Fair Reports— Also Cotton— Outdoor Vaudeville— Stars and Shekels—

Frank Hall, reporter covering county and community fairs of Northwest Texas, tells a pleasant story of conditions in this section, both as to prosperity on the farms and in the towns. Memphis and Wellington have just closed the most successful and pretentious displays in their history, while Childress opens its show Monday. Good fairs, of which an abundance are promised around Wichita Falls, usually mean good times, an encouraging thought for Wichita Falls business men bent on extending this city's sphere of trade and influence.

Nearer home, reports of cotton ginnings make poor reading, with the figures for Wichita and Archer counties far behind those of last year. The crop in this section is unusually late, however, and indications are a fair yield will be secured.

Ginnings in two counties may not indicate the trend of a state's production, but the federal department of agriculture adds no joy to the outlook with its frequent and often radically changed estimates. Cotton slumped $8 a bale last week on the department's forecasts. It looks as if the stage is set for another 1927, when mistakes and predictions made by a benign Republican department cost the southern cotton farmer hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The real basis for farm prosperity in Northwest Texas, as indicated by the county fairs, is the wide diversification in this area. Farmers are adding new and successful crops. Dairying and poultry raising are rapidly becoming leading industries, and cotton, still important, is no longer the "all" of the farmer's financial position.

More than 80,000 persons attended the outdoor vaudeville programs sponsored during the summer by the park department, an indication that C. C. Bunnenberg, head of the department, deserves congratulations. And to the artists who appeared on the programs, as well as to Mr. Bunnenberg, should go this city's thanks for an opportunity for a season's pleasure under most favorable conditions.

The Record News doubts, however, that Mr. Bunnenberg is correct in his belief that winter vaudeville should necessarily follow the successful summer season. Summer vaudeville comes at a time when the town's populace needs opportunity for wholesome amusement in the open air, and when little or no recreation is offered. Winter vaudeville must needs be held indoors, at considerable expense, and at a time when the amusement calendar of the city is chocked with programs and cluttered up with everything from opera singers to juvenile recitations.

To this writer's way of thinking, the greatest winter need in Wichita Falls is more and better recreation for children, more directed play in the parks that will take youngsters away from coddling parents and give them an opportunity to warm their bodies by vigorous exercise. If Mr. Bunnenberg, or any other official or organization, can provide this then he will double the stars in his crown from summer vaudeville, and perhaps the dollars in his pay check, let us hope.

Porto Rico Hurricane Is Lashing Furiously at Resort Cities

DAMAGE GROWS

Senator Robinson Reported Safe After He and Wife Arrive

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 16. (UP)—A tropical hurricane of serious proportions blasted its way tonight across the Florida peninsula.

In its wake were such torn down communication lines that an accurate estimate of damage was impossible.

Floods, high seas, terrific winds, cutting rains—all these were expected to have taken toll of great property damage and possibly lives in the cut-off territory south of Daytona Beach to Fort Lauderdale.

ROBINSON AIDS RELIEF

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 16. (AP)—(Via Telephone to navy yard, Charleston, S. C., and Navy Radio to Washington)—Senator Joe Robinson, Democratic vice presidential candidate, this afternoon abandoned his immediate political campaign in Florida to aid in relief work in the hurricane-stricken region.

The United Press correspondent at Leesburg, Fla., said hundreds of motorists, most of them from Okeechobee, Sebring and Morehaven, were passing through tonight in an attempt to evade the storm.

Leesburg is slightly north of the district through which the storm is apparently due to pass.

Radio Silenced

Under the awful canopy of raging atmosphere, even radio appeared to have been silenced late tonight. Efforts to get in touch with the storm swept area had been useless at 10 p. m. Whatever was happening was feared to be outrages of a terrific wind storm and encircling gale that was sweeping and destroying houses, trees, crops and perhaps lives in its path.

Such a heavy wind had never struck Florida before, all advices here indicated. The speed and power of the hurricane far surpassed the deadly sweep of the 1926 storm that cleaved a path of destruction across the state.

Flood waters heaped up in the streets of Clewiston on Lake Okeechobee.

High winds broke windows and bent the boarded up stores of merchants at West Palm Beach, Daytona, Fort Pierce and Fort Lauderdale.

Shipping Tied Up

Shipping held the harbors tenaciously. Anchors were snuggled fast on the east and west coasts. At Tampa naval destroyers anchored to watch the progress and effect of the great storm from out of the, southeast.

Like a flock of winging sparrows, automobilists filled the roads out of Florida to the northward, seeking to escape the dangers of the hurricane.

Daytona, apparently on the northern fringe of the storm, reported a steady parade of automobiles through the streets, seeking northern highways to safety.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson, the Democratic nominee for vice president, gave up his special car in which he was campaigning the southeast. He asked that it, and another Pullman, be used to carry doctors and nurses into the apparently stricken section near West Palm Beach.

MIAMI PREPARES FOR SEVERE BLOW

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 16. (UP)—Preparations for a severe blow in Miami were being made late today although optimistic reports issued by the local United States weather bureau placed the center of the tropical hurricane, swooping upon Florida, considerably north and east.

The Hialeah station of Tropical radio has kept in touch with two ships in or near the storm area since 10 a. m. They were the steamship El Capitan, off Alligator Reef,

Death Toll Of 1,000 Feared In Porto Rico Storm

Half of Population of 2,000,000 Believed to Be Homeless; Poor Class Suffers Most

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, Sept. 16. (AP)—A steadily mounting death list stood today at more than 200, with estimates that it would reach 1,000 when communications are restored, as the human toll of the hurricane which swept over the entire island on Thursday and continued on to the northwest.

Governor Horace M. Towner estimated that half of the population of nearly 2,000,000 was homeless, and from witnesses who fought their way to the capital over almost obliterated roads it was learned that many faced famine.

Damage Goes High

While it still was impossible to form any accurate estimate of property damage, it was feared by many that it would exceed $100,000,000. Manager Krug of the hydro-electric plant, which supplies San Juan and most of the north part of the island, said loss to his company alone would be at least $3,000,000.

Authorities have acted swiftly to check the profiteering rise in prices of necessities, which already have doubled for some commodities. Governor Towner has ordered out national guardsmen to augment the police force of the capital to protect the scattered property from possible looters.

While the property damage in San Juan was immense, the city suffered a relatively small number of casualties as compared with smaller settlements. Arecibo, on the north coast, was visited by flood as well as by hurricane. Attorney R. Acosta Velarde, who reached San Juan last night, said that 10 bodies had been recovered there and that the search was not complete when he left. An American salesman, who required 36 hours to cover the 55 miles from Arecibo, said hundreds of homes at that point had been destroyed.

San Juan Has Water

San Juan today had limited power and water for the first time since Thursday. An emergency water line six miles long was completed last night. The newspapers will be given first sights to the limited electric power. The city still is largely without ice and milk. The plant at Comerio, which normally provides the electric current, was demolished, but a local steam plant was placed in operation to give a limited supply of power.

Governor Towner has indicated that he may urge President Coolidge to issue a proclamation outlining the urgent needs of the island. With half of the homes, even those of thatch, destroyed or damaged beyond repair, and with most of the food crops destroyed, he believes that the needs will be great and will continue for an indefinite period.

Country Folk Suffer

Probably the most seriously situated are the paisanaje, the poor country folk, who have absolutely no reserve resources. Their numbers are estimated at nearly 1,000,000.

Tales of their suffering already have reached the capital. Jaoquin Vollanueva, university instructor who walked most of the 25 miles from Vega Baja with his family yesterday, said that the country people were coming into town by hundreds, begging for food which the hard pressed merchants gave as they were able.

Paul Malone, who motored from Naguabo on the east coast, said that 250 homeless and hungry people at Naugabo Playa had literally mobbed a man who had a bag of rice, a bag of beans and a side of pork.

'Murder Farm' Slayings Confessed By Young Pair, Father Tells Police

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 16. (AP)—Investigation into a 15-year-old boy's story of the slaying of four boys on a Riverside, Calif., farm took new impetus tonight when George Cyrus Northcott, held as a material witness, told officers his son, Gordon Stuart Northcott, and grandson, 15-year-old Sanford Clark, had admitted to him that they had committed the murders.

Young Clark insisted today as he did when he called police detectives to the juvenile detention home here several days ago that his stories of the kidnapping and killings were true. He was being held for deportation to Canada.

Dr. H. C. Vandermeulen of the Riverside County hospital could not say definitely today whether the bones on the "murder farm" were human.

Bloodstains Examined

Chemists were busy examining bloodstains found in the chicken coop at the ranch to determine whether blotches of human blood could be found.

A concave bone fragment found in the ashes of what appeared to have been a huge fire, and which doctors said was part of a human skull was the lone clue to the fourth murder which Clark alleges was committed on the chicken ranch. An unidentified Mexican youth, whose decapitated body was found near El Monte, Calif., some time ago was said to have been the last victim.

Young Clark, brought to juvenile court from the Pomona chicken ranch of George Cyrus Northcott, accused Mrs. Northcott and her 21-year-old son, Stuart, of kidnaping, torturing and killing the four boys with an axe.

The youth declared the murdered boys were Louis and Nelson Winslow, who disappeared some weeks ago from their Pomona homes; Walter Collins, who disappeared from Glendale last spring, and an unnamed Mexican boy. Young Clark said he was forced to assist in the murders and to aid in disposing of the bodies in quick lime graves.

Seen in Texas

The first point upon which police hinged their doubt of the crime story was the fact that N. H. Winslow, father of two of the alleged victims, expressed belief that a report from New Braunfels, Texas, to the effect his sons had been apprehended there some time ago en route to Mexico was true.

A police officer in the Texas city who questioned two boys there some weeks ago declared he believed the youths were the lost Pomona boys.

Juvenile authorities believe that Walter Collins, third boy named by young Clark as a victim of the Northcotts, is now at his mother's home in Glendale.

MANAGER CUTS CITY COSTS

Five Months Report Shows $30,139 Saving

Five months of the city manager form of government have seen the actual cost of operation of the city of Wichita Falls decrease an average of $196.99 a day, it was revealed Sunday by W. E. McBroom, city clerk. The figures for the first five months of the present fiscal year are identical with the figures for the first five months of the city manager form of government, both dating from April 1.

The decrease for August, 1928, under August, 1927, was $3,564.38. The total decrease for the first five months was $30,139.56. The actual cost of operation in August was $51,550.80.

July this year is the only month in which the new form of government has not shown a decrease in operating cost when compared to corresponding months last year.

The following table showing the comparative costs in the operation of the Wichita Falls city were issued Friday:

	1928 Cost	1927 Cost	Decrease
April	$43,771.80	$49,062.30	$5,290.41

SPUDDERS LOSE CLOSE THRILLER TO BUFFALOES

Wild Bill Allows Only Two Safe Hits in Playoff Game

BUFFS NEED ONE MORE

Midget Mike Hurls Great Ball; Bill Shores or Payne Today

By AL PARKER
Staff Correspondent

BUFFALO STADIUM, HOUSTON, Sept. 16.—They say it isn't being done, but it was here today and as a result the Spudders' cherished Texas league championship is hanging on the ragged edge. With the count three balls and no strikes, runners on first and third and two out in the eighth inning, Watty Watkins lambasted one into the right field crowd, scoring the winning run in a 1 to 0 Houston victory.

HALLAHAN

For all intents and purposes that unorthodox wallop was the finish of one of the greatest battles in Texas league history. Wild Bill Hallahan won his second Houston victory by besting Mike Cvengros in a wonderful duel. Hallahan limited the Spudders to two hits and only 28 men, one over the minimum, faced him. Cvengros was great. The little left-hander would have won 99 out of 100 ball games. But this game today was the hundredth. His great pitching, the five-hit kind, meant exactly nothing in the final result, for Hallahan was too good—far too good.

Crowd of 16,000

Given the perfect setting of a crowd of some 16,200 fans, the game was just what might have been expected. Two teams played great ball and the lone difference was in that wicked southpaw of Hallahan, who tonight might easily be elected mayor of Houston.

Houston now needs one victory, Wichita Falls, two to win the series, and it's not over by any means now. Thus far, the Buffs, have produced only Hallahan who can stop the Spudders and they can't pitch him twice in the remaining two days, not even once with any measure of assurance.

Shores or Payne

The Spudders are expected to choose between Bill Shores, who owns the only Wichita Falls victory in the series, and George Payne. The Buffs now are in position to do some gambling, and it wouldn't be surprising to see Dick Whitworth, a second string tosser, but successful against the Spudders in relief roles late in the season, on the mound for the foe tomorrow.

Hallahan was so good today that only three Spudders reached first. Turgeon and Lapan on singles and Lamb when he was hit by a pitched ball. One of these was erased in a double killing and Turgeon was out attempting to stretch his hit, leaving the hit batsman to account for the 28th man to face the left-hander. Hallahan walked none and fanned four, and it was a far greater exhibition than his victory in Wichita Falls.

Cvengros' Downfall

Cvengros' pitching also was great and the game still might be rolling along in a 0-0 tie, if Watkins had not elected to hit with the count three and no strikes. Cvengros' downfall started with a walk to Selph to open the eighth. Worthington failed to sacrifice and Peel was retired, but Snyder popped a dinky hit into short right center, sending Selph to third and setting the stage for Watkins' winning wallop.

Both clubs fairly glistened in the field. Though the Buffs were called upon for little of a sensational nature, they never failed to give Hallahan every bit of support that was possible. Turgeon turned in a gang of nice plays for the Spudders and Fitzgerald, Lamb and Jenkins had much territory to cover in the outfield.

It wasn't a Spudder victory, but

Cantwell Wins Feature Event of 'Air Meet; Duncan Plans Reception

Robert Cantwell, son of Dr. J. W. Cantwell, superintendent of schools in Wichita Falls, won the feature event of the international air meet in Los Angeles Saturday afternoon, it was learned from Dr. Cantwell Sunday.

The Detroit News prize race, carrying a total of $500 in awards, went to the young Texan, who flew the same Lockheed Vega plane in which he won the transcontinental air race a few days before. Art Goebel and six other flyers of international repute competed in the event.

The message telling of the victory was received by R. W. Cantwell's wife in Duncan, Okla., with whom Dr. and Mrs. Cantwell were visiting over the week end.

Robert Cantwell is returning to his home at Duncan, Okla., Tuesday, Dr. Cantwell said Sunday. Plans have been made for a grand homecoming celebration for the flier. A banquet has been arranged, and flyers and his other friends from many parts of Oklahoma have been invited to attend. Dr. Cantwell and his wife are planning to greet their son.

Adequate Garbage Collection Given Only 160 Out of 10,000 Homes Here

Only 160 out of the 10,055 houses in the city of Wichita Falls are getting adequate garbage collection service despite the thousands of dollars expended monthly on garbage hauling here, it was revealed Sunday by George D. Fairtrace, city manager, on receipt of the final recapitulation of the city sanitary survey started in May by the city health and sanitary department.

The report, which was received from Dr. H. D. Fillmore of the health department, showed that only 160 houses are making use of twice a week garbage collection service. There are 2,411 which have collections each week, 2,922 which have collections twice a month, 3,518 which have only one collection a month and 535 which have no collection at all but which depend on the annual city cleanup.

Mr. Fairtrace explained that a service of less than twice a week at any home on garbage means rotted material in or near every home lacking the service, and unsanitary conditions.

The report shows the city by streets as every house was checked by city inspectors and the results tabulated by streets.

Inspectors found 6,137 premises in good condition, 2,782 premises in fair condition, and 1,135 premises in bad condition.

PHILLY FIGHTS RACKET RULE

City in Death Grapple With Underworld

By JAMES P. KIRBY
NEA Service Writer

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 15.—The "City of Brotherly Love," is such no longer. The city of the traditional mild-mannered Quaker, like others in the front ranks in America, today is engaged in a desperate struggle to rid itself of the festering sore of racketeering.

Money talked—or guns barked, as racketeers collected their fortunes in tribute, mostly from Philadelphia's speakeasies, estimated to number 13,000.

Machine guns roared their leaden hail into those who crossed the racketeers' path; other guns equipped with silencers spat noiseless death from secret places; leading gangsters wore bullet-proof vests for protection.

Ten million dollars a year is the estimate made by loyal Philadelphians on the amount the racket exacted through the amazing system of corruption and collusion permitting its existence.

Grand Jury Probe Under Way

In this picture of terrorism and graft walked District Attorney John Monaghan a few weeks ago—a keen-eyed, iron-jawed and resolute prosecutor, utterly fearless and determined to smash "the system." The vigor of Monaghan's grand jury investigation shows that he means business and already the underworld—and also some men now in high places—are quaking in fear of what is to come.

As one observes the operations of the racketeer in Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, Cleveland and other typical American cities and finds the slimy trail of the Chicago operators, so also in Philadelphia does one encounter the relationship between those forces and the local underworld.

"Scarface Al" Capone, the ruler of Chicago's racketeers, is the friend and adviser of Max "Boo Hoo" Hoff, the prize fight promoter who is the overlord of Philadelphia's underworld.

Capone has visited Hoff on numerous occasions, it has been developed by District Attorney Monaghan. Nor were Capone's visits merely social calls.

The astounding business methods which have made Capone the ruler of all her surveys in Chicago were quickly adopted by Hoff and his associates in the racket here. The degree of efficiency with which it worked, almost excites one's admiration.

As in Chicago, the booze racket in Philadelphia is organized down to the last detail. Big business showed the way when it established arbitration as a means of settling disputes, and organized crime quickly adopted such methods to its purposes.

Underworld Has Arbitrator

In the booze racket in Philadelphia today there exists an arbitrator (and it is believed by Monaghan that he was appointed by Hoff) whose duty it is to iron out disputes over territory, prices, saloons, speakeasies, and even the personnel. And the arbitrator's decisions are final.

The holding company, the device of big business used for the purpose of more effectually handling (and frequently of cealing) certain transactions not deemed suitable to the public gaze, is another device adopted by the racket.

Securely locked in the vaults of the district attorney's office are the books and records, the corporation documents, of the Franklin Mortgage and Investment company, the holding company organized by Hoff and his partners, Charles Schwartz and Samuel Lazar. Schwartz is now under indictment in the federal court in Cleveland, as one of 110 conspirators to violate the national prohibition act.

And these books and documents disclose amazing things. For example, entries made and kept with remarkable precision, are shown therein. Other records of a firm of public accountants also seized by the district attorney disclose payments as high as $10,000 at a time to high police officials and others.

Intermittently, though the maze of stories that fill Philadelphia newspapers, there appears the name of Congressman Benjamin M. Golder of Philadelphia, one of the organizers and, until recently, secretary of the "investment company."

It was Golder, who when Schwartz was to be taken back to Cleveland from Philadelphia by federal officers, represented Schwartz as counsel.

On the day Schwartz was to be called into federal court, Golder caused subpoenas to be issued for every Charles Schwartz in the telephone book and the city directory, and the perplexed federal officers from Cleveland, never having seen the man they sought, could not established to the court's satisfaction which of the dozen or more Charles Schwartzs in the courtroom was the man they sought.

Wear Bullet-Proof Vests

It was "Boo-Hoo" Hoff who introduced the machine gun, the silencer for the automatic pistol, and the bullet-proof vest to Philadelphia.

Edward S. Goldberg, proprietor of a military goods store, now under bond of $10,000 on a charge of perjury brought by Monaghan, has admitted that he sold Hoff three machine guns and six bullet-proof vests in 1927.

Somewhere in the resorts of North Jersey, the racket maintained a shooting range for the practice in arms of its deficient members.

Racketeers who have earned the ill-will of the boss are today serving sentences in the eastern and western penitentiary, following conviction on evidence framed by the racket.

Of the 20 gang murders in the last year, the majority are known to have been the result of the sentence pronounced by the racket upon those who have violated the code.

The saloonkeeper, the dive-keeper and the bootlegger have been kept in line by the simple expedient of force and violence to insure his adherence to the rules of the game as laid down by the racket's arbitrator. True, he paid for the protection he received at the hands of the racket, and he was thus spared the trouble and expense of paying for the official protection of vulnerable police and other officers, for whom the racket resumed responsibility.

Tuesday—The murder that started the present investigation in Philadelphia.

In Philadelphia's Spotlight

1—District Attorney John Monaghan of Philadelphia county, nemesis of the racketeers, who is leading the grand jury investigation into their activities. 2—Max "Boo-Hoo" Hoff, Philadelphia prize fight promoter and overlord of the city's underworld. 3—Patrick McKewen, chief of Monaghan's county detectives, holding two gun silencers used by gangsters to split noiseless death.

Indiana Voters, Lovers of Politics, Face Orgy of Ballot Scratching

By D. FIELD BRITTLE
Associated Press Writer

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 16. (AP)—Thrilled by a deep love for politics that is second to none, Indiana's electorate now stands contemplating a campaign vista greatly to its liking, one that offers more than the usual highlights and shadings of state and national issues.

As the Hoosier state prepares with historic fervor to choose a president, senator, governor, and other officers, it gives ominous forecast of one of those domestic upheavals of which any electorate is fond at times—an orgy of ticket scratching that strikes Democrat here and Republican there. A survey at this juncture inspires the impression that the man in Indiana's streets is primarily concerned with selection of a governor and is inclined to let the Hoover-Smith contest run its own course in this citadel of dryness and Republicanism.

Thus the gubernatorial issue between the Democratic nominee, Frank C. Dailey, who is promising to "clean out" the incumbent Republican regime in the state house, and the Republican nominee, Harry G. Leslie, is setting the pace.

Democratic headquarters, declaring Dailey is "as good as in," are almost equally optimistic that Governor Smith will find sufficient wet and farmer Republicans to put him across. That picture is, of course, entirely out of focus with the Republican view that Leslie will be well able to spare a few defected votes.

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

BIARRITZ, Sept. 16. (US)—Society's summer playground, after shifting from Deauville to Lido to Lucerne, has finally centered at Biarritz. The present autumn season in the picturesque Basque resort at the foot of the Pyrenees is the most brilliant since the time of King Edward seventh.

Fashionable women invariably choose Biarritz as the background for displaying the newest creations of Rue de la Paix. One of the biggest parties of the season was given last night by Beth Leary, of New York, niece of the late Countess Leary, of New York and Newport. Beth's guests numbered 250 and included Americans, French and Spanish social leaders.

De Riverns There

Many of the diners motored over from San Sebastian, the Spanish summer royal residence, and the two daughters of the Spanish dictator, Prime De Rivera, were present.

Forecasts of what discriminating women will wear could be made from a study of the stylish evening gowns worn. By the consensus of masculine opinion Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, the former Gloria Morgan, wore the smartest frock of the evening. This was a Jenny model of black satin lined in pink with a very irregular hem like showing the lining underneath which was twisted into a knot with black at the waistline. It made a striking setting for Gloria's beauty.

Luxurious linings in vivid contrast to the color of the evening dress is an unmistakeable detail which will be much used this winter.

The statuesque Marquise Merry del Val, wife of the Spanish ambassador to London, was another chic diner, wearing one of the new two toned gowns. Her's was from Cheruit, a beautiful model in white satin nearly sweeping the ground at one side with three spiral flounces lined with ruby satin. With this evening frock Madame Del Val had a ruby chiffon scarf carelessly thrown over one shoulder and fastened with a brooch.

Ruby Satin Sandals

Her sandals were of ruby satin with gold and with straps of rubies from the sole over the instep, set in gold kid. The rich tone of red was accentuated in her evening coat which was ruby velvet with mink collar and cuffs and with a deep pointed flounce at the back.

Of all the nobility present, the American born Princess Ilyinski, wife of Grand Duke Dmitri, was the smartest dressed. The former Audrey Emery had a gown from Chanel, of black satin. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Vincent, of San Francisco, Mrs. Mortimer Schiff of New York; the Anthony Drexel juniors, and Mrs. James Parrish were some of the Americans present. Dick Lounsberry introduced his Russian bride to society, and towards morning all the party went out on the point near Miramar bar, overlooking the Atlantic for breakfast.

Negotiations for Rhine Evacuation Planned

GENEVA, Sept. 16. (US)—Negotiations regarding the early evacuation of the Rhineland by allied troops will be opened immediately, according to a decision reached by representatives of the powers of the allied ambassadorial conference at a meeting here today.

Representatives of Germany, Belgium, France, Britain, Italy and Japan also agreed upon the necessity for complete and definite settlement of the reparations problem. A committee of financial experts is to be nominated for the purpose of considering this question.

Cabinet Members Asked To Attend Arms Display

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16. (US)—Secretary of War Davis today invited all members of the cabinet to attend a comprehensive display and demonstration of the latest developments in all phases of military armament, to be held at the Aberdeen, Md., proving ground, Oct. 4.

Zagu's Government Is Recognized by U. S.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16. (UP)—The state department has announced recognition of the new Albanian government of King Zogu I, who formerly ruled Albania as President Ahmed Bey Zogu until he recently proclaimed himself king.

Degree Conferred

ELECTRA, Sept. 15.—The initiatory degree was conferred upon one candidate Friday night by the degree team of the Electra Rebekah lodge in its regular weekly meeting. Mrs. C. D. Wilkerson, noble grand, presided at the meeting.

Plans were completed for the work of degree team demonstration at the anniversary meeting of the Quanah lodge on Sept. 18, and several talks were made for the good of the order. About 50 members were present.

Watch Tongue For Signs of Illness

Your tongue is nothing more than the upper end of your stomach and intestines. It is the first thing your doctor looks at. It tells at a glance the condition of your digestive system—and physicians say that 90 per cent of all sicknesses start with stomach and bowel trouble.

A white or yellowish coating on your tongue is a danger signal of those digestive disorders. It tells you why the least exertion tires you out; why you have pains in the bowels, gas, sour stomach, dizzy spells.

And it's a sign you need Tanlac. This good old reliable medicine has helped thousands who were physical wrecks. See how the first bottle helps you.

Confederate Heroes to Attend Graham Fair

An appeal was issued Sunday for automobiles to carry Wichita Falls Confederate veterans to Graham where they will participate in the pageant and fair Wednesday.

The call was made by Hubert Harrison, manager of the chamber of commerce, who asked that those who could provide cars would call his office at once.

Wichitans will depict the Spanish period in the fair's pageant, and the local Confederate veterans will participate in the civil war period. Miss Emma F. McFall will be the princess of Wichita Falls.

A float representing the Alamo will be a part of the Spanish period's display, and a number of Wichita Falls women will ride in it.

Edgar Scurry is in charge of the veterans' plans, Mr. Harrison said, and the chamber is working to cooperate with all groups.

"A Parting and a Greeting" Subject Of Special Sermon by Rabbi Schwab

The observance of the Jewish New Year was featured at Temple Israel by the preaching Saturday morning on "The Offering" by Rabbi S. J. Schwab.

The text of the sermon follows:

In this morning's hour of worship an irresistible fascination grips our hearts, sobers our minds and compels earnest reflections. What is it, that invests this moment with such a mystic spell? Is it the fact that we have entered upon another year? Have we not known that these divisions of time are but artificial and arbitrary; that in the unending flight of time there is neither old or new, neither beginning or ending? Yesterday, today, tomorrow—all are but the infinitesimal fractions of time and of eternity determined and controlled by law as everlasting and immutable as is God who ordained it. What is there today that has not been yesterday or will not be tomorrow? One generation cometh, another goeth but the earth remains always. Let us reflect on the far off Biblical scene we have read from our Torah this morning.

Friends, this is not a mere historic episode in the life of our patriarch. It is a picture of your lives and mine. The aged figure of Father Abraham represents time. The wood and fire are symbols of the brevity, the frailty, the perishableness of things earthly. The youth guided by age is not only Isaac, but emblematic of ourselves led by the hand of time up to the mountain, the mountain of life; and the question of Isaac is the query that rings out of the depths of our own souls this morning. Father of heaven and earth, here are the wood and fire; what are we, what are our ashes?

What are the decrees, O Master of our destinies! What awaits us beyond the tomorrow! Shall we walk our appointed way with laughter on our lips or gloom in our souls? Shall new joys enter our homes or treasured loves depart therefrom? Who of us, who of our household, which of our hopes and plans is marked as the lamb for the offering! I am sure this anxious cry of the soul, if you have asked it of yourself must move you deeply (upleasant as it may be, it is no more so then when we face reality) for if there is anything we mortals are willing to excuse, it is the humiliating realization of our human weakness and insignificance, the vanity of our lives, the emptiness of our pursuits. We love to live in the glowing sunshine of the day, to quaff the full draughts of its manifold joys, to forget, if we can, that in a midst of life we are in death, that tomorrow, perhaps, the hopes, the aspirations we so fondly nourished and cherished may suddenly be blighted and blasted, as the lightning rives and shatters the seemingly sturdy tree. We love to boast of man's greatness, his power, his wisdom, his wonderful control over earth and heaven; their mysteries, how they have been penetrated, forces yoked, and the voice that dares to waken us from our fancied dream and show us that our boast, our glorification, is but empty prattle, our strength but weakness, our knowledge but ignorance, our power but a phantom; the voice, speaking the truth into unwilling ears is condemned for his depressing message and but scant attention is given to his words.

You remember the Rabbinic legend of how God sits in judgment over all He has created on this day of memorial and assigns unto each mortal the destiny that is to be his, in accordance with his merits. Where is this God, this supreme Judge and Jurist? "Not in the heavens above nor the earth beneath." This God who meets our judgment in accordance with His eternal law of righteousness dwells in our own conscience. Where is the offering you have brought? What have been the contents and the characters of your lives? What offering of love and loyalty have you laid on the altar of the past year? What sacrifice of devotion to Deity and duty have you brought during the months that are vanished? Have you advanced one step nearer to the grave, and have you also mounted one step nearer to God?

In a material sense you have, possibly, put your house in order, but were the coming year your last would you in a spiritual sense be prepared to go? Could you face the Supreme Judge satisfied that you had striven honestly for the things of the soul as you have striven for the things of the body? If amid the solemn examination of this hour we review our ambitions and deeds, and must confess that our life has been a fruitless striving, then let us heed the warning in the solemn sound of the Shofer on this Rosh-Hashana, that bids us pause, ponder and become wiser. As we are standing in the shadows of Time's remorseless scythe, not knowing whom of us it may mow down nor how soon, let us resolve to end this profitless chase after the commonplace, the trivial, the perishable, and make our guide and our goal that which will not die but live when we are no more, when all our todays and tomorrows are swallowed up in a boundless sea of eternity, when the glories of the world have past and faded, and the youth and manhood of our years have rolled along the shores of time. Duty, however is sure; love is real; righteousness never dies, the good we do for ourselves and others will live forever. In the scales of eternal judgment one golden noble deed outweighs a ton of solid gold. A life lived in the light of truth and devoted to human service, such life is indeed an offering acceptable to God, a sweet savor in the sight of God and man. Ours it is to build, with wise and careful hands the structure of our life. How long that building shall stand lies with God. Ours it is to seek to do right; whether we shall be lead in the fields fertile with happiness or arid deserts of sorrow, that is God's decree. To be able to make our days rich in value to ourselves and to others, abiding in their influence, immortal in their blessedness, that power, that ability is ours. The length of our time, the fruition of our hopes that God's wisdom alone may decide. Whatever our destiny, hidden behind a cloud of an unknown future, let us do our duty with the assurance of our faith. "My time is in Thy hands, O God." With this faith in God's wisdom, and hope in His guidance, let us greet this new year.

Medical Data One Object of Cruise

CHICAGO, Sept. 16. (US)—Aside from the study of sea-serpents and their habitats on the Crane-Pacific expedition of the Field museum of natural history, officials in charge of the cruise expect to collect data that will contribute new material to medical science concerning tropical diseases and their cures, according to announcement of Stephen C. Simms, museum director here today.

Dr. W. L. Moss, who is to sail with the expedition, has already formulated plans for the investigation of blood groups of men.

Outlining his proposed research into the tropical diseases Dr. Moss said:

"It is accepted that the characteristics upon which the blood groups are based are hereditary characteristics and are transmitted according to the Mendelian laws.

"Attempts have been made to use these characteristics in the study of race relationships. The expedition promises an unusual opportunity to make possible a more complete study of relationships than has thus far been made."

The expedition is to be headed by Cornelius Crane of Chicago and will sail from Boston Oct. 15.

CHIC CHERIE — (Copyr't, 1928 King Features Syn., Inc.) — LATEST FASHIONS

Cherie and the others are taking advantage of a dampish day to wear their first wool frocks for fall. Dina's is a natural cashmere, knit with a decorative pattern in gold and silver tinsel. Kitty wears a wool crepe dress of red and two shades of blue trimmed with modernist applique. Cherie's frock is green jersey, a printed blouse and a plain skirt with a few lines of ornamental stitching scattered about just for instance. The theme of Dina's talk is that Cherie should marry Eustace because he has such a lot of money and he's a good sort anyway. Kitty agrees, being just young enough to be hard hearted and practical.

It's the older generation that goes in for sentiment. Emily is saying what a fine young man Andy is and that love in a cottage is the only thing in this life worth while. All this advice makes life very difficult for Cherie and we are so considerate of her distress that we shall drop the mater and tell you about Emily's dress instead. It's a frock made of tan silk crepe and a tan wool tweed mixture with the woolen stuff used as trimming bands on the blouse as well as for the skirt. Emily likes the smart collar, being just old enough to worry about the wrinkles in her neck. Cherie's cashmere has a new collar and shoulder line.

Pies Hold First Place as America's Dessert, Survey Reveals

By SAM LOVE

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. (UP)—The United States is a great, pie-loving nation.

All doubts as to the popularity of pie, considered in the light of a national dish, were dispelled today when the result of a survey, by the national household service of the Procter and Gamble company, was made public.

From California, where they are thrown, to Maine, where they form an excuse for eating a widely distributed New England weed, the rhubarb, pies were voted the finest dessert yet invented for mankind.

Among the people polled by the scientific wing of the soap house were a number of the currently famous. Yet radicals or classicists or whatever their identification in the realm of art, they all proved fundamentalists in the matter of desserts.

Pie or Nothing

It was pie or nothing for such diverse characters as Fannie Hurst, Paul Whiteman, Ellis Parker Butler, Naimbro Bartley, Billie Burke, Elizabeth Sears, Arthur Guiterman and William Rose Benet.

After all, a pie is a pie, and a great pie is something to carry (in hallowed memory) to the grave, but Fannie Hurst says that she eats pies, although they upset her stomach, as follows:

"So you are conducting a symposium on pies. Well, in my opinion, pie is a symposium of all American indiscretions in one. It is an indigestible delight. It is a soggy symphony. It is juicy fruitness and fruity juiciness. It disagrees with me and, therefore, with the passionate attraction of opposites for each other, I love it!"

Miss Burke's weakness is apple pies.

Pie's Dignity

"There is a dignity about the apple pie," she says in part, "that exalts it far above its fellows. You never hear of movie comedians bombarding each other with apple instead of custard pies. Charlie Chaplin himself would be the first to denounce such an outrage."

Guiterman, the poet, speaks up in favor of the hunting case type of pie.

"Generally," he says, "I prefer the real covered pie to the open-face or cross-barred species. I am fond of most kinds—mince, pumpkin, rhubarb, and all the fruits—but think that custard and cocoanut pies and all those sloppy, manufactured—filling confections should be barred."

Pie Poetry

"What in short, do you think of pie?
Apple is marvelous; peach I decry;
Pumpkin, home-made, is superb as can be;
And mince is a little too rich for me."

MEMPHIS, Texas, Sept. 16.—Be Biltmore may have told more of the real truth about pies and their present status when he said:

"Despite the temporary prestige of the gooey sundae and the fascinating peach melba, the gamble of selecting an unstale piece of French pastry, our pie has retained its hold upon the popular fancy and is gradually making its impression upon foreign bills of fare."

Oklahoma Democrats to Rally at Mangum Sept. 24

Special to The Record News

MANGUM, Okla., Sept. 16.—The Democrats of the seventh congressional district will hold a rally in Mangum Monday, Sept. 24. The meeting was called by Sam Browne of Elk City, chairman of the Democratic congressional committee. Purpose of the meeting is to lay plans for an aggressive and intensive campaign in this district prior to the Nov. 6 election. Among the notable speakers will be Congressman Jim McClintic and Scott Ferris and State Chairman George D. Key. Much information will be disseminated that should be possessed by every voter, with the "whispering campaign" tactics so often heard these days conspicuous by their absence, it was declared.

Memphis School Has Enrollment of 1100

Special to The Record News.

MEMPHIS, Texas, Sept. 16.—Eleven hundred students have enrolled in the Memphis public schools for the first term of the school year, according to Supt. H. A. Jackson.

"I believe that the school year 1928-1929 will be the greatest year in this history of the public schools of Memphis," Superintendent Jackson said. "With our new equipment we are prepared to adequately take care of the large number of students enrolled. I am expecting a splendid year in every phase of school endeavor and activity."

Court Reverses Case

Italy Farmer Killed

WAXAHACHIE, Texas, Sept. 15. (AP)—Will Born, about 40, was killed instantly tonight when struck by a northbound interurban at Pearl, near Italy, Texas.

Born, farmer residing near Italy, apparently had been sitting beside the track waiting for a car. The motorman said he saw nothing of Born until he rose up directly in front of the car. The impact split Born's skull. He was unmarried.

INTRODUCING

"a friend of the family"

YOU know him, he's the Life Insurance Man. Rain or shine, he's always on the job—looking after your life insurance just as though it were his own. Thousands of Texas homes know him as a true friend and a trusted adviser.

Sometimes, the life insurance man finds that one of his customer's premiums is overdue, and in a spirit of helpfulness, makes a call to fix it up. Such occasions are nearly always the result of some unusual circumstances, for men of the Texas Companies are trained to urge only that amount of life insurance which can be comfortably handled by the policy-holder.

Sometimes, however, sickness or unemployment may delay the payments. Then the "friend of the family" makes special arrangements to carry the policy until normal payments can be resumed. There are countless instances where he has paid the premium out of his own pocket to keep policies in force! Such confidence and human helpfulness are part of his job.

He knows, through long association, how to deal with the hardships of life, and his words of encouragement and acts of unselfish service have brought light into many a home.

You'll find that he feels, very earnestly and sincerely, the great need for insurance protection that is almost invariably prevalent. Make it a point to talk over your own insurance questions with a Life Insurance man of Texas as soon as you can. He'll help you lay out a program, and then help you to live up to it.

Do You Know—
that the Life Insurance Companies of Texas choose their men very carefully and then train them in the principles of insurance before you ever see them? . . . The effort has been found amply justified by the higher type of "friend of the family" whom you know as the Life Insurance Man of Texas.

The Day Book of a New Yorker

By GRANT DIXON

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—There's nothing very startling or remarkable about the shrub itself. It's just one of the common "vacant lot" species. But it's an orphan. Nobody has ever been observed watering it or giving it any sort of botanical care. It has been flourishing for many years, and, oddly enough, it has sprung from a pile of dirt and refuse which evidently nobody cares to disturb.

It is the location of the shrub that causes one to give it more than the first glance, for it is situated in one of the least thought of places where one would expect to find foliage of any kind whatever.

Customers of the Fulton street-Lefferts avenue "L" have the opportunity to study the shrub's unique habitation by looking from the "starboard" windows as the train starts its first right-hand turn after pulling out of the Sands street station on the Brooklyn side of the bridge bearing that name.

Another peculiarity with regard to the shrub is that the heap of dirt in which its roots are embedded rests upon the concrete extension of the elevated structure.

A New York traveling salesman who calculates that his luggage has been lugged several times around the globe at an aggregate cost to his company that he wishes he had to retire upon right now is just back to town again with a most amazing story of an incident to which he was an eyewitness.

He was on a Pennsylvania train coming up from Washington. At North Philadelphia not only he but probably a score of other passengers saw the whole thing and heard every word that was spoken. A redcap accompanied a passenger aboard the train, deposited the baggage and blithely refused a tip.

The passenger, following closely behind the redcap until a choice seat on the shady side was reached, had the tip ready—however much or however little it may have been—and smilingly extended it as the redcap bowed and doffed his red cap.

"Keep it!" he gurgled, as he smiled and darted for the door.

The passenger was female, smartly dressed and of a light tan complexion that was without benefit of summer sunshine.

Although many of the reputed 1,200 hotels in Atlantic City have come to remain open for business the year round, one may get accommodations there in the dead of winter on the plan of practically any continent he can think of. In the summer time most of these hotels are operated on the American plan—pay for your meals, eat all you like, but pay for them whether you eat or not.

"I don't mind the American plan myself," said a New Yorker just back from the Jersey resort. "In fact, I rather like it, especially at a resort.

"Many people who are in Atlantic City for the first time and find they have to pay such fancy rates—on the American plan and at the best hotels there—absolutely spoil their vacations by eating too much. They pay the rates without murmuring and then set out to get their money's worth.

ABE MARTIN

Th' age limit fer pustmasterships has been raised three years, an' now a congressman kin promise a feller a pustoffice till he's 68. Who remembers when a girl had t' flee from a burnin' hotel or join a burlesque show t' exploit her charms?

Our Enlightened Electorate

THE American electorate is, as you all know, highly enlightened and intelligent, and can be trusted to decide at the polls any weighty question.

To be sure. Yet a Detroit attorney, last spring, bet a friend that any man running for congress under the name of Jefferson in the 13th district could draw at least 10,000 votes, even though he made no effort to introduce himself to the voters.

After the recent primary this attorney collected. He had entered the fictitious name of John G. Jefferson in the congressional primary, making no campaign whatever and exciting not one line of comment. He polled 10,729 votes.

Really No Great Men.

"THERE are no great men," says the modern biographer. "The men that we call great were simply products of circumstances. Forces beyond their control lifted them up."

The modern psychologist agrees.

"No man is master of his fate," he says. "Our leaders are mere puppets of destiny."

This attitude is quite the thing nowadays. But if it depresses you, here are two recently-printed books that will help you to get a different outlook.

One doubts if either Frobisher or Jones would have assented to the proposition that he was made great by circumstances beyond his control.

Frobisher, you remember, was one of the great British seamen who broke the Spanish armada. And McFee's book gives an amazing picture of the feat.

Frobisher, with Drake, Hawkins and Howard, fought the armada without support. They lacked money, food, ammunition and men. Queen Elizabeth had vast stores of powder in London, and huge caches of gold and jewels; but she sent her fleet out, almost destitute, to fight the world's greatest navy. Reading the story, one feels that it was inevitable that the Spaniard should triumph.

But Frobisher and his colleagues were victorious. By sheer daring, bluff, seamanship and tenacity they disregarded their own shortcomings and sent the armada reeling, broken and eternally whipped, into the stormy North Sea. Nothing on earth but these men's greatness saved England from defeat.

McCulloch tells the same sort of story about John Paul Jones.

Politicians ruled the first American navy. Incompetent wire pullers were given command; Jones, ex-pirate and magnificent seaman, finally got to sea in spite of his superiors, in a leaky, unseaworthy old tub; and, in his famous fight with the Serapis, his ship was actually a disabled, sinking wreck when he compelled the British captain to surrender. Jones not only beat a crack English frigate; he triumphed over bureaucratic meddling, red tape, a mutinous crew and jealous subordinates. Never was there a clearer example of what moral greatness can do.

Is man the helpless creature of circumstances? Frobisher and Jones would have disagreed. They doubtless would have said that a truly strong man can make destiny follow meekly in his footsteps.

Our Life Sentences

JESSE POMEROY, America's most famous lifer, has just completed his 52nd year as an inmate of the Massachusetts state penitentiary. In 1876 he was convicted of a crime so atrocious that even today he gets little sympathy. He was ordered imprisoned for life; and, strangely enough, he has clung to life tenaciously, ever since, even though he has never for a moment known any surrounding but prison yard and cell.

When he entered prison Grant was president. Mark Twain was just winning renown. Rockefeller was a small-time oil broker. Ford was an undistinguished farmer's son. Custer's defeat at the Little Big Horn was the news of the day. The automobile and moving picture and radio had not yet come to remake American civilization. All of the stupendous events of the last half century have made no impression whatever of Jesse Pomory. He has eaten and slept and grown gray and wrinkled—yet, to all intents and purposes, he has not been alive at all.

We can't think of that, somehow, without a shiver. We congratulate ourselves on the mere fact that we have our liberty and can live fully and with freedom, and we pity the man who has been stagnating for half a century.

Yet—just how free are we, after all? How many of us are being overlooked by life just as truly as if we were held in prison?

The tragedy of the lifer lies in the fact that all his possibilities for real living can never be realized. Made in God's image, endowed with some small spark of unquenchable divinity, he is reduced to the bare animal functions of digesting and sleeping. This is the most terrible thing that can happen to any man.

But it happens to plenty of people who never saw a prison.

The drudge in a New Bedford cotton mill, striving to raise a family on $18 a week; just how rich a life do you suppose he manages to live? Does he ever get a chance to demonstrate that he is heir of all the ages? Does his fellow worker, the half-starved Pennsylvania coal miner? Does the New York clerk, cooped up by turns in a dreary office and a stifling flat? Does the offspring of the city slums, the north woods lumberjack, the back-country farmer whose sterile acres plunge him yearly deeper into debt?

We say we are living in a wonderful era, and it is doubtless true; but how much good does that do us if we are chained, either through force of circumstances or our own volition, to a treadmill? Whenever we devote ourselves more to the pursuit of things than to the enjoyment of them; whenever we forget or are unable to take time to look for beauty, love, companionship, recreation; whenever the prize grows to mean more than the game—then we are wasting our capabilities as tragically as any lifer in the land.

Freedom to live fully isn't just a matter of prison walls. There are other fetters just as effective. The convict isn't the only man who deserves your sympathy.

The FORBIDDEN DOOR — by Herman Landon

Behind the Forbidden Door

"So, it's Hannan Martenet," said a voice. "Poor fool!"

The words fell emptily on Hanman's ear. They meant nothing, but that voice! It was edged with something evil. He could not see the face of the speaker, but he felt it must be repulsive in the extreme if it matched that voice.

"Where—where's Viola?" he stammered faintly.

The man standing over him merely laughed, then called out harshly: "Maxwell! Oh Maxwell! Come here."

A tingle went through Hannan's tortured body. Someone came running.

"What is it?"

"Cerberus has been amusing himself with your son. I suppose he is your son. He looks like old Winthrop."

An exclamation of distress sounded "Hannan—Hannan! After I warned you—Can you get up, my boy? There—let me help you."

Hannan looked up. For the first time in years he saw his father's face—a gray, tired face with sad, kindly eyes. He took Maxwell's hand. With great difficulty he gained his feet. Leaning weakly against his father's shoulder, he balanced himself. With a shrug the other man walked away.

"You're hurt—terribly hurt!" Maxwell exclaimed. "Oh, my boy, I wish you hadn't— But there—shan't scold. You're young, and Old Winthrop's hot blood runs in your veins. Now you are going to undress and lie down and I'll dress your wounds. Put your hand on my shoulder—just like that. Now—

Hannan staggered forward. He felt very faint. The long, dim room heaved and rocked before his eyes. Suddenly he paused.

"Tell me, dad. Where's—Viola?"

"Who? Oh, the young woman?" Maxwell's tired eyes looked with grave concern into his son's torn and bleeding face. "So that's it. I understand, my boy. That's why you——"

"Where is she?" Hannan insisted. "Not far away. And she is all right. Nothing serious has happened to her yet."

"Yet!" the little word sounded terrifying. But for the present, at any rate, Viola was safe.

The fragrance of flowers and a current of cool air greeted Hannan's senses as he returned to consciousness. He was lying in a comfortable bed in a small, pleasant room, and the administration of soothing lotions had eased the smarting of his wounds. There were no windows, but he could inspect his surroundings in the light of a small bedside lamp.

His mind moved drowsily, slipping from one impression to another. This room in which he found himself must be a part of old Winthrop's sanctuary. He had braved the terrors of the forbidden door. He shuddered at the recollection. Those eyes of flame! Those slavering jaws! Those bruising fangs! And Viola? Where was she now? His father had said that nothing serious had happened to her—yet. The ominous quality of that little word came back to him.

He sat up. He must find her at once and make sure. He looked about for his clothes, and a cluster of wild roses in a vase caught his eyes. A current of air, fresh air in a house buried beneath an avalanche? But his mind was too full of other things to wonder about it. And now the door opened. His father entered, a weary, broken, old-ish man with a haunted look in his eyes who gave the impression that life had bludgeoned him cruelly.

"How are you, my boy? Better, I see. That's great. Dr. Traycore is busy in his laboratory. That will give us a chance to talk, and we have so much to talk about. We must plan something. So much has happened. Everything is upset. Let me see——"

A thousand and one questions thronged Hannan's mind, but one was uppermost.

"Is Viola all right?"

Maxwell stroked his head, his sunken eyes full of pain and sorrow and tenderness.

"Yes, my boy. She is all right."

Hannan gazed into his father's face, so different from the face he remembered. Some devastating experience seemed to have left its traces on it. And as he looked he felt Maxwell was holding something back, some thought too appalling for utterance.

"Tell me, dad!"

"I have told you. She is all right. Nothing has happened.

'But something may?"

"There, my boy. You mustn't worry now. Miss Lane is safe for the present. You love her, don't you? Of course you do. You risked your life for her. Well, I, too, loved once. I want your experience to be happier. Just now there is nothing to do but wait and plan—and hope. If Dr. Traycore——"

"Who is Dr. Traycore?"

"You saw him—or maybe you didn't. You were only half-conscious when he found you."

"He saved my life, didn't he? He stopped that awful beast from tearing me to pieces."

"Yes, so he did." A shudder went through Maxwell.

"I must tell you about Traycore," Maxwell went on. "You will meet him again soon and you must be prepared. You remember the story of Frankenstein, the man who created a monster. Well, your grandfather was a Frankenstein and Traycore is his creature. And a terrible monster he is!" The last sentence came on a hushed, quavering breath.

Weak as he was, Hannan shuddered. "I don't understand, dad. Old Winthrop was a fine gentleman. How could he create anything so terrible?"

His father smiled wanly. "His intentions were good and noble. But his creature got beyond his control, just as Frankenstein's monster did. I might as well tell you everything. It can do no harm now. This avalanche and its consequences have changed the whole situation. Old Winthrop foresaw nearly everything, but he didn't foresee this. Mallingham exploded his secret when he blew off the mountain top." He gave a cheerless, rueful chuckle. "Your grandfather was a queer sort, Hannan. But I guess you know that. You knew him better than you knew me. And you take after him more than you take after me. I'm only a pale copy of Old Winthrop. But you——"

"You're just splendid, dad," Hannan interrupted.

Maxwell shook his head sadly. "I'm a failure—worse than a failure. But I'm going to tell you about Old Winthrop and Traycore. Traycore, by the way, is the menace behind the iron door—the menace Old Winthrop warned you against. When the clock stops, then Traycore will die and the menace will be gone forever."

Hannan had been gazing at the fresh, fragrant roses in the vase. Now he bent a startled gaze on his father.

"You will understand those things better as I go on," Maxwell pointed out. "Old Winthrop was a marvelously active and versatile man. Like all geniuses, he was erratic and flew from one thing to another. His strange character was reflected in everything he touched—even in such trifles as the revolving globe in the Martenet town house. You may have seen it. Many people have wondered about it—and that was exactly what Old Winthrop liked to do—make people wonder. As for the revolving globe, the explanation is so simple that nobody thought to look for it in the right place. The revolutions are timed by clock-work, of course, but where is the motive force? Some day somebody will make the discovery that the weather vane on top of the house acts on a spring which keeps the clockwork constantly wound up. That's all there is to it."

"And the clock above the iron door?" Hannan asked.

"I don't know. I am not a mechanic. Neither is Dr. Traycore, although he has a keen scientific mind. Neither of us would care to tamper with it. We might disarrange some delicate piece of mechanism, and then—" Maxwell shuddered a little. "But I have an idea that the clock is kept running by a contrivance similar to the one that keeps the globe revolving. It must be an underground device, or the avalanche would have stopped it. There may be a stream beneath this house that exerts a pressure on the clockwork. That's the most likely theory. It's the one that Mallingham seized upon. Maybe he was right, but if so he bungled the performance. Maybe he selected the wrong stream. Anyway, the clock didn't stop."

"If it had," Hannan asked in a hushed tone, "Traycore would have died?"

Maxwell nodded solemnly.

There was a touch of awe and reverence and dread in Maxwell's voice. And to Hannan, as he listened closely, the complex and erratic personality of his grandfather seemed very real. He could almost feel Old Winthrop's presence in the room.

"Yes," said Maxwell, "Traycore is just as much a creature of Old Winthrop as are the clock and the revolving globe and all the other things. Unwittingly, and with the best intentions, he made Traycore the human beast he is today. It began long ago when Traycore was a poor medical student. Old Winthrop met him one day, and he saw in him a promising and pliant young man whom he could fashion according to his own pattern. It was another manifestation of that passionate desire of Old Winthrop's to impress his character on others. Young Traycore looked something like your grandfather and that was a thing that instantly interested Old Winthrop. The molding process would be all the simpler.

"He wanted young Traycore not only to look like himself, but to act and think as he did. It wasn't a mean trait; it was just Old Winthrop's way.

"He made young Traycore his protegee and defrayed the expenses of his medical education. The young man proved a bright and willing subject. He was brilliant in his studies, and he conceived a sort of veneration for your grandfather that made him eager to accept him as his prototype.

"As you know, Old Winthrop had a strong scientific bent, but he failed to concentrate his energies on any one thing for very long. That was his one weakness. He dipped into one enterprise after another with great enthusiasm, spending money lavishly on every project he took up. Then one day he made a discovery that was radically apart from his previous researches. It promised to have the most profound effects. You know that some of the world's greatest discoveries have come about partly through accident. It was so with this one."

"What was it?" Hannan asked, though he thought he could make a fairly close guess.

"You have already seen a demonstration of the idea. I sprung it on Mallingham, Julia and Peters, partly because I did not wish to be seen by the other guests in the house, and also because it pleased me to give the rascals a well-deserved scare. Old Winthrop's influence again. He discovered the thing that gave them such a shock."

"Invisibility," Hannan murmured in a dazed tone.

NEIGHBORS

My neighbors are a chummy lot;
Their names I never knew,
But I can tell you any day,
What they intend to do.
I'm sure they think a lot of me,
Yes, quite a lot indeed,
For when they start at anything,
I lend them what they need.

Their baby stumped his toe last week,
And raised an awful fuss;
Of course, they had no liniment;
They borrowed some from us.
The old man gets up with the chicks
Yes, long before the dawn,
And borrows mower, hoe, and rake,
That he might trim his lawn.

Whenever I miss anything,
My hammer, saw or nails,
My mower, spade, or garden rake,
My hose, or kitchen scales,
I do not worry where they went;
I know just what to do;
I call across the street and ask
To use them when they're through.

Expressions of Appreciation by Wives and Husbands Would be Help

Toral's Assassination Case Promises to Become Longest Criminal Trial in Mexico's History

There Would Be Fewer Unhappy Marriages if Husbands and Wives Would Express Their Appreciation of Each Other's Efforts Instead of Taking Them for Granted With the Marriage License.

If I should advertise through this column that I had for sale a patented nostrum that, applied as directed, was guaranteed to prevent divorce and keep husbands and wives happy and contented and eating out of each other's hands, I should sell millions of bottles of it a year and put Henry Ford in the pauper class among income-tax figures.

Well, I have just such a magic cure-all for domestic ills, and I present it to you without money and without price. Moreover, you don't even have to buy this never-failing remedy for domestic troubles. You can manufacture it yourself. For it is merely soft soap, liberally applied.

That will lubricate the household machinery and make it run on oiled bearings. That will salve down rough tempers and prevent the friction of arguments. That will stop the grating of diverse personalities. That will make matrimony a joy ride instead of a bump-the-bumps, for what all of us poor, weak, egotistical human beings crave more than anything else on earth is appreciation. We want to be jollied along the way we should go instead of being beaten and prodded along it.

I get hundreds of letters every day from people who tell me their tales of woe. Many of them are from women who write me that their marriages are failures, and the thing that has turned life into dust and ashes between their teeth is their husband's lack of appreciation of what they do. A woman will say:

"We are poor. I do all my cooking and washing and ironing and baby-tending. I squeeze every penny to get the most out of it. I would not mind the hard work and the sacrifices and doing without the pretty things and the amusements that I would like to have, if only my husband would sometimes notice what I do, and give me a word of praise. But he never does. He grumbles if things are not just as he wants them; and is silent as the grave when everything is just right. I get so miserable and discouraged and down-hearted that I don't feel as if I can go on any longer."

Or a woman will say:

"I am married to a good man, who gives me a good home and provides well for his family. He is honest and upright and faithful, but he never pays any more attention to me than if I were the kitchen cabinet, or the vacuum cleaner, or any other household convenience. He never pays me a compliment. He has never mentioned the state of his affections to me since our wedding day. I have a charge account and can buy what I want, but he never remembers an anniversary, or gives me a present unless I hold him up for one, and I should drop dead if he kissed me of his own accord. And this coldness, this flabbiness takes all the joy out of life for me, and breaks my heart."

These cases are typical. There are literally millions of other women suffering as they are. Disgruntled, unhappy, dissatisfied, feeling that marriage is a failure, and all because their husbands are too stupid, or too lazy, or too stingy to apply a little soft soap to the spot where it will do the most good.

No woman in the world ever thinks it a hardship to get up a good dinner for a man who extols her cooking as he eats. No woman ever minds hunting bargains and wearing her last year's hat if her husband praises her for her thrift and tells her he doesn't know how he could get along without her to help build up his fortune. No woman but who is willing to work her fingers to the bone for a man who kisses the callous spots on her hands.

It is the unrewarded sacrifices that make women peevish. It is the doing things for men who never notice that they are done. It is cooking dinners for men who gobble them down without a word of appreciation of the hours one has stood over the cook stove and pinching and paring for husbands who apparently think a mere wife should not want pretty things. It is the working yourself to death for a man who never even observes that you are so tired you are dropping in your tracks that fills wives with bitterness, and makes them fractious and complaining.

Why, it is just as good as having a tiara, a string of matched pearls, or a sable coat to a woman, to have her husband tell her how he would love to give them to her, and how it breaks his heart that he can't doll her up like the Queen of Sheba, but that even in her hand-me-downs she is better looking than any of those movie stars.

Women aren't the only ones who need the soft-soap treatment, either. Men crave a few kind words and a little recognition of what they do for their families just as much as women do. Hunger knows no sex, and just as many men are starving for love and appreciation as women.

When you hear a man say bitter and scoffing things about marriage, and warn bachelors against it, you don't need to be the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter to divine that his wife's soft-soap dish is empty and that she takes everything that her husband does for her without a "thank you," and as no more than her due.

When the average man gets married he sells himself into slavery for his wife and children. Everything that he makes goes for their support and luxuries, and for all his labor he gets only his board and clothes, and they generally the worst in the family. Whether this is worth while to him or not depends altogether on how much soft soap his wife uses.

If she frets and complains because she can't live like a millionairess; if she reproaches him because he can't make as much money as some other man; if she puts the children before him and lets him see that she regards him merely as a money-making machine; if she never pays him a compliment, or says a tender and loving thing, or gives any sign that she appreciates the sacrifices he makes for her, then marriage is a failure to him.

But if she is never weary of singing his praises; if she shows him how she admires him; if she tells him that he is better-looking than any sheik; if she continually expresses her appreciation to him of all that he does for her; if she shows him off before their friends, and lets him see that she is trying to please him and make him happy, then marriage is a glorious adventure to him, and no matter what labor or what sacrifices it entails, it is worth while.

You never heard of a man falling for a flapper who had a wife who jollied him. You never heard of a woman hunting up an affinity who had a husband who continued to make love to her. You never heard of a marriage going on the rocks where the husband and wife were appreciative of what each did for the other.

It is soft soap that does it, and soft soap is the cheapest commodity in the world. What a pity so little of it is used

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY
Author of "The Fast Way to Health"

Questions in Regard to Health and Diet Will Be Answered by Dr. McCoy, Who Can Be Addressed in Care of This Paper

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS

If it isn't worry about one thing it is worry about something else. A person who has acquired the habit of worrying usually imagines that his financial problems are more difficult than those of his friends, or that his family difficulties are more serious, or that his health is more impaired, when the truth is that most people who worry have no more difficult problems than any other person has to face.

The travel through life is a strange journey, and each day brings its new problems to solve. We all have our moments of happiness and our times of sorrow. Life is almost evenly divided between the lights and the shadows. Problems that seem the most difficult often have a peculiar method of solving themselves in the course of time.

When a person has two paths of conduct, and he is undecided which to take, he will usually find that either one of them would be suitable.

The two problems that cause the most worry are finances and family affairs. If you find yourself worrying about something, you should take an inventory of yourself. A careful analysis with a pencil on a piece of paper will usually point out the trouble if you are honest with yourself.

Most people try to live beyond their incomes. This is only a foolish pandering to vanity. Most people can control their expenses by making a few changes in their habits. You can enjoy a 30-cent picture show as much as a $3 play, and a round steak at 35-cents a pound is really more tasty and wholesome than an expensive steak at twice the price.

It takes two to make a quarrel, and you will usually find out that where you are having difficulty with some member of your family, you yourself are largely at fault. A little concession will often make things feel pleasanter without costing anything.

Worry and anxiety waste a terrible amount of energy, and so greatly imperil the functions of the body that serious diseases are often the consequence.

It is a good plan to give yourself affirmative suggestions before you go to sleep, such as the following: I am improving myself day by day; physically I am growing stronger, mentally I am increasing my knowledge, and financially I am saving a little money. I am becoming contented with life and confident of myself. I feel friendly toward the world, and things which I consider difficulties are as interesting to solve as the problems of checkers or chess.

You can cultivate a calmness of mind by the Hindoo method of not emotionally reacting to unpleasanst things. The actual thing that occurs is not nearly as important as the way we react to it. You can help yourself a great deal by using healthful affirmations, but you must also learn to cultivate health through dieting, exercising and proper mental attitude.

The emotions upon which the mind dwells become the strongest.

Questions and Answers

Question: R. J. B. writes: "Am suffering from severe pain in my hip which at times is practically useless. It is two years now since it first affected me. Doctors say no disease, but mention a possible arthritis. I get slight relief from electrical treament. Might say I was all right for six months previous to this last week. Would like to know if you can advise any treatment."

Answer: You should take the treatment I advise for the different forms of chronic rheumatism, outlined in a series of articles which I will be glad to send you upon receipt of a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Question: Mrs. K. L. asks: "Do you think custards are wholesome desserts? And if so, will you please state how they should be made, since you do not allow us any sugar?"

Answer: A custard when properly made, may be used as a dessert or as the protein part of a meal. While I do not advise the use of raw eggs and milk, when these foods are correctly mixed and cooked together the protein elements seem to combine freely. Raisins, figs or any of the dried fruits added to a custard will give a sufficient sweet taste in place of the sugar commonly used.

Question: Mary G. writes: "My chest—that part exposed where the dress is cut low—is always red, although sometimes I do not go outdoors in the sun for days. Do you think it is from nervousness or indigestion?"

Answer: When the skin is very red on the chest above the dress line it is sometimes an indication of the systemic acidosis causes by an over-acidity of the stomach, but of course sometimes it is due only to exposure because of the skin being thin and sensitive.

FAVORITE JOKES OF FAMOUS FOLK

As Told by Them to
FRANK E. NICHOLSON

By CHARLES FRANCIS COE

Charles Francis Coe is a famous journalist and author of numerous novels despite the fact that he never attended high school or college. At one time in his life Coe was a salesman, and he told me that his favorite joke was one about a traveling man.

Charles Francis Coe

"This traveling salesman," he says, was in a hotel room engaged in the business of writing a letter to his wife. The letter had to do with the delinquency on the part of the salesman in sending home that portion of his salary check which is the offering of every good husband.

"Just as he was able to concentrate, there came a knock on his door. Impatiently he went to the door and opened it. There stood a gentleman much the worse for drink.

"'Beg pardon, shir,' the inebriate one grunted and turned away.

"The salesman returned to his letter. He had just thought of two perfectly good excuses for the delay in the money when there came a second knock on the door. With greater impatience he jerked the door open and there was the same inebriate.

"'What do you want this time?' the salesman demanded.

"A look of injury filled the eyes of the drunken one. 'It'sh a mishtake, s'cuse, please.'

"'Well, see that it doesn't happen again,' said the salesman as he angrily slammed the door. Then turned again to his letter.

"A third knock on the door thoroughly enraged him. He hurled the pen into the writing desk and strode belligerently to the door. He yanked it open and there stood the same inebriate, but before the ire of the salesman could find expression, the inebriate straightened with true drunken dignity and said explosively: 'F'goodness shakes, mishter, have you got every room in thish hotel?'"

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE — (400) Our Presidents

At the expiration of Johnson's term, Ulysses S. Grant, the man who had led the northern armies during the war, was elected president. Grant was a Republican and the year the war broke out was working as a clerk in his father's leather store in Galena, Ill. He had attended West Point, however, and seen army service and rose rapidly to the rank of commanding officer.

President Grant soon found that Congress was not so easily disciplined as a body of eager recruits. Bitter fights resulted.

There came a period of hard times. Many banks failed. The government ceased coining silver dollars. The Indians began to give trouble.

During the two terms Grant held office the first railroads running across the country were completed. The Philadelphia Exposition, commemorating 100 years since the signing of the Declaration of Independence, was a great success. Grant often was tricked by men he called friends, but he remained loyal to them in bitter Congressional battles. (To Be Continued) it was a game that will be remembered by those who saw it after most victories have been forgotton.

Spudders Baffled

For four innings the Spudders went down before the withering tire of Hallahan. Roetz, Lapan and Cvengros were quickly disposed of in the third, Roetz on a high fly to Watkins and Lapan and Cvengros on infield rollers. In the fourth Benton popped to short, Turgeon flied to center and Fitzgerald grounded out, short to first.

Turgeon made a fine stop and throw to retire Walker the first up in the Buff's half of the third. Hallahan flied to Fitzgerald and Turgeon tossed out Hock.

Mike experienced his first trouble in the Buffaloes' half. He walked the hitherto harmless Selph and stowed away Worthington and Peel. The former was retired by Fitzgerald on a fine catch in short left center and Fitz's rifle throw to first almost doubled Selph off the bag.

Snyder doubled between Jenkins and Fitzgerald sending Selph to third. The bases were full when Watkins walked and empty again when Schuble sent up an easy pop fly to Turgeon. Snyder's hit was the first of the game and offered the big crowd its first opportunity to turn loose its emotion.

Turgeon made one of the greatest plays in the series in the fourth on Walker's roller to his left. Pete slipped and slid all over the lot and threw off balance a perfect strike to Roetz.

Before today's game the Houston sports writers seemed unanimous in naming Turgeon as the hero of the first two games. The Spudder keystoner has done the lustiest hitting of all and the third game was only three innings old when he had turned in two marvelous fielding plays.

Lefties Start Fight

The two lefties warmed right up to their work and there wasn't a hard hit ball in the first inning. Benton's roller was deflected by Hallahan into Schuble's glove. Hock made a nice play to retire Turgeon on a slow one. Fitzgerald fanned on an inside pitch.

The first two Buffs, Hock and Selph, sent up easy flies to Fitzgerald and Worthington walked on four straight balls. Peel, moved up to the clean up position in Watkins' usual place, sent up a popper to Benton.

The Spudders were just as easy in the second. Lamb popped to Snyder, in front of the plate. Jenkins drew Hallahan into a three and two count and then lined to Peel on the border of the left field crowd. Swenson flied to right.

It was the same for the Buffs. Snyder rolled to Benton and Watkins lined to Fitzgerald. Turgeon made a nice throw on Schuble's slow one after slipping in the wet turf.

Buffs Threaten

For the fifth straight time the Spudders went down in order in the fifth. Lamb flied to left, Jenkins was fanned on a low outside curve and Swenson flied to center.

Again in the Buff half Cvengros had his little difficulty. Walker singled over first. Hallahan fanned and Hock forced Walker, Turgeon unassisted. Selph shot a double past third, sending Hock to third. The Spudder strategy board held a consultation and decided to pitch to Worthington. The move proved okeh, for Worthington backed Lamb to the ropes for a long, but harmless fly.

The sixth was just some more of what had gone before. Hock made a nice stop to retire Roetz. Lapan fanned and Cvengros flied to Watkins. Hallahan was not getting his usual number of strikeouts, but he pitched perfect baseball for the first six innings.

Cvengros found his equilibrium, or something like that, in the Buff half and neatly disposed of the big guns of the Buff attack. Peel bounded one to Benton, Snyder flied to Jenkins and Watkins sent Lamb to the ropes for his well hit drive.

The Spudders got their first hit in the seventh but that was all. After Benton had gone out, short to first, Turgeon singled to left-center, but went out in a fruitless effort to make it a double. He didn't have a chance and Watkins' throw nailed him easily.

The Buffs had another chance and again Cvengros had the stuff in reserve. After Schuble had skied to Fitzgerald, Walker walked on four straight and Hallahan sacrificed him to second. Another bad place in the road was bridged when Hock took a swing at a wide breaking curve for the third one.

Wichita Falls passed up its best opportunity in the eighth, when Lamb, first up, was hit by a pitched ball. Jenkins' sacrificial effort was turned into a forceout, Hallahan to Schuble. Swenson flied to Worthington and Roetz grounded out, third to first.

Then Buffs Win

The Buffs won in the last half. Selph walked and Worthington, attempting to sacrifice, fouled out to Roetz. Peel lined to Jenkins for the second out. Snyder popped a single into short-center, sending Selph to third. Cvengros threw Watkins three straight balls and then the boilermaker drove one into the right field crowd for two bases, scoring Selph with the winning run. The count was three balls and no strikes and the wallop came like a blow from the blue sky. Schuble popped to Swenson for the third out.

Lapan opened the ninth with a single to left, the Spudders' second hit of the game. Eldred batted for Cvengros and fouled out to Snyder. Benton grounded into a double play, Selph to Walker, to end the game.

Can't Win Without Help

Mike Cvengros hurled brilliant ball yesterday at Houston. But Bill Hallahan was even better, and so the Buffs won the great duel of southpaws, 1 to 0. Mike held the Buffs to five hits but you can't win when your own club doesn't score a run.

NOTES OF GAME

HOUSTON, Texas, Sept. 16.—C. W. Chatham, took a vote of the fans who came on the special train to determine whether the pilgrimage home would be made Monday night or Tuesday night in event that a fifth game is necessary or that there is ano her postponement. The original schedule called for return Monday evening.

There were less than a dozen votes so the crowd is to stay with the Spudders to the finish.

In the Spudder batting practice, both George Payne and Mike Cvengros took their turns at the plate. While Chick Galeria and Ed Kalina, both lefthanders, prepared the Spudder hitters for Hallahan's lefthand slants.

Hallahan was the only Houston pitcher to hit.

When Hallahan came out of the dugout to warm up with Bubber Jonnard the home fans gave him a great ovation.

Spudderland fans had their turn when Cvengros started working the kinks out of his souper, with Claude Robertson handling the big mitt. Both teams took snappy infield drills and handled the ball cleanly.

At game time a few stragglers were still filing in and hunting places behind the ropes in the outfield. Not all in the park were cash customers. A paltry few scaled the fence and came in without usual formalities. Other non-cash customers were parked in trees, on top of trucks and on sign boards just outside the park.

The umpires and managers held their conference a few minutes before the starting and the game was off at exactly 3:30 o'clock. Harry Kane and Tom Erwin having acted as umpires in chief in the Wichita Falls games George Barr was behind the plate today.

Manager Snyder made the first radical change in his lineup since the start of the season. He shoved his right-handed hitters higher in lineup to combat Cvengros' southpaw pitching. Peel hit in the cleanup position and Snyder just under him, dropping Watkins to sixth position and Schuble to seventh.

The fans down here haven't forgotten the Lapan-Watkins scrap during the season. They booed the Spudder catcher when he came up in the third. Just as Wichita Falls fans have never failed to give Carey Selph the raspberry. The razzing of Fitzgerald was considerably lighter.

Turgeon made one of the greatest plays of the series in the fourth on Walker's sharp roller far to his left. Pete slipped and slid all over the lot and threw off balance a perfect strike to Roetz.

Before today's game Houston sport writers seemed unaminous in naming Turgeon as the hero of the first two games. The Spudder keystoner has done the lustiest hitting of all and the third game was only three innings old when he had turned in two marvelous fielding plays.

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 16. The A's however, are still half a game in the red.

Grove was Grove today, and so he marked us his 15th victory in 16 games, his string of 14 being broken by the Yankees themselves last Tuesday. He has dropped but seven this year. Score:

CHICAGO, Sept. 16. (AP)—Twenty thousand fans saw two good pitching performances as the White Sox and the Boston Red Sox split a doubleheader today. Chicago took the opener, 7 to 1, and Boston copped the second, 2 to 0.

Thomas limited the Red Sox to four scattered hits in the first game, while his mates bunched their seven hits together with seven bases on balls of Macfayden and five errors. In the nightcap, Harriss also hurled a four-hit game and the White Sox never threatened. Scores: first game:

Spud-Buff Game Today On Palace Scoreboard

Today's Texas league playoff game between the Spudders and Buffaloes, and tomorrow's contest, if any (which seems likely) may be seen again on the electric scoreboard at the Palace theater. More than 700 attended yesterday's replay of that heartbreaker at Houston.

The time of the game here is the same at Houston, 3:30 o'clock, and the admission is 50 cents.

DAILY DOPE

By LARRY DAILEY

OUR SPUDDERS or the Houston Buffaloes must do some barnstorming to keep in condition for the Dixie series. The Memphis Chicks won the second half of the Southern association season, which closed yesterday, cinching the title by winning Saturday while Birmingham Barons were losing. This will necessitate a playoff between the Chicks and Barons, which like the Texas league titular series will be for five games. Thus the Dixie series won't open until Sept. 25 or 26, and if the Southern association clubs encounter adverse weather for their playoff, it might even be later for the start of the games in which the championship of all the South is at stake.

It seems to this writer that magnates of the Texas and Southern circuits should have foreseen such a contingency and arranged their regular season scheduled to close on identical dates, as is done in the big leagues. By the time the Dixie series is under way, cooler and uncertain weather, with autumnal rains a possibility, will have set in. Too, by that time baseball must divide the sporting spotlight with football.

CONSENSUS of opinion of several sports writers and fans as expressed to me, is that the divided schedule was unpopular this season in the Texas league. The split season failed to accomplish the design for which it was intended, that of injecting new interest in the pennant race by giving clubs down in the race the first half a new start. Except for a flash by Dallas the trailing clubs speedily found their level, while the Spudders and Buffs went back to the business of fighting it out amongst themselves.

ATTENDANCE generally throughout the Texas league was unsatisfactory. It is nothing to be alarmed about of course, as this is too compact and too splendid a circuit to cause worry over one season. Indeed, it was an off-season for baseball financially, in the minor leagues, I mean, as is almost always the case in a presidential campaign year. But all the slight diminishing of attendance in the Texas league cannot be traced to a counter-interest in politics.

Doubtless an important contributing factor to the failure of turnstiles to click their merry tunes as formerly was due to the domination of the race by two clubs. Fort Worth finished second the first half but that was the last bid of the Cats for recognition, and after the Dallas Steers flopped the attendance in those twin cities speedily fell away. Recognizing that they must present better fronts than this year, club owners around the league are making plans next season for stronger teams, and a much more hotly-contested race is forecast for 1929.

OKLAHOMA CITY and Tulsa may enter the Texas league this winter. It appears that moguls of the Western league finally recognize that the long distances separating cities of their loop and lack of interest in the Sooner state towns toward Western league baseball demand a change of circuit to the north. That the Texas league would welcome Tulsa and Oklahoma City is obvious. Those burgs are among the liveliest in the southwest, both with populations of more than 100,000. Fans in those towns are eager for Texas league baseball.

PRESIDENT J. DOAK Roberts of the Texas league, here for the playoff games Wednesday and Thursday, said that Tulsa and Oklahoma City would be welcome in the Texas league IN THE EVENT they are released by the Western. The Texas league will make no overtures nor take any steps toward the acquisition of the Oklahoma towns until their territory is freed by the Western league. It is as grave an offense to tamper with territorial rights as with players in baseball and the Texas league will make no move to add the towns of our neighboring state to its fold until so permitted by baseball law.

If Tulsa and Oklahoma City enter the Texas league an expansion to a 10-club circuit is probable. It has been intimated in the past that Waco and Beaumont might be dropped to make way for the Oklahoma towns. But those cities doubtless would fight such a move, even if it were contemplated, which it doubtless isn't. Despite a losing club and atrocious attendance Owner Rube Stewart at Beaumont is making plans for next season, which include the building of a new park. Waco had a somewhat disappointing season as concerns its pennant race but the sale of three players to major league clubs prevented any heavy financial loss, if any. Beaumont also peddled a trio of athletes to the big time and I am informed that affairs with the Exporters financially are satisfactory.

REVERTING to Mr. Roberts, the boss of the loop is optimistic for next season. Thanks to sale of players few clubs will show financial loss and having weathered the presidential year, better things are in store next season, he said. The Texas league stands as one of the foremost of all minor leagues, artistically and financially, and it is due in a large measure to the sagacious and diplomatic direction of that veteran at the helm, J. Doak Roberts, that such an enviable reputation is held.

Olney and Throckmorton To Play Practice Game

Special to The Record News

OLNEY, Texas, Sept. 16.—The local football squad will play its first practice game with Throckmorton on Friday, Sept. 21. The first scheduled game will be with Nocona on Oct. 5 on the home field.

Increased interest in football is being shown since the opening of school and Coach Acker now has from 35 to 40 men reporting regularly for practice. Daily workouts are being held on the athletic field, and prospects are good for an interesting football season.

Southern Methodists Loom Class Of Southwestern Conference Teams

Abundance of Great Elevens Throughout Country Forecasts Many Thrilling Grid Battles This Season

By JOSEPH S. ROGERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. (US)—With football practice starting in earnest this week, indications are that this season will witness an abundance of strong teams.

Army, Princeton, Dartmouth and Pennsilvania believe they have possibilities for the mythical championship in the East, while in the South Vanderbilt, Alabama and Georgia loom as capable of giving any team in the country a hard struggle.

All the teams in the western conference appear able to turn out as good teams as last year. Chicago, Indiana and Michigan are expected to show much more strength than in 1927. The return of Yost in active charge of Michigan is looked upon enthusiastically by its followers.

Stanford Is Formidable

On the Pacific coast, Stanford, under Pop Warner, has planned a new form of attack for the coming campaign, according to advices reaching here. Pop, who was coaching football before many of his pupils were born, figures to give his strong rivals, California and Southern California, some real thrills. Washington, Idaho and Oregon will also give plenty of opposition to the California teams.

Southern Methodist, with many of its last year's team available, is the favorite for honors in the southwest.

Several years ago, it was the custom to consider Yale, Harvard and Princeton as being the best teams in the East, if not in the whole country. The increasing number of intersectional games has dispelled that theory however and has caused a much greater interest in the game. No section of the country will be without its great football teams this fall.

Start Seasons Sept. 29

Most teams will not play their first game until a week from Saturday. The season will continue until Dec. 1 when the Army and Stanford clash at the Yankee stadium in New York and Notre Dame meets Southern California in Los Angeles. Would that it were possible to be in both places at the same time.

Coaches from all sections report that material is more plentiful this year than ever before.

Parelli Meets Formidable Foe

Young Strangler Lewis to Grapple Joe Tomorrow

Young Strangler Lewis, of Chicago, who recently stood up against Gus Kellio, world middleweight champion, for two hours and 30 minutes without having his shoulders pinned to the mat is going to tackle Joe Parelli here Tuesday night in the main number of Promoter Alex B. Ross' weekly boxing-wrestling card at Spudder park.

Young Strangler, who met Kellio under auspices of the Chicago Athletic commission, lost his match to the champion in a decision on points but was able to avoid being pinned. This indicates that Joe Parelli, who thoroughly conquered Joe Kopecky here last Tuesday night, has his work cut out for him.

Equally as good a number promising fun for the fans Tuesday night is a six-round scheduled boxing match between Spike Stewart and Johnny Owens, welterweights. Country Boy Owens, who had been unable to get a match with Stewart for himself, will act as his brother Johnny's second.

If Stewart is victor over Johnny Owens he will be confronted by a public challenge from Country Boy for a match. Meanwhile, Stewart decided that if he had to go into the ring against any of the Owens clan he preferred it to be Johnny.

Another boxing go carded for the program by Ross is a four-round engagement involving Frenchie LeFevre of Grandfield, Okla., and Howard Scott of Electra.

The curtain raiser will be a four-round battle between Curley Robertson of Wichita Falls and Buddy Scott of Electra as another number of the elimination tournament now in progress for the West Texas paperweight championship. In two previous matches with other opponents, Robertson and Buddy Scott have both been victorious.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. (US)—The latest quotation on seats on the New York stock exchange is $410,000.

Boy, how would you like to be a chair warmer in that joint?

The campaign made the market more active between the switching hours of nine and three. Millions of shares change hands very day.

We see the brokers' yachts steaming down the Hudson river every day. A lot of the boys go to work in palatial cruisers and go home in rowboats.

Brokers have an easy life but it is very precarious. A broker never knows how rich he is until he is on his way over the bunkers to the poorhouse.

The temptation to speculate is very robust. But not when you hear that call money screeching in the twilight.

We would all like to spoon up some easy gravy. Down in Florida last winter we were advised to buy Toothpicks and hold on to it.

The brokers said, "put it away and forget it. You will have nothing to worry about when you are old."

We were old inside of two weeks.

We put it away. Everybody forgot it.

Sahara Boulevard was another good stock to put away and forget. So was Marine Fungus and Headless Tacks.

Maybe we don't go about this stock business in the right way. Every time we put up ten points margin, adverse conditions come along and bite the heads off the asparagus. Which leaves us the stalks.

It is certainly discouraging to see the neighbors getting rich on consolidated mistakes and vulcanized teething rings.

Everybody we know is either wealthy or convalescing. When we try to knock off some of those happy icicles we find we are in the same position as the man who was invited to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Jack Spratt.

When you take your setting-up exercises with a market that is going up and down, try to synchronize your bobbing in the right direction.

Wellington Opens Grid Season Friday

FRED FUSSELL CHECKS GIANTS

Southpaw Hurls 1-0 Win; Cards Gain Half Game

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. (AP)—The Giants dropped half a game farther behind the pace setting Cardinals today when Pittsburgh opened its final eastern invasion with a 1 to 0 victory over the clan McGraw while the Red Birds were idle.

This reverse left the struggling Giants two full games out of first place, but leading the third-place Cubs by one and one-half contests.

The home team outhit the Pirates by 7 to 3, and threatened young Fred Fussell often, but could get no runs. The Pirates were dangerous only in the third, when they scored, and in the ninth when they filled the bases on Jack Scott after two were out. Score:

BUILDING FOR ZOO NEEDED

Brick Structure Planned as Winter Quarters

Donations are being received and plans are going forward rapidly for a winter building for the animals of the Lions club municipal zoo in Scotland park, it was revealed Sunday by Dr. R. H. Graham of the Lions club.

Two little sun bears, the most beautiful and at the same time cunning of all members of the bear family, arrived from the Himalayo mountains of Northern India Saturday. Sunday they were on display at the Lions club municipal zoo for the first time. They were given by Charles I. Francis for the National Security Life Insurance company.

These bear cubs are six months old and are a mated pair, according to Dr. R. H. Graham of the Lions club, and probably will grow to twice their present size.

The building will be of brick and will be 200 feet long and 80 feet wide. It will include all the latest ideas and discoveries of value in the care of animals in winter time, and will provide the necessary warmth and protection for the animals.

As the city is in no position financially now to build the building, Dr. Graham personally is heading the drive for donations that will enable the animals to receive proper protection that they may live through the winter.

Floridans Flee From Hurricane

southwest of Miami, which reported at 1 p. m. that there was a northwest wind of gale proportions with a barometer reading of 29.44, and the steamship Phoebus, off Tennessee Reef, also southwest, which reported winds of from 47 to 54 miles an hour and a barometer reading of 29.55.

Radio Maintained

E. F. Bourne, superintendent of the Hialeah station, said he was maintaining constant connection with the company's stations in Boston and New Orleans, and has worked out a schedule with radio amateurs in up-state districts in order to send out reports in case telegraph and telephone wires fail.

R. W. Gray, superintendent of the local weather bureau, predicted winds not exceeding gale proportions here if the storm center passes inland, as he expected it to do. He added that destructive winds and dangerous tides should occur from north of Miami to Daytona.

Greater Than 1926 Storm

Gray said the hurricane is much more severe than the storm of 1926.

Democratic nominee for vice president, Senator Joseph T. Robinson, who with Mrs. Robinson, arrived here this morning, will remain in Miami for the present.

A relief train was made up this afternoon and held in readiness here to be started northward as soon as the hurricane hits the coast.

BEACHES REPORT SEAS 40 FEET HIGH

WEST PALM BEACH, Sept. 16. (UP)—The twin cities of Palm Beach and West Palm Beach found themselves in the wild center of a westward moving hurricane late today that dealt out extensive damage before wire communications and public utilities failed.

Great hunks of cement were torn out of Flagler boulevard by seas 35 to 40 feet high.

As far as known at 4 p. m. no lives had been lost.

At 4:40 p. m. the wind velocity on Ocean boulevard at Palm Beach was reported at 100 miles an hour and 85 miles an hour in the city of West Palm Beach. At this time the only wires out of this district were telegraph lines. The barometer reading was 28.62 and falling. No casualities had been reported.

The American Legion's open air arena was reported wrecked.

Every downtown street was deserted by mid-afternoon, and municipal orders were that all citizens should remain inside during the blow.

The West Palm Beach Post, when public utilities were crippled, announced it would attempt to print its Monday morning edition on the flat bed press of the Tropical Sun, a weekly sheet.

A north wind of medium force blew here during the morning with alternating rain and sun. In the afternoon, however, the wind increased considerably and it began to rain steadily.

The train bringing Senator and Mrs. Robinson to Miami on the nominee's speaking tour made the trip from Jacksonville without encountering any difficulties.

RED CROSS SENDS DISASTER WORKERS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16. (UP)—A group of experienced disaster workers was despatched to Jacksonville tonight by the American Red Cross to prepare to cope with any emergency which might arise from the hurricane, now gripping the Florida coast.

A. L. Schafer, of the national headquarters staff, was ordered to proceed from Charleston, W. Va., and six members of the headquarters staff left Washington.

TWO SCHOONERS BLOWN ASHORE

TURKS ISLAND, Sept. 16. (AP)—Two British schooners were blown ashore by the hurricane on the north side of Salt Cay, and were wrecked. The crews were rescued and some of the materials of vessels and cargoes will be salvaged. The schooners were the C. Maud Gaskill, cruising among the Bahamas and West Indies since leaving St. Johns, N. F., and the William A. Naugler, which left Madeira, Aug. 6 for Trinidad.

TRAINS HELD AT FORT PIERCE

FORT PIERCE, Fla., Sept. 16. (UP)—Telephone and telegraph service from Fort Pierce southward was cut off this afternoon as the tropical hurricane sweeping up from Porto Rico reached out over the east coast of Florida.

South bound trains over the Florida East Coast railway were held up here. Power service was off.

The wind velocity at 6 p. m. was estimated at from 60 to 70 miles and growing stronger. The barometer reading at 5 p. m. was 29.36 and falling.

FLOOD THREATENS TO COVER TOWN

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Sept. 16 (UP)—The Western Union telegraph office here tonight reported that Clewiston, Fla., on the edge of Lake Okeechobee was threatened with inundation.

A 60-mile-an-hour wind was reported there.

Hastily organized rescue crews were laboring to hold back flood waters from the lake by throwing up embankments, it was said.

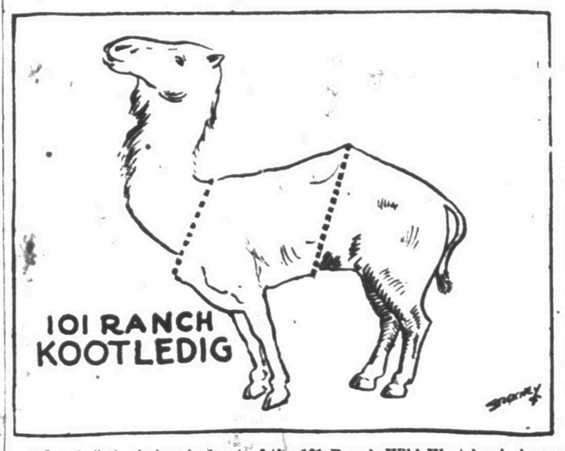

WIRES DOWN AT FORT LAUDERDALE

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., Sept. 16. (US)—First to go when the hurricane struck here at 4 o'clock this afternoon were communication wires and electric power lines.

The wind was at 50 miles an hour and increasing. Inhabitants warned in advance of the approach of the storm had taken every precaution. Terrific rain accompanied the storm here. Cellars were flooded.

The full force of the hurricane was not expected to hit here but it was believed that the damage would be heavy.

More Than 300 Circus Tickets Given In "Scrambled" Animal Puzzle

"Jeanie," the baby elephant of the 101 Ranch Wild West herd, dreamed that she and five other animals (all of different species) became "scrambled." For instance, she had her own head and forelegs, another animal's body and a third animal's hind legs.

Six outline pictures will be printed of six such "scrambled" animals. Children pasting the parts of the six pictures properly together; that is, as the animals appear in real life, will be given tickets to the 101 Ranch show, according to the following rules:

Any boy or girl 10 years of age or under can enter the contest. Only one set of pictures to be entered in contest from each child. Contestants will be judged by the following: First, animals must be correct; second neatness; third, attractiveness. Be sure to keep all six of the pictures as they appear in this newspaper, then when all of them are printed, cut them up and properly arrange them as they should be.

List of prizes follow:

Capital prize, six adult reserved seat tickets. Second prize, three adult reserved seat tickets. Third prize, two adult reserved seat tickets. Three hundred children's tickets (for children 10 years of age or under), one to each kiddie.

Mack Sennett, whose bathing beauties have caused millions of eyes to pop from their usual level levels, has decreed that feminine curves are coming out. Our authority is none other than P. A. Parsons of Pathe and here is what he says about it:

"Flat chests, slim hips and boyish outlines for girls are on the way out, judging from a survey of girls on the Mack Sennett lot. The famous producer, Sennett, is a judge of feminine beauty second to none, and the way he picks them has a great influence, not so much on what girls will wear, as the girls themselves.

"Pictures of Sennett's first bathing girls 10 or 12 years ago are still extant, and are of interest to those who appreciate that not only do styles of feminine dress change rapidly, but the kind of feminine figure also.

"Those pioneer, one-piece bathing suit beauties had what might be termed 'liberal charms.' There was nothing scanty about them. Curves, curves, curves; not so much of the elliptical order as on the arc. They were truly eye-filling.

"But Sennett senses a change in beauty styles before the public has had its fill of the old. Like Alexander Pope, he may say: 'Be not the first by whom the new is tried, nor yet the last to lay the old aside.' While the rather hefty darlings still rode the wave of popularity, Sennett was picking them on slimmer lines, and before the public had waked up to the momentous move, the Sennett girls were 100 per cent boyish in figure, silhouettes, so to speak.

"As goes Sennett, so goes the haute monde of feminine beauty. Sumptuous curves yielded to diets of lemon juice and calory deficient foods. Candy makers sobbed. Their choicest customers were afraid to indulge their appetites in sweets. The yardage of textiles needed to adorn womankind fell off alarmingly.

"But the pendulum swings. Plumpness is no longer a liability but an asset. The word is going around, 'curves are coming back, for Sennett says so.'"

And that's that!

Texas' Investment In Autos Mounts

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 14. (UP)—Investment in automobiles in Texas at the present time exceeds the investment of railroads operating in the state by $250,000,000, according to date assembled by O. H. Bower auditor for the Missouri-Kansas-Texas railroad.

Bower computed the automobile investment on a retail basis derived from figures in the 1928 yearbook of the National Automobile chamber of commerce. The average retail value of automobiles per unit was shown as $915.

The automobile registration of Texas was made up of 996,397 passenger cars, 907 busses and 115,101 trucks.

Business Failures in Texas Past Month at Low Mark for 8 Years

Special to The Record News

AUSTIN, Sept. 16.—Commercial failures in Texas during August were the fewest for any month since May, 1920, according to Bervard Nichols, editor of The Texas Business Review, issued monthly by the bureau of business research of the University of Texas.

"There were about 28 bankruptcies having liabilities of $251,000," he said. "This compares with 51 insolvencies with liabilities of $755,000 in July and 45 failures having liabilities of $481,000 in August, a year ago. While a decrease in the number of defaults is to be expected during the summer months, the record this year is better than usual.

"Practically all of the failures were small corporations," he continued. "Average liability per bankruptcy was only $9,000 against $18,000 in July and $11,000 in August, 1927. A downward trend in the average liability per average default has been in evidence since last May, indicating that small companies are experiencing difficulty in earning profits. Merover, competition is expected to become keener.

"No bank failures were reported for the month," concluded Mr. Nichols.

Wild-Eyed Theater Patrons Give Wichita Manager Scare

Bank "Runs" Duplicated When Box Office Change Gives Out

"What would you do if 40 men came running at you, had you cornered and kept shouting 'There he is! We want our money! That's him! Where's our money'?"

That's the question put by H. C. Federer, city manager for Dent theaters, Sunday in speaking of the aftermath of the Spudder-Buff baseball game which was rained out Saturday.

"We were going to have the game on the big scoreboard in the Palace, and were all ready and waiting when it was finally called off on account of rain," Mr. Federer said. "I was not at the theater but Hans Smith, manager of the Strand theater was there.

"When the announcement of the postponement was made, Mr. Smith went to the box office and was passing out the usual baseball rain checks as is customary at scoreboard shows and at baseball games, when one man demanded his money back. It was given to him. Others also received their money until our small change was all gone. Then Mr. Smith told the crowd he would have to go out after more change.

"While he was out, I came in the rear entrance of the Palace from the Olympic theater and a small boy spied me. He let a yell that I was Smith, and the crowd, thinking someone was trying to pull a fast one on them, charged on me yelling, 'There he is! Let's get him! We want our money! and like things.

"Naturally I was a little worried to see a mob of strangers bearing down on me that way, especially when I didn't know what they had in their minds. However, I soon learned what was their trouble, and at last suceeded in convincing them I wasn't Smith and that they were not being fooled in any way. One man had gone to the telephone and called the police.

"The change soon came to the box office, and we were able to complete paying off the crowds.

"What they didn't know, or stop to take into consideration was that they themselves had our change in their pockets, as they had given us when they came in, $5 and $20 bills to change along with their dollars and the like. When they understood how it had happened, they took it, good naturedly, and I was happy it turned out as it did. I am here to say that facing a mob of angry men is no fun, and also that I wish all the small boys in Wichita Falls would learn what Hans Smith looks like and what I look like so they won't get us mixed up again."

BURGLARS TAKE $200 IN LOOT

Wichita Homes Sacked by Night Prowlers

Burglars and petty thieves were active in Wichita Falls Saturday night, records of the city police revealed Sunday. Property exceeding $200 in value was reported stolen prior to Sunday afternoon.

L. E. Keever of 1904½ Fillmore street reported late Sunday that someone had entered his home and appropriated a $5 bill. The bill was lost Saturday night, he said. On Friday night members of the family awakened to find a strange man peering in at a window, but he disappeared as soon as the lights were turned on, Mr. Keever said. The Saturday night visitor entered the home after cutting his way through a screen door.

On two other occasions, Mr. Keever reported, he has been the host to burglars. Early last week, he said, a prowler "lifted" six chickens from Mr. Keever's coops and returned the following night and took the remaining six chickens.

Mrs. Ben L. Kelly reported to police that someone had carted a load of furniture from the servant house at 1907 Elizabeth during the past week. The furniture and cooking utensils stored in the vacant servant house were not missed until Saturday, Mrs. Kelly said.

William Nedeau of the Wichita Falls Waste Paper company, 101 Jalonic, reported loss of four automobile tires from his garage sometime Saturday night. The garage was entered through a window, he said, and the four tires were taken from a truck.

No arrests had been made by police Sunday in connection with activities of burglars Saturday night.

TEXARKANA MAN SHOT

TEXARKANA, Texas, Sept. 16. (AP)—Ray Palmer, 21, of New Boston, Texas, was wounded probably fatally in a shooting affray here today. He was shot three times.

When a 3-year-old baby with a sick mother cried for a drink of water Saturday night, the child's father whipped it and threw it on the floor, breaking the baby's left leg, according to information given police Sunday night.

All day Sunday the little girl whimpered in pain, neighbors told police, but the father would not summon medical aid. The mother was seriously ill.

Finally a neighbor, over the protests of the father, carried the child to a hospital. Physicians of the Wichita General hospital notified police. The father was arrested and placed in the city jail. He will be turned over to county authorities Monday morning, according to Jim Glenn, night chief of police, who with Ellis Summers and W. P. Belcher, city detectives, investigated the case.

The mother said that the child had been incessantly crying for a drink of water. The father became angered. He picked up the baby and whipped her severely, the sick mother said, and then threw the little girl to the floor sharply. The baby's leg was broken in the fall.

The father told police that the child broke her leg in a fall from a bed Saturday night. The baby, he said, was crawling around the bed. Her foot caught and she fell to the floor, according to the father. He said he did not summon medical aid because he did not know the baby was badly hurt.
