Plant choice

Use of native plants helps conserve water

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Water deserves top billing in West Texas.

It has far more than cleansing, cooling, quenching, flushing and mixing qualities.

"Water out in this country ought to be considered almost spiritually," said Burr Williams, a Midland naturalist-horticulturist who tries to use water at the optimum. That means not using too much, which is wasteful, or too little — also wasteful — particularly on growing things, such as grasses, plants, shrubs and trees.

Life-supporting water is abused, misused and often taken for granted even in West Texas' dry spells.

Williams has a penchant for encouraging native flowers, shrubs, trees and grasses that fare well in West Texas' semi-arid desert.

It's a concept called xeriscaping, which converts to frugal water management. The key is planting grasses, shrubs, brushes and trees that are suitable to the soil and climate, and, particularly in normally dry West Texas, to the limited water supply.

"This is not a flash-in-the-pan," Williams said of xeriscaping. "It's something that has been going on for quite awhile. It is really the wave of the future because of the problems with our underground water."

The concept was introduced in Denver 15 years ago, he said. And people in Austin have "really gotten into the idea."

"The whole point of xeriscaping is water conservation, which is pretty dang important these days," Williams said. The approach "should be done more out here."

Williams said that 40 percent of water in Midland "goes to landscape use. And the main thing is to start using it a little bit more wisely. And that is cutting it down and also apply it properly."

And he's hoping to instill respect for water — generate a water consciousness.

And in that regard, he has a suggestion: a shrine.

Williams suggests that people build a "little tiny pond" in their backyards "to make a shrine to water."

"The animals and the insects and the birds all come to the water, and you get to see a lot more of our fellow inhabitants" on earth, Williams said. "And it shows how special water is."

Water is common but uncommonly precious.

"Water in West Texas is pretty special," said Williams. "The only way we get it is by rain or water from deep in the ground, which is called 'fossil water,' " he said. "It has been there for hundreds of thousands of years, if not millions."

"That will run out someday, eventually," if it's not used wisely and if it is not replenished.

And in the current drought, rainwater seems even more rare.

But in the 1980s, much of West Texas had "plenty" to water due to extraordinary rains.

"In the '50s, we didn't have very much at all," he said of the seven-year drought.

Derailment rocks small Texas town

EMHOUSE, Texas (AP) — A freight train derailed near this small town Saturday morning, sparking a huge fireball and forcing the evacuation of several families living nearby, authorities said.

Nobody was reported injured in the accident shortly before 8:30 a.m., said Mike Cox, spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety.

Twenty-four cars derailed, some spilling liquid propane or other hazardous materials.

Fearing further explosions, firefighters were allowing the wreckage to burn itself out. Two cars among the scattered wreckage continued burning past 4 p.m., and huge, black plumes of smoke could be seen for 15 miles.

Doug Fogg, Corsicana Police Department's assistant fire chief, said it was common practice to allow derailment fires to extinguish themselves.

Reporters and other non-residents were being kept out of the area.

"It was a major derailment," said John Grundmann, superintendent of operations for Fort Worth-based Burlington Northern, which owns the train.

He said the 44-car train, bound for Houston from Tulsa, Okla., lost its back 24 cars on a curve.

The cause wasn't immediately known.

The three crewmembers, who weren't identified, were given drug tests, a standard procedure following train accidents.

The train carried hazardous materials, Cox said. He said some of the material might leak into a creek, but other authorities discounted the possibility.

Also, initial reports that toxic fumes were present proved false, said DPS Cpl. Mike Bishop.

But authorities were worried about one car which spilled up to 2,000 pounds of sodium chlorate, a highly flammable powder.

"If it mixes with other types of materials, it could vastly accelerate that fire," Grundmann said.

He also said it could seep into a pond that feeds a nearby creek. But officials said it was very unlikely the water supply would be contaminated.

Sodium chlorate is used in making cosmetics, matches and explosives, among other things.

Trains were rerouted to other lines between Dallas and Corsicana.

Storms cut power in two states

Associated Press

Wind and rain triggered mudslides in California and doused crews cleaning up the Huntington Beach oil spill, and thousands of people in two states remained without power on Saturday in the wake of severe storms.

In Washington, a cold snap followed the snowfall that blanketed the state, while emergency officials toured north Georgia to assess damage from floods that left two dead and forced evacuations of more than 1,000.

Rivers across Alabama also swelled out of their banks on Saturday, covering farmland and threatening some homes after two days of torrential rain that was blamed for one drowning death. Later Saturday, President Bush declared six central Alabama counties a disaster area.

In Southern California, tons of mud and large rocks rolled onto Malibu Canyon Road, forcing the Highway Patrol to close the narrow, twisting road from the ocean to the Ventura Freeway.

The storm knocked out power for for about 10,000 customers in sections of Los Angeles, said Ed Freudenberg, a Department of Water and Power spokesman.

In Huntington Beach, some 470 workers in yellow rain slickers and white hard hats spent 12-hour shifts in the rain cleaning up oil washed ashore from the Feb. 7 spill from the tanker American Trader.

Wind and waves knocked apart a boom blocking Newport Harbor, and boat operators struggled in rough seas to install temporary booms, said Sgt. Andy Gonis of the Newport Beach Police Department.

But officials said the storm did offer some benefits.

"We're thinking the rain might actually help by uncovering some of the oil and tar balls that might be under the sand," said Tony Kozlowski, spokesman for British Petroleum, which had chartered the American Trader.

Northern Californians got pelted by rain, snow and hail Saturday as an arctic storm left about 200,000 homes powerless.

"I'm hoping they have blankets, wood-burning stoves, stuff like that," Pacific Gas and Electric Co. spokesman Lyle LaFaver said about the customers who found themselves without gas or electricity after heavy winds and snows damaged the utility's transmission system.

Power had been knocked out for about 100,000 Northern Californians when the storm first blasted through the region on Friday. LaFaver said Butte, El Dorado, Placer and Nevada counties remained hard-hit on Saturday, and 25,000 could still be without service on Sunday.

Most of the communities have between two and three feet of snow. Many also lost telephone service because of the storm.

More than 80 miles of Interstate 80 remained closed between Applegate and the Nevada state line because of blizzard conditions, the Highway Pa-

Dissidents' paintings reflect 'unhappiness'

By DAVID MORRIS

The light of reform has begun to dawn over the Soviet Union and its satellites.

But Arthur and Marillyn Odum remember the dark days of Leonid Brezhnev's reign and the courage of a handful of Russian artists who dared to defy him.

"It was tough city," said Odum, who was a U.S. diplomat in Moscow from 1967 to 1989. "A real police state."

In spite of KGB scrutiny, Odum and his wife befriended a group of dissident Moscow painters whose work crossed the state-mandated boundaries of socialist realism.

When the time came to leave Moscow, the Odums bought about 40 dissident paintings to take with them.

"The paintings were an impression of unhappiness ... with the regime

Japanese vote for Parliament

TOKYO (AP) — Japan held parliamentary elections today that put the scandal-plagued governing Liberal Democratic Party to its toughest test in decades.

A controversial sales tax and sex- and influence-peddling scandals have dogged Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu's party for nearly two years, forcing the resignation of two prime ministers.

Saturday, hundreds of candidates wearing white gloves to symbolize clean politics held final campaign rallies, and the issue was on the minds of some voters.

"The consumption tax and cleaning up politics are the most important issues in this election," said a middle-aged woman coming out of a voting booth who declined to give her name.

But Masaru Oshima, 48, said although opposition parties are gaining support, "their policies are unclear and their leadership untested." He said he voted for the Liberal Democrats.

Polls indicated that the large number of uncommitted voters could hurt the Liberal Democratic Party, which has ruled Japan since 1955. The conservative party needed to win at least 257 seats in the 512-seat lower house of Parliament to retain its majority and win the right to name the prime minister.

A victory for the Socialists could lead to Japan having its first female prime minister — 61-year-old Socialist Chairwoman Takako Doi.

Polls opened at 7:00 a.m. (5 p.m. EST Saturday) and were to close 11 hours later. Partial election results were expected later Sunday, but final results were not expected until Monday afternoon.

Mild winter weather across the country was expected to contribute to an unusually high voter turnout; polls predicted 80 percent of Japan's 90 million eligible voters would cast ballots.

A poll released Saturday by the nationwide Asahi Shimbun newspaper reaffirmed earlier surveys showing the Liberal Democrats leading the Socialists by about 20 percentage points.

But 32.2 percent of the 103,200 people surveyed said they had not decided which party they supported. The newspaper did not provide a margin of error for the survey, conducted Feb. 8-9 and 11-12.

Ms. Doi said today she was "confident that people will move the mountain a second time," referring July elections for the less powerful upper house of Parliament in which the governing party lost its majority for the first time in 34 years. That chamber is now controlled by a Socialist-led coalition.

Outside his Tokyo residence, Kaifu told reporters, "It's up to the judgment of the people, but I'm certain that the Liberal Democratic Party's policies are generally accepted by the people."

Both leaders voted earlier by absentee ballots.

At a rally Saturday, Kaifu urged several thousand people at Tokyo's Shinjuku Station not to be swayed by the opposition.

He accused the Socialists of being unclear on their position on defense and said a comment by Ms. Doi that such issues could be worked out "overnight" after the election was "irresponsible."

"We can't allow someone who does things overnight to take over this precious country," he said.

In an effort to win support from conservatives, the Socialists watered down their longstanding opposition to the U.S.-Japan security treaty, under which the United States bases 50,000 troops in Japan. But opposition to the treaty remains party policy, giving the conservatives an opening to accuse Socialists of weakening Japan's security.

The Liberal Democrats had a disastrous year in 1989, caused by scandal and the passage of the unpopular 3 percent sales tax in April.

Also in April, Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita resigned to accept responsibility for an influence-peddling scandal in which politicians profited from sales of cut-rate stock shares supplied by the Recruit Co. conglomerate.

Takeshita's replacement, Sousuke Uno, lasted only two months and was plagued by allegations of extramarital affairs.

He quit after the sex scandal and sales tax cost the Liberal Democrats their majority in the upper house in the July election. The party also lost farmers' support for partly opening agricultural markets to imports.

Ms. Doi urged several thousand people at a rally in the western Tokyo suburb of Hachioji to "show you believe the consumption tax and money politics are unforgivable."

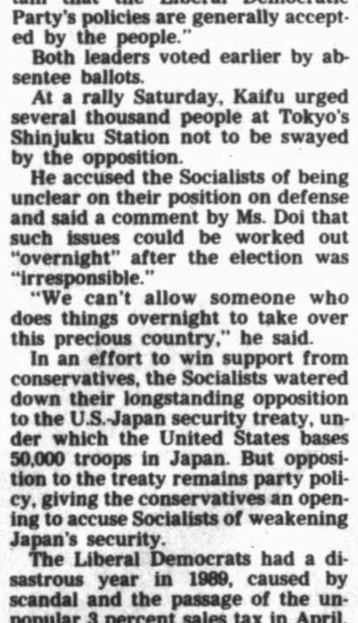

Kaifu, 59, urged voters not to base their decisions solely on the sales tax and promised the Liberal Democrats would not allow another Recruit scandal.

The Uno scandal and the sales tax, which was particularly disliked by housewives who do most of the family shopping, gave women in this male-dominated society a new voice in politics. The women's vote was said to have played a large part in the Liberal Democrats' election loss in July.

Christian militia attack Aoun's helicopter base

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christian militiamen struck back Saturday after a major defeat in Beirut, launching a massive tank-led assault against a helicopter base held by Gen. Michel Aoun's army north of the capital.

Rescuers evacuated 32 bodies — some mutilated beyond recognition — from burned-out cars, tanks, apartments and narrow alleys of east Beirut's Ein Rummaneh district, taken by Aoun's troops Friday.

Among the latest fatalities was Khalil Dehaineh, 26, a part-time photographer for the British news agency Reuters.

Police said Dehaineh was killed by machine-gun fire in the Shiite Moslem district of Shiyah as he was taking pictures in the Ein Rummaneh neighborhood. A Shiite militiamen standing next to Dehaineh also was killed.

Aoun's gunners and Lebanese Forces militiamen dueled with mortars in the streets of east Beirut Saturday, starting a dozen fires in the districts of Ashrafiyeh and Nabaa, the last two pockets controlled by the Christian militia in the capital.

"We are taking a short rest before we start uprooting them from Ashrafiyeh," one of Aoun's soldiers told reporters in Ein Rummaneh on Beirut's southeastern edge.

Police said at least 1,000 heavily armed fighters from Samir Geagea's Lebanese Forces militia were engaged in a three-pronged attack on the helicopter base at Adma, on the hilltop above the famous Casino du Liban in Kesrouan province.

Official denies reports of riots in Samarkand

MOSCOW (AP) — A regional Communist Party leader Saturday denied reports of rioting in Uzbekistan and another top official said the rumors were aimed at inflaming ethnic tensions in the neighboring republic of Tadzhikistan.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda warned that ethnic strife threatens the reforms of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and thousands of people in Leningrad demonstrated against civil violence, particularly anti-Semitism.

Radio Moscow Friday night reported clashes between members of the Moslem majority and ethnic Armenians in the ancient Uzbekistan city of Samarkand. It said army troops had been sent to the city and a curfew had been imposed.

It attributed its information to the Interfax news service, a joint venture affiliated with Radio Moscow.

But Nasyr Yakubov, the first party secretary of Samarkand, told The Associated Press by telephone that his city was quiet, there were no riots and no curfew was imposed. He said the city's 12,000 Armenian residents live in peace with members of other ethnic groups.

Interfax later quoted an unidentified high-ranking Interior Ministry official in Moscow as saying the report amounted to "provocative information aimed at aggravating the situation in the region and provoking new national disorders."

Radio Moscow said further checks by its correspondents showed that Samarkand was "calm and quiet."

The city is about 1,700 miles southeast of Moscow and has a population of 390,000, mostly Moslems. The Armenian refugees are mainly Christians and had fled ethnic violence in the mostly Moslem republic of Azerbaijan.

In the Tadzhik capital of Dushanbe, the army general in charge of enforcing a state of emergency said that thousands of troops have helped to stabilize the city after a week of unrest.

"I cannot say we have full control over the situation now, but there are no more outrages like those that took place Feb. 13 and 14," Lt. Gen. Georgy Kondratyev said in an interview with the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossia.

The violence in Dushanbe, a city of 596,000 people 1,600 miles southeast of Moscow, was touched off Feb. 10 by rumors that Armenian refugees were arriving by the thousands and receiving scarce apartments.

The official Tass news agency said the death toll in Tadzhikistan had risen to 22.

In a front-page editorial, Pravda said increasing civil violence and confrontations in the far-flung Soviet republics are endangering Gorbachev's reforms.

The newspaper said the Soviet Union was at a turning point. Democracy, it said, must be defended from political extremists on the right and left.

"Democracy should not be left defenseless before the danger of civil confrontation, chaos and unstability," Pravda said. "Unfortunately, the danger is becoming more and more real."

"The key question of the day is on what ground stabilization will be achieved," it said. "On the grounds of democracy, with the help of emerging democratic institutions, on the ground of national and inter-ethnic accord — or in accordance with the forced methods of 'tightening the screws' happily used in the past?"

Gorbachev adviser opposes NATO membership for reunified Germany

WEST BERLIN (AP) — The Soviet Union will block the reunification of Germany if the West insists on NATO membership for the combined states, a top adviser to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Saturday.

Also Saturday, two West German publications said Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher made concessions to Moscow to win Kremlin support for reunification last week.

The Bonn government denied the reports, which said the West German leaders agreed to seek immediate legal recognition of Poland's Western border by a united Germany; and promised that East Germany would continue to supply the Soviets with much-needed food and farm equipment.

In an attempt to calm Soviet fears about security, Genscher Saturday ruled out basing NATO troops on what is now East German soil.

"The West is agreed that with a unification of Germany, there will not be any eastward extension of NATO," Genscher told the Westdeutsche Rundfunk radio station.

His comments conflicted to some extent with those of West German Defense Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg, who said Friday that NATO's military protections should extend "without weakening" to all of Germany in the event of unification. West German officials have said they have no intention of turning their backs on the Western alliance.

The Kremlin made its stance clear Saturday.

Czech leader sees play performed for first time

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel, on his way to the United States and Canada, stopped over to meet Iceland's president Saturday and attend a play he wrote but had never seen performed.

The new non-Communist president told a news conference he decided to visit Reykjavik, Iceland's capital, because the name is a symbol of peace — a reference to the U.S.-Soviet summit in 1986.

Havel talked with reporters before attending a production in Icelandic of his play "Slum Clearance." Czechoslovakia's former hard-line Communist government banned Havel's plays for 20 years.

Havel, his wife, Olga Havlova, and an entourage of about 80 people were scheduled to depart for the United States Sunday for a three-day visit.

It will be the official trip to the United States by a Czechoslovak president, the nation's news agency CTK reported.

Havel said he and Iceland's president, Vigdis Finnbogadottir, had common interests, since she is a former director of Reykjavik's municipal theater. Speaking in Czech, which was translated by a member of his entourage, Havel said he invited her to visit his country.

STATE

Weak upper level disturbances caught up in the subtropical flow was causing mid- and high-level cloudiness to spread across most of Texas late Saturday afternoon.

Skies were generally clear over Far West Texas and the High Plains north of a well-defined jetstream that stretched from southern Baja through west central Texas into the Boston Mountains of Arkansas.

Other areas of mostly light rain were located over a small section of the Rio Grande Plains and in the lower valley around Brownsville and McAllen.

Some fog also mixed with light rain in the lower valley helping to bring the visibility below 7 miles in some areas.

Strong southwest winds up to 35 and 40 mph were socking parts of the Panhandle in response to the developing low pressure trough.

North to northeast winds breezed across parts of deep South Texas and the Coastal Plains, while south to southeast winds prevailed over the rest of the state.

NATION

Snow blanketed much of the nation from New England to the Pacific Northwest on Saturday, and rain continued to pose a threat in the West and South where torrents had caused flooding.

Snow was scattered in northern New England, New York state, northern and western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Montana, western Wyoming, northern and western Utah, eastern Nevada, and the mountains of northern California, Oregon and Washington.

Rain fell in the lower elevations of western California, and from southeast Louisiana across northern Florida and the Texas Gulf Coast.

A winter storm warning remained in effect for interior parts of western Washington state, where up to 12 inches of snow fell between Whidbey Island and Olympia.

WATER

And Williams was wary whether or not "those dams on the Colorado are going to keep us going" through the lake-water which the dams impound.

What if we have a seven-year drought like we did in the '50s again?

"As it is, I don't think (Stacy) ... will ever fill up. Or if it does, it will have to be another set of years like we had in the 1980s, when we had not just regular amounts of rain, but two, three or four times the amount of rain we normally have. That was just super phenomenal."

Though theories are extant as to "the why" of the heavy rains in the 1980s, "I am not going to subscribe to any of them," Williams asserted. One theory says that "as the greenhouse effect takes place, this area is going to have more rain."

No matter what, water should be conserved.

By Williams' reckoning, evidence that water is still being wasted is in the pond at Cuthbert Avenue and A Street in Midland.

"I'm firmly convinced that pond is completely due to excess watering in town — the runoff," Williams said. "It's not our drinking-water strata."

Generally, the town called Midland is known for "over-watering," Williams suggested. "Everybody puts in an automatic watering system and waters two or three times a week. And that should not be done.

"Once a week is probably plenty for any sort of grass if it's done correctly, research has suggested, Williams noted.

Cathy Keller, president of the Midland Association of Nurserymen, is well aware of the misuse of water, including "nuisance water" that runs down streets and gutters instead of onto lawns and in gardens.

"Around here, we have pretty much taken it (water) for granted," Ms. Keller said.

"You don't have to water everyday," she said. On lawns, she recommends watering to a six-inch base. "If you are watering your grass at those levels, trees are getting it."

She recommended 30-minute watering three times a weeks at 10-minute intervals.

Despite watering with tap water, the lack of "natural rain" may bite into the health of greenery.

Due to the salts in municipal water, which comes from lakes and wells, there are "diminishing returns after awhile.

"By July and August, the grass really is not a pretty green," she said. "We have had to pump so much of our own water on it. We've had no rain."

And the salts have built up in the soil and adversely affected the plants.

"The green ... has faded. It (municipal water) has diminishing returns. And until we have natural rain that comes in and leeches out the salts, you don't really see the really vibrant, the nice green that we are all looking for. Fertilizer is great; we have to do that here. Without natural rainfall, you would never get it here to look like the extremely lush greens like they have in Dallas."

Burr Williams is not a "lawn man." The name of his nursery, "Gone Native," suggests that. Rather than manicured English lawns, he is "into" wildflowers and natural lawns.

That would cut down on watering and lead to more water conservation.

And he has another idea — xeriflushing.

"You could put a brick in every toilet in town, and save a fourth of what's flushed down," he suggested. "That's big difference."

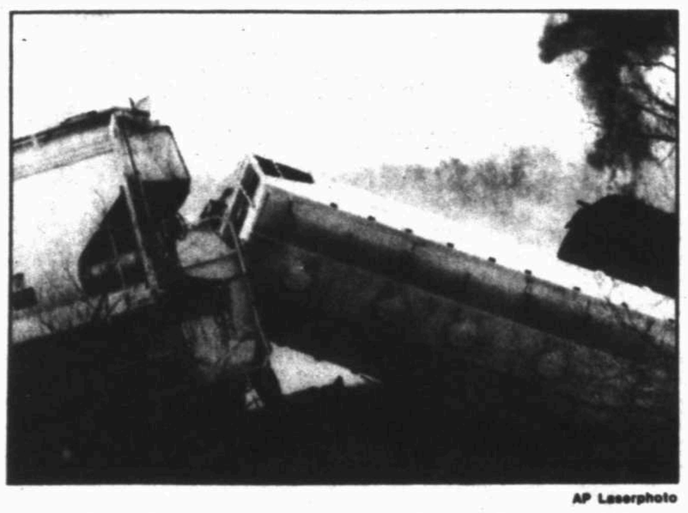

"Our culture flushes our droppings away, but there are very safe ways to compost all of that and not use any water at all."

Outside of watering the landscape, most water is used in flushing, bathing and industrial uses, Williams said.

"Right now, we water for 10 minutes or 20 minutes, and we stand there with a hose and let it run for a little while and move. What we should do," he said, "is lay the hose down and turn on that system and let it run real slow for hours at a time, so the water penetrates real deep. The roots go much deeper, and all the plants can survive on that."

In mid-March, Williams said he usually floods everything real good."

"In xeriscaping, you haven't watered since October. So, the time to start watering again is mid-March when the wind starts blowing real good."

Grundmann said that when the derailment occurred, the engineer traveled about a quarter-mile and released the remaining cars, then went up the tracks another quarter-mile before stopping. There, the three crewmembers got off and ran to warn a family in a farmhouse.

Curtis Rash, mayor of this town of 200 located 45 miles south of Dallas, said he was about two miles away when the blast occurred.

"It looked like napalm going off," he said. "It was a ball of fire about 100 feet in diameter. It rose up in the air about 100 feet or so."

A commercial clean-up team from nearby Corsicana arrived shortly before noon to begin removing the wreckage. The Texas Railroad Commission and state Water Commission dispatched investigators to the derailment.

Fear of further explosions initially kept five public safety department teams from approaching the scene and forced evacuations within a mile of the site. Fewer than a dozen families in a rural section of Emhouse were affected, authorities said. But the evacuation was scaled back about 1 p.m., and only the three families living closest to the wreck were kept out.

Cox said the authorities at the site believed some of the hazardous liquids were leaking into Chambers Creek, which feeds Lake Corsicana and the Richland Creek Reservoir, which supplies water to many Navarro County residents.

But Rash said the creek is about 400 yards from the accident scene, and said he doesn't believe the leaking materials would be able to reach the water. And Charles Gazda, chief of the emergency branch of the Environmental Protection Agency in Dallas, said as far as he knew nothing spilled in the creek that would cause any significant problem.

The mayor said that despite the mammoth fireball, the explosion wasn't extraordinarily loud.

"When we went around to evacuate those who lived nearest there, they were still sleeping," he said. "They didn't even wake up."

PAINTINGS

that (the communist government) did not want exported," said Odum, who is now a Midland oilman.

He said he barely managed to smuggle the paintings to the U.S. Embassy for transport in a diplomatic pouch.

Soviet agents, posing as workmen, snatched the paintings from the Odums' Moscow apartment.

Not one to acquiesce to state-sponsored bullying, Odum snatched the paintings back before the truck they were loaded on drove away.

The paintings, by six Russian artists, now are on display at Odessa's Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

They may be a long way from Moscow, Odum said, but they are a reminder of the oppression that characterized life there for people unwilling to toe the communist line.

The Odums said they were glad to loan out the collection, which has not been on public display since a 1970 show at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

"We wanted to share it with the local community," Odum said. "Certainly historic events have brought this subject to the fore."

Not all of the paintings in the Odum collection are overtly anti-Soviet. Colorful portraits and conventional "modern art" paintings outnumber the dark, obviously anti-regime pieces.

But as far as the Communist Party was concerned, Odum said, an artist was either for it or against it.

"Not to do something that (actively) supports the state ... is protest art," he said, pointing to a collection of Soviet propaganda posters juxtaposed against the "unofficial" art of the Odum collection.

The Odums have fond memories of the hours they spent with their artist friends, many of whom have since died.

The Odums decided to cut ties with the rest for the safety's sake.

"A week or so after we were at (one artist's) house, we heard that the militia or the KGB had come in and roughed them up," said Mrs. Odum, principal of Anson Jones Elementary School. "We felt it wouldn't be fair to them to try to keep in contact after we left."

In addition to KGB harrassment, Odum said, Soviet dissident artists were banned from displaying their work in public galleries. Nor were they allowed to work as commercial artists or buy art supplies at state-owned shops.

Odum said the paintings in his collection, which will be up at the Art Institute until March 1, are a tribute to the courage and determination of the artists who painted them.

He said he didn't know how much the paintings are worth, but they are a priceless tribute to the human spirit.

"It is representative of these people who were so brave to fight against the Communist Party," Odum said. "That is what makes this ... more than just an interesting exhibit.

"I think the significance of this collection is that it is a monument to the spirit of these people."

STORMS

trol reported. Officials said the earliest the road could reopen would be Sunday morning.

More than 20,000 electric customers in central Illinois remained without service Saturday as two utilities had extra crews working to restore power. More than 57,000 customers suffered outages when a midweek storm blanketed much of nothern and central Illinois with snow and ice.

In the usually mild, drizzly Seattle area, the snow that arrived Friday night tapered off by midday Saturday, giving way to clear skies and bright sunshine.

Snow lingered in southwest Washington and a freeze warning was issued for northwest Washington as arctic air was expected to pour south out of British Columbia.

The Olympia area, recovering from a Wednesday night storm, received an additional 10 inches early Saturday, while Spokane had 5 inches.

At Seattle-Tacoma International Airport, crews worked all night to keep the main runway open and only a few flights were delayed, said airport supervisor Lynette McNamara.

"The airport is in good condition. It's getting here (from other airports affected by bad weather) that seems to be the problem," she said.

Water levels began dropping in two Georgia towns hard-hit by floods, but weather forecasters warned of more flooding through Sunday as rivers crest. More rain was expected in some areas.

Police in the Atlanta suburb of Smyrna on Saturday found the body of Lawrence DeVoe, 69, in a car in the flooded driveway of the Oakdale Moose Lodge.

Joe Crowe, 43, drowned Friday in Trion after he was swept away by flood waters when his car stalled.

The flooding followed thunderstorms that dumped up to 12 inches of rain in some parts of north Georgia, pushing rivers and creeks over their banks.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Irish soccer fans riot in Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rival Protestant and Roman Catholic soccer fans rioted at a match Saturday, and police said they fired plastic bullets into the stands to stop the disturbance.

Forty-eight police officers and 15 civilians were injured and one officer and one civilian hospitalized, police said.

The violence spread from the stadium to surrounding streets, and fans hijacked buses and set them on fire, a statement from the Royal Ulster Constabulary said.

In other incidents later, police said a bomb exploded near an army vehicle in southwest Belfast, slightly injuring two soldiers on patrol. A second bomb exploded 10 minutes later in a parking area at the Greenan Lodge Hotel in the west of the city after an anonymous warning that allowed police to evacuate the building in time. No injures were reported at the hotel.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for either blast.

The violence at the stadium was the worst in years at a soccer game in Northern Ireland. Sports events are usually free of the fighting between Protestants and the Roman Catholic minority that has torn other areas of life in the British province. Security forces had feared trouble at the game, a first-round match in the Bass Irish Cup competition, so it was delayed 25 minutes until the spectators were seated.

Romanian minister named

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — The interim government Saturday named a defense minister backed by reformist officers, who demanded the resignation of the previous chief for failing to purge commanders from the Ceausescu regime.

Lt. Gen. Victor Anastase Stanculescu, who was the interim government's economic minister, was the choice of hundreds of army and air force officers who had demonstrated since Monday in front of government headquarters.

Former Defense Minister Nicolae Militaru handed in his letter of resignation Friday morning, said government spokesman Dan Radulescu. He did not disclose the contents of the letter, but said "Militaru clearly realized he had to step aside, when faced with such massive opposition."

Saturday afternoon, the army's general staff discussed the events of the past week and the internal reorganization demanded by the officers.

The officers criticized Militaru for not replacing many top officers after December's revolution that toppled Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

Stanculescu, who had been a first deputy defense minister under Ceausescu, told reporters he agreed with the purge.

"The Securitate as a body no longer exists," he said, referring to the disbanded secret police. "But there needs to be an investigation and punishment of those who were compromised (in the army)."

Lithuanians take to streets

MOSCOW (AP) — Thousands of Lithuanians took to the streets of two cities on the anniversary of their 1918 declaration of independence and demanded freedoms that were lost when the Kremlin annexed the Baltic state in World War II.

About 100,000 people attended a rally Friday in the republic's second-largest city of Kaunas, while 40,000 turned out for a public meeting in the capital, Vilnius, according to a spokeswoman for Sajudis, Lithuania's grass-roots pro-independence group.

Leaders of Sajudis addressed the crowds in both cities, renewing the republic's demand for independence, Sajudis activist Romuna Sakoloskejda said by telephone from Vilnius.

Lithuania's parliament last week approved a resolution declaring "unlawful and invalid" the 1940 act that incorporated their republic with neighboring Latvia and Estonia into the Soviet Union. They demanded talks with the Kremlin on restoring Lithuanian independence.

Lithuania, a hilly region on the Baltic Sea about the size of West Virginia, was under Russian rule before World War I and occupied by the German army during the war.

Israelis raid Arab village

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers backed by helicopters raided a West Bank village and tracked down Palestinian fugitives in nearby caves, arresting more than 100 suspected uprising activists, the army and state radio said Saturday.

In the occupied Gaza Strip, a 22-year-old Palestinian woman was stabbed and beaten to death Saturday morning by fellow Palestinians who accused her of helping Israeli authorities, Arab reports said.

The woman, Ishanhaz Timraz, was murdered on the main street in the Gaza town of Rafah when she went to a U.N. relief office to get food supplies, Palestinian journalists and hospital officials said.

The military command confirmed the death and said it was under investigation.

The killing brought to 186 the number of Arabs slain by fellow Palestinians as suspected pro-Israeli collaborators in the 26-month uprising against Israeli rule in Gaza and the West Bank.

Compensation offered

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The government Saturday said it will compensate the families of four children and an adult who were killed last week by an army rocket during an attack on suspected rebel positions.

"The cause of death of the civilians was the explosion of a rocket launched by a helicopter," the Armed Foces Press Committee said in a statement.

ARDEN GROVER ENDORSES
NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

I have been in the oil business here in Midland for over 35 years. Midland needs a judge with broad oil and gas related and commercial experience. I have worked personally with Nick Taylor on a wide variety of oil and gas legal matters and I know he has broad training, good judgment and complete integrity.

Reagan spends weekend before President's Day in federal court

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former President Reagan spent a second day in court Saturday, testifying about the Iran-Contra affair that mired the final two years of his presidency.

Reagan, flanked by Secret Service agents, emerged from a federal courtroom at 2:10 p.m. and headed down a back stairwell after completing approximately eight hours of videotaped testimony over two days.

Reagan, who had entered the downtown federal courthouse smiling and waving earlier in the day, smiled broadly as his limousine pulled out of the courthouse parking garage. As he has before, Reagan ignored reporters' questions.

Reagan testified before U.S. District Judge Harold Greene in connection with the trial of his former national security adviser, John Poindexter.

Poindexter is accused of concealing his former aide Oliver North's assistance to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels and lying about a 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran.

Poindexter declined comment as he climbed into a taxi after the session, but answered "no" when asked if he would be returning to the courthouse for more testimony.

"Testimony is finished. That's all I can tell you," said his lawyer, Richard Beckler.

Later, Reagan's spokesman, Mark Weinberg, issued a news release saying the former president had cooperated and hadn't asserted executive privilege.

"Since he first learned of the Iran-Contra matter and immediately told the American people about it, President Reagan has cooperated fully with all of the attendant investigative and judicial proceedings," the statement read.

"President Reagan testified fully and completely in response to questions posed by counsel for Adm. Poindexter and the Iran-Contra independent counsel. President Reagan agreed to the videotaped deposition and did not assert executive privilege," the statement concluded.

Reagan was allowed to give his videotaped depositions at a courtroom near his Bel-Air area home, rather than in Washington, where the proceedings against Poindexter are to begin March 5.

Former National Security Adviser John Poindexter leaves federal court Saturday in Los Angeles after listening to the testimony of his former boss, President Ronald Reagan. Poindexter is accused of concealing his former aide Oliver North's assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras.

Security was especially rigorous for the extraordinary two-day session. Federal marshals and Secret Service agents kept the media some 40 feet away from Reagan as he entered and left the courtroom Friday. Reporters were allowed only a bit closer Saturday.

Although the deposition-taking was closed to the public, Greene said the videotapes would be released within a few days after editing of issues deemed to involve national security.

Over the two days, the former president answered 154 questions about his role in the Iran-Contra affair, the failed arms-for-hostages deal during Reagan's second term.

The questions were drawn from 183 submitted to the court by Beckler, who was allowed follow-up questions if necessary. However, the judge prohibited Poindexter's attorney from raising additional questions on new subjects.

"I think he was very fair in his testimony," Beckler said.

Poindexter sought the testimony to bolster his contention that his secret activities had been authorized by Reagan.

Although the judge hasn't made the specific questions public, he said they fell into several broad categories, such as the extent of Reagan's knowledge of the shipment of missiles to Iran and Reagan's understanding of legislation that temporarily barred U.S. aid to the Contras.

Reagan said early in 1987 that he hadn't known about "secret bank accounts and diverted funds," two products of the Iran-Contra affair that he said he found "personally distasteful."

Girl buried for 2 hours under snow found alive

WRIGHTWOOD, Calif. (AP) — A 17-year-old girl who was caught in an avalanche Saturday was found alive after being buried under three feet of snow for nearly two hours, authorities said.

Carrie Hamilton, a drill team member from Mater Dei High School in Santa Ana, was treated for minor frostbite to her toes, said sheriff's Deputy Ronald Card.

"She's a lucky girl," he said.

Miss Hamilton was among 98 people on an excursion to the Ester Christian Conference Center in the Angeles National Forest, 45 miles northeast of Los Angeles, said Mike Corrigan, leader of the outing.

The avalanche apparently was touched off by 10 students who hiked without permission up a hill covered in 1½ feet of snow, said Corrigan.

Miss Hamilton, who was at the bottom of the hill, was buried, but managed to clear a small breathing space in the snow. The other hikers were tossed around by the snow, but were unhurt, said Card.

Prosecution portrays troubled Valdez crew

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — When the Exxon Valdez sailed into icy Alaskan waters, its crew included a timid helmsman, a second mate with alleged mental problems and a captain with a history of drinking, according to testimony at Joseph Hazelwood's criminal trial.

Hazelwood

As the prosecution ended its second week of evidence and prepared to wrap up its case, a picture emerged of a cohesive navigational team strengthened by highly educated and experienced officers but weakened by the troubled few.

As the case against Hazelwood unwound, questions were raised about the skipper's drinking, his knowledge of the crew and his judgment in leaving the ship's bridge in the hands of others at the time of a tricky maneuver.

Did he know that the man holding the ship's wheel, Robert Kagan, had well-known problems with steering? Did he rely too much on the veteran third mate, Gregory Cousins? And, once the ship was grounded, did Hazelwood try a dangerous maneuver to rock it off a jagged reef?

The jury must decide whether any of Hazelwood's actions constituted the reckless behavior with which he is charged.

The 43-year-old Hazelwood, the only person criminally prosecuted in the nation's worst oil spill, is charged with second-degree criminal mischief, a felony, and three misdemeanors — reckless endangerment, negligent discharge of oil and operating a vessel while intoxicated.

If convicted on all charges, Hazelwood faces a maximum penalty of 7¼ years in prison and $61,000 in fines.

The March 23, 1989, grounding of the 987-foot Exxon Valdez spilled 10.92 million gallons of oil into the clear waters of Prince William Sound, killing countless birds, fish and wildlife and coating hundreds of miles of rocky coast with black goo.

As crew members formed a virtual parade to the witness stand, their struggle to maintain loyalty to the captain while testifying against him was evident.

Cousins, who was in charge of the ship when it ran aground, blamed the helmsman, Kagan, for failing to follow orders and steer hard to the right. "I think Mr. Kagan didn't really understand the command," said Cousins.

The third mate credited Hazelwood with being calm and clearly in command after the disaster.

Kagan himself conceded under oath that he had become "timid" about steering after he was once accused of "chasing the compass," or oversteering a ship.

James Kunkel, the chief mate, graduate of prestigious Kings Point Merchant Marine Academy and a 20-year veteran of the seas, suggested the skipper knew — or should have known — that helmsman Kagan was the weak link in the ship's chain of operations.

"I mentioned I'd sailed with him before and I thought he needed extra supervision and extra practice in steering," Kunkel said, recalling a conversation he had with Hazelwood. He said Kagan could not do even the simplest tasks without being watched.

California oil spill becoming sticky political issue

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The sticky black goo slopping onto Southern California beaches from an oil spill is more than an environmental disaster. It's a conspicuous, election-year issue for politicians and environmentalists.

"This kind of thing motivates to action even people who are not politically or environmentally active," said Bob Hattoy, regional director of the Sierra Club. "You've got angry Republican housewives from Orange County sopping up oil with tea towels. This will have an effect."

The cause of the 400,000-gallon spill Feb. 7 still is under investigation, but officials speculated the 811-foot American Trader was struck by one of its anchors while maneuvering into a mooring area two miles offshore.

The spill coincided with campaigns for the June primary, when candidates for governor will be chosen along with many other state and local offices.

So many politicians went to the beaches that Mayor Tom Mays finally asked them for advance notice so they would not interfere with the cleanup. "They were bringing their podiums on the beach and it was a whole show," Mays said.

The interest among lawmakers, however, also is expected to revitalize efforts aimed at improving oil industry safety, including proposals for double hulls and double bottoms on tankers, better traffic control system to guide tankers along the coast, more tanker safety equipment, and a halt to new offshore oil drilling.

The double hull issue probably will be the first settled because it is currently before a House-Senate committee working on compromise legislation.

William Rusnack, vice president of corporate planning for Arco, said the oil industry was bracing for the worst. "We always have a concern there could be an overreaction," he said.

In the first days after the spill, strong Santa Ana winds kept the oil slick offshore, but a sudden shift in wind direction and high tides last weekend pushed the oil ashore on Huntington Beach and Newport Beach.

Chocolate-brown waves crashed onto beaches caked in black muck that looked like asphalt and smelled like road tar. From the air, it looked like a highway had been paved where the water touched the sand.

As of Saturday morning, 10 days after the spill, the oil had killed about 175 birds and coated 370 others in oil. About 1,000 grunion, a small fish, were killed when they came ashore to lay their eggs, which also were doomed. Halibut fisheries were devastated, fishermen said.

Ship traffic was barred at three harbors, hurting fishing boat charter services, Catalina Island excursion operators and whale-watching boat operators. Even local fish stores that sold fish caught far away from the spill lost business.

State officials said things could have been much worse. The spill will not make the record books in terms of wildlife killed or dollars lost, and it pales in comparison to Alaska's Valdez spill.

NATION IN BRIEF

Superintendent files lawsuit in Selma

SELMA, Ala. (AP) — The city's first black school superintendent has filed a $10 million lawsuit against the white-majority school board, which sparked racial turmoil when it voted not to renew his contract.

Meanwhile, almost 200 students, mostly whites, have decided to withdraw from the Selma school system, which reopened this week following a student sit-in to protest the decision not to extend Norward Roussell's contract beyond June, when it expires.

Roussell's lawsuit, filed Friday in U.S. District Court in Mobile, claims his contract was not renewed for racial reasons and that the board's decision was based, in part, on his "complete dismantling" of a student placement system known as leveling.

Critics of the system say it was designed to segregate students and keep blacks in lower-level classes.

According to the suit, Roussell's decision to end leveling served as the catalyst for removing him because "for the first time in the system's history, black students were given a fair opportunity to compete in advanced academic classes."

Religious articles found

COVENTRY, R.I. (AP) — A man with an immaculately kept basement room furnished with an altar and labeled "chapel" has been charged with possessing thousands of dollars worth of stolen religious articles.

Priests from around the area were showing up at the police station Friday and Saturday following the arrest to reclaim vestments, chalices, statues and other items.

William R. Silva, 22, was arrested Friday, the day after police acting on a tip confiscated hundreds of articles following a search of the house where he lives with his parents.

The "chapel" was furnished with an altar, church kneelers, votive candles, flowers, church linens, chalices for Communion wine and a tabernacle for the storage of Communion wafers, police said.

A photo album taken by police was filled with pictures of the altar decorated for Christmas, Pentecost and other religious holidays. There were pictures of Silva dressed in vestments and standing at the altar posing as a priest offering Mass.

There also were color photos of people laid out in coffins, and newspaper obituary clippings. Silva reportedly had worked at several funeral parlors. Police said there was no evidence any of the photos had been taken in Silva's basement "chapel."

Law's restrictions lifted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anarchists, communists and advocates of totalitarian government will be allowed into the United States under a law signed by President Bush unless officials can find a reason to keep them out that goes beyond their political beliefs.

The measure, part of a $9.8 billion State Department authorization Bush signed Friday night, effectively repeals part of a 1952 law that barred visitors with radical views.

Nobel laureates Gabriel Garcia Marquez and Pablo Neruda have been excluded under the law in recent years, as well as authors Graham Greene, Doris Lessing and Carlos Fuentes, according to a Senate Foreign Relations Committee report.

Among others excluded were French actor Yves Montand; former Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith; Hortensia Allende, widow of the Marxist president of Chile, and Yasser Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Still subject to exclusion under the new measure are "aliens who are polygamists or who practice polygamy or advocate the practice of polygamy."

Polygamy itself, but not advocacy of polygamy, is forbidden by state law in most of the country.

Lawyers familiar with immigration could not recall any problems with polygamists visiting the United States, who include many leaders of Moslem countries.

Residents mourn Pigsville's passing

MILWAUKEE (AP) — There are just 15 houses in the spot on the map known as "Pigsville," but residents say that when the doomed enclave is destroyed next year in a bridge-rebuilding project it will be the end of a close-knit way of life.

The fate of one of Milwaukee's oldest and most stable blue-collar neighborhoods has been sealed by the very bridge that has given it an identity the last 80 years.

Pigsville, on the bank of the Menomonee River west of downtown, will be destroyed in 1991 when the mammoth Wisconsin Avenue Bridge whose approach forms one of its borders is rebuilt under a $15.3 million project.

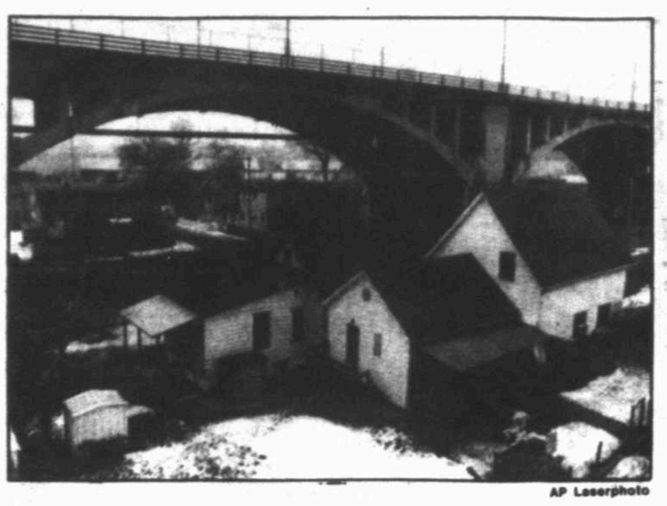

"There's a lot of irony in it. It's a unique, special neighborhood that now will be gone, resigned to the history books," said Alderman Michael Murphy, whose district includes Pigsville.

The 40 or so residents who have lived in the neighborhood — many for decades — will be relocated starting in August.

They'll be leaving behind the asphalt-tile roofs, limestone basements and creaky stairwells of their century-old homes. They'll also leave behind the smell of hops from the huge Miller Brewing Co. brewery across the river, the sounds of crowds cheering at Milwaukee Brewers games at County Stadium a quarter-mile away and the plate-rattling vibrations of Soo Line trains that pass on the western edge of the neighborhood.

But most of all, the residents will miss the camaraderie that goes back decades and the privacy of an isolated neighborhood where crime is rare and friends can venture outside in their bathrobes for an early-morning chat.

"Our biggest fear going somewhere else is neighborhoods don't get his close," said Kim Papp, whose family has lived in Pigsville since 1922. "It's a great place to live. We're all going to miss it."

Nestled below the Wisconsin Avenue Bridge in Milwaukee, Wis., is a neighborhood called "Pigsville."

"Our biggest fear going somewhere else is neighborhoods don't get his close. It's a great place to live. We're all going to miss it."

— Kim Papp, whose family has lived in Pigsville since 1922

Mrs. Papp, 30, her husband, William, a plumber, and two daughters live next door to the two-story house where her husband's father, grandmother and grandmother's sister-in-law still live.

"Our daughters are the fifth generation to live down here," she said. "There's a lot of history. Bill's great-grandfather helped build the Wisconsin Avenue viaduct."

That viaduct, the main bridge for the main drag leading toward downtown, was completed in 1911, boasting concrete arches that resemble a Roman aqueduct. The bridge is the main symbol for Pigsville, but it is suffering from long-term deterioration and must be replaced. And the replacement project will mean the leveling of the clutch of houses at its base.

The river, the railroad tracks and the approach to a smaller bridge to the south form the other boundaries of Pigsville. There's only one road leading in.

"Unless you know where you're going, it's hard to find," said resident Sue Wiederstein. "There's only one way in and one way out. It's like a little city suburb. There's no sidewalks. We don't have driveways or garages. We don't have problems."

How the area got its name, which dates back to before the turn of the century, is a mystery. One story attributes the moniker to a man who kept pigs, while another holds that the area was named after a dentist named Dr. Pigg. Yet another says it was named for iron castings — known as pigs — poured from a smelting furnace at a nearby foundry.

While residents throughout the Menomonee River valley often stake claim as members of Pigsville, most agree the 15-home neighborhood of bungalows and cottages at the base of the viaduct is the original Pigsville. Early residents were German immigrants, later supplanted by Slavs.

Pigsville has had its share of excitement. Occasionally, the Menomonee is known to rise above its banks with spring rains, sending water through the streets.

Roughly once every 10 years, one of the passing Soo Line trains has derailed, sounding a bone-shaking clamor. At least three times, despondent people jumped to their deaths from one of the bridges above.

But perhaps the single biggest event was in the early 1980s when neighborhood residents joined together to force the closing of a popular tavern called Fourth Base because patrons sometimes plucked flowers from neatly kept gardens or urinated in the road.

The final chapter is at hand. The bridge project is slated to begin in 1991 with demolition of the homes and bridge. The new bridge, which will preserve the original architectural design, will probably take two years to complete.

Bombs explode in two Atlanta-area groceries

ROSWELL, Ga. (AP) — Small bombs exploded in two grocery stores in this Atlanta suburb Saturday afternoon, shortly after the stores were evacuated because of telephoned bomb threats.

No injuries were reported, and the two explosions were described by witnesses and authorities as small.

Callers also threatened bombings at two additional grocery stores and a fast-food outlet, police said.

Investigators didn't believe the bombs were related to a series of mail bombs in the South in December that killed a federal judge and a lawyer, said Police Chief Jerry King. Agents from the FBI and the federal bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were helping in the investigation.

Police dispatcher Jill Moore said a caller telephoned a Cub Foods and a Kroger to say bombs would explode between 1:30 and 2 p.m.

Two other grocery stores also reported threats, Ms. Moore said, a Big Star and a Winn-Dixie. Workers at a Kentucky Fried Chicken outlet also reported receiving a similar threat Saturday, King said.

About 1,200 people were evacuated from the four markets because of the threats, officials said.

Witnesses at the Kroger market said they were about 50 yards from the glass store front when the bomb exploded but didn't hear anything.

"We did not hear it, not at all," said Rhonda Bartlett, Kroger perishables manager.

New figures show drop in local burglaries

Thefts from autos mistakenly included in year-end crime statistics

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A reporting mistake discovered by Midland police last week obscured an improvement in year-end burglary statistics.

The "mistake" was cataloging auto burglaries as residential or business burglaries, Deputy Chief J.R. Smith said. The department uses the Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) method, which catalogs "part one" crimes: murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary of a habitation or building, theft and auto theft.

Since auto burglary is not considered a part one crime, it should not have been included in the year-end statistics of major crimes, Smith said.

The corrected 1989 figures now show a near 4 percent drop in the number of home or business burglaries committed during the year, compared to 1988.

"It is excellent news," said police spokesman Cpl. Jim White, noting the first time in several years the number of burglaries has been declining in annual statistics.

The first version of the statistics showed 2,209 burglaries were reported to police during 1989, an 8.9 percent increase over the 2,029 filed during 1988.

New figures show 1,955 burglaries were reported in 1989, a 3.7 percent decrease over the number reported in 1988.

"The problem was a discrepancy in reporting procedures," White said. "A records supervisor discovered the mistake while checking data. The reports turned out not to be true burglaries."

The more than 12 percent swing was also reflected in a lower overall crime rate. Initial figures showed the number of part one crimes rose 5.9 percent in 1989 compared to 1988.

New figures show the number of part one crimes was up only 1.7 percent.

White said during several years in the 1980s, the department has been faced with double-digit increases in the crime rate. Now, both citizens and the police can take credit for a reversal in the trend.

"There is an enhanced awareness on the part of the citizen," White said. "We have made so many narcotics arrests — with the tie between burglary and narcotics — that made a difference."

A recent University of Texas of the Permian Basin study of active Midland burglars showed a 100 percent correlation between narcotics and their criminal activities.

MISD administrator honored by TCTA

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Maridell Fryar says the secret of her success as a school administrator lies in remembering her days in the classroom.

Fryar

"Administrators began as teachers and we honor that role," said Ms. Fryar, who taught for 19 years before making the jump to management. "We know that schools exist because students exist...and demand teachers."

Ms. Fryar said her respect for teaching makes her especially proud of her latest accolade, the Texas Classroom Teachers Association (TCTA) Administrator of the Year award.

Ms. Fryar, Midland Independent School District executive director of instructional services since 1988, received the award for school districts with more than 15,000 students.

"When teachers recognize ... an administrator, it is a special honor," Ms. Fryar said.

Jeri Stone, TCTA executive director, concurred.

"This award is one of the highest honors our association can bestow on a non-member," she said.

MISD spokesman Ted Miller said the award speaks well of the relationship between district teachers and administrators.

"The school district is pleased that Maridell was selected, and her award is indicative of the quality of administrators in MISD as well as the cooperation and support felt among administrators and teachers," Miller said.

Ms. Fryar started her teaching career in 1960 after graduating from Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene. She holds a master's degree from Texas Tech University.

She started her administrative career as MISD coordinator of fine arts instruction in 1979. In following years she served as secondary language arts coordinator and secondary education director.

Ms. Fryar credited a humanitarian management style for boosting her career.

"What I believe I do is to treat everyone that I come in contact with as if they have value and worth," she said. "I try to be responsive to what people are thinking and wanting and needing."

She was optimistic about the future of education in Midland.

"My personal belief is that our schools are working harder and have more expertise than they've ever had," Ms. Fryar said.

"Our challenge for the future is to work together ... as a team that will be able to find new and better ways to instruct children."

Jaycees honor top boss

From Staff Reports

Clayton W. Stone was named "Boss of the Year," and Robert V. Rendall was presented the "Distinguish Service Award" at the Midland Jaycees' annual awards banquet Saturday night in Midland Center.

Rendall, 36, is a lawyer and Midland City Councilman. He is a former Midland County Attorney.

Stone was named "Boss of the Year" for his keeping HSA Mortgage Company, A-1 Inc., A-1 Mobile Homes Inc., High Chaparral, Casa Energy "operating at full capacity" despite economic setbacks, for evidencing "faith and trust" in his employees, and for recognizing that "the best resources can be found from within. ...

"His continued success in keeping the companies alive has not been an easy battle, but one that he feels is worth it," said a nomination letter signed by his employees. "So, Midland-Odessa has not been affected by a major layoff, and the people of the community have continued to benefit from the services of HSA Mortgage Co."

Stone "is 'boss of the year' in the hearts and minds of the employees of HSA Mortgage Co."

Stone puts "faith and trust" into the employees that are promoted within HSA's ranks and is supportive of continuing education, according to the Jaycees.

Gramm, Phillips address medical group

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Saturday his anti-abortion position is not hurting his re-election bid and accused Democratic challenger, state Sen. Hugh Parmer, of lashing onto the issue for political purposes.

Gramm and Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips, both Republicans, spoke to members of the Texas Medical Association winter leadership convention.

Parmer, D-Fort Worth, has said Gramm is part of the "kooky right" due to the senator's strong opposition to abortion.

Following his speech, Gramm told reporters that Parmer "has discovered in the polls that he believes that being for abortion on demand, for federal funding for abortion, for abortion in the third trimester, is good politics."

He said Parmer is a newcomer to the issue and never offered a prochoice measure in the state Legislature.

Talking to the doctors association, Gramm said he would push for creation of a United States-Mexico commission to address health problems along the border.

He also criticized Democrats, saying they want to spend possible future savings in defense on increasing the size of the federal government, and said Texas has the potential to lead the nation's economic recovery.

Phillips told the TMA there is a fundamental difference in philosophy between himself and his likely opponent, Justice Oscar Mauzy, a Democrat.

"Judges must base their decision on the interpretation of the law, and that interpretation must be made on something deeper than the judges personal preference of what social policy should be," Phillips said.

Phillips praised the TMA, saying the powerful lobby was able to change the composition of the court, which had been criticized by doctors and insurance companies of being dominated by plaintiff's attorneys.

Gramm also was applauded by the doctors group when he criticized plaintiff's attorneys, saying that malpractice liability was getting out of hand.

On other health issues, Gramm said he wants to set up a commission appointed by the presidents of the United States and Mexico to tackle the relatively high incidence of disease on the border.

"We are the richest country in the world and we share a common border with one of the poorest countries and that common border is a constant source of problems," such as in pollution and health, he said.

Gramm said he wants to win reelection so that he can keep the lid on spending and accused Democrats in Congress of already making plans to spend the so-called peace dividend from defense savings because of political changes in the Soviet Union.

He said even Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has realized the inefficiency of big government.

"I've been thinking seriously of asking Gorbachev to join the Republican Party. He passed the Democratic Party about six miles back down the road," Gramm said.

Gramm said voters should pick candidates best able to enhance business growth in Texas.

GARY OTT

Why do they seem more mature than I was at that age?

One by one, we turned the pages of the old family album and laughed at the photographs.

Ott

I was visiting a friend's parents' home the other evening and somehow the conversation turned to the subject of families. Each time a name — whether it be a brother, sister-in-law, uncle or cousin — was mentioned it would remind someone else of one more story that had to be told.

Before long, the album had been retrieved from a drawer.

"Look at ol' Uncle Wilbur there," someone would say. "Talk about your head cases. Remember the time he got his suspenders caught in the ..."

And another story would unravel.

I did not know anyone who was being talked about, of course, but I laughed just the same. And it wasn't phony laughter, either. In most cases, I could identify with what was being said about the people. And it was funny. All families have their share of freak skeletons in the closet.

But the thing that caught my attention the most was the age of the people in the photographs. There was a father, age 32, with three children in his lap. Then there was another uncle, not Wilbur, but someone named Cecil, who had two kids by the time he was 25. In the photograph, he was standing next to a brand new Pontiac he had just traded for. He looked proud and prosperous. And there were others, too. But each time an age was mentioned it seemed the person in question was more mature than I was at that age.

It's an old thing with me that goes back to the times I have thumbed through the Ott family album.

I'll give you an example.

When my dad was 37 he had short, well-manicured hair and wore nice store-bought business suits. He had four children and had already put his wife through college. His oldest daughter was trying to decide on a college to attend and his only son wouldn't be far behind. As was always the case, the old man would be picking up the tab.

I, on the other hand, am also 37. I have long, shaggy hair, own one slightly used business suit that was handed down to me by my dad and consider financial responsibility to be buying drinks for an entire evening and still having money left over. Children are the furthest thing from my mind.

But it really isn't a matter of what each person has accomplished at a particular age that we're talking about here. It is more a matter of what they looked like at a particular age.

In the Ott photo album, for example most of the male members of the family look a good five to 10 years older than they really are. They sport a mature, business-like appearance. In fact, that's exactly what they look like — businessmen.

But when I look at myself in the mirror all I see is a kid who still wants to go out and play.

This curious development is not limited to photo albums, either.

A see examples of it everyday in real life. Meeting new people, I am constantly amazed to learn they are younger than me. In many cases they are community leaders and look the part — three-piece suits, perfectly styled hair and a certain air of success about them. They seem to be saying, "I'm somebody."

In reality, though, they are in their late 20s or, at the most, early 30s. In either case, they are young. And, sometimes, they like to flaunt it.

Like the one the other day who, after adjusting his tie and glancing down at his perfectly trimmed finger nails, looked at me with a condescending stare and asked, "By the way, Gary, what are you going to do when you grow up?"

I said, "I'm not sure. But in the meantime would like to go out and play?"

Tests don't link suspect to three Dallas rapes

DALLAS (AP) — There is no forensic evidence to link a man charged with raping three Dallas schoolgirls to the crimes, according to laboratory reports obtained by a Dallas newspaper.

The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday that in one case, Donald Ray Gray appears an "unlikely" suspect. In that case, hairs found on the child were different from hair samples submitted by Gray after his arrest last month.

In the two other rapes, forensic analysts did not have the necessary hair and blood samples from the rapist to compare with Gray's samples.

And the forensic reports concluded that Gray's hair samples do not match those found on two other schoolgirls who were raped. Gray has not been charged in those rapes, but the forensic reports list him as the suspect.

But Gray, a father of three and a former PTA executive, maintains that police arrested the wrong man.

To prove his innocence, Gray has said he would submit to any tests requested by authorities, including a polygraph. Results of the tests were obtained Friday by the Dallas newspaper.

But none of the parties involved, including the defense attorneys, prosecutors, Dallas police or Gray himself, were able to discuss the tests because a judge has imposed a gag order in the case.

"This is in the best interest of the defendant receiving a fair trial," said Assistant District Attorney Karen Lambert.

Defense attorney's Brett Stalcup and Carl Gaines objected to the request. But state District Judge Larry Baraka met privately with the attorneys and then granted the request.

Police say Gray raped a nine-year-old girl on Oct. 11, 1988, a 12-year-old girl last Jan. 5 and a 10-year-old girl on Jan. 19. All three were attacked as they walked to school.

Gray was arrested Jan. 23 after police linked his white Nissan pickup to the type of truck the victims said was used in the crimes. The three girls also identified Gray as their attacker, police said.

Computer error frees another drug dealer

HOUSTON (AP) — Breaking out of the Harris County jail is getting easier, thanks to a series of computer errors that have allowed three convicted drug dealers to accidentally go free.

Convicted drug dealer Claude Dixon was third the convict to receive a premature release, clerk officials acknowledged Friday. All three convicts have returned to jail.

Dixon, 24, sentenced to five years in prison, was free for eight days before surrendering to Harris County authorities.

The latest release ignited a quick investigation by both sheriff's officials and district clerk supervisors.

A group of officials are to meet again Monday to try and work out a system for preventing any more accidental releases, Chief Deputy District Clerk Hank Husky said.

Dixon's lawyer, Peter Justin, called Dixon's mistaken liberation the "same old story, verse three," referring to the two other accidental releases.

Earlier this month, convicted felon John Horkan was released accidentally after being sentenced to 25 years in prison for delivering a drug to an undercover officer.

An error by a clerk, who was suspended three days without pay, showed Horkan had been approved for release on bond.

In October, drug dealer Samuel Ettipio, sentenced to 22 years and a $2,500 fine, was released accidentally. The court's former chief clerk punched in the wrong computer code and Ettipio was set free.

On Oct. 31, state District Judge Lupe Salinas was startled to run into Ettipio in a grocery store. Ettipio's prison sentence commenced soon afterward.

On Feb. 8, Dixon pleaded guilty to charges of delivery and possession of cocaine. State District Judge Mary Bacon sentenced him to five years in prison.

Husky said one of Bacon's clerks sent the sheriff's office a computer message saying Dixon had been sentenced to a prison term but also sent a message saying a pending case against Dixon was dismissed.

quartz (noun) — The mineral we call quartz may come in a mass of fine grains or in six-sided crystals that glisten like jewels. As the hardest of the common minerals, quartz is used to make high quality lenses for optical instruments and has important uses in electronics. Quartz has an unusual property that was discovered by Pierre Curie in the 1880s. He found that quartz crystals produce voltage when compressed between two metal plates and also vibrate at a natural frequency, which make them useful in watches and electronics.

Census questionnaires due soon

By LYN MILLER

The census is coming! The census is coming!

Soon questionnaires will be arriving at the doors of Midlanders which will present all citizens with the opportunity to be counted in 1990 census.

This 21st census promises to be the largest and most complex undertaking ever for the U.S. Census Bureau, with an expected count of 250 million people and 106 million housing units.

Two types of questionaires will be either sent by mail (March 23) or delivered approximately one week before "Census Day," April 1. Five out of six households will receive the short form containing questions regarding race, age, marital status and place of residence. The long form, which includes additional questions relating to ancestry, employment, education, income, type of housing, etc., will be sent to one out every six homes.

The information received by the Census Bureau remains strictly confidential. Neither the census takers nor employees of the bureau may reveal any information obtained. Census personnel must take an oath that the information received will remain confidential. This also means that no other federal agency will have access to the information given on the questionaires.

Obtaining an accuate census count is very important to the city as well as the citizens of Midland. Not only does the census provide a population count, but is used to apportion seats in the U.S. House of Representatives and determine state legislative boundaries.

Census information is also used to determine compliance with the Voting Rights Act and amendments, the allocation of funds from federal grant programs, the identifying of areas requiring bilingual education, the assessing of the need for equal employment opportunity programs, and the establishment of occupational and vocational education programs.

If the questionaires are not completed and returned, the result is an undercount, or inaccurate information, which can prevent the funding of projects or cause lower funding of community programs and services.

The social and economic pulse of the nation is taken by the census, therefore, being counted helps in many ways.

The census — people counting people — has existed for 200 years, 1790-1990. Dating from colonial days, the need for a census for the new United States arose shortly after the 13 colonies broke ties with Great Britain.

The new nation, needing to find ways to pay the debt created by the Revolutionary War, determined to divide the expense equally among the people. But this was not the only reason the census was established.

A truly representative government to sit in the two houses of Congress was needed.

Therefore, in 1787, the census was made a part of the U.S. Constitution, providing for the enumeration to be made within three years after the first meeting of the U.S. Congress and within every subsequent term of 10 years, as directed by law.

Based on the 1790 census, the original number of 65 House members grew to 106, representing a population of almost four million people. Authority to conduct the census was delegated to the Bureau of the Census in 1913 by Congress.

Census classes recently have been conducted at City Hall for those interested in participating in the taking of the census. For additional information concerning the 1990 census, contact Rick Menchaca, public relations/economic development coordinator for the City of Midland, at 685-7436.

Kingsville taxpayers roll back taxes

KINGSVILLE (AP) — Kingsville residents Saturday voted overwhelmingly to roll back a 58-percent property-tax increase passed in September by the Kingsville Independent School District.

The outcome was the third decisive victory for the Kingsville-Kleberg Taxpayers Association this month. On Feb. 3, voters rolled back tax hikes passed by the City of Kingsville and Kleberg County.

State law allows Texans to seek rollback votes if a tax-rate increase exceeds 8 percent.

According to complete but unofficial results, 3,344 voted in favor of the rollback, and 1,510 voted against it Saturday.

"I had no idea we would do this well," said Nancy Jones, president of the taxpayers association. "I thought it was going to come down to the absentee votes."

In absentee votes, 1,280 ballots, or about 71 percent of the 1,812 cast, favored the rollback.

The district boosted property taxes about 58 percent last year, the same year Kleberg County hiked taxes 36 percent and Kingsville raised them 12 percent. With the successful rollback votes, each of those increases must be reduced to 8 percent.

HUD 'pork barrel' still open in D.C.

Congress had little choice but to follow Secretary Jack Kemp's urgings and enact a law to curtail widespread influence peddling at the Department of Housing and Urban Development. But, as could be expected, lawmakers did not go far enough and were careful to leave the lid ajar enough so that the HUD pork barrel remains open to members of Congress and their staffs. That leaves political favoritism alive and well in Washington.

The new law requires that most of the money for federal housing projects be distributed to regions of the country based on need. It mandates that HUD publish notices of funding availability, application procedures and selection criteria. Each decision is to be documented and made available for public inspection.

The measure also replaces two of the secretary's discretionary funds with narrowly focused programs. In addition, all consultants hired by special-interest groups must register with the department and disclose their fees, which may not be based on their success in obtaining HUD grants. The failure of consultants to comply with these requirements can result in civil penalties up to $10,000 or an amount equal to the fees received.

It is worth noting, however, what was not included in the law.

For instance, Congress rejected Secretary Kemp's proposal to tie community development grants more closely to anti-poverty efforts. To do so would have limited the funds routinely sought by senators and congressmen for pet projects back home. These have included such amenities as golf courses and swimming pools in wealthy suburbs. Last year, Rep. Mary Rose Oaker, D-Ohio, tried to finagle $6.5 million from a HUD discretionary fund after the department rejected Cleveland's application for a grant to build a rock and roll museum.

In writing the law, Congress also exempted lawmakers and their aides from the reporting and registration requirements that apply to lobbyists. A lobbyist, under the law, is defined as one who is paid to influence decisions. Because political contributions are not considered payment, lawmakers and their staffs were considered not to be lobbyists. This tortured logic was applied even though Sen. Alphonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., is involved in one of the HUD influence peddling scandals that prompted the law in the first place.

Despite the new reforms, it appears that Secretary Kemp will have his hands full just trying to keep the lid on HUD's pork barrel.

Another View:

Odds against Afghans

Richard Nixon's grasp of geopolitical realities is once again evident in his warning that the Soviet Union not be allowed to maintain a strategic foothold in Afghanistan. As the stalemated civil war drags on with no end in sight, Afghanistan could yet become a vantage point from which Moscow could threaten American interests throughout Southwest Asia and the Persian Gulf.

When the Soviet military was withdrawn from Afghanistan a year ago, it was widely assumed that the communist puppet regime in Kabul would collapse within a matter of months. This assumption proceeded from the premise that a coordinated military campaign by the Afghan resistance, which controls 90 percent of the countryside, would storm the major cities and send Marxist President Najibullah fleeing. Instead, the guerrillas' failure to take the city of Jalalabad last March prompted even more dissension among the already splintered resistance, with disastrous consequences for the guerrilla cause.

Nixon correctly concludes that the rebels are at a tactical disadvantage because they lack both the experience and the equipment to wage a conventional war against the well-armed Afghan army.

When the Soviets pulled out of Afghanistan, they left behind some $1 billion in military hardware. Each month since then, Moscow has airlifted to Kabul $300 million worth of weapons, planes, tanks and SCUD surface-to-surface missiles. During that same period, the freedom fighters have received approximately $120 million in U.S. aid. That money, however, is routed through Pakistan, where it is divided among the disparate Afghan rebel factions. A disproportionate share of the aid has gone to Hokmatyar Gulbiddin, an Islamic fundamentalist leader who is not necessarily sympathetic to Western interests.

The United States has long insisted on self determination for the Afghan people and the complete removal of Soviet occupation troops. At the Malta summit, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev suggested a transfer of power from the communist government to one that is mutually agreeable to the Afghans.

The transitional government most likely to enjoy broad-based support would be headed by former King Mohammed Zahir Shah, who was deposed in 1973. The Bush administration should press for the 75-year-old monarch's return, on the condition that free elections be held in the near future.

Yet, none of this is likely to happen until the freedom fighters are able to prevail on the battlefield. And that won't happen until, as Nixon notes, the United States does as much for its Afghan friends as the Kremlin does for its client regime.

Refugee pawn in game to catch terrorist

WASHINGTON — A Czechoslovakian refugee who fled to the United States in 1974 to enjoy the benefits of freedom has become an innocent pawn in an American game to nail an Arab terrorist.

Jack Anderson

The case of David Neimann illustrates just how far the United States government will go to score a minor victory in its impotent war against terrorism.

In a nightmarish sequence of events, Neimann has been ruined financially and was extradited to Greece in December on a flimsy check-bouncing charge. The U.S. government didn't put up a fuss, apparently because officials in the State Department want Greece to turn over a terrorist being held there, and they don't want to give Greece any reason to say no.

Neimann left Czechoslovakia in 1974 because of his anti-Soviet activities during the overthrow of the regime of Alexander Dubcek six years earlier. The United States accepted Neimann as a political refugee and gave him resident alien status. He isn't an American citizen, but he has the right to live and work here.

In 1982, on a trip to Greece, Neimann cashed three checks for $1,000 each. They were made out to him by an American company that he had worked for. Unbeknownst to Neimann, the company couldn't cover the checks and they bounced.

Neimann didn't know that until 1986, when he was arrested in Dallas and told that he was going to be extradited to Greece on charges of fraud and forgery. He paid full restitution on the checks as well as a $4,000 fine on one of the charges, but the Greek government pressed forward on the remaining charges.

The zeal of the Greek government to get Neimann back was matched only by the zeal of the U.S. Justice Department to turn him over. At the extradition hearing in October 1988, Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Roper told the judge that, "the Justice Department on numerous occasions has contacted me and insisted that I proceed with this extradition request."

Neimann stumbled through the hearing with limited English skills and no lawyer.

The magistrate, Judge William Sanderson, granted the extradition order. The details of the alleged crime were not spelled out at the hearing. Under extradition law, the U.S. judge simply has to be satisfied that the right person has been arrested and that the foreign government has "sufficient" charges to make the request.

Neimann was jailed after the hearing and had to put his 11-year-old son in the care of friends.

Neimann's last hope was to beg help from the State Department. He had become friends with Eugene Douglas, the former U.S. ambassador at large for refugee affairs. Douglas called then-Secretary of State George Shultz, and renewed his plea for help with Secretary of State James Baker when Baker replaced Shultz.

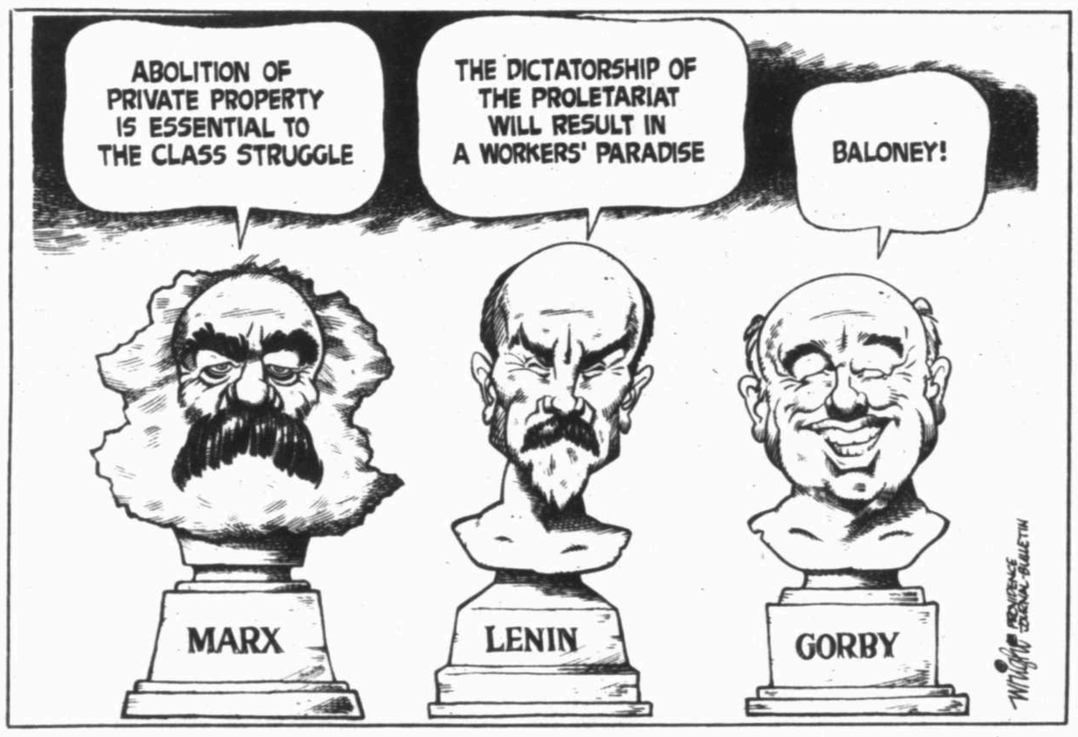

But Douglas told our associate Greg Moore that he got an aloof reception from the State Department.

In May 1988, a 36-year-old Palestinian named Muhammed Rashid was arrested in Greece, for his alleged role in the 1982 bombing of a Pan Am flight enroute from Tokyo to Honolulu. A Japanese teen-ager was killed and 15 people were wounded. When the Greeks nabbed Rashid, the State Department asked that he be extradited to the United States.

On Dec. 11, after a year in a U.S. jail, Neimann was flown to Greece where he is now awaiting trial. He faces another year in prison.

As for Muhammed Rashid, the State Department is still waiting for Greece to decide whether it will turn him over.

Sunroofs sometimes let in more than the sun

Took the proud, shiny new Sunmobile to the dealer for the six-month checkup. That's where they change the oil, give the fan belt a tug and hand you a bill for $103.86.

Russell Baker

Being passionate environmentalists, we don't whine about the price. The dirty engine oil has to go somewhere and with dumps getting snooty about it the Mafia can charge higher and higher prices for pouring it in the creek over in the next county.

Anyhow we love our Sunmobile, so proud and shiny with its swell sunroof which slides open so you can get a tan on your skull if you're bald and the tops of your ears even if you aren't. At first my wife didn't want a sunroof.

"You know they can't make that sunroof watertight," she said. "If there were truth in advertising, they'd call it a rainroof."

"Ah, you women!" I chortled, lapsing into my old-fashioned sexist mode, which calls for chortling whenever women talk about automobiles. "Don't you know Japanese competition has stopped car makers from turning out junky stuff like leaky sunroofs?"

About this I was right, as I am about so many other things, because the sunroof let in nothing but sun, and I was shiny and proud when I took the Sunmobile in for its six-month checkup. That afternoon I paid the $103.86, drove the car home, got out and walked around to admire it.

What was this? A dent? A dent in the back of our Sunmobile? A dent where there had never been a dent before? A dent in a car that had previously never had a dent anywhere on its proud, shiny metal skin?

Darkening with fury, I immediately drove back to the dealer and stood glaring at the woman who had taken my check for $103.86 only moments earlier. The service manager, obviously wondering why Darth Vader had suddenly appeared on the premises, asked could he be helpful.

"My car! It's dented! So proud and shiny when I left it here this morning! Now — dented!"

Outside he looked at the car. "It's dented all right," he said.

"What are you going to do about it?"

Well, how could he know I wasn't armed? Everybody else is these days. His gunshy mumbling about "the body shop" sounded like a guilty plea, and I stalked homeward to await satisfaction.

Days passed with no news from the body shop, which wasn't alarming, if you know body shops. When you're finally sore enough to phone a body shop, they've always just finished your car and are "buffing it" as you speak.

As this time passed, however, my dent fury abated. My tender nature — the real Casper Milquetoast me — took over. "You were pretty hard on that service manager," it said. "Are you really sure the dent wasn't there when you took it to the shop?"

Well, pretty sure, but not really 100 percent sure. I'd stood behind it at Jock's U-Pump-It Gas Emporium the night before and hadn't seen any dent.

"Maybe so," said the pipsqueakish me. "But how do you know somebody didn't come along in the night and hit the car with a baseball bat? Somebody who just couldn't stand to see a car looking so shiny and proud."

Well of course that was a possibility.

"You couldn't swear in court there was no dent before you took it to the shop, could you?"

Milquetoast had me there. I should have got a notarized affidavit from a licensed auto-body examiner before taking the car in. I had carried on shamefully when I went back. The nice service manager probably thought I was working a scam, trying to get a dent fixed for the price of a six-month checkup.

The more I thought about it, the worse I felt. Had I really become the rotten kind of person who would accuse somebody of denting my car without irrefutable evidence that some bat-wielding automophobe hadn't done it?

I had to admit I'd acted rudely to the service manager. He probably thought I was a cheap chiseling lout. It was painful thinking I had lost that good man's esteem.

So when I finally went back to get the car, I was hoping he would give me a big bill for the work, so I could pay it without complaining and win back his respect.

He didn't, though. Just looked at me with that expression good people give human rats, and said, "Does it look all right?"

"Like new," I said, and it did look all shiny and proud, which made me feel so shabby and ashamed that I felt an impulse to say, "Let me write you a check for $103.86," but he strode away before I could speak.

It rained that night. Next morning there was a puddle on the front seat. The sunroof had leaked. I'm ashamed to go back to the shop and complain. Anyhow, I probably deserve it.

GEORGE F. WILL

Manufacturers oppose Moynihan's proposal

WASHINGTON — Perfect.

The five-paragraph dispatch was buried deep in the Wall Street Journal, as befits news of class struggle in this moment of capitalist triumphalism. The small, laconic headline was:

Moynihan Plan Opposed By Manufacturing Group

George F. Will

The board of the National Association of Manufacturers had met and frowned mightily against Sen. Moynihan's proposal to cut Social Security payroll taxes. Such a cut would partially unmask the real deficit, would cost the government $62 billion over the next two years, for starters, and would (one can hear NAM say) cause grass to grow in the streets of America's cities.

The NAM statement says, with more fervor than rigor: Changing the schedule of Social Security tax increases adopted in 1983 would "erode whatever confidence remains that any tax structure adopted by the Congress will actually remain in place for more than a few short years."

Actually, the NAM is broadminded about tax changes. It favors cutting the capital-gains rate which was set in 1986. But speaking about the Moynihan proposal, the NAM says: It is bad because it would lead to changes in the venerable income-tax structure adopted in 1986. (That was, evidently, before the birth of the principle that all tax changes, other than in the capital-gains rate, are reprehensible.)

NAM's statement is admirably forthright: "The sharp increase in the deficit would generate intense pressure for off-setting spending cuts andor tax increases, with the likeliest result politically being income-tax increases, especially on corporations."

Percisely.

The NAM story was datelined Boca Raton, Fla.

A famous book on Europe's revolutionary tradition is titled "To the Finland Station," a reference to the Petrograd (as it then was and may again be) railroad station where Lenin arrived in 1917, bearing the revolutionary impulse. When the history of America's non-revolutionary tradition is written, it should be titled "To the Boca Raton Resort and Club." That is where the ruling class goes to recuperate from the rigors of capitalism and to plan the defense of trickle-down economics against the ingratitude of those who are trickled upon.

NAM's position is understandable and defensible; indeed, it could have been stronger. It could have truly said: Corporations do not pay taxes, they collect them, so increased corporate taxes may be in many ways regressive, depending on how they are passed.

But the NAM is understandably reluctant to raise the subject of regressivity while defending current Social Security taxes.

The NAM is putting up a proper defense of its constituency's interest. What is indefensible is the Democrats' invertebrate response to Moynihan's idea. Does the Democratic Party differ in any interesting way from the NAM? Are the constituencies the same?

Felix Rohaytn, the financier and Democrat who helped New York City through its fiscal crisis in the 1970s, says any analysis of the increasing regressivity of social policy should examine state and local taxes, too. He says the effect of Reagan-Bush policies has been to enlarge the mandates of state and local governments, while shrinking the federal resources for them. Thus local governments have been driven into deeper reliance on regressive sales and property taxes.

Many Democrats (there they go again, off on another retreat to think; here they come, behaving in a way that indicates they played volleyball instead) say Moynihan's proposal would provoke a "crisis." In Washington, "crisis" is a noun denoting any situation in which politicians must make choices that are preceded by a modicum of thought about large questions and followed by the need to say something intelligible about the principles that dictated the choices.

Yes, cutting Social Security taxes without knowing what compensatory action would be taken would be risky. Or, as Democrats like to say soberly, it would be "irresponsible." They should remember the wisdom of Trollope's Duke of Omnium: "There is such a thing as a conscience with such a fine edge that it will allow a man to do nothing."

Moynihan's Democratic traducers say: Gee, if we open large questions of taxation and distributive justice, who knows what the majority might do to us? The rumor persists that Democrats are the majority. But rumors often are wrong, such as the rumor that Democrats comprise the "opposition." That canard is refuted by this fact: Oppositions oppose.

Democrats lack confidence in themselves, and who shall say they are wrong? They do, after all, know one thing best: themselves. But politics would be more satisfying if they had the brio of the Catholic priest who, when asked how one could come to know the Church's view of heaven and hell, said: "Die."

Medicare abuses should be stopped

Due to a recent illness of an older family member, I have been shocked by the prices quoted by some nursing services to come into a home to give daily injections of medication.

The prices quoted to me ranged from $65 to $80 per injection. When I complained, I was told that Medicare would shoulder the expense. This over-priced fee is simply a legal way for some health care agencies to literally steal from the government, thus creating a burden on taxpayers and the federal health care system.

We should all remember that it starts at home and not Washington, to put a stop to the abuses of a few on a program that was intended and should continue to be used to aid the elderly of this nation.

Less could have been spent on county jail

Would you be so kind as to allow me, speaking as a local taxpayer, to cite some of the statements made in your front page story of Tuesday, Feb. 13, and to ask a few pertinent questions about them?

The headline was "County houses federal prisoners."

Question: Why is this presented as some magic new method of obtaining federal funds for the local economy? Doesn't your writer and practically everybody else know the city now performs and for many years has performed this function and that federal prisoner fees totally support financially the operation of our city jail without cost to local taxpayers?

Paragraph two states, "The contract resulted from more than 18 months of negotiations with the U.S. government."

Question: Weren't the real negotiations conducted many years ago when the city made the original agreement to house federal prisoners? Now, with the city jail to be closed, what alternative to using the "new" jail does the U.S. Government have? What was there to negotiate so earnestly these last 18 months?

Paragraph six states, "The county is negotiating a $100,000 jail contract with Midland City Officials."

Question: How wisely have city officials acted in allowing themselves to be stampeded into moving police headquarters a few blocks away from the present, entirely adequate, facility at great expense; giving up our self-supporting city jail; giving away to another entity the federal prisoner franchise and assuming the burden of a $100,000 a year obligation for jailhouse rent? And as for the county, could not they, at a fraction of the gigantic outlay in tax dollars being spent to construct the "new" jail, have spent a relatively small amount for a more modest facility to resolve the only real problem we had, county jail overcrowding?

And last but not least, who are the behind-the-scenes manipulators who bullied our city and county officials into making these costly, white elephant decisions?

Readers' views on: New school

Let's stop fuss about new school

If it's location parity in our schools we seek, why not take a more reasonable approach and stop all this fuss about location.

In the 1950's a junior high was constructed in east Midland which is now being used as a freshman school. I suggest we return this campus to a junior high facility. This would give the east side a new freshman school. The construction of a new freshman school in northwest Midland would even things out so far as location parity is concerned.

It has been stated that the construction of a new school at the proposed southeast site would stimulate development in the area. Junior high schools are closed campus facilities and have had absolutely no effect on development of the surrounding area as evidenced by the area around Midland Freshman School located in southeast Midland.

Ethnic makeup of each campus does not appear to be an issue, as this is accomplished by the very expensive mandate of school busing.

Local architect should design planned school

Why isn't the Midland School Board giving the new junior high project to a local architect? Why do they have to send Midland money out of town to Fort Worth?

With the economy the way it is in Midland, I would want them to give it to a local company. Midland has fine architects — some of them have won many awards — who are capable of doing this project. We need to look into this and change the minds of the school board before all of the money leaves this area.

Let Midland money stay in Midland or we can vote for people who will keep it here.

Are more hydrogen bombs really needed?

The proposed budget, as submitted by President Bush recently, has a request for $12.4 billion for the building of hydrogen bombs. This represents a substantial increase over the current amount authorized by the appropriation bill for 1990.

But let us look at what we now have in stock ready to use. The explosive power of what the American government has under its direct control is sufficient to kill every living soul on the entire planet Earth 12 times over. Measured in terms of a single individual, among the estimated 5.192 billion people now inhabiting this planet, the explosive force per individual is in the neighborhood of the same explosive force attributable to 4,000 pounds of dynamite. Only one pound of dynamite, if exploded at the right place and right time, will result in either you or I being very, very dead. I know what one pound of dynamite will do.

So do we really need all these new hydrogen bombs? How about $6 billion worth of bombs and $6 billion in additional Pell grants for our needy students that cannot go to college because no money is available.

Belonging to chamber satisfaction enough

I couldn't believe what I heard when a prospective member for the Midland Chamber of Commerce asked, "What's in it for me? What do I get for the money I pay for membership?"

It is my opinion that we should ask, "What can I do for the Chamber of Commerce to help my city to grow, diversity and prosper?"

I have been active in some committee or another for almost 20 years and have never expected any personal reward for being a member. My interest is in seeing Midland prosper to the benefit of all of us who live here. If you want anything from the chamber, become an active member and receive personal satisfaction for having helped your city become a place where people will want to come to live and to work.

Lawyers shouldn't contribute to judges

I don't believe that a candidate for District Judge should accept contributions from lawyers who will be trying cases in his court.

Most of John Hyde's campaign money is coming from trial lawyers. Would the contributing lawyers expect favorable decisions/special treatment from Hyde should he be elected?

Nick Taylor returned all monies given by trail lawyers to his campaign.

Which man, if elected, would be in the best position to conduct a fair, non-preferential trial?

Hance's comment not totally accurate

While watching the Republican debate for governor, I noted that Kent Hance called Clayton Williams a liar when he claimed to have created 100,000 jobs. Hance also claimed that everyone in Midland had called and told his office and claimed Williams was lying.

I have lived in Midland for 20 years and know many people. I have failed to find a single one who called or wrote to Hance. Is this not lying?

He also stated that Williams only employed about 320 people. Does he not know the difference in creating jobs and having people in your employ?

When Williams builds a building or drills a well does that not create jobs for several contractors and service companies?

I, for one, am astonished Hance ever made it to the Railroad Commission, let alone to governor.

City's ordinances should be enforced

Patti Lankford brings up a good point about school zones, and even about all city ordinances (letters, Feb. 4). She asks, "If they are not enforceable, why not eliminate them?"

The city does not enforce its ordinances regulating school speed zones, parking on lawns, sidewalks, and curbs, water overflow in the streets, among others. Why not? Isn't the city council supposed to oversee the actions of the police department? Why don't they insist that the city ordinances be enforced? Or are they only interested in raising taxes?

Soviet willingness to accept U.S. demands positive blessing

The astonishing Soviet willingness to accede to Western demands, seen once again in the Ottawa agreements on German unification and on conventional forces in Europe, is a mixed but on the whole positive political blessing for President Bush.

Tom Wicker

It was a Bush proposal — 195,000 troops each for the United States and U.S.S.R. in Central Europe, with 30,000 more U.S. troops outside that zone — that Moscow first rejected, then accepted at Ottawa.

And though the German reunification formula it also joined in announcing was not Bush's alone, it clearly reflects his leadership.

That gives the president the strong appearance of being on top, if not literally in control, of the swiftly evolving situation in Europe.

Most of what is happening in the formerly Communist world and in the Soviet Union itself is not the direct result of Western or U.S. pressures, but of internal economic and political failures and demands.

The consequences of these events, however — the future of Germany foremost among them — can be influenced to a considerable degree by the policies of the NATO allies.

It's politically important to Bush to appear to take a vigorous lead in determining those consequences.

Americans want their nation to play a strong, even decisive role in world affairs, and expect their president's foreign policy leadership to result in just such U.S. preeminence.

As in Bush's case, polls suggest that so long as a president is perceived as providing that kind of leadership in the world, a disappointing or even a failing performance in domestic affairs can be accepted by the voters.

The Ottawa decision on conventional forces seems particularly important in U.S. politics because the Soviet acquiescence followed so closely on Mikhail Gorbachev's initial rejection, and the president's reiteration of his "asymmetrical" proposal.

Gorbachev thus appears to have been "backed down" by Bush's firm stand.

This will appeal to the machismo in many U.S. voters, and may even shore up the president's standing with the militant right wing of his own party.

Ottawa may prove, nevertheless, to pose problems for Bush.

How, for example, will the Soviet retreat on conventional forces square with the president's costly new military budget and his insistence — in justification of that budget — that the U.S. keep its guard up and its dollars flowing to the Pentagon?

Since the Bush military budget already is being hotly questioned by a public and a Congress that perceive a lessened Soviet threat, its chances for approval may have been further damaged.

A year or so from now, say in Bush's re-election year of 1992, will those 30,000 extra U.S. troops in Europe still be as welcome there as he and NATO leaders say they are now?

Such leaders have been wrong before — on missile "modernization," for example — about what the European people welcome.

Some of Bush's appearance of strong foreign policy leadership might be tarnished by future European demands for American soldiers to go home, against his insistence that they are needed for the security of the West.

Alternatively, or at the same time, U.S. taxpayers may be asking why, in view of the vast Soviet withdrawal of forces from Central and Eastern Europe, Washington needs to keep 30,000 extra troops there, at heavy cost — or even why some of the 195,000 in Eastern Europe are still necessary.

Once U.S. troops start coming home in large numbers and U.S. outlays for European defense begin to decline, it may be difficult to halt the process and to keep Americans alarmed about a Soviet threat.

As for German reunification, Ottawa seems to confirm that it " be a reality sooner rather than . although the most significant que.. ion remains to be negotiated — will the new, united Germany be part of NATO or a neutral (other possibilities are not on the table, apparently)?

Bush, West Germany and the allies are insisting on NATO membership; and though the Soviets have not agreed, they have been yielding to other Western positions, some of their former satellites also favor NATO, and Moscow has accepted a four-power negotiating framework that leaves it in a 3-to-1 minority.

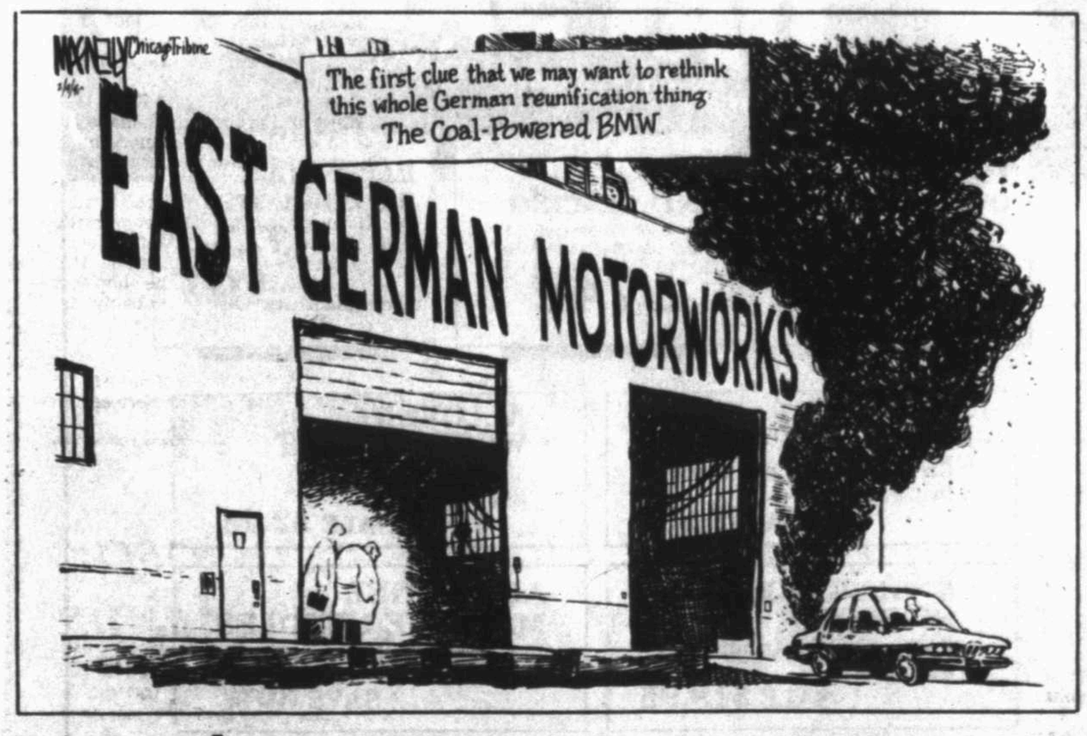

That, too, suggests thorny questions: If the Soviet Union withdraws most of its forces from Europe, and the Warsaw Pact collapses, can NATO survive?

If so, for what reason?

If not, under what auspices can U.S. troops remain in Europe?

And what happens then to the restraints on Germany and the assurances to other nations that its NATO membership is supposed to provide?

Can hatred of apartheid be overcome?

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — It was almost exactly 30 years ago that Prime Minister Harold Macmillan of Britain made his "wind of change" speech here. It signaled Britain's sweeping acceptance of decolonization, the dismantling of empires almost everywhere that has so changed the world.

Flora Lewis

And it was a warning to South Africa to abandon racism as the foundation of its society. "Our policy," he said, "is non-racial; it offers a future in which all will play their full part as citizens in the countries where they live and in which feelings of race will be submerged in loyalty to two nations."

Two months later, after the Sharpeville massacre and crisis, South Africa banned the main black political organizations, driving them underground to a policy of violent resistance. So, in a sense, President F.W. de Klerk's "unbanning" and call for negotiations moves the situation back where it was in 1960 when Henrik Verwoerd was building the trappings of apartheid.

The English-language newspaper Argus recently said, "looking back, it is clear that, on balance, Mr. Macmillan was right and Dr. Verwoerd was wrong." That is putting it mildly. There have been 30 years of tragedy and bitter hatred now to be overcome, and not everybody is yet prepared to believe it is possible.

Conservative Member of Parliament Louis Stofberg puts the ultra-nationalist Afrikaner position, saying "Verwoerd fought it all out for us." Calling de Klerk's shift "mere treachery," he told me it was due to a combination of "outside pressures" and a belief that "we can't afford this war any longer. We don't agree. We'd rather fight."

While there is a new surge of hope here for a peaceful solution at last, there is also a sense of danger ahead. If the attempt to work out a multiracial state with human and democratic rights for all breaks down, there isn't likely to be another chance before the catastrophe, which has been on the horizon for so long.

A lot more than the fate of South Africans themselves is at stake. An important if little-noticed passage in de Klerk's speech offered "discussions with other southern African countries with the aim of formulating a realistic development plan." He called for a "joint program of reconstruction.

Washington continues to inspire world's leaders

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — As George Washington's birthday approaches, I received a most interesting letter from Mrs. Robert Channing Seamans Jr., regent of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association of the Union.

Hearst

She reminded my wife, Austine, and me of our family's long association with this oldest U.S. national women's organization. My grandmother, Phoebe Apperson Hearst, joined the preservation group in 1890. She continued as its California represenative for 25 years to give much of her treasure and time in the restoration of George Washington's Virginia home at Mount Vernon. Grandma Hearst considered it a very important historic cause and so do I. We were delighted, therefore, to hear about the association today. Mrs. Seamans wrote:

"Throughout the rich history of this country, Americans have sought and admired a special brand of hero. Yet the brightest star in the constellation of heroic men and women has remained remarkably constant, unblemished after two centuries of scrutinization and analysis. George Washington's position as 'The Father of Our Country' has yet to be challenged.

"Still, in this ever-changing world, we worry that it is becoming more difficult for Americans, particularly young Americans, to follow in the footsteps of Washington. We are concerned that the concepts of liberty, patriotism and self-sacrifice are taken for granted. With so many pressures to bear, parents and teachers may be too busy to communicate to children the spirit, the determination, and the strength of character that served as our country's foundation.

"Recent events in Eastern Europe testify to the enduring appeal of democracy and man's never-ending quest for freedom. Washington would undoubtedly have associated with the struggle, strife and exhilaration experienced by freedom-fighters in Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and China. Our world is indeed becoming smaller, even as it grows in complexity. Washington is serving as a role model in places he hardly knew existed, in an age he could never have imagined.

"In the words of President Bush, 'Two hundred years after his inauguration as our first president, George Washington continues to inspire leaders in the United States and around the world.'

"Yet we must work together to ensure that Washington serves as an inspiration to all Americans. For the challenges facing our nation and the world will demand the leadership and conviction of many, not simply the direction of a chosen few.

"As a new century approaches, the Mount Vernon Ladies Association pledges its energy, its talents and its resources to the education of Americans, to the development of leadership, and to a greater understanding of our nation's heritage. By safeguarding Washington's home and opening its doors to millions of people, the association will continue to offer a unique glimpse of American history. Through a variety of educational and outreach programs, millions more will come to understand Washington's character and appreciate the sacrifices made by our founding fathers.

"No single effort can instill a 'love of country' into a new generation of American leaders, nor can the example of a single individual, even someone as singularly patriotic as Washington, inspire a young person to greatness. But if we can touch the minds and hearts of children, both h... t Mount Vernon and in classrooms across the country, we can take pride in our accomplishment. In an age when movie stars, rock musicians and sports 'heroes' garner fame and recognition beyond belief, we will be communicating the essence of a true American hero.

"... It may be that the more modern we become, the more we need to understand our heritage ... Washington, the hero, is needed more than ever as an inspiration to our leaders of tomorrow. The Mount Vernon Ladies' Association recognizes that we must work harder to communicate the true character of Washington to many more people and in many more places ....

"Mount Vernon remains strong, full of life and vitality. With a history as rich as ours, we have always taken pleasure in looking back to a bygone era, to what some historians call the 'Golden Age' of Mount Vernon. Now, with a sense of enthusiasm, we are also looking ahead to a new 'Golden Age.'

"... I hope you will have the opportunity to visit Mount Vernon in the very near future, to share a historic experience that is still second to none.

"With our warm wishes for an enjoyable and meaningful George Washington's birthday ..."

Thank you, Mrs. Seamans. You have made our holiday, and my column.

Midland College preparing for annual homecoming events

By H.A. TUCK

Last two home basketball games of the season are scheduled Monday and Thursday at Chaparral Center.

Tuck

The Chaps host Odessa College on Monday and Clarendon College on Thursday. Both games begin at 7:30 p.m.

Monday's game also is the 1990 Homecoming event, with presentation of all the nominees at halftime prior to the announcement of the King and Queen. Voting was held last week. The Homecoming Dance is being held at Club DV8, with student ID required for free admission.

There will be a third game this week, the make-up of a game postponed from last month at Clarendon College. That game is set for 8 p.m. Saturday in Clarendon.

Final conference game of the season will be at Borger on March 1, when the Chaps play Frank Phillips College.

All the Chaparral games are broadcast on KCRS Radio, 550AM.

Three Midland College faculty members are competing in the "Need To Read" corporate Spelling Bee on Friday at the Midland Center. Nancy Hart, legal assistance instructor, and business instructors Janice Hastings and Jan Tonroy are being sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Tickets are $6, which includes lunch. Since Midland College also provides office space for the local Need To Read office, we feel a special kinship for this program ... plus, we also believe that Hart, Hastings, and Tonroy will be a tough trio to beat.

Regular meeting of the Midland College Board of Trustees is slated for 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Board Room. Much of the agenda is routine, but does include a planned call for election of three of the nine college board members.

The Midland College tennis teams are competing Friday and Saturday at the University of Texas-San Antonio's invitational tournament.

With the wins posted by several of the Chaparral players at the recent Rolex ITCA Small College Championships, the MC programs really got great exposure. That was especially true after the Chaparral duo of Janneke Garos and Sharla Barone posted the first-ever win by a small college champion at the following tournament for NCAA Division I players.

If you like tennis, or even just want to support the Chaparral program, there's going to be a special evening of tennis at Chap Center on Monday, March 19. All the local tennis professionals and the public school instructors will be presenting clinics, followed with special drills and exhibitions by members of the Chaparral men's and women's teams who are both now ranked number one among junior colleges.

Prior to the evening's events, a number of local professionals will be conducting clinics at local schools.

Admission price is just $3 for students and $5 for adults, with a chance to win some nifty merchandise prizes.

I'm almost in the same category as the boy who cried wolf until nobody believed him. Two weeks ago, in the campus employee newsletter, I warned that a construction ditch was going to get across one of the main parking lots in order to tie utility lines to the Student Center addition.

The ditch was to appear on Monday ... but two weeks later, it's still not there.

It probably will show up now just in time for the spring monsoons and will be open for weeks while workers wait for it to dry so they can fill it and repave the parking lot cut.

A meeting of the Chaparral Booster Club is scheduled for 4 p.m. today at the Chaparral Center. The group will be feeding athletes, then hearing reports from coaches.

If you'd like to attend, come on out and enter through Door 3. A barbecue dinner is being served at a cost of $6.

There's a new show at McCormick Gallery which you should find interesting to view. It's a group of photographs done by well-known Eugene Atget of Paris. The show is going to remain through March 9. McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Admission is free and the hours are 1-5 p.m. on Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturday.

Chap Center is hosting the Region I Class 5A girls basketball tournament next weekend (Feb. 23-24) and the boys the following weekend (March 3-4). Games will be at 6 and 8 p.m. on Friday and the championship at 11 a.m. both weekends.

Because of its facilities, Chap Center also is hosting a lot of play-off games. For details on those, stay tuned to the radio, TV, and local newspapers. The reason is that games are being scheduled on as little as three or four days notice.

238th District Court Judge

Republican Primary March 13

Taylor

For District Judge

Pol. Adv. paid by the Committee to Elect Nick Taylor Judge.
1101 Petroleum Bldg. Midland, Tx. 79701

February 16, 1990

Dear Citizens of Midland County:

I want to take this opportunity to tell you about myself and why I am running for the position of 238th District Court Judge. This office is being vacated by the retirement of Judge Vann Culp, who has done an outstanding job.

After graduation from Harvard, I became an infantry officer and paratrooper in the U.S. Army Reserve. I then completed law school at Georgetown University. I had an interest in oil and gas law and taxation. This interest brought me to Texas where I worked as a roughneck and lead tong man for a West Texas drilling company prior to attending SMU for advanced legal studies of oil and gas law and taxation which I completed with honors. I have always believed that practical experience is just as important as academics.

I have been fortunate to have a successful law practice for 26 years. About 16 years ago I was recruited by Tom Sealy, Boyd Laughlin, James L. Pardue and William F. Pennebaker to move to Midland and head up the Corporate department of the Stubbeman, MacRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder law firm. My wife, Trinka, and I chose Midland as our permanent home. We have spent 16 of the happiest years of our lives in Midland. We have increasingly given of our time to community services.

In the 1980's I became concerned with the efforts of special interest groups to control the Texas judiciary. Our courts received adverse publicity on a national level and the public began to lose its respect for the judiciary. I also realized that few successful attorneys were willing to leave private practice and serve the community.

I have a strong conviction that the Court should be for all people. The primary function of the Court is to know and apply the law with integrity and fairness.

I have been concerned for the past few years with the rising crime rate in Midland, most of which is linked with the drug problem. Many of us have been victims of crime, including my family. I have volunteered my time to help solve this problem and I agreed to serve as President of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission after my appointment by the Midland City Council.

I have always believed that public service is the highest honor. This was instilled in me by my family. My father worked for the U.S. Government for 32 years concluding with his service as an Economic advisor in the executive office of President Eisenhower. My father's example was to forego all personal benefit in favor of public service.

I am offering my candidacy for District Judge because I want to serve this community with integrity and fairness. This community has given much to my family. It is time for me to step forward and make a contribution.

Please consider my candidacy in casting your ballot on March 13th.

Sincerely yours,

Nick Taylor

Record number of nurses doesn't help hospitals

BOSTON (AP) — American hospitals and nursing homes are short of nurses as demand outstrips supply by as much as 6-to-1 in some cities.

Yet, the number of working nurses — more than 2 million — is at an all-time high.

Nursing school enrollments have declined 27 percent since 1983 and many nurses are choosing other careers, leaving an estimated 11 percent of nursing positions in hospitals unfilled.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

The Society of Automotive Engineers has initiated an engineering scholarship program providing direct tuition grants to outstanding student pursuing engineering degrees. The new program is part of of Vision 2000, a campaign spearheaded by SAE to support all aspects of engineering education.

All scholarship applicants must be U.S. citizens with at least a 3.0 grade point average for 10th and 11th grades. With the exception of Rochester Institute of Technology, which is making early selections, all scholarship applications must be postmarked by March 15. Candidates for university scholarships must apply for admission to the sponsoring school prior to April 1. Announcements of winners will be made no later than May.

MISD's nurses to screen for spinal abnormalities

From Staff Reports

Midland Independent School District nurses will be screening for scoliosis, a common spinal abnormality found in adolescents, this week.

Each school district must screen for spinal deformities in grades 6 and 9. The purpose of the screening is to detect the signs of abnormal curves of the spine at their earliest stages.

Scoliosis is a sideways twisting of the spine. The other part of the screening will be for the exaggerated rounding of the upper back. Kyphosis, sometimes called round back, is often confused with poor posture. Many cases of curvature of the spine are mild and require only ongoing observation by a physician when they are first diagnosed.

The screening process is conducted by nurses certified by the state of Texas. The test consists of looking at a child's back while he/she stands and then bends forward. Boys and girls will be seen individually for this examination.

Boys will wear gym shorts and remove their shirts. Girls are requested to wear a halter top and shorts or a two-piece swimsuit.

Screening schedule is De Zavala, Tuesday, 1-3:10 p.m.; Washington, Wednesday, 10:25 a.m.-2:25 p.m.; Midland Freshman, Thursday, 8 a.m.-3:00 p.m.; Crockett, Feb. 26, 11:10 a.m.- 3:10 p.m.; Pease, Feb. 27, 11:10 a.m.- 3:10 p.m.; Milam, March 2, 11:10 a.m.-3:10 p.m.; Lee Freshman, March 6, 8 a.m.-3 p.m.; Travis, March 8, 9:40 a.m.-2:25 p.m.; South, March 9, 11:10 a.m.-3:10 p.m.

PEOPLE

Will the Trumps reconcile?

NEW YORK — Billionaire Donald Trump says the news media in New York has treated him unfairly and inaccurately reported his separation from his wife, Ivana, according to a published report.

The Daily News in New York reported in its editions today that Trump is unhappy with extensive coverage of his marital problems in New York's tabloid papers and local television stations.

"I think the news media should be ashamed of itself," Trump told the News in a telephone interview. "I'm sure that it sells, and people don't care for the truth.

"They have me with women I never even met before. They have me with women I shook hands with."

Saturday, the Daily News quoted an anonymous source as saying Trump was upset by coverage of the split and was considering "dropping the whole thing."

Trump lawyers Jay Goldberg and Stanford Lotwin couldn't be reached Saturday, but they told the Daily News they knew nothing about any possible reconciliation.

No legal action has yet been taken by either Trump.

Mrs. Trump was in seclusion Friday at the couple's Greenwich, Conn., home with the couple's three children, New York Newsday reported Saturday. On Saturday, according to the Daily News, they were in Florida.

Mrs. Trump met with Cardinal John O'Connor Friday in his office.

"It was a private meeting," said archdiocesan spokesman Joe Zwilling, who declined to say what was discussed.

Mrs. Trump's father, Milos Zelnicek, flew from Czechoslovakia to be by his daughter's side, the New York Post said.

Mrs. Trump reportedly burst into tears Friday when she saw the Post's front page story quoting alleged "other woman" Marla Maples as saying Trump was the "best sex I've ever had," the Post reported.

Miss Maples' manager, Chuck Jones, was quoted in Saturday's Post as saying his client called the quote a "blatant lie" made up by a jealous actress-friend.

Wilder

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The Virginia budget is shrinking, but Gov. L. Douglas Wilder's limousine has grown a few inches and nearly doubled in cost over the one used by his predecessor.

Wilder's black Lincoln Town Car is a wee bit longer than the stretch Cadillac used by ex-Gov. Gerald L. Baliles. But Wilder's limo is costing the state $37,923 plus trade-in of the Cadillac, which cost $19,949 plus trade-in four years ago.

Wilder's car will be delivered in about six weeks, Curtis Wells, general manager of the dealership, said Saturday. It will have a keyless entry system, a 5-liter V-8 engine and six-way adjustable power seats.

Since taking office, Wilder has pleaded for fiscal austerity among state agencies. On Friday, the House Finance Committee sent a $267 million package of revenue enhancement bills to the floor to help Virginia balance its proposed $25.8 billion budget.

Car prices have gone up in four years, said Laura F. Dillard, the governor's press secretary. Plus, she said, former Gov. Charles S. Robb's car commanded a higher trade-in price to bring the cost of the Baliles car down.

New governors traditionally trade in the vehicle of their predecessors.

NEW YORK (AP) — Barbara Bush said her secret to staying happily married to the same man for 45 years is hugging.

"As you get older, I think you need to put your arms around each other more," Mrs. Bush said in the March issue of Ladies' Home Journal.

Despite the pressures and demands on the president and the first lady, Mrs. Bush said they have never been closer.

"He calls me much more on the phone than he used to. He'll say, 'Look out the window; there's a friend of yours,' and we'll wave hankies back and forth."

During her daily swims in the White House pool, Mrs. Bush said she makes sure to pass by the far side of the Oval Office so her husband won't see her.

"George is so bad about saying, 'Come in and say hello.' He caught me the other day in my preswimming clothes, and there was a new ambassador from a foreign country. There we were, eyeball to eyeball."

PARIS (AP) — Michel Drach, a director who along with Jean-Luc Godard and Francois Truffaut created a new style of filmmaking known as New Wave, died of lung cancer Thursday. He was 59.

Drach made his film debut in 1959 with the well-received "On N'Enterre Pas le Dimanche."

Working at the same time as Godard, Truffaut and Claude Chabrol, Drach experimented with the new, freewheeling cinematic styles that eventually became known as New Wave.

In 1974, Drach made "Les Violons du Bal," a dark tale based on the anti-Semitism he experienced as a child during the Nazi occupation. The 1979 hit "Le Pullover Rouge" turned his camera to crime in Marseille, where he made a strong case against the death penalty for the killers of a young girl.

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Mexican officials will ask thousands of college students on spring break to sign in as they move across international bridges during this year's spring break.

The voluntary registration stems from last year's abduction and ritualistic slaying of a University of Texas student, said Carlos Perez, deputy Mexican consul in Brownsville.

Mark Kilroy, a pre-med student, was abducted last year a few blocks from the Gateway Bridge while on a drinking outing with friends in the city of Matamoros, Mexico, across the border from Brownsville.

His dismembered body was found a few weeks later buried on a ranch outside of Matamoros. Police say a gruesome cult of drug traffickers killed Kilroy and 14 other men in ritualistic slayings designed to ward off police and rival drug lords.

Perez said the registry "will be a very confident way to know who is in Mexico. As you know, we had a very unfortunate situation last year with the case of Mr. Kilroy."

The sign-in program, to begin March 1, will be carried out by federal officers under the direction of Antolin Licona-Lopez, the chief immigration officer for the lower Mexican border, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Hundreds of thousands of students make annual spring break treks to South Texas beach resorts. Many under age 21 — the legal drinking age in Texas — cross into Mexico where the drinking age is 18, and where drinks are much cheaper.

Perez hailed to registry as a good idea for everyone.

"This is for the protection of the teen-agers coming into the country, and on the other hand, it's a convenient way for the authorities to know who is in Mexico in the event of an emergency or any incident."

Dispute over dough nets jail for firm's founder

HOUSTON (AP) — The founder of a Houston-based cookie company was sentenced to 90 days in jail for ransacking and looting the apartment of a woman he thought had stolen $600 from him.

Visiting State District Judge Frank Price Friday also ordered Neal David Elinoff, 34, to make $3,200 restitution to Ellan Stuart for her damages in the Jan. 5, 1989, episode.

Elinoff is founder of Neal's Cookies, which has several shops in South Texas.

Elinoff will start serving his jail term Wednesday and then spend 10 years on probation, pay a $1,000 fine and perform 500 hours of community service.

Price rejected the cookie entrepreneur's contention that he can best continue his "contributions to the community" by remaining free on probation.

One factor in the judge's decision concerned a 1984 episode that resulted in Elinoff spending six months on probation for soliciting the services of a prostitute.

Court documents say Elinoff had an off-and-on relationship with Ms. Stuart starting in 1985 when she met him at a bank where she was a secretary.

Their relationship resumed in late 1988 and they were together on New Year's Eve. That night Elinoff said Ms. Stuart saw a stack of his $100 bills. When some of it later was discovered missing, he presumed she had taken it. She denied taking the money.

He ransacked her Houston apartment Jan. 5, 1989, and took her entire wardrobe, videocassette recorder, computer, stereo, telephone and vacuum cleaner.

Later she found a note he had left for her: "My sweet Ellan, return the money if you want your things back."

Prosecutor Janie Willis said six months passed before Ms. Stuart's property was returned. Elinoff attributed the long delay to advice from his lawyer.

"Prior to the conviction, I felt no remorse," Elinoff testified during the punishment phase of the trial.

Concerning the burglary, he said: "It never should have happened. I never should have taken the initiative that I did. It was a stupid thing."

State won't join in study which would deny benefits

DALLAS (AP) — A federal welfare experiment will deny some job training opportunities to about 10,000 poor people in 10 states to see how well they do without them, a Dallas newspaper reported.

Texas welfare officials have questioned the ethics of the experiment and refused to participate, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The experiment will evaluate the Job Opportunities and Basic Skill training program, which requires some people on welfare to either apply for education or training programs or lose benefits.

The experiment will reject some people who normally would have received training — forming a control group — and compare their experience over several years with those who participate in JOBS.

Government officials say this kind of experiment is the only way to determine if the controversial training programs will work — even if it means some people are denied job training opportunities.

Federal officials hope to have 10 states participate in the experiment. Arkansas, California and Oklahoma have expressed an interest.

But some state officials, including those in Texas, are uncomfortable with the ethical dilemma of randomly forcing some people out of potentially helpful programs in the name of science.

"We told them we would not take part," said Claudia Langguth, deputy commissioner for the client self-support services division of the Texas Department of Human Services. "My staff told me it would require a very large control group of several thousand people."

Federal officials last week focused new attention to the ethics of welfare experiments.

On Feb. 12, U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan, responding to a Morning News story, killed a federally required study that would have denied about 800 Texans access to extended medical coverage and child care.

But the JOBS study is different from the Texas experiment, said Martin Gerry, assistant secretary for planning and evaluation for HHS.

The Texas experiment targeted Medicaid and child care benefits, legally guaranteed to everyone meeting certain income requirements. Medicaid and child care are programs whose value is generally accepted.

The benefits of JOBS programs are still being weighed, and therefore the need for a precise experiment is greater, Gerry said.

Found gun suspected in 3 deaths

SHERMAN (AP) — A gun found on a sidewalk bridge an hour before three men were discovered shot to death at a nearby residence is the same kind as one missing from the house, police said Saturday night.

But further tests are needed to determine whether the gun was used in the triple homicide Friday night, police spokesman David Woods said.

"I don't have anything at this point to tie the pistol to the homicide," Woods said.

The .44-caliber Magnum pistol was found on a sidewalk overpass less than a mile from the house where James Wayne Barfield, 30, and two others were found shot to death.

Barfield's sister, Deborah Ford of Cartwright, Okla., found the bodies when she went to visit the home before a party scheduled to occur there that night.

Also killed were Barfield's roommate, Paul Robert Warren Wilson, 35, and Bobby Ray Strong, 28, of Denison, police said.

Barfield's body was discovered in a bedroom and the others were found in the rear of the house near a pool table, police said.

A .44-caliber Magnum was missing from the Barfield residence when police arrived just before 6 p.m. Friday. No other property was missing, Woods said at a news conference Saturday night.

About 4:40 p.m. Friday, an unidentified caller told police there was a .44-caliber Magnum lying on the Grand Avenue sidewalk overpass, which spans a railroad track.

Authorities were waiting for autopsy results to determine when the shootings took place.

Police have no suspects, Woods said.

"We do have a large number of men out looking into this," he said. "We have to determine who to look for right now."

Woods discussed only a few details of the investigation. He said, "It would be very hard to say there was a motive. It could be anything at this point."

Police had not run criminal checks on the three victims by Saturday night, he said.

Some neighbors reportedly heard arguments from the house Friday.

"I thought I heard the backfire of a car," one neighbor, who would not be identified, told a Sherman TV station. "Then I heard a car racing away."

Woods said police were investigating those reports.

All three men were unemployed. Barfield recently quit work because he had lung cancer, Ms. Ford said.

The Texas Rangers and Department of Public Safety were assisting the investigation.

Five slayings have been reported so far this year in Grayson County, compared with seven murders for all of 1989.

Woods described it as the most grisly crime in Sherman since October 1983, when four men, including two law officers, were killed at an aircraft hangar.

Arlington salesman Lester Lee Bower Jr. was convicted of the murders and sentenced to death. But he appealed the decision and received a stay of execution in January.

Sherman, located about 60 miles north of Dallas near the Oklahoma border, has a population of about 35,000.

Lawmen stress BB, pellet guns not toys

LEAGUE CITY (AP) — Lawmen are asking the public to treat BB, pellet and air guns with the same respect they do firearms following the death of an 8-year-old boy who died when a BB from an air rifle ricocheted off a tree and struck him in the chest.

"The public doesn't realize the potential danger of pellet or BB guns, especially the powerful ones today that are capable of producing a lot of velocity," said police spokesman Jerry Fisher.

Use of these guns "need the same treatment as firearms," Fisher said. "Any time they're used by young people, it needs to be in a supervised environment."

Dallas Police offer anti-drug proposals

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Police Department, in a series of sweeping anti-drug recommendations, urged a waiting period between the purchase and delivery of a gun and a state weapons tax to pay for background checks on gun purchasers.

Police Chief Mack Vines released the recommendations Friday and will present them to City Council Wednesday.

The summary lacks a cost analysis, but details statistics supporting the need for radical measures to halt the city's drug flow.

Dallas' "murder rated would have declined 36 percent in 1988 if drug-related homicides had been prevented," the report said.

The police suggest several changes in the justice system, including the creation of a multi-jurisdictional drug task force, centralizing a computer data bank on drug offenders, and forming special prosecution units.

The most controversial suggestion will likely be for a weapons tax and waiting period for gun purchases. Both recommendations are opposed by the National Rifle Association and other gun lobbying groups.

The report also calls for "drug-free school zones" in which anyone caught selling drugs would receive a stiffer penalty.

In all, the report makes 64 recommendations, but police spokesman Ed Spencer said officers have not completed estimates of what it would cost to implement them.

"I don't know have the vaguest idea of where we're going to get the money," said City Councilman Jerry Bartos, "unless we have the guts to undo some of the things we committed ourselves to last year, like more frequent mowing of medians and the double-barrel increase in neighborhood services."

Other recommendations include: adding narcotics officers at airports, purchasing drug detection equipment, increased drug treatment and prevention programs.

Perot, environmentalists negotiate Austin cease-fire

AUSTIN (AP) — A temporary ceasefire has been declared in the battle between Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot and environmentalists over work on clearing land inhabited by the threatened golden-cheeked warbler.

The decision came one day after the city council tentatively approved a moratorium to stop the cutting of trees on a 333-acre northwest Austin site that Perot wants to develop.

A member of the environmental organization Earth First! was arrested there Friday as the group protested tree-clearing by more than a dozen workers with chainsaws.

A few hours after the arrest, John Joseph, an attorney for a Perot development company agreed to a request from Mayor Lee Cooke and other city councilmembers to end the work. One councilmember threatened to call an emergency council meeting to make the moratorium final.

"We'll stop further clearing and the city will hold off on its moratorium," Joseph said.

"We'll get together Monday to try and negotiate a resolution to this," he said.

Environmentalists say the land is an important nesting area for the golden-cheeked warbler. Perot plans an office and light-industrial development on the site and has set aside 90 acres for the birds.

Mike Martin, a subcontractor on the project, said crews were thinning out the tree line, but had orders not to cut trees larger than 8 inches in diameter.

Timothy Jones, 45, was arrested and charged with trespassing, according to the Travis County Sheriff's office. Jones said he hiked onto the Perot property to photograph stumps of large trees that the group said had been illegally cut down.

Bush to honor computer pioneers

AUSTIN (AP) — President Bush will award the world's largest cash engineering prize to Sematech President Robert Noyce and former Texas Instruments Inc. engineer Jack Kilby, who are credited with co-inventing the computer chip.

The two Texas residents will receive the first Charles Stark Draper Prize from Bush during a brief ceremony Tuesday at the State Department in Washington.

The Draper prize, named after the developer of navigation systems that helped man land on the moon, is sponsored by the National Academy of Engineering and touted as the profession's equivalent of the Nobel Prize.

The honor includes gold medals and a $350,000 cash award which Noyce and Kilby will split.

The two engineers invented the computer chip independently.

Austin resident Ranleigh Hirsh offers her pet pig, Chuckles, a treat for being good. Chuckles, a Korean pot-bellied pig, gets M&Ms, carrots and apples when he's good and is trained to use a litter box.

Woman brings home expensive bacon

AUSTIN (AP) — When Ranleigh Hirsh first picked up her pet pig Chuckles, he fit in the palm of her hand.

Ten months later, the porker is pushing 50 pounds and sometimes is as mischievous as an "ornery child."

Ms. Hirsh has invested in the latest pet craze — Korean pot-bellied pigs.

The small pigs come with a hefty price tag — Chuckles cost $1,000 — but to Ms. Hirsh, he's priceless.

"He beats the hell out of a man. He's always there," said Ms. Hirsh, 27, a computer analyst with the Legislative Council.

Chuckles is not afraid to express himself. He squeals like a stuck pig if she won't let him sleep in her room. He also raises his voice when Ms. Hirsh coats him each day with petroleum jelly to smooth his dry skin.

But he has a warmer side. His body heat is two degrees higher than a human's. That makes him a favorite of Ms. Hirsh's cats, which like to sleep on him.

Chuckles is friendly with strangers, but he has a jealous streak.

When Ms. Hirsh brought a date home, Chuckles ate the tassels off his loafers.

"He can get very ornery. He's like a child where you have to trick him," she said.

He insists on sleeping in her room at night.

"If I shut him out of the bedroom he screams at the top of his lungs," she said.

But the good points of pot-bellied pigs outweigh the bad, she said: "When you see them in action, you really fall in love with them."

Chuckles gets M&Ms, carrots and apples when he's good. Usually he eats pig feed and will probably grow to about 70 pounds. Females get larger.

He is litter-box trained and has been de-tusked and castrated. "You don't want to have a breeding pig around," Ms. Hirsh said.

She enjoys taking Chuckles for daily walks, although by doing so she walks a tightrope with city law.

Pigs are allowed inside the city limits, but there are strict regulations on how to keep them penned.

But when police see her and the pig, "they just laugh," Ms. Hirsh said. "Most people would rather see me walking that pig than a pit bull."

STATE IN BRIEF

Federal prison suit nearing completion

HOUSTON (AP) — The long-lasting federal lawsuit over Texas prison overcrowding is moving a step closer to resolution with the Houston office of the court-appointed special master preparing to close next month.

For nearly nine years, attorney Vincent Nathan has served at the behest of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice of Tyler to ensure that Texas prison officials improved living conditions for inmates. Justice had declared those prison living conditions unconstitutional.

Nearly two years ago, Nathan proposed a timetable for the gradual elimination of the special master's oversight functions. Nathan said Friday he will recommend to Justice in early March that the office be closed.

Abortion foes target summit

HOUSTON (AP) — An anti-abortion organization said it would stage its own summit to coincide with the international economic summit planned for July.

The gathering will seek to focus global attention on "the daily horrors of abortion" while world leaders and international press corps are assembled in Houston, said Don Treshman, national director of Houston-based Rescue America.

In cooperation with the Houston Pro-Life Action Network, he said, Rescue America will invite anti-abortion leaders and supporters from around the world to participate.

Treshman said "a day of rescue in Houston" will highlight three days of anti-abortion activities. Rescue America opposes abortion under all circumstances with "no exceptions, no compromise," he said.

Peter Durkin, executive director of Planned Parenthood of Houston and Southeast Texas, said he regards it as ironic that anti-abortionists would try to use the economic summit to gain a forum for their views.

Their opposition to family planning measures such as birth control and to granting women the right to choose to have abortions helps produce worldwide misery — especially in underdeveloped nations, he said.

Court rules for workers

WESLACO (AP) — Lawyers for a group of produce-packing workers hailed a federal appeals court ruling that a company should have paid the employees from the time they had to report for work, rather than requiring them to wait without pay until productive labor was available.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt and Ken Schrader have the Daytona 500 field surrounded.

Those two have been touted most of the week as the favorites in today's $2.1 million Daytona 500 — and that has changed only marginally since a crash in his Thursday qualifying race took Schrader off the pole.

The man who has won the top qualifying spot for NASCAR Winston Cup stock car racing's biggest event will start the 200-lap event at Daytona International Speedway in a backup car from the back — actually 41st — in the 42-car field.

Everyone in the left row of the two-abreast lineup will move up a spot prior to the 11:15 p.m. EST start of the race, which will be televised live by CBS Sports.

That makes the front row at the green flag pole-sitter — not pole-winner — Geoff Bodine and Earnhardt, the winners of the two 125-mile qualifying races.

Midland native Bobby Hillin, Jr. will start on the outside of the fifth row. Hillin will be seeking his second Winston Cup win in today's race.

Earnhardt, who actually earned his front-row start eight days ago by driving a fast qualifying lap second only to Schrader, enhanced his favorite role in the qualifying race by making a mid-race tire change on his Chevrolet Lumina and charging from the middle of the field to win.

"I'm not planning on adjusting anything," Earnhardt said, enjoying the role of favorite for an event he has never won. "Just clean the windshield, put in some gas, give me some water and hold the pedal to the floor."

Schrader, on the other hand, will have a new, untested, Lumina under him and about 40 cars to pass to get to the front in the 500-mile race.

He remains undeterred and seemingly unperturbed.

"This is a situation that happens all the time," Schrader said. "You cut a tire and have to go to the back of the field. It's just that we went from the pole to the back of the field before the biggest race of the year.

"I hope to come through the pack as quick as I can. I think the team made the right decision and I think the new car will do real good."

Richard Broome, Schrader's crew chief, agreed, saying, "The two cars are really pretty equal. We've lost nothing but position on the track. That means a lot, but it's a 500-mile race and we've got time to work out way back to the front."

Bodine, who won his qualifier by making the 50-lap distance without pitting for gas, said, "I suspect Kenny's backup car is similar to his pole car. I figure if I'm up front at the end, he's one of the guys I'm going to have to contend with."

Daytona track sees its worst wreck in three decades

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A chain-reaction collision, begun when a car spun in the middle of the track, involved 23 drivers in Saturday's Goody's 300, making it the biggest wreck at Daytona International Speedway in 30 years.

"I've never seen that many cars spinning and banging," driver Hut Stricklin said. "And I've never been hit that many times. It felt like it must have been 10 or 15 times."

The wreck occurred on the 14th lap of the 120-lap, 43-car Grand National race. Among those sidelined was pole-sitter Darrell Waltrip, who had fallen back in the pack because of engine difficulties.

"I was just thinking that I didn't like where I was running, and this happened," Waltrip said. "We don't need any more of this. You can't make any money like this."

Also sidelined was Ken Schrader, the pole-sitter in Sunday's Daytona 500. The only injury reported was to Ron Cooper, who suffered a concussion and possible abdominal injuries.

The wreck sent 18 cars to the garage area. Four of those were patched up and running again later in the race, won by Dale Earnhardt in a duel with Harry Gant and Greg Sacks.

Track historians had to go back to 1960 to find a bigger crash at Daytona. A pileup in a modified sportsman race that year involved 37 cars and sidelined 24 out of a field of 73.

Veteran driver Brad Teague initiated Saturday's wreck as he and Dale Jarrett were racing side-by-side for sixth place leaving turn 4. Teague's Oldsmobile spun sideways and was clipped by Waltrip's Chevrolet.

"Either I got tapped or a little wind got taken off my spoiler and made me turn around," Teague said. "After I spun, I got hit about four times, and it felt like I went another two miles."

With the cars of Teague and Waltrip sliding out of control, the track was effectively blocked for the cars behind them.

"Everybody went everywhere, and there wasn't really anyplace to go," driver Steve Grissom said. "Cars just kept piling in and piling in. I didn't think it was ever going to stop."

Also involved in the crash were Jack Sprague and Frank Fleming, both making their first run at Daytona.

"It was just pure smoke, and when I came through the smoke I hit the cars," Sprague said. "I don't even know which way they were going when I hit them."

SAN ANGELO — Midland Lee's Mary Ann Isom and Midland High's Robin Landreth were the Tall City's selections to the 1990 District 4-5A girls All-District team released by league coaches Saturday.

Isom

Landreth

Isom scored 447 points for a 16.6 average to win the city scoring crown this year. Isom averaged nearly 20 points per game in district play while Landreth, a three-year starter for the Lady Bulldogs, scored 327 points this season for a 12.1 average.

San Angelo's Melissa Sutton headed the 11-player first team after being named as the league's Most Valuable Player. Sutton led the Bobcats to an undisputed District 4-5A title.

Odessa Permian, District 4-5A's second place team, had the Newcomer of the Year in sophomore LaShon Powell. The league was loaded with sophomore talent this year, making this honor especially meaningful.

Permian's Anita Wright was the only junior to make the first team.

Other first team players were Holly McMillon and Kelly Huff of Abilene Cooper; Stephanie Ware and Lanissa Porter of San Angelo; Stephanie James, Permian; Tarra Anderson, Abilene High; and Sjanna Swinney of Odessa High.

As expected, San Angelo had three first team selections while Permian, who tied with Abilene High for second, also had three selections to the elite team. Abilene High got only one pick while fourth place Cooper had two choices.

Midland also picked up seven players on the honorable mention list with MHS gaining four and Lee three.

The team was picked by the district coaches.

Lee, Mojo tie on windy day

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

The soccer field was the scene as the host Rebels and visiting Panthers battled to an emotion-filled double overtime match that ended in a 2-2 knot and sent the Rebs a little further down in the District 3 standings.

In other district action, Midland High dropped Odessa High 8-0 and while league front runners San Angelo and Abilene High fought to a 4-4 tie.

San Angelo still controls first place with a 4-0-1 loop record. Abilene is now 3-0-2, while MHS follows with a 3-2 slate. Lee comes in at fourth place with a 2-2-1 record.

Ironically, Permian's first goal was credited to Mojo's Butch Hulse, but the ball actually went into the net after caroming off Rebel Eric Williams less than two minutes into the match. Lee answered 4½ minutes later, though, when Mark Ferguson's conversion of a Jordan Reed assist deadlocked the match at 1-1.

After a half time with the score still tied, the team swapped ends of the field and Lee gained the advantage of having the 20- to 30-mph wind at its back. Additionally, Panther Damon Hollaway was ejected from the game after receiving a red card for striking in the 36th minute of the second half.

Despite owning the the wind and a one man edge in numbers on the field, the Rebels were unable to break the 1-1 score and entered their third overtime in as many matches.

In the first 10 minute extra period, Permian went out on top as Hulse scored his second goal of the game, this time earning it, with the period almost half over. Lee came right back, however, and Mark Steward smashed home a Reb score in the eight minute of the overtime to again tie the match.

To no avail, both team frantically attempted to take the win as the first overtime ended, and neither side could mount an effec-

Sides lock horns over arbitration

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Salary arbitration, which bothers some baseball owners even more than free agency, once again has become the battleground in negotiations between teams and the players' association.

Management wants to put a 75 percent cap on salary increases in arbitration. The union wants to expand arbitration to players with between two and three years in the majors, a group that was eligible before the 1985 strike settlement.

With baseball shut down for the seventh time since 1972, negotiations took on more urgency in the last few days. When owners withdrew their revenue sharing and pay-for-performance proposals, they substituted the arbitration cap. The union complained long and loud.

"The arbitration problem is a major problem to the ownership," Commissioner Fay Vincent said Friday night. "They feel strongly that it has got to be confronted."

The average increase for the 134 players who filed for arbitration last year was 70 percent. Some players, especially those eligible for the first time, have seen their salaries tripled and quadrupled.

Outfielder Ruben Sierra and Texas agreed this week to $1,625,000 for 1990; he made $357,500 in 1989. First baseman Mark McGwire and Oakland agreed to $1.5 million; he made $455,000 last year. Both were eligible for arbitration for the first time.

"The problem with arbitration is that the individual owner cannot control his own compensation program in the sense that what is done in the free-agent marketplace by other people has a spillover effect in arbitration," Vincent said.

Free agents, who must have at least six years of service, sometimes get huge salaries because of bidding wars. A jetstream effect is created when five-year players compare their statistics and salaries with those of free agents, four-year players compare with five-year players and three-year players compare with four-year players.

"That would be all right if the free-agent pricing were set just by an efficient market," Vincent said, "but there are distortions." By that he meant the different economic power of clubs in different cities and its effect in bidding wars.

The players association says the free market is the best way to determine salaries. It gave up a year of arbitration rights in 1985 when clubs pleaded economic distress. Now that business is booming, the union wants it back.

"Clubs said they were going broke," union head Donald Fehr said. "Now they aren't saying that. On the contrary, they're making more money than they ever have. We should get that year of arbitration back."

In 1986, the last season two-plus players were eligible for arbitration, the group averaged $309,604, according to figures compiled the by the union.

Pirates split two cases; Snyder avoids verdict

Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Pirates got a split in two arbitration cases and Cleveland outfielder Cory Snyder avoided arbitration by agreeing to a one-year deal for $700,000 on Saturday.

Three other arbitration cases were also announced on Saturday. St. Louis third baseman Terry Pendelton won his case, while Atlanta's Lonnie Smith and Ivan Calderon of the Chicago White Sox lost.

There are eight cases pending in arbitration.

Snyder was the last of the Indians scheduled to go to arbitration. He had sought $810,000, and the Indians offered $600,000.

In 1989, he hit .215 with 18 home runs and 59 RBIs. He walked 23 times and struck out 134 times.

Snyder's attorney, Jeffrey Moorad, said Snyder will contribute $100 to Rainbow Babies' and Children's Hospital for each home run he hits this year.

An arbitrator ruled in favor of Pittsburgh in a salary arbitration case with outfielder Barry Bonds, but Pirates outfielder Bill Hatcher won.

Bonds will receive $850,000 in 1990, a raise of $490,000 over the previous

SWC

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The eighth-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks are poised to win the Southwest Conference championship at home with a 77-46 win Saturday over Southern Methodist, Coach Nolan Richardson says.

"Our guys have done a good job. I'm proud of them for winning six Southwest Conference road games and having a chance to win the championship by finishing at home," Richardson said Saturday.

The win over Southern Methodist (7-16, 2-10) solidifies the hold Arkansas (21-4, 12-2) has on the SWC with two games remaining in the season, both at home, against Texas A&M and Rice. The tournament will be held March 9-11.

Richardson said his team looked sluggish, although they were able to put the game away with a 28-6 run late in the first half.

"I thought we were a little tired. Our players have every right to be tired after playing 12 of our last 17 games on the road before today," he said.

Bennett beats buzzer for upset-minded Irish

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Notre Dame dusted off a four-year-old play and went for broke.

But it was No. 4 Syracuse that came up empty Saturday after Irish guard Elmer Bennett took a pass from LaPhonso Ellis and swished a 3-pointer as time expired to lift Notre Dame to a 66-65 victory and end Syracuse's 37-game home winning streak against non-conference teams.

Syracuse guard Billy Owens had given Syracuse a 65-63 lead with four seconds to play with a left-handed scoop shot.

"We wanted the three. We were going all out and Elmer makes a great shot on a great pass from Ellis," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps, whose team won for the first time in six tries against a ranked team on the road.

"The play we ran at the end, I think we've diagrammed that thing and worked on it every year for the past four years. But we haven't used it since before the holidays," said Phelps.

The Irish (14-8) called a time out with two seconds, but officials added a second back onto the clock. The extra tick gave Notre Dame enough time for Ellis to get the inbounds pass upcourt and into the hands of Bennett, who penetrated to the top of the key, where he launched an uncontested shot to send Syracuse to its second straight loss.

"We just wanted to sag in because we knew they were going to throw it long," said Syracuse's Billy Owens. "We got confused in our rotation and nobody got the middle man."

"The play was designed for Phons (Ellis) to look for the open shooter," said Bennett, a sophomore. "We knew they would converge on Ellis. He just had to get it to the open guy.

"At first, I thought it was going to be long. It seemed like it stayed in the air for 20 minutes. Then it went in and it was pandemonium," said Bennett.

Syracuse (18-5), playing before the second largest crowd in Carrier Dome history and a national television audience, had erased a 13-point deficit over the final 12 minutes and took a 63-62 lead on Stephen Thompson's layup with 1:02 to play.

Ellis made one of two free throws to tie the game at 63-63 with 43 seconds remaining.

Bennett finished with 18 points as all five Notre Dame starters finished in double figures. Keith Robinson had 13 points, while Joe Frederick and Monty Williams had 12 apiece. Ellis contributed 11 points and 15 rebounds.

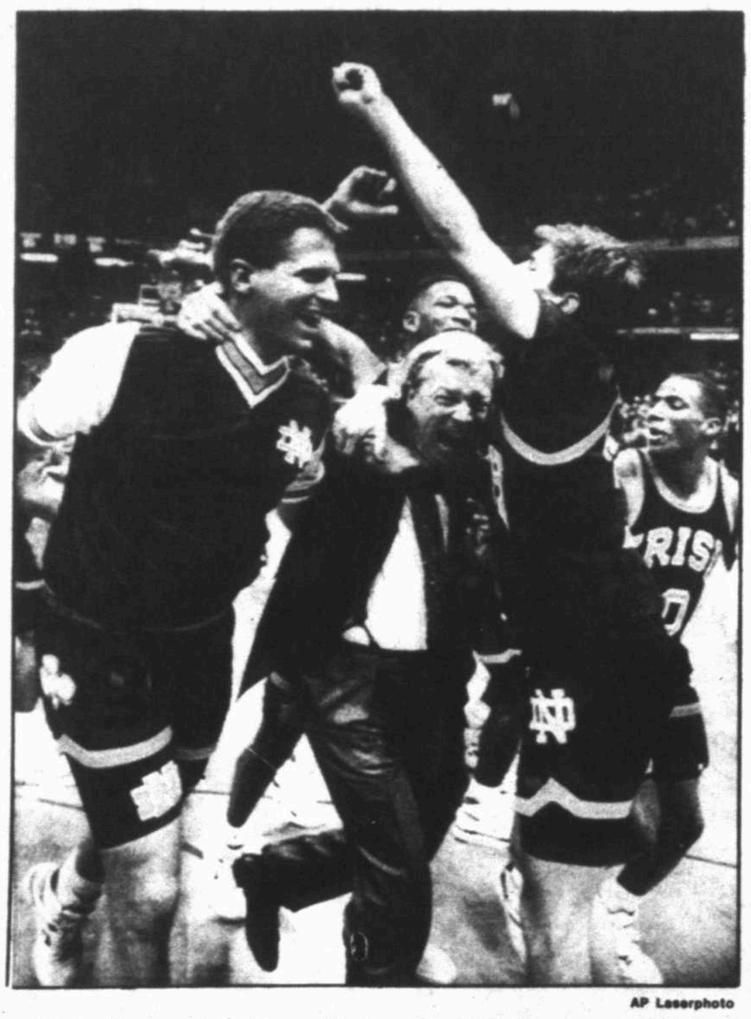

The Irish broke open a tight game with a 10-point run to start the second half and extended their lead to 47-34 after Bennett sank a pair of free throws with 11:59 to play. But the Orangemen used full court pressure to turn up the game's tempo, whittling away the deficit.

Mike Hopkins' short bank shot just before halftime put Syracuse ahead 30-29 after the first 20 minutes, in which the two teams exchanged the lead 15 times. Neither team could manage more than a four point cushion in the first period.

Derrick Coleman lead Syracuse with 16 points, while Thompson and Owens added 14 apiece.

Syracuse's last non-conference loss was to Navy and David Robinson in the second round of the NCAA tournament in 1986.

The game was watched by 32,747, just short of the 32,820 that watched Syracuse defeat Connecticut earlier this season.

No. 1 Kansas 94, Nebraska 67

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Kevin Pritchard and Rick Calloway awakened sluggish Kansas, igniting runs of 14-4 and 20-5 that carried the Jayhawks.

Kansas (25-2 overall, 8-2 Big Eight), was coming off a home loss to No. 2 Missouri earlier in the week.

They trailed the Cornhuskers 22-17 midway through the first half after a 9-0 spurt by Nebraska (9-14, 2-8) led by 7-footer Rich King's two buckets.

The Huskers, who have lost eight in a row at Kansas, held its last lead at 32-30 on two free throws by Carl Hayes. But then Calloway hit a 3-pointer and then followed with another quick bucket.

Pritchard then scored eight points as the Jayhawks went on a 20-5 spree to start the second half and put the game out of reach. Pritchard's 10-footer with 14:28 left gave the Jayhawks a 60-40 lead.

No. 3 Georgetown 68, Seton Hall 60

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Dwayne Bryant scored a career-high 24 points and hit six free throws down the stretch to lead Georgetown and give coach John Thompson his 13th straight 20-win season.

Georgetown (20-3 overall and 9-3 in The Big East Conference) won the game from the foul line, hitting 35 of 40 and 17 of 19 of in the final 6:30 in handing Seton Hall (10-13, 3-9) it sixth straight loss.

The victory also marked the second time Georgetown has followed a loss this season by beating Seton Hall. The first time the Hoyas followed an embarrassing 95-76 loss to Syracuse by dumping the Pirates 70-48.

Georgetown, which led by five at the half, opened a 45-35 lead with 14:20 left as Bryant, who was 11 of 12 from the foul line, scored the first seven points in an 8-0 run.

However, the Pirates responded with a 10-4 run and got within 49-45 on two free throws by Michael Cooper with 8:30 to play.

The Pirates eventually got within 59-56 when Frantz Volcy converted a 3-point play with 2:00 left, but Bryant hit four free throws and Alonzo Mourning added two in a 6-2 run that clinched the game for the Hoyas.

Connecticut 89

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Purdue extended its domination of Wisconsin to 26 straight games as Stephen Scheffler scored 26 points to lead the Boilermakers.

The victory helped Purdue (18-4 overall, 10-2 in the Big Ten conference) cling to a half-game lead over Michigan and Michigan State.

Wisconsin took a 32-30 lead on Larry Hisle's 3-pointer early in the second half before Purdue used a 14-5 run to take a 44-37 lead with 5:56 to play. Ryan Berning and Tony Jones had four points each in the spurt as Wisconsin hurt itself with turnovers.

A pair of free throws by Berning gave the Boilermakers the lead for good with 10:52 to play. Wisconsin (12-14, 3-11) went nearly five minutes without a basket until Patrick Tompkins ended the drought.

Wisconsin didn't have a player in double figures until 4:45 remained in the game when Hisle's 3-pointer gave him 10 points. He, Willie Simms and Danny Jones each finished with 10.

Scheffler, who entered the game leading the nation in field goal percentage at .727, became the 21st Purdue player to reach the the 1,000-point mark in career scoring. He has 1,008 points.

Oliver, who hit 12 of 16 free throws, sank two from the foul line with 12 seconds left to send the contest into its second overtime tied at 82.

After falling behind by two points to start the second overtime, Georgia Tech hit six of seven free throws in the final 3:32 to nail down the victory. Oliver and freshmen Kenny Anderson and Malcom Mackey each sank two, while Karl Brown had one. Earlier in the overtime Oliver converted two layups.

Then they opened the second half with a 10-2 surge to cut Michigan State's lead to 37-32 with 16:10 to play.

But Montgomery, who entered the game with 2.1 scoring average, hit a three-pointer and another basket to break the streak. Two free throws by Kirk Manns pushed the Spartans' lead to 44-32.

Steve Smith added 15 points and Manns and Montgomery had 12 for the Spartans, 21-5 overall, 10-3 in the Big Ten.

UI Recruits undeterred by sanctions

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Three basketball recruits who signed letters of intent to play at Illinois say they still plan to attend despite the threat of sanctions on the team resulting from NCAA allegations of improper recruiting.

And an East St. Louis Lincoln High School basketball coach who figures in the investigation says at least one of the allegations levied by the NCAA against Illinois is false.

In addition to cash and cars, the NCAA charges unveiled Friday said Illinois basketball recruits were given athletic equipment and personal photos, and that a recruiter engaged in "a knowing and willful effort" to break NCAA rules.

Names were deleted in the NCAA charges, but published reports have indicated the probe involved the recruiting of top prospects Deon Thomas of Chicago and LaPhonso Ellis of East St. Louis.

Despite the allegations, T.J. Wheeler of Christopher, Rennie Clemons of Springfield, and Scott Pierce of Euless, Texas, say they still want to attend the university.

"I definitely intend to play at Illinois," said Wheeler. "I really don't let it bother me."

Early-season move pays off for Monterey

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

Girls Basketball

Lubbock Monterey head girls basketball coach Dale Pectol had it all figured out before the season ever began and Odessa Permian paid the price in a 61-47 bi-district loss at Chaparral Center Saturday afternoon.

Pectol knew the road to Austin would be paved through Midland and its Chap Center before the season ever started. He made sure his Lady Plainsmen would be ready for the task.

"We scheduled the Tall City tournament so that we could play in Midland, hoping it would breed some familiarity when the playoffs came," said Pectol, who has also scheduled his area game with El Paso Hanks at 8:45 p.m. Tuesday in a triple-header at the Chap.

Should Monterey beat Hanks, the Plainsmen will be back in Midland Friday and Saturday for the Region I tournament, where that road leads to Austin.

"This is the fourth game we've played here this season and our girls really like the new wood floor," said Pectol. "We want to play as many games here as possible. We know if we win here, that means we are still playing and that's what you want at this time of year."

Monterey, ranked No. 6 in the state, is now 29-1 on the year and has a 25-game winning streak going since an early season loss to Class 4A power Levelland.

Permian, District 4-5A's second place team, ends the season with a 16-13 mark and never really threatened a major upset as Monterey rolled to a wire-to-wire victory.

"We felt rebounding, the press and staying out of foul trouble was the key for us in this game and we did two out of three. We did get some girls in foul trouble," said Pectol. "I was a little disappointed that we didn't handle Permian's 2-3 zone better than we did, but they have some very tall girls in there."

Permian coach Terri King agreed, "Their press rattled us and turnovers hurt, but not challenging for rebounds was the major difference. Monterey also has a lot of playoff experience and that helps them, too."

Monterey's Janis Farris, who came into the game averaging 19 points per outing, scored a game high 22 points while Diana Kersey added 17. Tabitha Schumake hit for 10.

Permian got 17 points from Stephanie James while LaShon Powell had 11. Powell, a sophomore, was recently named at 4-5A's newcomer of the year and she had all 11 of her points in the second half, including nine in the final period of play when the issue was mute.

Monterey led by as many as 23 points in the game, 54-31, with 3:42 left to play. Pectol emptied his bench at that point.

PLAYOFF NOTES: Mike Stevens, manager of Chaparral Center, has lined up a big playoff week for the Chap. Tuesday's tripleheader includes a Class A area battle between Borden County and Marathon at 5:45 p.m. El Paso Del Valle will take on Amarillo Tascosa in a Class 5A area match at 7:15 and Monterey-Hanks will follow at 8:45 p.m.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Arthur Blake jumped to the front early and held off Renaldo Nehemiah to win the 50-meter high hurdles by three-hundredths of a second Saturday night at the Knights of Columbus Invitational Track Meet.

Blake, 23, of Tallahassee set a personal best in the event, finishing in 6.49 seconds. Nehemiah came in second at 6.52, and Eric Cannon was third at 6.56.

"The quick start has always been my advantage," Blake said. "I'm only 145 pounds. If I hit a hurdle, it's going to hurt my acceleration. I try to get out on them, and hopefully they'll lose their concentration."

Blake has beaten all of the big names in hurdling at various times in the past, including Nehemiah, Greg Foster and Roger Kingdom. But he realizes he needs more time to develop a similar reputation.

"I can remember when I was in high school in 1984, Renaldo was a world record holder, and at that point he was playing professional football. I idolized him. It may be three or four more years before I get to my peak."

Nehemiah, 30, took the loss in stride, counting it as another step in his comeback as a hurdler since he spent 1982-86 as a wide receiver with the San Francisco 49ers.

"I didn't get out well and I still almost won the race," he said. "I'm going to take my lumps. I don't worry about this kind of stuff.

Woolsey spurt helps Bulldogs blitz OHS

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — James Woolsey scored three goals in the first 17 minutes to pace Midland High to a 8-0 blowout of winless Odessa High in District 3 soccer action Saturday at the Ector Junior High field.

The MHS win put the Bulldogs in sole possession of third place in District 3.

Woolsey scored his first goal on an attempted crossing pass that blew into the net in the eighth minute, and took crosses from Shane Barden in the 14th and 17th minutes, respectively.

Shane Barden and Jason Farr added two goals each for MHS, 7-1 overall and 3-2 in district play.

OHS blew its best chance to score when Roman Weathermon missed on two penalty kicks at the beginning of the first half. MHS goalkeeper Bryant Mueller saved the first try, but it was ruled that Mueller moved before the kick.

Anderson saves Spurs

HOUSTON (AP) — Just when it appeared that Houston's defense had thwarted San Antonio to force an overtime, Willie Anderson came to the rescue.

Anderson made a 15-foot jump shot at the buzzer, giving the Spurs a 104-102 victory Saturday night in a game that was tied 13 times in the second half.

"Fortunately, I got around Wiggins and got enough room to take a good shot," Anderson said. "I felt I got it off in time."

Buck Johnson's basket with 15 seconds to play tied the score at 102-102 and gave the Rockets hope.

"There was a lot of hustle on our part," Houston's Otis Thorpe said. "We still had a chance for overtime after Buck made a fantastic shot.

"But Willie Anderson made one shot that was just a little more fantastic for the Spurs."

San Antonio coach Larry Brown said the final play was designed for Terry Cummings, who led the Spurs with 22 points.

"We actually did draw it up but for Terry," Brown said. "But he was pushed away and Willie got the shot. We were going to Terry or Terry into Willie."

Thorpe led the Rockets with 33 points and 10 rebounds and Akeem Olajuwon scored 19 points and had 18 rebounds. He finished the game with five fouls.

"If Akeem hadn't been in foul trouble, I thought it would have been our game," Rockets coach Don Chaney said. "I don't care how you look at it, we're playing good basketball."

Brown complimented Spurs center David Robinson, who scored 19 points and blocked nine shots in his battle with Olajuwon.

"Akeem is the best but David bothered him tonight, I know he blocked a lot of shots," Brown said. "David played well considering who he played against."

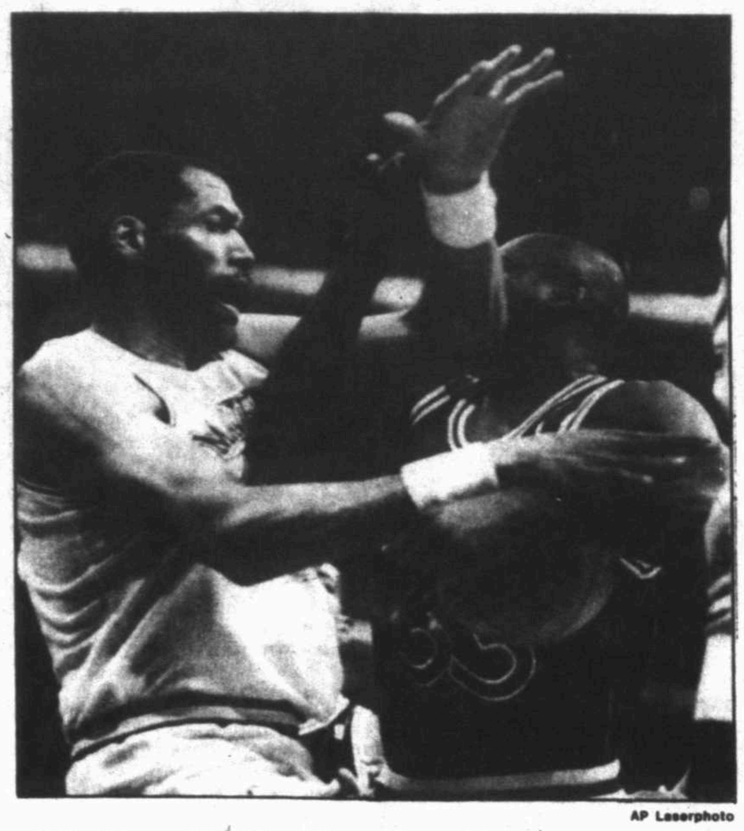

The Rockets tied the score seven times in the third period and took the lead briefly with 21 seconds left at 80-78. Robinson tied it at the buzzer going into the fourth quarter.

The Spurs took an 87-82 lead but Houston kept the pressure on the Spurs and tied the score four more times going into the final two minutes.

The Rockets took a 100-99 lead with 1:47 to play on a basket by Mitchell Wiggins but Robinson put the Spurs back ahead with 1:36 to play, 101-100.

After Olajuwon missed two shots and Wiggins another, Wiggins fouled Robinson with 25 seconds to play and the Spurs center hit one of the shots for a 102-100 lead.

The Spurs took a 24-23 lead with 1:55 to go in the first quarter and built it into a 56-51 halftime advantage, led by Robinson's 12 points.

Knicks 119, Cavs 108 OT

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing scored 41 points, including six in a 16-2 run to start the extra period, as New York scored its ninth consecutive overtime victory.

New York is now 5-0 in overtime games this season and 9-0 since they lost at Boston on Nov. 4, 1988.

The Knicks improved their home record to 22-2 with their eighth victory in 10 games overall. The loss was only the second in the last five road games for the Cavaliers, who were led by Mark Price with 24 points, including four 3-pointers.

Charles Oakley had 18 points and 18 rebounds for New York, and Mark Jackson had a season-high 17 assists.

The Knicks started the overtime with six straight points for a 107-101 lead. After a basket by Brad Daugherty, who scored 21 points for Cleveland, the Knicks scored 10 in a row for a 117-103 advantage with 1:31 left.

Ewing scored 11 points in the fourth quarter and made 10 consecutive shots before missing a turnaround with 27 seconds left. But Oakley was fouled going for the rebound and made one of two free throws, putting the Knicks ahead 100-97.

Nuggets 126, Nets 117

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Alex English scored 17 of his season-high 38 points in the third quarter, and Denver handed New Jersey their 13th straight loss.

The 13consecutive losses equal an NBA season-high this season, set earlier by the Miami Heat. It is only three short of the Nets' club record set in 1978.

The victory allowed Denver to snap a three-game losing streak and a run of seven straight road loses.

Ahead 61-59 at the half, the Nuggets outscored New Jersey 8-2 at the start of the third quarter on baskets by Blair Rasmussen, Jerome Lane, English and Fat Lever. The Nets fought back to pull within 75-72 on a pair of free throws by Sam Bowie, but Denver reeled off 17 of the next 24 points, including nine by English, to take a 92-79 lead.

Pistons 97, Heat 79

MIAMI — Vinnie Johnson scored 10 fourth-quarter points and joined Isiah Thomas in sparking Detroit to a franchise record 11th straight victory.

With the score tied at 66, the Pistons went on a 14-5 run that featured three jumpers by Johnson and three of Thomas' six fourth-quarter assists to put Detroit ahead 80-71 with 4:53 left in the game.

The Pistons scored 36 points in the fourth quarter, after managing only 61 in the first three quarters.

Detroit matched their biggest lead of the first half when Thomas made a jumper from the top of the key for two of his 10 second-quarter points and a 41-35 advantage 3:30 before intermission.

Mavericks 135, Magic 108

DALLAS — Rolando Blackman and Roy Tarpley combined to hit all 11 of their first-quarter shots for the Mavericks.

Blackman was 6-for-6 and Tarpley 5-for-5 in the opening quarter as the Mavericks matched their highest-scoring period of the season, outscoring the Magic 45-31.

Dallas won its fourth consecutive game and 11th of its last 13.

Tarpley scored 18 points, all in the first half, as the Mavericks moved to six games over .500 for the first time since Jan. 6, 1989.

Jazz 110, Kings 106

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 18 of his 41 points in the fourth quarter as Utah came from behind to beat Sacramento.

Utah trailed 82-74 at the end of the third period before Malone scored 11 straight Jazz points during a 19-11 run that tied the score 93-93

Arkansas wins 10th straight SWC meet

FORT WORTH (AP) — The talent-deep Arkansas Razorbacks, anchored by the uncatchable Reuben Reina, rolled up 60 points with 1-2-3-4-5 finishes in the mile and 3000 meter run on Saturday to earn their 10th consecutive men's Southwest Conference Indoor Track and Field championship.

The Texas Lady Longhorns won their fifth consecutive women's title even without high-scoring Carlette Guidry, who withdrew because of a knee injury.

The Lady Longhorns didn't need her 30 point potential with Tina Hall's victories in both the mile and 3000 meters, Kellie Roberts' victory in the 800 meters, and Sandie Richards' gold medal in the 400 meters.

Texas scored 127 points to 93 for Rice, 66 for Houston, and 60 for Baylor.

Arkansas scored 146¼ points to 83¼ for Baylor and 48 for Texas A&M in the men's division.

Reina ran a 4:02.87 mile and was closely followed by Johan Boakes, Eric Henry, Gil Contreras, and Mike Skinner in the Razorback stampede

Johnson relishes new title

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Johnson nears the end of his first year as coach of the Dallas Cowboys by assuming an unofficial and almost unprecedented title as general manager-head coach-offensive coordinator.

After a hectic week that included losing his quarterbacks coach and entertaining and evaluating more than 40 free agents, Johnson has said he will wear several hats to tighten his grip of control on the team.

"I think next year you'll see us all going in the right direction," he said.

To make sure the team never goes 1-15 again, Johnson said:

— He will transform offensive coordinator David Shula into Aikman's new mentor.

— He will take control of the offense while continuing to preside over every football-related move the Cowboys make off the field.

— He will try to keep assistants he deems valuable, even though he made no effort to keep Aikman's quarterbacks coach last season, Jerry Rhome.

— He wants to keep his team from becoming Aikman's star vehicle.

Aikman has credited Rhome with helping him the most during his rookie season. Cowboys sources told The Dallas Morning News Aikman's development will be hindered because of Rhome's departure to Phoenix, where he will be offensive coordinator.

Johnson said Monday, "I don't negotiate with assistant coaches." He later explained the comment.

"Hey, I don't believe in talking people into something they don't want to do, and trying to sweeten the pot just to keep them in a job when deep down they want to be somewhere else," he said. "I want coaches who want to be here regardless of the money."

Whether it be Aikman wanting Rhome to stay or Herschel Walker wanting the ball, Johnson said no individual — even a budding star quarterback — will dictate his moves.

"I hope we don't get to the position to where we revolve this entire football team around one player."

Cold, windy course to O'Meara's liking

PGA

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Everything was to his liking when Mark O'Meara walked onto the golf course Saturday for the third round of the Shearson Lehman Hutton Open.

It was cold and windy, with lead-gray skies — more appropriate to northern Scotland than southern California — occasionally spritzing drizle.

Flagsticks bent almost double in gusts that reached 40 miles per hour and blew sand from the bunkers. Players were bundled into sweaters, gloves and ski caps.

"Absolutely perfect conditions," O'Meara said. "I love it."

And O'Meara, a three-time winner in the tradionally foul weather of Pebble Beach, made the most of what he called "very, very trying conditions, very, very difficult conditions."

He compiled a 5-under-par 67, the best round of the day by two strokes, and vaulted over 28 players into a tie for fourth.

"A brilliant score," tournament leader Dan Forsman said of O'Meara's bogey-free effort on the South course at Torrey Pines.

"Very similar to Pebble Beach," O'Meara said of the conditions, his play and the situation. At Pebble Beach, he similarly played an excellent third round in poor conditions and went on to win.

"In conditions like this, you have to realize that par is a good score on any hole," O'Meara said.

"I like to play in difficult conditions.It was just what I needed. I was 10 shots back and everybody was shooting low numbers so there's not much chance to catch up.

"In conditions like this, a good score can make up a lot of ground. I got back in the tournament. Now, with another good round tomorrow, I've got a chance," he said.

The winds were so severe that Forsman needed only a par-72 to take a two-stroke lead with a 54-hole total of 13-under-par 203.

"A very tough day. I'm just delighted to get out of it with par," said Forsman, who pulled even for the day with an 18th-hole birdie putt viewed by only a handful of wind-whipped spectators.

"I'm not really a good wind player," he said. "I was just trying not to embarass myself, not be humiliated when the cameras came on. You could have a simple chip and you're not really trying to get it close, just get it on the green.

"When it gets like this, it's not fun. It's just a survival test."

Tommy Armour III, a winner in Phoenix three weeks ago, clung to second at 205 after a hard-won 73 in the extremely difficult conditions that turned this previously low-scoring putting contest into a frantic search for pars.

Bob Eastwood, who led or shared the lead through the first 36 holes, blew to a 76 — 11 shots higher than either of his first two rounds — and was at 206.

As example of the havoc caused by the winds, he cited the second hole.

Buster welcomes neighbors' cheers

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A sometimes unruly crowd weathered freezing temperatures Saturday to hail heavyweight champion James "Buster" Douglas as its hometown hero.

Police on horseback had to drive back the crowd which surged toward Douglas' car in a parade downtown. Police estimated that 25,000 people jammed the parade route, including about 15,000 for a ceremony at City Hall.

One woman was injured when a mounted officer's horse stepped on her foot during the downtown parade, police said. The parade route was cut short and Douglas and his manager, John Johnson, arrived at the City Hall podium from a side street.

The woman, whose identity was not available, was treated at St. Ann's Hospital and released, nursing supervisor Rick Ward said. No other injuries were reported.

At City Hall, onlookers crowded the streets and watched from several levels of a high-rise parking garage across the street. The crowd crossed barriers erected earlier and pressed toward the reviewing stand. Some people carried posters lauding Douglas and ridiculing Mike Tyson's promoter, Don King.

Douglas knocked out Tyson in the 10th round of their title bout Sunday in Tokyo to win the title.

"I'd like to thank everybody for coming out today, showing us support and appreciation," Douglas said. "And, Columbus — make the best of it, baby!"

"As Mayor (Dana) Rinehart said, I couldn't have done it without the support of Columbus, my family, the Coach Boxing Team — I love you," Douglas said. "It really makes me feel good to see all you out here today."

AP Laserphoto

Douglas and Johnson said the strength to take the title away from Tyson last week came from their faith in God.

"We're just everyday, hard-working, honest, God-loving (people)," Johnson said to scattered "Amens" from the crowd. "The reason we beat Mike Tyson is because we believe in Jesus Christ. Mike Tyson is just another man. He was just another man."

Rinehart and state Rep. Ray Miller, D-Columbus, presented proclamations designating Saturday as James "Buster" Douglas Day in Ohio and the city.

"One week ago tonight, the course of athletic history was changed," Rinehart said. "A week ago tonight, a young man who was given little chance of seeing an hour of victory showed the world what it means to enjoy the triumph of the human spirit."

Nine-year-old Clent Dalton said he braved snow flurries and wind chills of 14 degrees because he watched the fight and wanted to see Douglas in person.

"Tyson had it, and he lost it," Clent said. "I wanted Douglas to win, because he thought he was so bad at first. I guess there's always a bigger man, and he was one of them."

Earlier Saturday, a 20-car motorcade wound through the low-income north-side neighborhood where Douglas grew up and stopped for a ceremony in his honor near an elementary school where his 11-year-old son, Lamar, is a student.

Douglas' appearance boosted the spirits of residents of the area of run-down homes and public housing projects. They agree with law-enforcement officials who say the neighborhood has one of the city's worst drug problems.

Course owner sues sponsor

AUSTIN (AP) — Lumbermen's Investment Corp., half owner of the golf course that is being abandoned by the Legends of Golf Tournament, is suing the tournament's sponsor, Liberty Mutual Insurance, for $1.5 million.

Meanwhile, Liberty Mutual has filed a countersuit for $18,000, saying Lumbermen's refuses to return the tournament's silver trophy, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

Liberty Mutual and Legends creator Fred Raphael decided last August to move the tournament from Onion Creek Club to Barton Creek Country Club. It has been played at Onion Creek for 12 years.

"We don't want to distract from the tournament," said Whit Lancaster, a spokesman for Liberty Mutual. "We just want to work it out so we can get our trophy back."

Trevino leads tight senior pack

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) — Lee Trevino ot a 67 on Saturday to take a two- t lead at 11-under-par in the Aetna Challenge.

Five other players in the Senior PGA tour event were within five shots of first place.

Bruce Crampton, Jim Dent, Mike Hill, Charles Coody and Larry Ziegler all have a shot at catching Trevino in Sunday's final round in the event on the 6,719-yard, par-72 course at The Club at Pelican Bay.

"I've got to get out of the chute quicker," Trevino said, despite strong rounds of 66 and 67 the first two rounds. "Second place or third place doesn't mean anything to me. I want to win it. And that means I might take some chances."

Trevino had a back operation in 1976 to repair a disk, reinjured his back in 1982 and says he has suffered nerve irritation from scar tissue. But unlike six other golfers who have suffered back trouble in the $400,000 Senior tour event, Trevino said he's had few problems recently.

"I've tried everything from losing weight to hanging upside down, but thankfully I haven't had any problems recently," he said.

Threesome ties for LPGA lead

LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Dale Eggeling, Tammie Green and Jane Crafter each ended the second round at 7-under-par 137 for a three-way, first-place tie Saturday in the $400,000 LPGA Inverrary Classic.

Green and Crafter, an Australian looking for her first victory in 10 years on the LPGA tour, each shot 5-under-par 67s for the day. Eggeling of Tampa, who was runner-up in the Oldsmobile Classic two weeks ago, shot a 68.

"That was the easiest 67 I've ever shot," said Green, an Ohio native who had three bogeys, twice on three putts.

Crafter and Eggeling each had six birdies, while Green had eight, the most for 18 holes so far this season.

"I was really pleased with the round," said Crafter, who had three birdies on each side of the 6,248-yard, par-72 Inverrary Country Club course. She sank putts ranging from 6 to 10 feet.

LPGA Hall of Fame member Nancy Lopez, returning to competition for the first time this year, moved to within three shots of the leaders at 140.

Nick has already led the way with some fine recommendations for improving the probation system. Our family is concerned about the rise in drug related crimes and welcome his fresh approach to stopping repeat offenders.

As presiding judge of the 238th District Court, Nick would be firm, yet fair. Nick has the personal courage and integrity needed to avoid being compromised by any special interests.

It is a joy to support such a fine gentleman and community leader as Nick Taylor for District Judge. Join me in voting for Nick Taylor in the Republican Primary on March 13th.

Lake Placid relives its 1980 Olympic spirit years later

Olympics

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — The Olympics are 10 years gone for this tiny Adirondack village. But the people involved with the 1980 Winter Games got a chance Saturday to come back and relive the games that saw speed skater Eric Heiden win five gold medals and the American hockey team beat the Soviets.

"I'm especially happy about it because this 10th anniversary recalls what the 13th and the third Winter Olympic Games have done for the village of Lake Placid and for the athletes of America," said Jack Shea, a lifetime Lake Placid resident and winner of two speed skating gold medals at the 1932 Winter Games.

"It's just great to get all these people back together again," Shea said Saturday as he signed autographs in the lobby of Lake Placid Post Office with Mike Eruzione, Phil Verchota and Buzz Schneider, three members of the 1980 Olympic hockey team.

More than a dozen athletes from the 1980 Winter Olympics were back in Lake Placid for a week-long celebration the town put on to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Games.

American skier Heidi Preuss, wearing her 1980 team jacket, said the village hadn't changed in the 10 years since she'd competed here. She said it was hard being back.

"I didn't think it would be, but it is because you realize you've been replaced. Time has passed," she said.

Preuss was 18 when she placed fourth in the women's downhill skiing at the 1980 Games. She spent much of her time in Lake Placid visiting the Olympic venues she didn't get to see in 1980.

"Athletes don't get much of an Olympics. You're so wrapped up in your event that there's not time to socialize, to meet other athletes or watch other events," she said.

Hundreds of people packed the Olympic Center on Saturday to look at the arenas where Sonja Henie skated into Olympic history and where the American hockey team beat the Soviets.

Russian native Pavel Katsen, who moved to this country 10 years ago, was one of many vendors who set up shop at an Olympic pin convention held in the center. He laughed as he recalled the American victory over his homeland.

"This is a nice country. It has everything I want," he said.

Vendors from as far away as Illinois and Michigan and as close as down the street were at the pin convention.

Village native Joanna Conway, who owned a souvenir shop on Main Street across from the speed skating oval during the 1980 Olympics, had many items from her now-closed store. She said they had been packed away over the past decade.

"It's Olympic stuff," the 77-year-old Conway said. "It doesn't spoil."

Shopkeepers on Main Street did a brisk business but said it wasn't any greater than what they would normally get on a holiday weekend. Monday is Presidents Day.

The street was closed to automobile traffic much of the afternoon, just as it was for those 13 days in February of 1980 when 50,000 people descended on this Adirondack mountain village of 2,500.

"Business is good, but you can't compare it to the Olympics," said Ty Kehoe, owner of Kehoe's Sweat Shoppe.

Recordings of the 1980 Olympics were played outside Kehoe's shop as a television inside continuously broadcasted highlights of the 1980 Winter Games.

John Jenkins, owner of the Christmas Shoppe, said he wished this weekend would have been more like the days of the 1980 Games.

"But it couldn't be because that was the Olympics. That was when the Americans beat the Russians in hockey," he said.

"This celebration is just a simple thing that's going on. There's not a whole lot of glitz, but that's what it's all about."

tive offense in the second extra period.

"That's the best I've seen them play, and this is the third time I've seen them," said Lee coach Eddie Bull, after comparing the tie to the proverbial kiss of the sister. "Whenever we get together with Permian, no matter what the sport, the intensity level just gets taken to another level. That's what competition is all about.

"But we just didn't play our game. We played well enough to tie, but that's. about it. It's like their first goal that we really scored — defensive mistakes are just killing us."

Mojo mentor Fred Davalla was pleased enough to come away with a tie, but was a unhappy about Hollaway's red card, which will also disallow Hollaway from playing in Permian's next district match against San Angelo.

"We've worked very hard to avoid red cards and play with our heads on. But it's difficult to officiate a game like this with the intensity of Permian-Lee. The referees had to take control of the game," Davalla said.

"We would have liked to have won it, but I though we played exceptionally well and showed a lot of character today."

The Rebs are on the road in their next match, when they play at Abilene Cooper.

season, arbitrator Raymond Goetz ruled. He had asked for $1.6 million.

Bonds, who will turn 27 on Feb. 23, batted .248 with 19 home runs, 58 RBI and a team-leading 32 stolen bases last season.

Hatcher was awarded $690,000. The Pirates had offered $525,000. Hatcher, who made $495,000 last season, hit .231 with four homers and 51 RBIs for Houston and the Pirates in 1989.

Pendleton, who hit .264 with 13 homers and 74 RBIs, was awarded $1.85 million by arbitrator Stephen Goldberg. The Cardinals had offered $1 million.

Smith, who was the National League Comeback Player of the Year, had asked for $2 million. Arbitrator Thomas Roberts chose the Braves' figure of $1.75 million — still a $1.35 million raise for Smith.

Last season, Smith hit .315 with a career-high 21 homers and 79 RBIs as he successfuly rebounded from a career hurt by drug abuse.

Calderon was awarded the White Sox' figure of $925,000. He had requested $1,250,000.

Caldereron hit .286 with 14 homers and 87 RBIs.

Randy Bass, one of the top sluggers in Japanese baseball history, has been invited to the Baltimore Orioles' spring training camp on a tryout basis.

"He's being brought to camp as a designated hitter candidate," General Manager Roland Hemond said. "He will be with us as an unsigned non-roster player."

Bass, 35, has played in the major leagues with Minnesota, Kansas City, Montreal, San Diego, and Texas. He also played five years with the Hanshin Tigers of the Japanese Central League.

The Oakland A's on Saturday signed veteran left-handed reliever Guillermo Hernandez to a Class AAA contract with Tacoma for the 1990 season. The 35-year-old Hernandez played the last six years for the Tigers. He underwent tendinitis surgery in September.

COUNTRY Delight

By JILL HANCOCK

Walls of windows which enable homeowners to enjoy not only a beautiful view of the Green Tree Country Club golf course, but also of breathtaking West Texas sunsets are only one of the many highlights that this week's featured home exhibits. Located on a quiet cul-de-sac, this four bedroom and three-and-a-half bath home has two living areas, a formal dining room and a pool cabana.

The exterior of this home is beautifully landscaped and very inviting to visitors. The front door opens onto an entrance that has a hardwood floor and pale mauve walls. To the right, the formal dining room is situated and three vertical windows frame the front yard. Along the far wall, a mauve-colored paper features blue and gray flecks.

Continuing to the left of the front door, the hardwood floor extends into a corridor that leads to the formal living room. The brick fireplace is used to separate the formal living room from this hallway and access is made into this room from doorways that are placed at each end. The amenities in this room include a wall of windows that overlook the back yard pool, picture-frame paneled walls and a vaulted ceiling with beams.

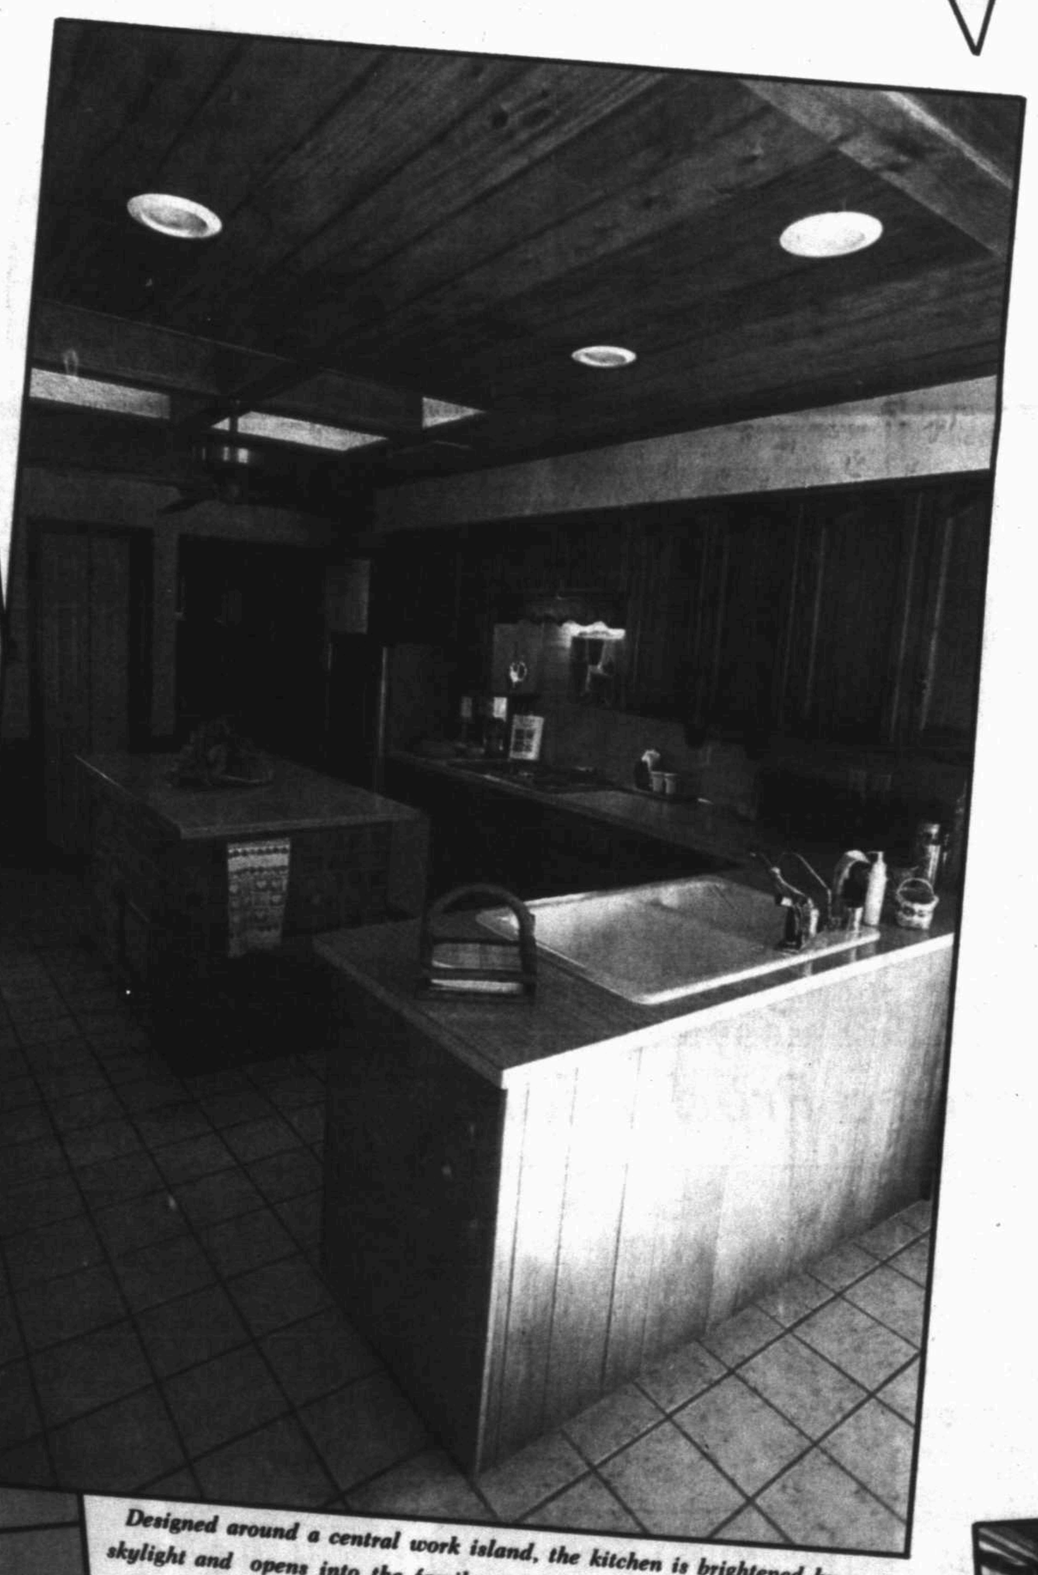

ACCESS INTO the country kitchen can be made two ways — through the formal dining room or a doorway in the living room. Adjacent to the opening in the formal dining room, a wet bar is conveniently located to serve both formal entertaining areas.

The kitchen is designed around a brick work island and features many gourmet appliances that include a Jennair cooktop, Thermador microwave and self-cleaning oven, Compactall trash compactor, Kenmore dishwasher and Sub-Zero refrigerator. A skylight above the island allows for lots of sunshine into this area which will delight the cook of the family. Pale blue tulips with a cream background adorn the walls of the kitchen and the connecting breakfast room.

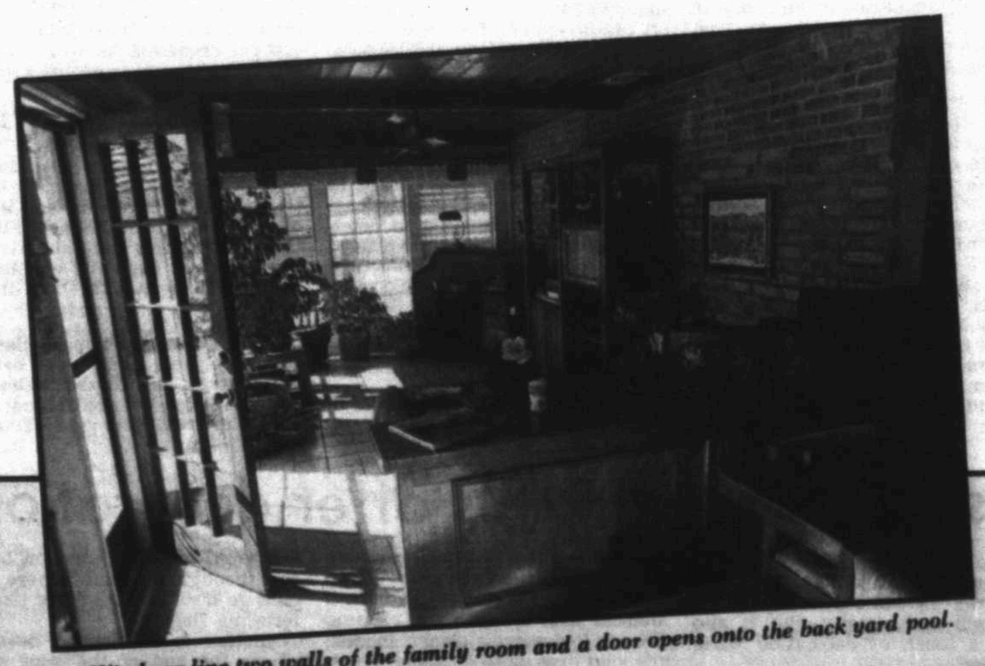

A spacious utility room is situated off of the kitchen and includes a built-in desk, a sink under a window and a built-in ironing board. A bath with a shower is also located next to the kitchen.

Possibly the most inviting room in this home is the family room. Divide from the breakfast room by a built-in server, this area features two walls of windows that have a great view of the pool and golf course. The other wall is lined with bricks, adding to the country decor that this home displays. A homeowner could easily waste away an afternoon curled up in a chair with a favorite book as rays of sunshine warm this room.

Please see DELIGHT, Page 2D

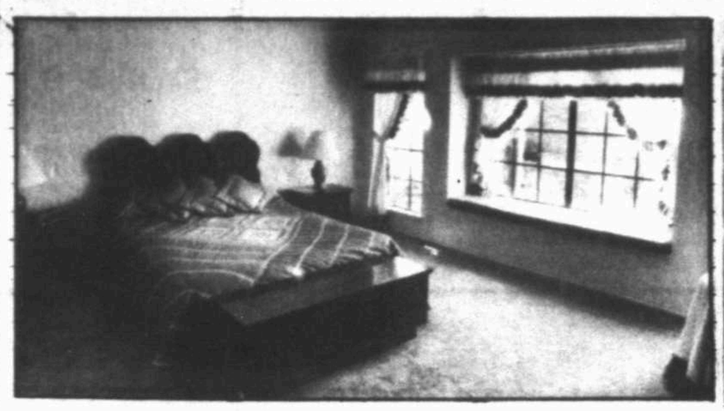

Designed around a central work island, the kitchen is brightened by a skylight and opens into the family room.

Windows line two walls of the family room and a door opens onto the back yard pool.

DELIGHT

A door next to the family room leads to the back yard pool and cabana. Family members will love spending time during the warmer months outdoors. The cabana features a bar area with a refrigerator and a half-bath. Not only is this room a great place to entertain friends, it can also be used as a children's hide-a-way during the winter months. To the right of the pool, a small yard is situated, with an adjoining area featuring a private sand trap and pitching green for a golfer who always needs more practice.

The corridor which leads past the formal living room opens into a second hallway that provides access to the home's four bedrooms. The master bedroom, to the right, is highlighted by a window seat and a door which allows owners a private entrance to the pool area. This room has a cathedral ceiling and a wall which is covered in a mauve, blue and teal paper.

A short hall leads past two walk-in closets into the master bath. Focusing on a marble tub, the bath also has two separate vanities, a built-in shower and cabinets for storage of linens and clothes. A skylight brightens this entire room and the walls feature a floral paper in shades of mauve and blue.

The children's bedrooms are situated down the hall from the master bedroom. The first room has paneled walls and a built-in desk with shelves above. This room could serve as a study, if desired. A spacious cedar closet can also be used for storing of out-of-season clothing. The window in this room frames the area by the front door.

Blue walls and a balloon border at mid-wall make the second bedroom perfect for a boy's haven. This room has a window that views the front yard and a spacious walk-in closet.

The third bedroom has pale pink walls with a heart border stenciled along the top of the walls. A window in this room also overlooks the front yard and a large walk-in closet.

A hall bath serves these three bedroom and is decorated in a plaid paper in shades of blue and mauve.

The other amenities in this delightful family home are a membership to the country club, a custom golf cart, ceiling fans and a three-car garage with an automatic door opener.

The Carriage Company, Realtors is offering this home which contains over 3,100 square feet for $183,000.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

All family members will enjoy the back yard pool and cabana, at left. The pool backs up to the golf course and a private sand trap and pitching green are adjacent to this area.

Don Harvey agents aid incoming Arco family buy home of out going Arco family

When Greg and Germaine O'Donnell were notified by their company, Arco, that they were being transferred to Dallas, they called Pat Carl, an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors. The O'Donnells had originally bought their home when it was listed with Pat and wanted her assistance again now that they needed to sell it. Pat listed their house and soon it appeared as the feature home in the Midland Reporter-Telegram's real estate section.

At the same time, Stuart and Karen Nelson, also with Arco, were notified that they were being transferred from Dallas to Midland. For their homefinding trip to Midland, the Nelsons were referred to another Don Harvey associate, Jeannie Printz. Karen's mother, Betty Gilmore, had saved the impressive feature story on the O'Donnell's home thinking that Stuart and Karen might find it suitable for their needs. As it turned out, it was the perfect home for them.

Jeannie showed them approximately 34 homes, but Stuart and Karen soon knew this was the right home for them. Even though Midland is losing one Arco family to Dallas, we are gaining another Arco family that is coming from Dallas. And through this all, the previous Arco family's address becomes the new one for the new family.

Greg O'Donnell was born in Alton, Illinois and shortly thereafter, his family moved to New York City where they were to remain for five years. His parents, James and Joan O'Donnell were then transferred to Dallas for one year before being transferred to Westfield, New Jersey. In 1970, they returned to Dallas.

Following high school, Greg attended Texas A&M University where he obtained a bachelor of science degree in geophysics. After graduation, Greg accepted a position in Plano.

Germaine was born and raised in Dallas with her parents Epi and Helen Quintanilla. She also attended Texas A&M where she obtained her bachelors of arts degree in economics. Greg and Germaine did not meet at A&M, although they were both there at the same time. It was not until they had both graduated and returned to Dallas that chance would have them meet. As it turned out, they bumped into each other on a golf course and realized they had seen each other at school, but had never really gotten to know each other.

Their son James, now four-and-a-half-years old, was born in Denver. They moved to Midland in 1986. Greg said, "We have enjoyed living in Midland and certainly would not mind coming back. Midland has the best weather in all of Texas."

"As much as we've enjoyed living in Midland, we're looking forward to moving to Dallas and going home. It will be nice to have family nearby again," explained Germaine.

Stuart Nelson was born in Chappel Hill, North Carolina. At age 11, his parents Dr. Luther Nelson and wife Dolly, moved to Amarillo. Stuart graduated from Amarillo High School and says he claims West Texas as home.

Stuart obtained his bachelors degree in geology from Southern Methodist University and a masters degree from the University of Minnesota at Deluth. Following his graduation, Stuart accepted a position with Arco and worked at their research center in Plano.

Karen was born in Midland and graduated from Midland High School. Her parents, Bill and Betty Gilmore and Grandmother, Dorothy Gilmore, have lived in Midland for over 30 years. After graduation, Karen left West Texas to attend the University of Virginia where she received her degree in commerce. Following college, Karen moved to Dallas to work with EDS.

"The son of Ross Periot, the founder and developer of EDS, married one of my friends from Midland, Sarah Fullenwider. I've been away from Midland for 12 years, except for regular visits and we are really looking forward to coming home to that good old West Texas friendliness," stated Karen.

"I was on a swim team in Amarillo during high school," added Stuart, "and the city of Midland swim team was our biggest rival. I developed good friends here during those days and many of them still live here."

Stuart and Karen have a daughter, Kristin, who is 22-months-old. "We're looking forward to raising our family here," said Karen.

Although Midland is bidding farewell to Greg and Germaine O'Donnell, we welcome Stuart and Karen Nelson. And some day, when the activity in the Permian Basin increased enough, we may even get to welcome Greg and Germain back again.

Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. has been selected by The Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, Inc. as it's affiliate representative in Midland. Ruth Young, president and owner says, "We're still locally owned and operated. With the Prudential purchase of Merrill Lynch we are also a member of the Network 50, a national referral service, which generated more than 70,000 referrals last year nationwide.

The Prudential Real Estate Affiliates is distinguished by an image of integrity, strength and power, coupled with a high degree of consumer awareness, respect and trust.

The Prudential is a prestigious name that has been synonymous with pride for 114 years. Another benefit of The Prudential is a state-of-the-art computerized referral system and loan origination system across the U.S. and internationally. "This will enable our office to send, receive and follow up on referrals and relocating customers and clients," explained Young. "Our secretary Kelli Uechi, has been in Dallas all last week learning the CLOS — Computerized Loan Origination System. This system will enable us to expedite the entire home loan application procedure, significantly reducing the amount of paperwork and processing time it typically takes to arrange a home loan."

The CLOS system allows buyers to examine selected loan offerings from a group of major lenders to assess their potential for qualification on these loans. Young stated, "Using the system, buyers may even submit loan applications and receive preliminary loan approval in the comfort and convenience of our office. We have become a one-stop shopping for our customers. Customers can pre-qualify for a loan, select a property and process the loan application all in one place."

"As an affiliate member we had an extensive personal, business and financial background investigation. Our standing in the community, references from businesses, Board of Realtors, bankers and professional conduct were considered in determining our membership," explained Young adds, "Since The Prudential purchased Merrill Lynch Relocation Management and Network 50, both of whichare relocation companies, we are working with 43,000 other Realtors across the country and still growing rapidly."

Seven items that convinced theYoungs that an association with The Prudential would benefit their company were:

- National image.
- Training.
- National advertising and financial strength.
- National referral service and computer network.
- The Prudential is America's largest insurance company and largest non-bank corporation.
- They enjoy 96 percent name awareness and one out of every four families has done business with some branch of The Purdential.
- The Prudential has over 200 subsidiary companies providing a broad range of services.

We are proud of our staff of experienced real estate associates. They include Sindy Parsons, Betty Sorensen, Sandy McGill, Polly DeVoss-Hodge, Lynn Boyd, Melissa Herndon, Kelli Uechi, James Finly, Clarence Meekins and Paul Harzke. They are also currently expanding their offices at #19 Oak Ridge Square.

"Our mission is to help people successfully meet their real estate needs across the United States by providing superior, professional real estate services," concluded Young.

Useful dovetail joints offer decoration, strength when used in cabinetmaking

The dovetail, one of the most useful and strongest joints used in cabinetmaking, provides unusual strength and rigidity. But it also adds a touch of decoration when exposed.

This joint cannot be pulled apart in the direction of its length, making it particularly useful for drawers.

And no matter how grand or humble the woods used, the patterns and contrasting run of the grain in a well-cut joint always seem pleasing enough to deserve a glance. Indeed, the joint lives up to its name, which refers to the graceful spread of a dove's tail.

There are several variations of this joint, the most common being the through dovetail, where the ends go through each other like interlacing fingers.

Another is the lapped dovetail, where the end of the joint stops short of the outside surface.

This is the usual method of joining drawer fronts. The dovetails are exposed only at the sides and do not run through to the face of the drawer, where it would interfere with the appearance.

In the 17th century, early cabinetmakers who broke away from the separate craft of carpentry cut wide single dovetails, perhaps thinking bigger was stronger.

As the new craft developed and became more sophisticated, dovetails — on drawers, at least — generally became finer and closer. The dovetail probably reached its peak of daintiness in the Victorian era.

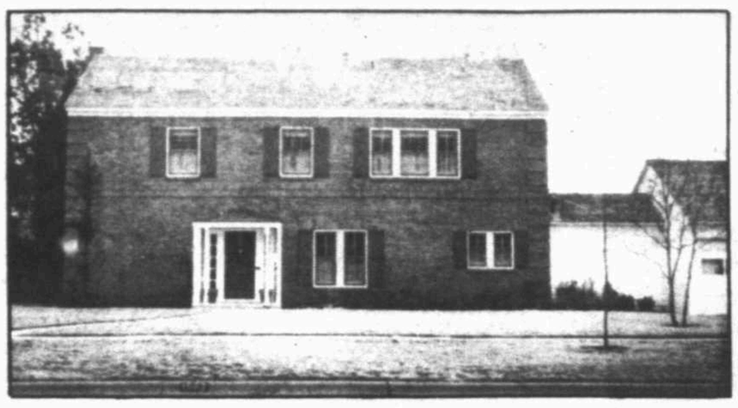

Spacing and sizing of the tails varied, depending on the individual worker, his training or the practice of his shop.

Although it has been said that workers cut simply by eye, it appears they had a set of templates that outlined the places to cut: occasionally, on the sides of old drawers, one comes across scribe marks to guide in cutting the tails to the correct depth.

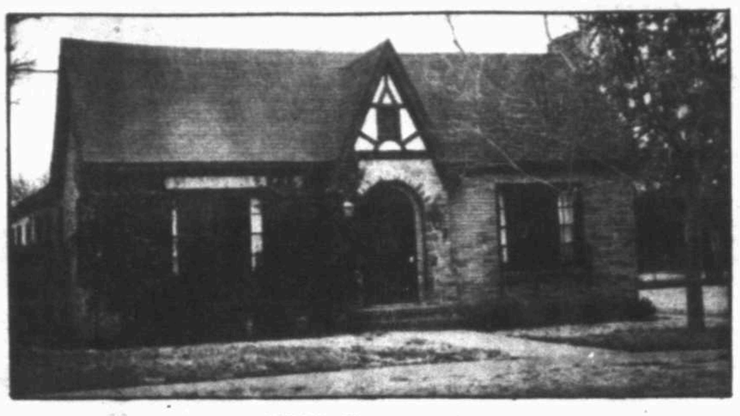

Lanier & Co. has two homes located in older neighborhoods

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Lanier & Co. has two homes, one in old Midland and the other in the museum area, that feature elegant appointments throughout. From hardwood floors to spacious bedrooms to an updated decor, both of these homes have amenities that homeowners will find appealing.

1603 Holloway

807 W. Kansas

A two-story home at 1603 Holloway was built during the 1940s and is located in the museum district. The entrance hall opens onto a hardwood floor that leads throughout this three bedroom home. An informal dining area is situated to the right of the front door and a floor-to-ceiling window overlooks the front yard. This room has white walls which flow into a light blue ceiling.

The kitchen is adjacent to the dining area and features a black and white checked floor, white cabinets, a gas range and a Kitchen Aid dishwasher. A window above the sink also views the front yard.

The entrance opens into the formal living room. The amenities in this area include a marble fireplace with a carved mantle and a bookcase inset along one wall. The blue and white decor is also carried out in this room, except the walls are blue and the trim is white.

A spacious formal dining room is located to the right of the living room. This area is so large that it can easily seat as many guests or family members that an owner wants to entertain formally.

French doors in the living and dining room lead out into the sun room that extends along the back of the home. Windows brighten this area and a fireplace helps warms this room on a cold winter day.

The staircase in the entrance hall leads upstairs to a sitting area which the three upstairs bedrooms have access to. One advantage of purchasing an older house are the size of bedrooms that were designed in these homes. Each of these bedrooms which display a unique decor have shuttered windows and walk-in closets. The master bedroom has a private bath and the other two bedrooms are connected by a bath.

The other amenities of this home are a two car garage, a large utility room and zoned heating and air conditioning. This home is being offered for $107,000.

A cozy two bedroom home that is ideal for first time homebuyers is located at 807 W. Kansas. Ivy covered brick and an arched front door are the exterior amenities that add to the charm that this home affords.

The entrance to the home opens onto the formal living room. This room is brightened by many windows and an adjoining study is situated to the left of the front door. The study has built-in cabinets inset along one wall.

Stepping down from the living room, the dining room is situated between the living room and the kitchen. A stenciled border encases the walls along the ceiling, adding to the country feel of this home. Hardwood floors are found throughout these three rooms and are ideal for displaying area rugs.

A galley-style kitchen is situated behind the formal living room. A window in the kitchen overlooks the side yard. A doorway in the kitchen opens into the breakfast room. Two china cabinets are inset along the right wall and a door provides access to the backyard.

A corridor next to the study leads past a guest bath into the first bedroom. This room has windows which view the side yard and a spacious closet. This room is connected to the master bedroom by a bath which features a built-in shower.

Homeowners can also enter the master bedroom through the breakfast room. This spacious room has a fireplace built-in along one wall and many windows brighten this room. Three closets provide for ample storage of clothes. The connecting bath is also ideal for parents who need to check on a small child in the other bedroom.

The other amenities of this home include guest quarters that feature a bath and an adjacent laundry room. Lanier & Co. is offering this home for $49,000.

The Re/Max Team is Proud
To Celebrate Our 4th Anniversary

WE'RE EXCITED!

We want to thank you for making us one of the largest Real Estate firms in the Permian Basin.

Our story began in 1986. When many people were closing their doors for business, we opened ours.

Now, just 4 years later, Re/Max of Midland has grown to include 11 associates and 2 full time office personnel.

The reason for our success? It is simple...we like people! And we like helping folks find the right home for their needs. We also believe in Midland and the Permian Basin and take great pride in providing a service that strengthens and enhances our community.

We are proud of our past achievements and look forward to a bright future. Every member of the winning team from Re/Max shares a common goal: to be the best at what we do and to continue to grow with what we think is a great place to live and work, Midland. Thank You.

THE LONG GOOD-BYE

Learning to Let Go

"Get those dogs out of my room. Somebody get me a rifle so I can shoot that black dog with the floppy ears," Grace Baughman said. The agitated woman glanced furtively around her room and tried to rise out of her wheelchair.

"There's too many dogs here. I won't have another one!" she shouted.

"I'll take the dogs out, Mother," James Jolley said, offering his mother-in-law's shoulder a reassuring pat.

The 72-year-old woman settled back into her chair, folded her hands into her lap and sang, "I won't have no dogs, won't have no dogs, no dogs, no dogs." Then she reached down and slapped at the air. "There's another one. I knew you wouldn't take those dogs out."

HER DAUGHTER Carol Jolley reached out and clasped one of her mother's hands in both of her own. Ms. Baughman responded with a smile. Then suddenly, she grabbed her daughter's hand and tried to wrest the ring off her finger. Her daughter removed her hand and Ms. Baughman looked dazed momentarily — then her expression changed to fear and she pointed to the bed. "I want you to take that dog out of here and kill it," she demanded.

Ms. Jolley looked at her husband helplessly and shook her head as her mother began to shout about the dogs again.

There were no dogs in Ms. Baughman's room.

Ms. Baughman is an Alzheimer's patient who has been hallucinating that she is on a farm being overrun by dogs. Actually, she is living in The Courtyard, a Midland nursing home. Her room is clean and uncluttered, and there doesn't appear to be anything in her surroundings that could be causing her nervous agitation.

"She might be ill or in pain," Jolley said. "But Alzheimer's has robbed her of her ability to tell us what's wrong."

Alzheimer's disease — a progressive, degenerative disease which attacks the brain — can cause its victims to hallucinate and become disoriented, even to the point where they don't recognize themselves or their family members.

"Do you know anybody named Grace?" Jolley asked his mother-in-law.

"No," she said, seeming to forget her own name. "There probably is somebody around here named Grace but I don't know her."

THE FIRST SYMPTOMS of Alzheimer's are memory lapses, often followed by unexplainable changes in thought, language, personality, pronounced impairment of judgment, loss of initiative or spontaneity and general confusion (getting lost on the way to work, for example). These symptoms usually lead to the diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease, according to "A Caregiver's Guide and Sourcebook," by Howard Gruetzner.

As the disease progresses, it is characterized by restlessness, a tendency to wander, problems with reading, writing, working with numbers and perceptual-motor problems. Alzheimer's victims may feel unloved and become suspicious.

For example, they may forget where they keep an object and suspect someone has taken it. They may become agitated, irritable and have teary or giddy outbursts. They may refuse to bathe (possibly because of developing a fear of the water, according to some theories) or they may overdress by putting on several layers of clothes, even the temperature does not

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The Petroleum Engineers Wives Association celebrated its 30th anniversary with a luncheon recently at the Plaza Club. Approximately 100 women turned out for the festive occasion, which honored charter members and past presidents.

June (Mrs. James F.) Ormond discussed the club's beginnings, while Ed Rowland, executive vice president/director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, presented a slide show highlighting the history of the Permian Basin. In addition, photographs from the Petroleum Museum were on exhibit.

The festivities began with bridge and a social hour preceding the luncheon.

Charter members attending were Juanita (Mrs. E.E.) Evinger, B.J. (Mrs. E.R.) Filley and Mrs. Ormond. The past 15 presidents in attendance included Alta (Mrs. Charles W.) Cole, who came from Houston for the event.

THE FAMILY WEDDING of Paula Holmquest and Gary Mulloy Friday evening at St. Paul's United Methodist Church was followed by a festive reception for friends at Ranchland Hills Country Club. It was hosted by their parents, Connie Mahaffey of Carlsbad, N.M., and Jane and Johnny Mulloy.

On Saturday morning, out-of-town friends and relatives were invited to the Johnny Mulloys for brunch, followed by a day of golf for the men, while the women toured Paula and Gary's new home and viewed their wedding gifts.

Pre-nuptial festivities began in January with a display miscellaneous shower at the home of Nancy (Mrs. Cecil) Ellis. Other hostesses were Nancy (Mrs. Charlie) Tierce, Mary Ann (Mrs. W.B.) Johnston, Charlstie (Mrs. Jim) Culbertson, Tracy (Mrs. Ed) Ellis, Ms. Elwanna Collins and Geneil (Mrs. Carl) Emerson.

Bonnie and Joe Feagan hosted a couples' "Honey-Do" party in early February at their home. Invitations were enclosed in pieces of sandpaper , which were returned to the groom for future chores. He also was the recipient of many useful household tools. In addition, Thelma (Mrs. Bill) Bolch entertained with a luncheon and bird seed bag party Thursday at her home.

HONORING A GROUP of 26 graduating seniors at Midland and Lee High Schools, a skating party was held Monday evening at K-C's Nutty Roller.

The honorees were Elizabeth Ameel, Nancy Arrell, Helana Beal, Stephen Beal, Alexis Beck, Megan Bray, Emily Brenner, Ty Chambers, Greg Chandler, Shauna Claiborne, Greg Crowe, Jamie Dodson, Arthur Donnelly.

Also, Harper Essex, Libby Gilmore, J.T. Herd, Shawnna Hill, Charla Jackson, Hillary Johnson, Cathy McGavran, Scott Melzer, Anna-Margaret Ray, Scott Satterwhite, David Schmidt, Kimberly Way and James Woolsey.

Hosting the fun affair were Susan and Ron Britton, Elizabeth and Byron Greaves, Anne and Jack Herbig, Carol and Jim Lamb, Laura and David Morrow, Sarah and Russell Neisig, Kay and George Smith and Diana and Ed Weyman.

WITH A 61-YEAR SPAN of graduation classes, the University of Kansas alumni met recently at the home of Pat and Chuck Dougherty for their yearly gathering.

Following a barbecue dinner, the alums were updated on changes and additions to the campus. Representatives from the university were Judy Ruedlinger from the Alumni Association office and Robert Senecal, associate vice chancellor of academic affairs and dean of continuing education.

Two new KU grads, Dan Massoth and Tony Lewis, both ARCO engineers and members of the Class of 1989, were welcomed by the group, and Fred Kester, Class of 1928, was given special recognition.

Among other Jayhawkers present were Sharon and John Brose, Mary and Cory Skinner, Mary Ann and Robert Elliott, Edith and Jay Hardy, Colleen and Elmer Startz, Deborah Markley and Billy Priebe.

THE ENGAGEMENT of Midlanders Mary Tarver and Mark Taylor was announced last weekend at a tea in the home of the bride-elect's mother, Mrs. Marjorie Tarver of Edgewood.

A Valentine theme was carried out in the decorations. Debbie (Mrs. Jeff) Atwell of Midland was among those serving in the house party.

Out-of-town guests included the groom's mother, Jane (Mrs. Leslie) Taylor of Litchfield Park, Ariz., and former Midlander Sandra (Mrs. Donald G., III) Dunbar of Austin.

The couple will be married April 28 in Edgewood.

VIRGINIA (MRS. R.R.) HERRELL entertained at a beautifully appointed tea Saturday afternoon at Midland Country Club to honor her granddaughters, Shannon Floyd of Austin and Kim Stafford of Boulder, Colo.

Shannon, daughter of Sharon and Gene Floyd, will become the bride of Marty Board, also of Austin, on June 2 in Midland. Kim, daughter of Julia and Richard Stafford of Dallas, and Brant Worrell of Colorado Springs, Colo., will marry July 28 in Colorado Springs.

A pink, white and silver color scheme was carried out in the decorations. Delicious tea-time refreshments were served, along with white wine, tea and coffee.

Out-of-town guests included Marty's mother, Anna (Mrs. Tom) Board of Austin, and Kim's sister, Kelly Stafford of Dallas. Shannon's sister-in-law, Sharon (Mrs. Bobby) Floyd of Midland, also was among the guests.

Of interest is that both couples met at Colorado Springs' Broadmoor Hotel. Shannon and Marty plan to honeymoon at the hotel, while Kim and Brant are holding their reception there.

New policies let critically ill collect on life insurance

By LEONARD SLOANE
N.Y. Times News Service

A new kind of life insurance, which pays part of the death benefits while the policy holder is still alive, is attracting attention these days.

Going beyond traditional insurance contracts, these accelerated-death-benefit policies are intended primarily to cover the high medical and hospital costs of a catastrophic illness.

While their appeal is that you do not have to be worth more dead than alive, to take advantage of these policies you generally have to be seriously ill or entering a nursing institution. This insurance, sold both as a separate policy or a rider to one, typically costs 5 to 25 percent more than standard life insurance.

For example, if a 55-year-old male takes out a $100,000 universal life policy from the Aetna Life and Casualty Co., the annual premium is $1,836; an accelerated-death-benefit rider adds $204 to the price.

"This is a value added because it is a benefit which enables a person to get something out of the policy himself," said John O'Connell, the company's director of product strategy.

Critics warn, however, of the potential for abuse or exploitation when very sick people under stress obtain large sums of money. And while companies selling these policies assert that the accelerated benefits are not taxable, the Internal Revenue Service has not yet taken a position on the subject.

THE AGING of the population may make more Americans interested in ADB policies in the future. Nevertheless, experts advise that consumers should consider them a supplement to, rather than a replacement for, adequate health insurance.

In addition, Sidney Kess, a New York certified public accountant and lawyer, says purchasers should be wary of the policy's cloudy tax status.

"While denominated a life-insurance policy, it is in reality a hybrid health-and-life policy, since the draw-down to a large extent relates to the insured's medical needs," Kess said. "Its interaction with conventional health insurance should be studied."

Edward Graves, a chartered financial consultant and associate professor at the American College in Bryn Mawr, Pa., has a more positive view. "This provides two different types of benefits concurrently," he said. "It does what life insurance has always done and provides some financial relief."

From the insurance companies' point of view, "it is being used as a way to juice up the universal life side of the market," said Timothy C. Pfeifer of Tillinghast, an actuarial consulting concern in Chicago. "In a year, you're probably going to double the market."

But Christopher G. Greis, president of Benefit Brokerage in Palatine, Ill., believes "the consumer needs to take a hard look.

"I don't think the products are yet as responsive to individual consumer needs as they should be."

And J. Robert Hunter, president of the National Insurance Consumer Organization, an advocacy group, warned about the problems that could be created by using money that would otherwise go to beneficiaries.

ACCELERATED-DEATH-BENEFIT policies have been sold in the United States for about two years and their availability is limited. Only 40 or so of the 2,200 life insurers in the nation sell them.

Most of the companies offering such contracts are relatively small, but the Prudential Insurance Company of America recently entered the field and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. planned to do so in January.

Even non-insurers have become involved with the ADB business. Living Benefits Inc., a corporation in Albuquerque, N.M., buys life insurance policies from their owners when they become terminally ill for an amount based on life expectancy, current interest rates and premium payments. Usually the company will pay between 55 percent and 80 percent of the death benefit in the insurance contract.

"People of modest means sell us their policy and can retain their dignity the last months of their lives," said Rob T. Worley, chairman of the company. "So far, we've bought 16 policies with $1.5 million in face value."

Many states prohibit accelerated-death-benefit policies on the ground that combining health and life insurance is confusing to the consumer. Last month, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners began a study to develop guidelines for ADB policies.

There are three major kinds of accelerated-death-benefit policies: those offering lump-sum payments for affliction with a disease, those offering a percentage of the death benefits to terminally ill policyholders, and those providing accelerated benefits when a person goes into a nursing home. Each has proponents who cite its particular advantages.

FOR INSTANCE, Duane Murner, senior vice president of the Capital Holding Corp., whose subsidiaries offer ADB insurance for terminal illness, said: "We're going after the healthy people before the need arises. We sell a completely separate benefit that applies to any policy, whether from us or from any other company."

Edward A. Murphy is vice president and actuary of the National Travelers Life Co., which makes monthly benefits available when people enter nursing homes. He said, "I relate this to a reverse mortgage. You have an asset, life insurance, but in the meantime, you don't have the funds for the expense of a nursing home. So you use the asset in a way that you hadn't thought of before."

Insurance available in basic types

N.Y. Times News Service

There are three basic types of life insurance policies offering accelerated death benefits.

One pays a percentage of the face value, typically up to 30 percent, to those with a specified critical illness, like cancer or a stroke. After this money is disbursed, the policy's death benefits and cash value decline accordingly.

The second, closely related to the first, also pays a percentage of the face value to policyholders with any diagnosed terminal illness. For example, one insurance company pays 50 percent of the death benefit to policyholders who have been told by physicians they have no more than six months to live.

Third, there are long-term care policies and riders that generally provide accelerated benefits when a person enters a nursing home. Monthly benefits of up to 2 percent of the face value may be paid for as many as 50 months.

ADB insurance is not available in every state. For example, such policies have not been approved in New York and New Jersey but will be permitted in Connecticut starting Oct. 1.

Prospective buyers should check with their state insurance department to find out if the insurance is available.

Weight Loss Pill 'Baffles' Scientists

WASHINGTON - Scientists are baffled by a new weight loss formula that causes people to lose weight even though they don't change the way they normally eat.

Studies published in respected scientific journals such as The British Journal of Nutrition say that cyamopsis tetragonolobus, an ingredient often used to thicken ice cream, can cause permanent weight loss without dieting or exercise. Although several explanations for the weight loss are suggested, the most likely according to scientists, is that the ingredient seems to "trap" high calorie fat particles, decreasing their absorption in the intestines.

Scientists at National dietary Research, an organization committed to the research and development of nutritional solutions to world-wide health problems, have successfully isolated and incorporated cyamopsis tetragonolobus into an improved formula that greatly enhances the potential for weight loss over the ingredient alone. Called Food Source One, the revolutionary new formula provides a three-way scientifically designed process to help prevent caloric absorption.

The mechanism by which Food Source One works to decrease body weight is a complicated process called nutri-bonding. When chewed and swallowed immediately before meals, high caloric fats are replaced with lower caloric nutrients, thereby providing optimum nutrition and a minimum number of fat calories as explained in an instruction sheet that accompanies the tablets. The instruction sheet should be followed for optimum results.

Food Source One is unlike any other product on the market and is available immediately because it is not a drug and only contains natural ingredients already known to be safe. Physicians and pharmacists are praising Food Source One as a natural, drug free alternative for the treatment of obesity.

Food Source One is available at:

Retirees, baby boomers can work together on health care

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Baby Boomers should help solve problems in health care before they reach retirement, AARP President Louise D. Crooks says.

"The Baby Boomers are seeing what is happening to their parents — lack of adequate retirement incomes and the high cost of health care — and don't want the same things to happen to them," Crooks said at the American Association of Retired Persons' National Leadership Orientation Conference.

Retired people and Baby Boomers — people born in roughly 1946 to 1964 — are beginning to work together toward achieving a better quality of life, she said. "This aging of America creates challenges and opportunities we must consider now, not 20 or 30 years from now."

Quoting Census Bureau statistics, Crooks said there are now 64 million people in the United States 50 or older. That group will increase to 76 million by the end of the century and to 113 million by 2025. The National Institute of Aging predicts that by 2040 life expectancy will be 86 for men and more than 91 for women, she said. "Will we be able to provide the health care this growing number of older Americans will need?"

'Wanderers' need special treatment

ATLANTA (AP) — The nation's nursing homes need new ways to watch over "wanderers," the thousands of patients — especially Alzheimer's victims — who are prone to walking around, says a researcher seeking a high-tech solution.

In three months of study at an Atlanta nursing home, David Martino-Saltzman identified two patterns — "meandering," in which patients wander aimlessly, and "circuiting," in which they walk laps around a defined area.

The challenge for researchers is to find a way for nursing homes to deal with the problem without physical restraints or drugs, said Martino-Saltzman, a behavior specialist at the Veterans Administration Medical Center here.

His study involved pressure-sensitive floor mats that would detect electronic tags worn by patients. The computerized system allowed the patients to wander, but alerted workers when the patients were where they shouldn't be.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

ALZHEIMER'S

Alzheimer's victims may sleep little at night and pace the floor or wander in the wee hours of the morning. Around-the-clock supervision is necessary at this point.

At its most advanced stage, Alzheimer's victims may not recognize members of their family or even themselves in the mirror. They can no longer care for themselves and must be fed and bathed, and usually become incontinent. They lose the ability to communicate, have difficulty swallowing and may suffer from seizures.

Alzheimer's can last from three to 20 years, during which time the victim grows progressively worse. Death often results from secondary causes such as pneumonia.

Ms. Baughman's disease progression has been unusual. "The disease has progressed very quickly," Jolley said. "You might see some people who spend 10 years in one stage, but in less than a year, Mother has become a different person."

Jolley has watched his mother-in-law go through the stages of Alzheimer's rapidly since January 1989 when the Jolleys brought Ms. Baughman to Midland to live with them. "Within three months our lives were completely changed," Jolley said.

Another aspect of Ms. Boughman's case of Alzheimer's is her continuing tendency toward violence, which according to many local caregivers, is rare. Her violence — which is often triggered by fear — made her difficult for the Jolleys to care for. "Fear makes adrenalin rise, and before Mother became bedfast, five men couldn't hold her down," Jolley said.

"Another problem is that my mother reacts adversely to tranquilizers," Ms. Jolley said. "They make her even more upset."

For Ms. Jolley, watching her mother's demise has been "heartbreaking."

"My mother was always calm, quiet, very reserved. She was soft spoken, loved dogs and was active in her church and community," Ms. Jolley said.

"We are watching her die a little every day, now," Jolley said. "She acts like a 4- or 5-year-old and doesn't even realize she is in a nursing home. She has said things like, 'I think there are other people here, but I don't see them too often.' She has no reality."

Ms. Jolley said that only a few months ago her mother understood that she was in a nursing home. "In fact, she would cry and beg us to take her out of here when it was time for us to go home," she said.

Although Ms. Jolley is relieved that her mother no longer cries when she leaves, she realizes that the irony of the situation is that it means her mother is worse. "She doesn't know where she is, when I am leaving — or sometimes — who I am," Ms. Jolley said.

"Her personality change is like watching a tree die," Jolley said. "Each piece of memory that goes is like a leaf curling up and dying. Once it's fallen, it's gone forever. There is no returning it to the tree."

The Jolleys said placing Ms. Baughman in a nursing home was a difficult decision. "The care here (The Courtyard) is wonderful," Jolley said. However, he allowed that "when it comes to Alzheimer's care, you'll never find the perfect facility."

Jolley said the most difficult part of caring for his mother was her agitated wakefulness at night. "These people (Alzheimer's patients) don't sleep," he said. "I know of one woman in her 70s (who is) caring for her spouse, also in his 70s. Lately, he keeps threatening her physically and she is afraid to sleep, (afraid) that he might attack her while she sleeps. She won't be able to go without sleep much longer."

The Jolley's have struggled financially as well as emotionally. They have sold Ms. Baughman's farm and house in Lockney to keep her in the nursing home. "Medicare does not cover Alzheimer's," Jolley said, "and we were no longer capable of caring for Mother properly ourselves."

Despite all of Ms. Baughman's frightening behavior, the Jolleys stressed that relatives of Alzheimer's patients should not be ashamed by the effects of the disease.

"Alzheimer's patients — like mentally retarded persons — used to be hidden," he said. "But we have to get this disease out into the light. We can't fight it in the dark.

"The woman that we love is deep down there inside of that person with Alzheimer's. She is a compassionate woman begging for help," Jolley said. "We have to arm ourselves with the knowledge that we have to fight this disease. We also must not look at the effects of the disease, but rather remember the person that once was — that we still love.

"Despite all the difficulties of dealing with Alzheimer's, we have to deal with it. We have to renew a life and establish it again, where life once was," Jolley said. "We have to look beyond life as we know it and look beyond today. We must learn when to reach out — and even more difficult — when to let go. My love for Mother exceeds my fear of what others think of me. It goes beyond all stigmatisms."

"That's right," Ms. Jolley said. "That's my mother in there."

Area caregivers requesting certified Alzheimer's centers

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

"Midland and Odessa are being promoted as ideal places for people to retire. But elderly people who succumb to Alzheimer's disease will find there are few facilities here to accommodate them," said Kathryn Nichols, whose mother died with Alzheimer's disease 18 months ago.

Alzheimer's disease, defined as "a progressive, degenerative disease which attacks the brain and results in impaired memory, thinking and behavior," eventually renders victims weak, incontinent and unable to care for themselves.

Medicare and most insurance policies do not cover victims of Alzheimer's disease, and many area nursing homes admit they aren't equipped to care for Alzheimer's patients. A recent tragedy involving an Alzheimer's patient who walked away from a nursing home and died in a field five miles west of Midland has raised concern with area caregivers about the safety of nursing homes.

The patient, Edgar Bohling, 75, wandered away from Terrace West Nursing Home only 48 hours after he had been admitted last September. Bohling's family recently filed a wrongful death lawsuit against the nursing home. Russ Rogers, administrator for the nursing home, denied responsibility for the disappearance and death of Bohling. "The man had wandered away from several nursing homes and even his house, and they (the family) didn't tell us about it," Rogers said in a previous Reporter-Telegram interview.

Several area caregivers, who wished to remain anonymous, also have cited instances of patients from other area nursing homes wandering off. "There are too few safe places to leave someone with Alzheimer's," said one area caregiver who had removed her father from a nursing home after he hurt himself too many times. "Father kept getting bruised from falling out of his chair — he needed restraints and wasn't getting them," she said.

WEST TEXAS CARE Center in Midland is the only facility in Midland and Odessa with a certified Alzheimer's care unit, according to Gary Martin, long-term program administrator for the Texas Department of Health. "West Texas Care Center has the only certified Alzheimer's unit," Martin said. "However, certification is voluntary."

According to the Texas Department of Health in Austin, established certification standards are optional or voluntary and it is not required for nursing homes to obtain in order to admit Alzheimer's patients.

Recommended guidelines from the state also suggest certified units have a support group which meets quarterly. "We are working on setting one up now," said Tonia Castillo, manager of West Texas Care Center. "We have an Alzheimer's wing with 20 patients. It is a locked wing (Alzheimer's certification standards require Alzheimer's patients to be separated from other nursing home patients) with magnetic glass doors and 24-hour supervision provided by attendants."

Ms. Castillo said there also is an enclosed, secured area for Alzheimer's patients to walk around in, since they tend to wander and usually have a need to walk around.

Leonard Leftwich, owner and operator of Pal Adult Day Activity and Health Center in Midland, would like to organize a second certified Alzheimer's unit in Midland. "It would be very expensive to set up and operate," Leftwich said, "and we would need to have at least 10 clients commit themselves to registering."

Leftwich now accepts Alzheimer's patients at his adult day care as long as they are ambulatory, aren't bedridden, violent or belligerent.

"There is an Alzheimer's stage where the person feels unloved and becomes mean. They tend to fight everyone and get out of control. I don't have the staff to care for them," he said. Leftwich has a staff of four, including himself, and handles an average of 17 clients daily. One of his clients is confined to a wheelchair, but is capable of performing most tasks without assistance.

Leftwich's day care is licensed by the state and certified by the Texas Health Department. The Alzheimer's unit he would like to organize would provide 24-hour care and have a staff of four, including a registered nurse.

"It would need to be a nonprofit unit in order to be affordable to run," Leftwich said. "By being nonprofit the unit could get help from other organizations."

THERE ALSO ARE stringent requirements which must be followed to obtain and keep the voluntary state certification. They include having a sprinkler system for protection in case of fire, having a separate unit for Alzheimer's patients, and having staff get documented training to familiarize them with Alzheimer's behavior management.

Local caregivers have expressed a serious need for more adult day care and respite care facilities. First United Methodist Church is planning a one-day a week day care for persons with Alzheimer's disease, which members hope to have open by summer.

Seabury Center Adult Day Care Unit in Odessa also accepts Alzheimer's patients, according to Ginger Johnson, R.N. for the center.

"Patients don't need to be ambulatory to be accepted and we accept just about anyone," she said. The day care also accepts patients who are incontinent. "The only time we might turn somebody down would be if they were in danger of hurting themselves or other patients due to violent confusion."

Brenda Cleary, R.N., Ph.D, and president of the Permian Chapter of the national organization Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association, said the Seabury Center offers therapeutic activities as well as care.

"Our organization doesn't endorse any adult day care centers," Ms. Cleary said. "However, I can tell you that they are doing great work over there (Seabury Center)."

Ms. Cleary, a member of the Texas Council on Alzheimer's and Related Disorders said the council is examining long-term care in depth. Although there is no clearly established recommended ratio of staff to Alzheimer's patients, Ms. Cleary said, "In my dreams, I would like to see one trained person caring for no more than four patients at a time."

Ms. Cleary, a nurse with Texas Tech University Regional Academic Health Center at Odessa, said "excellent diagnostic services" for persons with probable Alzheimer's disease may be found at Texas Tech in Lubbock. "Dr. J. Thomas Hutton of Texas Tech is a national expert," she said. "He also was appointed by the governor to serve as the first chairman of the Texas Council on Alzheimer's and Related Disorders, which was established by a bill passed in 1987."

Ms. Nichols, a Midland Alzheimer's Family Support Group member said, "Persons who need expert diagnosis for Alzheimer's don't have to go to Dallas or some other city with all the expertise at Texas Tech."

"Although the state council is studying how we would like to advocate and establish long-term continuum care," Ms. Cleary said, "when it comes to specialized care for Alzheimer's patients in Midland and Odessa, we don't have many options."

Tips offered for selecting nursing home

Associated Press

When considering the use of restraints, weigh potential benefits such as safety and comfort against potential negatives including the loss of mobility, depression and anxiety, says the Nursing Home Coalition of New York State.

In addition, family members and nursing home residents should watch for these signs of possible abuse of physical restraints:

■ DISCOLORATION: Is there redness, bruising, blanching or welts?

■ PAIN: Do the restraints cause pain in wrists, waist, chest or feet?

■ BEHAVIOR: Is there squirming in an attempt to get comfortable? Does the resident bend forward trying to loosen restraints or rock back and forth?

People trying to choose a nursing home can gather important information by relying on their senses. Sarah Burger of the National Citizens' Coalition for Nursing Home Reform suggests considering these factors:

—SIGHT: How do resident look? Are they up, dressed, clean, chatting among themselves and staff, or slumped in a wheelchair? Do rooms look personal or institutional?

■ SOUND: Is there a general level of chatter as in a normal household? Or is there noise blaring from the TV and cries of help or "nurse"?

■ SMELL: Does the home smell good or does it smell of urine or a cover-up of heavy disinfectant? Does the food from the kitchen smell good?

■ TASTE: Eat a meal if you can. If not, ask residents how the food is. Are they eating it?

■ TOUCH: Are handrails, bathrooms, etc., clean to the touch? Residents will reach out to you. Take their hands. Are they clean, with well-lubricated skin and trimmed nails, or are the hands sticky or dry, with ragged nails?

Also ask about quality of care and payment policies, the coalition says.

By MARYLIN JOHNSON
N.Y. Times News Service

There are two schools of fashion and etiquette when a woman says her "I do's" the second time around.

According to etiquette adviser Emily Post, "she (the second-time bride) should not wear pure white, a veil, orange blossoms or a dress with a train."

According to Atlanta wedding consultant Lynda Collier, "anything goes." She said, "Brides today wear ivory, pink or white crepe or chiffon gowns with short, cropped veils. What you don't see are long, elaborate gowns with chapel trains.

"For a second bride, this dress is every bit as special as her first."

Ann Lawrence, a New Yorker who designs bridal and after-five wear, thinks circumstances should dictate dress. "For example," she said, "will this woman be getting married in a church or in a friend's home? If it's the latter, the dress shouldn't be a formal, fairy princess style. Lace separates would be a good idea. So would a silk suit in pretty soft colors. And a hat is quite appropriate.

"Also, if this is a first-time marriage for the groom-to-be, the second-time bride might want to think about a more elaborate ankle-length or tea-length chiffon dress trimmed with beading.

"Emily Post rules have gone by the wayside. If an avant-garde bride can wear black, why not white?"

So, which direction should you take? "Please yourself," said Lawrence.

Black adds contrast, drama, sophistication for bridesmaids

By MARYLIN JOHNSON
N.Y. Times News Service

While a bride is the center of attention on her special day, her maids lend colorful fashion touches to the wedding party — in addition to moral support.

"Today's women want more sophisticated looks," said Atlantan Jay Reynolds, who designs a line of bridesmaid dresses. "They don't want their dresses to look like prom gowns, and they would like to wear them again."

One way to accomplish this is to choose black, which has evolved into a fashion color for attendants. "Black poses a dramatic and sophisticated contrast to the traditional white wedding gown," said Julie Duroche, the designer for After Five. "These days, it's incredibly expensive to be a bridesmaid. You want to wear the dress again.

"Black is a perfect option, since everyone needs a black dress at some time."

If you think all-black seems more proper for funerals then weddings, opt for dresses that combine black with white or another color, such as ruby, emerald, blue or pink.

Other trends in spring- summer 1990 bridesmaid looks include:

■ Two-piece dresses. This might be an ankle- or knee-length skirt plus a buttoned jacket, small bolero and blouse or fitted peplum top. Top and bottom can be in the same color or in contrasting hues.

■ Colors and prints: In addition to black, pastels are the hot hues, including lilac, peach, pink and lemon. Hot pink, fuchsia and teal are on the wane.

N.Y. Times News Service

No wedding reception is complete without a cake. Spring and summer weddings are being planned now, and the cake is worth researching.

Pastry shops quote prices according to the number of servings and the elaborateness of the decorations.

Catering halls and hotels usually charge a flat per-person price for a wedding cake, often including it as part of a package.

Some halls and hotels allow cakes to be brought in from the outside, sometimes charging a service fee.

Prices range from $2.25 to $3 a person for a ready-made cake to more than $15 a person for an elaborate custom-decorated one.

Wedding gowns flower-covered

N.Y. Times News Service

It is a tradition in couture that the wedding dress epitomize the major theme of the collection, and Hubert de Givenchy is not the only designer who ended his collection for spring and summer with a pink wedding dress.

Yves Saint Laurent also showed a bride in pink. Lucie de la Falaise, the 16-year-old niece of his longtime assistant, LouLou de la Falaise, wore the dress, which was decorated with tea roses.

The Givenchy bridal gown was a very brief and strewn with realistic-looking flowers.

There were yellow and orange ones as well as the pink, for an enchanting style in which the entire dress was the bouquet.

Chapels thrive in Las Vegas

Thousands take lifetime gamble in neon city

By JAYNE CLARK
N.Y. Times News Service

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The bride, dressed in the palest pink with a twisted strand of pearls, was nervous. The bridegroom, clad in a brown plaid sport coat and tan slacks, was reassuring.

The minister pressed a button on a small cassette player, releasing fuzzy strains of organ music.

At the cue, the couple walked the few short feet from one end of the rose-colored, Victorian-decorated room to a strip of silver tape marking the very spot where Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan tied the knot at 3 o'clock one neon-tinged morning.

After some brief, but inspirational, words on keys to a happy marriage, the couple said their "I do's," sealed the bargain with a kiss, and heaved a huge sigh of relief.

Before they exited the chapel, however, the minister offered this nugget of post-nuptial advice: "Go see Wayne Newton," she said. "Tell him you got married today. He always does special things (in his show) for couples who get married."

Who says Las Vegas doesn't have a heart?

OK, so there are people who would insist that this glittery island in the Nevada desert is too giddy, too flashy, too chancy and. frankly, just too tacky for serious stuff like marriage.

But the image didn't dissuade more than 70,000 couples last year from taking the gamble of a lifetime in the gambling capital of the world.

LAS VEGAS marriages far outnumbered divorces, by the way, which tallied about 6,000 in 1989.

Naturally, St. Valentine's Day is the marrying-est day of all.

At the Candlelight Wedding Chapel alone, 315 couples said "We do," on Feb. 14 last year. Demand was so great, the proprietors set up three gazebos on the grounds of the mustard-colored Old West chapel, marrying off couples four at a time.

New Year's Eve runs a close second to Valentine's Day in terms of volume, with couples itching to tie the knot before the start of a new tax year. Love has a practical side, too, after all.

So does the marriage business.

Back in the 1930s, when the Nevada Legislature decreed there would be no waiting period and no blood test necessary for the marriage-minded, it did so in the free-wheeling spirit of preserving frontier freedoms.

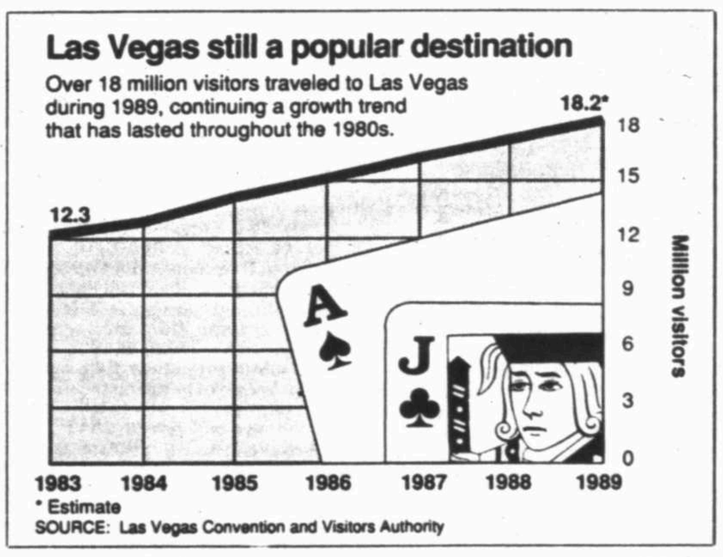

The lawmakers also knew marriage could be a moneymaker. Licenses from the Clark County Marriage License Bureau cost just $27, but the wedding trade is a thriving industry in these parts.

Getting married is fast, cheap and easy. Basic no-frills weddings go for about $45. Throw in the flowers, live organ music, deluxe photo package and other extras and you can spend hundreds.

THIS CITY is teeming with wedding chapels — more than 20 at last estimate — eager to serve in any price range.

They tend to be sentimental little structures, usually done in Western, Victorian or Little Brown Church in the Vale motifs.

They're miniaturized buildings that appear as if they were plucked from a doll-house village and don't seem big enough to accommodate real people.

CNS Graphic

Some of the names are as sentimental as the buildings. "We've Only Just Begun," "White Lace and Promises" and "Wee Kirk o' the Heather" compete for business around Las Vegas Boulevard.

Others claw their way to the top of the Yellow Pages listing with decidedly unsentimental monikers. The A-aabel Wedding Chapel wins top spot in the listings.

Still others have a quirky appeal. Always dreamed of reciting your vows while rolling down the Strip in a pink, heart-trimmed RV? Weddings on Wheels ("Have Minister Will Travel!") can make your dreams come true.

The Chapel at Villa Roma will marry you in a 32-foot, hot-tub-equipped limousine.

Charlotte Richard, owner of several Vegas wedding chapels and a minister ordained through the Grace Calvary Church of Faith, has conducted ceremonies in hot-air balloons, on horseback and on top of the slide at the Wet 'N' Wild Water Park.

BUT JUDGING from the hype, if anything will tug at the heartstrings of the love struck and lead them to a particular wedding chapel, it's star appeal.

If a celebrity — whether dead, alive or forgotten — got married in a Vegas chapel, (and in some cases, even if they didn't) a faded photograph of the event will likely grace the walls.

With its neon-ringed doves-and-hearts sign, the exterior of the Little White Chapel isn't what you'd call understated. But what really catches the eye is the provocative sign just below announcing: "Dynasty's Joan Collins. Basketball Superstar Michael Air Jordan. Who's Next?"

Inside is the framed story and photos clipped from the National Enquirer of the bosomy soap star marrying young, blond beefcake Peter Holm. Never mind that the couple ended up in a nasty divorce-court scene.

The union put the Little White Chapel on the map. Business soared, owner Richard said. She had to expand the place to accommodate demand. Bus tours still stop here.

"Joan Collins will always be very, very special to me," said Richard, a woman who wears a satin-trimmed tuxedo as casually as most people wear sweat suits.

Richard has been in the business 30 years and owns a number of chapels that have hosted their share of celebrity weddings.

MICKEY ROONEY apparently was so satisfied with the service, he got married there — on four occasions. Judy Garland had two ceremonies in chapels formerly owned by Richard. Ditto for Patty Duke.

Michael Jordan and his fiance showed up at 3 a.m. at the Little White Chapel and were out within 10 minutes.

"That's what most of the stars do," Richard said, "If they could, I think they'd get married in their car."

At the Candlelight Wedding Chapel, sandwiched between the Algiers Restaurant and Cocktails and the point where Riviera Boulevard hits the Strip, owner Gordon Gust leans back against a well-worn pew.

Muzak versions of equally well-worn top 40 hits waft through the chapel. Gust has been in the business for 17 years, but "even when you think you've seen it all, things happen," he said.

Original Lone Ranger Clayton Moore got married here about a year and a half ago. He insisted they play the William Tell Overture instead of the traditional wedding march.

When it was over, he climbed into a white Cadillac, cried, "Heigh-ho Silver!" and disappeared into the neon jungle, Gust related.

Vegas-style weddings may have some of the traditional trappings, but no one denies the place is ideal for quickie, no-frills marriages.

CHAPEL OWNERS tell tales of love at first sight and marriage at the drop of a hat. One couple met on a plane from Palm Springs, went for drinks at Caesars Palace and followed up with a wedding at her chapel, Richard recounted.

Gust tops that with a story of a young couple who met at the Peppermill Casino at 3 a.m. and got married at 6 a.m.

Obvious intoxication is the only grounds for refusal at most wedding chapels.

"I've seen brides slap the groom before they made it down the aisle," Richard said. "I saw a bride sit in that pew and not be able to go through with it because she had to go to the hospital to have a baby. That's happened several times.

"At times, I've had a real struggle with it. I've sat down with them (and asked), 'Are you sure?' and I've had them tear up the license. Others come back the next day and ask, 'Can we have this annulled?'"

Only if they can prove incest or bigamy. Marriage is easier done than undone in Nevada.

JOAN MURRAY, chapel director at Mission of the Bells, believes she gets less off-the-street business than other chapels. Her chapel is designed in an attractive southwestern style. Bottles of Andre champagne chill in the lobby cooler, and a sign prohibits the throwing of "rice, bird seed and etc."

"People have this opinion that you just walk in and, bam! you're married. Most of my people have reservations."

Not that she hasn't had a few reservations of her own about some of these couples.

"You get people who say, 'This is our second time, so it doesn't matter.' This infuriates me. I tell them, 'Well, it's your first time together.'

But just as memorable are the couples who appear destined for a lifetime together.

Take the high school sweethearts who showed up at the Candlelight Chapel one day. They'd both married other people and finally, after years apart, had rekindled their love affair. The bride was 85; the bridegroom was 88.

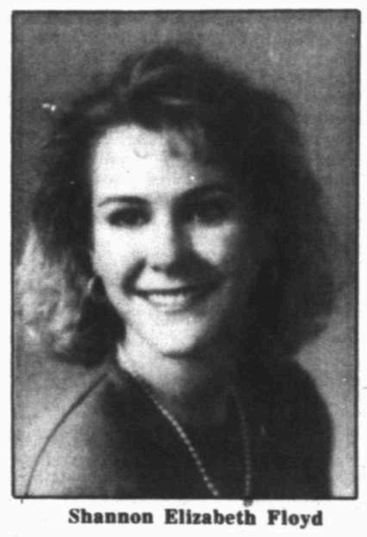

As he leaned over to sign the marriage certificate with palsied hand, he paused and exclaimed, "Oh my God! This is for a lifetime!"

Coffee perks up senior's love lives

By ROB HIAASEN
N.Y. Times News Service

And you thought the wine was for seducing and the coffee was for sobering.

Researchers at a Michigan hospital say elderly people who drink at least one cup of coffee daily might improve their sex lives. It's the stimulant caffeine that could heighten a woman's mood and a man's potency, according to the finding.

At the William Beaumont Hospital in Michigan, Dr. Ananias Diokno calls his study more of an "observation" that begs for more research.

The American Medical Association has released a summary of Diokno's initial research, part of a study on aging. About 750 Michigan residents age 60 and older were interviewed by phone for the research.

Among other disclaimers in his report, "coffee users may be more liberal in their sexual behavior," Diokno wrote.

"I suspect this is just another search for the Holy Grail," said Lake Worth, Fla., gerontologist Dr. Arthur Altbuch, but "I don't see any harm in trying it."

There's a glitch in the research, however. In the phone survey, researchers didn't ask the one question that could wither any caffeine connection: Were these sexually active elderly people drinking decaf?

"Unfortunately, we didn't ask that," Diokno said. "That could have shot us down, I suspect."

Best medical sought for elderly

By WARREN ROBAK
Copley News Service

Sometimes Catherine Bannerman feels like a sleuth in a white smock.

The mysteries she unravels are the medical ills troubling her elderly patients — part of the nation's growing senior population — who seldom exhibit the same clear symptoms as younger patients.

So Bannerman looks for the little things.

"If some little old lady comes in and says she doesn't feel quite right, it could be a whole host of things," said Bannerman, director of a senior health center. "People can feel not quite right and that can be a heart attack."

Complicating her work, many older people are reluctant to complain about their ills.

"As people get older, they expect to have aches and pains; they expect not to be able to see; they tend to assign symptoms to just getting older," Bannerman said. "So they don't complain to the doctor."

It's just one of the challenges facing physicians — indeed, the nation's entire health care system — as growing numbers of the nation's population pass the age of 65.

Senior citizens — particularly those over 80 — are the largest consumers of health care, accounting for about one-fourth of all drug sales and more than one-third of all visits to doctor offices.

"It's really the old, old who are growing fastest," said Dr. James W. Davis, chief of geriatric services at the University of California at Los Angeles Medical Center. "And they are the people who are liable to have severe health problems."

THE UNPRECEDENTED growth will challenge the nation's health care system to develop better treatments. And it will put pressure on Medicare and other government aid programs to pay for that care, experts say.

"We will be spending a lot more on this group in the future," Davis said.

Despite the challenges posed by an aging population, most people over the age of 65 do not require an abundance of medical services, experts say. These younger seniors are poised to enjoy retirement and have taken care to maintain their health.

"Most people between the ages of 65 and 75 have good health and don't have the problems of the people who are in their 80s," Davis said.

This group is concerned with watching cholesterol levels and preventing osteoporosis. They get regular checkups and take part in health screenings for things like colon cancer that can be cured if caught early.

"We need to continue to stress to the older patients the importance of exercise and maintaining activity," Davis said. "All the preventative measures — losing weight, moderating diet — are just as successful in older age as in younger people. I have been very successful in getting my patients to stop smoking."

While older people face unique health problems such as Alzheimer's disease and osteoporosis, most of their ills are the same as those that face younger people — heart disease, diabetes, high blood pressure.

But often the illnesses are harder to spot and more difficult to treat.

OLDER PEOPLE seldom develop fevers when they get an infection. There is a high incidence of "silent" heart attacks that strike without the dramatic symptoms seen in younger victims.

"You can't rely on seeing the same symptoms as you do in younger patients," Bannerman said.

Once a problem is diagnosed, designing an effective treatment is more difficult. Older people are more sensitive to medication and more susceptible to unwanted side effects.

"If you are a doctor who is used to dosing younger people, you may have difficulty shifting gears," Bannerman said. "The older patients tend to have at least one or two medical problems. You have to watch out for interaction between the medicine."

Physicians and patients often face more ethical dilemmas deciding how aggressively to treat a chronic disease.

It's clear that a 65-year-old with an early-stage cancer should be given all available treatments, doctors say. But what about an advanced cancer in an 85-year-old who suffers from two other chronic diseases?

Davis says physicians have to be wary of subtle prejudices that may routinely keep them from treating elderly patients as vigorously as younger ones.

"The challenge for physicians is to maintain the proper attitude about treating illness in older people," Davis said. "Every case is different, but in general we should not dismiss our patients. Physicians need to take an aggressive approach to treating an illness."

WHILE THERE is much to learn about treating illness in old age, Davis says medicine has advanced its practices over the past decade.

Training programs for internists and family medicine doctors, the two physician groups that provide most health care for seniors, now include special emphasis on the needs of the elderly.

The number of gerontologists, doctors who specialize in senior health care, also has grown. But care of most seniors will continue to be provided by family doctors.

Both Bannerman and Davis expect to see more centers created to focus exclusively on the problems of the elderly.

The medical care provided at such centers is no different from that offered by other physicians, Bannerman said. But the center is set up to meet the unique needs of older patients.

Appointments are longer because it takes seniors more time to undress and complete a testing regime. The staff spends more time questioning patients about their home life.

"You may know everything about their palpitations and their headaches, but you do you know whether they can climb up the three steps to their front door?" Bannerman said.

Often decisions about an older person's health have to be made in conjunction with other family members.

And as federal officials have moved to curb spending on Medicare, the government insurance for seniors, families have had to absorb an increasing burden of caring for sick relatives.

It is more difficult to put Medicare patients in the hospital unless they have a specific problem. No longer can doctors order elderly patients into the hospital because they seem to be dwindling away.

"It used to be you could put someone like that in the hospital for a couple weeks and do a work-up to figure out what's wrong," Bannerman said. "It would help give their family a rest. But you just can't justify that anymore."

MOST EXPERTS believe that the biggest issue confronting the nation is an expected jump in the need for nursing home care as more people live into their 80s.

About one in four people over the age of 85 is in a nursing home. The nation already spends $38 billion a year on nursing home care, most of it for the elderly.

"There will be a lot more nursing home care in the future," Davis said. "And that is going to cost a lot more money. We need to learn more about what is good care in the nursing home."

Some conditions, illnesses more common among elderly

One downside of aging is the host of illnesses that can beset seniors. What is encouraging, however, are the continuing medical advances in the prevention and treatment of such age-related ailments as diabetes, osteoporosis and arthritis.

ARTHRITIS

Arthritis strikes one in seven Americans (and not all of them are seniors). The pain it causes can, in many cases, be controlled through medication, diet and exercise.

The most common forms of arthritis are osteoarthritis, also called degenerative joint disease, and rheumatoid arthritis. Both forms can limit mobility of the joints in addition to being painful.

While drugs and changes in lifestyle are traditional ways to cope with the disease, researchers are finding that exercise — not inactivity — makes a dramatic difference in how well arthritis sufferers function. A combination of isometric and isotonic movements have been found particularly effective.

If you are diagnosed with arthritis, work with your doctor to develop a regular, low-impact exercise program as part of your treatment.

DIABETES

There are actually two types of diabetes. Type I, insulin-dependent diabetes, is the more serious form and usually strikes before adolescence.

Type II, non-insulin-dependent diabetes, accounts for about 90 percent of all diabetes patients and is the type that concerns seniors. It can often be treated through diet and weight control (85 percent of type II diabetes patients are overweight).

Exercise also is an important element in controlling type II diabetes. According to Mature Health, exercise not only helps weight loss and control, it also slows the rise of blood sugar after eating and helps the body utilize insulin.

ALZHEIMER'S

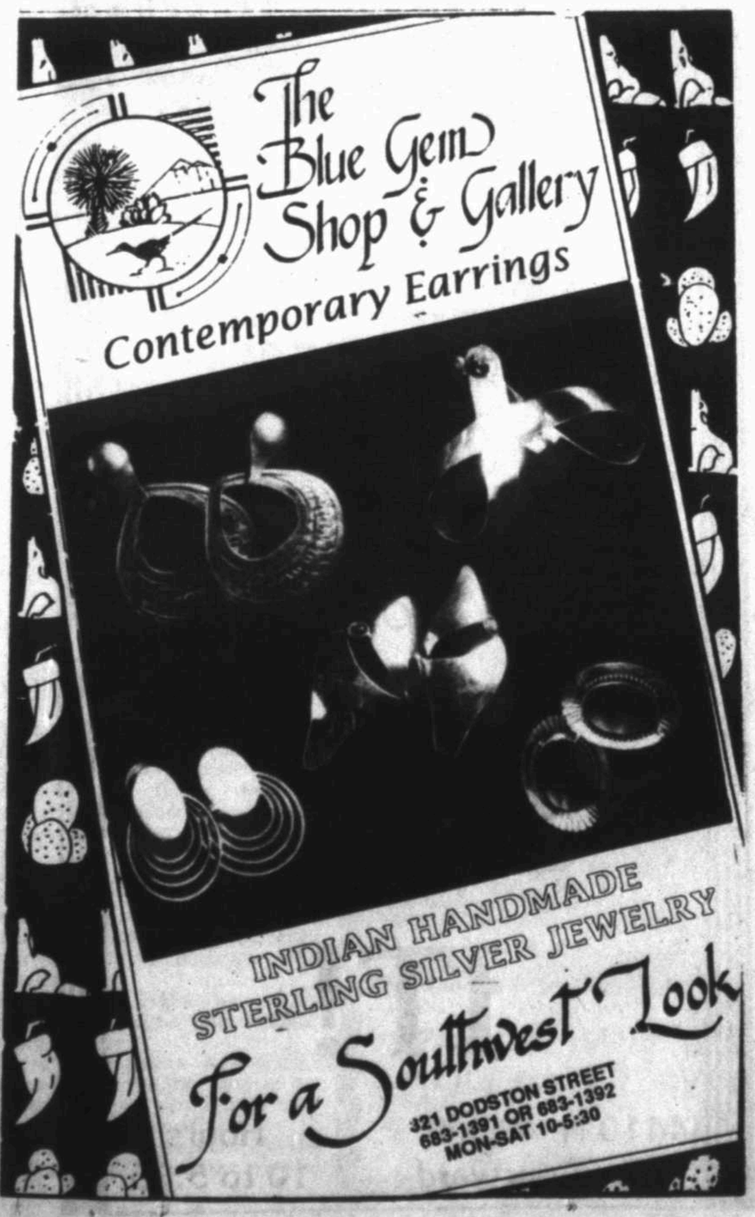

Alzheimer's disease is a particularly frightening and perplexing illness that is the fourth leading cause of death among adults.

At this point, researchers do not know what causes it. Theories range from a chromosome imbalance (similar to Down's Syndrome patients who have an extra chromosome) to an enzyme deficiency.

Difficult to diagnose (the diagnosis can only really be confirmed by autopsy after the patient's death), Alzheimer's is not preventable or curable. A progressive, degenerative disease, it results in loss of memory and radical changes of behavior.

The disease also places a tremendous emotional and financial strain on the patient's family. More information and services are available to help the families cope.

Unusual home offers alternative to seniors

By JENNIFER McNULTY

SAN ANSELMO, Calif. (AP) — Maggie Wiel is 80, nearly blind and can't live on her own. Yet she bristles at talk of a nursing home.

But Wiel lives at Tam House, a communal home on a tree-lined street in the shadow of Mount Tamalpais, with seven other women and two men. Its directors call Tam House an idea whose time has come; residents are simply thankful it exists.

"It's perfect for someone like me. I needed to be around people but I needed to be independent and on my own," said Dorothy Wright, 70, who moved in 18 months ago after separating from her husband of 46 years.

Now Wright spends her time gardening, playing bingo, visiting nearby senior centers and hiking six miles a day. "It's great to be able to walk to a good trout fishing lake from your home," she said.

Charlotte Mulford, 79, came to Tam House after staying with a cousin on his houseboat in Sausalito. Now she wouldn't feel comfortable going back. "If I didn't live here, I couldn't afford to live anywhere else," she said.

The 7-year-old, private, non-profit home owned and operated by the Ross Valley Ecumenical Housing Association, offers more independence than a board-and-care home, while fostering companionship and support. Although there is a waiting list, there hasn't always been. Communal living isn't for everyone.

IT TOOK more than a year to fill the six-bedroom main house and four-bedroom annex, said Norma Dougherty, RVEHA executive director. "It was a new idea. Shared living was not a real popular idea with seniors."

Many wanted their own apartment and were reluctant to squeeze a lifetime's belongings into a bedroom, Dougherty said. And for many, Tam House also is the first time they've lived with a group since they were youngsters.

Tam House is the product of a group of local church members who started meeting in 1975 to discuss senior housing. In 1980, they found the house, which was bought and renovated with federal development funds.

Residents must be at least 55 and able to live independently when they move in. Rents range from $400 to $425 a month, including dinner and food for do-it-yourself breakfasts. Operating costs were $78,780 in 1988, Dougherty said.

Advocates for the elderly expect shared group housing to become increasingly common among seniors. "It's very common among young people, it's just not been an acceptable mode of living among old people until recently," said Ellen Caulfield, director of the Marin County Agency on Aging. "I think it is an extraordinarily viable concept but it takes the right mix of people."

Last year, for the first time, California expanded its senior housing program to include funds for such shared group residences. For those who don't mind paring down, group housing offers a balance of privacy and company.

MULFORD'S TIDY room disguises the fact that she has boxes and crates under the bed, jammed in the closet and covered with afghans in the corner. Little things can rankle, she admitted, laughing at her own annoyance when others forget to refill the ice cube tray or replace a roll of toilet paper.

But the good outweighs the bad, she said. Tam House is within walking distance of shopping, restaurants, entertainment and public transit.

Although residents must be independent, Tam House is small enough to accommodate changes. Wiel's glaucoma has reduced her vision since she moved in so "that they wouldn't take me this way now." But residents help her with chores, and all agree she is coping remarkably well with her handicap.

Otto Springer, 81, is a senior member of the house, having moved in in 1983. Boxes of files create a maze-like pattern on his floor, and books and more files practically spill off the bookshelves. A portable computer hums in the corner. Springer is writing his memoirs.

He is a survivor of German concentration camps and was a spy for the British Secret Service who worked to rescue Jews during World War II. He was imprisoned for refusing to divorce his Jewish wife, who escaped. Family photos hang on the wall beside framed commendations from Israel and California.

Although his two daughters have each offered to share their homes, Springer will never accept. "I would have the feeling that I am burdening someone. We have a wonderful relationship but I wouldn't want to encroach on their privacy. Even if you have a big house, it's a problem to have old people around."

ALTHOUGH ONLY one person, who had a drinking problem, has been evicted, Tam House residents are sensitive to the ruptures that conflicts can cause.

Springer said he is sometimes bothered by noise but uses earplugs rather than complain because "it would establish a certain tension."

"This is 10 crotchety old people," said Teddy McDonald, 81. "We're all set in our ways before we get here. It's simply amazing how we all get along."

House sharing creates companionship

AP LaserPhoto

Jack and Ann O'Connell (left and center) sit in the kitchen of their Philagelphia home recently with Janice Collins (right). Ms. Collins now lives in the O'Connell home as part of a house sharing program.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jack and Ann O'Connell feel much more secure in their home, and Janice Collins can afford a car while she saves for a home of her own because she shares the O'Connells' big, comfortable house.

"It's not a hardship, it's a convenience," said O'Connell, 77. "You can leave your cats and go on a trip and Jan will take care of them.

"Besides, in this neighborhood, if you leave a house empty it'll be really empty when you come back."

It's an irony of modern life that people who spent decades paying for a house are finding it's too much to handle after the kids are gone. Others spend huge chunks of their incomes for a nice place, or pay less and live in a dump.

COMMUNITY GROUPS around the country have an answer: shared housing programs involving individuals or groups. There were 50 programs in the United States in 1981; now there are more than 400 in 42 states, according to the Shared Housing Resource Center, an 8-year-old Philadelphia-based umbrella organization.

It's an idea whose time has gone and come back. Americans rented rooms through the beginning of this century, before housing programs, zoning laws and the postwar building boom brought a decline in the practice.

The first "match-up" program for individuals in the United States was Project Homeshare, started in 1953 in Hartford, Conn. The oldest American group shared residence is Share-a-Home, founded in 1969 in Winter Park, Fla.

Anyone can hang a "Room for Rent" sign in the window, but people who use a match-up program want it to screen applicants and keep tabs on the situation.

"I would be afraid to advertise in the newspapers because I wouldn't know what I was getting," a 74-year-old widow told consultant Carol S. Schreter of Baltimore.

"Working with the public 40 years you learn to size people up," said a 57-year-old disabled homeowner. "But I wouldn't interview strangers in my home."

MS. COLLINS, 40, a business student at La Salle University, priced apartments in the Germantown neighborhood at $400-$500 a month before she was matched with the O'Connells. She pays $175 a month for their third floor.

"I have a very tight budget, but I'm saving for my own home. I couldn't do that and afford my car if I had to pay that kind of rent."

Ms. Collins moved in in 1986. In 1987, she did more than feed the cats; when Mrs. O'Connell suffered a heart attack, "Jan drove me to the hospital. We got there right away, and it sure was better than waiting for an ambulance."

Philadelphia Match, a non-profit homesharing service, screens tenants and landlords. "It's not for everyone," said Susan Levin, director of the group's Delaware Valley Division. The agency makes it clear it doesn't want people who can't pay or work for their rent. Other ineligibles are those needing extensive care, people who require supervision or medication, non-recovered alcoholics or substance abusers and those in need of emergency shelter.

"They can make a thorough investigation on both sides and ask a whole lot of insulting questions, because they're not going to have to live with you afterward," O'Connell said.

RENTERS AND homeowners both pay a $5 application fee and $25 matching fee. Commercial "finders" who locate apartments for people often charge much more. Philadelphia Match recommends a two-week trial before the parties negotiate and sign a lease. Rent can be cash or a combination of cash and services.

Even less traditional are group households where an average of eight people share a home owned by a community organization.

Philadelphia Match opened St. George's Manor April 17 last year. The 103-year-old remodeled church rectory offers six bedrooms and a shared kitchen, living room and bathroom space. Residents must be at least 62 years old or disabled and have an annual income under $12,800.

Government-subsidized rent is 30 percent of each resident's income. The Shared Housing Resource Center estimates the average cost per unit in a group residence is $6,250, a bargain compared to other forms of housing.

A 1984 survey found the mean age of owners was 68 and half were paying more than 40 percent of their incomes for housing. The mean age of renters was 50, and many were middle-class and between jobs or at the end of a marriage.

For homeowners, the biggest advantage was financial, closely followed by companionship. Saving money was the attraction for two-thirds of the renters.

IN GROUP households, financial advantage was a relatively minor factor. Nearly two-thirds said "having somebody around" in the event of an emergency of to help with chores was what they liked best, and 20 percent saw their main advantage as safety in numbers.

Among the disadvantages, household management issues led the downside for landlords and tenants. These included rules on setting the thermostat, keeping the kitchen clean and not making noise at odd hours.

In group homes, personality clashes were the major disadvantage. Complaints included arguments, too much talking, criticism, etc. Loss of privacy was less of a problem; in fact, 45 percent reported no loss of privacy at all.

"You can shut your door with non-relatives," said one agency client. "They don't need to know where you are going. They don't get so involved in your affairs."

Maggie Kuhn, founder of the Grey Panthers, has been sharing her house for years. She says it creates a "family of choice."

Don't wash veggies in soap, experts say

Copley News Service

Don't use soap to wash the pesticides off your fruits and vegetables.

That warning comes from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which claims that soap can leave residues that may be harmful.

The health effects of eating soap every day are unknown, but animal studies suggest that it may lead to intestinal problems.

The best way to clean your broccoli and carrots is to rinse them with water.

Discovery caused by broken freezer

Copley News Service

Forty-three years ago, Vincent Schaeffer, a scientist employed by General Electric in Schenectady, N.Y., noticed his home freezer was thawing out. So quick-thinking Vince tossed some dry ice inside it to cool things down.

Next thing you know he had a full-fledged miniature snowstorm going on in his freezer.

Vincent soon discovered, along with fellow researcher Bernard Vonnegut, brother of author Kurt Vonnegut, that crystals of silver iodide reacted the same way in his freezer as dry ice did.

Thus, Schaeffer became the father of cloud-seeding, which is still a mysterious practice but is now regularly used in several places around the world to encourage more rainfall.

For some reason, the public is highly skeptical whether cloud-seeding really causes more rainfall or not. That may be because it's difficult to judge if small increases in rain are caused by natural forces or human influence.

Still, in dry spots like the Southwestern United States, just a single percentage point increase in annual run-off into public reservoirs would be enough to pay for an entire cloud-seeding program.

Nursing home restraints a concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Harmon used to spend each day tied to a chair in a nursing home, sometimes in a stupor, sometimes pleading for release.

"They'd just sit there all day long, everybody tied in restraints," said Mabel Harmon, who moved her 70-year-old husband out in August. "I don't think he would be living now if he hadn't gotten out of there."

Harmon's situation was not unique. Two out of five residents of American nursing homes routinely are tied to their beds or chairs, ostensibly to prevent injury. Yet concern is mounting that restraints may do more harm than good.

Harmon now is at Stapeley in Germantown, a Philadelphia home that is one of the growing number in the United States using no restraints.

"Since he's been over at Stapeley, he'a a completely different person," Mrs. Harmon said. "He does what he wants to do. He answers your questions. He walks up and down the hall. He goes into the lounge."

Nursing homes say they use restraining devices such as lap belts, wheelchairs with locking trays, and vests tied to beds or chairs mainly to keep residents from falling or wandering away and to control aggressive behavior.

Critics say restraints often are used for convenience and seldom eliminate the risk of injury. They say restraints can create problems including emotional withdrawal, depression, injuries incurred trying to get free, strangulation, constipation, incontinence, pressure sores, loss of bone mass, weakened muscles, decreased ability to walk and eventual invalidism.

"We have to ask ourselves: What price safety?" said Jill Blakeslee, director of health services for The Kendal Corp., a non-profit Pennsylvania corporation governed by Quakers that has pioneered the concept of restraint-free nursing homes in the United States. "Safe and quality care can be given to our frail old people without tying them to their beds and their chairs."

KENDAL AND THE Senate Committee on Aging this month sponsored a symposium, "Untie the Elderly: Quality Care Without Restraints," where Blakeslee urged: "Think about yourself as you grow old. Is that what you would want?"

Michael Plevyak's family chose to place his 74-year-old mother, Genevieve, who has Alzheimer's disease, at Friends Hall in West Chester, Pa., because it uses no restraints.

"The only thing she desires to do is move about and walk," he said. "That's why we're so thrilled that she is in a facility that allows her to engage in the one activity she gets any joy out of."

Forty-one percent of nursing home residents were restrained in 1988, up from 25 percent in 1977, federal surveys show. Thirty-five people in U.S. and Canadian nursing homes strangled or suffocated because of restraints from 1980 to 1987 and two burned to death trying to escape by lighting their restraints, the Press-Telegram of Long Beach, Calif., reported in a 1987 investigation.

In U.S. and Canadian nursing homes studied over the last decade, restraint rates ranged from 25 percent to 85 percent, Neville Strumpf and Lois Evans of the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing reported in the January 1989 issue of the Journal of the American Geriatrics Society.

Family members initially may be horrified that a relative is restrained, but medical professionals "can talk people into a big variety of things that afterwards they must wonder about," said Lynne Mitchell-Pederson, a nurse at St. Boniface General Hospital in Winnipeg, Manitoba. St. Boniface has nearly eliminated restraints since a patient strangled in 1981.

ON THE OTHER hand, there are attorneys and family members "wanting and willing to sue if a home doesn't use protective devices to protect the safety of the resident," said Fred Watson, administrator of the Christian City Convalescent Center in Atlanta. "We've got to get over that hurdle."

Christian City was restraint-free when it opened 12 years ago but began using the devices under pressure from insurers, doctors and families, Watson said. It now restrains 20 percent to 30 percent of its patients, but is reducing that.

The widespread use of restraints is widely attributed at least in part to nursing homes' fear of being sued, but some attorneys say reliance on restraints as a shield against litigation is largely unneeded.

A study of cases found that use of restraints led to more successful lawsuits than non-use, said Philadelphia attorney Alan Reeve Hunt, chairman of Kendal's board. For example, an Alabama jury in June held a nursing home liable for $2.5 million in the strangulation of an 86-year-old woman in a restraint vest that was on backwards. The ruling is under appeal.

Restraints "became a standard of care without ever being tested," said Sarah Burger, a consultant for the National Citizens' Coalition for Nursing Home Reform. "Everybody just assumed they did good."

GROWING CONCERN about negative effects and recognition that restraints don't eliminate legal risk are spurring a reduction in their use. Thirteen U.S. nursing homes are known to be restraint-free, according to Kendal. Tough new federal rules take effect in October, and Florida has untied 3,000 people since August.

"There's a contest going on to see who's going to be the first restraint-free facility," said Florida licensing director Connie Cheren.

"This is not a movement in its infancy," said Nancy Dubler, an attorney in the Department of Social Medicine at Montefiore Hospital and Medical Center in New York. "This is a discussion on the verge of bringing change."

The new federal rules ban "physical restraints imposed or psychoactive drugs administered for purposes of discipline or convenience, and not required to treat the resident's medical symptoms." Nursing homes for the first time will have to "show that they have tried every other conceivable means to solve the problem," Burger said.

Removing restraints requires creative, individualized alternatives, said Beryl Goldman, Kendal associate director for health services. For example, doors that sound a buzzer when opened might be installed on wanderers' rooms, brightly colored tape in front of exits helps discourage confused residents from leaving, and rocking chairs can soothe residents who need to be in motion.

One home was able to avoid restraining an 85-year-old woman who constantly paced with a doll but needed rest so her ulcers could heal, said Joanne Rader, director of mental health at Benedictine Nursing Facility in Mount Angel, Ore.

STAFF MEMBERS filled the doll with seven pounds of birdseed. "Now, when she's walking with the doll, she has a very heavy baby. So they said, 'Oh, that baby's so heavy. Why don't you sit down and put your feet up?' That's a heck of a lot more fun than tying a person down," Rader said.

St. Boniface's Mitchell-Pederson cited the case of an Alzheimer's patient who disrupted meals and stole food. "When we asked, 'Could he be hungry?' and doubled his calorie intake, he stopped stealing food. ... In this case it was his diet that needed attention; restraints compounded the problem."

An 85-year-old woman restrained in a chair for fear she would wander off and fall down the stairs was given rubber-soled shoes instead of slippers and "was thus allowed to wander at will throughout the building," she said.

"There's tremendous excitement out there ... toward developing and implementing a non-restraint philosophy," Rader said. "It's no fun to be the one who has to tie someone down when they don't want to be tied down."

Some nursing home officials, however, caution that there are cases where there are no clear alternatives to restraints.

"While we all can agree that overuse or wholesale use of restraints is not desirable, it is equally wrong to say no restraints should ever be used," said David Mettler of Hillhaven Corp., which runs 345 nursing homes in 38 states.

"This is not a black-and-white issue," Mettler said. "Sometimes it may even be necessary to restrict the rights of an individual resident in order to provide for the health and safety of others."

Alzheimer's patient calmer, happier without restraints

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Keith Grant never considered he'd ever have to choose a nursing home for his wife, an active, intelligent 52-year-old mother of five.

Then Virginia Grant's personality began to change, and months of tests pointed to Alzheimer's disease. After three years of home care, Mrs. Grant's behavior became so erratic her family made the painful decision in 1985 to place her in Tel Hai Retirement Community in Honey Brook, Pa.

"She would wander off, pick up things to eat anywhere, out on the road, hitchhike, stop cars," Grant recalled. When family members visited, however, they were troubled to find that more often than not, Mrs. Grant was strapped down to keep her from wandering and eating foreign objects.

"She seemed very upset and so were we," said her daughter, Susan McTyier. "Mom no longer was able to speak but she would often look very angry or grumpy whenever we visted. Dad often made the comment, 'It looks as if she's saying, Why are you doing this to me?' "

IN JANUARY 1989 Tel Hai launched a program to reduce its use of restraints, cutting the rate from 43 percent of patients to less than 10 percent. Confused residents who once were tied down now are free to stroll an outdoor "wandering garden"; those who were restrained because they were unsteady on their feet have been fitted with sturdy walking shoes.

"I remember from my nursing school days, it was considered a standard of good care to restrain residents who might fall and injure themselves," said assistant administrator Betty Petersheim. "But now there's been a bubbling up from within the health-care providers saying there's a better way."

The resulting new freedom has improved Mrs. Grant's demeanor and that of other residents, Ms. McTyier said at a recent symposium on restraints.

"She's calmed down visibly and we've also noticed an overall happier attitude in the whole facility. ... "

WHEELIN' & DEALIN'

"Billie Sol is a silver-tongued devil who can still sell you your own shoes and make you feel grateful you bought them."

— Stephen Pegues

In his Pulizter Prize winning novel "Lonesome Dove," Texan Larry McMurtry wrote that "A man who slows down for snakes might as well walk." Another born and bred Texan, musician and film maker Stephen Pegues allows that "A man who won't try something new may as well go home and drink a beer."

Pegues should know. When he's not producing or performing his eclectic "psychobilly jazz" (a fusion of country, rock, blues and jazz), or producing albums with the likes of Gregg Allman under the guise of his production label Xalapeno Musicworks, he is scrambling to get his latest film "King of the Wheeler-Dealers" produced.

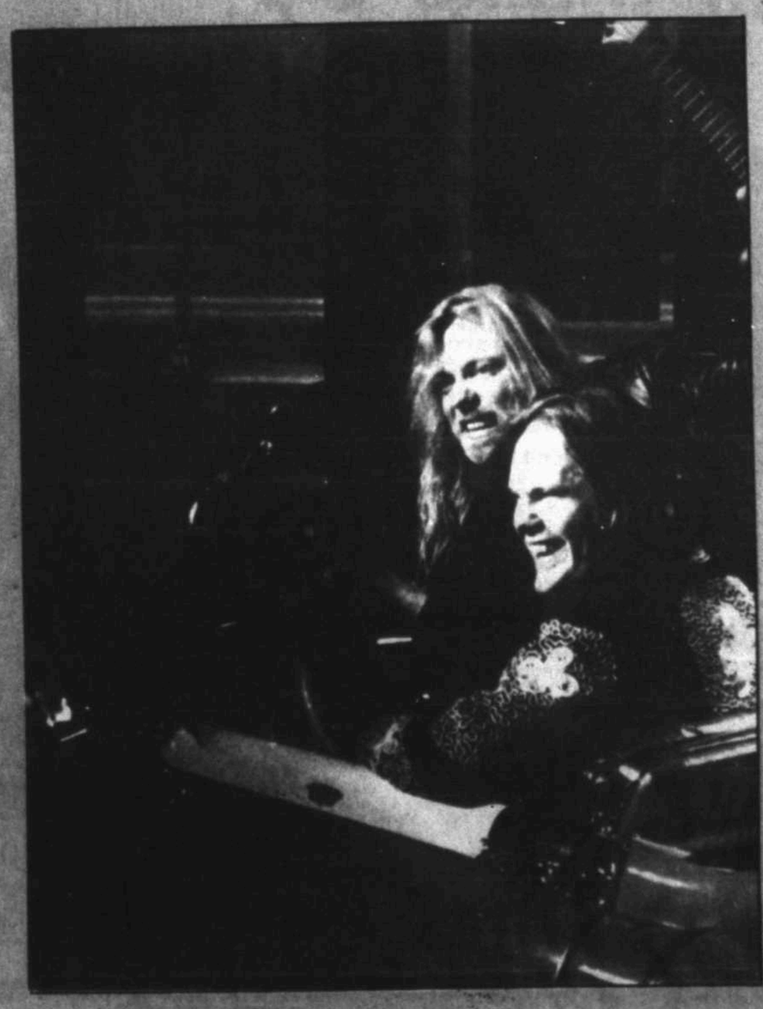

The black-and-white film — which will be partially filmed in Midland's environs — will be based loosely on the trials and tribulations of Billie Sol Estes, the one-time fertilizer and farming tycoon whose name became a national synonym for "swindler."

THE FLAMBOYANT TEXAS financer's troubles with the law began in the '60s when he borrowed money using 33,500 nonexistent fertilizer tanks as security, according to Associated Press reports. Like many American entrepreneurs trying to make money fast, Estes planned to make the deal pan out by eventually obtaining the tanks, but time ran out, and his dubious deal landed him in prison.

Later, in 1979, he was convicted of mail fraud and conspiracy to conceal assets. The convictions meant he had violated the terms of his parole, which forbade him to promote his own or other people's deals, and he went to

Estes puts blame on deal-making compulsion

When music and film producer Stephen Pegues of Chicago began planning to film "The King of the Wheeler-Dealers" — based loosely on the trials and tribulations of the flamboyant Texas financer Billie Sol Estes — he didn't realize just how timely his film would be.

Pegues, who hopes to begin filming the low budget black-and-white film in Midland in October, has known Estes since his childhood which he spent in the East Texas farming community of Mineola. "Billie Sol was a big proponent of the farmer," Pegues said.

Estes' farming endeavors began his financial rise in 1940 at the tender age of 15. He wrote President Roosevelt a letter asking if there was anything the government could to to help the drought-stricken farmers of Callahan County, according to the November issue of "Texas Monthly" magazine. After Estes received a prompt reply concerning the government's surplus grain for sale, he borrowed $3,500 from his bank and bought 17 train cars of grain which he sold to his neighbors. By the time he was 18, he had made $38,000 on various business ventures selling livestock.

It was one of Estes' farming deals which initiated his troubles with the law. In the '60s, Estes borrowed money using 33,500 nonexistent fertilizer tanks as security, and swindled several companies out of $24 million, according to Associated Press reports.

ALTHOUGH ESTES said he intended to "make good" on the deal, and eventually acquire the tanks, time ran out and his finagling landed him in prison. These unlawful moves also cost him his friendship with then President Lyndon B. Johnson. Estes was a Johnson confidant and financial contributor dating back to Johnson's U.S. senate days, according to several sources.

Before his financial empire collapsed, creditors claimed Estes owed them a total of $38 million. At one time, the federal government had $21 million in tax liens against him for income on the nonexistent fertilizer tanks. Before his empire crumbled, Estes reported it was worth between $150-400 million, which included mineral rights to a vast but deep reservoir of natural gas around his palatial home in Pecos.

"Not many people can handle money," Estes said in "Texas Monthly." "Me, I've never cared about money. I love putting deals together and watching them run. For some people, money is death. You might as well give them a loaded forty-five pistol and point it right at their head."

IN HIS DAUGHTER'S 1983 book "Billie Sol," Pam Estes recalled her "picturebook life" in Pecos as one filled with extravagances. "Like rich people everywhere, we live in a big house run by efficient servants," she wrote, reliving a memory. "I am in my lilac bedroom designed for a princess, and even though I'm not old enough to have a driver's license, my own purple Cadillac is downstairs in its parking place waiting for me. Washington politicians have just flown in for one of Daddy's 'two-oxen' barbecues."

Estes' empire collapsed after his second conviction. In 1979, Estes was convicted of mail fraud and conspiracy to conceal assets. The convictions meant he had violated the terms of his parole, which forbade him to promote his own or other people's deals, and he went to prison a second time.

THE COLORFUL TEXAN was freed from prison the first time in 1971 after serving six years of a 15-year term. His parole was revoked and he was imprisoned for 10 more years in 1979 at Big Spring Federal Prison Camp.

Upon his 1983 release from Big Spring's Federal Prison Camp, Estes said that he wasn't a criminal, that making business deals was a compulsion. "It's just a compulsive thing," Estes said in previous Associated Press reports. "I'm just one bad deal away from spending my life in prison."

Recent press reports suggest Estes may have found that deal. The November issue of "Texas Monthly" magazine linked Estes with a scam involving stolen blueprints for large trailers used to transport cargo containers. Ironically, after just completing parole, Estes was indicted with five other persons and a defunct corporation on charges of stealing trade secrets Nov. 28, 1989.

Pegues, who has followed Estes' exploits for many years, says the media has given Estes a raw deal, especially during his 1962 court trial in Smith County, which Pegues has documented on film. "The trial was a real media circus," Pegues said. Estes came before a judicial hearing in Smith County after a change of venue from Reeves County, some 500 miles west. He received the change of venue after a Reeves County judge had allowed his original trial to be photographed and televised.

BUT ACCORDING TO several accounts, the later trial was even worse than the first. A New York Times story described the pre-trial hearing as: "A television motor van, big as an intercontinental bus, was parked outside the courthouse and the second-floor courtroom was a forest of equipment. Two television cameras have been set up inside the bar and four more marked cameras were aligned just outside the gates. With photographers roaming unchecked about the courtroom, Estes' attorney moved that all cameras be excluded from the courtroom. As the attorney spoke, a cameraman walked behind the judge's bench and took a picture."

Fair trials or not, Estes was convicted and appears likely to be convicted again. The former Texas tycoon admits the tempation to go out on a limb in business ventures is too great.

One of his "12 Steps to Getting Rich," reported in his daughter's book is: "Take risks and borrow to the limit to back your ventures. The best fruit is at the end of the limb."

The problem is: going out on the limb for Estes usually results in an investigation. "I suppose I'll be under investigation about one thing or another for the rest of my life," Estes said in the Texas Monthly interview, "... I guess it's my destiny."

Restaurateur leaves stove to become film producer

N.Y. Times News Service

Everybody knows about celebrities — actors and film makers prominent among them — who decide it would be fun to run a restaurant.

This is about a restaurateur who decided to become a film producer.

His name is Len Allison. For 15 years, he has been chef, director and owner (with his wife, Karen) of Huberts, a three-star restaurant at Park Avenue and 63d Street.

If you had been listening in the kitchen sometime in the past eight months, you might have heard Allison spicing the preparation of the cuisine with a bit of storytelling.

First Allison told his kitchen staff the story of "The Playmaker," the eminent Australian writer Thomas Keneally's novel about a lieutenant in the Australian prison colony charged with celebrating the king's birthday by putting on a performance of George Farquhar's 1706 play "The Recruiting Officer."

More recently, Allison narrated "To Asmara," a new Keneally novel about four people who make a pilgrimage into the rebellious Ethiopian province of Eritrea, whose famine-ridden people have been locked in civil war for 30 years.

Allison said he came across "The Playmaker" about eight months ago while browsing in a bookstore, "and from the moment I picked up the book, I just got lost in it and I was totally fascinated by it."

ALLISON DECIDED he would love to turn it into a movie. But he discovered that rights to it were held by Merchant Ivory Productions. Then came "To Asmara."

When it was published, Allison said: "I ran out and got the book and read it and wanted to know if I would feel about it as powerfully as I did about 'The Playmaker' and whether it would move me as deeply and make me want to go ahead. I found it to be everything 'The Playmaker' was and a little more."

Explaining his fascination with "To Asmara," he said: "It appealed very strongly to my political side. This book is probably the first book where the underlying story is about the political nature of world hunger."

Now it is only fair here to note that Allison has not spent all his life cooking.

He pointed out that he holds a doctorate from New York University in medieval and Elizabethan literature, that he has a master's degree in education and that he had spent some time making documentaries — one on the teaching of writing in colleges and the other, titled "The Late Show," about a cheap clothing store on the Lower East Side.

It was while trying to raise money for the completion of "The Late Show," he said, that he and his wife opened a restaurant on weekends in their home in Brooklyn. "And it became a case of the tail wagging the dog," he said.

Allison is 55 years old now. "I was probably feeling at this point in my career that I wanted to pull together some other elements of my background," he said.

ALLISON CALLED Keneally's agents in London, seeking the right to film "To Asmara." "And they said no one had it yet, but I certainly didn't stand a chance," Allison recalled. "They weren't that blunt, of course, but I was clearly a dark horse. A number of people were interested in the rights."

Allison persisted. In mid-October he wrote what he said he hoped was a moving letter, which was passed on to Keneally.

Five days later, he said, Keneally called. They met and had lunch (at Huberts, of course).

A week or so later, Allison said, they spent a few days in Albany, N.Y., where Keneally's friend William Kennedy, the author (and adapter for the screen) of "Ironweed," encouraged Keneally to join forces with Allison. "He felt an independent producer would be more faithful to the integrity of the book," Allison said.

In December, he added, a contract was signed.

Allison said he and Keneally will produce the film, and Keneally is now working on the adaptation. "We hope to have a film script we believe in before the end of the summer," Allison said.

The next step is to find a director.

BUT IF THREE-STAR film makers can fail at running restaurants, what makes a three-star restaurateur believe he can succeed at producing a film?

"Maybe it is this particular restaurateur," Allison said. "As a literary person, I'm very much in touch with what Tom is writing about in characterization, narrative and plot. I understand the themes of the book.

"The other side of this is, as a documentary film maker and then as a restaurateur, there is a tremendous similarity between a film shoot and an evening in the restaurant. Everything has to be organized before you begin the film. Everything has to be gathered, brought together. Everybody's job has to be completely understood and ready.

"I've got the same situation nightly in the restaurant. Both are high-energy performance. Here in the restaurant, I'm in charge of 40 or 50 people nightly. Everything has to go like clockwork, and there's a performance, and it all has to look effortless.

"So I think there's a comparable quality between the two worlds if you're a hands-on person like myself."

According to ratings issued by the National Coalition on Television Violence, most violent films released in 1989 were action-adventure movies in the style popularized by Sylvester Stallone's "Rambo." Rambo-like characters were given high violence ratings by the national anti-violence organization.

Surprisingly, the animated film "All Dogs Go to Heaven" was given high violence rankings by a national organization. The rating was the result of every "push and shove" being given a numerical rating.

Actor Robert Englund, Freddy Krueger of the "Nightmare on Elm Street" movies, was labeled the year's most "violent and socially irresponsible actor" by the National Coalition on Television Violence.

Group rates most violent degrading films, stars

By DAN MORAN
Copley News Service

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — As film genres go, it appears the Rambo-Commando movie can crank out more acts of violence per hour than the average horror flick, according to ratings issued by a national anti-violence group.

The National Coalition on Television Violence (NCTV), a Champaign-based organization, evaluated films for their social merits based on several criteria, including number of violent acts per hour, positive presentations of alcohol and cigarette use and degrading sexual material.

Four of the NCTV's five most violent films released in 1989 were action-adventure movies in the style popularized by Sylvester Stallone's "Rambo" movies and Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Commando."

Topping the list is the kick-boxing epic "Bloodfist," which was cited for 183 violent acts per hour, including "scenes of gruesome face-kicking filmed in slow-motion," according to the NCTV report.

Rounding out the top five, all with violence-per-hour ratings in the 100s, were "Cyborg," a science fiction, martial arts extravaganza; "The Horror Show," one of the few slasher movies to crack the top ranks; the Rambo-like "Red Scorpion"; and old pro Sylvester Stallone's "Tango and Cash."

"Tango and Cash" was criticized, along with the Mel Gibson shoot-'em-up "Lethal Weapon 2," for portraying a lopsided view of Los Angeles street violence.

According to the report, "In 'Lethal Weapon 2,' the police officers kill at least 18 people, while in 'Tango and Cash,' Sylvester Stallone and his sidekick kill at least 14.

"The (NCTV) researchers call this highly unrealistic and a glorification of violence, since the entire 7,950 member Los Angeles police force killed only 13 people in all of 1989."

Violent acts, however, were not the sole criteria for judging social merit. The Tom Cruise Vietnam War film "Born on the Fourth of July" was praised as one of the year's pro-social movies despite a high number of violent acts per hour. The report states the "true experiences" of Cruise's character are portrayed "realistically as tragic and unnecessary."

However, "Bloodfist," "Tango and Cash" and "Friday the 13th, Part VII" were deemed the most violent and socially destructive films of the year. Actor Robert Englund, Freddy Krueger of the "Nightmare on Elm Street" movies, was labeled the year's most "violent and socially irresponsible actor."

The NCTV violence-rating system, in which everything from an angry push or shove to a murder are assigned numerical value, often created strange bedfellows. For example, on the "High Violence" list, Disney's G-rated "The Little Mermaid" was issued a higher violence-per-hour ranking than the film adaptation of horror-writer Stephen King's "Pet Sematary."

Another G-rated cartoon, "All Dogs Go to Heaven," was also placed on the high violence rankings. Situations like this, according to the group, call for a "stricter, more informative" ratings system for the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA).

For example, the year's box office champion, "Batman," was issued a PG-13 rating by the MPAA. The NCTV's system would have assigned a rating of "RV," the "V" indicating many acts of violence that are "likely to cause viewers to become more prone to anger and violence."

'Designer' vegetables priced for rich

By ERMA BOMBECK

Food shoppers are being faced with a major decision these days. Should they buy a zucchini or make the house payment? It's happened before. Every time the South experiences a deep freeze, the price of fruits and vegetables soars out of reach.

Bombeck

To the Veggie Freaks whose idea of "pigging out" is to graze on the front lawn, these are indeed dark days. For me, it's an omen.

Two weeks ago I said, "God, if you want me to get off this crummy diet, give me a sign." The very next day in the supermarket I picked up a single tomato. It was marked $3. At that very moment, I heard organ music. The tomato was returned and I hit for the Dove bars.

It doesn't take much to dissuade me from buying and eating greens. Not only am I not a vegetable disciple, I have never been convinced that vegetables make you thin. The first time my mom took me to the zoo, I watched as the keeper threw a bucket of greens to an orangutan. I wasn't the brightest kid on the block, but I figured here was an animal that exercised regularly, ate healthy and got a lot of sleep, and look how he turned out. He had a waistline the size of a Disney parking lot.

That sorta set the pace for me. I'm possibly the only person who can visit a salad bar and run up a calorie tab of 1,200 on one plate. I start with a bed of croutons and drown them in a sea of blue cheese with bacon bits, then garnish it with two cherry tomatoes.

As is generally the case, carbohydrate eaters are attracted to mates who thrive on proteins. I came from a family where gravy was a beverage and ketchup was a vegetable. My husband's family bought lettuce by the field.

After we married, it wasn't easy trying to blend our eating habits. I thought a long time before I made a decision to bring a child into a world polluted by brussels sprouts.

When my husband looked into the refrigerator last week, he said, "Where's the vegetables?"

I handed him an artichoke with the price on it and he gasped. "Let me guess. You bought a designer artichoke? I thought I told you to get eggplant."

"If you want me to buy eggplant," I said, "I'll arrange financing, but the way I look at it, we are being given a sign that the world is coming to an end as we know it."

"What kind of nonsense is that?" he asked.

"All the foods experts say are good for you are dwindling — fresh fish, vegetables, fruits."

"The shortage can be explained," he said. "The weather is an act of God."

"That's what I've been telling you," I said. "Hear the organ?"

WHEELIN'

prison a second time.

Pegues, who is from the East Texas farming community of Mineola, knew of Estes (of Pecos) from a young age and has always had a fascination with Estes' character.

"Billie Sol was one of the first wheeler-dealers. I don't doubt greed moved him to do some things that were wrong," Pegues said. "But he was a genius because he could translate something on paper to reality. His big downfall was his vulnerability."

According to Midlander Carolyn Sutton, Estes is not the only genius. She is a longtime friend of Pegues, and calls him "a boy genius." Ms. Sutton met Pegues 10 years ago when she was modeling for the Kim Dawson agency in Dallas. "I was sent on a 'go-see' for an album cover Stephen was producing," she said. "It was called 'The Most Beautiful Women in the World Live in Dallas, Texas.' We became friends and have keep in touch by phone over the years. In fact, we have probably spent a month on the phone in the course of 10 years."

Ms. Sutton plans to take a leave of absence from her regular job at Fiberflex to act as production director for "King of the Wheeler Dealers." "It will have to be a fast shoot with plenty of long days," she said. "It is a low budget film, which will make my job harder — keeping control of the number of people on the set and keeping costs down. But, I won't start working on the film until our budget is set."

This photo of Carolyn Sutton was taken when she was modeling in Dallas, at which time she also appeared in a television movie and several feature-length films.

IT WILL BE Ms. Sutton's first time behind the camera after a career as a model and movie actress which includes appearances on six episodes of television's "Dallas," the feature-length films "Can't Stop the Music" and "Tough Enough" with Dennis Quaid, and the CBS Movie of the Week "License to Kill" with Denzel Washington. Ms. Sutton left her hurried Dallas lifestyle and retired in Maui, Hawaii, for a while before returning to Midland several years ago.

"I'm still reconnecting with old friends. In fact, I am on the planning committee for my 30th Midland High School reunion," she said. Ms. Sutton also hopes to put her college education in opera to use when singing on an upcoming album produced by Pegues. Until then, she is immersing herself in the trials and tribulations of Estes, including watching video-taped interviews of Estes by Pegues, who also has film footage of Estes' courtroom trials.

Estes had his good points, according to Pegues. "Billie Sol handed out money to school officials in the hallways of a Terrell school from a money-filled suitcase. He was ahead of the rest of the country in promoting human rights and civil rights," Pegus said. "In his own distorted way, he was trying to be a good Christian. Like Jim Bakker, he had a good idea which became perverted. Before he could make it all pan out, the house of cards fell."

BECAUSE OF ALL of Estes' unproven relationships and exploits, Pegues is not going to try and film his autobiography. Instead, he is going to develop his own Texas wheeler-dealer character.

"I intend to present a man who was an outlaw, but not a criminal," Pegues said, using Webster's definition of outlaw which is described as a person "who is excluded from the protection of the law."

"Billie Sol is an outlaw. There is no justice for Billie Sol. He will be in custody until he is dead," Peques said.

Peques said the media often ignored Estes' positive accomplishments. "He was an agricultural genius ahead of his time. He turned Pecos land into gold with irrigation and discovered how valuable the land was for growing grapes and developing the Texas wine industry," Pegues said.

However, Estes' accomplishments were often overshadowed by his run-ins with the law. His court trials have made journalism history as the greatest example of a media circus. Excessive televised trial footage in Smith County during Estes' trial meant the end of televising virtually all criminal trials for a period of nearly a decade. (See related story, Page 2F)

"There weren't that many cameras on the set of 'Dynasty.'" Pegues said. "And Billie Sol recanted much of what he said at the trial on the phone to me. It was obvious he was politically manipulated at the trial."

IF ALL GOES well, Pegues will be filming in Midland, Brady and Abilene in October (what he refers to as "tumbleweed season").

The opening scene of "King of the Wheeler-Dealers" — shot from a helicopter — will be of a Cadillac blazing a trail through the desert, and will be shot in Midland.

Integral to the movie will be the melding of the music soundtrack with the action. Pegues, known as "T-Bone" in the music business, has been a professional musician for 26 years. Aside from doing vocals and playing various instruments (including slide guitar and harmonic), Pegues produces albums under his Xalapeno label. On one recent album, "The Texas T-Bone Revue," Pegues sings a duet with Gregg Alman in a song the artists co-wrote.

Although he is currently working on an album, Pegues is trying to complete his first film, "Rio de Guello" (River of the Beheaded) a film which offers a metaphor for people losing their heads in the face of adversity. "It proves we are our own worst enemies," Pegues said. He plans to wrap the film in July for a September release and hopes it will tap into the midnight movie cult circuit.

'I DON'T want big distribution of the film," Pegues said. "I intend for 'Rio de Guello' to be a fun audience participation film without the over abuse of sexual content and exploding body parts.

"Audience members shouldn't leave the theatre more tense than when they came in," he said. "Whenever you see 'Film by Stephen Pegues,' there won't be any raunchy sex. A sex scene to me is the same as saying, 'writers take a break, we're sticking a sex scene in here.' The heart of a good film is the story."

"Rio de Guello" also contains some animation. There won't be any animation in "Billie Sol," the film maker said. "Billie Sol is animation."

Ms. Sutton, who has read the script but has not seen any of the film from "Rio de Guello" said she is interested in seeing the script translated to the screen. "The script is very philosophical with a lot of subliminals. It is semi-autobiographical for Stephen and the starring character is named T-Bone. It opens in a deli with T-Bone talking about a river with his friends. He later drowns in the river and meets up with hip saints."

According to Sutton, "King of the Wheeler Dealers" won't be as avantgarde as "Rio de Guello." It will concentrate on the rise and fall of a Texas tycoon. "I want to show the risk taking, how a Texas wheeler-dealer will put himself on the line," Pegues said.

Estes himself has expressed an interest in playing his father in the film, according to Ms. Sutton. "He and Stephen keep in contact but nothing has been decided yet about Estes appearing in the film," she said.

PEGUES MAY HAVE a cameo in the film and Ms. Sutton will play the foreman of the jury in a court trial scene. She is looking forward to acting again, after her respite. "I got out of the business once I learned I was too old to be an ingenue and too young to play character parts."

Although he has a college background in film, including studying at Columbia University, Pegues said his greatest experience in film was in an intensive 16-hour workshop taught by Kim Taylor. "The Community Film Workshop was like a bootcamp," Pegues said. "My class started out with 40 attending and ended up with 12 of us completing the course."

Pegues said the most important aspect of the workshop was the philosophy he learned — one which he applies to himself: "There is a world of people out there who want to do things and few who have the courage to get them done."

"I admire Stephen's tenacity," Ms. Sutton said. "In the music or movie industry you can't succeed by sitting back and waiting for things to happen. You have to make things happen, and Stephen does."

Whether arranging music or composing a movie scene, Pegues finds satisfaction in creativity — especially when trying something new. "And if you can't try something new ..." well, you know the rest.

Permian Basin actors and actresses interested in appearing in "King of the Wheeler-Dealers" may send resumes and black-and-white glossy photos to Xalapeno Filmworks, P.O. Box 14629, Chicago, Ill. 60614.

Director sells his house to finance 'Roger & Me'

By MAX McQUEEN
N.Y. Times News Service

Roger Moore sold everything, including his house, to make the nationally renowned "Roger & Me."

PHOENIX — Playing with fire seems to come naturally to Michael Moore.

So you are neither surprised nor anxious when the director, writer and star of "Roger and Me" builds a matchbook-sized campfire in an ashtray in a Phoenix hotel.

It is something you would expect from the Flint, Mich., resident who takes on General Motors in "Roger and Me," the documentary that is as funny and sad as any film you are likely to see this decade.

"Roger and Me" started out simple enough.

Returning to Flint from San Francisco, where in 1986 he was fired as Mother Jones' executive editor, Moore found his hometown in the throes of economic upheaval.

During the 1980s, General Motors had closed several auto plants, sending the assembly-line work to Mexico along with 35,000 jobs.

Although half of its work force was unemployed, few people could leave Flint for greener pastures. There was no market elsewhere for their auto-making skills; nor was there a market for their houses.

Moore found those who did not lose their jobs were cautious and guarded. They could be next. And many were. (GM has eliminated 5,000 more jobs since the making of "Roger and Me.")

With his love for movies ("What else is there to do in Flint?"), his knack for writing and a wicked sense of humor, Moore thought the best way to let the world know about Flint's dire straits was to make a movie.

And so Moore did, thanks to the help of family, friends and strangers. Moore's parents helped by letting him sleep at their Flint home. His friends jumped on the bandwagon by becoming first-time cameramen, editors and production coordinators. Strangers aided in primarily financial ways, being party to the sundry ways Moore raised money to finance "Roger and Me."

Yard sales netted $5,000. A weekly bingo game (which continues to operate) brought in $50,000. A suit against Mother Jones for firing Moore added $58,000 to the kitty. Lastly, Moore sold his four-bedroom home. That he only got $27,000 for it says something about how depressed things are in Flint.

Wasn't selling his house out from under himself a bit extreme? Moore did not think so, not even three years before "Roger and Me" was embraced by critics and filmgoers alike.

"We made it for people who go to movies on Friday night. We did not make it for the art house crowd. We didn't make it for people who like documentaries. We wanted to make a documentary for people who don't like documentaries." Moore succeeded. But little did he know that his little expose on how General Motors put the screws to Flint would find a ready national audience. He and his comrades thought they'd be happy if they could show it locally.

The first inkling Moore had that "Roger and Me" had struck a chord was last September at the Telluride Film Festival in Colorado, where it debuted.

From Telluride, "Roger and Me" has gone on to make fast friends with Americans across the country. Moore himself has crisscrossed the country stumping for his pet project. Phoenix was his 72nd city since October.

The advance guard was in Phoenix two weeks before Moore. Dubbed Rogers' Rangers by Sheila Benson of the Los Angeles Times, editor Wendey Stanzler and production coordinators Rod Birleson and Robert Wilhelm were virgins to filmmaking when Moore asked their help.

Moore brought in Kevin Rafferty of "The Atomic Cafe" and Anne Bohlen of "With Babies and Banners" to give his hand-picked crew a weeklong crash course in filmmaking.

What makes "Roger and Me" worth the long hours and hard work for Stanzler is what people say to her after screenings.

"In every city somebody has a story to tell that is similar to the story in Flint. People come up to me and say, 'Thank you for making this. We finally have a voice.'"

Smith has helped the movie by refusing to see it. So Moore has it written in his contract with Warner Bros. that each theater showing "Roger and Me" must reserve a seat for Smith.

Movie explores nuances of filmmaking process

By YARDENA ARAR
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — If Giuseppe Tornatore's "Cinema Paradiso" wins a foreign-language-film Oscar this year, it will not be the first time a personal salute to movies carries off that title.

Francois Truffaut not only directed but starred in 1973's "Day for Night," a funny and warmhearted look at people who make films and at the filmmaking process.

But foreigners are not the only ones who make good movies about movies.

Tornatore is simply the latest in a long line of filmmakers who have paid homage to their craft through some memorable examples of their craft.

Few of these salutes, however, are as basically uncritical as "Cinema Paradiso," which tells of the impact of movies on a small Sicilian village through the adventures of a pint-size film buff who befriends the local projectionist and eventually grows up to be a filmmaker himself.

This outsider's perspective celebrates movies for the romance and excitement they brought to an otherwise drab existence; the story's basic sentimentality, however, is relieved by some wonderfully comic sequences about the rituals of moviegoing in small-town Italy during the postwar years.

Woody Allen's "The Purple Rose of Cairo," a bittersweet 1985 comedy, also deals with an outsider who finds escape from a dead-end existence at the local Bijou.

Mia Farrow plays a Depression-era waitress whose life takes an exciting turn when her matinee idol (Jeff Daniels) literally walks off the screen — much to the dismay of the movie moguls who want him back in Hollywood.

This being a Woody Allen film, the fairy-tale premise does not end with anyone riding happily into the sunset; it is more of a cautionary tale for those who have trouble sorting out fantasy and reality.

The outsider in 1980's "The Stunt Man" is quite literally on the run when he stumbles onto the location of a World War I epic and accidentally witnesses the death of the leading man's stunt double.

Steven Railsback plays an escaped convict who finds a haven — but not necessarily a safe one — on the set when the charismatic but tyrannical director (played brilliantly by Peter O'Toole) offers to let him stay if he will stand in for the dead man.

Filmed at San Diego's famed Hotel del Coronado, Richard Rush's tour-de-force cult favorite pulls off quite a few impressive stunts of its own. It is at once an indictment and celebration of the show-must-go-on mentality embodied by O'Toole's character, a love story, a comedy, a great action-adventure flick and an anti-war statement.

Probably the most successful salute to movie magic devoted itself to a particular kind of filmmaking.

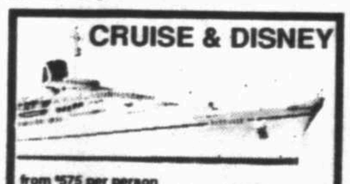

Bob Zemeckis' "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" made animation history while tipping its hat to the greats of animation past.

Not all movies about movies are so successful.

Last year's "The Big Picture," another black comedy starring Kevin Bacon as a film school graduate seduced and abandoned by the Hollywood establishment, came and went in weeks, probably because it was not outrageous enough.

But movies and moviemaking have inspired more than their share of entertaining films, films that have also created and serviced the myths about movies and moviemakers.

Rail trip spectacular but frustrating

By KELLY MURPHY
Copley News Service

Spectacular scenery and first-class service, coupled with Amtrak's aging fleet of Superliner equipment, make crossing the Rockies by train an adventure with reservations.

First, you're going to need reservations — about three months in advance — to get a first-class compartment. Ticketing is tricky, with a variety of one-way and round-trip options. A reputable travel agent can sort it out to get the best price.

A one-way group ticket for two adults and two children traveling coach from California to eastern Iowa cost us $536. We tacked on another $362 for a first-class family compartment that sleeps up to five and includes all meals.

Fare included a ride on the San Diegan from historic Santa Fe Station in San Diego, up the scenic coast and on to Fullerton station, where eastbound passengers boarded the Desert Wind Superliner for Amtrak's northern route over the Rockies.

The double-deck sleeping cars, built by Pullman more than a decade ago, featured two-person compartments, some with private lavatory and shower, a specially outfitted compartment for handicapped travelers and a family compartment. Each was a sitting room by day, folding into bunk beds at night.

THE FAMILY compartment, stretching the full width of the car, offered a view from both sides of the train. Fold-down tables provided space for games and snacks, and a shallow closet offered room for a thin garment bag or a couple of coats.

Storage space was a squeeze. We packed items used on the train in a number of carry-on bags that could be stowed under seats or slung from coat hooks. Larger suitcases were stored in the baggage section of the car.

Soft music and train announcements, including meal calls, upcoming stations, points of interest and local history, were piped into each compartment.

Rolling out of Fullerton, the view consisted mostly of seedy industrial sections and rail yards. It was a time for settling in and meeting personnel who looked after our needs for the next 48 hours.

First to knock at the door and introduce himself was the car attendant, similar to a flight attendant. Service included a cup of coffee and newspaper delivered to the compartment each morning.

Next was the conductor to punch tickets, followed by the chief of service to ensure each passenger knew what to expect and where to find it.

As city and suburbs gave way to desert, first call for dinner was announced. Again, reservations were required and taken by the attendant. The first hike to the dining car was a moving experience, similar to gaining sea legs.

On the whole, dining-car service was good. The paper work of meal chits and multiple-choice menu answer sheets was frustrating, but the service was quick, friendly and solicitous. Table settings were disappointing, ranging from paper to plastic. Real silverware was put out, but some of it exhibited bits and pieces of the last meal.

THE FOOD was generally good to excellent, but with two selections bordering on indigestible.

At dinner, the chicken, seafood of the day, meatless entree and steak were all good bets, but not even the kids could stomach the spaghetti. Breakfast fare of cereal, eggs or pancakes hit the spot, but the "Old Fashioned Railroad French Toast" could pass for playing cards. Lunch offered a variety of hot or cold sandwiches, all excellent.

But the best part of the dining car was the scenery. Only the Sightseer Lounge Car offered a better view of the northern route, a stretch of unspoiled wilderness that can be seen only by train.

As night fell, the Desert Wind ate up track across California and the Nevada desert at 90 miles per hour. Still, we pulled into the Union Plaza Hotel in Las Vegas nearly two hours behind schedule. A few passengers left their air-conditioned quarters to take in the desert air — a searing 96 degrees at 10 p.m. — but nobody ventured to the casino. Station stops are brief, and the Desert Wind waits for no one.

It was there that equipment problems struck first: a complete failure of the plumbing in our car, knocking out all the lavatories. The attendant fussed with local maintenance personnel to no avail. There was time to make up, and the trouble would be tackled in Salt Lake City the next morning.

SLEEP DIDN'T come easy the first night. Only exhausted children and seasoned travelers drifted beyond the strange noises, constant motion and the day's excitement. In addition, our car featured a flat spot on one wheel, adding an old-fashioned clickety-clack to the modern whoosh of welded rail.

Dawn broke in Salt Lake City, a one-hour stop good for a brisk walk along the platform. There the Desert Wind hooked up with the California Zephyr from San Francisco and the Pioneer from Seattle.

Again, the attendant and local crew wrestled with the plumbing, and again repairs were put off until our next major stop. We shared lavatories in adjoining cars until we hit Denver at 10 that night.

The inconvenience was soon forgotten as the train swept across the Utah desert with its buttes, canyons and red-streaked cliffs. The Sightseer Lounge Car, with its snack bar, bare-bones bar service and floor-to-ceiling windows offered the best view.

Desert gave way to mountain meadows as the train crossed into Colorado and wound its way into the Rockies. The track followed the Colorado River, climbing through spectacular canyons, over bridges, through tunnels and along cliffs.

The track hugged the wall of Ruby Canyon as the river streamed by far below. Wire fences protected the roadbed from rock slides and the curves became pronounced. Sharp crags hung overhead, and deer grazed at trackside.

There is only one other way to view this breathtaking scenery, and that is by shooting the rapids of the Colorado River. Two rafting parties darted by on the white water, and as dusk settled the lights of several rafting camps flickered on the sandy banks.

Soon, a half-moon turned the landscape to faint shadows and silhouettes, and sightseers switched to cards, conversation and a feature film in the lounge car. In the distance and far below, the lights of Denver glimmered.

WE HAD made up time crossing the Rockies and were now running only a half-hour behind schedule.

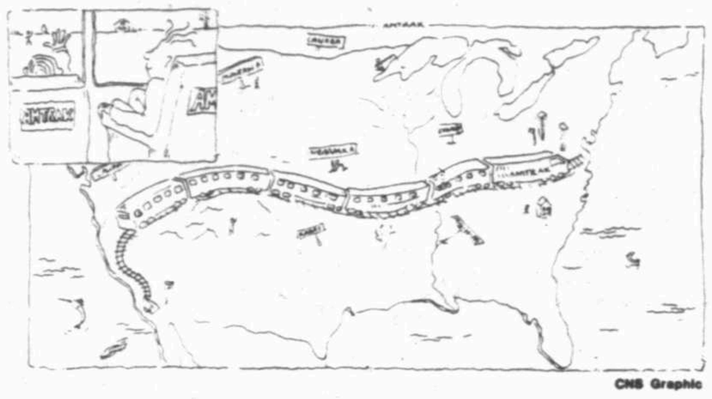

Upon arrival in Denver, passengers were invited to detrain and visit beautiful Union Station. The gift shop offered slim pickings, but the kids enjoyed the video arcade.

This time the attendant simply watched with disgust as the local crew inspected the broken plumbing. He expected the worst and was not disappointed — no plumbing until the car was pulled out of service in Chicago.

To make matters worse, the air conditioner in the dining car had given up, making it stuffy for diners and unbearable for the crew.

Following breakfast the next day, service was discontinued, and a lunch of cold sandwiches, drinks and desserts was delivered to each compartment.

The rolling farmlands of Nebraska and Iowa streamed past. Small towns and old farm buildings spotted the countryside — the stuff of postcards.

CNS Graphic

We arrived at our destination on the Mississippi River more than two hours late, a delay attributed to the repair of a broken air hose.

Through all of the equipment failures, Amtrak personnel never stopped trying to make the trip special. From the frustrated sleeping-car attendant to the sweating dining-car steward, crew members tried to carry their passengers through the rough spots.

THE HARRIED chief of service — "just call me Bob" — expressed pride in his crew and frustration with his equipment.

"These heavyweight Superliner cars were built in the '70s, and they're just getting old," he said. America's penchant for jet travel, coupled with the Reagan administration's attempt to ax Amtrak's federal subsidy to reduce the budget deficit, has resulted in an aging passenger rail system, he said.

And that makes Amtrak's northern route over the Rockies a trip you may want to make — with reservations.

AT YOUR LEISURE
By Sue Snelson

This year, I had the occasion to start the year traveling with our youngest son, Shane (as you have all read previously in this column, I schedule a trip with each one of our children; this gives us the opportunity to build a new relationship as adults). Shane at first wanted to see England because he is majoring in literature and wanted to take in a Shakespearian play. But after much discussion we decided to see the Berlin Wall.

Off we went, in early January, on American Airlines--first to Hamburg, Germany. We spent the night there at the Intercontinental Hotel. The next day we boarded the train for the four-hour trip to West Berlin. Being the expert travel agent, I did not check to see exactly where to get off the train. So, when we arrived in Berlin, Shane and I left the train, unloaded our luggage onto the station platform, proceeded inside-- and discovered we were in East Berlin!

And so, as they say, the adventure began.

We transported our considerable amount of luggage across the street and upstairs to Customs (the first of two times), then caught a trolley to take us to West Berlin. It was actually a very fun way to see the city from both sides of the Wall--one I never would've thought to plan. Through the years I have visited every Communist-bloc nation, and I have never seen such a dichotomy as exists between the two Germanys. West Berlin was Nazi headquarters during the second World War (Hitler's bunker was there but of course he blew it up so there is nothing for tourists to see) and is also the location of spandau prison, where Rudolph Hess was imprisoned until his death last year. Among the maudlin reminders exists a bustling, fast-paced city with a thriving economy--many goods in the stores, wide boulevards, lots of traffic, wonderful museums, ornate government buildings. On the east side of the Wall, however, the atmosphere is completely different. The streets are not as wide; the people wore brown and grey; the storefront windows were not clean--in general dreary and depressing compared to the West. We stopped at one point for aspirin; they sold it to us by the tablet in addition to providing a paper funnel for the water to take them with.

The considerable differences notwithstanding, the Berlins have more to offer than any city I have been to recently; I certainly would rank it with London and Paris as the premier European cities to visit. As you have probably heard, when Britain conquered the world they brought back half of it and put it in their museums. Germany has done much the same thing. Among the more fascinating exhibits is the Schleichmann Excavation (he purportedly discovered the famed city of Troy in the early 1900's); a variety of artifacts from Greece and Egypt; and many beautiful paintings (we assumed they were all German and not confiscated by the Nazis). In East Berlin a monument marks the site of the Yalta conference, where Roosevelt, Churchill, and Stalin ended the war and divided the spoils. And of course the Berlin Wall is itself a monument to that era, the differences between the divided halves of the city, and the momentous changes taking place there and throughout Eastern Europe. The electricity I felt as I approached the Wall is the moment I'll remember most. Certainly there has not been a more exciting time to be Berlin--if I've piqued your wanderlust, won't you call us soon and let us arrange your visit? Call me at 684-7428.

New atlas offers varied information

N.Y. Times News Service

"The Smartest Distance Between Two Points USAtlas," subtitled Richard Saul Wurman's 1990 Road Atlas (Access Press; $12.95), is more than an ordinary road map. In addition to maps and guides to 250-mile trips (that is a pleasant day's drive, according to the author), there are all kinds of interesting information in the 144-page book.

A traveler can take Highway 15 from Sweetgrass, Mont., all the way to San Diego, Calif. The 1,437-mile drive will take you about 31 hours and 55 minutes if you don't stop.

Between the maps, there are pages with facts and information. The "USAtlas" food page tells about some taste treats. There's Vermont cheddar in New England and gumbo, jambalaya and boudin sausage in Louisiana. In a section on the Great Plains, menus feature game food.

Buenos Aires cafes unique

By LOREEN ARBUS and
NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Certain cities are renowned for specific types of eating and drinking establishments.

For example, one can never think of Munich without conjuring up visions of vast beer halls where locals are eating wursts and drinking huge steins of freshly brewed beer.

Dublin brings to mind eclectic pubs that cater to each individual neighborhood while Madrid calls forth the hundreds of tapas bars where citizens munch merrily through the evening.

In the Southern Hemisphere, Buenos Aires is famous for its confiterias, which can be loosely translated as cafes. But that is about as descriptive as saying that Leonardo da Vinci was just an artist. There is indeed an entire culture that revolves around the confiteria.

Like the Spaniards, the Argentines tend to dine much later than other folks. Breakfast usually is cafe au lait and a roll on the run before work. Lunch is quite leisurely beginning at 1:30 and lasting until after 3 p.m.

Dinner is at 10:30 p.m., but the very fashionable citizens of Buenos Aires often start dining at 11:30. We are told that dances and balls begin at 2 a.m. and end at dawn.

At around 7 in the evening, hunger pangs strike, and there is a need for some sustenance to tide one over till dinner. That was how the necessity for the confiteria arose.

Portenos (as the people from Buenos Aires are called) stop at these cafes after work for light meals and an excuse to see friends, meet new ones, gossip, complain about the government, read the newspaper, play cards or just daydream.

Some of these places have casual outdoor tables while others are elegantly paneled in oak or mahogany. And they all stay open until the wee hours, which means that people often will return after dinner for a late-night coffee or nightcap and, of course, to continue talking.

CNS Graphic

Despite the Falkland War, the Argentines have always had an affinity for anything British; so, many of the confiterias serve high tea replete with sandwiches, pastries and gooey desserts. Some serve empanadas, turnovers filled with vegetables, meat or cheese. Others serve a strange sandwich called a media luna, a sugar-glazed croissant filled with ham and cheese.

During our recent stay, we found a number of confiterias that are outstanding for one reason or another. Here is a list to save for your next trip to the Argentine capital.

■ CAFE TORTONI — Avenida de Mayo 829

This is the granddaddy of them all since it was founded in 1858, and it looks like a burnished relic from the past.

Order the Special French Plate, a dimpled platter filled with antipasto meats and cheeses and a copa de sidra — a delightful alcoholic cider on tap.

After awhile, get up from your marble-topped table and wander through the numerous rooms of the cafe. Downstairs in the Bodega there often is live jazz or tango music at around 7:30 p.m.

■ CONFITERIA IDEAL — Suipacha 384

Another golden oldie, founded in 1916, this place truly has an Old World — almost Viennese — atmosphere.

The empanadas are freshly baked, and we also liked the tiny napoleons.

There is an organist who plays international music, and the courtly waiters all seem to have been there since the '40s.

After you have enjoyed your meal, go upstairs to a gilded hall where you can still see the bandstand from the days when a full orchestra played for tea. Presently, there are pool tables, which we don't consider a modern improvement.

■ QUEEN BESS — Avenida Santa Fe At Suipacha

Look around and you may think you're in London. On the paneled walls are dozens of photographs of Queen Elizabeth II and the British royal family.

Naturally, the high tea is choice with a superlative English trifle to boot. This place is very popular with shoppers who need to refuel after hours on the boulevards.

■ CONFITERIA DEL MOLINO — Calle Callao At Rivadavia

This handsome spot is in the shadow of the House of Congress, so we suggest that you drop in, particularly if anything dramatic happened in the government that day. Most of the Argentine congressmen and women hang out here, and the overheard discussions (depending on your facility with Spanish) can be quite informative.

■ RICHMOND TEA ROOM — Florida 468

This place is a favorite with the Argentine yuppies, and you'll see fast-track young executives in Saville-Row tailored suits sharing snacks and tea or wine with beautiful women in Milanese high fashion. The atmosphere is reminiscent of an English salon from the '30s.

Iguazu Falls, in South America, are among the most spectacular waterfalls in the world.

Iguazu Falls breathtaking sight

By LOREEN ARBUS and
NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Two years ago, we saw the film "The Mission," with Robert DeNiro and Jeremy Irons. It is a very poignant picture about how the Jesuit missionaries were ultimately, unable to protect the Guarani Indians from Brazilian exploitation in the 18th century.

The most memorable part of the film was the backdrop of what seemed like miles of dramatic waterfalls in the middle of the jungle. Leaving the movie theater, we vowed to someday see those tropical falls in person.

Having just returned from Argentina, we can only say that the movie did not do justice to such an incredible natural wonder as Iguazu Falls. It is the widest waterfall on our planet and happens to be a dozen times the width of Niagara. Only Victoria Falls in Zambia and Angel Falls in Venezuela are taller than Iguazu.

Located on Argentina's northern border with Brazil, and with Paraguay only a few kilometers to the west, Iguazu can be viewed from either the Argentine or Brazilian side.

We suggest that you start in the early part of the day looking from Brazil, which gives you the best panorama of the whole falls in light that is best for photographs. The afternoon and another day or more can be spent viewing the individual falls at closer range from Argentina.

Aerolineas Argentinas offers a convenient morning flight from Buenos Aires with a return late in the afternoon that is perfect if your time is limited. Book a seat on the left side of the aircraft, which allows an eagle's-eye view of the falls from the air.

After landing at Puerto Iguazu, a taxi or minibus will take you over the international bridge onto the Brazilian side where it's a 20-minute ride to the Hotel Das Cataratas, a great pink colonial-style hostelry that overlooks the falls.

You can spend $25 for a nine-minute helicopter ride over the roaring waters, or you can do as we did and descend a walking path that gives you at least a mile's worth of incredible viewing.

Surrounding the pathway is a mini jungle filled with fluorescent-colored orchids, begonias, vines, palms and ferns. The "technicolored" fantasy gets better as you spy multihued toucans, parrots and about 35 varieties of butterflies.

It felt like we were walking through a novel by Gabriel Garcia Marquez!

An elevator whisks you up to street level where your transportation can take you to lunch. On the road to Foz Do Iguacu, we suggest that you stop at Rafahin Cataratas. This is a real Brazilian churrascaria where chefs offer you various cuts of barbecued lamb, pork, beef and chicken, along with a groaning buffet of hearty side dishes and desserts. While dining, you can watch a show of Brazilian folk dancing.

After a pit stop to buy some Brazilian chocolate (which isn't as good as the Argentine variety), we returned to Argentina on the other side of the Iguazu River. Here, you can take a long walkway out to see the Devil's Throat, which is a wonder within a wonder.

On a platform, you are at the vortex of this waterfall, and practically within touching distance, you are seeing violent sheets of brown water spilling over a cliffside. The effect is both exhilarating and dizzying. We kept wondering if our platform would collapse into the thundering water just from the roar alone.

Our last stop was at the Iguazu Park, which has walkways over some of the nearly 300 separate falls. In the late afternoon the light is perfect to photograph the innumerable rainbows that form in the mists below.

Because of erosion by the torrents of water, most of the falls are composed of cascades that are broken by rock ledges halfway down. The effect of the double falls is extremely dramatic when looking down at them at their source.

Exhausted by all of our trekking, we soon found ourselves in the lounge of the futuristic-looking Hotel Internacional Iguazu, sipping Gancia (a marvelous local aperitif) and listening to sad waltzes performed on a Paraguayan harp. If you want to spend the night, by all means stay here as the food is excellent and nearly all the rooms overlook the falls.

There are lots of things to do on your second day in the area. There are scores of other trails on which to hike into the jungle where you might see armadillos, anteaters or other exotic fauna. There also is an excursion to see Itaipu Dam a few miles away that when completed will be the largest in the world.

As you fly back to Buenos Aires, your thoughts of Iguazu will take an otherworldly glow.

In the Guarani language, iguazu means great water, which seems like an understatement. They also called the falls "the place where the clouds are born."

We believe that Iguazu Falls is a place where indelible memories are made.

Tubal ligation not foolproof

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A while back you had a letter from a woman who wondered why her husband had a vasectomy after she had had a tubal ligation. Please advise her that even after a woman has had a tubal ligation, she can become pregnant. I know, because it happened to me.

In 1983, I married a man who had two children by a previous marriage. Together, we had a beautiful baby girl in 1985. Feeling that our family was complete, I had a tubal ligation in 1986.

Well, last March I was stricken with severe pains in my lower right side. I was rushed to the hospital — and the diagnosis was a tubal pregnancy! Major surgery was performed. I lost one ovary and both fallopian tubes. Complications followed, but I will spare you the details.

My physician, an ob-gyn who performed both the tubal ligation and the subsequent surgery, told me that a tubal ligation is not guaranteed 100 percent — that the chances are about one in 400 or 500 that this could happen to a woman. He said the only foolproof methods of birth control are hysterectomy and abstinence. — CAROL L. IN HOUSTON

DEAR CAROL: Thank you for an illuminating letter. It's enough to bring back the chastity belt — but there's always a chance that Houdini will return.

DEAR ABBY: Am I behind the times, or what? This past weekend some friends and their children were at my home. The mother told her little boy (age 10) to go sit down and watch TV in the den while she and I visited. The boy turned around and said to his mother, "Just who died and made YOU king?"

She ignored him, so he repeated it to make sure she heard him. I turned around and looked at the boy, then at his mother to see what she was going to do — which was nothing! My children are grown now, but if one of mine had dared to talk to me that way, he wouldn't have been able to sit down for a week!

I was telling someone else about this smart-mouthed kid and how amazed I was that his mother just let it pass, and I was told, "Well, that's the way most kids are being raised today."

Abby, am I behind the times? Is that really the way most kids are being raised today?

I really worry about that boy. His parents bend over backward to see that he gets everything he wants. I just know that the first time the police call his parents, they are going to wonder where they went wrong — or why society is picking on their son.

Is this the accepted way for 10-year-olds to behave? — JUST WONDERING

DEAR JUST WONDERING: No. Don't blame the boy. All children test their limits; it's the parents' responsibility to let their children know how far they can go. The mother is shirking her responsibility. Children cannot be expected to know what they have not been taught. Let's hope Mother learns soon that she is doing her son a grave injustice by her permissiveness.

DEAR ABBY: To get right to the point: Is it proper to send a "Happy Anniversary" card to a man whose wife has been in a nursing home with Alzheimer's disease for nearly two years? They are good friends of mine. — NO NAMES, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAMES: Since spending an anniversary separated from one's spouse can hardly be called a "happy" occasion, a more appropriate gesture would be to invite the gentleman out or to your home for a home-cooked meal.

Try to find a more suitable card. "Thinking of you on your anniversary" would be better for someone whose spouse is in a nursing home indefinitely.

Wedding bells? Wedding bills! Who pays for what and everything else you need to know if you're planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Couple reflects on a 'lifetime' with Dunlaps

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Very few people can claim to spend a lifetime with a company. It's even rarer when a husband and wife can make that claim, but Ken Plotner, manager of Dunlaps in Midland, and his wife Martha are a rare pair.

Together, the couple has a combined 92 years with the privately-owned retailer. Now, after devoting so many years to the company — he has 51 years, she 41 — the two feel it's time to slow down, cut back, and spend some time together doing non-work-related activities.

Sometime this coming week, when the new manager arrives, Plotner will step down from the position he's held for 12 years, and become a consultant, stockholder and advisory director for Dunlaps. His wife, who is a buyer for the store and is responsible for ladies and junior fashions, will begin working on a part-time basis.

How did they manage to stay with one company for so many years?

For one thing, both agree that working for Dunlaps has felt more like being with a family than working for a company. "We feel like we're part of a family, not a number on a wheel," he says.

His wife admits that she never intended to make Dunlaps a career. The two were married March 5, 1949. While she returned to Seminole to prepare to move, he went to work managing the Dunlaps store in Okemah, Okla. Shortly after they were married, she agreed to work in the store a couple of weeks to help him out, doing bookkeeping and operating the cash register.

"That was 41 years ago," she laughs. "It's been a long two weeks."

He began his career with Dunlaps in 1939 as assistant manager in the store in Holdenville, Okla. He recalls deciding on a career in retailing:

"I'd go by the stores and see the people, and they seemed to be fairly happy and comfortable — they worked inside most of the time. And they got to dress reasonably well. So I decided that wouldn't be a bad place to work." He first went to work for C.R. Anthony's in 1937 after graduating from high school.

The Plotners' tour of duty with Dunlaps has included positions with stores in Okemah and Holdenville, Okla., six months in Midland in 1948, Dennison, Brownfield and Del Rio, Pampa, Texas and Farmington, N.M. They returned to Midland in 1978. Mrs. Plotner notes that the longest they have stayed with a store was 13 years with Farmington. Next was the twelve-and-a-half years here in Midland.

"We've met a lot of people in the last 20-25 years," Plotner notes. "And we've seen a lot of changes in retailing."

Adds his wife: "Each buying season has been different, with lots of new faces."

The company has changed too, the couple noted. When Plotner first joined, there were only 10 stores in the chain. Now the chain numbers 40. Dunlaps first arrived in Midland in 1941 when the company purchased the Addson-Wadley store downtown. The store moved to its present location in Dellwood Mall in 1962.

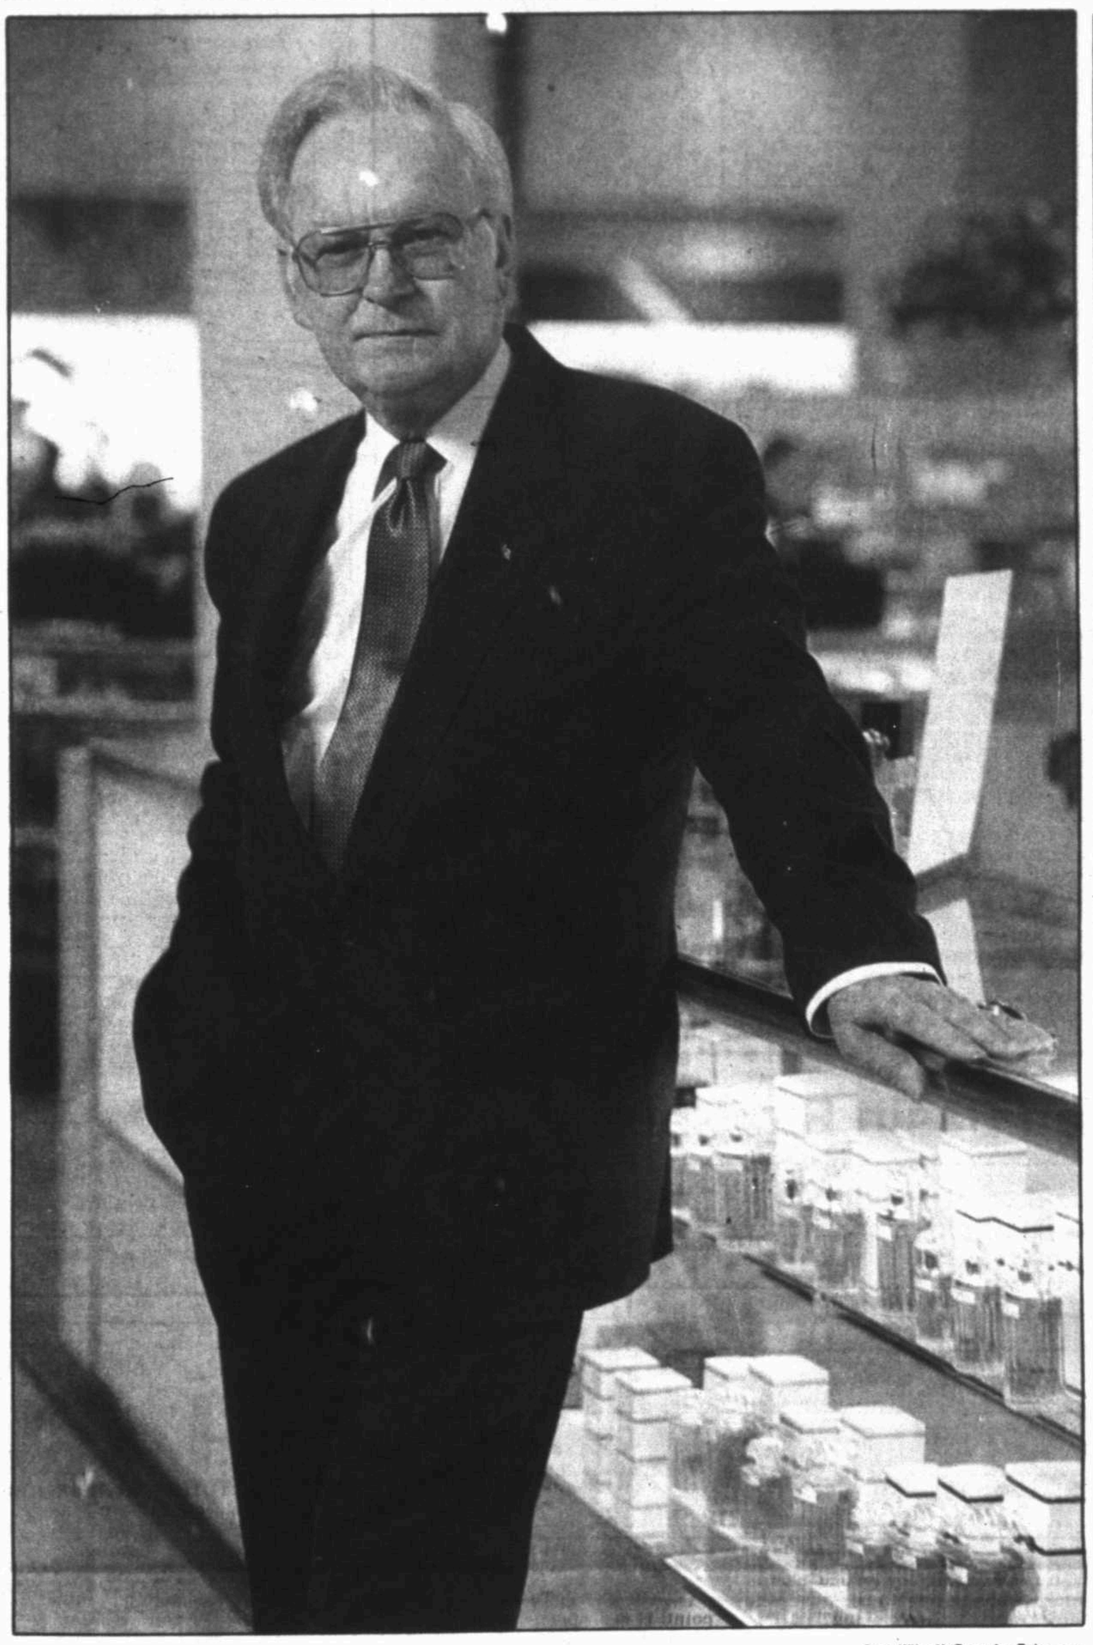

Plotner estimates that the company was about 50 years old when he joined, having been founded in the 1890s in Tennesse. He says a large reason for the company's success has been its commitment to personal service for the customer, and the freedom given the individual stores. While the company has buyers, so does each store. That way each store can satisfy the tastes of the individual community.

The couple has no children, saying that the young people that have worked for them through the years have, in a way, become their children. Mrs. Plotner proudly notes that a number of them have kept in touch, and some have even sent pictures of their children to show the Plotners.

They've even managed to influence a few to choose a career in retailing. "So few want to choose retailing nowadays, because it's hard work and you have to be on your feet all day. They prefer high-paying jobs in computers or something like that. But I've told them that if they get into retailing and they like it, they'll be in it for life."

Looking back, the Plotners agree that everyone has some things they wish they had done differently or had turn out differently.

But neither one of them regrets the years spent with Dunlaps.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Ken Plotner will soon be stepping down as manager of Dunlaps in Midland. He has worked for the privately-owned company 51 years; his wife Martha has worked there 41 years.

Designer finds niche in hand-painted furniture

Midland designs sold exclusively by F.A.O. Schwarz

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

When the famous F.A.O. Schwarz toy merchant showed no interest in James VanStavern's latest creation, he didn't give up.

VanStavern thought his hand-painted furniture would be something F.A.O. Schwarz would want to market. But the Manhattan buyers wouldn't even listen to him or look at photographs of his work.

So he mailed them a chair.

Within days, F.A.O. Schwarz contacted VanStavern and requested exclusive rights to his line of hand-painted furniture. In fact, one of VanStavern's chairs was carried in the F.A.O. Schwarz Christmas catalog.

This hand-painted furniture started out as a "fluke," two years ago, according to VanStavern, who has been an interior designer in West Texas for the past 14 years.

"We were working on this client's house, and with this particular client, we had the opportunity to do some really creative things," he said. "We were pressed to get the house finished for a big party that was coming up. We had everything finished except two chairs for the bedroom that were in this beige velvet."

Rather than wait for the two chairs that had been ordered, VanStavern started painting the beige chairs.

"We cut up old commercial mops for the fringe," and hand-painted the chairs, he said.

"Well they (the chairs) looked fabulous," he said. "And the people who saw them went nuts."

What started out as hand-painted adult furniture soon turned into children's furniture and the experience with F.A.O. Schwarz. Now VanStavern includes in his custom furniture line: Chairs, sofas, mirrors, lamps and wall consoles.

The F.A.O. Schwarz association expanded to a subsidiary in San Francisco, VanStavern said, and one of his chairs was in the front window of a Union Square store during the Christmas season.

In addition, an assortment of VanStavern's custom furniture will be on display at an upcoming "wholesale showroom for the design trade."

VanStavern owns VanStavern Interiors on Illinois Avenue, near Midland High School. He has been a business owner for the past three years, worked for a statewide design firm for 10 years, and taught art for six years. He readily admits interior design is his true love, and he is cautious about the furniture line taking over this strongest interest.

"My love is interior design and I want to stay in it. I've got so many ideas, it's driving me nuts," he said. "The only restriction I have is the number of hours in a day."

And VanStavern has created an unusual system of building the chairs so he has more time for his designing profession.

"I design and make the first one," he said. "I have two upholsterers in my warehouse who then build what I call blanks."

Home prices increasing faster than buyer income

CHICAGO (AP) — The price of a house increased faster than buyers' incomes in 1989, the 14th straight year the gap between the American dream and its realization has widened, a new study concludes.

The Chicago Title & Trust Co. said its annual survey of home buyers in 18 urban areas also revealed that the vast majority of 1989 home buyers were two-income couples who saved for an average of 2.9 years — the longest period in the survey's 14-year history — to make a down payment.

The survey, embracing all types of home sales throughout the year, was based on telephone interviews of more than 1,500 people, according to Chicago Title, the country's largest title-insurance company.

Nationally, the median home price — which historically reflects a price that most closely parallels what most people would pay — rose 6.4 percent last year to $129,800, while the median household income of 1989 home buyers rose 6.3 percent to $58,700, the survey found.

The median home price is the midpoint with an equal number of homes selling for more and less.

The gap was smaller than in recent years, but when considered with the gaps since the first Chicago Trust survey in 1976, the difference between income gains and home-price increases grew a total of 6.5 percent over 14 years.

"Those buying houses today have noticeably fewer discretionary dollars to spend on things other than housing than their counterparts did 13 years ago," said John Pfister, Chicago Title vice president in charge of marketing research.

Chicago Title's statistics are for 1989 home buyers only. For comparison, the Census Bureau says the median U.S. household income including homeowners and renters rose 3.2 percent when adjusted for inflation from 1976 through 1988, the last year for which census statistics are available.

Chicago Title said 79.3 percent of all 1989 home buyers were two-income families compared with 73.3 percent in 1988 and 53.1 percent in 1976.

Among first-time home buyers, 86.8 percent were two-income families, compared with 85.5 percent in 1988 and 64 percent in 1976.

Sunday DIGEST

Beware the dreaded toner phoner squad

They're called "toner phoners," the latest variation on the burgeoning fraudulent office supply racket.

A secretary or office manager receives a call from someone who purports to be an office supply salesman. He claims to hold an order for copy machine toner and needs the company's address to send out the black powder.

Later, that secretary or manager learns that this is not the usual supplier. Worse still, when the order is delivered, the price turns out to be much higher than the amount normally paid.

The fraud is extremely tough to nail down. The U.S. postal inspector's office, which investigates many of the "toner phoner" cases, has stacks of complaints that authorities say are unlikely to result in many prosecutions.

"It's a national scandal," said Larry Johnson, the postal inspector in Burbank, Calif., who is part of the federal effort to clamp down on office supply scams.

"Just say when!"

Super Bowl ads seen recently may be a sign of things to come. The ads admonished drinkers to "know when to say when" and were paid for and produced by the nation's largest brewer, Anheuser-Busch Inc.

As lobbying groups put on the pressure to restrict beer advertising, brewers are fighting back by trying to beat the anti-alcohol abuse lobby groups at their own message.

St. Louis-based Anheuser-Busch has quadrupled the money it spends on its anti-abuse TV ads since it began running the campaign in 1985. Miller Brewing Co., the nation's second largest brewer, began its first television campaign in December.

The largest brewers also are working harder than ever at their extensive grass-roots campaigns, in which they assist local community groups in their programs.

"In the past year, the pressure from the anti-alcohol groups is certainly increasing," said Steve Burrows, vice president of consumer awareness and education at Anheuser-Busch, makers of Budweiser. "They are searching for ways to penalize our industry."

The long commute affects performance

Commuting has become a problem for firms and in California, where two-hour drives are commonplace, and is expected to get worse as more freeways are built.

Just how far employers can go in restricting where their employees live is an open question. Few companies have written policies limiting workers to owning a home or renting within a limited area, but that is a fact that does not go unnoticed.

But companies typically don't need those rules, said Jonathan Copley, director of productivity and strategic consulting in the Los Angeles office of Arthur Anderson, the management consulting firm.

Employers often weed out the long commuters as they narrow their list of job candidates, he said.

"Intuitively and informally, this is something they look at," he said. "I have never seen a memo that says look out for this, but it's something people are thinking about. It's something that they think about during the hiring process."

Ambassador Barbie?

NEW YORK — On Anika Polzin's first trip outside her native East Germany in November her parents bought her a Barbie doll.

Now on her second excursion to the West, the 6-year-old is getting wined and dined — make that milkshaked and hamburgered — by Barbie's corporate parents.

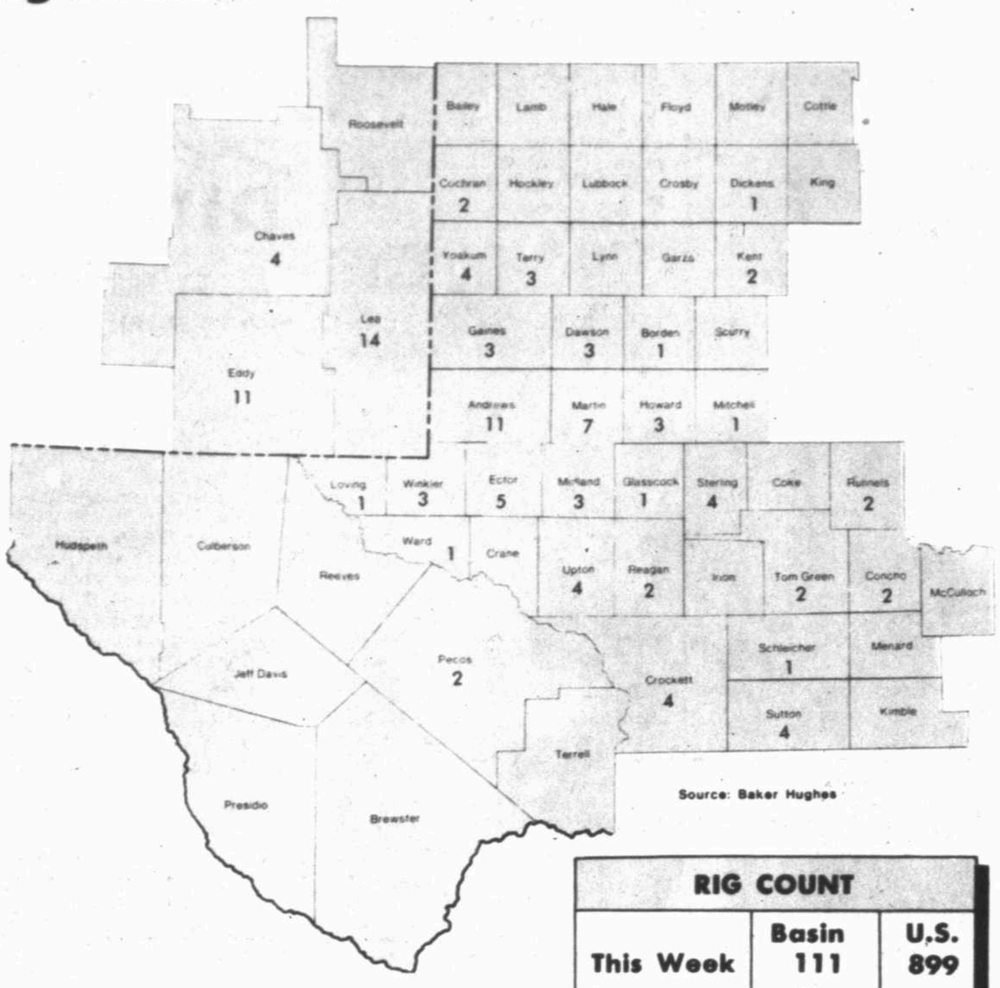

Mattel Inc., manufacturer of the famous fashion doll, brought Anika and her family over for a five-day holiday in New York. They will be guests at a black-tie affair Mattel is giving to mark the beginning of the annual American International Toy Fair and to announce what the company is calling the "Barbie Summit."

Patricia Wyatt, director of marketing for girls toys at Mattel, said the company thought it was fitting to have Anika on hand when they revealed plans for the summit.

The event is to be held each year, starting with a three-day conference in New York during the week of Nov. 19. Essay contests will be held for girls to become "delegates."

Basin, U.S. rig counts drop

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts declined this week, but both remained above year-ago levels.

The U.S. rig count fell 32 to 899, falling below 900 for the first time this year, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The Permian Basin rig count fell five to 111 after remaining stable for two weeks.

The drop continues the decline since the beginning of the year. In the past three weeks, the country has lost 88 rigs, with six of them lost last week. Experts blame the decline on a general seasonal decline.

Among major oil producing states, Texas had the largest loss for the week, dropping seven rigs, while Kansas and Louisiana each lost six. Others posting losses include Ohio, down four; California, down three; and Colorado, New Mexico and Pennsylvania, which each lost one.

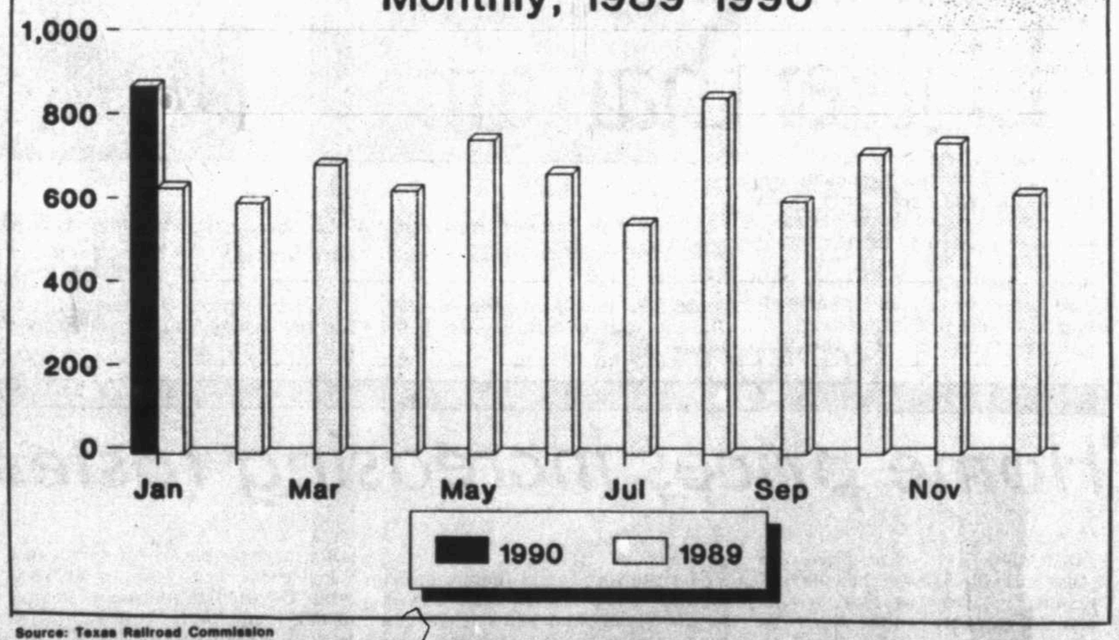

Among states posting gains for the week, Oklahoma led the list with four more rigs, while North Dakota had one.

More drilling permits issued

The Railroad Commission reports that a total of 1,313 drilling permits were issued in January, up from the 1,115 issued in December. The January total includes 821 permits to drill new oil and gas tets, 45 to re-enter existing well bores, 46 to deepen existing holes, 181 to plugback existing holes, and 64 for other wells. There were 161 permits issued in the Midland area, District 8. The number of drilling permits issued in January is up 32 percent from the 994 issued in January 1989.

More wells completed

Texas oil and gas operators completed 314 gas and 498 oil wells in January, according to the Texas Railroad Commission. This is up from December, when 251 gas and 330 oil wells were completed. January 1989's total was 239 gas and 400 oil completions. There were seven gas and 116 oil completions in the Midland area, District 8. For the first month of 1990, the commission has recorded 879 well completions, up 26 percent from the 697 reported in January 1989.

Ten best U.S. cities for working moms named

NEW YORK (AP) — Quality child care, good public schools and abundant job prospects are among the attractions that put Minneapolis-St. Paul at the head of Working Mother magazine's top-10 list of U.S. metropolitan areas.

The magazine, which published the rankings in its March issue distributed to newsstands Thursday, said the list was based on what it called "exhaustive research into every major city in the U.S."

Working Mother said the Minnesota Twin Cities region was especially attractive because the local government and business community take an active role in helping families, particularly with child care.

"There's no better place right now for working mothers than the Twin Cities," it said. 'Minneapolis and St. Paul, with their longstanding tradition of political progressivism, have become a mecca of business and government support for working parents."

The other metropolitan areas on the list, ranked in order, are: Pittsburgh, Raleigh, N.C., Milwaukee, Orlando, Fla., Seattle, Phoenix, Ariz., Boston, San Jose, Calif., and San Francisco.

The magazine said the last three on the list were considered models in terms of progressive attitudes toward families with working parents, but that the high cost of living made them unaffordable for many.

It said the criteria for judging included "affordable, accessible child care and a quality school system, after-school programs, parks and other leisure-time facilities and ... a cost of living low enough to make it feasible to enjoy short-term pleasures and save for long-term goals like college."

In addition, the magazine said, the cities were ranked based on "an abundance of job prospects, decent salary levels and employee benefits, opportunities for career advancement, and also something that's almost intangible — involvement of the business community as well as state and local governments in quality-of-life and work issues."

Working Mother, a 10-year-old magazine based in New York, has a circulation of about 460,000. It is published by Lang Communications Inc.

in this decade," Pfister said.

The segment of first-time home buyers purchasing newly constructed homes dropped to 17 percent from 23 percent in 1988 while the number buying existing single-family homes rose to 83 percent from 77 percent.

"What this tends to suggest is that the first-time buyers, in general, were increasingly priced out of the new home market last year and opted for older, less expensive houses instead," Pfister said.

The method is a raving success.

"These students don't have the inhibitions adults have," he said. "Adults are too hung up on trying to make it perfect. These special education students have an untapped resource. In some of them, the creative abilities are greatly escalated. It's unbelievable."

The students are paid on a per chair basis.

VanStavern studies different types of fabrics and glazes for this furniture, and his unquenching thirst to be creative, naturally, makes each chair different.

"Being a designer I am interested in everything," he said. "I love it. I've painted jackets for dance companies. Whatever. I just love to create. I'm an interior designer first. But this furniture is a spin off as a result of something a client wanted."

The F.A.O. Schwarz exposure spurred demand for these unique chairs, and VanStavern has filled orders throughout the United States.

Texas reishi mushroom will be sold in Japan

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A San Antonio nursery is going into the health herb business with Japan.

Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower and businessmen from Texas and Japan announced a partnership Tuesday for the growth and sale of rare reishi mushrooms, used in Asia as a medicinal herb.

"What this little mushroom does is it pretty much cures what ails you," said Hightower, standing next to a table full of brownish-orange reishi mushrooms.

Relied on for centuries for medicinal purposes in Japan and China, the mushrooms are being produced by Lone Star Growers of San Antonio, which will export them to Japan for sale to Uni-World Corp. of Tokyo, Hightower said.

Lone Star Nursery produced 600 pounds of the exotic mushrooms last year and estimates it will produce at least 1,000 to 1,500 pounds this year and 20,000 to 30,000 pounds by 1991.

The mushrooms are made into tablets, and they're not cheap. A bottle of 100 tablets sells for about $150 to $200 in Japan, Hightower said.

Reishi tablets also are sold at Austin-based Whole Foods Market for about $20, he added.

Known scientifically as Ganoderma lucidum, reishi mushrooms have been used in Japan and China to treat hypertension, arteriosclerosis, diabetes, ulcers and allergies.

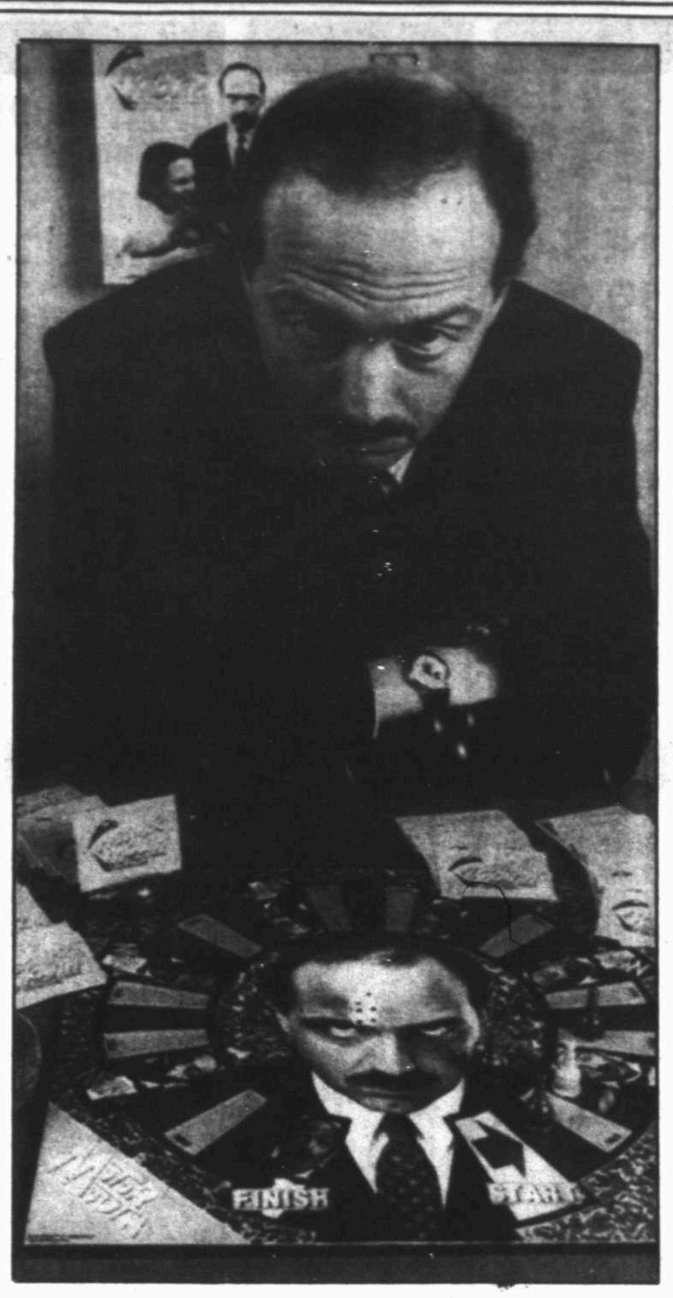

Lone Star president Joe Bradberry, Hightower and others at the news conference did not discuss specifics of which ailments reishi mushrooms might help, but Bradberry said the substance is seen as a preventive rather than a curative product.

"We're not making any medical claims," Bradberry said. "This is a health food."

Researchers at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio are studying the use of reishi to evaluate its possible use in reducing inflammation, lowering cholesterol and boosting the immune system, officials said.

Hightower, who sipped reishi tea during the announcement, joked that he might be in need of the mushrooms. "In fact, Joe, if you can take care of cedar fever, I'll take a gross of these things right now," he said to Bradberry.

Only five other American companies produce reishi mushrooms, which Bradberry said was the most difficult substance his nursery has attempted to grow.

Phone companies seek to be more innovative

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's Jan. 18, 2006. Sarah, a 77-year-old widow living with her son in Wheeling, W.Va., wakes up as a bedside video screen plays sequences of classical music.

She uses her videophone to activate the kitchen coffee maker from her bed for her son, and then switches the music to his bedside screen and turns on a morning news show. When her son leaves for work she goes back to watching the news, which has been on hold since she left it.

She dons a medical bracelet and plugs it into the videophone for a post-operative checkup from her heart surgery.

Later, according to a futurist scenario envisioned by the Bell Atlantic telephone company, she leaves an audio-video message for a friend, listens to a "talking" book club and, when she goes to bed, programs an emergency pager that will, if need be, track down her son by phone.

Bell Atlantic says the whiz-bang gadgets "Sarah" will take for granted are technically feasible now and could be in the average American's home by the end of the century.

But first, Bell Atlantic and the other regional Bell companies say, they've got to get the government off their backs.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., took a step in that direction Friday when he unveiled a bill to loosen the restrictions on information services and equipment manufacturing placed on the Bell companies in the 1984 consent decree that broke up the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Previous efforts to free the Bells have gone nowhere in Congress. Opponents fear that unrestrained Bell companies could use their enormous resources to drive out competition by limiting phone access and by cross-subsidizing their new and riskier business ventures with their heavy local telephone earnings.

But Markey, whose bill joins a similar measure introduced by Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., says it is time to defend U.S. telecommunications leadership against intense foreign competition.

Markey's bill would give the Federal Communications Commission the oversight powers held by U.S. District Judge Harold Greene, who continues to enforce the 1984 consent decree.

Greene in 1986 gave the Bells permission to transmit information services such as videotext, computer data bases, financial information and reservation and shopping services, but would not allow them to control the content of such services.

Markey's bill would allow the Bell companies, among other things, to provide through non-joint venture subsidiaries;

—Distribution of information services outside their calling territories.

—Electronic "yellow pages" directories — excluding classified advertising — to be updated monthly for two years.

—Emergency public safety services such as enhanced 911 calling.

—Research, design and development of telecommunications equipment and, under certain conditions, equipment manufacturing.

The bill contains mechanisms designed to prevent cross-subsidies and other anticompetitive practices, but allows the FCC to waive the separate subsidiary requirement after three years. The information service restrictions do not apply when a Bell company owns 5 percent or less of an information services company.

Initial reaction from the Bell companies to the bill was cautiously optimistic. BellSouth described it as "another significant step toward bringing America up to speed in telecommunications," while Bell Atlantic said it was "another clear signal that Congress recognizes the need to address telecommunications policy for the nation."

However, Gene Kimmelman, legislative director of the Consumer Federation of America, was hesitant.

"This is a valiant effort to limit ratepayer risks, but it is not clear that the bill provides more concrete consumer benefits than current law. We're still skeptical of the need for this kind of legislation," Kimmelman said.

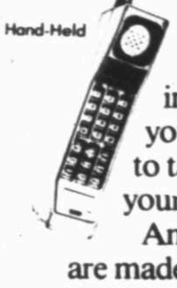

MCI Communications Corp. said the bill was "unneeded and will set back America's preeminence and global leadership in telecommunications."

South Texas dairy determined to expand

By Greg Fieg Pizano

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — In an era when small, independent milk and ice cream packagers are finding it ever more difficult to survive against sprawling conglomerates, a local dairy company has launched an ambitious expansion program.

Hygeia — a key South Texas processor of milk and ice cream — is bringing its battle to the enemy's turf with an attempt to penetrate massive new markets in Houston to the north and Mexico to the south.

"We're going to be a larger dairy company," Hygeia Dairy Co. chairman H. Lee Richards said flatly. "In this business, you've got to become larger or pretty soon you get smaller. You've got to do it to survive."

In carrying out what it envisions as a 20-year plan, Hygeia has armed itself with a new cultured milk product, a cottage cheese, a frozen yogurt and other lowfat items in an attempt to better compete against powerful giants like Borden.

In doing so, the company is bucking a trend which has seen dairy plant operating costs rise so rapidly that smaller processors are rapidly disappearing not only in Texas, but also across the nation.

Mergers, sellouts and outright shutdowns have reduced the number of dairy manufacturing, bottling and packaging companies from 1,516 in 1977 to only 429 in 1987, with perhaps as few as 375 still operating today.

Often swallowed up by larger competitors, only an estimated 750 processing plants are left now from more than 2,000 in 1977.

"In general," said Bill Tinklepaugh, staff economist and vice president of the International Ice Cream Association and Milk Industry Foundation in Washington, "there has been a tremendous consolidation within the industry as companies have tried to take advantage of the economies associated with largeness of size.

"But there are still a number of smaller local companies that are surviving because they've developed a certain loyalty in the market and have developed certain efficiencies. I think Hygeia fits into that category in that they are a very successful local company."

Indeed, the company draws its strength from an overwhelming market dominance in isolated areas, with 65 percent of Lower Rio Grand Valley consumers and 34 percent of Corpus Christi consumers professing brand loyalty to the company's cottage cheese.

At the same time, store exit surveys also show more than 60 percent of Valley consumers and nearly 30 percent of Corpus Christi consumers also say they prefer Hygeia milk.

The company also lays claim to 60 percent of the Valley ice cream market, and 20 percent of the Corpus Christi ice cream market, two bastions of loyalty Hygeia would like to spread to other cities.

Company officials contend such loyalty is built upon premium quality and superior taste. Concurring consumer testimonials are easy to come across.

Narda Casas, a Harlingen housewife and mother of three, is typical of those refusing to buy anything for their families but Hygeia, even when rival brands are on sale.

"I used to sort of jump around, but finally about six years ago I decided to stick to Hygeia because everybody in my family seemed to like the taste better," she said in an informal, random telephone survey by the Caller-Times.

"I've tried a couple of different products and the taste just isn't the same; they're either too weak or too bland. So I buy the Hygeia milk, the cottage cheese, the sour cream, the French onion dip, all of those guys."

The 60 percent Valley brand loyalty rate is among the best in the nation, said Richards, son of the company's late first president.

"You just don't get any better than that," Richards said.

Brand loyalty is one of the most coveted dynamics in a sales environment characterized by shrinking earnings; repeat sales allow distributors to establish and maintain firm prices, said packaged foods analyst Mary Lynn Harden of Duff & Phelps in Chicago.

"The emphasis at Borden's and throughout the industry is to be concerned more with earnings than revenues. It doesn't do any good to have that additional sale if you don't make any money on it," she said.

Conditions are so competitive that consolidation is critical, with large conglomerates such as Borden's converting numerous small dairy operations to "hyperplants" to cut costs and boost profits.

Though Hygeia's overall gross sales have increased 40 percent between 1981 and 1989, and 20 percent from 1988 to 1989, a more difficult problem lies in the company's attempt to reach a virtually untapped market in giant Houston.

Houston by itself offers a metropolitan market three times greater than all the metropolitan markets where Hygeia has established itself over the past 60 years.

Since being introduced in Houston in 1985, Hygeia products have nabbed 2.5 percent of the market share. If a target goal of just 5 percent market share can be reached, the company will have doubled its ice cream production alone.

Already, Hygeia products are being sold in 108 Houston-area Fiesta supermarkets and 98 Apple Tree convenience markets. Efforts are under way to find still more outlets.

To bolster its market strength the company has introduced five new products aimed at an informed, health conscious consumer: a light cottage cheese, low fat milk, ice milk and light frozen yogurt, and light sour cream.

In the first three weeks, Lite Time Frozen Yogurt accounted for 18.3 percent of the company's total frozen desert sales, and Lite Time Premium Ice Milk accounted for 16.3 percent.

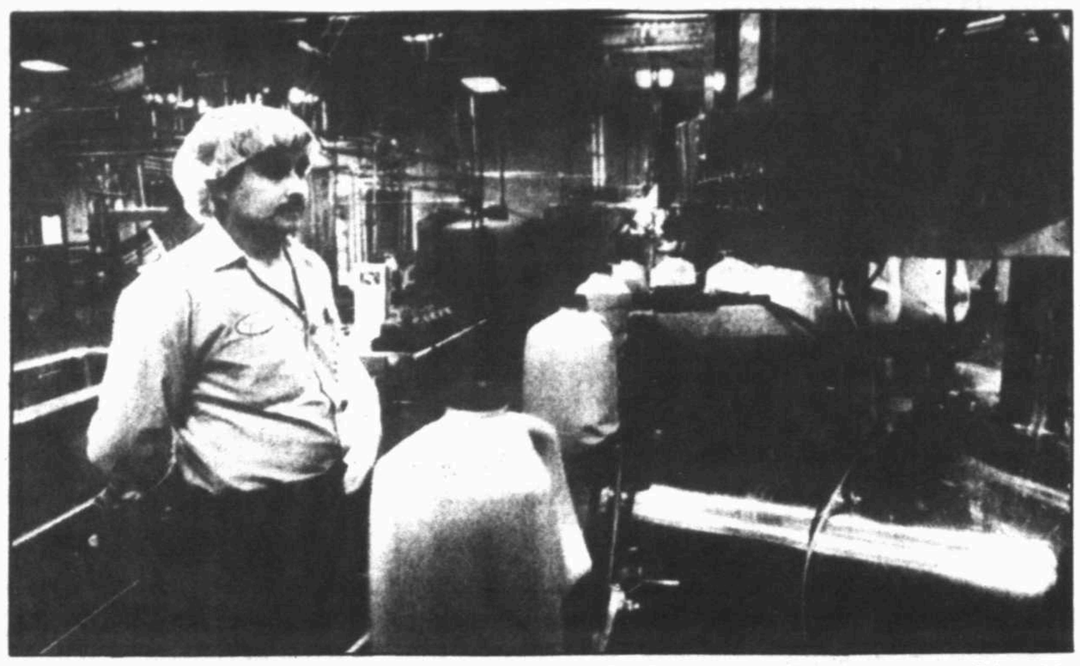

This month the company is introducing Nu-trish, a one-half-percent lowfat milk packed with special bacterial cultures — lactobacillus acidophilus and bifidobacterium — to boost the body's natural digestive processes, particularly after diminishment by medication or imbalance due to aging.

South of the border, Hygeia has another market penetration tool.

A ban on imported fluid milk has been lifted in Mexico, opening the door for Hygeia to establish agreements with distributors not only in Monterrey, Mexico's third largest city, but Torreon, Saltillo, Durango and Guadalajara. Negotiations are under way to establish new distributorships in Aguas Callientes, Acapulco and Mexico City.

Demand for U.S. milk has been accelerated by government controls which caused Mexican dairymen to convert their milk to unregulated cheese products in order to clear a profit.

Bill Davis, agricultural attache at the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City, said market conditions present an ideal opportunity for dairy companies such as Hygeia to exploit their geographic advantage.

Profits increase wealth of owner Caroline Hunt

By EVAN RAMSTAD

DALLAS (AP) — While bad luck and bad business were costing her more celebrated brothers their billion-dollar fortunes, Caroline Rose Hunt increased her inherited wealth through business deals built around luxury hotels and real estate.

Miss Hunt, a daughter of fabled oilman H.L. Hunt, leaves the management of the companies to professionals, but "she sets the standard," said spokesman Keith Waldon.

She has become a billionaire by some estimates, while brothers Nelson Bunker Hunt and William Herbert Hunt have gone bankrupt through failed silver speculation and oil losses.

Her Rosewood Hotel Group owns three pricey hotels, and manages three others, with a philosophy that stresses being a good host and involves twice as many staff members as guests.

There's more than a mint on the pillow a Rosewood hotel. "We want to produce the perfect service package," said Hotel Group President Atef Mankarios.

"When you're a host in your own house, you say goodbye, otherwise you're not a good host," Mankarios said. "That's what we strive to do."

But accompanying a guest to the door after a visit isn't the only distinguishing trait of Rosewood hotels, such as Hotel Crescent Court and The Mansion on Turtle Creek in Dallas.

The company made headlines last fall when it sold the Hotel Bel-Air in Los Angeles for more than $110 million, the highest price per room ever paid for a hotel, and twice what the company paid for it in 1982. Rosewood invested $20 million to renovate the Bel-Air's 59 rooms and build 33 suites.

In the process, the company revived the hotel's mystique as a secluded haunt for Hollywood stars and business moguls.

To protect its cachet and the investment of the Japanese group that bought the Bel-Air, Rosewood entered a contract to continue managing the Bel-Air. The deal, which sealed the 10-year-old company's reputation, is one Rosewood and Mankarios hope to repeat.

Mankarios said the company will grow slowly through such renovation and management deals and other joint ventures.

"What we have to bring to the owners is a vast pool of experience and expertise to ensure any hotel we manage will continue to be managed and be classified as one of the best in the world," he said. "That is very valuable expertise that very few people have that we have to offer on the table."

When hired by Rosewood in 1987, Mankarios, 41, brought expertise gained from nearly 20 years of work in all areas of the hotel industry. A native of Egypt, he was a night concierge at a tiny Paris hotel while doing post-graduate work on his law degree. He skipped law practice to garnish plates, cut onions, bellhop and, eventually, study hotel management in the United States.

He said his ideas meshed with Rosewood's service philosophy.

The hotel group's parent, Rosewood Property Co., developed The Crescent, a collection of shops and galleries anchored by a 17-story office tower and Hotel Crescent Court, which opened in 1985.

The older Mansion on Turtle Creek recently became Texas' first hotel to be awarded the Mobil Five-Star Award for lodging and dining excellence. The Bel-Air is also a Five-Star winner.

Both Dallas hotels boast some of the finest restaurants in the city, a key ingredient in all Rosewood hotels, said Mankarios, who sometimes describes the properties as restaurants with rooms.

Service staff outnumber guests 2-to-1 in the hotels, which feature spacious rooms and suites decorated with imported flowers and amenities such as interpreters and limousine service.

In addition to the Dallas hotels, Rosewood owns Hotel Hana-Maui in Hawaii and manages the Bel-Air and Tokyo's Hotel Seiyo Ginza. The company is also affiliated with Campton Place in San Francisco.

The company will grow carefully in the niche-oriented hotel industry so as not to jeopardize the value of its current propoerties, Mankarios said.

Andy Anderson, a Rosewood vice president, said new hotels may be developed at the rate of one a year or less. He said Rosewood would not change its development selection process strictly because of a financial opportunity.

"Because what you do then is realter the positioning of your other products," Anderson said.

High-dollar demographics and a year-round market are two keys to the success of such properties. "That would be major international cities," Anderson said.

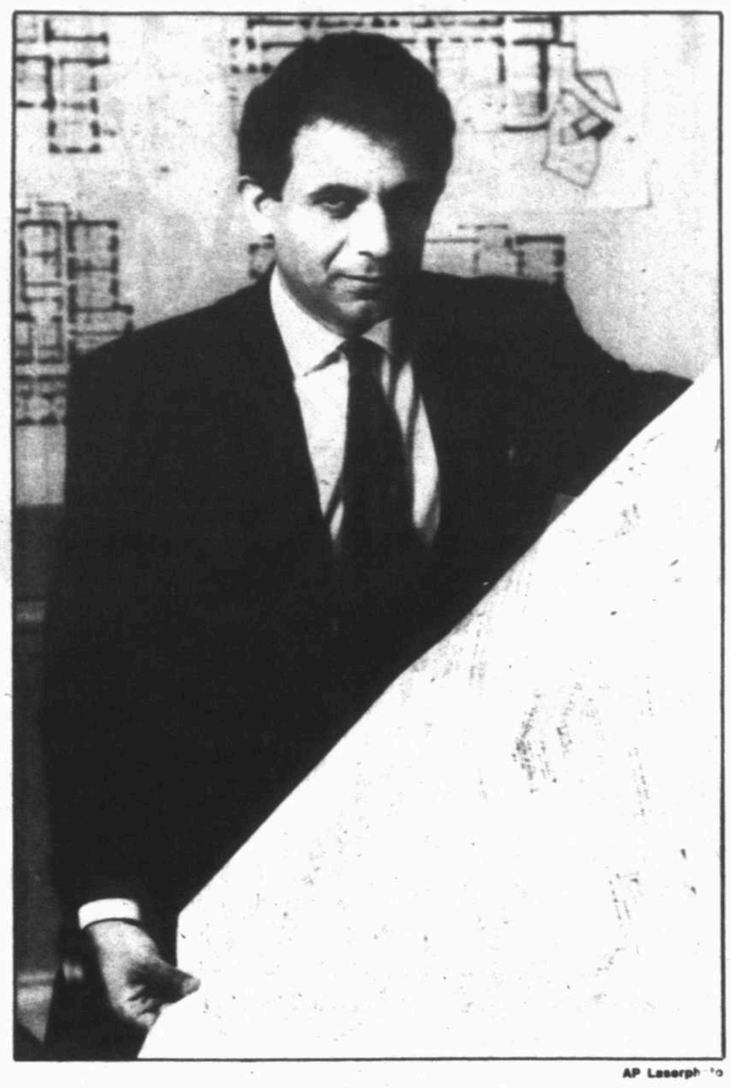

Mankarios said the Rosewood hotels try to meet a demand for a very high level of service and noted some large hotel chains, spotting the same demand, have introduced concierge or VIP floors.

But the company's secondary mission has been to convince the financial community that a hotel's success cannot be measured by its first years of operation.

"The actual value of our class of hotels is the appreciation of the asset," Mankarios said.

He conceded that hotels, like the rest of the economy, were affected by the downturn in oil prices of the mid-80s, but said he thinks Rosewood learned some lessons and became more efficient.

"We learned how to manage our money so when the economy turns around as its beginning to do in Dallas and as it has been in Los Angeles, our profitability is a lot higher."

Report finds rising job surveillance

By KAREN BALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employers use electronic devices to keep tabs on workers at an alarming rate that is increasing stress in the workplace, according to a report released this week by a workers' advocacy group.

Computers and other electronic equipment are used for several types of worker surveillance, such as allowing employers to listen in on phone calls, count keystrokes and gauge the amount of time workers spend on transactions, said the report by a Cleveland-based group called 9to5, Working Women Education Fund.

Computer monitoring — used to evaluate about 10 million American workers, many times without their knowledge or permission — has become a "technological whip" for keeping workers in line, the report said.

Businesses contend monitoring is merely an extension of normal supervision.

"Employer monitoring is a necessary tool for employers to review work progress," said Roger Middleton, an attorney for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

He said monitoring is also used to train workers and promote those who perform well. In addition, hidden video cameras serve security functions, he said.

Sharon Danann, research director for the group that conducted the report, said a certain degree of monitoring is acceptable, but managers rely too heavily on it to assess workers' efficiency.

"Supervisors seem to go berserk with this stuff. It becomes an overboard effort at control," she said.

The report included case studies of workers who had complained about job surveillance to the group's "Computer Spying Hotline" that was established last year.

The studies showed computers are often used by airlines and phone companies to time how long workers spend on the phone with customers. For ticket agents, the computers show how successful the agent was at booking flights.

Some hospitals require nurses to carry a small computer for logging data so supervisors will know how much time they spend with each patient, the report said. In addition, a growing number of truck drivers are required to turn in printouts showing their speed, the gears they use and the time and length of their stops, it said.

Surveys show that monitored workers are more likely than non-monitored workers to describe their jobs as stressful, the report said.

Workers who complained to the hotline believed monitoring too often "sets up an atmosphere of suspicion and results in heavy-handed and demeaning discipline," the report said.

JAY BOWDEN ENDORSES
NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As a businessman, Certified Public Accountant and father, I believe that Midland needs a dedicated, properly motivated judge in the 238th District Court who will administer the law with equity and justice. In the 10 years that I have been associated with Nick Taylor, I have found him to be concerned about Midland and its citizens. He is involved in such worthwhile programs as The Boy Scouts of America, Midland Crime Prevention Commission, Midland Rape Crisis Center, and the Council on Substance Abuse.

I firmly believe that as citizens of Midland, we need to support those individuals who will make crime unprofitable, uncomfortable and disappointing. Nick Taylor is such an individual. Please join me in supporting him as District Judge in the Republican Primary on March 13, 1990.

S&L reform may hurt builders survey says

Copley News Service

Strict new federal regulations aimed at reforming the battered savings and loan industry could wipe out many small builders, because the new capital rules make it tougher for builders to obtain financing, a new survey warns.

Nearly 60 percent of the builders who responded to the poll said the S&L crisis and the re-regulation it prompted have affected their ability to obtain construction financing and do joint ventures with thrifts, according to the San Diego-based KPMG Peat Marwick/Goodkin Real Estate Group, which performed the national survey.

As a result of the new law, many builders who have traditionally relied on S&Ls for their financing may be forced out of business, warned Sanford Goodkin, Peat Marwick's national executive director of real estate services.

"Everyone is traumatized," Goodkin exclaimed. "The only people who are not knocked in a loop are builders who are locked into long-term financing with financial institutions that don't have problems."

The survey included 800 builders and non-builders — including financial institutions, real estate lenders, pension funds, investment firms, law firms and educational institutions.

Last year, when the landmark Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act (FIRREA) became law, several lending and investment practices were banned outright or discouraged through strict capital rules.

Under FIRREA, loans to one borrower are limited to 15 percent of tangible capital, and direct investments are virtually prohibited. The two practices are blamed for a number of thrift failures during the 1980s.

Although limits on loans to one borrower may sound prudent, it hampers many small thrifts, said Robert Adelizzi, president and chief executive officer of San Diego-based HomeFed Corp.

Who will pay for the S&L bailout

Money for the bailout of failed savings and loans will come from federal funds. According to a recent study, here is how much the bailout will cost each state, per person. Thirteen states will receive more money than they pay.

Texas	$3,488	Alaska	$924	Nebraska	$544
New Mexico	3,135	Kansas	774	Colorado	514
Arkansas	2,979	Louisiana	695	Utah	214

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"I'm the Bydee man," Joseph says during a telephone interview. "And Bydee means bringing you delightful, entertaining experiences. And the Bydee people have a certain philosophy and principles by which they live, and I give you an example with regards to peace.

" 'Peace comes in pieces, and each one of us is responsible for bringing about peace, but first we have to each identify our piece of responsibility and work together in groups or as individuals, and one day we put all the pieces together and have world peace."

Colors are "very important" to the fictitious Bydee people.

They "express their emotions in the colors." Different kinds of "colors equals more happiness. Bright colors to make you smile, and warm colors to befriend you," he said.

Joseph, a native of Trinidad who now lives in Austin, is public relations officer for the City of Austin Parks and Recreation Department and in that capacity is currently interim curator of the Carver Museum there.

A showing of his work, which is free to the public, in being held from 3 to 9 p.m. today at the North East YMCA. Sponsored by the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs and the North East YMCA, the art show and sale is part of the Black History Month celebration.

What's in a name? Sometimes — life or death.

Unquenchable first love set within a bitter feud between two families provides the backdrop for William Shakespeare's tragedy "Romeo and Juliet."

Based on a poem by English author Arthur Brooke, "Romeo and Juliet" also has been made into a tragic opera by Charles Gunod and formed the basis for the Broadway musical "West Side Story."

"Things happen so fast in the opera," says Greg Holland, marketing director for Texas Opera Theater. "It happens so much quicker. It's like watching a movie after you've read the book."

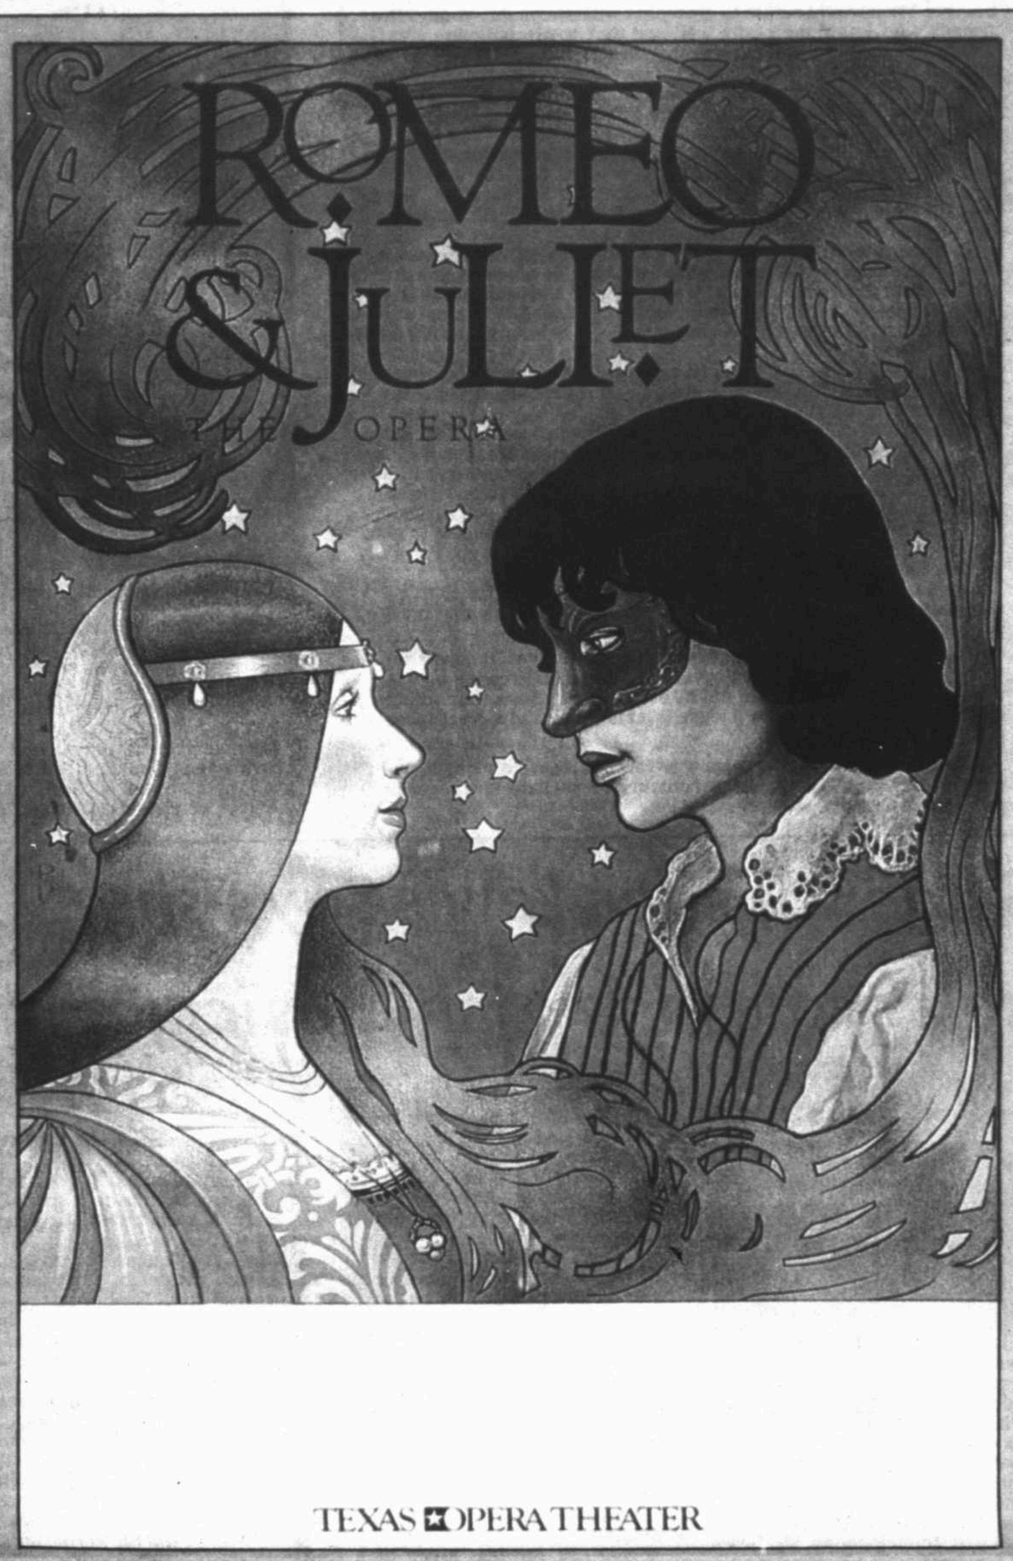

Midland Opera Theater brings Texas Opera Theater's production of Gunod's "Romeo and Juliet" to Midland High School for an 8 p.m. performance Friday. Originally written in French, the production will be sung in English as are all of TOT's productions.

Some of the Shakespearean text, "in a real broad format," has been incorporated into the music, Holland says.

"In the balcony scene, for instance, they use Shakespeare's line 'what light through yonder window breaks' and also in the same scene they've used 'what's in a name.' "

Texas Opera Theatre's "Romeo and Juliet" opened Feb. 9 in Shreveport, La.

"I was pleasantly surprised. When you're on the road, every night is an opening night, but Shreveport was one of those rare exceptions where you have a tremendous opening night and a tremendous road show all in one. The wonderful thing we're finding about 'Romeo and Juliet' is it has a nice name recognition to non-traditional opera audiences."

Midland Opera Theater brings Texas Opera Theater's production of Gunod's "Romeo and Juliet" to Midland High School, Friday at 8 p.m.

Shakespeare buffs will recognize other changes in the pacing and story line. For instance, Holland says, The banquet scene in Act 1, where Romeo meets Juliet, is "much larger that the play." The major change comes in the third

'Pippin' on search forsignificance

The secret to staying young is refusing to grow old. That's the advice Berthe, the grandmother, gives in the musical "Pippin," now being presented in Davis Theatre I, Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Playing the role of Berthe is Frances Heltzel, known to Midland audiences through her roles in Midland Community Theatre productions of "Funny Girl" as Mrs. Strakosh; "Annie," as Frances Perkins, the Secretary of Labor; "Whose Life is It Anyway?" as the psychiatrist Dr. Barr; and "The Elephant Man," as the nurse, the princess and the countess.

In addition, Ms. Heltzel, who has recently moved to Midland, has been an active thespian at Permian Playhouse and the Globe Theatre.

When her friends discover what role she's playing in "Pippin," they say, "Well, Frances that sounds just like you," Ms. Heltzel says.

"I do a song that says don't take life so seriously, have fun; take things as they come along, don't do too much planning, don't do too much thinking. The song says I have

Kentucky HeadHunters hot new band

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

"Pickin' on Nashville" pays. Ask The Kentucky HeadHunters.

The album made an overnight success out of the five members of this band — none of whom are new to the music business, all of whom have traveled more music roads than the ear can easily absorb in one listening.

The Kentucky HeadHunters, among the hottest and most talked about groups in Nashville today, will perform at Midland's New West Club Thursday.

Richard Young, rhythm guitarist, recalls his first exposure to music during an advance telephone interview.

"When I was a little kid, I used to go over to my grandmother's at Glasgow, and she was not a music fanatic. She had a little record player that played 45s, and she had a lot of Les Paul records and Mary Ford, and she had a lot of Elvis Presley singles. And she would put those on for me."

Young's grandmother would take down from a flower arrangement she had, what Young remembers to be a toy ukulele and a toy banjo.

"She had this big floor-length gilded mirror, and I'd get in front of that, and she'd play Elvis singles for me, and she'd say, 'Dance pretty.'

"I really liked that."

Later, when he was in the sixth grade, Young heard Roy Orbison sing "Pretty Woman" over the radio.

"It did something to me. Even before that, I had seen the Beatles on television."

He remembers that Sunday night clearly. The television at home was on the blink and he went to his uncle's house to watch the Beatles.

"I felt two ways about it. I felt furious because I felt bad because I always a secret. I believe if I refuse to grow old I will always stay young. The friends who know me really well say that is my philosophy."

'PIPPIN'

Now entering its 44th season, the theater has opened its major musical this month. "Pirates of Penzance," which was planned for 1990, could not be cast. Thus "Pippin," which ran 1,944 performances on Broadway beating "South Pacific," "The Sound of Music" and "Mame," was chosen.

Loosely based on the relationship between Charlemagne and his son, Pepin, who did not get along, the musical tells the story of a young man's search for significance. Stephen Schwartz of "Godspell" fame wrote the music and lyrics and Roger O. Hirson wrote the musical comedy.

Andy Salcedo, who plays the role of Leading Player, the character who officiates over the proceedings as master of revelries, top dog and minstrel show interlocutor, is pleased with the change. Salcedo, who has been in 10 MCT shows including "Godspell," "Grease" and "Jesus Christ, Superstar," has wanted to be in this musical since he was a teen-ager.

"I saw it when I was 16. I was on my quest for the meaning of life, and I fell in love with it. I've wanted to do it ever since. I'm really excited about the theater finally doing it."

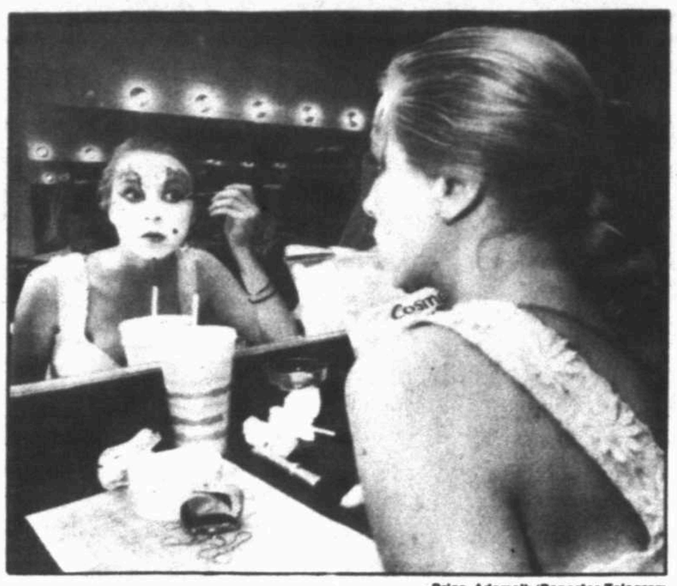

Ms. Heltzel recalls someone mentioned "Pippin," saying it included a "wonderful part," one which might be right for her.

"If somebody mentions it in that way, I usually go and tryout, if it's a play I've read and liked. If I read the play, and I don't like it, then I wouldn't try out for it. You've got to enjoy what you're doing or there's no point in it. I'm one of those people who believe if you are led or guided by someone toward something, then maybe there's the possibility that it was meant to be."

Salcedo, who serves as director of human resources for Kent Oil Company, finds "Pippin" an excellent choice for the opening musical because it appeals to all ages.

"This is a very entertaining play with no dead spots. It covers the whole range of emotions and covers a young man growing up and experiencing life. People will not be bored. I don't think they will be offended by anything. They'll leave thinking they had a great theatrical experience."

Ms. Heltzel finds it an "odd show to follow because it's a medieval costumed type of show, but it contains up to date language. In medieval times, the dresses were long."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Allison Kirkpatrick applies makeup prior to a rehearsal for MCT's production of "Pippin."

These costumes are a "modern version of a medieval costume, a combination of medieval and right now. I think the audience will be very pleased with the way it's turned out."

The cast is solid, Ms. Heltzel says.

"They are absolutely more fun to be with personally and the talent is just amazing."

Cast members include Bobby Marshall as Pippin; John Haupert as Charlemagne; Junanne Brock Winters as Catherine who strives to win Pippin's heart; Michael James and Jodi Faulkner alternating in the role of Catherine's child; Patty Loftis as Pippin's predatory stepmother; and Bryan Patterson as the step-mother's egotistical son, Lewis.

Also in the cast are Amy Heidelberg, Barbara Fritz, Allison Kirkpatrick, Polly Welmaker, Carole Cristiani, Leanna Varton, Diane Faulkner, Jill McElligott, Robin Brinnage, Ronnie Williams and Daniel Salcedo.

Director for the production is Don Bachmann with musical direction by Bert Bostic. Choreography is by Jef Gurley. Stage manager is Jed Barker assisted by Rhondy Barker, Marcy Ferris and Margaret Williams.

For reservations call 682-4111. The musical is on stage at 8 p.m. Friday, Saturday, at 2:30 and 8 p.m. Feb. 25, at 8 p.m. March 1-3, at 2:30 and 8 p.m. March 4, at 8 p.m. March 8-10 and at 2:30 p.m. March 11.

For Ms. Heltzel, the stage is an avocation she enjoys "tremendously." Her interest began when she was 5.

"I happened to be a very precocious child, and I had a great aunt who was a teacher at a college. She needed a little girl to go on stage because the little girl she cast evidentally wouldn't do it. My great aunt just came and got me, cleaned me up and put a dress on me, and said, 'Frances, there's a little boy' — a college student — 'sitting on the stage, and he's talking on the phone, and you are to go up to him and climb in his lap and say, 'Hello Daddy.'

"Of course, I had never seen this boy before. So I walked out on the stage, climbed up into the young man's lap and said 'Hello Daddy,' which was what my director told me to do, and I've been doing it ever since."

Ms. Heltzel credits her open manner as a child to coming "from a very musical family" and being an only child.

"I think only children have great egos because they get a lot of attention that they don't have to fight other siblings to get, so they grow up very sure of themselves as long as the adult people around them praise them for the good things that they do.

"It was just accepted that whatever talent I had, I was to do the best I could with so I sang and danced all the way through my early years in church and school. When I grew up, of course and got married, that stopped while I raised a family.

"Then when my husband died, and I needed some outside activities to keep me from going bonkers from sitting in front of a televison set, it was just the natural thing to do, to get back into something that I really enjoyed — singing, dancing, acting — generally just having enough guts to get out in front of a lot of people — especially when you get as old as I am playing grandmothers."

Singer Jenifer Lewis says she 'celebrates life with music, joy'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Lewis

"That's who I am; that's what I am," says Ms. Lewis, who will salute the Black Broadway musical Saturday at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Student Lounge.

The actress talked briefly about her career Thursday while she was waiting in Monticello, Ark., to catch a ride to somewhere else. Her husky voice warm over the telephone, Ms. Lewis said she feels acting is something a person is born with, "it's a natural instinctual thing."

She prefaced her next statement with "I can't speak for anybody else" before saying, "I was born into this. I'm a natural singer, a natural dancer, a natural actress, whether that's dramatic acting or simply acting the fool."

The Odessa event, which is part of UTPB's Black History Celebration held in honor of Black History Month, features a show Ms. Lewis recently added to her repertoire. Some of the shows Ms. Lewis highlights were written and composed by blacks, while others featured black casts. All reflected the culture of their times.

Ms. Lewis, who laughs frequently when she talks, described her "tribute to Black Broadway musicals" as "Jenifer Lewis bringing her own self to this particular production. There is comedy, there is education, there is music and there is fun. That's what the show is about."

Ms. Lewis said she loves people which translates on stage to having "a great respect" for her audiences and presenting "something that's really going to move them, educate them and cause them to feel something.

"If you ask for that much of a person's life, it's important to be there in the moment feeling the excitement and the creativity of any piece of work."

On stage, Ms. Lewis created the smash role of Effie in the Broadway hit "Dreamgirls" and has starred in such Broadway favorites as "Eubie," "Ain't Misbehavin' " and "Mahalia." In 1986, she dazzled off-Broadway critics with a lengthy sell-out in her own one-woman show, "On the Couch."

Ms. Lewis' favorite role is the Diva in "On the Couch."

"It was my creation, and it came from me, and that made it special," she said. "It wasn't someone else's work."

Dubbed the "queen of cabaret," Ms. Lewis' nightclub appearances have spread from New York to Los Angeles, from Monte Carlo to the Bahamas, from Atlantic City to Cape Cod. She toured Europe starring in "Harlem Story" and traveled nationwide performing with Bette Midler.

Ms. Lewis finds the statement "I am" to be "the most simple and wonderful thing that anybody can say about themselves. When you come to my audience, come as you are, and then we'll see what happens."

Sponsored by the UT Permian Basin Cultural Committee and supported in part by the Odessa Cultural Council, tickets for dinner and Ms. Lewis' show are $20 to the public and $10 for faculty, students and staff at UTPB. Admission to the show only is $10 for the public and $5 for students, staff and faculty at UTPB. Tickets are available in the PASS Office at UTPB and must be purchased by Friday. For more information call 1-367-2125.

For Ms. Lewis, who looks forward to "all" her concerts, every night is a "new night. That's what so special about live theater; we will write a new story when I'm in Odessa. I'm positive that something special, fun and crazy will happen in Odessa. Come on out and have a good time."

HAPPY

In 1986, Joseph, recognizing the unhappiness he saw in most people, had a message he wanted to spread — "each one has the right to be happy." The voice he found to express his message was the Bydee story: "a primitive people, a fictitious people;" the medium was broad and included art, poetry, story telling and writing.

"I'm not a trained artist. I decided I wanted to be an artist and went after it. If you cannot find an opportunity to utilize your skills, you have to use your skills to create an opportunity to utilize your skills. And that's what I'm doing."

His skill at listening, which became apparent to him four years ago through a comment made by a friend, is part of what inspired him to create the Bydee people.

"I have friends call me from all over the country to tell me their problems, and one day I was talking to one of my friends, I asked him why does everybody call me. His response was, 'Because you listen. I can call you and tell you anything that is going on in my life and you will listen.' "

Joseph realized even his own mother called him to tell him her problems.

"To be a friend, you have to be patient with others. Sometimes I don't have to say anything, I just have to listen, and they can solve the problem themselves. To me, the most important relationship between human beings is friendship because, like you mother is your mother — that's a given — but when you can befriend your mother, it makes all the difference in the world in the communication and love and happiness and everything that goes with it."

Joseph, whose family moved to New York when he was a teen-ager, went to high school in New York City and started college there at John Jay College of Criminal Justice. His undergraduate degree in sociology and anthropology is from Tougaloo College, Tougaloo, Miss., and his masters degree in urban studies is from Trinity University in San Antonio.

Joseph recalls the question his father always asked first during those years he was away at school — " 'Are you happy?'

"Even though I might be in a bad mood" due to school and studying, the question "changed my attitude right away. Happiness became the issue. ...It reminded me that that's the important thing."

Joseph, who emphasizes "the message is more important than the messenger," says he's "trying to tell people that they need to be happy regardless of what happens in life. I'm talking about inner happiness that is equal to saying I like myself. This is me, and I accept myself, and I'm happy with myself. Accepting that there are a lot of things that you can't control in your life, but always working toward making things better for yourself."

As for Joseph himself, "I'm happy by choice. I have problems like anybody else, but basically I'm a happy person."

Since 1986, Joseph has created Bydee coloring books called "Color Me Happy, Color Me Bydee," and paintings and posters, all of which include poetry.

He and was in Los Angeles this past fall meeting with those interested in setting the Bydee people to animation. In addition, Joseph is working on a written story of the Bydee people.

"Not being from this country, when you live in America, you have to live like you're living in America. This is the land of opportunities, so you got to go for it. That's another thing I'm doing — going for it."

An avid soccer player, Joseph's "most joy" comes as serving as the "messenger of the Bydee people. I am able to touch people, and that's good. That's what it's all about. This has made so many people happy. I'm able to enjoy a painting, and the message in the painting as much as anybody else. The truth is I'm part of the audience, too."

OPERA

act during the death scene.

"Juliet wakes up — she recovers from the potion that Friar Laurence gave her — before Romeo dies of the poison that he takes," Holland says. "That enables them to have a final duet together. Juliet takes the dagger from Romeo and stabs herself while Romeo is still alive, and they die together, whereas in the play Romeo comes into the tomb, he thinks Juliet is dead, he drinks a poison, he dies. Juliet comes out from under the potion, sees Romeo dead, grabs his dagger and kills herself."

Another opera device which is not in the play is the Act 1 song, "Queen Mav," designed to create a mostly lighthearted situation between Romeo and his best friend, Mercutio.

"Romeo is nervous about being in the Capulet house during this ball because the families are mortal enemies. It is a masked ball. Mercutio gets real brave after everyone has gone into the banquet hall, and he takes his mask off and Romeo basically says, 'Don't take your mask off. You're making me nervous.' Mercutio responds, 'Don't be paranoid. relax. We're better sword fighters. Why are you so nervous?' "

Romeo then tells his friend that a nightmare he had the night before is making him jumpy, Holland says. At that point Mercutio sings "Queen Mav," about the queen of all illusion who comes to people when they are asleep.

"All of a sudden, out of the blue, you have this whole piece in the opera which is not in the play which gives more depth to the characters. Each character can't really sing about self. This is an introduction to Mercutio and his relationship with Romeo. It is one of the nice moments in the show."

TOT, the nation's largest touring opera company, annually reaches more than 75,000 individuals in about 45 Texas communities with its opera performances and educational programs featuring America's young opera artists.

In addition to performing in Texas, TOT has served as the state's leading arts ambassador in 43 states and the District of Columbia.

Tickets to the Midland performance of "Romeo and Juliet," are $12.50 for reserved seats, $10 for senior citizens and $8 students. They may be purchased by calling 684-4101, or by sending a check to Midland Opera Theater, P.O. Box 4504, Midland, Texas 79704.

In addition, Ann Thompson of Houston will give a talk on "Romeo and Juliet" at 3 p.m. today at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. Tickets, priced at $3.50, may be purchased at the door.

TOT's 1989-90 touring season marks the third year that First City Bancorporation of Texas has made a special statewide grant to TOT to partially support the opera company's performances in seven Texas communities that have First City member banks.

The company tours with two casts.

"If we were a resident company, we would be doing a performance every other day. But on the road we do at least five performances a week, sometimes two in one day. So we have to hire two principals for each of the principal roles or we'll ruin their voices."

Midland calls for both casts to perform because the production is staged for students during the day through the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., NCNB and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holt.

Singing the roles of Juliet and Romeo for the matinee performance will be Janet Folta and Michael Philip Davis. For Friday evening's performance — sponsored in part by Shell Oil Company Foundation — the principal roles will be sung by Lee Merrill and Michael Putsch.

Holland says the Midland audience will be intrigued by the set.

"In Act 1, Scene 2, for the first two nights we got applause for our scene change, which is odd. But, there's a stunning scene change. The balcony swings around so that you see it from the side perspective and the archways shift so it's almost as if you were looking at it through a camera."

All of the scene changes are accomplished with the actors, in costume, onstage, in what could almost be called a dreamlike state, Holland says.

"It gives a real feel of time passing and of changing location, and it really helps you within the entire perspective of the opera to understand the sequence of events."

What Holland most likes about "Romeo and Juliet" is its relavancy to today's changing world political scene.

"First of all, there was an extreme hatred between the Montagues and the Capulets, but the hatred is so old that no one can even remember why they hate each other. They just do it as a matter of course. These two underlings rebelled against this, and they changed their whole lives and their ways of thinking. Look at how that's happening in the world today with the Berlin Wall and Russia and now Gorbachev wanting a multi-party system.

"What we found was so timely as we were putting the show together was the fact that Romeo and Juliet in their small way are kind of paralleling what is happening in our world today. I think that's one of the reasons that audiences are responding to 'Romeo and Juliet.' " had this gift to see when things looked like they were going to work, a foresight, and I saw that the Beatles were going to be big. And it infuriated me because I was worried for Elvis. I knew he'd had it, for a while anyway.

"And the other side of me was saying, 'Yeah, that's what I want to do, right there.' And I've been doing it ever since."

All of the HeadHunters developed an interest in music when they were young: Ricky Lee Phelps, lead singer, was 9; Doug Phelps, bass guitar, was 10; Fred Young, drummer; was 10; Greg Martin, lead guitar, was 10.

Mostly the five members are related. The two Youngs are brothers. The two Phelps are brothers. Martin almost is the odd man out, but not quite. He is a cousin of the Youngs. Count him family.

And family counts for these five players who credit their background with coloring their music. Home base for the band is "the practice house," a home on the Young family farm given to the band by Effie Young, their grandmother. Until she died in 1981 she was one of the boys' biggest fans. The Edmonton farm has been in the Young family since 1798.

In the late '60s the Youngs and Martin formed, along with a couple of other cousins, a rock 'n' roll group called Itchy Brothers, which stayed together in various forms for a decade, getting nibbles but no lasting bites from record companies.

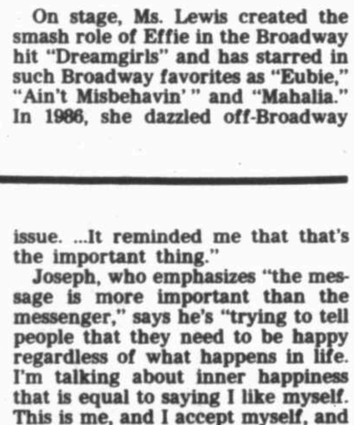

"We used to go to New York, and we thought we sounded like some English rock group, and they'd say, 'You sound like hilly billy speed metal,'t" Young says.

Next, Martin and the Youngs spent several years in the country scene. Martin toured with Ronnie McDowell and he met Doug Phelps; Fred Young toured with singer Sylvia. Richard Young was a staff writer with Acuff-Rose, a large Nashville songwriting company.

Three years ago, Doug Phelps began jamming with Martin and the Youngs. Out of curiosity, Ricky Lee Phelps dropped by one night, completing the sound currently taking Nashville by storm.

"Ricky opened up bluegrass to the band," Young says. "I had never been around bluegrass music. You would think that us being from Kentucky we'd be more informed on bluegrass, and the Phelps boys would be more informed on the Delta blues thing because they are from Arkansas. But, it was visa versa. We actually brought the blues and the blues rock to the band, and they brought the country and the bluegrass to the band.

"We've been able to take all that together, with everybody's influence, add a little jazz, and a little different Allegheny mountain music — anything we've ever listened to we've been able to put that into one ball of wax and mold it."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Museum to mark 25th anniversary

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum marks its 25th anniversary of service to Odessa and the nation this month.

On February 26, 1965, the Presidential Museum opened its doors to the public as the only institution in the United States devoted to the Office of the Presidency.

Through the generosity of the City of Odessa, the Heritage of Odessa Foundation and through the timeless efforts of staff, volunteers and friends, the Presidential Museum held a ribbon cutting ceremony in May 1984 celebrating its new expanded quarters and dynamic exhibit galleries.

Throughout 1990, the museum is planning several celebrations of this important anniversary.

The first scheduled event will be in conjunction with the Heritage of Odessa Foundation on Presidents Day, Monday. At ceremonies scheduled for 11:30 a.m., The Presidential Museum will commemorate its founding and recognize its early founders. James F. Skurka, the museum's director will review the museum's rich history and Dorothy Croft, one of the early founders, will lead the pledge of allegiance.

The Heritage of Odessa Foundation will then be unveiling a historical marker noting President Bush's residency in the City of Odessa. Dignitaries at this ceremony will include Sen. John Monford and Rep. Gary Watkins. The ceremonies will take place at the front entrance to the museum and are open to the public.

Pin Points presents "1001 Black Inventions" at 7 p.m. Saturday at Midland High School Auditorium.

The performance is sponsored by the Negro Business and Professional Women Club as part of the Black History Month Observance.

The play, written by Ersky Freeman, is a humorous but accurate look at the contribution made by African Americans to the everyday life of American society, says a release from the Negro Business and Professional Women Club.

"The cast of Pin Points welcomes the opportunity to untangle the sometimes twisted version of history by portraying the vastness of black ingenuity in '1001 Black Inventions,'," the release says.

The performance of the Pin Point Theatre, a cast of young black actors who have received funding from the Smithsonian Institution, will culminate a day of activities which begins at 10 a.m. at Carver School with the opening of exhibits from clubs, churches and other community organizations.

Other activities during the day inviude Feast and Fashion, a combination of soul food tasting and a fashion show; and "1990 and Beyond," an evening program which explores the role of African Americans in the '90s. Tickets for the two paid events may be purchased by calling 683-7549 or 684-4895.

New Year's Eve at the bridge club was always a festive occasion, with team games pausing only for a few minutes to usher out the old year and ring in the new. This hand, dealt when 1990 was only a few minutes old, convinced Trump Coup Tommy the new decade was going to be a good one.

Tommy's partner bid the hand well. Since Tommy rated to have six spades on this sequence, North decided to raise on his doubleton, and Tommy had no reservation about going on to game.

West led the king of hearts and continued with the nine to East's ace. East made a fatal error by returning another heart. Tommy ruffed, overtook the queen of diamonds with dummy's king and finessed the ten of spades. The nine of clubs to the ten provided the entry for another spade finesse and when West discarded a heart Tommy was in his element

After cashing the ace of diamonds, declarer crossed to the board by overtaking the jack of clubs with the queen and ruffed a diamond. That reduced declarer's trump length to that of East. When the king of clubs to the ace survived, declarer simply led a minor-suit card from dummy and East was trapped. No matter what he did, only the ace of trumps would score.

East erred badly by giving Tommy a heart ruff. By simply exiting with a minor-suit card, East would have saved a tempo and guaranteed the contract's defeat even if Tommy had started with three hearts. There was no way declarer could have prevented East from scoring two trump tricks. Try it!

Mystery book laced with social criticism

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Carl Hiaasen's Florida is not the one shown in tourist brochures.

Yes, there's sun, sand and sea, but in Hiaasen's blackly humorous novels, these attractive elements take a distant back seat to murder, corruption and greed.

His latest novel, "Skin Tight," includes, among other things, tourists posing for pictures with a body that has washed up onto the beach from the sea; an unbelievably ugly, gun-for-hire hit man who stands 6 feet 9 inches tall and lugs a submachine gun while riding a jet ski; the sharp beak of a stuffed marlin being used to kill a man; and a reluctant hero who has a giant barracuda for a pet.

Add to this exotic brew a villainous plastic surgeon who loves the sun for the wrong reasons:

"The sun came out, and Dr. Rudy Graveline smiled. The sun was very good for business. It baked and fried and pitted the facial flesh, and seeded the pores with vile microscopic cancers that would eventually sprout and require excision. Dr. Rudy Graveline was a plastic surgeon, and he dearly loved to see the sun."

And, you've got a first-rate mystery novel liberally laced with social criticism. "Skin Tight" is the third of his Florida novels. It was preceded by "Double Whammy" and "Tourist Season."

All tell a good tale and all touch on conditions in Florida that an angry, Hiaasen — "Pronounce it like hyacinth without the 'th' on the end" — would like to see changed.

"South Florida is a place of extremes," Hiaasen, 36, says. "When we have a crime, it's an extreme crime. When we have corruption, it's extreme corruption.

"Sometimes, I think I've written something that is really warped. Then, I pick up the newspaper and there is something in it that is worse than my fiction.

"Being a native Floridian (he was born in Fort Lauderdale, where he currently lives with his wife and their son), I'm angry about a lot of things — overpopulation, crime, overbuilding.

"You've got 1,000 people a day moving into Florida. That's too much. How many people can one state support? What they are going there for, soon no longer will be there. They're being sold a myth.

"The philosophy seems to be to pave everything, to put as many condos on as little space as possible. If you find a nugget of beauty, fence it off and charge admission. People will always find a way to exploit beauty to death."

Hiaasen, a tall, boyish-looking man, says he also vents his anger in the column he writes three times a week for The Miami Herald.

He says his urge to write goes back to childhood.

"When I was 6, my dad gave me a typewriter. I taught myself to type. Ever since, I've always been writing. I really got interested in book writing in college when another student paid me to take a bunch of his notes and write them into a novel. He got it published, which astonished me. I thought, 'My God, maybe I can do this.'"

Doctor's books demystify surgeons

EDITOR'S NOTE: He's skilled with both scalpel and pen, a surgeon with a love for words. After 32 years as a practicing physician, Richard Selzer turned to writing full time. But it is his intimate acquaintance with the art of medicine that make his literary works so compelling.

By GORDON FAIRCLOUGH

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — For more than a decade, Richard Selzer lived a double life. He was a literary surgeon. He performed delicate operations with cool detachment, then wrote about them with a vivid intimacy.

Eventually the balance tipped. The words took over. And Selzer began to see things.

"Once you have gazed with the third eye of the artist, you see things you would not have seen otherwise," Selzer said recently.

"You see the details that illuminate human misery and you are different."

Selzer had taken up writing at 40 in an attempt to recapture what he felt was a lost intimacy between doctor and patient. He led the double life for 15 years, laboring over his prose between patients in his surgical practice at Yale-New Haven Hospital.

DURING THAT time he wrote "Mortal Lessons: Notes on the Art of Surgery" and two other collections of short fiction and essays. He found that writing brought him closer to his patients. He was more able to empathize with them and understand their suffering, becoming, for the first time, the "true doctor" that he had always wanted to be.

It is his intimate acquaintance with the art of medicine that makes his work so compelling.

Ironically, it was also his writing that forced him to give up surgery after 32 years.

Abandoning the terse, arid vernacular of medical texts in favor of colorful literary language, Selzer tried to give his readers a sense of "the ritual of surgery," which he describes in an essay as "at once murderous, painful, healing and full of love."

"A surgeon needs a kind of distance from the patient that he is laying open because it's not a natural act. He dons a kind of carapace," Selzer says.

"But the writing surgeon has to not only perform the operation but perceive it in such a way to be able to report these events back to the waiting world. In so doing, I realized I was peeling off my own insulation that was protecting me from the operative event.

"AS PAINFUL as it was to leave surgery, I knew it was time. There was no choice. A surgeon can unmake himself, a writer cannot."

Selzer's work has won plaudits from critics and is gaining increased attention from scholars.

"What makes him unique among American writers is that he makes us see the body and medical events in ways we don't normally see them," says Charles M. Anderson, a professor of English and medical humanities at Arkansas State University in Little Rock, who has just written a book analyzing Selzer's writing.

"His work makes a difference. People read it and it heals them. I have medical students who read his work and it changes who they are and what they do."

Selzer, a native of Troy, N.Y., who graduated from Albany Medical College, says he loved being a surgeon and loved teaching surgery.

"But all along, the pressure was building up," he says. "I was like a barren tree which does not enjoy the relief of bursting into foliage. I really began to feel trapped in a way.

"The surgeon must restrain his scalpel but the writer doesn't have to rein in his pen."

SELZER IS a soft-spoken, demure man whose unimposing appearance stands in marked contrast to the power and flamboyance of his literary style.

His prose, heavy with metaphor and laden with allusions to world literature, at once glories in the power of the knife and exposes its impotence.

When he first began, Selzer wrote about medicine and the human body. He unmasked his medical colleagues, revealing them as human beings, and giving expression to their self-doubt. The surgeon "may continue to pretend that death will not come, so long as people depend on his authority. Later, after his patients have left, he may closet himself in his darkened office, sweating and afraid," Selzer wrote.

While he demystifies surgeons, he leaves intact the shroud of mystery that surrounds healing. In "Mortal Lessons," Selzer tells the true story of a short-order cook whose skull has been eaten away by some unknown cancer. He steadfastly refuses his doctor's repeated admonitions that he have surgery to repair the hole.

Finally the man stops coming to his weekly appointments. Worried, the surgeon seeks him out and discovers the gouge healed. "The wife's sister, she went to France, and brought me a bottle of holy water from Lourdes," the man tells his incredulous doctor. "I've been washing it out with that for a month."

AMONG THE subjects Selzer has chosen in his latest work, a collection of five novellas to be published next fall, are a pregnant woman who discovers she has AIDS and the mother of an autistic child. Another one, based on a news story, is about a Brazilian boy who discovers a piece of radioactive mineral from an abandoned X-ray machine. The boy and others in his village revere the strange glowing object, only to suffer radiation burns and other illnesses caused by the radiation.

Although he seldom picks up a scalpel these days, except for occasional volunteer work in the Third World, Selzer's medical training still shapes his working life.

"I take writing as seriously as I did surgery, not one bit less," Selzer says.

Every morning at 8:30, Selzer arrives at the library to begin a full day of writing and rewriting. At 5 p.m., Selzer says, "I set down my pen and pick up a glass of vodka and a cigarette. Vodka at 5 o'clock puts new life into the day."

He spends the evening hours with his family, goes to bed early, at 8 or 9, and awakens at about 1 a.m., a habit from his days as a surgeon when he had to rise before dawn to perform operations. In the early morning he writes and prepares for the day.

Selzer rewrites every sentence about 20 times, limiting his output to about 70 publishable pages a year.

Even though he no longer works as a surgeon, he is called upon to lecture to medical students, and his books are used by medical schools as they try to counter the dehumanizing influences of the modern medical machine age.

Roosevelt hits stride as mystery author

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press

A Review

Elliott Roosevelt, who has really hit his stride as a writer of mysteries in which his sleuth is his mother, former first lady Eleanor Roosevelt, wastes no time getting into the murder in his latest, "Murder in the Rose Garden."

After establishing that the election of 1936 is coming up and that Mrs. Roosevelt is more apprehensive about it than is President Roosevelt — in fact, he's readying for a short cruise off Maine — a body is discovered on Page 8.

It's a woman, strangled, found face down in a rose bed under a window of the Cabinet Room.

As is her wont in this series, Mrs. Roosevelt takes an active interest in solving the crime. Both Roosevelts want to keep J. Edgar Hoover out of it. Their dislike for him has the ring of truth more than fiction. Mrs. Roosevelt explains to Hoover that the president wants him to concentrate on his war against gangsters.

The deceased, whose late father was a congressman, often entertained in her home. After her death, the investigators — Hoover isn't among them — discover that she took some of the men at her parties into her bedroom, where they were secretly photographed and later blackmailed.

One amusing scene in the book has Mrs. Roosevelt looking at obscene photos through a piece of paper with a small circle cut out of it, enabling her to focus on faces without embarrassment.

Mrs. Roosevelt walks through this book in lightweight dresses in summer's heat, serves tuna salad and lemonade, and uses her social sense, humor, quick mind and ladylike personality. It's to Elliott Roosevelt's credit that he makes a reader believe, even while knowing better, that his mother actually did all the things in "Murder in the Rose Garden."

By MARIO SZICHMAN
Associated Press

A Review

The Russian critic Mikhail Bakhtin considered that of all the literary genres, the novel was the only one that needed a clash of cultures to exist. "A Place For Us," Nicholas Gage's chronicle about his immigration to America with his sisters — after his mother is killed at the hands of Greek Communist guerrillas — could be perfectly read as a novel. It has all the ingredients: the description of two cultures, two languages, two viewpoints, and poignant humor alongside the tragedies.

Growing up in America is always difficult; growing up in America as an immigrant is twice as hard. And when the immigrant is haunted by the horrible death of his mother and the feeling that his father, an earlier immigrant to America, could have brought his family over before the outbreak of the Greek civil war ("and then my mother would be alive now"), the task seems unsurmountable.

How Gage could finally reach maturity and become a noted writer is not only a splendid story, it is almost a miracle. The mixture of Greek tragedy and American movies that marks his saga has left numerous scars on him, but it also has given him resilience and a love of life that helped him overcome powerful desires of self-destruction.

Maybe the essence of his final healing could be discovered in the reconciliation with his father. At first bellicose and intolerant, their relationship finally changes when the father confesses painfully to his son that "every day I blame myself for your mother's death" and admits that "a person who means well, if he doesn't think about the results of his actions, can be as guilty as the most evil man."
