tonight as previously reported.

The practice session is scheduled to be in the band hall in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College.

Court disallows search complaint

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today allowed federal prosecutors to use certain safety records as evidence against two coal companies facing criminal charges, the result of a 1976 Kentucky mine explosion that killed 15 miners.

The justices, without comment, left intact a ruling that the records can be used as evidence even though they were seized from a Scotia Coal Co. office without a search warrant.

Lawyers for Scotia and its parent firm, the Blue Diamond Coal Co., had argued that the records must be excluded from their criminal trial because the warrantless seizure was unconstitutional.

But government lawyers told the justices the appeal was premature since the trial has not yet been held.

"If (the companies) are acquitted...their contention will be moot. If, on the other hand (they) are convicted they will then be able to present their contentions to this court," the Justice Department said.

Fifteen miners died when an explosion rocked Scotia Mine No. 1 at Oven Fork, Ky., on March 9, 1976.

Officials from the federal Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration, an agency now called the Mine Safety and Health Administration, arrived shortly after the explosion to supervise rescue and recovery operations.

One of the ranking officials ordered that certain Scotia safety records be seized from the company's field office in Oven Fork.

The Constitution's Fourth Amendment bans unreasonable searches and seizures.

Salvadoran troops trying to oust guerrillas

LA SIERPE, El Salvador (AP) — Government troops today continued a four-day-old offensive to oust leftist guerrillas from strongholds in northern Chalatenango province along the country's border with Honduras.

Official spokesmen refused to give details of the operation, but local sources and residents estimated more than 1,200 fresh U.S.-trained and equipped soldiers were involved.

Residents of this village said an artillery unit, armed with 105mm cannon and based on the local soccer field, had been pounding guerrilla positions in hills to the northeast since Saturday.

Radio Farabundo Marti, one of the guerrillas' clandestine stations, has claimed that Honduran troops are participating in the operation but there have been no independent reports supporting the claim.

Roads leading into the operation area from the provincial capital were blocked by government troops Monday. In a nearby town soldiers with megaphones ordered residents to come forward and show their identity cards.

The government's sweep through the northern outskirts of Chalatenango appears aimed at tracking down rebels driven into the area after a major counter-insurgency drive last month in neighboring Morazan province.

In 10 days of fighting that ended May 3, the army claimed to have killed 122 guerrillas and dismantled 13 mountain hideouts.

Odessa motel reportedly warned about ventilation

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — A motel in which a woman was killed and 13 people poisoned by carbon monoxide gas this weekend had been warned twice since December that two water heaters were not vented properly, Odessa Fire Marshal Wayne Coggins said today.

"We had written them up as a hazard before and they had not corrected it," Coggins said.

The motel's manager was not immediately available for comment.

Fire inspectors say they believe the carbon monoxide spread through eight rooms of the Imperial Motel Sunday from at least one of the water heaters.

At the fire department's request, the motel's management closed the motel voluntarily until the heaters are fixed, Coggins said.

In December, fire inspectors cited the motel for a violation of the city fire code, because of the water heaters. One had allegedly been separated from its exhaust and vented to a window, Coggins said. The heaters still were not vented properly when the motel was reinspected May 21, he said.

Coggins said he believed that wind blew the water heater exhaust back into the motel and along a plumbing passageway into eight rooms.

Two people remained in critical condition today at the Medical Center Hospital. Bernice Connery, 27, of Midlothian, Texas, was dead at the scene Sunday morning, police said.

Doctors said all the victims were suffering from the same symptoms — headaches, earaches, dizziness and vomiting.

Coggins said firemen are inspecting all of the water heaters in this West Texas city's motels, checking them individually or going room to room to measure the levels of carbon monoxide.

Coggins said the fire department normally does not file charges on suspected violators if they correct the hazard for which they are cited. He said he had not decided whether to turn the motel case over to the city attorney.

From China, completely different medicine

HANGZHOU, China (AP) — Chinese medicine, which likes to boast of centuries-old secret formulas for chronic ills, is pressing ahead with modern research into more immediate problems, like stopping bleeding in emergencies.

A powder made by mixing eight or nine kinds of herbs can stop heavy bleeding in seconds and then be absorbed harmlessly into the body, especially useful in treating an organ like the liver that can't be sewn up, said Feng Gensheng, director of the Hangzhou No. 2 Medicine Factory.

He said government approval for mass production is expected soon.

MEANWHILE, THE factory still is busy making some of the medicines considered tried-and-true after hundreds of years of use for everything from heart disease to keeping youthful vigor.

The difference is that it is working to transform the doses from "big, bitter and ugly" to "small, sweet and attractive," said Quan Hua, one of the women among the plant's 984 workers.

Chinese medicine is made of things like antelope horns and herbs that used to be boiled into tea, both troublesome and unattractive. It took a big cup of tea to have much effect, Miss Quan told a recent group of visitors.

Now the factory squeezes doses into tablets, small bottles or vials for injections. Its white-gowned workers operate in glassed-in rooms where the air has been purified, or with big vats dotted with modern-day valves and meters.

The plant's laboratory tests new medicines and tries to figure out why old ones work.

Feng said one of the plant's medicines can attack the virus that causes hepatitis, but "we have not succeeded in extracting the single element that attacks it. If we succeed, it would be a significant advance."

White mice in the laboratory were being injected with herbal medicine to test its effect in increasing the blood's white cell count.

EXPERIMENTS WITH the powder to stop bleeding were shown in a film. In one test, the powder quickly stanched a spurt of blood from the amputation of a dog's leg. In another, it was sprinkled on a human liver during surgery to stop bleeding.

Feng said the plant had been working on the powder since 1978.

Then there are the "Ching Chwun Hwei Fu Pyan," or "Recover Youth Tablets," described as the product of scientific research based on a secret prescription of the Yung Le Imperial Hospital in the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644).

That secret, Feng said, is one reason the tablets cannot be sold in the United States. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration wants to see the formula first, he said, "but we cannot make it public."

In China, 80 tablets sell for 8.80 yuan ($4.90), Feng said, and in Hong Kong the price jumps to 70 Hong Kong dollars ($12.30).

The medicine is supposed to build energy, strengthen bones and muscles and improve mental capacity.

Some other products include "donkey hide glue," a blood tonic; "some pear ointment," a cough medicine, and a kind of pill to fight dizziness, fatigue, insomnia and amnesia.

One that has been approved for sale in the United States is "Two Treasures," a mixture of ginseng and royal jelly — to make it taste better — intended as a tonic to strengthen resistance to illness. In China, 10 small vials sell for 5.13 yuan ($2.85).

Feng said the company, which makes 80 different products, including 20 for export, mostly in Asia, had total sales of 30 million yuan ($16.7 million) last year.

Students space out in contest

GLASSBORO, N.J. (AP) — Student teams posing as space travelers from the planet OM or early American Indians descended here late last week to put their brains to the test.

The Third Annual Olympics of the Mind attracted more than 2,000 spectators who came to watch elementary and high school students grapple with way-out problems dreamed up by two professors.

Teams from Pennsylvania, New York, Oklahoma, New Jersey, Ohio and Arkansas placed first in various divisions in five categories: Earthquake Structure, the Cruppets, Strike it Rich, Omonauts and Monsters.

The student teams had won local and state competitions before advancing to the finals here, where they struggled to solve long-term problems distributed last fall, as well as problems handed out at the last minute Friday.

"Your team is from the planet OM," read the instructions for one long-term problem. "The five members of your team have been selected as the first space explorers from OM. Therefore they are OMonauts. Your mission is to collect samples from the planet Earth, which can be taken back to OM for analysis."

The task was to design and build a vehicle that could pick up objects without the use of hand-held devices. The vehicle could be powered only by a 12-volt car battery.

"It can pick up up to 10 pounds of any type of material," said Ludington, Mich., high school student David Hartung, 17, of his team's earth module, which resembled a miniature antique car with only three wheels.

"It has a syringe to pick up water, a hook to pick up the balloon and two dustpans to pick up everything else," Hartung said.

The thinking power challenge was the brainchild of Drs. Sam Micklus and Theodore Gourly.

"Ted came to me and said, 'I'll get the students, you think up some problems,'" said Micklus, a design and technology professor at Glassboro State College, the site of Friday's contest.

It was planned as a one-time event, Micklus said, "but the craze spread."

Lipper Foundation of New York heard about the competition and sent a $200,000 grant to what is now known as Creative Competitions Inc.

"I don't know how they found out; a letter just came one day in the mail," Micklus said.

Since the competitors were also judged on style, they showed up in bright costumes and with skits planned to accompany the presentation of their solutions.

Fifth-graders from Canaan, N.H., dressed up as Indians and put on a brief skit called "Sacrifice to the Gods" to accompany their David-sized structure that supports Goliath-sized weights.

In the center of their stage were hundreds of pounds of weights on 8-inch-high structures made of five-eighths of an ounce of balsa wood. The wood-and-paste structure withstood 370 pounds before crumbling.

Attack on mayor, wife called possible revenge

LAPORTE, Ind. (AP) — An intruder who critically wounded Mayor Aloysius J. Rumely and killed his wife in a shooting at their home may have been seeking revenge, the Indianapolis Star reported today.

Police refused, however, to comment offically on a possible motive in the predawn shootings Monday, but posted a guard outside Rumely's hospital room while security forces screened visitors.

Aloysius Rumely

Frances Rumely

"In order to preserve the integrity of this investigation, no other details are being disclosed at this time," said Police Chief Larry Miller.

Rumely, a 71-year-old Republican serving his first term as mayor, underwent four hours of surgery at LaPorte Hospital to remove bullets from his left forearm, left thigh and abdomen. He was listed in critical condition.

Rumely was injured and his wife, Frances, 69, was killed after someone pried open a dining room window in the rear of their two-story home.

An official involved in the investigation, who asked not to be identified, said the shooting may have been a revenge killing, the Star reported.

"I doubt very seriously that it was intrusion-robbery. There was nothing taken," the official said.

He said the shooting was "probably related to some local problems" and said police were working on the theory that "someone had an ax to grind," the Star reported.

The Rumelys' oldest daughter, Martha Scileppi of Chicago, said the intruder climbed a staircase and made his way into her parents' bedroom around 1 a.m. Mrs. Scileppi, who was not in the house at the time of the incident, said her father reported being awakened by the sound of two shots that killed her mother instantly.

She said Rumely struggled with the intruder, who shot him and fled. Mrs. Scileppi said her father was able to call police but could describe the killer only as a "figure in dark clothing."

Friends and relatives said Rumely had not received any threats.

"None of us can think of any motive anyone would have for doing this," said another daughter, Marjorie R. Fitzgerald of Louisville, Ky.

Other officials and residents of this 25,000-resident community, 60 miles east of Chicago, reacted with shock to the shootings.

"I don't understand why any one would do this," said the police chief, a close friend of Rumely. "I could understand if it was someone like a policeman who has to make arrests all the time and makes a lot of enemies along the way."

Republican City Councilman Alan Danielson said, "I was just absolutely shocked and so saddened. I just can't believe that it happened here."

Social security situation not improving

WASHINGTON (AP) — The woes afflicting the Social Security system stem from the same economic squeeze — recession and inflation — that has prompted long lines at unemployment offices and padlocks on factory gates.

Faced with paying out an expected $569 billion in retirement, disability and survivors' benefits over the next three years, or more than $700 billion if Medicare payments are included, the Social Security system is having trouble raising the cash to cover its obligations.

Social Security Commissioner John A. Svahn says that every minute, the system pays out $17,000 more than it takes in. That is $24 million a day in red ink.

Svahn quips ruefully that Social Security "is a bipartisan issue — neither party wants anything to do with it."

BUT DO SOMETHING they must, for by mid-1983 — if nothing is done — the old-age fund will run short of the cash needed to pay benefits on time.

The politicians say Congress will never allow that to happen. But even if that calamity did occur, it would not mean the total collapse of Social Security. Instead, the result simply would be that the government would mail retirement checks a few days late the first month and progressively later each month.

Social Security operates on a pay-as-you-go basis, with benefits paid from the payroll tax receipts that flow in each month. The trust funds provide a cushion to ensure there is enough in the till to pay each month's benefits.

That cushion, which stood at a full year's worth of benefits in 1970, has steadily eroded and now amounts to only about two months of benefits.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, the managing trustee of the system, told a group of bankers on May 19 that "unless something is done before July of 1983, they will be broke and we will not be sending out checks from that (Treasury) building across the street."

Said Regan: "This is not a scare tactic, this is a fact."

Last year, White House budget director David Stockman warned Congress that unless it acted quickly to shore up Social Security, "the most devastating bankruptcy in history will occur on or about Nov. 3, 1982."

Congress postponed that day of reckoning by allowing the old-age fund to borrow from the fatter disability and Medicare fund reserves. The legislators also made minor cuts in the program, notably in college student and minimum benefits, to save more than $20 billion through 1986.

Congress could buy another year, postponing the crisis until mid-1984, merely by extending the system's authority to borrow back and forth among its three trust funds, according to need.

But eventually, it will have to undertake more fundamental reforms to generate new revenues or cut more benefits.

TO KEEP THE RETIREMENT fund solvent and benefit checks going out as scheduled on the third of each month, the system needs roughly $34 billion — either in new revenues or reduced expenditures — for fiscal 1984 and 1985, according to a House Budget Committee analyst who asked not to be identified.

When President Carter signed a Social Security rescue bill in 1977 that sharply raised the payroll tax and trimmed future benefit levels, he boasted that the legislation would keep the fund solvent until 2030.

At that time, the trust fund faces another, more serious dilemma when the generation of the post-World War II baby boom becomes senior citizens.

The stagnant economic conditions that have prevailed since 1977 quickly derailed the Social Security recovery that Carter envisioned. The system could have weathered the steep inflation in recent years if workers' wages had risen faster than prices.

But the growth of wages, and consequently payroll tax receipts, have lagged behind inflation, while Social Security benefits have risen inexorably each July in step with the Consumer Price Index.

The Senate Budget Committee's controversial proposal for $40 billion in "solvency" savings for Social Security, which Senate Republicans eventually dumped from their budget blueprint, was intended to assure the trust funds a minimum reserve of 18 percent of annual benefit payments, or two months' worth.

Without a cushion of at least 9 percent, the experts say, Social Security will encounter unprecedented difficulties in paying benefits on time.

Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., chairman of the Senate Finance subcommittee on Social Security, says that even at 18 percent the reserves "are so razor-thin that even marginally higher unemployment rates or marginally higher inflation rates...could absorb most of the $40 billion in savings."

During the brief but bitter political bloodletting that ensued when President Reagan embraced that Senate committee's savings figure, Democrats charged the $40 billion in unspecified savings would mean an average $1,100 reduction in benefits for each of Social Security's 36 million recipients.

Six anti-nuclear protesters arrested in South Carolina

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Six nuclear-arms protesters were in jail this morning after intentionally trespassing at the headquarters of the Savannah River Plant, where plutonium is made for atomic weapons.

Members of a group called the Natural Guard said they demonstrated Monday to protest the production of nuclear weapons materials at the plant.

The Department of Energy facility sprawling along the South Carolina-Georgia border is the nation's sole producer of plutonium for nuclear weapons.

The protesters were in the Richland County jail in Columbia early today with bonds ranging from $3,000 to $25,000.

Natural Guard members said Monday they were expressing their constitutional rights to freedom of speech and assembly because the group was denied the use of the front lawn of the plant headquarters for a rally Sunday.

The group challenged plant officials' refusal to allow the rally on the lawn by filing a lawsuit. Last week, a federal judge rejected the suit, saying the protest would constitute a threat to national security.

Four Natural Guard members entered the grounds at 2:30 p.m. Monday and were arrested about 10 minutes later by plant patrolmen, according to Jim Gaver, a spokesman for the facility.

Gaver said the four marched to the plant's headquarters, chanted anti-nuclear slogans, planted their group's flag, and sat down on the building's front lawn, and were arrested for criminal tresspass.

Gaver said two more members of the Natural Guard marched to the administration building about 2:45 p.m. and were also arrested for criminal tresspass.

Helicopter wreckage investigated

FAIRFIELD, Texas (AP) — Investigators examined the charred wreckage of a helicopter that crashed near this Central Texas town and exploded on impact, killing two men.

Burned beyond recognition were Clinton Rose, 25, of London, and Harvard Holen, 24, of Oslo, Norway, according to David Wells of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Officials decide to allow KKK to march in Gulf coast town

SEABROOK, Texas (AP) — Authorities have decided to let the Ku Klux Klan parade through this coastal community June 12 to honor Billy Joe Aplin, an American fisherman killed in 1979 by a Vietnamese refugee.

Police Chief Bill Kerber denied a parade permit last week, saying the proposed route passed by Vietnamese businesses and homes and might violate a federal court injunction.

On Monday, Kerber approved the "memorial march" after Klansmen changed the parade route.

"It makes no difference to us where we march in Seabrook, just as long as we march in Seabrook," said KKK Imperial Wizzard James Stanfield.

Aplin, a Seadrift, Texas, shrimper, was killed Aug. 4, 1979. Sau Van Nguyen, a Vietnamese refugee who said he killed Aplin in self defense, was charged with murder but later acquitted.

The slaying heated up a dispute between Vietnamese and American shrimpers working on the Texas Gulf Coast.

GRADUATES LOVE WATERFORD

Over 200 years ago, a bride & her love exchanged pieces of Waterford crystal. She gave him a brandy glass. He gave her a pitcher. They collected Waterford happily ever after.
Now each piece of Waterford, as in the old days, is still blown, cut & made by hand, with heart. And now & then, lovers not only exchange vows, but pieces of Waterford.

Cautious optimism surrounds man's Soviet emigration

CHICAGO (AP) — Lois Becker Frolov says she'll wait until she sees "the whites of his eyes" before she permits herself joy at the news of her husband's imminent release from the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Frolov, who lost 17 pounds from her 5-foot-1½-inch frame while joining her husband and six other Soviet citizens in a hunger strike, learned Monday that Andrei Frolov will be allowed an exit visa.

Frolov, 51, and the others began a fast May 10 for the right to join their spouses in the West. Frolov, in recent years a free-lance writer and photographer, had not been permitted to work since applying about a year ago for an exit visa.

But on Monday, Frolov said in an interview in Moscow that he gave the good news to his wife in a telephone conversation hours after Soviet emigration officials told him they would grant his application to leave the country.

"She said she couldn't believe it," said Frolov, a member of the unofficial "Divided Families Group." Soviet authorities told him he would receive a passport and visa by the end of the week, Frolov said.

"We will continue our fast until Friday," he said, predicting that he would be able to leave the Soviet Union in a week or two.

Better get your gun in Kennesaw

KENNESAW, Ga. (AP) — Heads of household in this northwest Atlanta suburb are now breaking the law if they don't own a gun and ammunition.

The Kennesaw City Council passed the gun ownership law March 15, but its effective date was delayed twice, until today, while gun safety classes were organized.

The ordinance, part of the city's civil defense code, exempts only those heads of households who are convicted felons, physically disabled, or conscientiously opposed to the use of guns.

The council did not include a specific penalty for violators, although Kennesaw has a general law which provides that any violation of the city code is punishable by a $200 fine and a 60-day jail sentence.

Police Chief Robert Ruble has said there will be no door-to-door enforcement of the law.

The new ordinance and widespread publicity about it have provided new business for Kennesaw souvenir shops that once dealt primarily in mementos from an 1864 Civil War battle where Confederate troops dealt Union Gen. William T. Sherman a temporary setback at the battle of Kennesaw Mountain.

For $2, Dent "Wildman" Myers will provide customers of his "Wildman's Civil War Surplus" a 1982 certificate of "honorary citizenship" in Kennesaw. The proceeds go to city-organized gun education classes.

Myers said most of his orders for the certificates have come through the mail, some from as far away as England.

The ordinance "has been portrayed as fascist or racist, but it's neither," Myers said. "It's biased, though, biased against the criminal."

Local singer Jimmy Moore has joined the crusade with a record called "Kennesaw Get Your Guns." The song urges residents to "keep the outlaws out of town."

Down the street from Wildman's is Tony Green's "Southern Pawn and Jewelry," a gun shop. On the door, a photograph of an elderly woman holding a shotgun bears the caption: "Some people don't take naturally to gun control."

Tacked to the wall of Green's shop are letters from around the country, ordering souvenirs and praising the new law.

Texas 'checking' drunks on beaches

SURFSIDE, Texas (AP) — Authorities in three coastal communities, trying to keep intoxicated beachgoers off the road, say they put up weekend traffic checkpoints.

Angleton, Richwood Village and Clute police departments worked together to set up road checks along Texas Highway 288. Nearly 100 people have been arrested the past two weekends, police said.

Police Lt. John Carter said Angleton police issued more than 100 traffic citations Sunday, most for failing to present a driver's license or proof of liability insurance.

Clute Police also conducted checks Sunday evening, and Sgt. M.E. Norman said only one person was arrested for public intoxication.

"A couple of times we just told the driver to let someone else in the car who was sober get behind the wheel. All we want to do is make sure there are no drunks driving on the roads," Norman said.

"Most of the people we stopped were thanking us for helping keep the drunks off the road," Norman said. "About the only people complaining to us are the people receiving traffic tickets."

Papal challenge great

There was something of Solomon in Pope John Paul's decision to preserve his long-planned trip to Great Britain by also agreeing to visit Argentina later in June. But, unless the pontiff brings all of his considerable pastoral and diplomatic skill to bear on the profound problems posed by both trips, he may yet end up holding half a baby.

Even before war broke out in the Falkland Islands, John Paul's visit to Britain — the first ever by a reigning Pope — was bound to be a delicate affair. For most of the 448 years since King Henry VIII separated the Anglican Church from Rome because the Vatican refused to sanction his divorce from Catherine of Aragon, relations between the denominations have been strained. During the past 16 years, however, clerics and lay members of both churches have taken a remarkable series of steps not only toward good relations but also toward some form of genuine unity.

Thus, while John Paul has stressed that his is primarily a pastoral visit to the 4 million Roman Catholics in England, Scotland and Wales, most attention is likely to focus on the trip's ecumenical aspect. The pope paid a courtesy call on Queen Elizabeth, the Church of England's "Supreme Governor and Defender of the Faith" (the latter title, by the way, was conferred on Henry VIII by the same pope who later excommunicated him). Later, the pontiff went to Canterbury Cathedral, where he prayed with Archbishop Robert Runcie, spiritual head of the Anglican Communion and 102nd successor of St. Augustine, who, in 597, was dispatched by Pope Gregory the Great to impose Roman discipline on the Britons' church.

Such gestures of pontifical fellowship and flexibility were symbols of hope to a world increasingly tormented by sectarian division. How to make such gestures without compromising his own deeply felt fidelity to Catholicism's ancient norms and doctrines was the challenge of John Paul's visit to Britain. And he did that well.

But no matter how the pope conducted himself in Britain, his good efforts will be undone if his Argentine trip becomes a propaganda tool of that country's military junta. The way to prevent that is to eschew generalities and to speak plainly and directly concerning Argentina's responsibility for the Falklands crisis.

Because of the fighting in the South Atlantic, the pontiff canceled his scheduled meeting with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. In Argentina, however, he will be meeting with Gen. Leopoldo F. Galtieri, president of the junta.

As head of Argentina's state religion, the pope should point out that, according to Catholic tradition, only "just" wars can in good conscience be supported, and that wars of aggression are inherently "unjust."

Anything less can only undercut John Paul's sincere commitment to peace. For, as a native of Poland, he must know all too well that where aggression goes unopposed, there is neither justice nor peace.

Competition with Japan

General Motors is prepared to increase its investment in a Japanese auto maker, Isuzu, and begin importing 200,000 subcompact cars made in Japan in 1984.

General Motors may discontinue production of its own subcompact, the Chevette. Management feels it is losing $700 to $1,000 per car because the cost of production is greater than the low selling price necessary in order to compete with cars imported from Japan.

A switch from Chevettes to Isuzus in the showrooms of GM dealers across the country would cost a lot of jobs in GM assembly plants.

There is nothing wrong with the Chevette and nothing wrong with the American auto worker or engineer. But something is wrong when the United States does not require fairness in trade with Japan.

Here are some pertinent figures from a recent speech by Lee Iacocca, the Chrysler executive.

For every Japanese car sold in this country, we lose $1,750 in federal, state and local taxes, much of it because Japan rebates a commodities tax to the exporters of Japanese cars.

An American car sells for double the price in Japan that it sells for in New York City, thanks to Japanese trade requirements. But a Japanese car sells for less in New York than it does in Tokyo, because of the Japanese tax rebate.

On a U.S.-built car selling for $8,000, more than $850 goes for national defense, including the defense of Japan. On a comparable Japanese car, only $80 goes for defense.

That is not fair. And we are foolish if we allow it to continue.

Biting the dust

The lights have dimmed for the last time on the grubby, windowless upstairs detective squad room of the 12th Precinct. Inspector Luger's boorishness, Wojehowicz's lumbering humanity, Harris' cultivated snobbery, Dietrich's encyclopedic discourses and Capt. Miller's tolerant common sense have been consigned to the purgatory of reruns. Barney Miller is gone; television, and American popular culture, are the poorer for it.

Future generations may wonder what was so special about a half-hour 1970s TV series about a group of eccentric New York detectives who never committed a single act of violence, just as today's young people may puzzle over what their elders found so compelling about Dragnet or The Honeymooners. Perhaps the special quality of Barney Miller — and a handful of other television series also headed for oblivion — is how it managed to be so rooted in its time while conveying essential human values common to all times — intelligence, good taste (and sometimes, quite deliberately, bad taste), sensitivity to human feelings and, most important, a sense of humor at a time when all those qualities were in short supply, certainly elsewhere in television and to a lamentable extent in American society at large.

Ironically, Barney Miller, the early M.A.S.H. and perhaps one or two other series of quality graced the tube at a time when the overall content of television generally was excoriated by viewers of all tastes. So, although the 1970s may not have been television's Golden Age, they still produced a few specimens of first-class entertainment worth savoring and remembering. Let's hope the same can be said when the best shows of the '80s — whatever they may be — are laid to rest.

THE BIBLE
CAN YOU QUOTE IT?

By ELIZABETH ROSS WIERSEMA

1. "Man proposes, but God disposes." Thomas A. Kempis. Which of the apostles bore witness to Paul's teachings? 2 Peter 1:1, 3:15
2. Who did Paul go to visit on his last trip to Jerusalem? Acts 21:18
3. In what city did the angel Gabriel visit Mary? Luke 1:26
4. The leaf of what tree brought hope to Noah? Genesis 8:11
5. What apostle made a public confession of his sins and abusiveness? Acts 22

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

FBI ran out of control in Abscam probe

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — I have occasionally yielded to the temptation to make sport of the tribulations of the FBI, whose agents have tripped over their nightsticks in the ABSCAM investigation. The FBI, apparently, has taken my jibes in ill humor.

At the same time, I confess to a hardening on my part as I have chronicled the FBI's Ahab-like pursuit of its ABSCAM adversaries. One witness against the FBI, Marie Weinberg, was driven to suicide.

My first ABSCAM reports applauded the FBI undercovermen and scathed the members of Congress who took their bribes. I was out in front of the press posse, publishing excerpts from the ABSCAM transcripts while they were still under court seal.

But the deeper I pried into the scandal, the less heroic the G-men appeared. They kept a convicted swindler, Mel Weinberg, out of prison to help them create the ABSCAM crimes. He boasted that he joined the ABSCAM operation so he "could make some big money."

He did. His FBI supervisor, Anthony Amoroso, raised Weinberg's pay from $1,000 to $3,000 per month, plus expenses and bonuses. Some of the bonuses were substantial. Amoroso argued that the FBI had to maintain Weinberg's living habits or he would "try and con other people on the side." Despite the extra pay incentive, in fact, Weinberg swindled boodle for himself from some of the ABSCAM victims.

Yet the FBI tried to pass off Weinberg as a lovable, Brooklynesque rogue. The truth is that he's a venal, vicious criminal.

My associates Indy Badhwar and Jack Mitchell pieced together evidence that FBI agents had accepted favors and made purchases from Weinberg. They also covered up for him when he lied under oath about the expensive gifts he had extorted from ABSCAM victims.

This damaging evidence was produced by Weinberg's wife Marie who agreed to testify in court. But Weinberg hounded her — and FBI agents joined in the harassment — until she committed suicide.

About this time I became aware that my office had become the object of certain discomforting attentions. I began hearing from people who reported that Weinberg was threatening to break Badhwar's legs, that ABSCAM prosecutor Thomas Puccio was turning his investigators loose on me, that one of his newspaper connections was preparing a smear story to discredit me.

Public apathy is the bane of democracy; repetition is its cure. So I hammered away unremittingly at the FBI's misconduct. Under the cannonading, the ABSCAM case began to crumble.

My ABSCAM reports were presented on the Senate floor by Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who demanded and got a full Senate investigation. The investigation has been entrusted to Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md., who has hired former Watergate sleuth James Neal to run it. Neal is a drawling, cigar-chomping Nashville lawyer who won't be easily buffaloed by the FBI.

The ABSCAM prosecutors, meanwhile, had been winning most of their court battles — thanks to a compliant federal judge named George Pratt. They got Pratt as the ABSCAM judge after some adroit maneuvering in the backrooms of the federal judiciary. Prosecutor Puccio boasted happily that he could get Pratt "to indict a ham sandwich."

But now another federal judge, William Bryant, has moved in on the ABSCAM scandal. In a no-nonsense ruling, he threw out the ABSCAM cases before him.

"The function of law enforcement," ruled Bryant, "is to prevent crime and catch criminals. Conversely, law enforcement exceeds its bounds when it manufactures crime and creates criminals."

But the first congressman who had the courage to stand up against the tidal wave of ABSCAM publicity was Rep. Donald Edwards, D-Calif., a former FBI agent who was outraged over the FBI's abuses.

He held a series of hearings, which confirmed my stories about innocent businessmen who had been ruined by ABSCAM because they trusted their government.

Next, Edwards will take testimony from two former assistant ABSCAM prosecutors, Edward Plaza and Robert Weir, who are expected to confirm what they told their superiors at the Justice Department two years ago.

They warned that Weinberg was out of control, that he had received illicit gifts and that the prosecutors had been given false information about ABSCAM targets.

Plaza and Weir are also expected to dispute FBI Director William Webster's testimony that the ABSCAM operation was carefully monitored. Plaza complained a year ago that many of Weinberg's flimflam pitches to the unsuspecting ABSCAM pigeons had gone unrecorded.

Weir is expected to tell the congressman that FBI agents had proceeded against ABSCAM targets without reasonable suspicion, that legitimate businessmen were being sucked into the sting operation, that pressure was being put on middlemen to drag big-name politicians into the net.

A corrupt congressman, of course, is a threat to honest government. But the greater menace is a law enforcement agency that gets out of control and runs roughshod over people.

INSIDE REPORT:

Nicaraguans suffer, lack individual liberty

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — The Sandinista government of Nicaragua, a communist regime in everything but name, is tightening the screws internally and worrying about insurgency in the countryside, while Uncle Sam stands aside as an undecided observer.

Hard-liners have eclipsed soft-liners in ruling this unhappy country, as shown by recent land confiscations and restrictions on private business. At the same time, trouble on the Honduran border is no longer caused by mere bands of armed men but well-organized guerrilla units.

This points to Nicaragua as the focus of a possible armed showdown for the fate of all Central America, with the U.S. curiously ambivalent to date. Anti-communists in neighboring countries can never feel secure while Marxist-Leninist revolutionaries rule in Managua. Yet, there is no decisive posture in Washington, whose diplomats show ineffectual annoyance without a unified Nicaraguan strategy.

That indecisiveness is reflected by the refusal of Anthony C. Quainton, the bright young U.S. ambassador here, to label this a communist regime. His posture is a hangover of Carter administration policy that helped overthrow dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979 and then encouraged supposedly democratic elements in the Sandinista revolution through $131 million in aid (now almost entirely suspended).

There is no doubt among liberal foes of Somoza about what the Sandinistas are. "This is a police state and a communist state," one business executive told us. Another company manager said: "We thought there never could be anything worse than Somoza. We were wrong. The communists are incomparably worse."

Nothing close to those comments can be made publicly in Nicaragua today. If the secret police knew such remarks were made to foreign journalists, the offenders would be summarily arrested. Describing their personal experiences, such critics told us of being pulled from bed at 2 a.m. and put in solitary confinement for months without charge or trial.

Suppression of individual liberty has been unchallenged within the Sandinista camp from the start, but economic debate persisted until recently between "softs" trying to stimulate a productive private sector and "hards" committed to doctrinaire communism. Within the last month, the "hards" scored their inevitable triumph under the leadership of Commandante Henry Ruiz, the dogmatic minister of planning.

His victory is demonstrated by escalating confiscations of Nicaragua's most productive farmlands and the scrapping through massive taxation of new incentives, however anemic, for the private sector. Ruiz' principal antagonist — Alfredo Cesar, Stanford-educated young president of the central bank — signaled surrender by going into exile on his recent honeymoon trip to Panama.

With Cesar's departure, the door opened for unrestrained printing of paper money and strangulation of commerce. The dead hand of "scientific socialism" is on Managua, where normal Latin American vitality is replaced by gray stagnation.

No matter how unpopular the regime becomes, nobody here believes the commandantes will flee as Samoza did three years ago. Nor will the Soviet-supplied Nicaraguan army, Central America's largest at 25,000 regulars, be so easy to rout as Somoza's national guard. But rising concern of the regime is shown by the recent conference on the Honduran border between Honduran and Nicaraguan officials.

The Sandinistas were not their usual arrogant selves, pleading for control of the Nicaraguan guerrillas operating from base camps in Honduras. By Sandinista admission, they are now crossing the borders by the hundreds; they return with fresh recruits each time. Guerrilla leaders in Honduras told us they command 1,000 disciplined men, but total insurgents — including Miskito indians — surely exceed that.

The Honduras-based guerrillas are wary of the charismatic Eden Pastora, the disaffected "Commandante Zero" who still idolizes Che Guevara. But anti-Sandinistas in Managua in touch with the guerrillas believe Pastura is a sincere, if confused, patriot whose popularity must be utilized.

These clandestine opposition leaders see formerly anti-Somoza and pro-Somoza forces coalescing into armed opposition that could generate a Central American war with immense consequences for the hemisphere. They wonder whether Washington is prepared to help — doubt spurred by what they consider Ambassador Quainton's unwillingness to confront the Sandinistas since his arrival here three months ago. "I would say your diplomacy is very meek," one clandestine leader told us.

Without a robust U.S. role, the Sandinista regime may survive incompetence and unpopularity. The coming year may seal the fate of Nicaragua and the future security of its neighbors. "If nothing happens in the next year," one young businessman told us, "I will leave. I only hope it is not too late for me by then." Unlike the American diplomats, he perceives that the first communist foothold on the Latin American mainland could become welded in iron.

CHARLEY REESE

Economic bubble about to burst

I believe we shall have a depression whether anyone chooses to call it that or not. Collectively, through political action, we have messed up the economy to a fare-thee-well and nobody with the power to make the correct decisions seems inclined to make them.

Charley Reese

It's simple to understand if you drop the illusion that money is wealth. Money is a medium of exchange. Wealth consists of goods and services and human knowledge. The government can print money; only private individuals can create wealth by applying labor and knowledge to natural resources.

If you follow the advice of Winnie-the-Pooh and just keep that concept in your head, you will easily see why we are in trouble.

The government is powerless to create wealth. It can create unlimited amounts of currency but as the amount of currency created exceeds the amount of true wealth in existence, the value or purchasing power of the currency declines.

It doesn't matter whether we have a Republican or a Democrat or a liberal or conservative in the White House. The mess would remain the same.

The only way to increase the common store of goods and services is for those who produce it to re-invest a portion of their earned wealth into more production. This is not happening for two reasons.

One is that government at all levels is taking about 45 cents out of every dollar earned. This 45 cents is only re-distributed and consumed. It is not invested in new production. In economic terms, a defense plant represents merely a redistribution of the wealth scheme no different from Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

Every dollar paid to a defense contractor is a dollar the government took from somebody else. The government takes dollars from steelworkers in Pittsburgh and transfers them to missile workers in California but there has been no net gain to the store of real wealth except the steelworker's original production. The steelworker earned the dollars; the government merely redistributed them for consumption.

Furthermore, the missile represents a non-productive use of labor and resources. Either it will just sit in a silo or it will destroy itself. In neither instance is it used to increase the store of wealth.

The second reason our store of wealth — sometimes called standard of living — is declining is that too many people who have accumulated surplus wealth are investing it in debt paper rather than in business or agriculture.

Investing in debt paper is non-productive use of wealth. These people are merely subsidizing past consumption (usually by government). Money put into government bonds and treasury bills does no contribute a penny to expanding economy.

Since World War II, we have been playing this crazy redistribution game. We take wealth earned by labor, pass it through several hands, and count it as new wealth each time somebody spends it. We were able to maintain this illusion for awhile because the real store of true wealth was increasing. Now, however, we have begun to eat our seed corn and consume our savings and the real store of wealth is shrinking.

In my opinion, the bubble is about to burst. Look at the number of people unemployed, the declining rate of investment, the staggering debt carried by those still working, the declining purchasing power of the currency, and you get a clearer picture.

In the meantime, the Republicans and Democrats are like two Phillistines in the temple arguing over whose responsibility it was to give Samson a haircut.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 1, the 152nd day of 1982. There are 213 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 1, 1973, Greece's Premier George Papadopoulos abolished the Greek monarchy.

On this date:

In 1733, St. Croix in the West Indies came under Danish control.

In 1944, the siesta was officially abolished in Mexico.

In 1967, the U.S. aircraft carrier Intrepid passed through the Suez Canal shadowed by two Egyptian submarines during a tense situation between Egypt and Israel.

In 1980, about 300 Cuban refugees rioted at the Fort Chaffee Refugee Relocation Center in Arkansas, wounding at least 15 law enforcement officials.

Ten years ago: President Nixon returned from a visit to Moscow saying his talks had formed the basis of a new Soviet-American relationship.

Pallbearers were to be Eldon F. Herndon, C. Porter Bristol, R.L. Dick Hughston, Raymond Monkress, John Reid and Earl Chapman.

Denver teacher detained as spy by Chinese police

PEKING (AP) — An American teacher from Denver was handcuffed after a struggle and detained by Chinese police for investigation of alleged theft of state secrets, U.S. Embassy and foreign sources said today.

The sources quoted Chinese police as accusing Lisa Wichser, 28, of being a spy for the United States Central Intelligence Agency.

They said Miss Wichser was picked up Friday night at the Friendship Hotel where she lives. She resisted, was handcuffed, and was taken to an undisclosed location in the Peking area.

Residents of the building said police told hotel attendants that Miss Wichser had been under surveillance for two months, that she was a spy, and that she had worked for the CIA.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry, in a brief statement today, said she had "violated Chinese laws by engaging in activities incompatible with her status." A spokesman would not specify which of her activities were considered illegal.

An embassy statement said her detention — it did not use the term arrest — "relates to the theft of state secrets. We are aware that this has a broader interpretation in Chinese society than it would have in our own."

In China, virtually any information which is not officially published or announced can be considered a state secret. A Chinese editor was recently sentenced to five years for telling a foreign journalist the time, place and agenda of a meeting of the Communist Party's Central Committee.

Miss Wichser is the first American detained in China since the United States and China established diplomatic relations in 1979.

Miss Wichser is fluent in Chinese, is doing research in agricultural economics in China for her doctorate, and has been teaching English for about two years at the Foreign Languages Institute, sources in the small community of foreign experts said.

In Denver, E. Thomas Rowe, associate dean of the Graduate School of International Studies at the University of Denver said Miss Wichser was "quiet and nice. She would be the most improbable person to be involved in a thing like this. She is one of our best students."

Kirkpatrick, Reagan discuss Falklands

WASHINGTON (AP) — United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, at odds with the Reagan administration policy in the Falkland Islands dispute, has had a meeting she requested with President Reagan.

The White House said Reagan met with Mrs. Kirkpatrick for about 40 minutes Monday at her request.

Deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said the meeting concerned "pending United Nations business, including the Falklands." He said he did not know whether reports of a dispute between Mrs. Kirkpatrick and Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. were discussed, or prompted the meeting.

Asked whether Mrs. Kirkpatrick would retain her job, Speakes said, "As far as I know there was no discussion about leaving the job."

New Jersey candidates both unlikely characters

By PATRICK BRESLIN

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The contest for the Republican nomination to the U.S. Senate from New Jersey features a former aide to Ronald Reagan who is well-versed in economic theory and a popular moderate congresswoman who is the model for a comic-strip character.

It's Jeffrey Bell vs. Millicent Fenwick in what undisputably is the state's most exciting race in the June 8 primary.

Bell, 38, is a lanky boyish-looking intellectual who can quote economic theories and the results of military studies during casual conversation.

Mrs. Fenwick, 72, is the charming, eloquent former model and Vogue editor whose pipe-smoking caricature is known nationwide as "Lacey Davenport" in the popular "Doonesbury" comic strip.

The winner faces one of nine lackluster Democratic candidates in the general election to replace convicted Abscam defendant Harrison A. Williams, who resigned in March after 24 years in the Senate.

Although Mrs. Fenwick is the acknowledged leader, Bell is counting on a final blitz of television commercials this week to stop her momentum.

Bell, who was Reagan's national political scout in 1974 and a campaign worker in 1976 and 1980, has warned that Mrs. Fenwick would become the president's leading Republican critic if elevated to the Senate.

Bell's television and radio commercials are critical of Mrs. Fenwick, including charges that she frequently voted against major weapon systems backed by the Reagan administration.

But Mrs. Fenwick has emphasized her support of Reagan's economic programs and "for a tough, lean national defense."

The heir to a family fortune, Mrs. Fenwick is part of the wealthy moderate Republican wing in New Jersey. She has a 20-year political history, including two elections to the state Assembly, two years as the state consumer affairs director and eight years in Congress.

She has been endorsed by 10 of the 21 county GOP chairman and by 44 of the party's 55 state legislators.

"I've never seen a member of the House of Representatives who has started a (statewide) campaign with such visibility," said John Deardourff, Mrs. Fenwick's media consultant. "She's as strong a candidate as our firm has ever worked with."

So far, this apparent popularity has not been seriously undercut by Bell's intense fact-filled campaign. Officials in both camps say their private polls indicate Mrs. Fenwick is well ahead.

"I think Mrs. Fenwick still has a significant lead, but I think we're getting some significant movement," Bell said recently.

"We think there's going to be a little slippage," Mrs. Fenwick's press secretary, John Fuchs responded. "It's only natural."

But Fuchs speculated that Bell's tough advertising campaign may backfire.

'His ads are so negative, and Mrs. Fenwick is so well-liked, that he's going to lose because of it," Fuchs said.

Bell's press secretary, Mac Carey, said it is "almost certain" Bell's television spending will total $600,000.

Fuchs said Mrs. Fenwick has budgeted $200,000 for television but may increase it.

Saboteurs claim substation explosion

AP Laserphoto

RCMP officers Monday tour the site near Qualicum Bay, B.C., where and oil treatment plant and four reactors blew up. The plant is located at a B.C. Hydro substation under construction on Vancouver Island.

NANAIMO, British Columbia (AP) — Saboteurs blew up at least $5 million worth of equipment at an electrical substation under construction in a remote area of Vancouver Island, company officials say.

A caller to Vancouver radio station CKNW claimed that an "underground" group opposed to B.C. Hydro's spraying of herbicides was responsible for Monday's bombings at the company's substation and for damage at another site a week ago.

B.C. Hydro sprays herbicide, with proper permits, to control weeds, said spokesman Ron Monk.

Some island residents had opposed the project on environmental and economic grounds when it was begun about 18 months ago, but the company hadn't encountered any recent opposition to the project before Monday's explosions, Monk said.

Saboteurs entered the site through a hole in the surrounding fence and placed explosive devices on four transformers used to cut high voltage current down for transmission on lower voltage lines. The blasts spread damage across several acres of the substation, destroying the units and an oil treatment plant used to filter transformer oil, said company spokesman Ron Monk.

Another piece of B.C. Hydro equipment was damaged on another island about a week ago and company officials suspected it had been struck by lightning, Monk said. The caller to CKNW claimed the "underground" group was responsible for that damage, too. An investigation is being launched into the earlier incident, he said.

Construction workers arriving for work Monday morning discovered the smoking blast scene. Monk said fires fueled by transformer oil still burned in several of the electrical units when the workers arrived about 8 a.m. The explosions were thought to have occurred at about 1:30 a.m., when the nearest residents, about two miles away, reported hearing a loud bang.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police bomb squad was being flown in to assist the local officials in their investigation.

The substation is part of the Cheekye-Dunsmuir transmission project to carry power along a 500-kilovolt line from the mainland to Vancouver Island. The project was scheduled for completion in 1983.

Other damage involved contractor's equipment, including a crane.

Bombs 'prelude to reception' set during Reagan's European visit

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Bombs ripped through three U.S. Army officers' clubs and the headquarters of a U.S. Army corps before dawn today in what a leftist terrorist group claimed was a "prelude" to President Reagan's visit next week.

No casualties were reported in the four blasts.

In a letter to the West German news agency DPA, the Revolutionary Cells claimed responsibility for the bombings, saying "we will not wait until Reagan comes."

"As a prelude to a hopefully loud, eventful and unforgettable reception, we attacked some of the nests of the U.S. military" in West Germany.

The Revolutionary Cells are an offshoot of the Red Army Faction, or Baader-Meinhof gang, responsible for terror attacks against U.S. and West German installations for more than a decade.

Recently, West German officials were quoted as saying the Revolutionary Cells now constituted more of a threat than the Red Army Faction, many of whose leaders had been jailed or slain by police.

A U.S. Army spokesman said the blasts occurred at clubs in Bamberg, Gelnhausen, and Hanau and at the V Corps headquarters in Frankfurt.

German and American officials placed damage overall at more than $130,000, most of it in the Frankfurt blast. Col. James Walton, corps spokesman, said the explosion "totally destroyed" a large central air conditioner and blew out several windows.

West German police said the explosion in Bamberg occurred shortly before midnight Monday, while the others took place about 1:30 a.m. today.

Reagan arrives in West Germany June 9 for a three-day visit including a summit of NATO heads of government in Bonn. He is scheduled to pay a brief visit June 11 to West Berlin, scene of numerous street clashes between police and rebellious youth in recent years.

Last September police battled thousands of young demonstrators during Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s visit. Demonstrations are planned during Reagan's visit and are expected to attract up to 200,000 people.

Gerhard Boeden, security chief for Bonn, was quoted Sunday by the newspaper Welt am Sonntag as saying Reagan was the "chief target" of terrorists and "therefore we must be armed for everything."

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt told foreign reporters in Bonn last week that the government was taking precautions as it would for any state visit. But he noted testily that the 1981 assassination attempt on Reagan "took place in the forecourt of a Washington hotel" despite strict security precautions.

Handbills and posters have been circulating in West Berlin and West German cities urging violent protests during Reagan's visit, and scores of peace and leftist groups plan demonstrations.

Last August, bombs badly damaged the U.S. Air Force's European headquarters at Ramstein, West Germany. Last September, terrorists fired a grenade at a car of the U.S. Army commander in Europe, Gen. Frederick Kroesen, and the general and his wife were slightly injured.

Iran, Iraq make disputing claims

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraq said today its bombers have disrupted operations at Iran's main oil shipping terminal at Kharg Island in the Persian Gulf, but Iran said raiding enemy jets were driven off without scoring any hits.

Both sides exchanged fresh charges of shelling civilian neighborhoods in major cities on the north end of the gulf, the major theater of the 20-month-old war between the two Moslem nations.

The combat reports came from official war communiques issued by each nation. No independent reporters were able to verify the reports.

Iran's official IRNA news agency disclosed that Iraqi missiles last Thursday had killed 11 soldiers praying in a mosque in the recently recaptured city of Khorramshahr.

The agency also said Iraqi long-ranged artillery had pounded Iran's oil refining city of Abadan, 12 miles south of Khorramshahr on the eastern shore of the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway and warned that Iran's patience was running thin.

"How long can Iran's soldiers of Islam tolerate the Iraqi? How long can they confine themselves to trying to stop these crimes from within Islamic lands only," the agency's commentary asked.

This was a new threat that Iranian forces would penetrate the Iraqi border at a time major Arab oil-producing nations of the gulf have appealed to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's regime to accept a cease-fire on the pre-war border.

Foreign ministers of Saudi Arabia and five other Arab states on the gulf's western coast issued the appeal at the end of a two-day conference in the Saudi capital of Riyadh Monday night.

Western diplomats, who declined to be named, said the six countries were prepared to pay $25 billion to Iran to help reconstruction of war-ravaged cities if the Tehran government agreed to a prompt cease-fire.

Iranian leaders have been demanding $50 billion in reparations, as well as the ouster of Iraq's President Saddam Hussein and his ruling Socialist Baath Party and the repatriation of 40,000 Iraqis who were expelled to Iran because of pro-Iranian sympathies.

Baker says Deng want to meet with Reagan

PEKING (AP) — Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping wants to meet President Reagan to discuss U.S. arms sales to Taiwan and other issues, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker said today.

The Tennessee Republican told reporters after meeting Deng, "It's clear he is concerned for the future of the relationship" between China and the United States.

Baker said Deng, the Communist Party's vice chairman and its most influential leader, asked him to convey to Reagan "his hope that one day they might meet to discuss the issues."

Best buy not always cheapest

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The lowest price tag doesn't always signal the best buy at the supermarket.

Nutritional value can be just as important as actual cost when you are trying to compare products.

The Human Nutrition Information Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture recently looked at prices for a variety of meats and meat alternatives to find out which ones provided the most protein at the lowest cost.

The results of the study may surprise you. Bologna, for example, is more expensive than hamburger when you compare the two in terms of the amount of protein you get for your money. Peanut butter is more expensive than chicken and chicken costs more than turkey.

The USDA based its report on prices of almost three dozen items in Washington, D.C., supermarkets in February 1982. The department researchers calculated how much of each item would be needed to provide 20 grams of protein; that's about one-third of the daily amount recommended for a 20-year-old man.

A table showing the relative amount of protein in different foods is included in the USDA report on price comparisons. You can get a copy by writing to USDA News Center, Room 404-A, Washington, D.C., 2050. Ask for report 381-82. There is no charge.

Here is a general guide as to how much of some popular foods you need to get 20 grams (about three-fourths of an ounce) of protein:

Three ounces — peanut butter, canned tuna and American process cheese.

Four ounces — dry beans, beef liver, lean ground beef and canned ham.

Five ounces — ready-to-cook turkey, whole ham with the bone in, frozen haddock filet, loin lamb chops and rib roast of beef with the bone in.

Six ounces — bologna, center-cut pork chops, frankfurters and chuck roast of beef with the bone in.

Seven or more ounces — whole, ready-to-cook chicken, enriched white bread and sliced bacon.

Now you're ready to compare prices. Suppose bologna costs 91 cents for an eight-ounce package and ground beef costs $1.80 a pound — the prices the USDA found in Washington. The two would seem to be about equal in cost, since the per-pound price of the bologna works out to $1.82.

You would need about six ounces of the bologna, however, to get 20 grams of protein. Six ounces costs almost 70 cents.

You would need only four ounces of ground beef to get the same amount of protein. That would cost you only 45 cents. The hamburger is cheaper.

In its study, the USDA found that enough turkey to provide 20 grams of protein would cost 25 cents; an equivalent amount of chicken would cost 29 cents and a comparable serving of peanut butter would cost 30 cents.

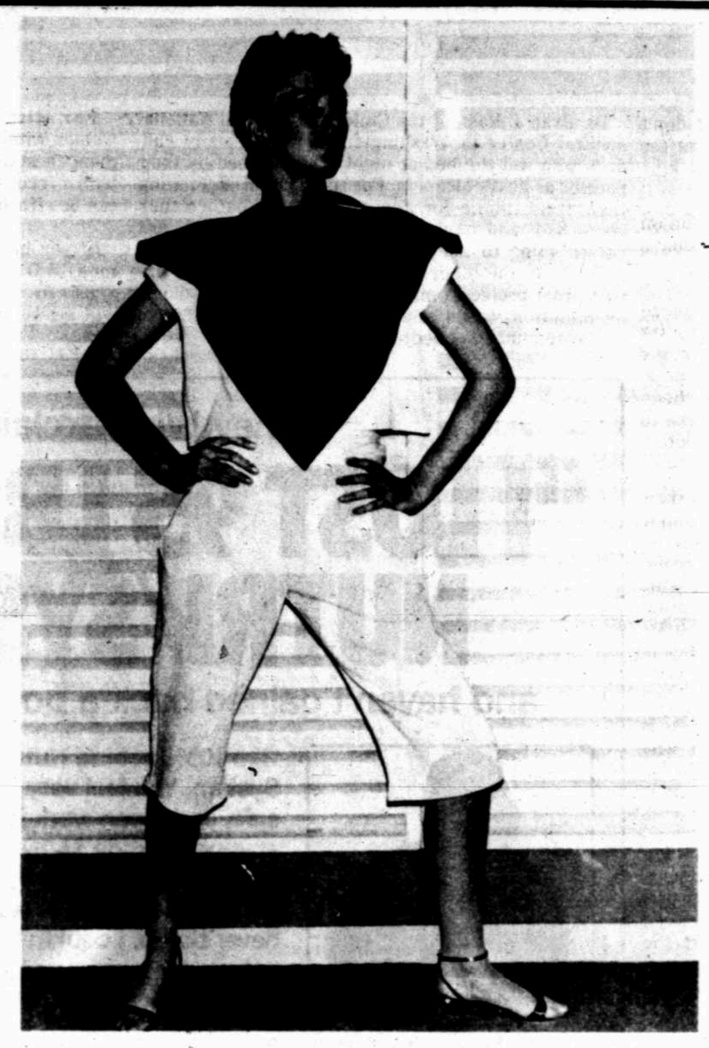
Comparing prices also can save you money when you're trying to weigh different brands or package sizes.

Many stores now provide unit-price labels to make comparisons easier, but you can do the calculations yourself if you have to.

The unit price tells you how much a product costs for a given unit — ounce, pound, quart, etc. To find out the unit price, simply divide the price — in cents — by the size of the package.

Suppose a 7½-ounce box of cookies sells for 58 cents, a 13-ounce package is 82 cents and a one-pound bag is $1.10. Which one is cheapest?

The unit price of the small box works out to just under eight cents an ounce — 58 divided by 7½. The middle package is a little over six cents an ounce — 82 divided by 13. And the large bag is just under seven cents an ounce — 110 divided by 16.



Style of the future?

Designer Lloyd Allen believes that sweatshirt fabric will be the denim of the 1980s and creates one-size-fits-all clothes, including blouse and clam diggers, left, and tunic, right, in cotton fleece.

Designer believes 'sweats' are the style of the future

By JENNIFER SEDER
Los Angles Times - Washington Post News Service

Upset about the rising cost of designer clothes? Lloyd Allen has a comforting suggestion. "Get out all your rumpled sweats — shirts, pants, whatever — and make them presentable. Sweat-shirt fabric will be the denim of the '80s, and, like jeans, you'll be able to wear it anytime, any place."

Allen, a Texas jazz musician turned in the coming of the sweat-shirt generation. His first sportswear collection, called "Metrics," consists of one-size-fits-all ponchos, tunics, clam diggers and dresses, all made of sweat-shirt fabric. Even the hats, belts and bib treatments are of sweat-shirt fabric.

"What I'm aiming at is this: Buying clothes will or should be like buying shoes. When you find a style that you like, buy it in a few colors and forget about it. Life is so complicated, why worry about getting dressed at atll? It's a clear, uncluttered and clean approach to fashion. Sweats free you to be yourself."

Allen credits designer Norma Kamali with having started the sweat-shirt dressing craze with her minidresses, skirts and tops made of sweat-shirt fabric. "She proved that sweat-shirt fabric could be styled to look like silk or any other type of dressy fabric. Before Kamali, it was always considered an American active fabric. Now everybody is madly knocking her off."

Including Allen? "No, thank God. What I'm doing is taking the idea one step farther now — expanding the concept to include a whole new way of approaching fashion."

Allen left Texas about five years ago when he went to New York to, as he puts it, "seek my fortune." After a few months of unemployment, he landed a job in the millinery department of the Metroplitan Opera and found himself building metal and plastic helmets for members of the cast of "Aida." It was there, he said, that he learned about designing.

"There's so much to learn from making hats because you have to be so basic and precise with the materials you work with. I could do 16 helmets an hour."

From hats, Allen moved on to making costumes. Meanwhile, on his own time, he designed a nylon rain poncho that fit into its own bag. The design proved successful with local retailers, and Allen subsequently quit the Met and went into business for himself.

DEAR ABBY

He likes flat chests

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Depressed," who was miserable because she was flat-chested: The woman I love has no more on top than I have, but she's the sexiest girl I have ever known.

A woman's breasts have nothing to do with her sexiness. Would she consider her husband inadequate and unappealing just because he wasn't built like Arnold Schwarzenegger?

I've talked to other men, and you'd be amazed at the number of men who find smaller-breasted women more attractive. — FLATTIES PREFERRED

DEAR FLATTIES: Stay tuned for a letter from a woman who had too much of a good thing:

DEAR ABBY: I hope I've read my last letter from flat-chested women who envy their full-bosomed sisters. Believe me, there's nothing spectacular about having big breasts. I know. The last time I bought separates, the skirt was a size 12 and the blouse was size 18!

In high school I can remember being told to quit "showing off" when I stretched. I started to wear loose-fitting tops to hide my size but gave up because everybody thought I was pregnant.

I suppose I could have breast reduction surgery, but I have finally learned to accept myself as I am. I've discovered that the people who are worth knowing don't judge a woman by the size of her bra. — LIVING WITH IT

DEAR ABBY: Everywhere I go I'm laughed at because I have two different-colored eyes. One is blue and the other one is brownish-green. It's not terribly noticeable from a distance, but when people get up close to me they notice it and think it's weird.

A friend of mine said she once saw a cat with two different-colored eyes, but never a person. Well, I've never seen another person with this problem.

Please don't tell me I ought to be glad that I have two eyes and can see. I am glad, but I'm only 13 and I hate to think of going through the rest of my life being a freak. Can anything be done to change the color of one of my eyes? — FEELS LIKE A FREAK

DEAR FEELS: Eye doctors who fit patients with contact lenses can prescribe lenses for you that will give your eyes the appearance of having the same color — or close to it. They are not inexpensive, so if your parents can't afford it now, perhaps you can earn and save money and get contacts yourself when you are older.

In the meantime, it's not as weird as you think. In your grandparents' time there was a beautiful Irish movie star named Colleen Moore who had two different-colored eyes, and everything turned out rosy for her!

Promoting tourism in North Dakota

By MARK PORUBCANSKY
Associated Press Writer

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Mike Foster doesn't peddle iceboxes to Eskimos, but for some people that would seem an easier job than the one he has.

Foster is director of tourism for the state of North Dakota. North Dakota — the state where — well, what's in North Dakota, anyhow?

That, Foster says, is a common question.

"Most of our image is no image," he says. "But that's OK. It's not negative, not like Newark, N.J."

North Dakota has been promoting tourism for the past decade. But the sparsely populated Great Plains state remains an unknown, even to residents of surrounding states.

Tourists who already know something about the state probably are familiar with the Badlands of western North Dakota or the International Peace Garden straddling the Canadian border near Dunseith, but little else, Foster said.

"A lot of people in Minnesota don't know anything about North Dakota," he said.

There are image problems within North Dakota as well.

"A lot of people are paranoid about the state," Foster said. "One of the pitches we use is to say it's important for us to remember there is a lot to do and see here."

Armed with a $1.3 million two-year budget, Foster, a former national advertising manager for Investors Diversified Services of Minneapolis, is trying to make the most of North Dakota's vast spaces and historical sites.

His budget is small compared to neighboring states, such as South Dakota, which has been promoting tourism for more than 35 years.

North Dakota's aims are also more limited than South Dakota's, which considers itself a destination for travelers.

"Our whole marketing approach is based on the premise that, for the most part, we are a pass-through state. Our objective is to slow people down, or stop them for a day or two longer," said Foster.

New types of lenses offer more options

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Contact lenses that help treat certain eye diseases and extended-wear lenses that can be worn night and day for up to two weeks at a time are among the developments that meet a broader range of patient needs.

New lenses of oxygen-permeable CAB (cellulose acetate buterate) material have already permitted legally blind patients suffering from certain corneal diseases to achieve 20-20 vision, it was reported at an International Contact Lens Conference here.

"With new versions of hard, soft and semisoft lenses now available, virtually anyone with healthy eyes can wear some kind of contact lens successfully," noted Dr. Robert Morrison, who was chairman of the conference.

"Even those who failed previously to adapt to them should go back to their eyedoctor now and try again. Careful pre-evaluation, fitting and followup should result in finding the right contact lens for individual needs from among the new options available," said Morrison, associate professor of optometry at Pennsylvania College of Optometry and assistant professor of ophthalmology at New York Medical College.

BETTER STICK WITH THE BIBLE!

"Don't let others spoil your faith and joy with their philosophies, their wrong and shallow answers built on men's thoughts and ideas, instead of on what Christ has said. For in Christ there is all of God in a human body; SO YOU HAVE EVERYTHING WHEN YOU HAVE CHRIST, and you are filled with God through your union with Christ. He is the highest Ruler, with authority over every other power." (Colossians 2:8-10)

"I am amazed that you are turning away so soon from God who, in his love and mercy, invited you to share the eternal life he gives through Christ; you are already following a different "way to heaven", which really doesn't go to heaven at all. For there is no other way than the one we showed you; you are being fooled by those who twist and change the truth concerning Christ.

Let God's curse fall on anyone, including myself, who preaches any other way to be saved than the one we told you about; yes, if an angel comes from heaven and preaches any other message, let him be forever cursed. I will say it again: if anyone preaches any other Gospel than the one you welcomed, let God's curse fall upon him.

You can see that I am not try to please you by sweet talk and flattery; no, I am trying to please God. If I were still trying to please men I could not be Christ's servant." (Galatians 1:6-10)

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Hypertension can lead to stroke

Dear Dr. Solomon: My doctor said that if I don't take care of myself, the hypertension that I suffer from is going to kill me. How does hypertension kill? — Evelyn, Baltimore

Dear Evelyn: Hypertension is the most common cause of serious stroke. A stroke from hypertension is a hemorrhage into the brain from an artery.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've finally decided to go ahead and be sterilized. I love my three children and I want to send them to college and give them a lot of the things I never had. But I know I won't be able to do these things if I have another child. I have been reading up on tubal sterilization and would like to know if it works. I can't afford any surprises. — Dottie, Maplewood, N.J.

Dear Dottie: While tubal sterilization is more than 99 percent effective, 100 percent effectiveness cannot be guaranteed. According to Dr. David A. Grimes, of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, from two to six of every 1,000 women who have a tubal sterilization subsequently become pregnant. If you bear in mind that approximately 650,000 women have tubal sterilizations each year, this means that a few thousand may have unplanned pregnancies.

If you decide to go ahead with your plans, you should realize that even 99.5 percent effectiveness is not the same as 100 percent effectiveness. Women who have had tubal sterilizations can become pregnant for a number of resons and, while the occurrence is rare, the possibility does exist.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is seven years old and hardly ever gets through the night without wetting the bed. My sister tells me that her son was the same way, but that he gradually outgrew it. Even if I wake my daughter during the night to go to the bathroom, the bed is still wet the next morning. Should I just forget about it and wait until she outgrows it? — Mrs. C.P., Salem, Mass.

Dear Mrs. P.: Bed-wetting (enuresis) should not be ignored any more than any other symptoms should be ignored. It may be a clue to some emotional disturbance, or possibly an indication of a problem in the urinary tract. That does not necessarily mean that extensive diagnostic tests or treatment will be needed. Enuresis in most children eventually does come to an end, but the type of enuresis dictates the treatment appraoch that should be followed.

Dr. Evan J. Kass, of the Children's Hospital National Medical Center in Washington, says that many children who wet the bed at night are described by their parents as heavy sleepers. For these children, limiting their fluid intake for about two hours before they go to bed, and having them use the bathroom just before going to sleep, are often the only treatment needed. On the other hand, children with severe urinary tract problems may require a complete urologic examination, while still others might benefit from medication taken at bedtime.

For Miss A.L. (Los Angeles): We have helped women with excessive hair growth on their face, abdomen, chest and legs. Your problem may be associated with a recognizable hormonal disorder that oftentimes can be effectively treated.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Domesticated chimp showing 'totally maternal behavior'

CONROE, Texas (AP) — The first domesticated chimpanzee to give birth is responding to her second baby with "totally maternal behavior" with the help of a Southeast Texas homemaker, researchers say.

Tanya was one of 29 female chimpanzees taken at birth and placed in the care of surrogate mothers to allow researchers to understand the behavior of early man. She is the only one of the 29 still alive today.

The 10-year-old chimp first gave birth to Uriah in March 1981, and researchers at the University of Oklahoma's Institute for Primate Studies hoped to learn how much of Tanya's maternal ability was learned and how much was instinct.

Normally, chimpanazees hold their offspring almost constantly to keep them warm, but Tayna showed no interest in her son.

Researchers, fearing he would catch pneumonia and die, asked June Cook, Tanya's surrogate mother, to raise Uriah.

After giving birth to Leah, a three-pound female, on May 11, Tanya showed similar signs of neglect. So Mrs. Cook decided to teach Tanya how to care for her baby.

"I got a little frightened. But she didn't walk off and leave the baby like she did with Uriah. She kept the baby in her arms all the time. Tanya was examining it and everything, but she didn't know what to do," said Mrs. Cook, a 58-year-old mother of seven children.

"I thought, 'I'm going to go in Tanya's cage and help her.' I didn't know if Tanya would let me or not," Mrs. Cook said. "I put the baby up to Tanya's breast and the baby started nursing immediately. I did that the rest of the day for about three times."

The next morning, Tanya was cradling Leah in her arms and breastfeeding the baby.

"For the first time, a species isolated chimpanzee is exhibiting totally maternal behavior," said William Lemmon, the institute's director.

Maternal behavior of chimpanzees is composed of drive and behavior, Allen said.

Drive, which is acquired during infancy, reflects how the chimp was regarded by its mother.

Marineland walrus cow gives birth

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The baby was three feet long and weighed 90 pounds, but ecstatic officials at Marineland Saturday said the new arrival's size was normal for one of the few walruses ever born in captivity.

The female pup, sporting flippers and white whiskers plus lots of blubber, was born at 12:20 a.m. Saturday to a 3,500-pound cow named Petula and her mate Farouk — one of only two pairs of breeding walruses in captivity, a Marineland spokesman said.

Mother and baby were reported to be doing fine, though there was no word on the condition of the two-ton father.

"She's so cute. She's a little gray ball of blubber with white whiskers, very big eyes and tiny head," said Scott Rutherford, Marineland assistant curator of mammals.

"They make little grunting noises," he said, noting that the pup had yet to be named.

"We prefer to wait until we find out what the little personality is going to be before we name them," he said.

The mother will suckle the pup until it is weaned onto clams and fish, Rutherford said. It won't even learn to swim for a while.

"They have to be born on dry land," said Rutherford, adding that Marineland officials had been draining the water from Petula's enclosure every night for the past month so the mother and pup would not drown during birth.

"We'll gradually start putting in water a little at a time, because the baby is going to have to learn how to swim. They just don't pop off into the water," Rutherford said.

The baby will be available for public viewing immediately.

The unassisted delivery, which came after a 12-month gestation period, was the fourth for the 20-year-old Petula.

Weekend weather was nothing to memorialize

The Memorial Day holiday was a weekend to forget for storm-battered communities in the plains as May's departing volley of tornadoes and thunderstorms killed at least 19 people and routed thousands from their homes.

Some cities in Texas and Oklahoma chalked up their wettest May on record, while residents of Marion, Ill., prepared to bury some of their dead today after a tornado killed 10 people Saturday, injured at least 100 and left 1,000 homeless.

THUNDERSTORMS PACKING HAIL and rain spread from northern Texas to as far north as Ohio on Monday and as far south as Florida, leaving water 2 feet deep in some communities.

To the west, cities in Wyoming, Montana and South Dakota shivered in record low temperatures. Snow fell in the Colorado mountains while residents of some Montana communities dug out from 15 inches of snow.

Hail the size of baseballs pounded parts of Oklahoma, and some rivers reached flood stage in Missouri and Kansas.

Meanwhile, the National Weather Service's six-month official Atlantic hurricane season began today. The first storm of the season will be named Alberto.

Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson estimated damage from the Marion tornado at $100 million and asked President Reagan to declare Williamson County a major disaster area. The tornado, cutting a swath straight through town, destroyed 161 homes and 47 businesses, said county civil service director Thomas Redickas.

"Everybody's just terrified," said Marion resident Jeanette Griffin as heavy rain and black skies coupled with another tornado watch Monday to renew fears. "My children are petrified."

"It looks like somebody dropped a bomb," said Frank Olkoski of nearby Herrin.

Severe thunderstorms Monday spawned three more tornadoes in Illinois, including a twister in Crawford County that smashed a barn, tore awnings from mobile homes and peeled off a furniture store roof, police said.

Lightning stuck several petroleum sludge tanks at an oil well near Ashley in Washington County, exploding an empty one and igniting a brief fire in a full tank, authorities said. Three inches of rain fell in an hour at Bement, leaving 5 inches of standing water.

A funnel cloud touched down Monday evening in Henderson County, Ky., blowing the roof partly off a school and damaging some mobile homes.

A weekend storm hammered Oklahoma City with 75 mph winds and brought May rainfall to a record 12.07 inches. More rain in Wichita Falls, Tex., brought the month's total to 13.22 inches, breaking a record set in 1891.

MORE THAN 1.8 inches of rain fell in a 24-hour period ending Monday night at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and the Tampa Bay area of Florida got 4½ inches of rain Sunday and Monday.

The mercury dipped Monday to 27 degrees at Sheridan, Wyo., easily beating the record cold of 32 degrees set on that date in 1917. Other records for the date were 32 at Billings, Mont., and 33 at Rapid City, S.D.

In West Virginia, residents of Cabin Creek and other narrow coal-mining valleys near Charleston postponed holiday picnics to begin clearing tons of muck and debris from Sunday's flooding, which routed 200 to 300 people from their homes.

Monday's storms in Texas knocked out electrical power to thousands in parts of Dallas, Sherman and McKinney and blew down a 275-foot radio tower near Terrell.

A Texas woman was killed and her husband was injured when wind toppled a 60-foot tree onto their tent near Denison Dam in Bryan County, Okla.

Rain in Tampa, Fla., apparently contributed to the drowning of a 40-year-old retarded man swept away in a drainage ditch Sunday night, police said.

A 67-year-old man from Festus, Mo., died Sunday when he was crushed by a tree toppled by high winds.

In Montana, Friday's snowstorm was blamed for the death of a woman whose truck was hit by a train near Great Falls.

In Oklahoma, rescue workers searched for the body of a 12-year-old boy lost in a canoe accident.

Three people were found dead in a mobile home southeast of Oklahoma City on Saturday after lightning struck, and in Colorado lightning killed a man in a Denver park.

War dead remembered; War described as 'ugly'

By The Associated Press

Clouds and rain over much of the nation dampened Memorial Day observances as Americans prayed at graves, watched parades and listened to speeches honoring the soldiers who died for freedom.

Rain in the East canceled many observances. In Denver, shivering in 40-degree temperatures, no more than 2,200 people turned out under cloudy skies for a parade, police said, and raindrops sprinkled about 250 people in Topeka, Kan., who heard Mayor William B. McCormick read the Gettysburg address.

The traffic death toll for the long holiday weekend reached 294.

In Walker, Mich., a horse apparently frightened by sirens bolted from its 12-year-old owner, injured five people when it ran through a line of parade spectators, then stuck its head through a bakery window.

In Chippewa Falls, Wis., 10 members of a 7th-grade band received minor injuries when an antique car bumped them from behind. The 89-year-old driver said the vehicle's accelerator stuck, police reported.

In Washington, President Reagan announced new arms limitation talks as he joined about 4,000 people at Arlington National Cemetery.

"This is a fitting occasion to announce that START negotiations between our country and the Soviet Union will begin on June 29," the president said before placing a wreath of carnations and chrysanthemums before the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Reagan said of America's war dead, "How they must have wished in all the ugliness that war brings that no other generaton of young men would have to undergo that same experience."

George Carey, national service officer for the Disabled American Veterans, noted more than 1¼ million Americans have died in the nation's battles.

"And casualty statistics say nothing about a mother grieving over a telegram delivered to her in the middle of the night, or a desperate, distraught father asking God why it had to be his son," Carey told about 60 people gathered in Salt Lake City's Memory Grove.

"Are we here to glorify war? No, we're not," he added, saying his members "know that war is the ugliest fact of human existence."

In Battle Creek, Mich., the state's first national cemetery opened Monday at Fort Custer, 30 years after veterans began campaigning for it.

On Manhattan's West Side, about 50 men wearing veterans' caps marched in an informal parade to the Soldiers and Sailors Monument overlooking the foggy Hudson River. Taps were played and a rifle volley boomed.

Richard E. Monks, commander of the New York County American Legion, told the crowd as a wreath was laid at the monument, "All the world, because of what they gave, is deeply in their debt."

In California, actor Richard Moll, dressed as Abraham Lincoln, spoke before a crowd estimated at 400 at Forest Lawn Memorial Park in Cypress. Tourists and residents enjoyed a strawberry-eating contest at the Garden Grover Strawberry Festival.

In St. Louis, about 200 people gathered as the American Legion lowered a flag to half-staff at Soldiers Memorial, and American Legion Post 200 laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Grand Junction, Colo.

Fans at the National Junior College Baseball Tournament in Grand Junction sang "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" as fireworks boomed after the fifth inning.

Marion beginning task of picking up pieces

MARION, Ill. (AP) — The residents of this devastated town, where a tornado killed 10 people and injured more than 100, face months of cleanup work after today's funerals for six of the victims.

Every day since the tornado roared through on Saturday, leaving 1,000 people homeless and causing an estimated $100 million damage, weather conditions have been ripe for the birth of new killer storms.

"I'm getting home — to my basement with my little family," said Jeanette Griffin as the skies darkened and rain poured Monday. A tornado watch was in effect.

"Everybody's just terrified. My children are petrified. We're just very thankful we're all alive and we have a roof over our heads."

Searchers dropped their tasks and scurried for cover Monday as Mayor Robert Butler ordered most cleanup work delayed until today because of the weather.

The tornado destroyed 161 homes and 47 businesses in Marion, said Thomas Redickas, Williamson County civil defense director.

Another 59 homes and 29 businesses had major damage.

The 10 dead ranged in age from 11 to 96. Funeral services for at least six of them were to be held today.

Butler had confidence that this southern Illinois city of 14,000 people would recover. "When it's all said and done, Marion's going to be bigger and better than ever."

Townspeople are taking it "better than can be expected," he said, and merchants "are anxious to get the mess cleaned up and get back to business." Butler said they all pledged to rebuild.

"I've never seen so many killed and injured in this compact an area," said American Red Cross worker Harry Noftsker.

"It looks like somebody dropped a bomb in the middle of it," said Frank Olkoski of nearby Herrin, who came to survey the wreckage.

"A preliminary estimate of the damage is at $100 million — but that's not final," said Illinois Emergency Services and Disaster Agency spokesman Chuck Jones.

Gov. James R. Thompson has asked President Reagan to declare the county a major disaster area. It already has been so declared by the state.

Evacuation problems foreseen as '82 hurricane season starts

MIAMI (AP) — The six-month-long Atlantic hurricane season opens today amid warnings from the nation's top hurricane forecaster that competition for inland roads may keep many coastal residents from escaping an approaching storm.

"The results are frightening," National Hurricane Center Director Neil Frank said of evacuation plans. "They are showing very long times to evacuate..."

"Just looking at a wider area in that comprehensive study, we find that a lot of people from coastal areas are all going to be using the same inland roads," he said.

Forecasters can usually give only a 12-hour warning of when a hurricane will hit a particular section of coastline, Frank said.

But under ideal circumstances, evacuation of Texas' Galveston Bay would take more than 27 hours, Tampa Bay would need at least 18 hours, and it would take up to 20 hours or longer to get residents of Key West out of danger along a two-lane highway that would probably be clogged with thousands of other Keys residents, he said.

The 1982 Atlantic season runs through Nov. 30, with the first storm to be called Alberto.

Last week a Pacific storm, tropical storm Aleta, lashed the Central American nations of Nicaragua and Honduras with rain for five days, leaving nearly 300 dead and more than 60,000 homeless.

Britain, Israel potential Cuba meeting targets

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) — A major fight is shaping up at a meeting of the non-aligned Movement over a Cuban-led move to recommend Israel's expulsion from the U.N. General Assembly and condemn British for "colonial aggression" against Argentina.

Preparing for a foreign ministers' conference opening Wednesday, a meeting of ambassadors and other officials Monday took up a Cuban draft resolution that is expected to produce a deep split between moderates and radicals in the 94-nation movement.

The Cuban proposal on the Middle East recommends that Israel be denied its General Assembly seat until it "completely withdraws from the sovereign Golan Heights, from the holy city of Jerusalem and from the other occupied Palestinian territories."

Yugoslavia, a leader of the moderate faction, was expected to oppose the Cuban proposal on grounds that its approval would only aggravate tensions in the Middle East, diplomatic sources said.

Argentine sources said their foreign minister, Nicanor Costa Mendez, would arrive Wednesday to argue his country's case in the Falkland Islands dispute. Cuba distributed a three-page draft resolution Monday calling on the movement to condemn "the colonialist aggression of Great Britain against Argentina."

The draft said Britain launched the "largest expeditionary naval force employed against a country since World War II to re-establish its colonial domination over the Argentine republic's Malvinas Islands."

The Cuban proposal is expected to be challengee by Kenya and the more than 20 other Commonwealth members. Diplomatic sources said the former British colonies were prepared to lobby for a resolution stressing the need to implement a United Nations Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire and Argentina's withdrawal of its military forces from the Falklands.

Argentina, which received a strong show of support from the Organization of American States last week on the Falklands conflict, is anxious for non-aligned backing as well in order to pressure Britain into a more flexible policy.

The debate over the Middle East and the Falklands has overshadowed what was expected to be a divisive confrontation over whether the movement should go ahead with plans to hold a summit meeting in Iraq in September as scheduled.

Some delegates have questioned whether Baghdad would be an appropriate site in view of Iraq's continuing war with Iran. But a consensus appeared to be emerging that the conflict should not disqualify Iraq from serving as host.

If the previous decision to hold the summit in Baghdad is ratified at this week's meeting, Iraq will assume the chairmanship of the non-aligned movement for the next three years. That role has been filled by Cuba since 1979, and the current meeting will be the last major non-aligned function to be carried out under Cuban auspices.

Cuban President Fidel Castro has made no public appearances thus far, but conference sources expect him to deliver the welcoming address to the foreign ministers Wednesday.

Texas Tech to honor West Texans for support

Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center School of Medicine will honor West Texas citizens in recognition of their support in its development Friday with an appreciation banquet and ceremonies awarding Distinguished Associate certificates.

The banquet will launch activities for a weekend-long celebration of the medical school's first decade in physician education and will culminate with the graduation convocation June 6.

"With the encouragement, support and assistance of concerned citizens throughout the state, but particularly in West Texas, we have grown from a school in a converted dormitory to a multi-campus institution serving the region," said J. Ted Hartman, M.D., interim dean of the School of Medcine.

"It is fitting that we give special thanks and recognition to the individuals who provided invaluable help during this period of growth as we mark a decade of physician education," he added.

During its first decade, the medical school has expanded from accepting 40 students per year to admitting classes of 100 students. The school has graduated 278 physicians, 105 of whom have completed specialty training programs and have entered practice. In addition to medical students, the school has 210 resident physicians in 22 training programs in 11 medical specialties on its three campuses.

Among those named Distinguished Associates of the medical school during the decade observance are physicians, legislators, community officials, members of service organizations and concerned individuals who have been supportive of development of a medical school in West Texas.

Individuals in the Permian Basin to be honored are:

G. Thane Akins, Giffert Alstrin, Ernest Angelo, Dr. James M. Arrington, Dr. Louis B. Barkley Jr., Ray M. Branson, James Brown, Dr. Robert N. Bugg, Rep. Tom Craddick, Dr. Thurston Dean, Murray Fasken, Dr. John W. Foster, Charles D. Fraser, Judge H. Darrell Glover, Dr. Ralph G. Greenlee, Dr. Phyllis J. Huffman, Dr. Bal K. Khandelwal, Dr. T.V. Longbotham, Edwin H. McGruder, Dr. J. Ernesto Mendez, W.J. Mewhorter, Joe Pevehouse, Harley Reeves, Dr. Joseph F. Ruda, Dr. Leena Shroff, Dr. Nipank Shroff, Sen. W.E. "Pete" Snelson, Dr. Ward M. Terry, Eddie Thomas, Dr. William P. Trotter, Dr. Terry D. Tubb, F.B. Tyler, and Dr. Stephen L. Wiesenfeld, all from Midland.

Bert DeBord, Dr. Zenas W. Hutcheson Jr., Dr. Judith A. Pester, Dr. Paul L. Rogers, Mayor Maurice Simmons, and Charles Weeg, all from Andrews.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram, The Odessa American, Andrews County News, Lamesa Press-Reporter, KMID-TV, KTPX-TV, and KOSA-TV.

Next flight starts military-shuttle link

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the 25th year of the space age, man and his military machines are moving to control the ultimate high ground far above the Earth.

The Soviet Union already has a toehold. The United States makes its opening bid this month, when, for the first time, American astronauts will conduct military assignments in space.

The space shuttle Columbia will carry a Defense Department payload to test sensors for future spy satellites — a modest beginning to a multibillion-dollar project that could develop by the end of the decade into a formidable space force of military pilots, ships, satellites and exotic weapons.

Not exactly "Star Wars" — but heading in that direction.

THE FORCE IS NEEDED, defense officials claim, to counter a strong Soviet manned military space effort aimed, they say, at dominating that new arena. For their part, the Soviets blame the United States for establishing the shuttle's military capabilities.

The first defense-related shuttle flight is scheduled to lift off from Cape Canaveral on June 27, with touchdown on Independence Day, July 4, at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

President Reagan is expected to greet the returning astronauts with a speech outlining America's future in space. Reagan is said to be considering establishment of a large permanent space station to be used later in this decade for military, scientific and commercial projects.

The June flight, Columbia's fourth and final test mission, will see fundamental changes in NASA's hitherto open information policy.

The Air Force, which manages the Pentagon's space effort, has declared the payload secret and won't disclose details to reporters. It is listed simply as DOD 82-1.

The astronauts, Navy Capt. Thomas Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield, won't discuss the payload on open air-to-ground conversations, nor will they transmit television pictures of it for fear the Soviets might learn something.

Nevertheless, many details about the package are known, from Air Force congressional testimony and articles published in technical papers.

Robert Hermann, an assistant secretary of the Air Force, spilled the beans on DOD 82-1 in testimony last year before the House subcommittee on science and technology.

"WE ARE PLANNING to place a critical space test program called CIRRIS on the fourth orbital flight test mission," Hermann said. "This will provide critical information applicable to future defense missions and will give both the Air Force and NASA an early opportunity to evaluate the procedures and interfaces for operations with the shuttle."

CIRRIS stands for Cryogenic Infra-Red Radiation Instrumentation for Shuttle. It is to scan Earth's horizon with a super-cooled infrared telescope to gather background and basic target data for future spacecraft designed to detect and possibly destroy enemy missiles and satellites.

The payload will not be released into its own orbit, but will remain in the shuttle cargo bay.

From reliable sources it was learned other Pentagon instruments aboard the flight include a Space Sextant, being developed to give defense satellites an independent navigation capability, and a device called HUP (horizon ultraviolet program), smaller than CIRRIS but intended to do similar studies in the ultraviolet spectrum.

NASA always has prided itself on the openness of its program, and some officials are not happy with the security demands. But, Brian Duff, the agency's chief of public affairs, said: "We have no choice. The decision has been made by the president that we are to share the shuttle with the Air Force."

Brig. Gen. Richard Abel, Air Force director of public affairs, said: "It is imperative, as we move DOD space systems to the shuttle from expendable launch vehicles, that we protect information about those systems which would be useful to a potential adversary."

Some observers believe CIRRIS is not all that secret and that the Air Force's real goal is to test its own and NASA's security systems to find where they might leak during truly top secret missions.

The first all-up military "blue shuttle" flight is scheduled for the 10th launching, in November 1983, carrying a satellite to detect aircraft from orbit.

Bette Davis remembers posing nude for statue called 'Spring'

Davis

BOSTON (AP) — Somewhere in Boston there may be a statue that has Bette Davis' eyes, her nose, her shoulders — and a few other similarities.

The 74-year-old actress said in an interview for Playboy magazine that she posed nude for a statue of "Spring" when she was 18.

"This was after high school, when I was a very young person," she said in an interview published in the magazine's July issue.

The actress, a native of Lowell, Mass., agreed to pose for an elderly woman sculptor whose name she no longer remembers, she said. The actress described herself as the "picture of a sad little girl, earning money for the family. I was so modest."

When it came time to leave the dressing room without her clothes, she recalled, "I was absolutely panicked. I didn't dare come out.... So I finally had to go down, stark naked in front of her and the male assistant...."

"I was mortified," said Miss Davis, who has appeared in more than 80 films and has won two Academy Awards. "It took me years to get over it, as a matter of fact." She said she would never do it again.

But Miss Davis said the statue was an unqualified success. "It was lovely, beautiful," she said. "I had the perfect figure for it."

"I've heard it's still up there in a park someplace, though I've never seen it since," she added.

But Boston's parks and recreation commissioner, Robert McCoy, said he knows of no such statue in any Boston park.

"There is no nudity," he said. "We usually have statues of war heroes and poets."

Miss Davis also said that two abortions she underwent during her first marriage, to Ham Nelson, played a role in her career because she would have not pursued her work had she had children while young.

Nelson wanted her to have the abortions and, "being the dutiful wife, that's what I did," said Miss Davis.

"And I guess I will thank him all my life. Because if I'd had those two children.... I see myself at 50, with the children all grown up, wondering whether or not I ever would have made it. I think there's nothing sadder, and I'm sure I'd have given it all up if I'd had children earlier."

Miss Davis later gave birth to a daughter and adopted a son and a daughter.

Kennedy

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Rose Kennedy, 91-year-old matriarch of one of America's most famous political families, was "resting comfortably" today at St. Mary's Hospital, officials said.

"Mrs. Kennedy is still under observation," said nursing supervisor Ruth Hardy. "But she's much improved and is resting comfortably."

Physicians began a series of tests Monday on Mrs. Kennedy, said Mrs. Hardy, adding they could take several days. The specific nature of Mrs. Kennedy's ailment was unknown, hospital officials said.

Mrs. Kennedy was brought to the hospital Sunday night from her seaside Palm Beach estate. "Apparently, she just wasn't feeling well, said Mrs. Hardy, adding it was unknown when she might be discharged.

Mrs. Kennedy is the mother of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and of the late President John F. Kennedy and Sen. Robert Kennedy, both of whom were assassinated.

Mrs. Kennedy was hospitalized last November after complaining of chest pains. Her physician, Dr. Robert Gerard, said at the time that Mrs. Kennedy was suffering from angina, a condition that can cause pain around the heart when it receives too little oxygen.

Updike

KENT, Ohio (AP) — The tale has only just come out, but one of the students listed as graduating at the December commencement of Kent State University never attended a class.

The name of Nelson Springer Angstrom, a character from the novels of Pulitzer Prize-winning author John Updike, was called out at the commencement exercises. But, predictably, he didn't step forward to claim a diploma.

Angstrom's name was added to the list of graduates contained in the commencement program by Robert McCoy, assistant to university President Brage Golding. McCoy provided Updike background on Kent State when Angstrom, the son of Rabbit Angstrom in Updike's "Rabbit" novels, was supposed to have enrolled in the school in northeastern Ohio.

Golding, getting wind of the prank, made sure Angstrom's name was read among a list of graduates stepping forward to receive diplomas.

Updike's reaction? "They'll do anything for a laugh at Kent State."

Newman

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Paul Newman, Tatum O'Neal and Muhammad Ali are among the American celebrities helping Japanese companies sell coffee, watches and after-shave lotion on Japanese television, TV Guide reports.

In fact, some American stars who aren't normally seen on commercials in this country agree to do such ads for Japanese TV, the magazine says in an article prepared for its issue Saturday.

"The reason that stars like Newman agree to do commercials in Japan but not here is that the Japanese do 'image' commercials," said Stephen Carbone, vice president of the talent agency International Creative Management.

"You'll see the celebrity at home, on the set, at play. At no time do they have to hold up the product and say, 'Buy it.'"

About 15 percent of all Japanese commercials are shot outside of Japan. TV Guide said the Japanese, enchanted by the wide-open images of the old American West, also have used the Grand Canyon and the Painted Desert as backdrops for commercials.

"Japan, as you know, is very crowded," said Hiroshi Wagatsuma, a Japanese social anthropologist now teaching at UCLA. "To us, America — especially the West — represents a particularly potent fantasy of unlimited space and movement."

Carter says he doesn't feel 'abandoned'

Former President Jimmy Carter speaks to the audience of the American Booksellers Convention on Monday at Anaheim, Calif., where he discussed stories from his soo-to-be-released book, "Keeping Faith: Memoirs of a President."

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Jimmy Carter says he doesn't feel "abandoned or forlorn" since losing the 1980 presidential election to Ronald Reagan, even though he's never consulted by Reagan's administration.

Carter, making a public appearance Monday before the American Booksellers Association to publicize his memoirs, also said he knew his administration was doomed when Iran failed to release the 52 American hostages before the election.

He said the Reagan administration hasn't consulted him since he left office, but added, "I do not feel abandoned or forlorn. I do feel that former presidents have a valuable store of experience and acquaintance with world leaders ... I consulted with President Ford frequently."

Speaking to reporters after a breakfast address to 1,700 people at the convention, Carter discussed the high and low points of his years in the White House, saying the November 1979 capture of the hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran began "the worst year of my life."

Discussing the Camp David talks in September 1978 that led to a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, Carter said he feared at the time that Egyptian leader Anwar Sadat was "in physical danger" from a member of Sadat's own delegation. Carter said he tightened the guard around Sadat's cabin without telling the Egyptian president, then thought he might have been foolish until Sadat was assassinated in October 1981.

Carter said the Camp David talks, where he found Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to be "absolutely incompatible," would be included in his book,"Keeping Faith: Memoirs of a President." The book is to be published Nov. 2 by Bantam Books.

The former president, looking relaxed and trim in a dark business suit, said he was torn by conflicting advice on ways to free the hostages in Iran, ranging "all the way from dropping to our knees and returning the shah (of Iran) to be tortured and killed, to dropping an atomic bomb on Tehran."

Carter said the most difficult moment of his term "was the time I got word that the rescue mission to Iran had to be aborted ... and that an unknown number in a rescue team had been killed."

He said he had a "disgusting feeling of impotency" because he could not free the hostages immediately, but said that if he had taken military action, "I think the hostages would be dead today."

Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, who is writing an autobiography, "knew there was no chance for me to be re-elected" because Iran did not release the hostages before the 1980 election, he said. "That was very difficult for me to write (in the book) ... No one likes to be rejected by a people that you love."

Carter said he would not make another attempt to win the presidency, but would support former Vice President Walter Mondale if he runs.

Booksellers fear censorship efforts

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Laws protecting minors from harmful material could have the "insidious" effect of banning books, the American Booksellers Association has been told.

Displayed in a locked cage at the convention of 20,000 booksellers, publishers, agents and authors — which ran through today — were some classics of Western literature, shown to symbolize renewed attempts at censorship in the United States, organizers said.

Among the volumes behind bars were works by Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, Hans Christian Andersen, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, George Bernard Shaw, Ernest Hemingway, Laura Ingalls Wilder and Isaac Asimov.

Speakers at a seminar Monday on censorship said there had been persistent book-banning efforts in Georgia, Virginia, Florida, Arizona, Colorado, California, Washington state, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Association attorney Maxwell J. Lillienstein said he was most concerned by "the proliferation of the so-called 'minors access' statutes."

"These are very insidious laws," he said. "In the guise of protecting minors from harmful materials...they have said in effect, 'You, Mr. or Mrs. bookseller, either ban the book or ban minors.'

"It is probable that a high percentage of people who shop in bookstores bring minors with them. This type of statute, if it were permitted to prevail, would probably have an enormous impact," Lillienstein said.

The convention is the largest English-language book show in the world. This year, 1,200 publishers came from Canada, Great Britain, New Zealand and Australia.

American artists to be honored at folklife festival

WASHINGTON (AP) — Special certificates and cash awards will be given to 15 distinguished American artists at the annual folklife festival here during the Fourth of July weekend.

The 15 artists, ranging from singers to woodcarvers to the father of bluegrass music, were announced as winners of the "national heritage fellowships" by the National Endowment for the Arts on Monday. They will be presented the awards in special ceremonies on the Mall on July 3.

The recipients are:

Dewey Balfa of Basile, La., a school bus driver and furniture store owner who is a fiddler versed in the music of the Cajuns, French Canadian exiles who settled in the Mississippi Delta 200 years ago.

Joe Heaney of Brooklyn, an Irish-born balladeer who once worked as a Park Avenue doorman in Manhattan and for the past year has been folk artist in residence at the University of Washington, Seattle.

Tommy Jarrell of Mount Airy, N.C., a fiddler of the Blue Ridge mountains.

Bessie Jones of Brunswick, Ga., a singer in the Afro-American musical culture of George's offshore islands.

George Lopez of Cordova, N.M., a sixth-generation woodcarver from the Sangre de Cristo mountains of northern New Mexico who specializes in religious figures.

Brownie McGhee of Oakland, Calif., a native of Tennessee and guitarist in the black blues tradition.

Sanders "Sonny" Terry of Holliswood, Long Island, a blind harmonica player and longtime partner of Brownie McGhee.

Hugh McGraw of Bremen, Ga., an expert in the "sacred harp" tradition of religious choral music in the Deep South, based on melodies dating to pre-Revolutionary times.

Lydia Mendoza of Houston, a Mexican-American singer on the 12-string guitar who began singing with a family conjunto, or musical group, along the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Bill Monroe of Nashville, Tenn., known as the father of bluegrass music.

Elijah Pierce of Columbus, Ohio, a native of northeastern Mississippi who was cited by an international folk arts exhibition in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, as one of the five best woodcarvers in the world.

Adam Popovich of Dolton, Ill., a principal developer of tamburitza, the traditional music of older Serbian and Croatian communities in America.

Georgeann Robinson of Bartlesville, Okla., one of the most skilled practitioners of the almost-lost Osage Indian tradition of ribbonwork, a form of needlework featuring geometric designs using brightly colored ribbons.

Prince Charles suffers split lip

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles suffered a split lip when he was hit in the mouth by a polo stick during a match at Windsor, Buckingham Palace said today.

A palace spokesman described the injury as "minor abrasions" that did not require medical treatment.

Methodist minister 'cured' of cancer

HOUSTON (AP) — The pastor of the world's largest Methodist church says he is "100 percent cured" of cancer and has no plans to retire early from the post he has held for 21 years.

The Rev. Charles Allen, 69, assured the 12,600-member First United Methodist Church here Sunday that he is cured of the disease and released a pamphlet of sermons he will preach during the next year.

The United Methodist Church has set mandatory retirement at age 70.

"I have never looked forward to any year in my life like I look forward to the one beginning next Sunday. I feel that this year, from June 1 to May 31, 1983, is going to be the best year I have lived," he said.

Allen learned during an April 12 examination he had cancer of the lower intestine and underwent surgery at Methodist Hospital. Doctors said he is cured and will not need additional treatment, Allen said.

Nixon sees second term for Reagan despite Kennedy's presidential bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Nixon says Sen. Edward M. Kennedy is a practical man who will "do what is necessary" to seek the presidency in 1984, whether it be losing weight or changing his ideas.

In any event, the Massachusetts Democrat will lose to President Reagan, who will decide to seek a second term, Nixon said in an interview on the CBS Evening News broadcast Monday night. Further excerpts were scheduled to be aired on the CBS Morning News this week.

Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale doesn't even have a chance of winning the Democratic nomination, Nixon says. "No way. He's just a warmed-over Carter."

Nixon predicted the Democrats will nominate Kennedy for president in 1984, but said Reagan would win the contest.

"Kennedy will win the Democratic nomination because it's four years past Chappaquiddick, four years more for that in the background," Nixon said. He was referring to the 1969 accident in which Mary Jo Kopechne, 28, drowned after Kennedy's car crashed into the water at Chappaquiddick, an island adjacent to Martha's Vineyard off the Massachusetts coast.

Before running, Kennedy has "got to lose 20 pounds," Nixon said. "He also has got to enter the 80s, rather than the 60s. He's got to get some new ideas. But he is a very practical fellow, and he will get some new ideas. He'll do what is necessary."

But Nixon said Reagan will seek and win re-election.

"He's going to be able say, 'I promised that I was going to cut taxes,' and he has," Nixon said. "He will have cut taxes, he will have cut inflation, he will have cut government spending and he will have cut unemployment."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, June 2, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Charles Haid, who plays "Officer Renko" on TVs "Hill Street Blues," shares this birthday with you. He describes himself as "the world's oldest surfer." Although your insatiable curiosity will sometimes get you in trouble in the year ahead, it will also attract the attention of those who can help your career. Anyone who thinks he can stop you does not know you very well! Your low-keyed magnetism wins you allies wherever you go. If considering marriage, be sure to choose a spouse who understands your high ideals and dedication to your work. A born peacemaker, you make an excellent mediator.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You receive something today that you have wanted for a long time. The trouble is, you may no longer care! Resist romantic temptations—get on with your life's work.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are persuasive now. A job that you have coveted becomes available and you are a top candidate! Patience will do the most to turn things around for you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Real estate transactions hold special interest, but financing will still be difficult to arrange. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Influential person is happy with your work. Those long hours have paid off handsomely! Romance looks good. Think of ways to enhance your appearance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Listen to what your intuition is telling you. Others will seek you out. New business deals are in the offing. You enjoy spending a quiet evening with close friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An excellent day for making long-term plans. Real estate ventures can be tricky. Consult the experts! Spend more time talking to children—your own or your friends'.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Exercise greater patience when a family member provokes arguments. Money could be at the root of the problem. Postpone making decisions until you are calm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Look for new ways to put your money to work and keep a close eye on spending. Accept social invitations that will put you in touch with a different group of people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Sales meetings and contract negotiations go well today. Postpone signing the papers, however, until you have slept on it. Romantic misunderstandings clear up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You deserve a break in routine. Take the time to celebrate a recent triumph before setting out to solve a financial problem. A family power struggle creates domestic tension.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look into the various methods of financing an education. Certain radical changes at work will eventually benefit you. Play a waiting game.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Go ahead and buy a piece of furniture that is on sale while you have the money. Romance enjoys favorable influences. Do not follow the crowd at work or school.

For more than a quarter of a century, Misha Martinovic, owner of Johannesburg's only rubber bridge club, has been one of South Africa's leading players. "I am, perhaps, not the most talented of our players," he will tell you, "but I hate to make mistakes." Consider this hand from a recent tournament.

Four spades was the popular contract, regardless of what South chose to open. The only difference was that, at some tables, North became the declarer.

Where South declared, the usual lead was a club. Declarer captured the king with the ace, drew trumps in two rounds and then led a heart to the queen and East's king.

Most Easts felt that they now had to do something "active." Invariably they shifted to a diamond. West won the jack when declarer played low, and he could get off lead safely with a heart. Declarer cleared the hearts, then ran all his trumps. He came down to the ace-queen of diamonds and jack of clubs in his hand. West was forced down to king and another diamond and the queen of clubs. Now declarer simply threw West in with a club, forcing a return into the ace-queen of diamonds. He lost only one trick in each side suit, and so made his contract.

At Martinovic's table, the contract was defeated because he took his partner off the end play. When in with the king of hearts, he returned a club to his partner's ten. West continued with the queen of clubs, ruffed in dummy. After declarer cashed his hearts, ending in dummy, he led a low diamond. A careless defender would play low. So would declarer, and West would be end played and would have to concede the contract. But East continued his fine defense by inserting the eight. If declarer ducked, East would be on play to lead a diamond through the ace-queen. So declarer was forced to put in the queen. West won the king and could afford to exit with a diamond to his partner's ten, assuring a second trick in the suit for the defense and a one-trick set.

Sense of urgency over energy self-sufficiency evaporating

By KAREN TUMULTY
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Two days after taking office last year, President Reagan abolished the last of the U.S. price controls on oil and began systematically reducing the role of government in the energy business.

Arguing that private industry and the marketplace make better judgments about energy than do federal politicians and bureaucrats, Reagan began moving to scale back the multibillion-dollar effort set in motion by then-President Carter to find development of alternative fuels and erect government protections against a new interruption of oil supplies.

On the surface, at least, that strategy has worked well. Contrary to the warnings by consumer groups that decontrol would shortly add up to 12 cents a gallon to the prices of gasoline and heating oil, petroleum prices have registered their sharpest drops in years. The falling prices are the result of a persistent oil glut, which is fed in part by the increased conservation and oil-drilling boom that decontrol has spurred.

Meanwhile, U.S. oil imports have fallen to about 3 million barrels a day, less than half the 6.3 million daily level recorded when Reagan was inaugurated. And as major new sources of oil and natural gas have been found in the countries outside the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, consuming nations have been treated to the spectacle of the OPEC cartel scrambling to cut production and head off further price declines.

Beneath these encouraging results, however, some experts see cause for growing concern. Their worry is that, by leaving key decisions about energy development to private business, the nation is setting itself up for renewed vulnerability and dependence on foreign oil in the late 1980s and 1990s.

THEY CITE DECISIONS by U.S. oil companies in recent months to pull out of the Alsands project, which would have extracted oil from Canadian tar sands, as well as to scrap the Colony Oil Shale Project in Colorado, delay financing of the Alaska natural gas pipeline and scale down or shelve dozens of other projects.

"The insurance policy is being canceled," former Department of Energy Deputy Secretary Lynn Coleman said.

The critics concede that decontrol has its benefits: the encouragement of conservation and the incentive for profitable development of both conventional and unconventional domestic energy sources.

But they say the steps already taken have not brought the nation forward enough toward long-term independence from unreliable foreign energy suppliers. Private industry decisions are of necessity tied to individual company finances, they say, and are not broad enough to account for the entire nations's needs and risks.

In the 1979 oil crisis, for example, the profits of the 26 largest U.S. oil companies jumped an average of 87 percent, to $30.9 billion from $16.5 billion.

THUS, CRITICS of current policies say, oil companies have little direct incentive to make long-range, profit-draining investments that seemed vital during the last energy crisis.

Some analysts point out that that insurance is being purchased, at least indirectly, in the form of defense spending to protect Middle Eastern oil supplies. But they say the insurance comes at tremendous, almost-incalculable cost, including the risk that the nation could be drawn into a war in that region.

These critics advocate instead government subsidiizing development of new U.S. energy sources.

Not everyone shares that view. Energy expert David Richards, a vice president at Los Angeles-based Capital Research and Management Co., notes that the policy of removing prices controls from oil — begun by Carter and accelerated by Reagan — has stimulated a dramatic upsurge in expenditures to find and produce oil and other energy sources.

For example, a record 78,884 oil wells were completed last year, up 25.8 percent from 1980's previous record. And while flat oil prices have dampened that growth this year, Richards says, "energy spending around the world continues at very high levels."

THUS, HE CONTENDS, it would not make economic sense to pour federal funds into more expensive, exotic projects. Such subsidies, Richards says, would fuel high interest rates and sap the funds available for investments in other sectors of the economy.

The trouble with such arguments, counters Robert I. Hanfling, a former Department of Energy synthetic fuels specialist, is that they assume "energy is merely an economic problem and not a problem of national security."

Hanfling acknowledges that massive government synfuel subsidies could wind up being poured into exotic, expensive energy sources that would eventually prove unneeded and uneconomical.

But, he argues, "that's like saying, 'Why should we spend money on aircraft carriers and bombs and never use them?'"

Coleman and others say, further, that it is too early to write off OPEC as a force in controlling prices. The organization has surprised many analysts with its ability to unify to make dramatic production cuts. Already, some oil prices have risen, particularly in the spot market for gasoline.

ANALYSTS POINT OUT that today's ample oil supply is, to some extent, the product of the lower energy demand resulting from a worldwide recession. Many energy forecasters say renewed economic growth — particularly if it is coupled with political turmoil in the Middle East — could send oil prices soaring again.

Americans were jolted during the summer of 1979 with the reality of how reliant on foreign oil supplies they had become. President Carter pledged nothing short of "the most massive commitment of funds and resources in our history" to the development of synthetic and alternate fuels that would forever end U.S. depending on oil imports.

The centerpiece of that program was the creation of the government-sponsored U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. — originally dubbed the "Energy Security Corp." — to channel massive amounts of federal investment into promising new alternative energy sources.

Less than three years later, the sense of urgency over energy self-sufficiency seems to be evaporating.

The most dramatic turn in the fortunes of the nascent synthetic fuels industry came May 2, when Exxon scrapped the 48,000-barrel-a-day Colony project, which many experts considered the brightest synfuels prospect.

EXXON'S MOVE, which its smaller partner Tosco was effectively forced to fold, was only one in a series of announcements by such companies as Occidental Petroleum Corp., Gulf Oil Corp. and others that they were abandoning, scaling back or delaying their plans to develop synfuels.

"Exxon's decision is going to set back the (synfuels development) timetable considdrablyfor u and everybody else," said John Lyon, who heads Tosco's synthetic fuels operation.

Tosco had received a $1.1-billion federal loan guarantee to finance its 40 percent share of the project, but Lyon said such aid is too modest to assure the rapid development of a synthetic fuels industry.

The only major projects remaining under construction are the Los Angeles-based Union Oil Co.'s 10,000-barrel-a-day shale oil project near Colony on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains and the Great Plains Coal Gasification Project being developed near Beulah, N.D., by a consortium of companies.

Union has received federal price guarantees worth up to $400 million; the coal project, a $2.02 billion government loan guarantee.

UNION ACKNOWLEDGES it would not be building the project unless it were certain to have a ready-made, profitable market for its output.

The same day that Exxon officials were quietly informing Tosco of the Colony project's demise, the 10 pipeline firms and three oil companies sponsoring the proposed $43 billion Alaskan natural gas pipeline announced that they were being forced to delay the project two years because they could not find the financing they needed.

The 4,800-mile pipeline was to have transported to the West Coast and the Midwest a daily supply of up to 3.2 billion cubic feet of Alaskan natural gas, replacing 400,000 barrels of imported oil.

The Strategic Petroleum Reserve, a government-financed "oil bank," also has fallen far short of its plan. Under a 1977 congressional directive, 500 million barrels of oil were to have been stored in underground salt caverns by the end of 1980, to be available to meet the nation's needs in any international energy emergency.

The Department of Energy last month put the 250-millionth barrel in the reserve-only half of what was to have been there more than a year ago.

U.S. corporations can provide innovative range of benefits

AUSTIN — Although American corporations are uable to assume responsibility for social services cut by the Federal government, they can provide an innovative range of benefits for employees and their families, say social scientists at The University of Texas at Austin.

Benefits being pioneered by corporations include encouraging employees' families to visit the work site, cash gifts following a death, health screenings for workers and their families, and a host of others, say the researchers.

Corporations are "very conscious of their social responsibility and of the needs of their communities," says Dr. Stuart Vexler, director of continuing education in UT's School of Social Work. But they are cautious in discussing planned commitments to avoid any interpretation" that they will be able to assume the burden that the Federal government has borne for the last several years."

There is "no single corporate view" of appropriate social responsibility, says Dr. Michael L. lauderdale, associate professor of social work. Instead, there is "a wide diversity of views and also a great deal of discussion about current involvement," he says.

JONATHAN HOLE, research fellow and corporate coordinator in the Center for Social Work Research, notes that "social responsibility implies product management and distribution as well as what (corporations) might do with their employees, as well as what they might do with their contributions."

Dr. Vexler, Dr. Lauderdale and Mr. Hole currently are examining the variety of benefit programs offered workers by corporations. They will discuss some of those programs next week (May 31-June 6) on "The Next 200 years," a weekly radio production of The University of Texas at Austin.

Employees have come to expect "very routine kinds of benefits," such as health and disability insurance and a retirement program, says Dr. Lauderdale, but many corporations are experimenting with innovative benefits beyond those basics.

Dr. Lauderdale points to a corporation that is "doing a very innovative thing" with its health insurance program by screening employees and their families yearly, developing a set of health-related goals for the family and offering the necessary facilities "to improve the general quality of health of individual's entire family."

Another corporation has discontinued office parties because the manager "found that many affairs start around office parties, so they are now family parties," he says.

MANY FIRMS offering attractive benefit programs are large, but "that does not mean that small companies do not have the edge," says Hole. He notes that a "small-company atmosphere" — a management style allowing close personal relationships between managers and employees — can "make a lot of difference in employees' productivity and how they function on the job, how much loyalty there is and how long they stay with the company."

One innovative small company mentioned by Hole encourages workers' children to visit the job site after school and use the facilities after work, forbids employees to work more than 40 hours each week and maintains daily contact between managers and workers. As a result, he says, the company's profits increased fourfold in three years.

"That has some implications...for people who own and manage small businesses," he says. "There is a lot of economic value in really taking care of your employees well."

"And of all benefits," says Dr. Lauderdale, the small-company atmosphere "may be the most significant." Before companies can provide extra benefits, he continues, they must meet their first social responsibility, which "is to be productive and stay in business, and that's not easy in these times."

Types of benefits offered are determined to some extent by the nation's organizational culture, he adds. Describing a continuum whose end points are best represented by Sweden and Japan, he notes that the United States falls somewhere in the middle.

IN SWEDEN, he explains, "corporations produce products, but meeting social needs of employees and the public "is the responsibility of the Swedish government," while in Japan, "basically social responsibility (for health, retirement and housing) rests with the private employer."

Dr. Lauderdale considers this a "watershed period" in determining how American corporations will respond to social needs and says that "what we will emerge with from this decade is our own national approach with regard to social responsibility."

Dr. Vexler adds that there is a growing emphasis on organizational or corporate culture that influences how corporations perceive their responsibilities to their employees. That interest also results from competition for skilled workers and a desire to project a positive image to the community.

Although corporations are now able to assume the burden of social programs being cut by the Federal government, Dr. Lauderdale notes that "the social programs that we have" depend on" taxes that employees and employers pay, so in many ways (a corporation's profitability and longevity) is the foundation that these other things have to rest on."

"The next 200 years," broadcast nationally, is co-produced by the University of Texas News and Information service and Kut-FM (90.7 Miz), the University's public radio station.

Improved synfuel production is goal of Oklahoma chemist

NORMAN — The improved production of synthetic fuels from coal is the aim of a University of Oklahoma chemist who is working to make a World War II-vintage coal conversion process more efficient.

David Marten is studying effects of selected catalysts in the Fischer-Tropsch process of converting coal into gasoline, diesel and other fuels, as well as feedstocks for the petrochemical industry. The project is sponsored by OU's Energy Resources Center, which was founded in 1978 to fund faculty explorations into new areas of research.

"We have at least 200 years of proven coal reserves available in the United States and a dwindling supply of oil," Marten said. "It makes sense for the United States to have the best process technologically possible for coal conversion to liquid fuels.

"In the Fischer-Tropsch process, coal is converted to carbon monoxide and hydrogen, which then is converted to hydrocarbon fuels and water," he explained. A catalyst is added to the process to speed up the chemical reaction. "The most common catalysts contain the elements iron or cobalt," Marten said.

Currently, the Fischer-Tropsch process is not competitive in the energy market because of its high energy consumption and because catalysts now used in the process produce a wide range of products — many which have limited marketability.

"We really don't understand how each of the steps in the process occurs. By discovering what intermediate compounds are formed during the conversion process, we can select catalysts which will promote the specific type of hydrocarbon fuel we want," Marten said.

"For instance, current processes are yielding 60 percent gasoline-type fuels. If 90 percent of the coal could be converted to gasoline-type fuels the processes could be economically feasible."

Marten is studying the use of several iron compounds as catalysts. He has identified an intermediate compound formed with one of the iron-based catalysts in the Fischer-Tropsch process.

By identifying intermediate compounds, the composition of the catalyst and process conditions can be changed to enhance their production. The changes make possible the production of the desired hydrocarbon fuels at lower energy levels and with higher selectivity, he said.

Germany used the Fischer-Tropsch process in World War II. Today, coal-rich South Africa is using it despite its prohibitive cost, because for political reasons the country is avoiding the use of imported oil, Marten said.

"Right now, the cost of producing gasoline from coal using the Fischer-Tropsch process is approximately twice the current price of an equivalent amount of energy derived from oil." he said. "We are working to make the process an economically feasible alternative to current sources of energy as well as a viable source of feedstock for the petrochemical industry."

Oil, gas assesments fund N.M. public schools

SANTA FE—More than half of the Operational Fund for New Mexico's public schools, grades 1-12, came from assessments on the oil and gas industry in fiscal 1980-81.

Recent study by the New Mexico Oil & Gas Association found that the Operational Fund for all New Mexico schools amounted to $535.9 million. About $296.9 million - or 55 percent - was derived from oil and gas sources.

The public schools' share from oil and gas was more than enough to pay the salaries of every principal, teacher, teacher's aide, and substitute teacher in every district in the state, as well as to provide textbooks and other instructional materials, according to Peter Hanagan, Executive Vice President of the Oil & Gas Association.

Hanagan said the public schools' share averaged $1,184 per student, compared to $912,50 the previous year - a 30 percent increase.

The total amount contributed to public education from oil and gas revenues during 1980-81 came to $354,813,817. That included the $299,792,953 for public schools from elementary through high school, $43,885,586 for the state's colleges and universities, and $11,135,278 for other educational institutions and agencies.

All 89 school districts received money from oil and gas revenues even though 95 percent of the petroleum produced in New Mexico comes from only 4 counties, Hanagan noted. The Albuquerque school district received the most, $87,173,781; followed by Las Cruces, $15,727,997; and Santa Fe, $12,551,368. None of these districts produces any oil or gas.

Uranium production reported

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico processed 5.4 million tons of uranium ore in 1981 and produced 6,210 tons of uranium oxide — more than any other state, the U.S. Department of Energy says.

There was 14.5 million tons of ore processed in the United States last year, the DOE said.

Uranium concentrate production nationally during 1981 was 19,240 tons of uranium oxide, or yellowcake — a decrease of 2,610 tons from 1980, the DOE said.

The drop in production was caused by curtailments and plant closures during the year, the DOE said a news release from Grand Junction, Colo.

New Mexico's uranium concentrate production was 6,055 tons of uranium oxide from ore and 155 tons from solution mining, heap leaching and as a by-product from other activities, the DOE said.

Wyoming mined 4.9 million tons of ore, producing 4,175 tons of yellowcake from the ore and 180 tons from the other nonconventional sources, the department said.

Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Utah and Washington processed 4.2 million tons of ore, the agency said. The seven states produced 5,430 tons of yellowcake from the ore and 3,245 tons from the other sources, the DOE said.

The average grade of ore processed was 0.12 percent uranium oxide, the same as in 1980, the agency said.

Yellowcake is the material remaining from the first step of refining the ore to extract fissionable uranium.

Texas advances to world series

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Eastern Michigan coach Ron Oestrike was somewhat philosophical about his team's lopsided loss to the University of Texas in the championship game of the NCAA Central Regional baseball tournament.

"We took a gamble and it didn't work," he said.

Texas put the game away Monday with an explosive seven-run second inning. Oestrike subbed out starter Ken Spratke in the middle of the early rally and ended up using four pitchers in all.

It didn't work. The Hurons lost 9-1.

"I guess it was a poor decision on the starter," Oestrike said. "Pitching was the factor in the game. We had two bad innings and they capitalized on our mistakes."

Texas Coach Cliff Gustafson agreed the game hinged on pitching.

"The key to the whole tournament was our pitching. They were outstanding. It's really encouraging to see that kind of pitching," he said.

Calvin Shiraldi picked up the win for Texas, and Mike Konderla relieved him in the seventh.

The Longhorns advanced to their 21st NCAA World Series in Omaha, Neb., and Saturday will face Oklahoma State, winner of the NCAA Midwest Regional.

"Oklahoma State will be a tough opponent," Gustafson said. "They have some people back from last year's team and they were tough. But I think with our pitching, we should be representative."

Texas opened the scoring with Randy Day's RBI double in the first inning.

Mike Trent started the second inning with a walk, one of five for the inning, and then scored on Jeff Hearron's single to left field.

The Hurons' Tim Addis relieved Spratke then but, one walk later, Milo Choate knocked in three runs with a stand-up triple. Mike Brumley socked a three-run homer and Mark Reynolds rounded out the inning's scoring with an RBI sacrifice fly.

Brad Edick brought in the final Texas run when he delivered a bases-loaded walk to Hearron in the eighth inning.

The Hurons' lone run came in the sixth inning on Jim Riggs' sacrifice fly that scored Greg Howe.

Eastern Michigan lost to Texas 7-2 Sunday night in a third-round winners' bracket game, and then took a 30-minute break before returning to the field for an elimination game against Oklahoma. The Hurons qualified for the second game with Texas by beating the Sooners 9-2.

Texas, which accounted for seven of the 11 members of the all-tournament team, finished the tournament undefeated and improved its record to 57-4.

Choate was named the tournament's most valuable player.

"A lot of times, I feel like I don't contribute very much to the team," he said. "But I'm glad I got a chance to do something for a change."

NBA series moves to LA

76ers' victory not proof enough for LA

By JOHN NADEL
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers have proven they can beat the Los Angeles Lakers. The question now is whether they can beat them three more times.

The 76ers, having ended Los Angeles' record playoff wining string at nine with a convincing 110-94 victory Sunday in Philadelphia, try to take a 2-1 edge when the best-of-seven National Basketball Association championship playoffs resume tonight at the Lakers' Forum.

"We'll be back with a good attitude," said Lakers guard Norm Nixon, who had just six points in the loss after averaging 22 during post-season play. "The loss didn't do anything to us except make us hungrier. We've got to concentrate better, prevent them from controlling the boards."

Philadelphia's Julius Erving, overpowering in Game 2, knows the Lakers can be beaten, but are very dangerous.

"Since we taught ourselves how to beat the Lakers, they're just another team now ... but they can still be awesome," said Erving, who scored 24 points and had 14 rebounds in the victory.

The Lakers, who ran up an 8-0 record in the two playoffs leading up to the championships, began the title series with a bang, roaring to a come-from-behind, 124-117 victory over Philadelphia in last Thursday's opener. But the 76ers went back to the chalkboard and came up with strategy to overcome the Lakers' trapping defense and slow down their fast break. It worked.

"I think we've taught ourselves how to beat them," Erving said. "Now it's up to them to adjust."

That's precisely what Lakers Coach Pat Riley has in mind.

"We will have to make some corrections," he said. "But I don't doubt we can do it."

The 76ers' strategy for the second game apparently included being more aggressive on the boards and hustling back quickly to cut off the Lakers' fast break. They out-rebounded Los Angeles 52-39 and the Lakers were successful on less than half their fast breaks.

"People say you can't both crash the boards and get back quickly on defense," said Riley. "But they can. They're the quickest team in the league."

Riley said he was pleased that the Lakers took the homecourt advantage away from the 76ers — three of the five remaining games would be at the Forum if the series goes the distance.

"I'm not happy with the loss, but I'm happy with the split," Riley said of the opening two games in Philadelphia. "We'll have a lot of support at the packed Forum."

The fourth game of the playoffs is scheduled Thursday night at the Forum and Game 5 is Sunday in Philadelphia. If necessary, the sixth game will be June 8 in Los Angeles and the seventh on June 10 in Philadelphia.

Pigeons fly from Colorado to Midland

The big race this past Memorial Day weekend was, of course, the Indy 500. A handful of racing fans, however, found a longer cross-country contest more to their liking. While millions of Americans watched the cars go 'round at Indianapolis, enthusiasts following the other race watched the skies for homing pigeons winging to Midland and vicinity from northeastern Colorado.

The homers the tiny group of race fans awaited were those enetered in the last of Midland Racing Pigeon Club's spring old bird races. It was a 620-mile contest from Julesburg, Colo.

Birds flown by T.L. Stall, Midland, a veteran of years of pigeon racing, took the top four places. The first bird home was Stall's "Brownsville Hen," a seven-year-old blue check with an excellent racing record.

"She is the top bird in my loft," Stall commented. "She may have enough points for a national championship."

The old girl has twice won races from Brownsville, a distance of 502 miles, and last year placed second in the 586 mile race from Phoenix.

The race began with the release of the birds at 7:30 a.m. Saturday. The Brownsville Hen hit the landing board at 10:09 a.m. Sunday. Her speed averaged 1026.945 yards per minute, or 35.009 mph.

"As far as I know that's our best time ever for the club from 600 miles," Stall said.

Birds racing the 300, 400, and 500 mile courses the past six weeks have encountered stiff winds and violent storms. Midland-area racing flocks have been taxed severly. Losses have been high and speeds low.

Much to the owners' — and, perhaps the birds' — relief, conditions this past weekend couldn't have been much better.

The start of the race was delayed 30 minutes because of cloudiness, Stall said, "but from there on it was clear all the way." The light winds also made it easier for the racers to home.

While flying, the pigeons probably made better speed than the clocks indicate. Stall said during hot part of the day, especially on the second day of a long race the pigeons will will stop and rest, then resume their flight in the evening.

As evidence of that, one of Stall's racers arrived home with red mud smeared on it's countermark, a specially numbered rubber leg band worn by racers, indicating it had stopped for water enroute. Another had a trace of crude oil on its beak when it arrived, the obvious result of having stopped at an oil covered water hole.

When calculating the speed of racing homers over a long course, the hours of darkness are subtracted from the elpased time before velocities are computed.

The Brownsville Hen led home 46 birds representing six lofts in Midland, and one each from Big Spring, and Midkiff. The 10th bird did not return to Midland until 9:36 a.m. Monday.

Stall's second and thrid place birds averaged 970.027 and 957.354 yards per minute respectively. Speeds that convert to 33.069 and 32.637 mph.

A Stall bird placed fourth at 939.856 mph.

Fifth place went to Francis Hagen, Midkiff, (his loft is 644 miles from the release point) for an average speed of 900.241 hph.

Joe Overton, Midland, placed sixth, 860.684 ypm; John Cox, Midland, seventh, 820.173 ypm.; Missie Hagen, Midkiff, eighth, 679.990 ypm.; Stall, ninth, 658.588 ypm.; amd Randy Huddleston, Midland, placed tenth, at 565.976 ypm.

The fall racing series for young birds hatched this year will begin Sept. 18. Nine races between 100 and 300 miles in length will be flown from the east.

The Midland Racing Pigeon Club competes in races with clubs in Odessa.

Lendl upset by Wilander

By CAROLYN LESH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — Mats Wilander has made his mark on the French Open tennis tournament no matter what lies ahead for him in this Grand Slam event.

The 17-year old Swede has given the spectators a darkhorse to root for and impressed his fellow players with his promise.

Wilander, who played No.5 seed Vitas Gerulaitis today in a quarterfinal match, still had everyone talking of his upset of second-seeded Ivan Lendl.

That five-set shocker Sunday, the biggest surprise so far in the two-week clay court tournament, snapped a winning streak that had placed the Czech clay-court specialist in the finals of the last 18 tournaments he has played.

Wilander's style, which is not unlike that of his famed compatriot Bjorn Borg, has drawn compliments from players still in contention for Sunday's $66,000 title match.

"I watched a little of the Wilander-Lendl match and it was like Wilander was on No-Doz or something," No. 2 seed Jimmy Connors said Monday after he advanced into the quarterfinals with a 6-1, 6-0, 6-4 victory over fellow American Chip Hooper. "Wilander is a very good player."

Connors, who has yet to reach the finals of any French Open tournament, plays again Wednesday against Spain's Jose Higueras.

Higueras, ranked 17th worldwide, advanced with a 6-4, 6-2, 6-0 upset over No.6 seed Eliot Teltscher of the United States, ranked seventh nationally, who has now lost to Higueras in four of their nine encounters.

The Spaniard, who two weeks ago defeated John McEnroe to capture the title at a Grand Prix tournament in Hamburg, West Germany, has a 1-1 record against Wilander this year.

Track coaches upset with new system

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Sports Writer

PROVO, Utah (AP) — What would happen if they held a championship track and field meet and nobody came?

That's not exactly the case in the 61st outdoor NCAA championships, being conducted this week at Brigham Young University, but it could have resulted if the vote of the coaches on the meet's new format had had any effect.

In March at the NCAA indoor championships at Pontiac, Mich., the coaches voted 42-15 against the 12-place scoring system adopted by the NCAA Track and Field Rules Committee, and 53-7 to return to the old six-place scoring format.

The Rules Committee, however, refused to adhere to the coaches' vote and left the system it had adopted, including running championship finals with eight competitors in each event and consolation finals with six more in the field.

Those sections would be determined by the heat winners in the trials, plus the next fastest times.

What upset the coaches most was the idea that a runner in the consolation final could set a record and still not place better than ninth, since those in the championship final automatically would become the first-through-eighth place finishers.

"The scoring is ridiculous," said UCLA coach Jim Bush. "It's making a farce out of the championship meet. I don't know why they're doing it. I don't like it and I think it takes away from the meet."

"The format doesn't make it a track meet anymore," added the outspoken Bush. "The (12-place) scoring doesn't bother me as much as having the best man possibly winding up in the consolation finals because he got a bad start or got hit with a headwind in his trial heat.

The championship finals and consolation finals will apply to races under 1,500 meters for men and under 3,000 meters for women, who are competing alongside the men for the first time in the NCAA meet. In the longer races, there will be 14 runners in one final event, without consolations. They will qualify on the basis of heat winners and fastest times.

Dane Hayes of Middle Tennessee State, president of the Coaches' Association, also expressed some dissatisfaction with the new system.

"The two (final) heats are my big objection," he said. "Suppose someone in the second heat had the fastest time overall and is not the winner? How do we explain that to the American public?

"Also," said Hayes, "suppose one runner doesn't show up for the championship final or elects to walk (instead of run), he will still get credit for eighth place because he made it (to the final). I would hate to think he got eighth place because of that."

Roger Penske insists speed isn't the killer at Indy

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — How much faster can racing machines go without turning the Indianapolis 500 into a carnage or blunting the enthusiasm of its legion of fans?

"Speed isn't a killer — it's loss of concentration and foolish human errors that cause accidents just as it is every day on our roads and highways," insists Roger Penske, head of the $250 million car-building corporation that bears his name.

"Remember while speeds have been escalating, until Gordon Smiley's accident in trials this year we hadn't had a casualty here since 1973.

"No matter how many rules they impose to reduce power, human ingenuity will find ways to make the car go faster. All the while, measures are taken to make them safer."

Penske, a onetime driver himself who turned his skills in another direction, is merely enunciating a fact of life.

Man will continue to dare. He will soar to the moon, scale the highest mountains, defy the most treacherous rapids and, in auto racing, shoot for endless new plateaus of speed.

It's ingrained in the human soul.

Penske, who put Rick Mears in the fastest car in the 66th Indy 500 Sunday only to see him beaten by an eyelash by plucky Gordon Johncock, now goes back to the drawing boards.

"We never stop experimenting," he said. "New technology never ends."

Auto racing has come a long way since June 1895, when 22 primitive cars, averaging 15 mph, made the 750-mile round trip run from Paris to Bordeaux, the first recorded auto race.

The first Indy 500 was run on Memorial Day, 1911. The cars were open two-seaters, with a mechanic sitting behind the driver. Ray Harroun was the initial winner, averaging 75 mph.

By the end of Word War II the roadster had developed into a long, sleek machine with the power train on the left side to help keep it low on the turns. That was the age of the Offenhauser engines.

No more. Today the cars are winged missiles, low to the ground, hoods like arrow-heads, massive tires 19 inches across, a sophisticated power plant and such innovations as ground effects, a concept in aerodynamics that keeps the car hugging the grounnd.

The fuel isn't ordinary gasoline. It's methanol, and the machines burn it up at the rate of 1.6 miles a gallon in their blistering speeds in excess of 200 mph.

The early pace-setter Sunday, A.J. Foyt, Jr., was clocked at 218 mph on the straightaway before a defective fuel pump knocked his car out of the race.

Drivers, wearing fireproof underwear and jump suits, visored helmets and other protective gear, are squeezed into a tiny cockpit. They might as well be in straight jackets.

The whole scene is like something out of "Star Wars."

While auto racing, like thoroughbred racing, is supposed to be a means of improving the breed, these whining ground torpedoes haven't the slightest resemblance to the family jalopy.

"That's very true," concedes Penske, a handsome, silver-haired man of 45, "but we shouldn't forget that many of the improvements and safety features of the present-day passenger car were pioneered in racing cars.

"We were the first to use disc brakes, seat belts, shoulder harness and wide, tubeless tires. Our present cars are equipped with an apparatus to lock the fuel tank in a crash, thus preventing fire."

Until recently, fire was the major hazard in a crash.

Penske estimates it costs around $2.2 million to design, build and race one of the modern Indy cars. He usually has two cars (plus backups) going at a time, requiring a crew of 32 engineers, mechanics and other personnel.

"I'm like a coach," he said. "It's a team performance."

The Penske Racing Team has qualified 30 cars for the Indy 500 since 1969 with three victories, but Sunday was a disappointing day.

Young Kevin Cogan was blamed for the accident that knocked four cars, including his own, out of the race just before the green flag. Then the Penske ace, Mears, the pole sitter, lost a thriller to Johncock in the closest finish in history.

"With all the science at our disposal, nothing is sure," Penske said. "The simplest, cheapest gadget can cost you the race. That's the magic of it."

Lea blanks Astros again

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Charlie Lea says he's in the groove now. And the Houston Astros have to believe it.

The Montreal right-hander shut out the Astros for the second time in five days Monday night, 10-0 with a four-hitter, and has now pitched 26 straight scoreless innings.

"I have confidence on everything I throw," said Lea, who continues to rebound from arm problems. "I'm in the groove right now."

After a slow start, Lea had a 3-2 record and posted a 1.43 earned run average for 44 innings in May.

Lea hasn't been the only success story of late in Montreal. In addition to Lea's pitching, Tim Wallach has been providing the key hitting for the Expos. Monday night, he belted a pair of two-run homers.

Wallach, who finished May hitting .387, attributes his success to the extra hours he has spent with batting coach Billy DeMars.

"The thing about Billy is that he says things so that you can understand," Wallach said. "I've done the things he's showed me so much that everything comes natural now. I just go up to the plate and let things happen."

Lea, 4-2, had retired 26 straight batters entering the game, but the Astros, whom he beat 4-0 last Wednesday, snapped the string when Terry Puhl singled leading off the game.

The only other hits off Lea were a double Alan Ashby and singles by Joe Pittman and Craig Reynolds. Lea struck out five batters and walked none.

The Expos unleashed a 15-hit attack, pounding Houston starter Don Sutton, 7-2, for five runs in the first inning that proved more than enough for Lea.

In other National League action, it was St. Louis 11, San Francisco 6; San Diego 9, Chicago 7; New York 10, Atlanta 4; Los Angeles 5, Pittsburgh 4 and Philadelphia 5, Cincinnati 4 in 15 innings.

Cardinals 11, Giants 6

Ozzie Smith, Willie McGee and Tito Landrum drove in two runs apiece to highlight a 10-run fourth inning and send St. Louis over San Francisco.

Smith's double sent St. Louis ahead during the rally which wiped out a 3-1 San Francisco lead as part of the major leagues' biggest inning of the year.

The Giants wasted a 15-hit attack off Cardinals' starter Steve Mura and relievers John Martin and Jim Kaat. Martin, 4-4, picked up the victory after pitching the fifth through the seventh.

"It's the momentum; it's like when you play basketball," said McGee. "One team gets the momentum and just keeps going."

"I felt adrenalin flowing. Everybody was like one. They were all clapping for each other. When you get an inning like that, you try to capitalize on it."

Padres 9, Cubs 7

Ruppert Jones and Sixto Lezcano hit home runs, Tim Flannery drove in three runs and pitcher Chris Welsh knocked in a pair to lead San Diego over Chicago.

Jones hit his seventh homer in the first inning after Flannery had singled, and Lezcano belted his fifth of the season in the third off loser Doug Bird, 3-5. Welsh doubled in a run in the second and also singled to drive in a run in a four-run fourth that gave the Padres an 8-3 lead and their eventual winning run.

"I'm used to playing night games, so I usually have trouble seeing the ball in the daytime," said Flannery. "But maybe because we played a day game in St. Louis yesterday helped me to adjust today."

Mets 10 Braves 4

Ellis Valentine belted four hits, including a two-run homer, and John Stearns had three hits and three RBI as New York routed Atlanta. Charlie Puleo, 5-2, struck out a career-high 10 batters before needing Craig Swan's relief help with two out in the eighth inning.

Bob Walk, 4-4, pitched the first 22-3 innings for the Braves, leaving after an RBI single by Hubie Brooks. The Mets collected a club-record 16 hits against five Atlanta pitchers.

The game marked the return to Shea Stadium of Atlanta Manager Joe Torre, who was fired as Mets' manager last October.

"We were blown away. We played lousy," Torre said. "It was our worst game of the week, and this last week has been a bad one for us. The team's not overconfident, we're not letting panic set in. We're still in first place."

Dodgers 5, Pirates 4

Mike Scioscia and Ken Landreaux each hit sacrifice flies off reliever Kent Tekulve to break an eighth-inning tie and lift Los Angeles over Pittsburgh.

The rally gave Los Angeles a 5-3 lead and helped it withstand Jason Thompson's 13th home run in the bottom of the inning.

Reliever Steve Howe, 3-1, was the winner.

"My heart stopped four times during that game," Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda said after the Dodgers survived two dropped fly balls in the eighth by right fielder Jorge Orta.

Phillies 5, Reds 4

Third baseman Johnny Bench's throwing error in the 15th inning allowed Philadelphia's Bob Dernier to come home with the winning run as the Phillies outlasted Cincinnati.

Dernier led off with a single off Bob Shirley, 2-3, moved up on Pete Rose's sacrifice bunt and took third on a fly ball by Gary Matthews. He scored when Bench fielded Manny Trillo's grounder and fired in the dirt away from first baseman Dan Driessen.

Sid Monge, 2-0, the seventh and last available Philadelphia reliever, was the winner.

The Phillies scored four runs in the ninth after two were out, tying the score on a two-run double by Bo Diaz and two-run single by Garry Maddox.

John Stearns of the Mets is tagged out at third base by Atlanta's Jerry Royster in the fourth inning of contest in Atlanta, Monday. Stearns, who singled on the play, was caught in a rundown between first and second when Chris Chambliss threw wildly to home plate trying to catch Mookie Wilson. Streans then tried to advance to third and was caught.

Royals swinging hot bats in AL

By H. NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Two years ago, the big story in Kansas City was George Brett's run at a .400 batting average. The question this season is whether the Royals as a team can hit .300.

"When you look at our lineup, we have good hitters one through nine," Manager Dick Howser said Monday night after the Royals pounded out 18 hits, including three doubles and two triples, in thrashing the Chicago White Sox 11-4. "There is really not an easy out in the lineup."

The barrage lifted the Royals' team batting average to .294, tops in the major leagues. They also lead the American League with 96 doubles and 23 triples.

Elsewhere, the Boston Red Sox downed the Oakland A's 5-2, the Detroit Tigers nipped the California Angels 3-1, the Toronto Blue Jays edged the New York Yankees 5-4, the Cleveland Indians trounced the Minnesota Twins 9-4, the Baltimore Orioles nosed out the Texas Rangers 8-7 and the Seattle Mariners defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 5-4 in 11 innings.

Willie Wilson and John Wathan each collected three hits while Onix Concepcion drove in two runs for the Royals. Every Kansas City starter had a hit and scored at least one run and only Amos Otis failed to drive in a run. The White Sox led 4-1 after 4½ innings — Harold Baines hit a two-run homer in the fourth — but Kansas City knocked out Britt Burns with five runs in the fifth and added five more in the sixth.

Besides the 18 hits against Burns and two relief pitchers, Kansas City also capitalized on Chicago's sloppy fielding and five walks to hand the White Sox their fourth consecutive loss. It was enough to prompt Manager Tony LaRussa to hold a team meeting after the game.

"Basically, we talked about how we stunk up the joint. There were 40,000-plus who were witnesses," LaRussa said. "We played bad. I don't think we quit, we just played bad."

Red Sox 5, A's 2

Rick Miller hit a two-out grand slam home run in the fourth inning after Oakland botched a double play. Miller hit his third career grand slam off Bo McLaughlin to erase a 1-0 Oakland lead. McLaughlin retired the first batter in the fourth before Carney Lansford got an infield hit. Dave Stapleton grounded to second baseman Davey Lopes, who tried to start a double play by tagging Lansford. However, Lansford eluded the tag and Lopes threw wildly past first base trying to get Stapleton.

Stapleton went to second and Lansford, who was on the bag, was then caught in a rundown between second and third. McLaughlin then loaded the bases for Miller by hitting Glenn Hoffman with a pitch and walking Gary Allenson. Rickey Henderson and Tony Armas homered for Oakland.

"Once the runner (Lansford) stopped between first and second, he (Lopes) should have thrown to first to get the batter. We still could have gotten Lansford in a rundown," said A's Manager Billy Martin.

Tigers 4, Angels 3

Lou Whitaker's two-out single with the bases loaded in the ninth inning drove in the tying runs and pinch hitter Jerry Turner singled in the winning run as Detroit scored three times to beat California. California reliever Doug Corbett retired the first two baters in the ninth before singles by Richie Hebner and Larry Herndon and a walk to Lance Parrish loaded the bases for Whitaker.

Blue Jays 5, Yankees 4

Rance Mulliniks drove in three runs with a pair of doubles as Toronto snapped the Yankees' three-game winning streak and stretched its only string of victories to three. Mulliniks gave the Blue Jays the lead for good at 2-1 in the third inning when he doubled off Roger Erickson to score Alfredo Griffin and Damaso Garcia, who had singled. Mulliniks doubled another run across in the fifth and scored what proved to be the winning run on a double by Willie Upshaw. Graig Nettles and Roy Smalley homered for New York.

Indians 9, Twins 4

Von Hayes drove in five runs with a homer, double and a bases-loaded walk and Andre Thornton also homered to spark Cleveland to its eighth consecutive victory and saddle the Twins with their 12th straight loss. Minnesota's losing streak matches this season's major league high established by the Texas Rangers and is one short of the all-time Minnesota record of 13 set in 1961. Hayes' three-run homer capped a four-run first inning and Thornton's 14th home run of the season made it 7-3 in the third.

Orioles 8, Rangers 7

Rookie Cal Ripken Jr. stole home to break a sixth-inning tie. Al Bumbry followed with a run-scoring single and Ken Singleton hit a two-run homer to cap a decisive three-run eighth inning. Ripken, who had an RBI double in the second inning, started the sixth with a single and took third on Lenn Sakata's two-out single. The Orioles' 8-3 lead was just enough to offset a four-run Texas ninth on Leon Roberts' three-run homer and a solo shot by Larry Parrish. Randy Bass and Billy Sample also homered for Texas.

Mariners 5, Brewers 4

Rookie Paul Serna's second homer of the game, a two-run shot with one out in the bottom of the 11th, gave Seattle its eighth victory in the last nine games. With one out, Lenny Randle singled off the leg of pitcher Jerry Augustine and Serna, who hit a solo homer in the seventh, hit the game-winner.

The story of 'R:' A government tale gone long

WASHINGTON (AP) — This is the Story of R — a tale of special interests and government bureaucracy and consumer frustration. It describes the effort to adopt a federal rule, in this case, the rule on how to label insulation.

This seemingly simple process kept the wheels of Washington spinning for five years — and it was done with what one official calls "expedited procedures."

Indeed, the rule for "R values" of insulation — expected to be issued in final form this summer — took less time to develop than many other laws or regulations.

IRONICALLY, CONGRESS HAS since passed legislation lengthening the process, following complaints by industry — and the Reagan administration — that federal agencies were foisting needless regulations on business.

If the Federal Trade Commission's insulation case is any example, however, industry is by no means left out of government rule-making.

Under procedures set by Congress and the FTC, there was plenty of time for comment and rebuttal, hearings at which five segments of the insulation industry were represented. Then there was a re-rebuttal period.

Then the rule was postponed by an industry law suit, by Congress, and by the need to develop new technology to satisfy claims of the suit.

The process began in 1977, with the insulation business booming as homeowners scrambled to fight skyrocketing energy prices. It is ending with the boom over, at least for now, in the midst of a depressed housing market.

The rule will set a precise "R-value" measurement that will let consumers accurately judge one type of insulation against another. R value measures resistance to heat — the higher the number, the more effective the insulation.

FTC lawyer Kent Howerton says the rule puts a stop to the "ridiculous...exaggerated savings claims" fed the public in the late '70s. He described the tone back then as "put our insulation in your attic and save 50 to 75 percent of your fuel bill."

SPURRED BY SUCH claims, the FTC set up a task force in May 1977, proposed a rule for "substantiated" R-value measurements, allowed 60 days for comment from interested parties, and began public hearings the following February.

The four weeks of hearings were designed as part what Howerton called the FTC's "expedited rule-making procedures."

As the FTC lawyer explained it, rather than take weeks to narrow what issues would be examined, the commission ruled that representatives of nine interested groups could question any witness at the hearings.

The groups included makers of four different kinds of insulation — mineral wool, cellulose, cellular plastic, and urea formaldehyde foam — along with insulation installers. Also represented were environmental and consumer groups, other government agencies, and the FTC staff.

After the hearings came 30 days for rebuttal and then, Howerton said, "the staff here went through all those thousands of pages of testimony, written comment and rebuttal evidence, and...recommended a final rule."

He said FTC lawyers put in 100-hour weeks at the height of the process. "We had a notice of proposed rule-making published in November of 1977 and the final staff report in July of 1978, which is pretty fast for about any regulatory body," he said.

NEXT CAME A SEPARATE report by the FTC hearing officer, then a chance for any of the nine interest groups to appear before the commission; and finally the commission's own examination of the evidence.

What resulted was a rule calling for standardized R-value test procedures, labeling requirements, a fact sheet on R-values, and an explanation of the measurement in advertisements. It was published on Aug. 27, 1979, and was to go into effect that Nov. 30.

On Aug. 31, however, four makers of mineral wool insulation challenged two elements of the rule in federal court. Francis Kethcart, a lawyer for Johns-Manville Inc., said the firms objected to the requirement to test insulation at "representative thickness" and one calling for an explanation of R values in television ads.

Insulation had long been tested in one-inch samples, with the R-value for greater thicknesses extrapolated from that. An independent testing organization had called for new tests, saying the old method overstated the R value for thick insulation by as much as 10 percent.

But, said Kethcart, no technological basis existed for such tests. He also said disclaimers required in the rule made TV ads too costly.

Payment system leaves Canada's doctors feeling ill

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian physicians have been sparring with provincial governments in bitter fee disputes that raise questions about the future of the country's comprehensive system of state-funded medicine.

The threat and reality of doctors abandoning their offices to go on strike for higher pay has hit one province after another, from the Pacific coast to the streets of Montreal.

In Ontario, the most populous province, rotating strikes culminating in a province-wide walkout this month forced the government to increase fees by 14 percent this year, with guarantees of 3 percent a year above the cost of living for the life of the five-year contract.

Although the Ontario conflict was settled before many patients suffered more than inconvenience, disputes are simmering in Manitoba, where physicians are demanding binding arbitration, and in Quebec, where 5,500 general practitioners took to the streets on one of the days the Ontario doctors were striking.

Until the late 1960s, Canadians needing medical care paid for it in much the same way as most Americans still do — from their own pockets or through private insurance plans.

The current Canadian system is known as Medicare, but it is much more extensive than the American program of the same name.

Government funds — mostly from tax revenues but including user premiums in some provinces — pay for all but a tiny portion of Canadian doctor, hospital and nursing home bills. Usually the government is billed directly.

In recent years, though, more doctors have been "extra-billing" in provinces where that is allowed — charging patients a few dollars on top of what the government will pay. That practice is not permitted in Ontario, but doctors can "opt out" of the medical system and bill their patients, who are reimbursed by the government in accordance with its fee schedule.

The recent agreement with Ontario physicians raises the fee for an appendectomy, for instance, to $151.35 ($124.10 U.S.) from the previous $140.10 ($114.90 U.S.). For an annual check-up, the government will pay the doctor $26.80 ($21 U.S.), compared to $23.10 ($18.75 U.S.) last year.

Provincial Health Minister Larry Grossman said the agreement would raise the typical full-time physician's income — after expenses but before taxes — to about $122,000 ($100,000 U.S.).

Douglas Geekie, communications director for the Canadian Medical Association in Ottawa, said in a telephone interview that an increasing number of doctors across the country have been taking advantage of the chance to "extra bill" or "opt out."

"The CMA believes the patient should pay a portion of all health care costs," Geekie said.

Dr. Edward Moran, general secretary of the Ontario Medical Association, agrees, saying, "If there's one lesson the U.S. can take from Canada it's that single-source funding will get you into bad, bad trouble."

Moran said doctor fees lost ground to high inflation in the middle 1970s, leaving physicians feeling they had to resort to protests and strikes to protect their incomes.

"If there's bitterness among doctors, and there is," he said, "it's bitterness that the government forced the medical profession to take actions that are at cross-purposes with its instincts and professional standards."

Some critics believe a greater reliance on patients to pay the fees threatens the heart of the system: comprehensive health care available to anyone, regardless of ability to pay.

Former Supreme Court Justice Emmett Hall, in a 1980 report commissioned by the short-lived Conservative Party government of Joe Clark, urged a ban on extra-billing. What could develop, Hall said, was a two-tier health system: one for the rich and one for the poor.

Federal Health Minister Monique Begin has said she agrees with Hall, but she does not seem ready to press the point on reluctant provincial officials. The federal government in Ottawa pays about 50 percent of medical costs, but the programs are administered by the 10 provinces.

Although Canada's Medicare system sometimes appears to be under siege, there seems to be little sentiment for drastic change, certainly not for a return to a U.S.-style marketplace.

An article in the monthly Canadian Forum, while asking in its title, "Are Canadian Doctors Threatening the Health Care System?" also conceded: "Many observers, be they providers or consumers of care, regard Canada's medi-dramas as a tempest in a teapot. Most M.D.'s are inside the system; most patients do not face or need not fear extra charges."

The problem with most connecting flights is that you don't always connect. But now, there's a new service that solves that problem—Texas International's Continental Shuttle.

If you've ever been left at the gate, this is the service for you.

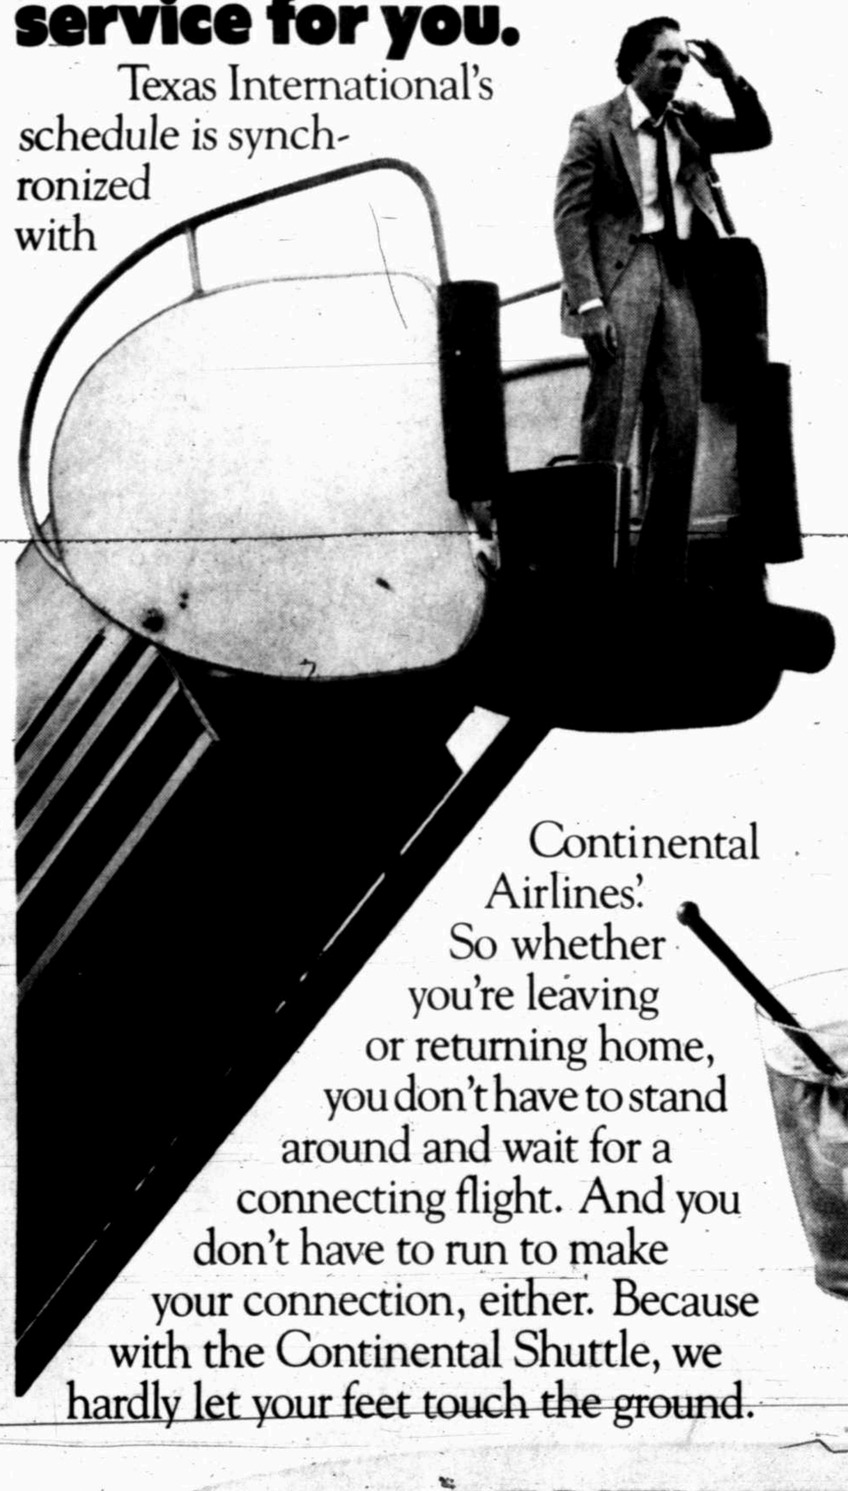
Texas International's schedule is synchronized with Continental Airlines'. So whether you're leaving or returning home, you don't have to stand around and wait for a connecting flight. And you don't have to run to make your connection, either. Because with the Continental Shuttle, we hardly let your feet touch the ground.



After you arrive on Texas International in Houston, you board an electric cart that whisks you to your Continental Airlines flight in the same terminal. And in Denver and El Paso, Texas International's and Continental's gates are side by side, so you can walk to your flight in seconds. You'll connect easier and faster because you don't change terminals. And we make sure your luggage arrives at the same time and place you do.

If saving time's not enough, you'll also save money because no other airline offers lower fares. And besides free drinks, you'll get free headphones, too.

Abortion right ruled girl's choice

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — The key issue in the debate over an 11-year-old girl's decision to have an abortion is her right to refuse to bear the child, says the director of a group helping to finance the operation.

"I wouldn't think that the issue is abortion versus adoption, but the right of an 11-year-old girl not to become a mother," said Anne Gaylor, one of the founders of the Women's Medical Fund.

The Chicago girl, who is 19 weeks pregnant, has an abortion scheduled for June 9 at University of Wisconsin Hospital and Clinics in Madison.

Over the weekend, the anti-abortion group Wisconsin Citizens Concerned for Life said a Brooklyn, Wis., woman offered to adopt the Chicago girl's child if she would change her mind and have the baby.

"To have a child who weighs less than 90 pounds become an incubator (for someone who wants to adopt her baby) is to me the height of cruelty," Ms. Gaylor said.

She said carrying a child puts a tremendous strain on the bodies of fully developed women, and the effects on a child could be even more severe.

Ms. Gaylor and a University of Wisconsin professor and his wife founded the Women's Medical Fund in 1972 to help indigent women and girls needing abortions. The group, whose members are volunteers, has raised donations to aid about 1,000 people, including 239 this year, she said.

Besides money from the fund, the unidentified Chicago girl's abortion is being financed in part by her mother's welfare benefits, according to Janeen Turner, a social worker at Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago.

She said last week that the 11-year-old is coming to Madison because second trimester abortions at UW Hospital cost $965, compared with $1,600 to $1,800 at Chicago facilities.

Ms. Turner discussed adoption with the girl and her mother. If the girl had decided to bear the child, welfare benefits would have covered pre-natal care, hospital delivery and nutritional supplements, she said.

Ms. Gaylor said as far as she knew, the girl has not changed her decision to have the abortion.

Patient policy unsuccessful to some

DALLAS (AP) — A well-intentioned movement to free mental patients from institutions' back wards has forced thousands to make their homes in back alleys, a Dallas newspaper says.

In the name of "deinstitutionalization," hundreds of thousands of mentally ill people have been turned out of hospitals and told to get care in the community.

The number of the nation's hospitalized patients has dropped by nearly two-thirds, from 500,000 to 180,000, the Dallas Times-Herald reported Sunday. In Texas, the number has fallen from 15,800 to 5,600.

But community treatment is often unavailable, so the former patients are alone in America's cities, panhandling, eating at charity soup kitchens, and sleeping under bridges and in abandoned buildings.

In Dallas County, the newspaper said, it found a critical lack of services, facilities and staff, and said sources estimated as many as a third of the city's street people are mental patients.

The newspaper said some mental patients on the streets have histories of violent behavior. Untreated, these people pose a threat to themselves or others.

"Skid row has become the dumping ground. They are putting people in the community, but the community is not ready for it...People are being released with very little, if any, follow-up care," said the Rev. Jerry Hill, an Episcopal minister who runs a downtown soup kitchen here.

"They just turned me out in the community to be part of the community again. But they never give you enough to do it," said Douglas Blaine Bowen, whose 17-year journey to a Dallas alley led through mental hospitals in Illinois, Connecticut, South Dakota, Montana and Wyoming.

The Times-Herald said most of the state money for mental health is not spent on the institutions that treat the most people.

The newspaper said about 75 percent of Texas' mental health care budget goes for 20 percent of the mentally ill and mentally retarded who are in institutions. Only about 20 percent goes to the 80 percent of the patients in community programs. The remaining 5 percent goes to administration, research and training.

A similar disparity shows up around the country.

Congress has spent $2.9 billion on community mental health centers since 1963. It was thought neighborhood psychiatric clinics, halfway houses and day hospitals could treat the mentally ill in familiar surroundings and spare them the stultifying monotony of the hospitals.

But the U.S. General Accounting Office said in a 1977 report that the money was insufficient.

State hospitals usually are in rural areas and employ large numbers of people that rural state representatives want to keep happy, he said.

After yellow, green ribbons, it's time for red

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Yellow ribbons remembered the hostages, green ribbons recalled the Atlanta murders, and now red ribbons fly to protest a tax break for members of Congress.

The thin red streamers are popping up on car antennas and car door handles as angry voters show their displeasure over the $75-a-day tax break Congress gave itself in December. They may be having some effect — the Senate has already decided to scratch the deduction.

Under the law, members of Congress are allowed to deduct $75 a day for living expenses in Washington while Congress is in session — even when they are not there.

Pittsburgh radio station KDKA has given away 85,000 red ribbons to listeners since talk show host John Cigna suggested the protest in March.

"IT'S CRAZY. PEOPLE are flocking to this," Cigna said.

On the wings of a song, "Remember in November," the protest has spread from San Francisco to Boston. Radio stations in Cleveland, Tulsa, Chicago, New Orleans, Boca Raton, Fla., and Wichita, Kan., have played the protesters' anthem.

Claire Sachnoff, a school teacher from Turtle Creek, wrote the song after listening to callers complain to Cigna about the tax deduction. She set the lyrics to the tune of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Mrs. Sachnoff does a solo on the record, backed up instrumentally by five friends — a mill worker, a cabinet maker, an English teacher and two accountants. They call themselves Claire and the People.

One verse goes:

"Remember in November, is a phrase we now promote. Remember in November, go write yourself a note. Fly that bright red ribbon, that will be the antidote. Remember in November when you vote."

On Thursday, the Senate voted 70-23 to repeal the tax break. Its fate now rests with a House-Senate conference committee that could overturn the Senate's action.

"I think it's great...This proves it can be done," Cigna said when he heard of the Senate vote.

Mrs. Sachnoff finds it hard to believe that her song has helped make politicans change their minds.

"To think that someone like me has a hand in making them more accountable is just unbelievable," she said.

Mrs. Sachnoff said she's not for or against any candidate, and going to the polls on election day is as political as she ever got.

"But I'm angry. I have to pay an awful lot of taxes," she said.

THE SONG HAS MADE her a minor celebrity. From the school nurse's office, she gave a telephone interview to a San Francisco radio station. Her mailbox has been filled with letters and poems from several states.

Cigna said he chose the ribbons after callers suggested tying white handkerchiefs to their antennas. He said he's surprised at how the protest caught on.

Around Pittsburgh, supermarket parking lots are peppered with cars flying red ribbons and bandanas from their aerials. Houses, trees, door knobs and light poles are wrapped in red streamers.

One women flew a pair of size 42 red bloomers from her car's antenna, and others have sent KDKA poems, cartoon books and bumper stickers with the "Remember in November" theme.

The song, recorded as a 45 rpm single, is being distributed by Red Ribbon, a company set up to distribute protest paraphernalia. Appropriately, the company is running in the red, said spokesman Joe Gill.

"This was not set up to make it a profitable thing. Our prime purpose is to spread the word," he said.

Red Ribbon has dispatched 7,000 to 8,000 copies of the record, mostly to radio and television stations. The records sell for 70 to 80 cents a copy.

Local tax protest groups have latched onto the record, trying to sell it at a profit to raise funds.

The popularity of the red ribbon campaign hasn't been lost on the Pennsylvania State Education Association, the state's largest teachers organization. Teachers upset at Gov. Dick Thornburgh's proposed cuts in school funds tied a big red ribbon to the front gate of the governor's mansion in Harrisburg last month.

The teachers' group also displays a 90-foot red-and-white banner on its headquarters across from the state Capitol. The sign reads "Remember in November."

Rep. Doug Walgren, a Pittsburgh Democrat, is among those leading the fight in Congress to repeal the tax break. Walgren, who wears a bright red tie most of the time as a sign of protest, has refused to take the tax benefit. He was also one of three members of Congress who testified against it at an IRS hearing in Washington on May 11.

Hinckley rebuttal will begin today

WASHINGTON (AP) — The defense in the last three weeks has tried to portray John W. Hinckley Jr. as insane and therefore not able to stop himself from shooting President Reagan on March 30, 1981.

Now the government steps forward with its own battery of psychiatrists, trying to prove that Hinckley was a calculating killer who coolly took a shower, ate breakfast, read the newspaper and picked the deadliest bullets from his supply to go gunning for the president.

GARAGE SALE

Patio Sale, Yard Sale whatever term you use, it's an enjoyable and profitable experience. It's your opportunity to "clean up" while you "clean out." You'll become re-acquainted with your neighbors and meet new friends, and the fresh air is good for your health.

Check your attic, basement, garage and closets for good, but no-longer-used items - furniture, tools, the list goes on and on. Every item should be priced, of course. You may want to combine your sale with a friend or neighbor. Choose your days, get your signs ready and place your ad in the Classified section. Your ad should list a few key items, give the date, time, and good directions.

A friendly Classified Ad-Visor will help you word your Garage Sale ad for maximum results.
