What's good for the gander, his consortium of geese and the ducks, top photo, seems to be the chilly waters and breaking ice in the pond at Wadley-Barron Park. They're not complaining. But the cold seige is working a hardship on ranchers and their cattle. Aaron Kullman, 13, forgoes ice skates and opts for snow boots, as he has a heyday in jumping and crunching ice in the shallow area of the Hill Park pond.

U.S. threatens to withdraw from UNESCO

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is reported ready to drop its membership in UNESCO, the cultural and educational arm of the United Nations, unless the agency makes major policy concessions by the end of 1984.

Western sources say the United States told officials of UNESCO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, Wednesday that it intends to withdraw in 1985.

The State Department scheduled an official announcement for later today.

The United States contributes 25 percent of UNESCO's estimated $200 million annual budget. It has complained that some of the organization's policies are anti-Western, heavily politicized and are dictated by a bloc dominated by the Soviet Union and the developing Third World.

State Department spokesman John Hughes complains that in recent years UNESCO has mismanaged its budget and attempted to restrict press freedom and impose economic regulation.

Hughes said earlier this month that views expressed from within UNESCO "seem to be incredibly partisan and opposed to the forces of freedom and certainly to the United States."

On Wednesday, Hughes confirmed that some U.S. allies, including France, have reservations about a U.S. withdrawal from the Paris-based agency which promotes cultural exchanges and scientific and educational projects.

Hughes said the United States strongly supports such activities.

"But there are other aspects of UNESCO's performance that worry us a great deal," he said.

Perhaps the most bitter controversy involving UNESCO in recent years has been the attempt by Third World and communist nations to use it to promote a new "world information and communications order." Western news media and governments see such a move as a threat to the freedom of Western journalists by producing an international charter sanctioning government press controls.

Jean Gerard, U.S. ambassador to UNESCO, is said to have delivered a letter expressing the U.S. intent to withdraw during a meeting in Paris on Wednesday with Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, UNESCO's secretary-general.

UNESCO rules call for a one-year waiting period before withdrawal becomes final. The withdrawal notice can be rescinded.

Cold weather hard on livestock also

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Winter's unusually harsh coldness that is causing people to bundle up snugly and to keep the homefires lit makes ranchers anxious and hungry cattle shiver.

So, ranchers are doubling and tripling the feed they're doling out to cattle to keep them alive.

"We're tripling the protein intake," said Hoot Leonard. He's feeding his cattle 20 percent protein grain cubes. Each head is getting seven pounds of feed a day, since the ground is frozen and forage, already scant — if at all — due to the drought, is frozen over.

"You've got to keep the energy in the body, to keep the body heat up, to keep the cattle from getting cold."

As do other ranchers, Leonard, using a chopping axe, has to break thick ice to allow his cattle to water.

Both livestock and people have been beset by the severe cold, which started in mid-December, plummeted to six degrees over the weekend and has been accompanied by occasional snow and light sleet. The temperature dropped to nine degrees this morning and tied a record low set in 1939.

Though the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting a temperature drop into the low teens tonight, he is forecasting a warming trend Friday — high in the mid-40s — and partly cloudy and warmer over the weekend. After that, he's not saying.

"USUALLY," said Leonard, "January is our hardest month." He's expected the worse but is hoping for favorable weather, which often means rain or snow for the growing season this spring.

Toxic driveway causes dilemma

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (AP) — Once you get on the Environmental Protection Agency's list of possible hazardous waste sites, it's hard to get off. Just ask Norman Campbell, whose driveway is stuck on a federal computer list of potentially poisoned places.

EPA tests in the fall showed that Campbell's driveway is no more toxic than any other. But officials say there's no chance it will be taken off the list before the spring.

And Campbell was apparently on the list for nearly two years before he found out by reading his name in the newspaper.

In a telephone interview Wednesday, the 40-year-old resident of this northwest Washington town said he apparently got on the list after a neighbor called the agency in 1981 "and told them I put 450 gallons of PCB (polychlorinated biphenyls) in my driveway."

PCBs were once commonly used in lubricants and cooling oil in electrical equipment, but have been banned since they were found to cause skin and liver damage and other health problems.

In reality, Campbell said, he poured less than than 20 gallons of oil from the crankcases of his three cars on about 30 yards of his dirt driveway to hold down dust in 1980.

Nonetheless, EPA officials put his driveway on the list "instead of being logical and calling me up...or taking the time to check the story," he said.

He learned he was on the list only in October, when a report was published in The Bellingham Herald.

Since then, tests have found PCBs in one of two driveway soil samples, but at a level 1,000 times less than the threshold for concern.

Campbell said that when he called the regional EPA office in Seattle, the only person who would talk with him was "a press-release officer... who knew absolutely nothing about what was going on."

The agency then sent him only "a list of these (potential hazardous waste) places and a two-page press release that didn't explain anything," he said.

"That's the thing that I think bugged me the most...the stupidity of the Bureaucracy, that they can pull things like this and it's not up to them to clean things up, it's up to you," Campbell said. "To me it was a big matter, because if I hadn't had The Bellingham Herald to back me up, I'd have had to fight the whole thing — and they weren't listening."

Analysts see further steel plant closings

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Wall Street analysts on Wednesday welcomed U.S. Steel Corp.'s decision to cut production capacity by 16 percent, saying more plant closings are likely as the company attempts to compete in a global market.

"Further consolidations are forthcoming in the industry as a whole, and in U.S. Steel," said Joe Wyman, an analyst with Shearson American Express in New York.

"Financially, it's a favorable step," said David Healy of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "These mills had very little chance of paying their own way in the future."

In a nationwide move to rid itself of unprofitable operations, U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick announced Tuesday that the company will eliminate 15,400 jobs by closing six steel plants and will curtail production at 24 other facilities. Most of the shutdowns will occur by April 1984.

'Green revolution' attacks food problem

Part Nine

EDITOR'S NOTE: The subject of hunger in America made recent headlines when Edwin Meese III, presidential counselor, gave his views on how little hunger the Task Force on Food Assistance has documented. This is the ninth in a series of articles on hunger with contributions from Hearst newspapers across the country.

By JOANN RODGERS
Hearst News Service

Along with birth control, jobs and education, efforts to increase and improve world food supplies are a key weapon in the battle against hunger and malnutrition.

A look at the size of the problem tells why.

If current population estimates prove correct, there will be twice as many people — 8 billion — to feed in 2015 as there are now. And perhaps more significantly, they won't be satisfied with subsistence meals. In keeping with higher living standards, they will demand bread and cake, diets far more nutritious and varied than at present.

Although it's fashionable in political circles to claim food shortages are basically a problem of distribution, a landmark 1982 conference showed that not to be the case.

At the conference convened by the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry in the Philippines, participants concluded that within the next half century, world food production must increase "by an amount greater than has been achieved since the dawn of agriculture 12,000 years ago" if the demand is to be met.

Clearly, we need more food. Much more.

Today, a new high-tech "green revolution" is attacking the problem on three fronts: more efficient use of existing farm land and foods; development of new farm "frontiers," and totally new foods.

Unlike the first green revolution, which focused almost exclusively on hybrids, soil conservation, fertilizers and pest control, the new one will enlist genetic engineering and control of plants and animals.

Food processing and storage technologies that will work in isolated, tropical, or otherwise difficult environments are a priority as well.

The revolution is hampered, as most are, by insufficient money and expertise, particularly in the developing countries that stand to benefit most directly. In Bangladesh and other Third World nations, for instance, 10 to 15 percent of total food production is lost to diseases before crops are harvested.

But it is the developed nations of the West that will be asked to foot most of the bill.

Experts, both scientific and political, argue that the West will pay one way or the other: either finance increases in world food supply or subsidize a global welfare system. For many, the former is far preferable and the scientific capability is already here.

Individual projects already under way are diverse, interesting and promising. Among them:

— At the University of Minnesota Agricultural Research Station in St. Paul, scientists have produced a new variety of barley that out-yields by 13 bushels per acre some now widely grown. In addition, researchers have developed a new russet-skinned potato that can be grown under inhospitable soil moisture conditions in the Midwest.

— Investigators supported by the University of Maryland, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and other universities and agencies are exploring the nutritional possibilities of pizza crust made from fish meal, and of ants, grasshoppers, earthworms, sharks and locusts. According to Dr. Dean F. Gamble, locusts are rich in Vitamin A, while Chinese beetles and Zairean termites are 36 percent protein and 44 percent fat. Grasshoppers are low in cholesterol.

— At the University of Texas at Austin, microbiologists are using gene splicing technology to increase plants' ability to take up trace minerals from the soil.

Beach Boys' Dennis Wilson drowns

Dennis Wilson

MARINA DEL REY, Calif. (AP) — Beach Boys drummer Dennis Wilson, whose California rock 'n' roll brainchild took America on a 20-year musical "Surfin' Safari," appeared to be clowning when he dove off a boat and drowned, a friend said.

Wilson, 39, an avid surfer who gave the band its name, did not come up after diving in 12 feet of water at a yacht slip Wednesday, said boat owner Bill Oster, the friend Wilson was visiting.

"I saw some bubbles come up," said Oster, who was on the boat with two other friends. "He popped up and waved his hand. I saw his body slip down. I thought he was clowning. I knew he had to come up for some air."

Wilson's body was recovered by the Harbor Patrol 50 minutes after he disappeared. An autopsy is scheduled for today, said Bill Gold, spokesman for the Los Angeles County coroner's office.

Wilson had spent most of Wednesday on the boat.

"There had been some drinking on board the boat," sheriff's Lt. Lee Davenport said, but added that he didn't know how much.

"They were in good spirits," he said, indicating that there had been no fight or argument before Wilson dove into the water, something he had done three times earlier in the day without problems.

Funeral services have not yet been scheduled.

Described as the group's loner, Wilson recorded a solo album, collaborated on a song with one-time friend Charles Manson, stopped singing with the group for a time in 1981 and missed a recent concert in Los Angeles.

Born Dec. 4, 1944, in Hawthorne, Wilson grew up in Southern California. While still a teen-ager, he and brothers Brian and Carl, cousin Mike Love and Al Jardine began playing at high-school dances as Kenny and the Cadets, then as Carl and the Passions.

It was Dennis Wilson who first noticed California's surfing craze and talked the other members of the group into changing their name to the Beach Boys in 1961, when they signed with their first record label.

The Beach Boys turned out 35 albums, 15 of them gold. Among their hits were "Good Vibrations," "Surfin' USA" and "California Girls," harmony-heavy tributes to languid summer days, youthful bikinied beachgoers and the perfect wave.

Although their recent songs never matched the popularity of such '60s hits as "Help Me, Rhonda," "Catch a Wave" and "Little Surfer Girl," nostaligic fans continued to pack in to concerts and buy their records.

Earlier this year, Interior Secretary James Watt touched off a storm of protest from fans — including first lady Nancy Reagan and Vice President George Bush — when he banned the Beach Boys and other rock groups from the July Fourth celebration in Washington, D.C. Instead, the group played Independence Day in Atlantic City, N.J.

Oster described Wilson as "hard-headed...a real clown. He was always having a good time." He said the drummer, who also sang and played keyboards, liked to scrounge around the harbor bottom for old rope and boat fittings.

"He was so vibrant and gifted, lovable. He was a very sensitive man. Everybody loved him," Elliot Lott, a road manager for the group, said today from his Orange County home.

He described Wilson as "an all-American California boy," but he added, "He's certainly not a saint. He was having some trouble."

Wilson had missed some shows during the Beach Boys' tour last summer, a May to November affair that was their longest in 21 years. A second drummer traveled with the group during the tour.

Love once described Dennis Wilson as the loner, the outsider of the group, who never got along with his father, Murry Wilson, the group's manager. In 1981, he stopped singing with the Beach Boys briefly as a protest because the group was emphasizing their older material.

He was the only one of the Beach Boys to strike out on his own with a solo album and an appearance in the 1971 movie "Two Lane Blacktop."

In April 1978, Wilson was arrested for investigation of contributing to the delinquency of a minor after police allegedly found a 16-year-old girl in his hotel room in Tucson, Ariz. The charge was later dropped.

He was a friend of Charles Manson before Manson began to exhibit signs of violence, and once collaborated with him on a song.

Wilson had three sons from an earlier marriage, and had a year-old son by his present wife, Shawn, Lott said. He had been married four times, twice to actress-model Karen Lamm, said publicist Sandy Friedman.

Six tribal members arrested for biting

BELLINGHAM, Wash. (AP) — A teen-age girl who said she was bitten until her sides "felt like jelly" was one of two victims cited by authorities as they arrested six Lummi tribe members, accusing them of biting attacks during Indian cult rituals.

The felony assault charges filed Wednesday followed years of controversy over the use of violence in some of the tribe's religious practices.

The alleged attacks, one in December 1982 and the other in March 1983, took place during initiation into a group practicing an ancient Indian religion called "ceowyn," said John Detlor, FBI special agent in charge in Seattle.

"It was part of a religious or traditional ceremony within the tribe by a small number of people called 'the smokehouse group,' " Detlor said. "Biting is not a tribe-wide thing."

Affidavits from the girls, who were being initiated into the group, said they were treated at St. Luke's Hospital for infections from human bites on their sides. Both recovered, said George Fisher, assistant FBI special agent in charge in Seattle.

Shellina Cooper told the FBI she was bitten until her sides "felt like jelly," according to papers filed in U.S. District Court in Seattle. Officials said the other victim was Darlene Washington.

FBI agent Robert S. Travatte said in an affidavit the ceowyn ritual involves 10 days of fasting and meditation in which participants seek the help of a protective spirit by attempting to find the song of the spirit.

"The Smokehouse Group believes that the use of physical force during the meditation process will aid in the search for the spirit of past warriors," he said.

Lummi council member Samuel Cagey said Wednesday the tribe was shocked by the arrests.

"We felt as far as it was a Lummi problem, we should handle it in-house here," he said.

Detlor identified the arrested men as Elliot C. Billy, 44; Gary Allen Billy, 39; Ken Cooper, 41; Leland Raymond Cooper, 36; Lawrence Joseph Washington, 42, and Alphonso Dean Washington, 27.

All but Leland Cooper were arrested in the Bellingham area. Cooper was arrested at his Tacoma home, Detlor said.

Five defendants made preliminary appearances Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Steve Mura in Bellingham. Leland Cooper appeared before a magistrate in Seattle.

The Billys are charged with assaulting Miss Washington between Nov. 28 and Dec. 3 last year on the reservation near Bellingham.

The others were accused of injuring Miss Cooper between March 13 and March 19 this year on the reservation.

The reservation includes as many as four winter spirit dancing groups, each with its own rituals, say anthropologists and others familiar with the tribe.

Initiations can involve long periods of fasting, and initiates sometimes are carried overhead by other dancers while drums beat.

Rougher techniques reportedly are used on occasion, however, and initiates may be pounded with deer hoof rattles.

Some Indian religious leaders say the initiations should not be allowed to endanger the health of initiates and criticize groups whose members allegedly bite initiates.

The controversy recently spurred the Lummi council to pass a resolution on what the preamble called "allegations of abuse and mistreatment...in regard to traditional practices."

The resolution said it is tribal "policy" that "no person shall be subjected" to "brutal treatment, including but not limited to hitting, clubbing, biting, striking or otherwise inflicting injury."

The resolution also forbade "total fasting or fasting in a medically inappropriate way" and forcing anyone to take part in ceremonies against his or her will.

Cold weather hard on livestock also

"We're looking for moisture in January," he said. "So, we're looking forward to that."

Rancher J.D. Crawford, who has been in Midland since 1932, lost a newly-born Angus calf on Christmas Eve, when the temperature dropped to an all-time low of six degrees.

"You have to really watch your livestock," he said. Crawford said he didn't expect the mother cow to calve so soon. "Probably, it just froze to death," he said, since the mother cow "couldn't lick it clean that quickly."

Crawford recalled January 1949, when the Southwest was beset by an ice storm. He didn't lose any cattle then.

The weather was wet, foggy, drizzling rain and icy.

"Mesquite trees and fences looked like ice sculptures," he said. High-line wires and tree limbs were snapped by the weight of the ice, he said.

"It was really hard," he said. As now, feed had to be brought to the cattle. But unlike this season, "There was a lot of feed in (grown in) the county. We had to feed them everyday."

"Everyone is feeding now," Crawford said. "I guess everyone I talk to is feeding."

RANCHERS in the Midland area will make it through the winter, he said.

"As long as we don't have any snow like they have in the Panhandle, we'll make it. Some (cattle) have smothered to death" from the fine snow.

"I guess it's just about as hard as anything I've seen," said Herb Sorley of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service in Midland.

Owing to the shortage of feed in the county, he said 23 Midland County ranchers have signed up for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's emergency feed program. They'll be getting corn from Panhandle elevators at $2.05 a bushel. In addition, they'll have to pay for transporting the corn, processing it and mixing it with other feed. Unlike cows, sheep can benefit from eating whole corn.

"The severe cold is going to take its toll on cattle just like it does on people," said Sorley. "They have a built-in coat, and we have to put a coat on."

Farmers and ranchers are looking for moisture.

"A good wet snow is what these farmers and ranchers are after," he said. "A good wet snow is better than rain. When snow melts, it goes into the ground." Much of rain runs off the land and into barrow ditches.

Still, he said, two or three weeks of snow would be a "tremendous hardship" on ranchers.

"You can take a bad weather condition and turn it into a good situation just on good management," he said.

"They are farmers and ranchers out there. It's not a hobby to them; they do it to the best of their ability. It's their livelihood."

THE COLD PUTS a "lot of stress on livestock," said Charlie Green, former Midland County agricutural agent. Ranchers are putting out extra feed and making sure cattle get water.

Cattle may lose any weight gains this winter, he said.

"Most ranchers in this area can afford to feed them, and they do."

Properly fed and watered, cattle should survive another West Texas winter, he said.

"I hope this spell lets up in a few days."

Dick Hagelstein, U.S. Soil Conservation Service conservationist here, noted the wintery hardships.

"It's real hard on livestock, especially following an extremely dry summer," he said. "We didn't grow any forage, and they (livestock) have a tremendous energy loss. It's very difficult for livestock to do what they're supposed to do: to put on and maintain body weight."

Bobby Matthews, foreman at the Glass & Johnson Ranch north of Midland, said he has been "pouring on the feed" during the cold seige. He's been doubling the feed by feeding the cattle cubed feed one day and alfalfa hay the next.

"This a pretty bad winter," said Matthews, who has been on the ranch 15 years, "and I believe it's going to get worse. I believe it is the worse since I've been out here."

Analysts predict more steel plant closings

The company, which lost $487 million in the first nine months of 1983, now employs 81,000 people in all operations.

The move will allow the company to take a $1.2 billion pre-tax charge.

"They've got a huge tax credit for future years, and the situation looks pretty good," Healy said.

Following U.S. Steel's announcement, the company's common stock rose 62.5 cents to close for the day at $29.87½ a share on the New York Stock Exchange. The stock rose another 25 cents a share on Wednesday to close at $30.12½.

In Homestead, Pa., the leader of a dissident United Steelworkers local, said local communities should take over the plants themselves.

Ron Weisen, a welder at the Homestead Works, one of the plants affected by the cuts, called for the formation of regional public authorities to purchase the steel plants with federal funds or take ownership of them through eminent domain. Seventy percent of the 15,436 jobs to be cut could be restored with public takeover, he said.

In the past decade, more than 200 steel facilities have been closed, generally portions of large mills, said SheldonWesson, spokesman for the American Iron and Steel Institute. U.S. Steel's move, the largest single reduction, will bring the total to 300 by the middle of 1984.

A year ago Bethlehem Steel Corp. announced it would eliminate 10,000 jobs at Johnstown and Lackawanna, N.Y., the second largest single move.

Such closings have resulted in a reduction of production capability from a high of 160 million tons in 1977 to about 151 million tons this year as steelmakers try to produce steel at a lower per-ton cost, Wesson said.

Roderick blamed labor costs and imports, expected to take about a fifth of the market this year, for the closings.

In 1962, the United States produced 98 million tons of steel, more than any other country, according to the AISI. In 1982, this country produced 74 million tons, while the Soviet Union produced 163 million tons and Japan produced 110 tons.

Consumption has also declined, despite population growth, from a high of 111.4 tons in 1973 to about 90 million tons for 1983, Wesson said.

Last year, the worst in the steel industry since the Depression, steel mills operated at about a third of capacity. Production at just more than 70 percent of capacity has generally been considered a break-even point.

Through its cutbacks, U.S. Steel hopes to cut its break-even rate to near 50 percent. The moves reduce U.S. Steel's capacity to 26 million tons a year from 31.3 million tons.

Roderick said U.S. Steel has operated at 56 percent this year. The moves announced Tuesday, with no changes in orders, would increase that by 10 percent, Roderick said.

Officials try best to identify nameless dead

BOSTON (AP) — Height: 5-foot-7½. Age: about 50. Name: unknown.

Dead in a gutter on Bispham Street, Boston, on Christmas Day. The temperature: around 10 degrees.

No pants, green overcoat. No shoes, black socks. Pockets empty, except for a bus ticket from New York.

Cause of death: pending investigation.

Authorities say there are 13 bodies in Southern Mortuary, Boston's morgue. It is a busy week.

Apparently no one keeps count of how many John Does go unidentified to a pauper's grave each year. In Boston, they number fewer than five. In St. Louis, it's around two. In Los Angeles, it's 25 to 30.

They had families once, and homes.

Perhaps recently they've been living beneath bridges or in vacant buildings, keeping warm with cardboard boxes, borrowed clothes, a trash fire.

"They are most likely transients," says Dr. George E. Gantner of St. Louis, president of the American Academy of Forensic Scientists. "They might be people who have no friends or have no relatives. But even in a situation like that, neighbors may notice if they haven't seen someone in a long time."

The body found on Bispham Street last Sunday lies unclaimed, waiting for someone to notice he is gone.

"We really don't like to send them out unidentified," Mildred Anglin, administrative assistant at the morgue, said Wednesday. "Finally, if we are unable to identify them at all, we will send them to the welfare for burial, after about three to four weeks. That isn't always true. If they're young it might take longer, because we know there is somebody out there that belongs to them."

The medical examiner says the man had a partial upper dental prosthesis. If authorities knew where the false teeth came from, they could check X-rays, dental records.

"Even people without financial resources, in most metropolitan areas, are part of the record. They have been in the hospital," Gantner says. "Even if he is transient and sleeps in the alley, he would have been evaluated for alcohol."

His fingerprints are being checked. So are the lists of missing persons. If that fails, someone may call the Pine Street Inn, largest shelter for the homeless in Boston. No one has called yet.

Toxic driveway causes dilemma for homeowner

Even now, Campbell's driveway remains in the computer, although it has been put in the "no further action" category, said Deborah Flood, an EPA specialist in Seattle.

"We can't delete from the computer," she said. "EPA will have to decide on a mechanism to remove."

The problem may be resolved at a national EPA meeting in March or April, she said.

Washington state's Department of Ecology concurs with the "no further action" designation, Ms. Flood said.

She also said she spoke with a private citizen in Whatcom County about the case. "I'd rather not mention the name because it really doesn't make any difference," she said.

Campbell said the anonymity is unnecessary, because the neighbor who initially called the EPA later told him about it.

He also said he is upset that the soil samples were taken from his property without his knowledge while he was on vacation.

"We didn't trespass on Mr. Campbell's property. He was not notified because they (the samples) were taken from the right-of-way," Ms. Flood said.

She explained that EPA guidelines allow investigators to take samples from private property without notification if they are within a certain distance of a public road.

The driveway dilemma "should have ceased" long ago, "but once you get on a list," she said, "it's a little hard to deal with."

U.S. threatens to pull out of UNESCO

The United States, which has conducted a seven-month study of U.S. participation in UNESCO, thus has the next 12 months to try to convince the agency to modify policies that led to the U.S. decision.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz proposed the pullout to President Reagan who approved it, according to administration sources.

If the United States leaves UNESCO it will not be the first time it has withdrawn from a United Nations agency.

In November 1977, President Jimmy Carter pulled the United States out of the Geneva-based International Labor Organization.

Carter contended the independence of employer and worker delegates to the organization's conferences had become eroded and that the body applied a double standard in criticizing non-communist, pro-Western governments for human rights violations, but not Third World and communist regimes.

He also complained that the agency had become too involved with "extraneous" political issues.

Carter ended the U.S. boycott of the labor organization in February 1980, saying the agency had acted to "reduce the level of politicalization" and to restore the organization's original purpose of assisting the world's workers in becoming free of political influence.

In October 1982, Shultz threatened to pull the United States out of the U.N. General Assembly and withhold all payments to the world body if the General Assembly voted to expel Israel.

No such action was taken and the United States remains a General Assembly member.

The Reagan administration also has threatened to walk out of conferences of the UN-affiliated International Telecommunications Union Conference and the International Atomic Energy Agency if Israel were denied credentials to attend.

Officer Gary Schwab, of the Armarillo police dept. had a little problem directing traffic as cars were slipping and sliding around the intersection of I-40 and Ross street, but it seems the 11-degree temperature with a 24-degree chill factor didn't bother him as he directed trafic in his short sleeve shirt.

Deadly weather continues to grip state

By The Associated Press

An arctic cold front plunged temperatures below zero in the Panhandle this morning as frigid weather that has been blamed for at least 35 deaths kept its grip on Texas.

Readings had tumbled to 5 below zero at Amarillo by 4 a.m. All of West Texas and much of North Texas and South Texas was covered by travelers' advisories this morning because of snow and icy roads.

Gale warnings were posted for the Texas coast, and a freeze warning was issued for the heart of the state's citrus industry in the Rio Grande Valley, which was hit over the Christmas weekend by the worst freeze there in 21 years.

Predawn readings today, which were tumbling at the rate of at least a degree an hour through East and South Texas, were mostly in the teens and 20s over the state and freezing temperatures covered all but southernmost points. At 6 a.m. it was 2 at Lubbock, 12 at Dallas, 24 at Houston, 19 at Austin, 28 at Corpus Christi, 33 at Brownsville, and 13 at El Paso.

Readings were expected to stay below freezing over the northwest half of the state this afternoon.

Winds of 23 mph, with gusts up to 39 mph, were reported at the Jefferson County Hospital near Port Arthur Wednesday night, and the National Weather Service said the high winds would continue through the night.

Wednesday, snow fell across North Texas at Amarillo, Abilene, Wichita Falls, Denton and Weatherford. Freezing temperatures were noted during the daytime hours as far south as Waco.

Homeowners, especially in the Houston area, faced heavy damage from broken water pipes that froze and then shattered when temperatures hovered briefly above the freezing mark.

Carl Lee of Insurance Information Institute said the recent winter storm will result in at least $50 million in homeowner insurance claims throughout the state.

Damage from broken water pipes in Houston was so extensive that a city official said the costs to homeowners could exceed those residents paid last summer to repair problems caused by Hurricane Alicia.

Dan Jones of the Houston Public Works Department said the financial burden to homeowners is enormous.

Plumbers were being overwhelmed and were running ads for temporary plumbers to help handle the backlog of trouble calls Wednesday.

"You're talking about major damage right now," said Henry Davidson, president of Crown Plumbing Co.

Davidson's firm, one of the largest in the Houston area, fielded 12,000 requests for help on Tuesday.

"It's so massive, it's unbelievable. It's like a war," he said.

Rio Grande Valley juice processors were processing damaged oranges "round-the-clock" in an effort to salvage juice, growers said. Three processing plants hired an extra 250 temporary workers to complete the task.

Temperatures in the 20s froze the fruit on the trees and growers estimated damage at $30 million. Growers had not decided Wednesday whether to extract juice from damaged grapefruit.

Meanwhile, sugarcane growers tallied up the destruction to their crops, which were only about 43 percent harvested when the cold snap hit Christmas Eve. Preliminary estimates put the damage at about $15 million, growers said.

MHMR agrees to temporary rule

AUSTIN (AP) — State District Judge Joe Hart has taken under study the request of the Texas State Employees Union for a court order to stop the use of polygraph tests by the state Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

"Although he did not grant our request for a temporary restraining order he did ask the MHMR, and they agreed, not to give any mandatory polygraph tests until there is another hearing in about two weeks," said Wakie Martin, administrative assistant of the union. after attorneys' arguments Wednesday.

The suit, which was filed Tuesday, challenges department policy that could result in the firing of employees who refuse to take a polygraph exam.

The department said the exams are intended only to assist the department in investigating client abuse or neglect, activity which threatens the safety of clients or employees, theft and alcohol or drug abuse.

The union's class-action suit on behalf of 26,000 employees seeks an injunction to halt the use of polygraph exams as a condition of employment and monetary damages for 11 individuals and the union.

Houstonians give bamboo for panda

HOUSTON (AP) — Frost killed the entire crop of bamboo that the Houston Zoo uses to feed its panda. But thanks to the hearts and gardens of dozens of people, Yin now has enough fresh green stalks to endure the latest cold snap.

Bu midday Wednesday, one day after officials issued an appeal for a new food supply for the female lesser panda, more than enough had been donated to fill Yin's needs, said Parks and Recreation Department spokesman Joe Howard.

"We have gotten a tremendous amount of help. Four or five people have brought green bamboo out to the zoo, and several others have called and said we could come and get it," he said.

He said so many people called to offer help that both the zoo switchboard and the department phone lines were busy most of the day.

"They were swamped," he said.

Howard said many people apparently grow as a hobby the type of bamboo Yin eats and had protected their stalks from the frost.

The zoo normally feeds the 9-year-old Yin bamboo grown as decoration on zoo grounds. But the recent weeks' cold killed the entire crop.

Marilyn McBirney, director of the children's zoo, where Yin is kept, said the panda could eat some of the frozen bamboo, but that it would not provide the same nutrients as fresh bamboo and might leave her susceptible to illness.

Yin was born at the National Zoo in Washington, D.C., and has been at the Houston Zoo since November 1975.

She eats two or three stalks of bamboo a day, and Howard said donations would continue to be accepted because officials can't be sure how long the cold spell will last.

Zimbabwe recycles materials for more than conservation

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Farai Moyo rummages through the trash at Harare's municipal dump and unearths two prizes — a soiled but uncracked bottle that once contained cooking oil and an old tire.

This treasure will earn the 70-year-old scavenger 60 Zimbabwe cents (60 U.S. cents), enough to buy a meal of greens for a week.

Zimbabwe, an African leader in recycling junk, provides a ready market for these and other discarded items, such as old newspapers, tin cans and scrap metal.

"I think the world has become more and more conscious of recycling as natural resources become scarcer and more expensive," said David Parsons, owner of Recycling Containers Pvt. (Ltd), which converts discarded plastic bags and containers into anything from garbage buckets to toothbrush handles.

As in most African and Third World countries, falling prices for exports like copper and sugar and increased import bills for machinery and parts have drained Zimbabwe's foreign cash coffers.

Zimbabwe has long been conservation conscious, however. Paper has been recycled since the 1950s. But the need for recycling was heightened during years of United Nations-ordered international sanctions from 1965 to 1979, when former Prime Minister Ian Smith's white-minority Rhodesian government was in rebellion against Britain. Zimbabwe won independence from Britain in April 1980 after a seven-year guerrilla war.

People all over the country recycle things for their own use. In modern bungalows and in mud huts, women carefully wash the plastic packages their vegetables came in and smooth down pieces of used tin foil. They use them to pack sandwiches and or store meal left-overs.

Glass bottles are so precious that deposits from 20 cents to $1.50 are charged on bottles of soda pop, wine, beer and cooking oil.

To save on paper cartons used for traditional African beer, one company recently introduced take-away minibuckets made from recycled plastic which can be refilled again and again.

"Our recycled plastic (40 tons a month) is used for just about anything the virgin material makes," Parsons said. "Most plastics in Zimbabwe like tubs for washing dishes, plates and cups, dustbin bags, tops of aerosol spray cans and bottles, all are made from recycled plastic."

Mutare Paper and Board Mills in Zimbabwe's eastern highlands employs a score of men to visit factories and offices urging people to sell their wastepaper to the company or donate it to charities which in turn earn money from it.

"We do a lot more recycling in this country than more affluent countries because it's such a battle to get waste paper," mill manager John Noble said.

"We got to a stage last year when we had to import waste paper to recycle it."

Theater group revives anti-war 1937 musical

NEW YORK (AP) — The idea was to revive a 1937 anti-war musical created by four Broadway giants, including the team that wrote the songs for "The Wizard of Oz." But it took a treasure hunt through archives and closets before a small theater company could reassemble the forgotten book and score.

"Hooray for What," the story of a wacky chemist from Indiana who creates a deadly gas and gets involved in international peace talks, was assembled piece by piece, and finding all the parts took more than six months.

Why go to the trouble of reviving a forgotten musical that includes dated jokes referring to the League of Nations and its pre-World War II Geneva peace talks?

"I think it's a really good musical," said Barbara Vann, one of two artistic directors for the Medicine Show Theater Ensemble, which is reviving the musical. "It's a pro-peace musical, it's funny and non-polemic and it's got terrific music."

The show was first produced at Broadway's Winter Garden Theater and ran for 200 performances. The music was composed by Harold Arlen, with lyrics by E.Y. "Yip" Harburg, the team that later created the songs for "The Wizard of Oz" and won a 1939 Academy Award for "Over the Rainbow."

The book was written by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, collaborators for a string of Broadway successes, including "Life with Father." Only one copy of the book for "Hooray for What" was found and apparently is all that remains.

"Unfortunately, it's all too topical today," said James Barbosa, the Medicine Show's other artistic director. "It's exactly what's going on in Geneva today — no one is going to give up anything until someone else gives up something."

Ms. Vann and Barbosa, whose 12-member company has put on several other 1930s shows, found the title "Hooray for What" in a book last August, learned it was an anti-war musical and decided to read it.

They checked the Harburg archives at New York and Yale universities, talked to Harburg's widow and son and attorneys for the estates of Lindsay and Crouse. "None of them knew where the book was," Barbosa said.

They finally reached Dorothy Stickney, the actress who is Lindsay's widow. Miss Stickney had a copy "and it seemed to be the only one left in the world. She wouldn't let it out of the house."

But Miss Stickney allowed Ms. Vann to come to her house to read it, then agreed to allow her attorneys to make a copy.

After the book and lyrics were found, the search began for the music. Some came from Harburg archives. Some came from David Bickman, who is writing an Arlen songbook and some was found at Arlen's home.

Three wives form support group for women who choose not to work

VIENNA, Va. (AP) — They don't watch soap operas, or spend the day with their hair in curlers, or feel that their brains are decaying or think their social status depends on their husbands' professional position.

And at a time when almost 60 percent of American mothers work outside the home, and it is chic for a woman to say she has a master's in business or a law degree, these mothers do not have salaried jobs.

And they are proud of it.

"I have working friends who say my mind is too good to stay home," said Linda Burton, a mother of two and a writer. "I decided my mind was too good not to stay home with my children. The best minds are required there."

Mrs. Burton, 37, is one of three founders of a new organization called Mothers at Home, a group for mothers and homemakers who want to share their reasons, enthusiasm and concerns about staying home while their children are young.

They plan to communicate their ideas in a monthly newsletter, named "Welcome Home," that starts publication in January.

And they have received so many inquiries that they have set up a recorded "Mothers At Home" phone message to answer questions about the $12-a-year subscriptions.

"There is an assumption that you can't make it in the work world," Mrs. Burton said. "But there are mothers who stay home because they choose to do it. And they have to buck a lot of pressures. All the status is in your work. It takes a gutsy woman to stay home."

As of last March, Bureau of Labor Statistics figures indicate that 58.9 percent of American women with children under 18 worked outside the home.

"Today it is more socially acceptable to work," said Cheri Loveless, 32, one of Mrs. Burton's partners, who once helped write a book about cutting grocery bills. The third partner is Janet Dittmer.

"Raising kids is the most intellectually demanding job you can have. You're instructing your kids to guide their life, how to deal with bad situations, injustices, people who don't like you. Sometimes you haven't worked it all out yourself," said Mrs. Loveless.

All three women attended college. They all worked before their children were born. And they are quick to admit that they can afford to stay home, that their husbands have professional jobs with salaries that keep their families comfortable.

But they say they don't have the financial perks that many two-income families enjoy.

"When we got married, we decided I would stay home when we had kids," said Mrs. Dittmer, 35, a native of Okemos, Mich., who has four children and whose husband is a system's analyst for private defense contractors. "We have no ski vacations or movies, and we don't eat out once a week. But I think we're doing just fine."

Man lent a hand, was in papers for 67 years

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Ray Walter didn't think he'd like the job when he agreed to help out at the Kingston (N.Y.) Leader on the night of a presidential election, but it has taken him 67 years to quit the business.

Walter, now 89, was looking for a job in newspaper advertising when he agreed to help the Leader's editor in 1916. A week later, Woodrow Wilson had been re-elected, and Walter was a full-time reporter, at $6 a week.

"My father said, 'I'll give you that much to mow the lawn and shovel snow,'" Walter recalled as he prepared to retire at the as the editor in charge of syndicated material for The Arizona Republic. "I said, 'No, I think I'll like this.'"

He became city editor of the Poughkeepsie (N.Y.) Eagle-News, then the Poughkeepsie New Yorker.

"In my reportorial days, reporters didn't carry notebooks," he said. "You carried copy paper folded three ways. If you carried a briefcase or an attache case, you probably would have been laughed off the beat or out of the office."

Scientist expects planets' resources to be tapped

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A University of Pittsburgh scientist who studies the solar system's other planets expects man to be tapping them for industrial purposes within the next century.

"There's a good possibility that there are practical resources out there," said Bruce Hapke, a professor of planetary sciences and a consultant with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"We'll probably see a mining industry in the asteroids between 2000 and 2050. Jupiter is almost pure hydrogen. It burns very nicely in our own atmosphere so you can imagine some kind of spacecraft that might skim the atmosphere of Jupiter and ship the hydrogen back to Earth in big balloons," he said.

Since 1960, Hapke, 52, has studied more than 1,000 photographs taken by NASA's wandering satellites of the planets and other other objects circling the sun.

"The most important practical application is a better understanding of our own planet," he explained. "There's just an incredible number of things you can do with the solar system."

By analyzing the planets' geological features and the amount of light reflected from them, Hapke has tried "to infer what the conditions there are like."

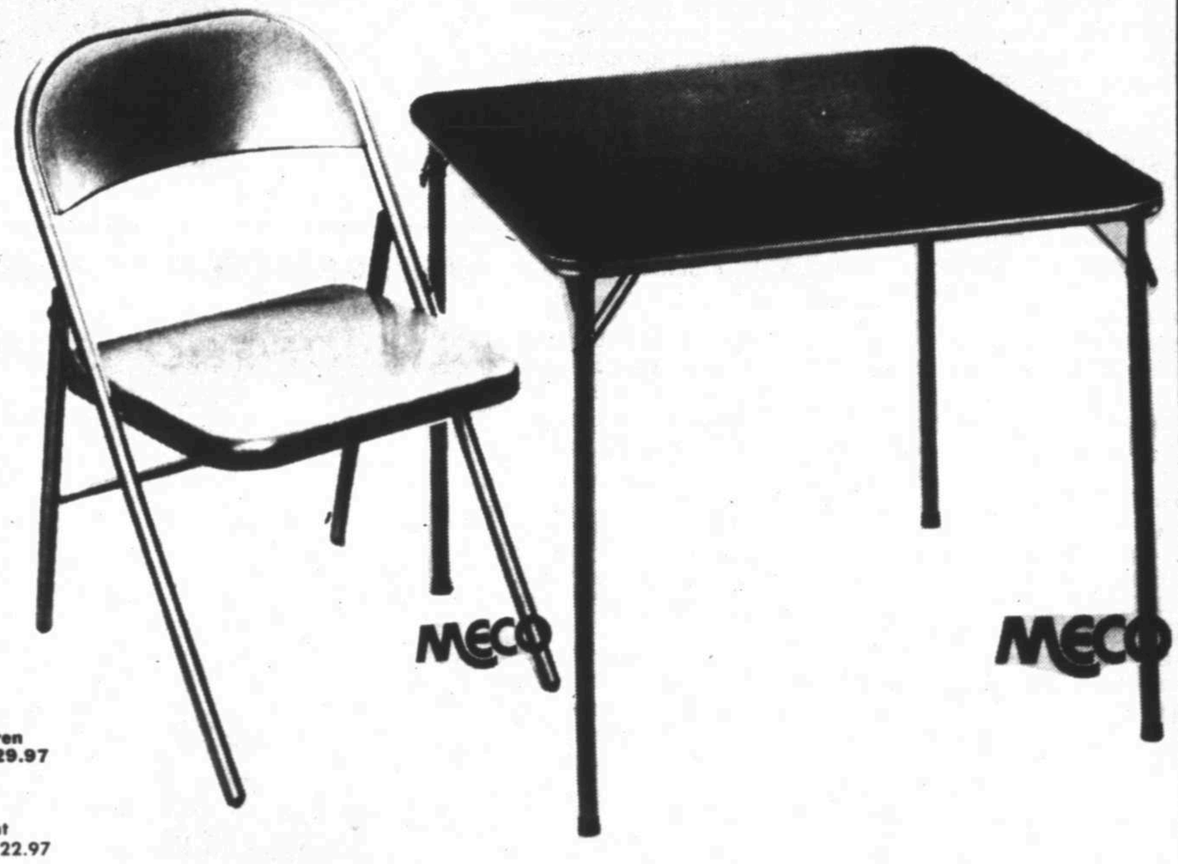

Perhaps his most controversial suggestion involves Europa, one of Jupiter's moons. Europa's frozen surface might conceal a liquid ocean with life similar to the plant life in the Arctic Ocean, according to Hapke.

Who's to blame?

It was a noble gesture for President Reagan to accept full responsibility for any error in judgement that led to the bombing in Beirut, Lebanon, which took the lives of 241 U.S. servicemen. In so doing, the president refused to place blame for the tragedy at the feet of any of the military officers, choosing to bear the burden himself.

As commander-in-chief and chief executive, Reagan's move was virtually expected. But to fully appreciate the significance of his action, one must study it from a historical perspective.

As was noted in a report on the bombing issued last week by the House Armed Services investigations committee, all levels of the chain of command should bear responsibility for lax security measures. In that context, President Reagan should bear the brunt of criticism.

There are facts that should be taken into account in passing judgement, though. The Marines in Beirut are not in a secure environment. That nation is beseiged by terrorists and warring factions who see the multinational peacekeeping force not as impartial observers but as intruders. As Americans, the Marines are considered nothing more than shooting gallery targets.

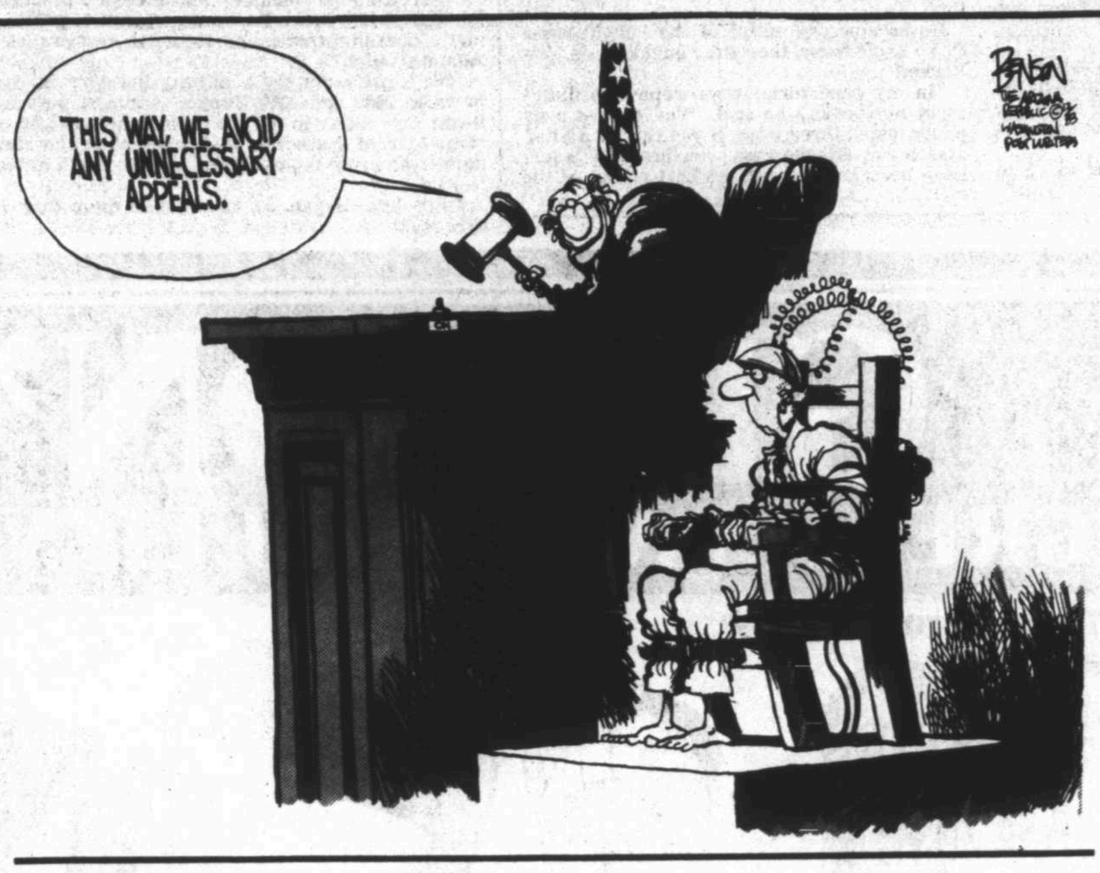

Perhaps more stringent security measures would have prevented the massive loss of lives, but who can make that claim with confidence in a region known worldwide for its terroristic violence?

Had President Reagan chosen not to accept final responsibility for the bombing, the end result undoubtedly would have been demoralization for the Marines there charged with performing a virtually impossible task. And that demoralization would have come about just at the time when resurgence of support for the country's military forces is beginning.

He chose not to put the country through what it experienced in the years following the Vietnam War and in so doing he probably salvaged support for the Marines' continuing mission in Lebanon.

The president's move probably was wise politically because of expectations that the Democrats would try to capitalize on the incident.

Now this tragic episode should be put behind the country. Put behind, but not forgotten because if there is a lesson in this incident, it's to not let our guard down — even momentarily — in a war zone.

Another View:

Foothold in space

After a year in which this country sent its first woman and black into space and achieved scientific firsts in a shuttle venture with Europeans, the idea of a space station can't be viewed as all that extraordinary.

The Reagan administration is reportedly considering committing the United States to a space station program in the next budget — development of an orbiting facility that would be run by a full-time crew.

NASA has a task force studying space station plans and is known to be urging start-up funding. A relatively modest $100 million to $200 million allocation is being talked about for advanced planning and studies.

The space agency conceives of a station with housing for a crew of six; modules for a laboratory, power and heat utilities and docking and storage, and unmanned platforms for scientific instruments and small factories.

A space station could aid scientific research, possibly the effort to develop space-based protection against a missile attack and other defense aims, and serve as a transportation hub for putting payloads into deep space orbit.

George Keyworth, President Reagan's science adviser, foresees that a space station could facilitate "revolutionary new ventures" such as a manned base on the moon or even manned exploration of Mars.

Such a project would unquestionably be an ambitious venture for a U.S. space program which has produced not only thrills for Americans but tremendous dividends in communications and other technological advances.

Critics argue that the billions in total cost could rob domestic programs (and space defense funding), and that a station's missions could be carried out by unmanned satellites or the manned space shuttle orbiter.

However, no such hesitation plagues the Soviet Union. The congressional Office of Technology Assessment reports that the Russians appear almost ready to launch a much larger orbital space station than has ever been put aloft.

According to the congressional report, the Soviets' 12-year pursuit of their S'lyut space station program reflects the Kremlin's commitment to a permanent Soviet presence in orbit and moon and planetary settlements.

More Americans may question embarking on a galactic version of keeping up with the Jones. On the other hand, the ramifications of allowing the Soviets to widen the gap between the two major space powers are enormous.

In view of the potential benefits, the Reagan administration and Congress have good reasons to take steps toward developing an American space station program — and before we relinquish a permanent foothold in space to the Russians.

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1170, Archbishop Thomas Becket was murdered at the altar in the Cathedral of Canterbury in England.

In 1808, the 17th president of the United States, Andrew Johnson, was born in Raleigh, N.C.

In 1851, the Young Men's Christian Association — the YMCA — was organized in Boston.

And in 1867, David Groesbeck and Co., a member of the New York Stock Exchange, became the first brokerage to use a telegraph ticker.

Ten years ago: President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines ended his elected term but continued to rule under a takeover decree.

Five years ago: The shah of Iran chose opposition leader Shahpour Bakhtiar to form a civilian government.

One year ago: The city manager of Miami declared the Overtown section a restricted area after a day of violence that followed the shooting death of a young black man by a Hispanic police officer.

Today's birthdays: Actor Ed Flanders and actress Inga Swenson are 49 years old. Actress Mary Tyler Moore is 46.

Thought for today: "The most important office is that of private citizen." — U.S. Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis (1856-1941).

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Colorado 'stuffing' takes prize

WASHINGTON — Congress is in the midst of its favorite holiday task: stuffing the turkey with extravagant, unnecessary construction projects that will cost the taxpayers billions.

Jack Anderson

My associates Corky Johnson and Donald Goldberg have compiled a list of the more outrageous suspects in this annual raid on the Treasury. They're enough to give any taxpayer a pre-New Year's headache:

— The Narrows Unit, a dam and irrigation project on the South Platte River, is my nominee for the boondoggle of the year. At a cost of just under $400 million, it is supposed to supply water to a few farmers in northeastern Colorado. Critics both in and out of government say the Narrows is bad news economically and environmentally.

The Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation claims the project's cost-benefit ratio beats the break-even mark. But the Office of Management and Budget disagrees. Some critics say the Narrows would return less than 50 cents in benefits for every dollar it costs.

Environmentalists predict that construction will be a disaster for several rare species of birds that use the area's wetlands on their migratory flights each year. "It is our biological opinion that the Narrows Unit is likely to jeopardize the continued existence of the whooping crane," a Fish and Wildlife Service memo warns. The whooping crane is already an endangered species.

In addition, the Environmental Protection Agency has warned that waste runoff caused by the Narrows project will cause serious water problems. EPA sources say the Reclamation Bureau refuses to cooperate in any attempt to solve this problem.

Finally, engineers found flaws in the original design that will cost a bundle to correct. Congressional investigators are checking the blueprints to make sure the dam will be safe if it's built.

— Another Reclamation Bureau boondoggle has drawn fire from the EPA. The Animas-La Plata irrigation project is intended to provide water to farmers in Colorado and New Mexico, at a cost of about $550 million. But the EPA points out that one-fourth of the farmland is out of production under the government's PIK subsidy program. The plan also calls for pumping irrigation water from a site near uranium wastes.

— Rep. Gene Snyder, R-Ky., a veteran member of the Public Works Committee, is trying desperately to snare a $200 million dam for his constituents. Kentucky doesn't want the Falmouth Dam, south of Cincinnati, and refuses to pay its share of the cost. So Snyder is trying to have the federal government pay it all.

The dam is justified as a flood-control measure, but critics say a floodwall would do a better job at one-tenth the price. Army engineers' figures show the Falmouth Dam would destroy up to 9,000 acres of prime farmland, part of a state park and two wildlife refuges, and would displace as many as 500 families.

— Reps. Tom Bevill, D-Ala., and Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., powerhouses on the Appropriations Committee, tacked $9.4 million for the Appalachian Regional Commission's highway program onto the supplemental funding bill. The money will be spent on roads in — where else? — Alabama and Mississippi.

CITIZENS' WATCH: Thousands of Americans have joined my Citizens' Watch to help spot incidents that should be reported. Here's a dispatch from one of them, James Franklin of Los Angeles:

"My work takes me into some of the impoverished areas of Los Angeles, where I see the poor as they really are. Sad to say, Ed Meese was absolutely right when he said a lot of people go to soup kitchens 'because the food is free' and 'that's easier than paying for it.'

"The media seems to have the romantic idea (you included) that all the poor are noble but neglected victims of society. Some of them are, but some of them are not.

"I can tell you from years of observation that the lower class is populated with people of all kinds. Some are long-suffering souls who deserve a better break. Some have psychological problems; they are the chronic misfits you find on the streets. But some are simply unwilling to improve themselves, unwilling to work for a living.

"They go around with their hands out, because it's easier than paying their own way. Yes, I have seen people line up for a free meal because it beats paying for it. The same people have turned down offers to go to work or to learn skills.

"But in the spirit of the Christmas season, I still think we should give to the poor and allow them the benefit of the doubt."

GEORGE F. WILL

Punishment going under knife?

WASHINGTON — When a South Carolina judge sentenced three especially brutal rapists to a choice — 30 years in prison or castration — he stirred a visceral reaction of revulsion. But it was a reaction in search of reasons.

George F. Will

The important point is not constitutional — that such a sentence violates the ban on cruel and unusual punishments. Castration may be cruel even if chosen in preference to 30 years in prison (actually, less than half that time, given good behavior and normal parole procedures). And the important point is not that castration would be somehow medieval. Actually, the sentence reflects a modern turn of mind.

Leave aside the problem of medical ethics: What becomes of the doctor's oath to "do no harm" when his skills are put in the service of what purports to be punishment? Leave aside the fact that this sentence is another instance of a judge improvising intolerably with sentences. Leave aside the fact that the sentence flows from the false assumption that rape is a crime of sex rather than of violence. And leave aside the fact that castration, when administered after puberty, may not be sexually incapacitating.

Sexuality is thoroughly woven into the notion of personality, and the sense of personhood. That is one reason why a mastectomy can be so emotionally traumatic. When the state undertakes to tamper, surgically or chemically, with sexuality it is touching personal identity in an alarming way.

The fundamental wrong in the sentence of castration is present also in what many people consider an untroubling, even "progressive," sentence: requiring rapists to undergo drug treatments that reduce the body's production of testosterone, and hence the sex drive. Such drugs, in conjunction with psychotherapy, reduce recidivism, dramatically. But that fact does not suffice to establish such treatment as an acceptable substitute for incarceration. It is not satisfactory in terms of the rights of society, or of the criminal.

Consider a hypothetical case. It is possible to identify many persons who have a tendency to steal. One way to prevent them from stealing might be "monetary therapy": Give each an annual income of $30,000 — which might be less than the cost of catching, convicting and incarcerating them. Suppose that this would "work" in this narrow utilitarian sense: It would be a cost-effective way to reduce stealing. The idea brings us face-to-face with a fact: Non-utilitarian values must intrude in the matter of punishment. Therapy can not substitute for punishment — for the expression of retribution, of "paying back" — unless all crime is considered a manifestaton of sickness.

Suppose the expressive role is discounted and the only justification for punishment is the prevention of crime. Suppose it were possible to implant, surgically, small monitoring devices in the bodies of persons after, say, a third conviction for a crime. Suppose the device would enable the police to monitor the movements of such persons, much as naturalists keep track of the migrations of animals.

If prevention of crime is the only purpose of punishment, such monitoring might be an alternative to incarceration. But this punishment — deprivation of privacy — would license the state to exercise an ominous talent.

Some people will say: What is the difference? If we can (and in some sense we can) implant ideas that help control behavior, what is wrong with implanting mechanical devices or chemicals? After all, devices and chemicals are easier to remove than ideas.

There are two differences. Ideas that are intended to regulate behavior through moral appeal (including the idea implicit in real punishment: what we are doing to you "fits" what you did to society) involve taking seriously the self-determination of the individual. Therapy sometimes denies that self-determination. Second, it is not just superstition that causes us to feel that the skin is in some way the boundary of the self. When the state may violate an individual's integument, it may disregard his individuality.

It may seem odd to speak of a person having a right to be punished rather than treated as a patient needing therapy. But a criminal has a right to be dealt with in a way that respects the integrity of his personality. It is a right to be dealt with in a way that says the wrongdoer is a self-determining creature responsible for his acts.

The alternative is to cast the criminal into a terrifying limbo where he has no status as a moral agent, and becomes raw material for what C.S. Lewis called "official straighteners." When a society that is squeamish about punishment goes looking for alternatives to incarceration, it is apt to get the penology of scalpels and chemicals.

CHARLEY REESE

Column's goal to give truth

I like to use the end of the year as an opportunity to level with the readers. By that I mean, explain what my frame of reference is. Columnists who don't make clear what their frame of reference is are being dishonest with their readers. A socialist and a capitalist, for example, will look at the same set of facts and draw entirely different conclusions.

Charley Reese

Well, I am a strong beleiver in capitalism. It is the only economic system consistent with individual freedom. It is the only economic system which has proven itself to be productive.

Socialism, both the so-called democratic variety and the totalitarian variety, is a failure. As John Dos Passos once remarked, the world is a museum a of socialist failures. It doesn't work because neither fear nor altruism is a good substitute for self-interest as motivating power.

I am also a nationalist. By that I mean I love my country and put it first and make no bones about it. I hate the thought of world government which is possible only at the cost of losing our national independence. I will never consent to that.

I am a constitutionalist. My loyalty is to the U.S. Constitution, not to any politician or party or federal judge. I believe the Constitution says what it says and means what it says and must be interpreted strictly in the context in which it was written. When the Supreme Court goes beyond the literal meaning of the Constitution as it frequently does these days, it is guilty of usurpation and I will follow the example of Andrew Jackson and simply refuse to obey it. The Constitution, not the Supreme Court, is the supermen law of the land.

I believe in equality before the law — period. No American because of race, creed, color or origin should be denied any political right, but no American is entitled to special privileges or favors unless, as for example veterans, they have been earned in the service of the country.

I believe welfare should be confined to the elderly, the handicapped, and orphans. A welfare system restricted to those three groups plus unemployment and workmen's compensation insurance is all the safety net a nation needs. Laziness, incompetence, stupidity, and chemical abuse do not qualify as legitimate claims on the earnings of others. People in those categories should be left to families and religious organizations where the motive is love and justice need not enter into it.

Foreign policy should be based on protecting our national interest and after that, strict reciprocity. I believe we have the right to take action against any nation which threatens us in any way. I do not believe, however, that we have the right to tell other people how to run their countries nor do I believe we can purchase that right with aid.

If we give aid at all, it must be given for our benefit, not the recipient's or it's not Constitutional. If we give aid for our benefit, then the recipient incurs no obligation to us for taking it nor do we gain any rights by giving it. If, for example, we wish to prevent people from taking over El Salvador and allying that country with the Soviet Union, then we may provide aid to the Salvadorans who are fighting the Communists. That does not give us the right, however, to tell those Salvadorans how to run their own country. If we value our independence and sovereignty, then we must respect the independence and soveriegnty of other nations so long as they do not threaten us.

As for human rights, we support them by example. If a nation is especially abusive of the human rights of its own people, then we might wish to break relations with that nation. But even so, we do not have right to attempt to enforce our morallity and values on other people. OUr choice should be only to associate or not associate.

I should point out, too, that while I love to annoy feminists, I am not a male chauvinist. I do not believe that women are inferior to men, only different in several ways, and my main gripe with feminists is that they try to pretend those differences do not exist.

While I happen to be registered as a Republican, I am not a partisan. Actually I agree with Tom Jefferson that there really are only tow parties — elitists and the people. I am with the people.

Well, that should give you an idea of the frame of reference from which I view the world. I never write with a hidden motive. My single motive is to tell the truth, as best I can determine it at any given time, without regard for who does or doesn't like it.

Charley Reese writes for Sun Belt Syndicate.

'Green revolution' attacks food problem

— Artificial insemination has been a standard practice in beef and dairy herds for years. Recently, scientists have begun to perfect embryo transfer techniques, in which donor semen is used to inseminate a prime cow, making use of her egg for fertilization. The fertilized embryo is then transferred to another cow whose genetic material is of inferior quality for breeding, but fine for pregnancy. The embryos also can be manipulated surgically under a microscope to determine the sex of the offspring ahead of time, and even produce multiple births.

With these techniques, some already offered commercially, farmers can control herds, select more of the sex that will provide the desired product (milk or beef, for example) and reduce the costs of having to feed or destroy unwanted animals.

— The United States Antarctic Research Project and other groups working at the bottom of the world are exploring the potential food use of krill, a tiny, shrimp-like creature high in protein, low in fat and available by the trillions.

— At the University of Missouri in Columbia, scientists have bred wheat with a protein content of 26.5 percent, twice that of conventional wheat.

— A team at the University of California, Davis, is trying to enhance the ability of peas, beans and other legumes to absorb free nitrogen from the air and soil. Using genetic engineering techniques, the scientists are also working to upgrade the efficiency of natural photosynthesis, the plants' conversion of sunlight to energy. Other botanists and soil specialists are working on artificial photosynthetic projects. If they work, the world's farmers will find themselves less dependent on expensive oil imports for use in nitrogen fertilizer production.

— British and Dutch scientists are investigating hormones in plant roots that regulate growth. Isolation and synthesis of these hormones could lead to fertilizer-free supercrops or at least reduce need for petrochemical plant feeds.

— Philippine scientists are investigating soil enrichment programs that could tremendously expand rice cultivation. By adding zinc, sulphur, phosphorus, nitrogen and iron to the soil and growing specially bred rice strains, the rearchers believe they can keep up with burgeoning populations in South and Southeast Asia.

— Pests currently destroy about 35 percent of all food crops before harvest, according to Dr. David Pimentel of Cornell University, and pesticides will therefore remain a vital part of farming. But because of the danger of pesticides, the quest for nontoxic, highly specific pesticides is a priority. The search has led to the discovery of some 2,000 chemicals that plants themselves produce, and experts predict that chemical isolation and enhancement are certain to yield at least a few practical new weapons against crop pests that are harmless to man and the environment.

— Aquaculturists have perfected methods of controlling sex ratios in fish, using synthetic hormones and steroids. Single-sex fish farms can greatly increase harvests by eliminating the shortage of breeders for spawning.

— Among the new food sources scientists are exploring are yeasts, algae and bacteria. With genetic cloning capabilities, literally limitless amounts of these organisms can be safely and efficiently produced.

— Worldwide, scientists are experimenting with ways to convert plant and animal waste and byproducts into usable food for farm animals and man. For example, slaughterhouse wastes such as lungs, intestines and giblets, as well as blood and bone can be processed into fodder, baker's meal and food fillers.

Lunch programs 'important'

By BECKY TODD YORK
Hearst Feature Service

Sandra Price fixed a "lot of macaroni and cheese" for her six children during the nine months her husband Bobby was out of work as a carpenter.

"The children don't think that's cutting back," said Mrs. Price, who is bracing for her husband to be laid off again "any day now" after working again for a few months.

But helping Mrs. Price deal with the problem of properly feeding her three school-age children is the federally funded School Lunch Program, which provides an average of 10.3 million needy students from low-income families across the nation a free hot meal each school day and another 1.6 million a reduced-price lunch. It's the only hot food many of them get, school administrators say.

"It's very important," said Mrs. Price, who has two children at Baltimore city's William Pinderhughes Elementary School and another child at Southeast Middle School. "If I had to spend that money to buy their lunch it would be $60 a month."

CHANGES IN federal guidelines since 1980, however, have cut more than a million needy children from the program, according to a Washington-based non-profit research institute.

In Baltimore, more than half of the 116,000 students in the school system receive a free or reduced-price lunch. An average of 58,358 free lunches were provided each school day in October, and an average of 3,381 students received a meal at the reduced-price rate of 40 cents, said Sheila Terry, chief of the state Department of Education's Child Nutrition section.

In addition, based on their family's income, 5,700 Baltimore students receive a free breakfast, said Constance Hardesty, Baltimore's school food service director.

Statewide statistics from October showed that of Maryland's 515,991 students, about 122,500 received free lunches and 21,800 reduced-price lunches.

Calling the programs "extremely important," Ms. Hardesty said, "The lunch meets the federal requirement of providing one-third of a child's nutrients, and for many of the children, it's the only hot meal they get."

"AND WITH SO many single-parent families and two-parents-working families, it's terribly important that these kids get a meal at school," Ms. Terry said.

Although experts have applauded the school lunch program as one of the most effective, the Reagan administration has tightened it. To qualify for free lunches, a family of four's income must not exceed $12,870. Eligibility for reduced-price meals requires that a family of four must not have an income more than $18,315.

In 1980, those income figures were $10,250 and $15,990 respectively. But in 1981 the income eligibility requirements were changed, and parents were no longer allowed to claim hardship deductions for medical and shelter expenses.

In addition, the cost of a reduced-price lunch jumped from 10 cents to 20 cents in January 1981 and was upped to 40 cents in September 1981, and many school officials contend poor children have been hurt by the price increase.

In Baltimore, for example, the number of students taking free lunches has fallen 13 percent since 1980, while the number buying reduced price lunches has plummeted by 45 percent. School officials attribute most of the change to Reagan's cutbacks.

NATIONWIDE, MORE than 700,000 children dropped out of the free lunch program and more than 300,000 stopped buying reduced price lunches in the aftermath of the budget cuts, according to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities in Washington, whose figures are based on U.S. Department of Agriculture data.

At west Baltimore's George Street Elementary School, where all but a few of the 421 students get either free or reduced-price meals, Principal Roosevelt Hobbs said the lunches fill critical needs in one of the city's poorest and most crime-ridden neighborhoods.

"Mostly from where I sit, I see hunger — honestly," Hobbs said. "I'm checking some applications now. I'm looking at one now where for a three-member household, the monthly income is $295. How much can you buy for $295?"

Tench Tilghman Elementary School Principal Genevieve Gaither said that without the free lunch and breakfast, her 500 children "wouldn't be as apt to catch on (in class) because if they're hungry, they can't learn."

In Baltimore, Ms. Hardesty said that of 8,500 students eligible to receive meals at the cheaper rate, only 3,200 actually buy the reduced-price meals.

"MANY PARENTS can't afford that (40 cents). If they've got several children, it's just too much. Many of them are bringing a lunch from home," Ms. Hardesty said.

But the concern of others is that some of those children may not be eating at all at school.

"We don't know if these kids are eating," Ms. Terry said. "I have heard stories from people of kids in families taking turns eating lunch, and I think that's really sad. But I can't give you hard facts."

The trend seems to continue across the country, said Louise Frolich, director of legislative activities for the American School Food Service Administrators group.

"This is a concern of ours, though it's very hard to know how to do a survey to prove it," Ms. Frolich said. "But every time I talk with a school food service director, it comes up."

FOR THAT REASON, Ms. Hardesty, Ms. Terry and Ms. Frolich are hopeful Congress will pass a bill to cut the cost of a reduced-price lunch to 25 cents and a breakfast from 30 to 15 cents. The bill already has passed the House of Representatives, Ms. Hardesty said.

Southeast Middle School Principal John Mohamed said his faculty has started a "slush fund" to help children who for one reason or another are not receiving free lunches but need it.

"We want children to eat because we know it makes a difference," Mohamed said.

Another change in the program this year is that school systems will be required for the first time to verify 3 percent of their free and reduced-price meal applications on file as of Oct. 31. The districts have until February to do the random checks, which will require parents to prove their eligibility by showing either their food stamp eligibility form or by bringing in to school officials pay check stubs, Ms. Terry said.

Some, including the Maryland Food Committee, are worried that the requirement will intimidate eligible participants from applying.

"WE WILL be looking into monitoring that to see that it is not a problem," said Mary Jacobus, of the Maryland Food Committee.

Ms. Terry said she had "mixed feelings" about the requirement.

"The program has taken a lot of flak, and it needs to prove its integrity," she said. "But I think the kids get fed, and feeding kids shouldn't be as complicated as this. And it will be additional paperwork for administrators."

Critics: Report doesn't truly assess hunger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critics of President Reagan's task force on hunger say the panel appears to be preparing a political document "designed to exonerate Reagan administration policies" rather than truly assess the causes and extent of hunger.

According to one member of the task force hunger is not a major problem in the United States and black children may be the best nourished in the country.

However Robert Greenstein, director of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, said the testimony heard by the task force from around the country was largely ignored.

Reports of what is contained in a draft document prepared by the task force staff "suggest that the task force report is more a political document designed to exonerate Reagan administration policies in the hunger area and promote administration programs than a careful effort to truly assess the causes and extent of hunger in America and what might be done to alleviate it," Greenstein said Wednesday.

Dr. George G. Graham, professor of international health and pediatrics at Johns Hopkins University and a member of the task force, said there is not a massive hunger problem in the United States.

There are categories of people who are malnourished, he said, including abused and battered children and "the lonely elderly who are afraid to come out." But, he said, "food is only part of the solution."

"I don't think anyone in their right mind believes that there is a massive hunger problem," Graham said, adding that although there are malnourished children, "it is not a national problem."

He said of black children, "Their problems are not food — they're probably today the best-nourished group in the United States." Blacks, he said, "take care of their little children." As proof, he cited the many blacks among athletic stars.

Of Greenstein's criticism, John Raisian, executive director of the task force, said he had no response except to stress that some items proposed by the panel "may get ruled down or discussed away" by the time the task force meets Jan. 9 to fashion a final report.

J. Clayburn La Force Jr., head of the task force and dean of the School of Management at UCLA, did not return several phone calls seeking his response to the criticism.

Greenstein said if reports of the recommendations contained in the draft document are accurate and they appear in the final report, "the result would appear to be a significant reduction in federal food assistance programs, probably of more than $1 billion over the next five years."

Task force member, John Driggs, chairman of the board of Western Savings and Loan in Phoenix and head of a national food bank network called Second Harvest, confirmed that the document contained an option to put all federal child-nutrition programs into block grants to the states. These programs now total $3.7 billion a year and include school lunches and breakfasts, child-care feeding and summer feeding.

Driggs said he would not favor such a proposal, adding: "I think that central administration of food assistance programs is a strong point for consistency of funding and administration."

Another option contained in the draft document, he confirmed, was to penalize the states for errors in excess of 3 percent in the food stamp program. And he confirmed the draft said in general there are no holes in the federal "safety net" for the poor and no major federal program increases are needed.

"All of those things were in the first draft — purely a staff draft," Driggs said in a telephone interview. "I feel the second version will have some significant differences...there will be a considerable revision of the document."

He said that in the draft version, "the staff acknowledged hunger does exist (but) went on to point out that some claims about the extent could be exaggerated."

Jackson delays trip to Syria

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson has put his departure for Syria on hold while awaiting assurances that his effort to win the release of a captured American flier won't be rebuffed.

Meantime, he is turning aside the objections of the father of Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr. while waiting for President Reagan to return his phone calls and for President Hafez Assad of Syria to send word that he will meet with Jackson if he does fly to Damascus.

Jackson, a Baptist preacher and candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, told reporters Wednesday that the State Department has been cooperative and Syria's ambassador to the United States, Rafic Jouejati, "encouraging."

But Jouejati, in a long private meeting Wednesday with Jackson, could not provide what Jackson wanted — "the virtual assurance that if we go there we will in fact see President Assad and Lt. Goodman and meet religious leaders there."

At a news conference later in his campaign headquarters, Jackson said the trip is on but the timing uncertain. He could leave as early as today or postpone his departure until this weekend.

His purpose, he said, is to win Goodman's freedom or at least to make an appeal directly on humanitarian grounds to Assad for the injured flier's release.

Goodman was captured by the Syrians Dec. 4 when his fighter jet was shot down over Lebanon during an air strike in retaliation for anti-aircraft fire at U.S. reconnaissance planes.

As for the comment of Robert O. Goodman Sr. that he cannot support "ad hoc efforts to conduct foreign policy," Jackson said it would be wrong "to juxtapose his position with our position."

He said neither he nor Goodman's parents want to put the flier's safety in jeopardy, but as long as he is a pawn of international politics, "he will not be freed."

Jackson said he tried telephoning Reagan four times.

"We can only assume that he is too busy at best or at worst that he does not want to talk," he said.

In Los Angeles, Reagan's spokesman, Larry Speakes, said he did not know why Reagan had not returned the calls. Reagan said Wednesday he "certainly" would take Jackson's call, but he also said efforts like Jackson's could be "counterproductive."

Rev. Jesse Jackson seated next to District of Columbia delegate Walter Fauntroy, faces reporters in Washington Wednesday, after his second meeting with the Syrian ambassador to the United States. Jackson who planned to leave for Syria tonight, said his departure was delayed until Thursday or possibly this weekend, pending more information from Syria.

Jackson called on his fellow Democratic candidates to join in his campaign for Goodman's release. But one of them, Jackson's fellow South Carolinian, Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, said he did not think Jackson should go.

Eastern ordered to rehire transsexual

CHICAGO (AP) — Dismissing Eastern Airlines' arguments as a "sham," a federal judge ordered that a pilot who was discharged after a sex change operation is protected by the 1964 Civil Rights Act and must be rehired with back pay.

The airline's lawyers had contended that safety would be compromised if Karen F. Ulane, who as Kenneth Ulane flew 25 combat missions in Vietnam, were allowed back in the cockpit.

U.S. District Judge John F. Grady ruled Wednesday in Ms. Ulane's favor, and ordered Eastern to restore her lost seniority and benefits.

Eastern's attorney, David Brown, said he would appeal the ruling.

Mrs. Ulane, 42, sat expressionless as Grady read a 2½-hour statement, then leaped to her feet and hugged friends when he finished his remarks. She said she hoped to return to work as soon as possible.

Grady called the airline's arguments "a pretext and sham of the first order."

"Ignorance, prejudice, discrimination and hatred have throughout history been justified by (saying) 'I don't know; we can't take a chance,'" Grady said.

Ms. Ulane, who worked for Eastern for 12 years before the 1980 surgery, sued in 1981 over the airline's refusal to let her return to work as a pilot.

Eastern contended that although it could not prove Ms. Ulane would be a hazard, it could not be certain of the plane's safety in her hands.

But Grady said the airline's arguments were "not advanced in good faith, and but for being a transsexual and for having the operation and assuming a lifestyle of a woman, the plaintiff would not have been discharged."

Eastern also argued that Ms. Ulane was not a woman because she had male chromosomes. Her attorney, Dean Dickie, contended that Ms. Ulane had the hormonal profile of a 42-year-old woman and thus should be considered one.

Grady said there was no "settled definition" of sex from the medical community and that any definition must include how a person is viewed by himself or by society.

An Eastern spokesman, James Ashlock, called the ruling a "unique finding that transsexualism is protected under the federal civil rights act. Apparently in recognition of this novel view of the law, he has issued a certificate of immediate appeal."

The certificate means the case can be appealed even though other counts — in Ms. Ulane's case, for monetary damages — are pending.

Gas leak forces evacuation

SOLVANG, Calif. (AP) — Thousands of people spent the night at refugee centers and hotels after a hazardous gas accidentally leaked into natural gas lines serving six communities. Authorities said at least 42,000 people were urged to evacuate.

A majority of the people, however, appeared to be remaining at their homes, officials said.

The evacuation was called after hydrogen sulfide, which is an irritant at lower concentrations and toxic at higher concentrations, was accidentally dumped into a natural gas pipeline serving the area during testing of a new gas-treatment plant.

The evacuation request, originally limited to Solvang, Buellton, Ballard and Los Olivos, was expanded during the evening to include Lompoc and Vandenberg Air Force Base, gas company spokesman Steve Baer said. That meant at least 42,000 people living northwest of Santa Barbara were urged to evacuate.

Air Force officials ordered up to 3,000 people at the base's Vandenberg Village evacuated. Hundreds of people were scattered at motels and hotels in the area, about 125 miles northwest of Los Angeles, with the utility paying their bills.

Five hundred people were put up Wednesday night at a shelter which the Red Cross set up at a nearby Allan Hancock College late Wednesday, hours after Southern California Gas Co. asked residents of rural communities in the Santa Ynez Valley to leave their homes for the night.

The incident began about noon, when workers fired up the natural gas plant in Las Flores Canyon, along the Pacific Coast about 25 miles northwest of Santa Barbara.

The accident occurred at the Las Flores treatment plant owned by Pacific Interstate Co., a Southern California Gas Co. supplier, Baer said.

The plant is located about eight miles west of President Reagan's mountain ranch complex. The Reagans, who are vacationing in California, were staying at a Los Angeles hotel.

Aide's son faces trial

From Wire Reports

TORRANCE, Calif. — Michael David Miller, the son of President Reagan's personal attorney, is fit to stand trial for the rape and murder of his mother last March, a judge ruled Wednesday.

Torrance Superior Court Judge Thomas W. Fredericks made his decision after the medical director of Patton State Hospital testified that, although Miller is still mentally ill, he is able to grasp, both intellectually and emotionally, the gravity of the charges against him.

Dr. August M. Kasper also testified that Miller, 21, is able to understand court proceedings and can assist his defense attorneys.

Miller has been undergoing court-ordered treatment at Patton, near San Bernardino, Calif. since May, shortly after Fredericks found him incompetent to stand trial.

Minutes after Fredericks made his ruling Wednesday, Millerwas ushered into the courtroom of Torrance Municipal Judge Benjamin Aranda, where he pleaded innocent to both charges against him. Aranda scheduled a preliminary hearing for March 1.

Miller was arrested March 25, the day after his mother's nude body was found in the bedroom of the family's oceanfront home in Palos Verdes Estates. She had been raped and bludgeoned to death, a coroner's autopsy showed.

The day after the arrest, a spokesman for the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department said that Miller had given Palos Verdes Estates police detectives "a full and complete" confession to his mother's murder.

Landry's 'In Playoffs Again' commercials gall fans

Tom Landry
...TV regular

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Tom Landry has been on the TV screen during the past couple of weeks more than President Reagan, Mr. T and the Muppets.

There is one scene in which he rides up to an old Western saloon in a wide-brimmed hat, calf-length sheepskin coat, chaps and dirty boots, gets off his horse and strolls through the swinging doors.

"Not many people know who I am," he says in effect as he steps up to the bar and then launches on his pitch for a well-known credit card.

After extolling the merits of the recognition tool, he ends by saying, "You never know when you're going to be surrounded by redskins," and being engulfed by a group of beefy Redskins (Washington football variety).

This is a tricky twist for the normally dapper longtime coach of the Dallas Cowboys who can point to a scalping by the Redskins in Texas Stadium nearly three weeks ago for starting the Cowboys' slide out of the National Football League playoffs.

Even more ironic has been the series of commercials on all the networks which begins with a film clip showing Drew Pearson snagging a touchdown pass from Roger Staubach a few years ago. "Dallas wins! The Cowboys are in the playoffs again!" screams an announcer above a roaring crowd.

"You may think football is the most important thing in Tom Landry's life," intones a voice in the background. The balding Cowboy coach steps through the door to insist it isn't so. The most important thing in his life is his religious faith.

It's a peg for introducing a book entitled "Power for Living," offered free to the public. A centerfold ad was featured in TV Guide and the commercial was still running in the screens after Monday's 24-17 loss to the Los Angeles Rams which knocked the Cowboys out of the playoffs for which they had qualified in 17 of the past 18 seasons.

It must be galling to Cowboy fans and players — not to mention Landry himself — to keep hearing the words, "The Cowboys are in the playoffs again!"

Obviously, nobody expected — particularly advertisers — that the Cowboys could be ousted so quickly. Thus, TV was stuck with the 30-second, outdated spots.

No wonder the so-called "America's Team" has come under such widespread adverse criticism — not only from fickle supporters but from the press and general public, as well.

The Cowboys suffer from their own success. Though not indominatable, they have been football's constant — 18 straight winning seasons, poised, computerized, error-free. To lose three vital games in a row — to the Redskins, 49ers and Los Angeles Rams - was unthinkable.

So what happens now?

High-jumper John Thomas had the answer after failing to win his event in the 1960 Olympics in Rome.

"Fans are fickle," he said. "They are like the spectators in the ancient Colisseum. If you don't win, it's thumbs down. They want blood. They are cruel and insatiable."

So who's the sacrificial lamb for this most consistently successful NFL franchise? Fire the only coach the Cowboys have had the last 23 years? ("I'm not quitting," Landry says). Sack the quarterback, Danny White, because he threw three interceptions? Rebuild the team from scratch?

On the basis of this one failure, some critics are demanding an infusion of new blood. One New York critic writes that Landry might have lost credibility with his black players because of his political support of Jesse Helms, the conservative senator from North Carolina.

It is inconceivable that the Cowboys, who have been one game away from the Super Bowl the last three years, could have deteriorated so quickly.

It's a crazy game, built not just on strength, spirit and savvy but also on emotion. Much of the Cowboys' will was dampened two weeks ago when, fired up for the Redskins, quarterback White changed signals on a crucial and aborted fourth down play in midfield as the normally implaccable Landry stood on the sidelines yelling "No, no! Danny, no!"

The Cowboys' flame flickered there and died. Against the 49ers and Rams, what we had always interpreted as Dallas' tremendous poise and calm became nothing more than lack of fire and spirit.

Raiders stun Wolverines

By Associated Press

It only took a pair of shots by Butch Moore and Quentin Anderson to redeem some sagging Southwest Conference pride.

Moore sank a "miraculous" 33-foot jump shot at the buzzer to give 9-2 Southern Methodist a 78-76 victory over Duke at the Rainbow Classic in Honolulu.

And in El Paso, Anderson hit a 15-foot jump shot with six seconds remaining to give Tech a stunning 59-58 upset of 15th-ranked Michigan in the Sun Bowl tournament.

The victories came just 24 hours after a dismal evening in which the four conference teams in action, including Tech, had all lost.

In other actiont, Arkansas crushed St. Peter's 82-49 at Little Rock; Texas A&M won the consolation game of the Music City Invitation in Nashville, Tenn., with a 44-42 victory over Air Force; and Baylor rebounded to take the consolation game of the Golden Triangle tourney in Pittsburgh with a 59-49 victory over Duquesne.

Tech coach Gerald Myers called the victory over Michigan one of the biggest in the university's history. The win lifted the Red Raiders' record to 6-5.

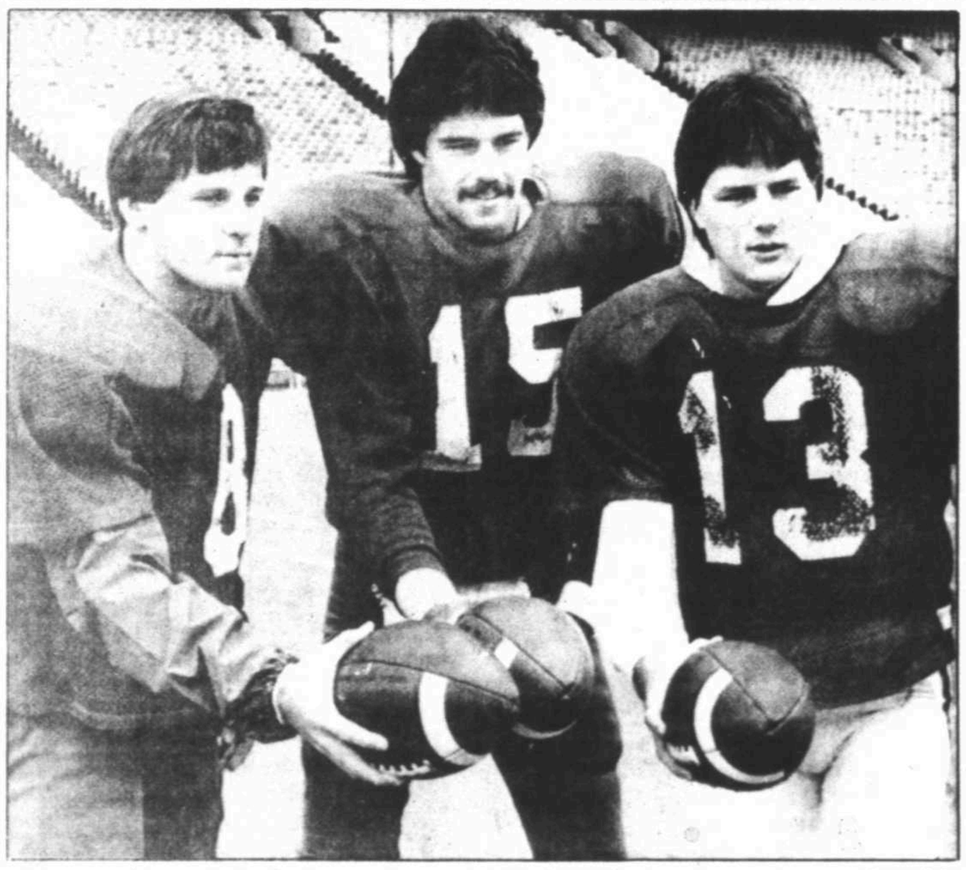

"It was a big win for us because it came against a great team from a great conference," Myers said. "We've had some big wins at Texas Tech over the years, but this must rank up near the top."

The final play of the consolation game was designed to go to guard Bubba Jennings, Myers said, "but he was covered so he dished it off to the open man. Thank God Anderson made it."

SMU Coach Dave Bliss was just as appreciative of Moore's accuracy under pressure.

"It was a miraculous shot, a 33-foot banker off the glass," Bliss said. "We had an 18-point lead and just died on the vine in the second half ... we were lucky to hold on."

Larry Davis scored a career-high 28 points for SMU, hitting 14 of 17 from the field.

Demaret dies on golf links

HOUSTON (AP) — Three-time Masters champion Jimmy Demaret, whose flair for showmanship helped popularize golf as a spectator sport in the 1940s, died while boarding a golf cart on a course he founded.

"I guess he died like he would have preferred to go — not bothering anyone," Champions Golf Club developer Pat Morgan said Wednesday after Demaret died, at age 73, of an apparent heart attack.

Demaret, who had suffered recently from heart ailments, was stricken as he worked at the Champions club he founded in 1957 and co-owned with veteran pro Jack Burke Jr., according to club spokeswoman Laura Guillot.

"We're all in shock," Morgan said. "Jack goes back 60 years with Jimmy . . . It's like losing your brother or father."

FUNERAL arrangements were pending but Morgan said services would be restricted to family members.

Tributes to the golfing legend followed the announcement of his death.

Jack Nicklaus, winner of 19 major tournaments, said, "I admired him for his flair and flamboyance. And I admired his ability to keep things in perspective in that, to Demaret, golf was a part of life, a part of life and not the overriding factor of life.

"He's been a good friend. He was a good man. And he will be missed."

PGA tour Commissioner Deane Beman said Demaret was a major contributor to the present tour.

"I don't think anyone now playing the game really realizes the contributions he made to golf," Beman said. "I remember him in that floppy hat and those flashy clothes. And he was the first great showman in golf. He helped put golf on the sports pages and bring it to the public attention."

Demaret was the tour's leading money winner in 1947 when he won seven tournaments. His first tournament victory came in 1934 when he pocketed $25 for first place in the Texas PGA.

His first major victory came in 1938, the year Demaret joined the tour, when he outdueled Sam Snead for the National Match Play title in San Francisco.

DEMARET was unbeaten in six matches while playing on three Ryder Cup teams.

He later won the Walter Hagen Cup for helping to promote competition between the U.S. and Britain.

Demaret was born May 24, 1910, in Houston, the fourth of nine children. He was working for Jack Burke Sr., then the club pro at Houston's River Oaks Country Club, when the younger Burke was born in 1923. A close friendship later grew into a business partnership.

Jimmy Demaret
...three-times Masters winner

"They were here every day, he and Jack," Morgan said. "They were the owners and originators and the driving force at Champions."

Demaret also was the designer and part owner of the Onion Creek Club in Austin, Texas, site of the annual Legends of Golf tournament, in which Demaret regularly competed.

"He was a great player and probably the father of the seniors tour," pro golfer Tom Kite said. "I had tremendous respect for him. He had an important impact on the game. Down through the history of golf, he's been one of the important men."

Demaret's trademark was the flashy clothes he wore on the course and his style never changed.

When inducted into the World Golf Hall of Fame in May, Demaret wore a bright apricot sweater, white knickers, argyle socks and orange and black golf shoes.

"He helped elevate the game years ago when pros couldn't get in the country clubs," said pro golfer Raymond Floyd. "He helped raise the game, the professional end of it, to the level it has now.

"This is a tremendous loss to golf."

The Liberty Bowl has the big attraction in Notre Dame. The Gator Bowl is a prime-time feast for ABC-TV. Houston's Bluebonnet Bowl has strong regional ties with Baylor and Oklahoma State involved.

And then there is the Peach Bowl, the poor Peach Bowl.

North Carolina and Florida State will be the participants Friday afternoon at Atlanta Fulton County Stadium for the 16th and perhaps last Peach Bowl. The game will be blacked out in Atlanta and Macon, Ga., because of lagging ticket sales and NCAA sanction of future games might be dropped if 40 percent of the tickets — which amounts to 24,214 — is not sold locally.

As of Wednesday, bowl officials were 2,680 tickets short of reaching that goal.

"If they (the NCAA) mean what they say," said George Crumbley, the executive director of the Peach Bowl, "this will be the last Peach Bowl if we don't sell the remaining 2,680 tickets. I've still got faith but it's going right down to the wire.

"But if the people of Atlanta are not going to support the game, maybe Atlanta should not have the game. It makes me very sad."

This is the third time the Peach Bowl has had to scramble to stay alive. In 1978, when Purdue played Georgia Tech, Janet Rodgers, the wife of Tech Coach Pepper Rodgers, personally took charge of selling tickets.

North Carolina, 8-3, is a three-point underdog to Florida State, 6-5. The Tar Heels lost three of their final four games to drop from a No. 3 ranking out of the Top 20.

"A win would get us back in the Top 20 for the fifth straight year," said Tar Heels quarterback Steve Stankavage. "There's been a great deal of disappointment and frustration at what has happened this year."

The Seminoles lost their season finale 53-14 to Florida, 8-2-1, which is facing 9-2 Iowa in the Gator Bowl.

"It was like we saved up all our critical mistakes that could happen," said Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden, "and they happened in that game."

TONIGHT, NOTRE Dame, 6-5, takes on Boston College, 9-2, in the Liberty Bowl at Memphis, Tenn. The game has been labeled the "Catholic Super Bowl," even though the Irish had a mediocre season and almost turned down the bowl bid. Notre Dame has lost its last three games, while BC finished up with an impressive victory over Alabama.

BC hasn't won 10 games since 1940, when Frank Leahy was the coach. Leahy left after the Eagles beat Tennessee in the Sugar Bowl to coach at Notre Dame.

"Man, I want Notre Dame bad," said Eagles linebacker Peter Holey. "I've been hearing how great these guys are and how much tradition they have. Well, we're ready."

FRIDAY'S GATOR Bowl at Jacksonville (8 p.m. ABC) has a local favorite in Florida but the weather might favor Iowa.

"If it's cold, and it will be, it will be in Iowa's favor," said Gators Coach Charley Pell. "We've heard it'll be anything from the 40s to the 20s."

Weather won't be a factor for Baylor and Oklahoma State under the Astrodome Saturday night. The 7-3-1 Bears feature QB Cody Carlson, who was fourth in the nation in passing efficiency. The 7-4 Cowboys counter with running backs Shawn Jones and Ernest Anderson.

Sooners' Tisdale scores 61

OU sophomore breaks record set by Chamberlian

By Associated Press

The biggest name in Big Eight history is Wilt Chamberlain. Someday, Wayman Tisdale might be placed in Wilt's company.

Wednesday night, Tisdale did something that not even the great Chamberlain ever managed. The Oklahoma sophomore scored 61 points, setting a conference record in leading the Sooners to a 112-72 rout of Texas-San Antonio in the opening round of the All-College Tournament in Oklahoma City.

Tisdale's 61 points, on 24-for-34 from the field and 13-for-18 from the free throw line, also shattered the tourney mark of 53 by Pete Maravich for Louisiana State in 1968.

Chamberlain scored 52 points for Kansas against Northwestern in 1956.

"It's a great feeling and honor," said the 6-foot-9 Tisdale. "I consider Chamberlain to be the greatest player to ever play. Wilt Chamberlain is the guy I've admired for as long as I've remembered."

Tisdale, an All-American last year as a freshman, also set a conference record with 24 field goals and his 22 rebounds were a career high. His previous points high was 51 last year against Abilene Christian.

"They were playing behind me a lot and I was able to get off my turnaround jumper," he said. "I never really thought about the record until they announced I had 39 points. There was still about 10 minutes left in the game and I thought I had a good chance to break it then."

In the second game, Arkansas-Little Rock beat host Oklahoma City 78-72.

AMONG RANKED teams, No. 2 Kentucky beat No. 18 Purdue 86-67; fifth-ranked Georgetown topped Marshall 82-71; No. 7 UCLA 82, Brigham Young 73; No. 10 Wake Forest edged Jacksonville 57-54 to win the Gator Bowl; No. 13 North Carolina State walloped Towson State 88-49; No. 14 Louisville whipped Hawaii-Pacific 89-61; No. 15 Michigan was edged 59-58 by Texas Tech in the consolation game of the Sun Bowl, while No. 16 Texas-El Paso, the host team, beat Arizona 51-49 in overtime to take the tournament; and No. 20 Illinois outscored Missouri 66-60.

In tournament finals, the Golden Triangle Classic was won by host Pittsburgh, which beat Illinois State 59-54; the Milwaukee Invitational was captured by host Marquette, 59-57 over Miami, Ohio, and Vanderbilt won its Music City championship with a 58-44 decision over South Florida.

In the Rainbow Classic, it was Alabama Birmingham 57, Pacific 48 and SMU 78, Duke 76.

Top Twenty

Kentucky blew out the Boilermakers in the first half, holding Purdue to 25.9 percent shooting from the field while hitting on 51.5 percent of its shots. The Wildcats led 53-27 at halftime and coasted behind 22 points by Mel Turpin and 18 from Kenny Walker.

David Wingate scored 23 points and Patrick Ewing contributed 17 and 10 rebounds for Georgetown, 9-1. The Hoyas outscored Marshall 18-7 in the final nine minutes.

UCLA used 10-0 and 12-2 spurts in the first half to take command against BYU. The Cougars rallied within 56-53 but that was as close as they got. Stuart Gray led the Bruins with 19 points.

Wake Forest made seven of eight free throws in the final 1:28 to cement its Gator Bowl title. Danny Young's two free throws snapped a 50-50 tie and the Deacons, 8-0, kept their record unblemished.

Lorenzo Charles scored 26 points for defending NCAA champion N.C. State.

Lancaster Gordon's 18 points led Louisville to its easy victory over Hawaii Pacific in the Rainbow Classic.

In the Sun Bowl tourney, Luster Goodwin scored 16 points and Juden Smith's two free throws provided the winning points in OT for unbeaten UTEP, 10-0.

Illinois, 9-1, got 20 points from Efrem Winters and withstood a late rally by Missouri.

Trouble in streets

Boxing ref Rivera teams up to fight drugs in Bronx's Fort Apache

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The trouble starts in the streets — the squalid, overcrowded streets, streets where drugs hang heavy in the air, always waiting for their victims, always ready to claim more lives.

What do you want? Cocaine? Marijuana? Heroin? Angel dust? It is all here, all very available.

This is the South Bronx, the underbelly of New York. It is Fort Apache, an impoverished, dangerous section of town, to be approached with extreme caution. It is Luis Rivera's turf and he has overcome its pitfalls.

RIVERA IS a referee for the New York State Athletic Commission and frequently works fights in Madison Square Garden. He is also head of Project Return's physical education program, serving as trainer and coach of the rehabilitation center's three boxing teams. Those teams are integral parts of the recovery plan for some of the 300 addicts who live there, patients who are using sports as a way to reclaim their lives.

Rivera knows what these people go through, the physical torment of overcoming addiction. That's because he has been there himself, a victim who has become a victor.

Rivera was a promising amateur middleweight boxer 20 years ago and had reached the finals of New York's Golden Gloves when his whole world came crashing down. During a routine physical examination, he was told he had rheumatic fever and was out of the tournament.

"I went crazy," he said. "I started running wild."

The streets were waiting and they eagerly claimed him. He remembers how it happened.

"YOU ARE cooped up on the block and there is nobody to help. The only way you see to survive is dope. Dope and alcohol. Cocaine and heroin. Speedball — coke and heroin combined.

"At first, you experience a feeling of freedom. You have no problems. You mellow out. You are king of the streets.

"Then it changes. The dope starts making you sleepy. You begin to lose interest in things. So you graduate, maybe to heroin, maybe to cocaine, maybe to speed. Then you stop sleeping.

"I lost my wife and kids. I was getting blackouts. I didn't know what I was doing. They were looking for me in the streets. I hit bottom."

That is the point, addicts will tell you, when they can start on the road back. That was the point for Luis Rivera.

"I started working in the community. I went back to school. I got clean."

Rivera fought professionally for a while and then went on to earn a masters degree in physical education from the City University of New York. Now he helps others come back, fight their way out of the morass of the drug culture, with the help of Project Return.

"WE HAVE had 200 persons through the program, people who are making it, people who are drug free. Some take 15 months. Some take 18 months. Some take 20 months. But they make it. If you lose hope, you lose motivation."

The idea, said Rivera, is to use sports as a vehicle to help the addicted drugs.

"It is a way for them to ventilate their anger, frustration, guilt and fear," he said. "We help them answer questions like who they are, where they are going."

Irish-Tide, Ara-Bear...'73 Sugar Bowl one for ages

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

They called it "a game for the ages." It was one of the most electrifying college football games ever played. The principals were two of the nation's most celebrated teams, Notre Dame and Alabama, led by a pair of coaching geniuses, Ara Parseghian and Bear Bryant. The national championship hung on the outcome.

But for a small knot of men in the dank, open press box of Tulane Stadium that chill, drippy New Year's Eve, 1973, the 40th Sugar Bowl classic will not be remembered for Bob Thomas' late field goal and Parseghian's go-for-broke strategy in the fading seconds but for the story that was never written of Notre Dame's 24-23 victory.

It will always be the poignant tale of Herby Kirby, a bubbly little man whose lifelong dream turned to tragedy.

THE GAME was brought to our attention this week with the arrival of a slick, coffee-table book entitled, "The First Fifty Years of the Sugar Bowl Classic," authored by Marty Mule of the New Orleans Times-Picayune.

The well-written, nicely illustrated volume resurrects the gridiron heroics of half a century but there's no mention of Herby Kirby. His story is reserved for a few peers who will forever wonder if they could have done more.

Kirby, a man in his early 50s, had been a last minute fill-in to cover the game after his sports editor, Bill Lumpkin of the Birminhgam Post-Herald, became suddenly ill and had to undergo an emergency operation.

"This is the first big college game I've ever covered," Herby said as he walked down the press row, introducing himself. "I usually cover high school games. I've got to tell you — I'm pretty nervous and worried."

For many years Herby had been stringing high school sports for the Post-Herald while working at a local dairy.

"He loved football," Lumpkin was to recall later. "He would come into the office before he went to work, at the lunch break and after his day at the dairy. He's the only person I know who would go to a high school banquet on his own time."

HERBY HAD driven to New Orleans with his wife and some friends. He said it was the first big trip for himself and his wife and they were looking forward to the Sugar Bowl party after the game.

Despite the raw weather, there was an electrically charged atmosphere as the two top-rated teams came to grips.

After a period of sparring, Notre Dame quarterback Tom Clements led a 62-yard drive, climaxed by a 3-yard plunge by 230-pound fullback Wayne Bullock. Missing the conversion, the Irish led 6-0.

The first quarter ended with the Irish having only six points to show for five first downs and 144 yards. Alabama hadn't moved the ball an inch.

"I've got a terrible headache," Herby said. "Anybody got an aspirin?"

Nobody did.

ALABAMA GOT rolling in the second period under the quarterbacking of Gary Rutledge and scored to go ahead 7-6. On the ensuing kickoff, Notre Dame freshman Al Hunter took the ball on his own 7 and rambled 93 yards and, with a two-point conversion, a 14-7 lead.

"My head is killing me," Herby complained. Everybody was too busy to help.

Richard Todd came in at quarterback for Alabama and led the Tide into a position for a 38-yard field goal.

The Irish led 21-17 going into the final period as excitement reached a crescendo. Herby was in obvious agony but everybody's attention was riveted on the field.

Alabama scored but missed the extra point, then Thomas kicked a 19-yard field goal that gave Notre Dame the ultimate edge 24-23. Pinned against their own goal, the Irish uncorked a flea-flicker surprise play to keep possession and run out the clock. It was the only Sugar Bowl game the Bear ever lost.

ON DEADLINE, half the writers fled to the locker rooms while others stayed back and began pounding their typewriters feverishly.

Not Herby Kirby. He had collapsed on the press room floor, apparent victim of a stroke, while frantic calls for help went temporarily unheeded. Fellow writers took turns trying futilely to give amateur aid. It was no use.

Mrs. Kirby returned to the hotel, only to be told later of her husband's death. So the greatest story of his life never got written by Herby Kirby, the nice little man with a poem for a name.

Sam Wyche new Bengals' coach

CINCINNATI (AP) — Sam Wyche, who had little success leading the Cincinnati Bengals as a backup quarterback in their formative years, has returned to try to direct them back to playoff glory as head coach.

Wyche, who turns 39 in one week, became the National Football League's youngest head coach when he left Indiana University to take the Cincinnati opening Wednesday.

"He was the first and only man we interviewed for the job," Bengals General Manager Paul Brown said in a prepared statement. "He was the man we wanted from the beginning, and we are very happy he has elected to be with us."

Wyche replaces Forrest Gregg, who left last week to take the head coaching job at Green Bay.

Indiana finished 3-8 in Wyche's first season there. He goes to a Bengal team that ended up 7-9 this season after two consecutive playoff seasons.

Wyche's naming was a mild surprise to some Bengal players, but not to former teammates who knew his interest in coaching the team one day.

"The Browns (Paul and his son, Mike, the team's assistant general manager) have thought a lot of Sam through the years," said former Bengal quarterback John Stofa, who played ahead of Wyche. "You could tell there was a mutual admiration there.

"You can see some guys expressing a stronger interest in what's going on with the game plan. Sam was one of those. Thinking kept Sam in pro football, not athletic ability."

Wyche played three years under Paul Brown in Cincinnati (1968-70), then went to Washington, Detroit, St. Louis and Buffalo. He was quarterback coach and offensive coordinator with the San Francisco 49ers for four years under Bill Walsh (1979-82) before signing a five-year contract as head football coach at Indiana.

Indiana agreed to release him from his agreement after only one year to take his first NFL head coaching job.

"The selection of Sam Wyche follows a trend in the National Football League where quarterbacks are becoming head coaches at many places," Paul Brown said. "Indiana University was very cooperative in making it possible for Sam to join the Bengals. They gave him his release to take what they conceded was an advancement in his career."

Turmoil strikes UH basketball

HOUSTON (AP) — Two University of Houston basketball players already have quit the team and a third has threatened to quit over a lack of playing time as Coach Guy Lewis faced an early season crisis Wednesday.

Benny Anders, a top UH reserve the past two seasons, and junior college transfer Braxton Clark quit the team and returned to Houston Monday, about one hour prior to Houston's 68-61 loss to Fresno State in the finals of the Chaminade Classic in Hawaii.

A third substitute player, Renaldo Thomas, said he also planned to quit the team if he could not get assurances from Lewis that he would be more playing time.

Anders and Thomas said they planned to speak with Lewis when the team returned to Houston on Thursday but Clark said he definitely would not return.

"This is a major university and one of the top programs in the country," Anders said after returning to Houston. "And there is no doubt Clark and I want to play here. But if you can't play, why stay.?

"I discussed the matter with Coach Lewis before I left and I told him I would go home and think about my situation."

Bass 'takes over' as Spurs' coach

From wire reports

BASKETBALL—San Antonio's Spurs fired head coach Morris McHone and GM Bob Bass Will finish out the season as coach. McHone took over the Spurs last June and has tentatively accepted a position as a scout for the club. The decision came after the Spurs' fifth straight loss Tuesday...

Bob Bass

Dallas Mavericks coach Dick Motta would like to eliminate all zone defense violations in NBA games and allow the defense to play any style they wish. Motta wouldn't start the 24-second clock until the offensive team has possession of the ball in the front court. He would also shorten the distance for a 3-point shot by bringing the lines nearest the sidelines one foot closer and having the line intersect the top of the free throw circle...

Six-eight walk-on Tom Nelson quit the Texas Longhorn team, the fourth player to leave in the past month. Since Bob Weltlich became coach in April 1982, seven players have quit and 12 have left for reasons, including poor grades...

NC State's Alvin Battle and Walt Densmore were declared academically ineligible. Battle, a 6-7 senior forward from Rocky Mount, N.C., will appeal for reinstatement through normal channels. Densmore is a 6-7 sophomore and he plans to transfer to another school...

FOOTBALL—Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback Terry Bradshaw says his arm "is still very weak," and it is "extremely doubtful" he will play Sunday against the Raiders. Quarterbacks Cliff Stoudt and Mark Malone took all the snaps in offensive drills Tuesday...

Poor ticket sales have caused Friday's Peach Bowl o be blacked out in Atlanta and Macon, and could shut down the bowl after this year. Only 36,000 to 37,000 tickets had been sold for the game between North Carolina and Florida State. FSU and North Carolina had sold more than 14,000 tickets between them, but under a rule of the NCAA, 24,214 seats, or 40 percent of Atlanta Stadium's 60,000 seats, must be sold locally or the NCAA will not sanction it in the future...

Dallas Cowboys linebacker Mike Hegman expects to sign a contract next week with the USFL New Jersey Generals, but the Memphis Showboats, who hold Hegman's USFL territorial rights, have not traded those rights to the Generals, it was reported Thursday. Hegman said he planned to leave the Cowboys, regardless of who holds his rights. He has been the starting strong side linebacker since Thomas Henderson was forced to retire during the 1979 season...

BASEBALL—Funeral services were held for Norman "Babe" Young, 68, a first baseman-outfielder for the New York Giants, Cincinnati and the St. Louis Cardinals from 1936-48. Young died Sunday of a heart attack in Everett, Mass., where he was visiting a daughter...

SPORTS WITH A LIVING ROOM VIEW

Looking back on '83

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

As 1984 closes in on us, a few thoughts about television in 1983.

It was a good year for:

— Al Michaels, who solidified his niche as the best play-by-play man in television. It's too bad that his exposure diminishes when the baseball season ends.

—John Madden, who informs and entertains in one big enthusiastic package. He was never better than in Monday's Rams-Dallas game.

— Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen, whose performance on the Super Bowl last January was the best tandem work of the year.

— Ahmad Rashad, who showed reportorial instincts rare in an ex-athlete by getting himself a bedside interview with injured Cuban runner Alberto Juantorena at the World Track Championships in Helsinki. "I know you, you're the football player," Juantorena told Rashad.

— Dick Vermeil, a self-proclaimed burned out football coach who became a hot rookie broadcaster whose stage presence increased and jargon decreased as the football season progressed.

— Larry Kamm and the rest of the people at ABC who gave us "The Great American Bicycle Race," a two-part tribute to four remarkable, crazy men pedaling their guts out from coast-to-coast. ABC ought to rerun it again and again for the millions who missed it.

—Don Meredith, who lets a lot of hot air out of the Monday Night broadcast booth.

However ...

THINGS WEREN'T so good for:

— The Public Broadcasting Service's "Frontline" series, whose "Unauthorized History of the National Football League," attempted to turn a hodge-podge of warmed-over film clips, underworld gossip, and guilt-by-association into an expose.

— ABC's "Monday Night Football," which was given a schedule by the NFL designed to put the American public to sleep early. How about them Giants?

— NBC, which was stuck with blowouts in the men's and women's finals at Wimbledon and with first-round knockouts (Ray Mancini and Larry Holmes) in a prime-time boxing extravaganza.

— Tom Brookshier, who after a promo for a Louisville basketball game blurted out: "Denny Crum always has a great team at Louisville. They have a collective IQ of about 40, but they can play basketball." After being remonstrated by sidekick Charlie Waters, he re-emphasized — "It's the truth." CBS removed him forthwith from his next assignment.

— Howard Cosell, not so much for calling Alvin Garrett "a little monkey," but for denying on the air afterwards that he said it.

— CBS' "NFL Today" and NBC's "NFL '83," who for four weeks turned their shows over to a bame of "Buy and Sell" between New Jersey Generals owner Donald Trump and agent Howard Slusher.

— CBS, which twice cut off golf playoffs to bring on "Sixty Minutes," then, rerversing its gears, carried a third tournament over into the opening minutes of the first game of the National Basketball Association finals. Both poilicies, of course, drew protests.

Lovington defeats Lee

CLOVIS, N.M.—Lovington, N.M., defeated Midland Lee, 88-67, Wednesday in the opening round of the Clovis, N.M., Invitational High School basketball tournament.

Midland Lee will play Las Vegas, N.M., Robertson in the consolation semifinals today.

Mistake results in OSU mark

HOUSTON (AP) — A "lucky mistake" by the head coach and the untimely laughter of several teammates helped produce the Ernest Anderson who set a national collegiate single-season rushing record of 1,877 yards for Oklahoma State his junior season.

As a senior, however, a series of injuries made Anderson's medical record more impressive than his 488 yards rushing.

He missed much of the season because of a groin pull, pulled abdominal muscles and a bleeding ulcer that required three pints of blood during treatment.

"I wasn't used to not playing and the doctors said worrying did it," Anderson said of his ulcer problem. "I don't talk too much and I usually get my tensions out on the field."

Anderson, who might have been a Heisman Trophy candidate without the bad luck, will play his final collegiate game Saturday when Oklahoma State faces Baylor in the 25th Bluebonnet Bowl game.

But it will be in a backup role.

"He's healthy, but he's not 100 percent," Oklahoma State Coach Jimmy Johnson said. "He's not as strong as he was last year and he needs his strength to be effective."

Anderson's strength, or lack of it, could have kept him from being recruited by Oklahoma State if the Cowboys program had been more advanced when Johnson took charge in 1979.

Anderson, a skinny 155-pounder out of Orange (Stark), Texas, was the third player signed by Johnson when he took over as Cowboys coach.

"If our program had been farther along, we might have reluctant to take Ernest," Johnson said. "But luckily we weren't established so we took him. We knew he had talent though."

Anderson recognized his weakness and started lifting weights shortly after arriving at Oklahoma State.

"I'd never been around weights before," Anderson said. "I bench pressed only about 135 pounds my first time and some of the guys laughed at me. That was kind of an incentive for me."

Anderson built his upper body to the point where he could bench press 390 pounds. Since recovering from his injuries, he's back up to 375 pounds.

"When I first came to Oklahoma State I got knocked around a lot," Anderson said. "It was just the opposite from high school. It was a big adjustment for me. I didn't know what weights were but I learned real fast."

Anderson hopes to play a role in the Cowboys offense in the 7 p.m. kickoff but Shawn Jones, who led the team with 924 yards rushing this season, will be the starter.

Confused about leasing or buying your telephone?

You don't have to make a decision now.

You've probably read and heard a lot about whether you should buy or continue to lease your telephone. In talking to our customers, we know there's confusion about what to do.

But most important, you don't have to make a decision right now. At Southwestern Bell, we want you to know all your options. Very simply, here's what you can do:

1. Do Nothing. Your phone service will not be interrupted. You will continue to lease your phone as always. But from AT&T.

2. Buy Your Old Phone. The old phone you're leasing now may be purchased from AT&T. You can also buy new telephones from a variety of stores.

3. Buy a new phone from us. Starting in January, Southwestern Bell Telecom* will offer for sale a new line of high quality, high function electronic telephones at competitive prices. All will be fully warranted by us and meet the high standards of Bell quality.

So there's no need to rush out and buy now. Call us in January and we'll give you more information on our new line of phones. Now you can really relax.

FERC OKs natural gas price reductions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale natural gas prices in parts of 11 states in the Midwest will drop 19 percent Sunday, giving consumers in those areas relief from substantial price increases in time for the winter heating season.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on Wednesday unanimously approved a request by Trunkline Gas Co. to reduce its wholesale price to some 130 local utilities — primarily in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri.

The reduction, amounting to about 88 cents per 1,000 cubic feet (mcf) reflects a decision two week ago by Trunkline and its parent company, Panhandle Eastern Corp. of Houston, to suspend its purchase of high-priced liquefied natural gas from Algeria.

Over an eight-month period, the commission said, that suspension should reduce Trunkline's gas acquisition costs by $193 million.

The commission said it expedited Trunkline's request rather than wait until its next formal meeting in January to "facilitate the immediate passthrough of this significant reduction."

Assuming that the local gas distributors supplied by Trunkline pass the savings on, consumers should see the difference in their residential, commercial and industrial rates on the bills they receive in February.

Trunkline also supplies relatively small amounts of gas to distributors in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky and Kansas.

The Algerian gas, representing about one-fourth of Trunkline's supply, was costing an average of $7.70 per 1,000 cubic feet, more than double the current price of domestic gas on the spot market.

When the Algerian gas was "rolled in" with the pipeline's domestic supplies, Trunkline had the highest wholesale gas prices in the Midwest — $4.69 per mcf.

Trunkline, whose sales volume dropped 40 per cent in 1983, suspended the Algerian gas purchases after its officials said the company faced another "dramatic drop in sales volume" this winter because of its high prices.

Its five largest utility buyers — Consumers Power, Michigan Gas Utilities, Illinois Power, Central Illinois Public Service and Northern Indiana Public Service — had indicated earlier they would cut their purchases of Trunkline gas to minimum levels.

Until then, the company had resisted pressure from FERC, the Economic Regulatory Administration and key congressmen from the Midwest to break its contract with Algeria's state-owned energy company.

Economic forecasting gauge off in November

First time since August 1982

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main economic forecasting gauge fell 0.4 percent last month in its first slide since August 1982, the government said today.

The small decline in the forward-looking Index of Leading Economic Indicators broke a string of 14 consecutive monthly advances, the Commerce Department said.

After moving up and down every several months in the long 1981-1982 recession, the index started a long rise in September last year, signaling the end of the downturn and the strong rebound of 1983.

Though a drop in the number is taken as a sign of some weakening in the economy, Commerce economist Ago Ambre said the one-month decline is not unusual or cause for worry.

"As you get into the recovery you see some blips, you should expect to see some slowing down," he said.

Indeed, there already has been a moderating of growth in the economy from the rapid pace of last spring. The department has said growth amounted to an annual rate of 9.7 percent in the second quarter of the year, 7.6 percent in the third and could turn out to be 4.5 percent in the fourth.

Economists have said that is a healthy slackening that will return growth to a sustainable rate over the long term.

They generally expect the recovery to hold up well through 1984, although they say large federal budget deficits and high interest rates create uncertainty about what will happen beyond that.

The index is a compilation of a dozen statistics covering production, employment, prices and other areas.

The Commerce Department said seven of the 10 available components conrtibuted to November's decline.

They were average weekly claims for unemployment insurance, length of the average work week, speed at which venders deliver goods, formation of new businesses, contracts and orders for plant equipment, the prices of sensitive materials and stock prices.

The three components that rose were new orders for consumer goods and materials, building permits and money supply. Those not available were the change in inventories on hand or on order and the change in borrowing activity.

Commerce said the index in November fell to 161.8 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

Bondholders file suit against MGF

Two MGF Oil Corp. bondholders have filed a lawsuit naming the financially-troubled company as a defendant.

The suit, filed in federal district court in Dallas by Georgia investor Richard Carpenter and New York investor Robert Gulick, states MGF violated federal securities laws in connection with the company's plan to exchange two new issues of debentures or bonds for existing 8 1/4 percent convertible subordinated debentures.

In addition the suit questions MGF's plan to rank various issues of MGF debentures. The planned bond exchange is part of MGF's debt restructuring plan.

For the first nine months of 1983 MGF reported a net loss of $43,328,000 or $2.49 per share, on revenues of $47,871,000. MGF's debt restructuring plans have made headlines this year as the company fought off an involuntary bankruptcy petition filed by three of the company's bondholders, in June, claiming MGF wasn't paying its debts.

In September, shareholders gave the company a vote of confidence as they approved several key issues which company president W. Phillip Marcum called "vital" to the company's success.

Earlier this month, MGF completed a drilling rig lease which Marcum called a small but significant piece of restructuring because it allowed MGF to become current with its payments.

In November, Marcum said that MGF was working hard to restructure its debt but that the company would not hesitate to seek protection in federal bankruptcy court if it was forced to do so. Marcum could not be reached for comment this morning.

Advertising practices subject of antitrust investigation

By The Los Angeles Times—Washington Post News Service

The common broadcast practice of preventing advertisers from buying time on programs sponsored by their competitors is the subject of an antitrust investigation by the Department of Justice, television network officials said Wednesday.

The inquiry was apparently sparked by the refusal of American Broadcasting Cos. to allow Detroit-based Stroh Brewing Co. to sponsor games of the U.S. Football League on ABC-TV because of an arrangement giving Anheuser-Busch Inc. and Miller Brewing Co. exclusive advertising rights on individual games.

According to Christopher W. Lole, vice president of corporate planning and communications for Stroh, the company has also been turned down as a sponsor for "the 1984 Olympic Games because they are a joint-exclusive between Anheuser-Busch and Miller."

Other "major" events for which the company has been turned, Lole said, include "the National Football League games, certain things in the Triple Crown, some of the college football bowls and Monday night baseball ... "

A spokesman for ABC said that the network would have no comment on the Department of Justice's investigation. A department spokesman in Washington could not be reached for comment.

However, a spokesman for the Broadcast Group of CBS Inc. confirmed that "We have received an official inquiry from the Justice Department to answer questions and produce certain materials regarding ad sales practices on this subject."

George Schweitzer, vice president of communications for the broadcast group, added that "We think it's a perfectly legitimate business practice." He said the Department of Justice request was received by CBS "within the last couple of weeks."

A network official who asked not to be identified pointed out that advertising exclusivity arrangements are common, not only at the national broadcasting level, but at local stations and through spot sales to group of stations arranged by companies representing advertisers.

"The luster of being the only car or the only beer or the only financial service in a program has its value for the particular advertiser, and I assume that's all going to be part of the (Justice Department) discussion here," he said.

Stroh, which spends $60 million a year on network advertising, acquired the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. in June 1982, and the company also markets the Stroh and Old Milwaukee beer brands.

Lole said, "Network sports advertising is the most efficient way for us to reach our targeted consumers."

He said that Stroh has not filed a complaint with the Department of Justice, but, "We have gone down on several occasions (to the Justice Department) to explain to them how the exclusivity practice works as we best understand it. Our position is that it's a violation of antitrust law."

According to a spokesman for NBC, only a small number of sponsors have network exclusivity arrangements.

"In most cases, there wouldn't be exclusivity asked for or granted but, with certain premium events, national advertisers pay a premium for exclusivity, and I guess that's what is at issue," said Bud Rukeyser, executive vice president of public information. "One always wishes there would not be government restrictions on things, but I think this would have a modest impact on the business even if Justice decided to do something."

Irish is named TDNA director

George B. Irish, president and publisher of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, is among 1984 directors of the Texas Daily Newspaper Association.

Phillip J. Meek, publisher of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, was elected president. Other officers elected include John M. Roberts, president of the Victoria Advocate, vice president; and James M. Moroney Jr., president of A.H. Belo Corp., publisher of the Dallas Morning News, treasurer.

Other directors are William E. Dozier Jr., publisher of the Kerrville Daily Times; and Tucker Sutherland, president of the newspaper division of Harte-Hanks Communications Inc., San Antonio.

TDNA, with 98 member-newspapers in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico, is the largest state association of daily newspapers in the country.

Dollar lower, gold unchanged

LONDON (AP) — The dollar drifted lower on foreign exchange markets in lackluster trading early today. Gold bullion prices were little changed.

European traders said the market lacked direction and few commercial clients or investors were active.

"It's a typical end-of-the-year market where nobody wants to get involved too much and...anything is possible," said a trader at a large bank in Zurich.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell for a third straight session, closing at 233.32 yen, from 233.78 yen Wednesday. Trading was described as moderately active.

Later in London, the British pound edged up to $1.4370, compared with $1.4350 late Wednesday.

I found out why "Ol' Reliable" just may be the best telephone deal in town.

"'Andy, do this. Andy, do that.' I'm hearing a lot of talk about telephones these days. And getting a lot of advice about what to do. So before I got completely confused, I talked to the people who know telephones. The people who invented the telephone—AT&T."

The phone in your home comes with options no one can match.

"Turns out, the telephone I've got in my home comes with some mighty attractive options: Not the least of which is to keep it right here where it is. I can continue to lease my phone from AT&T, or I can buy it.

"You can get all the information I got by calling AT&T's special 800 phone number: 1-800-555-8111."

Keeping your AT&T phone means keeping AT&T service.

"When I think of all the things I've got in my home, that AT&T telephone just might be the item that's given the most service with the least trouble for the longest time. But if I ever have a problem AT&T stands behind its equipment now and for a long, long time to come.

"Sure you hear a lot about telephones these days. But for me, the AT&T phone in my home is the best deal going."

Midland taxes paid before 1984 may be claimed as deductions

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Taxpayers who are searching for more 1983 income tax deductions may give themselves another one by paying their Midland taxes this week, prior to the onset 1984.

Taxes paid to the six taxing bodies within Midland County may be claimed as federal income tax deductions, Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser for the Midland County Appraisal District (MCAD), said Wednesday.

"It's very worthwhile for most taxpayers," he said.

The property-tax-paying period began Oct. 1 and extends through Jan. 31. After that, taxes become overdue and delinquent and start accuring penalties and interest.

Taxes due to the city of Midland, Midland College, the Midland Independent School District and the Midland County Hospital District are paid at the MCAD offices at Suite 160 in Dellwood Plaza at Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue.

Taxes owed to Midland County and the Greenwood ISD are paid at the Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector's Office at 707 W. Washington Ave.

Payments made in person prior to 5 p.m. Friday or those mailed in envelopes bearing postmarks no later than Dec. 31 will be credited as paid in 1983.

Otherwise, payments will be receipted as paid in 1984.

"The post office is very faithful," said Wilkinson. "They're going to postmark it when they get it."

Through near the end December, an estimated 35 percent of the $48 million in taxes due the city, school, college and hospital have been paid, Wilkinson said.

However, approximately 65 to 70 percent of the $10 million in taxes due the county and Greenwood ISD have been paid, said Frances Shuffield, Midland County tax assessor-collector.

"It's moving on," she said of collections. "It's getting up there."

Ms. Shuffield cited two likely reasons why her percentage of collections is almost double that of the MCAD:

—Her office gives discounts of 3 percent in October, 2 percent in November and 1 percent in November for early payment of county and Greenwood ISD taxes.

—County and Greenwood ISD taxes are "not that big," she said, and many people pay those taxes early but hold up payment of the others until January because MCAD is "the big horse."

The MCDA does not offer discounts.

Wilkinson said his office is "busier than Turks" in early January by "working all the mail that comes in late December."

He said "the big kick" now among federal income taxpayers is to "get as many deductions as possible" to reduce taxes and possibly to get refunds. He referred to the deductions afforded by paying local taxes this year.

"I think it's ironic," Wilkinson said, "you have to pay taxes to save taxes."

Traffic death rate may be lowest since 1927

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Texas appears headed for a new low in the number of traffic deaths for 1983, following a national trend that — if sustained — will result in a re-writing of the country's traffic safety record books.

As of November 1, the traffic death rate for Texas was 11 percent lower than the 1982 figure, which stands at 3.1 fatalities per 100 million miles driven, according to Department of Public Safety Trooper Rodger Weaver.

Nationally, the downward trend set during the first seven months of 1983 indicates that traffic deaths will drop below the 3.0 mark and may even better the 2.88 rate recorded in 1982.

"This would be the lowest traffic death rate since such statistics were first tabulated during the 1923-27 period, when more than 18 people were killed for every 100 million miles driven," notes the Highway Users Federation.

During that four-year period, 21,000 people lost their lives on the nation's streets and highways — a death rate of 18.2.

The mileage death rate nationwide between January and July of this year was 4 percent lower than the same period in 1982, resulting — so far — in a death rate of 2.63 per 100 million miles.

In human terms, says HUF, this means about 1,100 fewer people lost their lives in traffic accidents during the first seven months of this year than in 1982.

The declining death rate in Texas should hold "unless something really hits us hard, and I don't anticipate that happening," said Weaver, adding:

"The credit really goes to the drivers. They've slowed down and are abiding by the 55 mph limit. They're driving more defensively and more courteously. It makes a lot of difference."

Commenting on the downward trend nationally, HUF spokesman Robert M. Calvin said: "The trouble is, the death rate can go up as well as down. It's a problem that just won't go away.

"We can't afford to rest on our laurels when more than 40,000 people are still dying in traffic accidents every year."

Fake disaster prepares MMH for real situation

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When the bleachers at Midland Memorial Stadium collapsed at 2 p.m. Wednesday, about 20 volunteers from the Red Cross, Midland Memorial Hospital auxiliary and junior auxiliary were injured.

A couple were dead on arrival at the MMH emergency room.

Actually, that was what emergency personnel were supposed to think.

As one woman was being carried out of the field house on a stretcher, she handed a slip of paper to Elvis Curb, executive director of the Red Cross.

It read, "You were in the snack bar when ceiling caved in. Fat and electricity started fire. Burns on legs and arms."

"I think I've got it down," she whispered to Curb with a wink.

Two other paramedics rushed in with a stretcher. "Got any dead here?"

"Here I am," answered one.

The disaster drill is one of the qualifications MMH must meet to be accredited with the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAH), according to Bob Blalock, MMH director of environmental services.

The last time the drill was performed, it was put to good use. A few days later, a plane crashed into the Warwick Apartments, severely burning five people. One eventally died from his injuries.

"The plane crash was like a drill for us," Blaylock said. Except it was real.

While MMH clinical psychology nurse Jane Dresser gave last minute touches of red and white paint to the victims' "wounds" at the field house, she barked instructions to the paramedics.

"The lady in the striped sweater — she's got to go in on a backboard. She has a back injury and can't feel her legs."

Turning to another, she said, "I want you to walk like you've been on a three-day drunk. And, you," she said, pointing at another, "be emphatic about going into the treatment room. Say, 'By, God, that's my child and I'm going in there.' Don't let them keep you out."

After loading the first group of patients into two waiting ambulances, paramedics radioed in a Plan David, the disaster code, to the emergency room along with the number of casualties they were bringing in and the estimated time of arrival.

Emergency personnel met the ambulances at the door, guiding the stretchers into the proper room and ordering instructions for treatment.

A.C. Buchanan, vice president of operations and administrator on duty with the absence of a vacationing MMH President Ray Branson, was to critique efforts made by emergency personnel and file a statement with the JCAH, Blaylock said.

Along with the actual drill, the hospital has performed an annual walk-through drill for the past three years for accreditation purposes.

If the hospital meets accreditation requirements, visits from the JCAH occur only once every three years, Blaylock said.

"This can get to be real exotic," Curb said, watching Ms. Dresser paint burn wounds on a victim. "It's like Halloween all over. I was out at a Red Cross simulated drill at D/FW (airport) once and they even had aluminum foil penetrating people's chests like metal fragments from the plane.

"We are a disaster agency," he said, "and when there is a real disaster — well, we're more than happy to do everything we can to help them prepare for it."

Police play 'numbers game' in radio communication

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Police language is a lot like a foreign language — except that it employs almost as many numbers as words.

Tune in to a police scanner sometime and you'll hear "conversations" that go something like this: The dispatcher presses the mike button and says dispassionately, "Headquarters, C-1."

"C-1," comes the reply from the officer on patrol.

"C-1, Code 5 in progress at 301 Delaware."

"10-4, 10-76."

"Headquarters to C-4."

"C-4."

"C-4, be 10-76 to 301 Delaware. Backup C-1. Code 5 in progress."

"10-4. 10-77, three minutes."

"Headquarters, C-1. Are you clear?"

"10-4."

Less than three minutes later both officers radio a "10-23" to the dispatcher.

A few minutes later the radio crackles again:

"C-1, headquarters."

"Headquarters."

"Headquarters, will be 10-95 twice with two juvenile females."

"Headquarters clear. 10-36 is 14:47 hours."

"C-4, headquarters."

"Headquarters."

"C-4, 10-8."

Shortly afterward the dispatcher is saying: "Headquarters, all available units in Sector Four. Proceed to ABC Bank, 403 Osage. 10-89."

But before the officers can reply, the dispatcher says: "Attention all units in Sector 4. 10-22 the 10-89. Complainant advised was a prank call."

The "numbers game" police play in radio communications is called the Standardized National 10-Code. It ranges from 10-0 (Caution) through 10-99 (Wanted).

Using numbers is quicker than using language. For instance, it's faster to say "10-63" than it is to convey the same message in words: "Prepare to make written copy."

In addition to the universal 10—Code signals, police also employ offense codes. Unlike the standardized 10-Code, offense codes differ from city to city.

They're designed that way to keep the public from learning them and swarming to the scene of major crimes, which would create traffic and crowd control problems, according to Det. Lt. Earl Luckey of the Midland Police Department.

Thus, Midland's Code 5 — a burglary — may be a traffic accident in Big Spring or a murder in Odessa.

In the example of the "Code 5 in progress at 301 Delaware," the radio operator is dispatching patrol unit C-1 to that address, where a suspicious person has been seen entering the house.

The patrol officer radios back that he understands the message (10-4) and is enroute (10-76).

Meanwhile, the dispatcher calls for unit 4 to assist unit 1: "Be 10-76 to 301 Delaware."

Unit 4 acknowledges that the message is understood and that his estimated time of arrival (10-77) is three minutes.

When the dispatcher then asks Unit 1 if he's "clear," the officer is being asked if he understands that his backup will be there in three minutes.

When both officers arrive on the scene, they so advise the dispatcher: "10-23."

Unit 1 later radios in that two teen-age girls have been caught (10-95) in the home and are being brought to the station.

The dispatcher acknowledges the message and advises the officer of the time: "10-36."

Unit 4, meantime, tells the dispatcher that he has completed his assignment and is 10-8: "Back in service."

When the radio operator advises "all available units in Sector 4" to be 10-76 to the ABC Bank on a "10-89," it means that a bomb threat has been made against the bank.

But the dispatcher then tells the officers to "10-22" (Disregard) because bank officials have called back to say the threat turned out to be a hoax.

While the codes may appear difficult to master, "probably only 20 of them are routinely used on a daily basis," said Luckey.

The basic ones are memorized, he added, and the rest can easily be looked up on the code cards police carry with them.

Conservationist reflects back to East Texas

Joe N. Robinson looked over the West Texas plains. He saw a forest of mesquite scrub, lean winter grass and scant cattle.

"Looking at an area like this," he said, "you wonder how people run any cattle on it."

He reflected and drifted back in time to the plush hills, forests and rich farm land in far East Texas, where he grew up. It was such a contrast to the harsh yet somehow serene landscape of the plains.

He thought of his father, who farmed, raised dairy and beef cattle and hogs. His father was a practical man who lived by this philosophy: If one crop didn't pay for itself, he didn't want it. It would have to stand alone; one would not supplement another.

"Each of the enterprises took care of itself," Robinson said, "and if it didn't, he took it out of production."

If corn wasn't profitable one year, he wouldn't plant it the next. He'd concentrate on cotton or legumes. Hogs would have to earn their keep.

"It was a good thing," Robinson said. "He stayed in business. If it (any crop) wasn't successful, he wouldn't fool with it."

His father, Nelson Robinson, took care of his land. He rotated crops to replenish the soil, planted field peas or cowpeas, let the land rest.

"He raised a good crop every year," recalled the 52-year-old Robinson, who has long since left his father's land near Texarkana. He's a U.S. Soil Conservation Service conservationist assigned to Victoria in Southeast Texas.

"He raised a good crop every year. He was an experimenter. He tried different things. There's not too many things he wouldn't try."

The contrast between lush East Texas and austere West Texas filled him with wonder.

"They don't look at it as cows per acre," he mused over West Texas ranchers. "They look at it as acres per cow."

Some of the rangeland carries 10 to 15 head of cattle per section — 640 acres or one square mile. Some sections support as many as 50 head.

"I wonder why in the world a fellow would have any cattle on that (nearly barren) land."

Then, he sighted oil patches and pump jacks in the middle of range land.

"I guess if you don't get anything else out of it, you get those (oil wells) out of it."

In his mind's-eye, he returned to his father's land, to tilling the soil and to his early days.

"I wanted to be associated with agriculture," he said, "but I didn't want to do the farming and ranching myself." So, he got himself a formal education in agricultural engineering at Prairie View A&M University and latched onto the SCS 27 years ago. He's been advising ever since.

He reflected on his youth. He recalled the advice his mother, Lela, gave him on handling and avoiding conflicts in a time when segregation was the rule and black and white seldom mixed: "Keep your mouth shut and your hands in your pockets."

His father, the sage, gently led his children by example and tempered words. He didn't tell them never to smoke tobacco or drink whiskey. They didn't at home.

" 'You get where you can afford it, you can do it,' " he'd tell his children. "He didn't tell us what not to do."

None of them ended up farming or ranching.

"He said he didn't want no cow stepping on his foot or any mule bellowing in his face."

Bob Franklin

Graveside services for Bob Franklin, 80, of San Angelo were to be at 1:30 p.m. today at Resthaven Memorial Park in Midland with the Rev. Robert Smith officiating directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

The former Midland resident died Tuesday evening in a San Angelo hospital.

Franklin was born April 9, 1903, in the Indian Territory of Oklahoma. He moved to Midland in 1944 and was employed as a drilling contractor. He was a Permian Basin petroleum pioneer who opened a Midland office in 1944. He retired in 1964 and moved to San Angelo.

Survivors include a son, W.P. Franklin of Midland, and two granddaughters.

The family requests memorials be sent to Hospice of Midland or Midland Memorial Foundation.

Roy Bell Sr.

RANKIN — Services for Roy Lee Bell Sr., 83, of Rankin will be at 10 a.m. Friday at First Baptist Church of Rankin with the Rev. Roy Singleton and Rev. James R. Otterness officiating.

Masonic graveside services will be at 3 p.m. Friday at Lawnhaven Memorial Park in San Angelo, directed by Richard W. Box Funeral Home in Crane.

He had lived in Rankin 52 years and had been employed by Santa fe Railroad for 47 years.

The family requests memorials be made to Hospice of Midland.

Isabella Turner

Services for Isabella Turner, 72, of 3205 W. Illinois Ave., are set for 2 p.m. Saturday at the Alexander Temple Church of God in Christ. Burial will follow in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of the Thomas Funeral Home.

Ms. Turner died Tuesday in an Odessa hospital after a lengthy illness.

She was born March 18, 1911, in Yoakum and spent most of her life in Brownfield. She had lived in Denver, Colo., prior to moving to Midland. She was a member of the Unity Penticostal Church in Denver.

Survivors include four sisters, Zelma Lee Miller of Denver, Elizabeth Walker of Indio, Calif., Frankie Mae Evans of Big Spring and Sally Houston of Midland; three brothers, the Rev. Albert Green of Colorado City, Emmitt Green of Plainview and Archie Lee Green of Houston; and several nieces and nephews.

Velma Yates

Services for Velma J. Yates were to be at 3:30 p.m. today in Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Clark Ford officiating. Burial was to follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Pallbearers were to be Gordon Craig, Roger McCracken, Eugene Greenwood, William Hendon, Jerry Sides and Ed Groves.

New Mexico group runs ads in El Paso

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A southern New Mexico group is asking neighboring El Paso, Texas, residents to urge their city officials to drop a federal court fight over New Mexico water.

The Concerned Citizens for New Mexico Water Resources ran a large advertisement Wednesday in an El Paso newspaper along with a radio campaign on four El Paso stations, said Peggy Bullock, secretary of the group.

Mrs. Bullock said about $3,000 collected in donations to the group was spent on the advertisements.

The El Paso Public Service Board went to court challenging New Mexico's ban against exportation of water, and U.S. District Judge Howward Bratton ruled the law unconstitutional.

However, the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has overturned that ruling and ordered Bratton to reconsider the issue in light of changes in laws passed by the 1983 New Mexico Legislature.

The advertisement run Wednesday was headlined: "El Paso Water Users" in inch-high capital letters and measured 11 by 18 inches.

The advertisement read:

"Your Public Service Board has already spent almost $1.4 million in a lawsuuit seeking to obtain water supplies from New Mexico. The 10th Circuiit U.S. Court of Appeals last week rejected an earlier decision favoring the Board's position, yet the Board has vowed to spend even more money to continue pursuing this case.

"The money already spent, and the money which likely will be spent in the future in this case could have been used more effectively toward acquiring guaranteed water supplies within your own state.

"Please help end this wasteful use of your city's financial resources and the division it has created between our cities by urging the Board to abandon this effort and to direct its energies toward acquiring other more certain sources of water."

Mrs. Bullock said the group wanted "to get some ads out as soon as possible to take advantage of the 10th Circuit Court's ruling."

She said if Bratton should again rule in favor of El Paso, the Concerned Citizens group is prepared to challenge the order.

Wichita Falls firemen fight a fire that destroyed four buildings late Wednesday. Three people were injured as a result of the fire.

Buildings demolished by fire set by robbers

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — A woman salesclerk was recovering today after robbers bound her, covered her with a flammable liquid and torched her store, setting off an inferno that destroyed four downtown buildings, officials say.

About 50 firefighters, working in pairs to brace each other for traction on ice-coated streets, brought the fire under control about 1:30 a.m. today but continued to monitor the smoldering rubble in freezing cold. The blaze was reported around 7:15 p.m. Wednesday.

Several firefighters were hurt, including one who was knocked down by a collapsing wall, officials said.

Noweta Bennett, 27, a clerk at Tandy Leather Goods, told police she was alone in the store when a man who had made a purchase returned with a companion, both armed with knives.

She said the men bound her with leather thongs and pantyhose and threatened to set her on fire, pouring a caustic, flammable liquid, possibly liquid cement, on her.

When she screamed, the robber cut her on the face, Deputy Sheriff Kevin McAllister said.

Then, she said, they set fire to the building and fled with bundles of leather goods.

As the flames spread, Ms. Bennett managed to free herself and raise the alarm.

She was later taken to Wichita General Hospital and admitted in fair condition.

Firefighter Phil Alexander, who received undetermined injuries when a wall fell on him about 10 p.m., was listed in good condition at Bethania Regional Health Care Center.

Several firefighters were overcome by smoke, and another slight injury occurred when a fire truck heading to the scene collided with a car, police said.

The burned buildings — housing two advertising agencies and a florist — were described by fire officials as a total loss.

Police said they had descriptions of the robbers but no suspects.

State embargos citrus

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — Estimates of crop damage from the recent Rio Grande Valley freeze continued to rise as Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower ordered an embargo on all citrus being shipped out of South Texas.

The ten day embargo, which begins midnight Friday, had the support of most citrus producers.

"Virtually all Texas producers had immediately halted shipment of fruit damaged by the freeze, but damage is not apparent for several days, I believe it is only prudent to officialily suspend all fruit shipments," Hightower said in issuing the order.

Traffic death rate lower

Traffic safety experts regard the mileage death rate as a good gauge with which to compare fatalities on a year-to-year basis because it provides a standard measure based on miles driven — whether high or low.

For instance, notes HUF, bad weather may cut driving — and consequently the number of traffic deaths — but would not affect the overall fatality rate on a miles-per-driven basis.

"A lot of safety measures can keep the rate moving downward," added Calvin. "But there are two things we can all do right now: Use seat belts and drive sober."

Burglaries reported

From Staff Reports

Two houses and a car in the 1800 block of Hemlock were reported broken into Wednesday night.

Taken from homes at 1825 Hemlock, 1823 Hemlock and a car parked at 1825 Hemlock were clothes, stereo equipment, guns and microwave ovens worth in excess of $4,000.

In a theft complaint, an employee of the R&M Construction Co. said 61 cartons of ceramic tile valued at $1,500 were removed from a job site at 3100 W. Wall Ave. The theft occurred sometime over the weekend.

And Loraine Thomason said her home at 1701 S. Loraine was entered and a set of wedding rings was missing, along with four silver dollars. The total loss was placed at $515.

M.A.D.D. warns motorists

From staff reports

As New Year's Day approaches, the Midland-Ector Counties Chapter of M.A.D.D. (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) are warning motorists to get the year off to a good start.

In the state, more DWI-related fatalities occur Jan. 1 than on any other date, according to a chapter spokeswoman.

"Don't start off the New Year with a crash," members of M.A.D.D. request. "If you drink, have some else drive."

Ector Country jailer suspended for kissing

From Staff Reports

ODESSA - An Ector County jailer was suspended without pay Monday after being accused of kissing an inmate, one week before he would have been terminated as part of cutbacks ordered by county commissioners.

Jailer Terry Foster was suspended without pay Monday after a trusty at the jail told another jailer that Foster had kissed Amber "Betsy" Benavidez, a 17-year-old female inmate convicted of murder.

Sheriff Bob Brookshire confirmed the suspension, but stressed that Foster has not been found guilty of the allegations of the inmate. The sheriff's department is investigating the incident.

Foster is also accused of allowing a trusty to enter the female area of the jail with him, where the inmate, Enrique Nunez, allegedly kissed another woman prisoner.

Geter faces April re-trial

DALLAS (AP) — Lenell Geter, an engineer whose controversial armed robbery conviction was overturned earlier this month, faces a re-trial on April 9 if he waives or fails a polygraph test, a state district judge has ruled.

Judge John Ovard set the new trial date Wednesday after conferring with defense and prosecution attorneys. A hearing on pre-trial motions was set for Feb. 13.

Geter, 26, was sentenced to life in prison in October 1982 after being convicted of taking $615 during the robbery of a fried chicken restaurant in suburban Balch Springs.

Geter was freed from prison after prosecutors joined defense attorneys in asking for a new trial. Defense attorneys claim Geter was the victim of misidentification and shoddy police work.

Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade, in agreeing to the new trial, said he would dismiss the charge if Geter passed a polygraph test.

George Hairston, an NAACP attorney representing Geter, said Wednesday that the defense team has not decided whether Geter will take the test. Geter has until Jan. 16 to decide on the polygraph, prosecutors said.

Reached at his home Wednesday in Denmark, S.C., Geter said that he will abide by his attorneys' decision on whether he should take the test.

TNT discovered at company office

DALLAS (AP) — A one-pound package of TNT with a partially burned fuse was found next to gasoline pumps at the downtown offices of the Wells Fargo Co. armored car service, police said.

A company employee found the package Wednesday morning, Sgt. Ron McCracken said.

A police bomb squad evacuated the immediate area around the office before inspecting the solid block of TNT and removing it to a police property storage room, McCracken said.

There was no note with the explosive, nor did the company receive any theats or demands by telephone, said Ed Gamber, vice president of security for Wells Fargo.

"There's been no contact at any of our offices nationwide," Gamber said from his office at company headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

A Wells Fargo employee told police he drove into the company lot about 8:45 a.m. Wednesday and saw the canister with two orange fuses lying between two gasoline pumps. Beside it was a white cloth bag with "Seattle National Bank" printed on it.

Fund to aid boy

A fund has been set up to help pay the medical expenses of 9-year-old Chris Stoeffler of rural Midland.

The boy, who is recovering from severe lung and liver problems, has been under a respirator in the intensive care unit of Dallas Children's Hospital for the past two months.

Doctors have told the family that he will likely have to remain in ICU for another two months.

The "Chris Stoeffler Fund" was set up Wednesday at Texas American Bank, P.O. Box 3118, Midland, 79702. Phone: 683-5281.

A new affiliate of the International Reading Association, the Midland Council, has been chartered to serve Midland, Howard, Glasscock, Martin and Reagan Counties.

It is one of more than 1,100 councils of the International Reading Association, the only worldwide organization devoted exclusively to reading instruction and the promotion of literacy.

Officers are Joseph Rubin, president, Marsha Samponaro, Peggy Dildy, Ann Sneed and Linda Sherman, all of Midland.

Scholarship applications accepted

Angelo State University is accepting applications for about 400 Carr Academic Scholarships for 1984-85. High school seniors may apply for the renewable awards, which range from $1,000 to $3,500.

Scholarships ranging from $1,500 to $4,000 per year are also available to graduate students.

Priority deadline for application is March 15. Applicants must normally have a high school average of 90 or above, rank in the top 10 percent of their class and have a combined score of 21 or more on the ACT or at least 900 on the SAT.

No Meow Mix on menu for this Palacios tabby

PALACIOS, Texas (AP) — Tony Kana's pet cat is no ordinary housecat.

Fifteen-month-old Samson tips the scales at 385 pounds and is a real live King of the Beasts, an African lion.

Samson was given to Kana by his now-deceased brother, Dan, when the lion was just a cub.

Samson spends most of his time in the backyard of the Kana residence, lying in the shade, playing with his toys and staring back at the parade of curious people who have come to see Palacios' most popular feline.

"I always wanted one and finally my brother gave me one," Kana said. 'I've grown up around animals and have been around them all my life."

The big cat is different from his domesticted cousins in many ways other than size. No Meow Mix for this tabby. He prefers something with a little more meat — rare meat in particular.

"I feed him once a day. He eats about three to four pounds of meat per day and he will eat fish and shark," Kana said.

Samson needs this diet because he is a growing boy. Kana said that at maturity in about one year, Samson will weigh around 600 pounds.

Samson's toys aren't the usual rubber mice and ball of yarn either.

The lion plays with old automobile tires and a wooden cable spool. The lion has to do most of his playing alone since even the Kanas' family dog refuses to have anything to do with Samson any more.

Being a "domestic" cat has its disadvantages for Samson. The regal cat has had to get shots, has had his front feet declawed and has suffered the greatest indignity any king can suffer. He's lost his crown.

Samson has no mane because he was neutered "to take some of the meannes out," Kana said.

Kana roughhouses with the cat one to two hours per day and said the cat especially likes to lie on top of him.

"There's not much you can do with 385 pounds on top of you," said Kana.

One has only to look at the big cat to see that the animal is very quick and powerful. Kana keeps him chained with several chains and locks attached to a heavy collar. The animal never has injured anyone or any property.

However, just a few weeks ago when the Palacios City Council passed an ordinance prohibiting such wild animals within the city limits, unless the owner complies with certain conditions.

Ohio resident picks, strums his way into record book

MANSFIELD, Ohio (AP) — When Ray Rogers says he can play the guitar, he means he can play the guitar — and play and play and play.

And now Rogers, 35, can do more grinning with his picking since he has finally been recognized as the world endurance champ on the guitar — 4½ years after his record-setting effort.

In July 1979, Rogers played more than 253 hours straight at a March of Dimes benefit. The problem was that he didn't exactly follow the rules set by the folks at the Guiness Book of Records.

Instead of taking the usual five-minute break after each hour, Rogers played 24 hours at a stretch, then rested two hours before going on.

It wasn't until October that Rogers mustered enough signatures on petitions and other documents to get the Guiness people to reconsider his effort of 10 days, 14 hours and 20 minutes.

The reward came last month in the form of a letter from the Guinness publishers.

"I can confirm that this is the best claim that we have received to date and will, therefore, be considered for the next edition of the Guinness Book of Records, provided it has not been beaten by the time the next edition goes to press," Moira Stowe, assistant editor of Guinnes Books, said in a letter. "Congratulations on a splendid effort."

Rogers says the recognition ends 4½ years of frustration, but he says he probably won't buy the book if his name appears in it.

Loeffler compiles one of best voting attendance records

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep. Tom Loeffler compiled one of the best voting attendance records in Texas' 29-member congressional delegation during the first session of the 98th Congress.

Loeffler, R-Hunt, was present for 98 percent of recorded votes, according to Legi-Slate, the Washington Post Co.'s legislative tracking computer.

Only two of Loeffler's colleagues from the Lone Star State had better records: Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, and Bill Patman, D-Ganado, who both were present for 99 percent of roll-call votes.

Loeffler also achieved a 98 percent voting attendance record during the 97th Congress in 1981-82.

The lowest attendance record among Texas lawmakers this year was compiled by Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, who was present for only 68 percent of recorded votes.

"Kent's running for the Senate," Hance spokesman Jim Rock explained when asked about the congressman's low figure.

A lawmaker's voting attendance record often decreases when he is engaged in a tough political campaign because gathering support for the campaign requires him to spend more time in his state.

Hance is seeking the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat that will be vacated by the retirement of Sen. John Tower, R-Texas. In 1981-82, Hance was present for 90 percent of all recorded votes.

Rep. Phil Gramm, R-College Station, who is seeking the Republican party's nod in the campaign for Tower's seat, compiled an attendance record of 81 percent, down from the 96 percent he earned in the 97th Congress.

Tower compiled a voting attendance record of 89 percent this year, down from 90 percent in the 97th Congress. Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen was present for 91 percent of the votes, down from 94 percent in 1981-82.

Rep. Abraham "Chick" Kazen, D-Laredo, who had compiled the best voting attendance record in the Texas delegation in 1981-82, 99 percent, still ranked high among his colleagues with a 94 percent record this year.

The information showed that the average voting attendance record for the Texas delegaton was 88 percent.

The records of some other Texas represenatives were 96 percent for Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford; 96 percent for freshman Ronald Coleman, D-El Paso; 94 percent for Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi; 94 percent for House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth; and 86 percent for E. "Kika" de la Garza, D-Mission.

Anna Kalish makes apple pie. At 95, she has outlasted two wood stoves like the one behind her.

Cooking on woodburning stove dying art

The Los Angeles Times—Washington Post News Service

BRIDGEHAMPTON, N.Y. — Anna Kalish already has outlasted two wood stoves. About 40 years ago, she started cooking on a third, and this one is still keeping up with her.

Mrs. Kalish, who turned 95 on Oct. 1, cooked for five children and her husband, Anthony, on the first two stoves. Since her husband died in 1956, she has kept a tidy house just for herself in Bridgehampton, Long Island, where, on a recent windy afternoon, scents of warm apple pie and wood fire sallied forth from the gray and white enameled stove.

"I get married,' she said, with an accent still thick with her native Polish, "this is my first board," as she rolled out pie crust on a wooden slab. "This is my first roller," she added, holding aloft a well-seasoned rolling pin. "So many years, still good." And as in those bygone days, she worked last week at a kitchen table — this one covered with a cheerful flowered cloth and transparent plastic — instead of a modern counter. She pointed with pride, too, to the oak table beneath the cloth; it cost $10 in 1910, the year she was married.

THIS YEAR, MRS. KALISH did make a concession to the heat and put up her 30 quarts of peaches, some tomato juice and 4 dozen pints of strawberry and raspberry jam, some of which she gives as Christmas presents, on the gas stove. But except in summertime, she has little use for this contraption. She understands a wood fire better.

"Gas nice for the summer," she said, "because cooler. But I like to cook on this stove. You put something to the back — gas, everything gets cold." On the wood fire, she said, "everything to the back, everything stays warm."

On an afternoon last week, Mrs. Kalish had made up four pints of chicken broth out of wings, necks and backs. She explained that she cannot buy it, because most store-bought versions are heavily salted, and she is not supposed to eat a lot of salt.

"My father was a potato farmer," said Mrs. Kalish's daughter, Jean Gugell, who lives nearby. "My mother helped him in the fields, and she would put out lunch for us with a tablecloth spread over it. She took her lunch to the field. When we came back from school, she still wasn't home, and it was our job to peel potatoes or whatever she told us to prepare. After supper, we did our chores — bringing in the wood, doing the dishes — and then went to the dining room to do our homework. She would be baking for the next day ... We would pop corn with the old-fashioned kind of popper over the wood fire ... We had our own chickens, our own butter, our own milk. We would bake to amuse ourselves."

WHEN HER CHILDREN were young, Mrs. Kalish sold milk for 10 cents a quart, and the youngsters delivered it to the customers. "After come in pasteurized milk," said Mrs. Kalish, "my milk not pasteurized, just milking. The people buy the milk from me — say the milk taste much better." Her daughter-in-law, Frances Kalish added: "Half of the jar was cream."

AT WIT'S END

Batteries run world

By ERMA BOMBECK

My husband and I have always loved antiques. We will buy anything that is ten years older than we are.

Actually, our romance blossomed at an antique show when we looked at one another over a little wooden box with a cutting blade and uttered those three little words, "What is it?"

Technology being what it is, I couldn't help but speculate about the antique-lovers of the future. I can just see a couple poking through an armory full of memorabilia in 2040.

"What is it?" asks Ingrid, picking up two pieces of plastic connected by a string.

"It's a cordless phone," says Max.

"What did they use it for?"

"The way I understand it, you could talk on this while you cut your grass, washed your car, played tennis or worked in your garage."

"Why would you want to do that?" asks Ingrid.

"To keep up," says Max. "Look at this. Do you know what it is?"

Ingrid picks up a bracelet with a small opening in it. "I haven't the foggiest," she says.

"It's a small TV set."

"I thought they were bigger."

"No, this was for when you were driving to work or taking a bath or sitting at a ballgame and wanted to see another game that was being played somewhere else."

"Why would they want to do that?" asks Ingrid.

"To keep up," says Max.

Ingrid shrugs. "To keep up? It's puzzling, though, if they had all this stuff, how come the entire civilization died out?"

Max takes off the headphones. "The way my parents explained it to me, their batteries went dead and they couldn't function anymore."

DEAR ABBY

Girl wants to know if she was lucky

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A few weeks ago I felt very depressed and decided I'd had enough of this world, so I took 20 aspirin and washed them down with three regular-size glasses of wine — straight.

My question is: How should this have affected a 5-foot-3, 104-pound, 15-year-old girl on an empty stomach?

I got up the next morning and went to church with an awful headache. I told a few of my friends what I had done and they said I was lucky I didn't wind up in the hospital.

Things look a lot better now and I am glad I didn't really kill myself. Am I lucky, or just average? — MY SIGN IS LEO

DEAR LEO: You are lucky you are still alive since you didn't really want to end your life. And you're average to feel depressed occasionally. (Everybody does, to some extent.)

The best way to handle a depression so severe that one questions whether life is worth living is to talk to someone about your feelings. If you can't talk openly to your parents, talk to a teacher, your school counselor, your clergyman or call a suicide prevention hotline. There are trained people there who will listen to you and advise you. And if these self-destructive thoughts creep into your mind often, get into a regular counseling program.

Life is worth living; witness the number of people with severe physical disabilities who fight a daily battle just to stay alive.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Stuck in New Jersey," who got stuck for $664 when 16 invited guests who had accepted her RSVP invitation to a catered wedding reception didn't show up. (The caterers charged $41.50 per plate.)

"Stuck" could have instructed the caterers to pack up the 16 dinners to take home and put in her freezer.

Why not? They belonged to her. She paid for them. — FAIR IS FAIR

DEAR FAIR: Why not, indeed? Thanks for a valuable suggestion.

Gun suicide female trend

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Arizona historically has one of the highest suicides rates in the nation but a new trend seems to have developed in recent years — women shooting themselves in the head, says Eloy Ysasi, chief investigator for the Maricopa County medical examiner's office.

"I don't want to sound like an expert on why people kill themselves, but I suspect the reason is the women's liberation movement," he said.

"If a woman feels equal to a man in other respects, she might feel more inclined to use a gun — traditionally the male weapon — rather than traditional feminine means such as an overdose of pills or sticking her head in the gas oven."

He made the comments when asked how unusual was it for two Phoenix-area women to take their lives by shooting themselves recently.

"Until 10 years ago, it would have been very unusual," said Ysasi, who joined the medical examiner eight years ago after 20 years on the city police force.

Statewide, Arizona's suicide rate last year was 17.6 per 100,000 population, compared with a national rate of 11.4, said Tony Di Campi, manager of the state Health Department's research department.

That was based on a total of 507 suicides in the state. Of these, 279 were in the Phoenix metropolitan area (Maricopa County).

Most of the deaths, both statewide and in Maricopa County, were in the 15- to 35-year-old group. The highest rate, however, was in the 65-and-older age group.

Bozo the Clown pushing 'Bozo No-Nos'

ENTERTAINMENT

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — At the peak of his business, Bozo the Clown ran a corporate empire he estimates generated $150 million in revenue. Now, he's back in the public eye, preaching his philosophy to kids of all ages that drugs and drink are "Bozo No-Nos."

Larry Harmon, 58, wouldn't be recognized on the street. But once he dons white face, greasepaint, red honker, orange wig, baggy pants and size 18 shoes, he's known worldwide as "your ol' pal Bozo." In his heyday in the 1960s, there were 183 Harmon-trained Bozos performing live on TV around the world.

Next month will mark the 34th consecutive year that "The Bozo Show" has been on TV. WGN in Chicago currently broadcasts it locally and beams it nationwide through some 4,000 cable systems.

Harmon is more than a grown-up kid in a clown suit. He's a sincere, outgoing, energetic spokesman for such causes as UNICEF and CARE. But he's also a shrewd businessman with a showman's flair for promotion, merchandising and kiddie-philosophy.

ONE OF HIS first breaks in show business was working for Stan Laurel, the long-faced half of the Laurel and Hardy comedy team. Today, he owns the rights to nearly everything connected with Laurel and Hardy.

Harmon was one of television's first entrepeneurs. In 1949, he bought the rights to the Bozo voice from a record company and then created the character for TV. It was the beginning of his dream of spreading laughter.

His method was franchising, the same technique made famous by Col. Sanders and his Kentucky Fried Chicken. Harmon's recipe was cloning clowns to "make them look, laugh and speak like I did. I took the make-up, hair and costume and transplanted me, duplicated me and blueprinted me."

Kids in the 1950s and '60s grew up in different cities watching live Bozos show cartoons, tell jokes and dispense homilies, such as: "It's nice to be important, but it's important to be nice."

But rarely did kids see Harmon, although he has flown to Brazil, Australia and Thailand to fill in for ailing Bozos.

Through his clown schools in Texas, Florida and California, Harmon created an army of Bozos. One graduate was Willard Scott, now the genial weatherman on NBC's "Today" show.

HARMON GAVE A KID named Fred Silverman his first job in TV — floor manager at WGN. "Bozo was his step to fame," Harmon said. Silverman went on to top programming jobs at all three networks and now is an independent producer.

"My own language is laughter," said Harmon. "I've been all over the world, even visited cannibals and made them laugh. They didn't eat me because they didn't have a recipe for clown a la carte."

In the vernacular, "bozo" means buffoon, which upsets Harmon. "What it really means is a character who offers laughter, warmth, understanding and communication," he said.

Harmon is now traveling the media circuit, publicizing himself, while promoting his line of buttons, T-shirts, coffee mugs, jogging suits, pillow cases and lighters and telling everybody not to smoke, drink or take drugs.

Those are "Bozo No-Nos," which come from the days of live TV. When youngsters at "The Bozo Show" would say something X-rated, Bozo would deflect it by saying: "That's a 'Bozo No-No.'"

"PEOPLE LOVE BOZO and they'll listen when I say they should do something good for themselves," said Harmon. "I'm traveling around the world delivering the message that The Day After is not as important as The Day Before."

Movie began as master's thesis

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — For executive producers Buzz Hirsch and Larry Cano, "Silkwood" is more than another Hollywood film or even an anti-nuclear statement. It's also their master's thesis.

When Hirsch and Cano deliver a print of the film to the University of California at Los Angeles Graduate School early next year, they will each receive a Masters of Fine Arts degree.

Although others, including actress Jane Fonda, thought the story of Karen Silkwood would make a good film, it was Hirsch, 39, and Cano, 34, who were able to get film rights from Miss Silkwood's father, Bill.

But it wasn't until a mutual friend got Meryl Streep to read an outline of the proposed film that studio doors opened.

Tonight, they will all face the evil.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Vitamin C's powers unproven

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that large doses of vitamin C can prevent a person from catching cold, or at least make the cold less serious? — Rhonda, Chicago.

Dear Rhonda: There have been claims made that a gram or more of Vitamin C taken daily will cure infections and either cure or prevent the common cold. However, these claims have not yet been verified.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it possible for insulin syringes to be used more than once? This would be one way of saving a little money. — Mr. F.T., Norfolk, Va.

Dear Mr. T.: The results of a British study have shown that diabetic patients can use disposable insulin syringes for as long as seven days without causing an infection at the injection site. However, I would urge all such patients to discuss this with their physicians before deciding to reuse syringes.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is 3 years old and I would like to get her trained to watch what she eats before she starts school. I don't like the idea of her spending her lunch money on potato chips and soda. At what age can a child be taught healthy eating habits? — Mrs. A.I., N.Y.C.

Dear Mrs. I.: According to the American Heart Association, you could have started teaching your daughter about proper diet a year ago. Early training is important since habits learned in childhood tend to persist as the child grows older.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A lot of my friends who are overweight also have children who are overweight. Since you can't change heredity, what can these people do about helping their children? — Mrs. G.R., Vineland, N.J.

Dear Mrs. R.: The fact that an overweight child has one or more overweight parents does not establish that heredity is responsible. It is just as likely that the poor eating habits that are responsible for the parents' obesity are also affecting the child.

A number of studies have shown that about three-quarters of obese children have one or more obese parents. In my own practice I find that this is rarely due only to heredity.

'Mary' still waits for long-dead lover

SKAGWAY, Alaska (AP) — They call her "Mary" and claim she drifts around a third floor room in Alaska's oldest operating hotel, waiting with the patience of the dead for her lover who never returned from the Klondike gold fields.

She's one of the many colorful spirits of Skagway, a boom-to-bust southeastern Alaska town whose sourdough past is preserved in its 85-year-old buildings, boardwalks and dirt streets.

Skagway was dubbed "The Gateway to the Golden Interior" when founded in 1897, just a year after the precious metal was discovered near Dawson, on the Yukon River. It served as a base of operations for thousands of prospectors in the Klondike Gold Rush of 1897-1898 and for a short time was the state's largest, and brassiest, city.

But the gold gave out and the miners meandered to other rivers. Skagway shrank from more than 20,000 residents to its present 675, turned into a railroad town and eventually became a popular cruise ship stop in summer.

Although the town's pioneer past provides a profitable return from tourists, the gold rush days are mostly a memory now. For some, however, it's a haunting memory.

Donna Whitehead said her family inherited a non-paying guest when they bought the Golden North Hotel in 1978.

"We don't know her real name but we call her 'Mary,'" Mrs. Whitehead said in an interview. "She lives in Room 24 on the third floor. That's where she stayed after her fiance struck it rich in the gold fields and sent for her.

"She waited and waited but he never came back. She died in that room of consumption (tuberculosis) around the turn of the century. She was found on the bed in her wedding gown."

Guests, hotel employees and Mrs. Whitehead have reported seeing Mary occasionally — or feeling her presence.

"She appears in her wedding gown in the halls, and a maid saw her once silhouetted in the window," she said. "A guest left the room several years ago — the same man who'd claimed he'd seen her in the '50s — after he felt a choking sensation, like he was being choked.

"Sometimes the drapes are opened and closed. Clothes have been dumped out of dresser drawers and the lights are turned on and no one knows who did it," she said. "People scoff, but some weird things have happened and I believe she's up there."

Another Skagway spirit made her way onto the police blotter a few years back after officers, with guns drawn, reported a "shadow" had eluded them.

Jan Wrentmore owns the Red Onion, a refurbished tavern and gift shop on the city's main street. Back in the days of the gold stampede, the building housed a bar and brothel, she said.

YMCAs set special activities for families

January has been designated The Family Experience Month at the Midland YMCAs.

Special activities designed for family participation have been scheduled, including swimming, basketball and volleyball.

Families are encouraged to enroll in complete exercise fitness programs or just come by and exercise together.

For more information, contact any four of the Midland YMCAs.

THE BETTER HALF

"Dieting makes me irritable! I always end up losing more friends than pounds!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, December 30, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: English poet-novelist Rudyard Kipling, capitalist-philanthropist Samuel Guggenheim and Canadian humorist-economist Stephen Leacock were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: singer-guitarist Bo Diddley, Dodger great Sandy Koufax, actor Jack Lord, Bert Parks and Los Angeles Dodgers super pinch hitter Jose Morales. In the coming year, romance strikes when you least expect it. Prepare to be swept off your feet. A job that has eluded you in the past will soon come within reach. The business outlook is encouraging. You have clout when you need it most. Take a much-needed and long-postponed vacation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Review your financial goals as you close the books on another business year. An office party could get out of hand. Plan to leave early. Let mate know if you feel affectionate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your tact saves the day when a difficult situation arises. Family affairs have your full attention this evening. Fulfill your social duties. You will enjoy a party more than you think.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romantic undercurrents make this a fun but unpredictable day. Do not expect to accomplish much at work. Making a concession to loved one will bring you good luck.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have more confidence than ever. Take the lead in planning a family event. A friend may not be as loyal as you thought. Postpone tackling a business or school problem.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Sometimes you let your imagination get carried away. Temper your desires and demands. Go along with the crowd when making New Year's Eve plans. Romantic partner is delighted with your cooperation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Seek lively entertainment tonight if planning to celebrate New Year's Eve at home. Family members will understand if lovebirds want to be alone for a while. A romantic encounter proves enlightening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid taking on additional debt even if it means staying home tomorrow night. You need to take your time when making up your mind about a business proposition. Ask an important question.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance is lively. An atmosphere of secrecy should prompt you to ask questions. Spend a quiet evening with your loved ones. It is in your best interest to know what is going on.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Shoppers looking for bargains will not be disappointed, but the markdowns will be even better tomorrow. A romantic adventure leaves you thinking about a more permanent arrangement. Speak from the heart.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rely on the experts for advice. Romance needs time and space to grow. Plan a special treat for those who mean the most to you. An investment requires your personal attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance enters a new phase. Resist the urge to splurge when buying a gift for mate. One rose can have as much meaning as two dozen. Social events keep you on the run.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It could be business as usual today. Dwell on the pleasure that the weekend will bring while finishing up an important work assignment.

Meet Orwell on radio

NEW YORK (AP) — Welcome to 1984 ... and meet George Orwell.

The two go hand in hand, thanks to Orwell's prophetic novel, "Nineteen Eighty-Four." And a newly produced, five-hour radio documentary to be broadcast starting New Year's Day is fitting — indeed, entertaining — introduction to the man and his work.

"George Orwell: A Radio Biography," was produced by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., and will be distributed in this country to more than 100 stations in the American Public Radio network.

Many APR affiliates will broadcast the impressive production in a single, five-hour block on Jan. 1, while others intend to play an hour at a time, over five nights.

Public TV, meantime, will mark the new year with "Good Morning, Mr. Orwell," a live spectacular featuring music, dance and poetry from both sides of the Altantic.

The New Year's Day show will include segments from the studios of WNET in New York and the Centre Georges Pompidou in Paris, beamed by satellite.

The timing of the two programs is not coincidental.

"George Orwell," says Nam June Paik, who created the television special, "was the first media prophet and philosopher. However, he emphasized only the negative aspects of the media: TV as Big Brother. 'Good Morning, Mr. Orwell' ... is symbolic of how television can cross international borders and provide a liberating information-communications service."

George Woodcock, Orwell's friend and the host for the radio program, says "In our time, there has been no vision, I think, more striking or more ominous than the nightmare image that George Orwell created in 'Nineteen Eighty-Four,' the image of tyranny and of totalitarian power in its most intense form."

Though millions around the world are familiar with Orwell's work, notably the novels "Nineteen Eighty-Four" and "Animal Farm," few know much about the man himself. In fact, no one, says a surviving friend, ever saw the man at work.

That probably is not true. Orwell wrote more than a dozen books and was, Woodcock says, "a very, very good journalist, and a fine essayist."

Born Eric Arthur Blair in India in 1903, the writer-to-be moved with his family to Henley-on-the-Thames in England, a year later.

"I wrote my first poem at the age of 4 or 5, my mother taking it down to dictation," says Orwell, portrayed here by actor Barry Morse. "I can't remember anything about it, except that it was about a tiger, and the tiger had chair-like teeth ... a good enough phrase."

The bidding:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|

| Pass | Pass | Pass | |

Opening lead: Ace of ♠.

It is impossible to overstress the importance of the opening lead. Consider this hand from the qualifying round match between the United States and New Zealand from this year's World Team Championship.

In the room where New Zealand sat North-South, they ended up in five diamonds doubled. The U.S. West led the queen of hearts, and that was that. Declarer won the king, finessed the ten and discarded a spade on the ace of hearts. He had no problem holding his losers to one in each minor suit to make his doubled game.

The auction shown is from the room where the United States held the North-South cards. West's double of four diamonds was passed out, and it looked as if the contract was a cinch.

West led the ace of clubs and continued the suit. Declarer won on the table and tried to draw trumps. West grabbed the ace, led a spade to his partner's ace, and he was able to ruff the club return with the jack for the setting trick.

South overlooked a chance to bring home his contract. After winning the club continuation, it costs nothing to play the king, ace and ten of hearts. If East produces a heart honor, declarer ruffs and tries to draw trumps.

As the cards lie, however, East follows with a low heart. Now declarer can cut the defenders' communications by sluffing his losing spade. West wins a heart trick, but he has no way to reach his partner for a club ruff. Declarer loses only the aces of clubs and diamonds and a heart trick.

Israeli Arabs sentenced to die for murder of Israeli soldier

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Two Israeli Arabs have been sentenced to death by a secret military court for the murder of an Israeli soldier in 1980, according to newspaper and radio reports today.

The executions, if carried out, would be the first in Israel since Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann was hanged in 1962.

The Maariv newspaper said the Lod military court passed the sentences Tuesday following the 10-month trial. It said the military censor had forbidden publication about the trial while it was in progress.

It identified the men sentenced to death by hanging as Karim Younis and Maher Younis, both 25 and both Israeli citizens, from the village of Kfar Arra in northern Israel. The newspaper said the trial was conducted in secret to avoid provoking people in the defendants's home area, where there have been strong displays of Palestinian nationalism.

The paper quoted the indictment as saying the two joined the Fatah wing of the Palestine Liberation Organization in 1980 and were ordered by the group to kill a soldier and steal his gun. Fatah is the PLO faction headed by Yasser Arafat.

On Nov. 26, 1980, the pair picked up a hitchhiker, Cpl. Avraham Bromberg, and one of them shot him in the neck as they were driving, Maariv said. They took his gun and threw him out of the car, and he died in a hospital a week later, the newspaper added.

The radio said the court decided unanimously to impose the death penalty, although the prosecution had not sought it. The sentences must be confirmed by the chief of staff of the Israel Defense Forces, and the men can also appeal to a military appeals court.

Military sources confirmed the reports and said the trial took place in a military court because the victim was a soldier and the defendants belonged to a terrorist organization. One source said he doubted the sentences would be carried out.

Only two criminal defendants have been executed in Israel. One was Eichmann, who was hanged after being found guilty of participation in the murder of 6 million Jews during World War II.

The other was Haim Tubianski, an army officer who was shot after a military court found him guilty of high treason during the 1948 War of Independence. An inquiry later found the trial was improperly conducted and exonerated him.

Israel abolished the death sentence for murder in 1954. But a university law lecturer said in a radio interview the death sentence was available to military courts for charges of treason and murder using guns and explosives, as well as to civil courts for charges of Nazi war crimes and high treason.

Protesters break into control tower

GREENHAM COMMON, England (AP) — Women protesters who broke into the control tower of a U.S. Air Force and nuclear missile base say they scrawled slogans on classified documents and unfurled a peace banner before they were caught.

A Defense Ministry spokesman said Wednesday three women were arrested in the air traffic control tower at the Greenham Common base, 50 miles west of London.

He said the women were released on bail but refused to discuss details of the Tuesday night incident, saying it involved "matters of security."

Thames Valley police said that one of the three women, Elizabeth Amy Gaist, was a resident of New York City.

Another of the women, Rebecca Johnson, 28, said they cut through a fence, raced across the airfield and entered the control tower by a fire escape.

"We didn't really expect to succeed. It was quite amazing," she told reporters. "We eventually gave ourselves up to a soldier who just freaked out when he realized what we had done."

"We wrote 'Greenham women are everywhere' and 'No cruise' on classified documents we found there," she said.

She said that inside the tower the women unfurled a banner declaring "Peace on Earth."

Police said the women were ordered to appear in court Jan. 26 on charges of criminal damage.

About 30 women live in a two-year-old "peace camp" outside the base, where U.S. cruise missiles were recently installed as part of a major new NATO deployment in western Europe.

At another U.S. air base near Oxford, where nuclear-capable F-111 bombers are stationed, three Roman Catholic monks who chained themselves to a cross were among 32 demonstrators arrested, police said.

The monks sang hymns with 200 other members of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament outside the base.

Police said another group from the demonstration, including an Anglican priest, crawled under the base fence and planted small white crosses before being arrested.

Baby spends four days without food

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — An 11-month-old baby girl spent four days without food lying beside the body of her dead mother in a locked room before she was rescued, police and hospital officials said today.

The child was recovering at a hospital here, said Dr. Praphreut Thirakhupt, director of Vajira hospital.

He said the baby girl, Chamod Lonuchit, was recovering from fever and exhaustion after being found by police officers who broke down the door of the rented room in Bangkok's Dusit area.

Police said they found the child, filthy and thirsty, on a mattress under a mosquito net in the middle of the room. Her mother, Sommai, about 30 years old, had died of cirrhosis of the liver, police said.

Police Lt. Krisana Kunakorn said neighbors called police after the baby cried continuously for days and a man on the ground floor of the house reported an unpleasant odor seeping in from the upstairs room.

Krisana said the baby's father, Prasarn Lonuchit, a 40-year-old official in the anti-corruption unit of the prime minister's office, had gone to the countryside and left the pair in the room.

Turks surprised by pope's visit

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Pope John Paul II's meeting with Mehmet Ali Agca has produced surprise and anger in Turkey, where the papal assailant faces the death penalty for killing a newspaper editor.

"The pope has pardoned Agca...but who is going to pardon the pope for his act?" said the newspaper Milliyet, whose editor, Abdi Ipecki, was killed by Agca in 1979. The comment came in an editorial in today's editions.

The pontiff went to Agca's prison cell in Rome on Tuesday and talked for 20 minutes with the Turkish Moslem who tried to assassinate the pope in St. Peter's Square in May 1981.

Turkish newspapers gave prominent play to stories about the meeting and the pope's reference to Agca as a "brother."

Detectives seize arms cache

LONDON (AP) — An arms cache seized by detectives who raided a north London apartment is believed to be connected with terrorist activities in France, British news reports said today.

The reports said the raid Wednesday was carried out by armed members of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad, who detained a Briton found in the apartment.

Terrorists bomb power stations

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Terrorists bombed electric power installations in three cities, temporarily knocking out service to at least 2 million people, police said.

Two blasts Wednesday felled steel towers supporting high-voltage lines in San Fernando and Concepcion, cities south of Santiago, police reported. Another blast went off near a power generating station in Vina del Mar, 75 miles northwest of the capital.

Lights went out for as long as two hours in some of the affected areas, according to radio reports.

Polish tourists jump cruise ship

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Authorities say 17 Polish tourists jumped ship while their cruise liner was making a stopover in Amsterdam.
