Trustees to appeal if court implements J-1 plans

By LINDA SCHAFFRINA

Midland school trustees Tuesday submitted three plans to federal court to comply with a court order requiring plans for desegregating the city's elementary schools.

Trustees emphasized a plan to desegregate Washington, De Zavala, Crockett, Milam and Pease elementary schools was being submitted "under protest."

School district attorney Thornton Hardie Jr., in an interview after the meeting, promised to insist on the district's position that Crockett, Milam and Pease should not be included in the order "all the way through to the top level of appeals if we are permitted to do so," should the court order implementation of the plan.

The district maintains that no action on its part caused these three schools to be "racially identifiable," and therefore it should not be required to submit desegregation plans for them.

School trustees had expected to receive word before today's deadline for submitting plans whether or not the Justice Department agreed with their position.

They were notified Tuesday word would not be forthcoming until Friday.

One seven-day delay in the deadline for plans was granted after the Justice Department requested more time to study information recieved from trustees and administrative staff members.

The failure of the Justice Department to render a decision angered some trustees.

"They didn't come up with a decision when they said they would," trustee Don Sparks said after the meeting.

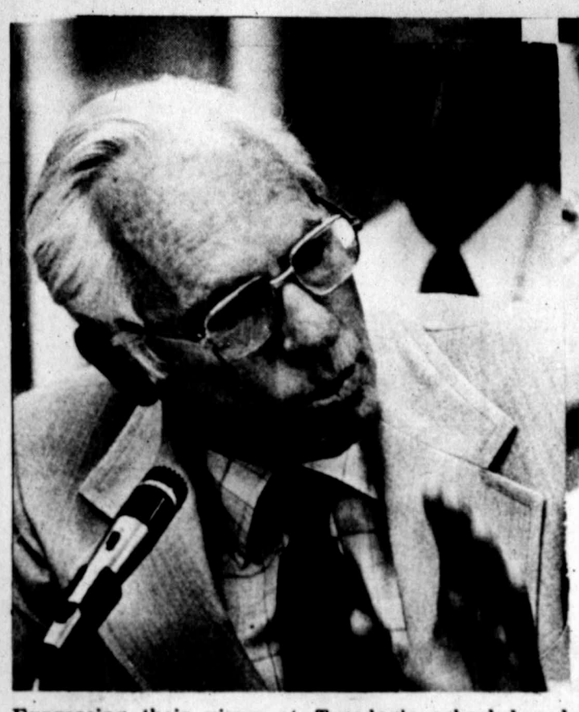

"That's just not proper conduct," trustee Ed Runyan said.

"I think its a shame the Justice Department won't get off their duff and do what they say they're going to do," Sparks said during the meeting.

"It's a real injustice," he concluded, followed by applause from some members of the overflow audience of about 80 persons and from board members.

"There's no reason to get the community stirred up over a plan (by releasing it) that we may not even have to look at," Sparks said in an interview after the meeting. He also speculated that the department may be waiting to see what kind of plan was submitted before making its decision, which, he said, should have

Economic index shows slight gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government index designed to anticipate economic trends registered its eighth consecutive monthly increase in June on the strength of a surge in business spending, the Commerce Department said today.

The department said its composite index of leading indicators advanced three-tenths of a per cent last month, compared with a seven-tenths of a per cent increase in May.

The June increase was the smallest in seven months. The May figure originally had been reported as a 1.4 per cent increase but was scaled down in the latest report.

The over-all signal from the indicator was for continued growth in economic activity, although perhaps at a relatively slower pace in the months ahead.

The index advance was particularly encouraging for economic prospects because most of the upward influence came from a 13.6 per cent jump in the volume of contracts and orders for plant and equipment placed by business.

The economy has been pulled out of the recession so far primarily by consumer spending, but most econoists consider a revival of business spending essential if the recovery is to continue and the economy is to generate additional jobs and higher incomes for Americans.

The business-spending indicator as contained in the 12 individual statistics which make up the index has traced a ragged, up-down pattern since January, and provided most of the downward influence on the index in May, when contracts and orders slipped 3.6 per cent.

But the June increase was the most solid signal yet of increased spending plans by business.

Of the other individual statistics reported four went up, four went down, two were unchanged and one was not available in time for computation.

Midlanders approve of stand

Both a supporter of President Gerald Ford and supporters of Gov. Ronald Reagan this morning said they were pleased with former Texas governor John Connally's announcement Tuesday that he is supporting Ford for the Presidential nomination.

County Judge Barbara Culver expressed pleasure that Connally had made his stand clear.

"I think it was best that he came out and let everyone know his preference," she said.

Judge Culver said she believes the announcement is "tantamount" to an endorsement by Ford for Connally as vice president.

"If this makes him a likely prospect for the vice presidential choice in the event Ford is nominated, certainly I'm glad he became more avialable. I think he would make a good vice presidential nominee," she said.

Judge Culver is a Ronald Reagan delegate to the Republican national convention and State Reagan Committee coordinator.

"It looked like with Ford's geographic background Connally would give a better balance on the Ford ticket (than the Reagan ticket)," Judge Culver said.

Mrs. Linda Allison, chairman of the President Ford Committee for Midland County, said she was pleased

Connally backing seen as boost for Ford's bid

By LOU CANNON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Ford picked up the backing of former Texas Gov. John Connally Tuesday, and other prominent conservatives backed off from their support for presidential challenger Ronald Reagan.

New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, the first public official to endorse Reagan, said the former California governor had "abandoned the conservative cause and scuttled his own political principles" by designating Sen. Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania as his prospective running mate.

In Mississippi a Washington Post survey of 25 of the 60 delegates and alternates, each of whom has a half-vote, showed that 10 had switched from Reagan to uncommitted and 1 from Reagan to Mr. Ford.

In Colorado conservative delegate Jack G. Wilson said he was "dismayed" by Schweiker's selection and switched from Reagan to uncommited. The state's only uncommitted delegate, Rep. William S. Armstrong, said the move could cause him to vote for Mr. Ford.

The reaction was particularly negative in Mississippi, where Mr. Ford and Reagan are battling for 30 delegate votes that have stayed uncommitted despite the best efforts of both sides.

State GOP Chairman Clarke Reed, one of the South's most influential conservatives, said that the Schweiker selection had caused "much consternation" in the Mississippi delegation.

"I'm on record against philosophically split tickets," Reed said. "That's one thing that means more to me than giving away the Panama Canal or Western Europe. It's a travesty on the system. You vote for one thing and get something else."

Reed said that Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter had made an "honorable" choice of his running mate by picking some of a similar persuasion.

"If Reagan had said, 'I want to reoccupy the South," I'd feel less strongly than I do about this," Reed said.

Reed's reaction encouraged White House hopes that the Mississippi delegation will come out for the President this Friday when Mr. Ford flies to Jackson to meet with the delegation.

While Reed remained uncommitted, he said that he believes that Mr. Ford could win the delegation if he announces that he will put Connally on the ticket.

Connally is Reed's personal choice for vice president, and the Texan is considered popular within the Mississippi delegation.

However, in announcing his "unequivocal" support for Mr. Ford, Connally said he did not know who the President's vicepresidential selection will be.

The President and Connally made the announcement of the endorsement at a joint meeting with reporters following a private White House meeting.

Connally, who had until Tuesday resisted entreaties both from Mr. Ford and from Reagan for an endorsement, said he had decided to announce his backing for the President after the Schweiker announcement.

"It is quite clear now that the President is unmistakably the better choice, not only for the party but for the country," Connally said.

In Texas the Reagan co-chairman, Ray Barnhart of Houston, said that the Connally endorsement of Mr. Ford "seemed inevitable" after Reagan's choice of Schweiker ruled out Connally.

Barnhart said his own view of the Schweiker selection was one of "resigned acceptance." He said the selection generally also was being accepted by other Reagan supporters once they got over "the shock" of the selection.

Sources inside the Reagan camp said Tuesday that the "shock wave" among conservatives had been anticipated and that they believed Reagan could ride it out and wind up with more delegates in the Northeast than he otherwise would have had.

Treasury big winner

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock said Tuesday the increase in natural gas prices authorized by the Federal Power Commission could add $66 million to the state surplus projected for Aug. 31, 1977.

The FPC nearly tripled the price that may be charged for natural gas sold interstate.

Bullock said the increase could add $165 million to state revenues in the next biennium, ending Aug. 31, 1979. The last projection on the surplus by Bullock's office was $827 million, but that already has been reduced $103 million because of the Texas Education Agency's underestimation of the needs of the minimum school foundation program for this biennium.

Southwest treasure: the Haley Library

Sam Pendergrast's OESTE

Now I remember why I came to Midland. (Or at least why I'm happy to be here.)

I just visited the J. Evetts Haley History Center and its Nita Stewart Haley Library memorializing the wife who died in 1958.

The whole thing is a perfect jewel, from the Spanish warmth and Oestexan roominess of the building in the 1800 block of West Indiana to the breadth of a fine exhibit of western art on loan from the Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City and the really breath-taking panorama of Southwesterniana spread among the handsome shelves of half a dozen stacks rooms like the answer to the dream of a hungry kid about a candy store with credit.

For anyone with the faintest interest in the art and the fact and the myth and the magic of the West and its days as the frontier, it is a marvel, and Midland area scholars, casual history buffs and plain "browsers" must be deeply indebted for the turn of events that brought the Haley collection here instead of to some corner of the University of Texas library in Austin.

I told enthusiastic young director Don Hedgpeth I may show up any day with my sleeping bag and an armload of notepads; it would take a lifetime or two to review the entire collection.

Major elements are the thousands of books by and about Southwesterners—speckled with names like Charlie Siringo and Andy Adams and Eugene Cunningham—and the volumes on specialized areas such as the Texas Rangers and the Indians, the 600-picture gallery (or, rather, file, since most aren't on display) of the works of Texas photographer-artist-scholar Erwin Smith, and the dozens of works by Haley himself. But there are lesser collections on the military, western art history, and the Latin influences in the Southwest, as well as a group of western reference works.

But Hedgpeth is determined to make the Center a functional en8tity, rather than just a colorful array of book jackets neatly on file behind glass. Scholars will, of course, make great use of the collection that must have been the best private library of its type in its area of concern, but Hedgpeth also envisions active "missionary" outings to bear the word and the supporting artifacts, in many cases, to students hereabouts. An internship program with UTPB is in the offing. And such circulating exhibits as the current marvelous Cowboy Hall art will sweeten the permanent display.

And I'm afraid you haven't heard the last of this stunning cultural-historical resource in OESTE.

Gas producers granted hike

By JAMES L. ROWE Jr.
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Federal Power Commission Tuesday gave natural gas producers a substantial price increase that will allow them to charge nearly three times as much for some of their output.

The commission, which regulates the price of natural gas produced in one state for sale in another, estimated the ruling would raise overall consumer gas bills by $1.5 billion over the next year. That figure would rise steadily as the higher-priced gas replaced lowerpriced gas already flowing in pipelines.

Chicago consumers who heat with gas can expect bills averaging 6.9 per cent more, while in San Francisco gas bills would go up 7.8 per cent.

The commission staff calculated that on a state basis, annual bills would go up about $5.20 in a warm state like Florida to $23.14 in a colder state like Ohio.

The commission, on a 3 to 1 vote, raised the price of gas found after Jan. 1, 1975, from 52 cents to $1.42 per thousand cubic feet. Gas found between Jan. 1, 1973 and Dec. 31, 1974, was boosted from 52 cents to $1.01. Gas that was flowing under contracts signed before Jan. 1, 1973 remains at 29.5 cents per thousand cubic feet.

The gas affected by the price rise accounts for about 12 to 15 per cent of the 12 trillion cubic feet of gas now flowing across state lines.

Even with the raise to $1.42 a thousand cubic feet, the price of so-called interstate gas is lower than gas consumed within the same state in which it is discovered. The FPC said that in the first three months of the year, this so-called intrastate gas was selling for an average of $1.55.

The FPC does not regulate the price of natural gas used in the same state in which it is produced. As a result, gas producers are selling much of the gas they discover in the intrastate market.

The FPC has been raising the price of gas steadily for the past five years to try to get more gas into the federal market, but it said Tuesday its attempts had failed so far.

The higher prices announced Tuesday apply not only to newly discovered gas, but also to gas that once was sold within the state in which it was produced but is "newly dedicated to the interstate market."

Three of the four commissioners voted for the sharply higher prices, including chairman Richard L. Dunham.

In a dissenting opinion Commissioner Don Smith said that the higher prices are "too high." He said that the rate is not justified by higher costs to producers and that non-cost factors — Such as the need to provide incentives to producers to boost exploration for new gas supplies — do not support a higher price either.

Instead, Smith charged, they "indicate that a lower rate level is more appropriate."

A coalition of groups — including Energy Action, a citizens lobby; the Consumer Federation of America and the United Steel Workers — plans to challenge the higher prices in court Wednesday.

'Lightning weed' creeping closer to border

EL PASO, Tex. (AP) — A plant in Mexico that kills cattle so quickly that it has been labeled "lightning weed" is slowly creeping closer to the borders of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, according to a survey being conducted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Research Service.

Since February, Dr. Howard Morton has been studying the little plant known as alfombrilla.

"It's another poisonous plant, no worse than say, locoweed," said Morton, referring to another cattle killer that already haunts ranchers in the Southwest.

"It's just that we don't need another poisonous plant in this country," Morton said. "If I was a rancher along the border, I would familiarize myself with it, what it looks like and how it grows. In other words, I'd be moderately to highly interested in it."

Alfombrilla is a Spanish word meaning "rug." The plant grows quite close to the ground, is fine-stemmed and bushy.. It reproduces from numerous minute seeds — like those of grass — which readily break away and scatter in the wind.

The plant produces white, five-petaled flowers, each petal appearing two-lobed.

Alfombrilla thrives on bare, eroded or overgrazed ranges.

Only 0.4 per cent of alfombrilla eaten in relation to a steer's weight will kill the animal.

The first notice the U.S took of alfombrilla was in 1956 when the plant was then reported at least 40 miles from the border.

Mexican cattle shipped to the U.S. were poisoned after having been kept in an area abundant with the white-flowered plant in central Chihuahua.

By the time the 600 steers arrived by train in Juarez, El Paso's sister city across the border, more than 100 were dead and many others were trembling with muscular spasms and convulsions.

A 1960 survey showed the plant had advanced to about seven miles south of the international port of entry in Antelope Wells, N.M., in addition to being found in an area of the Mexican state of Sonora, 20 to 25 miles south of the Arizona border.

A report the following year said that alfombrilla "now infests about 750,000 acres in Chihuahua. It has killed 3,000 to 4,000 cattle there."

In addition the article placed the plant's advancement to within three miles of Antelope Wells.

To date, no findings of alfombrilla have been pinpointed in the United States. Sightings have been reported, but no one has been able to retrace his steps to what appeared to have been the plant.

Morton and other Agriculture Department scientists, working in association with the University of Arizona, have begun a research program in cooperation with the La Campana Research Station just north of Chihuahua City, Mexico, to study the ecology and control of the plant.

"The only solution now is the one the Mexicans are using of avoiding grazing in the pastures with abundant growth of the vegetation, especially during late summer and fall," Morton said.

"Normally cattle don't graze on it, except apparently in the fall. After the plant matures it becomes sticky and cattle do seem to graze it then fairly regularly," he added.

The Southwest New Mexico Resource, Conservation and Development Project (SWNRC&D), under the U.S. Department of Agriculture, has been concerned about the harmful potential the plant could have in southern New Mexico.

The organizations's concern was stimulated by a letter received in the spring of 1973 from Mexican ranch owner Francisco Ramonel warning "the deadly poisonous plant alfombrilla...has now moved to the northern boundary of my ranch which is also the international boundary of the neighorboring states of Chihuahua and New Mexico."

At that time, few New Mexican ranchers knew of the plant.

"It was new to many ranchers," said Bob Ambercrombie who, as project coordinator for the SWNMRC&D, has spent hours collecting data on alfombrilla and helping cattlemen near the border identify the plant.

Prior to alerting the SWNMRC&D, Ramonet had futiley sprayed chemicals and diesel fuel on some 3,000 acres of his infested ranchland, which, although killing the plant failed to harm the hearty seed.

The best solutions to the alfombrilla problem, according to studies, are good range management resulting in proper forage and fencing off infested areas from grazing livestock.

Research has shown some success with spraying the flowering plant with a one per cent solution of silvex in water, but because of the impossibility of determining how many years the seeds have been dormant in the soil, applications for two or three years are needed before any decrease in plant population can be noticed.

Hays appears at party

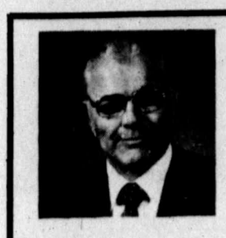

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Rep. Wayne Hays (D-Ohio) and his wife Pat made one of their first party appearances in recent weeks at a State Department reception Monday night honoring former Under secretary of State Joseph Sisco.

Hays was one of about 400 guests on a list prepared largely by Sisco, who is now president of American University here. Hays received a prodigal's welcome from Vice President Nelson Rockefeller and the reception host, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

It was one of Hays' first social outings since he became embroiled in the Elizabeth Ray sex scandal that cost him the chairmanship of the House Administration Committee and ended in a stay in an Ohio hospital for a drug overdose.

Monday night's reception was a triumph for Hays. He looked good and was agreeable when photographers asked him to pose for pictures with his wife.

"THINKING" with ODOM

PHILIPPIANS 4:8

Do you believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God? There is no real need to become verbose in the answer. A simple "yes" or "no" will suffice. In order for a person to enjoy fellowship with God here and hereafter, he must be willing to make such a confession of faith. (Ro.10:10) However, if we believe this fact and give lip service to it, not withstanding we ignore the commands of Christ, such a noble confession is superfluous.

"Thou believest there is one God; thou doest well: the demons also believe, and tremble." (Js. 2:19) If our faith is no more than an acknowledgement that we do believe in Christ we have no more than the devil has. He too believes this fact. How foolish then for men to speak of salvation in such ambiguous terms as to leave the impression that one is saved "at the point" of such belief in Christ.

Are you aware, my friend, that most religious bodies teach exactly that? They teach the doctrine of "faith only," even though they deny that they do because of the scriptures which teach to the contrary.

In order to teach that one is saved the moment they believe in Jesus, one will have to completely ignore the many many passages which teach that obedience to Christ is necessary. For example, Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Mt. 7:21; see also verses 22-27) How can one read these passages and be impressed with the false notion that one is saved "at the point of faith?"

Neighbour friend, we of the church of Christ believe and teach that all men must recognize the authority of Jesus Christ as revealed in the New Testament. We also believe and teach that though men might have a belief in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, they cannot, and will not be saved from sin here, and certainly not in the world to come, unless they are willing to rendor obedience to God's divine law. The apostle Peter declared, "Seeing that ye have purified your souls in obedience to the truth." (1 Pe. 1:22)

You have an invitation to meet with God's people at the Cuthbert and Austin Streets church of Christ tonight. You will be an honored guest.

Shark found in creek

DALLAS (AP) — For the second time this month, a sand shark has been found in a fresh water creek in North Central Texas about 300 miles from the Gulf of Mexico.

Three teen-agers found a dead three-footer Sunday night in North Dallas' Joe's Creek.

Earlier, two youths angling for catfish in an Arlington creek hooked a 3½-foot sand shark and landed it.

Many have speculated that sharks are being dumped by pranksters into area creeks.

"It does sound fishy doesn't it," said Jeff M:W. Moore, superintendent of the Dallas Aquarium. He immediately apologized for the pun.

Heavy thunderstorms hit Midwest, South

By The Associated Press

Thunderstorms growled across the Midwest and South today after unloading an assortment of heavy rain, high winds and hail from Minnesota to Mississippi.

Local flooding developed in Atlanta late Tuesday following heavy downpours. Soakings of an inch or more were scattered from Florida to Iowa.

A severe thunderstorm laced with golfball-size hail and damaging winds hit Russelville, Ala.. Tuesday afternoon. A tornado touched down in Northwest Minnesota near Oslo during the night but there no reports of damage or injury.

Severe thunderstorms raked North Dakota earlier Tuesday, kicking up wind gusts to 65 miles per hour at Hettinger in the state's southwest area.

Other thunderstorms ranged from New England down the Atlantic Coast, and still others were widely scattered in the Southwest through the Great Basin and California.

Skies remained generally clear over most of the Southern Plains into western parts of the lower Mississippi Valley and the Northwest.

Temperatures early today varied from 45 in Lewistown, Mont., to 95 in Needles, Calif.

Oil imports create deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oil imports surged about 34 per cent in June to meet growing American demands and pushed the U.S. foreign trade balance back into deficit after one month surplus, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said imports exceeded exports by $377.3 million in June, compared with a $395.6-million surplus of exports over imports during May.

For the first half of the year, the trade deficit now stands at $1.05 billion. At this time a year ago, trade accounts were in surplus by $5.05-billion on the way to a record $11-billion surplus for the year.

Since the 1975 surplus was registered, the economic recovery has stimulated industry and consumer demand for fuel and for imported automobiles, television sets and other consumer products.

Imports increased by 9.9 per cent in June to a record level of $10.09 billion. Exports, meanwhile, rose 1.4 per cent to $9.7 billion.

The continuing rise in exports — the fourth straight monthly climb to a record in June — has been the factor which prompted most trade analysts to say that the shift into defict in the trade accounts appears to be a healthy thing for the U.S. economy now.

The deficits help our trading partners pull out of their recessions and thus build the foundation for future demand for American products overseas. And the imported products provide competition for American goods and help hold prices down.

Nuclear material lost

By TOM ZITO
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Tens of tons of nuclear material, much of it refined to weapons grade, cannot be accounted for by the 34 uranium and plutonium processing plants in the country, according to a House subcommittee staff summary of a classified General Accounting Office report.

The summary prepared by the staff of the House Small Business Subcommittee on Energy and Environment says the GAO report "seriously questions" whether the accountability procedures of the Energy Research and Development Administration "can give ERDA reliable indications of whether bomb quantities of special nuclear materials have been lost or stolen."

Only 8 of the 34 processing facilities audited by the GAO refine significant quantities of non-weapons grade material, according to the report. The other 26 largely produce highly enriched uranium and plutonium.

James Liverman, ERDA's assistant administrator of Environment and Safety, called the GAO report "inaccurate."

"I am convinced that there is no nuclear material outside the processing system that we aren't totally aware of," Liverman said. "You have to understand that there may be 60 miles of piping in a (uranium processing) plant, and there could be a lot of material stuck in those pipes."

According to the report, it takes 37 pounds of enriched uranium or 13 pounds of plutonium to make an atomic weapon with the explosive force of 20,000 tons of TNT.

According to the staff summary, the GAO report says there is no way to accurately measure the quantities of special nuclear materials retained in the processing equipment.

"The accountability system may identify a problem area, but does not necessarily isolate its cause. A complete assessment to identify the problem may require a time consuming and costly analysis. It can take days, weeks and even months to resolve," the report states, even though in such situations "hours and even minutes are critical."

According to the staff summary, the report lists numerous examples of security deficiencies, and concludes that "ERDA's contractor physical security systems are inadequate."

The report points out that after ERDA officials were shown a draft of the study about two months ago "ERDA corrected all the deficiencies in physical security cited in this report."

The ERDA investigation was ordered by chairman John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) on Dec. 31, 1974, after his subcommittee began studying the energy data requirements of the federal government. The report was delivered to the committee last Friday and the staff summarized it.

Air Force reports two speed records

MARYSVILLE, Calif. (AP) — The U.S. Air Force has set two world speed records and a world altitude record for horizontal flight at about three times the speed of sound.

One of the broken records was held by a Russian plane and the two others by American planes.

The two Lockheed long-nosed SR71 strategic reconnaissance jets used in the record flights on Tuesday also set speed and altitude records for aircraft of their class — twin-jet and landbased — as they covered sparsely populated areas of four western states.

On one run, a sonic boom rattled dishes in Los Vegas, Nev.

Takeoffs and landings were at Beale Air Forc Base in Northern California, but the speed and altitude measurements were made from Edwards Air Force Base in southern California.

The National Aeronautic Association verified the measurements. But the records will remain unofficial until accredited by the Paris-based Federation Aeronautique Internationale (FAI).

The first record was 2,086-miles per hour over a 1,000-kilometer or 621-mile course with several turns over California, Nevada and Arizona. The pilot was Maj. Adolphus H. (Pat) Bledsoe Jr. of Fordyce, Ark. and the copilot was Maj. John T. Fuller of Buffalo, N.Y.

The previous record was set in October 1967 by a Soviet MIG25 Foxbat at 1,853 m.p.h.

The Air Force said Mach III, or three times the speed of sound, is about 2,000 m.p.h. at altitudes over 80,000 feet. That would be 3,100 feet per second, or faster than the 3,000-foot per-second muzzle velocity of a 30.06-caliber rifle bullet.

The second record, for a single straight-line flight over a straight course of 15 to 25 kilometers, was 2,189 m.p.h. by Capt. Eldon W. "Al" Joersz of New Salem, N.D., and Maj. George T. Morgan of Brooklyn, N.Y.

That flight produced the sonic boom in Las Vegas. The plane circled over California, Nevada, Utah and Arizona. The fixed course was directly above Edwards Air Force Base.

The previous record was set in May 1965 at 2,070 m.p.h. by a prototype sister ship of the SR71, the YF12A.

The altitude record was set at 86,000 feet by Capt. Robert C. Helt of Columbus, Ind., and Maj. Larry A. Elliott of Pittsburgh, Pa. Their craft held the altitude over Edwards Air Force Base while flying at more than 2,000 m.p.h.

An Air Force spokesman said that at such an altitude, the plane would stall if it couldn't maintain at least that speed.

The previous record was 80,257 feet, also established in May 1965 by the same YF12A.

Accident limits spying ability

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mysterious disintegration of an advanced Soviet reconnaissance satellite Sunday has temporarily limited Russia's ability to spy on the United States with cameras from space, U.S. intelligence sources say.

The Russians apparently are filling the intelligence gap for the time being with photo information from the two-man Soviet Salyut satellite, which the Soviet Union claims is a scientific research space vehicle, according to U.S. experts.

The destruction of the Russian Cosmos 844 came four days after the Russians reportedly sustained their enemy satellites in space.

Officials who monitor Soviet military space activity say that Cosmos 844 broke up three days after it was sent aloft into orbit from central Russia.

Cosmos 844 is a new type of reconnaissance satellite which U.S. intelligence specialists say is designed to remain in orbit at least 20 days, nearly twice as long as older-model Soviet spy vehicles.

The specialists reached this conclusion after studying several previous flights of the new type of third successive failure this year in testing a system for destroying satellite.

However, U.S. experts say they are convinced the Salyut space station is carrying out a military mission with its cameras. They declined to discuss how they know this.

Texans' reactions to Connally stand differ

Many Texans view former Texas Gov. John Connally's endorsement of President Ford for the Republican presidential nomination next month as an indication that Connally will be Ford's running mate.

But other Lone Star State residents, especially backers of Ronald Reagan, say Connally's announced support of Ford comes too late to change what might happen in Kansas City at the GOP convention.

Dallas County Republican Chairman William McKenzie said he thinks the Republican ticket will be Connally and Ford.

"It's a ticket that will appeal to independents and Democrats as well Republicans," McKenzie said.

But John Leedmon of Dallas, a Reagan delegate, said, "Gov. Connally is a day late and a dollar short in making up his mind about which way he would like to see the election go."

Leedmon said he thought Connally's move would have little effect on the 100 Texas national convention delegates who are bound by state law to stick with Reagan through at least two ballots at the convention.

A spokesman at Connally's Picosa Ranch near Floresville in South Texas said Connally was expected back at the ranch late Tuesday night.

Earlier Tuesday Connally, who just last week emphasized he would not announce support of either Ford or Reagan until the convention, stood by Ford's side at a White House driveway to announce his "unequivocal" support of Ford.

Connally took this step after Reagan announced Monday his selection of Sen. Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania for his ticket if he is nominated.

Reagan's choice of the more liberal Schweiker and Connally's backing of Ford caused some political observers to wonder if the Texas delegation would waver in its support of Reagan.

In Dallas, Ray Hutchison, state GOP chairman, said, "I think the Texas delegation will abide by the law.

"I'm not attempting to say Texas delegates don't endorse the Reagan-Schweiker ticket, but I have a hunch most do not. Gov. Reagan's supporters are deeply committed to him and I don't know if they will waver."

R. Miller Hicks of Austin, a prominent Reagan supporter and fund raiser as well as convention delegate, said he feels the Texas delegation will "stand solid" behind Reagan as pledged. "There has been no talk whatever of trying to avoid the state law. . . . I think you will find very little flaking of Reagan people anywhere, certainly not in Texas."

Van Archer of San Antonio, chairman of the Bexar County convention delegation, said, "Personally, I believe . . . that Connally already has been asked to be Ford's vice president."

Archer said the Connally endorsement "won't have any effect on anybody from Texas because we're committed for two ballots for Reagan.

New quake hits Northeast China

TOKYO (AP) — A strong new earth tremor jolted northeastern China today after the world's most powerful quake in 12 years struck the region before dawn, causing heavy damage and probably many casualties in the coastal metropolis of Tientsin.

The Italian news agency ANSA said the new tremor was felt in the Chinese capital of Peking at 6:50 p.m. (6:50 a.m. EDT) and sent residents into the streets for safety. There was no immediate word of casualties or damage.

The U.S. Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo., recorded the magnitude of the aftershock at 7.9 on the Richter scale.

Midlanders approve

to see Connally endorse the President.

"I wish the endorsement had come earlier, but it still should assist Mr. Ford in gaining the nomination on the first ballot. Governor Reagan's selection of an anti-business running mate certainly will not help him with most of the delegates attending the Republican National Convention'" she said.

Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo said the announcement came as "no surprise whatever. I felt it was coming anyway."

He said he does not believe the announcement will help the President at the convention, but said, "A Ford-Connally ticket would probably be as strong a ticket as Ford could come up with."

Angelo was recently elected national committeeman from Texas for the Republican party. He is a Reagan delegate.

Midlanders take honors

Three Midlanders placed in the 4-H Club statewide Horse Show last Thursday through Saturday in Amarillo.

Dana Milner took reserve champion gelding honors and third place in showmanship.

Cindy Triplitt placed fifth in Western horsemanship and Martha Ann March was eighth in halter for aged mares.

Other Midland participants in the state competition were Chris Johnson and Penny Wood.

Proposed program discussed

The drug abuse and alcoholism advisory committees of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission met with three state officials Tuesday in efforts to determine the feasibility of an overall program combining alcoholism and drug abuse prevention.

John MacDonald of the Texas Commission on Alcoholism, TCA vice chairman Bill Masterson and Jim Riley, drug abuse prevention division of the Texas Department of Community Affairs, met with the two PBRPC committees. They said the Permian Basin is one of two Texas regions chosen to participate in a joint demonstration project like this.

The needs of such a joint project include the necessity of multiple target groups, a consistency in the message itself, a carefully planned program, the presentation of a positive message and a variety of methods of presenting the message.

The two groups agreed they would study the proposal of a combination program in alcoholism and drug abuse prevention, refer their findings to the PBRPC staff for further study, and have the staff present its recommendations to the PBRPC board of directors for final action.

No deadline has been set on the project's implementation.

Odessa mayor tries to oust city manager

ODESSA — The Odessa City Council Tuesday met in executive session Tuesday for five hours to discuss what Mayor Dan Hemphill called a personnel matter.

Speculation on the personnel matter centered on trying to remove City Manager Ron Neighbors from his top city official job.

After the council recovened in open session, Hemphill apologized to those who had waited to appear before the council on other matters.

During the lengthy executive session, several Odessa firemen were called in one at a time to speak with the councilmen, but Fire Chief Bill Childress said he did not know why the men were summoned to appear.

The men reportedly Were summoned by city attorney Larry Sinclair, who said the list of eight names was furnished to him by Hemphill. Other city employes were also questioned.

At the time of the meeting, an anonymous printed circular alluding to activities concerning Neighbors in "June, July or August 1971" was circulated around city hall.

When shown a copy of the allegations, Neighbors had an explanation for each of the accusations that he used city employes or city materials for his own use.

In response to an item claiming that Neighbors had former Fireman C.D. Williams build a motorcycle trailer for Neighbors at a fire station, Neighbors said he bought the parts himself and assumed Williams worked on his own time.

The circular also said Ed Camble instructed Don Hestand to buy a stereo for Neighbors' personal car, but Neighbors said the stereo was purchased for a city car that he used at that time and that it was still in that car.

Trustees to appeal if J-1 implemented nothing to do with the decision.

The five-school plan, called J-1, involves the creation of junior high annexes. The plan would include the sixth grade in junior high attendance zones and move all sixth grades within each attendance zone to one elementary school.

Some lower grades now assigned to the schools which would become annexes would be moved to other elementary schools. Otherwise, grades kindergarten through five would remain unaffected.

The other two plans submitted, called C-1 and C-2 would, when combined, involve Washington and De Zavala. In its statement to the court which accompanied the plans, the board said these plans would provide "lasting, meaningful and workable" desegregation of the two schools.

Plan C-1 would cluster the fifth and sixth grades of South, Travis and Washington on the Bunche campus, which now serves as the Travis annex. Grades kindergarten through four would be unaffected.

Plan C-2 would send half of the fifth and and half of the sixth grade of De Zavala to Bowie and half to Houston. Kindergarten through four would be unaffected.

Trustees agreed that the district would appeal an order implementing the J-1 plan and any major alteration of the C-1 and C-2 plans.

But trustee James Ramsoure said he would be willing to negotiate with the Justice Department before an appeal and would be willing to include the fourth grade in the C-1 and C-2 plans.

"I would not be in favor of going below the fourth grade," said.

Trustee Johnny Warren said he would to appeal any change in C-1 or C-2 or an order to implenent J-1. He said the plans "are t best we could come up with and they're horrible."

When board member Ed Runyan was asked if he would vote to alter the plans rather than appeal, he said, "I don't think the newspaper is the place to discuss your negotiations."

Ramsoure said he believes plans C-1 and C-2 do not put the burden of desegregation on the minority communities.

"No area is being penalized," he said. Ramoure said the black community has opposed busing because "In the past, they have had to bear the burden," Ramsoure said.

In outlining the plans, Joe Dominey emphasized the court will decide which plans should be implemented, although the district will request an opportunity to present testimony in defense of its position.

"I pray that they will" go along with the C-1 and C-2 plans, Dominey said.

Board members told those in attendance at the meeting they would prefer to take no action at all, but were required to submit plans to comply with the law.

"We've done so much more with our community than 99 per cent of the rest of the country in the secondary schools," trustee Johnny Warren said, he believes there is a chance the court will accept C-1 and C-2.

Warren said the district now provides "integration at your choice" through its transfer policy allowing students to transfer from schools in which they are in a majority to schools in which they are in a minority ethnic group.

Hardie urged citizens who "are in accord with us" in wanting to maintain neighborhood schools to "in a forceful way let the judge know."

After the meeting, Hardie said citizens could communicate by telephone, letter or personal visit to him or schools superintendent Dr. James H. Mailey or they may communicate directly with U.S. District Judge D. W. Suttle of the District for the Western District of Texas.

"I would think that if they are in favor of our case we would be glad to present them as possible witnesses (at a hearing). If they are opposed, we would refer them to the other attorneys' " Hardie said.

"One of the requirements is that it must be a workable plan and to be workable, in my judgement, it must be acceptable to the people affected," Hardie said, explaining how citizen input might help the district's case.

Warren also called for community support.

One of those present at the meeting did not support the district's position. Tom Rideout Sr. of 29 Perrie Lane told the board he favors plan J-1.

The district should "take the bull by the horns" and solve the problems of segregation so it can "get on with the job" of education, Rideout said. His remarks sparked applause from part of the audience.

Another citizen wondered why the district couldn't leave things as they are. The Rev. Johnny A. Mitchell, pastor of Antioch Baptist Church, urged the maintenance of neighborhood schools. "The government is going to listen to us if we all get together," Mitchell said.

In response to a woman who asked, "Why do you always have to bus from Washington (instead of to Washington)?" Dominey said "We don't want to bus anybody."

But Dominey did agree, in response to another question, that the plans for Washington and De Zavala involve "one-way busing."

Reaction to the plan for De Zavala came after the meeting from the Rev. Ron Marlow of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

"I'm very upset with the plans simply because I don't feel that they are just. I see them to be busing only one way. I don't feel that that's a just implementation of the court's decision to have our schools integrated," he said.

He said the plan for Washington "makes a little more sense" than the plan for Guadalupe because in the Washington plan they are bringing the fifth and sixth grader from three schools together into one place.

"I'm very happy that they're going to keep the school (De Zavala) open. The neighborhood school is very important to our community and our country. It's just the busing one way that I see as the unjust part of the plan. I don't feel that the district court is going to accept that," Father Marlow said.

Dr. Viola Coleman, a Negro physician who was spokesman for a group which appealed a 1971 school board plan which involved closing Washington, said this morning Washington's remaining open is an acceptable aspect of the C-1 plan.

She said she will talk to the rest of the group after members have had a chance to study the plan and after it has been determined how many schools are involved.

The J-1 plan and the C-1 and C-2 plans involve "two different concepts" and cannot be compared, she said.

"This is so much to digest on such short notice," she told the board Tuesday. This morning she said she will take time to study the plans before determining her course of action.

Susan Edwards, executive director of the Human Relations Council this morning urged citizens to "acquaint themselves thoroughly with the board's proposals so that any agreement with or opposition to the proposals is based on full knowledge" of the proposals.

"The Human Relations staff and board will keep informed and will attempt to disseminate accurate information within the community regarding the proposals, the court's ultimate decision for desegregation and the community's mood about these decisions," Mrs. Edwards said.

Under the junior high annex plan, J-1, Bonham would become the Alamo annex, Emerson the Goddard annex and Houston the San Jacinto annex.

Students assigned to grades one through five at Bonham would be reassigned to Jones and Long.

Pupils in grades three through five in the Houston attendance area would be reassigned to Lamar West and Bowie.

Grades three through five at Emerson would be reassigned to Rusk and Fannin.

Weather returning to normal

The rains seem to have gone and July's weatr is returning to normal with Warm dry days and mild nights. Residents of the Permian Basin can expect more of the same weather with partly cloudy skies, and no important temperature changes through Thursday, the National Weather Service said.

Midland, Odessa, Andrews, Lamesa and Crane reported clear skies, calm to slight winds and warm temperatures this morning.

Rankin, Rig Lake and Garden city also reported clear skies, warm temperatures and calm winds.

The forecast for the Permian Basin calls for partly cloudy skies with no important temperature changes through Thursday. Low tonight will be in the upper 60s with the high Thursday in the low 90s. Winds will be southerly at 5 to 10 mph tonight.

Temperatures near dawn ranged from 80 degrees at Galveston on the coast down to 63 at El Paso in far West Texas. Wichita Falls was the hottest spot in the state again Tuesday with a high of 99.

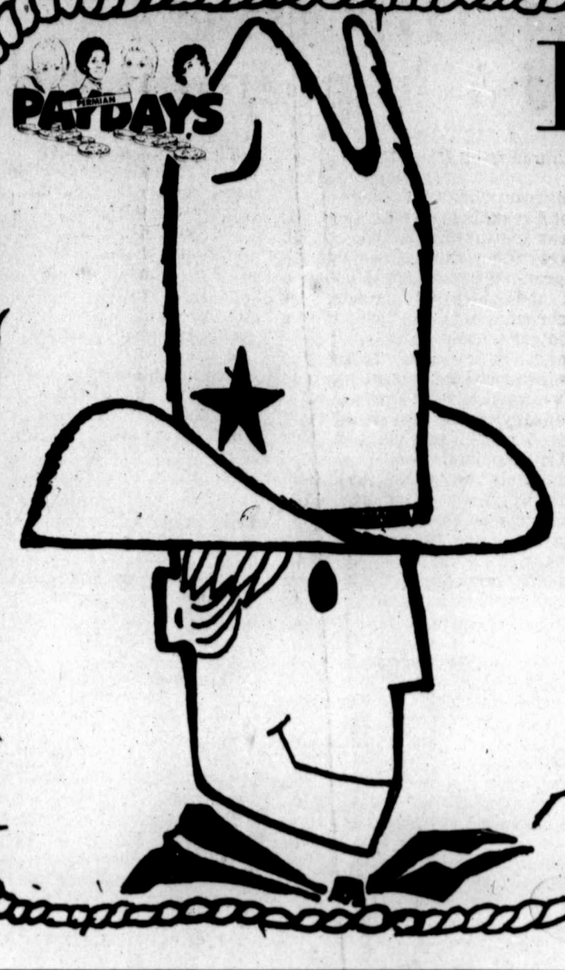

Ervin backs death penalty

ATLANTA (AP) — Former Sen. Sam Ervin says he agrees with the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling upholding the death penalty laws of several states.

At a news conference Tuesday, Ervin also said President Ford's pardon of former President Nixon will be a definite factor in this year's presidential race.

The retired North Carolina lawmaker, who in 1973 was chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said only capital punishment can deter some criminals and should be kept "for crimes so atrocious that the community will take punishment into its own hands if the law doesn't."

Ervin was here to speak to the Association of Trial lawyers of America.

Courts become more active in political cases

By ROBERT G. KAISER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON -- "The courts truly have changed their role in American life," according to Nathan Glazer, a conservative critic of judicial activism.

Traditional notions about the role of the courts are "clearly invalid," wrote Prof. Abram Chayes of Harvard, an outspoken advocate of judicial activism.

Left and right, activist and strict constructionist, all the disputants in the sharpening debate over judicial activism agree that a profound change has occured in America's political life, and the courts have been a central element in the change.

Opponents in the debate even agree on the nature of the change. The courts, both sides say, now find constitutional rights where formerly none were seen to exist, now perform legislative and administrative functions that they once left to government officials and elected legislators, now accept new kinds of lawsuits they formerly shunned.

THOUGH THE DEBATE is often conducted in baffling legal terminology, the issue under consideration is probably of greater import than most laymen have realized. For it is true that something fundamental has changed in the way American society is ordered and administered.

Chayes has made one of the first comprehensive attempts to explain what has happened in an article that is to appear in the next issue of the Harvard Law Review.

Chayes' explanation is admittedly sympathetic to the rise of an activist federal judiciary. He argues that the United States now has a new kind of government -- "the regulatory state," he calls it -- which requires activist judges.

Chayes realizes that his defense of judicial activism will be perceived by many colleagues as radical. "If you say openly that judges are doing political things -- deciding issues on the basis of essentially political factors -- that makes all of us terribly uncomfortable," he said in a recent interview. By "us" he meant lawyers and legal scholars.

But Chayes said he believes that judges now do make political decisions, and that this is -- or can be -- a good thing.

IN HIS LAW REVIEW ARTICLE, he argues that the traditional model of a lawsuit is outdated. From the English common law and early U.S. history, Americans inherited the idea that a lawsuit is a neat package, a dispute between two parties about something that happened in the past in which one party claims a wrong at the hands of the other and asks for some logical remedy to right it.

In fact, Chayes argues, a new genre of lawsuit has evolved -- he calls it "public law litigation" -- that does not fit that traditional model. Instead of a dispute between two identifiable parties, a lawsuit may involve many different parties, some of them vaguely defined. For example, in the Boston school desegregation case there are seven parties to the basic litigation, some as amorphous as Boston's black school children or its teachers -- imprecisely defined "classes" whom the judge has admitted to the suit.

The new type of suit may be brought to challenge the legality of a government policy or the constitutionality of a scheme of legislative apportionment. Such cases do not concern specific past events, but situations or conditions.

Faced with disputes of this kind, judges cannot simply hear the arguments of the two sides, seek the facts involved and render a judgment righting a wrong or denying one's existence.

Instead they must decide who the affected parties of the action are, seek to gather expert testimony on the dispute, fix guilt or innocence, and -- if it is guilt -- decide how best to right the wrong that has been done.

THE RELIEF judges grant in cases of this kind can take on the attributes of legislation. In Boston, for example, District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. first found that school authorities were responsible for segregating the schools; then he assembled advice on what to do about it; finally he produced -- with the help of amateur and expert "masters" -- plans for desegregating the schools.

Relief, in other words, is not a simple "compensation for past wrong" that is "confined in its impact to the immediate parties," but rather is "forward-looking (and) fashioned ... on broadly remedial lines," in Chayes' words. The relief a court grants may affect many citizens not directly represented in the lawsuit -- the white school children of Boston, for example.

The new kind of lawsuit is now common. It seems to be the product of several historical developments:

--The decisions of the Supreme Court, particularly the Warren Court, which held that citizens have a range of constitutional rights that had never before been recognized. Most important of these are the rights of minority groups to affirmative government action to protect their guarantee of equal treatment under the 14th Amendment. Modern judicial activism on constitutional issues began with the Brown decision, which held that segregated schools are unconstitutional.

Since then judges have held that the patients of state mental hospitals have a constitutional right to treatment, that prisoners can challenge the conditions of their incarceration on constitutional grounds, and have otherwise expanded the notion that government action must be guided by affirmative obligations inherent in the Constitution.

--The growth of government regulation. One of the first great pieces of regulatory legislation, the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890, put judges in the then-unique position of presiding over the affairs of some private companies.

EVERY NEW REGULATORY law since has added cases to the dockets of the federal courts. Today government regulations play a role in most aspects of the country's life, and thus provide countless opportunities for what Chayes would call "public law litigation." The many suits brought by the Natural Resources Defense Council, an environmental group, are examples.

--The ongoing growth of increasingly militant interest groups in American society and their willingness to fight the courts to achieve the goals they fail to win in the political arena.

Last of a series

The Brown case, arguably, established this pattern. Years before Brown, NAACP lawyers began an assault in the courts on officially sanctioned segregation. The vindication won in 1954 spurred on America's black community to keep up the fight, both in court and in politics. Blacks won more victories in both arenas.

It is probably no surprise that other groups that felt mistreated by the political process decided -- in part because of Negro victories in the courts -- to try that route themselves.

Concurrently with these developments, the Supreme Court has -- at least until recently -- steadily broadened the procedural rules governing suits in the federal courts, making it easier to bring the kind of lawsuits most likely to provoke judicial activism.

IN A RECENT lecture, Professor Archibald Cox of Harvard, a former Watergate special prosecutor, outlined the major procedural changes which, in his view, have altered the nature of federal adjudication during the last generation.

Cox noted the relaxed legal standards as to who can bring a suit, who can challenge the constitutionality of laws or government policies and who can be recognized as the spokesman for a group ("class" in legal terminology) that shares a common grievance deserving of judicial correction. In these and other legal categories, the courts have welcomed ever more various lawsuits.

Lawyers now see a trend in the opposite direction in recent decisions handed down by the Burger court, which has begun to restrict the concept of "standing," apparently making it more difficult to bring some kinds of public law litigation. Chayes recognizes this, but feels it is unlikely that the Burger court can radically reduce the activism of the judiciary, given the factors that led to it.

Moreover, as many scholars have noticed, the Burger court has shown a healthy appetite for activism in certain circumstances. Legal scholars of all persuasions seem to agree that the court's decision on abortion, specifying when during the term of pregnancy the right to have an abortion is protected by the Constitution, is one of the most dramatic examples of judicial activism in American history.

Some critics of the Burger court have argued that its justices will not shy away from activism when, in Cox' words, "an existing rule offends their policy preferences."

IN HIS DEFENSE of judicial activism, Chayes argues that it is both an inevitable consequence of political and legal developments and that activism is probably a good thing. He says that courts provide a useful tool in a complicated, regulated society for resolving disputes between citizens and government or among groups of citizens. Courts are flexible, nonbureaucratic, issue-oriented, and they must produce a result -- unlike a government agency or regulatory commission, which can sit on a problem.

Chayes also likes the idea that a court-handled public dispute is presided over by a judge: "His professional tradition insulates him from narrow political pressures, but ... he is likely to have some experience of the political process and acquaintance with a fairly broad range of public policy questions." Moreover, Chayes says, judges are trained in "reflective and dispassionate analysis."

Not every lawyer agrees with Chayes about this.

Before he became a justice of the Supreme Court, Robert H. Jackson wrote that "government by lawsuit leads to a final decision guided by learning and limited by the understanding of a single profession -- the law." Jackson thought that a bad thing.

THE STERNEST CRITICS of judicial activism express their displeasure that the courts are meddling in subjects that the Founding Fathers so manifestly meant to be dealt with by the other branches. Glazer, for example, feels some problems of modern society are still beyond solution, and urges courts to stop trying to solve the insoluble.

Philip B. Kurland of the University of Chicago Law School, one of the most articulate critics of judicial activism, has written: "Essentially the problem is that we have become a society overburdened by laws, whether they be statutes, or executive orders, or regulations, or guidelines, or judicial decrees."

The problem with sweeping criticisms such as these is that it is hard to see how any court or government could adopt them. Kurland would like fewer laws, but how is that to be achieved? What would he repeal? Will the victims of the social problems Glazer finds insoluble take his word for their hopelessness? Not likely.

Judge Miles W. Lord, a famous activist who sits in the U.S. District Court in Minneapolis, said in a recent interview: "The government is getting more complex, the economy is getting more complex and the interplay between various segments of society is more complex. Old wounds are becoming more exacerbated. The problems are so broad and general and yet they narrow themselves into such specifics that the Congress absolutely cannot legislate on each factual situation."

Chayes makes a similar point: "The growth of judicial power has been, in large part, a function of the failure of other agencies to respond to demands that have been able to mobilize considerable political resources and energy."

If, as Chayes and others argue, judicial activism will remain with us for the indefinite future, that does not mean every example of it will satisfy even those who tend to applaud activism in general.

COX HAS ALLEGED that Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr.'s attempt to improve treatment in Alabama's state mental institutions "may have done more harm than good. Alabama did little more than release 3,000 of the 6,000 patients in order to conform to his orders." (The judge's defenders say the 3,000 released patients are probably better off.)

In Boston, many politicians and educators doubt that Garrity's desegregation order has had a positive effect on the education of young Bostonians. Moreover, as Professor Lance M. Liebman of Harvard noted in an interview, Garrity's decision has imposed sweeping changes in school policy affecting many citizens who had nothing to do with segregating Boston's schools.

For example, Liebman noted, Garrity ended the policy of admitting students to the elite Boston Latin School by competitive examination in an effort to raise the number of blacks at Boston Latin. Should youngsters who have therefore lost a chance for a Boston Latin education be punished in this way? Liebman asked.

Others wonder if judges will sacrifice some of their moral and political authority by making too many and too sweeping activist decisions. Cox worries that the short-term benefits of activist court decisions may be outweighed by a long-term erosion of judicial authority.

These relatively modest qualms and the sweeping criticisms of more conservative critics fall short of a precise prescription for improving the situation. Surely those judges who have allowed personal feelings or character traits to distort their findings or decrees can be told to be more careful, though it would be difficult to guarantee that they would heed such advice. But there seems no easy way to relegate the courts to a weaker, more passive place in American society.

FORMER BEATLE John Lennon enters Immigration Court district office in New York City after he was granted permanent resident status Tuesday. The action by the Immigration and Naturalization Service will allow him to apply for U. S. citizenship in five years. The decision follows years of legal wrangling by the 35-year-old Lennon, who entered the U.S. in 1971 and has been battling to stay here since.

Hereford home to Cowgirl Hall of Fame

By MIKE COCHRAN

HEREFORD, Tex. (AP) — Despite its name, this is a cowtown that isn't.

That's not to say the registered Hereford is less than kingly in Deaf Smith County. Truly a noble beast, it is the overriding reason for Hereford's nickname: "Beef Headquarters, U.S.A."

But city fathers did not want to limit Hereford's image to a prize beefsteak. After all the county is named for a partially deaf scout, guide and Indian fighter who, one is led to believe, almost singlehandedly won Texas its independence.

Thanks in no small part to a salty rascal named Rat Jowell, Hereford also is identified as the "High Plains Salad Bowl."

Rat dug a test well in 1905 and proved, it is said, that "oceans of water" lie beneath the surface. Five years later it was demonstrated that largescale crop irrigation was possible and profitable.

Now, 400,000 acres, including much of the once famous XIT ranchland, are under irrigation, producing grain sorghum, wheat, vegetables, sugar beets and other agricultural delights.

While less vigorous West Texas communities suffered population losses in the 1960s and 1970s, Hereford and Deaf Smith County prospered.

Lying 50 miles from Amarillo and 90 miles from Lubbock, the town grew from 7,652 in 1960 to nearly 18,000 today. The county population almost doubled to around 25,000.

Despite its rich heritage and richer agricultural charms, Hereford looked about for something, as one civic leader said, that "the town can latch onto."

Thus the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame, a sister shrine to the cowboy counterpart in Oklahoma City.

Established as a nonprofit organization in May 1975, the Hall is temporarily located in a pleasant and gracious setting at the New Deaf Smith County Library.

The city has donated 10 acres for a permanent shrine and a fund-raising campaign is in the works.

"We're off and running," W. L. Albright, treasurer and general manager, told a recent visitor.

"We started on a shoestring...but I expect the total contribution, including land and displays and salaries, is about $90,000 at this point.

"As just an off-the-wall figure, I think we could put up a remarkable building for $100,000, expanding in an orderly manner as funding permits."

Albright and others stress that the hall, while sanctioned by the Girls' Rodeo Association (GRA), is more than a shrine to the American cowgirl.

"The purpose," they announced, "is to recognize, preserve and pay tribute to the contribution of all women in the development of the West and to honor selected women who have played a prominent role in establishing our western heritage."

It is dedicated "To the pioneer spirit of all women, everywhere."

The first three honorees were inducted last year during the Hustlin' Hereford Hall of Fame Rodeo and include:

—Alice Greenough of Tucson, Ariz., a world champion bronc rider.

—Jackie Worthington of Jacksboro, Tex., six times an allaround GRA world champion.

—The late Sissy Thurman of Bryan, Tex., one of the recognized greats of barrel racing.

The 1976 honorees were pioneer ranchwoman Kathryn Binford of Wildorado, Tex.; cutting horse queen Fern Sawyer of Nogal, N.M.; the late Margaret Owens Montgomery of Ozoza, Tex., first winner of the world's all-around cowgirl title in 1948; former exhibition and contest roper Jewel Duncan of Toyah, Tex.; Blanche Alitizer Smith of Del Rio, Tex., a champion calf roper; and Sacajawea, a 16 year-old Shoshoni Indian girl who acted as a guide and interpreter for the Lewis and Clark Expedition from North Dakota to the Pacific Coast in 1805.

Displays highlighting the lives and careers of the honorees decorate the temporary hall, along with sculptures and other works of art depicting the woman's role in development of the West.

"The hall of fame is the greatest single thing that has happened to the Girls' Rodeo Association and for the recognition of American women," says former GRA President Margaret Clemons.

It's only fitting that it happen in Hereford. Old Rat Jowell and Deaf Smith probably would be mighty proud.

"POOR WHITE TRASH" PART II
See how they live...

Pecos federal court back in business

After several years of inactivity, the Pecos Division of the U.S. District Court, Western District of Texas, is back in business.

The decision to reactivate the division was made by U.S. District Judge D. W. Suttle of San Antonio. "As far as I'm concerned, it's going to be a going division, just like Del Rio (one of six other divisions in the Western District)," Suttle said Saturday.

The Pecos Division has been handled out of Midland for the past three or four years. Suttle said he was reactivating the division because federal Law requires that persons charged with crimes allegedly committed in one of the 10 counties included in the division be arraigned and have the right to trial in the division.

Thus, criminal defendants coming out of the Pecos Division will now be tried in Pecos, rather than Midland. However, civil suits, Suttle said, will probably continue to be tried in Midland, due to superior access and facilities. (The post office-federal building in Pecos has been redesigned to include larger and more complete facilities for the federal court.)

The first Pecos Division grand jury was empaneled last week. This means there will be no more "composite" grand juries, consisting of citizens from both Midland-Odessa and Pecos Divisions. Suttle said the "composite" grand jury met for 18 months, often at great hardship to persons who had to travel as much as 400 miles to get to Midland.

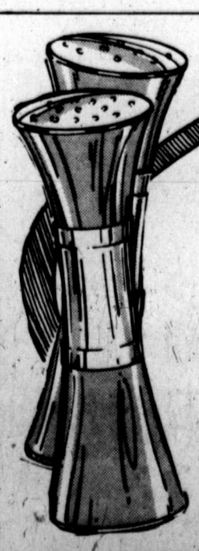

The death in 1974 of U.S. District Judge Ernest Guinn of El Paso created a burden for all the judges of the Western Distrfict and necessitated the "composite" grand jury, Suttle said. But the growing number of cases out of the Pecos Division provoked him to reactivate the division. "There is an ever increasing case load," he said. Much of it stems from a rapidly rising drug problem along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Wild horse law does job too well

By BILL MARTIN

RENO, Nev.(AP) — A five-year-old federal law protecting wild horses has done its job too well, leaving government officials and horse lovers to try to figure out how to cope with a steadily growing herd of the animals.

The Bureau of Land Management, the federal agency responsible for enforcing the 1971 Wild Free-roaming Horse and Burro Act, estimates that there are more than 60,000 wild horses across the nation with more than half of them in Nevada.

The wild horse population increases by about 20 per cent a year and officials say it is putting severe pressure on public rangelands, where the horses must compete with grazing livestock and wildlife.

The bureau estimates that 8,000 to 10,000 horses would have to be removed from the range each year to keep populations at the current level. The agency is limited by law on the methods it can use to catch the horses and it says that rounding up each animal would cost $300 to $400.

Ranchers want the horses sharply reduced in numbers — some of them don't care how. Even horse protection groups agree there are too many of the animals. But the groups say they will stick to their vows to see that the horses are protected and, if taken off the range, not mistreated in any way.

"If someone would come forward and offer to work out a compromise that is acceptable, we would sit down with them and talk," says Velma "Wild Horse Annie" Johnston, head of Wild Horse Organized Assistance — WHOA. But, she added, "We have a responsibility to the public not to relinquish the position we've held for all these years."

A New Mexico court ruled last year that the horse-protection law was unconstitutional and said states should have control over wild horses. But the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the decision earlier this month and upheld the right of the federal government to control horses.

The ruling "left us with just about an impossible situation," says Ed Rowland, Nevada state director for the Bureau of Land Management. "The law is virtually impossible to manage as it is now constituted."

The law allows the bureau to keep the horse population at 1971 levels, but gives the agency virtually no tools to use in capturing the animals and removing them from the range.

The only realistic method is "water trapping," in which corrals are built around water holes and the horses are caught when they come to drink. That method has been used to remove about 350 horses from the Stone Cabin Valley in central Nevada, but the bureau says it will not work over the long run on a large scale.

"We're not going to be able to catch the horses except where water is a factor," Rowland says. Where adequate water is available, horses won't come near the traps.

Once the horses are caught, the federal government's "Adopt A Horse" program takes over and private parties can take the animals into their homes for noncommercial purposes. The federal government retains ownership.

"It is a terrifically awkward and expensive program to administer," says Rowland, noting the government must conduct background checks on applicants and regularly check on the welfare of the horses.

Sweden noted U.S. Bicentennial

EDITOR'S NOTE: Susan Lamkin, a Lee High School senior, is in Sweden this summer under sponsorship of the Youth for Understanding program. Miss Lamkin, daughter of Mrs. Birdie Lamkin of 1405 Westcliffe St., has written of her experiences at the request of The Reporter-Telegram.

Hello again. Now that I've been here a month — I can tell you more about Sweden and my family.

My family is really great. We are split up most of the time because Jan (my father) is sailing with some of the kids and Anne-Marie (my mother) is taking the other part of us around summer houses or relatives. I've been in both situations; sailing and traveling. It was very much fun. That's mainly what we are doing this summer.

For the Fourth of July, there were some special programs on TV and all. But the big and important things are that first Sweden had two sailing ships participating in the race over the Atlantic to arrive on the Fourth of July.

Another big event was in Stokholm at Skansen (a park-sort of) where many Swedish-American citizens dressed in red, white and blue and celebrated the Fourth of July. Many American flags were flown and speeches made by our ambassador to Sweden, David S. Smith. He started by telling Sweden that Ford sent his regards and greetings. Then that America's scientific discoveries on land, sea, and in space have made

Susan Lamkin

America what it is today.

"America is where the individual can be his own master."

"In our 200 years we have made many mistakes but we have tried to correct them."

He ended with "God bless you all and thank you for coming."

Then the Foreign Aid Minister of Sweden gave a speech telling the democratic privilege.

"The democratic grounds and ideas united U.S.A. and Sweden."

Also she talked of the disagreements Sweden has of the American's politics, but that is the democratic privilege.

Then she congratulated America on its birthday celebration.

8,000 people attended this celebration. There was a special tribute to Ewald B. Nyguist, the president of the University of New York. Rolf Bjorling sang and Swedish-American young people from Los Angeles danced in folk costumes Swedish dances.

That is it for the celebration. But one last thing that I felt very important was an article. I can't and won't translate it all, but I will tell the most important and vital parts.

The Two Hundred Years:

It tells good and bad criticism. The celebration of the Bicentennial were many. Some too loud, bright and vulgar.

But some very graceful and beautiful. President Ford spoke of the celebration etc.

Then comes the part that the Swedish article said about America's past.

Many problems have come up in America in its 200 years, but we have tried hard to correct them. But one thing they admire us for is the opinions we believe in. What other country would make public the Watergate scandal? What other country would admit to the arguments inside the U.S.A. about Vietnam. It goes on and is a beautiful article. But I had to share that part because it is a very strong characteristic of the States. Although many things are unknown — the big problems in the U.S. have been publicly admitted. I have just realized how young America is compared to other countries.

That's all — I'll write one more letter before I come home. Good-bye and God bless you all! Susan.

Midlanders to get degrees

PORTALES, N.M. — Two Midlanders are among 330 degree candidates for Eastern New Mexico State University's summer graduation Friday.

Chile weather cold, people warm

EDITOR'S NOTE: Cindy Morales, a Lee High School senior, is in Chile this summer under sponsorship of the Youth for Understanding program. Miss Morales, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Felipe Morales of 2500 Dengar St., has written of her experiences at the request of The Reporter-Telegram.

Dear Midlanders,

Hi! How ya'll doing? I'm doing really great. The weather is very cold down here. I believe the coldest degrees has been about 25 degrees F. We have no central heating here so it seems even colder.

I have met some of the nicest people. I believe Chile has some of the nicest people. Its like I meet someone and the next thing I know their inviting me to their house to eat dinner and just to talk.

The food was a great change for me. They have their special Chilean dishes which are terrific. I really love the food here. With just about every meal, bread is eaten. And its really good bread. The way the meals are set up is very different also. The "desayuno" is what we call breakfast. It is served to us in bed on a tray. It consists of hot tea or coffee and bread with jam on it. Next we have our "almuerzo," which would be called lunch. This meal is eaten between 1:00 till 2:30 p.m. This is the biggest meal of the day. Then we don't eat again until about 7. This meal is called "once." Its a snack like meal consisted of tea, coffee and bread with all sorts of toppings we have to put on it. Sometimes we'll have a bread called "sopaipillas." This is a fryed bread which has a sweet taste. Or we may have a bread called "impanadas," which may be filled with meat or cheese, onions, egg or raisins. Both of these are more of a pastry than a bread.

I have a great family. They consist of two sisters ages 16 and 11. And one brother. He's 15 years. My father works as a civil engineer and my mom is a teacher. We have one maid. And a dog, rabbit and a rat.

The youth here is very like the youth in the U.S. They both have the same hobbies such as playing tennis, bike riding, horseback riding, or swimming. There is one thing that caught my attention though. When I came here I expected to here Spanish music. Instead I hear English music. Just about all the artists are knowm here. And English music is very popular.

Well, I guess I'll be closing for now. Hope you're enjoying the beautiful summer weather down there. Adios.

Valenti urges removal of movie rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The movie industry's chief spokesman is urging Congress to abolish rules designed to keep cable television systems from broadcasting newer motion pictures.

Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, also urged a House communications subcommittee not to relax rules governing which distant stations cable systems are allowed to relay to their subscribers.

He said Federal Communications Commission rules "deny the American public the right to see movies at a time, at a place and at a price that the public chooses. The current FCC rules are protectionist — shielding the networks from competition."

Valenti, in his prepared testimony, said that without distant signal carriage and exclusivity rules satellite transmission would permit independent stations in such cities as New York, Los Angeles and Chicago "to invade almost every television market in the United States."

With such "superstations," he said, "local markets can be swamped by importation of programs from these large metropolitan stations. Local television broadcasting as well as local advertising would be no longer able to survive."

Valenti said "the need is not for more retransmission of the same program but the production of more and new high quality programs. There is no lack of production capacity to fill additional cable channels with quality programs."

He was joined by Ralph M. Baruch, president and chief executive officer of Viacom International Inc., and Gerald M. Levin, chairman and chief executive officer of Home Box Office Inc., producers, in criticizing the rules limiting showings on cable TV.

They noted that cable TV gets the first crack at films during the three years after their release for theaters and can be shown between 3 and 10 years if contracted and available for TV broadcast.

But they said some "blockbuster" movies can stay in theaters longer than the three years and it's likely that they will be available for pay cable for a brief period or possibly precluded forever.

And under the 3 to 10 year period after, they said, television networks insist in obtaining exclusive use of motion pictures so good movies are not available for cable TV.

The American Farm Bureau Federation and National Grange sent statements saying opening up pay cable would deprive farmers of programs since cable reaches few rural areas.

The Rev. David M. Licorish, editor The Baptist Magazine, said deprived citizens, such as blacks, "become more deprived, if they have to start paying for television programs now brought into their home free, and which they stay in their homes to watch.

Texas firm often employs former 'consumers'

By RICK SCOTT

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — Hull Youngblood's company makes a product which taxpayers buy and its consumers hate so much they try to tear it up from the beginning.

And Youngblood says he wouldn't mind going out of business if there were no demand for the product:

Youngblood's Southern Steel Co., is the world's largest manufacturer of jail and prison equipment.

Fabricated here are jail doors, locking devices, bunks, chairs, tables, desks, book cases, windows and the other hardware that makes a jail a jail.

For the most part, it's all made from heavy steel because, as Youngblood put it recently, "Ultimately the user of the product will try to destroy it from the very moment he gets his hands on it."

Youngblood's grandfather started the company in 1897 and the firm has serviced 5,000 institutions in 44 states, Canada and overseas.

Southern Steel's products have fenced in such notables as Al Capone, Pretty Boy Floyd, John Dillinger and Watergate informant John Dean III, Youngblood said.

Youngblood, however, hasn't been content to make a living from crime. He's deeply involved in the whole scheme of prisons and prisoners. The company has "quite a few ex-of fenders" on its payroll.

And, these ex-offenders offer valuable input to the company, the businessman said.

"Rehabilitation takes place outside the institution when the man can get a job," Youngblood believes. "He can't go straight without a job."

While new, more modern jails would mean more money for the company, Youngblood believes such facilities are needed to provide humane treatment for prisoners.

"You are not going to deter crime by having an institution built for 200 people with 600 in it. If you want to deter crime, you hold them under humane conditions — not Hilton Hotel conditions — but humane conditions.

"You will have the criminals off the streets and in the meantime they will be more receptive to taking a job when they come out," he said.

Youngblood said prison overcrowding is the most severe detention problem because few new jails have been built in the past 50 years.

Since then, however, the inmate population has grown tremendously, especially in the cities. And, the crime rate has skyrocketed. Many towns and counties are still using jails that are 50 to 75 years old, he said. "When you take people out of circulation, you must do it with the right equipment and that happens to be a jail that is a humane institution and will detain the person and keep him out of traffic. And when you are ready to put him back into the society he will not be the worse for having been to jail," Youngblood said.

The company has increased attention to the aesthetic quality of jail equipment. Doors, bars and walls now sport bright colors rather than battleship gray.

New window designs provide security and at the same time look much like a standard window. The bars are hidden in the construction. Cell doors are operated by quiet motors, an innovation which Youngblood believes makes a new jail sound less like the old "slammer."

A product called the multipod goes into a jail cell and contains a bunk, desk, toilet facilities, a wall, a light and radio speaker. A cell equipped with the all steel multipod looks more like a college dormitory room.

The cost of detention equipment has risen like most other things, Youngblood said. But modern jail facilities can be built for about 10,000 per prisoner. Some new designs can cost up to $37,000 per prisoner, but Youngblood said that is "outrageous."

Southern Steel, which had sales of more than $24 million in the past two years, also employes a team of designers and consultants to work with city, county, state and federal officials on jail design and construction.

The company employs more than 300 workers.

Despite the firm's growing profits, Youngblood said he wouldn't be upset if crime were halted and no more jails were needed.

"Nothing would gratify me more," he said. "I could flourish very well in an honest world."

And, Youngblood, who is the father of five children ranging in age from 14 to 27, believes there is hope to slow the rising crime spiral.

"I think the thrill of being a criminal is slowly being discovered as being a false lure," he said. "People are discovering that they can have a piece of the action."

Mondale says he, Carter to air differences

By KENNETH REICH
The Los Angeles Times

PLAINS, Ga. — Sen. Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, said Tuesday that he and Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter have decided "that if we disagree (on an issue) we're just going to say so."

Mondale responded in an interview to a question on how he would maintain his independence if elected to the Vice Presidency by saying that he and Carter "had a long talk about that" and "I'm going to bring my differences to him directly and... we're not going to contrive an apparent unanimity that doesn't exist."

Later in the interview, Mondale said flatly that he did disagree with Carter on the question of vertical divestiture by the oil companies. He reiterated that he favored prohibiting the companies from simultanelously participating in all major phases of the oil business. Carter has opposed such divestiture.

On the question of the pardon of former President Richard M. Nixon by President Ford, Mondale made clear that he intended to go on criticizing Ford for granting it.

"I don't intend to dwell on it, but I'm not running away from it either," he said. "The pardon did represent, in my opinion, almost the classic example of the double standard (in American justice)."

The interview was conducted on the porch at the Carter family "pond house" where Mondale is staying, about two miles outside this small farm town.

Here are verbatim excerpts from the interview:

QUESTION. When did you first start taking seriously the prospect of possibly being the vice presidential candidate?

ANSWER. Not very long ago. You know, it wasn't an office I sought, and when "The Great Mentioner" threw my name up on the board, people would call me and say, "What can we do?" I was very positive in urging that nothing be done.

You know the selection of a vice presidential nominee is an intensely subjective and personal decision, and I wouldn't want to be the vice presidential niminee if the President didn't wnat me and I wouldn't want to be the niminee for someone that I wasn't comfortable with.

So, it happened, and when I realized that Carter was serious, or probably serious, I spent a good deal of time reading about him — his book, of course, but also his position papers — talking with people who knew him well and then the remaining questions in my mind were (1) his concept of the Vice Presidency and (2) whether we were personally compatible.

And when I became convinced that the answers were favorable to those two, then I indicated to Mr. Carter that I would accept if I were asked. But I never at any time pushed or asked that I be considered.

Q. This is the third great appointment of your life. (Mondale was appointed Minnesota state attorney general in 1960 and U.S. senator in 1964. He was elected to both positions subsequently.) Is there any secret to it? Some general principle?

A. Well, I would modestly like to say merit had something to do with it. You know, I've run for office many times, as (Minnesota) attorney general and as senator, and I've always worked hard at every job I've had. I've always thought the best politics was good government and good government would lead to good public approval. And that's been true for me.

I've tried to be very careful in my personal life and my personal financing. I've tried to understand the issues. I've tried to be fair and open-minded with people I disagree with. I've tried to be mindful of the public trust that a person has in office, and some people say it's easy to be appointed. But it's the only (time) that you have to get 100 per cent of the vote. There's a lot of competition.

Q. On the Vice Presidency, what are your guidelines for maintaining some sort of independence and avoiding the situation that (Hubert) Humphrey seems to have fallen into (as Vice President) in the 1960s?

A. Gov. Carter and I had a long talk about that — the question of the relationship between the Vice President and the President. And we've decided that if we disagree we're just going to say so, that I'm going to bring my differences to him directly and that we're not going to contrive an apparent unanimity that doesn't exist.

Q. On national defense, what is your own position? Do you agree with the thrust of Carter's comments yesterday on maintaining rough equivalency with the Soviet Union?

A. A. I agree with rough equivalency. You can't be in a position in which the Soviet Union would have a disproportionate lead over our nation, for several reasons. One, it would undermine the deterrent principle. It would shake the confidence of our allies in Western Europe and elsewhere and could have political implications.

But my hope is that rough equivalency can be achieved more through hard bargaining with the Soviet Union and our mutual realization that that's the best way for both nations, because it reduces the defense budget and increases stability and reduces tensions. Now, of course, it takes two to achieve that, and I'm very realistic, I think, about the difficulties of negotiating with the Soviet Union.

But I think we must try. It must be a central objective of our administration, and I'm sure that Mr. Carter intends to do so.

Q. But if the negotiations were not fruitful, would you be willing to support higher (military) expenditures?

A. Yes. God forbid, if the Russians were to go flat out on nuclear strategic escalation and were unresponsive to offers for restraints — and I think they would be insane to pursue that policy — but if they did, we would be in the very unfortunate position of having to respond...

Q. Will you continue to bring up the (Nixon) pardon as you did in your acceptance speech at the convention?

A. I don't intend to dwell on it, but I'm not running away from it either. There are many many issues that we have to discuss in this campaign.

Canning lid controversy in 1976 centers around safety

By MARIAN BURROS
The Washington Post

Last summer's canning lid controversy rages on, thanks to classic bureaucratic red tape in three government agencies.

Last year the controversy centered around a tremendous shortage of replacement lids; this year it concerns their safety. But help may be on the way.

In 1975 it became apparent that the demand for lids to use with old canning jars would far exceed the supply because many more people were canning in an effort to save money. Suddenly a number of companies started hammering out canning lids in order to cash in on the shortages. Some of the resulting products looked as if they had been hammered out in a basement workshop.

Agencies of the federal government, particularly the Department of Agriculture, received hundreds of queries about the sfety of these new lids, but no one could supply an answer because no government agency had ever tested canning lids.

And, as it turns out, more than one year later, no government agency wans to accept responsibility for testing them. The Food and Drug Administration, the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) and USDA have been playing "after you Alphonse, after you Gaston" over who should test new lids.

On June 3, FDA and CPSC drew up a memorandum of understanding, which has yet to be signed, outling each agency's responsibility. Even if actual testing starts sometime this summer, the information will come too late for most of the canning season.

Consumer Product Safety Commissioner Barbara Franklin called the buck passing "absurd." She said incidents like these are "a good case for regulatory reform.

"My instinct," she said, "is tht there's a problem and we should get the show on the road. It's been Mickey Moused around and it's unfortunae and ridiculous."

But home canners need not despair while they wait for the federal government to make up its mind. The state of Pennsylvania has released a study. Two food science professors at Pennsylania State University College of Agriculture, with appropriations frm the state and Congress, have conducted a study on nine brands of home canning jar lids, eight of which were new last year. Their findings offer some basis on which to judge the safety and performance of a number of new lids though the study says "where trade names are used, no discrimination is intended and no endorsement by the Pennsylvania Agricultureal Experiment Station is implied."

Using the Ball Company's lids as a criterion because of its "reputation for quality," a reputation the researchers said is equally deserved by kerr and Bernardin, they have tested 64 lids of each brand. This was done by canning apples and green beans. Standard canning directions were followed to the letter in one test. Less than ideal methods were employed in the other tests: sealing surfaces were not cleaned properly; jars were overfilled.

Storage conditions were simulated by incubating the jars for 10 days at 98.6 degrees.

The preliminary findings indicate that four of the new lids on the market performed extremely well compared to the Ball lids; four others frequently failed to seal.

The four brands that did well include two of the traditional two-piece lids, like Ball's. They are Torque-Rite, made by Edison Packaging Co. in Edison, N.J., and Magic Button made by Owens-Illinois of Toledo, Ohio.

Two one-piece lids with high performance marks are Klik-It, manufactured by Klik-It Corp. of Chicago, Ill., and Anchor Hocking of Lancaster, Ohio.

The report said the four brands received high marks because the inside of the lids didn't corrode, they sealed quickly, maintained their vacuum and only a minimal to moderate amount of liquid leaked out.

The four brands with a high rate of sealing failure according to the study were: Plast-O-Top (POP made by Plast-O-Products, Milton, Del.), 20 of the 64 lids did not seal: "Rockwell" (place of manufacture not given) with 29 out of 64 failures; Jar-Lid (Jar-Lid Corp., New York, N.Y.) with 23 out of 64 failures; Iberia (from Iberia, U.S.A., Inc.-made in Taiwan-San Luis Obispo, Calif.) with 57 out of 64 failures. (The particular Iberia lid tested in no longer on the market, Hamilton said.)

Why so much concern about the realiability of canning lids? Because of the economic loss if canned food spoils. In addition, if food is spoiled without anyone knowing and is then consumed, it can cause illness severe enough to send people to the hospital.

Marc Bohan, designer for House of Dior, firm advocate of fur styling in collection

By MICHELE COOPER
Agence France-Presse

PARIS — Designer Marc Bohan of Christian Dior apparently cannot envision of women's winter wardrobe without fur, for even the lowliest parka in his haute couture collection sports a band or two of mink to ward off winter chills.

The traditional full-length fur coats, designed for Dior by Frederic Castet, were breath-taking in silver fox or Russian lynx, but mink received the most original treatment when used liberally to outline external seams and hems on waterproof silk faille coats and parks.

The standout in the genre, however, was a simply raw wool knit coat, mid-calf length and fullish, outlined in wide bands of rich natural brown mink.

Beiges, browns and other earthy tones predominated in Dior's fashions for the 1976-1977 autumn-winter season, except for evening, of course, when yellow and gold lame and red and blue figured crepe broke the color barrier with flair. Evening ensembles were completed by gold stiletto-heeled sandals with pointed toes — the only whiff of nostalgia present in the collection, aside form one strapless gown reminiscent of the days of the long-line bra.

For something new in daytime wear, Pierre Cardin did his incomparable best with a series of short capes perfectly proportioned to slightly flared skirts in the same fabrics. Usually slung asymetrically around the shoulders, the capes were an invitation to long walks through autumn leaves.

Colors ranged across the spectrum, generally in subdued — but definitely not pastel — hues.

Another Cardin novelty was his line of jersey gowns for watching television or playing hostess to close friends. Models were slippered in furry boots of bright yellow or red, in strong contrast to the grey of their dresses or ensembles.

For evenings away from home, he offered long print dresses, with bodices of a contrasting solid band encasing the shoulders and upper arms.

Formal gowns provided another change of pace, but some looked more like Courreges than Cardin.

Courreges himself still marches to a different drummer and once again showed structured, banded dresses and ensembles in mostly black, white or the bright orange he calls red.

He continues to design outrageous garments — such as next winter's black gown sprouting at least two dozen long-stemmed orange paper flowers from a daring neckline, front and back — and the fashion public apparently continues to love being outraged.

In more practical gear, Andrew Courreges offered a wide range of winter sports wear, including several soft and furry jackets, but even there his flair for the dramatic appeared, when skiing jumpsuits were stripped off to reveal slinky black open-work knit jumpsuits with glitter — intended to show that the wearer could move directly from the ski slope to the dance floor.

These are two fashions from the House of Dior's fall and winter collection that have been shown in Paris. At left is pleated tartan skirt in brown and beige with a beige faille parka trimmed with mink. At right is an evening gown in black jersey, slashed to the knee and worn under a taffeta jacket. Few supplies necessary for repair of sidewalks

COLLEGE STATION — No need to let cracked and broken sidewalks give a rundown appearance—or create a safety hazard. Patches can be made easily with packaged concrete mixes, Glenda Moore, a housing and home furnishings specialist, says.

She's with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

"Small repair jobs usually can be completed with a 45-pound bag of concrete mix. But if several areas are to be repaired, an 80-pound sack will insure an ample supply to complete the jobs. Leftover amounts of the dry mix can be saved if the mix is packaged in moisture-proof bags, sealed tightly and stored in a dry place."

Only a few supplies are necessary to make the repairs—concrete mix, sharp cold chisel, heavy hammer, general purpose trowel, hoe or shovel(for mixing) and a mixing box, wheelbarrow or other container, she said.

"Tar or caulking compounds are poor substitutes when repairing these areas. The tar is easily picked up by tires and shoes," she added.

First, widen cracks as much as possible with hammer and chisel by holding the chisel at an outward angle to chip away approximately one-half inch pieces at a time.

Go down at least to the gravel-packed base, then undercut by tilting the chisel inward. This new area, wider inside than at the surface, need not be uniform or regular.

Dust out the crack with a bicycle pump and wash down the sidewalk with a garden hose. Water not only helps to clean out all debris, but also soaks adjacent area to insure satisfactory bonding.

Prepare concrete mix according to directions on the package, mixing the mortar well. A small amount of mineral oxide pigments, available at lumberyards, may be added to match a colored sidewalk or driveway.

Patches made next to lawns should be formed with a board driven into the cub so concrete edges will be smooth.

Sewing not a bygone art

CHICAGO — Sewing is definitely not a bygone art, according to a recent U.S. Department of Agriculture survey.

The survey reveals that 41 million persons nationwide probably do some home sewing. And Americans spend approximately 4 billion dollars each year on fabrics, patterns, sewing machines and notions.

Among the ranks of home sewers are the 4-H leaders and members who participate in the national 4-H sewing machine program. The program provides an opportunity for leaders, volunteers, teens and juniors- to improve their teaching skills. And it gives 4-H'ers 9 years of age through 19 practical experience in using and caring for a sewing machine.

The training course is taught by Cooperative Extension Service personnel, with the aid of instructional literature developed by a leading sewing machine manufacturer, the Extension Service and the Service Committee.

DEAR ABBY

Mom lies about daughters to avoid hurting their boyfriends

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of two very pretty and popular daughters. One is 16 and the other is 17.

The older girl is stringing three boys along at once. She wears a friendship ring from one, an I.D. bracelet from another and an Indian necklace from a third. None of these boys knows about the others, and when one calls here and she is out with another, I have to lie to keep from hurting the caller's feelings.

The younger one is going with two boys. Each thinks he is the only one. One is so jealous he has threatened to do bodily harm to any other boy who comes near "his" girl. She is getting tired of them both, but doesn't want to hurt either one, so I have to lie to them when they call.

I have always taught the girls to be kind and avoid hurting feelings, so I suppose it's my fault that they're involved with so many boys.

How does a mother get uninvolved? If I were to tell these boys the truth, they'd be terribly hurt.—MOM IN THE MIDDLE

DEAR MOM: It's commendable to teach your daughters to be kind, but you should also teach them to be honest. Stringing boys along is dishonest. You're setting a bad example. Start telling it like it is, Mom, and encourage your daughters to do the same.

DEAR ABBY: WANTS EQUALITY maintains, "It's still a man's world," and she lists some reasons why, but she forgot to mention one.

If a man is outside on the sidewalk (just walking by) and he happens to see a woman undressing through a window, he's a peeping Tom.

However, if a woman sees a man undressing through a window, HE'S an exhibitionist!—J. E. E.

DEAR J. E. E.: Not exactly: If a person happens to come upon a view of someone undressing, and he or she hangs around to enjoy it, that person is a voyeur.

DEAR ABBY: With your wide audience, perhaps you can appeal to towns and cities to rechristen the names of some of their streets.

My cousin had a bad fire in his house, and the firemen went to three addresses before they got to his. In his town, which already has a Lake Street, Lake Court, Lake Avenue and Lake Terrace, they are building an old age complex to be called "Lake Side."

In another town near here, the Rescue Squad had a most difficult time finding the right place because there are four streets with similar names that are constantly mistaken for one another.

I hope you think this is worth printing.—MRS. M.C.: LYNN, MASS.

DEAR MRS. C.: It is, and I did.

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Thursday, July 29)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The early part of the day finds you with poor judgment and it is not the time to make any commitments of a serious nature. Later in the day you are able to attain some of the goals that you seek.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Don't try to do too much in the morning where policy making decisions are concerned. Be wise in the use of creative skills.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Regular routines should be postponed today so you can engage in worthwhile activities. Be persistent in the planning of your future.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) A fine time to make plans for the future. Invite fascinating persons to your home tonight and have a happy time.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) First handle practical affairs, then consult a financial expert about money matters. Mate can be most affectionate tonight.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Improve your health and then you can accomplish a great deal. Handle a social matter early and you will gain the benefits later.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Listen to what an expert has to say that will help you get ahead in career matters. Plan to rid yourself of any tensions you may have.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't permit a gossipy friend to waste your time. Make better plans to gain your cherished aims. Relax at home tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) If you upset a higherup, you are likely to find yourself in a less enviable position, so use tact. Don't neglect to pay your bills.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec 21) A new project should be studied more thoroughly before putting it in operation. Concentrate on having greater abundance in the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Find the right way to add to your income. More kindness toward your mate brings excellent results at this time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Plan to engage in civic work you like, but be sure it is done precisely. Don't take any risks in the afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You must handle those duties that are tedious if you are to gain the approval of higher-ups. Take time to improve your health.

Play presented retired persons

The American Association of Retired Persons, met for a Bicentennial banquet and program in the West Fellowship Hall of the First Christian Church.

Mistress of ceremonies for the program, a play entitled "Let Freedom Ring" and skits, was Mrs. Alta Williams, program chairman. Participants were Mrs. Frances Henderson, Carole Ann Campbell, Jack Wayme Canpbell, Kevin McCarter, Mrs. E. Dale McCarter, Mrs. M. E. Trimble and Mrs. Robert Scott. Narrator was Mrs. Roy Dunlap. Author of the play and skits used nationally as a Bicentennial project, was Mrs. Adam P. Cookman of Vero Beach, Fla., sister of Mrs. Williams.

Also, a brief talk was given by Mrs. August Wenck and Campbell on the founder of National Retired Teachers Association and the AARP. She was Mrs. Ethel Percy Andrus. Both organizations operate as sister foundations.

Both groups have the same insurance programs, dues, defensive driving courses and joint projects for senior citizens 50 years of age or older.

Other Midland guests were Mrs. Opal Dunlap, Roy Dunlap, Mrs. Hazel Cole, Mrs. Gladys Womack, R. E. Womack, Mr. and Mrs. Edison Wilson, Rhoda Marrs, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Mogle, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Campbell, Mrs Kevin McCarter, Hollie McCarver, Mrs. Robert Bechtel and Mrs. Faye Ashmore.

Additional guests were Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Workman of Big Spring, and Mrs. Thelma A. Newman, district representative, Cathy Wronsky, Gwen Braley, Bill Braley, Lena Parks and Joe Parks, all of Odessa.

Introduced as new members were Mrs. Della Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Percy F. Bridgewater and Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Nelson.

Special prizes were won by McCarter and Mrs. Dunlap.

The next meeting Monday will be a covered dish dinner.

'Condition is sound'

The city's financial condition is sound and no tax increases are projected.

These are the words of Midland's Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., and they most certainly fall in the category of good news, particularly at a time when so many cities over the country are experiencing dire financial difficulties.

But there is an even more remarkable story behind this. The projected general fund budget for the City of Midland for 1976-77 is up almost $1.5 million over this year's budget — but still no tax hike.

Most tax-paying residents aren't asking any questions as to the why of it. They are perfectly happy to accept such an announcement without explanation.

But the mayor has offered an explanation. He said that an appropriation of $467,107 from the general fund's unappropriated surplus will be required to balance the general fund as presented in the budget.

But the main thing goes back to that "the city's financial condition is sound" observation — and this is wonderful.

Expenditures in the general fund as proposed total $10,484,081, representing an increase of $1,435,740 over the existing budget.

Total expenditures are $15,876,387, an increase of $1,727,380 over the 1975-76 budget.

The proposed general fund budget includes the addition of 18 city employes, with total salary of $138,000.

The breakdown of expenditures by departments, as cited in the proposed budget, has been published, and residents should be interested sufficiently to read and consider the various items. Many, many manhours have gone into preparation of the budget, and citizens will have their say concerning it at a public hearing scheduled at the September 14 session of the city council.

This budget business is important for one and all, and council members would appreciate having some input concerning it from the taxpaying public. The councilmen do not expect everyone to agree with their budget decisions, but they must take it for granted that they have public approval if no opposition is voiced.

The council, for instance, has voted a reduction of $27,127 in the zoo budget for the coming year. The mayor said the council would like to have some input from the public on the future of a zoo operation in Midland.

We agree that the city should either dismantle the zoo or put the funds back into it. This is a matter which has been hanging fire all to long. We would prefer that the zoo be continued ... and improved. What are your feelings in the matter?

Perhaps there are other items which you would like to address one way or the other. The choice is yours.

New resident station

The announcement made by Congressman George Mahon that a new Social Security Administration resident station will be established in the Tall City of Midland was welcome news, indeed, for many residents of the community.

Mahon said that residents have demonstrated an interest in the matter for some time, and that he hopes it will be of benefit to people of the area.

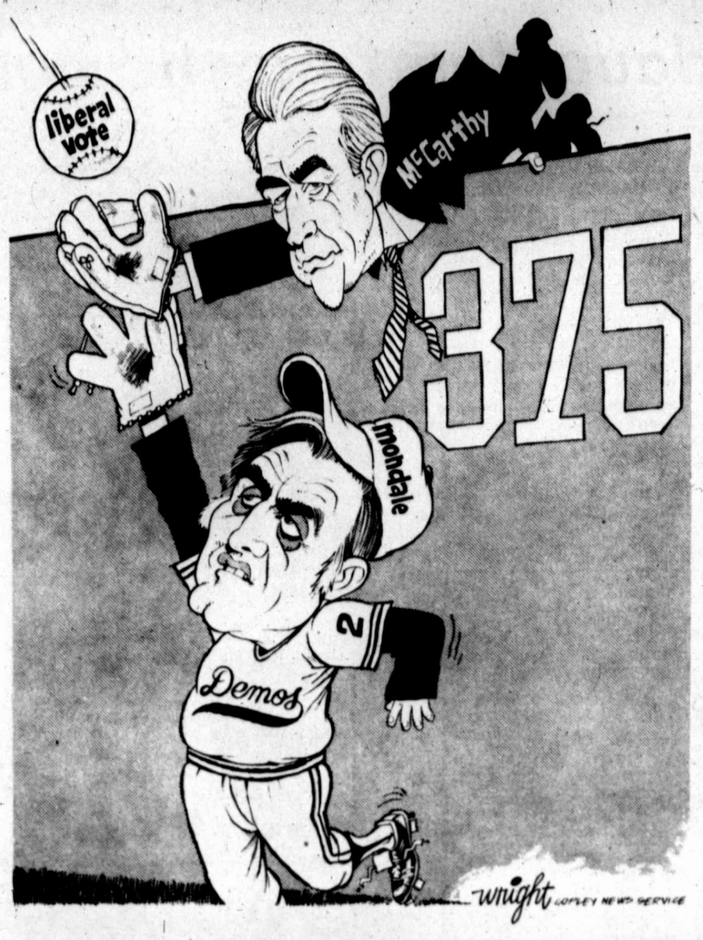

It certainly is true that the new station will fill a long-felt need in Midland and vicinity.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce and other individuals and groups have been working on the project the last several years. Mahon has had a prominent role in the effort.

It was explained that the main difference between a Social Security office and a resident station is that the station does not have the communications facilities nor the administrative personnel an office has.

Ervin L. Fisher, district manager of the Social Security office at Odessa, said, however, there should be no difference in service to the people, and this is what counts.

Five persons are expected to be employed initially in Midland's resident station.

EYE ON CUBA:

Latins still find Cuba incompatible

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

The Latin American countries have been free to resume diplomatic relations with Communist Cuba for a year now.

But not one has.

Freedom of action on Cuba was a point heatedly debated at the hemispheric foreign ministers' meeting in San Jose, Costa Rica, in July, 1975.

According to Cuba's apologists, the 11-year-old ban on normal relations with Premier Fidel Castro's dictatorship was one of the last remaining obstacles to improved hemispheric understanding.

If only the United States would drop its objections to the Communist regime that has tyrannized Cuba since 1959, peace and harmony would return to the Americas, the argument ran.

True, of course, a two-thirds majority of the American republics voted in 1962 to exclude Cuba from the Organization of American States because Cuban communism was incompatible with the democratic principles the rest of the hemisphere professed.

Too, a two-thirds majority of the American republics voted in 1964 to impose diplomatic and economic sanctions against Cuba on the basis of Venezuelan allegations that the Cuban Communist regime was trying to overthrow the Caracas government by force.

Provision was made at that time for lifting the restrictions, once Cuba had ceased to be a threat to hemisphere peace and security, by that same vote of two-thirds of the nations that were party to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance. That meant 14 affirmative votes were required.

In subsequent years, Mexico, Peru, Ecuador, Costa Rica and other nations that looked with favor on Castro and Communist Cuba tried unsuccessfully to round up the votes necessary.

In 1975, though, they tried another line of attack, that of amending the reciprocal assistance treaty so that only a simple majority, that is 11 votes, be required to lift the sanctions on Cuba.

Once that was done, they approved a resolution providing that the hemisphere republics be "free to normalize or conduct in accordance with the national policy or interests of each their relations with the Republic of Cuba at the level and in the form that each state deems advisable."

The United States went along with that idea, too, and the resolution passed. Only Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay voted against it, while Brazil and Nicaragua abstained.

Then what?

Nothing.

Those nations that had earlier defied the OAS ban on relations with Communist Cuba continued them. They included Argentina, Colombia, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Trinidad and Venezuela.

While there was some talk that Costa Rica or Ecuador or the Dominican Republic would resume ties with the Havana government, Castro's decision to send Cuban troops to Africa to fight for the Soviet-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola cooled their ardor.

Cuba has been increasing its contacts with the other hemisphere republics at the economic and technical levels in the last several years but, nevertheless, U.S. diplomats consider the possibility of a broad reestablishment of relations with Cuba and the other American states to be remote.

WASHINGTON MERRY—GO—ROUND

It's Army versus Indians again

By JACK ANDERSON with LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — Classified Army documents describe an attempt by the Army brass to take 757 acres from the Nisqually Indians.

Ironically, the leader of this land-grab, Maj. Gen. Volney Warner, was a leading participant in the 1973 Wounded Knee crisis.

There is an even deeper irony. The land Warner wants is the former hunting ground of the famed Nisqually hero, Chief Leschi. He led the gallant Nisqually tribe in its last uprising against the Army in 1850. For his heroic but futile stand, Leschi was hanged by the Army.

Subsequently, the tribe was confined to a 4,700-acre reservation in Washington state. All but the 757 acres were grabbed by the Army in 1918. Now the Army wants the remaining Nisqually land for a training area and firing range.

The classified documents show the Army wanted to expropriate the acreage in 1972 and 1973. The move was postponed, however, "in view of the Wounded Knee controversy." The memo, signed by Maj. Gen. John Henlon, then commander of Fort Lewis, Wash., suggested: "We should await a more propitious time."

Again this year, the Army Engineers in another classified memo cited the "controversial nature" of the takeover and postponed it "at this time."

But Gen. Warner of Wounded Knee fame has now assumed command of Fort Lewis. He not only wants to confiscate the Indian acreage but he wants to negotiate with federal officials rather than talk directly with the Nisquallys.

The Indians have complained to us that they are being harassed, meanwhile, by the Army. They charge the Army has lobbed live artillery shells over their reservation, has buzzed Nisqually fishermen with helicopters and has invaded the reservation in tanks and trucks.

Footnote: Gen. Warner confirmed to us that he wants the land but says the Indians' protests mean he probably will fail. He swears he has cut off artillery firing over the reservation. His tanks and trucks crossed Indian land only once, he said, during an emergency. He denies completely that his helicopters have buzzed the Indians.

WHITE HOUSE CHAOS — White House operations have been reduced to a state of controlled chaos, according to sources on the inside. The prevailing confusion can be blamed, in part, on the frantic effort to keep Gerald Ford in the White House.

But the problem has its roots, our sources suggest, in the transition days when President Ford's team took over from the Nixon guard. Ford "overreacted" to the rigid, highly structured Nixon methods.

In contrast, Ford's approach was loose, casual, easy going. At first, the new President directed the operation himself. It was part of his learning process. But now that he has a better grasp of the job, he leaves the routine decisions to the staff while he concentrates on the larger policy problems.

This has left the staff more on its own. The result, according to one insider, is that "a lot of people have been going around in different directions." The footloose presidential aides usually wind up attending conferences. "It seems like all we do is go to meetings," complained a White House aide.

"There is a maximum of discussion and a minimum of implementation," echoed another. Top Republicans on Capitol Hill have also griped to us that they can't get through. "You call over to the White House," grumped one, "and everybody is always in a meeting. When I asked some of those guys what they do, they just mumble a vague reply."

Other insiders contend that there is bound to be some disgruntlement and confusion in any organization. They acknowledge that staff chief Richard Cheney doesn't keep as tight a control as his predecessor, Donald Rumsfeld, did before moving into the Pentagon as Secretary of Defense.

Meanwhile, there are still a few White House chickens running around as if they had lost their heads.

BLOOD BROTHER — The Six Indian Nations, better known as the Iroquois, have maintained their freedom from the United States over the past two centuries. In many respects, they are still recognized by the United States as a semi-independent nation in the fastnesses of upper New York State.

Now as a gesture of friendship to the white nation that has changed their land, the Iroquois want to make a descendant of a signer of the Declaration of Independence a "blood brother" in the Six Nations. The honor is accorded one person each year.

INSIDE REPORT:

Connally near top of Ford's list as running mate

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — When Edwin M. (Buz) Schwenk, the conservative Republican leader of New York's Suffolk County, slipped into the Oval Office July 13 with a careful 20-minute sales pitch for John B. Connally as Mr. Ford's running mate, the President's response cut to the heart of the Connally problem.

"How would they react to him in the North?" Mr. Ford asked.

Schwenk's reply: Connally was clearly the best possible vice-presidential candidate, North or South, from the standpoint of "bringing the Carter-Mondale ticket down to ground level" in a hard-hitting campaign. There was no disagreement from the President, and none from Rogers Morton, Ford campaign chairman, or Richard Cheney, White House staff chief, both of whom sat in on the Ford-Schwenk conversation.

Indeed, a consensus is developing among highly placed powers in the Republican party that Mr. Ford has now positioned Connally at or very near the top of his list of preferred running mates — if, as seems likely, he wins out over Ronald Reagan and Reagan does not want the second spot for himself.

Yet, except for an occasional maverick like Buz Schwenk, the Northeast and northern Midwest contain few visible Connally vice-presidential advocates, which was why Mr. Ford asked Schwenk his question about reaction in the North. Just five days later, for example, Market Opinion Research of Detroit

Evans Novak

(whose part-owner, Robert Teeter, is chief pollster of the President Ford Committee) showed Connally's apparent vulnerability in the President's home state of Michigan.

In a survey published by the Detroit News July 18, Market Opinion Reasearch sampled 700 Michigan voters just before the Democratic convention and came up with these stunning findings: alone against Jimmy Carter, Mr. Ford squeaked out a close 3-point margin. With Reagan as his running mate against Jimmy Carter and an unnamed running mate, Ford-Reagan lost by 42 to 39 per cent (balance undecided).

But when matched with Connally against Carter-Blank, the Ford-Connally ticket lost by 44 to 34 per cent (22 per cent undecided) — powerful reinforcement for the President's concern over Connally's impact in the North.

Several compelling factors, however, are softening this impact in the White House and maintaining Connally's leverage as one of Mr. Ford's top prospects for running mate.

In the first place, it is Vice President Nelson Rockefeller's opinion, specifically conveyed in private talks to the President, that New York state would be well beyond Mr. Ford's reach in November even if Rockefeller himself were on the ticket. What is true for New York is probably also true for most of the Northeast and northern Midwest, with the possible exception of the President's home state of Michigan.

That means the South, Southwest and West offer Mr. Ford his best and perhaps only opportunity, and it is in the South that Connally's star shines brightest. Pollster Louis Harris, for example, is finding Connally's popularity far broader and deeper in the South than any other potential Ford running mate, including Reagan.

Finally, the ascendancy of Connally, despite his intimate ties to the Nixon administration, his 1973 conversion from Democrat to Republican and his 1975 acquittal of political bribery charges, rests on two pillars: Reaganite support and what one Republican strategist calls the lack of serious competition anywhere else.

White House aide William Seidman, a long-time Ford crony, has privately told friends that Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld is Mr. Ford's sentimental choice for a running mate. But Mr. Ford correctly worries that Rumsfeld might be rejected by a convention in which one-half the delegates will be Reaganites.

Other prospects seem insubstantial. Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, for example, has been privately downgraded inside the White House by Morton as a nice guy who would add nothing to the ticket. Anne Armstrong, the capable U.S. ambassador at the Court of St. James, is not taken seriously. More important, none of these would strengthen a Ford ticket in the South and Southwest as much as Connally, a fact that is moving Republicans as diverse as Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas and Gov. James Rhodes of Ohio into the Connally camp.

Accordingly, blessed by many Southerners and an occasional maverick in the North, Connally is maneuvering into the vice-presidential vacuum with the stealthy skill of a master politician for whom a political vacuum holds irresistible attraction. Despite Mr. Ford's concern about his standing in the North, and assuming Reagan's disinterest, Connally is now emerging as the frontrunner.

Most uncommitted delegates still undecided

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A survey of most of the 131 uncommitted delegates to next month's Republican national convention shows that most of them have not made up their minds about who they want as their nominee for president.

Despite claims from the camps of President Ford and challenger Ronald Reagan that most of the uncommitteds secretly are committed to either of them, the more frequent comments heard are like these:

—"The philosophies of both candidates are acceptable to me. But I can't decide which has the best chance of being elected" — William Skaggs, one of three delegates in Missouri who are still uncommitted.

—"We all got elected as uncommitted delegates. That's how we presented ourselves to the people. I don't think anybody will know how I vote until I stand up at the convention. Right now, I'm not going to be patsy for anybody," — Ralph deBalsio, elected a delegate in New York's 17th district.

—"I hope they're sending Air Force One up for me, because I won't settle for anything else ... I'm really trying to sample the people here, talking with businessmen, and trying to to pick up vibrations from the streets ... One minute I'm a leaner one way, and the next minute I'm a leaner the other way. Nobody's going to stampede me now" — James White, a delegate elected from Rochester, N.Y.

—"I'm very much in the middle Reagan is a very attractive candidate. But can he get elected? And would he help me in my organization in Philadelphia. I'm a ward leader and I've gotta worry about my candidate running for the state legislature. I think maybe that Ford's more sellable. I'm just not ready to firm up my stand" — William Black, a Philadelphia delegate.

—"The only way I'm leaning today is against a post outside the house watching some boys dig up fishing worms" — James E. Crockett of Wytheville, VA., a retired court clerk.

What is clear from the survey is that the two candidates themselves have been putting in some telephone time, calling and calling again, discussing their stands on issues, stressing their version of how electable they are, never themselves quite asking for that ultimate commitment, but pressuring, pressuring, pressuring.

In West Virginia, the situation is so extreme that Don Marsh, city editor of the Charleston Gazette, said the state's delegates were being courted "and they love it. They love the publcity and the phone calls. And they're playing hard to get."

West Virginia has emerged as one of the most crucial states, with 15 of the state's 28 delegates having told reporters they have not made up their minds.

"I'm uncommitted, and I plan to stay that way," Rex Bumgardner, of Clarksburg, said.

"I intend to stay that way until voting time," said Howad Corcoran of Wheeling, "and I will not make a personal decision. It will be on what I consider the overwhelming majority opinion of West Virginia Republicans."

Many candidates are using the power of their uncommitted status to make points, as with Robert G. Doumar of Norfolk.

Doumar, former Republican chairman of Norfolk, carries some weight in Virginia Republican circles and has let it be known widely that he thinks President Ford's campaign organization in the state has been poorly run.

He and Mrs. Henry O. Lampe (former Republican chairman in the state's 10th district) fear that the poor quality of the Ford campaign in the state might portend that the President would run an equally poor campaign against Democratic nominee Jimmy Carter in the fall.

Doumar said he has talked with Reagan and his wife, Nancy, by phone, and is going to the White House this week to see the President. Mrs. Lampe, meanwhile, has already made the White House trek.

"I told him his campaign committee had served him poorly in Virginia," Mrs. Lampe said, "and I said it right in front of Jack Marsh (a former Virginia congressman, now an aide to the President."

She said she took advantage of the meeting to complain about red tape at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare's blocking implementation of local mental health programs.

She said the result was a prompt, hour-long hearing from a member of the President's Domestic Council and follow-up information from HEW on how to make things go more smoothly.

Probably the heaviest lobbying of all has been directed at Pennsylvania's delegation, with its big slice of 20 to 21 uncommitteds. A group of eight visited the White House and the President once aleady, on July 1, and all 103 of the state's delegation are invited back down again this coming Thursday.

Reagan has had tough sledding in these eastern delegations, where he feels his record is much understood and where some people feel he is some kind of a kook.

He told a group of delegates in New Jersey that he came to see them face to face so he could prove to them that he didn't eat his young.

But some delegates won't even venture forth to hear him out.

A. Leo Sereni, of Havertown, was the only one of the four delegates elected from Pennsylvana's 5th congresional district to travel to Harrisburg recently to hear Reagan.

"I think the man is a hell of a campaigner and has something to say."

Tank eruption started blaze

BIG SPRING — The fire that hit the Cosden oil refinery here July 18 started in the refinery section, a spokesman for Cosden Oil and Chemical Co. said Tuesday.

The contents of a fuel-oil blending tank erupted apparently through the top of the container. The blending tank was preparing fuel-oil for use in the refinery section and was operating under normal conditions at the time of the eruption, the spokesman said.

The wind was out of the southeast when the explosion occurred and the vapors settled downwind. About two to five minutes after the eruption of the tank, the vapors were ignited with the result that the tank was engulfed in flames as was the entire north end of the alkylation unit.

"Because of insurance, the explosion represents a minimal loss to us," Joe Moss, a vice president of American Petrofina Inc., said.

The journal also said the refinery is scheduled to be processing 35,000 barrels of crude oil a day by Saturday as compared with its 58,000-barrel capacity.

It was reported that 22 storage tanks were destroyed in the fire.

Oil spill shifts meeting

SINGAPORE (AP) — This seaport capital was on pollution alert following collisions involving five ships in the Malacca Strait Sunday. The ship accidents, including a major oil spill, appeared likely to speed plans for traffic lanes in the crowded waterway between the Indonesian island of Sumatra and the Malay peninsula.

Shipping and diplomatic sources said the next meeting of a three-nation body drafting what is known as the Traffic Separation Scheme is to be moved ahead. Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia, the three countries bordering the strait, are working on the project.

The royal Malaysian navy continued using chemicals to fight oil spilled from the Philippine tanker Diego Silang. The oil slick was pushed about 50 miles from the damaged tanker by waves and eight knot winds.

The 100,748-ton Diego Silang collided before dawn Sunday, first with the 9,455-ton Russian freighter Vysotsk and then with the 300,000-ton empty supertanker Brazilian Faith, which was being towed to Singapore.

One shipping agent estimated there is one collision and 30 near misses every month.

Lessons to be rescheduled

The last session of tennis lessons is on Friday, but the city Parks and Recreation Department will hold another full week of make-up lessons to accomodate rain days and missed classes.

Adults and children who have attended the regular sessions may attend the make-up sessions from Aug. 2-6 at the Midland High School tennis courts. The hours for the sessions will be 9-10 a.m., 10-11 a.m., and 11-noon.

Classes will be mixed — beginners and advanced and adults and children. Instructors will teach the different groups.

Gearhart services held today

KENSINGTON, Md. (AP) — The family of Daniel Gearhart held private funeral services for the slain mercenary at their local Roman Catholic church this morning.

Gearhart's body was brought home to this Washington, D.C., suburb Monday after repeated financial and diplomatic road blocks delayed its return from Angola, where Gearhart was executed two weeks ago.

Parishioners at the Holy Redeemer Church raised the $5,000 fee demanded by the Angolan government for the body's return.

They have also raised an additional $3,000, according to a spokesman, to help support Gearhart's widow and four children.

The 34-year-old Vietnam veteran left his family last February to raise money to help defray mortgage and medical bills, which Gearhart's lawyers say now total $30,000. His wife, Sheila, said he did not tell her where he was going. She never saw him again.

Mrs. Gearhart said she would raise her children to respect and love their father, and to try to make them understand that he died trying to obtain money for them.

M-Cubs give Travelers too much of a head start

BY TED BATTLES

Ernie Banks, special batting instructor for the Chicago Cubs, chided some of the Midland players before the game, "You ought pay your way in for the chance to hit in this park."

Apparently, some Travelers from Arkansas overheard the Hall of Famer and took it to heart, because the Travelers took batting practice on Cubs pitchers for a 14-10 Texas League win at Cubs Stadium Tuesday night.

It was the first of a five-game stand with action resuming tonight at 7:30 and the Cubs will have to hold the fort against the St. Louis Cardinals farmhands without the services of shortstop Mike Sember and Pitcher Dave Geisel, both of whom were on their way to Wichita today.

SEMBER WAS recalled and Geisel, a 5-8 lefty, was assigned outright to the Aeros. The reason for Geisel's departure was the disabling, for the rest of the season, of pitcher Ken Frailing.

No players have as yet been assigned to Midland from either Pompano Beach or Bradenton, Chicago's Class A and Rookie League clubs.

Tuesday's game wasn't as close as the final score indicates. Things got out of hand when the Travelers sent 13 batters to the plate in the fifth inning and aided by two Midland errors, cracked out seven hits to score eight runs. That made it 12-2 and it was 14-3 before the Cubs rallied for seven runs in the last three innings.

STEVE STANILAND, a 6-4 righthander, apparently has things going his way again. Last year, the first in the Texas League for the Oxnard, Calif., native, Staniland was 6-1 for the Travelers, which earned him a promotion to Tulsa, where things didn't go so good. He was 0-4.

Back in Arkansas this season, things didn't get any better with a 1-8 start, but after Tuesday's win, his fourth in a row, he is 5-8.

Outfielder Bob Dethrage hit his third homer and first baseman John Young his seventh, back-to-back to open the eighth. At the time, they looked like window dressing, but when the Cubs rallied in the late innings, they were the blows that kept the Bruins away from the door.

Perhaps the high point of the night for Arkansas came in the fifth when Staniland doubled, the first extra base hit by a Traveler pitcher this year. St. Louis does not permit the Travelers to use the Designated Hitters, so the pitchers have quite a few hits already.

STANILAND'S DOUBLE means all the other pitchers on the staff have to chip in a dollar, which is the tariff for an extra base blow.

The win was Staniland's second over Midland this season, although he needed relief help from Mario Torres

U.S. cagers discover gold in Montreal

MONTREAL (AP) — It was no contest. If it had been a fight, they'd have stopped it.

Perhaps the most eagerlyawaited sports event in the past four years was a rout, a onesided run-away, an anti-climax.

In fact, the United States' emotional, 95-74 basketball victory over Yugoslavia for the Olympic gold medal was assured so quickly, so easily, the television cameras beaming coverage to the United States cut away on a more or less regular basis to focus on men's platform diving and boxing quarter-finals.

BUT IT was the big one, the event the United States wanted to win in these XXI Olympic Games. The youngest team the United States has ever fielded wiped out the memory of Munich and the only Olympic game ot had ever lost. It was an inspired performance that restored the team to amateur supremacy in the game the Americans invented.

Adrian Dantley of Notre Dame scored eight of his gamehigh 30 points in the first six minutes. The United States built a 20-8 lead in that time and from then on it was not a matter of "who" but "by how much."

Some of the edge may have been taken off the triumph because it came against Yugoslavia, not Russia, the team that scored that controversial decision over the United States four years ago.

THE RUSSIANS didn't make it to the final. Instead, they had to settle for a 100-72 victory over Canada last night and the bronze.

But the absence of the Russians didn't bother Coach Dean Smith or his players at all.

"I guess a lot of people are disappointed we didn't play the Russians," said guard Quinn Buckner of Indiana. "I didn't care who we had to beat. I just wanted that big piece of gold."

"I was so happy at the presentation ceremony, there were tears in my eyes," said Smith.

"I don't look on it as vindication. Let's just say the United States is the 1976 Olympic basketball champion—period."

"I thought we deserved that ovation we receive," said Scott May, Indiana's All American. "A lot of people didn't think we could do it. I think the American people should be grateful for the job we've done."

AND IT was a job that needed doing. It was the only gold medal the Americans have acquired in the past two days.

With the United States picking up only eight medals in the last two days, they now are far behind Russia. The Russians have a 29-29-22 count in gold, silver and bronze, 80 over-all.

Four American boxers advanced to the semifinals, where they're assured of at least a bronze. Four other fighters are in action tonight and all have a good chance of reaching the semis. The United States won only two boxing medals in 1972.

Light welterweight Sugar Ray Leonard, Palmer Park, Md.; lightweight Howard Davis, Glen Cove, N.Y.; bantamweight Charles Mooney, an Army sergeant stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., and flyweight Leo Randolph, Tacoma, Wash., all advanced to the semifinals.

Rivas, Goodrich win in tourney

Rivas Cabinet used the big inning to defeat Well Fluids, 14-9, in a winner's bracket game in the Men's city Slow Pitch Softball Tourney at Hogan Park.

The winners got four runs in the second and five in the fifth to remain undefeated in the double-elimination tournament.

Johnny Johnson and Luis Perez had triples for Rivas while Dale Mansville, Howard Varley and Don Haney doubled for Well Fluids.

In another winner's bracket game, Goodrich pounded Buckeye, 18-3, on homers by Kim Henderson, J. Kenderick, Bud Glaspie, D. Thompson and A. Wootan. Glaspie and Henderson homered in Goodrich's 14-2 pounding of the G.Q. Suns late Monday.

G.Q. Suns stayed alive in the tournament by defeating the Midland A's, 8-4 as Brian Arabie, Kent Gaultney and Jack Gevecker were the big sticks but Four Square Gospel then defeated the Suns, 9-3, with Jessie Guzman's four bagger the big blow.

Johnson Tire stayed alive with a 11-9 win over the Western Company as Jesse Reyes went four for five and a 12-6 truimph over TV Service as John Fuentes had a three for four evening.

Four Square Gospel also remained in contention with a narrow 11-10 victory over Don's Poultry. The winners scored three runs in the seventh to take a 11-6 lead but had to hold on by the skins of their teeth as Don's scored four in their half of the frame.

The Midland A's also picked up two wins as they defeated Our Lady of Guadalupe, 17-6, with Max Galan, Cruz Reyes and Jimmy Zepeda supplying doubles and Lupe Reyes contributing a triple. The A's also took a forfeit from Terrett Septic.

TV Service Center edged HNG Oil, 10-8, in the night's other contest.

San Angelo strikes late to down Drillers, 5-4

By BOB DILLON

San Angelo's Downtown Lions scored two runs in the top of the seventh inning Tuesday night to topple Midland's Tri-Service Drillers, 5-4, in the District 5 Texas Teen-Age Hi-Junior Baseball Tournament at Sinon Field.

Midland had come from a 3-0 deficit, but errors were the downfall as San Angelo was winning its third straight game in the double elimination meet and now gains the finals Thursday night.

The Drillers, meanwhile, drop down into the loser's bracket with Odessa and Monahans and two more teams will fall from the tourney after tonight's action.

Odessa's American Legion meets the Monahans Furr's Owls in the 6 p.m. game with the loser being eliminated and then the winner of that game will take on Midland in another survivor contest at 8:30 p.m. The winner of the 8:30 game will face San Angelo Thursday and will have to win two straight in order to qualify for the State Tourney in Mineloa next week.

A victory by the Lions in the 6 p.m. outing will move the Concho nine into the state meet.

Monahans outlasted Crane's Merchants, 12-10, in another wild loser's bracket game in the early contest Tuesday.

Crane blew a 7-2 lead and the Owls came back to knock the Merchants from the tourney.

Billy Sprader, Pablo Franco and Kenneth Reynolds led the 12-hit attack for the Owls who had lost to Midland, 9-0, Monday night. All three had two hits each while Crane had four players who came up with a pair of hits each in Jose Figueroa, Ricky Cadena, ndell Black and Kurt White.

Cadena had a triple for the losers, but once again, as in the San Angelo game the Merchants lost Monday by 14-11, it was errors that proved to be the difference.

In the Midland-San Angelo battle, the Lions took a 1-0 lead off starter and loser Jimmy Zachry in the first inning, thanks to a lost ball in the lights that dropped in for a triple.

Leadoff hitter Carl Brainard hit a routine fly ball to center that was lost for the three-bagger and he scored on a single by Billy Terry.

Two more runs that should not have in the second, thanks to two Driller miscues in the field.

Midland cut the lead to 3-1 in the bottom of the third inning on a double by Jeff Lutke and walk to Terry Bond with the bases full. bert Gomez came in to relieve starter Mark Mullen with the bases loaded and got out of the jam despite the walk to Bond.

Then in the fourth, Midland scored three runs to take a 4-3 lead over the Lions. Brent Bates walked, stole second and went to third on a wild pitch by Gomez. Mike Moore lined out to right and Jim Seeker looked at a third strike. John Marks doubled in Bates and Todd Clements plated Marks with a single and the other run came in on an error by Terry at short.

San Angelo pulled it out in the seventh as Brainard started things with a solid single past first. Terry was safe when a pop fly was dropped by Seeker. Chuck Owen came in to strike out Greg Johnigan, but catcher Mike McLaughlin was the hero by ramming a solid two-run single into right and that was the game.

Garvey critical of laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has favored owners of professional teams with special privileges without receiving anything for it for the athletes, the House pro sports committee was told today.

Ed Garvey, executive director of the National Football League Players Association, said four congressional legislation exempting certain aspects of football operations from antitrust laws, as well as its inaction on baseball's antitrust immunity, has aided the owners, especially in their dealings with players.

"IT IS understandable why the NFL spokesmen urge the Congress and the courts to stay away from the National Football League," Garvey said before the House Select Committee on Professional Sports. "They want to work out 'their problems' at the bargaining table because it is a stacked deck.

"Because of their monopoly position, because of their complete control of the labor force; because of their ability to divide legal and administrative costs 28 ways, the bargaining relationship is anything but fair."

Garvey opened the third day of hearings by the committee and was followed by baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn who was questioned about expansion into the nation's capital and tax shelters which effect professional sports.

THE COMMITTEE opened with two days of hearings last week with Kuhn, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, President Clarence Campbell of the National Hockey League other representatives of professional sports.

In his prepared testimony, Garvey said Congress is responsible for the imbalance in owner-player relationship because of two exemptions to antitrust laws it has granted management.

First, he said, Congress gave the NFL tremendous leverage in influencing the selections of announcers as well as an advantageous position financially by allowing management to bargain collectively with the TV networks.

SECONDLY, HE said, by approving the merger of the American Football League with the NFL without providing any protections for professional athletes, Congress eliminated competition for players' services and gave the NFL owners complete control over the lives of athletes.

"Fortunately, Congress took a more enlightened view when the basketball owners came to Congress to seek exemption from the antitrust laws," he said.

Grid coach impressed with North All-Stars

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
R-T Sports Writer

HOUSTON—North All-Star football coach Ray Overton of Abilene Cooper is so excited about his own team that he hasn't had time to worry about the South squad under L.Z. Bryan of Brazoswood.

He will eventually get around to worrying about the South before Thursday's 42nd enagement in the Astrodome, but for the time being, he is just enjoying working with all that talent that has assembled here from all over the Northern portion of the state.

"I would like to have a team like this just one time in my coaching career," Overton said with a gleam in his eye. "I really think I could do something with a squad as talented as this one is."

ONE OF the first athletes that Overton mentioned to the press Tuesday was Midland High's James Zachery, a 6-1, 210 pound linebacker who is headed for Texas A&M this fall.

"Zach is just a super athlete, and he is a natural leader," Overton said. "He put a few lumps on Coopers head last fall and I knew what he could to do, but I just didn't know how well."

It has really become a mutual admiration society since Zachery also speaks highly of coach Overton. "Coach Overton has been really super, you can just feel that he knows what he's talking about," Zachery said.

Zachery reported to the star camp weighing 224 pounds, but he is down to 210.

"I THINK I'm a lot faster with less weight, and I felt real good in workout. The humidity hasn't bothered me at all. I just can't wait to play in the game because it is a big chance to play against the state best. It really builds confidence in yourself when you find out that you can play with the best," Zachery related.

Evidently, Zachery is not just among the best, he's there at the top. His teammates praise him down to the last man.

"I blocked him all week," Tulia's John Mayes said. "And I have had a headache all week. I'll be glad when the game gets here so the South can see what a real linebacker is like."

The North also seems to be superior on offense as far as names are concerned. Bryan's Curtis Dickey heads the list and will be the tailback in Overton's slot-I formation.

BRECKENRIDGE'S BILL Orberson will be the fullback while the best receiver on the team is wingback Michael Lockett of Ft. Worth. Plano's Sammy Bickham is the top quarterback in either camp, and is a running or passing threat.

South coach Bryan was hurt severly when he lost the services of Lampasas' Johnny Jones. Jones skipped the All-Star game to run in the Olympics. No one can quite figure out why.

Even the North players were disappointed that Jones had to miss the game. "I really wanted to get a shot at him," Zachery said. "Everybody has heard so much aboutr him and it would have been good just to play against him."

Still, the South will have a competitive squad. Houston's Harold Bailey will guide Bryan's pto-set offense and he will Grobeton's Stephen Callahan, a wingback, and Odist Bryant of Wortham, a split end, to throw to.

Cameron's Joe Smitherman and Barber Hill's Bill Harris will be at the guard slots for the South and will get the opportunity to face Zachery.

The North team is ready, however, to add to its 23-15-3 series lead.

Midland Lee basketballl coach Paul Streckler will take his North cagers against the South tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Hofheinz Pavilion to start the All-Star slate. The fullback is set for the same time period.

Barr pitches Giants past Reds

By The Associated Press

The San Francisco Giants battered Jack Billingham after being held hitless for four innings, scoring six runs in the fifth inning, and crushed the Cincinnati Reds 9-4 behind Darrell Evans' three hits and three RBI Tuesday night.

Evans' hits included a tworun homer to support Jim Barr's pitching. Barr, the only San Francisco starter with a winning record, boosted his record to 9-6, allowing seven hits and four runs in 72-3 innings.

IN OTHER National League action, the New York Mets beat Philadelphia 4-1; Pittsburgh stopped St. Louis 3-1; the Chicago Cubs blanked Montreal 5-0 and Houston trimmed San Diego 4-1. Rain washed out the Atlanta-Los Angeles game.

Meyers wants national title for SMU

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

HOUSTON — When Dave Smith left Southern Methodist University, he also the Mustangs talent cupboard practically bare. New Coach Ron Meyer will have to pay the price in 1976.

When the fall get together in the Southwest Conference begins, Meyer will have only 50-55 players left from the unfortunate Smith regime. Meyer is certainly not worried about breaking the new numbers barrier rule.

To add to Meyer's troubles, he came to SMU from the University of Nevada-Las Vegas late and the recruiting suffered.

BUT MEYER is not complaining.

It, however, comes out a little strange when he starts talking in terms of national championships in the not too distant future in view of the staggering problems that he faces.

Meyer says that SMU can be competitive for the SWC in three years and sees the Mustangs in the same light as USC and Notre Dame in five years.

From there, according to Meyer, "It's just a step to the moon.

"The national championship is our goal"

Meyer candidly stated Tuesday at the Texas High School Coaches Association meeting.

"Once we get on top, it will be hard to topple us. We will be a power."

MEYER PREFERS to talk about the program he sees at a future date, but he says that his squad will be competive this fall.

"Our quarterback, Ricky Wesson, is a player that you can win, but it is our job to restore our team's confidence and we're going to do it with a lot of hard work.

"When we came to SMU our players had a hat in hand apologizing for being a Mustang. We've got to change that, and hard work is the way to do it.

Meyer also says that one of the keys to the offensive success for the Mustangs this year, will be fullback Milton "Butch" Jones, a Midland Lee product."

"Milton is the key to our program," Meyer said. " He had a tremendous spring and is our No. 1 fullback right now. He had a cyst removed this summer, and I hope he doesn't report overweight. I'm sure he had some inactivity, but I can't tell you how much we are counting on him."

SMU OPENS against TCU, and Meyer seems to want that one badly. He rarely talked past TCU game. "We are not looking at anything past TCU. We want to make this opening conference game a big thing in the Metroplex area. This can be a big series, and we are going to promote it."

He didn't mention Alabama, which is the next week's opponent.

Meyer also feels that SMU can sell its grid product in the Dallas area. In fact, he's betting on it.

"If the product is good enough, people will buy it," Meyer reasons. "Texas and Oklahoma have no trouble selling out the Cotton Bowl, and if we're good enough, we can sell out any stadium in Dallas. The product is the key, and we"re going to produce what the people want."

Meyer is a fluid speaker and a persuasive seller, but there is still a lot of mud to wade through before SMU travels on a paved highway.

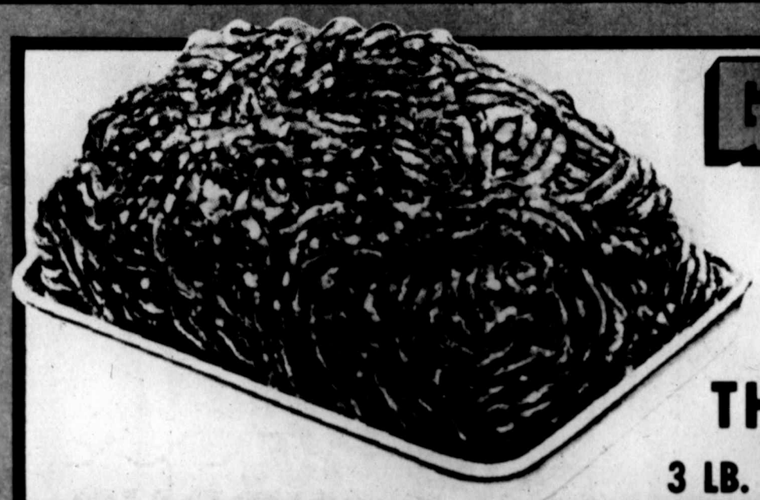

Who knows, it may be the humble beginning against TCU will be first break in the golden rule. After all, the moon is a lot closer than it used to be. Why not reach for Mars? Some guy on TV said that Martians had left anyway.

Dean Smith now has time to play golf

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

MONTREAL (AP) — The long ordeal is ended for Dean Smith, the little Kansas-born court tactician who turned a mountain of headaches into a cascade of gold medals for the American basketball team.

"Now, after six months, maybe I can get in a round of golf," the University of North Carolina coach said after directing the U.S. fuzz kids to the Olympic championship with a 95-74 victory over Yugoslavia.

Smith, pale, and showing signs of strain from 16-hour days, carping criticism and the responsibility of having to restore America's basketball prestige, heaved a big sigh of relief.

"NO, I don't think I would want this job again," he acknowledged. "I think the Olympic basketball coach, like the members of the team, should be changed every four years."

"Just before the semifinal game with Canada, I thought the pressure was really getting to me," he added, "but, even with the tremendous stake, I felt more at ease in the final."

He admitted he couldn't restrain tears during the playing of the "Star Spangled Banner."

"My other coaches cried, too," he said, referring to John Thompson of Georgetown (D.C.) University and Bill Guthridge, one of his aides at North Carolina.

SMITH WON with the youngest team ever to play in the Olympic Games. One, Phil Hubbard of Michigan, is only 19. Three are 20 and five 21.

Against the Yugoslavs, they played older men—four over 26, all well-seasoned. They have played together as a national team for years.

Smith's was a team that was ridiculed before it ever stepped on the floor.

The experts, including pro scouts, said it was weak up the middle, lacking a strong center in Mitch Kupchak of North Carolina after more highly rated pivot men became unavailable—by choice or otherwise.

Smith was roundly assailed because there were four of his North Carolina proteges on the team as well as three others from his conference, the Atlantic Coast.

"I WOULDN'T swap the 12 guys over there," he said, pointing to the team marching into the interview area, "for any other 12 guys that could have been picked. They proved themselves."

Kent Benson of Indiana, rated one of the country's best college centers, could not play because of an injured wrist but two others, Leon Douglas of Alabama and Robert Parish of Centenary, spurned Olympic bids rather than jeopardize pro careers. Richard Washington of UCLA also chose not to play.

Smith said he personally got more satisfaction out of seeing his team redeem itself in the face of this widespread criticism than in the vindication of the "Great Munich Court Robbery" of 1972.

It was in the final at Munich that the United States lost its first basketball game in Olympic history, a 52-51 loss to the Russians after officials twice ordered replay of the final three seconds and the Soviets won on a goal by Alexander Belov.

THE AMERICANS protested bitterly, took their complaint to the highest councils without satisfaction. Finally, the U.S. players voted to turn down the silver medals.

Now they have a dozen golds, which they didn't refuse. Ironically, the coach doesn't get one, despite all the hours and sweat he poured into the campaign.

"It doesn't matter," Smith said. "I got all the satisfaction I needed from watching those guys win. They were stupendous."

It was, indeed, a remarkable effort by the scrappy youngsters. It was a rough, physical game. Yugoslavia's top guard, Zoran Slavic, went out in the first half with an ankle injury. Adrian Dantley of Notre Dame, who led the U.S. scoring with 30 points, suffered a gash over his right eye but, after undergoing stitches, returned to finish the game.

ONE OF the North Carolinians, Phil Ford, 6-2 and 170 pounds among giants, was a buzz saw, figuring in four steals and 12 assists. The two Indiana stars, Quinn Buckner and Scott May, gave outstanding performances.

"I don't think anyone can second-guess this team," the coach said.

Smith, 45, son of a former high school coach in Emporia, Kan., and once an aide of Dr. Phog Allen at Kansas, is an intense man by nature.

Claude C. Wild Jr., left, former Gulf Oil lobbyist, was acquitted Tuesday in Washington, D.C., of charges that he made an illegal $5,000 contribution to the reelection campaign of Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, right.

Former Gulf lobbyist weeps after acquital

By EMMA E. PULLEN
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A federal judge Tuesday acquitted former Gulf Oil lobbyist Claude C. Wild, Jr. of charges that he made an illegal $5,000 corporate contribution to the 1974 reelection campaign of Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii.

U.S. Dist. Judge Joseph Waddy ruled that the Watergate Special Prosecutor's office failed to prove that the statute of limitations for the offense was still in effect when Wild was indicted.

If convicted, Wild could have received a two-year jail term and a $10,000 fine.

Wild, a veteran 52-year-old lobbyist, wept when the judge announced his verdict at the close of the second day of the non-jury trial. Cheers rose from Wild's family — his wife, Nadine, his 24-year-old daughter, Susan, and his son, Charles III, a lawyer.

Under the 1972 Election Reform Law, anyone accused of making an illegal political contribution must be indicted within three years after the gift allegedly was made.

A federal grand jury indicted Wild on March 12 of this year on the basis of testimony before that panel by Inouye's chief aide, Henry Giugni. Giugni told the jury he picked up the $5,000 cash gift at Wild's office, in a sealed white envelope, between March 15 and June, 1973. He also testified to that date in court Monday.

Wild said that while he could not pinpoint the date exactly, he was sure that he did not make the payment after Feb. 7, 1973, when the select Senate committee that investigated the Watergate scandals was sworn in. Such contributions were "too sensitive a matter to get into after Feb. 7," he said.

Wild also charged that Inouye a member of the Watergate committee, approved of the secret contribution in advance. According to the ex-lobbyist, the senator's aide, Giugni, came to the Gulf offices in December, 1972, to solict funds for Inouye's reelection campaign. Wild said he told Giugni that because of the reporting requirements of the new campaign law, he could only contribute in secret.

Wild said that during the December, 1972, conversation with Giugni he told the senator's aide to "talk it over with the senator" and if they agreed that the contribution would not be reported — "at least in my name" — then he would contribute the $5,000.

"He (Giugni) called me later and said he had talked with the senator (and) any way I wanted to handle it was all right with them," Wild testified.

According to Wild, Giugni picked up the cash three to six weeks after the December conversation.

Both Giugni and Inouye told the court earlier that the Hawaiian senator did not know of the gift until after Giugni's first grand jury appearance on September 10, 1975.

"I am faced with a question of credibility," Judge Waddy said, in noting the difference between the testimony of Wild and Giugni surrounding the payment date.

Returning several hours later to announce his not guilty verdict, Waddy said he found that "the evidence of the defendant is worthy of greater credence than that of Mr. Giugni."

The prosecution "failed to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the contribution was made within the three years of the (indictment) date," the judge said.

Consumer advocates plan immediate price hike battle

By STAN BENJAMIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Power Commission's new $1.5-billion increase in the nation's gas bill faces immediate challenge from consumer advocates, who call it too high and too hasty.

Energy Action, a consumer organization, planned to ask the commission and the U.S. Court of Appeals not only for reconsideration of the rate hike, but also to stop it from taking effect in the meantime.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

The FPC announced on Tuesday it was increasing the nationwide ceiling prices for natural gas in sales by producers to interstate pipelines. The impact of the rate hike on natural gas consumers was expected to vary according to weather, distance from gas-producing areas and other factors. However, the average annual residential gas bill would go up 6 per cent or $15.60, according to some estimates.

Following the FPC decision, Energy Action said it plans to appeal and said other consumer groups and some state regulators may join it.

Already in their favor is the dissenting opinion of FPC commissioner Don S. Smith who said the new ceiling price schedule is too high and is not justified by the cost of producing gas.

Tom Girard, a spokesman for Energy Action, said his group also objected to the FCC procedure in reaching the decision and to the absence of any requirement that gas producers reinvest the proceeds of the higher rates to search for new gas supplies. The need for more incentives to develop new gas resources is one of the main justifications for the increase.

The FPC action was praised by the American Gas Association, a trade organization of gas pipeline companies, which said "the new higher prices will help some and, we hope, substantially."

But the AGA said it is still necessary to remove federal regulation entirely from interstate natural gas sales.

The FPC does not regulate gas prices at the consumer level, in general, but regulates the prices paid by interstate pipelines to the gas producers for gas to be sold outside the state of origin.

Gas sold inside the state where it is produced, "intrastate gas," is not subject to FPC regulation.

While the FPC has maintained a ceiling price of 52 cents per thousand cubic feet on gas brought into the interstate market since Jan. 1, 1973, unregulated gas sold on the intrastate market recently has commanded an average of $1.55 per thousand cubic feet.

One effect of this price difference has been to encourage intrastate gas sales, which might deprive interstate pipelines, distant states and their gas consumers of needed supplies.

To make interstate pipelines more competitive for available gas supplies, the FPC authorized a new national ceiling price of $1.42 per thousand cubic feet in Tuesday's decision, with additional increases of one cent every three months.

This maximum applies to the newest gas supplies, brought into the market after Dec. 31, 1974. Gas supplies dating to 1973 and 1974 were assigned a new price ceiling of $1.01 per thousand cubic feet.

WT sectors gain tests

Stonewall County drew a wildcat site and an offset to production has been staked in a Kent County field.

Marshall R. Young Oil Co., Fort Worth, filed application to drill a 4,100-foot wildcat in Stonewall County, 11 miles southwest of Aspermont. It is No. 1 Sam A. Baugh.

Drillsite is 660 feet from south and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 190, block 1, H&TC survey, 2½ miles north of 5,230-foot oil production in the Nenny (Canyon) field. Ground elevation is 1,888 feet.

KENT OFFSET

Knox Industries, Inc., Midland, plans to drill a north stepout to the four-well 6,150-foot sector of the Lyn-Kay multizone field of Northwest Kent. It is No. 4 Morrison.

Location for the test, slated to 6,500 feet, is 787 feet from north and 467 feet from east lines of section 8, block B, PSL survey.

Increase in gas price expected to bolster interstate supply

HOUSTON (AP) — The tripling of wellhead prices for new natural gas will help the interstate supply situation a little bit according to Texas producers.

The Federal Power Commission opened the way Tuesday for new gas to be sold on the Interstate market at $1.01 to $1.42 per thousand cubic feet.

Interstate pipeliners joined the producers in saying only deregulation of wellhead prices will prompt maximum exploration for new reserves.

The order did not affect old gas, and producers said this means 90 per cent or more of the interstate sales will continue to be sold under existing contracts with prices ranging from 20 to 52 cents per thousand cubic feet.

An Exxon spokesman said Exxon "is encouraged that the FPC is beginning to recognize that new supplies of natural gas are and will continue to be extremely costly to find and produce."

The spokesman said Exxon was disappointed "with the reintroduction of the practice of setting prices to specific dates natural gas enters the market."

"We are also disappointed at the refusal of the commission to apply the new price to renewal contracts," the Exxon spokesman said. "We continue to believe that deregulation df natural gas prices, which allows prices to reflect true market values from a based on competition with other energy sources, is the best approach to natural gas prices."

George D. Mitchell, a top spokesman for Texas indeiendent operators, said "the decision to keep some gas at artificially low price levels is a severe setback to the search for new gas, especially with finding costs twice what they were two or three years ago."

Similar reactions came from Jack Blanton, president of the Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, and Michel T. Halbouty, former president of the 15,000-member American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

"The higher prices will help get some more gas into interstate lines but we still are regulated and there will never be full impetus on wildcat exploration for new reserves until we have deregulation and permit the marketplace to determine prices," said Halbouty.

Projects scheduled in New Mexico areas

Three undesignated projects have been scheduled in Eddy County, N.M., and one in Chaves.

R. C. Bennett and J. C. Ryan of Midland have staked No. 1 Tracy Fairway Communitized, an 11,800-foot Morrow project in Eddy, 1½ mile southwest of Morrow production in the La Huerta field.

Location is 1,680 feet from south and 942 feet from west lines of section 32-21s-27e, within the Carlsbad townsite.

Mesa Petroleum Co., Midland, plans to drill two projects as offsets to the Cherry Canyon oil opener in the Nash Draw field of Eddy, 17 miles southeast of Carlsbad.

Both are slated to 5,100 feet, and are in section 13-23s-29e.

No. 7 Nash Unit is 1,650 feet from south and east lines of the section.

And No. 8 Nash Unit is 990 feet from south and east lines add one, projects scheduled of the section.

The discovery, Mesa No. 4 Nash Unit, finaled June 22 to pump 58 barrels of oil per day, through perforations at 4,785-4,788 feet.

CHAVES PROJECT

Larue & Muncy of Artesia, will drill No. 2 Nola-Federal, a ⅞-mile northwest outpost to a recently opened one-well two-well Grayburg area of Chaves County.

Drillsite is 660 feet from south and west lines of section 8-

Producers potential

Confirmation wells have been finished in Irion and Upton County fields.

The Ela Sugg (Wolfcamp) gas field of Irion gained a second well and seven-mile northeast extension to that pay with completion by Amoco Production Co. of its No. 1-N Ela C. Sugg, previously slated as a wildcat.

The calculated, absolute open flow potential was for 2.43 million cubic feet of dry gas daily, producing through perforations at 7,810-7,822 feet, after acidizing with 1,000 gallons.

Total depth is 7,998 feet, and 4½-inch casing is set on bottom.

Location is 1,320 feet from north and west lines of section 40, block 14, H&TC survey.

The strike, No. 6-G Ela C. Sugg, finaled July 23, for 9.1 million cubic feet of gas per day, through perforations at 7,814-8,018 feet.

Cotton Petroleum Corp., Midland, completed the second Devonian well and a 1,500-foot northwest extension to that pay in the Amacker-Tippett, South field of Upton County.

No. 1-A Cody (earlier No. 1-A Cody Bell), finaled to pump 109 barrels of 52-gravity oil per day, with gas-oil ratio measuring 3,378-1. Production was through perforations at 11,330-11,340 feet, after treating the pay with 1,250 gallons of acid.

A reentry, it was completed by Phillips Petroleum Co. as a Bend oil producer.

It is 2,760 feet east of the northeast corner of section 13, block 2, MK&T survey, thence 666 feet north to location in W. S. Bingham survey 54.

The Devonian opener, Cotton Petroleum No. 2-B Lane, fianled March 9, for 235 barrels of oil daily, through perforations at 11,275-11,290 feet.

Rig work increases

HOUSTON (AP) — The nation's oil and gas industry drillings, paced by operations in Louisiana, has moved to another seven-month high.

A survey released Tuesday showed the industry had 1,632 rotary rigs in use Monday compared to 1,606 last week and 1,618 a year ago.

The totals the past two weeks have been the highest since 1,640 rigs were reported the week ending Feb. 2.

The weekly survey, compiled by Hughes Tool Co. and released by the International Association of Drilling Contractors, showed Louisiana had 230 active rigs compared with 213 last week and 238 the same week last year.

Texas had 625 compared with 616 a week and a year earlier.

Two gas producers among WT activity

The Gomez field of Pecos County gained two new Wolfcamp wells and an offset was staked in another Pecos field. Also, a newly opened pay area in Andrews drew three offset sites.

Tom Brown, Inc., Midland, completed No. 2 W. A. Yeager as a fourth Wolfcamp gasser and ⅜-mile northwest extension to that pay in the Gomez field, 12 miles northwest of Fort Stockton.

It gauged a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 850,000 cubic feet of gas per 2ay, with gas-liquid ratio of 4,515-1. Distillate gravity is 45.6 degrees.

Completion was effected from open hole at 10,632-10,999 feet.

Location is 10,666 feet from north and 295 feet from east lines of section 114, block OW, GC&SF survey.

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 3-2 Gomez West Unit has been completed as the fifth Wolfcamp well and a ⅜-mile southeast and southwest extension.

Calculated, absolute open flow potential was for 7.8 million cubic feet of gas daily, with gas-distillate ratio of 7,018-1. Completion was through perforations at 10,830-10,902 feet, which had been acidized with 10,000 gallons.

Location is 1,880 feet from south and 660 feet from west lines of section 75, block OW, TMRR survey.

Zinke & Philpy, Inc. of Midland intend to drill No. 1 Olix as a ⅜-mile northwest offset to the two-well Thunderbird (Devonian) oil pool of Pecos, eight miles southwest of Imperial.

It is slated to 6,000 feet, and spots 2,000 feet from northwest and 2,183 feet from southwest lines of section 37, block 3, H&TC survey.

Wood, McShane & Thams of Monahans staked three offsets to a newly opened Yates gas area of the Block A-34 field of Andrews, 13 miles north of Andrews townsite. All are projected to 3,100 feet.

No. 2 Crews & Mast, ½ mile west, is 1,980 feet from south and 660 feet from west lines of section 8, block 34, PSL survey.

No. 1 Crews & Mast Unit, 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from east lines, also is ½ mile west of production.

No. 1 G. T. Hall, ⅜ mile northwest, is 660 feet from south and east lines of section 3, block 34, PSL survey.

Kent draws explorers

Mighland, Brown, Brock & Equity, operating from Midland, has filed applications for permits to drill two tests in Northwest Kent County, about 10½ miles southwest of Spur.

No. 2 J. B. Morrison, slated as a 6,800-foot wildcat, is ⅜ mile southeast of the firm's No. 1 Morrison, an assured discovery.

It spots 350 feet from north and 2,585.78 feet from east lines of section 6, block B, PSL survey.

No. 1 Morrison at last report was being put on a pump, after it swabbed 359 barrels of fluid, cut 50 per cent oil, and then flowed 30 barrels of oil in one hour, through perforations at 6,211-6,226 feet.

The same operators will drill No. 3 J. B. Morrison as an offset to production in the Lyn-Kay multipay field of Kent, 2,248 feet from south and 660 feet from west lines of section 67, block 1, H&GN survey. Flanned depth is 6,200 feet.

The new test is ½ mile northeast of the 6,200-foot pay opener, ⅝ mile east of the 6,000-foot discovery, and ½ mile east of the four-well 6,150-foot pay section of the Lyn-Kay field.

Reentry announced

Adobe Oil Co. of Midland has filed application to reenter and plug back for testing as a Devonian wildcat, at No. 5 Barstow Unit, former Fusselman gas well, ¾ mile east of the Devonian gas pay opener in the Barstow field of Ward County.

The project was completed in December, 1970 as a Fusselman gasser for 28.5 million cubic feet of gas daily, through perforations at 17,667-17,745 feet. Total depth is 17,920 feet.

Operator plans to test from 17,513-17,582 feet.

Location is 982 feet from northeast and 660 feet from southeast lines of section 39, block 33, H&TC survey, 11/2 miles south of Barstow.

The Devonian opener, American Quasar Petroleum Co. No. 2-X Barstow Townsite, finaled in April, 1975, for 14.3 million cubic feet of gas daily, through perforations at 17,573-17,657 feet.

Contract awarded

DENVER (AP) — A Houston, Tex., firm has been awarded a $1.6 million contract to assist in research and development work at an oil shale deposit in Colorado's Piceance Creek Basin.

The U.S. Interior Department's Bureau of Mines said Tuesday the contract had been awarded to Rowan Drilling—U.S.

Under the contract, Rowan will bore a hole eight feet in diameter and 2,350 feet deep near Meeker, Colo. The hole, which is expected to be completed next summer, would provide the Bureau of Mines with geological and environmental information on deep oil shale deposits in the area.

Wildcats scheduled

Wildcat sites have been staked in Borden and King counties.

H. W. Stoltenberg of Midland will drill No. 1 Clayton & Johnson Ranch, a 9,900-foot try in Southwest Borden.

Drillsite is 1,980 feet from south and 467 feet from west lines of section 17, block 32, T-3-N, T&P survey, ¼ mile east of an 8,310-foot failure.

Terra Resources, Inc., operating from Houston, scheduled No. 47-05 as a 6,100-foot venture in King, 16 miles southeast of Guthrie.

Location is 467 feet from south and 517 feet from west lines of section 47, block F, H&TC survey, two miles west of the Twin Peaks (Strawn) oil pool.

Morrow test finals

Cities Service Oil Co. has completed No. 1-CU State as a second Morrow well and 1⅛-mile southwest extension in a newly opened area of Eddy County, N.M., seven miles northeast of Carlsbad.

It gauged a calculated, absolute open flow of 3.554 million cubic feet of dry gas per day, through perforations at 11,069-11,158 feet, which had been acidized with 4,500 gallons.

Wellsite is 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 36-20s-27e.

The discovery, Yates Petroleum Corp. No. 1-EP Stonewall State Communitized, finaled from the Morrow in October, 1975, for 127,182,000 cubic feet of gas daily, through perforations at 11,250-11,258 feet. It was dually completed as a Wolfcamp oil strike.

More gas expected

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Some independent producers of natural gas in Louisiana and offshore say the Federal Power Commission's decision to allow a hike in the price of "new" interstate natural gas will result in more production.

The FPC agreed Tuesday to hike the ceiling price for gas brought into production on or after Jan. 1, 1975 from 52 cents per 1,000 cubic feet to $1.42.

Viking to test Martian soil today

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Viking 1's robot was ordered to lay its iron hand on Mars for the first time today, digging up a bit of soil in an attempt to discover if life exists — or ever existed — on the Red Planet.

A 10-foot telescoping arm with a shovel-like hand was to extend with a creaky, whirring noise and delve into the red dirt several times.

The soil gathering was set to begin at about 4.30 a.m. EDT on commands of the robot lander's computer. But scientists on earth would not know until later today when pictures of the digging area were beamed to earth whether the mechanical arm had done its work.

The complex automated laboratory aboard Viking which receives the samples is expected to determine within a few weeks if any native life forms, no matter how tiny, are present.

The landing of Viking on Mars a week ago was a milestone in itself, but the pouring of dirt into the miniature "rooms" of Viking's laboratory has even greater import. It marks the first time science has reached into another planet's crust to look for life.

Although no movie cameras were aboard Viking to record the historic sample digging, a film of a duplicate lander at Jet Propulsion Laboratory carrying out the process showed how it is done.

The telescoping arm snakes out of a gold-painted housing on the side of Viking. The arm is a tube about an inch and a half in diameter, tipped with a sharp-edged tool for digging.

Touching the red-varnished soil, the scoop plows beneath the surface, pressing with a 30pound force if necessary. Quickly, a cover snaps shut over the handful-sized dirt sample.

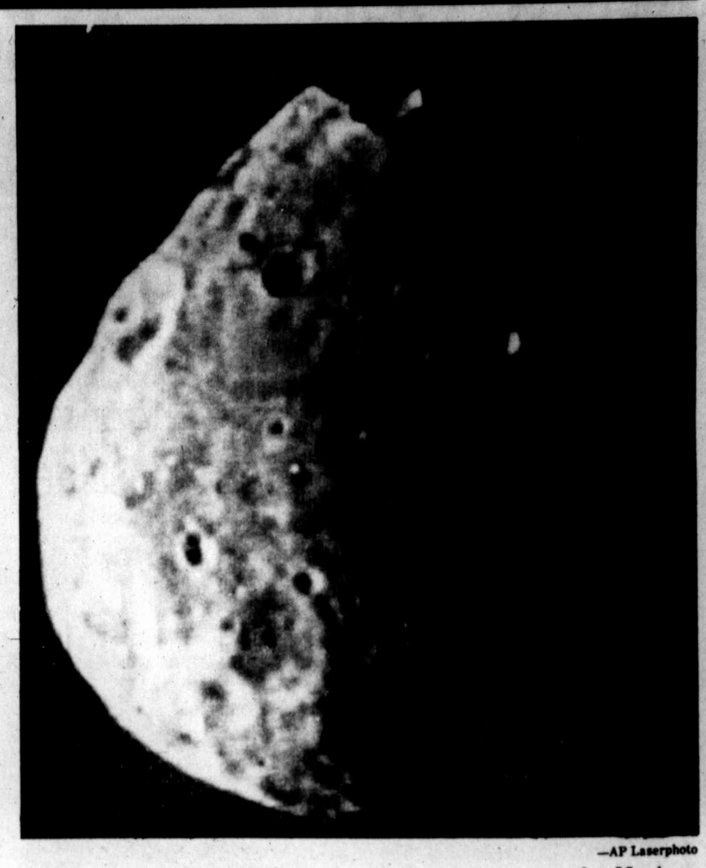

With another whirring noise, the arm retracts and swivels to position the little shovel — called the collector head — over a silvery funnel leading to the biology lab inside Viking.

A rapid shaking of the collector head sifts the dirt through small holes into the funnel. About a teaspoon full of dirt is needed for the biology experiment. A sensor inside says whether the right amount is there, and if not, the arm is ordered to dig again until sufficient dirt is obtained.

Two other experiments also need Martian dirt, and the mechanical arm repeats the digging until they, too, are satisfied. Those experiments are also located under funnels on top of the lander. One experiment uses an instrument called a gas chromatograph mass spectrometer to search the soil for organic compounds.

If these carbon-based compounds are present in the soil, it could mean that life once existed on Mars but no longer does. However, similar compounds are known to be created by nonbiological processes in some cases, which means that the experiment will require a great deal of interpretation before any conclusion about life can be made.

The other experiment is an inorganic analysis of the soil by an instrument called an X-ray fluorescence spectrometer. It can detect most of the known elements in the solar system, and should be of great help in determining what the Martian crust is made of.

The Mars moon Phobos is covered with craters, as shown in this photograph taken by the Viking 1 space probe. This side of Phobos was not seen by Mariner 9. The large crater at the top is approximately three miles across, scientists said.

Two annexation bids clear first hurdle

By DEBBIE PIERCE

Two annexation ordinances received approval on first reading Tuesday by the Midland City Council and, if both are approved at council's next session on final reading, approximately 142 acres will be added to the city limits.

The first tract of land is 100 acres on the northwest corner of the intersection of U.S. 80 and Holiday Hill Road and is planned for development of a regional shopping center.

The second area involves about 42 acres of land which is part of the Magnatex Corp. property north of Midland Air Park. It is seeking voluntary annexation.

Council also "reluctantly", according to Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., expressed its approval of the affirmative action plan required by the Community Development Act dealing with outside contractors. The plan, which must be submitted to the Department of Housing and Urban Development in Washington, D.C., Aug. 7, states that, if a position is available for a trainee or on a project in excess of $10,000, a contractor is required to hire an individual from a low income level.

Council noted the plan involves only federally assisted projects and takes the responsibility from the federal government for hiring of this kind.

A 30-day extension of the city-county temporary ambulance agreement also got the okay of the council, with councilmen Charles Tighe and Carroll Thomas, both of whom were absent from Tuesday's session, appointed to serve on a joint city-county study group. Council then gave the nod of approval to guidelines set up for emergency ambulance operations.

In other action, council:

— Approved a new parking ordinance for Midland Regional Air Terminal, repealing various similar ordinances;

— Approved a request by Wayne Merriman of the Yellow and Checkered Cab Co. for taxicab rate increases, which will be 75 cents for the first one-fifth mile, 10 cents for each one-fourth mile thereafter, and $7 per hour waiting time;

C.L. Todd

Rotary to hear Bell executive

C. L. "Chet" Todd of San Antonio, Southwestern Bell vice president and general manager, will be the guest speaker at the Midland Rotary Club luncheon Thursday at the Hilton Hotel.

Todd will talk on "The Pendulum of Public Policy."

A native of Kansas, Todd joined Bell in 1938 and has held positions in the company's plant department in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas. He became vice president and general manager in San Antonio in May, 1973.

Ambulance guidelines approved by council

Guidelines for the operation of the city's new Emergency Medical Service ambulances were approved Tuesday by the city council.

A basic charge of $40 will be assessed on emergency runs to Midland Memorial Hospital, where all victims must be transported. Victims or patients needing treatment at another medical facility may not be transported until the ambulance crew receives such an order from doctors at Midland Memorial.

Emergency transfers to Odessa's Medical Center will cost $40 plus $20 for mileage, the council agreed. Transfers within the city limits of Midland will be assessed $40 in advance, while transfers outside the city limits will cost $40 plus $1 per mile in advance. A $25 per hour waiting fee will be assessed if necessary, and a transfer back to the point of origin after waiting time will cost $15.

Council noted that, if the possibility exists that the victim-patient is alive, the person should be transported immediately. An obviously dead patient must be covered by the ambulance crew, the appropriate law enforcement agency and the Justice of the Peace should be notified and the crew should return to service as quickly as possible.

A friend, relative or responsible person may accompany the victim in the ambulance, but riders should be confined to one person in the front seat of the vehicle. All persons who ride in an ambulance to the hospital and receive treatment from a doctor or other hospital personnel will be billed for the ambulance call.

Those persons refusing the services of the ambulance crew should sign the appropriate forms, while the crew reports the refusal to the dispatcher by radio.

Charges for ambulance service may be paid at the finance office of city hall, room 202, or to the ambulance crew. Out-of-city transfers must be paid in advance.

Objections to Love Field overruled

AUSTIN (AP) — Testimony on the effect of proposed flights from Dallas' Love Field on the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport (DFW) is irrelevant to Southwest Airlines' application, a hearing examiner ruled today.

Lawyer S.G. Johndroe, representing Fort Worth, sought to introduce written testimony by DFW executive director Ernest Dean on the harm such flights would cause.

Johndroe argued that it is the duty of TAC "to promote the efficient use of the air space of this state." He said DFW was designed to meet the needs of all the people of North Central Texas.

"The fact that DFW was designed to serve the needs of all the people in North Central Texas is no more relevant than that a department store in downtown Austin was designed to serve all the people of Austin," Kelleher said.

Johndroe said Dallas and Fort Worth made and agreement to sell $440 million in revenue bonds to built DFW, and part of that agreement was that neither city would operate smaller airports. This is an important issue that TAC should think about when it considers Southwest's application to fly from Love Field to Austin, El Paso, Corpus Christi, Lubbock and Midland-Odessa, he said.

Johndroe repeatedly made long objections to Kelleher's objections. Once, Kelleher withdrew an objection.

"You mean I'm not going to get to make a speech?" Johndroe said.

Britain breaks diplomatic ties with Uganda

LONDON (AP) — Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland announced today that Britain was breaking diplomatic relations with President Idi Amin's Uganda government.

"I have taken this decision with deep regret," Crosland said in the House of Commons.

Relations between Britain and its former African colony became increasingly strained after Israeli commandos raided Ugacda's Entebbe airport July 4 and freed more than 100 hijack hostages. One hostage left behind, Dora Bloch, was a British-Israeli citizen and disappeared from a Uganda hospital amid reports that she had been killed by Ugandan security personnel.

Opening lead — ◇ J

South took the ace of diamonds, the ace of trumps and the top clubs. Then he led a trump to dummy's queen and cashed the queen of clubs to discard his losing diamond.

South ruffed a diamond, drew the last trump and led the king of hearts. If an opponent took the ace, South could get to dummy with the queen of hearts to discard a heart on the jack of clubs.

As it happened, neither defender took the first heart trick. South led another heart, and West played low. Now South had to guess whether to play the queen or ten of hearts from dummy.

GOES WRONG

There would be no story if South had guessed right, but South played the ten of hearts and lost his slam.

You might congratulate West on his brilliance, but West actually couldn't count a hand out if his life depended on it. He needed two tricks to defeat the slam and could see that both of those tricks had to be in hearts. The only way to get two heart tricks was to play possum and let South guess — and West was clever enough to do just that.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold: S 6 2 H J 9 8 4 D K 8 7 2 C 8 6 3. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. You have 4 points in high cards, 1 for the doubleton and 1 for a high card in partner's bid suit. The total is just barely enough to scrape up a raise in partner's suit.

Radio station protests grid broadcasting policy

By LINDA SCHAFFRINA

The school board awarded KBAT, which bid $1,575, its choice of two packages of football games and KCRS, which bid $400, the second package. KNFM bid $1,111.11 for football games.

Board members said the reason for giving games to KCRS rather than KNFM was the fact that KCRS was the only station to bid ($70) for basketball games and its basketball bid was tied to its being awarded football also.

Wayne Weekes, business manager of KNFM, said the two sports were advertised separately and football games should be awarded solely on the bids for that sport.

"What you're doing now is illegal," Weekes said. "I will fight you to the best of my ability," he said.

Parker Humes, manager of KCRS, said it carries out of town basketball games as a service and they are not profitable to the station.

Board president Joe Dominey said it was the consensus of the board in deciding to advertise for bids that basketball would be a factor.

Maximum coverage of major sports "to achieve a result that's beneficial to the community at large," Dominey said, was the board's aim.

Schools superintendent Dr. James H. Mailey said the district tried to reach agreement among broadcasters before the bids were sought, but were unable to do so.

In other discussion by the board, it again postponed action on proposals concerning employee health insurance programs.

Bob Watkins, spokesman for the Teacher Welfare Committee which has proposed that the district pay insurance premiums for employees, said he will have a number of specific plans ready for consideration by the board by its next meeting Aug. 10.

He said the cost will probably be between $16 and $18 per month for each employee. There are approximately 1,400 school district employes.

Trustee Ed Runyan expressed concern that all employees would not benefit from the insurance proposal because many are covered by insurance plans carried by their spouses' companies.

Watkins said that if the district does not have a large percentage of employees covered, its group rates will be prohibitively high. Also, he said, he believes most teachers are breadwinners.

Trustees agreed to vote on the proposal at their next meeting and to adopt the budget on a tentative basis at that time.

Final adoption of the budget must be delayed until after a public hearing but must be acted on before Aug. 20, Mailey told the board.

Trustees agreed to call a special meeting after its regular meeting for a public hearing.

In other action the board accepted five other bids:

— A $9,971.48 bid from C.H.M. Enterprises of Midland for a public address system at Midland Memorial Stadium. Other bidders were Balco Sound of Lubbock at $16,971 and Electronic Service of Odessa at $13,818. The budgeted amount was $7,300.

— A bid from Shell Oil Co. for gasoline at 37.82 cents per gallon for regular gasoline and 39.57 cents per gallon for unleaded gasoline. Administrators told board members this bid price would be effective only if the federal allotment program is discontinued. Other bids were from Standard Oil, 38.8 cents per gallon for regular and 40.8 cents per gallon for unleaded gasoline and from Gulf, 39.70 cents per gallon for regular and 40.70 cents per gallon for unleaded gasoline.

— A bid of $2,400 for pest control from A&D Exterminators of Midland. Other bids were Baker's Entomology for $4,884, Boydstun for $5,400, Gonzales Pest Control for $11,940, Hurt Exterminating for $12,000, Orkin Exterminators for $5,196 and Midland Exterminators for $10,440. The budgeted amount was $3,400.

— Installation of aluminum doors at the two high schools. A bid of $2,295 from Glasco Glass was accepted for two doors at Lee High School and a bid of $5,300 for nine doors at Midland High School was accepted from Mid-West Glass. The Glasco bid for Midland was $5,350 and the Mid-West bid for Lee was $2,600.

— Water piping for Sam Houston Elementary School from Action Plumbing for $5,848.42. Other bidders were Culp's Plumbing for $21,140.74, C. A. Gray for $14,433 and Sanitary Plumbing for $13,500. The budgeted amount was $3,300.

Girl injured in collision

Robbie Lynn Moore, 17, of 3107 W. Kansas Ave., was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital for cuts and released following an automobile accident Tuesday afternoon in the 1100 block of North Midkiff Road.

Moore was injured when the car she was driving and one driven by Marian Jaap Chappell, 4316 Cuthbert Ave., collided.

Police said Moore was going north on Midkiff, and Chappell was emerging from the Town and Country parking lot onto Midkiff, when the accident occurred.

TWO FIRES

A truck belonging to M System Food Stores was reported on fire Tuesday afternoon in the 3200 block of N. Big Spring Street.

Overheated brakes probably caused the fire, the fire department said. Damage was minor to the brake band.

A short in the pump probably caused an air conditioner fire at 3703 Tanner Drive Tuesday night, the fire department reports.

Damage was confined to the pump.

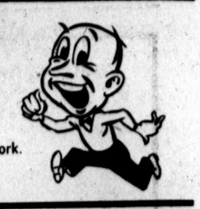

Cannery strike said near end

By The Associated Press

Negotiators in the California cannery strike reached a tentative agreement that could reopen the canneries by this weekend, but defiant coal miners ignored their union president's back-to-work order and continued a wildcat strike in four states.

Coal production remained at a virtual standstill in West Virginia. A few mines also were closed in Ohio, Kentucky and Virginia.

DON'T STASH IT- CASH IT IN THE WANT ADS

They say everything has its place and there's a place for everything. Right? But what happens when you run out of places? When "everything" begins to fill up the attic and the basement, and piles up where you used to park your car, what then?

There is one solution to the problem that makes a lot of sense, and dollars, too. The answer is in the Classified pages of your newspaper. Here is the great merchandising mart for your stored items which are still serviceable and of value to someone.

A call to our Classified department will put you in touch with a congenial Ad-Visor. She will help you compose a low-cost Want Ad for any or all of your excess articles.

You will be surprised how many eager buyers will read your ad. They scan Classified constantly for just such bargain opportunities. Take inventory and then make that "Cash it in" call.
