WOODWARD IS MAN FOR PLACE--CARR

The pressing importance of putting into the attorney-general's office a West Texan, Walter Woodward of Coleman county, was delineated in speeches here yesterday night by R. E. McWilliams of Midland and S. Ross Carr of Barstow.

McWilliams reviewed his association with Sen. Woodward since boyhood and assured the small crowd on the court house lawn that the Coleman senator's private and public life has always been above reproach, that Sen. Woodward is typical of everything required in a candidate--honest, understanding and capable through long years of service in the courts and at the capitol building.

"You cannot question his stand on any issue, you have never been able to pick a flaw in his record in work to his conception of obligation to duties associated with his representing the people of his district. He comes of a family ingrained in public service. His father, J. C. Woodward establishing a record number of years spent on the bench--22. Like father, like son, in this case. Walter has always been loyal and honest to his friends, his clients, the state and himself. This dominant trait when coupled with a public service record truly distinctive should challenge your attention each time you have a chance to say a word for him, and when you go to the polls Saturday to vote."

"I should like to repeat something said of the senator in print recently. I was sheriff of Rains county when Sen. Woodward on three occasions declined defense fees in order to volunteer his services to the state in prosecution of murders, of peace officers--and each time he sent the defendant to the electric chair. One time was when Dick Polley, sheriff of Coleman, was killed by a negro; another, when a Mexican killed the Mason County Sheriff Murry, and the other when O. O. Wells murdered a citizen. When you vote for Woodward for attorney-general your expression when translated in its entirety means you are casting a vote for insuring better law enforcement, enforcement that will allow peace officers latitude provided for them until the recent unfortunate legal interpretations.

"While I can see no political or other value in the opposition to date's bringing into the race of such issues as prohibition and the archaic KKK movement, I shall explain

Stanton was sentenced to death for the slaying of Sheriff John Mosley, Tulsa, Ok., last January and Nelson was sentenced for several robberies.

Officers believed that William Doupe, third member of the escaped party, sentenced for robbery, would be captured soon.

Bulletin

BY UNITED PRESS

The world's money markets were disturbed today by wild rumors of speculation caused by recent fluctuations in foreign exchange and movement in gold prices.

The American treasury department read for the second time in a few weeks the permit for exportation of gold to defend the dollar at the present standard.

A jump in the gold price at London brought rumors that it would go higher. The pound fell on foreign exchanges in relation to both the franc and the dollar the dollar falling in relation to the franc and the pound.

One rumor was that England planned to return to the gold standard. Paris predicted a monetary war. Washington was silent.

Six-Weeks-Old Child Gaining Weight After Undergoing Peculiar Operation

A six-weeks-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Clay Cottrell, 307 W. Florida, is alive today because of a last-second, desperate surgical effort of a Midland doctor.

Technically known as a Rammstedt operation, surgery was performed to correct congenital pyloric stenosis, or a closed system to the lower stomach to the intestines. It was necessary so that food could pass out of the stomach.

The child, at birth, weighed 7 pounds, 10 ounces. Apparently it was normal. Two weeks from birth, however, it developed difficulty in retaining food. Soon it retained hardly anything. When four weeks old a doctor was compelled to inject water into its system under the left armpit to prevent death and to carefully build its weak, emaciated system to a degree sufficient to withstand the necessary operation. The doctor made an incision in the child's abdomen, cut away the obstruction, and now the baby is recovering.

In the last week it gained 6 ounces, a normal increase in weight.

Although it weighs only one more ounce than it did at birth, it is doing very nicely and we expect him to become a normal, healthy child," his mother said.

Oddly enough, the child was given a general anesthetic, ether, and established itself as the youngest child, so far as could be learned by The Reporter-Telegram, to undergo an operation here under a general anesthetic.

BANDIT SEARCH CENTERS TODAY ON RUM RUNNERS

NEW YORK, Aug. 23. (U.P.)--The extraordinary search for bandits who took nearly a half million dollars from an armored car returned today to chasing rum runners of the prohibition era.

Police were ordered to pick up Jack McCarthy and William Bailey alleged former lieutenant of the Miami Yarnie Higgins, rum running czar, for questioning.

Pennsylvania officers, meanwhile, sought an automobile reported to be carrying three men with federal reserve money bags. It was believed that the Higgins men may have furnished boats in which the robbers escaped.

BYRD RECOVERING

LITTLE AMERICA, Aug. 23. (U.P.)--Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd is recovering rapidly from the illness which almost prostrated him during isolation in a hut 123 miles out on the Ross ice barrier, a message from the hut said today.

LOSING CANDIDATES PLAN TO FILE AMENDED PETITION THIS AFTERNOON

De novo hearing this morning in district court on an appeal from a decision of the county democratic executive committee was unavailing to two contestants, Miss Lois Patterson and Raleigh D. Lee, who were defeated in the recent primary election for county treasurer and comptroller, respectively.

District Judge Charles L. Klapproth gave an opinion he could not order a recount of ballots, as asked in the petitions, because neither petition of complainants alleged illegality or fraud in the conduct of the election.

Complainants' attorney, Joseph A. Seymour, was expected to file in district court early this afternoon an amended petition, and another hearing was expected to result at 3 o'clock.

Miss Patterson lacked five votes of having as many ballots as her opponent, Mrs. Mary L. Quinn, Lee one as his opponent, C. E. Fonder.

Rotarians Shed Red Ties, Tears As Member Quits

Paul T. Vickers, charter member of the Midland Rotary club, left the luncheon of that body today with the neckties of all members who were present and also carried home to Mrs. Vickers a box of candy, as token of appreciation of the club for their citizenship, after a fellow-ship program had been dedicated to the chamber of commerce secretary who is moving to McAllen.

Through agreement, members of the club wore red neckties to the meeting, that color being a favorite of Vickers. At a juncture in the proceedings, each member removed his tie and laid it at Vickers' plate.

Addison Wadley was in charge of the program and paid eloquent tribute to the retiring member's worth as a citizen. Elliott H. Barron and Clinton W. Lackey also spoke, as did various club members who desired to eulogize Vickers.

The retiring club member voiced his appreciation for the pleasant association of Midland people and eloquently thanked those who had dedicated the program in his honor.

YOUTH CHARGED WITH MURDER OF ALABAMA CO-ED

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 22. (U.P.)--Harold Taylor, 28, unemployed son of a former city comptroller, was charged today with the brutal slaying of Faye New, 19, Howard college co-ed.

Police Chief Luther Hollums said the youth would be accused of choking and stabbing the girl to death because she repulsed his advances. Taylor denied that he killed the girl when he was taken to the roadside scene of discovery and forced to look at her body. He said the girl fled from a car when he got "rough" with her but that he did not follow.

Textile Strike Appears Certain

WASHINGTON, Aug. 23. (U.P.)--Cotton textile union leaders today laid plans for a strike of 600,000 workers before September 1.

It was believed that only the intervention of President Roosevelt or someone else in government with real authority could prevent the strike which would be the biggest under the new deal.

Volcanic Outburst Increases Volume

MESSINA Italy, Aug. 23. (U.P.)--Mount Stromboli today burst into the most violent explosion since the beginning of the present series of eruptions. The volcano sent forth a huge, startling pillar of gas and incandescent materials. Vessels in a radius of ten miles felt the strong shocks and believed the bottom of the sea had been disturbed.

WINTER GRASS AND LATE FEED HELPED

Chances for winter grass and for development of late feed crops were considerably enhanced today as result of the moisture received during the night. Continued cloudy weather and occasional sprinkles this morning tended to revive the spirit of cattlemen, farmers and townspeople alike as the extended period of drought appeared at least partially broken.

Rainfall registering 74 of an inch at the local government.

The ranch country from Scharbauer's 5-Wells, through the North Curtis place and the old "Farmer" Moore range, on to a section four or five miles northeast of Midland reported rains from two to two and a half inches. The Holt headquarters ranch had a good rain, extending on to the Courtney farming area, into Stanton and Big Spring where an inch and a half was reported. Water ran about night and early this morning, benefiting especially the country to the north, east and southeast of Midland.

Troop 54 scored 140 points. Troop 61 of Barstow was second with 135, and Troop 67 of Pecos third with 105.

Judges announced results are subject to review.

Until official approval of records this afternoon, The Reporter-Telegram is withholding results of final winners by events until Friday.

COUNTY WATCHES RAVEN CAMPAIGN

Taking advantage of the congregation of ravens around carcasses of cattle which government buyers had condemned and destroyed, John Dublin, foreman of the Scharbauer cattle company, secured poisoned corn today for a project which should exterminate thousands of the birds.

Although the county had on hand only a limited supply of the poison grain, it was indicated that, if Dublin secures good results sufficient to warrant a grant to supply all ranchmen and farmers wanting to use the same method.

Dublin pointed out that, due to the scarcity of feed, the ravens are descending by the hundreds upon carcasses of the condemned cattle and, where from twenty to forty of the animals are killed in a group, thousands of the birds may be killed in a small area.

Batista Approves Death Sentences

FLAPPER FANNY SAYS

Unwritten Law Prevails Alike in Igloo And Palace, but Justice Tracks Crime

BY EVELYN TUFTS

FORT HEARNE, Coronation Gulf, Northwest Territories.--White man's justice has come to this tiny Arctic outpost for the first time in its history. For more than a year, the decree its penalty for a killer.

In whispers that will carry into tradition in this settlement on the desolate shores of the Polar sea, the bewildered natives discuss the trial that took place in the small frame building that serves as Royal Canadian Mounted Police headquarters.

When it was ended, Ahligiak, an Eskimo, stood convicted of manslaughter, for slaying his friend and hunting companion, Anarak, who had lived in the same snow house with him for years. Ahligiak had taken vengeance in his own way when his faithful friend had lured him from his side.

When Kibling, in his ballad "The Three Sealers," declared that neither law of God nor man runs "north of 63," he spoke for a past day of slow growth, associated with heart-breaking toil by sailing and portage over treacherous lakes and rivers, of meanness and dog-sled trails where crazed men wandered starving and helpless until the merciful Arctic drift covered them forever.

Planes Banish Distance

Today the "devil bird," as the Eskimos call the Canadian, airways planes, darts across the barren inaccessible tundra, summer and winter, linking scattered fur posts and isolated mining camps, carrying the trapper and his dogs, the miner and the missionary.

So it was that a British court, whose entire personnel was carried by plane 1500 miles north from Edmonton Alberta, where Judge J. W. Douglas, who headed the court, assembled with all the impressive dignity associated with centuries with British jurisprudence, to undertake the difficult task of imposing the white man's justice upon a stone age people.

The wisper went about among the white tepees and skin tents that the white men had come to ask Ahligiak and his wife stern questions, perhaps to kill Ahligiak according to the white man's law, which, unlike the ancient Eskimo code, is not satisfied to accept a blood price for murder, but demands a life for a life.

Waits Long for Justice

Ahligiak is not a native of Fort Hearne. His country is a far-off one, more than 20 sleeps by dog-sled from here. It was in the Adelaide peninsula, on the Arctic gulf, 850 miles east of here, that the crime took place.

He had been brought hither by mounted police, who worked the long journey by dogsled, more than a year ago, and arrested Ahligiak, detaining him until a special judiciary could be appointed and weather permit transport by air.

Since there is no jail in this northern land, Ahligiak lived in a tent next the police barracks, mingling freely with the other natives and the handful of Hudson's Bay company officials, radio operators and lone traders who make up the population of this community, in which there is no white woman and no white child.

The courtroom scene was staged in the tiny living room of the barracks. With its backdrop of frigid Arctic gulf, tiny red-roofed huts and dirty Eskimo tents, with chafing husky dogs howling with hunger all day long, it had a decided touch of the fantastic.

Scene Is Colorful

Against the wall sat the jury of six rugged, wind-tanned men who, years ago, chose the lone trail. A French prospector, a trader, a radio operator, and three Hudson's Bay company employees solemnly swore to "well and truly try and true deliverance make between our sovereign lord, the king, and the prisoner at the bar."

Crowding about the stove and squatting on the floor were 20 or more Eskimos, the women wearing gay cotton "Mother Hubbard" dresses over their ordinary caribou clothing, and "mukluk" moccasins. From the adjacent kitchen came the wail of an infant, daughter of the murderer, the wife, Ahligiak, whose buxom charms brought about the tragedy.

A sordid story was related by the three witnesses who had made the dog-sled trek of nearly a thousand miles with the police.

The Old Triangle Story

Ahligiak and Anarak, it seemed, had been boys together then hunters of the seal and caribou, grown men, living happily enough in the snowbound wilds. Every winter, built a snow hut together, living in it with their wives and children, and a few other Eskimos.

All went well until one night in the winter of 1931.

PERIL IS OVERRATED

That North Carolina clergyman who let a rattlesnake bite him and trusted in Providence to keep him from dying had a big percentage in his favor right from the start, according to Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars of the Bronx Zoo.

Dr. Ditmars, who knows about as much about poisonous snakes as anyone in America, says that only about 15 per cent of the people bitten by rattlesnakes die, even if they receive no medical attention whatever.

This fact was doubtless unknown to the clergyman, and does not detract in the least from the bravery with which he set out to test his faith. But it may help to account for the supposed efficacy of some of the time-honored "cures" for snake-bite—such, for instance, as the use of whisky.

If 85 per cent of the victims would recover anyway, it is hardly surprising that copious drafts of strong waters should occasionally be given credit for saving a life.

The Town Quack

(Reserves the right to "quack" about everything with taking a stand on anything).

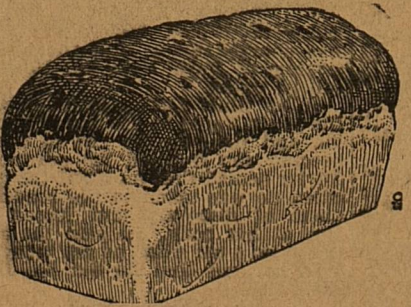

Smokers who belch should beware. Dr. Morris Fishbein, in a copyrighted NEA Service article, says one man belched as he was lighting a cigarette, causing an explosion which burned his face and hands. It seems he had been eating heavily of eggs. Another man noted that his own breath had a foul odor. Upon lighting a match to see what time it was, he created an explosion.

Well, I've found a bunch of people who got out of bed at 4 o'clock this morning and sat up watching the downpour. Many of them said it was the best show they had attended in months.

Tom Nance was mighty glad to see this rain. He and Jay Floyd had got to the point where they would have sold any horse either of them owned for $400.

My Visit to The Short Course

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is another article written by Midland farm women following their recent trip to the farmer's short court of Texas A. & M. college.

By MRS. E. D. WARD

The morning of July 23 dawned bright for a group of club women from Midland, Martin and Howard counties, who had been fortunate enough to be elected to go to College Station.

We met at Big Spring and 21 women boarded a bus. I am sure we started with the intention of having a good time and we were not disappointed, for we talked, sang and joked all the way.

We carried our lunch and stopped at a filling station and ate, at what seemed to us a late lunch hour since the appetite of all was made keener through the novelty of the trip.

The only excitement we had was when a rear tire blew out. This was soon repaired, however, and we lost little time.

We arrived at Waco just before sundown, and ate supper out of doors. Afterward some of the women rode a street car for the first time. Our only regret was we didn't have time to drive over the city.

We arrived at College Station shortly after midnight. Monday, and went at once to the main building, where reservations had been made for us, and were assigned to our rooms.

Next morning we were up early and bought our meal tickets for the week. After breakfast, each day served at 6:45, men and women on the campus met at the assembly hall where we heard an address on different and interesting subjects discussed. From then on there was something interesting to go to every hour. The only trouble was each person could not get to all the courses. We are to exchange information and therefore get a general view of everything.

There were meetings of interest for every member from the small club children to the business man and woman. Teaching all how to work and how to play was one of the principal duties of instructors.

A few of the most interesting features to me was a tour of the campus, each building's architecture and floor plan being explained. An entertainment at the stadium, including a horse show, races, band concert, community programs and other program features honoring the 4-H club boys and girls was interesting.

Our bus was ready to leave at 5 o'clock Saturday morning for Galveston, as the women of our crowd had bought tickets to the coast earlier, the return trip to be via Austin.

At Galveston we took a dip in the gulf before luncheon, went for a ride on the excursion steamer Galveston, saw ocean greyhounds tugged into the slips, one of them a foreign vessel.

Soon afterward, we left for Austin, going through Houston, a beautiful city and novel to us from its semi-tropical vegetation, wealthy homes and landscaped gardens. All tourists camps between Houston and Austin were filled and we had to drive all the way without resting. We reached Austin at 3:15 Sunday morning, went to the Capital hotel, got rooms and went to sleep.

The capitol building was next in the itinerary, and we went through it and over the grounds, seeing interesting monuments and statues, then saw the governor's mansion. Then off for Big Spring and Midland. I enjoyed the trip, have appreciation to all who helped make it enjoyable, and hope that others may benefit from it through our contribution of notes.

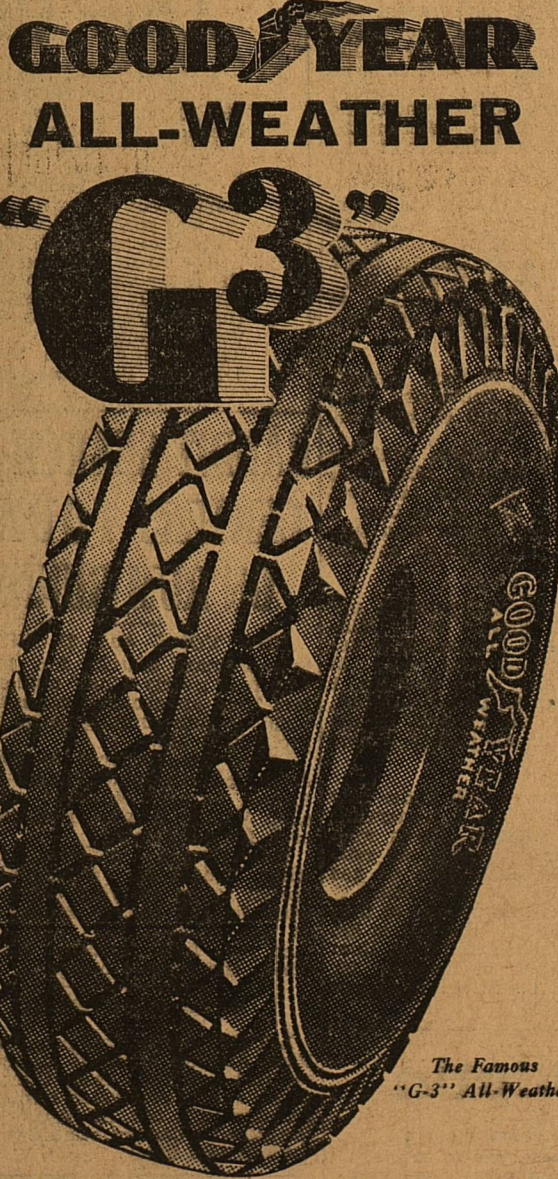

TREASURE HUNT FAILS

JUAREZ, (UP)—Another hunt for the late Pancho Villa's famed buried treasure was ended with only an empty hole to reward the expectant hunters.

A. C. Blanco and Juan Leyva, granted special permission to dig near the Juarez garrison, have given up their search for 22,000 silver pesos and buried arms. The hunters decided that they had the wrong spot. They will consult their maps and start out again soon.

GOOD YEAR ALL-WEATHER "G-3"

IT'S a fact—more people are buying the new Goodyear "G-3" All-Weather than any other tire in the world! Think what that success must mean! The "G-3" costs no less than other tires—it's no greater bargain in price—so it must be a bargain in safety! It has grip in the center of the tread—where you need it for quicker stops—and it keeps that grip 43% longer than former All-Weathers, by actual test fleet records. Many enthusiastic users tell us, it keeps its grip twice as long as any tire they ever used! No wonder other tires can't match its success! The fact is, they can't even match the foundation of its success, which is patented Goodyear Supertwist in every ply. Come in and see this tire that's breaking sales records—and ask about our guarantee.

DROUGHT BEATS ARKANSAS RIVER

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UP)—Drought has conquered the once mighty Arkansas river, up which fast packets steamed 50 years ago. During the torrid summer weather level of the river dropped 20 feet to an all-time low of minus four on the gauge here. Small boys waded the river that years ago challenged the best swimmers. Sandbars showed in the river bed for the first time. As the water receded, hulks of river steamers which sank 50 years ago were seen for the first time. One of these was the C. M. Cole, fast packet that went down one wintry night in the 1880's and had the river frozen over it before morning. Big oak ribs of the C. M. Cole protruded from the silt that has settled about it. Treasure hunters found prized English earthenware still in perfect condition. Great cypress timbers five inches thick and 20 inches wide formed the sides of a barge found near the C. M. Cole. Few trees in Arkansas now could produce such material, rivermen said. Along the drier river bottom were found remains of smaller boats, old pilings and other reminders of a flourishing river traffic of the past century when the swift Arkansas was a lively tributary in the Mississippi basin.

Reveals something about "Virginia", one of Cellini's great loves in

"The Affairs of Cellini"

a 20th Century Picture starring Constance Bennett and Fredric March

Chapter I

Four hundred years ago and a little more during the winter of 1533-1534, to be precise, the Pope, having seen an exquisite chalice, the work of Benvenuto Cellini, commissioned that talented goldsmith to fashion a reliquary in which the Host might be carried. Which the man did, and other things besides. It was this way to give good measure, once he had been commanded, and while completing the reliquary, he set himself, as he tells us, to make the Pope's portrait on a medal, and first of all he had to make the steel dies for both sides of it. At this time also he made love to Virginia.

Even if these varieties of effort seem unrelated, who shall say they really were? Benvenuto himself, who had an eye for coincidence, recognized the hand of God in unexpected places. Had he not been serving the Pope, he might have stayed in his native Florence, but if he had stayed in Florence, he would not have discovered the chalice of Virginia, whom the will of Heaven had located somewhat obscurely in Rome.

Benvenuto's simple faith has not received from careless readers that credit it deserves. In the ordinary channels of piety he was correct, and his moral honesty was unusual. Who is without frailties? He recognized his for what they were, never trying to elude conscience by blinking a fault. He committed few murders without hoping he might be forgiven. In moments of extreme anger he improvised eloquent prayers, as he could not have done had he not been well brought up, and if we may believe his own testimony, once when he was in jail he studied the Bible.

But beyond these spiritual supports he relied with confidence upon the central unity of life especially of his own life, which he hugely enjoyed, all things in it working together for good. There would be moments, of course, to which a hasty opinion might ascribe no concatenating usefulness. For a while it seemed a mistake to arouse the Pope's interest in the portrait medal, with so much work already on hand, and the presence of Ascanio in the shop made any work difficult. Ascanio was an assistant, faithful but incompetent, whom he had brought from Florence. At times he wondered why. When he was out one day, Ascanio was ringing to a notary named Ser Benedetto, who was the friend of a certain prominent citizen who had access to the Pope, and became Ser Benedetto was so well connected, Ascanio didn't like to ask for a cash payment, so there was no payment at all. Whenever Benvenuto was over-tired and irritated, he would urge Ascanio to complete the transaction by collecting the money, and Ascanio would promise to, immediately after the next day-break.

For a while it seemed, as though Ascanio would be of little aid in the matter of Virginia. Virginia lived with her mother who was called Maria. Small wonder that a good man should be drawn to a house where the family names sounded of chastity. Benvenuto admired Maria, who was beautiful and not old, until he met Virginia, who was beautiful and much younger, and from that moment the mother was in the way, and Ascanio might have distracted her attention, had he been gifted with social tact. But the honest fellow would knock at the door, of an evening, and ask Maria if Benvenuto had come home yet from his walk with Virginia, when Virginia had got permission to leave the house after dark only by swearing she wished to visit the sick.

In a sense, Benvenuto was sick, but it was the pleasantest of maladies. Virginia had black eyes, white teeth, a figure which curved in and out at the right places, and a heart which though untrained and disordered to learn, Benvenuto was a handsome man, with an adorable beard, and a voice rich in what the technical call overtones, and he had better things to talk to her about than sculpture or metal work. Though her mother's prejudice made their meetings furtive, it isn't after all the length of the rendezvous which counts.

Just when he was wondering whether he ought not to elope with the girl back to Florence, and even marry her, and send on the Pope's portrait when and if he had time to get to it, Maria came on the lovers one night in the shadows of the Coliseum. Benvenuto explained that he was making an experience in necromancy, but the mother believed her eyes. When next he called at the house, it was empty. She had fled with Virginia, to save what was left.

For two months he went looking through the hill towns and the villages, and though he saw many a good-looking girl, it wasn't the right one. He would have contented himself with the Pope had not worried about his portrait and demanded evidence of progress. Benvenuto, who was making an experience in necromancy, but the mother believed her eyes. When next he called at the house, it was empty. She had fled with Virginia, to save what was left.

For the unity of life didn't hold Virginia was lost. In her place, however, but the tail of the shop, and the inescapable society of Ascanio, he stole the ring, and Ascanio protested that the gentleman didn't steal it, and Benvenuto said then the thief must be Ascanio, for one or the other was holding the money bag.

Ascanio, seeing that his employer was in earnest, at last, started to collect the bill, and being without courage, he pretended to be bold, and over-acting through inexperience, went on from firmness to insult, until Ser Benedetto drew a knife and would have slit his throat, had he not run. Thereupon, Ser Benedetto, unwilling to put the knife away unused, walked the streets till he met Benvenuto, who when he saw the knife coming, reminded the notary that Ascanio handled all the money matters of the firm but the notary swore he'd as soon kill one rascal as another, so they began to argue. Benvenuto, having left his knife at home, picked up a handful of filth from the gutter, and in his haste he overlooked, as one will, a sharp stone in the center of the mud-clot, which stone, when the mud was applied to the notary, knocked him senseless. Benvenuto dusted off his hands and went home, with an easy conscience, having done only what one must. But a friend dropped in to say that he carries the card "for political purposes only." To impress the union laboring class. He cited the "Stillman case" wherein, he charged, the records show that a union printer was injured in an accident. He held a policy with an insurance company a third of the capital stock of which, the speaker said, was owned by McCraw. "McCraw, the great friend of the classes, offered the woman $5.00 settlement," Carr said. "Woodward, to the contrary, provides for the laboring man and the union affiliate. He proposes to set up a separate department for organized labor, and what he says he will do, he does. All know him well enough to realize that."

The speaker went on in an analysis of the hot oil problem in East Texas and showed its result on West Texas, where development is arrested. He said Walter Woodward is unalterably opposed to allowing hot oil runs and marketings and has promised to put an end to them.

The prohibition and the KKK issues, brought into the race by McCraw have hurt the Dallas man, Walter Woodward, the speaker said. "Like the boy who, chased by the bull, ran so fast around the hay stack he finally caught the bull, tied a knot in the bull's tail and then popped off exultantly. When you follow just consider that I didn't start in the first place. Walter Woodward has turned every charge made by McCraw into a boomerang, and McCraw is dodging what what grass is left him."

He said the Dallas man has waded muck during the entire campaign, and "has mixed deception and innuendo in an attempt to keep the more significant issues from being aired in his speaking dates." He charged McCraw with being counsel for the Safeway chain stores, which he said, lately proposed a combination with 14,000 stores of five chains. He called attention to Sen. Woodward's writing of the laboratorial bill, his immediate activity to put through all legislation asked by his constituents and completed his address by saying, "West Texas can do Sen. Woodward no more honor than it self by placing the West Texan in the attorney-general's department with an avalanche of votes."

Unwritten Law--

That winter Anarak, urged by some dark, primitive necessity, developed a roving eye. He looked up on Ahlgialk's wife and found her fair. There was no such thing as love-making in the Eskimo social code. They mate as do the wild things about them.

So it was that one night Ahlgialk, the notary was dead, and the notary's friend had objected to the murder. Benvenuto ran for his life, and didn't stop running until he came to Naples.

And there, at the first inn, was Virginia waiting for him! Her mother, believing her safe, had gone to visit an aunt, twenty leagues away, and wouldn't be back for a week. They should have lived happily ever after. The notary wasn't dead, only stunned, and the Pope agreed to come back and bring Virginia along, and finish the portrait.

But the will of Heaven, though inexorable, is surprising. In the end Virginia couldn't do on with him. Neither could the Pope. (To Be Continued) giak's wife rose and went over to Anarak's side of the igloo and crept into Ahlgialk's sleeping bag; the next night she did the same. For six months, with her husband sleeping a few feet away, she spent the long Arctic night in Anarak's arms.

Two Bullets End Life

The crown summoned its witnesses to tell the rest of the story. The first was Minniak, a young Eskimo who had also lived in the snow house. He remembered that one day Ahlgialk picked up a gun, pretending to try it, aiming it here and there. When Anarak came out of the igloo, Ahlgialk shot him in the back. The victim turned, spouting blood like a caribou. Ahlgialk shot him again in the head. "They had not buried him. No Eskimo is ever buried. The ground is always frozen and Eskimo tools do not include shovels. So they had dragged him a little way off, and soon after they had all moved away, fearful lest his spirit follow to do them harm, since they had neglected to cut off his feet."

Two years later, a mounted police detachment, detailed for special patrol, with Minniak as guide, found Anarak's bones, scattered by wolves, in the place Minniak had described to them months before. Anarak's socks and a torn blanket lay beside them.

Wife Admits Guilt

The apex of the polar triangle, Ahlgialk, wife of Ahlgialk, testified. She had slept with Anarak, many times, often. She had been with him the night before he was shot. Since he died, she had come back to her husband.

To wife of the murdered man, Ahlgialk, a younger, much more coquettish damsel than her rival then told her story. Anarak had emptied her out of the sleeping bag, and Ahlgialk had crawled in. Ahlgialk had killed him.

Ahlgialk, a swarthy, sturdy, Eskimo, dressed in a pink and white flannel pajama coat over deerskin trousers, listened in amazement to his white counsel's plea, interpreted to him in Eskimo, of "not guilty."

"It is not so," he told the court, "I killed Anarak once here, pointing to his chest, "and here," touching his forehead. "He had my wife. I killed him."

Five-Year Term Imposed. The defense counsel, in moving appeal, implored the jury not to bring in a verdict which would give the court no alternative but to impose the death penalty.

This man had provoked. The unwritten law prevails alike in igloo and palace. Ahlgialk had struck to preserve the harmony of his home. Deliberating only 15 minutes, the jury brought in a verdict of manslaughter. Ahlgialk smiled and nodded. "That is right," he said, "I killed him."

GASOLINE RACKET ENDED

EL PASO, Tex. (U.P.)—The state education department has put an end to a minor racket developed by school children of El Paso county. Until recently the state gave children money allowances for purchases of gasoline. If they lived more than two miles from school. Many of the children pocketed the money and rode to school on burros. The state has discontinued granting of such allowances.

THIS ONE PLANK IN ALLRED'S PLATFORM IS WORTH YOUR CONSIDERATION:

Allred is opposed to a sales tax, because, as President Roosevelt says, it is a "tax on poverty." Real relief from the tax burden will come from a reclassification of property for tax purposes. The two-thirds of our wealth now escaping taxation must be placed on the rolls and made to bear its fair share of the tax burden. When this is done the one-third of the wealth now bearing the whole burden will get real relief.

New Starring Team Features Comedy Show

A brand-new, popular, starring combination comes to the screen in Paramount's "She Loves Me Not," the film version of the smash Broadway success. The picture comes to the Yucca theatre preview Saturday night, also Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, with Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins in the principal roles.

Acting the role of a love-sick, chivalrous Princeton student, Crosby sings and wows his way to the great romance with the daughter of the university dean, after Miriam Hopkins, as the madcap, flamboyant little night-club dancer, enters his life and leaves him a sadder but wiser college lad.

Beginning with an utterly fantastic and ludicrous situation, the film in its rapid progress pokes derisive fun at colleges, the motion picture industry, the newspapers, communists, gangsters and most of the familiar American institutions. Yet there is not a trace of rancor or bitterness in its sparkling comedy. "She Loves Me Not" also features several brand new tunes by Rainer and Robin, and Gordon and Revel and a number of duets by Crosby and Miss Carlisle. Elliott Nugent directed.

It is considered grand larceny to steal a postage stamp.

Women Get Break In 'Doctor Monica,' To Show at Ritz

Women get most of the breaks in "Doctor Monica," a Warner Bros. picture which comes to the Ritz theatre Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

There is but one man in the picture who has any bearing on the plot of the story. This is Warren William who in the role of Doctor Monica's husband has an affair with another woman, which creates the dramatic love triangle. Kay Francis, Jean Muir, and Verree Teasdale have the three important feminine roles, although there are several other actresses who have far more to do with the real story than any of the male characters.

The play was also written by a woman, Maria Morozowicz Szczepkowska and adapted by a woman, Laura Walker Mayer.
